FNB suit escalates with Friday filing

DALLAS — A $150 million suit by a Midland oil company against The First National Bank of Midland escalated dramatically here Friday with the filing of a supplemental complaint that broadens the original conspiracy allegation and boosts the total damage potential to an amount substantially in excess of a half-billion dollars.

Named in an addendum to the Oct. 9 suit are four new defendants: Walter R. Davis, individually; Walter R. Davis, trustee; the Seminole Refining Co.; and John Findley.

They, along with FNB and FNB President Charles D. Fraser, are alleged to have conspired in an "unlawful scheme and course of dealing which at law constitutes libelous, slanderous and malicious conduct...(that) has as its goal the economic ruin of (the GMW Corp. and its owners, Joe N. Gifford, Bascom L. Mitchell and Michael B. Wisenbaker)."

Added as a plaintiff in Friday's complaint was Wisenbaker's father, John D. Wisenbaker.

AT ISSUE IN the suit is an Oct. 6 foreclosure move by FNB that attempted to call in some $50 million worth of stock holdings and oil properties the plaintiffs had put up as collateral on a $22.7 million loan from the bank last spring.

An Oct. 14 injunction issued by Federal Bankruptcy Court Judge John C. Ford stopped the foreclosure action, which, the plaintiffs claim, was designed as "leverage" to gain control of the collateralized oil property.

"Included in the properties hoped to be taken from Plaintiffs by Defendants are certain extremely valuable oil and gas properties, both producing and non-producing," it was alleged in Friday's supplemental complaint.

Those properties lie on 21 sections of land in Texas and eastern New Mexico. (It was erroneously reported in an earlier Reporter-Telegram story that they were not part of the collateral package used to secure the loan.) Their total estimated potential worth, according to court records, is in excess of $100 million.

Davis and Findley's ties to the suit lie in the nature of corporate affairs. In July of 1979, Davis sold his 80 percent share of another oil company, Basin Inc. of Midland, to Gifford, Mitchell and Wisenbaker "for cash, notes of Basin Inc. and a continuing interest in crude oil purchased by Basin Inc.," says the complaint.

THE OTHER 20 PERCENT remained in the hands of Basin's individual employees, while Findley continued to serve as the firm's manager until he was fired a year later.

Despite the sale, alleges the 22-page complaint, "Defendant Davis did not in fact disengage himself from Basin Inc., but continued a close and secretive liaison with Findley and other Basin employees who had been long-term confidants and employees of Davis.

"In May 1981, after Findley and other Davis-controlled employees

Libya says hit-team rumors fresh off 'CIA fantasy farm'

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — The Libyan government on Saturday said news reports of an alleged Libyan plot to assassinate President Reagan were products of "the CIA fantasy farm."

"Let me state categorically and unequivocally that there is no such hit team working under orders from the Libyan Jamahiriyah (the Libyan name for the country)," said a statement issued by Khalifa Azzabi, the director of foreign information.

Azzabi said the one-page typewritten statement was Libya's first official comment on U.S. news reports that Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy sought to have Reagan and other top U.S. government officials killed.

Azzabi accused the United States of waging a "disinformation campaign" to destabilize Khadafy's government. The statement said the Western news media "appear to operate as an annex of the CIA rather than the disseminator of facts and news."

The typewritten statement was distributed at Azzabi's office in the wind-swept Mediterranean port capital of Tripoli on the edge of the Sahara desert.

In New York, Newsweek reported Saturday that a former Lebanese terrorist told U.S. intelligence officials he was present at a meeting in Libya six or eight weeks ago in which Khadafy ordered the assassination of Reagan and other top U.S. officials.

The magazine said the informant, who was not identified, defected in Western Europe three weeks ago. It said some U.S. officials were convinced by the informant's report that an assassination plot existed, while others doubted the story.

Security for Reagan and three top aides has been stepped up following the earlier U.S. reports, which said the assassination team might have entered the United States by crossing the Canadian border. At least two informants, long regarded as credible, have provided details of the alleged Libyan plot to U.S. government agents, a reliable source in Washington said.

Khadafy reportedly wanted to kill Reagan because he was enraged after U.S. Navy jets under attack shot down two Libyan reconnaissance planes over disputed waters 50 miles off the Libyan coast in August. Another supposed motive was anger over reports that the CIA wanted to kill Khadafy. The state-controlled media here have given wide coverage to the alleged CIA plot.

The CIA denied reports by American newspaper columnist Jack Anderson and the magazine Newsweek in August that it was considering plans to assassinate Khadafy.

On Saturday, Azzabi said that if a hit squad to kill Reagan existed, the Americans would have arrested the suspects.

Also on Saturday, the Libyan news agency JANA denied reports that Libyans had planned to kill Philip Habib, the American Middle Eastern envoy, during his present tour of the region.

Chemical dependency unit considered

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital has launched a "feasibility study" for a freestanding chemical dependency facility and the hospital "should hear virtually anytime" whether an amended pre-application for the facility will be accepted by the Texas Health Facilities Commission, according to MMH Administrator Ray Branson.

At MMH's monthly board meeting Nov. 24, the directors approved the action to attempt to amend the pre-application. This pre-application, which was originally filed June 1, proposed adding 20 beds for chemically dependent patients as part of the hospital's expansion program.

The amendment requests that the pre-application be changed from a 20-bed to a 50-bed facility and be located separate from the hospital, about seven miles northwest of MMH.

Branson and selected members from MMH's Board of Trustees and Directors went to California Saturday for a one-day site observation of a similar facility.

BUT, FOR NOW, Branson contends that the possibility of establishing the 50-bed unit is still under review.

Concurrently, a private organization has submitted a certificate of need to THFC for plans to construct a 60-bed psychiatric hospital, including 20 beds for chemically dependent patients, near Air Terminal.

Although the application filed by Southwest Health of Midland/Odessa Inc., states the proposed freestanding psychiatric hospital to be built in 1983 "will cover every aspect of Mental Health Care and will not duplicate any services in the Midland/Odessa area since such services do not exist at the present time," Branson said he hoped the chairman of THFC will accept MMH's amended pre-application so both may be reviewed at the same time.

One of THFC's function is to determine whether proposed programs, projects and equipment are a duplication of services for the area.

"We hope (Betty) Himmelblau (THFC chairman) decides to accept the amended pre-application because HSA (Permian Basin Health Systems Agency) is interested in reviewing both applications at the same time to see if they are compatible or incompatible in terms of need," Branson said.

BUT, ACCORDING TO A.C. Buchanan, MMH vice president of operations, "just in case the chairman rejects it (amended pre-application), we filed a new pre-application for a 50-bed chemical dependency unit on Nov. 25."

A study was completed in February of this year by the Comprehensive

Still in the HUDdle

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

"We're in a wait-and-see position," says the Dallas office of Housing and Urban Development concerning the city of Midland's application for federal funds.

Midland says the same thing of HUD, only it's the Washington, D.C., office with whom they converse.

While the Dallas HUD office says it's waiting for word from Midland, Mayor G. Thane Akins is awaiting word from Washington before taking any further steps on the city's application for $1.094 million in Community Development funds.

A clear lack of communication among the various agencies and persons involved in the application became obvious late last week after the deadline for resolving problems with the form passed on Tuesday. That was the latest extension given Midland since the approval for funds first came in July, contingent to working out differences on the city's Housing Assistance Plan. But Midland again is wanting more time.

HUD has warned the city that unless the differences are settled, Midland will lose the entire grant for $1 million-plus. The money was slated to go for housing rehabilitation and street paving on the south and east sides.

HUD has asked Midland to revise its areas for constructing housing for low-income families and senior citizens. The city had listed east, southeast and southwest parts of the city.

The federal agency, however, claimed there aren't enough lots in those areas to construct 240 housing units and to expand the designated zones.

On Saturday, Akins said the last word he had from HUD in Washington was "to sit tight while someone in Washington looked into it. We're just waiting to hear from them as to what to do next or if we get an extension on our deadline."

The matter of extending the deadline appeared to be a settled issue from the Washington stand point, Akins said.

But William Rotert, program manager with the HUD office in Dallas, said Friday that the people he had talked with from Washington gave no indication that the extension issue had been resolved.

"The people in Washington said the last they heard from Midland was an inquiry about getting an extension."

Normal procedure at this point, said Rotert, is for Midland to send a written request to his office in Dallas asking for the extension, including assurances that the extra time would result in action. But the written request "is still no guarantee the extension will be granted."

Rotert said that Gordon McKay with the HUD's Washington office of field support and monitoring visited Dallas last week and reported he was aware only that Midland had asked for an extension.

"It's up to Midland to take the next step," said Rotert. "Officially, the contract has expired."

Communism at back door

NEW YORK — The long revolutionary fuse that Fidel Castro ignited in Latin America for his Soviet sponsors often sputters and occasionally the sparks fly around as they are doing today in Nicaragua. To thwart explosions and curb subversion, the Organization of American States (OAS) meets regularly to map common strategy and plan mutual assistance.

Their foreign ministers, from large nations and small, I'm pleased to note are doing just that right now. They are conferring in the sea-washed little Caribbean island-state of St. Lucia. That's not far from Puerto Rico or Martinique and is most strategically sited. All the assembled dignitaries, including our own Secretary of State Alexander Haig, are deeply concerned about the avowed export of revolt from Castro's Cuba. The bearded, cigar-chomping disciple of the U.S.S.R. has been extremely busy slipping armaments to the Sandinistas in Nicaragua who thereupon tranship the Soviet-supplied weapons to guerrillas waging war throughout El Salvador in Central America.

Castro has already gotten some hard-nosed signals from the administration in Washington that we won't tolerate his back-door aid to insurrection in Latin America. It begins smack in the Caribbean basin. Edwin Meese III, President Reagan's counselor, fully supported Secretary Haig on openly stating that the U.S. simply will not accept attempts at upheaval in regions which can impair our security. Meese chose his words carefully, and I think all Americans might care to look at them again.

"Al Haig has done an excellent job of portraying the position of this administration which is: We will not countenance subversion being imported into Central America."

We all know that Castro has made a mess of his own Communist-run economy. His mentors have been failing at it for 60 years themselves as well as wrecking the economies of all their satellites. You only have to look at the dismal plight in which embattled Poland finds itself right now to see what running on Moscow time means to people. So, the Soviets have to reach far across the world to our back door to keep their Cuban stooge, Castro, economically afloat.

In oil deliveries and spare parts for industry, the Russians supply Castro around a billion dollars a year But it's a quid pro quo deal. Even when dealing with comrades, the Russians squeeze out one ruble for at least every two they give. Castro agreed with alacrity to provide the cannon fodder, in the form of Cuban legions, the Soviets wanted to move into key areas of Africa and the Middle East.

Then came Nicaragua ruled by the Somoza family. That was much closer to Castro's own home base of operations. He already had as "guests" a cadre of self-styled Sandinista revolutionaries biding time and weapons to take on the Somoza regime. A worldwide clamor arose at the time — synchronized by all major Soviet propaganda agencies — to de-

Clarence Von Williams, 42, center, shows his feelings after a 50-year prison term was lifted from his shoulders when another man held in Jena, La., for a string of ski-mask rapes admitted he could have been the person who sexually assaulted a Bridge City, Texas, woman, her son and daughter. The charge was dropped in 260th District Court when the victims identified the other man from a video tape of his confession. With Williams are his attorneys Don Kelly and Louis Dugas.

Von Williams rejoices when 50-year prison term for rape is dismissed

ORANGE, Texas (AP) — A 42-year-old chemical plant worker sentenced to 50 years in prison for rape rode off to freedom in a limousine to the cheers of his friends after another man confessed to the crime.

"I didn't want to be found innocent, because everyone would have always thought I had just hired a good lawyer," Clarence Von Williams said after charges against him were dismissed at a special court hearing Friday night.

"I wanted the man to be caught and confess. I was so scared he was going to be killed...and nobody would ever know."

Williams got his wish last week when Louisiana authorities arrested a suspect in a rapist case and the man confessed to the Texas assault.

An employee of the Gulf Chemical Co. plant near Orange for 20 years, Williams had never been arrested before authorities charged him with being the masked assailant who raped a Bridge City woman and sexually attacked her teen-age son and daughter on April 30, 1979.

Williams proclaimed his innocence throughout two trials, maintaining that on the night of the rape he had been drinking until the early morning hours at a bar.

He was exonerated after Jon B. Simonis, 30, arrested in Louisiana, told state police he was responsible for the Texas rape. Police said he acknowleged 77 crimes in seven states, mostly involving robbery and sexual assaults.

Simonis was sentenced to 231 years in prison after he pleaded guilty to two counts of armed robbery, one of aggravated burglary and one of unauthorized use of an automobile.

Williams grinned broadly and waved at about 100 well-wishers as he walked away from jail Friday. The hearing was called after Orange County authorities went to Louisiana to view a videotape in which Simonis discussed the rape.

"He's totally wiped out," said Donald "Cochise" Shockley, as he led his life-long friend to a waiting limousine amid cheers from a crowd of friends and co-workers.

Williams also has his old job back, according to his boss. Plant manager Bob Walker said Williams could return "when he is ready."

Prosecutors joined with defense attorney Don Kelley during the hearing in asking that the charge against Williams be dismissed.

Williams' first trial on the charge ended with a hung jury, but he was convicted during a second trial in October.

The victim and her two children testified that they were attacked by a masked assailant, but identified Williams through a slit in the mask, court records show. The woman said she had met Williams at a party.

During the trial, prosecutors did not offer any fingerprint, hair or semen samples connecting Williams with the crime.

Advertisers aim for Hispanics

By STEVE BREWER
Associated Press Writer

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — An El Paso billboard reads "Budweiser es para usted" (is for you). A local television salesman closes his TV ad with "thank you and muchas gracias." A radio spot for a car dealer includes mariachi music.

Advertisers in the Southwest are aiming their promotions and their dollars at the growing Hispanic population, developing a "new" market and creating a boom for Hispanic ad agencies.

"The increase in advertising is coming mostly because of the increase in population," says San Antonio advertising man Lionel Sosa. "There are more families buying more every day. The companies who don't do anything about it are losing by default."

Census figures estimate that there are 15 million people in the United States with Hispanic backgrounds and that number is growing every year.

"The Hispanic population is growing 6½ times the rate of the non-Hispanic population," Sosa said. "One out of every four Texans is Hispanic. One out of every two kids in the first grade in Los Angeles has a Spanish surname."

Sosa believes the Hispanic population was "discovered" by national advertisers in 1978 when Time magazine carried a cover story on Hispanics that detailed the rapid growth rate.

"Three months later, Newsweek had a big article," he said. "There's also been articles in the Wall Street Journal, Forbes, every major publication. The smart marketers said, 'Hey, maybe this is the way to increase our market share.'"

El Paso media consultant Steve Maese agreed that the increase in advertising for Hispanics has occurred in the last three years, but said he believed more accurate counting of the population was the main reason for the growth.

Whatever the reason, advertisers found themselves aiming their ads at a market they had virtually ignored in the past. The problem, they found, was in how to approach a diverse group of people whose common bond was the Spanish language.

They turned to advertising firms that specialize in appealing to the Hispanic audience. Different firms have developed different methods of analyzing the Hispanic market and designing ads that will result in higher sales for their clients.

Sosa and his vice president, behaviorist Bernadette Brusco, developed a method of segmenting the Hispanic audience called acculturation influence grouping.

Lufkin residents honored for being Thy Brother's Keeper

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

LUFKIN, Texas (AP) — Tired of rape, robbery, murder and assorted disaster stories?

Want a break from television's jigglers?

Come along, then, to Lufkin and a most unusual banquet, one celebrating much of what is good about this gracious piney woods town, and maybe all of America.

You'll read about people you've never heard of and, most likely, will never meet. That's because they quietly give — not of their money, but of themselves — to help the helpless, or at least those in need.

Sound hokey? Trite? Perhaps. But read on.

This is a story about 30 extraordinarily ordinary individuals and a Pulitzer Prize-winning newspaper which devoted the time and effort to find and recognize them.

"How many of us in our lifetime have a banquet in our honor?" wondered Joe Murray, editor and publisher of the Lufkin News. "There are lots of people out there who deserve such a banquet.

"We found 30 of them."

"Do all the good you can, by all the means you can,

"In all the ways you can, in all the places you can,

"At all the times you can, to all the people you can,

"As long as ever you can."

So reads a verse atop the desk of Elmarie Cook, a "retired" social worker. The verse could have served as the centerpiece for Thursday night's banquet. Elmarie was there, in the Civic Center, along with others featured in a six-month, front-page Lufkin News series entitled, "Thy Brother's Keeper."

The series, if not unique, was certainly uncommon, spotlighting as it did a number of citizens "who give of their time and ability to help other people in the community."

Elmarie, for instance, retired in 1973 as Lufkin supervisor of the Department of Human Resources.

But the only change was that she no longer was paid for her work.

"My work was so rewarding that I couldn't quit," said Elmarie, now 72 and still actively engaged in helping the elderly.

"I've always enjoyed old people and have enjoyed working with them. There's nothing quite like being able to help people with their problems."

Earl McLendon, 64, would agree. Earl sold his pipefitter's business 15 years ago and spent two years getting a master electrician's license.

Now he provides free electrical service to the elderly and the needy.

Said he: "I came to realize the need there was for someone to do electrical work for them. Most anybody can afford to buy a $1.25 switch but the $25 service charge an electrician gets can strain a budget when you're on a fixed income.

At 74, D.C. Miller, a retired railroad worker, makes his hospital rounds almost daily, equipped with nothing more than a shaving kit.

He provides free shaves for those unable to shave themselves.

"The need was there, and it was something I could do," he said. "It seemed like an easy way to help other people."

Dollie Lloyd, 73, spends her days visiting invalids and shut-ins, often delivering home-cooked food.

"I do it because I'm selfish," she laughed. "I don't have any family of my own here. I've always loved to cook, and I get a boot out of being with other people."

She considers them her family.

"So, I'm getting more out of it than anyone else. It makes me happy and, if it helps someone else, all the better."

Many East Texans know Buck Stringer as the owner of Lufkin Bar B Q, a good place to shoot the breeze and not a bad place to eat.

But Buck's special interest is helping crippled children. A Shriner, Buck, 63, see to it that needy children are delivered and admitted to facilities, such as the Shriners Hospital in Houston, the burns center in Galveston and the Scottish Rite Hospital in Dallas.

"He will rent rooms, provide transportation, buy the family food — do anything for them," said a friend. "If ever there was someone who could be called 'Thy Brother's Keeper,' Buck Stringer is it."

Said Buck: "I feel like God reaches down and touches me and makes me a happy human being every time I help one of the kids."

And so it goes.

Clint Youngblood, 46, has spent 20 years taking care of maintenance work at his church. Free.

His work, said his pastor, has amounted to "at least $100,000 in monetary value."

Lita Mayberry spends 12 months a year collecting boxes and gift-wrapping them for Christmas at the Lufkin State School. L.W. Bass records gospel music and plays it for those confined to nursing homes.

Lila Prewitt, at 82, knits afghans and lap robes, which she gives to the residents of the local nursing centers.

Estes loses bid for reduced sentence

DALLAS (AP) — Convicted swindler Billie Sol Estes has lost his bid for a reduction of the 10-year prison sentence he is serving for conviction in a fraud scheme.

U.S. District Judge Robert Hill gave no reason for denying the request Friday.

However, in the same order, Hill granted Estes' request that the 10-year sentence imposed in August 1979 run concurrently with the time he is serving because of a parole revocation.

Estes was convicted in 1965 in one of the largest fraud cases in U.S. history. Officials say he swindled West Texas farmers through mortagages on non-existent fertilizer tanks.

Grand Prairie policemen appeal firings

GRAND PRAIRIE, Texas (AP) — Two former Grand Prairie police officers, fired last month for allegedly using excessive force while arresting two youths, have appealed their dismissals to the city's Civil Service Commission.

Officers Jimmy L. Horrocks and Alan T. Patton were fired Nov. 23 after an internal affairs investigation sustained charges of police brutality filed against the pair by Ricky Diaz, 16, and Chris Gomez, 15, officials said.

A third officer was suspended for five days without pay for withholding information about the incident, authorities said.

The youths charged that Patton and Horrocks punched them while they were handcuffed following a Sept. 26 arrest. The youths, who said they were washing Diaz's car, were arrested on charges of possessing alcohol and being drunk in public.

City Manager Ted Willis said he will wait until the outcome of the Civil Service Commission before discussing possible criminal assault charges against the ex-officers with the Dallas County district attorney's office.

The commission has the authority to reinstate the officers, according to City Attorney Clayton Hutchings.

The FBI is expected to forward its investigation of the allegations to U.S. Justice Department officials in Washington this week, according to Parks Stearns, director of the FBI's Civil Rights Squad.

Neither Horrocks nor Patton could be reached for comment.

Texas area forecast

West Texas: Partly cloudy Sunday. Mostly fair Sunday night and Monday. Warmer most sections Sunday. Lows Sunday night low 30s Panhandle to mid-40s extreme south. Highs Sunday and Monday low 70s Panhandle to near 80 Big Bend valleys except 60s mountains.

North Texas: Fair and warmer west, mostly cloudy and cool east Sunday. Fair to partly cloudy and mild Sunday night and Monday. Lows Sunday light in 40s. Highs Sunday 57 east to 73 west. Highs Monday 67 to 74.

Pleasant weather expected to continue

Residents of the Permian Basin can expect continued pleasant weather at least through Monday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

A high in the upper 60s is expected each of the days, with overnight lows in the mid-30s. Partly cloudy skies are expected today, while conditions should clear by Monday.

Saturday's high of 58 degrees was well off the record for the date of 79 set in 1950, while the low of 31 was welcome warmth in comparison to the record low of 8 degrees established in 1950.

No rainfall is in the forecast, and the year's total remains at 17.55 inches.

GMW's claims against FNB escalated

were dismissed for mis-management and replaced by management controlled by the individual Plaintiffs, Walter Davis commenced a course of conduct and dealing to regain control and ownership of (Basin Inc.).

"As a result of such conduct, and due to the unlawful conduct of (the) Defendants, Basin Inc. immediately experienced financial difficulties. The bank Defendant in this action, First National Bank of Midland, and Defendant Fraser, along with the First National Bank of Dallas, played an instrumental role in assisting Defendant Davis in his efforts to regain formal control of Basin Inc."

Although a partner in the loan, the Dallas bank is not named in the suit because FNB served as agent bank in the transaction.

The result of Davis and Findley's alleged collusion, according to the plaintiffs, was a weakening of Basin's financial position to the point where it sought and received a $5 million loan from Davis on or about May 19 of this year.

"IN EXCHANGE," states the complaint, "Defendant Davis received from the plaintiffs a far greater compensation than allowed by law. Specifically, Defendant Davis demanded and received direct benefits and valuable consideration, including, but not limited to, the following:

"Fifty percent of the presently issued and outstanding stock of Basin Inc; the voting rights to approximately 30 percent of the Basin Inc. stock still retained by the Plaintiffs, Gifford, Mitchell, and Wisenbaker;

"An undivided one-half interest in all producing and non-producing oil and gas properties (including the Texas-New Mexico leases) which were then owned by the individual Plaintiffs, subject to the repayment of certain indebtedness of Basin Inc. and certain indebtedness of the individual plaintiffs to First National Bank of Midland;

"(And) a $5 million subordinate (to all other loans) loan by John Wisenbaker to Basin Inc."

The net value of what Davis obtained was more than $50 million, according to the complaint, which alleges that such terms violate Texas usury laws.

About the same time as the $5 million loan from Davis, the plaintiffs also obtained the $22.7 million loan from FNB.

The Florida-based Seminole Refining Co. is named in the supplemental complaint because the firm, which is owned or controlled by Davis, is the entity that actually made the $5 million loan to the plaintiffs.

Complicating the ever-burgeoning case was Davis' filing in Midland Wednesday of a breach-of-contract suit accusing Gifford, Mitchell and Wisenbaker of "(dishonoring) their contractual commitment by flatly refusing to execute and deliver to (Davis)" legal title to the property they assigned to him as collateral under terms of the loan agreement.

Davis' suit does not seek specific dollar damages, but does call for the Midland court to order compliance with the agreement. It also seeks reimbursement for whatever legal fees and costs which will be "incurred in the institution and maintenance of this action."

Friday's supplemental complaint by Gifford, Mitchell and Wisenbaker addresses Davis' suit by alleging he, not they, violated the loan agreement. Specifically, they claim he failed to pay a large portion of his share of developing the collateralized producing property.

THEY ALSO CONTEND he reneged on an agreement that his one-half interest in the non-producing property would be subject to whatever liens and encumbrances were attached to it. Says the complaint:

"Defendant Davis has now repudiated the contractual provisions that his purported property interests are subject to the" debts and other encumbrances outlined in the agreement, "(freely ignoring) the express limitations on his purported interests clearly set out in (the agreement), to the Plaintiffs' irreparable damage and harm."

Other allegations in the complaint include charges Davis has failed to pay the plaintiffs some $400,000 for crude oil bought from them by the Davis-controlled Basin Inc. company, and that he has also failed to meet his $460,000 share of drilling expenses on the non-producing properties.

The drilling expense issue came full circle in a letter to the plaintiffs from Davis Nov. 2. "In that letter," says the complaint, "Davis admitted his obligation to pay the drilling bills, but he refused prompt payment on the ground he had not received (legal title) to the property interest in question."

A side issue in the gnarled case is a $16 million offer by the HCW Income Properties Co. of Midland to buy Gifford and Mitchell's interest in the property held as collateral by FNB. Michael Wisenbaker does not want his one-third interest included in the sale, the proceeds of which would be applied to the bank note.

Davis is attempting to block the sale because granting the proceeds to FNB could conceivably jeopardize his alleged one-half interest in the property, and other liens he claims against it.

Addressing that issue, Friday's complaint alleges Davis "in consort with the other defendants" forced the GMW Corp. (operating entity for the property in dispute) into filing a reorganization petition in bankruptcy court, seized control of Basin Inc. and laid claim to an undeserved one-half interest in "all of the Plaintiffs' oil and gas properties."

"NOT CONTENT with such ill-gotten gains," continues the complaint, "Defendant Davis and the others have now cast their eyes on Plaintiff's remaining property interests...If (the sale to HCW) is completed, Davis' scheme to capture all the valuable interests in question will be frustrated."

Among numerous judgments sought in the complaint are an accounting of Basin's operations since the May 1981 loan from Davis, an order enjoining Davis from pursuing the suit he filed Wednesday in Midland, and:

"Judgment that because of the close liaison and cooperation between (Davis, FNB of Midland and FNB President Fraser) in connection with the matters pleaded herein, and because all other named defendants are also parties to the same general scheme, conspiracy, and course of dealing, or significant parts thereof, that all damages asserted (herein)...be assessed jointly and severally against each and every named Defendant in this action."

In rough aggregate, the suit and supplemental complaint seek actual damages, punitive damages and legal fees well in excess of $500,000,000.

The defendants named in the complaint could not be reached for comment Saturday. Defendant Fraser, testifying for himself and FNB at hearings that already have taken place on the suit, has denied the allegations contained in it. He could not be reached for comment on the complaint.

A third hearing on the proposed property sale to HCW is scheduled for 5 p.m. Tuesday in the Dallas bankruptcy court. Once that issue is resolved, other matters in the case are expected to be scheduled for hearings by Judge Ford.

MMH must file certificate of need

Midland Memorial Hospital must go through certain legal steps before it can purchase major capital equipment or construct additional facilities.

Under Texas state law, the hospital must file for a certificate of need, which is a governmental body authorization for health-related capital expenditures. This certificate is filed with the Texas Health Facilities Commission in Austin, a three-member body which is responsible for administering the certificate of need program in Texas, according to A.C. Buchanan, MMH vice president of operations.

The THFC has two six-month periods for a certificate of need to be filed. These periods are from Jan. 1 to June 30, and July 1 to Dec. 31.

But, before the certificate of need is filed, Buchanan explained a pre-application or a statement of intent must be filed with THFC 30 days before the six-month filing period. The local Health Systems Agency, in this case the Permian Basin HSA,also receives a copy of this pre-application.

In Texas, HSAs have been established for the purpose of "improving the health of area residents; improving the availability, accessibility, acceptability, continuity and quality of health services; restraining increases in the cost of providing health services; preventing unnecessary duplication of health resources; and preserving and improving competition in the health service area," according to the PBHSA Health Systems Plan 1981-1986.

After MMH requests its statement of intent through the pre-application,an example of the schedule to complete a certificate of need is as follows:

Dec. 15 — File a certificate of need with the THFC, which will review and accept or reject the application for completeness by Jan. 1.

Jan. 1 — THFC notifies the PBHSA, which will announce a decision about the project through committee hearings by Feb. 15.

Feb. 15 — The PBHSA sends the approved or disapproved recommendations to the hearing officer at the THFC, who will schedule hearings if necessary. The certificate of need is reviewed and recommendations are made to the three-member commission by April 1.

April 1 — The commission, politically appointed by the governor, makes the final decision. However, even if the PBHSA and the hearing officer of the THFC have given negative recommendations, the THFC can render an affirmative decision.

MMH studying chemical dependency facility

Care Corp., of Bridgeton, Mo., which resulted in the recommendation that there is a need for 67 chemical dependency beds. From this data, Branson said the hospital decided to submit the pre-application in June for 20 beds. However, a long-range study by TriBrook Inc., which is still under way, has shown that it would not be "feasible to add more beds," Branson said, adding that expansion of beds in the hospital would be used for primary care and cancer patients.

"Our feeling right now is that any addition is going to be in general medical surgical patient beds," he said. "Additionally, we plan to continue the services we are currently providing, such as our psychiatric services. To spare 20 beds (at MMH) is not feasible."

THEREFORE, THE amendment was added to the pre-application. Several factors — including the availability of affordable land, prohibitive construction costs, lack of interest and whether the project is consistent with the goals and objectives of MMH and the district — are considered in a project like this, Branson noted.

"There is no question in my mind, based on the data we have received so far, that there is a need for this type of facility. West Texas is void of this type of facility," Branson said.

He added "if there is a need, it needs to be met," referring to the medical needs of the Permian Basin.

James H. Bingham Jr., representing Southwest Health of Midland/Odessa Inc., said in a telephone interview Friday that there is room for both West Plains Hospital and MMH's chemically dependent unit.

"I have been informed that they (MMH) are requesting an amendment to the pre-application," he said. "We do not feel that there is going to be a duplication of services for the entire Permian Basin."

BINGHAM SAID he spoke to MMH and Odessa Medical Center Hospital officials about the organization's plans.

"I visited with Ray (Branson) and Sam Glenny (MCH administrator) four or five months ago to see what their plans were so we wouldn't duplicate any services, but only fill the need there is in that area."

Bingham added that he discussed with Branson the possibility of a transfer agreement between the facilities and shared services such as X-rays, adding that West Plains Hospital would not want to add any duplicate services or equipment.

"Ray (Branson) was very encouraging that we would be able to discuss contractual services later on," Bingham said.

In response to whether the Arlington organization and MMH would end up competing for the facility, Bingham referred to the Comprehensive Care Corporation study.

"I assume if there was a need for 67 beds in Midland alone, Odessa would probably have that need. If this is the case, our 20 beds (for chemically dependent patients) are insignificant to Ray's 50 beds. We want to serve both Midland and Odessa," Bingham said. "This is why we chose the site at the Midland Regional Terminal."

Editor's Report

pict the Sandinistas as God-fearing freedom fighters.

As the reality of events turned out, nothing is further from the truth. The successors to the deposed Somoza regime have filled jails with critics and newspaper editors, who once supported their cause. When they learned first-hand about dictatorial methods and complained bitterly, these disenchanted folks just vanished.

Sandinista Nicaragua is sliding rapidly into the morass of totalitarianism. It has become Castro's major satellite in Central America. Besides arresting critics and throttling the press, a big Cuban arms buildup is in progress. Get a load of these figures for a supposed have-not country struggling to make ends meet:

There are 3,000 Cuban military advisers in Nicaragua, a small nation of 2.4 million people. Considering that Castro had around 50,000 scattered around Africa and the Middle East, the total in Nicaragua is mammoth. On a shuttle basis, about 200 Soviet "advisers" come in from Cuba, have a look around and return to base. In addition 15 Soviet-made T-55 tanks and appropriate ammunition are in Nicaragua. At least 100 Sandinistas are in Bulgaria learning to fly MiGs.

Most of these armaments are earmarked or have already been slipped into El Salvador. The arms enable the guerrillas to turn the tide of warfare in their favor in many areas. Use of the weapons also buttresses the terror tactics adopted by rebels who have been able to swagger their way around a terrified peasantry.

These stark statistics, which Secretary Haig has presented cogently to his OAS colleagues, are making them wonder about simmering unrest elsewhere as Costa Rica, Honduras and even Mexico with its new and highly coveted oil riches. Honduras, which just became a representative democracy again via elections, also is worried.

Needless to say, many of the countries within the OAS are poor and underdeveloped. The U.S.-conceived Marshall-type aid plan should be blended in with adequate security precautions because the poorer countries require — and should obtain — economic assistance quickly. The small and the weak countries feel especially vulnerable which makes decisions all the more pressing. I feel strongly that we must help all our free friends so that they, in turn, can help themselves.

Overt techniques from this country or warnings to Castro to cut out adventurism in the Caribbean won't, I fear, be very decisive at this stage. Many Latin American nations don't take too kindly to us cuffing a Soviet upstart like Castro around. True, they fear his meddling in their own affairs but it requires deft diplomacy to make them realize that we have a common stake in solving the problem.

Secretary Haig has proven in many areas of the world that he can put out fires with the least damage to all concerned. He should be afforded the opportunity to sever Castro's Soviet-set fuse before it gets out of hand.

Ministers to discuss 'nuts and bolts' of defense

By HENRY GOTTLIEB
Associated Press Writer

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The United States, newly embarked on missile-reduction talks with the Soviet Union, will ask NATO allies this week to strengthen defenses against Soviet power abroad and the anti-nuclear movement at home.

At a meeting of Western alliance defense ministers Tuesday and Wednesday, U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger is expected to ask the allies to stick to commitments to spend as much money as possible on defense.

Then, on Thursday, U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and 14 other foreign ministers are to sign a protocol aimed at strengthening the North Atlantic alliance by adding Spain as its 16th member by mid-1982.

Weinberger and Haig will ask NATO governments to take the offensive in a battle to win popular support for strong defenses despite the hundreds of thousands of Europeans taking part in anti-nuclear demonstrations.

The alliance's annual year-end strategy session begins eight days after the start of U.S.-Soviet negotiations to limit theater nuclear weapons in Europe.

U.S. negotiators went to the talks in Geneva, Switzerland, with an offer to forgo deployment of 572 cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in five European countries in return for sweeping cuts in the numbers of Soviet SS-20, SS-4 and SS-5 missiles.

Weinberger and Haig are expected to give the allies a brief progress report on the talks. On their part, the other ministers will issue communiques expressing satisfaction the talks have begun, NATO sources said.

The agenda for the defense ministers' meeting includes the "nuts and bolts" of NATO defense — goals for 1982 spending and how much each nation will contribute to NATO forces. No major decisions on global strategy are expected.

"It's the dull stuff from which we operate all the sexy stuff," said a NATO diplomat who asked he not be identified.

He said the United States plans to make large increases in its own defense budget for 1982, but the Reagan administration has stopped its campaign to get the allies to make annual 3 percent increases in defense spending.

The 3 percent annual goal, instituted in 1977, still is part of NATO doctrine, but European countries have been faced with grave economic problems and rising social program costs.

"The 3 percent still stands as a goal, but we're not going to hit each other over the head with it any more," the diplomat said. "Nevertheless, the Americans are still seeking a strong allied commitment to defense."

He said both the defense and foreign ministers would spend time discussing ways to convince the public of the need for strong defenses. U.S. officials have expressed concern that anti-nuclear demonstrations in recent months, culminating in a march by 300,000 people in Amsterdam on Nov. 21, are weakening European defense resolve.

Weinberger and Haig also were expected to have important talks with Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, who will attend the Tuesday and Wednesday sessions in his role as defense minister.

Papandreou's socialist government took office Oct. 18 after running on an anti-NATO platform. He argued before the election that Greece gives more than it gets back from membership in NATO and that U.S. bases in Greece should be closed.

Reagan is 'concerned' about Libyan hit team

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says he is concerned about intelligence information that he is the chief target for a terrorist team trained in Libya and sent to the United States to kill top government officials.

Reagan said Friday the United States has not contacted Libyan strongman Moammar Khadafy about the purported plot, but "I think he figures that I'm concerned."

In Tripoli, Libyan foreign information director Khalifa Azzabi denied reports that Libya had sent an assassination team to kill Reagan as a product of "the CIA fantasy farm."

Said Azzabi: "Let me state categorically and unequivocally that there is no such hit team working under orders from the Libyan Jamahiriyah (the Libyan name for the country)." He accused the United States of conducting a "disinformation campaign" to try to undermine the Khadafy government.

Security officials are known to be seriously disturbed about the reported threat and have tightened protection around the president, Vice President George Bush and Cabinet officials.

In addition, the overall level of security on Capitol Hill has been raised, according to a Senate source.

Officials are known to be concerned about the possibility of an armed attack against the president or an attempt to blow up his plane with a surface-to-air missile. There also are fears terrorists might try to hit his armored limousine with a rocket-propelled grenade.

"Obviously, you have to be concerned about all the people that have been named in this," Reagan said, referring to published reports that a five-man "hit team" from Libya was already in the United States.

There has been speculation Khadafy wants to kill Reagan to avenge the shooting down of two Libyan planes by U.S. jets in a dogfight last August.

Protesters demand disarmament

By The Associated Press

Hundreds of thousands of demonstrators took part in mass protests Saturday in Denmark, Switzerland, Italy, West Germany and Romania, demanding peace and disarmament in Europe.

The protests, which coincide with the U.S.-Soviet talks in Geneva aimed at reducing medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, were aimed at both the Soviet Union and the United States.

Undercover officers make drug bust at Dallas school

DALLAS (AP) — Two female undercover police officers, acting as students at Sunset High School, collected evidence during a 14-week investgiation that culminated in the arrest of 22 people on drug charges, authorities said.

The bust was the third undercover drug operation in a Dallas high school in the past 18 months, police said.

The arrests, which included 15 adults and seven juveniles, followed drug purchases made by the two rookie officers, who posed as transfer students from another Texas city, according to Capt. Don Milliken.

Nine of the adults had been indicted Thursday on charges involving the sale of controlled substances and five of the juveniles were named in warrants issued Friday, police said.

The others were picked up as the arrest procedures were carried out, investigators said.

Included in the arrests were four members of one family — a mother, father, a 14-year-old boy and a 12-year old boy who allegedly delivered drugs to one of the officers, Milliken said.

All of the charges were third-degree felonies, carrying up to 10 years in prison and a $1,000 fine, police said.

Joel P. Pittman, principal at the high school located in the West Oak Cliff section of Dallas, said he and other school officials were notified of the investigation when it began, but were not given the identities of the two undercover officers.

During the investigation, the officers, ages 21 and 22, were randomly selected by one of their teachers to perform clerical duties in the school administration office, according to Milliken.

The officers used school records to verify the names and other information about the students involved in the drug purchases, Milliken said.

During the undercover operation, one of the officers took a week off, got married and went on her honeymoon, said Milliken.

Harrelson goes on trial for cocaine possession

By STEVE BREWER
Associated Press Writer

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Professional gambler Charles Harrelson, identified by federal officials as a prime suspect in the slaying of a federal judge, goes on trial Monday on charges of cocaine possession.

Harrelson, 43, surrendered to police in Van Horn on Sept. 1, 1980, after keeping officers at bay for four hours by holding a gun to his head. Harrelson also faces a firearms charge.

Jury selection before state District Judge Sam Callan gets under way in Van Horn on Monday, and Harrelson's attorney, Joe Chagra of El Paso, Texas, says that "if the jury doesn't know who Charles Harrelson is by now, they must be from another planet."

Harrelson, being held at the state prison in Huntsville, spent 10 years there after a 1968 conviction in the murder-for-hire slaying of Hearne grain dealer Sam Degelia.

Federal officials suspect Harrelson in connection with the death of U.S. District Judge John Wood Jr. in San Antonio on May 29, 1979.

Chagra says he is concerned that his client will make a deal with prosecutors in connection with the death of the judge.

"I've heard a rumor that Charles wants to work some kind of deal and get out of Huntsville," Chagra said. "I don't know if it's true. In all fairness to Charles, I don't even know if he can make a deal. What do you offer someone who you think is the trigger man?"

Chagra's brother, Jimmy, who is serving a federal sentence for drug smuggling, is a suspect in Wood's death, federal officials say.

"I certainly would have to get out of it as his attorney if he wanted to deal," the attorney said Friday. "The deal would be that he would talk against my brother."

Guards deprive rights

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Three Immigration and Naturalization Service guards accused of beating a Cuban refugee were charged with deprivation of rights after a federal judge dismissed more serious charges against the trio.

Marcus Hopkins, Frank Gutierrez and Arturo Guzman were indicted Oct. 7 on charges of assaulting a refugee housed in a local detention center. The charge carried up to 15 years in prison and $11,000 in fines.

But U.S. District Judge Harry Lee Hudspeth ruled Friday that the federal government never had gotten special territorial jurisdiction over the INS processing center from the state.

Government prosecutor Michael Stern offered a voluntary dismissal of the indictment and filed charges of deprivation of rights against the trio. The charge carries a maximum penalty of one year in prison and a $1,000 fine.

Cuban Diosdado Ariosa Ariosa was hospitalized July 27, 1980, from injuries he received in a scuffle with guards at the detention center, authorities said.

Creationists, evolutionists go to court Monday

By BILL SIMMONS
Associated Press Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A federal trial nicknamed "Scopes II" begins here Monday on a new state law that says two different theories about how life began should be taught in public schools.

The conflict is between creationists, who say a supernatural force brought life into being suddenly and relatively recently, and evolutionists, who say life developed over millions of years as a result of natural laws.

The state law, the Balanced Treatment for Creation-Science and Evolution-Science Act, requires schools to give equal treatment to both views.

The American Civil Liberties Union filed suit May 27 in U.S. District Court for 23 clients, including 12 clergymen, saying the law is vague and unconstitutionally infringes on academic freedom.

The case is the first legal test of the creationist movement's argument that teaching only evolution in public schools violates the religious freedom of children who believe in creationism. The theory of evolution is also a religion, the creationists say.

State education officials are defendants in the case. The statute is not a criminal law and provides for no punishment for violations.

However, the ACLU says that teachers who feel it necessary to maintain intellectual honesty by calling creation-science "hogwash" could be fired for doing so.

ACLU lawyer Bruce Ennis of New York nicknamed the case "Scopes II," likening it to the Dayton, Tenn., "Monkey Trial" of John T. Scopes in 1925 on a charge of violating a Tennessee anti-evolution law. The Tennessee Supreme Court overturned Scopes' conviction on a technicality.

In the trial here, about 30 witnesses — Christians and agnostics on both sides — will testify about education, religion and science, arguing about how people and the earth began and whether it was 6,000 years ago or billions of years ago.

Depositions touch issues as small as the atom, as big as the universe, from background radiation to bacteria of the Zimbabwe fig tree, biblical inerrancy, Satan, demons and eschatology — the branch of theology dealing with death and resurrection.

Judge William Overton will preside at the non-jury trial, expected to last two weeks. The U.S. marshal's office said about 40 news organizations, some from overseas, have registered for courtroom passes.

The state maintains that creationism is supported by competent scientific evidence. A brief filed by state attorneys says the ACLU suit is attempting to censor that view, "shutting out from the 'marketplace of ideas' those ideas with which they disagree because they are incompatible with their personal, religious or philosophical views."

The ACLU argues that creationism is religion, not science, and has been advanced by fundamentalists who interpret the biblical book of Genesis literally. The fundamentalists' aim, the suit says, is to impose their view on the schools and to evangelize through the instruction.

"Let religion be taught from our hearths and our pulpits; let science be taught in our public schools," an ACLU brief says.

An Associated Press-NBC News poll in October said that three out of four Americans believe both evolution and creation should be taught in public schools.

The legislature passed the law in March, giving it only a 15-minute hearing, with little debate. Gov. Frank White, who supported the legislation before it passed, signed it without reading parts of it. It would go into effect next fall.

Louisiana enacted a law slightly different from the measure passed in Arkansas and the ACLU is challenging that act as well.

Former Maryland governor offered job by Baltimore

BALTIMORE (AP) — Former Maryland Gov. Marvin Mandel, who got his first real taste of freedom Saturday after 19 months in a federal prison, has been offered a job as a budget analyst for the city of Baltimore.

Mandel left a Baltimore halfway house for a stroll downtown and then a weekend at home.

He was released Friday from a minimum-security facility at Eglin Air Force Base in the Florida panhandle after President Reagan commuted his three-year sentence for mail fraud and racketeering.

Mandel was convicted of accepting $350,000 worth of cash and gifts in a scheme to fix favorable racing dates for the defunct Marlboro Race Course.

The former Democratic governor will have to stay at the Baltimore halfway house or an alternate site until Dec. 20.

Until he finds employment, Mandel can leave the facility at 6 a.m. each day, but must return by 3 p.m. After he is employed, Mandel will be allowed to leave at 6 a.m. and return at 10 p.m.

Mandel said he wants to work, and he already has received one job offer from the city of Baltimore. Mayor William Donald Schaefer has offered him a work-release job at City Hall as a temporary budget analyst.

George A. Piendak, who heads the city's Bureau of Budget and Management Research, said that "there's no more knowledgeable person on state budgets. It's a very serious offer, and we could use him."

Arnold Weiner, Mandel's lawyer, said his client was "flattered" by the offer, but would prefer a job closer to his home in suburban Anne Arundel County.

Mandel has been suspended from law practice in Maryland and faces disbarment proceedings.

Law gives CIA more secretive powers

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN
and
ROBERT PARRY
Associated Press Writers

WASHINGTON (AP) — CIA agents and their informants now have the authority to pose as someone else to deceive law-abiding Americans into revealing "significant" foreign intelligence without knowing they are talking to the government.

This is the most controversial change in the new executive order governing U.S. intelligence agencies which President Reagan signed on Friday.

