Lawyer disbarred

HOUSTON — The former host of a television show about legal affairs has been disbarred. Jack Kennedy, who was disbarred in Delaware in 1985, was disbarred in Texas by visiting state District Judge Harold Valderas of Fort Worth on Friday. Kennedy, the former host of The Law and You, on a local cable television station, refused to talk to reporters after the sanction was announced. His attorneys said they will appeal. A jury took less than two hours Wednesday to unanimously find Kennedy committed 68 violations of the Texas Disciplinary Rules of Professional Conduct in handling cases. Kennedy can apply for readmission in five years. During the trial, the State Bar of Texas said Kennedy routinely neglected to tell potential clients, many of whom were low-income, about all the costs they were likely to incur in their cases. Kennedy and his attorneys claimed the clients either misunderstood or were disgruntled because the costs were more than they wanted to pay.

Bomb letter

NEW YORK — A group opposing U.S. aid to Israel sent a letter to The New York Times claiming responsibility for the World Trade Center bombing, and authorities told the newspaper it was written by a person charged in the explosion. The letter said that unless the United States severed relations with Israel and met other demands involving Middle East policy, additional attacks would be carried out by a group called the Liberation Army Fifth Battalion, the newspaper reported today./6A

DiBona leads oil industry's attack on tax

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth in a weekly series on energy issues.

By James R. Owen
Reporter-Telegram Washington bureau

WASHINGTON — Of the lobbyists who jumped all over President Clinton's proposal to raise energy taxes last month, no one pounced harder or faster than Charles J. DiBona, president of the American Petroleum Institute, the oil industry's trade group here.

Deriding the fuel levy as a "job destroyer" that would stunt economic growth, erode the competitiveness of U.S. products abroad and hurt consumers, DiBona quickly emerged as chief attack dog for the oil patch.

In his two decades of defending big oil, the 61-year-old DiBona has warmed to his role, aggressively promoting the interests of API members, who include such giants as Exxon, Mobil and Texaco.

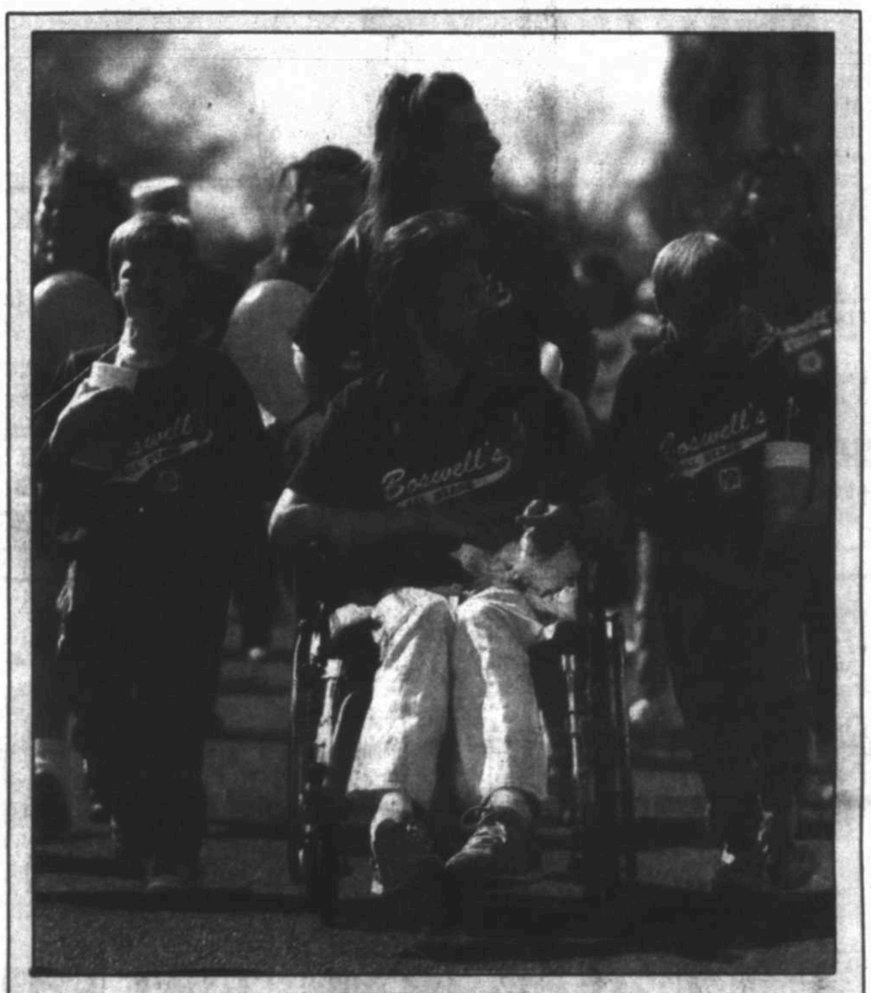

Too aggressively, say some Clinton administration officials. One senior aide reportedly upbraided DiBona "for not getting on board."

But DiBona is unfazed. He insists the API won't abandon its fierce opposition to the energy tax, even though several of its member companies, including Atlantic Richfield and Shell, have done so. The API is not a monolith, he says.

DiBona notes that administration officials "don't like it that I say that energy tax is going to cost jobs.'

Political battles are nothing new to him. For almost 20 years, DiBona has been skirmishing with government regulators, environmentalists and consumer activists over oil — how and where it should be drilled, how much it should cost, and how it should be used.

Yeltsin asks for prompt agreement

■ In a speech to Congress, Russian president appeals for new negotiations and says he's willing to compromise.

Associated Press

MOSCOW — A rambling, weary-looking Boris Yeltsin, fighting off attempts by hard-line lawmakers to drive him from power, appealed Saturday for new negotiations with his rivals and said he was willing to compromise.

His opponents in Russia's Congress, however, began maneuvering to challenge him again.

The Congress, dominated by former Communists opposed to Yeltsin's rapid market reforms, plans to reconvene today to take up the political impasse and debate a proposed referendum on whether the president or lawmakers should rule the nation.

Yeltsin, his hair matted and eyes puffy, stumbled over some words in an apparently extemporaneous speech to the Congress during its second day of an emergency session.

His hard-line opponents accused him of being drunk — a charge that has dogged Yeltsin in the past and which he has said is part of an campaign to discredit him.

He said after his speech Saturday that he was grieving for his mother, who died a week ago. Aides said Yeltsin was sober but exhausted after several nights without sleep.

Yeltsin proposed negotiations with his main rival, parliament speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov, and Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin and chief justice Valery Zorkin.

The president said he hopes they would work out a solution to the power struggle within a week. He did not offer details about what compromises he would be willing to make.

"We have convened to find accord," Yeltsin said. "If we disperse in disagreement, the Russian people, our vot-

Clinton protests oil deal, paper says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration secretly protested to Iran last week about a large oil shipment it received from Iraq in apparent violation of U.N. trade sanctions, The Washington Post reported.

The paper said senior U.S. officials, who were not identified by name, expressed concern that the shipment could signal an agreement between Iran and Iraq to flout the trade sanctions imposed on Iraq by the United Nations Security Council after the 1990 invasion of Iraq.

The report in the paper's today's editions quotes U.S. officials as saying Iran responded to the U.S. protest by insisting it was respecting the trade embargo.

But the Post said U.S. intelligence

Midlander's efforts led to court's 1968 'one-man, one vote' ruling

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

Midland's Hank Avery played the "lone wolf" and a historic role in grass-roots governments nationwide in the 1960s partly because he was never taught "how to quit" and never learned how to give up.

He devoted six years in a 1960s court battle that led him to the U.S. Supreme Court and to the "one-man, one-vote" ruling. That ruling, 25 years ago this week, changed the complexion of voting across the country and affected at least 20,000 local-government units that elect members by districts instead of at-large.

All told, there were more than 80,000 units of local government in the United States 25 years ago.

Avery, then 39, was in his first term as Midland's mayor when in 1962 he took on the Midland County Commissioners' Court to change what he perceived to be inequities in voters' rights within the four commissioner precincts and disparity in taxation in rural and urban areas.

"And it was wrong," said Avery, 70. "It was against the Constitution of the United States. And somebody needed to do something about it."

Avery won the lawsuit and found out that, contrary to convention, that a private citizen can fight the proverbial city hall. "If you are right, you can (fight)," he said. "And you can win."

Twenty-five years ago, Avery said the high-court ruling "ensures all citizens equal representation on all local units of government."

From the onset, Avery was bucking "the antiquated Texas Constitution," which said that "the Commissioners' Court 'shall from time to time redis-

Reporter-Telegram wins four statewide awards

FORT WORTH — Four members of the Reporter-Telegram staff captured statewide honors, including two first place awards, at Saturday's Texas Associated Press Managing Editors Convention.

First place winners were Assistant Sports Editor Jimmy Patterson in the sports writing category and photographer Joe D. Williams in the sports photography category.

Patterson's winning entry was for his coverage of the April 22, 1992, baseball game between the Midland Angels and the San Antonio Missions, featuring former major leaguer Bert Blyleven's comeback attempt following rotator cuff surgery.

Williams' winning photograph was from a March 28, 1992, soccer game between Midland Lee and El Paso Hanks, showing three players reaching the ball simultaneously.

Taking honorable mention awards were Brian Adamcik in the sports photography category and Business/Oil Editor John Paul Pitts in the business writing category.

In the Associated Press judging system, honorable mention awards constitute a third-place prize.

The class in which the Reporter-Telegram competes includes those daily newspapers with circulations between 25,000 and 99,999, which encompasses all but the state's seven major metropolitan newspapers — Houston, Dallas, San Antonio, Fort Worth and Austin.

RUSSIA: 'Our society needs accord,' Yeltsin says

ers, will not understand."

After his speech, Yeltsin left the Kremlin to walk along Moscow's central Tverskaya Street — a characteristic gesture for the president, who turns to the people at difficult moments.

Accompanied by Mayor Yuri Luzhkov and surrounded by bodyguards, Yeltsin shook the hands of shoppers.

"Our society needs accord," he said. "Otherwise, we may tear Russia apart."

Earlier Saturday, the Congress voted 621-23 to give initial approval to holding a national referendum on April 25.

But hard-liners sought to turn it to their advantage by asking that the referendum be about support for Yeltsin's painful economic reforms, and not, as Yeltsin proposed, about who should govern.

Yeltsin's opponents in the parliament failed to call a vote on removing him for violating the constitution — the initial reason for convening the Congress in the Grand Kremlin Palace.

But they went on to press for a resolution that would charge him with "personal responsibility" for the political war and urge that both Yeltsin and Khasbulatov resign.

"I, as president, do not agree with this draft resolution," Yeltsin said, mixing angry and conciliatory notes in his speech.

He acknowledged he violated the constitution, but charged that lawmakers themselves had breached it 300 times. He offered to make changes in the Cabinet, but rejected lawmakers' demand for a coalition government.

Pro-Yeltsin legislators called the speech a "last attempt" for compromise and voiced fears that hard-liners would try again to remove the president.

Hard-liner Mikhail Chelnokov summed up the reaction of Yeltsin's foes, saying he was "in principle against any accord with all those, including the president, who violate the constitution and betray their motherland."

Yeltsin's speech was the climax of a tumultuous afternoon session in which lawmakers debated the questions to be put to the nation in the April referendum.

Yeltsin wants to ask Russians if they trust his leadership, and polls indicate he is likely to get support. But the question on reform is much more dangerous for the president, and the outcome less certain.

Presidential aides said the hard-liners' formula was "provocative" and designed to discredit Yeltsin's drive to create a free-market system.

The referendum resolution, which can still be amended, did not include a question on confidence in the Congress. Its asks about confidence in Yeltsin and whether people favor new elections this year for both president and parliament.

Yeltsin does not oppose new legislative and presidential elections, but has said they should not be held simultaneously because that would create a vacuum of power. Khasbulatov and the hard-liners want the elections to be simultaneous.

The Congress convened Friday to consider removing Yeltsin after the Constitutional Court ruled that the president's announcement of "special rule" on March 20 violated the constitution.

But efforts to oust Yeltsin fell apart on the eve of the Congress when Khasbulatov said he did not support impeachment and Zorkin refused to submit the court's ruling to the Congress.

Die-hard Communists went ahead anyway, even though procedural votes Friday showed they did not have the 689 votes — two-thirds of the 1,033-member Congress — needed to oust the president.

On Saturday morning, Yeltsin supporters defeated a resolution that would have declared the president's actions "an unacceptable violation" of the law. The vote was 389-342, falling short of the simple majority of 517 votes needed for passage.

Other legislators either abstained or did not vote.

In a sudden parliamentary maneuver, Yeltsin's opponents then called for a secret ballot on removing the president from office. But the vote also failed.

Seniors graduate early because district runs out of money

KALKASKA, Mich. (AP) — The hugs, high-fives and packed bleachers made Saturday's graduation seem almost normal for 140 Kalkaska High School seniors — except it was two months early.

Kalkaska public school officials closed district schools March 24, saying the district had run out of money. The 2,300-student district faced a $1.5 million budget deficit, and voters rejected a property tax increase three times that officials said would have kept the schools open.

"The last two months is when you start to get ready to say goodbye to everyone, and they took that away from us," said Shannon Beratta, 17.

Superintendent Doyle Disbrow told the graduation audience it was better to close schools early than to cut spending, boost class sizes and eliminate some courses.

The state House is expected to take up a bill this week that would let the state take over the Kalkaska school district. A state panel visited the district Thursday and was expected to issue a report early this week.

Principal Jerry Judge said if the state reopens schools, seniors who had planned to enter the military or take college classes might be exempted from returning.

Several seniors said the early graduation gave them time to work and save more money for college. But some juniors who attended the graduation said the school closings might harm their futures.

"It depends on how colleges start looking at the Kalkaska diploma," said John Edwards, 16. "If they start looking at it as a negative, it will hurt us."

Graduates had mixed feelings as they prepared to leave for their senior class trip to Toronto on Monday.

"I wanted to graduate in May, man. I'm not ready for this yet," said Ben Brower, 18, who regretted not being able to finish the baseball season.

"Once we get back from the senior trip, it's going to be strange not going back to school the next day," said 18-year-old Wendy Turanski.

OIL: Iran reportedly buys from Iraq

sources are convinced the shipment was too large to have taken place without the Iranian government's knowledge.

The paper said the shipment appeared to have involved dozens of tanker trucks, but said its sources declined to identify the shipment's route or provide other details.

The report said U.S. officials were not sure how much oil was involved, but that it was too much to pass for a low-grade smuggling operation.

The Post said the protest to Iran was issued through diplomatic intermediaries, but that officials refused to say what countries were involved. The United States has not had diplomatic relations with Iran since 1979 and routinely communicates with the Iranian government through the Swiss government.

The administration has not decided whether to make a formal protest to the United Nations, the paper said, quoting one official as saying, "We can't see a trend yet."

Iranian government legalizes possession of videos

By Neil MacFarquhar
Associated Press writer

TEHRAN, Iran — The man with the black bag visiting homes in Tehran each week is not a doctor on house calls. His business is more about mental health.

He's the video rental agent, bearing contraband. Fear that telephone monitoring might lead to arrest means most families give their rental man a prearranged appointment.

The underground trade may change, however, with a law promulgated this month to provide government licenses for anyone wishing to import and trade in videos.

It is part of an elaborate balancing act by Iranian authorities, who want to maintain Islamic purity while easing the growing pressure for Western culture and more relaxed lifestyles.

Clergymen had feared the video ban was driving Iranians to the forbidden fruit — Western culture. They have been attacking that culture with renewed vigor, seeing yet another plot to undermine the 14-year-old Islamic revolution.

"The enemies of Islam have directed their venomous propaganda at weakening the willpower of our devout youth," Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, the supreme spiritual leader, said in a speech. "If you lose your human and Islamic identity, you will be Westoxicated, and Westoxication is like being hit with a flood."

It is unlikely that the religious zealots will let distributors offer the Western films, loaded with sex and violence, now readily available for a dollar a week.

Also, diplomats and many Iranians believe any relaxation would be aimed at preserving the Islamic state by diverting public attention from soaring unemployment and inflation. With no enemies massing at any border, Western culture is the next-best villain.

Suspicion of the West already runs deep in many Iranians.

Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolution stemmed as much from a rejection of the Western values adopted by the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi as from politics.

But severe economic problems, combined with inflexible social laws imposed by Islamic traditions, make almost anything Western a magnet for frustrated young Iranians.

Half of the 60 million people are under age 15. Because of fierce competition for education and jobs, millions face lives of little schooling and permanent unemployment.

There are few chances for the sexes to mix because such public places as cafes are segregated by law.

Satellite television dishes remain illegal and the punishment for being caught with one is flogging. Before the new law, the same punishment held for having a video.

Still, Iranians could get almost any video they wanted, smuggled in from Iranian exile communities in the United States or through Dubai across the Persian Gulf.

Among the current hits are Arnold Schwarzenegger's "Terminator 2" and other action movies. Video machines were illegal, too, but even the speaker of Parliament announced that he owned one.

There was even a gray market at government ministries, where private clubs open only to employees carried wide selections.

"Part of the problem is that there's nothing to do with leisure time in Iran," said Faraj Sarkoohi, editor of Adineh, a cultural weekly.

This forced idleness is blamed in part for rapidly increasing addiction to heroin, morphine and other drugs. Hundreds of alleged traffickers have been publicly hanged in recent years.

Reza Siefollahi, chief of the national police, said in February that 17,500 drug smugglers and 35,600 addicts had been arrested in the previous 11 months.

Smuggling is usually punished by execution. Addicts are interned for rehabilitation.

Even President Hashemi Rafsanjani has acknowledged that state television, run by his brother, is boring.

"Islam has instructed Muslims to enjoy beauty and natural blessings," Rafsanjani told reporters. "Having dry programs and dull colors cannot attract people to cultural and arts programs. We need more variety in our television programs, and two stations are not enough."

Just what he has in mind is not clear. For the moment, state TV consists mostly of discussions of Koranic interpretations and interminable footage of mountains and flowers accompanied by traditional music.

Today's high to hit upper 70s

Staff report

Today is expected to be fair with a high in the upper 70s and west winds at 10 to 20 mph and gusty, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be fair with a low in the mid-40s.

Monday is expected to be fair with a high in the mid-70s.

After an overnight low of 53, Saturday's high was 79 compared to the record high for that date of 95 set in 1971. The record low for today's date was 19 set back in 1931.

STATE

A Pacific cold front on Saturday was triggering showers and thunderstorms, some severe, as it moved eastward through Texas.

The National Weather Service posted a tornado watch Saturday night for eastern parts of the Permian Basin and other sections of West and North Texas. Thunderstorms, some with golfball-size hail, developed in the region.

Other showers were located over eastern portions of the Panhandle. Drizzle formed along a line from Hondo to San Antonio but was dissipating from Cotulla and Del Rio.

The weather service forecast a chance today for severe thunderstorms across the Hill Country and North Texas, with drizzle and fog along the middle Gulf coast and East Texas.

Overnight lows were expected to range from the 40s to the 70s.

Today, skies should be partly cloudy with a chance for thunderstorms across the Hill Country. Highs were expected from the 70s and 80s.

Mostly cloudy skies and a chance of thunderstorms were forecast for North Texas on Monday, with lows in the 50s.

NATION

Rain fell over the Rockies and western Plains on Saturday, with a threat of winterlike weather, and rain also was scattered over the East.

At midday, rain fell over the southern Colorado Plateau, the Rockies, the western Plains and the upper Missouri Valley.

Hail as big as golf balls fell near Snyder, Texas, the National Weather Service said.

Rain changed to snow at higher elevations of the southern Plateau.

Winter storm watches were posted for today over the mountains of northern and west-central Wyoming, and the mountains of south-central Montana.

Snow advisories were in effect through today at higher elevations of the mountains of Southern California.

In the East, rain fell over the southern Appalachians, the Tennessee Valley and the lower Ohio Valley.

Showers and thunderstorms extended over the central Atlantic Coast states.

Heaviest rainfall during the six hours up to 1 p.m. EST was 1.14 inches at Cape Hatteras, N.C.

Temperatures soared in New England. Caribou, Maine, posted a record high of 66, well above the former record of 52, set in 1976. And St. Johnsbury, Vt., warmed to a record-tying 69.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

COURT: Avery played 'lone wolf'

trict itself for the convenience of the people,' " Avery said.

"Now," Avery asked recently, "what does that mean?"

For Midland County, it meant that the five-member Commissioners' Court had set up four commissioner precincts of grossly lopsided voter populations.

Precinct 1 for the city of Midland represented about 92.5 percent of the then 67,717 Midland County citizens. Commissioner Edward N. Gideon, who lived in town, represented the city-wide precinct.

The other three commissioners, all farmers and ranchers, Alvey Bryant, Clark Moreland, and W.M. Stewart, represented rural areas and, all told, about 5,092 persons or 7.5 percent of county-wide population, Avery said in his 1962 original petition.

Voting in unison, the rural commissioners controlled the Commissioners' Court.

"It was the old antiquated idea that the urban citizens were represented by the City Council," Avery said, "and the rural (people) were represented by the County Commissioners' Court." By that reasoning, the "urban citizens didn't need any representation on the Commissioners' Court," Avery said. "So, as a result, the commissioners were owned by the rural citizens."

Avery surmised that practice to be unfair and an affront to the "republican form of government." He set out to test that practice against the U.S. Constitution.

Minutes after the Commissioners' Court on Sept. 24, 1962, rejected Avery's plea — by a 3-to-2 vote — for redistricting to equalize populations in each of the four precincts, Avery's attorney, Hal Rucker, filed the lawsuit in Midland's 142nd Texas District Court.

Rural commissioners Bryant, Moreland and Stewart voted against redistricting and for keeping the three rural precincts intact. Bryant said then that he tried to represent "all" the people of Midland County anyway, and Moreland said he represented "every citizen" of Midland County. Stewart admitted that there were "inequities" in the system but said there was no workable plan for redistricting tnat would be be acceptable to the citizenry.

Midland lawyer Bill Browder was to represent the commissioners.

In-town Commissioner Gideon and County Judge Noel Cason voted for redistricting under Avery's proposal.

Attorney Reagan Legg, who happened to be in the courtroom, advised the commissioners to adopt Avery's proposal, "since precedent already has been established by the courts." Otherwise, "the federal government (will) come in here and do it for you."

Six years later that happened.

The case went from state court to appellate court to the Texas Supreme Court and, finally, to the U.S. Supreme Court, which sided with Avery in a 5-to-3 vote.

Justice Byron "Whizzer" White, who is retiring from the bench in mid-1993, wrote the majority opinion. In it, White said that Avery "has a right to vote for the Commissioners' Court of substantially equal weight to the vote of every other resident."

White, whom Avery said is "a brilliant man" who evolved on the court from a liberal to a conservative, cited the vast imbalance of placing "in a single district virtually the entire city of Midland."

The West Texas oil town is "Midland County's only urban center," which, White wrote in 1968, contains 95 percent of the county's population and is represented by only one of the four commissioners.

The U.S. Constitution, White wrote, "does not require that a uniform straitjacket bind citizens in devising mechanisms of local government suitable for local needs and efficient in solving local problems."

"He was fair. And he has a good legal brain," said Avery, an independent oil operator and former architect.

The district-court trial went in Avery's favor. The three rural commissioners appealed the case. The appellate court in El Paso reversed the district-court ruling and held that neither federal nor state law required redistricting of county commissioners' precincts according to population.

Avery then took the case to the Texas Supreme Court, which ruled in favor of the rural commissioners and said that districting scheme was not permissible under state and federal constitutions and said it disagreed that precincts must have substantially equal population.

Avery then appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Today, 25 years after the Avery vs. Midland County Commissioners' Court case was settled, Bryant hangs onto the old system that Avery called antiquated.

"What did they accomplish?" Bryant said. Bryant said the Texas Municipal League, which was "the one getting that (lawsuit) done," wanted "all of them (county commissioners) to be elected out of cities" throughout Texas.

Avery was president of the Texas Municipal League in the mid-1960s.

Back when the Commissioners' Court was predominantly rural, the commissioners purchased right-of-way and fencing for ranch and farm-to-market roads, which the state of Texas built and maintains to this day.

Bryant said the commissioners worked closely with the Chamber of Commerce and with Fred Wemple, a Midland businessman who was on the Texas Highway Commission and was Avery's father-in-law, in getting roads built in Midland County.

"We've got a good road system in and out of Midland," Bryant said.

"In everything we did, our main goal was to promote Midland as the hub city of West Texas for future generations," Bryant said. "Midland is our town, too. And we realized that they (Midlanders) paid taxes, and we tried to represent them."

Bryant said the current members of the Commissioners' Court, "in my opinion, don't take as good a care of county roads like they did years ago, and the public will verify that."

The old rural commissioners "loved our county, and we loved our city," Bryant said. "We got along with the sheriff, and we didn't have lawsuits between the sheriff and the commissioners. If we had a problem with the sheriff, we'd just give and take and settle our differences."

The old Commissioners' Court arranged for the building of the Midland County Public Library in the 1950s and later for the city to furnish rural fire protection.

"Looking back, we (commissioners) lowered county taxes five times," Bryant said.

To Avery, however, the significance of the Supreme Court's "one-man, one-vote" ruling was not how the commissioners conducted their business, but the significance of each person's vote.

"My vote is equal to anybody else's vote," Avery said. "That's what it is all about." The electorate can "vote them (office-holders) out" or vote them in. "That's fine."

The personal relationship between Avery and the rural commissioners remained friendly, both Avery and Bryant said.

Of the popularity or unpopularity of the case, Avery said, "It depends on whom you talk to."

Avery figured that the case, which he filed as a private citizen, cost him about $250,000, while the commissioners passed the "tin cup" around to rural taxpayers.

Avery's "lone wolf" undertaking in seeking the fair and equitable representation in commissioners' districts was "long and expensive," Avery said 25 years later. "But it was worth it."

Clinton relies on team work

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Thirty minutes before show time, President Clinton ordered another rewrite of the most important speech of his life. His aides were mortified, stunned into nervous silence. Then the boss broke into song.

Standing at the front of the White House theater, the president did his best Shirley Temple impersonation. Singing off key and waving his hands, he warbled the speech's serious text to the tune of a 1970s pop melody.

It worked.

"He knew we were tight. He knew we had to make a lot of changes that he had just ordered. Instead of barking at us, he cracked us all up," said political consultant Paul Begala, who helped write the Feb. 17 economic speech to Congress.

"We felt that if the boss was confident, maybe things would be OK," he said.

Clinton's offbeat sense of humor is one of the more colorful aspects of his management of the White House. His hands-on style is reminiscent of President Carter, who was criticized for trying to do too much. So far, Clinton has not fallen into the traps of micro management: trying to do too much and accomplishing little as a result.

Clinton "likes the details. He has an in-depth understanding. The temptation for him is going to be to get too much into the details . . . and get bogged down. But I don't see him doing that yet.'

— James Pfiffner,
professor of government and public policy,
George Mason University

Still, 54 percent of Americans in a Harris Poll published Saturday agreed that Clinton "tries to do too many things at once." But 67 percent think he is a strong leader and 84 percent "a tough fighter for what he believes in." The poll of 1,255 adults March 4-10 has a 3-point margin of sampling error.

His larger goal is to foster informal free-flowing debate, seek opinions from anyone who might know anything about the subject at hand, and avoid infighting.

He works long hours, often up at dawn to jog, and on the telephone after midnight. He husbands a full legislative agenda and eyeballs the budget line-by-line, just as he did as Arkansas governor.

James Pfiffner, professor of government and public policy at George Mason University, said Clinton "likes the details. He has an in-depth understanding. The temptation for him is going to be to get too much into the details . . . and get bogged down. But I don't see him doing that yet."

He said President Reagan didn't get involved enough in policy decisions and Carter tended to get too involved. "So far, from the outside, it looks like Clinton could be playing the right balance between the two," Pfiffner said.

Clinton's inner loop is expansive, with the power of its players depending on the issue. But three people play a role in nearly every decision: chief of staff Mack McLarty, top aide Bruce Lindsey and Hillary Rodham Clinton. Widen the circle and it will include Vice President Al Gore and communications director George Stephanopoulos.

Critics in Arkansas said Clinton was so eager to avoid a fight that he compromised away huge chunks of his potential. It remains to be seen whether he will follow this path in Washington, where compromise is a way of life.

His decision-making process involves lots of people and often takes lots of time.

For example, if health care is on his mind, Clinton will gather his health care advisers — including Mrs. Clinton, domestic policy adviser Carol Rasco and aide Ira Magaziner — and pepper them with questions. Political aides may be on hand to tell him how the advisers' recommendations would sell to the public. A White House lobbyist may make suggestions about how Congress will react.

ENERGY: DiBona is no newcomer to political battles

(From 1A)

Once in a while he loses. The industry failed in its 1991 campaign to get permission to explore for oil in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska, which environmentalists said would damage the reserve.

"It's always an uphill battle around here," DiBona says.

He refuses to label the current White House as "anti-oil" even though the energy tax would hit oil products twice as hard as any other fuel.

But he does say there is a "concerted U.S. policy to wean the country off oil," which he calls "an unwise thing to do. What you're going to do is force the United States to use more expensive fuels when our competitors won't have those higher costs."

DiBona says he's not battling Clinton's overall aim of slashing the federal deficit. But he is in the trenches over the energy tax based on the heat content of fuels, which would raise $71 billion over five years.

"We agree with the president's objectives," DiBona says. "But we think this isn't a very good way of meeting them, and we think a value-added tax would be a lot more effective." A VAT, widely used in Europe, is a kind of national sales tax.

While he doesn't like the administration's tax plan, DiBona jokes that he is "a lot like people in the government right now." Like Clinton, he was a Rhodes scholar, and he's a jogger, "although I'm probably not as religious about it as he is," DiBona says.

The oil lobbyist has spent much of his adult life working in Washington, far from Quincy, Mass., where he was born in 1932 and whose New England accent still marks his speech.

He graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1957, and after six years of military service, left the Navy to become head of the Center for Naval Analysis.

In 1973 he was tapped to become special assistant to President Richard Nixon on energy issues during the Arab oil embargo. He lasted less than a year, though, as the Watergate scandal of political dirty tricks and their coverup engulfed the White House and forced Nixon to resign in 1974.

"It was kind of out of control then, and it was like working under siege," he recalls.

In 1974, DiBona joined the API as executive vice president and in 1979, he became president, a job that paid him $433,000 in 1991, according to Internal Revenue Service records. Away from the office, DiBona relaxes by skiing, sailing, and tinkering with the tractor mowers he uses on his farm in nearby Great Falls, Va.

Within the tightly knit petroleum community, colleagues say DiBona is a bright and persuasive advocate for the industry. Some say he can be abrasive. But James Daskal, a lobbyist for the Service Station Dealers of America, with whom the major oil companies have often feuded in the past, praised DiBona for "dealing with us in an atmosphere of professionalism and mutual respect."

Not surprisingly, his opponents are less impressed. Carl Pope, national director for the San Francisco-based Sierra Club, said that under DiBona's watch, "there has been a decline in the credibility of the oil industry."

DiBona merely shrugs at such barbs. "I'm not terribly thin-skinned," he says. "I'm operating on the basis of facts, and I'm very seldom embarrassed by anything."

Freshmen struck by partisan brawling

By Karen Ball
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Relentless partisanship. Too many subcommittee meetings. And a lingering sense of awe.

The freshmen in Congress are still settling in after 11 weeks in the House. Eager to tackle their work, they're not always pleased with what they've found.

"Where I come from, Democrats and Republicans worked together," marveled Rep. Mac Collins, R-Ga., a former state legislator. "This place is the Hatfields and McCoys every day."

"There's a you-do-this-to-me so I'll-do-this-to-you attitude," concurred Rep. Pat Danner, a Missouri Democrat. "It's disappointing," she added, saying Democrats don't hesitate to use their majority to overwhelm Republican amendments and the GOP responds with time-consuming roll calls on procedural matters.

Since taking the oath of office in January, Collins, Danner and their 108 first-term colleagues — the largest freshman class in decades — helped eliminate four House committees as a cost-cutting gesture. They split largely along party lines on President Clinton's budget and jobs program.

Their partisan differences showed, as well, when the House passed family leave legislation and a bill to make it easier to register voters.

If they have tended to vote along predictable, partisan lines, each also has begun forming a first impression about the institution.

Several of the newcomers, in interviews, expressed wonderment at how subcommittee meetings get stacked up simultaneously, making it impossible for lawmakers to do a conscientious job.

"I haven't conquered amoebic cell division. I cannot be in three places at one time," said Rep. Robert Menendez, D-N.J.

"It's embarrassing," Danner added. "You've got these experts in for a hearing, you might actually learn something, then you have to get up and leave to go vote. I don't think it serves the public well."

Too much time is spent on issues that, well, are hardly life-and-death, say others.

"Like the parking lot at National Airport," scoffed Rep. Bobby Rush, D-Ill., referring to a congressional perk some lawmakers nervously think ought to be abolished. Everybody's talking about it.

"In the elevator, in the cloak room, on the floor. It's becoming symbolic of whether or not this place works in the interest of the American people. I just think that's so out of touch," Rush said.

Redlining in the Chicago area, meat imports in Canada and gender bias in sports have all been topics Rep. Jim Greenwood has learned about since he arrived in Congress.

"These are all interesting subjects, but I haven't been persuaded that these are the most important things the country faces right now," the Pennsylvania Republican said.

Rep. Jim Talent, R-Mo., said he's been struck by "how strongly the system runs on deception, on not letting people know what's really going on." He adds that both parties use parliamentary moves to dodge tough votes and debate.

"So then you can go back home and say, oh, well, gee, I would have voted for that if it had been on the floor," Talent said. And the committees the House voted to eliminate — the money just went into other committees, he said. "So people can go home and say, 'I voted for reform.'"

Despite their grumbling, most freshmen say they're impressed with the caliber of their colleagues, and were surprised at how hard-working everyone is. Most freshmen really want to change things for the better, said Rep. Leslie Byrne, D-Va., noting that more than 70 percent of the first-term class came from state and local governments.

"They aren't here to be bomb throwers. They're here to improve the process, not destroy it," she said.

Congress has moved with extraordinary swiftness on the new president's economic plan. But to the newcomers, it seems slow. In the Virginia General Assembly, lawmakers would go through 2,000 bills in two months, Byrne recalls.

"The floor becomes a living thing, with ebbs and flows," Byrne said, recalling her Virginia days.

"In Congress, it's more fits and starts. You focus your attention on some legislation, then it's time for a district work period."

And in Congress, lawmakers don't hang out on the floor during debate. There's too much else to do, like go to hearings, meet with constituents or answer mail.

"We're all tethered to the floor action by television," Byrne said. "If we don't have a part in that debate, we watch it on TV. In state legislatures, you're part of every debate."

The place is huge, and there's much running to do — back and forth between House office buildings and the Capitol for every roll call.

"I'm thinking about investing in some roller blades to vroom around on," Byrne said.

All of the freshmen are coping with the realization they can't be experts on everything.

"If you think you're going to be an expert on everything, it'll drive you bonkers," said Rep. Bart Stupak, D-Mich. "You have to pick your issues."

Rep. Buck McKeon, R-Calif., is trying this tack: find colleagues you think have the same basic philosophy, and look to them to help you make decisions in their particular field, such as foreign policy or defense.

Three months into their first term in Congress, some say they're still a little awestruck. Danner, the Missouri Democrat, recalled something House Speaker Tom Foley told freshmen when they got here.

"The speaker said if you look up at that lit dome and your heart doesn't skip a beat, you've been here too long. ... I do feel blessed," she said.

Accidental discovery may end obesity

WASHINGTON --Researchers may have discovered a way to end obesity----- by accident!

In a study with a potential cholesterol lowering agent, scientists noted an unusual side effect. Instead of lower cholesterol levels, patients receiving a natural plant colloid lost weight while body weight in a control group remained constant.

The scientists say the mechanism behind the weight loss is not clear, but suggest it is partially due to a decrease in the intestinal absorption of calories. Scientists in another study published in the British Journal of Nutrition, found that patients consuming the same colloid lost weight in spite of being instructed not to alter normal eating patterns. Despite this evidence, other scientists may not agree on the weight loss benefits of colloids. Someday, pending further study, there could be universal agreement that colloids are helpful in confronting the problem of obesity.

National Dietary Research, whose research topics have been the subject of articles published in recent medical and nutritional journals, has successfully incorporated a series of colloids into a chewable food tablet called FS-1. When used as directed, FS-1 replaces high calorie fats with lower calorie nutrients, thus providing optimum nutrition with a minimum number of fat calories. According to an article published in the American Journal of Clinical Nutrition, consciously limiting the amount of food one consumes is not necessary to lose weight, provided you limit the fat

A Florida company has obtained exclusive distribution rights to FS-1, which is available through pharmacies and other health care professionals.

Aspin unveils 'very cautious' post-cold war defense budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Les Aspin unveiled President Clinton's slimmed-down, $263.4 billion military budget Saturday, portraying it as a "very cautious" blueprint that preserves many Reagan-Bush era weapons systems.

Reductions of 108,000 in active duty military, a pay freeze and modest cuts in the Strategic Defense Initiative account for much of Clinton's defense cuts in the spending plan for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

But the overall fiscal 1994 budget is about $10 billion less than this year's level — and some $12 billion short of what former President Bush envisioned for the post-Cold War era.

Over a four-year period, Clinton plans to cut defense spending by $88 billion, an increase from the $60 billion reduction he pledged during the presidential campaign.

Left unanswered was the fate of most major weapons programs, including future development of tactical aircraft for the Air Force and Navy, a light helicopter for the Army and an attack submarine.

Aspin is reserving judgment on those programs, as well as scores of others, pending the results of a major review slated for this summer. The defense secretary acknowledged that the budget basically is a standpat plan.

"This is a cautious budget on the weapons side. Very cautious," Aspin told reporters at a Pentagon briefing. "We are maintaining a lot of options ... treading water on two accounts — research and development and procurement."

Among the services, the Navy will see its total of battle force ships drop from 443 to 413. The number of aircraft carriers will decline from 14 to 12. And the Air Force will lose four of its 28 fighter wings.

The number of U.S. troops in Europe will fall to 133,700, down from 304,000 in fiscal 1990.

While the number of uniformed forces drops, the budget would increase spending for training, upkeep of weapons and ships and flying time, from $86.4 billion in fiscal 1993 to $89.5 billion for next year.

"We're cutting force structure and protecting the operation and maintenance," Aspin said. "In a few sentences, that's the summary of the '94 budget."

Members of Congress reacted favorably to the plan, including the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, who has suggested that Clinton's defense cuts may have gone too deep.

'This is a cautious budget on the weapons side. Very cautious. We are maintaining a lot of options ... treading water on two accounts — research and development and procurement.'

defense secretary

"I think Secretary Aspin did the prudent thing in waiting until he goes through his major procurement review and then making the changes later on this year," Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., said in an interview on CNN's "Newsmaker Saturday."

"We haven't seen the five-year defense plan," Nunn said. "We have been dealing with numbers grabbed out of the air. No one knows where all these cuts are going to come from."

Rep. Ike Skelton, D-Mo., who heads the House Armed Services subcommittee on personnel, said he was "impressed and actually pleased" that the readiness level would be increased.

But both Nunn and Skelton expressed concerns about future budgets. Aspin indicated that additional cuts are possible in coming years as the military draws down.

Clinton foresees a total number of troops of roughly 1.4 million toward the end of the decade, some 200,000 less than the Bush administration projected.

"If we get our military force down too small, we'll be penny wise and pound foolish," Skelton said.

Reflecting the wait-and-see approach, the budget would have the Pentagon purchase six new C-17 transport planes at a cost of $2.6 billion, despite recent reports of cost overruns and design flaws.

A total of $914 million was earmarked for 24 F-16 aircraft, although the Air Force had recommended ending the program this year.

Among other specifics are:

—Funds totaling $367 million for the new light helicopter, the Comanche.

—Another $449 million for the Centurion, a new attack submarine. No money would be included for the third Seawolf submarine although last year's budget included about $540 million for work on the third boat.

—Some $1.4 billion for development of the latest version of the F-A-18 aircraft and $2.3 billion for the F-22 aircraft. Last year, as chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, Aspin had said the military could not afford to buy two new aircraft for the Air Force and two new planes for the Navy.

—Spending of $3.8 billion for the SDI, commonly known as "Star Wars." This would be about the same amount that the Bush administration spent on the program last year.

Authorities: Letter was by suspect

NEW YORK (AP) — A group opposing U.S. aid to Israel sent a letter to The New York Times claiming responsibility for the World Trade Center bombing, and authorities told the newspaper it was written by a person charged in the explosion.

The letter said that unless the United States severed relations with Israel and met other demands involving Middle East policy, additional attacks would be carried out by a group called the Liberation Army Fifth Battalion, the newspaper reported in its Sunday editions. According to the letter writer, the group had "more than 150 suicidal soldiers" and would attack both military and civilian targets.

"The American people are responsible for the actions of their government and they must question all of the crimes that their government is committing against other people," the Times quoted the letter. "Or they — Americans — will be the targets of our operations that could diminish them."

The letter demanded that the United States halt all military, economic and political aid to Israel, as well as sever diplomatic relations. It also demanded that the United States not interfere in the internal affairs of any Middle East country.

The Times said it received the letter four days after the Feb. 26 bombing that killed six people, injured more than 1,000 and closed the Trade Center's 110-story twin towers for weeks.

The letter was immediately turned over to authorities and they determined late last week that one of the people arrested in connection with the bombing had written it, the newspaper said. It didn't say which person was the author.

Four people have been charged with taking part in the bombing: Mahmud Abohalima, 33; Mohammed Salameh, 25; Nidal Ayyad, 25; and Bilal Alkaisi, 27. A fifth man, Ibraham Elgabrowny, 42, was arrested for allegedly interfering with federal agents who searched his apartment in connection with the bombing.

Officials increase Academy security

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The explosion that shook the World Trade Center in New York City is resounding 3,000 miles away at the Academy Awards.

Security planning for Monday night's 65th annual Oscar ceremony took on a new urgency after the deadly Feb. 26 bombing.

"We have a great deal of concern over what happened at the World Trade Center," said Jerry Moon, who has headed security for the Oscars for 23 years.

In most years past, the street in front of the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion was blocked off for arrivals only, and bouncers watched for people trying to crash the ceremony.

During the 1991 Persian Gulf War, the Academy scrutinized all vehicles near the pavilion and screened guests with metal detectors.

Moon, 65, a former police detective, said Wednesday that no decision had been made on whether those measures would be used this year, but tighter security was already obvious Thursday at a media tour of the pavilion.

For the first time, Academy officials wore credentials bearing their photographs. Members of the media were told that roll call would be taken in the various rooms set aside for reporters, photographers and video crews — another first.

In the throes of anger and hurt, Cynthia Creem's client's come up with all manner of reasons why former spouses shouldn't get custody or visitation of a child.

"They'll say, 'They don't use the seat belt. They take them to McDonald's too much. They take them to the wrong temple or church,' " said Creem, a Boston divorce lawyer for 25 years.

The very public fight between Woody Allen and Mia Farrow has focused attention on the raw emotions surrounding child custody cases. But the issues are nothing new to the lawyers doing daily battle in the trenches of matrimonial law.

"It's probably the most gut-wrenching part of divorce and the hardest thing for a child to go through," said Elliot Samuelson, a New York divorce lawyer and author.

Samuelson and other divorce attorneys tell story after story of the excesses divorcing parents commit in the fight for child custody. Some challenge the other parent's lifestyle, religious practices, even what clothes they give their children.

Creem tells of one case where a parent complained the child was wearing sneakers too much. In another, a father broke into the home and snapped pictures to support claims his former spouse was a lousy housekeeper.

Lawyers also say there has been an explosion in sexual abuse allegations in custody cases. Part of the increase is attributed to greater public awareness and a willingness to come forward.

But there are times when the charges reflect something else.

"A lot of it is caused by failure of communication," said Joan Patsy Ostroy, who heads the family law section of the Los Angeles County Bar Association.

"A child will come home and say, 'Daddy touched my pee-pee.' If it were an intact marriage they would discuss it and understand it was nothing," she said. "But when you have the anxiety-driven situation of divorce, things can get out of hand."

Some attorneys say such charges, whether believed or not, are used as leverage in acrimonious bargaining.

"If you start out with a high population of angry people out to vindicate their agenda, there is going to be some percentage willing to charge child abuse," said New York lawyer Norman Sheresky.

Sheresky cites cases where sexual abuse charges have forced fathers to give up money and demands. Fathers, he said, often challenge a mother's right to custody simply to win financial or other concessions.

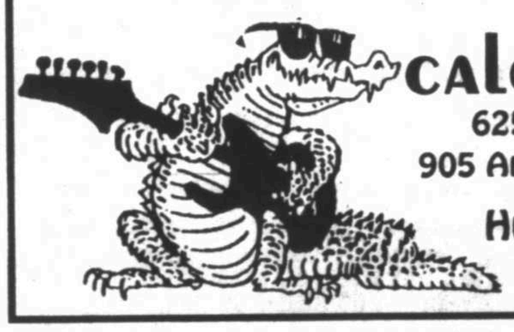

In some divorces, the issues are more on the surface.

Ostroy had a client who wanted to go to court over a haircut a child got on a weekend visit; another father tried to get an injunction to keep his daughters from having their ears pierced. A number have asked judges to rule against spouses because they or their new partner smokes.

"Criminal lawyers see the very worst people at their best and divorce attorneys see the best people at their worst," she said. "You see bright, intelligent people behaving in ways that are incredible."

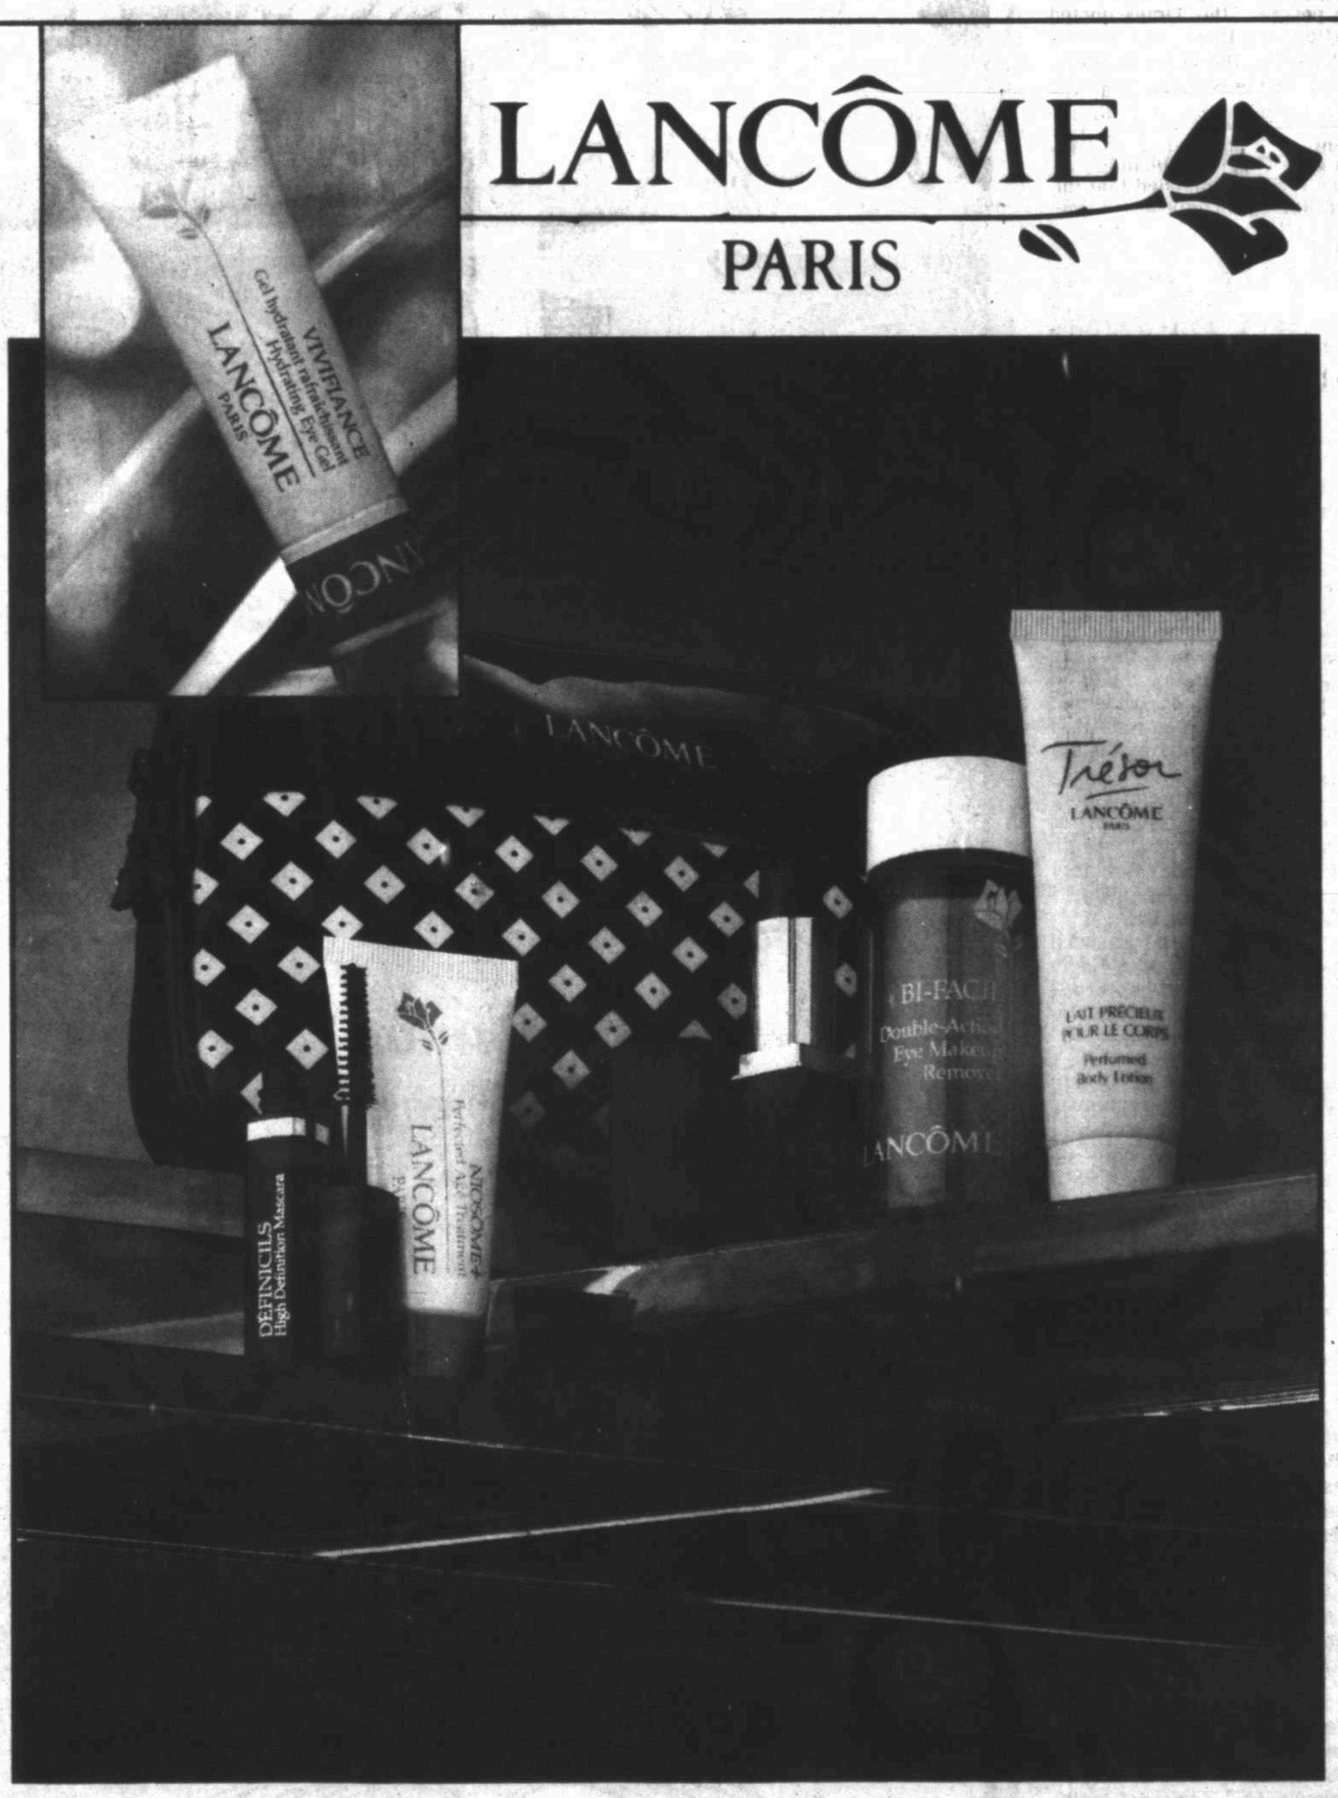

Attorneys usually dissuade clients from sticking to silly claims, and judges are good at throwing out the trivial. But sometimes, the unusual slips through.

