U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor holds a cellular telephone Tuesday while discussing trade with Japan.

Trade sanctions

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration accused Japan on Tuesday of a "clear cut and serious" violation of a cellular phone trade agreement and took the first step toward imposing millions of dollars of punitive tariffs. U.S. officials made clear that the retaliation planned in the telephone case was just the first in a series of hard-line actions that would be taken following the breakdown of market-opening "framework" talks last Friday./9B

Fast-food restaurant employee opens fire, wounds six in Tulsa

■ Gunman to teen-ager: 'You better be awful lucky.'

Associated Press

TULSA, Okla. — A fast-food restaurant employee whose Valentine's Day advances had been rebuffed opened fire Tuesday, wounding the woman, his boss and four other people during the lunch rush.

Marcus Muriel Thompson, 26, went to Wendy's Old Fashioned Hamburgers before his shift was to begin Tuesday and got angry when he was asked to start working immediately, Sgt. Steve Emmons said.

After the disagreement with the manager in the office, Thompson "came out in the seating area and had everybody lie

NEW ORLEANS — Revelry replaced reality Tuesday as Mardi Gras packed the streets with parades and people — some dressed up and some stripped down — for the final fling before Lent.

Navy's chief steps down, cites scandal

■ Adm. Kelso secures testimonials to his integrity, tries to close chapter on Tailhook.

Associated Press

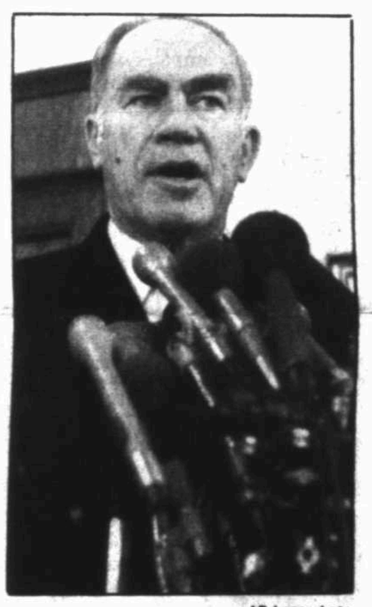

WASHINGTON — Adm. Frank Kelso II agreed Tuesday to retire two months early, saying the Navy needed a new chief because he'd become "the lightning rod" for criticism over the Tailhook sex abuse scandal.

"This issue ... won't go away. The lightning keeps striking all the time, so I think it's best for the Navy to give it another leader," the four-star admiral said.

Kelso's announcement that his retirement would be moved up to April 30 came shortly after Defense Secretary William Perry and Navy Secretary John Dalton issued testimonials attesting to his personal integrity.

Tailhook's fallout rocked boat, but officers never went to trial

By Robert Burns

WASHINGTON — In the end, none of the dozens of Navy officers accused in the debauchery that became known simply as Tailhook ever faced trial. Instead, the sex scandal cut short the careers of top Navy brass and the female officer who blew the whistle.

After more than two years of Tailhook accusations, investigations and recriminations, one of the Navy's most embarrassing chapters claimed as a casualty — perhaps its final one — Adm. Frank B. Kelso II, the service's highest-ranking officer.

Kelso said his mission has been to put right what had gone wrong in the seafaring service. On Tuesday he announced he will leave the Navy in April, two months before his normal retirement date, so the service can close the book on an ugly scandal.

Prosecutors in Davidian trial play inferno tapes, rest case

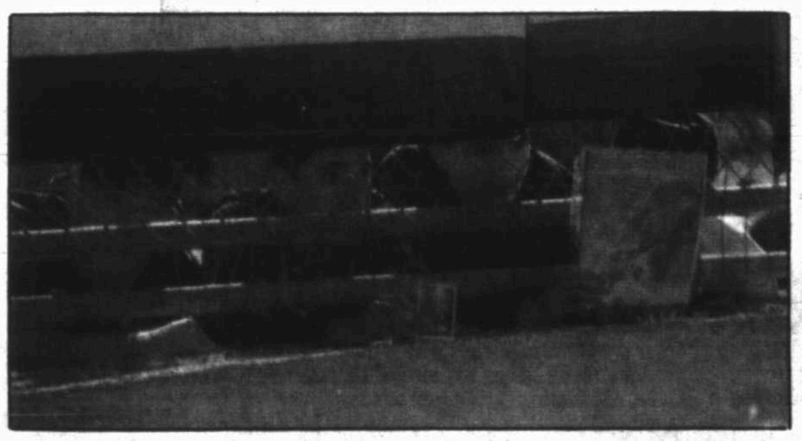

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — FBI surveillance tapes that prosecutors claim prove David Koresh's disciples deliberately set their prairie home afire were played in court Tuesday as the government wrapped up its murder case against 11 Branch Davidians.

Prosecutors also presented a statement by defendant Graeme Craddock in which he said Koresh taught for months that "humanity was about to be taken from the Earth and that the Davidians would be the first of the harvest."

Government attorneys rested their case Tuesday, the 24th day of testimony. Defense lawyers are scheduled to begin calling witnesses today.

"Let's keep that fire going ...," was the last line of the tape excerpts played for the jury, according to the prosecution transcript presented

Basin to bask in sunny 65

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high around 65 and east to southeast winds at 5-15 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low in the upper 30s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Thursday should be partly cloudy with a high near 70.

After an overnight low of 29, Tuesday's high reached 66, compared to the record high for that date of 83 set in 1986. The record low was 17 set in 1936.

STATE

Temperatures were seasonably moderate and skies clear to partly cloudy across most of Texas on Tuesday as an upper-level disturbance moved into northern sections, but rain and fog were expected in some sections later.

Scattered showers covered the upper Texas coast to the middle and lower Coastal Plains.

Highs climbed to near 80 degrees at Laredo, with 60s in North Texas and 54 at Amarillo in the Panhandle.

Winds were mainly southeasterly to southwesterly at 5 to 15 mph, and variable in the west.

For today, widely scattered showers are expected in the Coastal Plains, with fog in North Texas, the Concho Valley and Edwards Plateau.

Overnight lows should range from the 20s in the Panhandle to the 50s in South Texas. Highs are expected to reach the 70s in Big Bend river valleys and extreme South Texas, with mid- to upper 60s in the north.

NATION

The Pacific Northwest was windy and wet on Tuesday. Elsewhere, it was calm and dry.

A cold front accompanied by gusty winds and rain moved into the Pacific Northwest early Tuesday. Snow fell in some higher elevations of the Olympics and Cascades.

The wind and a vigorous storm system over the Pacific Ocean produced dangerous waves along the Oregon coast. Waves were expected to reach 20 to 25 feet on Wednesday.

SENTENCE: Murderer draws 12 years in prison

date has not been set.

The six-man, six-woman jury deliberated for almost six hours before reaching the verdict. After two hours of deliberations, the jury told the judge they were deadlocked; however 238th District Court Judge John Hyde told the jury to continue their discussions.

Following the reading of the verdict, Harrell's family began to sob and one of his sisters leaned over and hugged their mother.

Musick's family appeared to be in shock, and after a few minutes one of Musick's sisters fell into her seat and began to softly weep. A courthouse official said the "family was shocked at the low prison sentence."

Another of Musick's sisters said before the verdict was read that she hoped the jury valued the life of her brother enough to send Harrell to prison.

Harrell will remain free on bond and will continue the home monitoring. He will be formally sentenced Thursday morning.

Almost 15 character witnesses were called on Harrell's behalf during the sentencing phase of the trial, including Harrell himself.

Harrell testified that his life has changed since the murder. He said before April 14 he drank alcohol and smoked marijuana as a "party thing."

He also testified that when he was in school he would help children on the bus.

Defense attorneys, Jim Eubank and Vern Martin, asked Harrell to tell the jury about the different ways his life has turned around since the murder.

"As crazy as it sounds, I was saved while in jail," Harrell testified. He said he and his parents started attending church. He said that since the shooting he found a job and also got his GED.

He said his family is closer now than before and he hoped to go to college and be married in the future.

He closed by saying, "I'm very sorry for what I've done. I'm sorry to put (Musick's) family and friends through this and I'm sorry for my family and friends."

Before closing arguments, the judge read the charge that indicated a sentence of 10 years or less could be served as probation instead of incarceration. He advised the jury that a quarter of the sentence, or 15 years, whichever came first, would be the time served before becoming eligible for parole.

A murder sentence carries a sentence of life or five to 99 years.

According to a Musick family member, the defense attorney offered a guilty plea in exchange for a 55-year sentence. However, the family chose not to accept the plea, but go with the caital murder trial.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre said the tears Harrell shed in the courtroom were not for the victim, but for himself. He also pointed out that while Harrell received his GED certificate in the mail, the Musick family received a death certificate.

Schorre asked the jury for justice for the Musick family.

Eubank recommended the jury consider probation for Harrell because of his age, his clean record, the circumstances of the crime and the fact that Harrell is a "nice guy."

He added that Harrell was "not likely to murder anyone else."

Martin stepped in and told the jurors not to take revenge for the victim's family. He asked them to think about the remorse in Harrell's voice in his taped confession. He said the crying was genuine.

"We're talking about a 17-year-old kid in a state of profound stress when this thing happened," Martin said.

Schorre finished up the arguments.

"Were those tears for what he had done or for getting caught? I submit it was for being caught," Schorre said. He also asked the jury for a sentence to fit the crime.

The district attorney asked for 15 years for each of the four "deadly shots" fired into Musick's head.

The jury returned with its verdict about 7:45 p.m. After the jury was dismissed, the Musick family left the courtroom with one of the family members saying, "Ya'll think that's justice, that's bull----!"

Schorre declined to comment on the sentence. Defense attorneys said they were pleased with the verdict and the sentence, that justice was served.

CITES: Chief tries to close door on Tailhook said, "we can finally close this difficult chapter" of Tailhook. He said neither Perry nor Dalton asked him to step down.

After the 1991 convention of the Tailhook Association, a booster organization of Navy and Marine Corps aviators, female officers and other women alleged they had been molested during drunken debauchery in a Las Vegas hotel hallway.

In a ruling last week, a Navy judge accused Kelso of witnessing sexual misconduct at the convention and with interfering in the subsequent investigation.

But Perry said the Pentagon's inspector general "found no credible evidence" that Kelso had specific knowledge of the sexual misconduct and found "no evidence" that Kelso sought to thwart investigations into the scandal.

Dalton's statement said, "I have never questioned the personal integrity and honor of Frank Kelso." He added that it was "important that we put the bitterness of Tailhook behind us."

Kelso could have demanded a formal military court of inquiry to try to clear his name, but the process would have taken months. Instead, the admiral said he would bring his 37-year naval career to a close slightly earlier than he had announced earlier.

The former submariner survived an attempt by Dalton to fire him last fall when that decision was overruled by then-Defense Secretary Les Aspin.

Adm. Michael Boorda, the four-star admiral in charge of NATO's operation in Bosnia, has been recommended to President Clinton as the top candidate to replace Kelso, Pentagon sources said.

ROCKED: Sex scandal shook Navy at top

(From 1A)

"I think this is the end of Tailhook," Kelso said.

The story began on Sept. 5, 1991 at a Las Vegas Hilton hotel where about 1,500 men and women gathered for the 35th annual convention of the Tailhook Association, so named for the device that arrests aircraft landing on Navy carriers.

The gathering was billed as a symposium on naval aviation issues, and top Navy and Marine Corps leaders, including Kelso, gave speeches during the three-day event. But after hours, in third-floor hallways, dozens of women were pushed through a "gantlet" of drunken, groping male aviators. Some said later they feared they would be gang raped and that no one intervened to help them.

An April 1993 Defense Department report described the atmosphere this way:

"Many attendees viewed the annual conference as a type of 'free fire zone' wherein they could act indiscriminately and without fear of censure or retribution in matters of sexual conduct and drunkenness."

Navy leaders in Washington immediately denounced the activities and severed the service's long ties to the Tailhook Association, although the Navy's inspector general later reported that the hallway gantlet was a service tradition well known to senior Navy officers and had come to be viewed as acceptable.

Three months after the event, the Navy permanently relieved Rear Adm. Jack Snyder of his command for failing to respond appropriately to Tailhook sex-abuse complaints. Two other admirals lost their jobs for failing to aggressively investigate the scandal.

Under Kelso's direction, the Navy tried to shake its reputation for tolerating sexual harassment.

down. He hesitated a bit, then just started firing," Emmons said.

He fired roughly 10 to 12 shots, then walked out of the restaurant as the first cruisers arrived and surrendered, Emmons said.

"We were at a back table and didn't get to get out," said high school student Jenny Edwards. "He started shooting all my friends. And then he came to me and held the gun right in my face. And he said, 'You better be awful lucky.'"

The gunman, armed with a .380-caliber handgun, asked her if she believed in God. "I said yes. He said, 'The clip is out,'" Edwards told radio station KVOO. "And then he started running toward the front."

Three of Edwards' fellow students at East Central High School were among the wounded.

The first person shot was 17-year-old Ericka Osborn, witnesses and police said.

Thompson had pursued Miss Osborn for a date several times, said her mother, Susan Davis. He was rebuffed on Valentine's Day only minutes before a dozen red roses arrived for Miss Osborn from her boyfriend.

"Jealousy got the best of him, and I guess he couldn't handle it," Ms. Davis told the Tulsa World newspaper.

The Osborns have an unlisted number. Police were not discussing a motive.

Co-worker Krystal Shaw, who wasn't in the restaurant during the shooting, said Thompson argued frequently with one shift manager, but it wasn't clear whether that manager was among those wounded.

She also said Thompson was romantically interested in another co-worker.

"He was trying to talk to her all the time," she said. "She was working here at the time" of the shooting. "He was asking (Monday) if he could buy her something for Valentine's Day. But she has a boyfriend.'

Eddie Kimbrough, another manager at the restaurant, said he wasn't aware of any problems between the 20 employees and management.

TAPES: Defense attorneys to call witnesses

(From 1A)

Monday.

The government claims an unidentified man made the remark within 25 minutes of the fire breaking out on April 19, ending a 51-day standoff with authorities.

Played in court Tuesday, the line was difficult to decipher.

"That was clear to you?" defense lawyer Dan Cogdell asked electronics engineer Paul Ginsberg, who was hired by the government for $20,000 to enhance and transcribe the recordings.

"Did you hear that in the courtroom here? Were we listening to the same tape?" asked Cogdell.

"I believe we were. And I did," Ginsberg replied.

Cogdell suggested other voices on the tape may have been saying they wanted more negotiations with federal officers and asking why the government was "doing these things."

Federal agents listened with electronic eavesdropping devices to the conversations and recorded more than 100 hours during the deadlock with Koresh and his followers at their compound near Waco.

The stalemate ended when fire ripped through the compound beginning at 12:07 p.m. on April 19, 1993, about six hours after FBI-driven armored vehicles battered the buildings and lobbed in tear gas.

Koresh and 78 others, including 18 children, died amidst the blaze, some from gunshots.

Lead prosecutor Ray Jahn has contended the fire and a Feb. 28 gun battle with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms were part of the Davidians' doomsday plan to be "sucked up to heaven."

Four ATF agents and six Davidians were killed in the shootout. The Davidians are being tried for murder and murder conspiracy in the deaths of the agents and could face up to life in prison if convicted.

FBI tape excerpts totaling slightly more than an hour were played in court Tuesday as prosecutors approached the end of their six-week-old case.

Jurors, lawyers, defendants and the judge listened to the tapes through earphones. Ginsberg said he was given six hours of taped conversations to work on, and that prosecutors selected portions the jury would hear.

The government transcript indicates FBI agents overheard the Davidians talk about fuel and fire at least six hours before the fire began.

"Got any fuel?" the transcript quoted a man as saying about 6:10 a.m. the morning of the blaze.

Approximately 10 minutes later, according to the transcript, an unidentified man said "... start the fire?"

FBI agent Byron Sage reportedly began warning Davidians first by phone then over a loudspeaker.

and-white checkerboard on half of her face and her right breast, which she exhibited readily for strings of bright plastic beads.

"I've been at it all night and about 9 o'clock I just decided, 'What the heck, why not?'" she said. "I've never done anything like this before, but it's sure fun."

The annual Carnival celebration begins Jan. 6 and shuts down promptly at midnight, when "fat Tuesday" becomes Ash Wednesday.

"I've been at it 64 years," said Marilyn Nonenmacher of New Orleans. "All my life. And believe me anyone who makes it until midnight is glad to see Lent and a little restraint get here."

Police claim more than 1 million people lined parade routes and packed the French Quarter for one last day of drinking, dancing and debauchery.

"We don't have any official count, but I've been at this for 16 years and I believe the crowds this year are the largest ever," said police Sgt. Barry Fletcher.

Despite the crowds, Mardi Gras was very peaceful, Fletcher said.

Costumes ranged from simple to elaborate, from profane to posh, from silly to satirical.

A half-dozen people, including a baby, were costumed as a bloody body part and carried signs labeling them the "John Wayne Bobbitt family." "Tonya Harding" on roller skates made her way through the crowd carrying a baseball bat.

One woman wore a "Freudian slip" and an elderly man wore a bridal veil with makeup covering his mustache. Three tall men made no attempt to cover their beards but vamped in lace underwear and outlandish wigs.

Michael Ourlian of Detroit wore a series of black leather straps covered with metal studs.

"I guess I got in the spirit of the thing pretty quick," Ourlian said. "I'll sure never get to wear this in Michigan."

Along St. Charles Avenue, with its mansions and huge oak trees, Mardi Gras is more a family celebration with campouts, cookouts and familiar faces.

Children and adults in costume staked out their parade-watching spots during the night — long before Zulu and Rex, the day's largest processions.

"We get here about midnight," said Tom Boudreau. "My parents come, my wife's parents come, our kids come. It's like a family reunion and the family includes the other people who always watch the parades along here. We all got to know each other grabbing beads together."

RACE: Richards enjoys high marks

ing distance of the Democratic incumbent.

The poll also showed Bush garnering more favorable rankings than Richards among men, married Texans, Anglos and people with high incomes.

Richards fared best among women and minorities and led in more regions than Bush.

The Harte-Hanks Texas Poll was conducted Feb. 4-12 among 1,009 adults statewide and has a margin of error of 4 percentage points.

When people were asked who they would vote for if the election were held today, Richards led 47 percent to Bush's 41 percent, poll director Candace Windel said.

The rest were undecided or planned to vote for an independent candidate in the Nov. 8 general election.

"It makes me feel good that the people trust me and that they still believe in me," Richards said of the poll results.

A Bush spokesman was equally pleased.

"It was clearly good news. That was the third poll showing the race within single digits," said Bush consultant Karl Rove.

Richards and Bush have virtually unknown opponents in the March 8 primaries, so the pollster presumed that Richards and Bush would be the major candidates in the fall showdown.

Richards fared best among women, African-Americans, Hispanics, newcomers to the state and widowed Texans in the poll.

She trailed Bush in East Texas, tied with him along the Gulf Coast and surpassed him in all other regions, including North, South, West and Central Texas.

Bush dominated among men, married Texans and those earning at least $40,000, the poll said, adding that he leads Richards in East Texas.

Post-Soviet life: Trans-Atlantic criminal threat grows

By Charles J. Hanley
Associated Press

MOSCOW — When big Oleg went down on Brighton Beach Avenue one frigid morning last month, the gunshot could be heard all the way to Moscow's Spassky Street.

Word of the murder in far-off Brooklyn, N.Y. — empty street corner, 3 a.m., single bullet to the head — quickly reached the second floor at No. 3 Sadovo Spasskaya, where Gennady F. Chebotarev tracks Russian organized crime from a bank of battered black and green telephones.

"Settling of accounts," the hard-eyed police general concluded.

The target, Oleg Korotaev, 44, once a champion boxer in Russia, recently contended in a more dangerous arena. "He was a leader of the Russian criminal world," Chebotarev said.

The general's Interior Ministry officers immediately began a confidential exchange with the FBI about Korotaev. Whether or not the message flow helps solve the immigrant's murder, the case testifies to two facts of post-Soviet life: U.S.-Russian police teamwork is growing fast, but so is the trans-Atlantic criminal threat.

The law enforcement partnership has its rocky moments.

Moscow authorities last summer handed the Americans a gift — David Shuster, a fugitive Russian wanted for U.S. tax fraud. Although the two countries have no extradition treaty, Shuster was hunted down and delivered to FBI agents aboard a flight bound from Moscow to the United States.

But off the record, the Russians grumble that in the give and take, there's too little American give. A ranking Russian official complains, for example, that Washington has not acted on a list of U.S. residents sought by prosecutors here.

Why Russian investigators want better cooperation is clear: Through an international network, the flourishing Russian "mafiya" gets safe havens, new places to make and launder money and new sophistication.

A recent report to President Boris Yeltsin warned that the mafiya is strangling the Russian economy, extorting "protection" money from three-quarters of the private enterprises in big cities, and said an angry population might bring authoritarians to power if the gangs go unchecked.

The Russian underworld, like Russia itself, is vast. The Interior Ministry has identified hundreds of crime groups and says almost 200 are active internationally.

Russian names began cropping up on New York police booking sheets in the 1970s, in an earlier wave of immigration. But a different breed of bosses and "boyeviki" — mafiya soldiers — is arriving in the 1990s.

"In Brooklyn, we had the second string," said Jim Moody, chief of the FBI's organized crime section in Washington. "Now we're getting the first string."

From Brighton Beach, the dingy Brooklyn neighborhood where they first landed, the Russian criminals are spreading to Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other cities.

Under the totalitarian Soviet system, they became masters at dodging and defrauding bureaucracy. Now they're putting those talents to work in America, specializing in credit card scams, forgery and medical insurance fraud, even committing contract killings in both countries.

Gasoline tax frauds are a favorite. Using chains of phony companies, they sell gasoline at "tax-included" prices without passing on revenues to the tax collector.

Shuster, of Fairlawn, N.J., masterminded one scheme that evaded $14.8 million in federal, Pennsylvania and New Jersey motor-fuel taxes, say federal prosecutors. He and 14 others were indicted last March, but by then Shuster had fled to his homeland.

The FBI asked the Russians for help. In an operation whose details remain secret, Shuster and an accomplice were found in Moscow and bundled off to America. Shuster pleaded guilty in December and awaits sentencing.

But he was just one traveler on the mafiya's Moscow-New York shuttle. In 1989, only 8,000 U.S. visas were granted to travelers from the former Soviet Union. By last year the number was 140,000. The U.S. Embassy here cannot check the backgrounds of all of them.

"We wish there was a better system for weeding out undesirables," the FBI's Moody said, but Russia's criminal records system is chaotic.

For Russian gangs, the trans-Atlantic connection vastly widens their opportunities.

Prosecutors said Shuster's group, for example, laundered its "dirty" money by buying Jeeps and other American vehicles and shipping them to Russia for resale. Stolen American cars are also turning up. Moscow writer Arkady Vaksberg reports Lincoln Town Cars cruising roads in the remote northern Caucasus.

But the biggest opportunity of all is the vulnerable Russian economy. Russian officials believe huge chunks of criminal cash, from inside and outside the country, are buying up properties and commodities in the ex-Soviet Union.

"This is a golden time for money laundering in Russia," Chebotarev said, "because you can pay any amount you want in cash without having to make any official declaration." Russia does not have U.S.-style money-laundering laws requiring reports of large cash bank transactions.

Wanted lists attest to the new intercontinental mobility. "We're seeing some of the same names appear on both Russian and U.S. wanted lists," said an official of the global police network Interpol.

Ex-boxer Korotaev clearly was on a deadlier kind of list.

Investigators will not talk about motives for Korotaev's murder Jan. 12, citing investigative confidentiality. But a source who follows the Brooklyn mafiya, and asked not to be identified, suggested the hit was linked to the Italian mafia.

Russian immigrants at times work closely with Italian-American organized crime groups, the FBI says.

Some survivors dare to believe in peace at hand

By Tony Smith
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — After six days of peace, Sarajevo's survivors are doing the unthinkable.

At one of the city's deadliest intersections on snow-caked Sniper Alley, three war-maimed men pushed a legless comrade in a wheelchair.

At any other time in the Bosnian capital's 22-month-old siege, they would have been halted, maybe fatally, by Serb snipers in surrounding skyscrapers or gunners perched on Mount Trebevic looming over southern Sarajevo.

Now, the streets, even the most dangerous, are full. Instead of running across perilous open spaces, people walk.

Despite heavy snowfall, Sarajevans are out visiting friends they have not seen for months, scouring stores for food or merely out for a stroll towing children on sleds.

They want to believe peace is at hand but after countless disappointments they hardly dare.

"I'm walking down this street for the first time in two years," said Nusret Pleho, as he pushed Omer Velic in a wheelchair.

Pleho and two friends, all veterans of the war who were wounded in 1992, walked with the aid of artificial limbs. They all were on a 3-mile trip for meager food rations from an organization for wounded veterans.

"We have been hostages for two years," said Pleho. "It's difficult to feel safe, we don't feel safe, we can't feel safe here."

A cease-fire arranged by the U.N. commander in Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, took effect Thursday and has brought six days' peace. But Sarajevans still depend on scarce food aid to survive. There is little or no heat in their homes, where plastic sheeting covers most windows.

"The problem is we can't remember what a normal life is," says shop worker Senada Bojanovic. "We've all gone a bit crazy."

"The streets are full now, but all it would take is for one shell to fall and they would be empty within a second," she said.

Bojanovic works in a store across town in the ravaged Turkish bazaar quarter. She was working in the Markale market until it was hit by a mortar Feb. 5.

A friend was among the 68 killed. Bosnian Serb TV showed the body lying on the ground and claimed it was a dummy placed there by the Bosnians who staged the attack, she said.

Using the threat of NATO air strikes against Serbian positions, Rose is trying to get Serb guns off the surrounding hills or under U.N. control. The United Nations has started placing peacekeepers on sensitive confrontation lines in and around the city.

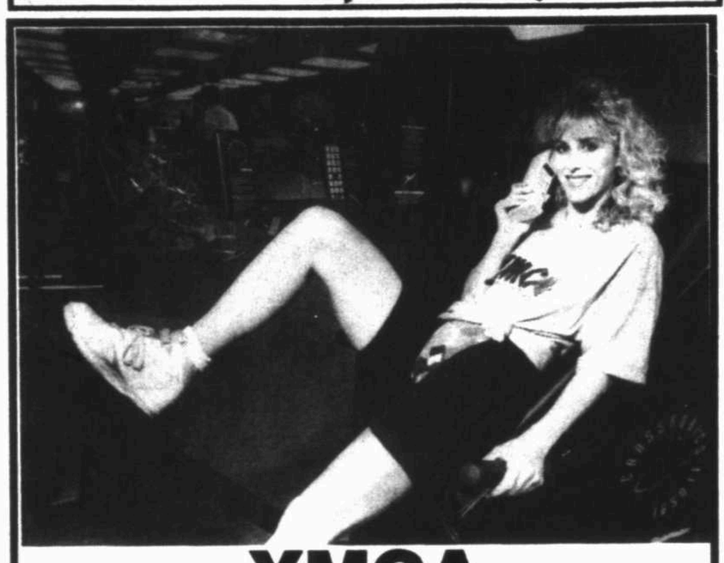

Rose wants to quickly restore electricity and water supplies. "Once the lights go on, life will be transformed" and people will start lobbying their leaders for peace, not more war, he said.

