P&R Board Says 'Yes' To Mural, 'No' to Park Name

The city parks board Tuesday handed a group of East Lubbock citizens who want one of the Canyon Lakes designated as "Roots Park," complete with mural, a victory and a defeat Tuesday.

The board voted, in effect, that the park couldn't be named "Roots," because it would not be named for an individual and because the whole Canyon Lakes project already had a name—The Yellowhouse Canyon Lakes. But the board said it encouraged the Roots Committee's research and indicated initial approval for a mural.

After an extensive presentation by Roots Committee spokesman Eric Strong, Board Member Adolphus Cleveland formally moved a precisely-worded package, that said "yes" to a mural and "no" to a "Roots" park.

Cleveland's motion commended and encouraged the Roots Committee and said the board would "look with favor" on the development of a Roots mural, depicting scenes from East Lubbock history.

But the four-part motion also expressed a "general board feeling" that the park, adjacent to Lake No. 6 in the Canyon Lakes Project and across from the Mae Simmons Park, would not be named "Roots."

"The board will not think about naming it Roots Park," Cleveland told the Times after the session between Strong and the board.

The Cleveland motion also tabled any action on the matter until more planning could be accomplished.

After the motion passed unanimously, Strong asked if this meant the Committee could not continue its research.

"The only problem would be whether we want to designate it as Roots Park," Chairman Henry Huneke replied, "Parks are usually named after people who have made a contribution or a service. The whole thing does have a name."

Huneke urged the Roots Committee, which did not attend the meeting in the numbers Strong anticipated, to keep in contact with city staff members.

He also suggested that because of the problems of vandalism of a mural, "pick out a spot and keep it inside."

Immediately after the meeting, Strong said he was pleased with the parks board action since it had given the committee the go-ahead to continue its research.

"We'll come back with a plan," he told the Times. Strong indicated that he may seek national grants to help fund the drive.

Plans for a new county jail—with an estimated price tag of $4 million, including a new heating and cooling plant for county buildings—will go to the state's commission on jail standards and to a federal judge after county commissioners gave planners the green light Monday.

Commissioners initially seemed reluctant to abandon the old county lockup and intensely quizzed County Planner Arnold Maeker about the project which has been on the drawing board for several months.

"I sure hate to lose the old jail," Pct. 1 Commissioner Edgar Chance said, adding he felt the third or fourth floor could be used for dormitory housing of inmates.

But after long discussion, Maeker won the point, arguing that the extensive renovation required to comply with the state's jail standard and the long-term costs of hiring jailers to supervise the inmates would obliterate the estimated quarter-million dollar saving in new construction.

"In two years time, as I see it, you would have spent everything you saved," Maeker said.

"The critical issue is management (of the planned jail). You can save some money on construction, but how you're going to operate it is the thing that's going to eat your lunch."

County Judge Rod Shaw observed that even though the county could ask for variances in the State Commission on Jail Standards guidelines, "since the jail doesn't meet standards anyway, it's going to be hard to get the variance when we're building a new one."

Commissioners have been on the ropes about building a new jail since events landed a one-two punch in recent months. Last December, the long-awaited jail standards effectively ruled out renovation of the present lockup. Then, in April, U.S. Dist. Judge Halbert Woodward ordered sweeping changes in operating the jail, ruling in an inmate lawsuit that jail conditions violated prisoners' constitutional rights.

Since then, commissioners have been grappling with how to build a new facility, while temporarily refurbishing the old jail.

Maeker's plans allow for a capacity of 335 inmates, and about thirty percent could be housed in single-person cells. Plans also call for large, semi-open exercise areas in the middle of the cell blocks.

Bids on the new facility may be opened as soon as February.

Maeker noted that the plans are flexible enough to allow the city government to place its prisoners there, if the city council and county commissioners can agree on a policy level.

Monday's unveiling of the plans marked the first appearance of any hard figures for a cost of a new jail.