Gay rights activists urge Clinton to remove military ban

DALLAS (AP) — A gay activist who's served as a senior presidential adviser Saturday blasted congressional opponents of homosexuals in the military and urged Bill Clinton to immediately lift the ban on their service.

Calling U.S. Sen. Sam Nunn the "George Wallace" of the gay and lesbian movement, David Mixner said Nunn and some military leaders are obstacles to fulfillment of Clinton's campaign promise.

"He is an old-fashioned bigot who will abuse his power to deny us our freedom," said Mixner, who appeared with Navy Lt. j.g. Tracy Thorne of Norfolk, Va., and Petty Officer Keith Meinhold os San Jose, Calif. at a gay-supported church.

Nunn, a Georgia Democrat who chairs the powerful Senate Armed Services Committee, clashed with Clinton earlier this year over the president's plan to lift the ban on homosexuals in the military.

His committee opens hearings on that issue Monday.

Nunn's spokesman in Washington, Scott Williams, said Saturday that the senator was not responding to Mixner's comments. But Williams said the hearings would be "fair, thorough and objective."

Mixner, a Californian who has also advised the Clinton-Gore campaign, called unacceptable the president's suggestion that he might consider segregating homosexuals by jobs or assignments if necessary to maintain order and discipline.

'Mr. President, do not negotiate our freedom away. Separate assignments and separate units is no more than old-fashioned segregation.'
—David Mixner, gay activist

"Mr. President, do not negotiate our freedom away," Mixner told about 250 people at the Cathedral of Hope Metropolitan Community Church. "Separate assignments and separate units is no more than old-fashioned segregation."

At a news conference after his address, Mixner said a senior White House staffer told him last week it was not wise to aggressively oppose compromise.

"I got no clarification on the issue of segregation," he said. "I was told to be practical."

But Mixner denied that the Clinton administration had abandoned homosexual rights. "I don't view it as a split, abandonment or betrayal," he said.

Officials at the White House press office Saturday did not immediately return a telephone call from The Associated Press. Earlier, spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers said administration officials stressed that the president was keeping an open mind about possible restrictions on gay members of the military and would review Pentagon recommendations.

Meinhold, who was ordered reinstated to the Navy in January by a federal court, said he was concerned about next week's hearings on gays in the military. Meinhold says no gays or lesbians are yet listed as taking part.

"We will serve in the military," he said. "We have drawn a line in the sand. And they have crossed it."

Former minister's trial highlights letters, calls

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Walker Railey's attempted murder trial ended its first week with testimony about profanity-laced letters, a mysterious phone call and a moaning and writhing Peggy Railey.

Week Two promises more intrigue, with the former minister's lover, Lucy Papillon, expected to take the witness stand.

Prosecutors are trying to prove Railey devised an elaborate plan to divert suspicion from himself and kill his wife. Railey faces up to 20 years in prison if convicted.

"Our theory," said prosecutor Cecil Emerson, "is that Walker Railey abandoned his children and it was all part of a scheme to dispose of his wife and move to California with Lucy Papillon."

Days after the attack, Railey locked himself in a hospital suite, scribbled out a bizarre suicide note and overdosed on tranquilizers. State District Judge Pat McDowell has ruled evidence about the suicide attempt can be used.

After recovering, Railey resigned his church post, gave up custody of his two young children, fled to California with Ms. Papillon and tried unsuccessfully to divorce his wife.

The state's largely circumstantial case relies on the threatening letters, mobile phone records and answering machine messages left the night of the attack.

Mrs. Railey was found April 22, 1987, choked and left for dead in the garage of the couple's home. She was foaming at the mouth and moaning and moving from side to side.

At the time, Railey was pastor of First United Methodist Church, one of the biggest churches in Dallas with 6,000 members. His trial was moved to San Antonio because of enormous publicity.

Railey had preached against racism, and that apparently is what at least one of the threatening letters alludes to.

Railey told authorities he received the letters in late March. He took them to the FBI in early April, saying he didn't know who might have written them, FBI agent Leland Giannini testified.

One letter said: "Just because people come down on Sunday don't mean your something. Dallas don't need any goddamned communists like you. The only good communist is a dead communist. Better start looking around the corner, you son of a bitch. I'm on your tale. How do you like that."

A third letter talked about Railey's house and asked, "Did you know that wood roofs burn?"

A letter Railey received Easter Sunday, April 19, 1987, said, "Easter is the day when Jesus got up. Well big man, you're going down."

Prosecutors plan to use DNA test results on blood and saliva samples from Railey to show he may have licked the envelopes that contained the letters.

Capping the first week of trial was testimony from paramedic Blair Bardwell, who treated Mrs. Railey after the attack. Ms. Bardwell said she received a call at home the next evening from someone who said, "You got in the way. You went between the reverend and me."

An FBI document said Ms. Bardwell also reported the caller said, "I don't know what you all did to her. She was dead when I (or possibly 'we') left her."

Clergy plans death march

FORT WORTH (AP) — A group of area clergy members plan a Sunday "death march" to protest a jury's failure to imprison a white supremacist convicted in the racially motivated killing of a black man.

Racial tensions have simmered here since last week's jury decision that gave Christopher William Brosky 10 years' probation for his part in planning the June 1991 drive-by shooting death of Donald Thomas, 32, of Arlington.

Brosky, 18, had been convicted of murder a day earlier by the all-white jury.

The Coalition of African-American Ministers, a group of 60 preachers, plans its "death march" for noon Sunday to signify that it is "mourning for justice," said the Rev. Michael Bell.

The march was to be attended by Dallas Congresswoman Eddie Bernice Johnson, who has urged the U.S. Justice Department to review the suspended sentence.

Justice officials on Friday said a request for review of the Brosky case was referred to civil rights attorneys. Prosecutors say Brosky and two other skinhead white supremacists picked Thomas as a random victim because he was a black man socializing with white friends.

Some jurors said they meant to sentence Brosky to five years in state prison plus 10 years' probation, but they were confused by legal wording in sentencing documents. Texas law prohibits stacking probationary sentences on jail terms.

Texas Attorney General Dan Morales said the law should be made clearer for jurors.

"What they were attempting to do was send this individual to prison, and once he served his time in prison they wanted him in addition to that to serve a term of probation," Morales said.

"We believe that there may well be a need for some type of legislative or statutory modification of our penal code . . . in order to provide a greater degree of security that what indeed our juries are attempting to do in the sentencing process, actually is accomplished," he said.

Ex-premier denies Mafia involvement

ROME (AP) — Former Premier Giulio Andreotti disclosed Saturday that he is under investigation for suspected Mafia activity, but he dismissed the allegations as untrue, news reports said.

Andreotti, who served as premier seven times between 1972 and 1992, is the latest high-level politician touched by anti-corruption investigations throughout Italy.

Hundreds of public officials have been investigated in various cases, and some have been jailed. Just a year ago a case such as Andreotti's would have been unthinkable.

The agencies AGI and ANSA reported that Andreotti said Palermo magistrates had given him formal notice of the investigation.

ANSA said a spokesman, Stefano Andreani, gave a statement quoting Andreotti as saying he was "bitter" about the development, which he attributed to "absurd declarations" by Mafia members turned informants.

Neither the spokesman nor Andreotti could immediately be reached for comment.

Andreotti, as a senator-for-life, enjoys parliamentary immunity from prosecution unless it is lifted by legislators.

"I don't fear any serious investigation and I face this slanderous episode with great calm, reserving the right to seek damages," his statement said.

The Palermo prosecutor's office was closed Saturday evening, but

Explosion kills Cairo police officer

■ Muslim extremists place bomb near police car.

Associated Press

CAIRO, Egypt — Muslim extremists stepped up their campaign of terror in the heart of the capital Saturday, killing a police officer with a bomb in another blow to efforts to calm fearful residents and visitors.

Extremist violence spread to Cairo in January from Assiut, the southern stronghold of militant Muslims who want to overthrow the secular government. Saturday's explosion was the third in Cairo in a month and brought to 54 the number killed this year by militant-sponsored violence.

The shift of extremist attacks to Cairo has unsettled many Egyptians, who refer to the capital of 15 million people as "Misr," Arabic for "Egypt." It also strikes at the core of Egypt's vital tourism industry, which has already suffered because of attacks in the south.

"The extremists are starting a new phase of challenge and terror . . . in Cairo," said Mursi Saad Eddin, who was government spokesman under former President Anwar Sadat.

"Police have now arrested many of them in southern Egypt," he said. "They're under a lot of pressure and can no longer move freely there. So they've moved to Cairo, which is big and crowded. They can hide easier after their attacks."

The Islamic Group said Saturday it staged an attack in Cairo, apparently referring to the bomb placed near a parked police car off busy Ataba Square. At least one policeman was killed and eight people were wounded when the bomb exploded as officers were trying to dismantle it in a nearby civil defense building.

"Police have been targeted by the Islamic Group since last year," Hisham Mubarak, a lawyer who defends extremist clients. "The only change now is that they have moved their attacks to Cairo.

"By moving to Cairo, they escape the strong grip of security forces in the south and confuse the government," he said. "They also highlight the fact that the government is unable to protect the police and tourists."

On Feb. 26, a bomb went off in a coffee shop, killing a Swede, a Turk and an Egyptian and injuring more than 15 people. A March 16 explosion beneath a bus outside the Egyptian National Museum damaged six buses but caused no injuries.

"This is also an escalation of the violence," Mubarak said. "I think there will be a new phase with the attacks on investors, as the Islamic Group has threatened."

Trucker hijacks jet to protest sectarian violence in India

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — A truck driver protesting sectarian violence commandeered a jetliner Saturday in an eight-hour saga that ended with dozens of passengers rushing for the hijacker's autograph after he surrendered.

"It was like he was some kind of a hero," said Judy Silver of Short Hills, N.J., a student at Washington University in St. Louis. "He bowed to the people while they were clapping.

"Some people were plain disgusted by that behavior and we were just confused," she said.

In a rambling statement over the aircraft's radio, he said he seized the Airbus A300 to protest political corruption and Hindu-Muslim violence that has killed about 2,000 Indians since December.

The hijacker was wearing a shirt scrawled with cartoons of political leaders and a slogan calling for communal harmony when he ordered the pilot to divert the plane to Pakistan and then Bangladesh.

He pretended to have explosives strapped to his body, but was unarmed. The 192 passengers and 13 crew were released unharmed eight hours after the man, identified as 37-year-old Hari Singh, a Hindu, surrendered. There were no injuries.

When Singh announced his decision to give himself up, many passengers rushed to get his autograph, said Erica Binger, a student at Pepperdine University in Malibu, Calif., of Paulson, Mont.

Binger and Silver were among six Americans on the plane, which was flying from New Delhi to the southern cities of Hyderabad and Madras.

Singh, 37, first told the pilot to fly to Lahore, Pakistan, but Pakistani authorities refused to let it land and blocked the runway with buses.

The hijacker then ordered the pilot to fly to Bangladesh capital of Dhaka, but was persuaded to let the jetliner land in the northwestern city of Amritsar to refuel.

The aircraft was parked in a corner of the airstrip and was ringed by commandos who had sealed the airport.

Government officials negotiated with the hijacker for hours. When he surrendered, Singh followed the plane's captain down a staircase and had begun to make a statement to journalists when police whisked him away.

"I have not hijacked this plane for bloodshed, but I want to change the thinking of the people because my aim is only love, peace and to maintain communal harmony in India," he said before police removed him.

Passengers said the hijacker was calm and shook hands with many of them.

"We are greatly relieved it is over even though there didn't appear to be any danger," said Rowan Harty, an aerospace engineer from Blackpool, England. Jennifer McArthur, a 20-year-old native of Midway City, Calif., said she broke down when she learned of the hijacking.

"I am not even allowed to drink and I have already been hijacked," said Jennifer McArthur, a sophomore at the University of Southern California in Los Angeles.

In his statement, Singh blamed the nation's largest opposition group, the Hindu nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party, for the destruction of a Muslim shrine that set off nationwide riots.

The hijacking occurred as the governing Congress Party began a weekend meeting where Prime Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao faced strong criticism from party dissidents. Many have said he has poorly handled the communal violence.

The hijacking, the 10th of an Indian Airlines jetliner since 1971, also comes as tourism is falling dramatically because of widespread violence.

What is "inclusive education" and what does it mean to me?

Inclusive education means the end to segregated classrooms and segregated schools.

It means all students -- regardless of disability regardless of severity of handicap regardless of educational need are educated in regular classrooms alongside their nonhandicapped peers.

Don't students with handicaps do better in segregated classes where they don't feel competitive pressures?

NO! Education in segregated facilities does not equal the quality of inclusive education.

My child is not in special education. Won't including students with handicaps "water down" his education?

No. But your concern is understandable. You need to know more about how everyone benefits when everyone is included.

How about children with behavior problems? Can they be successfully educated in a regular classroom?

YES! In fact, their education takes on a new meaning when they are included with their nonhandicapped peers. Regular education students also profit.

What about students with medical needs, those in wheelchairs, those who require special equipment? Can they be included too?

Yes, yes and yes!!

I am still concerned. How can I find out more?

By attending a very special meeting for parents (and interested others) which will be held on April 2nd. A video presentation will help you see how inclusive education is done and answer your questions about why it works.

15 factions agree on interim government

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — The 15 factions whose internecine fighting turned Somalia into a starving wasteland agreed late Saturday on a plan for disarming and forming a transitional government for the lawless country.

The agreement was reached after 13 days of U.N.-brokered negotiations in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

The pact calls for all factions to disarm within 90 days, said Farouk Mawlawi, the United Nations' spokesman in the Ethiopian capital.

"Judging by the lengthy negotiations that went on for the last two weeks, I feel that we really have something that these various factions found acceptable," Mawlawi said.

The proposed transitional government would run the country for about two years until national elections were held, Mawlawi said. He did not say how quickly the transitional government would be formed.

The plan has three tiers. The first is formation of a 74-member Transitional National Council, which would be the "repository of power" in Somalia. The council would consist of one representative from each of the factions, five from Mogadishu, and three from each of the country's 18 regions.

The national council would choose the heads of administrative departments and oversee the appointment of regional and district councils.

The negotiations had been stalled by the resistance of four factions allied with warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid, who wanted regional councils to be set up before a central government.

That method would likely have strengthened Aidid's hold on some parts of the country. It was not immediately known what prompted the factions to drop their resistance.

Meanwhile, the commander of the American-led military coalition and the U.N. special envoy in Somalia disagreed on whether a May 1 target date can be met for a handover to the United Nations.

And a U.S.-Belgian convoy of about 800 men was making a show of force in the Kismayu region to keep warlords Mohamed Said Hirsi, known as Gen. Morgan, and Col. Omar Jess out of the area. The move was ordered after rumors began last week that one or both of the warlords was planning a new attempt to take Kismayu.

Such actions have been a large part of the international military mission in Somalia, which began late last year when the United States assembled a coalition to protect food relief shipments from marauding looters and militias.

More than 350,000 Somalis died last year from starvation, disease and warfare in a lawless land.

U.N. official accuses Serbs of breaking promises

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — A top U.N. relief official on Saturday accused Bosnian Serbs of breaking promises made just a day earlier by blocking an aid convoy for trapped Muslims in eastern Bosnia.

The harsh comments by Jose Maria Mendiluce in Belgrade reflected the growing frustration of U.N. officials with a Serb offensive against the last Muslim enclaves in the area.

He warned that the failure of the aid convoy could force a halt to U.N. relief work.

"We have already lost a day, and God knows how many lives," said Mendiluce, the coordinator of relief efforts in the former Yugoslavia for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees. "I denounce the hypocritical attitude of those who give guarantees and don't respect them."

In more than five hours of meetings in Belgrade on Friday, Bosnian Serb military commander Gen. Ratko Mladic agreed to a cease-fire throughout Bosnia beginning at noon today. Dozens of previous cease-fires have failed almost as soon as they started.

U.N. officials said Mladic had agreed to allow a relief convoy to reach besieged Srebrenica.

But the trucks of food and medicine — with the U.N.'s military commander for Bosnia, Gen. Philippe Morillon, out front — barely got under way Saturday from Mali Zvornik just inside the Serbian republic before it was turned back.

Morillon reportedly continued to Srebrenica, where he has made his base in recent weeks in an effort to protect the population.

Mendiluce said the Serbs gave no reason for turning back the convoy, but that it would try again today. If it failed, he indicated the U.N. refugee agency might suspend its relief efforts.

"Our chances of negotiations are, in my view, exhausted," he said.

U.N. officials in Bosnia have been trying for more than a week to get more help for Srebrenica. Without the convoys, the only food provided Srebrenica comes from U.S. airdrops.

A convoy was permitted in a week ago, but an operation to evacuate sick and wounded by helicopter fell apart on Wednesday when Serbs shelled the landing pad.

A senior U.N. official in the former Balkan federation, Cedric Thornberry, said Thursday that Srebrenica could fall to advancing Serb forces in 15 to 20 days.

Diplomatic pressure has increased on Serbs since the Bosnian president, Alija Izetbegovic, signed a U.N. peace plan for his republic, leaving the Serbs as the only holdout.

Serbs have captured 70 percent of Bosnia, and millions of people have lost their homes in fighting that began last April. The international peace plan would give the Serbs 43 percent of Bosnia, which they say is unfair.

Serbia is seen by much of the world community as instigator of the Bosnian war. But its president, Slobodan Milosevic, now appears eager for peace to avoid further sanctions. He organized Friday's talks between U.N. generals and Mladic.

The Muslim-led Bosnian government says at least 134,000 people are dead or missing in the war, which began after Bosnia's Croats and Muslims voted for independence from the old Yugoslav federation, dominated by Serbia.

Some of the refugees in Srebrenica have been on the run from Serb forces for nearly a year.

U.N. refugee officials say some are eating only every other day, and most have lice and parasites. To make the situation even more desperate, it has been snowing heavily in Srebrenica for the past two days, and virtually none of the refugees who has crowded the town has proper shoes or clothing.

MAFIA: Probe touches Naples' former mayor

(From 9A)

AGI reported from the Sicilian capital that the investigation of Andreotti sprang from testimony from two informers.

In Naples, meanwhile, a former mayor was among a dozen people jailed Saturday as Italy's corruption scandal spread south.

In addition to the arrests of political and business figures, Italian news reports said authorities notified 26 other people they were under investigation.

They included a former top crimefighter, Vincenzo Scotti, who was interior minister under Andreotti. A few hours after the reports, Scotti resigned as a member of parliament's anti-Mafia commission, Italian news agencies said.

The scandals center on payoffs, some for millions of dollars, in return for public works contracts. Investigations have snared hundreds of public officials and businessmen throughout Italy.

The scandal probes initially focused on Milan, Italy's business capital, but they have shifted to the southern city of Naples.

Wildcats chalk up fourth rout

By Tom Foreman Jr.

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Kentucky made sure a last-second shot wouldn't stop its run to the Final Four this time.

The Wildcats, getting 22 points and 11 rebounds from unlikely star Jared Prickett, defeated Florida State 106-81 Saturday in the Southeast Regional final.

Kentucky's fourth consecutive blowout, by an average margin of 31 points, moved the Wildcats into next Saturday's NCAA semifinal in New Orleans against the winner of the Michigan-Temple game.

The win helped erase bitter memories of last year's East Regional final loss to Duke on Christian Laettner's miracle shot at the overtime buzzer.

The Wildcats (30-3) are going to the Final Four for the 10th time and the first time since losing to Georgetown in the 1984 semifinals. Kentucky has won five NCAA na-the lead for good Saturday and earn their second trip to the national semifinals in three years with an 83-77 victory over Indiana.

"I had to tell the kids, 'We are the No. 2 seed so we must be pretty good,'" Kansas coach Roy Williams said. "It's human nature to love to prove people wrong and when you combine that with that we're a pretty confident team, you can prove people wrong."

For top-ranked Indiana, the game not only meant not returning to the Final Four for the second year in a row, but it meant the end of the college career of All-America Calbert Cheaney, who finished with 22 points.

SAN ANGELO — Sometimes it's hard to tell the winners from the winners.

That seemed to be the case at the San Angelo Relays Saturday where both Stanton's Jeremy Stallings and Midland Lee's Scott McLeod had different reactions to winning very different events. It seems, for some, that it's not whether you win, but how you win that counts.

Stallings, the two-time defending state Class A 800-meter champion, was again the class of the Division IV field with a meet record 1:52.69, a time that suprised even the steady senior. McLeod was the class of the Division I shot put field,

Panthers end Rebels' streak

By Bill Price
Staff writer

Henry Kissinger would have been proud of Odessa Permian center fielder Mack Cohlmia in his post-game graciousness Saturday.

"We knew they (Midland Lee) had a real good ball club. We just had to come in and take care of our own business," said Cohlmia, whose solo home run broke a 3-3 tie and helped send the Panthers over the Rebels, 5-3, in District 4-5A baseball play at Johnson Field.

Diplomacy in action, shall we say.

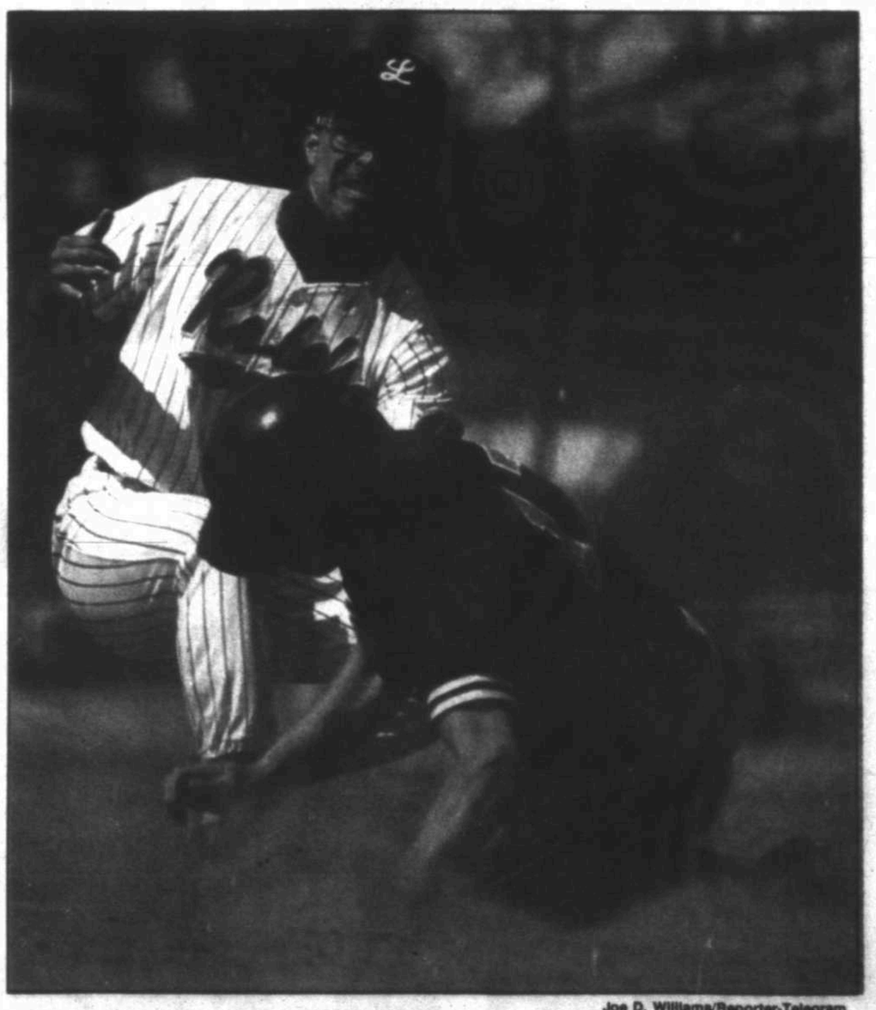

Of course, the pushing match that replaced the handshakes after the final out might belie Cohlmia's assertion. This, was after all, Lee-Permian, even if we are talking diamonds instead of gridirons, with the drama being played out on a naturally lit Saturday afternoon.

The intensity level pushed the fist-pumping meter to new highs, and even resulted in the ejection of Rebel second baseman Eric Benavidez after he had the unadulterated gall to question an umpire's call.

So when the two teams entered the seventh inning tied 3-3, everyone of the estimated 245 fans in attendance fully expected somebody to make something happen. And it was Cohlmia who decided he wanted a piece of that action.

With one out he tagged a hanging curveball offered by Lee pitcher Alex Hale for his 340-foot homer to left field. Craig Popejoy followed with a double to the left-center gap, and Dennis Graham drove Popejoy home with a triple to the same outfield hole.

Hale (2-1), who had not pitched since the the Del Rio Tournament two weeks ago, was done after that and Brian Cordova got the last out of the inning. Hale ended the game with eight strikeouts, but his curveball showed rust early, when he hit two batters.

Lee made a run at a comeback to preserve its 12-game winning streak in the seventh, as Kirk Ulrich singled to right and went all the way to third when the ball went through Lonnie Jones' legs.

but he was disappointed with his toss of 55-0¼ even though that mark won by two feet.

"It was a bad day at the office," McLeod said. "I thought a good throw would come, but it didn't. My best this year is 56-5, but I need to be at 57-feet by district. I was hoping to be around that. I had 55-feet on my first throw and it was downhill after that."

Stallings, on the other hand, was elated with his record breaking run.

"I felt really strong. I haven't had this good of weather to run in a long time," Stallings said. "My goal had been to run a 1:53 by this weekend, but I had a 1:53 in my first meet at Stanton and it's really hard to improve in bad weather when you start that fast.

"I want to be under 1:50 by the state meet. One of the reasons I was so strong here is the good weather and the fact that a lot of people were pulling for me to break the record in a big track meet like this."

But Stallings wasn't through with his record run. He has often said that the 1600 isn't his favorite race. "It's just another event for me to run in," is the way he put it, but his 4:36.9 was a Division IV record. He does own one state championship in the 1600, that coming when he was a sophomore.

Then just to cap the day off he helped Stanton win the 1600 relay, coming from 10 yards behind to win by five for a time of 3:27.28. Just another day at the track for Jeremy Stallings.

Hamlin, however, survived Stanton's 1600 relay victory to win the Division IV title by an 86-72 margin over the Buffaloes.

Lee couldn't find another victory on the day, but Roderick Mayfield had a 39.32 second place finish in the 300 Hurdles and led the race for the first three-quarters before running out of steam. Lee's sprint relay team had a season best 42.99 with four sophomores and without regular member Marlon Henry. Midland High's best finish of the day was fifth place in the 3200 relay and fifth from Dwight Allison in the 100.

Converse Judson and Temple tied for the Division I crown with 118 points each. Lee finished fifth with 43.5 points behind Amarillo High and Odessa High.

Judson's Charles Ford produced an impressive record in the high jump with a leap of 7-2.

San Angelo Lake View easily won the Division II competition with a massive 160 points. District foe Lamesa was second with 80 points as Corey Kelly won both the 200 and long jump.

Tulia walked away with the Division III title by a 124-58 margin over Crane.

Indians' Crews eulogized

Associated Press

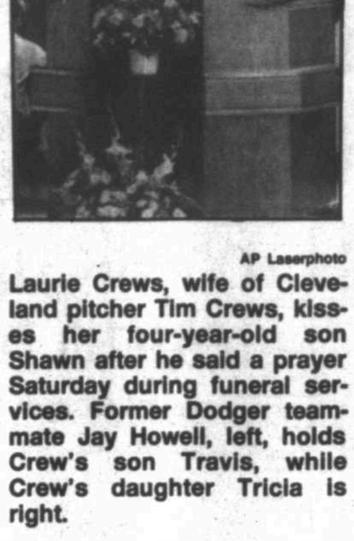

WINDERMERE, Fla. — Tim Crews' widow and former teammates sobbed in each others' arms Saturday as they eulogized the Cleveland Indians pitcher killed in a boating accident.

The crowd of 500 at St. Luke's United Methodist Church cried when reliever Jay Howell, a close friend and former Los Angeles Dodger teammate, stepped to the pulpit flanked by nine other ballplayers.

"We all know what Tim's accomplishments on the field were," Howell said, frequently stopping to compose himself. "That's part of the baseball record.

"But his quality of his life and his love, dedication and commitment to his family and friends were of Cy Young status. That's how we will remember you."

Later, red-eyed players carried Crews' black and silver casket up a gentle hillside to a grave chosen because it overlooks a pond, symbolizing the he signed with the Indians as a free agent only two months ago.

Laurie Crews, wife of Cleveland pitcher Tim Crews, kisses her four-year-old son Shawn after he said a prayer Saturday during funeral services. Former Dodger teammate Jay Howell, left, holds Crew's son Travis, while Crew's daughter Tricia is right.

The group of Dodgers players, who came from Vero Beach in team vans, knew him well from the six seasons they shared in Los Angeles. Their words and tears showed it.

The congregation broke up at the sight of major league ballplayers, accustomed to holding in emotion, sobbing behind the casket while Howell eulogized.

The crying players huddled when Howell finished, and Laurie Crews joined in to comfort them.

Mrs. Crews finished the eulogy while former Dodger Kirk Gibson and Howell held two of the three Crews children. LA pitcher Orel Hershiser stood nearby offering comfort.

Mrs. Crews told the congregation that the youngest child, 3-year-old Travis, has asked whether his father will come back.

"I tell him no because he's in heaven playing baseball," she said.

MIDWEST: KU's fresh defenders key on Cheaney

would have got us there," said Hoosiers coach Bob Knight, who lost for just the third time in eight regional championship games. The last time the Final Four was held in New Orleans was 1987, the last of Knight's three national championships.

Kansas (29-6), which finished at 60 percent (31 for 52) from the field, will meet the winner of the East Regional championship between top-seeded North Carolina and second-seeded Cincinnati next Saturday in the Final Four. Kentucky will play the Michigan-Temple winner in the other semifinal.

Williams becomes the first coach outside the Big Ten to ever beat an Indiana team coached by Knight twice in a season. The Jayhawks beat the Hoosiers 74-69 in December. Williams is 3-0 against Indiana, having beaten the Hoosiers in the Southeast Regional semifinals in 1991.

"We played sensational in 1991 and today," Williams said. "Earlier this year our guards came through and we won. It's not coaching, we played well all three games."

Indiana (31-4) trailed 42-34 early in the second half, but a wild shot by Greg Graham, who finished with 23 points, put the Hoosiers in front 50-48 with 12:52 to play.

Kansas, the Big Eight regular-season champions, then went on the deciding 10-0 run as Indiana turned the ball over on three straight possessions. Eric Pauley started the run with a baseline move and Steve Woodberry and Rex Walters sandwiched 3-pointers around a turnover by Matt Nover. Calvin Rayford, the smallest player in the game at 5-foot-6, capped the run for the Jayhawks by stealing the ball from Damon Bailey just across midcourt and going in for a layup, his only points of the game.

"We just went and made some mistakes that you just can't make and win a game," Bailey said. "You can't make as many mistakes as we did tonight and expect to win."

Williams wouldn't pick out any one player as making the biggest difference for his team as the Jayhawks placed five players in doouble figures for the fourth straight game.

"Throughout the tournament it has been every guy contributing and you saw that again today," Williams said. "I was pleased with the way we played defensively and with our patience on offense and poise and toughness. When you play Indiana you have to have those things."

Cheaney had averaged 28 points in the first three tournament games.

"We just wanted to wear him down and keep putting fresh people on him," Williams said of the effort to stop Cheaney, who finished 10 for 19 from the field, a far cry from his 10-for-12 effort in the regional semifinals against Louisville when he scored 32 points. "We started Richard Scott on him and then a few guys got a chance. We just wanted to wear him down as the game went on because we didn't want him to go 10-for-12 again."

tional championships, tied with Indiana for second to UCLA's 10.

It will be the second Final Four for Kentucky coach Rick Pitino, who took Providence to the national semifinals in 1987, the last time the Final Four was in New Orleans.

Like Kentucky's three previous tournament games, this one was over long before the final buzzer. The Wildcats, who averaged 97 points in roaring through the Southeast Regional as the No. 1 seed, took an eight-point halftime lead, then broke it open with an 11-0 run in the second half.

By the end of the game, Kentucky fans who followed their team to Charlotte was chanting "Final Four, Final Four!" They also chanted "SEC! SEC!" to show their pride in the Southeastern Conference in the heart of Atlantic Coast Conference country.

Prickett, a freshman averaging only 4.9 points per game, replaced Rodrick Rhodes in Kentucky's starting lineup and started both games in Charlotte. He got 13 points and nine rebounds in the first half against the Seminoles, whose attention was focused on Travis Ford and Jamal Mashburn.

Dale Brown also helped keep the Seminoles at bay in the first half with three 3-pointers and 10 points. He finished with 12 points, while Ford had 19.

Mashburn, the Kentucky junior All-American who has already announced he is going to the NBA next season, scored only 12 points on 5-of-13 shooting. But he got nine rebounds, seven assists and plenty of support from his teammates.

Florida State (25-10) kept pace with Kentucky for the first 18 minutes, mainly by keeping Mashburn in control and beating the Wildcats' pressure with long passes that turned into easy layups.

In the second half, however, the Seminoles fell apart. They made only four baskets in the first 10 minutes and watched hopes for a first Final Four appearance since 1972 disappear beneath Kentucky's relentless press.

Bob Sura led Florida State with 17 points.

Kentucky then put the Seminoles away with an 11-0 run in the second half. Dent started it with an inside basket and Gimel Martinez closed it on a layup with 10:26 remaining for a 77-56 lead.

The victory completed an awesome run by Kentucky in which they beat Rider 96-52, Utah 83-62 and Wake Forest 103-69.

EAST: Trap could be key to game's outcome unrelenting pressure trap into a second straight trip to the Final Four.

On the other side stands traditional and top-seeded North Carolina (31-4), which for decades has used what Dean Smith likes to call the surprise trap, a double trap as effective as any in the country in causing turnovers.

To the better trapper in Sunday's 12:37 p.m. CST contest at the Meadowlands Arena goes a trip to New Orleans for the Final Four.

"Handling Cincinnati's press will obviously be an important factor," said Smith, who will be looking for his ninth trip to the Final Four. "We are going to throw the ball away a few times."

The key will be for the Tar Heels of the Atlantic Coast Conference to play like they did in the second half of Friday night's semifinal win over Arkansas, 80-74.

In the final 20 minutes against the Razorbacks' full-court pressure, North Carolina had three turnovers. Smith also thinks playing another pressing team might be an advantage for his club, which has won 15 of its last 16 games.

No one on Cincinnati would buy that argument.

"Arkansas does a good job of trapping, but ours is more helter skelter trapping," Bearcats senior forward Terry Nelson said. "We trap everywhere. They would get out of it once the trap was broken. We continue trapping and try to make you feel uncomfortable."

In three tournament games, Cincinnati, of the Great Midwest Conference, has made a lot of people uncomfortable, forcing 69 turnovers.

"Arkansas did a lot more man-to-man and 2-2-1," Cincinnati coach Bob Huggins said. "Our trap is unique. I don't want to get into what we do. It wouldn't be unique if I did."

Bearcats forward Erik Martin said it took him almost a full season to learn the defense, and he said it might take him even longer to explain it. He said the trap involves a lot of reads, hustle and communication.

"We're talking all the time," he said. "If we didn't it wouldn't work."

Ironically, the Cincinnati trap was not at its best in Friday night's 71-54 semifinal win over Virginia, another ACC team that like North Carolina has a lot of size up front.

The Cavaliers wanted to beat the trap, then get into a half-court game. They did, and Cincinnati still won.

"The fallacy is that people think we live and die with the press," Huggins said. "We are good at the press, but we are successful with the half-court game as well. We blew last night's game open with our half-court game."

North Carolina doesn't trap as much, but it can be as effective as Cincinnati when it does. The Tar Heels forced 12 turnovers against Arkansas, including one in the final minute when Arkansas had the ball trailing by 3.

"More than anything we hope our trap comes as a surprise," Smith said. "I would be surprised ball gurus in the room say we're the most underachieving team ever to be seen and things like that, you're not just talking about Chris Webber the basketball player, you're talking about Chris Webber the person and Chris Webber's character," he said.

WEST: Wolverines uptight at news conference

After all, Webber said, Michigan is one of just eight teams still alive in the hunt for the NCAA championship. The Wolverines (29-4) play Temple (20-12) on Sunday for the championship of the West Regional.

Winning doesn't seem to be enough for the critics, Webber said.

"We're put on a pedestal so much that we aren't respected anymore as individuals," Webber said at the team's news conference Saturday. "When you're looked at as a novelty act or a traveling side show, it sort of gets to you."

What brought about Webber's defensive attitude was the struggles of the top-seeded Wolverines in their their last two tournament games. They needed overtime to beat UCLA last weekend in the second round, then had a sloppy, sputtering effort in a 72-64 win over 12th-seeded George Washington in the semifinals Friday night.

"It seems like everything is critical, even when we're winning," Webber said. "You get a little tired of that."

The pressure is not only coming from the outside.

"We're putting so much pressure on ourselves, we're our biggest enemy," Webber said.

The strain is definitely showing on the five talented sophomores who start for coach Steve Fisher's Wolverines.

"Last year we were the fun-lovin' new kids on the block," Jalen Rose said. "Everybody wanted to see the Fab Five do well. This year, maybe the Fab Five thing is getting old as far as the media is concerned. They kind of want to see the Fab Five go out and play like supermen, dominate every team by 20-30 points, dunk every time down the court and play a total game with no turnovers.

"Most of the time that won't happen."

The Wolverines are well aware of the way they looked against George Washington. Webber said he watched a videotape of the game Friday night.

"We looked like a bunch of junior high kids compared to the old Michigan that the five of us are used to playing," he said.

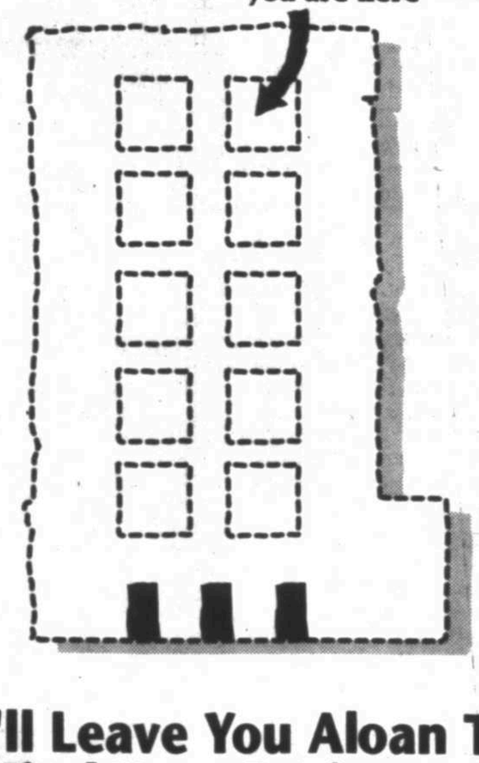

Temple was as loose as Michigan was uptight at its Saturday news conference.

Tech ladies in Final Four

Associated Press

MISSOULA, Mont. — West Regional MVP Sheryl Swoopes scored 36 points, including 15-of-16 from the free throw line, as Texas Tech outclassed Colorado 79-59 Saturday night to advance to the women's Final Four in Atlanta.

Texas Tech (29-3) meets Vanderbilt (30-2) in a semifinal game April 3.

The lopsided contest was played before 7,131 fans in Dahlberg Arena, an NCAA record for a West Regional held at a neutral site.

Colorado's Shelley Sheetz, who was averaging 16 points a game, was held to just six in the contest.

The Lady Raiders did not allow Colorado (27-4) to get into the game, as Tech jumped out to a 12-0 lead. The Lady Buffs' first points came five minutes into the game when Sherrice King hit a layup.

Texas Tech held a 40-21 halftime lead, thanks to Swoopes' 17 first-half points.

The Lady Raiders pulled out to a 65-35 lead on a Swoopes basket with 8:42 left to play.

Amy Mathern scored all six of her points in a 10-0 Colorado run that pulled the Lady Buffs to within 65-45 with 4:47 to play. But it was too little, too late.

Krista Kirkland scored 12 points for Texas Tech, all on 3-pointers.

Jamillah Lang was the only Colorado player in double figures with 14.

Swoopes had 10 rebounds, making this her 13th double-double of the year. Her 15-of-16 effort from the free throw line was a West Regional record, both for free throws attempted and made.

Kirkland, Sheetz, Texas Tech's Noel Johnson and Stanford's Val Whiting were named to the all-tournament team.

Iowa 72, Tennessee 56

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Iowa rode a fast start and the second-half scoring of Tia Jackson to its first berth in the NCAA Women's Final Four, beating Tennessee for the Mideast Regional championship.

Jackson scored 17 of her 21 points in the second half and the Hawkeyes (27-3) held Tennessee 25 points below its season scoring average to deny the Volunteers (29-3) an eighth Final Four appearance. They also kept Tennessee coach Pat Summitt from her 500th career victory.

Iowa will meet Big Ten foe Ohio State, champion of the East Regional, in the national semifinals in Atlanta next Saturday. Ohio State and Iowa shared the conference title with 16-2 records and split their two games.

Vanderbilt 58, Louisiana Tech 53

NACOGDOCHES — Vanderbilt's Mara Cunningham scored 10 straight points in the closing minutes charge that rallied the No. 1 ranked Commodores over Louisiana Tech in the women's NCAA Midwest Regional finals Saturday night.

Louisiana Tech (26-6), seeking its eighth trip to the Final Four, led 46-43 with 7:13 to play and after two free throws by Vanderbilt's Misty Lamb, Cunningham hit the next 10 points and finished with 22 for the game.

Ohio State 75, Virginia 73

RICHMOND — Audrey Burcy scored 20 points, including a layup with 3:18 remaining that gave No. 3 Ohio State a 6-point lead, and the Buckeyes held on to defeat No. 9 Virginia in the NCAA East Region championship.

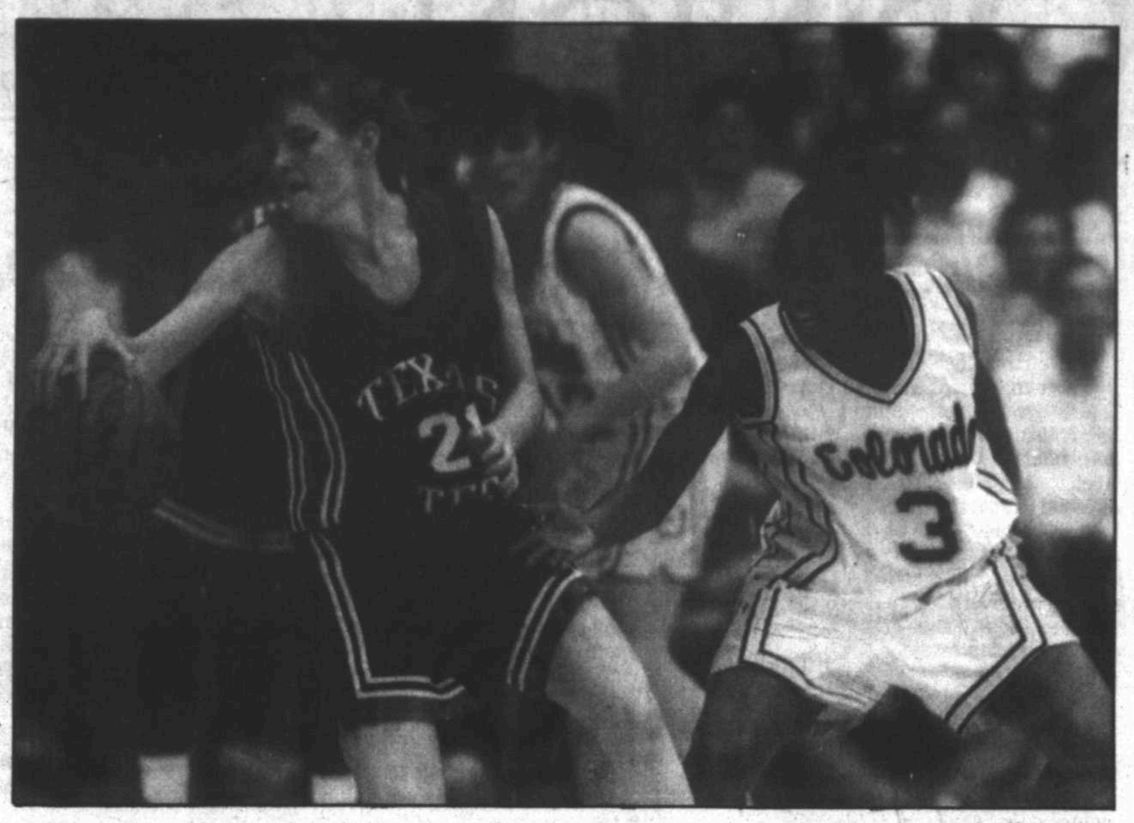

The Buckeyes (27-3) will take a 13-game winning streak against the winner of the Iowa-Tennessee game in Friday's Final Four semifinal game.

Virginia finished 26-6.

The Buckeyes had a 19-7 spurt late in the first half to move to a 40-27 lead with 2:40 remaining. Burcy scored 8 and Averrill Roberts 7 in the spurt.

But the Cavaliers scored the last 7 points of the half and trailed 40-34 at intermission.

Virginia's surge continued early in the second half, powered by Heather Burge's quick 9 points that gave Virginia a 47-45 lead with 15:51 remaining. Burge scored 22 of her 30 points in the second half.

Sabatini upset in Houston

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Third-seeded Conchita Martinez defeated top-seeded Gabriela Sabatini 6-3, 6-3 in a semifinal at the $375,000 Virginia Slims of Houston tournament Saturday at the Westside Tennis Club.

Martinez trailed 3-2 in the first set, but broke Sabatini's serve in the sixth game to start a 4-0 run that gave her the set. She jumped ahead 5-1 in the second and held on for the win.

Martinez recorded 27 winners to Sabatini's eight and converted on 15 of 18 net approaches compared to just 13 of 25 for Sabatini.

"Conchita played as well as I've ever seen her play," said Sabatini, who had won six in a row against Martinez. "I didn't play all that bad, she was just too good today."

Martinez played despite an injured right hand that nearly forced her to pull out of the tournament earlier in the week.

"The hand wasn't giving me any problems today," Martinez said. "In fact, I think this was one of the best matches on clay I've had in a long time."

Martinez will face the winner of Saturday night's semifinal between No. 4 Jana Novatna and unseeded Sabine Hack of Germany in Sunday's final.

ness and will be finished Sunday afternoon.

In game one Phil Lewis opened scoring with a home run for Houston (21-12) at the bottom of the second, but the Aggies (28-3) answered with five in the fourth, one in the fifth and seven in the sixth. David Minor also hit a pinch-hit grand slam in the seventh.

Trey Moore started and got his seventh win without defeat for A&M. Brett Jones (2-1) took the loss for Houston.

Texas 5-5, DBU 2-4

AUSTIN — Jeff Conway and Braxton Hickman both went 2-for-2 and drove in a run as third-ranked Texas beat NAIA-powerhouse Dallas Baptist 5-2 to complete a doubleheader sweep Saturday afternoon.

The Longhorns (32-5) — behind a 3-for-4 performance by Brooks Kieschnick — garnered an 8-4 victory against Dallas Baptist in the first game of the doubleheader.

Jay Vaught (5-0) scattered two hits during four and two-third innings of work to earn the victory in the nightcap and his second win of the three-game series. Vaught pitched two perfect innings Friday for his fourth win of the season.

Texas Tech 5-8, Rice 4-5

LUBBOCK — Texas Tech swept a doubleheader against Rice Saturday, 5-4 and 8-5, with the winning rally in the nightcap coming off reliever Mike Wilson.

The Red Raiders improved to 25-7 overall and 5-1 in the Southwest Conference. Rice, meanwhile, dropped to 25-7 and 3-3.

George Kilford opened the bottom of the nightcap's sixth inning with a walk and went to second on Matt Smith's groundout. Rice first baseman Kennedy Glasscock booted Randy DuRoss' ground ball, leaving runners at first and third.

Brosky's trial denied justice

Don't even attempt to compare the lenient punishment decision in the Fort Worth murder trial of Christopher William Brosky to the verdict acquitting Los Angeles police officers in the Rodney King incident. The two cases are strikingly different. In fact, about the only comparison that can be made is that in both instances there were both blacks and whites involved, and that the verdicts inflamed passions to the point that ordinary reason was meaningless in resolving the issues.

The jury's decision in Fort Worth to hand 17-year-old Brosky a 10-year probated sentence for his role in the hate slaying of 32-year-old Donald Thomas was a judgement call that was not warranted on the basis of the evidence made public. Testimony revealed that Brosky, though not the motivator or the "trigger man" in the drive-by random killing of Thomas, a black, still did nothing to prevent the vicious act. Such effort would have made a difference in the severity of the punishment, no doubt. But Brosky didn't try to stop the killing. Prosecutor David Escobar even went as far as to tell jurors that Brosky is beyond rehabilitation. He considered himself a "skinhead" just like the other two men in the vehicle.

So why the lenient sentence?

Some of the jurors have said that they misunderstood the charge they were given, that they had intended Brosky to receive prison time AND later be released on probation. But others seemed to disagree. They said they were lenient in the hope that he could still turn his life around.

That is often the consideration when a person on trial for murder did not take an active role in the killing. Jurors also have said that realized sending Brosky to the Texas prison system would most likely have ended that hope.

From the evidence, Brosky still has a major hurdle to clear to make such a monumental change in his life.

But what about Donald Thomas's widow, family and friends? They received no true justice in the trial of Brosky. William George "Trey" Roberts admitted to proposing the drive-by killing of Thomas and to firing the shotgun blast that killed him. Brosky was in the back seat at the time.

Thomas's life was taken in an act of inhumanity that cries for justice.

The real questions in this case are why did Roberts get off so light, why was Brosky given probation, and why is skin color involved in this case at all?

Race shouldn't be involved in this case, other than having made Thomas the target of the skinheads. A human life was taken viciously and needlessly. While the law allows for a range of punishment in cases of murder, jurors must not lose sight of the fact that the taking of a human life mandates the harshest punishment the law allows, with only minor adjustments for extenuating circumstances.

That obviously wasn't the guide used in the Brosky trial.

Sunset commission should be reviewed

The performance of the Texas Sunset Advisory Commission may be flawed and in need of improvement, but its review of state boards and agencies every 12 years serves a useful purpose.

Several influential lawmakers, including Texas House Speaker Pete Laney and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, are supporting legislation that would abolish the sunset commission. Critics say the commission of nine lawmakers and two citizen members has shown itself too vulnerable to special interests, but the commission would have difficulty accommodating special interests more readily than does the Legislature.

It seems only fair to subject the sunset process to the same review it gives other agencies. To abolish it outright without the benefit of a systematic review would be as unnatural as nightfall before sunset.

Today in History

Today is Sunday, March 28, the 87th day of 1993. There are 278 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On March 28, 1979, America's worst commercial nuclear accident occurred inside the Unit 2 reactor at the Three Mile Island plant near Middletown, Pa., as a series of human and mechanical failures caused the cooling system to malfunction, resulting in damage to the reactor's core and leakage of radioactivity.

On this date:

In 1797, Nathaniel Briggs of New Hampshire patented a washing machine.

In 1834, the U.S. Senate voted to censure President Andrew Jackson for the removal of federal deposits from the Bank of the United States.

In 1854, during the Crimean War, Britain and France declared war on Russia.

In 1930, the names of the Turkish cities of Constantinople and Angora were changed to Istanbul and Ankara.

Rockefeller shares views on health care

WASHINGTON — The epiphany for President Clinton's health-care plan may have come on Oct. 26, one week before the election. Clinton was on the campaign bus in North Carolina with Al Gore when Sen. John D. (Jay) Rockefeller, D-W.Va., climbed aboard. Until then, Clinton's plan revolved around the "play or pay" model, which forces employers to provide health insurance or pay a substantial payroll tax.

