Talk of the town

An estimated 80 to 100 Midlanders gathered to discuss political issues with Sen. Lloyd Bentsen in a Town Hall meeting held Wednesday at Theatre Midland.

Questions from Midlanders such as Kathy Blackman, left, had Bentsen exploring such topics as the economy, Social Security and the Panama Canal. "I understand I cast a politically unpopular vote (on the Panama Canal), but I did what I felt was right for my country," Bentsen said.

Town Hall meeting touches on economy

A Social Security system hobbling on frail legs. A bleak future for farmers. An ailing economy.

These were the focus of questions asked by area residents Wednesday morning of U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen during a Town Hall meeting in Theatre Midland. Despite what seemingly appeared to be bad news, the Texas senator who is seeking re-election claimed, "We're the greatest free market in the world. We have the strongest democracy. The strength of the country lies in the strength of the people."

Bentsen, who had not been in Midland for about a year, also spoke before the Midland and West Rotary clubs during a noon luncheon where he also touched on energy issues.

About 80 to 100 persons attended the Town Hall meeting, which Bentsen said he holds because it's too expensive for the people to go to Washington, D.C.

Nadine Blair, who works as director for the Dawson County Senior Citizens Center in Lamesa, asked what the older generation could expect in the future.

THE PRIMARY CHANGE will be a revamping of the Social Security system, replied Bentsen, explaining that the agency is running out of money to take care of the elderly. He suggested a gradual upgrading of the age of persons eligible to receive SS benefits, such as adding one month each year. During the first year, a person would become eligible for SS benefits at the age of 65 years and one month. The second year, it would be 65 years and two months.

"Solvency of the Social Security fund has to be a top priority for the nation," Bentsen said, pointing out that Congress has purposely held off making changes until after the November general election.

The Administration had proposed "dramatic major immediate changes and that was totally rejected by Congress. People have figured on that Social Security

Fewer crimes reported

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of serious crimes reported to police in America declined very slightly in 1981, the first such drop in four years, FBI Director William H. Webster reported today.

Last year, the total number of reported serious crimes was 13,290,300, down just 5,100 from the 1980 figures, according to the FBI Uniform Crime Reports, which are based on data submitted by law enforcement agencies covering 97 percent of the U.S. population.

Because of an increase in population, the crime rate declined 1.7 percent, from 5,899.9 crimes for every 100,000 residents in 1980 to 5,799.9 crimes in 1981.

The tiny decline in crimes, which amounted to the stabilization of crime totals virtually at 1980 levels, came during a year in which Attorney General William French Smith made violent crime his top priority.

He proposed a series of tough new restrictions on criminal defendants, designed to put more of them in jail and keep them there longer. But nearly all these proposals are still awaiting action in Congress.

The FBI reports includes murder, robbery, rape, aggravated assault, burglary, larceny-theft and motor vehicle theft.

The last annual decline in overall serious crime came in 1977, when the totals were down 3.3 percent from 1976. In 1980, crime jumped 9.4 percent over the previous year.

"The leveling off of reported crime in 1981...is welcome news," Webster said. "We must remember, however, that 1980 was the peak year for lawlessness in our nation and that this high was maintained in 1981."

He pointed out that overall serious crime was up 22 percent from 1977, and 61 percent from 1972.

Indeed, the violent crimes of murder, rape, robbery and aggravated assault were up 1 percent in 1981. Burglary, larceny-theft and motor vehicle theft, the property crimes accounting for more than 90 percent of all crimes, declined by 0.2 percent in 1981.

Furthermore, a massive Justice Department study begun in the mid-1970s has learned through interviews with tens of thousands of Americans each year that one-third of all violent crimes in the United States are not reported to the police, and thus never show up in the FBI figures.

Smith said he was pleased with the figures.

"It is heartening to see that figures that have been marching upward for so long are now stabilizing," he said. "It is difficult to pinpoint reasons for such a development, but I believe...good, conscientious police work definitely accounts for much of the improvement."

The FBI report showed that arrests of adults for the seven serious crimes rose by 7 percent in 1981 over the previous year.

Breaking the figures down, the FBI said serious crime showed no change in the nation's cities and decreased by 2 percent in rural counties, and 1 percent in suburban areas.

The Southern states accounted for 32 percent of the nation's crimes, compared to 24 percent for Western states, 23 percent for North-Central states and 21 percent for Northeastern states.

The largest decline, 3.7 percent, came in motor vehicle theft, but one out of 150 registered vehicles was stolen for a national loss of $3.4 billion.

There's something 'batty' going on at County Courthouse

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The bats in the belfry have found a new roosting place — the courthouse — to hang around.

"We found seven all over this place," Midland County Judge Bill Ahders said after a bat was found in County Court-at-Law Judge Willie DuBose's office Wednesday morning.

The judge's administrative assistant, Terry Lewis, and secretary, Fonda Love, stood by while the lone bat was being captured. Ms. Lewis touched it.

"Both these girls attract bats; they're bat-girls," joked Ahders. "They can fly."

"What? Us?" asked Ms. Lewis.

"No, the bats," said the judge.

Since last week, petite bats — described variously as gray, brown and black — have been sneaking into the courthouse apparently after feeding on the horde of insects which buzz around the courthouse lights from dusk to dawn.

"I hated them 'til today," said a still squeamish Ms. Lewis. "But today I think they're kind of cute." However, she had reservations about that after the so-called DuBose bat opened its mouth and she glanced at the bat's "saw teeth."

"They (the bats) look like little rats with wings," she said.

The flight of bats into the courthouse prompted some predictable remarks from those who had rather remain anonymous.

"We've got bats all over the courthouse," said a courthouse day-time denizen. "I knew we had some batty people."

Said another: "This courthouse is in such bad shape, it's turning batty."

Ultimately catching the stray bats and sending them away were Vern Dawkins, the courthouse maintenance supervisor, and his chief assistant, Gene Bishop.

"We've found one on every floor but the third," said Dawkins, who noted that "You get different counts (on the number of bats sighted) from different people."

Dawkins counted three bats at the back door, two in the sheriff's office, one in the courtroom in Court Reporter Ronnie Pate's trash can, one in DuBose's office, and one by the first-floor public water fountain.

"I've seen a bunch of them flying around this morning," said Bishop, "and I guess they were eating insects by the flood light."

The wing-spread of the bats was six to eight inches, estimated Dawkins, who kept none of the bats for show. He got rid of them.

"Just say we took them outside and turned them loose," he said. "I've tried not to let any of them fly away. I told somebody I was going to give them a real good send-off."

Gerry Sommer, administrative secretary to 238th State District Court Judge Vann Culp, said she heard about the bats while riding the MidTran bus to work.

" 'Oh,' " someone aboard the bus told her, " 'it's not unusual to find bats in the courthouse.' "

Later, she got a first-hand view of a courthouse bat.

"They showed it to me, and at first I thought it was a rat."

In another part of town, at Midland's Animal Control Shelter, ACS director Dalton Byerly said the incidence of bats in Midland so far has been "nothing that would excite anybody."

But, since some wild bats are a carrier of rabies, he has dispatched a couple of Midland bats to Austin to the Texas Department of Health to check them for rabies.

"It costs about $20 a shot, but it's well worth it," he said.

Otherwise, he said, "Bats here are just becoming a regular thing; we don't get excited about it." Families of bats live in caves in New Mexico and Mexico.

"Some of them go to sleep in places (such as the courthouse) at night and forget to get up in the morning," Byerly said.

But he cautioned people against trying to catch bats.

"Shoo them out the window," he said. "Let them do their thing. Let's don't get too excited about them."

Odessa high schools, 'new' junior high experience 'just a normal school day'

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

ODESSA — With the comment, "Just a good ol' normal school day," E.H. Cavin, principal of Odessa High School, stood in the shade of a tree Monday at the end of a hot first day of classes and the first day of school under a new desegregation program for Ector County Independent School District.

He smiled as he watched students pulling into the crowded stream of cars and, with radios blaring, slowly creep home in front of the school.

"It was great," he said. "We had no problems whatsoever. I thought the kids looked happier than ever."

With the court-ordered plan finally in effect after a 12-year desegregation suit, former Ector High School students are evenly enrolled in OHS and Permian High School. EHS was converted into Ector Junior High School, resulting in less overcrowding at the five other seventh and eighth grade campuses scattered throughout the district.

Across town at EJHS, assistant principal Al Oglesby echoed Cavin's sentiments.

"It went as smooth as possible," he said, adding that the only problem seemed to be that about 160 students had to register that morning without schedules.

"It's because of the short time involving the transfer of records from one school to another," he explained.

According to Oglesby, about 1,000 students registered at EJHS with schedules, bringing the total enrollment figure for the first day to about 1,160. "We'll probably have quite a few more," he said.

"Last year we enrolled about 1,420 students," Douglas O. Love, principal of Crockett Junior High School, said. "We showed about 1,020 today."

According to Love and several other principals, enrollment figures are expected to increase after Labor Day.

Woman dies in mishap

A 33-year-old woman was killed early this morning when her car went out of control and struck an embankment on the south service road of Interstate 20 near the Midkiff Road overpass.

Police said the woman, identified as 33-year-old Kathleen Higgins Fischer of Whitney, Texas, was eastbound on the service road when her 1976 Plymouth left the road and hit an embankment just west of the overpass about 2:30 a.m.

Justice of the Peace Robert Pine pronounced her dead at the scene and the body was taken to the Thomas Funeral Home.

due to "some people still on vacation and some kids who are in the habit of beginning school after Labor Day."

Cavin said the projected enrollment figure of 2,150 probably will peak during the second or third week in September. About 2,000 students enrolled in OHS Monday.

Minority students increased at OHS from 28 percent to 38 percent this year, Cavin said. "It wasn't that much of a change for us. We don't notice it that much here, but at Permian High School it will probably be more noticable," he said. "They are expected to increase from about 6 percent to 18 percent."

Permian High principal Chuck Broughton was smiling broadly at the end of the day. Sitting at his desk behind a large, red apple, courtesy of some Permian High student, he said, "This has been one of the nicest days I've had in 34 years.

"As you go from a very small high school to a larger one, the students are bound to feel a little insecure," he continued. "But, let me tell you, I was more insecure than anyone today. I even read up on the retirement plan a few weeks ago."

With 2,094 students enrolled at PHS, Broughton said he suspects the figure will increase to about 2,200 after Labor Day.

"I'm real proud of the students, teachers and the parents have been extremely cooperative," Broughton added. "It takes a lot of hard work but everyone seemed to be very happy. They seemed to get along very well. If you get off to a good start, I think it has the tendency to be a good year."

Although rumors of racial disturbances on various campuses were rampant throughout the day, Love said none of them were founded. A demonstration by a group of parents had been called off and, according to Love, as far as he knew, everything went smoothly at all of the junior high schools.

"The most exciting thing that happened today was watching the assistant principal try to parallel-park his car this morning," he added with a satisfied grin.

Bentsen touches on economic issues in Town Hall talk to get by on when they retire."

He also suggested that the cost of living adjustments added to the benefits each year should be revised, making the increases less.

But Frank Wood of Midland pointed out that medical costs for senior citizens are higher than for younger persons, and the federal government just reduced Medicare benefits. This means a heavier burden on senior citizens for medical care.

Bentsen agreed, saying this aspect would have to be considered in adjusting the SS benefits.

ON A QUESTION about continued funding of food programs for the elderly, Bentsen said he was supportive of programs such as Meals on Wheels. "It helps people to stay at home and not go to an institution. In the long run, the government will save money because institutional costs are a lot more."

Campaign rhetoric of Bentsen's Republican opponent, U.S. Rep. Jim Collins, cropped up in the meeting as one man asked, "Why did you give away the Panama Canal?"

In short, Bentsen said he had researched the issue and visited Panama before casting a vote.

"The issue was supported by four presidents: two Democrats and two Republicans. I started out against it until I studied it in depth."

The Panama Canal was viewed as the United States' last vestige of colonialism and this was being used by communists to incite the residents. After talking with the U.S. commander and discovering the canal could only be defended by keeping 100,000 troops there, Bentsen changed his mind.

"Yes, the people of Texas were overwhelmingly against giving it away," Bentsen acknowledged. But in voting for the issue, he supported an amendment which guaranteed the U.S. would be allowed to move ships through the canal "in perpetuity.

"I understand I cast a politically unpopular vote, but I did what I felt was right for my country," he added.

CLAIMING THAT he has always been a supporter of a strong national defense, Bentsen answered a question on that issue from Catherine Taylor by saying defense expenditures should be increased.

But he also believes the Defense Department should be held accountable for all its expenses and for that reason he successfully pushed through the idea of hiring an inspector general to conduct an audit on that division.

When it was pointed out by a resident that he had voted to increase the national deficit, Bentsen agreed to the charge and then explained why he did so.

If the issue hadn't passed, he said, it would have closed down government. Instead, Bentsen said the end result is not that the bill to increase the debt passed but that amendments to cut some spending were tacked on.

He compared the situation to a school board meeting in which the district is running out of money. Cutting the budget by line items would leave some operating money in the coffers. But by voting down everything, the school would close.

"If they'd prevail," Bentsen said of opponents, "you'd close down the Defense Department, the FBI, the Highway Department."

He supported the constitutional amendment to balance the budget, which passed the Senate and is hung up in the House. But he noted approval by Congress "won't solve the problem. It takes courage to make those (budget) cuts."

HOWEVER, THE RECENT tax increase bill pushed by President Reagan didn't gain the Texas senator's support. "It's wrong to add taxes in mid-session." He was critical of a provision in that bill to allow the federal government to collect 10 percent on the interest and dividends earned on savings accounts. Bentsen said it would cause more paperwork and the amount of revenues that had been talked about won't be realized.

With the recent dropping of interest rates and increase in money supply, Bentsen said he hopes to see a turn-around in the economy by the end of the year. "Recovery will be slow," he said. "But with lower interest rates we should put people back to work. If we can decrease unemployment by 3 percent, that would reduce the deficit by $90 billion."

Bentsen placed part of the blame for the recession on Paul Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve, who the senator said instituted the tightest money supply in this country in the last 20 years.

As a result, there are now 200 bankruptcies of small businesses each day, he said, and this doesn't count the firms that just close their doors.

"Only one out of 20 people can afford to buy a new home now." When he was discharged from the Army after World War II, Bentsen had the G.I. bill to help on his home purchase. "Today, the only G.I. I know of is generous in-laws."

Although he could see some light at the end of the tunnel on the recession, farmers appear to him to fall into a darker prediction.

"THE FARMER IS in the worst shape he's been in since 1932," and Bentsen blamed the situation on various presidents who have set up embargos on exporting farmers' products.

That embargo didn't hurt the receiving countries; they turned around and bought food from other countries. Instead of an embargo on grain to Russia, Bentsen suggested the U.S. make the Soviet Union pay for their food with hard cash and not a line of credit. "They wouldn't be spreading that money on weaponry if they were spending it on food."

Touching on the energy industry while speaking to the Rotarians, which also saw in attendance Jim Nugent of the Railroad Commission, Bentsen said the oil industry almost lost a valuable exemption that would have cost the industry almost as much as the Windfall Profits Tax. Eliminating the Intangible Drilling Costs exemption would have been a serious blow to the oil industry, Bentsen said.

He questioned the feasibility of a flat rate income tax, noting that each special interest group — such as homeowners, church people and city officials — would object to not getting its deductions.

"We have to have a major reform of the system," he agreed. "Because of the perception of unfairness, people are avoiding paying their taxes. There must be a perception of fairness to make it work."

Two women challenged Bentsen's stand on abortion and bills which define life beginning at conception.

"SAYING THAT LIFE begins at conception is carrying it too far. I honestly can't tell you when life begins," he replied. "I say it's solely an issue between a woman and her doctor and her pastor. But I don't believe in federally funded abortions except in cases of rape, incest and if the woman's life is in danger."

He also:

—Criticized the Immigration and Naturalization Services, calling it "antiquated and a shambles." But the former congressman and businessman approved the concept of setting up amnesty for illegal aliens who have lived in the U.S. a set number of years.

—Called the U.S. purchase of $1 billion in oil from Mexico a wise move and predicted the United States, through the World Bank, will have to help stabilize that neighbor's sinking economy.

—Predicted a win in November over his opponent and claimed the people of Texas won't buy the distortions of his record that Collins has been advertising. Of the "Liberal Lloyd" tag placed on him by Collins, the senator said, "My colleagues in the Senate think it's funny. I think Collins has destroyed his own credibility."

Remarks about 'low-rider' led to stabbing of youth

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Marcus Rodriquez, the 16-year-old Midlander who is charged with murder in the Feb. 14 stabbing death of Jeff Dixon, 18, testified Wednesday that he stabbed Dixon in a scuffle which apparently was fueled by remarks from Anglos about the "low-rider" sedan in which Rodriquez and four other Mexican-Americans were riding.

Rodriquez said he was "standing back" when the scuffle broke out between 17-year-old Benenito "Bennie" Gonzalez, owner-driver of the low-rider, and Dixon.

"That's when I took my knife out and I stabbed him," Rodriquez calmly said under questioning of defense attorney Edward T. Garza, who had suggested that Rodriquez might have been scared. He said he was. "I lost my head when I stabbed him the first time," said the defendant, who said he again struck Nixon with the knife. Rodriquez has been held in the Midland County Jail since February.

"I kicked him twice," Rodriquez said, while Dixon was on the parking lot pavement of Action Auto Supply in the 1100 block of North Midkiff Road about 9 p.m. on that Sunday night in February. Rodriquez said he then spotted a scabbard and handle of a knife on Dixon's belt. "That's when I stuck him, because something else might happen."

Moments earlier in the scuffle, Rodriquez said he stabbed Rob Roberts, 24, once after Roberts "started pushing on me. He tried to knock me down, and I stabbed him."

At that point in the testimony, Garza asked his client if he were frightened and asked, "Why did you pull out the knife?"

"Because I was scared," Rodriquez replied.

The defendant, however, denied that he stabbed another Anglo-American, Mark McBeath, 23, who was wounded in the face and back.

Dixon suffered several wounds in the head, face and chest. According to testimony by fireman-paramedic William Morrison, Dixon was unconscious, bleeding and breathing weakly when he arrived at the scene.

Rodriquez testified that he and co-defendants, brothers Manuel Rodriquez, 18, and Adam Rodriquez, 16, were riding around with Gonzalez in Gonzalez' low-rider Chevrolet — a low profile sedan — that afternoon and night. Rodriquez said he had drunk four beers. After taking on gasoline to continue their cruise, Rodriquez said the foursome drove down Midkiff Road and heard "four people yelling," testified the husky, black-haired defendant.

"(They were) telling us to come back, — —," he said. Rodriquez said the driver made a U-turn and pulled up. "We went to see what was the matter," Rodriquez said.

Rodriquez said he was last to get out of the sedan. "I had a little problem getting out of the car. I stayed behind" for awhile.

The four Anglos turned out to be Dixon, Roberts, McBeath and John Lewallen, 23, who, Roberts testified on Tuesday, were just talking and drinking beer on the parking lot and, as if in unison, yelled "Hey, low-rider," as the low-slung sedan carrying the Hispanic youths passed by.

"He (McBeath) said he was going to kick ass all over the parking lot," Rodriquez said. At that point, the defendant apparently brought himself into the squabble, which turned into a scuffle.

Under questioning by prosecutor David Joers, Rodriquez said that "They were cussing at us" apparently due, in part, to the loud music emitting from the car radio, and "We turned down the music."

In the Anglo-Hispanic encounter on the parking lot, "Everybody was kicking," Rodriguez said. "It happened so quickly."

Judge Vann Culp is presiding over the case before a six-man, six-woman jury. Heading up the prosecution is District Attorney Vern Martin.

Rodriquez, who earlier this year was certified as an adult and indicted for murder and two counts of attempted murder, if convicted could be sentenced from five years to 99 years or life in the state penitentiary. Yet to be tried are the Rodriquez brothers, who are charged with murder and who are not kin to Marcus Rodriquez. Gonzalez has been admitted to the Texas Youth Council for rehabilitation.

Bill's defeat would have hurt oil industry, Hance says

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

If the tax increase bill — or reform bill as President Reagan calls it — hadn't passed last week, Congress once again was ready to make the petroleum industry cough up enough in additional taxes to bring in the revenues needed to reduce the national deficit, according to U.S. Rep. Kent Hance.

During a visit to Midland Wednesday afternoon, the Lubbock Democrat gave The Midland Reporter-Telegram an update on major issues that faced Congress before it recessed last Thursday for the Labor Day holiday.

This time around, he noted, there was no way to have stopped the move to make the oil industry Congress' whipping boy. The two-term congressman representing the 19th District said that was one reason he voted for Reagan's tax increase bill.

U.S. Rep. Kent Hance

"IT WAS NOT what I would have preferred," said the congressman. But without it there was predicted to be a $200 billion deficit in 1983. The result would have have been interest rates climbing to 19 and 20 percent and a near panic on the stock market.

The easy vote, he contended, was a "no" vote. "It was tough to vote 'yes' for that," Hance said, adding that 80 percent of the bill was tax reform.

"There were two companies last year that made over $100 million in profits and didn't pay a penny in taxes," he said, explaining one area where tax reforms will be directed.

The excise tax on phones shouldn't cost the average customer more than an additional $5 a year. And this is small in comparison to the tax cuts that were instituted last year, he contended.

If this tax reform bill hadn't passed, Hance said Reps. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Illinois, and Barber Conable, R-N.Y., had prepared a bill to do away with exemptions for intangible drilling costs and for royalty owners.

"It would have been devastating to the oil and gas industry at a time when it's in a slump," said Hance. "If the bill had gotten loose on the floor, it would have been hard to defeat. There are few oil and gas states and they don't represent that many votes."

In the past, congressmen of both parties have had to form a coalition and entice others to join in order to stop legislation negative to the petroleum industry.

WITH THE PASSAGE of the tax increase bill, interest rates began dropping and Hance expects to see the slide continue. "Over the next 60 days, the interest rates should drop to 11 and 12 percent." How long that figure holds will depend upon the November general election, he noted.

If after the election Congress puts cuts into the entitlement programs, Hance said the interest rates should drop even more.

He put the blame for the economic slump on Reagan. "We wouldn't have had to vote on a tax bill if it hadn't been for Reagan's monetary policy." Hance looked back 20 years to John Kennedy's unfinished term as president, saying that the Democrat leaned on the Federal Reserve at times to ease up on a tight monetary policy.

"Reagan has gone along with Paul Volcker (chairman of the Federal Reserve) and his tight money supply. The result has been 15 to 20 percent interest rates. And the tax cuts we instituted last year didn't help because of that," said Hance who is seeking election to his third term.

Reagan's not addressing entitlement programs in the budget has been the president's downfall, he contended.

Social Security, whose funds continue to dwindle, won't be addressed until spring. And the next program to find itself in the same situation very quickly will be Medicare-Medicaid, he noted.

TO REMEDY THE ailing Social Security system, Hance has proposed gradually easing up the retirement age. One year it would be 65⅛ and the next year it would be 66. "You do it six months a year so no one would be ambushed."

He would add to that a provision to slow down the cost of living adjustments for everyone "except those who live solely on Social Security."

"To do nothing is the worst thing to do," he added.

In the last days before the recess, Hance was criticized for not signing a discharge petition to bring the balanced budget amendment before the House for a vote.

Although the congressman supports the concept for a balanced budget amendment, the version that would have been considered has too much of a loophole that would allow Congress to continue operating in the deficit as it has for years, Hance said.

"The provision would allow Congress to have overpayments with a majority vote," he said. "That's a big hole."

Instead, he is working on an amendment to close the loophole. "If we pass it on to the states in its current status, it won't be approved."

Hance views the intensive efforts by various groups to see the bill's passage as a way to "take the heat off the president." He said a balanced budget had been proposed for 1982-83, but Reagan didn't go for it.

"We would have had a balanced budget in 1983 if it had passed," he said, going on to note that an amendment isn't needed to balance the budget if Congress and the President want it balanced.

"IT TAKES COURAGE to cut all the cuts it would take to balance the budget. Politically, it's a hazard to vote for all those cuts and then go home for re-election," he explained of Congress' failure to support a balanced budget.

Even if the balanced budget amendment is passed by Congress, it must be approved by the states before it becomes law and that could take five years. Hance contended that Congress could balance the budget by then if it is serious about the idea.

The New Federalism program has been hung up in the Senate and the states won't see it for about two years, Hance predicted. Reagan had planned to finance it with the Windfall Profits Tax on the petroleum industry, but he has sinced backed off from that idea.

George Shulz as the new secretary of state "is going to be better" than Alexander Haig who resigned. Calling Shulz's policies "more cohesive," Hance said future conflicts will be economic and not military.

ON THE RECENT conflict between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Army in Lebanon, Hance sided with the Israelis. "It's a shame there have been so many innocent people killed, but the PLO was killing innocent people in Israel. The Lebanese will have a chance now to restructure their country."

Closer to home, Hance is worried about the economic plummeting in Mexico that has resulted with its devaluation of the peso. "The problems we face are tremendous. Their interest rate is above 50 percent and unemployment is above 40 percent. They could be ripe for a revolution."

If that happens, the people of West Texas would see a "big change in the way we live in this area."

Hance has been representing the Midland in the 19th District. But under redistricting which becomes effective in January, Midland will become part of the 21th District now represented by Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt.

Big Spring service station robbed

BIG SPRING — An undetermined amount of money was taken in the armed robbery of a service station at 9:27 p.m. Wednesday.

Sherry de Jesus, attendant at Bell Service Station at 1630 E. 3rd St., told police officers a man in his 20s wearing a stocking over his head forced her at gunpoint into a back room and had her lock the door, then robbed the station.

Ms. de Jesus said when she heard the front door open and close, she immediately left the room and called police.

The man was further described as 6 feet, 3 or 4 inches in height, slenderly built, and wearing bluejeans and blue shirt.

A police department spokesman said it is not known whether the man left on foot or by automobile.

Organization helps boy 'Fulfill A Dream'

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — A boat ride Wednesday through a darkened cave filled with gnomes, monsters and flashing lights at Six Flags over Texas was a dream come true for a 10-year-old Arkansas boy, but it may also be among Henry Smothers Jr.'s last dream fulfilled.

The shy, brown-haired boy is dying of brain cancer. He is expected to live about two more years, slowly regressing into a comatose state.

With the family strapped by Henry's high medical bills, a trip from Lavaca, Ark., to Six Flags normally would have been beyond their dreams. But a new Fort Smith, Ark., organization — Fulfill A Dream, Inc. — stepped in and made the terminally ill child's excursion possible.

Fulfill A Dream is dedicated to bringing joy to dying children and Henry is its first project.

"They (the Smothers family) will be in debt the rest of their lives. There's no way the average family can pay for it (cancer treatment)," said Debbie Beckman, a Fulfill A Dream board member.

Henry's father is a maintainance man for a savings and loan company in Fort Smith. Mrs. Smothers was a teacher's assistant at a private school Henry attended, but she has quit work to take care of her son.

The family, including Henry, his parents, his 15-year-old sisten, Austina, began their day Wednesday with a plane ride from Fort Smith to Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport — the first time any of them had ever ridden on an airplane.

The airplane ride probably made the greatest impression on Henry, said his mother, Lavelle. His bedroom at home is adorned with model airplanes and toy airplanes that fly on a guide string, and the walls are papered with airplane designs.

"He lays in bed sometimes and pretends he's flying one," she said.

On the way to Texas, the pilots invited Henry to sit in the cockpit with them. One let Henry sit on his lap and hold the controls, Mrs. Smothers said.

When the family arrived at amusement park, Henry first rode an antique train that surrounds the park.

Then he sampled rides on an antique car, a small airplane ride and the cave. He was ushered to each ride by employees to avoid waiting in line.

The cave proved Henry's favorite.

"Let's do it again," he said after the first of his three trips through the cave.

Mrs. Smothers said Henry had been ill for three years. Doctors were unable to remove the boy's brain tumor despite six hours of surgery and no further radiation treatments are possible.

She said she has tried to tell Henry that he is dying, but is not sure he understands.

"He does know he is terminally ill. I related it to him because I want him to know," she said. "I told him that everybody is going to die."

Council OKs parking garage study

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Carl Walker & Associates was hired to study the need for a public downtown parking garage in assocation with the county annex, hotel and a proposed performing arts auditorium during a continuation of this week's City Council meeting Wednesday morning.

The council also decided to review the city's position for responsibility for flooding in a playa lake in north Midland.

Approval on the parking garage study came after two members of the council disagreed on locating the parking facility and the proposed auditorium, which is being studied by a private group.

Councilman Gordon Marcum II said the county commissioners had selected a development group for the county's project to build a hotel, county annex and parking facility on land bounded by Texas and Illinois.

"They'll need parking for the annex. This would be a good time to start working with them on the design work. They need to come up with a scheme to fit not only the county's needs but also the federal and our downtown (parking) need," said Marcum.

He visualized the parking garage being located on what is now a parking lot for federal employees between Texas and Wall streets. The auditorium would be on a block between Midland Center and that garage.

"That's two blocks east of where it ought to be," said Sloan.

"You can't put it on the city park," Marcum said of the landscaped area west of Midland Center.

"It ought to be in the middle between Midland Center and the auditorium," Sloan continued.

Marcum noted that Walker and Associates will help determine where the parking garage should be situated.

A request had come from Good Shepherd Evangelical Lutheran Church, which will be located in the area of Bluebird Lane, Cardinal Lane and Midland Drive, as to what could be done about drainage. Fred Baker, director of public works, had told the council he didn't have any solutions to propose for the drainage problem in that area. The church will be located within a playa lake.

Highest point of the church will be one foot below the overflow line in that lake. Lowest point is five feet below, he said.

"I don't see why it's the city's responsibility to keep a flood area unflooded," said Sloan, who then proposed to design an ordinance freeing the city of any responsibility for the natural flood area.

"You've got an area that ought not to be developed," he added.

Baker pointed out one house already is located in the middle of the playa lake and another lies within the 100-year flood level. This playa lake serves as the drainage pond for a 700-acre area that stretches to the northwest.

The council decided to research what has been done in Lubbock, which has been faced with problems of developers going into natural playa lakes.

In other action, the panel approved an ordinance to remove 21 parking spaces on Wall Street from Marienfeld to Colorado to facilitate movement of traffic.

Baker told the panel that the State Highway Department has been looking at Midland's proposal for making Big Spring and Marienfeld streets one-way. With new office buildings going up, he said, highway officials "are becoming convinced that traffic will balloon dramatically and one-way streets are a necessity."

Rental agency investigation put off

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

An investigation by the state attorney general's office into Select-A-Home, a Midland-Odessa area rental-home referral service, was postponed Tuesday after the company's new owner pledged to resolve customers' grievances.

The Better Business Bureau (BBB) of the Permian Basin processed 15 formal complaints from consumers against the company since September 1981. Linda Truitt, BBB president, referred the complaints to the attorney general's consumer protection division last week.

Ms. Truitt explained that prospective renters typically signed an agreement with Select-A-Home and paid a $45 refundable fee. The agreement requires that customers call for listings at least 45 times in a three month period and make no more than two calls daily.

She said the complaints charge that customers were often unable to get through to Select-A-Home phone numbers. Others allege that once contacted, Select-A-Home misled consumers about the availability of rental homes, listed houses already rented and failed to provide new listings.

Complaints also allege that the firm refused to give refunds to disgruntled customers. Ms. Truitt said that refund requests were met with a form letter stating that consumers were ineligible for a refund because they failed to place the minimum number of phone calls to the service.

"They guarantee you'll get your money back," Ms. Truitt said. "But in order to get your money back, you have to follow their rules."

After reaching an agreement Tuesday to buy the agency, Ken Lecheminant of Odessa told the attorney general's office and the BBB he would attempt to correct the problems.

David Smith, an investigator in the attorney general's Lubbock office, agreed to postpone investigation of the complaints after Lecheminant promised to take corrective action. Ms. Truitt said that Lecheminant agreed to answer "justified" complaints.

BBB records list Robert Daley of Midland as the company's former owner. Neither Lecheminant nor Daley could be reached for comment.

Two of the six Select-A-Home phone numbers listed in the Odessa phone book have been disconnected. Calls to the remaining four numbers went unanswered Thursday.

Dean pleased with decision to let his office count votes

AUSTIN — Secretary of State David A. Dean has announced his office will undertake vote tabulation in primary and general elections beginning with the Nov. 2 general election.

Dean noted that the Texas Election Bureau (TEB) had unanimously voted not to tabulate results for the upcoming general election and instead supported a merger of experience and expertise with the Secretary of State's office.

"I am extremely appreciative of this vote of confidence and the support expressed by the TEB directors," Dean said. "I have no doubt that their pledge of support and resources ensures that the undertaking will be a successful venture. The natural consequence of our efforts will be minimized opportunity for election fraud and a maximum flow of election results to the public and candidates."

Dean also said he was inviting current members of the TEB to serve on an advisory task force to the Secretary of State to oversee the election reporting project, particularly with respect to setting up the formats for returns reported on Nov. 2.

"The TEB has indeed filled a void for the state since 1916 and is to be commended for its service to the state over the years," Dean said. "However, the time has clearly come for the state to assume the vote tabulations function and for it to be carried on by the state."

Florida firm seeks ruling on purchase

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Health Facilities Commission has received a request from Bloom Corp., Fort Lauderdale, Fla., for a ruling that a THFC certificate of need is not required to allow it to purchase Midland Care Center.

The Florida firm is seeking to acquire the 118-bed nursing home from JJF Enterprises, Inc., a Tennessee corporation.

The THFC hasn't determined if a hearing will be held on the request.

Lobbyist favors wages for inmates

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A prison reform lobbyist says paying inmates "a small token wage" for their prison work would boost morale, but a state prison official says inmates already get plenty for their work.

Charles Sullivan, executive director of Citizens United for Rehabilitation of Errants, told a House subcommittee Wednesday that inmates who work in prison feel like "they are exploited by the system."

Sullivan said as little as $1 per day — with half of it going into a victim compensation fund — would be a good idea.

"We're not asking for a lot when you get right down to it," said Sullivan, who told the subcommittee that all other states and the federal government pays inmates.

The Texas Legislature has turned down the idea in the past.

Jack Kyle, Texas Department of Corrections assistant director, told the subcommittee the TDC already pays inmates by providing free room and board, education, lawyers and personal items.

"There are honest, hard-working citizens who could make good use of what is being furnished to inmates," Kyle told a House subcommittee.

He said keeping track of inmate salaries would be a cumbersome and expensive bookkeeping job.

"I have no idea what number of staff would be required for such an operation," he said.

Kyle said, however, TDC officials support an increase in the $200 "gate money" given prisoners on release. The 1981 Legislature turned down an effort to raise the gate money to $400.

HOUSTON (AP) — A handcuffed prisoner who later died was shoved, yanked by the hair and pushed to the ground, witnesses testified at the trial of a former Harris County deputy sheriff accused in the beating death of the 17-year-old suspect.

The teen-ager, Steven Barnette, died March 20 from a ruptured spleen aftere allegedly being beaten by three deputies.

New general manager glad to be home

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

An eighth generation Texan, George M. Esparza is glad to be home.

Esparza was named general manager of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale Association this month, with the official announcement of his appointment being made at a Wednesday afternoon press conference.

George M. Esparza

The San Antonio native has spent the past year as one of eight chosen out of a field of 300 applicants for the American Symphony Orchestra League's Orchestra Management Fellowship Program. Through this fellowship Esparza gained valuable experience working in the management field for four organizations — the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra, the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Colorado Springs Symphony and the American Symphony Orchestra League.

Of Texas, Esparza said, "This is where I want to stay. I was offered other positions, but I decided this (Midland-Odessa) was an exciting place to be. There is a lot that could be accomplished here. Resources are available here that are not available anywhere else in the country.

"I'll tell you," Esparza said, "I have worked with three major orchestras with very large budgets and one small one in Colorado Springs, which is a growing community; a new community with a fast growing economy. To work with a small orchestra is a lot more exciting."

Esparza's educational background includes degrees in management and music and voice from Tulane University. He was the first graduate of Tulane to receive the university's bachelor of science in management and its bachelor of fine arts in music. Prior to college, Esparza was a student at Juilliard School of Music.

Although Esparza plays the piano and organ, he said, laughing, "I am accomplished at neither one. I'm a singer. I did graduate work in voice."

Esparza was in the graduate program at The University of Texas at Austin when he was chosen by the American Symphony Orchestra League for its fellowship.

While there, he was working toward a degree in choral directing. His background in this area included conducting a 45-voice community choir during the Bicentennial year on a concert tour of Poland as an official representative of the state of New Jersey.

Some years ago Esparza decided to pursue a management career as opposed to a performing one.

"A career of sorts in performing was not in my capability, but I had the ability to manage," Esparza said, adding, "I made a conscious choice."

As a recent arrival in the Midland-Odessa area, the 25-year-old Esparza said it is too soon for him to be voicing any major plans or specific goals for the organization; however he did give a broad outline of his job.

"At this point I am looking forward to settling in without making any drastic changes. I see my job as helping to coordinate and support the functions of the symphony and the volunteer organizations."

Esparza said he wants to see the organization run as efficiently as possible, with an increase in its outreach programs in the community.

The symphony's first rehearsal was Wednesday. The players, many of them new to the organization as well as the area, are preparing for this weekend's two Pops in the Park concerts.

The first will be held at Midland's Haley Park at 8:15 p.m. Saturday with the Odessa concert being held at the same time Sunday at Freedom Park.