These are the cornerstones for making Sarajevo a U.N. protectorate. If Rose succeeds, his scheme could be used on other war-weary cities such as Mostar.

"We all hope, we really hope that Sarajevo will come under U.N. protection," Pleho said. "But we all fear that there can be no real talks with the Serbs up there — the only thing they recognize is force."

Electronic Frequent Shopper Program Debuts Throughout Midland and Odessa – A National "First"!

Furr's is now offering instant discounts in all off its greater Midland and Odessa supermarkets.

Furr's Supermarket, Inc., the largest homeowned and operated supermarket chain in West Texas and New Mexico, is unveiling Furr's Frequent Shopper Program in all 4 stores located in Midland and Odessa. Furr's Supermarkets are the first in the state to provide this exciting new way to shop and save throughout an entire metropolitan area.

The Vision Value® system is composed of a computer video terminal which delivers instant discounts on a large assortment of national brands - with more brands and items being added every month. Shoppers can see their savings displayed on the computer screen as items are being purchased. In addition, the computer may also print coupons good for future purchases.

"Never before have customers had this kind of savings power at their fingertips," Furr's Executive Vice President, Buz Doyle said. "This system is unique because it gives shoppers more ways to save, and also helps Furr's pass cost-savings directly to consumers."

Anyone can become a member of the Frequent Shopper Program and get their own Vision Value Club® card. There is no membership fee or annual fee. When customers use the card at checkout, each item purchased appears on the Vision Value video screen, along with available discounts, plus options for coupons and special offers on many products.

"Furr's Supermarkets is building an even stronger relationship with shoppers," Doyle said. "Our new Frequent Shopper Program uses latest technology to make us more efficient. Paperless "electronic" coupons, custom printed coupons, recipes, sweepstakes and instant promotions offer an exciting new shopping experience. And it allows consumers to get maximum savings on items they buy every day."

Sign up for Furr's Frequent Shopper Program at any Midland or Odessa Furr's store near you.

LEADING TEXAS!

Exclusive Frequent Shopper Program offers Furr's customers all the savings of coupons – with none of the clipping!

"I've shopped at Furr's for years. Most of the employees and I are on a first name basis. Now there's the Furr's Frequent Shopper Program and I'm saving for my granddaughter! Talk about a great supermarket, Furr's is my second home!"
Connie Holman

"I like the fact that you can get something more for the money you spend. Many of the name brands give extra points. That's nice!"
Rita Foley

"I like Vision Value because it is a nice system on top of all of the good bargains in the store! Furr's is my favorite store."
Gerda Coyle

"I like the fact that you can accumulate points just for buying groceries you buy anyway. There is no hassle like with stamp issuing, and you don't have to keep track of them. Anything you get today as a free bonus is a good deal."
Pamela Hyatt

"I enjoy the Furr's Frequent Shopper Program to purchase lift tickets for skiing."
Bobbie Ortero

Test of Frequent Shopper Program Billed an "Overwhelming Success."

Pilot tests in two Albuquerque, NM stores demonstrated that customers are extremely happy with Furr's Frequent Shopper Program.

"The program was so successful in Albuquerque that we felt now was the perfect time to give this advantage to our Midland and Odessa area customers," said Dan Grady, Furr's Director of Training.

Grady says that the customers who joined the Frequent Shopper Program have shown "tremendous store loyalty." As Frequent Shopper Program members have put it, "Now that we have so many ways to save, we won't shop anywhere else."

"A lot of customers told us how impressed they were with the Program. But it was the tremendous number of letters we got from our shoppers that encouraged us to expand the Frequent Shopper Program to all of our Midland and Odessa stores," Grady said.

Furr's Vision Value Club®: What It Means to YOU!

- Even lower prices than Furr's Every Day Lower Prices!
- Instant discounts at checkout!
- Custom-printed coupons for your next shopping trip!

Only New York is city of islands

New Jersey's attempt to snatch Ellis Island from New York City is unfriendly, unbecoming, un-American, untoward, unhelpful, unprincipled, unseemly, unwarranted and underhanded.

Actually, the island is National Park Service territory, but New York state has civil jurisdiction under an 1864 compact. New Jersey wants it as a magnet for tourists, who would get there over a foot bridge from a state park on the mainland.

New York is a city of islands. It was hard enough forming them into a single city. Let no one lightly pull them apart, not even the smallest islet.

Being insular, even know-it-all, New Yorkers are unaware of all their city's parts. Manhattan and Liberty Island are known worldwide. But others of note include North Brother, Hart, Blackwell's and many more. Only the birds know all the little islands in Jamaica Bay.

Liberty Island is, of course, where a famous statue stands, "Liberty Enlightening the World." In early colonial times a New Jersey man owned it, then sold it to New York City in 1758. Ellis Island, entryway for millions, is actually three islands joined, one natural and two landfill. Named for a onetime owner, Samuel Ellis, it was Oyster Island when the Dutch picnicked on its rich oyster beds, later called Gibbet when pirates were hanged there.

North Brother is where "Typhoid Mary" Mallon was isolated in a city hospital; with South Brother, it sits where the East River heads off to Long Island Sound. Farther east, Hart Island has the city's "potter's field" burial ground. Downriver lies an island once called Blackwell's, notorious for a penitentiary that was rife with favoritism and violence. It is now Roosevelt Island, an apartment community. But in its heyday, William Marcy "Boss" Tweed was imprisoned there.

The legitimacy of New Jersey's graceless claim to Ellis Island will eventually be decided by the Supreme Court. Meanwhile, if New Jersey residents are so hungry for historical significance that they would grab someone else's, let them try Philadelphia.

TV violence rating system lacks enforcement method

So the television networks and the cable television industry have accepted a violence rating for programming. So they will submit to loosely defined "outside monitoring." So cable officials are pushing the V-chip, a parent-controlled blocking mechanism.

So what?

The rating of programs according to the level of violence is a joke. Indeed, in the widely abused movie-ratings system, "R" movies attract underage kids rather than protect them.

Broadcasters might talk about having an outside monitor. But no enforcement mechanism exists. In other words, the industry would be free to ignore anything the monitors might recommend.

And the V-chip is far from an adequate answer to the pervasive violence of modern-day television. Among other things, cable operators like the idea but many broadcasters oppose it.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Ash Wednesday, Feb. 16, the 47th day of 1994. There are 318 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Feb. 16, 1862, during the Civil War, about 1,400 Confederate soldiers surrendered at Fort Donelson, Tenn. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant's victory earned him the nickname, "Unconditional Surrender Grant."

On this date:

In 1804, Lieut. Stephen Decatur led a successful raid into Tripoli Harbor to burn the U.S. Navy frigate Philadelphia, which had fallen into the hands of pirates.

In 1868, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks was organized in New York City.

In 1918, Lithuania proclaimed its independence.

In 1923, the burial chamber of King Tutankhamen's recently unearthed tomb was unsealed in Egypt.

In 1945, during World War II, more than 2,000 American troops dropped onto the island of Corregidor in the Philippines.

In 1959, Fidel Castro became premier of Cuba after the overthrow of Fulgencio Batista.

In 1961, the United States launched the Explorer IX satellite.

In 1968, the nation's first 911 emergency telephone system was inaugurated in Haleyville, Ala.

In 1977, Janani Luwum, the Anglican archbishop of Uganda, and two other men were killed in what Ugandan authorities said was a car accident.

In 1987, John Demjanjuk went on trial in Jerusalem, accused of being Ivan the Terrible, a guard at Nazi concentration camp Treblinka. Demjanjuk was convicted, but the conviction was later overturned by the Israeli Supreme Court.

In 1990, former President Reagan began two days of giving a videotaped deposition in Los Angeles for the Iran-Contra trial of former national security adviser John Poindexter.

Ten years ago: Skier Bill Johnson of the United States won the men's downhill while Scott Hamilton picked up the gold medal for men's figure skating at the Winter Olympics in Sarajevo.

Five years ago: Investigators in Lockerbie, Scotland, said a bomb hidden inside a radio-cassette player was what brought down Pan Am Flight 103 the previous December, killing all 259 people aboard and 11 on the ground.

Clinton officials' solution is outdated

WASHINGTON — Well-meaning law and intelligence officials, vainly seeking to maintain their vanishing ability to eavesdrop, have come up with a scheme that endangers the personal freedom of every American.

Safire

Nobody doubts that FBI wiretaps help catch crooks or that the National Security Agency's "Big Ears" alert us to the plans of terrorists. And nobody can deny that new technology makes it easier for the bad guys to encode their communications to avoid the eavesdropping of the good guys.

But the solution that faceless Clinton officials are putting forward shows outdated law enforcement rooted in abysmal understanding of the information explosion.

The Clinton notion, recycled from an aborted Bush idea, is to put the same encryption chip in every telephone and computer made in the U.S. This new encoding device, or scrambler, would help you and me protect the privacy of our conversations and messages and bank accounts from each other. That sounds great, but here comes the catch: The federal government would know and be able to use the code numbers to wiretap each of us.

To the tune of "I Got Algorithm," the Eavesdrop Establishment is singing that it will help us protect our privacy — but not from intrusion by the Feds. In effect, its proposal demands we turn over to Washington a duplicate set of keys to our homes, formerly our castles, where not even the king in olden times could go.

The "clipper chip" — aptly named, as it clips the wings of individual liberty — would encode, for federal perusal whenever a judge rubberstamped a warrant, everything we say on a phone, everything we write on a computer, every order we give to a shopping network or bank or 800 or 900 number, every electronic note we leave our spouses or dictate to our personal-digital-assistant genies.

Add to that stack of intimate data the medical information derived from the national "health security card" Clinton proposes we all carry. Combine it with the travel, shopping and credit data available from all our plastic cards, along with psychological and student test scores.

Throw in the confidential tax returns, sealed divorce proceedings, welfare records, field investigations for job applications, raw files and CIA dossiers available to the Feds, and you have the individual citizen standing naked to the nosy bureaucrat.

Assure us not that our personal life stories will be "safeguarded" by multiple escrows in the brave new world of snooperware; we saw only last month how political appointees can rifle the old-fashioned files of candidates and get off scot-free. Whenever personal information is amassed and readily available, it will be examined by the curious, and if it is valuable, it will be stolen by political hackers.

The only people tap-able by American agents would be honest Americans — or those crooked Americans dopey enough to buy American equipment with the pre-compromised American code. Subsequent laws to mandate the FBI bug in every transmitter would be as effective as today's laws banning radar detectors.

Tomorrow's law enforcement and espionage cannot be planned by people stuck in the wiretap and Big Ear mind set of the past. The new Ultra secret is that the paradigm has shifted; encryption has overcome decryption.

Cash in your clipper chips, wiretappers: you can't detect the crime wave of the future with those old earphones on.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Great blow-up seems certain in South Africa

The Zulus will what? Fight if necessary for their rights? Against the African National Congress? Against Nelson Mandela and the worldwide forces of Progressive Thought? In alignment with diehard whites?

Murchison

The moral ambiguities of the South African situation enlarge daily. We are unprepared for the heel-digging as free elections draw near. The forces of Progressive Thought certainly expected the "white racists" not to like the idea of consigning their liberties and possessions to the mercy of the ANC. However, the Zulus, a proud people renowned for their martial skills, now are refusing to go quietly into South Africa's "black majority" future. They'll boycott the elections, says Chief Buthelezi. For its part, the ANC can't tolerate resistance. It's not enough to keep the whites in their place hereafter; all blacks henceforth have to do as the Mandela regime prescribes. Or else ...

The ANC's vaunted sense of history should indicate the difficulty of this undertaking. The Zulus are, or in their heyday were, among the world's finest warriors — strong, brave, indefatigable, proud of their traditions and homeland. In January 1879, a Zulu impi, as their fighting force was called, sliced up a British contingent on the mountain of Isandhlwana. It took the British nearly six months to recoup via the superior, concentrated firepower of the "square" formation, which ended the independent Zulu kingdom but preserved some of its outward forms.

Western Progressives, in their sentimentality about South Africa, have imagined that all South African blacks were the same — just as if they all lived around, say, Birmingham, Ala. In fact, to the Progressives, South Africa is just a big Birmingham, awaiting liberation a couple of months hence, when one-man, one-vote finally arrives.

To non-sentimentalists able to talk about South Africa without dabbing occasionally at their eyes with handkerchiefs, this great and diverse land is a congeries of tribes. Most are black, some are of mixed race; some are Indian. Some even are white.

The Progressive solution has ever been: Wheee, let's throw an election and see who wins (as if they didn't know already who would win)! Majority rule would fix everything worth fixing. Nobody here but us constitutional scholars, us Rotarians and DAR members: each one willing to subordinate his petty interest to the good of the whole until at least the next election.

So here we are, free national elections looming in South Africa, and the talk is of — resistance? Shocking! Or so the Progressives, with their boycotts and sonorous resolutions, would have us think. Their great foreign-policy tonic could end up getting large numbers of South Africans killed, and that's only on the front end of this thing. Majority rule, in a land that has never known it, guarantees neither prosperity nor human rights nor, in fact, democracy. Alexis de Tocqueville wrote of the "tyranny of the majority" long before Nelson Mandela's grandfather was born.

The foreign policy of the late 20th-century liberal is based on the extravagant notion that people, wherever they live, are Americans at heart, desirous of American rights. This often proves a false assumption. Americans, whatever their other defects, rarely kill each other over election results. Frequently, they do so abroad. Witness Bosnia. Witness the ex-Soviet Union. Witness Haiti. Witness South Africa.

Liberals since Woodrow Wilson, and more especially since Franklin Roosevelt, have projected onto the other continents — themselves. The great liberal desire has been to make the world American: no contemptible desire, perhaps, but certainly difficult, and with a decided imperial flavor.

Well, in South Africa, we're getting what we wanted — one man, one vote. Whether it's good for South Africa, given that land's lack of acquaintance with the forms and spirit of democracy, is another matter entirely.

A great blow-up seems in preparation there at the bottom of Africa. Or, if not that, a great conquest: numbers asserting themselves over all other considerations, not least peace and good will. If the explosion comes, U.S. liberals will be tempted to assume innocent looks and ask, "Who, me?' It will be the task of the rest of us to remind them who has contributed to this awful result. Hint: It wasn't Ronald Reagan.

Plea bargaining becomes art in skating world

If figure skating is a great spectator sport, plea bargaining after smashing a skater's leg has become an art. Jeff Gillooly, the architect and paymaster behind the attempt to do in Nancy Kerrigan, was permitted to plead guilty to one count of racketeering that guaranteed him a maximum of two years in prison and a fine. In exchange, Gillooly promised to rat on his ex-wife Tonya Harding and make the district attorney a big man in Portland.

Buchwald

The sentence was a message to the world that if you try to harm an Olympic athlete you will get six months in jail and the keys to a new Porsche.

To understand Gillooly's plea bargaining you have to comprehend how some D.A.s work.

Let's take the case of Lolita Bushwhack, who was slated to win six medals in speed skating.

"Three Fingers" Luchese, the manager of her rival, Lorelei Tango, had other ideas. He figured out that by eliminating Lolita from the competition, he could land a contract for "I Can't Believe It's Butter." He called his team together for suggestions.

Rip Sober said, "This is the Olympics, and therefore we must treat the contest with respect since it honors some of the most dedicated young men and women in the world. We should cut the laces of Lolita's skates."

Three Fingers said, "It's too complicated. We don't know what ice skates she will be wearing."

Todo, the bodyguard, suggested, "Why don't we use piano wire?"

Everyone turned to him in astonishment.

"We string up piano wire across the rink and when Lolita skates by we lift the wire and she goes flying into the bleachers and our skater wins."

Three Fingers smiled, "I like it. It's clean, simple and sportsmanlike. Here's $25 to buy the wire, but don't tell anyone what it's for."

Well, you all read what happened after that.

Lolita hit the wire and fell on her keister, but the judges restarted the race because a Swedish skater, Gloria Swensen, had a false start. At this point an official discovered the wire and noticed Todo holding one end and Three Fingers holding the other.

They were both arrested, but Todo received a pardon and a condo in Miami for turning in Three Fingers.

When Three Fingers showed up with his lawyer for arraignment, the D.A. was all business. "I'll see that you get the gas chamber if you don't name names."

The lawyer said, "What names do you want?"

The D.A. replied, "I'll take anyone — Sen. Packwood, Michael Jackson, Boris Yeltsin."

The lawyer said, "Suppose we give you Three Fingers' mother?"

"It's not enough," the D.A. yells.

"How about we implicate his mother (ital) and (unital) his last three wives?"

"Now you're talking sense. But in order to persuade the judge that I'm representing the people, can you think of anyone else who was involved?"

"Van Cliburn?"

"What did he have to do with it?"

"Nothing, except that we stole the wire from his piano."

Treaty turns armored vehicles into scraps

WUENSDORF, Germany (AP) — The stripped carcasses of Russian armored vehicles are stacked three high and lined up longer than a football field.

A NATO inspection team checks the serial numbers: 490 more pieces of heavy military equipment are scratched off the inventory, headed for the scrap heap.

"In Afghanistan, one of these was my best friend," said Russian army Col. Vladimir Strelnikov, walking along with the inspectors Tuesday. "But in the end, better this than to use them in war."

The BTR-60s, eight-wheeled armored vehicles designed to carry an infantry squad into battle, were destroyed under terms of the 1990 treaty on Conventional Forces in Europe. It set ceilings for levels of heavy weapons for NATO and the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact.

Though the Soviet Union and its military bloc have disintegrated and East Germany merged with West Germany, the CFE treaty is still being carried out.

The former Soviet side is destroying about 35,000 pieces of non-nuclear weapons in Europe, the NATO side some 16,000 items including tanks, armored combat vehicles, heavy artillery, combat helicopters and warplanes.

"It's going excellently," said Canadian army Maj. Bob Taschereau, head of the eight-member NATO team that got a warm welcome from former foes at the Russian base 15 miles south of Berlin.

The aim of the treaty, he said, is to preclude either side from launching a surprise attack. "It reduces the volume of equipment and removes the ability to attack," he said.

Strelnikov said the equipment being destroyed was part of a political strategy that could have led to World War III.

"It's the end of an era — but a bad era," he said.

The two sides also are reducing nuclear arms, though with some hitches related to the end of the Soviet Union; Ukraine has proved reluctant to give up its nuclear-armed missiles.

Though there have been few problems with the CFE treaty, the Western allies say the former Soviet states have failed to account for about 2,000 pieces of armor and artillery.

Taschereau said part of this problem came in republics such as Georgia and Azerbaijan, which have had wars on at the same time they're supposed to be destroying military equipment. The republics want to count equipment destroyed in combat as if it were destroyed under the treaty, he said, and such pleas are being considered in CFE treaty councils.

Already more than 2,600 items have been destroyed at Wuensdorf, and the Canadian-led NATO team's next job is to identify 350 more armored vehicles that will go under the cutting torch.

Taschereau has been on 15 inspection visits in the past two years, hitting eight countries. His team members — four other Canadians and one each from Spain, Italy and the Netherlands — have also been all over the map of the old East Bloc.

The job will continue until 1996. The Russian base at Wuensdorf has to finish its work soon, because Russian troops will complete their withdrawal from eastern Germany in August.

Diplomats push to avert NATO strikes

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — U.S. and Russian envoys pressed hard Tuesday to avert an escalation of the Bosnian war, expressing confidence a NATO ultimatum to end the 22-month-long siege of Sarajevo will work.

But the commander of Bosnian Serb troops ringing Sarajevo talked tough, saying his artillery would not be withdrawn despite a NATO threat of air strikes if weapons remain after late Sunday.

That appeared to leave the diplomats and U.N. military commanders one option to avert bombing: guaranteeing that the Serb guns are at least under U.N. control. Howitzers and mortars held by the Muslim-led defenders of the city also are supposed to be turned over to U.N. peacekeepers.

Clinton administration officials said in Washington that the Bosnian Serbs must turn over their artillery and mortars to the United Nations, move the weapons beyond Sarajevo's outskirts or make them inoperable.

The United Nations has a big stake in the effort to demilitarize Sarajevo. If it succeeds in ending the threat of daily shelling and sniping for Sarajevans, the plan could serve as a model for other parts of Bosnia where fighting has raged in the six days since guns fell silent around the capital.

NATO's credibility is equally at stake. With last Wednesday's ultimatum, the Western alliance threatened the first offensive action in its 40-year history.

Yugoslavia — now comprising only Serbia and Montenegro — cautioned the U.N. Security Council Tuesday that air strikes could have "serious consequences."

"Once you pull the trigger, it is difficult to stop," Yugoslav Ambassador Dragomir Djokic said in prepared remarks.

His government is barred from General Assembly affairs for backing Bosnian Serb fighters.

NATO's military commander, U.S. Gen. George Joulwan, will go to Zagreb, Croatia, this week to discuss developments in Bosnia with U.N. and NATO officers, NATO sources said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

So far, only about 40 heavy weapons around Sarajevo have been moved to U.N. monitoring points. Most are from the Serb side, which is thought to have about 500 guns around Sarajevo. The outgunned government has far fewer.

Indicating it wants room to maneuver in deciding whether the guns are under U.N. control, the United Nations said Tuesday it would stop releasing figures on how many weapons had been turned in.

U.N. observer: State Department understated rights abuses in Haiti

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (NYT) — The top United Nations human rights observer in Haiti during its violent crisis last fall says the State Department "seriously downplayed" the number of political killings there and the role of the country's military in the murders.

In a Feb. 3 letter, Ian Martin charged that the State Department's recently released 1993 report on human rights abuses in Haiti "understate(s) the death toll" in the impoverished Caribbean nation.

The State Department's report said there were over 100 homicides between June and September, adding that it was "difficult to assess" how many of those were political killings. Actually, Martin said in his letter, the total for roughly that period "probably approached or exceeded 200."

"Perhaps more serious however is the way in which it (the State Department report) minimizes the extent to which killings can be assumed to have been politically motivated..." Martin said in his letter, a copy of which was obtained by Cox Newspapers.

Haiti analysts Tuesday said Martin's letter raises concerns that the State Department may have intentionally understated the extent of politically-motivated human rights abuses in Haiti in order to justify the Clinton administration's controversial policies in dealing with the crisis there. Specifically, they suggested the State Department may have downplayed the human rights problem in order to justify Clinton's policy of intercepting and returning Haitian boat people who say they are fleeing political persecution. The Clinton administration maintains many are leaving Haiti because of worsening economic conditions.

"If they (U.S. officials) were to admit that the human rights situation is getting worse, and it's due to the military, they would have to admit more refugees (into the United States)," said Juan Mendez, director of the international human rights group Americas Watch in Washington.

The letter from Martin was sent to John Shattuck, the State Department's assistant secretary for human rights.

North Korea agrees to permit inspection of nuclear sites

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Bowing to increasing international pressure, North Korea agreed Tuesday to allow outside inspections of its declared nuclear program under conditions set by a U.N. watchdog agency.

But the deal did not cover two sites that Western intelligence agencies suspect are doing nuclear work, and inspectors cautioned that meant they could not settle the debate about whether North Korea is developing atomic weapons. Negotiations on that issue have made no headway.

The hard-line Communist regime in Pyongyang contends its nuclear program is devoted to peaceful uses of atomic power. But suspicions about North Korea's refusal to allow inspections have increased tensions with South Korea and raised fears of a military confrontation.

The inspection agreement was announced by the International Atomic Energy Agency a week before its board of governors was expected to advise the U.N. Security Council to invoke sanctions on North Korea.

Hans Meyer, spokesman for the Vienna-based U.N. agency, said North Korea's agreement came "out of the blue," after months of little progress in talks over terms for the inspections.

North Korea had argued only it should determine when and how inspections be conducted at the seven sites it has identified as part of its nuclear program. The U.N. agency has always made those decisions for inspections in other nations.

"This appears to be a step in the right direction," White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers said, adding: "We hope that North Korea follows through on it."

The Clinton administration, which conducted much of the negotiations with North Korea, urged quick inspections and a system to ensure the North Koreans do not secretly divert fissionable nuclear material to weapons work.

"It is a necessary step for the agency to be able to reassure the international community that there has been no diversion of nuclear material," said Michael McCurry, the State Department spokesman.

He said North Korea also must resume discussions with South Korea about ensuring nuclear weapons are kept off the Korean peninsula before Washington would resume talks on political and economic ties.

Less formal talks between the United States and North Korea were to resume later Tuesday in New York.

Meyer said a team of IAEA inspectors would depart "as soon as the next plane goes to North Korea — in the next few days."

An agency statement said North Korean authorities now "accept the inspection activities which have been requested by the IAEA in the seven declared nuclear facilities."

Those conditions include verification that nuclear material has not been diverted since the last inspection on Feb. 5, 1993, and the reloading of monitoring cameras to help future inspections.

The IAEA says previous inspections found evidence of plutonium in larger quantities and of higher grade than would normally be produced at the small research reactor at the Yongbyon nuclear center, north of Pyongyang. Enriched plutonium can be used in nuclear warheads.

The North Koreans suspended inspections last March after the U.N. agency said it wanted to inspect the two suspected nuclear facilities at Yongbyon.

North Korea announced it was withdrawing from the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, which bars signatory nations that do not already have nuclear arms from developing them. It later backed down on that threat and began the prolonged talks on resuming inspections.

The decision to give in on inspections was an apparent reaction to the growing sentiment for economic sanctions, including reported moves by Japan to stop Korean residents of Japan from sending money to North Korea.

Such payments are thought to be a major source of hard currency for the impoverished North Korean government, which lost its traditional sources of support with the collapse of the Soviet bloc.

Dig in Mexico may show dinosaurs on the move

RINCON COLORADO, Mexico (NYT) — Looking over the Coahuila desert of northern Mexico from a dig site on a small hill, Mexican paleontologist Rene Hernandez Rivera sees dinosaurs browsing a vast tropical river delta feeding an inland sea.

Hernandez, an investigator with the National Autonomous University of Mexico, and other experts say that much of the 170-mile desert basin lying between Saltillo and Torreon in the state of Coahuila is an unexplored treasure trove of late Mesozoic Era fossils between 66 million and 75 million years old.

Researcher James Kirkland says the fossil preservation here is so good that he has found dinosaur skin impressions embedded in the shale rock.

Kirkland recently returned to his home in Grand Junction, Colo., after working at the dig with Hernandez. "This is some of the finest material I've ever seen," he said in a telephone interview.

