Duke stumps for runoff as GOP disavows him

NEW ORLEANS (NYT) — The morning after winning a place in Louisiana's gubernatorial runoff, State Rep. David Duke promoted himself on Sunday as a new leader of the Republican Party's conservative mainstream, while in Washington party officials disavowed him as a racist and said he would receive no support from them.

Duke, a former grand wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, finished second in the open primary on Saturday and will face the leader of that race, Edwin W. Edwards, a former three-term governor who is a Democrat, in a runoff election on Nov. 16.

Gov. Buddy Roemer, who was elected four years ago as a Democrat and who became a Republican in March, finished third in the primary, despite the public backing of President Bush and

Group: U.S. hostage release is imminent

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A Shiite Muslim kidnap faction said early today it would free an American hostage shortly. The United Nations also predicted earlier that the release of an American was imminent.

The Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine, in a typewritten statement delivered to a Western news agency and to the Beirut newspaper An-Nahar, said it "will release an American hostage within 24 hours."

Neither hostage was identified by name in the 52-word statement, which was issued at 6 p.m. CDT Sunday.

But the group is known to hold Jesse Turner and Alann Steen, two American professors who were abducted at gunpoint from the campus of the U.S.-affiliated Beirut University College on Jan. 24, 1987.

Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — A wind-driven brush fire exploded into a firestorm Sunday as it roared through upscale neighborhoods in the hills above Oakland, engulfing hundreds of homes and killing 10 people, authorities said.

Residents ran into streets, clutching their belongings and pets. Gusts whipped flames as high as 100 feet through dry brush and thick smoke blocked out sunlight. Some people drove to safety through streets filled with flaming debris and lined with burning trees and homes.

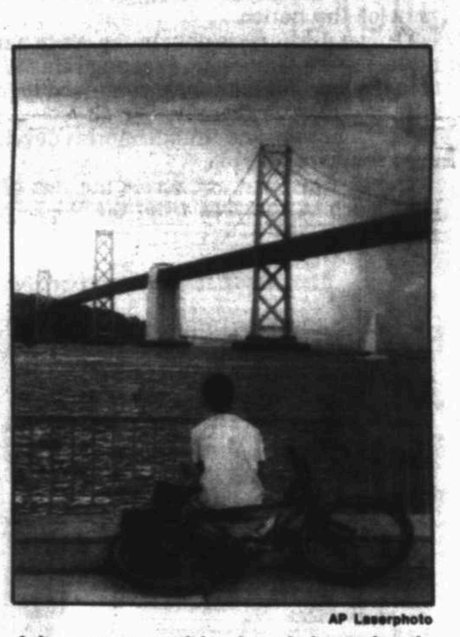

The fire moved quickly from street to street, then hillside to hillside, making a deafening roar as it charred neighborhoods with panoramic views of San Francisco Bay. Many residents said they only had time to grab photos and documents.

"The trees were exploding. It looked like the Fourth of July. I think we lost everything. I think it's all gone," said Steve Hischier, who fled with his wife and daughter.

"It is a terrible disaster," Gov. Pete Wilson said as he toured the scene Sunday evening. Wilson declared a state of emergency and placed the National Guard on alert.

Bentsen proposes tax cut for mid-income Americans

Bentsen

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, chairman of the Finance Committee, called Sunday for a tax cut intended to provide relief for middle-income taxpayers and provide a stimulus to the economy.

The measure by Bentsen, D-Texas, would reduce taxes by $72.5 billion over the next five years by providing a tax credit of $300 for each child 18 years old or younger in a family and restoring the availability of Individual Retirement Accounts to all taxpayers, regardless of income.

The cuts would be paid for by a 5 percent reduction in military spending.

Given that President Bush and the Republican leaders in Congress renewed their call just last week for a capital gains tax reduction to create more jobs, Bentsen's proposal would appear to improve the chances for passage of some kind of tax legislation this year.

But an aide to Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said Rostenkowski did not expect Congress to be able to act before adjourning in about a month.

FIRE: Wind-driven flames gut hundreds of homes

(From 1A)

40 mph hampered efforts to fight the fire. The temperature reached the high 80s in the afternoon and humidity was low.

The blaze, which was reported in the late morning, continued to burn out of control into the night. By early evening, officials said it covered 1,500 acres.

Mayor Elihu Harris said at a news conference that hundreds of homes had burned, but said the exact number couldn't immediately be determined.

Ten people were killed, including a police officer, said Alameda County Supervisor Don Perata. Five of the victims apparently were evacuating a home when they were caught, Perata said. He didn't know how the others died.

At least 50 people, including three firefighters, were treated at hospitals for burns, smoke inhalation and other injuries, officials said.

A brown pall extended over Oakland to San Francisco, 15 miles across the bay. Ash fell at San Francisco's Candlestick Park during a football game between the 49ers and the Detroit Lions.

