Reagan says he will 'stay on course'

By BILL ADKINSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, predicting an economic upturn by summer, says the government "must stiffen its spine and not throw in the towel" on his program of tax and budget cuts.

While conceding the nation faces "hard times" in the coming months, Reagan insisted at a nationally broadcast news conference Tuesday that "our plan for economic recovery is sound."

"I am determined to stick with it and stay on course and I will not be deterred by temporary economic changes or short-term political expediency," .he declared.

In the meantime, however, Reagan vowed to veto any budget-busting legislation and refused to endorse a Senate Republican plan seeking higher taxes over the next three years to balance the budget. The president admitted that government red ink probably can't be eliminated by 1984, as he promised, and said it shouldn't be done with tax increases.

He said he will defer until January his own specific proposals for $3 billion in selected tax increases and $2.6 billion in cuts in government benefit programs, while pushing for 12 percent cuts in other non-defense spending.

Reagan acknowledged that his administration had not anticipated the recession that is wrecking his economic forecasts but maintained that it isn't his fault.

"Our program has only been in effect for some 40 days," the president said. "And you can't cure 40 years of problems in that short time. But we believe we've laid a firm foundation for economic recovery in 1982.... I think we're going to see a pickup in the economy...in spring or (at) the latest early summer."

Senate Democrats, however, accused Reagan of deliberately deceiving the public about the economy. Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., said the administration is pursuing an economic policy that amounts to the "Hoover nonsense that prosperity is just around the corner.... Just wait until next spring."

On other topics at his fifth news conference since moving into the White House, the president:

—Refused to back off an earlier comment that sparked widespread protest in Europe, saying he still believes it is possible for a battlefield exchange of nuclear weapons to occur without triggering global war.

—Complained that the news media exaggerated reports of discord among his foreign and defense advisers following an allegation by Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. that an unidentified White House official was trying to discredit him. "We are not in disarray with regard to foreign policy," he said. "We're a very happy group."

—Said he had no answer to whether there is a NATO contingency plan to fire a nuclear warning shot in the event of conventional war in Europe. Haig said last week that there was such a plan; Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said there wasn't.

—Argued that the B-1 bomber is necessary while the radar-eluding Stealth aircraft is being developed but said the B-1 wouldn't be "a total loss" after that and could be put to other uses.

The president's assessment of the economic outlook followed gloomy forecasts by members of the administration, including Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan's prediction Monday of "a real downer" in the final three months of this year.

"Now, I don't know what his (Regan's) definition is of a 'real downer.' I think that we're going to have some hard times for the next few months," the president said.

But Reagan said interest rates already are falling and next July's installment of the individual tax cut will spur productivit and cut unemployment.

The Labor Department reported Tuesday that inflation at the wholesale level rose 0.6 percent in October, the biggest jump since April. But the increase in the Producer Price Index for finished goods mostly reflected costs of new cars, while food and energy prices fell.

"The things that have been bothering us the most on the inflation side are pretty calm," said Alan Murray, a vice president and economist at Citibank in New York.

Although some of Reagan's advisers have urged him to raise taxes to make up at least some of the ballooning budget deficit, he said he will not decide that issue until January.

Sewage solution still stalled

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

One man quipped that he suddenly realized Midland is an "effluent society," but the Midland City Council on Tuesday night barely cracked a smile as the members wrestled with the problem of too much sewage, discovering themselves stranded up the draw without a paddle.

The council, meeting in its first regular session in City Hall since Oct. 13, was left high and dry on a long-term solution of where to put the primary treated effluent, but instructed Assistant City Manager Fred Poe to try out his short-term recommendation.

Source of the problem emanates from the sewage treatment plant located southeast of the town and close to Midland Draw combined with a flush population. As the city's growth has mushroomed in the past 18 to 24 months, so has the amount of sewage flowing into the plant. In the past, the disposal plan has called for storing the sewage, after putting it through a primary treatment process, in holding ponds or using it as water for irrigating city-owned farmland.

But the holding ponds have been overflowing the past couple of years during the winter months when the need to irrigate drops, and residents living along the draw have complained about the effluent.

"The ground is so saturated," said Poe, "that we're in desperate need of quick, short-range plans. I don't even have any suggestions." He explained there isn't enough land to hold the effluent flowing down to the plant.

With the council's approval, Poe will begin informing landowners along the draw that the ponds will be overflowing this winter. "There's no possibility of being able to keep it off this winter. It's going to get down that draw."

If he can gain their permission, he said the city would let the treated effluent flow into the draw under controlled conditions. Poe explained that if the landowners need to get to their land, the flow would be stopped.

By obtaining their permission, the city could apply for an emergency certificate from the Texas Water Quality Board, which would allow the effluent to be released into the draw. Poe said he didn't expect much opposition from the panel if the landowners agreed to the plan.

On a long-term basis, however, the council came up dry.

The panel had eyed a proposal which called for developing Salt Lake eight miles south of the city as a long-term disposal site. But in August, landowners adjacent to the lake site objected and their attorneys suggested getting farmers to take the water for irrigation.

The group was given 60 days to come up with enough farmers to take 6 million gallons per day of secondary treated effluent to irrigate crops, while the remaining 3 mgd would be sprayed on city farmland.

Joe Reed with the hydrology firm of Ed Reed & Associates explained that ground water under the farmers' land had to be of poorer quality than the treated effluent, according to state law. Two farmers were willing, but their ground water proved to be too good for the effluent.

When the original idea seemed to evaporate, Reed said he began testing ground water along Midland Draw and Monahans Draw. Water along the former draw was spotty, testing good in one spot and bad in another. However, Monahans Draw proved as the site of consistently poor quality ground water.

Even after contacting landowners along Monahans Draw as to the possibility of their taking the effluent water, Reed said "we don't have a whole lot positive to report."

Marc Skeen, representing the Salt Lake landowners, conceded the idea had run into a dam.

"We found one man willing to take almost all of this, but his ground water wasn't acceptable. This leaves us in a bad situation," he said.

The firm is looking at three other landowners whose property may contain a poor quality ground water that would qualify for the effluent. But these people haven't been contacted, nor is their land set up for farming operations.

Skeen, with the firm of Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin and Browder, has until Nov. 24 to find a landowner willing to take the effluent and whose ground water qualifies as poor.

Veterans benefits remain 'inviolable'

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — These may be days of austerity for cities, symphonies and schoolchildren, but the pinch hasn't come yet for veterans who look to Washington for a helping hand.

Without any ceremony, President Reagan put aside his deficit-fighting efforts a few weeks ago to sign a bill that added nearly $1 billion to federal outlays. He issued a brief statement of satisfaction and congratulations, then went back to work. The event caused barely a ripple.

But the timimg was appropriate — today is Veteran's Day.

Little reaction was seen around the nation because the extra spending involved veterans and, even in austerity, money for veterans is pretty much inviolable. Abraham Lincoln laid down the premise that still governs. He said the government had an obligation "to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphan...."

As a result, while asking other agencies to take a new cut of 12 percent in their budgets, Reagan proposed and signed an 11.2 percent increase in disability payments for 2.3 million service-disabled veterans and their survivors.

"We cannot lose sight of the nation's debt to those brave veterans who have sacrificed their life and limb for the defense of their country," his statement said.

Even though Reagan did suggest modest reductions in some areas, the overall budget of the Veterans Administration keeps growing. It has doubled since 1972 and now totals over $23 billion.

A day of recalculation may be coming; costs are soaring as an aging population of veterans makes more demands. The 12.4 million veterans of World War II now average 61 years of age. In four years most will be eligible for free VA medical care — a demand that could force reconsideration of what is offered veterans.

In the meantime, the VA sees its constituency as a growing one: 30 million veterans, 59 million family members of living veterans, nearly 4 million survivors of deceased veterans. The VA calculates that 41 percent of the people in America are "potential recipients of veterans benefits provided by the federal government."

The American Legion which, along with oter veterans groups, lobbies mightily to maintain and increase these programs, foresees a potential tightening up.

Says Robert Lyngh, the Legion's director of rehabilitation: "The American Legion believes this nation has provided a well-founded and comprehensive program of benefits for veterans, their dependents and survivors. The main problem in these days of fiscal austerity is the provision of adequate funding to keep all veterans programs functioning in the manner intended by Congress. The American Legion believes that in the nation's priorities, veterans, representing the men and women who have defended the nation in time of war and active hostilities, should rank second only to national defense."

Council OKs purchase of used buses

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland went shopping for buses and came up with a bargain as the City Council on Tuesday approved buying three used vehicles for its MidTran fleet from Kerrville.

During a morning session in City Hall Council Chambers when the panel dealt primarily with transportation matters, the council also agreed to apply for a federal grant for MidTran and to advertise for seven more light transit buses. In addition, the new director of MidTran announced Saturday service would be initiated on a trial basis in early December.

The three buses from Kerrville's defunct public transportation system are costing Midland $8,449. In addition, the city is tossing in $67.40 for the three fare boxes which accompany the buses.

Dennis Knautz with McDonald Transit Associates, Inc. in Fort Worth explained that Midland is paying back Kerrville its share spent on the buses. Appraised value of the vehicles is $120,700. But the city only paid 7 percent of that figure with the state and federal governments picking up the rest of the tab.

These buses should be in the Tall City within two months.

Earlier this year, Midland had received a grant from the Urban Mass Transportation Administration to purchase 10 vehicles. After taking advantage of the Kerrville bargain, the council voted to advertise for bids on seven more light transit buses, which would seat about 16 to 20 passengers. These are specified as diesel with heavy-duty cooling systems.

No one commented during a public hearing on the application to UMTA for an assistance grant, which should bring $540,000 into the city's coffers to pay for operating the public transportation system.

Knautz said $101,693 would be designated for the 1979-80 fiscal year, $169,300 for 1980-81 and $270,000 for 1981-82.

Jim Johnson, new MidTran director, related that a survey of Midlanders showed a strong desire for Saturday service. That will be started on a 120-day trial basis on Dec. 5. Maps and times of service will be available later this month, he said.

The council approved an engineering contract with Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, Inc. to expand the parking lot at Midland Regional Airport and design a new street system.

And the panel decided to advertise a tract of land at the Air Terminal for sale after hearing a request from the Avis rental car franchise owner.

Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation, pointed out that "Avis is one of our best contributors to income at the airport. Rent for the past fiscal year totaled $7,917.68. And Avis paid $130,962 in revenues to the airport."

Midlanders made aware of landlord, tenant rights

By HALLYE JORDAN

If in the past you've been pretty lenient about paying your rent, you might want to start getting the check in on time, according to Sister Mary Jean Audette of West Texas Legal Services.

Some written leases or agreements include provisions that allow your landlord to take items such as jewelry, televisions or appliances if you owe them rent.

"If you don't pay rent, you don't have rights," Sister Audette told the group of about 25 persons who attended the fourth session of Midland Awareness Tuesday night.

She was one of five speakers who answered questions and provided information concerning housing in Midland. Other groups represented included Midland Housing Association, Midland Housing Authority of the City of Midland, Midland Homebuilders Association and the Midland Board of Realtors.

"Landlords in Texas are perhaps more protected than those elsewhere in the country," Sister Audette said.

According to her and a pamphlet supplied by West Texas Legal Services, a landlord has the right to change the lock on a tenant's door, which he may do if the tenant is behind on the rent payments, only if he leaves a note on the door explaining where the tenant can get the key.

"If there are any agreements — oral or written — they have to be pretty well spelled out," she said.

For example, the pamphlet stated that if a tenant has a written lease, the landlord can ask the tenant to Power units no longer overlooked

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Once overlooked by space buffs who marveled at Columbia's revolutionary engines and remarkable thermal tiles, the space shuttle's sophisticated hydraulics are now the subject of rapt attention.

The Auxiliary Power Units operate for little more than an hour, but without them Columbia could neither lift off nor land.

Just 31 seconds before launch last week, countdown monitors uncovered problems with two of the three units. Dirty oil clogged two unit filters and launch was scrubbed under the threat of a ship-threatening breakdown on descent.

Following repairs and a delay that cost an estimated $1.5 million to $2 million, officials are confident that all's now well with the units.

"The machine's ready," says the astronaut coordinator, Bill Jones. "They (pilots Joe Engle and Richard Truly) think it was just an unfortunate glitch."

The problem with the units was a surprise. APUs flew on all 32 previous U.S. man-in-space missions and never were a major cause for concern. Instead, shuttle engineers concentrated on the shuttle's new high-technology items.

The engines — designed for a life of 100 missions — demanded a significant leap in technology, as did the tiles which must survive heat up to 2,700 degrees upon re-entry.

When Columbia returned from its first flight, the emphasis was on how well the engines and tiles had performed: spectacularly. Little attention was paid to the power units, other than to change the oil, and this may have led to the problem.

The three units, turbine-driven devices that function much like a power steering pump on a car, generate mechanical power to pumps that produce pressure for the hydraulic systems.

During the 12 minutes from launch to orbit, this pressure swivels the engine nozzles and controls the movement of wing and body flaps.

The Auxiliary Power Units are shut off in space and are activated just before the engine burn that starts the ship back toward Earth. During the return, they control the flaps, rudder and speed brake, lower the nose and landing gears, steer the nose gear on the runway and provide braking power.

Located in a rear shuttle compartment, each unit, with its control systems, costs $1.6 million, weighs 88 pounds and measures 20-by-22-by-18 inches. Each is powered by 392 pounds of hydrazine fuel, and its pumps are lubricated by three quarts of a special oil developed for military use that costs $5 a quart.

After last week's launch was scrubbed, analysis determined that hydrazine had leaked through pressure seals in two of the units, mixing with the oil to form a waxy substance that contaminated the systems.

To get the shuttle ready again, technicians drained the two units, flushed the plumbing, installed new filters and filled each with new oil.

The failure of one unit will not affect full operational performance. If two fail, the third will provide sufficient hydraulic power to operate all systems at a reduced rate. That would cause no problem on liftoff, but would force the astronauts to fly a relatively easy re-entry — eliminating some of the test maneuvers planned.

Space center engineers roll back the gantry revealing the space shuttle Columbia on launch pad 39-A Tuesday night during a light rain at Kennedy Space Center at Cape Canaveral, Fla. The shuttle is being readied for its Thursday morning launch. The starbursts are caused by the use of a special effects filter on the camera's lens.

Delay cost $2 million

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The price-tag for the eight-day postponement of STS-2 — the second flight of space shuttle Columbia — was $1.5 to $2 million, says the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

"It is difficult to provide an estimate in which we would have a high level of confidence," acting NASA Comptroller Tom Newman said in Washington on Tuesday.

The $1.5 to $2 million figure, he said, is a preliminary estimate of costs incurred solely because of the delay. The Nov. 4 launch of Columbia was scrubbed when dirty oil clogged filters in two hydraulic units.

The billion-dollar shuttle burns more than a half-million gallons of liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen to reach orbit. The cost of fuels carried aloft is $389,600.

Tass denies sub carrying nuclear weapons

MOSCOW (AP) — Tass denied today the Swedish government's charge that a Soviet submarine that went aground in Swedish waters two weeks ago had nuclear weapons aboard.

The news agency also said, in its first substantive commentary on the submarine incident, that the United States and NATO were seeking to overdramatize the incident to counter anti-U.S. feelings in Europe and damage Soviet proposals for a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe.

Tass commentator Leonid Ponomaryov said "anti-Soviet propagandists" claimed the sub violated Swedish waters intentionally and that radioactive radiation was coming from the vessel, and therefore nuclear torpedoes and mines could be aboard.

He said such claims "are in fact denied by a number of specialists in the West itself, who understand these matters."

The report referred particularly to Heinz Hansen, a scientist at Denmark's prestigious Risoe Atomic Research Institute, who said Tuesday that the Swedish govarnment hasn't presented enough evidence to prove the submarine was carrying nuclear weapons.

The submarine went aground off Sweden's southeastern coast Oct. 27 near the Karlskrona naval base on the Baltic Sea, 300 miles south of Stockholm. Swedish authorities released the sub and its crew of about 56 last Friday after questioning the Soviet skipper and examining the ship. Swedish officials said the vessel appeared to have been modified for intelligence-gathering purposes.

Tass repeated the Soviet claim that the sub was on an "ordinary training cruise" and that it went off course because of navigational instrument failure.

"The history of seafaring, starting from ancient times, knows of many such cases, including some involving Swedish vessels," Tass said.

But Sweden had said it took some clever manuevering through tricky waters to get that close to the base.

Tass also suggested that the Reagan administration and its supporters were involved in exaggerating the incident.

"In order to muffle the voices of protest of those who demand disarmament and the ending of Washington's sped-up nuclear arms race, the leaders of NATO have raised a furor over the Soviet submarine," Tass said.

"This is being done to discredit the idea of creating a nuclear-free zone in north Europe and to deploy there not mythical rockets with uranium-238 (a reference to a substance said to have been on the Soviet submarine), but cruise missiles and Pershing II rockets with real nuclear warheads of uranium-235 and plutonium-239."

Israelis meet with U.S. officials

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Israeli delegation is here for talks with administration officials on a Saudi Arabian plan that President Reagan calls a "hopeful sign" in the search for peace in the Middle East.

The six-member delegation, which arrived Tuesday night, is led by Moshe Arens, who heads the foreign affairs committee of the Israeli Knesset and is expected to succeed Ephraim Evron as his country's ambassador to Washington.

Diplomatic sources said Evron, who was recalled to Jerusalem, is being eased out because of disagreements with Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Reagan said at his news conference Tuesday that the Saudi plan, while never specifically mentioning Israel, implicitly offers recognition of the Jewish state's right to exist.

"This has been one of the sticking points so far with the Arab world refusing to make that acknowledgement," Reagan said. "This is why I have referred to it as a hopeful sign."

West Texas desert plant may help bolster rubber supply

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Millions of dollars are being spent for research on an ugly, silverish green plant that has led an isolated existence in the deserts of West Texas for centuries.

Why all the interest from the government and such companies as Goodyear and Firestone in guayule?

Guayule — pronounced why-oo-lee — produces natural rubber in its stems and branches. Some people see it as a valuable resource as prices rise for the oil that is used to make synthetic rubber and political instability makes Southeast Asia an unreliable supplier of natural rubber.

Natural rubber is second only to oil as an import into the United States, with 1 million tons imported annually, says Wayne Whitworth, an agronomist at New Mexico State University in nearby Las Cruces.

Forty percent of the rubber in radial tires is natural rubber and airplane tires are made exclusively from natural rubber because it is more heat-resistant than its synthetic counterpart, Whitworth says.

RUBBER is considered by the U.S. government to be a strategic material that should be stockpiled in case war or political upheaval should cut off the supplies from Asia.

"We have less than one half of the natural rubber we're supposed to have," Whitworth says. "If we could develop guayule as a crop, it would help us in two ways — give us an industry and give us a stockpile.

"We could have living rubber reserves so that when we needed it, we could go out and get it."

Whitworth was involved in a government-funded guayule project at Crystal City, Texas, in 1951, when the Korean War threatened natural rubber supplies. The crop was plowed under when the situation stabilized.

During World War II, guayule was planted by the government in California because of the Japanese threat to rubber-producing countries. That crop was burned when the war ended.

But guayule has gained the attention of government again and currently $1.7 million in government money is being used for research projects in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California, says Dick Wheaton, program manager of the Joint Guayule Commission in Washington, D.C.

ONE OF those research projects is Whitworth's 30 acres of guayule at New Mexico State.

Much of the research is being conducted in West Texas, the only area in the United States where the plant, which needs less than 15 inches of rainfall a year, grows wild. Texas A&M University has a seeding project near Pecos. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. is growing nearly 200 acres of guayule near Fort Stockton.

Firestone also is experimenting with extracting rubber from the plant at laboratories in Akron, Ohio, says Joe Nivert, production manager of the company's plantation division.

"We have a small developmental laboratory that can make about two pounds of rubber per day," Nivert says. "We are looking at a number of alternative processes for getting the rubber. We're scheduled to come up with a process by mid-1982."

Nivert says the company also is investigating methods of using guayule byproducts such as bagasse, a woody fiber that burns very hot. It is believed that bagasse could be used to generate the energy needed to operate a full-scale processing plant.

Resin from the plant can be used for adhesives and varnishes and the plant's oils might even be used for perfume, he says.

"For guayule to be profitable, we know we will have to use the byproducts," he says.

THE profitability of guayule has been the major question mark in the production of a domestic rubber crop, Nivert says.

"There are too many risks," he says. "There's no proven process so far. For that matter, there's no proved method of growing. There has to be a lot of development in the field before it could be a big money-making project."

There is a "chicken-and-egg situation" that is preventing private entrepeneurs from jumping onto the guayule bandwagon, says Ross Clanahan of the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Potential growers will not plant a crop until they are assured there is a processing plant to buy it. Rubber companies are afraid to build such a plant because they may not be able to get adequate guayule supplies.

Everyone interviewed about guayule says government support will be the key to development of the rubber source.

"In 1980, natural rubber cost an average of 74.5 cents per pound," Wheaton says. "Our best educated estimate is that the cost of guayule natural rubber is 83 to 84 cents per pound. We have to get a government subsidy to balance the difference between natural rubber and guayule rubber."

GOODYEAR Tire and Rubber Co. has submitted a proposal for a pilot program to the Federal Emergency Management Agency in hopes that the Reagan administration will invest in guayule because of its strategic value as a defense stockpile. Firestone is preparing a proposal of its own, Nivert says.

Meanwhile, agency officials have taken the initiative and suggested such a program to the administration for fiscal year 1983, Clanahan says.

Clanahan says the proposal for a government-subsidized 10-year program currently is being considered by budget experts in the administration. If it is approved, President Reagan would submit the proposal to Congress, where Wheaton thinks it has relatively strong support.

Wheaton says guayule development could result in as much as 30 percent of the nation's rubber coming from guayule.

"Nothing is locked in concrete yet," he says. "It could be a government subsidized operation or it could be an incentive program."

Either way, domestic rubber production could mean a new agricultural industry

Lamas attest to religious freedom in new China

PEKING (AP) — Hu Xie Feng, a 15-year-old Mongolian peasant, wants the Buddhist religious life — to be a lama. At the same time he swears by the Chinese Communist Party and sees no contradiction in this. He knows, too, at this young age that he never will marry.

Thirty-two-year-old Bong Yu Ming also wants to be a lama and he religiously learns sutras (Buddhist maxims) and Communist ideology. He believes in Buddha and Karl Marx, too, but he says Buddhism is more important. He, too, has foresworn marriage.

They talked of their ambitions recently as their old lama teachers and city government officials stood vigilantly by at Peking's first and possibly China's only formal school for lamas.

BOTH ARE FROM an autonomous Mongolian county in northeast Liaoning Province. They arrived in May with 24 other young Mongolians for the opening of the school in June.

Their careful recruitment, their rigorous classes, the restoration of their majestic crimson and gold temple all attest to China's new official policy of religious freedom and encouragement of pious, sometimes intractable minorities.

Once these young men would have been ridiculed and persecuted for their religious beliefs and denounced for betraying athiesm, proletarianism and communism. That was during the anti-religious, anti-ethnic 1966-76 Cultural Revolution.

Today they are objects of official pride and they are treated with care and respect. They even are envied by their friends back home at the commune or the sheep herd.

Their hair is cropped close to the skull and they wear traditional brown Mongolian, floor-length robes with saffron, orange or vermilion sashes. All carry prayer beads, now freely sold in Peking.

THEY LIVE AND LEARN in the rambling Temple of Peace and Harmony, built in 1694 as an imperial palace. It later was turned into a Buddhist temple by Emperor Gian Long in memory of his Buddhist emperor-father. It is said to symbolize unity among Chinese, Mongolians and Tibetans.

The apprentices are surrounded by intricately carved antique furniture inlaid with marble and mother of pearl and padded with saffron cushions.

They sleep, three to a room, on hard beds, and they sit on opulent but stern armchairs that belong in museums. They study 200-year-old Tibetan sutras far into the night and spin antique prayer wheels bearing Mongolian script. Beside their beds they place a single teacup and may have elaborate snuff bottles, a substitue for tobacco since lamas are not allowed to smoke.

The head lama, Boyun Wuerji, 56, said in an interview that he entered the temple when he was 12 and led a bitter life of hard work and beatings. He added that he was forced into lamaism by his desperately poor Mongolian family in Liaoning Province. In the end, he said, he came to believe, only to be persecuted for his beliefs and sent to labor in a rice paddy during the Cultural Revolution of the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

His temple was closed for 15 years and reopened last February with great fanfare.

Today, he said, young apprentices must volunteer to be lamas and their parents must agree. Most come from relatively well-off peasant families and have received enough schooling to speak both Mongolian and Chinese, Boyun said.

HE PERSONALLY RECRUITED the 26 from about 40 applicants in Inner Mongolia and the Mongolian counties in Liaoning. He said he searched their hearts for devotion and their minds for ability to speak Mongolian and Chinese.

He also made certain parents were not coercing their sons into the demanding monastic life.

Although the temple is devoted to the yellow sect of the exiled Dalai Lama of Tibet, no recruits have yet come from Tibet, now controlled by China.

In their two-year course they learn to speak and write Tibetan, to read and chant sutras. The lama school has a vast hall containing thousands of ancient scripts.

The young apprentices rise at 5 a.m. and clean the temple. One group goes to class while another walks through the halls and pavilions, pondering the incense-blackened statues, the intricate, even erotic paintings, the legends and the lore. Some follow the old lamas to the main hall and chant sutras before an 85-foot Buddha carved from a single tree.

Before class begins they bow and burn incense before golden deities and they leave six silver bowls of water and a pile of delicate sweet cakes.

More study in the afternoon. Between 5 p.m. and 7 p.m., they play badminton and other games. In the evening they review lessons and watch television. On Thursdays, they go into Peking to stroll in the parks and see the latest movies.

One day a week is devoted to political study of Marxism, Leninism and Mao's thoughts. They also study the latest documents of the Communist Party's Central Committee, read them aloud and learn the latest official line.

My brother returned home from his job as a supermarket cashier looking very weary. "People are always trying to put one over on you," he said. "I worked on the express checkout line today. One lady came through with 12 items. When I told her the express line was for people with 10 items or less, she told me she was counting bacon, lettuce and tomato as one."

—Donald Ajluni, Calif.

My husband and I spent the first three years of our marriage trying to adjust to the new feminism. Never was this more evident than when we were doing the shopping for our newly purchased house. I was waiting at the checkout when he approached, carrying two lawn rakes. "When are we ever going to need a second rake?" I asked. He just smiled sweetly and replied, "Every time we need the first."

In my work for a charitable organization that accepts donations of used household goods for resale, I have seen abundant proof of the law-abiding spirit of my fellow Americans. Each day our trucks return from their rounds filled with old comforters tattered and torn, stuffed sofas with springs popping through the seat, sagging mattresses, pillows with stuffing spilling out. Diverse as the day's load may be, all of these pieces have one thing in common — proudly attached to each one is the manufacturer's tag, which advises not to remove the tag under penalty of law.

At age 65, I returned to high school to get my diploma. I studied hard, harder than I ever had in my young days, and passed my exams. When I informed my children of this accomplishment, my youngest son said, "Wonderful, Mom! And just think - you won't have to worry about an invitation to the senior prom!"

Twenty history-minded tourists stood on a rise overlooking the Old North Bridge in Concord, Mass., as a recording narrated the story of America's first successful battle against the British. It was a solemn moment.

"I'm so impressed," said one man softly when the tape ended.

"I'm moved," quietly added a woman.

"And I," came a voice with a pronounced British accent, "am perfectly mortified!"

When my wife went to Florida recently for two weeks, I learned just how well she knows me. I went through a stack of clean dishes until I reached the bottom one. There I found a note that read: "START DISHWASHER."

As I was walking through a variety store, I stopped at the pet department to look at some parakeets. In one cage a green bird lay on his back, one foot hooked oddly into the cage wire. I was about to alert the saleswoman to the bird's plight when I noticed a sign taped to the cage:

"No, I am not sick.

"No, I am not dead.

"No, my leg is not stuck in the cage.

"I just like to sleep this way."

Shortly after Ash Wednesday, I was at the beauty parlor. While the owner was massaging my scalp during the shampooing, I raved about how good it felt. "Yes, I know," he said. "One of my Saturday-morning regulars just called. She's giving me up for Lent."

Wild elephants dwindling

By JOHN LAIRD
Associated Press Writer

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Southeast Asia's majestic elephant, which in centuries past carried kings and princes into battle, is now facing a battle for survival.

From Burma across to Vietnam, and south to Malaysia and Indonesia, elephant numbers dwindle each year.

Conservationists such as Thailand's Dr. Boonsong Lekagul put the greatest blame on relentless destruction of forests, but also point to incidences of elephants killed for their ivory, or even for food.

Decades of warfare in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos have depleted wild elephant populations. Although rarely caught in battle, elephants were affected by the by-products of war: famine, migrations of people and destruction of habitats through such military measures as defoliation.

In northern Malaysia and the Indonesian island of Sumatra, normally shy, wild elephants raid encroaching plantations — feeding off oil palms, sugar cane, banana and papaya trees, and bringing them into direct conflict with man.

Elephant numbers in the wild are hard to estimate, but the total of tame and wild elephants left in seven Southeast Asian countries may be fewer than 17,000, according to various estimates.

By contrast, one historical reference says that the ancient Cambodian empire, which at its peak about 700 years ago included large chunks of present-day Vietnam, Thailand and Laos, had more than 200,000 elephants.

Boonsong, who at 75 is the dean of Thailand's conservationists, said that the number of tame elephants in the kingdom drops every year. Last year there were 5,232 compared to 6,629 in 1977 and 13,397 in 1950.

He believes there are fewer wild elephants than tame ones. Their breeding rate is lower in captivity, and elephants continue to be captured.

"Wild elephants will be gone in 30 or not more than 40 years — except if they are given strong protection in national parks and reserves," he said. Most are now found along the Burmese border, in national parks and in the northern Petchabun Mountains.

Boonsong recalls that migrations of elephants from neighboring Burma and Cambodia, so common during the rainy season 15-20 years ago, are now rarely seen.

The Forestry Department in Rangoon, Burma's capital, says there are 4,000 tame elephants in Burma and about 3,000 wild ones. The latter figure is half that of 40 years ago. Most roam deep jungles in northern Kachin state.

Burmese forestry officials link the decline to a birth rate of 2.12 percent, compared to a death rate of 3.35 percent a year.

Tame elephants — some 2,500 owned by Burma's state timber corporation — are indispensible for hauling out felled teak logs from dense jungle.

Burmese officials say about 25 wild elephants are killed each year by ivory poachers.

Illegal poaching is a relatively small problem in Thailand, too, because the Asian elephant has smaller tusks than its exploited African cousin.

Boonsong believes that killing for meat — even in Thailand's national parks — is worse.

"One village can use the meat for at least three or four months; much longer if it is dried," he said.

He fears that this practice has decimated smaller elephant populations in Cambodia, which faced famine in 1979 caused by political upheaval; and in Laos, an impoverished, food-deficit country.

Boonsong says he is alarmed by the reported use of toxic chemicals against anti-government guerrillas in Laos and Cambodia, saying this also threatens wildlife.

A different type of vacation

By KARREN MILLS
Associated Press Writer

EL CASCO, Mexico (AP) — This poor little Mexican farming village is where Roger Belisle takes his vacation as often as twice a year. He travels 2,000 miles from his home in Bloomington, Minn., to get here.

There are no golf courses, beaches, courts or grand hotels.

When he first came here to visit his wife's hometown a dozen years ago, he was appalled at the conditions in this place where she grew up.

"There was no electricity or running water. There were dirt floors in the adobe homes and no glass or screens on the windows," Belisle says.Medical care was virtually nonexistent. The nearest hospital was 125 miles away and people had to travel 30 miles to the nearest clinic. Parasite infestation was rampant. Nutrition was poor. Babies were dying "from the simplest of problems," Belisle said.

So, with his wife Eva, he makes his pilgrimages in a roomy station wagon, stuffed to the brim with new and used clothing and other necessities. "We bring bandages, aspirin, vitamins and other essentials to help the villagers," said Belisle.

Belisle, who was studying biomedical engineering at the University of Minnesota, expanded his studies. By taking some additional courses, he was able to pass the necessary tests to become licensed to practice medicine in Mexico. Belisle said it is easier to obtain a medical license in Mexico than in the United States.

As time passed, Belisle was encouraged.

"It turned out that what I was doing was making a pretty big impact," Belisle said. "So we contacted the Mexican government to tell them what we were trying to do" and find out if there were plans to set up a medical clinic in El Casco.

Since his first visit, the government has run an electric line into the town and graded the village's main street to make it more accessible to motor vehicles.

"They said they had a big job to do. Mexico is very big. They had some very good programs, but they couldn't possibly cover all areas at once," Belisle said.

"So we planned a clinic. We talked to people about just exactly what they thought they would need and started construction, using money put up by Eva and me," he said.

The Mexican government said if there was some way the Belisles could represent the people in a larger area of the state of Durango, that they probably would be able to help. Realizing that a clinic to cover a larger area was more than he could handle alone, Belisle returned to Minneota and began talking to friends and business associates.

He told of the women washing their clothing in the stream, of the farmers still using mules and horses to get to and from the fields. He talked of the corn and bean crops failing year after year because there is no irrigation, of the men being forced to work in large cities in Mexico and the United States during the winter to make ends meet.

In 1979, the American-Mexican Medical Foundation was formed as a non-profit Minnesota corporation to help with the project. In June 1980, Control Data Corp. gave Belisle and Del Asmussen of St. Paul, Minn., 18-month social service leaves from their computer marketing jobs at full pay to raise the money needed to complete the 2,700-square-foot free clinic and hire a fulltime doctor.

The villagers are making the concrete blocks and providing the labor to build the 11-room clinic. Materials are being purchased with money donated to the foundation.

The walls are up and the windows are in storage. But money is still needed to buy cement for the roof and floor and the rising cost of materials has slowed progress.

The Mexican government has come through with some medical help for El Casco. In March, the Mexican Social Security Department opened a small first-aid station in the village, one of 65 stations built in Durango this year.

The people have come to accept the portly Belisle and his tall, lean sidekick Asmussen. Both sit for hours with the farmers and discuss crops and irrigation over a bottle of El Presidente or a case of Carta Blanca beer.

The villagers rarely express any disagreement with the Minnesotans. Jose Rivas, postmaster and owner of the village's only restaurant, says the people of El Casco are fully behind Belisle's efforts to build the clinic.

Reagan turns attention on child's plight

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa (AP) — Like the respirator next to her hospital bed, government benefits make life possible for little Katie Beekett.

But the government rules that govern those benefits make life difficult for the 3-year-old's parents — so much so that their plight was mentioned Tuesday by President Reagan as a living example of how federal regulations can fail to satisfy the people they're meant to help, and waste money at the same time.

Mark and Julie Beckett Katie's folks want her home and her doctors say that's the best place for her. Care for her paralyzing disease would cost $2,000 a month at home instead of $12,000 a month at the hospital.

BUT OF SHE goes home, the government won't pick up the tab for her treatment.

Beckett, 29, works at a lumber yard; his 32-year-old wife is a schoolteacher. "We're not poor enough to be eligible, but we're not rich enough to handle it," Mrs. Beckett said Tuesday. "No one would be rich enough to handle all the things she needs."

Reagan did not mention Katie's name, but cited her case during his nationally televised news conference, asking, "By what sense do we have a regulation in goverment that pays $6,000 a month to keep someone in the hospital that we believe would be better off at home but the family cannot afford one-sixth of that amount to keep them at home?"

The family said the figures Reagan used are out of date and the costs have doubled. The president learned of the case from Vice President George Bush, who was in Iowa last week and spoke to Rep. Thomas Tauke, R-Iowa.

Medicaid pays the little girl's medical bills under the Supplemental Security Income plan, said Jayne Hart, an aide to Tauke. If Katie goes home, the SSI money would be cut off because she would be living with a family that has income and assets, Miss Hart said.

"One thing Mark and I were taught when we were growing up is to be sure you have medical insurance to cover yourself, always be ready to take care of anything you can," Mrs. Beckett said. "But no one can be prepared for this type of catastrophic illness."

MRS. BECKETT SAID they especially worry about what would happen if Katie did come home and then had to go back to the hospital. Medicaid would not cover the first 30 days of care, Mrs. Beckett said.

She said the family's insurance ran out in the early days of Katie's illness.

The girl contracted viral encephalitis four months after birth and her ability to breathe and swallow were affected. She is about 80 percent recovered from the paralysis, but has brain damage and a weakened respirator system. While she can be taken home for short periods, Katie has spent every night since September 1978 at the Cedar Rapids hospital.

She would need a respirator at home and equipment to administer her special, high-caloric food through her stomach and to suction fluids from her body.

The couple said the Department of Health and Human Services rejected their plea for an exemption from the Medicaid rules and that's when they contacted their congressman.

Mrs. Beckett said she and her husband were "overwhelmed, to say the least, when they said the president was going to mention it in his news conference.

"With the rejection, we were very disappointed. Today, we are very proud that he would take the time to acknowledge that this existed."

Mrs. Beckett and her husband have learned how to care for Katie and bringing here home would be "better for everyone involved."

Sister Mary Jean Audette of the West Texas Legal Services (above), answers questions about tenant and landowner rights, while Betty McDearman of the Midland Board of Realtors (right) explains how to purchase a house during the fourth session of Midland Awareness Tuesday night. The session, sponsored by the Human Relations Council, dealt with housing in Midland.

Midlanders made aware of landlord, tenant rights

leave only if the tenant is behind in his rent or has violated one of the terms of the lease. If no written lease is involved but the tenant pays rent at regular times and is current in his payments, the landlord must give him an advance notice of one rental period.

Sister Audette commended people who own property and are willing to take a risk, but said they do have a responsibility to those to whom they are providing the service.

"The dignity of a person should be uppermost in the minds of anyone dealing with them (the renters)," she said.

"It is a definite risk (on the part of the landowners)," she said. "It's an investment on the part of one person, the property owner, and an expense on the part of the tenant.

"A lot of landlords want to provide decent housing for people."

Betty McDearman of the Midland Board of Realtors explained how to buy a house. She said the Realtor is there to help people find a house by leading the prospective buyer through some very complicated steps.

"We don't like to be thought of as house sellers," she said. "We help people solve their problems and try to fit the housing to their needs."

The Realtor will help the person looking for a house "find one as close to what you need and can afford," Ms. McDearman explained.

She outlined the guidelines set up by mortgage firms and lending institutions and explained how a Realtor can handle the negotiating process.

"It can get very detailed and personal," she warned. "They (loan companies) want to know your life's history."

The success of the Hilicrest Manor, which includes 100 apartment units developed for low income, elderly and handicapped persons, was explained by Fred Kester, executive director of the Midland Housing Authority of the City of Midland.

According to Kester, Hillcrest Manor, which was the first cooperation agreement between the City of Midland and the Housing Authority, has been full since it opened before September 1977.

"We have not lost one penny of rent revenue or days of rent," Kester said. "So far it has been a very successful operation."

Kester expressed a "dire need for additional facilities for the low-income, elderly and handicapped." He said that through the Midland Housing Finance Corporation and the Midland County Housing Finance Corporation, tax exempt bonds can be issued at mortgage rates well under the conventional mortgage rates.

Construction of a total of 708 apartment units, provided through three bond programs by the Midland Housing Finance Corporation, will begin soon, if not already under way, according to Kester.

Since 1974, a total of $160,000 has been "ear-marked for rehabilitation of low-income family homes," he said. "The Housing Authority has administered programs that cost way under what other rehabilitaton programs in other cities cost."

Betty Sheeler of the Midland Housing Association explained the organization's purpose as making loans available to persons who are trying to purchase houses for very low costs.

