BIGGEST STILL IS CAPTURED IN OPERATION WHEN OFFICERS RAID UNDERGROUND ROOM

Two Arrested After Squad Waits Long Time For Plant to Open Up.

Officers of the sheriff's department and Texas Ranger J. W. McCormick captured the largest still to be brought in by officers here in some time, early Sunday morning when they raided a hidden underground room three miles west of Wichita Falls on the Charlie road. Two men were arrested and filed on in the state courts for making whisky. According to the officers, the men were in the act of making liquor when arrested.

Hidden Underground.

The room in which the large still was located was hidden under a hay barn a short distance from the road, and was only accessible through a narrow passage that led through a trap door. Inside the room was a completely furnished distillery, which was running at full speed. In addition to the two men and the unusually large still, the officers captured 800 gallons of mash in 18 barrels, and 15 gallons of corn whisky.

Wait Long Time.

The officers arrived on the scene at 12 o'clock Saturday night, but waited in silence near the place until the two men appeared and began operation of the still. Then, after moving hay bales and opening the hidden trop door, the men jumped into the room, covering the alleged bootleggers with pistols. No resistance was made, and the men did not deny connection with the still.

Sunday morning, when officers returned to the scene to destroy the still, more than 50 persons were present to view the large plant and to watch the pouring of the whisky into the creeks. Photographers snapped pictures as the equipment was destroyed.

Officers who made the raid were Ranger McCormick, W. W. Belcher, W. P. Belcher and Frank Watkins, deputies of the sheriff's department.

Tariff May Cause South To Lose Best Cotton Customers

South Africa Lines Up To Raise Big Crops; Production Increase.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The Fordney-McCumber tariff bill keeping out English made goods may cause the south to lose its best cotton customer.

Information received here today is to the effect that a movement is on foot in Great Britain to encourage the raising of cotton in South Africa. A levy on trade will be laid for the purpose.

Cable dispatches from London tell of the address of Sir Philip Lloyd-Creame in the house of commons, in which he declared that the United States was making trade impossible.

Hoover Investigates

Senators Simmons, North Carolina, during the debate on the tariff bill, declared that such a result might follow. Secretary of Commerce Hoover is making inquiries into the situation.

The prospect of making South Africa an important cotton producing country is good, according to a report to the commerce department from Consul L. V. Boyle, Natal. Thee are said to be approximately 4,000,000 acres of land in the union of South Africa suitable for growing cotton, 2,000,000 acres of which are in the Transvaal and 2,000,000 acres in Natal. Considerable interest in growing cotton has recently been aroused in Natal because of the ravages of the boll weevil in the United States.

The production of cotton in South Africa has steadily increased from 22 bales of 500-pound in 1910, to 2,320 bales for the season 1921-22.

ENDS LONGEST PERIOD IN FAST TWO-STEP TIME

Maydaline Williams Sets World Mark In Texas Hall

PARENTS CALL HALT

21 Couples Worn Out In Record Three-Day Run

Associated Press Dispatch

HOUSTON, April 15.—Sixty-five hours and twenty-nine minutes. That is the answer of a Texas girl to the would-be world champion long distance dancers of New York and Cleveland.

The record was made at McMillian's Dancing Academy here, 21 couples having set out at 9:15 p. m. Thursday with a cash prize and a trip to New York as a goal for the best record.

Beauty Winner

Pretty Miss Magdaline Williams, winner in a recent Rudolf Valentino beauty contest danced steadily through two days and three nights and the greater part of the third day, while couple after couple dropped out around.

To the very last there was very little evidence of exhaustion about her and for a swan song she staged as lively a one-step as she did on the first night.

Three Houston dancers broke the world record established at Baltimore Saturday when they continued dancing beyond 2:49 a. m. Sunday.

Doctors prevailed on Miss Goldie Hughes to drop out shortly after 3 a. m. and leave the contest to Miss Williams and L. Kessler. At 2:27 p. m. Sunday, Kessler was ruled off the floor as a result of his apparent inability to keep time to the music, or to do any real dancing.

Heeds Parent's Request

Miss Williams first announced she would go on through Sunday to 9 p. m. making a 72-hour record. Doctors felt her pulse and offered no serious objections and the dance continued despite protests of the hall management.

The young auburn haired Miss had a scrap for all who advised her to quit, and apparently she had plenty of vitality left but a note from her parents prevailed and she consented to leave the floor at 3:08 p. m., after having been continuous on it for more than 65 hours.

Turkish Bath

A waiting limousine carried her to a Turkish bath and then to her home and sleep. Hundreds packed the streets as the car left the dance hall. Friends and acquaintances crowded around to congratulate the girl, who was still vivacious as ever.

During Sunday the onlookers crowded on the dance floor, surrounding the last remaining couple. Police kept them back, while a violinist walked alongside playing the latest jazz, in unison with the orchestra at one end of the hall. Orchestra music was provided during the entire 65 hours and there was never an hour, day or night, when there were not hundreds of onlookers in the dance hall.

While the actual time was 65 hours and 29 minutes, the time consumed was 65 hours and 53 minutes, with "time out" 24 minutes.

DES MOINES, Iowa, April 14.—Determination of a specific program of activities and the distribution of these activities throughout the year for each of the state and local bodies of the National League of Women Voters was discussed at the post convention session of the executive council of the league this afternoon, following adjournment of the fourth annual convention.

A House Divided.

Some years ago there were in Paris two papers, the Razor and the Scorpion, which were always attacking each other. Every week people bought the Razor to read how it cut at the Scorpion, and then purchased the Scorpion to learn how it stung the Razor.

A certain philanthropist, feeling pained to see such animosity displayed, invited the two editors to dine, in the hope that over a good fare he could make peace between them. At the appointed time one lean, melancholy man presented himself and was ushered in. After an interval, as no other guest appeared, the host demanded:

"May I ask, are you the editor of the Razor or the Scorpion?"

"Both," said the sad-eyed man.—Sheffield (Eng.) Telegraph.

BOND PRICES STILL IMPROVE

Market Dull and Few Advances Made In Week

Associated Press Dispatch

NEW YORK, April 15.—While bonds prices continued to improve during the past week, the market was relatively dull and the advances were small, due, many observers believe, to the large amount of undigested securities still remaining on dealers' shelves. Of the approximately $1,225,000,000 of new issues offered this year, it is estimated that in excess of $200,000,000 still are in the hands of bond dealers. Ti this situation is attributed failure of the bond market to turn definitely upward.

Other important factors influencing the bond market are the money rates and the uncertainty government financing will take to May maturities.

United States governmeit issues closed the week somewhat depressed, although they enjoyed a considerable advance earlier in the week. There were reports in the financial district that an order was placed during the week for the purchase of $100,000,000 in liberties for the account of Great Britain.

COMPETITION FOR LABOR ADVANCES

More Action In Steel And Packing Industries

Associated Press Dispatch

NEW YORK, April 15.—Additional wage advances, continued reports of continued industrial activity and indecisive speculative markets have been the chief topics of discussion in business and financial circles during the past week. As had been anticipated, the revival of the season for additional outdoor work has resulted in increased competition for labor, this factor plainly being the reason for the 11 per cent increase in wages in the steel industry. Other outstanding advance was in the packing industry. In certain quarters a disposition to view recent increase with restraint was apparent, the point being made that the magnitude of the labor shortage has been the subject of a certain amount of exaggeration, the latter being prompted in some cases by a desire to sell goods ahead.

In steel, it has become increasingly clear that the buying movement which started last December has come to an end. Buyers are well covered ahead and do not care to pay present high prices for more remote deliveries. Accordingly, although the steel corporation's unfilled orders showed a further gain during March, it is considered that this sort of thing may have come to an end for the time being at least. Meanwhile, steel works are operating at something like 99 per cent of capacity, and are expected to continue to do so for some months to come.

Saints Make It Three Out Of Four, 8 to 2

VISITORS SAY LITTLE BUT BAT OUT EARLY LEAD WHILE LOCALS BOW DOWN TO VETERAN HALL

Charlie Hall Puts the Indian Sign on the Spudders and Keeps Pace With Haas By Parking Ball Outside the Enclosure—Contest Is Very Quiet—Last of Exhibition Games Today.

