Board Urges Caution Concerning Social Security Numbers

El Paso, June 14.—Get the right number when you list employees on your information reports, F. J. McCarty, Jr., manager of the El Paso field office of the Social Security Board today cautioned commercial and industrial employers throughout the El Paso area who are seeking to obtain the social security account numbers of wage earners no longer in their employ.

Under treasury regulations, McCarty explained, employers must list employee account numbers on their information reports. Post offices are requesting that if an employee has failed to report his social security number, the employer should file an application form, (SS-5) with sufficient supporting information to establish the employee's identity beyond reasonable doubt. This application will be checked against the files to see if an account number has already been issued. If the employee has no account number, the employer must then file an application for an account number on behalf of his employee, stating on the form his reason for filing such application.

Mr. McCarty also urged all employers who have not yet reported their social security account numbers to their employers to do so promptly. This applies also to workers who have worked for more than one employer since January 1, 1937, even though the period of their employment may have been one day or less.

Account numbers are being issued to workers through the facilities of more than 45,000 post offices which are being utilized in the assignment of account numbers until June 30. On July 1, and thereafter, application forms for account numbers can be obtained at any local post office, and at regional and field offices of the Board, but assignment of account numbers will be made by the Board through field offices. The El Paso field office is located at 335 First National Bank Building.

House Passes Interest Rate Bill Last Week

Washington, D. C., June 15.—Action of the House of Representatives last week in passing a bill providing for the continuation of the 3 1/2% emergency interest rate on Federal Land Bank loans is of particular interest to West Texas farmers. The measure provides that the 3 1/2% rate shall be extended for one year, for a 4% rate for the period July 1, 1938 to June 30, 1939, and for a 4 1/2% interest rate on Land Bank Commissioner loans for a period of two years. The 3 1/2% rate has been in effect for the past two years and the act establishing the reduction expires June 30 this year, unless the measure as passed by the House is approved by the Senate and signed by the President before that date.

Congressman Mahon stated that the bill without a dissenting vote was significant evidence of the continued friendliness of Congress toward farm legislation.

No estimate has been made as to Commissioner loans, but final approval of the 3 1/2% interest provision in the bill will save Federal Land Bank borrowers an estimated $31,700,000 in interest charges during the next year. Congressman Mahon estimates that a savings of $200,000 during the next year would be realized by Federal Land Bank borrowers of the 19th Congressional District.

Begin Drive for Delinquent Social Security Signers

Commissioner of Internal Revenue Guy T. Helvering today instructed collectors throughout the United States to begin an intensive drive for delinquent social security returns, placing special emphasis on the monthly forms SS-1. These forms are filed with collectors in accordance with the provisions of Title VIII of the Social Security Act, which imposes an income tax on the wages of every taxable individual and an excise tax on the payroll of every taxable employer.

The total number of returns on file as of April 30, last, was 1,271,430, an increase of 70,692 over the 1,190,738 returns filed on March 31, last. Treasury officials expect the total to increase by 100,000 for the month of May when reports of the returns filed in the sixty-four collection districts are tabulated in Washington on the 20th of this month.

In order to facilitate the drive collectors have been furnished with photographic copies of form SS-4, the information filed by employers at post offices throughout the country last fall. These will be matched with forms SS-1 already in their offices and the remaining SS-4 forms will be used as leads in locating delinquents.

Other methods to be used by collectors in the drive will be a listing of individuals, corporations and partnerships claiming deductions on their income tax returns for salaries and wages paid; copies of the Narcotic registrants list containing names of doctors and dentists who might employ office aides; and telephone directories, all to be checked against those who have filed SS-1's as leads on delinquents.

Revival Closes at Methodist Church

The revival which has been in progress for the past two weeks at the First Methodist Church, closed last Sunday night with a fair degree of success.

The conductors of this meeting, Rev. J. Edmund Kirby of Rails and Rev. Tony Dyess of Anton, returned to their homes immediately following the services.

Both of these men proved to be sincere, conscientious workers. They delivered some most timely, inspirational and simple gospel messages which were highly appreciated by the crowds attending the services and their influence was wide-spread throughout the community. Members of many of the churches of the town cooperated in the meetings and contributed to its success by their attendance, prayers and work.

It is believed that the meeting did much to improve the spiritual life of the community as a whole. Such straight-forward, old-time gospel that came from these young men is a rare thing in this modern age.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Burleson and family and Miss Jewel Gaines have returned from a vacation in Taos, New Mexico.