Anderson

"(Clinton) said, 'I'm not going to do that payroll tax, I can't get that through Congress," Rockefeller says. "And you know what, he's right."

Long before Hillary Clinton had her own task force, Rockefeller was crisscrossing the country to stump for health-care reform. The problem was, nobody would believe he wasn't running for president.

"I went to the Des Moines Register, and said 'I'm not here because I'm running for president.' And they all started laughing," Rockefeller says. It was a year before the 1992 primaries were starting. "I said 'I'm here to talk about health care."

Rockefeller's non-presidential campaign continued, until "the most awful thing happened. I started getting a reasonably good response, and not just on health care. I started moving in the polls." Soon thereafter, Rockefeller opted out of a White House bid. But besides catapulting Rockefeller to the national stage, this brief campaign now ranks as one of the primary catalysts that brought health care to the forefront of the Democratic agenda.

The rise of health care as a national issue parallels Rockefeller's rise to prominence in the Democratic ranks. But the soft-spoken senator with the famous name traces his interest in the issue to long before his political career took off. The roots, he told us recently, lie in the coal-mining town of Emmons, W.Va., where Rockefeller went as a VISTA volunteer in the early 1960s. Having lived a life of immense privilege, the experience in Emmons changed his life, and his career.

"Here I was, a guy named Rockefeller, who was fluent in Japanese and knew Chinese and (served in the) Peace Corps. I couldn't break in. . . . people just closed their doors." But Rockefeller did break in, and the experience reminds him to this day that health care is not merely about lofty concepts like managed competition and global budgeting, but about serving rural communities like Emmons. The problem there was more basic than finding affordable health insurance. There weren't any doctors.

Rockefeller told us of the lesson he learned after pressuring the county government to send a van out to Emmons to offer free Pap smears. After going door to door telling residents about the van, nobody showed up for their free test. Two months later, the van came back, with the same results. Eventually, Rockefeller realized his mistake.

"They probably didn't want to take the test because there was so much going wrong in their lives, that why would they want someone to tell them there was something really bad going on in their lives." There has to be trust built up between doctor and patient, trust that takes time to build when medical care arrives in the form of a mobile laboratory. It's a pattern that continues today.

Hospitals are not the answer to health problems in the thousands of communities like Emmons, Rockefeller says.

Nation's gun dealers outnumber gas stations

WASHINGTON — Ms. Derlesher Edwards of Chicago paid $55 for a handgun and 100 rounds of ammunition because she overheard men in the small family restaurant she owns saying, "This is an easy place to stick up." Her son Darnell took the gun from her purse and put it in his school gym bag because a classmate who had stolen his candy bars said that if Darnell didn't give him more candy he would shoot him. Darnell told some classmates he had the gun, word reached school authorities and they confiscated it.

Will

Darnell is six.

And so it goes in a nation with more gun dealers than gas stations, a nation in which, according to a new government report, firearms cause more deaths among those 15 to 24 than all natural causes combined.

In an article in The American Scholar, "Defining Deviancy Down," Sen. Pat Moynihan writes that in the span of just one generation deviant behavior has soared to levels Americans flinch from recognizing. So the nation has been redefining deviancy to exempt much conduct previously stigmatized, and has been relaxing the standard of what is considered "normal" levels of deviant behavior, levels that would have been intolerable by standards obtaining not long ago.

A sign of "normalizing": In 1990, according to the Justice Department, Americans reported only 38 percent of all crimes and only 48 percent of violent crimes. Such behavior is a shrug of despair.

Another sign is this New York Times subhead on a story about a teacher shot on the way to class: "Struck in the Shoulder in the Year's First Shooting Inside a School." Just the first. More to come.

When the crime level, no matter how high it is or how rapidly it is rising, is "normalized," society is saying it has no expectation of improvement, and hence makes no insistence on even trying. Moynihan is for trying almost anything. Noting that we have a two-century supply of handguns, but only a four-year supply of ammunition, he says, "Guns don't kill people, bullets do," and he proposes prohibiting the manufacture of certain calibers of ammunition.

In 1929, Moynihan notes, Chicago's St. Valentine's Day massacre shocked the nation. Four gangsters machine-gunned seven gangsters. Nowadays it is not unusual in many cities — it is "normal" — to have such carnage on a "normal" weekend. Raymond Kelly, New York City's police commissioner, read Moynihan's article and wrote a splendid speech urging "a new intolerance." Noting that on Valentine's Day 1993 there were 12 homicides in his city — six in one Bronx apartment — Kelly said:

"The fight against crime in America, like that against Soviet domination, is now essentially a fight for freedom. Fearing crime, or being one of its victims, is to lose a fair measure of freedom. . . . Society's increasing tolerance of crime and antisocial behavior in general is abetting our own enslavement. The erosion of freedom caused by crime is so pervasive that we are in danger of failing to notice it at all."

He notices with disgust the parked cars with signs in their windows saying "No Radio." These signs are attempts to communicate in conciliatory terms with thieves, saying: Break into someone else's car, there's no loot in mine. Such signs, says Kelly, are "flags of urban surrender."

Noting that there were 50 million guns in private hands in 1950, and that the number has doubled every 20 years to at least 200 million, and that most are handguns, Kelly argues for national registration of all handguns. Such registration would produce "a trail of ownership" and "an interesting trail of civil liability, as well, for persons who sold or disposed of their guns illegally or just recklessly."

Cold movies not usually welcome in Hollywood

'Unforgiven," for which Clint Eastwood is apparently destined to be honored in the Academy Awards excesses next week, is the coldest movie I've seen since "Eskimo."

Baker

The next coldest was "Pale Rider," a 1985 Eastwood oater about an avenging gunman raised from the grave by a little girl's prayers, unless I misunderstood the symbolism.

The dominant color in both Eastwood movies was ice blue. While the sun occasionally came out in both, it was the gray, dead sun of a North Atlantic January.

A friend in the movie business says maybe both shows were filmed way up in Canada, which might account for the frigid colors. It becomes harder every year to find outdoor locations in the United States suitable for shooting movies about the old West.

Skies filled with jet trails and horizons cluttered with power lines and TV dishes spoil the atmosphere if you are trying to make an audience believe that elegantly groomed actors really are struggling to cross cruel and trackless wastes by wagon train. One solution is to shoot in Canada's relatively unscarred terrain.

On the other hand, maybe Clint Eastwood simply wanted to make a couple of cold-looking movies. Both, after all, are about death, or "the big chill," to use the popular yuppie euphemism.

If he deliberately chose to make a cold movie, Eastwood proved he truly has the nerve of a gunslinger, because Hollywood is a hot-movie town and America is a hot-movie audience.

I don't know the movie business well enough to say Hollywood absolutely hates cold movies. I'm pretty sure, though, that whoever first said "I've got a script titled 'The Long Hot Summer' " had to move fast to avoid being buried under a bombardment of money.

The instant you hear that title you envision everything that makes Hollywood movies irresistible: steam coming off an alligator-infested swamp, steam coming off beautiful and scantily clad actors, steam coming off the truculent old villain inside his white suit . . .

The supreme artist of the cold movie is Ingmar Bergman. He even titled one of his movies "Winter Light." Imagine Bergman pitching that one in Hollywood.

What would any normal movie bankroller immediately see? Liv Ullman not steaming, Liv Ullman not scantily clad, Liv Ullman's cleavage not oozing beads of perspiration down by the alligator-infested swamp, but — Ingmar, when are you going to grow up? — Liv Ullman in deep ice, Liv Ullman in chilblains . . .

Liv Ullman, incidentally, though a regular Bergman star, was not in "Winter Light," but the curse of the cold-weather movie master seemed to follow her. When her chance came to make a hot-weather flick set in France with Charles Bronson, it was titled "Cold Sweat."

I haven't seen "Cold Sweat." The title sounds like the kind of movie I try to avoid. The kind of movie that sends me bolting from the TV room to the movie house is titled "Body Heat."

Hollywood did not make "Winter Light." It made "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof." Both, like Clint Eastwood's two cold westerns, spent a lot of footage fretting about death in vaguely philosophical ways that don't work in movies.

Comedy is probably the only form in which movies can effectively muse philosophically, especially about subjects as vulnerable to easy sentimentality as death.

Bergman is best not when he is whining about the death of God, but when he sets Death loose on the countryside telling people their time is up. Confronting a customer who says he still has too many tasks unfinished to die just now, Death says, "That's what they all say."

Death comes close to being Hollywood's favorite subject, of course. As you might expect of an industry whose favorite weather condition is heat, it has never had to rely on cold movies to deal with this beloved old theme.

Unconstitutional groups need to be defunded

I find it incredibly ironic and hypocritical that we Midlanders are protesting an abortion clinic's legal right to murder the unborn, while at the same time, under the auspices of U.S. Treasury agents with the ATF, have under seige a group of cultists that were allegedly trying to commit suicide.

We could return to sanity if we would elect candidates to serve us taxpayers by defunding these unconstitutional agencies whose programs are enslaving us with unconstitutional laws and taxes.

Paper hasn't made clear the reason for assault

We feel that the only reasonable and humane solution to the impasse at Waco is to get the problem before the U.N. This could be done by declaring the Davidian compound a separate nation. The miserably executed invasion attempt by the ATF agents, (the Marines do this sort of thing much better) has made the above proposal feasible.

What shall we call it — Davidia? Whatever, the simple act of designating it a sovereign but destitute nation would presumably empower the United Nations to seize control with a military force. The U.S. could then soothe the outrage of the Davidians with a little foreign aid — maybe a billion or so.

Not to malign your newspaper — but the reporting has not made it very clear whether the assault by the United States on this needy but militant "Nation" was because:

— 1. They were unable to feed themselves; thereby posing a threat to the free world.

— 2. A Methodist had been denied membership; thereby committing a gross violation of civil rights.

— 3. Koresh is an anti-communist dictator. (Since World War II, our alms bestowers have not condoned, let alone rewarded, any dictator unless he was a communist.)

Of course, should our proposal be implemented and the offense turn out to be something old hat like number three the U.N. would have to depose Koresh, replace him with a communist, and dig up a few more billions in foreign aid.

SPEAKING OUT

Political news has its own language

By Robert Nash

Some of my friends tell me they are having difficulty understanding the news stories they read about political events.

The reason for their confusion is that they are using a Webster's or Merriam's dictionary, or some other quaint and irrelevant source of information.

These confused readers have overlooked the fact that many groups have developed their own language. Such groups concoct words and phrases that only they, and not outsiders, are meant to understand. They also sometimes appropriate a word or a phrase with a generally understood meaning in the outside world and use it, intra-group, to convey a totally different meaning.

It is well recognized that baseball players, rodeo hands, con men, gypsies, soldiers of fortune, jazz musicians, computer freaks — these and other groups feel that it is their inalienable right to create and use their own variety of sub-language.

Each of these argots is, of course, devised for the purpose of conveying one specific meaning to the members of its particular group — and a totally different, or incomprehensible meaning to an outsider.

It would indeed be discriminatory, and extremely politically incorrect, to deny this basic right and privilege to politicians.

Once I was confused, even as millions of Americans are confused today. But luckily I ran across a tattered copy of a small booklet entitled: "A Taxpayer's Guide to the Language of Politics." It seems to have been developed by a small, anonymous think tank in Washington. It has greatly improved my ability to comprehend many news stories about political matters, the same stories that once baffled and frustrated me.

Just a brief sampling of the wisdom contained in the "Guide" may be of benefit to some perplexed readers. I list a few of the basic definitions:

REDUCING THE DEFICIT: A sternly-worded statement that some day, at some future time, we are going to straighten up and fly right on this debt thing. Never mention a specific date or a specific amount. Administer such statements as often as needed, to reduce the patient's anxiety.

SHARED SACRIFICE: This means everybody in there working together. Congressmen get a base annual wage of a measly, skimpy $129,500 a year. The average American worker receives a lavish, munificent $19,082. We want to share with you!

SOLVING THE CRISIS: This is a government takeover of anything.

SOAKING THE RICH: Increasing taxes on two-income families earning over $20,000 a year.

INVESTMENT IN HUMAN CAPITAL: A popular method of creating and expanding bureaucracies.

AS SOON AS HUMANLY POSSIBLE: Probably never.

WITH ALL DUE HASTE: Maybe next year. On second thought, make that possibly next year.

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT: When all else fails, talk this up to keep the natives from getting restless.

THE BELTWAY: The traffic loop encircling the city of Washington. It is supposed to mark the geographical dividing line between intelligence and mental incompetence in the U.S., although there is some uncertainty about who is on which side.

Robert Nash is retired and an investor, and has lived in Midland a number of years.

BUDGET SUMMIT: This is a fairly regular entertainment that is supposed to keep the press happy. Do not mention that we have had six budget summits since 1980, during which time the federal deficit has gone up 400 percent.

SPENDING CUT: This is cutting the Social Security outgo by raising taxes on certain people who probably make too much money anyhow. What comes in is more tax money; what goes out is a fairy tale about cutting spending.

BUDGET REDUCTION: A smaller increase than originally projected in some part of next year's budget, which is widely advertised as this year's cut in total spending.

LOBBYISTS: The basic component in the governmental process; their well-being, as they say in Detroit, is "Job One."

TAX INCENTIVE: The chronic, uncontrollable and probably terminal itch among congressmen to raise taxes.

TRANSFER PAYMENT: The basic transaction of 20th century politics. You transfer your vote to me, and I transfer some taxpayer's money to you.

O.P.M.: Outside the Beltway, this means "other peoples' money." To an insider, it is "our party's money."

ACCOUNTABILITY: The meaning of this word is unknown, and any attempted accountability is considered a very serious offense, with severe penalties attached.

TRICKLE-DOWN ECONOMICS: When this trickles down, the people on the bottom are forced to practice more economy.

THE PRIVATE SECTOR: Where the money comes from, dummy.

THE FORGOTTEN MIDDLE CLASS: A good phrase to use during campaigns. Never try to explain it. It is an abstraction like "Mother's apple pie" and "the good old days."

REINVENTING INDUSTRIAL POLICY: A plan whereby those wonderful folks in Washington can do the same incredible job for General Motors, et al, that they have done in budget management.

ENERGY TAX: The noble effort by our beloved office holders to assure that the oil patch gets what it deserves.

ENTITLEMENTS: A basic source of job security for incumbents.

CONTRIBUTION: We never say "taxes" when we can stir up another euphemism.

There is more. But you get the idea. You must interpret "political news" from the standpoint of the speaker's true language. Is he speaking your language, or his? In the immortal words of Pliny the Younger:

"In lingo veritas."

You may cry a lot more. But you will understand things better.

Readers' views on: Candidate's abortion commercial

Sex education may stem abortion need

I am appalled at the television ads shown by the singleminded Senate candidate. The result will surely be a backlash that he is not wanting.

Nobody in this country that I know of is required to have an abortion. Certainly men do not even have that option. I wonder what their fuss is about? How could one fault any decision a woman makes on such a personal issue? Those who are against abortion are not having them, and nobody is questioning their choice. Many daughters, wives, sisters and girlfriends of self-righteous men, such as this candidate, are having the abortions while other women who are less important to this candidate, are having and keeping their babies. If the situation were reversed this may not be such a political hot potato.

Maybe some sexuality education would stem the need for so many abortions. Since sex could be a death sentence one would think sexuality education would be firmly integrated in the public education system. If we caught AIDS by shaking hands, parents would be screaming for hand shaking etiquette and gloves in the public schools. It makes no sense that they are not screaming for sexuality education. After all shaking hands is learned. Sexuality is a normal human condition from birth. If you checked this candidate out he is probably adamantly against sexuality education.

I refuse to watch stations that air such commercials. That will limit me to the kids program on the eduoational station or C-Span and I am sure I will be better off.

Commercial shows what's done for vote

I would like to address the commercial by Steve Hopkins that is appearing on our TVs. This commercial is for shock value and to stir one's emotions. It's amazing what people will do to get a vote. I must say the shock of seeing these aborted babies was enough to move me to cry because I cannot have children of my own, but I do have a 10-year old stepdaughter and we have discussed many things including this commercial, which she is not allowed to see. There is a big difference between the real thing and Hollywood.

I almost broke my neck the other day and had to hang up on a potential employer to run to the TV so she would not see this commercial. She beat me to the TV and turned it off! What I am concerned about are the parents that have younger children. In this last week I have been enlightened by the fact that you cannot be with a child and supervise every minute of the day.

If this display made me have nightmares I can imagine that it would also affect a 6-, 7- or 8-year-old or even older the same way. People are always saying "If you don't want your child to watch a bad movie turn it off or change the channel!" Easy, but these commercials are so short and you never know for sure what time of day they will be appearing. If Steve Hopkins thinks this is so important, maybe he should spend a little more money and do 30-minute commercials like Ross Perot. That way parents could make sure their little ones would be protected and turn the channel.

As for abortion, I am not God and I was not put on this earth to judge anyone. What another woman does with her body and her baby is her business not mine. Only God can judge.

Like it or not, abortion commercial is correct

Boy am I shocked! I don't understand why so many people are so upset about the commercial on abortion that was aired recently. Sure, I realize that it was graphic, but that is what actually happens every time an abortion is performed. Like it or not, that is what actually happens.

Parents, when your kids go out to watch a movie do you ever wonder what they are seeing? Most movies nowadays are becoming more and more violent and graphic. From personal experience, I can assure you that what is showed in the movie theatre is much worse than that commercial. Why aren't people upset over that? I guess they don't mind letting their children watch people blowing other people's brains out, but show them a baby being slaughtered in the womb and they will be on your back like an old wet hen.

I don't see what the big deal is. What was showed in that commercial happens to 4,400 innocent children every day. Don't you think it's time that we wake up?

We need notice that commercial will air

In reference to Candidate Hopkins' anti-abortion commercial, I would like to express my anger and dismay in our laws for allowing such material on the public airways. Putting the abortion issues aside, it is not appropriate to show such material during the "Prime Time" hours (if at all) as it was on Wednesday, March 17. Although a warning of "sensitive material" precedes the commercial for a few seconds, if a parent is not actually in the room during the warning, children like my 10-year-old are exposed to material that I, as a parent, feel is not appropriate.

It is my understanding that the television stations do not have the option of refusing to air the commercial because it is shown under the disguise of a political commercial, rather than as an anti-abortion commercial. I believe the well being of our children and a parent's right to control what our children view without sitting with them every second the TV is on is by far more important than Hopkins' right to advertise his beliefs in such a manner. I urge all residents of the Permian Basin to express their dismay to Candidate Hopkins, whose address is P.O. Box 777, Burnett, Texas. If this commercial must be shown, the public should be given notice that it will be aired several times during the hour preceding the commercial. Then we can at least plan ahead and turn the TV off before leaving our children alone while watching TV.

People object to ad because it is true

I don't know whether to laugh or vomit when I see the sudden surge of sanctimonious hypocrisy being exhibited by the people being terribly offended by the political commercial on TV showing aborted fetuses. Don't they believe in freedom of choice or speech?

Where are they when the gory war news, pictures of dead and starving around the world, crash victims, bloody violence in movies and on TV, rioting with beatings and looting, and people trapped in burning buildings are being shown? Are they offended by this explicit death and violence? Is it tasteless? Should it also be prohibited?

I suspect that the main objection is that it shows people the real results of an abortion and these terribly offended people by and large support abortion. They would prefer the general public not know how sickening an abortion can be. They prefer it simply be thought of as an alternate method of birth control.

No one in his right mind can condone violence such as the killing of the abortion doctor in Florida. Assuming this is true, how can the pro-abortionists then get so upset over this killing and still be so self righteous about killing an unborn baby?

In my opinion this kind of person does not make decisions based on any moral convictions but instead on expediency and what makes them feel good at the time.

Do we really need an abortion clinic in Midland? Do we want to support it with our taxes?

R.B. Wacker

If it's horrible to see, isn't it horrible to do?

I am not a Christian fanatic. I am a Christian. And, I am deeply saddened at where I see our country headed.

I am for choice — the choice to use birth control before conception occurs. Once conception occurs, then choice is no longer an option — it has already been made. We, in this country, are using abortion as birth control. It is appalling. We, as a country, were appalled when Hitler killed millions. Yet, we, as a country, are killing millions, and what do we call it? Legal.

Everyone is in an uproar over Stephen Hopkins' campaign ads that show aborted fetuses. Stop and think — if it's too horrible to see, don't you also think that it's too horrible to do?

And, lastly, in regards to Stanley W. Dupree Jr.'s letter concerning the separation of church and state. "The matters of church and state should act separately and never interact together" was not what was meant by our founding fathers, as Dupree stated. Our founding fathers would probably roll over in their graves to see how we have manipulated and reinterpreted their goals for our country as a great nation.

They believed that there should not be a government-run religion — that we should have the freedom to practice the religion of individual choice. They had left a country that had a government-organized and mandated religion and they wanted to insure that it did not happen in America. That is what was meant by what we call separation of church and state.

If they were never to "interact," why would our country be founded on the principles of God, why would the 10 Commandments be etched on the walls of the Supreme Court, and why would we be "one country under God?"

Just look where we have gone since we have begun to separate from God. Let's look in the past 30 years (approximately the time we took prayer out of the public schools). We have had, and continue to have, major increases in drug use, alcohol abuse, child abuse, teenage pregnancy, AIDS, broken homes, crimes of all types. Also, homelessness, unemployment, and horrendous national deficit. Have we prospered?

Suzie Carroll

Hopkins should run campaign politically

With unemployment at an alarming percentage, and the homeless wondering what happened to their little piece of the American dream. When every day children are murdering children, and children are having children in record numbers. While teens wander the streets aimlessly with no dreams of their own, and so many of the working class unable to get proper medical care, I am appalled at that Stephen Hopkins has the gall to run his senatorial campaign with such distaste and shortsightedness.

How many times must we see these "political" ads before we all become desensitized by their images the way we have to all the violence we view and listen to daily?

While my beliefs on this issue may not be the same as those of Hopkins, can anyone in all seriousness think that they will persuade people to embrace his cause?

Until Hopkins is impregnated by rape, feels the trauma and guilt of giving up a child to adoption, or the frustration of knowing one more child to feed and clothe will be impossible, I suggest he run his campaign on "political" not "moral" issues in his ads. I would guess when the FCC wrote its rules on this issue it antieipated that a little good taste and integrity would be used.

There is but one entity I need answer to when I leave this earth, and I don't believe he will be judging an entire lifetime on this one issue. Hopkins' ads make me judge him on only one.

Midlanders: Love is No. 1 neighbor

The Texas Golf Association was formed in 1906. Within a year or two the evolution of the Prince of Good Fellows surfaced, principally to select yearly one of its members, who was kind and considerate, courteous, friendly, competitive, humble in victory and gracious in defeat.

Our neighbor is not a golfer; however, he exemplifies all these qualities in his contacts of everyday living. He is a dedicated and loyal employee of the Reporter-Telegram. He truly has princely qualities — a man to ride the river with.

This next door neighbor of ours is a good gardener, in season brings in onions, tomatoes, squash, etc. He also is an excellent outdoor barbecue expert. His wife does a marvelous job with beans with German sausage, and he makes the best sourdough biscuits. When they bring over a healthy helping of brisket, ribs, etc., those biscuits are still warm and spread with real butter. Makes one feel mighty special.

But far beyond these and other neighborly acts, here is the exceptionally helpful thing he does for us. A few years ago, one cold and icy morning, I went out to pick up the morning Reporter-Telegram. He evidently saw me slipping around and decided I was too old and uncertain on my feet to be doing that. Since that day, he began coming over and putting the paper near our front door. Since then we placed securely footed handrails at the exterior doors. The one at the front door projects about two or three inches from the brick wall, just right to hold the folded papers. It is there every morning. I just open the door, reach out to get it; not necessary to step out of the house.

Now can you fault us for naming him our neighbor "The Prince?" By the way his name is Furd Love. "Love," how aptly named.

My wife for the past 73 years joins in this letter of appreciation.

O'Neal leads Magic to franchise record win

Associated Press

■ NBA Roundup

ORLANDO, Fla. — Shaquille O'Neal had 27 points and 17 rebounds to power the Orlando Magic to their 32nd win, a franchise record for victories in a season, as they defeated the New Jersey Nets, 98-84.

O'Neal scored eight straight points during a stretch when the Magic opened an 85-72 lead.

Scott Skiles returned from a four-game layoff with a shoulder separation to contribute 21 points, 9 rebounds and 6 assists for Orlando, which improved its record to 32-34. The fourth-year team's best previous finish was 31-51 in 1991.

New Jersey, playing its third consecutive game without leading scorer Drazen Petrovic, trailed 68-62 after three quarters and was out of synch offensively most of the last period.

The Nets scored only nine points in the first seven minutes of the quarter, none by Derrick Coleman, the team's second-leading scorer. Coleman's driving layup cut Orlando's lead to 88-80 with 1:57 left, but New Jersey couldn't get any closer.

Rafael Addison led the Nets with 19 points. Chris Morris had 17 in a reserve role, while Coleman finished with 16 points and 10 rebounds.

Orlando led most of the second half and got 11 points from O'Neal in the fourth quarter. The 7-foot-1 center hit 12 of 17 shots from the field and also blocked three shots.

Hawks 118, Heat 106

ATLANTA — Dominique Wilkins scored 37 points, his eighth 30-plus point effort in 10 games, as the surging Atlanta Hawks won for the 10th time in 11 games, over the Miami Heat.

It was the fourth consecutive victory for the Hawks and their eighth in succession at home. The Heat, in their fifth season, fell to 0-9 in Atlanta.

Wilkins scored 17 points in the second period, sparking the Hawks to a 60-43 lead. He made 12 of 21 shots and 12 of 13 free throws.

Kevin Willis broke out of a slump with 22 points on 10 of 14 shooting. He also had 16 rebounds before leaving in the fourth quarter with a strained right calf muscle. He had made only 6 of 23 shots and scored a total of 12 points in his previous two games.

Mookie Blaylock had 14 points and 16 assists, while Stacey Augmon scored 19 points and Adam Keefe 16.

Glen Rice led Miami with 19 points, Brian Shaw had 18 and Rony Seikaly and Steve Smith scored 17 apiece. The Heat lost for the third time in four games.

Atlanta improved to 36-32, the first time in two years it has been four games above .500.

The Hawks, who had 31 assists, are 16-2 this season when they have at least 30 assists in a game.

Nuggets 123, Pacers 106

DENVER — Reggie Williams scored 29 points, Chris Jackson added 25 and Dikembe Mutombo set a team single-season record for blocked shots to lead the Denver Nuggets over the Indiana Pacers.

Denver was in control nearly all the way, and only a 22-point first half by Reggie Miller kept the Pacers within striking distance. Denver led 59-52 at the half, but Miller cooled off, getting only four more points in the second half.

Jackson scored Denver's first 11 points in the third quarter as the Nuggets pulled to a 79-62 lead with 5:10 remaining in the period.

The Pacers made a mild run in the fourth period, cutting the Nuggets' lead to 89-84 with 10:14 left. But Denver went on a 29-15 spurt run that boosted its lead to 118-99 with 45.3 seconds remaining.

Mutombo had eight of Denver's 12 blocked shots, plus 15 rebounds and 19 points. This raised his season total for blocked shots to 229, surpassing the team record of 227 set by Wayne Cooper in the 1985-86 season.

Denver's front line of LaPhonso Ellis, who had 17 rebounds, Williams and Mutombo outrebounded Indiana's front three 42-19. The same trio outscored the Pacer front three 61-27.

Denver's edge in rebounds was 60-43.

Aside from Miller, the Pacers got 15 points apiece from Detlef Schrempf, Vern Fleming and Sam Mitchell.

Bucks 125, Kings 105

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Brad Lohaus scored a career-high 34 points and the Milwaukee Bucks used a dominating third quarter to celebrate the return of Moses Malone with a victory over the Sacramento Kings.

Lohaus made 15 of 22 shots, including four 3-pointers, and Eric Murdock added 16 points for Milwaukee, which led 87-75 entering the fourth quarter after outscoring the Kings 21-2 during the first 6:27 of the third quarter.

Malone, 38, the NBA's fourth all-time leading scorer, made his first appearance of the season at the beginning of the second quarter and finished with 11 points and five rebounds while playing 13 minutes.

Malone, playing in his 17th NBA season, was activated Friday after missing the first 66 games of the season following herniated disk surgery last November.

Walt Williams scored a team-high 30 points for Sacramento and Wayman Tisdale added 17 points for the Kings.

Trailing by three points at halftime, Milwaukee, which ended a five-game road losing streak, began the third quarter with a 14-0 run and built its cushion to 71-61 with 5:32 left in the period.

Sacramento, meanwhile, missed its first 10 shots of third quarter and committed six turnovers before Spud Webb's 19-foot jumper gave Sacramento its first field goal of the period with 5:16 left in the quarter.

Malone's quick five points and three rebounds propelled the Bucks to a brief 41-38 lead with 8:20 left before halftime.

Sacramento quickly regained its lead and built it to 52-47 after Webb made technical foul shots following consecutive violations against Jon Barry and Milwaukee coach Mike Dunleavy with 4:01 left in the second quarter.

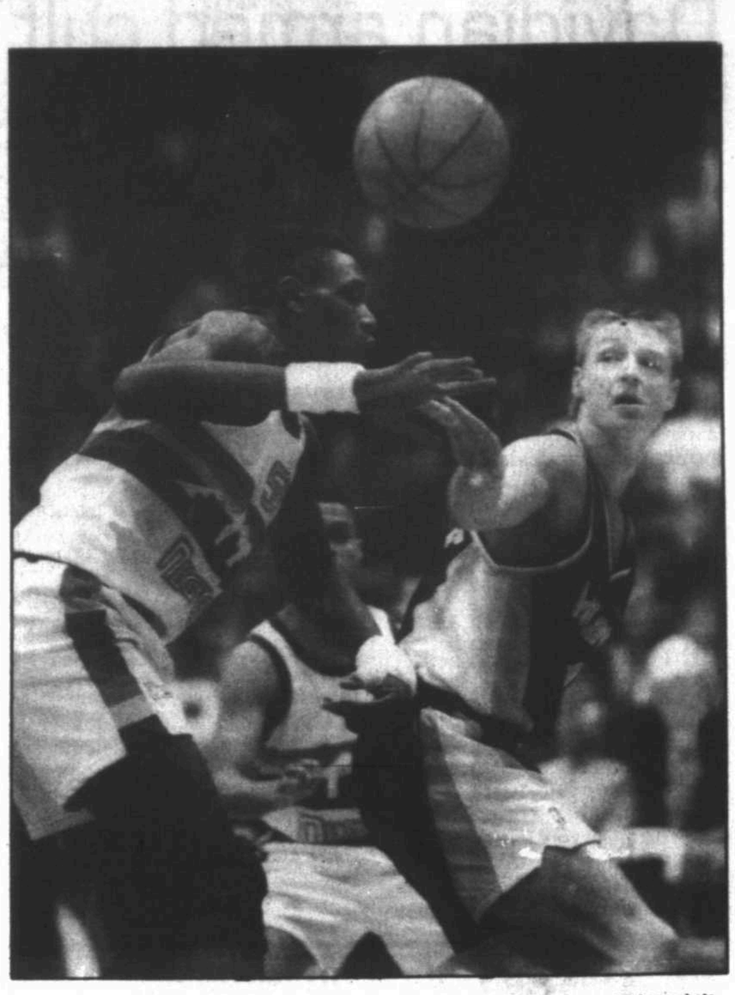

SuperSonics 112, Clippers 108

SEATTLE — Ricky Pierce scored 30 points as the Seattle SuperSonics held off the Los Angeles Clippers.

It was the Clippers' 19th consecutive loss on the Sonics court.

Seattle led 103-90 with 3:49 left when Danny Manning and Mark Jackson led an 18-6 run as the Clippers pulled to 109-108 on Manning's 3-point basket with 17.6 seconds left.

LEE: Rebs forge tie in 5th

ended the game with eight strikeouts, but his curveball showed rust early, when he hit two batters.

Lee made a run at a comeback to preserve its 12-game winning streak in the seventh, as Kirk Ulrich singled to right and went all the way to third when the ball went through Lonnie Jones' legs. Paul Fuentes followed with a walk off Donnie Bivins (5-0) and stole second, but Bivins shut down the next three Reb batters to preserve the victory.

The loss was Lee's first in district play and dropped the Rebels (15-3, 4-1) into second place behind Abilene Cooper (11-7, 4-0). Permian is in third place, ½-game behind the Rebels at 3-1 (7-7 overall).

Bivins, a side-arming right-handed senior, ended the game by allowing five hits and one earned run, striking out four and walking one.

"We just didn't compete well toward the end of the game and they came ready to play. Bivins did a good job of keeping us off stride," Lee head coach Jesse Benavidez said.

Lee tied the game in the fourth when, with David Galvan on third and Kevin Jordan on second, Sean McIntosh pulled off a sacrifice squeeze. Bivins tried to field the bunt that scored Galvan, and his diving throw to Parker at the plate went behind the Permian catcher, allowing Jordan to score.

The Panthers re-took the lead in the fifth when Cohlmia walked, took second on a Popejoy sacrifice, went to third on a Graham single and scored on a wild pitch.

The Rebels tied the game again in the bottom of the fifth as Julian Urquidez doubled and Fuentes, inserted to run for Urquidez, was sacrificed to third by Brian Graham and driven home by a Jason Baker sac fly.

Bulldogs batter OHS to go 2-2 in league

Staff report

ODESSA — The Midland High Bulldogs evened their District 4-5A baseball record at 2-2 here Saturday, taking an 11-1 victory over the Odessa High Bronchos.

MHS (6-8 overall) was led offensively by Chad Benson, Tim McLaughlin and Mike Melzer, who all had three hits with a triple in the 10-run rule game. Jason Minica earned his first pitching victory of the season by allowing just one run in five innings of work.

OHS fell to 3-12 overall and 0-5 in district. MHS returns to league play Tuesday, when its hosts San Angelo at 4 p.m. in Angels Stadium.

Earnhardt primed for first win

Associated Press

DARLINGTON, S.C. — In the five years he's won NASCAR Winston Cup championships, Dale Earnhardt's never waited more than six races before winning.

The current series point leader has that championship look in his eyes again after an off-season in 1992, and Sunday's TranSouth Financial 500 at Darlington Raceway is race No. 5 of 1993.

■ NASCAR

Earnhardt will start from the pole in the 39-car field by virtue of his standing in the points because both scheduled rounds of qualifying were rained out. He fully expected to start from the pole anyway after running what were easily the fastest laps in practice Friday before the rain came.

"I wish we could have qualified because we ran so good," Earnhardt said. "I think we would have had a real good shot at the pole. We might have even broken the record. We broke it in practice, but that doesn't count. ... But we'll be OK for the race and this track has been good to us before."

Earnhardt has won on what is generally considered NASCAR's toughest track — a 1.366-mile, egg-shaped oval — seven times, second only to David Pearson, who won 10 times at Darlington.

So far this season, the 41-year-old North Carolinian, who won just once and finished 12th in the points in 1992, has finished second twice, 10th and 11th.

"We're real close to getting it right," Earnhardt said. "We could have won a couple of those races, and we're going to win one soon. I'd be real happy if it was Sunday."

Rusty Wallace, who has been the hottest driver over the past three races — finishing first, second and third and moving to third in the standings behind Earnhardt and runner-up Geoff Bodine — said, "Earnhardt's strong, no doubt about that. His car seems to be getting better and better and better. I think he's the guy to beat (Sunday)."

But Wallace isn't about to concede anything to his old friend and longtime rival.

"I'm confident because our test (last week) went so good down here," Wallace added. "The track has changed now, so I'm just going to go out there and run and run and run."

Kyle Petty, off to a somewhat disappointing start after being the hottest driver in the second half of 1992, will start 15th Sunday.

Bill Elliott, who won this race last year, is off to a slow start this season and will start 28th.

Fernando remains flawless on Baltimore hill

Associated Press

■ Spring Training

Fernando Valenzuela is still perfect.

Valenzuela kept his ERA at 0.00 with two more innings Saturday, giving him 14 shutout innings in five games for the Baltimore Orioles this spring.

Pitching on just two days rest, the 32-year-old left-hander helped himself with a pickoff in the seventh. Then, after giving up two singles to open the eighth, he retired the final three batters he faced in a 4-1 victory over St. Louis.

"He made some good pitches when he needed them, which we're getting pretty accustomed to," pitching coach Dick Bosman said.

Valenzuela is trying to earn a spot as the Orioles' fifth starter. Mark Williamson, also competing for the job, worked six innings Saturday and has a 1.00 ERA in 18 innings.

"I felt pretty good today," Valenzuela said. "Right now I think I have a good chance of returning to the major leagues, but I don't want to put pressure on myself. I'll just see what happens."

Valenzuela's final exhibition appearance will be Thursday against Toronto.

Also making a good impression Saturday was Philadelphia pitcher Tommy Greene. He was limited to 12 starrts last year because of shoulder trouble.

Greene pitched five innings of one-hit ball in a 1-0 win over Toronto. He also scored the only run after singling off Jack Morris.

Greene came into camp as the fifth starter in manager Jim Fregosi's rotation. In five games, Greene has given up one earned run, 10 hits and two walks in 20 innings.

"Tommy had an outstanding slider and a good fastball," Fregosi said. "He's had experience relieving and will start that way unless Ben Rivera (fourth starter) isn't ready. Tommy's penciled in to start on April 24 and 29."

Meanwhile, Bo Jackson and Mo Vaughn again swung hot bats.

Jackson doubled and drove in two runs as the Chicago White Sox beat Texas 9-1.

Vaughn homered for Boston in a 9-4 loss to Minnesota, giving him four home runs and 15 RBIs in his last seven games. He is batting .455 with a .782 slugging percentage this spring.

Spring Notebook

Even a new team needs a few guys who have been around a little bit.

The Florida Marlins, preferring not to begin the season with just two starters who won a major league game last year, acquired pitchers Chris Hammond and Luis Aquino on Saturday.

The Marlins obtained Hammond from Cincinnati for utility infielder Gary Scott and a player to be named later. Two hours later, Florida purchased Aquino's contract from Kansas City for an undisclosed amount. Both pitchers are 27.

Hammond, 7-10 with a 4.21 ERA in 28 games with Cincinnati last year, will take his place in the rotation alongside Jack Armstrong and 45-year-old Charlie Hough. Aquino, who was 3-8 with a 4.52 ERA in 15 games for the Royals last year, can start or relieve.

GONE FISHIN': Andy Van Slyke didn't catch any bass or trout, but almost hooked himself a right fielder Saturday.

Van Slyke was in the Pirates' bullpen, showing off his casting stroke with a fishing pole, when a ball hit by teammate Kevin Young came nearby. Indians right fielder Thomas Howard came close to being snagged in the line, and the ball went for a triple.

SOME DAY, SOME WAY: Tripp Cromer, heir apparent to Cardinals shortstop Ozzie Smith, was sent back to the minors as St. Louis reduced its number of players in camp to 33.

The 25-year-old Cromer impressed manager Joe Torre, but he's got nowhere to go as long as Smith stays healthy.

"He's already a big league shortstop," Torre said of Cromer, "but he's got to play."

George Kissell, Cardinals field coordinator, said Cromer will also play second and third base.

JUST CATCH IT: Detroit center fielder Milt Cuyler, coming back from an injury, had his problems on defense Saturday. He got turned around and let Randy Milligan's fly ball get over his head for a triple. The next batter, Reggie Sanders, hit a grounder in front of Cuyler. But when Cuyler wasn't aggressive in coming in to field the ball, Sanders legged it into a double. That brought a chorus of boos from the crowd of 7,166 at Marchant Stadium.

Seven golfers in good shape at Sawgrass TPC

Associated Press

■ Players Championship

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. — Two short birdie putts Nick Price missed on the back nine set the stage for a last-round shootout featuring some of golf's top attractions.

They weren't exactly mistakes — those two 4-footers that went astray — the PGA champion from Zimbabwe insisted Saturday after a hard-won 71 in the third round of the $2 million Players Championship.

With a 54-hole total of 203, 13 under par on the TPC at Sawgrass, he still has the lead — just as he has all the way in the annual championship of golf's touring pros.

"I didn't hurt myself," he said.

But that remains to be seen.

And Price knows it.

The little putting lapses opened the gates to a host of challengers with world-class credentials.

Greg Norman, Bernhard Langer, Mark O'Meara, Paul Azinger, Payne Stewart and the maverick Ken Green, a frequently fined critic of golf's establishment, positioned themselves within three strokes of the lead.

"We'll see some real fireworks on the back nine tomorrow," Price said, looking ahead to Sunday's final 18 holes of the chase for a $360,000 winner's check.

"It could be a real shoot-out," Price said, then possibly dropped a hint about the player most on his mind.

'The Shark has grown some more teeth," Price said, referring to Norman.

King moves into tie

Associated Press

■ LPGA Dinah Shore

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. — Betsy King, shooting for her third Dinah Shore victory, had a 5-under-par 67 Saturday to surge into a three-way tie for the lead.

King, the only one of the leaders to break par for the third round, moved to 4-under-par 212 after three rounds.

Both Dawn Coe-Jones of Canada and Helen Alfredsson of Sweden shot 72 over the Mission Hills Country Club course to tie for the lead.

Going into the final round of the tournament, 13 players are bunched within four shots of each other at the top.

The 37-year-old King, a winner of 28 LPGA events, was the champion of the Dinah Shore, one of the LPGA's majors, in 1987 and 1990.

She said she hoped her putting would be as good for the final round as it was Saturday, and that her shots would be more accurate.

"The key to my round was putting," King said. "I need to hit the ball better on Sunday, but I would love to putt the way I did today. If I do, I think I can win."

Coe-Jones, a winner just once since joining the tour in 1983, led for much of the third round, but slipped on the back nine after making the turn at 6-under for the tournament. She three-putted No. 17 to drop to 4-under.

Zembriski, Charles lead seniors

Associated Press

■ PGA Seniors

KINGWOOD — Walt Zembriski shot a 4-under 68 and Bob Charles a 2-under 70 on Saturday to share a one-stroke lead at 139 after two rounds of the Senior PGA Doug Sanders Kingwood Celebrity Classic.

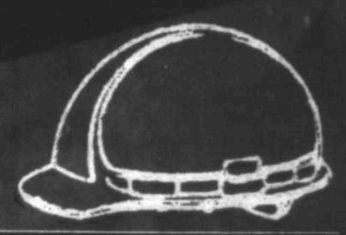

Bob Murphy, Kermit Zarley, Bobby Nichols, Harold Henning and first-round leader Jim Albus all were just one stroke back at 4-under 140 going into Sunday's final round.

Zembriski, looking for his first Senior Tour win since 1989, had seven birdies and three bogeys for his 68, low round of the day. Charles, a winner twice last year, had five birdies, a bogey and a double bogey for his 70.

PC(MS) DOS III: Prerequisites: DOS II or a thorough understanding of advanced DOS commands. Topics include an introduction to batch files, advanced batch file techniques, creating and using menus, customizing system and using built-in text editor, Fee $60; Paul Pause', instructor; Tuesday, 8:30-11:30 a.m.

LEARNING WORDPERFECT FOR WINDOWS v. 5.2: INTERMEDIATE: This class explores more of WordPerfect for Windows editing and formatting functions, features and tools. Topics include using the WordPerfect File Manager, searching for and replacing text, creating, editing and selecting button bars, using the thesaurus and using Grammatik. Fee $60; Paul H. Pause', instructor; Wednesday, 1:30-4:30 p.m.

CARBONATE PLATFORMS: Oriented toward both younger and mature explorationists and developmental geologists. Oil and gas and lead-zinc mineralization widely occur in carbonate platforms — large masses or sheets of thick pure limestone-dolomite formed in low latitudes from clear tropical marine water. This course will examine the inceptions and development of various platforms of this type from North America, Australia, Europe and Africa. Principles of sequence stratigraphy will be employed to describe platform profiles and elucidate geologic history. Fee $195; James Lee Wilson, instructor; Thursday, 7-10 p.m. and Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

The formal dining room in the McDowell home featues a hutch which has ceramic spice drawers.

The McDowells' kitchen features pink tile, blue countertops and a skylight that brightens the whole room.

PARADE OF HOMES

Spacious Living

Step into the home of Ken and Cindy McDowell, 4003 Blakemore Court, and you step into a world of sunshine. The spacious living area of the home is generously supplied with windows that let in the warm West Texas sunshine. That warmth is echoed by the hardwood floors and the spacious atmosphere. A fireplace in the living room also opens into the adjoining den area.

The living area, which is decorated in an Oriental style and highlighted by a six-panel coromandel (folding screen), flows into the formal dining room, which also has hardwood floors, that adds to the feeling of warmth and welcome with its hutch with ceramic spice drawers.

Parade of Homes, sponsored by the Midland Junior Woman's Club, will be April 25. Tickets — which are $10 — will be available April 1 from any MJWC member or by calling 694-3212 or 683-9791. No children under age 12 are admitted and no tickets are sold at the door. Proceeds from the event will benefit Special Olympics, DARE, ADAPT and MADD.

Beyond the living area is the sunroom, which the couple added when they bought the house, Mrs. McDowell said. This room is furnished in pink and white to further emphasize the open, airy feel of the home.

The sunroom opens out to the patio/pool area, which is one of the home's two back yards. Safety is one of the key reasons for this division. "We have two separate yards, since we're on a cul-de-sac," Mrs. McDowell said. "One has the pool, one has the kids' play yard."

The pool itself is L-shaped, with a shallow play platform for children and an oversized spa. The pool deck is done in a herringbone pattern of Pavex brick.

The living area of the McDowell home, 4003 Blakemore Court, is decorated in rich red and navy blue in an Oriental style. The fireplace also warms the den, which is through the doors on each side of the fireplace.

A pink and white motif decorates the sunroom. The McDowells added this part of the home for their family.

Pastel colors and large windows bring a bright, sunny look to this child's room in the McDowell home.

HAVE YOU HEARD?

'A Few Good Men' to open at MCT

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

You've seen the movie! Now you'll want to see the play! Midland Community Theatre's production of "A Few Good Men" opens April 16 at Theatre Midland.

McKnight-Harrison

First playing on Broadway, the military courtroom drama is riveting. Two Marines defend the honor of the Corps as they are tried for complicity in the death of a fellow Marine at Guantanamo Bay.

Leading an outstanding cast of 20 are petroleum engineer Marc Graham, who plays Lt.j.g. Daniel Kaffee, a young military attorney (the role portrayed by Tom Cruise in the movie version) and Midland attorney Sara Spector as his colleague, Lt. Cmdr. Joanne Galloway (Demi Moore's movie role). Petroleum landman Glen Thomason has the loathsome role of Lt. Col. Nathan Jessep, which earned Jack Nicholson an Academy Award nomination for "Best Supporting Actor."

The playwright, thirtysomething Aaron Sorkin, was only 28 when "A Few Good Men" reached Broadway. He also wrote the screenplay.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY was celebrated throughout Midland at various clubs and establishments, but nowhere with more fun and flair than at Ranchland Hills Country Club's third annual West Texas Irish Bash.

Held in the ballroom, the party began with a western style Irish buffet, combining Irish Stew, Barbecued Brisket and Chicken Fried Steak with Cream Gravy, with a delectable array of vegetables, salads and desserts. And of course, Green Beer was available.

Midland country-western band "Caliche" provided the music for dancing and even entertained with an Irish jig.

For the event, members and their guests were asked to dress casual, western or in green.

Special games and drawings held throughout the evening added to the fun. Prize winners were Don Farris, Sydney Beal, Frank Lanham, Nita Ward, Ceci Westmoreland, Bill Gerkin, Marjory and Hugh Post, Mrs. Ardee Morgan, Dee Wilson, J.K. Lytle, Steven White and Bernice Varner.

The staff also got into the spirit of the occasion. They sported green neckerchiefs and T-shirts, emblazoned with Irish sayings, and a couple of them brought down the house with an impromptu dance to "Acky Breaky Heart."

The Ranchland crowd definitely did not let the parade past them by in their tribute to the patron saint of Ireland.

IN VISITING with Jane Hynd, we learned that a group from St. Luke's United Methodist Church recently returned from a tour of the Holy Land. They joined up with Methodists from other areas for an "Educational Opportunities" trip, which included Jerusalem, Bethlehem, the Sea of Galilee, the Dead Sea, Cairo, the Nile, the Pyramids and the Sphinx.

"Here at home, newspapers have had articles on the problems and shootings in the areas where we were — Egypt, the Golan Heights and Jerusalem," says Jane. "We were always in sight of armed soldiers, but we were so enthralled to be in the places mentioned in the Bible that we did not focus on any possible danger that we might encounter." Later, Jane says, they were told some of the loud sounds they heard were actually the explosion of bombs.

"We were really in another world, an ancient place beyond our imagination," relates Jane. "To mention a few of the places, we visited the Garden Tomb of Jesus, the Wailing Wall with at least a million prayer notes and requests tucked into the crevasses and the Golden Gate, where Jesus will pass through on His return."

In addition to Jane, those making the trip were the Rev. Cletus Beights, Polly and Bert Sanders, Gwendolyn and Jim Ware, Margaret and John Young, Nelda Foster, Faye Leeper and Margaret and Harlan Morgan. They are all extensive travelers and members of the Prime Timers at St. Lukes.

FROM MIDLANDER Henry Murphey comes word that San Angelo's Central High School Class of 1943 will celebrate its 50th graduation anniversary May 21-23. A special invitation is issued to the Classes of 1941, 1942, 1944 and 1945 to join the festivities.

Henry says that he may be contacted at 699-0570 for further details or by anyone who has addresses of other class members.

'Texas Gold' columbine hardy plant

By Deborah A. Benge

Summertime shade! We welcome it, seek it, plant it, rest and relax in it, but too much shade can cause problems in the home landscape. Problems, because the majority of plants known for their striking blossoms prefer sunny locations, causing you to have a somewhat plain shade garden. But now you can have fantastic color in the shade with a native "Texas Gold" columbine.

Benge

Columbines are commonly available through the nursery trade. They are best knows as Colorado's state flower, loving cool weather and mild summers. They do great in Colorado, but in the overbearing heat of the Permian Basin they are weakened, struggle and live a short life.

Until now, the columbine has been less than satisfactory, but a columbine for Texas has come forward — Texas Gold columbine. The scientific name is Aquilegia chryantha, a Texas native perennial wildflower found in the Sierra Vieja Mountains, Davis Mountains and the Big Bend areas of West Texas.

This beautiful Texas native perennial has all of the beauty of the Colorado columbines and more. It has the toughness and ability to tolerate the heat of Texas summers, making it a hardier and much longer-lived columbine.

The elegant, stately beauty of this plant is highlighted by butter yellow blossoms, graceful cups and long, dramatic spurs, all of which are held above the attractive foliage for maximum impact. Occurring on long, branching stems, these flowers also make good cut flower specimens. Long blooming for a perennial, Texas Gold rewards the homeowner with bounteous blossoms from late March through early May. A grouping of several such plants can be breathtaking. A bonus characteristic is the honeysuckle-like fragrance that attracts hummingbirds.

Another bonus characteristic of Texas Gold is its reseeding habit. It will normally send a few new plants up each year so you can expand your gorgeous display.

Texas Gold columbine has certainly proven itself in the Permian Basin as an excellent perennial tough enough to take the heat and shade of our landscapes.

Proper site selection and soil preparation are the most important steps in establishing a breathtaking display of Texas Gold. Site selection in this case means partial shade. An ideal site would be under the canopy of a deciduous tree (drops leaves in fall) as the columbine would then receive what it really needs, sun-dappled or partial shade in the summer and more sunlight in the winter. Wintertime sunlight is important for a healthy set of leaves that will develop in late winter. This good crop of leaves will mean a floriferous plant in the spring and early summer.

Well-drained soils high in organic matter need to be included in the site selection process. Absolutely no constantly wet, poorly drained soils. In bed preparation, add four to six inches of organic matter such as compost, leaves, sphagnum peat moss or rotted hay. Work this organic matter well into the soil.

Prior to planting, one should also incorporate a quality slow-release fertilizer, one in which at least 50 percent of the nitrogen is in a slowly available form. Use at the rate of two pound per 100 square feet of planting area. Each year reapply a slow-release fertilizer high in nitrogen at the same rate in October, December and February to help stimulate foliage production.

Space plants two feet apart at planting to allow room for the foliar base or clump to enlarge as the plant mature. The foliar portion of Texas gold will eventually reach two feet tall.

Then to encourage root development of the columbine while suppressing weeds and conserving soil moisture, simply mulch the bed with a three-inch layer of mulch. Pine needles, shredded bark mulch and straw are all good.

