After the machine went by the gang down here gathered around to watch a yellow jacket that was obviously going out. Its legs first got wobbley and then he just laid down and died.

Yes sir, we're convinced that that spray gets 'em.

Wallace 'Liberals' Can Learn Big Lesson From Miss Bentley

BY PETER EDSON
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON—(NEA)—The misguided followers of Henry Wallace have an important lesson to learn from Miss Elizabeth Bentley, the spy heroine of the House Un-American Activities Committee.

When Miss Bentley was asked why she became a courier for the Communists, she had no trouble in answering. She had looked on communism as a world movement, she answered, something idealistic.

To plenty of American citizens both before and during the war, communism was looked on as a kind of religion whose purpose was to raise the standard of living for the lower levels of society and to bring on Utopia, quick. Miss Bentley fell for this line.

So she worked without pay, for the good of the cause. They told her she was particularly fitted to be a courier. Being what she thought was a "good" Communist, she did what she was told.

It was only when the Russian government began to offer her money that Miss B. got suspicious. It was when they offered her a Red Star medal right from Stalin that she really got wise. She realized then that she wasn't working for any great idealistic movement, but for the Russian government. That was when she looked up the FBI and told her story.

MOST of the fan mail coming to this department after several recent pieces on the Wallace movement has shown the same dreamy idealism that must have first lured Miss Bentley. A number of well-meaning and sincere people are apparently following the Wallace star because they believe that he is the only one who really believes in peace, the only one who will do anything to help Palestine, settle the Berlin crisis, stave off the threat of an atomic war.

They also believe Wallace is the only one who will do anything to aid minority races, increase wages, bring down prices, provide housing, end the draft.

For whatever belief there may be that Wallace is the only one who will do anything about this latter, domestic half of the program, the two older parties may have only themselves to blame. They haven't done much about these things, except argue. So it is only natural that some family about to be evicted from a house or have the rent raised would start looking around for new leaders.

The fact is that all these promises on domestic issues are merely the sugar coating to make the third-party pill palatable. This is the idealism that has lured many liberals to take up communism and the third-party movement.

EVERY liberal has to learn the difference between idealism and communism the hard way. This is by personal experience, just as Miss Bentley learned it.

Henry Wallace can disavow his Communist following till he is blue in the face, expounding all the while his theories on progressive capitalism. It will do him no good. The Communists endorse him, whether he endorses them or not.

The entire "Peace" section of the third-party platform is nothing more than an exposition of the Communist Party foreign policy. This has been pointed out here and elsewhere before. But it needs emphasis constantly, until election day, so that nobody misses it.

The Communist foreign policy line is not the line of world idealism and the promotion of the brotherhood of man. It is nothing more nor less than the Russian foreign policy line. It is grasping, selfish, nationalistic and imperialistic.

The Russian government is not a creation of Communist idealism, as the party members would have you believe. Instead, world communism is merely the captive creature of the Russian government.

This is the lesson Miss Bentley had to learn the hard way. If a lot of the blind followers of the third-party movement would learn this lesson, there would be a lot less support for the Communist line.

Olympic Incident Gives Nod To Movies in Judging Sports

BY HARRY GRAYSON
NEA Sports Editor

LONDON—(NEA)—Why rely on judges when the movies make everything perfectly plain?

They make movies of entire races at horse tracks, so why not have the flickers show precisely what the footracers have done in the more important meets, certainly the Olympic Games?

Had they waited to see the slow motion film, the Americans would not have been put in the position of having to protest following their victory in the 400-meter relay of the Olympic Games.

And the Britons would not have had to turn over their gold medals to Barney Ewell, Lorenzo Wright, Harrison Dillard and Mel Patton, the Italians their silver medals to the English.

The Eye-talians may wind up with nothing more than the exercise, for the Hungarians had gone home with their medals when the face finally was ironed out three days after it was run. They said they would not return the medals, planned to protest themselves. Everybody wanted in on the act.

The writer is with those who regret that sprinter Barney Ewell protested to president Avery Brundage of the United States Olympic Committee and a member of the jury of appeal. Naturally, the American runners wanted the gold medals, but it would have been much nicer to have let the entire matter drop.

THE Americans had won enough. There was no sense in pouring it on. Giving the British this race would have been a fine gesture. You know the story, of course, and, by now, that Ewell and Wright did not overrun the baton exchange zone.