Borden County Farm and Ranch News

E. B. McLeroy, County Agent
Borden County farms in the 1936 Agricultural Conservation Program have earned a total of $40,302.80 in payments received to date. Three hundred twenty-seven persons have shared in these payments on 209 farms upon which payments have already been completed. There are only six unpaid 1936 applications and the checks for these remaining farms are expected within the next few days.

Thirty earthen tanks have been completed in Borden county under provisions of the Range program. 64,343 yards of dirt has been measured in these tanks, and considerable water has been held in recently completed tanks due to general rains over the county during the past several weeks. There are approximately twenty tanks under construction at the present time, in addition to the thirty that have been finished and measured.

One hundred and thirty-nine farms have been plane table mapped for compliance under the 1937 Agricultural program in the county and 81 other farms will be mapped by July 1st. Cost of measuring is approximately 3c per acre and considerable care is taken with such maps as they will serve as a basis for blueprints for permanent records of Borden County farms in future Agricultural Conservation programs.

LAST CRIME FILM

"Scarface", the Howard Hughes spectacle which will be seen at the Cole Theatre at a Saturday Midnight Preview, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, June 19, 20, 21, and 22, will doubtless be the last gang picture, for the reason that it presents such a striking study of criminal conditions in the United States that it exhausts the subject. In the picture, police and civic authorities are shown cooperating in agitation for a Government curb upon the importation of firearms, this being admittedly the most effective method of scotching the gangster.

Resurrection River

By William Byron Mowery

© William Byron Mowery. WNU Service.

CHAPTER I—Warren Lovett, thirty-three, junior partner in the powerful Wellington Parkes & Lovett, Incorporated Mines of Chicago, which engages in questionable transactions, plans to make a secret coup in the Canadian Arctic, where a few years before a rich but unaccessible mining field has been discovered on Resurrection river, which flows into Dynamite Bay. Patricia, high spirited and beautiful daughter of crusty old Jasper Wellington, who is engaged to Warren, decides to accompany him. Over her father's objections, he agrees to take her. They go by plane. Pat meets "Poleon", a French-Canadian prospector who tells her there are only 300 prospectors in the field and that they are hanging on by a thread.

CHAPTER II—Pat is disturbed when Warren will not disclose what his secret mission is. She visits the prospectors camp and is depressed to see how discouraged they are. She meets Sam Honeywell, a friend of Poleon's. Moved by the plight of Bill Fornier, a prospector, who though fatally ill, struggles to hold his claim, Pat decides to help him.

CHAPTER III—Informed by Lupe Chiwaughimi, head of a family of half-breed retainers of the company, about Pat's befriending the prospectors, Warren tries to dissuade her. He tells her that Craig Tarlton, with whom she had once been in love, is now deputy mining inspector for the Resurrection river area. A brilliant geologist, he had resigned in disgust from her father's company because of its devious methods. Later she meets Craig, but he is cold, inferring that she is merely feigning interest in the prospectors.

CHAPTER IV—Her compassion for the hapless prospectors growing, Pat decides to build a huge community house or Den. When the job nears completion, Warren tells her to abandon it. She refuses after a stormy scene. Craig leaves on a three-month inspection trip.

CHAPTER V—Pat learns that her father has withdrawn her allowance.

The Story

Through the rainy gloom she could see the "Rock-Hog Den" in the drogue of pines across Resurrection. Very cheery and homelike the big house looked, with lights shining through its windows and blue wood-smoke streaming from its four tin chimneys. She wondered how the 75 rock-hogs over there were making out with their noon meal. Without her supervision it was probably one big-scream-lamble. Combed those fellow anyway!—weren't they ever going to learn to run that place by themselves? When she wasn't on the job, managing and directing, they were just 75 bewildered big clumps.

In a few minor respects the community house, now almost two months old, was a disappointment to Patricia. So far she had been forced to manage it herself. And she had had to keep putting money into it. Not a great deal true, but a little bit right along. And then, she had built too small. Big as the lodge was, it could not quite cope with the demands made upon it; and a few of the prospectors were living in overflow tents.

But in her main hope—that the place would be a substitute home where the man could have a real rest and a little human comfort—the Rock-Hog Den had come through smashing. Her womanly instincts had been a true guide; she had sized up the great need of those men unerringly, and had filled it. The proof of her success was as overwhelming as an avalanche. They had taken to the Den so avidly that at first they had completely swamped and buried her. They were so keen now to get in to the Bay that she had been compelled to make out a rotation list in order that every man might have his turn.

