U.S. to keep troops in Bosnia until June

■ Some 8,500 troops are to take part in extended mission that originally was to end next month.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In an about-face on Bosnia, President Clinton said Friday the United States will keep thousands of troops there until June 1998 in hopes that "the habits of peace can take hold" in the ethnically divided country.

The U.S. peacekeeping commitment in Bosnia was originally to end next month. Some 8,500 troops are to take part in the extended mission.

Clinton also said he was ready to dispatch American troops to Zaire as part of a Canadian-led humanitarian mission to ease central Africa's refugee crisis. About 4,000 U.S. troops are expected to be part of the multinational rescue effort.

"Where we can make a difference, we must act and we must lead," Clinton told a White House news conference before leaving on a 12-day trip to Hawaii, Australia and Asia.

Criticism from congressional Republicans was immediate but relatively mild.

Sen. Dan Coats of Indiana, for example, accused Clinton of carrying out a "seat-of-the-pants, reactive foreign policy" that risks U.S. troops for ill-defined goals. But he also said lawmakers probably would not oppose the decision.

The president said he had agreed in principle to a "new but much more limited mission" for U.S. troops in Bosnia. He said he would not make a final commitment until he is satisfied that NATO's final plan is clear and achievable.

The administration dropped its original goal of

A.M. BRIEFING

Is it discrimination?

Andrews High School sophomore Callie Smartt was recently removed from the junior varsity cheerleading squad because she suffers from cerebral palsy and uses a wheelchair. Those in favor of Callie's removal from the squad cite safety precautions; those opposed call the act insensitive and discriminatory. How do you feel? Call Cityline's Community Pulse poll at 560-2400, Category 7655. If you think Callie should be removed for her safety, press 1; if you feel the decision to remove her is insensitive and discriminates against Callie because of her physical condition, press 2. You also will be given the opportunity to leave comments. We ask that you leave your name, but that is your option. The non-scientific sampling will remain open until noon today. Results will be published in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram.

Investigation

Amid the controversy surrounding an Andrews High School cheerleader whose participation has been restricted because of "safety concerns," the U.S. Justice Department has decided to investigate the case. The department's civil rights division is reviewing the case of Callie Smartt to see if the school violated the Americans With Disabilities Act, which bars discrimination against the disabled, according to Deval L. Patrick, who is assistant attorney general. The controversy has split Andrews residents, some of whom think her participation does raise legitimate safety concerns, while others believe it is simply a case of discrimination. No time frame has been given as to when a decision would be rendered.

Rash of burglaries has Fairgate Drive residents on alert

By Joe Gaines
Staff Writer

For the second time in less than a week, the residents in the 4400 and 4500 blocks of Fairgate Drive have been victims of burglaries.

This time, however, the residents and owner of the townhomes, are watching.

On Nov. 9 a woman in the 4400 block of Fairgate woke around 4 a.m. to find a burglar in her home. Two other burglaries and an attempted burglary also were reported from the same two blocks on the same day. In the two other burglaries, items were taken from vehicles.

Another three auto burglaries were reported Friday.

"This is ridiculous. I'm going to sit out front (of my home) and watch all night," Jerry Roe said.

Roe had a window of his vehicle broken sometime early Friday morning, but nothing was taken from the vehicle. "They just threw some paper around from my glove box."

Roe's vehicle was parked along the street. He said he would park the vehicle in the garage, but there isn't room.

He has insurance, but there is a $500 deductible, which he said is too high to help with the cost of replacing the window.

Another resident, Blake Freeman, also had a window of his vehicle broken and the contents ransacked, but nothing was taken.

"They need lights out front here," Freeman said.

On the two-block street, there are three street lights, one on each end and another in the middle. The one in the center of the street was installed only six months ago, said Virgil Johnson, owner and manger.

But with a number of trees lining the street and porch lights on the sides of homes, Friday's victims said the street lights aren't enough.

"I want to ask the manager what is he doing about this," Roe said. "They've broken into our cars and into that lady's house,

Texaco settles race discrimination lawsuit for $176.1 million

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Texaco agreed to pay $176.1 million to settle a 2-year-old race discrimination lawsuit Friday, just 11 days after it was disclosed that top executives had been caught on tape belittling blacks and plotting to destroy documents in the case.

At a news conference in Washington, an attorney for the plaintiffs said Texaco will pay $115 million in cash to the 1,500 current and former black workers who sued, $26.1 million in pay raises over five years for black employees, and $35 million for sensitivity and diversity training programs.

"With this litigation behind us, we can now move forward on our broader, urgent mission to make Texaco a model of workplace opportunity for all men and women," Peter I. Bijur, Texaco's chairman and chief executive, said in a statement.

The lawsuit, filed in 1994, sought as much as $520 million on behalf of blacks who claimed that a "good old boy" network at Texaco reserved the best promotions and biggest raises for whites.

'With this litigation behind us, we can now move forward on our broader, urgent mission to make Texaco a model of workplace opportunity for all men and women.'

— Peter I. Bijur
Texaco's chairman, chief executive

In court papers, former and current employees complained of repeatedly being passed over and being subjected to racial slights and slurs. Blacks were called "orangutans" and "porch monkeys" to their faces, they said. One was invited to join in a round of golf — as a caddy.

The pressure on Texaco mounted dramatically last week after the plaintiffs claimed to have a tape of executives using the word "niggers" and "black jelly beans," mocking the black cultural festival Kwanzaa and plotting to hide or shred documents sought by the plaintiffs.

The recordings were made by an executive of Texaco's financial department who gave the tapes to the plaintiffs after he lost his job in a downsizing.

Prosecutors immediately opened a grand jury investigation into whether documents were in fact destroyed, Texaco suspended two executives and apologized, and the Rev. Jesse Jackson called for a boycott of Texaco and urged stockholders to sell their shares.

An investigator hired by Texaco said an electronic enhancement of the recordings found that the executives

Protesters stage last-ditch effort to prevent Israeli-troop pullout from Hebron

By Dafna Linzer
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — In a last-ditch effort to block a troop pullback in Hebron, Jewish settlers protested outside Benjamin Netanyahu's office and said they felt betrayed by the prime minister they helped bring to power.

In downtown Hebron, settlers planted saplings outside their compound illustrating their determination to remain in the volatile city of 130,000 Palestinians and 500 Jews.

"The nation of Israel lives," the settlers sang.

A loud bang, first thought to be a shot, sent Israeli troops running with assault rifles raised through the city's alleys. It turned out that an acid-filled bottle thrown at an army post caused the blast. No one was hurt.

But the soldiers' lightening response highlighted the tension in Hebron as residents awaited word on whether Israel would go ahead with the pullback. The center of Hebron, where the Jewish settlers live in five tiny enclaves, has been turned into a military camp.

Along the Street of the Martyrs, which links the settler compounds with the Tomb of the Patriarchs, a site sacred to Jews and Muslims, hundreds of soldiers stood guard Friday in bulletproof watchtowers and positions reinforced with sandbags.

An agreement on a Hebron pullout appeared imminent earlier this week, and Netanyahu canceled a trip to the United States to oversee the final stages of negotiations.

However, talks hit a snag, and PLO leader Yasser Arafat said Friday that "there is no progress."

The negotiators took a weekend break and talks were to resume Sunday.

In Jerusalem, dozens of settlers and members of the right-wing group "Women in Green" rallied outside Netanyahu's office Friday to protest the emerging Hebron accord.

Jewish settlers said they felt betrayed. Eliyakim Haetzni, one of the protesters, said the agreement "forecloses the future of the Jewish community in Hebron."

During his election campaign, Netanyahu promised to expand the city's Jewish enclaves, but he never said he wouldn't enact the redeployment agreed to by Israel's previous government. The pledge to expand Jewish holdings in Hebron helped win the support of religious and right-wing voters and enabled Netanyahu to build a coalition government with small but powerful parties that oppose giving up West Bank land.

However, the new Hebron deal — like the old one — gives the Palestinian-controlled municipality authority over issuing building permits, thus making it difficult for the Jewish enclaves to expand.

Israel army radio said Friday that Jewish settlers had drawn up plans to expand the Hebron enclaves and the nearby settlement of Kiryat Arba into a city of 25,000 Jews during Netanyahu's four years in office. The radio said the Hebron settlers had operated under the premise that with Netanyahu in office, redeployment plans would be canceled.

Netanyahu's determination to go through with redeployment also cost him another key constituency — the ultra-Orthodox Habad movement, which covered the country with election stickers saying: "Netanyahu. It's good for the Jews." Habad support was considered crucial to Netanyahu's razor-thin margin of victory over Shimon Peres.

Asked Friday if Netanyahu was no longer good for the Jews, Shmuel Hefer, a Habad leader, said: "We don't deal in slogans. But we are disappointed by a breach of promise."

Interim Pakistani government passes law to prevent corruption

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Pakistan's new government has made corruption punishable by imprisonment and a ban from politics, as one of its first acts after ousting Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto on corruption allegations.

The interim government passed the anti-corruption law Thursday, nine days after dismissing Ms. Bhutto. A government official briefed The Associated Press on Friday on terms of the law.

The official spoke on condition of anonymity, saying Pakistan's law minister is to officially release details of the act in the next two days.

The law will apply to politicians and top bureaucrats. It provides for a maximum prison sentence of seven years, a seven-year ban from holding public office, and an unspecified fine.

On Nov. 5, when President Farooq Leghari dismissed Ms. Bhutto, he accused her, her husband and her government of stealing millions from the public.

Leghari has been seeking a law that would clean up Pakistani politics, which have been mired in accusations of uncontrolled corruption.

Ms. Bhutto has said she feared the president would fabricate charges against her. She has denied his allegations and is challenging her government's dismissal in court.

The new law will be retroactive to 1985.

General elections are to be held in Pakistan next February.

China's favorite wins first round vote to lead Hong Kong as governor

HONG KONG (AP) — China's favorite candidate won the first-round vote Friday by the committee picking Hong Kong's next governor, making him the man most likely to lead the British [illegible] after it reverts to Chinese control.

Shipping magnate Tung Chee-hwa outpolled former Chief Justice Yang Ti-liang 206-82 in the balloting by the 400-member Selection Committee. A Dec. 11 runoff vote by the same committee will pick the next governor.

Chinese Foreign Minister Qian Qichen, the committee chairman, hailed the election — the first held in Hong Kong under Chinese auspices — as "the real beginning of democracy for Hong Kong."

Hong Kong's pro-democracy camp called the vote a Chinese-orchestrated sham.

Tung, 59, has been seen as a man destined for higher things since at least last January, when Chinese President Jiang Zemin singled him out for a public handshake.

The gesture tipped Tung as China's favorite [illegible] the post [illegible] chief executive. He is a man steeped in the British colonial establishment but closely connected to China, and thus able to ensure continuity in Hong Kong's transformation from British colony to self-governing region of China.

Although Yang, the former chief justice, led in opinion polls, Tung's triumph is likely to delight the business community, which was rooting for an experienced, tough-minded entrepreneur.

A burly father of three, Tung was educated in Britain and the United States and served on Gov. Chris Patten's inner cabinet while running his $300 million shipping empire.

China once helped bail out Tung's shipping line with a timely loan, but Tung insists he is not beholden to Beijing.

The bailout "has nothing to do with my decision to stand for chief executive," he said.

The committee was appointed by China based on nominations from the Hong Kong public, and covers a broad spectrum of Hong Kong society, from big business to trade unions, clerics and a retired British civil servant.

But Hong Kong democrats demanded an election by universal suffrage, and gave Qichen his first glimpse of Hong Kong street protest Friday, bellowing slogans over bullhorns and scuffling with police.

In the auditorium hosting the meeting, the Chinese future loomed large over the podium in the shape of a red banner and the five-star emblem of the Communist state. Martin Lee, leader of the Democrats and a fierce critic of China, called it an "election a la Beijing."

Qian said that the process was better than Britain's practice of sending out governors without consulting the Hong Kong public.

Qian is the most senior Chinese official to publicly visit Hong Kong since the Communist takeover of China in 1949.

Man arrested for theft at wedding

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — A cousin of President Robert Mugabe's new wife was sentenced Friday to nine months in jail for stealing $1,250 in cash gifts at the president's wedding reception.

Takaruza Lazarus Marufu, 28, was given the cash presents — 12,500 Zimbabwe dollars — for safekeeping during the August reception. He pleaded guilty to keeping the money.

The theft was discovered when people who gave cash presents asked why their names were left off a list of donors.

Marufu then paid it back, Magistrate Billiard Musakwa said. Musakwa also imposed a suspended nine-month jail term and described Marufu as "a national disgrace."

WEATHER WATCH

Today partly cloudy, chance of rain

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies, 20 percent chance of rain and a high between 65 and 70. Winds will be from the southwest at 15 to 25 mph and gusty, becoming west in the afternoon, according to the National Weather Service.

Tonight's forecast calls for fair skies and a low near 35.

Sunday's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high between 60 and 65.

The high for Friday was 70, compared to the record high for that date of 84, set in 1963.

Friday's low was 60, compared to the record low of 24, set in 1932.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms pounded Texas Friday, leaving roadways slick and leading to a traffic fatality in San Antonio, police said.

The victim was driving a car that crossed a median and collided with an 18-wheeler. The name of the man who died wasn't immediately released.

Showers and thunderstorms moved in from the coast to douse the inland South Texas areas. Temperatures ranged from the low 70s to the low 80s.

Today's forecast for South Texas predicts a cold front approaching the region, lowering temperatures into the 50s. Highs will be in the 60s. Skies will remain cloudy with scattered to numerous showers and thunderstorms possible.

In North Texas, thunderstorms dominated the skies and temperatures ranged in the mid-60s to low 70s.

Today's North Texas forecast calls for cloudy skies and more stormy weather. Lows will be between 56 and 64 degrees. Highs will be in the 60s.

In West Texas on Friday, partly to mostly cloudy skies prevailed and the region stayed relatively dry. Temperatures were in the 60s and 70s.

The forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies with lows in the 40s and 50s. Highs will be in the 50s and 60s.

NATION

Freezing rain and snow moved through the northern Plains and western Great Lakes region Friday. Strong winds, tied in part to that storm, wreaked havoc from Nebraska to South Florida, while California cooled down.

"It's snowing, it's all white and the roads are greasy," said Nebraska State Patrol Capt. James Rogers in Scottsbluff. "We've got accidents all over the place."

The morning snow turned to rain in Nebraska as things warmed up. But travel advisories were posted across the region as a moist flow of air overran the cold, dry air and produced freezing rain and drizzle.

In Hawaii, torrential rains pounded the islands again Friday, causing flooding and scattered power outages as authorities used dogs to make sure no one was buried in mud slides. Twenty-one inches of rain has fallen on parts of Oahu this month, 17 inches above normal.

On the mainland, Duluth, Minn., had the highest mid-day rainfall at 1.66 inches.

Scattered rain and snow hit much of the West, with up to 3 inches of snow received in eastern Idaho. The system also brought gusty winds and cooler temperatures to southern California.

The weather pattern produced sustained winds of 15 to 30 mph from Texas to Nebraska. But Florida experienced some of the worst winds — 45 mph gusts that created serious problems with blowing sand and beach erosion.

RASH: Burglaries have neighborhood on alert

what's next?"

"I think I may get a group (of residents) together and talk to the manager," Freeman said.

Johnson said he hasn't had any complaints from residents, but has hired security to watch the area.

"I think we'll add another two lights along the street. That way the street will be divided into fourths instead of half," he said.

He and private security were monitoring the neighborhood early Friday morning when the burglaries occurred, but didn't see anything.

He said he is determined to catch whoever has been burglarizing the neighborhood, but admits he's "baffled."

"They've got to be slick," Johnson said.

He said he was not aware of Friday's incidents until they had been reported to police.

In the eight years Johnson has owned the townhomes, he said the two instances of burglaries have been the only ones in the neighborhood.

Another resident, who didn't give her name, said she was glad to be moving out next month.

"That story about the lady down the street has had my daughters scared to death."

LAWSUIT: Texaco settles race discrimination case

did not utter the word "niggers," but "St. Nicholas." The investigator also said the "jelly bean" reference was not derogatory, but a term commonly used in diversity training programs.

However, Texaco acknowledged that the tone of the conversation was still troubling, and it did not dispute that the executives talked of trying to hide evidence.

The transcript contained in court papers quoted former Texaco treasurer Robert Ulrich as saying of the company's hiring records: "We're going to purge the (expletive) out of these books."

Jackson had warned that picketing would begin Saturday if there was no settlement. He also demanded the White Plains-based oil giant produce a company-wide plan to resolve minorities' complaints about promotion and pay.

Texaco stock finished up $2.75 at $101.12 1/2 on the New York Stock Exchange after word of the settlement got out late Friday afternoon.

EXTEND: U.S. to keep troops in Bosnia withdrawing U.S. forces from Bosnia by the end of this year, Clinton said, because while a fragile peace has held for 18 months, Bosnia's "bitter harvest of hatred" has remained.

(From 1A)

"With time, the habits of peace can take hold," Clinton said, but progress achieved over the past year would be jeopardized if U.S. troops left now. From a peak of about 20,000 U.S. troops, there are now about 14,000 in Bosnia.

The president addressed the Zaire mission at the same time.

"The world's most powerful nation must not turn its back on so many desperate people and so many innocent children who are now at risk" from ethnic violence and disease," Clinton said, adding that he had not yet given a final go-ahead.

The troops would help food and medicine reach the 1 million refugees in eastern Zaire, mostly Hutus from Rwanda and Burundi. The operation would last until March 31.

Although thousands of refugees began returning home to Rwanda on Friday, Clinton said it was too early to say the U.N.-sancationed rescue mission would not be needed.

Later the White House announced $25 million in humanitarian assistance to help in the repatriation and resettlement of Rwandan refugees returning from Zaire.

Anticipating Clinton's go-ahead, the Pentagon sent transport aircraft to Europe during the day to prepare to build an "air bridge" for relief supplies to Zaire.

Critics in Congress were quick to respond.

Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas, said keeping American forces in Bosnia to separate the rival factions works against the stated goal of integrating Bosnia's ethnic groups — a goal she called "questionable and probably unrealistic."

And a Democrat, Sen. Russ Feingold of Wisconsin, said, "The United States continues to be drawn deeper and deeper into a situation from which we appear unable to extricate ourselves."

But Democratic Sen. Jeff Bingaman of New Mexico defended the White House, saying Clinton is "bowing to the reality we face."

And Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., called the decision "the right thing to do to prevent war from erupting again."

Clinton does not need congressional approval of his decision, but Congress would have to approve the mission's funding.

A year ago, Clinton had said the peacekeeping troops should withdraw after a year regardless of whether war or peace followed.

"If we leave after a year, and they decide they don't like the benefits of peace and they're going to start fighting again, that does not mean NATO failed. It means we gave them a chance to make their peace and they blew it," Clinton said at the time.

Knowing he faced harsh criticism, a hoarse-voiced Clinton sought on Friday to portray his decision as approval of NATO plans for a separate mission to solidify the work already performed in Bosnia. "This is a different mission," he insisted.

At the Pentagon, Defense Secretary William Perry said, "The conditions for peace still do not exist in Bosnia." He used a medical metaphor to describe the problem:

"The operation was a success, but the patient is still in danger of dying."

Perry warned of the dangers to U.S. troops.

"There is a fertile breeding ground for violence, for localized conflicts which could get out of control and lead to a general war," he said.

Clinton implicitly acknowledged that his administration was mistaken to believe in 1995, when it initially committed 20,000 U.S. troops to Bosnia, that the peace would take root and economic and political order would be restored within a year.

"Quite frankly, rebuilding the fabric of Bosnia's economic and political life is taking longer than anticipated," Clinton said. He praised the work of the NATO-led multinational team, known as IFOR, that has implemented the military provisions of the 1995 Dayton peace accords ending the Bosnian civil war.

"IFOR plowed the field in which the seeds of peace have been planted," Clinton said. "This new mission will provide the climate for them to take root."

