Reagan pushes conciliatory budget

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — President Reagan today sent Congress a $1.09 trillion conciliatory, election-year budget combining his most restrained military request ever with proposals for more spending on education, science and the fight against AIDS.

"In presenting this budget, I am keeping my end of the bargain. I call upon Congress to uphold its end," Reagan said in the eighth, and for practical purposes, final budget of his presidency.

Unlike earlier Reagan budgets, the new document embodies an agreement on spending priorities already reached with Congress.

Reagan's 1989 budget calls for reducing the federal deficit from $150.2 billion last year and the $146.7 billion estimated for 1988 to $129.5 billion in the fiscal year that begins next Oct. 1.

That's even below the target of $136 billion called for in the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law. When Reagan took office in 1981 with a promise to balance the budget within three years the annual deficit stood at $78 billion.

At a White House photo session with congressional leaders, Reagan extolled the budget for not increasing taxes while increasing spending to battle illicit drugs and AIDS.

With a pile of blue budget documents stacked before him on the table, Reagan said he hoped the White House and Congress "can work together through this budget process this year, sticking to our agreement and completing the appropriation process before the end of this fiscal year."

In today's budget message, Reagan conceded the new document "does not fully reflect my priorities, nor, presumably, those of any particular member of Congress."

But, citing "give and take on all sides," Reagan told Congress: "The goal of deficit reduction through spending reduction must be paramount."

The two-year budget pact struck with Congress last November, in the wake of the stock market collapse, sets limits for both military increases and social program cuts and restricts new taxes to the $14 billion already passed for 1989 by Congress.

Because of this prior agreement, Reagan's fiscal 1989 budget was expected to generate few fireworks on arrival at Capitol Hill. And budget leaders played down prospects of a major election-year budget fracas.

The new Reagan budget contends that the "economy has shown few signs of serious damage" from last October's stock market plunge, and that the recent boom in exports holds out the promise of continued economic expansion.

In fact, the new Reagan budget assumes a declining rate of inflation, falling interest rates and economic growth of 2.4 percent this year and 3.5 percent next year. This projection is more optimistic than forecasts by congressional budget analysts and private forecasters but closer to their predictions than in previous years.

However, if growth is even one percentage point less than Reagan's forecast, the deficit would rise an additional $6.3 billion in 1989 and $18 billion in 1990, the budget report conceded.

Reagan's new budget proposed military spending authority of $299.5 billion in fiscal 1989 and actual outlays for the year of $294 billion — up from $291.4 billion in 1988 in budget authority and $285.4 billion in outlays.

Rucker sworn in as judge

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Texas Supreme Court Justice Barbara Culver preformed the swearing in honors as more than 100 people packed 238th District Judge Vann Culp's courtroom today to see native Midlander Dean Rucker evolve from attorney to district court judge.

Judge Rucker, 32, was appointed by Gov. Bill Clements to replace former 318th District Judge Barbara Culver, who was appointed to the state's highest bench in January.

Rucker said Wednesday he was to don his new black robe shortly after the ceremony and begin hearing cases from the 318th bench, which already bears his nameplate.

Officials such as State Rep. Tom Craddick, 142nd District Judge Pat Baskin, Midland County Bar Association president Daryl Smith and Culp lauded the new judge, who Baskin described as possessing "patience, integrity, compassion and a great sense of justice."

"This is like introducing my best friend. The best way to describe Dean is that he is a Midlander," Ms. Culver said. "This is the Republican party's loss and the judiciary's gain."

Rucker, who described himself after the ceremony as a "little bit nervous," said he would act within his office according to some old advice given to him by his longtime family friend, Culp.

"...He told me to use common sense, compassion and always act within the best interests of the children," said Rucker, whose new office deals primarily with family law.

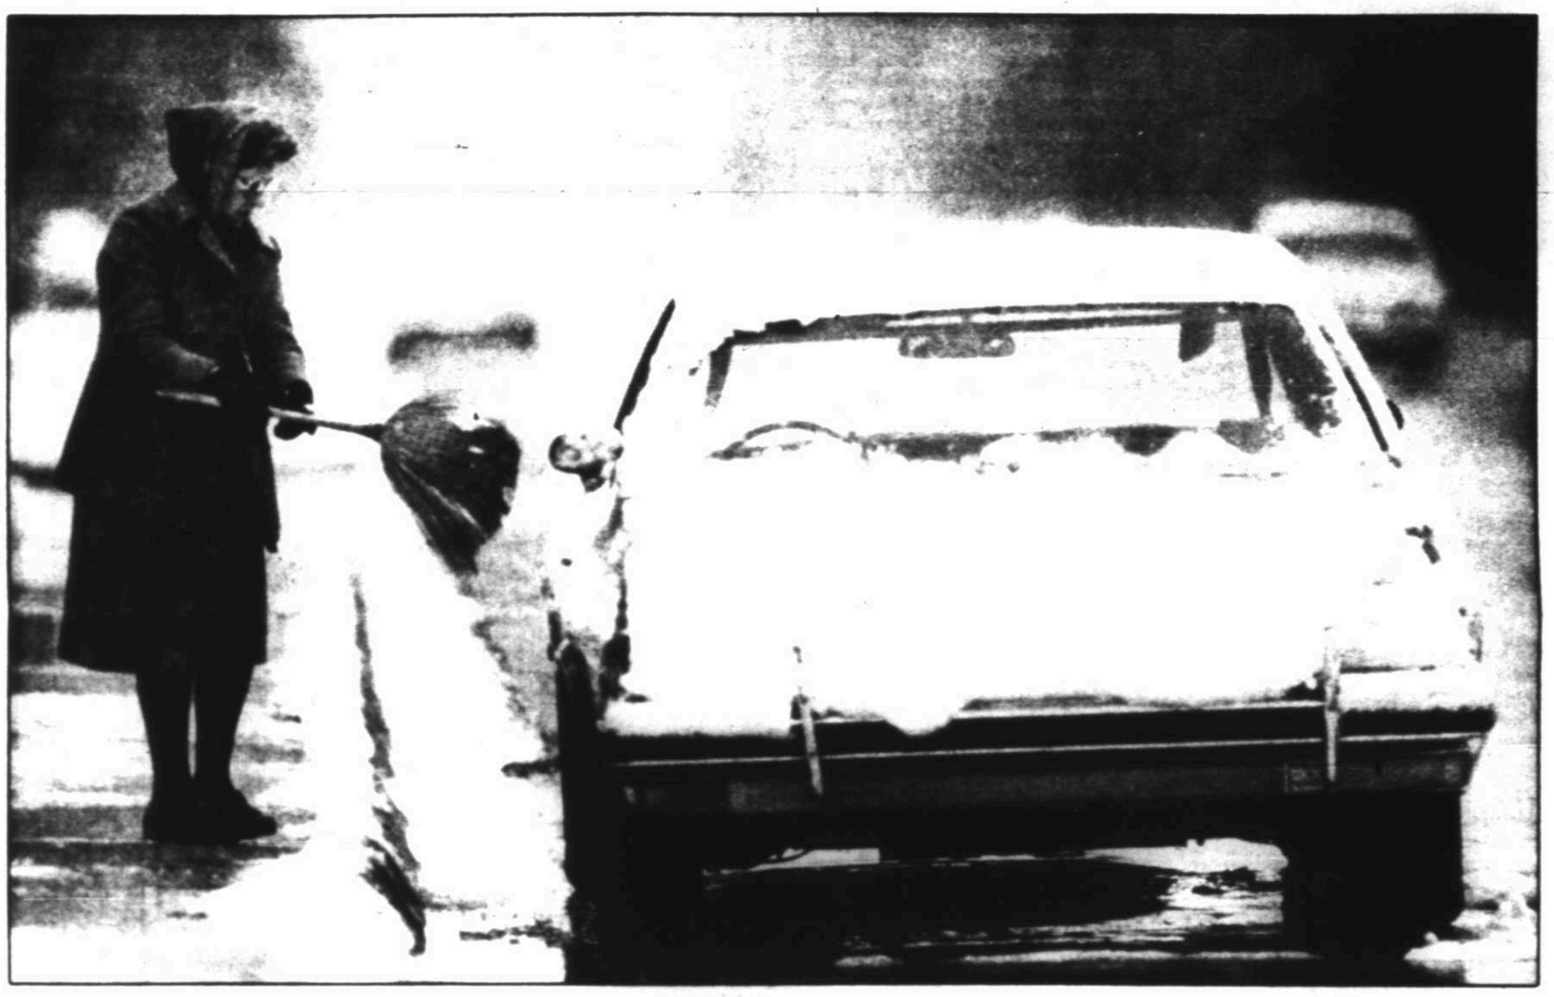

On Wednesday, Rucker put the final touches on his exit from the law practice he's shared the past eight years with his father, Hal Rucker.

The new judge said he was among some 10 Midlanders who interviewed with appointments officials from Gov. Bill Clements' office in late January.

Because his predecessor resigned her post one day after the Jan. 6 filing deadline for the March Super Tuesday primary, Rucker will not be eligible to run for re-election in that race.

However, the new judge will have to run in the November general election and win to maintain the post he was sworn into today, he said.

Slush may be blessing in disguise

The little more than an inch of wet, slushy snow that fell this morning apparently didn't send Midland drivers skidding across streets and may be a blessing in disguise for firefighters, authorities said today.

"This moisture is really going to help us out," said Midland Fire Marshal Jerry Petree. "We only had two grass fires yesterday (Wednesday), and now we don't expect much."

Midland police reported no major accidents this morning, according to a traffic officer.

"We haven't had hardly anything," said Officer Gary Lane. "It isn't slick out there, and there isn't any ice. It's just slushy."

The Department of Public Safety reported two accidents between midnight and 8 a.m. in the area. Both were "fender benders," according to a dispatcher.

At Midland International Airport, two morning flights were delayed up to 30 minutes because of de-icing procedures, according to Marcy Blauvelt, director of administrative services.

Policeman shoots man who aimed gun at partner

DALLAS (AP) — A man who pointed a pistol at a police officer was fatally shot by the officer's partner, investigators say.

The shooting victim was a black man in his 40s, the Dallas County medical examiner's office said following the shooting Wednesday night. The victim's name was not immediately released.

The fatal shooting was the third involving Dallas police in 1988. In the other two incidents, two Dallas officers were shot to death in a period of nine days.

Homicide Lt. Ron Waldrop identified the officer who shot the man as Kenneth Wolfe, 27. They identified his partner as Steven Johnson, 27, who has been with the force three years.

Waldrop said early today police are still investigating the shooting. The two officers said the shooting occurred after the victim approached them with a gun in a residential area of north Dallas, he said.

Initital reports indicated the shooting followed a traffic stop, but Waldrop said the two officers had been returning to patrol after a call when they noticed a "suspicious" vehicle.

The car turned onto a side street and turned into the driveway of a darkened house, the officers told investigators.

One of three occupants of the car got out and walked to the house's porch, said the officers, who parked nearby and watched.

"He didn't knock or go all the way to the door," Waldrop said the officers told investigators.

The man then approached the squad car, Waldrop said. The officers told investigators they got out of their car and ordered the man to put his hands on the squad car.

The fatal shooting was the third involving Dallas police in 1988. In the other two incidents, two Dallas officers were shot to death in nine days.

The man reached for his waistband, produced a gun and pointed it at Johnson, the officers told investigators.

Wolfe shot twice, hitting the man in the upper chest and head, Waldrop said. The man was pronounced dead at Baylor University Medical Center, Waldrop said.

The officers took the other two men, who had remained in the car, into custody. They were being held early today for questioning, Waldrop said.

People who lived nearby told police that the men did not live in the neighborhood.

A 9 mm semi-automatic pistol was recovered about 30 feet from a driveway where the car was parked. Investigators said the gun was loaded and its safety was disengaged.

A transient was killed by police Jan. 23 after he shot and killed officer John Chase in a downtown parking lot. The transient, who had been treated for mental disorders, was shot to death moments later by off-duty officers working nearby as security guards.

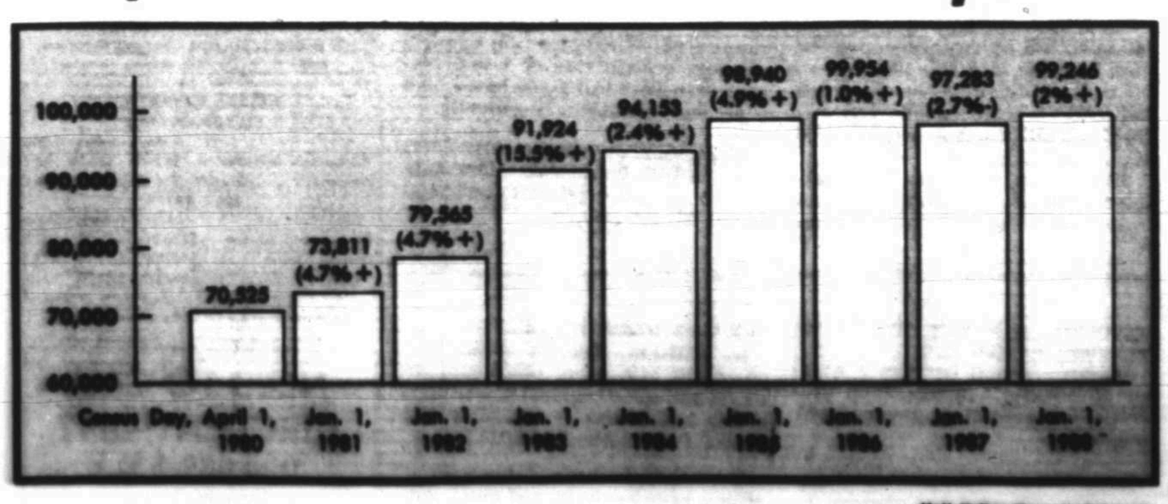

On Jan. 14, off-duty police Cpl. James Joe shot one of two burglary suspects in a northeast Dallas apartment complex parking lot. Joe was killed in a shootout with the suspects.

The Chase shooting triggered widespread controversy after Police Chief Billy Prince said witnesses told authorities that some people waiting nearby for a bus encouraged the transient to shoot the officer.

Prince also blamed some members of the Dallas City Council for creating an anti-police atmosphere.

The chief also ordered that officers patrol in pairs after the Chase shooting, an order that remained in effect at the time of Wednesday night's shooting.

Population estimates place city near magic 100,000

Matt Hatton/Reporter-Telegram

City estimates show that Midland's population has increased two percent from the 1987 estimate of 97,283 to the Jan. 1, 1988 projection of 99,246. Since 1980, the city's population has increased 40.7 percent, city planners said.

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Midland's estimated population almost has reached a critical 100,000 mark that may enable the city to attract more industries and extend its authority over developments outside of metropolitan boundaries, said senior planner Becky Hamm this week.

The Midland Planning and Development Department this week released its population estimate of 99,246 as of Jan. 1 this year.

The population has increased two percent over the Jan. 1, 1987 projection of 97,283, Ms. Hamm said.

The planning department based it's population estimate on 39,559 housing units with an average of 2.6 people per household.

Also, after consulting city building permit records, utilities records, local real estate agents and apartment complex owners, a 9.4 percent vacancy rate or 3,726 empty houses and apartments were estimated. A 1 percent margin of error was added in for a total 10.4 percent vacancy rate, Ms. Hamm said.

A 100,000 population mark is important because it is viewed as a cut-off point by some industries looking to locate in a city, Ms. Hamm said.

"Communities of 100,000 people may have more of an opportunity to diversify," she said.

Also if the city can substantiate that 100,000 people or more are living in Midland by the time the U.S. Census Bureau's house-to-house survey is conducted in 1990, Midland could extend it's extra-territorial jurisdiction outside of city limits from 3¼ miles to 5 miles, Ms. Hamm said.

Assistant Planning Director Dave Thurbon explained that extra territorial jurisdiction enables the city to insure a minimum standard of housing development outside of city limits.

With the city being able to require plats on developments outside of its boundaries, so-called "window-pane" areas could be eliminated, Thurbon said.

Windowpane areas are undeveloped neighborhoods surrounded by the city, but sometimes left unannexed as the city grows because the cost of laying water lines and paving streets is too high, he said.

"You want to make all the pieces of the puzzle fit," he said.

The cause of the two percent jump in population over last year is attributed to baby boomers having more babies, oil companies consolidating and moving offices to Midland and the economy stabilizing, the two planners said.

The Midland Independent School District's enrollment is up 1.5 percent over last year and the greatest increase is in primary grades indicating a second baby boom, Thurbon said.

Kennedy becomes Supreme Court's 104th justice

WASHINGTON (AP) — Anthony McLeod Kennedy joins the Supreme Court today as history's 104th justice, bringing a crucial tie-breaking vote to a court hampered by a vacancy the past eight months.

Kennedy, a 51-year-old federal appellate judge from Sacramento, Calif., was to be sworn in amid the pomp and circumstance of a Supreme Court ceremony.

He also was scheduled to take a separate oath of office at a later White House ceremony.

President Reagan's third choice for the job, Kennedy was confirmed by a 97-0 vote of the Senate 15 days ago — a tranquil conclusion to the political storm sparked by Justice Lewis F. Powell's retirement last June 26.

The Senate rejected the president's first choice, Robert H. Bork. A second nominee, Douglas H. Ginsburg, withdrew after admitting he had smoked marijuana while a law professor.

Kennedy, although a conservative for his 12 years on the federal bench, is considered more of a moderate than either Bork or Ginsburg.

Little is known about Kennedy's specific views on abortion regulation, affirmative action, church-state relations or the other politically sensitive issues on which the high court is closely divided.

He is the third Reagan appointee to join the court, following Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and Antonin Scalia.

Reagan also elevated William H. Rehnquist to the chief justice's post when Warren E. Burger retired in 1986.

A busy schedule awaits Kennedy. The court, returning from a four-week recess, convenes in an all-day conference behind closed doors Friday and returns to the bench Monday to begin three days of oral argument sessions.

One of the arguments focuses on whether private clubs may exclude women and racial minorities as members.

Kennedy was criticized during his Senate confirmation hearings for his past membership in such exclusive clubs.

The absence of a ninth justice for more than half the court's 1987-88 term has resulted in some significant deadlocks.

For example, the court split 4-4 in December when deciding whether a state may require some teen-agers seeking abortions to wait 24 hours after telling their parents or a judge about their decision.

The justices also split 4-4 last month over the validity of an affirmative action program designed to promote more blacks and Hispanics in the New York City Police Department.

Such votes automatically uphold the lower court's ruling but set no national precedent.

The addition of Kennedy reduces the court's average age from 68 to 66, and marks the first time in history the court has included three Catholics. Like Kennedy, Justices Scalia and William J. Brennan are Catholic.

The court also includes three Stanford University graduates and four Harvard law school grads.

Kennedy, who received his undergraduate degree from Stanford and his law degree from Harvard, joins fellow Stanford grads Rehnquist and O'Connor. The three other justices who have Harvard law degrees are Brennan, Scalia and Harry A. Blackmun.

'We didn't have any delays due to airport conditions," she said. "The operations personnel are here 24 hours, and they are out on the runways every hour or so when snow is expected."

"Today, it didn't start building up until about 4:30 a.m., and the runways were clear by 6 a.m."

Midland Independent School District classes today continued normally.

A specialist with the National Weather Service at the airport reported 1.3 inches of snow fell over the 24-hour period ending 8 a.m. this morning.

Specialist John Frazar said the weather service measured 0.14 inches of rain later in the morning in addition to the snow.

The service's overnight forecast calls for a less than 20 percent chance of rain or snow tonight and Friday, Frazar said.

The service is predicting a low in the mid-30s tonight and a high in the mid-40s Friday. Skies should be cloudy, and winds should blow out of the northeast at five to 15 mph, Frazar said.

The wet weather is the result of a cold front that moved into West Texas Wednesday and drew moist Gulf of Mexico air into the area.

While the service's extended forecast calls for warmer weather and partly cloudy skies Saturday and Sunday, Frazar said that estimation may be amended as another cold front moves into the area.

The second front currently sits over an area stretching from the Canadian border to North Dakota and dipping down into Northern California, Frazar said.

Midland wreckers reported mixed results from drivers going to work this morning.

"The ground's not really frozen over," observed Floyd Green, owner of East Highway 80 Wrecking, explaining the lack of morning calls for help.

Said Kitty Fontenot, part-owner of C&L Wrecking, "We're usually pretty busy with people sliding all over the place, but it hasn't happened yet."

But Jack Harvey, owner of BJ Wrecker Service, reported receiving 13 morning calls from "all over the city."

STATE

Foul weather reported from West Texas across the state into Southeast Texas will start clearing up from the west tonight.

Light snow fell across portions of the South Plains and Permian Basin and the eastern two-thirds of the state had low clouds, fog, drizzle, rain and scatered thunderstorms today.

A slow-moving front located from near Texarkana southwestward to San Antonio and Laredo was blamed for the bad weather.

The Texas Panhandle had clear skies and the rest of the state had mostly cloudy skies today. Skies were to begin clearing tonight from the west.

Forecasts called for mostly cloudy skies statewide through tonight. There is a chance of showers and thunderstorms across North Texas and South Texas through tonight.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 40s and 50s, ranging from the mid 20s in the Panhandle to the mid 60s in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

NATION

Rain dampened the Southwest today, while much of the nation enjoyed above-normal temperatures.

Scattered showers and a few thunderstorms extended from southwest Texas into northwest Louisiana late Wednesday night. Rain was falling elsewhere from eastern sections of Texas and Oklahoma across the lower Mississippi Valley.

Some parts of northeast Texas received over 2 inches of rain Wednesday. Six-tenths of an inch fell in 20 minutes at Waco.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours ending at 1 a.m. EST included three-quarters of an inch at Waco, two-thirds of an inch at Dallas Naval Air Station, and a half-inch at Longview, Texas, and Little Rock Air Force Base, Ark.

Unknown group claims kidnapping

■ Related story — 4D

TYRE, Lebanon (AP) — A caller claiming to represent a previously unknown group, the Islamic Revolutionary Brigades, today claimed responsibility for kidnapping a U.S. Marine officer and accused him of being a CIA agent.

The Arabic-speaking man, in a telephone call to a Western news agency, also said Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins had been taken out of Beirut "after he was brought out from the south."

U.N. officials and Shiite Moslem militiamen staged a massive search throughout south Lebanon for Higgins and virtually sealed off the area around Tyre, 50 miles south of Beirut.

Higgins, chief of an observer force attached to the U.N. peacekeeping force in Lebanon, was kidnapped Wednesday near Tyre.

Abdel Majid Saleh, a political leader of Justice Minister Nabih Berri's Shiite Amal militia, said he met with Higgins in Tyre on Wednesday before the kidnapping. The two men talked about efforts to free foreign hostages, among other topics, Saleh told reporters.

The caller said: "William Higgins has joined the hostages. He will only come out after he is tried on grounds that he is one of the directors of the CIA in south Lebanon.

"Higgins is now out of Beirut after he was brought out from the south," the caller concluded.

The caller said a written statement and a photograph of the captive will be issued soon. Then he hung up.

There was no way immediately to authenticate the claim.

U.N. helicopters took off at dawn to join the search for Higgins. Troops of the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon, joined Amal militiamen in the search.

"We hope the kidnappers will have no chance of slipping out with their captive. That's why all exits have been blocked," an Amal spokesman said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Heavy rain hampered the search, however, and the helicopters were later grounded by the downpour.

UNIFIL spokesman Timur Goksel said the search launched Wednesday continued through the night with U.N. troops operating in their operational zone and Amal active in non-U.N. sectors.

He said Amal, the dominant force in the region, "has vowed to carry on the search until Higgins is found."

Higgins, a native of Danville, Ky., was the second American military officer ever abducted in Lebanon. The first, Col. Robert Morgan, was kidnapped by Palestinian guerrillas in 1974 as he was driving on Beirut's airport highway and freed later that year.

U.N. Undersecretary-General Marrack Goulding arrived in Beirut from Damascus, Syria, after Higgins' kidnapping and held emergency meetings with President Amin Gemayel and acting Prime Minister Salim Hoss.

Goulding told reporters he conveyed U.N. Secertary-General Perez de Cuellar's concern for the kidnapped Marine and stressed: "I'm urging all sides to act quickly for his early release."

Plainclothes militia security men in cars blocked roads along the Litani River from the Mediterranean coast 25 miles inland to the slopes of Mount Hermon. Uniformed militiamen armed with submachine guns and rocket-propelled grenade launchers patrolled a 12½-mile stretch of the coast from the Qassmieh Bridge north of Tyre to the scene of the abduction.

"Our men are searching villages in a 300-square-mile area north, east and south of Tyre," said Daoud Daoud, Amal's military commander in south Lebanon. "U.N. troops are blocking the southern exits."

Daoud met today with UNIFIL commanders at the Lebanese Army's Tyre barracks to coordinate the search. He told The Associated Press as he went into the meeting, "We're capable of confronting the people who've carried out the abduction if need be. But I hope a quick, happy ending will be accomplished."

He said the kidnapping was "aimed at sabotaging security in south Lebanon, getting a ransom and destroying Amal's public image."

Officials on Wednesday said two gunmen in a brown Volvo car seized Higgins after blocking the coastal highway three miles south of Tyre. He was driving back to UNIFIL headquarters in Naqoura after meeting Amal officials.

Higgins has commanded the 76-member Observer Group, Lebanon, since Jan. 8. The group, made up of officers from 16 countries, is attached to the 5,800-man, nine-nation UNIFIL, deployed in south Lebanon since 1978 to police the border with Israel.

UNIFIL operates in predominantly Shiite areas whose population frequently have been caught in the cross fire between Israeli troops on one hand and Palestinian guerrillas and Iranian-backed Shiite extremists on the other.

Higgins was the third U.N. official to be kidnapped in south Lebanon in two weeks and became the 25th foreigner become a hostage in Lebanon. The kidnapped include nine Americans.

Security sources said French specialists were dispatched to Tyre from UNIFIL headquarters to interrogate an unidentified Lebanese bus driver who claimed he witnessed the abduction.

"The French have managed to draw a face sketch of the gunman the eyewitness says he saw pointing a pistol at Higgins' head as he forced him into the kidnappers' car," said one source, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The foreign hostage held longest in Lebanon is Terry A. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press. Anderson was abducted March 16, 1985 in Beirut.

In addition to the Americans, the foreigners held in Lebanon are four Frenchmen, three Britons, two West Germans, an Italian, an Irishman, an Indian, a Swede, a Norwegian and two unidentified men.

Babbitt drops out; Du Pont may follow

Associated Press

Democrat Bruce Babbitt dropped out of the presidential race today, declaring "I am free" but also calling himself "honored beyond measure" to have had the chance to run. Most of the surviving contenders marched south for a campaign blitz leading up to Super Tuesday primaries, but Republican Pete du Pont apparently also was about to withdraw.

Meanwhile, Republican party regulars in Nevada were bracing for Pat Robertson's "invisible army" as they geared up for a non-binding straw poll tonight. And Democrats were set for back-to-back debates, starting tonight in Texas, the biggest Super Tuesday state.

Babbitt, the former Arizona governor, said he would not endorse another candidate for now.

Appearing at a news conference in Washington, Babbitt said he was reminded of the biblical saying, "The truth shall set you free." In his case, he said, the truth — his poor showings in Iowa and New Hampshire — "came a lot sooner than I expected."

Still, he said, "Today I am free."

"Although I am withdrawing from this race, I am not withdrawing from the cause that brought me to it," he said. "I don't know why we fared no better; I'll leave that for others to ponder. But I am very proud of what we did achieve and I am honored beyond measure by the opportunity I was granted to take part in this campaign."

Babbitt, who formally announced his candidacy on March 10, 1987, failed to set the electorate afire with his call for a national sales tax to combat the federal deficit, but received good press reviews for his candor and wry humor.

He said today a friend had told him, "Bruce, you fought a good fight. You were in it right up to the beginning."

Gary Hart, who finished last among Democrats in New Hampshire, headed home to Denver, where he said his campaign would continue but not for reasons of "ego and ambition."