To watch them come in all tired and spiritless, spend their allotted fortnight in the "warm clean place", and leave again with belts tightened and their courage up—that was the finest experience of Patricia's twenty-four years.

But for all the unexpected success of her idea, she was more and more afraid that when the fur season opened, her men would abandon their claims and pitch off from Dynamite Bay. A dozen had already left for good and the others were on the verge of following. She couldn't blame them—their plight was really pitiful. Their clothes were patched and re-patched, their prospecting equipment was worn out, they were falling behind on their assessment work, and another Arctic winter stared them in the face. Worst sign of all, they were losing faith in their claims and beginning to think this field so inaccessible that their holdings might never be worth a thin Canadian dime.

When she entered Warren's tent he was standing before a chart that hung from the ridgepole, the same big chart which she had seen at La Salle street headquarters in Chicago. Then it had been white; but now it was sprinkled with several dozen squares and oblongs of red. Many times Patricia had wondered what those red splashes meant. They looked mysterious and a bit sinister.

"Warren"—she gave him the bank statement—"These people say I'm overdrawn, and I know perfectly well I'm not. They forgot to enter my September allowance."

Warren did not even glance at the paper. "They're right, Patricia. I'm sorry to say. Your credit for September—and for October too—was not sent to them. I dislike to tell you had news dear, but I must. Your allowance has been cut off. Your father decided that the only way to make you come home was to stop your money."

Patricia stared at Warren dumfounded. Her allowance cut off—she could not quite grasp so astounding a fact. Why, her allowance had always been one of the infallible things, like day and night!

Warren toyed with a letter knife on his work table. "Patricia," he said finally, "you surely must realize that I'm here at Dynamite Bay on business for the company, and that it's very important business. If my plans go through the firm stands to make an extremely handsome coup. I presume you know that Dynamite Bay is an extremely rich mineral field—"

"What!" Patricia broke in. For a moment this sudden revelation, settling a question which had plagued her for three months, made her forget all about the allowance. "Rich, extremely—Warren, is that straight?"

"It's straight," he stated. "The whole story isn't known yet, won't be known till complete surveys have been made; but we do know positively that the field is of the first magnitude."

"Now, dear," Warren went on in his patient logical manner, "this community house of yours broke into my plans very badly. Your whole project runs counter to the best interests of Wellington, Parkes & Lovett here at Dynamite Bay. Personally I had nothing to do with cutting off your allowance. I merely kept your father informed of the situation, as I was duty-bound—"

"But—wait a minute," Patricia interrupted, all perplexed. "I don't follow you. What is this coup that you're talking about? How am I damaging your plans? What are these plans of yours?"

Warren sidestepped. "We can't go into all the details, dear. It's a dry business matter."

"But I insist on knowing! I'm doing a good job over there among those men, a badly needed job, and I won't drop it without a solid reason why!"

Warren shrugged. "I don't see that you've got any choice. Now that your father has cut off your allowance, you will have to give in and go back to Chicago."

"That 'give in' was decidedly the wrong word to use on Patricia Wellington."

"I'll be damned if I go!" she burst out. "Dad can't order me around like that! He's not going to domineer over me. I'm a human being, the same as he is. I've got ideas and wishes of my own—"

"But he's got the power," Warren reminded.

His remark drew Patricia's fire to him. "You've got power, too! You're a partner in the firm. You're the real brains of the firm. Look here, are you going to stand for this? You've got money, lots of it. You can advance me what I need. It's not much. Only a few hundred a month. Will you or won't you?"

Her sharp question put Warren on the spot. He dared not make good the allowance, for she would use the money to keep the community house operating. Already that Rock-Hog Den, plus the quiet word which Tarlton had passed out to the prospectors last summer, had stalemated him for three exasperating months.

On the other hand he hesitated to antagonize Patricia by an outright refusal. On his work table stood a desk calendar with "October 8" staring him in the eyes. Their wedding date. The day on which he was to have married Patricia Wellington. That marriage, almost a certainty once, was a raging doubt with him now. Little by little Patricia had been drawn into the human current at Dynamite Bay; and it seemed to him that in proportion as she had drifted out into deep waters she had gone farther and farther away from him.