Civil liberties groups are dismayed that Reagan's order weakens safeguards imposed by Jimmy Carter in a 1978 executive order. That Carter order, in turn, had loosened restrictions placed on the intelligence agencies by Gerald Ford.

All the restrictions grew out of the disclosure by congressional committees in the mid-1970s that the CIA and FBI had spied on and even interfered in the private lives of Americans who were exercising their right to criticize government policies, particularly on civil rights and the Vietnam War.

But many members of Congress who had been concerned that the Reagan administration would give the CIA even greater domestic spying power feel that Reagan's order includes workable safeguards against recurrence of the abuses of the 1960s and 1970s.

THUS, THERE IS little chance that the new rules will be revised again soon.

Here is a description of the difference the new rules will mean for American citizens and corporations here and abroad.

— What is "significant" foreign intelligence and what Americans might hold it?

The order defines foreign intelligence as information about the capabilities, intentions and activities of foreign governments, private organizations, companies and persons. This can include economic, political, military or scientific information.

Such data is held by a wide range of Americans including scholars, scientists, reporters, executives of multinational corporations, employees of international medical and service organizations and others.

Reagan's order does not define "significant." That definition probably will be contained in secret implementing orders, which the attorney general approves and the House and Senate Intelligence Committees will be allowed to see and comment on.

— If a U.S. citizen or corporation in this country has such information, what can the CIA do to get it?

Under President Carter's order, the CIA could only try to obtain it if the citizen or corporation volunteered it, if it was commercial information or if the person or company who possessed it was reasonably believed to be working for a foreign power.

Under Reagan's order, if the information isn't volunteered, the agency could go after it secretly in several ways if it believed it had no other source for the information.

THE CIA COULD conduct what it calls a "pretext interview." The agency could send an agent to do an interview but have him pose as someone else to whom the citizen or corporation would be more likely to give the information than to the CIA.

The CIA could also recruit informants to get the information. These informants could not break the law, but might be asked to turn over certain confidential records they have access to. Or they might be asked to win the trust and confidence of the person who has the information.

Exactly how far the informants could go will depend on secret implementing guidelines which also will be approved by the attorney general and scrutinized by the congressional intelligence committees.

Also, in this country the CIA may not undertake such intelligence-gathering efforts for the purpose of acquiring information concerning the domestic activities of U.S. citizens or corporations.

— What if the American or U.S. corporation is abroad?

The CIA could also assign agents to follow and photograph the citizen or corporate official. But it could not use physical surveillance in this country unless it was trailing a present or former CIA employee or person who worked on a contract for the agency.

— When could the CIA use electronic surveillance or break-ins?

As under Carter, the CIA cannot use these techniques in the United States and when it uses them on Americans abroad it still must have a ruling by the attorney general that the target who has the information is believed to be an agent of a foreign power.

— When can the CIA infiltrate a U.S. organization?

Jimmy Carter allowed secret CIA infiltration of U.S. organizations for only three purposes: recruitment, establishing "cover" occupations for agents and gathering certain technical information which would have been made available to the government anyway.

For instance, government sources have said the CIA might have enlisted a college dean to spot good recruits for the agency. It might have put an agent in a U.S. group for the purpose of sending him abroad posing as something other than a U.S. intelligence agent. And it might have sent an agent to scientific conferences to which other government officials had been invited.

Under Reagan, the public will not know the circumstances under which such infiltration will be allowed. The purposes will be approved by the attorney general and will not violate existing laws, but they will be secret rather public.

Poll says kids prefer performers, sports people over politicians

NEW YORK (AP) — List the 30 people U.S. eighth-graders most admire, and there won't be a politician, world leader or scientist among them, according to a new poll of 2,000 young people.

For the second year in a row, actor Burt Reynolds was the teen-agers' choice as the person they would most like to emulate when they grow up.

According to the survey by the World Almanac & Book of Facts, three sports figures made this year's list — basketball player Magic Johnson, football player Earl Campbell and boxer Sugar Ray Leonard.

The rest consisted of entertainers, most of them from television. The top 10 were Reynolds, actors Richard Pryor, Alan Alda, Brooke Shields, John Ritter, Scott Baio, Bo Derek and George Burns, Leonard and comedian Steve Martin.

Only three musicians made the top 30 — Kenny Rogers at No. 21, Olivia Newton-John at No. 26, and Billy Joel, No. 30.

Reagan declares 'rights' days

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has proclaimed Thursday as Human Rights Day and Dec. 15 as Bill of Rights Day, declaring, "We are all too well aware that the individual rights declared in these documents are not yet respected in many nations."

In a proclamation signed Friday and released by the White House on Saturday, the president noted that on Dec. 15, 1791, "our founding fathers rejoiced in the ratification of the first 10 amendments to the Constitution" — the Bill of Rights.

On Dec. 10, 1948, the United Nations adopted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights to help secure basic human rights for everyone.

"We in America are blessed with rights secured for us by the sacrifices of our forefathers, but we yearn for the day when all mankind can share in these blessings," Reagan said in a written statement.

"Never is there any excuse for the violation of the fundamental rights of man — not at any time or in any place, not in rich countries or poor, not under any social, economic or political system."

Competition for business school grads intense

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Despite a recession and growing unemployment, competition for top business school graduates has heated up and employment bonuses are now offered frequently, reports the Wharton School.

In addition, the average starting salary for the most recent class of Wharton graduates with master's degrees in business administration was at an all-time high of $30,200, up 13.4 percent from 1980's $28,100, the University of Pennsylvania business school reported Saturday in its 1981 preliminary salary survey.

Bonuses this year averaged $5,000 but ranged as high as $12,000 for some management consulting and investment banking positions, according to Mark O'Brien, associate director for corporate placement.

"Five years ago these bonuses were unheard of and now they are awarded to about a quarter of the class," said Arthur J. Letcher, assistant dean for corporate relations.

"Salaries have finally broken the $30,000 barrier, and that brings them to a new plateau," he said. "In the $30,000 range, MBA graduates are no longer put into entry-level positions. The graduates who get these higher salaries are the ones who come to us with some experience, and they are expected to be productive immediately in their new positions."

Overall, starting salaries for members of Wharton's most recent graduating class ranged from $18,000 to $52,000, with a mean of $32,000. Last year's overall range was $17,000 to $50,000.

The highest paying field this year was again management consulting, with a starting salary of $36,000. About 9 percent of the class entered that field.

Three dead in West Virginia mine cave-in

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

BERGOO, W.Va. (AP) — The body of a third man was pulled Saturday from beneath a 35-foot block of slate, ending a 33-hour rescue mission, and residents of this tiny mining town prepared to bury their dead.

The wife and five children of Donald Arbogast, 31, were notified Saturday morning that the miner's body had been found at the end of the Stillhouse Run mine, a third of a mile inside Leatherwood Mountain.

Arbogast was one of three men killed when the block of slate fell without warning from the mine roof Thursday night. The collapse triggered an around-the-clock rescue effort, and three other trapped men were freed after lying for hours in the darkness.

"We did everything humanly possible but it was just no good," said William Cooper, one of the rescue workers who trudged grimly from the mine as Arbogast's body was carried away.

EVEN BEFORE the last rescuer was out, residents of the central West Virginia community were banding together in support of the victims' families.

At Carol Hamrick's village store, a group of women who had stayed up for two nights making food for rescuers began preparing to aide the wives and children of the dead miners.

"People will send food and donations to the family. They always do," Mrs. Hamrick said.

Friends stopped by to offer condolences to the Arbogast family, but Walter Arbogast, brother of the victim, said the miner's wife, Louise, and their five children found it difficult to talk about the accident.

"They're just too upset right now," he said.

Arbogast said his brother had worried aloud about the mine roof on the day he died.

"He didn't think he was going to go to work on account of the bad top they'd run into," the brother said. "But he went anyway."

ARBOGAST died instantly, along with Bob Bennett, 34, and Doyle Gillis, 36. They were crushed under a slate block 35 feet long, 20 feet wide and 8 feet thick, according to Elk River Sewell Coal Co., which owns the mine.

The accident occurred in the furthest reaches of the small, non-union mine, where the coal seam is 40 inches thick and miners work on their hands and knees. Nine people were inside at the time, and three escaped immediately.

"It was right on top of their backs. They didn't know it was coming," said Tom May, one of the rescuers who laboriously chipped away at the block and carried pieces away by hand in an effort to reach the trapped men.

Rescuers found Donzil Cutlip, 27, pinned under the block about seven hours after the fall, but it took six more hours to free him. He was in serious condition Saturday after surgery to repair deep gashes in both arms.

Larry Clevenger, 18, and Carl Hull, 24, were rescued earlier and were unhurt. Clevenger said the seven hours before rescuers found him were "the worst thing that ever happened to me."

HOURS AFTER Arbogast's body was recovered, rescuers and officials lingered at the scene. Many had been there since Thursday night.

One of six American adults doesn't know significance

NEW YORK (AP) — One of about every six American adults does not know why Pearl Harbor is important in American history, according to an Associated Press-NBC News poll.

In the poll, 1,602 adults telephoned in a nationwide scientific random sampling were asked: "Do you know why Pearl Harbor is important in American history?"

Eighty-four percent either said yes or mentioned something about the Dec. 7, 1941, surprise bombing attack by the Japanese on the U.S. Pacific Fleet at Hawaii's Pearl Harbor. The attack brought the United States into World War II.

But 16 percent either said no, said they were not sure or incorrectly identified Pearl Harbor.

The more educated respondents were, the more likely they were to give a correct answer or say they know why Pearl Harbor is important. Less than two-thirds of the respondents who had not graduated from high school did not know Pearl Harbor's significance.

Younger respondents were less likely to know why Pearl Harbor is important. Only seven of 10 of those aged 18 to 24 knew its importance, compared with nine out of 10 of the respondents who are 50 to 64 now — and were 10 to 24 at the time of the attack.

Women were slightly more likely than men to say they do not know why Pearl Harbor is important.

As with all sample surveys, the results of AP-NBC News polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variations in the sample.

For a poll based on about 1,600 interviews, the results are subject to an error margin of 3 percentage points either way because of chance variations. That is, if one could have talked this past week to all Americans with telephones, there is only 1 chance in 20 that the findings would vary by more than 3 percentage points.

Telephone interviews with 1,602 adults across the country Nov. 16-17 were the basis for the Associated Press-NBC News poll on Pearl Harbor.

Telephone numbers were selected for the survey in such a way as to give every household a roughly equal chance of being chosen. The sample was drawn in order to reflect accurately the makeup of the country by region and by city size. A procedure was used to give a proper balance of men and women in the sample.

Here is the question and the answers from the poll:

1. Do you know why Pearl Harbor is important in American history?

Yes — correct answer — 84 percent.

No — incorrect — 14 percent.

Not sure — 2 percent.

Aboard the West Virginia, Dec. 7, '41

By JOSEPH P. MASTRANGELO
(c) 1981, The Washington Post

Dec. 7, 1941. Ensign John C. Lawrence had just finished breakfast in the wardroom of the U.S.S. West Virginia. He was scheduled for the 8 a.m.-to-12 deck watch. Following Navy custom, he set out to relieve the watch 15 minutes before the hour so he could be briefed about conditions. Moments before he was to take over the first torpedo hit.

"General quarters were sounded and I headed for my station down in the radio room on the third deck," Lawrence recalled recently. "We had no warning, but we had a feeling right away that it was the Japanese. We had taken a couple of 'fish' on the port side and we were listing badly.

"When I arrived in the radio room, we had lost power, so there was no radio. The only light we had was from the emergency lanterns. The radio room was flooded up to our bellies. I gave orders to abandon the room."

The men scrambled to the deck, Lawrence recalled, but it was treacherous to walk on, "covered with oil and water. The ship was ablaze. There was a lot of running around, a lot of activity. I don't remember how it happened but I was hit with something and knocked out..."

●

April 7, 1945. John C. Lawrence, now a lieutenant commander and torpedo bomber pilot, takes off from the carrier Intrepid. The Yamato, the largest battleship ever built, is steaming toward Okinawa and the largest group of warships ever assembled with only eight destroyers and the cruiser, Yahagi — an obvious suicide mission. The Japanese are met by a massive American air stirke.

"I picked out what looked to be a cruiser (the Yahagi)," said Lawrence, head of a squadron, "went in and scored a hit with my torpedo. As we were pulling out of our attack I looked back and saw the Yamato blow up."

For Lawrence, almost 3 1-2 years after he survived Pearl Harbor, the sinking of the Yamato — the crushing of the remains of the Japanese fleet — was the sweetest revenge.

●

"When I came to," said Lawrence, now 64 and practicing law in Arlington, Va., "I found my way to the bow. I don't know how I made it; maybe I was helped. It was chaos. They were putting the wounded aboard a motor launch — there were about 50 on my launch — and we were taken to Ford Island.

"When we got there they had taken a hell of a beating and were in worse shape than we were.

"I was told to strip to my skivvies, given a quick examination and was sent with a group back to the West Virginia."

The fire was still burning. The Tennessee was tied inboard to the West Virginia so Lawrence and his group climbed aboard and tried to get back to their ship to help put out the fire.

Crossing the burning deck of one ship to the West Virginia, Lawrence remembered: "I was barefoot and got into a five-inch gun tub that had about a foot of water. Someone had dumped some red lead paint into the water and my feet became scarlet.

"Trying to get back to our ship we tried a mess bench strung across; it didn't work so we found a gangplank and used that."

Back aboard, a harried pharmacist's mate took a look at Lawrence's red feet and ordered him aboard a launch to be taken to the submarine base.

At the sub base he was able to wash off his feet, was issued a new set of clothes and put to work on the Indiana decoding the hundreds of messages that were coming through.

Eventually, Lawrence was ordered aboard the Maryland, which was heading back to Bremerton, Wash., for repairs. But Lawrence had other ideas.

"When I was on board the West Virginia I kept putting in for a transfer to preflight school and was always told I would need a proper relief. Finally I was allowed to transfer and my orders came through on Saturday, Dec. 6. I went to the captain and got permission to go ahead."

The following day Lawrence's orders were destroyed.

But while returning to the states aboard the Maryland, he realized that a duplicate copy might be found in the flagship file. He persuaded a petty officer to wade through the stacks of copy and a duplicate was found.

Lawrence went to the captain and was given permission to proceed to Pensacola. At the air station he learned flying in six months (although he did not recieve a pay check because his records had been lost aboard the West Virginia.)

Union leaders: 'Olive branch' failing

By HARRY BERNSTEIN
Los Angeles Times

President Reagan's attempt to end what he calls his "estrangement" from organized labor has failed so far because, union leaders say, he offers them olive branches but his actions contradict what he says.

A special meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council was called after 33 federation leaders met with Reagan in the White House Wednesday, and AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland summed up their reaction to the president's latest peacemaking offensive:

"We have deep-principled differences with the administration's budget and tax policies that will only serve to aggravate the problems of working people in times of severe depression.

"Labor's approach to national social and economic issues is at deep variance with that of the administration."

Certainly, there are no hints in the union leaders' reaction to the White House meeting that the president is making any headway in what has been called his "olive branch strategy" toward labor.

THE STRATEGY WAS adopted almost a year ago, when the newly installed administration joined powerful conservative Republican senators to promise a new era of labor-management harmony. The GOP strategy was adopted after most unions had worked furiously to keep Reagan out of the White House. A confidential memo outlining the strategy that had been drawn up by Attorney General William French Smith, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and others called for "calming the fears (of labor), establishing a little credibility with the AFL-CIO and others, and not getting 'banged-up' " in legislative battles with organized labor.

Since then, Reagan, his aides and GOP congressional leaders have avoided head-on fights with unions over such issues as a conservative proposal for a national "right to work" law banning union shop contract provisions.

And last Wednesday, Reagan told the union leaders that he will not support another conservative proposal that would make picket line violence subject to the Hobbs Act, a federal anti-extortion law.

But the unionists say they regard such concessions from the administration as meaningless gestures because they are convinced such open attacks on labor's long-cherished goals never could pass both houses of Congress anyway. And, on basic social and economic policies, the administration has defeated in Congress almost every AFL-CIO legislative proposal.

The unionists thus are unwilling to give Reagan credit for not fighting battles they believe he would lose anyway.

Union leaders have complained bitterly for several months that their recommendations and advice are never sought in advance of policy decisions or even appointments to government positions that deal directly with labor, such as posts in the Department of Labor and on the National Labor Relations Board.

AS A RESULT, the AFL-CIO staged the nation's largest mass labor protest ever last Sept. 19. And, in a sharp break with tradition, the AFL-CIO refused to invite the president to its convention in New York last month.

At that point, Reagan publicly ordered all administration officials to listen carefully to the views of union leaders and he invited all of the top labor leaders to the White House last Wednesday, where he read them his order.

Secretary of Labor Raymond J. Donovan told the unionists that "our doors are open and our telephones work. Tell us your problems, and we will work with you wherever possible."

But AFL-CIO leaders interviewed Thursday and Friday said that, although they always welcome opportunities to have their voices heard in the White House, they regard the latest administration moves as empty gestures.

"They are not about to listen to us on any major policcy question, and that was made obvious to us by the president himself," one AFL-CIO leader said. In the closed-door meeting with the union leaders Wednesday, the president flatly rejected their major request — to embark on an emergency program to "halt a snowballing recession and lay a foundation for economic growth and full employment."

The unionists had presented Reagan with their own proposals as alternatives to Reagan administration economic policies, and no one expected the president to accept them.

But it helped spell out the deep differences labor has with the administration, and none of those interviewed say those differences can be narrowed by more talk.

"Why the hell did it take nearly a year for the White House to say publicly the administration should not ignore labor's views?" one irritated AFL-CIO vice president asked.

The answer given by most of the union officers is, as Los Angeles County AFL-CIO executive secretary William Robertson put it:

"The president's order that his staff talk more with labor is just part of a scheme to try to reduce the bitterness against him because of the growing recession and because of his tax and budget policy of giving to the rich while taking away from the poor."

Inmates bugged officials, guards

By BRENDAN RILEY
Associated Press Writer

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — Inmates of the Nevada Maximum Security Prison have been bugging phones and eavesdropping on the conversations of prison officials, authorities say.

Because of the eavesdropping, inmates may have known in advance when guards planned disciplinary measures, says prison Superintendent George Sumner.

Sumner, a former San Quentin Prison warden who took over as superintendent of the Nevada facility Monday, said evidence of wiretapping was discovered Friday and phone specialists were searching for other bugging devices.

"All the phones in the prison administration office had been breached," Sumner said. Asked how long the activity had been going on, he said, "Your guess is as good as mine."

Sumner said inmates working in the prison administration area had access to a supply room where telephone terminals were located. He said the terminals "were all marked up" where listening devices had been attached.

Guards, who had suspected wiretapping for some time, searched an inmate dormitory area just above the administration office and found a crude tube and amplifier device that could be lowered through floor vents or outside windows to monitor conversations, he said.

Also found in the dormitory area were a knife, hypodermic syringe and a cabinet with a false bottom.

Sumner said guards became suspicious because "some of the things they talked about in the office, the inmates knew about before they could put their plans into effect."

That would mean, among other things, that inmates could learn in advance when cells were to be searched for weapons, or when guards planned cell lockdowns for disciplinary purposes, Sumner said.

Besides the superintendent's office, other offices in the administration area included those of prison program director, lieutenants and captain.

Sumner ordered three inmates in the dormitory where the three-foot-long listening tube was found to be moved elsewhere.

Woman leaves English church to be ordained in America

By YVONNE CHILIK
Associated Press Writer

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — In a ceremony described by a bishop as a blow to discrimination, Elizabeth Canham on Saturday became the first woman to leave the Church of England to become an Episcopal priest.

Ms. Canham accepted her vestments from Bishop John Shelby Spong, turned to the congregation at Trinity Cathedral here and spoke her first words as a priest.

The Rev. Mervyn Stockwood, a retired bishop of Southwark, England, offered his support as the first bishop from the Church of England to participate in the ordination of a woman.

The Church of England, he said during the sermon, had decided "the time is not yet ripe" for women priests.

"Sooner or later, we shall take the plunge. Of course, I regret the delay and the failure of the church to give women their rightful place in the church as a whole," he said.

Ms. Canham's efforts to become a priest began while she was working in a London parish and led devotional retreats in England. She had been ordained a deacon in the Church of England three years ago, but "had to import a priest" on the retreats to celebrate communion.

At the time, she opposed the idea of women serving as priests, but slowly changed her mind after a 1980 visit to the Diocese of Newark, where she attended the ordination of a woman priest by Spong.

"I felt very filled emotionally," she said Friday. "I really didn't know how I would feel about it, but seeing a woman as a priest just felt right."

Spong then invited her to work in the Newark diocese, where 14 women already serve as priests. She became a deacon in the Episcopal Church, sister to the Church of England, last year and will return to St. David's Church in Kinnelon, where she has been working as assistant rector.

"We stand in solidarity with women all over the world," Spong said during the ordination ceremony attended by several priests from the Church of England, whose members are known as Anglicans, a term that also applies to Episcopalians.

"This remains a particular and decisive step for you and the church," said the Rev. Tony Crowe of the Church of England. "It was not easy to take a step like this, almost alone. I believe you made the right decision."

The ceremony was opened with a procession of priests, deacons and lay people from the diocese offices to the cathedral two blocks away.

Secret to long life? Maybe the frijoles

ROSWELL, N.M. (AP) — Jesus Coronado of Roswell, who died at the age of 129, believed in rising early and working hard. And, he "always ate frijoles and potatoes every day."

Coronado, who had said he was born Dec. 25, 1851, between Corpus Christi and Robstown, Texas, died Friday at St. Mary's Hospital in Roswell. The death certificate showed he died of natural causes.

A rosary is scheduled for 7 p.m. Sunday at Ballard Chapel in Roswell. Funeral Mass is to be celebrated at 9:30 a.m. Monday at St. John's Catholic Church.

Coronado had no proof of his age, but he and his family believed him to be 129.

Coronado, interviewed by a Roswell reporter in 1978, outlived three wives and fathered 20 children. The oldest now is 58, and he said his youngest child, born in 1959 or 60, is dead.

Asked the secret of his long life, he replied, "That is a question for God." But he noted he "always ate frijoles (beans) and potatoes every day and worked very hard."

Coronado was married to his third wife, Eudelia Gonzales, for 46 years before her death in 1977. She had tried in vain to gather evidence of her husband's birth or early life.

First week of talks ends in positive atmosphere

By MICHAEL GETLER
The Washington Post

GENEVA — Like the two proverbial scorpions locked in a bottle, American and Soviet arms negotiators have concluded their first week of meetings here, managing to start feeling each other out on reducing atomic weapons in Europe without delivering a fatal sting to talks that will be both tough and politically crucial for both sides.

After a private meeting of the two chief negotiators Monday and full delegation sessions Tuesday and Friday, the mood here has been described as serious, businesslike and favorable. But from what little can be gathered, this first week of secret meetings had its ups and downs.

It was understood that U.S. chief negotiator Paul H. Nitze was quite pleased with his initial private meeting with his Soviet counterpart, Yuli A. Kvitsinsky, and a Soviet spokesman last Monday suggested the feeling was mutual.

Since then, nothing has been said publicly but it is understood that in the first full delegation session last Tuesday when both sides began laying out their generally well-known views, there were no suprises for either side but very little real dialogue.

The lack of substantial communication left the American team somewhat disappointed. Friday's two hour, twenty-five minute session was understood to be somewhat of an improvement but the feeling here is that it will take a number of additional meetings before the delegates begin revealing whether there is a willingness to bargain.

At stake in these negotiations is whether the United States and Soviet Union can get a grip on the atomic arms race in central Europe and reduce the risk that a nuclear war could get started there.

For the West, what is also at stake is the political cohesion and future of the 32-year-old North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

The Western alliance plans to install 572 new U.S. intermediate-range missiles in Western Europe beginning in 1983 unless these arms talks produce an agreement with the Soviets. Those missiles are meant as a counter to some 600 missiles the Russians already have deployed and trained on West European targets.

But the Western missile deployment plan is controversial among some of the population in Western Europe, and the Soviets have played on these fears in an effort to split the alliance and perhaps use public opinion to force NATO from carrying out the plan.

Thus far, however, the Western governments that have agreed to base the U.S. missiles on their soil if the arms talks fail — West Germany, England and Italy — are holding to their pledge. It is also clear from a recently published official Soviet book called "The Threat to Europe" that Moscow is indeed worried about the new U.S. weapons because they can strike deep into the Soviet homeland quickly and accurately from those European bases.

The talks here are being carried out behind closed doors and after the first private meeting between Nitze and Kvitsinsky, Nitze took the unusual step of announcing publicly that there would be a complete news blackout on the talks, at least here.

It is normal for arms negotiations such as this one to be conducted with secrecy. Although ultimately there were many leaks of information, the SALT talks on the big intercontinental-range strategic missiles and bombers that went on for seven years in this city also were carried on behind closed doors.

Weinberger has tight security

By DAVID WOOD
Los Angeles Times

NAPLES, Italy — Unusually heavy security precautions were thrown around Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger during his visit to Turkey Friday and Saturday after authorities discovered an assassination team in the country, U.S. officials said Saturday.

Weinberger arrived here Saturday night to continue his tour of Mediterranean countries including Morocco, Turkey, and Italy. He plans to take part in North Atlantic Treaty Organization meetings in Brussels, Belgium next week.

The officials said U.S. intelligence sources had discovered the presence of the assassination team, composed of Libyans and other nationalities. One official said the group included English-speaking terrorists. The official would not elaborate, nor would he say whether the group in Turkey was in any way connected to Libyan assassiantion teams reported to be located inside the United States.

The officials said the group was not apprehended but was kept under surveillance. Weinberger's schedule was not altered.

The officials would not say whether the assassination team had actually arrived in Ankara, the only Turkish city Weinberger visited.

However, heavy security was highly visible as Turkish troops in battle dress armed with automatic rifles lined the streets as Weinberger's motorcade passed. Police also threw up roadblocks around the capital.

At a press conference held jointly by Weinberger and Turkish Defense Minister Umit Halea Bayulken, reporters were thoroughly searched by Turkish military police, a precaution Turkish reporters said was unusual. Weinberger's meetings with Turkish officials were held well away from even the small group of American reporters traveling with him, also an unusual precaution designed to reduce the size of Weinberger's party and thus make it easier to protect.

The officials said the terrorist group was not apprehended in order to keep it under surveillance until a visit later this month by Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. The official explained that if the group's visible members were arrested, others might go deep underground to find alternative ways of threatening Haig.

Earlier during his trip, Weinberger told reporters that "I'm not concerned" about threats to his life.

"I just don't have any idea how serious (Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy) is, but you just can't worry about those things," he said.

However, defense department officials traveling with Weinberger said that after the two-day stay in Ankara Weinberger has been convinced of the need for security precautions and has accepted restrictions on his movements.

Until the military junta took power in Turkey 14 months ago, Turkey seethed with terrorist activity amounting to a civil war between the left and the right. Terrorism has virtually disapepared from Turkey since the junta imposed martial law.

Tanzanian lone U.N. candidate

By DOYLE MCMANUS
Los Angeles Times

UNITED NATIONS — The race for the job of U.N. secretary-general was down to only one candidate Friday — but he was unlikely to win election by the 15-nation security council, diplomats said.

Salim Ahmed Salim of Tanzania, the African countries' nominee for the post, will seek the council's approval next week. But Western delegates who refused to be identified by name said the United States will almost certainly block his election, as it has done repeatedly over the last two months.

Kurt Waldheim, the current secretary-general, withdrew his name from the contest on Thursday. His action followed a request from the president of the Security Council, Ambassador Olara Otunna of Uganda, that both Waldheim and Salim step aside — if only temporarily — to allow possible compromise candidates to come forward.

Salim had been expected to withdraw as well, but the African delegations decided in a long caucus Thursday to try his name on at least one more ballot, the diplomat said.

"I am still a candidate," Salim said.

The Security Council has deadlocked through 16 ballots on the choice of a secretary-general for the five-year term beginning Jan. 1. China wants the next secretary-general to come from the Third World and has regularly vetoed Waldheim's bid for a third term, while the United States has vetoed Salim.

Secretary of State Alexander Haig shakes hands with Luis Valencia Rodriquez, foreign minister of Ecudor, after a private meeting between the two at Haig's villa in St. Lucia Friday.

Haig concerned about Cuba, Nicaragua

By DON OBERDORFER
The Washington Post

CASTRIES, St. Lucia — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. called on the nations of the western hemisphere Friday to take collective action against threats to peace and security from Cuba and Nicaragua.

Speaking to the general assembly of the Organization of American States, Haig described rising dangers of "terror and war in the region" but did not propose specific actions that the OAS or its member nations might take in response.

Haig mentioned the hemisphere's 1947 Rio Treaty of collective security but did not propose that it be invoked at this point against Cuba or Nicaragua.

In a briefing for reporters, a senior aide to Haig on Latin American affairs said the address was aimed at "starting a process" and "launching a concept" that might lead in time to collective action. The official forecast follow-up meetings to include some but not all 27 of the OAS member states.

Another State Department official said "joint contingency planning" by the United States and some of its hemispheric allies could be one aim of forthcoming meetings.

Haig's address, together with his discussions with senior Latin American diplomats here in the past two days, suggested an administration decision to mute the talk of unilateral U.S. military steps in Central America and to shift attention to regional responsibility and solutions.

Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto immediately challenged Haig's charge that his country is intervening militarily in El Salvador by aiding guerrilla forces there. D'Escoto charged in a press conference following Haig's speech that Washington, rather than Managua, "is clearly violating the principle of non-intervention" in Central America and elsewhere.

The consensus of comments by Latin diplomats to Haig's address appeared to be positive. But it was unclear how many hemispheric nations would be willing to participate in or even to endorse military steps to combat Cuban or Nicaraguan activity.

"The United States is prepared to join others in doing whatever is prudent and necessary to prevent any country in Central America from becoming the platform of terror and war in the region," Haig said.

Haig declared that "President Reagan has made clear that we have no plans to send comoat troops to Central America" but he also said the United States will help hemispheric nations resist "illegal intervention" and will supply economic and military assistance when needed.

Haig asked: "Should we not be discussing together how to prevent the import of heavy offensive weapons — by any country in Central America? Should we not be searching for ways to limit the number of foreign military advisers to reasonable levels — in all countries of Central America?"

Inflation: Not in Russian, just Russia

By DUSKO DODER
The Washington Post

MOSCOW — Russians are not yet "eating the sawdust," as some people in the West seem to think. But there is no doubt that this country is bracing for what many expect to be one of the most difficult winters in years.

The grain harvest apparently has been disastrous. Food is in short supply. Life in general has become more costly.

In the past year, everything ranging from food and clothing to gasoline, transportation, cars and entertainment has become more expensive. Skyrocketing prices have produced the sort of inflation that this centrally-planned economy has not known for decades.

The latest bad news to hit Soviet consumers was a proposal by the nation's deputy planning chief, Arkady Aloyants, that water meters be installed in each Soviet apartment. This would give the government the means to induce energy savings through higher tariffs on "excessive" use of hot water.

But this also would lead to higher rents. Russians now pay for water and heating as part of their rents, which are very low.

"Christ, we do have inflation," said a Moscow resident recently. "We are joining the rest of the world."

Officially, of course, inflation is an economic malady confined to the unhealthy capitalist environment. Even the term "inflation" does not have an equivalent in Russian, presumably because it does not exist in the Soviet Union.

But rising prices and rumors of increases to come after New Year's Day have produced a collective groan of distress. One average Moscow housewife said that to feed her family of three is more than twice as costly as it was 10 years ago. The cost of clothing has quadrupled.

Some price increases of the last three months were cited by this housewife.

A small can of fish in tomato sauce, which cost $1.26 last summer, now costs $2.71. Quality brands of vodka that had been less than $14 a liter cost $17.74. A pair of winter boots that sold for $84 last summer now cost $168. The price of gasoline has doubled to $2.20 a gallon. The cost of Russian-made Java cigarettes also has doubled, to $1 a pack.

The traditional Russian "shapka," or winter fur hat, has doubled in price to $492 — or two average monthly salaries. The price of a woolen sweater has increased by more than 30 percent to $77, as has the price of an overcoat, which costs $309 today.

Experts writing in the Soviet press talk in general terms of the increased purchasing power in nearly all segments of society as the reason for price rises. What this means is a realization that endemic shortages are likely to continue to plague an economy where the supply of desirable goods cannot keep pace with rising demand.

The experts also point out that the prices on some basic staples have not increased for two decades. Moscow residents still enjoy subsidized subway rides for seven cents, just as they did in 1961.

Similarly, potatoes are still 15 cents a kilogram. Beef, when available in the state shops, is still $2.82 a kilogram, and half a liter of milk is 22 cents. Rents in state housing units remain fixed at $17 to $25 a month for two rooms.

But a large number of people have been moved into new and more costly apartments. And Soviet managers, much like those in the West, increasingly are introducing "new and improved" varieties of standard items as a way of raising prices. This has come to affect virtually everything, from bread to automobiles.

One of the signs that rising prices are having a profound impact on Soviet consumers can be seen in the appearance of water rat meat at the flourishing private farmers' makets here. It is the first time since World War II, according to those with long memories, that such meat has been sold for human consumption.

The water rat is similar to rats living in cities, except that it is larger and is found in swampy areas and near lakes and rivers.

Water rat meat selling at the Cheremushk market in central Moscow cost 3 rubles ($4.20) a kilogram and was found to be selling much faster than nearby chickens and rabbits, which each cost 5 rubles a kilogram, or beef and pork, which cost 8 rubles a kilogram.

A woman who offered me a piece of what she said was marinated and roasted rat swore that it was delicious and tasted better than rabbit. This may be true — if the diner has no inhibitions and wants to beat the high cost of other meats.

A saleswoman said that peasants are finding water rats a lucrative business. Apart from their meat, she said, the rats also provide cheap skins for shapkas. Hats of such fur reportedly sell for from$70 to $84.

Another sign of difficulties in the consumer market can be seen in the fact that growing numbers of workers are leaving factory jobs to seek employment as shop assistants or sales clerks. This problem has been aired frequently in the press.

A Communist Party activist from the Ukraine last week wrote an article, for example, denouncing the practice.

"Why does a qualified worker making 250 rubles a month seek a job of sales clerk who makes 90 rubles a month?" he asked.

The answer was obvious, although not fully described. Once the worker becomes a sales clerk he gains access to consumer goods at nominally low prices, and can help his friends and relatives to do so.

Moreover, in a complex system of underground barter economy, a sales clerk can provide a service to other people and in return gain access to other consumer items he needs. For this reason, consumer goods literally are kept under the counter or hidden away in back rooms, creating artificial shortages.

Talking of inflation in the Soviet Union is like stumbling about in a fog. The absence of candid public discussion and the secretiveness about actual price hikes make it impossible to develop anything comparable to the cost-of-living figures that are published in the United States.

But official figures provide some clues. The average monthly wage today is 175 rubles or about $246, which is up 35 percent from the figure for 1970. The ruble is worth about $1.40.

In the meantime, the price of coffee has gone from $5.60 to $28 a kilogram. The Zhiguli, a Soviet automobile, has risen in price from $4,647 to more than $13,000. Prices for virtually all "nonessential" commodities also have risen three to four times.

Soviet commentators continue to insist that prices for "essential" items, such as milk, butter, bread, eggs, meat and meat products, will remain unchanged. Price increases for other commodities, the official news agency Tass said recently, are needed in part to allow the state to subsidize such basic items. These subsidies reportedly now are about $35 billion annually.

Today, said the Tass commentator, "Soviet housewives buy food at the same prices as their mothers did decades ago."

Muscovites scoff at this claim. I have yet to find a housewife who agrees with it.

Power shutdown leads to tower deaths

By TYLER MARSHALL
Los Angeles Times

NEW DELHI, India — When panic followed a power shutdown Friday at one of the capital's most popular tourist attractions, the 12th century Qutab Minar tower, 45 persons, many of them children on a school outing, were trampled to death.

Admission to the 254-foot high sandstone tower is free on Fridays, and the steep spiral interior stairs were jammed with visitors when the monument was plunged into darkness.

Commotion following the blackout triggered a stampede that trapped and crushed the victims in the narrow staircase.

Survivors estimated that as many as 17 persons may have been inside the tower at the time of the tragedy. It was unclear whether the electricity was turned off deliberately by mischievous youths or if the blackout was caused by one of the capital's frequent power failures.

Even when lit, the uneven stone stairs, worn by centuries of use, are difficult to negotiate.

In addition to those who died, 24 persons were hospitalized with injuries.

Although the monument is popular among Western tourists, only one foreigner, a Singaporian woman, was among the victims.

Thirty of those who died were high school students. Police formed parties to locate parents in villages near the schools and transport them to the capital.

Major tragedies and natural disasters with high death tolls are comming in India. However, the loss of so many school children at a well-known,-municipally administered monument in the capital triggered an immediate and unusually strong government reaction.

He tells Israel's point of view

By KAREN DeYOUNG
The Washington Post

METULLAH, Israel — Each year in early winter, reserve Army Capt. Uzi Levin, in civilian life a Tel Aviv engineer, dons a military uniform for one month of active duty in this small border town, where he instructs visitors on the Israeli view of the political and military intricacies of southern Lebanon.

His students include American tourists bused on a three-hour daytrip from Jerusalem, representatives of American and European Jewish organizations and the occasional U.S. congressional delegation or journalist.

Business has picked up this year, following last summer's explosive cross-border exchanges between Israel and the Lebanon-based Palestine Liberation Organization. There is a particular interest now because U.S. negotiator Philip C. Habib is back in the region, shuttling among Beirut, Lebanon; Damascus, Syria; Jerusalem; and Riyadh, Saudia Arabia, trying to make the 6-month-old cease-fire stick.

But Levin, echoing what higher-ups say without their names attached, says he believes a long-term solution to the hostilities, or even continued maintenance of the cease-fire, may now be more difficult than ever.

Had Israel been given more time for its operations last July, just a matter of a few more days, Levin contends in his guided tour, Israeli bombers could have finished wiping out PLO strongholds in southern Lebanon to the point of no return.

Israel was dissuaded from doing so by U.S. pressure, through Habib. According to Levin and many other Israelis, that pressure was motivated by the United States' new friend in the region, Saudi Arabia, a supporter and funder, both directly and through Syria, of the PLO.

Since last summer, the United States has become even closer to the Saudis, approving the sale of AWACS radar planes and saying nice things about a Saudi Middle East peace plan, both over strong Israeli objections.

The widespread feeling in Israel appears to be that the Saudi-U.S. friendship is based solely on American need for Saudi oil and is made possible through a misbegotten U.S. belief that the current Saudi regime is a stable and moderate one.

The Reagan administration, Israeli officials high and low say, will soon learn that Israel is the only stable and dependable U.S. ally in the Middle East. But in the meantime, they say, Israel is prepared to take care of its own problems here on the Lebanese border, Habib or no Habib, should it become necessary.

"Since July," Levin contends, the PLO has added "more than 200 artillery" pieces just north of the Litani River in Lebanon, "covering the whole northern part of Israel."

"We are complaining to the Americans all the time" about the PLO buildup to no apparent avail, he says.

French town remembers World War II 'Santa'

SARRGUEMINES, France (AP) — The residents of Sarrguemines paid homage Saturday to an American World War II hero, a kind of Santa Claus who kept their town on the German border alive during fierce fighting at Christmas 36 years ago.

The hero's name was Maj. Robert Henderson Bennett, an attorney from Matawan, N.J., who enlisted in 1943. He was killed by German soldiers on April 17, 1945, one month after he left the town he had saved.

Bennett spent only three months in Sarrguemines during the winter of 1944-45. But his heroic deeds, which provided the town with critically needed supplies, are so well remembered that Mayor Robert Pax held a ceremony Saturday to rename one of the town's main streets after Bennett.

Bennett's widow, Mildred, and two sons, Peter, of Clinton, N.J., and Richard, of New York City, attended the ceremony in the French town of 26,293 people about 220 miles east of Paris.

A military detachment from the U.S. Air Force base in Zweibrucken, West Germany, and several members of Bennett's squad of the military government section of the Seventh Army also were on hand for the ceremony.

They were Godfrey Ettlinger, of Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y., who served as both a lieutenant and sergeant under Bennett, Alan Fowler of Pittsburgh, Pa., a captain in Bennett's outfit, and Werner Hausmann, a member of the French underground "adopted" by Bennett's unit.

"There is a feeling in Sarrguemines today that Major Bennett is somewhat like a patron saint," Ettlinger said. "He has been compared to Father Christmas. He was a very extraordinary man, a natural leader and organizer who turned the city around in three months."

The American major arrived in Sarrguemines on Dec. 21, 1944, with 11 GIs, two French liaison officers and Hausmann.

His convoy braved heavy shelling and infantry combat in search of food, water and medical supplies desperately needed by Sarrguemines, which had become a gathering point for refugees.

Bennett also was credited with boosting the morale of residents by persuading them the German threat was only temporary and the Allies would be victorious.

A car rolls slowly through the sewage on East Golf Course Road while a sign warns motorists what lies ahead. The road runs through the bottom of Scharbauer Draw.

'The smelly spring of our discontent'

Nearby residents claim they have put up with the problem off and on for the past four or five years and daily for the last several months. City officials contend they knew the situation was worsening. But it wasn't until recently that they saw how bad it was.

A sanitary sewer line that runs down Fairgrounds Road and along Scharbauer Draw until it reaches the sewage treatment plant southeast of the city is the smelly spring which has been the source for the discontent.

Vocalizing their complaints frequently to City Hall have been Mr. and Mrs. William Smith and Mrs. John (Ginny) Ketter. The Smiths' house lies on the north side of East Golf Course Road past the intersection with Fairgrounds Road.

Taking a tour of the sewage water bubbling from breaks in the line, the Smiths and Mrs. Ketter pointed out that the problem doesn't apply only to them, but to the entire east side of Midland. With the current rapid development of east Midland into housing subdivisions and mobile home parks, many residents are seeing used water gurgle back up the drain.

Breaks in the main line start west of Fairgrounds

Describing the unwanted odor and problems with the running sewage is Mrs. John Ketter who lives east of Fairgrounds Road.

Road and the greenish-brown water bubbles into Scharbauer Draw, creating a small creek as it flows under the bridge and south toward the treatment plant, the Smiths pointed out as they traveled the road next to the draw.

AND AT THE SPOT where East Golf Course Road is crossed by Scharbauer Draw, the sewage water continues its trip southward. To warn motorists, someone — city officials deny doing it — has erected signs proclaiming, "Caution Sewer Water."

The sign might not be in vain. Jack Taylor, a neighbor of the Smiths, recalled the time that some out-of-town friends were driving on that road through the draw after a rain. Their vehicle became stuck. When it was finally pulled out and taken to a garage, the mechanics "said there was sewage in the engine," Taylor said.

Because of the draw's close proximity to Smith's land, Smith said he is worried about his water well and has quit using his irrigation well, claiming the water now has a greenish color.

"Water is so precious out here; we don't want to see it ruined by sewer water," Mrs. Smith said. "All these people out here depend upon their wells. We don't have city water."

Adding to the problem is the smell. "There's a terrible odor in the early morning," Mrs. Smith added.

And last summer complicated matters, the Smiths said as they described the swarm of mosquitoes that hung over the draw.

A FEAR OF HEALTH hazards involved with the raw sewage flowing across the road was reinforced by Dr. James Humphreys, city health officer.

"I don't think it takes a genius to figure out if you have sewage running out on the ground that it is a health hazard. Fortunately, it's in the bottom of the draw and not in open country," he said. The most common diseases that could come from the sewage are typhoid and hepatitis.

Unless people actually come into direct contact with the sewage, such as children playing in it, there should be no health problem, Dr. Humphreys added.

But a fix is in the works, both temporary and permanent, according to Fred Baker, director of public works.

Although Baker knew the line had been damaged, "I didn't realize the pipe had been damaged that extensively over the years. You don't expect a sanitary sewer line to be damaged that much."

At one place where the city crews dug up and exposed the line, "a piece out of the top had been broken out. Until recently, the line wasn't full and it (the break) hadn't been noticed," said Baker. But the sewage began to seep through the holes as the line filled.

HELPING TO PUSH out that sewage are obstructions in the line, caused by unusually large objects, such as bricks and wood, according to Baker. City crews had been cleaning out the line, starting at the sewage treatment plant and going north. But Baker suspects the line still has more large blockages that need to be eliminated.

"The line just isn't carrying its designed capacity," he added.

Houses began sprouting up in east Midland in the past few months, all tying onto that main line, creating part of the overflow problem, he noted. The Smiths also pointed out that residents have told them that when doing laundry, water in the washer drains out and then bubbles right back up.

That east side line, confessed Baker, "has been our biggest headache."

In an attempt to resolve the situation on a temporary basis, the city will route the sewage out of the main line into a 14-inch effluent line that runs from the sewage treatment plant north to Hogan Park Golf Course.

Normally, the treated effluent flows north to irrigate the golf course. But Baker said equipment is being installed to pump the sewage into the line and south to the treatment plant.

THE HOLDUP last week, he said, is that special fittings have to be manufactured, and the company had all ready except one.

"We hope to get it all installed by the end of next week. That should be in operation until we find all the stoppages in that main line and get them removed or get the new lines constructed."

Meanwhile, on an emergency basis, the city is installing a pump to pick up the overflow and route it past the stoppages and put it back into the main line farther south.

And, finally, a new 42-inch main sewer pipe will be installed parallel to the old line after the City Council approved the measure at its Nov. 24 meeting.

Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, an engineering firm studying sewer lines throughout the city, recommended the large line after estimating development of east Midland up to the year 2000. "Our rate of development is unheard of," Baker said about Midland's growth.

The damaged line is a 27-inch pipe. A 1967 study showed another 24-inch line would be needed in that area by 1980, but the city's growth has gone past that point, Baker has said earlier.

Although the engineering firm hasn't completed its study of the city, it recommended the council begin the process to install the 42-inch line immediately. The council agreed, but the design and specifications for bidding won't be ready until early summer.

Said the Smiths, "We just want it (sewage) off the road."