Experts say the Coahuila region may answer important questions about world distribution of the giant reptiles toward the end of their reign.

"It's clear that toward the end of the Mesozoic Era, when the dinosaurs were nearing extinction, there were migrations of many species from North America to South America and vice versa," said Louis Jacobs, director of the Shuler Museum of Paleontology at Southern Methodist University in Dallas. "This basin should be an area where we can find evidence of their movements."

The Coahuila dinosaur remains date to the Cretaceous Period, late in the Mesozoic Era, Jacobs said by telephone.

Similar remains are found in a large swath of territory extending south from Texas into northern Mexico, then bending north and west into Arizona.

"We're sitting on top of a pile of Cretaceous remains right here in Dallas," Jacobs said.

But paleontology, or the study of past life forms through their fossil remains, is a science still in its infancy in Mexico, and is severely underfunded, said Laura Sumiko, a dig worker.

Alarming lawsuit

HOUSTON — A woman has been awarded $77,853 in damages after a car alarm company impounded her vehicle and allegedly called her a "con artist." The default judgment, entered Monday by District Judge Greg Abbott, includes $60,000 that the shop owner must pay for slandering Lara D. McGuire. Ronnie Miranda, owner of New Age Electronics, did not respond to the lawsuit. The woman's car was impounded because she was two weeks late making a payment on her new alarm system, according to her lawsuit.

Child-support pay

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Dan Morales says his child-support program intercepted $34.5 million in Internal Revenue Service refunds to parents who owed payments in fiscal year 1992.

That's the last year for which figures are available, he said Tuesday.

Texas ranks third nationally in the amount collected through the interception program, behind California and Michigan, according to the attorney general's office.

In the program, the IRS works with the attorney general's office. Any tax refunds to parents delinquent in their child support payments are turned over to the attorney general for the children.

Midland College officials reveal progress of endowment fund

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

In the face of ongoing reductions in state funding for junior colleges, significant progress has been made in a Midland College project to even out the funding "roller coaster," MC officials said at a Tuesday meeting of the board of trustees.

Established for donations in 1992, the MC endowment fund now has $1.266 million; pledges bring this total to $2.8 million. This is 48.7 percent of the 1997 goal of $5¼ million, said Eileen Piwetz, director of instructional advancement and effectiveness for MC.

This goal is expected to be reached in 1997 for MC's 25th anniversary, Ms. Piwetz said. The interest on these funds will be used to provide funding for instructors and materials needed for the college.

"This will help smooth out the roller coaster of state funding," said MC President David Daniel.

The endowment fund was created to offset eight years worth of reductions in state funding to the institution, Ms. Piwetz explained.

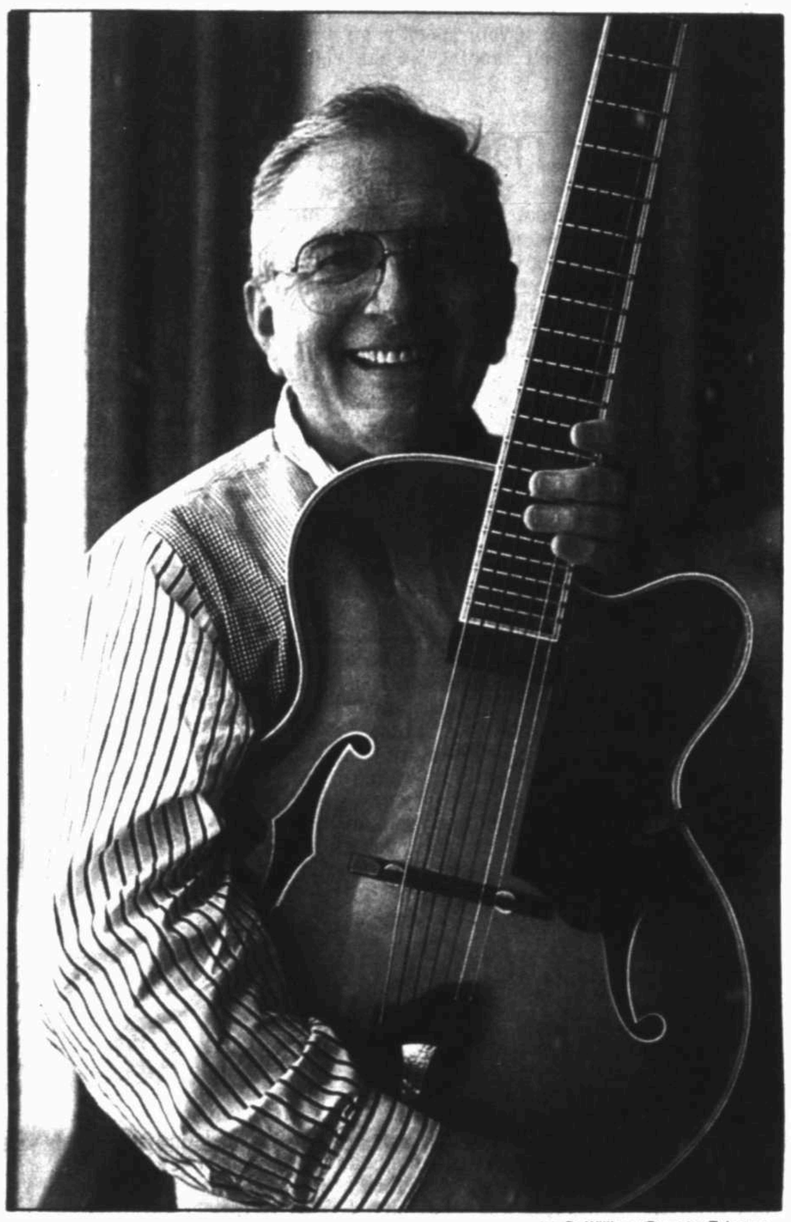

"We try to service more students all the time," she said.

■ Related story/1C

The overall goal for the fund is $10 million.

Also at the Tuesday meeting, trustees received a report from the MC Associate Degree Nursing Program. ADN officials said they had 48 admissions in the spring semester, bringing the total enrollment to 92. The program is geared to handle a maximum of only 96 students at a time, said ADN Director Nancy Shaw.

Jazz guitarist, Bucky Pizzarelli, to perform at Yucca Theatre

Guitarist Bucky Pizzarelli laughs as he remembers the night Benny Goodman got his clarinet stuck in British singer Cleo Lane's hair at Carnegie Hall.

"It was the funniest thing I ever saw," Pizzarelli recalled. "We played the opening number, and he left the stage. She came up for the singing number and the clarinet got stuck in her afro hairdo, and broke up the whole band.

"They got it out, and she was trying to save her hairdo, and he was trying to get the hairs out of his clarinet reeds. Everybody laughed. I saw Cleo Lane many years later, and she always tells that story to everybody."

Pizzarelli, who plays a seven-string guitar, is to perform at 8 p.m. Thursday at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave. Admission is free to West Texas Jazz Society members and $15 for nonmembers. Reserved seating is $10 for members and $25 for nonmembers.

Meridian Oil Inc. donates $20,000 to UTPB projects

■ The amount doubles last year's donation and will be used for faculty development programs.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Representing Meridian Oil Inc. of Midland, Burlington Resources Foundation has donated $20,000 for faculty development programs at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The donation was made Tuesday at the Meridian Oil offices at 3300 N. A St. This doubles Meridian Oil's donation of $10,000 last year and reemphasizes the company's commitment to maintaining highly trained and effective instructors at UTPB, explained Paul Shukis, regional geo-science manager for Meridian.

Shukis presented a check for $20,000 to UTPB President Charles Sorber.

"We are delighted with Burlington's commitment to the university," Sorber said. "This grant allows our faculty to participate in professional development opportunities."

Burlington is the parent corporation of Meridian Oil and has provided about $170,000 in funds that Meridian officials donated locally, Shukis said. A committee at Meridian reviews requests and makes decisions regarding the distribution of these funds.

"We try to grant these funds where it will do the community the most good," Shukis said.

This contribution makes Meridian one of the larger corporate donors to the university, Sorber said.

The funds are intended for use in faculty development programs and, therefore, can be used to establish in-house programs where experts are invited to the UTPB campus to enhance the knowledge and effectiveness of the staff.

The funds also will be used to pay for travel and expenses for UTPB instructors to attend professional training events around the country, Sorber said. "We haven't always had that luxury," he said.

Educators at the institution already are submitting requests to attend or establish sessions where they can gain professional training and put that knowledge to use in the classroom, Sorber said.

Earlier this fiscal year, Meridian made a separate donation of $10,000 to the UTPB Geology Department, bringing total donations to UTPB for this fiscal year to $30,000, Shukis said.

"That represents a significant amount of money — in very difficult times I might add," Sorber said.

This is part of the university's 1994 "Partners" fund-raising campaign to begin this spring, Sorber said. In addition to faculty development, "Partners" supports scholarships and student recruitment.

Avion Flight Centre agrees to pay city for overdue rent, other debts

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

City officials recently worked out an agreement for Avion Flight Centre to pay the city $167,000 plus 8 percent interest over the next 28 months for back rent and other money owed.

During 1993, Avion fell about four months behind in payments to the city for fuel flowage — four cents for each gallon of fuel sold — and for land leased at Midland International Airport.

To resolve the debt, Avion has agreed to give the city $4,500 in cash a month and waive a $2,000 monthly rental for a building used by U.S. Customs. Payments began this month.

"This (restructuring payments) is not uncommon in the airport industry," said Ken Day, director of airports.

In addition to paying off the debt, Avion must maintain regular rental payments for the land leased at the airport.

City officials and Tom Perry, president of Avion, said they were satisfied with the agreement reached.

Perry said Avion became delinquent in payments due to "a downturn in business (in general at the airport) and significant troubles we've had in our collections from major accounts."

Then in October, Avion lost their bid to renew a contract to fuel military aircraft.

"That pretty much sent them over the edge of not being able to pay," said City Manager Mike McGregor.

Avion previously supplied about 1.3 million to 1.5 million gallons of fuel a year for military aircraft.

The aviation company that received the two-year military contract — Cutter Beechcraft Inc. — began fueling aircraft on the north side of the airport.

Catalina, World War II-era 'flying boat' joins CAF's Ghost Squadron

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The versatile Consolidated PBY Catalina, a World War II-era "flying boat" that could ferret out enemy fleets and submarines, protect ship convoys, drop bombs and torpedoes and turn into a "lady of mercy" in air-sea rescue work, has joined the Confederate Air Force's Ghost Squadron in Midland.

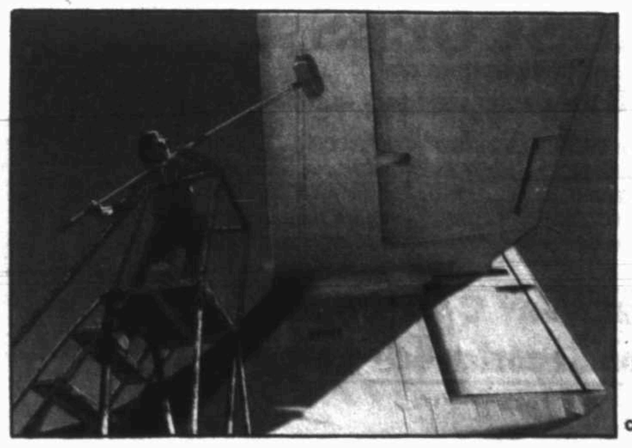

Of the 3,200-plus Catalinas that were built from 1933 until the war ended in 1945, only about 20 are flying today.

"The fuselage of the plane is built something like a torpedo or a submarine," said Steve Miller, the CAF's director of aircraft maintenance.

"The airplane itself could bust through the water, and the wings are up high enough that they could keep the engines out of the water."

In rescue work, the Catalina could

POLICE REPORTS

Injury

ODESSA — An Odessa man was in jail Tuesday after being arrested in connection with a case of injury to an elderly person that occurred last week, officials said.

Clint Lydell Mathis, 29, was arrested Monday morning and charged with injury to an elderly person, according to the report. Bond was set at $20,000, officials said.

Mathis was arrested in connection with an incident that occurred at 9 a.m. on Feb. 8 in the 1000 block of Whitaker, according to the report. Joe Trevino Urias, 60, told police that Mathis repeatedly struck him in the face. Urias was treated at Medical Center Hospital, according to the report.

Possession

CRANE COUNTY — A Roswell, N.M., man was taken into custody Friday after five warrants were issued for his arrest out of Tom Green County, according to Permian Basin Drug Task Force officials.

Task force officials stopped Alberto Miranda, 50, on FM 1053, four miles south of Interstate 20 in Crane County, according to the report. The incident occurred at 3:30 p.m.

Miranda was arrested on two warrants for possession of a controlled substance, one warrant for resisting arrest, one warrant for evading arrest and one warrant for theft, according to the report.

Monday

Vandalism: Vandalism was reported to a Texaco station, 2200 W. Front St. The incident was reported at 4:38 p.m.

Tuesday

Burglary of a vehicle: David Maddox of 2438 Whitmire Blvd. made two reports at 7:44 a.m. the burglary of a vehicle — one listed part of a stereo was taken and the other listed a stereo system taken.

Burglary of a vehicle: Benjamin Romero reported at 7:48 a.m. that a stereo, compact disc player, compact discs and an amplifier were taken from a vehicle at 1309 Mulberry Lane.

Burglary of a vehicle: Argelia Carrasco reported at 9:55 a.m. that a vehicle was burglarized at 4700 Boulder Drive, No. 1406.

PAY: Avion to pay back rent

(From 1B)

City officials said the north area is designated as general aviation, while the south area is designated for military and freight activity. The two areas are separated due to noise, traffic, planning and safety considerations, officials said.

As a result, in December, Cutter began leasing a facility in the south area from Avion.

City officials said that Avion's restructuring plan, coupled with the agreement between Cutter and Avion has three benefits: 1) it allows the city to recoup the money owed by Avion; 2) it insures full military fueling service on the preferred south side of the airport; and, 3) it keeps the U.S. Customs office intact.

CAF: Catalina to join Ghost Squadron

handle 20-foot swells.

Powered by two 1,200-horsepower Pratt & Whitney radial engines, the high-wing PBY could carry almost twice its empty weight in fuel and cargo. It had a maximum speed of 178 mph and cruised at 107 mph. It was known for its slowness and respected for its ruggedness, reliability and adaptability.

"Some of the old-timers said it took off at 90 miles an hour. It cruised at 90 miles an hour. And it landed at 90 miles an hour," Miller said.

The Catalina or "Cat" has a 104-foot wingspan, retractable pontoons on its wing-tips, distinctive rear-observation blisters and the profile of an airplane in a suit of armor.

The CAF's Catalina, a PBY-6A, is numbered among the CAF's 136 warplanes, including about 90 aircraft in flying status.

"We are really pleased with it," said Bob Rice, the CAF's executive director. "It is a great addition to the CAF fleet of airplanes.

"While we have another PBY, it is not in flying condition. This one certainly is, having made a nonstop flight of 12 hours from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., to Midland."

The CAF's PBY, which has been a working airplane since it first flew in late 1945, will be at the CAF headquarters at Midland International Airport until a CAF squadron or wing takes the airplane as a maintenance-restoration project "to rally around," Rice said.

Pete Ettinger, president of Aircraft Marketing Inc. of Albuquerque, N.M., piloted the PBY to Midland Saturday. He and Tom Boy of Fort Lauderdale were the PBY's previous owners.

"It has tremendous range, and it is honest," Ettinger said Tuesday night. "It can be a little skittish on the water if your speed is off or if you aren't landing at the right angle."

In flight, the PBY is "not an airplane that you can trim up and sit back and relax," Ettinger said.

"The rudder will start walking back and forth." The controls demand regular attention, he said.

Midlander Ed Magruder, who piloted PBYs over the Atlantic during World War II in convey-escort, air-sea rescue and submarine-hunting missions, said the Catalina was "a very easy" airplane to fly.

"It had its moments, and there were times it could be unforgiving," Magruder said.

"We just didn't take chances that would result in encountering those unforgiving characteristics. There were some people brave enough to loop the thing."

The Catalina was "tremendously strong structurally," Jack Edwards said. He flew naval fighters during the war.

Scotty Alcorn, a CAF volunteer who served aboard ships in the Atlantic during in World War II, said the Catalina was a patrol bomber, convoy escort and submarine hunter.

"It was very popular as an air-sea rescue (aircraft) for downed pilots out in the Pacific," Alcorn said. "In the North Atlantic where I was, it was used in anti-sub patrol.

"It was sure a popular plane to see when we were coming back. We'd see the PBYs, and then we'd see the seagulls, and we knew we were close to shore."

Peter McNab, who lives in Alberta, Canada, was touring the PBY, other CAF aircraft and the American Airpower Heritage Museum on Tuesday.

The PBY Catalina impressed McNab as an airplane of mercy in air-sea rescue work.

"I reckon it is just like a lady," McNab said. "It is beautiful, and it is graceful. The old Catalinas did a lot of good work, and they saved a lot of people's lives. That was the best thing of it."

GUITAR: Jazz musician to play at local theater

(From 1B)

uncles gave me lessons. Since I was 8 years old, I've been playing. I played in high school and played in the Army a little bit and went with a dance band — Vaughn Monroe's Dance Band."

He's never thought of doing anything else with his life.

"That's all I've ever done my whole life is play the guitar," said Pizzarelli. "I wanted to play, and I've devoted my whole life to doing that. I do other things. I play golf and I paint a little bit, but the guitar is top priority."

Pizzarelli — who is being brought to Midland by the West Texas Jazz Society and co-sponsored by American Airlines — is no newcomer to the area. Through the years, he has played the Odessa Jazz Party and was here for the 1993 Midland Jazz Classic.

He is the father of four musicians, ranging in age from 30 to 38.

Guitarist John, who Pizzarelli said good humoredly, "stole everything from me" is making his third album on a major label in New York City. Martin, the youngest, plays bass with John when John doesn't perform alone, Pizzarelli said.

Although his daughter Mary Pizzarelli, who also plays guitar, recorded on two of his albums, she doesn't play professionally. Instead, she works for TV Guide in Philadelphia. His other daughter, Ann Hymes, plays the piano but does not perform professionally. She works for ABC in New York City.

Pizzarelli views the progress of his career "like a stepping stone situation." He left his one-night-stand performances to become a staff musician at NBC in New York City. He also spent time working with Kate Smith.

"It was a new venture," he said of working with Ms. Smith. "I was going to a studio every day, doing a live television show and meeting other musicians, which you are going to meet later on in other situations. That all leads to other things.

"When the recording boom set in around the middle '50s, I was in the middle of that, too. It was more lucrative, but the music wasn't that good. They were making mostly rock 'n' roll sounds, and it didn't appeal to me that much. I always had a little group, and I ended up going with Benny Goodman's Band to Europe."

Pizzarelli said working with Goodman was great.

"To me, Benny was like the king of swing, and he really was. That was the best choice I think I ever made."

He also enjoyed playing in the band on the "Tonight Show" when it was broadcast from New York City.

"That was a lot of fun. The music was a little better than doing those recordings, and that's why I went back. I got a lot of TV exposure and played with the best musicians in the world, practically."

During his career, the two he has most enjoyed playing with, in addition to Goodman, were Zoots Sims and Buddy Rich.

"They had that energy. A lot of musicians really don't have that kick when they play. It's a little something extra. You can feel it right away. When you feel that, it becomes very easy to play.

"It's very hard to put your finger on it, but you can feel it. If you're a musician, you can hear it right away. I've been fortunate to play with lots of musicians that do have that," Pizzarelli said.

And this month, Pizzarelli is playing with Rosemary Clooney.

"She's another big singer. She's been around a long time," he said, adding that she had worked with both Sinatra and Bing Crosby. "She's got that little extra thing that a lot of singers don't have."

Pizzarelli, who has worked solo engagements for 20 years as well as performing at jazz parties, will be playing here with Neal Goets on drums and Mark Lowe on bass.

"It's very rarely that I play with a trio like that and do a whole program," he said of the Midland gig. "It should come off."

MEETING: Midland College Board of Trustees meet

(From 1B)

Of those enrolled, 13 were males, Ms. Shaw said. This is a greater percentage of male nursing students than is normally seen at MC, she said. The school also boasts a 96-percent passing rate on state board exams and one of the lowest attrition rates of students in the state.

"We are very fortunate to have those kinds of quality programs," Daniel said.

The board also accepted letters of resignations from H.A. Tuck, director of public relations, and Bob Phillips, vice president of administrative services. Both men are retiring after a long stay at MC, Daniel said. Board members applauded the accomplishments of both men. Their current terms expire this summer.

In his report to the board, Daniel said spring enrollment was 3,872 students. "This is an excellent enrollment," he said.

Board members officially called for a May 2 election for three seats on the board. These include Parker Humes (Place 4), Bill Kleine (Place 5) and Charlene Romero Wurtz (Place 6).

Also at the meeting, board members welcomed Ron Jones, who has been named coach of women's basketball. Jones and his family were on hand to answer questions from board members and others present at the meeting.

A former player at MC, Jones is the women's basketball head coach at Western Texas College in Snyder. He will begin at MC at the end of the season at Western Texas, he said.

PARENT: Partners program to train volunteers confidence.

Trained volunteer Carolyn Britten said, "It is personally gratifying as a volunteer to see the enthusiasm, confidence and hope that the parents experience as we progress through our weekly sessions.

"As a volunteer working with many family-oriented groups for the past 30 years, I am very proud to be involved with Parent Partners."

Specific topics of the program include setting family rules, praising a child's behavior, learning the development stages of children from birth to preschool, stress-management techniques, establishing routines for dressing, bathing, feeding and bedtime, helping children with feelings, and toilet training.

Parent Partners manager Debbie Lindsay said, "Our volunteers have the opportunity to mold new family environments. It's heartwarming to see how parent/child bonds develop.

"The simple act of teaching a father how to play a game with his child really opens a whole new door for the family."

Mrs. Lindsay explained that one of the unique aspects of the program is that it is home-based. Volunteers go as a team into a home and work on specific areas with each family once a week over a 10-week period.

The program also is offered at various times through small-group instruction and taught in the home economics department at Coleman High School.

Ms. Lindsay said, "The results of this program are unbelieveable. Our volunteers give parents the key to raising happy, well-adjusted children. Last year, we worked with 829 parents and children. By training more volunteers, we can reach even more families this year."

The upcoming Parent Partner volunteer training will run from 6 to 9 p.m. on Friday and from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday.

Interested persons are invited to attend. There is no charge for the training.

Individuals interested in attending the training and serving as volunteers should contact Mrs. Lindsay at 561-5508. Centers also need volunteers to serve as child-care providers and work with other programs. For more information about other volunteer positions, call 699-4262.

FIRE: Man appreciates help and then got his brother and sister-in-law and their two children out of the house.

Firefighters were dispatched to the residence at 8:19 a.m., officials said.

"They were here within about three minutes," Bush said. "Two stations — the main one and the old at Golf Course and Garfield — came out. They carried furniture outside and were careful to put tarp down on the carpet so they wouldn't get it dirty."

Bush said the firefighters then cut a 4-foot-by-8-foot hole in his floor in order to get to the source of the fire.

"I have an old hardwood floor and they were real careful not to cut any more than they had to," Bush said.

After the fire had been put out, firefighters helped bring furniture back into the house, Bush said.

Bush was back in his house Tuesday night, with only a hole in his living room and some minor smoke damage to the rest of the house.

"I am very thankful," he said. "The way the firefighters acted, being so careful and professional about everything. The captain even came by tonight to make sure everything was OK. I think they deserve a pat on the back for that."

Rep. Gingrich tours collider, plans to push for other uses

DALLAS (AP) — House Minority Whip Newt Gingrich traveled to the site of the doomed superconducting super collider Tuesday in hopes of getting enough first-hand information to help push for alternative uses for the project.

Rep. Joe Barton, a Republican whose Ennis district encompasses the collider, escorted the Georgia Republican to Waxahachie to "show Congressman Gingrich what $2 billion worth of federal and state money has created."

"In a time of tight budgets, I'd like to make sure we use common sense as much as possible," said Gingrich, a representative from Georgia who has supported the collider.

"If there are research assets and medical assets that already exist, let's not tear them down and destroy them. Let's find a way to use them in a practical common sense way," Gingrich said.

Congress last year approved $640 million for the program's shutdown and the Clinton administration has requested $180 million more for 1995.

The Energy Department last week issued the first of its SSC termination reports, estimating the shutdown costs at $695 million.

Gingrich and Barton said they hope the federal government would reimburse Texas for the $440 million-plus already spent on the giant atom smasher.

Gov. Ann Richards has been pressing the administration for a settlement. The Energy Department last week reaffirmed Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary's commitment to reimburse Texas.

The Republicans said the money's not coming soon enough, and Barton says the DOE's statement is just talk.

"So far, the Clinton Administration has not honored its commitment to make that loss good to Governor Richards and the people of Texas," Barton said.

Barton says it's imperative that the administration swiftly decides what to do with the project. If no action is taken soon, there may not be enough employees or equipment to carry out whatever solutions are decided upon, he said.

The National Academy of Sciences, Richards' collider advisory task force and others have urged that a core group of scientists be kept at the collider to plot a reduced future for the project.

Among the alternate uses for the SSC suggested by Gingrich are cancer treatment and research.

Fortuneteller's statement becomes part of court record

By Josh Lemieux
Associated Press Writer

BROWNSVILLE, Texas — A surgeon's wife was desperate to know whether a teen-ager still loved her daughter before offering $3,000 to have the boy killed, a fortuneteller told investigators.

Maria Mercedes Martinez said she read tarot cards and told Dora Garcia Cisneros that 18-year-old Joey Fischer no longer was interested in Mrs. Cisneros' daughter, Cristina.

"On her third visit sometime before Halloween (1992) she came to ask me if I knew of anyone that would terminate, meaning to kill, Joey. That she would pay $3,000 to kill Joey," according to Mrs. Martinez's statement to investigators.

Mrs. Martinez, a 72-year-old fortuneteller and folk healer, made the statement after her arrest on April 5, 1993. It was translated from Spanish to English and handwritten by sheriff's investigator Abel Perez Jr.

Perez's report only recently became part of the court record in the case against Mrs. Cisneros, 56, and Daniel Garza, 43, nicknamed "El Guero."

Garza, also a fortunetelling client of Mrs. Martinez, is accused of hiring two gunmen to kill Fischer.

The teen-ager was gunned down in March 1993 at his home outside Brownsville.

Prosecutors and defense attorneys currently are picking a jury to try Mrs. Cisneros and Garza on capital murder and conspiracy charges in state district court in Brownsville. Both have pleaded innocent.

Mrs. Martinez, who said she passed the money from Mrs. Cisneros to Garza, pleaded guilty to a lesser count of conspiracy to commit murder and agreed to testify for the prosecution.