And he was not blind to her stormy emotions toward Craig Tarlton.

"Are you going to side with me or Dad?" Patricia pinned him down. "Can I keep my community house going? Yes or no?"

Warren made a swift decision. If he stood firm Patricia would have to go home. Doubtless she would be furious with him, might even break their engagement; but with patient effort he probably could win her around again. Certainly anything was better than for her to stay on at the Bay. She would keep that Den running, to his great damage; and if Tarlton returned, saw what she was doing and joined forces with her, she would be Tarlton's.

"Dear," he said firmly, "I'm compelled to refuse."

All Patricia's dammed-up anger at Warren's dishonesty and evasion, all the bitter disappointment of her Arctic trip with him, all the heartache over her failure to build up loyalty with him, came bursting out.

"All right, keep your money!" she blazed at him. "I don't need it. I'll get along without it. You're exactly like Dad. You dictate. You give me just so much liberty but no more. The only difference between you and him is that he's blunt about it and you're diplomatic. This allowance of mine—you're as guilty on that score as he is. He wouldn't have cut me off if you hadn't suggested it. And you—you did that behind my back!"

She paused for breath, plunged on: "Do you know what I think of you, Warren? You fall a little short of honesty all along the line. You're not absolutely honest with me or with Dad or with the firm or with anybody or anything—except your own personal advancement. If you'd been honest with me, if you'd told me the truth about this situation when we first landed here, I probably would never have built that house. But you didn't. You kept me all in the dark, as Craig once said. Even now I don't know what this 'coup' of yours is. I wouldn't believe you even if you told me—you've lied and hedged and evaded so much—"

"Patricia!" he begged. "Please, please."

"You think you can force me to go back home," she stormed on, "but you can't! I'm staying here! I'm keeping that Rock-Hog Den right on going! I'll get by somehow. I don't care if I do break into your plans. You never consider my plans. Try and make me go!"

Warren did not argue. Argument would only make her angrier at him. His course was plain, and he held to it.

"Pilot Odron," he informed her, rather sharply, "is getting one of the planes ready now to take you south. In half an hour—that'll give you time to change clothes—I'll send the Chiwaughimi metis around to help Eilyn pack your things and to strike your tent."

Patricia's glance met and clashed with his. The hidden threat in his words was not lost on her—he was going to make her leave by pulling her tent down.

White-faced with anger, she stared across the work table at him, defiant, her dark eyes flashing.

"You won't pull any raw trick like that on me, Warren Lovett!" she cried. "I'll show you something!"

She whirled on her heel, made for the door and dashed out into the rain.

Warren stepped over to the flap-front and watched her as she ran down toward the bank of Resurrection. Her throat puzzled him, and he could not imagine where she was going; but neither worried him very much, for he knew that in the last analysis he held the power.

At his work table he wrote a strategic letter to her mother, intending to send it along with Pilot Odron so that it would reach Chicago as soon as she did.

As he was finishing the note, Lupe Chiwaughimi appeared at the tent door.

"M'sieu Lovett, come here. Look-see."

Warren stepped over, looked where the metis was pointing. What he saw took him a staggering surprise. Where Patricia's tent had stood, there simply was no tent. It had vanished, magically, as though the ground had swallowed it.

Down toward the bank of Resurrection a dozen husky prospectors, with Patricia's slender figure in their midst, were hurrying toward a big York at the water edge. Everybody in the group was carrying something of Patricia's belongings—her trunks, and suitcases, her cot, her tent and poles.

"What's happened, Lupe? Where's she going?"

The metis gestured across the stream. "She's moving over dere. Over near dat chateau she built."

When Poleon and the man had pitched her tent in the pines near the Den, Patricia sat down on a steamer trunk amid the litter of her baggage, and took thought.

It was characteristic of her to act first and think of the consequences afterwards.

Three months ago she had gone slumming in this prospector's camp; now she was living in it! Crazy, that thought seemed, when she pushed it off and looked at it rationally. Only this strange land, where neither day nor night was infallible, could have led her into so impossible a situation. By any sane standard of judgement she had all along been acting in a most silly fashion. This last step, her move across the river, was the most outlandish of all.

She ought to go home at once. The sooner, the better. She would have to go home sometime, of course. She ought to cut clean, and do it immediately. Not tomorrow, but today. Now!

"But what'll poor Bill do?" he moaned. "And if I go away, the Rock-Hog Den'll fall to pieces in a week." And there were her prospector friends. And Craig.