There was no immediate report on what caused the fire. On Saturday, firefighters halted a five-alarm brush fire in the same area before structures were damaged. Harris said it wasn't known whether that fire had flared up.

Hundreds were forced to evacuate. The Red Cross alone reported 800 people in shelters it had set up. About 1,000 students were evacuated from dormitories on the campus of University of California, Berkeley, when the fire came close to Berkeley, a school spokesman said.

The fire burned through a heavily wooded residential area near the Caldecott Tunnel that goes through the hills ringing San Francisco. The area is filled with fashionable homes and condominiums.

Jocelyn Grote fought back tears as she sat in a car parked on Claremont Boulevard.

"We stuffed all our clothes in bags — our pictures, our files, anything and everything we could grab," she said. "There were big clots of fire streaming over the house. When we left, the fire was just on the treetops in our backyard."

Curtis Karplus and his wife, Rosemary, had to leap off their 6-foot balcony to escape.

"The fire exploded all around us. I thought it was all over," Karplus said. "I looked out the window and saw a wall of fire."

Away from the fire, gusts of wind whipped smoke through the streets and ash rained down. Thunderous explosions were heard — blasts firefighters attributed to propane tanks, parched trees or electric transformers.

Thousands of spectators lined streets, some snapping pictures. Hundreds of young men, many carrying shovels, rakes, hose and axes, ran forward to help fight the fire.

J. Weinreb said the fire forced him to flee from his home shortly after he woke up and saw smoke everywhere.

"It looked like it was far away and then there were cinders everywhere," he said. "The home was burning and we had to get out."

KILLER: Behavior spewed warnings all around

warnings all around. Delusions and angry outbursts over women in his neighborhood grew more blatant during the summer. A short time ago, he told co-workers of his intentions to kill, and then on a nightmarish Wednesday afternoon, made good on his word with unspeakable efficiency.

If you were among the 140 lunch-time patrons and workers at Luby's Cafeteria in this Central Texas town, you had a one in three chance of being killed or wounded after the 35-year-old loner crashed his pickup through a restaurant window and began firing methodically, in a way that seemed to give him pleasure.

It ended when police rushed in, returned fire, and Hennard used the final bullet in his clip on himself.

Twenty-four people were mortally wounded that day, most of them women; 27 more were injured. Hennard — "Jo" or "Jo Jo" to family and friends — thus joined Charles Whitman, marksman atop the University of Texas tower; Patrick Sherrill at the post office in Edmund, Okla.; and James Oliver Huberty at the McDonald's killings at San Ysidro, Calif., in a fraternity of America's worst killers. But Hennard killed more people than any of those, his name now synonymous with random evil.

And to those who knew him, what happened Wednesday afternoon made a sort of perverse sense, with the warnings, in hindsight at least, so clear.

"It didn't surprise me, but it saddened me," said James Dunlap, a former roommate and close friend of Hennard who saw the boiling caldron of his friend's life up close. "You just can't help but think, what could I have done as a friend, or what could anyone have done, to have prevented this?"

To many today, that question is excruciatingly familiar.

Hennard's co-workers at his concrete-finishing job had long become accustomed to his erratic behavior. While Hennard had only been on the job a month, several had known the ex-Merchant Marine for years, heard him speak of being provoked in various ways by women and of being harassed by people at his home in nearby Belton.

He was often jumpy and paranoid, usually brought his guns with him to the job, and favored a rap song that glamorized violence toward women and was punctuated by sounds of sirens, gunshots and female screams.

But on payday, a week and a half before the nation's worst mass shooting, Hennard's eccentricities took on an even more ominous turn.

He announced to the crew that included his brother-in-law that he was quitting, that they would never see him again. He wondered out loud what would happen if he killed someone.

"He kept saying one of these days he's going to have to hurt someone and he really didn't want to do it, but he was going to have to," said concrete worker Bubba Hawkins, 23, who lives in the Central Texas town of Copperas Cove.

Hennard wasn't specific.

"He was talking about some of the people in Belton ... certain women that always gave him problems, and some of the men," Hawkins said. "We took him serious to a certain extent because of the way he acted. He kept going, 'Watch and see, watch and see.'"

DUKE: Former Klan leader wins place in runoff

the national Republican Party.

The final results of Saturday's voting, not known until the early hours of Sunday morning, showed Edwards with 34 percent of the vote, Duke with 32 percent and Roemer with 27 percent, according to the Associated Press.

"The rank-and-file Republicans of this state voted for me, and the rank-and-file Republicans in this country believe the way I believe," Duke said at a news conference on Sunday morning.

"I think I offer a tremendous opportunity for the Republican Party," he said. "I am the first Republican candidate that actually bridges the gap between fiscal conservatives and labor."