By "DINK" ADDINGTON

Mike Kelly's Silent Saints who had their chins strapped down tight but their bats well lubricated for a victory, ran away from the Spudders in the fourth game of the series yesterday afternoon, 8 to 2. The Saints had agreed to go on the field and refuse to open their mouths. This they did and there was no beefing but plenty of hitting.

While his mates were piling up runs for him, the veteran Charlie Hall was hushing the willows of the Spudders and they got but four hits and one run in seven innings off him. Contrary to this, the visitors got after Flaherty and sent in six counters in their first four frames. Hawks started it with a double in the first and scored on Haas's scratch to White.

Christensen uncorked a single in the third with one out and Hawks popped out to Floyd came through with another solitaire to left. Bruno Haas cleared up the situation by stepping into one and smashing it far over the double right field wall for a home run, scoring "Sen Cap" and Floyd in advance of him.

Joe and Buddie.

Berger, Tanner and company got one of the markers back in the third when Joe smacked a single to the middle garden and scored on Tanner's long and timely double to the right boards. Hall was then completely in charge of the locals and he went out in the seventh and he gave but very little opening for the home boys to slide in for a run.

Berghammer walked in the Saints fourth and was sacrificed by Dressen, Allen scored him with a single past Tanner into left field and Allen went out stealing, Bischoff to Berger. Hall was evidently stricken with jealously over Haa's home run bat for he also snanked a leather over the right barriende for a quartette of bases.

Berghammer made it just one more when he trippled in the sixth and came home after Bescher had gobbled up Dressen's sacrifice fly.

Napier Wild.

Buddie Napier took the hill for the Saints in the eighth and got into a tub of hot water right off the reel but pulled out without being scratched. He walked the first four men to face him loading the bases and things began to shine out a bit amongst the home boys. Then something happened that can be labelled hard luck or tough pickings or whatever you please. George Whiteman smote a liner that was hit hard enough to be a knock in any old game but it went right straight at Dressen who made the catch and doubled Tanner off second. Cotter flew to Haas to close the anticipated rally.

Christensen walked to inaugurate the ninth and Hawks laid down a sacrifice. Rigert lifted out but Haas came across with his third hit and Christensen scampered home.

Locals Score Again.

Napier got in bad again in the ninth and Spudders didn't let him out so easily although the run they did get was as valuable as a rain check in Siberia. White was retired when Bischoff was hit by a pitched ball and Ruth, who batted for Feigert, missed a third strike. Bescher singled to right putting Bischoff to second and the latter scored on Berger's second hit of the day, a single to center. Tanner had the third strike called on him.

Lefty Feigert, who relieved Flaherty in the fifth, displayed a curve ball that wasn't hard to lamp and he allowed but two runs but the big overflow had already gone across the platter.

The largest crowd of the exhibition series witnessed the game, 2,258 paid admissions going through the turnstiles. This afternoon will see the close of the Saint series and will also mark the end of the exhibition games. The Spudders leave Tuesday for Shreveport where they open the Texas league season Wednesday.

Homers As Only Run of Game Are Rare Occurrence

Harry Harper, the lef-handed hurler with the New York Americans a few seasons ago, and with Washington earlier in his career, was pitching a game against the Boston team back in 1918 and was doing finely. Breening along for six innings in a manner which was suggestive of a no-hit game, when George Ruth came to bat in the seventh and drove the ball out for a homer. It proved to be the only hit and the only run made by the Sox in that game.

This stunt doesn't happen very often in baseball; in fact, the above mentioned record is the fourth time it happened in major league baseball. It was on October 7, 1884, that Charlie (Pretzel) Getzien of the Detroit Nationals, pitching against the New York Giants, held them to one hit, which was a homer, and the only run the Giants made.

Charlie Buffington, star hurler of the Philadelphia Nationals, on August 9, 1887, in a game against the Chicago club, held that aggregation hitless for six innings. In the seventh something went wrong with Buff's famous downshoot, for he issued three successive passes, then Fred Pfeffe rof the Chicagos posted one of Buffington's drops for a home run. This was the only hit made off Buffington, and although that line hit netted four runs, yet his team won out.

John G. Clarkson, while with the Cleveland club in 1893, held Boston to one hit, but it was a four-bagger.

Keeping Pace In The Chess Match

Between Houston And Wichita Falls

Queen's Bishop to Queen 2

In order to break the check which the Wichita Bishop has made on their king and is considered a very good move, in fact it was expected by the locals for it was the best one that could be made under the circumstances.

The locals have several good moves under consideration if reply, and may possibly take the Houston king pawn with their queen. All moves made to date are as follows:

Houston: P to K4, Kt to KB3, P to Q4, Kt takes P, Kt to QKt5, Q1t to Q2. Wichita: P to K4, Qkt to B3, P takes P, Q to R5, B to QKt5, check.

Members of the local board of strategy were somewhat mystified yesterday over the whereabouts of their strategic general and it was believed by some that he was celebrating the two scores counted by the Wichita club. This suspicion was confirmed when his nibs, the general was seen hurrying north on Tenth street with a large order of fresh pigs carefully carried in a cardboard box.

Big Leagues Predict Outcomes As Opening Of New Season Nears

Circuit Presidents and Club Owners Prophesy Bright Future

NEW YORK, April 15.—National league baseball teams never were in better condition to start the diamond race than this year, John A. Heydler, president of the senior circuit declared today to The Associated Press commenting upon the start of the season on Tuesday. All indications point to one of the league's most successful seasons, he added.

"The National league on Tuesday next begins its 48th season of continuous existence," he said. "Through the two time world's series victories of the Giants, our organization has regained much in playing prestige and keen interest will center in the fight the seven other clubs will make to dislodge the champions.

"Changes have been made in the control of clubs in our circuit which brought memories of a pleasant character to baseball in general. I am sure no more welcome was heard during the winner than that 'Matty' was back in the game at the head of the Boston club and the appointment of Arthur Fletcher as manager of the Philadelphia club was a recognition of a sincere and straightforward player who always has stood high in the favor of the fans. This year, too, will inaugurate the control of McKechnie, manager of Pittsburgh, from the start of the struggle, as he did not take up the position of manager in 1922 until the season was well on.

Good Spring Weather.

"With the exception of Pittsburgh, our clubs were favored by phenominally fine training conditions and as far as I can learn the teams in the National league never were in better shape to start in competition."

CHICAGO, April 15.—The Chicago Nationals are entering the 1923 season with one of the youngest clubs in the major leagues. The average age of the players is 24 years. A number of writers have picked it to finish in the first division. Manager Killifer declared that his club may loose a few games at the start of the season, but after the "kids" hit their stride, the Cubs will go fast, while the veterans on the other clubs will be showing the effects of the strain.

Pirates Rate High.

PITTSBURGH, April 15.—With the same lineup as at the close of the 1922 season when their offensive several times carried them within striking distance of the pennant, the Pirates, picked by experts as the best team to represent Pittsburgh at the opening of the season since the days of Fred Clarke in 1909, are ready for the new season's struggle.

With "Reb" Russell heavy hitting outfielder and Walter Schmidt, veteran catcher in the lineup at the start close followers of the game pick the Pirates as a "One-two-three" team.

Reds Strengthened.

CINCINNATI, April 15.—With the 1922 team virtually intact, the Cincinnati Reds are preparing today for the opening of the National league season with the St. Louis Cardinals.

No important trades were made during the winter, with the exception of the deal which brought Rube Benton, left-handed pitcher, back into the major league after a season with the St. Paul American association team. In each department the Reds have been strengthened by the addition of recruits, who display much promise at the southern training camp.

Philly Optimism.

PHILADELPHIA, April 15.—Acquisition of new material is responsible optimistic expressions as to the chances of Philadelphia, American and National league teams in the pennant race this year. Although neither Connie Mack nor Art Fletcer respectively, American and National pilots, would predict whether their club would finish, both expressed confidence tonight that they would be out of the second division.