The protest had London sports writers writing like this: "What a pity there should be a protest. It cuts down the spirit of the Olympiad which promised to be the happiest as well as the most successful in the history of the Games. There is no doubt that the Americans had the fastest team, but rules are rules. When the announcement was made that Britain was first and America was disqualified the biggest cheer of the week went up.

"Some Americans resented it, declared the crowd was making an anti-American demonstration. 'We were disqualified because we ran too fast,' they shouted. What rot!

"The Americans cleaned up most of the events, and the crowd showed wonderful appreciation of the feats of their great athletes. But now we had our first and only track victory, and why shouldn't we cheer? This 'we wuz robbed' attitude of an isolated few surely is against the Olympic spirit."

The reversal of the disqualification brought page one headlines like "Pictures lost us Olympic race" and "Film gives victory to U.S.A." It is the first time that a major track and field event has been decided by the showing of a film.

Spearfish, S. D. Relieved, Name Is Still Unique

SPEARFISH, S. D. (UP) —Local residents still can boast they live in the "only Spearfish in the world."

Old-timers were disconcerted when it was reported that railroad time-table listed a stop at Spearfish, Wash. However, a letter from Mayor James O'Neill asking information about the second Spearfish's population, industries and location came back marked "No Such Postoffice."

The origin of the town's name is a matter of dispute. Some pioneers contend that two early white settlers named it because it was by a good place to spear fish. Others say the town was given its name by Indians.

White Shoes Cooler

ST. LOUIS, (UP)— Women fashion pace-setters have been getting the hot foot by wearing black shoes instead of white during hot summer days. A thermometer reading 112 degrees inside a pair of black shoes hit only 96 when placed inside white shoes, the St. Louis Shoe Manfuacturers Association reported.

One-Family Invasion Of Erie Impending

CHICAGO (UP)—Mr. and Mrs. Frank Roycroft and their 13 children are ready for a mass pilgrimage to the little town in Ireland where the elder Roycrofts were born.

Travel experts estimated that the family would require a drawing room, two compartments, and two bedrooms to get to New York. Three cabs should get them to the pier where they will occupy two cabins. None of this includes the hand baggage, five trunks, and two bicycles that the Roycrofts are taking with them.

Roycroft, a utility company foreman, has saved $5,000 for the trip.

LUCY could not be brought home immediately. Possibly not for a week or two. Then there would be a period of time which must elapse before plastic surgery could be done to help make less shocking the disfiguring scars left by the burns.

"When Lucy comes, I can manage," Tom told Jessica several mornings after his announcement that his sister had recognized him. He had immediately gone out and reclaimed his old job at the rubber pits. Now he was working steadily.

Jessica heard from David. Telephone calls. Finally David himself appeared one day, impatient and irritable, and unable to accept her excuse that when Tom was away on a job someone had to remain with Mrs. Blake.

"Let him hire a nurse," said David, looking oddly out of place in the Blake living room, his critical glance traveling over the old portraits on the walls and fastening upon Tom's picture upon the table. "This the soldier?" he asked carelessly.

"That's Tom."

David gave the picture only careless attention.

"When are you going to Kentucky, Jessica?" he asked.

"When Lucy is strong enough to take care of her mother and keep house for Tom. He has to work, you know. He'll have heavy expenses."

"Linton plans to finance the ... surgery job. Pretty decent of him."

"...cent?"

...vid shrugged. "He didn't owe ...irl a thing. She made a fool ...self, which wasn't his fault."

"...u mean—?" Her shocked ... eyes never left David's handsome face. So David had known all along!

He offered no explanation but eyed her curiously. "Look here, you don't condemn the man because he was human?"

"He has a wife."

"A cold proposition," said David indifferently. "The daughter's quite different." He smiled engagingly. "I'm not trying to make you jealous, but Hugh Linton's daughter is a very attractive girl."

• • •

HE rose then and took her in his arms. His lips sought hers, demanding a response she found it hard to give.

Why? Because it shocked her to have David make love to her in Tom's home?

Jessica tried to draw away but he held her fast. He said positively, "Once and for all you must set a date when you will leave this house. Set your own date, but don't expect to change it because Tom Blake meets some new difficulty. Exactly when does this sister expect to come home?"

"Thursday."