Throughout the inmate law suit—commissioners argued they had been setting aside funds for a new jail, and had not delayed improvements on the old jail. Now, the county fathers are expected to draw heavily on a buildup of federal revenue sharing funds for the new jail.

"Through January of 1980, we can get by with $4 million in revenue sharing and the permanent improvements fund," County Auditor Dale Gallimore told the Times. But Gallimore said that if commissioners start spending on other projects, "we'll be cutting it close."

One of those "other projects" may be Lubbock County's spearheading a regional detention facility for the South Plains juveniles. A committee of the South Plains Association of Governments (SPAG) has recommended the County pursue a regional juvenile hall, which would be a pilot project for the rest of the state.

Commissioners were to have met with the committee late Tuesday afternoon.

Commissioners also agreed Monday to seek a trim of the county welfare department staff, that certifies that poor people need financial assistance. The commissioners, on recommendation of Pct. 4 Commissioner Alton Brazell, hope that some of the staff's function can be shifted to the Lubbock County Hospital District which also certifies indigents who need county help in paying for medical expenses.

Foster Grandparents Needed

In recent years many services and programs have been developed in an effort to make life more meaningful for the mature citizens of our nation. The Foster Grandparent Program, sponsored by the Federal Agency ACTION, has been in operation in the U.S. since 1965 and has been very successful in meeting many of the needs of our citizens who are over 60 years of age and are no longer in the regular work force.

The Lubbock State School Foster Grandparent Project is funded and administered by ACTION and the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation and has been in operation since July 1972. The project is authorized for 60 Foster Grandparents. Since the project began 125 persons have received orientation and have served at the school. Fifteen Foster Grandparents have served in the

Early Settlers Round Up A Success

Over five hundred Lubbockites attended the second annual Early Settlers Round Up last Thursday evening at the American Legion Hall, Post 808, in Yellowhouse Canyon. "This will become an annual affair since so many people voted to continue such an effort," said George Woods, co-chairperson of the program.

Guest speaker was Leibert Walters, minister of the Twentieth and Birch Street Church of Christ. He talked about the need for strong togetherness.

"If we all stick together, we will be proud of our accomplishments," he told the group.

During his twenty minute presentation, the audience applauded him several times on what he was saying. "We are all Americans and we have certain principles to uphold, but we can't forget how important it is for us to have togetherness," he said.

