Ceremony marks end of fiscal year flying

by 1st Lt. Brian Watkins
64th Operations Group

Reese ended the 1992 fiscal flying year Tuesday with a ceremony recognizing the teamwork that resulted in a highly successful year. Two T-38s, two T-37s and a T-1A flew over Base Operations to mark the last sorties of the fiscal year. Maintenance, support and operations personnel gathered to congratulate each other on a job well done.

"Thanks to the tremendous teamwork and cooperation of everyone on the Reese team from base ops, air traffic control, fuels branch, and the hospital to maintenance, the fire department, CBPO and finance, this has been an extremely successful year," said Col. F. Randall Starbuck, commander, 64th Operations Group.

Reese ended the busy year with T-37s flying 24,330 sorties for 31,143 hours and an average sortie duration of 1.28 hours; T-38s flying 25,935 sorties for 31,122 hours and an average sortie duration of 1.2 hours; and the T-1As flying 1,000 sorties for 2,820 hours and an average sortie duration of 2.82 hours.

"Lockheed met the maintenance challenge by providing jet aircraft to meet the highest monthly utilization rates in the Air Force—35 sorties per month per aircraft in the T-38 and 36 in the T-37," Colonel Starbuck said.

The year was also one of the safest in Reese history with no major mishaps and a 50 percent reduction in T-38 reportable incidents over the previous year. Highlights of the year included the introduction of the T-1A Jayhawk and strong showings by maintenance and operations personnel in Top Flight competition.

Next year will be one of challenges and changes as Reese implements the new specialized undergraduate pilot training program, training pilots in two separate tracks for the world's greatest Air Force.

From my perspective

by Lt. Col. Don Stiffler
Wing Safety

Since this is my first opportunity to give you "my perspective," I'll begin by saying how impressed I've been since taking over as chief of Safety with the professionalism and safety awareness exhibited by Reese personnel. We have an enviable safety record at Reese, a record for which every military member, civilian employee and contract employee on base can take credit. We accomplish the mission well and safely, and every member of the Reese team can and should take pride in that accomplishment.

Secondly, thanks to everyone for the successful "101 Critical Days of Summer" campaign this year. During the summer season Reese personnel were involved in four reportable ground mishaps; two were sports related — one was a twisted knee from stepping off the curb while mowing the lawn, and one was a motorcycle mishap. While this record is not as good as the summer of '91, it is obvious to me nonetheless that we're using our heads, both on duty and when participating in off-duty activities.

Which brings me to the meat of this article: pre-planning and making smart decisions, especially off duty. We each make thousands of decisions every day — the trick to making "smart" decisions is to think about the possible bad things that could happen and the chance of their happening as part of the decision-making process. Let me give you an example involving "A1C Ragman" and "Captain Bagodonuts" going snow skiing.

A1C Ragman goes to Colorado to try some downhill skiing. He goes to the ski school at Vail, rents the proper equipment, takes some lessons, and sticks to the green slopes. Is there a chance he can fall and break a wrist? Sure. But even if he does have a mishap, most people would say that he was being "smart" about his off-duty activity; in other words, he has done a good job of minimizing the risk so that the potential good (the fun of skiing) outweighed the potential bad (injury).

Captain Bagodonuts, on the other hand, goes to Vail the same weekend, but takes borrowed, ill-fitting equipment; does not take a lesson (too much money); and starts out on a black slope (he flies jets for a living and can hack it). Even if the captain doesn't hurt himself or someone else, most of us would say he was not being very smart; that is, the potential of his getting injured outweighed the potential for having fun.

The bottom line, as most Reese people already know, is to think about the risks of a mishap before you act. Fall and winter activities like hunting and skiing are upon us. Let's continue to use our heads so that we don't end up in the hospital thinking, "Boy, that was really dumb."

Reese vision: "Reese people leading the way in supporting and training professional officers and quality pilots for the Air Force."

QUALITY AIR FORCE

by Maj. Gen. L. E. Day
ATC Technical Training deputy chief of staff

Quality is an attitude. Quality is an experience. Quality is progress. Quality is investment...it's training...it's accepting failures to achieve success.

Quality is change in our mind-set. We don't tell our folks how to do the job — we ask them what their process is, how they'll measure themselves and what their goals should be. Then we, as leaders, give them the encouragement and wherewithal to improve their process and to reach and exceed their goals.

This all seems very straightforward. Simple enough. But it's not. It's a cultural change. We have to change our paradigms. It won't happen by itself. It needs leadership. It will require prodding. Someone has to ask the questions. Someone has to ask for the first briefing on a process. Someone has to ask, "what has changed?", "what improvements have you made?" Are you that someone? Are you that leader? Are you that supervisor?

We've been through that stage in our Quality Air Force program in Technical Training. Everyone received their initial training. We trained a few facilitators and then we started asking the questions. It was tough. There were a lot of averted eyes — a lot of unanswered questions. We found we did have processes. We found they had never been looked at, never been analyzed. Nobody wanted to volunteer. This was uncharted ground.