"Dora told me that this Joey had sexually violated Christina (sic) and wasn't interested in her anymore. However, Dora was very angry and desperately needed to know if this Joey still loved her. I read my cards and told Dora that this Joey didn't love her anymore," according to the statement.

Perez said Tuesday that he understood the word "violated" to mean nothing more than that the teen-agers had sex.

Mrs. Martinez told investigators that she asked Garza if he knew anyone who would kill the teenager for $3,000.

"Daniel told me he knew some guys that would probably take the job," the statement said. Mrs. Martinez said Mrs. Cisneros gave her a picture of Fischer, and she passed it to Garza.

"On March 3, 1993, about 8:30 a.m. Dora called me at the store and told me that the job was done and was going over to drop off the sealed white envelope with the $3,000," Mrs. Martinez's statement said. "At about 10 p.m. Daniel Garza came into my store to pick up the money."

Garza made a statement largely backing up Mrs. Martinez's version, according to investigator Perez. Perez translated and hand wrote Garza's alleged confession during an interrogation on March 31, 1993.

At pretrial hearings last fall, attorneys for Mrs. Martinez and Garza attempted to block the statements from entering into evidence at trial, arguing that their clients didn't read or write and didn't understand their rights to remain silent.

State District Judge Rogelio Valdez has ruled the statements admissible. Mrs. Martinez pleaded guilty on Jan. 31 in part because of her confession, according to her attorney, Edmund Cyganiewicz.

Garza, a 43-year-old Mexican national who lives in San Antonio, said in his statement that he sought Mrs. Martinez for advice because he suspected that his wife's relatives had put a bad spell on his marriage.

Garza said he paid money to the fortuneteller, but his life didn't improve — in fact he was getting a divorce. Soon Mrs. Martinez began telling him about a woman who would pay to "have a guy beaten up," Garza's statement said.

"She told me to help her with that and in return she would guarantee me that everything would be alright with my personal problems," Garza's statement says, as written by the investigator.

Garza said he talked to an acquaintance named "Israel" who agreed to hurt the boy.

Later, Garza's statement says, Mrs. Martinez told him that the woman — referred to only as "la clienta," or the client — wanted to have the young man killed.

Garza said he passed the information and a photo to Israel, who returned on the day of the killing and demanded the money.

Garza's statement said the amount was $3,500 — not $3,000. Garza's statement also says he never counted the money, but Mrs. Martinez's statement says he counted each $100 bill.

Their versions also differ over some times of meetings.

According to the indictment, the alleged gunmen are identified as Israel Olivares, 23, and Heriberto Puentes Pizana, 21, both of Matamoros, Mexico.

Puentes was arrested in Mexico on Sunday for an auto theft charge. Olivares — also known as Rafael Mata Soto, "El Chuntaro" and "El Cabezon" — remains at large.

Authorities say it is highly unlikely Puentes will be extradited to the United States to face capital murder charges. In an interview at a jail in Reynosa on Monday, Puentes denied any involvement in the case.

Sen. Hutchison, District Attorney duel over release of grand jury transcripts

AUSTIN (AP) — A judge ordered grand jury transcripts from the investigation into U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas, to be released but changed his mind after Mrs. Hutchison's attorney objected.

State District Court Judge Bob Perkins initially signed an order Tuesday sought by Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle to release secret testimony from the eight-month investigation into Mrs. Hutchison.

But Perkins said he pulled back the order after Mrs. Hutchison's attorney Dick DeGuerin objected. DeGuerin said releasing the transcripts without notifying the witnesses involved would compromise their rights of privacy.

"This is further proof that Ronnie Earle's real motive in this matter is to politically damage Sen. Hutchison, not to see that justice is done," DeGuerin said.

Perkins said a hearing on the matter would be held later. No date has been set.

Last week, Mrs. Hutchison was acquitted of criminal ethics charges after Earle refused to try the case, citing a judge's refusal to rule in advance whether certain evidence could be used in the trial.

After the acquittal, Mrs. Hutchison called on Earle to make public evidence in the case, which Earle did over the weekend.

On Tuesday, Earle told Perkins that he thought the grand jury testimony should be made public too.

Mrs. Hutchison's spokesman David Beckwith said Mrs. Hutchison had asked Earle to release evidence in the case. "We did not ask him to massively violate the privacy rights of grand jury witnesses," he said.

Gregg Cox, a Travis County assistant district attorney, said Earle wanted to speak with the witnesses before releasing the transcripts. He said he did not know why Earle sought the order from Perkins before talking to the witnesses.

Health-care reform supporters introduce ad campaign criticizing insurance industry

By Scott Rothschild
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN — Supporters of comprehensive health-care reform unveiled an advertising campaign Tuesday designed to rebut ads sponsored by the insurance industry.

The Health Care Reform Project said its first batch of print, radio and television ads to be launched in selective markets nationwide will cost about $500,000.

The first print ad states: "When health insurance companies choose, you lose."

The coalition says it represents 60 million people, and includes businesses, consumers, workers, doctors, nurses, hospitals, elderly and children's advocates.

While members of the coalition support different proposals, they agree that health-care reform should provide coverage to all Americans at an affordable price.

Tim Curtis, executive director of Texas Citizen Action, said the ads remind consumers about the importance of health-care reform, and distinguish between "real" and "fake" reforms.

"Insurance companies today have all the choice, who gets covered, what the costs will be, what benefits you'll have and whether you'll even have coverage," he said.

Pete Fredriksen, of Families USA, said the health insurance industry was spending millions of dollars on commercials to confuse the public about health-care reform.

"What the Health Care Reform Project would like to do is focus people's attention on the problems we have today with health insurance," he said.

Jerry Johns, an insurance industry spokesman, said it was wrong to criticize the insurance industry.

"It's totally unfair to say the insurance industry is not cooperating in the current debate," he said.

Judge makes request for more jury candidates

FORT WORTH (AP) — Potential jurors' strong feelings about the abortion issue have slowed down the criminal trespassing trial of 22 anti-abortionists.

Judge Pete Gilfeather had to request 30 more jury candidates on Monday, a week after the courthouse had to be cleared because of a bomb threat against him.

Gilfeather said he might have to try another method of filling the first of four six-member juries if the problem continues.

The trial involves 22 people charged with criminal trespassing stemming from a July 15 protest at a White Settlement abortion clinic. The four juries each will hear the cases of five or six defendants.

The first 45 prospective jurors appeared before Gilfeather on Friday.

Five were excused for medical reasons and 11 were excused with the agreement of attorneys. The other 29 possible panelists were told to return next Friday.

The 30 supplemental jurors filled out background questionnaires Monday afternoon. If enough panelists are left from those two groups, attorneys will continue trying to seat a jury Friday, Gilfeather said.

If the juries can be seated today, Thursday and Friday, testimony will begin Feb. 22, Gilfeather said.

All four juries and one alternate for each jury will be sequestered throughout the trial, which will run seven days a week until it is completed.

The defendants are accused of trespassing, a misdemeanor, during a summer protest at the Westside Abortion Clinic. Eight others have pleaded guilty or no contest. Another defendant will be tried separately.

Of those facing trial, half are men and half are women. They range in age from 21 to 73.

Presbyterians try to mend rift over conference

By Pauline Arrillaga
Associated Press Writer

IRVING — Presbyterian leaders are preparing a report to address an ongoing controversy over an ecumenical conference on women that invoked "Sophia, Creator God," and used other feminine images of the deity.

The Presbyterian General Assembly Council, during its weeklong meeting here, also has addressed other issues raised during the "Re-imagining" women's conference.

Critics of the conference in Minneapolis last November charge its theological basis did not adhere to the Christian faith.

The feud has long been waged over attempts to modify pervasively male references to God as "He" or "Father" and to bring out biblical indications that God also has "motherly" qualities.

Bible readers differ over whether the "Sophia" texts merely use a literary device to personify the abstract idea of wisdom or whether Sophia/Wisdom is an aspect of divinity.

Christian theology has long held that God is not limited to male nor female, but transcends sexual limitations.

While not sponsored by any one denomination, the four-day conference mostly was attended by Presbyterians, who numbered 409 among the 2,200 participants.

And it is the Presbyterian Church, facing a possible rift among its members, that is attempting to placate both those who support the conference as an exploration in religious theology and those who view it as a threat to Christianity.

An executive committee of the General Assembly Council formulated a nine-page report on the Reimagining conference. It was to be presented to the entire council for debate and a vote Tuesday.

The report reaffirms the council's commitment to the Christian faith and said it "stands firmly within the reformed theological tradition."

It also stated that certain statements and rituals of the Re-imagining conference exceeded the boundaries of reformed faith.

However, the report acknowledged there is a certain freedom of conscience within the boundaries of traditional Christianity.

"This recommendation looks forward to evaluating those procedures and broadening the base of decision-making," said the Rev. Neil Weatherhogg, chairman of the General Assembly Council.

The report recommends there be no reprimands or discharges of council members who attended the conference.

In a preliminary discussion of the report Monday, some council members expressed dissatisfaction at its apparent middle-ground approach.

Some council members expressed concern about a show of support for homosexuals that was displayed at the conference. During an unscheduled presentation to "celebrate the miracle of being lesbian," a member of Christian Lesbians Out Together called for the audience to stand in support of acceptance by the church of homosexuals.

One council member contended it was against church guidelines to have council members joining in such a show of support.

However, council member Emily Hessler said, "I see that in support of the church pursuing an inclusive community and welcoming people into the church no matter what their sexual orientation."

Presbyterian guidelines allow homosexuals as church members, but they cannot be retained as officers.

University begins own inquiry into cheating allegations

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Southern University officials said Tuesday they have started an internal probe into allegations pharmacy students were supplied with testing materials before the state licensing exam.

Harris County prosecutors said Monday they were looking into a complaint lodged anonymously to the Texas State Board of Pharmacy.

Assistant district attorney Chuck Noll said the letter alleged someone in a position of authority at the school was involved in "the distribution of confidential testing materials."

In a statement Tuesday, the school said it was cooperating with prosecutors, but criticized the fact that a grand jury probe was started without evidence of wrongdoing.

"TSU officials find it difficult to believe that an investigation, based on an anonymous letter, has been launched by the Harris County district attorney and referred to a grand jury," the statement said.

The school added that it would undertake an internal investigation.

"It is the position of Texas Southern University that the integrity of the academic enterprise must be protected at every cost," the school said. "The university is in full accord with any and every effort to assure the public that academic dishonesty has no place at TSU."

exam, but questions for the state test are picked at random by a computer.

Anyone who distributed testing materials ahead of time would have obtained them in a unauthorized manner, professors said.

Dr. Henry Lewis III, dean of the College of Pharmacy, said prosecutors had subpoenaed information about the review process for the exams.

"I know for a fact that none of our faculty and staff personnel have ever engaged in giving out any confidential material," he said.

TSU's College of Pharmacy, which has educated nearly a third of the nation's black pharmacists, is being subjected to the inquiry because its students have been increasingly successful at passing the state exam, the school maintained.

"Now that this success rate has become the rule rather than the exception, it appears unfair to raise an accusation of dishonesty without hard evidence or either a named accuser," the statement said.

Pharmacy Board Director Fred Brinkley said he received the anonymous complaint two weeks ago.

TSU pharmacy professors said the charge shocked them because faculty members normally would not have access to the test. They said students are asked similar questions on the school's final

Governor touts new video-employment information program

AUSTIN (AP) — People around Texas will be able to get state employment information at shopping malls and grocery stores through touch-activated video screens in a pilot program that's being touted by Gov. Ann Richards.

The Texas Employment Commission and California-based North Communications plan to put in 50 kiosks with screens over the next three months. Fifteen will be placed in the next few days in Austin, Corpus Christi, Dallas, El Paso, Houston, McAllen, Port Arthur and Tyler.

"Info-Texas will help connect Texans who are still looking for work to the jobs that can make a difference to them and to their families and to our economy," Richards said Tuesday.

The kiosks — which combine elements of the computer, television and automated teller machines — use video and graphics to provide TEC information and services. They can be used in Spanish or English.

For example, people can search a current list of state agency employment opportunities and get information about unemployment benefits, worker re-training and child labor laws.

The company in the future plans to expand the services offered. Anglers, for example, could buy fishing licenses by inserting a credit card, while job-seekers could register their skills and interests in a job-matching system.

Texas is the seventh state government to use kiosks from North Communications, which designed the computer software and network and is responsible for their ongoing maintenance and operations.

Officials said the network has cost the state nothing in initial capital expense. The state will use a federal grant to pay for the program at a cost of $1.50 to $3.50 each time a person uses the machine, according to commission administrator Bill Grossenbacher.

"Texas National introduced us to hedging. Now it is an integral part of our business"

Robert M. Garst, Jr.
Phillip Robinson
Las Colinas Energy Corp.
Irving, Texas

Acquiring and enhancing the production of oil and gas properties has been the primary business of Robert Garst, Jr. and Phillip Robinson since they formed Las Colinas Energy in 1990. They had worked together for years, and both were experienced in the oil and gas business. But when they came to Texas National Bank to help finance their first major acquisition in 1991, their banker introduced them to hedging. Using options to hedge oil and gas prices gives Bob and Phillip a sense of security in spite of constant price changes in the market. "In 1991, hedging was somewhat exotic to us," says Phillip, "but now it is an integral part of every acquisition we make - and so is Texas National Bank." Whether you office in Dallas or Midland, if you're in the oil and gas business, you need a banker who knows oil and gas. You need Texas National Bank of Midland. Come see us.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Making a completely new beginning now will bring long-range stability to your life. You find the financial security you have sought. Legal papers are likely to be signed in May. Look forward to capitalizing on other people's talent, business skills or discarded resources. Collaborations and speculative ventures are favored in the fall. A change of occupation is possible by this time next year.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor LeVar Burton, tennis star John McEnroe, actress Gretchen Wyler, singer-restaurateur-politician Sonny Bono.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You need to make a completely realistic assessment of your financial position. Changing priorities at work require fresh strategy. Stay on top of things.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Innovative ideas — yours or someone else's — will introduce more fun into your routine. An original concept is really quite practical. Roundabout methods work best when dealing with opinionated people.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): All unusual ideas should be closely examined. Otherwise, you might dismiss a proposal that has real potential! Welcome an opportunity to use someone else's resources, but beware of secret dealings in the night.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An opportune time to invent, travel or explore. Use your imagination to visualize an ideal state of affairs, then work to bring it about. Get in touch with neighbors who moved away.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An unexpected condition requires prompt attention. Proceed with counseling, scheduling and organizing efforts. Be careful when handling financial matters this afternoon.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Having a traveling companion is not conducive to creative thought. Go it alone. Browse for books or videos. Someone flatters you. Refuse to become involved in a get-rich-quick scheme.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A good day for exploratory activities. Probe for the truth. A business liaison holds interesting possibilities. Latch on to anything with a profit potential. Dress comfortably.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You may find someone a bit unpredictable from time to time. Learn to live with it! Self-reliance is the name of the game. Polish your skills. Pursue a favorite hobby evenings or weekends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your ability to see more than one side of an issue brings new financial rewards. Gravitate to people who love you for who you are not for what you can do for them.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A chance encounter may clue you in to what is really going on. Pay attention to your personal needs, not to what other people have accomplished. Overseas business interests could lead to a windfall.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Something exciting happens today. A public relations coup puts you in an enviable position. The next few days may be critical. Guard against making a misstep. Influential people are in your corner.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): There could be a mystery surrounding someone you meet for the first time. Do not be taken in by a deceptive financial proposition. Guard your valuables. Put the finishing touches on an important project.

All roads do not necessarily lead to Rome. You would be better advised to pick out the right trail and ignore the red herrings.

Six clubs is an excellent contract. Played correctly, it will succeed whenever clubs are 3-2 and diamonds 4-2 or, if trumps are 4-1, when diamonds are 3-3. North-South used a series of cue-bids, with North striving for a grand slam, to get to the optimum spot. Since North's two hearts, the fourth suit, created a game force, there was no need to bid more than four clubs next, setting the scene for the cue-bidding sequence that followed.

At one table declarer chose a simple line. The ace of diamonds was cashed, trumps were drawn, followed by king of diamonds and another. When the suit split 4-2 with no honor appearing on the first two rounds, there were only 11 tricks to be had.

Another declarer tried a slightly different tack. The ace of diamonds was cleared, followed by the ace and king of trumps. Declarer came to hand with a heart ruff, cashed the king of diamonds and ruffed a diamond. East overruffed and declarer still had to lose a diamond—again down one.

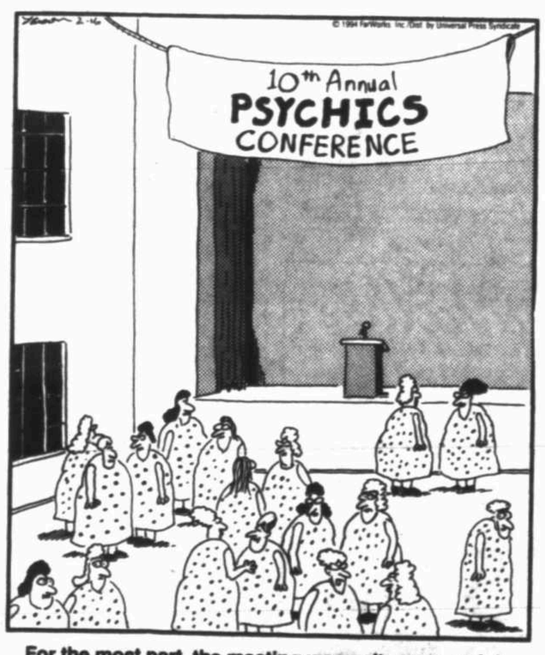

The successful declarers won the opening lead, unblocked the ace of diamonds, then cashed the ace and queen of trumps. Had someone failed to follow, declarer would have had to rely on a 3-3 diamond break—cash the king, ruff a diamond, return to hand with a heart ruff, draw a third round of trumps with the jack and then run diamonds until the defender ruffs. When both followed, declarer ruffed a diamond with the king, returned to hand with a heart ruff to draw the last trump, then conceded a diamond.

Drug mixup lands Guess? model Playmate of Year Smith in hospital

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Anna Nicole Smith, a model for Guess? clothing and Playboy's 1993 Playmate of the Year, was hospitalized after mixing prescription drugs with alcohol, police said.

Smith and a friend, Daniel C. Ross, had taken unknown amounts of alcohol and the prescription drugs Vicodin and Xanax, Lt. Frank Salcido said. Vicodin is a painkiller and Xanax is an anti-anxiety medication.

The two ingested the combination after an argument at a hotel and were taken to hospitals Saturday, Salcido said.

There was no indication that either Smith or Ross attempted to harm themselves and no charges were expected, police said.

Smith, 26, was released Monday from Cedars-Sinai Medical Center. Ross was reportedly taken to Century City Hospital. There was no record of his being admitted, said hospital spokeswoman Lisa Gaines. Ross "will be fine," Salcido said.

LOS ANGELES — Winona Ryder will play Jo in a version of "Little Women" that's set to start shooting this year. She told Entertainment Weekly that she decided to take the role because of Polly Klaas.

Winona Ryder will play Jo in a version of "Little Women."

"I was trying to make the decision while all that stuff was going on (in Petaluma)," said Ryder. "And then I found out it was Polly's favorite book. I think it says a lot nowadays if you can make a movie that doesn't contribute to the misery of the world.

"It hit me that if I can do this, I can do a lot. And they're letting me dedicate the movie to her."

NEW YORK — ABC News correspondent Cokie Roberts and a producer were reprimanded for faking an outdoor shot at Capitol Hill.

On the Jan. 26 "World News Tonight," anchorman Peter Jennings in New York switched to Roberts in Washington for a discussion of President Clinton's State of the Union address delivered the previous night.

Jennings said Roberts was "at Capitol Hill" and Roberts was seen standing in front of the Capitol wearing an overcoat. Roberts, apparently pressed for time, did the "standup" from a studio a few blocks away.

Roberts and Rick Kaplan, executive producer of "World News Tonight," were reprimanded, spokeswoman Teri Everett said Tuesday. A memo released Monday from ABC News vice president Richard Wald said the ruse was "serious because it misled our audience."

Jennings didn't know about the bogus shot, Everett said.

Roberts and Kaplan didn't return telephone calls Tuesday. Roberts told The Washington Post, "I made a mistake."

FRANKFORT, Ind. — The Southern California earthquake nearly did in director William Friedkin's basketball movie "Blue Chips."

The only copy of the movie's original negative was being processed at a studio when the earthquake hit last month. It was soaked with water, dirt and plaster. Friedkin considered shelving the project.

"It looked for awhile like this would be my worst nightmare — that a great portion of 'Blue Chips' would be lost. We could never have reshot," he said Monday at a Frankfort showing of the movie.

"But the Technicolor people baby-bathed the film, frame by frame, cleaned it and saved almost everything. Only a handful of frames were destroyed."

Game scenes in the movie starring Nick Nolte were shot in Frankfort and French Lick.

SHREVEPORT, La. — Former football star Terry Bradshaw is suing a hunting equipment company for $100,000 he claims he is owed as its spokesman.

"It is a plain, ordinary collection suit. He did the work and has not been paid," said Jack E. Carlisle Jr., Bradshaw's attorney.

Ralph Williams, who owns Loggy Bayou Inc., said the company owes Bradshaw nothing. The company signed Bradshaw, now a football TV commentator, to a six-year contract but cut the payments last year in amendments signed by Bradshaw's agent, Williams said.

"I don't want to get into all the little details. But he's just been very, very hard to work with and caused us some very embarrassing situations," Williams said.

"So we chose to end our relationship with him last year when the contract came up for renewal. He obviously took it a little personally," he said.

Bradshaw's lawsuit, filed in Caddo District Court last week, said he hasn't been paid for video work and other promotional services he performed for Loggy Bayou.

New AIDS cases drop 50 percent in San Francisco

N.Y. Times News Service

The AIDS epidemic has passed its peak in San Francisco, the first city to be struck by the disease, the city's health department said Tuesday.

The number of new AIDS cases reached its highest level in 1992, 10 years after the peak year for HIV infections.

Last year, the health department said, the number of new cases dropped by 50 percent, reflecting the effectiveness of prevention programs that were put into effect in the 1980s. Health department researchers said they expected the number of new cases to continue to decline but more slowly over the next three years.

"This is good news," said Dr. George Lemp, the chief of the Seroepidemiology and Surveillance Branch of the San Francisco health department's AIDS office. "We believe we've altered the course of the AIDS epidemic in San Francisco."

But others warned against complacency.

Jeffrey Levi, the director of public policy at the AIDS Action Foundation in Washington, said that even if the epidemic was waning in San Francisco, other communities were still recording more cases and that the good news from San Francisco still depended on continued prevention efforts.

Recent reports of young high-risk men in San Francisco having unprotected sex are raising fears that the effectiveness of prevention programs may be waning. It takes about 10 years for an HIV infected person to develop AIDS.

At 4 percent, San Francisco has the highest percentage of people infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, in any city. Nearly all of those infected are gay or bisexual men. Health officials say that nationally their projections show a decrease in the proportion of AIDS cases among gay and bisexual men and an increase in the proportion among people who inject illicit drugs.

Dr. John W. Ward, the chief of HIV and AIDS surveillance at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta, said San Francisco could serve as a model of effective prevention programs.

Dr. Mervyn Silverman, president of the American Foundation for AIDS Research, said the change in behavior among gay men in San Francisco was unparalleled in the history of medicine. It was a change that many said could not occur or could not be maintained.

Dr. Don C. Des Jarlais, the director of research at Beth Israel Medical Center's chemical dependency center in Manhattan and an expert on AIDS among intravenous drug users, called the San Francisco data very heartening but he cautioned, "This should not be read as an excuse that we don't have to worry about AIDS any more."

Ward said the AIDS epidemic was slowing across the nation but had not yet reached its peak. The epidemic is concentrated in a few cities, he said, among them New York and San Francisco.

Masked gunman was judge's son

TORRANCE, Calif. (AP) — A masked gunman who opened fire in a meeting room filled with police officers, killing two before being wrestled to the ground and dying himself, was the son of a state appellate court judge.

David Joseph Fukuto burst into the room brandishing two handguns, a 9mm and a .22-caliber with a homemade silencer, and yelled "This is a robbery!" officers said.

The son of Justice Morio L. Fukuto of the state Court of Appeals was wearing a bulletproof vest, mask and hooded sweatshirt. His grandmother said the former high school honors student was "very bad."

"My first thought was that it was a joke, a bad joke," said Palos Verdes Estates Police Chief Gary Johansen. Both of the dead officers were from his force.

On Tuesday, officers from nearby Torrance, Redondo Beach, Hermosa Beach and Manhattan Beach patrolled Palos Verdes Estates, an exclusive 4½-square-mile community of 14,000 some 20 miles south of Los Angeles, while its own officers gathered to grieve their fallen colleagues.

Outside the police station, flowers were propped up against a tree and messages of sympathy were dropped off. "Just one of PV's grateful residents," said one card.

With tears streaming down her face, resident Carol Wharton pulled up in her white Mercedes-Benz to drop off red roses. "These are senseless things that are happening. This is getting out of hand," she said.

The chief was among 11 officers, the Palos Verdes Estates city manager and a psychologist in a motivation seminar in the 12th floor Holiday Inn conference room Monday afternoon when the gunman burst in.

Johansen said he believed "it was a cop training class trick that had been done."

"I was angry because I was concerned somebody could get hurt in a police class like that doing these things," said Johansen, who has been chief for six years.

Sgt. Vernon Thomas Vanderpool of Torrance stood up and was shot. Capt. Michael Tracy of Redondo Beach then stood to help Vanderpool and he, too, was shot.

Then the gunman was "tackled by four or five of my officers," Johansen said.

"In the corner he was fighting very violently with them. Once they got him subdued and handcuffed we rolled him over and he didn't look real good at that point," the chief said.

"Our information at this point is he died of a possible head injury that was sustained as a result of the people in the room wrestling the guns away from him," said Torrance Police Sgt. Dave Smith. There was no comment yet from the coroner's office.

Johansen said he was certain Fukuto had no idea the hotel's penthouse meeting room was filled with police officers, none of whom were in uniform.

Substance Abuse.
Often It's Not The Only Problem.

Quite often substance abuse is a symptom of depression. And depression is a serious illness. Unfortunately, many people choose to 'treat' their depression themselves, often leading to:

- Excessive drinking
- Use of illegal substances, such as cocaine or marijuana
- Abuse of prescription drugs
- Overeating

If you or someone you know is experiencing any of these problems, call us 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Our experienced staff and innovative treatment programs can help over-come the obvious and not so obvious problems - the right way.