Irrigation requirements for this plant are very similar to those of most other flowers. Specifically, it needs one inch of water per week during the active growing season by a soaking irrigation. Drip irrigation works very well.

Next week we'll talk more about this outstanding perennial that is pure delight to grow. Meanwhile, get down to your local garden center or nursery and ask for the Texas Gold columbine.

DEAR ABBY

Older students learn 'it's never too late'

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is very late, but I want to thank you for some advice I read in your column many years ago.

Van Buren

A man wrote asking if he should go back to college, saying he would be in his 40s by the time he finished. Your answer was wonderful; it was the common sense I needed at the time, so I applied it to my own situation and it has made a tremendous difference in my life.

If you can find that column, please run it again. It could do for others what it did for me. — VIRGINIA VERNON, BERKELEY, CALIF.

DEAR VIRGINIA: I found it:

DEAR ABBY: My son, who has a wife and two children, just received his law degree at age 31. Our whole family is tremendously proud of him, and we have you to thank for it. He said a letter in your column inspired him to return to college and become a lawyer. He shared that letter with us, and I had it framed and presented it to him at his graduation.

Please run it again, Abby. It may inspire others who think it's too late to go back to school, to realize that it's not too late at all. — A FRIEND IN SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR FRIEND: What an upper your letter was! Here's the piece with special congratulations to your son, the lawyer!

DEAR ABBY: I am a 36-year-old college dropout whose lifelong ambition was to be a physician. I have a very good job selling pharmaceutical supplies, but my heart is still in the practice of medicine. I do volunteer work at the local hospital on my time off, and people tell me I would have been a wonderful doctor.

If I go back to college and get my degree, then go to medical school, do my internship and finally get into the practice of medicine, it will take me seven years. But Abby, in seven years I will be 43 years old! What do you think? — UNFULFILLED IN PHILLY

DEAR UNFULFILLED: And how old will you be in seven years if you don't do it?

HOMES: McDowell house designed for family living

(From 1C)

The children's play yard is full of swings, a fort, a gazebo with sandbox and other outdoor toys that children love.

Entry to the play yard is through the family den, another open, airy room. Windowed doors on either side of the fireplace open into the living room area. The den is decorated in a Southwest motif which includes a collection of pottery, glazed tiles, kachina dolls, sculpture and a variety of rock specimens and fossils. A handmade paper "quilt" is hung over the fireplace.

The den also adjoins the huge kitchen, which is the heart of the home. The kitchen decor includes rose tiles, blue countertops and a butcher block table for family meals. A skylight illuminates the area with sunshine.

The home's five bedrooms are decorated in a gracious, comfortable and age-appropriate style. The children's rooms have soft blue carpeting and light walls which soften and reflect sunshine. A bathroom joins the two rooms.

The master bedroom has a country feel, and has an adjoining bathroom. The master bedroom opens directly onto the sunroom.

Off the den area is another bedroom which opens directly onto the sunroom. A guest room with a comfortable feel is ready to welcome visitors.

The home, which covers 5,000 square feel and also has four and a half bathrooms, was customized by the McDowells to fit their family. They have created a warm and comfortable family home.

Educators debate inclusion

■ Experts, advocates of handicapped go head-to-head to decide whether special education pupils can be integrated into regular classrooms.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

On a recent afternoon, a dozen kindergarteners clustered around a goat pen at an Odessa farm. The students lined up and prepared to step up a couple of stairs to pet a bleating lamb. An Odessa High School student noticed one of the kindergarteners, a quiet litte girl sporting a bright red bow on her ponytail, was in a wheelchair and wouldn't be able to step up to pet the lamb.

The high school student, Terry Woods, 18, hopped into the pen, picked up the lamb and held it over the lap of the little girl. She beamed and patted the lamb as all of the youngsters clamored around her to join petting the wooly animal.

The children's teacher, from Houston Elementary School noted that the kindergartener in the wheelchair could walk, but very slowly. "This way she doesn't hold up the other kids," she said.

Woods said bringing the lamb out of the pen was second nature to him. "I saw the wheelchair and knew there must be some way I could work this so that all of the kids could take part," he said.

Woods said he has grown accustomed to finding ways to help students with disabilities tour the farm operated by OHS agricultural students.

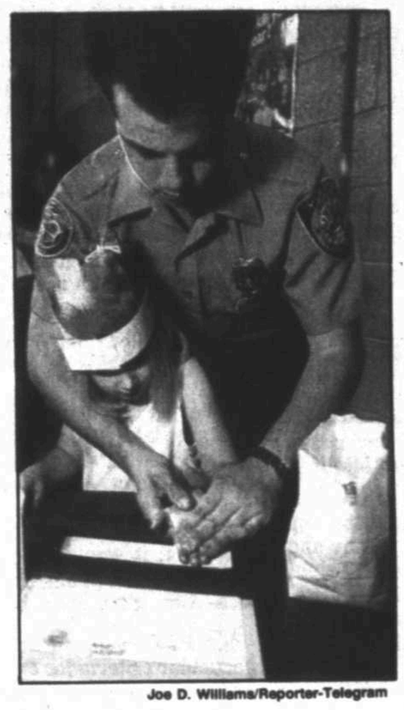

While the solution seemed simple, finding ways to include students with physical and mental handicaps into regular classrooms isn't always so easily solved.

National education experts and advocates for the handicapped have gone head-to-head in debating whether special education pupils can be included into the regular classroom, a concept know as "inclusion."

"People need to be educated on the value of inclusion and the evils of segregation," said Ray L. Unterbrink, executive director of MARC (Midland Association for Retarded Citizens).

"Simply put, the issue is whether schools will

31st snake show honors hunters, teaches safety

By Michael Kashgarian

BIG SPRING — Eleven-year-old Josh Eveland said he liked playing tricks on rattlesnakes. Moments earlier, Josh eagerly dangled a balloon, attached to a fishing rod, amid dozens of the striking snakes.

But a few hours earlier the Midland boy expressed apprehension to his father about being near the poisonous reptiles.

Was he still afraid?

"No, as long as they're in there," Josh said, pointing to a enclosed pit of rattlesnakes.

Josh, his older brother and parents, were among those who attended the 31st Annual Big Spring Rattlesnake Roundup on Saturday.

"It was something different. We've never been to a roundup before," said Josh's father, Tom Eveland, who videotaped various exhibits.

Others were regulars to the event that was estimated to attract about 8,000 this year.

"We come here every year and look around," said Howard County Judge Ben Lockhart, along with his wife, Sandee.

Although Lockhart said he likes to keep his distance to the animals, he did partake in a snake race, prodding his slithering reptile with a pole.

"One of the AMBUCS conned me into it," he said. AMBUCS, or the American Business Club of Big Spring, sponsors the event.

"I'm not going to do it (snake race) anymore. I'll leave snakes alone if they leave me alone," Lockhart said.

The snake show, which began Friday and ends today, also featured safety demonstrations, milking the creatures

Woman puts literary fiction into mainstream

By Katherine Poteet
Staff writer

A former Midlander is doing her part to bring literary fiction back into the mainstream of America's reading habits.

"There is so much generic, purple prose out there," said Jane Howle, publisher at Baskerville Publishing Inc., in Dallas. "Genre literature — mystery, romance, action-packed adventure. I wanted to get well-written literary fiction back into circulation with the masses of generic books."

To do that, she founded Baskerville in December 1991 as a way for struggling authors, several of whom she knew, to get their work published.

"I know a lot of really good authors and I was in a position to invest in something like this," she said. "It's my little contribution to literature."

Ms. Howle's move into the world of publishing was totally new to her. After graduating from Lee High School in 1969 and the University of Texas in 1972, she went to work at the San Antonio Light as a reporter. She later went into real estate, establishing a real estate agency and an insurance agency in Dallas, both of which she still owns.

"I have never worked in publishing," she said. "I was a trainee publisher, I guess."

Despite her lack of experience, Ms. Howle said her five-person Dallas staff is doing well.

"We have an office here, in New York and Dublin and we are doing extremely well," she said. "We are handling as much fiction as the bigger publishing houses. Our reviews have been wonderful."

Of the 12 titles listed in the their catalog, three of the authors are from Texas, Ms. Howle's home state.

One is "A Place in Mind," written by Dulce Moore, describing growing up in West Texas during the Great Depression. Ms. Howle called Ms. Moore a "wonderful author," and the book was listed in "Review of Texas Books" as an Editor's Choice.

The other two books are "White

Here's hoping woman's dream comes true

Las Vegas has been called a lot of things, but perhaps the word that most often creeps into the definition is "dreams."

Like those who play the Texas Lottery, people who flock to Las Vegas dream of someday striking it rich, whether it be on the blackjack tables or via the thousands of slot machines that dot the various casinos. The lure of big dollars is always there, lurking in the back of one's mind.

But it is not just the gambling.

There is an intangible sense of hope that filters throughout the city, almost like a mystery "presence" that lingers in the atmosphere. Anything seems possible. Maybe it's the glitter and bright lights, perhaps it is the sound of money changing hands, but for whatever reason, visitors to Las Vegas dream big. Sure, the dreams are often unrealistic, but so what?

This is Las Vegas, the city of dreams, the mecca in the desert.

Indeed, one of the truly enjoyable things to do when visiting there is to strike up a conversation with those around you. With little or no prodding, they'll lay a story or two on you. Some are sad, others aren't. But they always include dreams.

Here's a typical one I heard last week:

She was, oh, somewhere in the neighborhood of 45 years of age, though I'm notoriously bad at guessing that sort of thing, particularly when it comes to women. When she sat down next to me at the bar, she ordered a Bud Light with a shot of tequila on the side. I nodded and said, "Having any luck?"

She sorta shrugged and said, "About even for the day."

"You could do a lot worse than that," I said.

She nodded and fired up a Virginia Slim. "I'm not a gambler," she said. "I'm a manicurist. At least I'm going to be."

Then she told me her life story.

Margaret (she told me her last name but I couldn't pronounce it, much less spell it) was from Chicago originally, having moved to Vegas two years earlier to get away from those "gosh-awful winters up north."

"My husband left me and the kids back in '84," she said. "I didn't realize it at the time, but it was the best thing that could have happened to me. He was one of those men who had to be in charge all the time, telling others what to do and when to do it. I didn't know any better. I thought that's the way it was supposed to be."

When he walked out, Margaret thought her world had crumbled. She had no marketable skills, and there were those two children to feed and care for.

"I cried a lot back then," she said, spubbing out one cigarette and lighting another. "I'd never been so scared in my whole life. I just figured we were going to starve to death."

But they didn't.

Instead, Margaret got a job, her first since she had married 20 years earlier.

She became a waitress.

"It wasn't glamorous, but it paid the bills," she said. "We had plenty to eat and I was even able to buy the kids a few 'extras' along the way."

But she wasn't satisfied. Margaret had a dream. She wanted to be her own boss, the person making the decisions that would ultimately decide her future. She was tired of answering to someone else.

So she left Chicago and headed southwest.

She ended up in Las Vegas.

OTT: Las Vegas is place to dream

(From 1D)

"I was jobless again, but this time I wasn't afraid. I knew I could take care of myself and my children. I had confidence."

She also had a plan.

"Ever since I was a little girl I loved pretty fingernails, the kind that were real long and painted bright red. I thought they made a woman look rich."

Margaret was smiling as she talked, as though she were recalling happy times from her past. "I got a job waiting tables at night, but during the day I went to school. I was determined to become a manicurist. I figured in a place like Las Vegas pretty fingernails would be a 'must' for lots of people."

I asked her how close she was to finishing up her schooling.

"I take the test in about two months," she said. "There's a written part and if you pass that, you do the actual hands-on work. If all goes well, I should be working fulltime right after that."

I wished her luck.

"Luck ain't got nothing to do with it," she snapped. "I've worked hard. I'll pass that test and one day I'll have my own shop. You just wait and see."

"I hope your dream comes true," I said.

"It will," she said. "This is Las Vegas, and if you can't dream big here, then there's no use in dreaming at all."

With that, she hopped off her barstool and disappeared into the crowded casino.

As the bartender gathered up her loose change, he glanced at me and said, "Welcome to the land of broken dreams."

SHOW: Roundup teaches snake safety

for venom, skinning exhibits and fried rattlesnake for the hungry.

Safety demonstrations included a snake handler getting in a sleeping bag that was then loaded with about 10 rattlesnakes.

"This is the kind of thing that really happens on a camping trip," said David Estep, a handler for Rattlers Plus out of Wichita Falls.

The handlers show the crowd that someone can slowly and calmly exit a sleeping bag without getting bit.

Although the show is mostly a crowd pleaser, it teaches safety, Estep said.

"There's more wives' tales about snakes than you can shake a stick at," he said.

For example, sleeping next to a fire won't keep the snakes away and a rattlesnake doesn't always rattle before striking, he said.

Rich Wilkinson, with the Sweetwater Jaycees (who claim the world's largest roundup earlier in March), said the most common misconception about rattlesnakes concern their aggression.

"A rattlesnake wants to get away from you as bad as you do from him," he said.

Wilkinson was at the Big Spring roundup to milk the snakes for their yellowish-orange venom.

"We send it to a laboratory in Virginia. Part of it is used to make an anti-venom," he said. The rest is used in cancer and rheumatoid arthritis research, he said.

Wilkinson has been handling snakes for about 12 years. "It's something that not everybody does ... It's kind of an adrenaline rush," he said.

The Big Spring roundup solicits rattlesnakes from hunters and honors the heaviest snake captured, the most pounds and number collected, and the most rattles.

The snakes are sold for their meat and skin with proceeds benefiting the Dora Roberts Rehabilitation Center and to help finance a scholarship fund for therapists. AMBUCS hopes to raise about $20,000 this year.

BOOK: Publisher wants more well-written fiction

(From 1D)

Heat" by C.C. Risenhoover and "By the Book" by Susan Malone.

However, the book that has garnered the small company the biggest attention has been "Tony and Susan," written by Austin Wright of Cincinnati. The New York Times gave the book an excellent review on Monday, Ms. Howle said.

"We just got a rave review on it," she said. "It was wonderful and we haven't stopped answering phones all day. And, it's great for Austin because he had not written in 16 years and when he finally did this book, it was turned down by all the major publishing companies. And, it's a great book."

Ms. Howle said she doesn't have particular criteria for choosing the books to publish, she just looks for something she likes.

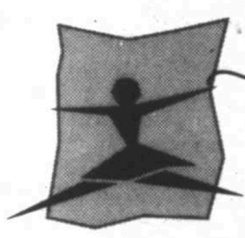

"I try to get a wide range of topics," she said. "I have no agenda for my company, just good literary fiction. 'Tony and Susan' was rejected by publishing houses that have gone to genre books. It is the perfect example of what we are trying to do — to expose these authors who have wonderful fiction to write."

JOIN: Educators to hear about inclusion maintain a separate system of educating students with identifiable handicaps or move to a unified system for all students," he said.

In this respect, MARC, along with Midland Independent School District, is sponsoring a visit from Michael J. Delaney of the Special Education Department of the Colorado Department of Education.

Delaney will speak on "Inclusive Education," 7 p.m. Friday in Mabee Hall of the Junior League of Midland, 902 W. Dengar. Child care will be provided on request, and special accommodations (interpreters or transportation) can be arranged by calling 682-9771.

"If students are not raised together, if they don't play together, then they comment about students who are different and they develop prejudices. They see only the negative things if they don't grow up side by side," said Mary Wells, MARC social worker.

"What is going to happen to this generation of students when they go into the work force?" Ms. Wells asked "Students in regular classrooms won't have known any handicapped students. They are going to turn them away. They will see what they can't do, instead of what they can."

Ms. Wells, who has a mildly retarded daughter attending Bynum School, oversees several MARC residences in Midland for children with severe handicaps.

She allows that severely mentally retarded students would disrupt a regular classroom. "Most of the population in my homes attend segregated campuses. It would be difficult, because of their level of function, to put them in regular classrooms. Some would need a caregiver to change their diapers, and provisions would have to be made," she said.

Nonetheless, experts say there are plenty of students with mild retardation, and disabilities, and others with more severe handicaps who could benefit from learning in a regular classroom.

"If all students are to achieve their potential and the achievement gap between students with and without special needs is to be closed, educators need to rethink old paradigms," said Jill Gray, senior director of the Division of Special Education for the Texas Education Agency (TEA).

Ms. Gray, in a column she wrote for the April edition of ATPE (Association of Texas Professional Educators) News, said that inclusion "is generally defined as students with and without disabilities receiving all instruction in the regular education setting, and with students having an opportunity to participate in all classroom activities, to the extent of their ability.

Some schools in the United States and Canada have embraced the concept of inclusion.

The TEA recently developed "A Leadership Initiative to Improve Special Education Services in Texas," a document that describes an initiative to implement inclusion. It is a leadership effort, and not a rule or a mandate.

"The TEA staff chose the inclusion approach because research shows that students who receive services through inclusion programs achieve more and have higher self-esteem," Ms. Gray said.

Unterbrink of MARC agrees.

"Social behavior increases markedly when students are around students who don't have disabilities," he said, noting that mentally retarded students who are grouped together tend to model themselves after each other.

"Segregating students with disabilities requires them to learn in an environment that is not the same as the world that all of us live in," Unterbrink said. "It teaches them to model inappropriate speech patterns, deviant behavior and to become more needy. I have seen the products of special education."

However, John Porter, an El Paso teacher and the director of ATPE Region 19, said in the recent issue of the organization's magazine that full inclusion is impractical.

"The inclusion initiative would require all teachers to be trained in all areas of education in preparation for the coming of inclusion students into the regular classroom," Porter said, noting the TEA document would require teachers be trained on weekends or evenings "with no mention of compensating teachers for the extra effort required."

"A second issue is where the additional funds are to be found to pay for the required training mentioned, as well as for the additional special education teachers who will be needed when the inclusion students are relocated from the special education classroom to the regular classroom," he said. Special education classrooms would be required to keep operating until all students were integrated into regular classes.

Porter also said the regular classroom teacher "will have the added challenge of keeping the regular class on task while distractions abound."

"I would not want this process to polarize the students and their families between those with special needs and those not requiring special efforts," he said.

Delaney will address this issues in Friday's meeting. A video presentation will feature how inclusion works.

"Unfortunately, disabled children have learned being different often means being left out," Ms. Wells said. "We need to focus on what people can do, not what they can't."

Death penalty foes continue protesting

REYNOSA, Mexico (AP) — About 300 marchers protesting the execution of Ramon Montoya crossed the Texas border Saturday carrying placards decrying the first Texas execution of a Mexican national since 1942.

"Life yes, death no!" the marchers shouted in Spanish as they demonstrated three days after Montoya's execution. Montoya, convicted of killing a Dallas police officer 10 years ago, was put to death early Thursday at the Walls Unit prison in Huntsville.

Hundreds more people met the marchers at the border brandishing signs such as, "Ramon Montoya was killed in the U.S."

"They're going to kill more in this country," said Marcial Silva just before the marchers crossed the bridge over the Rio Grande at Hildalgo, Texas.

"It's legal murder, nothing else," said Jose Torres, director of the Mid-Valley Community Center.

"Whittlin's fun, unless you're the stick."

"It seems everybody wants a piece of you these days. Even the people you'd least expect...like your bank. But at AmWest Savings that's just not so. Take their Freedom Checking℠, for instance. They don't charge for every check you write. There's no monthly service charge. You get a free ATM card with free access at any AmWest ATM location. They even give you free traveler's checks whenever you need 'em. Fact is, you get a whole lot more out of an AmWest Freedom Checking℠ account than you put into it. That's good enough reason for me to put my money on AmWest. How 'bout you?"

TSTA honors Midlander for Women's History Month

Staff report

Midland community leader Alma Marshall is being honored by the local chapter of Texas State Teachers Association for Women's History Month.

Marshall

Born in Wichita Falls, Ms. Marshall later moved to Midland where she was a teacher for 18 years in Midland Independent School District, and a social studies chairperson for 10 years. She currently is the coordinator of non-certified personnel for MISD.

"My mother was a teacher in a two-room school. It was in that tiny school that I developed a love for reading," Ms. Marshall said.

"The word that best describes me is 'advocate,'" she said. "My primary focus in life is based on three important things — being black, a woman, and an educator ... I believe that as long as there is an opportunity for one to bring positive change, the effort should be made to do so, no matter what the personal cost."

Ms. Marshall recently served on the MISD school board appointed Cluster Advisory Committee. The committee was charged with the task of improving the quality of education in Midland, while maintaining educational equity for all children.

She joined with a group of minorities who protested the use of the Confederate flag at Lee High School. She also initiated a community meeting to determine what the minority community's response should be to the Ku Klux Klan coming to Midland. The community chose to stage the Unity Rally to express unity, rather than division.

Ms. Marshall also joined with MISD trustee James Fuller in supporting an effort to name the $1.6 million alternative high school for black community leader and Midland physician Dr. Viola Coleman.

Ms. Marshall's community efforts have been recognized by the Negro Business and Professional Women of Midland.

She holds a master of arts degree in history from Midwestern University, and a bachelor of arts degree in history from Prairie View A&M. She is past president of the West Texas Council for the Social Studies, Midland Educators Association, Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority Inc., and Negro Business and Professional Women.

She has served as an officer for the Texas Council for the Social Studies, TSTA, Midland United Way and Project Blueprint.

She is affiliated with Freewill Foster Home, National Education Association, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Texas Coalition of Black Democrats, FOCUS (Federation of Citizens United to Serve), Mount Rose Baptist Church, Black Federated Women of Midland, Theta Delta Omega Chapter of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Macedonia Baptist Church, the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs and Mount Calvary Baptist Church.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC recognizes honor students on Dean's, President's List

By H.A. Tuck

Outstanding scholars at Midland College receive applause and recognition Thursday afternoon when the annual reception honors the fall semester Dean's and President's List.

Hosted by the Student Activities Office, the reception allows faculty and staff time to meet and visit with some of the best and brightest of current students. The event begins at 2 p.m. with college president David Daniel making remarks at 2:30 p.m.

There were 99 students on the President's List for achieving a perfect 4.0 grade point average while attempting at least 12 hours. The Dean's List of 128 included those who had earned at least a 3.5 GPA while taking 12 hours or more.

If you are interested in freelance writing and photography, next weekend's Writers' Retreat could be just what you need to break into print. Larry Griffin, chair of the MC Fine Arts and Communications Division; Linda Thorsen Bond, a part-time speech teacher for MC and an often-published author; and Bruce Partain, editor of the Midland Chamber of Commerce Citylife magazine and professional photographer; are directing the workshop in the Davis Mountains April 3-4.

Cost is $35, with an optional four-meal package for an extra $30. Call 684-6459 today or tomorrow to determine if there are any openings left.

If your thoughts are turning to tropical islands, refreshing ocean breezes, and exotic adventure, have we got a deal for you! Mike Schneider, sociology instructor, is developing a "Sea, Sun, Sail, and College Credit, Too" cruise in the Bahamas May 20-June 5. The class is being offered as a summer interim course, but also may be attended without enrolling for college credit.

The group will spend two weeks on a 62-foot sailboat. The cost includes all expenses from Miami, including sailing, meals, fishing tackle, snorkeling equipment and instruction in both snorkeling and sailing.

Cost is $595 per person. College credit will be approximately $100 extra, if desired. A $200 deposit is required and space is limited, so contact Schneider at his office, 685-4642 or his home, 699-5175, for more information.

A public videoconference live via satellite is being presented Wednesday, March 31, on "Women of Color in Higher Education: Too Invisible, Too Silent, For Too Long." The presentation takes places from 12 noon-2 p.m. in the Midland College Health Sciences Building Lecture Hall, and there's no charge.

Panelists for the program include: Vera K. Farris, president, Stockton State College; Gloria Scott, president, Bennett College; Janine Pease-Windy Boy, president, Little Big Horn College, Juliette Garcia, president, University of Texas-Brownsville; L. Jay Oliva, president, New York University; and Evelyn Hu-DeHart, professor of history, University of Colorado-Boulder. Carol Randolph is serving as moderator.

On display at MC's McCormick Gallery is a nice series of drawings by Karen Kitchell, who now lives in Billings, Mont. She combines the expected and the unexpected, mostly in landscape settings. You may see this show through April 14. Located in the Allison Fine Arts Building, the McCormick Gallery is open Sunday from 1-5 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m., Friday from 8 a.m.-5 p.m., and Saturday from 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Admission always is free.

If you'd like to participate in the MC Ex-Students Association's spring bowling league, contact the Ex-Students' office at 685-4793. The league bowls at Midland Park Lanes (formerly Fairmont) at 8:30 p.m. on Wednesdays. Cost is $6 per week.

The Association is having a four-person scramble-format golf tournament on Sunday, April 18, at Hogan Park Golf Course. Cost is $36 for open entries, $32 for Ex-Students, and $26 for current MC students.

There are still some openings for the current reading-discussion series, The Family in American Cultures, sponsored through the Murray Fasken Learning Resource Center at the College. The group meets on Saturdays, discussing four novels which typify themes of family and kinship in differing cultures in America.

Books and reader's guides are provided free of charge.

If you are interested, contact John Deats, library director, at 685-4726.

MALE PERSONAL ADS
The following ads have been placed by males looking to meet females.

DIVORCED, Caucasian male, 52, 5'8", 150 lbs. Good looking. Degreed professional who is looking for just one pretty woman to share life with. This particular lady will be slim and trim, not over 5'4" and love to travel, party and sometimes just stay in and watch TV. Cooking and cleaning are not the ways to win this man's heart, being a fun person to be with is. Children will be considered a blessing and not a hinderance to this relationship. I am a non-smoker (quit years ago), buy smoking does not bother me. Also, a very light drinker and use no drugs. If you are between 35 and 45 and think we may have somethings in common, please reply with a photo and phone number. You will not be disappointed. MP-872.

Twenty-two year old Caucasian male, 6', 210 lbs., looking for a relationship with a woman 19-27. I am a down to earth, easy going guy. Send me your phone number and address we'll talk. All replies will be answered. MP-871

NISSAN®

ALTIMA

NEW CONCEPT IN LUXURY SEDANS...AFFORDABILITY

Luxury is a concept that not everyone shares to the same degree. Nor, for that matter, is affordability. Precisely the reason Nissan created the Altima line. The flagship of the range, the Altima GLE provides a level of standard equipment hard to beat, even on much more expensive cars. If your fancy runs on the sportier side, the SE is more your style, with its sport seats and sport-tuned suspension. The feature-rich GXE combines an impressive array of standard amenities with a very attractive price. Even the most affordable, the XE, comes with a full range of luxury features.

Available in XE, GXE, SE & GLE Models.

Buying a home is an important decision that requires a lot of time and attention to detail. Quality of construction, energy-efficiency, innovative floorplans and a design suited to their lifestyle are some of the factors a homebuyer might consider.

Rasnick Homes combines all of these considerations when building a home to fit the needs and lifestyles of each homebuyer.

"We cater to the homebuyers who want a custom home," said James Rasnick of Rasnick Homes. "Each plan is a unique custom home with every detail built from scratch."

With over 20 years experience in construction and development, Rasnick is a third generation builder intent on adding a new meaning to the custom built home. Rather than duplicating floorplans, Rasnick has added a custom designer to his staff, allowing him the flexibility of building fresh and innovative homes.

"The in-house designer can design whatever the home buyer wants," said Roberta Aldridge, sales agent for Langston Realtors. The home listed at 4985 Rustic Trail in Greentree North is an example of a Rasnick Home.

The quality of construction can be seen throughout this two-story brick home. The innovative design is light and open with a liberal use of windows and skylights. Many luxury features such as ceramic tiled flooring, towering ceilings and custom cabinetry are built with today's homebuyer in mind.

"Homebuyers can choose their own wallpaper to add the finishing touch," Aldridge said. By leaving the interior designs unfinished, Aldridge said the selection is the homebuyer's choice, "not the builder's idea."

Aldridge is listing this 4-bedroom, 2 1/2 bath home overlooking the Greentree golf course for $169,000. Homebuyers can preview this Rasnick home during open house today from 1-4 p.m.

"Rasnick builds quality homes at a reasonable price," Aldridge said.

Other Rasnick homes are currently being built in Polo Park, Meadow Park and Briarwood. As the principle developer, Rasnick is planning to turn Briarwood into a premier development with a clubhouse, swimming pool, play area and jogging trail.

"I can build a home anywhere to fit the homebuyer's needs and lifestyles," Rasnick added. "They can tell me their price range and I'll show them where we can build."

Please call Roberta Aldridge at 683-3424 or Rasnick Homes at 699-7902 for more information.

The Right Time To Refinance?

With interest rates the lowest they've been in years, many homeowners are wondering if the time is right to refinance their high-interest mortgage loans. In Midland, mortgage rates have hovered around 7 1/2% for over the past 30 days.

So is the time right for you to refinance? "It depends," says Kay Sutton, President of the Midland Association of REALTORS, Inc. "There are three basic aspects to consider before deciding to refinance: the interest rate, how long you plan to say in your house, and what you want to accomplish by refinancing."

"A standard rule of thumb is to refinance if the current mortgage rate is at least 1 1/2 - 2 1/2 percentage points below your existing mortgage rate because you need a considerable rate reduction to compensate for the expense of refinancing," added Sutton. Costs associated with refinancing can include points charged by the lender and fees for appraisal, title, and other related services.

Another major factor tied into the interest rate is how long you plan to live in your house. "Figure out how long it would take to recoup the refinancing costs through the monthly savings from the lower interest rate," explains Sutton. "Divide the annual payment savings into the total refinancing costs to determine the break-even point. If this point is at least a few years before you think you'll move, you could be in a good position to refinance."

"Finally," continues Sutton, "it is important to determine what your financial goals are." There are a host of reasons a homeowner may choose to refinance. Some homeowners, especially those nearing retirement age, want to pay off the mortgage earlier and usually choose to refinance to a mortgage with a shorter term. Owners who are strapped for cash may want to reduce monthly payments. Still others may want to tap into the home's equity for tax-deductible cash. Many homeowners with adjustible-rate mortgages choose to refinance when interest rates are low, mainly for the security and peace of mind.

"Now is certainly an attractive time to refinance," concludes Sutton, "but each owner's case is unique and it's a matter your should discuss thoroughly with a financial advisor."

The Midland Association of REALTORS, Inc. is one of more than 1,800 boards of Realtors nationwide that comprise the National Association of Realtors, the nation's largest trade association and the voice for real estate.

Naming Your Price

by Vicky Garrett
Chaparral Realtors

Imagine, if you will, being a seller who is anticipating placing your home on the market in the not too distant future. Since your equity will determine how much you can afford when you get to your new destination, you feel it is critical to get as much for your home as possible. You ask for advice if you should consider pricing your home 10-12% over what you anticipate you can get so that you will have some room with which to negotiate.

Overpricing can be more dangerous to your financial outcome than any other single factor in home selling. It boils down to more than an overpriced home rarely sells.

This is an area where a professional Realtor with their pulse to the market can be of invaluable service. At a Realtor's fingertips (computer printouts) are all the statistics necessary in accurately determining fair market value. A knowledgeable Realtor will usually point out that first, overpricing a home discourages buyers from even making an offer. They feel that even if the offer is accepted, they have not gained anything more than a fair price. What if they do make an offer that you are happy with, but that is more than the home is worth? Unless that buyer is paying cash, or is putting down an exceptionally large cash down payment, chances are the appraiser that is appraising for the buyer's lender will not agree with the contract price.

Overpricing also attracts the wrong prospects. If you've priced your $86,000 home at $99,000, you'll be atttracting buyers who expect to see $99,000 worth of home. When they don't, they'll be disappointed. You are likely to lose your desired advertising response too, since the $86,000 buyers won't even call.

Another casualty of overpricing will be other real estate agents. Keep in mind that they know and understand pricing because of daily contact with the market. Once they realize your home is overpriced they may not show it as much, or worse, show it to their prospects in an effort to educate them as to what a really good buy your competition might be.

My best advice, price your home fairly for a prompt and hassle-free selling experience.

THINK OF IT THIS WAY!
You can spend $1,600.00 ($800/month, $800 deposit) and get to rent a nice 3 br, 2 ba, home with acceptable carpeting, okay paint and so-so yard. OR...for under $1,500.00 (and only $755.75/month) you can OWN this one! Now, why would you want to throw away $800 every month in rent when you could be building equity with absolutely no down payment and less than $1,500 total move-in costs? If your credit is good, please call me and let's work on getting you into this "Deal of a Lifetime" 20 yrs., 8% int., $68,000 loan balance. There are 3 lg brs w/ with walkin closets, new carpet and paint, 2 living areas, 2 car garage, extra large cinderblock storage building in back.

Oil & Gas Activity/6-8E
Activity Indicators/9E

Serving 54 counties in West Texas and New Mexico

BRIEFING

Oil economics

A tank truck fills up at the Fina Refinery in Big Spring.

Oil prices had a shaky start at the beginning of the week, falling to $19.52 as April contract expired. May contracts opened sharply higher, at $20.03. The posted price was $18.50.

Natural gas prices remained above the $2.10 per thousand cubic feet mark.

Higher prices could boost the rig count, which was higher for the week ended March 19, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

In the Permian Basin, the rig count rose three to 108, above last year's count of 89.

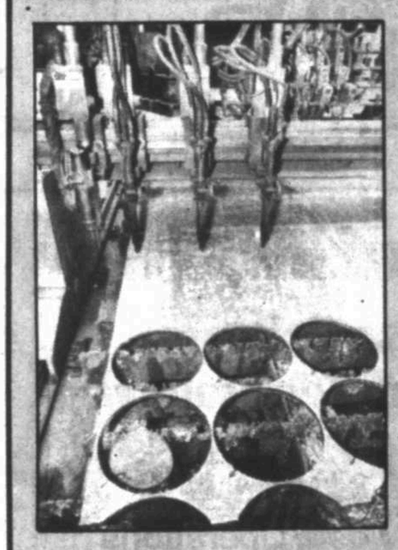

Nationwide, the rig count rose after three weeks of declines, to 614 from 600 the previous week. A year ago the count was 643.

ARCO changes

DALLAS — In a major ARCO management change announced this week, James K. (Ken) Thompson, vice president of ARCO Oil & Gas Western District in Midland has been elected vice president of E&P Technology and will move to Plano.

The election was reported in conjunction with the announcement that Robert E. Wycoff will step down as Atlantic Richfield Co.'s president and chief operating officer in a management change that includes the retirement of three top vice presidents. Wycoff, 63, will be replaced on June 1 by Mike R. Bowlin, now executive vice president of the oil company.

The changes are part of a management succession strategy developed in recent years, said Lodwrick M. Cook, Arco's chairman and chief executive officer. Cook is scheduled to retire in 1995.

New gas plant

A Houston-based corporation has begun construction of a natural gas processing plant in southeastern New Mexico.

The Lea County plant, being built by GPM Gas Corp., is designed to process 29 million cubic feet of gas per day. It is expected to begin operation in the fall, an executive said.

Jim Bowles, GPM vice president for New Mexico, said exploration and production in the southeastern part of the state is strong, "and we see this trend continuing in the coming year."

The company's other three southeastern New Mexico facilities have been operating at near-capacity, Bowles said.

The new plant is designed to process "sweet" gas that doesn't contain hydrogen sulfide. The sweet gas will be separated from the sour gas in GPM's existing systems and delivered to the plant for processing.

Bowles said GPM's processing capacity in New Mexico will increase by about 15 percent when the Zia plant is completed.

Highways paved way to Odessa

■ It takes roads to become a hub, and Odessa was willing to build the roads that made it an oilpatch hub.

By Roger Olien

As a festive parade wound its way through Odessa in late 1938, out-of-town bystanders noticed that most of it was the familiar stuff of small-town celebrations: a high school queen, a school band, and the Boy Scouts.

Then came the entries that gave the procession its local character — a dozen shiny oilfield vehicles and a freshly painted pump jack on a flatbed truck. These were sights in Odessa, which now led the region in oilfield supplies and services, a position it still holds.

The rise of Odessa, now seemingly inevitable, was a long time coming. It was also the result of an unusual combination of accident and effective community development.

The accident was geography. As oil production moved westward during the 1920s, it also moved farther from San Angelo and Big Spring, both of which had dead starts in the bidding to locate the operations of oil companies.

As discoveries moved through Upton, Pecos, Crane, Winkler, and Ector counties, field activity moved farther away from the older settlements and closer to Odessa.

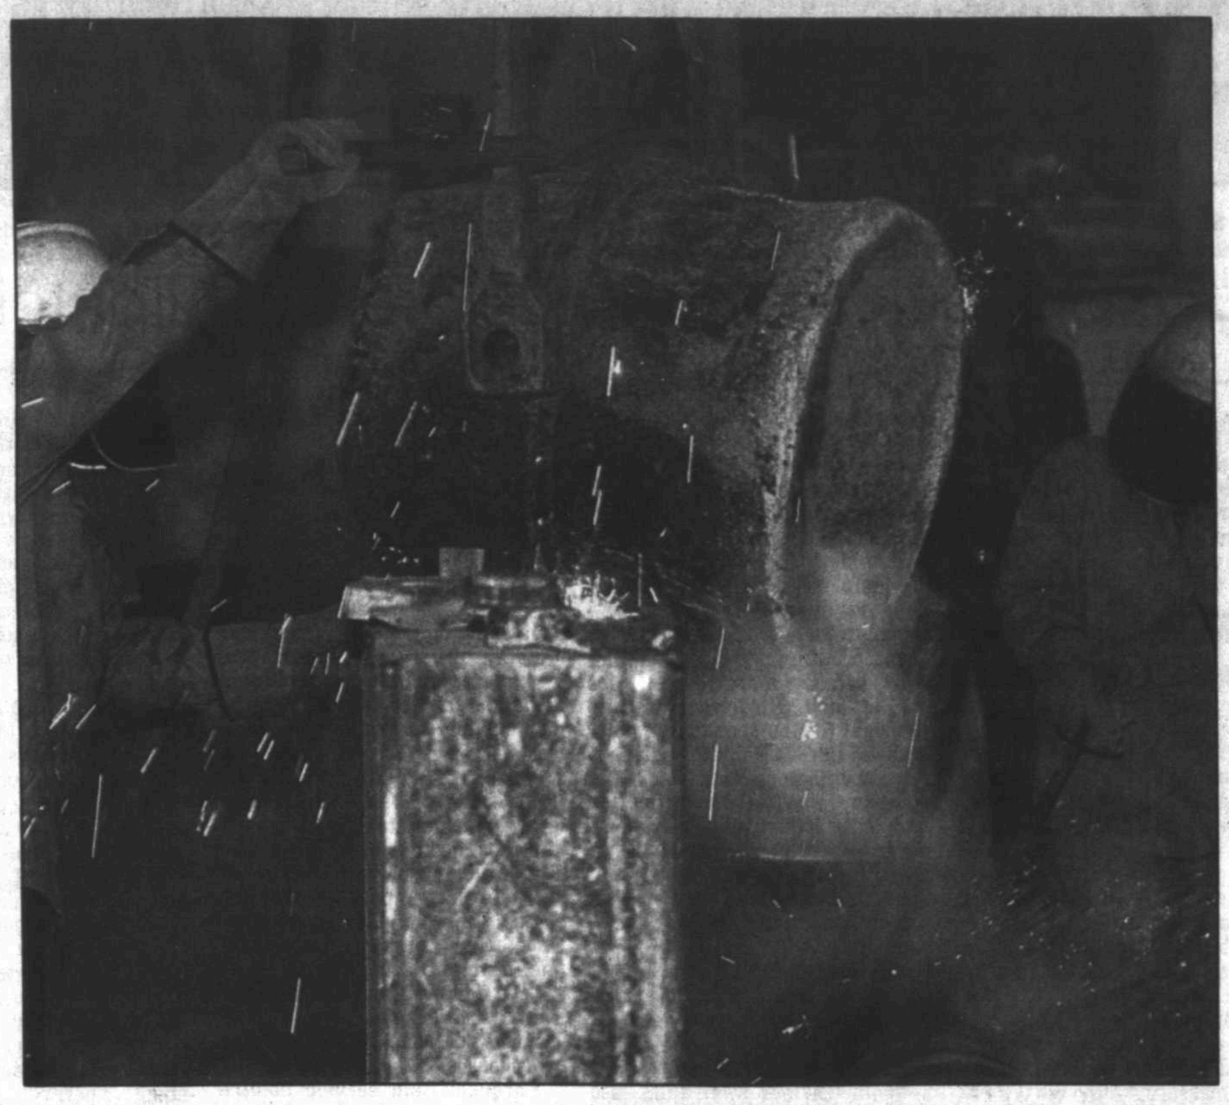

Given the primitive condition of roads and region, shipping lumber, tubular goods, and the other essential items for field work became a major cost, one that suppliers cut by moving yards and offices close to operations. Odessa, roughly central to activity by the late 1920s, had a natural advantage that would-be competitors found hard to beat.

Making the most of this advantage, local businessmen persuaded the Ector County Commissioners to build roads out to the oilfields, first toward Crane and later toward Andrews.

As economists have long understood, infrastructure — transportation and communication facilities — has to be created before significant economic development can occur. Local businessmen, operating without benefit of economics, knew that they had to have roads to move men and material.

Twenty miles to the east, Midland businessmen made the same observation and tried

Odessa: Oil Town USA

■ A wide variety of oilfield businesses have made Odessa a major drilling and production center.

By Johnnye Montgomery

Whenever coffee shop conversation turns to business, and particularly to oil business, invariably someone will come up with the remark that, if you're going to get into the specialty service business, the smartest thing you can do is start in Odessa. There are many theories why Odessa's climate is so friendly for commerce -- but they all begin with roads.

From the beginning, when all it took to get started in the oil business was a cable tool rig and maybe a Model A truck, Odessa was easy to get to, with good roads going to the oilfields no matter which direction you headed. Then there were the people who realized early on that oil exploration meant a market for auxiliary services. Mechanics, carpenters, tool and die makers, men with strong backs and bulging muscles heard about the oil finds in the Permian Basin. Alert, smart, and most of all, hungry, entrepreneurs came to Odessa to help the fledgling industry, and in the process, to help themselves.

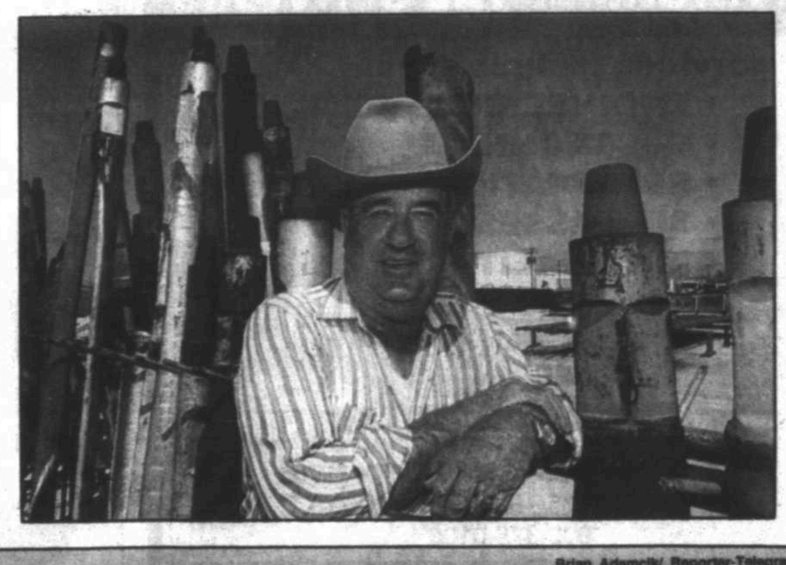

Now, needs are more complicated and urgent, with operating costs per day often exceeding the entire return on investment for an early well, and rotary rigs making more hole in a day than cable tools were capable of, ever, but one thing in the oilfield hasn't changed: Odessa is still the hub of the oilfield service industry.

No matter how often field offices and stockpoints rise in towns to the north and south and west of us, and then go vacant, you can count on Odessa to keep you turning to the right. Odessans do it by knowing how -- by doing the work and speaking the language.

"You never have to wonder if you're getting across to them what you need," said one Midland drilling foreman, "and you can count on getting it when you need it. They've stayed in business because they know how to get things done."

Many Odessans agree that competence and good service have had a lot to do with their remaining in

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Grant Street was Mecca for oilpatch

Pitts

If Odessa is the service hub of the oilpatch, Grant Street and downtown Odessa for many decades was the retail hub of the Permian Basin.

As a youngster growing up in Wink, I don't ever remember going to Midland, except once to see a doctor. The only thing I knew about Midland was that it was where all the rich people lived, and everytime we heard of someone who had moved to Midland we assumed they had gotten rich.

But a trip to Odessa was something to savor. We would plan for weeks, leave early in the morning and plan on getting home late. Now but a shadow of its former glory, Grant street in the 30s, 40s, and 50s was a working man's Mecca — a place were families of roughnecks and roustabouts religiously came on pilgrimages, bringing offerings of paychecks and cash.

Going from store to store to pay homage to such well known names as the Model Shop, Virtues, Dunlaps, the sidewalks swarmed with weathered, cigarette-smoking men dressed in clean khaki pants and shirts and haggard women in print dresses towing strings of tired, hungry or bored children. Weekends were always busy, but the sidewalks were most crowded during late summer when it was time to buy new school clothes.

Of course, the very best crowds on Grant came for the Oil Show Parade, when the sidewalks were packed. There were two big events in West Texas in those days — the Pecos Rodeo and the Oil Show Parade — which provided West Texans a rare chance to see celebrities.

Odessan Charles Perry remembers on VJ Day that Grant Street became the location of the biggest tailgate party in West Texas, "People wanted to celebrate and they came to Grant Street. Cars were parked along the street, trunks opened to bottles of whiskey, and West Texas celebrated the end of the war."

But any weekend was a good time to meet old friends on Grant Street. All up and down the most famous street in oiltown, one could spot clusters of people stopping to visit. It seemed my parents would always meet someone who had since left Wink and gone on to Jal, Monahans, Crane, McCamey, Andrews or some other town in search of work or a better job, and when they did, we would stop and visit, and eventually the talk would turn to better jobs.

In those days, there seemed to be an unusual obsession among the poor people of West Texas with upward mobility — long before it was discovered by the yuppies. Perhaps it was because the oilpatch offered a strange new experience for those of us who had come here from the cotton patches of Arkansas, East Texas and Oklahoma — an opportunity to improve one's lot in life.

I kept waiting for the lot of the Pitts clan to improve enough so that we could eat at the Picadilly Cafeteria on Grant Street, but it didn't come until business.

What kind of businesses make Odessa a world class oilfield manufacturing and service center? There are hundreds of stories, but here are just a few profiles of Odessa oilpatch firms that have made it good in Odessa, and in doing so have made Odessa better.

GREGORY RIG SERVICE — Gregory Rig Service opened in the mid 1960s, and grew slowly through the years "like a dozen other companies in Odessa, by doing what we were supposed to do as well as we could."

James Guthrie, company VP, said times have for the most part been good for the company -- "especially 1977 through 1981. Those years were tremendous. We opened a place in Oklahoma City in March of 1981, and it is still in operation, still doing good. But in January 1982, it was just like somebody threw the switch."

However, Guthrie says they've managed to hold their own in business in Odessa..."although it's an everyday battle," by following business opportunities elsewhere, and by diversification. In September of 1990, they opened a shop in Columbus, east of Houston, but closed it after 1-1/2 years, when business slowed. Guthrie says he has no magic formula for the success of business in Odessa, other than hard work -- and possibly a willingness of Odessans to put more effort into good service.

ODESSA BABBITT BEARING — Odessa Babbitt Bearing, a manufacturing service company for babbitted bearings for natural gas compressors and large diesel engines, has been in business about 30 years. The company was started by John Holdridge in Odessa, in his father's garage.

VP Charlie Anderson, who has been with the company since 1971, said they were riding a steady boom until about 1982. He credits Holdridge with the possession of extraordinary business acumen.

"We had never had any layoffs, and up until (1982), we had about 100 employees working 11 hour days, six days a week. I was shop manager then, and there were six of us wanting to build another shop, and hire more people.

"But John (Holdridge) had the foresight to stop spending money. It saved Odessa Babbitt Bearing."

Another factor acting to save the company was its diversification into other industries. Their bearings are used in steam turbines in major utility power plants, and they recondition bearings -- a big undertaking that takes special capabilities.

"We just reconditioned a couple that went into a ship at 10,000 pounds each. On the Arizona Salt River Project, we did one of the largest bearings I've ever seen," he said. "It took more than 1200 pounds of babbitt."

The company is also a major source of labyrinth seals that go into centrifugal compressors. In the late 1970s, they had opened a shop in Deer Park, close to Houston, as a customer service to people along the ship channel, in order that they wouldn't have to ship their bearings all the way to Odessa.

Anderson said they also have done business overseas and in Canada.

"We're always willing to look at new markets. We've shipped bearings to the U.S. Air Force in Madrid, Spain, to a big generator having some connection with Radio Free Europe." Anderson said they do a lot of business indirectly overseas, but don't really pursue that market because of the difficulties with documentation.

MI DRILLING FLUIDS — Drilling fluid was a minor concern in cable tool days -- you poured a little water in the hole to lubricate and cool your bit, and added a little clay to help the bailer take care of drilled solids, but once rotary rigs came on the scene, mud was quickly elevated in importance. Once a rear-warehouse product in a lumberyard or feed store, now drilling fluid ranks third in drilling costs on an AFE.

Permian Mud began in the late 1940s or early '50s in Odessa, then grew to include stockpoints around the Permian Basin. Odessan Sonny Farquhar, now retired, went to work for the company in the 1950s. He said the company maintained stockpoints in towns throughout the Permian Basin.

"We followed the booms," he said. "And in most cases, we had service personnel where we had warehouses."

Farquhar said service companies in those early days had no built-in soft landings. "In those early years, we'd have steel strikes and there'd be no rigs running, and then it would get better. But in all that time, boom or bust, I was never concerned that I might get laid off."

In 1972, Dresser-Magcobar bought out all distributorships and absorbed the company into its worldwide operations. Corporate headquarters were in Houston, and the company maintained district sales and administrative offices in different cities throughout the oilfield centers of the world, but the Odessa stockpoint continued to be a major pulse point of the company.

After the bust of 1982, the company merged with Imco, to become MI Drilling Fluids. Now, after layoffs and warehouse closings, MI still maintains its office and warehouses at Odessa and Hobbs, with a liquid mud plant at Pecos.

WOOLLEY TOOL — Another subject of fond reminiscing among old hands in Odessa coffee shops is the story of Woolley Tool and Mfg., which had its Odessa beginnings during the bust of the early 1950s.

Ned S. Woolley began sharpening tong dies and slip inserts in 1937, out of the back of his pickup, going wherever business was, around the Hutchings Stock Association wells, and the Sealy, the Tubb, and other early fields around Monahans. He had three

PITTS: Grant Street

(From 1E)

I was in high school.

I had heard so much about this one-of-a-kind eatery: "They say you can pick from three different kinds of meat, lots of salads, vegetables, two kinds of potatos and a half dozen desserts," my dad told us. But we never got to eat there, because he said it could cost as much as $5 to feed all of us — a steep price considering that our weekly grocery bill for a family of eight was not much more than $10.

Our dining treats were confined to snacks at the Club Cafe and malts or cherry cokes at the Henderson Drug Store.

If the sidewalks were busy, the streets were equally busy as shoppers contended with the angle parking that was prevalent in those days. Instead of walking the length of the street one side at a time, some shoppers preferred to play musical parking spots and would creep up and down the street, looking, watching and waiting for a car to back out of a spot near their store. They would do it again and again. For some, I think, it became a form of entertainment — an challenging diversion to an otherwise mundane life. Sort of like auto pinball.

Grant Street may not the place it once was, for once it was the place. And for several decades it played a vital role in the commerce, culture and entertainment of the oilpatch of the Permian Basin.

ROADS: Paved way

(From 1E)

This attempt failed, as would similar efforts after it, because the highly gerrymandered commissioner precincts in Midland County allocated only one seat to the town and three to the countryside, a situation that was not changed until the United States Supreme Court mandated redistricting in relatively recent times.

In Midland County, commissioners were not interested in supporting the economic development of the town, unlike their Ector County counterparts, each of whom had a slice of Odessa in his district. In the end, politics determined that Midland, the most likely rival for the service and supply business, would never enter the race.

The Odessa City Council also eased the way for oilfield businesses by adopting a generally permissive zoning system, based on that of Pampa, Texas. It allowed the particular mix of commercial and industrial businesses that oilfield service requires, which Midland's more conventional code discouraged.