Well, we found leaders and paired them with good facilitators. We identified the processes and required that teams be formed. The teams had to meet once a week and publish and distribute the minutes of their meetings. Based on the minutes, we could determine progress and ask more questions. When it came time to brief the results and describe the improvements, the whole team attended to show the boss what they had done.

It was amazing how attitudes had changed. Our folks had become confident. They knew their business. They could recognize the need for changes and once they realized they had that authority, we had formed new paradigms.

Our teams have all learned something about themselves, their peers, and most importantly, about their processes. "Like a roller coaster ride, when our team was formed, all of us were apprehensive, but once you experience the Quality Air Force ride, you wouldn't want to get off... it's rewarding and you can make a difference in the way you do business," said Lt. Col. Craig McFall, one of our team leaders.

Quality Air Force can be fun. It is rewarding. How many teams do you have? Are you publishing the minutes? Who's asking the questions? (ATC News Service)

Safety shot: Officials stress caution

Now that hunting season has begun, Reese safety officials are urging hunters to take extra precautions with firearms. Stressing safety with firearms may be the cheapest form of life insurance a hunter can obtain.

Some safe firearms handling practices are:

□ Treat all firearms as if they are loaded.

□ Open the action of the weapon and inspect the chamber to ensure it and the barrel are free of obstructions.

□ Never transport a loaded firearm in a vehicle.

□ Never fire a weapon unless you are certain of your target.

□ Never cross over or under a fence with a loaded firearm.

□ Always use the proper ammunition for the weapon being used.

□ Always keep the muzzle pointed in a safe direction.

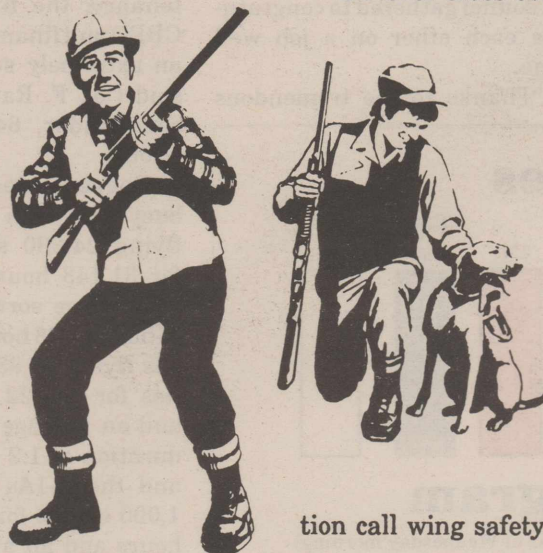

□ Always keep the action open except when actually hunting.

□ Never point a gun at anything you don't want to kill.

□ Don't mix alcohol and hunting.

Commander urges continued vigilance

by Col. David R. Love
64th FTW commander

Fire Prevention Week, Oct. 4-10, marks the observance of one of America's worst fires which occurred in Chicago Oct. 9, 1871.

That fire took 250 lives, destroyed 17,430 buildings and caused $168 million in damage. Despite unparalleled technological advances in our society and improved fire prevention programs, fires continue to kill more than 6,000 Americans annually, injuring over 30,000 innocent people and causing a staggering loss of $3 billion per year in property destruction.

In 1922, President Warren G. Harding proclaimed National Fire Prevention Week and it has been observed every year since.

This year's theme, set by the National Fire Protection Association, is "Test Your Smoke Detector—It's Sound Advice."

With the combined effort and support of all, we can make a positive change and prevent needless destruction, injuries and loss of life. The continued vigilance toward reducing fire losses is a goal that can be accomplished in 1992 and the years to follow.

Help us "Lead the Way" in ATC with the best fire prevention program ever.

Logistics Squadron sweeps quarterly competition

The 64th Logistics Squadron swept the quarterly Top Wheels competition, Sept. 23, winning both the general and special purpose categories.

Two logistics entries tied for top honors in the general purpose category.

The winning vehicles were a station wagon maintained by transportation's David Russel and a 1-ton, stake-body truck maintained by transportation's Philip Lozano. A fork lift, maintained by supply's SrA. Marcelo Joniaux captured the special purpose category.

The logistics entries beat out previous monthly winners from the 64th Security Police Squadron and from logistics' fuels flight.

Judges for the quarterly competition were: Lt.Col. David Klein, 64th Support Group deputy commander; Lt.Col. Stan Osborne, 64th MWR/Services Squadron commander; and Lt.Col. Terence Gilbert, 54th Flying Training Squadron commander.

The three judges also picked winners in the September Top Wheels competition. Taking the general purpose category was a transportation pickup truck maintained by Frank Fortner. A 64th Civil Engineering Squadron P-13 firetruck maintained by SSgt. Glenn Haffner won the special purpose category.