Five Clubs, Says Ban

CHICAGO, April 15.—Five clubs in the American league have pennant possibilities, in the opinion of President Ban B. Johnson, who in a pre-season statement tonight, said that evidence throughout the circuit of interest in the 1923 race assures the league one of the best years in the history of the game.

President Johnson said Detroit, Cleveland and Chicago will enter the race far better equipped than a year ago, while New York because of its pitching staff must be regarded as a dangerous contender. The illness of George Sisler, may keep the Browns out of the race at the start, President Johnson figures. "This spring I have studied with unusual care, reports from training camps of the American league clubs," President Johnson said. "The weather in all sections save Florida has been exceedingly unfavorable, for the early preparatory work. This will prove something of a handicap to the teams that trained in the more northern states.

"There has been sufficient development, however, to win assurance to the public that the American league championship race will furnish a contest of unusual merit and interest. It is my firm conviction there, are at least nine clubs with actual pennant possibilities. In accepting the tverdicts of expert sharp shooters in southern training camps the Detroit, Cleveland and Chicago clubs will enter the campaign for better equipped than they were a year ago.

Hope for Sisler.

"I do not regard with serious concern the rumors of Sisler's eye affliction. The ailment was of a sudden development, but a general return to normal conditions is reasonably assured. Without the aid of this remarkable and aggressive player the Browns would be greatly taxed in maintaining a place in the first flight."

Cobb Picks 'Em.

DETROIT, April 15.—Despite the poor showing of his men during the training season, Manager Ty Cobb of the Detroit Tigers, thinks the fight for the American league pennant this year will be between Detroit and New York with the Chicago White Sox as a third dangerous contended. Absence from the St. Louis lineup of George Sisler the Tiger leader believes will greatly decrease the chances of the Browns, leaving the admitted difficult jobs of beating the Yanks to Detroit, Chicago and Cleveland, Ty propounds.

Indians In First.

CLEVELAND, O., April 15.—President E. S. Barnard and Manager Tris Speaker of the Cleveland American believe the Indians will finish in first division in the American league pennant race this season and will be a factor in the race from the start, due to the excellent training weather at the Lakeland, Fla., camp and the strengthening of the team in several ways.

Browns Set Back.

ST. LOUIS, April 15.—The announced absence from the line-up of George Sisler, star first baseman, for at least the first six weeks of the race has dimmed the prospects of the St. Louis Americans for winning the 1923 championship of which they were confident until the nature of Sisler's illness became serious.

Sisler will undergo an operation shortly for sinus trouble which has affected his vision and his affliction came as a big blow to the Browns, who finished only one game behind the champion New York team last year. Cedric Durst, a recruit, will substitute for him.

Illinois Will Graduate First Class In Coaching

URBANA, Ill., April 14.—There's a new type of athletic coach. The coach of the past was educated for other things and entered coaching as an after thought. The new coach selects his lifework when a high school graduate, and when he enters college specializes just as an engineer, lawyer or physician does.

That the day of the specially trained coach is coming is demonstrated by the fact that the University of Illinois this year will graduate its first class in athletic coaching and physical education, and that a number of them have already been engaged as coaches by colleges and high schools, with others considering various positions.

Was Once Evil.

Once the coach was regarded as a more or less necessary evil by many faculties. But the 33 young men who have worked hard for four years at Illinois will receive the degree of bachelor of science. Their special training in athletics is fortified by a broad education in scientific and cultural subjects.

The four-year course in coaching was established in 1919 on the recommendation of George Huff, veteran director of athletics. Year after year, the latter institutions asked for recommendations, and he was convinced that the time had come to elevate the work to the rights of a profession.

Today finds nearly 250 students from 28 states in the course.

HIGH GRIDDERS IN SPRING WORK

Will Report For First Drill This Afternoon On Austin Grounds

Spring football practice for the local high school candidates will get under way this afternoon when Coach Jimmie Jones has ordered all players to turn out for the first drill. The work for the most part will consist of punting and passing.

Practically a dozen of the last year squad will be available for the team this year, although several regulars, including ex-Captain Walker, will be lost through graduation. There will be several who will be unable to report for spring work because of their connection with track and baseball.

The workouts will be held on the Austin school grounds. Captain Stringer will lead the Coyotes on their rampage next fall.

TAKE IT OR LEAVE IT

By "DINK" ADDINGTON

Yesterday's game was so comparatively noiseless it sounded like the quiet hour in a deaf and dumb institute.

* * *

The Saints rigged up some kind of a doings that made the first bird who said a word draw a fine or buy a drink for the crowd or something. Not a word was said but there was some tough looks passed out at times.

* * *

The visitors played like dummies,
They never said a word;
The singing of the umpire,
Was the only sound we heard.

* * *

And the last verse will be sung this afternoon.

* * *

The Spudders had twenty assists which is a big assignment for one day. The double play they pulled in the third helped a lot for Bischoff, Elliott, Tanner, White, Flaherty, and Berger got their hand in it before it was over.

* * *

Bruno Haas had a sparkling afternoon of it for the Saints both in the field and at the dish. A homer and two singles out of three times up and he robbed the locals of some hits with numerous pretty catches. In the second he took one away from Bischoff with a one-hand catch while running with his back to the ball.

* * *

He made himself a circus catch,
And though he's not a clown,
A circus man would hire him,
If he saw him pull that down.

* * *

The Spudders were all dolled out in their new play suits. Getting used to the road unies.

* * *

WHERE?
The Spudders have
Some new white hose;
Where they got them,
Nobody knows.

* * *

"Great stuff," said the laundry man as he lamped the pure white sox.

* * *

In spite of the fact that three stolen bases were registered, Bischoff showed some very acceptable work in the pegging department. Turned back three ambitious thieves, two of them in one inning, and picked a man off first.

* * *

"Sen Cap" Christensen has landed on the sacks fourteen of the seventeen times he has come to bat in the series.

* * *

YES, INDEED.
He's a little chap,
But me, oh, my!
He has the knack
Of getting by.

* * *

Today is the last chance to see the Spudders until April 27 when they have their local opening of the season against the Shreveport Gassers.

MANYGOLFERSON MUNICIPAL LINKS

Play Full Nine Holes Yesterday and Find Course In Good Shape

More than 100 players took advantage of the completion of the municipal golf course and swung their clubs over the links yesterday according to the estimates of several who shared in the joys of the new city playground.

All nine holes were in use and the greens were reported to be in very good shape. A ground man is at work on them and they will be in still finer condition within a short space of time, mowing machine is due to arrive some time during the week and it will be put to work immediately getting the fairways trimmed down.

The club quarters have been almost entirely vacated by the country club members and the building will be in shape for full occupancy by the time of the formal opening, a few days hence. Printed score cards will also be available within a few days and players may then turn in their scores to be used in determining their handicaps for the tournament which will decide the winner of the Nafziger cup.

BEAUTOWN HOPEFUL

BOSTON, April 15.—On the eve of the opening of the 1923 baseball season, Boston appears to have as representatives in the National and American leagues two teams which will at least finish better than the cellar positions, the reward of each last year. The Braves give promise of greater strength than last year in both pitching and hitting while the Red Sox under the management of Frank Chance, are admittedly a rather uncertain quantity.

HAT IN THE RING

General Roy Hoffman of Oklahoma journeyed all the way to San Antonio where he turned loose a presidential boom for Governor Jack Walton. Governor Jack is a democrat with farm labor trimmings. General Hoffman is a democrat with military trimmings. He saw service on the Mexican border before the war and service in France while the war was on.

There are 48 states. Is every state to push the claims of a favorite son? Three years ago, Senator Robert Owen was the favorite son of Oklahoma. He had been duly anointed by William Jennings Bryan. This was as far as he got.

Oklahoma delegates remained loyal to Owens until the last ballot had been taken. Then they fluttered and died in the Owen band wagon. Governor Jack should not take his boom too seriously. He should remember the fate of the Cherokee senator who was born in Virginia and became a democratic statesman in the state that is known as the stepdaughter of Texas.

MONEY IN THEIR POCKETS . . .