Financially strapped Paul Simon, who placed second in Iowa and third in New Hampshire, backed off his declaration that he must win contests next week in South Dakota or Minnesota to stay in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

He told reporters at a series of fundraisers late Wednesday, "We're now hedging on that because of the reaction we've been getting from around the country."

Another candidate for withdrawal was the patrician Pierre S. du Pont IV, an heir to a chemical-company fortune who prefers to be known as just plain Pete. The former Delaware governor, who made poor showings in the early contests, called a news conference this afternoon in Wilmington, and a campaign source indicated it was the end of the road.

Du Pont entered the Republican race on Sept. 16, 1986, and, along with Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, sought to present himself as the conservative alternative to front-runners Bob Dole and George Bush.

Bush, who was campaigning in Missouri today, brushed aside complaints from Dole that he had misrepresented the Kansas senator's positions on taxes, an oil-import fee and arms control in a flood of commercials just before Tuesday's New Hampshire primary.

"I'm not going to dwell on it," the vice president said. "I don't want to be drawn into something like that. Keep it on a high plane."

Dole, who beat Bush in Iowa and had hoped to deliver the knockout punch in New Hampshire, promised to hit back if attacked again. Which he was — by Rep. Jack Kemp, campaigning in Minnesota, who hit Dole's record on taxes and Social Security.

The Democrats' New Hampshire victor, Michael Dukakis, hotfooted it South and took quick aim at Tennessean Albert Gore, who has hinged his campaign on a strong showing on March 8, when all the Southern states but one hold primaries or caucuses.

"There's a mythology about the South as if it's some kind of foreign country. It's nonsense," said Dukakis, who picked up endorsements Wednesday from former Kentucky Gov. Martha Layne Collins and former New Orleans Mayor Dutch Morial.

Told that Gore had said his opponents were alienated from the voters, the Massachusetts governor retorted: "Mr. Gore left Iowa, virtually left New Hampshire ... I don't know who's alienated."

Rep. Richard Gephardt, who finished second in New Hampshire, was campaigning in South Dakota, which holds a "beauty contest" primary on Tuesday in which voters state a preference that does not commit convention delegates.

Gephardt strategists said he wanted to head into Super Tuesday with a recent win under his belt. The Missouri congressman also was campaigning in Wyoming, which holds caucuses March 5 with 13 delegates at stake.

Jesse Jackson, who made respectable showings in Iowa and New Hampshire, was back in the South on a swing through Florida, Texas and Alabama. In Mobile, he stood with paper workers locked out in a contract dispute, sounding his campaign call for economic justice.

RUCKER

He has not heard of any opposition, he said.

Rucker said in an interview Wednesday the fact he was primarily a family law attorney may have helped him get the state's nod. The 318th court handles cases of that nature such as divorce, child custody and the like.

Cases involving juveniles charged with breaking the law are under the jurisdiction of County Court-at-Law Judge Willie DuBose.

Philosophically, Rucker said the 318th Court would remain the same as it was under Ms. Culver.

"But I'm cast in a completely different role now. It'll be a heck of a challenge," he said.

He sees the "greatest shift" in the fact that he will now need to reason both sides of a case instead of being an advocate for one side.

Most of the time, the 318th District judge renders an opinion in a case instead of a jury.

Every six weeks though, a jury sits in the 318th Court to give advisories on property settlement issues, he said.

Rucker has held the post of Midland County Republican Chairman since February 1986. An announcement as to his successor is in the offing, he said.

The new judge received a bachelor of science degree in business administration from Trinity University in San Antonio and a jurisprudence degree from St. Mary's University, also in San Antonio.

CITY

The school district saw enrollment jump about three percent in grades kindergarten to sixth from 10,941 in the 1986-87 school year to 11,330 so far in the 1987-88 school year, said Larry Lusby, director of the district's computer and special services.

However, in grades seventh through 12th the district saw about a two percent decrease from 7,654 students in 1986-87 to 7,455 students in 1987-88, Lusby said.

Overall enrollment increased from 18,595 in 1986-87 to 18,785 in 1987-88, Lusby said.

Since 1980, the only drop in population shown by city projections occurs between 1986 and 1987 when a 2.7 percent decrease was recorded, indicating a mass exodus expected from the oil bust has not occurred, Ms. Hamm said.

"People chose to stay and make the best of a bad situation," she said.

Also, while the city's figures are just estimates, Midland's population could be larger than Odessa's.

Odessa Planning and Inspection Director Judy Miller said estimates for her city's population in 1987 range from 94,700 based on a low to medium growth rate of 1 to 2 percent each year to 100,000 based on a 5 percent growth rate annually.

She said no population survey was made in 1986, but in 1985 Odessa conducted a house-to-house poll and found 101,458 people.

BUDGET

That increase, which doesn't even keep pace with last year's 4.4 percent increase in inflation, represents the smallest military spending increase ever sent to Congress by Reagan. It is likely to result in reductions in some of the military forces and weapons programs that have grown substantially since he became president.

"Anything less would jeopardize not only our security ... but would also dim the prospects for further negotiated agreements with our adversaries," Reagan said.

Reagan's budget recycles a number of favorite administration proposals for reducing government programs.

These include the abolition of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Economic Development Administration, Small Business Administration direct loans, urban development action grants and public subsidies for Amtrak rail passenger service and mass transit systems.

In addition, Reagan again proposed the sale naval petroleum reserves and some regional power-marketing authorities — including the Alaska Power Administration.

Even though these "privatization" efforts have never gained much support in Congress, Reagan expanded the concept this year by proposing, for the first time, the sale of waste treatment plants, mass transit projects and the Rural Telephone Bank.

Woman feared effect of order on 'obsessive' former co-worker

Hearst News Service

NATION

SUNNYVALE, Calif. — The intended target of a spurned computer engineer had a terrible foreboding of the massacre Tuesday that killed seven of her fellow workers and put her in the hospital.

Laura Black, 28, who had rejected the obsessive advances of Richard Wade Farley, had obtained a temporary restraining order Feb. 1 to prevent him from following her to her home, her aerobics work outs, her softball games and her night classes.

"I have been afraid of what this man might do to me if I file this action," she said in her request for the court order. "However, I am now at the end of my rope."

Police said Black was the apparent target but survived when the heavily armed computer programmer burst into a Silicon Valley defense plant and began shooting.

She and three others were injured. Two women and five men were shot dead, and dozens fled in terror. Those killed were identified by Sunnyvale Department of Public Safety as: Ron Doney, 36; Lawrence Kane, 46; Helen Lamparter, 49; Glenda Moritz, 27; Ron Reed, 26; Joe Silva, 43; Buddy Williams, 23.

After about 40 minutes of shooting and several hours of on-and-off phone talks with police, the 39 year-old Farley surrendered quietly in return for a sandwich, which he ate.

"He wanted to show the people who laughed at him," police said. "He didn't want to be considered a wimp."

Police said the gunman killed a man in the parking lot, then blew out the lock on the front door and murdered a man behind his desk. Another died on the landing between the first and second floors. He then fired through a door and killed another man. The fifth victim died in the hallway, as did the two women.

Farley also blew out computer monitors with shotgun blasts.

He encountered Black in a second-floor office, wounding her in the shoulder and spine. She fled through a side door, police said, and was reported in stable condition Wednesday, hospitalized with a shoulder wound and a collapsed lung.

Farley was fired 21 months ago as a software development engineer with ESL Corp. A subsidiary of TRW Inc., the company "develops special aerial reconnaissance systems," according to a corporate spokeswoman. Employees said little secret work is done in the building where the shootings took place.

Police said Farley began his shooting rampage with a rifle in one hand and a shotgun in the other, two pistols stuffed into his belt and his pockets bulging with ammunition.

Between 200 and 250 people were in the building at the time, employees estimated.

Terrified employees dived for cover and barricaded themselves in their offices as Farley searched for Black.

After the killings, Farley barricaded himself in a second-floor office. After a 5 1/2-hour siege during which he repeatedly threatened suicide, the gunman finally surrendered when police met his only demand: a ham and turkey sandwich and a Diet Pepsi from a nearby sandwich shop.

"He said he sat in the parking lot today and almost changed his mind, but then he decided he had to go through with it," said police Lt. Ruben Grijalva, who negotiated with Farley over the phone.

Police cordoned off the building, one of 15 in a complex occupied by ESL. Originally known as Electronics Systems Labs, it has a payroll of about 2,500 and ranks as one of Silicon Valley's largest defense contractors.

A motor home rented by Farley was found nearby. It contained rifles, ammunition and materials for firebombs, said police Lt. Tom Moore.

Edie S. Cartwright, ESL public relations manager from Los Angeles, said a consulting firm had been hired to counsel ESL employees traumatized by the shootings and siege.

77 seeking election to Mecham job

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — A Socialist and a saxophonist are among the dozens of Arizonans — 77 at last count — lining up for the chance to run against Gov. Evan Mecham in a May 17 recall election.

Only two, Democrat Carolyn Warner and former U.S. House minority leader John Rhodes, a Republican, are given any real chance by political observers of unseating the impeached GOP governor.

But some of the lesser-knowns still insist their candidacies are worthwhile.

Dave Colosimo of Phoenix, a former teacher and a saxophone player in local bands, said he is working full-time on the race.

"If I didn't think I could win I wouldn't run," Colosimo said. "If I can run a household with five children and a wife, then I think I'd be pretty able to balance the books when I got into the office."

However, Colosimo acknowledged his candidacy so far is a "one-man show." He has never sought public office before but said, "I was president of my senior class — that's a joke."

Meanwhile, the state Senate on Wednesday granted Mecham a one-week delay of his impeachment trial originally set to begin Monday, but defeated two motions for further delay offered by the embattled governor's attorney, Murray Miller.

The Senate rejected Miller's request that the trial be put off until criminal charges accusing Mecham of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan are tried. The lawyer had contended that an impeachment trial would prejudice the criminal trial jury.

Arizona Chief Justice Frank Gordon, who will preside at the impeachment trial, told the Senate a one-week delay would ultimately save time by allowing some issues to be settled beforehand.

If Mecham is convicted in his impeachment trial, lawmakers could vote to bar him from holding any future political office.

At this point, Mecham will automatically be placed on the recall ballot. All other would-be candidates in the winner-take-all vote must file at least 3,336 valid petition signatures of registered voters by March 18.

The secretary of state's office said 77 people had picked up packets to collect petition signatures by Wednesday. Wednesday was the first day for candidates to file petition signatures, but none did.

Chemical leak forces evacuation

TIFFIN, Ohio (AP) — A Sun Co. pipeline ruptured and leaked an estimated 2,000 gallons of a toxic chemical Wednesday, forcing the evacuation of up to 100 people and threatening water supplies for some 22,000, authorities said.

The flammable toluene flowed into the Sandusky River, prompting the Ohio Environmental Protection Agency to warn the city of Fremont 20 miles downstream to stop drawing water from the river, EPA spokesman Allan Franks said.

The leak occurred in a rural area four to five miles northeast of here, said Sgt. Connie Karcher of the Seneca County Sheriff's Department, which put the number of people evacuated from their homes at 75 to 100.

Fremont began filling its reserve tanks night for its 22,000 residential customers, said Gary Rathfelder, assistant superintendent of the city's water plant. The tanks hold about 4 million gallons, about one day's supply of water.

Rathfelder said the city will close its water intakes just before the spill reaches the city.

Gramm recommended

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Agriculture Committee voted unanimously Wednesday to recommend the confirmation of Wendy Lee Gramm as chairwoman of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the committee, joined the 10-0 vote even though he had earlier expressed concerns about Ms. Gramm's lack of specific experience in the futures markets.

Ms. Gramm, 43, currently holds a senior post in the Office of Management and Budget. At a confirmation Feb. 9, she argued that her experience at OMB, previous work at the Federal Trade Commission and a doctorate in economics qualified her to head the CFTC.

Patrick Collins, an aide to Leahy, said Ms. Gramm's testimony had allayed most of the senator's concerns.

Boy sets himself afire

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — A 12-year-old boy doused himself with rubbing alcohol and set himself on fire imitating a scene he had seen in a rock music video, authorities said.

Bryan Tucker was in fair condition today at Memorial Hospital with second-degree burns on his legs, abdomen and chest.

The boy, a fan of heavy-metal music who takes electric guitar lessons and wears an earring in the shape of a cross, said he was inspired by a member of the band Motley Crue performing in a television video.

"He just lit his legs on fire, and nothing happened to him," the sixth-grader said.

Fire Inspector Tom Wolf said the boy poured isopropyl alcohol over his body and set it afire with a match.

"He dropped to the ground and rolled around," Wolf said, but the fire would not go out.

The youth ran to the bathroom and got in the tub, which was filled with water from a bath he had taken earlier.

Young patient released

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — A 9-year-old boy who survived almost 40 minutes under water in an ice-covered pond walked out of the hospital Wednesday, and doctors said he had made almost a complete recovery from his near-drowning five weeks earlier.

Kendall Smith was in a coma for two weeks after he fell through the ice Jan. 12 near his Dillon home, in northeastern South Carolina. But doctors at the Medical University of South Carolina Hospital said he progressed rapidly once he recovered consciousness.

"We're all humbled as caretakers to see what many of us would consider, if not miraculous, a near-miraculous recovery," said Dr. Fred Tecklenburg, one of Kendall's attending physicians.

"I thank God for giving everyone the knowledge and skills to do what they've done for my child. It's a miracle," said the boy's mother, Mary.

Kendall received parting gifts of a new electronic musical keyboard and a bicyle. He and family members met with reporters prior to his release.

Resniks settle

ENCINITAS, Calif. (AP) — The parents of Challenger astronaut Judith Resnik said they have reached a multimillion-dollar settlement with the manufacturer of the shuttle's rocket booster over their daughter's death.

The settlement, completed Tuesday, concluded a year of negotiations between Morton-Thiokol Inc. and Marvin and Betty Resnik.

Resnik placed the mount at between $2 million and $3.5 million, the range of settlements received by other families of the seven-member crew killed in the Jan. 28, 1986 Challenger disaster.

The shuttle exploded 73 seconds after liftoff when a joint in its right-side booster leaked flame and ignited the shuttle's giant fuel tank.

The settlement leaves one claim pending against Morton-Thiokol, from the family of Challenger co-pilot Michael J. Smith, Resnik said.

Morton Thiokol spokesmen did not return a telephone call for comment Wednesday.

Senate approval anticipated for immigration revision

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Senate approval appears likely for revision of a 1965 immigration law that would end the right for married brothers and sisters of U.S. citizens to come into this country to stay.

Other family members, including unmarried brothers and sisters, would continue to receive preferential treatment when applying for entry visas under a bill co-sponsored by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., chairman of the Judiciary Committee's panel on immigration, and Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., the subcommittee's ranking minority member.

Simpson said that 90 percent of all immigrants come to the United States because they have a family connection here while only 10 percent are invited in because they possess skills needed by employers or the federal government.

Under the current law, no country has a quota, but an annual ceiling of 20,000 immigrants per year is enforced under the system which places high priority on family reunification.

The proposed revisions, if adopted, would add approximately 80,000 to the annual flow of immigrants, now at 510,000 excluding refugees.

The bill, scheduled to be considered Tuesday by the Judiciary Committee, is the result of a compromise between Kennedy and Simpson and is likely to be approved by the committee and sent to the full Senate, congressional sources said. Companion legislation has been introduced in the House, but final action may not be possible in this shortened election year.

The proposed legislation would rewrite the 1965 law governing legal immigration to give preference points to those with certain skills or training and a knowledge of the English language.

Kennedy wants to admit more people from European nations that he says are "shortchanged by the current law."

Earlier sources of immigration — Ireland, Italy, other Western European nations and Canada — are not sending many people to join family members here because their immediate relatives are older.

"By redressing some of the imbalances in immigration which have developed in recent years, we will open our doors again to those who no longer have immediate family ties in the United States and are, therefore, unable to use the annual ceiling of visas theoretically available for their country," Kennedy said in introducing the bill.

In recent years, most of the immigrants have been from Asia and Latin America, who are bringing family members to join them in the United States.

Simpson wanted to eliminate the current preference that extends to nieces and nephews as well as brothers and sisters of U.S. citizens. He agreed, however, to drop only the category for married brothers and sisters, who presumably have established their own families in their native countries.

Simpson said the proposed changes in the law follow closely the recommendations made in 1981 by the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy.

"The commission reaffirmed the importance to the United States of additional 'new seed' or 'classic' immigrants who come to work, save and invest, and recommended the creation of an immigration channel for persons who are not able to enter the United States on the basis of family connection," Simpson said.

Baby snatchings stun small communities

By THOMAS GINSBERG

BALTIMORE (AP) — Joan Thompson knew her boyfriend wanted a baby. But infertile and ineligible for adoption, she obtained a child the only way she thought possible. She stole it.

The abduction was the first of four such cases in a 14-month period in the mid-Atlantic region that stunned local communities, frustrated police and revealed hospitals' inability to guarantee patients' security.

"There have been 12 cases in the United States since 1960 which have basically the same facts over and over again," said Daniel Goldstein, Ms. Thompson's lawyer. "The significance of these cases is that they have almost lock-step similarity, (which) suggests that this is a mental health problem, not a criminal problem."

Psychiatrists said most babies are stolen by emotionally unstable women — not criminals or cult followers — who are strangers to the parents.

A few women take infants after suffering a distressful miscarriage, but most have been unable to bear children for years. In many cases the women fake pregnancy, then claim to give birth about a week to 10 days before abducting a baby wherever they can find one.

"People lose perspective, they don't imagine how the parents would feel. They shut that out," said Dr. Robert L. Sadoff, a forensic psychiatrist at the University of Pennsylvania who testified at Ms. Thompson's trial.

Sadoff said most women in such cases would be deemed sane in court, but their desire to get a child crosses into obsession.

"They might be helped if they can get into therapy, or talk to someone about it. But these women usually don't have anyone to talk to," he said.

THOUGH NO statistics exist for the crime, child abuse experts doubt baby abductions are increasing. Five snatchings in the New York area in 1985 were considered "copy-cat" crimes by police, and psychiatrists attribute last year's mid-Atlantic cases to women mimicking each other.

In each local case, police said the women simply wanted a child.

— Ms. Thompson, 45, from Ellicott City, Md., knew her boyfriend wanted a baby. But the mother of five had a hysterectomy in 1978 and failed in 1986 to get a child by private adoption, according to court testimony. Her daughter refused her mother's request to steal a child.

In desperation, Ms. Thompson pretended she was pregnant. On Nov. 7, 1986, she dressed up as a nurse and walked into a room at Grandview Hospital in Sellersville, Pa. She told Barbara Worthington her 1-day-old son, Phillip, needed an examination. She took the infant and walked out of the hospital unnoticed. Police tracked her down one week later on a tip from her daughter.

Ms. Thompson was convicted April 15 and sentenced to 18 years in prison. Her daughter collected $42,000 in reward money.

"We're going to tell (Phillip) all about it," said Barbara Worthington. She and her husband have sold their movie and book story rights to a New York agent.

— Last June 11, Linda Faye Stancil, 34, who had suffered several miscarriages, went to Prince George's Hospital Center in Cheverly, Md., to apply for a job. Police said she somehow entered the pediatrics ward and saw 20-day-old Jeremiah Robert Thate alone in a room, where he was being treated for respiratory problems. The baby's parents, Robert and Theresa, were getting a snack. Ms. Stancil allegedly cut the baby's intravenous tube, put him in Mrs. Thate's gym bag and walked out, police said.

Four months later, police following up tips found Ms. Stancil with the baby in an apartment she shared with her mother.

MS. STANCIL faces abduction charges. The Thates vowed to sue the hospital for negligence but settled for an undisclosed sum before filing a lawsuit, their lawyer said.

— Another baby-snatching occurred a week later. Dorothy Jean Brown, 44, of Riesterstown, Md., a mother of a teen-age son, apparently was unable to bear children after a miscarriage in 1984. But her boyfriend, Anthony Gilmore Jr., wanted a child, so Mrs. Brown faked a pregnancy and claimed to give birth in mid-June, police said.

On June 18, she allegedly took 2-day-old Kendol Kernes from a basinet in his mother's room at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore. Four months later, on an anonymous tip police questioned Mrs. Brown and asked her to submit to testing. Instead, she fled to Philadelphia where she was caught the next day with the infant.

She pleaded innocent last week to kidnapping charges. Gilmore was charged as an accessory.

— Joyce Lynch, 34, of Houston, Del., a mother of two teen-agers who had undergone a hysterectomy in 1978, surprised her family last summer by saying she was pregnant. She and new husband Richard bought baby clothes and furniture, then claimed she gave birth at home with a midwife a week before Christmas, police said.

Late on Dec. 23, the Lynches allegedly drove to the home of Joseph Jr. and Beverly Gibson, shot the couple to death and took 9-day-old son Matthew Gibson. Investigators two weeks later traced telephone calls to the Gibsons from the Lynch home, where police found Matthew and some guns.

The Lynches face murder and abduction charges.

THE THREE hospitals stepped up security after the kidnappings by sealing exits, issuing new identification cards, training staff and counseling patients on safety.

"If the mother doesn't give the baby to some stranger, and the staff doesn't (let strangers into the ward), then you don't have baby kidnappings," said Russell Colling, an independent hospital security consultant from Denver.

Because police depend on tips from strangers and neighbors, they are "severely handicapped when it comes to these kinds of cases," said Bruce Gentile, a Prince George's County police spokesman.

Investigators routinely trace telephone records and press witnesses for physical descriptions of suspects. Prince George's police even questioned women who had recently miscarried at local hospitals.

Bush's N.H. win giving momentum

Vice President George Bush, whose political fortunes had taken a tumble a week ago when he finished third in Iowa's Republican polling, reclaimed his position as the GOP front-runner in this year's presidential election with a win in the politically respected New Hampshire primaries. In doing that, while Sen. Bob Dole finished second after having stolen the show in Iowa, Bush should have quieted those who had begun to say that he cannot win the confidence of the nation's voters.

The outcome of the New Hampshire primaries has come to be recognized as an indicator of what is to transpire in presidential election years. If one attaches a great deal of importance to such weathervanes, then it follows that Bush, on the Republican side, and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis will be the nominees this year.

But political indicators — like exit polls — are not infallible, particularly at this early stage of the game. Events can occur that can vastly affect a candidate's chances. So there should be understandable caution on the part of commentators and prognosticators to venture a prediction on what will be the story when the conventions are held.

No doubt Bush has turned the momentum in the Republican campaign his way and should be able to turn the New Hampshire victory into a plus that will carryover to the other primaries leading up to the much-heralded Super Tuesday elections. That could well be the breaking point for candidacies.

Bush, who lived in Midland in the 1950s, has been dogged in recent years by an unappealing and, we think, uncharacteristic "image" of being unable to establish forceful leadership. That's unfair. He has wide-ranging political and governmental experience. But in today's hard-selling public relations market, even politicians must be so much "soap" and so much "sex." If not, the promoters appear to be telling us, those candidates won't sell.

Perhaps so. But perhaps not. And perhaps New Hampshire voters can be wrong in picking who will be the next president of the United States. But it's likely that what occurred in New Hampshire was the fulfillment of what Bush had worked long and hard to accomplish: Convincing the voters that there's more to running the government than possessing a good image.

The test of that fact will become clearer in the next few weeks.

Watch league debates

Presidential TV debates abound. Each one allows us to evaluate the candidate.

The League of Women Voters "invented" TV debates. We continue to ask the important questions and to give equal advantage and opportunity to all candidates. Our TV debates help us and all citizens selects the best possible candidate.

The league's first 1988 presidential debates were held in Manchester, N.H. on Feb. 13th and 14th. Judy Woodruff will moderate a second set of league-sponsored debates on March 5th (4 p.m., CST, Republican candidates) and March 6th (4 p.m., CST, Democratic candidates). These debates, broadcast from Nashville, Tenn., will come just before the Super Tuesday primaries in which we Texans will participate.

The presidency is a position of great power and consequence, one that requires the voters' careful consideration. We urge participation in government, and watching the debates is one way for each to become a better informed citizen.

Baskin record excellent

Those who support Nick Taylor's candidacy for district judge dwell on his longevity as a Republican. I think it inappropriate to imply that this is more important than the exemplary record as a conservative judge such as Pat Baskin has established.

I know Judge Baskin's record of a fair, strict and well-run court. I know the statistics that are easily verified which support this statement.

I know Judge Baskin to be an honest, Christian contributing member of this community.

Excellent public servants deserve re-election. Re-elect Judge Baskin.

Israelis 'killing rats'

As I watch Israelis beating, breaking bones and holding hands over fires, shooting Palestinian youths (makes one think twice about gun control), I am reminded of a quote from Rabbi Emanuel Rackman in Jewish Week-American Examiner, Nov. 18, 1979:

"The first step in the process of genocide is to cultivate the feeling that those whom you want dead do not count. Regard them as less than human. Degrade them. Vilify them. Induce others to be contemptuous of them. Then the slaughtering comes more easily. You are not killing humans. You are only killing rats."

And that is what Israel and their Zionist brothers have been doing for decades.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Feb. 18, the 49th day of 1988. There are 317 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Feb. 18, 1861, Jefferson Davis was sworn in as president of the Confederate States of America in Montgomery, Ala.

On this date:

In 1546, Martin Luther, leader of the Protestant Reformation in Germany, died.

In 1564, the artist Michelangelo died in Rome.

In 1735, the first opera to be presented in the United States — "Flora, or Hob in the Well" — was performed in Charleston, S.C.

In 1885, Mark Twain's "Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" was published in the United States for the first time.

In 1930, the ninth planet of our solar system, Pluto, was discovered.

In 1953, "Bwana Devil," the movie that heralded the 3-D fad of the 1950s, opened in New York.

In 1970, the "Chicago Seven" defendants were found innocent of conspiring to incite riots at the 1968 Democratic convention. Five, however, were convicted of seeking to incite a riot individually.

In 1972, the California Supreme Court struck down the state's death penalty.

In 1977, the space shuttle Enterprise, sitting atop a Boeing 747, went on its maiden voyage, reaching altitudes of up to 16,000 feet above the Mojave Desert.

Ten years ago: During a visit to a town meeting in Nashua, N.H., President Jimmy Carter was heckled by two men protesting the proposed Panama Canal treaties. Carter drew a standing ovation from the rest of the audience as he defended the pacts.

Five years ago: The White House and congressional negotiators reached a compromise enabling investigators for the U.S. House of Representatives to see Environmental Protection Agency documents that had been withheld under a claim of executive privilege.

'Most Intrepid' congressmen costly

WASHINGTON — There were plenty of congressional junketeers traveling on the taxpayers' dollar during the January recess, but the "Most Intrepid" award goes to the merry band with the mission to watch a Coast Guard cutter smash through ice near Antarctica.

Jack Anderson

But hold your admiration for these fearless travelers. You can't get there from here without passing through Australia, New Zealand and Hawaii. The trip was not without its warm days — 10 to be exact — spent coming and going through the sunny South Pacific. There were three days in Antarctica.

As we reported earlier, the January congressional recess brought a bumper crop of lawmakers with urgent business way down south where summertime is in full bloom.

The Antarctica delegation was led by Rep. Earl Hutto, D-Fla., chairman of the subcommittee on Coast Guard and Navigation. Apparently, it was vital for seven representatives, six staffers and four military escorts to see firsthand the Coast Guard's Polar Star ice breaker thud its way into McMurdo Sound.

A spokesman for Hutto said the committee members needed to witness the annual ice-breaking event so they could assess the Coast Guard's needs. This is a national security issue, he added. The ice-breaking fleet has shrunk to just two of the 398-foot vessels, and the committee needs to decide whether to push for the purchase of another ship.

In light of a $100 million cut in the Coast Guard's budget, the likelihood of Congress buying another $300 million ice breaker any time soon is absurd, a Coast Guard spokesman told our associate Jim Lynch.

A subcommittee staffer confirmed that the visit to the ice breaker was the major, if not the lone reason for the 13-day trip for the 24-member delegation, which included five wives of Congress members. They needed to see the ice breaking for "informational" reasons, he said. Apparently, Congress hasn't heard of video tape.