Of the free concerts, Esparza said, "Bring your families and we'll bring our musicians; and we will all have a good time under the stars."

Chamber looks at clean-up, possible changes

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Cleaning up the city and its own house is what the Midland Chamber of Commerce will be doing over the next few months as a result of Wednesday's meeting of the board of directors.

Gathered in the chamber's office, the directors approved proceeding with participation in the Keep America Beautiful campaign on a full-time basis and didn't disagree over the proposal to change the operating year from January to December to one that will coincide with the city goverment's, which runs from October through September.

Explaining the Beautify Midland campaign, Bill Collyns said that past efforts had been "clean-up campaigns that worked fine for two to three weeks and didn't last longer than 60 days. There's been no effort to beautify the city."

What is needed is "attitude adjustment," or teaching citizens how to take pride in their community, according to Collyns. He pointed out that in its budget approved Tuesday, the City Council tacked on $10,000 for the campaign. It would involve hiring an executive director to keep the program going year-round.

"This isn't a two-time-a-year campaign," said Chamber President Larry Bell in backing up Collyns. "It probably will be one of the most involved and encompassing projects of the chamber."

Wandering through all the other items on the agenda, Bell finally hit on the last one and said the executive committee was recommending a change in the operations of the chamber.

Because some of the chamber's programs are supported in part by the city of Midland, the agency has to submit a budget for Midland Center, the Economic Development Department and the Convention and Visitors Bureau for a fiscal year that starts in October. The chamber, however, operates on a budget that begins in January.

If the board agrees to this change, said Bell, he suggested that new officers would have to take over in October. Instead of pulling out all officers now to implement the proposed change, Bell said they could stay on for another nine months to effect the change, as would committee chairmen.

In addition, he recommended adding a new position — that of president-elect — to give some continuity.

"We thought long and hard before we came up with this recommendation," said Executive Vice President Paul Harvel. "We realize it's a big change and we're asking the board to extend it nine months. We've gone through reorganization and change in the by-laws, but feel this also makes sense."

No resistance was voiced by the directors and Bell said the issue will be reviewed further at the next monthly meeting.

Looking at the latest economic indicators for Midland, Bell pointed out the unemployment rates for June 1981 and 1982. Last year the figure was 7.2 percent and this year it was 7.6 percent. But he also noted that 10,000 more persons are employed this year.

Last year, there were 50,670 employed as compared to 60,800 this year in June.

The indicators for July 1982 also show an easing up in unemployment with a 5.2 percent figure this year, compared with 6.5 percent in July 1981. Additionally, 60,650 persons were working in July, which is about 8,000 more than in July 1981, which saw 52,090 persons employed.

"I'm not saying we don't have things that we shouldn't have," said Bell. "But the unemployment is not having the impact here."

In chamber committee reports, the board learned that Midland Center income should exceed $70,000 this year, two more conventions have been booked, the M-Squad is rebuilding and has new uniforms and the chamber golf tournament is scheduled for Sept. 21 at Hogan Park. A membership reception will be held Oct. 12 in Midland Center to acquaint new members with what the chamber does.

The West Texas Chamber Industrial Development Tour will be targeting New York City this fall and Grant Billingsley said persons interested in joining the tour should contact him at the chamber.

Three luncheons in the Big Apple will be hosted by the group of Texans hoping to draw more business to this area.

And an office survey should be ready by next month, said Billingsley.

"It will impress you with the amount of construction under way and being considered. There's a number of developers continuing to come through this community."

Soviet mission to end Friday

MOSCOW (AP) — The latest Soviet orbital crew, including the second woman to fly in space, will end its eight-day mission Friday, the official news agency Tass reported today.

Svetlana Savitskaya, 34, and her two male colleagues were launched Aug. 19, docked their Soyuz T-7 capsule with the orbiting Salyut-7 space station the following day, and began biological and medical and experiments on how women adapt to space.

Ms. Savitskaya, a test pilot who has set 19 world aviation records, was designated a "researcher" aboard her first orbital flight. Alexander Serebrov, the 38-year-old flight engineer, also was making his space debut. The mission was commanded by veteran cosmonaut Leonid Popov, 36.

Bush defends U.S. pipeline stance

CHICAGO (AP) — Vice President George Bush today defended the Reagan administration's ban on shipping U.S. equipment to the Soviets for a gas pipeline, saying American business shouldn't tie its future to Moscow.

Bush, in remarks prepared for delivery at the national convention of the American Legion, also said the administration is improving America's image abroad. The White House released Bush's speech.

"The United States is the leader of the free world and under this administration we are beginning once again to act like it," he said.

Discussing the equipment embargo, Bush said, "We don't accept the argument that our pipeline sanctions are unfair, that the Soviets can't buy the equipment elsewhere, that we are only hurting American businesses. I don't believe any of that."

The vice president said the U.S. embargo on equipment to be used by the Soviets on its oil pipeline will delay construction and delivery of gas to Western Europe.

"And frankly, I don't believe that any American business should tie its future to leaders in the Kremlin - men who have no regard for the human rights of their own people, much less the people of Poland," he said.

Bush also said the United States will not unilaterally stop its nuclear arms buildup because such a freeze would undermine its attempts to negotiate a weapons reduction with the Soviet Union.

"The simple solution of negotiating a freeze at current levels would be harmful to our security and that of our allies," he said. "It would undercut prospects for an effective nuclear arms reduction agreeement with the Soviet Union.

Democratic chairman asserts GOP intends to 'buy' House

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Democratic National Chairman Charles Manatt asserted Wednesday that the Republicans, with an enormous election-year war chest, can literally buy 10 to 12 seats in the House of Representatives.

At the same time, Manatt suggested that actions taken by the Federal Reserve Board last week to improve the economic situation by lowering interest rates and pumping money into the economy could have been politically motivated.

The Californian, who became chairman of the Democratic Natonal Commmittee in 1981, termed the Fed's moves "highly unusual" and contended that it was important to GOP election prospects that they be taken in August rather than October.

"The timing was very interesting," said Manatt, noting that in the past Fed Chairman Paul Volcker had held a tight rein on the money supply to curtail inflation. He described the Fed's actions last week as having a"real goosing effect" on the economy.

Asked at a breakfast with reporters whether he thought the Republicans were trying to buy this year's elections, Manatt replied, "sure." He estimated that the GOP would spend between $130 million and $140 million, whereas the Democrats would have only $27 million.

Physiology contributes to difference in mortality

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have just gone back to work after several years as a housewife, and I find myself much more relaxed on the job than I ever was when I had to take care of a house and children. The reason I mention this is that I used to think that women lived longer than men because they had less pressures on them, but I don't think that any more. Does anyone know the real reason? — Mrs. T.H., Cedar Rapids, Iowa

Dear Mrs. H.: The complete story of the difference in mortality between men and women is not known, but both physiologic and behavioral factors appear to play a part. For example, smoking and heavy alcohol consumption are more common among men that among women, as is participation in dangerous sports. Such activities would obviously increase mortality among men. But these behavioral factors do not completely explain the difference, suggesting that physiologic factors are also operating.

Dear Dr. Solomon: It seems that almost every week we hear that something we enjoy, like coffee or sweets, is not good for us. So it was a surprise to read that alcohol may actually do some good. What I'd like to know is what there is about alcohol that makes it good to have. — Pete, Hartford, Conn.

Dear Pete: To be a little more specific, it is the moderate consumption of alcohol that appears to protect against coronary heart disease. Why this is so is not clear, but a number of researchers have speculated about it.

Dr. Brian R. Jones and his colleagues at the University of California, San Diego, suggest that people who use alcohol eat less than nondrinkers. If, as a result of their drinking, they consume less fat and cholesterol, they may be at decreased risk of coronary heart disease.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am responding to the article that appeared in our newspaper regarding lie detectors and people who try to beat the tests by first taking drugs. I must take exception with your article as, in my opinion, you did not answer the person's question directly, and your reply was not objective as pertains to the polygraph instrument or procedure.

First, like medicine, polygraphy is taught at accredited colleges, and the examiner, upon satisfactorily completing the course of instruction, must go through an internship prior to becoming certified. Secondly most ethical examiners go through an extensive "pre-test" interview prior to testing an individual, and at this time is also watching for the usual phenomena brought on by drugs. The first "in-test" examination has nothing to do with why the subject is there, but is for the purpose of establishing the subject's norms and responses to a known lie-type question. If the subject does not respond and the examiner is suspicious of ingested drugs, it is the examiner's option to re-schedule the subject for another examination. — James B. Wilson, Alhambra, Calif., polygraph expert.

Slang can be effective

Copley News Service

Parents shouldn't be too quick to criticize when their kids come home from school spouting a new word of slang. There may be some very scholarly types keeping close watch on use of the jargon.

Indeed, new words brought to the language through slang can be very effective, descriptive and valuable additions to English, according to Jess Stein.

As a leading lexicographer and editor-in-chief of Random House Dictionaries, Stein might be wary of such words and phrases as "humongous," "nerd," "the pits," "laid back" and "off the wall."

But he says they are "marvelous words with widespread use that convey meaning very effectively and have moved into the general vocabulary." Therefore, they are included in new editions of dictionaries.

"At one time," says Stein, "words like mob, eavesdropper and hoax were frowned upon and not desirable. Then they became accepted. 'Hot line' is another one. When President Dwight Eisenhower installed a hot line in the White House, it was considered slangy. Now it's perfectly standard."

Stein, whose office is in Manhattan, doesn't have sole responsibility for deciding when a word is legitimate enough to include in a dictionary, even though he's been a vice president of Random House for more than 20 years.

Researchers keep what are called citation files. They read newspapers and magazines, listen to radio and watch television to pick up new words and new meanings of old words.

"There are literally millions of these words," says Stein. "And as the file on a word gets thicker, it's a signal that perhaps it should be included."

Frequency of usage is not the only criterion, however. Lexicographers also note the geographic range of the word and the number of different people using it.

"If we find 20 instances of one word, but it's the same person using it, we know that person just has a thing for that word and it's not likely to be included," Stein said.

Science and technology account for many of the additions to the language, Stein says. The computer industry could fill a dictionary of its very own.

New words also come out of politics. Who ever heard of an "ayatollah" or "boat people" five years ago?

And bureaucrats, in an effort to sugar-coat the meaning of their messages, will use such words as "dehire" instead of "fire" or "negative growth" for "decline."

While these words are considered faddish by lexicographers at present, they could show up in a dictionary if picked up by the general public.

Words are quickly added to the language, but they are much slower to become obsolete and disappear, Stein says.

"If you're reading an older piece from 1890 by an important author, you could very well come across a word you don't know and head for the dictionary to find the meaning. For that reason, we tend to add words much more readily than we delete them."

Draft resister says decision personal, moral

SAN DIEGO (AP) — College student Benjamin Sasway said he wanted to tell a jury why he failed to register with the Selective Service System, but was allowed only to say his decision was a "personal and moral" one that he does not plan to change.

Sasway, 21, is the second person tried for failure to register for the draft since the end of the Vietnam War. His case was expected to go to the jury after closing arguments, scheduled for today.

The Humboldt State University student repeatedly declared on the witness stand Wednesday he had knowingly failed to register.

He had, in effect, turned himself in July 24, 1980 when he wrote a letter to President Jimmy Carter declaring he would not register.

Although the jury heard Sasway affirm Wednesday that he had not registered and would not, he never explained why.

U.S. District Judge Gordon Thompson Jr. had ruled earlier that motive was not relevant to the issue of whether Sasway intended to violate the law.

But Sasway's attorney, Charles T. Bumer tried anyway, repeatedly asking the young defendant the reason for his actions.

Each time the question was asked, Assistant U.S. Attorney Yesmin Annen objected. Her objections were sustained.

Finally, Bumer asked Sasway: "You would like to be able to tell the jury why you made this decision, wouldn't you?"

Sasway answered, "Yes." But the matter went no further.

Under cross-examination, Sasway indicated his reasons for mailing a protest letter to the president on the day he was supposed to mail a draft registration card.

He said his decision was "a personal and a moral one."

"You knew that all you had to do was sign a card to register, didn't you," Ms. Annen asked.

Sasway replied, "I felt that simply signing the card was not the extent of the issue involved."

Earlier in the day, jurors were shown excerpts of television interviews showing Sasway discussing his decision and his views on the military. All references to the possible penalties he could receive were deleted. Thompson had ruled it was irrelevant that Sasway faces a $10,000 fine and five years in prison.

Thompson has instructed the jury not to read or watch news accounts of the trial. But all of the jurors indicated when they were chosen Tuesday they had heard about the case.

Thompson also ruled irrelevant the number of men born between 1960 and 1964 who have not registered since Carter reinstated the registration system by proclamation.

At Sasway's pretrial hearing last week, Selective Service attorney Edward Frankle said 8.6 million young men have registered, and another 700,000 have not.

About 50 people who oppose draft registration have staged marches or stood silently, dressed in black, in front of the federal courthouse each day of Sasway's trial.

On Wednesday, 100 of them signed a petition and delivered it to the U.S. attorney's office, declaring they are guilty of aiding, abetting and counseling failure to register. They challenged the government to prosecute them.

But a Justice Department attorney testified in Sasway's pretrial hearings that it is not the government's policy to prosecute anyone for aiding or abetting violations of the registration law.

On July 1, Sasway, of Vista, Calif., became the first person indicted under that law.

Another college student, Enten Eller, was indicted later but went to trial first. Eller was convicted by a judge last week in Roanoke, Va., and sentenced to probation. He was ordered to register within three months or face prison.

David Wayte, 21, of Pasadena, expected to be the third person to stand trial for failure to register, has attended Sasway's trial each day. Wayte goes on trial Sept. 28.

Drexel University Chaplain Dean Snyder, right, and Robert M. Smith, members of the Brandywine Peace Community anti-war organization, stand with what they claim to be an unarmed nuclear warhead in this photo taken in a Philadelphia church recently. Brandywine members said they took four of the objects from the General Electric plant in Valley Forge, Pa., last April.

Cones taken from GE scrap, not warheads, Pentagon says

VALLEY FORGE, Pa. (AP) — Four metal cones taken from a General Electric Co. plant here by a pacifist group were scrap, not unarmed nuclear warheads as the group had claimed, according to Pentagon and company officials.

"What they got is not the warhead itself but some of the components of the re-entry vehicle," James Freeman, chief of the Pentagon Armed Forces News Branch told The Associated Press. A re-entry vehicle helps carry the warhead to its target, but is not explosive itself.

Freeman said, "there is no nuclear stuff made up at the GE plant."

The objects "were found in an exposed trash heap" at the GE plant in Valley Forge sometime in April, said Peggy McGuire, a spokeswoman for the Brandywine Peace Community, which is based in Media.

GE confirmed Wednesday that four weapons parts were taken from a fenced-in area of the plant, but said "the security of GE's government contracts has not been breached."

The peace groups took the objects and displayed one of them during a demonstration at Drexel University in Philadelphia and a GE security officer confiscated it, Ms. McGuire said.

The other three objects remained in their possession, Ms. McGuire said, declining to say where they were being kept.

Meanwhile, GE guards kicked in the doors to the main entrance of the plant early Wednesday and five members of the group who had chained themselves inside were arrested by Upper Merion Township police. They were protesting the weapons work being done there, Ms. McGuire said.

NTSB concerned about wind shear detection, procedures at airports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal investigators, convinced wind shear played a major role in the crash of a Pan American World Airways jet near New Orleans, are concerned that equipment and procedures for detecting such winds may be inadequate.

The National Transportation Safety Board was to make public later today a variety of documents, including a transcript of conversations in the cockpit of Pan Am Flight 759 in the minutes before the plane plowed into a residential area of suburban Kenner, La.

All 146 people aboard the Boeing 727 and eight people on the ground were killed in the crash July 9 shortly after the plane took off from the New Orleans International Airport. It was the country's second worst aviation disaster and the third weather-related crash of a jetliner this year.

The board's investigators have carefully studied wind shear, which is a sudden change in wind direction and velocity that can virtually drive an aircraft into the ground.

Nine jetliner accidents in the last nine years have been linked to the weather phenomenon.

A transcript of the radio conversations between air traffic controllers at the airport and pilots has shown that at least four wind shear alerts were transmitted by special equipment in the minutes before Flight 759 took off, including one for all sections of the airport.

The investigators, however, are known to be concerned not only about the equipment's performance, but also the wind shear alert procedures, including how the alerts are relayed and how seriously pilots take them.

The devices, called a Low Level Wind Shear Alert System, have been placed in 58 airports around the country in recent years and the Federal Aviation Administration said it plans to install them in 51 additional airports over the next three years.

"The early phases of the investigation...convinces the board that the (wind shear alert system) is not an end solution" to wind shear detection, board chairman James Burnett recently told Congress.

He added that while the alert system has been installed at 58 airports neither the FAA nor the air carriers have "implemented operational procedures to use (it) as a criteria for approach or departure."

One investigator said privately this week there are "a lot of questions about the use of this system," and that investigators want to examine the equipment's reliability and use more closely.

"It was put in for a purpose," said the NTSB staff member, who asked to remain anonymous. "If it's put in just to ring off an alarm in the tower and then nobody does anything about it, it's not being used."

Pilots have said the alert system should be used in conjunction with other information to determine whether a takeoff should proceed. They also have complained about its reliability and emphasized that it is limited to measuring ground wind and not possible shears along the flight path.

"This system, while limited to measuring only surface wind does provide a significant measure of protection within the landing and takeoff zones," said Michael J. Fenello, the FAA's deputy administrator.

The NTSB previously has revealed that the cockpit voice recorder from the Pan American plane shows that the crew members heared two wind shear alerts in the minutes before takeoff.

Although neither alert was directed specifically to the Pan Am plane, one involved an alert for all quadrants of the airport.

A week after the crash, the NTSB also said that a preliminary examination of the cockpit voice recorder showed that the crew discussed emergency procedures before takeoff, including what to do if a decision was made to abort the flight.

In the final seconds before the crash, the plane's captain said the plane was "sinking" and discussed actions to try to counteract the descent, investigators said.

Officials watch mountains, fear flooding in Colorado

OURAY, Colo. (AP) — Law enforcement officials kept a close watch on the mountains that encircle Ouray, fearing more flooding and mudslides as rainfall continued intermittently here, a spokesman said.

There were no immediate reports of flooding, though, said Erma Dougherty, wife of the Ouray County sheriff.

A series of mudslides that began on Saturday at times has blocked streets and U.S. Highway 550 in this tourist-oriented community that calls itself "Switzerland of America."

Two flumes that carry water through town from the Cascade waterfall and from another stream were being watched to make sure they do not become blocked again by debris and cause more flooding, Mrs. Dougherty said Wednesday night.

"They're keeping the flumes clear," she said. "It's going to take at least a week before they clean up."

Rocks, mud and debris brought down from the hills by mudslides continue to litter Main Street, officials said, although workers managed to keep the street open Wednesday.

Town Clerk Lucille Zellar said the town applied to Gov. Richard Lamm for disaster assistance.

Don George, owner of Antler's Motel, said he will not reopen until the flood threat subsides.

Former workers win suit against railroad

EDWARDSVILLE, Ill. (AP) — Jurors in a suit filed by 47 former railroad workers returned the final four awards in the case Wednesday, bringing the total awarded to nearly $58 million.

Thirty-two of the plaintiffs in the suit, against the Norfolk and Western Railway Co., were awarded $1 million or more.

The suit stems from a toxic chemical spill from a ruptured railroad tank car at Sturgeon, Mo., in January 1979.

Attorneys for both the plaintiffs and the railroad refused to comment after the jury returned the awards, ending a five-month trial, but attorneys for the Norfolk and Western said the case would be appealed.

All 47 plaintiffs claimed they suffered injury while cleaning up a spill of orthochlorophenol crude or helped haul the disabled tank car to nearby railyards.

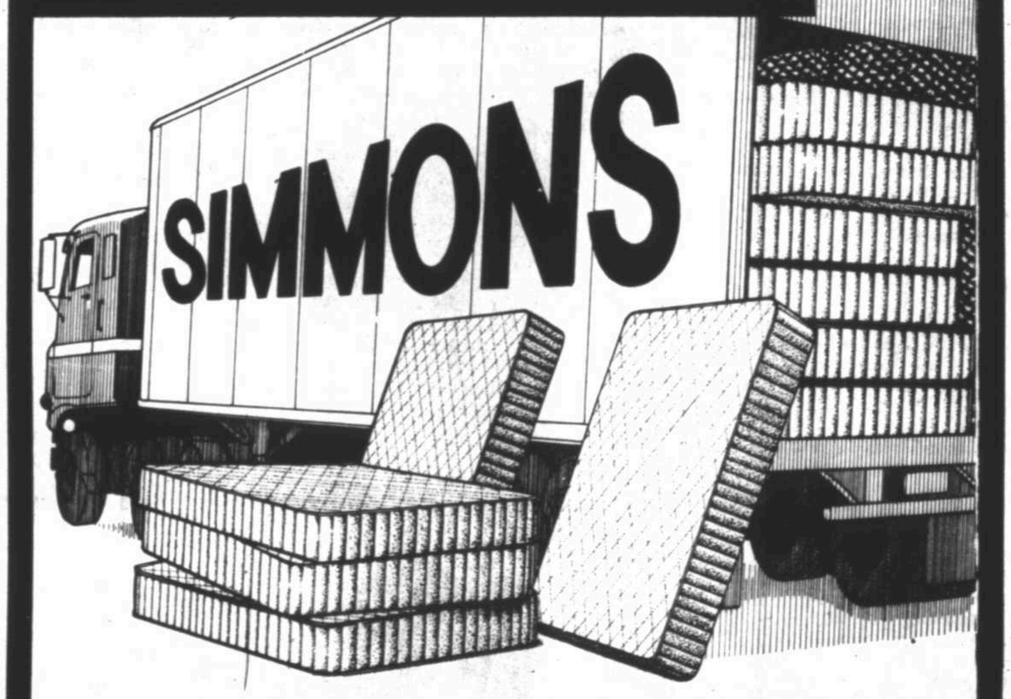

Their suit said the chemical contained dioxin, a highly toxic chemical which also contaminated the Vietnam war herbicide Agent Orange. The chemical was being shipped from the Monsanto Co.'s Sauget plant at Monsanto, Ill., to a wood company in Washington state for use as a wood finisher.

Norfolk and Western became the only defendant in the case when Monsanto, the manufacturer of the chemical; Dresser Industries, which manufactured the tank car, and American Transportation Co., which made the coupling on the car, settled with the workers out of court.

Reagan watches Mideast, money from California

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan is monitoring the deployment of U.S. Marines in Beirut from his mountaintop ranch, where he is settling in for a 13-day vacation.

After two days in Los Angeles, the president returned to his 688-acre spread near here Wednesday following his formal notification to Congress that combat-equipped Marines had gone ashore in Beirut. The troops will oversee the evacuation of Palestinian fighters from the war-torn city.

Reagan also awaited the $14.2 billion supplemental appropriations bill, which he seems sure to veto. White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said the measure was due to arrive in California today, and the president was expected to act on it by the end of the week.

The measure includes money for some federal programs through the current fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30.

Budget Director David Stockman and other top advisers have urged Reagan to veto the bill, even though that risks killing funds for a high priority program — the administration's Caribbean basin aid program.

The total measure exceeds Reagan's domestic spending requests by $918 million, but contains $2.1 billion less than the president wanted for the military. For the Caribbean basin program, the bill contains $350 million.

Also at stake is money for military pay increases due Aug. 31.

In a speech in Los Angeles Tuesday, Reagan pledged anew to veto "budget busting bills," but stopped short of mentioning the pending measure.

At his ranch where he is in seclusion, Reagan is receiving telephone reports about Beirut from National Security Adviser William P. Clark in Santa Barbara. Reagan also talked by telephone Wednesday with Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

In letters to congressional leaders about the Marines, Reagan said, "I want to emphasize that there is no intention or expectation that U.S. armed forces will become involved in hostilities."

"Although we cannot rule out isolated acts of violence," he said, "all appropriate precautions have thus been taken to assure the safety of U.S. military personnel during their brief assignment to Lebanon."

He said the Marines, numbering about 800, would be pulled out within 30 days.

In a message sent to the Marines before they went ashore, Reagan said, "The conditions under which you carry out your vital assignment are, I know, demanding and potentially dangerous."

However, he said, the inclusion of American troops in a multinational force with French and Italian soldiers was "crucial to achieving the peace that is so desperately needed in this long-tortured city.

"I expect that you will perform with the traditional esprit and discipline for which the Marine Corps is renowned," said Reagan. "God speed."

Reagan sent the formal notice to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill and Senate President Pro Tem Strom Thurmond. The notification is required by the War Powers Resolution.

Reagan noted that the U.S.-negotiated agreement for the evacuation of Palestinian guerrillas pointedly rules out any combat responsibilities for U.S. forces. Reagan said the three-nation force will be withdrawn if the agreement breaks down and the evacuation is scrapped.

Daily News, last two unions reach contract agreements

NEW YORK (AP) — The Daily News and the last two of its 11 labor unions reached agreement today on cost-reduction measures that newspaper officials say are necessary to save the nation's largest general-circulation daily.

The accords were disclosed after marathon negotiations between the newspaper and the Newspaper Deliverers Union were completed at 4 a.m. They represented the final step for the paper's owner, the Tribune Co. of Chicago, to save the paper from folding.

The Tribune Co. had told the unions last April that the News needed to eliminate the equivalent of 1,340 jobs to save some $50 million a year.

Gregory Thornton, vice-president and director of industrial relations for the News, and Murray Schwartz, president of the independent deliverers union, announced the agreement.

Thornton also disclosed that agreement had been reached earlier with the Printing Pressmen.

Both agreements were subject to approval of the unions' membership, officials said. Schwartz said his members would meet Monday and that his bargaining committee had approved the agreement unanimously.

Thornton said the News now "looks forward to full agreement" to settlement of the remaining issue — an extension of the contracts with all 11 unions. The News has proposed extensions starting March 31, 1984, that would put the unions under contract for three additional years, with increases in weekly pay totaling $100 during the added term.

Pay currently ranges from around $450 a week for some craft jobs to more than $600 a week for experienced editorial employees.

TV, movie cartoonists OK proposals

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Television and movie cartoonists approved a package of demands in their 3-week-old strike against producers they accuse of farming out work overseas, a union spokesman said.

"We endorsed a package of contract proposals that are going to be presented to all producers," spokesman Jack Massie said Wednesday.

He said 400 of the 1,600 members of Local 839 of the Motion Picture Screen Cartoonists attended the meeting and passed the demands on voice vote. The animators are responsible for Saturday morning cartoons, among other things.

Massie said the union's contract forbids "runaway" contracting, a term used to describe work that is sent overseas rather than given to cartoonists in the United States.

"The runaway clause is basically that there be no subcontracting out of Los Angeles County," he said.

Cleveland strike put off 24 hours

CLEVELAND (AP) — A threatened strike today by editorial employees of The Cleveland Plain Dealer was put off for at least 24 hours as federal mediators called both sides back to the bargaining table.

J. Steven Hatch, executive secretary of the 246-member Local 1 of The Newspaper Guild, said, "We're frozen for 24 hours."

Hatch said he received a telephone call at 1:45 a.m. from Kay McMurray, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, which headed off the 8 a.m. strike.

Leo Ring, chief contract negotiator for The Plain Dealer, said, "We received a telegram from the head of federal mediation in Washington asking us to attend the meeting, and we are here. I don't expect a settlement, but we're going to try. We're very far apart."

The Plain Dealer was published today. Its front page carried a brief account of the labor dispute and a four-paragraph statement by the newspaper's management which urged employees "to report for work in normal fashion."

The 103-year-old Cleveland Press, an afternoon paper which had competed with The Plain Dealer, ceased publication June 17, putting about 900 people out of work. That left The Plain Dealer, a morning publication, as Cleveland's only daily newspaper.

NBC withdraws contract with captioning service

WASHINGTON (AP) — The NBC television network has withdrawn from a captioning service generally considered the best available for helping deaf viewers watch television.

Saying it was disappointed with the amount of demand for the service, the network withdrew this week from the National Captioning Institute two years after becoming a charter subscriber.

The decision leaves NCI with only two major customers. One of them — the Public Broadcasting Service (PBS) — is expected to reduce its purchase of captioning services next year because of federal budget cutbacks. The other major customer, ABC, is maintaining its current commitment to the service.

"There is no question that this hurts," John E.D. Ball, NCI president, said Wednesday. "This was a major revenue source for NCI. I think the next six months or so are going to be crucial for us."

NCI is the largest organization in the country providing television broadcasters a service called closed captioning. The non-profit institute was established in 1980 with federal seed money for the purpose of taking TV programs or commercials and, for a fee, adding captions for the benefit of the deaf and hearing-impaired.

Closed captioning allows written translations or subtitles to be embedded within a TV signal.

Prince's grades may bode ill for college admission

LONDON (AP) — Prince Edward's reputation as the brains of Britain's royal family took a beating today when newspapers reported his university qualifying examination grades were below average.

The exception was a top mark in history, which Edward's family has been making for centuries.

The London Times said his poor showing "may give...some pause for thought" to admission tutors at Cambridge University's Jesus College.

The 18-year-old prince has been offered a place as an undergraduate student at the college in September 1983 on condition his grades this year are adequate.

But the British domestic news agency Press Association reported: "It is understood the disclosure of Edward's marks will not affect his placing there."

Buckingham Palace announced Tuesday that Edward, youngest of the four children of Queen Elizabeth II, had passed three advanced level university entrance examinations.

The Times reported today that Edward received a "C" in English literature, a "D" in history, and a "D" in the joint subject of economics and political science.

The prince partially redeemed himself with a grade 2 — signifying special merit — in a history examination.

Redford making land development plans

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Actor-director Robert Redford, who owns large amounts of land in Utah, wants to develop the area near his Sundance Resort, says Redford's properties manager, John Lear.

The actor has applied for permits to develop 40 to 50 lots near the small ski resort, and has asked Lear to draw up a master plan for the resort, Redford's horse ranch in Spanish Fork, Utah, and other holdings in the state, Lear said.

"Economics is playing a big role in everyone's life," Lear said. "We are looking at Sundance and asking if we want to ski, if we want to develop, is it time for a change and we are asking similar questions about other pieces of land. The population in Provo has drastically increased and we are at our limits in some areas of the resort."

Development at the resort has been minor since 1970. The actor, who is active in environmental causes, has said he wanted to keep it as small and quiet as possible.

Redford wants to set the trend for future development in Provo Canyon, but, "There haven't been any decisions yet on what will happen," Lear said Tuesday.

NEW YORK (AP) — Conductor Leonard Bernstein observed his 64th birthday, still recovering from a case of the flu that forced him to cancel an appearance at the Salzberg music festival.

Bernstein was to appear with the Vienna Philharmonic at the festival Aug. 29, but sent a telegram to festival director Otto Sertle to express "apologies and unhappiness" at having to cancel.

A spokeswoman for Bernstein, Margaret Carson, said he had been confined to his home for a few weeks with bronchial flu and a fever.

He was recovering on his birthday Wednesday, she said, but doctors told him not to travel until Aug. 30, when he will leave to join the Vienna Philharmonic for concerts in Vienna, Munich and Berlin.

'Newman's Own' hits store shelves with success astounding to backers

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Paul Newman fans who may never have the chance to join the actor for dinner will soon be able to taste one of his homemade recipes.

For years, the blue-eyed movie star and race-car aficionado has combined his favorite ingredients into a salad dressing that he has served to his family and gave to friends as holiday gifts. For years, his friends told him the tasty concoction was good enough to sell.

He has taken their advice.

On the shelves of at least two stores in southwestern Connecticut, customers find clear glass bottles bearing labels with portraits of Newman's smiling face wreathed in herbs and vegetables.

Inside each bottle is Newman's own recipe — a vinaigrette dressing made of olive oil, soybean oil, red wine vinegar, water, lemon juice, spices, salt, dehydrated onion and garlic.

It's called Newman's Own, and customers are gobbling it up.

"We've had it about three weeks and we've already sold 10,000 bottles," said Stew Leonard Jr., who works at Stew Leonard's Dairy in Norwalk, a family-run store near Newman's home in Westport.

Even though Newman's Own costs as much as 30 cents more than the store's other popular brands, it's selling like crazy, Leonard said.

"We've sold more bottles of it than all the others combined," he said. "We love to sell things like the Paul Newman salad dressing because it gets the customers excited."

Dave Kalman, whose Advantage Food Marketing Corp. of Port Washington, N.Y. is sole U.S. distributor for the dressing, said his company was not ready for the response to the product.

"We weren't going to even announce that the product exists until Sept. 15," said Kalman. Newman's Own has had "no advertising and stores are selling thousands and thousands of bottles of the stuff," he said.

Kalman's company plans to test-market the salad dressing in the Northeast, then go nationwide.

Newman's Own has met with rave reviews, not because it's a trendy product endorsed by a popular actor, but because it's a tasty salad dressing, Kalman said. "It's mild, not overbearing.

Newman, 57, star of movies including "Hud," "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," and, more recently, "Fort Apache, the Bronx" and "Absence of Malice," was on the race-driving circuit and couldn't be reached to discuss his recipe.

Media losing libel suits

NEW YORK AP — News organizations are losing more libel trials and being assessed "dramatically higher" punitive damages by juries, according to a new study. But three-quarters of those verdicts are later set aside or reduced.

The study of 54 cases, prepared by the Libel Defense Resource Center, also said news media defendants prevail in most libel cases, many of which never reach trial.

But it found that news media defendants lost more than four out of five defamation or invasion-of-privacy cases that went to trial. When the cases were tried before juries, the media lost almost nine of 10.

The study also found that after trial or appeal, three out of four anti-media verdicts and awards are reversed, set aside or reduced.

In a statement, the center complained of "the poor performance of media defendants at trials and...grotesque, outrageously large damage awards" by juries.

"What we need to know is why the news media do so badly before juries," said Henry R. Kaufman, the center's general counsel. "Ninety percent is a very impressive loss ratio. ...We've got to talk to these juries and find out what's going on."

Thirty of 47 recent damage awards studied were for more than $100,000, with 12 for more than $250,000 and nine for $1 million or more.

Those figures represented an increase over those in a similar survey by a Stanford Law School professor, Marc Franklin, during the late 1970s.

Kaufman said the judgments may reflect juries' anti-institutional bias, rather than any grudge against newspapers, magazines or broadcast stations.

Awards usually are scaled down by judges, the study found. None of the $1 million awards has been upheld on appeal, and the size of judgments after appeal has not increased appreciably in recent years.

But stiff jury verdicts still discourage news organizations from tackling controversial topics and encourage plaintiffs to press unworthy, but costly, lawsuits, Kaufman said.

"The fact that there appears to be this pot of gold at the end of the rainbow could result in the filing and pursuing of claims that might otherwise not be pursued," Kaufman said.

"It's hard for a lawyer to tell a client with a weak case that he should settle out of court when he's reading in the paper about million-dollar libel awards," he added.

On the other hand, he said, smaller or less profitable news organizations may become wary of stories likely to incur significant legal expenses — even if the stories are not defamatory.

The Libel Defense Research Center, which is supported by various news organizations, collects and issues information about libel and invasion of privacy claims.

Trafficking in organs investigated

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Attorney General's Office says it has discovered illegal trafficking in human organs, especially eyes, at a local hospital.

The Attorney General's Office said the organs were being taken from cadavers without permission of relatives at Xoco Traumatology Hospital on the city's south side.

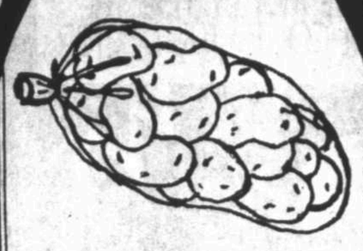

The dealing in human organs came to light when the husband of a 33-year-old woman who died at the hospital discovered her eyeballs had been extracted without his permission, the office said. She had been run down by an automobile.

Police said initial investigations indicated that the illegal practice also may be occurring at other hospitals.

Follow the bulls

Clearly the market surge of the past few days is evidence of a long-awaited renewal of confidence at the New York Stock Exchange. Although economic signals remain mixed a number of indicators are up — an inflation rate at only 7.3 percent, savings on the increase and a rise of 1.3 percent in the gross national product in the second quarter.

Those factors teamed to give the market 114.25 points on the Dow Jones in just seven days and its second consecutive 100 million-share day earlier this week.

The real impetus for Wall Street's bolstered confidence, though, has to be rooted in falling interest rates which undoubtedly will give the overall American economy a shot in the arm.

More rosy days may lie in the offing, not just for Wall Street, but for the entire economy. With interest rates being relaxed a bit, more money can be freed to fuel the fires in the private sector for the economic recovery. As business volume and private sector borrowing and, thus, spending increase, more jobs will become available and the troublesome unemployment situation will see some relief.

Now isn't the time for Washington to begin to falter on the nation's economic course. Enough deviation occurred in the form of the recent $99 billion tax hike approved in Congress. If the Congress truly wants to help the economic recovery it should consider only cutting federal spending, not increasing it as the tax measure surely has done, despite administration that vast budget cuts will be among results of the bill.

The private sector is poised, ready to get on with the business at hand — which is business. Abandonment of the conservative economic course mandated in 1979 by the eletorate is a sure-fire way to put America back on that one-way road to economic collapse.

The bulls on Wall Street are signalling the correct path to bring the nation back to economic well-being. Is anyone in Washington listening?

Reagan's difficult choice

It took courage for President Reagan to announce that the United States is committed to reducing arms sales to Taiwan.