A person less stubborn than she would have packed up for home without a second's hesitation. Her entire stay at Desolation had been wretched enough, but now her position had suddenly become almost unbearable. It seemed to her that she was being attacked from all sides and hadn't one real friend. Her father was dangerously angry; this allowance jolt left her without a penny; Warren had failed her; and these prospectors humbly unable to hang on much longer, might pick up and leave any day.

Warren stepped over to the flap-front and watched her as she ran down toward the bank of Resurrection. Her throat puzzled him, and he could not imagine where she was going; but neither worried him very much, for he knew that in the last analysis he held the power.

At his work table he wrote a strategic letter to her mother, intending to send it along with Pilot Odron so that it would reach Chicago as soon as she did.

As he was finishing the note, Lupe Chiwaughimi appeared at the tent door.

"M'sieu Lovett, come here. Look-see."

Warren stepped over, looked where the metis was pointing. What he saw took him a staggering surprise. Where Patricia's tent had stood, there simply was no tent. It had vanished, magically, as though the ground had swallowed it.

Down toward the bank of Resurrection a dozen husky prospectors, with Patricia's slender figure in their midst, were hurrying toward a big York at the water edge. Everybody in the group was carrying something of Patricia's belongings—her trunks, and suitcases, her cot, her tent and poles.

"What's happened, Lupe? Where's she going?"

The metis gestured across the stream. "She's moving over dere. Over near dat chateau she built."

When Poleon and the man had pitched her tent in the pines near the Den, Patricia sat down on a steamer trunk amid the litter of her baggage, and took thought.

It was characteristic of her to act first and think of the consequences afterwards.

Three months ago she had gone slumming in this prospector's camp; now she was living in it! Crazy, that thought seemed, when she pushed it off and looked at it rationally. Only altogether she felt terribly alone and friendless, there in her lonely tent. The dreary rain and desolate weather were infinitely depressing. She again visioned all those wilderness leagues between herself and home, and the thought frightened her.

In one of the half-dozen overflow tents nearby, a gramophone started playing, and a shrill song broke into her harassed thoughts. The tin-pan jumped up and sprang over to her tent tumbler jarred on her intolerably. She door.

"Sam! If you don't muzzle that awful screech box, I'll throw it into the river and pitch you after it!"

"Gosh, I'm sorry, Miss Pat." Sam called back, from inside his tent. "Why gosh, I was a-playing that piece specially for you. I thought you mebbe was feeling a little blue after your run-in with Mr. Lovett, and I figured a bit of music 'ud cheer you up."

Patricia broke out laughing at his naive "kindness" but her laugh ended abruptly in a sob. After all she did have friends. Three hundred of them. These men were her friends. They liked her, even if Craig didn't.

"The house that Pat built, for us"—that's what they called the Den. Her heart leaped with gladness as she remembered Warren's phrase "extraordinarily rich." If only they could stick and hold on to their claims.

On the lake shore across Resurrection a plane motor started up, drumming out its powerful ratt-t-tatt-tt-tt. It was one of the company's planes—she recognized the deep throaty roar of it. Dashing the tears from her eyes, she stepped outside and listened, oblivious of the rain that beat upon her shoulders and wetted her black silky hair. That ship must be warming up for flight. In weather so cold and raw the mechanics wouldn't be doing routine work on an engine. It was Pilot Odron's plane, getting ready for the flight south. Warren must still be confident that he could force her to leave for Chicago that day.

Her guess proved right. A few minutes later a big sturgeon-head pushed off from the opposite shore and butted across resurrection, bringing Warren and the six Chiwaughimis and seven other men of Warren's party.

Wondering why he had fetched so large a crew, Patricia slipped back inside her tent and began straightening her baggage around as though she was firmly intended to stay where she was. But inwardly she was storm-tossed, torn two ways. Go—stay—she couldn't decide. But she had to decide. Ratt-tatt-tatt-tt—that plane was waiting for her. She had to make up her mind. No more drifting, no more putting off decision "till tomorrow."

Warren's big party stopped outside her tent and Warren came in alone. Beneath his politeness he was sharp and preemptory.

"Patricia, Odron tells me that he'll have to take off within 30 minutes if he's to make Fort Smith before dark."

"Well, let him take off," Patricia snapped. "I'm not holding that plane by the tail!"

"Try to be reasonable for once."