Unfortunately, the U.S. Navy base in Antarctica was not equipped to host the entire delegation. Two representatives, two staffers, two military escorts and the five wives had to cool their heels in New Zealand's quaint English town of Christ Church while the others went to Antarctica for the ice breaking.

After the men returned from the show, the delegation flew to Sidney, Australia, and spent another four days Down Under. In both New Zealand and Australia, the group met with members of parliament and maritime officials.

From Sidney, the group flew to Honolulu for two nights. They had spent two nights there on the way down, also, but not strictly as tourists; the delegation spent three hours touring a U.S. Coast Guard base. On the way back, they had to stop to refuel the plane.

It's not clear what the taxpayers back home gained from the trip, but it is fairly certain what they lost. The private C-137 jet used by the delegation costs $7,445 an hour to fly, for a total aircraft cost of $369,272. The delegation spent $11,600 for accommodations and personnel provided by the Navy. And the representatives and their staffs were entitled to $125 a day each for expenses.

Joining Hutto on the trip were Howard Coble, R-N.C.; Norman Shumway, R-Calif.; Owen Pickett, D-Va.; William Lipinski, D-Ill.; and W.J. "Billy" Tauzin, D-La.

The Hutto group was just one of three congressional delegations that passed through Australia and New Zealand on "official business" in January. An official at the New Zealand embassy in Washington said it was the biggest influx of congressional visitors in four years.

Rep. Neal Smith, D-Iowa, led a group on a 19-day tour through New Zealand, Australia, Tahiti, New Guinea and Taiwan. Flight expenses alone for the Army C-135 they traveled on were $216,000.

BLENDING THE RULES — Wine and liquor makers are adding worthless blenders to their products so they can earn more tax credits, according to the inspector general of the Treasury Department. Congress gave the liquor business an excise tax break by allowing credit for blenders such as sugar or fruit flavors. The companies have already paid sales taxes on those blenders, so Congress decided they shouldn't be taxed again.

But the law does not specify which blenders qualify for the tax break. It gives credits based on the amount of additives that the distillery uses, even if those additives are unnecessary. The Treasury Department found that distillers were putting in useless blenders that did not affect the flavor of the drink, but earned the tax credit. The investigators have recommended closing the loophole.

MINI-EDITORIAL — We let El Salvador slip to the back pages when President Jose Napoleon Duarte managed to restrain the right-wing death squads. Now, it appears that impatience to win the civil war there is bringing out the savagery again. There are fresh reports of brutal beatings, murders and disappearances orchestrated by the Salvadoran army. It took the outrage of the American public to curb the killings after Duarte took office in 1984. This time around, our official action should be swift and decisive.

Blame on West Bank depends on one's view

Things are getting tense, not only in Israel, but in the United States, over the riots on the West Bank.

No matter where you stand you're in the wrong place.

"What would you do if someone threw rocks at you?" Jeffrey asked me.

"I don't want to talk about it," I said. "All I know about killing is what I see on TV."

"TV only tells you half of what is going on. They don't show what the other side is doing," Jeffrey said.

"That's why I don't watch television. They never tell you the whole story."

"Nobody likes to see people's hands broken, but it's better than shooting them."

"Look, could we go on to something more cheery like General Noriega's connections with dope smugglers in Panama?"

Jeffrey was hanging tough. "The Palestinians should go back to their camps and behave like civilized refugees until someone works out a solution to the problem."

"I'm with you 100 percent."

"Do you see anything wrong with rubber bullets?" Jeffrey wanted to know.

"Nothing, if used in moderation. Rubber bullets save lives."

"If you asked me about tear gas I would say it is accepted as a defensive weapon against an unfriendly populace and is especially welcome during an insurrection," Jeffrey said.

"Who told you that?"

"No one told me. I saw it on television."

"Tear gas isn't my specialty," I admitted.

"Then what do you think about water cannons?"

"They're more my style. I never used one or had one used against me, but it seems to me it's an answer to everything. Once you fire water cannons, where else can the other side go but down?" I said.

"Water cannons don't always work, so sometimes you have to grab the perpetrators and smack them around."

"That's understood from the start. When you're an occupying power you have to get physical or they'll walk all over you."

"Did you know the stone throwers were trained by the Russians?" Jeffrey said.

"I didn't know that, but it makes sense. Kids don't know how to throw rocks unless someone teaches them."

"All we're trying to do is get them to lay down their rocks. The Israeli army is not using any more force than is absolutely permitted by the government, which doesn't know how much force is really necessary. Are you for what we're doing in Gaza?"

"I'm for it 100 percent."

"Because if you're not for us, then you're against us."

"I agree with everything that's going on," I said, "otherwise why would Israel be getting such good press?"

"You don't sound like you're sold on the policy."

"I say an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, and if you can't get peace with rubber bullets use real ones until people come to their senses."

Jeffrey said, "I don't know if you're serious or not."

"Funny, I was thinking the same thing about you."

GEORGE F. WILL

Nation readying for maturity, but how?

WASHINGTON — In 192 hours between the beginning of Iowa's caucuses and the close of New Hampshire's polls fewer than 500,000 voters decisively shaped the nation's choice. On balance, the Democratic Party benefitted.

George F. Will

In presidential politics, as in horse racing, the rule is "horses for courses." The Republican course will be long, suited not to a dashing dark horse but to an indefatigable dray horse, Bush or Dole. Because their policy differences are less marked than their different character traits, the race is inescapably personal, therefore bitter. The country may take the loser's opinion of the winner.

Dole goes South as Stonewall Jackson, waging a mobile war of selective engagement against Bush, who goes as Ulysses S. Grant. Bush has material advantages (money, organization) that will enable him to fight it out on this line, if it takes all summer. Dole beat Bush two-to-one in Iowa and cut Bush's New Hampshire lead in half in eight days. But Bush, listed as terminal, has become Lazarus. Obviously the race is volatile.

Three tone-setting contests — South Dakota, Minnesota, South Carolina — come before Super Tuesday. Robertson, like Babe Ruth pointing to Wrigley Field's center field in his "called shot," says he will win South Carolina on the Saturday before the big Tuesday. If he does, Dole will benefit but the GOP will acquire the contagion of strangeness.

In the 1980 and 1984 elections the Republican coalition contained millions of people, many of them young, who are conservative on the core questions of governance — taxing and spending — but liberal on such social issues as abortion, censorship and prayer in public schools. Robertson radiates the itch to spruce up the morals of Americans.

So the Republican race is increasingly fueled by personal animosity and religious frenzy. Democratic passions seem comparatively contrived.

When the nation is at peace and the economy is performing adequately and there is no polarizing issue like civil rights, political stridency is inversely proportional to sincerity. Thus Dick Gephardt says American workers are being "crushed" as the middle class "shrinks."

Gephardt no doubt partakes of the general Democratic view that Ronald Reagan cannot distinguish between movies and reality, but Gephardt says of the movie, "Wall Street": "It really does ring true." The movie is a political soap opera of Beverly Hills leftism, nutty about the economy and wrong about the law.

"What this election is all about," says Gephardt, "is fundamental change." Actually, no. If you stretch nearly to the snapping point the notion of "fundamental" change, you can say such change was at issue in the 1896, 1964 and 1972 elections. The candidates seen as advocating such change — Bryan, Goldwater and McGovern, respectively — were repudiated.

Like Gephardt, Dukakis has not yet shifted rhetorical gears, from the rhetoric needed to distinguish himself from the pack to that required to seem presidential.

Dukakis is as adept as the next fellow at picking fights with the Abominable Strawman, as when he says Republicans believe "the job of government is to dismantle itself." Surely he cannot stir fear and trembling saying stuff like that, not after a Republican administration that, arriving in Washington promising to dismantle the Education and Energy departments, now advocates creation of a Cabinet-level Veterans department.

It was under Reagan's "dismantling" that federal spending as a percentage of GNP reached a peacetime record high. Dukakis cannot blame that on defense spending which, in the new budget will decline, in real terms, for the fourth consecutive year.

Dukakis says, "I will not accept an America where some people do well, while others are left behind." Oh, yes you will, unless you are promising what has never been — egalitarian and cost-free growth.

Today Americans live in a centrifugal epoch in which economic and social energies pull apart economic and social units and dissolve the mores and manners that are social cement. But when have Americans not lived in such an epoch?

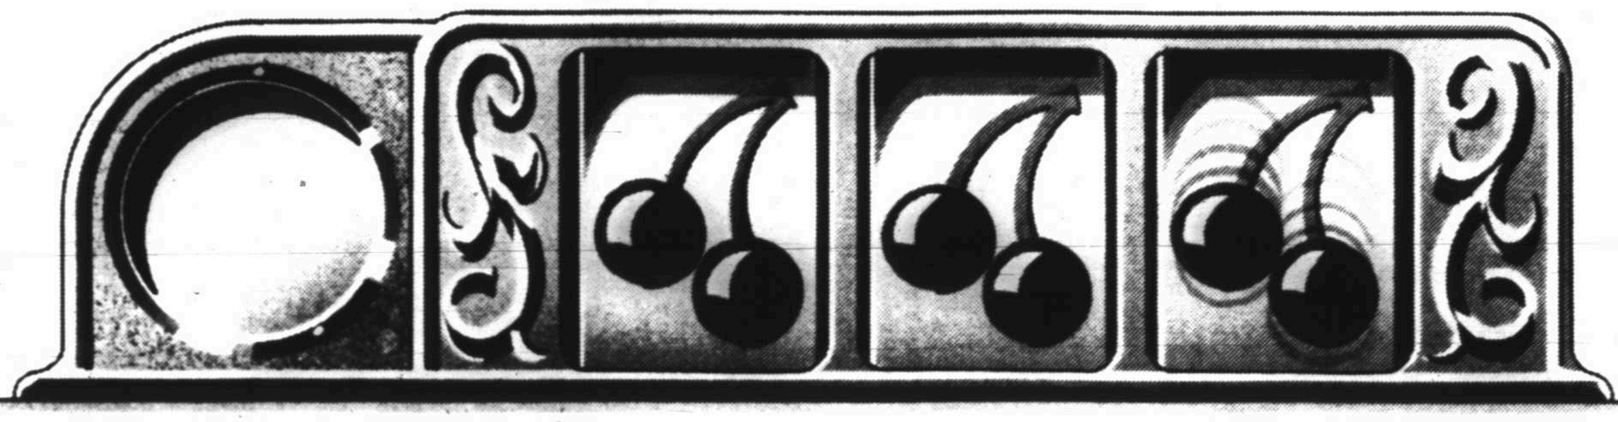

The sense of social acceleration is disconcerting. It accounts for such different expressions of anxiety as the Gephardt and Robertson evocations of resentments. Gephardt directs resentments abroad, toward foreigners, such as Koreans. Robertson locates the enemy within. Both of them, and Dukakis, are preaching sentimental conservatism.

Conservatism has been called spiritual arithmetic which calculates the cost of change. What the country needs, at long last, is an unsentimental conservatism that summons the nation to maturity, to an honest reckoning of the price of its appetites.

DEA suspects other governments implicated in drug trafficking

By DAN FREEDMAN
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The case of Panama's Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega is not the only one in which the United States has cooperated with a high government official linked to drug trafficking.

U.S. law enforcement and diplomatic sources say the Drug Enforcement Administration and other anti-narcotics agencies continue to work with the police and military in nations such as the Bahamas and Haiti, despite evidence that officials in those nations are intimately linked to the drug trade.

Congress is increasingly worried over American anti-drug efforts overseas in the wake of Noriega's indictment on drug-trafficking charges in Florida two weeks ago.

Lawmakers are asking whether Noriega successfully hoodwinked the DEA by serving up low-level traffickers and drug caches to American agents while pulling in millions as a point man for Colombian cocaine smugglers.

"Those kinds of people can't be trusted," says Rep. Larry Smith, D-Fla., chairman of the House international narcotics task force. "They will not help our policy, and in the end, when (U.S. cooperation) comes out, we look like a bunch of fools."

Rep. William J. Hughes, D-N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on crime, adds: "While you have to work with other countries, the question is where you draw the line? (If) illegal activities begin to impact in an adverse fashion upon our country, then obviously we have to be very concerned about that."

DEA officials defend cooperation with Noriega and other potentially corrupt officials as necessary for effective international enforcement.

With the cooperation of Noriega and others, "DEA has made cases that go beyond just giving us the small guy that allegedly wasn't paying off," argues John P. Martsh, an official in the DEA's office of international programs. "If the 'bones' that are being thrown our way are class one violators, we will take those bones anytime."

According to U.S. officials, Haiti and the Bahamas are two nations that stand out as less-publicized examples of what one official called "the Noriega problem."

In Miami, a federal grand jury is considering a drug-trafficking indictment against Col. Jean-Claude Paul, commander of the feared Dessalines Battalion alleged to have been taken part in election day violence that left at least 34 dead last November.

Osvaldo Quintana, a Miami seafood merchant, has told the grand jury that he helped Paul load a shipment of cocaine in a plane taking off from an airstrip on the colonel's ranch outside the Haitian capital of Port-au-Prince, according to a source familiar with the investigation.

The scheme involved helping Colombian smugglers sell cocaine in Florida in exchange for weapons, with Haiti used as a waystation, the source added. "He's a bad apple," said the source, referring to Paul, a onetime bodyguard to Lt. Gen. Henri Nanphy, Haiti's top military leader. The source also said that an indictment against Paul is imminent.

Haiti is "probably another example of a military that is up to its ear lobes in drug operations," the source said.

Haiti's new president, Leslie Manigat, has pledged a toughened stance on drugs, however official sources expressed skepticism over his ability to fight official corruption. These sources say that Manigat has done "little house cleaning" and counts Paul among his confidantes.

A diplomatic source said that the United States has "offered to give Haiti additional assistance for a narcotics program, but we have not yet formulated a program to do so."

However, the DEA opened an office in Port-au-Prince last November and assigned a number of agents to help Haitian police, a DEA source said. In addition, the DEA has trained Haitian officers in anti-narcotics investigative techniques, the DEA source added.

In the Bahamas, Prime Minister Lynden O. Pindling has been linked to drug trafficking for more than four years. In 1984, a British commission of inquiry found extensive narcotics corruption among Bahamian officials, but stopped short of citing Pindling directly.

However, at that time, the State Department secretly recommended that U.S. officials "proceed on the assumption that Pindling was receiving drug money," according to one source who asked not to be identified. Pindling consistently has denied involvement in drugs.

Earlier this week, however, an admitted marijuana smuggler testified in a Florida courtroom that he paid Pindling $400,000 for protection in 1980.

At the Jacksonville, Fla., trial of Colombian drug kingpin Carlos Lehder, George W. Baron III of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., said payments were made to Pindling at the rate of $15 per kilo. Lehder asked Baron to help him arrange a similar deal with Pindling, Baron testified.

Despite evidence of corruption, U.S.-Bahamian cooperation continues. The DEA last year added two agents to its force of 10 in the Bahamas, and U.S. Coast Guard ships now carry Bahamian "ship riders." These sailors are authorized to grant entry into Bahamian waters when the U.S. vessels are in hot pursuit of suspected smugglers.

Summarizing the problem, one diplomatic source said: "There is narcotics corruption in every (drug exporting) country. We accept a certain level of this, but where we worry is when it begins to impede our programs."

Dorm takeover at Rikers Island jail ends

NEW YORK (AP) — The takeover of 12 dormitorites by an estimated 550 inmates at a maximum-security jail, which injured eight people and did widespread damage, ended today after negotiations and the use of tear gas, authorities said.

The riot was apparently caused by anger over conditions at the Rikers Island jail, said city corrections department spokeswoman Ruby Ryles. A man identifying himself as an inmate said prisoners were beaten Wednesday.

The inmates took over the dormitories around midnight, using beds and other furniture to barricade themselves inside the Anna M. Cross Center, the city's maximum-security jail, she said.

The takeover ended when the inmates came out around 4:30 a.m., about 4½ hours after it began, said city corrections department spokeswoman Ruby Ryles.

"The talks that the security staff had with inmates were productive in that it resulted in the inmates coming out of the barricaded area," Ms. Ryles said.

"Some tear gas was used to put down the disturbance or get the inmates out of the barricaded area," Ms. Ryles said.

She said she did not believe authorities made any promises to inmates or granted any demands. "I never got the indication that there were any (demands)," she said.

Four inmates and four guards were taken to hospitals, but their injuries appeared to be minor, Ms. Ryles said.

The center houses mainly convicted felons awaiting transfers to state prisons, parole violators and some prisoners awaiting court dates in the city.

Robert Kasanof, chairman of the city Board of Correction, said there was widespread damage.

Ms. Ryles said 600 beds were damaged or destroyed, forcing city Correction Commissioner Richard J. Koehler to request the state Department of Correctional Services for the immediate transfer of 350 state inmates. State Commissioner Thomas A. Coughlin III was expected to approve the transfer, she said. A damage estimate was not immediately available.

The inmates barricaded entrances and exits to the dorms and did not allow correction officers in, Ms. Ryles said. No hostages were taken.

Extra guards were deployed around the center. Trained negotiators contacted the prisoners around 2 a.m.

Although it was not immediately known what sparked the uprising, inmates had strongly protested searches conducted by guards Wednesday, Ms. Ryles said.

CBS News reported that an inmate identifying himself only as "Gray" said the disturbance was over treatment by guards.

"All they want to do is beat us up, you know," the man said. "Yesterday we had several incidents with several inmates ... they got beat up for no reason, a couple of guys went up to the hospital with broken ribs. Today as well, in the morning, guys got dragged out (and) thrown down the stairs."

Kasanof blamed the problem on the state prison system.

"This is in my view a state riot which has been exported to the City of New York," he said. "These are long-term prisoners for the most part, for whom the city prisons are ill-designed and for whom the state prisons are well-designed ..."

Inmates at the center, which houses 2,400 inmates in all, are kept in dormitories — large rooms filled with beds — rather than cells. A head count was conducted this morning, Ms. Ryles said.

The city's prison system is currently at slightly more than 100 percent of capacity with more than 15,000 prisoners — more than 11,000 at Rikers, Ms. Ryles said.

The disturbance "involved state prisoners, of which the system has about 1,500 — 250 of them beyond the time in which they should be in city prisons," Kasanof said.

He said the board would investigate the disturbance.

Woman disputes action by Pine in ex-husband's death

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The death of Larry Haney last month was a traumatic enough experience without family members having to do battle with a justice of the peace over the mortician who was to handle funeral arrangements, said ex-wife Jo Beth Haney.

Haney, 50, collapsed at his home on Jan. 2 and was rushed by ambulance to Midland Memorial Hospital where he was pronounced dead in the emergency room shortly afterward.

Although the family had requested that Sizemore Funeral Home owner Charles Sizemore handle the funeral arrangements, Justice of the Peace Robert Pine ordered Haney's body be taken to another funeral home when Pine showed up on the scene, Mrs. Haney said.

"When the physician pronounced him dead, they immediately wanted to know what to do with the body," Mrs. Haney said. "I told them that we wanted him taken to Sizemore. But since we were divorced, they (emergency room personnel) insisted they would have to talk with someone who was a member of the immediate family."

Pine was called in to make the official death pronouncement because there was no immediate medical history available on Haney, said MMH Public Relations Director Laurie Johnson. The justice of the peace ruled the cause of death as a heart attack.

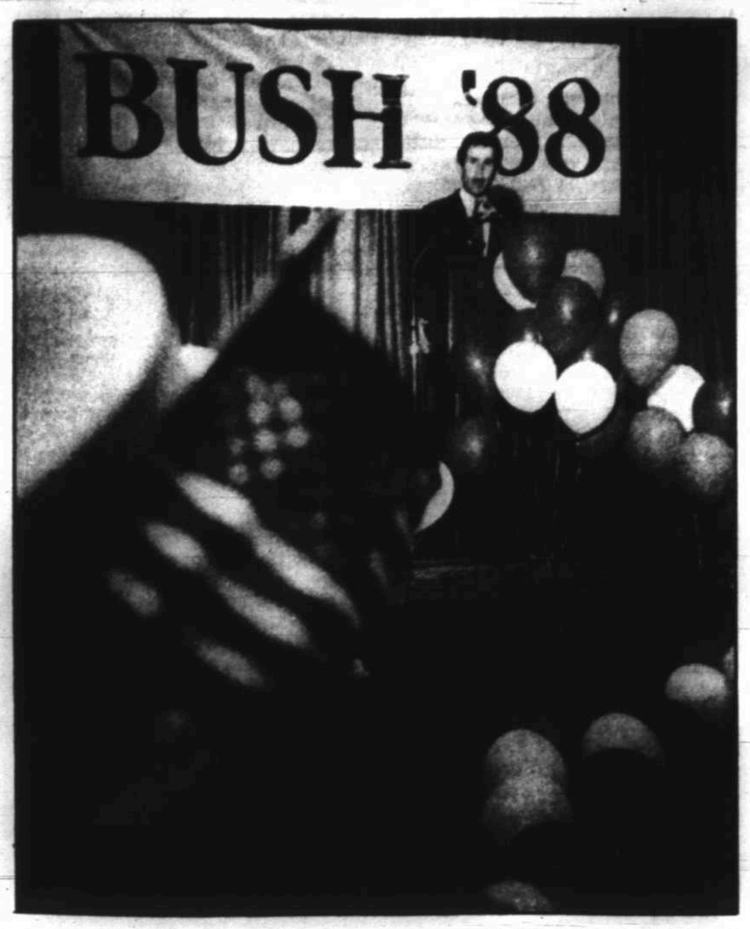

But Sizemore has questioned whether a justice of the peace should have been called in to rule on the death in the first place.

"If a doctor pronounces someone dead, he's a qualified physician, and the JP shouldn't be called in," he said. "It's a question of whether someone should be pronounced dead by someone who has medical experience or by someone who doesn't."

Ms. Johnson defended the action, saying county hospitals are required by law to summon a JP in those instances when it lacks recent medical history on a patient. The law applies specifically to persons who die in the hospital emergency room.

The recent Sizemore-Pine controversy is but one in a series of feuds that have erupted between the funeral home director and the justice of the peace since Sizemore requested that Pine and fellow JP Keith Jobe establish a rotation system for funeral homes that call on unattended deaths.

George W. Bush was in Odessa Wednesday campaigning for his father, who is seeking the Republican presidential nomination.

Bush's main rival will be Robertson in state, son says

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The battle for the Republican Party's presidential nomination in Texas will find Vice President George Bush mounting a strong campaign against former television evangelist Pat Robertson, according to the vice president's son and other Bush supporters in the Permian Basin.

The fact that Robertson is perceived as a strong Bush challenger for Texas' 111 Republican delegates became evident from remarks made during a Bush rally in the gymnasium at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin early Wednesday evening to more than 100 supporters from the Midland-Odessa area.

The airline flight of the vice president's son, George W. Bush, was delayed and Odessa businessman Jack Stevens took the podium and set the tone for the arrival of Bush's son.

Stevens referred to reports that Robertson claimed his prayers were responsible for "turning away a hurricane" from the East Coast of the United States and "he thinks he can do the same to the Soviet Union," he said.

Bush, who arrived about an hour late for the rally, told those in attendance it was "nice to be home, nice to be home with a victory under our belts," he said, referring to his father's strong showing in the Tuesday New Hampshire primary.

The younger Bush lived in Midland before joining his father's presidential campaign last year.

He described his reaction to television coverage following the Iowa caucus as "tough," saying, "You see your father buried every day."

But, with the New Hampshire victory behind the Bush campaign, he said the campaign has now "bounced back" and will now concentrate on the goal of bringing all 111 of Texas' Republican delegates to the New Orleans convention.

Bush told those attending the rally the battle plan in Texas will be geared to defeating the challenge of Robertson, rather than Sen. Bob Dole, because Dole has no major organization in Texas, while Robertson has managed to put together some organizational support.

Plane involved in drug-running linked to dope ring, officer says

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A drug-running plane which landed Tuesday in remote Borden County has a "connection" to a massive Texas-Mexico marijuana smuggling ring based in the Austin area, the officer in charge of the case said today.

Department of Public Safety narcotics investigator Bob Nestoroff said that the plane's pilot and passenger are no longer in the Borden County area, but their whereabouts are known by the DPS and other agencies.

"Right now, we anticipate there won't be any arrests real quick," Nestoroff said in a telephone interview today from his Austin office. "The investigation is continuing."

The two men fled the KingAir plane after it landed near Gail, 65 miles northeast of Midland. Earlier, the craft had eluded officers in Palo Pinto County in north Texas, where two other men were arrested and nearly 1,300 pounds of marijuana were confiscated, DPS spokesman Mike Cox said.

"There is a Borden County connection, yes, but I don't want to say anything else right now about that because the investigation is very sensitive, and involves many agencies," said Nestoroff.

DPS narcotics agents arrested Gerald Blake Mackey of Cedar Creek and Gary M. Whittington of Austin near Possum Kingdom Lake about 10 p.m. Monday, Cox said. Both are being held on charges of aggravated possession of marijuana, officials said.

Midlander frustrated by son's rare, fatal illness

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Brennan Bolin's father says the most frustrating thing about his son's rare and fatal illness is that doctors know nothing about it.

"They don't know anything. Anything you can think of to ask I promise I've asked.

"They just say his lungs bleed," father Tommy Bolin of Midland said today.

The five-year-old who lives with his mother in the Dallas suburb of Lancaster suffers from a mysteriously unusual disease known as idiopathic pulmonary hemosiderosis.

Translated, the name means the child has — for unexplainable reasons — an increased deposit of iron in his lung tissues that causes a seepage of blood and extensive destruction of the red blood cells — the carriers of oxygen to the blood stream.

Brennan was diagnosed in November 1984, his father said.

The family noticed the normally active boy was getting "real run down to the point he just didn't want to anything.

Contrary to popular myth, treating children at the dentist's office is not more difficult than pulling teeth. Zack Belew, 5, reiterates to his dental hygienist the proper way to brush his teeth — a task he says he does twice a day.

Dental hygenist takes bite out of children's trip to dentist

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

One hygienist says that the tooth of the matter is adults are often more afraid of a trip to the dentist than children.

"Something maybe happened to them at the dentist during their childhood that instilled a fear," said registered dental hygenist D'Ann Botkin.

Zack Belew, 5, on the other hand, says he actually wanted to go the dentist shortly after his second birthday.

He went with his father. Zack liked what he saw and wanted work done on his teeth too, Ms. Botkin said.

She said it was common to see a child's first trip to the dentist come of a situation like that.

"I like going to the dentist," Zack said.

He concurred that D'Ann was "nice" and that he likes getting a new toothbrush and a balloon when he leaves.

Ms. Botkin said she hopes to make parents aware — during Children's Dental Health Month this month — that a child's 20 baby teeth are just as important as their future 36 permanent teeth matter.

No serious injuries were reported when an automobile struck a bicyclist just after 5 p.m. Wednesday, according to the Department of Public Safety. The bicyclist, who was traveling on South Cottonflat Road, was treated and released at the scene, DPS reports said.

Grand jury to hear evidence in Odessan's death

LUBBOCK (AP) — Lubbock County prosecutors say they will present evidence to a grand jury next week in the case of an elderly Odessa man found burned beyond recognition in a trash bin.

Although an autopsy on the body of Jack Doherty, 84, did not reveal evidence of homicide, a man has been charged in connection with the unauthorized use of Doherty's credit card.

"There's definitely no foul play," pathologist Dr. Ralph Erdmann of Amarillo said Wednesday, adding the man apparently died of natural causes.

Erdmann said no carbon monoxide was found in the body, indicating Doherty was dead when his body was set afire in the Dumpster. Carbon monoxide would have indicated the death was linked to the burning.

Some things in life need age, maturity to be appreciated

Todd

There are some things which just are not really appreciated without the advantage of age, maturity, or a jolting bolt of reality — trauma.

One is life — the gratitude of being alive today.

What young person, unless he or she has confronted the imminence of death, is acutely aware of life's fragility and death's calling? Perhaps that's a beauty of invincible youth: eternal life. Youth lasts forever, it seems, until, all of a sudden, it is no more. It makes a quick exit, although its stay seems never to end.