Freed from militia control, refugees flood back to Rwanda

GISENYI, Rwanda (AP) — In a sudden exodus that may alleviate central Africa's refugee crisis and ease the work of foreign relief troops, up to 400,000 ragged Rwandan Hutu refugees trudged homeward Friday after escaping from Hutu militants in Zaire.

Balancing meager belongings on their heads, carrying babies on their backs, waves of refugees moved slowly and steadily in a 25-mile column from eastern Zaire to Rwanda.

The refugees, however, still faced the dangers of disease and violence. Cholera has appeared in some refugee camps, 30 women and children were massacred Thursday and some refugees feared Tutsi retaliation once they return home.

The tide of refugees took the world by surprise, but it may work to the advantage of an international military force, including 4,000 U.S. soldiers, being set up to save the refugees.

The U.N. Security Council on Friday unanimously approved the Canadian-led multinational force of 10,000 to 12,000 troops to help aid the refugees in central Africa. The force received a four-month mandate.

"Despite the heartening news that up to a third of the Rwandan refugees in Zaire may finally be going home, people will continue to die in eastern Zaire in appalling numbers and their presence there will continue to destabilize the region," Canadian Ambassador Robert Fowler told the 15-member council in appealing for passage of the resolution.

Although the biggest U.N. camp in Zaire was emptying, an estimated half-million Rwandan refugees further south in Zaire remain cut off from food aid.

As the head of the long stream of humanity reached Gisenyi on Friday, some 10,000 people were crossing into Rwanda every hour from Zaire, U.N. officials said.

"This is a historic moment for Rwanda," President Pasteur Bizimungu told cheering refugees as he stood on a pickup truck. "You are our brothers."

Bizimungu told The Associated Press that the exodus meant the multinational force was no longer necessary. "The need for military intervention is over," he said.

Speaking in Washington, President Clinton added: "We have some very good preliminary news that the refugees will be able to go back to Rwanda and it will work out better than we thought."

Rwanda insisted Friday on an airlift of supplies only to its territory, saying it no longer supported an international mission in Zaire. The U.S. Embassy in Kigali, Rwanda, told the State Department that the Zaire mission should be reconsidered in light of Rwanda's opposition.

The Rwandan refugee homecoming was orderly and peaceful, in contrast to the desperate crush in Gisenyi 2 1/2 years ago when more than 1 million Hutus fled Rwanda, fearful that the Tutsi army would take revenge on them for the slayings of a half-million Tutsis in Rwanda.

They have been living a precarious existence in U.N. camps. Fearful of returning home, their lives have been controlled by armed Hutu militias.

Hutu militia fired over the refugees' heads to stop them from leaving the Mugunga camp on Friday, but their sheer numbers overwhelmed the gunmen.

"I've had enough. I just want to go home, straight home," said Joseph Segatare, a frail, 56-year-old refugee.

Hungry and exhausted but generally healthy, the refugees were registered and searched for weapons at the border crossing between the Zairian city of Goma and Giseyni. They were given high-protein biscuits and taken to nearby U.N. transit camps, which filled up quickly.

POLICE REPORTS

Brooks satisfactory

City Councilman Juluis Brooks' condition was upgraded from serious to satisfactory condition Friday, according to a nurse supervisor at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center.

Brooks suffered a split pelvis during a traffic accident Thursday.

His wife, Wanda, said she was told by doctors he would have to be hospitalized for six weeks.

Fire

Firefighters were called to a fire at 2110 N. Jackson St. Friday evening.

The fire started in the bathroom of the abandoned home and spread to the attic causing "heavy damage," Lon Dominguez, fire investigator said.

A neighbor, Norris Robinson, called emergency crews to the scene. The house had been vacant for nearly a year, Robinson said. "I was just waiting for something like this to happen. I'm glad the wind was blowing it away from my house."

It appeared as if the fire may have been set, Dominguez said.

He said witnesses told him they had seen two Hispanic juveniles fleeing the scene shortly before the fire.

"I've had to chase kids off two or three times," Robinson said.

There are no suspects and the investigation continues, Dominguez said.

Sexual assault

Midland County sheriff's deputies have released a composite drawing of the man wanted in connection with the sexual assault of a 21-year-old woman hitchhiker Wednesday.

The man is described as white, 35 to 40 years old, 5 foot 9 inches tall, 200 pounds, blue eyes, light brown hair with a well-trimmed mustache and beard.

He was last seen wearing a white T-shirt with writing on the front, blue jeans, tennis shoes and a black belt with a small buckle with some kind of design.

The woman also told authorities that she saw a partial tattoo on the man's upper right arm with the words "live to ride."

The man's vehicle is described as a 1995 or 1996 white Ford Ranger, a single cab pickup with grey interior.

Drug arrest

Three pounds of methamphetamine were seized and two people from Arkansas were arrested Thursday by the Permian Drug Task Force and Jeff Davis County Sheriff's Office deputies.

The drugs, valued at $37,500, were seized from their vehicle during a traffic stop in Jeff Davis County, according to a task force report.

Brian Keith Nelson, 32, of Hardy, Ark., and Jennifer Lynn Lawrence, 19, of Jonesboro, Ark., were charged with drug possession and were taken to Presidio County Jail, according to the report.

Fire death

ANDREWS — An Andrews County woman died Thursday evening in a fire at her trailer home.

The trailer home belonging to Tedora S. Montoya, 83, was fully engulfed in flames when the Andrews County Fire Department arrived at the F&C Trailer Park at about 11:30 p.m., fire officials said.

Three other people living at the trailer home — Mike Bejrano, Elizabeth Pando and their 7-month-old child — managed to escape the fire.

Justice of the Peace Calvert Shortes has ordered an autopsy; the body was taken to Lubbock for the examination.

The Andrews County Sheriff's Department and the State Fire Marshall's office is investigating.

Scientists discover new species of bird close to extinction

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — A tiny acrobat inhabits the forest canopy of Brazil's vast cocoa plantations, and its discovery has left bird lovers elated — and alarmed.

It's Acrobatornis fonsecai, a bird previously unknown to science. For bird-watchers, it was like winning the lottery — only one other new bird genus has been found in Brazil in the past decade.

But the rapid destruction of what is thought to be the bird's only habitat has ornithologists worried that its discovery soon may be followed by its extinction.

"If something isn't done, if the government doesn't buy the land and create a reserve, the acrobat will be extinct within 10 years," said Jose Fernando Pacheco, a researcher at the Federal University of Rio de Janeiro and one of the discoverers.

The small black-and-gray bird first was sighted by scientists in November 1994. But a full scientific description wasn't published until the most recent issue of The Wilson Bulletin, the respected U.S. ornithological magazine.

Pacheco said the bird was dubbed "the acrobat" because it spends most of its time upside down, running back and forth along the undersides of branches.

The second part of the bird's name, "fonsecai," comes from Paulo Sergio Fonseca, a bank worker and devoted bird watcher who first spotted the bird.

What's surprising is how it escaped detection for so long.

The acrobat lives in the shade trees overhanging the cocoa plantations of southeastern Bahia state, some 500 miles northeast of Rio. Its large, twiggy nests are clearly visible from the state's main highway.

"Imagine how many biologists drove by and never even noticed," Pacheco said.

When Fonseca saw it in 1994, he knew right away it wasn't a species known in Brazil. It took him two more trips, accompanied by two other researchers, to determine that the bird was not only a new species but an entirely new genus.

Birds are classified by species, genus and family. For example, robins and bluebirds are different genera of the thrush family.

Pacheco speculates that the acrobat — the only example of the oven bird family in the region — survived by adapting to the changes that came with the introduction of cocoa plantations, which require shade. The other members of the oven bird family were unable to survive the changeover, he believes.

For more than 200 years, cocoa drove Bahia's economy. But that has changed. More than 70 percent of the cocoa trees are dying from a fungus called witch's broom disease, which has no known cure. Farmers are selling or cutting down the trees to plant pasture.

When the trees are gone, the acrobat will be homeless.

'Polar-bear' rail line sold to firm

TORONTO (AP) — To the dismay of nationalists, authorities confirmed Friday that a U.S. company is buying a rail line that provides the only overland link with Churchill, Manitoba — the polar bear capital of Canada.

Churchill, on the western shore of Hudson Bay, is one of Canada's most distinctive towns. It has a polar bear jail, a polar bear research center and is the only saltwater port for Canada's grain-exporting prairie provinces.

Too remote to merit a highway, Churchill can be reached only by boat, by plane or by train over a 510-mile rail line from The Pas, Manitoba.

For decades, that track was owned by state-run Canadian National, one of Canada's two dominant railroads. But CN was privatized a year ago, and has been impressing its new shareholders — a majority of them American — with massive layoffs and property sales.

CN president Paul Tellier confirmed Friday that 800 miles of track in northern Manitoba, including the Churchill line, was being sold to Omnitrax Ltd. of Denver.

WORLD IN BRIEF

■ Vatican says book to be widely published

VATICAN CITY — The Vatican released the pope's new book Friday and announced that the partly autobiographical work initially will be available in seven languages.

It presented the Italian edition of Pope John Paul II's "Gift and Mystery," soon to be published in French, Spanish, English, German, Polish and Portuguese.

The work traces John Paul's journey to the priesthood in Poland during World War II and reflects on his 50 years as a priest.

Several chapters are directed at priests, but Archbishop Crescenzio Sepe, secretary of the Congregation for the Clergy, said the book should interest all readers.

■ Ecuador orders 1,000 percent sin tax

QUITO, Ecuador — It's not your ordinary sin tax.

President Abdala Bucaram's 1,000-percent levy on booze and cigarettes will send you straight to purgatory — with a $300 bottle of Scotch.

"Drink is harmful," Bucaram said. "Boozing and smoking lead to nothing."

Bucaram, a former Olympic athlete who does not drink or smoke, ordered the tax Thursday night. By Friday, the government already was backing down.

Finance Minister Pablo Concha said the measure needs to be studied since tariffs on such imported items are set by international trade agreements.

The current tax on liquor and cigarettes is 5 percent.

■ Dutch firm to milk rabbits for disease

LEIDEN, Netherlands — A Dutch company is planning to "milk" genetically altered rabbits to develop a treatment for sufferers of Pompe's Disease, a rare hereditary disorder that causes progressive muscle weakness and death.

About 50 rabbits have been implanted with synthetic human genes to enable them to produce milk that contains an enzyme the company, Pharming B.V., hopes will control symptoms of the disease.

Pompe's Disease, which infects about 20,000 people worldwide, usually strikes infants and is almost always fatal by age 2. An adult version also causes muscle weakness that eventually leads to respiratory and heart failure.

The disease is known also as acid maltase deficiency.

Officials say records boost MIA recovery

VAN THANG DISTRICT, Vietnam (AP) — Newly declassified Vietnamese documents are helping the United States find the remains of American servicemen, a senior U.S. official said Friday.

"We were at a point where we didn't have any more leads on a number of cases" of missing servicemen, said retired U.S. Gen. James W. Wold, deputy assistant defense secretary for prisoners of war and those missing in action.

The Vietnamese documents bring new clues to the search, Wold said after watching forensic experts search for the remains of four missing U.S. airmen whose B-52 was shot down over Hanoi in 1972.

Hanoi has steadily increased cooperation with the United States to help account for the 1,597 servicemen still listed as missing in action in Vietnam. In exchange, Washington last year established diplomatic ties with its one-time enemy.

Wold is in Vietnam to assess the latest mission to recover bodies, which began earlier this month. U.S. military experts have asked Hanoi for help on more than 400 cases, Wold said.

Recently, Vietnamese searchers discovered the remains of four U.S. servicemen and handed them over to American officials, Wold said.

During his trip, Wold met with his Vietnamese military counterpart and was given several documents containing intelligence reports on Americans listed as missing in action.

At the B-52 site in northern Vietnam's Van Thang District, about 24 miles northwest of Hanoi, dozens of Vietnamese volunteers helped American forensic experts excavate where villagers say the B-52 went down on the night of Dec. 20, 1972.

Mexico's ruling party makes bold move with approval of new rules

By Nancy Nusser
New York Times Service

MEXICO CITY — Following big losses in key local elections, Mexico's ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) has taken what opponents called a step backward in the nation's slow march toward democracy.

After spending two years thrashing out agreements on political funding, advertising and coalition-building with the main opposition parties, PRI legislators rewrote the accords this week, and then approved the revised rules Thursday.

Opposition parties denounced the revision of the original rules, which were intended to enhance their chances of winning office.

"This law will hold back movement toward democracy," said Manuel Lopez Obrador, president of the leftist Party of the Democratic Revolution (PRD). He called the PRI move a "backward step" and an "act of irresponsibility."

"There is a system, a party that is resisting the loss of power," said Felipe Calderon, president of the conservative Party of National Action (PAN).

The PRI is a huge party that resembles in structure and reach the old communist parties of Eastern Europe. It has won the presidency and most top elected offices for more than 65 years.

In past decades the PRI has used outright fraud such as ballot-box stuffing. In recent years, the party's advantage has been more subtle.

Since the PRI always leads the federal government, it has deep campaign coffers. Many Mexican media outlets, including the largest television station, Televisa, are often blatantly pro-government.

The PRI uses a sophisticated pork-barrel system in which PRI voters are rewarded with government jobs and posts in PRI unions. In the countryside, PRI candidates give out roofing and chickens right before polling day.

Last July, Congress passed constitutional amendments aimed at controlling fraud and reducing the PRI advantage. The changes were considered a major step toward democracy.

But the broader goals had to be implemented by "secondary laws" to be passed this fall by Congress.

The main parties, including the PRI, PRD and PAN, had worked out "all-party accords" to create these new laws.

But last Sunday, the PRI lost several big cities to the PAN and PRD in elections in the state of Mexico, which abuts Mexico City, and in the northern border state of Coahuila. The losses startled PRI officials and fanned worries about their prospects for 1997 congressional elections.

Within days, PRI deputies in Congress rewrote the accords, and on Thursday the party's congressional majority approved them.

The laws address the basic tools of electioneering.

For example, opposition parties wanted tighter controls on public spending for the 1997 congressional elections. Since public funding is allocated according to the number of voters a party says it has, the PRI always gets more money.

PAN wanted to hold public spending to $112.5 million, the PRD to $125 million and the PRI to $275 million. Under the law passed Thursday, the ceiling is the PRI figure.

The all-party accords called for controlling the PRI's broadcast advantage by guaranteeing that 40 percent of air time would be divided equally between the main parties. Now only 30 percent will be divvied up evenly.

Also under the PRI laws, opposition parties will have more difficulty creating coalitions to put up candidates.

While the differences may not seem major, the PRI's defiance of the opposition parties is viewed as a betrayal since top government officials have said they support electoral reform.

Even President Ernesto Zedillo has acknowledged that the 1994 elections that brought him to power gave his PRI unfair advantages.

The Zedillo government promoted the all-party accords, and in a country where presidents rule like kings, what Zedillo says should go.

Analysts offer two explanations: either Zedillo, never considered a strong president, is fumbling even more than usual, or his promise of reform was never sincere.

What's certain is that the PRI fears losing control.

In the Sunday elections for 245 mayor's positions in three states, the PRI was the majority winner. But the ruling party lost important cities, including Nezahualcoyotl, a vast urban slum in Mexico state that went to the PRD. The PRI lost two big cities in Coahuila to the PAN.

The losses are viewed as a harbinger of what might come in the more important 1997 elections, when Mexicans will vote for Congress and for the powerful position of Mexico City mayor.

"What's clear is that PRI is saying to itself, if we can't win on an inequitable basis, how are we going to win on equitable basis?" said Fernando Estrada, a member of the PAN's national executive committee.

He said the PRI laws mean the party "is saying it doesn't want to compete on the basis of equality."

Congressional freshmen try to catch up

WASHINGTON (AP) — They raised the money, gave the speeches, ran the ads, shook the hands and kissed the babies. Now they've gotten the jobs. And they don't even know where their offices are.

Welcome, freshman class of the 105th Congress.

Merrill Cook, 50, an incoming Utah Republican, could barely contain his excitement as he told of driving by the Capitol all lit up at night Thursday and then walking into the building Friday morning.

"It felt like, 'Hey, this is terrific. Yes, I really won. I'm going to be a member of Congress.'"

At orientation meetings Friday and Saturday, six dozen incoming House members are learning some basics, like how they will get their offices — a lottery — and how to get furniture for it, and stationery, and stamps and all the rest. And the House rules on keeping track of the money, financial disclosure and ethics. And how to get from here to there and back again without getting lost.

"It's a much better tour than when I was here as a visitor," Cook joked after a bipartisan breakfast Friday given by House Speaker Newt Gingrich's wife, Marianne.

Democrat Carolyn McCarthy, a nurse from New York, was here earlier this year on a different mission. In December 1993, a gunman killed her husband and partly paralyzed her son on a Long Island Rail Road train, and she lobbied lawmakers to oppose the GOP bid to repeal the ban on assault-style firearms. She returned Friday as a congresswoman-elect after defeating Republican Rep. Daniel Frisa, who voted for the repeal.

"It takes some getting used to," said McCarthy, 52. "But I just met all the freshmen and they all feel the same. Everybody is a little nervous, which I feel is good."

"Maybe I'm not smart enough to know how scared I should be," said incoming Republican House member Anne Northup, 48, of Kentucky. "I can tell you that two days after the election, the calls were coming in so fast, so hectic. How to handle it. I thought, 'Oh, my gosh, now I've got to do this!'"

For James McGovern of Massachusetts, who has long worked for Rep. Joe Moakley, D-Mass., Congress is old hat. But he views it now with new eyes.

"I feel like a little kid," said McGovern, who will be 37 on Wednesday. "It's a dream come true, a great honor."

The elections of some attending the orientation remained in doubt, including two Democrats — Loretta Sanchez, who is leading incumbent Republican firebrand Bob Dornan in Orange County, Calif., and John Tierney, whose 354-vote win in Massachusetts is being challenged by GOP Rep. Peter Torkildsen. Dornan and Torkildsen have demanded recounts.

McGovern, who defeated GOP Rep. Peter Blute, has an edge over most fellow freshmen because he knows the institution's inner workings. But he faces a hurdle that many do not: He's never been the guy in charge, doing the hiring and firing, and he finds it "awkward to be the boss all of a sudden."

Being a boss is no problem for incoming Texan Pete Sessions, 41, who supervised hundreds at Southwestern Bell and Bell Labs. He has already selected his 10 or so staffers.

"I can get through the halls of Congress," said Sessions, a conservative Republican whose father, William Sessions, was FBI director until President Clinton fired him in 1993. "It's knowing which doors you walk into and what happens behind those doors that will be new to me."

Panel recommends home seizure therapy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientific advisers recommended Friday that the Food and Drug Administration approve the first way to control certain severe epileptic seizures at home instead of at the emergency room.

Most of the 2.5 million Americans with epilepsy control their seizures with daily medication. But some suffer breakthrough seizures that are different from the standard epileptic attack. These are a cluster of prolonged, acute seizures that, if not stopped, can lead to a life-threatening brain disorder.

These patients get intravenous treatment with the drug diazepam in an emergency room. The drug goes straight to the bloodstream so it can immediately begin breaking the chain of seizures.

Now Athena Neurosciences Inc. is seeking FDA permission to sell a gel form of diazepam, under the brand name Diastat, that is administered rectally — getting to the bloodstream in about two minutes. The company says the gel is easy enough to use that people could fight seizures at home.

FDA's scientific advisers recommended unanimously Friday that the agency approve Diastat, but asked that it be carefully labeled to ensure people who care for epileptics understand exactly what kind of seizures it helps and when to get medical care.

Gore gets to put two cents in on most new appointment to Cabinet

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Wrestling with his thoughts late one night, President Clinton nearly settled on a candidate for a top post. He was impressed by the man, his credentials and experience. Still, there was doubt.

"I've got to talk to Al," he muttered to an aide, and left the room.

Hardly a decision is made about the second-term team without Clinton talking to Vice President Al Gore, whose fingerprints are all over the transition. In helping his boss build a new administration, Gore is building his base for 2000.

Clinton allowed Gore remarkable influence in the first term. And the loyal No. 2 will assume even wider latitude as Clinton puts together a new administration — especially in areas affecting Gore's plans to run for the presidency in four years.