"Lending institutions aren't the right type to lend in that (low income) kind of deal," she said. She "went around knocking on church doors to get the money" in one situation.

"In Midland, today, there is still a need for that type of lending," she said of the Community Block Grant Program, which, in her words is "the best rental assistance program.

"In a community this size, it can be managed because we can control it."

The Midland Housing Association is here to provide loans to persons who could and would like to live in low-income housing, Ms. Sheeler said.

"It's for the people who aren't the doctors, lawyers and Indian chiefs."

Representing the "guy in the black hat — the one that builds beautiful homes that no one can afford" was Tookie Berry of the Midland Homebuilders Association.

"They are not the villains everyone makes them out to be," Berry said with a laugh. "The interest rates eat them up, too."

He said homebuilders have two major problems directly affecting them. "They are concerned about the people who can't afford to buy homes and finding skilled workers. The homebuilders have to have good quality.

"Homebuilders have approached city officials to get local laws changed that govern real-estate. They are trying to reduce the size of lots, which will really help bring down the costs of homes," Berry said.

"Builders are in a very high-risk business," he noted. "They're really not making any more now than they were a few years ago."

Fair skies, cool nights predicted

Midlanders can continue to enjoy pleasant autumn weather as the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is predicting continued fair skies, mild afternoons and cool nights through Thursday.

The mercury will drop into the middle 30s tonight and climb once again near 70 on Thursday.

Winds will be from the south 5-10 mph tonight, increasing to 10-15 mph on Thursday.

Tuesday's high of 66 was 19 degrees cooler than the record high of 85 set for that date in 1964. The overnight low of 36 was much more tolerable than the record low of 16, set in 1950.

Police arrest 12-year-old after chase

A juvenile was taken into custody and another suffered minor injuries following a high speed chase on the east side early Tuesday night.

Police said when they attempted to stop a speeding pickup truck near Taylor Park, the driver refused to pull over and instead led them on a dust and rock spraying chase that didn't end until the 12-year-old driver finally stopped the truck near the intersection of Dakota and Jefferson streets and fled on foot.

A 14-year-old passenger had jumped from the vehicle before it stopped, however. Officers saw him lying in the roadway and at first thought he was a pedestrian that had been hit by the truck.

An ambulance was called, but the boy's parents arrived on the scene and took him home. The 12-year-old driver was found at his home. The truck was later reported stolen from 1700 S. Atlanta St.

In theft and burglary complaints during the past 24 hours, Gerald W. Ewing of 4724 W. Storey Ave. told officers several shrubs worth $1,050 were taken from his backyard sometime between 5 p.m. and 7 p.m. Tuesday.

Charles Meyer, 2512 Keswick, reported a burglary in which a pair of gold earrings and a gold ring were taken. Entry was gained through a window. Total loss was placed at $2,700.

Maria Perez of 309 E. Cloud Ave. said a TV set, costume jewelry, $15 in cash and a bicycle worth a total of $1,065 were removed from her home sometime Monday. There was no sign of forced entry.

And Clarence Dickens, 1724 E. Pecan Ave., told officers two TV sets valued at $1,000 were taken in a burglary of his residence. Entry was gained by breaking a window.

Sowell motions for new trial

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Municipal Court Judge Jim Fitz-Gerald today took under advisement a motion for a new trial in the case of 17-year-old Walter Sowell, whose complaint of police misconduct brought about the suspension of two police officers on charges of using excessive force in his arrest Oct. 16.

Sowell pleaded guilty to disorderly conduct and public intoxication charges in Fitz-Gerald's court that day, but during an hour and a half hearing this morning, his attorneys argued that his guilty plea resulted from fear he would be placed back in jail.

Among the witnesses called were Sowell's mother and Emergency Medical Service technician Louis Serrano, who told the court Sowell's cell was bloodstained and that Sowell was hysterical and kept repeating, "They beat me up."

Sowell was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital, where he was treated, for head injuries and received eight stitches to close a forehead cut.

Sowell's mother testified her son called from the jail about 4 a.m. and told her, "Mama, they're beating me up." She also said he insisted he was innocent of the charges but she urged him to plead guilty so they "could just go home."

Sowell's attorneys, David Gilles and Willie Schmerler of Odessa, are seeking to overturn his conviction on the misdemeanor charges because, they say, his "confession wasn't freely and voluntarily given."

At the close of the hearing, Fitz-Gerald told attorneys for both sides to bring him copies of case law on the issue at 2 p.m. Thursday and he would reach a decision after studying them. He declined to say when he might reach a decision.

Stockman says tax cut favors rich

WASHINGTON (AP) — Budget director David A. Stockman, in a startling magazine article, describes the "supply-side" tax cut embraced by President Reagan as a disguised version of traditional Republican "trickle-down" economics which favor the richest Americans.

The December issue of Atlantic Monthly quotes Stockman as saying the three-year tax cut was a "Trojan horse" aimed at lowering the top income tax rates.

The objective was to find a politically acceptable way to lower the top rate from 70 percent of each dollar of eligible income to 50 percent, and the solution was to lower all tax rates, Stockman said, according to the article.

IN A STATEMENT late Tuesday, Stockman's office said the article "creates an impression that is wrong and grossly misleading."

City Council hears Hillander School land dispute

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Urging both parties to find a common ground, the Midland City Council on Tuesday sat as a panel of judges to hear the pros and cons of a dispute between parents of Hillander School and a man who bought land in back of that school for an office.

Gathering in the Council Chambers in one of its marathon sessions which extended to 10 p.m. and was to resume at 9:30 a.m. today, the council postponed making a decision until Dec. 15.

The piece of land over which the two parties have been verbally sparring is a 0.954-acre tract north of and adjacent to Hillander School on West Wadley Avenue. The piece was put up for bid by the City Council last spring, and high bidder was Earl Ray West.

The tract already is zoned MF-1, multi-family, which means an apartment complex could be constructed there. West was asking the council to change the zoning to O-1, office.

Charles Tighe, West's attorney, said his client had paid almost $60,000 for the land and was planning to put in a one-story office building. He would use a third of it and lease the remaining portion.

An apartment complex, he said, could be constructed 2½ stories high and have 32 apartments.

"The apartments would be more compatible with the college," Tighe said, referring to Midland College which is north of that tract. "These people would be coming at all hours of the day and night."

James Boldrick, an attorney for the protesting Hillander people, claimed the change to an office zoning "is no more and no less than spot zoning." He added the apartment complex would be preferred because traffic patterns would dictate the people leaving in the early morning and returning in the evening, leaving the area empty of traffic during the hours that school is in session.

One Hillander parent pointed out that the school has 336 students and a waiting list of 148 names.

"There is pressure on the school to increase," she said, noting that the tract north of it is needed for expansion.

With numerous Hillander students milling around the filled chambers, opponents of the change pointed out that Hillander had offered to trade land with West. But if he gets the tract zoned for office that means it will be commercial and they would have to match the trade with a commercially-zoned tract. That, they said, would involve far more money on the school's part than the $60,000 West paid for the land.

Councilman Carroll Thomas said that West's business "wouldn't generate a lot of traffic. You need to consider the maximum range of possibilities."

Mayor G. Thane Akins said the most desirable use of that land would be for Hillander School while Councilman Gordon Marcum II added that it probably was a mistake for the council to sell the land.

The council also delayed until Dec. 15 making a decision on changing the zoning at the southeast corner of Neely Avenue and Tarleton Street from Planned District for a housing district to an amended PD.

Harrell Feldt, representing Barker Development, explained the group is a condominium developer in Dallas. Plans call for the common-wall houses to be constructed of brick, stucco and wood with a green area. Sizes would range from 1,300 to 1,650 square feet and would sell for $75,000 to $90,000.

But residents didn't like the plans.

John Holmes, 3310 Stanolind Ave., said it "doesn't necessarily fit the neighborhood that we're in. We want it to be nicer. We want to preserve the value of the neighborhood."

John Rose, 3312 Stanolind Ave., said the zone change would allow for 80 housing units, rather than 32 under the current zone. This increase in density concerned him, he said, especially in light of heavy traffic on those streets.

And Mrs. Charles Barber, 3306 Ma-Mar St., added, "I don't think $75,000 to $90,000 homes fit in with the $150,000 to $200,000 homes there now. It's not in keeping with the neighborhood."

After some residents had labeled the condominiums apartments, Feldt objected, saying "these are individual units."

Density, he countered, would be about 1.8 persons per unit, rather than the three to four persons per large house in the area.

And a traffic consultant studied the area and said the condominium development wouldn't add dramatically to the heavily-traveled streets.

Councilman Steve Davidson urged the rest of the council to give the two parties time to work on a compromise. And Feldt said the developer would be willing to decrease "substantially" the number of units.

The developer will come back with a revised plan on Dec. 15.

Palestinian guerrillas found guilty in massacre of six Jewish settlers

By MARCUS ELIASON
Associated Press Writer

NABLUS, Occupied West Bank (AP) — A military court found four Palestinian guerrillas guilty today of killing six Jewish settlers in the ocuppied West Bank town of Hebron last year.

Pandemonium broke out in the courtroom when the prosecution asked for life imprisonment and not the death penalty.

"Death, death, death," shouted some 20 settlers who had traveled from Hebron to Nablus for the verdict.

The judge, Lt. Col. Alex Haramati, pressed the prosecutor, Capt. Haim Greenwald, to explain why he had not asked for the death penalty. Greenwald replied that those were his orders and he was not empowered to explain policy.

Six Israelis were slain and 16 wounded in the Hebron ambush May 2, 1980, when Palestinians fired machine guns and threw grenades at a group of settlers walking through the center of the West Bank town after nightfall.

The ambush ushered in a period of sharp clashes between Israeli troops and Palestinians in the West Bank of the Jordan River, and a month later two radical Palestinian mayors — Bassam Shakaa of Nablus and Kerim Khalaf of Ramallah — were maimed in car-bombings.

Jewish extremists were suspected of setting the car bombs, but no one has been caught.

In the Nablus military court, the four Palestinian defendants listened impassivley as the verdict was read, and border policemen sitting beside them gripped the Arabs' hands tightly to prevent any demonstration.

But behind them, the bearded, skullcap-wearing Israeli settlers leaped to their feet in anger when the prosecution announced it sought life terms rather than the death penalty for the worst attack against Israelis who live in the West Bank.

"Why, so that more people can be murdered? What kind of punishment is this? The state is abetting murder," shouted Rabbi Moshe Levinger, a leader of the Hebron settlers.

He was expelled from the court when he refused to be silent.

Also shouting protests were the parents of Uri and Hadassah Barak, who were murdered by one of the defendants, Muhammed Shubaki. Shubaki, 36, already is serving a life sentence for that double slaying while standing trial for the Hebron massacre along with Adnan Jaber, 33, Yasser el-Zaydat, 31, and Tasire Mussa Taha, 27.

The four Arab defendants could have been subject to the death penalty according to a decision by Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Cabinet in April 1979, that authorized prosecutors to request execution of terrorists convicted of "inhuman cruelty" against civilians.

Israel has not executed anyone since 1962 when Nazi war criminal Adolf Eichmann was hanged. In 1967, government prosecutors were instructed not to seek the death penalty though the death sentence has been on the statute book since 1945 when Britain introduced it in Palestine.

Poland's rulers say strikes harm Soviet bloc alliance

By W. JOSEPH CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's Communist regime hurled new charges at Solidarity as more wildcat strikes broke out and the government prepared to open crucial talks with the independent labor federation on the economic crisis.

The Communist Party's 15-member ruling Politburo said the "strikes and conflicts, initiated and fanned by extremist forces...do harm to the (Soviet bloc) alliance and...hit at the stability of the socialist state and its economy, and deepen the crisis."

Zolnierz Wolnosci, the army newspaper, charged that Western intelligence services are "developing contacts" with Solidarity and giving "broad material and political support to the opposition and extremist groups which claim to be ready for the takeover of power in Poland."

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, accused the 9.5-million-member labor federation of using terrorism on the workers and of "making short order of those who disobey."

Despite its condemnation, the Politburo endorsed the talks between the government and Solidarity on formation of a "national front" to work for the reconstruction of the near-bankrupt economy. Solidarity proposed that the talks start Friday, but there was no word on this yet from the government.

Meanwhile, local strikes were breaking out again after slacking off last week because of the prospect of negotiations between the union and the government.

Newspaper deliverers and clerks halted distribution or papers in Wroclaw, Walbrzych, Legnica and Zielona Gora provinces to protest reduced commissions, the official news agency PAP reported.

Taxi drivers in Wloclawek, 85 miles northwest of Warsaw, said they would block the city's main street this afternoon unless the government restored a one-gallon cut in their daily gasoline ration and gave them priority over other purchasers.

Dollar loses ground against pound

LONDON (AP) - The dollar made gains against some key currencies in early trading today on European markets, but lost ground against the British pound. Gold prices eased to their lowest level since Aug.27.

Dealers reported the dollar, which has seesawed on money markets in recent weeks, strengthened on firmer Eurodollar and U.S. Federal Fund interest rates.

In Tokyo, where the business day ends as Europe's begins, the dollar closed marinally higher at 229 yen against Tuesday's close of 228.15 yen.

Other morning rates compared to Tuesday:

—5.6235 French francs, up from 5.61.

—2.2255 German marks, up from 2.2185.

—1.7862 Swiss francs, slightly up from 1.7830.

—1,190.50 Italian lire, up from 1,186.

—2.4460 Dutch guilders, up from 2.4380.

—1.19215 Canadian dollars, down from 1.19445.

In London, sterling rallied as soon as the foreign exchange opened and by mid-morning was $1.8720. It cost $1.8690 to buy one pound late Tuesday.

The price of gold opened in London and Zurich at $413.50 a troy ounce, $1.75 down in London and $9 dollars down in the Swiss center.

The price in both bullion markets later inched up to $414.50. But London's five major bullion brokers later fixed the recommended morning price at $412.75.

Gold closed earlier in Hong Kong at $415.93, down $9.37 on Tuesday's close. Silver opened in London at $8.675 an ounce, 10 cents down from Tuesday's close.

Salvadorans to elect provisional president

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Salvadorans will elect a provisional president and an assembly to draft a new constitution on March 21, spokesman for seven political parties drafting a new election law said.

Members of a seven-party forum, appointed by the Central Electoral Council to rewrite the election law, told The Associated Press Tuesday night that the government will follow through on a U.S.-supported plan to hold the elections despite continuing political violence.

The spokesmen, who asked not to be identified, said elections would help lead to the "pacification" of this Massachusetts-size Central American nation. They said terms of the "Transition Electoral Law" will be made public Friday.

Human rights groups say at least 32,000 people have been killed by left-and right-wing death squads and in fighting between leftist guerrillas and security forces since the 1979 coup that put the U.S.-backed, civilian-military junta into power.

Noble humor awards poke fun at the serious, but funny

PARIS (AP) — The winner of this year's international booby prize for humor will be announced here next week. It is given to a personality who intended to be serious but was funny — like the U.S. economist who in 1974 said he wouldn't worry about high oil prices and predicted OPEC would disintegrate.

There also will be the 1981 Noble Prize for Humor given to the international personality who intended to be funny and was.

The Association for the Promotion of Humor in International Affairs (APHIA), which bills itself as a non-organization, is presenting its sixth annual awards Wednesday (Nov. 18).

The group, which has no staff and no list of its members, was founded in 1973 by three Americans living in Paris.

APHIA has only one rule: displaying an absence of humor gets you expelled; and only one activity: to present yearly "Noble" and "booby" prizes to those who have promoted humor in international affairs.

"The Noble Prize goes to those who intend to be funny and succeed," said Alfred E. Davidson, an international lawyer and one of the group's founders. "The booby prize goes to those who intend to be serious and are unintentionally funny."

Last year's booby prize — a clay foot — went to U.S. economist Milton Friedman for his 1974 comment, "I would not worry about high oil prices," and his prediction that the Organization for Petroleum Exporting Countries "would promptly fall apart."

"THE PREVIOUS YEAR Billy Carter received it for his over zealousness in promoting his private interests while his brother, President Jimmy Carter, struggled to promote public interests," Davidson said.

In 1978, the International Herald Tribune won the booby prize for charging more for its newspaper in its home city of Paris than in any of the more than 100 other countries where the paper is sold.

"In 1977, Sen. (William) Proxmire of Wisconsin won the award for his over-imaginative notion that most Americans living abroad spend their time in gambling casinos while their mink-clad wives frequented cafes and the like," Davidson said.

Former President Richard M. Nixon's press secretary, Ron Zeigler, was the first recipient for his "it-is-no-longer-operative" statements in defending his boss during the Watergate crisis.

This year's booby prize winner has been kept secret and will be announced at the group's award banquet in Paris.

The winner of the 1981 Noble Prize already has been chosen and plans to attend the luncheon, Davidson said. He is Hungarian-born humorist Ephraim Kishon.

"The fact that Mr. Kishon is now an Israeli citizen has not affected his sense of humor," an APHIA press release said in making the announcement.

KISHON JOINS THE ranks of such Noble award winners as American columnist Art Buchwald and British comedian Peter Ustinov.

"The (APHIA) founders, who had not discovered Mr. Kishon until recently, consider that he has brilliantly avoided making his name a household word despite selling 10 million copies of his books translated into 22 languages," the group's press release said.

In his writings, Kishon has described Israel "as a place sprawled on the shores of the Mediterranean in such a way that half an hour's drive from any point in the country will take you either to the seashore or into captivity."

He also has written that "Americans believe that God loves them without regard to national origin, race or religion, but takes economic status into consideration."

The Noble Prizes are always tailored to the personalities of its winners. Buchwald, for example, was awarded 100,000 pennies because of his "passion for money."

APHIA has yet to decide on a prize for Kishon. Davidson had suggested giving Kishon an unnumbered Swiss bank account. But the other two founders vetoed that idea on the grounds it would be insulting to imagine Kishon did not already have one.

The two other founders are John E. Fobes, recently retired deputy director general of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), and Richard H. Moore, past president of the American Chamber of Commerce in Paris.

ALTHOUGH APHIA HAS undertaken no membership drive, contending it would be a "square thing to do," it claims its has members in Canada, Denmark, France, the Netherlands, Japan, Britian, the United States "and other countries which APHIA's haphazard records do not disclose."

Several high-ranking diplomats, however, have announced their membership in the group, including the new U.S ambassador to the Soviet Union, Arthur A. Hartman, and the Israeli ambassador to France, Meir Rosenne.

U.S. bikers ride around the world

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — "Word is out there's three crazy gringos riding bicycles through the jungle," said Tim Young.

And through the desert, and over mountains — around the world, in fact.

Yonug and his friends, Steven Williams of Indianapolis, Ind., and Peter Wuerslin, of Skaneateles, N.Y., arrived in Buenos Aires late in October, one year after leaving Jackson, Wyo., on their 10-speeds.

The 27-year-old Young, of Syracuse, N.Y., was describing their crossing of Panama's Darien Gap, whose intimidating geography makes it the only missing link of the Pan-American Highway stretching from Alaska to Tierra del Fuego at the tip of South America.

"The Indian kids had heard we were coming and would greet us on the edge of the villages yelling, "Monten! Monten!" (Ride! Ride!), but we had the bikes torn down and had to carry them most of the way, sometimes hacking out a path with machetetes," he said of what has been the toughest stretch so far.

"IT'S AN ADVENTURE," he added of the trip that the bike riders figure will take three years and cover 30,000 miles.

It is not the first 'round-the-world bicycle trip, they say. But so far as they know it is the first following their down-the-Americas, up-Africa and Europe, across-Asia route.

"It's a lot of things, but most of all it's an education," said Williams, 28, who worked as a bicycle mechanic and radio announcer before setting out.

Buenos Aires is a waystation for overhauling their bikes, booking passage to South Africa and visiting embassies in preparation for the Cape Town-to-Cairo leg — from the bottom of Africa to Egypt.

Young and Wuerslin, also 28, met at Alfred University in their native upstate New York and went to Wyoming to ski. Williams says he went to Wyoming for love. In any case, the three cycling enthusiasts met in Jackson and planned the tour for a year and a half, saving money and designing and making the racks and saddle bags attavhed to their bicycles.

They are financing the trip themselves, but the bikes and spare parts are donated by various companies.

"WE WERE READY for anything and found just about all of it," said Wuerslin, who made his living as a carpenter and ski instructor.

They pedaled west from Jackson to the Pacific and turned left, down Baja California, then across the Sea of Cortes to the west coast of Mexico by ferry. They rode through Mexico munching fruit and vegetables during the day and cooking up stews in a four-quart pressure cooker on their portable stove at night.

They say they felt a pervasive tension in Guatemala and El Salvador, where leftist guerrillas are fighting to topple military regimes. They did not see the violence first hand, but were searched at gunpoint by government forces and heard gunfire at night.

After the Darien Gap, where they would lie in their tent at night listening to jaguars roar, their closest call came in Colombia where they were visiting the Cristo Rey monument outside Cali.

"Here we are sitting under this 100-foot-tall statue of Christ, enjoying a beautiful evening, when about 10 guys hop this little wall, cross themselves and genuflect in front of the shrine, then walk over to us and whip out knives," said Williams. The cyclists lost their watches and a camera, but consider themselves lucky nothing worse has happened so far.

THEY HAVE COVERED 10,000 miles, making between 50 and 60 miles on a good day. Crossing the Atacama Desert in southern Peru and northern Chile they fought a constant headwind that follows the Humbolt Current flowing north along the coast from Antarctica.

They say it is difficult to go more than 60 miles a day, but that incentive plays a part.

"Our first day in Argentina we met some women ski instructors who were going to be in Mendoza Saturday night," said Young. "That Saturday we made 90 miles."

The travellers are cooperating with a doctor from the Jackson Hole Human Performance Laboratory, where they took physical and psychological tests before beginning the journey. They keep a medical diary and periodically test their heart, lung and muscle performance in a study they say is charting new territory.

"This kind of testing has not been done with touring cyclists for such a sustained period," said Wuerslin.

They are going to have psychological tests in Johannesburg, South Africa.

THEY SAY interpersonal tensions inevitibly develop among three people in such proximity day in and day out, especially facing new and sometimes stressful situations.

"But we've got a common goal," said Willimas. "Our hearts are together and if we've got a problem we work it out."

They say they are a bit behind schedule, and the $7,000 they have spent so far is more than they had planned.

"But we've got enough to get to Europe, and from there, we'll see," said Young. "Maybe we will have to work awhile there, but whatever, we're keeping going."

Driving the U.S. shows, the times they are a' changin'

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

Exploring beyond the slate threads of our highways and byways does indeed reveal the dynamic nature of the American tapestry.

It has long been so, and still is.

Even a brief journey across the amazingly diverse terrain leaves no doubt that, as we move swiftly into our third century as a nation, new attitudes, trends and approaches are reshaping our collective soul as much as our landscape.

In fact, the United States today reminds me of my 5-year-old passport — it needs a new picture.

Certain traits — resilience, ingenuity and humor, among others — remain part of the national psyche despite economic and other pressures. How we perceive and lead life these days, however, bears little if any resemblance to a few years back.

Having last spanned the country by car exactly two decades ago, making the trip this time meant, among other things, having to discard such previously held images as segregated restaurants and trucks driven only by males.

The most apparent changing patterns are the ongoing — and mostly successful — efforts to revitalize the decaying hearts of the larger cities and the unprecedented growth of small and usually rural towns.

From my log:

Denver — Approaching on Interstate 70 with the Rockies and the sun behind me, I did not recognize the city I last saw in 1961. And it turned out to be no mirage: along clean and tree-lined streets downtown, glittering skyscrapers as well as rejuvenated charmers of yore rose as symbols of a commitment to creative redevelopment. Many of its sprawling suburbs, too, abound in beatuty.

Omaha — Looming high over an immense and bustling rail yard, block-long Union Station, once one of the most handsome in the country, sits locked up and as forlorn as a stone ghost. But that's just about the only architectural coffin I found in Nebraska's largest city. The business center buzzed with activity, and new buildings soar gracefully from flowery plazas and pedestrian malls. Nearby, many of the once-seedy warehouses in the Old Market area have been refurbished and turned into attractive shops and restaurants.

Pittsburgh — A town under enemy bombs. That's how it struck me as I attempted to find my way around downtown where seemingly all streets are torn up, new office and housing blocks are going up and holes as big as football fields are being readied for yet more cloud-piercing edifices. But it's deliciously quiet at the splendid Point State Park on an adjacent 36-acre tip of land previously crowded with slum dwelling. On this spot, where the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers meet, I witnessed a miracle in pollution control: sparkling green waters instead of the dirty brown variety that flowed by here until a few years ago. In short, a remarkable renaissance.

Other cities that have revamped their cores — or have launched such programs — would include Philadelphia and Phoenix, Baltimore and San Diego, Detroit, Seattle, Memphis and dazzling Dallas.

Somewhat unique, Knoxville, the business capital of the rich East Tennessee Valley, is in the midst of a multimillion-dollar building and sprucing up effort as it prepares to host the 1982 World's Fair.

While redevelopment moves apace throughout the country, many suburbanites seem to be returning to the cities. Yet experts claim upward of 8 million have left the large urban centers in recent years to seek a simpler life in small towns and rural villages.

Boston-bred Stephen Browning is 24, single and a graduate in economics. Why the switch from the cosmopolitan "hub of the universe" — as many proper Bostonians refer to their city — to a Texas hamlet outside of Pecos and a job as a bartender? His reply:

"A life unencumbered by crowds, traffic jams and oddballs. Horses and music are my hobbies, and I have plenty of access to both of them here. People are open, trusting and genuine. There's space and time to stretch the mind. Sometimes, not very often though, I think I miss big-city action and I drive or fly to Dallas for a couple of days. But I'm always glad to get back to Pecos."

About a year ago, Dave Berlam gave up a lucrative position with a major recording company in the San Francisco area for a new life in Iowa. He and his wife Betty bought Mary's Cafe, his mother's cozy mecca for road-food lovers. Reminiscent of a Norman Rockwell painting, it occupies an 80-year-old brick structure that was once the only bank in Casey, population 500.

Over delectable catfish fillet and pork fritters, I asked Betty Berlam how she felt exchanging a comfortable life in the land of posh town houses and hot tubs for a simple town in western Iowa's vast farmlands.

"I couldn't be happier," she said.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Cereals can be really sweet

Dear Dr. Solomon: One of my neighbors doesn't let her children eat candy, but does give them sweetened cereals. I don't say anything to her about it, but it doesn't make sense to me. Do you agree? — Mrs. A.S.

Dear Mrs. S.: Some presweetened cereals do contain more sugar per serving than a bar of candy. A portion of some cereals may be 50 percent sugar, while some candy bars contain only 40 percent sugar. However, it's better for a child to have one or the other than to be permitted to have both.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My doctor has suggested that I add fiber to my diet to help control my diabetes. Is this technique being used in other parts of the country? — Hal.Dear Hal: A number of physicians are recommending an increase in dietary fiber by persons with diabetes. While the long-term effects of this approach are not clear, it does seem to have some beneficial short-term effects. First, according to Dr. James W. Anderson, of the University of Kentucky College of Medicine, the use of selected fibers lowers blood glucose values and insulin requirements. In addition, cholesterol and triglyceride values may be lowered.

Recommendations for the addition of dietary fiber are based, in part, on studies of other populations. In Japan and India, for example, the intake of carbohydrate and dietary fiber is high, and the people of those countries have fewer specific complications of diabetes than do those living in Western countries, where fiber intake is low.

Other evidence of the value of dietary fiber for diabetics comes from studies done during the time of war. These show that the death rate from diabetes declined during wartime, when the intake of dietary fiber from high-fiber breads increased.

There are, of course, other differences between various populations than simply the amount of fiber that each consumes. One group may be physically more active than another, or there may be genetic differences. But an increase in dietary fiber does appear to be promising treatment for diabetics.

Puerto Rico's economic troubles worsen

By MARC D. CHARNEY
Associated Press Writer

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — President Reagan's budget cuts are forcing Puerto Ricans to seek a new economic strategy for their U.S. Commonwealth where half the 3.5 million people are on food stamps and public employment accounts for one job in every four.

Last year, U.S. federal funds spent here equalled nearly one-third of Puerto Rico's total production of goods and services.

Leaders here claim Puerto Ricans are being hurt more than anyone in the United States — and that the pain is doubled because the island pays few federal taxes and thus benefits little from Reagan's tax cuts.

Evidence of hard times is already mounting.

In September, cancellation of public jobs funded by the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) helped boost unemployment to 21.1 percent, a four-year high. And next October there will be another shock when Puerto Rico's yearly food-stamp allotment is rolled back to an annual ceiling of $825 million.

This year, food stamp allotments are $1.05 billion, and the $225 million cut represents nearly two percent of the island's $11.3 billion economy.

Officials and economists predict higher unemployment and slower production, more migration to the mainland and a "brain drain" that they claim could seriously harm future development.

A scramble has begun to find a new strategy for growth relying more on private business and less on federal funds — an approach clearly favored by a White House Task Force that visited last summer to find ways of easing the pain.

One major proposal favored by Gov. Carlos Romero Barcelo is establishment of a free-trade zone to market goods between the Americas.

But such solutions are long-term, and the fears are immediate.

They center on the fact that Puerto Rico today is still only partly industrialized, with per-capita income under $3,000 a year and most investment capital still lured from the mainland.

Luring that capital with tax advantages helped Puerto Rico modernize in the 1940s, 1950s and 1960s, but the industrialization stalled in the early 1970s after banking, construction and petrochemical industries ran into serious trouble. The oil crisis of 1974 sparked a near-depression.

In the late 1970s, the economy revived and growth was restored — but with a new factor added: Puerto Rico now had been admitted to the food-stamp and other new federal programs, bringing rapid increases each year in the amount of federal funds pumped into the economy. Critics of the policy say it appeared to spur growth but in reality spawned dependency.

In fact, according to the Government Development Bank, total federal disbursements leaped by one-third in just the last four years — to $4 billion last year, or 30 percent of gross product. Government jobs nearly doubled since 1970 — from 106,000 to 203,000 in a total job market of about 800,000. The 24,000 CETA jobs being cancelled represent 3 percent of total island jobs.

Roy Cohn: A lawyer whose bite is worse than his bark

By TIM HARPER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It comes as a little shock in a high-priced lawyer's office: a collection of stuffed toy animals, mostly dogs, staring soulfully from a brown sofa at their master behind his desk.

Roy Cohn, the attorney, has a live dog too, a pedigreed spaniel named Charlie Brown, and he once leaped from a yacht to save a dog that had fallen into the East River.

Indeed Cohn, who is not noted for geniality as an adversary, speaks at length of his affection for animals, "because they're without motive. They don't care whether you're rich or have power or anything else."

Roy Cohn deals much with people who are rich and have power. He has a reputation, acquired over three decades, of being a no-holds-barred lawyer, tough, resourceful, "a hired gun" and a "legal executioner" to those who find themselves on the other, losing side, of a case.

Cohn knows from personal experience what it means to be a defendant. He weathered three indictments, each resulting in acquittal. The charges, he said, were trumped up to harass him for political reasons, he says. Unwelcome as these trials were, they did nothing to impair his image of invulnerability.

COHN IS OFTEN in the public eye and his services are in great demand. He got his start early. At an age when most lawyers are still in school, Cohn was prosecuting the nation's most notorious atomic spy case, which sent Julius and Ethel Rosenberg to the electric chair 30 years ago in 1951.

Three years later, Cohn was chief counsel for Sen. Joseph McCarthy's subcommittee during its investigations of Communist infiltration of the government. Many remember him darkly from those days of McCarthyism. Cohn has no regrets and is as vehemently anti-Communist as ever.

"They are out to kill us," he says.

Now he has written a book, "How to Stand Up for Your Rights and Win," intended for the little guy faced with dealing with the law. His publisher says it has been printed in best-seller quantities.

Cohn is one of the highest-paid and most feared lawyers in the United States. His average paying client, he says, is worth about $20 million, but he adds that he accepts about a third of his cases without fee and thinks other lawyers should too.

HE PERSONALLY EARNS about $100,000 a year, but his firm pays his business expenses estimated at about half a million a year. Cohn says those expenses include about $1,000 a week in restaurant bills and up to $4,000 a month in phone bills.

His staff kept track and found that he is on the phone an average of 168 times a day, probably the reason that he seldom finds time to say goodbye — he simply hangs up.

Cohn does not charge by the hour, as most lawyers do, but says if he did his hourly fees would range from $150 to $500. At the end of a case he simply bills his clients for what he thinks his work was worth. He says he has had only three complaints about fees.

He is attorney to the jet set and a celebrity in his own right.

Yet his office is modest, on the ground floor of his 15-lawyer firm's Manhattan townhouse.

There are no law books in sight, but there are two copies of "Who's Who." Overhead theatrical lights illuminate the autographed photos on the wall: Cohn whispering in McCarthy's ear; Cohn with George Steinbrenner and Barbara Walters, arm in arm, after a Yankee World Series victory; Ronald Reagan; Terence Cardinal Cooke; Reggie Jackson, and J. Edgar Hoover.

ROY COHN WAS born in the Bronx 54 years ago to a clothing company heiress and a judge with strong ties to the Democratic Party. He finished Columbia Law School at 20 and learned shorthand so other lawyers could not read his notes.

Five-foot, eight inches tall, he is a blocky 150 pounds, does situps and pushups every morning, swims three or four times a week at his rented Greenwich, Conn., estate and water skies in Long Island Sound from May to October.

Above his townhouse office are his living quarters. Photos of himself clutter the top of his late mother's ornate piano which won a prize at the St. Louis exposition at the turn of the century. An only child, Cohn lived with his mother until her death in 1967.

He says he is a lifelong bachelor because of the physical and emotional toll on his parents when he worked for McCarthy and later, during his own trials.

"I found I was able to shoulder the burdens of controversy much better if I knew I had only myself to worry about, not any immediate family who would have to suffer through it," he says. If he were to marry, Cohn says, "It would have to be someone like Barbara Walters." At one time they were dating, and their families thought they might get married, but both now say they are just "good friends."

A chauffeur moves Cohn about town in a Rolls Royce, a Bentley or a custom-made 1980 red Cadillac convertible. He routinely flies to Europe "for the day," and it's not unusual for a client in London, Paris, or Rome to send a private or chartered jetliner to fetch Cohn.

Cohn says he has "dozens of close friends," and he sprinkles their names liberally through conversation: Warren Avis of the Avis car rental company, George Barrie of Faberge, Benson Ford, the auto heir, Rupert Murdoch, the publisher, Ed Koch, mayor of New York, Norman Mailer, Bianca Jagger, Andy Warhol, Estee Lauder, senators, congressmen, cabinet members, Republicans, Democrats — a long list of people with money, influence, or both.

HIS FRIENDS THROW a big bash for Cohn's birthday every February, usually in a disco or society ballroom. Last year, it was a black-tie dinner for 310. Roy Cohn does them friendly favors and stands up for them: as best man at their weddings, as godfather to their children and, of course, as their attorney.

He represented the owners of Studio 54 when they went to jail on income tax charges. He represented Steinbrenner in the Yankee owner's unsuccessful appeal of a one-year suspension from major league baseball after his conviction of violating campaign contribution laws.

He represented Benson Ford when the auto company heir tried to get a bigger share of his legacy. Before he died, Aristotle Onassis contacted Cohn to discuss handling a divorce from Jackie Kennedy Onassis.

Cohn's successes are more in keeping his clients out of court. "Going behind the scenes to work out a deal is the highest form of practicing law," he says. He has few friends outside his circle of clients. "My social life has to be interwined with my law life because my personal friends are my clients."

The law, Cohn says, is his life, while many lawyers tell their clients what they cannot do, Cohn asks what they want to do and then tells them how to do it.

COHN HAS A near-photographic memory, and once spoke extemporaneously in court for two days straight summing up one of his criminal trials, ending with an impassioned pledge of patriotism that had both Cohn and the jurors in tears.

Bush to speak as first nuclear sub joins Navy

By STEPHEN C. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

GROTON, Conn. (AP) — The USS Ohio, the first Trident Class nuclear submarine, was ready for commissioning today as protesters threatened another demonstration against the nation's most expensive ship.

Vice President George Bush was scheduled to deliver the keynote address at commissioning ceremonies for the Ohio, built at the Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics Corp. at a cost estimated to be at least at $1.2 billion.

Protesters planned a vigil and demonstration along narrow Eastern Point Road, which runs in front of EB's huge plant in this southeastern Connecticut community.

Groton's 27-officer police force, backed by reinforcements from other towns and the state police, will be waiting.

ALTHOUGH some past protests involved many arrests, the demonstrations generally have been peaceful, and law enforcement officers and protest organizers said they expected the same today.

The commissioning of the Ohio and the scheduled launching on Saturday of another Trident, the USS Florida, already has resulted in one protest, in which six anti-nuclear-weapons protesters were arrested Monday in the lobby of EB's administration building. They were charged with trespassing and criminal mischief.

The Ohio, seven years in the building, carries an all-volunteer crew of 14 officers and 140 enlisted men. It will have two rotating crews that will be deployed for 60- to 70-day patrols.

Its first skipper is Capt. Arlington Campbell, 42, of Ledyard, Conn. Campbell, a native of Steubenville, Ohio, has skippered one other nuclear submarine, the USS Richard B. Russell, a fast-attack sub.

The Ohio will be armed with 24 missiles capable of carrying eight warheads each. Each warhead has the explosive power of 100,000 tons of TNT. The range of the missiles is officially classified, but most experts estimate it at 4,500 miles. The submarine, which displaces 18,500 tons, can travel at speeds up to 20 knots.

Seven other Tridents currently are under construction at the Groton shipyard.

CHIEF OF NAVAL Operations Adm. Thomas Hayward was to commission the submarine and 81-year-old Adm. Hyman Rickover, who is credited with fathering the nuclear Navy, also was scheduled to speak.

Also to take part in the ceremony were Navy Secretary John Lehman, Adm. Harry D. Train III, commander-in-chief of the Atlantic fleet, Vice Adm. Steven A. White, commander of Submarine Force Atlantic, and outgoing EB General Manager P. Takis Veliotis.

The Ohio's sponsor is Annie Glenn, wife of U.S. Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio. Mrs. Glenn planned to place a U.S. flag, an Ohio flag and a Navy flag that traveled to the moon with Apollo 17 aboard the sub.

Also to go aboard was a fragment from the rocket booster that sent former Mercury astronaut Glenn into orbit 20 years ago on the first U.S. manned oribital space flight.

Nuclear seminars the rage on college campuses

By FRED BAYLES
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — College campuses around the country were holding lectures, music and even puppet theater today to dramatize the horror and threat of nuclear war in what sponsors call the biggest teach-in since Vietnam War days.

Harvard and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology scheduled talks on the economics of the nuclear arms race by Nobel Prize-winning economist Paul Samuelson, and a discussion of the status of nuclear disarmament by Paul Warnke, the former chief SALT II negotiator for the United States.

Other scheduled speakers included George Kistiakowsky, former science adviser to President Eisenhower, Dr. Helen Caldicott, president of Pysicians for Social Reponsibility, and Gen. James Gavin, a former ambassador to France. Films depicting the horrors of nuclear war will be screened by the Harvard School of Public Health.

OTHER CAMPUSES PLANNED similar sessions that also included music and street theater. At the University of Vermont, participants were offered a play performed by puppets.

Astronomer Carl Sagan and Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., were scheduled to speak at Cornell University. UCLA planned films and a talk by Marvin Goldberger, president of the California Institute of Technology.

"I think it's the biggest thing around the country on the campuses in a long, long while," said Lois Traub, a spokeswoman for the Union of Concerned Scientists, the Cambridge-based organization sponsoring the nationwide rally.