The president knew that his decision would anger many of his strongest supporters. And it did. Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., blamed the "weaklings, sissies and people with mush for brains" in the State Department. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said he could think of no other action by the administration "that would disappoint more friends of President Reagan." Another legislator said he felt "doubly double-crossed" by the combination of the president's Taiwan decision and his prime-time championing of the tax hike.

But, although it was unpopular, it was a decision that had to be made, for it was necessary to salvage our deteriorating relations with China. The issue of arms sales to Taiwan was left unresolved when Sino-American relations were normalized in January 1979, and has been the chief stumbling block to the improvement of relations ever since. The problem was that China had difficulty in believing the credibility of the U.S. acknowledgement that "there is but one China and Taiwan is a part of China" when we continued to sell advanced weapons to Taiwan.

Ten months of negotiations seems to have solved the dispute. Under the terms of a new Sino-American agreement, announced recently in a joint communique, U.S. arms sales to Taiwan will be reduced gradually "leading over a period of time to a final resolution."

But, despite what the president's critics are saying, there was no sellout. Washington refused to agree to Peking's demand that a firm deadline be set for the end of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. And U.S. negotiators only concluded the agreement after China reiterated its commitment to a peaceful resolution of the Taiwan question.

Reagan accurately hailed the deal as a mutually satisfactory arrangement that "preserves principles on both sides." As the joint communique affirmed, "The development of United States-China relations is not only in the interests of the two peoples but is also conducive to peace and stability in the world."

This dangerous world is a somewhat safer place with the United States and China standing together in opposition to the Soviet Union than it was when the two were drifting apart.

Another View:

Departures weaken U.S.

Three moderates in an immoderate administration have left their posts in recent months. Their departure strengthens the hand of extremists and weakens the chances that the United States will pursue a wise foreign policy.

Adm. Bobby Ray Inman, once deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, has withdrawn to the private sector. He was weary of battling officials who wanted the CIA to return to domestic spying. Alexander Haig quit as secretary of state in late June, citing the disappearance of "consistency, clarity and steadiness" from U.S. foreign policy. And Gen. David Jones retired after completing a second term as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; administration officials were unhappy with his support for Salt II, the strategic arms agreement they called "fatally flawed."

Competent men have replaced Inman, Haig and Jones, but none has recent high-level political experience. So for now, the National Security Council has lost its dissenting contingent, and none of the dissenters has left on particularly good terms. The irony is that these three former officials were considered conservatives in the Carter administration. But in the Reagan camp, they were seen as decidedly out of step. Their departure may bring more tranquillity to the White House, but it may also bring a right-wing sameness to administration policy.

Inman, Haig and Jones contributed an invaluable perspective in their government jobs. They were professionals among ideologues: They saw that America cannot advance its interests if its first step is to alienate allies. They were realistic enough to recognize the limitations of government's power. The United States, they knew, cannot successfully bully its friends into risking their security in order to punish the Soviet Union. And in spite of some early wild talk by Haig of nuclear "warning shots," the three were the administration's strongest advocates of arms control.

These attitudes are lacking in the Reagan administration, which lately has shown little willingness to heed the good advice of its former moderates. It is unfortunate that the tolerance exhibited by Inman, Haig and Jones can no longer influence U.S. policy. Their voices once helped calm and channel the administration's intemperate ideology. Their departure means a loss of experience and restraint.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

How you gonna keep 'em in the desert now?

WASHINGTON — In their determination to play Big Brother for the Arab world, the Russians are learning that you can take the boy out of the desert, but you can't take the desert out of the boy.

Jack Anderson

Freed from the puritanical social restraints of their refugee camps, some Palestine Liberation Organization trainees in the Soviet Union evidently sought to emulate the Sheik of Araby, according to documents obtained from intelligence sources.

The trouble with the PLO swains was that, like many a country bumpkin before them, they chose the wrong girls for their amorous adventures, and wound up sadder, wiser and broke.

The misadventures of the PLO trainees are conscientiously noted down in a report by their unit commander, Mugadam Rashad Ahmed, to none other than PLO Chairman Yassir Arafat. The document, obtained by my associate Lucette Lagnado, is dated January 1981.

One luckless guerrilla who broke training and lived to regret it was Afif Mohammad Al Masri, a member of the "Struggle Front" faction. Masri "did not behave himself," his commander reported sadly.

The young man "spent his time with one of the girls of doubtful character" — the standard euphemism for prostitutes in the Soviet Union, where the profession does not officially exist. Masri took the young woman to her home, where "his clothes were ... taken by a man who claimed to be the girl's brother," the commander noted.

"He left her home without his clothes and reported the incident to the militia," the report continues — unfortunately without embellishment. One can only imagine the predicament of a lovesick Arab wandering naked through the streets of a Russian city in the dead of winter, looking for a cop. The militiamen proved equal to the situation, though. Presumably choking back their guffaws, they managed to get Masri's clothes back for him.

Another PLO fighter-lover was Darwish Dhib Saad of the Arab Liberation Front. Described by his commander as "indecent and a pervert," Saad got mixed up with another of those women "of doubtful character." She not only took all his money, but a report intended for the PLO delegation as well. The commander himself had to lug Saad back to quarters "drunk as a lord."

The Russians evidently lost patience with an uppity member of the Syrian-oriented Saiqa faction, one Ahmad Al Sharqi. Testifying on behalf of a buddy who claimed he had been beaten and robbed by militiamen, Sharqi warned the cops that "something would happen" if they didn't give back the money.

"This behavior brought on a serious response" from the Russians, who "demanded that the man be returned home," according to the commander's report.

Though the embarrassment of his indiscretions clearly weighed heavily on Commander Muqadam, he also had some complaints about their hosts. There was, he reported, a shortage of Arabic translators. The PLO trainees had to sleep 10 to a room, which "caused difficulties." And some of the courses ended before the departure date, whereupon the Russian tutors simply started over again.

In the future, the commander suggested, those chosen for training in the Soviet Union should be "of high quality, who are capable of representing (us) outside." He added that "it is preferable to lower the number in order not to harm the quality."

Meanwhile, Arafat will have this problem to ponder: How you gonna keep 'em down on the desert after they've seen Russia?

SPUNKY LADY: Federal whistleblowers have protection against vengeful bosses, but state and local government employees are generally defenseless against reprisals. Ask Marie White of Hazard, in the coal-hollow country of eastern Kentucky.

Mrs. White was summarily fired from her $850-a-month job as payroll clerk for the Perry County school board after she raised serious questions about purportedly falsified vouchers and padded expense accounts.

"I was in a position to know about the misuse of school funds," she wrote me. "On several occasions, I confronted the school attorney and two board members about this corruption. However, I was ignored."

State police and auditors didn't ignore her, though. They found enough substance to her charges to conduct a thorough investigation. The results are expected to be presented to a grand jury shortly.

School superintendent Kenneth Colwell denied that his abrupt firing of White had anything to do with her charges of corruption. But she says he told her, shortly after her dismissal: "Keep your mouth shut. I can fire you anytime."

White, the mother of two, has been out of work since before last Christmas. She claims others in the school system have been forced out because they supported her. "Sir," she wrote me, "I was taught that I, like all Americans, was born with a special gift. That gift is freedom. Without justice, we lose that freedom. I'm just a little old lady with only courage to fight with ... I'm not a glory seeker or trouble maker, but someone that cares for our mountain people."

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: On the margin of a recent top-secret CIA report, an intelligence expert scrawled a sardonic comment: "Also noted a power play in Argentina by (one high-level official) with some humor, since he does not have the power base to work from."

GEORGE F. WILL

Be brave, football's reflecting modern life

WASHINGTON — The wage slaves of professional football have taken to shaking hands before dislocating each other's shoulders in games. This incendiary handshaking is part of a class struggle in which the working stiffs (a proletariat averaging $83,800) are advocating that 55 percent of the NFL's gross revenues be set aside for players. "We are," they say, "the game."

George F. Will

The owners respond with a comparably inane morsel of morality: Any percentage-of-the-gross agreement would violate capitalist practice. Actually, the owners live by one kind of socialism, and the players want their own version.

The pleasant but awkward fact for management is that it is hard for an owner to lose money. The NFL's new television contract gives each team $14 million a year — an $8 million-a-year increase. Many, perhaps most, teams are near the break-even point before they sell a ticket.

Football players have short, high-risk careers, yet are paid on average about half what baseball players make. Three baseball players — Mike Schmidt (Phillies), Dave Winfield (Yankees), Gary Carter (Expos) — are making a total of $5.3 million this year, more than the Dallas Cowboys' entire 45-man roster. But football is a game of manic specialization ("Here comes the third-and-short-yardage passing-situation nose-guard!"), which is one reason why such comparisons are not illuminating. Still, football players are generally underpaid, relative to the sums football generates.

What pulled up salaries in baseball and basketball was free agency — clubs bidding for players in a relatively free market. The football players' union emphasizes a percentage of the gross rather than free agency because it believes that the NFL's egalitarian revenue-sharing policies have reduced the owners' incentive to win, and hence the incentive to bid for players. That is true, but so is this: A competitive spirit causes many owners to become owners. There are easier ways to make money.

Competition between professional teams is not like competition between shoe stores. Every team wants every other team to be competitive. Revenue sharing and other aspects of "NFL socialism" work: Since 1970, all but two teams have made the play-offs, and 15 have made the Super Bowl.

The players' union wants the 55 percent of gross divided according to a formula based primarily on years of service, with various bonuses for such achievements as selection to the Pro Bowl, and making the play-offs. It would narrow pay differentials, but would increase the rewards for team excellence. The owners say that any percentage-of-gross formula dilutes their ownership by compromising the privacy of their private property. They have a point. They would have more of one if their private enterprise were less permeated with public involvements.

Most stadia are built and maintained at public expense. Football is a labor-intensive industry and the job training is done at public institutions (e.g., Ohio State) and private institutions with tax and other public subsidies (e.g., Southern Cal). Most of the revenue for the revenue sharing comes from a publicly regulated oligopoly (the three networks). The fact that local governments give — and receive — much in cooperative relationships with NFL teams gives, alas, a patina of plausibility to the nutty action of the city of Oakland, which is waging a — thus far; stay tuned — losing fight to keep the Raiders from migrating 400 miles to Los Angeles.

Oakland fans bought 50,000 season tickets and provided 12 straight sellout seasons, making the Raiders perhaps the NFL's third-most-profitable franchise. But the owner decided to move for an entrepreneurial reason: L.A. is a more lucrative market. Furthermore, there is a political enticement: The Raiders have been given a, well, considerate arrangement with regard to the Colosseum, which, like the surrounding neighborhood, needs the business. The Colosseum needs the business because the city of Anaheim lured away the Rams.

California's Supreme Court has ruled that the city of Oakland can go to trial with its attempt at Bolshevik confiscation: the city seizing the Raiders through its power of eminent domain. And Congress, having made America all but perfect, is contemplating a finishing touch: legislation to return the Raiders to Oakland and strengthen restrictions on the right to move franchises. Isn't that the sort of public service the Constitutional Convention had in mind when allocating powers to the federal government?

Football always has been reflective of modern life — violence punctuated by committee meetings. Now it incorporates America's two principal pastimes — litigating and legislating. And — hark! what discord follows! — there may be a strike. Be brave, fans, and remember: God strengthens the back to the burden.

ART BUCHWALD

Just a bit of Irish leg-pulling!

"We're trying to get more tourists to come to Ireland," the man from the tourist office said. "We'd like to get Americans and we'd be much obliged if they would spend some dollars with us."

Art Buchwald

"What does Ireland have to offer?"

"That's a good question and I thank you for asking it. Ireland has closer ties with America than probably any nation in Europe. There are about 20 million people of Irish descent in the United States, and I think there's a bond between us that no other country can claim.

"We don't even think of Americans as tourists. To most Irishmen, they're 'visitors,' and since the average Irishman thinks the only one who makes any money on tourists are the hotelkeepers, they don't regard Americans as commercial targets. Therefore, as a visitor, they must give him courtesy. Since the American isn't treated like a tourist, he enjoys being one."

"Aren't the Irish great ones for pulling an American's leg?"

"That's a good question and I thank you for asking it. You see, there is a certain type of American who wants to know about leprechauns, fairies and the like, and who treats the Irish like the Little People.

"Now when that type arrives, the Irish feel it is only fair to pull the fellow's leg in all directions."

We received a small sample of the great Irish art of leg-pulling when a friend took us to a pub. We no sooner had our drinks when a man who introduced himself as Liam Boyd said, "You're Americans, aren't you?"

We said we were.

"Then you'd be interested in knowing that only a few yards from here lived the great Tammany Hall American politician, Boss Richard Croker."

"Did he?"

"Aye, he won the Derby with a horse named Orby. He was a multi-millionaire. They say he was married to a half-Indian woman named Beulah. When he died in 1916 he was buried standing up in between the front door of his house."

"That's not true," someone else said. "I heard it from Paddy MacKnight he was buried horizontal in the front door."

Another guest disagreed. "Sarah O'Toole was invited to the funeral and she said he was buried in a baking tin in the back yard."

Mr. Boyd said, "It was the front door and he was buried standing up. When the O'Neils moved in, Mrs. O'Neil couldn't stand the thought of Boss Croker standing in the door every time she went by. Finally they took the whole door off and buried it in the family cemetery."

"I've lived here 40 years," another man said, "and I know for a fact Boss Croker was buried down in the cellar, and he was buried horizontal."

The question of which direction Boss Croker was buried was kicked back and forth for an hour.

"You sure it wasn't Orby the horse that was buried in the front door?" the bartender asked. "Seems to me it was a pretty big door and Croker said he always wanted to have Orby buried standing up."

"No. Orby was buried in the cemetery lying down. There's a marker stating the fact."

"But the way I heard it, the O'Neils were very disturbed. Someone must have been buried in the door. There's no way of a man being buried in such a door horizontally. But he could have been buried diagonally."

The lads in the pub thought we were getting a little bored with Boss Croker, and they said, "Would you like to hear about leprechauns?"

We said no, we didn't plan on leaving the pub until we got to the bottom of Boss Croker's burial.

"I've got it on final authority," said the postman, "that Boss Croker was buried in America right in the center of the bar in Tammany Hall."

It was a great discussion and although they pulled our leg all evening, we didn't even need crutches when we finally decided to go home.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Aug. 26, the 238th day of 1982. There are 127 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 26, 1945, Japanese envoys boarded the U.S. battleship Missouri to receive surrender instructions at the end of World War II.

On this date:

In 55 B.C., Roman forces under Julius Caesar invaded Britain.

In 1316, artillery was reported used for first time in history, in the Battle of Crecy, in northern France.

In 1970, North Vietnam sent its chief negotiator back to the Vietnam peace talks in Paris after an eight-and-a-half-month boycott of the negotiations.

In 1980, Polish workers demanding independent trade unions threatened a nationwide general strike.

Committees weigh proposals to impose Islamic law in Egypt

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Parliamentary committees are weighing proposals to impose Islamic law in Egypt — a move that could dramatically transform the way of life in a nation that blends Eastern and Western cultures.

Plans to codify Islamic law — or the Sharia, the Prophet Mohammed's spoken and written word — were set in motion by the late President Anwar Sadat's support of constitutional amendments that made Islamic law "a" principal source of Egyptian law in 1972 and "the" principal source in 1980.

The movement has gained momentum since the Islamic revolution that overthrew the Shah of Iran, and from a universal upsurge of interest in Islamic teachings.

Islamic law already is the overwhelming component of the legal systems of Saudi Arabia and other Arabian Peninsula states, and it is being implemented in Iran and Pakistan.

Most of Egypt's modern law has been derived from European models. But Egypt's Moslem majority, about 90 percent of a population of 45 million, is deeply religious. The name of Allah (God) is emblazoned almost everywhere, and public prayer is commonplace.

"LAW IS A MIRROR OF society," said Sufi Abu Taleb, speaker of the People's Assembly and manager of the proposals in the unicameral parliament. "Islamic law is an expression of certain special characteristics of the people of Islamic nations for two reasons:

"First, as Moslems we demand judgment according to what God sent down and, secondly, because this law agrees with our nature and circumstances better than any other code — because God knows our interests best."

Abu Taleb has promised public hearings this year on several draft bills, just completed after four years of committee work. The proposals have not yet been made public.

Newspaper reports, however, have said the criminal code will include the traditional Islamic punishments of death for those who forsake Islam, public whipping for drinking alcoholic beverages, public whipping or death by stoning for adulterers, and cutting off the hands of thieves.

It is still unclear how the proposals will handle the sticky problem of the ban imposed by the Koran, the Moslem holy book, on interest and insurance.

ANOTHER PARLIAMENT MEMBER, Dr. Gamal Oteifi, a distinguished attorney and former Cabinet minister who heads a committee studying the bills, noted in an interview that the Sharia demanded strict rules of evidence to prove any of these crimes.

In the case of adultery, for example, four witnesses must swear they saw sexual penetration, he said. If the plaintiff fails to produce this, then he and the witnesses are liable to be whipped for defaming the defendant, he said.

"Practically speaking, the penalty for adultery can only be applied when there is a confession," he added. He said cases not resolved by Islamic law will be prosecuted under the prior law.

The draft bills guarantee the freedom of Egypt's Coptic Christian minority of about 6 million to practice their religion, and the testimony of Moslems and non-Moslems, and men and women, are given equal weight under the proposals, Oteifi said.

Still, the spector of Islamic law terrifies some Moslems and many Christians.

"OF COURSE I AM AGAINST this," said one Christian. "I don't believe in cutting off someone's hand if he is caught stealing, and there is no guarantee this will not be abused sometime in the future."

The moderate interpretation of the Koran put forward by Oteifi, however, is anathema to Islamic fundamentalists who want to see the law harshly enforced.

Some Western scholars fear an extremist backlash if the draft bills are not stringent enough.

Sleuths search for 'Nessie,' apemen

CHICAGO (AP) — Roy Mackal has wandered through steamy, uninhabited jungles searching for dinosaurs. And he's journeyed to distant waters looking for sea monsters. Now he and his fellow scientists are joining forces — hoping to rediscover forgotten worlds.

Mackal is among a unique group of scientific sleuths who hope to prove that sauropods, apemen and the "Loch Ness" monster still roam the planet.

These scientists belong to the recently formed International Society of Cryptozoology — an organization of about 300 members, formed to explore the science of unknown or unexpected animals.

The society — primarily for scientists — includes paleontologists, biologists and anthropologists from France, China, South Africa and the United States. They represent some of the biggest and best institutions of the science world — the Smithsonian, the Darwin Museum in Moscow, the Peking Natural History Museum and more.

And what thy have in common is a spirit of adventure and a fiery desire to probe reports of creatures believed to have vanished eons ago.

"We're interested in solving mysteries — regardless of the outcome," says Mackal, a University of Chicago biologist, society co-founder and a director of the Loch Ness monster investigations.

Many of these mysteries have been controversial for decades.

But, says J. Richard Greenwell, society secretary-treasurer, "People haven't been communicating with each other. There's been a gap between what's represented in the field and the scientific community. The society will bridge that gap."

That's not to say "all these animals exist," Greenwell says. "It should be investigated just like any other controversial topic."

Mackal and Greenwell do not see themselves as monster hunters,

"We know monsters don't exist," Greenwell says. "But the larger the animal is, the more resistance there is to its existence on the part of scientists. If an animal is two or three feet, they just shrug their shoulders...After 10 to 12 feet, people begin applying the label monster. But it's entirely in their minds."

Some of the creatures that intrigue them most were last known to have walked the earth millions of years ago. One may be the sauropod dinosaur — or mokelembembe, as this strange animal has been dubbed by villagers in the Congo. Mackal and Greenwell journeyed there in search of a reddish-brown creature that witnesses describe as being 30 feet tall, with a long neck, head, tail, heavy legs with claws and, sometimes a mane.

They did not see the animal — which fits the description of a dinosaur extinct for 60 million years — but did spot unusual footprints. "It was pretty damn exciting," Mackal says. Still, he says that's not proof.

"If this is a real animal, it could be a large lizard," Mackal says. "We always assume there is a simple, nonsensational explanation. We have to be pushed. We're not stuffed shirts. But we do keep our feet on the ground."

And so the society — which hopes to organize expeditions financd by contributions — will search for evidence and study photographs, sonar tracks, footprint casts and tissue and hair samples.

Still, the scientists know the chances of discovery are extremely remote.

Mackal says that his years of probing have not been without success.

Once, while on a boat during his Loch Ness probe, he said he spotted a large black animal that broke through the water. "It's skin was black with wrinkles. It was twisting left to right."

Mackal is convinced the animal was a primitive whale.

Such sightings are not the only incidents that are encouraging. After all, he says, the gorilla was accepted only in the 1850s and the pygmy hippopotamus in 1913. In 1976, the "megamouth," a new species, genus and family of the shark was found.

The society has several reports of "unexpected animals" it wants to investigate, including large octopi, spanning 150 feet and sea serpents that may represent primitive whales known as archaeocetes, believed to be extinct for 20 million years.

U.S. work force little changed since 1900s; Sexes still apart

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

One major aspect of the American work force remains scarcely changed over the years: the segregation of male and female workers.

So sexually segregated is the job market today, say two sociologists in a new study sponsored by the National Academy of Sciences, that 60 percent of all working women would have to be moved across occupational categories in order to equalize distribution of the sexes by job.

"This has changed very little since 1900," observes William T. Bielby of the University of California, Santa Barbara. He and James N. Baron of Stanford University are co-authors of "Woman's Place Is With Other Women: Sex Segregation in the Workplace."

Among the 11 largest establishments analyzed by Bielby and Baron, with work forces ranging in size from 825 to 7,825, they found the "segregation index" (how many women would have to change jobs to integrate all classifications) more typically nudging 100 percent — total segregation of workers by sex.

SMALLER COMPANIES TEND to distort the sample, Bielby said, because a few integrated job categories distributed among a relative handful of employees throw off the index. For example, a citrus grower with 30 employees, 14 of whom were females, had a segregation index of 12.5 percent, but all 14 women were pickers, along with 14 men, and the company's other two jobs were held by males.

"Sex segregation of the workplace is one of the most visible dimensions of social inequality," Bielby and Baron concluded. "In almost every work setting, it is unusual to see men and women working at the same job. When they do, they typically perform different tasks, with unequal levels of responsibility and authority.

"Even when job tasks are virtually identical, it is not uncommon to find men and women allocated to distinct job classifications within an organization."

Bielby and Baron analyzed job data collected by the Department of Labor's employment service and the Bureau of the Census between 1968 and 1979. The data were drawn from more than 400 businesses covering a wide range of size and type, although certain sectors were underrepresented, said Bielby, including construction and trucking (both mostly male), financial services and insurance (probably less segregated than most businesses) and retail sales (segregated by departments or kinds of objects sold).

IN MORE THAN HALF the companies studied, no women were found to share identical job assignments with men. None of the companies had both men and women working in every job task. The result, the study concluded, is that women are afforded fewer training opportunities, narrower advancement possibilities and lower salaries.

"Economic discrimination against women is not just unequal pay for equal work," Bielby said. "It's, rather, an issue of not having equal access." So pervasive is sexual segregation of the workplace, he added, that even women's rights groups seem largely unaware of the economic and professional handicap it places upon female workers.

The bulk of the employment data studied covers the years from 1968 to 1972, Bielby said. But information on "several dozen" companies, collected as recently as 1979, suggested that little has changed. "Things are almost certainly getting better than getting worse, but they're not that much better," he said.

"DEMOGRAPHIC TRENDS, technological change and bureaucratic imperatives do not inevitably produce more balanced sex ratios within jobs or firms," Bielby and Baron found. "The sorry state of affairs we see today is not going to change without deliberate efforts to bring females into 'non-traditional' lines of work.

"Doing nothing almost certainly guarantees persistent sex segregation in all areas of economic activity," the sociologists concluded.

NOW organizes 'PAC-Woman' to raise money

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Organization for Women kicks off a nationwide series of "PAC-Woman" walkathons this week to raise campaign money for candidates who support women's rights.

NOW hopes that the walkathons will raise $1 million for contributions to congressional, state and local candidates in this fall's elections, according to NOW President Eleanor Smeal.

"Women, upset by the defeat (of the Equal Rights Amendment) and angered by the Reagan administration's assault on women's rights, are turning to the political arena — as a voting bloc and as candidates," Ms. Smeal said in a statement issued Wednesday.

The ERA died last June 30 because too few states ratified the proposed constitutional amendment by the deadline.

The kickoff events are keyed to the observance today of "Women's Equality Day," the 62nd anniversary of the ratification of the 19th Amendment, which extended the right to vote to women.

NOW and its political action committee — or PAC — are sponsoring 65 PAC-Woman walkathons around the country, which they hope will draw thousands of participants. Campaign funds will be raised by the participants' finding sponsors who pledge a certain contribution for each mile walked.

The walkathons are part of NOW's campaign effort this year, for which the organization would like to raise $2 million to $3 million.

At least 30 of the walkathons will be held this weekend, a NOW statement said. The largest events, with more than 1,000 walkers each, are planned in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Washington.

The PAC-Woman nickname is a take-off on the popular Pac-Man video game.

"The Reagan administration has launched a frontal attack on women's rights. To stop it, we must stop the New Right's advance in Congress," said Ms. Smeal in a statement issued Wednesday. "Our first line of defense against Reagan and his reactionary New Right is the House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate."

In addition, NOW has made defeating state legislators who helped send the ERA down to defeat one of its key goals. To that end, the walkathons will help raise money for state and local candidates, a first for NOW-PAC.

"Women occupy just 12 percent of the seats in state legislatures. We will invest hundreds of thousands of dollars and volunteer hours into electing to the state legislatures women and men who support women's rights," Ms. Smeal said in a fund-raising letter to NOW members.

Mitchell County has centennial celebration

COLORADO CITY — Mitchell County will observe the start of its second century of existence Saturday with appearances by several statewide political candidates, hot air balloon rides, innertube races down Lone Wolf Creek, a children's fishing contest, beauty pageant, and variety of food booths.

Speakers will include Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby; Texas Rangers owner Eddie Chiles, representing Gov. Bill Clements; George Strake Jr., Republican candidate for lieutenant governor; Bill Meier, Republican candidate for attorney general; Allen Clark, Republian candidate for state treasurer; Don Dorsey of San Angelo, Republican candidate for state representative; and Dick Burnett of San Angelo, incumbent state representative and Democrat.

The Miss Mitchell County Contest will be held Friday night in the Colorado High School Auditorium, with 26 Mitchell County girls ages 13-18 competing. Music will be furnished by Jay Boy Adams of Lubbock.

Saturday's events in Ruddick Park are expected to attract up to 4,000 persons. Hot air balloon rides begin at 7 a.m., with various other activities set throughout the day. The political speeches at 4 p.m. will wrap up the celebration.

Volcano possible at Sierra resort

MAMMOTH LAKES, Calif. (AP) — Scientists say a tongue of molten rock may be moving up beneath this high Sierra ski resort and residents must be prepared if a volcanic explosion blocks the only road out and white-hot cinders rain down over the scenic valley.

"Mammoth Lakes is literally surrounded by volcanoes and they have been active in the past few hundred years," Dan Miller of the U.S. Geological Survey said Wednesday. "I think we can expect future eruptions in this area — whether they will occur in our lifetimes, we can't say."

Miller, chief of the volcanic hazards project for the area, and other geologists addressed a conference at Mammoth High School. They said they don't know if an eruption will occur and certainly aren't forecasting one, but the threat nevertheless is there.

The Geological Survey in May issued a formal notice of potential hazard here. The "statement of concern," the lowest of three warning levels, means essentially that scientists aren't sure what's going on, but they're paying very close attention.

Scientists cited such things as more earthquakes, especially swarms of small ones that move progressively nearer the surface, the appearance of at least one significant steam vent in the mountains and a vast bulge that has raised much of the area about 10 inches.

Those changes, they said, suggest volcanic stirrings, although no one knows where it's heading.

Roy Bailey, coordinator of the hazards program, said the evidence suggests that a slab of molten rock is moving up.

"It is very possible it will stop, cool and crystallize without causing us any further concern," he said.

"But it could reach the surface" in an explosive eruption, he added.

Mammoth Lakes is on the inland slope of the Sierra Nevada, east of Yosemite National Park.

Several speakers noted that only one winding road leads out and an eruption could block it. The area has 4,000 permanent residents and five times that number on skiing weekends.

The area of greatest concern is a point about two miles east of Mammoth Lakes where three earthquake faults meet and where many of the quake swarms are centered. Close behind is a region called the Inyo Craters, fields of craters left by previous eruptions, a few miles north of the village.

Miller said a network of instruments recently scattered over the area should provide plenty of warning if an eruption is imminent although that can't be guaranteed.

If everything works as planned, he said, by the time an eruption occurs "we should have already moved everybody to safe locations."

The worst case, considered highly unlikely, would be a repeat of a massive eruption 700,000 years ago. Such an eruption would spread cinders over most of the West and could rain four inches of ash on cities as far away as Salt Lake City.

Judge says doctors can decide on abortion

WEST CHESTER, Pa. (AP) — A judge ruled the doctors of a comatose woman should be allowed to decide whether to perform an abortion on her, even though her life is not immediately threatened by the pregnancy.

Chester County Judge Lawrence E. Wood ruled unconstitutional the part of Pennsylvania's abortion law that barred doctors from performing an abortion on Patti Ann Wunsch, 23.

Miss Wunsch, of Downingtown, was in a coma at Chester County Hospital after suffering severe head injuries in a car accident on June 24.

Her mother, Dorothy Pettit, filed suit Aug. 19, seeking a court order to allow doctors to perform an abortion on her daughter, who doctors say is about nine to 11 weeks pregnant. Mrs. Pettit said she feared the pregnancy could harm her daughter's health.

Under existing statutes, a woman must give "informed consent" before an abortion is performed unless the pregnancy is deemed life-threatening.

But in his 11-page decision, Wood ruled a physician may "do what he or she thinks is necessary for the health of the patient.

"We declare that the guardian is authorized to consent to surgical procedures upon the incompetent (Miss Wunsch) but that decision whether to perform those procedures is left to the judgement of the attending physicians," the ruling said.

Wood said Wednesday night he based his ruling on a U.S. Supreme Court decision.

"There was a Supreme Court case in 1973 that construed a similar law unconstitutional," Wood said. "They said if the physicians think it's necessary, they can go ahead."

Kevin Holleran, legal counsel for the hospital, said Wood's ruling provided "some clarification" on the abortion question. He said he didn't know when Miss Wunsch's physicians would decide whether an abortion was warranted.

Mrs. Pettit's attorney, C. Barry Buckley, said he was pleased with Wood's ruling.

Four policemen indicted for murder of civilian

BOSTON (AP) — Four police officers have been indicted for murder and four are charged with lesser crimes in a bloody motel brawl with civilians that left one man dead and eroded public confidence in police in two blue-collar towns.

Three civilians were indicted and arraigned Wednesday on charges of assault in the fight. Witnesses to the fight said police raided a soldier's homecoming party to even the score for a barroom fight.

The grand jury returned 90 indictments against 14 people, according to the office of Suffolk County District Attorney Newman Flanagan.

The other three people indicted have not been identified.

There may be further arraignments today, said David Rodman, a spokesman for the district attorney's office.

Eight civilians and four police officers were hurt in the fight July 23 at King Arthur's Motel and Lounge, in Chelsea's produce district near the Everett line.

Joseph Bordonaro, 54, an Everett resident, received a head injury and died several days later.

Everett and Chelsea are neighboring working-class towns north of Boston. The four officers charged with murder were members of the Everett force. The other four officers were from Chelsea.

All 11 arraigned in Suffolk Superior Court on Wednesday pleaded innocent before Judge Paul Connolly.

Each of the four Everett officers also was charged with various counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. Charges against some of them included assault with intent to murder and civil rights violations.

One Chelsea policeman was charged with seven counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and seven of violating civil rights. All four Chelsea officers were charged with filing false reports and conspiring to file false reports.

The three civilians were charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

Flanagan did not comment on details of the cases, but, in a statement, referred to the brawl as an isolated incident and said he hoped it would not undermine public confidence in police.

The four Everett officers indicted were John McLeod, William McClusky, John Macauda and Richard Aiello. Bail for each was set at $10,000.

The Chelsea officers charged were Anthony Iantosca, Richard Voto, John F. Quinn Jr. and Michael F. Nadworny.

Nadworny also was indicted on the assault and battery and civil rights charges. His bail was set at $1,000, while bail for the others was $100.

The civilians were Charles Cella of Somerville, Anthony Dimino of Chelsea and Alfred Mattuchio of Everett. Bail for each was $100.

Everett's population is 38,000; Chelsea has 27,000 residents.

Jury convicts Amarillo man

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — U.S. Attorney William Lutz says a federal jury here has convicted an Amarillo, Texas, man for distribution of cocaine.

Lutz said Gary Don Mitchell, 24, was convicted Wednesday of possession with intent to distribute, distribution of a kilogram of cocaine and interstate travel in aid of racketeering.

Lutz, who was one of the prosecutors of the case, said the cocaine was 100 percent pure.

Mitchell went on trial before Chief U.S. District Judge Howard Bratton on Monday, the same day that two other men named with Mitchell in an indictment last May pleaded to charges.

William James Hardman, 35, of Amarillo, pleaded guilty to a charge of interstate travel in aid of racketeering. The charge carries a maximum sentence of five years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

William Michael Harmon, 35, of Santa Fe, pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy to distribute cocaine. That charge carries a maximum penalty of 15 years in prison and a $20,000 fine.

Weight loss takes load off her life

By MARLENE AIG
AP Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Barbara Zara remembers "being depressed all the time. My life was all doom and gloom, just waiting for the next disaster. I enjoyed it. I had to, to keep doing it for so long."

She weighed more than 200 pounds, was in a dead-end job and felt she was living a dead-end life. Then, as her first marriage fell apart, she decided to change and take control of her life.

Now the 50-year-old, attractive — and slim — Plantation, Fla, woman is "very happy" and running a successful weight-loss program that concentrates not on what you eat, but what you are.

THE FORMER PEANUT BUTTER QUEEN of Succasunna, N.J., details her program in a poignantly funny book, "I Left My Fat Behind."

"If I didn't try to make it funny," she says, "it would have been depressing and painful. I would have had to call it, 'The Tragedy of Being Fat.'"

What 35 years of being fat taught B. Z., as she is known, is that "People choose to be fat, for whatever reasons. There's no fat fairy that comes in the middle of the night and covers you with layers of lard."

PREACHING THE PRECEPTS of Attitude, Choice and Control, she advocates a mental approach to weight loss, trying to determine why people overeat before dealing with the actual diet. "Handing people a menu," she says, "isn't going to work."

B.Z. knows. "I kept thinking the fat was what was making me unhappy. And the greatest ally of depression is immobility. I felt if I ate enough and ate it fast enough, I'd be happy. But then there was a new problem. Fat."

She was one of those people, she says, who always answered "Hi. How are you?" with "Miserable."

"I never thought," she recalls, "that I was doing this to myself."

But somehow, she realized it and took total control of her life, decided to like herself and went on to lose almost 100 pounds.

She also realized that conventional weight loss programs emphasize the physical aspect of losing weight.

"There's a total mental thing. Being thin isn't a miracle. People think if they lose weight, their lives will change. But it's just a start." Being fat, she says, "is a way of hiding." Once someone loses weight, they have to change what made them seek solace in food in the first place, she says.

HER PROGRAM ENCOURAGES people "to like themselves, whatever they are and whoever they are. You have to say you are worthwhile and improve your self-image and self-esteem."

"We allow other people to tell us what we want," she says. "We have to decide what we want and go about doing it. We have to channel our energies into something positive."

B.Z. KNOWS ALL THE TRICKS of being fat and insisting you're trying to lose weight. She knows all the excuses for buying and eating the wrong foods, for evoking sympathy from friends while on a diet, for turning diets into regimes of pain and anguish. Sneaking cookies in before bed, creating elaborate meals to nibble during preparation, making up mythical people to feed (preferably children), rewarding yourself for being "good" one day of a diet.

"The root of the problem is not food," she maintains. "It is not the hand that reaches for the food, it is the brain that tells the hand to reach."

Happily married for 18 years with a 16-year-old daughter, B. Z. says, "I think I was always a latent happy person. I stymied it."

A lot of people do, she says, "thinking they're the dumbest, least talented person, stupidest one around. We're always trying to be the best, seeking to be someone else."

IT ALL CAME HOME to her when she made an appearance recently in her New Jersey hometown.

A friend she had idolized in high school appeared. "She was a cheerleader. Popular. Pretty. Married to a terrific guy. And I was 190 pounds, adoring her. She came up to me and we talked. The terrific guy turned into an alcoholic. She was unhappy. And she said to me that she had always admired me because I could deal with everything.

"Imagine, I wanted so desperately to look like her on the outside. And she wanted to be me on the inside. I spent four years of high school wanting to be someone who wanted to be me."

Care of skin requires proper type cleansing

By LAURIE EDMONDS
Copley News Service

Going back to school means seeing old friends and making new ones. Both boys and girls are eager to look their best, with clear, smooth skin and a bright complexion. Yet, many teen-agers have some kind of skin trouble.

"It's very common for most young people to have skin problems," says Alice Nichols, vice president of training for Merle Norman Cosmetics. "At this age their glands become very active and their skin secretes more oils than ever before. All this excess oil can cause annoying problems, and that's why it's so important for teens to develop a good skin-care program."