John H. Sununu, the White House chief of staff, was among several Republican leaders in Washington who tried to distance themselves from Duke on Sunday.

"The president is absolutely opposed to the kind of racist statements that have come out of David Duke now and in the past," Sununu said on the ABC News program "This Week."

Mary Matalin, the chief of staff of the Republican National Committee, said when asked in an interview if Duke would receive any assistance from the party, "unequivocally, it is not possible." She added: "He is not a Republican. We never considered him a Republican. There will be no involvement in his campaign whatsoever."

The results of Saturday's voting represented a major setback for the Republican Party in its highly publicized effort to make inroads in this historically Democratic state.

Roemer was defeated after a switch to the Republican Party last spring that was partially engineered by Sununu. He lost despite the fact that his campaign was managed by professional Republican organizers dispatched from Washington. Even personal appearances by both Bush and Vice President Dan Quayle did not hand Roemer the Republicans' core vote in Louisiana.

It was Duke who amassed much of the vote in Republican strongholds like the lake side suburbs of New Orleans and in Roemer's home territory in Northwest Louisiana.

According to Louisiana law all candidates regardless of party affiliation appear on the same ballot in an open primary.

HOSTAGE: Faction says it will free an American

(From 1A)

The Arabic-language statement was authenticated by a color photograph of Turner, who was pictured from the waist up, wearing navy blue trousers and a white cotton sweatshirt.

It said the kidnap group's decision constituted an "obligation and a readiness to complete the comprehensive agreement being arranged to free all the prisoners and the hostages."

The United Nations has been leading difficult negotiations on the captors' demands for the freedom of more than 300 Arab prisoners held by Israel or its proxy army in South Lebanon in exchange for Western hostages.

Israel wants word on the fate of its five missing servicemen in Lebanon before releasing any prisoners. Its declaration Saturday that it had received solid information that one had died appeared to lead to the announcements.

The kidnappers' statement came after an announcement Sunday by the U.N. Information Center in Beirut that an American hostage would go free within 24 hours. That statement was issued at 2 p.m. (8 a.m. EDT) Sunday.

The United Nations also said Israel, in response, would free "a number of Lebanese" jailed in the Israeli-controlled border zone in southern Lebanon.

The U.N. announcement did not say which of the five American captives in Lebanon would be freed or where, and U.N. officials did not elaborate. But following the captors' statement, relatives began an anxious vigil for Steen, 52, and Turner, 44.

"We're all just going to sit back and wait and see what happens," Steen's wife Virginia said Sunday night from Clarklake, Mich.. "There's nothing else anyone can do. It gets harder and harder with every day that passes."

On Friday, the kidnap faction had invited Turner's Lebanese wife, Badr, to travel to Beirut with their daughter Joanne, who was born four months after his abduction, for a one-hour visit with the hostage.

"I expect everything and anything," she said after the announcement by her husband's kidnappers. Mrs. Turner said she await further word before traveling to Beirut.

"I'm waiting to hear who they may release," she said, speaking from Boise, Idaho. "If I go, where would I go?"

The Boston-born Steen was a journalism instructor and Turner, who is from Boise, a mathematics professor at Beirut University College.

The United Nations said the expected release was the outcome of an "intensive stage" of negotiations between U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar's special envoy, Giandomenico Picco, and a hostage negotiator.

those senators who face re-election next year or who have never been on particularly solid political footing in their home states.

In their home states, senators were criticized for being too tough on either Judge Thomas or his accuser, Prof. Anita F. Hill.

At least one poll, conducted by the Gallup Organization immediately after the hearings, found that roughly one of every two viewers who watched a significant amount of the inquiry came away feeling less confident about Congress and the congressional process.

Further, the poll found that of the leading members of the Judiciary Committee, only its chairman, Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., won a favorable rating from more than half of all viewers. Sixty-three percent said they were well impressed by his performance.

By contrast, Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., won a favorable rating of 48 percent, Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., won a 41 percent rating, and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., won a 22 percent rating, the lowest recorded.

The poll, which was conducted on Oct. 14, was based on telephone interviews with 612 adults and had a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

BENTSEN: New proposal would 'stimulate economy'

proposal.

In addition, the Republicans are likely to oppose Bentsen on the ground that he is making a gesture to take advantage of a political issue on which the Bush administration may be vulnerable.

Bentsen denied such political motivations, maintaining in an interview: "I've been saying for months that I would introduce a bill to provide relief for middle-income Americans. I'm concerned very much about a double dip in the recession. The administration is just now talking about a stimulant."

The White House chief of staff, John H. Sununu, repeated the administration's preference for a cut in the capital gains tax and incentives for investment in research and development, when he was asked about the Bentsen proposal Sunday on the ABC News program "This Week With David Brinkley."