"Very well. We'll say that you will stay until after New Year's. That will give you more than a month. That will reconcile you to this new, crazy sense of duty to a man you plan to leave. I'm having our company lawyer check the Kentucky divorce laws. Better to be prepared, although I don't think Blake will make any trouble."

"No, Blake will not make any trouble."

They sprang apart. Jessica felt shame; David looked confused.

Tom stood in the doorway. He came forward. "Are you David Gregory?"

"I am."

David had regained his self-control. He even managed to smile, while Tom regarded him with a cool contempt and said, "You are the man Jessica plans to marry?"

"Yes, I am. But there's no reason we should jump at each other's throats because we happen to be involved in this kind of situation."

"Such as a man stealing another man's wife?"

David shrugged. "If you want to be melodramatic about it, yes. Jessica has a mind of her own. I didn't force her into any situation. She was quite willing to exchange what you have to offer for a very different type of living, one that she has been accustomed to and deserves. Jessica has been generous enough to refuse to leave immediately. I understand that you have had trouble here."

"Leave my affairs out of this," Tom said.

• • •

THE door into the kitchen opened and Betsy came in. Jessica had completely forgotten her daughter, busy with her toys in the sunshiny kitchen. The child's round eyes traveled past David and brightened as they saw her father.

"Daddy!" she shouted and rushed forward and held him tight around the knees.

"This is my cue to exit," said David.

He was still at ease, smiling at Jessica as she followed him to the hall door. "I'll call you tomorrow," he said in parting, ignoring Tom completely. "Good thing this whole affair has been brought out in the open," he added as he said goodby.

He doesn't have to go back and face Tom, thought Jessica, as she watched him climb into his roadster, his hat tipped at a jaunty angle.

Tom looked up as she came back to the living room. "I'm bringing Lucy home this week," he said. "If she is not able to do much for a while, I'll get a housekeeper to help her. I can afford one now that I'm working again." He went on trotting Betsy on his knee and made no reference to David's visit. He seemed to accept David's announcements calmly, and as a matter of course planned for the day when his wife would leave him.

Jessica wanted to strike out and hurt him, cruelly.

"You'll miss Betsy," she said.

After a moment, Tom said, "That's not all I'll miss," and looked straight into her troubled eyes.

A sob rose in her throat and choked her. Jessica turned and went quickly upstairs to her own room. She flung herself face down across the bed and muffled her sobs in the pillow.

Woman Photographer, 84, Creates Pictorial History Of "Old South"

NEW ORLEANS (UP) — Frances Benjamin Johnston has been a photographer 60 years. Now, at 84, she has so many plans she thinks it will take "about another 60 years" to finish them.

Most of her future plans concern recording on film the buildings of the old South, an occupation to which she has devoted the last 20 years.

"You have to keep right after that, you know," she said in her century-old home in the New Orleans French Quaters. "So many states are letting their best examples of old architecture crumble away. It's nearly criminal."

Right now, Miss Johnston is shuttling between New Orleans and Washington putting the final touches on a book covering Louisiana architecture from the 1920's to the 1950's.

She hopes she and her collaborator, Samuel Wilson, Jr., a New Orleans architect, will be through with their job by October and that the University of North Carolina Press will get the book out next spring.

"It's quite possible the book may help Louisiana relaize the importance of preserving these early examples of its culture," Miss Johnson said. She is familiar with this reaction, having illustrated books on Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida and other sections of the South.

Miss Johnston, who claims to have been Washington's first news photographer and who filmed the White House signing of the document ending the Spanish-American War, has received arcitectural recognition for her architectural photography.

She has been handed nearly $30,000 in nine grants from the Carnegie Corporation to traverse some 200,000 miles taking pictures of old mansions and old hovels in the South. The Library of Congress, with which she has a semi-official connecton, has 10,000 of her negatives in one special collection. The American Institute of Architects has expressed its gratitude for the fact that she shoots her pictures "straight" by making her an honorary member.

Next, she is going to compile some pictures she already has of Virginia and Georgia and then branch out into Kentucky and Tennessee with her tripod ad her chauffeur.

Miss Johnston, who studied art in Paris but switched from writing and art illustration to photography in the '80's becomes a bit crusty at mention of her 84 years.

"It's not that I'm sensitive about my age," she snapped. "It's just that it's not important. Experience, yes, but age, no.