The vice president will get sayso in the naming of a new White House political director and Democratic party chairman, aides say. Before the president finishes filling his half-empty Cabinet and topsyturvy White House, Gore will have confidants sprinkled throughout the administration.

Evidence of his touch is everywhere:

—Aides say retired Army Gen. Colin Powell is not being considered for a Cabinet post despite his enormous political appeal. Powell is seen as a threat to Gore in 2000.

—Retiring Republican Sen. William Cohen emerged Thursday as a surprise leading contender for defense secretary. Gore, a former Tennessee senator, goes way back with Cohen and has supported the Maine lawmaker in private chats with Clinton.

—Ron Klain, the vice president's chief of staff, found a spot in the small circle of aides who held the first post-election transition meetings with Clinton.

—When a coalition of women's groups sought a White House audience to press for women in the Cabinet, the president dispatched Gore. It gave the vice president a chance to soothe a key constituency for 2000. Gore is the transition's point man with minority groups, too.

Still early in the process, Friends of Al are considered daily for second-term openings. Aides were asking this week whether Environmental Protection Agency head Carol Browner, a longtime FOA, would make a good domestic policy adviser.

It was a telling inquiry: The current domestic policy adviser, Carol Rasco, is a friend of Clinton's from Arkansas — and has not resigned.

Browner landed at the EPA four years ago in part because of Gore's unusual influence from the start. His power has steadily grow. Just this summer, Gore pressed Clinton to name Franklin D. Raines budget director — then swore Raines in himself.

Political operative Michael Whouley will oversee Gore's political operation from the outside, after putting people inside the vice president's office and at the Democratic National Committee.

One thing he will watch out for is House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., a likely Gore competitor for the party mantle. The vice president is said to be leery about any Gephardt people vying for administration posts.

Gore also may be tempted to use his influence to fend off presidential decisions that could hurt him in 2000. Officially, administration officials say Clinton's second-term plans will not conflict with Gore's ambitions. Privately, aides say it will be fascinating to see what happens the first time Clinton makes a presidential move that could complicated Gore's presidential bid.

Nobody is thinking about that now, not during the rush to name scores of new appointees. Indeed, the president gave his vice president credit Friday for convincing him that the process was moving too quickly.

"What I concluded, after talking about this extensively with the vice president, in particular, is that we needed to make absolutely sure that we knew what the team was going to be," Clinton said.

Strikes push American factory output down for first time in seven months

WASHINGTON (AP) — The output of the nation's factories fell in October for the first time in seven months as autoworker strikes slowed production while some businesses were trimming inventories.

The Federal Reserve said Friday the ripple effect of the strike at General Motors' Canadian plants and later disputes that closed some of GM's U.S. assembly lines was largely responsible for the overall 0.5 percent decline.

But the report also showed that excluding auto plants, output at the nation's factories, mines and utilities was down 0.2 percent, with most industries sharing in the loss.

"Producers are responding to the pickup in inventories last summer" when consumer spending waned, explained economist Mark M. Zandi of Regional Financial Associates in West Chester, Pa.

By matching inventories with sales, businesses are setting the stage for increased production as demand strengthens, he added. "It suggests the economy will continue to expand moderately next year."

A separate Commerce Department report Friday showed growth in business inventories slowed to just 0.1 percent in September, from 0.3 percent in August and 0.5 percent in July.

At the same time, sales picked up 0.8 percent in September after slipping 0.2 percent the previous month. Many analysts believe sales will continue to grow moderately as the Christmas shopping season approaches.

The Fed report contained no sign of inflation, saying the nation's industries were operating at 82.7 percent of capacity, down from 83.4 percent in September.

Analysts say a capacity utilization rate of more than 85 percent would threaten productions bottlenecks that could lead to shortages and higher prices.

Stocks rose on the reports, which were seen as keeping inflation at bay. The Dow Jones industrial average rose 35.03 points to 6,348.03, its eighth consecutive record close.

Bonds, however, lost ground slightly, with the 30-year Treasury yield up to 6.46 from 6.41 percent late Thursday. Prices and yields move in opposite direction.

The decline in overall production was the first since an identical 0.5 percent drop in March. Many analysts had predicted output would remain unchanged in October.

Factory output also fell 0.5 percent in October, including a 0.7 percent decline in production of durable goods, such as cars, that are expected to last more than three years.

"Motor vehicle assemblies dropped more than 7 percent from their September level," the Fed report said. "This falloff resulted largely from shortages of parts made at strike-affected plants in Canada and from a strike that had shut down some domestic assembly plants late in the month."

Output of nondurable goods such as chemicals and clothing slipped 0.2 percent. Output at the nation's utilities was unchanged but mining production fell 1 percent after slipping 0.1 percent the previous month.

Against the lower trend, the computer and office equipment sector posted a 2.1 percent increase.

In its report, the Commerce Department said the inventory-to-sales ratio dipped to 1.39, from 1.40, matching the May and July levels, the lowest since the government began tracking the data in 1982. It meant it would take 1.39 months to exhaust stockpiles at the September sales rate.

Although inventories grew 0.3 percent at factories, they fell 1.3 percent at the wholesale level. Retail stockpiles rose 0.8 percent.

Rebels win, Plain and simple

■ Josh Norman runs for two TDs and the Rebel defense scored once as Lee runs by the Monterey Plainsmen 36-21.

LEE

LUBBOCK — Somewhere between Lee's 33-0 third quarter lead and the end of this Class 5A bi-district playoff football game, the Rebels either lost interest or started thinking about the chicken fried steak waiting after the game.

Oh, Lee won easily enough, 36-21, sending 5-6 Lubbock Monterey home for the duration, it just wasn't a pretty ending as Monterey's Dorian Pitts made the Rebel kicking game look like a 7th-grade tryout. Pitts blocked two Brian Evans punts and returned both of them for fourth-quarter touchdowns of 43 and 40 yards.

"Well, we aren't going to commit suicide, or anything," Lee coach John Parchman said. "We had three or four bad plays, that if you take them out of the game, we look pretty good. Maybe we got a little complacent in the second half, but it isn't anything we can't correct."

Maybe the start of this one was just too easy. Maybe Lee was feeling so guilty. It all looked so easy, like when John Norman caught a 37-yard touchdown pass from quarterback David Smith from a no-back offense on Lee's second play from scrimmage.

Then it was Rock 'N Roll time. There was a 70-yard, 10-play drive ended by Josh Norman's two-yard run and Norman again on a tackle busting 23-yard TD romp before turning it over to the defense.

That's when Kyle Hulme sacked Monterey QB David Gard and Fred Pertile fell on the ball in the end zone for a 27-0 lead. It was Pertile's second fumble recovery for a touchdown this year.

Fullback Chad Chandler scored his first touchdown of the year to open the third quarter with a 16-yard romp and then the nap came as Chris Ulmo's 23-yard field goal was the only other score of the night for Lee as Monterey was finding ways to score without an offense.

"We needed to move the ball against Lee and couldn't do it," said Monterey coach Buster Leaf, a former assistant coach at Lee in the mid-70s. "They took the wind early and we just couldn't move the ball. It was one of those situations where you feel like you have to have the ball to beat them, but we never kept it."

Monterey had a minus-seven yards of total offense in the first half and ended the night with only eight yards rushing and 57 yards passing. The Lee defense also held Monterey to only five first

New Phoenix Suns' head coach Danny Ainge fields questions at a press conference Friday announcing his hiring.

Coach Ainge in the works for long time

By Peter May
The Boston Globe

The father always figured the son would one day be at the end of an NBA bench — the end that mattered. The son seemed to have an innate understanding of the nuances of the game, an appreciation for how things worked and why they worked.

As far back as Don Ainge can remember, he always saw more than just a player in his son Danny. There was the cockiness on the floor, which manifested itself in many ways. Danny knew who was supposed to be where and didn't hesitate to say so. Danny had the ability to dissect and analyze, a talent he showcased for a year as TNT's chief NBA analyst. Danny had the reputation and the potential, so much so that the Phoenix Suns signed him as an assistant last May, gave him a deal through the millennium and promised him the Real Thing in a year.

Then the timetable accelerated exponentially. The Suns lost eight games out of the box and Cotton Fitzsimmons became the William Henry Harrison of the 1996-97 season. Danny Ainge, never a head coach anywhere, but always a coach in every game he played, is now at the end of the bench that really counts.

"We'd spend long hours talking about it," Don Ainge recalled Friday from his son's home outside Phoenix, where he was babysitting Danny's six children. "You just knew it would happen someday. He is excited about this, but this is way too early. He has no choice, but he also doesn't have a team."

The consensus is that Ainge will, in time, be a terrific coach. He has the knowledge, the temperament, the experience as a player. He has name recognition. He has history. He has confidence.

His high school coach in Eugene, Ore., Barney Holland, once recalled having to remind his star player just who was the boss.

"He was going around saying that he wanted to be like Pete Maravich but his coach wouldn't let him," Holland said. "He's right. He wanted to coach, referee and play. I told him he could only do one of those things. He said, 'I'd better play.'"

Then there was the time in Sacramento. The Kings were bringing in Dick Motta as their head coach, a curious choice at the time. Ainge, the one certified star on the team, joined Motta at the news conference.

Someone mentioned to Motta how helpful it would be to have a coach on the floor in Ainge. Motta sneered back at the obviously dumbed-down questioner. Humility was never one of his strong points.

"There's only one coach on the floor, and that's me," he said. "And I have a

Dallas D hit hard again

■ DB Brock Marion and DE Charles Haley the latest Cowboy defensive players to miss time this year.

By Kevin Lyons
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

IRVING — The Cowboys' top-ranked defense took two hits this week. A second fracture found in Brock Marion's shoulder will cause the free safety to miss the remainder of the season. And a third surgery performed on Charles Haley's back might force the defensive end into retirement.

After being injured Sunday against the San Francisco 49ers, Marion was originally expected to be sidelined two to three weeks after being diagnosed with a fractured left scapula. With better movement in his shoulder yesterday, Cowboys officials were able to perform a CT scan on Marion, which revealed a second fracture in his left shoulder joint.

Marion is expected to be examined by specialist Wayne "Buzz" Burkhead this week to determine whether surgery is necessary. Either way, Cowboys trainer Jim Maurer said Marion will miss at least the next six weeks.

Cowboys coach Barry Switzer indicated that he is not optimistic Marion could return even if the Cowboys make an extended playoff run.

"That's a reach," Switzer said. "We don't know."

Stanton running back Chris Carroll breaks through the Shallowater line for a first-half touchdown Friday night in a Class 2A bi-district game at Ratliff Stadium in Odessa.

Stanton loses heartbreaker

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

ODESSA — The winds which blew across Ratliff Stadium Friday night had to seem as fickle as a 7th-grader to the Stanton High football team.

Buffaloes coach Mark Cotton chose not to tempt those winds, but threw caution to them instead. Stanton had just scored a touchdown and trailed Shallowater by a point in a Class 2A bi-district playoff game with only two seconds on the clock. There was no arguing over what the next move would be — play for the win now, and not for overtime later.

It seemed like a perfect decision for a split second. Quarterback Kyle Herm threw a two-point conversion attempt toward tight end John Bryan and the pass looked on target. But Bryan didn't get his hands up in time and the ball bounced off his face mask, and with it so did Stanton's season, which ended with a 32-31 loss.

"It went just like we drew it up," Cotton said. "It was there."

The way things had gone earlier, going for two and the win didn't seem like such a gamble. The Buffaloes (8-3) had driven into the wind for the touchdown which cut the margin to a point after fullback Mark Carillo went in from a yard out with two seconds remaining. In the first quarter, placekicker Josh Madison had made an extra point into the wind, but he had an extra point blocked and missed another one.

Also in the south end zone, Shallowater had missed an extra point with the wind in its face in the third quarter. A two-point attempt seemed almost prudent.

"We had trouble with PATs and I felt our chances weren't good," Cotton said. "If we had made them we wouldn't have been in that position."

Kicking into the wind was just about the only thing which marred the contest, which was about as good a postseason football game as you're bound to see this year. There were big momentum changes, clutch plays on both sides of the ball and a pair of quarterbacks who collectively completed the last 13 passes they attempted.

But Shallowater had the biggest

Andrews rolls to 35-6 victory over Riverside

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

ANDREWS — The past few weeks have been a roller coaster, of sorts, for the Andrews' football team and the city of Andrews.

Two weeks ago, Andrews sophomore running back Shaud Williams rushed for 448 yards in a heroic effort over Fort Stockton. Last week, Williams was hurt, but the Mustangs defeated Big Spring 7-6 to earn the final 4-4A playoff spot. But this week, Andrews has been bombarded with the national media coverage surrounding honorary cheerleader Callie Smartt and the question was how would the football team respond against 9-1 El Paso Riverside?

The answer was good. Williams and the rest of the Mustangs answered that question emphatically with a 35-6 win in the Mustang Bowl Friday night, bringing normalcy to a town that needed it.

"We never brought it up in the locker room this week," Andrews head coach Mike Lebby said. "This (Andrews) is a great town, school system and a great place to win."

Andrews (6-5 for the season) will play Dumas in the area round next Saturday at 2 p.m in Plainview. Dumas (9-1 and the District 1-4A champion) set up the game with a 38-26 win over Lubbock Estacado Friday.

The Andrews effort, however, was not about cheerleaders or off-the-field incidents. No, Friday, it was about taking a Riverside squad and hammering over and over again with a rushing attack that was good for 402 yards. Leading the attack was Williams, who was listed as questionable with a hip pointer. Williams had his third best game of the year with 268 yards on 29 carries. The sophomore also had two electrifying touchdown runs of 56 and 80 yards.

"Coach (Lebby) said to stay focused and not let anything sidetrack us from what we got to do. That is what we did tonight," said Williams, who passed the

Lee, MHS both win in Del Rio

DEL RIO — Midland Lee and Midland High both opened the boys basketball season with impressive offensive victories at the Del Rio Tournament here Friday.

Lee got a three-point victory over Victoria, 72-69. The Rebels had a balanced scoring attack despite have several players still in football to beat the Stingarees, who are ranked in two Top 20 high school preseason polls.

The Bulldogs passed the century mark in beating Eagle Pass, 101-57. MHS had three players in double figures in the victory.

Rankin falls in first round

By Tom Ruiz
MRT Correspondent

BIG SPRING — On a windy night that caused tumbleweeds to roll furioulsy across Interstate 20, one had the feeling that the high winds also would cause state playoff teams to roll out off post-season play.

The Rankin Red Devils, who came on like gangbusters in the second half of their season, overcame many barriers just to make it into the playoffs, but they couldn't beat mother nature and lost in the Class A Bi-District showdown with Petersburg, 23-6.

Petersburg, (8-3) on the otherhand, which averaged about 250 rushing yards per game, stayed excluisvely on the ground and didn't challenge the 40 mph southerly gusts.

Petersburg churned out 145 of those yards in the first half alone and took a 16-6 lead into the lockeroom.

But the Red Devils, who finish the season at 4-7, only managed 43 yards rushing in the first two quarters, which forced them to virtually abandon their kicking game.

"The wind was a tremendous factor," said Red Devils coach Greg Althof. "When we punted, the ball would go five yards it then would fly back six yards and hit us in the face we never got out of the hole," Althof said.

With Rankin trailing 16-0 in the second quarter and the wind at their backs, they went on their best drive of the night marching 84 yards in eight plays. On the scoring drive, Rankin put together two pass plays of 34 and 35 yards.

Then on first and 10 at the 15 yard line, Ricky Guadarrama linked up with a pass to Frankie Rodriguez at the ten yard line. Rodriguez did the rest on his own as he eluded three would-be Buffalo tacklers for Rankin's only TD of the night.

"The touchdown gave us the spark we need going into the half and we were back in the ball game," Althof said.

Petersburg, however, took advantage of a 24-yard punt by Rankin that gave the Buffaloes excellent field postion at the Red Devils' 45 yard line early in the third quarter.

Seven plays later, the Buffaloes extinguished Rankin's spark on a 24-yard TD run by Charlie Croff and a commanding 23-6 lead.

Rankin, however, outdid Petersburg on paper, they picked up 13 first downs to Peterburg's eight. The Red Devils also outpassed the Buffaloes with 130 yards to 17 for Petersburg.

But that's why they play 'em on the field. The playoff appearance was a bonus for Rankin and Althof was extremely proud of the way his team battled back from an 0-5 start this season.

"Everybody had writted us off, but we kept believing in ourselves. We could have easily been 9-1 or 8-2 by playing a bunch of weak sisters, but we wanted the tough games to get us to where we got," Althof said.

ANDREWS: 14-point fourth seals win

(From 1B)

2,000-yard barrier for the season. "I'll give up the yards for a win. Every game, from now on, will get tougher, and things like injuries, I try to put in the back of my mind."

Unfortunately for Riverside (9-2 for the season), Williams didn't do that. The Rangers not only had to deal with him but four turnovers of their own. Right from the start, when Riverside's Javier Quintana overthrew David Moriel on a sure touchdown pass, the game went Andrews' way.

"He's a big-time player," said Riverside coach Tom Work referring to Williams. "We were hoping that he wouldn't play. We did have our chances, but we gave up the ball too many times."

The Andrews' onslaught started in the first quarter on a drive that set the tone for the rest of the game. The Mustangs converted two, third-and-long conversions on their way to the first score of the game. On the 51-yard, six-play drive, the Mustangs were set back twice because of penalties but succeeded with big plays immediately afterward.

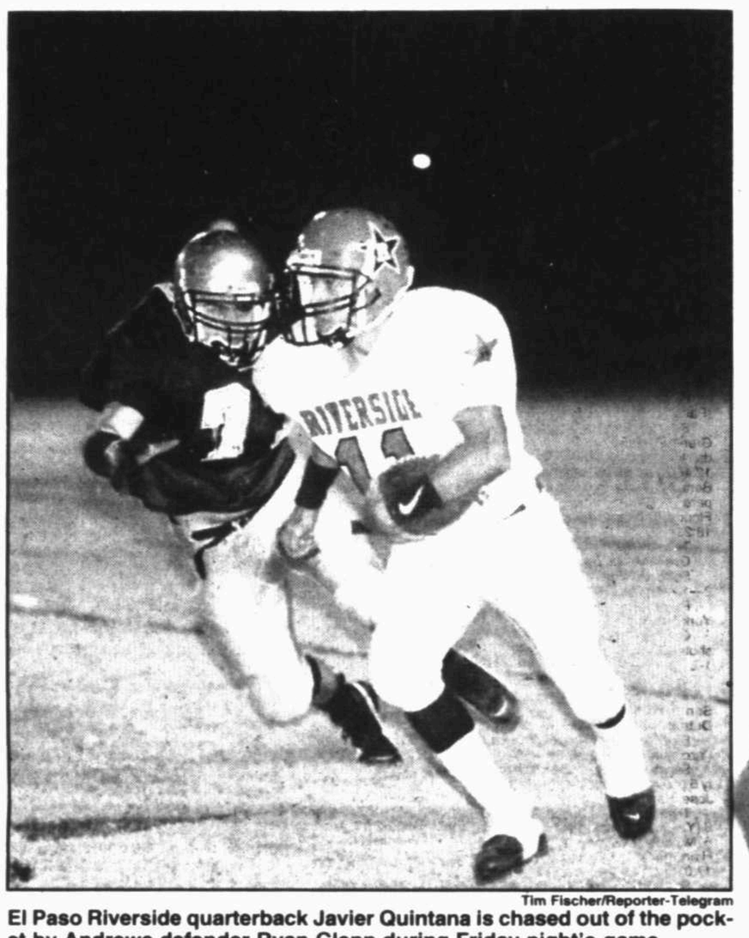
On third-and-14 from the Andrews 45, Williams ran the sprint draw for 34 yards and Andrews' first, first down of the game. Then on third-and-13 from the 24, quarterback Daniel Kessler lofted the ball into the gusting West Texas winds. When the ball came down, Terry Stone was just in bounds to give the Mustangs a 7-0 lead.