Trickling its way slowly down Scharbauer Draw is sewage flowing out of a break in the main sewer line along Fairgrounds Road. New homes in the background are tying into the main line, also contributing to the flooding conditions. Below, an open pit tries to contain runoff from the overloaded sewer line in east Midland in an effort to keep it from running down Scharbauer Draw.

Special City Council session slated

Midland City Council has scheduled a special session at 10 a.m. Monday in City Hall Council Chambers as a public hearing on blighted areas for locating the proposed multi-story parking garage.

Primarily, the council will consider designating one or more eligible blighted areas within the city for selling tax free bonds to construct the garage.

The public hearing notice states, "It is the city's objective to promote commercial and residential development and redevelopment in areas of distress and blight. Consistent with that purpose, the City of Midland hereby designates Census Tracts 9, 14 and a portion of 10 as the study area in support of the proposed development of this project."

Census Tract 9 is bounded on the west by Carrizo Street to Missouri Avenue, west from Missouri to A Street and south to Indiana Avenue; on the south by Indiana Avenue, on the east by Front Street and on the north, in irregular fashion, west along Texas Avenue to Weatherford, north to Illinois Avenue, west to Main Street, north on Main to Ohio Avenue, west on Ohio to Big Spring Street, north on Big Spring to Tennessee Avenue, west on Teennessee to Marienfield Street, south along Marienfeld to Texas, west along Texas to Carrizo Street.

Census Tract 10 consists of an area bounded on the east by C Street, on the south by Highway 80, on the east by B Street and on the north by the alley between Indiana and College avenues.

Census Tract 14 is bounded on the north by Highway 80, on the west by Cotton Flat Road, on the south by Interstate 20 and on the east, in irregular fashion, south along Fort Worth Street, east along Hicks to Terrell, south along Terrell to Gist Avenue, east along Gist to Lamesa Road and south along Lamesa to Interstate 20.

Characteristics of this area as opposed to the entire city included in the hearing notice are as follows:

—Total households for the city is 23,434; for the study area, 1,134.

—Average household income for the city is $30,755; study area, $19,162.

—Percent of lower income households in the city, 25.95; study area, 50.

—Percent of no occupation in the city, 5.16; study area, 24.77.

—Percent of poverty in the city, 1.52; study area, 3.6.

—Percent of owners in the city, 63.84; study area, 39.5.

—Percent of vacancy in the city, 5.03; study area, 12.39.

Statistics were taken from a study done in 1979-80 by R.L. Polk and Company.

Jim Newman, 17, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred M. Newman of 1618 Dengar, was honored as Junior Jaycee of the Month at the Midland Jaycees' noon meeting Friday. The Midland High senior is enrolled in four honors courses and is a member of the National Honor Society, band, German club and vice president of JETS. He plans to major in petroleum engineering and geology at Texas A&M or Colorado School of Mines.

Judge won't seek re-election; Andrews teacher honored

ANDREWS — Roy Bennett, who has been the Andrews County judge for 20 years, will not seek re-election in 1982.

"I've enjoyed my service here," said Bennett, 70. "This has been the most pleasant 20 years of my life. We've always had good, progressive commissioners' courts, and a spirit of cooperation between the city, school and county."

Bennett, who owned and managed a cattle feed store here until he was elected to the judgeship, said he decided not to seek another term in office about two years ago. "This is a controversial office, but I feel like we've kept it to a minimum," he was quoted in The Andrews County News.

Following his retirement at the end of 1982, Bennett said he will remain active in county politics and community affairs and will be involved in business.

He singled out Andrews County as offering "more county services than any county in Texas."

"As far an individual taxes are concerned, we're in the bottom out of 254 counties in Texas," Bennett said. "Of course, oil provides our tax base, but there are several counties with more oil who don't have near the services or the facilities we have here."

During his reign as judge, these Andrews County facilities have been built or improved upon: Civic Center, airport, golf course, Community Building, Florey Park, Lincoln Center, the courthouse, and Permian General Hospital. The county cooperates with the city on ambulance service, street paving, dispatching and jail services.

●

ANDREWS — Charlene Jackson, cosmetology instructor at Andrews High School, has been named recipient of the National Outstanding Trade and Industrial Education award, which annually is presented by the American Vocational Association.

Ms. Jackson, who is in her 15th year as director of the AHS cosmetology program, was selected for the award for her high professional qualifications and for advancing the trade.

Last August, Ms. Jackson was named the outstanding vocational teacher in Texas. Her students and the Vocational and Industrial Clubs of America chapter which she sponsors have won numerous awards.

●

LAMESA — The 1981 cotton harvest in Dawson County may yield between 215,000 and 275,000 bales, according to "guestimates" by Walter Buckel, editor-publisher of the Lamesa Press-Reporter.

"If the finally tally surpasses 250,000," wrote Buckel, "it will be the second largest production ever in the county — second only to 1973 when 323,000 bales became the pacesetter."

A week ago, the county's score of gins already had turned out almost 100,000 bales.

●

STANTON — Stanton dentist, Dr. Randy Moore, has filed for election to the Stanton Independent School Board to succeed Delbert Dickenson, who recently resigned from the board to be chief appraiser of the Martin County Tax Appraiser Board.

Deadline to file for candidacy in the Jan. 16 special election is Dec. 17 in the SISD Tax Office here.

Moore began his dental practice in Stanton in 1979, served three years in the U.S. Air Force and is a graduate of the Baylor University College of Dentistry.

●

ODESSA — A "Play Day and Tri-County Open Jackpot" event will be sponsored by Odessa College's Rodeo Club next weekend in the Ector County Sheriff's Posse Arena off the Andrews Highway in Odessa.

Events will include pole bending, barrel racing, flag racing, goat tying, break-away calf roping, tie-down calf roping, steer wrestling, and bull riding, according to Clara Willis, OC counselor and Rodeo Club sponsor.

Coed competition will be conducted in the 12 and under, 13 to 15, and 16 to 19 age groups.

MC opens pre-registration

Midland College opens its spring semester pre-registration and early counseling on Monday, according to Registrar Dee Windsor.

Persons planning to enroll for credit courses during the spring semester can complete much of their paperwork and visit with the Midland College counseling staff during the next two weeks, or from Jan. 4 through Jan. 12.

Pre-registration activities are handled in the Office of Student Services in the administration building at 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday through Dec. 18. Hours during January will be from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Official registration dates for the spring semester are Jan 13-14. Classes begin on Monday, Jan. 18.

"Our previous students know the advantages of pre-registering early for each semester," Windsor said. "It allows them to get some routine matters taken care of more easily, they obtain a time permit for an early time to register and they usually are able to obtain a class schedule that fits their own personal needs."

The early counseling also provides time for students to fit their courses into their future plans, particularly if they are planning to transfer later to a four-year college or university.

Time permits are allocated in the order in which students complete their pre-registration, so those who pre-register early obtain the earliest times during registration.

Immediately following the Christmas holidays, MC offers an intense two-week interim winter session of three-hour credit courses that are completed in ten days. Interim session courses being offered from Jan. 4 through Jan. 15 are Speech 1301, Speech 2304, Government 2301, Government 2302, U.S. History 2301 and U.S. History 2302.

Additional information about courses being offered during the spring may be obtained through bulletins at all Midland banks, the Midland County Public Library, the Office of Student Services on the campus, or by phoning 684-7851, extension 166.

Midland College offers a wide range of academic and vocational-technical programs during each of its regular semesters.

Lee Chorale members qualify

SAN ANGELO — Eight members of the Lee High School Chorale placed to go to all-state competition in the area tryouts held here Friday.

Eleven students from the Lee Chorale participated in the tryouts, with eight qualifying for the all-state tryouts to be held Jan. 9, 1982. There were 10 trying out in each section, with the top four placing to go to all-state.

In first soprano section, Sherry Campbell placed fourth, with Melanie Finley at first alternate. In second soprano, Nancy Anderson took second placed.

In first alto, Cathy Pitner was fourth and Karen Hobbs was first alternate. In first bass, Bobby Evans was second alternate. Lamar Jefferson was third in second bass section, while Steven Binns was second alternate.

Two multi-million dollar projects boost week's building permits

With the go-ahead given by the city of Midland for two multi-million dollar projects, the total amount of money represented in last week's building permits rose to $9,311,280.

The bulk of that total came on an OK for construction of a $5 million apartment complex owned by Paragon Development and to be located at 3600 N. Midland Drive, as well as a new $1.85 million flight tower to be constructed on North Pliska Drive for the Federal Aviation Administration.

New residential construction permits represented $1,614,850, with permits going to HBF Corporation, 1202 W. Washington, $15,000, 1801 W. Texas, $800,000, and 1202 W. Washington, $1,000; S.L. Civil Air Patrol performs vital function

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

A private plane departs El Paso and is scheduled to stop for refueling in Midland. Hours pass. It becomes overdue. The Department of Public Safety makes a check of area sheriff's offices and police departments, and when no information on the craft turns up it notifies the United States Air Force, which in turn alerts Civil Air Patrol Squadrons in the area.

An extensive search is conducted by air and ground. Later in the day, the grisly remains of the craft and its two occupants are discovered — mangled against a rugged peak in the Delaware Mountains. The craft failed to clear the crest by less than 75 feet.

Throughout the nation, whenever an aircraft is reported missing, the burden of responsibility for the search often falls on the shoulders of members of the Civil Air Patrol, a civilian auxiliary of the Air Force which celebrates its 40th anniversary this week. Because the military has no slow-flying planes that can operate at low altitudes, it often enlists civilian help in the search for possibly downed aircraft.

Squadrons whose assistance is solicited on such occasions include the one from Midland, which has 22 senior members as well as nine cadets. Their aim includes cadet training, aerospace education and search and rescue, for which the CAP is best known. But fortunately, says Squadron Commander Major Herald Beaty, increase in fuel costs over the last several years means fewer marginally qualified pilots flying and as a result fewer calls for air search and rescue.

"In 1977 it seemed like every other week there was a search for a missing (aircraft), but this has reduced considerably," he said.

In fact, he noted, Midland CAP has not flown a search and rescue mission for more than four months, although it did fly a blood transport mission to and from Dallas recently.

Beaty, who has been a pilot since 1938, formerly was in CAP in Van Horn, where rugged terrain and dangerous mountain winds often led to aircraft accidents. He was with the foot party which reached the site of the crash in the Delaware Mountains, and the experience was enough to make him "swear off" the ground team and stick with air search instead. He never sees a downed aircraft, he says, but what he thinks to himself, "That could be me."

Sometimes his efforts in search and rescue have not had a such a tragic ending. He recalls one occasion on which a rancher flying a private craft from a Mexican border ranch was overdue in Pecos. Although the Air Force did not solicit the Civil Air Patrol's assistance, he undertook an "unofficial" search and rescue, which means the military did not reimburse him for expenses as usual (at the rate of $1.34 per gallon up to a maximum of 25 gallons per hour).

Flying the route the craft was supposed to have taken, Beaty reached the ranch — to discover the missing rancher's pickup had broken down the day before and prevented him from reaching his aircraft to depart in the first place.

On most flights of any distance, aircraft are required to have electronic locater transmitters on board, which will send out a signal should the craft go down. While ELTs have resulted in many finds of downed craft, sometimes, recalls Beaty, they may not be what they're supposed to be.

A few years ago, he reminisced, he received a call informing him that an ELT was going off somewhere near Dalhart.

"I grabbed some candy bars and coffee and got airborne," he recalled. "I was almost to Amarillo when they discovered the signal wasn't from an ELT — in southwest Kansas a power line was down and making connection with a tower, and it was responding just like an ELT."

That's the kind of air search which "turns out nice," noted Beaty, who sees in the CAP an opportunity for community service which "fits in with one of the things I like to do — fly."

Public affairs officer Lt. Robin Matthews also sees community service as important in attracting new members and cadets.

"I've only been in four months but I find it a worthwhile organization," he said. "The CAP does a lot more than people think they do.... We fly three out of every four search hours for the Air Force."

Midland Composite Squadron holding membership drive

Midland Composite Squadron of Civil Air Patrol is conducting a membership drive to bolster manpower in its role as a part of the Civil Defense program, a backup in times of national disaster, and in search and rescue efforts.

Senior members must be at least 21 years of age, while age requirements for cadets are 13 years or completion of the ninth grade to 18.

Qualified cadets can earn their private pilot's license, while each summer they may spend a week at an Air Force base as a regular airman for a cost of $25. They fly orientation flights on Air Force aircraft, and study maintenance of engines, radar, radio and other related areas.

CAP offers cadets scholarships in engineering, languages, airport management, physics, aeronautics and aerospace medicine. Study grants are available for youths not planning to attend college.

Cadets in Midland Composite Squadron participate in model airplane building, rocketry, Red Cross first-aid training, radio, observation, civil defense disaster training, color guard and drill and campouts.

Senior members are involved with a program of training specialties, leadership programs and may take part in emergency services such as search and rescue, civil defense and natural disaster relief.

The program in the next few months includes a cadet communications exercise, a statewide search and rescue practice maneuver in Odessa, cadet search and rescue exercise and a flight clinic. A class "B" encampment for cadets will be held in May.

Interested persons may contact public affairs officer Lt. Robin Matthews at 694-7460 or 685-1623.

CAP meetings are held weekly at 7 p.m. Thursdays in the CAP trailer at the south end of Midland Air Park.

The local squadron is planning to build a hangar for activities at Air Park next year.

Difficulty in school may mean MBD

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Little Johnny is fidgety in school and his attention span is short. Sometimes he becomes disruptive and appears to be excessively clumsy. He may daydream and many times it takes two to three tries before he responds to his name.

Too often children like Johnny have been pegged as trouble makers, displaying a discipline problem. They often are not achieving academically.

Usually the teacher or the parents will conclude that something is wrong.

Dr. G.H. Cirkovic feels these children have Minimal Brain Dysfunction Syndrome or MBD.

"All children with MBD that come to my office are sent to me because they are having some type of difficulty in school," Cirkovic said.

A new doctor in Midland, Cirkovic specializes in pediatric neurology. His office has been open since Tuesday and he is lecturing to the schools, local organizations and medical communities throughout the Permian Basin about MBD to "set the record straight."

CIRKOVIC EXPLAINED that "by definition, this term (MBD) applies to children who have an IQ of 80 and above, who may have some type of educational difficulty, uncoordination or personality problems." He added that the IQ is within normal range and emphasized "these children do not have any form of brain damage."

Contrary to public opinion, although children have been commonly classified as hyperactive, only one-third of MBD children are hyperkinetic and the other two-thirds are missed by experts in detecting the problem, Cirkovic said. He added MBD is not a lifelong affliction, but rather an age-limited process.

"It is usually over by the time the child is out of high school. It never occurs in the adult life of the individual," he said. "It is thought to be the result of immaturity of certain areas of the brain that have to do with personality maturation or development, coordination and acquistion of learned skills."

A former high school teacher, Cirkovic said he had seen children with signs of MBD in class.

"They would be inattentive — not grasping concepts," he recalled. "I kept them after school, not for punishment, but to find out if they had any problem."

In some instances, children who are rowdy and disruptive are victims of child abuse or are emotionally disturbed. While these children exhibit the same type of behavior, many times their problem is misdiagnosed, according to Cirkovic.

MBD children often are suspected of having epilepsy, and the excessive daydreaming is often perceived by the educator as "a possible seizure manifestation." Many times the child's personality problem is attributed to inadequate parenting. But, Cirkovic believes that many of the behavioral patterns and personality problems are signs of MBD.

"THE GREAT MAJORITY of the children are male. In my particular experience, the ratio is seven to eight males to one female," he said. "If hyperactive, they may have been this way from the first year of life, or have been perceived as such only when they began school."

Cirkovic explained that as infants they cried excessively, vomited, were colicky and slept poorly — generally they could not be satisfied. Although many of the children will not have all the same behavior patterns, Cirkovic pointed out that they will have several.

"When they enter kindergarten, they are poor with scissors, coloring, drawing and printing. They also have difficulty in buttoning their clothes, doing zippers and tying shoelaces," Cirkovic said. "When they start school, they are constantly attention-seeking. They may whine, run out of their seats, bother other students, talk out of turn or continuously fidget."

Cirkovic said that reading and math are difficult tasks for the MBD child and many have poor eye-hand coordination. He added that the children are usually "totally fearless of physical trauma or punishment from the teacher."

There is no specific test to diagnose the MBD child. But after Cirkovic takes a history of the child in which he asks for the previous behavior patterns, he begins a complete pediatric neurological examination.

"Because my neurological examination can test for only so many functions of the brain, I usually complement this with a psychological exam," Cirkovic said. "I like the test called the WISC-R, because it provides me with comprehensive information of the various components that make up one's IQ."

Moreover, Cirkovic said he also does an EEG (record of the brain waves) on the child, adding that "I have picked up a significantly high number of subtle types of epilepsy with this test."

Dr. G.H. Cirkovic, Midland's new pediatric neurologist, examines slides as part of a lecture tour he will give throughout the Permian Basin on Minimal Brain Dysfunction Syndrome to schools, local organizations and medical communities.

CIRKOVIC SAID every child is a candidate for MBD who has the appropriate history, minor abnormalities on the neurological exam, called "soft neurological signs" and "a certain type of profile on the WISC-R."

What happens to these children is a delay in the development of the brain. The current theory, Cirkovic explained, "is that a specific substance or substances, neuro-transmitters, which the brain normally produces, is transiently absent or defective."

He noted that skill movement of the MBD child is performed too slowly, inaccurately or not at all. The implication signifies a lag in development in certain areas of the brain that deal with coordination.

These children also have problems attending to task and emotional maturity. Three areas that appear to be lagging in the development of the MBD child's brain are thought to depend on neuro-transmitter substances, the main substance called dopamine. In non-MBD children, a function of dopamine is "helping the child to attend to task, to concentrate on the situation which is important at that given time," Cirkovic said.

"This neuro-transmitter enables us to put out of consciousness stimuli which are not pertinent to the situation at hand. It follows, therefore, that children who do not have this neuro-transmitter have a tendency to respond to all stimuli at once and subsequently show extreme distractibility," he said.

In other words, dopamine acts like a filter for what is pertinent and what is not pertinent. The MBD child does not have this filter, causing all stimuli to hit the brain at once. Therefore, he cannot pay attention.

Cirkovic said that a similarity can be drawn with children who have diabetes.

"Just as their (diabetic children) bodies do not manufacture insulin and they have to take it, so the child with MBD takes Ritalin to replace a specific neuro-transmitter," he said. While the diabetic child takes insulin for life, the MBD child will require medication only as long as the brain isn't making neuro-transmitters, which is up to the late teens.

Ritalin (methylphenidate) is used for the MBD child because the medication is chemically similar to the absent neuro-transmitter substance, dopamine. However, the drug is also controversial because it is chemically related to the street drug known as speed. Cirkovic said "many parents are anxious regarding the potential addictive properties of such medications," referring to Ritalin.

"PRIOR TO THE start of medication therapy, I explain to the parents how the medication is thought to work, what its favorable and potential adverse side effects are. I try to alleviate any fears they may have or misconceptions they may have acquired by reading about these medications in the lay press," he said.

Cirkovic said Ritalin provides the dopamine filter that allows the child to concentrate on one situation at a time.

Cirkovic explained that MBDS is a benign, time-related problem.

"If the child is identified early and the appropriate educational, psychosocial and pharmacologic recommendations are implemented there will emerge an individual who will take his rightful place in society as a productive member of the community," he said.

farm-ranch roundup

Burleson given Farm Bureau award

CORPUS CHRISTI — Former U.S. Congressman Omar Burleson of Anson has received the Texas Farm Bureau's 1981 "Meritorious Service Award" for outstanding service to agriculture.

Burleson, whose 32-year tenure in the U.S. House of Representatives began in 1947, worked closely with agriculture during his terms in Congress and was instrumental in creating legislation to increase the esate-tax exemption, which allows many farmers and ranchers to bequeath their estates tax free.

In 1968, Burleson was elected to the House Ways and Means Committee and also served on the Budget, Foreign Affairs and Home Administration committees.

Prior to his election to the U.S. Congress, Burleson served as county attorney, county judge and as a special agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Cotton gins at work around the clock

COLLEGE STATION — Cotton gins are on a day-and-night schedule in the Lamesa area to bring in this year's crop, according to a survey by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

In the Midland area, the cotton harvest is "excellent" and a "good" pecan harvest is under way.

Extension committee to hold dinner

The Midland County Extension Building Committee will host its annual supper meeting and information day at 6:30 p.m. Monday in the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post No. 7208, 1306 E. Taylor Ave.

The annual meeting commemorates the 1903 founding of the forerunner of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, which traditionally has assisted farmers, ranchers, homemakers and youth interested in agriculture and related fields.

Today, as the urban and rural populations become increasingly cosmopolitan, TAEX areas are expanding to include energy, economic conditions, land and water resource management, social conditions, marketing and leadership development.

The meeting will tell how the TAEX and its Midland representatives serve the citizens — farmers, ranchers and whole range of consumers in the rural, urban and suburban areas.

The meeting will include a West Texas-style barbecue and beans and the side dishes. The home-cooked food will be prepared by members of the committee.

TAEX agents for Midland County are Charlie Green, Louis Stumberg, Sharon Hillis and Cynthia Mann.

'Outstanding Young Farmer' named

CORPUS CHRISTI — Steve Bearden, a cotton farmer near Santa Rosa in Cameron County, has been named "Outstanding Young Farmer and Rancher of 1981" at the Texas Farm Bureau's convention here.

Bearden and his wife, Pat, are members of a family partnership which farms 4,300 acres in the Rio Grande Valley.

Bearden, 30, owns 300 acres, and the partnership, which includes his father, owns another 300 acres. More than half of their total acreage is devoted to cotton production. Grain sorghum, sugar cane and onions raised on the rest of the land.

Elk City ranch makes highest bid

MOUNTAIN HOME — The Safari B Ranch of Elk City, Okla., made the highest bid — $12,000 — in the YO Ranch's Texas Longhorns Production Sale in buying the 6-month-old heifer YO Texas Jacquita 1402.

On the average, heifers which were shown in the ring with their dams brought $3,521. All told, 77 lots were auctioned at a per-head price of $3,179.

John Lively of Henrietta purchased the champion bull, YO Black Jack 936.

The champion cow, the black-and-white YO Petite 420, was purchased by Randy Shawell of Houston.

The champion heifer calf, YO Texas Carmela 1401, was purchased by the Jay Luther Ranches.

The champion 1-year-old heifer, YO Mo Curry 1393, was purchased by the Jay Luther Ranches.

The champion 2-year-old heifer, Guadalupe's Midnight, was owned by Bob Crow of Corpus Christi and was bought by Red McCombs of San Antonio.

Farm families buying bigger cars

DETROIT, Mich. — U.S. farm families are still buying larger, V-8 engine-powered automobiles, while urban drivers are opting for the more compact and sub-compact four-cylinder cars, according to Ford Motor Co.

Nationwide, 9.2 percent of new cars sold in 1981 have been large cars, but in farm states, such as Iowa and Kansas, large-car sales are somewhat higher: 16.1 percent in Iowa and 14.1 percent in Kansas.

Of the nation's 4.5-million highways and roads, more than 700,000 miles are unpaved roads traveled heavily by farm families.

Theme set for turfgrass conference

COLLEGE STATION — "Managing People, Plants and Pests" will be theme of the 36th annual Texas Turfgrass Conference and Show at Texas A&M University Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

The conference is designed for professional turf "caretakers" dealing with athletic fields, grounds, golf courses, commercial lawn services, sod production, parks and cemeteries.

Regional pecan show scheduled

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension
Agent — Agriculture

The West Texas Regional Pecan Show will be on exhibit at Midland Park Mall December 10-12. Winners from 23 county shows in the western half of the state will compete in this show. Regional winners then will competer at the state show in July 1982 with winners from two other regions.

The West Texas Regional Show comes on the heels of the Midland County Pecan Show held last week. The competions will include additional varieties of pecans and will be on exhibit longer. There will be more time for county extension agents, and area and state extention specialists to counsel with individuals concerning the growing of pecans.

We plan to have an information table with free publications and information concering all phases of pecan growing. Take a few minutes off from shopping to stop by the exhibit.

A LIVING CHRISTMAS TREEE will provide pleasure for the present holiday season as well as in future years — a distinct advantage over the short term pleasure of a cut tree. To avoid disappointment with your living tree, we provide the following suggestions on selection and care.

Select native or adapted species. Good selections for the Midland area are Japanese Black Pine, Japanese Yew, Juniper or on Mondell (Pinus eldarica) pine. If you prefer a broadleaf plant, use Burford Holly or Yaupon. For a tubbed plant suitable for future interior landscaping, the Norfolk Island Pine makes an excellent choice, as do Kunquars, calamendins and Yew. Your local nurseryman can help you in making a selection.

Provide a suitable container. If you choose a balled-and-burlaped plant, be sure to use a contained large enough to allow at least an inche of peat moss, porring soil or compost around the soil ball to prevent drying of the soil around the roots. No need to remove the burlap from the soil ball. If a container-grown plant is used, all that is necessary is some means of dressing up the container. A redwood tub makes an excellent container, however, a ceramic pot, clay pot or wooden box with polyethylene film liner can be used. Drainage should be provided in the bottom to prevent excess moisture from damaging the roots. Provide a large pan or tray to cathc the excess moisture and prevent floor damage.

Locate the tree so it will not be directly in the air stream from the heating system or near a stove or radiator. Keep the room as cool as possible when not occupied. A simple method of determining if the plant needs water is to push a freshly sharpened pencil into the soil ball or container. If the point is clean and dry, the plant needs water. If the point is damp and soiled, delay watering another day.

ARMED FORCES NEWS

Midlander in 'Operation Grassroots'

Cadet 2nd Class Holly R. Franz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leland Franz of 2801 Auburn, Midland, has returned on leave from the United States Air Force Academy, Colorado Springs, Colo., to participate in "Operation Grassroots."

Grassroots is a continuing program where cadets return to their respective communities, visit local schools, and counsel students and advisors concerning the academy. She will visit both Lee and Midland High Schools.

Cadet Franz has completed parachute training, has qualified for pilot training upon graduation in 1983, and is on the superintendent's list, distinguishing her as one of the top cadets in her class. She is in the Rugby Club and an officer in the Cadet Ski Club. Her academic major is biological sciences.

Army Pvt. Canuto L. Galindo, son of Mr. and Mrs. Enrique C. Galindo of Andrews, has completed basic training at Fort McClellan, Ala.

During the training, students receive instructions in drill and ceremonies, weapons, map reading, tactics, military courtesy, military justice, first aid, and Army history and traditions.

Tech. Sgt. Donald B. Logan, whose wife, Dora, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clenente Villa of Stanton, has been decorated with the U.S. Air Force Commendation Medal at Holloman Air Force Base, N.M.

The Air Force Commendation Medal is awarded to those individuals who demonstrate outstanding achievement or meritorious service in the performance of their duties on behalf of the Air Force.

Logan, a jet engine technician with the 479th Component Repair Squadron, is a 1970 graduate of Moore County High School, Lynchburg, Tenn.

Marine Lance Cpl. Gregory P. Hubbard, son of Samuel H. Hubbard of 103 W. Dengar Ave., Midland, recently participated in "Desert Firing Exercise 1-81."

Hubbard is a member of 1st Battalion, 11th Marines, based at Camp Pendleton, Calif.

During the two-week exercise, his unit practiced all aspects of field artillery employment. They fired the 105mm and 155mm howitzers under simulated combat conditions, both night and day. Additionally, they conducted tactical road and cross-country marches, and practiced night movement under complete darkness.

A 1980 graduate of Ballinger High School, Ballinger, Texas, Hubbard joined the Marine Corps in July 1980.

Marine Pfc. Michael N. Martin, son of Edward Martin of Big Lake, has reported for duty with 4th Marines, 3rd Marine Division, on Okinawa.

Martin joined the Marine Corps in March 1981.

Sgt. Stanley G. Byrd, a 1976 graduate of Robert E. Lee High School in Midland and a California-based airman, saved the lives of two fellow diving students when they began to panic during a recent class in the Pacific Ocean north of Morro Bay, Calif.

Byrd, son of Mr. and Mrs. Willie D. Byrd of Sulpher, La., was with members of his diving class when their boat drifted toward a kelp bed and the students and instructor got caught between them.

Byrd explained that one of the students panicked, appearing to be claustrophobic, and began to drown. The instructor, who tried to save the student, was pulled under with him.

He added that after their diving gear aided their return to the surface, he began his revival attempt. "After they surfaced, I immediately began administering cardio-pulmonary resuscitation in the water to the student. I then showed another student how to give CPR and let him work on reviving the instructor."

Byrd is an instrumentation mechanic with the 392nd Communications Group at Vandenburg Air Force Base, Calif.

His wife, Suzanne, is the daughter of Mrs. and Mrs. Tracey Norris of 108 E. Shandon, Midland.

Bush, Mondale receive Taft Institute accolades

NEW YORK, N.Y. — Vice President George H.W. Bush, formerly of Midland, Texas, and former Vice President Walter Mondale have been chosen to receive the first Taft Accolades for Service to the Two-Party System, according to Marilyn Chelstrom, president of The Robert A. Taft Institute of Government.

Awards ceremony will be held Friday in the Plaza Hotel in New York during the Taft Institute's 20th Anniversary Dinner.

In announcing the selections, Ms. Chelstrom said, "Because of their significant contributions to the American people, through their commitment to the two-party process, their service in elective office and their involvement on every level of the Republican and Democratic parties, respectively, Vice Presidents Bush and Mondale were the natural choices for inaugurating this award."

She went on to note that both men had entered politics at the grassroots level. "George Bush was active in the Republican Party in Texas," eventually rising to be the national party chairman.

Bush came to Midland in the late 1940s and lived here about 10 years before moving to Houston.

—Consider a resolution accepting the comments of the Regional Development Review Committee of West Texas Opportunities, Inc.'s application to the Urban Mass Transportation Administration.

—Consider a resolution authorizing the executive director to submit an application to Texas Commission on Alcoholism for continuation of funding of the Regional Alcoholism Authority.

—Consider a resolution approving the PBRPC fiscal year 1981 audit report as prepared by Elms, Farris and Company.

—Consider having the chairman appoint a nominating committee for the 1982 officers of PBRPC board of directors.

Criminal information wanted

NEW YORK (AP) — Law enforcement officials hope to set up an information center on the thousands of Cuban criminals who arrived in the United States in last year's "Freedom Flotilla," authorities said Saturday.

Agents of the FBI, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, U.S. Customs Service and detectives from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Connecticut met Friday in New York.

New York sanitation workers start to bargain

By SHEILA SULLIVAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — For the first time since 2,000 sanitation workers walked out last Tuesday, representatives of 400 private hauling companies bargained Saturday with negotiators for the striking Teamsters.

Shortly before the meeting began at 1 p.m, a spokesman for the private companies, Salvatore Spinelli, said management was "willing to make movement" but did not have "a dollar package at this time."

The meeting was requested by state mediator James McCabe.

HOW TO EARN UP TO $2,000 INTEREST AT THE DROP OF A HAT.

★ Introducing a financial first. From First Savings & Loan Association of Midland. The All Saver's Certificate, a fully insured savings plan that earns up to $1,000 tax-free interest on individual returns or $2,000 tax-free interest if you file a joint return.

★ Now for the first time, Uncle Sam will not only fully insure your savings plan, he'll give you a tax break on it as well. Here's how it works: to equal an assumed tax-exempt yield of 12½%, a taxable investment would have to earn 17.86% if your family income is $25,000 and your tax bracket is 30%.

IF YOUR FAMILY INCOME IS	YOUR TAX BRACKET PROBABLY IS	THE INTEREST RATE YOU'D HAVE TO RECEIVE TO NET 12.5% AFTER FEDERAL INCOME TAX IS
$50,000	50%	25%
$35,000	40%	20.83%
$25,000	30%	17.86%
$20,000	25%	16.67%

Figures above are approximate and based on 1981 tax tables. Interest rate on 12.5% is an assumed average investment yield on the All Saver's Certificate. Actual rate is 70% of the average investment yield on one-year treasury bills at date of purchase.

★ You can see why the All Saver's Certificate is a savings break-through. But you may not see it for long. The program begins October 1, 1981 and ends December 31, 1982. So hurry to First Savings and Loan Association of Midland and purchase your All Saver's Certificates.

★ The All Saver's Certificate is a limited offer with valuable results.

Bishop visits hopeful ACACE congregation

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Dangling from his neck is a dove of peace and a golden cross imbedded with a ruby-colored stone.

They are symbols as old as Christianity itself, and for Bishop Mar Aprim Khamis of Chicago, symbols of the spiritual power he hopes will unify the 150 Midlanders of his faith and bring them together under one roof.

The first of those who subscribe to the doctrines of the Apostolic Catholic Assyrian Church of the East arrived in Midland two years ago, and since that time dozens of others have made the pilgrimage. They are immigrants from Greece, Germany, England, the Middle East, lured to the Permian Basin by its promising job market.

But they are not native-born Americans, and their swarthy skins and Aramaic accents set them apart. And now they hope, with Bishop Khamis' help, an ACACE church can be established here to unify them and a priest summoned to oversee their spiritual welfare.

"I find that all of them are eager to start a church here," said 38-year-old Khamis, who is bishop for all of North America.

If such a congregation does make its imprint on Midland, it will mark a significant moment in the history of the ACACE in America: No other such church exists in the entire Southwest and only a handful of other congregations have been established during Bishop Khamis' nine-year reign, most of them in California.

But Bishop Khamis sees in this the promise of a growing force in American religious life. He says the church now sports 80,000 members nationwide. With continued immigration to the United States as well as evangelization of native Americans, that figure will continue to rise.

The biggest obstacle standing in the way of the establishment of an ACACE church here, he says, is a matter of finances. But even that, he believes, is not an overwhelming hurdle.

"I believe that we are going to manage with the help of our Lord," he noted.

The ACACE, which stresses use of Jesus' native tongue, Aramaic, in religious ceremonies and home life, traces its routes all the way back to the First Century. While the standard Old Testament and New Testament scriptures — in Aramaic translations — are regarded as the word of God, three additional accounts also are regarded as being divinely inspired: books reputedly authored by the apostles Thomas and Thaddeus, as well as Mari.

It is those latter three narratives on which the ACACE bases its origins. According to the accounts (none of which are corroborated in New Testament writings), a First Century king named Abgar of Mesopotamia — modern-day Iraq — contracted a skin disease and sought the healing power of Jesus of Nazareth. A messenger was dispatched to the Messiah, summoning him to the king. While Jesus did not beckon to the call, He promised to send one of His apostles in His stead.

After the Ascension, Thaddeus made the journey to King Abgar's city, Addessa, where he laid hands on the ruler and cured him. The incident resulted in vast scores of persons in the kingdom becoming Christians and assuming the language spoken by Thaddeus: Aramaic. The resulting church became known as the Apostolic Catholic Assyrian Church of the East, which, because of "thousands and thousands" of persons sacrificing their lives in spreading the word, said Bishop Khamis, is regarded as the "church of martyrs."

In ceremony and organization, the ACACE resembles the Catholic Church more than its Protestant counterparts. It observes seven holy sacraments and its hierarchy includes a priest as well as bishops, archbishops and a patriarch who are considered to have the spiritual guidance of God. All take a vow of celibacy and abstain from eating meat of any kind. The divinity of Christ is inherent in its theology, and baptism is stressed as essential for salvation.

At one time, noted Bishop Khamis, the ACACE was widespread, claiming 100 million members in the 13th and 14th centuries. And, he hopes, with the realization of other "small, but strong" groups of followers such as exists in Midland, the ACACE again will assume worldwide importance.

Burglaries investigated

Midland police investigated three burglaries Friday and Saturday in which more than $21,000 in items were taken.

Julio Brito of 407 E. Dormard Ave. told officers Friday afternoon that three rifles, two shotguns and a pistol were taken in the break-in of his residence sometime Friday. Entry was gained through a garage door, according to a police report.

The firearms were valued at $1,175.

Mark Wilson reported to officers that a $20,000 gold money clip with diamonds was taken in the burglary of his residence at 2300 Terrace early Saturday.

Some $569 in assorted jewelry was reported missing after the burglary of the residence of Darelene Evans at 4225 Siesta Lane. A police report indicated entry was gained through a rear sliding door.

Kiwanis district governor to visit clubs in area

William H. "Bill" Ayers, 1981-1982 governor of the Texas-Oklahoma District of Kiwanis International, will make his official visit to Division 22 and all its clubs on Dec. 18. The event will be highlighted by a dinner at Midland Center at 7:30 p.m.

Wecoming Ayers and his wife, Mardelle, will be Lt. Gov. Robert E. Lampkin.

The Kiwanis Clubs of Division 22 have recently begun projects based on the 1981-82 theme of "Share Good Health," a two-phase major emphasis program.

The first phase is a continuation of last year's program, "Communications Disabilities," with primary focus on those disabilities associated with speech, hearing and sight. The second phase is helping to make primary health care available in the community and world wide.

With Kiwanis International's goal of making the "K" an international symbol of voluntary service by free people Ayers will ask each Kiwanis Club to hold one fund raising project to enhance this worldwide program to improve the health care of less developed countries.

Service to the community at the club level is the basic foundation of Kiwanis.

A few questions for you, all related to the "boob tube":

1. The quality of the TV cable signal, particularly in the evening hours is consistently poor, and has been for some time, even after numerous complaints over a several month period. When will this problem be corrected?

2. When will the current TV cable franchise expire? When does the current franchise holder plan to upgrade the system in the future to include more advanced capabilities currently available in other cities, such as more channels, two-way capabilities, local user access, etc.?

3. Why doesn't the Reporter-Telegram publish WTBS/Atlanta and Spotlight programming in the weekly and daily TV logs like the San Angelo Standard Times does? — B. McDaniel

ANSWER: Tom Mixon, general manager of Tall City TV Cable, provides the following information in answer to your first two questions.

He thinks that the quality of your reception possibly is an engineering problem, and, with your name and address, the situation might be remedied.

Mixon says the current franchise will expire in the 1990s. He also says his company is rebuilding its system to provide some 54 channels, beginning in February 1982. This project will require 18 to 24 months to complete so that all users will have the opportunity to receive the service. In the beginning, 20 to 30 additional channels will be available at an increase in cost. Channel converters will be required for this additional service.

As for question three, The Reporter-Telegram currently is studying the possibilities of including the Atlanta and Spotlight programming in the Sunday and daily TV logs.

What radio station in our listening area will broadcast the Texaco Metropolitan Opera? — Mrs. C.E.W.

ANSWER: The program is broadcast in the Midland area by station KWMJ FM 103. The programs are broadcast at noon Saturdays.

It's my understanding the state of Washington recently held a referendum on nuclear power, yet I haven't seen or heard the results. Can you find out what happened? — R.R.

ANSWER: The following is information received from the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission in Washington, D.C.:

"This replies to your (Answer Line) letter. It is my understanding that an initiative was passed in the recent election that would require the approval of Washington State voters before construction could begin on any major energy project, including new nuclear power plants. I am sorry that I cannot provide you with additional information." — Signed Frank Ingram, assistant to the director, Office of Public Affairs.

Answer Line also has been informed that an article in Time magazine verifies that the Washington voters approved the initiative.

What is a "retirement income" life insurance policy? — Mrs. J.H.

ANSWER: It is a policy that builds up larger cash values than a straight life policy and it pays a guaranteed lifetime income that begins when you reach retirement age, says The American Council of Life Insurance.

If you should die before you retire, your family receives the full face value of the policy or the cash value, whichever is greater.

Andrews trustees to meet

ANDREWS — The Andrews County Independent School District's board of trustees will convene at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Administration Building to review the budget and tax collection reports, consider borrowing additional funds for a building program and, among other considerations, to approve and disapprove recommended policies on substitute pay for professional and para-professional personnel, on maternity and adoption leave and on attendance.

Chaps stun Barton County

Midland College wins Chaparral Classic with revenge victory

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Clinging to the edge of the precipice by its fingernails, Midland College hung for a 90-85 victory over Barton County, Kansas, to take first place in the Chaparral Classic at the Chap Center Saturday night.

At times MC looked like something from another World, like when they were dashing to a 22-point 63-41 lead seven minutes into the second half as they threatened to blow the Kansans back to Great Bend. And then again the Chaps looked like something dredged up from 40 fathoms, threatening to blow it all as the Kansas Cougars closed to 85-88 with 1:01 left.

APPROPRIATELY, Puntus Wilson, the tournament's MVP, sealed the win with 18 seconds left on a Chuck Robinson pass as MC boosted its record to 8-4 going into Monday's WJCC game with NMMI at Roswell.

Wilson, who had games of 28, 33 and finally 28, beat out teammates Spud Webb, who contributed 15 points in the title game, and Lance McCain, Mr. Cool, who had a 22 point final night, for MVP honors. When Lance picked up his fourth personal, MC led by 22. When he came back in seven minutes later, the Chaps were puffing to stay 10 ahead. MC freshman post Chester Smith also was picked from the Chaps after games of 11, 14 and 12.

The Chaps were awesome in widening a 42-31 halftime lead into that 63-41 bulge, but then fatigue and the relentless Willis Thomas seemed to take its toll. Thomas, a 6-5 sophomore, turned in the most intimidating individual big man effort since Vic Mitchell of Amarillo College scored 54 points at the Chap Center in the Juco Regional two years ago.

THOMAS was 15 of 18 from the field and he received help from Rudy Sanders, who scored 17 of his 25 points in that final half.

Both joined the Midlanders on the all-Classic team along with Wayne Lister, OC; George Lewis, St. Philps; Nathan Givens and Leon Isaac, Howard College; and Harold Howard and Ken Satterfield, Laredo.

As it turned out the final night provided the Classic's most exciting action. Howard held on to beat Laredo, 75-73, in Saturday's first game, while St. Philips nudged Odessa, 84-82, in overtime after blowing a seven-point lead in the final two minutes. OC's Luis Clark, shooting 1-and-1 with three seconds left, had a chance to win it after converting his first shot to tie it at 72.

MC, trailing 27-25 with eight minutes left in the half, reeled off 11 straight points to take a lead that look unassailable until the fading seconds.

McCain, 9 of 14, Wilson, 12 of 18, and Webb, 6 of 9, supplied the Chaps' firepower, but it was the defense, just as it had been against Laredo, that created the opportunities, boxing out Thomas inside and forcing the turnovers that put the offense in motion.

Hereford rolls to semifinals

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Hereford quarterback Allen Wartes fired a 12-yard scoring strike to tailback Alfred Ball to ensure a 28-16 triumph over Fort Worth Eastern Hills in Class 5A schoolboy quarterfinals at Texas Stadium Saturday.

The Whitefaces drove 55 yards in 13 plays for the third-quarter score, then ran out the clock in the fourth period after an interception by safety Matt Collier with 1:12 remaining.

Hereford, now 13-0, will face Richardson Lake Highlands in semifinals action at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in Lubbock.

Hereford intercepted Eastern Hills passing whiz Vincent Spruell twice and picked up a second-quarter fumble that set up a 14-10 lead that the Whitefaces never relinquished.

Eastern Hills spurted to a quick 10-0 lead on a 34-yard field goal by Phil Humphrey and a 10-yard touchdown pass from Spruell to Richard Masterson before the close of the first quarter.

But the Thundering Herd drove 67 yards in 11 plays, keyed by a 42-yard pass from Wartes to Donald DeLozier, and tailback Wayne High scored on a 1-yard run.

Exactly one minute later, Wartes hit High on a 25-yard pass, set up by an Eastern Hills vumble to take a quick 14-10 lead in a matter of 60 seconds. High closed out the second quarter, capping a 48-yard, two-play drive with an 8-yart scoring run for q 21-10 halftime lead.

Eastern Hills responded in the third quarter with a 1-yard scoring run by Spruell, but a 2-point conversion attempt failed.

Bulldogs win another tourney crown

Midland High stretches winning streak to nine games

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Winning tournaments is becoming a common event in the lives of the coaches and players of Midland High School. Chalk up another one

The Bulldogs made it two tournaments in a row Saturday night when they defeated Odessa High 58-49 in the championship game of the Odessa Invitational basketball tournament. Last week, MHS defeated Midland Lee 63-58 to win the Tall City Tournament.

Saturday night's victory also increased the Bulldogs' winning streak to eight games for a 9-1 season record and they will be out to extend it to nine on Tuesday when they travel to Lubbock to face Monterey.

But for now, the Bulldogs are savoring the taste of victory, a victory that saw them overcome an obstacle that could have endangered their streak, fouls.

Midland got into foul trouble in the first half of play when three starting players, forward Raymond Parker and postmen Jim Gunnels and Preston Robertson, went into the locker room at intermission with three personals. And the situation got worse. Early in the third quarter, all three picked up their fourth foul of the night and in the next quarter guard Barr Bolger was hit with his fourth leaving only one Bulldog starter out of trouble, forward Don Sharnowski.

MHS coach Jack Stephenson had two things going for him when his three starters got in trouble in the third quarter, the first was 10-point lead and the second and most important was depth.

"That's what makes our basketball team a little bit different," said Coach Stephenson. "A lot of teams whould have had to keep those players in the ball game. On our team, we have 16 players and they all did fine.

And it was a fine job they did too.

In the first two quarters when the Bulldogs were at full strength, they built up a 31-21 lead. In the third quarter, with the three starters on the bench for more than six minutes, the Bulldogs gave up a little ground to the Bronchos, but not much. Odessa cut the lead by only two points, 8-6 and Midland went into the final quarter with a 37-32 lead.

With 6:15 remaining in the final quarter and with full power on the floor, the Bulldogs were ahead by 12, 55-43. It was at this point when Bolger picked up his fourth and it wasn't long before Coach Stephenson was going to a new strategy.

"We softened our press to try and keep people from getting their fifth foul. We had to change, we had to adjust out there," he said. "If we hadn't had people in foul trouble we would have played differently. But, when you have four people with four fouls, you want to keep those people in there."

Those four players stayed in the game in the fourth quarter as much as they usually do under the Stephenson wave attack and the result was none of them fouled out. In fact, the only player to foul out was Odessa's Willie Adams.

Odessa played as hard as any team could in the final quarter. They kept the press on and took the foul in an effort to take advantage of missed free throws. The game plan was good except for the fact that the Bulldogs weren't missing many. In 13 attempts at that charity line, MHS cashed in on nine points and went on to outscore Odessa 21-17 in the final period.