"The November 11 Convocation on the Threat of Nuclear War" was co-sponsored by eight other groups that hoped to bring out students on 150 college campuses.

But Ms. Traub stressed the day's activities were not meant to be protest rallies.

"IT'S EDUCATIONAL rather than a protest," she said. "We're saying, 'Let's look at our policies.' It's being looked at from the economics of the arms race, from the public health standpoint ... We would like to see the debate go on."

Ms. Traub said although some of the aspects of the teach-in include doomsday predictions on the effects of nuclear war, the organizers hoped to end the day's events on an optimistic note.

"We don't want to frighten anybody but the facts themselves are frightening," she said. "What we hope to do is end the programs with sessions on what an individual can do to cool down the arms race.

"We think the individual can make a difference. I think that was proved during the Vietnam teach-ins and I feel this will have an impact as well."

Reagan says B-1 bomber still useful

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says the B-1 bomber is a fast, elusive airplane that wouldn't be "a total loss" even after it is no longer needed to penetrate Soviet air defenses.

"There will be other purposes and functions for which it can be used," Reagan told a news conference Tuesday.

On Capitol Hill, meanwhile, the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on defense ducked a vote on Reagan's request for 100 of the airplanes, deferring the matter to a full Appropriations Committee meeting next week.

THE PRESIDENT SAID the B-1 is needed because the existing B-52 was not built for carrying missiles and getting through present and future air defense systems.

"It would have to be rebuilt, so we are not home free just by using that older plane," he said. "There's a cost to that."

Reagan said the B-1 would be faster than the B-52, would be harder to detect on radar and would carry from one and a half to two times the payload.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and CIA Director William J. Casey told the appropriations panel that the B-52 "has a large radar cross section and relatively slow low-altitude penetration speed, neither of which can be appreciably changed."

The two officials said the B-1, on the other hand, "would have the capability to penetrate anticipated Soviet air defenses well into the 1990s in a multitude of employment modes and to perform effectively as a cruise missile carrier and as a conventional bomber into the next century."

Weinberger and Casey outlined their views in a letter to Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, chairman of the defense appropriations subcommittee.

Reagan said the B-1 is needed to bridge a gap between the B-52s and development of a Stealth airplane designed to escape detection by radar.

"That's only in a state of research and study right now," Reagan said of the Stealth. "We can't guarantee the date when it will be ready."

Opponents of the B-1, which was shelved by Jimmy Carter in 1977 on grounds it would be outdated before it could fly, argue that it is too expensive to build the new bomber and develop Stealth at the same time.

Reagan challenged a Congressional Budget Office estimate that it would cost $39.8 billion, counting inflation, to build and equip the 100 B-1s. Weinberger has estimated the cost at $20.5 billion, without inflation. Counting inflation, his estimate would rise to about $28 billion.

"As for the figures written by Congress," Reagan said, "Cap Weinberger was my finance director for a while in California and I trust his figures better than I trust theirs."

Lt. Gen. Kelly H. Burke, deputy Air Force chief of staff for research and development, also disputed the congressional estimate, saying it "includes a large number of items that we have no intention of putting on the B-1."

Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., a member of the appropriations subcommittee, told reporters there was "some question as to the accuracy" of some of the budget office figures.

New drug may limit heart attack damage

ATLANTA (AP) — Emory University physicians are testing heart attack victims to determine whether a new drug injected directly into clogged arteries can help limit damage during a heart attack.

Spencer B. King III, one of six doctors participating in the study, said heart attack victims who arrive at Crawford W. Long Memorial Hospital in Atlanta within four hours of the onset of chest pain are asked if they want to take part in the study.

"It's very important to treat a patient within four hours of the onset of chest pain," said Dr. Douglas C. Morris, another physician involved in the study. "After four hours, the chances of irreversible heart damage are much greater."

About half of those who agree are used as a control group, and the other half are injected with the drug streptokinase through a catheter placed directly into the clot that apparently is causing the heart attack.

All participants, including those who get the special drug, receive conventional treatment at the hospital, King said.

The new drug treatment, known as intracoronary thrombolysis, was developed in West Germany three years ago. In most cases since then in which the treatment has been used experimentally, blockages were dissolved.

Gains reported in MISD's bilingual education program

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Significant, statistical gains were made through the Title VII Bilingual program which was started in the kindergarten through third grades of Midland schools three years ago, according to a report given during the regular meeting of the MISD school board Tuesday.

An evaluation submitted by Dr. Eliseo Torres, director of continuing education and a professor on bilingual education at Texas A&I University, included a visit in March by Torres, the collection of data by the MISD staff and the analysis of the data by a computer using U.S. Department of Education approved statistical analysis.

Using the Boehm Test of Basic Concepts in the kindergarten level, the California Test of Basic Skills and the California Achievement Test in the first through third grades and an average score of tests conducted before and after the program, the report stated that "the achievement of statistically significant gains automatically indicates the educational gains were also achieved."

In other action, board members approved the job descriptions for departmental chairmen. According to Dr. James H. Mailey, MISD superintendent, the role of the departmental chairman was examined in an effort "to strengthen the leadership roles in terms of departmental activities."

The specific duties for the department chairmen were divided into instructional leadership duties, supervisory leadership duties, organizational leadership duties, administrative leadership duties and team leadership duties, which encompass working with the principals, assistant principals, counselors and teachers.

Duties include setting the expectations of student achievement in the department, leading the teachers in planning, writing and publishing the course descriptions, reporting to the Division of Instructional Services on the achievement of goals through the principal and functioning in the department as a resource person for model instruction and classroom management.

Departmental chairmen also will supervise the program and the performance of teachers, utilize district coordinators for assistance and support, assume responsibility for the orientation of individuals affected by the program and work to build and maintain positive working relationships among the members of the department.

They also are required to prepare a departmental budget, help lead in the selection of textbooks and instructional materials, maintain an annual inventory of materials and equipment and supervise the maintenance of such items and work with the principal and staff to design a master schedule for the department.

. Chairmen also will be asked to provide leadership in encouraging students to enter school-approved contests and activities pertaining to the department, give the necessary assistance to substitute teachers in the department and participate in the selection and assignment of personnel when feasible and requested by the principal.

A number of chairmen and coordinators worked on the draft before bringing it to the school board, Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr., MISD deputy superintendent, said.

School trustees approved the appointment of 14 new members to serve on the district textbook committee. The new members, all professional staff members in accordance with the law, are Carol Whitfield, Kim Hatchett, Cynthia Wolfe, Birdie Lamkin, Kay Thomas, Peggy Woods, Merritt Hudson, Betty Ambrose, Ralph Schultz, Raymond Erxleben, Dr. Jerry Helmer, Golden Gibbs, Eva Johnson and Miguel Bustilloz.

The appointment of Mrs. Joe T. Lynch, Michael McKinney and Mrs. Robert E. Warmbrodt to the GEM Advisory Committee also was approved by board members.

Reagan says rumors of dissension a disservice to his 'happy group'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, denying there is any "bickering or backstabbing" among his foreign policy advisers, says exaggerated reports of dissension in the upper ranks of his administration are a disservice to the country. "We're a very happy group," he says.

But while saying news coverage last week stemming from an allegation by Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. "has been exaggerated out of all reality," Reagan acknowledged that there was "too much just loose talk going around."

On other points relating to foreign policy in his news conference Tuesday, the president:

—Said he stands behind a recent statement that it is possible a nuclear war could be confined to Europe.

—Praised one part of a Saudi Arabian Mideast peace plan which he said would recognize Israel's right to exist. That "is a hopeful sign," he said.

—Declined to clarify conflicting administration comments on whether a nuclear warning shot in Europe is a part of NATO's strategy in a conflict with the Soviet Union.

—Said the United States has no plans "for putting Americans in combat any place in the world," including Libya, Cuba and El Salvador. "Our goal is peace," he added.

Referring to the controversy arising from Haig's allegation that an unidentified White House aide was trying to discredit him, Reagan said, "There is no animus, personal animus, and there is no bickering or backstabbing going on. We're a very happy group."

He said Haig "has done a remarkable job as secretary of state" and his only problems seem to be because "I think sometimes that the District of Columbia is one gigantic ear" — a reference to The Washington Post's "Ear" gossip column.

The president said both reporters and administration officials should "recognize that every word that is uttered here in Washington winds up by way of ambassadors and embassies in all the other countries of the world."

"The picture that has been given of chaos and disarray is a disservice to the country and to other countries and allies as well," Reagan said. "We are not in disarray with regard to foreign policy."

He said his administration's foreign policy accomplishments "have been rather astounding," including 70 meetings with foreign leaders and progress toward peace in the Middle East.

The president did not back off a recent statement to a group of editors about the possibility of a limited nuclear war in Europe.

"I endorse only what I said; it was offered as a possibility and I think you'd have to still say that that possibility could take place," Reagan said.

He said he had told the editors "I could see where both sides could still be deterred from going into the exchange of strategic weapons if there had been battlefield weapons, troop to troop, exchange" in Europe, Reagan said.

"I can't say that it was misunderstood," he said of his comment. But he said it caused concern in Europe only when it was taken out of the context of a discussion "of the whole strategic concept" for U.S. and allied defense.

Getting along in the White House

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Once upon a time, there was a secretary of state who got along perfectly with the president's adviser on national security affairs. No jealousy, no backbiting, certainly no guerrilla warfare between the State Department and the top foreign policy aide at the White House.

That time of total harmony lasted about two years — as long as Henry A. Kissinger held both jobs.

But there was no end of friction before Kissinger took the dual role under Richard M. Nixon. And there has been plenty of friction since, no matter the administration or the personalities involved.

So there is nothing unusual about the discord between Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and the unidentified White House official he accuses of waging "a guerrilla campaign" to undercut his influence.

It is widely assumed that Haig's hassle is with Richard V. Allen, President Reagan's assistant for national security affairs. That is what they're saying at the State Department, although the people saying so do it anonymously. Allen says they are wrong and that Haig knows it. "I know it is not I, and Haig knows it is not I," he said.

Assuming that is so, there would seem to be a problem at the White House, since a bureaucratic guerrilla is going around saying bad things about the secretary of state and nobody seems to know who it is.

Reagan's spokesmen say the president doesn't know and isn't trying to find out. "He has put the matter to rest," said David Gergen.

It would rest easier if Haig had not sent his own spokesman, Dean Fischer, to confirm publicly that he believes somebody on the White House staff is out to get him. Fischer would not say whom Haig suspects.

Standard procedure for administration spokesmen confronted with reports of internal discord is to dismiss them as gossip, feigning surprise that questions like that would even be asked.

Haig did not play it that way. Instead, he validated the reports which Reagan calls unfounded and potentially destructive. It is not the first time Haig has gone public with a complaint about the way things are being handled at the White House.

And for all Reagan's expressions of confidence in his secretary of state, he has acted before to cut short power struggles among aides. That's what led him to fire his 1980 campaign manager, John P. Sears.

The latest Haig controversy began with a report by columnist Jack Anderson that Reagan was disappointed in the secretary of state, had lost confidence in him and might replace him by next summer.

White House aides learned of the column before it was due to be published. Haig and Reagan both called Anderson. The president said it wasn't so. Haig said the report of presidential displeasure was "the handiwork of a top White House aide, who has been running a guerrilla campaign" against him since the earliest days of the administration.

Anderson published those comments and on Tuesday, Fischer publicly confirmed that Haig had made the statements.

Later, Reagan told newsmen that "the only thing I can figure out about stopping all the backbiting is convincing all of you that there is absolutely no foundation to any of these rumors." The trouble was that Haig, through his spokesman, already had said there was.

Reagan also said such reports were damaging U.S. dealings abroad. Haig echoed that in congressional testimony Wednesday. "Both the president and I recognize these reports can be harmful to the conduct of our foreign policy," he said.

There were, of course, two reports: one that Haig was in disfavor, the other of discord within the administration. Presumably, Haig was talking about the former. But the latter didn't do anything to enhance the image of the administration.

After that flap, Reagan told his staff and the State Department that there was to be no further public debate about internal differences.

The message apparently hasn't registered.

Castro challenges U.S. to prove Cuba involved

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cuban President Fidel Castro, in a letter to The Washington Post published today, challenged the United States to prove its charges about Cuban involvement in the fighting in El Salvador.

Castro said that on Sept. 3, his government had publicly urged Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and the U.S. government "to offer one shred of evidence to back their slanderous assertions."

The Cuban leader quoted an allegation by syndicated columnists Rowland Evans and Robert Novak that Cuba had sent 500 to 600 elite troops to become "directly involved in the developments of El Salvador," and said they sought to link the recent destruction of a strategic bridge "with the alleged contingent of Cuban troops."

Reagan's Soviet barbs

A recent news account indicates the Soviet Union fears President Ronald Reagan as a man surrounded by dangerous and irresponsible adivsers pushing him toward a nuclear showdown.

While we don't believe that's a completely accurate picture of President Reagan, we will concede that fear — or the lack of it — plays a major role in maintaining peace, if peace can be construed to mean the lack of open warfare.

"The difference between this Republican administration and the previous (Carter) administration," observed Dr. Radomir G. Bogdanov, deputy director of the U.S.S.R. Institute for the U.S.A. and Canada, "is that in this administration you have people ready to push the button."

The translation of Bogdanov's comment should read as follows: The Reagan administration, unlike the Carter administration, is unwilling to be pushed around by the Soviet Union and does not rule out under virtually all circumstances the use of military force to oppose aggression.

The Soviets are smarting under President Reagan's willingness to call a spade a spade. After all at his first presidential news conference Mr. Reagan characterized the Soviets as immoral liars and cheaters. Since that time, he has taken advantage of numerous opportunities to lay his cards on the table, so to speak, to remove any lingering doubts in the minds of Kremlin officials of where he stands.

Bogdanov's assertion that Reagan's advisers apparently feel "that the only way to deal with the Soviet Union is to destroy it in a nuclear war" is sheer idiocy. No one in his right mind wants nuclear warfare. But to rule out the possibility of nuclear warfare under all circumstances is the same as giving the Soviets free reign to plunder the nations of the world at will and to subjugate the people of those nations, including the United States.

The position Mr. Reagan has assumed in regard to the Soviets is a more commendable one than the one held by the previous administration. To avoid either side being pushed to the point of nuclear confrontation is the purpose of negotiation.

That negotiation will begin Nov. 30 in Geneva at the Theater Nuclear Force talks. In those talks we'll find whether the Soviets truly are willing to reduce the prospect of nuclear war.

A divided decision

When a divided decision by a nation's supreme court is hailed as a victory by both sides of a controversy you know there must be trouble and confusion afoot. Canada was the scene of such goings-on recently.

Its highest tribunal was asked whether Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau has the authority to make a number of changes in the Canadian constitution. He wants to bring the charter over from England, where it has reposed for 114 years, and add a bill of rights. Premiers of eight of the 10 provinces vigorously oppose what they consider Mr. Trudeau's high-handedness, so the matter ended up in the laps of the court.

What the Canadian Supreme Court answered sounded like "Yes, No, and Maybe." It ruled that the prime minister does indeed have considerable authority to make constitutional alterations, at least enough so that Mr. Trudeau thought he had gained ground. But it also said the provinces must have a voice in any revisions, which caused the eight premiers (called the "Ugly Eight" by their critics) to think they had scored points.

Central to the controversy is a worry by many provincial leaders that constitutional reforms according to Trudeau would take away too much of their legislative powers, and put too much control in the hands of Ottawa.

For the time being it's a stalemate. It could last for many months. Mr. Trudeau took note of this by suggesting that if the issue is still unresolved after two years a national referendum be held.

In the end, perhaps the Canadian people will be able to make decisions their government is unable to. The process will be slow, but at least it will be truly democratic.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Willy Brandt worked for CIA and KGB

WASHINGTON — Willy Brandt, former Berlin mayor and West German chancellor, was on the CIA payroll in the 1950s, and may have sold information to the KGB as well, intelligence sources have revealed.

Jack Anderson

Brandt, whose East-West contacts dated back to his days as a journalist in World War II, provided valuable intelligence information to the CIA in the postwar years. The spy agency also regarded its payments to Brandt as an investment — helping him to further his career in the Social Democratic Party.

But his CIA handlers never fully trusted Brandt, because other agents developed information that he had close ties to the Soviet secret police, and may even have been on their payroll.

Brandt's distinguished political career came to an abrupt halt in May 1974, when he resigned as chancellor after one of his closest aides was revealed as a longtime East German spy. As chancellor, Brandt had continued to show secret documents to the aide long after being warned that the man might be a spy. It also turned out that Brandt had been compromised many years before by a Kremlin Mata Hari.

The disclosures about Brandt's relations with the CIA come from four separate U.S. intelligence sources interviewed by my associate Dale Van Atta over a period of several months. The sources all have had long careers in the CIA and other intelligence agencies.

Brandt was born 68 years ago next month in the German port city of Lubeck. While still in his teens, he joined a far-left political group and battled the Nazis during the tumultuous years before Hitler was named chancellor in 1933. Brandt fled to Norway, where he became a journalist and eventually a Norwegian citizen. When the Germans invaded Norway in the spring of 1940, Brandt had to flee once again, this time to Sweden.

It was in Stockholm, according to my sources, that Brandt established ties with both U.S. and Soviet intelligence. American embassy files of that period indicate that he was considered an astute, reliable source.

After the war, Brandt returned to his devastated fatherland as both journalist and political activist. A certified anti-Nazi, he was regarded by the Americans as a politician on the rise. Among those encouraging the CIA's interest in Brandt was Eleanor Dulles, the State Department's German expert and sister of CIA Director Allen Dulles.

According to one former CIA agent, Brandt provided "sensational information on East Germany and Russia" during the height of the Cold War. At the time, Brandt was in Berlin, a hotbed of East-West espionage. Times were hard in the postwar years, and one route to survival for well-placed Germans was the sale of information to the CIA, British intelligence — or the KGB.

But a hitch developed in Brandt's case, according to a former CIA agent. "We learned he was working for them," he said, referring to the KGB.

Despite the evidence that Brandt was working both sides of the street, the CIA continued its payments to him until at least 1956, the year before he became mayor of West Berlin. In 1969, he became West German chancellor. My sources could not say what Brandt's relationship with the CIA was in the years of his political prominence.

Footnote: Through an aide, Klaus-Henning Rosen, Brandt heatedly denied he ever took money from either the CIA or the KGB. "It may be possible that he had contact with a person who was CIA without knowing whom he was speaking to," said Rosen.

EXECUTIVE MEMO: Labor Secretary Ray Donovan emphatically denies it, but sources at both the White House and the Labor Department say he'll be out shortly after the first of the year. They've even come up with a likely successor: Undersecretary Malcolm Lovell, former head of the Rubber Manufacturers Assn. Lovell reportedly told intimates: "I didn't give up a $150,000 job with the rubber manufacturers to take a $50,000 job here." But he says anyone who quotes him as saying that is a liar. As for Donovan, his office said he "categorically denies that he plans to leave office before the administration ends." The word "plans" is a common Washington loophole. Donovan is known to be on the White House "disappointment list," and it's no secret he has political ambitions in New Jersey.

— William M. Bell, President Reagan's nominee to head the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, cites his experience running a one-man executive recruitment firm as evidence of his administrative ability. But his own figures supplied to the Senate don't add up to success: He reported that the average starting salary of the executives he finds jobs for was $18,000. He refused to disclose how many clients he has placed, but he also said he takes a 25 percent commission, and that he earned $7,000 last year. Simple arithmetic shows that, by his own account, Bell found jobs for approximately one-and-three-fourths clients last year.

— This year, once again, a bill to allow veterans with 100 percent service-connected disabilities ride free on military aircraft was shot down in both House and Senate without even being discussed in committee. Reason: The Pentagon says the disabled vets, who number some 130,000, would just wind up sitting around air bases waiting for a dwindling number of available seats. The Pentagon also points out that the vets might bump others who fly free — like retired officers.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Nov. 11, the 315th day of 1981. There are 50 days remaining in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 11, 1918, the World War I armistice was signed between the Allies and Germany.

On this date:

In 1620, pilgrims from England signed the Mayflower Compact, setting basic rules for their new settlement in Massachusetts.

In 1965, Ian Smith declared Rhodesia's independence, and Britain termed the regime illegal.

In 1972, the United States turned over its base at Long Binh to the South Vietnamese, symbolizing the end of direct U.S. participation in the Vietnam War.

And in 1973, Egypt and Israel signed the cease-fire agreement sponsored by United States and began discussions to carry out the pact.

Ten years ago: President Nixon announced the resignation of Agriculture Secretary Clifford Hardin and nominated Earl Butz to replace him.

Five years ago: The governor of Utah temporarily stayed the execution of convicted murderer Gary Gilmore.

One year ago: The white-minority government of South Africa announced it would soon begin compulsory education for the nation's 8 million black children.

Today's birthday: Comedian Jonathan Winters is 56.

Thought For Today: He that riseth late must trot all day. — Benjamin Franklin, American statesman (1706-1790).

ART BUCHWALD

You have to know what to ask for!

King Naban of New Gurdy stepped out of the helicopter on the White House lawn and shook hands with the President of the United States. Four cannons fired off a 21-gun salute.

"Thank you, Mr. President, for that wonderful salute. What kind of cannons are they?"

Art Buchwald

The president looked to his military aide. "A hundred and five millimeters, sir," the aide whispered.

"Would you like one?" the president asked the king.

"I'd rather have 200 ground-to-ground missile launchers — if it's all the same to you," the king said.

"I'll talk to Cap Weinberger about it. Will you join me while we play your national anthem?"

"Just a minute. I want to write down the name of the U.S. Marine helicopter I just flew in on. We could use some of those."

"We don't have too many in stock now, your highness."

"We'll take what you've got, and you can send us the rest later."

"Couldn't we wait until the welcoming ceremonies are completed?"

"Of course. Forgive me."

"Nancy and I are honored you would take time out of your busy schedule to visit us."

"It's my pleasure. I was only saying to the queen last week how much I was looking forward to coming to Washington and meeting the man who singlehandedly won the AWACS battle for Saudi Arabia."

"It was really nothing, your highness. The Saudis are our friends, and if anyone deserved AWACs, they did."

"How much do they cost?"

"They're not for sale, your highness. We just made a special exception in the case of the Saudis, because they've kept the price of oil down in OPEC."

"Then how come they raised it two dollars a barrel, and cut back production the day after you persuaded the Senate to give them the AWACS?"

"I'm sorry. I have to come to attention. They're playing the 'Star-Spangled Banner.'"

"That's no excuse. We're your friends too. But if we don't get AWACS, my people will think we're being treated as a third-rate power."

"The AWACS is overrated, your highness."

"Then how come you made such a big deal of it in Congress?"

"It was a question of pride with the Saudis. Had we refused to sell them, they would have lost face in the Arab world."

"And you don't believe it's a question of face with my government if you refuse to sell them to me?"

"Your highness, if we sell AWACS to every country, the Saudis will decide they're not worth much, and then we'll have to give them something else that nobody in the Middle East has."

"You always liked the king of Saudi Arabia more than you liked me."

"That isn't true, your highness. Didn't we give you 50 F-4 fighter planes on your last visit?"

"Every Banana Republic in South America has F-4 fighter planes."

"Why don't we talk about it at the State Dinner we're giving for you tonight."

"I'd rather eat in my room if you're not going to give me AWACS."

"But Nancy has invited 110 people and she had to borrow china from the Hilton Hotel. Look, I wasn't supposed to mention it until tomorrow when we met with Al Haig, but how would you like a Stealth bomber for your Air Force?"

"Can it do more things than an AWACS?"

"It makes an AWACS look like a Mediterranean Fruit Fly."

"If it's so good how come you didn't give it to the Saudis?"

"Because they didn't ask for it."

BIBLE VERSE

Now I beseech you brethren, mark them that are causing the divisions and occasions of stumbling, contrary to the doctrine which we learned: and turn away from them. Rom. 16:17

A CHANGING WORLD

Presidential election may move Mexico closer to U.S.

MEXICO CITY — There is what purports to be a joke circulating in Mexico's capital city regarding the nation's foreign policy, particularly as it pertains to ties with the United States and with the Soviet Union. It goes generally like this:

John Pinkerman

Three presidential limousines are driving down Avenida Juarez, one of Mexico City's main streets. In the first is Premier Leonid Brezhnev of the Soviet Union. In the second is President Reagan of the United Sates. In the third is whoever might be the current Mexican president.

After several minutes of driving, Brezhnev's limousine turns left. At the same intersection Reagan's car turns right. This confuses the chauffeur of the Mexican president's car, so he asks the president, "Did you see, Senor Presidente? They went different ways. Which way do I go?"

What this joke is intended to illustrate, according to one of the most respected economists (and amateur politicians) in this nation is that regardless of seemingly friendly relations with Communist Cuba and occasional overtures toward Moscow, Mexico looks to its big brother to the north as its firmest friend.

"These friendly relations with the United States unquestionalby will improve even more following the election next July of Planning Minister Miguel de la Madrid as Mexico's new presidnet, too succeed Jose Lopez Portillo," said economist-politician Renaldo Scarpetta in an interview.

Scarpetta is a native of Colombia, has traveled widely in the United States and is active in Mexican public affairs; also is part owner of the Cuernavaca Racquet Club, where both Mexican and foreign diplomats spend considerable time.

"De la Madrid is not a politician," Scarpetta said. "He is a technocrat and he knows Mexico's economic needs. He also was educated in the United States (a Harvard master's degree in public administration in 1965), speaks fluent English and has close U.S. connections that will be good for both countries."

The next president's two main problems, Scarpetta said, will be doing something about Mexico's big deficit in balance of payments in U.S. trade and also finding a solution to the continuing migration of Mexicans to the United States.

"I think he may have some good ideas on these problems," Scarpetta said, "and he also will give more leeway to private business to raise the economic strength of Mexico." This may include a better deal for major U.S. investors, he said.

Concerning problems de la Madrid might have because of his Harvard degree in nationalistic Mexico, Scarpetta laughed. "A problem? Not at all. Do you think for one minute that important Mexicans send their children to Cuba or to Russia for their education? Never. They send them north (to the United States)."

De la Madrid, besides helping U.S.-Mexico relations in his own right, will thrive because of the Ronald Reagan presidency, Scarpetta said.

"Relations with the United States will improve," he said, "partly because of de la Madrid — and they have been good under Lopez Portillo — but they are better already mostly because you have a president with firm policies. Mexicans like Reagan's strong policies and it is oten said here that when the United States has strong leadership Mexicans are less apt to be nervous."

Scarpetta conceded that despite rhetoric that it acts independently, Mexico seldom makes a major policy decision without due consideration of how that decision will be received in Washington. "American banking interests are very influential here and your ambassador always has a word that is important in the decision-making process."

With Mexico a pivotal element in a Latin American situation that is becoming increasingly unstable, both Americans and Mexicans, if they accept Scarpetta's analysis, might be optimistic about the future — particularly because they have Ronald Reagan and soon will have Miguel de la Madrid as their presidents.

Ferre sweeps to victory in Miami

AP Laserphoto

Miami's Mayor Maurice Ferre makes a point during his victory speech after defeating Manolo Reboso by a margin of 56 to 44 percent.

MIAMI (AP) — Mayor Maurice Ferre credited strong support from blacks and non-Latin whites for his runoff victory over Manolo Reboso, who mounted a strong challenge in a bid to become the first Cuban-born mayor of a big U.S. city.

When all of the votes from the city's 87 precincts were tallied late Tuesday, Puerto Rican-born Ferre held a solid majority — 56 percent to Reboso's 44 percent — in his bid for a fifth term.

Reboso, who had once encouraged Miami's Cuban community to "vote Cuban," attributed his defeat in the non-partisan election to votes from blacks.

"WHAT HURT ME the most?" Reboso said at his downtown campaign headquarters in a converted gas station. "It was the black vote without any doubt. Of the 18,000 blacks who voted, 96 percent of them went to the mayor."

Final tallies showed Ferre with 31,285 votes to Reboso's 24,722. Turnout was 51.4 percent of the city's registered voters, election officials said.

Meanwhile, Harry Kinney was elected to a second mayoral term by voters in Albuquerque, N.M. Kinney defeated local radio and television personality Gordon Sanders in a non-partisan runoff election.

And in Boston, officials disclosed Tuesday that in a non-binding referendum held Nov. 3, Boston voters decided by a margin greater than 2½-to-1 that they would rather see Congress spend more on jobs for them than on nuclear weapons and military programs for foreigners.

Citizens in the heavily Irish city also decided by a narrower 3-to-2 margin they wanted President Reagan to "do all in his power" to get English troops out of Northern Ireland. The voters also favored having the right to recall elected officials and raising the number of uniformed police officers to the level of November 1980.

AT A MIAMI victory celebration Tuesday night in a ballroom at the DuPont Plaza, Ferre called his reelection "a great testimony not to me, but to Miami."

"I think the lesson of this election is, you can't be mayor of Miami unless you appeal to all the voters," Ferre said, in an apparent reference to Reboso's campaign emphasis on his Cuban birth.

The campaign was marked by acid rhetoric and several acts of violence. Ferre was given a police bodyguard after he reported death threats. His campaign headquarters were robbed and vandalized, and tear gas was thrown into the home of a Reboso supporter.

Ferre and Reboso combined to spend more than $600,000 for a two-year, largely ceremonial job that pays only $6,000 a year.

IN MIAMI'S "weak-mayor" form of goverment, the mayor is the fifth member of the city commission. Most of the executive duties are carried out by the city manager, appointed by the commission.

Ferre won nearly 40 percent of the vote in an eight-candidate field in the Nov. 3 non-partisan primary, and Reboso got about 37 percent.

Ferre was appointed to the job in April 1973 when the incumbent was indicted on corruption charges. He won election that November.

Reboso, a Ferre loyalist in the past, blamed Ferre for a lack of leadership in dealing with Miami's rising crime and deterioration of neighborhoods. Ferre said Reboso did nothing during 6½ years on Miami's city commission.

Both men are Democrats, but Reboso worked for the Reagan campaign last year and met with the president in Washington last week.

Ferre, whose English is barely accented, drew attention to Reboso's often-tortured English diction. He also mocked Reboso's claim to being a veteran of the Bay of Pigs, saying Reboso was in Miami during the botched attempt to invade Cuba in 1961. Reboso was aboard a ship that arrived too late to join the combat.

Kearn declares himself winner

By JIM MANION
Associated Press Writer

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — A week after Election Day, Republican Thomas H. Kean has declared himself the winner of New Jersey's gubernatorial race.

But his Democratic opponent, James J. Florio, quickly called Kean "presumptuous" on Tuesday for calling himself governor-elect when his lead of less than 1,700 votes is heading for a recount.

With 20 of 21 county votes certified and an unofficial tally included in Essex County, Kean's pre-recount lead over Florio rested at 1,145,465 to 1,143,788, according to the News Election Service.

At a Statehouse news conference, however, Kean said, "I am the winner and I am the governor of the state of New Jersey."

Florio spent the day with campaign aides in Stratford, making plans for his intended recount request.

Asked for a reaction to Kean's declaration, Florio said, "It's presumptuous that someone would declare himself a winner given the fact that the present, unofficial margin is seven-tenths of 1 percent."

But Florio said Monday he believes a statewide recount could result in a total vote shift of up to 15,000 votes. There is a Saturday deadline for a recount request.

Kean, 46, disclaimed knowing details of the GOP's National Ballot Security Task Force whose election day activities in urban areas have brought a charge of "intimidation" by Democrats.

"I don't know and neither do you whether anyone was intimidated," Kean said. "If they were (intimidated), I'd be dead set against it."

Democrats have charged that gun-toting GOP workers acted like storm troopers around urban polling places where they posted warning signs about sanctions for illegal voting.

McKnight to hold political fund-raiser

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Billy Bob's in Fort Worth will become Peyton's place next month for a fund-raiser that will feature country singer Willie Nelson, according to Sen. Peyton McKnight.

McKnight, a Democratic primary candidate for governor, announced the Dec. 7 fund-raising event for 6,000 people in a speech Tuesday to the Austin chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi.

He bemoaned predictions that next year's elections will cost politicians about $20 a vote but said he stands ready to raise all the money he needs — $5 million, according to his remarks on earlier occasions.

"I think if elections can be bought and won with money, then the people who are yours and mine — our constituents — will be shortchanged," the Tyler senator said.

McKnight, the only announced candidate for governor in the Democratic primary, said he would be happy if nobody else entered the race.

He cited estimates that Democrats would spend $10 million to $12 million on their primary and Republicans would spend $9 million to $10 million on the general election.

If one million Texans turn out for the 1982 elections, that amounts to more than $20 a vote, he said.

"You have to have money to win a race. I am a realist, and I know it will be a lot easier for me to run a race properly because I know I can raise the money to run that race," McKnight said.

Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong and Attorney General Mark White say they are considering running for governor. McKnight said the three of them have agreed "that if they run, we will talk about issues, not personalities."

He said he has not heard from another possible candidate — former Gov. Dolph Briscoe — since before McKnight announced his candidacy on Oct. 17.

McKnight challenged journalists to "balance the hype" of candidates' news releases and advertisements.

"I may be talking myself into a corner, chiding you into investigating the candidates and issues in Texas politics. That may be a little like filling a wheelbarrow full of fresh cow manure and trying to push it uphill without getting any on you," he said.

McKnight promised that if elected he would continue the pattern of weekly news conferences established by Gov. Bill Clements.

"I have never been a recluse when it comes to dealing with the press," he said.

He also said that if elected he would work to make sure the new wiretap law is not re-enacted when it expires in 1983.

"I never made a vote I was more proud of than on that issue," said McKnight, who voted against Clements' wiretap bill.

Monument and molybdenum mine in one site

By JEAN KIZER
Associated Press Writer

MISTY FJORDS NATIONAL MONUMENT, Alaska (AP) — Rugged granite cliffs rise 4,000 feet, their peaks crowned by a veil of clouds. Waterfalls fed by huge ice fields plunge into saltwater fjords carved from a wilderness unclaimed by man.

Wolves and mountain goats stalk the high slopes; eagles nest in trees along the shore; bears hunt salmon in the streams.

This awesome panorama is Misty Fjords National Monument, a 3,-585-mile chunk of wilderness in the Tongass National Forest at the tip of Alaska's southeastern panhandle.

In the heart of the monument, below a knob called Quartz Hill, is a different kind of site. It's the work camp and exploration base for a planned molybdenum mine, projected to provide a 70-year supply of a scarce material used in high-strength alloy steel. U.S. Borax and Chemical Corp. officials say their deposit there is among the largest molybdenum finds in the world.

It also may emerge as one of the biggest environmental controversies in Alaska. It's the classic dilemma — development of a vital resource vs. protection of one of America's pristine wildernesses.

Borax estimates the deposit is worth $25 billion. The firm says the planned 1,200-foot-deep open pit mine will supply 40 million pounds of molybdenum a year, about 12 percent of the world demand.

The mine is expected to cost more than $870 million, with production to begin in late 1987 — barring delays caused by environmental problems or a depressed molybdenum market.

Borax President Carl L. Randolph concedes that development of a world-scale mineral deposit within a wilderness area will be "a major undertaking." But Chris Hesse, manager of the Quartz Hill project, says the firm is committed to protecting the environment. "Everything we do, every step of the way, we have to get permits. We want to do this project right."

The developers are pitted against environmentalists and fishermen who fear that disposing of nearly 60,000 tons of tailings every day for 70 years will destroy abundant salmon stocks and have other deletrious effects on the area. There are also questions about the impact of a community of 3,000 people sprouting suddenly in a previously uninhabited wilderness.

The mine will employ 900 people at an annual payroll of $25 million. It could change the economic face of southeast Alaska.

Located 2,000 feet above sea level in a remote mountain valley, the mine site is accessible only by helicopter. Travelers have to take a floatplane or boat 45 miles from Ketchikan, the nearest community, to a small floating dock about five miles from the site. From there, helicopters are used.

All equipment, including huge drill rigs which are taken apart and reassembled at the mine, must be flown in. "Mineral exploration is lots more expensive in Alaska because you always have to use helicopters," says camp manager Jim Ashleman. So Borax has asked permission from the U.S. Forest Service to build a road from the site to the dock — about five miles by air, about twice as long by road.

Borax estimates it will have spent $37 million on the claim by the end of the year, including about $5 million on environmental studies.

By this winter, Borax hopes to have shipped 42 tons of sample ore to a California laboratory for analysis. However, a federal judge recently ordered a temporary halt to sampling activity.

The ruling came in a suit brought by the Southeast Alaska Conservation Council against the Forest Service. The environmental group argued that the government allowed Borax to engage in bulk sampling this summer before a required environmental impact statement was completed.

The proposed mine was a point of contention during congressional debate in 1979-80 over the Alaska Lands Act, which protects more than 100 million acres of federal land in Alaska. Environmentalists tried to thwart the mine's development, but the bill signed into law last year authorized the mine if Borax meets environmental requirements.

The law placed Quartz Hill within Misty Fjords National Monument, but excluded 149,000 acres from wilderness designation. The law also set out a timetable during which the Forest Service must review the project and issue permits to allow it to proceed.

It was luck more than anything that resulted in Borax staking the claim seven years ago. During the early 1970s Borax geologists began investigating mineral prospects in southeast Alaska. The early explorations yielded few results.

In 1974, they began exploring the mainland east of Ketchikan, using a boat, a helicopter and two two-man crews. The boat was a 55-foot double-hull catamaran, with a mobile home mounted between the hulls that served as the base camp, and was moved from one anchorage to another.

Every morning the helicopter — normally moored on top of the mobile home — would fly a geologist to an exploration site. During the summer of 1974 a geologist took a sample in the Wilson Arm area that, when analyzed, showed a high molybdenum content.

Further exploration resulted in a promising discovery of a large outcropping of quartz and molybdenite exposed on the surface.

Borax staked claim to the Quartz Hill area, and field crews worked late into October — until the fog and snow became so thick that flying a helicopter was dangerous. Every summer since, crews have worked at Quartz Hill. During winter, when 20 feet of snow falls in the area, only caretakers remain.

In December, a draft environmental impact statement on Borax's proposed bulk sampling operation, planned for next summer, and access road from the mine site to tidewater is to be released. A second EIS must be done on Borax's entire mine operation.

Borax's Hesse sees three environmental issues.

The most serious is how to dispose of 60,000 tons of tailings per day. Borax favors dumping them, at a depth of about 150 feet, into a fjord. But fishermen and environmentalists fear harm to salmon and other marine life, and favor disposal on land.

"You just can't dispose of tailings without some impact," Hesse said. "It's a question of which is least damaging. We are firmly convinced marine disposal will have far less environmental impact."

Land disposal would require two 1,000-foot-high dams to contain the tailings, which eventually would fill two entire valleys.

Another key issueis the mine access road. The two possible routes both follow rivers which lead to salmon spawning streams. State fisheries officials favor one route, Borax favors another.

The Forest Service, which is responsible for management of Misty Fjords National Monument, will make the decision.

Jim Kirschenman, Forest Service district ranger in charge of the monument, says Borax has been cooperative. "'Considering the hardships they work under as far as logistics, access, distance, climate, terrain, they've been responsive to what we ask for."

But local environmentalists have accused the Forest Service of being too lenient in dealing with Borax. Congress "set out a real strict set of controls the Forest Service has to follow. We feel the Forest Service has allowed Borax to violate those controls," says Jim Stratton, director of the Southeast Alaska Conservation Council.

Forest Service officials say they are strictly following the guidelines set out by Congress in authorizing the development.