Nation's Real Income Is Up, Survey Claims

MINNEAPOLIS, (UP)—American economy continues to look good, according to the Investors Syndicate August survey of the average family's "real income." "Real income is defined as the relationship of income to living costs.

The survey says the average family has one per cent more buying power than a year ago, despite steadily-rising prices. And for several months, the real income level has been stable, continuing "an unprecedented period of high economic activity."

Expected fall bumper crops may soften farm prices some, says the survey, but world demand and government price supports assure the farmer of continued high income.

Skeptical Policeman Has To Be Convinced

RED WING, Minn. (UP) — As a night policeman approached an unlighted car parked in an off-limits area here he thought "illegal parking and illegal sparking."

But the officer learned he was one half right. The car was off limits—but the couple inside was not. They told the officer they'd been married 20 years.

Wrote the police officer on his night report: "Remarkable. This woman was really the man's wife."

Ear-Pull Faucets Rigged For Sinks

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (UP) — Victor Barnett thinks kitchen plumbing needs novelty treatment.

Barnett has a patent pending on a water tap for the kichen sink. The faucet is metal cast in the shape of an animal's head. Pull down the left ear, you get hot water. Yank the right, cold water.

You can have most any kind of animal you want, Barnett says. But the ones with the biggest ears are the handiest, such as the jackrabbit and the donkey.

MINING MADE EASY BY STREAMLINING UTAH FIELDS

By MURRAY M. MOLER
United Press Staff Correspondent

DRAGERTON, Utah (UP)—Modern methods and equipment almost make coal mining a pleasure at one of America's most modern mines, the Geneva Steel Company's "Horse Canyon" mine near Dragerton.

The mine was opened during the war by the government as part of the $250,000,000 Geneva Steel project to supply plates for Pacific Coast shipyards.

Geneva now is mining an average of 5,600 tons of soft coal a day from under the brown hills in Central Utah.

The Horse Canyon mine has a potential capacity greater than that of any coal mine west of the Mississippi. The vast Central Utah coal fields have known reserves said by geologists to be large enough to supply the entire country for at least 30 years.

The general superintendent of mines for Geneva Steel is Frank V. Hicks, a miner, first in "hard rock" metal mines, then in coal shafts, for more than 35 years.

"These modern machines almost make coal mining fun," Hicks said as he stood by a long conveyor belt carrying coal to the loading chutes from the mine tipple.

"The days of pick and shovel mining are gone. When it was first developed, our mine was the most modern in the country. Other western mines are now using the same methods ,though, and it's good for the whole industry."

All coal in the Horse Canyon mine is blasted from the seam, which is a uniform 14 feet thick, by flameless powder. Big power scoops load it onto small conveyors. They feed longer belts and they in turn carry the 'black gold' to the tunnel entrance.

A few mules are still seen around the Geneva mine, but they work in small, isolated tunnels. Some electric tramcars also carry pay loads around the mine but most of the coal flows on the endless belts.

About 700 men work in the Horse Canyon tunnels on two shifts. Hicks says it's the men who give him most of his headaches because "they're only human."

Biggest "headache" for the mines superintendent is that of personal safety for his men.

"New men don't recognize some of the dangers that are always present in a mine," Hicks explains. "They sometimes get careless. That's when they get get hurt, although accidents in our mine have been comparatively rare."

The next biggest worry for Hicks is the threat of fire. One broke out inside the Horse Canyon workings this summer. It was promptly sealed off. But when the seals were opened more than two weeks later, the flames roared again.

"We'll have to go in there with water and douse the coal, then haul it out and throw the burned stuff away," Hicks explained.

"That'll take a lot of time, but it has to be done."

The seals cut off air from the burning coal. When they're opened, the fire "just follows the oxygen right toward the surface." Crews combatting the blaze have to wear special safety equipment and carry their own oxygen supplies.

Wooden Pistol Deals Death In Siam

BANGKOK, Siam (UP)—Hold up victims in Siam are finding out that a toy wooden pistol can be a lethal weapon.

Clever woodcarvers devised the weapon currently popular with siamese gangsters. It consists of a skillful imitation of an automatic pistol carved from hardwood the color of metal, and it conceals a daggar.

The barrel of the wooden pistol serves as a sheath which can be stripped from the stabbing blade, set in the handle grip.