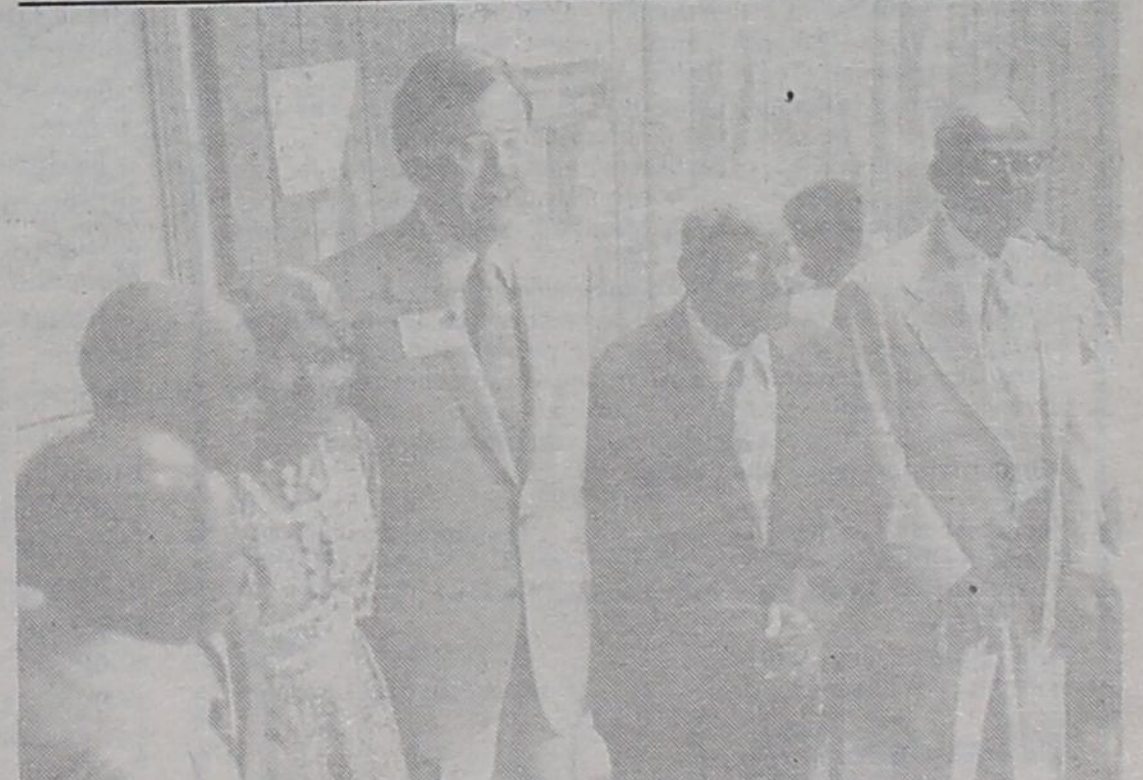

Mayor Roy Bass gave the welcome and presented plaques to the oldest settlers present at the affair.

Mrs. Bernice Kelly sang

"Nobody Knows The Trouble I See," and led the singing of "America" and "Battle Hymn of the Republic" with the audience. Mrs. Edna Raye Walker served as pianist.

Invocation was given by Rev. J. Phenix and benediction by Rev. Adolphus Cleveland. T.J. Patterson introduced the speaker of the hour.

Prior to the program, a delicious barbecue dinner was served to those in attendance. Special entertainment was provided.

Mayor Bass stands with the four oldest settlers as they were honored at the Old Settlers Reunion.

Economic Development Must Become a Reality

There have been thousands of words which have appeared on this page over the past ten years. Perhaps the most important words were those about encouraging black people to get a piece of the rock. It's big enough for all people in our community to have a piece. It hasn't been so for the black community. In a growing community that is progressive, blacks should have so many things going for them in the economic circle, but it doesn't exist.

Sure, one couldn't ask for a better place to rear their families and live a comfortable life. But one must realize that in order to rear their families and live this comfortable life there must be some economic opportunities so our children will have an idea of some of the good things in life.

If there ever was a time, it's now for black people to move up the socio-economic ladder in Lubbock. Nobody is going to step forward and hand it to you on a silver platter. As black people, we're going to have to work hard for it and understand what is going down in the process.

It's always been interesting to observe and hear all the negative comments about the eastern part of Lubbock. Many people have said it will never develop into a thriving community again. Others have left it because of the conditioning of what others are saying. If you look real closely, one will discover that a great deal can happen with this part of our community if we get out there and really work for something which we all can be proud of.

Nothing comes easy, perhaps you've heard that a thousand times. It's absolutely true, because one must work hard as the dickens to accomplish something. As black people, we must learn to become more mature about the things we want in life. In other words, we are going to have to start checking out the situation for ourselves and not take the complete word of those persons who don't really live in our community.

What we are going to have to do is quit playing games with ourselves and letting others determine what we should do in life. There is so much we can do if we would only get up and start doing something for ourselves. Perhaps the theme we should use is "unity" for all of us. "Unity" for the economic development aspect in our community.

When we talk about economic development, we are not talking about some giveaway program sponsored by Uncle Sugar. But rather, we are talking about looking at the resources around us and start taking advantage of them. People who are successful in the business community went out and started doing some things that others were not doing. As a result of all that, they became achievers in the business community.

All it takes is an idea and the guts to stay in there when there are problems. If you get an opportunity to view the Top 100 Black owned businesses in America, you'll become elated about what they are doing for themselves, their families, and America.