Prosecutor delivers daylong summation in Trade Center trial

NEW YORK (NYT) — A prosecutor in the World Trade Center bombing trial Tuesday delivered a daylong summation of the government's case, keeping the jury rapt and, after weaving the multitudinous strands of circumstantial evidence into a single story, asking it to find the defendants guilty in an elaborate plot to "send a terrorist message to the United States."

"If you sift through the evidence, you will see that these are the World Trade Center bombers before you," the prosecutor, Henry DePippo, told the jury. "You will conclude that they are guilty on every count beyond any reasonable doubt."

"They did it to send a terrorist message and they told you themselves exactly what that message was," DePippo concluded, referring to letters and phone calls to newspapers after the blast on Feb. 26 last year, saying that all Americans were responsible for the Middle East policies of their government.

What DePippo did was to sift through the enormous volumes of evidence for the jury, speaking rapidly, rarely referring to his notes, plucking out bits and pieces of testimony that some observers who had sat in the courtroom for the four-month trial might have forgotten, relating them to the overall picture.

He evoked the names of the six people who were killed in the blast. He used charts showing intricate patterns of phone calls, trying to demonstrate, for example, that calls by one defendant to chemical companies were often followed by calls to other defendants.

He described the pattern of chemical purchases and linked them to various stages in the making of a urea-nitrate bomb, the sort of explosive that, the government maintains, was used in the trade center blast.

Prosecutors are not allowed during the taking of testimony to explain the meaning of each bit and piece of evidence, and because there were so many pieces of testimony in the trade center trial, the meaning of much of it was not clear at the time it was first shown to the jury.

Repeatedly using phrases like, "what does this tell you?" or "what's going on at this point?" or "If you still have any doubts in your mind about this, there's more," DePippo went chronologically through the case, guiding the jury through the tangle of evidence, telling the story of a terror attack from what the government claims to be the beginning, in April 1992, to several days after the blast.

All of the defendants were included in DePippo's tightly spun web. There was the lead defendant, Mohammad A. Salameh, against whom the testimony has been voluminous.

The testimony showed Salameh renting the storage locker where chemicals for the bomb were delivered, renting the apartment where they were mixed and renting the yellow Ryder rental van that carried the bomb to its destination on the B-2 parking level of the trade center.

The testimony against a second defendant, Nidal A. Ayyad, also seemed strong even before DePippo's summation. There has been a great amount of evidence showing that Ayyad, who has a degree in chemical engineering, bought chemicals, including tanks of hydrogen gas, later used in the trade center, and that he sent the messages to news organizations taking credit for the bombing.

DePippo's summation made the case against a third defendant, Mahmud Abouhalima, an Egyptian-born limousine driver, seem stronger than it had appeared before.

The most damaging testimony against Abouhalima came when he was identified as being in the company of Salameh and a fugitive defendant in the case, Ramzi Ahmed Yousef, early on the morning of the blast itself, buying gas at a Jersey City gas station both for Abouhalima's Lincoln Town Car, and, more importantly, for the yellow Ryder van that Salameh had reported stolen only hours before.

U.S. takes action on cellular-phone trade

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration accused Japan on Tuesday of a "clear cut and serious" violation of a cellular phone trade agreement and took the first step toward imposing millions of dollars of punitive tariffs.

U.S. officials made clear that the retaliation planned in the telephone case was just the first in a series of hard-line actions that would be taken following the breakdown of market-opening "framework" talks last Friday.

U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor refused to discuss what other retaliation was being contemplated but he left no doubt that the administration planned to keep pressure on Japan to lower its $60 billion trade surplus with America.

"All we're asking for is a two-way street, that their markets be comparably open to our markets," Kantor said. "We hope we can achieve that by the various actions we'll take over the next few months."

Congressional sources said they expected the administration to announce either today or Thursday that it was re-implementing a lapsed section of U.S. trade law that provides for retaliatory tariffs against countries deemed to be "unfair traders" if negotiations fail to open the markets.

In the cellular case, Kantor said he determined that Japan had failed to live up to the terms of a 1989 agreement in which it had promised to open its cellular phone market to Motorola Inc.

Kantor said this was a "classic case of the determination of Japan to keep its markets closed, particularly to leading-edge U.S. products."

Kantor said the United States would publish in the next 30 days a list of Japanese products that could be subject to punitive tariffs of up to 100 percent. Kantor refused to say what products would be targeted but he said the total would be "several hundred millions of dollars," equal to the sales lost by Motorola.

Motorola President Christopher B. Galvin estimated that his company was suffering $250 million to $300 million annually in lost sales because of Japan's barriers. He praised the administration's actions and expressed hope Japan would relent so that sanctions would not be necessary.

"We are disappointed and frustrated that the Japanese government remains committed to a policy that limits its own consumers access to technology available in the rest of the world," he said.

The higher tariffs would not go into effect until American consumers had a chance to comment on the proposed product list. This will give U.S. and Japanese negotiators a second chance to reach agreement, but U.S. officials say if the issue is not resolved in the next two months, the trade sanctions will take effect.

In 1989, the Bush administration threatened to raise tariffs on Japanese products — from color televisions to tape recorders — because of Japan's failure to live up to an earlier agreement to give Motorola access to its cellular phone market.

Sanctions were averted in that case when Japan pledged to take corrective actions. The failure of that agreement is the basis of the current dispute.

"After nine years of negotiations and three agreements, it clearly is long past time for results on this issue," Kantor said.

The Motorola case was independent of the broader framework talks that collapsed last Friday over Japan's refusal to accept a U.S. demand for numerical goals to measure success.

Official: Schools must bring adults, children together

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's adults and children "are losing touch with one another," and parents and schools must move urgently to help bring them together, Education Secretary Richard Riley said Tuesday.

In a 50-minute speech on the state of American education, Riley launched a "family involvement campaign" aimed at encouraging adults to take a special interest in young people's schooling.

"If I am troubled by anything it is this: We seem, as a nation, to be drifting toward a new concept of childhood which says that a child can be brought into this world and allowed to fend for himself or herself," Riley told about 500 students, parents, educators, business, labor and community leaders gathered at Georgetown University.

"There is a disconnection here that demands our attention — a disconnection so pervasive between adult America and child America that we are all losing touch with one another," he said.

Riley also asked businesses, churches and community groups to take a greater role in helping families.

"There is a moral urgency to our coming together, a need to act, to reconnect, to make our schools the best in the world," he said.

Riley's speech comes a week after the Senate passed two of the Clinton administration's education priorities — the Goals 2000: Educate America Act, which sets voluntary national standards for education, and the School-to-Work Opportunities Act, designed to better prepare those students who don't attend college for the job market.

It also follows reports that U.S. students still trail their counterparts overseas in math and science, while holding their own in reading.

He was greeted at Georgetown with a standing ovation, and was interrupted several times by applause.

Riley was quick to acknowledge that public education has many problems, but he decried political maneuvering that he said was setting back the movement toward educational reform.

"The public wants higher academic standards, more accountability and some sense that their children are getting prepared for the coming times," he said. "They do not want a conservative or a liberal, nor a Democratic or Republican, solution to our nation's education troubles."

Yet he acknowledged that Washington does not hold all the answers, nor should it dictate how education should be improved.

"Long before public policy is politely debated here in Washington, teachers and principals are already directly confronting violence, the breakdown of the family, ethnic and racial tension and the growing mismatch between the classroom and the job market," he said.

"They deal up front with the education needs of new immigrants, the rise of teen-age pregnancy, the abuse of drugs, alcohol and the crisis of AIDS."

He called on schools to foster better communications between teachers and parents and to involve parents more deeply in their children's education. "Parents are often the first and most important teachers," he said in a statement that has become a common refrain of his.

Beginning this spring, the education secretary plans on publishing "Riley's Rules," filled with education advice for parents.

ZNORE NO MORE
Each evening millions of people lay down for a restful night of sleep.
Dreaming, snoring, dreaming and snoring again...keeping themselves and their spouses from getting the good night's rest they need.
NOW, THERE IS A CURE FOR SNORING.
Through a series of three to five 15-minute laser treatments, performed under local anesthesia, snoring is being cured approximately 85% of the time. A laser is used to reshape with precision the back of the throat to allow more room for air passage thus alleviating the cause of snoring.
It sounds easy... and it is.

Suspect enters surprise plea of guilty to student murders

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A drifter already serving life in prison entered a surprise plea of guilty Tuesday to the 1990 murders of five college students, saying, "There are some things that you just can't run from."

Danny Harold Rolling, 39, of Shreveport, La., now faces a sentencing hearing to determine whether he will be sent to the electric chair.

"These crimes warrant the death penalty," State Attorney Rod Smith said.

The plea came just as the court was preparing to pick a jury. Starting Wednesday, a jury will be selected to hear the penalty phase of the trial and recommend the sentence for Rolling. But the judge will make the final decision.

Relatives of the victims quietly wept during the plea and while the prosecutor gave a chilling account of each of the crimes, which included one decapitation.

They later issued a plea for privacy through Police Detective Sadie Darnell. "They need this time to process the information," she said.

Rolling's plea covered 11 counts — five of first-degree murder and three each of sexual battery and armed burglary.

"Your honor, I have been running from first one thing and then another all my life. Whether from problems at home or with the law, or from myself. But there are some things that you just can't run from ... this being one of those," Rolling told Circuit Judge Stan R. Morris.

Rolling is already serving several life sentences in Florida State Prison as a career criminal for robberies and burglaries.

The primary evidence against Rolling was DNA, the genetic blueprints left behind by blood and semen; marks made by a screwdriver; fibers; and confessions, including a handwritten confession signed by Rolling.

An angry Mario Taboada, brother of victim Manuel Taboada, said it was difficult to hear the prosecutor talk about his brother's slaying.

"I've been imagining what took place that day over and over," Taboada said. "It angers me that it ever took place.

"I don't choose to focus my energy, my anger and my sorrow on this individual. I have no pity for the individual. This is a life form gone bad."

■ More nation news/4D

Smith said Taboada was sleeping when Rolling pried open the door to his apartment and stabbed him repeatedly, then attacked his roommate.

"While still covered with the blood of Manuel Taboada, the defendant then subdued Tracy Paules," Smith said, adding that Rolling taped Paules' mouth and hands with tape, tore off her T-shirt and raped her. He then stabbed her three times in the back.

Public defender Rick Parker told reporters after the hearing that Rolling had decided on Jan. 26 to plead guilty because "he wanted to do the right thing."

"Danny Harold Rolling has pleaded guilty because he is guilty," Parker said, adding that he believes Rolling was mentally ill when he committed the crimes and still suffers from mental illness.

Parker said Rolling's mental condition would be helpful "in understanding how the same person can rape and murder, then later regret these acts and feel compassion for the living loved ones surviving his violence."

There were no recent plea discussions with prosecutors, Parker said.

The mutilated bodies of Christina Powell, 17, of Jacksonville, and Sonja Larson, 18, of Deerfield Beach, both University of Florida students, were found Aug. 26, 1990, in their townhouse. The decapitated body of Christa Hoyt, 18, of Archer, a student at Santa Fe Community College in Gainesville, was found early on Aug. 27.

The bodies of Paules and Taboada, both 23 and from the Miami area, were found in the apartment they shared on Aug. 28.

The memories of the murders are unlikely to fade soon, said University of Florida President John Lombardi.

"The pain and memories these heinous acts inflicted on our community will never go away," Lombardi said. "The loss of these five wonderful young people will always be a part of our institutional and individual memories. It will remain a constant reminder of the fragility of life."

"We don't want to put it completely behind us," said Dave Tawes, 21, a University of Florida student from Salisbury, Md. "It would make their deaths even more tragic if nobody learned from it."

Midland High guard Jumon Hailey drives towards the basket in the Bulldogs 94-83 win over Abilene High at the MHS gym Tuesday night.

'Dogs work it out

■ Midland High shucks any chances of missing the state playoffs by ripping Abilene High, 94-83.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Midland High looked at all the nasty possibilities for ties, district playoffs and possibly missing a trip to the state basketball playoffs, and literally said, "Forget it," to Abilene High Tuesday night at the MHS gym.

The Bulldogs defeated the Eagles 94-83 to toss out all the nasty scenarios and landed a second place bi-district berth without any ties, questions or scrambling for unscheduled places to play.

"Tim Whalen (Midland interim athletic director) has been asking us all week about where we would play and when if we lost to Abilene High," said MHS coach Jack Stephenson. "I told him we weren't going to have to play anybody because we were going to win. It was a nice win, wasn't it?"

And you could easily say the Bulldogs were ready to play. The Purple Pack, which gave Stephenson his ninth 20-win season at MHS, shot 62 percent from the field (68 percent in the first half) and vaulted into the playoffs against Lubbock Monterey, the third place team of District 3-5A.

This is not to say it was easy, but it was convincing enough when the final gun sounded. The game featured 16 lead changes and eight ties before MHS exploded on a 14-2 fourth quarter run, a spurt in which senior leader Donald Carter scored 10 of his game high 30 points.

Carter had 21 of his 30 points in the second half and hit on 10 of 10 shots from the field in the second half. He also was brillant on defense when he held Abilene High's mega-scorer Dan Wilson to five second half points. Wilson had 20 for the game when he nailed five three-pointers in the first half.

"That was a big difference in the game when we put Donald on Wilson," Stephenson said. "Donald told me he guarded Wilson in a previous game and held him to low numbers. I tend to listen when Donald talks."

Wilson ran into foul trouble (with four) just prior to Midland's 14-2 spurt that sunk the Eagles.

"They were just getting the ball to me underneath for easy scores," Carter said of his teammates. "Things seemed to open up for me when Wilson went to the bench."

Stephenson added, "We knew Abilene couldn't guard Carter inside when they got tired. We took the game when our kids finally decided to do what I told them to do. They couldn't keep up with Donald in the middle."

Despite hitting 68 percent from the field (19 of 28) in the first half, MHS led by a narrow 53-48 margin as the Eagles poured in nine treys to stay close. But the three-point well dried up in the second half.

Ryan Bradberry had 17 of his 19 points in the first half, hitting five of five shots from the field.

"I was feeling it in the first half," Bradberry said. "I didn't miss a shot. This feels great. It's the best high I've ever had."

Jumon Hailey had 16 points. Post Jason Kopp had a game high 10 rebounds while John Marc Sanon had nine rebounds and nine points. It was truly a team

Rebels tossed by Cooper, but make playoffs

ABILENE — Despite a rally which pulled Midland Lee back from an 11-point first-quarter deficit, the Rebels were outshot at the free throw line and Abilene Cooper took a 68-62 District 4-5A boys basketball win here Tuesday night.

The loss in their final league game dropped the Rebels to 18-12 overall and 8-4 in district. Although they did fall out of a tie with Midland High for second place, the Rebels did clinch the third-place spot and will play 3-5A runnerup Lubbock Coronado next week in the bi-district round. District champ Cooper has a bi-district bye.

Lee cut the Cooper lead to 48-46 to enter the fourth period, but the Cougars won the game at the free throw line. Cooper sank 12 free throws in the last quarter to get the win.

In all, the Cougars hit 22-of-33 foul shots while Lee only got to shoot nine and connected on three. The Rebels were whistled for fouls 26 times to only 15 for Cooper.

"You can look at the free throws — how many we shot and how many they shot — and that was the difference in the game," Lee coach Jon House said.

Sean Low scored 18 points to lead three Rebels in double figures. Caesar Brannon finished with 12 while reserve Shane McCulloch had 10. Cooper's Andrae Patterson led all scorers with 32.

Cooper drops Rebels, 3-0

By Mike Butts
Staff Writer

Here's a quick assessment of the Midland Lee boys soccer team after their 3-0 loss to Abilene Cooper Tuesday:

What the Lee boys have: More chances than the Buffalo Bills, the ability to control the ball better than most of their opponents, enough frustration in the last six games to last six seasons, the respect of district coaches.

What they don't have: The goals they so desperately need, more than one win in six District 5-5A soccer matches, any tendency to let up despite a 1-5 league record and a three-game losing streak.

Tuesday at Midland Lee the Rebels again played well enough to win, outshooting Cooper (3-3 in district, 8-6 overall) 6-3 and on numerous occasion putting the ball in every conceivable place around the goal but between the posts.

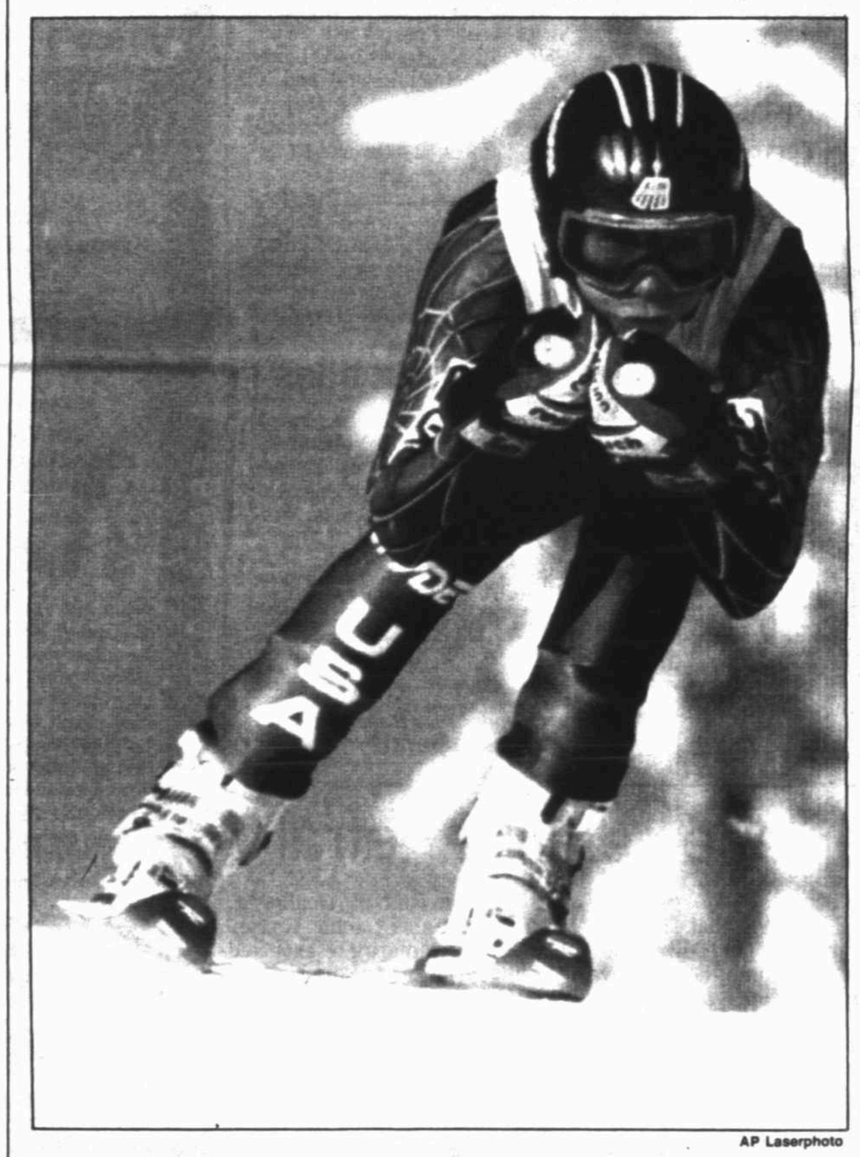

"Looks to me like we did what we came out to do, we just didn't put the ball in the net," Lee coach Eddie Bull said.

The Bulldogs (6-6) have lost four 5-5A games by one goal and scored seven goals in six league games. Cooper scored its three goals Tuesday with three shots on goal and one penalty kick in a physical game that saw four yellow

American digs up more gold

LILLEHAMMER, Norway — Two races, two gold medals, two surprising winners. The U.S. ski team — often referred to as "much-maligned" — is turning a lack of respect into a lode of medals.

The revived skiers, after spending a decade shut out of the Olympic winner's circle, picked up their second gold in as many races Tuesday with another unlikely medalist: Diann Roffe-Steinrotter hadn't won an international race since the Reagan Administration.

The skier, the "old timer" of the women's team at 26, picked up her Super-G gold on a day when the grande dame of the Olympics scored a bronze. Finland's 38-year-old Marja-Liisa Kirvesniemi, competing in her record-tying sixth Winter Games, finished third in cross-country skiing.

In pairs figure skating, elegance triumphed over power in what may have been the finest competition in Olympic history.

Ekaterina Gordeeva and Sergei Grinkov, the 1988 gold medalists, edged defending Olympic champions Natalia Mishkutienok and Artur Dmitriev. Both Russian couples took advantage of a rule change allowing professional skaters to return to the Olympics.

World champions Isabelle Brasseur and Lloyd Eisler won the bronze, as they did two years ago in Albertville. Todd Sand and partner Jenni Meno were the top American pair, finishing fifth.

Midland College keeps up with Joneses

■ Chaps name former player and current WTC women's coach Ron Jones as first women's cage coach.

Ron Jones came home Tuesday and stepped into the spotlight of Midland College history.

Jones, currently the women's basketball coach at Western Texas College in Snyder, was officially named as the Midland College's first women's basketball coach, and his reign will begin as soon as the Lady Westerners finish the current season.

Jones is a former Chaparral standout, starting two years in 1976-78. He played for Chester Storey, Raymond Yell and current athletic director Delnor Poss in the 1976-77 season, and was under Jerry Stone for the 1977-78 season.

"Ron has come back home," said MC president David Daniel in making the announcement at a press conference. "We're hiring one of our own.

"We found out in our search for a women's coach that there is any number of coaches who could have done a great job for Midland College, but when our (search) committee got to this man, they were unanimous in their recommendation to me.

"Most of our conference members have women's programs, so our conference teams are happy that we are getting into the business of women's basketball."

Hot Shots second

FORT WORTH — The Midland Hot Shots under 12 girls soccer team place second over the weekend in the Yellow Rose Classic, which is the largest only girls tournament in North Texas.

The Hot Shots won their bracket with wins over Dallas East Hericanes, 2-0; the Coppell Twisters, 2-0; and a 1-0 win over Bedford-Euless Shockwave. Carmie Cason and Kirstin Keesee scored against Dallas East while Catherine Wade and Hilory Davis scored against the Twisters. Davis scored the goal against the Shockwave.

In the semifinals, the Hot Shots beat Fort Worth Wild Thing, 5-1 with goals by D'Lynn Knous, Whitney Bowlin and a hat trick by Shannon Miller. The only loss was to the Duncanville Comets, 1-0 in overtime, losing on a penalty kick.

Other outstanding performances were turned in by Elysse Burrow, Erica Carrillo, Rebecca Chimahusky, Sarah Cuevas, Kristin Knight, Robin Nelson and Meredith Meyers.

REBELS: Lee drops third straight and one red card issued and Cougar Trey Bedford leave the game with an apparent broken ankle.

Cooper coach Joel Bundick admitted Lee dominated the first half despite the 1-0 Cooper edge a the break. The second wasn't too much different. Lee had three shots on goal in the first seven minutes, finished with four shots in the half and had three excellent chances other than their shots on goal.

Bull blames himself for the Rebels problems. The team's main shortcoming is an inability to to shoot well and finish.

"Evidently we're not as good at doing what we do in the games as we do in practice," Bull said. "We got the best kids in Midland and we got the best kids in the district because they work hard and won't give up."

Still only down by one six minutes into the second half, Lee had perhaps its best chance of the game. Jeremy Warren's ball put Jeremy Keener behind the Cooper defense. But Cooper keeper Jimmy Payne blocked Keener's close-in shot as the Lee players loudly complained that a defender interfered with Keener in the penalty box.

Cooper scored twice within three minutes in the second half to put the game away, first on a goal by Aaron Noto and then on a penalty kick by Martin Day, who got the Cougars first score on a 40-yard run where he dribbled past at least two Lee defenders.

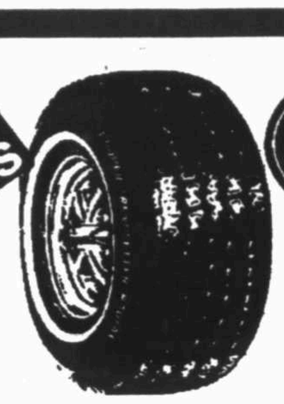

"It was just a quick counter and we had a talented player who was able to dribble through," Bundick said of the goal by Day.

Lee's chances for playoff contention are slipping. But they could still win plenty of games if their shots start finding the net.

"It's going to fall into place," Bull said. "It may be Saturday (against Midland High). We're gonna try to stay on the field with MHS since they're so much better than anybody else."

Goals: Cooper — Day 2, Noto. Assist: Cooper, Day. Shots on goal: Cooper 3, Lee 6. Saves: Cooper 3; Lee, none. Free kicks: Cooper 13, Lee 19. Corner kicks: Cooper 1, Lee 6. Penalty kicks: Cooper 1; Lee, none. Yellow cards: Cooper — Fenter, Bundick, Montes. Red cards: Lee — Tommy Hosier.

Rangers won't replace veteran Petralli

FORT WORTH (AP) — The Texas Rangers say they won't pursue another catcher following veteran Geno Petralli's departure for the San Diego Padres.

Petralli signed a minor-league contract with the Padres for less than the $325,000 offer he received from the Rangers, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported in Tuesday's editions.

Petralli, 34, said that since the Rangers are bringing Mike Scioscia to training camp, he will have a better opportunity to make the team in San Diego.

Rangers general manager Tom Grieve said the club will not pursue another catcher before the start of spring training.

If Scioscia isn't physically fit, Dan Wakamatsu, John Russell and Jim McNamara are expected to compete for the backup job.

The Rangers signed Scioscia to a minor-league contract but, because he's still recovering from shoulder surgery, they had an interest in bringing Petralli to camp.

Monterey tops cold San Angelo

■ Class 5A Girls Playoffs

It must be a curse. Something had to keep all those two-foot shots from dropping Tuesday night for the San Angelo Central girls basketball team.

Whatever it was, the Lady Bobcats shot 31 percent from the field including 2-of-13 shooting in the final period and the Lubbock Monterey Lady Plainsmen pulled away for a 53-36 Class 5A bi-district win at the Chaparral Center.

In Odessa High's gym the end result was the same as Amarillo Tascosa passed by Odessa High 46-37 in another bi-district contest. With the two wins, District 3-5A extended its playoff winning streak over 4-5A opponents to 23 consecutive games.

This leaves league champ Midland High to defend the honor of the district. The Lady Bulldogs play El Paso Coronado Friday at 7:30 at the Odessa Permian Fieldhouse in a 5A area game. MHS, which had a bye for the bi-district round, could face a 3-5A team next if they can get past the Lady T-Birds.

Monterey, which improved to 23-10 overall, advances to play El Paso Hanks Friday at Odessa College in a area-round double header with Amarillo High and El Paso Bel Air. Central ended its season with a 17-13 mark.

Central coach Doug Snowden said that his team's shooting was the only thing that kept them from keeping pace with the Lady Plainsmen.