Another million dollar steerage colony arrived in New York from Norway on its way to the farm lands of the West. There were 234 Norweigans and Swedes in the party and they had letters of credit totaling a million dollars. These new comers are not skilled laborers. They are skilled farmers. They dig wealth from the soil. They create taxable values. They help to feed the mouths of the world.

An Ohio banker got away with a million dollars. He was captured. He was convicted. He was sentenced to 21 years in a federal penitentiary. When he goes after them, Uncle Sam always gets 'em.

AN OUT-LAW NATION

Secretary of State Charles Evans Hughes has barred from these shores the wife of the president of soviet Russia. This is an avowed protest against the butchery of a minister of the gospel by the Lenine government. The woman was coming to this country to appeal for continued aid for the relief of Russian children.

Soviet Rhssia has a policy of government that does not appeal to the so-called Christian nations. Ministers and priests of all denominations must accept the gospel of the Reds or hold their tongues.

Rev. Percy Stickney Grant of New York defends this policy as well as the execution of ministers of the gospel who refuse to accept it. Now what would the New York clerical think if the government of the state of New York attempted to place a gag in his mouth and shackles on his mind?

TEXAS CROP CONDITIONS

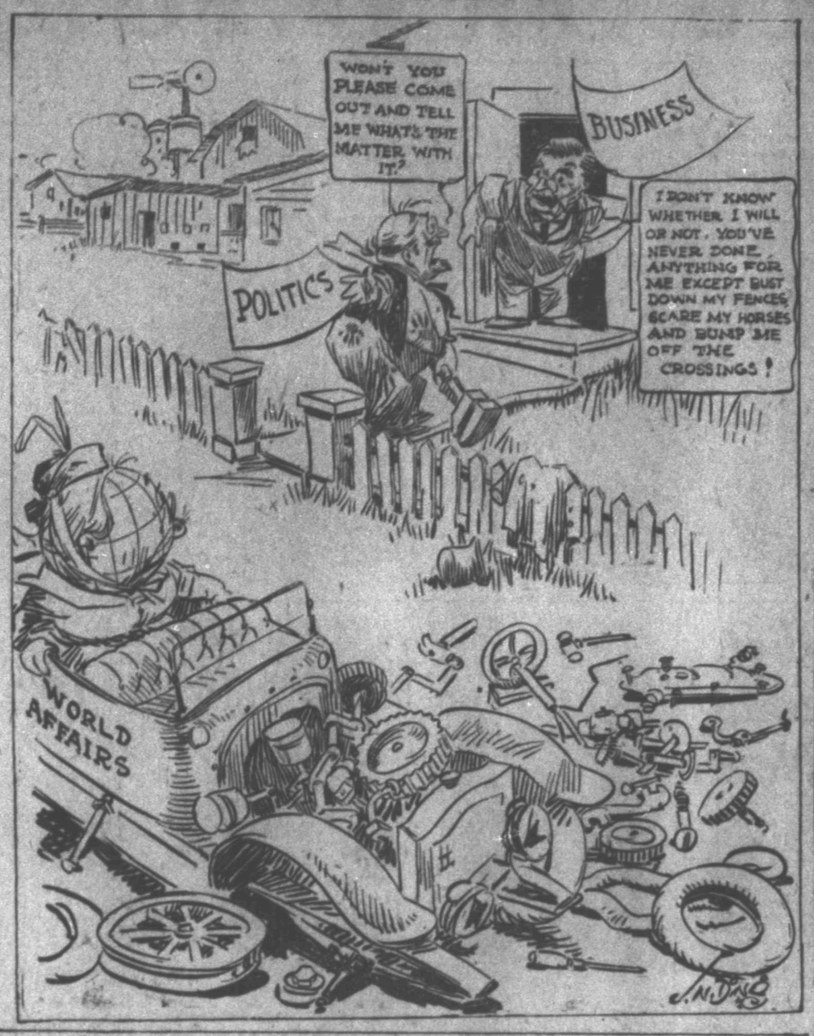

According to a Texas labor bulletin, the supply of farm labor this year is 93 per cent of the normal supply. The bulletin adds that while the need for farm labor is not great now, in 60 days when farm operations are nearing their maximum activity, the demand will be considerable and where there is much building done and road construction and oil field activity, a shortage of farm labor is already noticeable. This is an excerpt: "Most farmers are well up with their work. They are hiring men with caution and mindful of the hardships and losses of recent years." General conditions prevailing over the state are now favorable and only somewhat below the average for this time of the year. Unless all the signs are misleading, Texas is going to be all right this year.

HENRY FORD'S BANK ROLL

A New York political writer who visited the principal cities and towns of Michigan, returns this verdict: "Henry Ford can carry Michigan against any man in the democratic party and probably against any republican in the finals. The democrat assert it and the republicans admit it. A large and diligent army could be mobilized for Ford all over the country. He employs around 60,000 men in Michigan alone, probably 100,000 all told." The same writer says that Henry has not as yet raised a finger to take the rubber band off his three hundred million bank roll to promote his presidential ambition "if he has any." Henry Ford continues to be the political man of mystery of American politics.

King George has approved the bestowal of a medal on a Danish Arctic explorer. Why ignore Dr. Cook?

DID YOU EVER NOTICE TO WHOM HE TURNS IF HE GETS "UP AGAINST IT?"

Lou-Lou

By H. BEDFORD JONES

Barak! Was he, then, confined in this place?

As this thought came to Fortesque, it received a frightful and terrible answer.

This answer came in the shape of the mate. The figure of Bantok seemed to slide across the planking and stopped under the shaft of light from above. Bantok was on hands and knees, with one foot out of sight in the darkness. Yet Fortesque saw that to that foot a hand was clinging.

Bantok lifted his head from the deck, lifted his head and strove to call out. No sound came from his throat. He shuddered, then fell limply.

As he fell, as he lay quiet, the horrified Fortesque saw that his throat had been torn away—the red flesh hung there, pendulous, quivering, deluging his breast with blood. Then the hand drew him away into the darkness, leaving a red smear over the deck.

Fortesque tried to speak, tried to utter Barak's name, but he could not. The horror of this sight had driven him dumb for the moment.

There was silence again. In the midst of this silence came a hoarse panting, as of a creature gasping dryly for breath. Then a tiny object appeared in the air before Fortesque and fell with a tinkle to the deck at his feet—a small key. Bantok had carried in his waistcloth the key to Fortescue's irons.

The white man did not realize this at the instant, but understanding came to him. He reached out his bound hands and drew in the key.

At this instand figures darkened the hatch opening above.

"Allah blast the big ox!" grumbled one of them, referring pleasantly to Bantok. "Come on and help him, brethren! The dumb one will go quickly, and then it will be the turn of this wide-shouldered son of Eblis."

As he spoke the man dropped through the hatchway, saluted Fortesque with a kick of his bare foot, and stepped into the darkness. He vanished. The other two followed him, crowding together as they dropped.

"Help, brethren!" croaked the voice of the first suddenly, from the darkness. Then a thudding fall.

The two started forward, their knives flashing out. As they went into the darkness, something flickered out and fell around them; it was the metal net.

Fortesque inserted the little key into his ankle irons, feverishly. They unlocked; he kicked out his feet, free!

A woman utters a cry for succor instinctively, without thought, and quickly. It is different with a man, especially a man who is largely dependent upon himself, such as a criminal or murderer. Then the thought-impulse moves slowly to the vocal organs; such a cry becomes an effort.

Perhaps this was the reason why those two men meshed within the net did not shout for aid. Within that net, their keen blades were useless; vainly they stabbed, as a resistless strength drew them into the blackness. Then, when they might have cried out, a remorseless hand clutched either man about the throat and pressed the flexible metal meshes into the skin and flesh.

Under their feet rolled their comrade, who had been stabbed with the knife of Bantok.

Fortesque, the little key between his teeth, worked frantically to unfasten the cuffs that bound his wrists together. Again and again he failed, but at length, suddenly, the lock clicked.

He jumped to his feet and stepped into the darkness. Instantly he was able to see. He came to an abrupt halt.

Then, at a sudden thud behind him, Fortesque whirled. Another of the crew had come down alone, had dropped through the hatchway, and was crouching behind him, eyes widening at the darkness.