Keep in mind that what is good for the black community in Lubbock is good for Lubbock. Therefore, economic development for all people is a must here. We hope some of you will realize all of this and start getting off into where the action really is.

As I See It . . .

by T.J. Patterson

This writer hopes there are individuals in the black community who will be looking forward to seeking a political office. It is important for this to happen regardless of the area of concern. Next year, 1978 — which is not too far off — can be a great beginning for the political future of the black community.

At present time, there is a black sister, Joan Y. Ervin, who has done a splendid job representing the black community as well as the entire populace.

There is no need for us to worry about losing a given race, because there are enough blacks in our community who can elect someone who would do a splendid job.

Blacks and browns will have to work together in the upcoming elections. With both working together, there's no doubt about the outcome. After seeing what blacks and browns did together for the United Negro College Fund (UNCF) Mini-Telethon several weeks ago, a lot can happen if properly organized.

It is about time to see some great things happening in the political arena for the black community. With a lot of hard work, it can happen real soon. Say, 1978.

Again, the Early Settlers Reunion was a great success. It appears as though this will become an annual event for those persons who made it possible, like this writer and others, to have opportunities in Lubbock. The great excitement this event has caused the past two years is terrific.

Brothers George Woods and James Craven Sr. have worked hard to begin something of which Lubbock can be proud. Of course, the dedicated men and women who have worked on various committees are to be commended for a job well done.

From the voting of those present last Thursday evening at the American Legion Hall in Yellowhouse Canyon, this will become an annual event.

Speaking of the members of the Booker T. Washington American Legion Post 808, they are always doing something great for Lubbock. Not much is ever said about what they are doing. They work real hard behind the scene and never boast about what they are doing.

This writer would like for the citizens of Lubbock and West Texas to know what this group of fine American citizens are always busy doing something better for our community. From giving to a worthy cause, the visitation to the Veterans Administration Hospital at Big Spring, entertainment for our young people, sponsoring young people to Austin and so many other worthwhile efforts—this organization is great for the entire city of Lubbock.

Lubbock is a great city for those persons who are looking for an opportunity. At the same time, there are those who will continue to complain about what they don't have. A resident of this "Hub City" since 1958, this writer is glad he came this way.

As a citizen, it will be my duty to continue to work in my community in an economic development aspect. There are opportunities in this area. This writer hopes there are others who want to do something about the shortcoming of economic development in the black community. It can be done if we all get involved and want to do something about it.

JACK ANDERSON'S WEEKLY SPECIAL

Drug Smugglers Far Better Equipped Than Drug Agents
by Jack Anderson and Joe Spear

Copyright, 1977, United Feature Syndicate, Inc.
WASHINGTON — The United States is losing the war against drugs.

The smugglers have formed secret combinations, which are operating at all levels of business and government. They are using their illegal profits to purchase banks, insurance companies and other legitimate businesses. They are also corrupting government officials.

Our sources in Washington identified Miami as the nation's drug-smuggling center. So we flew to Miami to find out what has gone wrong with drug enforcement. The field agents there told us they are intercepting probably less than 10 per cent of the illegal drugs flowing into the United States.

The drug smugglers have more men, faster boats and better planes than the government is using against them. The Drug Enforcement Agency has only 2,000 agents to cope with the multi-billion-dollar drug operation.

They are assisted by the Customs Service, which has only 1,359 officers to patrol the lengthy U.S. borders. The Coast Guard patrols the shoreline, with all its coves and inlets. But it has only 99 ships, for example, to watch the entire Atlantic coast. None of these vessels are fast enough to catch the smugglers' speedboats.

Federal agents have evidence that organized drug smuggling into this country is directed largely by three aging godfathers—Santos Trafficante in Florida, Carlos Marcello in New Orleans and Joe Bonanno in Tucson.