Judges for both the monthly and quarterly competitions considered the overall care evident on each vehicle's exterior, interior and engine/cargo compartments.

David Russel, 64th Logistics Squadron, was a co-winner in the quarterly Top Wheels competition.

Computer viruses pose threat here

Communications officials say three programs seen at Reese recently

Three computer viruses have recently infected computer systems here.

According to Reese officials, the viruses, "Jerusalem B," "Traceback" and "Stoned," were on contaminated disks brought to the base and used on government computer systems. The viruses on the disks, when loaded, contaminated the system.

"The contaminated systems and all of their software has been checked and cleaned," said Tyree Marshall, base computer systems security officer. "Hopefully, we got rid of all the viruses."

A computer virus is a piece of code deliberately introduced into computers and can reproduce itself by attaching to other software

What to do

Every computer is vulnerable to a virus. The following suggestions will help protect your system against a virus:

- Back up all programs and operating files daily.
- Do not bring diskettes from home and use them in government computer systems. This includes finishing government work at home.
- Know who enters a system, when and where.
- Institute a two-person, integrity system for all critical and sensitive programs during coding, testing and upload.

- Use only government-authorized software on government systems.
- Do not use "pirated" or "bootleg" software.
- Install the Air Force Codesafe Anti-Viral software.
- Do not connect your system to a non-DOD bulletin board.
- Do not distribute software downloaded from unapproved bulletin boards.

programs. Damage to a system can vary from denial of computer service to complete loss of data and software.

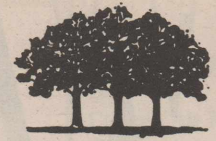

According to Mr. Marshall, the presence of a virus can be difficult to detect and can lie dormant for a period of time before becoming active.

A virus can make a copy of itself in a fraction of a second and can prove to be deadly once it infects the system.

Air Force policy states that military or civilians that commit fraud, waste and abuse on government computer systems are in direct violation of Air Force regulations and are subject to disciplinary actions or prosecution by the Air Force or other appropriate agencies.

If you think you might have a virus, quit working on the system immediately, keep a written record of all actions taken and report the incident to the systems security officer immediately.

For more information on the viruses mentioned or others, contact Mr. Marshall at 3707 or Bill Barr at 3326.

Reese Youth Center reopens

The Reese Youth Center resumed full operations Wednesday after undergoing a three-month renovation program.

The $50,000 renovation, funded by an Air Training Command grant, provided a "wall to wall" face-lift that included a new kitchen and restrooms.

"We have a first class facility," said Cindy Mitchell, Reese Youth Center director. "The renovation helps set the tone for the type of quality programs we are committed to for our kids."

An official grand opening ceremony will be held at 4 p.m. on Oct. 23.

The youth center is open to Reese children from 5 to 18 years old. The center is open from 3 to 7 p.m., Monday through Thursday; 3 to 8 p.m. on Friday; and from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. (free movie at Simler Theater) and 2 to 6 p.m. on Saturday. The annual membership fee is $15 per person with a maximum of $30 per family. Youth center membership discounts are available for Enlisted Open Mess and Officers' Open Mess members.

In addition, the center offers the Advantage Program for children needing before and after school day care. Cost for the Advantage Program is $25 per child per week.

For more information about youth center programs, contact Ms. Mitchell at 3820.

Sergeant Sandoval

Quality performer

This week's quality performer is SSgt. Christopher Sandoval, 64th Operations Support Squadron.

Sergeant Sandoval, a native of Colorado Springs, Colo., has been in the service six years and at Reese for more than one year.

Before coming here, he served at two bases in England. At Reese, he supervises three life support facilities manned by 13 people and involving a budget worth more than $424,000. He says his job gives him a chance to make direct contributions to the flying mission.

"Every time a pilot goes up, he or she takes equipment that we're responsible for maintaining," he said. "The equipment better work right the first time if it's used."

In his free time, the sergeant is active in his church and enjoys sports and gardening. Also, he lists spending time with his wife, Paula, and their two children — Cherisa, 5, and Natasha, 3 — as a priority.

Treasures of the Atocha

In the year 1622, a Spanish galleon bearing the richest treasure ever laden aboard a ship went down during a fierce Caribbean hurricane. Almost 40 tons of silver and 200 bars of gold, 3,000 emeralds, 100,000 pieces of eight, and period jewelry were found in the ruins. She was the legendary Nuestra Senora de Atocha. After centuries of searching, the Atocha was finally discovered off the Florida Keys. We are proud to present part of this fabulous treasure documented by National Geographic. Dr. Sinclair, chief archeologist and conservator for the excavation, will make slide presentations throughout the week.

The Atocha: Built in 1620, the Spanish Guard Galleon weighed 550 tons.

Anderson Bros. Jewelers is proud to present over $4 million of this treasure on display and for sale from Tuesday, October 6th through Saturday, October 10th.