Without hesitation, Fortesque lashed out. His fist took the brown man in the face—then something whirred past him and drove home with a dull sound.

Barak had flung a knife. The Moro lay dead.

Again, Fortesque turned to that terrible scene which confronted him. He saw Barak standing there, a huge, gaunt, emaciated wreck of a man, with outstretched arms. On those arms were manacles, from which depended twisted links. Barak had torn the chain asunder, and now with a supreme effort the two together burst the last chains that held him.

From Barak's lips came an inarticulate, throaty sound. He had laughed.

But beside the mute were four other figures, moving and twisting grotesquely in a horrible dance. Fortesque saw that they were the bodies of Bantok and the three men. They had been placed in the manaches that hung from the ceiling; they hung there, limp feet dragging red circles on the deck.

Fortesque rose, feeling a little sick, but conquered the inner revulsion. Thought of Lou-Lou spurred at him frantically. Had Rais Hamed told the truth about Lou-Lou and Hvarson in that house ashore?

Hvarson demands that Quail marry him and Lou-Lou and knocks the minister senseless when he refuses, carrying Lou-Lou into his house. Fortesque is thrown into the hold of the Gazelle where Barak is still confined. However the mute effects their freedom, killing five of the crew.

Fortesque told his story in whispers. A convulsion overspread the face of Barak as he heard the news of Lou-Lou and Hvarson. He pointed to the bodies around him. There were four besides Banak. Then he pointed to the deck above, and held up his open hand.

Five of the schooner's crew remained.

Releasing the mate's body and finding his feet, Barak stooped. From the weapons he took an automatic pistol, which he handed to Fortesque, then gestured to the deck above.

"You want me to go at 'em?" asked Fortesque.

Barak nodded.

"All right. You'll come, I suppose?"

Barak shook his head. He pointed aft, made incomprehensible signs and shook his two clenched hands.

Fortesque had not the slightest idea what he meant, and laughed coldly.

"Never mind. Rais Hamed did this fiend's work on you? The devils! Wait till I get a shot at that infernal—"

Barak made motions of violent dissent. He came close to Fortesque, pointing to himself, shaking his head.

"Ah!" Fortesque stared at him. "You want me to leave Rais Hamed to you?"

Barak nodded eagerly. Now the mute stooped and cupped his hands. Fortesque understood, and stepped into them. He heard Barak grunt, then he was shot upward suddenly.

That one great heave sent him upward in an arc that ended on sitting—and as he recovered from the shock, the automatic in his hand spat death.

The five remaining men of the crew were only a dozen feet from him. Fortesque sat there on the deck and shot them down deliberately, before they could touch a weapon. Three of them staggered and sank to the deck; the other two plunged aft, where Rais Hamed was rising from his chair in startled amazement.

So swiftly had the whole thing transpired that Hamed was still plucking at his weapons when Fortesque came toward him. In this moment Brian would have shot Rais Hamed deliberately, had he not remembered the plea of Barak.

The three men hands above their heads gazed at Fortesque unmoving. He started to speak, then checked himself quickly. Behind those three men he saw something move. A hand reached up and gripped the stern rail of the schooner.

Then Fortesque understood that Barak has gone aft, between decks, had found a way into the stern of the ship, and was coming up on Rais Hamed from behind.

Even as the thought sped into his brain, Barak came. He rose over the rail a terrible object, the metal net looped in one hand. Rais Hamed and his two men, unconscious of the menace, still watched Fortesque.

And as they watched, the metal net left the hand of Barak—opened in the air behind them, came over the head of Rais Hamed and enveloped him.

From the three came a sharp cry. The two Moros shrank aside in mid fright. Rais Hamed, beneath that death-net, whirled and plucked out a revolver. He fired twice as Barak plunged upon him. The arms of Barak swept around him, net and all. He fired again; this time the report was muffled.

The lips of Barak opened. From his mouth came that horrible inarticulate laugh of his. He lifted Rais Hamed from the deck, staggered—then seemed to lose his footing and reeled headlong at the rail. The two men, locked together, hung there an instant, then disappeared. From the water came up a sullen splash.

Fortesque had broken into a run—but too late. They were gone. He saw a pool of crimson eddying in the water below. but neither man rose. He turned and lifted his automatic at the two remaining Moros.

"Tuan!" they cried the imploring word together. "Tuan—"

Fortesque's finger was pressing the trigger when over their shoulders he saw something move on the island. It was Luke Quail, whom he had thought dead, but who was now standing up and waving an arm.

The automatic lowered. Fortesque approached the two men, who shrank from his cold smile with horrified eyes, and in five minutes he had them bound hand and foot bound beyond escape.

Below the counter of the craft trailed a boat. Fortesque got into this and rowed ashore, coldly and deliberately. All hope was dead within him, and he felt like an old man.

When Fortesque reached the shore Luke Quail was waiting to draw up the boat with both hands that shook. The old man's face was livid and waxen. Upon him there was a singular calm, which was not the calm of despair, nor the calm of answered prayers. Fortesque had never seen a look which resembled this on the face of Luke Quail.

"What happened?" said the latter.

"Barak," said Fortesque, curtly. "All dead or tied up. Where's Lou-Lou?"

Luke Quail pointed to the door. Fortesque now perceived the outlines of the house.

"There. With Hvarson. I refused to marry them. He—" The old voice faltered.

Fortesque ran to the door and hurled himself against it, boldly. It did not even quiver under the impact of his body.

Somewhat dazed, he drew back.

"Hvarson," he tried to shout.

Once more he flung himself at the massive, solid door. This time he recoiled, bruised and hurt, and almost lost balance. He fell in the brown sand. Luke Quail came up and aided him to his feet.

Forteque, staggering, pulled out his automatic, staring at the door. He shook off the old man's hand.

"He'll be out, and then—"

Minutes quivered past, and Hvarson did not appear. More and more terribly the conviction grew upon Fortesque that Haverson would not appear until forced.

The thought of Lou-Lou in there tortured him into a cold sweat. Luke Quail was speaking, but he did not hear what the old man was saying. He stared at the door with bloodshot, hungry eyes.

A savage curse broke from Fortesque. He took a step forward, aimed at the keyhole in the brown door and fired. He fired again—then the pistol clicked. It was empty.

Once more Fortesque threw himself at that massive door. Exultation thrilled him as he saw that the two bullets had smashed the keyhole out of shape. A cry broke from him as he flung his body at the door again.

Yet again he effected nothing, save to stagger backward and stand reeling, gasping, glaring at this door which seemed like a solid wall in the stone.

What lay behind this terrible door? He fancied that he could hear the voice of Lou-Lou calling to him, and the voice maddened him.

He threw himself at the insensate wood, beat it with his fists, hammered at it with his feet and shoulder and body, until he dropped limply, bleeding and hopeless.

The door remained closed, implacable, unresponding. From within the house came no sound. In this very immobility there was a hideous mockery. In this silence there was a contemptuous scorn.

He was impotent. His fury was broken.

After a little he found Luke Quail bending over him. He sat up, wondering at the strange calm which possessed the old man.

"Don't you realize," he groaned, "that we're helpless to do anything to aid her—"

"Then," asked Luke Quail quietly, "you do realize that we are helpless?"

"Yes," assented Fortesque with a gesture of despair.

"In that case, ask the help of God."

"God can do nothing. It is too late."

"Coward!" cried the old man, sternly, his blurred, blue eyes suddenly shining strangely. "Coward! What do you know of the power of God! Have you ever tested Him? Get down on your knees beside me and pray! Pray! as I have been praying, from the very depths of your little soul! Put your puny heart into your prayer, and He will answer!"

Fortesque looked at the older man in moody despair.

"If there is any answer, that would be a miracle!"

"Miracles happen every day, Brian Fortesque. Pray!"

It came to Fortesque, that just as in Barak had been a friendship more powerful than torture or greed, so there was in this Luke Quail a religion, a faith, more powerful than all other things. In this moment all the cold exterior of the man was shattered and wrecked. All his harsh sufficiency fell away from him, and the barriers were stripped clean from his inner self.