GENERALLY, AN OILY SKIN requires more cleansing than a dry skin because the sebaceous (oil) glands secrete more oil than the pore can eliminate. The pore then gets backed up and clogged with oil and other waste matter and expands.

If the opening to this clogged pore is covered with skin it becomes a whitehead; if it is not covered it is a blackhead. In either case, the pore looks enlarged because it is stretched with oil and cellular debris. If something isn't done it erupts and becomes a pimple or worse.

Nichols recommends that people with oily skin deep-cleanse their skin to lift impurities from the pores and help the pore return to a normal size. This also helps remove dead skin cells on the surface that can give a dull look to the complexion.

BOYS, TOO, SHOULD USE a deep cleanser, especially if they work around cars, where dirt and grease can get into their skin.

"Water-based products are best for oily skin," she says. "I always recommend a water-based cleanser which contains some oils, over soap and water because the oil in the cleanser helps dissolve the oil, dirt and makeup on the skin, and gives a more thorough surface cleansing."

After cleansing, follow up with a skin freshener or astringent to remove excess traces of cleanser and flaky skin. Astringents are especially good for those who like the "squeaky clean" feeling provided by soap and water, she adds.

The final step is a very light water-based moisturizer. While many people with oily skin tend to shy away from these products, Nichols says that Merle Norman beauty advisers always point out the difference between moisture and oil. "The natural oil in the skin will keep it soft, and help hold moisture, but the additional moisture plumps it out so the skin tone is good and the skin looks smooth."

FOR YOUNG WOMEN who prefer not to wear makeup, use at least a moisturizer to protect the skin from pollutants. It would be better to use a water-based foundation containing a sunscreen, such as PABA, to protect the skin from sun exposure that could lead to marked deterioration 15 to 20 years later. "Foundation acts as a shield against pollutants and helps protect the skin," she says. "A lot of people think makeup clogs the pores, but pores get clogged from the inside, not the outside."

For cheek color, she suggests a powder, rather than a cream blusher, applied after a light dusting of translucent powder which will keep the blusher from "grabbing" on an oily skin. Oil-blotting gels are also available to absorb excess oil as the day goes on.

Nichols offers some additional tips:

- Don't squeeze pimples. They can burst under the skin and cause infections. For the same reason, don't pierce or puncture pimples, either.
- Don't use a friend's makeup. Use your own applicators, keep them clean, and don't lend them to anyone else.
- Keep your hands as clean as possible and try not to touch your face too much.
- Keep your hair clean. Oily hair and scalp can affect your skin.

Author of bestseller lived tragic life

By JOE MAHONEY
Hearst Feature Service

BURLINGTON, Vt. — Marcia Metalious Duprey remembers her mother in jeans and a flannel shirt as she moved about their house in Gilmanton, N.H. There would be something soft on the radio — no soap operas, television or telephone in the house to distract her mother from her writing.

Grace Metalious had no interest in outside distractions in the early 1950s, for being played out around her in public places, barrooms and bedrooms was a real-life soap opera far more riveting.

METALIOUS BLENDED her imagination with made-up names and wrote about happenings in the hamlet of Gilmanton and all the other small New England towns she had lived in. Nine months after she began in 1955, she had a book. She called her work "The Tree and the Blossom." An advertising man named Aaron Sussman later suggested "Peyton Place."

A tale of murder, incest, lust, adultery and greed — and an indictment of convention — "Peyton Place" would sell 10 million copies, making it the most popular novel of the century when it was published in 1956.

THE REACTION TO THE BOOK was almost instantaneous. It was reviled by the holier-than-thou crowd. It was castigated from pulpits. Librarians who ordered the book were besieged with complaints. But attempts at censorship only seemed to fuel the book's success and keep it high on the New York Times best seller list, where it remained for 52 weeks. And newspaper tabloids had a field day with the story of the housewife who wrote a racy book about sex and rebellion against boredom and the double standard.

Marsha and her brother and sister watched as their parents' marriage disintegrated and as near-strangers mooched off their mother, who tried to elude the pressures mounting on her by turning to alcohol. The 31-year-old woman who grew up as a poor French-Canadian named Grace Marie Antoinette Jeanne d'Arc Repentigy had become as much of a cult figure as James Dean, the rebel without a cause who had died a year earlier in a car crash. Metalious was in her own fast lane and there was no turning back.

FOR MARSHA, mother's success meant she could travel out of dull New Hampshire and meet such idols as Elvis Presley, Pat Boone and Lillian Roth. "I stayed out of school half a year, went to New York and raised hell at the Plaza Hotel," she fondly remembers.

"Peyton Place" spawned a hit movie in 1957 and seven years later inspired the prime-time television soap opera that launched the acting careers of Mia Farrow and Ryan O'Neal. But Metalious kept drinking and got deeper in debt. She divorced George in 1958, triggering more headlines about herself and her book. Three days later, she married a Laconia, N.H., disc jockey, T.J. Martin. Fed up with her mother's antics, Marsha, then 14, quit school and moved in with her father.

METALIOUS DUMPED MARTIN in 1960 and reconciled with her first husband for a short while. More affairs followed, as did three more novels — a quickie sequel called "Return to Peyton Place," "The Tight White Collar" and "No Adam in Eden."

On Feb. 24, 1964, Marsha, 19, and with a child of her own, was upstairs in her home when her sister Cindy sprinted upstairs and announced, "I just heard on TV that Ma's dead." The cause of death, doctors at Beth Israel Hospital in Boston determined, was cirrhosis of the liver and internal hemorrhaging.

BECAUSE "PEYTON PLACE" dealt with abortion, rape, wife beating, child abuse and alienation in a small town, and because Metalious loathed housework and dedicated herself to her art, some have advanced the notion that Metalious, deep down, was a feminist — a woman rebelling against patriarchal society.

But Marsha remembers differently — it was her father who did most of the housework and cooking after coming home from his teaching job. "The feminist thing was never brought up until last year, and I don't agree at all. A feminist is a person who can stand on her own; I don't think my mother could do that. My mother was an intelligent woman, but at the same time she considered herself stupid because she had not gone to college. She really needed people to love her. She trusted any weirdo off the street."

ON LEARNING that Marsha is the daughter of the woman who wrote "Peyton Place," some people figure that she owns a third of Vermont and a few condos in Florida. This aggravates Marsha, who, like her brother, sister and father, didn't get a dime. Now a secretary at the University of Vermont, she said, "Believe me, if I had money, I would not be working at the college — I'd be going to college full-time."

Marsha is a part-time student now, having enrolled in college for the first time when she was 35. Her sister, Cindy, is a secretary in Rutland, Vt., her brother Mike is a prison guard in Concord, N.H., and her father is an education administrator in Rutland.

When she looked into acquiring the literary rights to her mother's books, Marsha said she learned they had been sold to Simon and Schuster in 1967 for $25,000. When she later asked the publishing company about the rights to "Peyton Place," "They told me to drop dead." The publisher put out a special $5.95 paperback edition of the novel last year to mark the silver anniversary.

JUST HOURS BEFORE SHE DIED, Metalious changed her will to leave everything to an English journalist named John Reese, who was her last lover. After the Metalious family contested the will, Reese renounced the inheritance. But the estate, appraised at $220,000, went to the Internal Revenue Service and other creditors.

Woman raises baby gorilla

By ANNE BEATON
Hearst Feature Service

BOSTON — Quito was like any other baby in many ways, says Mary Ruddy. He had to be cuddled, burped, diapered and generally fussed over during his first 12 months of life.

But in other ways, Quito was indeed different. Instead of crawling at six months, he swung from the mantelpiece. When he got into mischief, the damage usually was a broken lamp or chair instead of a shattered figurine knocked off the coffee table. And when he wanted something, he screeched — which is normal, of course, for a baby gorilla.

"It really was like bringing up a child," says Ruddy, who raised Quito in her Needham, Mass., home after his mother, Gigi, of the Stoneham zoo, rejected him at birth. "But he got into lots more trouble."

Ruddy found herself in the dubious role of mother to a gorilla after Gigi and her mate, Sam, both raised in captivity, did not have the parenting skills apes normally pick up in their natural jungle habitat. They had no idea what to do when their first-born, Quito, arrived last June 1.

Much like human infants, tiny gorillas need love and care 24 hours a day, and a human surrogate mother had to be found. Sixty-two-year-old Ruddy, a widow who has worked at the zoo for five years and raised two children of her own, was asked if she would do the job.

Only 12 hours old and weighing six and a half pounds, Quito, a bundle of soft, brown and black curly hair, arrived at the Ruddy household. When he left last month for his permanent home in the zoo, he was a year old and weighed 26 pounds.

In the beginning, Ruddy recalls, Quito spent most of his time napping in his crib, eating baby food and human baby milk formula and playing peacefully with miniature trucks, balls and stuffed animals donated by people at the zoo.

Once a day, Ruddy walked him in his stroller. In winter, she bundled him up in a snowsuit, because baby gorillas are susceptible to disease and the cold.

But as he grew older, like all babies, Quito got into trouble. Ruddy ticks off a litany of misdeeds: "He pulled the cats' tails (Ruddy has four cats and a dog), opened the refrigerator and helped himself to grapes (his favorite), climbed up the bookcases and pulled out the books, upset the trash, played with the gadgets on the TV, pulled out the plugs, knocked over the lamps."

THE ART OF LIVING

Aunt Marg's wind chimes — Simple joys of life

By JEAN BELL MOSLEY
(Special from Reader's Digest)

Aunt Marg lived at the foot of Buzzard's Roost Mountain in Mill Creek, Missouri, in an ancient house wreathed by dense quince bushes and bracketed by cedars.

During summer, Mama allowed my sisters and me, one at a time, to go stay a week at Mill Creek. The visit was to help Aunt Marg out some, for, as everyone agreed, she had a lot to do. Yet the phrase "to help her out some" was said as if there might be more to it.

When, at age 9, I came down the rickety, narrow stairway on the morning of my first visit, Aunt Marg greeted me with, "Oh, I've got the busiest day today!"

"What do you have to do?" I asked shyly, for Aunt Marg was new to me and I didn't know what to expect. She was tall and bony, her face a network of fine creases.

"I've got to take the wind chimes to the top of Buzzard's Roost," she told me.

"I'll help," I said, wondering what wind chimes were and why they had to be taken up Buzzard's Roost.

I THOUGHT WE'D GET STARTED right after breakfast, but first there was the cow to be milked. Then there were the chickens to feed — silver-laced Wyandottes. "Not the best layers," Aunt Marg said, "but see here." She picked up a gray feather from the chicken yard and pointed out the silver scalloped lining. "Now that's something," she said.

Finally, in midafternoon, she went upstairs and came back with a box tied with twine. It rattled like broken glass.

Even then we didn't go straight up the mountain but zig-zaggy, as Aunt Marg kept stopping along the way to check now a lamb and again a creek rippling like a silver ribbon. "Look," she said once, pointing a finger, "wild roses.

ON, UP AND UP WE WENT until we reached the tip-top of Buzzard's Roost. "Just wonderful!" Aunt Marg breathed deeply. She waved her hands in a circle to indicate the whole visible world. Then she sat down, untied the package and took out the wind chimes.

"I made 'em myself," she said, rather proudly. There were little circular bands of hickory, looking very much like embroidery hoops. From them, dangling on different lengths of string, were glued-on pieces of broken glass. Even as she took them from the box and began to sort them out, I could hear the fairy-like music they made as they brushed against one another. Then Aunt Marg attached the wind chimes to the branch of a pine tree.

CAPRICIOUS BREEZES gently teased the pine and spun a spell of magic. The thin, clear music of the chimes began to reach something inside of me that had not been touched before. After a while it utterly possessed me, calling up a merry bubbling so strong and compelling that I seemed to be dangling from some unseen string myself — light, helpless with happiness, yet in the firm grasp of some sustaining power.

Soon some sheep came up the mountain, maybe called by the wind chimes, to lie by us. The lamb was close to me. I put out my hand, and it jumped up and leaped over clumps of mullen, twisting in mid-air and coming down stiff-legged as if putting into action all the enchantment of the mountaintop. Mentally, I named the lamb "Wind Chimes," sensing that all things should leap for joy. Indeed, the whole world seemed mine alone.

Aunt Marg carefully took down the chimes, put them into the box and we started down the mountain.

When I returned home, my sisters asked if I'd "been helpful," and I nodded silently, unable then to put into words what the visit had meant.

BUT I KNOW NOW that Aunt Marg held up before us, in her own uncomplicated way, the uncommonness of the common. She taught us always to keep something to look forward to, to let it "embroider" our thoughts as we go about the business of living.

She'll make the grade in this tailored gray chambray tuxedo-style dress, accented with dotted burgundy bow tie and coordinating belt. In an easy-care, machine washable blend. Available in sizes 7-14. By Miss Nannette.

Comfort, style best for schoolwear

By PATRICIA DIPETTE
Copley News Service

As you try to coax your child into that "perfect" new outfit, the sound of school bells is drowned out by cries of, "I don't want to wear that. I don't like it!"

This fall the number of children heading back to school is estimated between 40 million and 50 million, and for some parents outfitting their kids for school can be a harrowing experience. But it doesn't have to be. Understanding a child's needs can save parents time, money and aggravation.

ACCORDING TO GERRY PIZZI, an early childhood educator, age is a key factor for parents to consider when selecting a back-to-school wardrobe for their children.

"Comfort is most important to preschoolers and children in the first few years of elementary school," notes Pizzi. "They are very active. A typical day may involve skipping, running, jumping, playing tag or hide-and-go-seek, painting and coloring, as well as reading, writing and arithmetic. They don't want restrictive clothing to interfere with their fun," she adds.

Betty Adcock, vice president of design for Nannette, a leading manufacturer of children's wear, agrees that "clothing should be comfortable as well as attractive." She suggests that mothers look for design features such as elasticized waists and adjustable shoulder ties or straps to allow a child freedom of movement.

"Bright colors and bold appliques in familiar shapes are perennial favorites with youngsters," says Adcock. "And don't overlook button- or snap-front closures to make it easier for a child to dress him or herself."

AS CHILDREN GET OLDER, peer pressure influences what they will and will not wear.

"The desire to conform is of utmost importance," says Pizzi. "Girls especially become concerned with their appearance."

According to Adcock, girls have indeed become very fashion conscious: "A few years ago jeans and a T-shirt were commonplace, today the emphasis is on dressing up," she notes.

This fall even conformists won't have to sacrifice their individuality and personal style because there are many different fashion trends to choose from.

Romantic country styling features tiny florals sweetened with ruffles and lace, peek-a-boo petticoats and charming balloon sleeves. Country moves westward to the prairie with cavalry bodices, tooled leather belts and rawhide ties, and to the Southwest with the Santa Fe look, enhanced by ruffles and Navajo-inspired conchas.

For those who love the great outdoors, there are styles in rugged fabrics such as corduroy and blanket-plaid flannel. Tuxedo shirts, wing-tip collars and bow ties are "borrowed from menswear" in classical styling.

TO ENSURE that you and your children will be happy with their new back-to-school clothes, take them shopping with you. This may not be the most pleasurable experience, but in the long run it will be worth the trouble. Buying them clothes they don't like and refuse to wear can be very expensive.

Let them have a voice in the selection of their new clothes. Use the technique of preselection, that is, "Would you rather have this blue dress or that red one?"

Have them try the clothes on to check that they fit properly and comfortably. Make sure armholes and waistbands are non-restrictive. Look for generous hems because kids grow by leaps and bounds.

Summer camping: Memories that can warm your winters

By ROLLA WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Think back on camping and, chances are, you'll conjure up warm, pleasant memories.

You won't remember burnt beans or watery eggs or vile coffee, which are as one with the camping experience, usually.

Instead you'll recall jumping golden trout at Wedge Lake, and a mischievous marten that stole the breakfast rainbows one night at Shadow Creek. No matter. In 30 minutes three of us replenished the merchandise — the trout were ravenous when offered red worms.

THERE WAS THE WET NIGHT at Quaking Aspen campground near Gallup, N.M., when you awakened in the cozy comfort of your cartop camper and peeked out the canvas at a neighbor, who'd moved in during a nighttime storm. He and his kids were perched like drenched sparrows on a wooden railing alongside the blacktop road.

Bet that family's memories never touch on sitting up in the rain, but rather are filled with the smell of burning pine, of marshmallows on a stick, and the jays and squirrels that came visiting.

It's more fun to remember the time your daughter, small then, first battled the current of a river, the one running through Zion National Park. And it's best to forget the mosquitoes that attacked in swarms at the same campground.

WHO REMEMBERS the loneliness of camping on a high bluff above the Missouri River in Mobridge, S.D.? Instead, the mind returns to the splendid facilities of this Bureau of Reclamation campsite, the modest fee to plug into electricity and water, and the marvelous statue of Sitting Bull surveying the sweep of the river moving through his domain.

The lilt of an enchanted guitar drifts on the summer air at Twin Bridges, Okla., a sweet accompaniment to the crackle of the wood in our campfire. There was the time in West Virginia when we turned off the highway one foggy night at the campground sign. Never found the camp, but we set up adequately in the parking lot of a church. Had to break camp early, though, for it was Sunday morning and the congregation was gathering.

ONCE, IN THE MARBLE MOUNTAINS, a porcupine tried to make a meal on our camp stores, and he left some sharp quill reminders of his visit. But we remember first the beauty of the campsite — a flat, grassy space at the edge of a trout-filled lake with the smell of pines in the air and a ranger who tried to convince us that we could survive forever in the woods by chewing moss off a tree. We preferred onion soup, ham chedderton and cowboy coffee — with an aperitif of vodka and Tang.

Down on the Natchez Trace we slept comfortably, the air conditioner of the motor home plugged in and working silently. And we dreamed about our kinship with Jim Bowie and Andy Jackson and how we were walking in their footsteps when we moved along the trails.

ALL OF THIS is an open invitation for people to go camping, particularly if they haven't tried it before.

Soldiers, back from the wars, resist the experience. They remember all too vividly the bug bites, the sharp sticks and stones of a bivouac bed, and the eating of stone-cold food from a mess kit.

Hey, fellows, it's not like that anymore. Tents have sewed-in flooring and are insect-proof. You sleep comfortably on cots or foam mats. And the most exotic of foods comes freeze-dried, virtually pre-prepared in envelopes requiring only a measured bit of water and applied heat from a propane stove that lights at the flick of a match.

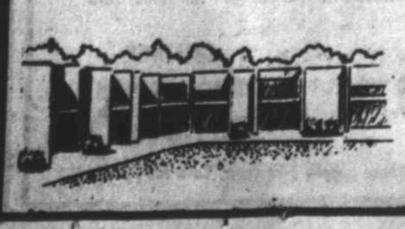

CAN 16 MILLION or 20 million or 30 million campers — nobody is quite certain how many — be wrong? Not likely. There are enough of them now that one looks to the most distant campsite or midweek camping for the measure of solitude most campers crave.

Support group helps incest survivors

By JO TUBB
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — For Emily, the memories were triggered one night eight years ago when she was 47. She was floating on the edge of sleep as her husband approached their bed, his towering frame silhouetted by the light behind him.

Suddenly, the sight of the familiar figure sent Emily into a panic. She screamed. The usually calm woman became so inexplicably hysterical that the incident haunted her for weeks.

It wasn't until a few months later that she understood what it all meant. In the midst of a therapy session aimed at unraveling the mystery, a picture flashed first in her head, then in her gut: It was 1932 and she was 5 years old. A man was approaching her bed. He was attempting to rape her.

The man was her father.

FOR PATRICK, a handsome, 25-year-old with dark hair and beard, the memories began to surface only recently. Through hypnosis, he had sought the source of his violent anger and the reason for a 12-year blank in his life. He couldn't remember anything about the years between ages 3 and 15.

When he finally did remember, he was horrified: He recalled himself as a toddler being led down a staircase by an older man, a doctor. They entered the room where the doctor practiced surgery. The doctor tied Patrick to his operating table and swung a pair of blinding lights over him. Then he began mixing sex with surgery.

The doctor was Patrick's grandfather.

EMILY AND PATRICK are typical of hundreds of thousands — probably millions — of adults who, as children, were traumatized by incest, an act so insidious and so unspeakable that it often causes victims to block out entire periods of their lives.

But Emily and Patrick don't consider themselves just victims; they consider themselves survivors. And today they are working with other survivors to understand and overcome the effects of the private hells they have endured.

Two years ago, Emily started Incest Survivors Anonymous (ISA) a self-help group that works much like Alcoholics Anonymous. Since then, more than 300 survivors have gathered in North Long Beach, near here, to talk about their ordeals — often for the first time — and to draw strength and encouragement from one another.

For most of them, ISA has provided the first instance of acceptance, not only of themselves but of their repugnant, sometimes bizarre, stories.

"The first two therapists I told didn't believe me," says Patrick. The three other survivors with him nod knowingly.

INDEED, TO THE LISTENER armed with all the proper sensibilities, their stories are made of stuff too bad to be true. But as they tell them — sometimes haltingly, sometimes with a sigh of relief — it becomes clear that they are not based on fantasy. Their base is common tragedy.

Elaine, 57, talks about having had two pregnancies — from which resulted an abortion and a child. The father was her own father.

"I almost died from the abortion at the age of 12," she says. "It was done in a woodshed with a midwife. That was 1937, and we didn't have penicillin back then."

Her parents told her that the healthy baby she delivered had died.

JENNIFER, 34, REMEMBERS her father fondling her when she was 5. By the time she was 7, he'd introduced her to oral sex and attempted anal intercourse. That was the year she began thinking about suicide.

When she was 9, her father raped her so violently that she thought she'd never stop bleeding.

There are stories, too, about telephone wires and knitting needles and sundry other articles used to torture tiny bodies. And there are the stories that can't be told yet because the memories haven't yet surfaced.

"The remembering is something that doesn't happen all at once; it comes in pieces," Emily says. "Sometimes it comes with a pain or a physical problem and you discover the problem is related to abuse that happened when you were a child."

IT IS VITAL THAT SURVIVORS remember the abuse, she stresses, because that is the only way they can deal with it and with its devastating results.

Some of the results are physical. Emily's leg and hip are permanently damaged from her father's early abuse and Patrick suffered two damaged discs by the time he was 4.

A great deal more of the damage, however, is emotional. Following incest, buried as it is, healthy sexual relationships are a long shot. Personal relationships of any kind are difficult. Trust is virtually unknown. Addiction to alcohol and drugs is widespread and fear is universal.

"Everything I did in my life was based on fear," says Patrick, who ran away from home when he was 17, two years after his grandfather's death. "I couldn't relate to people at all; they terrified me. I was terrified of taking a bath, terrified of hospitals and dentists. I was terrified of getting a job, then got a job because I was terrified of starving. Fear was my only motivation."

LIKE SO MANY SURVIVORS, Patrick became an alcoholic.

"By the time I was 15 I started drinking and using (drugs)," says Jennifer. "I became an addict. I just couldn't deal with stress."

Emily, too, became addicted to legal drugs and alcohol. Her two marriages failed.

"And there was a pattern," she says. "I couldn't complete anything. If I was ever doing anything good, I had to screw it up. It always had to have pain in it, always had to have rejection in it. ..."

Adds Elaine, "I lived in such fear of my life that it's a wonder I wasn't institutionalized ... and I didn't know why."

WHILE THE SURVIVORS now have answered that why, they still haven't solved another one. They don't know why incest occurs.

It seems to have nothing to do with economic or social status. Patrick's grandfather was a pillar of the community, a wealthy and respected surgeon. Yet, he didn't hesitate to molest his grandson. Both of Emily's parents were college educated and widely admired — and both of them abused her sexually.

What the survivors suspect, based solely on their own experience, is that the tendency to commit incest is somehow genetic — or contagious. Over the past eight years, Emily has come to realize she was also molested by other members of her family. Sometimes, Patrick says, his aunt joined his grandfather in abusing him. And Elaine says she never told her mother about her father's advances because "when Daddy left for the office, then Mama began playing her little games."

ULTIMATELY, THE SURVIVORS learned not to tell anyone.

"You're programmed not to tell; you're threatened with your life," says Jennifer. And even if a child summons the courage to tell, she adds, she's not likely to be believed.

"When I was 7, I told my Sunday school teacher and she beat me. After that, it was a matter of saving my own ass."

Emily says another reason children of incest don't tell is because they're made to feel it's their fault. Or they've been repeatedly told they should enjoy it.

"My father was the son of a minister and sometimes he'd say I was of Satan and I was making him do it," she recalls. "I felt totally guilty, filthy, dirty and rotten, even lower than the lowest worm. I felt like a sewer.

"At other times, he'd say, 'Doesn't that feel good? Don't you like it?'"

Emily shudders at the thought.

It didn't feel good, none of it did, and she didn't like it, none of them did. But today, thanks to ISA, they're coping.

THEY MEET TOGETHER REGULARLY, the men and women separately once a week and once a week jointly. Their bible is the AA book, which they've adapted to incest. It seems appropriate, since a majority of the survivors came to ISA from other anonymous groups — AA, Narcotics Anonymous, Overeaters Anonymous, etc.

There are professional counselors in the group, but they're there strictly as survivors, not advisers.

"I knew from the healing of my alcohol addiction (through AA) that the answer was not professionals," Emily says. "It was love and support of people who had the same feelings that I had. I knew that if we could get survivors together and start a program with unconditional love, we could get well." Her friends, Patrick, Jennifer and Elaine, at least, are on the road to recovery.

ELAINE SAYS SHE LIKES herself better today than she ever has before.

"I carried so much guilt for so many years," she says. "Now I'm finding out why I'm so afraid sometimes, why I've needed the security of home.

Consumers worried about imports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumers would rather buy clothing made in the United States than foreign-made garments, and they are concerned about imports displacing American jobs, a nationwide survey indicates.

Two-thirds of 1,350 consumers interviewed by clothing and textile experts at the University of Missouri, Columbia, said they read labels to see where clothing is made, and almost two-thirds said they believed it was important to buy clothing made in the United States.

Only 6 percent thought imported clothing was better than that produced here. Nearly three-fourths said imports were displacing American jobs and over half said their concern over this influenced buying decisions.

Making it easier to fix things

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Mrs. M. has to choose between a central air-conditioning system or several room-size units.

Mr. S. would like to fix his dishwasher, but isn't sure how to proceed or where to order the parts.

Mr. G. can't figure out how to hook up his new home computer to the television set.

There they are — typical Americans with typical home-appliance questions and problems. As a rule, whether they get the answers they need is pure happenstance. However, at least two appliance manufacturers have initiated programs designed to increase the odds in the consumer's favor.

THE COMPUTER and the toll-free telephone number are basic ingredients in both General Electric Co.'s new "answer service," and Whirlpool Corp.'s "appliance information service." Both programs combine the use of a toll-free number consumers can dial at any time with a series of planned publications which will make it possible or easier to install and repair their own appliances and to make a better-educated selection of the model which meets their needs.

GE INTRODUCED its service in New York recently. According to Paul W. Van Orden, executive vice president, the answer service is the response to an attitude survey which indicated many Americans feel they are not getting enough information to select, use and repair their appliances.

According to Joy Schrage, Whirlpool's manager of communications, a toll-free number has been a feature at that company for the past 15 years.

THIS YEAR, however, the company has added publications providing generic information on how to buy and use appliances as well as materials geared to specialized classes of consumers—such as non-English speakers or the disabled.

Whirlpool also is developing installation instruction sheets so consumers who wish to do so may install their own appliances. The company's first washing machine repair manual for consumers will be out later this year. The manual, which will sell for $7.50 plus 75 cents handling and postage, will make it possible for a handy individual to fix his or her own washing machine.

OVER THE NEXT few years the company will gradually introduce repair manuals in all product categories, said Ms. Schrage. Ultimately each Whirlpool appliance will come with non-technical illustrated information showing how to install it.

"Handy individuals could probably install virtually any major appliance right now," she said. Even the all-thumbs person ought to be able to replace knobs, dials and control components or lights, she added.

In the near future, however, major appliances with modular electronic components and possibly voice simulators will simplify the repair job. People will be able to diagnose the problem, slip out the malfunctioning module and snap in a new one.

CONSUMER DEMAND for installation and repair guidance has risen in the past three years, added Ms. Schrage.

THREE YEARS AGO, questions having to do with self-installation and do-it-yourself repairs accounted for about 6 percent of the 200,000 calls a year which Whirlpool receives on its "800" phone number. In the past three years, this has jumped to about 30 percent, she said.

The rising cost of service calls and lack of time to wait at home for a repairperson have jointly contributed to the desire of consumers to take matters into their own hands, said GE's Van Orden.

GE began issuing do-it-yourself repair manuals for its refrigerators, ranges, dishwashers, washers and dryers in the fall of 1981. The company has also made available to consumers the most-often required parts.

THE REPAIR MANUALS are written in every-day language, include step-by-step illustrations and rate the difficulty of each repair and the time needed to complete it so that an individual may decide whether or not to tackle the problem.

GE's research indicated consumers also find a need for better information before purchasing an appliance. The toll-free telephone number was suggested by a significant number of individiuals as a means of providing the required guidance.

Also part of GE's plans is a series of free booklets with specific information on appliance selection, use, energy consumption and maintenance.

Proper Inflation

Under-inflation, the most common tire problem, can rob the motorist of extended treadwear and reduce the life of the tire. As a rule of thumb, a tire will lose one pound of air pressure every month under normal driving conditions, so check your tires monthly.

Under-inflated tires increase the tires' rolling resistance and waste fuel. A 50 percent loss of air from normal will produce a 25 percent increase in the tire's rolling resistance, according to Bill Woehrle, manager of industry standards for Uniroyal Tire Company. If all four tires were under-inflated to this degree, fuel consumption would increase five percent.

Surveys have shown that four out of every five automobiles will have at least one, significantly under-inflated tire. The average motorist who drives 10,000 miles annually on one under-inflated tire could have driven 300 miles further on the same amount of fuel had the tires been checked monthly.

Woehrle recommends that motorists carry their own tire gauge.

AT WIT'S END

Life with designer labels

By ERMA BOMBECK

WANTED: One child with uncommon amount of courage who is willing to enter a school year wearing clothes without designer labels.

Potential is there for being a legend in your own time.

On the other hand, you could die from rejection.

Labelmania is the one thing mothers have succeeded in passing on to their children. Five years ago, kids thought Nike was a missile and Izod a character out of Dr. Seuss.

Any mother who has taken her child shopping lately knows it's the only reason to continue breathing.

They get out of the designer clothes the same thing adults get out of them: status, acceptance in a group and a positive self-image.

We all get trapped by it. I was buying a baby gift last week and could not believe I sent a 7 1/4-pound infant a pair of denim jeans lined with plastic to cover his diaper with Christian Dior stamped on the back and WAIT . . . . it gets worse . . . . a pair of designer jogging shoes with soles so thick, if they had put them on the baby the weight would have broken both ankles.

I have probably corrupted that baby's entire life. He will drink from no cup that doesn't come from Tiffany's. He will eat from no spoon that is not stamped Gorham. There is no doubt in my mind his first words will be, "I'm not wearing this shirt! Don't think you can fool me, Bimbo, I've known a J.C. Penney's fox from an Izod alligator since I was five months old!"

With my limited knowledge of children, there is probably only one way we can reverse the damage we have done. Everyone knows that children spend all of their lives trying to be different from their parents. As soon as dads started to grow long hair over their ears and mothers let their hair grow down their backs into strings of rope, their sons cut their hair and their daughters had theirs shortened and frizzed.

I say we name every bit of apparel we put on our body and insist they wear the same thing, so they can look just like Mommy and Daddy. Maybe we could even all dress alike as a family and travel as a matched set. An occasional, "Ronnie, you are not leaving this house unless you have a polo player trotting across your crew neck, do you hear?" wouldn't hurt.

If children react as I think they will, within a few months no self-respecting child will have a label anywhere on his body.

Heart, lung donated to Smithsonian

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — The chimpanzee lung and heart used in the first transplant surgery on humans will be donated to the Smithsonian Institution by Dr. James Hardy of Jackson.

Jackson performed the operations within a seven-month period 19 years ago at University Medical Center here.

The transplanted lung was given to John R. Russell, 56, on June 27, 1963. Russell survived for 18 days before dying of complications that doctors said were unrelated to the lung.

The heart, taken from a 150-pound chimpanzee, was given on Jan. 6, 1964, to Russell Whitten, 48, who lived for 90 minutes before it gave out.

Hardy said the heart transplant was touchy because some of his colleagues "recoiled at the prospect of transplanting the heart ... There were still a lot of people who who felt the heart was ... sacred, the seat of the soul."

New York City in summertime

Heat and humidity

By DOYLE McMANUS
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — The sand is a dull and dirty brown, trampled over by uncounted feet. The sea is a dark and murky green. The air is hot and sticky, heavy with the smells of spilled beer and frying grease over a vague flavor of salt. The old wooden boardwalk is splintered and patched, the baking streets littered and cracked. The view is mostly of tenements and steel scrap and vacant lots.

"It's not the best beach in the world," admitted Richard Vasquez, turning his face into a feeble puff of warm sea air while keeping one eye on his six-year-old son.

YET PEOPLE KEEP COMING to Coney Island. New York City's aging amusement park and swimming spot is ugly, dirty, noisy and sometimes dangerous, but New Yorkers come by the tens of thousands, enduring an hour or more in the subways for an afternoon in the dubious air. It is all part, they will tell you, of every New Yorker's midsumer obsession: trying to beat the heat.

"You come out for the breeze," explaned Vasquez, a 30-year-old city parks maintenance man. "In the heat, you can't even think. Out here you can catch the breeze, You can store up the cool feeling and take it home with you."

IN AUGUST, NEW YORK SUFFERS from a special brand of heat, a stuffy, wilting steam bath that turns the nation's most purposeful city into a listless collection of streets and buildings. It's not the heat, the traditional complaint goes, it's the humidity; but in August it's usually both. Manhattan's normal high temperature in mid-month is 85 degrees, with 70 percent humidity.

That kind of heat is taxing on both body and soul. Four of the horses that pull carriages of tourists around Central Park have collapsed and died on the street this summer, at least three of them victims of overwork in the muggy weather. The fraying of human endurance is most evident among Manhattan's temperamental taxi drivers; they never show much indulgence toward pedestrians, but in August they seem to take special delight in plunging through crosswalks and scattering people like geese.

TEMPERS SHORTEN. On a hot and crowded city bus, a heavy-set lady courteously offered her seat to a frail-looking older woman. The object of her kindness bristled and snapped, "You look like you might fall down yourself."

Buses, of course, are to be avoided. Only half of them have functioning air conditioners, the Transit Authority says, and many of the broken ones cannot be fixed in the summer because the repairmen's union contract guarantees them vacations in July and August.

The subway system is even worse, a sweaty inferno where only one in three cars is theoretically air conditioned. The more daring riders perch on the couplings between the cars for a gulp or two of air, even though some have fallen to their deaths on the tracks below.

AS A RESULT OF ALL THIS, those New Yorkers who can escape, do. The rich and powerful simply abandon the city for the month, as the French desert Paris; the exodus turns many apartment buildings on Fifth and Park Avenues into empty hulks. The moderately rich and powerful stay behind and work, but flee their offices at noon every Friday for the Hamptons, the chic weekend villages on the remote beaches of Long Island, where houses rent for as much as $4,000 a week.

Even the best professional criminals leave town; two weeks ago, discriminating thieves looted the horse-racing resort of Saratoga Springs three days in a row, making off with more than $60,000 worth of jewels.

BUT MOST NEW YORKERS, being neither rich nor powerful, stay put. Some try to beat the heat by moving their living rooms onto the sidewalks, turning neighborhood streets into a rich tapestry of life normally lived indoors: Families eating lunch at card tables, elderly ladies reading the newspaper through magnifying glasses, old men telling tales, teen-agers flirting. The city's parks host dozens of outdoor weddings, chic wine-and-pate picnics, childrens' birthday parties, and joggers' conventions, each subculture with its own well-defined turf.

THE PARKS DRAW SUNBATHERS TOO, some with impressive sets of equipment ranging from lawn chairs to shiny tanning wings that reflect the sun's rays onto pallid necks.

But Manhattan's favorite sunbathing spot is neither park nor seashore. It is 200 feet in the air and only steps from home: the roof, otherwise known as "tar beach." In a really immobilizing heat wave, the vista from a tall building on the chic Upper West Side is a surrealist's Coney Island in the sky: thousands of people, armchairs, beach umbrellas, even artificial grass, encamped on the jumbled rooftops of small apartment buildings.

"It's wonderful," said hairstylist Roger Back, 33. "I take my blanket, my tape machine and my book, and I spread out for the afternoon. It's easier than going to the beach; there's a nice breeze from the back of the building; and it's nice and private."

Since Back's retreat is in full view of both the Empire State Building and the World Trade Center, his privacy is probably mostly psychological — but that's what counts, he says.

OTHER TAR BEACH DEVOTEES hold rooftop barbecues, cocktail parties and, in at least one case, champagne-and-strawberry brunches, although that hostess said she was giving up the idea: "The neighbors kept coming up and giving us hungry looks," she said.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am 30 and John (not his real name) is 39. When we became engaged last March, I was thrilled because I'd been waiting for him to propose for two years. We agreed on an October wedding, but I went ahead and made all the arrangements — right down to having the invitations printed.

I've been paying for everything myself, but last night I asked John if he could help some. That's when he said some friends advised him to ask me to sign a statement saying everything he had before our marriage will be his alone. I told him I would sign anything and gladly. Then he said he still loves me but he wants to put our wedding on "hold" for a while!