She Felt Terribly Alone—A Friendless.

Warren said tartly. He gestured around at the tent. "You know as well as I do that you can't live in a place like this with cold weather coming on. And living over here in the prospectors' camp alone—it's ridiculous!"

Patricia thought to herself: "He's right! It's worse than ridiculous. But he'll have to meet me half-way. I won't let him dictate to me." She realized now that he had brought along that big party not only to pull down her tent but to smash any of her prospector friends who tried to interfere.

Through the flap-front she noticed that the 13 men were armed with oars, clubs and tent stakes, and that three of the Chiwaughimis carried rifles.

"Furthermore," Warren added, "I won't allow you to keep up this charity work of yours any longer. Good heavens, don't you yet understand that the more you help these men, the longer they'll hang on here and refuse to sell their claims?"

Patricia's eyes opened wide. "Why—why you talk as though you want to see them squeezed out and forced to leave."

"To put it harshly, yes," Warren stated. Backed up by that armed party out there, and confident that he could force Patricia to go home, he dropped his evasion and told her some blunt facts. "These men own practically all the valuable deposits up Resurrection. As things stand, they refuse to sell. Tarlton advised them to hold out, and this chateau of yours has bolstered them up. Originally I expected to get through with my business here in eight weeks, but I've been here three whole months and in all that time I've been able to buy only a few dozen claims—"

"Those red squares!" Patricia cried. "Those red places on your chart?"

Warren nodded. "Yes. Those red spots are claims that the company now owns. But most of that map is still white. It's got to be all red. I propose to buy up this entire field for Wellington, Parkes and Lovett."

"Oh-oh!" Patricia breathed. Warren's explanation was like a lightning flash ripping out of the darkness, the dark secrecy of his Arctic trip. A host of puzzles became glaringly clear to her in an instant.

She felt intensely ashamed of her stupidity in not seeing through Warren's mission sooner. Craig had seen through it from the very beginning. The men had seen through it. She alone had been blind, stone blind.

"I can buy up silver claims here for a hundred dollars," Warren declared with a ring of elation in his voice, "that'll be worth a hundred thousand in time! Think about that! And about these platinum and cobalt deposits. And the radium lenses. Can you imagine a more magnificent set-up than the company has got here?"

"A hundred dollars," Patricia repeated jerkily. "A hundred dollars— for three or four years of hard work—"

"But these fellows can't develop their claims. They haven't the capital. Mining operations require a heavy initial outlay and a long wait for returns" are scheduled to arrive here at 1:40 p. m. and will remain until 2:10 p. m., visiting the local retailers. The high school band, under the direction of Russell Shrader, will accompany the Sweetwater motorcade and will play a brief concert at the Courthouse bandstand. The trippers will have loud speaker equipment and arrangements are being made for an address of welcome by Carl Rountree, with a response from one of the visitors.

"We have two purposes in making this trip," Mr. Barber explained. "We want the people of Lamesa and this section to become better acquainted with the manufactured products and the goods sold wholesale by Sweetwater citizens and we want to become better acquainted with your people. We are also advertising our third annual Water Carnival, Beauty Revue and Sports Festival, to be held July 9th and 10th. We had more than 8,000 people witness the various events in this celebration last year and we hope to have in excess of 10,000 this year. We certainly want you people to attend in large numbers."

This is the first year Sweetwater wholesalers and manufacturers have attempted good will trips into the trade territory. Mr. Barber stated, but it is believed they will soon become an annual affair. The first trip was June 9th and the second June 16th. Eighteen communities were visited on the first two trips. The public is urged to turn out and greet the Sweetwater visitors next Wednesday, June 23rd.

Rev. Denning will occupy the pulpit at all services of the church Sunday, after a two weeks absence in Roswell, N. M.

The morning sermon subject will be "Who Was John the Baptist, and what is Christian Baptism?" Sunday night's topic will be "Crashing the Gates of Hell."

Methodist Notes Welch Charge

Smallest attendance Sunday at Welch that we have had in quite a while. Something is wrong with the people or preacher. Don't know just which, maybe both. Let's all try to find out. I've been a booster for Welch but have had foundation upon which to build. Oh, I'm commending those who came, and must say that all our services were on a high plane and enjoyed by preacher and congregations but how we missed the absent ones. This may seem like a small thing to you, but it adds heart ache to the pastor.