Super Atomic Bomb Possible, He Says

WATERTOWN, N. Y. (UP) — A 15 per cent increase in the efficiency of uranium and plutonium will produce an atomic bomb 1,000 times as destructive as those dropped on Nagasaki and Hiroshima, according to Thomas T. Crenshaw, a former commanding officer at the Oak Ridge, Tenn., atom plant.

Crenshaw, a Watertown architect, said the United States could have had atomic weapons in 1943 had the government been willing to gamble with the lives of its technicians.

The United States is faced with four alternatives, Crenshaw, a member of United World Federalists, believe. He lists appeasement, a preventive war, balance of power or "a real government based on law and order, but on a world level."

All He Did Was Hit 5 Autos In Block

ST. LOUIS, (UP) James Murray was indignant when police ended his pre-dawn joy ride.

When he was arrested for drunken driving, leaving the scene of an accident and destruction of property, Murray floored one of the arresting officers and three more were needed to hold him.

All he did was crash into five autos parked on a single block.

★ WEEKLY BIBLE COMMENT

Two Ananiases in the New Testament

BY WILLIAM E. GILROY, D.D.

THERE were two Ananiases in the early Christian Church, and they were about as different in character and action as two men could be.

One was the Ananias, who with his wife, Sapphira, is mentioned in Acts 5. He professed to follow the example of the genuinely Christian and generous Barnabas, who had sold his possessions and given the money for the common good of the Christian community. But Ananias held back part of the price. He was a cheat and a liar, and his wife was evidently no better. How they came to be members of the Christian community is strange, for it would seem that they had little to gain by joining a small and unpopular group, subject to persecution.

But having professed to be Christians, they were under obligation to act as Christians, though apparently there was no obligation for them to follow the example of Barnabas. What was wrong was their lying and cheating about the matter; and according to the story in Acts they came to a sad end.

VERY different was the other Ananias, a Christian in the ancient city of Damascus, to whom Paul went upon his conversion.

The Christians at Damascus, knowing Paul's record as a persecutor, were hesitant about receiving him, fearing that he was worming himself into their company with the intention of betraying them. Their fears were natural, but Ananias had been prepared in a vision for Paul's coming. And though he, too, was doubtful because of all he had heard about Paul, he was assured that Paul was to be "a chosen vessel," to bear the name of Christ "before the Gentiles, and Kings, and the children of Israel."

So, Ananias went all the way in the fulfillment of his mission. He sought out Paul, as directed, made no word of reproach about Paul's past as a persecutor, but put his hands upon him in friendly greeting. He called him "Brother Saul," and restored to him the sight of which he had been bereft three days, since the great light had blinded him on the Damascus road. And that was the beginning of a great Christian career.

It is unfortunate that the evil Ananias has given to the world a word synonymous with "liar." But if we ever are disposed to call a liar an "Ananias," let us remember that that name is associated with the great and illustrious Paul, noblest of all Christian missionaries.

Let us think of the name as bearing all the honor of that wise and devout Christian disciple in Damascus who baptized Paul and started him in the Christian way.

A Little Help

This is the place-kick tee that the University of Toledo will use this fall. Developed by head coach Skip Stahley, the tee provides a hard, dry, flat corrugated surface for any kind of weather and provides the kicker with a straight, line-of-sight approach to the ball, Stahley says. The one-inch stand has been approved by the National Collegiate Association.

Homely Utensils Please Housewives

SAN FRANCISCO (UP)—A survey in California, Nebraska, and Rhode Island by the California College of Agriculture shows that the coffee maker is the utensil most used by housewives in those states.

Frying pans of the 10 to 12-inch variety came in second. Smaller or larger frying pans ran a poor 10th.

One-quart saucepans took the third spot, and the pancake turner was fourth. The bread knife was fifth, and even the lowly dishpan sneaked in for seventh place.

Fancy gadgets such as baking dishes, casseroles and special boilers didn't even place.

Indianapolis Speedway Burning Up Stands

INDIANAPOLIS (UP)— The Indianapolis motor speedway is starting fires to prevent fires.

Officials burned half of a big grandstand around the famous track where the 500-mile races are held each Memorial Day. They said they would destroy other wooden grandstands and replace them with concrete and steel sections to reduce fire hazards.

President Wilbur Shaw said 64 minor fires occurred in the stands and speedway grounds during the last race.