With tears, he surrendered himself into the guidance of this older man at his side, this man whose tremendous fund of faith was a welling flood of unknown forces! Just as that wooden door had resisted all his attacks, so had the heart of Brian Fortesque resisted all spiritual things; but now, in this moment, he had been broken.

As he knelt there in the hot sand beneath the hot sun, he could feel about him like a tangible force this spiritual force which emanated from Luke Quail—a force more than the man himself. It penetrated into Fortesque and transformed him.

It caused him to forget himself, to forget what he was doing here; it lifted him out of thought of himself.

He knew only that he was joining in the broken utterances of Luke Quail—that he was, in truth, making an appeal from his very soul depths. For almost the first time in his life he tasted the salty exultation of real prayer.

And presently, when he rose and gazed toward that immobile door of wood, it was with the rapt expression of one who awaits a miracle.

DROUTH IS BROKEN

It began raining Thursday night. Intermittently it rained all night; a kind of a dust rain that did not fill the water tanks but every drop of which soaked into the ground. This morning it looked dark enough for it to rain all week, and at times the rain was coming down hard. It looks now like the farmers will get the bottom season they have been hoping for all winter. Our folks are happy over present crop prospects, and have a right to be.—Quanah Tribune Chief.

EL PASO SILENT

El Paso has refused to endorse any city for the "Tech" college. Really, in doing this, she has acted wisely. In the first place, no city within a hundred miles of that city is an applicant, and then El Paso wants the good will of all West Texas. Another thing, the endorsement or refusal to endorse will not have a straw's weight in solving the question of which is the best place for establishing the school. Hence, all of the campaign for outside endorsement is mere camouflage. Make your proposition right.—Memphis Herald.

WATER SHORTAGE

During the present water shortage in this city it is hoped that everybody will co-operate with the city authorities in passing over this critical point in our history. We are almost in sight of an abundant water supply but have not yet reached it. After the next big rain it is almost certain that our water troubles will all be permanently settled, for the big reservoir is now in condition to catch 15 or 20 feet of good, wholesome water.—Childress Post.

ANOTHEH SHERMAN PAPER

Sherman now has two daily papers again. Some time ago the Democrat was bought from the Hunters. The Hunters have now started the Chronicle. Some newspaper people call Sherman a newspaper graveyard The term is hardly applicable. It is applicable to no town, except where there is no advertising patronage at all. Sherman patronizes her newspaper advertising columns well, but it seems to us, some few of her people expect a Dallas News to come out of Bells, in the same county, the crossing of the Katy Texas main line and the T. and P. jerk water extension, and a New York World to come out of any town half the size of Sherman, but it just can't be did at all Mister. In this idea of running a newspaper on $400 a week intake and $600 a week exhaust Sherman critics are not by themselves either.—Stamford Leader.

More Truth Than Poetry

By James J. Montague

A CHEERFUL PROSPECT

Time was, when nations went to war,
The ministers of state
Who lost or won, when war was done,
Were counted good and great.
The nations built them monuments,
And each beheld his name
Eftsoon enrolled in shining gold
Upon the scroll of fame.

But recently the valiant Greeks
Lost an embattled bet,
And promptly shot upon the spot
Their war?time cabinet.
"The ministers," the Greeks observed,
With a sardonic grin,
"Who hope to thrive and stay alive,
Will find it pays to win."

The Bulgars lately put on trial
The ministers who failed
In recent strife, and each for life
Now finds that he is jailed.
And as they led them to their cells
The angry people cried:
"This serves you right, for in the fight
You got on the wrong side!"

If statesmen cannot go to war
Without this dreadful risk
The trade in shot and shell may not
Hereafter be so brisk.
If every struggle that is lost
Means ministers must fall
They may refuse—win, draw, or lose—
To go to war at all!

Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE

THE REAL CONTEST

People are born competitive.

Any sort of contest interests them, from a competition for a Nobel prize down the scale to a pie-eating contest.

Contests of some sort or other are in progress at all times in nearly all countries.

More than a million dollars is the cost of the annual beauty contests in a great American summer resort.

It results in bitter jealousies and heart burnings, and proves only that nature was a little more kind to one particular young woman than to any of her sisters who were able to be in that summer resort during contest week.

Turn a half hundred boys loose in a school yard and contests of various sorts will be going on within two minutes.

Wrestlnig matches, sparring bouts, and games, running races, will all start as soon as they can be organized.

So with grown men and women, matching muscles or co-ordination or wits is their favorite occupation.

It may be baseball, tennis, golf, or even pitching pennies. But whatever it is, it becomes absorbingly interesting for the time being.

In fact these little contests, which are to be observed in so many forms often eclipse the real contest of life, which is getting as far as possible toward the top in the shortest possible space of time.

Start a beauty contest in an office employing a hundred typewriter girls and there will be a hundred entries.

Start a contest for rapid and accurate typewriting and 85 of the girls will pass it by with the indolent declaration that they would have no chance with the other ffteen.

It is because most people take such an eager interest in contests which amount to nothing and take it so readily for granted that they never could win a prize in th big contests, that a few determined people get most of the successes.

Could you interest an office boy as much in getting a chance to rise above his job as in the batting average of his city's baseball team, there would not be nearly as much difficulty in picking men fit to become the general manager some day.

The real contest in life is the contest of brains. And that is the one in which the fewest enter, for it requires the most work, and the most drudgery in the beginning.

But it is the only contest which, in the end, it really pays to take part in.

What Today Means To You

By MARY BLAKE

You should be endowed with a strong and independent character is today is your birthday. You are capable of attending to your own business and very desirous of doing so. If your friends would only realize it, they would be far wiser if they did not interfere with your affairs, as opposition and advice has a tendency to breed unjustness in you.

A new moon is due tonight, as the moon is in the same degree of longitude in Aries as the sun. Don't forget to make a wish over your left shoulder.

You may have an impulse to travel Your success more than likely lies in foreign lands. However, a nature like yours will produce valuable results wherever you may chance to roam.

You are very adaptable and capable of making the most of any situation. This very fine trait of character should make you a wonderfully fine mate. You take the good with the bad and accept with a smile what the gods have to offer.

You are a natural lover of scientific thought, of beauty, harmony and all that is luxurious.

One of your greatest desires in life is to be the proud possessor of a home in which there is a long spacious room with ample light and air. You would like to spend hours in this room listening to music.

Music seems to start inner life-force and acts as a balm to your restive spirit. You have no choice in the matter, whether it be ragtime or classical. It is music to you and a welcome message to your vibrant nerves.

You possess great physical magnetism. Both men and women of this date are passionate and affectionate and attractive to the opposite sex but, as might be expected, rather abrupt in their courtship

President Harding refuses to stand for an administration press agent. He does not feel that the administratien has suffered because of a lack of a more aggressive publicity policy. President Harding is a trained newspaper man. He knows the cost of having to be responsible for all the stuff that a publicity agent puts over. In addition to this President Harding is a cautious man. He knows it is safer to be his own publicity agent.

Bare-kneed girls have been expelled from the Boston public schools; barefooted boys have been barred. Now what is to become of those who are without socks or shoes?

BLACK SPEAKS AT FIRST M. E.

Presiding Elder Talks On "Revelation Of The Spirit"

At the morning service of the First Methodist Episcopal church, South, Tenth and Lamar, Rev. S. M. Black, presiding elder of the Wichita Falls district, spoke Sunday on "The Revelation of the Spirit," using for his text: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him; but God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit." He said in part:

Preparation For Life

"Too long we have thought of conversion as a preparation for death, whereas it is a preparation for life. The best preparation for death that any one can make is to live a good life. Conversion is essential to the noblest living, the highest life. It is, therefore, very important that we know that 'we have passed from death unto life.' In regard to our relation to God we can not afford to be in uncertainty.

"Therefore the questions 'How do we know God?' and 'How may we know that we are God's children?' are most important. This text declares to us the manner of the revelation of God's spirit and of the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him.