Abby, we've lived together for nearly two years, so we're not exactly strangers. I love John and don't want to push him into anything he's not comfortable with, but our plans are made and the date is set. What should I do besides cry? — LOSING HOPE

DEAR LOSING: Be grateful that John admitted that he's not ready for marriage. (He's not.) And since he suggested that you put the wedding on "hold," don't you be left holding the bag. Let John know that he's expected to share the expenses that have already been incurred.

DEAR ABBY: What does a mother do when she suspects her son has become a drug dealer? He doesn't fit the description of what one pictures a drug dealer to be. He is educated, clean-cut, well-mannered and dresses beautifully. He's 22 and still in college.

I wonder how he is able to drive an expensive new car, live in a beautiful apartment, travel first class and buy expensive clothes and gifts without working. He tells me has done well on some "investments," but he knows I don't believe him.

Do I let him make his own mistakes? The price could be very high. He's my son and, of course, I love him. — NO NAME OR TOWN

DEAR NO NAME: If your son has chosen not to reveal the source of his mysterious income, there is nothing you can do about it. Eventually you will learn — to your sorrow, or your relief.

DEAR ABBY: I belong to a social club for single men and women over 60 years old. Being a man, I notice that most men look the women over and book the prettiest ones for dances right away.

Me? I look the women over, then I pick the women I think will be the least likely to be asked to dance — the plain ones, the overweight, the very tall, the skinny, or the ones who look bashful and hang back. They are my first choice.

Why? Because I find them to be the best company. Most good-looking women are inclined to be conceited, spoiled and selfish. The plain ones tend to be more thoughtful and generous. Plain women are usually smarter, too. Most pretty women never worked too hard cultivating their brains because they were able to get by on their looks.

So my advice to gentlemen is: If you want a real jewel, you will find her wrapped in a plain package. — MEL

DEAR MEL: Generalizations are generally unfair, but your observations are worth noting.

CONFIDENTIAL TO DESPERATE IN GREENSBORO, N.C.: "The darkest hour in a man's life is when he sits down to plan how to get money without earning it." — Horace Greeley

You can obtain a copy of this new best-selling book by sending $9.95 plus $1 for postage and handling to "The Best of Dear Abby," in care of this newspaper, 4400 Johnson Dr., Fairway, Kan. 66205. These friends get off to a "bright" start in appealing, back-to-school outfits. Skirts are sure to be a favorite with the 4-6x set this year. Here are two looks from Garanimals to make a little girl feel extra special: Left, a lace-trimmed prairie skirt worn with a brushed sweater-look top with a flounced shoulder treatment. Her friend looks picture pretty in a classic jumper featuring gathered yoke, ruffled straps and floral embroidery worn with a soft, print turtleneck.

Making it easier to fix things

AP Newsfeatures

Mrs. M. has to choose between a central air-conditioning system or several room-size units.

Mr. S. would like to fix his dishwasher, but isn't sure how to proceed or where to order the parts.

Mr. G. can't figure out how to hook up his new home computer to the television set.

There they are — typical Americans with typical home-appliance questions and problems. As a rule, whether they get the answers they need is pure happenstance. However, at least two appliance manufacturers have initiated programs designed to increase the odds in the consumer's favor.

THE COMPUTER and the toll-free telephone number are basic ingredients in both General Electric Co.'s new "answer service," and Whirlpool Corp.'s "appliance information service." Both programs combine the use of a toll-free number consumers can dial at any time with a series of planned publications which will make it possible or easier to install and repair their own appliances and to make a better-educated selection of the model which meets their needs.

GE INTRODUCED its service in New York recently. According to Paul W. Van Orden, executive vice president, the answer service is the response to an attitude survey which indicated many Americans feel they are not getting enough information to select, use and repair their appliances.

According to Joy Schrage, Whirlpool's manager of communications, a toll-free number has been a feature at that company for the past 15 years.

THIS YEAR, however, the company has added publications providing generic information on how to buy and use appliances as well as materials geared to specialized classes of consumers—such as non-English speakers or the disabled.

Whirlpool also is developing installation instruction sheets so consumers who wish to do so may install their own appliances. The company's first washing machine repair manual for consumers will be out later this year. The manual, which will sell for $7.50 plus 75 cents handling and postage, will make it possible for a handy individual to fix his or her own washing machine.

OVER THE NEXT few years the company will gradually introduce repair manuals in all product categories, said Ms. Schrage. Ultimately each Whirlpool appliance will come with non-technical illustrated information showing how to install it.

"Handy individuals could probably install virtually any major appliance right now," she said. Even the all-thumbs person ought to be able to replace knobs, dials and control components or lights, she added.

In the near future, however, major appliances with modular electronic components and possibly voice simulators will simplify the repair job. People will be able to diagnose the problem, slip out the malfunctioning module and snap in a new one.

CONSUMER DEMAND for installation and repair guidance has risen in the past three years, added Ms. Schrage.

THREE YEARS AGO, questions having to do with self-installation and do-it-yourself repairs accounted for about 6 percent of the 200,000 calls a year which Whirlpool receives on its "800" phone number. In the past three years, this has jumped to about 30 percent, she said.

The rising cost of service calls and lack of time to wait at home for a repairperson have jointly contributed to the desire of consumers to take matters into their own hands, said GE's Van Orden.

GE began issuing do-it-yourself repair manuals for its refrigerators, ranges, dishwashers, washers and dryers in the fall of 1981. The company has also made available to consumers the most-often required parts.

THE REPAIR MANUALS are written in every-day language, include step-by-step illustrations and rate the difficulty of each repair and the time needed to complete it so that an individual may decide whether or not to tackle the problem.

GE's research indicated consumers also find a need for better information before purchasing an appliance. The toll-free telephone number was suggested by a significant number of individuals as a means of providing the required guidance.

Also part of GE's plans is a series of free booklets with specific information on appliance selection, use, energy consumption and maintenance.

AT WIT'S END

By ERMA BOMBECK

WANTED: One child with uncommon amount of courage who is willing to enter a school year wearing clothes without designer labels.

Potential is there for being a legend in your own time.

On the other hand, you could die from rejection.

Labelmania is the one thing mothers have succeeded in passing on to their children. Five years ago, kids thought Nike was a missile and Izod a character out of Dr. Seuss.

Any mother who has taken her child shopping lately knows it's the only reason to continue breathing.

They get out of the designer clothes the same thing adults get out of them: status, acceptance in a group and a positive self-image.

We all get trapped by it. I was buying a baby gift last week and could not believe I sent a 7 1/4-pound infant a pair of denim jeans lined with plastic to cover his diaper with Christian Dior stamped on the back and WAIT . . . . it gets worse . . . . a pair of designer jogging shoes with soles so thick, if they had put them on the baby the weight would have broken both ankles.

I have probably corrupted that baby's entire life. He will drink from no cup that doesn't come from Tiffany's. He will eat from no spoon that is not stamped Gorham. There is no doubt in my mind his first words will be, "I'm not wearing this shirt! Don't think you can fool me, Bimbo, I've known a J.C. Penney's fox from an Izod alligator since I was five months old!"

With my limited knowledge of children, there is probably only one way we can reverse the damage we have done. Everyone knows that children spend all of their lives trying to be different from their parents. As soon as dads started to grow long hair over their ears and mothers let their hair grow down their backs into strings of rope, their sons cut their hair and their daughters had theirs shortened and frizzed.

I say we name every bit of apparel we put on our body and insist they wear the same thing, so they can look just like Mommy and Daddy. Maybe we could even all dress alike as a family and travel as a matched set. An occasional, "Ronnie, you are not leaving this house unless you have a polo player trotting across your crew neck, do you hear?" wouldn't hurt.

If children react as I think they will, within a few months no self-respecting child will have a label anywhere on his body.

Heart, lung donated to Smithsonian

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — The chimpanzee lung and heart used in the first transplant surgery on humans will be donated to the Smithsonian Institution by Dr. James Hardy of Jackson.

Jackson performed the operations within a seven-month period 19 years ago at University Medical Center here.

The transplanted lung was given to John R. Russell, 56, on June 27, 1963. Russell survived for 18 days before dying of complications that doctors said were unrelated to the lung.

The heart, taken from a 150-pound chimpanzee, was given on Jan. 6, 1964, to Russell Whitten, 48, who lived for 90 minutes before it gave out.

Hardy said the heart transplant was touchy because some of his colleagues "recoiled at the prospect of transplanting the heart ... There were still a lot of people who who felt the heart was ... sacred, the seat of the soul."

SAFETY FENCE

Proper Inflation

Under-inflation, the most common tire problem, can rob the motorist of extended treadwear and reduce the life of the tire. As a rule of thumb, a tire will lose one pound of air pressure every month under normal driving conditions, so check your tires monthly.

Under-inflated tires increase the tires' rolling resistance and waste fuel. A 50 percent loss of air from normal will produce a 25 percent increase in the tire's rolling resistance, according to Bill Woehrle, manager of industry standards for Uniroyal Tire Company. If all four tires were under-inflated to this degree, fuel consumption would increase five percent.

Surveys have shown that four out of every five automobiles will have at least one, significantly under-inflated tire. The average motorist who drives 10,000 miles annually on one under-inflated tire could have driven 300 miles further on the same amount of fuel had the tires been checked monthly.

Woehrle recommends that motorists carry their own tire gauge.

New York City in summertime

By DOYLE McMANUS
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — The sand is a dull and dirty brown, trampled over by uncounted feet. The sea is a dark and murky green. The air is hot and sticky, heavy with the smells of spilled beer and frying grease over a vague flavor of salt. The old wooden boardwalk is splintered and patched, the baking streets littered and cracked. The view is mostly of tenements and steel scrap and vacant lots.

"It's not the best beach in the world," admitted Richard Vasquez, turning his face into a feeble puff of warm sea air while keeping one eye on his six-year-old son.

YET PEOPLE KEEP COMING to Coney Island. New York City's aging amusement park and swimming spot is ugly, dirty, noisy and sometimes dangerous, but New Yorkers come by the tens of thousands, enduring an hour or more in the subways for an afternoon in the dubious air. It is all part, they will tell you, of every New Yorker's midsumer obsession: trying to beat the heat.

"You come out for the breeze," explaned Vasquez, a 30-year-old city parks maintenance man. "In the heat, you can't even think. Out here you can catch the breeze, You can store up the cool feeling and take it home with you."

IN AUGUST, NEW YORK SUFFERS from a special brand of heat, a stuffy, wilting steam bath that turns the nation's most purposeful city into a listless collection of streets and buildings. It's not the heat, the traditional complaint goes, it's the humidity; but in August it's usually both. Manhattan's normal high temperature in mid-month is 85 degrees, with 70 percent humidity.

That kind of heat is taxing on both body and soul. Four of the horses that pull carriages of tourists around Central Park have collapsed and died on the street this summer, at least three of them victims of overwork in the muggy weather. The fraying of human endurance is most evident among Manhattan's temperamental taxi drivers; they never show much indulgence toward pedestrians, but in August they seem to take special delight in plunging through crosswalks and scattering people like geese.

TEMPERS SHORTEN. On a hot and crowded city bus, a heavy-set lady courteously offered her seat to a frail-looking older woman. The object of her kindness bristled and snapped, "You look like you might fall down yourself."

Buses, of course, are to be avoided. Only half of them have functioning air conditioners, the Transit Authority says, and many of the broken ones cannot be fixed in the summer because the repairmen's union contract guarantees them vacations in July and August.

The subway system is even worse, a sweaty inferno where only one in three cars is theoretically air conditioned. The more daring riders perch on the couplings between the cars for a gulp or two of air, even though some have fallen to their deaths on the tracks below.

AS A RESULT OF ALL THIS, those New Yorkers who can escape, do. The rich and powerful simply abandon the city for the month, as the French desert Paris; the exodus turns many apartment buildings on Fifth and Park Avenues into empty hulks. The moderately rich and powerful stay behind and work, but flee their offices at noon every Friday for the Hamptons, the chic weekend villages on the remote beaches of Long Island, where houses rent for as much as $4,000 a week.

Even the best professional criminals leave town; two weeks ago, discriminating thieves looted the horse-racing resort of Saratoga Springs three days in a row, making off with more than $60,000 worth of jewels.

BUT MOST NEW YORKERS, being neither rich nor powerful, stay put. Some try to beat the heat by moving their living rooms onto the sidewalks, turning neighborhood streets into a rich tapestry of life normally lived indoors: Families eating lunch at card tables, elderly ladies reading the newspaper through magnifying glasses, old men telling tales, teen-agers flirting. The city's parks host dozens of outdoor weddings, chic wine-and-pate picnics, childrens' birthday parties, and joggers' conventions, each subculture with its own well-defined turf.

THE PARKS DRAW SUNBATHERS TOO, some with impressive sets of equipment ranging from lawn chairs to shiny tanning wings that reflect the sun's rays onto pallid necks.

But Manhattan's favorite sunbathing spot is neither park nor seashore. It is 200 feet in the air and only steps from home: the roof, otherwise known as "tar beach." In a really immobilizing heat wave, the vista from a tall building on the chic Upper West Side is a surrealist's Coney Island in the sky: thousands of people, armchairs, beach umbrellas, even artificial grass, encamped on the jumbled rooftops of small apartment buildings.

"It's wonderful," said hairstylist Roger Back, 33. "I take my blanket, my tape machine and my book, and I spread out for the afternoon. It's easier than going to the beach; there's a nice breeze from the back of the building; and it's nice and private."

Since Back's retreat is in full view of both the Empire State Building and the World Trade Center, his privacy is probably mostly psychological — but that's what counts, he says.

OTHER TAR BEACH DEVOTEES hold rooftop barbecues, cocktail parties and, in at least one case, champagne-and-strawberry brunches, although that hostess said she was giving up the idea: "The neighbors kept coming up and giving us hungry looks," she said.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am 30 and John (not his real name) is 39. When we became engaged last March, I was thrilled because I'd been waiting for him to propose for two years. We agreed on an October wedding, but I went ahead and made all the arrangements — right down to having the invitations printed.

I've been paying for everything myself, but last night I asked John if he could help some. That's when he said some friends advised him to ask me to sign a statement saying everything he had before our marriage will be his alone. I told him I would sign anything and gladly. Then he said he still loves me but he wants to put our wedding on "hold" for a while!

Abby, we've lived together for nearly two years, so we're not exactly strangers. I love John and don't want to push him into anything he's not comfortable with, but our plans are made and the date is set. What should I do besides cry? — LOSING HOPE

DEAR LOSING: Be grateful that John admitted that he's not ready for marriage. (He's not.) And since he suggested that you put the wedding on "hold," don't you be left holding the bag. Let John know that he's expected to share the expenses that have already been incurred.

DEAR ABBY: What does a mother do when she suspects her son has become a drug dealer? He doesn't fit the description of what one pictures a drug dealer to be. He is educated, clean-cut, well-mannered and dresses beautifully. He's 22 and still in college.

I wonder how he is able to drive an expensive new car, live in a beautiful apartment, travel first class and buy expensive clothes and gifts without working. He tells me has done well on some "investments," but he knows I don't believe him.

Do I let him make his own mistakes? The price could be very high. He's my son and, of course, I love him. — NO NAME OR TOWN

DEAR NO NAME: If your son has chosen not to reveal the source of his mysterious income, there is nothing you can do about it. Eventually you will learn — to your sorrow, or your relief.

DEAR ABBY: I belong to a social club for single men and women over 60 years old. Being a man, I notice that most men look the women over and book the prettiest ones for dances right away.

Me? I look the women over, then I pick the women I think will be the least likely to be asked to dance — the plain ones, the overweight, the very tall, the skinny, or the ones who look bashful and hang back. They are my first choice.

Why? Because I find them to be the best company. Most good-looking women are inclined to be conceited, spoiled and selfish. The plain ones tend to be more thoughtful and generous. Plain women are usually smarter, too. Most pretty women never worked too hard cultivating their brains because they were able to get by on their looks.

So my advice to gentlemen is: If you want a real jewel, you will find her wrapped in a plain package. — MEL

DEAR MEL: Generalizations are generally unfair, but your observations are worth noting.

CONFIDENTIAL TO DESPERATE IN GREENSBORO, N.C.: "The darkest hour in a man's life is when he sits down to plan how to get money without earning it." — Horace Greeley

"(The Best of Dear Abby" featuring Abby's best answers and favorite responses during the past 25 years, is now available. You can obtain a copy of this new best-selling book by sending $9.95 plus $1 for postage and handling to "The Best of Dear Abby," in care of this newspaper, 4400 Johnson Dr., Fairway, Kan. 66205. Dispute involves pizza, communists

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — This trade dispute has everything: pizza, communists, botulism, tariffs, high-powered Washington lawyers, jobless workers in Pennsylvania, federal regulators, bad jokes and, most of all, mushrooms.

The mushrooms, hordes of them, are coming from China to the United States, where they wind up decorating the tops of pizza slices. Mushroom growers in Pennsylvania, the self-proclaimed world's mushroom capital, are asking the U.S. International Trade Commission to restrict imports of the canned mushrooms, calling it a "Chinese mushroom cloud over the U.S. marketplace."

The Chinese, the American importers, and Pizza Hut, a major consumer of the imported fungi, have joined forces to fight the Pennsylvania producers. The American canners, says the attorney for the importers, are "motivated by greed and fear," and trying to create a "great wall" of protectionist barriers to the imported competition.

THE INTERNATIONAL Trade Commission was scheduled to hear arguments last Tuesday on a petition by the American Mushroom Institute for sharp reductions in the amount of canned mushrooms from China that can be imported each year. The institute, which represents the American producers, argues that China, "which is dominated or controlled by communism," is "dumping" its mushrooms, selling them at less than fair market value to capture a larger share of the $400 million-a-year U.S. market.

Fisher, who is known for his unorthodox, high-profile, confrontational approach to international trade disputes, staged a pre-emptive strike Monday by calling the press — including reporters from the New China News Agency and Peking People's Daily — to a briefing here in the conference room of his firm, Patton, Boggs and Blow.

ACROSS A TABLE laden with fresh, canned and dried mushrooms, Fisher argued that the American canners are victims not of unfair practices by China but of a growing consumer preference for fresh mushrooms, of a recession that has reduced the buying of nonessentials, and of fear of botulism, a lethal form of food poisoning, which Fisher said consumers allegedly associate with the American product.

He said Kennett Square, Pa., the center of the U.S. mushroom industry, is "not the mushroom capital of the world but the botulism capital of the world."

Jack Kooker, executive director of the American Mushroom Institute, said Fisher's charge "doesn't deserve a response. It's a cheap shot, and in fairness to our growers, I don't think we want to subject ourselves to arguing on that level."

He said the American industry "has been impacted" by the imports. "People are being laid off in the canneries. There are a lot of jobs being sacrificed because of these imports." He said he represents "a lot of growers who are third generation. They have a quality product. We are just trying to see that they survive."

THE MUSHROOM INSTITUTE is just one of many U.S. food-producing organizations seeking federal relief from imports, but its petition is unusual because mushroom imports are declining and because the mushroom canners already have special tariff protection as a result of an earlier complaint.

The mushroom industry has undergone a spectacular growth in the past decade, according to figures submitted by both sides in advance of Tuesday's hearing, but the market is now dominated by fresh, not canned, products.

Total U.S. production was 58 million pounds in 1971. In 1981, it was 267 million pounds. The fresh mushroom share of the market doubled, from 28 to 56.7 percent of production.

China, which developed a modern, efficient mushroom-canning industry for the European market about a decade ago, was not a factor in the U.S. market until 1980. Then for the first time it was accorded "most favored nation" trade status and was able to challenge Taiwan and South Korea for a share of the U.S. trade.

THE RESULT HAS been rapid Chinese domination of a shrinking market for canned mushrooms. Imports from China totaled 27.4 million pounds last year, nearly double what they were in 1980. But total imports from all countries dropped sharply, from 117.3 million pounds in 1980 to 88.6 million in 1981, after the Carter administration imposed a stiff duty on imports.

Fisher, who represents Nature's Farm Products of Hayward, Calif., a major importer, argued that the Chinese share of the canned mushroom market has been gained not at the expense of the Americans, but at the expense of South Korea and Taiwan, who have been shouldered aside by the cheaper Chinese competition.

The Americans, he said, are trying to "rip off the consumer. They already have tariffs in place. Now they're trying to get quantitative restraints that would cut imports to 5 million pounds a year."

Opening lead: Queen of ♡.

"Avoidance" is a highfalutin term for a simple play. All it means is keeping the danger hand off lead.

The auction was noteworthy for its brevity and its accuracy. Unfortunately, the play met only one of these criteria. It was brief, but hardly accurate.

Declarer won the opening lead with the king, cashed the king of diamonds and ran the nine. East took the queen and reverted to hearts, and the defenders raked in four heart tricks for a one-trick set.

South maintained that he could not afford to duck the first heart because he would then be exposed to a heart lead through the king. What South neglected to explain was how East was supposed to gain the lead to perform this bit of legerdemain!

Correct technique is for declarer to allow West's queen of hearts to hold the first trick. Whether West continues with a heart or shifts suit, declarer's problem is one of avoidance.

Assume that West continues with the jack of hearts. Declarer wins and now he must keep West off lead. He cashes the king of diamonds and runs the nine. East wins, but if he can return a heart, the suit is breaking and declarer won't lose more than three heart tricks and a diamond. As the cards lie, however, East is out of hearts and declarer makes an overtrick.

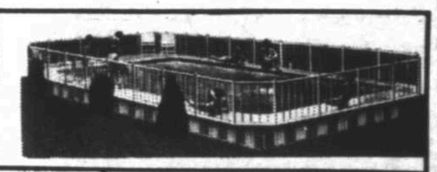

What if West shifts at trick two? Now East is the danger hand, and an avoidance play must be used to keep him off lead. Declarer wins the probable club shift, enters dummy with the jack of spades and runs the eight of diamonds. If West wins, the contract is safe because the king of hearts can't be attacked. And if East has the queen of diamonds, the eight of diamonds holds the trick. Declarer repeats the finesse and emerges with ten tricks via three spades, five diamonds and two clubs.

How do you choose the best opening lead? Charles Goren has the answer. For a copy of "Winning Opening Leads," send $1.85 to "Goren-Leads," care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 259, Norwood, N.J. 07648. Make checks payable to Newspaperbooks.

Occidental sweetens offer; Cities Service says OK

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Occidental Petroleum Corp., spurned twice in a courtship of Cities Service Co., sweetened its offer by an estimated $500 million and won Cities' consent in a corporate marriage to create the eighth-largest U.S. oil company.

Cities' board of directors accepted the revised Occidental offer, valued by analysts at $4.3 billion, at an emergency meeting Wednesday night that culminated nearly two weeks of bargaining and wrangling between the two companies.

Occidental had offered to buy 49 percent of Cities stock from stockholders based on $50 a share. That offer, which began Aug. 19, was called inadequate Monday by Cities directors. Occidental said it is continuing the tender offer at the higher price.

Under the agreement, Occidental would buy about 45 percent of Cities' common stock for $55 a share in cash, or a total of $1.9 billion. After a merger of the companies, Occidental said it would acquire the remaining shares by swapping a package of securities with a value estimated by analysts at $2.4 billion.

The agreement is subject to review by either the Justice Department or the Federal Trade Commission and by shareholders of both companies. Gulf Oil Corp. backed out of an agreement to buy Cities for $4.8 billion earlier this month after the FTC raised antitrust objections.

Gulf's withdrawal sent Cities executives scrambling for another merger partner to avoid a collapse of its stock price. Cities stock did not trade Wednesday because of uncertainty about the outcome of the Cities board meeting. The stock closed Tuesday on the New York Stock Exchange at $45 a share, up $2.25.

If the merger is completed, the new company would rank in annual sales just one notch below General Electric Co., making it the nation's 12th-biggest industrial concern and the eighth-largest oil company behind Atlantic Richfield Co.

Occidental currently is the 13th-largest oil company and Cities ranks No. 20.

Cities is attractive to many oil companies for its domestic oil and natural gas reserves.

Oil jobbers fighting 'the big guys' for survival

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Small, independent oil marketers — the people who distribute gasoline to service stations, convenience stores, truck stops and other retail outlets — think they may have a fight on their hands.

Normally, they handle up to 80 percent of the volume of gasoline sales, but now, the majors are muscling in on their territory. It's a fight for economic survival between the big guys and the jobbers, as the oil marketers call themselves.

About 125 jobbers from all over the state met here yesterday for a district meeting of the Texas Oil Marketers Association (TOMA). They shared ideas on how to stay in business, and how to handle the new trend — cash discount pricing.

According to TOMA president Bill H. Bailey, himself a jobber in East Texas, not only is the economic downturn a problem, but consumer conservation has affected business also. Gasoline consumption is down by at least 15 percent.

The newest threat to jobbers' survival comes from their suppliers, however — the very people from whom they obtain their product to sell.

The suppliers, major oil companies like Texaco, Exxon or Shell, have announced new programs to offer customers discounts for cash purchases in lieu of credit cards. The jobbers and service stations, meanwhile, are having to pay a 3 percent surcharge, for example, on every credit card purchase, thereby "losing" 3 percent of each sale.

"They tried in the past to make dealers and jobbers pay for the cost of credit cards, as opposed to a direct charge to the credit card holder," explained Bill Kent, TOMA district director and head of Kent Oil of Midland.

"As competitive as the gasoline business is, dealers can't absorb that cost, and will be forced to offset it."

"Suppliers have come up with this idea, but it looks like it'll really fall on the shoulders of the marketers to implement it," Bailey said.

Jobbers are faced with a choice: either pass the charge along to the customer, encourage him to pay cash and receive a discount, or absorb the surcharge themselves.

The small, unbranded jobbers, such as convenience store outlets, don't have credit cards and won't be affected by the trend, which is being tested nationwide.

But the small jobber which does offer credit card service wil be forced to meet the majors' lowering prices. Jobbers are under tremendous price pressures, Bailey said, although he would not predict a price war.

This in itself is cause for concern, he said. Small companies can't hope to compete with the major on the same level.

According to Bailey, jobbers are in competition with their suppliers for the first time. "The majors are jockeying for position in the market place and the independent jobber is making whatever moves he has to," by lowering already low prices and running cost-efficient organizations.

In certain areas of the state and nation, major oil companies are taking their gasoline directly from the rack to the streets (to service stations). They are moving up to 60 percent of their product directly to retail outlets, bypassing the jobbers.

Formerly, they would move 90 percent of it through jobbers or wholesalers, Bailey said.

"The jobber today is doing whatever he can to survive," he said. He hopes the majors will see that it's cheaper in the long run to work through the jobbers, but he said he foresees more small jobbers merging with larger ones, or being absorbed by major oil companies, if they are not run out of business outright by economic factors.

High interest rates have already "severely impacted" Texas jobbers, he added.

Kent said some majors are already scrambling for their part of the market share.

Some of them are going back to the marketing techniques of the "good 'ole days" of the 1950s and '60s, offering their customers a free car wash or merchandise such as glassware with every fill-up.

As a result of the competition, Kent thinks already low prices will probably go lower in the future.

The vast majority of service station operators are local, independent businessmen, Kent said, who are "on the front lines" of the gasoline market. Often they are blamed by customers for price hikes, when they have no control over it. "The suppliers dictate how much we can buy, when it is available, and at what price," Kent added.

Jobbers and dealers own some service stations; others are leased from the major refiners. Local dealers may purchase their gasoline from either the majors, as is ususally the case in metropolitan areas, or from jobbers, as is usual in West Texas, he said.

French dock hands load big trouble for Dresser Industries

LE HAVRE, France (AP) — Dock workers loaded three compressors destined for the Soviet natural gas pipeline aboard a French freighter today in the first Western European shipment of U.S. embargoed equipment for the project.

The three compressors were built by Dresser France, a wholly owned subsidiary of Dressel Industries Inc., of Dallas, Texas. They were loaded on the freighter Borodine, which is scheduled to leave the port of Le Havre later today for Riga, the capital of Soviet Latvia

Dresser France said Tuesday it would fulfill its contract with the Soviet Union after receiving a requisition order to do so from the French government. Under French law, the government can requisition the services of private companies if those services are judged to be in the national interest.

Sources in Washington said President Reagan will blacklist the French subsidiary if it ships the equipment to the Soviets in defiance of his pipeline embargo. Such a move would bar the French subsidiary from importing specific items and technology from its parent company, or from any other American suppliers of the same items, said the sources, who declined to be identified.

Dresser Industries complained it was caught "between a rock and a hard place" because of the two government' conflicting orders.

There were no immediate comments from the French government about the delivery of Dresser's compressors or Reagan's threat to impose sanctions against the firm. A French government spokesman said the pipeline issue was not discussed at Wednesday's weekly Cabinet session.

However, labor unions at Dresser France expressed concern today about possible U.S. sanctions and demanded a meeting with management to discuss the situation.

"Reagan wants to make an example of Dresser-France," a union spokesman said. "More than ever, we must remain vigilant and prepare ourselves for a tough battle to guarantee our jobs."

Union employees at Dresser demonstrated at the docks of Le Havre on Tuesday to protest the U.S. embargo. The unions claim 260 workers would have been laid off if the embargo had been honored.

The three compressors are the first of 21 compressors Dresser France is to provide for the 3,500-mile pipeline that is scheduled to begin delivering natural gas from Siberia to Western Europe sometime in 1984.

In December, Reagan prohibited U.S. firms from supplying equipment for the pipeline in retaliation for Soviet support of the martial law crackdown in Poland. He extended the embargo in June to include foreign companies munufacturing equipment or technology under U.S. license.

Four French firms, along with companies in Britian, West Germany and Italy, hold the bulk of the $11 billion in Soviet piepline contracts. The governments of those four countries have said they intend to see that the contracts are honored.

The British engineering firm John Brown Ltd, a subsidiary of a U.S. firm, is scheduled to make a second delivery of embargoed equipment in the next few days. A Soviet ship is due at Glasglow on Sunday or Monday to pick up six of the 21 gas turbines the company is building for the pipeline.

The Dresser compressors originally were to have been loaded Wednesday. No explanation was given for the one-day delay.

Reagan said Wednesday he would be studying specific actions to take against firms that defy the embargo. Larry Speakes, the White House deputy press secretary, said an announcement probably will be made later in the week.

Western European governments have contended the U.S. embargo is illegal and that their nations need the thousands of jobs provided by the pipeline contracts.

American officials have argued that the Soviet military budget will benefit from the $10 billion a year Moscow is expected to earn from the pipeline. The United States has threatened court action against firms violating the embargo.

The European-U.S. dispute represents the most fundamental rift in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization alliance since its creation at the end of World War II.

To pay debts Mexico sells U.S. crude at 'special prices'

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico will sell the United States 40 million barrels of oil at special prices in return for financial help, and move to maintain supplies of basic goods in border towns whose shelves have been cleared by Americans seeking cheap-peso bargains, the government said Wednesday.

Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog announced the additional oil sale as part of a program to keep the nation afloat in the current economic crisis and avoid default on its $80 billion foreign debt, largest among developing countries.

The shipments of top-grade Isthmus crude will cover an advance of $1 billion made by the United States last week as Silva Herzog and other Mexican officials met with international bankers to reschedule debt payments.

Under the agreement, signed Tuesday with the U.S. Department of Energy, the state Pemex oil monopoly will ship 60,000 barrels of additional oil a day during the last quarter of 1982, 120,000 during the first quarter of 1983, 140,000 during the second quarter and 120,000 during the third quarter.

Silva Herzog said the price would fluctuate with international levels, but would cost no more than $35 a barrel and no less than $25. Mexico currently sells Isthmus crude at $32 a barrel.

The oil is destined for the U.S. strategic petroleum reserve, and sources said the additional supplies will make Mexico the largest supplier of the reserve.

The nation was the largest single supplier of crude oil to the United States in May, the latest month for which statistics are available, shipping a total of 767,000 barrels a day.

The government says about 50 percent of oil exports in 1982 have been to the United States. According to unofficial estimates, total Mexican oil production is estimated at 2,850,000 barrels a day, with daily domestic consumption of 1,150,000 barrels.

There were unconfirmed reports that U.S. officials sought price concessions as a condition for providing financial aid in Mexico's worst financial crisis since the 1910-1920 revolution. U.S. and Mexican officials here would not comment on the reports.

A $10 billion shortfall in revenues — partly the result of the world oil glut that has sharply reduced oil revenues — is causing a severe shortage of dollars. With its huge debt Mexico cannot borrow as readily as before, and is having trouble raising the $14-$17 billion it needs this year to meet payments due on the debt.

Americans have flooded across the border to take advantage of lower-priced food, gasoline, leather and other goods since the peso was devalued Aug. 5 for the second time this year. The currency, which had been worth about 49 to the dollar, has gone as low as 130 since the devaluation and now hovers around 100 to the dollar.

The hordes of American shoppers have caused shortages of basic goods in some Mexican border cities.

Mexican Commerce Department officials met on Tuesday with representatives of chambers of commerce from Mexican cities along the 1,760 mile border. The semi-official newspaper El Nacional said Wednesday that the Commerce Department would announce a plan soon to prevent lack of supplies on the border, but no details were available from department officials.

Business in U.S. border towns, where most stores accept pesos and depend heavily on Mexican trade, also has suffered because many Mexicans can no longer afford to shop there.

U.S. officials in El Paso, Texas, reported an increase in the flow of illegal aliens into the United States from Mexico. The U.S. Border Patrol said it was rounding up record numbers of illegal aliens, apparently crossing the Rio Grande to seek jobs and escape the financial crunch.

The finapcial crisis developed after a period of oil-financed prosperity in the late 1970s. The nation, buoyed by huge oil reserves, began an ambitious development program, financed by foreign borrowing.

The boom was halted by the oil glut and by lower prices for such other key commodities as silver and coffee.

Estimates indicate there will be one million more jobless by the end of the year in a country where 40 percent of working-age people are out of work or underemployed. Prices are expected to rise beyond the 60 percent inflation predicted earlier for 1982, and wages will lag behind.

Intrest rate break may signal change in investment tactics

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The dramatic break in high interest rates is signaling not only a possible turn for the nation's economy but also a change in the investment tactics of many Americans.

Gone, at least for the moment, is the prospect of rising income from interest on six-month and 2½-year savings certificates. And the same goes for money-market mutual funds, the superstar growth investment of the past two years.

The expectation that interest rates will not bounce back up this year, and that rates might drop somewhat more, has charged Wall Street with enthusiasm for more than a week.

Henry Kaufman, chief economist of Salomon Brothers investment firm and Wall Street's chief pessimist, abruptly changed his view on which direction interest rates will take in the year ahead: he now forecasts more declines. Many other economists agree. Partly in reaction to that bullish outlook, stock prices soared and bond prices jumped.

Some investment advisers say that means people should consider moving more of their money out of short-term instruments such as six-month certificates and money market funds into bonds or other longer-term investments to lock in current yields.

Money in passbook savings accounts and NOW accounts will not be directly affected by the drop in open-market interest rates because the rates paid on those investments are limited by federal law.

The most immediate effect will be felt on the money-market mutual funds, whose startling growth was due mainly to the sudden rise in interest rates three years ago. The pile of money in those 242 funds is now around $230 billion.

Some analysts think as much as $50 billion will soon leave the funds, headed back into investments they came from, such as stocks and bonds.

So, as interest rates decline, the yields of money funds lag behind other investments because of the length of maturities in the funds' portfolios.

While the money funds are still paying about 11 percent on a one-week average, the drop will begin appearing in about one month. Some analysts think the rates will average less than 9 percent before long.

The popular six-month savings certificates that are tied to returns on Treasury bills also are likely to show less appeal for investors. The rate that banks and savings institutions pay on those certificates dropped this week to 10.355 percent from the previous 10.952 percent, and further declines are expected in the weeks ahead.

Lower interest rates already have sparked a renewed interest in gold.

Early this week the price of gold on the Commodity Exchange in New York spurted above $400 an ounce — the highest level in eight months. As recently as two weeks ago gold was holding at $335 an ounce. The drop in interest rates reduced the cost of financing purchases of gold. Silver prices have risen for the same reason.

The real estate market, too, may pick up if home mortgage rates come down significantly in the weeks ahead. Home buying also would be helped by an improvement in the financial condition of the nation's savings and loan associations and mutual savings banks, which historically have been important mortgage lenders.

The high cost of deposits and other short-term funds, and the paltry yields on old, low-interest-rate loans, have pinched the savings institutions, and some have collapsed.

One by-product of a revived housing market could be a surge in demand for commercial real estate. That, combined with a drop of two percentage points in long-term interest rates, would likely increase the value of any rented-up office building, shopping center or warehouse.

Steelmakers say DOC bowed to foreign pressure

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's two largest steelmakers say the Commerce Department bowed to foreign pressure and was too lenient in its findings of unfair trade by European steel producers.

Spokesmen for United States Steel Corp. and Bethlehem Steel Corp. said Wednesday's Commerce Department decision that six European nations illegally subsidized steel shipped to the United States underestimated the level of aid from foreign governments.

The department responded by saying that in-depth field investigations in the last two months have shown that foreign steel subsidies are lower than previously believed.

"This disparity reflects the pressures that are undoubtedly being brought to bear" on the Reagan administration by the European Community, U.S. Steel Chairman David Roderick said in a statement.

"The results of the Commerce Department findings appear to be an effort to bail the European steel industry out of the difficulty that it created by its unfair trade practices in this country," he said.

A spokesman for Bethlehem Steel Corp. said the subsidy findings were at odds with evidence the company presented to the department.

"Bethlehem provided the Commerce Department with well-documented information that clearly supported higher subsidy valuations," said the spokesman, who asked to remain unidentified.