Finally, when Goldsmith, North Cowden, and South Cowden fields came into production during the 1930s, along with additional production in Ward, Winkler, and Andrews counties, the claim staked by Odessa in the late 1920s paid off.

By the end of the 1930s, the major roads out of town were lined with service and supply companies and their yards and warehouses.

The accidents of geology and geography gave Odessa its opportunities, but the practical responses of city and county officials during the 1920s turned geographical potential into economic growth. By 1940 there were 9573 Odessans, almost 9000 more people than lived there before oil moved to town.

There would be many pumpjacks in parades in come.

employees.

During the Snyder oil boom of 1948-50, he branched out to Snyder, but when the boom was over, he had to go where the oil business was. He closed both the Snyder and the Monahans shops and came to Odessa, where he bought a quarter of an acre of land, and built a small building.

The present company is on the same location, expanded to 18 acres. He started reworking tongs in the early 60s and building new tongs in the late '60s, followed by new elevators between 1974 and 1975. An inveterate innovator, Woolley worked with MIT to develop the chrome sleeve liner that revolutionized the industry.

In 1971, he sold the company to Chromalloy American Corp., which eventually grew into 20 domestic locations, with 12 international agents.

The company again changed hands in 1988 when Woolley employees and investors bought it. Harrisburg then acquired the company in 1991. Still operating at the heart of the oil industry, Harrisburg/Woolley now maintains some 25 domestic locations and 11 international stocking and distribution locations. The Odessa manufacturing plant today produces all fluid-end mud pump parts and pipe-handling equipment in house. According to CEO Dave Waldschmitt, Odessa will continue to be the primary facility for Harrisburg/Woolley.

"We're excited about our Odessa facility work force, and our role in the Odessa economy," Waldschmitt said. "We look forward to a long and happy association with the people of the Permian Basin."

WESTERN TANK — Don Williams came to Odessa in 1948, after keeping books by mail for three years, for the valve repair shop he and his four brothers had started. Williams said the valve shop was just something to get them into the steel fabricating business.

"It was a poor way to get started," he said, "but the valve repair business gave us an opportunity."

Soon the brothers had gathered enough resources to begin building tank guards, cellars, pumping unit guards, and tanks. In 1956, they formed Shamrock Steel Sales.

"The town population when I came here to visit in 1938 was about 9,000. I remember they had a shortage of water."

As fields began to be developed, Western Tank spread out in all directions, but kept the business in Odessa. In 1959, they incorporated as Western Tank. Williams said they took opportunities as they found them.

"We were fortunate enough to be here when we knew there was a demand for welded oilfield production tanks. The ones that were in use here at that time were smaller sizes that they could ship in by rail. A need had been expressed for 500 barrel tanks, 15.5 foot diameter tanks, up to 21.5 foot diameters. You could get that size in molded, but not in welded tanks, and that's what we were shooting for. We built them in the shop and hauled them to the location and set them up on grates.

"The 500 and 1000 barrel tanks have been our bread and butter."

In 1973, they built their present facilities on what is now Williams street, just off Murphy.

"When we built this place, we had some of the money saved, and we had to borrow the rest, and we said if we had five good years, we could pay for it. Well, we had 10 good years before things went bad."

Williams said at one time there was a great demand for field welded tanks, as large as 10,000-barrel capacity. They still build such tanks when the opportunity presents itself.

"Most of (the tanks) are now in the 2,000 to 5,000 barrel range."

Williams actively supports the Chamber of Commerce, United Way, and a number of other civic and service organizations, and says with work radiating all directions, Odessa is still the only conceivable center for company operations.

"The first time I ever visited (Odessa), I wondered why anyone would ever want to live here," he said. "But this is a good place to come. I think so, and the Chamber of Commerce thinks so."

ROCK TOOL — Odessa has also been the hub city for fishing and rental tool companies.

Rock Tool Co. has been in existence for 23 years, but Jack Manning, head of the family-owned business, has lived and worked in Odessa since he came out of the Army after WW II. He said he started out like everybody else, roughnecking, working on rotary and cable tool rigs, and had worked for 10 years for a fishing tool company.

He said he has increased inventories throughout the years by going to auctions.

"Whenever we saw any specialty tools at an auction, we'd buy them and bring them home. We have a complete line of fishing tools, both production and rotary, but no blowout preventers or light plants. I'd rather have a high fever than to rent BOPs or light plants."

The company has maintained only its Odessa shop, but its ten fishermen travel all directions on fishing jobs, some going as far as Eagle Pass, on rotary and production jobs, as well as an occasional water well job.

"We go anywhere the headlights will burn," he said.

Thanks to their united efforts to work safely, these Amoco Production Company employees recently celebrated a milestone indicating just how carefully they operate the North Cowden fields between Odessa and Andrews.

Namely, the employees successfully worked one million consecutive man-hours without a lost-time accident. This represents more than six and one-half years (and counting) of safe, efficient, oil and gas production.

Amoco Production Company salutes the North Cowden employees for this impressive safety record.

Congratulations!

Odessa: A city of machine shop entrepreneurs

■ Odessa is a city full of entrepreneurs looking to make it big in a machine shop.

By Mella McEwen
Staff writer

If there was ever a city that could lay claim to being the capital of machine shop entrepreneurs it is Odessa.

Southwestern Bell's Odessa phone directory lists 97 machine shops under that heading in the Yellow Pages.

Some were established in the early days of Odessa's growth as an oilfield service and manufacturing center. Others were established in the heady days of the last oil boom during the late 1970s and early 1980s.

One such company born of the last boom was Mesa Manufacturing, founded by David Carrigan and Steve Orr, former co-workers at OIME.

Carrigan, president of the company, explained that when Parker Drilling bought OIME, the two formed Mesa Manufacturing and purchased the assets of Odessa Plunger Service in 1977.

They had a good business doing plungers, which they still do for high pressure pumps. Since Carrigan is also an engineer, they design and manufactured power transmission equipment like chain drives, gear drives and drawworks for drilling and workover tools.

At the height of the boom, the company had close to 100 employees; when the boom ended, they sold some equipment and the building and cut staff. At the worst part of the bust, Carrigan said, they were down to seven employees. Today the company employs 24.

He said the company still works for the same customers, primarily stimulation companies like Halliburton, BJ, The Western Co. and Smith Energy Services, which Western just purchased. Mesa also manufactures high pressure fittings, cement heads and flow lines, and still does plungers.

In an attempt to diversify, two years ago the company began working with rental tools and established a blowout preventer department, manufacturing BOPs, parts, pieces and seals for use on well service rigs.

"We don't actively seek diversification," Carrigan said, "but we're on watch. We're conservative, so they have to be trustworthy people. That's what we look for — if the person knows the business, knows his job, then we can trust him and go into business with him. That's what we've done with the BOPs. We're still in the oilfield business, but we're interested in reaching out of that, to keep the rises and falls smoothed out."

He said machine shops are becoming more high-tech. "We depend on computers more than we used to; even manual lathes — the manual machines will have digital readouts on them."

Jim Hobbs of J-Hobbs Machine Corp. called computerized machines the savior of machine shops. He has three computerized machines and explained that with the poor economy, he couldn't charge as much for his work, "but with the CNC machines, we can do the work much faster so we can make up the difference."

He described his company as a general machine shop that does a lot of threading on oilfield pipe and accessories, his primary business. He started the shop in 1981 after working at another machine shop for about 12 years.

Business has been fair since he started his shop, Hobbs said, adding that the last couple of years haven't been bad and he's been holding his own. Currently he employs five.

In addition to the computerized machines, Hobbs said, quality control is a major issue with his customers now.

Carrigan of Mesa Manufacturing admitted that quality control is sometimes a trying headache for his company, but "maybe our attitude needs to change so we can stay ahead of our customers, make better parts than they require rather than making the parts only as good as we have to until the customers tell us it's not good enough."

Quality control hasn't been an issue with William Newton, owner of Newton Machine, which repairs pumping unit parts and is also a general machine shop. It employs three and was opened in 1980.

While Newton said there is a lot of new technology in the machine shop business, in a general machine shop such as his, "we don't depend on high-tech equipment. We run standard machines. Our customers want service. In our business, we do the same thing all the time, it's just for different types of, for example, pumping units."

He said that, over the last two or three years, he has expanded into another outlet in case pumping units are done away with. He's expanded into carrier systems on trucks such as drive train parts and parts of a similar nature.

Through word-of-mouth and personal advertising, he has expanded his business to include work around Texas and into New Mexico for some customersin the trucking business. Newton said he considered establishing an international business, and he thought seriously about getting government contracts, but "business seemed stable so I didn't pursue it. That level of business usually goes to high-tech shops that can turn out 100,000 parts."

Like Newton, Cecil Robertson of CHR Machine — which he opened in 1975 — has found an increasing amount of competition. Robertson works on waterflood pumps, repairing pumps and building new parts for them. It comprises 90 percent of his business, he said, and he works mostly with independent producers. Though he has worked on these pumps for the last 20 years — in his business and for other shops — he is finding increased competition as other machine shops that depended heavily on drilling rig work turn to waterflood equipment.

One that is managing to diversify is Knighten Machine, started by Bill Knighten in his garage with one pick-up he'd driven to pipelines when he worked as a field mechanic.

His daughter, Margaret Bryant, said Knighten Mahine is primarily an oilfield machine shop, working with the majors, independents, supply companies, or gas plants, working on pumps on vacuum trucks and similar equipment. But the shop has also done work for bakers, "for people that need things built or drilled."

The company does work in Mexico, Mississippi and Alabama and some in Colorado and California.

Yet another Odessa machine shop, McAfee Manufacturing Inc., manufactures MMI brand heater and wellhead chokes as well as tools for hydrostatic testing and liquid level controllers. The shop, which employs 12, still does some machine work. It was established in 1970 by Delmer McAfee and ships equipment nationwide and some to Canada.

Odessa, said Jim Hobbs, is a good place for a business with a decent workforce comprised of people who want to work and the area usually has plenty of activity.

David Carrigan said "I think Odessa is an oilfield service and manufacturing center because the oil industry was here, and machine shops and manufacturers came here to service the oil industry. A lot of the machine shops that were around in the 1920s aren't around anymore, and I don't know why. Maybe they just couldn't hang on."

He said the workforce seems to be settling down, with machinists staying longer at one shop. "There's not as many transient workers as we used to have; people used to switch shops a lot more."

He added that he thinks the machine shops should try to educate the workforce better.

"They're only as educated as they have to be to do the work, and I think we ought to require more of them."

Tending to training

By Ellen Hopkins

Keeping up with the ever-changing oil industry — from OSHA regulations to improved technology — is a never-ending job that requires constant training, but Odessa has that covered with a college called Odessa.

Odessa College's Petroleum Technology curriculum is an ideal means for local industry personnel to pair education and job performance, according to J.D. Roberts, chairman of petroleum technology at Odessa College.

A Petroleum Technology Advisory Board of local professionals helps set the curriculum for the department, to insure Odessa always has a well-trained workforce.

Staying abreast of environmental issues is just one area of concern to local majors and independents. It takes specialized training and Odessa College is offering a HAZWOPER course to fill the demand.

"HAZWOPER stands for Hazardous Waste Operations and Emergency Response," explained OC instructor Lynn Reese. This hands-on, 40 hour course explains the hazardous materials classification and communicates the OSHA directives for cleaning up hazardous spills.

"The course is designed around OSHA 29 CFR 1910, and if you deal with hazardous materials you know what that means," said Roberts. "The course is hands-on because Odessa College has a physical location with a pump jack and heater treater. Students are taught which type OSHA suit to wear, depending on the type of spill they could encounter."

Reese, formerly an instructor at the University of Alaska, said the need for these classes stems from the many hazardous sites being discovered around the world.

The latest safety training techniques are the subject of a 16-hour Oilfield Worker Safety program which Roberts said is ideal for service contractors hired by a major to work on location.

"This course is actually two eight-hour days and covers hydrogen sulfide training as well as lock out training, which is learning to cut the electricity on a pump jack before beginning any maintenance work." he said.

Reese said this course covers 10 topics in all, including hearing and eye protection. "We cover all the 1910 regulations."

"Our 15-hour Environmental Issues course has been taught the last two years by Leonard Trout, head of Arco's Environmental Department," Roberts said.

Roberts said Odessa College also offers one-day seminars like "Toubleshooting Beam Lift" scheduled for this May. "This will cover four or five subjects, like corrosion, and is designed for technicians, production engineers and production foremen."

"We offer a computer course for beginners because a lot of people just don't know much about them," said Roberts. "It's a very basic course that introduces computer nomenclature, and teaches DOS spreadsheets, word processing and other fundamentals."

Clean-up perforations, remove scales, paraffins and debris with the PerfClean Tool's® powerful shock waves.

Restore the permeability and porosity of your wells by economically treating with the PerfClean Tool. It is a safe and efficient way of cleaning new perforations prior to other stimulation treatments, as well as formation testing, and removal of scales, paraffins and other debris. This lightweight tool has no moving parts and is easily transported to remote or offshore locations.

With the PerfClean® Tool...
- Remove scale from the perforation tunnel and/or wellbore pipe
- Remove skin damage caused by perforating operations and wellbore damage prior to formation testing and/or stimulation
- Lower treating pressures required for stimulation treatments
- Enhance matrix acidizing operations
- Increase effectiveness of chemical treatments
- Increase effectiveness of horizontal well stimulation treatments

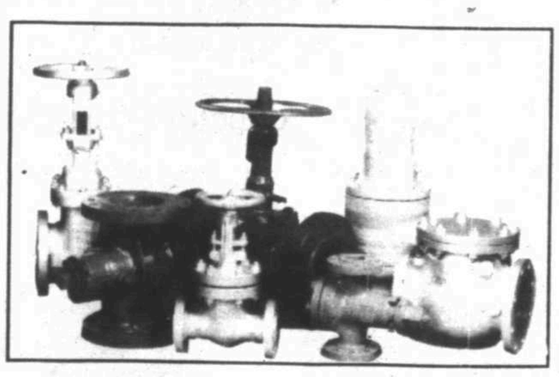

Case History 12 '92
Gaines County, Texas: Wolfcamp Formation
Operator called to run the PerfClean tool on a well that had a history of scale and paraffin problems. Production was at 6 bbls of oil, 20 bbls of water/day prior to the PerfClean treatment. The treatment was performed by moving the PerfClean tool through the perforated interval while pumping 190 bbls of an acid/solvent blend at approx. 2.8 bbls/min. Immediately after completing the treatment the operator put the well back on pump.
Following the recovery of the treatment fluid the well produced 60 bbls of oil, 62 bbls of water/day. Forty-five days after the treatment the well stabilized at 100 BBLS OF OIL, 60 bbls of water/day. The operator stated that this single treatment substantially increased the overall production of the lease.

Giant fabricator looks to diversity

■ Partech, the Basin's largest manufacturer is eyeing projects outside oilpatch.

By Joe Dominey

ODESSA — Parker Technology Inc., doing business as Partech, is an Odessa oilpatch manufacturer that is looking to diversify.

A subsidary of Parker Drilling Co. of Tulsa, Partech, the largest fabrication plant in the Permian Basin, offers a wide range of machining, fabrication and welding applications.

David Holland, administrative manager, runs the business side while Joe Brown, operations manager, runs the plant.

Said Holland: "The company has been working on diversifying into non-oil related work, but we're still pretty wide open and haven't narrowed it down to any one field as yet."

He said that two areas of oil-related diversification now under way is the fabrication of components for stimulation and production equipment such as frac, acidizing and blending trucks.

"We're also going to be under contract to build major components for wind turbines for electrical power generation in California. These are three 'wind farms' in the Tahachapi area," Holland explained. Partech's customer operates three wind farms on the edge of Southern California's Mojave Desert. Wind-generated electrical energy is a growing industry, and may become more attractive if exempted from the proposed Btu tax on fossil fuels.

Located on 64 acres east of Odessa between IH-20 and Business 2, its 200,000 square feet of shop, ware house and office space house a totally integrated custom manufacturing facility. One of its machine shop bays has 36,000 square feet of floor space occupied by assorted CNC lathes, horizontal boring and milling machines, gear hobbers, all of varying capacities.

Founded in 1957 as O.I.M.E. by Odessan Ed Phillips, the plant was engaged in manufacturing helicopter transportable drilling rigs for Parker Drilling Co. when it sold to Parker in 1975. Parker added capacity and machine tools during the 1977-81 boom period and the employee roster grew to about 500, plus another 100 contract welders, working around the clock.

Holland joined the company in 1975 in the accounting area. During the boom he moved to the manufacturing area and was named president of O.I.M.E. in 1984. During a reorganization in 1988, he went back to the administrative area. After the company "pulled in its horns," according to Holland, it became Parker's specialty shop. The name was changed to Partech in 1988.

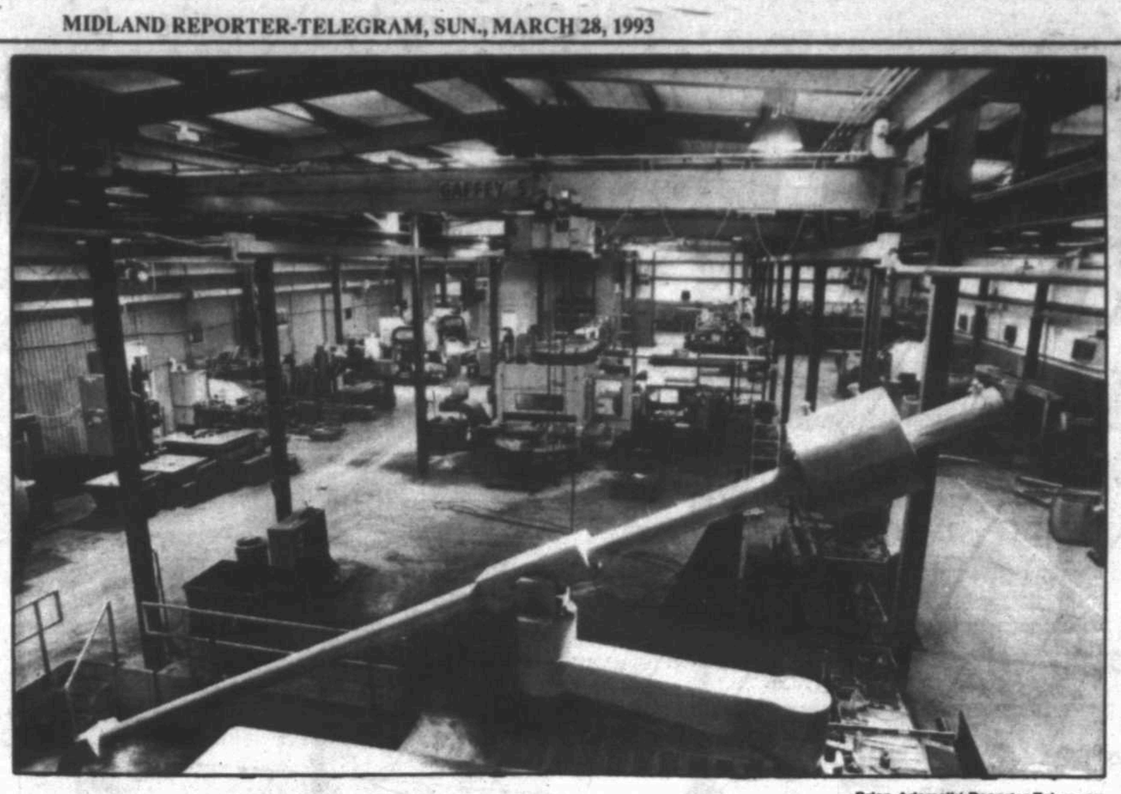

Currently the plant employs about 40, working one shift per day. It does "a fair amount" of machine contracting for customers in the local area, El Paso and in New Mexico.

Starting about 20 years ago, O.I.M.E. built 30 Heli-Rigs, which are modular units designed for portability. The rig package can be disassembled into unitized three-ton loads and transported by helicopter to remote drilling locations. Named TBA (transportable by anything), these rigs can also be moved by barge, truck, train or Hercules aircraft.

The latest version is the "All Terrain 2000E" which is an SCR diesel electric rig with a hook load capacity of one million pounds and is capable of drilling in excess of 20,000 feet, making it the world's largest TBA rig.

In the early 1980s, Partech designed the self-contained self-propelled Arctic Drilling Complex. These entirely self-contained, fully enclosed drilling rigs and support facilities were built all on wheels or tracks for Arctic drilling in Alaska. Rig modules can be moved quickly from location to lo-

Vortex Microsystems

Electric motor failures cutting into your profits?

The Vortex reduces electrical failures in electric motors.

The Vortex offers better protection, monitoring motor operation,

* "downstream", and
* "upstream"

at the incoming power.

A few of the Vortex's protective features

* Overload
* Underload
* Current unbalance
* Overvoltage
* Undervoltage
* Wrong phase rotation

While it protects from

* Operator excessive restart attempts
* Operator restart after lockout
* Operator premature restart
* Operator adjustment of setpoints

Centrilift, A Baker Hughes company, manufactures the Vortex Microsystems Motor Controller.

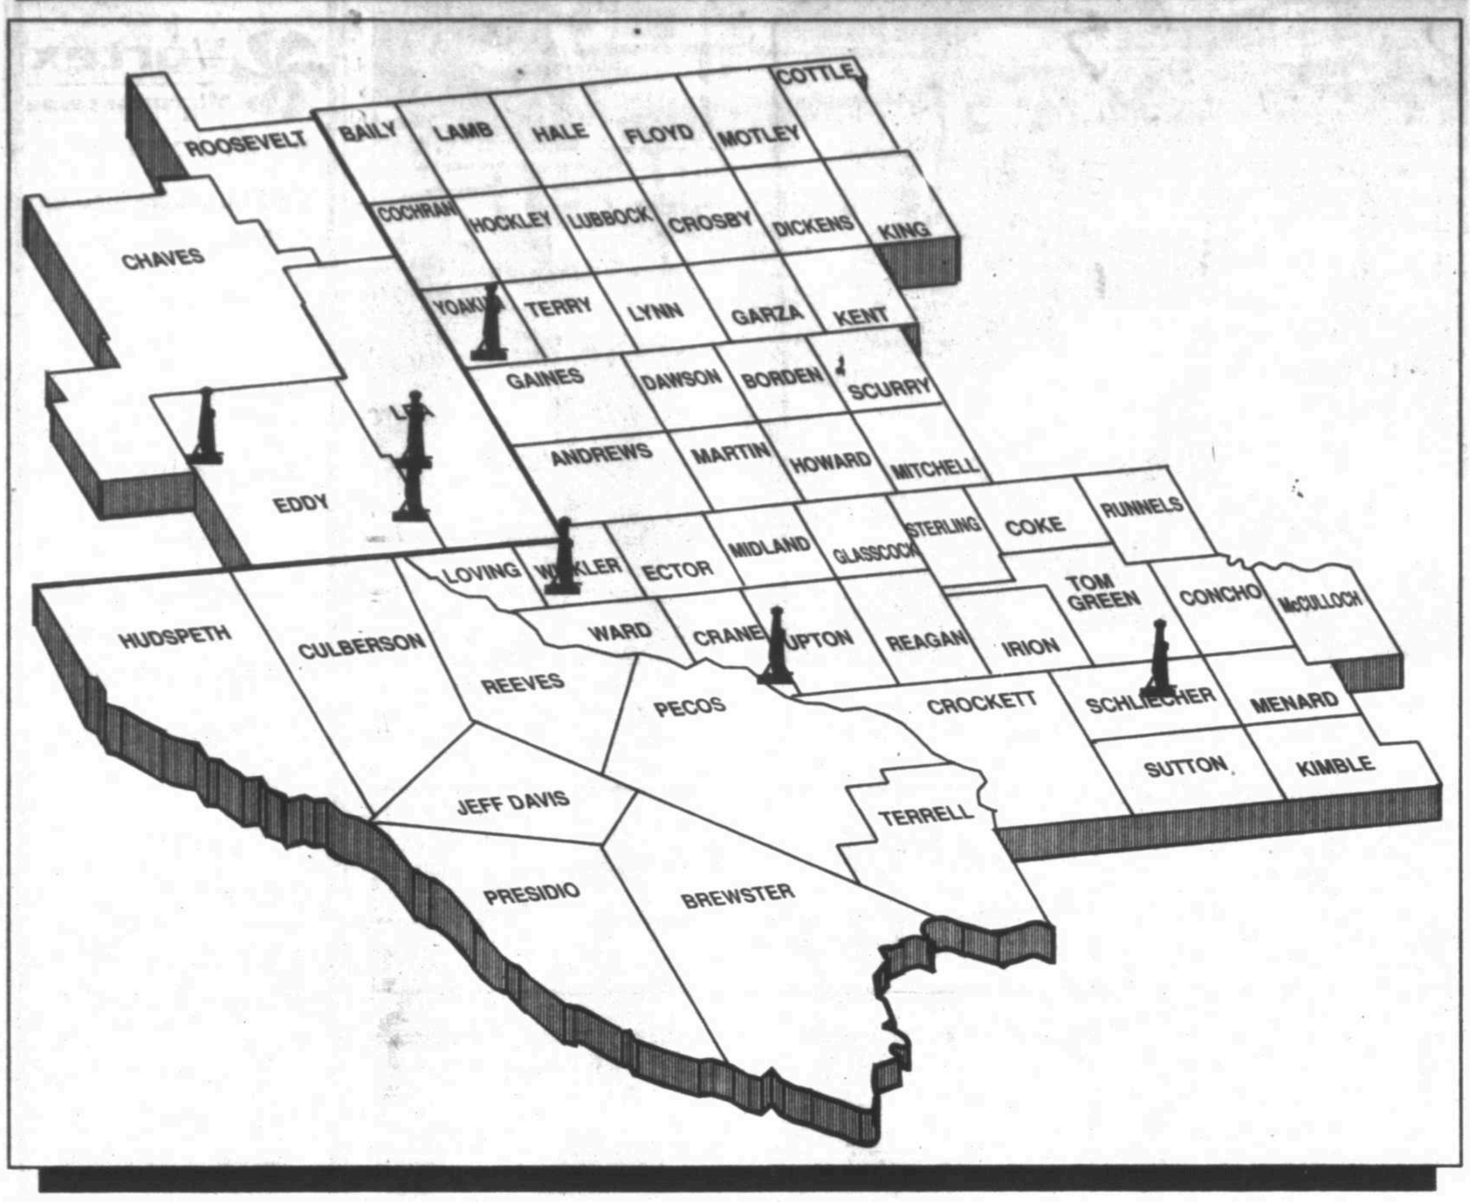

Distributors throughout the Permian Basin .....and the world.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Eddy County yields Delaware find

Staff report

A Delaware oil discovery has been completed in Eddy County, N.M.

ENRON OIL & GAS CO. potentialed the No. 8 Poker Lake State "32" to flow 190 barrels of 47 gravity crude, 290 Mcfd and 42 barrels of water on a 15/56 inch choke. The well flowed from perforations 7,745 to 7,848 ft., which had been fractured with 54,500 gallons of gel and 232,500 lbs. 20/40 sand.

The well was drilled to 8,050 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from north and 660 ft. from west lines of Section 32, T23s, R31e.

Winkler records Wolfcamp strike

A Wolfcamp Sandstone discovery has been recorded in Winkler County, eight miles west of Wink.

O'NEILL PROPERTIES LTD. finaled the No. 1 University "20-11" to flow 116 barrels of 43 gravity crude, 118 Mcfd and 63 barrels of water on a 10/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 900 psi. The well flowed from perforations 11,679 to 11,784 ft., which had been acidized with 3,000 gallons of 15 percent HCL acid and fractured with 70,000 gallons of gel and 105,000 lbs. sand.

Permitted as a 13,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 13,240 ft. and plugged back to 11,805 ft. A five inch liner was hung from 11,816 to 13,101 ft.

Formation tops, on kelly bushing elevation of 2,835 ft., include the Cherry Canyon Sandstone at 6,310 ft., Brushy Canyon Sandstone at 7,436, Bone Spring Limestone at at 8,912, Wolfcamp Shale at 11,119, Wolfcamp Sandstone at 11,620, and Wolfcamp Detrital at 12,157 ft.

Location is 660 ft. from north and east lines of Section 11, Block 20, ULS survey.

Delaware discovery pumps 55 barrels

MANZANO OIL CORP. has completed a Delaware discovery in Lea County, N.M., 1-3/4 northeast of an Atoka gas discovery, nine miles southeast of Halfway.

On potential test, the No. 1 Anderson pumped 55 barrels of 40 gravity crude, 65 Mcfd and 155 barrels of water from perforations 8,657 to 8,693 ft., which had been acidized with 800 gallons of 10 percent HCL acid and fractured with 15,000 gallons of gel and 46,000 lbs. 16/30 sand.

Permitted as an 8,800 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 8,763 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

On kelly bushing elevation of 3,685 ft., formation tops include the Cretaceous Anhydrite at 950 ft., Base Salt at 3,770, Delaware Sandstone at 4,721, Brushy Canyon at 8,657, and Bone Spring at 8,720 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from south and 330 ft. from west lines of Section 35, T21s, R32e.

The well is 1-3/4 miles northeast of Getty Oil Co.'s No. 1 Bilbry Federal, finaled in May 1985 for a calculated absolute open flow of 1.244 Mmcfd from perforations 13,638 to 13,726 ft.

Atoka gas strike finaled in Eddy

Eddy County, N.M. has yielded an Atoka gas discovery, southwest of Hope.

MITCHELL ENERGY CORP. reentered the No. 1 State "36", testing it to flow 56 Mcfd on an open choke from perforations 7,198 to 7,494 ft. Flowing tubing pressure was 120 psi. The producing interval was acidized with 3,500 gallons 15 percent NeFe acid.

Originally drilled to 8,150 ft., the well was plugged back to 7,600 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 8,145 ft.

Location is 750 ft. from north and 2,173 ft. from east lines of Section 36, T19s, R21e.

Undesignated find tests for 2.3 Mmcf

GEONATURAL RESOURCES INC. has completed an undesignated discovery in Schleicher County, a half-mile northeast of a 5,807 ft. dry hole, eight miles northeast of Eldorado.

The No. 1 String of Pearls/Ethel T. Jones was tested for a calculated absolute open flow of 2.3 Mmcfd from perforations 5,596 to 5,686 ft. The interval was acidized with 2,000 gallons of 15 percent HCL acid and fractured with 986 barrels of gel and 68,500 lbs. 20/40 sand.

Scheduled as a 6,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 5,910 ft. and plugged back to 5,896 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set.

The well topped the Adams Branch at 4,888 ft., Canyon Shelf Limestone at 5,332 ft. and Strawn Limestone at 5,788 ft. on ground elevation of 2,372 ft.

Location isa 2,173 ft. from south and east lines of Section 20, Block M, GH&SA survey, Abst. 1730.

Exxon completes Silurian strike

Yoakum County has yielded a Silurian discovery, surrounded by production in the Wasson East field, 14 miles south-southwest of Plains.

EXXON CO. U.S.A. finaled the No. 40 E. Randall to pump 227 barrels of 37.2 gravity crude, 15 Mcfd and one barrel of water from perforations 9,496 to 9,516 ft., which had been acidized with 500 gallons of HCL.

Scheduled as a 10,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 9,591 ft. and plugged back to 9,560 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 9,569 ft.

Formation tops, on kelly bushing elevation of 3,634 ft., include the Rustler at 2,100 ft., Yates at 2,882, Tubb at 6,827, Wichita Albany at 7,440, Pennsylvanian at 8,865 and Silurian at 9,492 ft.

Location is 2,100 ft. from north and 1,750 ft. from east lines of Section 833, Block D, J.H. Gibson survey.

Glorieta opened in Crossett field

Glorieta production has apparently been opened in the Crossett field of Crane County, six miles west-northwest of McCamey.

VENUS OIL CO. finaled the No. 1 M.H. Griffith to flow 24 barrels of 41.2 gravity crude, 183 Mcfd and six barresl of water on a 22/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 140 psi. The well flowed from perforations 2,931 to 3,206 ft., which had been acidized with 4,500 gallons of 15 percent HCL acid.

Drilled to 5,500 ft., the well was plugged back to 3,518 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

On ground elevation of 2,379 ft., formation tops include the Glorieta at 2,742 ft., Tubb at 3,348, Detrital at 5,147, Devonian at 5,295 and Silurian at 5,478 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from southeast and southwest lines of Section 40, Block 35, H&TC survey.

The operator has requested a field designation of Crossett (Glorieta) for the discovery.

Coastal idles operations in Kansas

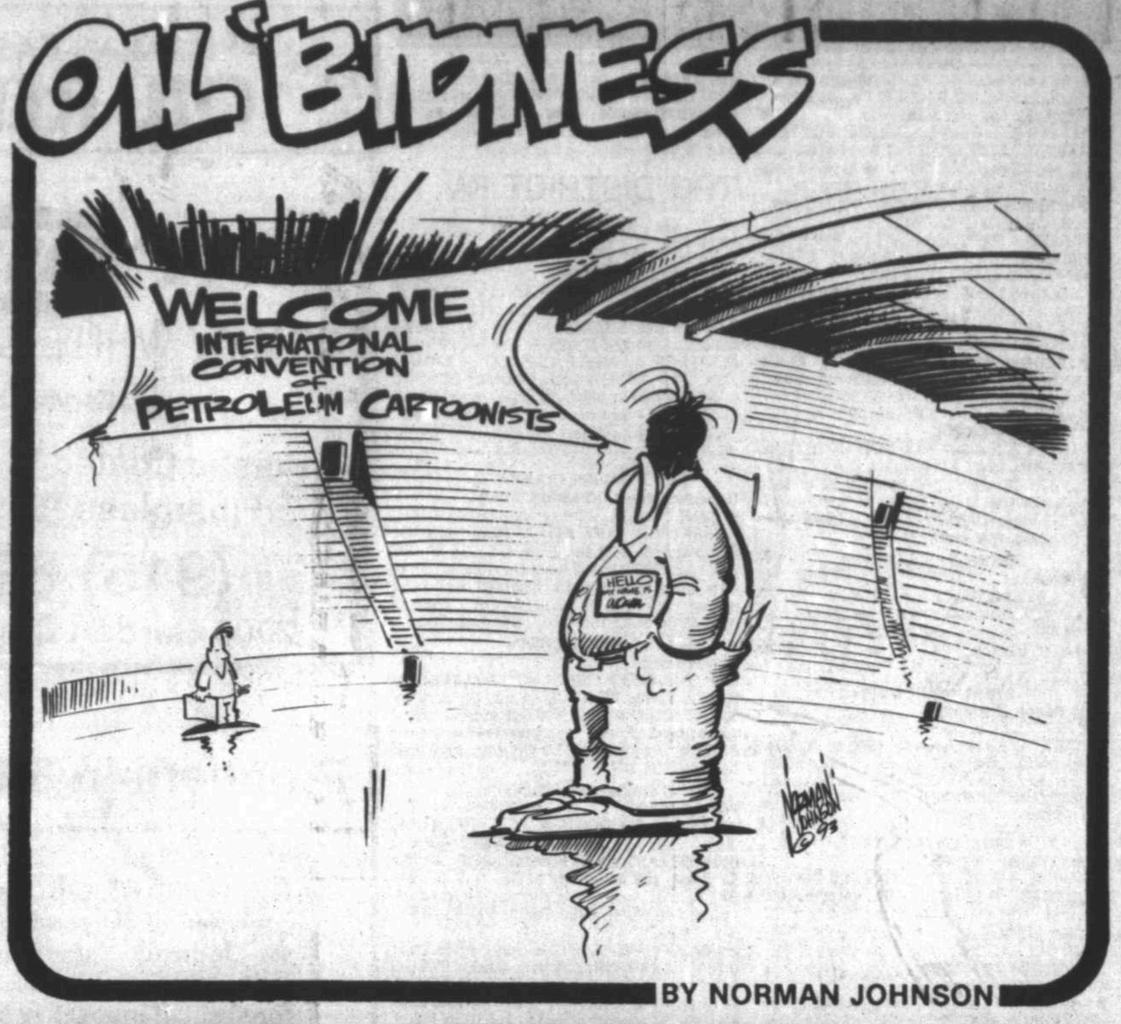

WICHITA, Kan. — Coastal Refining & Marketing, Inc., announced today it will suspend process operations beginning early this summer at its Wichita and El Dorado, Kan., refineries until business conditions improve.

Coastal said it intends to place the idled process equipment in a condition where it could be restarted should business conditions warrant, although some equipment could be moved if more economic uses could be fount for it.

Certain operations, such as terminal and product blending facilities, environmental projects and refinery catalyst rejuvenation services, will continue operating.

By year-end, staff will be reduced from the current 293 to approximately 60 employees. Some displaced employees will be offered jobs at other Coastal locations, as appropriate, and the company said it would do whatever was possible to help remaining employees find new jobs.

The suspension at the Kansas refineries will not affect availability of Coastal products at branded retail outlets or to Coastal's other customers.

WHEN YOU NEED TO GET FACE TO FACE WITH THE PERMIAN BASIN OIL INDUSTRY :

PERMIAN BASIN OIL REPORT

The Permian Basin is an oil and gas producing empire of 100,000 square miles with an oil well for every square mile. Comprised of 54 counties in Southeast New Mexico and West Texas, this far flung industry accounts for roughly 20 percent of the nation's total oil production.

Yet, a long standing problem has been the lack of a single newspaper to serve the thousands of companies and over 40,000 workers involved in exploration, land, production, drilling, oilfield service and supply, pipelines and construction, refining, and transportation.

But now, the Permian Basin Oil Report, published weekly by the Midland Reporter-Telegram, has become the information source for the Permian Basin oil industry.

Packed with information and articles about oil and gas people, products, companies, issues, events, drilling, exploration, and production, the Oil Report appears each Sunday as a section of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Additionally, it is mailed to producers, operators and oilfield service companies throughout the Permian Basin and in 13 Southwest states.

If the Permian Basin is your target market, the Permian Basin Oil Report is the way to reach it.

B-Line, Growing With The Permian Basin

Constant expansion to meet the needs of the trucking industry and fleet operator along with those of the general public has been the rule with B-Liner Filter and Supply, Inc., since 1973.

As a Texaco wholesaler from 1964 to 1973, Omer Bishop, founder and owner of B-Line, saw the need for a one-stop supply house for the parts both for his gasoline trucks and company cars. Along with is son Gary and one sales representative, B-Line was opened at the corner of 9th Street and Grant Avenue in Odessa. As the sales volume and inventory grew, moves were made to new and larger locations in 1975 and again in 1983 to its present location at 1509 W. 2nd Street in Odessa.

With the largest inventory of truck and auto parts at any retail location in the Permian Basin and staffed by both Omer and Gary along with nine sales representatives combining a vast knowledge of auto and truck needs with years of experience, B-Line can fill all of your needs. Filters for your automobiles, trucks, off-road equipment and industrial needs are in stock. Also, B-Line will see to your specific needs with custom manufactured liquid and air filters for both the field and the plant.Oil, both packaged and in drums, along with antifreeze, hydraulic oil, ttransdraulic fluid, cutting oil and diesel/gas additives are available.

B-Line's latest expansion is now in the works. Having acquired the old Dunnigan Tool Building across the street from their current location, B-Line will soon open a quick lube and oil change facility designed to meet the needs of the 18 wheeler and fleet rucks. Providing quick and economical service this facility will meet all quick and economical service this facility will meet all EPA and Texas Water Commission requirements while greatly reducing down time for your fleet. Watch for this grand opening soon.

With plenty of truck parking, large inventory, experienced staff and a helpful atmosphere, is there any reason not to come by and see for yourself how B-Line can meet your needs?

As Omer likes to say, "We can talk all day but one trip to B-Line tells the story."

Bio Stimulation: Low Cost -- Big Results

Among the necessary but costly expenses of doing business in today's environment is the containment and clean up of oil spills and oil contaminated soils. Not only are these costs a matter of being a good corporate citizen, they are also the law.

For cleaning up crude, contaminated soil, BIO-STIMULATION has proven to provide the most "bang for the buck." In order for soil to be remediated it needs four basic items: oxygen, bacteria, nutrients and water.

The supply of oxygen can be greatly increased by the tilling of the soil. A depth of 18-24 inches is usually sufficient . The crusty top layer is broken up and fresh soil from lower layers is mixed in.

In most cases the bacteria indigenous to the soil is sufficient for remediation purposes. If needed, however, a boost can be given to speed up the growth of the bacteria that feeds on oil.

Nutrients are ideal for speeding up the remediation process. One of the most common nutrients used is a high nitrogen fertilizer.

Water is also applied to the soils. By the addition of water the growth of the oil feeding bacteria is increased which in turn increases the nutrients in the soil. This chain reaction accelerates the remediation of the soil.

M & P Environmental Services employs personnel with 12 years of experience in the remediation of crude oil contaminated soils. In order to live up to their motto of "let oil spills ruin our day, not yours," a 24-hour emergency spill response phone line has been installed. Day or night, (915) 558-3564 will get a highly trained spill response team working on your particular spill problems.

For more information or for a no obligation free site evaluation call 563-2328. You'll be pleasantly surprised at the low cost...just pennies per square foot, of getting your spill taken care of.

You can probably find it in Odessa

By Ellen Hopkins

Looking for someone to drill a well, plug a well, squeeze a well, test a well, log a well, or do any one of several hundred other things that needs to be done to an oil or gas well? There is probably someone in Odessa that does it, and if there isn't there soon will be.

The rig count may be down, but there are still 10 drilling companies located in Odessa with specialties ranging from directional drilling to generator rental to drilling with air, dust, mist, mud mist, foam or aerated fluid.

According to the 1993 Burmass Permian Basin Oil & Gas Directory, Odessa remains home to 14 well servicing companies that can handle the workovers, completions, swabbing, scraping or plugging of whatever wells are drilled.

Acidizing, fracturing, cementing, chemical stimulation, waterfloods and enhanced recovery can be handled by some of the 28 well treating companies found in Odessa. And that action can probably be recommended by one of the 10 professional engineering firms located in the city.

Permian Basin producers' offices are found from Elida, N.M. to Chattanooga, Tenn., with 21 of them located in Odessa. Their products could be transported by any of eight pipeline/marketers which office in the city.

Here are about 11 types of logging systems that can be run to determine the potential existence of reserves downhole and 31 Odessa logging/wireline/perforating companies to run them.

Odessa has 10 companies that handle fire, well control or other safety services. And the city is home to seven environmental specialist companies including spill response and asbestos removal capabilties.

There are 22 miscellaneous field service companies to choose from with expertise in one or more of the following areas: rig service, coating and painting, anchoring, pit lining, fencing, pumping unit repair and installation and welding.

Downhole, submersible, centrifugal or hydraulic pump supply and servicing companies including precision machine work, fishing tool repair and rod repair number 49 in all for Odessa.

There are four exterminating/weed control companies and seven businesses specializing in steam cleaning.

Truck suppliers are plentiful in Odessa with expertise ranging from heavy haul to forklift, vacuum to transport. They number 27 in all. And there are three companies in the city offering light, medium and heavy duty truck leasing and/or fleet sales.

There are 18 oil field construction firms, two of which specialize in roads, pit and caliche work.

The oil industry needs electrical service for ground testing, rig-up controls, motor/generator repair, controller systems, troubleshooting, pole line construction and vibration analysis. Sixteen Odessa companies have qualifications in at least one of these areas.

For gas compression sales, compressor components or service thereof, 10 Odessa companies are listed. For engine sales and service, including diesel engines, generators, prime power and service on engine clutches or rings there are 27 related businesses.

Tools and equipment can also be rented from Odessa companies. Rentals of generators, tanks, drill pipe, straightening tools, blowout preventers and drilling equipment of all kinds can be found at some of the 56 Odessa companies leading such equipment.

Odessa is home to 22 pipeline/wellhead inspection companies. There are 10 pipe coating companies, four pipe straightening outfits and four that provide tong service.

Squeeze, test, treating and production packers and anchors can be located at 13 different businesses in the city.

One doesn't normally think of Odessa as a major oil company town, but it is. Both Phillips and Amoco Production Company have large contingents of employees in Odessa, that look after operations in the Cowden fields. Above are most of the 88 employees based in Amoco's North Cowden Operations Center, who posed for this picture after completing one million man-hours worked, which represents nearly seven years and counting, without a lost-time accident. The employees were treated to a banquet and lauded by Operations Foreman Gary Bullock for their "well deserved" record. To achieve the record the employees practiced awareness with team meetings and realistic drills.

cation in hostile weather of 65 degrees below zero and winds up to 100 MPH.

A drilling module of this type weighs up to 60 million pounds. The new model has a revolutionary rig-moving system which protects roads and tundra by redistributing the unit's weight as it moves under its own power from one well site to another. It also features specific environmental safeguards, such as a closed-loop mud system and zero-discharge liquid system.

"We also have teamed up with some other companies (besides Parker)," Holland said. Partech has recently built all weather rig components for use in Siberia for Conoco.

Partech also designed and built a concrete island drilling system used by Arco and Exxon in the Beaufort Sea off the north coast of Alaska. The system only drills in the winter months when the sea freezes the concrete structure in place.

The company also designed and built the world's largest drawworks hoisting system for a drilling rig. Weight 237,000 pounds, the 4000E drawworks is capable of hoisting two million pounds and has four 1,000 horsepower electric drive motors.

The company also has been involved in Defense Department research assignments. Working with its sister company, Parker Kinetic Designs of Austin, Partech built the equipment for the modular pulsed power supply for rail guns in hypervelocity projectile research. Partech built six homopolar generators capable of delivering a discharge current of 1.5 million amperes per unit. These units weigh 20,000 pounds eight and contain a rotor which turns on hydrostatic bearings at 6,200 rpm.

The company's custom design capability is supported by 16 SUN Microsystems engineering workstations with CIMLINC and Autocad software on a Unix Operating System linked together with Ethernet Communications Protocol.

Using a computer aided design system, engineers generate design layouts to produce production detail drawings. Parts are then reviewed and toleranced to insure proper assembly.

"We have the physical capacity and proven expertise to undertake a variety of projects which demand precision as well as large equipment," Holland observed.

Partech remains the largest fully-equipped fabrication plant in the Permian Basin.

American Exploration, lenders agree

HOUSTON — American Exploration Co. has agreed with its institutional lenders to amend the terms of the note purchase agreement relating to $35 million of 11 percent subordinated notes due December 31, 2001.

The amendment enables the Company to increase its bank indebtedness from the current level of $54 million up to percent65 million as needed prior to July 1, 1993. The company currently has a $60 million bank credit facility plus a $7.5 million working capital facility. Under the terms of its bank credit agreement, the amount available to the Company is scheduled to be redetermined in March and September of each year. As part of the amendment, the Company also agreed to a limit of $7.0 million on exploration expenditures during the first half of 1993.

Picwick Production

On her first morning in her new home, Mary (Lindsey Trott), left, meets Martha (Charlotte Martin) when the latter is cleaning. Martha says to Mary, "I'm Martha, and thou art Miss Mary." Mary says, "I know who I am."

Colin (Tyler Rhodes) stands on his own legs for the first time in his life as Dickson (Jordan Scribner) helps him balance and Mary (Lindsey Trott) and Ben (Will Coombes) watch in this scene from the Pickwick Players' production of "The Secret Garden."

Youth performers make dead garden come alive

"It was the sweetest, most mysterious-looking place any one could imagine. The high walls which shut it in were covered with the leafless stems of roses which were so thick, that they matted together. . .

"No wonder it is still," Mary whispered. "I am the first person who has spoken in here for 10 years."

"The Secret Garden"

One of the best loved children's stories comes to Midland Community Theatre's stage April 3 when the Pickwick Players present Frances Hodgson Burnett's "The Secret Garden."

"Virtually all the dialogue in the play is straight from the book," said Rene Brisster Chambers, educational theater director at MCT. "It is not a musical, and yet there's a lot of musical underscoring — a lot of background music, but not real singing."

The stage adaptation by Pamela Sterling is faithful to the novel as it tells the story of young Mary Lennox (Lindsey Trott) who is sent to live in at Misselthwaite Manor, a dreary mansion on the moors of Yorkshire, England, after the death of her parents in India. She suffers from ill health and a sour disposition. With the help of a friendly chambermaid, Martha (Charlotte Martin) and the maid's younger brother, Dickson (Jordan Scribner), Mary learns to like herself and others.

The mysteries that surround her uncle's home seem to center around the Chorale members sing for pleasure of singing

Oil operator George Van Husen and teacher Jane Ward share a common love. As members of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale, both sing for the pleasure of singing.

"It's been easy for me to sing and enjoy it," said Van Husen, who has been a member of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale for 30 years and a member of the First Presbyterian Church choir for 45.

He can't remember for certain how old he was when he began singing. He suspects he was between 10 and 12, which means he has been singing for around 60 years.

"It (singing) just came natural," Van Husen said. "All from the very beginning."

"Singing is my hobby, my first love of things to do," Mrs. Ward said. "I've sung all of my life."

Both will be singing this week when the Chorale

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

■ Muppets to perform

Yellow is the hottest color on the Planet Crayon where the Yellow Queen reigns as the "yellowest of them all" in Sesame Street Live's "Sleeping Birdie," coming to Chaparral Center April 13-14 for three performances.

When her claim to the universal title is challenged by an 8-foot yellow bird from Planet Earth, she's off for Sesame Street to eliminate the competition in this musical production, starring Jim Henson's Sesame Street Muppets.

"Sleeping Birdie," a modern day fairy tale about friends, fun and learning, features Big Bird, Bert, Ernie, Cookie Monster, Groover and all their pals.

The charming Tee Hee from the far away Planet Crayon, introduced in "Big Bird and the ABC's," returns as the Yellow Queen's confidant and traveling companion with no idea what is being planned. The Yellow Queen, a new character, was created especially for this show. The Amazing Mumford also makes his Sesame Street Live debut.

"Sleeping Birdie" is presented by the Minneapolis-based VEE Corp. in cooperation with Children's Television Workshop and produced by Bob Shipstad.

Tickets are available at Chaparral Center box office, Midland Sound and Endless Horizons Records-Odessa, or they may be charged by telephone by calling 685-4584 and using either Mastercard or Visa.

Performances are for 7 p.m. April 13 and 4 and 7 p.m. April 14.

■ MC presents Selena

Selena performs at Chaparral Center at 8 p.m. April 24.

Tickets are priced at $12 general admission and $15 reserved. For ticket information call Chaparral Center, Midland College campus.

Opening act will be Carlos Miranda Y Grupo Meval.

■ Class, recital planned

Kathie Kelton, assistant professor of voice at Pittsburg State University, Pittsburg, Kan., will present a voice master class and recital on the Midland College campus in April.

The master class will be held from 12:30 to 2:30 p.m. April 16 in the choral rehearsal hall, Room 138, in the Allison Fine Arts Building.

The recital performance will be at 8 p.m. April 17 in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium.

Ms. Kelton, who recently completed her doctorate degree in voice at the University of Texas, is an expert in song literature of women composers. Her recital will feature works by Fanny Mendelssohn, Feliz Mendelssohn's sister, and Mrs. H.H.A. Beach, a prolific American woman composer from the turn fo the century.

Those wishing to sing for Ms. Kelton in the master class April 16 need to call Dr. Michael Jordan, vocal music instructor at Midland College, 685-4647.

The April 17 recital is free.

■ Photo group to meet

"In Focus" meets at 7 p.m. today at Vicky Welch's.

"In Focus" is a photographic society. Those attending are asked to bring work. For more information or directions to the meeting call 686-7701.

Membership is open to all.

■ Reception scheduled

ODESSA — A reception is planned today from 2:30 to 4 p.m. for the Art Institute for the Permian Basin and the Ector County Independent School District's annual juried show of works by junior and senior high school students.

The show closes today.

The ECISD art exhibit is planned to increase public knowledge and awareness of the quality of art and art instruction in the public school system, to encourage more students to participate in art and to give the student-artist the experience of preparing his or her work for display in a professional environment.

■ Art work presented

The Midland Fine Arts Center and Gallery, 921 W. Wadley Ave., is presenting the work of Midland artists Daniel and Terese Buckley through April 25.

Buckley is a graduate of Southern Methodist University, where he attained a master of fine art degree, and Washington University, where he did his undergraduate work. His black and white images are derived primarily from the urban landscape and utilize the formal aspects of art such as composition and form.

Mrs. Buckley holds a master of fine arts degree from Southern Illinois University, Edwardville, and a bachelor of arts, summa cum laude, from St. Louis University. She spent her undergraduate senior year in a co-operative program at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. Her realistic landscapes and portrait painting display an attention to detail and visual effects.