DEAR ABBY

Climate isn't right for family moves

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My problem concerns my 87-year-old mother and my 67-year-old husband. They hate each other. Mother lives alone in a home she owns in Palm Beach, Fla. (Dad died four years ago.) Mother keeps writing that she's lonesome, wants to sell her house and come to live with George and me in Tucson. George says, 'Absolutely not!" He usually has the last word, but I'm still working on him.

I can't go to visit my mother because I can't leave George for an overnight trip. He's not well and he needs me all the time.

Mother's widowed 82-year-old sister lives alone in Wisconsin. Aunt Ida wants Mother to come and live with her, but Mother says it's too cold in Wisconsin. Mother wants Aunt Ida to move in with her, but Aunt Ida says it's too hot in Florida.

I suggested that Mother hire a companion to live with her, but she says she can't find anyone. She refuses to consider a retirement home because "old people" bore her. Can you help me? — MOTHER TROUBLE

DEAR TROUBLE: Older people are usually happier in their own familiar surroundings, so quit working on George to try to coexist with your mother.

Arrange to have someone look after George, and go to visit your mother for a week or two. There are some fine senior citizens' assistance groups in the Palm Beach area. Contact one and find a compatible live-in companion for your mother. Nothing is impossible if you try. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: My problem is not unique. Several of my friends face the same situation, so you'll be helping more than just me if you answer this in your column.

I am in my late 20s and I am gay. My appearance is strictly straight and I keep my sexual preference to myself. My problem is that everyone I know — family, friends, fellow employees and even neighbors — are forever trying to fix me up with a "nice woman." I am hounded to death with these offers. I have run out of excuses.

Being a closet gay is difficult enough to handle without all these well-meaning fixer-uppers.

How can I get everyone off my back without admitting my sexual preference? — GAY AND HAPPY

DEAR GAY: You are not obligated to explain why you're not interested in being fixed up. Just say, "No thanks. I'll find my own." Period.

DEAR ABBY: How can a mother comment on the condition of a married daughter's house without hurting her or causing a rift? She is 27.

Two years ago our daughter was married. They furnished their home with cast-offs from me and her husband's parents, and every time we visit we are appalled at the way they live: sparsely furnished rooms, cluttered and not too clean.

They both work and their combined incomes are sufficient for them to add some new furniture, but apparently it never enters their minds. I believe she thinks because she's working she's not expected to keep her home in order.

I worked too, but I always came home to care for our home and a family of four.

My daughter has relatives and friends her age who do not live as she does. I'd so appreciate your help. (I can't believe I'm writing this.) — ILLINOIS MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Your daughter may or may not appreciate unsolicited advice, so if you really don't want to hurt her or cause a rift, keep your lip zipped, Mother.

Parents liable for children's actions

By E.J. DEMSON
Copley News Service

A child, with his parents' full knowledge, flouts safety rules and causes an accident that results in his death and loss to a neighbor. Are the child's parents liable for damages?

Q. The parents of a 9-year-old neighbor child often watched and laughed as he rode his bicycle onto the street and made passing motorists screech their brakes to avoid hitting him.

One day he rode in front of my wife's car, was hit, and died of his injuries. My wife's health and mind have been ruined, and our family will never be the same. Can the child's parents be sued for recovery of damages we have suffered?

A. The statute in your state, Pennsylvania (11-2064), says the parents of a child under 18 are liable for damages caused by the child's willful, wrongful acts resulting in injury to persons. The limit of liability is $200.

The parents can become party defendants if it can be proved convincingly that they had a part in causing the injury. You should advise with a lawyer who is versed in personal injury cases.

Q. What, in law, is meant by a writ of prohibition? I got a judgment in a California justice of the peace court, but the man has filed a writ of prohibition, claiming that court did not have jurisdiction to award the judgment.

A. Am. Jur. 2d Ref: Prohibition, Sec. 1-52, defines such a writ in common law as an order to prevent a court from exceeding its jurisdiction. If a higher court issues such a writ in your case, your justice court cannot enforce the judgment.

Q. Is a revocable trust, drawn up in Boston, valid in Arizona?

A. Arizona Statute (14-7202) says it is valid if the trustee, now an Arizona resident, submits the operation of the trust to the county probate court in Arizona. This is true in all states.

Write, without a charge, to E.J. Demson, Copley News Service, in care of this newspaper, for what the law says about your legal problem. Please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Goodman at large

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Ellen Goodman spent 10 years doing what journalists call "street reporting," and she's as apt today to summon the resources that worked then for inspiration for her nationally syndicated — and widely read — newspaper column.

"My solution to running on empty," she says, "is to go talk to people, read, see a movie."

It works, because Ellen Goodman writes about things that touch peoples' lives, including her own.

"I am rooted at home, in the rhythms of my family life, and also exist in a public world," she says in an introduction to "Ellen Goodman At Large," a collection of 105 columns written in the last 2½ years.

"The pieces here show that," she says, writing further of the newly published volume. "They talk about the people I have known ... as well as the people I have never met. ... They deal with life and death issues in my own home and in the Congress. They discuss matters which are both public and private, argued in the bedroom and the boardroom, the kitchen and the court: love, work, sexuality, children, war, peace."

Well said.

At 40 a Pulitzer-Prize winner, her column for the Boston Globe first syndicated in March 1976 and now run twice-weekly by more than 300 newspapers, it might appear as if success and celebrity have come rather suddenly to Ms. Goodman. But not to her.

"It's been gradual for me," she says, "because it takes time to find a voice. I don't know if that's a conscious process. I think you sort of work out a style that fits what you're trying to say. But it does take time."

She's often skeptical but never strident, and it may be that reasoned, "Oh, come on, now," incredulity that separates her work from others.

"There are some things that make me fume," she concedes, "but it's more of a sense of, 'Can you believe what they're doing?'

"I did a column the other day on how people are using the expression 'work ethic.' For the rich, it means if you take too much, you discourage work. For the poor, it means you take more away so they'll work harder. Who are they kidding?"

There's a distinct sense of humor to her writing — "to sustain outrage as a personal characteristic," she says, "would rotten you" — and though her approach is personal, it's not confessional.

"Why should people listen to me if they don't know anything about me," she says. "In journalism, it's important to be accessible. I felt that long before I started writing the column, that somehow you have to bridge that gap between the writer and the reader.

In that context, she notes in the introduction to "At Large" that the newest book, as well as a previous collection, "Close to Home," "are truly bookends to my life and work."

Her frequent objective, she says, is to suggest "a slight shift in the way people look at something.

"Probably the most controversial column in the book," Ms. Goodman says, "is the one on men helping at home. I got an unbelievable amount of mail on that, on all sides of the issue. A lot of men though I had raised the ante. I wasn't saying, 'Leave your husband if he doesn't sweep the floor.' All I was saying was, 'There is another way to look at it.'

"You have to be careful with something like that," says Ms. Goodman, who lives near Boston with her daughter, Katie, "because when you get down to values and families, you're really talking about issues where everyone is an expert — actually, there are no experts."

Puckering: What causes it?

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

Puckering. Unless you are kissing, it is not a good thing. What causes it? Well, it depends.

It depends on where it is, what type of fabric it is and how you went about putting it together.

Puckering in a seam: Most often this will occur on very lightweight, soft fabrics, and most often on straight seams. To avoid trouble here, use very small stitches to make your seams (either straight or narrow zigzig). Puckering in seams occurs only BETWEEN where the needle goes down to make a stitch. Therefore, the smaller the stitches, the less room to pucker.

Puckering in long seams of heavier fabric can be caused by the shifting of the two layers. Be sure you have pinned or basted carefully to prevent one layer from moving faster than the other. Some puckering in seams can be steamed out, but do not depend on your steam iron to perform miracles.

Pucker in sleeves: When the cap of the sleeve is eased too much, there will be puckering (even gathers). Ease only enough to pin the sleeve into the armhole. Also, if large stitches are used for the easing, there will be more chance of puckering. Use a stitch just long enough to be pulled, no longer.

Puckering corners: Clipping is the secret. Inside or outside corners must be clipped. If they are not clipped closely enough, there will be pulling, which causes puckering.

Puckering along the hem: Most often caused by the hem stitiches being pulled too tight. Watch it.

Puckering on collar at neckline seam: First, did you make any changes in the neckline or shoulder seam that would effect the collar? If not, puckering probably is the result of not clipping the neckline to the stay stitching.

Questions may be addressed to Mrs. Betty Kinser, Copley News Service, in care of this newspaper.

Tips on selecting firewood for use in the home

By SHARON A. HILLIS
County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Nothing is so delightful as a toasty warm fire on a cold winter's evening. And, nothing more fretful than a fire that won't burn after you've worked on it half the evening! Here are a few tips to get you on your way to "just right fires for this winter.

WOOD CHARACTERISTICS

Wood as a fuel has several advantages. It provides clean, almost pollution-free combustion; it is easy to ignite and requires no special facilities for storage. The wood ash can be used as a garden fertilizer in many parts of the country, but it does not need to be added to Midland County soils. However, wood does require a large amount of space.

One standard cord of dense hardwood, such as oak or hickory, weighs about 4,000 pounds and produces less than 100 pounds of fine ash. A standard cord of wood provides as much heat as a ton of coal, 160 gallons of fuel oil or 24,000 cubic feet of natural gas.

Woods vary considerably in their sutability for use in the fireplace. Some types, such as willow when dry, and some conifers, such as pine, burn rapidly and require constant replenishing to have a steady fire. Some woods, such as cedar and cesquite, burn well but may throw sparks from thr fireplace which could result in damage to nearby carpeting and rugs. The following table gives the relative heat value of various species of wood grown in Texas.

RELATIVE HEAT VALUES OF SELECTED WOODS:

Very High: Live oak, osage-orange, hickory, dogwood, pecan and white oak.

High: Water hickory, mesquite, red oak and beech.

Medium: Ash, elm, walnut, birch, cherry, soft maple, sycamore, sweetgum, southern pine, redcedar and bald cypress.

Low: Ponderosa pine, cottonwood and willow.

The amount of heat is not the only consideration when purchasing firewood. Southern pines tend to have heavy smoke and, as stated earlier, eastern redcedar and mesquite tend to smoke and pop. All things considered, the woods listed with very high and high heat values are the desirable woods to purchase.

BUYING FIREPLACE WOOD

STANDARD CORD

The average homeowner usually purchases wood from a local vendor. Firewood is sold by a confusing array of measurement units. The accepted (and in some places the only legal) unit of measurement is the cord. The standard cord is a well-stacked pile of wood cut into four-foot lengths and stacked four feet high by eight feet long, or 128 cubic feet. This results in a volume of actual wood of 80 cubic feet with the rest being air space between the pieces of wood. Stacks that have crooked sticks, protruding knots or excessive decay or space in between sticks have less than 80 cubic feet of solid wood, while those with straight pieces have more.

FACE CORD

Wood is often sold by the face cord or fraction of a face cord. A face cord is a pile of wood four feet high and eight feet long and cut to any length, generally about 16-18 inches. Normally there are about two to three face cords per standard cord. Most advertisements in newspapers refer to the price of wood per cord, but may mean the price per face cord and should be priced accordingly.

ESTIMATING YOUR PURCHASE

Firewood may be sold by the "truckload". A pickup truck will normally hold about a third of a standard cord or about one face cord of wood if the wood is stacked properly in the truck. Stack the wood so you can estimate how much wood you have purchased. Multiply the length by width by height in feet and divide by 128 to find what portion of a standard cord you received. For example, a stack eight feet by four feet high by 18 inches long would be about a third of a standard cord or a typical face cord.

WOOD DRYNESS

When buying wood to burn immediately, make sure it is dry. Most species of wood burn rather poorly when fresh cut. The surest way to burn dry wood is to purchase it several months before use! Wood is dried by stacking outside for three to five months prior to use.

INSECTS & WOOD

When buying wood that is heavily infested with insects, such as powder-post beetles or wood decay fungi. These insects and decay organisms may invade the home if the wood is left in the house for an extended length of time. Wood infested with insects or decay should be brought in and placed directly on the fire rather than stored inside.

WOOD-BURNING HINTS

1. Use several small pieces of kindling and newspaper placed between several logs. Place small logs over this base.
2. Usually no more than four logs are necessary to have a good fire.
3. Mix green wood with dried wood after the fire is going well to hold the fire longer.
4. Large unsplit pieces will burn longer than split pieces.
5. Ashes can be left to accumulate withing an inch or two of the grate. Ashes over the grate may ruin it.
6. Keep a screen in front of the fireplace.
7. Glass doors are a good way to slow down air loss from a house through a fireplace opening.
8. DO NOT us a flammable liquid, such as gasoline, oil or charcoal lighter to start a fire.

There are many ways of building a fire. The basic principle to be awre of is that you set a match to easily ignitable tinder, which in turn ignites the kindling and then ignites the larger firewood.

For additional information on wood burning units, firewood and fire builing, contact the Midland County Extension Office and request a copy of Fact Sheet Number L-1743. The office is located in the Courthouse annex, 218 W. Illinois and the phone number is 682-9481, extension 433.

The oldest store on 'Old House' Island

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

CHOKOLOSKEE, Fla. (AP) — "The Indians still come here, but now they come as tourists," says Thelma Smallwood, sitting on the bayfront porch of the general store her father built in 1917.

The dark wooden building is oblong in shape and unattractive, with heavy shutters over its windows. The wooden steps to the only entrance in front show the wear of time and weather.

Inside, the place is dark and dreary; the original wooden counters and shelves cluttered with old junk mail, papers and seemingly useless bric-a-brac Miss Smallwood rarely sells.

"I don't sell much," admitted Miss Smallwood. "Everyone asks for antiques, but I don't have any."

The white-haired woman has little to say to most people and seems almost reticent to talk about the early days when this quiet, small community which covers only about 200 acres was reachable only by boat. She was born and raised here and shuns big-city living.

The visiting tourist quickly notices vintage paintings and handbills in old dusty frames hanging on the walls. "They're personal and not for sale," she said curtly.

Chokoloskee, which means "old house" in Seminole Indian language, is distinct along the southwest edge of the Florida Peninsula because of its "high" elevation — 20 feet — and because it is built on a shell mound surrounded by mangroves.

Archaeologists and anthropologists have found indications that the area, on the edge of the Ten Thousand Islands, was inhabited long before the Spaniards explored Florida and before it was settled by Seminole Indians migrating from Georgia.

"Some people still say the island was made by Indians who ate oysters and clams and threw the shells here," said Miss Smallwood, "but that's not true."

During the summer months, the population is about 300, she said, but during the tourist season it increases to about 1,000. Some retirees have settled here in recent years, drawn by the peace and quiet; others because of the good fishing nearby.

Miss Smallwood's father, Ted Smallwood, was one of the early settlers of Chokoloskee, arriving in 1891. Less than a half-dozen families lived here at that time. In 1906, he opened a general store. That same year he became postmaster, a post he held for 35 years.

The Smallwood store soon became the trading post of the region and the meeting place for area settlers.

"I remember when I was a little girl, the Indians would come and trade alligator hides, venison and wild turkey for coffee, grits and sugar," she said. "Sometimes the Indians would camp near the store for days."

Visitors don't come here by accident now any more than they did at the turn of the century. It's just within the boundaries of Everglades National Park, isolated at the end of State Road 29. The road is a southern spur off Tamiami Trail, U.S. 41, which links Miami on the east coast and Naples on the west coast.

Much of the early trade at the Smallwood store was done with those traveling the water route around the southern tip of the state.

Affluent life of youth in Japan is book theme

By TODD CARREL
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — A thick hardback novel about Japan's modern-day younger generation has become an overnight bestseller and required reading for anyone who wants to be one of the "crystal" people.

The book, called "Nantonaku Crystal" or "Somewhat Crystal," has sold more than 1.1 million copies since it was published last January. Appealing mainly to urban teen-agers and young adults, it has also spawned a movie and won a literary award.

The story concerns a young Tokyo model and her rock-musician boyfriend, students with lots of time and money to pursue a common hobby: self-indulgence.

In their aimless movements from chic boutiques to cake shops to discos, and through separate love affairs, the image-conscious duo is bound by that "somewhat crystal" feeling — similar tastes for consumption and comfort that suffice to propel them through a passionless existence.

The author and inventor of the term "crystal" is Yasuo Tanaka, a 25-year-old law graduate of a Tokyo university. Excerpts from the manuscript won the annual literary award of Japan's prestigious "Bungei" magazine in October 1980, before the book was published.

The meaning of "crystal" not being crystal clear, Tanaka sought in a recent talk to foreign journalists to blow away some of the murk. He said it connoted "a feeling-good feeling," in Japan's "stable" society where people don't worry that another oil shock might disrupt their comfortable affluence.

"Crystal," he said, allows people to see their future with limited clarity, as "crystal lets you see things through a cloudy reflection."

Tanaka said the members of this young "crystal generation" identified themselves and their roles in society by external appearances: "What they wear and what they acquire."

It means wearing clothes with the right designer names, going to the right bars, restaurants and discos, perhaps having a certain type of car with a surfboard lashed to the roof.

The streets of Tokyo, thronged by young people dressed in similar clothes — often fads that have long since run their course in America and Europe — and apparently engaged in "crystal" pursuits, give credence to the idea. So does a recent government survey of Japanese youth showing 78.3 percent were content with their lives.

Tanaka said, however, that "being crystal" was not just a fad, but "an approach toward life" for people who want to enjoy the amenities of Japan's prosperous society.

Tanaka's book has been compared to the satirical "How to be Preppy" genre of books now popular in the United States, but it appears more likely to be taken seriously as a description of a social phenomenon.

Some critics contend it merely glorifies hollow standards that have been mindlessly taken up by a vapid generation of Japanese teenyboppers. One called it "a formula for the blind pursuit of style."

But the author defends his work as "a study of Japan in the 1980s where I've tried to record the feeling, the air, the mood of the times."

Tanaka said he was serious about the novel and only resorted to sarcasm in a "glossary" section which takes up 41 of the book's 189 pages — a consumer's guide with 442 entries on how to be "crystal."

It tells the reader everything he or she needs to know — what to listen to, what music to admire, what to wear, what to eat, what to drink, even what brand of chewing gum to chew.

Tanaka's writing career will not end with his first book. He's now working on a second novel, "about a 27-year-old model who has graduated from the 'crystal stage.'"

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Reader wants hot chocolate mix recipe

She can't answer your letter personally but she'll use the best for-free hints received in her column.

DEAR HELOISE:

I have often read letters asking you to repeat hints. Thank goodness, I'm not the only one who forgets where the hint was put.

So, will you please repeat the recipe for a Hot Chocolate mix? I know it was powdered milk, cocoa, and powdered sugar, but I don't remember the amounts to use. — T.T.

+ + +

In that case, grab a pencil and a piece of paper and jot this down as I'm happy to give you the recipe again. You other folks might want to do the same thing, 'cause a cup of this brew is hard to beat, especially on nights when those blustery winter winds start to blow.

Mix together two cups of powdered milk, one-fourth cup cocoa, one cup powdered sugar and a dash of salt. You can use a sugar substitute, if desired.

For a richer mix, add one-third cup powdered non-dairy creamer and-or a tablespoon or two of malted milk powder to the above mixture.

To use, put about four tablespoons of the mix (use more or less to suit taste) into a cup of boiling water. Add a dash of whipped topping or vanilla ice cream, if desired. In a jiff, you'll have a delicious drink that will make you forget all about those cold winds outside.

Wish we could have a cup together! — Hugs Heloise

QUICK AND EASY

Dear Heloise: As an entertainer, it is not unusual for me to have to shower and run at breakneck speed.

Having just invested a large sum of money in repairing the tile in my shower, I realized that unless I faithfully wiped it down after each use, the mildew problems would reappear rather quickly. However, the wiping seemed interminable.

My husband came up with a solution: Use a window squeegee.

The few drops that remain can be sponged off in seconds. — Busy Lady

SNUG AS A BUG

Dear Heloise: I have wanted to write and say now much I enjoy your column and also want to pass on my helpful snow hint for all little snow people who love to play outdoors but whose hands and feet get cold.

For the feet, I put socks on first, then shoes, a pair of my tennis socks over the shoes, next a plastic bag over all, then their boots.

For the hands, their mittens, a plastic bag, and then a larger pair of mittens. A rubber band around the wrist keeps them secure.

The first mitten keeps them warm and the plastic keeps them dry.

After two hours outside, no cold hands or feet! — P. Smith

+ + +

Just make sure those rubber bands aren't too tight and cut off circulation. — Heloise

PAPER TOWEL SAVER

Dear Heloise: The price of paper towels made me take the bull by the horns and "invent" a substitute to use for drying hands in the kitchen.

I took a terry towel, folded one end over the other and sewed it flat. Then, I removed the rod from the paper towel rack, ran it through the towel, then replaced it, making a roller towel which can be washed and put back up. — Gladys West

CAN COVER

Dear Heloise: Don't throw away the plastic lid from a small oleo tub. It will fit perfectly on that partially used can of motor oil out in the garage.

Keeps dust and dirt away. — Reader

WRINKLE REMOVER

Dear Heloise: Recently, I bought a lined blazer through a mail-order catalog. It was badly wrinkled when it arrived.

Hanging it in the bathroom with the shower on didn't help and I didn't want to spend extra money to send it to the dry cleaner before even wearing it.

So, I placed it in the dryer on the low cycle for 10 minutes and my blazer was beautifully "ironed." — Jeanne D'Avray

SMOOTHER SKIN

Dear Heloise: I once heard a skin specialist say that no matter how much or how little you pay for them, all skin moisturizers are basically a combination of water and oils.

You can have your own lovely moisturizer, very inexpensively if, when you get out of the shower or tub and are still wet, you pour a little baby oil into the palm of your hand and spread it over your body where needed.

The water helps spread the oil around and, as quick as a wink, you've helped your skin to be less dry. — Edythe Stewart

AT WIT'S END

On child-proof caps

By ERMA BOMBECK

After years of scientific research, marketing and testing, it has finally been revealed that children can open child-proof caps on medicine bottles faster than adults.

In a significant number of cases, it was confirmed that the child-proof caps could not be opened at all by adults and caused headaches for which there is no known cure.

The message to me is quite clear. "Child-proof" is a fantasy word that was invented to give mothers hope . . . like "wrinkle-free" and "one-size-fits-all." They're catchy, but they don't mean anything.

The way I figured it out, it's God's way of propagating the species. We need kids. We cannot function in this world without them. As long as there are hermetically sealed combs in packages, children will always be with us.

To them, there is no place in this world that is "out of reach" and no package made that cannot be ripped open by them in 35 seconds.

They can take the bell out of a ball when they are three months, find the end of the toilet tissue roll at six months, and scale the top of the refrigerator by age one.

By age three they can operate a lipstick tube, by age four they can find the beginning of the thread that is pasted under the label, and by five can disconnect the TV and install video games.

The way the world is going, I don't think it's too unrealistic to consider rent-a-kids for people with arthritis who ever want to get sliced bacon out of a package in their lifetime. Or how about a woman with long fingernails who has never been able to use a shopping cart because they are all welded together and can only be separated by a pre-schooler? Women climbing the corporate ladder would do well to rent a kid to take along on business trips if only to open the bag of airline smoked almonds.

Sometimes I feel package manufacturers don't know children at all. If you want to keep children out of something, what do you do? You put a cute little duck on the side of the package and the words, "vitamin enriched." Then the mother puts the bottle or jar within reach of the child with the lid off and says, "There is not a day goes by that I don't want you to have one of these. Help yourself."

Trust me, the bottle will never be touched.

The use of gold in dentistry goes far back in history

BOSTON (AP) — "As good as gold may come to be a measure of health as it is now seen by most people as a measure of wealth," says Dr. Louis J. P. Calisti of the Dental Gold Institute.

Calisti is professor of Public Health and Community Dentistry and director of Dental Care Management at Boston University's Goldman School of Graduate Dentistry. He is also a former dean of Tufts and associate dean of Harvard universities' dental colleges.

Long considered a sign of wealth, gold until fairly recently was used mostly in the making of jewelry and other decorative articles, including religious objects, and as money, he points out.

"Today, technologically, it is prized for a number of physical, chemical and biochemical qualities that are unique or not found to any appreciable extent in other metals," Calisti adds.

The properties include resistance to corrosion and extremes of heat or cold, conduction of heat and electricity, and malleability. A single ounce of gold can be hammered into a sheet thin enough to cover 170 square feet.

Gold is also easily bonded to itself and can be mixed with other metals, forming alloys that in themselves possess exceptional qualities, he notes.

The first technological application of gold, Calisti explains, was probably in dental therapeutics when French and German dental surgeons in the 16th century began using foils of alloys made of lead, tin and gold, which could be forced into cavities, using a hammer-like tool.

"This was a big improvement over earlier practice during the Middle Ages of pouring alloys of melted lead, tin, bismuth and mercury through a funnel directly into a cavity," he says.

The use of gold in dentistry was brought to a "fine art" by the end of the last century, using pure gold for the most part, Calisti says. Most dental prostheses today are made by casting gold alloys that are cheaper to apply and stronger than the old compacted pure gold restorations and "don't even look like gold."

According to the Dental Gold Institute, the space age and the application of gold to solving many circuitry and instrumentation problems has had a positive spinoff in the discovery of new uses for the metal in the health-care field.

Gold compounds have been used in the treatment of rheumatoid arthritis, especially in stubborn cases where conventional treatment is found ineffective, Calisti says.

"In fact," he adds, "research is now under way to perfect a gold pill which, taken orally, will be even more effective in the fight against arthritis."

Grandparents' role in divorce

By FREDERICK P. SZYDLIK
Hearst Feature Service

ALBANY — When divorce enters the picture, being a grandparent is not so easy. Another truth is: Divorce is entering more grandparents' lives every year.

There were nearly 1.2 million divorces in the United States last year, according to the National Center for Health Statistics. There were 100 divorced people for every 1,000 married people living with their spouse.

Little attention has been paid to the impact that a separation and divorce can have on grandparents. They are often not considered.

That's why two Russell Sage College psychology professors, Sybillyn Jennings and Susan Wheeler Roy, planned a workshop for grandparents whose families are going through a divorce or have been divorced.

Jennings said she thought of the idea for the workshop after a grandmother she knows told her about her own situation. The woman's daughter was in the process of getting a divorce. The daughter has two young children and the grandmother has been an active grandparent

After the divorce, the children asked their grandmother questions she couldn't answer. "They were questions based on the children's anxieties and fears," Jennings said. "The children needed information and reassurance. But sometimes, even a grandparent can't offer help.

"The grandmother felt unable to respond to these questions. And she didn't want to burden her grandchildren with her own fears and anxieties.

What's a grandparent to do? Even experts aren't sure, say Jennings and Roy, because the relationships — cutting across sex, age and family ties — are so complicated.

"Many times," says Roy, "the grandparent can't help a situation and asks herself, 'How did I fail my child? What model of family did I fail to provide?' So the relationship between grandparent and her own child becomes troubled."

What happens when divorced children remarry, and the grandchildren wind up with as many as eight grandparents? The original grandma may wonder: Does my birthday present for little Brucie mean as much as the one his new grandparents give him?

Roy adds that the situation can be further complicated by the legal arrangements made at the time of the separation or divorce. Grandparents may be uncertain of their rights and expectations in many situations. As a result, she said, some states have had to enact laws providing visitation rights for grandparents.

One task for everyone is to redefine the role of the family, say Jennings and Roy. Grandparents and children have to talk about what the family means and how can they make it work.

Vase may be a Ming

By JAMES G. McCOLLAM
Copley News Service

Dear Mr. McCollam: We have been trying to trace the origin of this vase. Is it Ming Dynasty or a copy?

No one seems to be able to determine its age; any information you can furnish will be greatly appreciated as we would be willing to sell it if the price is right. — F.G., Toms River,N.J.

Dear F.G.: The mark indicates that this was made in the Ch'eng Hua period of the Ming Dynasty (1465-1487).

However, there is no way I can determine if this is a fake or not from a picture. I suggest that you contact Sotheby Parke Bernet, 980 Park Ave., New York, N.Y. 10021. Send them the same information you sent me and they will arrange to examine it.

If it is authentic, it is very valuable.

Dear Mr. McCollam: This plaster of paris bust of Robert E. Lee is very lifelike with natural-looking flesh tones. On the back, it is marked, "E .V. Valentine, 1866."

Can you tell me anything about the sculptor and the value of this piece? — R.K.M., Memphis, Tenn.

Dear R.K.M.: Edward V. Valentine was a well-known 19th century sculptor and is known to have used Lee as a subject.

This is probably a copy of one of his original works. However, it would be considered a collectible and its value would be in the $200 to $300 range.

BOOK REVIEW: "Pictorial Price Guide to American Antiques," by Dorothy Hammond, $11.50 plus $1.50 postage, Elsevier-Dutton Publishing Co. Inc., 2 Park Ave., New York, N.Y. 10016, or at your local bookstore.

This book covers over 300 categories of collectibles, mainly of 19th and early 20th century vintage. Over 5,000 items are described and priced with more illustrations than any other price guide.

It is interesting to note that Mission furniture made by Gustav Stickley and the traditional pieces made by Kittinger, all products of the 20th century, have soared in price. This would tend to indicate that functional and traditional furnishings do not have to be authentic antiques to be collectible.

Send your questions about antiques with picture(s), a detailed description, stamped, self-addressed envelope, and $1 per item to James G. McCollam, P.O. Box 687, Dunedin, FL. 33528. All questions will be answered, but published pictures cannot be returned.

Frank Terpil, left, and Gary Korkola, former CIA agents convicted of conspiring to sell arms to agents posing as South American revolutionaries, appear on a taped segment of CBS-TV's "60 Minutes," photographedoff a television screen. CBS News reorted Tuesday that the two were abducted in Beirut last weekend.

CIA stops publishing unclassified analyses

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA will no longer publish unclassified analyses for the public, including its widely read and controversial studies of international terrorism and estimates of future Soviet oil production, officials say.

The decision to stop publication was made to give agency analysts more time to produce intelligence reports for government officials and Congress and to help lower the agency's public profile, spokesman Dale Peterson said Tuesday.

Peterson said the agency will continue to publish statistical data on foreign governments and economic indicators because it is less time-consuming to produce unclassified versions of them.

The decision, made about three months ago but not publicly announced, stemmed from a review ordered last spring by CIA Director William J. Casey.

The public analytical reports began appearing in the late 1960s and grew in number under Casey's predecessor, Stansfield Turner. Peterson said they all were derived from classified reports for government officials.

"It took manpower to start with a classified report and try to produce something meaningful in an unclassified fashion," Peterson said. "In this administration, there was a conscious decision that our primary responsibility is to provide U.S. government policymakers with the best intelligence product we are capable of producing. When we looked at ways to do that, we saw that a lot of analysts' time was spent preparing these unclassified analytical pieces."

He said a secondary reason for the decision was Casey's view that "an intelligence agency should maintain a low profile."

The last terrorism report was produced earlier this year and contained a new definition of terrorism which increased the reported number of incidents.

The book-length report was virtually the only single source of data on trends in attacks on property versus those on individuals, on government officials versus those on businessmen and on the geographic incidence of attacks.

In 1977, the CIA predicted the Soviet Union would begin importing oil by 1985. After that view spawned sharp public debate, the agency revised that estimate earlier this year and forecast the Soviets would not be competing for Middle Eastern and other foreign oil during the 1980s.

The report had major implications for U.S. foreign policy. After the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in 1979, administration officials cited the projected Soviet need for oil as an ulterior motive for moving Red Army troops closer to the oil-rich Persian Gulf.

Among the discontinued publications are the annual U.S.-Soviet Military Dollar-Cost Comparisons and the annual Communist Aid Activities in Non-Communist Less Developed Countries, Peterson said. Other analysis that will not be repeated include ones on the competitiveness of U.S. experts, on a European space vehicle, on difficult prospects for the steel industry in developed countries and on unemployment prospects in the Western world.

The agency will continue its annual "World Factbook," which gives basic economic, political and geographic information on each nation, its annual 220-page "Handbook of Economic Statistics" giving worldwide trade, energy, employment and production figures and a series of wall charts and directories of foreign government officials

Peterson said the agency had received "isolated, not extensive" complaints from scholars, businessmen and reporters over discontinuing specific analyses.

The publication review was disclosed last March at the same time the agency sharply curtailed background briefings for journalists on foreign economic, political, scientific and military developments.

Ex-CIA agents abducted in Beirut

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three Syrians, one described as "a free-lance intelligence agent," have abducted two fugitive ex-CIA agents from a restaurant in Lebanon, according to CBS News.

The network, saying it was told of the incident by informed sources, reported Tuesday night that former CIA men Frank Terpil and Gary Korkola were last seen by Terpil's wife, Ruth, at a Beirut restaurant they planned to open.

"Three men came into the restaurant, and they wanted to talk to him," Mrs. Terpil said in an interview accompanying the report. "It was the last time I saw him," she said, adding that Terpil and Korkola left with the trio.

The network said its sources, which were not identified, said abductors were "three Syrians, one of whom is identified as a free-lance intelligence agent."

Terpil and Korkola were convicted in absentia by a New York state court last June of conspiring to sell machine guns and ammunition to undercover agents posing as South American revolutionaries.

Terpil is accused by U.S. authorities of conspiring with another fugitive former agent, Edwin Wilson, to sell arms to Libya and contracting to supply U.S. soldiers to train terrorists for Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy.

Korkola, owner of a New Jersey electronics firm, and Terpil appeared on CBS' "60 Minutes" Sunday night in an interview the network said was taped last week.

During the interview, Korkola was asked why U.S. authorities wanted Terpil.

"There's two sides to it," Korkola replied. "One, they want Frank back, and I think equally hard there's another group that doesn't want him back. They want him out of the way."

Afghan prime minister visits Moscow

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Afghan Prime Minister Sultan Ali Kishtmand has joined several top-level members of his country's armed forces in Moscow instead of returning home from a trip to Bulgaria, a Western diplomatic source said.

The source, who has been accurate in the past but who asked not to be identified, said Tuesday that Kishtmand's unannounced visit to the Soviet Union has spurred speculation that Afghan Defense Minister Mohammed Rafi may be eased out of office.

Soviet officials claimed that the 47-year-old Kishtmand was undergoing treatment for a stomach ulcer, the source said. The prime minister left Kabul, Afghanistan, for Sophia, Bulgaria, on Oct. 28.

Rafi and other top Afghan officials, including Air Force Chief Nazar Mohammad, have been in Moscow since September reportedly attending a six-month training course for senior staff, the source said.

However, the source said, their real purpose was to be briefed by Soviet officials on efforts to end the insurrection by Moslem rebels against the Soviet-backed government.

An estimated 85,000 Soviet troops intervened in the southcentral Asian nation in December 1979 to aid President Babrak Karmal's Marxist regime.

Red Cross urges return of Arab lands

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — An International Red Cross conference has adopted resolutions urging Israel to give back Arab lands and condemning Afghanistan's refusal to allow the Red Cross to visit prisoners.

In another resolution, passed today, the Red Cross asked all nations to take "any appropriate action" to end the practice of making political opponents "disappear."

The resolution said several countries have done away with opposition by quietly eliminating them, but not necessarily murdering them. The Norwegian delegation circulated a study quoting the human rights group Amnesty International as saying up to 13,000 people "disappeared" in 1980.

The resolution on the occupied Arab territories, introduced by the Jordanian Red Crescent society, said the conference was "deeply concerned" by Israel's alleged refusal to apply the terms of the Geneva Convention to those territories. The agreement describes treatment of prisoners and civilians in wartime.

The resolution described Jewish settlements in Arab lands occupied after the 1967 Mideast war as "incompatible" with the Geneva Convention and urged Israel, referred to only as "the occupying power," to speed up the return of displaced Palestinians to their homes.

The resolution passed Tuesday by a vote of 89-3, with 45 abstentions. The United States, Canada and Israel voted against it.

The resolution on Afghanistan, introduced Tuesday by the Swedish and Dutch Red Cross chapters, also cited the Western Sahara and Ethiopia's Ogaden region as areas where representatives of the Geneva-based International Committee of the Red Cross have been barred from visiting prisoners.

The conference delegates represent 72 governments and 121 Red Cross and Red Crescent societies.

Teen charged in nun's death

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Authorities say a teen-ager charged with murdering a 76-year-old nun was investigated in the case after police reviewed reports of an argument he had with a priest at a parochial school.

Johnny Frank Garrett, 17, is being held without bond after he was formally charged with capital murder Tuesday in the death of Sister Tadea Benz. The Catholic nun was found raped, stabbed, beaten and strangled in her room at the St. Francis Convent, three blocks from Garrett's home.

Potter County Sheriff T.L. Baker said police had been investigating Garrett as early as two or three days after Sister Tedea's body was found Oct. 31, but at that point they had not linked him with the slaying.

Baker said they first connected him with the case after officials reviewed police reports about Garrett having argued with a priest at Alamo Catholic High School. Police Sgt. Walt Yerger and sheriff's Lt. Jimmy Boydston then compared Garrett's fingerprints with those taken from the convent, Baker said.

GARRETT WAS arrested at his home about 5:30 p.m. Monday and authorities announced the arrest about three hours later.

On Tuesday, he appeared before Justice of the Peace L.B. Bartlett and was charged. Although Garrett was ordered held without bond on the murder charge, Bartlett also set $5,000 bond on an apparently unrelated charge of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle.

Garrett's mother, Charlotte Cameron, was visibly shaken during her son's court appearance.

She covered her ears and shook her head when Bartlett read the complaint's charges that her son choked and strangled Sister Tadea in the nun's second-floor room at the convent.

Potter County District Attorney Danny Hill said he will seek a grand jury indictment Thursday.

Meanwhile, the bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Amarillo said the sisters of St. Francis Convent had been "living in fear" since the Oct. 31 slaying, and he hoped that they would be able to rest easier now that a suspect had been arrested.

"They still would forgive any person who did this, but they wouldn't want anybody to go through that again," Bishop L.T. Matthiesen said. "I hope to make sure that this does not happen again."

Police had been concerned that their investigation would be hampered because other nuns, believing at first that Sister Tadea had died a natural death, had washed her face, wrapped her in blankets and sent her to a funeral home for embalming.

Williams' attorneys given files

ATLANTA (AP) — Attorneys for Wayne B. Williams, who is charged with killing two young black men, have been given copies of some of the material from investigative files compiled by a special police task force examining the two killings and 26 others.

Superior Court Judge Clarence Cooper turned over the material Tuesday to Williams' attorneys after he completed his review of 9,269 pages of information included in the files on the 26 slayings for which no charges have been filed.

The 23-year-old Williams has been charged with murder in the deaths of Jimmy Ray Payne, 21, and Nathaniel Cater, 27, the 26th and 28th victims in the two-year series of murders of young blacks in the Atlanta area. His trial is scheduled to begin Dec. 28.

Williams' attorneys asked Cooper to review the state's files on the 28 killings and provide the defense with any material that might help prove Williams' innocence. The judge spent more than two months completing the task.

Cooper said in a document filed in court Tuesday that copies of some of the information in the 26 files was turned over to the defense, as well as some material from files on Williams and the two victims he is accused of killing.

He did not describe the material he gave the defense team.

Official says Soviet-backed regimes using chemical warfare

By BARTON REPPERT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — New chemical evidence proves that Soviet-backed regimes in Indochina are using biological weapons for "campaigns of mounting extermination" against defenseless villages, a senior State Department official says.

"We now have the smoking gun," said Richard Burt, director of the department's Bureau of Politico-Military Affairs. "We have confirmed the use of toxin weapons in Laos as well as Kampuchea" in Cambodia.

Burt told a Senate panel Tuesday that the growing evidence on use of internationally banned chemical and biological weapons "has grave implications for present and future arms control arrangements."