El Paso Riverside fumbled on its next possession, setting the stage for Andrews super sophomore. On a counter tray at the Andrews 44, Williams went around left end, cut back to the middle and left everyone in his dust. The 56-yard scamper gave Williams a 100 for the game just seconds into the second quarter and Andrews a quick 14-0 cushion.

"The offensive line did a great job," Williams said. "Everything was clicking. It is fun when we all go in the same direction."

Riverside answered with an 80-yard drive of its own, running the ball 56 yards and throwing for 14 and getting a key 10-yard defensive holding call on second-and-16. Riverside took the penalty that put the ball on the Andrews 14 and scored two plays later when Patrick Vidalez went in from five yards out. However, Riverside missed the two-point conversion.

In the second half, it was more Andrews. Williams busted out for an 80-yard touchdown. Then, Kessler broke one of his own for 35 yards and the fourth score. Then with the game got really out of hand and Williams was enjoying his night on the sideline, Nathan Pena scored his first touchdown of the season with an 18 run for pay dirt.



Tim Fischer/Reporter-Telegram

El Paso Riverside quarterback Javier Quintana is chased out of the pocket by Andrews defender Ryan Glenn during Friday night's game.

The defense helped the cause, playing tough when it needed to and allowing 205 yards in total offense.

"We didn't play well in the first half, but played really better in the second," Lebby said. "We made the adjustments and played well defensively. We were the better team."

The game was not without the continuation of the episode that has been given more than its 15 minutes of nationwide exposure. Smartt, an Andrews sophomore, took the sidelines for the game in her position as "Honorary Cheerleader."

The game for her, her family and Andrews High School followed what had been a week where the city and Class 4A high school had received media attention from around the nation about Smartt, a sophomore suffering from cerebral palsy. For Smartt's family, it has been an ordeal they hope to bring to an end.

"I can't tell you how much it has been blown out of proportion," said Fonda Smartt, mother of the 15-year-old. "It has been too much and very hard for Callie and the rest of us. She is here tonight and excited."

The rest of the cheerleading squad went about their business, cheering the team to what they hope is one game in a series that ends in a state title. They are trying to remain focused on their job and not on Smart's situation.

"I don't want to comment on that (the Smart ordeal)," said cheerleader sponsor Tara Fuller said. "We are focused on going to state and getting Shaud (Williams) an all-state spot. We have never had a problem with Callie."

Smartt's mother hopes that a resolution will happed in the immediate future.

"We will get it settled hopefully on Monday," Smartt said. "All that it would have taken is to let her cheer. We will talk to the superintendent and get it resolved."

downs on the night.

"We played good defense in the first half because our linemen, like Fred (Pertile) and Sam (Romine), were putting on good pressure," said John Norman. "We did have a little letdown in the second half, but the defense came through when the going was tough."

John Norman was spectacular. He was all over the field, making tackles. He caught a touchdown pass on offense and a kicking game tackle. And, unsuprisingly, had two interceptions to climb into sole possession of second place in the District 4-5A interceptions record book. Norman now has 19 career interceptions, finally breaking the tie with Midland High's Dan Black, who had 17 back in the 50's.

"I wasn't looking for the interceptions, but I'll take them when they're there," Norman said. "When the line rushes, the interceptions come. I guess Antwan (Alexander) is mad at me now because I've tied him for interceptions."

Parchman added, "It may not seem like it to a lot of people, but we really had a pretty good game. Our defense played really well and we adapted well on offense when Monterey stopped Josh (Norman) most of the night. The fullbacks (Chad Chandler and Stacy Jones) had good games."

Josh Norman failed in his bid for another 100-yard game, gaining only 57 yards, but David Smith threw for 104 yards, leaving him under 100 yards shy of the 1,000-yard barrier, a feat seen by few Lee quarterbacks.

All didn't end well for Lee. El Paso Socorro, a team Lee beat by only two points last year in the area playoffs, advanced with a win over El Paso Andress. That means Lee has to travel to the Sun City next Saturday for a 2 p.m. (MST) area game with Socorro, since Socorro played in Midland last year.

STANTON: Buffaloes short on last play weapon on the field, literally and figuratively. Tight end Cole Roberts proved to be too much for the Stanton secondary to handle at six feet, six inches and 235 pounds. Roberts torched the Buffaloes for nine catches and 185 yards, plus two touchdowns in the fourth quarter which ultimately decided it.

(From 1B)

"He was as good as I thought," Cotton said. "He made catch after catch after catch with our best athletes back there."

Roberts, who suffered a calf bruise late in the first half, made seven of those catches for 119 yards in the second half. His final one, a 32-yard touchdown reception on a crossing pattern from Shawn Cody, gave Shallowater (9-2) a 32-25 lead with 3:36 left in the game.

Herm accounted for 296 yards of total offense and was in command when the Buffaloes got the ball back for the last time. He completed all four of his passes for 61 yards on the final drive, which concluded when Carillo scored his second touchdown to make it 32-31.

In the first half, the sophomore Herm threw for three scores and ran for a score in the third quarter which gave Stanton a 25-12 lead.

"I can't say enough about Kyle Herm," Cotton said. "He's a great quarterback and his future is just super."

Friday night, though, Stanton's present was left blowin' in the wind.

Texas Wildlife Department opens new fishing center

By Chris Newton
Associated Press

Athens is about to have its own fun park for fishing fanatics.

The Texas Freshwater Fisheries Center, an $18 million aquarium and educational center, opens Tuesday. It is committed to the research of underwater life in Texas' freshwater streams, ponds and lakes.

A number of public organizations, including the Parks and Wildlife Department, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the city of Athens, funded the park. The complex has 300,000 gallons of aquarium displays with fish in their natural environment.

Texas Parks and Wildlife officials hope the center becomes a mecca for Texas fishermen interested in learning more about their passion. They say there's more to fishing than just a line and a hook.

"There's a lot Texans don't know about their own fishing areas that I think they'll be excited to learn about," said Allen Forshage, inland fisheries regional director.

The 24,000-square-foot hatchery includes 40 small ponds and a laboratory that will concentrate on genetic research, spawning and production of 5 million Florida largemouth bass meant to restock Texas rivers and reservoirs.

Visitors will be able to watch divers feed 13-pound bass while hearing a presentation on fish habitats.

Forshage said the center is designed to capture the interest of the biologist, as well as the casual fisherman.

"Our goal was to provide an educational and entertaining facility for every visitor of every age, and every stage of learning," he said.

The entrance to the fishing center begins on a modest footbridge over a typical Hill Country stream. Then the walkway descends beneath the water's surface and clear walls reveal a living underworld of lily pads, catfish and alligators.

Creators boast that the facility is designed to handle 1,000 visitors per hour and expects to welcome 350,000 visitors in 1997.

The park will be open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Sunday. Admission will be $4 for adults, $3 for seniors and $2 for children.

The fishery is located four miles east of Athens on Texas 2495. Athens is 34 miles west of Tyler.

Lady Chaps still unbeaten at 6-0

Staff report

GEORGETOWN — The Midland College Lady Chaparrals pushed their winning streak to six games as Ndiasse Ndiaye scored 25 points and Valeria Santos grabbed a season-high 17 rebounds in an 80-69 win over Angelina in the JUCO Georgetown Shootout.

The Lady Chaps (6-0) will now take on Kilgore College in a 2 p.m. game today to close out the Shootout.

Midland College used a second-half spurt to turn a seven-point halftime lead to 20 points early in the second half. Angelina (5-1), which came into the game unbeaten, crept back into the game but never really challenged for the lead.

"I think a key in the game was our depth," MC coach Ron Jones said. "The pace of the game was really fast and after we got up about 20 points, we let them back into the game with our turnovers. We're playing good, but we also played sloppy at times."

The Lady Chaps also controlled the boards the entire game as Santos established herself in the middle in the first half, collecting nine points as well.

"We did a really good job on the boards, and Valeria did a good jump early with 11 boards in the first half," Jones said.

Andretta Selders led Angelina with 22 points. Fatou Cisse was the only other Lady Chap in double figures with 11 points.

The schedule doesn't get any easier. Kilgore has been impressive early this season, winning their last two games easily.

"Kilgore will be the best team we've played down here," Jones said. "They've blown out their last two opponents. They've got size and are very athletic."

Crum reconsiders ballboy decision

Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Louisville coach Denny Crum quickly backed down from a decision to do away with ball boys rather than let a 10-year-old girl volunteer for floor-wiping duties.

"We look forward to expanding our opportunities for all young people," Crum said in a statement Thursday after receiving a phone call from from university President John Shumaker.

In an earlier statement, Crum defended his decision, saying he didn't want to have to "worry about leaving somebody out or finding the politically correct makeup."

The fifth-grade Louisville girl, whose parents didn't want her to be identified in news reports, said she plays basketball for her school team and has been "a big fan" of the Cardinals for three years, accumulating a collection of U of L posters, jerseys and other items.

"I don't think it's fair," she said before Crum reversed his plan. "Girls should get to do the things boys do."

The men's basketball team has had only ball boys since Crum became coach 25 years ago.

Judson performs great escape

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Defending Class 5A Division I champion Converse Judson barely escaped the first round Friday night, needing an 18-yard field field goal with 11 seconds left for a wild 32-31 victory over Austin Bowie.

Rudy Bagnato's kick wrapped up an amazing 32-point second half for the Rockets (10-1), who trailed 31-0 at halftime.

The game had appeared lost for Judson shortly before when Bagnato's 42-yard kick with 48 seconds left was blocked. But a player for Bowie (7-3-1) touched it — making it a live ball — and a Judson player recovered.

"These guys are going to make an old man out of me yet," said Judson coach D.W. Rutledge, whose team needed a 38-37 double overtime win over San Antonio MacArthur last week just to qualify for the playoffs.

Judson advances to meet the winner of Saturday's game between San Antonio Taft (6-3) and San Antonio Brackenridge (7-3).

Judson has won three of the last four Division I titles. The Rockets have appeared in four of the six Division I title games since the bracket was created in 1990.

Kentucky upset by Clemson

College Basketball

INDIANAPOLIS — For the third straight year, the defending national champion lost its opening game of the season. This time it was No. 20 Clemson with a 79-71 overtime victory over third-ranked Kentucky on Friday night in The Classic.

Harold Jamison scored eight of his 20 points in overtime and he gave Clemson the lead for good with a three-point play with 2:48 left that made it 70-67. His dunk came on a nice wraparound pass from Greg Buckner, who had taken a lob pass from Iker Iturbe.

The Wildcats, who won their sixth national title last April with a victory over Syracuse, were just 1-for-10 from the field in the overtime. Clemson closed the game with a 6-0 run after Derek Anderson had brought Kentucky within 73-71 with two free throws with 1:05 to play.

Jamison made one of two free throws with 53 seconds left and he was intentionally fouled on a breakaway 22 seconds later. He made one of two and with the ensuing possession Terrell McIntyre made two more free throws before Buckner closed it with a thundering dunk with seven seconds left.

Indiana 68, Connecticut 61

INDIANAPOLIS — Neil Reed, one of the few veterans on Indiana's freshman-laden team, scored 20 points Friday night as the Hoosiers beat Connecticut 68-61.

Reed and Andrae Patterson, both juniors and the only upperclassmen in the starting lineup, had nine points during a 15-4 streak that broke the game open midway through the second half.

Langenbrunner goal gives Stars 4-3 win

Associated Press

STARS

DALLAS — Jamie Langenbrunner's goal with 11:42 to play completed a third-period comeback, and Andy Moog got his 336th career victory as the Dallas Stars beat the Anaheim Mighty Ducks 4-3 Friday night.

Anaheim opened the third period with a 3-2 lead, but Sergei Zubov tied it with 15:39 to play with a power play blast from the point, his third goal of the season.

The Stars are 11-1-0 in their last 12 meetings with the Mighty Ducks, improving to 3-1-1 in their last five games and beating Anaheim for the second time in five days.

Moog had to make only 18 saves as he moved into sole possession of sixth place career wins among NHL goaltenders. Moog started the night tied for sixth with his boyhood hero, Gump Worsley.

Langenbrunner put the Stars in front when he skated from behind the net and beat Mighty Ducks goalie Guy Hebert with a backhander.

The Stars thought they'd scored the go-ahead goal with 14:14 remaining in the third period on Pat Verbeek's backhand. But after a review of the play, the video goal judge washed out the goal, ruling that Brent Gilchrist was in the crease before the puck entered the net.

Dallas dominated play in the second period, holding a 20-6 shots-on-goal advantage with 10 minutes to go in the period. But the Mighty Ducks struck for two goals over a span of 33 seconds to grab a 3-2 lead.

Joe Sacco tied it at 2-2 with 1:12 left in the period, scoring his third goal on a rebound of his own shot. Teemu Selanne put the Ducks in front 3-2 with 39 seconds left in the second period when his weak slap shot from the right point fooled Moog for his 11th goal.

Benoit Hogue gave Dallas a 2-1 lead at 8:02 of the second period, backhanding his eighth goal into the right side of the net off a nice feed from Brent Gilchrist.

Mike Modano gave the Stars a 1-0 lead at 6:27 of the first period with his seventh goal, firing a 25-foot wrist into the upper right corner of the net.

But Anaheim tied it at 1-1 with 8:20 left in the first period on J.F. Jomphe's rebound, his first goal of the season and third of his career.

Sergei Makarov made his debut in a Stars uniform. The 38-year-old Makarov signed as a free agent on Oct. 18, and last played in the league for San Jose in the 1994-1995 season.

Spurs go scoreless for 9:48, lose to Indiana

Associated Press

NBA Roundup

SAN ANTONIO — Derrick McKey and Fred Hoiberg scored 15 points each and Dale Davis added 19 rebounds to lead the Indiana Pacers to a 93-78 victory over the San Antonio Spurs on Friday night.

San Antonio went scoreless for a span of 9:48 in the third quarter and the Pacers used a 19-0 run to take a 72-46 lead. The Spurs scored less than 80 points for the fifth time this season and the eighth time in franchise history.

Dominique Wilkins led the Spurs with 19 points and 16 rebounds.

San Antonio narrowed an 11-point halftime deficit to 53-46 with 10:43 left the third period. But a 3-pointer by Reggie Miller, who finished with 12 points, started the Pacers on their 19-0 run.

Pistons 95, Bullets 84

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Grant Hill scored 27 points, and Otis Thorpe had 20 points and 12 rebounds as surging Detroit defeated Washington.

Detroit also got 25 points from Joe Dumars, and 11 rebounds from Grant Long. Chris Whitney led the Bullets with 18 points off the bench.

Nuggets 82, Celtics 80

BOSTON — Dale Ellis scored 36 points and Ervin Johnson had a key blocked shot and three free throws in the final minute as Denver beat Boston.

It was only the second win for the Nuggets in their last 18 trips to Boston and their first since the 1990-91 season.

David Wesley led the Celtics with 18 points while Rick Fox scored 17 and Radja 16.

Bulls 110, Hornets 87

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Michael Jordan made short work of Charlotte's fizzling Hornets, scoring 38 points in less than three quarters to lead Chicago to victory.

Jordan made 15 of 25 field-goal attempts before leaving with 1:56 left in the third period. His 29-minute performance was enough to help the Bulls (9-0) remain the NBA's lone unbeaten team and improve on the best start in franchise history.

Scottie Pippen added 17 points for the Bulls, who started 5-1 last season and went on to win an NBA-record 72 games and the league championship.

Glen Rice had 21 points for Charlotte, which lost its fourth consecutive game after opening with a 3-1 record — the best start in the club's nine-year history.

Trail Blazers 93, Nets 85

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Kenny Anderson scored 22 points and Portland defeated New Jersey Friday night, sending John Calipari and the Nets to their fifth straight loss — the worst start in team history.

Clifford Robinson, removed from the starting lineup for disciplinary reasons, added 21 points in three quarters and Isaiah Rider had 15 as the undermanned Trail Blazers broke a three-game road losing streak.

Cleveland 105, Philadelphia 89

PHILADELPHIA — Bobby Phils had 26 points and Chris Mills 25 as the Cleveland Cavaliers defeated Philadelphia for their 11th straight victory at Philadelphia.

Cleveland set a franchise record by holding an opponent under 100 points for the 14th straight game.

Terrell Brandon had 24 points and 13 assists for the Cavaliers, who have defeated the 76ers in 21 of their last 22 meetings.

Hawks 85, Heat 77

ATLANTA — Miami established an NBA record for second-half futility, scoring only 21 points over the final two quarters as Atlanta, led by Tyrone Corbin's 22 points, beat Miami.

The Heat, who scored 13 points in the third quarter and 8 points in the fourth, broke the mark of 24 points set by five different teams, including Miami. The record for any half is still held by the New Orleans Jazz, which managed only 20 points in the first half of a 1975 game against Seattle.

Jazz 104, Grizzlies 96

SALT LAKE CITY — Karl Malone scored 21 points and Greg Ostertag had his second straight big game with career-highs of 16 points and 20 rebounds as Utah beat Vancouver.

On a night of season- and career-highs for the Jazz, John Stockton handed out 18 assists, a season-best, Jeff Hornacek added 16 points, his high for the season, and rookie Shandon Anderson scored 13, his career-best.

Hoch chip gets lead at shootout

By Ken Peters

Shark Shootout

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — Scott Hoch, playing in the Franklin Templeton Shark Shootout for the first time, knocked in a 30-foot chip for an eagle on the 16th hole Friday as he and teammate Chip Beck shared the first-round lead in the $1.1 million event.

Hoch and Beck combined for a 6-under-par 66, playing an alternate shot format on the first day of the three-day competition.

Curtis Strange and Mark O'Meara, who teamed to win the inaugural Shark Shootout in 1989 but haven't won the title since; also had a 66 to open the 1996 renewal at Sherwood Country Club.

There was a gap of just four shots between the leaders and the last-place team — Jim Colbert and Bruce Lietzke at 70 — after 18 holes of a tournament that pits 10 pairs of golfers in alternate-shot, best-ball and scramble competition.

The host of the 54-hole event, Greg Norman, and partner Raymond Floyd were in a group one shot behind the co-leaders with a first-round 67. Norman has never won his own tournament.

Also at 67 were the teams of John Daly-David Duval and Jay Haas-Tom Kite.

"I had heard this was a fun, relaxing event," said Hoch, who usually has played in foreign tournaments at this time of the year.

"Both of us did everything pretty well today. Chip drove poorly but, luckily for us, I drove it well. We had a chance for a really good round out there, but looking at the scores, we must have done all right."

Hoch chipped in from a gully on the left of the green at No. 16, "with not a lot of green to work with."

"It barely rolled in," he said.

Strange and O'Meara, who also have finished second twice and third once in Norman's tournament, liked their position after the first round.

"Six-under is a good round in alternate shot," Strange said. "If you get behind today, it's tough to catch up."

O'Meara said, "It's fun, but we are competitive."

Daly, known for his booming drives, didn't hit the ball off the tee very well, but Duval did.

AINGE: Suns winless so far this year

(From 1B)

ring to prove it."

For one of the few times in his life, Ainge, who had two rings, was speechless. A year later, Ainge was traded, at his request, to Portland.

Ainge has been on the Phoenix payroll only since Memorial Day. The Suns, as was the case with Paul Westphal, hired him with the intention of having him learn at the side of Fitzsimmons, a long-time coach and philosopher king. The expectation by both sides was that Ainge would move over next season. He certainly wasn't going to wait four years like Westphal, even though he had less coaching experience.

But even from the outset, things seemed awry this season. Ainge was elevated over two more experienced assistants. Fitzsimmons said Ainge would take over the defense while a triangle offense was installed. Why install a new offense when there will be a new coach, and a slew of new players, next year?

"People would ask me if I'm like a defensive coordinator in football," Ainge said the other day. "Well, I'm not. I don't get to dictate who's on the court, or how much time we get to talk about the defense, or say what kind of defense we're in. Cotton is in charge of it. It is difficult for him to relinquish responsibility, although he does allow input. We have input, but not a lot of responsibility."

Ainge has the whole enchilada now. He also has an 0-8 team whose first-round pick next season belongs to Cleveland. He also is staring at the next four games — Lakers, Bulls, Rockets, Heat — and wondering when a win will come. He has a depleted roster bereft of tough guys, and one of his reliables, A.C. Green, is ailing and rumored to be on the trading block.