Sharnowski led the Bulldogs in scoring with 19 points while Parker added another 11. For Odessa, forward Tommy Stahl was high man with 12.

In other tournament action, El Paso Eastwood defeated El Paso Riverside 74-57 for third place; Lubbock High downed Odessa Permian 63-59 for the consolation title and Amarillo Tascosa defeated Odessa Ector, 66-60.

All-tournament honors went to three Midland High players, Sharnwoski, Robertson and Gunnels. Others named to the team were: Stahl and David Olivas of Odessa High; Mike Woolley of Permian; Mike Hill of Lubbock; Joe Perez of Riverside; Rick Clark of Eastwood and Reggie Lee of Tascosa.

Odessa High (49): Abel Mendoza, 1-3-4-5 Jimmy Gilland, 3-1-1-7; David Olivas, 3-1-4-7; Michael Benavidez, 2-1-1-5; Tommy Stahl, 3-6-2-12; Willie Adams, 1-0-5-2; Jimmyb Stewart, 1-1-1-3; Ray Kesler, 0-0-1-0; Eugene Bell, 3-2-1-8; Johnny Rodriguez, 0-0-2-0. Totals: 17-15-22-49

Midland High (58): Raymond Parker, 4-3-1-11; Don Sharnowski, 8-3-2-19; Barr Boiger, 1-3-4-7; Preston Robertson, 4-2-4-8; Jim Gunnels, 2-2-1-6; Scott Louderback, 0-0-1-0; Marc Noland, 0-0-0-0; Doug Hixon, 1-1-3-3; David McFarland, 0-0-0-0; James Johnson, 1-0-0-2; Tony Carrasco, 1-0-1-2; Johnny Pannell, 0-0-1-0; Rob Franklin, 0-0-0-0; Troy Bush, 0-0-0-0; Blake Liberty, 0-0-0-0; R.J. Thomas, 0-0-0-0.

Baseball meetings may produce trading boom

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — Major league baseball, still licking its wounds following last summer's devastating seven-week strike, holds its annual winter meetings this week, with a flurry of trading activity expected.

The last time the general managers and owners convened here was 1975 when 23 trades involving 64 players were completed — the busiest body shuffle in the past seven years.

At those meetings, Bill Veeck was approved as new owner of the Chicago White Sox and promptly set up shop in the lobby of the hotel, making a stream of swaps as he frantically battled the midnight Friday inter-league trading deadline. Veeck is out of baseball now and the game has been revolutionized by the free agent era, but plenty of trading action is anticipated this week.

The stage was set by a pair of intriguing deals completed as teams began preparing for the meetings. In the first, Philadelphia dealt outfielder Lonnie Smith to Cleveland for catcher Bo Diaz, then the Indians sent Smith to St. Louis for pitchers Lary Sorensen and Silvio Martinez. Then Detroit and the White Sox completed an exchange of All-Star outfielders, with the Tigers shipping Steve Kemp to Chicago for Chet Lemon.

The acquisition of Diaz gave the Phillies three quality catchers and it is almost certain that either Bob Boone or Keith Moreland will be dealt. And Smith's arrival in St. Louis makes it easier for the Cardinals to satisfy the trade demands of outfielder Sixto Lezcano. General Managers Paul Owens of the Phillies and Whitey Herzog of the Cardinals promised more action ahead.

"I'm sure there's going to be a lot of activity at the winter meetings," said Owens.

Herzog, who virtually delivered a deal-a-day during last year's winter meetings in Dallas, said he would take care of Lezcano's desire to be moved. "He's gone, and there's a lot more to come," said Herzog, who might also peddle shortstop Garry Templeton.

Seattle has received trade demands from outfielder Tom Paciorek, whose .326 batting average was second best in the American League last season, and reliever Dick Drago, and both figure to be moved this week.

Martinez and Sorensen join Ed Whitson as new Cleveland pitchers. The Indians acquired Whitson in a swap with San Francisco for second baseman Duane Kuiper and Cleveland will continue to shop for other hurlers. Three Indians' pitchers — Rick Waits, John Denny and Sid Monge — are on the free agent market, so Cleveland is on the lookout for replacements, with names like Jim Clancy of Toronto, Rick Sutcliffe of Los Angeles and Floyd Bannister of Seattle among the targets.

Clancy and teammate Dave Stieb are two of Toronto's more marketable players, but the Blue Jays will want an attractive package in exchange for either of them. Toronto might be willing to listen to offers for shortstop Alfredo Griffin, and one of the teams shopping for help at that position is the New York Mets.

General Manager Frank Cashen of the Mets was frustrated at last year's meetings when he failed to make any significant deals.

"I get very optimistic and bullish about a lot of trades at this time of year," said Cashen. "There have been more talks this year than I can remember for the last five or six. I think the deals that have been made are significant and I know there are others pending involving those clubs. But trades are like old-fashioned dancing: It takes two to make a trade."

The Mets' top priorities are a shortstop and some quality starting pitchers, and they have excess outfielders and catchers to swap. The shortstops mentioned most prominently besides Griffin are Kansas City's U.L. Washington and San Diego's Ozzie Smith. The Royals could replace Washington with rookie Onix Concepcion, and other teams including World Champion Los Angeles have inquired about Smith. Catchers John Stearns or Alex Trevino and outfielders Joel Youngblood or Lee Mazzilli are Cashen's main baits.

The Dodgers are unlikely to stand pat. There are persistent reports that they have decided to break up their infield of Steve Garvey, Davey Lopes, Bill Russell and Ron Cey, which has played together as a unit for Los Angeles since 1973. Second baseman Lopes, coming off two straight bad seasons and 35 years old, has rookies Steve Sax and Jack Perconte pressing him and could be traded.

Pittsburgh seems determined to remodel its club and will listen to offers for slugger Dave Parker among others.

With the free agent signing market unusually quiet during the days leading up to the meetings, teams appear determined to use the trade market as the method for reshaping their clubs. After free agency began, winter meeting activity diminished significantly with only 14 deals in 1976. After 22 deals were made in 1977, the trading slipped to 13 in 1978 and 11 in 1979. But the teams seemed to turn the corner last year when 18 swaps involving 59 players were completed and that trend could continue this week.

While trade talk dominates the week's activity, baseball officials also will deal with a number of important amendments and committee reports which could change the face of the game.

Allen becomes fourth USC tailback to obtain Heisman

NEW YORK (AP) — Marcus Allen of Southern California, the first running back in college football history to gain more than 2,000 yards in a single season, was named winner of the 1981 Heisman Trophy Saturday night.

Allen became the fourth USC tailback to claim the prestigious trophy, which is presented annually by the Downtown Athletic Club to the outstanding college football player in America. The other USC winners were Mike Garrett in 1965, O.J. Simpson in 1968 and Charles White in 1979.

"I guess I've found my place in history," Allen said. "In acting, it's the Oscar. In football, it's the Heisman."

The USC star said the Heisman was "an award you can't win by yourself. I'd like to thank the team, my parents and, most of all, God, for allowing this to happen ... This is a very humbling experience."

ALLEN TOTALED 1,797 points in the balloting to capture the award. He had to withstand strong challenges from Georgia running back Herschel Walker, quarterbacks Jim McMahon of Brigham Young, Art Schlichter of Ohio State and Dan Marino of Pittsburgh.

Walker, Georgia's brilliant sophomore who finished third in the Heisman voting last year, was second behind Allen, receiving 1,199 points.

McMahon was third with 706 points, followed by Marino with 256, Schlichter with 149 in the voting by a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

The announcement of Allen's selection climaxed an hour-long television special broadcast from the Downtown AC, which was awarding the Heisman for the 46th time since inaugurating the award in 1935 when Jay Berwanger of the University of Chicago won it.

Allen's Heisman credentials were awesome. He set 10 NCAA records and tied another during the 1981 season for the 9-2 Trojans. There were five consecutive 200-yard games and a career-high 289-yard performance against Washington State.

He finished the regular season with 2,342 yards, averaging 213 per game. That pushed his career total to 4,682 yards, sixth on the alltime list. He also caught 29 passes and 81 for his four seasons at USC.

He will complete his college playing career in the Fiesta Bowl against Penn State on New Year's Day.

ALLEN, WHO is 6-foot-2 and 202 pounds, came to USC as a defensive back and was a backup tailback as a freshman when he gained 171 yards. Playing fullback as a sophomore, he rushed for 649 yards and eight TDs and led the blocking for White, who won the Heisman that season.

He blossomed as a junior and attracted national attention by rushing for 1,563 yards and scoring 14 TDs in 10 games, finishing second to South Carolina's Rogers, last year's Heisman winner. He had three 200-yard games last season and was the nation's No. 1 all-purpose back, averaging 179.4 yards per game.

Behind the top five were Darren Nelson of Stanford, who had 48 points, then Anthony Carter of Michigan with 42, Kenneth Sims of Texas with 34, Reggie Collier of Southern Mississippi with 30 and Rich Diana of Yale with 23.

Allen received 441 first-place votes, 204 second and 66 third. Walker was named on 152 first-place ballots, 278 second and 187 third. McMahon received 91 first-place votes, 131 second and 171 third.

Allen led in every region of the country except the South, where Georgia's Walker finished first and the USC tailback was second.

THE HEISMAN panel is composed of 1,050 voters from across the country broken into six regional sections — Northeast, Mid-Atlantic, Midwest, South, Southwest and Far West. Each section is supervised by a media representative and one, the West, has as its overseer 1940 Heisman winner Tom Harmon, representing Sports Productions of Los Angeles.

Each elector votes for three players, with a first-place vote worth three points, a second-place vote two points and a third place, one point.

The award is named after John W. Heisman, who played football at Brown and Penn and was one of the most successful coaches in the history of the game. He is credited with instituting the center snap and helping to legalize the forward pass as one of football's pioneers.

Heisman had a string of 25 straight victories during his coaching career and was the first athletic director of the Downtown Athletic Club. He is a member of the National Football Foundation and Hall of Fame.

Georgia warps G-Tech

ATLANTA (AP) — All-American Herschel Walker rambled for 225 yards and four touchdowns and quarterback Buck Belue picked Georgia Tech's defense to pieces as second-ranked Georgia crushed the Yellow Jackets 44-7 Saturday.

The Bulldogs, reeling off their eighth consecutive victory since a 13-3 loss to currently top-ranked Clemson, struck for scores on their first six possessions, including Belue's pass to Lindsay Scott that covered 80 yards on the first play of the game.

Walker's 225 yards lifted his total for the year to 1,891 yards, third best single season mark in NCAA history. It eclipsed the Southeastern Conference record of 1,686 set by Louisiana State's Charles Alexander in 1977.

Walker scored on runs of 2, 1, 2 and 1 yards, giving him an SEC record 20 touchdowns for the year.

Kevin Butler accounted for Georgia's other scoring with three field goals covering 52, 46 and 35 yards. The three gave Butler 19 for the year, tying the NCAA record for a freshman set earlier this year by Larry Roach of Oklahoma State.

Georgia will carry a 10-1 record into its Sugar Bowl battle with No. 10 Pittsburgh as the Bulldogs try to claim the national championship for the second consecutive season.

Tech, 1-10, got its only score in the third period on a 3-yard run by Robert Lavette.

It was the sixth 200-yard performance for Walker, the sophomore sensation who now has 3,507 yards in two seasons, fourth best on the SEC career list and only 16 shy of the third position held by Auburn's James Brooks.

Tech, which won only its opener — a 24-21 decision over No. 3 Alabama, became the first Yellow Jacket team to ever lose 10 in one season and the 10-game losing streak is the longest in school history.

Lavette, a freshman, got his touchdown with 3:40 left in the third quarter after Georgia had built a 37-0 lead. It capped an 80-yard drive that featured the passing of Mike Kelley, who completed four for 62 yards.

Georgia, a 20-point favorite, turned the game into a rout early.

Belue, who connected on 11 of 17 passes for 220 yards, faked to Walker on the first play of the game and nailed Scott behind the Tech defense at midfield. Scott then outran the secondary to put the Bulldogs in front after only 10 seconds had elapsed.

The Bulldogs went 88 yards in 10 plays on their second possession, with Walker getting 52 of it on seven carries, including his first touchdown.

Bobcats gain finals with 62-0 attack

SAN MARCOS, Texas (AP) — Quarterback Mike Miller ran for two touchdowns and threw for two others Saturday as he directed a Southwest Texas State attack that buried top-ranked and previously unbeaten Northern Michigan 62-0 in an NCAA IA playoff game.

Southwest Texas State will play for the title next Saturday in the Palm Bowl at McAllen, Texas, against North Dakota State, an 18-6 winner over Shippensburg State in the other semifinal matchup.

The defeat was the worst loss for a Northern Michigan team since Wisconsin-Superior crushed the Wildcats 63-0 in 1963. However, starting quarterback Tom Bertoldi, ranked fourth in the nation in total offense, missed Saturday's game because of an emergency appendectomy he had Thursday.

Freshman Steve Preston, who never had completed a pass in college football, started for Northern Michigan, 12-1. He hit 12 of 37 passes for 157 yards and two interceptions.

Miller opened the Bobcat scoring with a 3-yard touchdown run and then lofted first-half scoring passes of 12 and 53 yards to wide receiver Gary Peoples. Ricky Sanders rambled 21 yards for another touchdown and Neal Neunhoffer kicked field goals of 36 and 47 yards to give Southwest Texas a 34-0 advantage at intermission.

Underdog Army Cadets kiss Midshipmen, 3-3

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Punter Joe Sartiano kept Navy in the hole and the Army defense rose to the occasion Saturday as the underdog Cadets earned a 3-3 tie in the annual football clash between the two service academies.

Sartiano had punts of 51 and 57 yards in the fourth quarter to keep Navy deep in its own territory. In the first half, Sartiano recorded punts of 58 and a record 79 yards.

The 82-year-old series now stands at 38-37-7 in Navy's favor, but the tie by the 3-7-1 Army team was more than just a draw against the highly favored Navy team, 7-3-1 and bound for the Liberty Bowl Dec. 30 against Ohio State.

Army took the second-half kickoff and drove to the 3-3 tie on a 27-yard field goal by Dave Aucoin. Keying the 11-play, 81-yard drive was Todd Williams' 42-yard run.

The sophomore running back, subbing for Gerald Walker, who suffered a bruised thigh in the first half, picked up 90 yards on 16 carries, most in the second half.

A 16-yard pass from quarterback Jerryl Bennett, who replaced starter Bryan Allem, to flanker Al Wynder put the ball on the Navy 13. Three running plays netted 6 yards before Aucoin came on to knot the score.

Navy scored on a 35-yard field goal by Steve Fehr as time ran out in the first half.

The Middies took over with 2:45 left before intermission at their own 33.

Portales wins state

PORTALES (AP) — Quarterbacks Johnny Poe and Derek Bigham combined for three touchdowns and Portales' swarming defense wore down Silver City's big-play offense as the Rams captured the Class AAA high school football championship Saturday with a 20-16 win over the Colts.

The victory gave Portales a 10-3 season record and its second state championship in the last three years. Silver City, which lost a similar close encounter with the Rams in the 1979 championship game, also finished the year at 10-3.

In a matchup of the state's top-ranked AAA teams, the senior Poe finally took command with his running and passing. The 5-foot-10 quarterback rifled a 44-yard pass to wingback Greg Speck and scored from a yard out to rally the Rams from a 10-0 deficit in the first half.

MHS girls lose twice; Lee girls win consolation

AMARILLO — Midland High's dreams of gaining the championship of the Amarillo Girls Invitational Basketball tournament were ruined by defending Class AAAAA champion Lubbock Monterey in the semifinals, 80-54.

The weary Bulldogs were then upset by Amarillo Palo Duro 61-44 in the battle for third place.

Midland Lee, which lost to Monterey in the opening round, bounced back to jolt Amarillo Tascosa's junior varisty 110-30 and followed up with a 61-44 victory over the Tascosa varsity to claim the consolation championship.

In the Purple Pack's game against the Plainsmen, Janice Littlefield pitched in 15 points and Shelly Parker canned 10 but it was not enough to overcome the balanced Monterey attack led by all-stater Kamie Ethridge's 20 points.

The battle with Monterey took its toll on the Bulldogs in their contest for third place. Palo Duro hit the Pack with a 24-12 blitz in the first quarter and MHS was never able to recover.

The weary Bulldogs only managed nine points in the second quarter and four in the third quarter while Palo Duro was reeling of 10 and 12 points respectively.

MHS was led in scoring by Penny Griffin with eight while Palo Duro put Shawn Folsom, 15, Jackie Oages, 16, Venessa Wells, 11, and Rosie Jackson, 10 in double figures.

Midland Lee rode 27 points from Shaun Harris and 20 from Yshun King to whip the outmanned Tascosa JV and gain a spot in the consolation finals.

In the battle for consolation honors, King netted 12 pooints and Rozena McCabe gunned in 10 points to led the Rebs. Nettie Gilberch warmed the nets for 16 points to pace Tascosa.

Lee, now 5-3, hits the maples next Tuesday when the Rebels entertain rugged Monterey in Chaparral Center. Earlier this year, the Plainsmen trounced the Rebs 100-56 in Lubbock.

MHS also returns to the court Tuesday night when Hobbs comes calling on the Bulldogs in a contest at the MHS gym. Tipoff is at 5:15 p.m. and 7 p.m. at the MHS gym while Lee and Monterey play at 6:15 p.m. and 8 p.m.

Wildcats rip Hobbs

CLOVIS (AP) — Halfback Pacer Davis ran for two touchdowns, quarterback Joe Newton added a 45-yard scoring scamper and Clovis' iron curtain defense manhandled Hobbs' explosive defense as the Wildcats won the Class AAAA football championship Saturday night with a 27-7 win.

The victory marked the third state championship in the last five years for Clovis, which finished the season with an overall record 10-3. Hobbs, making its first appearance in the state championship game since 1974, finished the season 11-3 record.

Davis, inserted into the Clovis backfield at midseason after injuries riddled the Clovis team, scored on runs and 1 and 3 yards in the first half and finished with 102 yards on 24 carries.

But the key to the Clovis victory was the Wildcat defense, which stopped Hobbs speedster Timmy Smith. Smith, who had run for more than 2,200 yards this season, was held to a season low of 51 yards by the pursuing Wildcat defense.

Cowboys face hapless Colts

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys, assured of their 15th National Football League playoff berth in 16 years, seek to gain some postseason momentum Sunday against the hapless Baltimore Colts.

"We have to play every game and every team well from here on in, no matter what the records are," Dallas Coach Tom Landry said as the Cowboys prepared to face a Baltimore team that has lost 12 straight following an opening game victory.

"That's what we have to do if we're going to do well in the playoffs," Landry said. "You build a certain momentum to take into the playoffs and in you don't, then you usually don't last very long."

Dallas is favored by 12 points in what appears to be a gross mismatch. But after surving a Thanksgiving Day scare to defeat the lowly Chicago Bears 10-9 and run their record to 10-3, the Cowboys weren't expected to take the Colts lightly.

Landry, in a conference call interview from Texas, said he tries to remind his players of such letdowns, "but sometimes they don't listen."

Goddard wins

Goddard White defeated Goddard Red 71-64 to win the City Eighth Grade Tournament at Alamo Junior High Saturday. San Jacinto Green beat Alamo Red, 60-49, to take third while San Jacinto White downed Alamo Gray, 58-48, for the consolation title. Regular eighth grade league plays opens Monday.

DePaul escapes Purdue

CHICAGO (AP) — Terry Cummings scored 23 points and Bernard Randolph came off the bench to add 20 Saturday night and spark a second-half surge that carried No. 7 DePaul to a 73-67 win over Purdue in college basketball action.

The Blue Demons led most of the way, locking up their second win in as many outings with 10 straight points midway through the second half, padding a 52-50 lead into a 62-50 cushion.

Pedroza defends title

PANAMA CITY (AP) — Eusebio Pedroza of Panama successfully defended his World Boxing Association featherweight title Saturday by knocking out Bashew Sibaca of South Africa in the fifth round of a scheduled 15-round fight.

In another bout, Rafael Pedroza, Eusebio Pedroza's cousin, upset the WBA's junior bantamweight champion, Gustavo Ballas of Argentina, in a split decision.

Sibaca, 29, was openly confident of a victory in his first title fight, but Pedroza used his four-inch height and reach advantage to keep the South African at a distance throughout.

Pedroza sent Sibaca reeling to the canvas in the fifth round with a searing combination to the head.

Pedroza, who was defending his title for the 13th time, had predicted Sibaca would "be ready (to fall) by the fifth round."

With his easy victory Saturday night, Pedroza set a record for consecutive defenses of a WBA title. Saturday night's knockout was his 13th sucessful defense of the championship he won on April 15, 1978.

Wilfredo Gomez of Puerto Rico was the only other WBA champ to have made 12 successful title defenses.

Pedroza is now 33-3 with 25 knockouts in his professional career.

Sibaca, in his first title fight, is 79-11.

Austin College rolls on

SHERMAN, Texas (AP) — Larry Shillings threw three touchdowns and ran for another Saturday to guide Austin College to a 33-28 victory over William Jewel in a NAIA Division II semifinal college football playoff game.

Austin College, 11-1, will host Concordia-St. Paul, who beat Westminister 23-17, next Saturday in the NAIA Division II title game. The win extended Austin College's winning streak to 10 games, the longest the school's 88-year football history.

The loss marked the second consecutive season that William Jewell, 11-1, lost in the semifinal game.

Shillings figured in all the Austin College touchdowns, running one yard for one TD and tossing scoring passes of 31 yards to Van Hargis, 14 yards to Clay Oliphint and 13 yards to David Simmons. Gene Branum added two 22-yard field goals.

Steve Hodges, who led all rushers with 102 yards, scored twice on 6-yard touchdown runs for William Jewel and quarterback Kelly Groom ran two yards for a touchdown and threw nine yards to Mike McGill for another.

Arlington's Don Williams (11) looks for a way out of a jam Saturday night as SMU's David Piehler puts on the pressure. SMU won the physical contest despite losing Chuck Anderson with a broken jaw.

UCLA runs over Irish

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Forward Mike Sanders scored 24 points Saturday as eighth-ranked UCLA, breaking open a tight contest in the early moments of the second half, rolled over No. 19 Notre Dame 75-49 in a nationally televised college basketball game.

The Bruins, 2-2 under first-year Coach Larry Farmer, led 26-23 at halftime after Notre Dame's John Paxson scored 11 first-half points. But UCLA ran off the first six points in the opening two minutes of the final period on baskets by Kenny Fields and Ralph Jackson, plus a steal and fast-break layup by Jackson. The Bruins never seriously were threatened after that.

Coach Digger Phelps' Irish, falling to 1-2, closed the gap to five points on a pair of free throws by Tim Andree and a baseline drive by Paxson. But UCLA countered with an 8-2 spurt to stretch the lead back to 11 at 42-31. Another 8-2 spurt — which included four straight free throws by Fields — pushed the lead to 15 midway through the final period.

The Bruins, scoring 14 of their final 20 points from the free throw line, built their biggest lead on the game's final basket by reserve center Mark Eaton with 37 seconds remaining.

The victory by the Bruins made Farmer the first UCLA coach since John Wooden in 1968 to win his first game at Notre Dame's Athletic and Convocation Center.

Michael Holton added 14 points for the Bruins, while Fields finished with 10 and Jackson 8, all in the second half.

Paxson topped the Irish with 19 points, while Andree, making his first start after a preseason ankle injury, added 12.

Tar Heels win OT game

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Top-ranked North Carolina survived a 41-point performance by Drazen Dalipagic and, with a free throw by Jim Braddock and basket by freshman Michael Jordan, rallied for a 77-70 overtime exhibition basketball victory over the Yugoslavian National Team Saturday night.

The Tar Heels, who trailed 38-34 at halftime and were behind for most of the second half, pulled to within one at 64-63 on a Matt Doherty bucket with 1:50 left. North Carolina finally gained the lead on a Braddock steal and layup 14 seconds later.

Wilson paces Virginia

LEXINGTON, Va. (AP) — Sophomore guard Othell Wilson scored a career-high 20 points to lead Virginia's fifth-ranked Cavaliers to a 76-49 basketball triumph over Virginia Military's Keydets.

The game was the first played in VMI's new 5,029-seat Cameron Hall.

Wilson, repeatedly beating the slower Keydets down the floor, tallied 16 of his points as the Cavaliers, now 5-0, built a 40-28 halftime lead. Wilson was seven of eight from the floor in the first 20 minutes.

Kentucky sinks Buckeyes

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Dirk Minniefield hit seven of eight shots from long range in the second half Saturday, helping second-ranked Kentucky pull away to a 78-62 nationally televised college basketball victory over Ohio State.

Minniefield, a 6-foot-3 junior guard, led the unbeaten Wildcats to their second victory by scoring 18 points.

SMU defeats Arlington in physical shootout

By The Associated Press

John Briggs scored a career-high 18 points, including a tip-in to give Southern Methodist a 70-65 lead with 2:32 left, to lead the Mustangs to an 82-73 college basketball victory over Texas-Arlington Saturday.

The contest was extremely physical. Texas-Arlington forward Andre Langford was called for a flagrant personal foul and ejected after he threw an elbow that fractured the jaw of Southern Methodist guard Chuck Anderson.

The Mavericks accumulated 32 fouls and starters Ralph McPherson, Albert Culton and Don Williams fouled out midway through the second half.

Alabama 95, Texas Tech 93

Ennis Whatley poured in 19 of his 21 points in the second half to rally 17th-ranked Alabama to a 95-93 victory over Texas Tech in an intersectional college basketball game Saturday night.

Tech, 1-2, led 52-48 at the half and was up by seven points with 4:10 remaining. But Alabama rallied and Mike Davis converted a steal into a basket and a free throw to give Alabama, 3-0, the lead for good at 93-91.

The Red Raider's Clarence Swannegan led all scorers with 28 points, 16 of them in a first half that saw the score tied 13 times.

Alabama hit a sizzling 65.6 percent from the floor in the second half and 59.1 percent of their shots for the game, while Texas Tech managed only 42.4 percent.

Whatley and Eddie Phillips each scored 21 points for the Crimson Tide. Davis had 19 and Cliff Windham got 12.

Jeff Taylor, who fouled out late in the game, scored 21 for Tech, Midland's Charles Johnson had 17 and Bubba Jennings scored 10.

Texas 58, Drake 51

Sophomore forward Mike Wacker scored 22 points to lead Texas to a 58-51 victory over Drake in non-conference college basketball action Saturday night.

Drake led by as much as 12 points midway through the first half, but Texas took the lead for good with 4:56 to play on a five-foot jump shot by Wacker.

Drake had led at halftime by a 35-27 margin, but the Longhorns outscored Drake 10-0 at the beginning of the second half to take a 37-35 lead. The game seesawed until Wacker hit his shot.

Junior Guard Terry Youngbauer led the Bulldogs with 14 points. Drake's Dana Dunson pulled in nine rebounds and held Longhorn leading scorer LaSalle Thompson to 10 points and seven rebounds.

Senior forward Virdell Howland added 15 points for the Longhorns, who ran their record to 3-0. Drake fell to 1-2 on the year.

Rice 75, Northwestern 55

Ricky Pierce equaled his career-high of 33 points Saturday night to pace Rice to an easy 75-55 intersectional college basketball victory over Northwestern.

Pierce, who has averaging 25.7 points in the first four games, scored 16 points in the first half as Rice, 3-1, took a 40-26 advantage at intermission.

Rice led by as many as 21 points in the first half and was up by 28 in the second half after Pierce hit two free throws.

Baylor 57, Texas-San Antonio 44

Terry Teagle took charge midway in the second half and finished the night with 23 points and 11 rebounds to lead Baylor to a 57-44 college basketball win over Texas-San Antonio Saturday night.

Baylor jumped to an 8-4 lead and maintained a slight lead through the first half, which ended at 29-24. It remained much the same until midway through the second half. Teagle hit a 16-foot jumper with 10:15 left to give Baylor a 43-34 lead, its biggest of the game at that point.

Brownwood nips Rockport, 19-13

Brownwood allowed Rockwall to gain only 22 yards rushing on 21 carries. In the second half, Rockwall tried three times to score from the Brownwood 1-yard line and failed.

Brownwood quarterback Tyler Tabor hit Jesse Smith on a 29-yard pass play for the team's first touchdown. Tabor later suffered what was believed to be a broken collarbone and he was replaced by Marvin Rathke, who tossed a touchdown pass to Jimmy Morris in a play covering 47 yards.

Gene Gibson was the leading rusher with 95 yards and one touchdown on 30 carries for Brownwood.

Tidmore tossed two touchdown passes for Rockwall in plays covering 35 and 31 yards.

How much do you know about Texas white-tail

The real truth about the white-tailed deer in Texas...

How many kinds of deer are there in Texas?

The Texas white-tailed deer, occurs almost statewide. There were several subspecies of whitetail in the state years ago. However, due to expanding-overlapping ranges and restocking efforts in recent times, the subtle differences between subspecies have been lost except for the isolated population of Carmen Mountain white-tailed deer in the Big Bend National park area. Although found almost statewide in brushy or wooded areas, the heaviest deer populations are located in the central one-third of the state.

The mule deer is a different species which occurs primarily west of the Pecos River and in parts of the High Plains of the Texas Panhandle.

How many white-tailed deer are legally harvested by sportsmen each year?

An estimated 275,000 whitetails are harvested by sportsmen in Texas annually.

Is that too many?

No. Current harvest rates account for only about 10 percent of the herd annually. Research indicates that about 20 percent of most populations should be removed annually by sportsmen. Biologically sound harvest rates and habitat managment programs are necessary in Texas to prevent waste due to overpopulation and to achieve maximum utilization of this valuable natural resource and to insure the whitetail's continued survival.

How are deer counted?

There are several methods used.

1. The walking deer cruise line. During the fall months, wildlife biologists walk census lines which have been placed in representative deer habitat and count the deer observed. This method is used extensively in Texas, and there are several hundred such deer census lines in the state.

2. Counts from fixed-winged aircraft. This method is used in areas of the South Texas brush country. Observers count deer seen on strips of deer habitat of know width and length.

3. Track count method. Counting deer tracks on selected sites during late summer is a method frequently used in heavily wooded areas of East Texas.

4. Spotlight counts. Counting deer at night with the use of spotlights along pasture roads or lightly traveled public roads is a method biologist have recently put into use.

What do deer eat?

Deer eat mostly browse (leaves, twigs, young shoots of woody plants and vines) and forbs (weeds and other broadleafed flowering plants). They eat some grass but only when its is green and succulent.

How long do deer live?

Deer in controlled situations have been known to live 15 to 20 years. It is unusual, however, for a deer in the wild to live more than 10 years because its teeth usually wear out during the eighth or ninth year.

How can the age of a deer be determined and is the number of antler points one method?

Deer age is determined by tooth replacement and tooth wear of the premolars and molars. Unlike sheep, deer cannot be aged by their front teeth, and age cannot be determined by antler characteristics.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Medication won't help if patient won't take it

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother has arthritis. In the morning it is so bad she can hardly get out of bed. She went to a doctor some time ago and he gave her some pills. Sometimes she takes them; most of the time she doesn't. I've tried to get her to go back to the doctor, but she says it would be a waste of time — that no one can do anything for arthritis. I know that's not so, but I wonder if you would write something about it so that I could have something to show her. — Clara.

Dear Clara: There are varying degrees of arthritis and various approaches to its treatment. But one thing you can be certain of is that medication that is not used, or is used only occasionally, will not do any good.

As for your specific question, a comment by Dr. Andrew R. Klipper, chief of rheumatology at St. Joseph Hospital, Baltimore, should be of interest. He says that almost all patients with arthritis can be helped to have their pain relieved. Those with mild disease may respond to rest, exercise, heat and general supportive measures; for others, there are a variety of painkillers, including aspirin, acetaminophen and nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs, among others.

Relief of pain may not be possible in all patients with arthritis, but your mother certainly can't know how she would respond to treatment until she gives it a try.

Dear Dr. Solomon: An uncle of mine is receiving lithium treatment because he was depressed. Since he has been taking the drug, he has developed a mild case of acne, the kind you usually see in an adolescent. The lithium has helped his emotional condition a great deal, but I'm wondering if it will have to be discontinued because of his skin condition. — Herbert

Dear Herbert: Skin complications are not unusual in a patient who is taking lithium. However, Dr. George L. Bakris and his colleagues at the Chicago Medical School say that the drug's effectiveness usually outweighs any of these side effects. Unless the condition you describe becomes more serious than you suggest is the case, the lithium will probably not have to be discontinued.

Catfish yield increases

WASHINGTON (AP) — The production of farm-grown catfish in October totaled 5.15 million pounds, measured on the basis of live weight, up 20 percent from the same month last year, the Agriculture Department says.

Production through the first 10 months of this year was reported by processors at 49.9 million pounds, up 27 percent from 39.3 million in the same period of 1980, according to the department's latest catfish report.

Imports of freshwater catfish, mostly from Brazil, totaled 569,000 pounds in September, the most recent month for those figures. That was down 60 percent from 1.4 million pounds imported in September 1980.

A year later, Lennon's death still touches many

By RICK HAMPSON
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Steve Spiro drives his police cruiser past the dark arched gateway to the Dakota apartments off Central Park and tries not to think of the night a year ago when John Lennon died.

He sees the fans who come to the gate with flowers and notes for Lennon's wife, Yoko Ono, toys for his son, Sean, and cameras to record their visits.

"The Beatle years were very happy for me," says Spiro, 35. "I was young and single, running around ... being free."

Those were the years of sit-ins and love-ins; a time of four young men from Liverpool who looked like Prince Valiant and wound up playing like Sgt. Pepper.

But as he passes the Dakota, Spiro, the first officer on the scene that night of Dec. 8, 1980, tries to forget the sight seared in his memory: the hero of his youth in a crumpled heap, bleeding to death.

"Now, I don't even want to look at the Dakota," he says. "I see it and think how John had just released that single, 'Starting Over.' I'd thought, 'Wow, great, he's making a comeback!' That's what really hurts."

A year later, the ex-Beatle's death still touches his family and fans, as well as some whose lives became entangled in Lennon's death last December: the photographer, the newsman, the gun dealer, the gun control activist.

And the killer.

Mark David Chapman, who waited to get John Lennon's autograph on an album that night, only to return and kill the rock legend whose name he sometimes used, today works as a porter at the Attica state prison in western New York.

He cleans up after other inmates.

Chapman is serving a 20-year-to-life sentence for Lennon's murder. His lawyer wanted him to plead innocent by reason of insanity. But God, says Chapman, told him to plead guilty.

A defense psychiatric report portrayed Chapman as a schizoid, tragically out of touch and out of control, who had created a childhood kingdom of imaginary subjects and come to believe John Lennon had taken over his personality.

"A wacko? Not in my book, and I've dealt with plenty of them," says Spiro.

"He wasn't talking to walls or hearing voices. When we got to the station he called his wife, told her to get a doctor for his mother, to call the cops for protection, to not call the press in.

"I couldn't believe the guy was acting so rational."

Alan Weiss is reminded of that night by the occasional pain in his left leg and the dent in his motorcycle helmet, the result of a collision with a taxi in Central Park that fateful evening.

Weiss was lying in the emergency room of Roosevelt Hospital when police burst in, and someone said John Lennon had been shot. Suddenly, Weiss had a coup in the midst of tragedy.

Weiss is a news producer for WABC-TV. Despite his injuries, he staggered to a telephone. Minutes later, Howard Cosell interrupted a nationally televised Monday night football game to break the news: John Lennon was dead.

Paul Goresh, a 21-year-old store detective and amateur photographer, got the news on the phone.

Earlier that day Goresh had been waiting with his camera when Lennon emerged from the Dakota and signed his final autograph on a copy of a "Double Fantasy" album — for Mark David Chapman.

Goresh's picture of murderer and victim was to earn him several hundred thousand dollars — and a new career. He gave up plans to become a police officer to be a photographer.

"I was forced into it," he smiles. "People like the Beach Boys just started calling me to do assignments."

But he adds, "I honestly would give all of this back to have John here. ... It would have been better than taking a picture of some idiot who ..."

His voice breaks off in frustration and disgust.

Today, Chapman is fighting to regain the album Lennon signed for him before Paul Goresh's camera. Police returned it to Phillip Michael, the passer-by who found it and gave it to investigators.

Chapman and his lawyer, Jonathan Marks, say it should be sold and the proceeds donated to a worthy cause such as gun control.

The Sunday after John Lennon's death, more than 50,000 people gathered in Central Park for a vigil in his memory. Among them was an angry Bob Schulte, preaching gun control and handing out pamphlets.

Some people listened. The membership of Handgun Control Inc. has doubled since Lennon's death, according to spokeswoman Amy Apperson.

"We were inundated with calls," she said. "Never before this year has as much awareness been mobilized."

Two states have enacted significant gun control measures since the shooting — Connecticut, which acted after President Reagan was shot, and Hawaii, where Chapman bought the Charter Arms .38-caliber revolver he used to kill Lennon.

Today, the shop where Chapman bought the weapon is out of business. The state's new gun registration law cut sales in half, says owner Steve Grahovac, who received hate mail from all over the world as a result of Lennon's murder — even though the sale was legal.

"When someone gets beat to death with a baseball bat, no one asks where the killer bought the bat," complained his wife, Jackie.

Like Bob Schulte, 18-year-old Suzanne Stephens of Lake Ronkonkoma, N.Y., bowed her head in Lennon's memory on the Sunday after his death. The gesture cost the student her job as a check-out clerk after she refused to work for 10 minutes during a worldwide silent vigil.

Now she is working as a hairdresser. "I never got my job back, but things have been going well. I wasn't scarred by the experience," she says.

"I didn't apologize. I wouldn't apologize for something I had to do. I'm proud that I stood up for what I believed. No one can tell you when you can pray.'

Today, there are permanent memorials to John Lennon. Three acres of Central Park near the Dakota were named "Strawberry Fields," after one of his songs. A 7-foot, three-ton bronze of Lennon stands in front of Los Angeles City Hall. Streets in Liverpool, England, have been named after the Beatles.

Books are planned, including a history of John and Yoko produced by Rolling Stone magazine and edited by Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis.

But Lennon's music remains his greatest monument.

"Double Fantasy" shot from No. 12 to No. 1 on Billboard's charts after his death, remained there for eight weeks and became one of the year's three best-selling records. Seven albums by the Beatles jumped back into the magazine's Top 200, and some stayed well into spring.

Yoko Ono still lives in the Dakota with 6-year-old Sean. She has turned to work for solace, releasing one record album, a single and a video recording about her relationship with John.

John's shattered spectacles were on the cover of her album, "Season of Glass." One song was prefaced by gun shots, while another is introduced by Sean saying, "I learned this from my daddy, you know."

She consoles herself with the thought that "John left to become the Great Force...We're still a duet. He's doing what he can upstairs. And I'm doing what I can down here."

But she still feels his absence, she told Rolling Stone. "Whenever I had a new song, I would be so happy, I would show it to John...

"Now they don't mean a thing."

Neither does the crime, even after a year of speculation on what motivated the killer.

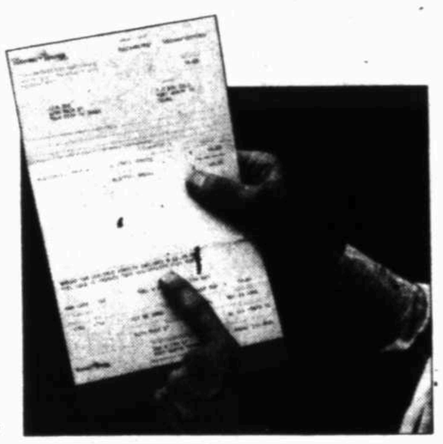
The cost of fuel. And why it affects your electric bill now more than ever.



When we say "fuel" at Texas Electric, we mean the fuel that we use to make your electricity—primarily natural gas and lignite coal.

The cost of fuel is a necessary part of the cost of making electricity. Next year all the fuels we use will cost more, especially natural gas. This is partly because an old contract for low-cost natural gas expires at the end of this year. The gas provided by that contract will have to be replaced with gas selling at the "going rate," which is about 15 times as much as we now pay under the contract.

We buy all our fuels at the lowest price available.* We charge our customers exactly what we have to pay for fuel. And we show the amount for "fuel" on your bill each month.

If you'd like more information about the fuels it takes to make your electricity, give us a call. At Texas Electric, we want you to understand what you're paying for.

*With completion of our Comanche Peak plant, the use of nuclear fuel will help hold down the increasing cost of our fuels.

New law would send sex offenders to prison

By JOHN HOWARD
Associated Press Writer

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Spurred by a surge of anti-crime sentiment and a spate of mental patient escapes, California legislators have scrapped a decades-old program under which some mentally disturbed sex offenders were sent to hospitals instead of prison.

"We have been able to adjust to other situations, and we'll adjust to this," said David Hamilton, a spokesman for Atascadero State Hospital, one of two hospitals that received offenders under the old program. "But our main hospital population is going to diminish."

The traditional program, launched in the 1930s, presumed that mentally ill sex criminals required medical treatment rather than incarceration. It allowed courts to send people designated as Mentally Disordered Sex Offenders to Atascadero or Patton State Hospital near San Bernardino.

If the hospitals determined that a patient's treatment was successful, the inmate could be released — through a program which includes out-patient care.

The new law, which takes effect Jan. 1, would force virtually all MDSOs to go to prison. It was spearheaded by Omer Rains, a tough-on-crime state senator from Ventura who is running for state attorney general in 1982. The measure was backed firmly by the Legislature and Gov. Edmund Brown Jr.

The law goes into effect amid fears that sex offenders have been released to society too soon.

It also comes in the wake of the resignation of Al M. Loeb, 62, chief of the state Mental Health Department, who said last week he was quitting, reportedly because of differences with B.T. Collins, the governor's flamboyant chief of staff.

Loeb said he had failed in his first priority when he took over the department a year ago — increasing security at Patton, where 477 patients have escaped in the past six years.

During 1980, 86 patients escaped from Patton, while through October of this year 41 persons had escaped. All had been placed there by court order.

At Atascadero, the state's maximum-security facility, only three have escaped in eight years.

In two recent incidents, a sex offender escaped while on a "therapeutic" outing at a San Bernardino department store, and another fled during a visit to a medical clinic. Later, three Patton patients, described as dangerous by authorities, escaped from the hospital using a key and wirecutters.

But the incident which focused most attention on the MDSO program was the torture-murder of a 2½-year-old Camarillo girl by Theodore Frank, an Atascadero patient who admitted molesting between 100 and 150 children. Frank, who was convicted of the slaying in 1978 and sentenced to death, killed the child just six weeks after his release from Atascadero. He remains on San Quentin's death row.

Under the new law, at the end of the third year of the sentence, the inmate would have the option of volunteering for hospitalization and, if accepted by the hospitals, would leave prison and begin medical treatment.

The net result of the law, said Hamilton, will be to keep sex offenders off the streets longer than they are now.

"The conservative mood is that everybody should have to do hard time," said Brent Barnhart, an American Civil Liberties Union spokesman. "The actual treatment at MDSO facilities for a lot of people was not treatment at all."

"We favor these people having determinate sentences," said Steve White, a spokesman for the California District Attorney's Association. "As long as we remove these people completely from society, we don't much care whether they are at Atascadero or at San Quentin."

Phil Guthrie, associate director of the state prison system, says the shift of mentally unbalanced sex criminals to the prisons will add about 900 inmates annually to California's already crowded facilities.

He said it costs taxpayers "about $13,000 a year," to keep a person in prison, or about $11.7 million for the 900 prisoners. The MDSO program costs about $32,000 annually per inmate.

Wouldn't it be nice to stay this close all year around?

Christmas is a time that brings families and friends closer together. And with Southwestern Bell Gift Certificates, everyone can stay close all year around.

A Bell Gift Certificate book costs only $20 and contains four $5 certificates payable toward Long Distance calls. Bell Gift Certificates are also available in $25 and $100 denominations. And, they're accepted by every phone company across the country.

Bell Gift Certificates are an even better value when you dial One-Plus without operator assistance on out-of-state calls. Just call weeknights between 11pm and 8am or between 11pm Friday and 5pm Sunday and you'll save 60%.

So call your nearest Southwestern Bell Business Office or drop by the PhoneCenter Store near you and pick up some Bell Gift Certificates for your family and friends. They'll keep everyone a little closer next year.

John Denver speaks up for world's starving

With BOB TIEUEL

World Hunger and the Color Line: A recent grant of $30 million worth of food staples to Poland to help ease severe shortages in the strike-plagued nation brings the total value of U.S. food aid to Poland over the last year to $82 million, according to White House reports. The food, consisting of flour, grain products, milk and oil, will be donated under the Food for Peace program through CARE and the Catholic Relief Services over the next six months. The grant was made in the name of "humanitarian concern of this nation for the well being of the people of Poland." We ask here what is our concern for the starving people (millions) of Africa, Asia, South America and many other parts of our world?

The world has the resources to end world hunger, but only when the people of all nations realize they have a common obligation will starvation end believes John Denver, who spoke recently before an Interfaith Conference on Hunger in Dallas. The popular folk singer said, "There is a notion today that life is a you or me thing. We have forgotten we are all human beings. People are the same everywhere. Everyone exists in one world — which we are managing pretty horribly."

He added that more than $300 billion was spent in the world last year for military and during the same time approximately 12 million children of the world died from starvation.

WORD RECEIVED here recently is that West Texas and Southeastern New Mexico will have an edition of The Digest, a black-owned and operated weekly now published in Lubbock. Churches and fraternal, as well as civic and social groups, have been asked to contact this correspondent for more information at P.O. Box 535, Pecos 79772.

ANOTHER FIRST: Pam Johnson became the first black woman publisher of an American daily newspaper when the Gannett Co., Inc., announced her appointment as publisher of the Ithaca Journal. She holds a doctorate in journalism and educational psychology from the University of Wisconsin. She has worked as a reporter on the Chicago Tribune and for CBS News, done public relations for the University of Wisconsin and Norfolk State. The Ithaca Journal is an afternoon paper with 20,000 circulation.