Burt said U.S. officials are "certain" that chemical weapons, including nerve gas, also are being used in Soviet-occupied Afghanistan. But he said the United States does not yet have "physical evidence" to scientifically confirm such reports.

He added that despite loud Western criticism over past incidents, "chemical attacks have been reported in Laos and Kampuchea within the last month."

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. disclosed Sept. 13 that tests on a foliage sample brought from Cambodia had shown abnormally high levels of mycotoxins — poisonous substances produced by certain types of fungus not indigenous to the region.

Burt testified that during the past few weeks, tests have been completed on three more samples — one from the same Cambodian village as the original sample and two others consisting of yellow powder scraped off rocks in Laos.

"All three of these samples reveal very high quantities of trichothecene mycotoxins, quantities even higher than in the first sample," he told the Senate panel.

Burt said one of the Laos samples was shown to contain 150 parts per million of a particular kind of mycotoxin called T2. "This is almost 50 times higher than the level of T2 in the original sample of Kampuchea," he said.

The toxins, he said, are being used "against unsophisticated and defenseless people in campaigns of mounting extermination which are being conducted in Laos and Kampuchea."

Symptoms typical of exposure to such mycotoxins, he said, include violent itching, dizziness, distorted vision, vomiting blood, then death from shock and massive blood loss.

Burt contended that in addition to direct involvement with chemical weapons in Afghanistan, "the Soviets are advising and controlling chemical warfare activity in Southeast Asia." He also said the Soviet Union is known to have microbiological plants capable of producing mycotoxins for military use.

Penn disbands disruptive fraternity

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Citing "a continuing pattern of serious disciplinary problems," including racial harassment, the University of Pennsylvania has ordered its Kappa Sigma fraternity chapter disbanded.

In its decision to revoke recognition of the fraternity, one of the university's largest and best-known, the university alleged "personal threats and physical assaults, instances such as racial and anti-semitic harassment, unauthorized possession and misuse of BB and air gun firearms as well as other disruptive behavior."

The decision officially revokes recognition of the chapter "for a period of not less than three years" and means the 33 members who live in the ivy-covered brick house at the center of Penn's west Philadelphia campus must leave by Dec. 24, university officials said Tuesday.

The chapter, which also has 17 members who don't live in the house, is one of 186 chapters under the national Kappa Sigma organization, based in Charlottesville, Va.

"Withdrawal of recognition at this time is the direct result of a continuing pattern of the very behavior that resulted in the suspension of the fraternity in February 1980," Vice Provost Janis Somerville said in a statement.

"The Director of Fraternity Affairs then cited 'violence, blatant ignorance or disregard of civil and criminal codes as well as university standards,' and 'religious slurs, physical threats, sexual harassment, or racist behavior,' " the statement said.

Lynn Anderson seeks divorce from man she married in 1978

Anderson

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music singer Lynn Anderson, who laments that "Even Cowgirls Get the Blues," says she's filing for divorce from the man she married on Valentine's Day 1978.

One month after announcing that she and her husband had reconciled, Miss Anderson said she filed suit Monday seeking a divorce from Harold H. Stream III. The suit claims repeated physical abuse and prolonged desertion and asks for custody of the couple's two children, William, 2, and Melissa, 6 months, she said.

Stream, a Lake Charles, La., oilman, filed for a separation in September, claiming mental harassment and vexations. Stream also asked for custody of the children.

The divorce petition is scheduled to be heard in a Calcasieu Parish, La., court next month.

NEW YORK (AP) — Gov. Hugh Carey, defending a federally funded highway project against criticism from Sen. William Proxmire, says "I don't see how someone who had a hair transplant could be against a city having a facelift."

Announcing his monthly "Golden Fleece" award, Proxmire, D-Wis., said the final cost of the 4-mile-long Westway "will reach an incredible $1 billion per mile, making it inch for inch the most expensive highway ever built by mankind, any time, anywhere."

Proxmire, who underwent a hair transplant some time ago, gave his November award to the Federal Highway Administration, which he accused of having "the worst record of civilian cost overruns in the federal government."

Mayor Edward Koch also defended construction of the urban highway Tuesday, saying, "I don't think he (Proxmire) is familiar with all the facts."

Snyder

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tom Snyder has not officially decided to leave NBC's "Tomorrow" show or the network, according to his agent.

Snyder last week warned his staff in New York that he would quit if NBC went ahead with plans to schedule a new David Letterman show after "The Tonight Show" and move his show back from 12:30 a.m. EST starting time to 1:30 a.m. NBC announced the starting time change this week.

But Ed Hookstratten, a Beverly Hills attorney and Snyder's agent said "The only thing we have discussed is the 1:30 time."

"Tom has not quit NBC or the 'Tomorrow' show per se. They have offered him a starting time of 1:30 in the morning, which he has turned down. So it's still up for negotiation — or reassignment."

Hookstratten said in a telephone interview that he did not look for any further developments until NBC's executives return from a meeting in Hawaii. Snyder's contract with NBC runs until next September.

NBC announced Monday the Letterman show would start Feb. 1.

NEW YORK (AP) — A 23-year-old man was being held on charges of trespass, harassment and weapons possession after he asked to meet actress Andrea McArdle, the original star of the musical "Annie," police said.

Stanley Nalesnick of Wommack was arrested Monday night in the lobby of the St. Regis Hotel where Miss McArdle, 18, was performing, according to Deputy Police Inspector Peter Prezioso.

"There were no threats to her, just requests to meet her, things like that," Prezioso said. "Nobody has a strong feeling that he intended any serious physical harm against Miss McArdle or anyone in the hotel."

Nalesnick was charged with trespass and weapons possession after police were called to the hotel to eject him from the lobby. Police found a .22-caliber rifle in his car. Prezioso said letters were also taken from the vehicle, but would not describe them.

The harassment charge was filed after "it developed that he had made previous attempts to contact Miss McArdle" by letter, Prezioso said.

Brooke's mom can't shield her now

Brooke Shields

NEW YORK (AP) — A judge who decided to permit continued publication of nude photos of Brooke Shields made a case against the teen-age actress' mother, saying she is trying to "have it both ways" by exploiting her daughter and protecting her at the same time.

Miss Shields went to court to stop a photographer from marketing nude photos taken of her when she was 10 years old under an agreement with her mother. Judge Edward Greenfield threw out the suit Tuesday and said Teri Shields "must be responsible not only for what she does for her child, but to her child."

Greenfield said photographer Garry Gross could market the photos as long as he does not make them available to pornographic publications. Gross said he was pleased with the decision.

Miss Shields, 16, claimed the photos, one of which shows her in heavy makeup standing naked in a bathtub, embarrass her now that she is older and well-known through her movies and TV commercials for blue jeans.

The photographs were made for a Playboy Press publication called "Sugar and Spice." Miss Shields was paid $450 and Gross got $1,000 from Playboy Press.

Greenfield, of the state Supreme Court, New York's second-highest court, said the photographs might cause Miss Shields "personal embarrassment" but not "irreparable harm."

"This is especially so in view of the nature of the films in which she has appeared, which are suggestive if not explicit in what they reveal," Greenfield wrote.

"Pretty Baby" and a teen-ager who discovers sex on a desert island in "Blue Lagoon." Her latest film is "Endless Love," which has to do with a young man's obsession with a character played by Miss Shields.

The judge said Mrs. Shields, 47, "is living through her child" and "decided what jobs Brooke would take, and what roles she would appear in." He said she tries to "to engender an image" of the young actress "which is sexually provocative and exciting, while attempting to preserve her innocence."

Greenfield said Mrs. Shields is trying to be "maternally protective but exploitative at the same time...she cannot have it both ways."

The judge stayed his decision for 14 days to give Miss Shields time to appeal.

Mrs. Shields signed a release which Gross contended gave him unlimited rights to commercial use of his pictures. The suit, which originally sought $1 million in punitive damages as well as a ban on further publication, was filed to prevent Gross' plan to market blown-up posters of the photos.

Greenfield said the pictures were "not pornographic shots or 'nudie pix,'" and said "they have no erotic appeal except to possibly perverse minds."

In his lengthy statement, he said: "We are presented with an image of a sweet, unspoiled, normal adolescent in her private life, while in public her appearances in photographs and motion pictures is based on tantalizing allure and veiled tinge of eroticism."

Miss Shields and her mother sat solemnly as the judge continued:

"Mrs. Shields is obviously a concerned mother living for her child, but she is also living through her child. In pushing forward Brooke's career she has been eager, aggressive and guilty of mistakes in judgment — one of which has resulted in this lawsuit."

CBS executive doesn't look the part

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Van Gordon Sauter, the new president of CBS News, is not a button-down, pinstripe executive. He has a full, flowing beard, is partial to leisure attire — without socks — and begins every day with two cans of diet soda.

He might be the good news CBS needs.

The "CBS Evening News" has been losing viewers since Dan Rather replaced Walter Cronkite on March 9. Some CBS insiders felt this slippage could have been minimized if the broadcast had been modernized and Rather had been allowed to inject his personality and style into it.

"It's good journalism, but not good television," said one high network executive who declined to be identified.

Using viewer growth as a yardstick, ABC's "World News Tonight," first in the A.C. Nielsen ratings the last two weeks, seems to be the television of the 1980s. Under ABC News President Roone Arledge, "World News Tonight" has more often used the new technology of film and graphics to tell its stories.

Arledge came from ABC Sports in 1977, and the 46-year-old Sauter, president of CBS Sports, traveled a similar path when he was appointed as Bill Leonard's successor Tuesday. Sauter will take over as deputy president Nov. 23 until the 65-year-old Leonard retires next May.

When Sauter came to sports 17 months ago, he said: "I didn't know a great deal about sports but I did know a great deal about television."

Sauter changed the look and style of a sports department that had been dull on the screen and slow to pursue news off it. Although he was speaking about sports at the time, his comments would seem to have applicability now:

"For creative TV, an event has personalities, ambience, history and tradition — all of which can develop and enhance the visual presentation of the spectacle and make it more exciting and rewarding to the viewer."

CBS' hierarchy apparently felt it was time to break the CBS News mold and let Sauter put his theories to work. Sauter becomes the fifth man to head CBS News and only the second to come from outside the news division. He was chosen over CBS News vice presidents Ed Fouhy and Roger Colloff.

CBS also went outside the news division in naming Edward Joyce as executive vice president to Sauter. Joyce currently heads CBS' New York station, WCBS. Neal Pilson, a senior vice president for planning and development in the Broadcast Group, will become president of CBS Sports.

Although Sauter is an easy-going administrator, he is not afraid to ruffle egos.

'Judge Sluggo' divides Mr. Bill

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Mr. Bill has suffered another of his many personal catastrophes — this time at the hands of "Judge Sluggo," who chopped him into three pieces as mock cries of "Oooh noooo!" filled the courtroom.

"Judge Sluggo" — U.S. District Court Judge Adrian Duplantier — cut up a Mr. Bill look-alike Tuesday to symbolize a three-way settlement over who owns rights to the comic clay character, which appears on television's "Saturday Night Live."

Walter Williams, Vance DeGeneres and David Derickson each got a piece of a sliced-up Mr. Bill doll from the smiling judge, who presided at the trial with a handwritten sign reading "Judge Sluggo" casually taped to his mahogany bench.

Duplantier presided over two days of a non-jury trial to decide who deserves the profits from Mr. Bill — the figure comically victimized along with his dog Spot by Mr. Hands and Mr. Sluggo in film shorts featured on the TV comedy show.

The case ended when lawyers for all three men announced that they had reached a settlement.

Terms of the agreement gave Williams total control of the characters, but ordered DeGeneres' name be included on the copyright.

The judgment also declared that Williams was responsible for the "basic idea and concept" of the cast of characters, and DeGeneres "participated in bringing that idea into fruition."

The agreement said DeGeneres will get 25 percent of all net proceeds of articles reproduced from the four characters, such as key chains, watches, T-shirts, cups and mugs.

The judgment requires DeGeneres to dismiss any claims to trademarks and awarded control of copyrights, trademarks and registration to Williams.

Derickson, was awarded 5 percent of the take from a Mr. Bill book and record now on sale, as well as percentages derived from 11 Mr. Bill cartoons.

The judge had watched several videotapes of Mr. Bill being torn up, dropped, mashed and drowned while crying helplessly "Oooh nooo!"

The film did not evoke outright laughter from the judge, but court clerks and spectators often giggled.

Williams, of New York, had testified he alone created Mr. Bill while he was a budding filmmaker and comic writer in New Orleans.

But DeGeneres claimed he and Williams dreamed it up together and split the costs — including the film and clay — while making the first Mr. Bill film in the New Orleans apartment they shared in 1974. Derickson was a former friend of both Williams and DeGeneres, and said he also helped create Mr. Bill.

The first Mr. Bill film aired on the NBC-TV show in 1976.

Playboy Enterprises planning new pay television venture

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Playboy Enterprises Inc. plans to launch a new television venture which it hopes will offset losses from the end of its London gambling operations, company founder Hugh M. Hefner told shareholders at the annual meeting.

"We intend to, quite literally, turn the magazine into a pay television phenomenon," Hefner told about 200 stockholders Tuesday at the Playboy Club. He did not elaborate on the project except to say it would begin in January and involve what he called a "Playboy channel."

Hefner conceded that 1982 profits will be below last year's levels, but said a renewed emphasis on publishing, licensing and what he termed "other appropriate moves" would produce "significant" earnings this year.

Playboy President Derek J. Daniels released earnings figures for Playboy's first fiscal 1982 quarter which ended Sept. 30. Net income was $5.5 million or 56 cents a share on revenues of $92.8 million, he said, down from $6.8 million or 69 cents a share on revenues of $97.5 million in the comparable 1981 quarter.

Lower earnings from the company's British gambling operations accounted for the decline in profits, Daniels said.

Playboy, which lost two of its London casino licenses recently after charges of improprieties, last week announced an agreement in principle to sell its British gambling operations for $31.4 million to Trident Television Ltd. of Great Britain.

The London gaming operations have provided a substantial share of Playboy's overall earnings in recent years and both Hefner and Daniels discussed the proposed sale at length, contending the company had decided to dispose of the British casinos and betting shops rather than appeal the license revocations. London police have charged that two of Playboy's casinos illegally extended credit to gamblers there.

ABC clings to first place spot in ratings with nine top shows

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC, thrust to the top during the World Series, held onto first place in the networks' weekly prime-time ratings competition despite the continuing success of last season's top-rated show, CBS' "Dallas," figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. show.

CBS won the first two weeks of the 1981-82 season, which was delayed by labor problems in Hollywood, but ABC, broadcasting baseball's fall championship series, claimed the distinction the last two weeks.

With the series over, ABC retained the standing, thanks largely to the first TV showing of the movie "Grease," a key "Monday Night Football" game and nine of the 20 highest-rated shows in the week ending Nov. 8.

ABC's rating for the week was 19.2 to 18.4 for CBS and 16.1 for NBC. The networks say that means in an average prime-time minute during the period, 19.2 percent of the country's television-equipped homes were watching ABC.

In addition, ABC's "World News Tonight" finished No. 1 for the second straight week, with CBS' "Evening News" second and "Nightly News" on NBC third.

The rating for "Dallas" — No. 1 three of the five weeks of the new season — was 27.4. Nielsen says that means of the nation's homes with TV, 27.4 percent saw at least part of the program.

NBC, though third for the fifth consecutive week, found some consolation in the week's highest-rated new series, "Love, Sidney," tied for 14th place, and "Father Murphy" 30th. "Hill Street Blues," acclaimed by the critics last season but largely ignored by viewers, registered its highest rating ever for the second consecutive week, and finished 28th.

But NBC had five of the week's six lowest-rated shows, with "NBC Magazine" 64th, "Here's Boomer" 65th, a movie, "The Legacy of Maggie Walsh" 67th, "Lewis and Clark" 68th and "Fitz and Bones" 69th. "Maggie," on ABC, was No. 66.

Federal employees want to select insurance

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The leader of the nation's largest federal employee union is vowing that "we won't rest" until government workers win freedom of choice in the selection of health care coverage.

Kenneth Blaylock, president of the American Federation of Government Employees, says he's optimistic that his union will reverse the Reagan administration's stand against giving employees the option of choosing an alternative to Blue Cross and Blue Shield coverage.

"We have too high a regard for government workers to let this vicious attitude win out," Blaylock said Tuesday.

Blaylock spoke shortly after U.S. District Judge Aubrey Robinson ordered the Office of Personnel Management to demonstrate in court that the administration will conduct an "open period" permitting federal workers to weigh costs and benefits in the possible selection of alternative health care coverage.

"We shall continue the fight," Blaylock told a news conference at the headquarters of AFGE, which is the bargaining unit for some 750,000 federal employees.

"We won't rest until government workers have the measure of protection they are entitled to under the law," he said. And Blaylock charged that OPM Director Donald Devine is trying to "stack the deck to protect the larger health plan carriers, such as Blue Cross and Blue Shield."

"This is in keeping with the Reagan administration's 'policy' to comfort big business while backhanding everyone else," he said.

Blaylock did not elaborate.

The brouhaha centers on a decision by Devine to postpone indefinitely the so-called "open season" — a normal, once-a-year period in which federal employees may change their health care coverage.

Some 9 million U.S. government workers, their dependents and retirees are covered by health insurance plans supplied by more than 126 separate companies. But Blue Cross and Blue Shield has roughly half the business.

AFGE, however, has been promoting its own in-house health care plan, which is supplied by Mutual of Omaha.

Devine has said he suspended the window period because "the fair and proper conduct of open season requires the prior publication and thorough distribution" of the brochures, which he said was impossible at this late date. The open season was to have begun this week.

The OPM had no immediate comment on Blaylock's statements.

Blaylock credited Tuesday's U.S. District Court ruling with "trying to bring some order into the chaos that has characterized the federal health benefits program ever since the Reagan administration took responsibility for it."

Robinson said the OPM must show by Monday that it intends to conduct the open season and that it will circulate brochures on the various insurance plans so workers can compare benefits and costs.

Earlier this fall, federal employee unions won a court order overturning Devine's decision to remove abortion insurance protection from four health care plans.

Malta challenges Libya

By O.G. DOELLING
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Malta has twice the area and half the population of the capital of the United States, but both countries have been having territorial trouble with Col. Moammar Khadafy's Libya.

The U.S. 6th Fleet in August challenged the fiery Libyan leader's claim to the international waters of the Gulf of Sidra, and U.S. planes shot down two Libyan jets that fired on them.

Malta, a five-island Mediterranean republic, did not come off as well when it attempted to establish a claim to a potentially lucrative slice of the African continental shelf between it and Libya, 200 miles to the south.

Libya sent gunboats to shut down an exploratory oil rig drilling on the disputed Medina Bank. Fourteen months later, Malta's U.N. delegate Victor J. Gauci complained last week in a letter to the Security Council that Libya was "attempting to attain a stranglehold" over his country.

His language was in marked contrast to the close, friendly relations the two neighbors used to have.

Before the dispute came to a head, Libya sold oil to Malta at special prices and invested up to $120 million in the Maltese economy. Khadafy also gave strong political backing to Prime Minister Dom Mintoff when he got rid of the British naval base on Malta in 1979, leaving Mintoff's government with little military clout.

Trouble had been brewing for years over the mineral rights along the continental shelf between Malta and Libya.

They agreed in 1976 to let the World Court decide their rival claims, but Libya delayed ratifying the agreement. Last year oil-poor Malta authorized Texaco, the American oil company, to begin exploratory drilling on its side of what it contended was the dividing line along the disputed shelf.

On Aug. 20, 1980, Libya sent a patrol boat and a submarine to the site and ordered the Italian master of the oil rig to stop drilling or else.

Malta ran to the Security Council, charging Libya acted illegally and was threatening "regional and international peace." Libya said it was just a spat between two old friends and could be settled amicably without U.N. interference.

Since then, Libya has ratified the 1976 accord, but the dispute still has not reached the World Court because of a delay in the exchange of ratification documents.

Meadows says his rights violated

The case of Johnny J.E. Meadows, the 45-year-old Odessan who is serving a life sentence for the strangulation of Gloria Sue Nix Green in Odessa on June 17, 1971, again is cropping up on federal court in the form of alleged civil-rights violation.

Meadows, who claims that he was coerced into pleading guilty to murdering Ms. Green, a secretary, has filed a $300,000 lawsuit to compensate him for his alleged "brutalized" treatment while he was held in Fort Worth's Tarrant County Jail in 1972 after his case was transferred here from Odessa under a change of venue.

Meadows contends that he was "placed in the confines of sufferable isolation and segregated imprisonment" and that he was harassed by Tarrant County Sheriff Lon Evans, Ector County Sheriff A.M. "Slim" Gabrel and by District Attorney John Green's investigator, Tom Barker.

Meadows says he was in leg-irons and handcuffs and was denied writing materials and that his law books were "mutilated and destroyed."

Meadows' civil-rights case, first filed in 1974, was shifted from U.S. District Judge Eldon Mahon in Fort Worth to U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton in Midland. Bunton has elected to forward the case to U.S. District Judge H.F. Garcia in San Antonio.

Meadows pleaded guilty in 1972 to murder with malice aforethought in Ms. Green's death. In his confession, Meadows said that he strangled Ms. Green after he walked into her office at the O&L Well Service Co. in Odessa while on a 96-day search for his wife, and that he mistook the woman for his spouse.

Drilling contractor sues rig mast builder

Midland oilwell drilling contractor B.M. Hanson has filed a $820,000 suit in federal court in Midland against MISCO Supply Co., a Wichita, Kan., rig mast builder, after the drilling rig mast Hanson's BMH Drilling brought from MISCO collapsed on the job site.

BMH is alleging that the mast for its Rickson rig was "not properly designed by defendant's engineers," that the mast was built with inferior quality materials, and that workmanship, particularly the welding, was defective.

In its petition, BMH says that the mast collapsed on Sept. 12 — 20 days after it was put in the field for the first time — on the drilling site in Gaines County.

Plaintiff BMH alleges that MISCO represented that the mast could handle at least 250,000 pounds of pulling pressure but that it failed while pulling 100,000 pounds.

After the mast failure, BMH says that it was forced to abandon the location and salvage machinery and re-drill and replace the abandoned well.

BMH's sought-after compensation includes double and treble damages allowed under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practice Act.

BMH contends its losses due to the allegedly faulty mast included $100,000 in expenses attributable to the failure of the mast; $150,000 for fair-market value of the equipment; $50,000 in loss work effort, and $120,000 to reconstruct the rig and to replace the mast.

BMH's attorney in the suit is James Boldrick of Midland. MISCO has not yet filed a response to BMH's contentions.

Suit filed

The federal government has filed a civil suit against Odessan Catarino R. Martinez to collect refund on $946.88 in educational assistance allowance.

The Veterans Administration is alleging that it overpaid Martinez the money in late 1977 and early 1978 and that Martinez ignored repeated requests to refund the overpayment.

The suit is on file in Midland-Odessa Division of the federal court system's Western District of Texas.

Boardings set record

Boardings at Midland Regional Airport set a record for October with the figure surpassing 50,000, according to Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation.

Last month, 52,204 persons boarded planes at the airport, compared with 44,748 a year ago.

Banks said this brings the total for the year to date up to 466,600, which is about 71,000 more than the 394,905 persons who had boarded planes at the Midland airport

Administration trying to balance mainland China, Taiwan

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the arms sale business, it's hard to balance the interests of one customer against another — particularly when new priorities offend old friends.

That's one reason the sale of U.S. radar planes and other weapons to Saudi Arabia — over Israeli opposition — was such a contentious issue.

Now President Reagan may face the same kind of controversy in reverse, this time over whether to sell warplanes to Taiwan.

The deal would be with an old ally, the Nationalists, and the offended party would be the Peking government.

But Taiwan, which hoped for better days in a Reagan presidency, may be let down, despite some very comforting words during last year's campaign.

If Reagan follows the State Department's private advice, he will stall — and disappoint Taiwan, its supporters and those who question whether the United States is prepared to protect small countries.

If Reagan listens to his White House and Pentagon advisers and ships F-16s or less-advanced F-5Gs to Taiwan, he risks friendship in Peking.

Officially, the administration is not yet tipping its hand. The government line is that Taiwan's request "is being looked at intensively" but that there is no deadline for a decision.

Scholar A. Doak Barnett says that if Reagan authorizes jet sales to Taiwan, there is "a high probability" Peking will kick out the U.S. ambassador. Barnett says China might even try to patch up its differences with the Soviets.

That would be a major blow to Reagan's strategy of establishing a network of anti-Soviet countries.

But scholar Edward N. Luttwak calls a decision to sell weapons to Taiwan greatly overdue.

"The U.S. can renounce neither its friendship with Peking nor its obligation to Taiwan," Luttwak wrote in the Wall Street Journal. "If Washington is resolute in fulfilling its commitment to Taiwan, the leaders of the People's Republic will no doubt express their displeasure, but they will also recognize that the very act is proof of American reliability."

The fact that Reagan is getting conflicting advice from the State Department, on the one hand, and the White House and Pentagon, on the other, underscores the divisions within the administration on foreign policy. It also reflects the sensitivity of arming Taiwan.

The 17 million people on the island are trying to maintain their independence. They want as much U.S. support as they can muster.

Even though the communist government in Peking is making no overt move to take over Taiwan — in fact, tensions have been reduced — there is no doubt it considers the island an integral part of China.

A Reagan decision to send the warplanes to the Nationalists would be subject to congressional veto. This could mean a replay of the tug-of-war over arming Saudi Arabia.

The Taiwan arms issue was not mentioned in the communique that set up full relations between the United States and China at the start of 1979. In fact, some Chinese leaders apparently thought U.S. arms shipments would be reduced, or at least that Taiwan would not be provided with jets that could outmaneuver their own.

But former President Carter, on a trip to China last year, said the Chinese had been told that the United States would sell some defensive weapons to Taiwan.

Chinese leaders renew attacks on political corruption

PEKING (AP) — The Chinese leadership has renewed its campaign to reform the old-boy system of Communist cadres and clean up alleged corruption in the party.

The leadership is exposing corrupt officials — called "worms in the socialist wordwork" — all the way from the highest party echelons to the lowest commune levels.

The Communist Party is naming names in the official press, denouncing bribe takers, demoting culprits and forcing corrupt officials to repay their ill-gotten gains.

It has called for an end to free-loading and ordered officials not to accept gifts from foreigners to close business deals and not to evade their taxes.

IN A RECENT speech, the new Communist Party chairman, Yu Yaobang, said: "Certain cadres flagrantly ignore party discipline and the laws of the country, using the power entrusted to them to feather their own nests, sometimes going so far as to ask for gifts or accept bribes from foreigners."

The chairman also complained that some cadres "stick to old rules, show no interest in necessary reforms. They are highly irresponsible bureaucrats, not carrying out the tasks given them by the party and the people."

Cadre is the name for leaders and officials in the party, government and all walks of life in China. Virtually all top cadres, however, belong to the 38-million-member Communist Party. Many, who have little education and no expertise, are political supervisors at universities and research institutions.

The cadre hierarchy is a highly stratified system of 24 ranks, each with its special privileges, such as better housing, cars, drivers, access to the best groceries, antiques and foreign luxuries, such as television sets.

AS A RULE, cadres are appointed for life and virtually are laws unto themselves.

The reform efforts were shelved earlier this year after cadres put up resistence at a time when the country's leadership was trying to win support for its economic reforms.

But the leaders consolidated their position last June at the party's Central Committee meeting and Hu Yaobang was named chairman.

The reform campaign was resumed during the summer.

The Chinese press now is filled with accounts of scandals and corruption involving party officials:

—At a steel mill near Peking, factory managers made thousands of dollars by illegally dismantling and selling the entire plant. The top managers were dismissed.

—In August, the Electric Power Ministry denounced "electric overlords" who cut off electricity or threaten to do so in order to extort money and gifts. It charged that the director of the Jiuquan power station in Gansu Province cut off the power to a theater because he could not get an opera ticket.

—The Jinan petrochemical works was taken to task on charges of falsifying costs and juggling figures in order to withhold profits worth $3 million. The money that should have been given to the state was spent on electric calculators for managers, more cars than were permitted, personal luxuries and banquets, the press accounts said.

—According to the newspaper China Youth, party member Che Weizhi and an inspection team were ordered to check 17 Peking restaurants. Instead he indulged in a series of free banquets, and paid only a token fee, the paper claimed. It added that his superiors at the party discipline bureau joined in the freeloading and did not censure him.

IN JULY, THE State Council issued a circular prohibiting bribery and all rewards, kickbacks, entertainment fees, commissions.

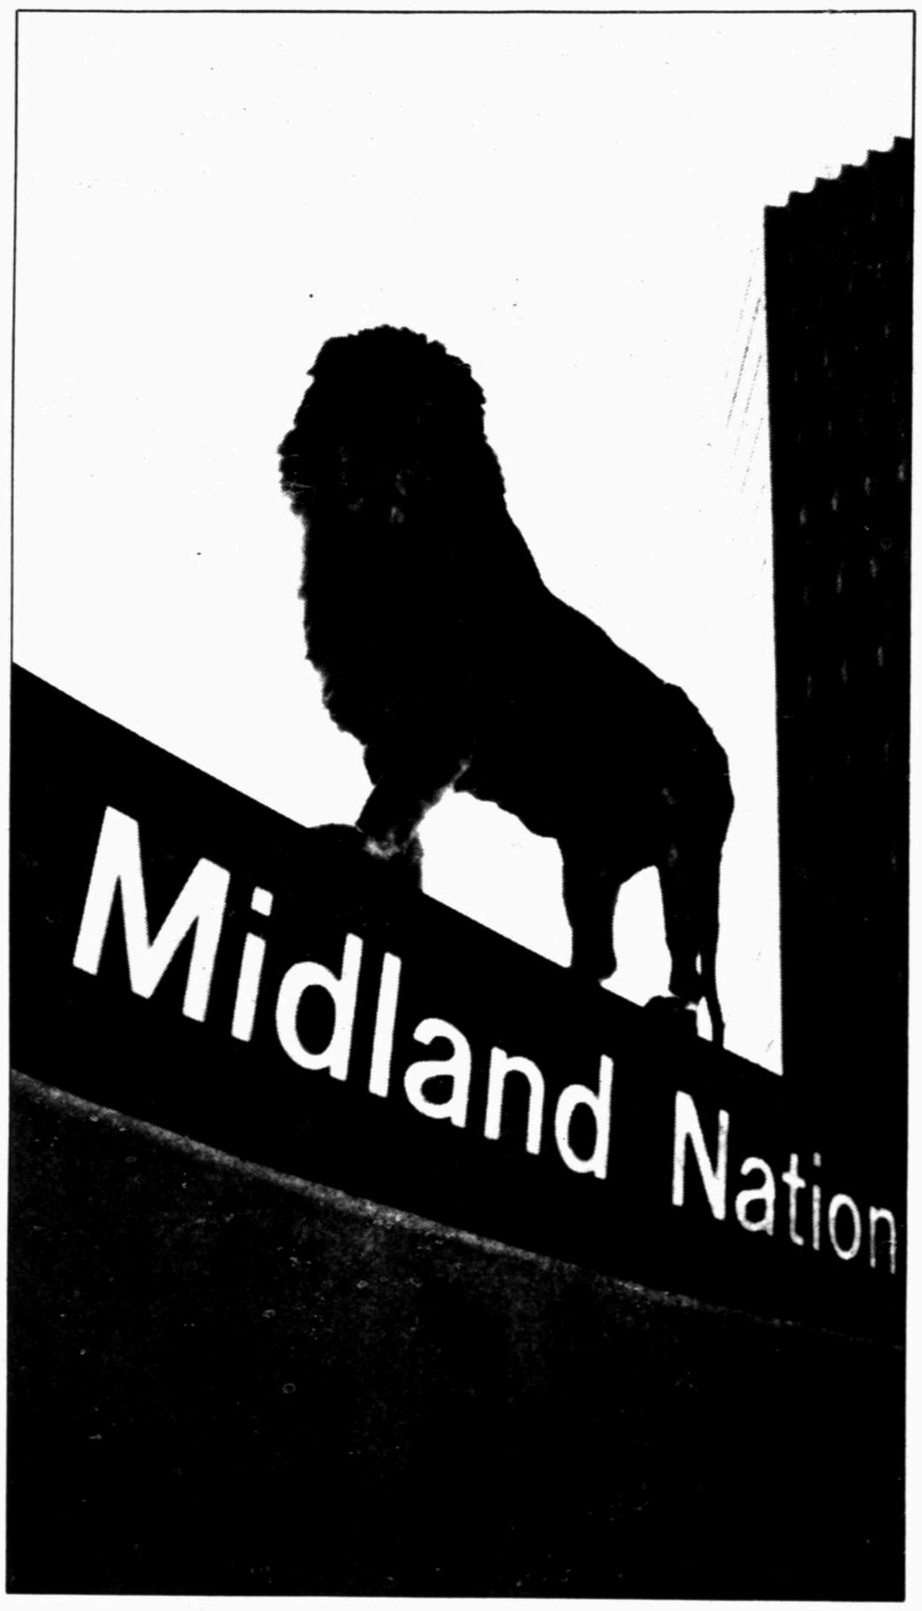
Taking a strong financial stand in Midland.



On July 3rd, 1903, Midland National opened its doors in the old Llano Hotel, on the northwest corner of Wall and Main.

We were just starting out, but we already had an unwavering commitment to sound, healthy growth. And we were eager to lead the way, searching for new territory to explore.

For thirty years, we kept pace with Midland's ranching, agricultural and mercantile interests; as they grew, so did we.

With the discovery of oil here, our pace quickened. We took strides to introduce new banking services. We were the first bank in the Permian Basin to add a petroleum engineer to our staff.

Today, our Oil and Gas Division is staffed entirely by petroleum bankers who are also petroleum engineers: bankers who personally analyze collateral, using our in-house computer and the latest petroleum evaluation techniques.

Our Commercial Loan Officers are highly trained professionals who can give quick answers on short-term working capital loans, lines of credit or term loans for a growing business.

Our Trust Department specializes in personal trusts and estate planning and also in setting up corporate profit sharing and pension plans.

Today, Midland has come of age, and so have we. As a member of the 21st largest banking organization in the United States, we have $11 billion in assets behind us. And ahead of us is a future dedicated to helping Midland reach her full potential.

Whatever your financial needs, bring them to Midland National. Contact us at 685-5000.

Time running out on Legend

By ALAN GREENBERG
(c) 1981, Los Angeles Times

GREEN BAY, Wis. — The sign over the door leading into the Green Bay Packers offices was Bart Starr's idea.

"As you enter," it reads, "the Green Bay Packers organization hopes this day will be stimulating, challenging and rewarding. May we grow together."

And, as befits this tightknit community of 90,000, the players and fans have grown together, but not as Starr intended. Together, they have grown tired, angry and frustrated by Starr's failure to build a winning team.

Entering this season, his seventh as Packers coach, Starr had the second-worst winning percentage (.352, based on a 31-57-2 record) of any National Football League coach since 1960 with six-years tenure.

Only Tom Landry's .321 percentage with the then new Dallas Cowboys was worse. And although Starr took over an established club while Landry had an expansion team, at least Landry's team began showing real progress toward the end of his sixth season, winning five of its last seven games.

And in Landry's seventh year the Cowboys finished 10-3-1 and left the NFL dregs forever. Starr's Packers, on the other hand, are 3-6 and seem to be slogging their way toward another finish in the nether reaches of the NFC Central, perenially, the NFL's sorriest division. Under Starr, the Pack is back. Way back.

STARR IS in the last year of a $225,000-a-year contract that has been twice extended, and this season he has spent more time answering questions about job security than Alexander Haig.

One story making the rounds was that Starr had been hired to work in the toy department of a local store. His job was to show up once a week and give away games.

Starr has had beer poured on his head. "Send Starr Far" stickers adorn local bumpers. After one game last year he was walking to his car with his wife, Cherry, when she broke ranks to tell off some tailgaters who were serenading them with "Bye-bye, Bart."

Local newspaper polls, which were heavily pro-Starr as late as last season, now support his firing.

Although Starr has denied it, longtime Starr-watchers say that the mounting losses and criticism have gotten to him.

After the Packers lost to the 49ers three weeks ago and dropped to 2-5, a reporter asked Starr if he believed his club still could salvage its season, which Starr himself had said would have to be a winning one if he were to be retained.

"FIRST OF all," said Starr, irritated, "we're not talking about the season. All we're talking about now is next week. If any of you start talking about the season, you're guilty of not covering us on a week-to-week basis."

Starr refused to be interviewed for this story.

Dodgers' Valenzuela captures Cy Young award

Ex-Texas Leaguer led four pitching categories

Fernando Valenzuela, who pitched for the San Antonio Dodgers only a year ago, joined former Midland Cub Bruce Sutter as recent vintage National League Cy Young Award winners.

By BARRY WILNER

NEW YORK (AP) — Fernando Valenzuela, the sensational Mexican left-hander who took baseball by storm in his rookie season, was named the National League's Cy Young Award winner today in a very close vote.

Valenzuela, who turned 21 last week, was 13-7 for the Los Angeles Dodgers this season, leading the league in four pitching categories and helping the Dodgers to their first world championship in 16 years. He became the first rookie ever to win Cy Young honors since the award was instituted in 1956.

A pair of three-time Cy Young winners, Tom Seaver of Cincinnati and Steve Carlton of Philadelphia, placed right behind Valenzuela in the voting by the Baseball Writers Association of America. Valenzuela received eight first-place votes, eight seconds and six thirds in the balloting for 70 points — based on five points for a first-place vote, three for second and one for third.

SEAVER, WHO was 7-1 in each half of the split season, got eight first-place votes, seven for second and six for third, giving him 67 points. The difference between Valenzuela and Seaver was one second-place vote.

Carlton, who won the award in 1980, received five votes for first place, six for second and seven for third for 50 points.

Nolan Ryan of Houston, who led the NL in earned run average with a 1.69 mark, was fourth (3-3-4 28). St. Louis reliever Bruce Sutter was the only other pitcher receiving a vote; one for third place, giving him one point.

VALENZUELA, a 13-game winner for San Antonio in the Texas League in 1980 who made 10 appearances with the Dodgers in 1980, is only the second pitcher to win the Cy Young honors in his first full season. Vida Blue of Oakland was the first to do so, in 1971.

The left-hander with the dancing screwball who inspired "Fernandomania" in Los Angeles, posted a 2.48 ERA, and led National league pitchers in four departments: complete games, 11; shutouts 8; innings pitched, 192, and strikeouts, 180.

In the postseason, Valenzuela won the pennant-clinching game over Montreal, then beat the Yankees in Game 3 of the World Series, giving the Dodgers their first victory over New York. Los Angeles then won the next three games to capture the Series.

Seaver's 14 victories led the league and he had a 2.55 ERA.

Carlton, 13-4, was second to Valenzuela in complete games with 10, innings pitched with 190 and strikeouts with 179. He had a 2.42 ERA.

Dutton prepared, but it didn't make it any easier

IRVING—"Back when I was a kid, I used to watch him pull that stuff on Jethroe Pugh and Merlin Olsen, so I knew it was coming," Dallas Cowboys tackle John Dutton said shaking his head, "but I was determined not to play his game. I think it made him mad that I didn't retaliate."

In case you missed it on TV Monday night, the mugging occured in the darkness and cloaked obscurity of pro football's back alley, the line of scrimmage where the games are decided, not back there in the spotlighted glamor world of quarterbacks, wide receivers and running backs.

DALLAS, performing in its third straight emotional binge, beat Buffalo, 27-14, Monday night on what amounted to three turnaround plays stretching over the final seconds of the first half and the early seconds of the third period. But in the subplot, Dutton was getting his introduction to the Fritzie Zivic and Tony Galento of pro football.