"When we're cold, we're cold and when we're hot, we're hot," Snowden said. "We were getting good percentage shots and that's what we had worked on in practice. I really hate it for my seniors because I honestly thought we had a chance to win this game. They're (Monterey) not any tougher than any team in our district."

Monterey, however, was on fire shooting 45.5 percent for the game and never trailing from the opening tipoff.

There were three Lady Plainsmen in double figures and all three shot the ball well. Guard Melissa Maines hit 50 percent from the field and scored 13 while post Micah Crutcher hit 67 percent and scored 12. Post Amy Wells finally found the mark after missing her first four shots and finished with 45 percent and 13 points.

Monterey coach Dale Pectol said he thought the difference for his team was rebounding. While Monterey only outrebounded Central by three, the Lady Plainsmen were a menace on Central's end of the floor — where, consequently, all the missing was going on.

"We did a really good job on the defensive boards," Pectol said. "And the (Central) people we were trying to shut off, we shut off."

The Monterey defense pressured Central post Mary Newkirk so much she missed the mark on all eight of her field goal attempts. Also shut down was Central three-point specialist Dolly Ortegon who only shot three from that range while connecting on one.

Central forward Vanessa Garcia was the only Lady Bobcat who had any success offensively and led all scorers with 15 points. Garcia, the defending state high jump champ, hit 7-of-14 from the floor.

Jordan remains hit with fans, not with bat as training begins

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — They came to see if Michael Jordan can hit. They heard the answer. He can't, at least not yet.

Seldom did the sharp crack of Jordan's bat echo through low-slung Ed Smith Stadium. Instead, there were mostly dull thuds, that sound mushy softballs make.

Using a right-handed swing that looked more manufactured than natural, Jordan hit nearly 100 balls and only one managed to roll across the crushed-seashell warning track and reach the fence. There were plenty of popups, lots of weak flys and a bunch of balls beat into the dirt.

Still, after his first outdoor workout that outsiders were allowed to observe, the newest Chicago White Sox rookie — and the world's greatest basketball player — was satisfied. After all, this is why they have spring training.

"You have to be patient. I think it's going to be gradual improvement for me," he said. "The last thing I want to be is a sideshow.

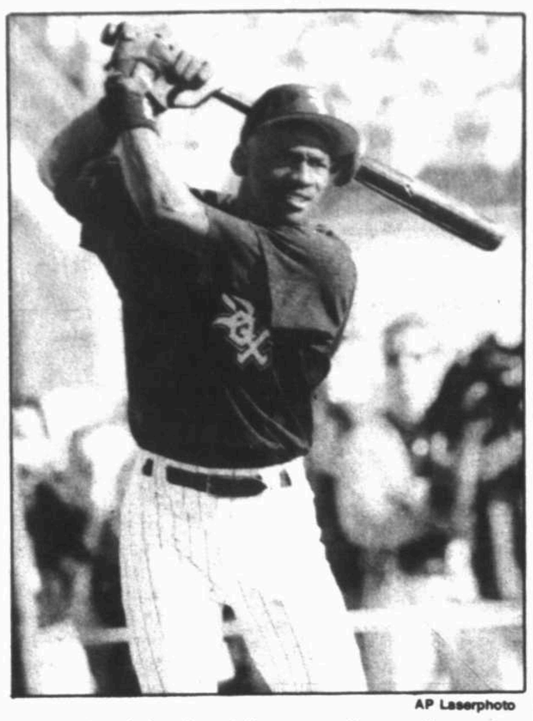

"I have to work on my hitting every day. I know there are things I need to do — keeping my butt in, keeping my head on the ball, quickening my bat," he said.

The White Sox do not plan to rush him. Manager Gene Lamont said he expects Jordan, who has signed a Class AAA contract, to play in an intrasquad game March 3.

Up until now, the 6-foot-6 outfielder wearing No. 45 worked out behind guarded gates. The White Sox didn't want his presence to disrupt camp when pitchers and catchers report today, so they opened Jordan's two-hour session for 250 reporters.

Jordan looked good enough in the field and was speedy during the baserunning drills.

More Sports/8C

"That's the first time I've seen him hit," Hriniak said. "There are a lot of good things. His swing could be a little shorter. That would give him the bat speed he needs."

"He's not very explosive. The ball doesn't jump off his bat. He swings the bat instead of throwing the bat," Fraser said.

Racers question new tires after crashes

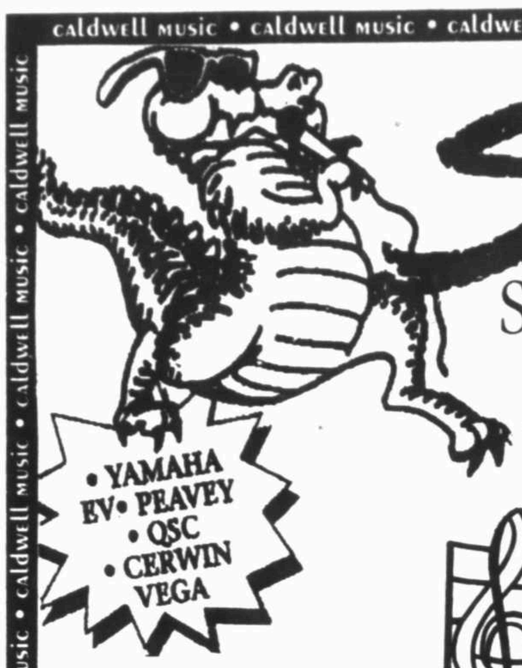

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Two fatal crashes in a four-day period have everybody searching for reasons at Daytona International Speedway.

One of the drivers who was killed, Neil Bonnett, was a 47-year-old veteran with 18 career victories to his credit, while the other was 31-year-old rookie Rodney Orr, whose past experience was in smaller cars mostly on smaller tracks.

One link appears to be the new Hoosier radial tires both were using.

Hoosier made an abbreviated run at entrenched Goodyear in 1988 and 1989 with bias-ply tires, but Goodyear's new radials forced the Indiana company to withdraw. Now, Hoosier is back with its own radials, which it introduced over the winter.

OLYMPICS: Yank ends long drought

From 1C

you barely hear his feet," Sand said of Gordeeva and Grinkov. "From a technical point of view, it was very fast and quiet and done with great skill."

Roffe-Steinrotter, who snapped a nine-year winless streak, was fast and skillful, though hardly quiet. And she wasn't the only American woman making noise in Norway.

Defending gold medalist Donna Weinbrecht qualified for the finals in mogul skiing, while U.S. luger Cammy Myler skidded out of medal contention. And half a world away, skater Tonya Harding began her long (and longshot) trip to Lillehammer.

As for the men, the U.S. hockey team still hasn't won — but it hasn't lost yet, either. The Americans tied Slovakia 3-3, following the same script as their first game: A third-period comeback fueled by two late goals.

For those seeking omens, it marked the first time since 1984 that the U.S. failed to win in its first two games. The 1984 team finished seventh after opening with two losses.

Losses? The ski team doesn't know about them. With the U.S. leading the rest of the world 2-0 in skiing golds, Roffe-Steinrotter offered this explanation for its sudden rejuvenation: Nobody expects them to win, so there's no pressure.

"I can relax. I'm just a dark horse. I'm not a favorite. I can just ski," said Roffe-Steinrotter, whose dream race ended a nightmarish stretch of her career. Since winning a World Cup race in 1985, her closest brush with victory was a silver medal in Albertville.

And then, stunningly, the gold in Lillehammer, her third and last Olympics. Roffe-Steinrotter announced this will be her last season of skiing, and she already made it quite memorable.

"It's just amazing. I surprised myself," she confessed after swooshing down the mountain in 1 minute, 22.15 seconds. "I haven't skied very well this year."

That's been a team-wide problem when it comes to the Winter Games. In the last two Olympics, the U.S. had won zero gold medals on the slopes.

But as underdog Tommy Moe did two days earlier for the men, Roffe-Steinrotter — whose previous season-best in the Super-G was an eighth — ended a decade-long gold drought for the women.

The last American woman to win a gold medal in Alpine skiing was Debbie Armstrong in the giant slalom at Sarajevo in 1984, when Bill Johnson won the men's downhill that same year.

The Super-G silver medal went to Svetlana Gladischeva of Russia — the first Alpine skiing medal ever for a Soviet, Unified Team or Russian skier. The golds are the Unites States' only two medals; the Soviets, with eight medals, and the Norwegians, with five, are the leaders.

Meanwhile, the medal-hungry U.S. hockey team, which struggled to tie lightweight France, faced a tougher task Tuesday against Slovakia but wound up with the same result. Goals just 90 seconds apart by Peter Ciavaglia and John Lilley — the second with four minutes left — turned a two-goal deficit into the second tie for both teams.

"I'm very proud that we've come back from a two-goal deficit in two consecutive games," U.S. coach Tim Taylor said. "It shows we have a lot of heart. What we have to work on is not getting ourselves in that position."

Especially this week, when the U.S. (0-0-2) faces two top teams — Canada and Sweden. The Swedes (1-0-1) defeated Italy (0-2), 4-1. Canada (2-0) easily handled France (0-1-1) in a 3-1 victory.

The Americans' ski slope gold rush could continue Wednesday, when defending moguls gold medalist Weinbrecht — winner of six World Cup races this year — and U.S. teammate Liz McIntyre compete.

Both qualified Tuesday for the finals, with McIntyre posting the highest score of the 16 qualifiers.

"I'm pretty happy," McIntyre said. "I was gonna do a daffy twister (leap) and I got a little crooked in the air so I didn't get that off like I wanted to. But it gives me something to do tomorrow."

As good as it gets on Norway's ski slopes, that's how bad it's been for Americans on the luge run. One day after Duncan Kennedy's medal hopes crashed on Turn 13 of the course, so did the sled of Erin Warren. Myler's medal hopes ended when she bounced off a wall on the same turn.

Myler, the best U.S. hope for a women's luge medal, fell out of contention on her second run. The opening ceremony flag bearer wound up in 11th place with two runs left Wednesday.

The women's 5-kilometer classical-style cross-country race went to a familiar figure — Lyubov Egorova of Russia, who won three gold and two silver medals in 1992. Manuela Di Centa of Italy, who took the first gold medal of the Winter Games, was second.

"I was a little tense on the sled, not really relaxed," Myler said. "But I was actually feeling really good on the second run. I'm doing the best I can."

Third was Kirvesniemi, a mother of two competing in her record-tying sixth Olympics. Only Swedish bobsledder Carl-Erik Eriksson and Australian speedskater Colin Coates have appeared in as many Games.

"I'm pleased with the bronze medal," Kirvesniemi said. "It means a lot. Nothing beats the three gold medals in Sarajevo, of course, but this comes close."

Prices slump

NEW YORK — Crude oil prices fell again on Tuesday, reaching their lowest levels since mid-December, as forecasts for warmer weather sent home heating oil prices lower.

The nearly 8 percent two-day drop in heating oil has also pulled crude oil prices lower. March light sweet crude deliveries fell 7 cents to $14.06 per barrel Tuesday folowing a 59-cent drop on Monday.

Tuesday's fall put crude at its lowest price since Dec. 17, when it dipped below the $14 per barrel level to finish at $13.91, a five-year low. Crude prices had risen through January, exceeding $16 per barrel two weeks ago, on forecasts for bitter cold in the Northeast, the main heating oil consuming region.

But temperatures have largely moderated and traders see spring weather not too far off, sapping the strength from the oil market.

Crude oil prices were also hurt by a lower estimate of demand by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Dollar rebounds

NEW YORK — The dollar rebounded in foreign exchange Tuesday after plunging to a six-month low against the Japanese yen at the start of the week on fears of retaliation for the recent breakdown of trade talks.

On the New York Commodity Exchange, gold bullion for current delivery settled at $383.80 a troy ounce, down 10 cents from late Monday.

In New York, the dollar rebounded to 103.85 yen, up from 102.65 yen Monday.

The dollar was mixed against the pound compared with Monday's trading. In New York, sterling fetched $1.4735, down from $1.4840.

Late dollar rates in New York compared with late Monday quotes, included: 1.7293 German marks, up from 1.7270; 1.4545 Swiss francs, down from 1.4575; 5.8875 French francs, up from 5.8735; 1,676 Italian lira, up from 1,669; and 1.3538 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3533.

Silver prices declined. Silver bullion on New York's Comex settled at $5.255 a troy ounce, down from $5.343 late Monday.

Stocks gain

NEW YORK — Stocks ended higher on Tuesday, encouraged by stable bond and currency markets as well as easing fears of a trade war between Japan and the United States.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 24.21 points to 3,928.27.

Among other major market indicators, the Standard & Poors index of 500 stocks rose 2.29 to 472.52, the NYSE's composite index rose 1.10 to 262.36, while the Nasdaq composite index jumped 4.67 to 790.12. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index fell 0.07 to 474.84.

Viacom wins fight for Paramount

■ Battle became symbol of high stakes as technology promises to transform how entertainment, information, services are delivered to consumers.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Viacom clinched a hard-fought victory Tuesday for Paramount Communications, sending rival suitor QVC Network into defeat after a five-month takeover brawl.

But Viacom Inc., a cable channel operator, now faces more problems — running the huge entertainment and publishing company while completing a planned merger with video retailer Blockbuster Entertainment Corp.

Viacom's victory was a significant personal achievement for its steely chairman, Sumner Redstone, who vowed from the outset that this corporate marriage would "never be torn asunder."

He defeated a tenacious Barry Diller, who once ran Paramount Pictures and is resolved to build his own interactive multimedia empire using QVC, a cable shopping channel, as his base.

Viacom's victory came at great cost. It will have to borrow billions more than originally planned to buy Paramount, which owns a film studio, Simon & Schuster books, Madison Square Garden, the New York Knicks and Rangers.

Paramount Communications Inc. and Viacom agreed in September on an $8.2 billion cash and stock merger including about $1.1 billion in cash. The final price is about $10 billion in cash and stock including $6.6 billion in cash.

Viacom, owner of MTV, Showtime and Nickelodeon and other cable channels, said nearly 91.7 million Paramount shares, or about 74.6 percent of the total, were tendered as of midnight under terms of its buyout offer.

QVC Network Inc. said its bid attracted only 10.4 million shares and it dropped its tender offer in compliance with bidding rules.

"They won. We lost. Next," QVC said in a statement.

Viacom will keep its tender offer open until March 2 so those who tendered to QVC can resubmit their shares to Viacom.

Martin Davis, chairman and chief executive of Paramount, said the board "has obtained the best value for shareholders under bidding procedures that have operated smoothly and have effectively provided stockholders with a meaningful choice between two impressive proposals."

The statement failed to note that Paramount was forced by state courts to open the bidding process after QVC argued successfully that its offers had been unfairly rejected by the Paramount board.

Analysts say Viacom faces a daunting task of reversing the recent disappointing performance of Paramount's moviemaking division and with getting management to refocus after the distraction of watching a bidding war that started just after Labor Day stretch into the new year.

Viacom also must deliver on the claimed synergies between the two companies' operations. Redstone said Paramount Pictures rather than another studio, for example, would make the movie based on MTV characters Beavis and Butt-head. He also plans to sell merchandise based on characters in Paramount films and Viacom cable shows like Warner Bros. does.

Industrial production keeps rising — in spite of weather

WASHINGTON (AP) — Industrial production kept rising in January — but at a slower pace because of severe weather and the disruption of the Los Angeles earthquake, the government said Tuesday.

Private economists predicted output would pick up even more in the first half of 1994, led by a surge in automobile manufacturing to meet increased demand for American-made cars.

The Federal Reserve reported that factory output was held to only a 0.2 percent gain last month. But production overall still rose 0.5 percent as homes and businesses cranked up heaters, and mining and utility production increased to meet the demand for gas and electricity.

Utility output jumped 3.5 percent and mining production rose 0.8 percent.

The production figures for February also may be held in check by weather disruptions, economists said.

"But the fundamental outlook for industry is strong," economists for Merrill Lynch said in a statement. "Detroit has scheduled an aggressive increase in automotive production that seems consistent with underlying demand."

The gain in the Fed's industrial production index was the eighth in a row and followed a revised 0.9 percent increase for December — the largest in 14 months.

But the economy is "far from overheating," said Irwin Kellner, economist with Chemical Banking Corp. "It's clearly slowing down."

Previous reports showed the economy surged in the closing months of 1993, with a robust 5.9 percent expansion at an annual rate in the closing quarter. That prompted the Fed this month to nudge short-term interest rates a quarter percentage point higher, to 3.25 percent.

The new Fed report said the operating rate at industrial firms rose to 83.1 percent of capacity, the highest in 4½ years. That was up from a revised 82.9 percent for December and 80.9 percent a year ago.

As the figure approaches 85 percent, economists worry that production bottlenecks may occur. That could mean inflationary pressure on prices for scarce goods in high demand.

But economists said the latest figures may underestimate industrial capacity for a variety of reasons.

"There is more capacity than meets the eye," said Kellner, noting particularly that business investment in computers and machinery is expanding production capability.

The latest operating rate "does not enable business to raise prices like it could have a couple of years ago," he said.

Growing imports and cost-conscious consumers also help keep a lid on prices, he said.

The Fed said the industries hardest hit by the bitter weather included steel, appliances and cars. Even so, the output of cars and trucks rose a seasonally adjusted 1.9 percent in January — compared to a 3.5 percent increase in December.

Odessan to receive Engineer of Year award

Landgraf

John Landgraf of Odessa will be the recipient of the "Engineer of the Year" award from the Permian Basin chapter, Texas Society of Professional Engineers.

He will be presented the award during the 38th annual Engineers Week Banquet Feb. 25 at the Petroleum Club, which begins at 6:30 p.m.

Keynote speaker for the banquet will be astronaut Lacy Veach of NASA's Johnson Space Center in Houston. He was on Shuttle Missions STS-39 and STS-52 and will discuss recent activity in space.

Landgraf is the principal of Landgraf, Crutcher & Associates Inc., a consulting engineering firm providing services such as the development of a Wastewater Master Plan for the City of Odessa.

Also during the banquet, scholarships from $500 to $2,000 will be presented to eight local students to help toward their college education in engineering. Other local students who recently won Mathcounts and National Engineering Design Challenge competitions will also be honored.

Tickets for the banquet are $25 per person and reservations can be made by calling 332-8531, 697-1447 or 264-5703.

Nintendo moves to get back into game

SEATTLE (NYT) — Severely tested in its once-dominant position in the North American market, Nintendo Co. has named a new chief to guide a comeback for the video game giant's U.S. subsidiary.

Howard Lincoln, a senior Nintendo executive since 1983, was promoted Tuesday to the newly created position of chairman of Nintendo of America Inc. He will share management duties with Nintendo of America President Minoru Arakawa.

The move is a direct result of the Japanese company's loss of pre-eminence in the $6 billion U.S. video game industry to its main rival, Sega of America.

Nintendo Co. President Hiroshi Yamauchi expressed his frustration with Arakawa's inability to hold market share against a surging Sega in a recent Business Week interview.

Partners start oil-field pipe, equipment company

By Mella McEwen

Midlanders Rick Yadon and Jay Morris have teamed to open MIDLAND PIPE AND EQUIPMENT CO. at 2809 S. Rankin Highway.

McEwen

The company will inventory new and used pipe in their yard and offer a wide variety of fiberglass tubing, and arrange delivery to the customer's location.

In addition, the company will handle used pumping units, tank batteries and sucker rods. And the company will buy wells to be plugged for salvage.

Yadon has 13 years experience in the business with his former business, Yadeco Pipe & Equipment.

Morris has been in Midland 12 years, also in the pipe and equipment business. Before coming to Midland, he was in the business in Longview.

Spurs tie team record with 10th straight win

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — David Robinson had 34 points and 10 rebounds as San Antonio matched their franchise-record winning streak of 10 game Tuesday night with a 109-100 victory over Indiana.

■ NBA Roundup

The victory, which tied the Spurs' record set in January 1993, also was their 12th straight at the Alamodome and pushed their record to 21-3 since Dec. 26.

Reggie Miller led the Pacers with 23 points, and Derrick McKey, Rik Smits and Byron Scott each scored 14. Dale Ellis scored 32 points and Vinny Del Negro and J.R. Reid added 20 each for San Antonio.

Rockets 103, Hawks 99

HOUSTON — Hakeem Olajuwon scored eight of his 28 points in the deciding final minutes, leading Houston to a victory over Atlanta.

The Rockets avenged their 133-111 loss to Atlanta on Dec. 3 that snapped Houston's record-tying 15-game winning streak to start the season.

Dominique Wilkins led the Hawks with 26 points and Kevin Willis and former Midland College standout Mookie Blaylock each scored 16 points for the Hawks, who had won eight of their last 10 games against the Rockets.

Trail Blazers 106, Mavericks 103

DALLAS — Clifford Robinson scored 24 points, including a critical off-balance jumper with 26 seconds to play, sending Portland to its 13th consecutive victory over Dallas.

Robinson's high-arching 12-footer as the shot clock wore down pushed Portland's lead to 103-100 and helped snap the Trail Blazers' four-game road losing streak.

Rod Strickland, who had 22 points for Portland, sank one free throw with 9.1 seconds left, but Tim Legler's 3-pointer with 3.5 seconds remaining pulled the Mavs to 104-103.

Clyde Drexler, who led the Blazers with 26 points, hit two free throws with 2.8 seconds left to complete the scoring and prevent the Mavericks, who had won four of their previous seven games, from compiling a three-game winning streak.

Jamal Mashburn scored 26 points and Jim Jackson added 18 for the Mavericks, who were seeking their first three-game winning streak since 1991.

Pistons 100, Bullets 93

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Joe Dumars, despite a sore left hamstring, scored 25 points as Detroit defeated Washington, extending the Bullets' losing streak to four games.

Dumars, who pulled his hamstring in a game against Houston last Thursday, didn't practice Monday. But he started against the Bullets and led the Pistons to just their fourth victory in 28 games.

Michael Adams scored 21 points and Tom Gugliotta had 18 points and 10 rebounds for the Bullets, who outrebounded the Pistons 54-35.

Terry Mills, who had 21 points, hit seven straight shots at the end of the third quarter and beginning of the fourth for Detroit. Isiah Thomas added 19 points for the Pistons, who shot 49 percent while holding the Bullets to 42 percent.

Nets 103, Knicks 83

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Kenny Anderson and Kevin Edwards each hit eight of their first 11 shots, and New Jersey continued its surprising domination of the New York Knicks by handing them their worst loss of the season.

The win was the Nets' third in as many games against the Knicks this season, and this one was the easiest as Patrick Ewing got in early foul trouble.

Magic 102, Celtics 92

ORLANDO, Fla. — Shaquille O'Neal grabbed 24 rebounds and scored 10 of his 36 points in the final 3:41, leading Orlando to a victory over Boston.

The Magic fell behind 74-69 after missing 13 of 17 shots in the third quarter, and trailed 82-72 before putting together a 30-10 run to extend the Celtics' losing streak to five games.

Dee Brown, Kevin Gamble and Dino Radja led Boston with 14 points each. The Celtics were held to a NBA-record two offensive rebounds, yet were still in position to end their losing streak after putting together a 22-7 run to open the 10-point lead with 8:17 left.

Cavaliers 111, Nuggets 99

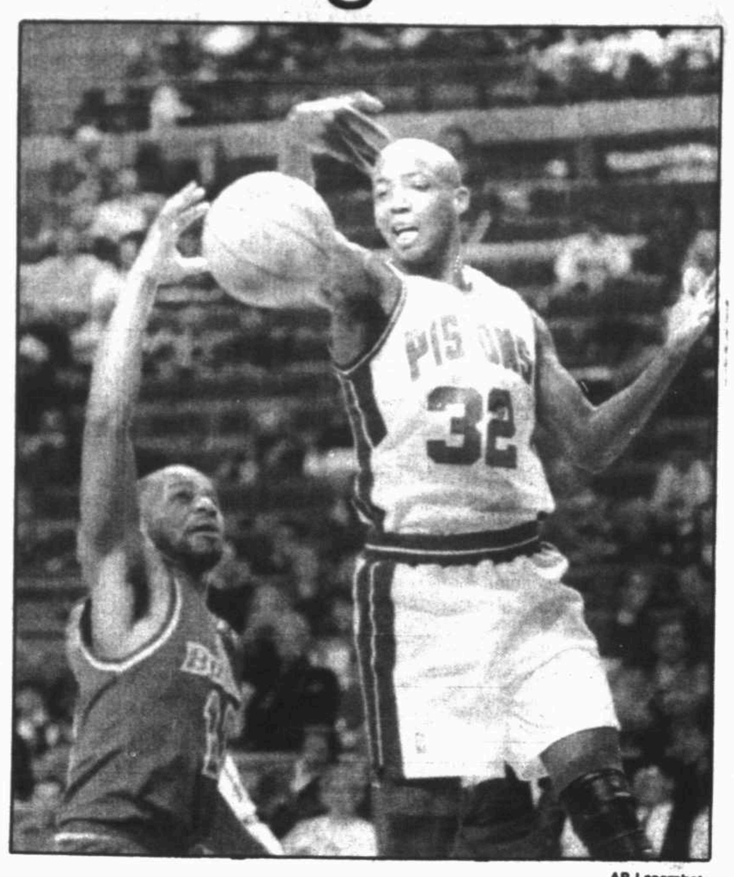

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Gerald Wilkins scored 15 of his 27 points in the first quarter and made four 3-pointers as Cleveland beat Denver.

LaPhonso Ellis and Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf scored 21 points each for Denver, which committed 21 turnovers leading to 33 Cleveland points. Ellis had 15 at halftime, but was hampered by foul trouble in the second half.

Timberwolves 97, Bucks 90

MINNEAPOLIS — Christian Laettner scored 23 points and 13 rebounds as Minnesota snapped a seven-game losing streak with a victory over Milwaukee.

Isaiah Rider, fresh off his victory in the NBA slam-dunk competition, scored 22 points for the Wolves. Eric Murdock led the Bucks with 22 points and Vin Baker had 21.

St. Joe's hands Minutemen league loss

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Kevin Connor's free throw with .2 seconds to play Tuesday night gave St. Joseph's an 81-80 upset victory over No. 10 Massachusetts, the Minutemen's first Atlantic 10 loss this season.

St. Joseph's (11-11, 3-9) had lost seven straight games to Massachusetts by an average of 16.7 points, their last win coming on Feb. 17, 1990.

Massachusetts (19-5) had won its first 10 league games this season.

Carlin Warley, who injured his neck Sunday against Rhode Island, led St. Joseph's with 23 points, while Rap Curry had 19 and Connor 16.

Lou Roe had 22 points for Massachusetts.

Curry missed a jumper with four seconds to go, but Connor grabbed the rebound and was fouled by Marcus Camby. He made the first free throw and purposely missed the second, and as the game ended St. Joseph's fans stormed the court.