Bonanno oversees the smuggling across the Mexican border, Marcello along the Gulf coast and Trafficante through Florida and up the Atlantic Coast.

Bonanno trades mainly in brown heroin from Mexico. In Florida, Trafficante deals heavily in cocaine, most of it from Colombia. He has recruited his organization largely from the Cuban underworld.

Financial Finagling? Budget Director Burt Lance isn't the only presidential appointee under investigation for alleged financial finagling. The Senate Interior Committee is holding up the appointment of Robert Mendelsohn until his campaign finances are straightened out.

Mendelsohn is a San Francisco politician who ran up some huge campaign bills. Last spring, he raised money to pay off these debts. In the meantime, President Carter appointed him to a top post in the Interior Department.

A preliminary investigation found him innocent of personal wrongdoing. But there was evidence of serious violations by his campaign committee. It allegedly was involved in an illegal money-laundering scheme.

Now investigators are searching quietly for a memo from a California development corporation. This missing memo could implicate Mendelsohn or perhaps clear him. The Senate committee won't approve his appointment until it finds out.

But this hasn't kept Mendelsohn from drawing money from the taxpayers while he waits. He has quietly started to work at the Interior Department—as a consultant.

White House Pipeline: Richard Nixon, as the world now knows, installed a secret recording system inside the White House. He was later haunted by the tapes of his own incriminating conversation.

Now President Carter is experimenting with a computer system, which will record and catalog all his public remarks. It is supposed to preserve for posterity every word Carter speaks on the record—his speeches, press conferences and other public statements.

Our sources assure us the computer will be carefully programmed not to pick up private conversations. The president wants no more secret White House tapes.

—Biking enthusiasts complained to the White House last April over President Carter's failure to mention bicycles in his energy address. No other form of transportation, they argued, could save more energy.

At first, White House aides chuckled. But the Transportation Department has changed their attitude. According to a preliminary study, bicycles could be used for up to 10 per cent of the trips made by shoppers and commuters in urban areas.

Duck Tale: Four years ago, a Maryland hunter named Jack Cooper happened upon a Canvasback duck caught in a trap. Unknown to him, the trap had been set by Fish and Wildlife agents. Canvasback ducks are an endangered species, and the agents wanted to trap a few for study.

Cooper could see the duck was mortally wounded. His hobby happens to be carving decoys out of wood. So he took the dying duck home, got it stuffed and used it as a model. Apparently, the taxidermist tipped off the government.

But the agents waited four years before investigating the duck's disappearance from the federal trap. They drove 300 miles to inspect Cooper's wildlife collection permit, then drove 300 miles back to their offices. A few days later, they repeated the trip. This time, they confiscated the stuffed bird.

The agents solemnly assured us, however, that they won't prosecute Cooper for absconding with their endangered duck.

KELLY'S HEROES

by Joe Kelly

Greater Southwest International Airport continues to dominate the Fort Worth skyline, even though it has been a lengthy time since any commercial planes landed and took off from its runways.

To me, seeing the hulk of this once beautiful structure, it was depressing. It is all but deserted today. Vandals have smashed out windows. Paint is peeling and cracking. There is grass in the runway cracks. The gate numbers are tumbling.

Once it was magnificent, a tribute to air travel and to Amon G. Carter, the driving force behind it. Today it sits like a ghost as bigger, faster airplanes fly over it, almost in mock salute.

Once, when Tech had defeated Auburn in the Gator Bowl, it was vibrant. Mr. Carter staged a luncheon for the Tech squad. No stop had been planned, but he wanted to pay tribute and he did. It is a good memory to have and should be for those Raiders who were there.

What does an airport have to do with sports? Not much, really, except that Sunday I was a spectator at the Cow Town Road Races, a grand prix event for motorcycle racers.

Now what was an old stick-in-the-mud like me doing there, of all places. Why, my youngest was racing his bike and it was the first time I'd ever seen him in action. I wasn't about to miss it, even though inwardly I might have had a sneer of derision over motorcycle sports.