Sounds like a dream situation, right?

"Danny won't be flustered," Don Ainge was saying. "He told me, 'I've got the six-year contract; why should I feel any pressure? The pressure should be on the players.'

"You know, back when he was a kid, he was even doing the coaching in Little League (basketball). When the parents would complain about who was playing, he'd go up to them and politely tell them that it wasn't always the best five who won the game, but the five best. I think he'll have a good time."

McLemore offered arbitration

Associated Press

Baseball Notes

ARLINGTON — The Texas Rangers announced Friday that the club will offer second baseman Mark McLemore salary arbitration, keeping him from becoming an unconditional free agent.

Pitchers Mike Henneman and Jeff Russell, infielder Kurt Stillwell, and outfielder Darryl Hamilton were not offered salary arbitration and are now free agents.

The Rangers had until 11 p.m. Saturday to offer arbitration to its five repeater rights free agents. The offer means McLemore is still considered to be under contract.

"We will be continuing to negotiate with Mark on a new contract," said Rangers general manager Doug Melvin.

McLemore batted a career high .290 with five home runs and 46 RBIs in 147 games with the Rangers in 1996. He led the team with 26 stolen bases and had the fourth-highest fielding percentage of any AL second baseman (.985).

The team also announced that the team signed catcher Henry Mercedes as a six-year minor league free agent and added him to its major league roster.

Mercedes spent most of the 1996 season at Omaha, batting .215 with eight home runs and 35 RBIs in 72 games. He was also 1-4 in four games in two stints with Kansas City.

The moves leave the Rangers with 28 players on their major league roster.

Marlins, Belle talk

MIAMI — The Florida Marlins opened negotiations Friday for Albert Belle, who may soon become baseball's best-paid player. Belle this week rejected an offer from the Cleveland Indians, a deal said by some to have been worth $8.5 million per season for four or five years. The Marlins were expected to offer more, and they're considered the frontrunners to sign the outfielder.

Graf rolls in Advanta semifinals

Associated Press

VILLANOVA, Pa. — Top-ranked Steffi Graf continued to roll through her pre-championship warmup, beating Chanda Rubin 6-0, 6-3 Friday to advance to the semifinals of the Advanta Championships.

She'll face 114th-ranked Marianne Werdel Witmeyer, who staged another tournament upset Friday with a 6-2, 6-3 win over eighth-seeded Barbara Paulus.

Third-seeded Jana Novotna overwhelmed Anne Miller 6-3, 6-0 and moved to the semifinals to face Yayuk Basuki, who came from behind to beat local favorite Lisa Raymond 5-7, 6-3, 6-3.

The loss ended Rubin's long-shot bid to qualify for next week's season-ending Chase Championships in New York. Judith Wiesner will go.

Graf, winner of her last six Grand Slams, has battled a nagging knee injury since Wimbledon. She hardly practiced after the U.S. Open and pulled out of the Leipzig Open in early October. The Advanta is her last chance to prepare for the Chase.

She's continues to play in the shadow of her father Peter's continuing trial for tax evasion in Germany. She found out before Friday's match that he had been freed on $3.3 million bail after 15 months in prison.

Rubin, who had wrist surgery this summer and was sidelined for much of this season, beat Wiesner and No. 8 Iva Majoli in the first two rounds.

Earlier Friday, Novotna went down 3-0, then won 12 straight games on powerful ground strokes and an occasional drop shot.

"I was playing out of my mind," said Miller, who upset No. 7 Lindsay Davenport in the first round. "I don't know exactly what happened. Once I got up, I kind of thought I could relax a bit, and you just can't do that against a top player."

Ford Champions

JEDDAH, Saudi Arabia — Johan Kriek defeated John Fitzgerald 6-4, 6-3 Friday night to capture the singles title in the $150,000 Ford Champions men's over-35 tennis tournament.

For Kriek, 38, it was his first title of the 1996-97 Nuveen Tour season and second in three seasons on the senior circuit. It was his fourth final appearance in four contries in five weeks.

Graf's father free on bail

MANNHEIM, Germany — After spending 15 months in jail on tax evasion charges, Steffi Graf's father is free on $3.3 million bail.

"I'm very happy and relieved that my father is at last at home," Graf said in Philadelphia, where she is playing in a tournament. "I'm looking forward to seeing him when I return to Germany following the Chase Championships in New York next week."

A teary-eyed Peter Graf gave spectators a thumbs-up gesture when the presiding judge at his trial said the state high court in Karlsruhe had refused to rule immediately on a motion by prosecutors to keep Graf in jail.

Judge Joachim Plass said he could not legally keep Graf or family tax adviser Joachim Eckardt in custody any longer because of the length of likely sentences should they be convicted. Both men face a maximum 10-year sentence if convicted, but Plass said they could face less time.

Prosecutors, who had a similar ruling overturned in September, had filed a motion in the high state court, seeking an order to block their release. But the court, refusing to act immediately, said it would consider the motion in the next weeks, leaving open the possibility that Graf and Eckardt could be back in custody.

The trial, scheduled to run until Jan. 3, was recessed and Graf left through a back door without commenting. The two men are charged with failing to declare $28 million in income between 1989 and 1993, on which $13.3 million in taxes are due.

Since Peter Graf's arrest, the family has paid the back taxes based on the figures reached by investigators and tax authorities.

Packers looking to Dallas game all year

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

NFL Pro Picks

A few times this season, the Dallas Cowboys have been caught looking ahead. The Green Bay Packers have spent the entire season looking ahead to their visit to Dallas on Monday night.

They probably couldn't have picked a worse week.

After losing Robert Brooks and Antonio Freeman, their best wide receivers, earlier this year, the Packers lost Mark Chmura, one of their two tight ends, last Sunday, when they fell at Kansas City.

But Mike Holmgren came out of that loss in a remarkably upbeat mood, almost as if the team's second loss of the season would make it better this week.

All this started last January, when the Packers lost the NFC title game in Dallas, their sixth straight loss at Texas Stadium over three seasons.

It intensified when the schedule came out. "Why do we play there every year and they never come here?" Holmgren asked.

That's the idea of this game. A Green Bay win and any playoff meeting is almost sure to be in Green Bay.

The Cowboys, favored by 3 1/2 points, have been an up-and-down team all season and are way up after beating the team that they looked ahead to — San Francisco.

COWBOYS, 21-17

Denver (+2 1/2) at New England

Were these two looking ahead last week when they narrowly escaped with wins against teams they should have beaten easily.

Young, agent to talk about player's future

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Steve Young and his agent, Leigh Steinberg, plan to "take a serious look" at the quarterback's repeated head injuries once the San Francisco 49ers' season is over.

Steinberg said earlier reports that he and Young would consider retirement were incorrect. The two would discuss several options, including a special helmet.

"I hope that he can play longer. He hopes that he can play longer. We just have to take a serious look at it," Steinberg said.

"Steve is not in denial" about the seriousness of his head injuries, Steinberg said. Young has consulted a neurologist and concluded that he could continue to play.

Young was benched on doctor's orders after the second concussion, which occurred early in last Sunday's 20-17 overtime loss to the Dallas Cowboys. Elvis Grbac will start in place of Young on Sunday when the 49ers (7-3) play host to Baltimore (3-7). Young expects to start Nov. 24 at Washington.

Jeff Brohm will back up Grbac on Sunday, and the 49ers signed 1992 Heisman Trophy winner Gino Torreta on Friday as the emergency quarterback just in case.

Young could not be reached for comment on Friday but earlier this week said he felt fine.

"I talked to the neurologist and he saw how good I felt. I think he wanted to say, 'Go ahead and play,' but just felt because of two in 14 days it would be wise to take time off," Young said.

Last year, Steinberg organized a seminar for athletes concerning head injuries. Young and fellow Steinberg clients Troy Aikman of the Dallas Cowboys and Warren Moon of the Minnesota Vikings were among those who attended.

Steinberg noted that research indicates concussions lead to an "increased risk of Parkinson's disease, Alzheimer's and senility."

"Brain function is the last frontier of medical research," he said. "No doctor can say how many concussions is too many."

Young has had six serious concussions since he started playing pro football in 1984. But it is difficult to determine exactly how many concussions Young has had because the quarterback tends to play through what he calls 'mini-concussions.'

"An official concussion is one in which he is carted off the field," Steinberg said. "A mini-concussion is one in which he's momentarily dazed or stunned but he continues to play."

San Francisco quarterback Steve Young has received concussions in two of the past three games which has prompted him and agent Leigh Steinberg to talk over Young's options, which may include retirement.

Emmitt keeps battling, but can't shake injuries

By Josie Karp
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

IRVING — Early this week, Emmitt Smith told running backs coach Joe Brodsky he felt better than he had all season. The statement was made before the Cowboys had resumed their workouts in preparation for Monday night's game against the Green Bay Packers.

Having made that declaration, Smith promptly went out in practice Wednesday and hurt his right ankle again.

It has been that kind of season for Smith, who can't seem to get healthy off the field and can't seem to get untracked on it.

But Smith is not looking at this season as some kind of downward turning point. He is only 27 and insists he is not getting old. The injuries that have plagued him this season will get better, he asserts.

"When are they going to get better? Probably when the season is over with," Smith said. "It's not like I'm dealing with a whole bunch of stuff right now. Early on, when the season got started, I was dealing with the knee and the ankle, then I injured my back a little bit. But that went away fairly quick. But I still have the ankle (injury). It's the one that will probably take the longest to recover."

Only once this season, Smith said, has he felt almost like his old self on the football field. That was when the Cowboys played the Philadelphia Eagles at Texas Stadium.

"Even though the ankle was bothering me a little bit, I still feel like I was able to run the ball better than I was most of the year," Smith said.

In that game Smith rushed for a season-high 113 yards on 24 carries. The Cowboys lost.

Not once, Brodsky said, has Smith looked like his old self on the football field this season.

"Areas where he would normally be able to run get kind of clogged up right now, and he has to go way outside and he doesn't have the burst to get that thing done," Brodsky said. "He can get outside, but he can't burst back."

Smith watches film, too, and sees that he is not the same player he was last year, when he won the fourth NFL rushing title of his career. But he denies that he is taking extra care to protect his body this season by running out of bounds or lowering his head when his running lane crowds with defenders.

"All I've got to say is, you have to watch some of the tape and then watch the past tape and see what you see differently," said Smith, insisting stepping out of bounds is nothing new.

"I don't know why it's such a big deal now. I still lower my head when I have nowhere to go. In my mind I think I'm doing the same things."

But the injuries are clearly keeping Smith from having his usual success. Smith has only broken the 100-yard mark three times this season. He has had only two games where he has averaged at least 4.7 yards per carry, the mark he finished with last season.

The Packers have always brought out the best in Smith, mostly because Green Bay has been susceptible to the run and the Cowboys have been willing to stick with it.

Leadership on the field still lacking for New York Jets

By Gerald Eskanazi
c.1996 N.Y. Times News Service

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — Carl Greenwood's contention that the Jets are a team without strong leaders and players that lack discipline reverberated throughout the locker room Friday. The remarks he made on Thursday seemed to bother middle linebacker Marvin Jones, but were played down by Coach Rich Kotite.

The Jets' defense is being attacked from without, and succumbing, week after week. In six straight games they have yielded at least 21 points. Now it remains to be seen what impact Greenwood's remarks will have within the club's tight little world.

Greenwood, who will be making his first start for the Jets when he plays right cornerback at Indianapolis on Sunday, also said that some veterans were not allowing the younger players to express their feelings of frustration with the team's play.

"What is leadership?" said Jones, who has the potential to be the club's best player. "Is it cussing somebody all the time — or (is) it when you're putting out all the time? You got a bunch of guys making hundreds of thousands or a million bucks, and you need to whip a ball and chain across his head to get him to play?"

Jones usually plays down his role and how the team is doing. But he warmed to the subject Friday. He said that usually "guys stay in their place until they prove something. You determine leadership by going out and yelling — or by hitting someone?"

Ultimately, Jones crystallized what is really at the heart of this mini-controversy, in which several other defensive backs sided with Greenwood.

"Every team has its own problems," Jones said, "but they don't surface until things get bad."

Meanwhile, Kotite hinted that Greenwood might want to reconsider his stance, at least until he plays more. "I don't think anyone should evaluate those kind of things, especially if he hasn't been in there a good deal of the time," the coach said. Kotite added, with some cordiality: "I don't think he's trying to tear anything down. He's trying to help."

Former Cornhusker Peters to sign contract with Giants

By Mike Freeman
N.Y. Times News Service

The New York Giants are bracing for what could be a wave of negative publicity in the wake of their decision to sign former Nebraska defensive tackle Christian Peter, who in college committed a variety of crimes against women. The Giants are standing firm behind their decision, saying that everyone deserves a second chance as long as he has earned it.

"I may catch a lot of grief and this organization may catch a lot of grief," said Giants general manager George Young. "We understand that. But he has proven he deserves a second chance and we're going to give it to him."

The Giants, according to Young, plan on signing Peter sometime next month to a multi-year deal for the league minimum of $131,000 a season. They will probably place him on the practice squad, composed of rookie and first-year players, and do not plan on using him in games this season.

At Nebraska, Peter was involved in several incidents that earned him a reputation as someone who had an uncontrollable temper, was especially violent toward women and had a drinking problem. In 1994 he pleaded no contest to third-degree sexual assault and served 18 months probation.

Last March he was convicted of disturbing the peace for an incident in which he grabbed a woman around the neck at a bar. He later apologized to the woman and acknowledged he had a drinking problem.

Peter is also named in a civil suit in which a Nebraska woman claims he raped her twice. In numerous interviews since the April draft, he has denied those charges.

Young said the Giants would sign Peter no matter how vehement the reaction may be.

COWBOYS: Injuries wrecking defense

(From 1B)

Hours before the Marion revelation, Haley underwent back surgery in Los Angeles. The back operation, his third in 32 months, was to remove a disk fragment and scar tissue in Haley's lower back, which was causing numbness and intense pain in his back and legs.

Cowboys officials remain unsure whether Haley, 32, can resume his playing career.

"I can't cite someone who has had their back operated on three different times in the same spot," Maurer said. "Our concern is not whether he can come back on the field. We just want to make sure Charles can be pain free."

Marion, ranked fourth on the team with 77 tackles, is expected to be replaced by George Teague in the starting lineup, Switzer said. Switzer said the club might discuss signing free-agent safeties in the near future. Thomas Everett and Scott Case remain available.

"We're disappointed for Brock because he was really having a fine season," Switzer said. "We were preparing to play the next few weeks with George Teague at free safety. George is now going to be the guy for the remainder of the year. He played a lot last week, and he's comfortable with our scheme."

Third-year defensive end Shante Carver is expected to start in Haley's place, Switzer said. Strong-side linebacker Broderick Thomas and rookie defensive end Kavika Pittman are also expected to see playing time rushing the passer against the Packers, Switzer said.

Haley signed a four-year, $12 million contract in July 1995, which included a $3 million signing bonus. His contract was extended a year through the 1999 season. If he retired, he would count $900,000 toward the Cowboys' salary cap in 1997.

"We've played without Charles all year and when he's played, he's played with pain and he's been hurt," Switzer said. "He has not been in the game plan all year long. I haven't thought about him because he's been hurt, and it's unfortunate. But we can't dwell on that. We've got to get the people we are playing with ready to go."

Haley has recorded 33 of his career 97 1/2 sacks in 41/2 seasons with the Cowboys.

"We've just looked at Charles as being a bonus," defensive coordinator Dave Campo said. "It's a big blow to us because we'll miss his big-play ability."

Haley has missed five of the past seven Cowboys games because of his back, which was originally operated on in February 1994, and again last December. The degenerative condition has kept him from participating in much of the Cowboys practices. In five games, Haley has recorded seven tackles, one quarterback sack and five quarterback pressures.

Southern California back specialist Robert Watkins performed the surgery. It was under the recommendation of Watkins that an aching Haley sat out games against the Buffalo Bills, Philadelphia Eagles, Arizona Cardinals and Atlanta Falcons to rest his back.

Enthusiastic about playing against his former coach, Jimmy Johnson, Haley received an injection to compete against the Miami Dolphins on Oct. 27. He took another injection to play against the Eagles on Nov. 3.

With his conditioning worsening, Haley did not even make the trip to San Francisco for the Cowboys' game against the 49ers. A magnetic resonance imaging exam performed on Haley's back Tuesday did not show any changes from previous MRIs, so he flew to Los Angeles on Wednesday morning to consult with Watkins, who recommended the surgery.

"We believe that the scar tissue is the main problem for any new pain that Charles has had," Maurer said. "It is something that has been aggravated at times. That's why he has been week-to-week. Some days he has felt good, some days he didn't. He's been dealing with the pain all year, but recently, it had elevated to a degree where Charles wanted it checked out."

Cowboys defensive tackle Tony Casillas said it was obvious that the defensive end was in a lot of pain.

"You could see the pain on his face every time he played, even when he was walking," Casillas said. "He was hurting so bad, but he tried to contribute, and he wants to be around the players. That's why he tried to come out and play as much as he did."

Reports: Holtz planning to step down from Irish

■ Head coach not saying if he intends to resign his post as head of the Notre Dame football program.

By Nancy Armour
AP Sports Writer

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — CBS reported Friday that Lou Holtz will step down as Notre Dame coach. The report was immediately denied by Irish officials, although Holtz has refused to say he definitely was staying.

CBS Sports said the announcement would be made "Tuesday, no later than Wednesday."

ESPN, meanwhile, quoted two unidentified sources as saying that an announcement that he was leaving could come next week.

Notre Dame athletic director Mike Wadsworth said he expected Holtz to continue as Irish coach.

"Every rumor I've heard is wrong," Wadsworth said.

Asked about the reports Friday night, Holtz said, "There is nothing I'm going to say to you."

Bert Berry, a senior linebacker, said Holtz has discussed the rumors with the team, and told the players they are unfounded.

"We're just going to go with his word," Berry said. "For him to leave would be a great tragedy."

Earlier, Holtz led a pep rally.

"Let's go men!" he said as he led the team to a pep rally. Several of the players then surrounded Holtz as he walked down the hall to the rally.

At the rally, students chanted "One more year!" as a relaxed and laughing Holtz addressed them.

"I stand up here very proudly as the head coach of the University of Notre Dame," he told the crowd. "There is no other place like Notre Dame. This place is special and it's been blessed by God."

Holtz has repeatedly dodged the issue and may even have sparked the rumors with his recent remarks.

After practice Thursday for Saturday's home game against Pittsburgh, Holtz was asked if he was retiring. He replied: "I'm not even going to address that now. I just want to focus on the University of Pittsburgh at the present time. Keep hollering wolf and wolf."

CBS Radio said Holtz would tell his players and assistant coaches of his plans on Sunday. Holtz will coach the remaining three games this season and a bowl game, the report said.

Wadsworth said the school believes Holtz will be back next year, although he has had not spoken to the coach specifically about 1997.

"He's talked about it in terms of how he's feeling," Wadsworth said. "Overall he still feels good about things. ... So far as we know, he intends to be back.

"We met at the end of last season and we at that time told Lou how pleased we are with the work he is doing. As long as he is performing those responsibilities to our mutual understanding, he can coach at Notre Dame as long as he wants to continue to coach. That continues to be our situation."

The speculation over Holtz's future may have been fueled in part by Holtz himself.

On Wednesday, Holtz said he was looking forward to coaching the last three games of the team's regular season.

"There have been rumors about me forever," he said, shaking his head. "I just want to win the last three football games. I'll tell you, I still have a strong desire to coach and I have more enthusiasm than I've ever had. I'm really looking forward to the future."

Holtz had made repeated references to retirement recently.

Talking after practice one night last week, he used the phrase "throw the baby out with the bath water" — then said he had no idea what that meant, but that he had always wanted to say it before he retired.

On Sunday, Holtz mentioned that Memphis coach Rip Scherer, whose Tigers had upset then-No. 6 Tennessee the day before, had played for him when Holtz coached at William & Mary.

"He'll probably retire in a year or two, that's how old I'm getting," he said.