Villanova 64,
No. 3 Connecticut 63

VILLANOVA, Pa. — Eric Eberz's 3-pointer with two seconds to play gave Villanova a 64-63 victory over No. 3 Connecticut.

Donyell Marshall's jumper at the buzzer spun inside the rim and out as the buzzer sounded.

After trading leads with Villanova (11-9, 7-6 Big East) early in the second half, the Huskies (21-3, 11-2) rebounded with an 11-2 run. Marshall scored eight points in that burst, including a 3-pointer and a dunk, to the give the Huskies a 60-54 lead with 3:09 left. He finished with 24 points.

But Eberz's jumper with 2:47 to play narrowed the lead to four. Villanova's Jonathan Haynes then made two free throws with 1:10 remaining and another after a steal with 49 seconds left to make it 63-61. Connecticut lost the ball on an illegal screen with 29 seconds left. After a timeout, Villanova went for the 3-pointer just beyond the 19-foot, 9-inch line and the win.

Kerry Kittles had 24 points for Villanova, including two 3-pointers less than a minute apart to give the Wildcats a 52-47 lead with 7:29 left.

No. 14 Syracuse 79,
Providence 74

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Adrian Autry put back his own missed free throw with 55 seconds to play to cap a 14-point comeback and give No. 14 Syracuse a win over Providence.

Syracuse (17-4, 9-4 Big East) added six straight free throws in the final 33 seconds to lock up its 10th straight home victory and solidify its hold on second place in the conference.

Providence (12-8, 5-7) led 52-38 with 16:41 to play after scoring 16 straight points, but wilted under Syracuse's aggressive defense.

Michael Brown, who had 16 points for Providence, made a 3-pointer 36 seconds later to put the Friars back on top 72-70.

Eric Williams, who scored a career-high 26 points in Providence's 96-82 victory over Syracuse earlier this season, scored on a follow shot for the Friar's final points and finished with 24.

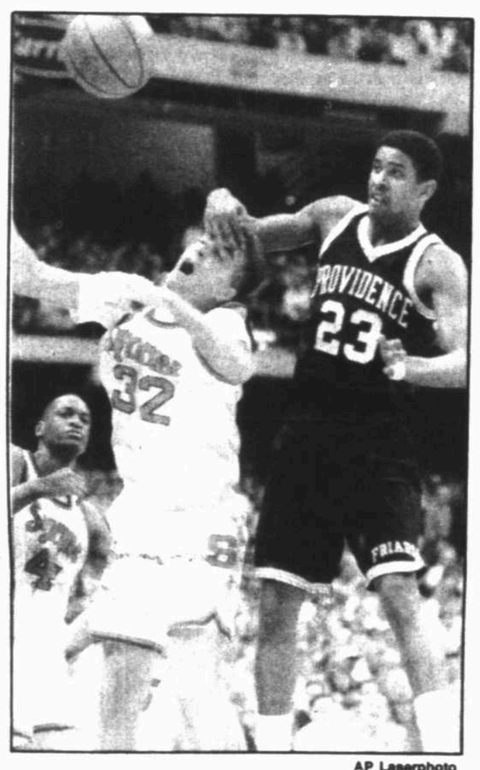

No. 22 Marquette 55,
Virginia Tech 48

BLACKSBURG, Va. — Jim McIlvaine had 18 points, nine rebounds and five blocks and No. 22 Marquette held Virginia Tech without a field goal over the final 5:58 for victory.

Roney Eford scored five of his nine points as the Warriors (17-6) closed the game with an 8-2 run and won for the sixth time in seven games. Marquette improved its road mark to 7-3.

Virginia Tech (13-8) continued its late-season slide. Not even a shuffling of the starting lineup could prevent a sixth consecutive loss for the Hokies, who had no scorers in double figures.

McIlvaine had four points as Marquette scored the first eight points of the second half to take its biggest lead, 43-29 with 16:37 remaining.

Syracuse center J.B. Reafsnyder (32) is fouled by Providence's Franklin Western (23) during the Orangemen's 79-74 win Tuesday.

No. 11 Kentucky 99, LSU 95

BATON ROUGE, La. — No. 11 Kentucky pulled off the greatest comeback in college basketball history Tuesday night with a 99-95 victory over LSU after trailing by 31 points with 15:30 to play.

Walter McCarty's 3-pointer with 19 seconds left gave the Wildcats a 96-95 lead, their first since 1-0.

Longhorns steal one from Baylor, 113-91

AUSTIN (AP) — B.J. Tyler scored 27 points and Texas stole the ball a school-record 22 times as the Longhorns ran away from Baylor 113-91 Tuesday night and tightened their grip on the Southwest Conference lead.

Tyler broke the game open with a driving layup and four 3-pointers during an 18-4 run midway through the first half put Texas ahead 51-29 en route to its 10th straight victory.

The Longhorns (17-6, 9-1 SWC) led 65-39 at halftime and never allowed Baylor (14-8, 5-5) to get any closer than 20 in the second half.

UT holds a one-game lead over Texas A&M (7-1), which lost to Texas on Saturday.

Jerome Lambert was the bright spot for the Bears, scoring 21 of his 33 in the first half as he dominated the baseline and jammed home five dunks. He fouled out with two minutes remaining.

The Longhorns, who had been beating league opponents by an average of 19.7 points coming into the Baylor game, have won 15 of their last 17 games.

Baylor had no answer for the Longhorns' ferocious full-court press and trapping, man-to-man defense. The Bears turned the ball over 29 times, while Texas picked their pocket 22 times, replacing the previous mark of 21 steals set against Houston earlier this year.

Aundre Branch had 25 points and Willie Sublett added 15 for Baylor.

Albert Burditt complemented Tyler's outside shooting by hammering inside with 19 points, 10 rebounds and six blocks for the Longhorns.

Terrence Rencher had 18 points and six steals, Tony Watson had 13 points and Roderick Anderson added 12 points and eight assists and six steals for Texas.

Woodfin heats up, Stanton tops Wall

By Tom Ruiz
MRT Correspondent

BIG SPRING — The old wicked witch of District 6-2A, the Wall Lady Hawks, were killed off by the Cinderella Lady Buffaloes of Stanton Tuesday, 49-47, and it wasn't water that melted Wall away. Instead it was Kindra Woodfin's love affair with the east-end goal that gave Stanton the 6-2A district crown at the Dorothy Garrett Coliseum in a district playoff game.

Woodfin's 12 third-quarter points and game high 24 enabled 23-3 Stanton to grab a nine-point lead heading into the final eight minutes.

Stanton coach Frank Riney commented before the tipoff that his girls were determined to take what was rightfully theirs: "The first time we beat them was a program builder for us. This one is for pride," Riney said.

Though the score was tied twice, Stanton never trailed in the game. The third quarter belonged to Woodfin who developed a red-hot scoring affair with the backboard.

It was the type of liaison that will be talked about for days, or at least until Friday when Stanton plays again. The more Woodfin scored the bigger the Stanton lead got.

But like any good romance, Woodfin turned her back on the glass in the fourth quarter, and as a result her shots caromed off the iron.

Trailing 45-36, Wall began to make their way back. Led by Katy Wilde and Kim Powell, who scored eight points between them to tie the game at 47-47.

Stanton was making matters worse for itself as Woodfin got into foul trouble with three personals and rode the pine for most of the the fourth quarter.

However, the Stanton defense, led by Laura Herm, Lupe Chapa, Sonja Harper, and Sande Bundas, forced Wall to make three critical turnovers when it seemed they were positioned to take the lead.

But like any good romantic ending, Woodfin got one last kiss off the board.

Like a great go-to player, Woodfin wanted the ball just one more time.

Woodfin would get her chance. With :31 seconds remaining, Woodfin spun to the paint, put up the shot which kissed squarely off the glass to give Stanton the win.

The Lady Buffs will open playoff competition when they travel to Pecos Friday for a 6 p.m. game against Anthony.

Score by quarters:

Stanton	13	13	19	4—49
Wall	9	13	14	11—47

Three-point goals: Stanton 3 (Herm 2; Chapa). Wall (Payne). Total Fouls: Stanton 16, Wall 12. Fouled out: None. Technical Fouls: None.

Programs planned

Allison Cancer Center, 2200 W. Illinois, will present American Cancer Society's Evening Dialogue 7 p.m. Tuesday at the center. Alex Rose will present a program on "True Colors."

ACS's educational series, I Can Cope, will be presented 7 p.m. Feb. 24 the center. Dr. James Corwin, radiation oncologist, will discuss "Learning More About Cancer."

All cancer patients, their families and friends are invited to attend these programs.

Salvation in food?

If you are concerned about getting lots of vitamin C and E to help keep cancer and heart disease away, can you depend on food? Or do you need vitamins?

Scientists have long assumed that your body absorbs just as much of a vitamin from food as from supplements. Well, not always, according to new tests on 68 men at the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The fact is, you can count on orange juice and orange segments to give you just as much vitamin C as a comparable dose of a pill, the study found. However, raw broccoli delivered about 20 percent less vitamin C than expected. You can get the full dose from broccoli by lightly cooking it.

As for vitamin E, it's impossible to substantially boost blood levels of vitamin E from food alone, researchers said. The most you could get is about 25 IU (international units) per day.

Taking a multivitamin pill that included vitamin E added 60 IU daily and upped blood levels of the vitamin 14 percent. However, the only sure way to raise vitamin E blood levels substantially is to take a daily vitamin E capsule of at least 100 IU, the study concluded. This amount has reduced heart disease risk in Harvard studies.

Bowel disease

There's new evidence that a special restrictive diet may be better than drugs in treating Crohn's disease, an inflammatory bowel disease. The theory is that many victims of Crohn's have food intolerances that worsen their condition.

British researcher Dr. John Hunter, a gastroenterologist at Addenbrooke's Hospital in Cambridge, has documented the diet-Crohn's link in the first large-scale controlled study of its kind. He first put 136 patients on a special "elemental" or liquid diet. After 14 days, 84 percent of the two-thirds of the patients who could tolerate the diet were in remission.

Some then got the drug prednisolone and went back to their normal diets; the others stuck to the diet treatment and introduced one new food daily in attempts to detect and eliminate troublesome foods. Foods most apt to cause a flare-up of symptoms were, in order: corn, wheat, milk, yeast, eggs, potato, rye, coffee, apples, mushrooms, oats and chocolate.

Those on the diet therapy had remissions lasting an average 7.5 months and relapse rates of 62 percent compared with 4 months' remissions and 79 percent relapses for those on the drug, Dr. Hunter found.

Margarine revisited

If you use margarine, you should know that the case against the spread is growing stronger. In a recent review of the evidence, Matthew P. Longnecker at UCLA's School of Public health compiled a lengthy indictment of so-called trans fatty acids which are concentrated in margarine.

Trans fatty acids occur when oils are hardened or hydrogenated. Thus, solid stick margarine generally has more trans fatty acids than softer tub margarine.

Here are some of the dangers, according to Dr. Longnecker:

A Harvard study found that women eating the most trans fatty acids were 60 percent more apt to have heart disease than those eating the least. A Greek study found that cooking with margarine increased the risk of heart disease by nearly 90 percent.

Trans fatty acids boost dangerous LDL-type cholesterol and decrease good HDL cholesterol, several studies show. Trans fatty acids also spur biological changes fomenting blood clots incriminated in heart attacks and strokes.

Vitamin E debate rages on

By Densie Webb
N.Y. Times News Service

"Do as I say, not as I do" is becoming an increasingly common admonition from nutrition researchers. While many are so convinced by their own research on vitamin supplements that they take them to ward off disease, most are unwilling to advise the public to do the same because of a lack of conclusive scientific evidence.

Hungry for nutritional guidance, a growing number of people are taking matters into their own hands and doing as the researchers do, not as they say, in hope of getting a head start on disease prevention.

Vitamin E is one nutrient caught in the supplement crossfire. Evidence is growing that when taken in amounts 10 or more times the recommended dietary allowances of 8 to 10 International Units, or IUs, it may lower the risk of heart disease and cancer and, to a lesser degree, reduce the risk of cataracts and strengthen the immune system. But there are a couple of problems.

First, the research to date is based only on observational studies, in which people are followed but not treated over a long period and are interviewed at various times about what they eat and whether they take supplements.

But there is a missing piece of the puzzle, said Dr. Charles Hennekens, the principal investigator of the Physicians' Health Study, a study of 22,000 male doctors who are being given beta-carotene supplements and/or aspirin, or a dummy pill; they are being followed up for incidence of heart disease and cancer. Beta-carotene and vitamins E and C are antioxidants, which have been shown to reduce damage to the cells caused by free radicals, harmful molecules produced by the body.

"What we don't know is if it's the supplements themselves or the associated health attitudes of health-conscious people that lowers the risk of cancer and heart disease," he said. It could be that people who take supplements also eat healthy diets, exercise and don't smoke, which would obscure the outcome.

The only way to know for sure about supplements, including vitamin E, Hennekens said, is through carefully controlled clinical trials. Several are under way in the United States, but none have been completed. Hennekens is taking part in the study and said he was unaware of whether he is getting beta-carotene or a placebo.

But he did say that the results of the first human trial with beta-carotene and vitamin E are expected to be pub-

Anti-depressant has fans, critics

By Dick Stanley

AUSTIN (AP) — Melva Jean Cain says Prozac saved her life.

"It's like a whole new world," said Cain, who credits the increasingly popular psychoactive drug with controlling her chronic depression for more than four years now.

Eileen King, however, blames Prozac for her suicide attempt last August and the disabling brain damage the attempt caused.

"The rest of my life has been ruined," King said.

Cain, an Austin native, and King, a five-year Austin resident, are the visible tip of what experts say are more than 6 million Americans (and counting) who have used the drug many call a miracle and some a curse.

Experts say satisfied users — who say the prescription green-and-white capsules that cost almost $2 each make them cheerful and self-assured — far outnumber the critics.

Approved for sale by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration in 1987, Prozac boasts worldwide sales of nearly $1.2 billion a year. Psychiatrists are not surprised.

"When properly prescribed by a qualified physician, it has an excellent benefit-to-risk ratio," said Dr. William Reid, medical director of the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

Reid said doctors with the state agency routinely use Prozac and its newer, anti-depressant cousins, Zoloft and Paxil, to treat moderate to severe depression. The ailment, characterized in its extreme form by a lack of the will to live, is estimated to afflict more than 24 million Americans.

Lawrence and Eileen King, however, feel very differently about the drug.

"She was depressed to some extent, but, until Prozac, she never threatened her life or anything," said Lawrence King, a psychologist with the Texas Department of Human Services.

Melva Jean Cain, shown in Austin, says Prozac saved her life. Cain is one of an estimated 6 million Americans taking the anti-depressant drug, and although some report ill-effects, experts say satisfied users far outnumber the critics.

The Austin psychiatrist he identified as the physician who prescribed Prozac for his wife declined to comment. The couple is considering a lawsuit.

"I really believe it should be off the market," Eileen King said.

Dr. Stuart Yudofsky, chairman of the department of psychiatry at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, disagreed. He said Prozac and its cousins are safe and highly important in the treatment of mental illnesses.

"The only danger I see," Yudofsky said, "is that the complex, multifaceted illness called depression will be oversimplified. It rarely can be handled with medication alone. It's the quality of treatment with these anti-depressants that I worry about."

He was seconded by Dr. Robert Zapalac, an Austin psychiatrist who treats Cain and is a former president of the Texas Society of Psychiatric

Obese children need parents' help

By Jennifer Stack
Associated Press

Childhood obesity is an issue that needs to be addressed by parents for health and emotional reasons. In addition, some children may also need professional help to successfully manage a weight problem.

In addition to being a frequent target of cruel playground taunts, obese children — those who are 20 percent over their ideal weight — are four times as likely as average-weight children to become obese adults.

Obesity in adults increases the risk of such problems as hypertension, high blood cholesterol levels, heart disease and diabetes.

Although many overweight children grow out of the problem on their own, there are times when outside help is needed.

To determine if their child does need help, parents should first consult the child's pediatrician. Factors that should be considered to determine if professional help is needed include the child's weight, age and parental history of weight gain and weight-related illnesses.

If a weight management program is deemed necessary, seek out nutritionists and programs geared to children. And never put a child on a diet designed for an adult. These diets tend to be restrictive and do not provide the nutrients children need to grow.

Making changes in household habits can help children manage their weight. But these changes must be extended to the entire family. Obese children often feel different from others and singling them out can increase their sense of isolation.

To begin with, parents can reduce the amount of time spent on sedentary playtime and encourage increased physical activity. For example, parents may allow children an hour of television after they participate in a fun physical activity — and do their homework.

It's also important to reevaluate the policy toward keeping sweets and other junk food in the household. Parents should set specific times for treats, and not allow children free access to snacking.

Also avoid using treats as a reward since this only tends to make these foods more desirable. And at treat time, select lower fat foods, such as pretzels or low-fat frozen yogurt, instead of ice cream or chips.

Obese children need to maximize their nutritional intake while reducing their calories. To do this, parents should plan low-fat, but nutritious, meals.

Cutting out extra fat in the household diet can help children achieve this goal — and help the entire family, to boot. For example, parents can trim a few hundred calories at dinnertime by offering broiled rather than fried chicken.

Obese children will need parental support and encouragement to lose weight. And the type of support children need often varies, depending on their ages.

Parents are entirely responsible for weight management when children are between the ages of 2 to 5 years. And any behavioral goals set for these children must be those that can be easily and quickly met.

Schoolage children need to learn about healthy food choices and develop skills to cope with adults and children who offer high-calorie foods when the child is away from home.

Children 8 to 12 years may start to monitor their own progress and reward themselves for meeting goals. But they still need their parents' support in setting goals and monitoring progress.

Adolescents are almost totally self-regulating about their diets. Parents must respect their choices, but can provide support and guidance.

Fonda releases video on yoga

By Carol Nuckols
N.Y. Times News Service

Fitness fanatics can look down their noses all they want at yoga, perhaps disparaging it as "just stretching."

Jane Fonda knows better. Hatha yoga (the physical-exercise portion of an overall philosophy) requires strength and stamina, as well as flexibility, a point not overlooked in "Jane Fonda's Yoga Exercise Workout" (AVision, $19.98).

Fonda's latest exercise videotape takes the viewer through a progression of basic exercises, followed by a relaxation session. Fonda followers will be disappointed if they're seeking her usual active workout, although they might be surprised at how difficult even some of the easiest-looking yoga postures can be for anyone who's not used to doing them.

The 50-minute tape includes the standard warnings (see your doctor before beginning a new regimen), as well as precautions not to overextend. Unlike the "no-pain, no-gain" theory of working out, yoga is not supposed to hurt.

Fonda offers alternative versions of postures, ranging from easy to progressively more difficult (sometimes shown all at once, in insets). She also gives plenty of specific instructions (when to inhale and exhale, abdomen in, knees over ankles, hips pressed forward) and encouragement ("very good," "do the best you can").

The tape is excellent for beginners. It shows not just the postures, but how to work toward achieving them if you're not limber or strong enough at the outset.

The tape should be widely available at retail outlets this week.

Water workout doesn't have to be swimming

Associated Press

Swimming isn't the only exercise you can do in the water, as water aerobics participants well know. But how about aqua-skiing or aqua-stair climbing? According to Mature Outlook magazine, you can find additional ways to get a workout in water with exercise equipment specially made to be used in a pool.

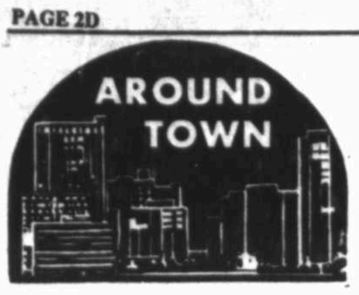

The equipment sits at the bottom of a pool or is mounted on the side of one, and features individual stations that take advantage of the natural resistance of water to provide strengthening and cardiovascular benefits, says Ed Trainor, vice president of fitness services for Town Sports International, a New York City-based company.

Performed in the pool, the exercises use the buoyancy of water to support the body and keep weight off bones and joints, thus delivering a safe, low-impact workout, he adds.

"The water supports you. A sprained ankle may keep you from stepping on land, but it won't stop you from benefiting from this exercise equipment," says Trainor.

The in-water equipment also might appeal to people who are self-conscious about their bodies. "You may not want to be where everyone is dressed in spandex leotards," he says. "The water offers protection in terms of visibility if you're overweight, out of shape or shy."

DEAR ABBY

Parenthood joyful experience

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I enjoyed your tongue-in-cheek column on "The Childless Couple." The author offered a "cup is half empty" version of parenthood. I respectfully submit a "cup is half full" version. — STEVE PARKER, CHICAGO

Van Buren

DEAR STEVE: I'm sure many will thank you for your cleverly written rebuttal:

PARENTS

What a pitiful lot parents are. How any soul can survive the daily monotony of nurturing a child from innocent infancy to flourishing adulthood is beyond me. It's a boring life.

Imagine actually experiencing a child's birth and then having to pretend the animalistic ritual was a breathtaking, unbelievable miracle never to be forgotten. Consider the shallow pride parents feign as junior becomes the spitting image of Dad, acts just like Mom and laughs like Grandpa. Meaningless, egocentric images.

Rather than putting in those extra productive hours at work, parents must spend nights and weekends at home with children. Oh, the burden of teaching them to take their first step, say their first word and throw their first ball. Can't someone throw these parents an 80-hour work-week lifeline?

While carefree adults enjoy fine dining, opera and exotic travel, parents are stuck with reliving their childhood. They tolerate building sandcastles at the beach, endure birthday parties of giggling children where "pin the tail on the donkey" is new and exciting, and survive camping outings that end with marshmallows and "Kumbaya" around the campfire. How juvenile! How childish!

Children tie you down. Rather than do what they want, parents spend most of their time on their children. They deal with their kid's overexcitement at scoring a goal, getting a part in the school play, or earning an "A" on a report card. They put up with the never-ending disappointments kids are bound to have knowing that consolation is only found in the warm arms of parents who love them anyway. Why would you want to weigh yourself down with the joys and emotions of a child when you could spend all your time concerned with yourself?

And the rigor of all the holidays. There is no civilized dinner for two or quiet tender moments by the fire. Where is the fun in a child's dropped jaw that Santa actually came, the Easter Bunny didn't forget, and Fourth of July fireworks really light up the sky? What a drag to be bothered by Halloween costumes, pumpkin carving and bobbing for apples. Better to leave family traditions in the past where they belong.

When the kids finally fly the coop, parents suffer the ultimate indignity. A little wearier. A little grayer. A few more laugh lines to show for the child-rearing years. Parents put on their best poker face and swear up and down that these physical side effects were a small price to pay for giving life, knowledge, character and faith to children who will sacrifice just as much for the next generation.

DEAR ABBY: Just had to let you know "The Childless Couple" was excellent. I never laughed so hard in my life. I would sure like to know where the orthodontist lives who will handle those braces for 500 bucks. My son's were seven times that. Sign me ... LIVING PROOF

Fizzy 'juice' is hit with tasters

By Linda Anderson

When it comes to drinks, parents would prefer if their children drank juices and other healthy beverages; kids usually would rather have something loaded with sugar and laced with bubbles. Tree Top has combined those two kinds of drinks into something called Juice Fizz carbonated juice drink. My young taste-testers thought the product was a wonderful idea and couldn't wait to try some.

Anderson

We bought some cans of Juice Fizz so the kids could check them out for taste. I got the price and advertising accuracy part of the experiment. I knew better than to think I'd get to have a can of the drink all to myself.

Juice Fizz comes in several flavors, including grape, orange and fruit punch, and two sizes — an 8-ounce can and a 12-ounce can. We started off with the 8-ounce cans of grape juice flavored Juice Fizz and from there graduated to the 12-ounce can. We also tried the fruit punch flavor, just for a change.

In the 8-ounce size, Juice Fizz comes in a four-pack and costs $1.79. The 12-ounce cans are packaged in six-packs and cost $2.79. The smaller cans are more expensive, ounce per ounce, but the taste-testers thought they were so cute. They did figure out, however, that they get more to drink per can and more cans per six-pack, so the larger cans have now found a home in our refrigerator too.

Label information claims the drink contains 25 percent fruit juice — which really isn't much if you're looking for good nutrition — and 130 calories per 8-ounce serving.

Carbonated water is listed first in the ingredients list, followed by high fructose corn syrup (a form of sugar), apple, grape and orange juice concentrates, citric acid, natural flavor and potassium citrate. (By the way, that information was taken off the fruit punch flavor Juice Fizz can.).

And in a nice touch, the company has included a toll-free number so consumers can call with questions or comments: 1-800-542-4055. I always appreciate it when companies do that, even if I never call the number. It's nice to know they stand by their product to the point that they are willing to listen to customers — over the phone.

I guess you figured out by now that the kids loved Juice Fizz. In fact, it's high on their grocery list, right up there with ice cream, string cheese and peanut butter.

I imagine that we'll have to try the other flavors now...

Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

Hypnotize way out of pain

Associated Press

The word "hypnosis" may conjure up images of magic acts for some folks. But, Mature Outlook magazine says, today's version of mind-over-matter has a more practical spin — helping people control their chronic pain.

"Nearly all major pain centers like to use noninvasive techniques when at all possible," says Dr. Berthold Wolff, a psychologist and the director of the New York University Comprehensive Pain Center.

If you are considering hypnosis, choose your practitioner carefully, says Bill Hoffman of the American Society of Clinical Hypnosis (ASCH). The ASCH recommends using professionals (physicians, dentists, nurses, social workers or family counselors) with graduate-level degrees in their field who use hypnosis as one of many therapeutic tools in their clinical practice.

PROZAC: Drug helps some, hinders others

(From 1D)

Physicians.

"These drugs are very useful for treating panic disorder, obsessive-compulsive disorder and moderate to severe depression," Zapalac said. "But they require dose adjustment. And most studies show that psychotherapy and medications are better than either alone."

Cain, for instance, still combines talk therapy with Prozac.

"The drug took seven months to really kick in and be effective," she said. "Others respond much more quickly. When it happened, it was as though I woke up one morning and saw things I'd never seen before. Things made sense that never had before."

Cain, who now works as a consultant to MHMR, said she agreed to talk about her use of the drug to help combat the stigma faced by people with mental illnesses.

"It'll take a few of us coming forward before we can change it," she said.

Experts say Prozac and its cousins work by increasing the brain's production of the chemical serotonin, a neurotransmitter. Lack of serotonin is believed to be inherited and has been associated with depression and other mental problems.

But the drugs are so popular — even with people who have no mental illness — that they are becoming part of a growing legal drug subculture. Some say they can change personality. Many psychiatrists consider that to be hype.

"I don't think the unique emotional patterns that characterize individuals can be changed," Yudofsky said. "All Prozac does is enable the personality to unlock itself."

Increasingly, however, the drugs are prescribed by doctors as diverse as family practitioners and obstetrician-gynecologists — physicians, that is, with little or no psychiatric training.