Galento, a long ago heavyweight, who trained in an East Orange, N.J., bar, never was confused with Jack Armstrong. He held and hit, butted, backhanded and elbowed his way to a title match with Joe Louis. His most effective weapons, roughly, were a left hook, an elbow on the way back, followed by a knee in the groin and a bald head delivered to the jaw.

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

Welterweight Zivic was more refined, but no less deadly, a thumb in the eye and the laces of the gloves across that cut eye. Crude, but effective.

DUTTON probably never heard of either, but in Dobler, he ran into their football equivalent Monday at Texas Stadium.

Quarterback Danny White said that in the first half, "I never had a team come after us like Buffalo did. We were fighting for our lives just to hold on to the ball." Although White was referring to the Bills' overall effort, Dutton probably would have muttered an "Amen" after a night waltzing with Dobler.

"He hit me the side of the helmet, leg-whipped me and hit me in the stomach. The game is tough enough without that. I want to play a long time, but I won't if I have to go through that every week," Dutton fumed.

"His excuse is that 'I'm a cripple'"

THE ABUSE began in the first period and continued without let up. "But I was determined not to retaliate. We have officials out there and I left it up to them."

Dutton suspects Dobler was upset because he wouldn't play his silly game, noting, "He gets his PR for being dirty and the publicity just encourages him to keep it up. Maybe if I got as much publicity as he does for being dirty, I would, too." Maybe, but he wouldn't be doing it for the Cowboys.

For a half it looked like the emotional binges against Miami and Philadelphia had left the Cowboys drained. Quarterback Joe Ferguson was picking their secondary apart and the Bills had a 14-7 lead and were on the verge of making it 21-7 just before half. Yet the Cowboys won going away.

FROM A defensive lineman's view, Dutton felt it was a case of the Cowboys getting their guard up.

"They are usually a first half team," Dutton said of the Bills. "But in the second half we (the defensive linemen) exerted more pressure and got our hands up in his face and Ferguson began throwing the ball away rather than get sacked."

The first series of the third quarter was the big one, that's when Dallas scored twice on its first three offensive plays of the half. First White hit Tony Dorsett on

Rogers equals raves

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Only God can make a running back like George Rogers, said Jim Taylor, the Green Bay Packers' great who pioneered the run-to-daylight style that Rogers now uses so effectively with the New Orleans Saints.

Rogers, the first player taken in the National Football League draft this year, is the second rookie ever to pass 1,000 yards in his first 10 games. His total of 1,040 for the season is second only to that of Tony Dorsett of Dallas, who has gained 1,089 yards.

He gets his yardage by cutting quickly to creases and gaps as they open in defensive fronts, rather than by running a predesignated path toward a set hole.

It's the same approach that Vince Lombardi installed for Taylor and Paul Hornung at Green Bay. He called it "Run to Daylight."

"It's not something you learn," Taylor said. "You're born with it. It's a knack, an instinct.

"Instinctively, you have to react and use your peripheral vision.

"You don't learn instinct."

Taylor said he had the ability as a star at Louisiana State University but wasn't allowed to use it. Backs ran where the holes were supposed to be in those days.

"I developed that at Green Bay," he said.

"Nobody else was doing that, much," he said.

Rogers has carried 217 times, averaging 4.9 yards per carry and nearly 22 carries a game.

Taylor averaged 4.4 yards per carry for his 10-year NFL career and got more than 217 carries in only five seasons, including playoff and championship years. He averaged 17 carries per game in his busiest season, 1962, when he gained 1,474 yards.

Taylor said the accomplishments which put him in the Professional Football Hall of Fame should bear a note that they were team accomplishments. He ran behind such linemen as Jim Ringo, Forrest Gregg, Henry Jordan, Jerry Kramer and Fuzzy Thurston, each of whom made All-Pro more than once.

Saints Coach Bum Phillips said the same is true of Rogers and his accomplishments.

"Very few runs are made just on the back's ability," Phillips said.

Rogers runs primarily from the I-formation, setting him deep behind the offensive line where he has more time to read the defensive flow and cut to gaps.

Taylor said it would never have entered Lombardi's mind to use the I-formation, even if it had been current during the late 1950s and 1960s when Hornung and Taylor were the running backs.

"We didn't have the speed to run out of the I-formation," he said. "We were power backs.

"You design your offense fo the people you have."

Phillips, who made Rogers the first pick in the NFL draft and built the Saints' offense around him, said Rogers has both speed and power.

"He has the speed to get there and the power to get it in when he does," Phillips said.

"His ability to pick the right spot and go to it without hesitation, just like that," is Rogers' most outstanding attribute as a running back, Phillips said.

Lombardi called it running to daylight.

Pistons fine Isiah Thomas

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Detroit Pistons rookie guard Isiah Thomas was reprimanded and fined an undisclosed amount when he arrived 20 minutes late for the National Basketball Association team's game with the Philadelphia 76ers.

After Pistons Coach Scotty Robertson issued the fine — which was automatic under NBA rules — Thomas explained that stadium parking lot attendants had refused him entry to the players' parking area because he didn't have a pass.

Cavanaugh faces music

By GARY MIHOCES

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Coach Ed Cavanaugh of Army, who's been around college football, said Tuesday the top-ranked Pitt team is something special.

"I can't ever remember being as impressed with a team overall as I am with this one," said Cavanaugh, whose 3-6 Cadets play here Saturday.

Cavanaugh, in his second season as head coach at West Point, has previous coaching experience at Kansas State, Arizona, Utah State, Idaho State, and Miami, Fla. He was with the Buffalo Bills of the National Football League from 1972-76.

BUT HE HAD lavish praise for the 8-0 Pitt team, coming off a 47-3 victory over Rutgers.

"It certainly deserves the No.1 ranking," Cavanaugh said in a telephone interview from West Point during Pitt's weekly press luncheon.

"Offensively, it's just a tremendous group. The offensive line is the best I think I've ever seen. And I think the quarterback (Dan Marino) is the best one in the country."

He was similarly effusive about the Pitt defense, ranked No.1 in the nation with an average of 215 yards allowed per game. Pitt is also No.1 against the run, allowing a average of 49.6 yards a game.

"What they've done speaks for itself. They've just been awesome," said Cavanaugh.

"It's just a great football team, and we wish we were in better shape than we are to come in and try to play them. But we'll be there."

LAST WEEK, the physically battered Cadets lost 28-13 to Holy Cross. Army's three wins this season have come against Brown, Harvard and Princeton.

But Coach Jackie Sherrill of Pitt preferred to talk about the play of the Cadets in their 24-10 loss to Missouri, even though that was the season-opener.

"In the Missouri game, which we watched today on film, they gave Missouri everything they wanted to handle," said Sherrill.

LAST YEAR, Pitt defeated Army 45-7 and the Panthers won 40-0 the year before that.

But Sherrill went back to the 1978 season in which Pitt needed a fumble return touchdown to turn the tide in a 35-17 victory over the Cadets.

"They will not quit," said Sherrill. "I remember three years ago here we had to take a fumble in the air for a touchdown to really turn the game around."

After Army, Pitt faces a road game against Temple — followed by the big Pitt-Penn State.

Jim McMahon

McMahon will leave 50 new marks

NCAA record book revised

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Brigham Young quarterback Jim McMahon, who appears on the cover of the 1981 NCAA football record book, has come closer than any player in history to rewriting the publication.

By season's end, the 6-foot senior — whose off-the-field spectacles give him more a bookish than an athletic demeanor — will have established about 50 NCAA passing and total offense standards.

But McMahon, for a variety of reasons, faces a stiff uphill battle in his quest for the one goal he has set for himself: the Heisman Trophy.

"I think I've got a chance, but I don't think it's a very good one," said McMahon, who placed fifth in Heisman voting a year ago. He said the two games he missed with a hyperextended knee and BYU's two losses after being ranked No. 8 would work against him.

MOREOVER, no player from the publicity-poor Intermountain West ever has won the trophy, and the last quarterback to do so was Auburn's Pat Sullivan a decade ago. Since then, the Heisman has become the sole province of fleet running backs, and with Marcus Allen of Southern California and Georgia's Herschel Walker having sparkling seasons, 1981 may be no different.

But if McMahon's name never appears on the trophy, there's a good chance his name will linger in the collegiate record books for quite some time. And his coach, LaVell Edwards, thinks McMahon will go on to carve a large niche in the National Football League.

"HE'S A franchise. I think he could take someone to the Super Bowl, he's that good," said Edwards. He is reluctant to make comparisons, but Edwards believes McMahon is a better all-around performer than his two BYU predecessors — Marc Wilson and Gifford Nielsen.

"When I say he's a franchise, I mean that any good football team — whatever else they have — must have a good quarterback if it's going to succeed, and Jim's the best there is," Edwards said.

McMahon's shredding of the record book began in 1980 when he became the first Division I player ever to pass for more than 4,000 yards in a season. And last Saturday against Colorado State he broke the NCAA career total offense mark of 8,444 yards set by Purdue's Mark Herrmann.

This Saturday against unbeaten and 19th-ranked Hawaii and the following week against Utah, McMahon will take aim at Herrmann's career passing mark of 9,188 yards. He needs 486 yards to match it.

BYU 8-2, must win both games to ensure at least a tie for the sixth straight Western Athletic Conference title the Cougars have won or shared.

McMahon, the nation's current total offense and passing efficiency leader, has broken 46 NCAA records, tied two and thrown for 80 touchdowns, all in just 2½ years as BYU's starting quarterback. He was the team's punter as a freshman and filled in for Wilson as a sophomore.

Gil Brandt, the Dallas Cowboys' director of player personnel, was profoundly unimpressed when he met McMahon in person. "He had a lot to overcome with me," Brandt laughed, because he looked like anything but an All-America quarterback.

But after seeing McMahon play, Brandt changed his mind.

"I feel that McMahon is a great deal like Fran Tarkenton. He has a great ability to evade the rush. He is an excellent passer in that he has a very strong arm and he has very, very good accuracy. He also is a very smart quarterback who is able to read defenses extremely well," Brandt said.

HOWEVER, he said, "the thing he probably has going for him more than anything — he is one of the great competitors of all time. He reminds you a great deal of Roger Staubach in that he's going to find a way to win the game for you."

Carroll Hardy, director of scouting for the Denver Broncos, believes McMahon's lack of height may be his only problem. Apart from that, he said, "he's got the touch, the mechanics, the ability to read defenses and he has poise."

As for McMahon and the Heisman, said Edwards, who isn't known for sweeping statements, "If they go by merit, I don't think there's any question."

Cornhusker wingback rescues choking Nebraska booster

An APSE Column Exchange
By VIRGIL PARKER
Lincoln Star

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Much has been written about senior wingback Anthony "Slick" Steels since he arrived at the University of Nebraska, but one of the greatest things Steels has done didn't get any publicity. He saved a life.

It involved Lincoln businessman Leo Hill, long an avid Big Red booster who has helped the Husker program in many ways.

For some time, Hill and his wife, Betty, have been "Lincoln parents" to some out-of-state Husker player. Currently, monster back Sammy Sims is their "son."

LAST WEDNESDAY, the Hills had Sammy and several other Nebraska athletes — Steels, Rodney Lewis, Ricky Simmons, Nate Mason and John Mason — over for a prime rib dinner.

"I swallowed a little piece of meat," Hill recalls, "but it didn't go down. And it wouldn't come up. I couldn't talk and I couldn't breath. I was desperate. They say that you have three minutes to live in such a situation. As great as they are and as fast as they are, 911 would never have made it."

WITH EMERGENCY medical assistance unavailable on such short notice, Steels went into action.

"He grabbed me from behind," Hill said, "stuck his fist in my gut and squeezed. The piece of meat that came out was surprisingly small. But there is no doubt in my mind whatsoever that Slick saved my life."

Leo said the incident ended the dinner party. "Even after they realized I was going to be OK, everybody was so shook they didn't feel like eating. The next day I went over to practice so they could see I was all right. I was very touched. Several of them came over and put their arms around me. They are a great bunch of kids."

HILL SAYS he has since studied the Heimlich Maneuver used by Steels and has heard of many other people who have had similar experiences.

"It can happen to anyone," Leo said. "Everybody should know what to do. It pays to know. Slick knew, and he saved my life. It's that simple."

Winner winds up the loser

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Johhny Cooper was in his dressing room basking in victory when he was called back to the ring to continue a boxing match that he eventually lost.

In the bizarre undercard fight Tuesday night, Michael Picciotti of Ridley Park, Pa., won a split 10-round welterweight decision over Cooper, of Blackwood, N.J. after the referee initially awarded the bout to Cooper because Picciotti was badly cut.

At 2:25 of the fourth round, referee Joe O'Neill called ringside physician Dr. Michael Sabia to examine a cut above Picciotti's right eye.

On the doctor's recommendation, O'Neill stopped the bout and awarded the victory to Cooper.

But New Jersey Boxing Commissioner "Jersey" Joe Walcott reversed O'Neill's decision, saying that chief physician Dr. Frank B. Doggett had not been consulted.

Walcott ordered the fight resumed. Cooper, who was already in his dressing room with his gloves off, was returned to the ring and his hands were taped at ringside.

Picciotti, 147½, knocked Cooper down in the seventh round and chased Cooper, 149½, around the ring for the last three rounds.

Evert wins in Tokyo tennis

TOKYO (AP) — Chris Evert Lloyd and Andrea Jaeger each defeated Spanish opponents in second-round matches of the 1981 Federation Cup women's tennis tournament Wednesday.

Lloyd displayed powerful strokes over Carmen Perea, 6-2, 6-0, while Jaeger outplayed Victoria Baldovinos with well-placed shots, 6-0, 6-2.

The Americans, who have won the Federation Cup for the past five years, will face Romania in the first match of the quarterfinals Thursday.

Wednesday's biggest upset was 17-year-old Julia Salnikova's defeat of Renata Tomanova of second-seeded Czechoslovakia. The Soviet Union's Salnikova, 1980 European runner-up in the under-18-year-old category, beat the veteran player 6-1, 7-5.

In another match, Czechoslovakian ace Hana Mandlikova beat the Soviet Union's Elena Eliseenko, 7-6, 6-1.

6 Reasons why the provisions of the new tax bill should cause you to purchase a new aircraft between now and the end of the year.

1. Previously, an aircraft could only be depreciated to some pre-determined "salvage value"... usually the aircraft's anticipated future market value. In many cases, this could restrict the amount of depreciation allowed to 50% of the purchase price, or less. The new tax system allows depreciation of 100% of the aircraft value for income tax purposes.
2. The new tax system stipulates a standard five year depreciation period for aircraft -- two full years shorter than the seven year life encouraged under the old rules. This shorter schedule, combined with the 100% depreciation allowance, provides for a substantial income tax deduction each year the aircraft is owned.
3. Normally, depreciation must be pro-rated so that any aircraft purchase made near the end of the tax year qualifies for very little depreciation in that year. The new tax system, on the other hand, provides for a standard 15% depreciation for the year of purchase. Therefore, the aircraft may be depreciated the full 15% even if placed in service on the last day of the taxable year -- an excellent reason to select your new Cessna between now and December 31.
4. Under the old system, most parameters of depreciating an aircraft, such as depreciation method and salvage value, were left up to the taxpayer. This approach left the door wide open to challenges from the I.R.S. if they felt inappropriate decisions had been made. The new tax system establishes the aircraft life (5 years), the depreciable amount (100%) and the amount of depreciation to be claimed each year (15% in year one, 22% in year two and 21% each in years three through five), all to the benefit of you, the aircraft owner.
5. Previously, assuming the full 10% Investment Tax Credit was taken at the time of purchase, this full amount could be retained only if you kept your aircraft the full seven years. If you sold your aircraft after only five years, you would be obliged to return to the I.R.S. one-third of the Investment Tax Credit claimed at the time of purchase. A sale after three years would require the recapture of two-thirds of the I.T.C. Holding the aircraft anything less than three years required the return of the entire Investment Tax Credit. Under the new tax system, this minimum holding requirement for the full 10% I.T.C. is reduced to five years.
6. Under the new tax system, if you keep your aircraft less than five years, you simply return 20% of the Investment Tax Credit for each year the holding period falls short of the five year requirement. Therefore, if you purchase an aircraft for $100,000 and take the full I.T.C. ($10,000) but only keep the aircraft for two years, you would keep 40% ($4,000) and return 60% ($6,000) to the I.R.S. at the time the aircraft is sold. The old law would have required the entire I.T.C. to be returned at the time of sale since the aircraft was held less than three years.

Brewer goes on scoring explosion

By GARY MYERS
AP Sports Writer

Maybe George Gervin let Ron Brewer borrow his sneakers. Not likely. They don't wear the same size.

What about his uniform? No, nobody but Gervin would look right in San Antonio's No.44.

His jump shot. That's it, George Gervin was nice enough to lend Ron Brewer his jump shot. How else can you explain Brewer's incredible scoring explosion over the last three games?

Last week, he scored 39 points against Cleveland. His next game he did himself one better, getting 40 off New York. Tuesday night, Brewer just plain outdid himself, hitting for 44 in the Spurs' 128-102 demolition of the Los Angeles Lakers, improving their record to 5-1.

Keep in mind that Brewer, who had a fine college career at Arkansas, spent the first 1½ years of his professional life on the bench of the Portland Trail Blazers and the last half of the 1980-81 season on the Spurs bench after they traded journeyman Mike Gale to get him.

Blazers 117, Mavericks 95

Break up the Blazers. They're now 7-0 after Jim Paxson scored 21 points and Calvin Natt added 18 as Portland blitzed the hapless Mavs, 1-6 and losers of five straight. Portland, 7-0, outscored the Mavericks 26-3 over an 11-minute span in the first half to take a 46-19 lead with 7:05 remaining in the second quarter.

Hawks, 94, Bucks 83

Three baskets by Rory Sparrow late in the third period broke a 61-61 tie and sent the Hawks, 3-2, to their third straight victory.

Suns 109, Nuggets 106

Alvan Adams scored 25 points, including a 10-foot jumper with 10 seconds left. Truck Robinson hit two straight baskets to bring the Suns back from a late 96-91 deficit and then his layup with 56 seconds left opened a 105-101 lead for Phoenix.

Bulls 119, Kings 107

Artis Gilmore scored a season-high 28 points to lead Chicago. The Bulls had just a four-point edge with five minutes left when Ricky Sobers scored on a long jumper and Gilmore converted a Kansas City turnover into the first of four dunks he made late in the game.

Knicks 111, Nets 99

Michael Ray Richardson scored 20 points and added 15 rebounds and 12 assists to help New York even its record at 3-3. But it was Campy Russell and Mike Newlin combining for 14 points in a 20-6 third-quarter spurt that broke the game open.

Sixers 95, Pistons 93

Julius Erving hit a foul line jumper with 37 seconds remaining and then blocked a layup attempt by rookie Kelly Tripucka at the buzzer.

Celtics 90, Bullets 84

Kevin McHale scored 12 of his 21 points in the fourth quarter filling in for Robert Parish, who was ejected for fighting after throwing a punch at Washington's Rick Mahorn with 1:07 remaining in the third quarter.

Pacers 109, Cavaliers 102

Mike Bantom scored 20 of his game-high 26 points in the second half helping Indiana break a three-game losing streak.

Jazz 106, Clippers 97

Adrian Dantley scored 32 points and Darrell Griffith contributed 26 as the Jazz handed the Clippers their fourth consecutive loss.

Sonics 123, Warriors 113

Gus Williams scored 21 of his 33 points in the third quarter to help ofset a 38 point performance by the Warriors' Bernard King.

Dutton gets a lesson in football infighting that 73-yarder the first play after the kickoff. Then on Buffalo's first series, Everson Walls, who has already tied the Cowboy record for most interceptions in a season, 10, performed his specialty and after a 19-yard return, Dallas had possession on the Buffalo 44. On second down, White found Tony Hill unattended behind everybody and hit him with a 37-yard TD pass off the flea flicker. In three plays, Dallas had turned a 7-14 deficit into a 21-14 lead.

RANDY WHITE, the half man, half monster of the Dallas defense, thought the interception of Ferguson at the end of the first half was as much of a turning point as the Dallas blitzkrieg in the third period.

Ferguson, the one-time Hog caller from Fayetteville who has found fame and fortune on the decaying shores of Lake Erie, had guided Buffalo to a first down on the Dallas nine with 33 seconds left in the half. Just as Miami's David Woodley had panicked under Dallas duress a couple of weeks ago, Ferguson did too. His ill-advised pass from his knees was intercepted by Emerson Downs.

A touchdown could have been demoralizing for Dallas. Not getting one proved just as demoralizing for Buffalo as the Cowboys turned it into a two-touchdown mistake.

"It shows how little respect our defensive secondary gets when Ferguson thinks he can throw a dead duck pass and get away with it," Randy said in what might have been a growl or whatever it is when Manster's do when they communicate.

SOMEONE thought maybe Ferguson should have been ruled down, but Coach Tom Landry said, "Maybe he likes to throw from his knees. He can be anywhere he wants until we hit him."

Ferguson confided that he didn't plan it that way. "They had double coverage and I had to come back to Mark Brammer our tight end. I had to move around to find him and for some reason or other my dadgummed shoe came off. I slipped as I threw the ball. I shouldn't have thrown it. We were right down there and should have gotten at least a field goal out of it. But Mark was open and I tried to get it to him.

Clark, Dry get SWC accolades

By HARRY KING

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Two of the best runs Arkansas fullback Jessie Clark made against Baylor didn't put a point on the scoreboard.

In the second quarter, with Arkansas on the Baylor 7 and trailing 17-10, Clark was on a sweep right.

"We didn't block the middle linebacker and he came through untouched," said Sam Goodwin, the UA backfield coach. "That forced him outside his blocker. He broke four tackles before the fifth guy got him."

Clark made 4 yards and four plays later he scored the second of his five touchdowns in a 41-39 victory that kept Arkansas alive in the Southwest Conference race.

For his efforts, Clark was named The Associated Press Offensive Player of the Week in the SWC. The SWC Defensive player of the week on a day in the league when there was mostly offense is Mike Dry, the son of embattled Texas Christian Coach F.A. Dry.

The younger Dry blocked a punt by Texas Tech's Maury Buford out of the end zone in the final two minutes Saturday to give the Horned Frogs a 39-all tie and keep Red Raider Coach Jerry Moore from notching his first SWC victory.

In the Arkansas-Baylor game, after Baylor took a 39-38 lead with 2:05 left, the Razorbacks had a third-and-one at their own 33. The 226-pound Clark blasted over the right side for 18 yards. Six plays later, Bruce Lahay kicked a 27-yard field goal with 12 seconds remaining.

"On that run, he showed that he is capable of being a punishing runner," Goodwin said. "He fought for 6 or 7 yards extra. I think he has all-conference potential if we had to go to him time after time. But any time you put too much on one guy somebody will be there to stop you."

Consequently, five players have led the team in rushing in nine games. And, 15 players have scored touchdowns.

Against Baylor, Clark was the leader with 91 yards on 19 carries. His five TDs tied a school record set by Gene Davidson in 1915 in a 41-0 victory over Hendrix College and tied by Davidson the next year in an 82-0 victory over Oklahoma Mines.

"Personal records don't mean a thing to me just as long as we win," Clark said. "The best part about being a running back is complimenting your linemen. The linemen never get much credit for the success of offense but they're the ones doing most of the work."

Clark scored the Razorbacks' first touchdown from the 2. His next three TDs covered 1, 5 and 9 yards. The fifth, from the 7, put Arkansas ahead 38-27 early in the fourth quarter.

Tommy Lasorda gives thanks to Big Dodger in the Sky.

'81 Just the beginning?

By JOHN NADEL

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Now that Tommy Lasorda has tasted the fruits of the ultimate victory, as he would put it, the manager of the Los Angeles Dodgers is looking for more.

"There's no law against winning the World Series again," said Lasorda. "And that's what we're going to attempt to do. Now that we know how to do it, let's keep on doing it — 1982 will again be the year for Dodger Blue."

Lasorda might not make anyone forget about Walt Whitman, but a panel of sportswriters and sportscasters throughout the country was impressed enough by the job he did on the field that he was made an overwhelming choice as the Associated Press' National League Manager of the Year.

Lasorda received 215 votes, while runnerup Whitey Herzog of the St. Louis Cardinals had 163. John McNamara of the Cincinnati Reds was third with 81 votes.

"I'm extremely honored to receive an award like this," said Lasorda, whose Dodgers won their first World series in 16 years last month by disposing of the New York Yankees in six games. "I certainly want to thank all the people who made it possible for me to receive it.

"I also feel that any award a manager receives becomes a reality only because of the contributions of his players, who made all of this possible. I want to thank them, I want to thank my coaches, and I want to thank the entire Dodger organization for all the help they gave me."

The Dodgers went all the way despite trailing Houston 2-0 in the best-of-five National League West Division playoffs, trailing Montreal 2-1 in the best-of-five NL Championship Series, and trailing the Yankees 2-0 in the World Series.

"This World Series has to be the most gratifying thing that has ever happened to me in my baseball career," said the 54-year-old Lasorda. "I can't find words to describe the enjoyment, the feeling that I had when we became world champs."

Lasorda, manager of the Dodgers for the last five years, also was the NL Manager of the Year in 1977, his rookie season with Los Angeles after he succeeded Walter Alston, who had piloted the club the previous 23 seasons.

Lasorda had his share of ups and downs with his players in 1981, but maintained all season long that this team was going all the way.

"I called it a team of destiny," he said. "It proved the theory of what I've said all along, that it's not always the strongest man who wins the fight, the fastest man who wins the race, or the best team who wins the game.

"In most cases, it's the one who wants it more than the next. And that's what I think about this team. They gave me a lifetime of thrills in one year."

In the World Series, just about every managerial move made by Lasorda worked out as the Dodgers won four straight games after losing the first two.

"That's the thing that any manager would like to have," he said. "All the moves that you make don't mean anything unless the players do the job. And ours did."

College focus...

Ex-grid coach now Yankee prexy

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

He has been a college head coach at Case Institute, Northwestern, Western Illinois, Maryland, Miami (Fla.) and Army. He has been a head coach in the professional ranks with the Boston Patriots, Buffalo Bills (twice) and Denver Broncos.

With a football background like that, what is Lou Saban doing as president of the New York Yankees?

It goes back to 1948 when Saban, then playing with the Cleveland Browns, was in charge of Cleveland's Junior Olympic program and one of the local citizens who volunteered to lend him a helping hand was a fellow named George M. Steinbrenner.

"From that moment on we became close friends," Saban says.

So close that when Saban became Northwestern's head coach in 1955, he hired as an assistant coach a fellow named named George M. Steinbrenner who had played a little football at Williams College.

"He was our receivers coach, and a good one," Saban recalls. "He worked hard and volunteered for anything. He was just like a sponge — he wanted to absorb as much as he could. Like most young coaches, he tended to be impatient, but he was aggressive and a good coach and he worked on fundamentals. That's the reason he continues to stress fundamentals now. It was obvious to me at that time that he was going to become heavily involved in sports."

Being president of the Yankees, Saban says, "is an all-consuming, all-the-time job. I try to supervise most of the things that are going on and help keep things on an even keel. I make sure things keep running properly because George is not here a lot of the time.

"I check the various departments to see that everything has been covered. I'm involved in the baseball operations, too, but my voice is just one of many."

And, of course, Saban misses football.

"I love what I'm doing," he says, "but coaching has been my life. I miss the game. I miss the coaching end of it. I suppose if something came up ..."

MARCUS ALLEN or Herschel Walker? Herschel Walker or Marcus Allen?

The current NCAA rushing chart shows Allen on top with 1,968 yards in nine games — erasing the national single-season mark of 1,948 set by Tony Dorsett of Pitt in 1976 — for an average of 218.7 per game. The Southern California senior undoubtedly will pass the 2,000-yard plateau against Washington this weekend.

Last year, Walker set a record for a freshman by rushing for 1,616 yards in leading Georgia to its first national championship. Through nine games in 1980, he had piled up 1,334 yards and received gobs of publicity.

It may come as a surprise to many people that Walker is ahead of his 1980 pace this season with 1,501 yards in nine contests, a per-game average of 166.8. That has him second behind Allen.

Two teams — Tennessee and California — have had the unenviable task of trying to stop both Allen and Walker. In Southern Cal's opening game, Allen ripped Tennessee for 210 yards on 22 carries and last week he was 46-for-243 against California. Walker gained 161 yards on 30 carries against Tennessee and 167 on 35 rushes against California in Georgia's first two games.

The question was put to Coach Johnny Majors of Tennessee: Who is the better runner, Marcus Allen or Herschel Walker?

"There's no comparison between last year and this year; they're both so much better now," says Majors, who had the "pleasure" of facing Walker and Allen in their first game as tailbacks for their respective schools a year ago and also in Tennessee's first two contests this season. "I don't really want to have to do that again.

"I can't say anything negative about either one. I think it's a tossup. I've never seen a runner any better at slashing than Allen except Tony Dorsett (Majors coached Dorsett at Pitt). Dorsett is the greatest slasher and greatest broken-field runner I've seen.

"ALLEN WILL take the shortest distance to the goal line. He'll lunge and leap. He runs exceptionally hard and he's an excellent short-yardage runner. He'll make his own hole, even though he's running behind one of the finest lines I've ever seen.

"I think Allen runs tougher inside day-in and day-out; Walker does it when he has to. Walker's line is better than last year's, though. As far as speed and size combined, Walker is the best combination I've ever looked at. He's such a threat that he opens up the passing game. He's probably the best the game has seen — period!"

Cal's Roger Theder could not be reached but he noted last week that Walker tried to run outside more than Allen. And after Saturday's game, he noted that "Allen runs a different type of play with that 'toss-blast' which he runs inside. I don't think Georgia has anything like that for Walker.

"Allen has a great periphery. You don't stop him; you just try to contain him and keep him out of the end zone. With Allen's periphery, he can run in any direction because he gained that experience as a junior. Southern Cal wants you to try to neutralize their line, but that's when Allen picks his hole."

"ARE YOU looking forward to playing the No.1-ranked team in the country?" Army Coach Ed Cavanaugh was asked Tuesday.

Cavanaugh, whose 3-6 club has beaten only three Ivy League teams (Brown, Harvard and Princeton), was ready with his answer:

"I'm looking forward to the three-week layoff after the Pitt game; I'm not looking forward to the game itself. It's a great opportunity to play the No.1 team, but I wish we could have played the game four weeks ago. We're not the team we were then because of injuries. When we're injured, we have to dip down to freshmen. Pitt Stadium is not the place to learn where to defend your country."

Bart seems to be aging

Starr intimate until Starr fired him last year, says that the 47-year-old coach has developed a facial tic and appears to be aging rapidly.

"He looks like sin," Lane said. "He looks like he's being cooked on a slow fire. Nobody deserves to suffer like that."

Starr has said he will not resign and people here would be amazed if he did.

"Bart will never resign," Packer offensive tackle Greg Koch said. "He's too proud. It's like saying, 'I'm a quitter.' He'd never do that."

Instead, Starr's response is the same one that propelled him from a thrid-string 17th-round draft choice out of Alabama in 1956 to superstardom as the Packers' quarterback, is to work harder. Nobody has ever questioned his ability to motivate others.

"He's low-key," Packers defensive end Mike Butler said. "He can't motivate everybody. He'll let certain things slide."

KOCH TAKES it a step further.

"He (Starr) sees the inherent goodness in everybody," said Koch, a five-year veteran, "which isn't bad because there are more important things in life than football. Technically, he's as modern as a coach can be, but there's a lot more to being a head coach than that. I like him as a person, but that's not what he's here for. In my first few years there were people here that tried to walk over him. But he saw the potential in them and always gave them the benefit of the doubt. A lot of times, they didn't deserve it."

But Starr's longevity as Packers coach must be attributed largely to his receiving the benefit of the doubt from the Packers' powers that be. And who are they? Nobody's quite sure. In fact, to understand how Starr has managed to hang on so long with such a lousy record, one must take into account the unique Packer organizational setup and Starr's almost godlike standing in these parts.

THE PACKERS are the NFL's only publicly run corporation. As such, they have no Steinbrenner figure howling with every loss, who can shake things up without consulting anyone. Rather, the Packers are run by a seven-man executive committee and a 45-man board of directors, most of whom seem to view their association with the Packers as a reward rather than a duty and are disinclined to be harsh in dealing with the team's problems.

After all, the Packers are Green Bay's biggest — and only — celebrities. It's like, if you were given the table next to Warren Beatty's at a restaurant, would you raise a stink if he were talking too loudly?

And, because of the NFL's wonderfully rich TV contract, the Packers would make money whether run by Smith-Barney or Laverne and Shirley. They don't have to make money the old-fashioned way. And so, the directors have treated the club with the doting benevolence people usually reserve for grandchildren.

With predictable results.

"The Packer organization," Butler said, "has been nothing but a damn country club."

Then there's Starr himself. By leading Vince Lombardi's Packers to five world championships, including victory in Super Bowls I and II, Starr became a legend. That most Americans have even heard of Green Bay is largely due to Starr's and the Packers' success. Has any athlete ever done as much for his city's image as Starr has for Green Bay's?

Whatever his job description, Starr's a professional celebrity, and he wears it as well as Lana Turner did sweaters.

EVERY YEAR, he golfs in the Lombardi memorial tournament. Every year, names like Alan Shephard, Mickey Mantle former President Ford show up. And every year, Starr's gallery is by far the largest. It's that way almost everywhere he goes.

Ever since he became coach, Starr has hosted a half-hour TV show. Bob Schulze, news director of WLUK-TV in Green Bay, was Starr's Ed McMahon until this season. One segment always had Starr wading into the audience to answer questions. The show was done both live and on tape. Not that it mattered. Schulze said that never during his six-year stint did one person ask Starr an embarrassing or indelicate question.

Is it any wonder? For most people, tht would have been akin to standing up in church, banging on the collection plate and asking the pastor if he was stealing from it.

Starr's always ready with the firm handshake and the earnest eye contact: A real life Marcus Welby. Most people who don't want to be interviewed avoid the interviewer. Not Starr. Already aware of the request, he accosted a Los Angeles Times reporter in a hallway in the Packer offices and pleasantly refused the interview.

BUT WHILE Starr is gentlemanly, he is considered aloof by the media, former teammates and his players. Whatever the situation, Starr prefers to keep his distance. Once, a Chicago reporter waited in a Packers conference room for Starr to arrive for a prearranged interview. When Starr arrived, instead of taking a seat near the guest in the empty room, he strode to the lectern and answered questions from there.

Despite his 24 years with the organization, Starr is for the Packers, but not of them. He never has tried to be one of the boys. Former teammates and current players say he always seems in a hurry to get somewhere.

But when it came to his being named coach, it was the Packer fans who were in a hurry. Starr was not so much nominated to replace Dan Devine (who resigned under pressure and went to Notre Dame) as he was ordained. He didn't get a nod, he got a mandate. To most fans, he was the main link to the Lombardi era. They expected him to return the Packers to greatness.

They're still waiting.

Sampson sidelined

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Ralph Sampson, the 7-foot-4 center who helped fling Virginia into the national spotlight in his freshman year, is on the sidelines with a pulled muscle, says Cavalier Coach Terry Holland.

Holland said Tuesday night he is not sure when Sampson, a junior All-American, will be able to return or whether he will make the Cavaliers' Nov. 21 opener against Brigham Young in Springfield, Mass.

The damages sought by Tully included expenses for two tickets; transportation to Soldier Field from Rockford, about 85 miles northwest of Chicago; tolls, and a babysitter...

Reggie always hogs the spotlight

Other Free Agents take a back seat to Jackson

By JANE LEAVY
The Washington Post

An hour before the first game of the World Series, Reggie Jackson sat in the Yankee dugout whispering into a reporter's tape recorder, talking soft and low.

A crowd gathered and soon it was a mob. Other reporters craned and strained to hear. They scribbled in notebooks and whispered urgently to each other: "What did he say? Will he be a free agent?"

What no one but the reporter, with his microphone, knew was that Reginald Martinez Jackson was giving an interview in Spanish.

Jackson commands attention whether he is hitting a ball 500 feet or spitting a sunflower seed 50 feet. That is why, of the 30 players who have so far declared for free agency, Jackson will receive the most attention and, perhaps, even the biggest yearly salary.

"He's the only guy on the list who puts people in the park," said Steve Greenberg, an agent who represents three players in the draft that will be held on Friday.

"Reggie could be, per annum, the highest-paid free agent, if he's willing to sign for a two-year deal," Greenberg said. "He could get over a million a year; it's only speculation how much over a million."

At this point, there is a lot of speculation about who will go where, how much they will get and whether the 50-day strike this summer over the negotiating rights of free agents will have a material effect on those players.

APART FROM Jackson, Ron Guidry — who most believe will remain with the Yankees — and Ken Griffey, who was eligible but had not declared for the re-entry draft and was traded to New York Wednesday, "the rest (of the free agents) are mediocre ballplayers," said Bill Madlock, who re-signed with the Pirates instead of becoming a free agent.

"Dave Collins (of the Reds) is a great offensive ballplayer and could end up as a designated hitter. There are a few pitchers like (Cleveland's John) Denny, who just had good years this year. If I was a general manager, I'd get away from that."

Of the players who so far have declared free agency, only three, all pitchers — the White Sox's Ed Farmer, the Cubs' Dick Tidrow and Guidry — qualify as Type A performers who will require additional professional compensation under the terms of the new basic agreement.

Under the terms of that agreement, compensation for Type A players is a player from a pool drawn from 21 clubs and an amateur draft choice. The new contract also provides th$t five clubs can opt out of the bidding for Type A free agents (the top 20 percent of players) and not contribute to the pool. Those clubs this time around are the Los Angeles Dodgers, California Angels, Boston Red Sox, Seattle Mariners and Minnesota Twins.

They may not bid on any Type A free agent for the next three years, but may compete for any other type o free agent: Type B (the top21-30 percent of players, who bring two amateur draft choices $s compensation), and those who already have been through the draft or have more than 12 years major-league experience (they bring an amateur draft choice as compensation).

SIXTEEN of the players eligible for f ree agency in 1981, and seven who already have declared for it — including Jackson — either are second-time free agents or have more than 12 years major-league service.

One reason for this may be what agent Ron Shapiro calls "the theory of mutually benefical insecurity." More and more clubs, he said, are beginning to adopt the Orioles' policy of signing "a core of young players a yar before free-agency."

For the player, the choice is between "more money later against a fixed amount now," said Don Fehr, general counsel of the Major League Baseball Players Association, "and you always want to get it earlier."

"I think the strike will have a fairly significant impact on what this crop gets," said Oriole owner Edward Bennett Williams. "Many clubs lost a substantial amount

Royals win, 1-0

SHIZUOKA, Japan (AP) — Mike Jones, Renie Martin and Dan Quisenberry combined to limit the Yomiuri Giants to two hits Wednesday and John Wathan singled home the winning run to give the Kansas City Royals a 1-0 victory over the 1981 Japan Series champions.

The victory before 20,000 fans at Shizuoka was the Royals' third against five defeats in a 17-game exhibition series. It also snapped a five-game losing streak.

The winning run came in the top of the sixth inning when U.L. Washington doubled, moved to third on Willie Wilson's fly to right field, and scored on Wathan's single to right.

Jones surrendered just one hit over the first five imnnings before he was replaced by Martin, who held the Giants hitless in two innings. Quisenberry allowed the other Giant hit, a single in the ninth.

On trial, college football...

Los Angeles Times

"College football, will you please approach the bench? You have been charged with 330 violations of the Educational Code, with making a mockery of the concept of higher education, tampering with the intellectual rights of individuals, and lowering the learning standards of a generation of students. An Eduscam, if you please. How do you plead?"