Ah, who guests not for youth?

As age progresses, as it invariably will if it is not cut short by an abrupt that's-all finality, the concept of youth increases in importance. Perhaps that's why those of us with "character lines" reason that youth is in the mind and is a state of attitude. It is not always just in the skin and portrayed by aberrant and unpredictable behavior characterized by teen-agers of my generation. I wouldn't dare accuse today's teenagers of misbehaving without footnoting some strange, uncomely, imaginative and innovative scenes from past generations.

Now, what should never be discounted are the superb aspirations and accomplishments of youth and the ability of youth to hold a steady course in life's precarious journey.

Youth survives despite all the torpedoing experienced in growing up.

Bridging those teen-age years is no easy task. And those of us who struggled through those painful years of learning and experimenting should never overlook that the struggle continues in others today.

Youth is made up of years of decision-making followed by one of three things: doing nothing (sitting like a couch potato), hardly doing anything (occasionally getting up to stretch like a lazy cat), and doing something (moving down the pike at full blast).

Most, it would seem, are moving down the pike. They may have picked the wrong railroad. But impetuous youth always can find another railroad to ride in getting set for this journey called life.

Life is life.

Until the time of death is understood and death becomes acceptable, no one should want to die — to leave too soon this life's journey.

Those of us with those deep "character lines" and who are counting closely toward or beyond the allotted three- score-and-ten years treasure more life as much — or more — as youth revels in it.

French writer-aviator Antoine de Saint Exupery wrote of life and death: "It is only when we become conscious of our part in life, however modest, that we shall be happy. Only then will we be able to live in peace and die in peace, for only this lends meaning to life and to death. Death is sweet when it comes in its time and in its place, when it is part of the order of things."

Shaw backed by TPEA

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Rep. Larry Don Shaw of Big Spring won the support Wednesday of the 14,000-member Texas Public Employees Association in the March 8 Democratic primary.

Shaw faces Cecil Gilstrap of Big Spring in the primary. The winner will battle Troy Fraser of Big Spring in the November general election.

O.V. Milstead of Abilene, chairman of the TPEA's political action committee, said the workers based their 46 endorsements in part on the candidates' stands on a pay raise for state employees. "We must convince 71st session lawmakers that next time it is our turn," Milstead said.

TPEA Executive Director Lane Zively said the group will provide manpower and limited financial support to the candidates it endorsed.

"There's not a whole lot of money in the PAC, but what we've got we're going to put out," Zively said.

Southwestern Bell offers free 976 blocking

AUSTIN (AP) — Southwestern Bell, rapped by state utility commissioners for not doing something about dial-a-porn, has offered free blocking of calls to the controversial services.

But witnesses, commissioners and a Bell official said Wednesday that blocking probably is not enough of a solution. It cannot be offered everywhere because of technical limitations and it does not block long-distance dial-a-porn calls.

Pastors, parents, educators and employers on Wednesday urged the Public Utility Commission to kill dial-a-porn, even if it means the end of other "Dial 976" pay call services.

Providers of 976 services such as weather and sports information also testified, urging the commissioners not to put them out of business.

The four-hour hearing ended with a pair of alternative proposals from the commission — a ban on all 976 services or a plan in which the calls could be made only by customers who "subscribe" to them.

The commission will take public comment on the proposals for 30 days.

"I'm not happy with Southwestern Bell," said Commissioner Jo Campbell. "I think their greed has absolutely gotten us into the problem we're in."

"The industry did not clean up its own act," Commissioner Marta Greytok said of 976 providers.

PUC Chairman Dennis Thomas said the best solution might be to separate the dial-a-porn services from other Dial 976 services by setting up another three-number prefix for dial-a-porn. However, the commission could not order such a change because of possible free-speech problems.

The change could be made if Southwestern Bell requests it, but it could not be ordered by the commission, Thomas said.

Bill Free, a Bell vice president, said his company also would consider a system in which it could refuse to do the billing for dial-a-porn calls. Under the current system, the telephone company does the billing and then forwards the portion due to the company that provides the service.

Free said he is "as upset as the commission that we haven't been able to control 976 service."

Under a previous agreement, Bell will offer, starting Saturday, free blocking of calls to 976 numbers. The free offer will continue for 60 days. After that, customers will have to pay $7 for blocking.

Free on Wednesday said Bell is willing to make the free blocking offer a permanent one, but said it is not the full solution.

"In light of what I heard today, I tend to think that perhaps other solutions are needed."

According to a PUC report, the price of the 976 calls, lasting up to 3 minutes, ranges from 29 cents to $49.95. Dial 976 service is available in Houston, San Antonio, Dallas and Fort Worth. The numbers can be called long distance from any other location unless they are blocked by the local telephone company. About one-third of the services offer sexual messages, the report said.

Alan Sears, a Phoenix attorney for Citizens for Decency Through Law, told the PUC Wednesday that dial-a-porn is "aural rape that takes the innocence of children forever."

Linda Holstien, a Dallas PTA official, said the Richardson Independent School District paid $1,994 for dial-a-porn calls made from its schools, and $650 for blocking.

Allegations about sheriff hindering law enforcement

ORANGE (AP) — Federal agents refused help from local sheriff's deputies during a drug bust because of allegations surrounding the county sheriff, The Orange Leader reported in a copyright story.

"I don't feel my office can work with the Orange County narcotics officers," U.S. Attorney Bob Wortham said. "For obvious reasons. Because of the FBI operation."

Orange County Sheriff James Wade is the subject of an FBI investigation in which he is suspected of participating in the manufacture and distribution of methamphetamines. He has not been charged in the case.

The three Orange men were arrested Tuesday afternoon after accepting a truckload of marijuana from an undercover officer at a Beaumont truck stop, according to an affidavit by U.S. Customs agent Roger E. Bowers of Port Arthur.

All three were charged with possession of more than 100 kilograms of marijuana with intent to distribute and with aiding and abetting possession of marijuana with intent to distribute, the newspaper said Wednesday.

Wortham said each charge carries a penalty upon conviction of five to 40 years in prison and a fine of up to $2 million.

U.S. Magistrate J. Michael Bradford set bond at $25,000 with a $1,250 cash deposit for Michael Glynn Sepulvado, 34; Donald Ray Morris, 43; and Charles Leroy Lindley, 51.

Orange County narcotics officers complained Wednesday they had worked long, hard hours on a case.

"We're the ones that set it up (the bust) and we got shut out," Capt. Wayne Dial told the Beaumont Enterprise.

Dial and nine other deputies were under subpoena to appear before a federal grand jury meeting Wednesday, today and Friday to investigate the allegations against Wade.

Dial, who heads the Orange County Sheriff's Department narcotics investigators, said he called Wortham after he heard about the marijuana arrests. Dial said Wortham told him his office could no longer work with the Orange County Sheriff's Department.

"It shuts us down as far as any federal cases go," Dial said. Sheriff's narcotics investigator Carl Smith said the news of the marijuana bust "hurt and stunned us."

Bowers said in his affidavit that an undercover operation was initiated in December 1987, in which Lindley furnished a shrimp boat to an undercover investigator with the Galveston County sheriff's office for the purpose of bringing a load of marijuana weighing more than a ton from Mexico to Orange.

In return, Bowers said, Lindley was to receive 2,000 pounds of marijuana for the use of his boat.

On Friday, according to the affidavit, the three suspects met with two undercover officers to arrange for delivery of Lindley's share of the marijuana load.

According to the affidavit, the truck and marijuana were delivered to Lindley, Morris and Sepulvado. Lindley remained behind with the undercover officer, Bowers said, while Morris and Sepulvado left with the truck.

Law enforcement officers kept the truck under surveillance for about five miles, then stopped it and arrested the two men, Bowers said in his affidavit.

Mexican officer in El Paso's custody

EL PASO (AP) — A man identifying himself as a Juarez policeman was in custody of El Paso authorities after trying to enter the United States in the car of a man found shot to death in Mexico.

Everardo Dominguez Trochet, 20, was charged with unauthorized use of a motor vehicle and is in El Paso County Jail in lieu of $35,000 bail, according to police.

El Paso police arrested Dominguez as he tried to cross an international bridge late Tuesday just east of El Paso, U.S. Customs agent Angel Hernandez said.

Dominguez was driving a 1987 Ford Escort that was registered to Eduardo Gallardo Holguin, of Ciudad Juarez, whose bullet-riddled body was found Saturday near the Mexican city's airport, El Paso police Lt. Jim Carney said.

A fresh coat of paint on the Escort raised customs officials suspicions and a computer check revealed the car belonged to Gallardo and was reported stolen.

Man upset by editorial stand kicks in paper's windows

WOODVILLE (AP) — A man allegedly kicked out four plate-glass windows at a weekly newspaper office after an editorial appeared criticizing Tyler County Sheriff Leon Fowler.

John Yearwood, publisher of The Woodsman, said he was in his office late Wednesday when the man walked by and began kicking out four 6-by-9-foot plate-glass windows. He said the man then took a copy of the newspaper and stuffed it in a crack in the office front door and walked away.

A Tyler County deputy arrested the man near the scene and took him into custody, Yearwood said. A spokesman for the Tyler County sheriff's office said the man had not been charged late Wednesday.

Yearwood said the deputy told him the man said he was upset over the editorial and a front-page feature story about a political poll taken at the Magnolia Cafe in Woodville about Texas' upcoming priamries.

Fowler is running for county judge in the March 8 Democratic Primary against Jerome Owens.

In the editorial, entitled "Is this judge-like behavior," Yearwood describes an incident where Fowler challenged a resident to a "fist fight" at a local restaurant. The editorial also mentions a previous fight Fowler had with another county sheriff at the Tyler County Courthouse in 1983.

PLANE

DPS Sgt. Bob Porter said U.S. Air Customs Service officers and an Austin DPS agent followed the plane from Mexico to a small airstrip on the south side of the lake. The pursuit plane, which was unable to land, circled away from the area and notified agents, who had been waiting on the ground.

Two men loaded 40 large bundles from the craft into a large four-horse trailer hitched to a pickup truck and left the scene in separate vehicles, Porter said.

The plane took off and was chased by an assault helicopter, Porter said. It landed in Gail several hours later, according to Cox.

Mackey and Whittington were chased for about 15 miles before they were arrested. The marijuana, nearly 1,300 pounds valued at $1.2 million, was confiscated, Porter said.

Nestoroff said "many" more arrests are expected in connection with the case, and will be referred to federal courts "in several different districts" in Texas.

Most of those involved in the smuggling operation, which has been operating for several years, live in the Austin area, he added.

"It is a very big operation," he said. "It involves numerous defendants. Eventually, it will all come out."

BUSH

Dole won the Iowa caucus and finished second in New Hampshire. Robertson finished a surprisingly strong second in Iowa and a disappointing fifth in New Hampshire.

Most political observers think the GOP nomination will eventually come down to either Bush or Dole, although Robertson is expected to run strong in southern states such as Texas.

The vice president's son said his father's campaign is "well-financed."

"Make no mistake," he said, "George Bush is popular and is well-organized all across the nation."

His father has raised $8.5 million for the primary campaign, the younger Bush said.

He said he expects his father will be in Texas next week, possibly the following week, and will reveal his campaign platform, which will include a comprehensive proposal that would utilize the federal tax system to relieve problems in the energy industry.

"The battle is on," the younger Bush said, referring to upcoming primary campaigns. "We've been waiting for this battle for a long time," he stated.

Characterizing his father as "a man with no dark side," Bush said his father is someone "rooted in fundamental values" with the experience to resolve many of the problems confronting the country today.

During the upcoming campaigns, Bush said, his father "will not kick Ronald Reagan and he will not belittle the past."

BOY

"He was losing his color," the father said.

George Buchanan, Brennan's medical specialist at the Children's Medical Center in Dallas, said he's seen five cases of the disease during the last 15 years. All were fatal.

In the past, physicians have used everything from steroids to chemotherapy to stop Brennan's blood seepage which occurs intermittently, Bolin said.

"He stays on a maintenance level of steroids, but when he starts bleeding he goes to the hospital and gets a burst of steroids.

"The last time they were unable to get it under control. They told us to take him home and make him happy...they didn't know anything else."

But medical experts think a lung and heart transplant can save Brennan's young life.

He's been approved for the double transplant surgery at a University of Minnesota hospital, though currently there are no available donors.

Brennan now waits.

The operation should run up a $625,000 tab, his father said. However, insurance will only pay about $400,000.

If the donor is a cadaver — not someone technically alive, but brain dead — insurance won't pay to have the organs removed.

When Brennan is not bleeding or "seeping" as his father says, he is "just fine."

The youngster does have a related case of high blood pressure, though.

A trust fund has been set up in Brennan's name at the First City Bank in Lancaster, 75146, Bolin said.

One of Bolin's co-workers at Emserch Exploration Inc. in Midland called the newspaper this morning and said she wanted to set up a fund locally for the boy.

For further information, one can call Emserch at 682-5221.

DEATH

Earlier this month, Erdmann said preliminary autopsy tests showed Doherty had nearly twice the amount of alcohol in his blood needed to be considered legally drunk.

The body had a blood-alcohol level of 0.196, Erdmann said, while 0.10 is considered legally drunk.

Grand jurors will hear evidence in Doherty's death and in a credit card abuse case.

Eddie Wayne Roberson, 32, of Amarillo has been charged with credit card abuse for allegedly using a card belonging to Doherty.

Odessa police have said that Roberson was listed as an acquaintance of Doherty's on the victim's missing persons report, filed 12 days before the body was found Jan. 19.

The grand jury earlier this month delayed action on the case because prosecutors were awaiting results of tests by Erdmann.

Roberson remains in Lubbock County Jail on $50,000 bond, police said.

Doherty was reported missing Jan. 7 by his landlady, Mary Broadwell, who last saw him Dec. 12, according to police reports.

Ms. Broadwell told police that Doherty may have been with Roberson shortly before Doherty was reported missing, police said.

Doherty had rented a mobile home from Ms. Broadwell for about 25 years, she said.

"Usually, for instance, when a child comes in with a cavity parents will say, 'Pull it.', but that child may not lose it until he's 11 or 12," she explained.

Pulling a tooth too early could upset the spacing of new permanent teeth coming in, Ms. Botkin said.

Children should go to the dentist once every six months beginning at age three, she said.

"I wish some of my adults would sit as still as Zack does," Ms. Botkin said.

Children don't take kindly, however, to loud noises such as that of the drill or the saliva suction tube, Ms. Botkin acknowledged.

She said she explains everything to the children and includes them in the procedures she is doing.

"Mr. Thirsty" is the pet name she gives to the suction tube.

Zack hasn't lost any teeth yet, but plans to put the first one he loses — likely a jiggly bottom incisor — under his pillow.

His five years have made him wise to the world of the tooth fairy's monetary bequests. He expects money, he said.

DISPUTE

The JPs denied Sizemore's petition last fall, saying the county's unattended death figure is too low to justify implementation of such a system.

Pine has said that he automatically rotates bodies to the city's funeral homes and doesn't understand why the controversy exists. He added that the family has the final decision in determining to which funeral home the body is to be sent.

In the Haney case, Pine said there were no family members present at the hospital when he arrived on the scene. He said the decision to take Haney to a funeral home other than Sizemore was an unarbitrary one.

Although the family originally was charged a $65 transfer fee, Pine said the bill was later remitted.

"It was dismissed and that's all I'm going to say about it," Pine said. "It's over and done and forgotten as far as I'm concerned."

Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee addresses Houston supporters as he kicked off his campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Consequences of ad unknown, publisher says

HOUSTON (AP) — The publisher of Soldier of Fortune said he had no way of knowing that a classified advertisement in the military magazine would lead to a Texas woman's slaying.

The woman's family is suing the magazine for $22.5 million, accusing it of negligence for publishing the ad that brought Robert Black together with John Wayne Hearn and led to the murder-for-hire of Black's wife, Sandra.

"I have no idea what's in the minds of people who place those ads," publisher Robert Brown said in testimony Wednesday.

Mrs. Black of Bryan was shot to death in 1985. Her husband is on Texas' death row for paying Hearn $10,000 to carry out the killing. Hearn is serving three life terms in Florida for murder.

Marjorie Einmann, Mrs. Black's mother, and Gary Black, the victim's 18-year-old son, are seeking $2.5 million in actual damages and $20 million in punitive damages from the Colorado-based magazine.

Hearn's ad appeared in four issues of the magazine in late 1984, seeking former Marine and Vietnam veterans and weapons specialists with jungle warfare expertise for "high risk assignments" in the United States or overseas.

"I never expected anyone to be so stupid to advertise in Soldier of Fortune their intent to do criminal enterprise," said Brown, founder of the self-styled "Journal of Professional Adventurers."

"I have no idea what's in the minds of people who place those ads."
— Soldier of Fortune publisher Robert Brown

Under intense questioning by plaintiff's attorney Ron Franklin, Brown reviewed more than two dozen classified ads run in the magazine up to 1984. Many of the ads sought or advertised the services of self-proclaimed mercenaries, weapons specialists, explosives experts and mechanics, a term Franklin said was synonymous with hired killers.

Brown said a "mechanic" in a "high-risk assignment" also could mean someone could fix a helicopter overseas.

Hearn said in a deposition read into testimony Wednesday that his ad brought responses from people who were looking for help with bombings, assaults, jail breaks and killings.

He said Black first contacted him about the sale of a gun collection and at their first meeting suggested he needed help to kill his wife.

After several discussions, Hearn said he killed Mrs. Black in February, 1985, by shooting her twice in the head at her house.

In response to a question of whether Soldier of Fortune or its publisher were responsible for his illegal activities, he replied: "If I had never run an ad in Soldier of Fortune...I would have never killed anyone."

Attorneys for the magazine do not dispute that the magazine ad brought Hearn and Black together, but they insist Brown had no way of knowing the ad was for illegal activity.

Magazine attorney Larry Thompson said the magazine was focused on Vietnam veterans and the classified ads were run as a source of employment for them, but also appealed to military historians and people who like adventure.

"There are people out there who are armchair warriors," Thompson said. "They want to live out their adventure at home."

Hearn said he also got calls as a result of the ad for a political assassination involving the president of another country, which he identified as Canada.

According to Hearn, whose deposition was taken last October, the ad he placed was intended to attract bodyguard and security work.

Hearn, who was then a truck driver living in the Atlanta area, said the ad generated so many calls, he had to hire an answering service. It cost him $1,000 a month in long-distance charges just to return all the calls, he said.

"Probably 90 percent of the calls I received concerned illegal activities," he said. Three to five of those daily concerned killings, he said, while others were for drug transportation and sales, illegal arms transportation and sales and assaults.

He said it was through the magazine he met four former Vietnam veterans, identified only as Don, Jeff, David and Warren, who carried out the assignments. One of them, whom he would not identify, had been involved in a coup in Haiti and was imprisoned there for a time, Hearn said.

The deposition, as read in court, did not go into any detail about the Canadian assassination request.

However, Hearn said he did investigate a request to bomb the Oregon commune set up by Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh. His people checked the religious community and found it armed like a military base and decided not to take the assignment.

In parts of the deposition not allowed into testimony by U.S. District Judge David Hittner, Hearn told of his involvement with a dozen men in a November 1984 attempt to overthrow the government of French Guiana, for which he was to be paid $100,000.

But the mission was aborted when their plane experienced engine problems over the Gulf of Mexico. The coup attempt never was pursued after that because of "logistical problems," Hearn said.

In other activity, Hearn told of moving guns for the Nicaraguan Contras three times in 1984.

Hopefuls not in touch with voters, Gore says

HOUSTON (AP) — Sen. Albert Gore Jr. says some Democratic candidates for the presidential nomination are out of touch with mainstream voters as they move to the Super Tuesday states.

Those candidates, he said, are Jesse Jackson, Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis.

"All three of them have taken positions on foreign policy and defense policy that are completely out of touch with the mainstream voters in this country," Gore said Wednesday morning at a conference for supporters telecast via satellite from KPRC-TV in Houston.

Gore had other scheduled stops in Beaumont, Shreveport, La., and Dallas on Wednesday as he continued his campaign in the South and other Super Tuesday states.

During a two-hour stop in Shreveport, Gore talked about revitalizing Louisiana's struggling oil industry.

"In the first 90 days of the Gore administration, we're going to turn that around with a national energy policy, with new incentives for domestic oil and gas production here in the United States of America to reduce our reliance on imported oil," he said.

The first major event of the Super Tuesday campaign is tonight when candidates from both parties converge on Dallas for a debate for the prized delegates from the March 8 primaries.

Texas, which leads the 20 Super Tuesday states with 197 Democratic and 111 Republican delegates, is a crucial link for candidates surviving the New Hampshire primary.

Gore said Gephardt, who finished second in New Hampshire and won the Iowa caucuses, has flip-flopped on issues in his campaign.

"It is now very widely known that Dick Gephardt's positions adopted for the Iowa caucuses are just completely at odds with what he's done in the last 12 years in the House and Senate," he said. "There's a very long list, it's not just one or two positions."

The Tennessee senator said he has no regrets about skipping the New Hampshire primary and Iowa caucuses and turning his money and attention to the Super Tuesday states.

Gore, who finished fifth in the New Hampshire primary Tuesday with about 7 percent of the vote, had campaigned little there.

Sedition defendants accuse government witness of lies

FORT SMITH, Ark. (AP) — The defense in the sedition trial of 14 men linked with white supremacist groups told a federal jury that a key witness for the government's case is a liar who had himself crowned king of the Ozarks.

The charge came during opening statements Wednesday in which the prosecutor said that leaders of white supremacist groups gathered in 1983 to discuss poisoning the water supplies of New York and Washington, D.C., and establishing an Aryan nation.

Louis Ray Beam Jr., 41, of Houston, a defendant who is representing himself, told the U.S. District Court jury to expect "a fairy tale of lies" from the man he called the prosecution's star witness, James B. Ellison.

Ellison, who is serving a 20-year prison term for racketeering and weapons offenses, was leader of an Arkansas-based group named The Covenant, the Sword and the Arm of the Lord.

Wayland Parker, attorney for defendant Lambert Miller, said Ellison once went off into the woods, fasted and came out declaring that God had told him he was king of the Ozarks.

"This would be foolishness if they weren't trying to put innocent men in jail," Beam said, urging jurors to look for signs of untruthfulness when Ellison testifies.

Beam is among 10 men charged with conspiring to overthrow the government by force starting at a 1983 meeting attended by Beam, Ellison and others. Beam said he never met Ellison until that meeting and knows nothing of any conspiracy.

Miller and four others are charged with conspiring to murder a judge and an FBI agent who played a part in the prosecution of people who harbored a man wanted in North Dakota for the slayings of two U.S. marshals. The maximum penalty for that charge is life imprisonment.

Prison bonds go to market despite concerns

By JEANETTE ALLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Bonds to finance the first phase of Texas' massive prison construction project went to market Wednesday despite concern over whether the new penitentiaries will pass federal court muster.

The Texas Public Finance Authority sold $155.5 million in bonds to Citicorp & Associates, which offered a 7.096-percent interest rate, the lowest of five bidders. Prudential Bache submitted the second lowest bid for the sale, with a 7.106-percent interest rate.

Jerry Goff, the lone dissenter in the 2-to-1 bond vote, said the ongoing Ruiz federal court case against the Texas Department of Corrections may block the use of the new prisons. The Ruiz suit gives the inmate plaintiffs authority to approve the design construction of new units.

"I'm not sure it makes sense to finance prisons that may not be occupied," Goff said. "At $25,000 a bed that could be an expensive mistake."

Advocates for the mentally ill urged the finance authority to delay the bond sale because they said the TDC was getting more than its share of a $500 million bond package designed also to fund construction at the Texas Youth Commission and the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

"My final and greatest concern is that the sale of the bonds at this time for prison construction would inadvertently block appropriations by the 71st Legislature for construction of sorely needed housing for mentally disabled citizens," Genevieve Hearon, president of the Texas Alliance for the Mentally Ill, wrote in a letter to the Bond Review Board.

An Austin woman and the Austin Alliance for the Mentally Ill also wrote state officials, citing the problems with the sale stemming from the Ruiz case and questioning whether TDC violated the Legislature's intent in trying to build two rather than one maximum-security prisons.

With approval from Attorney General Jim Mattox late last month, Gov. Bill Clements used an emergency provision of the budget bill to authorize construction of two prisons. Advocates for the mentally ill challenged Clements' claim that TDC needs two maximum-security units because of the increasing number of violent offenders in the system.

Jim Thomassen of the attorney general's office said plaintiffs in the Ruiz case don't have veto power over the prison construction. "The TDC does not anticipate any delays, otherwise it would not have asked for this amount of bonds," he said. He added, however, that the inmate plaintiffs have the right to control the occupancy of the new facilities.

Harry Whittington, chairman of the finance authority, said the agency should step up its oversight of the TDC to ensure that the public's money is being spent effectively. Because cities and counties are spending a "substantial" amount of money for lobbyists to influence the TDC's decisions on where to build the new prisons, he said, the authority should ensure bond proceeds are not used to reimburse local governments for lobbying costs.

Mattox urges appellate court to move in Brandley trial

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals has been urged by Attorney General Jim Mattox to act quickly on a months-old recommendation of a new trial for convicted killer Clarence Brandley, who is on death row.

"Statewide and national attention is focused on the criminal justice system in Texas. All involved in this case ... deserve to have this case resolved consistent with the high standards traditional to the criminal justice system in Texas," said the brief filed Wednesday with Mattox's motion to expedite legal proceedings in the case.

State District Judge Perry Pickett in October recommended to the appeals court that Brandley be granted a new trial. Pickett said after an evidentiary hearing that racial prejudice, perjured testimony, intimidated witnesses and a biased investigation marked Brandley's conviction and death sentence.

Brandley, who is black, was convicted of killing Cheryl Fergeson, a white girl, in a 1980 attack at Conroe High School. Brandley, 37, worked at the high school as a janitor.

Texan with corneal transplants recalls 'when I was blind'

AP Laserphoto

After 53 years of blindness, Richard Riley is learning to live in a sighted world following a cornea transplant. With the aid of telescopic glasses he practices using his sight by watching sports and game shows on television.

By PATTY REINERT

HARLINGEN (AP) — Richard Riley stepped outside his front door and into the bright sunlight.

"I love that tree," he said, pointing to a huge pecan in his front yard. "When I was blind, I used to go around it with my hands, and to be able to look at it now with my eyes is just tremendous."

Riley, 55, has many "when I was blind" stories. He remembers seeing a few things as a small child — clouds, a dim outline of his house and colored balloons his parents bought for him.

But by the time he was 2, Riley had lost one eye to an infection and had only light perception in the other.

"I functioned as a blind person for 53 years," he said. "I went to the school for the blind. I read in Braille. I had people read to me. I used a cane."

Riley, a retired vocational rehabilitation counselor, devoted most of his adult life to the Texas Commission for the Blind where he counseled others with vision problems.

Through his work with the commission and his membership in the Lions Club, Riley met Dr. Richard Berkowitz, an ophthalmologist with the Valley Eye Center in Harlingen.

"I asked Mr. Riley one question," Berkowitz said. "I asked him if he could see light, and when he said he could, I told him he should come into the office so I could examine him. Usually if a patient can see light, there's hope.

'It was at least three years later when he finally came into my office," Berkowitz said. "I guess he was busy."

"My family and friends kept nagging at me to go," Riley said, "So finally...just to get them off my back I went in.

"He examined me and said, 'Mr. Riley, I think I can help you.'

"I was skeptical," Riley said. "There's a question of how much you're going to be able to see and whether you want to see. Some people have only been blind for a few years and of course they want to get their vision back, but if you've been blind all of your life like I was, you're used to it.

"I talked to my wife and prayed about it and finally decided to give it a try," he said. "I had spent my whole life counseling people who were going to have (corneal transplant) surgery and then when I was told maybe I could benefit from it, I was so nervous I almost backed out."

One week after he made the decision, however, a cornea was ready for him.

"Before I knew it, I was in the hospital and back home again that night. I didn't have a chance to back out," he said.

Berkowitz said the 1½-hour surgery performed under local anesthesia involved removing a cataract from Riley's eye and transplanting the cornea.