ACCORDING TO Bayard Rustin, Haiti is a dictatorship in which the government controlled militia has suppressed all forms of free political expressions, has restricted the fundamental freedoms of the press and assembly, and has engaged in murder, execution, imprisonment without trial, exile and torture. The line between those fleeing that country for political reasons as opposed to those fleeing for economic reasons is fine indeed, Rustin states. He adds that the present administration's efforts to deal with the influx of Haitians have been deplorable.

The American Jewish Committee, the National Council of Churches, the Catholic Diocese of Miami, the National Urban League and the platform committee of the Florida Democratic Party have called upon President Reagan to grant political refugee status to the Haitian boat people.

Dr. W. C. Stewart is an outstanding physician in Odessa and has been active in the total community life of the city, where he has spent many years in service to others. His father was the late Bishop Stewart of the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church (Mother Stewart now makes her home in Odessa) and often he made quick calls to Odessa to chat with his son on the problems and the future of the Black Methodist Church. The other day when we called on Dr. Stewart for a brief interview, he said that the greatest need of the Black Methodist Church was to elect leaders (bishops and general officers) who had compassion and love for people who had endured so much for so long. "Let's confess, that we need born-again men to lead up in this hour of world turmoil and strain," the physician added. We had to agree. It is later than we think, too!

CONSUMER TIPS

Shop for credit as well as presents at Christmas time

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, Inc.

At Christmas, many of us decide to give our loved ones the gift that tells them they are special, whether it is a mink coat, stereo or a diamond necklace. Since Christmas purchases are rarely planned, credit is frequently used to delay the payments. If you must use credit, it is just as important to shop for the best credit terms as for the gift for that special person.

Depending on the purchase, you first need to decide whether to pay for the item with a revolving (open-end) charge account or an installment (closed-end) payment plan. The type you choose will determine how much you will pay in finance charges.

Revolving charge accounts (including bank cards such as Visa and Mastercard) allow you to make repeated purchases up to a set limit, which is established by the creditor when the account is opened. Retail creditors are not able to state dollar finance charges in advance for this type of credit. Since charges are computed on the unpaid balance, they will depend on how much credit is used and how quickly it is repaid. However, retailers must state the applicable periodic rate used in calculating the charge and the annual percentage rate. Charges computed at 1½ or 2 percent monthly amount to 18 or 24 percent when stated as an annual percentage rate.

How a retailer defines the unpaid balance is a major factor in determining how much interest you will pay. Some creditors determine the finance charge by applying a monthly rate to the opening unpaid balance (the most expensive method). Others apply the monthly rates to the average daily balance. Or creditors may apply the rate to the opening balance minus any payments that are made during the month (the least expensive method). By knowing the annual percentage rate and the definition of the unpaid balance, which must be stated in the contract, you will be able to determine which stores require the least amount of interest to be paid.

Mitch Decker, Visa manager with The Midland National Bank, states that, during the rush of buying gifts, many people do not keep track of the amount they have charged. They are then embarrassed when the store discovers that they have reached their limit and will not allow the purchase to be charged. To keep this from happening to you Decker suggests you keep a ledger which includes all purchases and payments made on each charge account.

Installment purchases usually involve a written agreement for each credit purchase. A down payment or trade-in may be required, with the balance to be repaid in equal installments over a period of time. Generally, the seller holds title to the merchandise until payments are completed. Finance charges vary according to the amount financed, the length of repayment period, and the item serving as collateral. Charges typically range from 12 to 36 percent when stated as an annual percentage rate.

You may be spending more in interest than needed if revolving charge accounts are all you use. If the gift is moderately expensive it may be worthwhile to shop for the best credit terms. By borrowing cash from a bank or credit union you may receive better interest rates. Using your saving account as collateral is a relatively inexpensive way to borrow money.

Before you hand over your credit card, think about the future bills and whether you could pay less by using an installment payment plan. For more information on credit write for the pamphlet "Tips on Consumer Credit," BBB Permian Basin, P.O. Box 6006, Midland 79701.

London tour of 'Pirates' canceled

LONDON (AP) — The successful Broadway version of "The Pirates of Penzance" may unwittingly scuttle the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company, which launched Gilbert and Sullivan's famous operettas 106 years ago.

Deputy general manager Peter Riley says next year's American tour almost certainly will be canceled — an action likely to be the last cutlass swipe at D'Oyly Carte.

Cast members say D'Oyly Carte trustees will call off the tour Monday for fear the troupe will lose even more money by not being able to compete with the highly successful updated version of "Pirates" on Broadway.

"I will be very surprised if any other decision but closure comes out of the meeting," Company Manager Gordon MacKenzie said in an interview Saturday at London's Adelphi Theater, where the troupe was putting on "Pirates."

D'Oyly Carte, which was reported losing $9,200 a week early in the year, was saved for another season in September when it received an extra $179,000 for use of its name for five television productions.

MacKenzie blamed the current situation on Britain's Arts Council, which earlier this year refused to help finance D'Oyly Carte, dismissing its performances as "wooden and tired."

"They misunderstood the group," he said of the council members. "We are the custodians of Gilbert and Sullivan, our founders brought the two of them together.

"We are a tradition, like Shakespeare, and we believe the majority of Gilbert and Sullivan fans like the way we operate."

For the first time ever, the group's 83 members have been given contracts of six months instead of one year.

POINT AND ORIGINATION FEES

In today's volatile mortgage market, manylenders are charging "points" and "origination fees' on top of their stated interest rates. These are one-time charges that (in the case of points) are deducted from your mortgage or (in the case of an origination fee) you must pay at the closing. Each point equals 1% of the loan, so one point would come to $500 on a $50,000 mortgage.

Each point z(or 1% origination fee) is equivalent, when spread over the life of a morgage, to about 1/8% of additional interest (if you hold onto your morgage for about 15 years). This is important to keep in mind when shopping for the best interest rate. One bank may charge 12% interest plus a 3% originated fee - for a total effective rate of about 12-3/8%. Another may charge 12 1/4% with no origination fee - a better over-all deal.

Spock to be rubbed out in latest Star Trek flick

By RIP RENSE
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Nicholas Meyer, a few inches taller than Napoleon, is fairly bathed in crescendos as he lights up an 8-inch Macanudo cigar.

He came to Los Angeles from New York about 10 years ago when he was 25 and unknown. He always wanted to direct movies. He is now 36 and he directs movies.

He did a few other things along the way, like writing two novels featuring Sherlock Holmes, "The Seven Percent Solution" and "The West End Horror" and the just-published novel, "Confessions of a Homing Pigeon." He wrote and directed a movie about H. G. Wells and Jack the Ripper in modern San Francisco called "Time After Time."

Today, Nick Meyer is directing "Star Trek II: The Undiscovered Country," the sequel to "Star Trek," in which, rumor has it, Mr. Spock meets Mr. Maker.

The fate of the pointy-eared one is a subject upon which Meyer is not exactly effusive:

"I won't tackle it," he says.

What he will tackle, as far as "Star Trek" goes, are the flaws and charms of the old series and the first movie, how he is changing the second one, why he took the job, and the issue of "Trekkies" — the people who are threatening to not see "Star Trek II" as often as they saw "Star Trek" (many went between 25 and 50 times) if Mr. Spock is vulcanized.

"I will respond obliquely to a number of points," says Meyer. "One is we are not making this movie for Trekkies."

Bold statement, considering that the loose-knit group of Trekkies has placed ads in various movie-industry trade papers threatening to boycott the film if executive producer Harve Bennett's script calls for Spock to be rubbed out.

No matter, says Meyer.

"We are making this movie for everybody. Whatever happens in the movie is not being done for any other reason as far as I'm concerned than to make a good film; a film that a person who knows nothing about 'Star Trek' can come off the street and be involved in and moved by."

All of this sounds fine, and probably would be fine with most Trekkies — as long as Mr. Spock is left intact. What supposedly happens to him, as was reported in the Wall Street Journal, is this:

Trevor (Mike Naughton), left, takes a brief rest much to the consternation of the bed's occupant, Nick (Jerry Watson), as Nick's wife and Trevor's ex-girl friend, Jan (Connie Powell), attempts to restore order in this scene from Midland Community Theatre's current production of Alan Ayckbourn's "Bedroom Farce." Performances are today at 2:30 p.m., Thursday at 7:30 p.m. and Friday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. in Theatre I, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Marital problems basis for play 'Bedroom Farce'

"Feed him properly. Make sure he has clean clothes in the morning and most important of all, never tell him anything you don't have to," Delia confided to Susannah, her daughter-in-law.

At that point, Susannah appears most desperate; however, it's hard to tell because she's basically a desperate, crisis-causing person. In this case, like attracts like for she and Trevor have much in common.

Susannah and Trevor's marriage is the subject of much controversy, mostly caused by the twosome's inability to keep friends and relatives out of its marital difficulties in Midland Community Theatre's current production of Alan Ayckbourn's comedy "Bedroom Farce."

Of course, if they had there would be no comedy because their problems and the unusual situations that arise as a result of them are the basis of the play's humor.

The title is most appropriate.

The entire plays takes place in three bedrooms, none of which belong to Susannah and Trevor.

ENTERTAINMENT

Considering some of the problems they are facing, it would be difficult to suggest a more suitable setting.

Farce is certainly a proper word choice. Webster's definition — "A play marked by slapstick humor and wild improbabilities of plot" — is certainly right on target.

The local cast includes John Phillips as Ernest, Trevor's father; Enid Phillips as Delia; Jerry Watson as Nick, husband of Trevor's ex-girl friend; Connie Powell as Nick's wife; Bill Salt as Malcolm, Trevor's friend, or perhaps almost ex-friend is closer to the truth; Linda Kester as Malcolm's wife Kate; Mike Naughton as the notorious Trevor; and Julie Dulin as his confused, as well as confusing, wife Susannah.

All do an admirable job in their respective roles. John Phillips is as charming and convincing as he always is, and his wife, Enid Phillips, also turns in a venerable performance. The two have been married 29 years.

Watson is a convincing grouch as is Ms. Powell in her role of do-gooder whose efforts further confound the situation.

Salt is perhaps the most relaxed in his role. He does a fine job of portraying the imposed-upon friend. Miss Kester, as his wife, aptly portrays the person who can't say no and doesn't want to offend.

Both Naughton and Miss Dulin are new to the MCT stage. I hope they both will be back.

The play is directed by Ted Strickland, MCT's assistant director, who also designed the show. Mary Lou Cassidy is the stage manager.

The set was nicely done.

With the exception of "A Christmas Carol," which will be presented Dec. 17th through 20th, "Bedroom Farce" is MCT's closing production of the 1981 season. Those attending Thursday night would certainly agree that the season closed with laughter.

Local artists to perform

Midlanders Jane Huddleston, Linda Lassiter and Gloria Steelman will be featured in two area Christmas recitals Sunday. The first one is at 1:30 p.m. in First Presbyterian Church in Odessa, with the second performance at 7 p.m. at St. Mary's Episcopal Church in Big Spring.

Ms. Huddleston will perform four vocal solos including "Sweet Little Jesus Boy" and "Gesu Bambino," with accompaniment by Ms. Steelman on the flute and violin. Ms. Lassiter will perform solo organ works based on Christmas melodies from the baroque, romantic and contemporary periods.

Odessa's First Presbyterian Church's two handbell choirs, the Jubilate Deo Ringers and the Carillon choir, will also be featured in the performances. Both choirs are directed by Ms. Lassiter. Ms. Huddleston is the minister of music at First Presbyterian in Odessa.

The public is invited to attend these free concerts.

Handbell Festival is today

The second annual Midland Christmas Handbell Festival will be held at 3 p.m. today in the fellowship hall at First Presbyterian church, 800 W. Texas Ave.

Over 100 handbell ringers, directed by Donald E. Allured of Westminister Choir School in Princeton, N.J., will be participating in the performance. Tom Roberts is the festival chairman.

The public is invited to attend this free Christmas concert.

Israeli character depends on whom you have in mind

By DAN SULLIVAN
Los Angeles Times

TEL AVIV, Israel — "And how do you like Israel?" We Americans also ask foreign visitors their impressions of our country, but the question seems to have a sharper edge here. It's not that Israel needs to be liked. But it wants a definite opinion.

I like the upfrontness. Take the word that every tourist knows going in — "Shalom." As the guidebooks say, it means either hello or goodby, depending on which end of the conversation it's used. But no "hello" carries the punch of a well-placed "Shalom." An old man walks into a flower shop. "Shalom!" I am here. This is an event. Do you sell carnations?

Some people find Israelis abrasive. "Abrupt" might apply, especially to the younger people, members of the Israeli-born Sabra generation. We stopped on the road to the beautiful old Roman theater in Caesarea to pick up a young woman in khaki who was hitchhiking to her kibbutz. "Were you born on the kibbutz?" "Of course." End of small talk.

Then there was Michael, who had come to Israel eight years ago from Russia, and was finally starting o make a name for himself in Israeli theater, albeit children's theater. I asked him why the children's theater people in Israel didn't organize. "Organize?" he said, all gloom. "But we are Jews."

So the Israeli character depends on whom you have in mind. But a directness does prevail. Of course this is an airmail stamp, says the man behind the counter. (Would I deal in anything less?) No, you can't possibly get to Jerusalem by dusk, says the woman in the information kiosk. (And only a fool would try.) It's a bit like staying at your cousin's.

Well, they are under pressure. A bus I was on in Tel Aviv stopped for one minute, then two minutes, then five. Someone had left a handbag on a roadside bench up ahead, and the soldiers were coming to see if it was a bomb. It wasn't and the bus moved ahead. No problem. But Israelis never forget the presence of their enemies.

They still have a good time. Dizengoff Avenue, the main drag in Tel Aviv, is rife with felafel stands and sidewalk cafes. Everybody's out on Saturday night after the Sabbath lifts — it's almost a street carnival. And a single woman can walk home to her apartment at 11 p.m. without looking over her shoulder. In this, it's a more peaceful city than Los Angeles.

Tel Aviv, graceless and blocky, takes a lot of abuse from that spoiled princess, Jerusalem. "The nicest sight in Tel Aviv is the road to Jerusalem," people say. It starts out as an ordinary highway, but as the bus starts climbing past the rusted-out shells of military vehicles on the highlands outside Jerusalem, you realize what the cost of this road has been and why it seem lovely to Israelis.

Jerusalem's heart is the Old City. It is a maze of merchant-crammed alleys winding around some of the most sacred precincts of Judaism, Christianity and Islam, and it is all one tapestry, clamorous even on a dull November day with rain in the air. "Hey, mister!" called a man with some copper to sell. When I didn't stop, he got indignant. "Hey, mister! I am talking at you!"

Caesarea and the Roman ruins were another mood. King Herod had built his theater facing the sea, and the sand had covered it for 2,000 years. We climbed around the sunny stone seats testing the auditorium's acoustics (excellent) and then had lunch on the terrace of an old Crusader fort.

As we left, clouds had started to veil the sun and the light was falling on the sea in shafts. The effect suggested paintings of the Ascension, the Assumption. This is where all that happened — whatever it was.

Famous opera stars sing at celebration

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Tenor Carlo Bergonzi, one of the historical line of truly superlative opera singers — and still singing beautifully — was the focus of a 25th anniversary celebration Friday night at the Metropolitan Opera.

Bergonzi sang Germont in acts two and three of "La Traviata" and Cavaradossi in act three of "Tosca." Between those, fellow Italian tenor Luciano Pavarotti sang Riccardo in act two of "A Masked Ball."

The audience burst into applause at Bergonzi's entrance in "Traviata." He finally stepped forward and spread his arms wide to receive the applause. Then, when he stepped back to the rear of the room to begin his first aria in his accustomed place, there was a bit of friendly laughter.

Pavarotti, his silver-topped voice in superior shape, received a lot of applause after his act three "Masked Ball" aria which followed the staging of the opera's act two.

But the most applause of all came for Bergonzi's big "Tosca" aria, taken very slowly and savored by Bergonzi for all its melody, heartbreak and drama. Bergonzi's voice sounded clean and clear, with sweetness and tenderness where called for, all evening. He always sounded as though he had plenty of voice in reserve, never sounded pushed or tired.

It was Bergonzi's only Met appearance this season. Last season he sang in "A Masked Ball" and next season he is scheduled for that opera and "La Forza del Destino." The tenor, who is from Vidalenzo, Italy, made his Met debut Nov. 13, 1956, as Radames in "Aida." Of his 246 performances at the Met since, the most — 48 — have been as Radames.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Award-winning actress Ellen Burstyn and comedic actor Ted Knight (TV's "Too Close for Comfort") share this birthday with you, as does Cincinnati Reds all-star catcher Johnny Bench. Also born on this date: the late folk-rock composer and singer Harry Chapin. The business outlook is greatly improved and you can now get your career goals into much clearer focus. As financial pressures lessen, you are able to invest in some items that will make your home even more comfortable than it already is. Romance takes on a new kind of importance for singles. Married couples develop stronger bonds.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do not intervene in a matter that loved one wants to handle alone. Be supportive, but not overly solicitous. Romance may be confusing for a time, but the outcome will be favorable.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The business outlook improves. However, you may not receive your share of the increased profits for several weeks. Be prepared for many changes after the end of the year.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may have to pool your resources with someone else's to gain the information you seek. Do not hide your feelings from loved one. Subterfuge will only delay an important decision.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your access to "inside information" will give you an edge over the competition. A longstanding problem related to debts can be resolved. Funds are available from unexpected sources.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Smile at the petty tactics of someone who tries to complicate your life. Follow through on your hunches. Someone who questions your motives may actually be seeking friendship.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Play a waiting game if you are to emerge the victor! Make your inquiries in subtle ways. Friendship, ambition are in the spotlight. Someone who makes big promises may be misinformed.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): What looked like a losing cause can be revived by the cooperation of people in distant places. A break with tradition may be necessary. The end results will be well worth it!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Timing is the key to your success. Ignore office gossip. Financial picture brightens. Give full play to your intellectual curiosity. Quiet meditation will help you find the right answers.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A good day for putting the finishing touches on a business agreement. Use your imagination and you will emerge this week's big winner! You know best what the priorities should be now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Now is the time to resume operations that were previously suspended. Try a fresh approach and influential individual will be receptive. Romance needs more time to develop on its own.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): If you can, take some time off today. Speculation is not the right way to resolve a financial problem. Rely on your intuition. It proves to be right on target.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be sure to avoid going over your boss' head. Do not let jealousy leave you with the wrong impression.

Geophysical Engineers

Our newest, fastest-growing division is searching for more exploration talent.

Here is a chance to make optimum use of your experience in seismic data acquisition quality control and instrumentation. ARCO Exploration Company—a recently formed operating unit of Atlantic Richfield—offers a sense of shared mission that will amply repay your ability and willingness to travel.

You'll be spending approximately half of your time with geophysical crews operating under contract to Atlantic Richfield. When not on field assignment, you'll be based at our Exploration and Production Research Center in Plano, Texas—a hassle-free suburb of Dallas.

Your qualifications should include familiarity with either land or marine seismic data-gathering field techniques and equipment, and BS in Geophysics, EE, EETor equivalent discipline. Although we prefer geophysical experience, we will consider other closely appropriate experience.

We offer excellent salaries, comprehensive benefits including liberal relocation policy, and fine career prospects in a vigorously expanding company. For prompt, confidential consideration, send resume and salary history to: S.K. McGregor, Plano Research Center, Plano Employee Relations, ARCO Exploration Company, P.O. Box 2819, Dallas, Texas 75221.

19 Business Opportunities

THE CHANCE TO OWN YOUR OWN BUSINESS IN 1982 JUST GOT BETTER.

Aero Mayflower became one of the largest companies in the moving business by working with independent owner/operators. It goes like this. We get the moves. You carry them out and we split the profits. Your share is at least 56% ($560 out of every $1,000). You will be your own boss with all of the freedom that goes with it.

Here's what it takes to qualify:

1. Must be 21 or over.
2. Able to attend our training program (if you need it.) By the way, there is no charge for the training, unless you voluntarily withdraw.
3. The ability to purchase, or lease (if available,) a tractor. Plan on a minimum investment of $4,500 and up. We'll help you find a tractor.
4. We'd like to tell you more. Call 1-800-428-1220 (in INDIANA Call 1-800-382-1212) between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Eastern Standard Time.
5. You should have an independent spirit and enjoy traveling.

Let's go places together in 1982.
We still have openings in our January and February training classes. (Remember, no charge.) Call us. There's no obligation.

FRESH CHRISTMAS TREES AND WREATHS SHIPPED DIRECT FROM THE VIRGINIA PLANTATION

You can have (or send to your friends) a Christmas Tree so fresh that it carresses your face with its soft foliage. The fresh needles will stay on the tree. We have shipped trees and wreaths to Texas friends for years.

The tree will be a groomed white pine just under six feet tall. It will be cut, wrapped in a net sleeve to protect it and shipped by UPS on the date you specify. The beautiful wreaths are pine, with cones and a big red bow--approximately 19" in diameter.

Delivered prices: Trees $29.95 Wreaths $17.50

4309 CRENSHAW

This beautiful home is one of the most popular Ramcon models. When you see it you'll know why. One of the largest living areas you'll find in a home this size is accented with stained ash paneling and an all-brick, wood-burning fireplace. The master suite is sequestered and has it's own bath and dressing area along with a walk-in closet. Come see the rest for yourself this weekend.

Fabulous Holiday Desserts

Something special – that's what we want for the holidays! Desserts that are elegant, festive, luscious to eat. Mouthwatering treats that look splendidly ambitious but are really easy to make.

That's what you'll find in these six recipes so ideally suited to holiday entertaining. They're make-ahead treats anyone can prepare—but what fabulous feasting is in store for guests!

Several of these show-stoppers feature that wonderful delicacy, light-as-air puff pastry. Now while most of us, especially around the holidays, have neither the time nor the patience to make puff pastry from scratch, it becomes wonderfully easy when frozen puff pastry sheets are used. The pastry layers in Chocolate Orange Rum Torte, for instance, are prepared simply by thawing the pastry sheets, rolling them out, trimming the corners to make rounds and baking. The filling couldn't be simpler, either, for that chocolate-peanut flavor comes from two easy-to-use ingredients – unsweetened cocoa and peanut butter chips.

There are good reasons for using cocoa in these treats. It gives the most concentrated flavor of all chocolate products (since most of the cocoa butter, which adds no taste, is removed). It's easy to use, right out of the can, with no messy pre-melting. Cocoa costs less per ounce than baking chocolate, and 4-1/2 ounces goes as far as 8 of the solid squares – a significant difference.

Peanut butter chips, too, are a wonderfully handy baking/cooking ingredient. Easy to measure, they hold their shape when baked but blend quickly and smoothly when melted with other ingredients. (And, because they're made from real peanuts, they even contribute important nutrients such as protein and niacin!)

If you're planning a dessert buffet, one or more of these impressive desserts makes an enticing display. Creamy Peanut Butter Apricot Tarts feature feather-light pastry made from frozen patty shells and a smooth, creamy peanut-flavored filling topped with glazed apricot halves. Multi-layered Chocolate Pastry Diamonds are a delectable baklava-like pastry with a rich chocolate-orange-nut filling.

The Peanut Butter and Chocolate Torte starts with tempting cocoa-cake layers, plus Peanut Butter Filling and Frosting. There's more chocolate-peanut flavor in the super-creamy Peanut Butter Chip Marble Cheesecake.

And for sheer drama, nothing beats the Chocolate Cream Pastry Square. This elegant dessert is surprisingly easy to make with frozen puff pastry cut in strips, then braided to make the puffy, golden-edged shell. Bake the shell ahead of time, then add banana slices and chocolate filling – plus a festive frill of whipped cream.

LUSCIOUS TREATS that look impressive but are easy to make include (from top right, clockwise) Chocolate Orange Rum Torte, Chocolate Cream Pastry Square, Peanut Butter and Chocolate Torte, Creamy Peanut Butter Apricot Tarts, Chocolate Pastry Diamonds, and Peanut Butter Chip Marble Cheesecake.

CHOCOLATE ORANGE RUM TORTE

(Makes 10-12 servings)

- 3 sheets (1-1/2 packages) Pepperidge Farm frozen Puff Pastry
- 3 navel oranges, peeled and sliced
- 2 tablespoons light rum
- 4 3-ounce packages cream cheese, softened
- 1/4 cup butter or margarine, softened
- 1/2 cup Hershey's Cocoa
- 1-1/2 cups confectioners' sugar
- 2 tablespoons light rum
- 1 cup heavy cream, whipped
- 1 cup Reese's Peanut Butter Chips

Thaw pastry according to package directions. Roll sheets out slightly to form 10-inch squares. Trim corners to make three 10-inch circles. Place on ungreased baking sheets and prick thoroughly with a fork. Bake in preheated 400° oven 20 minutes or until golden (check after 5 minutes; prick again if necessary). Remove to wire rack to cool. Meanwhile, combine orange slices and 2 tablespoons rum; cover and refrigerate. In large mixing bowl, combine cream cheese and butter; beat until light and fluffy. Combine cocoa and confectioners' sugar; blend into creamed mixture. Add 2 tablespoons rum; beat well. Fold in whipped cream and peanut butter chips. Spread evenly on two pastry circles. Place first circle on serving plate; top with remaining chocolate-topped circles. Place plain pastry on top; chill until ready to serve. Just before serving, arrange oranges on top of torte; cut with serrated knife, using sawing motion.

CREAMY PEANUT BUTTER APRICOT TARTS

(Makes 12 servings)

- 2 packages Pepperidge Farm frozen Patty Shells
- 1 cup Reese's Peanut Butter Chips
- 1/3 cup milk
- 1-1/2 cups miniature marshmallows or 15 large marshmallows
- 1 cup heavy cream
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 1 16-ounce can apricot halves, drained
- 1/4 cup apricot preserves
- Toasted sliced almonds, optional

Bake patty shells according to package directions. In double boiler, combine peanut butter chips, milk and marshmallows. Cook, stirring constantly, over simmering water until marshmallows and chips are completely melted; cool to lukewarm. Combine cream and vanilla; whip to stiff peaks. Fold in peanut butter mixture; spoon into baked patty shells. Top each with apricot quarter. Heat apricot preserves in small saucepan until melted; drizzle preserves over apricots. Chill until ready to serve. Garnish with toasted almonds, if desired, or additional peanut butter chips.

CHOCOLATE PASTRY DIAMONDS

(Makes about 40)

- 2 packages (17-1/4 ounces each) Pepperidge Farm frozen Puff Pastry
- 1-1/2 cups chopped almonds
- 1-1/2 cups chopped pecans
- 3/4 cup sugar
- 1/2 cup Hershey's Cocoa
- 1-1/2 teaspoons grated orange peel
- 1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1/2 cup unsalted butter or margarine
- 1 cup water
- 1 cup orange juice
- 2/3 cup honey
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 1 teaspoon grated orange peel

Thaw pastry according to package directions. In medium mixer bowl, combine nuts, sugar, cocoa, orange peel and cinnamon; blend well. Roll each pastry sheet to a 15-1/2 x 10-1/2-inch rectangle. Melt butter; lightly brush bottom and sides of 15-1/2 x 10-1/2 x 1-inch baking pan with butter. Place one pastry sheet in pan; brush with butter and sprinkle with 1-1/4 cups filling. Repeat with two pastry sheets and two layers filling; top with remaining pastry sheet. Brush top with remaining butter; mark diamonds across top with sharp knife. Bake on top shelf of preheated 325°F. oven 45 minutes or until golden. Meanwhile, combine water, orange juice and honey in saucepan; heat to boiling, stirring constantly. Reduce heat and simmer 5 minutes; remove from heat and stir in vanilla and orange peel. Pour over baked pastry while still warm. Cool at room temperature several hours; cut into pre-marked diamonds to serve.

PEANUT BUTTER AND CHOCOLATE TORTE

(Makes 8-10 servings)

- 4 eggs, separated
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 1/2 cup unsifted all-purpose flour
- 1/3 cup Hershey's Cocoa
- 1/4 cup sugar
- 1/2 teaspoon baking soda
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1/3 cup water
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- Peanut Butter Filling and Frosting (recipe below)
- Chocolate curls and candied red cherries, optional

Line a 15-1/2 x 10-1/2 x 1-inch jelly roll pan with aluminum foil; generously grease foil. Set aside. In large mixer bowl, beat egg yolks 3 minutes on medium speed. Gradually add 1/2 cup sugar; continue beating 2 minutes. Combine flour, cocoa, 1/4 cup sugar, baking soda and salt; add alternately with water and vanilla on low speed just until batter is smooth. In medium mixer bowl, beat egg whites with 1 tablespoon sugar until stiff peaks form. Carefully fold into chocolate mixture. Spread batter evenly into prepared pan. Bake at 375°F. 14 to 16 minutes or until top springs back when touched lightly. Cool 10 minutes; invert onto cooling rack. Peel off foil; cool completely. Prepare Peanut Butter Filling and Frosting. Place cake on cutting board; cut crosswise into four equal rectangles 3-1/2 x 10 inches. Place one cake layer on serving platter; spread Peanut Butter Filling and Frosting on layer. Top with another layer; repeat with remaining filling and cake layers. Frost top and sides of torte; chill completely. Garnish with chocolate curls and candied red cherries, if desired.

PEANUT BUTTER FILLING AND FROSTING

- 1 cup Reese's Peanut Butter Chips
- 1/3 cup milk
- 1-1/2 cups miniature marshmallows or 15 large marshmallows
- 1 cup heavy cream
- 1/2 teaspoon vanilla

In top of double boiler over simmering water, place peanut butter chips, milk and marshmallows; stir until marshmallows and chips are completely melted (or place in glass bowl and microwave on high 1-1/2 to 2 minutes or until hot). Cool to lukewarm. Whip heavy cream until stiff; fold in vanilla and peanut butter mixture.

PEANUT BUTTER CHIP MARBLE CHEESECAKE

(Makes 12 servings)

- Crumb Crust*
- 3 packages (8 ounces each) cream cheese, softened
- 1 cup sugar
- 1 cup dairy sour cream
- 2 teaspoons vanilla
- 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 3 eggs
- 1-1/2 cups Reese's Peanut Butter Chips
- 1 tablespoon shortening
- 1/4 cup milk

Prepare Crumb Crust. In large mixer bowl, combine cream cheese, sugar, sour cream and vanilla; beat on medium speed until smooth. Add flour; blend well. Add eggs, one at a time, beating well after each addition; set aside. Melt peanut butter chips and shortening in top of double boiler over hot water. Combine peanut butter chip mixture with 2 cups reserved batter and milk; blend until smooth. Spoon vanilla and peanut butter batters alternately into crust, ending with dollops of peanut butter on top; gently swirl with spatula or knife for marbled effect. Bake at 450°F. 10 minutes; without opening oven, reduce heat to 250°F. and continue baking 30 minutes. Turn off oven; let stand in oven 30 minutes without opening door. Remove from oven; using knife, loosen cake from rim of pan. Cool completely; chill thoroughly.

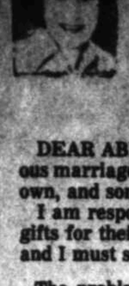
*CRUMB CRUST: Combine 1 cup graham cracker crumbs, 2 tablespoons sugar and 1/4 cup butter or margarine, melted. Press into bottom and 1/2 inch up side of 9-inch springform pan.

CHOCOLATE CREAM PASTRY SQUARE

(Makes 10-12 servings)

- 1 package (17-1/4-ounces) Pepperidge Farm frozen Puff Pastry
- 1 egg, beaten
- 1/2 cup unsalted butter or margarine, softened
- 1 cup confectioners' sugar
- 1/3 cup Hershey's Cocoa
- 2 tablespoons milk
- 2 tablespoons almond-flavored liqueur OR 1/2 teaspoon almond extract plus 2 tablespoons milk
- 2 large, ripe bananas, sliced
- 1/2 cup heavy cream
- 2 tablespoons confectioners' sugar

Thaw pastry according to package directions. Cut one piece into 12 equal strips. Braid 3 strips; repeat with remaining strips to form 4 braids. Place remaining sheet of pastry on ungreased baking sheet and prick thoroughly with a fork; brush edges with beaten egg. Place braids along edge of pastry sheet; pinch to seal at corners. Brush top of braids with egg; bake in preheated 400°F. oven 25 minutes or until golden. Remove to wire rack to cool. In small mixer bowl, cream butter until light and fluffy. Combine sugar and cocoa; add alternately with milk and almond flavoring to butter until well-blended and fluffy. Arrange sliced bananas on pastry, reserving several for garnish; top with chocolate filling. Whip cream with confectioners' sugar until stiff. Decorate chocolate filling with whipped cream and reserved banana slices.



DEAR ABBY

Thankless kids grate on her nerves

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband has five children from a previous marriage. Some of them are married with children of their own, and some live with their mother.

I am responsible for buying, wrapping and sending all the gifts for their birthdays, Christmas, etc. (He pays for them, and I must say he is not cheap.)

The problem: I am filled to the gills with his ungrateful children, who never bother calling him to say "Thank you," "Kiss my foot," or anything else. For all we know, the gifts weren't even received. I know he's hurt, but he insists on sending them presents year after year for every occasion.

Should I continue to buy for my husband's children, should I tell him to do it, or should I buy them all a book on manners? — TIRED OF IT

DEAR TIRED: I agree, your husband is foolish to continue sending gifts to ingrates, and I don't blame you for balking. But look at it this way — you are doing it for HIM, not THEM.

DEAR ABBY: I am a middle-aged woman engaged to be married in three months. My fiance has been a widower for 10 years.

I am going to move into his house after we're married, but there is something I haven't discussed with him and it's bothering me.

I do not want to sleep in the same bed that he occupied with his wife for 20 years, but I don't know how to bring the subject up, Abby.

Am I being unreasonable? If you agree with me, how do I approach him? — NO OLD MEMORIES, THANK YOU

DEAR N.O.M.: Unreasonable? No way! Come right out and tell him you want a new bedroom set. And if it would be easier to clip this column and slip it into his shirt pocket — be my guest.

DEAR ABBY: How do I handle a habitual eavesdropper who sits at the desk next to me in an office where we are both employed? Whenever she sees me talking on the telephone, or if someone comes to my desk to talk to me, Ms. Eavesdropper turns her typewriter off and listens to what I'm saying.

Eavesdropping is one thing, but she even joins in on the conversation and asks questions about whatever it is we're discussing.

I don't want to start a fight because I have to see her every day, but I would like to put an end to this. Any suggestions? — IRRITATED AND FRUSTRATED

DEAR IRRITATED: Anything less than a direct confrontation would be ineffective in dealing with one so obviously insensitive. Simply tell Ms. Eavesdropper that it's not nice to shut off her typewriter and listen in on other people's conversations. If you tell her in a friendly, helpful way, you'll probably get results. If you keep your frustration bottled up and your irritation builds, you'll probably get ulcers.

DEAR ABBY: You wisely advised "Another Churchgoer" to practice the virtue of tolerance. That caused me to recall the words of the late E.M. Forster in his "Two Cheers for Democracy":

"Tolerance is a very dull virtue. It is boring. Unlike love, it has always had a bad press. No one has ever written an ode to tolerance, or raised a statue to her, yet this is the quality which will be most needed if different races and classes are to settle down together." — ARTHUR H. PRINCE

DEAR ARTHUR: With all due respect to Mr. Forster, to me, "tolerance" has a lukewarm, passive ring to it. To "tolerate" a race or class of people suggests "putting up with them." I would prefer the word 'respect" in this instance.

(If you put off writing letters because you don't know what to say, get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send $2 plus a long, stamped (37 cents) self-addressed envelope to ABBY, Letters Booklet, 12060 Hawthorne Blvd., Suite 5000, Hawthorne, Calif. 90250.)

Beauty by choice: Beautiful hair is yours

By TRISHA YEAGER
Copley News Service

Dear Trisha: How often does our hair fall out and what causes baldness? — L.A.

Dear L.A.: The lifespan of individual hairs can vary from several months to several years, depending upon the health and care of the scalp and hair.

Humans molt slowly and continuously according to cycles of activity and rest within the follicles. Thinning or balding starts when new hairs, for one or another reason, fail to develop normally within the follicles.

Concern for the problem of balding and speculation about it goes back thousands of years. Aristotle was fairly explicit in his analysis of the matter: "No one goes bald before the time of sexual intercourse, and ... those who are naturally prone to intercourse go bald. ... Women do not go bald, because their nature is similar to that of children; both are incapable of producing seminal secretion."

Modern-day trichologists (experts in hair study) support his inferred linkage between hormones and hair loss, if not his "sexist" logic. Experts cite heredity as the chief cause of baldness. In addition, they point an accusing finger at dandruff, coffee, alcohol, cigarettes, drugs, excessive salt, and highly processed foods.

Dear Trisha: My hair is dull, boring and lifeless. Since everyone in my family has the same kind of hair, should I assume it's genetic and can't be helped? — S.S.

Dear S.S.: No. Even if you didn't get a particularly fortuitous fall of the genetic die, keep in mind that what the genes may have failed to provide, you (or your hairdresser) can. I know. My own hair was dull, dry and shapeless to start; and although I'm not known for my Rapunzel-like locks, still there's been a vast improvement.

The following methods worked for me:

1. A diet that includes lots of raw vegetables, lean meats and seafood, cold-pressed vegetable oils, cod liver oil, brewer's-type yeast, seeds, sprouts, nuts, dairy products, eggs and wheat germ.

2. Daily cleansing with mild shampoos (to which I sometimes add a vitamin E capsule), followed by keratin-containing conditioners and-or a water rinse to which a small amount of apple cider vinegar has been added. I always rinse thoroughly, turning the tap to cold for the last 10 seconds.

3. Regular scalp stimulation with a small plastic-toothed brush (sold in drug stores as a scalp massager).

4. Lots of fresh air and exercise. Early morning running, deep breathing, dancing and "upside down" exercises stimulate the scalp to produce strong, glossy and lively hair.

5. Occasional treatments with commercial or natural preparations. Mashed avocado, honey stirred into warm milk, mayonnaise, eggs, warm olive oil, aloe and various herbs (comfrey, camomile and nettles are my favorites) all benefit the hair and scalp.

6. To achieve a lively sheen I first dry and style my hair. Then I add a few drops of oil of rosemary or jojoba oil (available at health food stores) I finish by brushing vigorously for a few minutes.

7. Frequent trimming of dry, split ends. I don't think this makes the hair grow faster, but it keeps it healthy looking and full.

8. I use the following home-made products from my book, "The California Beauty Book."

Herbal Shampoo

Boil one cup water, and add one teaspoon each of these herbs: sage, nettle, maidenhair, rosemary and peach leaves. Simmer 15 minutes and add some shavings of castile soap.

Conditioning Formula for Dry Scalp and Brittle Hair:

One-half ounce each: apple cider vinegar, glycerine (from drugstore), polypeptides (beauty supply house or health store), wheat germ oil

After shampooing hair, apply conditioner and leave on 20 minutes. Rinse well.

Rinse for Blond Hair:

To one pint boiling water add several tablespoons of dried chamomile flowers, marigolds or acacia flowers. (From health food store.) Simmer, cool and strain. Apply to freshly shampooed hair.

'AT WIT'S END

Wanted: Booster shower

By ERMA BOMBECK

The other day on a talk show when I mentioned being married for 32 years, the audience gave me a standing ovation.

It was the kind of tumultuous applause usually reserved for an 85-foot redwood, Katharine Hepburn or a battleship returning to port.

It was sweet. It really was. But at my age, I don't need approval . . . I need a booster shower.

Boy, for awhile I had it all going. What with the loot from two kitchen showers, three miscellaneous, one bathroom, one personal, and my mother calling in all the IOUs . . . I figured I was set for life.

I had a toaster for each finger, blankets for three beds, enough dishes to throw a state dinner and enough gadgets to play "Stump Julia Child."

Dishtowels? It was three years before I stopped treating them as disposables. Around the third year, I chipped my egg separator and bent my cake tester, but the storehouse groaned under the necessities of life.

The year the children started doing dishes, I lost the six sets of glasses, three sets of dishes, silver setting for 16 and a coffee pot that drowned when the electrical plug was submerged in water.

The year the children went to camp, I lost four complete sets of towels, two complete sets of sheets, two pillows and a jeweled clock with two people in it dancing to "The Anniversary Waltz."

The year the children gave a carnival in the back yard, I lost a card table and four chairs, a large punch bowl with 16 cups, a colander and three pots (worn as hats in a parade), plus a popcorn popper, hibachi and all the wickets from the croquet set.

When the children went off to college, I lost our television set, 9 x 12 rug, five lamps, car, sewing machine, typewriter, bathroom heater and chess set.

When the children went to their own apartments, I lost whatever was left.

You see before you the broken remains of a storybook wedding . . . a woman who uses old shorts to dry dishes . . . who uses corn holders to tack notes on the bulletin board . . . who steals plastic spoons from fast food-stores.

Go ahead, someone. Surprise me with a booster shower. I'm free Saturday night.

Outstanding girl named

Melinda Murphy received the Outstanding Girl award from the Midland Branch of the American Association of University Women. The award was made at the monthly meeting of one of the interest groups, Les Toques Blanches (The White Hats), in the home of Mrs. Robert Davis.

Miss Murphy, a senior at Lee High School, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James P. Murphy. She maintains a grade point average of 4.297 and ranks sixth in her class of 518. She has received three academic letters and two PTA merit awards. She currently serves as social chairman of the National Honor Society.

Miss Murphy plays the flute in the Lee band, is a squad leader of the flag corps, member of the Rebelette honor squad, Senior Class president, member of the Student Council and a member of JETS.

She has attained the rank of First Class Scout, is a member of a Medical Explorer Post and serves as an advisor on the Dillard's Teen Board.

Miss Murphy attends First United Methodist Church, where she serves as an usher. She has worked as a phlebotomist at Midland Memorial Hospital. She is interested in music, backpacking, camping and traveling. She plans to major in pre-med at Texas A&M University after graduation from high school.

Melinda Murphy

The Midland Branch selects an outstanding senior girl from a local high school each month of the school year. To be eligible for the award, the girl must maintain at least a 3.5 grade point average and be actively involved in family, home, community, church and school activities. Nomination forms are available from AAUW members.

Ronnie Kinsey served as best man. Groomsmen were Roy Blanscett, brother of the bride, and Frank Copeland of Austin, brother of the bridegroom. Ushers were Ernest Blanscett and Darin Miller. Anthony Chastain was ring bearer.

The bride is a graduate of Midland High School and is employed by Texas West Oil and Gas Co. The bridegroom graduated from Gail High School and Texas State Technical Institute of Amarillo, and is employed by F.W.A. Drilling Co.

Following a wedding trip to New Mexico, the couple will live in Midland.

Lifestyle guidelines

The following are suggested guidelines for publication of stories in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday; or two days before publication in a daily paper.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within a week of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for engagement and wedding announcement stories.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Only the bride's picture will be used with both the engagement and wedding announcement.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of pictures and stories.

Easier with freezer

Copley News Service

Let your freezer assist you in preparing beforehand for holiday meals. For example, pies may be frozen — baked or unbaked — far in advance of the holidays. Then, to get a frozen baked pie ready for serving, simply heat it in a 300 F oven for about one hour.

To prepare a frozen unbaked pie for serving, bake in a preheated 400 F oven for 25 to 35 minutes until nicely browned, then lower temperature to 350 F and bake another 30 minutes.

MATTHEWS-HILL

ALBANY — Cheryl Jeanine Matthews and James Lawrence Hill, both of Midland, were married at 6 p.m. Nov. 28 in Matthews Memorial Presbyterian Church in Albany.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Echols of Albany and Mr. and Mrs. Jack C. Matthews of Kingsville. Parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Emmett T. Hill of Dallas.

The couple is residing on FM 715, Midland. She is an Eagle Computing advisor at The First National Bank. She attended Texas A&I University. The bridegroom, who attended Texas Tech University, is employed by Harper Oil Co.

The Rev. Richard H. Wood officiated.

Jan E. Matthews of Midland, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Joseph W. Hill of Midland, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. Elizabeth McAnear of Clarendon was flower girl.

The ushers were Freddie McAnear and Don Hughes of Midland and John Teinert of Albany. Dax McAnear of Midland was ring bearer.

Energy users

On a per capita basis in 1979, according to a newly released U.S. Department of Energy Report, the largest energy-consuming states were Wyoming, Louisiana, Alaska, Texas, Montana, Kansas, Indiana, Alabama, Oklahoma and West Virginia.

Taxes rise

Individual income taxes (imposed by 44 states) yielded the state governments $37.1 billion in fiscal 1980, up 13.7 percent from fiscal 1979. States' taxes on corporations brought in $13.3 billion, up 9.8 percent in a year, and motor-vehicle-license taxes produced $4.9 billion.

Tom Canton Homes submits entry in the 1981 CIA Parade of Homes

A distinctive floor plan, combined with three fireplaces and an enclosed patio mark the entry of Tom Canton Homes in the 1981 Parade of Homes sponsored by the Midland Homebuilders Association.

The parade, which is a first for Midland for new homes, will be Dec. 12-20 in the Skyline Terrace west addition of Midland. Tickets are $1 to tour all homes and the Christmas in April program will receive the proceeds from ticket sales.

Accented by a circle driveway and an enclosed entry way, the 2700 square-foot contemporary design home has a barrel-shape fireplace in the formal living area. Large windows accent the room and face the fireplace.

The formal dining area has access to the private enclosed patio which will feature a built-in barbeque pit and benches. There is parkay wood flooring in the dining area.

Raised panel doors accent the birch custom made cabinets in the kitchen area. Next to the kitchen is a breakfast area and a utility room. The kitchen is designed for convenience and accessibility. There is a unique pantry-room for extra storage.

The master bedroom has a fireplace and a fan ceiling. Other features are sliding glass mirror doors, huge walk-in closets and a dual dressing area. The bath has its own enclosed ceramic tiled shower and marble tub.

With access to the covered patio in the rear, the family room has the third fireplace and a wet bar area. Decorating the wet bar are glass shelves and a mirrored wall.

Tones of brown splashed with ivory will dominate this comfortable, well-insulated and energy-efficient home.

For ticket information, call the Midland Homebuilders Association or the Human Relations Council, which coordinates Christmas in April.