"We are, therefore disappointed that the final determinations ... are substantially lower than the preliminary determinations announced June 11," the spokesman said.

In its final ruling, the department said steel products shipped here by 13 European steelmakers were subsidized by their governments through a variety of means, including low-cost loans.

It said the subsidies ranged up to 26 percent of the value of the imports. But the department's preliminary decision in June said the subsidies reached a high of 40 percent.

Roderick said some of the findings may be appealed to the Court of International Trade to redress "what we perceive to be an unjust, unjustifiable and inequitable determination."

Gary Horlick, deputy assistant commerce secretary for import administration, said at a news conference earlier that in the preliminary phase of the investigations, "you assume the worst so you don't let someone off the hook."

He said the main reason the rates differ is that "since June we've had an opportunity to gather more information, to go into the field and check it out." Overall, the subsidy levels were generally lower, he said.

Officials from the Commerce Department and the European Community agreed earlier this month to a tentative arrangement limiting steel imports from Europe. But the domestic steel industry, which had filed unfair trading charges early this year, rejected the plan.

"To date, several U.S. producers have indicated a preference to see the cases to conclusion," Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said Wednesday. "While I disagree with their assessment, it is up to the producers themselves to evaluate what method of relief from unfair trade is in their best interest."

The new ruling is a further step toward imposition of penalty duties aimed at offsetting the subsidies.

Before those countervailing duties can be imposed, the U.S. International Trade Commission must determine that the imports injure or threaten to injure the domestic industry. That ruling is not due until Oct. 12.

The commission has already issued a preliminary finding that the imports might be injuring the domestic steel industry.

Countries cited in the ruling are West Germany, France, Italy, Great Britain, Belgium and Luxembourg, all members of the European Economic Community.

The Netherlands had also been included in the preliminary finding, as had Brazil and South Africa.

The investigation against Brazil was suspended Tuesday after that nation agreed to impose an export tax offsetting the subsidy on plate exports to the United States, the department said.

It said the Netherlands and South Africa were found not to be subsidizing steel exports to this country.

In addition to U.S. Steel, steelmakers who brought the original complaints are Bethlehem Steel Corp., Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., National Steel Corp., Republic Steel Corp., Inland Steel Corp. and Cyclops Steel Corp.

Gold price uprears in London

LONDON (AP) — Gold prices in Europe soared to their highest levels since last Dec. 18 in early trading today, jumping more than $17 an ounce from the overnight close. The dollar opened stronger against all major currencies.

Gold opened in London at an 8-month high of $415.25 an ounce, up sharply from $398 an ounce at the close Wednesday. The opening price in Zurich was $416.75 an ounce, up from 399.50.

London's five major bullion dealers fixed their recommended mid-morning gold price at $417.50 an ounce, up from $401 at the previous fix.

Dealers attributed gold's renewed surge, which overtook New York's overnight close of $407.90 anounce, to continuing effects of lower interest rates. They also cited increased Iran-Iraq tension in the Middle East.

Gold had risen $70 in a week on declining interest rates until profit-taking pushed it back below $400 an ounce at the close Wednesday in Europe.

In Hong Kong, gold shot up $30.19 an ounce to close at $429.51 compared with $399.32 Wednesday.

Silver followed gold up today, trading in London at $8.25 an ounce, compared with $7.82 at the close Wednesday.

Meanwhile, dealers said the dollar's firm showing apparently reflected market expectations that the U.S. discount rate would not be cut this week.

In Tokyo, where banks close before trading begins in Europe, the dollar firmed slightly after dropping for six straight sessions. The U.S. currency closed at 252.45 yen, up one yen from Wednesday.

The dollar rose in London against the British pound, which cost $1.7575 in early trading compared with $1.7657 at the close Wednesday.

Other mid-morning dollar rates compared with late Wednesday:

2.4353 West German marks, up from 2.4200.

2.0547 Swiss francs, up from 2.0380.

6.8575 French francs, up from 6.8037.

1,378.00 Italian lire, up from 1,369.15.

2.6770 Dutch guiders, up from 2.6545.

1.2357 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2318.

Oil jobbers fighting 'the big guys' for survival

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Small, independent oil marketers — the people who distribute gasoline to service stations, convenience stores, truck stops and other retail outlets — think they may have a fight on their hands.

Normally, they handle up to 80 percent of the volume of gasoline sales, but now, the majors are muscling in on their territory. It's a fight for economic survival between the big guys and the jobbers, as the oil marketers call themselves.

About 125 jobbers from all over the state met here yesterday for a district meeting of the Texas Oil Marketers Association (TOMA). They shared ideas on how to stay in business, and how to handle the new trend — cash discount pricing.

According to TOMA president Bill H. Bailey, himself a jobber in East Texas, not only is the economic downturn a problem, but consumer conservation has affected business also. Gasoline consumption is down by at least 15 percent.

The newest threat to jobbers' survival comes from their suppliers, however — the very people from whom they obtain their product to sell.

The suppliers, major oil companies like Texaco, Exxon or Shell, have announced new programs to offer customers discounts for cash purchases in lieu of credit cards. The jobbers and service stations, meanwhile, are having to pay a 3 percent surcharge, for example, on every credit card purchase, thereby "losing" 3 percent of each sale.

"They tried in the past to make dealers and jobbers pay for the cost of credit cards, as opposed to a direct charge to the credit card holder," explained Bill Kent, TOMA district director and head of Kent Oil of Midland.

"As competitive as the gasoline business is, dealers can't absorb that cost, and will be forced to offset it."

"Suppliers have come up with this idea, but it looks like it'll really fall on the shoulders of the marketers to implement it," Bailey said.

Jobbers are faced with a choice: either pass the charge along to the customer, encourage him to pay cash and receive a discount, or absorb the surcharge themselves.

The small, unbranded jobbers, such as convenience store outlets, don't have credit cards and won't be affected by the trend, which is being tested nationwide.

But the small jobber which does offer credit card service wil be forced to meet the majors' lowering prices. Jobbers are under tremendous price pressures, Bailey said, although he would not predict a price war.

This in itself is cause for concern, he said. Small companies can't hope to compete with the major on the same level.

According to Bailey, jobbers are in competition with their suppliers for the first time. "The majors are jockeying for position in the market place and the independent jobber is making whatever moves he has to," by lowering already low prices and running cost-efficient organizations.

In certain areas of the state and nation, major oil companies are taking their gasoline directly from the rack to the streets (to service stations). They are moving up to 60 percent of their product directly to retail outlets, bypassing the jobbers.

Formerly, they would move 90 percent of it through jobbers or wholesalers, Bailey said.

"The jobber today is doing whatever he can to survive," he said. He hopes the majors will see that it's cheaper in the long run to work through the jobbers, but he said he foresees more small jobbers merging with larger ones, or being absorbed by major oil companies, if they are not run out of business outright by economic factors.

High interest rates have already "severely impacted" Texas jobbers, he added.

Kent said some majors are already scrambling for their part of the market share.

Some of them are going back to the marketing techniques of the "good 'ole days" of the 1950s and '60s, offering their customers a free car wash or merchandise such as glassware with every fill-up.

As a result of the competition, Kent thinks already low prices will probably go lower in the future.

The vast majority of service station operators are local, independent businessmen, Kent said, who are "on the front lines" of the gasoline market. Often they are blamed by customers for price-hikes, when they have no control over it. "The suppliers dictate how much we can buy, when it is available, and at what price," Kent added.

Jobbers and dealers own some service stations; others are leased from the major refiners. Local dealers may purchase their gasoline from either the majors, as is ususally the case in metropolitan areas, or from jobbers, as is usual in West Texas, he said.

French dock hands load big trouble for Dresser Industries

LE HAVRE, France (AP) — Dock workers loaded three compressors destined for the Soviet natural gas pipeline aboard a French freighter today in the first Western European shipment of U.S. embargoed equipment for the project.

The three compressors were built by Dresser France, a wholly owned subsidiary of Dressel Industries Inc., of Dallas, Texas. They were loaded on the freighter Borodine, which is scheduled to leave the port of Le Havre later today for Riga, the capital of Soviet Latvia

Dresser France said Tuesday it would fulfill its contract with the Soviet Union after receiving a requisition order to do so from the French government. Under French law, the government can requisition the services of private companies if those services are judged to be in the national interest.

Sources in Washington said President Reagan will blacklist the French subsidiary if it ships the equipment to the Soviets in defiance of his pipeline embargo. Such a move would bar the French subsidiary from importing specific items and technology from its parent company, or from any other American suppliers of the same items, said the sources, who declined to be identified.

Dresser Industries complained it was caught "between a rock and a hard place" because of the two government' conflicting orders.

There were no immediate comments from the French government about the delivery of Dresser's compressors or Reagan's threat to impose sanctions against the firm. A French government spokesman said the pipeline issue was not discussed at Wednesday's weekly Cabinet session.

However, labor unions at Dresser France expressed concern today about possible U.S. sanctions and demanded a meeting with management to discuss the situation.

"Reagan wants to make an example of Dresser-France," a union spokesman said. "More than ever, we must remain vigilant and prepare ourselves for a tough battle to guarantee our jobs."

Union employees at Dresser demonstrated at the docks of Le Havre on Tuesday to protest the U.S. embargo. The unions claim 260 workers would have been laid off if the embargo had been honored.

The three compressors are the first of 21 compressors Dresser France is to provide for the 3,500-mile pipeline that is scheduled to begin delivering natural gas from Siberia to Western Europe sometime in 1984.

In December, Reagan prohibited U.S. firms from supplying equipment for the pipeline in retaliation for Soviet support of the martial law crackdown in Poland. He extended the embargo in June to include foreign companies munufacturing equipment or technology under U.S. license.

Four French firms, along with companies in Britian, West Germany and Italy, hold the bulk of the $11 billion in Soviet piepline contracts. The governments of those four countries have said they intend to see that the contracts are honored.

The British engineering firm John Brown Ltd, a subsidiary of a U.S. firm, is scheduled to make a second delivery of embargoed equipment in the next few days. A Soviet ship is due at Glasglow on Sunday or Monday to pick up six of the 21 gas turbines the company is building for the pipeline.

The Dresser compressors originally were to have been loaded Wednesday. No explanation was given for the one-day delay.

Reagan said Wednesday he would be studying specific actions to take against firms that defy the embargo. Larry Speakes, the White House deputy press secretary, said an announcement probably will be made later in the week.

Western European governments have contended the U.S. embargo is illegal and that their nations need the thousands of jobs provided by the pipeline contracts.

American officials have argued that the Soviet military budget will benefit from the $10 billion a year Moscow is expected to earn from the pipeline. The United States has threatened court action against firms violating the embargo.

The European-U.S. dispute represents the most fundamental rift in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization alliance since its creation at the end of World War II.

To pay debts Mexico sells U.S. crude at 'special prices'

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico will sell the United States 40 million barrels of oil at special prices in return for financial help, and move to maintain supplies of basic goods in border towns whose shelves have been cleared by Americans seeking cheap-peso bargains, the government said Wednesday.

Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog announced the additional oil sale as part of a program to keep the nation afloat in the current economic crisis and avoid default on its $80 billion foreign debt, largest among developing countries.

The shipments of top-grade Isthmus crude will cover an advance of $1 billion made by the United States last week as Silva Herzog and other Mexican officials met with international bankers to reschedule debt payments.

Under the agreement, signed Tuesday with the U.S. Department of Energy, the state Pemex oil monopoly will ship 60,000 barrels of additional oil a day during the last quarter of 1982, 120,000 during the first quarter of 1983, 140,000 during the second quarter and 120,000 during the third quarter.

Silva Herzog said the price would fluctuate with international levels, but would cost no more than $35 a barrel and no less than $25. Mexico currently sells Isthmus crude at $32 a barrel.

The oil is destined for the U.S. strategic petroleum reserve, and sources said the additional supplies will make Mexico the largest supplier of the reserve.

The nation was the largest single supplier of crude oil to the United States in May, the latest month for which statistics are available, shipping a total of 767,000 barrels a day.

The government says about 50 percent of oil exports in 1982 have been to the United States. According to unofficial estimates, total Mexican oil production is estimated at 2,850,000 barrels a day, with daily domestic consumption of 1,150,000 barrels.

There were unconfirmed reports that U.S. officials sought price concessions as a condition for providing financial aid in Mexico's worst financial crisis since the 1910-1920 revolution. U.S. and Mexican officials here would not comment on the reports.

A $10 billion shortfall in revenues — partly the result of the world oil glut that has sharply reduced oil revenues — is causing a severe shortage of dollars. With its huge debt Mexico cannot borrow as readily as before, and is having trouble raising the $14-$17 billion it needs this year to meet payments due on the debt.

Americans have flooded across the border to take advantage of lower-priced food, gasoline, leather and other goods since the peso was devalued Aug. 5 for the second time this year. The currency, which had been worth about 49 to the dollar, has gone as low as 130 since the devaluation and now hovers around 100 to the dollar.

The hordes of American shoppers have caused shortages of basic goods in some Mexican border cities.

Mexican Commerce Department officials met on Tuesday with representatives of chambers of commerce from Mexican cities along the 1,760 mile border. The semi-official newspaper El Nacional said Wednesday that the Commerce Department would announce a plan soon to prevent lack of supplies on the border, but no details were available from department officials.

Business in U.S. border towns, where most stores accept pesos and depend heavily on Mexican trade, also has suffered because many Mexicans can no longer afford to shop there.

U.S. officials in El Paso, Texas, reported an increase in the flow of illegal aliens into the United States from Mexico. The U.S. Border Patrol said it was rounding up record numbers of illegal aliens, apparently crossing the Rio Grande to seek jobs and escape the financial crunch.

The finapcial crisis developed after a period of oil-financed prosperity in the late 1970s. The nation, buoyed by huge oil reserves, began an ambitious development program, financed by foreign borrowing.

The boom was halted by the oil glut and by lower prices for such other key commodities as silver and coffee.

Estimates indicate there will be one million more jobless by the end of the year in a country where 40 percent of working-age people are out of work or underemployed. Prices are expected to rise beyond the 60 percent inflation predicted earlier for 1982, and wages will lag behind.

Intrest rate break may signal change in investment tactics

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The dramatic break in high interest rates is signaling not only a possible turn for the nation's economy but also a change in the investment tactics of many Americans.

Gone, at least for the moment, is the prospect of rising income from interest on six-month and 2½-year savings certificates. And the same goes for money-market mutual funds, the superstar growth investment of the past two years.

The expectation that interest rates will not bounce back up this year, and that rates might drop somewhat more, has charged Wall Street with enthusiasm for more than a week.

Henry Kaufman, chief economist of Salomon Brothers investment firm and Wall Street's chief pessimist, abruptly changed his view on which direction interest rates will take in the year ahead: he now forecasts more declines. Many other economists agree. Partly in reaction to that bullish outlook, stock prices soared and bond prices jumped.

Some investment advisers say that means people should consider moving more of their money out of short-term instruments such as six-month certificates and money market funds into bonds or other longer-term investments to lock in current yields.

Money in passbook savings accounts and NOW accounts will not be directly affected by the drop in open-market interest rates because the rates paid on those investments are limited by federal law.

The most immediate effect will be felt on the money-market mutual funds, whose startling growth was due mainly to the sudden rise in interest rates three years ago. The pile of money in those 242 funds is now around $230 billion.

Some analysts think as much as $50 billion will soon leave the funds, headed back into investments they came from, such as stocks and bonds.

So, as interest rates decline, the yields of money funds lag behind other investments because of the length of maturities in the funds' portfolios.

While the money funds are still paying about 11 percent on a one-week average, the drop will begin appearing in about one month. Some analysts think the rates will average less than 9 percent before long.

The popular six-month savings certificates that are tied to returns on Treasury bills also are likely to show less appeal for investors. The rate that banks and savings institutions pay on those certificates dropped this week to 10.355 percent from the previous 10.952 percent, and further declines are expected in the weeks ahead.

Lower interest rates already have sparked a renewed interest in gold.

Early this week the price of gold on the Commodity Exchange in New York spurted above $400 an ounce — the highest level in eight months. As recently as two weeks ago gold was holding at $335 an ounce. The drop in interest rates reduced the cost of financing purchases of gold. Silver prices have risen for the same reason.

The real estate market, too, may pick up if home mortgage rates come down significantly in the weeks ahead. Home buying also would be helped by an improvement in the financial condition of the nation's savings and loan associations and mutual savings banks, which historically have been important mortgage lenders.

The high cost of deposits and other short-term funds, and the paltry yields on old, low-interest-rate loans, have pinched the savings institutions, and some have collapsed.

One by-product of a revived housing market could be a surge in demand for commercial real estate. That, combined with a drop of two percentage points in long-term interest rates, would likely increase the value of any rented-up office building, shopping center or warehouse.

Steelmakers say DOC bowed to foreign pressure

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's two largest steelmakers say the Commerce Department bowed to foreign pressure and was too lenient in its findings of unfair trade by European steel producers.

Spokesmen for United States Steel Corp. and Bethlehem Steel Corp. said Wednesday's Commerce Department decision that six European nations illegally subsidized steel shipped to the United States underestimated the level of aid from foreign governments.

The department responded by saying that in-depth field investigations in the last two months have shown that foreign steel subsidies are lower than previously believed.

"This disparity reflects the pressures that are undoubtedly being brought to bear" on the Reagan administration by the European Community, U.S. Steel Chairman David Roderick said in a statement.

"The results of the Commerce Department findings appear to be an effort to bail the European steel industry out of the difficulty that it created by its unfair trade practices in this country," he said.

A spokesman for Bethlehem Steel Corp. said the subsidy findings were at odds with evidence the company presented to the department.

"Bethlehem provided the Commerce Department with well-documented information that clearly supported higher subsidy valuations," said the spokesman, who asked to remain unidentified.

"We are, therefore disappointed that the final determinations ... are substantially lower than the preliminary determinations announced June 11," the spokesman said.

In its final ruling, the department said steel products shipped here by 13 European steelmakers were subsidized by their governments through a variety of means, including low-cost loans.

It said the subsidies ranged up to 26 percent of the value of the imports. But the department's preliminary decision in June said the subsidies reached a high of 40 percent.

Roderick said some of the findings may be appealed to the Court of International Trade to redress "what we perceive to be an unjust, unjustifiable and inequitable determination."

Gary Horlick, deputy assistant commerce secretary for import administration, said at a news conference earlier that in the preliminary phase of the investigations, "you assume the worst so you don't let someone off the hook."

He said the main reason the rates differ is that "since June we've had an opportunity to gather more information, to go into the field and check it out." Overall, the subsidy levels were generally lower, he said.

Officials from the Commerce Department and the European Community agreed earlier this month to a tentative arrangement limiting steel imports from Europe. But the domestic steel industry, which had filed unfair trade charges early this year, rejected the plan.

"To date, several U.S. producers have indicated a preference to see the cases to conclusion," Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said Wednesday. "While I disagree with their assessment, it is up to the producers themselves to evaluate what method of relief from unfair trade is in their best interest."

The new ruling is a further step toward imposition of penalty duties aimed at offsetting the subsidies.

Before those countervailing duties can be imposed, the U.S. International Trade Commission must determine that the imports injure or threaten to injure the domestic industry. That ruling is not due until Oct. 12.

The commission has already issued a preliminary finding that the imports might be injuring the domestic steel industry.

Countries cited in the ruling are West Germany, France, Italy, Great Britain, Belgium and Luxembourg, all members of the European Economic Community.

The Netherlands had also been included in the preliminary finding, as had Brazil and South Africa.

The investigation against Brazil was suspended Tuesday after that nation agreed to impose an export tax offsetting the subsidy on plate exports to the United States, the department said.

It said the Netherlands and South Africa were found not to be subsidizing steel exports to this country.

In addition to U.S. Steel, steelmakers who brought the original complaints are Bethlehem Steel Corp., Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., National Steel Corp., Republic Steel Corp., Inland Steel Corp. and Cyclops Steel Corp.

Gold price uprears in London

LONDON (AP) — Gold prices in Europe soared to their highest levels since last Dec. 18 in early trading today, jumping more than $17 an ounce from the overnight close. The dollar opened stronger against all major currencies.

Gold opened in London at an 8-month high of $415.25 an ounce, up sharply from $398 an ounce at the close Wednesday. The opening price in Zurich was $416.75 an ounce, up from 399.50.

London's five major bullion dealers fixed their recommended mid-morning gold price at $417.50 an ounce, up from $401 at the previous fix.

Dealers attributed gold's renewed surge, which overtook New York's overnight close of $407.90 anounce, to continuing effects of lower interest rates. They also cited increased Iran-Iraq tension in the Middle East.

Gold had risen $70 in a week on declining interest rates until profit-taking pushed it back below $400 an ounce at the close Wednesday in Europe.

In Hong Kong, gold shot up $30.19 an ounce to close at $429.51 compared with $399.32 Wednesday.

Silver followed gold up today, trading in London at $8.25 an ounce, compared with $7.82 at the close Wednesday.

Meanwhile, dealers said the dollar's firm showing apparently reflected market expectations that the U.S. discount rate would not be cut this week.

In Tokyo, where banks close before trading begins in Europe, the dollar firmed slightly after dropping for six straight sessions. The U.S. currency closed at 252.45 yen, up one yen from Wednesday.

The dollar rose in London against the British pound, which cost $1.7575 in early trading compared with $1.7657 at the close Wednesday.

Other mid-morning dollar rates compared with late Wednesday:

2.4353 West German marks, up from 2.4200.

2.0547 Swiss francs, up from 2.0380.

6.8575 French francs, up from 6.8037.

1,378.00 Italian lire, up from 1,369.15.

2.6770 Dutch guiders, up from 2.6545.

1.2357 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2318.

While Wall Street whistles happy tune industry tightens belts

By The Associated Press

Allis-Chalmers Corp. is reducing base pay for its workers by 10 percent, Bethlehem Steel Corp. is curtailing steelmaking operations in Pennsylvania, and Exxon Co. USA is halting gasoline sales in all or part of five states as companies cope with the recession.

However, an analyst predicted Wednesday that conditions in the troubled U.S. auto industry could turn around dramatically, with automakers posting profits of $900 million this year, $5.5 billion next year and $7.4 billion in 1984.

Allis-Chalmers said Wednesday its 10 percent pay cuts would affect 8,000 salaried employees of the processing equipment company. Chairman David C. Scott said the length of the pay cuts would depend on the economy.

Bethlehem Steel cited a depressed market and high levels of imported steel for its decision to close an electric furnace melt shop, primary mills and steel preparation facilities in Johnstown, Pa. About 700 workers are to lose their jobs.

In Houston, Exxon said it will stop selling gas and heating oil in Kentucky, Ohio, Vermont, parts of western Massachusetts and most of New York. Exxon blamed low demand and excess refining capacity. The jobs of about 200 Exxon marketing employees will be eliminated, the company said.

Exxon also said it would reduce the capacity of its Bayway refinery near Linden, N.J., to 100,000 barrels per day from the current 265,000 barrels daily. The company could not say how many of the 1,470 jobs at the refinery would be eliminated.

In the week ended Aug. 20, the nation's refineries operated at 68.8 percent of capacity compared with 70.9 percent a week earlier and 71.5 percent a year ago, the American Petroleum Institute reported.

Meanwhile, Du Pont Co., based in Wilmington, Del., said professional and management employees could voluntarily terminate their service with Du Pont under a special one-time program. The company said the program is designed to accelerate normal attrition.

However, in Detroit, analyst David Healy of Drexel, Burnham Lambert Inc. told the Automotive News World Congress that his optimistic sales and profit picture for the next two years stems from an expected economic recovery, lower interest rates and the large number of old cars on the roads.

In other economic news:

—The government said foreign investments in the United States grew at a record 31.3 percent last year, but American investments in other countries rose at the smallest rate since World War II.

The Commerce Department said foreign investment in the United States increased $21.4 billion to $89.8 billion at the end of last year. The amount of U.S. investments overseas rose $11.8 billion, or 5.5 percent, to $227.3 billion at the end of 1981.

—The Cities Service Co. board of directors Wednesday night accepted Occidental Petroleum Corp.'s offer, valued by analysts at $4.3 billion, to buy Cities and create the eighth-largest U.S. oil company. The agreement is subject to review by either the Justice Department or the Federal Trade Commission and by shareholders of both companies.

If the merger is completed, the new company would rank in annual sales as the nation's 12th-biggest industrial concern and the eighth-largest oil company behind Atlantic Richfield Co. Occidental currently is the 13th-largest oil company and Cities ranks No. 20.

Chevron economist predicts little demand for synthetic fuel

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. (AP) — Because world oil consumption will rise only slightly over the next 15 to 20 years, there will be little demand for synthetic fuels through the rest of the century, Chevron economists predict.

The company's 1982 predictions hold little promise for Western Slope residents hoping to capitalize on oil shale development.

Chevron, a subsidiary of Standard Oil Co. of California, predicts the price of oil will lie in the range of $35 to $55 per barrel in the year 2000.

But because shale oil costs $55 to $65 per barrel to produce, the company says, there likely will be little demand for the synthetic fuel.

"Synthetics will begin to come on around the year 2000 but probably won't play a major role," Dan Johnson, a Chevron Shale Oil Co. lobbyist and public affairs representative from Denver, told the Western Slope Press Association Tuesday night.

On Wednesday, Eugene Harrison, community affairs manager for Chevron's proposed oil shale project near DeBeque, said the company will continue its project development planning.

Chevron currently is building a semiworks plant in Salt Lake City to test its technology for processing shale.

"Our technical side is working hard to lower that cost from $55 to $65 a barrel," Harrison said.

To people counting on shale oil development, Harrison said: "We've been saying this all along — don't ever get out ahead of us. Don't make your suppositions based on what you think we will do."

Johnson, armed with the company's economic predictions compiled this summer, said they "probably set synfuels back 5 or 10 years."

"The outlook is very cautious," he said. "All I can say is that the economics are out of reach right now. It's just too expensive."

Union Oil Co. of California currently is the only company building a commercial-size shale oil project. Its 10,000-barrel-per-day mine and plant is scheduled for completion next summer, and Union has $400 million in federal price guarantees.

Last year, the oil shale industry appeared to be a going concern. But two projects announced suspensions in 1981 and on May 2 Exxon closed down its Colony project, idling 2,100 workers.

High interest rates and changing predictions contributed to the companies' decisions.

Johnson said Chevron's 1982 predictions differ widely from previous projections, but noted that "economic forecasting has made astrology respectable."

A major disruption in foreign oil supplies would change the picture, he noted.

Reasons for Chevron's predictions of only slightly increased demand for oil through the year 2000 range from conservation by the public to increased use of coal and other fuels, Johnson said.

Solar energy will become more important in the 1990s, he said, especially if breakthroughs can be found in developing photovoltaic cells.

Conoco may sell North Sea interest to help Du Pont

NEW YORK (AP) — Conoco Inc. said it is considering selling part of its interest in the North Sea oil fields as part of a plan to raise cash for Du Pont Co., its debt-strapped parent company.

"We are evaluating our assets worldwide, including the United States, with the intent of making selective sales that are compatible with Du Pont's corporate goals," said Vincent Robertiello, a Conoco spokesman in Stamford, Conn.

Robertiello said some of Conoco's assets in the United Kingdom are part of the overall evaluation, although he said he knew of no formal discussions with potential buyers.

Du Pont paid $7.8 billion for Conoco, and has said it intends to raise $2 billion in the next three years by selling some Conoco assets. Faith Wohl, a spokeswoman for Du Pont, said the goal for sales of Conoco assets this year was $350 million.

The Du Pont takeover, completed last September, was the largest in U.S. history.

The only significant deal made in 1982 involving Conoco assets is a preliminary agreement to sell the company's refinery in Paramount, Calif., a marine terminal at Wilmington, Calif., and a tank farm at Lakewood, Calif. Ms. Wohl said the sales price for those facilities will not be disclosed until the deal is closed.

Robertiello said Conoco operates in more than 20 countries, but he could not be more specific about which assets are on the sales block.

Conoco produced an average of 55,380 barrels of crude oil daily from its interest in four North Sea fields last year, up from 6,132 two years earlier, according to Du Pont's 1981 annual report to shareholders. Conoco also owns a 130,000-barrels-per-day refinery in England, but it is expected to hold that property.

Conoco also operates in Libya as one of three American partners in the Oasis Oil Co. of Libya. Earlier this year Conoco said it was reviewing its operations there after Exxon Corp. withdrew from its Libyan oil operations and Mobil Corp. announced that it also was planning to leave that north African nation.

Midland High to meet Dallas South Oak Cliff

Scrimmage game will be first opportunity to test new offense

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

For awhile this winter it looked like Midland High might not have an opponent for its yearly scrimmage because Brownwood coach Gordon Woods had to pull his boys out of the game. That started Bulldog coach Pat Culpepper's search for a new foe and the result was Dallas South Oak Cliff.

"Brownwood cancelled the scrimmage in February because Coach Woods had already made arrangements to scrimmage against Abilene (High)," said Culpepper. "It threw us into quite a quandry to find an opponent. We informed the Texas High School Coaches Association and they advertised in Texas Coach and sent out some fliers for us. South Oak Cliff was the only one that was close that answered because they needed a scrimmage also."

Once Culpepper found a game, he needed a place and a time to play it and that will be Friday night at 6 in Abilene at Shotwell Stadium. "Thanks to the goodness of Shorty Lawson (Abilene athletic director), we'll be playing at Shotwell," said Culpepper. "He was very gracious."

And that left the final arrangement that needed to be made. What kind of format would be used in the game? The answer: Each team will be given a 20-play offensive series in the first half of the scrimmage followed by a short break. When MHS and DSOC return to the field, they'll "play an actual half with kickoffs and chains, a game situation," said Culpepper.

THE SCRIMMAGE gives Culpepper and his coaching staff a badly needed opportunity to test a new offensive attack. Running out of the Wing-T with a lot of shifting backs, the Bulldogs will be using "misdirection" to overcome a lack of size. It will also be a time to see if the eight-man line installed last season has improved with a year's experience. South Oak Cliff should provide a strong test for his players.

"South Oak Cliff has perennially been a top city school in Dallas," said Culpepper. "You have Plano and Lake Highlands, and of course Highland Park. But South Oak Cliff has probably sent as many players on to college as any other school and has had a winning team 10 of the last 11 years.

"I hope we can handle the team speed South Oak Cliff is supposed to have. The only information I have on their team is from preseason magazines," said Culpepper. "They're supposed to have both speed and size on us and I'm anxious to see how we're going to cope with it and find out if spirit, hustle, discipline, condition, the type of offense we run and the eight-man line will overcome lack of size."

According to Culpepper, South Oak Cliff seems to be high on the scrimmage game, one of the few games the that will bring the Golden Bears out of town. "They're supposed to be bringing several buses. They don't have many out-of-town opponents because of the availability of schools in Dallas," said Culpepper.

As to his lineup, from spring drills and the recently concluded two-a-day workouts, Culpepper feels he has the players he needs to go with this season of which only two are underclassmen.

"I think we're pretty well set," he said. "We don't have many non-seniors starting right now — just two of them — so everybody else has experience and has been working on their position since spring. We'll be working on finding backups down there, that's for sure."

One recent world event which struck Culpepper as an adequate comparison to his 1982 team is the Argentina-Great Britain war. Culpepper described a picture he saw of inexperienced Argentinian troops with high spirits and full of enthusiasim ready to take on the Queen's elite. At a later date, most of those troops were hauled off as P.O.W.'s in defeat. "I keep seeing those pictures and keep thinking it could be us," said Culpepper.

On the other side of the coin, however, Culpepper acknowledged the accomplishments of a small underdog who overcame seemingly insurmountable odds. His name was David and he slew Goliath.

"I remember hearing a story about David," said Culpepper. "Before he faced Goliath, David said 'He may be big, but that just means I can't miss him.'"

Cubs bomb Diablos, 14-5; lead TL West by three

EL PASO — The Midland Cubs extended their Texas League Western Division lead to three games Wednesday night with a 14-5 victory over first half winner El Paso at Dudley Field.

The Cubs, leading 3-2 after four innings, exploded for eight runs in the top of the fifth to build up a commanding 11-2 lead and helped starting pitcher Carlos Gil claim the victory for a 7-6 record.

With the game tied at 1-1 after two, Carlos Lezcano gave Midland the lead for good with a two-run home run over the left field fence, his 11th round-tripper of the year.

Lezcano, who was 3-for-6 on the night for four RBI, added two of the Cubs' eight runs in the fifth with his second extra-base hit of the game, a double.

Henry Cotto, who held the hottest bat for the Cubs throughout the night, led a 21-hit attack with his 4-for-5 performance while Carmelo Martinez and Javier Fierro each went 3-for-6. Mike Kelley, Joe Carter and Dave Owen added two hits apiece.

Two El Paso runs were the result of home runs off of Gil. Mark Johnston hit a solo blast in the third and Eric Peyton hit for a lone tally in the seventh.

Gil, despite getting the victory, was upset by not being allowed to finish the game. With one gone in the ninth inning, he was pulled for reliever Rob Blyth. Bob Schroeck was pulled in the fifth inning after facing five batters without recording an out.

With two games remaining in the El Paso series, Midland holds a three-game lead over the Diablos and is up by 5½ over San Antonio. In tonight's Game 4, the Cubs will hurl Jon Perlman, 13-6, at the Diablos while El Paso will counter with Dan Burns, 9-4.

In Monday night's game against the Diablos, Cubs third baseman Fritz Connally was struck in the hand by a pitch and has been sidelined until Friday night's final Midland-El Paso game.

According to reports, Connally's right hand, which was injured last week, was bruised and not broken and doesn't cause a serious threat to his finishing the season.

In other Texas League action Wednesday night, Amarillo whipped San Antonio, 16-5, Tulsa slipped past Shreveport, 6-5, and Arkansas beat Jackson, 7-3.

Depth could key Tornadoes season

By CHAD PUELRING
Sports Writer

If the Lamesa Tornadoes are going to make any noise in District 2-AAAA they will have to depend on their returning starters.

And for the 14 returning starters from last year's squad, being angry at not winning a game last year should provide the incentive.

Last year's opponents probably considered the Tornadoes more of a breeze than anything else, but this year the prospects look much brighter.

"Team speed, returning starters and depth are our strenghts," coach Jim Warren said.

Did he say depth?

The nemesis for every team is depth but for Lamesa it will be an asset. That alone should strike fear in the hearts of the Tornadoes' opponents.

DEPTH IS the kind of tool that becomes especially important at the end of the season when everyone is hurting from a seemingly relentless schedule. If indeed depth pays off for the Tornadoes, they could knock someone out of the district race because they should have a fresh team all year long.

What a luxury!

"People are putting us to finish in the middle of the district race this year," Warren said. "But I'll tell you, we can beat anyone on our schedule."

One of the key players for the Tornadoes will be senior Steve Alexander. Last year Alexander rushed for more than 700 yards, not bad for a winless club.

WARREN SAID Lamesa will again run out of the I formation, but this year there will be a new look to the Tor attack.

"We will throw more this year," Warren said.

In the offensive line, Steve Teague will return. At 6-foot, 200 pounds, the senior will see action at a tackle position on both offense and defense.

With his size and quickness, Warren considers Teague and Alexander two of his top candidates for All-District honors.

The third is Mark Murphy. The junior will see action at offensive guard and defensive linebacker for the Tornadoes. Murphy is 6-foot-2, 190 pounds.

WITH THE depth Lamesa enjoys this year, Warren is not too concerned with how many players will play on both sides of the line, but he's sure that the talents of Alexander, Teague and Murphy can't be contained and he anticipates the trio will see a lot of playing time.

One transfer that is expected to crack the starting lineup is Leroy Rodriquez. The former Odessa High player will see action at linebacker and running back for his new team.

Like most coaches, Warren likes the new UIL two-team playoff system.

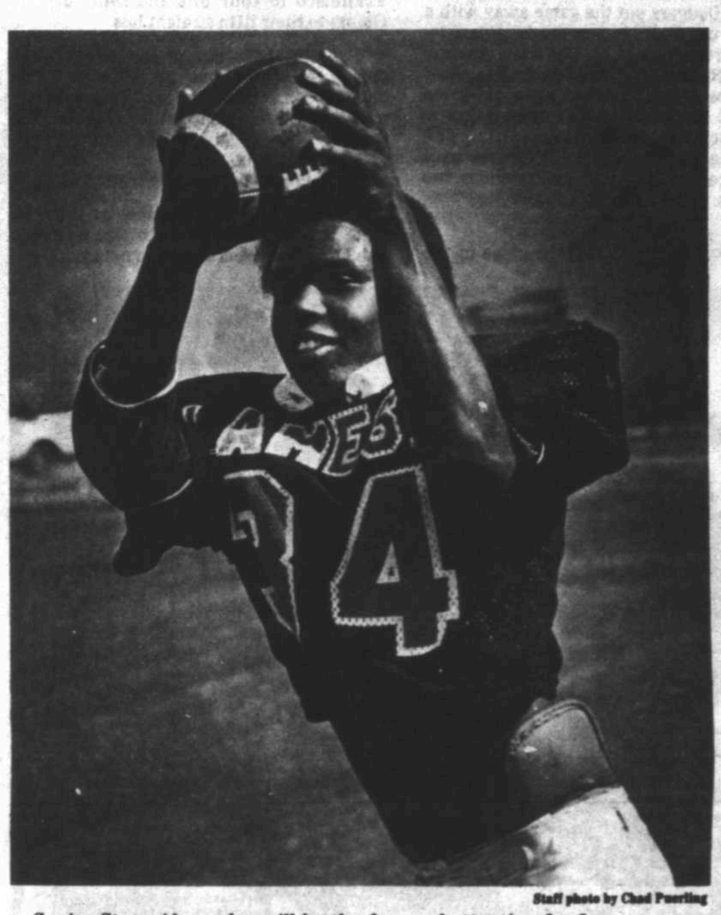

"It gives a good second place team a chance to make some noise down the road," he said. "It will also help to keep fan interest high."