The show may be seen between 11 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

■ Gallery shows art

A show featuring the work of Midlanders Mary Lambeth Fish and Jack Hickman will open at Gallery 1114, 1114 N. Big Spring St., with a 7 to 10 p.m. reception Saturday.

The exhibit will remain through May 6.

Ms. Fish will show paintings in oil, watercolor, oilstick and mixed media, as well as drawings in color pencil and graphite. Her work in this show has organic elements and plant forms as its genesis, and color, line and form is taken to varying levels of abstraction.

Ms. Fish received her bachelor of fine arts from Arizona State. She has been a member of gallery 1114 for two years.

Hickman will show recent watercolors and mixed media sculpture incorporating cast pewter, wood and aluminum linotype sheets. The imagery of this work is figuratively based, infusing these figures into playful worlds of their own.

Hickman received his bachelor of fine arts from the University of Texas, Austin, and a master of arts in education from Texas A&I. He was a founding member of gallery 1114. Hickman teaches art and science at Trinity School. His teaching honors include a Christa McAuliffe National Fellowship.

Gallery 1114 is a co-operative center for modern and contemporary art. Hours are 1 to 5 p.m. Thursday through Sunday.

■ Globe presents opree

ODESSA — Opree comes to the Globe Theatre, 2308 Shakespeare Road, at 7 p.m. Saturday.

Gospel performers include Cecil and Jason Hart, and Randy and Candy Thompson. Country western music begins at 8 p.m. with Ed Parker, an ex-sheriff, teacher and rodeo performer from Orange who has a No. 1 song in Europe on an independent label titled "Make My Coffee black."

Also performing country music will be Debbie Cisco of KGEE Radio, LaVone Miles, Rick Canterbury and Jaroy Robert.

Tickets are %5 reserved and $3 general admission.

■ Lent concert planned

Pianist Shari Santorelli will provide the program for the Lunch Hour for Lent Series at First Presbyterian Church, 800 W. Texas Ave., Wednesday.

The concert begins at 12:05 p.m. Lunch is available for a nominal fee 30 minutes before and after the concert.

Mrs. Santorelli is the principal keyboardist with the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale. She began studies with her mother at age 6 and went on to win several competitions, including the Pittsburgh Symphony Young Concerto Competition.

She graduated from the Eastman School of Music with a bachelor of arts in music and the University of Louisville with a master of music degree. She spent several years in Mexico where she performed with the orchestras in Mexico City and Guadalajara. Besides her work with the MOSC, Mrs. Santorelli is on the staff at Midland College and teaches privately in Midland.

All of the concerts in the Lunch Hour Music for Lent are free and open to the public. Nursery care is available by calling the church, 684-7821, and asking for the nursery coordinator.

■ Singer to perform

Former Midlander Luretta Bybee plays the lead in pop singer Carly Simon's opera "Romulus Hunt" being presented at Kennedy Center April 5-11.

Bybee

The opera closed in New York in February.

Miss Bybee, a mezzo soprano, is the daughter of Midlanders Cecil and Helen Bybee.

This year, Miss Bybee will perform in Handel's "Messiah" with the Houston Symphony, sing the role of Preziosilla in "La Forza del Destino" in Montpelier and Giulietta in "Hoffmann" for the New Israeli Opera and perform a return engagement as Isabella in Cologne.

She has performed the title role of Carmen many times, in Tulsa, Dublin, Hawaii and with Texas Opera Theatre, as well as in Peter Brook's "La Tradegie de Carmen" throughout Europe, Australia and the East.

"The Peter Bock 'Carmen' that my husband and I did was pivotal for me as an artist," Miss Bybee said.

"Brook heavily influenced my attitude toward music theater in that, after working with a director of theater and film of his stature, acting became as integral and challenging as the music. And, I must admit, is sometimes more important to me. His premise is very simple — tell the story."

Miss Bybee is married to opera singer Greer Grimsley. The couple have a daughter, Emma, born in February of 1992.

While attending school here, Miss Bybee was a member of Origin.

■ Theater plans comedy

A 1930s wedding night is the setting for a new Texas comedy, "For Marrieds Only," which is coming to the Yucca theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave., April 15.

Texas Premiere Theatre, an acting company based out of the Alamo Street theatre in San Antonio, will bring the two-act comedy to Midland with its original cast after two sell-out runs in San Antonio and full houses in Austin and Corpus Christi.

The Midland premiere is set for 8 p.m. April 15, with other performances April 16 and 17 and 23 and 24.

Tickets go on sale April 5 at Theatre Midland box office, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., or by calling 682-4111. Tickets are $10 for the Yucca's lower level and $8 for the balcony.

"For Marrieds Only" is directed by Danny Spear, who returned to Texas in 1991 aftyer two decades of acting in Los Angeles, London and New York.

The comedy is by J. Tom Graham, a Texas Hill Country newspaperman.

■ Auditions scheduled

Open auditions for the Andrew Lloyd Webber rock opera "Jesus Christ Superstar" have been rescheduled for 1:30 p.m. April 24 and 7:30 p.m. April 25 at 2311 Elizabeth Ave.

The Permian Players of Midland, a local repertory troupe, will stage the show May 20-29.

Opening night will be a fundraiser for the West Texas Names Quilt Project.

Proceeds from the event will benefit the organization to help bring the NAMES Project AIDS Memorial Quilt to Midland. The quilt is made up of 3X6 panels dedicated to the memory of someone who has died of AIDS. It was first displayed across the Capitol Mall in Washington, D.C., Oct. 11, 1987.

Bayou Wadley will cater the opening night fundraiser.

Parts are available for youth and adults in various voice ranges.

The casting committee will include the music director Janice Archer, choreographer Lisa Vaughn, and director Andy Salcedo.

For more information or audition materials call 684-4230.

■ Show to be broadcast

The second opera in the Metropolitan Opera's broadcast of Richard Wagner's four-opera cycle, "Die Walkure," will be broadcast live from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House Saturday at 11:30 a.m. Central Time.

The broadcast will be heard locally over radio stations KCRS, 550 AM, and KOCV, 91.3, stereo.

The cast includes Gwyneth Jones as Brunnhilde, Mechthild Gessendorf as Sieglinde, Christa Ludwig as Fricka, Gary lakes as Siegmund, James Morris as Wotan and Matti Salminen as Hunding.

James Levine is the conductor for the entire "Ring" cycle. The announcer is Peter Allen.

"Die Walkure" is the single most popular of the four "Ring" operas with 24 airings over the 53-year history of the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera radio broadcasts. The cycle continues April 10 with "Siegfried" and concludes April 17 with "Gotterdammerung."

In the first intermission Anthony Tommasini, an opera lecturer and pianist will discuss Wagner and "Die Walkure."

In the second intermission panelists for Texaco's Opera Quiz are George Jellinek, host of New York radio station WQXR's nationally syndicated program "Teh Vocal Scene," Speight Jenkins, general director of the Seattle Opera; and Charles Osborne, a London-based author and lecturer.

Quizmaster will be Edward Downes.

■ Director is honored

Don Th. Yaeger, music director and conductor of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale, has been invited to join the recommendation boards of two of New York's prestigious musical organizations — the Avery Fisher Program and The Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center.

"It is, indeed, exciting and rewarding to be asked to be a part of such an illustrious group of American musicians," said Jaeger.

The Avery Fisher Artist Program was established in 1974 as part of a major gift by Avery Fisher to Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts. One of the purposes of Fisher's benefaction was to provide recognition to outstanding instrumentalists who are United States citizens. Since 1975, a number of distinguished artists have been recipients in the program.

The Avery Fisher Artist Program is not a competition and individual artists may not apply directly. Nominations are made by the recommendation board, which is comprised of nationally known instrumentalists, conductors, composers, music educators, managers and presenters. Final selections are made by the executive committee.

The program is administered by Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts. the Avery Fisher Program makes awards in two categories: the Avery Fisher Prize and Avery Fisher Career Grants. Past recipients of the Prize are, among others, such noted American musicians as Yo-Yo Ma, Andre Watts and Lynn Harrell.

The Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center looks to members of its recommendation board to suggest composers of chamber music who should be considered for the society's annual $10,000 Elise L. Stoegar Prize.

"I do believe these invitations reflect in large part on the reputation of our work here in West Texas, and particularly on the success and prominence of our National Young Artist Competition, which for 30 years has been sponsored by the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale and the symphony guilds in both communities," Jaeger said.

"We must not lose sight of the importance of maintaining a leadership position in quality music in West Texas. Doing so remains vital to the kind of growth and development in our two communities which will reflect, historically, on the true worth of our existence in the late 20th and early 21st centuries."

■ Jazz Classic is set

The 1993 Midland Jazz Classic is set for Sept. 30 through Oct. 3 at the Midland Hilton and Towers, Wall Avenue at Loraine Street.

Performing for the event to date are Randy Sandke, Scott Hamilton, Ken Peplowski, Abe Most, Howard Alden, Bucky Pizzarelli, Ralph Sutton, Ross Tompkins, Jack Lesberg, Milt Hinton and Jack Hanna.

Seats outside the sponsor area are assigned on a first come, first serve basis. Checks are now being accepted.

Cost is $150 per seat, which includes all four performances. No single admission tickets are sold. Performances run from 8 p.m. to midnight that Thursday through Saturday and 2 to 5:30 p.m. that Sunday.

There will be no smoking in the ballroom. For more information call Bobby Crues, 683-5208 or 694-2136, or Max Christensen, 682-5334.

Checks may be mailed to Midland Jazz Association, P.O. Box 4054, Midland, Texas 79704.

Hall of Fame inducts two

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. (AP) — Maureen O'Hara and the late Jay Silverheels were inducted Saturday into the National Cowboy Hall of Fame's "Hall of Great Western Performers."

Previous inductees include Gary Cooper, John Wayne and Barbara Stanwyck, to name a few.

Ms. O'Hara accepted the honor personally at the 32nd Annual Western Heritage Awards at the Cowboy Hall Saturday night. Clayton Moore, who played the Lone Ranger to Silverheels' Tonto, accepted for Silverheels.

Ms. O'Hara starred in 52 movies over more than three decades, including five films with legendary director John Ford.

Silverheels, a Mohawk, starred in more than 20 western films, but it was his role as Tonto that made him a household name.

Western Heritage Awards also were distributed in 15 categories of western literature, music, television and film. In addition, two director's awards were presented.

Tommy Lee Jones was emcee for the black-tie event, which also featured actors Barry Corbin, Hugh O'Brian and Steve Ford.

BEST SELLERS

The listings below are based on computer-processed sales figures from 3,000 bookstores and from representative wholesalers with more than 28,000 other retail outlets, including variety stores and supermarkets. The figures are statistically adjusted to represent sales in all such outlets across the United States. In Advice and How-to, five titles are listed because, beyond that point, sales in this category are not generally large enough to make a longer list statistically reliable.

FICTION

1. THE CLIENT, by John Grisham. (Doubleday, $23.50.) A deadly secret, revealed by a lawyer just before he commits suicide, presents serious problems for an 11-year-old boy.

2. THE BRIDGES OF MADISON COUNTY, by Robert James Waller. (Warner, $14.95.) A photographer and a lonely farmer's wife in Iowa.

3. THE TALISMANS OF SHANNARA, by Terry Brooks. (Del Rey/ Ballantine, $22.) The fourth and concluding volume in a series about a fantasy land.

4. THE CHILDREN OF MEN, by P.D. James. (Knopf, $22.) In 2021, when Britain is a police state and the human race is approaching its end, an Oxford historian struggles with his fate.

5. ALONG CAME A SPIDER, by James Patterson. (Little, Brown, $21.95.) Detective Alex Cross on the trail of a psychopathic serial killer in Washington.

6. NOVEMBER OF THE HEART, by LaVyrle Spencer. (Putnam, $22.95.) In Victorian-era Minnesota, a servant hopes to win an heiress's heart by helping her family win a yacht race.

7. THE DEVIL'S HEART, by Carmen Carter. (Pocket, $20.) The crew of the USS Enterprise in a new "Star Trek" tale of adventure and betrayal.

8. EINSTEIN'S DREAMS, by Alan Lightman. (Pantheon, $17.) A series of fantasies said to be dreamed by Albert Einstein in 1905, when he was a young clerk in a Swiss patent office.

9. DEGREE OF GUILT, by Richard North Patterson. (Knopf, $23.) The case of a woman journalist charged with killing an eminent novelist: was it self-defense or murder?

10. ALL THE PRETTY HORSES, by Cormac McCarthy. (Knopf, $21.) The adventures of a 16-year-old vaquero from Texas in the Mexico of the 1950s.

11. GRIFFIN & SABINE, by Nick Bantock. (Chronicle Books, $16.95.) The romance of an artist and a secret admirer, told through cards and letters.

12. DRAGON TEARS, by Dean Koontz. (Putnam, $22.95.) Two police detectives try to cope with a demonic serial killer at large in southern California.

13. DISNEY'S ALADDIN, adapted by Don Ferguson. (Mouse Works/ Penguin USA, $6.98.) An illustrated retelling of the ancient story of a street boy and a genie who provides unexpected experiences.

14. TO GREEN ANGEL TOWER, by Tad Williams. (DAW, $25.) The third and concluding volume in the fantasy series, "Memory, Sorrow and Thorn."

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, MARCH 28, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Harmonious vibrations prevail. Old resentments melt away as you begin to feel optimistic about the future. Both good health and domestic happiness depend on self-discipline. Passions run higher than usual. A romantic partnership will burst into full bloom. Greater public recognition will be yours by late fall. Travel and romance go hand-in-hand in December. Take your vacation then if you can. Good luck will boost the bottom line in business early in 1994.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: country singer Reba McEntire, actors Dirk Bogarde and Ken Howard, actress Dianne Wiest.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Little will get past you today. Helping a child with a hobby is an investment in her future. If entertaining at home, ask your family or friends for help with the preparations.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Buy something special for yourself today. Your reputation or business standing receives a welcome boost. Check the newspaper for job leads. Success comes to those willing to try a new approach.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) : Ventures shared either for profit or pleasure bring abundant satisfaction. Gifts have a big impact. Living up to the commitments you have made proves your sincerity.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Round up all your loved ones for a program of entertainment that will keep everyone out of mischief. The roads are apt to be crowded tonight. Home is the safest place to be.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Turn down any offer or proposition that would put you under obligation for an indefinite period. Nothing is to be gained by pulling into your shell.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Although ambitious, you have the experience and wisdom to keep yourself from going out on a limb. Do not waste valuable energy bickering over trifles. Love must be nurtured to be sustained.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Matters close to home require your immediate attention. Do not dwell on the past; success comes to those who are flexible. Concentrate on what you want to accomplish.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Travel is in the spotlight. A package deal could be the best buy for vacationers. New partnerships can be formed under highly favorable conditions. Avoid revealing too much too soon.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You have a knack for winning other people's confidence. Work behind the scenes for the best results. Awaited communications may be delayed. Avoid voicing your frustration.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be willing to face the truth about a recent disappointment. Spending your money wisely will help you feel more secure about your future. Present a smiling countenance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An increased awareness of shared stakes may lead to a confrontation with a partner. It pays to set the record straight, even on touchy subjects. Refresh your spirits by communing with nature.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Big ideas unfold. Long-range plans can be put into operation with a minimum amount of fuss. Beneficial decisions are handed down. Stay close to home base this afternoon.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♠

Listen to the bidding. More often than not there are enough clues in the auction to make the play of the hand an open book.

At favorable vulnerability, we endorse South's decision to preempt at the three-level despite the fact the side-suit distribution could not have been worse. The fine seven-card suit, in itself, gave the interference a measure of safety. North's raise was impeccable.

The defenders started with two winning clubs and East continued with a third round of the suit. Declarer ruffed, drew trumps in one round and led a diamond to the queen. That lost to East's king and a diamond was returned. Declarer came to hand with a trump and tried the heart finesse—down one.

Had East not opened the bidding, this line would have offered a 75 percent probability of landing the contract—as good a chance as any. But East almost surely held both red kings for the opening bid, so in effect declarer was taking a line that had no hope at all.

The diamond finesse is an illusion. Had South paid more attention to the auction, the contract is virtually laydown.

After ruffing the third club and drawing trumps, declarer should lead a diamond to the ace and continue with the queen of diamonds. As expected, East wins the king, but is enmeshed in an endplay. A minor-suit return allows declarer to discard a heart from hand while ruffing in dummy and a heart return is into dummy's major tenace. Either way, making use of the information at hand allows declarer to bring home the contract.

Film czar adds to Skywalker Ranch

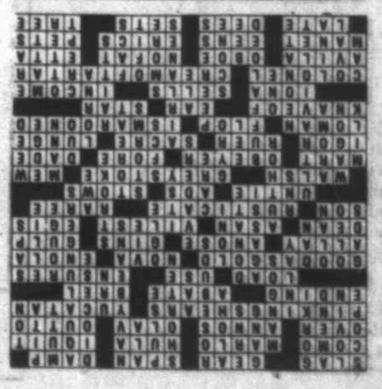

By Michael Dougan
Hearst News Service

SAN RAFAEL, Calif. — George Lucas, Marin County's resident film czar, will expand his Skywalker Ranch kingdom, which already includes a 50,000-square-foot "Main House" and a private fire station, to include a new recording studio, additional guest housing and a two-story screening facility.

Lucas has received a unanimous nod from county supervisors to proceed on the 117,000 square feet of additional construction, much of which had already been approved in different form. Meanwhile, a larger and much more controversial proposal by Lucas to build on adjacent property is inching its way through the approval process.

The film producer never uttered a word during a recent 15-minute hearing on his expansion plans. The supervisors praised Lucas, most famous for his "Star Wars" movie trilogy, and his development scheme. Several Skywalker Ranch neighbors also spoke briefly in support of Lucas' plans. Afterward, the casually dressed mogul signed autographs.

Epic Brass

Concert season opens with many performances

Midland Community Concert Association's annual membership drive ends Saturday.

A campaign table will be open at ClayDesta Atrium Monday through Saturday.

The 1993-94 season will open Oct. 21 with a performance by Famous People Players, where larger than life puppets dazzle the audience with their unique artistry.

Also on the 1993-94 rooster will be the Epic Brass; Helicon, an instrumental ensemble which plays folk music from around the world; and The Tennessee Waltz group, which will bring the story of country music in song and dance here in March 1994.

Membership dues are $25 for adults; $10 for students through high school; and $60 for a family membership admitting two adults and all children.

All concerts are held at Midland School Auditorium at 8 p.m. A membership in Midland permits the ticket holder to attend concerts in other cities including Alamogordo, Carlsbad and Ruidoso.

New concert members joining during the membership drive are invited to attend the final concert of the present series April 8 when pianist Laura Spritzer performs.

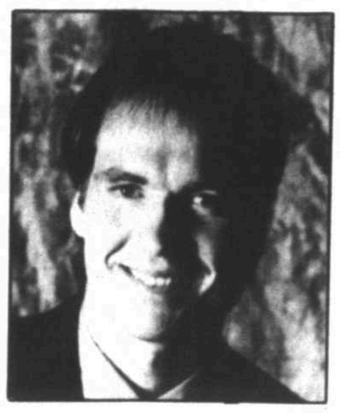

In addition, Midland Community Concerts is bringing Ms. Spitzer to present concerts in the schools April 7 and 8. The school concerts are a service project of MCC. The classical guitarist MCC had this season also gave school concerts when he was here in March.

For more information on MCC call 694-8008, 682-0516 or 682-1375.

MCCA is a non-profit organization dedicated to bringing the finest in professional music and dance programs to Midland at affordable prices. Admission to the concerts is by season membership only as no individual concert tickets are sold.

performs its only choral concert of the season.

Sponsored in part by FLEX-BAR, INC., and Dr. and Mrs. Don Williams, the concert, entitled "Music of the Americas," will feature selections from Mexico, Brazil, Argentina, Canada and the United States.

The concert will be at 8 p.m. Tuesday at Midland's First Presbyterian Church, 800 W. Texas Ave., and at 8 p.m. Thursday at Odessa's Crescent Park Baptist Church, 3002 E. University.

Tickets are priced at $20 for reserved seating and $12 for general admission. Special discounts area available for senior citizens, students and groups. For more information call the symphony office, 563-0921.

Van Husen, who's lived in Midland since 1948 and is an oil operator with St. Clair Energy Corp., received his degree in engineering from the University of Michigan where he sang in the glee club.

Uncle Sam brought Van Husen to Pyote during World War II where he was captured by a native of Fort Stockton, Bonnell Armistead, who worked at the air base there.

"We met in the swimming pool in Fort Stockton," he recalled. "Whenever you could get off, it was normal procedure for a group to get together and go over there. That's back when they had the beautiful pool there with spring water, a pool like the one at Balmorhea now."

The couple has three grown sons — Bob, Jim and Tom. None have the interest in singing that their father does. In fact, Van Husen did not come from a family of singers or musicians with the exception of his mother who played the piano.

"She was not a concert pianist — just an around-the-house pianist," Van Husen said.

Mrs. Ward's background is peopled with singers and musicians.

"My father was a tenor soloist, and I had musicians on both sides of my family. My brother was a child prodigy at the piano, and his life is music and teaching and playing the piano. My other brother was an oboist and he played in the Amarillo Symphony.

"Mother had a very pretty alto voice. My father was an old-time fiddler who played by ear. Mother never had the opportunity" to pursue music "but she saw to it that we all had the opportunity."

Mrs. Ward remembers singing her first solo in a school program when she was in the sixth grade.

In addition to singing in the chorale for 30 years with a few years out to have children, Mrs. Ward has sung in the First United Methodist Church for 36 years where she also plays handbells. She is a member of the Musicians Club and has sung in Opera in the Park and at Midland Community Theatre in such musicals as "Oklahoma" and "Promises, Promises." This soprano also has sung for the Midland Opera Theater.

In 1985-86, Mrs. Ward earned a degree in music at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. She said her degree has been a plus.

Although her husband is not involved in music, he has always been supportive of his wife's love for singing.

"He's always been so sweet," Mrs. Ward said. "He took care of kids and let me go to practice. He's a good fellow."

Mrs. Ward is married to Robert Ward, a geologist who worked for many years for Gulf before working for Chevron. Ward now works for Placid on a contract basis. The couple has three grown children — twins Carol and Teresa, and Gil, the youngest, who is majoring in physics and math at Texas Tech University.

Neither Mrs. Ward or Van Husen, who sings bass, have ever thought about how many hours they have spent in their lifetimes engaging in their favorite pastime.

Both Van Husen and Mrs. Ward feels fortunate to have been associated with the MOSC through the years.

Both appreciate the current chorale director, Rob Hunt.

When Van Husen looks back over the 30 years he has spent in the chorale, what comes to his mind is how fast the time has passed.

"It just seems such a short while ago that we started this," he said. "Probably the biggest satisfaction over the years has been the enjoyment of others for the musical programs in the Midland and Odessa area and knowing that you could be part of something like that."

PLAY: Pickwicks Players to present children's story secret garden. With her cousin, Colin (Tyler Rhodes), Mary attempts to find and bring the garden back to life.

"Both of the children in the play have really been neglected and left very much on their own without friends or playmates," said Ms. Chambers, who also teaches theater part time at Midland College and is artistic director of MCT Singers. "When they find each other, it makes an amazing change in both their lives."

Cast members in the Pickwick production include Miss Martin, Haley Dalgliesh, Justin Merritt, Scribner, Rhodes, Miss Trott, Will Coombes, Shane Manley and Whitney Stanco.

"I have an amazing cast," Ms. Chambers said. "I have two very young Pickwicks, both seventh graders, who are playing the children, Mary and Colin. They are first year Pickwicks with very little experience, but they are just wonderful in the roles. The rest of the cast are a very seasoned, experienced group of Pickwicks — four of them are in 'My Fair Lady,' two of those four are also in 'A Few Good Men (Manley and Merritt).'"

Miss Martin, Coombes, Manley and Merritt are in "My Fair Lady," which closed Saturday at Theatre Midland.

"We've really had to work to schedule rehearsals around 'My Fair Lady' because of these people, but I think they bring a lot of poise and maturity to their roles because of their stage experience. And three of those kids were also in 'Big River.' The one who wasn't in 'Big River' was in 'Fiddler on the Roof.'"

Pickwicks, the youth performing troupe at MCT, range in age from 7th grade through graduating seniors. This age difference was helpful in presenting "The Secret Garden."

"We have young players to do roles like Mary and Colin, and older Pickwicks to play the adults," Ms. Chambers said. "And you can really believe the age differences. You can really accept that these are adults and these are children."

Tickets to the 1:30 p.m. production April 3 may be purchased by calling Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

The Pickwick crew for "The Secret Garden" includes Monica Cambron, Crystal Alvey, Charlotte Worrell, Cheryl Martin, Amy Mills, Dayna Lyons and Valerie Anderson.

The set for "My Fair Lady" will be modified and used for the play, which will be presented to all fifth graders in the Midland Independent School District March 31-April 2. This year, Ms. Chambers said, the Pickwicks also have a group coming from St. Ann's, Hillander, Midland Christian School and Greenwood Independent School District.

"I have never worked with a play that has brought the kind of response that this does just from the title," Ms. Chambers said. "People cannot wait to see it."

Para estos interesados en la historia de la comunidad Hispana en Odessa y el Ector County, se les anima ha leer Memorias: Una vida del Oeste de Tejas, escrita por Salvador 'Sal' Guerrero, y editada por Arnoldo de León.

La historia, la recolección del autor escrita en un estilo narrativo, empieza en Coahuila, México, en el tiempo. Que muchos de los paises estaban agitados por la revolución. Desde la historia prosigue a San Angelo, Tejas, donde el joven Guerrero creció, luego a Europa, donde el peleo en la Segunda Guerra Mundial.

La historia regresa a el Oeste de Tejas en los años que siguieron a la guerra, donde Guerrero y su joven familia se acomodaron en Odessa," el ciudad milagrosa de el Suroeste". Nosotros seguimos su primera cuenta de primera-mano de su carrera en la radiodifusión, en el país de las políticas, y su activísimo por los derechos Mexico-Americanos.

Memorias: Una vida del Oeste de Tejas es publicada por la Prensa de Texas Tech University, y es disponible con coberturas duras. En un tiempo, cuando muchísima de la comunidad había sido descuidada por las historias 'tradicionales', seguro hizo una valiosa edición para cualquier lección sobre la tierra, y la gente del Oeste de Tejas.

Those interested in the history of the Hispanic community in Odessa and Ector County, are encouraged to read Memorias: a West Texas Life, written by Salvador 'Sal' Guerrero, and edited by Arnoldo De Leon.

The story, the recollections of the author written in a narrative style, begins in Coahuila, Mexico, at a time when much of the country was unsettled by revolution. From there the story proceeds to San Angelo, Texas, where the young Guerrero grows up, then to Europe, where he fought in the Second World War.

The story returns to west Texas in the years following the war, when Guerrero and his young family settle in Odessa, "the miracle city of the Southwest". We follow his first-hand account of his career in broadcasting, in county politics, and his activism for Mexican-American rights.

Memorias: a West Texas Life is published by Texas Tech University Press, and is available in hardback. At a time when so much of the community has been neglected by the 'traditional' histories, it should make a valuable addition to any lessons about the land, and the people of West Texas.

Una Mirada Hacia Atras a la Primer Familias Hispana de Odessa

Por Jeffrey McDonald

En los tempranos años del siglo veinte, la ciudad de Odessa miraría un crecimiento y muchos cambios. El ferrocarril que corre a lo largo de la comunidad a la frontera surena seria una fuente de algunos cambio, incluyendo la introducción de Hispanos como residentes permanentes.

Juan Ramirez y Ascensión 'A.S.' Alvarado, los dos empleados de el Texas y Pacific Railroad, estuvieron entre los Hispanos mas recientes que establecieron y crecieron sus familias en Odessa, empezando el año 1907.

"Si, las primeras dos familias que establecieron una residencia aquí, en Odessa," recuerda Jesse Alvarado, uno de los cuatro hijos de Ascensión. "Ahora, que podría haber otros que, tal vez, solo pasaron la noche y siguieron su camino."

"Pero mi padre me contó historias de mucho tiempo atrás, en Odessa, cuando ellos todavía usaban armas en los lados. Y yo acostumbraba ha escuchar atentamente, así como estar escuchando un cuento, tu sabes?

"Y ellos hicieron la mayoría de su granja, y no era gran cosa matar un marrano, y cosas como estas. Y ellos hicieron una vida," agrega Alvarado, quien su abuelo, Diego, también era ferrocarrilero. "Yo no miro como le hicieron para sobrevivir, tomando cuidado de nosotros con un salario de ferrocarrilero, pero lo hicieron."

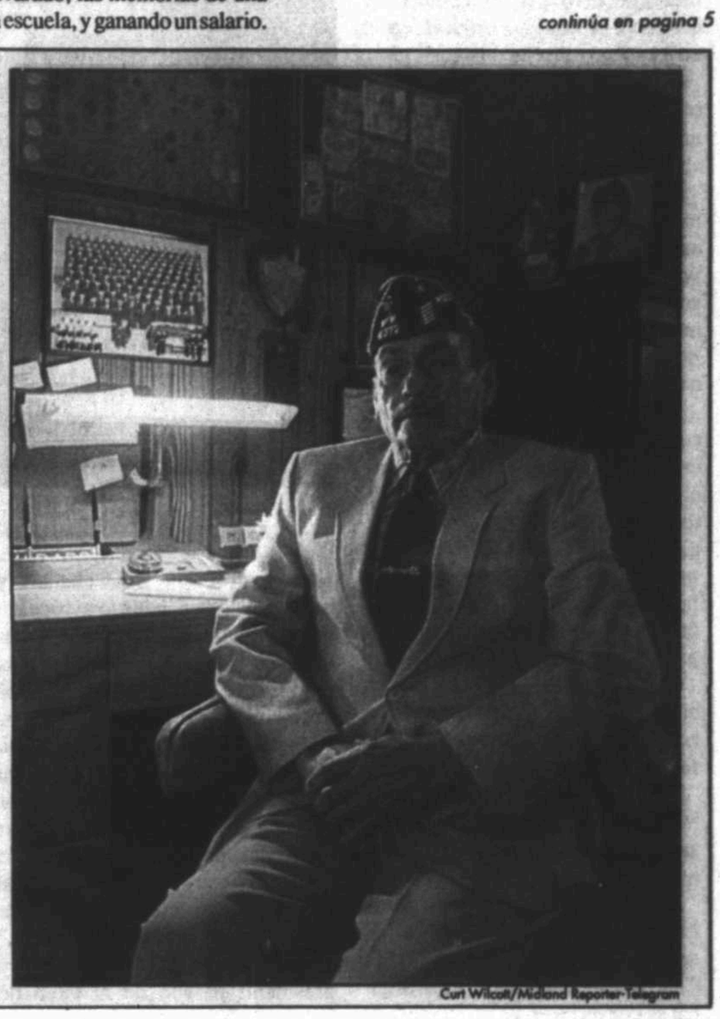

El ferrocarril era esencial para las vidas de las primeras familias de. Odessa. En adición del salario, les daban casas para sus empleados.

"Vivimos en la Calle Primera, la cual era la calle paralela a el ferrocarril. Y nuestras dos casas, nuestra casa, y la casa de los Ramirez, enfrentaban el Sur," dice Alvarado. "Luego, había por lo menos dos bloques de nada mas que puros mezquites entre aquí y la Calle Grant. Solo teníamos un caminito, hacia la ciudad."

El caminito, los mezquites, y la casa vieja ya no existen. Pero las memorias existen todavía para Alvarado, las memorias de una niñez yendo a la escuela, y ganando un salario.

"Tanto como me puedo acordar, muy apenas hacíamos para existir. Y un nickle era un nickle atrás en aquellos días! Yo era algo de enérgico," dice Alvarado, quien nació en

A Look Back at Odessa's First Hispanic Families

By Jeffrey McDonald

In the early years of the twentieth century, the town of Odessa would see growth and many changes. The railroad that ran along the community's southern border would be the source of some of those changes, including the introduction of Hispanics as permanent residents.

Juan Ramirez and Ascencion 'A.S.' Alvarado, both employees of the Texas and Pacific Railroad, were among the earliest Hispanics to settle and raise families in Odessa, beginning in 1907.

"Yes, the first two families that established a residence here, in Odessa," recalled Jesse Alvarado, one of Ascencion's four sons. "Now, there could have been others that, maybe, just spent the night and moved on."

"But my dad told me tales of way back, in Odessa, when they still wore sidearms. I used to be all ears, just like listening to a story, you know?

"They did most of their farming, and it wasn't a big deal to kill a pig, and stuff like that. And they made out," added Alvarado, whose grandfather, Diego, was also a railroad man. "I don't see how in the world they survived, taking care of us on a railroad salary, but they did."

The railroad was crucial to the lives of Odessa's earliest Hispanic families. In addition to the income, it provided housing for it's employees.

" We lived on First Street, which was the street that paralleled the railroad. And our two houses, our house, and the Ramirez house, faced south," said Alvarado. "Then, there was at least two blocks of nothing but Mesquite bush between there and Grant. We just had a little trail going up, going up toward town."

The trail, the mesquite bushes, and the old house are long gone. But the memories remain for Alvarado, the memories of a childhood spent going to school, and earning an income.

"Well, as long as I can remember, we were just barely making out. A nickel was a nickel back in those days! And I was kind of energetic," said Alvarado, who was born in 1925, one of seven children born to Ascencion and Clara Torres Alvarado. "They had a little old paper called 'The Daily Bulletin'. I would go up there, and they would issue you 25 papers, and then you'd hit the streets."

"The streets downtown, you might say, started from around First Street, or the railroad tracks, where they're at now. And you'd almost be out of town by Eighth Street. I'd always take those papers that paper was located between Fourth and Fifth Streets - and I would sell each paper for two cents, and I would get a penny of it. I would go straight to the pool hall, and sell out. It didn't take me long to get the hang of it!"

"And if I had fifteen cents in my pocket, man, I was rich! I could get a hamburger for a nickel, a Coke for a nickel, a bar of candy for a nickel. And my grandmother staked me to a bicycle."

Over the years, the town would grow, as would Alvarado's family. While he continued to go to school, he also enlarged his newspaper business.

"And then I went 'big shot', and I got me a paper route," recalled Alvarado. "They started striking oil, and Odessa started really growing. I got lucky and got me a paper route between Washington and Sam Houston. You

Un Hambre de 'Hogar, Dulce Hogar'

Por Lorenzo Chávez

Han pasado años desde que me mudé lejos de mi madre y mi padre y luché solo para cocinar platos de supervivencia tales como hamburguesas y pollo frito. De modo que el regreso de ritual a casa es un alivio agradable.

Por lo menos una vez al año, nosotros, los tres hermanos Chávez, regresamos a nuestro pueblo natal de Carolina del Sur para una reunión de familia, duplicando instantáneamente a la población peruana de Spartanburg que crece. Cada uno de nosotros vive ahora a cientos de millas de distancia - tres horas o más por avión. Mi hermana vive en una casa "dúplex" calle arriba desde la de nuestros padres, a un paseo de cinco minutos.

Regresamos a un viejo hogar cómodo, rodeado de hiedra inglesa verde trepante, encinos añosos, ardillas grises y silencio dorado.

La reunión junta a una colección de individuos singulares. La niñita de papá, mi hermana profesora universitaria con cara de niña; mi hermano mayor, un médico serio y payaso de guardarropa; mi hermano menor, que estudia periodismo de televisión como asignatura principal y usa modas de GQ en un cuerpo de Spiderman. Y yo: El escritor/soñador nervioso, que se come las uñas y viste siempre inferiormente de pantalones de mezclilla y zapatos de andar, los cuales son mi uniforme.

Mi padre, un hombre latino dedicado a su familia, alberga muchas actitudes sutiles de machismo, pero tiene un corazón de oro. Mi madre, cálida, tranquila y brillante, pregunta siempre cuándo vamos a mudarnos de regreso al hogar.

"¿Por qué no vives aquí, en "Espartahnbuurg?" dice ella con una sonrisa que puedo sentir por medio del teléfono.

Nos reunimos alrededor de la mesa de comer, nos ponemos al día de todo y discutimos.

Pero también COMEMOS.

Las reuniones de familia y la comida, desde luego, son inseparables. Comida y unidad.

Mi padre tiene esta costumbre maravillosa de cocinar cualquier plato peruano que deseemos. Eso nos hace recordar los viajes que hicimos, cuando éramos chicos, a la lejana Lima.

La comida peruana es colorida y con especias, tan rica y variada como el paisaje de costa, montaña y selva del país mismo. Muchos de sus platos más populares no son atractivos a la vista. Algunos, en verdad, son absolutamente de aspecto grosero. Así son las ironías de la naturaleza. Los de aspecto más notorio son también los mejores.

Los peruanos se refieren a los chiles llamándoles "ajíes."

Entre mis platos favoritos se hallan el "ají de gallina," una masa amarillo-naranja de pollo o gallina en hilachas mezclada con ajíes rojos dulces; el "seco de cordero," pedazos asados de cordero con salsa de cilantro de color verde lima; y, desde luego, un ceviche de pescado refrescante como aperitivo. La "papa rellena," un puré de papa relleno de carne, aceitunas negras y otros condimentos, es también bastante popular.

Como cualquier joven norteamericano de sangre roja, no me gustó esta comida siempre. El convertirse en gastrónomo a los II años de edad no es juego de niños.

Yo perdía el apetito siempre que mi tía pelaba camarones. Ella les quitaba la cáscara - a mano limpia - ¡vivos! Nunca he comido alimento alguno más fresco que aquél.

Eventualmente, la carne de estos pobres crustáceos terminaba en nuestro "chupe," una sopa de mariscos con un tinte anaranjado distintivo. Mi abuela, que Dios la bendiga, se aseguraba siempre de que hubiera por lo

A Hunger for 'Hogar, Dulce Hogar' - Home Sweet Home

By Lorenzo Chávez

It's been years since I moved away from my mother and father and struggled alone to cook such survival dishes as hamburgers and fried chicken. So the ritual homecoming is a welcome respite.

At least once a year, we three Chávez brothers return to our South Carolina hometown for a family get.together, instantly doubling Spartanburg's Peruvian population.

Each of us now resides hundreds of miles away - three hours or more by plane. My sister lives in a duplex up the street from our parents, a five-minute walk.

We return to a comfortable old home surrounded by creeping, green English ivy, ancient oak trees, gray squirrels and golden silence.

The gathering unites a one-of.a.kind collection of individuals. Daddy's little girl, my baby-faced college professor sister; my older brother, serious physician and closet clown; my TV-journalism-major younger brother, wearing GQ fashion sense on a Spiderman body. And me: the nervous, nail-biting writer/dreamer always underdressed in jeans and sneakers, my uniform.

My Dad, a devoted Latino family man, harbors many subtle machismo attitudes, but he has a heart of gold. My warm, quiet and brilliant Mom always asks when we,re going to move back home.

"Por qué no vives aqui, en Espartahnboorg?" she says with a smile I can sense over the phone.

We gather around the dinner table, play catch-up and argue. We also EAT.

Family reunions and food, of course, are inseparable. Food and unity.

My Dad has this wonderful custom of cooking whatever Peruvian dish we want. It brings back memories of trips we took as kids to faraway Lima.

Peruvian food is colorful and spicy, as rich and varied as the coastal/mountain/jungle landscape of the country itself. Many of its most popular dishes are not appealing to the eye. Some, in fact, are downright gross.looking. Such are the ironies of nature. The most notorious.looking ones are also the best.

Peruvians refer to chiles as "aji."

Among my favorite meals are Aji de Gallina, a yellow.orange mass of shredded chicken or hen mixed with mild red peppers; Seco de Cordero, roasted pieces of lamb with lime.green-colored cilantro sauce; and, of course, a refreshing fish ceviche as an appetizer. Papa Rellena, a potato batter stuffed with meat, black olives and other seasonings, is also a favorite.

Like any red-blooded All.American youngster, I didn't always like this stuff. Becoming a gastronome at II is no small task. I would lose my appetite whenever my aunt peeled shrimp. She peeled them - barehanded - alive! Never have I eaten food fresher than that.

Eventually the meat of these poor crustaceans ended up our chupe, a seafood-type chowder with a distinct orange tint. My grandmother, bless her heart, always made sure there was at least one piece of meat floating in our soup bowls.

The big change came about during my older teen years when I decided I would try to eat one of these delicacies, at least.

My brothers and sister and I debate which is worse, mondongo or carapulcra.

"Mondongo" is a clever, onomatopoeic word that loosely translated means, "Pass me a napkin so I can spit this out!"

Actually, it's stomach innards or intestines - what we Southerners call chitlins.

Business and Commerce / Negocio y Comercio

Negocio Hispano es Buen Negocio

Por Amarante Cordova

Cuando los hermanos Gonzales van ha trabajar cada día, ellos agregan otra pagina a su capitulo en la historia de negocios en Odessa. Es un capitulo que ha sido escrito por cerca de cincuenta años.

"Bueno, la génesis de el negocio empezó en 1946, cuando mi mama y mi papa llegaron aquí con mi hermano y mi hermana,' dice Sam Gonzales, dueño y presidente de Manuel's Restaurante. "Ellos empezaron solo con una máquina de tortillas, que les dio su hermana en San Angelo (de su padre Manuel Gonzales II). Y en seis meses en 1946, pudieron comprar y construir el edificio original en el cual estamos ahorita mismo."

"Luego, de ahí, hicimos tortillas y tamales. Y siempre, teníamos platos para la hora de la comida. Y así crecimos, y crecimos, y crecimos."

El negocio el cual los Gonzales mayores establecieron requería los esfuerzos de la familia entera para poder salir adelante. No sorpresivamente, muchas de las memorias de la infancia de los hermanos se vuelven alrededor de los negocios.

"Bueno, yo recuerdo cuando estaba en el quinto o sexto grado, yo trabajaba en la fabrica de tortillas. Actualmente corriendo algunos de los equipos," recuerda Manuel Gonzales III dueño de Manuel's Odessa Tortilla y Tamale Factory. "Era muy anticuada para las medidas de hoy, pero era una maquinaria de una muy alta producción en ese tiempo."

"Nacido y criado aquí, casi, aquí en el 1404 E. Calle 2da. Nacido en el hospital, y luego vine a mi hogar, la fabrica de tortillas," dice Sam. "Siendo yo el segundo hijo, mi hermano actualmente era el que siempre hacia reparticiones y cosas así. Y siempre me le pegaba."

Sobre los años, el negocio creció. La fabrica de tortillas se movería mas arriba por la misma calle, a el 1915 E. Calle 2da. mientras que el local original se convertía en un restaurante de servicio completo. Manuel's Products pronto seria disponible para todo el alrededor de el Permian Basin.

"Nosotros distribuimos en un radio de 100 millas alrededor de Odessa," explica Manuel. "El volumen de nuestro negocio es en lo que nosotros entregamos, en lo que nosotros entregamos a los vendedores en mayoreo."

Pero las lecciones que los hermanos han aprendido de su padre fue mas allá de la preparación de productos de comer. Ellos también aprendieron las valiosas lecciones en como 'hacer negocios'.

"Traten a todos parejamente, Y si ustedes tratan a todos parejamente - no importa que color, o que raza, lo que sea - si ustedes los tratan parejamente con los dos lados de la moneda, entonces será bien para ustedes dos," dice Sam. "Mientras tu puedas hacer dinero, y seas parejo, esa es muy buena razón para que se queden en el negocio."

"La primera lección que aprendí fue, el cliente siempre esta bien," dice Manuel. "Escucha a tus clientes, y mira que quieren, y luego tu haces lo que ellos quieren. Y si hay bastantes de ellos por ahí que compren tu producto, tu serás éxitoso en el." Los dos hermanos reconocen que el apoyo de la comunidad, y sus clientes, han sido una parte muy importante en su éxito. Y los dos trabajan para regresar algo del éxito a la comunidad por medio del apoyo de una variedad de clubs cívicos y organizaciones. "Todavía hay mucha gente que necesita ayuda, hay muchísima gente," dice Manuel, un miembro y presidente-pasado de el Club de Leones AM de Odessa. Aun con todo el trabajo de Leones que hago, la organización que realmente, mas apoyo, físicamente, es la del Banco de Comida de el Permian Basin. Cada producto que nosotros posiblemente podemos donar a el Banco de comida, nosotros lo hacemos."

"Yo siento que tu tomas tanto de la comunidad. En el modo de estar en el negocio, tu sacas de la nada. Así es como tu haces tu vivir," dice Sam, quien patrocina el levantamiento de fondos anual para el Permian Basin Rehab Center y el Art Institute para el Permian Basin. "Algunas veces, es tiempo de dar a la comunidad, a estos mas desafortunados, a estos que no pueden por ellos mismos, a estos que necesitan la ayuda. Y es por esto que nosotros hacemos esto por el Rehab Center."

"¿Y por el Art Institute? Para mi, la cultura de Odessa necesita ser engrandecido. Si somos mas afinados culturalmente, entonces mas lugares podrán colocarse aquí. Así es que es una clase de propio-interes como un trato."

Los hermanos Gonzales, quien literalmente crecieron en un ambiente de negócios, ofrecen su consejo a estos entre nuestros lectores quienes, ellos mismos, podrán estar pensando en ser dueños y operar un negocio por su propia cuenta.

"El consejo que doy es solamente, 'traje duro'", dice Sam. "Y sean honrados. Y no esperen ser un golpe de 100 yardas, pero un maraton. No se quemen ustedes mismos, no, no se cansen."

"Bueno, la primera cosa que tienen que hacer es tomar una educación. Esta es la primera cosa importante," advierte Manuel. "Porque, sin educación, es como nadar en el océano sin salvavidas. Es insuperable."

"Tienen que luchar mucho, al principio. Con la economía en el modo en el que esta, hay muchos negocios que están batallando. Aun los negocios muy bien establecidos. Pero, la mayor cosa es, realmente tu nunca te separas de el, tu sabes, siempre pensando o actualmente estando ahí."

"Pero la satisfacción que tienes es un sentimiento de satisfacción que tu fuiste capaz de alcanzar algo muy propio de ti!"

Hispanic Business is Good Business

By Amarante Cordova

When the Gonzales brothers go to work each day, they add another page to their chapter in the history of business in Odessa. It's a chapter that's been written for nearly fifty years.

"Well, the genesis of the business started in 1946, when my mom and dad got here with my brother and sister," said Sam Gonzales, owner and president of Manuel's Restaurant. "They started off with just one tortilla machine, that they had gotten from his father's (Manuel Gonzales II) sister in San Angelo. And by six months into 1946, they were able to purchase and build the original building that we are in right now."

"Then, from there, we made tortillas and tamales. And always, we had plate lunches. And just grew, and grew, and grew."

The business that the older Gonzales developed required the efforts of the entire family to succeed. Not surprisingly, many of the childhood memories of the brothers revolve around the business.

"Well, I remember when I was in fifth or sixth grade, working in the tortilla factory. Actually running some of the equipment," recalled Manuel Gonzales III, owner of Manuel's Odessa Tortilla and Tamale Factory. "It was very antiquated by today's standards, but it was still pretty high-production equipment at that time."

"Born and raised here, at 1404 E. 2nd Street. Born in the hospital, then came home to the tortilla shop," said Sam. "Me being the second son, my brother was actually the one that always would go out on deliveries and stuff. And I would tag along."

Over the years, the business would grow. The tortilla factory would move up the road, to 1915 E. 2nd Street, while the original location became a full-service restaurant. Manuel's products would soon be available throughout much of the Permian Basin.

"We distribute within a 100-mile radius of Odessa," explained Manuel. "The bulk of our business is what we ship out to wholesalers."

But the lessons the brothers learned from their father went beyond the preparation of food products. They also learned valuable lessons in how to 'do business'.

"Treat everybody fairly. If you treat everybody fairly - no matter what color, or what race, whatever - if you treat them fairly on both sides of the coin, then it'll be good for both of you," said Sam. "As long as you can make money, and be fair, that's a good reason to stay in business."

"The first lesson I learned was, 'The customer is always right,'" said Manuel. "You listen to your customers, and see what they want, and then you make what they want. And if there's enough of them out there that will buy your product, you'll be successful in it."

Both brothers acknowledge that the support of the community, and their customers, has been an important part of their success. And both work to return some of that success to the community through their support of a variety of civic clubs and organizations.

"There's a lot of people that still need help, there's a lot of people," said Manuel, a member and past-president of the Odessa AM Lions Club. "Even with all the Lions work that I do, the organization that I really support the most, physically, is the Permian Basin Food Bank. Every product that we possibly can donate to the Food Bank, we do."

"I feel that you take so much from a community. I mean, being in business, you draw from without. That's how you make your living," said Sam, who sponsors annual fundraising events for the Permian Basin Rehab Center and the Art Institute For The Permian Basin. "Sometimes, it's time to give back to the community, to those that are less fortunate, to those that cannot do for themselves, those that need help. And that's why we do that for the Rehab Center."

"For the Art Institute? To me, the culture of Odessa needs to be enhanced. If we were more culturally-attuned, then more businesses would locate here. So, it's a self-interest-type deal."

The Gonzales brothers, who literally grew up in a business environment, offer this advice to those among our readers who, themselves, may be thinking of owning and operating a business of their own.

"The advice I give is just, 'Work hard,'" said Sam. "And be fair. And don't expect it to be a 100-yard dash, but a marathon. Don't burn yourself out, don't get burned-out."

"Well, the first thing to do is get an education. That's the very first thing," advised Manuel. "Because, without an education, it's like swimming in the ocean without a life vest. It's just insurmountable."

"They have to struggle a lot, at first. With the economy the way it is, there's a lot of businesses that are struggling. Even the well-established businesses. But, the main thing is, you never really get away from it, you know. You're always either thinking about it, or actually here."

"But the satisfaction you get is a sense of accomplishment, that you were able to accomplish something on your own!"

Tripe by any other name would taste the same. We usually had Mondongo a la Italiana, but the tomato seasoning hardly helped.

Carapulcra combines dehydrated potatoes and diced peanuts with aji or red hot peppers. Holding your breath for long stretches of time becomes an essential asset when eating it.

Food has always been a unifying factor at our house. Now that I'm a grown-up, I want to learn to make some of these dishes - if not to maintain tradition, then to make my second-generation Peruvian children suffer as I did. It's all in good taste.

Abriendo Puertas y Haciendo Compromisos en las Politica

Por Jeffrey McDonald

Abriendo la puerta. Esta es la frase que todos ustedes escuchan, una vez y otra vez, cuando aprendemos sobre envolvimiento Hispano en el proceso de la política de Odessa, y el Ector County. Abriendo la puerta la cual ha estado cerrada por tantos años.

"Yo estaba bastante envuelto en las acciones de la comunidad, especialmente los Leones. Así, lo que sucedió en ese tiempo fue que llegue ha conocer muchas personas en todos los clubs, especialmente estos que llamamos 'líderes' de la ciudad,'" recuerda Ernest Martinez, quien, en 1968, se convirtió en el primer Hispano elegido para el Concilio de la Ciudad de Odessa. "He estado envuelto en muchísimos de los asuntos cívicos de ese tiempo. Ellos se acercaron a mi y me dijeron, que como no corría para la posición del precinto, el cual era el sur.'"

Martinez admite que, aunque el gozo de estar envuelto en la comunidad, el no estaba listo para brincar dentro de la polítca y su proceso sin bastante tiempo en pensarlo.

"Le di mucha consideración . No brinque enseguida hacia el," dice el. "Porque, lo que son las políticas, si me envolví, pero no me gustan mucho. No me gustan los políticos!"

""Así, que le di bastante consideración al asunto. Pensé, 'esta es una oportunidad, especialmente para las personas del habla en español.' Esta una buena manera de abrir las puertas en el futuro.'"

Los últimos sesentas y los tempranos setentas mirarían varios Hispanos detener oficios elegidos por la primera vez en la historia de Odessa y el Ector County. Manuel Valles empezaría su posesión como Juez de la Paz para el condado, el cual continua hasta este día, y Vicky Gomez seria elegida como Miembro de la Mesa Directiva del Distrito Escolar Independiente del Condado.

Salvador 'Sal' Guerrero también entraría en el proceso de la política en ese tiempo, siendo el primer Hispano elegido a los Comisionados del Ector County.

"En ese tiempo, no había bastantes Hispanos interesados en la política. Yo quería servir como un ejemplo, o tal vez como puente para otros cruzando hacia la política, tu sabes, abriendo las puertas para otros Hispanos." recuerda Guerrero. "Pero todo era tan retador para mi porque nunca me había aventurado, y estaba muy verde en esto. Pero pensé, 'Alguien va ha tener que hacerlo tarde o temprano. Vale mas que yo sea el primero!'"