"As soon as they removed the cataract, the light flooded my eye and I could see the doctor's hand," Riley said. "It was incredibly painful, but the sensation of seeing light was unbelievable.

"I was so scared to stay awake for the surgery, but I'm so glad I did or I wouldn't have had that experience of seeing the light.

"The next day when they took off the patch, the first thing I saw was my wife's face," he said. "It was a tremendous thrill to see her."

"Mr. Riley is my No. 1 success story," said Berkowitz, who transplants about 50 corneas a year.

Because there's no blood circulation in the cornea, there is little chance of rejection and the success rate for most corneal transplants is 90 percent. But because of Riley's unique condition, Berkowitz said he had estimated there was a 50-50 chance the surgery would be successful.

"Considering the fact that he didn't see anything his whole life, it was really a remarkable recovery," he said. "He's seeing a lot more than I ever expected."

Two years after his surgery, Riley sees clearly enough to get around without a cane. He watches sports, nature programs and game shows on television with the aid of telescopic glasses. He is also learning to read visually and hopes to take up painting.

But he said it's not easy.

"Seeing people don't always understand that sight is not an automatic thing," he said. "It's a process of learning to identify objects visually. Everybody learns to see gradually from the time they are born and a person's sight isn't fully developed for several years.

"And nothing looks visually like it looks to a blind person," he said. "A basketball, for instance, looks nothing like it feels.

"When I was first learning to see, I saw a salt shaker on the table and I said, 'What's that?' They told me to pick it up and feel it and I said, 'Oh, that's a salt shaker.' "

Presidential candidates converge on Dallas for debates

By JAY JORDEN

DALLAS (AP) — The first major event of the "Super Tuesday" campaign gets under way this week at the Texas Debates as candidates from both parties converge on Dallas in their bids to capture March 8's crown jewel.

Texas, which leads the 20 Super Tuesday states with 197 Democratic and 111 Republican delegates, is a crucial link for candidates surviving the New Hampshire primary.

"Texas is the crown jewel in this because we are the largest," said state Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle of Sherman.

More than one-third of the delegates to both parties' nominating conventions will be picked in a single day on Super Tuesday, March 8.

The debates, to be aired nationally on the Public Broadcasting System from Southern Methodist University's McFarlin Auditorium, start tonight at 8 p.m. CST with the Democratic candidates. The GOP hopefuls debate the following night.

Sen. Albert Gore Jr., a Tennessee Democrat who calls Southern states key to a presidential win, and Vice President George Bush, a Republican candidate who maintains a Houston address, say they welcome the chance to debate here as campaigning moves from New Hampshire.

Economic issues in the Southwest, including unemployment and the energy industry, will likely take center stage in the debates.

Bush, a former congressman from Houston, well understands important Texas issues like energy and immigration policy and the business climate, said Kevin Moomaw, his Texas political director in Austin.

"Certainly, with a 40-year association in this state, and with George W. from Midland, he understands what's going on down here," Moomaw said. Kansas Sen. "Bob Dole bad-mouthed the vice president in Iowa, but hasn't in New Hampshire and I doubt he will come down here to Texas and bad-mouth him."

Bush, who was born in Connecticut, still claims Houston as his home.

Presidential candidates with Southern ties may have the edge in the debates, coming only two days after Tuesday's New Hampshire primary, in which Bush powered past Dole in the Republican race while Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis won handily on the Democratic side.

With almost all of the precincts reporting, Bush had 38 percent of the GOP vote to 29 percent for Dole. New York Rep. Jack Kemp narrowly defeated former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont and religious broadcaster Pat Robertson in the third-place competition to emerge as a conservative alternative to the front-runners.

Dukakis won 36 percent of the vote. In distant second place was Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt with 20 percent, and Illinois Sen. Paul Simon was third with 17 percent.

Gore, who finished in fifth place with about 7 percent of the Democratic vote, de-emphasized the New Hampshire primary and Iowa caucusing in his strategy.

"He has campaigned harder in Texas. He has focused his campaign on the Super Tuesday states," said Tom Jurkovich, Texas coordinator for the Gore campaign in Austin.

"With 20 states and about 40 percent of the delegates chosen on that day, it made sense to focus his efforts down here," he said. "Being from the region gives him an understanding of the people and concerns. That gives him a certain edge."

Gore was dead last in Iowa after pulling his campaign out of that state last year.

"This is our chance to counter Iowa and New Hampshire and say those two states are too big for their britches and their britches are not all that big at that," Slagle said.

Other Democratic candidates scheduled to attend the debates are former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt, Dukakis, Gephardt, former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart, the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Simon.

Babbitt had 5 percent of the vote in Tuesday's primary and is probably nearing withdrawal on the Democratic side. He said would spend the next few days meeting with supporters in Washington before making a decision. But Hart, who had 4 percent, said he will wait 30 to 60 days before making a decision on his campaign.

Besides Bush and Dole, Republicans include Du Pont, Kemp and Robertson.

The debates are sponsored by The Dallas Morning News, KERA-TV and Texas Monthly magazine. Roger Mudd, a special correspondent on "The MacNeil-Lehrer News Hour" and former co-anchor of "NBC Nightly News," will moderate.

Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young and Martin Anderson, a senior fellow at Stanford University's Hoover Institution and former policy adviser to President Reagan, will ask first each night about national and international affairs.

Carl Leubsdorf, Washington bureau chief and assistant managing editor of the Morning News, and Paul Burka, Texas Monthly executive editor, will concentrate on regional issues.

"Besides those issues, what's important is how these guys come across, and it may be that many Texans will now start focusing on the presidential race," Slagle said. "Texans have said they want to be able to have a say early on who the next president is."

The Super Tuesday states include Texas, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Virginia and Washington state.

You don't have to be a brilliant mathematician to be a good bridge player. However, some knowledge of the probabilities is a sine qua non if you intend playing the game seriously. This hand, from a recent team match played at New York's Cavendish Club, is purely an exercise in choosing the sounder line.

North-South were a pair of modern bridge scientists. Among the numerous gadgets they were employing were weak jump-shift responses, which accounts for South's initial action. The rest of the auction was normal enough, and the final contract was within the acceptable limits of the requirements at this vulnerablity.

West led the top of his diamond sequence, and declarer's choices were straightforward. Should he play for a 2-2 trump break or a 3-3 club split. In the former case, he would lose only two trump tricks and a heart. In the latter, he would discard one heart on the third club and continue with a fourth club, discarding another heart. Unless one defender held specifically a singleton nine of trumps (highly unlikely on this auction), declarer would lose no more than three trump tricks.

For those who know the basic odds, the choice is simple. The probability of a 2-2 split is almost 41 percent; a 3-3 split happens only about 36 times in 100. That made the play of the hand simple. Declarer won the diamond in dummy and led a trump, won the return and led another trump. That landed the contract.

Friends gather to recall composer's music which 'inspired happiness'

Skelton

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Comedian Red Skelton and singer Mary Martin were among the friends who gathered to remember composer Frederick Loewe as a man who could make life laugh and sing like the Broadway musicals he helped create.

"The tragedy of my life is that I never did get to do a musical with him," Miss Martin, stage star of "South Pacific," and "The Sound of Music," told about 75 friends and fans at an outdoor memorial service at Loewe's estate here Wednesday.

Skelton, a friend for 32 years, called Loewe's music "the pomp and splendor of life — a celestial sound that inspires happiness."

Martin

Loewe, who combined his music with the words of Alan Jay Lerner to create such Broadway classics as "Brigadoon," "My Fair Lady," "Paint Your Wagon" and "Camelot," died Sunday of heart failure. He was 86.

The two-time Tony Award winner and co-writer of memorable tunes like "I Could Have Danced All Night," "If Ever I Would Leave You," and "Thank Heaven for Little Girls" was buried after a private graveside service in nearby Cathedral City.

At the public gathering, Skelton recalled flashes of Loewe's humor: His responding to a compliment that the music in "Gigi" grew on people by calling the show "a musical fungus," and quipping that the best thing about rock music was that a listener couldn't tell if his record was scratched.

"Life was truly a feast for him," said friend Gloria Greer, "and he wanted to enjoy and savor every bit of it."

Dorothy Hart, sister-in-law of composer Lorenz Hart, said Loewe had a flair for the extravagant even before he made it big.

"If he had $90 to his name, then he'd buy $90 worth of caviar," Ms. Hart said.

Loewe grew up in Vienna, Austria, in a musical family and came to the United States in his 20s. His marriage of 26 years to the former Ernestine Zerline ended in divorce, without children.

DALLAS (AP) — John J. Hurt, longtime Southern Baptist editor and former Associated Press newsman, died Wednesday after a lengthy illness. He was 78.

During his three decades as a Baptist newspaperman, Hurt served as editor of the oldest state Baptist paper — the Georgia Christian Index, from 1947 to 1966 — and the largest, Texas' Baptist Standard, from 1966 to 1977.

Hurt worked as a reporter for the Memphis (Tenn.) Commercial Appeal and the Jackson (Tenn.) Sun prior to joining The AP in 1936. He served the worldwide wire service for 11 years, working in Nashville, Memphis and Chattanooga, Tenn., as well as in New York and Atlanta.

He entered denominational journalism in 1947. Hurt, of Dallas, was a graduate of Union University in Jackson, Tenn., and was president of the Southern Baptist Press Association.

He is survived by his wife, Doris, two brothers, a sister and two sons, John J. Hurt III of Newark, Del., and Robert H. Hurt of Washington, D.C. Funeral arrangements were pending.

TEMPLETON, Calif. (AP) — J.C. "Pete" Sebastian, who served the likes of Winston Churchill and Cary Grant at his store outside the gates of the Hearst castle in the 1930s and 1940s, died Wednesday. He was 81.

Sebastian was a landscaper at Publisher William Randolph Hearst's art-bedecked mansion in the 1920s before taking over his father's store.

Hearst, founder of the newspaper group that bears his name and model for Orson Welles' classic movie "Citizen Kane," often entertained celebrities and business and government notables at the hilltop mansion.

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — A man who actor Sean Penn accused of intruding on his property and punching him pleaded innocent to misdemeanor charges of prowling and assault.

Richard Barcelo, 20, of Chino entered the pleas Wednesday in Municipal Court, where Judge Lawrence Mira ordered him to return March 8 for pretrial motions.

Penn and his wife, pop singer Madonna, told authorities they discovered Barcelo and two 17-year-old boys at their estate when they returned home from the grocery store shortly after midnight Jan. 20.

Penn, who plays a policeman in his latest movie, "Colors," subdued Barcelo by striking him on the head with a newly purchased bottle of salad dressing, sheriff's deputies said.

The star of "Bad Boys" and "The Falcon and the Snowman" has had several brushes with the law for scuffles in bars and on movie sets, but reported being the victim twice last month. An Anaheim man allegedly crashed his pickup truck through Penn's gate Jan. 7, and is scheduled for a Feb. 24 court appearance.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Matthew Broderick, who had faced up to five years in prison for his role in a fatal car crash in Northern Ireland, defended a magistrate's decision to fine him for the lesser charge of careless driving.

"I'm glad the court decided that there was no basis for charging me with reckless driving," Broderick said in a statement Wednesday. "There was never any evidence for that charge. They also determined that the details of the accident will never be fully known. However it happened, it was a tragedy."

John Gallagher, whose wife, Anna, 28, and mother-in-law, Margaret Doherty, 60, were killed in the crash Aug. 5, denounced the decision reached Monday in Enniskillen, which amounted to a $175 fine.

Publicist Wendy Morris said Broderick, who was allowed to remain in New York while his lawyer entered his guilty plea, planned to try to speak with the victims' family, "but he doesn't think now is the right time."

The 25-year-old star of the movies "War Games" and "Ferris Bueller's Day Off" suffered a broken leg in the collision. His passenger, actress Jennifer Grey, was not hurt.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. (AP) — President Truman's hometown is honoring CBS news correspondent Charles Kuralt with the 1988 Truman Public Service Award because of the attention he brings to traditional values, the mayor said.

"We felt Charles Kuralt focuses our attention on the pulse of America that President Truman really represented, and on the average Joe or Mary Jones living on the farm or in a small town, living out those values that President Truman has come to be recognized for," Mayor Barbara Potts said Wednesday.

Kuralt, known for his "on the road" reports and as host of "CBS Sunday Morning," will be honored May 6 at the Truman Library, Potts announced.

Artificial mouth gives dental researchers food for thought

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — It looks like an ordinary set of false teeth, but it's mounted in something that looks like a machine-shop drill press.

"It doesn't look like an artificial mouth, but it works like one," said Dr. William Douglas, who directs the Artificial Resynthesis Technology study at the University of Minnesota.

Scientists are using a pair of the bulky machines, the only ones of their kind, to test dental products and conduct other kinds of research.

Douglas and his colleagues can duplicate the rigors of a year of chewing in a single day. That, he says, offers hope for vast improvement in the quality of dental fillings and crowns and in scientists' ability to understand the forces of chewing and digestion.

Without the new technology, Douglas explains, manufacturers must test and prove the durability of their wares in the mouths of real subjects. Years of grinding and chomping must go by before researchers can judge a product's merit.

"If you put this together, you have an investigative tool," said Douglas, 50, who left a research post in Wales to do research at the university.

"If you have an obedient artificial mouth which is believable, you have something to enable you to approach many tough problems that otherwise would be very difficult to do."

The mouth began taking shape when Douglas joined the dental research staff at Minnesota in 1978. His endowed chair is partly funded by 3M Co., based in the St. Paul suburb of Maplewood. 3M is a leading manufacturer of fillings, crowns and other dental products.

"I want to figure out how this thing can give a good simulation of what happens in the human mouth. For that you need a tongue and cheek mechanism. It's very tough. It's a very difficult thing to do."

— Dr. William Douglas, Minnesota dental researcher

Douglas soon learned of a company, MTS Systems Corp., in suburban Eden Prairie that builds test equipment with the precision and sophistication he needed to replicate mouth dynamics in the laboratory.

Along with colleagues Ralph DeLong and R.L. Sakaguchi, Douglas adapted MTS equipment to build the mechanical mouths.

The next step was artificial saliva. A researcher at State University of New York at Buffalo has learned how to make it, and he sends Douglas and company quantities to use with the mouth. Jets shoot the saliva and other lubricants between test teeth the way ducts do in real life.

Along with the mouth, the dental researchers have developed computer imaging technology that maps precisely where and how teeth wear out.

"It's a very painstaking procedure right now, where you're marking on teeth...and measuring them," said Walter Poxon, international professional services manager for 3M. "This computer imaging is the state of the art in dental materials research. It really does give you an accurate picture of what's happening."

Douglas has other, more ambitious dreams for his mouth. Now, it chews only in the sense that it simulates the wear-and-tear of chewing. He wants it to masticate fully — to grind, break down and even swallow food.

The next step: development of artificial tongues and cheeks. Douglas is poring over scientific papers for background while he prepares applications for National Institute of Health grants to finance more work in that direction.

"I want to figure out how this thing can give a good simulation of what happens in the human mouth. For that you need a tongue and cheek mechanism," Douglas said. "It's very tough. It's a very difficult thing to do."

Douglas sees a complete artificial mouth as a research tool for food-product development.

Public, doctors have differing view of care

BOSTON (AP) — More than two-thirds of Americans believe the health care provided by insurance is poor to fair, while most of the nation's doctors rate the care as good to excellent, according to a survey.

The poll results also found different perspectives on how much should be spent to save a life, and who should make final decisions on care for the terminally ill.

The survey conducted for a health maintenance organization by Louis Harris and Associates compared the responses of 1,250 people nationwide with separate polls of 200 physicians, 100 nurses, 200 employers, 50 labor leaders and 100 politicians.

Sixty-eight percent of the general group believes it gets poor to fair health care for the money spent on insurance, while 75 percent of the doctors rated the care good to excellent, the report said.

Fifty-seven percent of the general public believe doctors should comply with wishes of the terminally ill, up from 46 percent five years ago, the survey said. But 66 percent of doctors and 58 percent of nurses disagreed, saying the final decision should be made by a health care professional.

The survey also found that Americans overwhelmingly support providing the best possible health care for everyone regardless of cost, but realize that expensive new technology may force insurers to exclude some treatments.

Ninety percent of all respondents said everyone is entitled to health care "as good as a millionaire could get," but 75 percent said they recognized insurers by the 1990s would have to make tough choices about whether to cover new and expensive treatments.

Seventy-one percent of the general public opposed allowing insurers to set a financial limit on medical treatment that would save lives, the poll said. Only 28 percent of the doctors said insurance should have no limits.

It also found that terminally ill patients are more likely today than five years ago to want the option of deciding whether they should be kept on life-support systems.

Fifty-three percent of those polled believed seriously ill patients should make final decisions about their treatment, up from 43 percent five years ago.

Ninety-one percent supported the use of so-called living wills, written instructions on how a patient should be treated if one becomes too ill to decide. Even larger percentages of doctors and political leaders supported use of living wills.

The general public believes the prevention of life-threatening diseases is the first criteria in deciding which treatments should be covered by insurance, according to the poll.

"The American public gives most credence to procedures that cure cancers, treat premature babies, or help people with disabilities live normal lives," a summary of the survey results said.

Doctor urges caution about anti-wrinkle drug

Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — There is another wrinkle in the story about Retin-A.

In the Journal of the American Medical Association last month, University of Michigan scientists said they confirmed earlier reports that the anti-acne prescription drug Retin-A gets rid of wrinkles associated with photoaging — wrinkling caused by damage from sunlight.

The report was accompanied by an editorial in the journal, in which the chairman of Boston University's dermatology department, Dr. Barbara A. Gilchrest, suggested the dawning of a new age in the relationship between medicine and the face-cream peddlers.

Seattle dermatologist Dr. Marvin Young, however, is less rhapsodic.

"I know the people who did the study, and they are responsible," he said. "The study also appears to have been a good one.

"But before I get too excited, I think I'd like to see more done to determine some of the long-term effects. That may be easier said than done, of course; we're an instant-gratification society, you know."

Young is a physician in private practice but for 20 years also has lectured on his specialty as a clinical professor at the University of Washington School of Medicine.

He is secretary-treasurer of the Washington State Medical Association, former president of the King County Medical Society and considered by some to be the dean of acne specialists here. He has used tretinoin — the generic name for Retin-A — for years in the treatment of that malady.

Young said laboratory studies show a finite ability of skin cells to divide and divide again. Cell division is the process known as growth, the ability to make "new" skin.

"In the lab, the cells will divide only so many times, then quit," he said. "We don't know if this only happens in the lab, or if it also is true in the body."

Tretinoin, a partial Vitamin-A molecule, works by encouraging epidermal cell division — growth. Important in the treatment of acne, Young said, is tretinoin's ability to keep a cell from going off half-cocked — from mutating into an unnatural form — which is what happens in an acne flare-up.

The ability to encourage cell growth, however, is Young's worry, particularly if tretinoin-based creams are to be used to prevent sun damage.

"Of course," he said, "it's only in the laboratory that skin cells show this limited ability to divide. We don't know if the same thing happens in the body, but until we do, that should suggest caution, I think.

"The question," he said, "should be obvious: What could happen when, or if, this ability of the skin to grow were to end prematurely? What about the ability to heal? What about photo damage?"

Young also is concerned with a propensity to irritate.

The Michigan study showed topical use of tretinoin to cause dermatitis in 92 percent of the 40 subjects. Three withdrew because of it.

All were Caucasians who ranged in age from 35 to 70. The average age was 50.

HEALTH BEAT

by Kanti Patel, M.D.

PNEUMONIA

Pneumonia is most frequently caused by bacteria and viruses which often inhabit noses and throats. If these invaders go a step further, entering the bronchial tubes which distribute oxygen throughout the lungs, they can trigger a case of bronchitis. By making their way beyond that to the tiny air sacs where oxygen actually passes into the blood, they can touch off pneumonia. Once in the air sacs, bacteria and viruses can multiply very easily since protection here is minimal. The sacs fill up with fluid in an attempt to rid themselves of the onslaught, making breathing difficult and producing a cough - the characteristic symptoms of pneumonia. Other symptoms vary according to which microorganism is causing the problem.

The most common type of bacterial pneumonia can now be prevented with a vaccine. Those over the age of 60 and anyone with chronic lung disease are advised to contact their doctor for a vaccination. CLINIC FOR MANAGEMENT OF CHRONIC PAIN provides all general physician services and treatment of allergies. In-house laboratory and x-ray facilities are available. Office hours 7 days a week, 8 am-8pm, at 805 W. Wadley @ A. Tel. 687-2704. Workers compensation accepted.

Hint:
Bacteria or viruses are most likely to progress to pneumonia when body defenses are down due to a cold or flu.

WHAT MEETS THE EYE

"Red eyes" may result from contact with smoke, pollutants, air, or chlorine, or stem from fatigue. The redness results when blood vessels dilate in the white portion of the eye. Many popular eye drops are available to treat this problem. They all contain ocular vasoconstrictors which narrow the blood vessels in the eye. Such preparations, however, should not be used when it is necessary to flush, or irrigate, the eye. For instance, when a foreign particle must be flushed from the eye, an eye wash should be used. These products contain no active ingredients which might worsen the irritation and pain. In fact, they consist of sterile water and inactive ingredients that approximate natural tear's salinity and acidity. There will be be no problem getting complete prescription service if you come to ALLEN'S PHARMACY, 2101 Midland Dr., 689-9999. Home delivery is available. We provide emergency service around the clock and there is a drive up window for your convenience. Health aids, school supplies and baby products are stocked. Hours: 8-7 Mon. thru Sat., 8-10 Sunday.

HINT:
Conjunctivitis, red eyes with tearing and a discharge, require an ophthalmologists exam, not OTC eye drops.

Back Talk

A BAD PITCH

One of fashion's most enduring styles has long been a source of trouble for many women. High-heeled shoes may be thought to show women with their best foot forward, but they play havoc with a woman's lower back region. As the high heels elevate the back of the foot, they slant the front of the foot downward. As a woman's weight is thus thrust forward, the back muscles tense up while compensating for the unnatural forward pitch. In addition, a woman tends to lean backward to further compensate for the forward pull. This causes an increase in the curve of the lower back and an additional strain on back muscles. The obvious result is lower back pain which could be minimized with a switch to lower heels.

Whatever the cause, people often needlessly endure prolonged lower back pain. Often one has the misconception that there is no alternative but to suffer. That is not necessarily true. CHIROPRACTIC CENTER, 2206 W. Louisiana offers the chiropractic applications that can offer freedom from such discomfort and a return to a pain free lifestyle. Call us today to learn more about how we may help you. Tel. 683-3244. Hours: 9-6 Mon., Wed., Thurs., 9-1 Tues. & Fri.

HINT:
Because most cars have seats that are built for men, women should use lumbar-support pillows while driving.

Dan Jansen tries in 1,000 tonight

By STEVE WILSTEIN

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Dan Jansen skates one more time tonight for his sister, himself and a beleaguered American team in the Winter Olympics.

The young speed skater won't be favored in this 1,000-meter race, but a nation that suffered with him when he sprawled on the ice in the 500, just hours after his sister's death, will be pulling for him.

"Dan seems to be in good shape mentally, really sound," says Coach Mike Crowe. "I think he's confident. He's a lot more up, a lot more focused, a lot more keyed on what he's doing. I think he will be 100 percent."

THE UNITED States has only a single bronze going into the sixth day of the Games, and poor prospects for many more medals. The Soviets lead the medal list with three golds, four silvers and two bronzes.

The U.S. hockey team needed an upset Wednesday night against the powerful, more experienced Soviets in order to have a good shot at reaching the medal round, but a wild rally ended too soon and the Soviets won 7-5.

It was a day of disappointment more than magic all around.

Pirmin Zurbriggen, the stylish Swiss downhill gold medalist, unartistically and quite unexpectedly tripped 150 yards from the finish line in the slalom portion of the combined event and blew a certain gold.

"I knew that to win the gold I only needed to ski safely to the finish line. I was relaxed," he said. "I was totally surprised when I found the gate between my skis and I fell. I still can't understand how it all happened."

Neither could Austrian Hubert Strolz, but he didn't mind. He slipped into first place to take the gold while countryman Bernhard Gstrein moved up for the silver and Swiss Paul Accola got the bronze.

The U.S. barely missed a medal in 5,000-meter speed skating when Eric Flaim of Pembroke, Mass., finished fourth behind gold medalist Tomas Gustafson of Sweden, silver medalist Leo Visser of the Netherlands and bronze medalist Gerard Kemkers, also of the Netherlands.

Ponies, Hogs win breathers

Associated Press

Co-leaders Southern Methodist and Arkansas got rare breathers in the thrill-a-minute, Southwest Conference basketball race on Wednesday night and they probably needed them for what's coming up this weekend.

SMU tied a school record with nine, 3-point shots in an 86-68 victory over Rice while Arkansas got revenge on Texas A&M with a 79-58victory in Fayetteville. SMU and Arkansas are locked for the SWC lead with 9-3 records.

In other games, Texas edged Texas Tech, 63-59, Houston whipped Texas Christian, 66-47 and Baylor defeated Angelo State, 75-57 in a non-conference game.

SMU hosts Houston Saturday afternoon in a regionally televised game while Arkansas visits the Heart O' Texas Coliseum in Waco where the Baylor Bears always play tough.

The Mustangs gave Coach Dave Bliss his third 20-victory season in five years with the victory over the Owls.

"The 20 victories are nice but I'm worried about what's ahead," Bliss said. "You don't get an automatic NCAA bid just because you've won 20 games."

SMU is 20-5 for the season.

Todd Alexander hit six of SMU's 3-pointers and scored 20 points. Kato Armstrong had a game-high 22 points for SMU. Rice's Ronald Robertson had 21 points for the Owls.

"We couldn't stop the 3-pointers," said Rice Coach Scott Thompson. "Some of them they hit were from NBA 3-point range."

Tim Scott scored 18 points and Ron Huery added 15 to lead the Arkansas Razorbacks to a 79-58 victory over Texas A&M.

Arkansas, 18-5 overall and 9-3 in the Southwest Conference, shot 65 percent from the field in the first half.

The Razorbacks, who never trailed in the game, led 53-31 at halftime. Texas A&M, now 13-12 overall and 5-6 in the SWC, never cut the deficit to less than 22 points in the second half and trailed by as many as 29.

Lang finished with 13 points, nine rebounds and three blocked shots. Larry Marks added 10 points and seven rebounds.

Texas A&M was led by James McGhee's 12 points. He was the only Aggie who scored in double figures.

"In the first half, we played better than we have in a long time," Arkansas Coach Nolan Richardson said. "When the ball falls, we're tough. We're capable of shooting like that."

"I was very impressed with Arkansas," Texas A&M Coach Shelby Metcalf said. "In the first half alone, I think they had five baskets off the transition and seven offensive boards."

Junior forward Alvin Heggs came off the bench to score 22 points and lead Texas to a 63-59 victory over Texas Tech.

It was the fifth straight loss for the Red Raiders, who fall to 8-14 overall and 3-8 in conference, and their 15th consecutive loss on the road.

Chaparrals travel to Snyder for WTC

From Staff Reports

With a lock on a spot in the Region V Tournament, the Midland College Chaparral basketball team now hopes to continue its winning streak against Western Texas College 8 p.m. tonight at Snyder and Clarendon 5:30 p.m. Friday back home.

The Chaps nailed themselves at least a share of fourth place in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference with an 84-66 win over Howard College Monday.

Friday's game is the third try for Clarendon to come to Midland. The game originally was scheduled for Jan. 28, but was postponed because Clarendon College coach Joe Mondragon's son was hospitalized and there was no assistant coach to bring the team to Midland.

That game was reset for 2 p.m. Feb. 13, but a communications problem left the Chaps standing on the court while the Clarendon team still was on the bus headed south for what they thought was a night game. Although the game first was ruled a forfeit, MC coach Reggie Franklin wanted to play the game.

Mondragon also wanted to play. His team is playing at Odessa tonight and will stay over for the third-time effort Friday.

The game will precede the Midland Lee-Abilene High game at 8 p.m. with the JV teams playing at Lee gym.