A -- Not guilty. Your honor.

Q -- The true bill says that that number -- 330 -- of "academically marginal" students were admitted to your institution over the past decade whose sole qualification for admission was the ability to run fast with a football, or pass out concussions or nosebleeds on a football field without undo exertion themselves.

A -- Your Honor, these are "affirmative action" programs, designed to give disadvantaged minorities access to college under the minimum standards, on the basis of the fact they did not have the luxury of certified college preparatory courses in their localities. A highly worthwhile project.

Q -- The court agrees. This is a way of getting doctors, lawyers, statesmen, and business executives out of the ghetto. I see no violation here, I see no disservice to education, Mr. Prosecutor, so do I hear a motion to dismiss this matter without prejudice?

A -- May it please the court, the prosecution wishes to point out the unwarranted intervention of the athletic departments into this worthwhile program has resulted not in doctors and lawyers and statesmen but in Green Bay Packers. This program was not designed to staff the NFL, Your Honor. It was designed to staff hospitals.

Q -- AH, College Football, how do you respond to this?

A -- Oh, Your Honor, athletes don't make up all of these special access admissions. I mean, we only need about a third of them. You can only suit up so many.

Q -- A third of them! What's the college enrollment? What's the size of a football squad?

Q -- We can suit up 60 to travel, and about 90 at home. The college enrollment is 12,600.

Q -- And you get a third of the special access admissions for a group that is 1210th of the total? Well, at least, you enroll them in Chem Lab, Physics, Microbiology, Pre-law, Pre-med, and Advanced Literature courses once there?

Q -- Your Honor, football is a full-time occupation. We have to enroll them in courses that ar compatible with their football practices and meetings. We have to schedule courses like "Theories of The Modern Dance."

Q -- YOU have to teach ghetto kids how to dance?

A -- Well, no, we have this famous speech class.

Q -- You have to teach them how to talk!? Good Lord, describe these players to me. Do they look like they were found begging food from cars at Yellowstone Park? Do they come to class on vines?

A -- No, no, Your Honor! As a matter of fact, the speech class didn't even exist.

Q -- Good Lord! You take one-third the minority access students for a traveling squad of 60, teach them to dance, and take credit for a course they never took and didn't in fact exist? What are you equipping them for -- forgery?

A -- We're equipping them for the Chicago Bears, Your Honor. The Minnesota Vikings. Oakland Raiders. The big time. The NFL.

Q -- HOW many players on a team in the NFL?

A -- Forty-five. And there are 28 teams.

Q -- So, we're talking about a little over a thousand jobs a year?

A -- Not exactly, Your Honor. Some guys stay on the job in the NFL 15 years. Interior linemen, for instance. George Blanda played 26 years.

Q -- So, how many rookies might make a team?

A -- A George Allen team, none. A struggling team, maybe four or five.

Q -- You mean to tell me the great universities of this country have to strain thousands of students through loopholes, encourage them to cheat and become cynical, to fill a pipeline to a football league which only needs a hundred or so new employees a year.

A -- Your Honor, you can't fill stadiums with guys who get straight A's.

Q -- CALL Prof. Ivy to the witness stand. Prof. Ivy, you were at Yale in the Walter Camp days. How did you get football teams -- off New York trucks?

A -- No, we got 'em out of Chem Lab, classes in Contemporary Literature, and even the Honor Society.

Q -- But you got beat a lot?

A -- Got beat? We had as proud an athletic tradition as USC. We invented big-time athletics. Yale never took pride in losing. But it never took pride in cheating, either.

Q -- But you had a smalltime program?

A -- Smalltime? Yale built the first of the "Bowls" in football -- 75,000 seats. You couldn't get a ticket for the Yale-Army game even in the Depression. People came from four states. The first coast-to-coast broadcasts came from Yale-Harvard games. But we didn't play mercenaries, we played students. Our backfields went to Wall Street, the State Department, the White House, not the Detroit Lions. We went to Washington to sit on the Supreme Court bench, not the Redskin bench.

Q -- SO it can be done?

A -- It was done.

Q -- And "minority access program "?

A -- We didn't put a clock on the applicants, we put a college board. We took the ones who finished those the fastest. You don't have to run through the Stock Exchange. We don't want to have guys who are trained to take undercover money running for Congress. We don't want guys who can read "keys," we want guys who can read books.

Q -- Will College Football please approach the bench? This court finds you guilty of fraud and deeeit and infringement of opportunity.

A -- Against the state?

Q -- Against the students. Against the taxpayers. Against the legitimate aspirations of a generation longing for real learning.

A -- And the penalty?

Q -- If you ever give another athletic scholarship for other than financial need, we burn the Rose Bowl. If you doctor another transcript, we treat it as a forged check. If you're gonna turn our nation's classrooms into farm systems for the Green Bay Packers, we want our share of the TV package. We want to build libraries, instead of domed stadiums. For every non-scholar you slip illegally through admissions, we sneak a Latin student into the backfield. It's only fair. Pretty soon, the Super Bowl will look like a Bryn Mawr taffy pull. Stop ruining our game, or we'll ruin yours

Alborn ready to make trouble

HOUSTON (AP) — Now that the Rice Owls have eliminated themselves from any bowl consideration, Coach Ray Alborn figures his team's duty this week is to stamp out bowl discussions in Waco.

The Owls, reeling from three straight defeats that followed three straight victories, meet the Baylor Saturday in Waco, where Coach Grant Teaff hopes to improve a 5-4 record into a 7-4 finish and a bowl invitation.

"I see where they are talking about a bowl game in Waco so I guess that will be our goal this week, to knock them out of the bowl picture," Alborn said.

"I suppose some of our people might want us to lose, so that Baylor can be in a bowl and we can share the bowl revenues. But we're going after them anyway."

The Rice defense has been decimated by injuries and has yielded 51, 41 and 33 points in the past three games including last week's 33-12 loss to Southern Methodist.

"We've been forced to go with some freshmen and they're going to make mistakes," Alborn said. "Once against SMU last week, we had two people take the quarterback on the option and forget the pitchman. That increases the odds dramatically for a long gainer."

Wide receiver Hosea Fortune will be the lone senior starting on offense for Saturday's game against the Bears. Both defensive end starters are sidelined and a pair of freshmen will open at cornerbacks.

"We'll put the guys on the bus that are healthy and go down there and get after it the best we can," Alborn said.

The Owls must pin their hopes on junior quarterback Michael Calhoun, who is two touchdown passes away from tying the SWC record of 21 in one season set in 1968 by SMU's Chuck Hixson and tied in 1976 by Rice's Tommy Kramer.

Huntsville remains Texas' No. 1

By The Associated Press

It's not difficult to understand why no Class 4A team has been able to break defending state champion Huntsville's vise grip on its No. 1 ranking in The Associated Press Schoolboy football poll.

Huntsville goes into the final game of the season this week with a 21-game winning streak, the fifth longest in state schoolboy history. The Hornets defeated Brenham 21-7 last week to move ahead of Brownwood on the all-time list.

The Hornets started the season with a No. 5 state ranking and slowly edged upward, taking the No. 1 position when Georgetown lost in the third week of the season.

The other No. 1-ranked teams in the next-to-last week of voting also retained their leads including Port Arthur Jefferson in 5A, Refugio in 3A, Forney in 2A and Motley County in A.

Only four teams in the five classifications suffered upsets last week resulting in only minor changes in the balloting by a panel of Texas sports writers and sportscasters.

Sulphur Springs, ranked No. 6 in 4A last week, dropped from the rankings after a 14-13 loss to McKinney and was replaced by No. 10 Brownsville Pace, 8-1.

Slaton's 21-16 victory knocked No. 9 Tahoka from the Class 3A ranks and made way for unbeaten Manor which blanked Burnet 39-0 last week. Blanco moved in as the No. 9 team in 2A following No. 8 Winona's 38-19 loss to Spring Hill.

Motley County, which has averaged 35.7 points against 10 opponents this season, is waging a fierce battle to keep its top rank in A away from high-scoring Wink, which has outscored nine opponents 499-3 and ranks as the top scoring team in the state.

Other teams challenging for top 10 recognition included: 5A, Angleton 31 points, Brazoswood 13; 4A, Weatherford 19, New Braunfels 18; 3A, Tahoka 15, Floydada 13, Waco LaVega 10; 2A, Plains 11 and A, Union Hill 15, Cayuga 9 and Rule 8.

Bible publishers ready 'reworded' King James Bible

By TOM McCORD
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — After seven years of sifting through the thees and thous of the King James Bible, a team of scholars is winding up a $3.5 million effort to update the 370-year-old English in the world's best-selling book.

To be published next year, the New King James Bible is the biggest publishing venture ever undertaken by Thomas Nelson Inc., the world's largest Bible publisher, based in Nashville.

"We don't like the term 'revised,' " said Ed Liden, advertising director for Thomas Nelson. "We're calling it the New King James. It's not a translation, it's not a paraphrase."

The company says the upcoming edition is a reworking and updating of the 1611 "authorized" version of the Bible that for centuries has been quoted in Protestant cathedrals and churches.

"The goal was to maintain the majesty, the rhythm — all of the intangible quality of it, but still have it updated," Liden said.

The 27 New Testament books of the New King James already have been published, but the hardcover edition of the entire 66-book Protestant Bible will be out in August 1982, Liden said.

Supervising the New Testament scholars and assisting with Old Testament work was Dr. Arthur Farsted of Dallas, who taught Greek at Dallas Theological Seminary before resigning to work full time on the King James project.

Farsted said a guiding rule for scholars was to change the most famous passages the least.

So John 3:16 — perhaps the most well-known passage in the Bible — is similar in both editions:

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoever believes in him should not perish but have everlasting life."

Another example, he said, is the 23rd Psalm. "We left it almost intact. We even kept the word, 'yea.'

"There are millions of people who love the King James version, and want their kids to use it, but they get turned off to some of the archaic words," Farsted said.

An example of a word that needed changing, he said, is found in I Thessalonians 4:15, which, in the 1611 version, reads:

"For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep."

"Today, prevent means to stop," Farsted said, "but in 1611, it meant to go back."

To critics who say the reworking is too arbitrary, Farsted counters that the originators of the King James Bible did the same thing.

"The reason that version is such good English is that they did not do it by computer. We have followed in their steps, their tradition, which was variety," he said.

Liden said Thomas Nelson plans to aggressively market the New King James Bible, aiming at various denominations.

"It's a very competitive market," Liden said. "When you put $3.5 million to $4 million in a project, you want to tell your stockholders you're going to get it back."

The company must also convince traditionalists and liberals alike that the New King James is an updating, not a tampering.

"You walk a very thin line between the far right and the far left, as far as the theological spectrum goes," Liden said.

Churches 'not immune'

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rejecting First Amendment arguments of freedom of religion, a federal appeals court says churches may be prosecuted for antitrust violations.

A three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals ruled Tuesday that churches or church groups are not immune from antitrust laws if they pursue policies that reduce competition in the marketplace.

The ruling marked the first time, the court said, that antitrust laws had been applied to a religious organization.

The appeals panel overturned a lower court ruling which held that religiously motivated conduct "is not the type which falls within the realm of the antitrust laws."

The appeals panel said the lower court should decide whether Catholic bishops in the United States violated antitrust laws when they asked retailers of religious books not to sell an English language liturgy that had not been approved for use in this country.

The appeals court said there must be a balancing test between the church's First Amendment right to exercise religious freedom and the right of free competition in commerce.

"Thus, the district court must initially determine if the economic pressure brought by the church is legitimatey geared to the church's protection of its liturgy rather than its survival in the marketplace of religious books," said the opinion, written by U.S. Circuit Judge Patricia M. Wald.

The dispute dates back to 1962, when the Second Ecumenical Council of the Vatican decided to permit use of vernacular language rather than Latin in church liturgy.

The English liturgy approved by the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and the bishops of at least 20 other countries is entitled Liturgy of the Hours.

Another English language version entitled Morning and Evening Prayer was approved for use in England, Ireland, Wales and Australia.

Harry J. Costello, the bookseller who sued the U.S. church officials, ordered 7,500 copies of Morning and Evening Prayer and advertised it as an "officially approved" edition.

The Bishops' Committee on the Liturgy requested that sellers of Catholic books not purchase the England-Ireland version of the liturgy, prompting Costello to file suit against the church.

"While the freedom to believe is absolute, civil law has always been recognized to have some right to impose restrictions on the freedom to act in pursuit of religious beliefs," the appeals court said.

"Thus neither religious (free exercise) nor social (antitrust) interests are totally free from a 'balancing process'" between Fist Amendment rights and competition in business, the court added.

Falwell favors 'amended' ERA

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Moral Majority leader the Rev. Jerry Falwell is calling for a new women's rights amendment to the Constitution once "we have buried the corpse of the Equal Rights Amendment."

Falwell also said he favors an anti-abortion amendment to the Constitution that would allow women to have abortions only if pregnancy endangers their lives.

At a rally in Tucson Tuesday night, the Baptist preacher said he "would be for the Equal Rights Amendment if it had a few addenda," namely, bans on homosexual marriages and the dispatch of female soldiers into combat.

The ERA has been passed by 35 states and must be ratified by three more by June 30 or it will die, and Falwell is among opponents who say it will.

He said "it would be incumbent upon" opponents of ERA to come up with an alternative and "join hands" with ERA supporters willing to back a compromise.

"I am for it," said the head of the fundamentalist religious and political organization. He said that if ERA proponents "went back with the right wording, it would pass quickly," possibly within a year.

Last year, Falwell said ERA would be "contrary to God's will" because God would not want to have homosexuals marry or to send women to war. There is no reference to either situation in the one-sentence proposed amendment, but foes say the wording is ambiguous and could be interpreted to allow both.

Falwell said feminist leaders likely would oppose the ERA changes he wants, but claimed "the 95 percent of sincere people who are in the feminist movement...will join hands immediately with us."

Of the 35 states that passed the ERA, five states have rescinded approval. The validity of those actions is in question and the Justice Department says it is up to Congress to decide.

On the abortion amendment, he said "the life of the mother is a reasonable exception.... I think that's self-defense."

"There are others who would add rape and incest. There are some who would allow none.

"I think there has to come at some point a practical compromise on what is in the benefit of the unborn child and what will pass.... No matter what we think, we've got to be willing to sit down and say, OK, this will meet everybody's approval."

He called abortion "biological holocaust," and said the millions of fetuses "who have been killed" by abortion in the United States is a situation worse than Hitler's destruction of the Jews. The Supreme Court legalized abortion in 1973.

About 450 demonstrators shouted "the Moral Majority is neither" as they milled outside the Tucson Community Center, where the rally was held. There were about 2,500 Falwell followers inside.

About 40 protesters inside the building booed each time Falwell got a round of applause.

Clinic helps people cope with stress

Thanksgiving and Christmas are just around the corner, and with the holidays come shopping, parties, and family gatherings. This can mean too much food, (Gee, these pants must have shrunk when I put them in the dryer!), too many cigarettes, (I'm going to have to stop smoking. I just can't seem to catch my breath!), and sometimes too much stress from every direction, (I sure do need a vacation! Everyone is really getting on my nerves lately!).

Health Clinics International provides many ways to help you cope with some of these problems while at the same time makinge the holidays more enjoyable.

Albert Schweitzer once remarked, "Each person carries his own doctor inside him. We are at our best when we give the doctor who resides within each person a chance to go to work."

"At HCI, we believe that clinical hypnosis provides ways to reach and activate each person's will to change bad habits to new, healthy ones,"said Loretta Littlejohn, owner of the clinic. "Clinical hypnosis is based on soung psychological principles and is accepted as one of the best tools in helping people overcome problems or increase their skills. It is not a 'one (or two) shot' approach, but involves a series of sessions to reinforce the changes you are seeking," she continued. "A committment to stay with a program until a goal is reached is required and works best to allow positive changes to become long-term."

With today's hectic lifestyle, stress is often overwhelming. It creates self-doubt and inhibits us from realizing our goals and objectives. It has an adverse effect on us both emotionally and physically. Like a computer, our minds are programmed from our youth to perceive certain things as either "dangerous" or "safe." Stress is then caused as we react to these things which are happining around us and to us. We all experience a certain amount of stress. But, when it invades to the point of keeping us from achieving goals and being happy, then it is a problem.

Health Clinics International also provides a program for those who want to kick the smoking habit once and for all. Again, the program is not a "one shot" remedy (although you do stop smoking that first day,) but it is a series of sessions which include a period of time for reinforcement. And, you should check with your insurance agent to verify that both life and auto insurance premiums go down substantially for those who become non-smokers.

Roy H. Amick and Charles N. Silverman conduct the programs at HCI. Both hold a master's degree in psychology and have a background of community mental health counseling, testing, and teaching. Silverman has five years experience in areas of counseling, teaching, testing, alcoholism, and mental retardation programs.

Alcohol and/or drug related problems, nail biting, insomnia, phobias, migraine headaches, speech impediments, pain, and high blood pressure are a few of the areas which can be treated very successfully with clinical hypnosis.

"A large number of referrals for our programs come from physicians in the area," said Ms. Littlejohn. "We have very good success with people who are going back to school and need to learn to study again, or with people who have to prepare for state exams (insurance license, real estate license, etc.,) and with students who are preparing for college and want to improve their study skills. By the way, according to statictics, teachers are close to the top of the scale for the amount of stress in their daily occupation of education."

HCI has provided stress reduction seminars and stop-smoking programs for several area businesses. The opportunity to reduce the amount of stress in your life and/or job, or the opportunity to stop smoking is one of the best "company benefits" you can give your employees. It not only helps them, but it helps every person who comes in contact with them each day; whether it be other employees or customers. It certainly benefits the company as much as the employee.

Shaw to run in 69th Legislative District

AUSTIN — State Representative Larry Don Shaw (D-Big Spring) says he expects to be a candidate for the Texas Legislature from the new 69th Legislative District next year.

"It's a slightly Democratic district in political makeup," Shaw said, "but I think I can win some Republican support in my district too. I think my record in the Legislature demonstrates the kind of stubborn independence that folks in West Texas appreciate.

"It'll be like starting all over in some ways," said Shaw, who knocked off a Democratic incumbent in the 1980 primary and then ran unopposed both in the general election and in a special election to fill the seat when the incumbent resigned before his term ended. "I enjoy getting out and meeting people, though, so I am looking forward to it. They'll know me pretty well by election day."

The new district includes Borden, Crane, Culberson, Glasscock, Hudspeth, Jeff Davis, Loving, Reagan, Reeves, Upton, Ward and Winkler counties as well as Howard County where Shaw lives. Howard County is the most populous in the district, with just over a third of the people and 37 percent of the registered voters. The new district is geographically one of the two largest in the state.

"It's got some of the most spectacular and beautiful country in Texas," Shaw said. "I'll be taking my camera along on the campaign trail."

Shaw said he would formally announce his plans late this year or in January. Meanwhile, the 28-year-old farmer/rancher said he will be traveling around the new district after the cotton harvest to visit with Democratic leaders.

Butterfield Savings took town by storm

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — While many savings institutions are burdened with low interest loans that steadily deplete their earnings and threaten them with insolvency, Butterfield Savings and Loan is prospering.

Butterfield enjoys a spread of 7.5 points between the 12 percent cost of its money and its 19.5 percent loan portfolio. It also charges 4.5 points on loans. Last month it says it cleared $90,000 on such fees.

Butterfield, based in Temecula, Calif., 50 miles north of downtown San Diego, is less than eight months old, and therein lies much of the explanation of why things should be so good for it, so bad for others.

Others savings and loan associations are older. In prior years they made housing loans at 7 percent for 30 years into the future. Then expenses rose, especially their money costs. They would have liked to raise the rate on those mortgages but they couldn't. They were locked in.

Butterfield, begun largely by Donald W. Endresen, 36, and his brother, William D., 27, isn't burdened by the past. It can profit immediately, doing nothing more creative than lending for more than it borrows.

The Endresens are the envy of many other savings and loan people at the U.S.League of Savings Association convention here, where survival is the primary topic of hallway discussions. The Endresens don't worry.

Instead, their concerns run in a different direction. They've applied for their first branch office and, says Bill, the executive vice president, "I'd like to open a branch every quarter."

Butterfield Savings and Loan Association, state chartered, opened April 1 with $2 million of capital. It now has $8.5 million of assets, and 1,800 accounts in a town whose service area embraces 7,000 people.

It got off to a running start, employing 21 workers, or several times the number in some savings and loan associations, at an annual payroll cost of $500,000. "We took the community by storm," they said.

They feel they got the best, enducing Douglas Weeks, top loan man at California Savings and Loan Association, to move from Los Angeles to Temecula by offering him "a six-digit financial package."

They advertised and promoted heavily, through the media, by mail and with their hot air balloon, for which two staffers have an operating license. "We have the balloon at every function," said Don, the president. At, for example, "the biggest event in town, the Great Temecula Tractor Race." The balloon towers over tiny Temecula.

Under its state charter, Butterfield is able to roam a bit more broadly than a federally chartered association. It has more leeway, for example, to build homes directly rather than as a lender.

Though many builders have gone bankrupt in recent months, Butterfield is seizing the opportunity. It is building and selling triplexes at nearby Lake Elsinore for $145,000. It puts its costs at $100,000.

"We're building at 8 percent less than a year ago for the identical building," Don said. He claims that recent hard estimates have been beaten by 14 percent, a result of competition among subcontractors. "They're so hungry for work that framers are blowing the foundations dry so they can get to work," he said, chuckling at the rarity of it.

The Endresens were entrepreneurs from the start. Neither has a college degree because they were more interested in the world of business. Said Don: "After eight years I almost finished." Bill never enrolled.

In 1976, on an initial capital investment they say was only $1,500, their Kecor Financial Group began syndicating troubled properties, especially in Texas. The brothers say Kecor now manages $50 million of assets. It has offices in San Antonio, and in Brea and Whittier, Calif.

The after-tax return for syndicate (as general partner, Krecor takes 25 percent of profits) partners was 23 percent, compounded annually, the brothers said. If they operated trough a savings and loan association, they reasoned, they could pay investors a considerably smaller but still attractive fixed return.

A savings and loan association, said Bill, "is an opportunity that a lot of people overlook," mainly because of the troubles of older associations. The reason more people don't realize it, said Don, is that people have their "headsets" on wrong, which is to say they don't hear the correct message.

Not everyone can do it, they concede. "A lot of people don't want to spend money to make money," said Bill. Said Don: "I don't think the traditional savings and loan or bank executive can necessarilly make everything work in this environment."

For one thing, said Don, "I think it's important that the board of directors be composed not of political hotshots or VIPs, but be sprinkled with construction, mortgage banking and real estate know-how."

Romania has different brand of Communism

By STEPHEN H. MILLERER
Associated Press Writer

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — More than a year after the founding of Poland's labor movement Solidarity, the name of Lech Walesa still goes unmentioned in Romania's tightly controlled press.

But the same press, unlike that in every other Soviet-bloc country, has pointedly not accused Solidarity, which Walesa heads, of anti-Soviet activity and defended Poles' rights to solve their own problems.

The government of President Nicolae Ceausescu, one of the most restrictive in the Soviet bloc, is unhappy with Solidarity and the continuing Polish problem, nevertheless.

Romania is suffering from economic troubles similar in some respects to those which led to Poland's 1980 strikes and the founding of Solidarity, a non-party organization unprecedented in Eastern Europe.

Ceausescu's government has threatened food hoarders with jail terms of up to five years and last month was forced to institute formal rationing of bread and flour.

Ceausescu has long discouraged political challengers of any sort in Romania, allowing the promotion of his own family and the celebration of himself in Eastern Europe's most intensive personality cult.

While other East-bloc countries bitterly attacked Solidarity from the first, Romania's press appeared to be trying to reveal as little as possible to Romanians about events in Poland.

Comment was scarce, as were news reports on Poland's troubles. The name Solidarity appears relatively seldom even now in Romania's press.

Diplomats and Bucharest residents say they cannot remember hearing or reading the name of Lech Walesa in Romanian broadcasts or newspapers.

But Ceausescu is also the architect of Romania's course of independence within the Soviet bloc, a course often hailed by Western politicians and one popular with many Romanians.

Romania, a non-Slavic Black Sea country of about 22 million people, lost considerable territory to the neighboring Soviet Union at the close of World War II.

Ceausescu rose to power in 1965 and enforced a clear de-Sovietizing of his country's brand of communism.

Romania has long resisted much of the tight economic integration encouraged in the Soviet bloc. Its national airline flies U.S.-made aircraft and the Russian language is not a required subject in Romanian schools.

Romania does not send troops to Warsaw Pact maneuvers and will not allow other troops of that East-bloc military alliance to maneuver on its soil.

Solidarity's national congress in September brought a new wave of charges around the Soviet bloc that the union was encouraging intolerable anti-Soviet activity in Poland.

Romania joined in the criticism, though avoiding the anti-Soviet issue, only after Solidarity issued a statement encouraging the founding of independent labor unions elsewhere in the East bloc.

The Romanian Communist Party newspaper Scinteia charged the congress had brought attacks "against the social order and the Polish party."

Elsewhere in the Romanian press there were attacks on "anti-state activities" and "reactionary forces," as well as "anti-socialist activities" in Poland.

But Romania, which condemned the 1968 Warsaw Pact invasion of Czechoslovakia, carefully did not join in the threatening charges that anti-Soviet forces were loose in Poland.

Even in the heat of its unusually extensive attacks on Solidarity, Ceausescu's government upheld Poland's right to resolve its own troubles.

"The Romanian party," Scinteia said, "does not wish in any way to interfere in Poland's internal affairs."

Rejection of farm bill again warned

By BOB FICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A compromise by congressional negotiators on peanut subsidies, criticized for retaining the "feudal system" ruling the crop for years, is prompting a second warning that the House will reject the entire multibillion-dollar farm bill.

"I don't see how you can expect this not to be an element to defeat the report," Rep. Stanley Lundine, D-N.Y., told the joint House-Senate conference committee Tuesday.

Lundine led the the successful House drive to abolish the long-standing support program, which has kept control of the domestic peanut crop in the hands of fewer than 60,000 people.

But late Tuesday, the committee voted to override that House decision, marked by a 91-vote margin, in favor of a plan that eliminates restrictive acreage allotments but keeps production of the most valuable peanuts in the hands of traditional Southern growers.

"Anybody who wants to, anybody, can grow peanuts in this country," Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., said of the compromise. In the past, those growing commercial peanuts without acreage allotments have been subject to substantial goverment fines.

Just last week, the negotiating committee got a threat similar to Lundine's when it overrode the House vote against sugar price supports. Rep. Peter Peyser, D-N.Y., said House members opposed to the sugar and peanut programs would join those angry about inadequate supports for other commodities in opposing the bill.

The conferees are trying to resolve differences between the $16.6 billion farm bill passed by the House and the Senate's $10.6 billion version, which is favored by President Reagan. In the process, the committee is approving compromises that exceed Reagan's budget guidelines and may risk a presidential veto.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Monday that he thought Reagan would sign a four-year bill costing as much as $500 million more than he wants to spend.

The committee already has spent $250 million on dairy, wool and rice agreements. Today, it faced a batch of proposed grain support compromises that would likely boost the bill by another $300 million or more.

Urging an end to the peanut program, Lundine claimed Tuesday that the strict production controls are keeping prices high and costing Americans $200 million a year. Rep.

AGRICULTURE

Paul Findley, R-Ill., called the compromise "a very strange system of landed privilege, about the closest thing we have to the divine right of kings."

But Rose argued that the compromise opens up production to all farmers while protecting the interests of traditional growers who have worked to promote the domestic edible peanut market.

Although it abolishes the acreage allotment, the compromise retains a production poundage quota. That quota, cut from the current 1.4 million tons a year to 1.2 million, will be distributed among former allotment holders.

Peanuts grown within the quota will be the only ones eligible for the government price-support loan of $580 a ton, up from the 1981 rate of $455. Those peanuts also will be the only ones marketed for domestic edible use.

Plants may soon collect nitrogen

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Writer

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Genetic manipulation of plants in the coming "greener revolution" will produce grains capable of absorbing nitrogen directly from the air and able to resist weed-killing chemicals, according to a Harvard biologist.

Frederick Ausubel, a professor of biology, said Tuesday that science over the next decade will go far beyond the green revolution of the 1930s, which marked the first large-scale use of fertilizers.

Many grain crops such as wheat, corn and rice cannot make nitrogen, so the chemical must be supplied in fertilizer. But Ausubel told the Council for the Advancement of Science Writers that crops of the next decade will be able to absorb nitrogen directly from the air, making fertilizer unnecessary.

The new generation of plants also will be resistant to weed killers, Ausubel said, enabling farmers to spray their fields without fear the crops will be destroyed along with the weeds.

Spectacular advances of genetic engineering in medicine have spurred the application of the technology to plants, Ausubel said.

"Plants are not more difficult to work on," he said. "It's just that nobody's ever worked on plants before."

Scientists now can take a single cell from the leaf of a plant, such as a petunia, and use it to grow an entirely new plant in a test tube, Ausubel said.

Plants like the test-tube petunia can be examined quickly for resistance to disease and herbicides, and will speed the development of useful new strains, he said.

Scientists only now are beginning to make the technique work with corn and grains.

Ausubel himself is working on the direct manipulation of plant genes, to give the plants the ability to produce nitrogen.

Many plants, such as soybeans and other legumes, get their nitrogen from bacteria that attach to their roots. Therefore they don't need nitrogen fertilizer.

The bacteria take nitrogen out of the air and give it to the plants. In return, the plants give the bacteria energy. The process is called nitrogen fixation.

Grains and other important food crops rely on nitrogen from fertilizer, because they do not form a biological partnership with bacteria, Ausubel said.

Ausubel thinks he can take nitrogen-fixing genes from bacteria and insert them into the genes of wheat and corn, so the plants will be able to get nitrogen from the air, the way the bacteria can.

But Ausubel warned that research, which could potentially save billions of dollars in food costs, already is leaving the universities and moving to private companies.

He suggested that the world's less-developed countries, which cannot afford costly, energy-consuming fertilizer, would benefit most from the advances if they were made by an international organization such as the United Nations.

Big farmers still getting biggest benefits

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department has published another study which shows, not surprisingly, that big farmers still get the biggest federal benefits and small farmers the least.

Critics of farm programs for nearly half a century have cited the bias in favor of larger farmers as one of the subsidy system's major flaws. Defenders say that to do otherwise would turn it into a welfare program.

According to the study, based on 1978 information, about $2 billion was paid to farmers under government commodity programs intended to support prices and provide subsidies when market prices are low.

Nearly half the $2 billion went to the largest 10 per cent of the farms — those with more than 500 acres of crops — including 53 percent of the payments for wheat, 41 percent for feed grain, 66 percent for cotton and 48 percent for rice.

While some small farmers received an average federal payment of $363 per farm, larger operators averaged more than $36,000, the report said.

Moreover, although there was a payment limit of $40,000 that year, some 279 farms qualified for more than that and 52 got more than $100,000 because of a loophole in the law that placed the restriction on people, not farms.

Thus, if several people were involved, the lid applied to each, not to the farm.

In 1970, Congress came up with payment limitations as part of a general farm bill, a measure much like the comprehensive legislation now being worked out in Senate-House conference meetings.

The limitation was $55,000 per crop per individual farmer. Sugar payments, which were large items at the time, were not covered, but the major crops of cotton, wheat and feed grain were.

Before the limitation was ordered by Congress, annual subsidies ranged into the millions of dollars, with one giant California corporation getting $4.4 million in farm subsidies in 1970, the last year of unlimited payments.

But while the limitation succeeded in paring the big subsidies, it did not have much impact on the overall costs of the programs, a 1972 review showed.

In 1971, the total savings attributed to the payment limitation rule amounted to less than $2.2 million — 1.6 percent of the $138.8 million paid to the big producers of cotton, feed grain and wheat who got more than $55,000 in 1970, the Agriculture Department said.

The huge payments prior to 1971, particularly to large corporate-type operations, helped raise the public consciousness about farm subsidies and led to the restrictions that were imposed. They also stirred up old controversies about the ethics of federal farm programs that mostly helped big farmers while doing little for the small producer.

Former USDA secretary listed in fair condition

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Former Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz was reported in fair condition today after stomach surgery, a Sarasota Memorial Hospital official said.

Butz, 72, head of the USDA under presidents Nixon and Ford, was admitted after complaining of stomach pains Tuesday, said Wilma Rowe, assistant director of nursing. She said Butz had requested no further statements on his condition be released.

Butz has a home on Longboat Key near Sarasota. The Indiana native is dean emeritus at the agriculture school of Purdue University in Lafayette, Ind.

He was released from jail July 24 after serving 25 days of a 30-day sentence on federal tax evasion charges. Butz pleaded guilty May 22 to understating his 1978 income tax return by $148,114. His lawyers said he paid restitution, interest, penalties and a $10,000 fine.

Butz resigned as head of the USDA after the disclosure that he had told an off-color racial joke.

Converting corn to fuel would increase economic output

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's annual economic output would rise by billions of dollars and its foreign trade deficit would be cut by millions more if corn now destined for export were diverted to fuel alcohol production, a new study says.

The study says converting the corn to alcohol for supplemental fuel would reduce oil imports while still leaving corn byproducts like distillers dried grain that can be exported for livestock feed.

"By exporting distillers dried grain or other byproducts instead of corn, the United States could supply its foreign customers the same amount of protein in a more concentrated form while at the same time untilizing domestically produced starch converted into ethanol as a supplemental fuel," according to the study prepared by Resource Planning Associates for the Energy Department's Office of Alcohol Fuels.

Using mid-1981 prices, the study said fuel alcohol, distillers dried grain and other byproducts obtained from a bushel of corn is worth $1.89 more to the gross national product than the raw corn combined with the value added to imported crude oil refined in the United States.

There would be a 5-cent-a-bushel improvement in the trade balance if the corn is converted to exported distillers dried grain and alcohol to reduce oil imports instead of just exporting the raw corn, the study said.

HAD JUST HALF the corn exported in 1980 been diverted under the proposal — about 1.22 billion bushels or 16 percent of U.S. production — the gross national product would have increased $2.3 billion and the trade deficit would have declined $61 million, the study said.

Increased production of fuel alcohol also would replace about 2.9 billion gallons of gasoline a year, easing dependence on foreign energy sources, it said.

In addition, transportation costs for exporting distillers dried grain would be lower than exporting raw corn because the distillers dried grain is concentrated, according to the study.

Corn, now selling at a national average price of $2.39 a bushel, would have to rise to $4.90 a bushel before it would be more valuable to export as a raw material than to convert to alcohol and export the byproducts, the study said.

The Reagan administration has pulled back from an earlier program of loan guarantees to encourage development of the fuel alcohol industry.

THE ONLY production incentive it has retained is the exemption from the 4-cent-a-gallon federal excise tax for gasohol, which contains 10 percent fuel alcohol and 90 percent gasoline.

An industry-government team says the Indian subcontinent holds a strong potential for increased sales of U.S. soybean oil.

The team, headed by Daniel Shaughnessy of the Agriculture Department's Foreign Agricultural Service, said the only question is whether the United State can meet the market competition Malaysia and Brazil are offering in India, Pakistan and Bangladesh.

After touring those three countries in October, the team reported that palm oil remains an important edible there.

"But consumer preference for soybean oil is growing and the vegetable oil requirements of the three countries are likely to continue to expand," Shaughnessy said. "This provides a strong market that is ripe for further U.S. penetration."

In 1981-82, the three countries are expected to import some 1.8 million metric tons of vegetable oil, 1.3 million going to India. Last year, the United States sold them less than 530,000 tons of soybean oil valued at about $330 million.

TO CAPTURE MORE of that market, the team recommended that existing government credit programs be strengthened or new ones developed and private industry initiate market development programs.

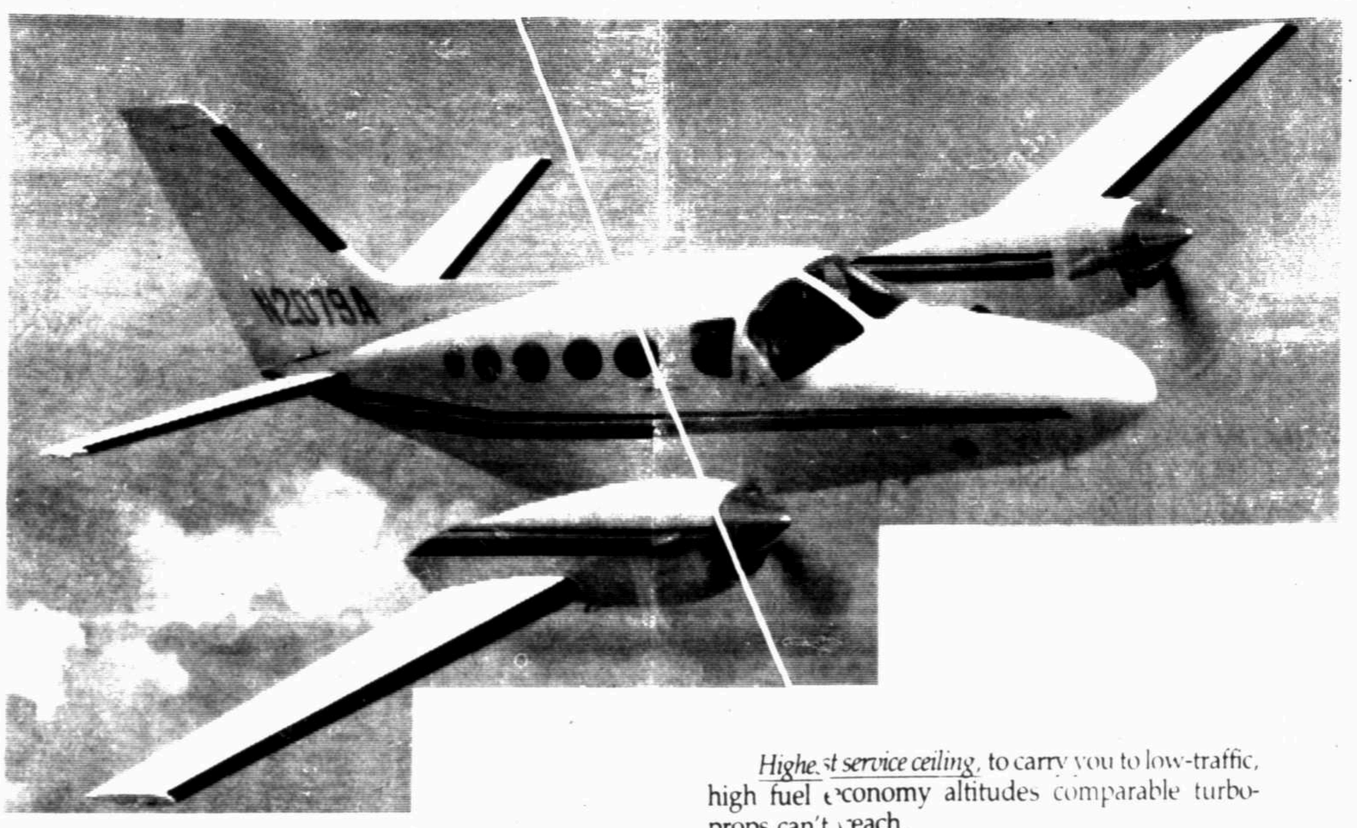
SAM IS COMING

Introducing The Cessna Corsair.

Unparalleled performance, comfort and price in the world's most advanced propjet.



Highest service ceiling, to carry you to low-traffic, high fuel economy altitudes comparable turboprops can't reach.