Sculpting in wax: The humbling art

By PHILIP ASHFORD
Associated Press Writer

BUENA PARK, Calif. (AP) — Logan Fleming, who created the likenesses of most of the stars at the Movieland Wax Museum, felt that only one of them should be bigger than life: Alan Ladd.

Alan Ladd?

"Once I walked into a hotel lobby and there was this circle of women all bent over like a football huddle," he said. "I walked over to see what they were all looking at. I'm pretty tall so I just looked over the top and down there in the middle was Alan Ladd, signing autographs."

The pint-sized tough guy may have been able to get away with being just 5-foot-4 when blown up on the silver screen, but wax museums are closer to reality.

"People just wouldn't have believed it if we made him his real height," Fleming said. "So we made him about 5-foot-8."

Fleming is the artistic director and sculptor for Movieland Wax Museum in Orange County and its sister wax extravaganza, Stars Hall of Fame in Orlando, Fla.

Fleming, who had been a commercial artist, went after the sculptor's job about a year after the Southern California museum opened in 1962.

Taken to visit the new attraction by friends, he said he was appalled by the lack of realism in the figures exhibited.

"They had this Clark Gable there with really skinny shoulders and a wispy little moustache," Fleming said. "He really looked like a sissy."

Fleming met with the director, pointed out the shortcomings of the exhibits and claimed that he could do better.

The museum director asked him to try silent screen star Slim Summerville. Two months later, Fleming returned with a head that might have been Summerville's, except that it was made of wax. It was Fleming's first wax figure and it was a winner. It still is on exhibit at Movieland.

Since that day, he has been working for the two museums, improving likenesses of the existing exhibits and making new ones.

It is a job that requires a variety of skills, he said. As artistic director he is responsible for all aspects of the exhibits — costuming, lighting and set design.

But the hard part is getting the heads to look like real people. In addition to being a good portrait artist and sculptor, he said he has to know something about engineering, something about dentistry, something about hair-styling and something about optics.

"You've got to get the eyes just right, so they'll look like they're focused somewhere," Fleming said. "I went to another wax museum the other day and I spent 10 minutes walking around trying to get the figure to look at me. No matter where I stood, he seemed to be looking off somewhere else."

Making a wax figure usually takes about six weeks, from the time the stars are measured with calipers and photographed until the figure is ready to be placed on the set. In between, a mold for the molten max must be made, eyes and teeth must be installed, each single hair must be mounted, and makeup and coloring must be touched up. At the same time, clothing and a mannekin body must be prepared.

"Women and children are the hardest to do because their faces tend to be smooth and lacking in distinguishing characteristics," Fleming said. "Men give you more to get a hold of, the craggier the better."

With dead actors, Fleming said he works from measurements supplied by the people who had made their clothing and from pictures.

"This is an art form of the most difficult degree," he said. "You're attempting to copy life. It makes you very humble. You can never compete with God."

Weeders guide

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

The Christmas gifts you remember well are those that are useful, especially in the garden. We note this in our occasional role as Santa's helper.

Giving a living Christmas tree that may be planted outdoors after the holiday is one suggestion, demonstrated by a project last season at the Brooklyn Botanic Garden.

A new Christmas exhibit there included four beautiful ornamental evergreens: an Oriental Spruce, a very blue Colorado Spruce, a Rocky Mountain Juniper, and a Dragon-Eye Pine.

After the holiday exhibit, the four trees were moved to a protected, freeze-free shelter and in the spring became part of the Garden's permanent conifer collection of more than 70 species.

Living plants for the home or outside make colorful, long-lasting gifts. Flower and vegetable seeds, dwarf fruit trees for spring planting and garden tools are other suggestions.

Herb plants that can be grown on windowsills, or herb seeds — chives, sage, basil, parsley, marjoram, mint, tarragon and rosemary — are nice to watch growing and even better to use. How about tasty jams and jellies, pickles and relishes grown from produce of your own gardens? You can make your own sachets and aromatic potpourris from flowers, herbs and spices.

Active gardeners in the family will appreciate a hose-powered spray gun, new pruning shears, a hoe or spade fork. There are lightweight tools specially designed for children or women.

Plants that need little care are appreciated. One is philodendron. Other gift plant suggestions are a living holly bush or tree, Christmas cactus, indoor dwarf lemon or orange tree.

Popular at this holiday time are ornamental pepper, Jerusalem cherry, cyclamen, chrysanthemum, gloxinia, ardisia (coralberry) and cineraria.

The New York Botanical Garden issues a catalog with far-ranging gift ideas such as Crystal Palace terrarium, hydroculture kit, paperwhite narcissus bowl, wreaths, floral and fruit posters and mounted prints.

Among some welcome garden gift books, recent and around for a while, are:

"Grow Your Own Vegetables," by Roger Grounds (Van Nostrand Reinhold), helpful for planning your garden, crop rotation, soil advice and planting.

"Carrots Love Tomatoes, or Secrets of Companion Planting for Successful Gardening," paperback by Louise Riotte (Garden Way Publishing). The author says "like people, vegetables thrive on companionship."

"Fruits and Berries for the Home Garden," by Lewis Hill (Garden Way Publishing). Hill offers the experience of 30 years of tree growing.

"The Water Garden," by Frances Perry (Van Nostrand Reinhold), who says water gardening is available to everyone these days, from backyard gardener to wealthy landowner.

"Greenhouse Grow How," by John H. Pierce (Plants Alive), who tells how to build or buy a hobby greenhouse, what to do with it and what grows best in it.

(Any queries about gardening problems must be accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

(Earl Aronson's "Associated Press Guide to House Plants," would be a welcome gift for gardening and houseplant fans. Send $1 and name of recipient to House Plants, AP Newsfeatures, 50 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, N.Y. 10020.)

Surrogate parenthood raises questions

By DIANA TAYLOR
Associated Press Writer

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — Fertility drugs have failed and there's a long wait for adoption. What do you do if you want a baby and cannot conceive? For a growing number of couples, the answer is: Hire a woman to bear your child.

But is it legal?

Doctors and lawyers report dozens of surrogate parent contracts arranged since the Nov. 9, 1980, birth of an 8-pound, 6-ounce boy to an Illinois housewife known under the pseudonym of Elizabeth Kane.

That child — offspring of the nation's first acknowledged surrogate mother contract — was adopted by an unidentified Kentucky couple after Mrs. Kane, who was paid $10,000, surrendered her parental rights five days after his birth.

But while his status under the law seems secure, one year after his birth legal, moral and psychological questions about the surrogate process remain.

Some theologians are urging caution. And a Michigan psychologist has undertaken a long term study of surrogate mothers and their children to determine the emotional impact of paid maternity.

While some legal questions already have been faced, others may take years to reach the courts that eventually may have to sort out the complex legal questions surrogate parenthood raises:

—What happens if a woman accepts the money then decides she wants to keep the baby? Such a case went to court in California this year, but the adopting parents — a man and his transsexual wife — dropped the matter before the judge ruled.

—If the woman decides to keep the baby, could the man who donated his sperm then be required to pay child support?

—Who pays if there are complications in the pregnancy or in childbirth? In 1978, there were 321 maternal deaths for every 100,000 live births in the United States, according to the national Center for Health Statistics.

—Who is responsible for supporting a retarded or deformed child? While the agreement may specify that, what happens if the hired mother's abuse of alcohol or drugs contributes to the child's problems?

The surrogate system is not clearly illegal in any state, but neither is it clearly legal. Complicating the issue are varying laws governing artificial insemination, adoption and parental rights in different states and the emphasis various courts and government attorneys have given to them.

In one legal test, Kentucky Attorney General Steve Beshear has asked a circuit court to declare the contract surrogate parenthood process illegal. He contends the process violates state law and "the strong public policy against the buying and selling of children."

While the civil suit would not affect the first surrogate baby, Beshear has asked the court to dissolve the charter of Surrogate Parenting Associates, the group which arranged the contract, prohibiting similar transactions.

Infertility specialist Dr. Richard M. Levin of Louisville, director of the organization, has said he expects to deliver 100 babies via surrogate mothers in 1981. The attorney general's challenge will be heard in January.

Meanwhile, in Michigan, a Wayne County judge, citing lack of jurisdiction, last month refused to declare that the legal father of a child conceived by a married surrogate was the man who donated his sperm — not the woman's husband.

"It's a difficult, sensitive issue and not a simple matter," Circuit Judge Roman S. Gribbs said after ruling it is up to the legislature to decide whether such agreements are enforceable. The law now presumes a woman's husband is the father of her child.

Noel P. Keane of Dearborn, an attorney who has worked with surrogates for six years, is representing the couple and plans an appeal. He also is working with state Rep. Richard Fitzpatrick, D-Battle Creek, on two bills that could become the nation's first laws on the surrogate process.

Fitzpatrick believes the bills answer many of the "what if" questions — outlining the rights of the couple and the surrogate in the event of a change of heart or an unexpected medical problem.

"Without legislation, there is no protection for the baby," he said.

The wife of a young black man went from prison to prison shouting the name of her husband, hoping that in a cell block or exercise yard he or someone who knew him would shout back across the wall, "I'm here," or, "He's here."

After weeks of this, she indeed heard the reply, "I'm here."

But, she still could not see her husband. Face-to-face meetings with prisoners are rarely allowed.

Parents can leave food and clean clothing for the prisoners at central police headquarters in Johannesburg — and hope that they will be delivered. "That's why we formed this parents' committee," a retired businessman, Charles de Beer, said. "We wanted to share our sense of shock, outrage and parental anxiety that such conditions exist in our country." De Beer and his wife, Sheila, have not seen their son Cedric, a part-time tutor and welfare worker, since his arrest Sept. 22.

For more than an hour the concerned parents talked, discussing new ways to deliver food parcels and their efforts to see government officials.

The objective is to build pressure for getting the prisoners released or brought to trial.

Max Coleman told the group that he and his wife, Audrey, a civil rights activist, saw the minister of police, who "listened sympathetically and defended the system, of course."

"In the end," Coleman said, "he made no promises but said he would look into Keith's case."

Coleman said the police minister, Louis le Grange, told them, "You know we have the right policy." And Coleman said he replied, "Time will tell."

One of the group had news of a friend, Barbara Hogan, a community worker detained Sept. 22. "I asked a prison official, as I always do, 'Where is Barbara?' " the friend said, "and he told me 'Right here.' But I got the funny feeling that she was not going to be there (at the main Johannesburg jail) for long. They must be moving her."

Most of the parents have written to Johannesburg's chief magistrate, seeking assurances that the prisoners are being visited by justice officials looking into their treatment, as required by law.

"The more letters they get the more they'll know we are watching closely," one parent said.

Many make daily telephone calls to the security police asking, "Is my child all right? When can I see my child?"

They do not expect anything but indecisive answers, and that is usually what they get.

"At least it reminds the police that they are holding young people whose parents, while they may not always agree with their offspring's politics, do not see them as criminals or risks to the state," one parent said.

Parents also make public protests, and at the meeting they discussed what some new placards should say. The protests are carried out on weekends, in front of police headquarters and in prominent shopping centers.

"We want to make the public aware of what we — and many lawyers — consider to be the police state methods being used in South Africa today," Coleman said.

Group picketing is prohibited by law, so each parent stands alone. Even so, they are subject to police harassment and sometimes to heckling by passers-by.

"Well, shall we meet again next week?" Haysom asked as the gathering was breaking p.

The parents nodded in enthusiastic agreement.

But at the next meeting they will have to do without Haysom.

Parents fight to get children released

By JACK FOISIE
(c) 1981, Los Angeles Times

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Four months ago, on Aug. 12, a university student named Elaine Mohamed was arrested and led away in handcuffs. Friends and relatives have no idea where she is being held. The authorities will not say.

A month later another woman, Mandla Mthembu, a writer, disappeared in much the same way, followed not long afterward by Keith Coleman, a university student.

One of the two women, Mthembu, is black. The other, Mohamed, is Colored, as people of mixed race are called here. Coleman is white.

What they have in common is a cause. Together with other young South Africans, they have publicly protested the government's strict policy of apartheid — segregation of the races.

Their detention has brought together a group of concerned friends and relatives, parents for the most part, in an effort to pressure the government into releasing them or bringing them to trial.

"Parents have a right to see their children," Coleman's father, Max, a prominent businessman, said at a recent meeting of these people. "They have a right to know where they are being held, how they are being treated."

The group, representing 14 detained individuals, has been meeting every Wednesday in a small room of the law school at Witwatersrand University. Nicholas Haysom, 29, a professor at the school, has been serving as chairman.

The number may be higher at the next meeting. In the last few days, 19 additional young people have been arrested. The police say they are suspected of being security risks. At the meeting where Max Coleman spoke out, Mthembu's mother, Matilda, a domestic servant, said she was there because "I knew these white people would try to help me."

Mohamed's father, Ismail, said he hoped "she is getting the special food I leave for her" at a police station. He teaches at the university; segregation is less rigid in education than in some other fields.

Another member of the group is Proj. M.J. Koornhof, a scientist and brother of a Cabinet minister. The police arrested his daughter, Hannchen, a teacher, on Oct. 10.

Most of those arrested belong openly to liberal student or community groups that work to improve the country's race laws and take part in protests.

They are usually held under a law that allows detention without charge for 14 days. If not released at the end of that period, they can be charged under the Terrorism Acts, which allow for indefinite detention without visitors. The police are not required to disclose where such prisoners are held.

The police do not normally make public the number of persons held under the Terrorism Acts. Civil rights organizations believe that at present the number is about 135 nationwide.

A student who was held for a time said that during the first 14 days, there is great police pressure "to get us to tell them what they want, which is usually to inform on our friends."

The pressure is subtle, the student said, "but they know and we know that if we don't talk, then we come under the provisions of the Terrorism Acts, and they can hold us for as long as they like."

"The greatest hardship for me," a parent said, "is not knowing where our children are being held."

The wife of a young black man went from prison to prison shouting the name of her husband, hoping that in a cell block or exercise yard he or someone who knew him would shout back across the wall, "I'm here," or, "He's here."

After weeks of this, she indeed heard the reply, "I'm here."

But, she still could not see her husband. Face-to-face meetings with prisoners are rarely allowed.

Parents can leave food and clean clothing for the prisoners at central police headquarters in Johannesburg — and hope that they will be delivered. Group picketing is prohibited by law, so each parent stands alone. Even so, they are subject to police harassment and sometimes to heckling by passers-by.

"Well, shall we meet again next week?" Haysom asked as the gathering was breaking p.

The parents nodded in enthusiastic agreement.

But at the next meeting they will have to do without Haysom. He was arrested and detained the next day.

Braces with magnets

NEW YORK (AP) — Life with braces with be made easier for youngsters who need to wear them, thanks to a new device developed by two Columbia University orthodontists.

The new braces use magnets instead of the traditional rubber bands to move teeth and can cut the average treatment time in half, according to Drs. Abraham Blechman and Harry Smiley, inventors of the device.

Four small magnets are placed at the rear of the mouth and exert a steady force along the usual wires secured to the teeth. No patient cooperation is needed, which, say the dentists, is a major advantage over the current method of straightening teeth.

The force field generated by the magnets also speeds new bone growth as the teeth shift, the dentists report.

Midlander named pageant finalist

Lauri Culp

Lauri Culp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Culp of Midland, has been selected to be a finalist in the annual 1982 Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant to be held in the El Paso High School Auditorium in El Paso April 16-18.

The pageant is the official regional finals to the Miss Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant to be held in June.

Nancy Daniel of Hamshire, the 1981 Miss Texas National Teen-Ager, will crown the new queen.

The reigning Miss National Teen-Ager is Lisa Bell of Wapato, Wash.

Each contestant accepted will be requested to participate in the Volunteer Community Service Program of the National Teen-Ager Pageant. This program teaches teen-agers to share and to participate in school and civic affairs. A Mini-Modeling Charm Course will be given during the weekend of the pageant.

Winner of the Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant will receive a cash scholarship, other prizes and will be fully sponsored to compete in the Miss Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant to be held at Texas Christian University. Contestants will be judged on scholastic achievement-leadership, poise-personality and appearance. There is no swimsuit competition.

Each contestant will have a choice of either reciting a 100-word essay on the subject, "What's Right About America," or giving a 2-minute talent presentation providing her own music and/or props.

Miss Culp is sponsored by Carl Williams of Marc Photography. Her hobbies include aerobic dancing, horseback riding, racquetball, swimming and jogging. She participates in school and church activities.

Mrs. Leaverton was nominated for Outstanding Young Woman of Midland by Kappa Kappa Gamma.

Aging bridges studied

WASHINGTON (AP) — Between San Francisco's Golden Gate Bridge and New York's Brooklyn Bridge, more than 500,000 spans cross rivers, valleys and highways to link America.

But nearly 40 percent of these bridges have deteriorated to the point where they're classified as too old or too weak to adequately handle today's traffic, according to The Road Information Program.

The Washington-based highway research agency points out that none of the nation's 223,000 "structurally deficient" or "functionally obsolete" bridges is in danger of immediate collapse. On-going inspection by state and local officials results in the closing of dangerously deteriorated bridges when they become severe safety hazards.

One-stop furnishings shopping

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Most consumers who have decorated their own quarters know this scenario well: you start out with something you like — perhaps some wallpaper — secure a swatch and start making the rounds.

It's off to your favorite department store for a look at the bedspreads and pillows on one floor, the curtains, bathroom accessories, tableware and yard goods, each in a separate department on a different floor. At each stop, the swatch gets grimier and you get more tired and indecisive. The last straw is the trip to the hardware to find the right color paint and the necessary materials to install your purchase.

A tiresome business at best, the shopping experience is at worst a nightmare of wrong choices or no choices, unhelpful sales personnel and a feeling that it is all too much trouble.

Well, consumers: the American home furnishings industry has been watching your plight with sympathy. As a result, coordinated home furnishings collections are beginning to show up in stores around the country.

These collections include all or most of what is needed to decorate an entire room, as well as display and decorating ideas that show how to put the items together into an attractive whole.

Instead of searching through store after store, a consumer can find in one place several choices of wall coverings, yard goods, towels and sheets, curtains, pillows, accessories and other products which have been designed to go together. Often, there is pictorial or other help to show how to achieve the desired look at home and sometimes coordinated paint colors have been developed as well.

With several such product groups on display at a number of large stores across the country, merchandisers are predicting that consumer demand for the first groups will spark more introductions in the near future.

According to Tom Apostolico, a vice president of Macy's New York, "the concept is being well-received by consumers. They like the grouped-together home furnishings because the products have basic appeal, but also because it is easier to coordinate a total room with all the merchandise in one place. A customer can see how it all goes together and has an easier time making a decision."

The special care lavished on display and promotion of the shops also attracts customers.

"It's theater, which is the name of the game in department-store merchandising today," said Apostolico, adding, "consumers enjoy shopping for names they can identify. The name home furnishings collections have the same appeal as sportswear designer collections."

"The point is that you can do it yourself. You don't have to hire a decorator," explained Susan Schwartz, a vice president of China Seas, whose Home Port Collection of yard goods, linens, accessories and cookware debuted this fall.

Not only does the customer save time by shopping for furnishings designed to go together and be shown in one place, but in addition the end result is likely to be on a level of professionalism that in the past would have required a decorator's services, she added.

Collections come at an ideal time said, Bettye Martin, president of Gear Inc., a firm which is credited with the first of the new all-inclusive collections. Although more women are working outside the home and are busier than in the past, decorating standards are also higher. Since "fewer than 1 percent of Americans employ decorators, collections are the only way to go. People simply do not have time to coordinate furnishings from many different departments and stores," she said.

Cooperation at both the manufacturing and retailing level has been the key to the development of the coordinated groups, according to Ms. Martin.

Since there is such a variety of products, no single manufacturer can supply everything. As a result, the design direction is set by a designer, sometimes working with a retailer, and various manufacturers are licensed to make the products.

The department store also cooperates in installing the shops, since the products displayed in each area cut across usual department-store buying lines.

In the year or so since the shops have begun appearing in department stores, it has become clear they are a new resource for consumers who enjoy doing it themselves. Predictions are the shop concept will continue to grow.

American style: Willie Morris is back home

By RON HARRIST
Associated Press Writer

OXFORD, Miss. (AP) — Willie Morris has traveled far since his childhood days on the first flat street on the Delta side of Yazoo City. But his author's heart and his thoughts have never strayed far from his Mississippi home.

"I've never really left this place emotionally," says Morris, who for 10 years was editor of Harper's magazine, and who now has a string of books to his credit.

"Everything is compounded by the fact that I am a writer, and writers by the very nature of our strange calling deal in memory. I've always found myself coming back to Mississippi in my thoughts."

Morris, currently a teacher at a writer's workshop at the University of Mississippi, is living and working on his next book in a faculty house not far from Rowan Oak, the home of the late Nobel Prize-winning author William Faulkner.

"I imagine about 25 years ago, Faulkner's spiritual presence would have intimidated me," Morris says, "but not now."

"I have certainly seen the landmarks of his great prose and the kinds of people he was compelled to write about. It makes me feel curiously serene."

Morris, 46, is a mixture of intellectual, philosopher, good ol' boy and prankster, who cherishes his independence and worries more about his choice of words than his clothes or car. He rattles around Oxford in his mother's old car, which is afflicted with the habit of idling on after the key is turned off.

When he's at work behind a battered manual typewriter at home, Morris has been known to stuff his telephone in the refrigerator. "I used to put them in the oven," he says, "but I lost two or three good telephones that way."

Morris, sitting easily in a chair and patting the ustitched side of his unpolished shoe, can keep a women's book club spellbound with tales of his childhood days in Yazoo city, and 20 years of mingling with the big names of literature in the Northeast.

In one breath, the writer calls out a list of well-known authors and national figures and national figures he has known, and a moment later he recalls a childhood trick he once played on his aunts in Jackson.

Guide tells how to deal with aging

NEW YORK (AP) — "Your Health and Aging," a guide on how to deal with aging, based on a two-year study of the problems of people over 60, has been issued by New York University Medical Center.

The guidebook, printed in oversize type, addresses such areas as drugs, senility, sexuality, stress, alcoholism, and a wide range of diseases which afflict the elderly: arthritis, cancer, depression, diabetes, heart conditions, high blood pressure, osteoporosis, stroke and urinary incontinence.

"Often the older person is timid about dealing with a physician," says project director Joan Mintz. "We have a special chapter on 'communicating with doctors'.

This is the school that Sally built

By EARL AND MIRIAM SELBY
(Special From Reader's Digest)

Gary Smith, age 7, had failed every academic subject in his first-grade class at a Washington, D.C. school. He was unable to spell "cat" or add 2 and 2. Yet now his hand was raised to answer a question about Indian rain dances. Gary compared them with Greek myths, and said, "The Indians thought they could get what they wanted by doing a dance or telling a story..." His teacher grabbed him and said, "If you know that, why can't you spell cat?"

To the teacher, Gary's unexpected knowledge proved he could learn, that he had been doing poorly because he was lazy. But she was wrong. Gary had a hidden handicap - a learning disability. Despite average intelligence, he could not read, write or do arithmetic.

Sally Smith, Gary's mother, knew he was intelligent because of the information he could retain from games he played with her and his two older brothers. She also knew that Gary did not belong in a regular classroom. But when she sought alternatives, she found only schools for the retarded or the emotionally disturbed.

In the spring of 1967 she pleaded with private schools to start a program for Gary and other learning-disabled children. (Some researchers believe the number of such children in the United States could be as high as 10 million.) "It would take at least a year," the educators said.

She turned to Kenneth R. Oldman, then director of the Kingsbury Center, a Washington diagnostic and tutoring organization. He recognized the need, but lacked the space and money. Then, months later, Oldman got in touch with Sally and explained that Kingsbury had been offered a nearby townhouse that could accommodate a small school. Was she herself interested in starting classes? Panic hit - although Sally had a master's degree, she wasn't a professional educator. But when she looked at Gary, she knew she had to try.

In a single night, Sally planned the curriculum for a school unlike any she had ever heard of. Then she rounded up volunteers to clean and paint the townhouse. She begged furniture donations, drummed up $7000 from friends to pay teachers' salaries, and on Sept. 25, 1967, Sally opened the new Lab School of the Kingsbury Center.

Learning disabilities is an umbrella term for dozens of different conditions. It includes minimal brain dysfunction and dyslexia, in which certain neural (nerve) pathways do not mature according to normal timetables. These children are among education's toughest challenges, for each is unique.

Rarely is actual brain damage documented, however, and learning-disabled children often have average or above-average intelligence. In many schools though they grow accustomed to defeat and tend to give up, thinking themselves "dumb."

Sally Smith was determined to prove that any learning-disabled child with normal intelligence could be taught to learn.

She recruited teachers who felt the arts - music, dance, woodworking, drama - could be central in teaching basic skills. Little children sing before they speak, draw before they print and act out stories before they read.

The Lab's curriculum - half day in arts and half in class - provided breakthroughs for many students. Bart at age 9 was unable to read because he could not associate sounds with letter symbols. A music teacher used his fascination with a drum to help, instructing him to bang the drum when she held up a red chip and tap it for a yellow one. Gradually Bart came to see that words commanded sounds just as the chips had. That rudimentary recognition unlocked the door to reading for Bart, and today he is in college.

Sally noticed that children who were flunking in school often showed intelligence when playing games. So she introduced "academic clubs." Her idea: take what children like to do and use it as the foundation for teaching what they needed to know.

Advancing in the clubs as they get older, Sally's students become Egyptians, Greek and Roman gods and characters in medievel times. In the New World they are Indians, frontiersmen and American revolutionaries.

Today Sally's school has nine full-time teachers plus many artists who work part time, a capacity enrollment of 80, ages 6 to 16, and a long waiting list. It is housed in three adjoining townhouses.

Like her son Gary, nearly every one of Sally's students was failing in regular schools. But more than 90 percent of the hundreds of students who have attended the Lab School have returned to mainstream schools to earn high-school diplomas. Many have gone on to college.

Trust in Sally has grown worldwide. In 1976, Washington's American University appointed her associate professor in charge of its learning-disabilities program. And the United Nations has commissioned her to prepare a paper on learning disabilities for educators in 191 countries.

Home energy conservation: It's being done

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Home energy conservation isn't making headlines any more.

But, according to one energy researcher, that is a good sign. "When a subject makes news, it isn't being done; when it stops making news, it is being done," said Herbert Mertz.

Mertz is a former researcher at Princeton University's Center for Energy and Environmental Studies and is president of Princeton Energy Partners, a home energy consulting firm. He says the level of public interest, awareness and acceptance of conservation, has taken a definite upward turn since the subject first got widespread attention several years ago.

"People are doing conservation now; builders are more aware of energy problems and new housing tends to be less leaky than it used to be."

Also on the upswing are a maze of new products, some of which are less than useful, he added.

The time gap between energy analysis or installation of some new device and the reality of the savings makes it easy for misinformation and unrealistic expectations to develop. Consequently Mertz suggested consumers look at product claims very carefully and ask for specifics on product tests before spending their money.

A useful question that is rarely asked is: how will this product fit into my life?

"Wood stoves are a good example. They are great for some people, but others who bought them soon discovered that chopping wood and cleaning the stove were simply too much trouble and they stopped using them," he said.

The new attitude (which research centers such as Princeton's energy center helped to shape) is that the first chore is to examine all the energy systems in the home to determine whether there are inefficiencies. Mertz enumerated these systems as the furnace or heating system, the hot-water system and the air movement or circulation system.

Sometimes, small flaws in one of these systems such as a missing batt of insulation or a slender crack where wood moulding was carefully installed or a bad faucet washer can produce a large loss in system efficiency.

Gathering accurate information about system performance — once a very difficult task — can identify these small problems as well as larger ones. It's easier now because a new array of measurement tools has been pressed into service, said Mertz.

His firm, for example, uses an infra-red scanning device to identify differences in temperature in the walls of the house. The scanner was originally developed as a military tool to accurately indicate ground targets and shows warmer areas in green and registers cooler areas as black. Using it with other tools such as a blower door makes it possible to tell how tight a house is and to pinpoint the places where energy leaks are occurring.

The blower door, a fanlike contraption that can force air in or out of the house while measuring the time and force required to produce the effect, was invented by a Princeton researcher as a measurement tool.

From industry have come such tools as smoke guns and smoke pencils. Observation of the path of the smoke when the pencil is operated next to a window, outlet receptacle or wall quickly reveals problem areas.

Stitching witchery: Don't color yourself bald

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

Here's something you probably didn't know. If you wear the wrong color, your hair will fall out.

W-e-l-l ... maybe that isn't quite true. But color can and does make a tremendous difference in how you look, how you feel about how you look and how others see you. The right color can do wonders.

Knowing just which colors work best for you is not information you are born with. You MAY have an instinct for it, or you may have to work at it. Either way it is worth the effort.

When shopping for fabrics, visit those stores in which there are mirrors you can use. Stand before the mirror, unroll a yard or so of the fabric and drape it from shoulder to shoulder under your chin.

Do not look at the fabric. Look at your face. The right color will give you a more alive, radiant look. The wrong color will cause your face to disappear or to turn drab.

If you are wavering between two shades of the same color, drape both under your chin, one on top of the other. Watch your face as you move the top piece away. Which looks better?

Once you have determined the right colors for you, then you are ready to build your wardrobe around these basic hues. If you know a color is not right, do not allow it to creep into your closet. A wrong color will be a problem child forever.

Carry your colors all the way through to your accessories. It may take awhile to weed out those shoes and bags that do not go with your wardrobe, but hang in there. It is worth it.

Once you have accessories in the right colors, they will go with everything in your wardrobe, not just one or two pieces. And that's good news, right?

(Your hair really won't fall out. I was just kidding.)

Questions may be addressed to Mrs. Betty Kinser, Copley News Service, in care of this newspaper.

For diabetics holiday eating requires care

NEW YORK (AP) — "Diabetes never takes a holiday," warns Barbara El-Beheri, a registered dietitian and nutrition program coordinator for the American Diabetes Association.

"Unfortunately," adds Ms. El-Beheri, "the holidays have become an excuse to put on extra weight, which represents a serious health problem for individuals suffering from chronic disease and for everyone predisposed to diabetes."

An estimated 70 percent of all diabetes sufferers whose disease is managed without insulin have been found to be overweight when their disease was first diagnosed, Ms. El-Beheri says. Diet and control of weight are crucial to the management of the disease and its complications, she explains, and weight control is critical for prevention in high-risk individuals.

"No amount of rationalizing or cheating can change the fact that holiday overeating results in higher blood-sugar levels that adversely affect diabetes," she emphasizes. She notes, however, that the growing interest of the general public in physical fitness, nutrition and health is making it easier for diabetics to maintain proper diet and health habits without attracting attention.

In their holiday warning, Ms. El-Beheri and the ADA point out that people who are concerned with a healthy lifestyle CAN "eat, drink and be merry" during the season by remembering a few sound tips:

—Eat only small amounts of food rich in fats; for example, high-fat dairy products, red meats, dips, sauces, pastries, sweet desserts.

—Alcohol is a major temptation during the holidays. Persons with diabetes should discuss alcohol consumption with a doctor or diet counselor.

—Exercise and keep busy so that you burn up calories and keep your blood sugar normal. For non-diabetics, exercise increases the daily calorie needs, and walking at least one-half hour each day is an important activity for healthful living.

Messengers of God and love, bird ornaments are the most commong of early Christmas ornaments. These ornaments, taken from the Historical Collection of Hallmark cards, date from the turn of the century. The fat turkey at left, with crinkly wire tail, is unusual in figural form; most turkeys were painted on round ornaments. The peacock with crown, lower center, was a symbol of vanity. Generic birds, upper center, also were popular decor pieces. The most common of the bird ornaments was the songbird, upper right. Today's figural birds are cardinals or merry redbirds because of their bright, holiday colors. The tiny, flocked redbird at bottom right is from the 1980 Hallmark Cards ornament line.

Electronic games: How to choose the right one

By SUE SMITH
Copley News Service

When confronted with the novelty of computerized games and toys that "sing" tunes, play cards and talk back, it takes a savvy shopper to sort out the gadgets from the items with lasting appeal.

Reliable game publishers have put their electronic playthings through consumer testing before introducing them on the market to ensure that the public gets its money's worth. They are interested in creating electronic diversions which will stand the test of time.

Here are some tips on choosing an electronic toy or game:

1. Check the information on the box — it should give a concise description of the game, the age range for which it is intended and the number of players.

2. Look for games which offer more than one game in a hand-held unit. Parker Brothers' Merlin is a good example.

It offers six different games at varying levels of difficulty, each requiring strategy, memory, logic, creativity or some combination of these to win.

3. Don't buy a game just because it's a novelty. Does its theme interest you or the person who will be receiving it?

4. The game you choose should be simple enough to provide fun from the start, but not so easy that its players lose interest after a few hours or weeks. A good hand-held game provides different skill levels so that it will be suitable for beginner or expert, adult or child.

5. If the game runs on batteries, alkaline batteries are suggested by most manufacturers. They provide more power and last longer.

6. Often a battery-operated toy or game can also be powered by an adapter which will save you money. Make sure you buy the adapter specified by the manufacturer so you don't damage the module.

7. Check out the way the game or toy is constructed. It must be sturdy enough to withstand frequent handling. The better items are made of high-impact plastic with few moving parts exposed. Because the circuitry is rather delicate, manufacturers caution consumers not to treat the game roughly.

8. Read the manufacturer's warranty and instruction book before you buy.

If the game isn't guaranteed for a reasonable amount of time and there is no return policy at the store, you may be disappointed later. Most reputable manufacturers constantly supervise for quality control, yet mistakes do occur. If you have any problems with the working of the game, contact the manufacturer's consumer response department.

9. When you take the game or toy home, make sure everyone knows how to use it and take care of it properly. Remember to turn it off when not in use. Remove and replace dead batteries promptly. Corroded batteries may damage the circuitry.

By shopping carefully, armed with a list of ages and personal interests, it's possible to pick an electronic toy or game that will be a hit on Christmas morning. More importantly, it will be enjoyed for many years to come.

Make it yours: An authentic holiday bread basket

By ELLEN APPEL
Copley News Service

This year, while you're in the kitchen preparing for holiday dinners, why not make an authentic "bread basket" for your holiday table? The basket is authentic because it is literally made of bread.

The supplies needed for a bread basket are nearly the same as those used in bread-baking. The difference is that home-baked bread is attractive, aromatic and appetizing as it comes out of the oven. A home-baked bread basket is attractive only.

While a bread dough basket looks and cooks like bread, you cannot eat the finished product. For one thing, it lacks yeast to make it light and fluffy. For another thing, it owes its shine to a coating of painter's varnish.

The varnish is an essential ingredient in making the basket both beautiful and long-lasting. With a handkerchief inside, a home-baked basket filled with warm, aromatic and appetizing rolls is ideal for your holilday table.

Here are directions for the basket:

MATERIALS: Large mixing bowl; breadboard or counter space; rolling pin; pastry cutter or paring knife; baking sheet; ovenproof bowl; straight pins; damp cloth; varnish and paintbrush.

INGREDIENTS: Six cups flour; one and one-half cups salt; two and one-half cups water.

MIXING DOUGH: 1. Mix flour, salt and water in the mixing bowl. 2. Turn dough mixture onto a lightly floured board or counter. 3. Knead the dough for five minutes. 4. Roll dough to one-fourth inch thickness with a lightly floured rolling pin.

CUTTING DOUGH: 1. Using the paring knife or pastry cutter, cut dough into long strips, about three-fourths of an inch wide. 2. Cover strips with damp cloth until needed.

WEAVING THE BASKET: 1. Turn the ovenproof bowl upside down on the baking sheet. 2. Lay strips over the bowl in parallel lines. Be sure strips are long enough to touch baking sheet on both sides of the bowl. 3. Weave new strips under and over the strips already on the bowl (a). 4. As you weave, moisten places where strips meet. Smooth rough areas with wet fingers. 5. Weave strips around the sides of the bowl. 6. Pin where necessary to keep strips from slipping down.

FINISHING: 1. Wind the last strip around the bottom edge of the bowl. Be sure to press the last strip firmly against the ends of all other strips it touches. This last strip will be the top edge of your finished basket. 2. Bake basket at 325 degrees until it is dry and lightly browned. The basket may take between three-fourths to one and one-half hours to bake. 3. Remove basket from oven. 4. Remove pins. 5. Let basket cool. 6. Ease basket off bowl.

DECORATING: 1. Brush varnish all over basket. Be sure to cover every inch. 2. Let varnish dry. 3. Add a second coat of varnish. Let dry again. 4. Line Basket with a cloth handkerchiev.

Criminal profile

BRIARCLIFF MANOR, N.Y. (AP) — The typical computer criminal is a 35-year-old male, employed by a company for three years, earns an income in the top 40 percent bracket and lives with his wife and two children in a respectable neighborhood, according to an international security firm.

The computer criminal, who might be found at any rung of the corporate hierarchy, steals the equivalent of 120 percent of his salary.

The profile was compiled by Burns International Security Services, Inc., which also reports that computer crime accounts for an estimated $100 million in corporate balance-sheet losses annually.

A fine collection of furniture

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

It is unexpected, to say the least, to arrive at a large furniture manufacturer's executive offices and find oneself surrounded by a multimillion dollar, museum-quality collection of antique furniture and art objects.

Yet, this is precisely one's experience on visiting the offices of Ethan Allen Inc., in Danbury, Conn.

Inquiries reveal the collection was assembled by Nathan Ancell, company co-founder. Ancell is company chairman and a vice president and director of the corporate conglomerate which now owns the firm.

Although the daily demands on his time are considerable, Ancell has managed to find the time to amass what may be one of the most important American collections of antique furniture outside a museum.

"My late wife and I used to attend two antique shows a week and we looked for pieces on all our trips, too," Ancell said.

"From the very beginning, starting in 1933, it was our aim to bring together a diversified collection of home furnishings products from many cultures, which would express the way people lived and worked in the past."

Many periods are represented in the collection, which numbers several hundred items and is valued in the millions, though American pieces predominate. "The only requirement has been that they be the best of their kind," said Ancell.

The objects fill the main floor of the building and are also displayed in a second-floor exhibition area and board room, and in Ancell's office. They overflow into hallways and unused rooms, as well. Surprisingly, objects as diverse as Pueblo Indian bowls coexist nicely with fine examples of the 18th-century cabinetmaker's artistry.

The collection and the Ethan Allen Co. have grown up together and Ancell says that building his collection has xelped convince him that "the past 200 years are without question the greatest period of home furnishings product design ever know. The reason is simple — it is our polyglot culture. We have been inspired by the best of all the great periods that went before — French, Oriental, Italian, English."

The company he helped found also takes a multi-cultural and multiprotuct approach to its sales of traditional furniture.

"We are not selling furniture. We are selling home environment and the things that help to create the desired home environment," he said. His enthusiasm for American history has spilled into the firm's business. Sales training materials, for example, include biographies of George Washington and Benjamin Franklin.

The Ethan Allen furniture line does not, however, contain any copies of the antiques. "You can't copy antiques. It's too expensive; nobody could afford to buy them. But you might get a proportion or an idea for a carving," he said.

Besides its use as inspiration and its obvious investment value, the collection has provided Ancell with a fund of stories. One he likes to tell is about the time he bought the wrong thing — for $14,000.

He'd gone to an auction with his wife to bid on a fine highboy chest. "I thought it was just about perfect and I really wanted it," he says. He was following the catalog so closely that he wasn't totally aware of the action on the floor. Turning to the highboy page, he began to bid, concentrating furiously.

Impatiently he brushed off his wife's tugs at his jacket and it was only after his bid of $14,000 was accepted that she was able to attract his attention.

"They weren't auctioning the highboy,' she said, just as the curtains closed on the unknown piece I had just purchased. I never did see what it was until it was delivered five days later," Ancell said, leading a visitor to a fine example of an 18th-century lowboy.

"I must admit," he added, "I wasn't worried since directly after the auction, a dealer came up and offered me a $2,000 profit if I would part with the lowboy."

Stories involving sums in the thousands may be difficult for most people to relate to, but anyone can imagine the thrill of acquiring a find for a song. Ancell pointed to a corner cabinet which qualifies for this category. He was visiting a family, saw the corner cupboard and offered to buy it. The family accepted $350 for the piece, which is valued at about $20,000 today.

The collection is currently seen only by those who have business with the company. But opening it to public view is a future possibility. Meanwhile, the pieces stand, silent yet lively examples of those eras of the past which employees are working to recapture in their product offerings of today.

Improvisation key to Mexico trip

— MEXICO CITY —

"What's he doing?"

"I don't know. It appears he's directing traffic, but his car's the one blocking both lanes," came the reply as Midland-Odessa Symphony members watched a slice of Mexico City street life through the windows of their buses parked in front of the hotel.

A young girl was attempting to no avail to back out of a parking space. A police officer was trying to get the heavily congested traffic flowing when a motorist stopped his car in one of the lanes. His action had the domino effect. Traffic was jammed in both directions.

The motorist began directing not only the traffic, but also the police officer. We finally saw why. He wanted the parking spot. He got it.

It was 6 p.m. and the musical entourage had covered many miles since leaving Midland-Odessa early that Tuesday morning. For them, the day was not nearly over, as they still had an 8 p.m. concert to perform. Most were running on adrenalin after the havoc of packing and the excitement of departing on their first tour.

Many felt the pressure of having only an hour to change and report on the buses. Some thought they would sleep on the way. Wrong. The ride during rush traffic was an experience not soon forgotton. The three drivers must have wagered on who could get to the city limits first. Our's won.

Arriving a little after 8 p.m., we discovered there were no seats on the stage. Although this was the local sponsor's responsibility, it hadn't been done. Sam Woodward, the symphony's general manager, and Ricardo de Quesada, the representative for Conciertos Daniel — the management agency which had booked the symphony, went to work securing seats.

What amazed everyone was that, in spite of this inconvenience and the fact that it was quite cold inside the auditorium, approximately 40 degrees, no one had left. Instead, the audience waited quietly for over an hour for the performance to begin.

The symphony performed well, amazingly so, considering most were turning blue. The longer the evening wore on, the colder it got. Symphony patrons would have been proud of the symphony; I know this reviewer was. The second half of the concert was better than the first, even though the musicians were frosted by then.

The audience appreciated the performance, requesting three encores.

The entourage arrived back in Mexico City at 3 a.m. Wednesday. It was decidedly an evening to remember in more ways than one.

Wednesday the symphony closed Puebla's 13th International Festival celebrating the Mexican Revolution.

As Woodward said, "This concert was significant in that it was the closing concert of the festival and, like the opening one, both represent the highest in musical excellence."

Thursday and Friday were open days, thus allowing symphony members to sight-see.

"Several groups took tours of the pyramids," said Joe Wallin, one of the musicians who has the additional job of "assisting the conductor in matters of personnel problems."

"Several groups walked around taking advantage of the various market places. My group went to the Palace of Fine Arts where the national symphony plays. I never saw so much marble in my life! My personal favorite was the pyramids," he said.

Wallin wasn't alone in his preference. Most of those on the tour who visited several sites, including the pyramids, felt the same. We also discovered that in Mexico the pyramids are called temples.

For most who went, the trip was a learning experience. It was an opportunity for symphony members to work together under adverse conditions, and in the doing become closer. It provided them with the time to take time to know one another.

Not only was this the symphony's first tour, it was also its first paid performance outside West Texas.

As Wallin said, "We really had to operate like a family. We really had to work together as a unit."

Congratulations Midland-Odessa Symphony on two performances which are a credit to the symphony's management and the musical quality of its performing artists.

Wrapped inside the smog-filled air for as far as the eye could see was the city. As the airplane dropped lower and lower for its landing, the scene below became alive with activity. It was too much for the eye to register and the mind to comprehend.

Awesome.

Mexico City — estimated population between 12 and 15 million. It is a city in which the past and the present are joined in a sometimes illustrious, often bloody history. The future is perhaps even more shaky, for, although the influx of people increases monthly, the city itself is running out of water and electricity.

Originally established as the Aztec Indians' capital city, Tenochtitlan, sometime around 1325, the city was constructed on an island inside of and within the shallow waters of Lake Texcoco.

The area's history predates the Aztecs. As early as 1500 B.C., several farm villages surrounded the area around Lake Texcoco.

But the Aztecs were the first to create a major city within Lake Texcoco. At the time the Spanish arrived in Mexico, Tenochtitlan had over 100,000 inhabitants.

Led by Hernando Cortes, Spanish forces conquered the Aztec Empire in the early 1500s. Cortes, who referred to Tenochtitlan as the "Venice of the New World," almost leveled the city in 1521 before building Mexico City on top of the ruins.

Today's Mexico City reflects both cultures.

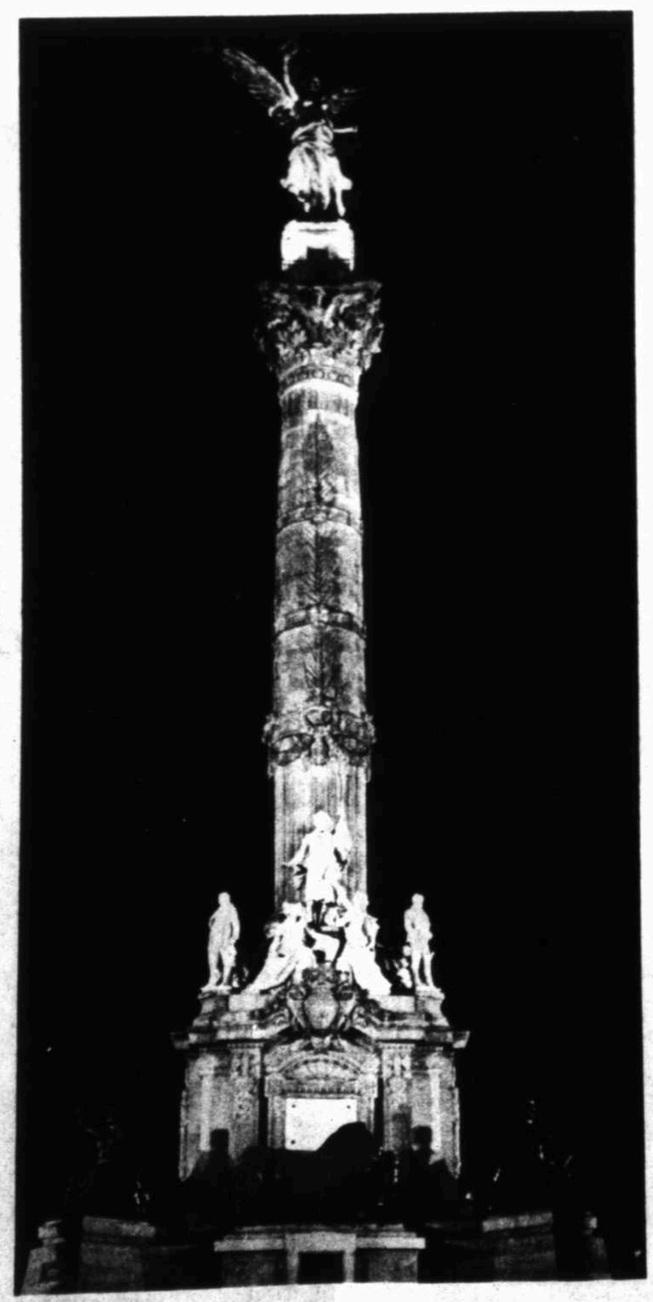
The city contains countless beautiful parks and myriad cathedrals veiled in smog-laden air intensified daily by the frenzied, hectic traffic conditions.