BUT THE third year coach realizes that his teams chances of finishing in the top two is slim.

"We have a good team," he said, "but we may be a year away from contention."

Warren, who became athletic director at Lamesa during the summer, sees San Angelo Lakeview as the clear favorite in District 2-AAAA.

After an 0-10 season, it would be easy for Lamesa to surprise a few people this year, but with the Tornadoes' seasoned squad they will probably do more than just surprise a few people.

Senior Steve Alexander will be the focus of attention for Lamesa opponents this year as he will be the tailback running from the I formation for the Tornadoes. Lamesa will have a mature squad with 14 retutrning starters from last season's club.

White may lose punting job to free-agent rookie

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Dallas Cowboys Coach Tom Landry says free-agent rookie Tom Striegel is the top candidate to replace starting quarterback Danny White as the team's punter.

"Striegel is ahead right now," Landry said Wednesday. "He has the best performance under pressure in games. He has been the most consistent and that's what we're looking for. But we have a couple of more pre-season games to determine if we're going to replace Danny White."

Both Striegel and fellow free-agent rookie David Finzer, of DePauw, are being considered to replace White.

Landry has said for three seasons he would like to replace White as punter so he could concentrate on quarterbacking, but White said he doesn't mind the extra job.

Striegel, from Southern Illinois, has averaged 42 yards on four punts in the Cowboys' first two pre-season games, while Finzer has two punts for a 40-yard average.

"George Steinbrenner has trouble speaking the truth. It's been proven. He was hauled into federal court in Washington and they proved there that he doesn't speak the truth. Steinbrenner would be better off looking after his own business. He's been late making payments to other teams." California Angels' outfielder Reggie Jackson, reacting to allegations by Steinbrenner that members of the Angels use illegal bats at the plate.

"If anyone has financial problems, it might well be Reggie, because several New York restaurant owners have told me Reggie has an awful lot of unpaid checks at their restaurants. Personally, I would be very happy to take a polygraph test concerning my statement, if Reggie would care to do the same concerning whether he personally has illegal debts." — New York Yankees principal owner George Steinbrenner, reacting to California Angels' outfielder Reggie Jackson's reaction about Steinbrenner's allegation.

Connors is getting better with age

AP Special Correspondent

NEW YORK (AP) - Jimmy Connors, bent on wresting America's No.1 ranking from John McEnroe in the U.S. Open Championships beginning next week, says he is a better tennis player than when he ruled the world's courts 10 years ago.

"Physically, maybe no, but emotionally and psychologically, yes," the spunky Wimbledon titleholder said Wednesday, after arriving in New York to do some advance training on the hard courts at Flushing Meadow and to endorse a brand of shoes (Converse).

"Overall, I am sure I am better now. I feel fine and I am looking forward to playing in the Open."

Connors, who dominated the game during the mid-1970s but dropped back into the shadow of Sweden's Bjorn Borg and McEnroe, has had a resurgence at age 29. Not only did he beat McEnroe in the Wimbledon final but then beat Borg in two head-to-head matches.

Borg, who is not playing in the U.S. Open, also skipped Wimbledon, a tournament he had won five straight years, because rules demanded that he qualify after taking a long sebbatical in which he failed to compete in the required number of events.

"I think it will be hard for Bjorn to come back," Connors said. "While he wasn't playing for six months, the other guys were playing hard for six months. That's tough ground to make up."

During Borg's absence, Czechoslovakia's 22-year-old Ivan Lendl and Sweden's 18-year-old Mats Wilander, winner of the French Open title this year, have emerged as strong contenders for top honors.

"Lendl is another Borg -plays the same kind of game," Connors said. "It's not my kind of game. I am an attacker. With their top-spin shots, they give themselves wide margins of error. They engage in long rallies.

"Personally, I think Borg, at his best, is tougher than Lendl. Wilander is good but he still is very young. I can't see him as a serious factor at this time. In the future, sure; right now, no."

Borg had built up an advantage over Connors until this year, and McEnroe, having won the U.S. Open the last three years, had pushed his American rival back into the No.2 spot nationally.

Connors now has beaten McEnroe in their last three meetings and should rate at least an even bet against his younger rival at Flushing Meadow. Connors won the Open in 1974, 1976 and 1978 but failed to get to the finals the past three years.

His big year was 1974. He won both Wimbledon and the U.S. Open, crushing Ken Rosewall with the loss of only 14 games in the combined six sets.

"It was different then," he said. "I put mu head down and went straight at it. I am smarter now. I don't go berserk any more. I look forward to playing McEnroe. He gives everything from start to finish."

Bates to face fifth foe

David Bates, an Odessa boxer fighting out of Rick Fleetwood's Midland stable, will make his fifth appearance as a professional Friday at the Beaumont Civic Center in what will be his toughest fight to date.

As a pro, Bates has a 3-0-1 record and will be fighting in his third and probably final six-round fight before moving up to eight-round status. His opponent, Carmen Garcia from Houston, has a 20-10 record.

"It's going to be a tough fight," said Fleetwood. "He's (Garcia) tough and he punches hard. He's a pretty experienced fighter. The only thing I know about him was he was stopped in the seventh round by Kenneth Releford who is a former Texas golden gloves champion."

But, Fleetwood feels Bates is also "tough" and that "he needs to prove himself before he steps up to eight rounds. If he gets through this one OK we'll know if he's ready for eight rounds. David probably trains harder than any of the fighters (in his stable). If you weigh 160 pounds you'd better because those guys hit hard.

Lee Rebels to scrimmage Mustangs in Andrews

Dykes still looking for players to fill most starting positions

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

If you happen to know a football player at Midland Lee, you might give him a pat on the back and a word of encouragement. His fate may be sealed Friday night in Andrews when the Rebs take on the Mustangs in a formal scrimmage session.

Uncertainty seems to be the key word in the camp of Lee football coach Spike Dykes this year. And heading into the scrimmage with Andrews, one week prior to the opening of the 1982 football season, most of the positions are up for grabs. Most of those decisions of who will start against Lubbock Coronado, Sept. 3 at Memorial Stadium, will come from this scrimmage.

"It's an important scrimmage for us," notes Dykes. "We will be trying to select our starters. We don't have any starters back from last year, and things are up for grabs.

"I think we have a chance to be a good football team. There is some talent and the numbers from which to choose are good, but there just isn't much difference between individuals. We've got four fullbacks and seven or eight good running backs. However, none of them have been dominant over the others. We'll probably end up using a lot of players this year. Some can play defense and some offense and all can get plenty of rest. Our starting lineup might not mean very much this year. We have a lot of kids who can play, but we do need a few of them to come forward and assert themselves."

DYKES DID say that the starting quarterback slot will be decided between Mike Mercurio and Paul Cox on the basis of the scrimmage. Cox had a good spring while Mercurio missed some practice due to baseball. However, Mercurio guided a 90-yard scoring march for the only TD in the spring scrimmage.

"We may not even have a No. 1 quarterback," Dykes says. "We're going to be OK there regardless of who plays."

Still, it is expected that the defense will be where the fortunes of the Rebels rest this year. That's where they are strongest and have the most experience. Although no one returns as a starter, five players saw a good deal of action last year and figure to be somewhere on the field opening night.

Linebackers Reggie Ellis and Leonard Freeman both played some last year and cornerback Kevin Taylor, end John Denton and lineman Eric Cooper also had playing time on defense. Cooper started two games last season, but missed most of the season with an injury and was not a starter when the season ended. He is healthy this year and has been impressive in workouts.

The varsity scrimmage will will begin at 7:15 p.m. at Mustang Bowl and will be preceeded by the sophomore team or junior varsity squad against the Andrews JV at 5:30 p.m. A decision on which team would go to Andrews was to be made today. It was possible that the Lee JV might scrimmage the Lamesa varsity this week.

"We've really had some great workouts the past two weeks. We've had some good hot weather and the kids reported in better shape than any team since I've been here," Dykes commented. "I think — I hope — we got a lot accomplished. You never know until you play someone."

INEXPERIENCE IS the only obvious weakness of the Rebels, and for many of them this scrimmage will be the first real test under fire. Dykes expects his defensive team to be a pretty good unit this year, but he is probably hoping that the offensive team comes to the front early. Little offense was generated in the Maroon-White game last spring with only one TD recorded.

Andrews is always a good test for any team. After all, they have beaten Midland High the past two years in regular season games and are again expected to be a force in District 2-4A. Also Andrews has had a week longer in pads than Lee and that always makes a difference early in the season.

The final format of the scrimmage will be decided just prior to the two teams meeting, but it will probably consist of one team taking the ball for a series of plays in groups of 20 or 30. The scrimmage will not count on the records of either team.

Valenzuela hits first home run, leads Majors with 17 wins

By DENNIS D'AGOSTINO
Associated Press Writer

Fernando Valenzuela, the pitcher, and Fernando Valenzuela, the slugger, teamed up to put the Los Angeles Dodgers on top again in the National League West.

"I was very surprised," said Valenzuela, who became the major leagues' first 17-game winner and belted his first career league home run Wednesday night, lifting the Dodgers to an 11-3 triumph over the St. Louis Cardinals.

In other NL action, Philadelphia outlasted Atlanta, 11-9 in 10 innings, Chicago beat San Francisco 4-2, Houston held on to defeat New York 5-4, Cincinnati nipped Montreal 1-0, and Pittsburgh rallied to beat San Diego 7-6.

"I'd never hit one, not even in the minor leagues," said Valenzuela of his solo shot in the fourth inning off loser Steve Mura, 11-8, which followed a homer by Bill Russell. "I hit two one time in the Central League in Mexico."

Valenzuela improved his record to 17-9 as he fired a six-hitter.

"I've been telling everybody what an outstanding pitcher he is; it's no surprise," said Dodger Manager Tom Lasorda. "He's a great athlete. He gets tougher as he goes along."

Ken Landreaux aided Valenzuela by knocking in two runs with three hits. The Dodgers put the game away with a six-run ninth inning highlighted by two-run doubles by Steve Garvey and Bill Russell.

Los Angeles opened up a one-game lead in the NL West over Atlanta, which lost to Philadelphia. The Dodgers had trailed the Braves by a percentage point for the previous two days.

Phillies 11, Braves 9

Gary Matthews tied the game in the eighth inning with a three-run homer, then ripped a single in the 10th to drive home the game-winning run as the Phils snapped the Braves' six-game winning streak.

"We'll remember this one for quite a while," said Phillies Manager Pat Corrales, whose club squandered a 6-0 first-inning lead before coming back. "What a nightmare.

"We had to score that many runs to win," said Corrales. "Our pitchers couldn't hold them. But you're going to give up a lot of runs in this ball park, and don't forget, they gave up a lot, too."

The Phillies' triumph negated a two-homer performance by Atlanta's Bob Horner. Ron Reed, 4-4, hurled four shutout innings of relief for the victory as the second-place Phillies moved to within two games of pace-setting St. Louis in the NL East.

The paid crowd of 23,555 brought the Braves' season attendance total to 1,541,275, the highest one-year total in their Atlanta history. It surpassed the previous mark of 1,539,801 set in 1966, the first year the Braves played in Atlanta after moving from Milwaukee.

Cubs 4, Giants 2

Bill Buckner had two hits — giving him 10 in his last four games — while Randy Martz and Lee Smith held San Francisco to four hits and sent the Giants to their fifth straight loss.

"I usually have one or two streaks during the season, but this is the best month I can remember," said Buckner, who entered the game hitting .429 for August. "You're always working on your hitting, but when you're going well you don't worry as much."

"Nothing Bill Buckner does at the plate amazes me," said Cubs Manager Lee Elia. "I've never seen him not hit."

Jim Barr, 3-3, took the loss.

Astros 5, Mets 4

Art Howe hit a three-run inside-the-park homer and winner Don Sutton, 13-8, hurled eight strong innings to send extend the Mets' losing streak to ten straight games.

In the sixth, with Phil Garner and Alan Ashby on base, Howe hit a sinking liner to right field. Ellis Valentine charged the ball, but it got by him and rolled to the wall.

"I try to be as aggressive as possible in the field," Valentine said. "I just kept coming and the ball kept sinking, and it just got by me."

Reds 1, Expos 0

Alex Trevino drove in the game's only run with an eighth-inning RBI single, while Bob Shirley and Brad Lesley combined to shut out the Expos on seven hits.

"I get so pumped up I don't know what I can say," said Lesley, who earned his third save. "We are still going to figure in the pennant race. We will hurt some people and you can take that to the bank."

Pirates 7, Padres 6

Jim Morrison's RBI single in the ninth gave the Pirates a comeback victory, and moved them into third place in the NL East, 5½ games behind the first-place Cardinals.

"These games make you gray, but they're still fun," said Pirate skipper Chuck Tanner. "These guys like being in a pennant race ... not many still thought we'd be in it this late. If we can be where we are now when we start playing the other teams in the division next month, we'll be all right."

The Pirates trailed 6-5 entering the eighth inning, but rallied to win with solo runs in both the eighth and ninth.

Kent Tekulve, 10-6, worked the final two innings for the victory. Padre reliever Floyd Chiffer, 4-2, took the loss.

Los Angeles Dodgers pitcher Fernando Valenzuela is congratulated by coach Danny Ozard as he rounds third base on his way home with his first major league home run during the third inning against the St. Louis Cardinals Wednesday night. Valenzuela also became the first major league pitcher to record 17 wins this season.

Lawyer says Gerulaitis not involved in drug conspiracy

NEW YORK (AP) — Top-ranked tennis star Vitas Gerulaitis, implicated in a cocaine-buying scheme during testimony in a federal drug trial, "is absolutely not involved in any narcotics conspiracy," his lawyer says.

Gerulaitis, the No.5 tennis player in the world, could still be called to testify in the trial at U.S. District Court in Manhattan, attorney David Briebart acknowledged Wednesday.

"It's absolutely a shame that someone would take advantage of a man's name," Briebart added.

A witness at the trial Tuesday identified Gerulaitis as a participant in a plan to buy cocaine. The prosecutor, Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael Feldberg, was unsure if Gerulaitis would take the stand before the government rests its case this week.

The witness, Richard Purvis, 21, of Newport Beach, Calif., testified a friend of Gerulaitis told him that the tennis star offered to contribute $20,000 toward the purchase of cocaine during the Volvo Masters Tournament at Madison Square Garden last January.

Purvis has pleaded guilty in the scheme and is now a witness for the prosecution against Tony Goble, of Miami, Fla., who is charged with two counts of conspiracy to purchase narcotics.

Purvis said he came to New York last Jan. 14 principally to buy 48 one-ounce bottles of pharmaceutical cocaine at $3,000 an ounce. He was accompanied by a friend, Matthew Spurr, 23, of Newport Beach, who has also pleaded guilty.

The men were unaware that undercover agents of the federal Drug Enforcement Administration were the dealers in the transaction.

Purvis testified that he and Spurr had raised $105,000 of the $144,000 needed for the purchase. The 41-year-old Goble told Purvis that he and Gerulaitis could make up the difference, Purvis testified.

While Gerulaitis was playing in the Volvo tournament, DEA agents arrested Purvis and Spurr on charges of conspiracy to possess, possession and intent to distribute cocaine.

Indians' Barker gives up three hits but loses game

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The contestant is Cleveland pitcher Len Barker and here is today's baseball quiz:

"Len, how do you pitch a three-hitter, strike out nine and lose 5-1?"

"I guess by walking four guys in one inning, that's how you lose a three-hitter."

Right on, Len. Care to try for the next plateau?

"The next time I throw one, I'm sure not going to lose."

While the Chicago White Sox were making the most of their limited offense and defeating Barker and the Indians, the Kansas City Royals pulled within one-half game of the idle California Angels in the American League West by edging the Texas Rangers 4-3. In other AL games, the Baltimore Orioles trimmed the Toronto Blue Jays 8-3 and the New York Yankees drubbed the Minnesota Twins 8-1. Also idle besides the Angels were Boston, Detroit, Milwaukee, Oakland and Seattle.

Chicago parlayed the four walks off Barker, an error by Cleveland shortstop Larry Milbourne and Steve Kemp's two-run double into a four-run fourth inning. Winner Richard Dotson and Sparky Lyle combined on a six-hitter. Lyle allowed one hit over the final 31-3 innings to notch his first save since being signed by the White Sox last Saturday after the Philadelphia Phillies released him.

The Indians were impressed by Lyle's stuff. "Sparky was Sparky — the sliders and a few fast balls. Just another save among his 200-plus," said Rick Manning.

Rudy Law led off the Chicago fourth with a walk and one out later Harold Baines and Greg Luzinski also walked to load the bases. Kemp then got Chicago's first hit, a two-run double to left-center. After a walk reloaded the bases, Milbourne booted Mike Squires' grounder for an error, allowing Luzinski to score, and Vance Law capped the inning with a suicide squeeze bunt.

Royals 4, Rangers 3

Singles by Willie Wilson, George Brett and Amos Otis produced the tie-breaking run in the eighth inning and Dan Quisenberry preserved Dennis Leonard's victory with two innings of scoreless relief. The Royals took a 1-0 lead in the third inning on doubles by John Wathan and U.L. Washington. Wathan hit a two-run homer in the fifth.

"I kind of ran out of gas in the 100-degree heat," said Leonard, who was making his fourth start since missing almost three months with two fractured fingers. "I'm still building up my stamina after being off 11 weeks."

Leonard didn't strike out a batter and said, "I think that's the first time I've gone seven innings without striking anybody out. I'm not throwing the ball great, but I'm getting better every game."

Orioles 8, Blue Jays 3

Rookie Glenn Gulliver's two-run double, his first major league RBIs in 21 games, drove in the tying and go-ahead runs in a six-run seventh inning that rallied Baltimore over Toronto. Rick Dempsey started the winning rally with a single and also singled home the final run.

After Gulliver's double, Ken Singleton, who homered in the sixth inning, singled and Eddie Murray followed with an RBI double. After John Lowenstein was walked intentionally, Cal Ripken Jr. rapped a two-run single and Dempsey followed with his RBI hit. Toronto had four of its eight hits off Mike Flanagan in the second inning when Anthony Johnson hit a three-run homer.

Yankees 8, Twins 1

Graig Nettles hit a pair of two-run homers, giving him 1,002 runs batted in for his career, and Ken Griffey added a two-run blast as the Yankees romped behind the five-hit pitching of Shane Rawley and Rudy May. Nettles connected in the first and second innings.

After the game, Nettles finally answered Yankee owner George Steinbrenner, who said last month that the 38-year-old third baseman was in the "twilight of his career."

"I'm just trying to make it through the twilight," said Nettles. "I never thought I was through. In fact, it's hard to comment on such a silly statement. Unfortunately, he has to make everything public rather than keep things like that to himself. He keeps getting on everybody rather than leaving us alone. He just talks to hear himself talk. If it was somebody I respected as a baseball person, I wouldn't mind. But I don't.

"He would never say it to my face. He's been trying to bury me for years. One day he'll be right."

Nampa, Medford win in Legion tourney

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — Nampa, Idaho defeated Casper, Wyo. and Medford, Ore. dumped Lafayette, Calif. in the first two games at the Northwest Region American Legion baseball tournament here Wednesday.

Nampa downed Casper 10-3 in a game littered with ten errors. Nampa is now 43-14 on the year, while Casper falls to 49-26.

In the second contest Medford, Ore. got nine runs in the third inning en route to beating Lafayette 22-16. The teams combined for 42 hits in the game, including home runs by Ron Delucchi of Lafayette and Brad Arnsberg and Kurt Bachmeyer, both of Medford.

Medford is now 50-11 on the year, while Lafayette is 27-16.

Kansas City Royals first baseman Willie Aikens lets the ball pop out of his glove after he tried to catch a foul ball off the bat of Dave Hostetler of the Texas Rangers in the fifth inning at Arlington Stadium Wednesday night. K.C. went on to win the game, 4-3.

Broncos' Morton doesn't have lock on starting QB

GREELEY, Colo. (AP) — Veteran Craig Morton doesn't have the starting quarterback slot locked up for the Denver Broncos, says head coach Dan Reeves.

"It's a very competitive situation," Reeves said here Wednesday during a news conference at the team's training-camp site. "A lot depends on what happens the next two weeks as to who will start the first (regular-season) game."

The 39-year-old Morton will start in Denver on Saturday night against the Minnesota Vikings in the Broncos' next-to-last preseason game, Reeves said, and is expected to play the first half.

Former San Francisco 49er quarterback Steve DeBerg, who has been the most productive quarterback in the Bronco camp this summer, will go the second half, Reeves said.

Reeves indicated that second-year quarterback Mark Herrmann will get an extensive test the following weekend in Denver's final exhibition game, against the New York Jets.

Against Miami last Saturday, in his first exhibition action of the summer, Morton struggled through nine plays and completed just one pass for one yard.

Big names to tee off in Henredon Classic

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — New Hall of Famer and leading money winner JoAnne Carner joins Beth Daniel, Nancy Lopez and Sandra Haynie and a field of 115 professionals in the $165,000 LPGA Henredon Classic.

Carner is coming off a victory in last weekend's World Championship of Women's Golf in Cleveland. The triumph was Carner's 35th career title, qualifying her as the 10th entrant into the LPGA Hall of Fame and first since Carol Mann in 1977.

Her $50,000 in prize money for capturing the title pushed her 1982 earnings to $248,109. That figures breaks the single-season record previously held by Daniel. Daniel, who tied Janet Alex for fourth in last year's Henredon, finished 11th this past weekend, but the $2,000 prize money was enough to push her season's earnings above $200,000.

Daniel, a five-time winner this year, is leading the battle for both the player of the year and Mazda-Japan series while Carner currently tops the money list and the race for the Vare Trophy with a 71.59 average.

Carner and Daniel join Haynie and Sally Little to give the Ladies Professional Golf Association a first — four $200,000 winners in one season.

Haynie took the $24,750 first prize last year by firing a 72-hole total of 281, 7-under-par. She came from behind by firing two straight 68s to finish one stroke ahead of Judy Clark and two ahead of Fayetteville, N.C., native Marlene Floyd.

In all, 18 of the top 20 money winners will be on hand today to form what LPGA spokeswoman Clare Sheils called "a very strong field."

The 72-hole tournament, which concludes Sunday, is to be played at the Willow Creek Golf Club, a par-72, 6,191-yard layout. The field, which also has three amateurs, will be cut to the low 70 and ties after 36 holes.

Watson now has Floyd's vote for Player of Year

By GEORGE STRODE
AP Sports Writer

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Leading money-winner and PGA champion Ray Floyd says there is no question who currently ranks as golf's Player of the Year.

"If I had to vote now, I'd have to vote for Tom Watson," said Floyd before teeing off in the first round today of the $400,000 World Series of Golf.

But Floyd says a $100,000 Series victory by him might change his opinion.

"If I do win this week, I might have to vote for myself," he said.

Floyd, 39, includes the Memorial, Danny Thomas Memphis Classic and PGA crowns in his No.1 yearly earnings of $331,809 and calls this his greatest year.

"I'm playing better than I've ever played," said the winner of 18 titles in two decades. "This is my best year by far. I didn't win a major last year and this season I've done it in the heat of summer."

Watson, of course, will merit heavy consideration for his fifth Player of the Year title in the last six seasons, even if he doesn't win over the 7,137-yard Firestone South layout.

He's already won two majors this year, the U.S. and British Opens, and two other championships on great courses, Riviera, Harbour Town, Pebble Beach and Troon.

This elite international field of 27 golfers also has Masters champion Craig Stadler, Jack Nicklaus, the winner of the Series an unprecedented five times and of more than $522,000 at Firestone, and Lanny Wadkins, last week's Buick Open winner.

Watson is bidding for his fifth 1982 victory while Floyd, Stadler and Wadkins all are after their fourth titles this season in the battle for the largest purse on the PGA Tour.

Floyd has taken the last two weeks off, which could be a danger signal for his fellow contenders. He skipped the two prior tournaments before the PGA. He missed the previous week to his Memorial triumph, too.

"I'm refreshed. I have a lot of enthusiasm," said the winner of $331,809 this year.

"But I don't neglect my game when I go home like some players. I hit balls every day. It's easier taking an hour out of each day then taking a chance on losing it. It might never come back."

Floyd admits his attitude toward the game has changed radically. The one-time swinging bachelor of the tour is a married man now, the father of two children.

"In those days, very truthfully, I was playing for the monetary reward. I didn't like golf. There were other things I'd rather do. Now I love the game," he said, striking long irons from Firestone's practice tee.

"When I started to appreciate what I could do, that hard work did pay off, I discovered I was gifted talent.

"I'm just starting to realize I have the ability to do what I'm doing. I don't envision it shutting off for awhile, either."

Injuries end season for two SMU players

DALLAS (AP) — Two Southern Methodist football players are out for the season because of injuries, a team official said.

Linebacker Kit Case, a sophomore from Highland Park, broke his right ankle during practice Wednesday and will require surgery to repair the damage, said Associate Athletic Director Bob Condron.

Tim Green, a sophomore defensive back from West Orange Stark, dislocated his shoulder when he twisted it during the night while he was sleeping, said Condron, adding that Green had a history of shoulder dislocation.

Saints' day filled with good, bad news

By The Associated Press

The New Orleans Saints saw their kicker walk out of camp and had their best tackler last season break his arm during a routine drill.

The Saints got some good news, though. Newly acquired quarterback Ken Stabler worked out with the National Football League team for the first time Wednesday and said his arm hurt.

"I just had to throw and get my arm going," said the 36-year-old Stabler, who will battle Archie Manning and Bobby Scott for the starting job.

"I haven't thrown, but I never do before I get to camp," said Stabler, who was waived by the Houston Oilers earlier this year. "I'll throw a couple of days and get my arm sore, and I go through a two-day period of being sore and then the soreness goes away and I'll feel okay, hopefully."

Linebacker Glen Redd, who has been suffering from unexplained double vision, wasn't so fortunate. He broke his right arm when he fended off one blocker only to be hit in the arm with helmet of another player, a Saints spokesman said.

Benny Ricardo, being pressed for the kicking job by rookie Morten Andersen, left camp unexpectedly. A spokesman said Coach Bum Phillips would hold a news conference about Ricardo's walkout today.

"If he gave any reasons — he gave them to the coach," said Saints spokesman Rusty Kasmiersky.

Meanwhile in Washington, contract negotiations between management and the players union broke down after just four hours. The talks were the first between the two sides since July 23.

Ed Garvey, the executive director of the players union, called for an emergency meeting of the players union in Chicago to map strategy.

Jack Donlan, the owners chief negotiator said: "We have to begin evaluating our options for the beginning of the season (Sept.12)."

Donlan said one of the options available to the owners would be the possible intervention of a federal mediator.

"We have to be candid, we are not getting any place on our own," said Donlan.

In other NFL training camp news, Philadelphia Eagles Coach Dick Vermeil said the team is considering whether to sign former Houston quarterback Dan Pastorini. A team spokesman said coaches will take a vote on the matter by next week.

The New York Jets traded cornerback Donald Dykes to the San Diego Chargers for a conditional pick in the 1983 draft and Washington shipped Tom Flick, the Redskins fourth draft choice in 1981, to the New England Patriots for nine-year veteran Tom Owen in an exchange of quarterbacks.

All who follow Greenwood athletics are also urged to join the booster club to support their team.

Gymnasts need to bring physicals

KENNY REDIN'S

Fin & Feather

There are saltwater anglers all over the state of Texas. Those who live nearer the coast are the ones who participate the most in saltwater fishing, that's simple. But you would hardly believe the folks that live in North, East and West Texas who fish the Texas coast. And even more surprising is how offen these old dry salts fish the deep blue waters of the Gulf.

But once you get the taste of some good saltwater fishing, its hard to put down that crusty old rod and reel.

In recent times there has been a lot of controversy over saltwater fishing along the Texas coastline. Especially for redfish and speckled trout. The argueing has been between sport anglers and commercial fishermen.

Commercial fishermen are blaming the sportsmen for passage of a law the prohibited the commercial fishermen from netting reds and trout.

The sportsmen on the other hand blame commercial fishermen for the original depletion of these two fish. That was the reason the sports fishermen worked so hard to have the law passed.

Now that commercial fishing has been banned along the coast more and more trouble is brewing. The commercial fishermen are claiming that they are going broke and according to news releases they point to the sportsman, his money and power, as the sole cause for the state banning commercial fishing along the Texas coast.

But what the commercial fishermen doesn't realize, or is too ignorant to see, is the you cannot continue to harvest from the sea without putting something back. And commercial fishermen are the world's worse for raping the ocean. I've seen it a countless number of times, and I don't take sides with the commercial fishermen, not one bit.

THE GULF Coast Conservation Association was vital in helping get the ban on redfish and trout passed. They are also the ones who have raised money to construct a new redfish and trout hatchery deep in South Texas.

The commercials didn't contribute one dime to the hatchery which is being built so the redfish can be stocked back into the Gulf.

There has been a lot of heated talk recently on the ban of reds and trout by the state and I would like to relate some of the theories and statements to you, the sportsmen.

The following were taken from a hearing in Austin on June 30. The hearing was mandated by the 1981 legislature and its mission was to find out whose data was more accurate, the Texas Parks and Wildlife's or that of the National Marine Fisheries Service.

Understand that the question was laid to rest early, at the first of the three meetings that was held in Galveston. It was there that a representative of NMFS told the subcommitee that Texas data was applicable in Texas and that two previous studies should never have been compared when considering a commercial ban on trout and reds.

Dr. Henry Hildebrand, a biologist hired by PISCES, the commercial fishing lobby, testified against the state's data.

"Outdoor writers who enjoy the use of our resources have caused the commercial fishing ban...despite the writings of outdoor editors, the redfish hatchery is not around the corner. There has been no successful mariculture program anywhere. We should look to Mexico where there is unrestricted fishing." And, he said, "I'm not too optomistic about the future of ducks because of the conflicts with hunters and landowners."

IT IS interesting that the commercial fishermen who have become adept at playing on the simpathy of the street reporters (who get the front pages), accuse us underpaid outdoor writers of causing a state uprising. I don't recall outdoor writers picketing the Capitol Building, burning down GCCA members restaurants, or blockading any ports. If Mr. Hildebrand only knew what simple lives we lead.

Hildebrand also attacked Director of Fisheries, Bob Kemp, accusing him of using the state's houseboat to entertain outdoor writers. Kemp told me he would laugh if it wasn't so rediculous.

In another stunning statement, this one dished out by Paul Crangelo, an independent biologist employed by PISCES at the hearing, he declared, "Sport fishermen cannot tell when the fish are there and when they are not. They (Parks and Wildlife) are self serving and they realize that."

Crangelo blamed the decline of trout and redfish on the fluctuations of rainfall. The talk goes on and on.

I believe that if the commercial fishermen obeyed the laws laid down by the Red Drum Act of 1977, there would be no need for a Redfish Bill. And if they continued to fish uncontrolled they would have put themselves out of business by exhausting the resources
It should be known that 98 per cent of the 272 commercial fishermen in Texas are not affected by the Redfish Bill. They are shellfish fishermen and they enjoyed a bumper crop last year.

The redfish are reappearing on the Texas coastline this year. It's simply because there is no over slaughter of the fish. How long it will last is anyone's guess, but the commercials aren't finished fighting yet. If they could they would wipe out the entire ocean of its natural resources.

Gold to hold first tryout camp

DENVER (AP) — The Denver Gold of the new United States Football League will hold its first tryout camp here Thursday, with 12 quarterbacks and 56 receivers invited to the testing and evaluation session.

Among the quarterback candidates will be former University of Wyoming star Phil Davis and former Tennessee State standout Eldridge Dickey, who had tryouts with Oakland and Kansas City in the National Football League.

"It will be the usual no-pads type of camp," Gold head coach Red Miller said Tuesday. "We'll do the standard speed, strength and vertical jump testing. Later on, we'll bring players at other positions in, and hopefully we'll find a few who can help us."

He said the team hopes to sign Jeff Knapple, a quarterback who played at the University of Colorado, the University of Northern Colorado and for the Denver Broncos of the NFL, where Miller formerly was head coach.

Among receivers invited to the camp are former University of Colorado players Rick Ward, Lyndell Hawkins, Kazell Pugh and Steve Gaunty, who finished his college career at Northern Colorado, and former Colorado State standouts Mike Newland, Tony Goolsby and Raymond Gibson.

Red Wings obtain Leach as free agent

DETROIT (AP) — Veteran right wing Reggie Leach, once the top goal-scorer in the National Hockey League, has signed with the Detroit Red Wings, team officials announced Wednesday.

General Manager Jim Devellano said that Leach, who was released by the Philadelphia Flyers late last season, signed as a free agent without compensation. He did not divulge details of the agreement, believed to be a three-year contract.

"I feel the Red Wings are very fortunate to have picked up one of the all-time great goal scorers in the history of the NHL," Devellano said. "The one thing the Wings lacked last year was goal-scoring, and there is no doubt in our minds that Reggie will contribute mightily in this area."

Leach, 32, has scored 366 goals and collected 268 assists in 13 NHL seasons, including three with the defunct California Seals, two at Boston and eight with the Flyers.

He led the NHL in goals scored in 1975-76, when he had 80 goals and was chosen the league's most valuable player. Leach scored 50 goals in 1979-80 and had more than 30 in six of his eight seasons with Philadelphia. He had 26 in 66 games for the Flyers last season.

Record harvest should be easy to move

AGRICULTURE

AP Laserphoto

Walking along rows of garlic at its most vulnerable stage — drying in the field and within easy reach of thieves — is Bill Christopher. He and other rachers in the Gilroy, Calif., area have hired private guards to protect their harvest.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The big harvests predicted this year will put a heavy strain on storage space, but there should be ample transportation to help move grain and soybeans from one area to another, says the Agriculture Department.

"As expected large feed grain and spring wheat harvests join winter wheat in storage, nearly all on-farm storage is likely to be filled," the department's Economic Research Service said.

"At least 1.8 billion bushels of grain will require transportation to commercial storage. Off-farm facilities will also be strained by the end of the season."

The report, written by agency analyst T.Q. Hutchinson, said that as of June 1, about 6.4 billion bushels of grain and oilseeds were in storage on farms and in off-farm facilities. That represented about 35 percent of the total U.S. storage capacity.

Allowing for exports and domestic use, and the addition of about 2.1 billion bushels of new grain from the 1982 winter wheat crop, about 14.5 billion bushels of storage space would be available for the other crops — corn, sorghum, oats, barley, spring wheat, soybeans and other commodities.

Total U.S. storage capacity is about 18.5 billion bushels, including approximately 11.3 billion on farms and 7.2 billion in off-farm facilities.

One of the perennial problems, however, is that specific areas often are filled while others have storage space. That can create havoc during peak harvest periods, with millions of bushels piled on the ground until there is room to store the grain.

The report said that "the transportation system continues to have sufficient capacity for harvest needs" this season.

"The barge industry, which has been carrying nearly 40 million bushels of grain and soybeans a week, estimates that 30 to 35 percent of its fleet is idle," the report said. "The industry also reports exceptionally low spot-market barge rates, a further indication of surplus capacity."

Looking at the rail situation, the report said that "railroads could readily accommodate a demand increase of at least 65 million bushels a month" in grain and soybean shipments.

"Moreover, the jumbo covered hopper car fleet has expanded from 198,000 to 232,000 cars during the last two years, suggesting that present rail shipments could be increased by ask much as 40 percent," it said.

The USDA, meanwhile, has eased some regulations to help farmers build more of their own storage if needed.

In announcing the changes last week, Agriculture Secretary John R. Block said they would enable farmers to build storage to handle up to two years' of crop production — in addition to present on-farm facilities used to store grain held in the reserve program.

Previously, farmers were limited to government loans to build storage for one year's crop production, including storage used for the reserve program.

Farmers will get higher assistance rate for losses

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers who qualify for aid under a crop disaster program in parts of Texas, New Mexico and Oklahoma will be getting sharply higher assistance rates for losses to this year's feed grain harvests, says the Agriculture Department.

The aid package was announced on July 15 and applies to 83 storm-damaged counties in the regions where crop losses have been severe.

Officials said the rate of assistance for corn producers will be raised to $1.17 a bushel from 15 cents originally announced. The rate for grain sorghum and barley will be $1.13 per bushel, up from the original 18 cents. Payments would be for losses in excess of 40 percent of those crops.

The upward adjustments "were needed to make the assistance payments for these commodities more comparable to payments already assigned for wheat and upland cotton," the department said.

Payment rates for wheat, as announced last month, are $1.75 per bushel for losses in excess of 40 percent of the crop, and 20.5 cents a pound for cotton losses in excess of 25 percent of the crop.

Roy Cozart of the department's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service said that initially the main concern was for farmers who endured huge losses to cotton and wheat acreages but that it soon became apparent that feed grain producers also had suffered extensively.

Assistant secretary joins Agriculture Department

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department has a new assistant secretary on its top staff: Wilmer D. Mizell Sr., a former professional baseball player and congressman from North Carolina.

Mizell, was sworn in this week by Agriculture Secretary John R. Block.