Jack no longer is a novice. He has some seven or eight trophies for high finishes, including a sixth place last year in the nationals in California.

Primarily, though, he races in Texas, since other races are so far away. Sunday racers came from all over—Louisiana, Oklahoma, California, Arizona. There were many, many bikes on hand and races in several different categories.

Much of the pit talk left me wishing there was a good dictionary at hand so that I could interpret. There was talk of two-stroke bikes, CCs and other stuff way over my head.

But this gang of screwballs—they have to be to run those two-wheelers 180 miles an hour on hard concrete—are a close knit family. They josh and banter, but they help each other. They talk knowingly of how to improve the speed of their bikes and other things.

They arrive early. Jack was at our room at 6:30 a.m., getting a pit man friend, Mike, to go out and set up. Mike is going to college in Louisiana, but he's a motorcycle nut, too, as well as a good mechanic. He drove over to Houston, joined my oldest boy and together they drove to Dallas, getting in about midnight.

They first set up their area, then check the bike. Jack goes out for a trial run, at moderate speed, and then they check the plugs for fouling, the points, and other things I can't comprehend.

By the time Joe, Jack's wife and I arrive, the preliminary work is done and they're just killing time. And they have more of that to do than racing.

From time to time friends wander over to rap about models, makes, combustion and a thousand other things. In the background is the noise of motorcycles tearing around the course. Some of the non-racing racers are changing plugs and working on their bikes.

Lubbock Boy Returns Home

Raphael D. Scott

Another Lubbockite was heard saying "My how glad I am to be home" when he stepped from a TNM&O bus last week from Flagstaff, Arizona. This person was Raphael D. Scott.

He spent the first two weeks of summer vacation at Philmont Scout Ranch in New Mexico as a Troop Leader. He came home for a couple of days and went back to Tres Ritos Boy Scout Camp in New Mexico where he was employed all summer by Boy Scouts of America.

When his job ended he went up to Flagstaff to visit Mr. and Mrs. Ruben C. Smith and son Shawn. Mrs. Smith is his sister.

He is a member of the Dunbar Panthers and is now working out daily, hoping to help win a title for Dunbar. Raphael is a junior at Dunbar High.

One might call this the era of the investigation.

Finally it was time for Jack's heat. Joe and Mike were both gone, so I helped him lift the bike off its stand. We backed it out and started towards the starting line.

Now, space on a road racing bike is at a premium and everything is sacrificed. Thus, there are no starters. You push the bikes to get them started. It calls for good wind, strong legs, tough stomach muscles—and a weak mind. I qualified only on the latter.

Anyway, I pushed. The engine didn't catch. We stopped and tried again. It still didn't catch. Jack was trying to make adjustments and wave his arm to the starter so that they wouldn't start without him.

I pushed again. The engine coughed, died. Again I pushed. The engine coughed, threatened to die, and then, glory be, she roared into life and not a minute too soon, for we had almost reached the starting line.

Jack got a lousy start, but made up some ground and finished fifth. I tried to console him back at the pit. Aw, he said, that was just a heat. Didn't mean a thing. I'm going to make some adjustments. I'm not going to finish any worse than third.

A friend came over and gave him some plugs, which he said were tops. Jack made many adjustments, took his bike out to test and then checked plugs. Frankly, it was all Greek to me.

The skies, which had been threatening, broke and Jack was happy, because he wouldn't race on a wet track. I'm starting to get that feeling here, he said, pointing to his stomach. Just three more races. I can't wait to race.

Finally the time came. Jack got a good start this time, but his foot pedal hung up and he couldn't rest his foot. I wish I could say he won. He didn't. Hog Man, a sponsored racer and a national champion, came in first.

Jack? Well, he said he'd finish no worse than third and he finished third. Proud Mrs. Kelly came back with the trophy a few minutes later and it was all over.