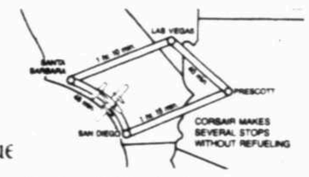
Most fuel efficient of all turboprops powered by the world-renowned Pratt and Whitney PT6A engine, up to 30% more efficient than competitive aircraft. And with a time between overhauls of 3500 hours (over five years' normal use) this engine represents an industry milestone for reliability.

Quietest turboprop in the sky today. The Corsair's carefully engineered combination of low RPM, wide prop-to-cabin clearance, soundproofing, and quiet engines make it the quietest turboprop available.

THE LOGIC OF BUYING A NEW CORSAIR.

As business travel grows steadily more expensive, the cost efficiency of propjet ownership becomes steadily more attractive. Propjets offer impressive speed and comfort at substantially lower cost than jets. And a degree of convenience airline passengers can only dream of.

Cessna's new Corsair delivers the propjet advantage, remarkable overall performance and a spacious, comfortable eight-place interior.



3 calls and 1000 miles in just one business day

The purchase of a Corsair would be a wise business decision any time. But now, it's a unique investment opportunity which allows you to take advantage of the recent changes in tax law. These changes include a combination of capital depreciation and investment tax credits that simply can't be recovered after December 31, 1981.

There may never be a better time to buy your new Corsair.

THE PERFORMANCE STORY.

In a propjet, the key word is performance. And performance is the Corsair's middle name. When compared to any plane near its size and price, the Corsair excels in virtually every category.

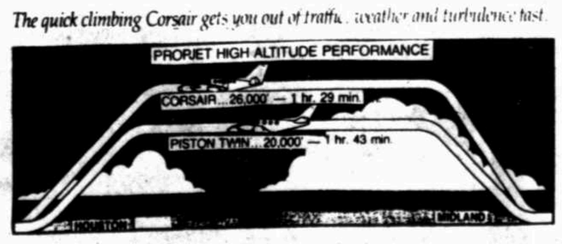
Corsair Performance at 29,000 feet:

Number on board	Cruise speed	Time to climb	Service ceiling	Sound level	Baggage allowance
8	253 kts	22 min	34,700 ft	71.4 dB	1100 lbs

Fastest cruising speed of any six-to-eight-place turboprop. To get you where you're going ahead of the pack.

Fastest climb to cruise altitude carries you quickly to uncrowded high altitude airways. While our current air traffic control system is being rebuilt, priority will be given to rebuilding the high altitude sector first. In a fast climbing Corsair, you'll be in that sector before any of the competition.

The quick climbing Corsair gets you out of traffic, weather and turbulence fast.



A STUDY IN COMFORT.

For all its performance excellence, the Corsair story is a great deal more than numbers. While you're traveling so efficiently and quickly, you'll also be traveling in surroundings carefully designed to let you work en route, or rest and arrive refreshed and ready for business. Not exhausted and ready for a nap. The Corsair's interior is truly a study in comfort.

Inside the Corsair, your first impression is that of a comfortable, tastefully appointed office. And that's exactly what we had in mind.

When you sit in one of those twenty-inch-wide First Class seats, you'll appreciate its comfort and the ambience created by a variety of fabrics including pure wool broadcloth or optional leather. Note the cabin width (greater than any competition), the 1100 pound baggage capacity, and the convenience of options including stereo tape deck, refreshment center, telephone, flushing toilet, the only on-ground heating and cooling in its price class, and much more.

Arrive relaxed and rested in seats as wide as First Class seating on an airline

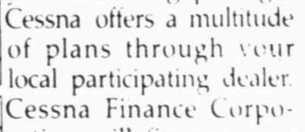
Also notice that Corsair comfort is more than simple interior amenities. For example, Cessna's exclusive trailing-link main landing gear, unique in general aviation, results in a smoothness in taxi and landing you have to experience to believe.

A WORD ON RELIABILITY.

You buy a turboprop to ensure you can go where you want, when you want. The use of proven components in our new Corsair assures you of a propjet that is technically advanced and, more important, that delivers unprecedented reliability. Based on service records to date, the Corsair is the most reliable aircraft of any kind you can buy today. Period.

But even the most reliable aircraft in the world needs service.

On that score, Cessna outshines all others. Each of our 26 Propjet Dealers nationwide was carefully chosen as the best to handle the Cessna propjet line. They have factory trained technicians standing ready to keep your Corsair in top condition. Our computer-inventoried parts department enables us to respond quickly to almost any request. When you buy a Corsair, you're buying over 50 years of Cessna service excellence along with it.



Border to border Corsair service is never far away.

THE COST OF OWNERSHIP.

A new Corsair is designed to cost less to own and operate than any competitive propjet. Fully equipped, the Corsair's suggested list price is still comfortably under $1 million.

To give you maximum flexibility in determining your financing package, Cessna offers a multitude of plans through your local participating dealer. Cessna Finance Corporation will finance your Corsair for up to nine years at fixed rates, with no prepayment penalty. Rates vary according to the percentage of the purchase cost and the financing term. Representative examples are shown on the table.

THE ULTIMATE TEST.

The Corsair is a new propjet that, we think you'll agree, looks and sounds extremely good. But the real test is to experience the genuine article yourself, in the cabin or cockpit. Here's how:

Cessna invites you to take your next one-day business trip in a brand new Corsair. You pay one dollar per mile. We pay the rest of the flying costs.

(Offer good through December 31, 1981. We'll schedule your trip with you at the earliest date possible.)

4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ◇.

This hand turned up in a national pairs championship. It rewarded those declarers who displayed superior technique.

Note North's raise to two spades. Even though the partnership was using four-card major-suit opening bids, the raise was a better choice than one no trump because the North hand contained a ruffing value to offset the fact that the raise was made with three low trumps. South wasted no time in getting to game.

The queen of diamonds was a popular opening lead, and most declarers won in dummy and took the trump finesse. West won and returned a diamond, and declarer ended up down one, losing a trick in each suit, or a club overruff.

At the table we watched, declarer gave himself an extra chance. He won the opening lead in his hand and led a low club toward the jack. Had this lost to the queen, declarer would have fallen back on the trump finesse for his contract. As the cards lay, however, West won the queen of clubs and continued with another diamond to force dummy's ace. Declarer cashed the jack of clubs, crossed to his hand with a high trump and discarded dummy's diamond loser on the king of clubs. He then ruffed a diamond on the table.

Declarer was now in the fortunate position of being able to make his contract even if he lost a trump trick. His only loser other than the club he had already surrendered was a heart. But the trump finesse was now a distinct liability—if it lost, declarer would be exposed to a club ruff. In the interests of safety, declarer led a trump to his remaining honor, and was pleasantly surprised to find that the queen dropped offside. As a result, he emerged with an unexpected overtrick.

Communist party campaigns long, hard in Mexico

By LE KILLGORE
San Angelo Standard-Times

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — The National Action Party, PAN, "cannot mobilize enough people to win the December municipal elections in Acuna, Piedras Negras or Jimenez," longtime party official Jose Luis Castro Rivas said last week in Acuna, Mexico.

By the same token, Communist strength in the north of Mexico is insufficient for a victory at the polls on Dec. 6, he said in an interview with the San Angelo Standard-Times.

ALTHOUGH THE Communist Party of Mexico is campaigning long and hard in Acuna, Castro Rivas said the next mayor probably will belong to the Institutional Revolutionary Party, PRI, which has dominated Mexico's governments and politics for the past 60 years.

Castro Rivas sat in the little office behind his key-making shop and, with occasional interruptions to smile at his 5-year-old son Cesar, offered his view of politics in Mexico.

For 60 years, he said, "PRI has been promising changes the people still await.

"I am sure that the people of Mexico are masochists — they always wish to suffer. That is why we are supermacho!" he smiled ruefully.

The PAN was formed in 1939 by a group critical of the PRI's refusal to align itself with the Catholic Church and was, initially, made up of rightist-leaning, strongly Catholic elitists.

Today PAN "is nationalist, neither to the right nor to the left and our membership are the medium poor," Castro said.

Gonzalo Garcia Gonzales, the PAN candidate for mayor of Acuna, said, "We in the PAN do not seek wealth or power, but rather we wish to run the government in such a way that the public is given what is needed."

Garcia Gonzales, who is an accountant, has three children, Lucia, 5, Lulu, 4, and Gonzalo, 3.

Of the several parties operating in opposition to the PRI, PAN has gained substantial strength, with 45 representatives in the federal Chamber of Deputies (equivalent to the U.S. House of Representatives).

THE PAN DEPUTIES were appointed to the chamber by the PRI under the Mexican Constitutional provisions which allow representation by appointment to any party gaining a minimum of 2.5 percent of the vote in a general election.

"Day by day, month by month, the PAN gets stronger," he said. "We get deputies in the Chamber of Deputies ... because the PRI wishes to give the appearance of operating a democracy."

Improving the living conditions of the poor has been targeted by both the PRI and Communist party in campaigning. The woman above lives without electricity, water, plumbing or heat in her home. Above she turns away from the fire at her feet to take her skillet of beans and eggs into her house for dinner.

Castro Rivas serves on the PAN regional council, the state committee, secretary of communications and editor of the PAN newspaper and director of the northern district of Coahuila.

Active himself, he hopes for more participation in the political process: "It hurts me to see how many people vote, and do not know for whom they are voting.

"Our biggest problem is that the people are apathetic," he said, adding that 'many people aren't even willing to take the responsibility for their own homes — so how can they take the responsibility for their government?

"The first priority," he said, "is to teach them to help their families, and then teach them how to vote."

Mesquite video games case argued before Supreme Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — Second-guessing about whether the Supreme Court should be hearing the case at all took up about half the hour devoted to arguments on a Mesquite, Texas, ordinance restricting youngsters' playing of video games.

"We (took it) so we have to do something with the case," an apparently frustrated Justice William H. Rehnquist said at one point Tuesday during the discussion on whether the high court made a mistake in agreeing to hear the case.

The question the court agreed to hear is whether people younger than 17 have a constitutional right to play video games in shopping mall arcades.

Lawyers in the case were asked about apparent hurdles to the justices' deciding the case on its merits. Those hurdles include the fact that the law was struck down partly because it violated the Texas Constitution, and the Supreme Court does not review state law questions.

Also, the dispute might be legally irrelevant because Mesquite has since repealed the ordinance and replaced it with another, possibly making the dispute legally irrelevant.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last year struck down the Mesquite ordinance as unconstitutional.

"The application of this age requirement to coin-operated amusement centers violates the federal and Texas constitutional guarantees of equal protection of the law (and) unconstitutionally infringes on freedom of association," the appeals court said.

However, the Supreme Court never has said there is a constitutional right to social, as opposed to religious or political, association.

Mesquite, seeking to reinstate its ban, is asking the Supreme Court to rule, in the words of city lawyer Elland Archer, that playing coin-operated machines enjoys no special constitutional protection.

"Obviously, children do not have all the rights of adults," Archer argued.

He said the city passed the ordinance to prevent children from "spending money they can ill afford to spend" and to keep them out of places where fights or drug-trafficking might occur.

The controversy began five years, when Aladdin's Castle Inc. first became interested in opening a coin-operated amusement center in the Dallas suburb's Town East Mall.

But the city manager refused to grant a license, relying on information from the city police chief that Bally was linked to organized crime. When a state trial ordered that a license be granted, the city council responded by reviving its age restriction for playing such amusement center games.

Philip Tone, the lawyer representing Aladdin's, told the justices that the video machines "are a form of expression and communication" and should "fall within the protection of the First Amendment."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Since its creation, the FBI has filed 900 million sheets of papers on 25 million investigations, ranging from the super-sensitive to the trivial — from espionage to the illegal use of railroad passes, a court-ordered study reveals.

The investigations include 1,303,078 in the general areas of "subversive matters, internal security, domestic security investigations." These fill 44 million pages. The files also reveal the bureau conducted 1,415,763 investigations into possible violations of the draft laws. Most of these have been destroyed.

The report, eight inches thick, was prepared by 17 experts from the National Archives who were given top secret classifications so they could study a sample of the FBI's records to recommend which should be destroyed and which kept.

Just the listing of the 229 classifications under which the FBI filed its investigations testifies to the sweep of its interests, sometimes into mundane matters.

Over the years, the bureau investigated and filed the fruits of its investigations into such matters as violations of the migratory bird act, selling liquor at Army camps, interstate transportation of stolen cattle, desecration of the flag and violations of the switchblade knife act.

U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene ordered the contents of the bureau's records examined and inventoried in 1979 after a coalition of activists filed suit to halt the destruction of FBI records in field offices.

THE SUIT ACCUSED the FBI of destroying evidence of FBI break-ins and attempts to discredit invididuals and organizations. The FBI denied that, saying the disposal of files was handled according to law.

Greene ordered the FBI not to destroy any records until the study was finished.

Among the 47 groups and individuals bringing the suit were former Defense Department analyst Daniel Ellsberg, radical leader Angela Davis and Michael and Robert Meeropol, the sons of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, who were executed in 1953 for espionage, the American Friends Service Committee and the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

In their report, filed Monday with the court, the archivists recommend that the FBI be required to retain — and ultimately turn over to the archives — about 20 percent to 25 percent of its records — five times more than most government agencies are required to keep. Eventually the records would be opened to the public — but usually not until 50 years after a case is closed.

That means the public may soon be able to study records of FBI activities against bootleggers and bank robbers in the Bonnie and Clyde era of the 1930s — the heyday of the G-man. Some names may be blanked out, however.

In the meantime, the inventory sheds light on FBI priorities and procedures.

FOR EXAMPLE, WHEN President Harry S. Truman set up a Loyalty Review Board in 1947 and directed the FBI to investigate the loyalty of all government workers and job applicants, the FBI urged caution.

"The bureau's instructions from headquarters to the field stressed a businesslike approach that recognized 'there is a distinction between liberalism and communism,'" the report noted. At the same time, the bureau directed agents to look beyond criminal activities and into the "loose morals" of government workers.

All told, 51,970 field investigations were conducted and most of the records were destroyed before Greene issued his order.

The archivists' report lends substance to suspicions that J. Edgar Hoover, director of the bureau from 1928 until his death in 1972, had little appetite for enforcing civil rights laws.

The report says: "A 1956 meeting of J. Edgar Hoover, Attorney General (Herbert) Brownell and President Eisenhower ended Brownell's efforts to establish a broadened federal responsibility for protection of civil rights.

"Hoover deprecated the nascent civil rights activities, stated that the KKK (Ku Klux Klan) was moribund and the NAACP was being infiltrated by the Communist Party. His attitudes set the tenor of investigations of the FBI until his death."

The archivists confirmed rumors that Hoover kept a personal set of files on "rumors and allegations against prominent persons" and on "very prominent political figures — former presidents, Cabinet officers, ambassadors and congressional leaders."

Guardian Angels to recruit in other Texas cities

HOUSTON (AP) — With the first Texas chapter of the Guardian Angels, a volunteer citizen security force, beginning patrols today, the group's national leader says he hopes to start organizing in several other cities in the state soon.

Curtis Sliwa, who founded the group in New York in 1979, said Tuesday he plans recruiting drives in Beaumont, Port Arthur, Dallas, Galveston and San Antonio.

The 40-member Houston chapter, which just completed several weeks of training, was to begin its work with a noontime patrol of downtown, Sliwa said.

The 33 men and seven women bring national membership to 1,963, he said.

Sliwa predicted city leaders would change their opposition to the group after patrols begin. Sliwa and Joe Perri began organizing in Houston in June that he was worried that such a group would cause problems.

Nuclear warning shot long considered by NATO

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the secret planning councils of the Atlantic alliance, NATO strategists long have pondered the possibility that a nuclear warning shot might be fired over the sea or into the air to turn back a Soviet invasion of Western Europe.

But defense officials of four administrations say the idea never became part of NATO strategy. And President Reagan said Tuesday that there still is confusion over its status.

Former Defense Secretaries Melvin R. Laird and Clark Clifford both said the warning shot option was discussed within NATO, but only as one of several tactical options.

Harold Brown, another former defense secretary, said the option dates to the 1960s and was considered a deterrent. But he said it "never got incorporated into detailed planning." Laird traces it back more than three decades, to the Truman era.

PAUL WARNKE, another former Pentagon official, called the warning shot option "an old chestnut."

The issue was revived a week ago, when Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. said in congressional testimony that "there are contingency plans in the NATO doctrine to fire a nuclear weapon for demonstrative purposes, to demonstrate to the other side that it is exceeding the limits of toleration in the conventional area."

A day later, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger testified that there was no such contingency plan. "There is nothing in any plan I know that contains anything remotely resembling that, nor should it," Weinberger said.

The Reagan administration then issued a statement calling both men right: Haig in saying that the option "has been considered by NATO," Weinberger in saying "that this option has never ben translated into a military plan."

TO ERASE THE contradiction, the clarifying statement revised what the two Cabinet officers had said.

Asked about it at his news conference Tuesday, Reagan said he hadn't been party to 30 years of NATO contingency planning, which he said has proven a deterrent to military action in Europe. Pressed on the specific question of a nuclear warning shot to turn back an invasion, he replied:

"Oh, well, that — there seems to be some confusion as to whether that it still a part of NATO strategy or not, and so far I've had no answer to that."

The former Pentagon officials said in interviews that the idea had not been incorporated into NATO strategy.

"I don't think it was one that was considered over the last four or five years," said Laird, who served as defense secretary during the Nixon administration.

Dismissing it as "an old contingency plan," Laird said it was one of about 150 considered by NATO over the years and "probably one of the top 30 when we had a 3-to-1 advantage" over the Soviets.

"I'm not saying I supported it back then, but there were some who thought it would be a deterrent," he said.

Clifford, who ran the Pentagon in the latter days of the Johnson administration, said he took part in discussions of the warning shot option at meetings of a NATO nuclear planning group in 1968. He said "it was one of 10 or 15 ideas" considered then.

"At no time did it reach the stage that anybody was recommending it," said Clifford. "Had it come up for a vote, I would have been unalterably opposed."

CLIFFORD, WHO has been an adviser to every Democratic president since Harry S. Truman, said that in his view, neither the United States nor its European allies could be the first to detonate a nuclear device "even if construed on our part as a warning."

Warnke, then the assistant defense secretary in charge of tactical nuclear strategy, said the idea was to use a tactical nuclear device as "the shot across the bow," but it was never put into NATO doctrine. He said the plan was floated in an effort to spur the NATO allies to build up their conventional weapons.

Warnke, who was Jimmy Carter's principal SALT negotiator, said the theory was to stop the Soviets by firing a nuclear shot at sea.

Eleventh policeman suspended

HOUSTON (AP) — Newly discovered information has led to the suspension with pay of an eleventh police officer charged with beating residents of an apartment building while shouting racial epithets, police said.

Department spokesman Larry Troutt said Tuesday that Morris S. Davis, 21, was relieved of duty Monday after an Internal Affairs Division investigation implicated him in the affair.

Troutt said Davis was relieved "because of information developed during the course of the investigation."

Painter Adell Criswell, a resident of the Delta Apartment Hotel in Houston's impoverished Fifth Ward, said a group of men wearing blue jeans and T-shirts and carrying a Confederate flag beat up eight people early Nov. 4.

Witnesses said they recognized the men as police officers.

Criswell said the men rushed into the building and began kicking in doors. He said they gashed one man's head with a flashlight, knocked another man's teeth out and threw another down a flight of stairs.

He said they also forced their way into a woman's room and held a cocked pistol against her head.

WHAT DOES ONE OF THE WORLD'S GREAT ENTERTAINERS DO FOR ENTERTAINMENT?

He gets involved with a young model's torrid love affair in "Come Pour the Wine." He explores the Hollywood only the cops and killers know in Joseph Wambaugh's "The Glitter Dome." He follows the progress of a southern girl's love affair with a Yankee in "Ashes in the Wind."

In other words, when Sid Caesar wants to be entertained, he does what millions of people do. He curls up with a good book.

Sid Caesar, star of stage, screen and television, entertains himself with a good book. Taken from one of our current TV commercials.

And we at The Hearst Corporation are very happy about that.

Because we publish countless books. Best sellers in hard cover from Arbor House and William Morrow & Company. Paperbacks from Avon. And decorating, cooking, boating and do-it-yourself books from Hearst Books.

But Hearst is a total communications company. We also publish 13 newspapers, coast to coast. From the Midland Reporter Telegram to Albany's Times Union and The Knickerbocker News.

We publish 20 magazines like Cosmopolitan and Good Housekeeping. We're in business publications. And we distribute magazines in 30 countries, in 8 languages.

We operate 3 television stations and 7 radio stations in major markets like Baltimore, Pittsburgh and Milwaukee. We're even launching cable TV networks.

King Features, home of "Popeye" and "Blondie," is Hearst too. And that's not to mention other industries we're involved in. Like forest products, ranching and real estate.

But basically, if you can read it, watch it or hear it, chances are Hearst is involved in it. We inform you, entertain you, challenge you.

We give Sid, and millions of people, the chance to read about everything from Julius Caesar to Caesar Salad.

THE HEARST CORPORATION

We talk to millions of you. One at a time.

Cold war may be brewing between U.S. and Canada

By HUGH MULLIGAN
AP Correspodent

TORONTO (AP) — Any month now, maybe any day, alert defenders of Detroit, Massena, N.Y., Newport, Vt., Cut Bank, Mont. and similar frontier towns may be sending up the cry, "The Canadians Are Coming!"

The next chill wind from the north may bring the entire 80,000 military forces of Canada howling across our 4,000-mile common border, that peaceful stretch of mountain and prairie fortified up to now, on the far side anyway, by only a thin skin of paranoia.

Little Brother to the north, who happens to be the second largest country on Earth after Russia, has grown restless and resentful. Revenge is in the frosty air. Apparently the cold war that followed the War of 1812 ranks now as the longest and coldest of all cold wars, no doubt due to those Canadian highs and arctic blasts that you hear about all the time from the TV weather forecasters.

THESE ALARMING deteriorations in our north of the border relations I sensed while attending a seminar entitled "A Few Things About Americans that Drive Canadians Nuts" at the annual meeting of The Associated Press Managing Editors in Toronto last month.

There was an asterisk after the title that called attention in parenthesis to what was purported to be one particular pet Canadian peeve: "including the fact that most U.S. citizens don't seem to know that Canadians are Americans, too."

The fact also seemed to elude the three Canadian panelists, who kept referring to all us Archie Bunkers below the border as "Americans" rather than "United Statesians," although a Professor Robin Mathews did cite this geographical slight among his many bitter beefs. But even he kept lapsing into the vernacular and forgot to remember not to confer the American designation solely on us.

Mel Hurtig, a publisher in Edmonton, Alberta, was riled up over statistics showing that gringos south of the St. Lawrence owned just about 80 per cent of everything in Canada from the biggest industries to the smallest motels. He didn't say anything about the beer and the booze, however.

Allan Fotheringham, a witty columnist from the Southam Newspapers in Vancouver, pointed up the pervasiveness of the U.S. takeover of Canada by describing himself as being "from B.C. — British California." He found cross-border cultural exchanges somewhat limited: "We give you hockey players; you give us reruns of M-A-S-H." U.S. interest in Canadian affairs, he suggested, peaked with "Margaret Trudeau dancing with the Rolling Stones." As for Canadian participation in our national pastime, he summed up the dream-drained Montreal Expos as "30 Americans beaten on the final day of the playoffs by a 20-year-old Mexican kid."

FOTHERINGHAM didn't think our lack of knowledge of his country, "founded by the original draft dodgers during the Revolutionary War," was all bad. He paraphrased Robert Frost on fences: "ignorance makes good neighbors."

But the bitterest war cries were raised by the feisty little professor from Carleton University, who is a leading light in Canada's tiny National Party. Professor Mathews' bluntly spoken message added up to: No more Mr. Nice Guy. We whipped you in 1775. We whipped you in 1812. We can do it again. More and more of us Canadians hate you. He used the word hate at least three times.

Mathews insisted that Canadians are NOT just like Americans (oops, United Statesers — his mistake, too) at all . They're not gun crazy and they don't go around beating up other countries like Vietnam and El Salvador. He viewed the United States citizenry as a passel of pistol-packing Philistines who cross the border and hold shooting irons at the heads of litte Canadian kids to make them wear Harvard and Yale T-shirts, watch American westerns (thereare no Canadian oaters, he argued) and squander their study time glued to U.S. TV channels.

THE PROFESSOR, by the way, teaches Canadian literature, as opposed, I guess, to American and English literature. Apparently he never has got over his pique at Robert W. Service not winning the Nobel Prize.

The trouble with the Mathews argument is that it bogs down in the War of 1812. No one on either side of the border really understands the War of 1812. Back as far as 1815, they didn't even understand the War of 1812 because it was still going on when it was over.

Stephen Leacock, the Canadian humorist, came closest to understanding the War of 1812. He used it to demonstrate how fears of being swallowed up by the United States have always haunted the north country.

"Annexation to the United States!," Leacock wrote in one of his last essays. "What a strange part that idea, that phrase has played in our history... It has served as a sort of bogey or warning — just as children are told that the Devil will get them if they are not good — or as an invitation out of darkness into light, out of tyranny into freedom, as when Benjamin Franklin came up to Montreal in 1775, expecting to draw down the Canadians as easily as he did the lightning. But the Canadians, pretty well all French then, weren't taking any. The United States, or rather, the American Colonies, seemed far too British, too Protestant, for their taste.

BUT IN THE War of 1812, it was the other way around. So many upper Canadians by that time sympathized with the United States and wanted to join the Republic that it has been estimated that one-third of the population was on the American side. But as at least one-half of the New England people were on the British side, that only evens things up. That's the queer way our history's been conducted all the way through — both sides on each side. By which means they were able to keep the War of 1812 going till they got word from Europe that it was over. Luckily they had time, while the news was still on the ocean, to fight the battle of New Orleans."

Anyhow, we can alleviate these war jitter and start to mend our lack of Canadian fences if, as Ontario Premier William Davis pointed out to the editors, we cease to perceive Canada as a place where people watch baseball games in mukluks. Why, as every Canadian knows, Toronto is south of Minneapolis, which must be cold comfort in December. And there are days when Hudson Bay is as warm as Biscayne Bay. In fact, there were two of them in 1930. or was it 1812?

The test is located 2,480 feet from the south, and 1,200 feet from the west line of section 136, block D-11, C&MRR survey.

It is 3/5 mile northeast of Phillips Petroleum Co. No. 1 Jones, a 13,465-foot test, dry and abandoned July 27, 1965.

WARD PROSPECTOR

Hissom Drilling Co., Midland, has scheduled a 6,500-foot wildcat, one mile north of Barstow.

Designated the No. 1 A.L. Chase, et al, the site is 1,787 feet from the southeast, and 467 feet from the southwest line of section 184, block 34, H&TC survey.

There are a few 18,000-foot dry holes in the vicinity, but apparently there are no wells of comparable depth significantly near the drillsite.

Official criticizes Reagan decision

CHICAGO (AP) — Fred Hartley, chairman of the American Petroleum Institute, mildly criticized President Reagan's decision to shelve for now his proposal to accelerate the deregulation of natural gas prices.

Reagan decided last week to delay submitting his plan to Congress after congressional Republicans told him it would not gain approval without a provision calling for a windfall profits tax on gas production revenues.

"Perhaps there's a rational explanation somewhere, but to me it's just another example of how governments can work for us one day and against us the next," Hartley told the institute's annual meeting Tuesday.

Hartley also is chairman and chief executive of Union Oil Co. of California.

The institute, the oil industry's main trade organization, announced it would support the administration's proposal for speeding up price decontrol. But its members did not agree whether to accept a windfall profits tax as the price of gaining congressional approval of the proposal.

Clifton C. Garvin Jr., chairman of Exxon Corp. and chairman-elect of the API, told reporters the institute would lobby Congress next year for approval of accelerated decontrol. But he said he had not decided whether Exxon would support a bill that included a windfall profits tax provision.

Under current federal law, price controls are being phased out gradually for domestic natural gas discovered after April 20, 1977. The final phaseout for "new" gas is set for Jan. 1, 1985, while controls would remain on "old" gas.

The Reagan administration has drawn up a plan under which old gas would be included in decontrol and the price increases during the control phaseout would be steeper than under present law. The final phaseout would still be Jan. 1, 1985.

Opponents of accelerated decontrol contend it would sharply increase consumers' heating bills, add to inflation and umemployment and slow the nation's economic growth.

Supporters say decontrol would stimulate drilling activity and the development of new domestic supplies of natural gas while adding little to inflation.

Some Wall Street analysts believe the major oil companies will be content to let the issue of accelerated decontrol die.

Trio reunited in 'Buddy, Buddy'

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Don't be misled by the listing in the building directory: Jalem Productions, John Uhler, President.

The man behind the door is John Uhler Lemmon, better known as Jack. The other morning he breezed into his office (Lemmon doesn't travel any other way) to talk about his latest movie, "Buddy Buddy." A more apt title would be "Buddy Buddy Buddy," since the MGM release reunites Lemmon, Walter Matthau and Billy Wilder.

The trio collaborated on the 1966 "Fortune Cookie," which won Matthau an Oscar as supporting actor, and on "The Front Page" in 1973. Wilder and Lemmon have worked together on seven films, and Lemmon and Matthau costarred in "The Odd Couple" and on the stage in "Juno and the Paycock."

Lemmon related the genesis of "Buddy Buddy":

"Several years ago I saw a French movie with Lino Ventura and Jacques Brel which was called in this country 'A Pain in the A--,' not a very good title but more printable than the French one. I enjoyed the picture but thought no more about it.

"A couple of years ago, (producer) Jay Weston called my agent, Lenny Hirshan, about a French movie he thought would be marvelous for me and Walter. As soon as I heard about it, I said, 'God, yes, why didn't I think of that?' I saw the picture again with Lenny and Walter, who had never seen it. Afterward, we looked at each other and said, 'Billy!' Then Billy saw the picture and said, 'Terrific.'"

Wilder fashioned a script with his usual collaborator, I.A.L. Diamond, employing the basic plot of the French film, with a few changes.

ENTERTAINMENT
●

Instead of a shirt salesman, Lemmon is a TV network censor bent on suicide after his wife (Paula Prentiss) has left him for a sex therapist (Klaus Kinski). Lemmon takes a hotel room next to Matthau, a Mafia hit man trying to kill a government witness outside the courthouse across the street.

"The picture is very much like 'The Odd Couple' in that 75 per cent of the action takes place between Walter and me in the two rooms," Lemmon remarked. "I'm trying to get attention from my wife by going out in a blaze of glory, while the thing Walter needs least is the attention of police while he's trying to carry out the hit."

About working with Wilder: "Billy is like most writer-directors: he directs out of necessity — to see that what he wrote gets on the screen. He says that 95 per cent of the film is done when he finally completes the last 'ifs' and 'buts' in the script. I think he changed five or six things in 'Buddy Buddy,' which is more than in our seven pictures together."

About working with Matthau: "I've never 'worked' with Walter; it's just fun. Less preparation is needed for us, because it's just like sitting down to the breakfast table and talking. ... When we did our first picture together, 'Fortune Cookie,' it was as if we had done 10 films."

"Buddy Buddy" almost resulted in tragedy. The escape scene called for the two stars to use a laundry chute. Matthau decided to try the stunt, and he bounced off the mattresses at the bottom and fell head-first to the stage floor, 10 feet below.

"I thought he was dead," Lemmon recalled with a shudder. "I was the first one to reach him, and I still don't remember getting down the two floors. He hit a couple of bars on the way down, and I think that is what saved him."

Filming was suspended, with only a closing sequence left to shoot in Honolulu. Lemmon was desperate, since he was overdue in Mexico for "Missing" with Costa-Gavras and was in danger of losing the film. Despite a broken shoulder, Matthau volunteered to fly to Hawaii and finish the film so Lemmon could meet his schedule. But then, that's what buddies are for.

'Priest of Love' gives faithful account

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

"Priest of Love" appears to be a doggedly faithful account of the last, tormented years of novelist-artist D.H. Lawrence. If the tale is true, then Lawrence seems to have saved all his compassion and sensuality for his books. The movie pictures him as an ill-tempered boor who antagonizes everyone except three devoted women whose love is obviously blind. That fine actor, Ian McKellen, who bears a startling resemblence to Lawrence, is unable to make him attractive. The women fare better: Janet Suzman as the flamboyant Mrs. Lawrence; Ava Gardner (looking splendid) as his American patroness; Penelope Keith as his deaf, cheerfully devoted follower. Production values are first rate, with lovely vistas of New Mexico, Mexico and Italy. Rated R for language.

Refugees to be housed at isolated base

FORT DRUM, N.Y. (AP) — Up to 4,000 Cubans and Haitians who fled their tropical homelands for the United States will find themselves housed temporarily at this isolated military reservation known for sub-zero temperatures and snowy winters.

Local officials said they were surprised at President Reagan's announcement Tuesday, and Merrill Blanchard, chairman of the Jefferson County government, said, "I anticipate they will have to convert some of the barracks into hospitals because everyone will have pneumonia."

"This is a great shock to me," said Ed Cosmic, supervisor of the Wilna, a town of 6,500 residents that encompasses part of Fort Drum, which is less than 20 miles from the Canadian border.

Reagan said that Fort Drum would become the temporary detention camp for all illegal aliens scattered among 16 facilities. The biggest contingent will be from Fort Chaffee, Ark., which houses 2,700 Haitians and Cubans.

The Justice Department said criminals and suspected criminals detained at Fort Chaffee and other installations will remain behind at base prisons.

Many refugees now detained may have been found homes with families or church groups by the time Fort Drum opens its gates.

A date for moving in the refugees has not been set, but officials said it would be as soon as possible.

Winter weather has begun here and Art Brill, a State Department spokesman, acknowledged that the frigid temperatures would be a shock to the refugees. But he said Fort Drum is the only U.S. military base that met the government's specifications and its winters are not as severe as those in Glascow, Mont., another base that was considered.

No permanent base for the refugees has been selected, although Brill said McAlester, Okla. may fit the bill.

Fort Drum can hold 5,000 detainees, the Justice Department said. It was built to house 20,000 soldiers and today is primarily used as a training base for the Army Reserve and the National Guard. In recent years, the Army's winter war games have been held here.

Karl Burns, the mayor of nearby Watertown, the only city in Jefferson County, said he expected Fort Drum's designation as the national detention center would help the economy of his city of 30,000.

Rep. David Martin, R-N.Y., "assures me this is a temporary facility and the long-range program is to increase the military at Fort Drum," Burns said. "So what I understand is there will be some local jobs created and some material bought from the area."

Local officials say they expect the federal government will provide the money and services to care for the illegal aliens.

Brill said 97 percent of the Haitians landing on U.S. shores are found to be "here for economic reasons" and don't qualify as political refugees entitled to U.S. protection. But he said laws makes it difficult for the United States to return them to Haiti.

Major rail union seeks wage gain

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negotiators for a major rail union are seeking ratification of a new contract that would provide modest wage gains and retain a cost-of-living formula the leadership had hoped to improve.

Richard Kilroy, president of the 110,000-member Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks, said the tentative settlement on a 39-month contract with the industry, was a recognition of "the economic situation."

BRAC and five other unions reached tentative agreement on new contracts with the National Railway Labor Conference, the industry bargaining arm, after months of negotiations that were stalled by congressional action on the railroad retirement system and on continuing subsidies for Amtrak and Conrail.

"With the economic situation in the country today, and with the present administration that would be involved (in any labor dispute), we felt at this time that it would be better to reach the best agreement possible under the circumstances," Kilroy said.

The pact negotiated for members of BRAC would provide pay raises amounting to 11 percent over a 39-month period, retroactive to last April 1.

When the cost of living allowance is included, however, the wage gains over the next 39 months would amount to 32.5 percent — assuming that inflation rises at an annual rate of 10 percent this year and 8 percent in each of the next two years.

Union leaders, whose members have made wage concessions to Conrail and have accepted a first-time worker contribution to the pension plan, had wanted to lift the cap that stops cost-of-living allowances after inflation exceeds 8 percent. That was possible only in the first year of the pact, however.

Kilroy said the union's negotiators were fearful of a contract impasse that would trigger provisions of the Railway Labor Act, which would empower President Reagan to appoint an emergency arbitration panel. He said union bargainers felt such a panel would be pro-business.

Kilroy said the pact was the best that could be negotiated and said union leaders were reluctant to press demands any further in view of the Reagan administration's stern handling of the air controllers strike.

A typical unionized railroad employee now gets $10.26 an hour, including the cost of living allowance.

Kilroy said the percentage of pay increase is smaller than in the contract that expired March 31.

The contract, which would expire July 1, 1984, would give union members a 2 percent pay raise, retroactive to April 1 and a 3 percent hike retroactive to Oct. 1. It would provide 3 percent pay raises on July 1, 1982 and July 1, 1983.

Negotiators for five other other unions also reached an accord with management, although terms of those pacts were not immediately available. Industry and union sources said, however, they were very similar to the provisions negotiated in the BRAC contract.

The industry has yet to settle on new contracts with seven other unions, including signalmen, firmen and engineers.

Besides settling with the leaders of BRAC, the industry reached tentative accords with the Brotherhood of Maintanence of Way Employees, representing 94,000 workers; Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, 40,000 and the shop craft units of three large unions, the International Association of Machinists, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Sheet Metal Workers International Union.

Saudi government makes fuss about Israeli spy planes

By NICOLAS B. TATRO
Associated Press Writer

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Observers here in the Saudi capital believe there are three reasons why the Saudi government is making a fuss now about Israeli aerial spying that has been going on for months.

The Saudi government only a few weeks ago denied that Israeli reconnaissance planes were penetrating its airspace even though Saudi officials were saying privately that they were.

On Monday, the government reversed its course and announced that Israeli planes flew more than 100 miles inside northwest Saudi Arabia. Their target was the Saudi air force's closest big base to Israel, at Tabuk. The Saudis said their jet fighters drove back the intruders.

"It has happened before, of course," the Saudi foreign minister, Prince Saud el-Faisal, told reporters Tuesday in the first such admission. "It just reflects the nature of Israel in its actions against the Arab countries. It is a new aggression against the Arab world."

The reasons for going public may be threefold, observers here say.

First, Arab hardliners sharply criticized the Saudis for failing to detect the Israeli jets that flew across northern Saudi Arabia on June 7 to attack the Iraqi nuclear reactor near Baghdad.

These critics taunted the Saudis because the raiders weren't detected by the U.S. AWACS radar planes stationed in eastern Saudi Arabia since the Iraqi invasion of Iran. The Saudis needed to make at least a token show of force to counter such criticism and demonstrate that they are capable of dealing with Israeli overflights.

Second, Saudi Arabia has scored two victories that have given its usually cautious leaders new confidence: the U.S. Senate's approval of the sale of AWACS planes and other American arms to the oil kingdom, and the favorable reaction of the Reagan administration and the European Common Market governments to the Saudis' new Middle East peace plan.

"I think the Saudis are feeling a lot more confident, and that may explain their reaction," said one diplomat, who declined to be identified by name.

This new confidence was reflected in an editorial in the Saudi newspaper Al Jazira, which said the Israelis "operated under the illusion that they would go untouched into our airspace. They were surprised by the prompt and forceful response, which will compel them to think twice before committing this irresponsible act again."

This tough public line may help the Saudis convince other Arab states to back their peace plan at the Arab summit scheduled to open in Morocco Nov. 25.

A third reason the Saudis may have reacted as they did was the timing of the Israeli intrusion — on the eve of a summit meeting in Riyadh of Saudi Arabia's Persian Gulf allies to discuss security and ways of defending their vast oil reserves.

One Arab diplomat suggested Israel was "trying to bait" the Saudis into some kind of response.

If it was, it succeeded.