Holtz, 59, has a "lifetime" contract extension as long as he continues to win and attract quality players. He has fully recovered from last year's emergency surgery to relieve pressure on his spinal cord, and he said before the season that he never felt better.

Longhorns controlling their fate

Associated Press

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Texas, once on the brink of disaster, needs just two more victories to fulfill preseason expectations and be the first champions of the Big 12 South.

First, the Longhorns (5-4 overall, 4-2 Big 12) have to get past the Kansas Jayhawks, whose motivation Saturday will be nothing less than the salvaging of their own season. Then, if they beat Texas A&M on Nov. 29 in the regular season finale, the Longhorns will play in the Big 12 championship game in St. Louis on Dec. 7.

"This is where we wanted to be at this point in the season," said Texas tight end Pat Fitzgerald. "We've had a lot of things happen to us, but it won't be difficult to get up for Kansas. It's always tough to win on the road at this stage of the season, but we know our backs are up against the wall."

Kansas (4-5, 2-4) must win to have even a ghost of a chance at one of the Big 12's five automatic bowl slots. The Jayhawks had high hopes this season with most key starters returning from last year's 10-2 team. But they were humbled 38-12 last week at home by Kansas State and pushed to the brink of bowl elimination.

"The season thus far for us has been a frustrating one," said Kansas coach Glen Mason. "We've been close but we haven't been able to put it all together. That's why they have scoreboards. You pay off on results, not effort."

The Longhorns, who lost four of five in one stretch, have beaten Baylor and Texas Tech the past two weeks.

"There's an obvious sense of rejuvenation," said Fitzgerald. "We knew we had a good team and just weren't winning the big games, but we've won a couple in a row and our confidence is up."

"Our confidence is really high," said wide receiver Wane McGarity. "We've taken it upon ourselves to win the last four games. We've won a couple close games now and I think we know what's in front of us. I don't think it will be hard to get up for Kansas."

Texas coach John Mackovic said he figured to be playing high-pressure games late in the season.

"We knew at the beginning of the year that the Big 12 South would likely be decided in the final three or four games," he said. "No one expected it to be all wrapped up by now. It didn't matter what the records were. We knew it would be tough. Now that we've strung a couple wins together, we feel better about what we're doing and how we're doing it."

Unlike last week when they confronted rivals who go back several generations, the Jayhawks and Longhorns will be dealing with virtual strangers. Texas hasn't played any team from Kansas since 1942.

The Jayhawks will be hoping to get running back June Henley back in gear.

"Our running game has been shut down but I don't think that's the fault of June Henley," said Mason. "But when people do stack up their defense against the run, he can come out of the backfield and catch the ball."

Rajun' Cajuns invade Lubbock

■ Tech, SW Louisiana very similar to teams which hooked up two years ago in a non-conference game.

By Mark Babineck
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK — Texas Tech and Southwestern Louisiana are strikingly similar to the 1994 versions of the same teams that faced off two years ago here. Only their affiliations have changed.

The Red Raiders have broken free from the Southwest Conference for the Big 12, and the Ragin' Cajuns have left the Big West for independence since their only meeting, a 39-7 Tech victory.

And if both teams' offenses are in gear, the young stars of that first game will destroy some records this time as wily veterans.

Raiders star Byron Hanspard has a shot at becoming the school's all-time career rushing leader, while USL's Jake Delhomme is looking to become the most prolific passer from a major Louisiana college.

"Hopefully, we can break it (Saturday), but if not, we'll go down trying," said Delhomme, a four-year starter who ranks 26th in NCAA history with 8,962 yards. He's looking to surpass Louisiana State alum Tommy Hodson's 9,115.

Delhomme was there two years ago, running in USL's only score. Hanspard also had a touchdown, though his role since has grown from budding freshman to bona fide superstar.

He needs just 10 yards to eclipse Bam Morris' 1993 single-season Tech rushing record of 1,752 yards and 189 to pass James Gray's career mark of 4,066 yards. Hanspard already established the school's one-game standard this season with 272 yards against Oklahoma State.

USL coach Nelson Stokley couldn't find enough superlatives to describe Hanspard.

"I don't know that you can stop him because he's got such balance and great athletes all around him," he said. "I think it's more in terms of can you control him."

AP Laserphoto

Texas Tech running back Byron Hanspard will have to have another great day running the ball if the Red Raiders hope to clinch a winning record.

USL (5-5) has followed each victory with a defeat this season. Last week, the Cajuns finished 4-1 at home with a 45-31 beating of Northern Illinois that typifies the kind of high-scoring games they've played all season.

Donald Richard and Brandon Stokley, the USL's top two receivers in career yardage, each caught one of Delhomme's five TD throws. The pass-catching tandem also saw action against the Raiders in 1994.

"Two years ago we played them, and they have all the same skill people (now), and that is pretty unusual," Tech coach Spike Dykes said. "Then you start looking at who they've played, how they've done. They were the team that beat A&M (29-22) early in the season."

The game marks the final home appearance for the team's seniors, who can guarantee Tech (5-4) an unprecedented fourth straight bowl game appearance with a victory.

Tech's 38-32 loss to Big 12 South Division rival Texas last week muffled the Raiders' hopes of a slot in the conference championship game, making the bowl drive that much more important.

"It's going to be real special," said senior fullback Ryan Jones, who has recovered from a mid-season appendectomy. "I'll be able to look back on all four years I was here — the last SWC team, the first Big 12 team and, hopefully, four bowl games."

Big 12 South picture could clear after today

By Jimmy Burch
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

Between them, they have lost almost as many football games (18) as they have won (19) since kicking off the season in August. Simple arithmetic dictates that none of the four can match — much less better — its record from 1995.

Yet there is not one Big 12 team from Texas faced with a meaningless game today as members of the South Division prepare for their final two contests of the regular season.

Texas (5-4, 4-2), the South frontrunner, hopes to maintain control of its destiny in the title race by beating Kansas (4-5, 2-4) in Lawrence, Kan. Texas A&M (5-5, 3-3) faces a two-pronged elimination match against Oklahoma (3-6, 3-3) in College Station. The loser will be erased from the South Division championship hunt as well as the postseason bowl picture.

Texas Tech (5-4, 4-3) has a chance to qualify for a bowl by beating Southwestern Louisiana (5-5) in a nonconference contest in Lubbock. Baylor (4-5, 1-5), though eliminated from title consideration, can remain a bowl contender by beating Missouri (3-6, 1-5) in Waco.

Four different schools. Four separate carrots at the end of the stick.

For teams that continue to play tag with the .500 mark in mid-November, that's a decent source of motivation. And a rare occurrence.

"We're like a cat with nine lives," Baylor coach Chuck Reedy said of the Bears' bowl prospects in light of a 1-5 stretch since the end of September. "Believe it or not, we still are in pretty good position."

However, the Bears will need some help to land in one of the Big 12's six guaranteed bowl berths. Their best chance is for Texas to defeat Kansas, thereby eliminating the Jayhawks from the bowl picture, then have the winner of the A&M-Oklahoma game lose its regular-season finale to either Texas or Tech, respectively. Given that scenario, closing victories against Missouri and Oklahoma State (4-6, 1-6) would assure Baylor of a postseason appearance with a 6-5 record.

If that happens, don't expect any apologies from the guys in green and gold, who were left out of the bowl loop despite a 7-4 mark last season.

"In this conference, you don't know what's going to happen," Baylor tailback Dexter Ford said. "Anybody could get beat on any given day."

That is why Texas coach John Mackovic is not resting easy despite his team's status as the only South Division school controlling its destiny in the scramble to land a berth in the Dec.7 league championship game.

"Even though we're in the driver's seat, we're definitely not without some back-seat drivers," Mackovic said. "We have to win every game we've got left. We cannot afford to slip up and we know that."

After a power outage early in the season, Texas' offense has shown signs of life in recent weeks.

Quarterback James Brown, who completed just 50.6 percent of his passes with as many interceptions (4) as touchdowns in the Longhorns' first four games, has upped his completion percentage to 56.8 in his past five starts, with more touchdowns (7) than interceptions (6). During the same stretch, tailback Shon Mitchell has carried 61 times for 443 yards, giving him a five-game rushing mark of 88.6 yards per game after averaging just 24.8 through the first four weeks.

Partly by design and partly by choice, the elusive Brown is also running more. Two quarterback bootlegs in last week's 38-32 victory accounted for 32 yards — more than half Brown's season rushing total (36 carries, 63 yards). Brown said to expect more of the same in upcoming contests.

For two of the Texas-based Big 12 schools (A&M and Baylor), victories today are mandatory for reaching the postseason. Tech and Texas still could get there with an additional loss. Across the board, motivation should not be a problem.

"We know we're still playing for something," Baylor linebacker Dean Jackson said. "It's a lot easier playing when you know you've got an end goal instead of just playing to finish the season."

Baylor, Missouri play for different reasons

■ Bears still have hopes of a bowl bid this season while the Tigers try and build for next year.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

WACO — Baylor is still playing for a bowl. Missouri is playing for pride.

The two teams, one from the old Southwest Conference, and the other from the old Big Eight Conference, meet for the first time Saturday in Big 12 competition, and it's a game the Bears have to win to keep their bowl hopes alive.

"If we can just win our last two games, then we'll be eligible for a bowl," said Baylor coach Chuck Reedy. "It's gives us a goal to play hard for. Missouri looks like it can run the ball, so our defense should get a real test against the Tigers."

There are six bowl bids awaiting Big 12 teams, but they must have six wins to qualify.

Baylor is 4-5 overall and 1-5 in the Big 12. Missouri is 3-6 and 1-5.

The Bears and the Tigers have played five times since 1970 with the Tigers holding a 3-2 edge. Baylor won the last game between the two teams 47-21 in 1991 in Waco.

Missouri's last win over Baylor came in Columbia in 1987.

Baylor and Missouri each have one thing in common: both were clobbered by Nebraska.

The Cornhuskers beat the Bears 49-0 on Oct. 12, while Missouri absorbed a 51-7 thumping just last week.

Baylor, meanwhile, lost 24-7 to Texas A&M last week at Floyd Casey Stadium.

Baylor also has the incentive of a winning season. The Bears have had winning seasons in five of the last six years and nine of the last 11.

The Bears rated 11-point favorites over the Tigers, who have beaten Clemson, Southern Methodist and Oklahoma State this year.

Baylor has wins over Louisiana Tech, Louisville, Oregon State, and Iowa State.

Showdown turns to countdown as Aggies, Sooners fight for life

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

COLLEGE STATION — This was supposed to be a showdown not a countdown for the Texas Aggies and Oklahoma Sooners.

The Aggies started the season in search of a national championship, and the Sooners had new coach John Blake and high hopes. But the two teams go into Saturday's game counting on plenty of help to keep their Big 12 South title hopes alive.

The Aggies (5-5, 3-3) must beat Oklahoma and Texas and hope for a loss by Texas Tech against Oklahoma. Oklahoma (3-6, 3-3) must win the rest of its games and hope for a Texas loss to Kansas or Texas A&M.

It's been a frustrating season for both teams.

"I feel Oklahoma as being a team very much like ourselves," A&M coach R.C. Slocum said. "They've had some unfortunate things happen at the beginning of the year, but they're coming on now."

Blake didn't agree with Slocum's comparison.

"There is some young talent on this football team that can be outstanding one day," Blake said.

"When you rebuild a whole offensive line, when you're playing a whole new secondary, two new quarterbacks, receivers are young, special teams are not there and all because of depth problems all year, how could we be equal?"

The Aggies started the season with Branndon Stewart entrenched at quarterback, but he's struggled. Blake has used Eric Moore and Justin Fuente, trying to get a winning combination.

"It's a nice problem to have two quarterbacks that have won games that are both healthy," Blake said. "Eric has done an outstanding job. It gives him a chance to go out there to see if he can execute from the beginning."

The Aggies started the season with good balance in their offense. Stewart started the season by hitting 20 of 28 passes against Brigham Young but hasn't been as effective since, and Albert Connell, the Big 12 leading receiver much of the season, has dropped to No. 2.

That leaves the Sooners trying to stop the Aggies, running game. So what else is new?

"A&M wants to run the football. They've always been that way. They want to be physical," Blake said. "We have to go out there and stop the run. They haven't had a lot of success throwing the football."

The Sooners lost their first four games of the season under Blake, but the first year coach is chalking this season up to a young team learning how to play the game.

"We're losing games because of mental mistakes and because we're a young football team and not doing the things we need to get done," Blake said.

Both teams had big road victories last week. Oklahoma beat Oklahoma State 27-17 last week, and the Aggies beat the Baylor Bears 24-7.

Oklahoma holds the upper hand 8-6 after the teams first played in Bryan in 1903, with the Sooners prevailing 6-0. After a 1912 encounter in Houston — resulting in the Aggies' third straight win 28-6 — the teams took a 32-year hiatus until a 21-14 OU verdict in Oklahoma City. Five of the 14 meetings between the teams have been at neutral sites, and the teams split their latest matches. A&M rolled to a 36-14 win in 1994 at College Station while the Sooners overcame the Aggies 44-14 at Norman in '93.

OU has demonstrated a knack for winning in the South with a 3-1 mark while the Aggies are an auspicious 24-1 in the month of November since 1989.

The game will be televised on a regional basis by ABC beginning at 2:30 p.m.

It is also Blake's first chance to be the first Oklahoma coach to beat A&M, Texas and Oklahoma in the same season.

Email from S. Korea

Through all the stories of bad news and the dark side of the Internet there is an abundance of good news on or about this new technology as well.

Pfc. Wright

Take for instance the email received at www.mrt.com last month. It was from Pfc. Ryan Wright, a Midland soldier stationed in South Korea. Pfc. Wright found our site on the Yahoo! search engine and saw it as an opportunity to reconnect with friends "back home in Midland."

Which is why we're running his letter below. In the wake of the controversy surrounding the Information Superhighway's potholes, it's nice to plenty use the new technology for beneficial reasons.

— Jimmy Patterson

The letter home ...

Hello Midland Reporter-Telegram!

From South Korea ...

I found you on the Yahoo! search and I was hoping you could tell all of Midland that a soldier by the name of Ryan Wright says hello.

Some of the families that I would like to say hello to personally (but the phone bill is too expensive) include ... Larry and Donna Hensley and family; Mike & Margie McKinney; Ralph and Sharon Petty; Katheren Johnston and family; Tommy Dulin and family; Terence Painter family; Christian Life Center and my Army Recruiters.

There are many more, but I hope you can find some room in the paper for me. I know that this is not the Scoop of the Day, but to me it would mean so much.

I'm serving my country very proudly in South Korea and I think of the western skies every evening here when the sun goes down. I never thought I would get tired of all the trees, but I can't see the sun set on the horizon here.

Midland, please keep your thoughts on us (soldiers) while we are away from home and pray that we come home safely.

— Pfc Wright

Microsoft stock split

Microsoft Corp.'s board approved the software company's sixth stock split in 10 years to make the shares more affordable after their rapid rise this year.

The software company said shareholders will receive one additional share on or about Dec. 6 for each share held Nov. 22.

The company will have about 1.2 billion shares outstanding after the new shares are distributed.

"This split should make our stock more accessible to a broad base of investors," Mike Brown, Microsoft's chief financial officer, said in a statement.

The company's stock has jumped by two-thirds in the past 10 months on the strength of its Windows 95 and Windows NT operating systems, which control computers' primary functions.

The shares have almost tripled since the company's last stock split in May 1994.

Black-oriented sites on the Internet are on increase

By Shelia M. Poole
N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — Curtis Allen visits Zambia on a regular basis, yet the suburban East Point resident never has set foot on African soil.

Instead, Allen, a network support specialist with Hewlett-Packard, makes the journey via the Internet.

"When I'm surfing, I try to answer a question for a friend or find information for myself," said the 31-year-old Allen, who spends at least four hours a day plugged into the World Wide Web.

"I like to go to Africa a lot. I have my own Diaspora watch going."

Allen is among many Americans who have found that the Internet provides a window to the world for their own specific interests. Information gained via computer is increasingly becoming a powerful asset for individuals as well as organizations.

"To modify a line from poet and musician Gil Scott-Heron: 'The revolution will not be televised, it will be digitized,' " said Stafford L. Battle, co-author of "The African American Resource Guide to the Internet & Online Services."

A few years ago, black-oriented Web sites, sources of information about specific subjects, were scant. But within the last two years, the number of Web sites that cater to African-Americans has grown, offering everything from Afrocentric marketplaces and entertainment to black business listings and the latest news from Africa and the Caribbean.

Consulting firm seeks to narrow technology gap for minorities

ATLANTA — Freedom Group Inc., a fast-growing Atlanta-based Internet consulting and Web site development company, isn't against making money. But it has another mission, too.

Freedom Group, which was formed earlier this year by three African-American entrepreneurs, wants to help narrow the technology gap in the black community.

U.S. classifies a device to surf the web as a weapon

By John Markoff
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — American couch potatoes have become empowered — too empowered, in the eyes of the government.

A $300 television-set-top device for browsing the World Wide Web, which Sony and Philips Electronics recently began selling at chains like Sears, Roebuck and Circuit City Stores, uses computer-security technology so powerful that the government is classifying it as a weapon that will require a special export license before it can be sold overseas.

Few industry experts expect such a license to be granted, meaning the companies are unlikely to begin selling current versions of the U.S.-made devices next year in Europe and Japan, as they had planned.

The appliances, designed to let consumers surf the Web and transmit e-mail via a standard television set and phone line, have suddenly become the most significant challenge to the Clinton administration's attempt to restrict the export of

You read the book. You saw the animated film. You bought the cute little backpacks and the spotted shelf paper. And now you've witnessed the live-action remake with its dozens of digital doglets. What's left to experience? How about "101 Dalmatians" the Web site?

As the Internet enters its third holiday season in the public eye, movie makers have graduated from creating simple promotional Web sites for their big-screen extravaganzas to dreaming up entire interactive worlds designed to enlighten and entertain as well as sell tickets to the main event.

Only a few months ago, it was enough to post a handful of press photos, some production notes and a backstage interview or two. Now movie Web sites must offer contests, prizes, 3-D environments, interactive games and E-mail forums to draw a crowd.

Disney's "101 Dalmatians" Web site alone will have more "pages" than there are puppies in the movie. Visitors can download puppies, paint puppies, find missing puppies, even teach a virtual puppy to do tricks. Where it

Is the end of the free ride drawing near?

By Hiawatha Bray

I usually spend at least an hour every night dialed into the Internet — sometimes two or three hours. Why not? I pay only $23 a month for Internet access, and the telephone company permits unlimited local calls for a flat monthly rate. So whether I'm logged onto the 'Net for 30 minutes or three hours, the charge is the same.

It's a splendid bargain, and I'll take advantage of it for as long as I can. I figure one more year — two at the most. That's about as long as the Great Internet Giveaway is likely to last.

The pessimism is based on a report from Bellcore, a New Jersey telecommunications software firm that used to be part of the Bell System. According to Bellcore scientists, the traditional phone network isn't up to the demands of large-scale Internet use, and it'll cost billions to beef it up. Guess who's going to pay?

Dear Amy: How can I put a picture on my Web page? We don't have a computer lab at school. —Hanna, Rapid City, SD

Dear Hanna: Putting a picture on the Web takes a couple of steps. To get the picture into digital form so the computer can read it, you have to scan it. Look in the Yellow Pages for a copy store that has a scanner you can use or ask a camera store if they can make a photo CD-ROM from your pictures. Remember to have the picture scanned at 72 dpi so that it will download fast. Once the picture file is on your computer, you must convert it into one of the image formats so a Web browser can read it. The file formats are gif and jpeg. The software used to convert it is free and you can download it from ftp://ftp.std.com/ftp/vendors/mmedia/1view/1viewpro.zip if you have a PC or http://www.umich.edu/~archive/mac/graphics/graphicsutil/graphicconverter2.2us.sit.hqx for Macs. Once the image is converted, add the HTML to your Web page and upload the image to your Web server.

Collectors Beware: Follow gut feeling as to what you should, shouldn't buy

By Roberto Dias
N.Y. Times News Service

OK, it's time to get on the soap box again.