Outreach Breakfast Club Meets Here

Members of the Outreach Breakfast Club met last Saturday morning at 9 a.m. in the home of Mrs. Irma Cook, 2402 East 9th Street.

Devotion was led by Rev. J. Morris. His text of inspiration was found in I Corinthians 12:1.

"Oh what a glorious time we had in the Lord, hearing testimonies coming from different ones," said Mrs. Cook.

"If we would do like Rev. Morris said and serve one God and have more love and understanding in our heart, God would make a way for us," said Mrs. C.E. Fair, vice chairperson.

"If you come once and love to talk about the Lord, you will come back again," said Mrs. Mary Ward, chairperson.

There were 25 members present last Saturday morning. Special guest was Mrs. J. Hardrick. A tasteful breakfast was served.

Our next meeting will be held in the home of Mrs. Tommie Ervin, 2905 East Baylor Avenue, Saturday, August 27, at 9 a.m.

Mrs. Rosemary Colbert is reporter.

Sheridan's Ride

by Jack Sheridan

They cremated that saucy, impudent old man this past week. Now all that is left of that beloved comedian, an American institution, is a little pile of ashes. But, the legacy of laughter and bawdiness is with us still and thanks again to the miracle of film and tape we shall still be able to laugh at and along with Groucho Marx in the days to come.

Irreverent, sly and cagy, Groucho was one of four Marx Brothers who scored with their roughhouse, zany humor on Broadway in the famous musical comedies "The Cocoanuts" and "Animal Crackers" and then at the very advent of the "talkies" they transported those two successes to the screen where, after 45 years, they are still revived successfully now and then.

It was the boys' mother, Minnie, who worked and slaved to push them into the theater business, Zeppo, Harpo, Gummo, Groucho and Chico, and they forged their way up slowly and onto the boards of Broadway and thence to the silver screen.

Zeppo retired from the act to become the business manager, while Gummo never did take to the stage and screen. Harpo, the mute with the horn, was self-taught on the harp and enjoyed recognition as an outstanding practitioner on that instrument. Many people do not know that Harpo had many study sessions with that grand lady of the harp who is so well known and loved in the Lubbock-Southwestern area, Mildred Dilling.

Chico's forte was the piano and a master he was on that instrument. But Groucho's talent was wit, the leer, the bawdy line, the lecherous pursuit of women of all sizes and description. If it was female, Groucho was primed, ready and off and running.

For many years in the films they made they had a stock leading lady, the wonderful, dowager-like Margaret Dumont, now long deceased, and Groucho exhausted that lady with his relentless chase. If there had been a Marx Sister, Margaret Dumont earned the right to that title.

Somehow, now, I have the uneasy mental picture of Groucho Marx resuming that chase up there and Miss Dumont deprived of her eternal rest only to have to pick up her skirts and flee again through the cloudy vistas.

There were some wonderful, unforgettable scenes over the years that were conceived and executed by the Marx Brothers. Somehow you always had the feeling that it was from Groucho's mind that the madness sprung. Do you remember the magnificent, never to be repeated scene on shipboard when all those people crammed into the tiny confines of a stateroom? Or the scenery gone haywire during the performance in "A Night at the Opera"? Those are only two of many that caused howling laughter and if you have never seen a Marx Brothers picture (can that be?) watch for one along the way. You'll laugh because their humor, audible and visual, was as timeless as the memory of these men; that man, Groucho.

You'll remember his "duck" and "You Bet Your Life" on television. Groucho blithely transferred his insulting impudence to the new medium with all the sassy aplomb that he brought to stage and screen.

Groucho's declining years (he died at 86 last week of pneumonia and complications of old age) were sadly colored with senility and hassling over his wardship and custody of his person and his assets. It is just as well that he was probably unaware of all that distasteful and greedy struggle in the courts and around him. It is too bad to have lost Groucho Marx but his time had come and it is good to know that God finally took him home, released him from his mortal bondage and imprisonment.