Como Martinez, Guerrero ha estado activo en su comunidad por medio de una organización cívica. En su caso, ha sido la American GI Forum. Fundada por el Doctor Hector P. Garcia, el Forum floreció en los años que siguieron la Segunda Guerra Mundial, e inspiro a muchos Hispanos a convertirse mas activos en su propia comunidad y su política.

"Fue una organización que cuido al tanto de lo que estaba pasando, y de los problemas de los Mexicano-Americanos, y así por lo sucesivo. Y tomo un hondo interés en esto," dice Guerrero. "También urgimos a todos ha participar, ha ejercer nuestros derechos como votantes. Y de entender las funciones da ciudad y el condado en el gobierno, conocer a nuestros oficiales elegidos, y todas las cosas que son esenciales para cada uno de nosotros. Algo que tomamos por merecido."

Martinez también peleo por las cosas esenciales de la comunidad minoritaria que no se tenían, las cosas que tal vez se habían tomado por merecidas por otros.

"Tratar de mejorar, especialmente en nuestra comunidad. Yo estaba trabajando con la misma ciudad entera, pero, teniendo a un representante para el Sur de la ciudad, yo podría hacer muchos mejoramientos," dice Martinez. "Yo podía ver que cualquier mejoramiento que se hacia, yo lo podía seguir, estarme con el hasta el final. Y había mucha pavimentacion de calles que se había hecho en ese tiempo, fue hecha en el tiempo que yo serví."

"Había un departamento en la ciudad, que estaba bastante bajo, y ese era sanidad. La mayoría de las personas que trabajan ahí eran gente Mexicana. Pensé que seria buen proyecto empezar ha trabajar por ahí, ha traerlo hacia arriba con especificaciones, tanto como el pago. Era un trabajo que era muy sucio! No me gustaría haber trabajado yo mismo ahí! Pero mientras la posesión que tuve ahí, lo subí con especificaciones. Llegamos ha tener mejores condiciones de trabajo."

Desde sus perspectivas, mirando a estos quienes los han seguido por medio de las puertas que ellos abrieron, los dos Guerrero y Martinez están de acuerdo de que ha habido cambios, pero de que todavía hay lugar para mas mejoramientos.

"Bueno, he mirado cambios desde mis días, y he mirado mas interés en algunos," dice Guerrero. "No es tanto interés como el que me gustaría mirar girar alrededor. Pero ellos (los Hispanos) están mirando mas a el ángulo de la política."

"Ha habido muchos cambios. Mas personas están participando," dice Martinez. "Por supuesto, no están tan envueltos como me gustaría que estuvieran. Pero ha habido un mejoramiento sobre los años. Ellos están siendo envueltos, ellos están participando."

"Y, como digo, para mi, ese fue mi pensamiento en ese tiempo, de abrir las puertas para alguien mas para que participe. Y realmente tener a las personas participando!"

Opening Doors and Getting Involved in Politics

By Jeffrey McDonald

Opening the door. That is the phrase you hear, again and again, when you learn about Hispanic involvement in the political process of Odessa, and Ector County. Opening the door which had been closed for so many years.

"I was very involved in community affairs, especially Lions. So, what transpired at that time was I got to meet a lot of people in all the clubs, especially what you call 'leaders' of the city," recalled Ernest Martinez, who, in 1968, became the first Hispanic elected to the Odessa City Council. "I had been involved in a lot of civic affairs at that time. And they approached me and said, 'How come I wouldn't run for that precinct, which was, you know, the Southside.'"

Martinez admits that, though he enjoyed being active in his community, he was not ready to jump into the political process without a lot of thought.

"I gave it a lot of consideration. I didn't jump right into it, you know," he said. "Because, as far as politics, I get involved, but I don't like it that much. I don't like politics!"

"So, I did give it a lot of consideration. I thought, 'This is an opportunity, especially for the Spanish-speaking people.' This is a good way to open the doors in the future.'"

The late sixties and early seventies would see time in the history of Odessa and Ector County. Manuel Valles would begin his tenure as Justice of the Peace for the county, which continues to this day, and Vicky Gomez would be elected a Board Member of the Ector County Independent School District.

Salvador 'Sal' Guerrero would also enter the political process at that time, becoming the first Hispanic elected to the Ector County Commissioners.

"At that time, there were not many Hispanics interested in politics. I wanted to serve as an example, or maybe as a bridge for others to cross over, you know, opening the door for other Hispanics," recalled Guerrero. "But everything was challenging to me because I had never ventured, and I was green at it. But I thought, 'Somebody's going to have to do it, sooner or later. So I might as well be the first one!'"

Like Martinez, Guerrero had been active in his community through a civic organization. In his case, it had been the American GI Forum. Founded by Doctor Hector P. Garcia, the Forum flourished in the years that followed World War 2, and inspired many Hispanics to become more active in their community and it's politics.

"It was the organization that kept me abreast of what was going on, and the problems of the Mexican-American, and so forth. And I took a deep interest in that," said Guerrero. "We were also urged to participate, to exercise our rights as voters. And to understand the functions of the city and county government, know our elected officials, and all of those things that are, you know, essential to everybody. Something that we just take for granted, you know?"

Martinez also fought for the essential things that the minority community did not have, the things that others may have taken for granted.

"To try to improve, especially in our community. I was working with the whole city itself, but, by having a representative from the Southside, I could do a lot of improvements," said Martinez. "I could see that whatever improvements are made, I can follow-up on them, stay on top of them. There was a lot of street paving that was done at that time, at the time I served."

"There was a department in the city, itself, that was way low, and that was the Sanitation. The majority of people that were working in there were Mexican people. I thought that would be a good project to start working on, to bring it up to specifications, as far as pay. It was work that was pretty damn nasty! I wouldn't have that work, myself! But during the tenure that I was in there, I brought it up to specifications. We got in better working conditions."

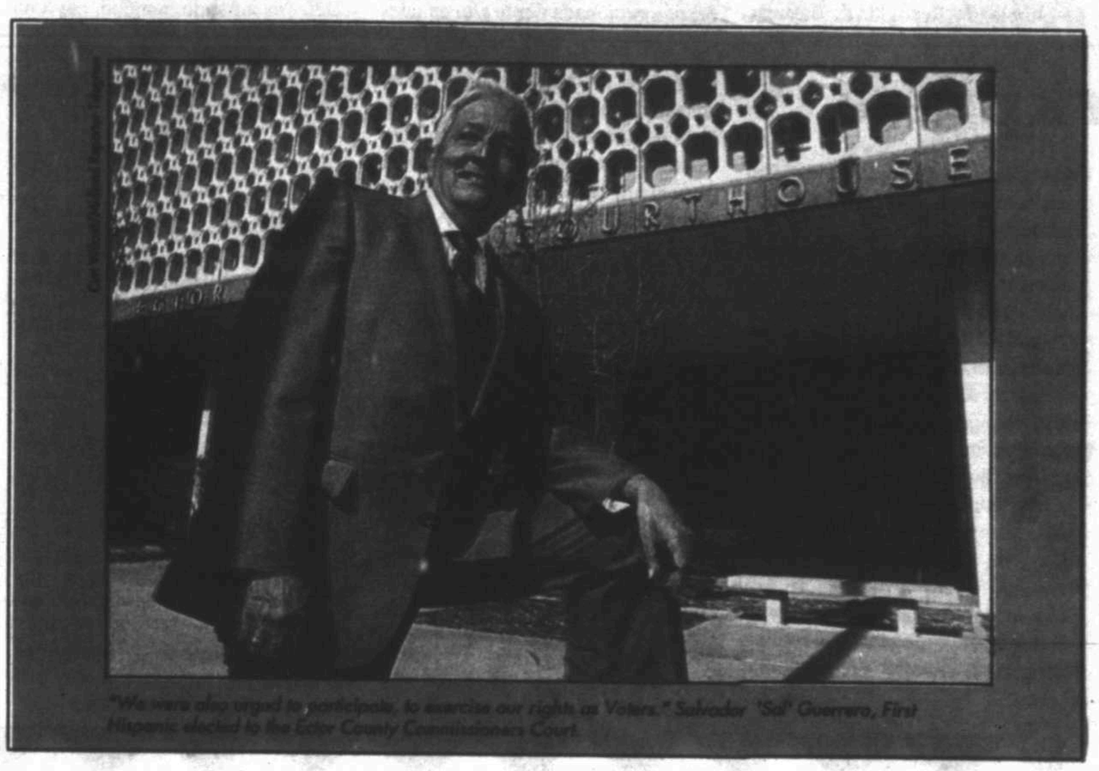

From their perspective, looking at those who have followed them through the doors they opened, both Guerrero and Martinez agree that there have been changes, but there's still room for improvement.

"Well, I've seen a change since my days, and I've seen some more interest," said Guerrero. "It's not as much interest that I would like to see stirred-up. But they (the Hispanics) are looking more at the political angle."

"There has been a lot of changes. More people are participating," said Martinez. "Of course, they are not involved like I would like to see it. But there has been an improvement over the years. They do get involved, they do participate."

"And, like I say, to me, that was my thought at the time, to get the doors open for somebody else to participate. And really get the people involved!"

might say, the wealthiest people lived on that street. I didn't have any trouble collecting, and I always had money in my pocket."

The story of the Alvarado family, in many ways, paralleled the story of America during the first half of the twentieth century. There was the Depression, during which some were laid-off from their railroad jobs. Then came the new prosperity of the oil boom, and then the war years. And some interesting times for Alvarado's father, who was, by now, a top hand for the gangs that laid new rails on the railways.

"His job was to lay new steel, what they called new track," explained Alvarado. "They would tear off, oh, maybe a quarter-of-a-mile on one side. And then, by hand - he had some pretty tough men! - they'd put the track on there temporarily, spike it down, and come back and fill in the cross ties that needed to be filled in, the rock and gravel and stuff."

"I can remember, during world War Two, he had a pretty important job. But he had to have a flag man on each side of where he was working, because the government trains weren't scheduled. He had to have a flag man, to put what they called 'little torpedoes' out. Whenever a train would roll over it, it would blast out, just a big old bang. And that would give the engineer a chance to start slowing down, because there'd be no track in front of him! But a lot of their trains were unannounced. They'd get madder than a wet hen whenever they had to stop for a little bit!"

"He got to where he got more and more modern equipment, like a crane and stuff like that. They even got to work German prisoners (of war). Of course, the Army or someone had to guard them. They worked college kids from old Mexico, as hands, because everybody had gone to war. They had trouble keeping hands during World War Two."

Alvarado would graduate from Odessa High School during the early years of the war. While high school graduation may have been rare among young Hispanics in some other West Texas communities, it was common in Odessa.

"They had all the schools all in one area. They had the high school, the junior high, and elementary all in one area there, and that was on Ninth Street," said Alvarado. "Back in those days, there was a lot of difference in teaching, too. If someone wasn't getting the hang of it, they kept his rear-end in school till he did, you know! They believed in burning the midnight oil!"

But after graduation came military service, as it did for millions of young people across the country. Alvarado enlisted in the United States Navy, and served in the Pacific Ocean as an Electrician, Second Class, aboard the USS ATF-35.

In the years that followed the war, Alvarado would return home, to Odessa. He would marry, and raise five children. He would lose a brother, killed in action during the Korean War. Meanwhile, other family members, aunts and uncles, brothers and sisters, would settle in other parts of the state, while some remained in West Texas.

Alvarado remains active in his community. As Commander of VFW (Veterans of Foreign Wars) Post #4372'. He and other veterans participate in a wide variety of fundraising and awareness-raising activities, including Just Say No rallies in Odessa schools.

Such activity, at a time when many others are living a leisurely life of retirement, should not be surprising. After all, he is the son - and grandson - of hard-working railroad men.

The railroad traffic that passes through Odessa has changed drastically over the twentieth century. The town itself is now a city. The population, which had been just a few hundred when Ascension arrived, now numbers over 100,000. But the memories of that earlier time are still alive in the hearts and minds of our earliest citizens and their children, and will continue to be so, as long as they are here to talk, and we are here to listen.

Employment/Empleos

"El Papel del Hispano en el Lugar del Trabajo

Por Jeffrey McDonald

En el investigación que hubo en algunos de los artículos en esta edición, y hablando con personas de Odessa los cuales sus memorias van atrás en la primera mitad del siglo veinte, NuevaVista tuvo la oportunidad de aprender como el lugar de trabajo, y el papel en el lugar de trabajo de los Hispanos, ha cambiado sobre los años.

Al principio de el siglo, migrantes trabajaron en los campos de agricultura en Tejas, o siguieron los rebaños de borregas y vacas, empleaban un largo numero de Mexicanos y Mexicanos-Americanos. Pero seria el ferrocarril, particularmente el Texas & Pacific Ferrocarril, que seria el mayor empleador de estos Hispanos que vinieron a Odessa a quedarse, y a hacer sus hogares y crecer sus familias. Un Odessano, nacido en 1925, hijo y nieto de trabajadores de el ferrocarril, recuerda que sobre los únicos trabajos que estaban disponibles eran los trabajos de el ferrocarril.

Pero había algo sobre Odessa, aun en los tempranos años, que era diferente de algunas otras comunidades. En los años veintes y treintas, jovenes Hispanos vendían periódicos, por ejemplo, en las calles o repartiendo en rutas. Aun, el algunas otras comunidades, esto estaba exclusivamente para muchachos Anglos.

Dentro de la ciudad, misma, la presencia de Hispanos en la fuerzas de trabajo eran desproporcionadamente altas en tales áreas como el Departamento de Parques y Recreación, y el Departamento de Limpieza y Recogida de Basuras, aun no existían en el Departamento de Policía y el Departamento de Bomberos, y en los altos niveles de administración.

Cambios vendrían, pero despacio. El mejoramiento de escalas de pago y condiciones de trabajo, particularmente en el Departamento de Limpieza y Recogida de Basuras, seria uno de los factores dirigidos en los tardes sesentas y los tempranos setentas, a como los Hispanos se iban haciéndose mas activos en las políticas de la ciudad y el condado, y empezaban ha asumir papeles de responsabilidad. En 1962, la ciudad empleo su primer oficial de policía Hispano. El primer bombero Hispano fue empleado en 1971.

Mirando a Hispanos en sus lugares de trabajo hoy, particularmente por medio de los ojos de consejeros empleos locales y de acomodacion, revela las dos cosas buenas y malas.

Se ha encontrado que la presencia de Hispanos es desproporcionadamente alta en tales campos de removimiento y disminución de asbestos, campos de cubrimiento de aceite y pintando. Todos campos, aun cuando la mayoría pagan muy bien, cargan algo de gran peligro ambiental. Y se teme que estos con menos educación, y con poca o nada de entendimiento de la idioma del Ingles, pueden ser atraídos a estos trabajos son realizar completamente los peligros que el trabajo pueda atraer.

A el mismo tiempo, Hispanos con educación y la experiencia están encontrando mas puertas abiertas en los corporativos lugares de trabajo, como quiera la presencia de Hispanos en las administraciones de nivel mediano permanece pequeña, y casi sin existencia en el administración de alto nivel. Consejeros de acomodacion están encontrando, aunque, hay una crecidad demanda para individuos bilingües Ingles/Español, sin importar la raza o la etnica, para llenar varias posiciones en administración y oficinas.

Por supuesto, algunos de los trabajos que han sido tradicionalmente por Hispanos, tales como conserjes o de limpiéza de casas, componiendo techos y la construcción y el cuidado de jardines, permanecen altas. Pero, una vez mas, educación es vista como una llave para hacer la diferencia entre el individuo que corta la yarda, y el individuo que es dueño de una máquina de cortar zacate - y el resto de la compañía.

Hispanics in the Workplace

By Jeffrey McDonald

In the research that went into many of the articles in this issue, in speaking with Odessans whose memories go back into the first half of the twentieth century, NuevaVista had an opportunity to learn how the workplace, and the Hispanics' role in the workplace, has changed over the years.

At the beginning of the century, migrant work in the agricultural fields of Texas, or following the herds of sheep and cattle, employed large numbers of Mexicans and Mexican-Americans. But it was to be the railroad, particularly the Texas & Pacific Railroad, that was to be the main employer of those Hispanics who came to Odessa to stay, to make their homes and raise their families. One Odessan, born in 1925, the son and grandson of railroad workers, recalled that about the only jobs that were available were railroad jobs.

But there was something about Odessa, even in it's early years, that was different from some other communities. In the twenties and thirties, young Hispanics sold newspapers, for example, on the street or on delivery routes. Yet, in some communities, this was reserved exclusively for Anglo boys.

Within the city, itself, the presence of Hispanics in the workforce was disproportionately high in such areas as the Department of Parks and Recreation, and the Department of Sanitation, yet nonexistent in the Police Department, Fire Department, and in the top levels of management.

Changes would come, but slowly. The improvement of pay scales and working conditions, particularly in the Sanitation Department, would be one of the issues addressed in the late sixties and early seventies, as Hispanics became more active in city and county politics, and began to assume leadership roles. In 1962, the city hired it's first Hispanic police officer. The first Hispanic firefighter was hired in 1971.

Looking at Hispanics in today's workforce, particularly through the eyes of local employment and placement counselors, reveals both the good and the bad.

It is found that the presence of Hispanics is disproportionately high in such fields as asbestos abatement or removal, oilfield coating and spray-painting, sandblasting, and industrial insulation. All of these fields, though most may pay well, carry some degree of environmental hazards. And it is feared that those with less education, and little no understanding of the English language, may be attracted to these jobs without fully realizing the risks their work may entail.

At the same time, Hispanics with education and experience are finding more open doors in the corporate workplace, although the presence of Hispanics in middle-level management remains small, and almost non-existent in top-level management. Placement counselors are finding, though, that there is an increased demand for English/Spanish-bilingual individuals, regardless of race or ethnicity, to fill various clerical and management positions.

Of course, some of the jobs that have been traditionally filled by Hispanics, such as janitorial or housekeeping, roofing and construction, and yard maintenance, remain high. But, once again, education is seen as one key difference between the individual who mows the lawn, and the individual who owns the lawnmower - and the rest of the company!

menos un pedazo de carne flotando en nuestros tazones de sopa.

El gran cambio se produjo durante los últimos años de mi adolescencia, cuando decidí que trataría de comer por lo menos una de estas golosinas.

Mis hermanos, mi hermana y yo discutimos acerca de cuál es lo peor si el mondongo o la carapulcra.

"Mondongo" es una palabra astuta y onomatopéyica que traducida libremente significa: "¡Pásame una servilleta para poder sacarme esto de la boca!"

Realmente, es la parte interior del estómago o de los intestinos de la res, lo que nosotros, los sureños, llamamos "chitlings" (menudencias). Las tripas, por cualquier otro nombre, tendrían el mismo sabor. Acostumbrábamos comer "mondongo a la italiana," pero el condimento de tomate apenas ayudaba.

La "carapulcra" combina las papas deshidratadas y los maníes partidos con ají o pimientos rojos. El contener el aliento durante espacios largos de tiempo es una ventaja indispensable al comerla.

La comida ha sido siempre un factor unificador en nuestra casa. Ahora que soy adulto, quiero aprender a hacer algunos de esos platos - si no para mantener la tradición, si para hacer que mis hijos, peruanos de segunda generación, sufran como sufrí yo. Todo con buen gusto.

This is a long over-due THANK YOU for the wonderful article about the Blood Center in the NUEVAVISTA. You did a wonderful job, and I appreciate your willingness to get the word out to a population we unfortunately don't have much contact with.

I'm sure that because of your informational piece, more Hispanics will know about the PBRBC, and we will get more response.

Jeff, I have enjoyed working with you through the Blood Center, and I look forward to working with you in the future on other endeavors. I certainly appreciate your commitment to this community.

1925, uno de los siete hijos de Ascensión y Clara Torres Alvarado. "Tenían un pequeño periódico llamado 'El Boletín Diario'. Yo ahí iba y me daban 25 periódicos y ha venderlos en las calles."

"En las calles del centro de la ciudad, diría, que empezaba de la Calle Primera, o de la ferrocarril, donde todavía están. Y ya casi estabas fuera de la ciudad para la Calle Ocho. Y siempre tomaba estos periódicos - el periódico estaba situado entre la Calle Cuarta y Quinta- ahí vendía los periódicos por dos centavos, y yo ganaba un penny por cada uno de ellos. Me iba derecho a el lugar de billar, y los vendía todos. No me tomo mucho para tomarle el lado bueno!."

"Y si tenia quince centavos en mi bolsillo, hombre, estaba rico! Podía comprar una Hamburguesa por un nickle, una barra de dulce por un nickle. Y mi abuela me subía a una bicicleta."

Al pasar los años, la ciudad crecería, así como la familia de Alvarado. Mientras el continuaba yendo a la escuela, también engrandecía su negocio de los periódicos.

"Luego di un 'gran golpe', y tome una ruta," recuerda Alvarado. "Luego empezaron ha extraer aceite, y Odessa empezó realmente ha crecer. Y tuve suerte y tome una ruta de periódicos entre la Calle Washington y la Calle Houston. Tu dirías que por ahí vivía la gente rica. No tenia ningún problema colectando el dinero, y todo el tiempo tenia dinero en mi bolsillo."

La historia de la familia de Alvarado, en muchos modos, igualdaba la historia de América durante la primera mitad del siglo veinte. Hubo la depresión, durante la cual algunos fueron desocupados de sus trabajos del ferrocarril. Luego vino la nueva prosperidad de la explosión del aceite, luego los años de guerra. En algunos tiempos interesantes para el padre de Alvarado, quien era, para entonces, una mano fuerte para los grupos que tendían las nuevas rieles en los caminos del ferrocarril.

"Su nuevo trabajo era tender nuevo acero, lo que ellos llamaban un nuevo traqué," explica Alvarado. "Ellos quitaban como una cuarta milla de un lado. Y luego a mano - tenían que haber sido unos hombres muy fuertes - ellos ponían los traques ahí temporamente, lo clavaban, regresaban y llenaban con las amarraduras que cruzaban y que tenían que ser llenadas, la pierdas, la grava y cosas así."

"Yo puedo recordar, durante la Segunda Guerra Mundial, que el tenia un trabajo muy importante. Pero tenia que tener a un hombre con banderas en cada lado de donde el estuviera trabajando, porqué los trenes del gobierno no tenían horas. Tenia que tener un hombre con banderas, para poner lo que le llamaban 'pequeños torpedos'. Cuando un tren se pasaba por encima de esto, los reventaba y tronaban. Esto le daba a el ingeniero la oportunidad de Empezar ha detenerse, porque no había traques enfrente de el! Pero la mayoría de los trenes estaban sin anunciar. Y se enojaban mas que una gallina mojada cuando ellos tenían que parar por un poco de tiempo!"

"Llego al momento donde el recibió mas y mas moderna maquinaria, como una grúa y cosas como estas. También tuvieron trabajando prisioneros Alemanes (de guerra). Por supuesto el ejercito o alguien los tenia que cuidar. Trabajaban a los muchachos del colegio del México viejo, como manos, porque todos se habían ido a la guerra. Tenían muy mal tiempo cuidando las manos durante la Segunda Guerra Mundial."

Alvarado graduaría de la Odessa High School durante los tempranos años de la guerra. Mientras tanto graduaciones de la high school eran raras entre los jovenes Hispanos en algunas otras comunidades de el Oeste de Tejas, era y común en Odessa.

Hispanic Health Care: The Need for Access

By Raul E. Burciaga

Health care reform has become a major issue for two reasons: high costs and lack of access. The costs won't go away; they probably won,t even decrease. But if we don,t do something about the access, the costs will be even higher.

One out of six U.S. residents does not have health insurance. For Hispanics, that ratio is worse: one out of three.

The culture, socioeconomic status and needs of Mexican Americans, Cuban-Americans, Puerto Ricans and newly arrived immigrants from Mexico and Central and South America vary greatly from group to group. Even within a group, health status can differ dramatically between those born in this country and those born elsewhere. Surprisingly, one study suggests that recent arrivals from Mexico tend to be of better health than their Mexican-American cultural counterparts.

Still, there are common issues that affect all Hispanics. Foremost is the jargon - "medi-speak" -. that envelops the subject. It's difficult enough for those who are proficient in English to understand insurance forms and statements from physicians and hospitals. What does one do if he or she understands only Spanish (or Navajo or Vietnamese or Russian)?

Please don't start on how "if only they'd learn to speak English." My parents, born and raised in Mexico, lived and worked in this country for more than 40 years. They read, understood and occasionally spoke English. But insurance forms were passed along to me and my siblings to decipher.

When my parents died, I was working for Medicare and was able to wade through the mounds of paperwork. Because of my work in insurance - not because of my English proficiency -. I came to understand terms like "participation," "assignment," "Gramm-Rudman.Hollings I percent reduction and allowable charge." Had I not understood all of this, my brothers and sisters and I might easily have paid hundreds of dollars more than the amounts for which we were responsible.

Recent studies show that between 35 percent and 39 percent of the U.S. Hispanic population does not have health insurance. This contrasts starkly with an uninsured rate of 23 percent for African-Americans and 13 percent for whites. A General Accounting Office report to Congress on Hispanic Access to Health Care says the high uninsured rate among Hispanics is due to a number of factors, including unemployment, type of employment and income. Hispanics are more likely to work in places that generally don't provide coverage: industries such as personal services and agriculture. Unemployment or low income also impact the rate. Stringent Medicaid eligibility criteria in states such as Florida and Texas make public health insurance access difficult for a large number of Hispanics. Various studies find that health care for Hispanics is more costly because illnesses and injuries are treated in the emergency room - or at a very late stage.

AIDS, perinatal conditions, diabetes, cirrhosis of the liver and other liver diseases kill proportionately more Hispanics than non-Hispanic whites. In fact, AIDS and perinatal conditions are among our top 10 killers. None of these conditions is among the major killers of non.Hispanic whites. Hispanics account for 9 percent of the U.S. population; yet they make up 17 percent of its AIDS cases. Hispanics are more likely to suffer from hypertension, hyperlipidemia, hyperglycemia, cardiopulmonary problems, stroke, cirrhosis, obesity and certain types of cancer. We are two to three times more likely to have diabetes.

Of all diabetes-related complications identified in a study of Texas border counties, 60 percent of the blindness cases, 51 percent of kidney failures and 67 percent of amputations of feet and legs could have been prevented with proper treatment. Along the entire U.S..Mexico border, air and water pollution and low immunization rates are major public health concerns as well. Hispanic migrant agricultural workers risk work.related injuries and reactions to chemical exposure. Hispanic children have a high rate of preventable conditions: serious ear and urinary tract infections, dental problems, tuberculosis, viral gastroenteritis, hepatitis A and B, severe vitamin deficiencies, respiratory infections, dermatitis and diseases aggravated by poor nutrition. Infants suffer from lack of prenatal care and nutritional deficiencies.

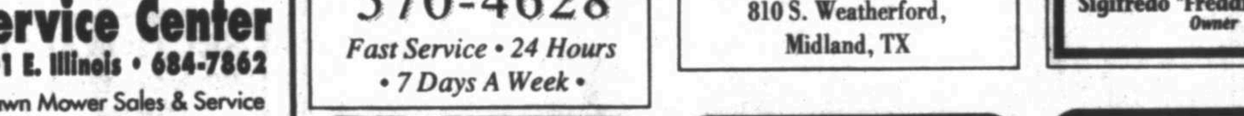

For Hispanics in the United States, health problems are pervasive. Yet little attention has been directed to the increasing dangers they present, or to solutions available to address them.

(First of two articles. Next: Some essential steps to avert a Hispanic health crisis.)

(Raul E. Burciaga, of Albuquerque, N.M., is a member of the National Hispanic Advisory Committee on Health, a coalition of health care professionals which met this month with the President's health care task force and the Congressional Hispanic Caucus.)

La Organización Hispana mas Antigua de Odessa: El Club de Leones Odessa Basin

Por Amarante Cordova

Por medio de una amplia variedad de clubs y organizaciones cívicas, las personas de Odessa están ayudando a otros por medio de servicios a la comunidad. La concentración de estos grupos puede variar de una organización a otra, ya sea los Knights of Columbus, el Junior League, o cualquiera de estos de entre una docena.

Pero todos comparten el mismo compromiso para el servicio y el mejoramiento a la comunidad.

Una de estas organizaciones, el Club de Leones Odessa Basin, ha estado activo por treinta y cinco años, y sus miembros ha incluido prominentes líderes Hispanos de el condado de Ector y la ciudad de Odessa.

"El club empezó en 1958, y hasta la fecha, nosotros somos el club mas antiguo en la ciudad de Odessa," dice Roberto Sanchez, dueño de Robert's Automotive Service al Sur de la Calle Grant, un miembro de los Leones Odessa Basin.

"Uno de nuestros primeros Alcaldes de la ciudad, fue Ernest Martinez, el fue un miembro privilegiado. Manuel Valles fue un miembro privilegiado, el es J.P. (Juez de Paz para el condado de Ector). Abel Quintela, el estuvo con el club. Pero el se fue a la Cámara Nacional, como presidente de la Cámara de Comercio Hispana. Y hay varias personas mas, líderes, que han salido de este club."

Sanchez explico que el mejor cuidado de la visión para todos, especialmente para jovenes, es una concentración de la organización.

"La misión del cuidado de la vista. Nosotros ayudamos a personas, la mayoría personas jovenes en la escuela, niños escolantes que necesitan lentes." explico el. "Ayudamos a personas mayores, también. Pero principalmente, es para los niños. Es de este modo como empezamos. Pero la cosa principal es el cuidado de la vista.

Por medio de levantamiento de fondos monetarios, contribuciones a bancos locales de ojos, y apoyo de todo el estado por el Campo de Leones de Kerrville, Texas, Sanchez, y otros miembros están haciendo una diferencia positiva en su comunidad, y asegurándole a la gente joven con un futuro mejor.

"Bueno, mi interés es, yo tengo un negocio aquí, en la ciudad. Y siempre he vivido aquí, en la ciudad," explico Sanchez, quien es un presidente anterior de los Leones de Odessa Basin. "Las personas que han venido a mi negocio siempre nos han apoyado. Así que pensé que le debía algo a la comunidad."

"Esto es lo que quiero hacer, tu sabes, dar algo a la comunidad. Y este es uno de los modos que lo hago, algúnos de estos con mi tiempo libre, algunos de estos no tengo que hacer tiempo libre!"

Los dos eventos anuales de levantamiento de fondos monetarios por Sanchez y otros miembros de su club - el cual es uno de los ocho clubs de Leones de la ciudad de Odessa - son las fiestas del 'Cinco de Mayo' y el 'Diez y Seis de Septiembre'. En adición, todos los clubs en la ciudad se unen para el anual 'Día de las Rosas' un levantamiento de fondos monetarios, vendiendo rosas por entre toda la comunidad.

El Club de Leones Odessa Basin se reune el primer y tercer martes de cada mes, en su casa social 'Lions Den', en el 333 al Sur de la Calle Texas (en la esquina de Texas y Murphy), en Odessa. Las juntas son hechas a las ocho de la tarde.

"Esta es una tarde de club. Este es el tiempo en el que nos reunimos," explico Sanchez. "Hay otros clubs que se reunen en las mañanas, hay clubs que se reunen en los medios días. Pero nosotros? La mayoría de las personas que están en nuestro club son la clase de personas que trabajan. Este es el único tiempo que nos podemos reunir, y este es el tiempo que nos reunimos."

Sanchez admite que la membrecia ha sufrido en los últimos años, como la economía ha decaído, y los miembros han sido forzados ha moverse. Pero siempre hay lugar para nuevos miembros, agrego el, quienes estén listos para hacer un compromiso.

"Bueno, mayormente personas con mente cívica. Personas que realmente quieren compartir el desarrollo de la comunidad," dijo el. "Y que están dispuestos ha hacer esto ellos mismos, que tengan el tiempo para hacer esto. Esta es la clase de personas que nosotros necesitamos!"

Odessa's Oldest Hispanic Organization; The Odessa Basin Lions Club

By Amarante Cordova

Through a wide variety of clubs and civic organizations, the people of Odessa are helping others through service to the community. The focus of these groups may vary from one organization to the next, whether it's the Knights of Columbus, the Rotary, the Junior League, or any of a dozen others. But all share a commitment to service, and the improvement of the community.

One such organization, the Odessa Basin Lions Club, has been active for thirty-five years, and it's members have included prominent Hispanic leaders of Ector County, and the City of Odessa.

"The club was started in 1958, and up to this date, we're the oldest Hispanic club in the city of Odessa," said Roberto Sanchez, owner of Robert's Automotive Service on South Grant Street, and a member of the Odessa Basin Lions.

"One of our first City Councilmen, was Ernest Martinez. He was a charter member. Manuel Valles was a charter member. He's the J-P (Justice of the Peace for Ector County). Abel Quintela, he was with the club. But he went up to the national chamber, Hispanic Chamber of Commerce President. And there's several other people, leaders, that have come out of this club."

Sanchez explained that better vision for all, especially the young people, is the focus of his organization.

"The mission is eyesight. We help people, mostly young school people, school kids that require glasses," he explained. "We help older people, also. But mainly, it's for the kids. That's the way we started out. But the main thing is eyesight."

Through fundraising, contributions to local eye banks, and statewide support for the Kerrville Lions Camp for handicapped children, in Kerrville, Texas, Sanchez, and other members are making a positive difference in their community, and assuring the young people of a better future.

"Well, my thing is, I have a business here, in the city. I always have lived here, in the city," explained Sanchez, who is a past President of the Odessa Basin Lions. "And the people that have come to my business always have supported us. I figure that I owe something back to the community.'

"This is what I want to do, you know, just give something back to the community. This is one of the ways I do it, some of it with my spare time, some of the time that I don't have to spare!"

Two annual fundraising events for Sanchez and other members of his club - which is one of eight Lions Clubs in the city of Odessa - are the fiestas that accompany celebrations of 'Cinco de Mayo' and Diez y Seiz de Septiembre'. In addition, all clubs in the city join together for the annual 'Rose Day' fundraiser, selling roses throughout the community.

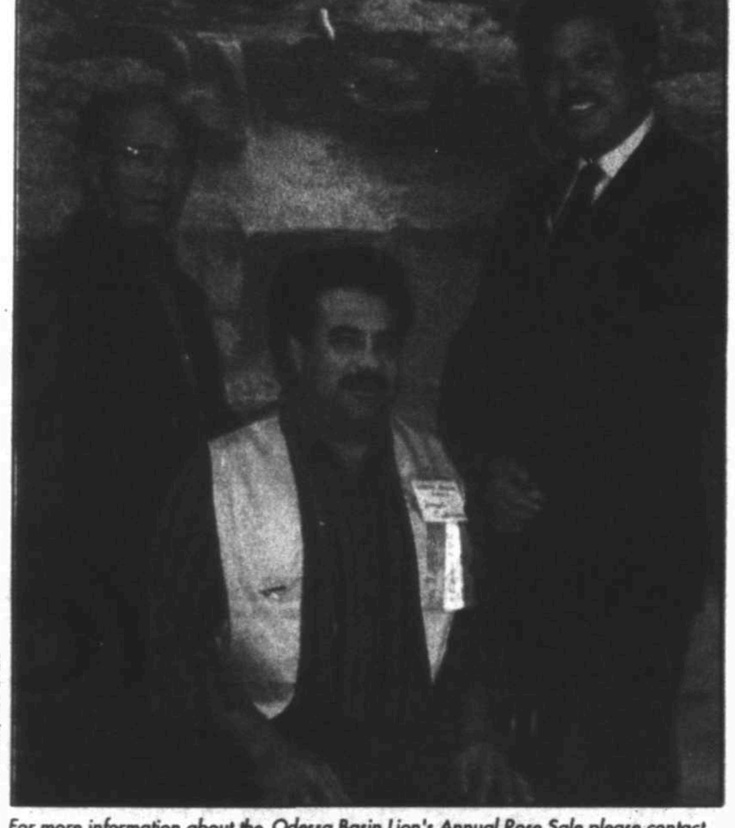

The Odessa Basin Lions Club meets the first and third Tuesdays of every month, at their 'Lions Den' club house, 335 South Texas (on the corner of Texas and Murphy), in Odessa. Meetings are held at eight in the evening.

"This is an evening club. This is the time we can meet," explained Sanchez. "There's other clubs that meet in the morning, there's clubs that meet at noon. But ours? Most of the people that are in our club are the working class. This is the only time that we can meet, so this is the time we meet."

Sanchez admits that membership has suffered in recent years, as the economy has declined, and members have been forced to move. But there is always room for new members, he adds, who are ready to make a commitment.

"Well, mainly civic-minded people. People that really want to share in the development of the community," he said. "And that are able to do this themselves, that have the time to do this. This is the kind of people we need!"

Education/Educación

Mas de 45 años de Excelente Educación . . . Odessa College

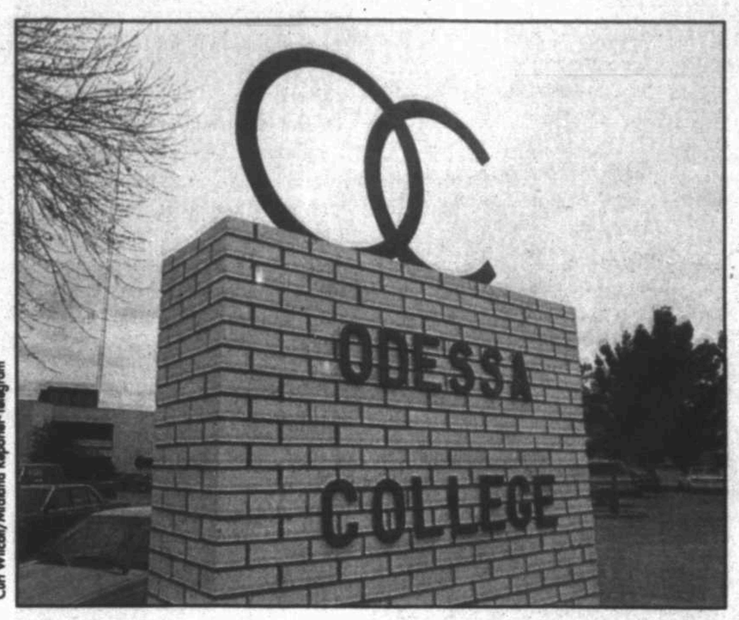

Por Amarante Cordova

En la historia de Odessa y el Ector County, actualmente había dos Odessa Colleges. Es el segundo de estas escuelas que todavía se destacan hoy como una institución de la alta educación en el Oeste de Tejas.

Marcas históricas nos dicen que la primera fue construida en 1890, un proyecto cooperativo de la Compañía Townsite y la Iglesia Metodista. Las clases empezaron en 1891, con 14 estudiantes bajo la dirección de Alice Wright. Pero un incendio destruyo el primer Odessa College solamente después del primer semestre, y la escuela nunca se volvió ha abrir.

En 1938, administradores del Distrito Escolar del "Ector County colocarían los cimientos para un nuevo Odessa College, cuando ellos propusieron a la unión electoral para fundar un Junior College. Estos depósitos, y la fundación del Distrito de Odessa del Junior College, finalmente seria aprobado por votantes en 1946.

Murray Fly, el primer Presidente del Odessa College y pasado Superintendente Escolar del Ector County, inspecciono un campo de otros dos administradores, seis maestros y menos de 200 estudiantes. Crecimiento, en el tamaño de el campo, en el tamaño de la cantidad de estudiantes, y en los servicios ofrecidos a la comunidad, los cuales continúan creciendo hasta este día. El crecimiento incluido en la extensión del Distrito del Odessa College, y la abertura de un campo sucursal en Midland en 1969. (Antes del establecimiento de el Distrito en Midland del Junior College, y la abertura del Midland College en 1972).

Curt Wilcott/Midland Reporter-Telegram

El campo del Odessa College incluye el estudio de facilidades de la Radio KOCV-FM, y KOCV-TV, las cuales están afiliadas con la Radio Nacional Publica y el Sistema de Radiodifusión Publica, respectivamente. Esto ha dado a la comunidad una excelente educación, noticias, y programas de información muy cercamente en los treinta años.

Uno de los mas extraordinarios teatros en Tejas esta en los campos del Odessa College. Construido en 1968, el Globo del Gran Suroeste esta construido al estilo de el original Teatro Globe, donde William Shakespeare presento su obra en Londres, Inglaterra, cerca de 400 años pasados.

El Odessa College ha ganado una reputación nacional sobre los años por mujeres y hombres atletas. En los recientes años, Atletas del Odessa College han tenido competiciones nacionales en basketball, traqué y campo, y rodeos.

Pero en el centro de cualquier colegio de la comunidad es la educación, educación y oportunidades para toda la comunidad entera, y lo mismo es verdad en el Odessa College. Administradores están orgullosos de como su escuela ha trabajado con todas las partes de la comunidad.

"Bueno, por muchos años, Odessa College ha tenido comités especiales para estudiar los factores de como mejorar la inscripción de las minoridades en la comunidad," dice Lydia Evaro-Torres, Asistente Especial de el Presidente de el Odessa College. "Tres años pasados, mi oficina fue establecida para dirigir los factores en una base de cada día. Esto ha sido una misión, en efecto, parte de las metas de el Odessa College, de querer alcanzar una alta inscripción de minoridades en el campo, y de dirigir sus necesidades en términos de admisión, consejos, guianza, consejos en carreras, consejos académicos para toda las personas."

"Pero también queriendo asegurarse que el personal y la facultad de el Odessa College era sensitiva a los intereses de la comunidad minoritaria. Y así tres años pasados, esta oficina fue creada. Nos concentramos en enlistar y retener la primer generación de estudiantes del colegio. Y con esto, por supuesto, muchísimos estudiantes minoritarios caen en esta categoría."

Es una estrategia que parece ir trabajando, y trabajando muy bien. Es difícil dejar pasar un día sin encontrarse a un graduado de el Odessa College. Muchos han ido ha terminar su alta educación a una institución de cuatro años, mientras otros han ido directamente a un lugar de trabajo con habilidades nuevas. Encontraras graduados de el Odessa College en las oficinas de leyes de el Centro de la ciudad de Odessa, siendo dueños y operando negocios alrededor del Permian Basin, y enseñando en escuelas por todo Tejas. Algunos han ido en las carreras de las estaciones locales de radio y televisión, mientras otros se han movido en los deportes profesionales.

En pocas palabras, los estudiantes de el Odessa College, reflejan la comunidad de la escuela que tiene muy cerca de cincuenta años de servicio, siendo una parte importante.

Over 45 years of Quality Education . . . Odessa College

By Amarante Cordova

In the history of Odessa and Ector County, there were actually two Odessa Colleges. It is the second of these schools that still stands today as an institution of higher education in West Texas.

Historical markers tell us that the first was built in 1890, a cooperative project of the Odessa Townsite Company and the Methodist Church. Classes began in 1891, with 14 students under the direction of Alice Wright. But fire destroyed this first Odessa College after only one semester, and the school never reopened.

In 1938, trustees of the Ector County School District would lay the foundations for a new Odessa College, when they proposed a bond election to fund a junior college. These bonds, and the formation of the Odessa Junior College District, would finally be approved by voters in 1946.

Murray Fly, the first President of Odessa College and a former Ector County School Superintendent, oversaw a campus of two other administrators, six teachers, and less than 200 students. Growth, in the size of the campus, the size of the student body, and in the services offered to the community, continues to grow to this day. This growth included the extension of the Odessa College District, and the opening of a Midland branch campus in 1969 (before the establishment of the Midland Junior College District, and the opening of Midland College in 1972).

The Odessa College campus includes the studio facilities of KOCV-FM radio, and KOCV-TV, which are affiliated with National Public Radio and the Public Broadcasting System, respectively. This has provided the community with quality education, news, and information programs for nearly thirty years.

One of the most unique theaters in Texas is on the Odessa College Campus. Built in 1968, the Globe of the Great Southwest is built in the style of the original Globe Theatre, where William Shakespeare presented his plays in London, England, nearly 400 years ago.

Odessa College has won a national reputation over the years for men's and women's athletics. In recent years, Odessa College athletes have starred in national competitions in basketball, track and field, and rodeo.

But at the center of any community college is education, education and opportunities for the entire community, and the same is true at Odessa College. Administrators are proud of how their school has worked with all parts of the community.

"Well, for many years, Odessa College has had special committees to study the issue of how to improve minority enrollment in the community," said Lydia Evaro-Torres, Special Assistant to the President of Odessa College. "Three years ago, my office was established to address that issue on an everyday basis. It has been a mission, on fact, part of the goals of Odessa College, to want to achieve a higher enrollment of minorities on campus, and to address their needs in terms of admission, counseling, guidance, career counseling, academic counseling for all people."

"But also wanting to make sure that the staff and faculty of Odessa College was sensitive to the concerns of the minority community. So, three years ago, this office was created. We focus on the recruitment and retention of first-generation college students. And within that, of course, many minority students fall in that category."

It's a strategy that appears to be working, and working well. It's hard to pass a day without encountering a graduate of Odessa College. Many have gone on to finish their higher education at a 4-year institution, while others have gone directly into the workplace with new skills. You find Odessa College graduates in the law offices of downtown Odessa, owning and operating businesses across the Permian Basin, and teaching in schools throughout Texas. Some have gone on to careers in local television and radio stations, while others have moved on to professional sports.

In short, the students of Odessa College, reflect the community of which the school has, after nearly fifty years of service, become an important part.

MUSEUM OF THE SOUTHWEST

FAMILY
CELEBRATES 25TH ANNIVERSARY

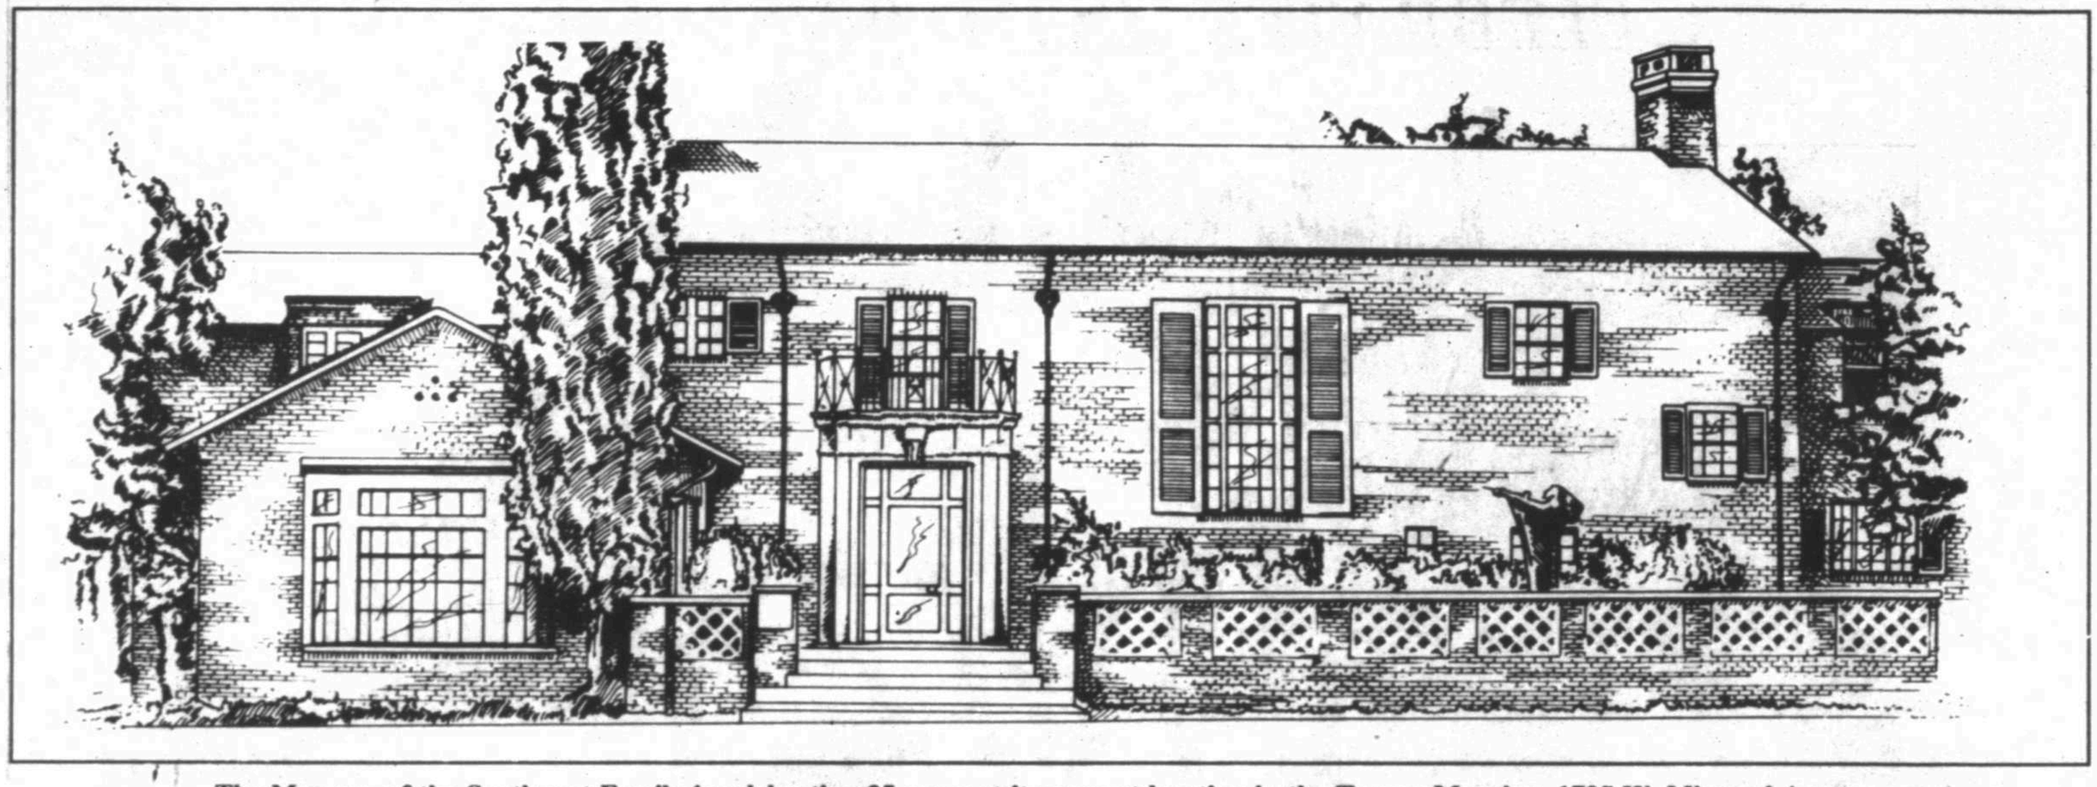

In The Turner Mansion

A Silver Anniversary

The Museum of the Southwest Family is celebrating 25 years at its current location in the Turner Mansion, 1705 W. Missouri Avenue.

Museum celebrates silver anniversary with gala events

The "Museum of the Southwest Family" is celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary in the Turner Mansion with several gala events during the month of April.

"It's a family event," said Galen Haynes, co-chairman of the anniversary celebration.

"Through the years the Museum family has grown to include many who have given time, money, support. Now we are celebrating 25 years together at the Mansion. It's like a wedding anniversary," she concluded.

The celebration activities will revolve around the themes set by the current exhibits.

The exhibit "Silver in Celebration 25," on display in the Breakfast and Dining Rooms, is in honor of the anniversary. It features special pieces of silver from Midland collectors. Ron Huse, the exhibit's curator, is underwriting the exhibit.

The library houses an exhibit of Kentucky Derby memorabilia. This display was inspired by 1959 Derby winner Tomy Lee, who was owned by Museum benefactors Fred and Juliette Turner. The exhibit also includes memorabilia associated with Alysheba, another Derby winner, owned by the Turner's daughter Dorothy Turner Scharbauer and her daughter, Pam.

"Randall Davey: At The Races" will be on display through May 30 in the Thomas Gallery. Davey's (1887-1964) love for horses and polo was intertwined with his strong desire to create art. This exhibit is designed to increase the viewer's awareness of Davey's attraction to horses and polo.

Other exhibits which will continue during the anniversary celebration include:

"Doug Hyde Sculptures" displayed in the South Wing Galleries 1 and 2 through April 18.

"American Indian Realism: Photographs" will extend from April 10 to May 30 in the Turner Gallery.

"Student Art Festival" exhibition will be in the South Wing Galleries one, two, three and the multipurpose room. This is the 32nd annual juried exhibit of works by area students. The exhibit is scheduled to begin April 23 and run through May 16.