Our new building is at a standstill but we are not blaming the people for that. They had to plant their crops and we are sure that when they can vacate their farm work that we will be able to complete the church in a nice way. It is already so we can hold all our services in it.

Our Wednesday night singing has been changed to Sunday afternoon. There will now be singing next Sunday afternoon unless called off. You can come to Welch any Sunday afternoon at 2:30 for singing.

Next Sunday we will be at Bartlett morning and evening. We have not yet had anything like a full community attendance. We hope to have it Sunday. Don't disappoint us.

Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Phillips of Munger visited the pastor and wife Sunday afternoon. Very thoughtful of them to visit us after our return from the sanitarium. Hope more of our old friends as well as new ones visit us often.

BARTLETT HOME DEMONSTRATION CLUB

"In the Governor's mansion in Austin may be seen many things of historical interest, one of which is the bed of General Sam Houston. There are many interesting things to be seen in Austin. The Capitol building is among the largest in the United States and is built of native red granite. One of our visitors, having been reared in Burnett county, told of seeing it hauled from the quarries there, to Austin." This interesting information was given in the regular program.

In addition to this our wardrobe demonstrator gave us the following pointers for selecting blankets.

"Long napped soft blankets are not always the best. These are usually loosely woven and lose much of their weight in washing. Short, thick nap in a medium weight blanket, will prove of the greatest service, as to wear and laundering. Also notice bindings when buying a blanket. Double back stitched sateen binding will prove best, as it will not wear out and will not ravel so easily."

After the business session and rendering of the program, a social hour was enjoyed by the twenty members including three new members and six visitors who were present at the meeting July 9th in the home of Mrs. T. E. Temple.

The next meeting will be a demonstration on "Use and Care of Kitchen Utensils" by the agent at the home of Mrs. J. S. Stewart on June 23.—Reporter.

KEY HOME DEMONSTRATION CLUB

"Question to ask when buying kitchen utensils is price and quality, will it save fuel, convenience, and does it meet individual needs?" was one of the high points told by Miss Phenix during the kitchen utensil demonstration, given in the home of Mrs. J. H. Collett Thursday, June 10.

Aluminum, granite ware, glass, non-rust steel, oven bake ware, tin, and cast iron, were the cooking vessels shown. The good points of all of them were told. Many smaller utensils such as knives, spatulas, strainers and can openers were shown.

There were ten members and three visitors present. After the meeting a tour of the cattle barns on the Dean ranch was made where some fine cattle were seen.

The next meeting will be in the home of Mrs. Bud Riley, Thursday, June 24.—Reporter.

BALLARD HOME DEMONSTRATION CLUB

Price, convenience in handling and fuel saving qualities are three things to be considered in buying kitchen utensils. Miss Phenix told the Ballard home demonstration club members in her demonstration at the home of Mrs. R. C. Moore, at 3 p. m. June 9.

In considering price, gauge the labor required in making the utensil and the quality of material used. Utensils with straight sides save fuel and unpolished bottoms brown more quickly. The weight, size and shape of handle should be noticed carefully.

There were 12 members and two visitors, Mrs. Boyd May, and Mrs. Moore, present.

The next meeting will be with Mrs. L. H. Carlton, June 23.—Reporter.

KEEPS THE EXTRA FOODS THAT RURAL FAMILIES NEED

The Mark of Quality

SUPERFEX OPERATES ON KEROSENE

WHEN you live far away from the markets you must buy a lot of supplies at one time. You need a refrigerator that holds plenty of food and keeps it plenty cold. Superfex is famous for doing that. Furthermore, you can have Superfex no matter where you live. It requires no electricity. It operates on economical kerosene, and very little of that.

Just light the burners

All you have to do is light the burners. The rest is automatic. About two hours after they have been lighted, the burners go out, but Superfex keeps right on working. You get twenty-four hours or more of refrigeration from one lighting. This means that for twenty-two hours out of twenty-four the burners are neither burning fuel nor throwing out heat.

Another Superfex boon to homemakers is the large storage capacity and flexibility of interior arrangement. Superfex shelves may be adjusted to any household food storage need. On the refrigerator door are additional racks for those small miscellaneous things that you want to keep handy, but which often waste space on the larger shelves.

Free home demonstration—easy terms

We want you to see the new beauty and convenience of the 1936 models, and how they operate in your own home. Telephone or write for a free home demonstration today. If you are interested in easy terms, we'll be glad to show you our plan.