In his new $58,500-a-year job, Mizell will oversee the Agriculture Department's offices of public and congressional affairs, and intergovernmental relations.

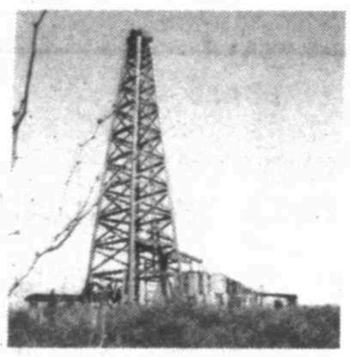

The position had been vacant since the Reagan administration came into office more than a year and a half ago. Several names had been mentioned, including Mizell, who was preferred by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee.

Mizell, 52, got his nickname, "Vinegar Bend," from his home town of Vinegar Bend, Ala.

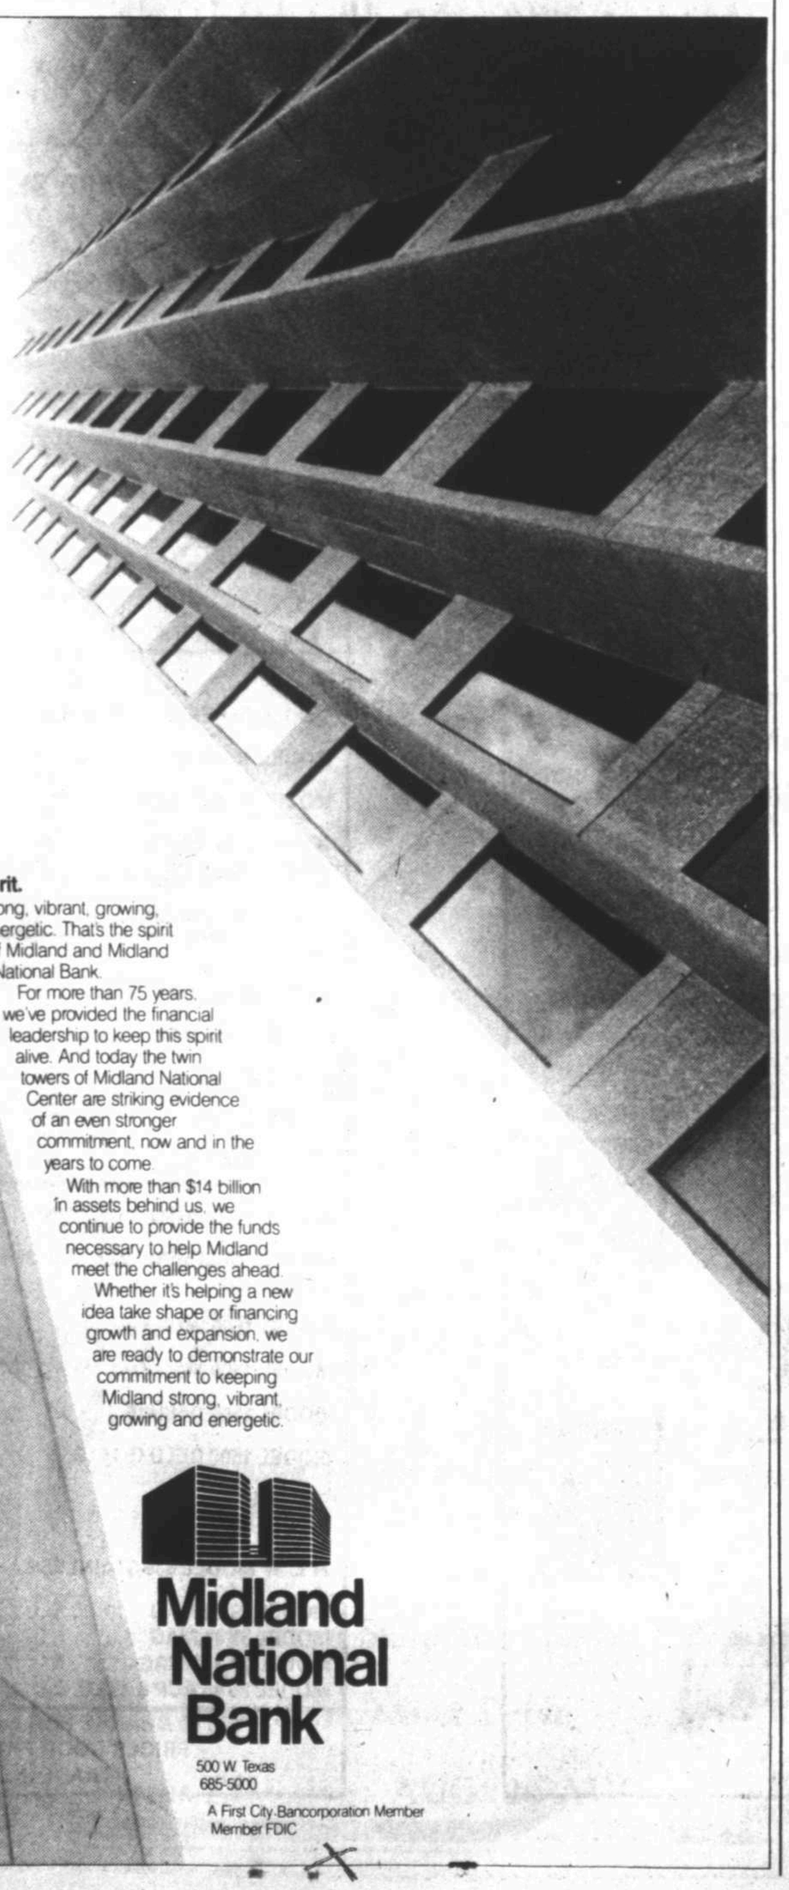

Mizell began his professional baseball career in Albany, Ga., in 1949. He joined the St. Louis Cardinals in 1952, leaving them in 1960 for the Pittsburgh Pirates "where his 13-5 pitching record that year helped the team win the World's Championship," the department said. He retired from the New York Mets in 1962.

After three terms in the House as a member from North Carolina's Fifth District, Mizell served as an assistant secretary of Commerce during the Ford administration, 1975-77.

Most recently, Mizell has been a public relations representative faor the Southern Tool Manufacturing Company Inc., Winston-Salem, N.C.

Mexicans realizing good old days gone, perhaps forever

MEXICO CITY — After five years of dynamic growth and a spending spree unequaled in its history, Mexico is waking up to the fact that the good old days are gone, perhaps forever.

Just last year, in his annual state-of-the-union message on Sept. 1, President Jose Lopez Portillo warned that those who were concerned about Mexico's problems were "making mountains out of molehills."

The government's financial position, he said, had never been better — $10.4 billion in international currency reserves — and the country had overcome the economic disaster bequeathed by former President Luis Echeverria.

Lopez Portillo declared, "Let us think back to the crisis we have surmounted, to the size of the efforts we have realized and the speed of our recovery."

But as the date of another state-of-the-union message approaches — the last from Lopez Portillo, who leaves office in December — the picture is darker by far than the one the president painted last year.

INSTEAD OF HAVING HEALTHY reserves, Mexico is broke. The peso, valued at 26.5 to the dollar at this time last year, has been cheapened to 100 and more to the dollar, a staggering devaluation.

Instead of the projected massive growth in spending — to generate jobs for the many, leisure for a rising middle class, and wealth for a few — the talk is of severe cutbacks.

"Businesses will close and there will be greater unemployment," Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog warned last week.

What happened to the dream? While Mexico has a treasure in its oil reserves, the country was no more immune to recession than other nations. When oil prices started falling sharply in mid-1981, along with the prices of other Mexican exports, the government was faced with falling revenues to pay for its ambitious spending plans.

Lopez Portillo chose to continue his strategy of economic expansion, and Mexico was forced to borrow heavily abroad to make up for its falling export revenues. It was a policy that invited economic disaster.

MEXICANS ARE ASKING who is to blame, for the issue is no longer recovery but the survival of the political and economic system.

Already there are accusations of wrongdoing in high places and outraged denials from those accused.

On the front page of a Mexico City newspaper, a prominent columnist said last week that he had obtained a copy of a check drawn on a Miami bank with which a cousin of the president, Guillermo Lopez Portillo, made a $250,000 down payment on a house in the United States.

"He is the prototype of those who have sacked the country and sunk our economy, even as the powers that be sit in idle silence," the columnist, Jose Luis Mejias, wrote.

In the last year, there have been many reports that wealthy Mexicans, including the mayor of Mexico City, have taken their money out of the country to invest in U.S. real estate.

As a result, Mexican cynicism and frustration have flourished, though the feelings have yet to boil over into active discontent.

"THAT IS THE WAY IT always is, isn't it?" said Rafael Ventura, a lottery ticket vendor outside a downtown bank. "The rich take advantage and the poor get screwed."

Businessmen, in turn, blame the government for the current problems. Manuel J. Clouthier, the president of the Employers' Coordinating Council, complained that Mexico's 30 largest privately owned companies have lost three times as much money in the last few months as they made in the five previous years.

"I can't find work because I do not have a car," he said while hammering nails into irregular-sized boards on the roof of a room he is adding to his home in Colonia Jardin.

The 2,300 pesos a month his wife earns cleaning houses, he said, is barely enough to keep his seven children fed and clothed.

ACROSS TOWN, AT ONE of the best hotels on Tijuana's Boulevard Agua Caliente, a bartender shook with rage when asked if he thought government leaders may be doing their best to deal with an extremely difficult problem.

"Portillo and his pack of rats are robbing the people," the bartender said. "They borrowed billions of dollars from the United States and put it in Swiss bank accounts and then blamed the people for taking too much money out of the country."

Leaning across the bar, he said, "I would like to see them shot. I would fight in a war, but I think the others probably would not.

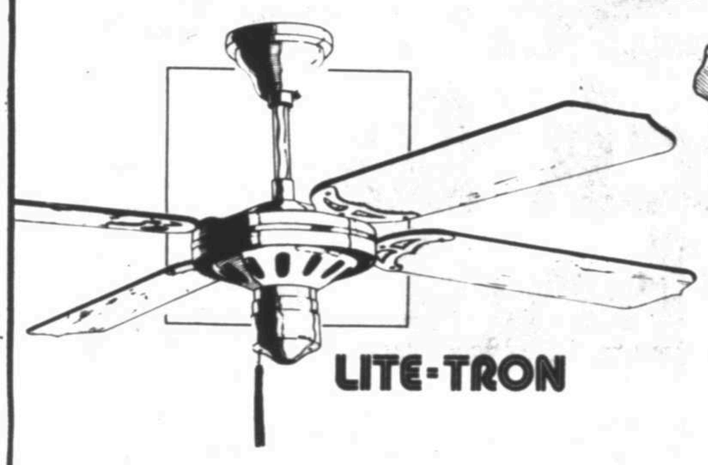

"The poor are suffering the most because before they drank a gallon of milk and now they drink a half-gallon. We do not yell about it because we are afraid of reprisals from the government...They are sending the people down a hole."

Luis Gardner, 46, who owns and operates a small market in the Colonia Cacho district of southeast Tijuana, one of the few middle-class neighborhoods in the city, discussed the situation with two customers from the local area.

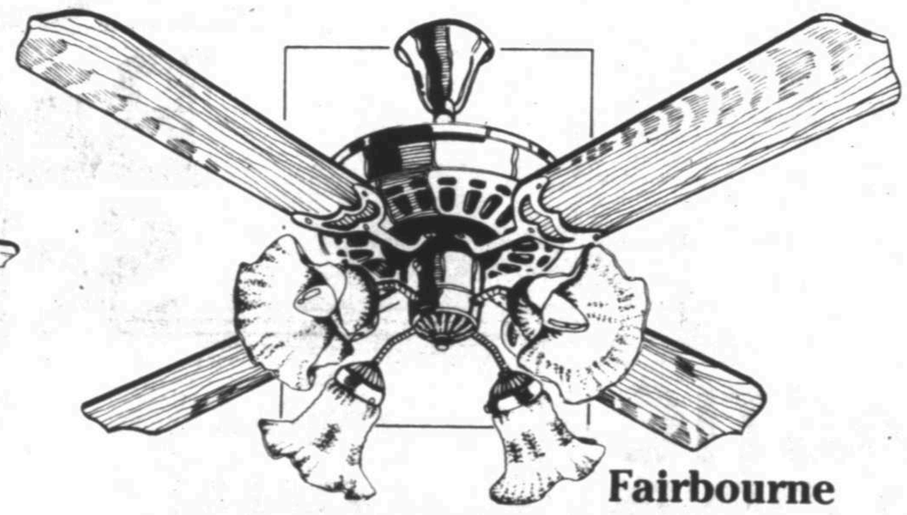

"THE POLITICIANS TAKE the money and put it in Swiss banks — money that should have stayed in Mexico," Gardner said. "Our biggest problems are corrupt politicians and erroneous economics."

One customer, Francisco Espinoza, 30, who said he is fairly well off by Tijuana's standards, agreed and said, "The real concern is the threat of social unrest. But if you have no choice and you are up against a wall, what would you do?"

Patricia McGraw holds pictures of her two teen-agers, Dawn Jeffries and Aaron Lind, both of whom were killed in the last six months. They died in traffic accidents caused by drunk drivers.

Mother loses two teen-agers to drunk drivers in six months

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Twice in six months, Patricia McGraw has lost a teen-age child in a traffic accident.

Both times the message from the coroner was the same: "drunken driver, instant death."

"This is unreal," said Mrs. McGraw, who is divorced and has one surviving child, a 4½-year-old daughter. "It's horrible.

"I lost first a son, now my daughter. It seems everything that has happened to us is so negative. I thought things had begun to settle down at last."

The first call came Feb. 22 when Mrs. McGraw was in Valley Medical Center recovering from a broken ankle suffered after she was struck by a car in a hit-and-run accident. Her 18-year-old son, Aaron Lind, had been killed.

Police charged the driver of the car with drunken driving. Later, the charges were dismissed, apparently because of the inability to locate a witness, officials said.

On Monday, police said Mrs. McGraw's daughter, Dawn Jeffries, an 18-year-old West Valley College student, died instantly when she was struck by a motorist about 1:40 a.m. in North San Jose.

Mrs. McGraw said her daughter had been invited out for a date Sunday night with a boyfriend, Tony Freitas. Freitas' car wasn't running, she said, so she lent him her own automobile.

Vacationing president sees few visitors

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — At his mountaintop ranch, a vacationing President Reagan sees practically no visitors.

There are no lobbyists seeking favor, no congressmen who need persuading, no ceremonial duties that need to be performed at his 688-acre spread high in the Santa Ynez Mountains overlooking the Pacific Ocean.

Shielded from the usual pressures of the White House, Reagan hopes to spend much of the time until his return to Washington on Sept. 7 riding horses and doing ranch chores.

Yet there are lingering problems and potential new ones that hang over this vacation and threaten to interrupt the regimen of log-splitting and fence-mending.

FOREMOST IS THE possibility of snags in the evacuation of Palestinian guerrillas from Beirut. White House officials fully expect there will be hitches but hope none are serious enough to derail the process.

In a larger context, the administration is working on a major new peace initiative for the Middle East and a solution to the vexing problem of the Palestinians, many of whom live under Israeli rule in occupied territories.

Reagan took part in several strategy meetings on the subject before leaving Washington and may have to be brought in on developments in the days ahead.

ON A POLITICAL front, Reagan is pondering how to reassemble the coalition of congressional Republicans and Southern Democrats that was split by his battle for a $98.3 billion tax increase.

Indeed, 89 House Republicans abandoned the president, and Reagan was saved by Democrats, some of whom said that White House support for the tax hike amounted to an acknowledgement that the previous year's tax cut had been an error.

As Reagan flew west last week, a spokesman said the president would be talking to some of the Republicans who opposed him.

YET, DAYS WENT BY and there were no reports of telephone calls by the vacationing president to rebellious Republicans.

Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., leader of the dissidents, asked last week for a chance to talk with the president and make peace. Kemp, too, was kept waiting.

The question appears to be whether Reagan will reach out to the rebels or whether he will make them come to him.

White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes told reporters, "I'm not aware of (any) peace initiative. But certainly we have a big tent and they're all welcome back under it."

WITH THE DIVISIVE tax fight over, and Congress out of town, White House officials make no apology for Reagan's long vacation and do not try to paint it as something else.

At his ranch, Reagan does not even see members of the White House inner command who have taken up temporary residence in Southern California. They are on call at offices about 20 miles away.

Portillo offers law to punish officials

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Jose Lopez Portillo has proposed a law that would punish government officials for taking personal advantage of impending economic measures before they take effect.

The Attorney General's Office announced the proposal and said it was being studied. It calls for punishing guilty officials with 10-year prison terms and prohibition from holding office for six years.

Catholic official accuses government of Mexico of immorality, corruption

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A high-ranking Roman Catholic official has accused the government of immorality and corruption, prompting a censure by the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party.

Monsignor Carlos Quinteros Arce, Archbishop of Hermosillo in northwest Mexico, told the newspaper Excelsior in an interview published earlier this week that the government "should work for the common good instead of running a cabaret."

Without critizing any official by name, he said Mexicans hurt by a severe economic crisis "have lost confidence (in officials) because of immorality and corruption of the system."

He asked in an interview: "Who is taking money out of the country? Why do the people feel offended and defeated? Why do officials give the example of building mansions so big that we know what they're up to?"

The archbishop's comments were unusual because the clergy is prohibited by the constitution from criticizing the government.

Drew Barrymore, who started in the acting business earlier in life than any of her well-known forbears, enjoyed working on "E.T.: The Extra-Terrestrial," and says there'll be a sequel to the movie, although that's all she'll say.

Drew Barrymore, mom uncertain what's next

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The interview started badly. The actress rested her head on the restaurant table and refused to answer the reporter's questions.

Did she behave that way because her name was Barrymore? No, she was simply acting like any disappointed 7-year-old. Her mother took the girl to the ladies' room and returned with an explanation:

"Drew didn't know we were coming for an interview, and she was disappointed because she had to miss her school's carnival. I've never seen her like this; she's always bright and outgoing. She was so good on the Johnny Carson show that he invited her to come back any time.

"Stage mothers are anathema to me, and I never want to be one of those who say, 'Now, sparkle!' But I also don't tolerate children who are fresh and disrespectful. Drew and I talked it out, and she'll be all right now."

And she was. In an interview Drew Barrymore is just as bright and cheerful and unaffected as she was in "E.T.: The Extra-Terrestrial." Obviously the credit goes to her mother, Hungarian-born actress Ildiko Jaid, third wife of John Barrymore Jr. She is separated from Barrymore, who leads a hermit-like life, and the relationship is a touchy matter.

How many times has Drew seen "E.T."?

"Five and a half times," she said, explaining: 'The half time was when Mother and I went to a screening at MGM and we walked around until we found the theater. But the movie had already started and we couldn't get in. Then Mother took off her shoe and pounded on the door until someone answered."

Drew took her 25 classmates to the Cinerama Dome in Hollywood for "E.T." and they had to stand in line, just like everyone else. "The biggest problem was Eugene," she commented. "He never stopped crying. I kept telling him, 'It's just a movie, Eugene.' But he wouldn" stop. He was more interested in having a tissue than popcorn."

Drew Barrymore started in the family profession earlier than her illustrious forebears. At 11 months she appeared in a dog food commercial; at 2½ she made her first TV movie and later played William Hurt's daughter in "Altered States." Steven Spielberg interviewed her for "Poltergeist," but she didn't get the part. "I've got another movie for you," the director said.

That was "E.T.," which you may have heard about. She enjoyed working with the homely but lovable creature in the title role. Did she think of E.T. as something real or a piece of movie mechanism? "Both," she replied.

Drew is aware of her family heritage, especially with her "Great Profile" grandfather, John Barrymore. She attended a celebration of his 100th birthday in New York and saw him on the screen; she liked him with Garbo in "Grand Hotel" but "Dr. Jeckyll and Mr. Hyde" scared her.

At the tribute she made a fast friend of Ruth Gordon, 86. Drew remarked that she had seen the actress in "Every Which Way But Loose," and "I liked you better than the monkey." Said Miss Gordon: "That's the nicest compliment I've ever had."

"I've deliberately accepted no work for Drew since 'E.T.'," Drew's mother said. "I wanted her to have some time as a normal child, without having interviews and appointments. Now it's time to start thinking of what would be the right career moves for her. There have been offers for TV series, but Steven doesn't want her to do a series. We're talking about other movies for her."

Will there be an "E.T. II"?

'Yes," Drew replied. "And that's all I'm allowed to say."

After 'E.T.,' folks now believe in Dee Wallace

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Do you believe in E.T.? Dee Wallace did, and she was there to see the ingenuity that brought the tiny space traveler to life.

"No matter what it took to make E.T. move and talk, I thought of him as a real person," the Kansas-born actress says. "All of us in the movie did. I think the audience can tell if you don't believe in him and instead are thinking of the 11 people back there who are running the little sucker."

Enough Americans have believed in him to make "E.T.: The Extra-Terrestrial" the flyaway moneymaker of the 1982 film summer and perhaps of the century.

Reviewers have agreed that one of the strengths of the Steven Spielberg film was Miss Wallace's well-shaded performance as the harried mother. It could easily have fallen into cliche except for her intelligent portrayal.

"It's nice to be noticed," she admits, "and it's not easy when you're working with three kids and a dog. Not to mention E.T."

ENTERTAINMENT

Dee Wallace has been noticed in memorable performances for several years. She played a hooker in a "Lou Grant" episode and that led to the woman-at-the-bar role in "10." Her work in a two-part "Skag" prompted a call from Steven Spielberg.

"I went to his office and talked with him for an hour and a half," she recalled. "I didn't hear from him for a year and a half, and then my agent called and said, 'Steven Spielberg wants you for his new picture.' I said, 'OK, what's the joke?' "

"Apparently Steven had seen me in 'The Howling' and had followed my other work. Even though I had played a call girl in 'Skag,' he always saw me in the role of mother."

Now she's enjoying the fallout from "E.T." "For years producers have been saying, 'I'd really like to use her but she has no name.' Well, thanks to 'E.T.' they can use me now."

Deanna Durbin would be proud. Dee was born Deanna Bowers because her mother admired the singing star's "genuine quality." Dee's birthplace was Kansas City, Mo., but she grew up across the river in Kansas City, Kan. She later shortened her name "because nobody could pronounce Deanna."

As a girl she saw the Durbin movies and lots of others — "I came from a relatively poor background, and our entertainment was the television set. We watched the Saturday Night Movie and my father danced with me to the 'Hit Parade.' "

After graduating from the University of Kansas in theater and education, she taught school for a time. "I liked the kids, but not the administration," she said. "They say they want young innovative teachers but then they put their thumb on you."

Dee moved on to New York, where she found more work in commercials and industrial shows than in the theater. One of the shows brought her to Los Angeles, where she decided to stay. She started in films at the bottom, touring the casting offices and grabbing "day-player" work wherever she could find it.

Married to her "Howling" co-star Christopher Stone, Dee Wallace at 33 finds herself "in the best time of my life. I've climbed my way up rung by rung and now I'm mature enough to handle whatever success comes my way. I know what is business, and what is reality."

'Chorus Line' not closest you can come to real stage life

Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — Does the actual backstage life of "A Chorus Line," which itself is based on behind-the-scenes action in a musical comedy, measure up to the one you see in the finished show? Not exactly.

Variety, the show-biz bible, might sum it up like this: "Chaotic script involves old plot about touring company attempting to get complicated musical comedy in shape for 2:30 p.m. matinee. Lovable little computer and malfunctioning amplifier cause short hair-tearing scene; rest is fairly low-key drama. Amazing dance sketches performed on stage, stairs, in dressing rooms flow from classical ballet to common calisthenics. Partial nudity involves male dancers wandering around in jockstraps. Suspense element high; will this come together by curtain time?"

There's only one scene in "A Chorus Line" that remotely resembles the pre-show drama: That's where everyone's talking at once. The rest of the pre-show seems to have a strong thread of organization; periods of everybody rehearsing together are interspersed by long periods in which everybody appears to be doing his own thing.

The show that begins at 10 a.m. is called a "tech rehearsal" in which the cast does fragments of the show to test the lighting and sound systems, figure out where the dancer-actors should be on stage at particular moments and make certain that the big production numbers can fit onto this particular stage.

Part of the drama is unseen. General manager Laurel Wilson explains that the company's two complete sets are constantly leap-frogging around the country because it takes about 10 days to put everything togther for a new show. In Seattle, the crew could get into the theater only four days before the first performance because of a production of "Hello Dolly."

That problem in scheduling, though unappreciated by carpenters, electricians and stagehands who worked around the clock, gave the actors an unprecedented break. Ordinarily, the show closes on a Saturday night in one city and there's a tech rehearsal in another city at 10 a.m. Tuesday.

Many of the dancers have been with the show for several years. Eivand Harum, who plays the director, Zach, was with the show when it started on tour in 1976 and says he "stopped counting at a thousand performances."

MCT hopefuls might want to look into voice courses

Midland College is offering courses in voice this fall that might prove beneficial to those interested in participating in Midland Community Theatre's musical productions.

Private voice lessons are available from any of three MC instructors. Lessons are 30 minutes a week for 15 weeks at a cost of $80 plus tuition and fees. Scholarships are available for those who qualify and are willing to participate in an ensemble.

A new series of voice lessons also will be offered this fall by Janice Archer. Each class will consist of three students meeting an hour each week for the semester, or meeting for two hours a week for half the semester. The cost of these classes is also $80 plus tuition and fees.

All together MC's music department has scheduled at least 50 sections covering private voice and instrument lessons as well as group classes. Music studied ranges from classical to bluegrass.

Besides the regular schedule, MC is offering several flexible entry courses throughout the fall term. Flexible entry means that the college will begin the course on demand and end it when enough hours of classroom instruction have been given. This allows students to begin after the semester starts and schedule either one or two lessons a week depending on their schedules. There is scholarship money available for those that qualify.

With the addition of Ron Franklin, guitarist and doctoral candidate at Texas Tech University, the faculty will have four full-time and at least 12 part-time music instructors.

Also being expanded this year at MC are the fine arts department's offerings in ceramics.

For more information call MC. Registration is today.

MC to offer Opera Workshop course

An Opera Workshop course is being offered at Midland College this fall under the direction of Dr. Michael Jordan, coordinator of vocal music.

The course, scheduled to meet on Tuesdays at 7 p.m., will be continued during the spring semester.

"This Opera Workshop course is designed to provide practical performance techniques for singers. It is applicable to both opera and musical theatre productions," Jordan said.

Culmination of the Opera Workshop will be the presentation of a one-act American Opera during the spring semester.

College credit is given for those who complete the course each semester.

Persons interested should register for the fall semester Wednesday or Thursday from 10 a.m to 1 p.m. and from 4:30 to 8 p.m. in the Physical Education Building.

Additional information about the Opera Workshop may be obtained by contacting Jordan at 684-7851.

LIFE IN THESE UNITED STATES

Tourists will be tourists, all over the world

Special from Reader's Digest

A typical tourist, I had aimed my camera at every quaint and unusual sight in Europe. Interesting types of people were particular targets — plump farm wives in provincial dress haggling over cabbages at a market, wizened grandmothers in black shawls plodding up cathedral steps, young lovers sharing a bottle of wine at a sidewalk cafe, walrus-mustached old men sitting out their days in the sun.

Then one day after returning home to our small Pacific-coast city, I found I needed to run down to the supermarket before dinner. I didn't bother to change from baggy slacks, flapping shirttails and ragged tennis shoes. My hair was still stacked sky-high on rollers. When I arrived, I noticed a group of Japanese sailors from a docked ship scanning the fresh-vegetable department. As I picked up a cabbage, one sailor came over and, with much bowing and smiling, asked if he could take a picture of me.

Somewhere in Japan, a family is enjoying a snapshot of a plump American housewife in quaint provincial dress, shopping for cabbage in a local market.

As newlyweds, my husband and I were having one of those intense first arguments while driving to a nearby city. Finally, my husband reached his limit. He pulled the car over to the side of the road and said, "If you don't like it, you can just get out here!"

It was then that we noticed a road sign: "Unlawful to throw out burning material." We laughed and went on our way.

Our 10-month-old son is in the grabbing stage, and placing him in the backpack carrier I often use is courting disaster. Returning to the car after marketing one day, my mission-accomplished sigh was cut short when I noticed a roll of mints in Michael's chubby little hand. I was preparing to return and pay, when I found this note tucked inside the carrier: "Compliments of a grandfather."

On vacation last summer, I toured one of the caves in the Smoky Mountains. At one point, our guide informed us we would soon be about 400 feet beneath the surface, a fact which caused me to gasp audibly. The guide turned and, smiling, reassured me: "Look at it this way. If there's a cave-in, you can't be buried any deeper any cheaper."

Hurricane Agnes caused the Potomac River to flood many homes in Mt. Vernon, Va. During the anxious, early stages of the deluge, a minister acquaintance of ours who lives there sent his 15-year-old son to check on his books and files stored in the basement.

"Is the water up to the storage shelves yet?" the pastor called down to his son.

"Nope," came the reply.

"Are my sermons wet?"

"No, Dad, they're dry as ever!"

The next check on the rising waters was made by the clergyman himself.

One day, when I stopped by my parents' home, I was surprised to see my 17-year-old sister seated on a bar stool in the middle of the kitchen wearing my younger brother's catcher's mitt.

When I expressed curiosity, she said, "Remember that time when Dad fixed the sink and we didn't have any water for two days? And remember how Dad built that storehouse out back last year and it took us three weeks to pick up the pieces when it fell apart? And remember when the toaster broke and the bread wouldn't pop up after it had been toasted?" I nodded.

"Well," she said, expertly lifting her mitt and fielding a piece of toast as it came sailing across the room, "yesterday he fixed the toaster."

I have always been skeptical of astrology, but a friend of mine was so excited about a new horoscope guide that I thought I might get one, too. Locating a copy in a bookstore, I turned to my horoscope for that particular day to see if it made any sense. Well, it did! Cautioned the finance section: "Money may be foolishly spent on small objects that don't really work." The author of the horoscope guide had just lost a sale.

Hijackers' threat backed by fake 'dynamite sticks'

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — Two Poles who hijacked a Polish airliner by claiming they had a bomb actually were carrying candles wrapped in paper to make them look like dynamite, Munich's chief prosecutor said today.

"The dummy bomb was made very well," said prosecutor Heinz-Erwin Stocker, adding that the two men also attached batteries and a red button to the "explosives" to lend them an air of realism during the hijacking Wednesday night.

The hijackers — identified only as Frantisek S., a 25-year-old unemployed man, and metalworker Ryczard P., 27 — remained in Munich and will be charged with endangering air traffic, Stocker said. They told the crew of the hijacked plane that they wanted to live in West Germany, but have not formally applied for political asylum, he said.

Solid arrow indicates intended flight of Polish airliner before hijackers forced it to land at Munich.

Polish radio reported that the hijacked plane, which belongs to the government airline LOT, landed in Warsaw at dawn today with 71 of the original 74 passengers and the crew of eight.

Slaughtered sheep, shouts greet PLO

TARTUS, Syria (AP) — Thunderous applause and chants in Arabic of "Victory, Victory, Palestine, Palestine," greeted the first PLO evacuees from west Beirut to Syria today when they arrived at this Mediterranean port.

Thousands of Palestinians from throughout Syria joined Prime Minister Raouf Khassam and Defense Minister Mustafa Tlass in welcoming the Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas evacuated from the Israeli-ringed stronghold in the Lebanese capital.

Before the chartered Cypriot ferry Sol Georgios docked, Palestinians slaughtered and skinned five sheep in front of the crowd to honor "the warriors."

When the PLO fighters disembarked, they stepped on the sheep skins before walking through a human gauntlet to stop briefly before a reviewing stand and hear speeches by Syrian and Palestinian officials.

Many of the evacuees have relatives in Syria, the home of more than 280,000 Palestinians.

Mothers embraced sons and friends broke through lines of Syrian troops to kiss the weary-eyed evacuees as they left the ship.

Pandemonium broke out when the pressing crowd refused to move back from the quay to permit the ship to dock. But the Syrian troops moved in quickly, swinging their automatic rifles to restore order.

The first group of fighters to leave the ship were members of Al Fatah, the PLO's main guerrilla force, followed by members of the Patriotic Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

The fighters waved their automatic weapons in the air and raised their hands in the victory sign. But in sharp contrast to their departure from Beirut, not a shot was fired in the air by them or by the crowd greeting them.

More than 30,000 people, including school children, had gathered at the port hours before the orginally scheduled arrival at 9 p.m. Wednesday, 6 p.m. CDT. But the ship was late and PLO sources estimated the crowd had thinned to about 8,000 when the guerrillas finally stepped ashore.

French, Italian troops' Beirut contingents grow

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — More French and Italian peacekeeping troops landed in war-battered Beirut today and joined U.S. Marines in overseeing the evacuation of Palestine Liberation Organization fighters from the Israeli-ringed Lebanese capital.

The Syrian army sent 61 trucks and tank carriers across Israeli lines to west Beirut to start a two-day overland evacuation to Syria Friday of 3,500 troops and officers of the Syrian-commanded Palestine Liberation Army, an Israeli army spokesman in Lebanon said.

Lebanon's state radio and the Syrian government earlier said the Hittin Brigade evacuation on the Beirut-Damascus highway would begin today depite the PLO's fear of attack from President-elect Gemayel's Lebanese Christian militiamen.

THERE IS NO land evacuation today," the Israeli military spokesman told reporters in suburban Baabda, five miles east of Beirut.

A truck convoy carrying about 500 PLO guerrillas was at the U.S. Marine-controlled port entrance at midday for sea evacuation to the Syrian port of Tartus.

But it was not clear whether any sea evacuation of the guerrillas was planned for today. Greek and Cypriot passenger ships took a total of 3,807 guerrillas to Jordan, Iraq, Tunisia, South Yemen, Syria and Sudan in the past five days, according to Lebanese and PLO estimates.

Both contend the total of PLO guerrillas scheduled for evacuation was between 7,100 and 7,500, according to the plan U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib had drawn for the PLO dispersal in the Arab world. But Israel said 3,484 PLO already have been evacuated by boat out of a total of 8,674 slated for evacuation.

THERE WAS A sharp decrease in farewell shooting as the caravan moved out from west Beirut. The Marines and PLO met Wednesday to make sure there was no shooting once the guerrillas reached the port area.

Lebanese police said nine civilians have been killed and 27 wounded in farewell shooting fusillades staged for the departing guerrillas each day since the evacuation began Saturday.

The International Red Cross began moving 185 wounded PLO guerrillas by 28 ambulances from 17 west Beirut hospitals to the German Red Cross hospital ship, MV Flora, which was repaired in Cyprus after being shelled July 27 while it was unloading PLO-destined medical supplies in the Christian port of Jounieh, 12 miles north of here.

International Red Cross spokesman Jean-Jacques Kurz said 20 of the wounded would be taken to Cyprus and the rest to hospitals in Athens, Greece.

By mid-morning, six ambulances flying Red Cross and Red Crescent flags arrived at the port with wounded PLO guerrillas to board the Flora. American marines stood about 50 yards from where the wounded were taken onto the hospital ship.

FRANCE COMPLETED its contribution to the multinational peacekeeping force when 450 paratroopers from the Carcasonne-based 3rd Marine Infantry Regiment landed at the U.S.-controlled Beirut port at dawn. The contingent reinforced 350 Foreign Legion paratroopers at the central Museum Crossing at the "Green Line" dividing Beirut into Moslem and Christian sectors.

A contingent of 250 Italian volunteers from the sharpshooters special forces unit, sporting white helmets with black plummage, came ashore from the landing craft Caorle two hours after the French.

THE BMW 733i. FOR THOSE WHO PREFER TO LUXURIATE IN THE COMFORTS OF ENGINEERING.

Any number of luxury sedans can provide all the creature comforts you might require (and probably more).

The BMW 733i is for people who also demand the sort of amenities that can only result from superior engineering.

It's the only car in its class to offer Digital Motor Electronics - a system of microprocessors that delivers exhilarating response while assuring optimal engine efficiency. And its suspension is so advanced, it's been awarded international patent.

It is in short, an unparalleled combination of luxury and high performance—"a cornucopia of driving delights" (Car and Driver).

If you're interested in a car that combines such delights instead of forcing you to choose between them, contact us to arrange a thorough test drive.

$673.30 Per Month

You can't afford NOT to buy any longer!

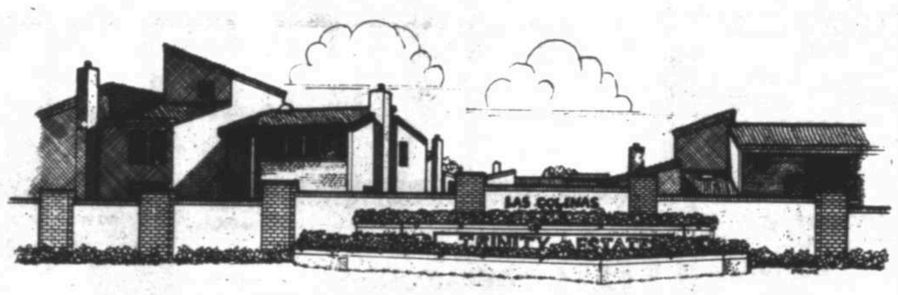

Total move in costs of $5250 is based on 5% down or $3000 plus $1450 limited closing costs based on 15 days prepaid interest. The first year's payment of $673.30 (principal and interest only) is based on a loan amount of $71,400. The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 180 7/8% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 15 7/8% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan.