At any time during the day, the streets are filled with a variety of life scenes characterized by animated narratives, making the street life more reminiscent of a European city than one in the United States.

In spite of the metropolis's expanding middle class, it is still a city of extremes, unlimited wealth as opposed to abject poverty. One is reflected in the graceful and elegant living experienced by few and the other in the filth and hunger known by many.

The people themselves reflect these extremes. Although laughter is plentiful, often upon closer observation, the eyes reflect a sorrowful yearning look. Many appear to live lives, not of lost dreams, but rather for whom no dreams are possible.

"Seeing" a parade can be difficult.



Sam Woodward, general manager of the Midland-Odessa Symphony, breathes a sigh of relief as all the luggage, including musical instruments, arrive on schedule in Mexico City. After four days filled with performing and sight-seeing, symphony members deposit their luggage in front of the buses to be loaded for the airport. Among the sights seen was this impressive statue in the heart of the city.

The windmill is an old form of energy, but the drilling rig represents the current drilling boom in West Texas. This rig, in Exxon USA's Robertson Clearfork Unit (number 104-2) in Gaines County, helped Exxon complete 34 wells last year. This year the company will complete 40 wells in the unit.

FTC clears way for Marathon takeover

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. Steel Corp. has won clearance to proceed with its $6.3 billion attempt to take over Marathon Oil Co., giving the steelmaker a tactical advantage over Marathon's other suitor, Mobil Corp., it was reported today.

The New York Times said the Federal Trade Commission had decided that a takeover of Marathon by U.S. Steel would not be an antitrust violation.

Mobil has offered $6.5 billion but the FTC has not given Mobil antitrust clearance. The FTC's deadline to make such a decision is Dec. 10, Mobil has said.

The commission's decision Friday on U.S. Steel was not made public, and a company spokesman in Pittsburgh said U.S. Steel would have no comment on it, the Times said.

Stockholders of Marathon, the nation's 17th-largest oil company, had to tender their shares to U.S. Steel by midnight Friday if they wanted to be guaranteed cash payment.

Mobil, the nation's second-largest oil company, is prohibited from buying Marathon shares by an order issued Monday in federal court in Cleveland. Mobil is appealing the ruling to the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati.

Marathon management favors U.S. Steel as a parent, saying a Mobil combination would violate antitrust laws and would not be in the best interests of its shareholders.

Meanwhile, U.S. District Judge Joseph P. Kinneary in Columbus, Ohio, on Friday extended a court order prohibiting U.S. Steel from buying Marathon stock, but he left intact the steelmaker's deadline for Marathon stockholders to tender their shares for cash.

The effect of the action was to encourage Marathon stockholders to tender their shares by midnight Friday but to prevent U.S. Steel from buying them immediately.

Sedco Inc., the largest single shareholder in Marathon with a 7.7 percent stake, said it had tendered all of its 4.5 million shares to U.S. Steel.

Kinneary said his order against U.S. Steel would hold until Wednesday or until he ruled on Mobil's request to broaden the order into a preliminary injunction, whichever came first. Kinneary gave no hint of when he would rule.

Meanwhile in New York, Mobil said it was nearing final agreement with another oil company to submit a new, joint takeover bid for Marathon. By adding a partner, Mobil hopes to escape the antitrust problems that have stalled its offer.

Mobil has refused to identify its prospective partner, but published reports said it would be Amerada Hess Corp., which ranks as the nation's 18th-largest oil concern.

More than a dozen telephone calls to officials at Amerada Hess offices in New York and Houston were not returned Friday.

Oil glut cannot be reversed by OPEC

By STERLING NOEL
Hearst Feature Service

The current glut of petroleum on the world market, some analysts tell us, is not a temporary situation that can be reversed by OPEC.

These prognosticators aver, in fact, that oil prices in the next several years will go down, not up, and that OPEC control of the market will soon end, if it has not already done so.

Principal proponent of this viewpoint is William M. Brown, physicist and director of energy studies at the Hudson Institute. Writing in Fortune, he declares:

"It is pretty safe to predict that world oil prices in 1985 will be lower in real terms than the unified official price of $34 a barrel agreed upon at the OPEC meeting in Geneva in late October. The official price in 1985 may be higher than $34, but inflation and discounts will probably bring real selling prices considerably below $34 in 1981 dollars."

Brown's views are not to be taken lightly. Along with institute director Herman Kuhn, Brown predicted in July, 1980, that OPEC exports would shrink during the 1980s and oil prices would decline.

Now that this has come to pass, it seems prudent to pay attention to the rest of Browm's analysis.

He points out that a combination of energy conservation, widespread use of alternative fuels and development of new oil sources have curtailed OPEC exports by 7 million barrels a day since the 1979 export high point of 28 million barrels a day.

Brown does not agree with the prediction of Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, Saudi Arabian oil minister, that the glut will come to an end when the effects of the Saudi production cutback of a million barrels a day takes hold in the market.

In fact, he predicts the glut will grow larger, for the principal reason that the cutback barely matches the decline in exports. He sees no indication that this soft demand will reverse itself in the next few years.

Other factors that are working against resumption of the oil boom of 1979 are the worldwide slowdown of economic growth; reduction of record oil inventories held by governments, oil companies and consumers; the steady production increase by non-OPEC countries, amounting to 5 to 6 percent a year, and the inevitable renewal of pumping by Iran and Iraq as soon as they find some face-saving exit from their war.

Oil production from Iran and Iraq could bring as much as 4 million barrels per day back into the oil market, which could only prolong the glut and further erode OPEC price-setting powers.

As long as nothing happens to slow down Saudi production, which is now around 50 percent of total OPEC pumping, it is unlikely, says Brown, that political upheavals in other cartel countries, or even a war between Israel and some Arab neighbor, could affect the oil glut enough to stabilize or increase prices for any extended period.

The reason cited for determined Arab resistance to cutting oil prices, even in the face of cancelled orders which have forced drastic sales slumps in some countries, is that the Arabs look upon their oil reserves as a precious national heritage.

So long as this attitude prevails, says Brown, OPEC will be in trouble. "A strategy of deliberately moving oil prices lower might help to save OPEC, if anything can," he says. "In the absence of an OPEC agreement on production quotas, the Saudis alone cannot be expected to cut their output enough to keep real oil prices from falling."

It is Brown's opinion that, lacking a drastic cooperative effort by OPEC to reduce prices and production in an orderly way, a collapse of prices and – possibly OPEC – is a more likely outcome.

Sale of Santa Fe International Corp. to Kuwaiti corporation given green light by administration

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration gave the green light Friday to the Kuwaiti government's $2.5 billion purchase of Santa Fe International Corp.

Both the Justice Department and the inter-agency Committee on Foreign Investments said the sale of the American oil drilling company to a wholly owned subsidiary of the Kuwaiti government has no "major negative implications" for the United States.

Sante Fe shareholders on Tuesday approved the sale to Kuwait Petroleum Corp., and late Friday, the company announced it had completed the merger during the afternoon.

It is one of the largest Arab investments in the United States.

The Justice Department said it was granting a request by the two companies to end the legal waiting period for consumating the merger.

Department officials said concerns surrounding the merger involved whether Santa Fe controlled any strategic and rare assets which would fall under the control of the Kuwaiti government.

The department's announcement did not address those concerns directly, but said simply that the department had completed its review and terminated its investigation.

Concern had been aired in Congress last month about the plan because Santa Fe is the parent company of C.F. Braun Inc., which has done several major defense-related projects involving nuclear materials.

Braun designed the Rocky Flats nuclear weapons installation in Colorado and recently assumed the contract on the Hanford nuclear weapons facility in Washington state.

A worry expressed during a congressional hearing was that Braun's expertise is in reprocessing plants that produce plutonium, a material that can be used to make nuclear weapons.

But in a statement, the Committee on Foreign Investment, an inter-agency panel, said that after its review, it "has concluded that the proposed merger does not have major negative implications for United States national interests."

The one-page statement did not elaborate.

The panel was set up about six years ago to look at the impact of foreign investments in the United States.

It is headed by Marc Leland, assistant treasury secretary for international affairs. Representatives of the departments of State, Defense and Commerce, the Office of the United States Trade Representative and the Council of Economic Advisers also are members.

The statement said the Santa Fe matter was also reviewed by the Interior, Justice and Energy departments and the Federal Trade Commission.

Kuwait Petroleum offered $51 a share for the 48.5 million outstanding shares of common stock of Santa Fe, which is based in Alhambra, Calif.

Santa Fe's directors, who include former President Gerald R. Ford, unanimously backed the deal.

Baytech kicks off first well

The well No. 1 C.W. Steel is number one in more ways than one. It's the first on the lease, first to be drilled by Baytech Inc., and the first hole for Gene Sledge Drilling's Rig 10.

Baytech, a Midland-based exploration company, was organized in August. Since, the company has been been putting together prospects, getting leases and raising money for an agressive drilling program. The venture was kicked off Wednesday with the spudding of the Steel.

Ben Strickling, Baytech operations engineer, said the No. 1 Steel is the first of many Spraberry (Dean) and Devonian wildcat wells the company plans to drill during the coming year. "We're kind of snowballing right now," Strickling said.

Drilling Baytech's first well is is the established, Midland-based contractor Gene Sledge Drilling. Sledge is breaking in a new rotary rig, No. 10, on the project.

Saturday, Baytech initated a second project, the re-entry of an abandoned well three miles northeast of Hermleigh, in Scurry County, for a test of the Strawn. Strickling said the well had originally been drilled to the Ellenburger, with some pretty good shows from the Strawn, which was never produced.

Working with Strickling in Baytech are Manny Sirgo, reservoir engineer, and Tom Kelly and Charles Steel landmen and promoters for the company. All are residents of Midland but Steel, who lives in Dalhart.

The Steel well is located in Martin County, eight miles west of Lenorah, 1,876 feet from the north line, and 660 feet from the south line of section 34, block 37, T-2-N, T&PRR survey. Projected total depth is 9,350 feet.

The No. 1 C.W. Steel will be carried in the Report-Telegram's daily drilling report.

InterNorth warms Midwest with Permian Basin gas

By DAVID SODAMANN
Oil Editor

It's mighty cold up north and people in chilly towns like Omaha and Minneapolis can thank the Permian Basin and InterNorth for what little warmth they have.

InterNorth, formerly known as Northern Natural Gas, is a well rounded energy company that markets natural gas in the upper Midwest. Much of that gas comes from beneath the Permian Basin region of West Texas and southeast New Mexico.

The Midland Wildcat Committee honored InterNorth Thursday evening with a reception at the Petroleum Club. Dan L. Gardner, InterNorth's senior vice president for fuel and chemical operations, took time out to talk about his company.

InterNorth, Gardner explained, is involved in five phases of the energy industry. The company markets natural gas in the Middle West, it has its own oil and gas exploration and production operations, the company produces liguid gas fuels, manufactures petrochemicals, and mines coal in the Rocky Mountain region.

The company has operated in the Basin for 35 to 40 years. "We are one of the major purchasers of natural gas in West Texas, and will continue to be," Gardner said.

The region's natural gas is the comapny's principal supply. A pipeline system carries Permian Basin gas all the way to the Great Lakes. Gardner estimated Internorth's gas fuels a thousand Midwestern towns, which are home for nearly six million people.

"I'm sure we would be classed by the Chamber of Commerce people as a major employer in this part of the country," Gardner said. He estimated InterNorth employs between 1,500 and 2,000 Basin residents.

Around the nation, Gardner said, InterNorth employs approximately 175 people through its exploration and production subsidiary Nortex. Many of these work here in Midland, Gardner said. Others operate in the energy centers of Denver and Tulsa and Nortex headquarters in Houston.

The comapny will spend around $200 million on exploration during the year, Gardner estimated. Of the total $140 million will come out of InterNorth's pocket and $60 million will be put up by Hart Exploration of Denver, which acts as agent for Hambrose Bank of London, the source of the capital.

Around $30 to $40 million in the exploration and production budget is being put to work in the Permian Basin. Gardner said the company's other operations in the Permian Basin would likely add another $30 to $40 million to the region's economy.

Dan L. Gardner

InterNorth concentrates its exploration activity in four areas, Gardner said. About 20 percent of it is done in West Texas and southeast New Mexico, another 20 percent is done in the Rocky Mountain region, 30 percent is off and on shore work along the Gulf Coast, and 30 percent is carried out in the Anadarko Basin area of Oklahoma and northern Texas.

On the way to northern stoves and furnaces, Internorth's Basin-bought natural gas passes through extractors where the liquid components are separated. Gardner said about 30,000 barrels per day of the LPG is used a feedstock by the InterNorth's petrochemical subsidiary Northern Petrochemical. The chemical company uses the LPGs to manufacture ethylene, a basic building block for many plastics. Some of ti goes into Internorth's "Peak" brand of antifreeze.

Gardner said it takes many million cubic feet of Permian Basin gas to make the 30,000 barrles of liquid used daily by the plastics making subsidiary. He said somewhere along the line proably all the gas produced in this region goes through extraction plants where the plastics making ingredients are removed.

Much of the LPGs removed from the Basin gas is marketed by North Liquid Fuels Company, another subsidiary. The organization is one of the nation's largest marketers of liquid fuels. The company's activity is concentrated along the East Coast, in the Caribbean and into northern portions of South America.

Gardner is projecting $4 billion in sales during 1981 for InterNorth. He is looking for $225 million is net income after taxes.

PBGC slates two courses

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer two courses beginning this week at the PBGC building located at 105 W. Illinois.

"Marine Evaporites: Facies Development and Relation to Hydrocarbons and Minerals Genesis" will be offered Friday, December 11, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturday, December 12 from 9 a.m. to noon.

Dr. Charlotte Schreiber, Associate Professsor of Geology, Queens College (C.U.N.Y.) will instruct.

The course is based on geologic history of evaporites as revealed by the rocks themselves and from diverse modern analogs. Emphasis will placed on the upper Miocene deposits of the Mediterranean because they are only weakley altered and are extensively available; however these observations and their implications are carried into other regions, including the Permian Basin.

Dr. Schreiber will devote one hour at the end of the afternoon for discussion. Anyone wishing her to discuss an area of personal interest should notify the Graduate Center or Dr. Schreiber prior to the day of the course. During the informal lab session, Dr. Schreiber will use photographs, rock samples and thin sections for demonstrations and discussion. Participants are asked to bring their own microscopes, along with any hand samples, thin sections or whole sections of core that they would like Dr. Schreiber to use as examples or to analyze.

Registration fee is $185.

"Joint Interest Billing" will be offered Wednesday, December 9, from 8:30 a.m. to noon. Stan Hawthorne, C.P.A., will instruct.

The purpose of this short course is to enable participants to gain a basic understanding of the various aspects and inherent complexities involved in the billing functions of joint interest operations.

Topics covered will be: terminology commonly used in joint interest operations; determining affect on joint interest billings due to changes in sharing arrangements; and processing and preparation of joint interest billings.

Registration fee is $45.

For registration or further information, call 563-2311.

Special papers wanted

WASHINGTON — Proposals for topics for special papers to be presented by U.S. delegates to the Eleventh World Petroleum Congress must be submitted by January 20 to the U.S. National Committee for World Petroleum Congress.

According to the Committee's secretary, William O'Keefe of the American Petroleum Institute, proposals for special papers should deal with new theories, areas of research, techniques, or processes, which can be considered of special importance to the petroleum industry.

The elevnth congress will be in London August 28 - Spetmeber 2, 1983.

Those wishing to submit 300-500 word synopses for consideration in the special paper catagory should include a brief biographical outline. Material should be sent to William O'Keefe, Secretary, U.S. National Committee for WPC, C/O American Petroleum Institute, 2101 L Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20037.

Rig count tumbles

The Permian Basin rotary rig count last week fell to the lowest level in six weeks. According to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co. the tally Friday was 474, down from 491 the previous week. Its the shortest count since October 30, when 479 rigs were making hole in the region.

In contrast, the national rig count took a big jump up recently. The International Association of Drilling Contractors reports 4,487 rigs actually making hole throughout the nation on Nov. 30.

The IADC's onshore count for Texas was 1,367 on Nov. 30. The New Mexico total was 150.

One year ago, Reed counted 359 rigs turning to the right in the Basin.

OIL INDUSTRY NOTES

AUSTIN — TDC Exploration, Inc., Austin, has announced it has entered into exploration agreements with Phillips Petroleum Company, Perry Gas Companies, Inc. and UKP Resources, Inc. providing for joint exploration activities covering various counties and parishes within the states of Texas and Louisiana.

The contemplated exploration activities could potentially extend over a period of three years with approximately $160 million dollars being expended by the parties for drilling operations upon jointly owned oil and gas leases.

TDC Exploration Inc. will be the operator of all initial test wells to be drilled under the agreements, and is expected that approximately 50 wells will be drilled during the first year of the agreements.

The commencement of drilling operations was initiated in October of 1981, and the parties anticipate that drilling operations will continue on an uninterrupted basis within defined drilling blocks established by TDC Exploration Inc.

HOUSTON — Crutcher Resources Corporation (ASE-CTR) has completed the acquisitions of Source Sevices Company, Inc., and P&L Tank Truck Co., Inc, for an aggregate of 178,000 shares of Crutcher Resources common stock. Each transaction will be accounted for as a pooling of interests.

Source Services, headquartered in Snyder, performs oil and gas well maintenance, workover and completion services in the Permian Basin region of West Texas. Equipment includes 12 daylight rigs, consisting of ten double units, a single unit and a swab rig.

The company also operates a vacuum tank truck and is in the process of further complementing its well servicing through the addition of rental tools, primarily blowout preventers and power swivels. For its fiscal year ended July 31, 1981, Source Services generated unaudited revenues of $3,422,000.

P&L Tank Truck, located in Longview, Texas, is engaged in the hauling of oilfield fluids and the rental of frac tanks. The company maintains a fleet of ten tank trucks, including vacum units and transports, and nine frac tanks.

For the eight months ended August 31, 1981, P&L Tank Truck had unaudited revenues of $612,000.

The operations and management of Source Services will continue without change.

Freddie Everton, formerly president of Source Services, has been named president of CRC Source Services, Inc., reporting to William G. Flesner, group vice president of Crutcher's well servicing operations.

P&L Tank Truck has been merged into CRC Circle M, Inc., Crutcher's 27-rig well servicing and tank truck operation in eastern Texas.

The two tank truck operations will be consolidated and operated as the DoBi Tank Trucks Unit of CRC Circle M, with headquarters located at the existing P&L Tank Truck facilities.

D. Dale Wood, president of Crutcher Resources, said, "The operations of Source Services represent an important expansion of our well servicing market into West Texas and a complement to our existing wireline business in the Permian Basin region. In addition, the acquisition of P&L Tank continues our expansion of CRC Circle M and provides us a foothold in the frac tank rental business."

Crutcher Resources Corporation is an oil and gas services and pipeline equipment company headquartered in Houston, Texas.

AMARILLO — William L. Spencer, group vice president, exploration and production of Diamond Shamrock Corporation's Oil and Gas Unit, has named Roger G. Martin, general manager of technical services.

In this newly created position, Martin will be responsible for all technical services related to the Unit's exploration and production activities and will report to Spencer.

Martin joined Diamond Shamrock in June 1981 as manager of petroleum engineering. He had previously been director of Naval Petroleum Reserves in California (Elk Hills) for the U. S. Department of Energy in Bakersfield, Calif.

Prior to that Martin served 20 years in the U. S. Navy retiring in 1979 with the rank of commander and officer in charge of Naval Petroleum Reserves in California (Elk Hills).

Martin holds a B.S. degree in Naval Sciences from the U. S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md., and a Bachelor of Science degree in civil engineering at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N. Y. He also holds a Master of Science degree in petroleum engineering from the University of Texas at Austin.

Headquartered in Dallas, Diamond Shamrock is international energy and chemicals firm with over $3 billion in sales and revenues in 1980.

Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. is proud to announce groundbreaking for its new core laboratory facility, which is being constructed at Bell's present site in Midland's Industrial Park.

In making the announcement, Bell president E. E. Runyan cited the current growth in the oil and gas industry and Bell's committment to providing the most complete and professional services possible to the industry as prime factors in the expansion.

Formed in 1969, Bell Petroleum Services has realised steady growth through competent and consistent management, and timely acquisitions. Sales for the company have grown at an annual compounded rate of 43 percent over the last five years, with earnings showing a strong 35 percent growth rate for the same period.

Since moving into its present offices in May of 1975, Bell has expanded operations to include not only The Permian Basin, eastern New Mexico and South-Central Texas, but the rapidly developing rocky mountain area as well.

"Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. is an emerging energy company." says Mr. Runyan. We have grown with Midland and will continue to play a major role in the vibrant economy of The Tall City."

The new core facility will encompass six thousand square feet, and at full operational capacity, will employ five core analysts, and some fifteen technicians and support personnel. According to Theodore H. Them, PHD, Core Laboratory Supervisor, "Bell will provide State-of-The-Art analysis of plug type and full diameter core."

TULSA — A reorganization of Parker Drilling Company's drilling operations has resulted in new responsibilities for four management team members.

The appointments of James W. Linn, senior vice president-corporate drilling operations; T. Shelby Frink, drilling operations manager; Gary T. Holley, vice president-North American operations; and Thomas E. Jones, Eastern Hemisphere operations manager are dffective immediately.

Linn, who joined the company's international operations in 1973, most recently has been responsible for the company's North American Operations. In his new position, all company drilling operations will report to Linn.

All company North American operations now are under the direction of Holley who was named a vice president in September 1981. He has been a member of the company's North American mamagement team since 1974.

As drilling operations manager, Frink moves from international operations to assist with the company's worldwide drilling operations. A 25-year company veteran, Frink reports to Linn in his new position.

Since joining Parker in 1968, Jones has lived in Indonesia, Kumait and Algeria. He has served as operations manager, division manager for the company's Eastern Hemisphere operations. In his new position, Jones is based in the company's Tulsa, Oklahoma headquarters office.

****

TULSA — Alan D. Durland has been named Parker Drilling Company director of human resources and development.

Durland's position, reporting directly to the president, was initiated in order to strengthen company personnel activities and recruiting practices. He is responsible for all Parker human resources functions as well as those of the company's international operations and its subsidiaries.

A 32-year company veteran, Durland's first Parker position was in its accounting department. He was promoted to other resonsibilities including chief accountant, corporate secretary and assistant vice president.

In 1972, Durland moved to Lima, Peru, as Parker's administrative manager. He returned to the company's Tulsa, Oklahoma, headquarters in 1977 as international division coordinator. Durland accepted a position in 1979 as company branch manager in Palma de Mallorca, Baleares, Spain. He served in that position until his recent appointment.

Durland, who is a graduate of Northeastern Oklahoma State University Tahlequah, Oklahoma, has relocated to Parker's Tulsa office.

Gas production up; oil, down

Texas oil and gas wells produced 578,751,846 Mcf of gas in August 1981, up .76 percent from field runs a year earlier.

Marketed gas production totaled 487,701,061 Mcf and reflected a 1.17 percent decrease from the September 1980 volume. Marketed production is the total gas to transmission lines, carbon black and plant fuel and lease use.

Gas exported from Texas in August totaled 240,371,225 Mcf. El Paso Natural Gas Co. was the month's largest exporter, moving 63,247,163 Mcf of gas of which 34,817,354 Mcf was Texas-produced gas.

Exports of Texas-produced gas in August totaled 171,365,087 Mcf, and reflected a 5.08 percent decrease from the year-earlier month.

Texas gas production in August came from 219,430 oil and gas wells.

In July 1981, Texas wells produced 578,751,846 Mcf of gas.

Marketed gas production in July totaled 477,505,777 Mcf. July exports of Texas-produced gas totaled 188,066,273 Mcf.

Texas crude oil production totaled 72,794,724 barrels in September.

The figure compared with final compilations of reported August 1981 production totaling 75,175,649 barrels and September 1980 production of 75,011,588 barrels.

Texas oil production averaged 2,426,490 barrels daily in September 1981, up from 2,425,021 barrels daily in August 1981 and down from 2,500,386 barrels daily in September 1980.

The September 1981 allowable totaled 96,325,786 barrels.

The preliminary September summary indicated Texas oil production was 24.43 percent under the allowable for the month.

Energy Ventures Inc. completes purchase

HOUSTON — Energy Ventures, Inc. has completed the purchase for $20,000,000 of a one-half interest in a producing oil property located in the Slaughter field, Hockley County, Texas.

Northwest Production Company, a subsidiary of Northwest Energy Company of Salt Lake City, has purchased the remaining one-half interest for $20,000,000.

Sid Lindley, president of Energy Ventures, said that additional development wells and intensified secondary recovery operations will be conducted during 1982.

"The acquisition of the Slaughter field property will broaden the company's asset base by significantly increasing our proven recoverable oil reserves," Lindley said. He also stated, "independent engineering studies indicate that our interest includes approximately two to 2-1/2 million barrels of proven oil reserves. Extensive nearby waterflood operations and pilot CO2 injection programs have shown that these processes can be successfully applied to this lease.

This investment will provide a stronger economic base for energy ventures, allowing the company to participate further in the growth of the energy industry."

Lindley said the purchase also includes participation rights in any hydrocarbons found in the deeper horizons of the slaughter field properties, which may prove to be significant in the future.

Calgary — Hudbay Oil (Malacca Strait) Ltd., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company limited, has completed a third delineation well on the MSU structure, drilled by the Company and its associates, offshore Indonesia in the Malacca Strait contract area has been flow tested at a combined rate of 11,075 barrels per day of clean, light gravity crude oil. The company has a 50 per cent interest in this 2.9 million acre which lies off shore Sumatra

The MSU-4 well was flow tested from five separate test intervals on a one and a half inch choke size. The sands tested are at depths from 3,372 feet to 3,692 feet. The MSU-4 well is located in a water depth of 55 feet, approximately 500 miles northwest of Jakarta and 100 miles west of Singapore.

A total of three successful delineation wells have been drilled following the August, 1980 oil discovery. Drilling is now continuing at the MSA-2 location which is the first delineation well to a second new field discovery. The MSA-1 well tested at a rate of 12,017 barrels per day in June, 1981 from a separate structure located approximately 3.5 miles south of the MSU area.

LAFAYETTE, La. — Central Louisiana Energy Corporation, through its exploration and production company, South Louisiana Production Company, Inc. (SLAPCO), has completed the No. 1 Barnhart well in Logan County, Colorado, a wildcat discovery which marks the Company's first oil production in the Denver-Julesburg Basin.

Initial production from the well was 140 barrels of oil and 63 barrels of water pumped per day.

Marathon Oil Co. successfully tests Lea County wildcat

FINDLAY, Ohio — Marathon Oil Company has successfully tested a wildcat well on its East Garrett prospect in Lea County, New Mexico.

The Marathon No. 1 Hatfield well flowed 482 barrels per day of 36-degree API gravity oil through a 1/2-inch choke on a drillstem test.

The interval tested was between 8,335 feet and 8,399 feet.

Total depth of the well was 9,000 feet.

Drilling and evaluation of the well, in which Marathon has a 99.11 percent working interest, is continuing. The company holds a substantial interest in some 2,000 acres surrounding the well.

****

FINDLAY, Ohio — Deutsche Marathon Petroleum GmbH has plugged and abandoned an exploratory well drilled in the German sector of the North Sea.

Deutsche Marathon Petroleum (DMP) is a wholly owned subsidiary of Marathon Oil Company.

The J-11-1 well, located in approximately 90 feet of water some 30 miles northwest of the island of Helgoland, failed to encounter any significant hydrocarbons while being drilled to a depth of 17,924 feet.

DMP is operator and has a 60 percent interest in the block. Other companies on the block and their interests are: Husky Oil (Germany) Inc., 7.5 percent; Nordsee Erdoel-und Erdgas Gewinnungs GmbH, 6.0; North Sea Exploration Company, 3.0; North Sea Oil Company, Ltd., 13.7; Grace Petroleum GmbH, 5.0; Sunlite International, Inc., 3.0; and Valmar Petroleum Corporation, Ltd., 1.8.

****

Zenith Exploration Company, Inc., Houston, has placed four additional wells on production in the Austin Chalk trend, Frio County, Texas.

The four wells are producing a total of 750 barrels per day from the Austin Chalk and Buda formation.

All locations were picked utilizing Zenith's new geophysical technique, DIVA.

Additional wells are presently being drilled.

****

FORT WORTH — Sunbelt Exploration, Inc. has just announced that Sunbelt Oilfield Services, Inc. of Dallas, Texas has staked four locations on the White block and two locations on the Melvin block.

The wells on the Melvin block are to be commenced in early December.

Sunbelt and SOS have retained the services of Douglas Radiation of Irving, Texas to prepare a Radiation Intensity Report on this acreage.

****

FORT WORTH — Sunbelt Exploration, Inc. has entered into a contract with Sunbelt Oilfield Services, Inc. of Dallas, Texas (SOS) for drilling minimum of eight wells.

Sunbelt's agreement with SOS provides that SOS, as operator, will drill a minimum of eight wells by February 28, 1982, on Sunbelt's 30,000 acre block in McCulloch, Concho and Menard Counties, Texas.

Under the agreement, SOS will pay all intangible drilling and completion costs on the eight wells for a 50 percent working interest in the wells. Sunbelt will provide the leases and pay the tangible completion costs on the eight wells for its 50 percent working interest.

SOS will have the obligation to inform Sunbelt in writing by February 15, 1982, if it intends to drill an additional seven wells on the same terms as applicable to the initial eight wells.

CASPER, Wyo. — Burton/Hawks, Inc. of Casper has announced it recovered oil and gas on a preliminary test at an exploratory well on the Overthrust Belt in northeast Utah.

The well, No. 28-1 Aagard in Section 28-3N-8E, Summit County, was drillstem tested between 6,145 and 6,250 feet in the lower Kelvin formation. Natural gas surfaced in 40 minutes on the three-hour test, but was too small to measure. Recovery was 540 feet of fluid which was 50 percent high-gravity oil. There was no water, the company said.

Burton/Hawks is preparing to drill ahead to a depth of 7,000 to 7,500 feet.

Production casing will be set on the basis of the lower Kelvin test recovery, Burton/Hawks said. Burton/Hawks as operator owns a 25 percent working interest before payout in the well, convertible to a 32.81 percent working interest after payout.

SAN ANTONIO — Gulf Energy & Development Corporation (OTC-nasdaq "Gulf") announced that subsidiary Gulf Energy Producing Company and other working interest owners have discovered natural gas in three different areas in Colorado, Louisiana and Texas.

NORTHEAST COLORADO

The No. 1 Schmidt has been completed as a natural gas producer onitheir Raindrop Area Prospeact in Logan County in Northeast Colorado. The completion interval is at a depth of 4,578 feet in the J-Sand.

The new well flowed 3,330,000 cubic feet of natural gas with a flowing pressure of 923 pounds per square inch through a 1 1/2 inch choke. The shut in pressure was 1,051 pounds per square inch.

Casing has been set and wellhead equipment has been installed. Production and sale of gas is expected to begin by mid-December.

Stream, Inc. (Operator) and Gulf Energy (25 percent working interest) jointly own 1,200 to 1,500 acres of leases in the area around the new well and plan to drill additional wells in 1982. Over 5,000 acres are jointly leased in the region by the parties.

SOUTH LOUISIANA

The company also recently announced the development of natural gas reserves in Southern Louisiana.

Gulf Energy Producing Company participated with an 11.7 percent working interest in a new gas condensate well, which has just been completed as a development well in the Lawson Field in Acadia Parish, Louisiana.

Borden Energy Resources is the operator of the No. 1 Pelto which flow tested 1,400,000 cubic feet per day of natural gas and 20 barrels of condensate from a depth of 11,100 feet in the Frio Formation. Production will begin next week.

SOUTH TEXAS

The No. 1 L.L. Brown has been completed as a shallow gas well at a depth of 1,797 feet in the Vicksburg Formation.

This well is located on the Caesar Field structure in Bee County, Texas. The well flowed dry natural gas at the rate of 354,000 cubic feet per day on a 10/64 inch choke with 613 per square inch flowing tubing pressure, and has a calculated open flow potential of 1,025,000 cubic feet per day.

The well will begin producing and selling gas in mid-December. Gulf Energy has 37.5 percent working interest in the well.

Computer cartography— a new breed of mapmaking

By PENNY PAGANO
(c) 1981, Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — A silent black revolving door drops a curtain of darkness across a small room that is empty except for a solitary machine. In the pitch blackness, inside a long metal cylinder, light beams of a powerful laser go to work.

With speed and precision, the laser glides across the cylinder, scanning a map and collecting names and other bits of data to be fed to a computer.

This sophisticated device, which saves skilled technicians hours of tedious drawing, is part of a new breed of electronic mapmakers. And the new equipment — lasers, computers, space satellites, and other technological marvels — are fast revolutionizing the ancient art of cartography.

The day is not far off, experts say, when a national computer bank will bring together myriad mapping details — from ocean currents to population trends — now collected separately by dozens of government agencies.

When that day arrives, it will be possible to turn out custom-tailored maps to meet almost any need. An individual planning a trip, for instance, could ask the computer to print out a map detailing possible routes, weather forecasts and diesel gas station locations. With similar ease, an oil company might order up a map to provide details on remote areas of land that are considered promising for drilling.

AND, TO FURTHER SPEED the process, video display tubes may be used to deliver such maps to users.

"There will be a time when the cartographic map as we know it won't be on paper," predicted Ralph E. Ehrenberg, assistant chief of the Library of Congress' geography and map division.

While most people take maps for granted, they have played a vital — and changing — communication role in Western civilization. Their evolution was affected by discoveries of new trade routes and new countries, by wars and changes of political power, by man's increased mobility, and now, by new technological advances.

Most of us are at ease with gas-station maps (although it never seems possible to close them the same way they were unfolded) with grade school globes that showed us how far away China is, and with classroom wall maps of the United States that always seemed to have more states and capitols than it was possible to memorize.

Less widely known are the host of specialized maps that have become indispensable to many types of work. Maps of air routes are essential for aircraft pilots, and air traffic controllers just as navigational charts are for ship captains. Other kinds of maps detail changing land formations, weather trends, earthquake fault lines, and ocean currents, as well as population densities and trends.

GOVERNMENTS USE MAPS not only for preparing defense strategies and military operations, but for a variety of other purposes, including taxes, census-taking, highways, urban and environmental planning and energy resource development. The new technology is making it much easier to produce maps that are more complex and more accurate, experts say.

"I have far more confidence in maps now," says Richard J. Darley, chief cartographer for the National Geographic Society, one of the major private map producers in the United States.

At the same time, the increasing trend to specialization makes maps more utilitarian, and some say, much less artistic and attractive.

The era of specialized maps — and the increased demand they stimulate — also places strains on some basic map work. For instance, the U.S. Geological Survey, part of the Department of the Interior that produces the official U.S. maps, has been trying for years to map the entire United States in 40-60 mile segments. It will take 55,000 maps all told to complete the task, which to date is only 80 percent completed.

"Updating these maps is a mammouth job," Roy R. Mullen, associate chief of the Survey's national mapping division, said. "If we only had a country the size of New Jersey or Pennsylvania, we could do a great job."

IN SETTING PRIORITIES, the survey has paid more attention to populated areas than to highly remote areas like the alkaline flats in Nevada. Now, however, with such things as energy needs changing, some of those more remote areas are being surveyed for their resource potential.

Other mapmakers like Darley at National Geographic, say they must spend increasing time keeping track of world changes reflecting newly independent countries, boundary shifts and political disputes over borders, and changes in names such as the Chinese decision to Romanize its language with Pinyin spelling. The society has one man who does nothing but travel to record such changes.

Darley, who has been a mapmaker for 34 years, following in the footsteps of his father, drew daily battle maps in France for Gen. John J. Pershing in World War I, doesn't seem to mind.

"If nothing ever changed," he said, "we wouldn't have a job."

Mapmaking has its own folklore, mysteries and intrigue. Centuries ago, some mapmakers would deliberately draw mistakes to see if a rival would copy them. And there are stories about important treaties that were based on poorly drawn maps.

FOR MORE THAN A CENTURY, California was mapped as an island because early Spanish navigators drew it that way in the early 1600s. Their mistake persisted throughout Europe until 1747, when King Ferdinand VII had to issue a royal decree proclaiming that "California is not an island."

Today, some countries release only those details of geography they wish others to know. The Russians, for example, have been notorious for purposely publishing unreliable maps. They leave off details like railroads. The best street map of Moscow isn't put out by the Russians, but by the Central Intelligence Agency.

After man's exploration of the world, the greatest influences on mapmaking have come from technology — the printing press, the telescope, aerial photography and sophisticated electronic measuring devices.

Budget cuts of more than one-third proposed for DOE

By JOHN M. BERRY
(c) 1981, The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Office of Management and Budget has proposed cutting the non-defense portions of the Energy Department budget by more than one-third next fiscal year, virtually eliminating spending for solar and fossil-fuels research and conservation, it has been learned.

OMB wants DOE to have only $9.3 billion in new budget authority next year, $5.1 billion less than the department originally requested and $2 billion less than this year's appropriation.

Defense programs and nuclear warheads account for more than half of the $9.3 billion, while another $2.3 billion would be earmarked for filling the strategic petroleum reserve. Nuclear energy research would take about half of the remaining $2 billion, with abot $250 million slated for the controversial Clinch River Breeder Reactor.

In contrast, budget authority for all DOE conservation programs would fall to only $19 million in 1983. Last year such programs got $712 million.

Solar research and demonstration programs, which got half a billion dollars in 1981, would end up with only $70 million in 1983.

Research on fossil fuels — coal, oil and natural gas — which was a $1 billion effort in 1981 would plummet to only $107 million.

In addition, OMB wants much of the cost of research into finding a permanent solution for storing nuclear wastes shifted to the nation's utilities. The budget agency has given DOE 30 days in which to come up with a legislative proposal to accomplish this goal.

Altogether, the cuts apparently would mean a loss of about 4,000 jobs at DOE, which had 19,567 employees at the end of September. The president has promised to abolish the department.

Energy Secretary James B. Edwards will appeal some of the proposed cuts at a meeting Monday with the White House budget review board, whose members are OMB director David A. Stockman and presidential aides Edwin Meese III and James A. Baker III.

DOE originally sought $14.4 billion in budget authority, but OMB directed the department to lower that by $2 billion to $3 billion. DOE obliged, reducing its request to about $12.5 billion including spending for the strategic petroleum reserve. OMB then slashed another $3 billion for the proposal.

Congressional sources confirmed the magnitude of the proposed cuts, many of which were made public by the newsletter Inside Energy.

If OMB prevails and President Reag$n seeks essentially to eliminate the solar, fossil fuels and conservation programs, he will meet major opposition on Capitol Hill. In conservation, for instance, Congress is on the way to appropriating more than $400 million for 1982, compared to the $172 million sought in Reagan's latest budget requests.

Reagan's revisions last February to the Carter administration's 1982 budget included projections of much higher spending for solar, fossil fuels and conservation programs than the latest OMB proposals. Instead of the total of $770 million foreseen in February for the three in 1983, OMB now wants less than $200 million.

Money for the strategic petroleum reserve would be cut by about one-third from this year's level of $3.4 billion. Since most of the money goes to buy oil for the reserve, the administration must intend to reduce the rate at which it is to be filled.

Many of the cuts in the nuclear area involved shifting the burden from the government to utilities in dealing with spent fuel from reactors used for generating electricity. However, among the other cuts was elimination of money for a second generation breeder reactor that was supposed to follow construction of the Clinch River facility. The administration has declined to halt Clinch River despite doubts about its potential usefulness because it is located in Tennessee, home of Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker.

Bad switch blamed for gas release

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — Radioactive gas was released accidentally from the Trojan nuclear power plant because a switch was installed upside down, Oregon Energy Department officials say.

The department disclosed its finding Thursday in two releases of xenon gas into the air around the Rainier plant, located about 50 miles northwest of Portland.

The gas was released on Nov. 17 and Nov. 18.

Nuclear engineer Bill Dixon of the Energy Department said a toggle switch was removed for maintenance and was reinstated in such a way that when it was set to the "off" position, it actually was on.

Dixon said a plant operator noticed Nov. 19 that the switch was upside down.

The Portland General Electric Co., which operates the plant, disclosed Tuesday that another accidental release of the radioactive gas occurred during 20 hours in September. The cause of that leak was not disclosed.

Dixon said all three releases involved too small an amount of gas to endanger public health significantly.

The gas is produced in Trojan's reactor core by the splitting of uranium atoms.

Dixon said the leaks prompted PGE to order plant operators to check radiation monitors more frequently and to reset radiation alarms to detect smaller leaks than previously.

PGE spokesman Bruce Landrey said PGE reported the leaks promptly to the Energy Department and the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

"The radiation release was insignificant," Landrey said. "Any resultant exposure would only be a small percentage, at the plant boundary, of what the average individual gets from watching television during a year."

Council says substantial oil, gas resources believed to exist in Arctic

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Petroleum Council has reported substantial undiscovered oil and gas resources are believed to exist in the U.S. Arctic.

The council, an advisory group appointed by Energy Secretary James B. Edwards, issued a study showing "potentially recoverable" undiscovered oil and gas equivalent to 44 billion barrels of oil in the American Arctic.

This is 20 percent higher than the oil and gas resources estimated for the region by the U.S. Geological Survey, and the council report said: "Substantial undiscovered oil and gas resources are believed to exist in the Arctic regions of the United States."

The council, made up mostly of oil and gas industry executives, said in its report that the basic technology to find and transport the resources of the remote region are available, but it added that operations will "be much more costly" than those in milder climates.

It said that "limited economic evalutations" show that large reserves are required to support the high cost of oil and gas field development and transportation systems.

"Reserves" are generally used to mean oil and gas known to exist with reasonable certainty, while "resources" — which the council report dealt with — are tentatively estimated to exist.

The council report said its estimate was arrived at by averaging "anonymously supplied expert opinions" from the 20 organizations that helped put together the study.

The area covered in the survey is northern Alaska and offshore areas north of the Aleutian Islands.

A Christmas wish

With the Christmas season officially launched Friday when Mayor G. Thane Akins sent life surging into the red, green, blue, orange and white lights adorning downtown's giant Christmas tree, the countdown has begun for the jolly old elf's annual visit.

That fact already is obvious, as shops and stores are being decorated for the holiday and homes, too, are taking on a Christmas sparkle. The Christmas season puts a bit of magic in the air, as shoppers begin to flood the stores in search of those "just right" gifts.

This is an exciting season of the year! But all too often, it seems, as the season progresses the inconveniences it necessarily brings often result in shortened tempers, impatience and animosity — the very opposite of what the Christmas season is all about.

There are a number of messages for all of us in this season, not the least of which is recognition of the brotherhood of man and the importance of good will among the people of the world community. It is up to us to determine whether we will live peacefully on this earth or if we will destroy one another.

Of course, the religious aspect of Christmas is of vital importance to Christians. It is that aspect of the season that gives life its meaning and makes this one of the two or three most important religious holidays for those of the Christian faith.

One part of that though, is the message of brotherly love and caring. Throughout the year we are embroiled in our daily lives, running hither and yon with no time to spare for our fellow man. We have forgotten all we learned last Christmas season about taking a moment each day to care about others and to bear their burdens. We have forgotten the love and giving spirit so abundantly evident in the stories detailing the birth of Jesus Christ and, in another context, jolly old St. Nicholas.

But to a degree those vastly different stories bring home the importance of the Christmas season to the fundamental Christian philosophy of life. Rarely do we live as we should live, giving meaning to the Golden Rule in our daily lives. Yet if we are too weak as human beings to live each day as we are taught we should live, let's at least live the way we are taught throughout one season of the year.

This Christmas season in Midland let's live life as it was intended.

Hope for Honduras

A vigorously contested election conducted with no more than a modest amount of fraud anywhere in Central America is news. When such an election occurs in a country ruled for the last decade by the military, as dirt-poor Honduras has been, the news must be considered especially heartening.

And when that election results in a decisive victory for a political moderate who openly professes friendship for the United States, Washington has reason indeed to celebrate.

So too do the 3.6 million people of Honduras. Their president-elect, Liberal Party leader Roberto Suazo Cordova, appears sincerely dedicated to returning his country to representative government. Equally important, he seems determined to avoid the bloody civil strife that has overtaken neighboring El Salvador and, to a lesser degree, Guatemala.

Accomplishing this latter objective in particular would be no mean feat. Honduras shares long, undefended borders with El Salvador and Guatemala. The brutal war between Communist insurgents and Salvadoran government troops has already spilled across the border in the form of military raids against refugee camps suspected of harboring guerrillas.

Nor is Honduras itself immune to the troublemaking potential of indigenous communists aided, perhaps, by outsiders with Cuban connections. Although Honduras' military government was reasonably enlightened, President-elect Suazo will still inherit the stubborn problems of rural poverty that plague most Central American republics, and create opportunities for Marxist organizers.