Some on-line offers should automatically send up a parade of red flags: large and bulky items are a classic example. For instance, purchasing a dining room set isn't quite the same as buying baseball cards. You don't like that Topps Ted Williams? No problem, put it back in the envelope and mail it back with the appropriate insurance. Now, try doing that with a cherrywood buffet and matching china cabinets that don't quite strike your fancy.

What should you not buy on line? Follow this procedure: Think about it carefully. Get all the information you can, such as detailed photos and written descriptions.

Then, think about it some more.

If your gut (or any other organ) says don't do it or if you shiver involuntarily while thinking, perhaps you should forgo the purchase.

Every collector knows there's risk involved with any purchase. Some stuff is a lot chancier by nature, however. For example, anything electrical and/or offbeat can be problematic.

From personal experience: I recently bought an original 1960s lava lamp. You know what those are: illuminated lamps with a tapering sealed glass cylinder filled with colored water and oily goo that floats up and down. What I should've considered was this: Did the manufacturer really intend for these lamps to work well after 35 years? This lava lamp has seen one volcano too many. I don't know what the half-life of oily goo is, but it now, regrettably, resembles raw sewage as it leisurely ascends and descends in the lamp.

I'll keep it, if only to surprise visitors.

The lesson here is to temper one's expectations when buying the not-so-ordinary items. Collectibles are much more ephemeral than they seem, and you have to make the necessary adjustments. You could live and learn, but it's costly.

Web site plugs

Here are three sites that don't have much in common except for their interesting contents.

http://www.uslink.net/~hepcats/ — The Hepcat's Emporium of the Uncommon does not have lava lamps. But it's still pleasantly odd, claiming, for example, that the Edsel is the world's greatest automobile. Such manifestations aside, this is a way cool place to visit. Looking for poodle skirts, bowling shirts and saddle shoes? Just point and click, daddy-o. Grand Rapids, Minn.-based Tim Verthein is the proprietor, and his neat site features 1950s items that do include Edsel classifieds and a photo gallery of the short-lived automobile.

http://gatornet/~designs/ — Victorian Elegance, moderated by Donna Barr of Gainesville, Fla., has a wide range of Victoriana available, including mourning rings and other jewelry, clothing and accessories. The images are excellent and an education in themselves.

http://www.antiqueshop.com/ — Pegasus Antiques stands out among on-line dealer shops because of its wide range of items and its search engine, something that every webmaster should consider including.

Ziff-Davis introduces fourth Internet magazine

By Karen Fessler
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Softbank Corp.'s Ziff-Davis Publishing Co. unit will release Tuesday its fourth Internet-related magazine, a monthly publication targeting developers and designers of sites on the World Wide Web.

ZD Internet Magazine guarantees an average of 300,000 paid subscribers the first year, making it one of the company's biggest magazine introductions, Ziff-Davis said.

The magazine, published in San Francisco, provides comparative product reviews and information on techniques and tools for readers who develop and manage sites on the Web, the graphics-rich portion of the Internet.

"No serious buyer can afford to not understand the differences in products," said Dan Rosensweig, executive vice president of Ziff-Davis's Internet publishing group.

ZD Internet has 84 ad pages in its first issue. A full-page color ad costs $9,500, Rosensweig said. The first issue has 154 pages.

Ziff-Davis publishes Yahoo! Internet Life and Internet Underground, which focus on content. It also puts out Interctive Week, targeting large companies that use the Internet and have their own Intranets.

Magazines published by Ziff-Davis include PC Week, PC Magazine, PC Computing, MacUser, Windows Sources and Computer Gaming World.

Tokyo-based Softbank wholesales personal-computer software, stages computer-industry trade shows and puts out computer publications in many languages.

Tunes.com launches music supersite on WorldWide Web

N.Y. Times News Service

BERKELEY, Calif. — Tunes.com this week announced the debut of the World Wide Web's most robust, advanced music Web site where users are able to discover, preview and purchase titles online. The Web site is located at www.tunes.com.

With more than 200,000 song samples and hundreds of thousands more on the way, Tunes.com offers consumers the largest selection of click-and-play music previews on the Internet. Tunes.com is the first music Web site to offer a click-and-play song recommendation engine. More than just a record store on the Web, Tunes.com also offers an environment to discover and enjoy music.

About the Service

Visitors to Tunes.com's Web site are able to preview 30- to 60-second portions of songs and purchase music they like at the same time. Users choose from a galaxy of songs drawn from more than 100 musical styles ranging from today's most popular hits to the obscure, hard-to-find material that previously couldn't be found on other music sites.

For the first time, users can receive click-and-play song recommendations based on their personal music profile.

Tunes.com also utilizes the first fully hyperlinked, click-and-play "All Music Guide," a database that contains every piece of music ever recorded, including song titles, running times and musicians, as well as an encyclopedia of music reviews and biographies. Whether it's Death Metal, Cajun or Trip Hop, Tunes.com's expansive database provides something for even the most discriminating music fan.

Based on a technology developed exclusively for its Internet music site, Tunes.com creates a variety of ways to follow a friendly path and discover new music.

"Tunes.com gives Internet music consumers the kind of online experience they've been waiting for and haven't had until now —click-and-play access to great music they haven't heard before," said Kamran Mohsenin, chief executive officer of Tunes.com. "With our Internet music technology, we will put users three clicks from a million tunes by mid-1997."

Features

Tunes.com gives users a number of ways to discover new music with a wide array of innovative features:

■ Listen — provides intelligent song recommendations from RARE (Rating And Recommendation Engine), which profiles a visitor's tastes, sampling and purchase behavior and compares them to site users with similar preferences.

■ Browse — introduces users to the most popular music styles and enables them to sample dozens of pre-selected songs; puts them one click away from more than 100 styles and thousands more songs.

■ Find — lets visitors search for their favorite songs by entering a specific artist, album, song or record label.

■ People — enables visitors to discover the musical interests and recommendations of people such as musicians, critics, DJ's and normal site users to serve as a guide for new music suggestions.

■ Mail — allows users to send and receive messages with song previews to other Tunes.com users. Visitors can also collect tunes they've discovered into a playlist and share them with friends.

■ Help — guides users to learn more about the Tunes:com features, adjust personal technology preferences, and access store services such as a review of current and recent orders.

While visitors are discovering new songs, they can also educate themselves about artists and how their music came to life. The information provided by the "All Music Guide" will include credits, reviews, biographies and discographies for many titles. These features will be hyperlinked together to lead the user down paths towards new and interesting knowledge for hours.

Coming Soon

Several cutting-edge features are in the works and will be available in the coming months. Tunes.com will feature a chat room where visitors can compare notes and talk shop, as well as areas where they can post their favorite songs and invite users with similar tastes to join their "tribe." In 1997, visitors will be able to discover and enjoy one-million songs, an unprecedented milestone on the World Wide Web.

Technology

Tunes.com's cutting-edge technology sets the standard for discovering and sampling music online. The company's proprietary software digitizes music and brings it online faster than any other site, ensuring users a constant influx of new songs.

Tunes.com is the only site on the World Wide Web to offer "personal click and play" song recommendations.

These recommendations are made possible by the site's music recommendation engine, RARE (Rating And Recommendation Engine), which profiles a user's interests, sampling and purchase behavior and compares them to site users with similar preferences. Based on this information, songs the user might enjoy are then recommended and immediately available for sampling. RARE is utilized throughout the site.

Alliances

Tunes.com has created strategic alliances with some of the biggest names in the music industry. It is the first company to gain rights from five major record companies to provide music previews on the Internet, some of which include Warner Music Group, EMI-Capitol Music Group and MCA Music.

BLACKS: Number of sites put at between 500-1,500

(From 1C)

Today, estimates of black-oriented Web sites range from 500 to 1,500. But even that number pales by comparison with an estimated 10 million Web sites overall.

And a continuing problem is the technology gap that exists in the minority community. One survey suggests that only 5 percent of the Internet's users are African-American, 3 percent are Hispanic and 3 percent are Asian. The bulk of users — 87 percent — are white.

However, Battle is undaunted. Though surveys show most African-Americans are unaware of the Internet and its uses, he prefers instead to focus on the small percentage who are.

"We (blacks) like to talk and communicate," said Battle. "This is like a futuristic drum. It's a way to get and send information."

For Battle, the potential is enormous. "For the first time in history, African- Americans are on an equal level with the rest of the people. Anyone, regardless of race, can take this technology and become a leader in the field."

A few Atlanta-based companies already are making their marks.

For instance, two popular Web sites emanate from here — World African Network Online and The Universal Black Pages. The World African site, launched in December, categorizes its content by "life interest" areas that range from news and information to business and technology, health and fitness, and culture. It also includes discussion groups.

Another site is The Universal Black Pages, created in 1994 by Alou Macalou, a graduate student at Georgia Tech. He has since formed a company — Black Graduate Student InfoSystems — to produce and maintain the site.

Each day, about 1,000 people visit the site, which includes information and a directory of black- related Web resources, said partner Derrick Brown.

"We hope that the increased audience we see predicts continued increase in the size of the African-American Internet audience," said Brown. "My primary concern is having the usage be something meaningful and functional more than just casual browsing."

More will come. Within the next few months, the Atlanta Business League, a trade association of black-owned businesses, plans to revive its site. The Buy Black Network also plans to expand its Web site in 1997.

And Intellectual Properties Management, which manages the Martin Luther King Jr. estate, recently inked a multimedia deal with Time Warner to expand its current Web site through Stanford University and offer books, CD-ROMs and online distribution.

The Buy Black Network is at http://www.ibuyblack.com. The King Estate, through the King Papers Project at Stanford University, can be accessed at http://www.leland.stanford.edu/group/king.

GAP: The Freedom Group to develop its own sites

(From 1C)

catch-up."

Studies indicate that African-Americans lag far behind their white counterparts when it comes to technology and access to the Internet. One study found that African-Americans represent just 5 percent of Internet users, while whites constitute 87 percent.

"The exciting part about this business is that once on the Internet, no one cares about your race, weight, religion, income or social status," said the company's chief executive officer, Patrick McElroy, a former re-engineering consultant and network supervisor with AT&T. "The challenge is to help alleviate, from all persons, the fear of the technology."

He believes start-ups like the Freedom Group will become more prevalent as more Americans gain access to the World Wide Web, which is still relatively young.

"With all the new technological advances of the Web, there are always computer programmers who will push the envelope as far as designing Web sites," said Tariq Muhammad, who follows technology for Black Enterprise magazine, an authority on African- American business.

"There are hundreds of Web sites created every day, and many are commercial. As a businessman, I may know my industry, but I don't have the technical expertise. That's where companies like the Freedom Group come in."

In addition to McElroy and Harris, the other owner is Chris Dawson, who has experience as a software developer. Dawson serves as chief technology officer.

Initially, much of the company's work was with black-owned businesses and organizations. Clients include World African Network, the National Black Arts Festival and Go 'Head Productions, which owns The FunkJazz Kafe, an indoor festival designed to cultivate the music and arts in Atlanta and to aid charities.

Recently, however, the trio has branched out to more mainstream clients. Citing intense competition, Freedom Group executives declined to identify these clients other than to say a franchise and an Internet-based health care company were on the list.

The company also plans to develop its own sites.

By the end of its first year of operation, the company expects to have about $250,000 in revenues.

To develop a Web site, members of the Freedom Group meet with a client to discuss goals and objectives. The price, which ranges from $1 ,000 to $50,000, is determined by the development time, the complexity of the site and whether the Freedom Group also is expected to maintain the site.

WEAPON: Officials fear device will fall into terrorists' hands powerful data-scrambling devices by categorizing them as "munitions" requiring a special export license.

While the set-top boxes are intended to protect the privacy of users and permit secure on-line sales transactions, administration officials fear that such technology could be used by foreign terrorists or criminals to conspire with electronic impunity.

"We're the guinea pig," said Steve Perlman, chairman and chief executive of Web TV Networks Inc., designer of the units, which are being manufactured in the United States by Sony Electronics and Philips. "Can you imagine carrying one of our boxes under your arm and getting arrested at the border?"

The set-top boxes automatically encode all communications between Web TV users and the company's server computers with a strong encryption code that employs a mathematical key containing 128 bits of information. Currently the nation's export rules allow export of data-scrambling technology using keys of 40 bits or fewer.

In order to allow more powerful encryption technology, while preserving the ability of law-enforcement agencies to crack the code after obtaining a court's warrant, the Clinton administration has been trying to force U.S. companies to adopt a compromise.

Last month the government proposed a deal in which companies would be freed from export restrictions if they agreed to build such a "key recovery" mechanism into their products.

The Web TV device does not have this key-recovery feature.

An executive at Web TV Networks said the company had recently received the government's permission to take a device with a 56-bit key system overseas for demonstration purposes. But the company has not yet received a response from export officials on its application to permit Sony and Philips to sell the full-powered browsers overseas.

"We have not given any licenses for 128-bit encryption schemes," said a government official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

FREE: Most calls to ISPs are essentially no cost at this point

(From 1C)

It's a costly fix for a simple problem. The phone system was designed to carry voice traffic with an average call length of three minutes. Internet users transmit packets of digital data, with an average call length of 20 minutes, and many calls last far longer. Some Internet users keep their connections up around the clock. The result, said Bellcore scientist Amir Atai, is a gradual clotting of the phone network. Both Internet and voice callers experience more delays and busy signals.

To understand the solution, it helps to understand the difference between circuit switching and packet switching. The White House switchboard uses circuit switching. Dial up Bill Clinton to congratulate him, and when he picks up the phone, there's a direct circuit between you and 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

But send Bill an e-mail, and the information is chopped into lots of tiny data packets, each with its own address. Throughout the network there are special switches that read the address of each packet and send it where it's supposed to go. To send e-mail to the White House, there's no need to open a circuit. You just dump the packets onto the Internet, and they're routed to 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

For computer data, packet switching is much more efficient than circuit switching. So the best way to send Internet data is to bypass the circuit-switched network, and hook directly into a packet-switched network. That's what we use here at The Boston Globe, for instance — a direct link to the Internet. But the average home user isn't going to buy a special digital line. Instead, you dial up a circuit-switched call to your Internet service, which then dumps the data onto the Net. It's quite inefficient, and it's driving the phone companies batty.

For one thing, many of us are just a local call away from our Internet provider, which often means that the call is essentially free. Meanwhile, an Internet provider can order up hundreds of lines for his customers, and pay only the installation costs. Since the lines aren't used for placing outgoing calls, the phone company can't send him a bill.

Frank Gumper, vice president of federal regulatory planning at Nynex, says this can't go on. He and executives of other phone companies are urging the Federal Communications Commission to require that Internet service providers pay an access fee for the right to use the circuit-switched network. "That may run somewhere in the neighborhood of a penny a minute," Gumper said. That's 60 cents an hour or $14.40 a day, if you stay on round the clock."

Where will the money go? For systems that can shunt Internet calls onto data lines, Atai said the phone company might install a device that will automatically send your call to, say, CompuServe, whenever you dial their number. A better approach would be to bring digital telephone systems like ISDN and ADSL directly to consumers.

ADSL is still at the experimental stage; ISDN is just beginning to catch on, but it's not cheap — Nynex charges $67.07 in Massachusetts for installation, plus about $500 for an ISDN modem, a monthly charge of $31.41, plus a fee of one cent a minute when using the line to transmit data, plus whatever you're paying now for local phone service. And you still must add the fee for your Internet service, which could go up by a penny a minute if Nynex has its way.

See what I mean? 'Net addicts like me are living on borrowed time. Maybe I'll go home tonight and download a couple hundred megabytes of shareware, while I can still afford it.

HOLLYWOOD: VRML allows walk in space will all end, nobody knows.

(From 1C)

Brent Britton, president of Light Entertainment, which designed the site accompanying Paramount's "Star Trek: First Contact" envisions a near future when a movie will "serve as a trailer for an extensive entertainment service offered on the Web."

"The bar keeps getting raised with every new site," Britton says. "It's no longer acceptable just to throw up text and Polaroids."

Employing a new Web programming tool called VRML (virtual reality modeling language), Britton's crew, who have a background in movie special effects, created a 3-D walk-around model of the famed Enterprise. With a click of the mouse, visitors can move about the starship at will. No special software downloads are needed. Keep phasers at the ready. A Borg attack may be imminent.

And it's not just the big studios that are expanding their virtual empires in time for Christmas. Independent distributors, which usually lack the resources to spend heavily on television or newspaper advertising, have been among the first to push the technology envelope.

Web sites are especially helpful in establishing a smaller distributor's image. Independent distributors like New Line Cinema (www.newline.com) and Miramax (www.miramax.com) blend cool design, innovative interactivity and tongue-in-cheek humor to appeal to their hipper urban audiences.

In a viewer feedback area, for example, Miramax offers Web surfers the option of beginning their E-mail messages to the chairman, Harvey Weinstein, with the cheeky phrase "I can't believe you guys were dumb enough to. ..."

Another reason for greater attention to the Internet is that studios are discovering that women and entire Web-surfing families are finding their way to promotional sites in increasing numbers.

Of course, the Internet's primary constituency remains young, white, male technophiles. In a nod to this core group, Miramax rewards visitors who stumble across its site for Woody Allen's "Everyone Says I Love You" with downloadable photos of Drew Barrymore in a negligee and Julia Roberts wrapped in a sheet.

Universal's Web site for its new Sylvester Stallone action thriller, "Daylight," about a tunnel collapse, has a game using Shockwave software that allows wannabe heroes to flex their virtual muscles by rescuing damsels from fire and rising water.

There are higher roads to be taken. Film buffs can increasingly look to the Web as a sort of cyberspace cafe for follow-up discussion when viewing a controversial or thought-provoking film.

Take Sony Pictures' Christmas Day release, "The People vs. Larry Flynt," a drama starring Woody Harrelson as the notorious Hustler magazine publisher who took a First Amendment case all the way to the Supreme Court.

Moviegoers will be able to click to the Sony Pictures Entertainment Web site to read up on Flynt and his precedent-setting case as well as participate in a forum for debating free-speech issues.

Defense contractors on tenterhooks waiting on work for new fighter plane

WASHINGTON (AP) — With hundreds of billions of dollars on the line, four of the nation's largest defense contractors anxiously await a preliminary Pentagon decision Saturday on who will develop the multi-service Joint Strike Fighter.

Since the ultimate winner will probably assume the dominant role in fighter aircraft construction well into the next century, the stakes include tens of thousands of future jobs that could go to Marietta, Ga.; St. Louis or Seattle, Wash.

In addition, the Pentagon's ambitious but risky plan to develop a single fighter for markedly different missions in the Air Force, Navy and Marines hinges on the program's success. Planes will also be going to Britain's Royal Navy.

Saturday's decision will narrow the field to two competitors, and the winners will then develop and build prototypes in anticipation of a final decision in 1999.

"This will be the mother of all procurements," said Micky Blackwell, aeronautics chief for Lockheed Martin Corp., one of three competing defense contractor teams. Those teams also include a fourth U.S. contractor and two British companies.

"It is the defining moment for tactical aircraft and who is going to be the dominant force in supplying tactical air around the world," Blackwell said.

Harry Stonecipher, president and chief executive officer of McDonnell Douglas Corp., called the contract decision a "must win."

"I doubt that any of us have spent five minutes thinking about losing because it's never crossed our minds," Stonecipher said.

The Pentagon plans to buy 2,978 Joint Strike fighters between 2005 and 2030, two-thirds of them for the Air Force, the rest for the Navy and Marines. The Congressional Budget Office estimates taxpayers may be asked to provide $219 billion for the program.

Despite that daunting price tag, the whole point is affordability. By building a plane for three military services and the Royal Navy and by buying them in quantity, the Pentagon hopes to hold down the price tag per plane. The budget office estimates they will cost between $63 million and $81 million each, depending on the service type.

That's substantially less than the $108 million estimate for the Air Force F-22, now under development.

For the money, the military will get a single-engine fighter that can fly faster than the speed of sound, evade enemy radar, slam down on the deck of a carrier, or, in the case of the Marine variant, perform a vertical landing, like a helicopter. The planes will replace the Air Force F-16 and A-10, Marine Corps AV-8B and the Navy F-18 C and D, among other planes.