Monday's win moved Midland to 19-6 for the season and to 8-4 in WJCAC. Howard dropped to 11-17 and 6-8. Odessa leads the loop, one game ahead of NMJC two ahead of South Plains, and three ahead of the Chaps.

"Western Texas is no pushover this season, despite their record," Franklin declared. "They beat Howard recently and have been playing much better the second half. We had all we could handle when we beat them (99-85) at Chap Center a month ago. They can light up the scoreboard and are double-tough on their home court."

Western Texas averages more than 90 points per game, headed by Darrell Nelson's 29.2 points per game and 8.7 rebounds. Against MC, Western Texas had three players knocking in 20 points or more. Nelson was on his average with 29, Melvin Thompson had 22 and Bobby Spear 21. The Chaps countered with five players in double figures that night.

Midland College will be shooting for another 20-win season at Snyder. Considered the mark of a good team, the 20-win figure is something Midland fans have come to expect. Chaparral squads have won 20 or more games in 10 of its past 12 seasons and the past nine consecutive seasons. Midland was 17-12 in its first season, 1975-76, and squeaked to a 16-15 mark in its third season, 1977-78, the first year Jerry Stone was coaching at Midland College.

Midland is hosting the 1988 Region V NJCAA women's and men's tournaments.

The women begin play March 1 and the men on March 3. Both Derrick Coleman scored 19 points and garbbed 14 rebounds for the Orangemen, 19-6 and 8-4 in the Big East Conference. Syracuse has swept the Redmen the last two regular seasons.

Matt Brust scored 15 points for St. John's, 15-7 and 6-6.

Iowa St. 102, No. 15 Missouri 89

Lafester Rhodes scored 34 points to snap out of a shooting slump and Jeff Grayer added 27 as Iowa State broke a seven-game losing streak.

Elmer Robinson scored 18 points for the Cyclones, including 16 during a 5:18 span in the second half when Iowa State rallied from an eight-point deficit to take the lead for good.

Iowa State, 17-9 and 3-7 in the Big Eight, had not won since beating Nebraska 114-76 on Jan. 20.

Alabama 88, No. 16 Vanderbilt 77

No. 20 Loyola 107, Pepperdine 95

Bo Kimble scored 32 points as No. 20 Loyola of California extended the nation's longest winning streak to 18 games.

Baseball's super sleuth finds clues in cemeteries

By IRA BERKOW
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — "No," Bill Haber was saying, "I've never been in a cemetery looking for a missing ballplayer. But I deal with cemeteries frequently."

By vocation, Haber of Brooklyn is a baseball historian and statistician. By avocation, he tracks presumably dead, obscure baseball players.

Haber is the Sherlock Holmes of baseball, the Nero Wolfe of necrology.

When Haber came across the name of one "Samuel Powell" in a baseball encyclopedia, he was intrigued. Powell pitched in two games for the St. Louis Browns in 1913. Other than the listing of his name, there was not an ounce more of background information about him.

Who was Samuel Powell? Haber asked himself.

By "incredible perseverance" over a period of years, says Haber, he found out. Samuel Powell was actually Jack Powell who was actually Reginald Bertrand Powell. Haber traced him to a small newspaper clip in the Memphis Commercial-Appeal on March 12, 1930. The headline read: "Man Chokes to Death Attempting to Swallow Half Steak in One Bite."

In a "cafe on South Main Street," Reginald B. "Jack" Powell, then 38, sought to establish that he was indeed "the fastest eater" in Memphis. He ordered a large steak, cut it in half and, while customers and the proprietor watched, tried to swallow one of the halves. "After a couple of chews," said the newspaper account, "Powell began choking and grew frantic in his efforts to dislodge the piece of meat from his throat. An ambulance carried the man to St. Joseph's Hospital.

"While physicians strove vainly to remove the steak, Powell died on the operating table."

HABER, SADDENED to learn how Powell had met his end, was nonetheless pleased that the case was finally solved.

From 1901 through 1985, there have been 10,844 players and nonplaying managers in the major leagues, said Haber, "and of that number, as we speak, 6,038 are living, 4,734 are deceased, and 72 are missing."

They include some like pitchers Joey Jay and Ed Rakow and Phil Ortega. But it's old guys, little-remembered guys who vanished without a trace years ago, like Dummy Deegan and Joseph Aloysius Pepioski and Oscar C. (Otto) or (Rube) Peters, who make Haber's pulse beat quicker.

Since 1969, Haber has been searching for these old players whose deaths, according to The Baseball Encyclopedia and the Baseball Hall of Fame, have gone unrecorded. He has located nearly 300 of them.

Haber never leaves New York, conducting his searches from home by calling cemeteries and next-of-kin, and next-next-of-kin, writing letters, and consulting libraries and old newspapers files. He also keeps in touch with a network of baseball historians and others around the nation who burn with a passion for baseball nuggets.

There is something about an unrecorded death that challenges this slender 44-year-old man whose eyes, through spectacles, gleam with a gentle but unmistakable fervor when discussing his quarry — in regard to both his

Coach says Mustangs run honest program

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist track coach Ted McLaughlin says he runs an honest program and believes reports of an NCAA investigation of the Mustangs' track and basketball programs are exaggerated.

The Dallas Times Herald reported Wednesday that the National Collegiate Athletic Association is investigating possible rules violations in the track and basketball programs at SMU.

The reports from sources close to the investigation, SMU athletic director Doug Single and NCAA director of enforcement David Berst.

Berst indicated that it is possible that if the violations are serious enough, the programs could face a fate similar to the Southwest Conference school's football program.

The NCAA suspended SMU's football program for the 1987 season and imposed severe enough sanctions for the 1988 season that the school decided not to resume football until the 1989 season.

If the NCAA finds violations that occurred before the football team went on probation for recruiting violations in August 1985, the programs in question would be subject only to sanctions and probation.

If violations are found to have occurred in any SMU sport after August 1985, that sport would be subject to the so-called death penalty.

McLaughlin said he is often accused of committing NCAA violations by the media and other coaches.

Swirling, 50 mph winds scuttled Matti Nykanen's quest for a second gold medal in ski jumping. The "Flying Finn," who won the 70-meter jump, was set to try again today in the 90-meter team event.

THE FINAL two runs of the women's luge also were postponed until today with the possibility of an East German sweep if the winds kick up too hard again and force cancellation of the runs. American hopeful Bonny Warner of Mount Baldy, Calif., was eighth after two heats.

For a few minutes in a gutsy third-period comeback by the U.S. hockey team, the game seemed "Miracle on Ice II," a sequel to the 1980 gold medal hit.

This time the Soviets led 6-2 when the Americans rallied, Lane MacDonald, Scott Fusco and Todd Okerlund slapping in three goals in rapid succession while the Saddledome rocked with "U-S-A" chants, foot stomping and wild yahoos.

Sticks were cracking and jagged pieces flew across the ice. Players slammed each other into the boards. Skates shrieked. Nobody quit.

"These guys don't know the meaning of the word that begins with 'Q,'" said assistant U.S. coach Ben Smith.

The game had all the makings of another emotional triumph by the pumped-up Americans, but the Soviets abruptly ruined the plot with another goal that assured them a perfect 3-0 record.

THE AMERICANS were left with a busted miracle and little chance for a medal. They need to beat Norway in their next game, then top undefeated West Germany even to reach the medal round.

Defense, or rather a lack of it, did in the Americans against the Soviets as it had against Czechoslovakia. The U.S. team has allowed 20 goals in three games.

Still, the U.S. squad isn't giving up, and Team USA General Manager Art Bergland says it's OK for U.S. fans to dream of gold.

"That's great. There's nothing wrong with that. Our kids dream of that," he said. "You can have cynics and critics and you can still dream."

American Brian Boitano is still dreaming of gold and could move a step closer today in the men's figure skating short program.

He finished second Wednesday to Soviet Alexander Fadeev in the school figures, but is rated stronger in today's program and the free skating finale Saturday. World champion Brian Orser of Canada was third going into the short program.

Alysheba looks like No. 1 in workouts

By PHIL NORMAN
Copley News Service

No wonder the great Alysheba may go favored over 1987 Horse of the Year Ferdinand in the 51st running of the Santa Anita Handicap Mar. 6.

Forget the weights, whatever they may be, Alysheba seems to be living in a world all his own these days with high-octane performances both in workouts and in races at the Hollywood Park and Santa Anita racing strips.

Trainer Jack Van Berg unravels a story so bizarre it has racing veterans rubbing their eyes in disbelief:

"I have to clear out half a barn when Alysheba works out because there is no one horse or two of them that can stay with him when he is on the race track for a morning drill.

"I have set up a kind of relay arrangement among my less expensive horses so that Alysheba can get the full benefit of a workout as he points for the big handicap. There is absolutely no horse capable of staying with him for a quarter of a mile.

"Since none of my cheaper horses can stay with him for very long, I position three or four of them around the track where they can pick up the drill as Alysheba flies past. When one horse breaks off after being overhauled by Alysheba, another one steps into the act."

The horse is so good, according to the trainer, that he can pick up horse after horse after horse in a drill no matter how fresh the new ones seem to be.

On an off-workout day, the ploy utilized by Van Berg is to march his star thoroughbred out to the track in the morning and stand him around for a considerable time so the horse can drink in the panorama. Become familiar with the scene.

"He's a curious animal and likes to watch other ones run," said Van Berg. "By doing that he seems to get a better grasp of what racing is all about."

The big race in just over two weeks could be the Alysheba Story.

CHOMPING

Horse of the Year Ferdinand posed for pictures with jockey Bill Shoemaker and trainer Charlie Whittingham outside his Santa Anita stable earlier this month.

The handsome chestnut spied Shoemaker standing in front of him and began nibbling on the jockey's silver hair.

"Stop that," howled Shoemaker, "I haven't got much left."

Shoemaker then looked over to the smooth-pated Whittingham, wondering all the while if Charlie had lost his hair in the same fashion.

Ex—OU gridder in Olympics

By CATHY HARASTA

LEWISVILLE, Texas (AP) — Mike Aljoe, a strapping former University of Oklahoma football player in a T-shirt, would not appear to be at home on a bobsled.

But just a few weeks ago, Aljoe — a former high school football star in Lewisville — was named to the 12-member U.S. Olympic Bobsled Team for the Winter Olympics now under way in Calgary.

"One thing just led to another," said Aljoe, 23, who was a reserve defensive end at OU. "I thought maybe football wasn't for me after all. Bobsledding was my chance to broaden my horizons."

Aljoe, who graduated from OU last year, said he figured his pass-rushing ability would be overlooked by the NFL because of his 6-1 height. But his 215 pounds of muscle could be useful in pushing the 1,300-plus pounds of a bobsled.

His new goal took Aljoe to out-of-the-way places and cold climates. Four times after his first bobsled ride 13 months ago, Aljoe crashed dramatically in the beguiling vehicle of his new dream. One wreck in particular left him bruised and shaken and with the memory of the acrid smell of burning fiberglass.

BUT HE climbed back aboard after each crash.

"I had always watched the bobsledding on TV, but I didn't even know where they did it," said Aljoe, who was named to the No. 3 U.S. team. "I would sit there watching, and I'd think, 'Maybe there's going to be a crash.' I don't want to be any part of that."

But he made some calls to the U.S. Bobsled Federation during the summer of 1986. Then, after the Sooners' 1987 Orange Bowl appearance, Aljoe traveled to Lake Placid, N.Y., to sample a sport he had seen only on TV.

On Jan. 7, 1987, he took his first ride.

"My first bobsled ride was on a two-man sled with Randy Will driving. About halfway through that first run, it really started building up, the rumbling and the shaking. When we hit the turn they call 'Shady,' my head immediately was thrown into the belly of the sled. It was about 80 miles per hour. But I had no concept of time. I wanted to get out.

"Then came what on the Lake Placid course is called the 'Zig Zag.' I thought, 'People have lost fingers, people had been killed on Zig Zag before the track made some modifications.' Zig Zag slapped me in the body of the sled. I had nothing left in my forearms."

Aljoe immediately took a second ride. And the second time, it all began to make sense. He stayed in Lake Placid through the end of February.

Will, who recently pooled his funds with Aljoe to buy an $11,000 bobsled. "He was pretty scared at first, and I had some skepticism about Mike. But now, he's definitely the best pusher the U.S. has."

ALJOE had the best U.S. push times in a competition recently in Igls, Austria. But Aljoe's chance to move up to USA I or USA II, the sleds that will compete in the Olympic races, depends on getting an invitation.

Petty still shaken by 500

RANDLEMAN, N.C. (AP) — Richard Petty is one of several drivers who don't like what they saw in the Daytona 500.

Petty, who came away from a terrifying crash Sunday with only a torn ligament in his right ankle and an aching body, was one of the most outspoken against a NASCAR rule imposed to slow the cars in the interest of safety. But the rule may have made it more dangerous, some contend.

"The race we ran this year was a lot more dangerous than any other I've been to," said Petty, who has a soft cast on his right leg.

Petty said he watched the last 20 laps of the race from a hospital waiting room after being treated and released.

"From my standpoint, it was not a great race," he said. "You can go on the interstate and watch cars run in a line. It was anticlimactic.

"The way we ran in the past, you might have one guy pull away, but you always had some people racing," he added. "You may have seen 17 cars on the lead lap (at the end), but you didn't see anybody doing any racing. At least in the past you expected to see somebody pull out and go for it."

NASCAR slowed the cars with a carburetor plate that restricted the flow of air and gas to the engine, resulting in a loss of about 200 horsepower.

"It did not solve the problem," said Petty, 50, whose 200 career victories is over 100 more than any other active driver. "It did not solve the wrecks or getting cars in the air. They (NASCAR) need to go back to the drawing board."

Petty, a seven-time winner of stock car racing's crowned jewel, complained that he found himself running with cars normally not able to match him.

"I may not be as good as I used to be, but I still got good cars," he said. "The only time I'm supposed to see these cats is when I lap them, and I'm back there running with them the whole race long. The bad part of the carburetors is you don't have any power and you don't have the ability to get out of trouble."

UT-BYU TV? — The Texas Longhorns will open their 1988 football season Sept. 8 with Brigham Young at Provo, Utah, if the Cougars approve the switch of the game that ESPN wants to televise nationally. UT AD DeLoss Dodds said Texas will approve the change from Sept. 24 to the Thursday night date and is optimistic that BYU will do so, too. ESPN also is seeking approval from UT and Texas A&M to move their Thanksgiving game in Austin to a nighttime slot, as was done last year.

HUSKER GREAT DIES— Cecil L. "Sed" Hartman, 87, a back on the Nebraska football team that twice beat Notre Dame in the early 1920s, has died. He was 87. As a 5-foot-10, 185-pound running back, Hartman lettered for Nebraska in 1921, 1922 and 1923. The Huskers beat Notre Dame in 1922 and 1923. The Irish backfield in 1923 later was named the Four Horsemen. Hartman had his greatest day on Thanksgiving in 1923, gaining 206 yards in 28 carries for a 7.4 average as Nebraska beat Kansas State 34-12.

STEELERS TO STAY— The Pittsburgh Steelers agreed to settle a dispute over their lease at Three Rivers Stadium and to continue playing football in Pittsburgh at least through 1999. An agreement culminating 10 months of negotiations allows the team to cancel its stadium lease with two years' notice anytime after 1999. The Steelers would have to pay about half their current rent through 2010 if the city finds no new tenant.

TRUMP DICKERS— A Superior Court judge put off further hearings while negotiations continued with Donald Trump about the possible purchase of the financially troubled New England Patriots.

BROWN LOSER— Chris Brown of the San Diego Padres lost his salary arbitration case when arbitrator Frederick Reel chose the Padres' offer of $265,000 over Brown's proposal of $410,000. Brown batted .237 in 1987 with 12 homers and 40 runs batted in. He made $215,000 last season.

Corner Kick
Expect unexpected when Lee, MHS meet

By PAUL BRIETZMAN

In the final action before Saturday's end of the season meeting of Midland and Midland Lee, both teams chalked up shutouts.

Lee defeated PBSA Saturday 1-0 when Arthur Donnelly and Chris Jones set up Clint Hamilton's winning goal.

Midland overpowered Big Spring, 7-0, Sunday as Bernabe Lujan scored three goals, Joe Dominguez two and Chris Lanning and Shane Barden added one each.

Ahead 5-0 at half, the Bulldogs elected to play a man short during much of the second half.

That set up Saturday's 2 p.m. Memorial Stadium showdown between the Bulldogs and Rebels.

ALTHOUGH statistics for the season would seem to favor Lee, and the Rebels did win the opener 3-2, the history of the city final shows this is never a game that goes according to form.

The 1984 finale ended 2-2, although Midland started seven freshmen and has lost two earlier meetings with Lee.

Lee won in 1985, 2-1, over arguably what was the most talented team MHS ever fielded, a team that beat Lee 6-0 in the season's opener.

In 1986, Midland got revenge, blowing out Lee's most talented team ever, 5-0.

Last year, Midland edged Lee in overtime after losing to the Rebels in the first meeting.

This season has also produced its share of contradictions. Midland beat Abilene Cooper, the district's strongest team 2-1, but then bowed to San Angelo 4-0 in its next game. Lee showed a dominating offense in overwhelming Big Spring, 10-0, but then lost to Cooper 5-0 in its next game.

Even the all-time MHS-Lee record is confusing. Lee holds a 5-4-1, but the Bulldogs have outscored Lee, 25-16, in those games.

In the end, the only things for certain in a Lee-MHS season-ender is to expect a very entertaining game.

Admission to Saturday's game is free.

AT THIS time, the MISD apparently is leaning toward granting high school soccer teams UIL varsity status in time for the 1989 season. To recognize the efforts of the players during the last five years, despite the wait for varsity recognition, a short ceremony will be held at halftime to honor the all-time city high school team.

Red Barber, legend of radio, turns 80

By BRENT KALLESTAD

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Three generations after his first broadcast in 1930 and 22 years since his last, venerable baseball Hall of Fame announcer Red Barber turned 80 this week.

"It's a different world," said Barber, who still chronicles the changing game of baseball he has closely followed for more than 50 years. "Baseball is something I'm not familiar with now. Since 1966, we now have player arbitration, free agency, all this money ... Steinbrenner has come in ... expansion."

BARBER AND Mel Allen, were the first baseball announcers inducted in the baseball Hall of Fame.

The "Ol' Redhead" still stays busy.

He is authoring his seventh book, does a weekly show on National Public Radio, and writes a monthly column for the Christian Science Monitor.

"I don't know of anyone today who is in broadcasting on a regular basis who was broadcasting then," Barber, who did major league baseball play-by-play for 33 years for Cincinnati, Brooklyn and the New York Yankees, said in a recent interview. "I was the eyes of the game to millions of people that couldn't see for themselves."

HE WILL be saluted by the local public radio station and in a special tribute Friday by National Public Radio, which has carried Barber on a weekly feature on its Morning Edition program over the last eight years.

Although he still follows baseball, Barber makes no bones about his preference for the game as it was played before today's sterile, artificial-turf stadiums and multimillion dollar contracts.

"I would suspect the attitude of the ballplayers today is almost that of a disinterested businessman," said Barber. "When I came in, a ballplayer had to work his tail off if he wanted to get a $500 or $1,000 raise the next season."

Barber said the late Branch Rickey let his players know of one sure way to get a raise.

"Mr. Rickey wanted hungry ballplayers who knew the only way they were going to get any extra money was to win and get into the World Series," said Barber.

HE BROADCAST Roger Maris' 61st home run; Johnny Vander Meer's second of two consecutive no-hitters; Jackie Robinson's first game and season, and the breakup of Bill Bevens' World Series no-hitter by Cookie Lavagetto.

"Timing is everything in this world," said Barber, who announced five seasons at Cincinnati before moving to Brooklyn in 1939, where he began doing television in addition to radio.

Barber said Willie Mays was the game's best player and Carl Hubbell of the New York Giants the best pitcher.

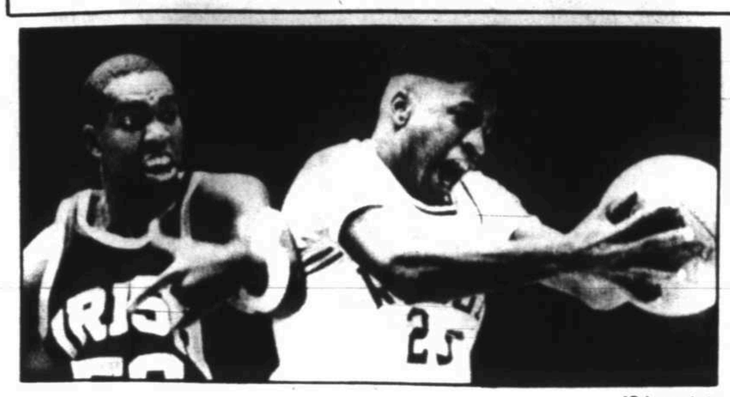

"I will just simply say: 'Who was better at anything than Willie Mays?' " said Barber. "Willie Mays did it all and over a long period of time."

Barber was broadcasting for the Dodgers and Yankees while Mays played for the Giants, but he had plenty of opportunity see the centerfielder.

"I saw that catch he made on Vic Wertz in the '54 World Series," Barber said. "He turned the whole World Series around with that catch."

HUBBELL'S steely discipline appealed to Barber.

"I have always felt that if I had to have one pitcher pitch one game for me and my life was hanging in the balance, I'd want Carl Hubbell," Barber continued. "Not only for his amazing ability and control of the screwball, but because of his spiritual control, his icewater intelligent personality.

SLEUTH

He notes the curious tale of a pitcher who had a 1-0 record in nine games in four years — spanning 1904 to 1909 — with the Dodgers, Senators and Giants. The Baseball Encylopedia, first published in 1969, listed him as Louis G. (Bull) Durham, born in Bolivar, N.Y., in 1881, and the brother of James Garfield Durham. None of that was true. The player's real name wasn't "Durham," he wasn't born in Bolivar, and he wasn't the brother of the other Durham.

"It was a sparse trail," Haber recalls. "Our man was a very private fellow, who seemed to trust few people in his lifetime. Besides that, he had a very lively imagination, and wove stories about himself out of whole cloth." Haber came across a note in a 1909 copy of the Chicago Journal, which said, "Lou Durham is one of the few Hebrews in professional baseball, his real name is Louis Klotzbach."

Not true.

ANOTHER story said Durham one day "laid down his bat" in the Polo Grounds "and walked out to the street" and went to New Mexico where his wife was dying. Haber determined there was no record of any such wife.

Haber happened to have a baseball card of Durham from 1909, when he played with the Giants. "I'd look at it sometimes, when I had hit a dead end," said Haber. "He had this sly grin on his face, and it was like he was saying, 'Ha, ha, you'll never find me.' That got me mad."

Haber eventually uncovered a crucial fact: a Louis Staub Durham was born in New Oxford, Pa., in 1877. Haber would learn that this Durham was really Louis Raphael Staub, that he sold patent medicines and dabbled in "mining interests in the southwest," and appeared in several silent films in Hollywood.

"In some of those old westerns," said Haber, "you'd see a fight and in the background standing at the bar in a big cowboy hat was Durham." The ex-player had left a wife and daughter in Pittsburgh, disappeared, and, unknown to the first family, married again and fathered another family of nine kids in Bentley, Kan.

After a search of nearly 14 years Haber, in 1983, established that Durham Staub had died June 28, 1960, at age 83.

"I was thrilled to crack the case," said Haber, "but I didn't celebrate. No way. I had work to do."

Industry wins first ANWR battle

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration and the oil industry have narrowly bested the environmentalists in Round 1 of their intense fight over petroleum development in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

The administration's victory came Wednesday as the Senate Energy Committee voted 10-9 to open the 1.5 million-acre coastal plain to oil rigs, a controversial step that the Interior Department and oil companies have been urging on Congress for a year.

Under the committee's plan, drilling rigs could join the caribou and musk oxen on the refuge's frigid tundra as early as 21 months after enactment of a law repealing the current prohibition against development in the refuge.

The issue has become a major battleground. The environmental lobby is trying to protect the fragile ecosystem from any development. The other side says the area's potentially huge reserves could rival those of nearby Prudhoe Bay, which accounts for about 20 percent of domestic oil production.

Drilling foes like Sen. Tim Wirth, D-Colo., said that even though the committee was readying legislation for the full Senate, they think they can hold their ground this year in hope that the next president will oppose development.

In fact, Wirth said, Senate action in 1988 may be academic: "Nothing's going to happen this year in the House — zero. The Interior Committee isn't going to bring it up."

Syd Butler, conservation vice president of the Wilderness Society, said that while he was disappointed in the committee action, "I'm real happy with the division: a 10-9 vote is not a clear mandate for opening ANWR."

The American Petroleum Institute said in a statement that "the committee has taken a step toward ensuring the future energy security and economic well-being of our country. ... The time has come to proceed with the legislation. We urge the Senate and the House to move expeditiously."

Wirth and his allies tried to persuade the committee to defer a decision on drilling until the administration could study the nation's long-term energy needs and formulate a policy to meet them.

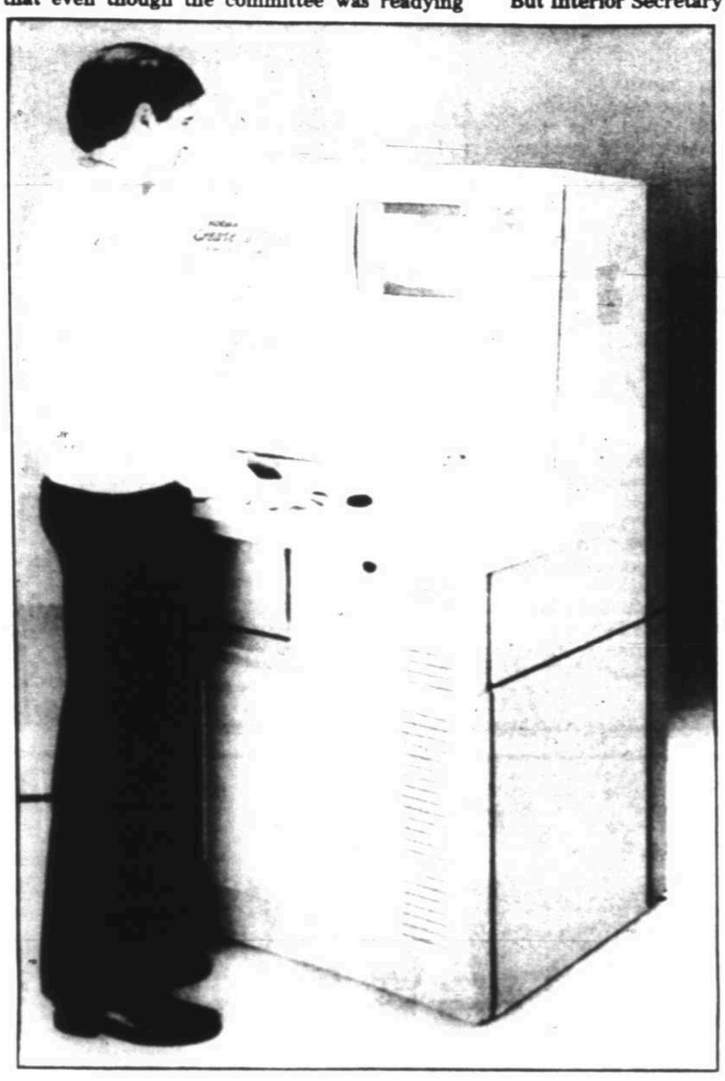

But Interior Secretary Donald Hodel, the point man for the development forces, told the committee in a letter that new oil from the Arctic is needed under any scenario, including increased conservation.

Hodel criticized the direction being taken by the committee as it continues work on the refuge legislation. He objected to proposals for detailed environmental safeguards and a 10-year stretchout in the oil-tract leasing process.

Hodel was also critical of a decision made two weeks ago by the committee to earmark 80 percent of the federal revenues from refuge oil to conservation and species protection programs, with only 20 percent available for general use.