The events planned include:

April 1
Anniversary Brunch
April 3
Gala Anniversary Dinner
April 4
Anniversary Polo Match
April 16-17
Texas Archeological Awareness Week Activities
April 24
25th Anniversary Party

Anniversary Brunch and Gala Dinner kick off festivities

The Museum's Silver Anniversary celebration will be kicked off with a brunch, sponsored by NationsBank on April 1, and a dinner, given by the Board of Trustees on April 3.

The brunch will be held in the Turner Mansion from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

Playwright Douglas McGrath and Liz Welch Tirrell, associate producer of Saturday Night Live, will be featured speakers.

They are expected to tell how their Midland experience influenced their careers.

Also during the brunch, Swartz will present an informal style show.

The Gala Dinner, scheduled from 7 p.m. to 11 p.m. on Saturday night, will be held in the Mansion and the Thomas Galleries.

Galen Haynes, co-chair of the Anniversary Celebration Committee, said there will be a silent auction of a few silver pieces.

Masterpeace will provide music for the evening, while Prickly Pear caters the dinner.

Railroad Commissioner Barry Williamson and U. S. Representative Henry Bonilla are expected to attend.

Dian Malouf, writer and jewelry designer, is also expected to be among the dinner guests.

Entertainment industry personalities return to Midland

Playwright Douglas McGrath and Liz Welch Tirrell, associate producer of Saturday Night Live, will return to Midland April 1 to speak at the Museum's Anniversary Brunch.

McGrath's movie "Born Yesterday," which stars John Goodman, Melody Griffith and Don Johnson, was released in Midland March 26.

McGrath is currently writing a script for Robert Redford.

McGrath , who grew up in Midland, has also written scripts for Saturday Night Live.

Tirrell, daughter of Bittie and Frank Welch, was raised in Midland.

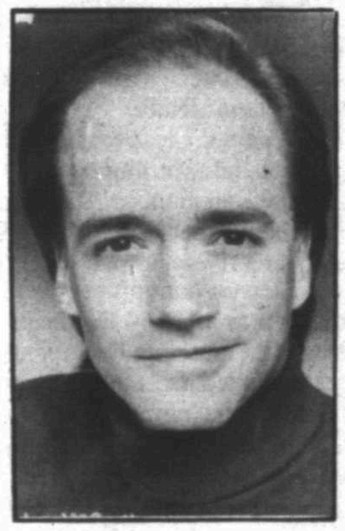

Following her graduation from the University of Texas in 1977, she worked as an intern on the film "Pretty Baby" with Brooke Shields and Susan Sarandon.

Tirrell moved to New York City in the fall of 1977, where she earned the title of Cast Secretary on Saturday Night Live, working with the original Not Ready For Primetime Players.

In 1982 Tirrell left the show to pursue other career opportunities, but in 1988 she returned to Saturday Night Live as Talent Coordinator.

She is now Associate Producer and acts as Head of the Talent Department.

Tirrell and McGrath teamed up in 1987 to write and direct a short film, "Laurie Has a Story," which was later aired on Saturday Night Live.

Anniversary Polo Match slated

In conjunction with the exhibit of "Randall Davey: At the Races," an Anniversary Polo Match will be held at 2 p.m. on Sunday, April 4 at the polo field on Polo Ground Road, according to Kelly Beal, event co-chairman.

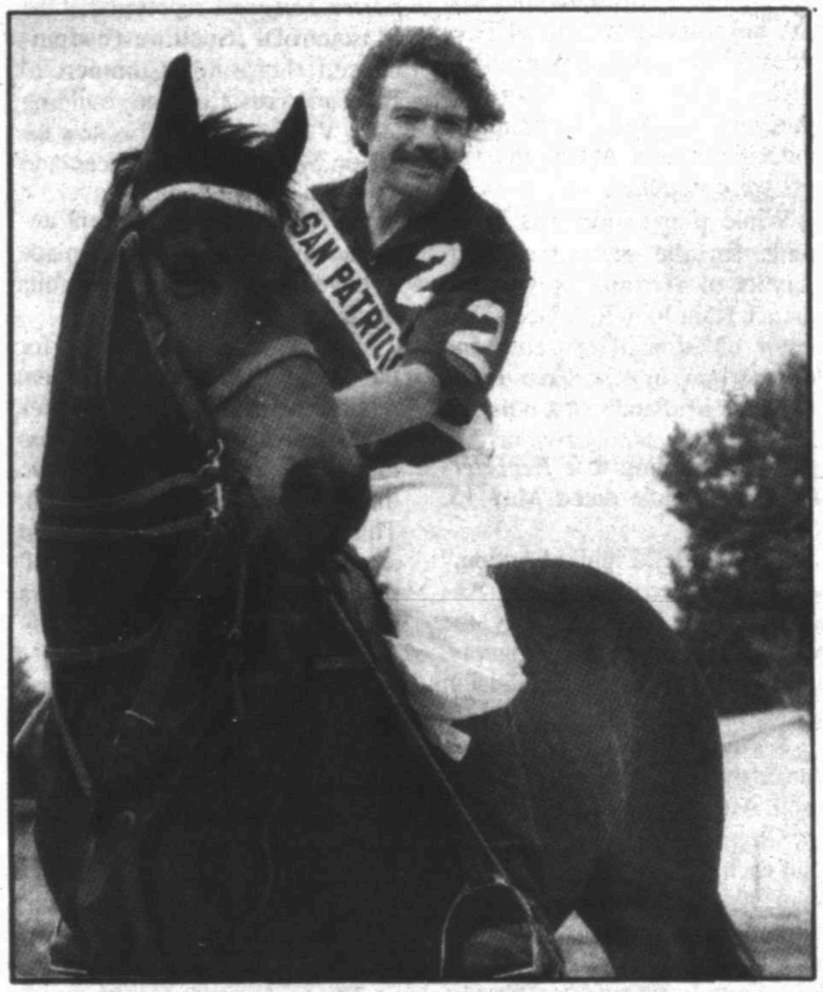

The match, hosted by Midland Polo Club, will be between the Midland Polo Club and the San Patricio Polo Club. Both are Midland teams.

Michael Hurd, son of artist Peter Hurd, will be playing on the San Patricio Club.

(An exhibit of Peter Hurd's works was the first to be displayed in the Fred and Juliette Turner Gallery in December 1968.)

There will be a $10 fee per car. Half of the fee will benefit the Museum and be tax deductible.

To get to the polo field go north on Garfield. Turn east on Bluebird Lane, then back north on Polo Ground Road.

Michael Hurd, son of artist Peter Hurd, will play in the Museum of the Southwest's Anniversary Polo Match on Sunday, April 4 at 2 p.m. The match is sponsored by Jack Sherman Chevrolet, Geo, Buick, Mazda.

25th Anniversary Party set for April 24

A community-wide Twenty-fifth Anniversary Party will be held on the Museum grounds at 1705 W. Missouri on Saturday, April 24 from 3-5 p.m.

On the front porch of the Turner Mansion there will be a ceremony to recognize museum founders and volunteers. Proclamations from Midland County, the City of Midland and State of Texas declaring April 24 "Museum of the Southwest Day" will be read.

Participants will enjoy anniversary cake, donated by Albertsons. Pepsi is providing soft drinks for participants.

In conjunction with the celebration, several activities are planned throughout the Museum complex.

Midland Arts Association will be offering demonstrations of various kinds.

Cars from the 1950's will be displayed in the driveway of the Turner Mansion.

The Green Thumb Garden Club Table Show, which will run April 23-25 will be going on during the day's festivities.

The Student Art Festival Exhibit will open April 24. (Awards Reception will be Thursday, April 29 at 7 p.m.).

Native American craftsmen to demonstrate skills

Teddy Stickney, president of the Midland Archaeology Society, announced that Native American craftsmen will demonstrate flint knapping, leather tanning, weaving and pottery forming on April 16 and 17 at the Museum of the Southwest.

There will be a reception for the artisans on Thursday evening, April 15 from 6 p.m.- 9 p.m.

Demonstrations will be given for area schools on Friday. On Saturday the programs will be open to the public.

The program is being planned in conjunction with Texas Archeological Awareness Week.

The emphasis week is designed to acquaint Texans with the cultural diversity of Texas, which is represented by many archaeological and historical sites within the State.

In addition, the week emphasizes the educational and economic benefits of preserving the state's prehistoric and historic sites.

Texas Archeological Awareness Week always includes April 17, the birthday of Thomas Jefferson. Jefferson was considered the first American to utilize scientific methods in archaeological excavation.

Pottery demonstrations will be part of Archeological Awareness Week activities, April 16 and 17.

The Early Years

Junior League undertakes museum challenge

"After extensive interviews with community groups, it was determined that a city of over 65,000 people should be able to number a museum among its assets," announced Junior League President Mrs. Thomas H. Cole in November, 1964 according to the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

The museum was to be governed by a board of Junior League members and interested citizens. The Junior League was to provide financial assistance and volunteer aid.

The Reporter-Telegram noted that this was the "first serious community project" of the Junior League and was to be supported through the Community Trust Fund of the League. This fund was financed by proceeds from the Next-to-New Shop, the Annual Charity Ball and donations.

In July of 1965 Dr. Hugo G. Rodeck, prominent director of the University of Colorado Museum, came to Midland to provide three days of expert consultation.

On July 27, 1965 the Reporter-Telegram quoted Rodeck saying, "I have great admiration for your local program. These people don't need as much professional advice as they think they do."

Midland's treasure of cultural, historical and technological items were so diffused that, "98 percent of the people don't even know they are here," Rodeck said.

Midland Museum Corporation was established on September 25, 1965. William B. Blakemore II chaired the first Board of Directors, which was comprised of 15 members elected for two and three year terms.

The Executive Committee included Charles F. Henderson, vice-chairman and head of the Building Committee; Robert M. Leibrock, treasurer; Mrs. John D. Carey, assistant treasurer; and Mrs. William D. Shirky, secretary.

Other board members were John B. Ashmun, John Dorn, Glen L. Evans, Edwin H. Magruder, Jr., Hamilton E. McRae, Frank D. Welch, Mrs. Thomas H. Cole, Mrs.Charles E. Marsh III, Mrs. W.C. Tillett, and A.N. Hendrickson.

Apparently there was some concern that the new museum might compete with the Midland County Museum housed in the library. The newspaper reported that the new museum was intended to be an arts and sciences museum.

On December 19, 1965 the first major financial contribution to the museum was announced. The Junior League pledged $55,000 to be given over a five-year period.

Five League committees were established to assist in the development of the museum. Those committees included: Docent Committee, Exhibition Committee, Clerical Committee, Maintenance Committee and Publicity Committee.

League President Mrs. Daniel deG. Strong explained that the organization had chosen to support the development of a museum because it would benefit the entire population and would preserve, interpret and provide a focal point for the culture of the area.

On January 16, 1966 the Reporter-Telegram reported that trustees had chosen the name "Museum of the Southwest" and had leased a temporary location at 3203 W. Wall.

On February 6 the Reporter-Telegram mentioned a gift to the museum made by the Permian Basin Art Exhibition Committee. They contributed $1007 (the proceeds of the 1965 Permian Basin Art Show) to the permanent acquisition fund. This was the first contribution to this fund.

Naomi Lancaster was the honorary chair of the committee. Other officers making the presentation were Marilyn Todd, president and chairman of the 1965 exhibit and Mrs. Curtis Rogers, treasurer.

By March a Board of Advisors had been established (Reporter-Telegram, March 6, 1966). Cody Davis, Mrs. Harold Williams, John Galley, Richard D. Jons, Art Cole, Ray Herndon and LaDoyce Lambert were to serve in this capacity.

Also serving were John M. Hills, Alan M. May, Mrs. John P. McKinley, Wendell Mayes Jr., J.A. Jorgensen, Mrs. Carlton Beal, Mrs. Harvey Holcomb, Mrs. A.N. Hendrickson, Mrs. Raymond A. Lynch and Mrs. Clem George.

Odessans serving on the same board included John Ben Shepperd, Mrs. James S. Orbeck and Mrs. William D. Noel.

By this time the first exhibit "Echoes of Texas" was being researched and assembled.

Mary Griffith and Alice Tillet were responsible for procuring the pieces to be exhibited. "Two of us trooped all over the state gathering all that (items for the exibit)," Ms. Griffith recalled during a recent interview.

Junior League members and other volunteers pose at the second, temporary location for the fledgling Museum of theSouthwest. The address was 26 Village Circle.

Other Junior League members made a trip to Lubbock to hear tips offered by docents in Lubbock's Junior League. Included in this group were Mrs. Earle Craig, chairman of Tour Services, Mrs. Howard Olsen, Mrs. R. Searle McGrath, Mrs. Pomeroy Smith, Mrs. B.J. Clark and Mrs. William A Seal.

Midland Flare reported that Mrs. D. C. Whittington of Houston was enlisted as installation technician and Midland architect Frank Welch supervised design and lighting.

Governor John Connally signed the registry and performed the ribbon cutting on March 20, 1966.

The exhibit included documents such as the Velasco Treaty signed by Santa Anna and original land grants from the Mexican government, the Republic of Texas and the State of Texas. A cannon used in the Texas War of Independence was also part of the exhibit.

This opening and exhibit were mentioned in many area newspapers including the San Angelo Standard Times, the Kermit Daily Sun and the Lubbock-Avalanche Journal.

By the time the exhibit closed on April 17 more than 4,000 people had viewed the presentation. Visitors had come from over 24 Texas cities; 12 other states; Washington D.C.; Manchester, England; Sheffield, England; Kobe, Japan and Saudi Arabia. At least 900 visitors were students.

While preparation was being made for the second exhibit, "Lights of Action," it was announced that John R. Vincent, Director of Sanford Museum and Planetarium in Cherokee Iowa, would be Midland's first museum director. He was to arrive on August 1, according to a Reporter-Telegram article dated May 15, 1966.

Meanwhile, "Lights of Action," which featured "Electronic Abstractions" by Ben F. Laposky, the kinetic sculpture of Jean Tinguely, light machines and optical illusion art, was scheduled to open June 16.

An air conditioner breakdown forced the postponement of the exhibit. After it did open on June 25, the Reporter-Telegram reported that each day an average of more than 50 visitors viewed the exhibit. Midland Arts Association members and Junior League members served as hostesses for this event.

Over 7,000 people had visited the new museum by the end of its second exhibit.

On September 20, 1966 the Reporter-Telegram reported that the Museum of the Southwest had purchased theformer Commercial Bank and Trust Company building at 26 Village Circle. This new location was to house offices and exhibits.

At the same time Vincent announced that plans had been made to have monthly rotating exhibits beginning in November.

Vincent had a bold vision for the fledgling museum. A local reporter wrote, "The director wants a museum that will literally live up to its name, one that will preserve the rich heritage of the Southwest. This is a heritage which Vincent says is little realized to its full extent by Southwesterners themselves" (Reporter-Telegram, March 12, 1967).

Vincent's dream was to have a planetarium as a part of the museum. He also expressed a need for a new location for the complete facility (Reporter-Telegram, March 12, 1967).

By early 1967 the Museum was one of three attractions being promoted by the Chamber of Commerce.

The first annual Southwestern Artists' Exhibition was held in June 1967. It was co-sponsored by the Museum and Midland Art Association.

Museum home at last in the Turner Mansion

"This building has had its share of joy and laughter and has had its share of tragedy," Judge Barbara Culver said (Reporter-Telegram, September 5, 1968).

Judge Culver's statement was an apt summary of the beautiful Turner Mansion's history.

The Turner home, one of the first mansions in Midland when it was built in 1934, was evidence of an oil patch success story of legendary proportions.

Fred Turner, an oil scout and former tool dresser, made an incredible discovery in 1927 at the age of 31. Though he would soon drill some producing wells in Ector County and assist in locating several major oil fields, Turner's first major break was his discovery of a surveying error in the middle of the productive Yates Field (Linda Bond, "The House That Fred Built," City Life, October-December 1988, p. 12).

After winning a law suit on May 13, 1933, which sealed his claim to the strips of land, the Turner family began collecting royalties from the prolific field (Reporter-Telegram, October 29, 1963).

By 1933 the Turners had hired Anton F. Korn, Jr., a Dallas architect, to design a home to be built in Midland's West End addition.

Korn was well known for designing homes in Highland Park, as well as El Paso's Hilton and the Tom Green County Courthouse (Bond, p. 13).

The new home at 1705 W. Missouri included four bedrooms, six bathrooms, a powder room, five fireplaces, tennis court, swimming pool and six-horse stable. The construction cost, according to museum literature, was a "staggering" $250,000.

The Turners reared two daughters, Fredda and Dorothy, in that home. After the girls had married, the home often resounded with the sounds of 10 rollicking grandchildren.

Nineteen fifty-nine was an extraordinary year in the Turner Mansion. Fred drilled a gusher in Crockett County and a good well in Eddy county, New Mexico. In addition, one of the Turner's horses, Tomy Lee, won the Kentucky Derby (Bond, p. 14).

The days of tragedy, of which Culver spoke, were soon to follow.

On October 29, 1963, while Fred was out of town tending to his ranch in Las Vegas, New Mexico, Juliette was brutally beaten to death by 22-year old James Lee Marion (Reporter-Telegram, October 30, 1963).

When Fred returned home, having been notified of what had happened at his home, he told his family, "I don't want the house. Just turn it into a museum or something" (Bond, p. 15).

He never returned to the house, but stayed in a Midland apartment and at his farm in Brownwood. He died approximately three months later on February 4, 1964 of a heart seizure (Reporter-Telegram, February 5, 1964).

Hoping for happier days once again in the mansion, Fredda Turner Durham and Dorothy Turner Scharbauer, Jr., deeded the family home to Midland County for use as a museum on September 5, 1968.

Judge Barbara Culver, Dorothy Turner Scharbauer, Fredda Turner Durham and William B. Blakemore II gather in front of the Turner Mansion for the announcement that the historic home would become the Museum's permanent location.

"The family of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Turner hopes this property can be used and enjoyed as a cultural center for Midland and the surrounding area," Durham said (Reporter-Telegram, September 5, 1968).

Arrangements were made for the property to be leased to the Museum of the Southwest for $1/year. The museum assumed responsibility for the interior of the building, the County was to keep the grounds.

A black tie opening was held in the Juliette and Fred Turner, Jr. Memorial Gallery December 6, 1968.

Seven-hundred guests were present for the opening of the new gallery on December 8 (Reporter-Telegram, December 8, 1968).

The mansion was added to the National Historic Register as a landmark in September, 1989.

"By designating the house as a national landmark, museum officials hope to propel the entire neighborhood into being recognized as a historical district, making it eligible for federal restoration money, Ms. Hagman (Museum director) said" (Reporter-Telegram, September 15, 1989).

Broad based support sought

Volunteers gather for the first meeting of Las Manos, a support auxiliary for the Museum of the Southwest (1968).

"In years past the wealthy were able to support the fine arts. But these days, it is an absolutely essential ingredient to have broad-based support if a museum is to survive," said Mrs. Robert Meader, according to a Reporter-Telegram article in early 1968.

(Reporter-Telegram Feb. or March, 1968).

Mrs. Meader, director of development for the Dallas Museum of the Arts, was speaking to a newly formed group of volunteers known as "Las Manos."

Las Manos, which was formed in 1968, was to operate separately from other museum groups and to establish its own board of directors.

Museum literature said, "Las Manos del Museo del Sudoeste ... is a volunteer organization formed to encourage, promote, develop and further the Museum of the Southwest."

Las Manos began providing much of the volunteer help for the museum. In 1969 it initiated the annual arts extravaganza, Septemberfest.

The volunteers were also responsible for opening and operating the museum shop, The Shop of the Southwest.

Las Manos eventually began assisting with the annual Student Art Festival. (The Festival, which predated the Museum, was first held at the Museum after the move to the Turner Mansion).

An annual membership drive was initiated to help fund the operational cost of the Museum..

Supporters were known as "companeros del museo."

A major fund raising event, a triennial auction of donated items, was held first in 1969.

Proceeds provide funds for operations, acquisitions and endowments (Reporter-Telegram, February 6, 1983).

Steady Development

Porch becomes gallery

In 1970 the south porch of the Turner Mansion was enlarged and enclosed to provide 5,418 square feet of additional gallery space.

Midland architect Frank Welch drew the plans for the work done by JK&G Building Contractors.

Funds from the "Way Out Auction" were utilized in this endeavor. The "Way Out Auction" was the first auction sponsored by Las Manos for the museum's benefit.

Mrs. Bill Chappell was auction chairman.

General manager for the event was Mark Schweinfurth.

The auction was held in December of 1969 at the Midland Convention Hall. "Cactus" Pryor of Houston served as emcee while famed auctioneer Ed Jenkins auctioned off a wide variety of goods donated by area merchants.

One of the unique items which went on the auction block was a "Custom Catered Dinner by the Beautiful People of Midland".

Perkins Sams was the high bidder with a bid of $6500. So, on April 1 Sams entertained 20 friends at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A.A. Bradford.

Mrs. Redfern Glenn was the party coordinator.

Lynn Durham, John J. Redfern, Jr., Murray Fasken and John R. Vincent volunteered their services as majordomo, sommelier and bartenders.

John P. Butler was the head butler and was assisted by Art Cole, A.A. Bradford, James Armstrong, Harvey Herd and Clarence Scharbauer, who were enlisted as footmen.

Pat Baskin was the bouncer.

Chief Chef John Rahlfs was assisted by Mrs. John Rahlfs, Mrs. Harvey Herd, Mrs. Baskin and Mrs. Fasken, and Mrs. Cole.

Dorothy Scharbauer, Mrs. James Armstrong, Mrs. John J. Redfern, Mrs. Lynn Durham, Mrs. John P. Butler and Mrs. John R. Vincent were serving maids (Reporter-Telegram, December 11, 1969).

Apparently, the civic leaders enjoyed their evening as much as the guests of honor.

With the proceeds going to the museum's new addition, all Midlanders would soon be able to enjoy the benefits of the auction.

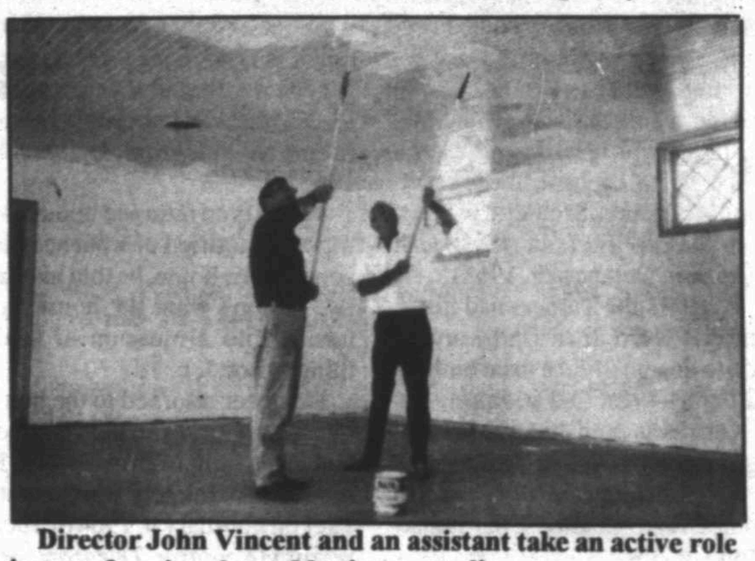

Alma Thomas made a significant contribution, hence the name Thomas Gallery.

The new wing was initially used for a semi-permanent regional history exhibition with particular emphasis on Midland.

Midland Archaeology Society, Midland County Historical Society and the Midland Camera Club helped assemble the exhibit.

Director John Vincent and an assistant take an active role in transforming the stables into a studio.

Shop designed to meet educational objectives

The Shop of the Southwest opened in the Southeast corner of the Turner Mansion on March 27, 1971.

Shop Chairman Mrs. Edgar Keefe described the store's purpose not only in terms of its benefit to the museum, but also in terms of the educational value of the items stocked (Reporter-Telegram, March 16, 1971).

Rare minerals, crystals, hand-carved items and patchwork quilts were stocked.

Books on art, natural history and Southwestern pottery and baskets were also sold.

The shop was stocked and operated by Las Manos members.

Walter H. Walne built the shop's counters and display shelves.

At the shop's one year anniversary party over 50 volunteers were honored. Those included carpenters, painters, bookkeeping and clerical personnel, merchandise buyers and hostesses (Reporter-Telegram, March 26, 1972).

Las Manos turned the administration of the shop over to the Museum in the early 1980's, said Enid Davis, administrative assistant of the Museum.

In May 1990 the Museum Board decided to take a different approach to handling the shop. They leased the shop to a private citizen.

Soon, thereafter, a "satellite" shop was opened at Oakridge Square.

The Shop was closed in August, 1991.

Currently, the Museum Board is exploring the possibility of reopening a shop, Ms. Davis said.

Mrs. Ben Johnson helps Sammy Hanson select just the right polished stone to purchase from the Shop of the Southwest.

Stables transformed into studio

The six-stall stables, which had once housed Kentucky Derby winner Tomy Lee, assumed a new function in 1969.

In March 1969 plans were announced to close the south side of the stables and add a concrete floor and plumbing, as well as install lights and heating for a studio (Gaceta de Tejas, March, 1969).

Long range plans included acquiring equipment for etching and lithography.

By September lithography and print making classes were scheduled (Reporter-Telegram, September 21, 1969).

In 1971 gas-fired kilns and a furnace were constructed for Raku firing and bronze casting.

In 1983 the stables were converted into a showcase for temporary exhibits of art, cultural anthropology and archaeology (Reporter-Telegram, February 26, 1984).

Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Pearson and Mrs. J. V. Terrill helped finance this project.

"'The idea for the Stables Gallery,' Pearson said, 'evolved from a need for an adequate indoor storage and display area for large, heavy sculpture. The floors of the Turner galleries were not designed to support this kind of concentrated heavy load.'" (Reporter-Telegram, February 27, 1983).

Milton Babbitt of Ford, Powell and Carson in San Antonio developed the architectural plans.

Today, the studio is regularly used by the Midland Arts Association.

Septemberfest: a dynamic community event

Imagine 200 adults and students strolling across the grounds of the Museum of the Southwest and enjoying the music of several area musicians.

That was what the first Septemberfest was like in 1969. The one evening event was sponsored by Las Manos. Mark Schweinfurth chaired the Septemberfest committee.

Septemberfest has been a dynamic community event, changing in little ways each year. Gradually it has become a nationally-known arts and crafts extravaganza which runs all weekend and attracts over 8,000 visitors.

The same basic format was used in 1970, but by 1971 a new twist was added.

The event opened with fanfare, the "Septemberfest Fanfare," in fact. Midland High School student composer Randy Daw along with Steve Carlsen and Ricky Morris trumpeted the music from the second-floor balcony of the Turner Mansion.

By 1972 the annual event had gone beyond being successful, to being highly important as both a fund raiser and community arts experience.

Preparation for an expanded festival that year included a major house cleaning at the Mansion. Built-up dirt was removed from the building's facade by sandblasting. The true brick color and beautiful limestone were visible for the first time in years (Reporter-Telegram, August 17, 1972).

The event opened with a ribbon cutting at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium at 6 p.m. This was the first opportunity for the public to inspect the new facility.

For the first time food was served, as participants enjoyed an authentic German dinner on the grounds of the Lancaster House.

Dancing, including square dancing, was added to the evening's events. The German oom pah band, folk singers and instrumentalists were back.

An invitational "showcase" featured exhibits and demonstrations of unusual arts, crafts and skills. U.S. Marines baking bread in field ovens, a Fredricksburg couple making German puzzles and a stitching exhibit were part of this "showcase" (Reporter-Telegram, August 13, 1972).

The Midland Garden Club added their own touch with "Gartenfest," while the Midland Camera Club sponsored a photographic display (September 3, 1972).

Approximately 2,000 attended the festival that year. Septemberfest was well on its way to becoming an event of major proportion.

Soon food booths would be added, where other non-profit organizations could split their profits with the museum.

A separate festival consisting of booths and entertainment for children was started. "Kinderfest grew from being a group of people who took care of the children of the people who worked at Septemberfest into what it is today," said Publicity Chairman Jeanine Donnelly (Reporter-Telegram, September 5, 1982).

Organizers began using a jury to select a limited number of artists to display their work at the event. Initially, artists living within a 100 mile radius were excluded. This was changed in 1986, when Las Manos voted to allow seven percent of the participants to be from the local area.

In 1981 a Lite Run For Fun was included in the September event. By 1992 the event was called "Septemberfest Run For Fun."

In 1986 rain forced the event indoors at the Midland County Exhibit Building. Event organizers were still pleased with the attendance.

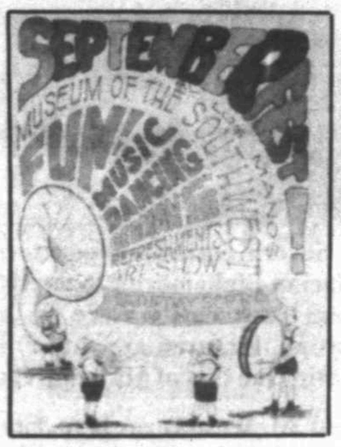

"'Including volunteers, 18,000 people walked through the gates,' said Galen Haynes, Las Manos member and Septemberfest chairman for 1991. 'Last year, there were 9,000,' including volunteers.

"'We doubled...'"(Reporter-Telegram, September 13, 1991).

The gross income for that year was $172,000, according to Haynes (Reporter-Telegram, September 13, 1991).

The festival had grown to include Kinderfest, Artfest, Musicfest, Foodfest and a 1992 new car show.

Museum staff member Enid Davis reported that a great number of people were touring the museum during the event. "This year, people are coming through and actually looking at the art. And that's part of the purpose of Septemberfest - to have the public see what we're all about" (Reporter-Telegram, September 8, 1991).

The Sky's the Limit

Vincent wishes upon a star

Cooperation makes dream come true planetarium, n. 1. a building or room housing a projector which displays various celestial images on a domed ceiling.

While many may define a planetarium with such a lack of feeling, the first director of the Museum of the Southwest would never be found in that number.

For him a planetarium was a burning desire, a motivating force, a necessity for Midland, Texas.

Before the museum even secured a permanent location for its exhibits, Director John Vincent was talking about the construction of a planetarium (Reporter-Telegram, March 12, 1967).

The Christmas of 1967 must have been a good one for Vincent. On December 24 the Reporter-Telegram announced that $10,000 had been anonymously donated for the construction of a planetarium. In addition, Mr. and Mrs. William B. Blakemore II had donated a full length portrait of Astronaut Scott Carpenter to grace the lobby.

The Museum , desiring to use eight acres in the Midland Airpark area for this new facility, initiated negotiations with the City of Midland. Meanwhile, architect Frank Welch began doing preliminary drawings.

The location and other things changed but one thing remained the same - the need for cooperation among a number of entities.

On November 23, 1971 the Midland City Council unanimously approved an agreement with the Museum of the Southwest. The agreement allowed the Museum to construct a planetarium on a tract of land made available out of Haley Park at Indiana and South K (Reporter-Telegram, November 24, 1971).

While the Museum was to construct and maintain the $250,000 facility, the City would retain title to the land.

At the groundbreaking ceremony in late 1971, "Mayor Magruder pointed out that this is the first joint project between the city and a private entity." (Muse-Letter, January, 1972).Midland Independent School District agreed to provide trained personnel at the planetarium.

This star-gazing facility was to be one of the most sophisticated in the Southwest. Welch designed it with a 126-seat auditorium in a tall, cylindrical wing plus an exhibit and meeting area and offices.

"The best planetarium equipment available will be installed," said Jim L. Hooker, president of the Museum Board of Trustees (Reporter-Telegram, November 24, 1971).

William B. Blakemore II and Joe Mabee arranged for grants from the J. M. West-Texas Foundation of Houston and the J.E. and L.E. Mabee Foundation of Tulsa, Oklahoma, respectively.

Charles Hill of Houston was awarded the building contract.

Equipment was purchased from Spitz Laboratory of Pennsylvania.

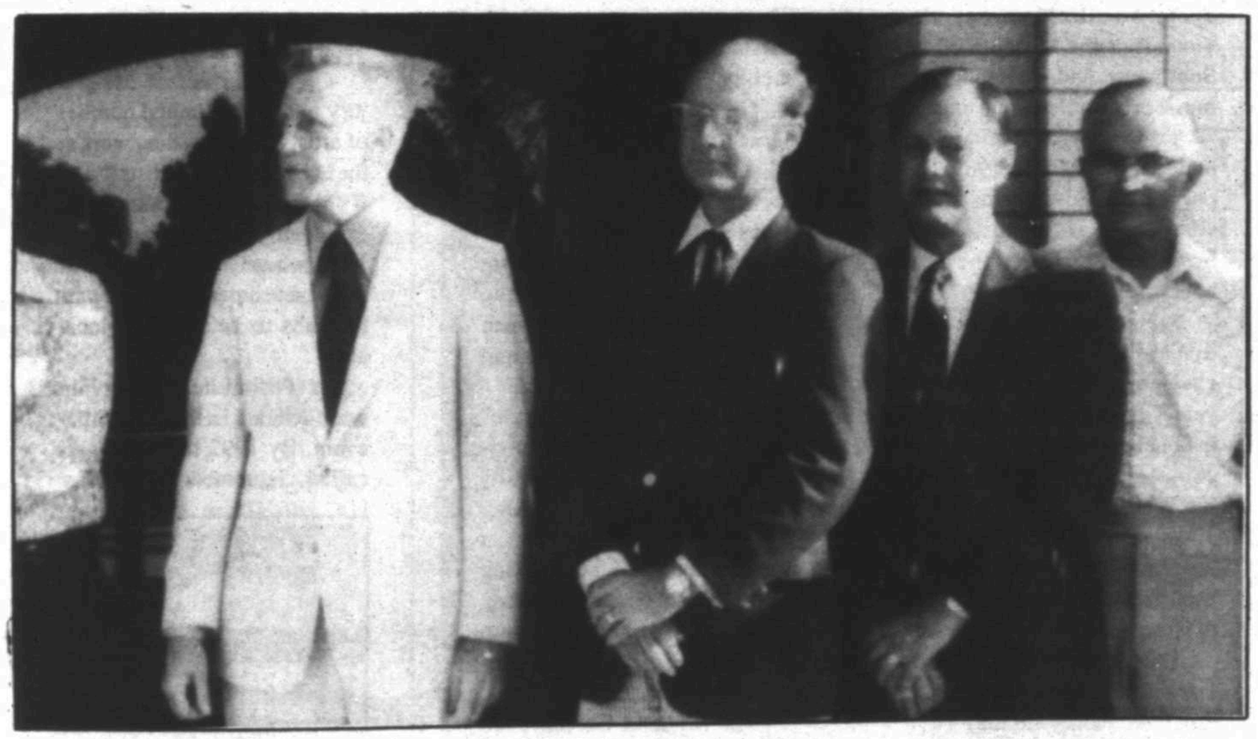

On September 9, 1972, which coincided with Septemberfest, the Marian Blakemore Planetarium was open for the first public inspection. The facility was named after Blakemore's late wife.

Welch won the Texas Society of Architects' award of excellence for the planetarium design.

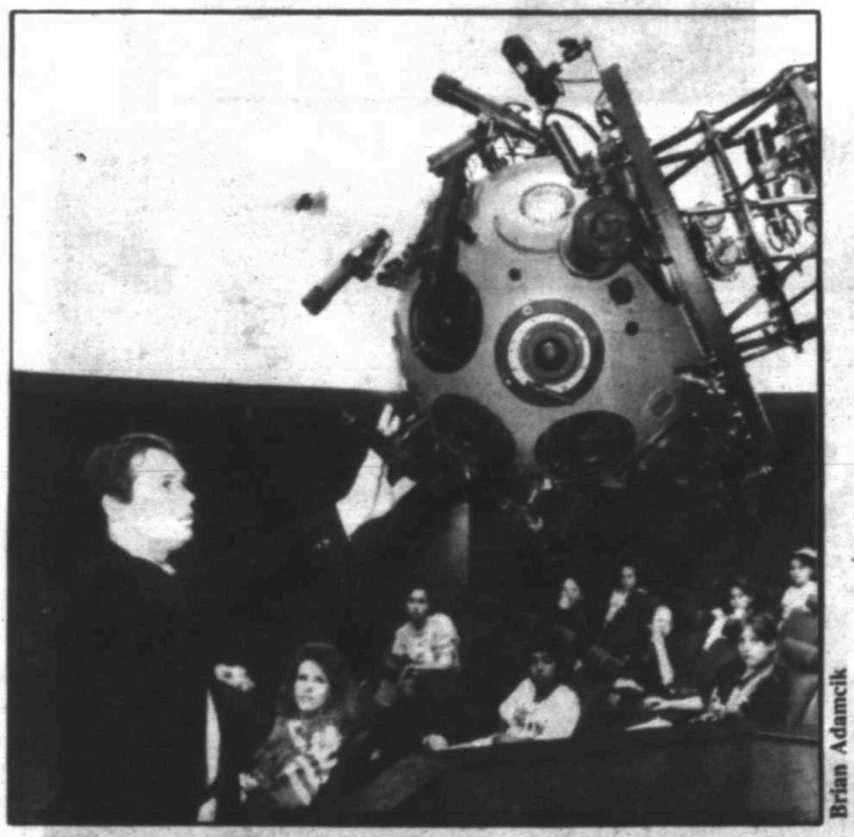

In 1991 the auditorium was renovated and a Minolta Viewlex Series IV planetarium instrument/ projector was installed.

Midland Independent School District and other area schools, have enjoyed this educational facility.

In addition, star gazing shows have been offered to the public. Currently, public viewings are held Tuesday, 7:30 p.m, and Sunday, 2:00 and 3:30 p.m..

Lancaster property provides for expansion

"Mrs. Naomi Lancaster should have a day, a week, a month or longer designated in her honor," read an editorial in the Reporter-Telegram on March 18, 1970.

The roots of many Midland cultural organizations were tied to the Lancaster household. Ms. Lancaster had been instrumental in the development of the Museum of the Southwest, Midland Community Theatre, the Palette Club, the Midland Arts Association and the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale. Also, she had worked closely with the Chamber of Commerce (Reporter-Telegram, March 18, 1970 and September 10, 1984).

At the time of the editorial, Ms. Lancaster was making another significant contribution to her community. She, along with her daughter Mrs. William Penn, was donating her home at 1705 W. Indiana to the Museum of the Southwest.

"The family is interested in the growth of this young neighboring institution, and we feel that with this gift continued expansion of their programs and activities will be possible, benefitting not only the community but the surrounding area as well," said Mrs. Penn (Reporter-Telegram, March 17, 1970).

According to Museum literature, Mrs. Lancaster's husband, Lynn Lancaster, began constructing the home in 1936. He died in 1937 without ever occuping the house, himself.

Being located just south of the established Museum facility, the location was ideal for expansion.

William S. Marshall, president of the Museum's Board of Trustees, announced, "We are delighted with this very generous endowment because it gives us additional ground necessary to implement our goals for future development of the Museum" (Reporter-Telegram, March 17, 1970).

Mayor Edwin Magruder declared Sunday May 10, 1970 (Mother's Day) as Naomi Lancaster Day in Midland (Reporter -Telegram, May 10, 1970).

The Museum hosted a private reception which included a retrospective showing of some of Mrs. Lancaster's paintings.

For several years, the house was used for activities including drawing classes for students, concerts and meetings of various cultural organizations.

No endowment fund was established for the house's upkeep.

With an eye toward future expansion, the structures (main house, guest house and water tower) on the Lancaster property were cleared off in November, 1986.

The home was preserved pictorally in the Texas Historic Sites Inventory (Reporter-Telegram, November 2, 1984).

The property became the site of the children's museum which was completed in 1989.

Recently, Trustee Denna McGuire said they are looking into the possibility of acquiring a sculpture as a memorial for Naomi Lancaster.

Grandchildren of Fredda Turner Durham served as the groundbreaking crew for the Children's Museum on October 25, 1987.

Children's facility expands educational role of Museum

Neverland! That's what it's like. A place where children are free to explore with all their exuberance and every sense. A place that carries adults back to their childhood to rediscover the thrill of learning by touching, climbing, moving, trying again and again. It's the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum.

The idea for such a facility was first explored at a "Joint Ventures" workshop sponsored by the Junior League of Midland on November 21, 1985.

Forty community leaders attended the workshop. A brainstorming session led to great enthusiasm over the concept of a children's museum.

The Museum of the Southwest's Board of Trustees responded just as enthusiastically when the idea was presented to them on December 18, 1985.

Fredda Turner Durham made a significant financial contribution which pushed the project forward. Later, capital gifts from Midlanders, the Meadows Foundation of Dallas, the Brown Foundation, the Abell-Hanger Foundation and the L.E. and J.E. Mabee Foundation enabled the Museum to reserve much of the Durham gift for operational expenses and an endowment fund.

An earlier gift to the museum made all these plans possible. In 1970 Naomi Lancaster and her daughter, Mrs. William Penn, donated the property where the children's facility would eventually be constructed. At the time of the donation the land was the site of the Lancaster House, which was constructed in 1936, according to museum literature. After controversy, the house was demolished in November, 1984.

When the dream for a children's museum caught on, the steering committee announced a competition to encourage local architects to submit designs for the new facility. These plans would have to blend in harmoniously with other museum structures.

Lawrence Holdren Connolly was awarded the contract. Raphael Amuchastigui assisted him.

The design included three two-story high exhibition areas, an orientation area, art/activity room and an outside sculpture court. Many medieval features, including a hollow cornerstone with an inscribed dedication, were drawn in the plans.

The Children's Museum's location makes it a visual link between all of the buildings in the complex.

Connolly drew from the design of the other buildings in selecting the colors, materials, roof pitch and other details for the children's facility.

He added special touches, such as a brightly colored sidewalk, resembling a Mexican milk snake, and flag atop a castle-like roof. Even a vertical sundial is located so that it may be read both inside and outside the building.

The drawings were completed by mid-summer of 1986.

"'The City of Houston's current children's museum is smaller than this,' Connolly says...

"'That's really remarkable. There's not much research on this building type. It's very unique. It's a relatively new phenomenon in the museum community, and it's occurring all over the country. The unique aspect of this facility is that it's one of the few that's built from scratch"' (Reporter-Telegram, May 28, 1989).

On October 25, 1987 the "groundbreaking crew" included nine grandchildren of Fredda Turner Durham.

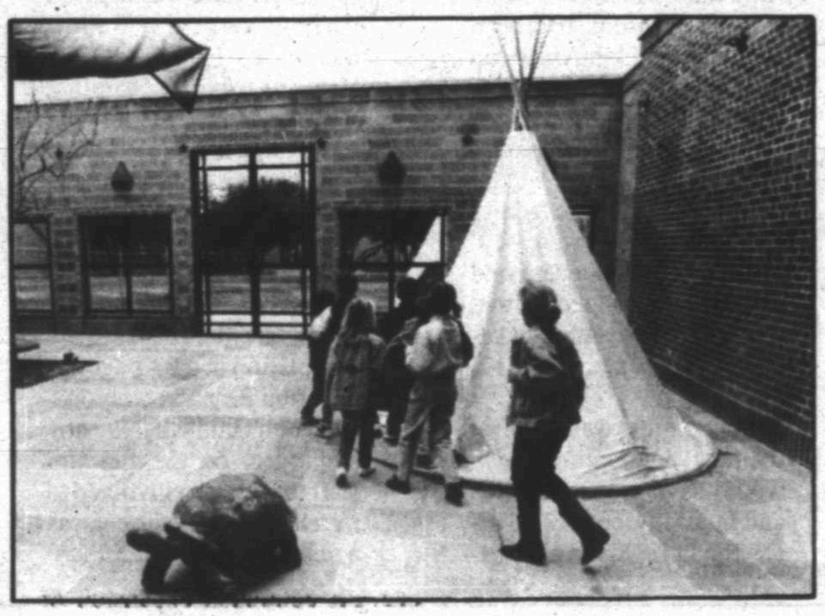

Dave Leonard Construction, Inc. began construction in December (Reporter-Telegram, February 21, 1988).

The construction of the 10,000 square foot facility cost $856,000 (Reporter-Telegram, September 16, 1989).

The facility opened Saturday June 3, 1989 for Museum members, members of Las Manos and the Junior League of Midland.

At the public opening ceremonies held the next day, a paper chain was cut by kindergartner Forrest Windecker, winner of the opening celebration poster contest.

The $1.5 million dollar South Wing addition in the mid-'80s provided 15,600 square feet for permanent collection storage, exhibitions and offices.

New wing provides storage, exhibit, office space

When the Museum first applied for accreditation through the American Museum Association, one major obstacle was the lack of humidity- and climate-controlled storage areas for the permanent collection.

In July 1985 ground was broken for a new wing, which would remedy the storage problem.

In fact, the 15,600 square-foot wing would also add 4,000 square feet of gallery space, a multi-purpose room and board room adjacent to the security office and an outside ramp and loading dock. A dark room, collections storage area and curatorial offices were included, too.

The wing was attached to the Thomas Gallery on the south side of the mansion. The cost for the addition was $1.5 million.

Private contributions and a matching grant from the Mabee Foundation paid for the project.

The architectural firm Ford, Powell and Carson was responsible for the design. Dave Leonard Construction was the builder.

Trustee Ed Vogler was pleased that "we now have a facility not only to work in, but one that we can also exhibit part of our own permanent art collection and our archeological collections" (Reporter-Telegram, January 9, 1987).

The first exhibit in the new wing was the Fred T. and Novadeen Hogan Collection, a collection of paintings of the Taos Society of Artists. The collection was given to the museum in 1980.

Permanent collection expands

"From Modest Beginnings" was the name of a retrospective show held in 1983 to chronicle the growth of the Museum's permanent collection.

Much like the museum's benefactor Fred Turner, the institution was not limited in its development by a modest start. Indeed, the permanent collection has grown to include treasured pieces of art and artifacts that reflect the culture of the Southwest.

The first entry in the log book of the permanent collection is a Texas Navy Button, dated 1836, worn by John Gant Tod.

Today, the log book includes approximately 2,000 pieces in the art and anthropology collection and over 33,000 pieces in the archaeology research collection.

Here is a lising of the Museum's major collections:

Merritt Mauzey Collection includes 161 works by Merritt Mauzey (oils, lithographs, drawings, paintings, etchings) featuring rural lifestyles of West Texas around the 1930s. Also, 58 prints by other artists represent Texas printmaking.

Margaret and C.E. "Bud" Bissell Collection consists of approximately 30,000 artifacts. It contains prehistoric tools, projectile points, scrapers, etc.

Fred and Novadean Hogan Collection is an assemblage of paintings by the Taos Society of Artists and Santa Fe Masters. One sculpture is also included in this collection.

Charles S. Berry Collection has over 1,600 archaeological artifacts, which are representative of prehistoric and historic times in West Texas.

Edward E. Curtis Southwest Indian Portfolio of 111 photogravures were made in 1981 by Classic Gravure, Santa Fe. Original photos dated from 1905-1925. These were a gift of William D. and Mary Kennedy.

Woody Crumbo Graphics of 45 prints and drawings by Native American Artist Woody Crumbo are included in this collection, donated by Mr. and Mrs. Ed A. Vogler.

Karl Bodmer Engravings feature the Plains Indians. 82 hand-colored engravings are in this collection.

The Tarry Collection of 40 artifacts include earthenware pottery from the Casa Grandes culture.

"The Naming," sculpted by Doug Hyde, was donated by Fred and Novadeen Hogan.

Journey to accreditation

As the new American pioneer put on his boots, grabbed his Henry rifle, loaded his gear and fell in with the wagon train headed to the Southwest, he'd have done well to re-check his packing list.

If he wasn't toting more grit than a grizzly, more tenacity than a miner's mule and more discipline than a circuit riding preacher, he'd never be able to call himself a Southwesterner.

More than a century and a half later the staff at the Museum of the Southwest was going through a process which, at times, seemed as challenging as colonizing a new territory.

They felt like they had hit "pay dirt" when word came that the Museum had been accredited by the American Association of Museums (AAM).

The journey to accreditation began in 1980.

"At that time, the facility discovered there were several aspects in the care and storage of its collections that required improvement" (Reporter-Telegram, July 17, 1992).

As progress was made on the new south wing which would have proper climate- and humidity-controlled areas for storage, the application process began again in 1986.

Application was delayed once again that year to allow the new director, Jean Hagman, to become familiar with the Museum.

A museum professional was engaged to do an on-site study and determine needed improvements.

The staff followed up on the recommendations.

One required task was the completion of a 63-page application for accreditation.

"I don't think there're any employees on the museum staff that weren't involved to a great extent because it was a team effort," said Planetarium Director Mark Hartman (Reporter-Telegram, July 17, 1992).

Both professionalism and financial stability (including a reasonable endowment) had to be established to qualify.

The application was submitted in 1991 and an interim accreditation was granted the same year.

Before the final accreditation was granted, two AAM representatives came to Midland to inspect the site.

The representatives submitted their report in March 1992 and the accreditation was granted in June of the same year.

"It's a great relief, and I'm delighted and have great respect for the staff because they worked so very hard," said Louan Rogers, chair of the ad hoc Committee on Accreditation (Reporter-Telegram, July 17, 1992).

Accreditation indicates that the Museum is ranked among the top 10 percent of all United States museums.

A review of the accreditation will begin in 1996, because accreditation is granted for five year time periods.

The staff will be able to follow in the trail blazed by Museum of the Southwest pioneers.

The Museum of the Southwest was established 27 years ago. Through the years the Museum of the Southwest Family has grown each time a new docent led a tour, another trustee served, an individual or foundation made a contribution or one more visitor explored the grounds. This year the Family is celebrating 25 years in the Turner Mansion. It would be impossible to list every member of this large Museum Family, but this tree is intended to represent the broad spectrum of individuals and organizations which have been a part of this growing family.

Join the Museum and become part of the family.

A Bright Southwest Future

Dreams of tomorrow to build on yesterday's memories

For 27 years the Museum of the Southwest has forged empowering memories in the hearts and minds of those who have passed through its doors.

Each year the Museum of the Southwest Family has grown as a new docent has arrived, another trustee has served, one more visitor has explored the grounds.

Several museum "regulars" gathered recently and reminisced about their experiences.

"Christmas at the museum - the trees - the live sheep on the lawn," were images cherished by Dorothy Perkins.

"It's been a highlight of Christmas for people here," she said.

Galen Haynes shared, "The first time I came into the museum, the doll house exhibit was up. I started making them because it touched me so."

The Jim Hall Race Car Exhibit, which showcased the work of Midland's famous race car designer, was most impressive to Lissa Wagner.

She recalled the powerful display of race cars and their engines which were scattered throughout the museum facility.

"The quilt exhibit was great," said Kathy Shannon.

In the lives of these and thousands of others the Museum's exhibits have pieced together memories as diverse as the patterns in a quilt.

Each of the memories mentioned that day revolved around temporary or seasonal exhibits.

Museum Director Wendell Ott envisions the entity entering a new era where the permanent collection will be so powerfully presented that it will rivet Midlanders lives to the Southwest they occupy.

There are two ideas which he wants to follow.

"My dream is that this museum would become known nationally as a center of innovation of design which will combine art, science and archaeology exhibits into one," Ott said.

"Few visitors have the baggage necessary to understanding. Having multiple disciplines in the same exhibit provides a variety of doors for the person to use to enter the imagery," Ott explained.

This design will allow more "hands on" participation.

Haynes added that sound and video should also be added to the experience.

Ott's second idea was to build on the permanent collection. Visitors should long to return to see a part of the museum's own collection which defines the Southwest to them.

The exhibits, he said, should be so meaningful that people would be willing to drive out of their way to experience an exhibit they associate with the Museum of the Southwest.

The Southwestern values, which the Museum seeks to interpret, transcend cultures and ages, the director said.

"Southwest," Ott added, means more than pottery and woven baskets.

"Right now Santa Fe has put its arms around the term 'Southwest.' It's time to get the Southwest back for the rest of us," he declared.

The Museum of the Southwest Family is ready for the challenge and invites other Midlanders to join in the quest, Haynes insisted.

Curt Wilcott

Christmas is a memory making time at the Museum of the Southwest. In 1989 two-and-a-half year old Lacy George stopped by to tell Mrs. Claus, alias Trudi Thomason, what she wanted for Christmas.

As the Musuem of the Southwest Family rushes into the future, plans are underway to develop multi-disciplined exhibits throughout the complex. The Museum first utilized this design concept in the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum shown above.