These are the players and their products:

—McDonnell Douglas Corp. of St. Louis; Northrop Grumman Corp., with operations in Pico Rivera, Calif., Dallas, and Beth Page, N.Y., and British Aerospace of London. McDonnell Douglas builds the Air Force F-15 and is developing the Navy F-18 E and F fighters; Northrop is best known as builder of the radar-evading B-2 bomber; British Aerospace developed the first vertical-takeoff fighter.

—Boeing Co. of Seattle, with Rolls Royce of London. Some analysts consider Boeing a long shot because of its relative inexperience developing fighter aircraft. But Boeing has done work on the B-2 and is building the wings for the F-22 fighter.

—Lockheed Martin Corp., with major aircraft operations in Fort Worth, Texas; Burbank, Calif., and Marietta, Ga. Lockheed is the prime contractor on the F-22 fighter.

All three competitors are touting roughly 90 percent "commonality" of parts among the Air Force, Navy and Marine versions which will have to differ somewhat for their different missions.

Hawaiians contend with mud slides as consistent rainfall gets heavier

HONOLULU (AP) — Torrential rains pounded Hawaii again Friday, causing flooding and scattered power outages as authorities used dogs to make sure no one was buried in mud slides.

Rain has fallen steadily since Nov. 5 but worsened late this week as about 30 people were evacuated briefly on Oahu, home to Honolulu. Twenty-one inches of rain has fallen on parts of Oahu this month, 17 inches above normal.

The 14.9 inches on Oahu this month is more than the island received all of last year and it's the wettest month since 17 inches fell in December 1987.

President Clinton was due to arrive late Friday for a weekend stopover that included a few rounds of golf — if the weather cooperates. Parts of Oahu received 3 inches in just six hours Thursday morning.

The downpour caused a mudflow that wrapped cars around trees and left some vehicles hanging off the edge of a parking ramp. At one apartment complex, residents woke up to the sound of sliding mud and boulders.

"All of a sudden the lights went out," said Sylvia Bishop, who lives in Makaha Valley Towers. "When they came back on, we heard a crash and saw the landslide coming down, picking up cars on the way."

Police dogs searched the area but no one was missing. No injuries were reported.

Near Honolulu, mud and debris fell off cliffs in Waikiki and onto one of two highways linking the east and west sides of the island.

On the north side of Oahu, high surf that eroded beach front property with waves as high as 30 feet did nothing to deter surfers.

"It was the biggest thing I ever faced in my life," said Chris Owens, who has been surfing the North Shore for 25 years. "We saw what appeared to be mountains on the horizon. We started paddling out. We got over the first wave — a 20-footer — then all of a sudden this gigantic mountain came out of nowhere. ... We're calling it 30 feet."

Gov. Ben Cayetano said the rain has damaged property across the islands, as well as crops on Oahu, Hawaii, Maui and Kauai.

The rain, which earlier postponed the PGA Grand Slam of Golf tournament and shut down courses Friday, is expected to slacken Sunday.

The downpour allowed Maui's Board of Water Supply to ease up on water use restrictions imposed because of a drought. But officials stopped short of declaring the drought over.

The rain dampened plans for Hawaii's tourists — but not all. Margaret and Tony Robinson, who live near Nottingham, England, used umbrellas as they toured sites in Honolulu; rain has soaked half of their three-week trip.

"It's what the British call 'the stiff upper lip,'" Tony said.

Medical team identifies another victim of TWA Flight 800 crash

NEW YORK (NYT) — Medical investigators have identified another victim of the crash of Trans World Airlines Flight 800, lowering the number of missing victims to 15 of the 230 people who perished.

The identification was made on human remains recovered last week by boats dredging the crash site for any last pieces of wreckage, officials at the Suffolk County Medical Examiner's office said.

Crash investigators said the dredging — being done around the clock by four chartered commercial scallop boats — was also recovering small amounts of wreckage from the western edge of the crash site, where the first spray of debris blown from the jumbo jet sank to the bottom.

All along, this area has been considered an important potential source of clues, because the first debris ejected from the plane was likely to have come from close to the center of the blast. "They're getting something on every tow," a person involved in the dredging effort said. "They haven't had a tow where they didn't tag multiple things."

Investigators shipped the latest batch of material, about 80 or 90 bed-sized bags, to shore on Thursday, a senior law enforcement official said. He added that each bag represented a single tow of the dredge. Some bags contained only a few bits and pieces.

Investigators are particularly eager to recover pieces of the plane's center fuel tank. Investigators know the tank exploded but still do not know why — whether the blast was ignited by a small explosive device or by a spark from some electrical or mechanical failure. Nor do they know whether the fuel blast alone could have downed the jet.

Medical investigators identified remains brought up from the sandy sea bottom last week along with the first load of dredged wreckage, said Robert T. Golden, the chief medical investigator for the county.

A forensic radiologist matched X-rays of the remains with X-rays from the medical records of the missing victims, Golden said.

The county withheld the newly discovered victim's identity at the request of the family. Besides seeking the 15 victims whose remains have not been found, the medical examiner's office in Hauppauge is still trying to identify through DNA analysis one body that was recovered more than a month ago.

The new discovery would not change plans by relatives of some missing victims to conduct a funeral for all of them on Dec. 4, said Aurelie Becker, who lost a daughter in the crash and who is a director of the Families of TWA Flight 800, which represents families in talks with airline and government officials.

State braces for welfare reform

AUSTIN (AP) — State officials will begin notifying thousands of unemployed Texans that they are no longer eligible for food stamps next week, a prospect that concerns Gov. George W. Bush.

Under the 1996 federal welfare reform law, adults under 50 who have no children will be cut off from food stamps if they do not work at least 20 hours a week. Texans affected by that change will begin getting notice next Friday that they have three months to find at least 20 hours of work each week.

The law will not effect people with children and new applicants must meet the work requirement to get benefits.

Bush this week said he's concerned about what will happed in areas where unemployment is high. One-fifth of food stamp recipients live in counties where unemployment rates of more than 10 percent, according to state unemployment figures.

"I am concerned about people being able to get jobs," Bush said. "If one of the things we are saying is we are trying to free you from dependency upon government and we hope to help you into the workplace, I think one must make a realistic assessment as to whether or not there are jobs available."

State officials do not know how many of the nearly 80,000 Texans without children who receive food stamps will be effected by this law, but 88 percent do not claim earned incomes.

Advocates for the poor hope Bush will seek a waiver from the federal government to exempt parts of the state with high unemployment or insufficient jobs.

"The state should seek whatever waiver it can to protect food assistance for people who can's find work," said Patrick Bressette, associate director of the Center for Public Policy Priorities, a research and lobby group for low-income people.

Many of the counties with high unemployment are along the Texas-Mexico border, where local officials already are bracing for another part of the welfare reform law that will cut food stamps for legal immigrants.

Magistrate orders state, tobacco industry to disclose evidence

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawyers for the state and tobacco industry each declared victory Friday after a federal magistrate in Texarkana ordered both sides to disclose key evidence in the state's $4 billion lawsuit against the industry.

"You've seen through the tobacco whistleblowers that there is a lot of damaging evidence that will tilt the case in our favor, and we want to see that evidence. Hopefully, now, we'll get it," said Ward Tisdale, spokesman for Texas Attorney General Dan Morales.

The lawsuit, which is set for trial in September 1997, seeks recovery of an estimated $4 billion that Texas and the federal government have reportedly paid in tobacco-related Medicaid claims for Texans.

Tobacco company lawyers also hailed the order compelling disclosure signed by U.S. Magistrate Wendell C. Radford, saying it will force the state to reveal its data used to justify a $4 billion claim.

"Plaintiff shall produce ... all data used in calculating damages and data generated from data calculations," the order said.

"We are pleased that the court has now ordered the attorney general to produce his theoretical model, which he contends supports a claim for damages," said Jack Maroney, an Austin attorney for Philip Morris.

"From the outset, we have said that the attorney general has no legal or factual basis on which to bring this case."

The tobacco industry has attempted to get states filing suit against them to justify the huge damage awards being sought by specifically identifying the Medicaid patients suffering from tobacco-related illnesses.

The state has said confidentiality provisions prevent them from documenting each patient.

Radford's order set a Dec. 2 hearing in Beaumont on the confidentiality of information from state Medicaid data tapes.

The disclosure order also forces the tobacco industry to provide access and indexes to information that has been turned over in similar litigation in Minnesota.

"The indexes describe documents that were obtained by tobacco industry lawyers dealing with their liability issues," Tisdale said. "It's information that will bolster our case."

Tisdale also said the order foils an attempt by the tobacco industry to drag out the proceedings.

"Their strategy has been to delay and make their opposition spend as much money as possible," Tisdale said. "To that extent, this is a good ruling because it gives us access to the evidence and puts us on track for September 1997."

Maroney disputed Tisdale, saying, "We look forward to further expedite progress of the case .... Once again, we suggest this litigation amounts to nothing more than an attempt at politically motivated extortion against a politically incorrect industry."

The lawsuit named 11 defendants and alleges violations of federal mail fraud and wire fraud statutes, federal racketeering and conspiracy laws, as well as violations of state and federal antitrust and public nuisance laws.

Texas is one of 17 states suing the tobacco industry to recover money spent on Medicaid bills for citizens suffering from smoking-related illnesses.

Morales said cases in Mississippi and Florida also are scheduled for trial next year.

Aunt denies report that cadet confessed to her mother weeks after slaying of romantic rival

DALLAS (AP) — The aunt for a former Naval Academy midshipman, who is accused of conspiring with her fiance to kill a romantic rival, denies reports that her niece confessed to her mother weeks after the killing.

"That's untrue," Diane Zamora's aunt, Sylvia Gonzalez, said Friday. "She never told her mother anything. None of the family knew anything."

Jay Guild, who said he dated Ms. Zamora while the two attended the military academy in Annapolis, Md., said she told him about confessing the crime to her mother.

The Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story Friday that other sources familiar with the capital murder case said the Zamora family held a prayer meeting and forgave Ms. Zamora for her role in the slaying of Adrianne Jones, 16.

One source said the family then deemed the killing part of Ms. Zamora's past, distinct from that of a high school honor student bound for a service academy.

"That's ridiculous. That never ever happened," Ms. Gonzalez said. "We never knew anything was going on, and we never knew anything about the murder until after they arrested Diane at my parents' house."

Gloria Zamora of Fort Worth, Ms. Zamora's mother, has an unlisted telephone number and could not be reached for comment. She also did not immediately respond to an interview request by The Associated Press left with Ms. Gonzalez.

Guild, who is expected to testify at Ms. Zamora's trial, said he knows that Ms. Zamora confided in her mother.

"She told me (that) she told her" shortly after the Dec. 4 slaying, Guild said.

Ms. Zamora and David Graham have given authorities statements in which they say that they killed Miss Jones because Graham had a brief sexual encounter with her.

Grand Prairie police say Graham picked up Miss Jones for a date while Ms. Zamora hid in the trunk of the car. Graham reportedly planned to drive to nearby Joe Pool Lake and break Miss Jones' neck. But as Miss Jones struggled, Ms. Zamora struck her with barbell weights, and then he shot her with a 9mm pistol when she ran.

Graham and Ms. Zamora were indicted on capital murder charges this week and were being held in the Tarrant County Jail in lieu of $250,000 bond each. Prosecutors say they will not seek the death penalty against them because of the wishes of the victim's parents.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1996

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Being constant in romance will pave the way to lasting happiness. Let a relationship develop at its own gentle pace. A new job or residence will get 1997 off to a flying start. Seize an opportunity to travel for business or pleasure. Signing a big contract will open important doors. Put your best foot forward. Prominent people are looking for style as well as substance. Give them both and you will be a hero! Take advantage of an opportunity to learn new skills.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: "Father of the Blues" W.C. Handy, actress Lisa Bonet, tennis player Zina Garrison Jackson, figure skater Oksana Baiul.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Taking a second job could strain certain relationships. Seek understanding and cooperation from your romantic partner. Financial worries ease when you call a halt to buying things on impulse.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Welcome change! Getting out of a rut will be much easier than anticipated. Ending an unfulfilling relationship will motivate you to widen your circle of friends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An invitation could have strings attached. Beat a hasty retreat if you sense someone is after your contacts or resources. Loyalty counts for a lot.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Family life takes precedence over getting together with friends this weekend. Do what you can to create a comfortable environment for loved ones. Singles may experience a strong desire to settle down.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your weekend plans could go awry if a family emergency arises. Siblings offer to babysit. Find out about the neighborhood schools before buying a home.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A good day to tackle a situation you can probably change. Advanced technology eases your banking and bookkeeping chores. You and your mate enjoy a new closeness.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Memories of the past continue to surface. Let go of any guilt or apprehension. You need to build yourself up physically. Stick to a healthy diet and get more rest.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Others want to know what you are thinking. Seek a quiet environment if you decide to discuss delicate matters. Dress your best for a public event.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are able to put your finger on the pulse of public opinion. Others seek your advice. Reserve the lion's share of your free time for loved ones.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be aware that people are talking about you. Guard your privacy by dodging personal questions. A hunch will prove accurate. Learning a second language will boost your earning power.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Tend to cleaning and shopping chores early in the day. When hosting a party or reception, select music that will appeal to several generations.

HBO signs deal for film on slain rapper Tupac Shakur: 'Rebel for the Hell of it'

LOS ANGELES — HBO has signed a deal for a TV movie on Tupac Shakur, and a feature film about the slain rapper is also under discussion.

The HBO project, "Rebel for the Hell of It: The Life of Tupac Shakur," is based on a proposal from journalist and film critic Armond White. Unidentified sources quoted in Friday's Daily Variety said HBO hopes to have the picture ready by late 1997 or early 1998.

TriStar Pictures, meanwhile, is discussing a Shakur movie with Quincy Jones and Neal Moritz, who produced "Juice," the rap star's acting debut.

In yet another deal, Shakur's mother has a book and movie proposal. A publishing auction will be held soon for "And Still I Rise," by Afeni Shakur.

Shakur's posthumously released album, "The Don Killuminati: The 7 Day Theory," is No. 1 on the charts, selling 664,000 copies in its debut week.

Shakur died Sept. 13, a week after being shot in Las Vegas.

DENVER — The artist who wrapped the Reichstag in silver polypropylene wants to blanket part of the Arkansas River now.

Christo and his wife, Jeanne-Claude, have gained world renown for placing thousands of blue and yellow umbrellas in Japan and California, surrounding islands with pink fabric, and executing other environmental artworks.

In 1994, he and his wife traveled through the Rockies, inspecting 89 rivers for a new project. On Thursday, Christo announced: "We now think the project can happen in the Arkansas River."

Christo plans to suspend translucent fabric panels 6 to 25 feet above the river. Steel cables anchored on the riverbanks would hold them in place. The fabric would be up about two weeks and cover five to six miles.

Christo still must get permission from various government authorities, a process that could take years.

LOS ANGELES — Former Los Angeles Dodgers catcher Steve Yeager is being sued by regulators in two states in a crackdown on what they say was a fraudulent get-rich-quick scheme involving sports trading cards.

The regulators say people lost as much as $3,500 each when they paid to become brokers for Collectibles International Inc., which used Yeager's photo in newspaper ads offering the opportunity to earn up to $800 a day from dealing trading cards.

In addition to promising big money, Collectibles International offered lists of hot sales prospects.

In fact, investigators said, some of the "hot leads" were people who had died. Others were still alive but didn't care about trading cards.

Yeager, the Most Valuable Player in the 1981 World Series, "played an important role in establishing the credibility of the company," said New York prosecutor Fred Cantor.

The New York City Department of Consumer Affairs sued on June 27. The state of Illinois filed a similar lawsuit this week.

A call to Yeager's agent went unanswered.

LONDON — Allaying concerns about her health, the 96-year-old Queen Mother went to a party, her first public appearance since she missed two engagements last weekend.

Queen Mother makes public appearance at party.

The widely popular mother of Queen Elizabeth II went to a London club on Thursday for a reception of the Black Watch regimental association. She is colonel-in-chief of the regiment.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Reason No. 1 on Sam Lovullo's Top 10 list for liking David Letterman: flattery.

Lovullo, who produced "Hee Haw" for 25 years, writes in a new book that Letterman's staff obviously watched the show.

"Through the years, David has continually poked fun at 'Hee Haw,' especially George 'Goober' Lindsey and Kenny Price," Lovullo writes in "Life in the Kornfield: My 25 Years at Hee Haw."

"Both, in fact, have appeared several times on his famous Top 10 list, which I always took as a compliment: It meant someone on David's show was a regular viewer of 'Hee Haw.'"

One of the longest-running programs in TV history, the country music-comedy show is in reruns on cable's The Nashville Network.

Nixon nemesis dies at 92

NEW YORK (AP) — Alger Hiss, the patrician public servant who fell from grace in a Communist spy scandal that propelled Richard Nixon to higher office, died Friday afternoon. He was 92.

Hiss died at Lenox Hill Hospital in Manhattan just four days after his birthday, said hospital spokeswoman Jean Brett.

Hiss' life can be neatly broken into two parts. The first was a stellar rise — a brilliant academic career, clerking for U.S. Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, a series of important posts in the New Deal and the foreign policy establishment, foundation work.

Then, on Aug. 3, 1948, a rumpled, overweight magazine editor named Whittaker Chambers alleged that 10 years earlier, Hiss had given him State Department secrets that Chambers, in turn, passed to the Soviet Union.

At the end of the investigations and trials that followed, after spectacular developments involving microfilm in a hollowed-out pumpkin and an ancient typewriter, Hiss was convicted of two counts of perjury and imprisoned for three years and eight months.

For the rest of his life, he worked for vindication, both in court and in the court of public opinion.

He proclaimed that it had come finally in 1992, at age 87, when a Russian general in charge of Soviet intelligence archives declared that Hiss had never been a spy, but rather a victim of Cold War hysteria and the McCarthy Red-hunting era.

During the decades of controversy, such conservatives as William F. Buckley Jr. backed Chambers and felt justice was served by jailing Hiss. Hiss defenders included liberals like Supreme Court Justices William O. Douglas and Abe Fortas and Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

Hiss had attended private schools, then Johns Hopkins, where he was Phi Beta Kappa, and Harvard Law, where he was a member of the law review. At Harvard he attracted the attention of Felix Frankfurter, at whose recommendation Hiss served a year as Holmes' law clerk.

After three years in private law practice in Boston, Hiss joined the New Deal — first as an official with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and then as a Senate legal assistant and as a Justice Department attorney.

At the Dumbarton Oaks meeting to lay the groundwork for the United Nations, Hiss was executive secretary. In February 1945, he was a delegate to the Yalta Conference, where President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Winston Churchill and Josef Stalin settled the map of postwar Europe. At the San Francisco Conference that adopted the U.N. Charter, Hiss was secretary-general.

Sleeping Simpson juror dismissed

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — An alternate juror who snoozed through scientific testimony was dismissed from O.J. Simpson's civil trial Friday, days before the expected testimony of the defendant himself.

Simpson's name was added to the list of upcoming plaintiff witnesses, indicating he could take the stand as early as next Friday.

While the disclosure generated a buzz among spectators, Simpson seemed unmoved. He simply shrugged and told reporters had been ready to testify "since two years ago."

Simpson did not testify at his criminal trial, which ended last year with his acquittal in the 1994 slayings of ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman. Their families are now suing him for his money.

The alternate juror, a 19-year-old white college student, was dismissed and whisked away from the courthouse in a white van after the defense complained she had been sleeping in court. The woman had said during jury selection that she knew virtually nothing about the case.

Her nap on Thursday resulted in a sarcastic observation from Superior Court Judge Hiroshi Fujisaki: "This scintillating examination is having an effect on our jurors." He later apologized.

According to transcripts of a bench conference, lead defense attorney Robert Baker complained she was "asleep through most of this case."

Fujisaki agreed and suggested the woman "seems to have some sort of metabolic problem."

She was the second alternate removed since the trial began. A man complaining of stress was excused after falling ill during the showing of gruesome crime scene photos. Six alternates remain.