"ANWR's resources belong to all Americans," Hodel said. "Federal revenues generated by an ANWR leasing program should go to the Treasury where they can benefit all taxpayers and serve national priorities."

Bob Walker, an Interior spokesman, said he did not know whether Hodel's problems with the bill could lead to a recommendation that it be vetoed. Walker said Interior officials were pleased by Wednesday's vote because "we're still moving in the general direction we want to go."

NCR Corp. signs on as 14th Sematech member

AUSTIN (AP) — The Sematech semiconductor research consortium has a new member, NCR Corp.'s microelectronics division.

NCR is the first company to join the Sematech semiconductor research and development consortium since its 13 founding members were announced in September, Sematech officials said.

NCR paid the minimum participation fee of $1 million to join the group, which will be based in Austin, and will pay that amount each year the company is a member, said Sematech spokesman Dan Rime.

Sematech conducted a national search before selecting Austin as its home. The semiconductor consortium is expected to employ about 800 people initially and create up to 3,000 additional jobs.

NCR's microelectronics division, which makes application-specific integrated circuits, employs about 1,000 people and has manufacturing facilities in Colorado Springs and Fort Collins, Colo.

NCR will send a team of employees to Sematech's Austin headquarters this spring, said Lea Schwartz, merchandising manager at NCR's Fort Collins plant.

In addition to integrated circuits, the division makes microprocessors, peripherals, digital signal processing devices and memories for use in commercial and military applications.

The NCR division will be represented on the Sematech board by its vice president, James Van Tassel.

"NCR is a firm believer in the benefits of consortium-based research and development work," Van Tassel said.

Ohio-based NCR also is a member of the Microelectronics and Computer Technology Corp. — MCC — research consortium. That Austin-based group is doing advanced computer research.

Other members of the Sematech consortium include Advanced Micro Devices Inc., American Telephone and Telegraph, Digital Equipment Corp., Harris Corp., Hewlett-Packard Co., Intel Corp., International Business Machines Corp., LSI Logic Corp., Micron Technology Inc., Motorola, National Semiconductor Corp., Rockwell International Corp., and Texas Instruments Inc.

Board OKs state bonds

AUSTIN (AP) — The state's Bond Review Board has approved the sale of $38 million in bonds for an Austin site that will house the Sematech consortium.

Sematech conducted a national search before recently selecting Austin as its home. The new semiconductor consortium is expected to employ 800 people and create up to 3,000 additional jobs.

The headquarters will be at a 35-acre site formerly used by Data General Corp. Under the plan approved unanimously Tuesday by the Bond Review Board, the University of Texas System will buy the property for $12.3 million.

The UT System will then lease the site to the new Travis County Research and Development Authority, which will then sell the $38 million in bonds for the necessary improvements.

Bond Review Board members are Gov. Bill Clements, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, House Speaker Gib Lewis, Treasurer Ann Richards and Comptroller Bob Bullock.

Employers endorse AIDS 'bill of rights'

NEW YORK (NYT) — Some of the nation's leading companies and organizations Wednesday endorsed a new 10-point "bill of rights" on AIDS issues in the workplace, formulated by a citizens' commission.

Key elements of the code include a promise not to discriminate against workers with AIDS and a pledge to act to dispel co-workers' fears of casual contagion. It also includes a promise to keep medical records confidential and to prohibit testing for the virus that is believed to cause AIDS.

The move, which reflects a growing involvement by employers in AIDS issues across the country, was described as the first time that a group of companies and organizations in the United States has subscribed to a uniform, written policy on AIDS.

"It's distinctive — unique — at this point, but I think what they've done will certainly be replicated in other regions," said B.J. Stiles, the president of the National Leadership Coalition on AIDS. The coalition, based in Washington, was formed by business leaders last year to promote corporate action on acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

The new code, entitled "Responding to AIDS: Ten Principles for the Workplace," was developed by the Citizens Commission on AIDS for New York City and Northern New Jersey. The commission was formed last year with grants from 17 foundations.

"We believe the AIDS workplace principles can provide leadership in this complex and emotionally charged arena, in much the same manner that the Sullivan Principles offered guidance regarding investment policies in South Africa," said the co-chairman of the commission, John E. Zuccotti, a former deputy mayor.

Among those adopting the AIDS principles were the International Business Machines Corp., the American Telephone and Telegraph Co., the ITT Corp., Time Inc., Johnson & Johnson, Dow Jones & Co., U.S. News & World Report, Warner-Lambert and Chemical Bank.

Joining in the endorsement were New York City's government, the city's United Federation of Teachers, the Rockefeller Brothers Fund and organizations ranging from the Salvation Army to Archie Comics.

Former budget officer predicts 1989 recession

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Rudolph G. Penner, former director of the Congressional Budget Office, is predicting a recession next year. But until then he foresees nothing worse than a "slowdown, and not a very severe one."

Penner, in remarks Wednesday at the Urban Institute, the research organization, said the recession could be set in motion by a decline in consumer purchasing. If so, he said, it would be through "immaculate conception," and unrelated to either last October's stock market crash or Federal economic policy. "The American consumer may be getting more sensible," he said.

The more likely cause, Penner said, would be failure of economic growth. "Not many business executives are planning major increases in capacity," he said.

Economy continues sluggish growth pace

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY Jr.
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The government released two reports Wednesday that indicated the economy would continue to expand, though at a sluggish pace.

Economists said the reports, on home building and industrial production, also provided further evidence that the growth in export business by the nation's industrial sector was partly compensating for weakness in consumer spending, particularly in housing and cars.

The Commerce Department said that builders broke ground for new homes last month at the slowest pace in more than five years, while the Federal Reserve Board reported that output of the nation's factories and utilities showed further gains.

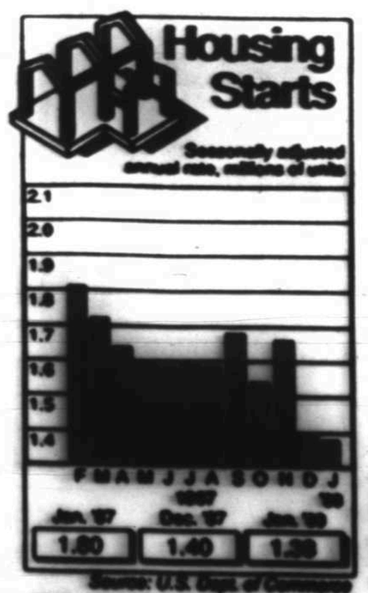

"We've had two soft months in a row now" in housing starts, said Stuart A. Schweitzer, a vice president at the Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. But he also called January's rise in industrial production "more good news."

The October-November stock market collapse still seems to have had little statistical impact on overall retail sales, but it is increasingly apparent that some buyers of big-ticket items have grown wary. This is despite a decline in interest rates, touched off by the Oct. 19 dive in stock prices, that has continued into the new year.

Still, Alan Greenspan, the Federal Reserve's chairman, indicated on Tuesday that the central bank regarded the economy as strong enough to require no immediate spur, like a further relaxation of monetary policy.

Recent negative indicators have included a huge buildup in unsold inventories in the fourth quarter, as well as slower employment growth and a rise in inflation at the producer level in January. On the other hand, surging exports caused the nation's trade deficit to shrink by $1 billion in December, and January's total retail sales climbed substantially.

The Commerce Department said that builders started construction on new homes at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.38 million units in January. This was the slowest pace since the 1.3 million units started in December 1982 at the end of the most recent recession.

Source: U.S. Dept. of Commerce

Although last month's decline was just 1.9 percent, trade association officials and other analysts expressed keen disappointment. Many had hoped that December's 15.5 percent drop would prove to have been a fluke and that the January figure would rebound. Instead, the second straight decline was regarded as consolidating the drop-off and raising fears that it had further to go.

David F. Seiders, chief economist for the National Association of Home Builders, said he was "really worried" about construction of apartment buildings and other structures that house more than one family.

At a rate of 396,000 units in January, activity in this sector was 34.5 percent below the levels of January 1987, the report showed. Multifamily starts rose a negligible eight-tenths of 1 percent last month, after plummeting 31.8 percent in December.

Crude loses nickel in dull trading

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices moved mostly lower in slow trading after an early rally faded Wednesday.

Contracts for March delivery of West Texas Intermediate closed at $16.61 per barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange, down 6 cents from Tuesday.

Among refined products, wholesale contracts for unleaded gasoline closed at 46.66 cents a gallon, up 0.37 cent, while wholesale heating oil was down 0.79 cent at 45.58 cents per gallon.

Analysts said the session started out strongly in the wake of a trade report that showed sharp drawdowns of gasoline and heating oil supplies and a cutback of refinery utilization in the week ended Friday.

At first glance, the figures — released by the Washington-based American Petroleum Institute after the market closed Tuesday — led many traders to believe that prices would increase as existing demand chased tigher supplies.

But this proved illusory, said Donald Morton, an analyst at the Boston office of Prudential-Bache Securities, Inc.

He said the gains turned into losses, "once people realized that the stocks were moving from primary storage into secondary storage in anticipation of the tugboat strike in New York Harbor."

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.43 a troy ounce, up from Wednesday's $6.42.

Dow stays above 2,000 — barely

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market posted some scattered losses Wednesday, running into some resistance after the rally of the past week.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 110.25 points over the past five sessions, slipped 4.98 to 2,000.99.

Declines slightly outnumbered advances among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 746 up, 774 down and 478 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 176.83 million shares, against 135.38 million in the previous session.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $1.58 billion, or 0.06 percent, in value.

Adivsor: Chances of Mesa move 'remote'

AMARILLO (AP) — It is highly unlikely that oilman T. Boone Pickens will move his company, Mesa Limited Partnership, from Amarillo to Fort Worth or any other large metropolitan area, says a long-time associate of Pickens.

"I don't know that consideration has been given to the possibility of relocating Mesa," Wales Madden Jr., a member of a three-person advisory committee to Mesa, said Tuesday.

Madden said chances the firm will relocate are "pretty remote ... absent the acquisition of some company."

In deciding whether to move, Pickens would consider employees' opinions and would have to think the move would be economically justified, Madden said.

Sources told the Star-Telegram earlier this week that Mesa is considering the move to establish a more prominent corporate base and to be near a major airport.

Third First RepublicBank officer resigns

DALLAS (AP) — Harvey R. Mitchell, vice chairman of First RepublicBank Corp., has announced he is resigning to pursue private investments.

Mitchell, 52, is the third former InterFirst Corp. top executive to resign since First RepublicBank and InterFirst merged in May. Robert H. Stewart III, former chairman of First RepublicBank, left to join an oil company. Former President Ronald Steinhart is now the principal owner of the former Bank of Dallas, which was closed by federal regulators.

Mitchell joined InterFirst in October of 1983 and became president of its lead bank in Dallas.

Mitchell said in a prepared statement Tuesday he has no immediate plans beyond concentrating on private investments.

"I felt committed to helping the merger take place smoothly and efficiently," he said. "That process is moving along well, so I believe now is a good time to focus on personal business interests."

Grocery giants flood microwave market

By ELIZABETH NEUFFER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Move over, microwave popcorn. The 30-second hot fudge sundae and many other new microwave food offerings are landing in supermarkets.

The new products — which range from two-minute linguine with clam sauce to a four-minute cake mix to a six-minute soup-and-sandwich combination — reflect a big marketing battle erupting among the powerhouses of the packaged-food business. General Mills Inc., the Pillsbury Co., the Campbell Soup Co., the General Foods Corp., Conagra Inc. and other companies are pouring millions of dollars into developing and marketing products for the more than 54 million American households that now have microwave ovens.

The popularity of microwave ovens in the United States is not especially new. What is new are advances in packaging and food engineering that have allowed companies to expand significantly the kinds of convenience food that can be prepared in the ovens. Microwave fish is now crispier, croissants can now be browned, and the quality of microwave cake mixes is approaching that of convection-oven rivals. As a result, many industry executives and analysts expect the sales of microwave food to continue to grow rapidly.

"You aren't going to see microwave pickles," said Bill P. Pisseck, a marketing research manager at Campbell. "But if there's a product that can be microwavable, it had better be."

Martin Friedman, the editor of Gorman's New Product News, added, "Every major company inside and outside the frozen food cabinet is working on a microwavable product."

Retail sales of microwave food hit $760 million in the year between October 1986 and October 1987, with popcorn accounting for nearly half the sales, according to SAMI-Burke Inc., a market research company. That was an increase of 46 percent over the previous year.

Pillsbury, a pioneer in the market, expects its sales of microwave products to exceed $300 million in 1988, up from $172 million last year, said Larry Haeg, a company spokesman. He said the company plans to spend about $24 million, or 60 percent of its research and development budget, on microwave products.

"If within the next 10 years this is not a multibillion-dollar market, I'll be surprised," said Robert LaGasse, the executive director of the International Microwave Power Institute, a scientific research group in Reston, Va.

Of course, that depends on whether consumers are as crazy about microwave food as companies assume they will be.

The industry has been overly optimistic in the past. For instance, consumers did not gobble up home-style, ready-to-eat cookies and expand overall cookie consumption in the United States as companies had predicted they would. Similarly, consumers decided that some of the higher-priced frozen entrees were not worth the price; sales growth in this category has slowed significantly in the past year or so, and competition has become fierce.

With all the competition for supermarket freezer space, some food companies are concentrating on microwave items that do not require refrigeration. For instance, Geo. A. Hormel & Co., based in Austin, Minn., plans to market its Top Shelf line of entrees nationwide by the end of the year.

What is the advantage of these "shelf-stable" entrees over their frozen cousins? "You can keep them in a cupboard, you can take entrees with you wherever you go, and you can prepare them in two minutes or less," versus at least five minutes for frozen food items, said John L. Vrabel, Hormel's group marketing manager. A typical Top Shelf entree — linguine with clam sauce — has a shelf life of 18 months and a suggested retail price of $1.99.

The secret to shelf-stable food, Vrabel said, lies in both the packaging and processing. Food is sealed from oxygen in a plastic tray, then cooked in a process using steam and hot water.

Cake mixes for microwaves are one of the newest products. Pillsbury last year introduced a microwave fudge brownie mix, and General Mills plans to introduce Microrave, a Betty Crocker cake mix that comes in four flavors, complete with frosting, this year.

Among the array of new microwave-only freezer products are Conagra's Banquet Supreme microwave meat pies, which carry a suggested retail price of 79 cents. Pillsbury plans to introduce Green Giant single-serve microwave vegetables this year. And General Foods will introduce a line of Birds Eye vegetables in a microwavable box nationwide by the end of the year, said Peter B. Robinson, Birds Eye's general manager.

Until recently, one big problem for food companies was that microwave ovens could not crisp and brown food, and would leave some food soggy. But the packages for many new food products — from croissants to fish — have been designed to overcome these obstacles.

Pillsbury perfected one technique in developing a palatable microwave pizza. It uses "susceptor plates" — a thin layer of powdered aluminum laminated under plastic that absorbs microwave energy and heats to a high temperature. These plates are built into the packaging so that crusts will brown or fish will crisp.

Others came up with paperboard trays with absorbent materials to combat sogginess.

Another bugaboo for the microwave cook has been that microwave ovens vary greatly in their wattages. What cooks nicely in 15 seconds in one microwave will be inedible after 15 seconds in another.

Many food manufacturers say they have battled this problem with more specific cooking instructions. Taking a different approach, Conagra announced Monday its "microready indicator." The tiny strip on top of the plastic food container will turn from blue and white in color to all blue as the food is warmed.

"It takes the guesswork out of it," said Karen Marshall, a Conagra spokeswoman. "You should never be able to overcook a dinner again."

Understanding how different food reacts to being zapped by high-energy rays in a microwave has also made a difference. Who would dream of a microwavable hot fudge sundae? But Steve's Homemade Ice Cream Inc. will begin to sell such a sundae in New York and other cities by this summer.

"It's in the molecular structure," explained Emily Skoler, the company's vice president for marketing and advertising. "It's the property of fudge versus the properties of ice cream. After 30 seconds, the molecules in the fudge have gotten excited; the molecules in the ice cream haven't."

Despite such advances, some food experts say that microwave convenience food still leaves a lot to be desired. Complaining about the quality and taste of some products, Barbara Kafka, the author of "The Microwave Gourmet," said: "It's come a long way, but it still has a long way to go."

Many food experts agree that the ultimate success of such foods depends on their quality and affordability, but that the demand is certainly there. "The 60-minute gourmet sounded great 10 years ago," said Karen H. Brown, a spokeswoman for the Food Marketing Institute, an association of food retailers and wholesalers. "But now people want it in 60 seconds."

GROW

Warren Lasko, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, also expressing a downbeat view, said it was clear that starts in multifamily housing were being hurt by more than bad weather and the impact of the new tax law, which discouraged investment in such housing. He cited earlier overbuilding in some regions, high vacancy rates and the unfavorable demographic fact that baby boomers have now become buyers rather than renters.

The stock collapse, he also suggested, may have made builders more cautious, particularly in the South, where the vacancy rate is 11.4 percent and still rising. Only in the Northeast is the vacancy rate, at 4.3 percent, significantly below the national average of 7.8 percent.

Last month, housing starts rose in the Northeast and the West, while falling in the South and the Middle West, the Commerce Department figures showed.

Overall, starts of single-family homes eased to a rate of 1.01 million units, from 1.04 million in December. But analysts said they remained reasonably sanguine about these figures as long as interest rates remained near the 10 percent area.

Euphoria secret of success; Failure too

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — You won't find a course in it at the better business schools, or at the poorer ones either, but euphoria can be a vital ingredient in entrepreneurial success.

Without it, many a successful business might have collapsed in infancy, its founder paralyzed by the awful realities, the desperate odds, the financing crises and the time and energy required.

But, with the realities overshadowed by enthusiasm, the entrepreneur is freed from fear and allowed to focus his or her full powers on what is viewed as the inevitable success that lies ahead.

A certain amount of entrepreneurial euphoria is not only to be expected but is actually necessary when founding a business, says Professor Arnold C. Cooper, a pioneeer in new-business studies.

"You'll find the same kind of optimism when someone buys a house or gets married," he says. "Despite whatever negative factors there might be, those involved convince themselves that they've made the best decision."

And oddly, and in spite of having done everything wrong, their eventual success proves some of them correct.

Cooper and Carolyn Y. Yoo, also a professor at Purdue University, along with Professor William C. Dunkelberg of Temple University, recently studied 2,994 entrepreneurs who on average had been in business a year.

Ignoring the odds, which in some businesses dictate that more than half will fail in the first year, 81 percent of the entrepreneurs said their chances of success were seven of 10 or better. One-third said their odds were 10 of 10.

"Apparently, a kind of psychological process is going on in which, once they're committed to a decision, entrepreneurs feel they can't fail," says Cooper. "They grant that new businesses will fail — but it won't be theirs."

In fact, says Cooper, of more than 50,000 corporations established each month, less than one-half will be in business under the original owner-manager within five years.

Cooper and his colleagues found little difference in optimism among those poorly prepared to start a business and those who were well-prepared. Only 5 percent perceived their chances for success inferior to that of others.

"The negative side is the loss of objectivity and not being able to identify and correct problems."

Moreover, the sense of well-being might cause the entrepreneur to ignore the advice of outsiders.

The study, among members of the National Federation of Independent Business, points to the need for entrepreneurs to seek advice from colleagues, lawyers, bankers and other owners who might spot flaws the entrepreneur cannot see.

Cooper's conclusion: Entrepreneurs in the early stages of their businesses are probably too optimistic for their own good.

But can it be denied that some of the soundest businesses in America were founded by idealists who, in euphoric belief in their invincibility, successfully skirted disaster because they didn't know it was there?

Jackson to attend Mobil rally

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Democratic presidential candidate Jesse Jackson is scheduled to attend a rally this weekend for striking Mobil employees, a union official says.

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox and Texas AFL-CIO President Harry Hubbard also plan to attend the rally, said Jimmy Herrington, secretary and treasurer for the local Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union.

The rally begins at 3 p.m. Saturday at Beaumont's Fair Park Coliseum.

About 1,350 Mobil employees went on strike Feb. 4 over the staffing of a new centralized control center at the refinery. Mobil wants to use supervisory employees, while the OCAW insists that union members work the jobs.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

'Pay as you go' taxes means quarterly returns

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I make estimated federal income tax payments quarterly to cover the tax on my dividends, interest and pension. If I sell stock at a profit now, do I have to amend my next quarterly estimated tax payment, or can I wait until I file my 1988 income tax return in April 1989 to pay tax on that capital gain?

Doyle

A. You can wait until you file your 1988 return, if the amount you will owe come April 15, 1989, will be less than $500 or if the amount you pay through quarterly estimates and/or withholding is equal to 100 percent of your 1987 income tax or 90 percent of your 1988 tax.

Under this nation's "pay as you go" income tax system most folks have enough tax withheld from their salaries and pensions to cover their tax liabilities. People with sizeable taxable income from which there is no withholding are required to make estimated tax payments "quarterly" — April 15, June 15 and Sept. 15, 1988, and Jan. 17, 1989, for 1988 income.

When there is a big change in your income on which estimated tax is due, such as a capital gain, you can amend your estimated tax. You do that simply by recalculating your tax on the next quarterly estimated tax voucher and sending a check for the correct amount when you mail that voucher to the Internal Revenue Service.

Even if your profit on the sale of stock is so large that you end up owing the IRS $500 or more when you file your 1988 return and so large that your quarterly estimates and/or withholdings won't equal 90 percent of your 1988 tax bill, you'll still be in the clear if your quarterly estimates and/or withholdings are at least equal to your 1987 tax.

Q. We have approximately $80,000 in individual retirement accounts from which we will be required to begin withdrawals this year. We feel it would be wise to delay the withdrawals until the end of each year so that interest will accumulate tax deferred as long as possible.

Must we make estimated federal income payments on the IRA withdrawals in four quarterly payments, even though we will not have received the money during the first three quarters?

A. No. You can make your estimated tax payments in four equal quarterly installments, if you are so inclined. However, assuming you won't have income on which estimated tax is due until the fourth quarter of each year, you won't be required to make estimated tax payments for the first three quarters.

Let's say you take your IRA withdrawal on Dec. 31, 1988. You then make your first estimated tax payment on Jan. 17 1989.

Q. I will retire this year. I have the choice of either having income tax withheld from my pension and IRA withdrawals or receiving that money in full and making estimated tax payments quarterly. Which would be better?

A. That's a matter of personal preference. By having enough income tax withheld you won't have to make estimated tax payments. That's a chore many people would like to avoid. However, withholding results in turning your tax dollars over to the IRS sooner.

By taking your pension and IRA withdrawal checks in full and then paying estimated income tax, you'll hang on to some of your tax dollars longer — until each of the quarterly payment dates. Having the use of money enables you to earn more money.

In your shoes, I'd opt for no withholding and go the estimated tax payments route.

Q. Line 9 of the 1988 federal income tax return Form 1040 requests people to list their tax-exempt interest income. Is this mandatory by law? Are there penalties if I do not list this information? What if the figure is not correct, since I did not keep a strict record?

A. It's mandatory, all right — a provision of the Tax Reform Act of 1986. Among the penalties the IRS can assess are those for "willful failure" to disclose required information or keep adequate records. Surely, you can recall the tax-exempt interest you received.

New oil, gas company formed

From Staff Reports

A new independent oil and gas company has been organized, with headquarters in Dallas and field offices in Midland and Amarillo. Diana Carmean, Matador's technical manager, will supervise and maintain the Midland office.

Joseph Foran, president and chairman of the new company, said Matador plans an active drilling and acquisitio program during 1988, including acquistion of selected properties in the Permian Basin of Texas and New Mexico and the Anadarko Basin of Oklahoma.

Matador was formed through the acquistion of oil and gas properties through the private exchange of stock and conversion of partnership interests to stock from several affiliated partnerships, joint ventures and corporations. Included in the acquisition was Foran Oil Co., the company Foran started in 1983. It will be a wholly-owned subsidiary of Matador, and will continue as an operating company.

Other officers include Les Carnes Jr., executive vice president; Frosty Gilliam Jr., manager of acquistions; and Christy Wilson, corporate secretary.

Matador's revenues in 1988 should approach $2 million. The company has proven reserves of 2.1 billion cubic feet of gas and 600,000 barrels of oil, primarily located in Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico.

Top travel agents divulge 'hot buys'

By CHRIS BARNETT
Copley News Service

A good travel agent who knows the hidden bargains is as valuable as a crackerjack accountant who knows tax loopholes. So don't be afraid to shop for a travel agent who shops for you.

Pressure-cooked business travelers and their budget-conscious bosses can save a half-hour commute and up to 25 percent on airfare costs by flying out of Chicago's close-in Midway Airport instead of bigger, busier O'Hare International, advises John McCon, manager of Key Travel in Westchester, Ill.

A one-stop flight offers huge savings over non-stops and the one-hour layover or change of planes is not a major inconvenience, he stresses. For example, a non-stop coach flight from Chicago to Los Angeles is $496 on most carriers. If the airline stops in either Denver or Salt Lake City, the one-way flight is slashed to $144.

"There are plenty of deals around and we always look for the best one for our business traveler clients," says McCon. United's new Chicago-to-Los-Angeles non-stop is $144 one way if you buy the ticket three days before takeoff. And unlike some discount fares, the price of this ticket is fully refundable if you miss the flight or change your schedule at the last minute.

CHICAGO TRAVEL consultant Linda Haster says the cheapest rate isn't always the best bargain. She says her business traveler clients want the "concierge level" in a hotel to get extra pampering — private breakfasts, secretarial services — but they only want to pay an extra $25 per night for these little luxuries. Haster says Hyatt and Holiday Inn Crowne Plaza offer the best value on these private floors.

Haster, who consults with Lennox Travel Ltd., and several other travel agencies, says rent-a-car rates are "totally confusing today." She advises companies to negotiate corporate rates with one company and give it 100 percent of the business. Smaller companies and self-employed individuals who don't command that type of clout should look for off-airport car rental companies that can save travelers from 40 percent to 80 percent compared with the giants.

One journalist on assignment in New York rented a Ford Tempo from Hertz for one day, plus an extra two hours, and the bill, which included $9 a day collision coverage and none of the extra personal liability protection, came to $118.

In Los Angeles, where he uses Bob Leech Rent-a-Car, the cost for a $15.99 a day Toyota Corolla with $3 a day collision insurance and one day, plus the extra two hours, would be $23.95.

ONE SAN FRANCISCO travel agent advises his business traveler clients to spend the weekend on a trip, play tourist and save money.

"Schedule your meeting on a Friday, stay the weekend and you and your company can take advantage of super-saver fares that require you stay over on Saturday," suggests Bob McFetridge, owner of Gateway to Travel in San Francisco. "The money you save on airfare is amazing."

He notes that the one-way trip from San Francisco to Portland is $245 for a coach seat on United, American Airlines, Alaska Air or PSA. But book it 14 days in advance, spend Saturday night and the cost for a round-trip ticket drops from $490 to $188, McFetridge says.

Smart travel agents can find great weekend hotel discounts, he adds. Westin Hotels and Resorts have a "Westin weekend" at all its United States and Canadian hotels that gives "at least" a 50 percent discount on all rooms or suites on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Many provide free parking, complimentary breakfasts and free visits to health clubs.

ONE-NIGHT STOPOVERS are a smart way to save money, too. Say you're flying from New York to San Francisco. You can stop in Chicago for a night, save $325, over the non-stop fare and do business in the Windy City or visit a friend or relative. "It just takes a little more planning today but the savings are huge," says the travel agent.

Companies with armies of employees on the road should always arrange corporate rates with hotels, but the lone entrepreneur or salesperson who works for himself should request a corporate rate when making the reservation.

The best way to unearth bargains is to forge a solid relationship with your travel agent, says Anastasia Kostoff-Mann, president of Corniche Travel in Los Angeles.

"Take the time to make a relationship, get to know us, and that way we can be more creative — find the best angles — for you."

The "best angle" often is an obscure fare that only travel agents and their computers seem to find.

FOR INSTANCE, the VR7 round-trip fare from Los Angeles to Chicago is only $200 on American West Airlines if you buy it seven days in advance and don't mind a quick stop in Phoenix. That same trip — non-stop — on American Airlines purchased seven days ahead of departure is $278.