"Paul first clears up some mis apprehensions concerning the manner of the revelation of the spirit. He declares that this wonderful revelation does not come through the physical eye nor ear to human consciousness. God does not reveal Himself to human consciousness through the physical senses. The eye is at best an imperfect organ. It is totally wanting in the case of some. If God could reveal Himself through the eye it would be an imperfect revelation at best. But God can not reveal Himself through the eye—the physical senses. Not because of His inability, but because of our incapacities to thus receive a revelation of God.

God Not Found

"'Nor have entered into the heart of man—' The intellectual process of the mind have not found God. Men have been searching after God through all the ages. Geologists have found His fingerprints as they have delved into the strata of the earth. Philosophers have searched after God. They have found evidences of Him, but no one has ever thus found God. God can not be revealed through the intellectual or through processes of the mind.

"Paul declares the manner of this revelation thus: 'But God hath revealed them unto us by His spirit.' There are only three ways by which the mind gains knowledge. First through sense perception. That is the knowledge that comes through the five physical senses. The second is through the intellectual processes. Man gains knowledge by thinking. The third way is by what the psychologists call 'facts in consciousness.' In this way we just become aware of certain facts. These facts originate in consciousness and do not come through any medium whatsoever to the mind. The facts of existence, of life, of love are facts in consciousness. They are original in experience. Such knowledge is original, immediate, and certain. It can not be doubted.

"Now this revelation of the spirit by which God reveals Himself and the things of the spirit is made directly to the conscious nature as a fact in consciousness. It is direct, original, immediate and can not be doubted. 'The spirit Himself beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God.' 'But the natural man (that is man by natural processes) receiveth not the things of the spirit of God for they are foolishness unto Him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.'

"We may therefore know God and the fact of sonship to Him as certainly as we know that we live, coming as it does into our consciousness as an original experience. Such an experience can not be doubted. It is incapable of error. The Christian can say with the certainty of the blind man to whom Jesus had given sight, 'one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, I now see.'"

Mrs. M. B. Shook Dead

Mrs. M. B. Shook, aged 65, died at a local hospital at 6:15 yesterday evening, following a short illness. She was visiting her daughter here, her residence being at Rusk, Texas. W. H. Shook of Rusk, arrived here yesterday and will accompany the body home for burial today.

"Joseph," One of World's Great Men, "Genisis," One World's Great Books, Kay Tells His Bible Class Sunday

A packed house turned out Sunday morning for the bible lecture at the Olympic theatre when John C. Kay took for his text, "Joseph." Judge Kay said:

"I often wonder why you men come down here. I don't know yet. I sometimes wonder why I come. It might be news to you that this is a considerable burden to me. I know it will be news to some of you that it is a great embarrassment to me to come here to talk to you men, but I don't do anything that makes my knees knock together like this. Now, I don't come here to talk. I have heard myself talking for 28 years, and it is no particular entertainment to me. I have talked in many courthouses. My only purpose in coming here is to encourage you to be better, to be cleaner, to be a little more pleasant and considerate, right at home with the home folk, and with your neighbors, and with your friends—a little less contentious and quarrelsome, a little less selfish. If I can do that, I have gained something. If I fail to do that, I have failed, indeed.

Genesis vs. The Post.

Now, this book of Genesis has not one-fourth as much print as one issue of the Saturday Evening Post. It wouldn't make any more than a small almanac. You can read it in one summer evening. There is much packed in this little book, more than was ever put within that space in any other book. It is the most dramatic, the most interesting, of all literature. It begins with a great oratio, the creation, and the story, when the curtain rises on the opening scene, has the very stars singing together and the high gods announcing that "we will make a world."

Too Many Tragedies.

We see Adam naming the animals. We see the fall of man which has entered into the doctrines of every religion. We see the great tragedy of Cain and Abel, which tragedy is peopled too often in Texas. We see Noah with his ark floating on the seven seas with the most precious cargo that was ever sent down to the sea in ships. Ah, we look across the valleys of that far-off time and see the smoke ascending from the sacrifice of the first altars that man ever erected to God. We see Abraham selected as head of the chosen people, and we come, then, to this lesson—the story of Joseph, the most dramatic, the most powerful story, preserving as well as Shakespeare might have dared to do it, all the unities of time, and of place, and of degree, and of order, with its successful climax and its wonderful lesson, all packed into this one little book, which I have said is no larger than a small almanac. There is no place where you can obtain, within a given space, any more of culture, or of art, or of literature, or of life, than in this book. Read it! Know it! Because, not to know it is to be ignorant, indeed.

Joseph a Dreamer.

Now, this Joseph was a dreamer. Sometimes we call them cranks. I can see old Henry Ford, after he had done his day's work for somebody else, out in his woodshed trying to perfect this Ford engine.

I can see that great man who thought and dreamed that he could make an Atlantic cable—and a hundred other illustrations that I haven't got time to bring before you. And more, and most of all, I can see that great dream of the Master, who dreamed that you would adopt His teachings and follow Him.

These boys said: "Behold this dreamer cometh." This dreamer, this boy who had a plan and a vision.

Joseph In Egypt.

So Joseph goes down into Egypt and is sold into slavery, but comes up, because he is a dreamer, and understands dreams and plans, and purposes, and has got some outlook, and thought more about the future than he did about the present.

Once in a while, you will hear a fellow say, "Well, I have got to live just one day at a time." That sounds like a pretty good philosophy. Is it a good philosophy to live just one day at a time? Of course, as far as the clock is concerned, that's true, but it is true no further than the clock would say so. We have got to live not only one day at a time, but we have got to live for the future.

Now, what a dramatic thing it was when these fellows found him down there. Joseph was the son of Rachael, and Benjamin was the son of Rachael, and Rachael had been buried on the roadside, and some of us know what that means.

You know, there is a fellow right in there that you are liable to lose, and one that is, I think, a big fellow. That is, that fellow Reuben. When Joseph wanted to keep Benjamin down there, Reuben makes him a talk. Reuben might have been a very great man, but got lost in history. I don't know about that. Or, he may have had some defect that broke him down. But, when they wanted to keep Benjamin down there, what does Reuben say? 'We can't do that. This old man at home, his life is bound up in the lad's life, and when he sees us come back, and this boy not with us, he is going to die,' and, he says: 'Therefore, take me and keep me, but let this favorite son go back to his father.' Now, there is enough to write a play on right there. And, the next time they came down, Joseph broke down and told them who he was.

Building Castles

Now, your dream don't work out along the line of youth. I suppose that most of the boys, most of the young men, build some sort of castles in Spain, but often, and often, they don't recognize that castle when they come into view of the reality.

Joseph had dreamed of the shocks of wheat making bows to his shocks of wheat, but, he didn't talk about that now. He is more practical now. He has got more religion now. He is a better man now. Listen at the high dream of youth when he dreamed that the sun, and moon, and eleven stars made obeisance to him. That's youth. But, the mature man and, when the time came for the fruition of his dreams, 'I was sent down here to save much people alive.' Ah, that's your mission on earth; to help other men, to be worth something to other men, to prevent the calamities that surround other men. Joseph knows now that when they sold him into slavery, it worked out a salvation for his race. He has dropped the idea that these eleven Jewish boys are going to worship him. He has dropped the idea that Jacob and his wife, and eleven boys are going to make obeisance to him. He is living now in a real and terrible world, where hunger stalks forth like a wolf, and, he is not studying about himself, or his grandeur, or his office, or his influence, or his political power, but, he says: 'I was sent down here to serve other men, and women, and children.' Now, that is a man's job.

What About the Senators

Here is Pharaoh's prime minister, just as high as he could get there in Egypt, then the highest country in the world, recognizing that his mission was to help other people. Now, if you think he wasn't a big man, how many have we got in Washington of that type? Mr. Senator, why was you sent down to the District of Columbia? Why, because I was the biggest man in the nighborhood, that's why! And, what is your mission here? Why, to exalt myself, to be taller than other men politically. That might not be true of all of them, but you will know whether my picture is overdrawn, I think.

Jews Proposed

You will hear a good many people crying about the Jews being oppressed in Egypt. They got more out of Egypt than they lost there. They were living in tents, and following the goats and sheep and cattle around among the rocks and the trees, and hunting water holes, but, when they go down to Egypt and see the glory of Pharaoh, and come back out there, they begin to build cities, and temples, and street, and waterworks, and a thousand things that the architects in Egypt knew, that hey never knew before. So, someimes, the thing that you think is the worst thing for you, is the best thing for you.