"That is very common in Austin," Zapalac said. "I don't see it being prescribed as a cure-all. But I worry that these physicians don't realize all the problems involved."

As the chorus of satisfaction grows, groups like the Church of Scientology and the Texas Mental Health Consumers persist in raising what Reid, Yudofsky and Zapalac call discredited criticism that Prozac causes aggressive behavior and suicide attempts. The groups rarely mention Zoloft and Paxil, although they work the same way Prozac does.

"We don't include them because we haven't heard bad things about them," said Jerry Boswell with the Church of Scientology in Austin. "We've had thousands of complaints on Prozac."

Boswell and the mental health consumers' group are petitioning the Texas Department of Health to put labels on all psychoactive drugs sold in Texas warning that they may cause suicidal or aggressive behavior.

Ralph Nader's Public Citizen Health Research Group, a longtime critic of Prozac, raised the labeling idea with the FDA in 1989. The federal agency decided the evidence did not warrant it.

The Kings, however, want prospective users of the drugs to consider their tragedy.

Eileen King's psychiatrist "put her on Prozac for about six to eight weeks, and I noticed she was extremely aggressive and hyper," Lawrence King said. "The psychiatrist should have seen that she was not normal at all. She couldn't sleep. She'd sit up all night working. He upped the dosage, and three days later she attempted suicide."

The attempt, an overdose of other prescription drugs, briefly stopped Eileen King's heart, depriving her brain of oxygen long enough to damage it.

"She can hardly go to the mailbox and find her way back," Lawrence King said.

Yudofsky and other experts said hyperactivity is a common early side-effect of Prozac and its cousins until their optimum dosage is established. They say depression can lead to suicide with or without a drug.

Such cases have "gotten a great deal of publicity and probably scared a lot of people away from a good treatment," Reid said. "But there's no reputable scientific evidence that Prozac causes people to commit crimes or hurt themselves or other people."

Program helps frail elderly

By Tamar Lewin
N.Y. Times News Service

COLUMBIA, S.C. — After Rosa Alston had her second leg amputated, her surgeon began making arrangements for her to go to a nursing home.

But Mrs. Alston, a 73-year-old widow who lives alone, would have none of it. Instead, she signed up for Palmetto Senior Care, a comprehensive-care program for frail elderly people based on a San Francisco model that is winning support among health policy makers nationwide.

Palmetto social workers helped Mrs. Alston find and move to an apartment that she could navigate in her wheelchair. On Mondays and Fridays, Palmetto sends an aide to clean the apartment and to help her bathe. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, the Palmetto van takes Mrs. Alston to the program's day center, where she plays Bingo, makes crafts, eats lunch, leads a Bible discussion group and is monitored for her diabetes and other health problems.

When necessary, Palmetto doctors make house calls. And when Mrs. Alston's dog, Skippy, got fleas, Palmetto paid to remove them.

THE PROGRAM, which requires participants to sign over their Medicaid and Medicare policies, is free of charge for Ms. Alston, as long as she uses its doctors and nurses. And for Medicaid and Medicare, which pay its costs, the program is less expensive than care in a nursing home.

Palmetto and the eight similar programs across the country are an ambitious effort to weave medical care, home care, social services and case management into a single web of care. They are modeled on the 20-year-old On Lok center for frail elderly residents of San Francisco's Chinatown.

Unlike most other health plans for frail elderly Americans, these programs assign participants to a day center, where a team of doctors, nurses, social workers, therapists, nutritionists and pharmacists decide what services each person needs. The centers are small, allowing for individual attention. Palmetto's day centers — one in a strip shopping center, one in an office building and one, for people with dementia, in a converted home — serve a total of 200 people.

"This is what medicine is supposed to be like," said Dr. Paul Eleazer, the medical director of Palmetto, which is affiliated with Richland Memorial Hospital here. "It's taking care of people without worrying about funding sources, or malpractice, or inpatient-outpatient. All you have to think about is whether this is the best way to care for this patient."

THE ON LOK model, whose name comes from the Chinese words for "peaceful" and "happy," may be expanded to statewide use in both Massachusetts, where it has started in East Boston, and New York, where programs exist in the Bronx and Rochester.

"It's not for everybody," said Don Sherwood, who tracks On Lok for the Office of Research and Demonstration at the Health Care Financing Administration, the federal agency that manages Medicaid and Medicare. "Only 5 percent of those over 65 are frail enough to be eligible, and many don't want to change doctors and go to a day health center. But for those who want comprehensive care, it's very good."

Stephen Somers of the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, which helped finance the models in South Carolina and elsewhere, said the program helped frail elderly people close the gap between their day-to-day care and the treatment they received for acute problems.

"What makes a difference is helping people function in the community, instead of curing their heart or head or knee problem and letting them fall through the cracks and land in a nursing home," said Somers, the foundation's associate vice president. "On Lok is really the leader in the field."

Somers and others suggested that the model might also work for people with AIDS, severely handicapped children who need intensive medical care, or people with chronic mental illness.

PALMETTO PARTICIPANTS and their families describe the program as a godsend. Sandy McCutcheon said she could not run her day-care business if her 66-year-old husband, Kenneth, who has Alzheimer's disease, could not go to the Palmetto center. Nor, she said, could she bear the constant care-giving without the weekend off that Palmetto gives her every month.

Mrs. Alston, who lived in 35 states during a career that included picking oranges, cutting okra, working at an Army PX and ironing curtains, is another fan of Palmetto.

"Whatever I need, they give me," she said. "I don't even have to go the pharmacy anymore, because they hand out my medicine the last day of every month. I look forward to going to the center twice a week, but I wouldn't want to go any more than that. On my days at home, I read the Bible, and I'm not lonely. I like being on my own."

THREE FACTORS make the On Lok model special. While most other comprehensive programs, like health maintenance organizations, serve both healthy and ill participants, On Lok accepts only those ill enough to be eligible for nursing-home care. Most need help bathing, dressing or walking; many are incontinent or demented.

Second, programs on the On Lok model receive from Medicaid and Medicare a set monthly payment per patient — from $2,500 a month in Oregon to more than $5,000 in the Bronx — and have broad discretion in spending it.

The amount is based on the average Medicaid-Medicare payment for nursing home-eligible patients in the area, minus 5 percent to 15 percent.

Third, each participant is assigned to an interdisciplinary team that meets regularly to assess their needs.

"No doctor, no nurse, no case manager could on their own do the kinds of things the multidisciplinary team can, because we have both the flexibility and the authority to do whatever needs doing," said Susan Aldrich, director of Comprehensive Care Management, the On Lok model program in the Bronx.

"We can find housing, we can find a hospital bed, we can buy a microwave oven for someone who's no longer safe around a gas oven."

'No doctor, no nurse, no case manager could on their own do the kinds of things the multidisciplinary team can, because we have both the flexibility and the authority to do whatever needs doing. We can find housing, we can find a hospital bed, we can buy a microwave oven for someone who's no longer safe around a gas oven.'

— Susan Aldrich
director Comprehensive Care Management

CENTRAL TO the On Lok model is the day health center, a vastly expanded version of the social day programs for the elderly that proliferated in the 1970s.

Most day centers offer activities that vary from basket-weaving to trips and discussions of current events.

In recent years, many centers have added health services like blood-pressure checks or podiatrist care.

But the On Lok model goes further, with on-site geriatricians, rehabilitation therapists, nurse-practitioners and other health professionals.

At Mrs. Alston's center more than half of the participants must use wheelchairs.

Some receive intravenous antibiotics or hydration in the treatment room at the back of the center; others work individually with a physical therapist. Everyone has a complete physical examination at least every three months.

The program is attractive to participants because they are guaranteed free health care, including hospital or nursing-home care, until they die or choose to leave the program. And the support systems, like home care, the day-center programs and the continued attention of a team of health professionals, are far more extensive than would generally be available under Medicaid.

HEALTH-POLICY planners find programs like Palmetto financially appealing, too. Because the health of participants is constantly monitored, their use of hospitals is so sharply reduced that On Lok models cost less than regular care under Medicaid or Medicare despite all the extra services that the models provide.

Judy Baskins, the director of Palmetto, said her program's participants averaged only 3.4 days in the hospital each year, less than half the average hospitalization rate for all Americans over 65. Hospital stays for participants in San Francisco's On Lok center are still briefer, and participants' mortality rates are also low.

Because of careful monitoring, Ms. Baskins noted, Palmetto participants can often be hospitalized before a health problem becomes an expensive emergency crisis.

Every three months, the Palmetto team discusses each participant, with reports from the doctor, pharmacist, social worker, nutritionist, home-care supervisor, nurse, physical therapist and activities director.

When patients require hospitalization or nursing-home care, the doctors act as admitting physicians, and the team stays in close touch with the patient. In one case, the team became so angry about the shoddy care their client was receiving at a particular nursing home that they reported the institution to the state licensing agency.

ONE RECENT team meeting began with an update on a woman who was about to be discharged from a hospital and taken home to die, as she and her family had agreed.

"The family finally decided at 99 she can do what she wants," Ms. Baskins said, summarizing the case for the 23 health professionals sitting around the table. "They've given her permission. They don't want any more tube feedings. But they have agreed to oxygen and whatever we can do for her comfort level."

The team agrees to increase the number of hours of home care the woman will receive, and one member volunteers to visit her regularly.

In another case, the team reports that things are going better now that the 88-year-old participant has left her grandson's home and gone to her daughter's. The family does not want an aide to come in and give them a break, although the team consensus is that such respite care would relieve the family's stress. While the elderly woman is too demented to take part in group activities at the day center, the activities director says she will continue to sit and hold the woman's hand.

Deciding what services each patient should receive is a delicate process, often involving negotiations with participants or their family.

"We thought at the beginning that we'd hear a lot of requests for more home health care," Ms. Baskins said, "but we actually hear more requests for new dentures.

"A lot of families, even ones having a very difficult time, say they manage just fine without the extra help we could provide. Of course, there are also families that seem to be doing fine but want more and more help. In those cases, we work very hard to accept what they want, to recognize that we're not in their shoes and that we can't really know what they're going through."

DEBATE: Pros, cons are being studied

lished in the next few weeks by a team of researchers in Finland. He said he had great expectations of the study.

"It will be the beginning of the firmest evidence we have, and I may alter my view one way or the other based on those data," he said.

If the Finnish study or any of the American trials now under way prove that vitamin E is beneficial, it is probable that people would have to consume far more vitamin E than can be obtained in food to see such benefits. In most of the studies, subjects are taking 100 to 600 IUs a day.

The average amount of vitamin E in the American diet is now only about 10 to 16 IUs. Even a diet containing large amounts of foods rich in vitamin E, like avocados, nuts and wheat germ, cannot come close to providing the amounts being studied for disease prevention. Moreover, foods rich in vitamin E are also high in fat, which nutritionists say people should limit in their diets.

A frustration for people who eat a lot of fish and get most of the fat in their diets from polyunsaturated vegetable oils, practices viewed as part of a healthy diet, is that they have higher vitamin E requirements.

So what is a diet-conscious consumer to do? Experts interviewed recently seem to be noncommittal, not condemning the practice of taking vitamin E supplements before conclusive evidence is in, but stopping short of recommending them for everyone. And the general consensus is that vitamin E supplements are safe. None of the studies to date have uncovered harmful effects from taking a few hundred IUs a day.

"There's a lot of promising evidence," said Dr. Walter Willett, a professor of epidemiology and nutrition at the Harvard School of Public Health and a co-investigator of the Nurse's Health Study, a long-term study of 120,000 nurses that began in 1976.

Although he said he takes vitamin E supplements, he added that he would like to have firmer evidence before making a sweeping public recommendation. "But," he said, "it's not that complicated. People can make up their own minds."

The same sentiment was echoed by Bonnie Liebman, director of nutrition at the Washington-based Center for Science in the Public Interest, a consumer advocacy group.

"I want people to know what the pros and cons are," she said. "I think they should have as much information as these physicians do, to make their own decisions."

Ms. Liebman says she regularly takes a multivitamin supplement and is considering taking an antioxidant vitamin as well. The researchers have been accused of being hypocritical, but Ms. Liebman disagrees.

"It would be hypocritical if physicians were saying, 'Don't take vitamin E,'" she said. And that is usually not the case. Rather, they are reluctant to encourage people to take vitamin supplements, lest they be proved wrong.

Which brings up another question. Are scientists holding back, simply because they do not want to take the risk of looking foolish, should research prove vitamin E to be of little or no help in preventing disease?

"If you make too many recommendations, like, 'This is the word from above,' that you must later retract, you undermine credibility," Dr. Willett said.

Hennekens voiced the same reservations: "If the trials don't show a benefit, or worse yet, if there's some harm, then people will say: 'Gee, what do I do. One day they tell me to take it, and the next day they tell me not to.' It makes us as a discipline look silly."

Even if conclusive evid nce is found, and these same researchers start advocating supplements for everyone, an obstacle that might still remain is the longstanding bias among doctors and those in the nutrition field against supplements in general.

"Dietitians and physicians go to school, and they're taught to eat a balanced diet, you don't need vitamins, and that has stuck," Ms. Liebman said. But she believes resistance to supplements is beginning to erode.

Still, there is something to be said for healthy diets that include lots of fruits and vegetables.

"The unfortunate reality in the U.S. is that we prefer prescriptive agents rather than a proscriptive life style to lower risk," Hennekens said.

Even if it is proved beyond a reasonable doubt that antioxidant vitamins reduce the risk of disease, experts say those benefits will be relatively small compared with the large benefits that have been shown to result from reducing fat in the diet, maintaining a healthy weight, exercising and not smoking.

Students choose medical careers

BOSTON (AP) — Slightly more than 15 percent of the members of the recent graduating class at Harvard favored a career in medicine, according to a recent report by the university's office of career services. Interest in medicine has climbed for four years in a row, and a higher percentage of women than men said they were interested in medicine. The report said 15.2 percent of the class of 1993 chose medicine as their eventual career choice; business was chosen by 14 percent and academia by 14.3 percent. The increased interest in medical careers rose from 13.1 percent in 1992.

Shrimp allergy can touch off bad reaction

By Dr. Eugenia Hawrylko
Associated Press

Shrimp may be a tasty food, but it can create a problem for thousands of Americans: allergies that can range from mild rashes to life-threatening reactions.

Recently, researchers may have taken a step toward understanding why this delicacy isn't a delight for everyone.

However, the findings are not a cure, and people who are allergic to shrimp still need to be vigilant about avoiding it and other shellfish known as crustaceans. These include crabs, crayfish and lobsters.

As with all kinds of allergies, a shrimp allergy is a matter or genetic susceptibility. If you have a genetic predisposition, you may make allergic antibodies, which nonallergic people do not produce in significant quantities.

When interacting with shrimp, the reacting antibodies produce histamines that can lead to itching of the palate and throat, facial swelling, sneezing, hives, asthma, nausea, diarrhea and, most dangerously, anaphylaxis, a state of shock that can lead to convulsions or death.

American and Indian medical researchers recently identified certain shrimp protein substances that may trigger adverse reactions in allergic people. The researchers also found similar protein substances in other crustaceans, including lobsters, crabs and crayfish.

This protein similarity may explain why people who are allergic to shrimp are also often affected by other crustaceans.

A series of shots that develop the body's ability to tolerate an allergen, immunotherapy currently exists for other kinds of allergies, such as tree and grass pollens. Such immunotherapy, however, is not available for shrimp allergy, but discovery of the shrimp protein may lead researchers to develop medication for that particular allergy.

In the meantime, if you are allergic to shrimp or other crustaceans, stay away from these foods.

Abstinence should include avoiding meals in restaurants that serve shrimp, lobster, crabs or crayfish because some restaurants cook different meals in the same pans and serious allergic reactions have been known to occur this way. So unless you know the chef or kitchen conditions, if you have a severe shrimp allergy stay away from restaurants that serve seafood.

Finally, if you suspect that you are allergic to shrimp, consult a physician. If you are an asthmatic or have had hypersensitive reactions to other foods, you may instead be reacting to sulfites, a preservative used in many foods including shrimp. Sulfites are used to prevent bacteria and spoilage.

■ Gunman abducts woman, shoots rescuer

DENVER — A woman who was kidnapped escaped briefly and flagged down a driver, but the abductor chased the two, shot the rescuer and made off with his victim.

While Jacquie Creazzo lay in a hospital with a bullet in her spine, Robert E. Harlan was arrested Tuesday for investigation of attempted murder and kidnapping, police said.

Harlan's car matched Creazzo's description of the car that chased her after she picked up Rhonda Lee Maloney early Saturday on Interstate 25 near Denver. Maloney was assaulted and abducted after leaving her job as a cocktail waitress and frantically flagged down Creazzo, authorities said.

Maloney, 25, told Creazzo she had been assaulted. As they drove to the police station in suburban Thornton, Maloney's attacker chased the women in a car, firing several shots as they approached the station.

The man pulled Maloney from the car and shot Creazzo three times. Authorities found Creazzo and her bullet-riddled car on the lawn of the police station.

■ 'Noise police' cite woman for snoring

DAVIS, Calif. — Few snorers can sleep easy in Davis these nights — the noise police are on patrol.

Two weeks ago, a community services officer was dispatched in the dead of night to a duplex in a mostly quiet suburban neighborhood. The crime: "audible snoring." The fine: $50, according to a citation issued at the behest of an annoyed neighbor.

No gentle hum, this woman's snoring, but an enthusiastic roar able to penetrate at least one mattress rigged against the common wall to serve as a baffle.

The accused, a 30-year-old mother of two, believes that an injustice has been done. "It's an uncontrollable bodily function," she said. "I didn't decide to go to bed and say, 'Gee, I think I'll snore tonight.'"

But does she, perchance, create a racket as she slumbers? "I guess I do," said the woman, who asked that her name be withheld. "When I have a cold, I snore. But I don't have a chronic snoring problem."

Chris Doherty, the sleep-deprived neighbor who shares a common wall with the woman, said the rumble has been keeping him awake nights intermittently for several months, according to Nick Concolino, a Davis police lieutenant.

The two neighbors were asked by police to work it out, Concolino said; both agreed to place mattresses against the common wall to muffle the snore.

■ Army helicopter crashes, kills 2 pilots

SPEARSVILLE, La. — Two civilian pilots died when the Army AH-64 "Apache" helicopter they were flying crashed in north Louisiana, the Army said Tuesday.

Their employer, Rockwell International of Shreveport, identified them as Ken Shriver of Keithville and Don Rollins of Waskom, Texas.

Rockwell is modifying the AH-64's electronic flight controls for the Army.

The helicopter had been at Fort Belvoir, Va., to show the new instrument display and was returning to Shreveport when it crashed east of Spearsville and about 2.5 miles south of Laran, near Arkansas.

Investigators from the Army Safety Center in Fort Rucker, Ala., went to the site to investigate.

■ Budget debate heats up in Senate hearings

WASHINGTON — Both sides in the fight over a balanced budget constitutional amendment resorted to end-of-the-world scenarios and friendly witnesses Tuesday in dueling Senate hearings.

In one hearing room, Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., the plan's liberal chief sponsor, heard former Democratic presidential candidate Paul Tsongas praise the amendment and warn that without it, mountains of federal debt will be passed to future generations.

"That can only happen if we don't go home at night and look at our kids and grandkids and feel something," the former Massachusetts senator said.

One floor down in the same Senate office building, the amendment's tenacious foe, Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., invited nearly half of President Clinton's cabinet to decry the effect the plan would have on programs.

"This would prevent the nation from fighting crime and making our schools and streets safe once again," said Attorney General Janet Reno in remarks reflecting the ominous tones her colleagues also used.

Byrd scheduled four days of hearings this week and Simon planned three, as a prelude to full-scale Senate debate on the amendment set for next week. Both sides say the vote is too close to call. House passage is expected should the Senate approve the plan.

Clinton pushes for 'three-strikes' penalty

LONDON, Ohio (AP) — President Clinton stepped up pressure on Congress to pass a tough and smart crime bill Tuesday but warned against reaching too far in trying to put chronic, violent offenders behind bars for life.

Surrounded by a field of uniforms at the Ohio Peace Officers Training Academy, Clinton declared, "The American people have waited on this bill long enough."

Clinton reiterated his support for a "three strikes and you're out" proposal to require life imprisonment of repeat violent offenders. But he pointed out that most violent crimes are state — not federal — offenses and cautioned against making the provision too broad.

"There should be no partisanship in this, no politics, no posturing," he said. "We shouldn't litter it up with every offense in the world that the average police officer would tell you on the front end shouldn't be part of it.

"In other words," he continued, "we need to draw this properly and right so ... it means something that every American can agree with."

The Senate-passed crime bill contains a "three-strikes" provision, which would require a life sentence for anyone convicted three times of violent crimes — if the third conviction was on a federal charge. The House has approved its own anti-crime legislation but not a three-strikes measure.

Aides said the president wanted to make sure the final version is constructed so that it covers only the most violent, habitual criminals.

Clinton stressed that because most criminal laws are made at the state level, Congress should set a federal standard that states "will embrace so we can identify the relatively small number of people that are wreaking heartbreak and devastation and death and put them behind bars and keep them there."

Attorney General Janet Reno sounded a similar message earlier in the day, telling reporters the provisions "simply need to be tailored to focus on the truly violent criminal, the three-time armed robber, the people who really hurt other people and should be put away and kept away."

Clinton said he wants a "tough, smart" crime bill that puts 100,000 new police on the streets, offers more money to build prisons and encourages boot-camp-style programs for young offenders.

"I'll make this commitment: If Congress will pass the bill soon, I will respond by cutting red tape," he said. "Within a year, 20,000 new police officers will be hired and start training that they need to make our streets safe."

The president promised to follow up on plans to reduce the government's work force by 252,000 by the turn of the century "and put the entire amount we save into crime fighting. I think it's a good swap."

Clinton pushed for action on the crime bill as he sought to present a broader picture of the administration's efforts to fight violence. He stressed efforts to fight drug abuse, promote stronger family and community values, and give young people positive alternatives to gangs and crime.

"We want to give our young people something to say yes to, by putting hope and opportunity back in their lives," he said. "We want to challenge every American to ... put the values of work and family and community back at the center of the lives of our young people before it is too late for them."

Residents challenge uranium-waste plan

MOAB, Utah (AP) — Once the uranium capital of the world, Moab has become the nation's mountain biking center. Now, its residents want to get rid of radioactive residue of the Cold War that could imperil the region's tourism.

People in this eastern Utah town are challenging the federal government's plan for dealing with 11 million tons of uranium tailings. The pile of waste from the milling of uranium ore sits three miles out of town directly above an earthquake fault on the Colorado River flood plain.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission ruled last July that the tailings at an old Atlas Corp. mill can be covered up where they sit with no significant environmental harm. Two months later, the NRC gave in to pressure and promised to review the decision, the first time it had done so with such a finding. No deadlines or procedures were specified.

Hundreds of million of dollars have been spent to remove radioactive tailings from other former mill sites along rivers in the Rockies. Nevertheless, in years past, the decision to leave the pile in Moab probably would have gone unchallenged, said Grand County Council member Bill Hedden.

"There is a great reservoir of good will for Atlas. Before the uranium boom (of the early 1950s) there was only one paved street here and many people used outhouses," he said.

Within a couple years, Moab, a onetime Mormon fruit-growing town, surged from about 1,000 to 7,000 residents. Like the California Gold Rush of a century earlier, Moab's boom was punctuated by killings and claim jumping.

Now the battle lines are drawn between the NRC and an alliance of state and federal agencies drawn together by Hedden, a furniture maker. The superintendents of two nearby national parks, Arches and Canyonlands, helped bring aboard other officials downriver in Arizona, Nevada and California.

"This would have slid right by if we hadn't gotten called by Grand County and asked to stand with them on this," said Walt Dabney, superintendent of Canyonlands. The park is one of the main attractions for mountain bikers.

The tailings pile already is leaching heavy metals and radioactive material into the Colorado River. If it should slide into the river, Dabney fears it could devastate the tourism industry near Lake Powell, Lake Mead, Glen Canyon and the Grand Canyon.

After such a disaster, "nobody is going to believe you if you say there is no problem eating those fish," Dabney said.

Four endangered species live in the river and the Interior Department has warned it would hold the NRC responsible if the tailings were shown to have killed the fish.

Utah residents skeptical of government assurances point to recent reports of unannounced nuclear tests and experiments.

Some believe cancer rates are higher than they should be in Moab and Monticello, 39 miles to the south, because both towns were uranium mining and milling centers.

"The government told us that working at the mill won't hurt us. They lied to us from the very start," said Barbara Rasmussen, whose husband and son died of cancer.

ACLU: Merit testing denies girls fair share

WASHINGTON (AP) — Girls are being denied their fair share of National Merit Scholarships because the qualifying test is biased against them, the American Civil Liberties Union charged in a complaint filed Tuesday with the Education Department.

The complaint was filed by the ACLU's Women's Rights Project on behalf of the National Center for Fair and Open Testing. The center, known as FairTest, is a Cambridge, Mass.-based organization that is critical of standardized testing.

It charges the Educational Testing Service and the College Entrance Examination Board with violating U.S. education law that bars recipients of federal funds from discriminating on the basis of sex. The College Board sponsors the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test-National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test and ETS administers it.

National Merit semi-finalists are chosen on the basis of the PSAT-NMSQT exam. Other factors, including the Scholastic Aptitude Test, high school record and letters of recommendation, are used to pick the scholarship winners.

Surveys done by FairTest show that boys account for about 60 percent of the National Merit Scholarship semi-finalists and winners.

In 1992-93, for example, 35.3 percent of the semifinalists were girls and 60.8 percent were boys, the group said. It used names to determine gender and could not determine whether the other winners were boys or girls.

In 1990-91, the latest year made available for actual winners, 39 percent of those receiving scholarships were female and 61 percent were male.

The College Board said it had not seen the complaint and could not comment on its specifics. But it said that on the basis of FairTest's news release it considered the charges without merit.

"As a membership organization of almost 3,000 high schools and colleges, we would not be allowed to sponsor or use something that was biased. ... "Differential performance is caused by what students bring to the test, not the test," the College Board said in a statement.

ETS referred callers to the College Board statement.

Cinthia Schuman, FairTest's executive director, said federal intervention was needed to ensure that girls have an equal opportunity to get National Merit Scholarships.

Schuman said boys traditionally do better on multiple-choice exams, while girls traditionally do better on exams that have open-ended questions and essays.

"We are saying the test is flawed," Schuman said. "Females do better in both high school and college yet receive lower test scores because of bias in the exam."

FairTest said the complaint was targeted at the College Board and ETS because they receive federal funds. The National Merit Scholarship Corp., which distributes the scholarships, was not named in the complaint.

310 General Help Wanted

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?
Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?
Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?
An initial $100 refundable deposit is required.