By touching down in Phoenix for an hour, you can save 30 percent.

Travel writer never called by travel research polls

By FRED FERRETTI
Copley News Service

I do not, absolutely do not, take my vacations with the hope that my journey will be be accompanied by the voice of Willie Nelson. Nor is my favorite in-flight movie "Around the World in Eighty Days." Nor would my vacation be enhanced in any way by having a telephone credit card.

All of which seems to make me an untypical traveler and certainly indicates that the people manning the phones for the recent vacation travel survey taken for Holiday Inns never reached me.

I wonder about all those surveys anyway, those that seem to come at this time each year — the best dressed, the worst dressed, most admired, and lately and refreshingly, the country's foremost liars — I wonder because nobody I know has ever been polled and I have never received a phone call that could be construed as a poll (except those that ask me for contributions to finance such things as VCRs for obscure Himalayan hill tribes.)

At any rate this Holiday Inn survey — which claims to single out "winners of our day" against the background of holiday travel — came up with some rather odd findings.

When people watch movies on airplanes, for example, they prefer "Around the World in Eighty Days," but next in popularity are "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "Murder on the Orient Express." Nothing like having disaster movies with your airline food.

The survey found that most travelers regarded Hawaii as the destination of choice, with London, Paris, Washington D.C., California and New York City following closely behind. Fiji, Afghanistan, Cuba, Nicaragua, Albania, Lebanon and Libya were not mentioned as desirable destinations although I expect there might have been a few out there to mention them, perhaps adventure travelers?

I mean, these are the things surveys, meaningful surveys, should tell us. I am sure that out there in vacationland there has to be someone who might prefer a long weekend in Tripoli to one in Maui. Maybe.

I expect most of us would not need a survey to come to the same conclusions, but that is the way surveys work. They seem either to give numbers as "proof" of the obvious, or to reflect what the publication, the organization, the business, the political party, or the hotel chain would like it to reflect. All the survey need do is pose carefully selected questions. For example, the fourth favorite movie of travelers, after "Around the World in Eighty Days," "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "Murder on the Orient Express" was, drum roll, "Holiday Inn."

You all remember "Holiday Inn" don't you? Me? I recall it at least as well as I do "Attack of the Giant Leeches" or "Ebirah, Horror of the Deep" or "Reunion in Rio."

Going on, the survey reports that among the gadgetry favored by vacation travelers the telephone credit card ranks first, followed by portable personal computers, miniature dictating machines and miniature TVs.

What kind of vacations do these people go on? Nowhere are scuba fins mentioned, or backpacks, or skis, or tennis rackets, or golf carts. I see the family getting ready for its holiday:

"Let's not forget the portable computer, hon," says he.

"Yes dear, or the dictating machine," says she.

"And the little TV," says he.

My goodness, can you believe that!

Anyway, there was some useful stuff attached to the survey, as it turned out. As an addendum to the findings, Holiday Inns did some computations for us and turned up the following:

That all of the wall vinyl in all of the Holiday Inns would cover the Great Wall of China.

Check out the concierge before checking in

By CHRIS BARNETT

NEW YORK CITY — Need a collar stay or a choice dinner table on the Queen Elizabeth II? Call Anthony Pike at the Westbury Hotel in New York City.

He's Mr. Fix-It, the chief concierge and the head of a three-man personal service SWAT team that should have its own TV show. I would call it "Mission Possible."

No request is too small, big or bizarre for Pike and his colleagues. I was in a taxi going to Kennedy Airport and suddenly realized I left my raincoat in a closet at the Westbury. The plane to London was leaving in an hour and there was no time to turn back.

I rushed to a phone at the airport, called the hotel and asked night concierge Marvin Brailsford to air-freight the coat to my hotel in London.

"Not a good idea sir," he said. "It will be kept at customs and you will have to go out to Heathrow airport to retrieve it. Too costly, too time-consuming. I'll bring it out to you."

I was flabbergasted. But Brailsford arranged to have me wait in the Pan Am Clipper Club, even though I wasn't a member, drove to the airport on a rainy night and delivered the coat with a smile.

Going above and beyond the call of duty is just business as usual at the Westbury, a quiet 305-room European-style hostelry at 69th Street and Madison Avenue on the Upper East Side a block off Central Park.

THIS ISN'T a convention hotel and you never will see a conga line of inebriated auto dealers or insurance agents snaking through the halls. Personalized pampering, not partying, is the top priority here.

"I can do anything and everything," smiles Carlos Freire, weekend concierge. He tells of a guest who rushed off to a ball in Boston but left her gown and jewelry in her room. "We retrieved it, wrapped it, took it out to LaGuardia and put it on the Eastern shuttle and she got it in time for her ball," he recalls.

While celebrities such as Joan Rivers and former presidents such as Richard Nixon bunk at the Westbury, business people who hate cavernous hostelries and crave the European touch are calling it home in Manhattan. One reason: the attentive concierge crew.

Freire says one executive needed a computer and printer within an hour to help him close a sale. It had to be an Apple McIntosh to run his spread-sheet software and print out a contract. In fewer than 60 minutes, the Mac and Imagewriter were delivered, tested and up and running. It cost the guest $251 for a day's rental but he didn't care, it helped him seal the deal.

Need a letter typed in a hurry? Freire will ask a hotel secretary to handle the request or will summon a personal secretary from an agency at the rate of $30 an hour, a fair price by New York City standards. The Westbury will handle your photocopy requests and can fax documents anywhere in the United States ($6 per page) or in the world ($10 per page).

A SKILLED concierge is like a personal ambassador. He — or she — knows how to make things happen discreetly, diplomatically and with a sense of style.

A guest wanted to dine at a "good Japanese restaurant" in midtown on a Sunday. Tall order since most good restaurants are closed that day. But Freire recommended Chitose on First Avenue between 63rd and 64th streets, the guest said fine and the concierge replied soothingly, "Fine, I'll take care of that for you." The reservation was made.

Within the space of minutes, one guest wanted a pair of "short collar stays," another wanted a bottle of champagne chilled so he could "dazzle his wife," and a third needed a baby sitter. Finding the collar stays was the toughest assignment but Freire located a collar pin; baby sitters come from an approved agency at $7.50 an hour.

It's Anthony Pike, the chief concierge, who really has the clout in New York and around the world. Want to impress a client who's meeting you in New York? He will arrange to have a limo stocked with champagne, flowers and fruit waiting at an airport or a hotel.

He can get theater tickets to sell-outs like "Les Miserables," exchange your dollars for foreign currency in 30 minutes, and he once arranged for a Westbury guest to get his favorite table in the dining room of the QEII — after the liner had set sail. "I called ship to shore to someone I know and arranged it."

Pike is the man to see if you want to get into Nell's, Manhattan's current trendy night spot, but he can gain admittance only on the weekdays. He has influence at Regine's, El Morocco and Club A, to name a few.

PLUS, AS a former musician, he can recommend where to go for jazz — Sweet Basil or Vanguard, the longest-running jazz club in New York City. Or where to see Woody Allen playing the clarinet on a Monday night — Michael's Pub on 3rd Avenue.

Perhaps Pike's greatest coup was the time he called his counterpart at the Hotel Des Paris in Monte Carlo and arranged to get a Westbury guest a certain balcony overlooking a hairpin turn during the Monaco Grand Prix. Says Pike, a member of Les Cles D'Or, a global society of hotel concierges, "I just called Jose and it was done."

DEAR ABBY

Girl's sleepy boyfriend must wake up, see his problem

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I wonder if you can help me. I've been seeing a man for almost two years. The problem is he keeps falling asleep on me. No matter what position he's in, sitting or lying, he will doze off. I've talked to him about it and asked if maybe I was boring company, but he says it's not me — it's just him. He says he loves me and he's very comfortable around me, so I shouldn't feel hurt.

He does a lot of driving on his job — sometimes from 7 a.m. until 7 p.m., which can be tiring, but you can't imagine how I feel when I'm talking to him and he doesn't answer me because he's out like a light. (This even happens when we're making love, which hurts my feelings.)

Have you any suggestions on how to handle this? — SLEEPY'S GIRLFRIEND

DEAR GIRLFRIEND: Tell your friend to see a physician — and the sooner the better. Frequent drowsiness, then dozing off are the classic symptoms of narcolepsy — an uncontrollable tendency to fall asleep. If he should fall asleep while driving, he could hurt (or kill) himself and others. His doctor can prescribe medication to control this condition.

DEAR ABBY: I am an 18-year-old girl with a major and difficult problem. My grandfather and I have been really close ever since I can remember. He was always my favorite grandparent. Well, I think he took our closeness too much to heart, because he has made some sexual moves on me recently. Luckily I am old enough to know that's just not right. I backed off and acted like nothing happened. Even though it wasn't a total act of molestation, a grandfather just doesn't touch his 18-year-old granddaughter the way he touched me.

There is a big concern I have now about my two younger cousins. They aren't old enough to know what's going on if he tries something like that with them.

I told my parents about it, and they are confused about what to do. Grandpa is a well-respected man in our family and the community, too. If this was brought out into the open, it would be terrible. What should be done? — CONFUSED IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR CONFUSED: Your parents and you should talk to Grandpa immediately. It's important for you to be present so that the truth cannot be easily denied. This should not be an angry confrontation. Grandpa could be sick and in need of treatment. He should first be psychiatrically examined. Treatment and counseling may be in order.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter was born Dec. 25, 1986. I need to know if last December (1987) can be considered her first or second Christmas?

My mother says it is her second Christmas. I say it's her first birthday, so it has to be her first Christmas, too. What do you say? — HEATHER'S MOMMY

P.S. She arrived before noon, if that makes any difference.

DEAR MOMMY: If your daughter was born on Christmas Day 1986, she celebrated her first birthday and her second Christmas on Christmas Day 1987.

DEAR ABBY: Will you please tell me how to handle the annoying problem of how to answer people who ask, "How tall are you?" I'm 6 foot 6, and nearly every day some stranger asks me how tall I am. Other questions, such as "How's the weather up there?" are also a source of irritation to me.

I would never think of asking a fat person, "How much do you weigh?" So what makes people think it's OK to ask a tall person how tall he is?

Please answer this in your column. You will be doing a lot of tall people a favor. Thanks. — TALL

DEAR TALL: When you're asked how tall you are, good-naturedly turn the question around and ask, "How short are you?" And to "How's the weather up there?" you could reply, "Same as the weather down there, pal."

Most people don't mean to be rude when they comment on a stranger's conspicuous size — "Hi, Shorty," "Hi, Tiny," "Hi, High-Pockets," "Hi, Slim" — they're just attempting to be friends. So keep your cool, but don't freeze up.

DEAR ABBY: I work in an office as a secretary. I enjoy dressing in the latest styles. I am 40, and my clothes are in good taste and appropriate for a woman my age. I also wear make-up — but it's subtle and never conspicuous. I keep my hair attractively styled, too. I take pride in always looking well-dressed and well-groomed. I think people who always look their best feel better.

My problem: My husband, who is 44, feels differently. He thinks a woman dresses stylishly because she wants to attract attention, hoping that men will look at her and ask her out! Abby, he is wrong in my case. I want to look my best for myself. I am not trying to entice men to notice me and ask me out. I want people to think I look nice, but I do not want men to lust after me.

Abby, I work from 8 to 5 and never go anywhere else without him, except for marketing and to shop for clothes. He even gets angry if I wear a little perfume. What do you make of this situation, and why does he act this way? — CONFUSED IN MISSISSIPPI

DEAR CONFUSED: Your husband is pathetically insecure and his accusations are insulting. He would prefer that you were so plain you blended into the woodwork. He feels that he might lose you because he himself is nothing special. The problem is his — not yours.

Some commercials memorable for awfulness

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

Everyday day, consumers are bombarded with advertisements and commercials of every shape and size, with the idea that somehow the commercial will convince the consumer to buy that product. And every day, consumers mostly ignore these messages.

Granted, some of these advertisements are memorable enough to change the language — witness the popularity of "Where's the beef?" and its rival, "You deserve a break today."

However, every once in a while a commercial comes along that is memorable for how awful it is — it makes you wonder how manufacturers have the nerve to publish or broadcast something of that nature. For instance:

■ King Kuts dog food. Now I ask you, would you like to see your dog, your "man's best friend," your four-footed companion running around the yard with one of those ancient Egyptian hat things on his head? Neither would I.

■ Doublemint gum. Do they really expect me to believe that two dorky-looking twins can persistently ignore the friendly overtures of two OK-looking guys, share gum with each other, finally smile at the afore-mentioned guys and walk away from them! Give me a break — what woman in her right mind would prefer gum to guys!

■ Pringles potato chips. Don't get me wrong, I like potato chips as much as the next junk food junkie. But Pringles aren't real potato chips — they're reconstituted from potato flakes or something equally artificial. I just can't imagine jumping around for fake potato chips.

■ Exercise tapes, magazines or equipment. If they want me to believe those things really work, they better get some models who aren't quite so perfect. Nothing will make me believe any of those models were ever in need of the exercise product being advertised. Maybe some nice before and after pictures would work...

■ Laundry products. One of my co-workers becomes highly offended at the commercials that show women (always women, never men) pulling perfectly pressed clothing out of the dryer, not a wrinkle in sight. Granted, dryers usually do remove most of the wrinkles from clothing, but only if you get them out of the dryer right away, and never all the wrinkles.

These are only a few of the stupid commercials that come to mind. I know there are others...

BETTER BUSINESS

Consider needs, budget before hiring tax preparers

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Schmidt

This year, more than ever, taxpayers may seek the help of a professional tax preparer in deciphering the complex changes in the tax laws.

Before choosing a tax preparer, consider your needs and budget. Remember, the Internal Revenue Services offers tax assistance through their toll-free hotline telephone number and free publications. Senior citizens 60 years old or older may receive free tax aid from the American Association of Retired Persons.

If your return is fairly routine, a national tax service may be for you. These chains, which maintain franchise offices around the country, usually base their fee on the number of forms and lines that are filled. They may even agree to review the forms you have completed yourself free, because they may discover an error for which they can charge. However, the lack of educational requirements and formal testing procedures of the preparers can result in an uneven quality of work.

If your return is complicated, you may want to hire an enrolled agent, certified public accountant or tax attorney. These tax preparers have more specialized training and, in case of an audit, may be able to represent you before the IRS. Tax attorneys and CPAs also may be able to give advice on tax and financial planning.

When choosing a tax preparer, ask about qualifications and find out how he or she keeps abreast of changes in the tax law. Also ask about the turnaround time for the return and whether the preparer can be reached during the year. Keep in mind, a tax preparer should never quarantee a refund before completing a return.

Before meeting with the tax preparer, organize all documents pertaining to your taxes. You should pull out last year's return and make note of any changes in your financial situation.

Remember, when it comes to filing your tax return, it doesn't pay to procrastinate. If you wait until the last minute, you may have difficulty finding a tax preparer who can fit you in his busy schedule.

John K. Schmidt is president of Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin Inc.

Fresh spinach leaves best salad choice during winter

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

If you cringe at having to pay a dollar or more for a small head of poor quality iceburg lettuce, march right on down the aisle of the produce section and pick up some fresh spinach for your salad.

Consumers can find top-quality fresh spinach in the markets now. Spinach often has a quality advantage over lettuce in late winter, but this is especially true this year due to an unusually small lettuce crop from California.

Spinach is being shipped fresh from the fields in the Winter Garden area of Texas and will be at its peak in flavor and supply through April. Spinach also has a nutritional advantage over lettuce.

Spinach has about five times more iron, seven times more vitamin C and 20 times more vitamin A than iceburg lettuce. Lettuce has about .53 grams of fiber and 13 calories per serving, while spinach has .89 grams of fiber and for only about 22 calories.

The key to a tasty spinach salad is selecting quality greens: if you've ever had spinach that tasted bitter, it's probably because it wasn't fresh or trimmed properly. Look for crisp, clean leaves that are tender and have a healthy green color. Avoid those with coarse, fibrous stems, wilted or yellowed leaves and brown edges.

Most supermarkets carry fresh spinach loose by the bunch or prepackaged. The packaged greens are more convenient because they're somewhat trimmed and washed before packaging. So there will be less waste with packaged spinach, but it may cost more per pound and deteriorate more quickly.

Fresh spinach will keep about as long as lettuce — three to five days. After rinsing the leaves, store them in a plastic bag or damp cloth in the refrigerator for maximum crispness.

The cost of lettuce is likely to go down as the new crop comes in. By then, however, you may find you like the flavor of spinach salads as well or better than those made from lettuce.

Magazine offers tips on buying quality carpet

Associated Press

NEW YORK — If you need to buy a carpet for your home, here are some tips from Homeowner magazine to help you get the best value for your money.

■ Compare samples of fabrics and paint chips with the carpet, under both natural and artificial light.

■ Ask to see written warranties for carpets you are considering and read them.

■ Good quality cushion or padding is important to the life of a carpet. Possibilities include felt, cellular rubber and urethane foam. Your padding should meet the requirements of the Carpet Cushion Council.

Mourners stand beside the coffins of four children Wednesday in Usulutan, El Salvador. These children, along with their parents and another child, were killed when mortar fire from leftist guerrillas landed on the children's home near the headquarters of the 6th army brigade.

At least 18 people die in Salvadoran attacks

USULUTAN, El Salvador (AP) — A boom startled the sentries, shattered the tropical pre-dawn calm and cut off all the lights at the Salvadoran Cotton Cooperative Ltd. outside this provincial capital.

The attack was part of the biggest guerrilla offensive this year. The coordinated strike included a raid on the 6th Infantry Brigade base in Usulutan, 5 miles east of the cooperative, and the blowing up of two bridges and more than a dozen utility poles.

In San Salvador, about 60 miles to the northwest, foreign ministers of five Central American nations met to assess progress in implementing a regional peace accord signed last August.

Army officers said the attacks early Wednesday by 600 insurgents of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front left at least 18 people dead. Fourteen people were wounded.

An entire family — the five young Hernandez children and their parents — perished when a guerrilla mortar fell short of the 6th Brigade compound and hit their one-room brick and adobe home in a poor neighborhood.

Five soldiers of the brigade died, as did at least five guerrillas, said the brigade commander, Col. Inocencio Montano. He said about 300 rebels took part in the strike on the base.

Montano said four of the 55 U.S. military advisers stationed in El Salvador were at the base when the assault began at 12:10 a.m., but none was in danger.

Pvt. Rodolfo Marinero Montoya slouched on the steps of the cooperative's makeshift barracks, exhausted after many hours of combat.

After the mortar barrage, he said, the guerrillas "attacked from all sides." He said a mortar round scored a direct hit on one of the open-sided, zinc-roofed warehouses behind the barracks, igniting stacked bales of cottonseed.

Marinero said he did not know if the other warehouses caught fire from the heat of the first blaze or if the dozens of rebels that penetrated the cooperative burned them.

Seven of the 15 warehouses were destroyed. Members and officials of the cooperative did not have a dollar estimate of the damage. A cottonseed oil factory next to the cooperative also was attacked and damaged.

By midday, tired firefighters with soot-streaked faces took turns training a stream of water on the only warehouse fire that still threatened to spread.

Rebels fighting an 8-year-old war against the U.S.-supported government contend economic targets, especially farms or storage facilities for coffee, cotton and sugar, are valid military objectives.

The three products account for 80 percent of El Salvador's foreign exchange.

Lt. Jose Mejia Henriquez, commander of the cooperative's permanent 30-man police detachment, said the attackers numbered about 300.

The guerrillas demolished a utility pole down the road from the big communal enterprise then fired 60mm mortars and rocket-propelled grenades for about 15 minutes.

"Then they attacked shouting like Indians," Mejia said on the porch of the cooperative's offices. "They shouted at us to surrender, calling to me by my name that it was useless to resist."

His troops held the guerrillas off at the front of the cooperative, he said, but many rebels breached the defenses from the sides and rear and infiltrated the cooperative. Julio Campos of the National Police was killed.

The rebels blew up the Palo Seco and Vado Marine bridges just west and east, respectively, of Usulutan. The city, 70 miles southeast of San Salvador and home to 70,000 people, is the capital of Usulutan province on this country's hot, scrub- and palm-studded coastal plain.

Mejia said the battle at the cooperative lasted nearly four hours, about an hour longer than fighting around the 6th Brigade.

He said he could not say categorically that the attackers suffered losses, but said reinforcements that arrived after dawn found at least two places around the cooperative with "pools of blood" and first-aid refuse that indicated casualties.

The foreign ministers of El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Guatemala and Costa Rica ended 10 hours of talks Wednesday in San Salvador without agreeing on the mechanisms for determining compliance with provisions of the plan.

Israeli leaders can't agree on peace proposals

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli leaders clashed over proposals seeking peace with the Palestinians, who have rioted for 10 weeks against Israel's occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Israeli troops killed one Arab and wounded five others.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said today he was eager to discuss the latest U.S. peace proposals with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, but he said he would not make concessions that would appear to reward Arab protesters.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres of the left-leaning Labor Party lashed out at his government partner and said he knew of no plan offered by Shamir's right-wing Likud Bloc "which paves the way for negotiations to resolve the conflict between us and the Arabs."

The differences between the two leaders appeared to grow more pointed as Shultz's visit, scheduled for next week, drew closer.

Shamir, speaking to the board of governors of the Jewish Agency, reiterated his opposition to an international conference. He also said he opposed moving too quickly to grant autonomy to the Palestinians after they were permitted to elect local leaders.

The U.S. plan that Shultz will present to Israeli leaders reportedly calls for Israel to permit Palestinians to hold local elections and then begin negotiations with those leaders this year about the permanent status of the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

But Shamir said: "There is a need for a considerable period of practical experience, of coexistence between us and the Palestinian Arab authorities before the question of sovereignty can be approached."

"Any attempt to force the pace, or to shorten the period, would be deterimental," he said. "Those who incite and resort to violence should not come away with any reward."

"I know he (Shultz) means well," Shamir added. "We shall listen to his ideas with the utmost attention."

Shamir has rejected the idea of trading territory for peace to solve the conflict.

On Wednesday, Peres said the 1978 Camp David agreement that led to the 1979 peace treaty between Israel and Egypt does not exclude trading lands for peace.

"The United States doesn't need permission from anybody, not even Shamir, to propose trading territory for peace. The Likud can't claim that Camp David accords rule out trading lands for peace," Peres said during a parliamentary debate.

Peres said the idea of a limited self-rule for Palestinians in the occupied lands, advocated by Shamir, "implies a danger of returning to the 1967 borders."

Israel captured the territories from Egypt and Jordan during the 1967 Middle East war.

"I'm for a functional solution but I'm not that certain that I support autonomy. I think that a confederative solution (with Jordan) is preferable to autonomy," Peres said.

Speaking on Israel radio, Peres also said Israel had no choice but to reconsider its position in the West Bank and Gaza Strip because otherwise Jews would soon be outnumbered by Arabs in Israeli-held territory.

Israeli soldiers conducting a raid early Wednesday in the West Bank village of Shuyukh shot and killed one Palestinian and wounded four others who were protesting a series of arrests.

The death brought to 55 the number of Arabs killed by Israelis since violence began in the occupied lands Dec. 8, United Nations figures indicate.

The victim was identified by neighbors as Ismail Hussein Mohammed al-Halaiga, 21, a university student. The army confirmed the death, and doctors said the young man was shot through the heart.

One of the wounded, 16-year-old Khaled Abu Rumei, was in a Hebron hospital with a bullet wound in his thigh. His mother, who did not want to give her name, said soldiers broke into her house about 5 a.m. while the family was sleeping and dragged away one of her sons.

"I tried to protect him, and they beat me with clubs," she told The Associated Press at the hospital. "Later they started shooting." She said they also beat her daughter on the shoulder.

"They came in and smashed furniture and glass," said Khaled.

The boy's mother said similar actions were taken at other houses and when people tried to help those being seized, the shooting started, she said, adding that there was no demonstration at the village.

Americans remain in south Lebanon despite kidnapping

ROSH HANIKRA, Israel (AP) — An American serviceman crossed the border today, one of more than 20 Americans who remained on the job in south Lebanon despite the kidnapping of Lt. Col. William R. Higgins a day earlier.

U.N. spokesman Timor Goksel said there were no plans to change U.N. regulations that restrict Americans to the border and headquarters areas for most duties and require armed escorts for travel beyond those areas.

Higgins told U.N. officials he had full authority from the American government to travel wherever he wished, according to sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Goksel said 16 American servicemen and a half-dozen civilians continued to work in Lebanon, most of them staying overnight at headquarters in Naqoura to follow the search for Higgins.

One officer who identified himself as an American working for the U.N. Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO) was seen crossing into Lebanon. But he refused to give his name or answer a reporter's questions while waiting for Israeli guards to open the blue steel gate at the border checkpoint.

Other American personnel reached by telephone at U.N. headquarters in Naqoura and in Jerusalem referred reporters to the Pentagon, saying they were not permitted to speak.

Higgins, 43, a Marine officer from Danville, Ky., was new on the job, taking up his post Jan. 8 as commander of 75 unarmed observers from 16 nations. He was kidnapped Wednesday while returning from the southern port city of Tyre where he met with a Shiite Moslem political leader.

Asked why Americans were still working in southern Lebanon in view of recent abductions, Goksel said American observers had been under a travel ban since 1985.

"Higgins felt that as chief, he should be out with his men and know what they are doing," he said, noting Higgins commanded a force made up largely of non-Americans.

Goksel indicated the Americans were safe because "they are not serving the United States but under the U.N. flag."

The border area is also more friendly for Americans because it is controlled by Israeli troops and allied Christian militiamen. But Higgins was traveling outside this zone when he was taken.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Politburo ousts outspoken ex-protege of Gorbachev

MOSCOW (AP) — Boris N. Yeltsin, the outspoken former protege of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, was ousted from the ruling Politburo today, Tass reported.

Two rising stars in the Communist Party hierarchy were named nonvoting Politburo members, the official Soviet news agency said.

The policy-making Central Committee made the changes after Gorbachev told the party leadership that his efforts to modernize the economy and Soviet society did not constitute a retreat from socialism.

"We are not retreating one step from socialism, Marxism-Leninism, everything which has been won and created by the people," Tass quoted Gorbachev as saying.

Tass said the Central Commiittee meeting "freed Comrade B.N. Yeltsin from his duties as a candidate member of the Politburo."

Yeltsin, 57, was brought into the ruling body by Gorbachev in February 1986 and named Moscow party boss. But he fell from favor last fall when he complained to the Central Committee at its last meeting that an entrenched bureaucracy had stalled Gorbachev's efforts to modernize Soviet society.

Does U.S. have war files?

LONDON (AP) — A historian on the panel that investigated Austrian President Kurt Waldheim's wartime past said Britain or America could have records that show whether Waldheim was involved in the executions of six British commandos.

Historian Gerald Fleming, who is pressing U.S. archivists about the German army records, spoke Wednesday, a day after Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher ordered a new investigation into Waldheim's alleged connection with the executions.

The commandos were captured in the Balkans in 1944 and interrogated by the German army unit in which Waldheim was an intelligence officer.

"We need to know who signed the interrogations and who initialed them...The honor of this country is at stake," said Fleming in an interview.

"This will give us that final stone in the large mosaic on which the commission labored," said Fleming, the only British member of the international commission that investigated Waldheim.

The commission's report, released last week, questioned Waldheim's moral integrity, saying he was "in close proximity" to Nazi atrocities when he served as a lieutenant in the German army during World War II.

Honduras linked to drugs

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The State Department expressed concern Wednesday that some officials in Honduras might be involved in drug trafficking, adding that the situation should improve when the Drug Enforcement Administration opens an office in that country in a few weeks.

The statement, prepared in response to reports about the involvement of elements of the Honduran military in cocaine trafficking, came as the Honduran armed forces urged President Jose Azcona Hoyo to take legal action in the United States over the accusations.

In an unusual statement broadcast on radio and television after an emergency meeting, the military leaders called on the president to "demand proof via the legal system of the United States, proof from the press media and-or people who have made serious accusations against the armed forces."