This Joseph went down into Egypt. There is something a little peculiar about that. We don't find that he ever did a thing for himself. They didn't even stop to tell us what his salary was. If they were to send me down into that hot, irrigated country to eat onions and leeks, I would want to know, how much does that job pay?

When you are reading through that book of Genesis, you will find some fellows that are working for themselves. It will be interesting to you to find that Jacob was that kind. He couldn't hardly keep from making the best of a trade to save himself. But, Joseph was not. Moses was not. Noah was not, and a great many of them were not, but, some of them were. Some of us promised to read that book. All of us ought to read it, read it carefully, and know it, for it is a very gold mine of literature, and of history, and of religion.

TOUSSAINT CASE ON TRIAL TODAY

Once Condemned Man Faces Jury In Eighty-ninth Court

With a special venire of 250 men summoned to be examined as jurors, Henry J. Toussaint, once condemned murderer of his father, goes to trial at 9 o'clock this morning before Judge P. A. Martin of the Eighty-ninth district court.

It is believed that both the state and defense will announce ready for trial.

Confessed to Murder.

Toussaint was arrested in February, 1921, the day after his father's lifeless form was found in a gutter at the southern end of Monroe street. Following an intensive grilling by Lee Huff, then chief of police, Toussaint confessed that he had shot his father.

He was indicted and went to trial in the Thirtieth district court late in July. The case was one of the most sensational in the history of the county and with the single exception of the Culberson trial last February attracted more attention than any other single court proceedings instituted here.

Declared Insane.

It was alleged by the defense that Toussaint was a paromaniac. It was brought out on the witness stand that he had killed his father because of domestic difficulties.

Despite this, however, the jury returned a verdict of guilty and assessed his punishment at death.

The case was appealed to the higher courts and the court of criminal appeals ordered a new trial granted.

Escaped From Jail.

In January of this year Toussaint escaped from the county jail and was at liberty for ten days, being captured in Oklahoma City by the local sheriff's department. His case was called for trial in the Thirtieth district court but was continued because of the absence of material witnesses for the defense. A short time later it was transferred to the Eighty-ninth district court and set for April 16.

'Twas a Pleasant Day, Thank You

Following a rather cool and dull day Saturday Sunday dawned clear and warm, bringing out straws and spring bonnets again. Not a cloud was in the sky, and the warmth reminded one of Texas brightly colored spring hats much in evidence as in July. A steady stream of automobiles, washed and polished, gave evidence that the pretty weather did not go to waste.

A large number took advantage of clear skies and dry pavement to motor over, in and out of town, and when the sun finally went behind the horizon the roads were still packed.

CHATS WITH YOUR GAS MAN

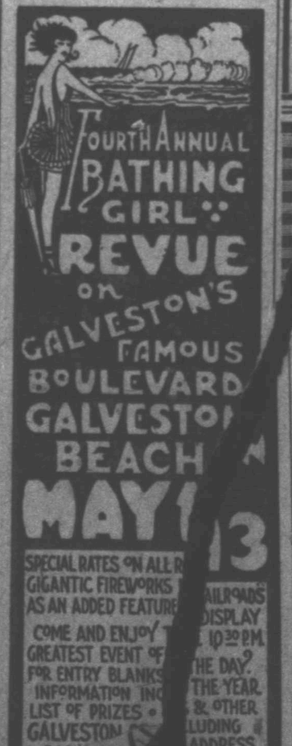

When the workmen can not turn gas on at your premises on account of leaky house lines, find out the reason. He is always ready to show you why.

Leaky lines cause you needless expense. A small leak of two feet per hour costs you $11.66 per year.

The expense is not the only cause for worry. Leaks are dangerous. Gas is left cut off for your protection by the workman or inspector.

By co-operation we can overcome the causes of both the worry and needless expense.

Officers Break Up Big Whiskey Ring With Capture of Still Near Red River

Constable J. W. White, of Burkburnett and Deputies K. B. Kinsner and Joe Blocker captured a 250-barrel still north of Burkburnett near Red river late Saturday night. The still, one of the largest ever found in Wichita county, represented the nucleus of a wholesale bootleggers headquarters, according to the officers, who declare that with the capture a whiskey ring of large proportions is left without a source of supply.

When captured, the still was running full blast, although the operators had fled. It is thought that a system of secret communication from confederates warned the men of the approach of the officers for although the still was located in a secluded spot near the river bank and was hidden in a small clearing surrounded by trees.

The officers believe that they are aware of the names of the operators and expect to apprehend them today. With the still a large amount of mash, and many bottles were found. All were destroyed, as was the huge still. A small quantity of the liquor was saved for evidence, the rest being destroyed.

Two New Business Homes Open Up On Scott Street This Evening

The Wichita Falls Electric company and the W. R. McClurkan company will open doors of two new business and buildings today. Both have completed new structures to house their activities, and both places, located together on Scott street at the corner of Ninth, will hold formal openings at the same time, 2:30 is the hour the doors of the new stores will be opened. The public is invited to be present by both managements and to inspect the stock and new buildings during the afternoon and evening.

Another New Building.

The opening of McClurkan company's store adds another beautiful building to several already here. The building, with floor space that would place it near the front in ranking stores, according to size, is ultra modern, and constructed along plans thought to be best suited for the particular business it is to accomodate. It is a two story structure both floors of which will ultimately be occupied by the well known dry goods company.

Old Concern.

McClurkan company is one of the best known companies in retail business in Wichita Falls, being the oldest among all kindred businesses. The present management under the direction of Smith-Faln company, erected the building that will house the store, and has adopted the same policy of the preceding owners. An entire new stock is in the building with the newest spring and summer wardrobe for both men and women.

The Wichita Falls Electric company will occupy the building next to McClurkan, which like its contemporary is modern and fitted for the conveniences and service in the electric stove. A new stock has been set up in the building, which is attractive both inside and out, and an invitation is extended by the company to the public for inspection. An entertainment program will be given for visitors today.

Overflow Crowds At First Christian

Two crowds that overflowed the seating capacity of the building greeted Evangelist W. P. Crouch at the First Christian church yesterday morning and evening. For a long time the slogan of the Sunday morning service of this church has been "You must come early to get a seat," but yesterday it became apparent that one must come early to get in at all.

There were five additions at the morning service and two confessions at night. During the evening service five were baptised. The sermon Sunday evening was "God's Masterpiece," which was delivered in a masterful and powerful way.

Masterpiece Defined.

Evangelist Crouch first defined "Masterpiece" as being a man's highest expression of himself. Man is greater than his work. The heavens delare the glory of God, but the universe is not the masterpiece of God. God's masterpiece is man. After speaking of the ways in which God's masterpiece has been tampered with by sin, then he told of God's being the author of man and the Bible.

Satan's Stain Removed.

The Bible explains man and his conditions and relations, therefore God is author of book and man. Satan has dipped his stencil in the colors and marred the painting of man, but by the blood of Christ the stain on the painting is removed."

Alvin Roper rendered one of his rare piano solos numbers, and R. E. Shepherd sang "The Old Rugged Cross."

Service every night this week 7:45 o'clock.

A nursery has been provided for taking care of the babies, so the mothers may be able to enjoy the services without interruption.

M'CORMICK IN RANGER OFFICE

Receives Commission as Sergeant In Company C

It is "Sergeant McCormick" now. J. W. McCormick, former chief of police, returned from Austin Saturday afternoon, after a trip that again placed him in the Ranger service. McCormick, who previous to his acceptance of a position as chief of police here, was a ranger sergeant in company B, has again taken the oath of office and began his duties Saturday.

McCormick announced after his authorization at Austin that he will be located in Wichita Falls for some time, although he expects to move to East Texas in the next few weeks. He is in company C now, under Captain Nichols, and will probably be stationed in East Texas with the captain. He was well known here while a ranger and police chief, and popular as an officer. He re-entered the ranger service at the request of the attorney's general's department, under which the rangers work.