The 90th Division won five battle stars in the European Theater of Operations. It landed in Normandy on D-day and was Praque-bound in Czechoslavakia when V-E-day halted its final offensive.

Among its major contributions to victory were the closing of the Falaise Gap, the lightening thrust across France, and the crossing of the flooded Moselle river in the envelopment of Metz. The latter operation was described by the late General Patton as "the greatest Military achievement of the war."

The "tough 'ombres" with the T-O shoulder patch breached the Siegfried Line, not once but twice, were engaged in the Battle of the Bulge, re-crossed the Moselle River, took Mainz and Holf, and were the first Allied troops to enter Czechoslovakia.

UNCLE SAM'S SELECTIVE SERVICE

(Editor's note: Below is one installment of a series of questions and answers on the second peacetime military training program. It has been prepared under the direction of the Texas Director of Selective Service, Maj. Gen. K. L. Berry.)

INDUCTION

1. Q—How many men will be called for training under the Selective Service Act?

A—Enough to keep the Army up to an average daily strength of 837,000, the navy up to 666,882, and the Air Force up to 502,000. Each of these services will be allowed to enlist respectively 110,000, 36,000, and 15,000 one-year enlistees (19-year-olds).

2. Q—How many men will be inducted per month?

A—The armed forces have indicated they can use about 30,000 inductees a month for the first year.

3. Q—How many will be inducted from Texas?

A—It will depend on calls, but probably about 1,500 per month.

4. Q—When will the first group of men report for training?

A—The armed forces probably will desire to levy a call for men during October.

5. Q—How will the number to be called from each state be determined?

A—A quota system will be established to make sure that each state and each section of a state furnishes its fair share of the men called for training.

6. Q—How will this quota system work?

A—After all registrants are classified, each state will report the number of men available for immediate training. For emaxple, total number of men in this class Texas may have 5 per cent of the If so, Texas will be expected to furnish 5 per cent of the men for each call. Thus each state and local area will not be called upon to furnish more than its proper share.

7. Q—Where will the inductee's training take place?

A—Men will be sent to training stations of he armed forces where regular staffs of the armed forces will conduct the training.

8. Q—Who will pay for the cost of transportation for these men?

A—The federal government will pay all transportation, maintenance and any medical costs while men are enroute to armed forces training stations.

9. Q—After a man has passed the armed forces physical exam, how long will it be until his date of induction?

A—At least 21 days after the date upon which he was mailed a notice that he had been found acceptable. He will be advised of the date of reporting for iinduction.

Area Oil News

EASTLAND COUNTY — Gorman Area

Following is a report of activities in the Kirk Field, Gorman, for Friday, August 27:

J. W. Baldwin, No. 3 J. N. Watson was acidized and shot in Thursday so that the farmers and laborers for miles around could see the yellow spray shooting into the air. No figures are available as yet but the men say it is as good or better than anything he has had as yet on this lease.

Ownby Drilling Co. No. 1 Lindley drilling at 2725 with no smell yet according to Mr. Driver who is in charge of operations.

Man and Griffin No. 1 Millington making a real well, however the figures are not in as yet. This is just across the peach orchard from one of the dry holes and not too far from the other which sort of stymied all interest in the area just South of Gorman for awhile.

A. W. Gregg's No. No. 1 House drilling at 1750 feet. A. W. Gregg acidized the No. 1 Boyd using 4,000 gallons of acid. They are swabbing and cleaning up. They perforated 10 feet of the lower section of the pay, and came up and perforated the top 12 feet, using 60 shots with each setting.

E. R. and E. M. Burt completing their No. 2 Rawls. They are fixing to drill in. This well was bottomed at 2885 feet.

E. K. and E. M. Burt are moving from their No. 2 Rawls to a new location just northeast of Desdemona and almost north of the Clayton Discovery well for Clint Crosby out of Oklahoma City.

E. K. and E. M. Burt will move from the Clint Crosby drilling to another Clayton lease which is directly north of the First Clayton well. Incidentally, the Burts will be drilling this well on their own lease.

The J. R. Hunter well on the Gorman-Eastland Highway No. 1 Blackwell is looking mighty good where they are working the top of the Ellenberger. This is being watched with a great deal of interest by people all the way from San Antonio to Tyler, Longview and Oklahoma City.