With luck, and appropriate levels of economic aid from the United States and elsewhere, the new Suazo government has a chance to maintain Honduras as an island of relative tranquility in a region seething with violence and revolutionary turmoil. Now that Mr. Suazo has won the right to try, Washington and other Western Hemisphere capitals with a vested interest in his success ought to be asking how they can help.

ART BUCHWALD

Coming home for holiday not the same!

I went over to see Harvey Dunlap during the Thanksgiving holidays and pay my respects to his kids, who were home from school.

Art Buchwald

Max was eating breakfast, Chris was eating lunch and Dottie was holding hands with her boyfriend.

I'd never seen Dunlap so happy. "This is the first time since they've been home that we've had this many at the table at the same time."

"Who is that down at the end?"

"That's someone Dougie brought from school. I think her name is Anna, and she's from Brazil. Do you speak Portuguese?"

"No. Where's Dougie?"

"He's upstairs sleeping. I have an appointment to see him at five."

"An appointment?" I said.

"Yes. You see, Dougie said he would be so busy this weekend it would be best for us to make an appointment with him. He worked Edna and me in for 5 o'clock."

"That's damn decent of him," I said. "Most college kids aren't that thoughtful."

"Well, as you know, Dougie is studying to be a doctor, and he probably got the idea from that."

"You want to go to a movie?" I asked Dunlap.

"I'd like to, but I don't know what the kids are doing yet, and I can't walk out on them in case they decide to stay home."

"When will you know?"

"I'm not sure. They never can tell you until the last moment."

"Why don't you take a head count in the morning as to who will be eating dinner at night?" I suggested.

"We tried that yesterday. Everybody said they would be home for dinner, but as the day progressed they kept peeling off, because they had gotten a better offer. In the end there were only three of us — Edna, myself and Anna."

"Dougie left Anna at home?"

"He had a date with his pals from high school, and told Anna she'd be bored."

"Max looks good," I said.

"Come to think of it, he does. This is the first time I've seen him since he got home."

"Wasn't he at your Thanksgiving dinner?"

"He was going to Florida with a friend, but at the last moment the friend decided to go to Aspen, so he drove home and missed our Turkey by a day."

"How long is he going to stay?"

"He says either until tonight, tomorrow or Monday, depending on some friends he's waiting to hear from in Vermont."

"It must be hard for you and Edna to make plans when no one is quite sure what they're up to. Where is Edna?"

"She's out in the kitchen cooking a roast beef just in case anyone decides to stay home."

"Has she seen the kids yet?"

"Yes and no. I believe they kissed her when they arrived, and she caught sight of two of them coming home this morning at 7 o'clock. But I think the only extended conversation she had was when she asked who took her car keys."

"If I were you," I said, "I'd make them sign up on a schedule indicating when they were arriving, how many friends they were bringing home, how many meals they were planning to have, and when their flights were leaving. As a parent you have a right to know that much about your children."

"We had that information when they came — but no one stuck to the schedule."

"So forget about them and do what you want to do."

"We announced that yesterday, and Chris said, 'If all we are going to do is go out, I don't see why we came home in the first place.'"

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Reagan's Latin aid plan too little, too late

WASHINGTON — The flames of revolution are crackling across the Caribbean and Central America, fanned by the discontent of the poor after decades of misrule. The threat of new conflagrations in our backyard has spurred President Reagan into action.

Jack Anderson

The headlines have focused on the military aid that he has rushed to this vital but volatile region to put out the fires. But he has also sought to remove the combustible ingredients — the poverty and despotism — that have caused the flaming.

He has come up with an ambitious and farsighted plan, for example, to alleviate the economic miseries of our impoverished neighbors. In many Latin American nations, the impoverishment is so severe that only massive infusions of outside aid can hope to prevent the political chaos that will inevitably follow a collapse of their economies.

But the two oil-rich nations Reagan was counting on for help — Mexico and Venezuela — have been cool to the administration's overtures. They have their own economic troubles. For that matter, economic problems are piling up at home, which will make it difficult for Reagan to bail out the Caribbean countries with U.S. funds alone.

Meanwhile, the tide of events waits for no plan. As the economic woes of the Caribbean basin continue to worsen, political crises threaten to destroy whatever chance the administration's policies had of success.

Most of the attention in recent months has centered on El Salvador, thanks to the bloody civil strife between "rule-or-ruin" forces of left and right. But the situation is also perilous in Guatemala, Honduras, Costa Rica and Jamaica.

Recent classified State Department reports from these countries, reviewed by my associate Bob Sherman, make it ominously clear that the Reagan plan, if implemented over the next few years, would prove to be too little and too late.

Consider the following:

— Costa Rica, with its admirable tradition of democratic rule, has no chance of an economic recovery within the next five years, according to a confidential State Department analysis. That could be too much for Costa Rican democracy to survive.

— "Guatemala's economy has deteriorated very seriously over the past 27 months," a State Department report begins. It lays the economic decline to various factors: increased violence, particularly assassinations and kidnappings; low world prices for coffee, sugar and cotton; substantial and growing budget deficits, and the overall depressed Central American Common Market. The outlook is gloomy, the report concludes, explaining that "no turnaround can realistically be expected until the security situation can be effectively dealt with."

— Last month the foreign minister of Honduras came to Washington hat in hand seeking a $100 million loan to ease his country's deepening economic crisis. The Reagan administration had to turn him away disappointed. Meanwhile, from Tegucigalpa, a veteran foreign service analyst reported that the immediate economic future in Honduras was "grim," and predicted "an even bleaker outlook for the civilian regime which will take office in January" after years of military rule.

— In El Salvador, where leftist activity is strong despite liberal U.S. economic aid, violence and corruption continue to sabotage the nation's already shaky economy. The U.S. embassy has received reports that the 1981 cotton crop, which is vital to the Salvadoran economy, will be only half as large as last year's.

The embassy has also received complaints that U.S. assistance has failed to reach the small businessmen and labor groups for whom it was intended. Labor leaders claim the Salvadoran government has been "absorbing" the aid funds, and urged that the United States make greater efforts to control disbursement. In a cable to Washington, the embassy noted that the complaints "reflected a collective frustration over a chaotic economy and an inefficient government."

— Jamaica has been perhaps the United States' biggest disappointment in the region. The leftist regime of Michael Manley was replaced several months ago by conservative, pro-U.S. Prime Minister Edward Seaga, and the Reagan administration had hoped Jamaica would be a model of development that would encourage other nations to forgo entanglement with the Communists. But the hoped-for economic upturn has not materialized. At best, the Seaga government can expect zero economic growth this year. Despite some $800 million in foreign aid, no real growth is anticipated in the coming year.

In response to all these pessimistic reports from the field, the State Department and Agency for International Development prepared a $300 million supplemental appropriation request for emergency help to the troubled Caribbean nations. But the request was never sent to Congress because, my sources say, officials realized there was no chance of passage.

The basic trouble is that Reagan's high hopes for the Caribbean require increased U.S. aid for the region, at a time when the budget is being sharply reduced. Similarly, the president's hopes for domestic recovery depend on increased business investment at home — leaving little to spare for riskier investment south of the border.

Given a healthy U.S. economy and enough time, the well-reasoned Reagan plan could do wonders for the Caribbean basin. But attenton to domestic economic problems will cause delays ... and time is running out.

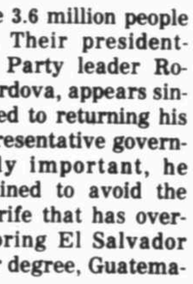
GEORGE F. WILL

California's Jerry Brown searching for a new vocabulary

LOS ANGELES — Jerry Brown takes to ideas the way some people take to whiskey. At 43, he is a veteran of seven years of governing one-tenth of America's electorate. He retains his zest for political argument — not idle word-tennis, but serious conversation about what could become a distinctive strand of Democratic politics.



George F. Will

He exaggerates, but only somewhat, when he says "language is everything in this business." If he can find a vocabulary suitable for Reagan's era — and Reagan's state — his 1982 Senate campaign could test the political appeal of what in Europe is called "social democracy." California is the right laboratory for testing the political appeal of a more "mixed" or "managed" economy.

Brown knows that in California, as elsewhere, there is little support for traditional liberal activism — explicit redistribution of income for egalitarian purposes. But he believes Californians are receptive to a program for more direct government production of "human capital" (trained manpower) and government "targeting" of financial capital.

At one time Brown seemed to favor an almost Franciscan indifference to America's worldly ambitions — economic growth, technological virtuosity. But today he represents the California that believes the slogan on the back of dollar bills — "Novus ordo seclorum." That means, roughly: You ain't seen nuthin' yet.

In recent years high technology, in the form of semi-conductors and other electronics, were responsible for one of every four new jobs in California. Brown believes California's, and perhaps the nation's, growth will be driven by information technologies such as computers, software, robotics, biosciences. But California's high-technology industries require 61,000 additional electrical and computer engineers by 1985. California schools will produce fewer than 15,000. Japan, with half the population, is producing 2,000 more than the United States each year.

Brown's administration has abolished the capital-gains tax for businesses with fewer than 500 employees — the businesses most fertile in technological innovations. Now he favors "joint efforts between industry and government," especially public funding of industrially applicable research, perhaps including the investment of state pension funds to buy equity in "rising" industries. He has created a Commission on Industrial Innovation, including some conservative business leaders, assigned to draft a blueprint for a high-technology future, with public financing of industrial innovations.

Brown's thinking is, in a sense, as American as land-grant colleges, which have been part of the government's spectacularly successful programs for creating science-intensive agriculture. But Brown's evolving vocabulary of "targeting" investment for "emerging industries" and "identified growth sectors" recalls European and, especially, "Japan, Inc." practices. A staff paper says:

"While we do not find it desirable to mirror the Japanese system, of all the American states, California has the most direct interest in developing policies which counter the primary thrusts of Japanese industrial policy because of our high and increasing dependency on technology-based industries."

Brown understands a frequently neglected task of government better than he understands why the task is so frequently neglected. That task is to lengthen society's time horizon, to look down the road to anticipate, or even midwife, new constituencies. But government is constantly driven to preserve the status quo. An institution designed to allocate capital to tomorrow's "winning" industries is apt to be diverted to practicing "lemon socialism," bailing out Chryslers that already have constituencies. What is needed, Brown says, too blandly, is "basic agreement among leaders" of the regions, government, business, labor, the intelligensia. If so, what is needed is a miracle. Political allocation of a resource as scarce and valuable as capital is apt to generate conflict rather than the consensus that effective allocation presupposes.

Brown, however, believes that Californians, who especially appreciate the importance of their university system in their postwar boom, associate public investments with private productivity. They associate their tax payments with private sector vitality. Proposition 13 made California the birthplace of the tax revolt. But Brown says the essence of California remains "an automobile in search of a suburb." That means highways, schools, sewer and water systems, fire protection — in a word, government.

By expressing too many trendy ideas in trendy idioms, Brown armed critics who consider him fluffy-headed. But today he is not trendy; he is leaning against the wind — a gale, really — of disparagement of government. His ideas have serious pedigrees and represent a logical extension of 20th century Democratic policy, which is more than many prominent Democrats can claim.

Brown would not lower the tone of Democratic circles in Washington, where Democrats are proclaiming, insistently, a search for "new ideas." They are conducting such a desultory search that they probably will not find a new idea unless one is served on a silver salver in Mrs. Harriman's drawing room, which is improbable.

New faces may come to front with next year's election

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Around the Capitol, the arrival of fall usually means piles of leaves around the walks, and piles of political announcements in the press release baskets.

Both the leaves and the releases have been a little slower in piling up this year, but both have begun to do so.

And it's already clear that the political picture in Texas is likely to have several new folks in positions of authority after the next election — regardless of how well various challengers fare against incumbents.

For instance, the 31-member Texas Senate already is guaranteed four new members, just from decisions by senators to try other endeavors.

Sen. Peyton McKnight, D-Tyler, is running for the Democratic nomination for governor.

Sen. Bill Meier, R-Euless, has decided to sit out the next election — at least as far as being a candidate for anything (there's still speculation he might be talked into a congressional race).

Sen. Walter Mengden, R-Houston, is fighting U.S. Rep. Jim Collins for the right to challenge U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen (D).

And Sen. Dee Travis, R-Garland, is making a race for Congress.

On the other side of the Rotunda in Austin, some major changes in personnel are expected in the House — with Speaker Bill Clayton leaving for his race for land commissioner.

Clayton's exit has sparked off another race for the speakership, with Rep. Gil Lewis, D-Fort Worth, the apparent leader, but with Rep. Carlyle Smith, D-Grand Prairie, working hard to overcome Lewis' advantage.

Some House members have decided they've served long enough in the House, and their decisions assure changes in committee leadership in 1983.

Rep. Bennie Bock, D-New Braunfels, chairman of the Environmental Affairs Committee, announced he's retiring from the House (but is keeping his options open).

Rep. Hamp Atkinson, D-New Boston, chairman of the Public Education Committee, also decided to step down.

Undoubtedly, other incumbents will be (or already have) announced that they've decided to move on to other endeavors.

In fact, several have announced they're seeking other offices — and more are likely to do so after the results of the lawsuits on the various redistricting plans are known.

However, that isn't expected until well after 1982 is begun — but it won't come as any great surprise if a bunch of announcements come in quickly after final court rulings are made.

At the statewide level, the governor's race seems to be drawing the most attention, with McKnight getting off to an early start against Clements — whose intentions to seek another term were well known long before his official announcement.

Several other folks have been expected to get into the race with McKnight for the Democrats' nod — including Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong, who announced initially he was leaving politics, but then decided that the governor's office looked inviting.

Attorney General Mark White also has been talked about as a possible contender for the governorship — although there have been indications that White will seek to remain in his current post for another four years.

Long-time party worker Garry Mauro was the first Democrat to announce in the Land Commissioner's campaign.

Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown recently made his re-election bid official, in what has been one of the livelier initial efforts.

Former "Texas Observer" editor Jim Hightower, who ran against Jim Nugent a surprisingly close race for the Railroad Commission, now has set his sights on Brown's job.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who was one of the very first officeholders in Texas to announce his re-election plans, faces a GOP challenger in his attempt to establish a record for holding the No. 2 spot in State government.

Secretary of State George Strake is making his initial bid for elected office against Hobby — with hopes that Texans' increased willingness to vote for Republicans will work to his benefit.

Comptroller Bob Bullock, who also announced earlier, faces challenges by former Travis County Sheriff Raymond Frank and Dallas accountant Fred E. (Buddy) Clarke III (both Republicans).

And Bentsen, in addition to Mangden and Collins, has another GOP challenger in San Antonio businessman Don Richardson.

So, all in all, it looks like a lively election season.

In fact, Secretary of State David Dean predicts there will be more contested statewide, congressional and legislative races in 1982 — in both the primaries and the general elections — than there have been for many, many years.

And the early indications are that Dean will be proven correct.

POSITIVE THINKING

Giving thanks may make your life fit for thanksgiving

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

"Every day I give thanks for the wonderful things that happen to me," declared a young man enthusiastically. "And do you know something? The more I give thanks, the more I have reason to be thankful. Blessings just seem to add up one after another!"

In these remarks this man stated a basic law, that the more you practice thankfulness the more you have to be thankful for. It is a fact that thankfulness tends to reproduce in kind. It reverses the flow of good away from you and sets flowing in your direction new benefits and opportunities. The attitude of gratitude revitalizes the mental process and activates fresh creativity. It focuses the personality so that you can work better, think better, get along better with people, and, in short, it conditions your abilities to function more effectively in every respect.

I first met this man one night in an East Coast city where in a speech I spoke of the limitations we put on our own potential, how incredibly we shackle and restrict ourselves by glum and negative thinking. Afterwards this man spoke to me.

"Theoretically I agree with what you said, but it wouldn't work for me," he declared. "Everything goes wrong, always wrong." "That's strange," I replied. "You look like an unusual person, if I may say so." And when he gave the requested rundown on his educational experience it checked out as top quality; in fact, he had been an honor student. "Guess you have the brains all right," I said. "but of course even the best brains can get fouled up by wrong thinking. Perhaps that is the reason everything goes wrong for you."

When everything consistenly goes wrong, something must be wrong somewhere in the personality pattern. For wrongness inevitably produces wrong results. Therefore some procedure was required in this case to correct the wrongness and build up the rightness element.

I suggested that he might be helped by the practice of thankfulness. He looked bewildered, evidently considering the idea somewhat irrelevant but when the process was outlined I must say he carried it out faithfully and with excellent results.

"Everything is wrong for you?" I asked. "Isn't something right, just a few things, maybe?"

"No, everything has gone wrong. The outlook is not only dark, but black," he finished gloomily.

I took a sheet of paper and drew a line down the middle to form two equal columns, and over the lefthand column wrote "Things that are wrong," and over the other, "Things that are right."

"You won't have anything to put in that right-hand column," he growled."

"O.K., let's see when we come to it. Let's start on the things that are wrong." Quickly, and with ease, we filled that column.

"Now, what have you to be thankful for? Name one good thing?" "Can't think of one," he declared. "Well, is your wife dead?" I asked. "Why no, of course not." So I wrote in the right-hand column, "Wife alive and well."

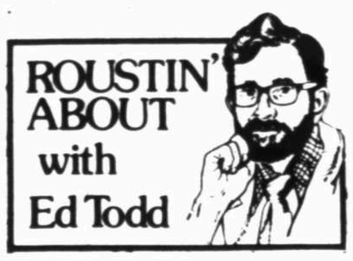
"How about your house — has it burned down?" "Of course not!" So he wrote, "House not burned." "How about yourself, had a heart attack?" "Are you kidding?" he asked. "Do I look like I'd had a heart attack?" So I wrote "No heart attack."

"Look," I declared, "you told me everything has gone wrong with you. But without half trying we've listed three basic facts that are good, real good. Now go ahead and fill up that column of good things; and every day give thanks morning and evening. Talk thankfulness, think thankfulness. Keep adding up the many things you can be thankful for and go around telling everyone, especially yourself, how thankful you are. You'll be surprised, for in no time at all you will develop a strong thankfulness psychology.

"And this will start a real turnaround for you. It doesn't mean that suddenly everything will be one hundred percent, for it won't. But improved conditions will start developing." And that is precisely what happened. This man's life changed dramatically by practicing thankfulness.

Skip the negatives. Emphasize the positives. Sure, you will have difficulties. But you can handle them, and a positive, thankful psychology has the power to make things good, real good.

Think about resolutions — making and breaking



Now is the time to contrive your New Year's resolutions.

"Making" 'em didn't work last year, so try a little devising. Make 'em difficult, challenging, lucrative, and serious. Mix 'em up. Try to enjoy breaking them one at a time. And if you don't enjoy breaking a resolution, seriously consider adopting it in your life. Be comfortable but never complacent.

Caution: Don't devise too powder-puffy resolutions; don't "make" 'em too easy; they'll be no fun keeping or breaking.

Making New Year's resolutions is a choice treat for procrastinators who wait all too late to try to change their ways or non-ways. But that treat often turns to sorrow when the resolution is shattered.

Try.

Here's a few major suggestions for resolutions:

—Keep your word. Give your cohorts something to talk about. Then, suddenly, slip back to your old, comfortable ways. Be your old self for another year if you can afford it. However, if your time is an invaluable asset, invest it. Suggestion: Before committing yourself, decide if you truly can and want to keep your word. If the answer is yes in both cases, you'll have a fair chance of pulling through.

—Be punctual. Surprise yourself, your friends and associates. Then enlighten them: Your watch was fast, very fast.

—Be frugal with your time and money, but be generous in kindness and understanding toward yourself and others. You'll end up being a good friend of mankind.

—Howdy, partner. Try a little smile and your version of "Howdy" if your not that folksy. You'll be amply rewarded for your good intent even if you occasionally meet a cynic, such as your ol' alter ego, who scoffs at you.

—Think. Thinking is a natural function of Homo sapiens, but sometimes the mind get frozen in a rut and rots. But it can be fixed if you think and act and start anew.

—Try SSPing: The Serenity Sam Prescription for expunging procrastination from your life is Get Up, Get Going, Get Doing.

—Be prepared. Should the ol' comfortably painful shortcomings you sought to purge from your life suddenly reappear, don't despair. Try again and pray for help from Above. Be patient.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

● Readers are invited to submit letters to be considered for publication.

Letters may be on any subject, but should not be slanderous or defamatory. They must be signed by the writer and must bear the writer's correct mailing address and a telephone number at which the writer may be contacted during the day, either home or office.

For valid reasons, at the discretion of the editor, the name will be withheld but must be included in the original letter.

Writers should be as concise as possible and the right to condense letters is reserved.

Letters must be received by noon Thursday for Sunday publication. If necessary, the latest received may be held for publication the following Tuesday or Thursday.

They should be addressed to: Letters to the Editor, The Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702.

What's the point?

To The Editor:

The current controversy concerning the jurisdiction rights of the Mission Country Club development raises some very important questions. There is no doubt the development is one of quality and importance to the housing shortage existing at the present time.

As a Midlander and interested citizen, I find it difficult to understand why the point of moving the line has come up at all. The development is entirely within Midland County and the city of Midland should have any and all control over it. I hate to think that the city of Odessa would be given any more authority than it now has to annex any portion of Midland County. The conclusion should be to allow both cities to share in the development based upon the present location of the Extra-Territorial Jurisdiction Line or move the line west to allow the city of Midland to control the entire project.

If this sounds unfair to Odessa, then hopefully the Midland City Council has a long memory. It seems that for the past thirty years Midland and its citizens have come out the loser on any compromise made with Odessa. I remember that the junior college district was formed to promote the cooperation between the two cities in obtaining an upper-level university. Then, a proposal to construct a Midland campus of the junior college went down in defeat in the joint two-city election. The compromise agreed upon to locate the upper-level university between the two cities again came about in a sense of cooperation. However, the influence of Odessa's leadership gained the eventual site selection in Ector County. How has Midland or it's citizens ever been dealt with fairly on any cooperation with Odessa?

Hopefully these comments will not be interpreted as accusing Odessa or its leadership of deliberately undermining any past cooperation between the two cities. On the contrary, I admire their leadership and the dedication and perserverence it has shown to insure the growth and strength of their community. They deserve all the credit based upon the results achieved so far.

If the Midland City Council has the same qualities, then additional questions and thoughts should be given to any requests of this nature. Where will the line be moved eastward next time a request is made? Will moving the line now set a precedent to do so in the future? If the argument were reversed with the city of Midland wanting the line moved west, what would Odessa's decision be? what does Midland and its citizens have to gain if this compromise is granted? Or, more importantly, what does Midland stand to lose?

I admire Councilman Sloan for his straight-forward stand in his matter. I would hope the entire city council can provide the leadership necessary to protect its citizens. This request, if granted, will have far-reaching results in the future growth of Midland in any direction. As it now stands our friends to the west have the impetus to determine the destiny and prosperity of Midland.

Not impressed

To The Editor:

After reading Mr. Turner's letter in Sunday's paper, I am forced to speak up.

First of all, Turner says that he is "not impressed" with the fact that our deputies are required to be tested on their physical condition and their knowledge of the law.

Well Turner, I for one am not impressed with you or your cheap shots taken on our sheriff's department. My husband is a deputy sheriff.

To being with, on those few and far between occasions when a deputy has acted in a substandard manner, corrective action was taken immediately. Most resulted in dismissals.

Next, our officers do not spend their on-duty time in preparation for testing. The physical is not normally given during working hours.

As for the written test prepared by "who knows." It doesn't really matter who makes up the test, sir. It does matter as to the source of the questions. In this case all questions come from texts on Texas Criminal Laws (i.e. Texas Penal Code).

Texas does set standards — not high standards but minimal standards. Our sheriff's department is striving for higher standards.

Next, all these wrecks? Check the records Mr. Turner! Six out of seven accidents were not the fault of the officer driving. Did you know that if the officer is found at fault that he can be fined the entire amount of the deductible? This is so you, Mr. Taxpayer, won't be out any more money.

By the way, would you be "impressed" if I told you all three of the escapees from county jail were back in custody within thirty days?

Now, how do you figure you to save a million dollars if a metro force was created. The city is having their troubles recruiting and keeping officers to cover the city limits. There would still be 950 square miles of county to cover, therefore the same amount of money. Besides all that, even should a metro force be enacted the police chief would not be in charge. Law states the sheriff would be. He is the top law enforcement official in the county.

Finally, Turner, I'm "not impressed" about you're being a tax payer. Guess what? Every deputy in our sheriff's office pays taxes too!! Or did you forget?

Capitol idea

To The Editor:

The State Capitol Building in Austin is the most important historic and culturally significant building in Texas. The Capitol dominated Austin's skyline from 1887 until 1965, when a few high rise buildings began to intrude and block important views of the Capitol. Now the explosive growth of Austin as a whole threatens to surround this important symbol of our state and obscure it from public view forever.

The City Council of Austin must take immediate action if the remaining Capitol views are to be protected. Success in this effort will depend largely on public support. Many citizens think that Austin has a responsibility to all Texans to preserve the Capitol's visibility; visitors and residents alike benefit from a continued reminder of the symbolic importance of our State Government.

A letter expressing your opinion on this issue will help determine the place of the Capitol in Austin's skyline for generations. Address your letter to the Austin City Council, and send it in care of Texans to Save the Capitol, 225 Congress Avenue, Suite 404, Austin, Texas 78701. We will copy and distribute your letter to the City Council, keep you updated on Capitol View actions, and put you in touch with others in your area who have expressed interest in the Capitol View Issue.

Not just numbers

To The Editor:

Did you know that for the year ending Sept. 1981 that Animal Control picked up 1,417 dead animals off of our Midland streets? The center picked up 6,030 live animals, returning 1,085 of these to their owners, adopted over 591 of these animals.

The remainer of 4,354 had to be destroyed. When you read this it appears to be a group of numbers but when you really think about what is written here as statistics were at one time living creatures of God. What makes these figures are unwanted animals.

Lets be responsible pet owners. If you cannot properly care for an animal do not get one. If your circumstances change, don't dump your animal on the streets or country roads, take them to the center where, if they cannot find a home, at least they will be put to sleep by a loving, caring person.

We should be so thankful for the Animal Control we have in Midland. Not every city is so lucky. I want to thank the two organizations who have contacted me wanting to help support the animal control work in Midland. All donations are greatly appreciated. The animals thank you and I thank you too for them.

Total training

To The Editor:

The Turner letter of Nov. 22, 1981, created a response from Debbie Land on Nov. 29, 1981.

One statement by Mrs. Land, "The Permian Basin Law Enforcement Academy has no physical training for recruits," is incorrect. The basic police training mandated by the state of Texas calls for 320 hours. The PBLEA Basic Training Courses runs 400 hours.

Physical conditioning, defensive tactics and disarming methods comprise 40 hours of this additional training.

The Midland County Sheriff's Department is the only agency of the 35 law enforcement agencies served by the PBLEA that conducts a continuing physical conditioning program.

The Midland Police Department has provided an exercise room for the voluntary use of the officers. Many of the Midland officers have initiated their own conditioning programs and should be complimented for their initiative.

An answering cry

To The Editor:

Has there ever been another time when our American veterans have had to plead for help from their government as the Vietnam veterans are having to do?

It seems they're living with a growing horror of death inside them and their children, contracted in that far away jungle, when sprayed with Agent Orange, while they fought, were wounded and many died for a government that turns its head and covers its ears to their crys for help and understanding.

How all the mothers of these ill Viet Nam vets must, in faint moments, wish their sons had fled to Canada instead of rushing to answer America's call to arms.

Yet of these vets I've heard speak they still love this country with all their hearts and would gladly go again if America called.

Midland Stained Glass Center is busy place before holidays

Midland Stained Glass Center is a busy place three weeks before Christmas. Hobbyists come in for supplies needed to complete their stained glass holiday projects; others are taking advantage of the center's being open Tuesday evenings until 9:00 p.m. for those who need a good place to work; while still others are signing up for a December 12 all-day norkshop in Beginning Stained Glass Techniques. The class will run from 9:00 a.m. -5:00 p.m. Each member should complete a nice sized panel to take home at day's end. As the number of those participating in the workshops is always limited, please call Midland Stained Glass Center manager Valerie Lee to reserve your place.

A class in Lampshade Construction begins in mid-January. It is important for those who are thinking of joining the lampshade class to notify the center as soon as possible so that the exact shade molds can be ordered. Lanpshade construction, a fascinating and decorative art form, should be just the thing to brighten your Janxary.

Still needing some Christmas gift suggestions? Glass kits, books, tools for the craftsman (the new grinders are in,) stained glass bird, butterfly and bee to highlight a green plant for a thoughtful gift — or a Gift Certificate from the center to be exchanged for any of the above, or for commission work in the recipient's chosen pattern and colors. The center accepts special orders for doors, windows, mirrors, skylights, shadow boxes, lamps and accent pieces.

Hank offers advanced pilot training

Hank's Flite Center, located at Midland Regional Air Terminal, offers the most advanced private pilot training in the Permian Basin area, according to Hank Henry, owner and instructor of the center.

While most pilot training courses offer only the 1930-established minimum of 40 hours of flight training, Hank's offers 50 to 66 hours of in-flight time before a pilot can apply for licensing.

The FAA approved the 40-hour minimum flight training requirements in 1930, Henry said, before pilots used radios (or radar,) instrument flying, runways, flaps or made cross-country flights or cross-wind landings.

"A 40-hour pilot is rarely competent for these reasons," he said.

Henry also administers the FAA-approved written and in-flight tests for pilot licensing for the Permian Basin area. Mechanics exams can slso be taken at Hank's.

The business, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Henry, has been turning out qualified pilots for 16 years. Henry has new pilot training sessions beginning regularly. For 36 hours of training, the fee at Hank's is only $175 for everything, including equipment and books.

Hank's offers planes for sale and rent, too. For the person who has to get to rigs in places like San Angelo, Big Spring, Hobbs or Roswell where there is limited commercial flight access, flying a private plane makes sense.

Call Henry at 563-1192 to find out more about purchasing or renting planes, or about flight lessons.

THA tentatively approves housing documents

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Members of the board of the Texas Housing Agency have given preliminary approval to documents for a construction note program for interim financing for developers of multi-family units with commitments from the Government National Mortgage Administration.

THA Executive Administrator Earline Jewett says that "we don't know what the volume will be," because "the Federal government has not yet awarded its 'Ginnie Mae' commitments."

"If the market is there and the commitments are there, we'll be ready to go," she says.

At least 20 percent of the units would be for low-income families, with the remainder for moderate-income families.

"Our intent," Jewett says, "is that by getting a lower interim financing, coupled with a lower permanent financing, we will be helping the rents to stay in an affordable range."

THA also expressed its intent to undertake other programs in the future, approving resolutions on two interim funding programs — one for multi-fmily units financed by the Farmers Home Administration (for low-income families in communities of less than 20,000) and one for turn-key projects which are purchased by housing authorities.

THA plans to provide interim financing for such work again with the idea of helping keep rents down, with Jewett noting Federal regulations require that any savings in financing costs be passed on to the purchaser.

THA also instructed its staff and management group to proceed with permanent multi-family financing plans, using two different approaches.

In one case, THA is looking at use of a bank letter of credit to secure the bonds for projects.

"In today's market," Jewett comments, "the life of the bonds is likely to be shorter than the life of the mortgage," and it is necessary to have "some security at the end of the bonds."

THA also is looking at situations in which a lender would put up some collateral to take care of the risk outstanding, she says.

Jewett stresses thst while the THA board has been working on multi-family projects recently, that doesn't "in any way indicate they will not go forward with single-family projects."

"There has been some relief in the Federal regulations that has cleared up some of the basic problems" on such projects, she comments.

"If we can get the numbers to work out and the market continues to hold, we will try to do some single-family (projects) in the spring," she reports.

Speaker Bill Clayton has instructed the House Financial Institutions Committee to study the feasibility of repealing the present ad valorem tax on capital stock of banks, and replacing the tax with a franchise tax or similar levy.

Clayton instructed that the study be carried out in cooperation with the House Ways and Means Committee.

Rep. Lynn Nabers, D-Brownwood, who carried such legislation this year, requested that the study be made.

Nabers' bill failed to reach the House for a vote.

State Board of Insurance meets at 9 a.m. Thursday (Dec. 10) to consider worker's compensation rules and rate changes, with SBI reporting preliminary indications are that a small reduction — two percent or less — is likely in the rates.

Several requests for changes in classification and various manual rules are to be considered, along with a request to withdraw the present broad form all-states endorsement in favor of a new endorsement.

SBI recently held a hearing on including an all-states endorsement on worker's compensation policies written though the worker's compensation assigned risk pool (as authorized under legislation passed earlier this year) and received no opposition to the proposal.

The endorsement is expected to be put into effect after the first of 1982.

Rep. Don Henderson, R-Houston, chairman of the House Transporttion Committee, has asked Attorney General Mark White to rule on three questions related to group fixed annuities written through financial institutions.

One question relates to whether there is a statutory or judicial prohibition against the writing of such annuities through a financial institution, with the institution acting as group contract holder.

The second question asks if such writing is permitted in Texas, and the third inquires as to the validity of an opinion on the subject written on May 4, 1977.

Average worker now pays more Social Security than other taxes

By TOM EASTHAM
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — With this year's increases, the average family is for the first time paying slightly more in Social Security taxes than for all major state and local taxes, according to Advisory Council on Intergovernmental Relations estimates.

ACIR computations show that last year, a family earning $21,500 paid about as much to the Social Security tax collector — 6.1 percent of his income — as to state and local taxes — 6.5 percent. But this year, the old age insurance bounced up.

If you were an above average family earning $43,000, Social Security taxes took only 3.5 percent of your income. And for really big earners with annual incomes of $86,000, the bite is only 1.8 percent.

But do not despair, average earners. Highest income families still got stuck with the top federal, state and local tax tabs: 32.7 percent of their income. Above average earners paid 26.8 percent and average incomes 22.7 percent.

And while the average family had 77 percent left after taxes, the well-to-dos got only 67 percent.

By the way, the average family income has climbed astonishingly in recent years. In 1953 it was $5,000; by 1966 it was up to $8,750, and last year it was $21,500. Inflation and, yes, higher taxes ate up most of the increases.

If taxes seem higher these days, its because they are.

Some House members think Congress should have more clout — and federal agencies less — in economic decision-making.

For example: Treasury Secretary Donald Regan is warning that cost-of-living formulas for federal programs must be reduced to head off soaring budget deficits. Under current law, the administration can change the formulas.

Regan noted that recipients of federal payments keyed to the cost of living — like Social Security — would get benefit increases of 11 percent this year, which is higher than inflation. "Something is wrong there," Regan said, and it must be dealt with "sooner or later."

But California Congressman John L. Burton, D-San Francisco — without necessarily disagreeing — has introduced H.R. 5065, a bill he says will protect retired and disabled persons by preserving "the integrity of the Consumer Price Index."

"The trend with this administration has clearly been to look over these federal benefits programs with an eye to reducing the amount of benefits," says Burton. "To my mind, these are essential programs and represent a longstanding commitment to the beneficiaries."

His bill — which has 13 co-sponsors — would require Congress to approve CPI changes. Right now, the administration could choose to cut benefits by changing the way the CPI is computed, Burton said, with no review by any other branch of government.

"All I am calling for with this legislation is that opportunity for review," said Burton, a member of the Select Committee on Aging.

Fed up with high interest rates, Michigan Democratic Congressman John Conyers introduced the next bill in line: H.R. 5066. It would make the Federal Reserve System accountable to Congress as well as the president, and mandate Congress to set the targets for interest, discount and monetary growth rates.

"The Federal Reserve Board's high-interest, tight-money policy has had a devastating effect on the economy," declared Conyers, who said his bill would end "the political copout of the Congress."

"Citizens have been demanding relief from crippling interest rates," said Conyers. "This bill will accomplish that."

Sounds good, but nobody has explained how a Congress unable to agree on budgets once a year can magically decide cost-of-living formulas, interest rates and monetary policies.

●

Meanwhile, fear of inflation is keeping more and more older workers on the job, finds a study by Dr. Harold I. Sheppard of the National Council on the Aging.

Social Security figures show the increase in the retirement rate dropped from 9.1 percent in 1972-74 to 4.8 percent in 1975-77 to just 2.7 percent in 1978-80.

"Despite the automatic cost-of-living increase in Social Security benefits," said Sheppard, "other sources of retirement income, including private pensions, cannot be relied upon to keep up with actual and expected rises in the cost of living for workers and their families."

●

Citizens for Tax Justice reports 19 states have rejected the new federal tax depreciation rules, and only 14 states now are likely to fully adopt the federal tax changes that greatly reduce corporate tax burdens.

The sharply accelerated depreciation allowances will cost the federal government $500 billion over the next 10 years, and CTJ — a coalition of labor and public interest groups — says states could lose $27.5 billion in five years if all of them were to go along.

But that clearly is not going to happen.

Late payment only possible for powerful

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Should you fail to pay your mortgage on time you may get a nasty note and a fine from your creditor. Sometimes even a high-toned sermon on sound financing accompanies the unwelcome message.

So readily are such messges sent and fines assessed that most people know by now that consumer borrowers can make few demands on lenders. The rules of the game are precise and inflexible. Pay or else.

Life isn't as stiff as you ascend the hierarchy of borrowers. A big borrower might receive a polite inquiry accompanied by a reminder that "your attention to this matter would be appreciated."

If you are a big company that owes money to a small supplier you might not even get a reminder. The small firm needs your business, and they try not to do anything to lose it, such as insinuating late payment.

Exploiting this situation, some of the strongest blue chips in America have deliberately delayed payments during periods of poor business or high interest rates, such as existed throughout this year, in effect forcing their suppliers to finance them at no interest cost whatsoever.

Weak giants, such as Chrysler, also have been able to play the game, but with a variation. If you want us to stay in business and continue to buy your goods, they say, you must agree to accept delayed payments.

They have a precedent for so acting. Financially troubled foreign governments have long practiced the technique, forcing creditors into renegotiating loans under the threat of not getting paid at all.

Late pay, it seems, is commonly practiced by big borrowers, and the biggest of the big, of course, is Uncle Sam. That old cadger, said the General Accounting Office in 1978, failed to pay nearly 40 percent of his bills on time. The GAO completed another report in October. This time it found Uncle Sam had failed to take "adequate corrective action."

Critical as that comment is, it doesn't tell the whole story. In 1978 the prime lending rate was in the single digits. It touched 21.5 percent a year ago, and still hasn't descended far below 16 percent.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce's small business council estimates the government, in effect, borrows about $11 billion a year from business firms "and it refuses to pay interest on overdue bills."

Uncle Sam can dictate terms like that, and sometimes big business can too. But don't you try it, or if you do, be aware at least of some of the consequences.

To begin with, banks seldom transact anything without making records, and records today live longer than they used to.

Glass plant planned

NORTHVILLE, Mich. (AP) — Guardian Industries Corp. has announced plans to construct a glass tempering facility in Texas.

The plant will be built as an addition to the firm's existing glass manufacturing plant located at Corsicana, Texas, 60 miles southeast of Dallas.

Tempered glass is created from ordinary flat glass by a process of rapid cooling, and is stronger, Guardian spokesman Richard Griffin said Wednesday.

Ground broken for laboratory

Bell Petroleum Services, Inc., broke ground this week for its new core laboratory facility, which is being constructed at Bell's present site in Midland's Industrial Park.

Prime factors in the expansion, according to Bell President E.E. Runyan, are the current growth in the oil and gas industry and Bell's commitment to providing the most complete and professional services possible.

The new core facility will encompass 6,000 square feet and at full operational capacity will employ five core analysts and 15 technicians and support personnel. "Bell will provided state-of-the-art analysis of plug type and full diameter core," said Theordore H. Them, core laboratory supervisor.

Formed in 1969, Bell Petroleum has realized steady growth. Sales for the company have grown at an annual compounded rate of 43 percent over the last five years, with earnings showing a strong 35 percent growth rate for the same period.

Since moving into its present offices in May 1975, Bell has expanded operations to include not only the Permian Basin, Eastern New Mexico and South-Central Texas, but also the rapidly-developing Rocky Mountain area.

Bell Petroleum Services is a publicly-held company with corporate offices located at 2607 Commerce Drive, Midland, and divisional offices in Fort Worth, Kennedale and Casper, Wyo. Bell Petroleum Services, Inc., is listed with the National Association of Securities Dealers, Inc., under the symbol BPSI.

Improvements may not improve index

By DAVID W. DEITCH
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — The Consumer Price Index is said to have exaggerated the trend of inflation by its emphasis on housing prices and mortgage rates. So the Bureau of Labor Statistics has initiated some "improvements" in the index which will now focus more on rents. But with housing in the doldrums and mortgage rates on the way down, it appears that the agency's timing is way off. Ironically, the changes are likely to push the index higher than if it were left alone.

●

Jack Lavery's Weekly Economic Commentary predicts that the unemployment rate will hit an average high of 8.6 percent in the second quarter of 1982. That means the actual peak will run around 9 percent before recovery sets in.

●

The price of arty collectibles has edged up slightly since September, according to The Sotheby Index. A hint of reflation?

●

Argus Research Corp. is suggesting that better times are just ahead because of the difference between "true" and "reported" corporate profits. Reported profits are what the corporations tell the government and stockholders they've earned, while true profits are adjusted for the higher prices of inventories and the replacement of assets.

Argus believes that true profits, in contrast to reported profits, are expected to be some 14 percent higher in 1982 than in 1981. Historically, true profits have bottomed out an average of four months after stock prices hit bottom. This is all quite encouraging, Argus says. "If true profits bottom out in the fourth quarter of 1982 and first quarter of 1983, as we expect... the bottoming of stock prices should have occurred four months earlier — i.e., between July and November." Meaning that stock prices may have nowhere to go but up — if history isn't bunk.

●

Merrill Lynch, the biggest broker, advises a more cautious approach. Research people there say that "the current cycle is different from past recession-related, interest-rate stock cycles." The stock market still appears to have another chance for an upside move, but remains vulnerable to lots more selling in the opening quarter of next year.

●

Most differences between market advisors relate to timing the new bull market, and that depends on the length and breadth of this economic recession. If the economy begins its recovery around mid-1982, as the Reaganites claim, all may be well with this stock market rally. But if the recovery is delayed, stocks may be in for some more trouble.

'New Frontier' production planned

Big Bend Productions of Alpine and KOSA-TV, Channel 7, Odessa, are finalizing plans to produce "New Frontier," a weekly television program about the oil and gas industry in the Permian Basin. Production on six pilot episodes for the new series is scheduled to begin early in 1982 and it is hoped that if it achieves sufficient audience response on both a statewide and regional level, the series will go into full production before the end of 1982.

"New Frontier" is being billed as a series both for and about the oil and gas industry, designed to appeal both to the specialized viewer and to a general audience, according to producers.

"New Frontier" is a new concept in American television programming, a "hard" information series produced to attract the general as well as the specialized viewer. Leo Eaton, originator and president of Big Bend Productions, has based the series on a style of programming pioneered in England by the BBC (British Broadcasting Corp.).

Eaton has more than 16 years experience as a producer and director in British television prior to settling in West Texas.

The producers believe that for the series to achieve stature and credibility within the petroleum industry as a whole, it must appeal to a wider TV audience than just West Texas viewers. Already a number of PBS stations throughout the Southwest have expressed interest in airing the series, Eaton says. Ultimately Big Bend Productions and KOSA-TV hope that "New Frontier" will be screened in all parts of the U.S. where there is oil or gas-related industry.

Ed Thompson, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, has been working closely with Big Bend Productions to ensure that "New Frontier" accurately reflects the situation within the Permian Basin.

For Big Bend Productions, the start of "New Frontier" ends a very successful first year of operation. At the beginning of 1981 Leo Eaton's television documentary, "Sul Ross, Portrait of a West Texas University," also a co-production with KOSA-TV, was screened widely across Texas, while the recently completed major TV Special with Waylon Jennings, "My Heroes Have Always Been Cowboys," that is scheduled for network release early in 1982, has just been awarded a Bronze Medal at this year's New York International Film and TV Festival. In the same festival, Harry Gordon, chief cinematographer and vice president of Big Bend Productions, won a silver award in the educational wild-life category for his film documentary about the Chihuahua Desert, "Land of Lost Borders."

Pepsico chairman predicts delayed end to recession

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — The consensus of economists is for the recession to bottom out some time during the first half of next year, but the chairman of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce thinks it may be the fourth quarter of 1982 before the turnaround begins in earnest.

But Donald M. Kendall, chairman of the U.S. Chamber and also chairman and chief executive of Pepsico Inc., said recently that his expectation of a delayed recovery may be in part a matter of wishful thinking.

Remembering the recovery from the brief 1980 recession, Kendall recalled in an interview here that the economy collapsed in the second quarter of 1980, then as it recovered in the summer and fall, inflation and interest rates roared right back up.

"If it goes too fast, we could be in trouble again," he said.

He thinks real (inflation-adjusted) gross national product (GNP, or the economy's total output of goods and services), will fall by 2 or 3 percent in this quarter and "the same next quarter" — a prediction that is roughly in line with the economic consensus.

His company has seen the effects of a battered consumer this fall: "Our business is very good. The soft-drink end of it still has growth, and the snack business (Frito-Lay) is good, but in Taco Bell and Pizza Hut (fast-food chains owned by Pepsico), we could see the traffic slowing in October. In Michigan, it's a disaster," he said.

But he doesn't want to see the Reagan administration or the Federal Reserve waver one bit in their determination to reduce government spending and rein in money growth: "Let's hold the course and see what happens," he said.

Although congressmen might revert to now-discredited Keynesian economic theory and be reluctant to cut more spending during the recession, President Reagan "will hold their feet to the fire," said Kendall — Mr. Reagan might even use his veto power to get government to cut even more.

But in a speech to the local chamber of commerce here, he quoted statistics revealing that the Reagan administration has still only scratched the surface.

"We've heard a lot of noise recently that Ronald Reagan is dismantling 50 years of social progress by cutting 5 percent from the 1982 budget increases planned by the previous administration. What is seldom mentioned is that the budget for fiscal year 1982, which began Oct. 1, will still be the largest in our history. In fact, unless further cuts are made, it will still grow by $71 billion over the 1981 budget.

Kendall has not given up on the possibility of a balanced budget.