Wherever he is, Groucho is making the angels laugh, I'm sure, and since laughter is music of the gods I am sure the heavenly choir has found a new and strong voice.

I am not going to touch on the death last week, too, of Elvis Presley at the age of 42. Like Groucho, his time had come and the Tennessee singer-performer went out in a blaze of glory, almost a carnival of funeral rites. Elvis went out when he was at the top and that is as it should be. Can anyone imagine Elvis Presley at 65? 70? or even 50? No, Elvis was the gyrating spirit of the young music of America and his time was running out. He possessed a magic on stage and in his recordings, but his era was waning and it is good that he did not have to live to see himself sliding down that incline into a has-been status. He contributed much to the American scene and he is remembered.

There is an old saying in show business that deaths of famous people always come in threes. Consider. We lost famed actor Alfred Lunt at 84, two weeks ago, Presley and Groucho Marx. Three's the count.

I managed to catch "The Bad News Bears in Breaking Training" a few days ago at the Fox Complex. I must confess that I didn't care much for the original film a year or so back, even with Walter Matthau and Tatum O'Neal heading the cast of the baseball comedy, so it follows that I didn't care much for the sequel. The film takes place in and around the Astrodome in Houston as the foul-mouthed teen players meet a rival and is a very shallow film. If you liked "The Bad News Bears" in its original form, you'll probably like this one. I thought it a quickly prepared, thin effort to recapture the original's success, which it seems to be doing to a point.

In our next we'll be talking about some upcoming events that are edging close with the approaching advent of school and fall, in movies and stage, and we'll take a look at two Fox Theater films, "One on One" and the Marty Feldman debut film, "The Last Remake of Beau Geste."

Coles Visit Relatives

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelious Cole Jr. and son Eric were home for a few weeks, visiting with her mother, Mrs. N. Scott and son of 1331 East 25th St. After spending a few days in the Hub City they traveled to Ft. Worth to visit Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Phillips and Robert, Betty and Scott. They were accompanied by Mrs. Nancy Scott. Mr. and Mrs. Cole and Eric traveled to Carthage and Shreveport, La. to visit aunts, uncles, brothers and cousins of Mr. Cole.

They came back to Ft. Worth and found a lovely birthday dinner waiting for them. It was Mrs. Cole and Mr. Phillips' birthday. The lovely meal was prepared by Mrs. Scott. Everyone enjoyed the meal.

Leaving Ft. Worth they headed south to Waco, Cameron and Rockdale. Rockdale is Mrs. Scott's home town. Mrs. Cole (Reeva Jean) was born there but hadn't been there since she was ten years old. They went out to the rural community of Liberty Hill and by the cemetery and church (Springfield Baptist Church). They visited friends in the community and on to Thorndale to visit friends and relatives there. It was like old homecoming week.

They returned to Rockdale and spent a lovely evening with Mrs. Doris Molden, Mrs. Scott's sister in law. They returned to Lubbock that night, with everyone tired but happy.

The Coles left for home, but stopped in Flagstaff with the Smiths. Mrs. Smith (former Theresa Marie Scott) had another birthday dinner for Mrs. Cole.

Word has been received they reached home safely, but Mrs. Cole says no more birthday dinners that she has to help prepare.

project since 1972, many with the same children they were originally assigned. Ages of Foster Grandparents in the Lubbock project range from 60 years to 82 years with the average age being approximately 70 years.

Foster Grandparents are attracted to the project for various reasons; the need of a daily activity, the desire to help an unfortunate child, to make new friends, some who have no children to become a "grandparent" for the first time, to fill the void that retirement or loss of family brings plus many others.

Foster Grandparents are considered volunteers, not employees, at Lubbock State School, however, they receive $1.60 per hour to a maximum of 20 hours per week.

To make application call the Foster Grandparent Project, Lubbock State School, telephone 763-7041 ext. 231.