Sununu, speaking of the lagging economic recovery, said, "The problem is that our job growth is not as fast as we would like it." But he asserted that "the turnaround occurred back in May and June."

Bentsen, who issued his proposal in the form of a statement released by his office staff in Washingotn and discussed it Sunday on the CBS News program "Face the Nation," said in a telephone interview from San Diego that his plan was not an attempt to preempt the Republicans on the question.

"They've been trying to talk their way out of the recession," he said. His own plan, he said, would "help give a jump-start to the economy."

Bentsen estimated that the tax credits for families with children 18 years old and younger would cost the Treasury $60 billion over the next five years, while the IRA changes would cost $12.5 billion.

Cabinet OKs Israel attending peace talks

By Clyde Haberman
N.Y. Times News Service

JERUSALEM — The Israeli Cabinet gave final, unconditional agreement on Sunday for Israel to take part in a Middle East peace conference that will put the nation in direct negotiations with most of its hostile Arab neighbors for the first time since independence in 1948.

Soon after the Cabinet warily but overwhelmingly endorsed the peace talks, with only three negative votes among the 20 ministers, the small, far-right Tehiya party announced that it would quit the government of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir when the conference opens in Madrid on Oct. 30.

On their own, Tehiya's three members of Parliament cannot bring down the government, and, judging from the action on Sunday, Shamir should hold onto enough support to stay in office. Without Tehiya's backing, his coalition still has 63 seats in the 120-member Parliament.

Nonetheless, the political move showed the uneasiness felt throughout the right-wing Shamir Cabinet, a concern that things may not go Israel's way despite the prime minister's repeated insistence that he will not yield an inch of occupied territory in return for peace with the Arabs.

Ariel Sharon, the hard-line housing minister and one of the three Cabinet members who voted no, likened Israel's situation now to that of Czechoslovakia in 1938, when it was sacrificed by Western European democracies to Nazi Germany.

But despite such stated worries, some of which Shamir shares, the prevailing view in the Cabinet was that Israel stood at a crossroads and had no choice but to attend face-to-face talks with its neighbors, especially since it has been saying for decades that this, above all, is what it wants.

'It is a turning point in Israeli politics.'
— Dan Meridor, minister

"There definitely are reservations — none of the ministers are 100 percent comfortable with this step," said Transportation Minister Moshe Katsav. "There are definitely some disadvantages and dangers. But on balance, the decision is to go with a positive attitude."

"It is a turning point in Israeli politics," said Justice Minister Dan Meridor, who is politically close to Shamir. "It will not be easy, but we are taking a path whose essence is to bring peace."

Only a few Cabinet members spoke publicly of an important reality: The Israelis, whether willing participants or not, are going to peace talks that are built largely on their terms — constructed that way because the conference's chief sponsor, the United States, feared that otherwise they would stay home.

Israel, the last party to officially declare that it will join the negotiations, will not have to sit across from any Palestinian representative it does not accept. It has been able to forswear territorial concessions. And it has not had to promise to freeze the building of settlements in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, something demanded by Arab nations and greatly desired by the Bush administration.

"I don't understand what all the crying is about," Interior Minister Aryeh Deri said after the Cabinet vote. "We got all the conditions that we wanted. All the Arab states are sitting down to negotiations without our conceding anything."

Earthquake hammers India

■ At least 341 people die and tens of thousands of homes were destroyed in the disaster.

Associated Press

DEHRA DUN, India — A mighty earthquake convulsed the Himalayan foothills on Sunday, killing at least 341 people, flattening tens of thousands of homes and triggering major landslides, police said.

The earthquake rippled through northern Uttar Pradesh state, causing massive destruction in at least two districts along the Indian-Tibetan border. At least 2,000 people were injured, the United News of India news agency reported.

At least 500 people were feared trapped in the rubble of buildings that collapsed when the quake struck, Dehra Dun District Magistrate Shishir Priya Darshi said.

India's Seismology Department measured the 45-second quake at 6.1 on the Richter scale. The U.S. Geological Survey put the magnitude at 7.1.

The state's top police official, Director General Prakash Singh said 262 bodies had been recovered in the Uttarkashi district, United News of India reported. Darshi, the district magistrate, said the count in Uttarkashi was likely to rise.

At least 59 people were killed in the Tehri district just south of Uttarkashi, the news agency said, quoting a local official.

Another 20 people were killed in the Chamoli district east of Uttarkarshi, police said. The victims included 15 pilgrims at a Hindu temple in Kedarnath, they said.

A senior civil official in Dehra Dun, the nearest big town to Uttarkarshi said tens of thousands of homes were reported destroyed. The official spoke on condition of anonymity. United News of India said 400 villages were affected.

Army and paramilitary troops were dispatched to Uttarkashi and Chamoli. Four helicopters were ready to lift off at daybreak today with emergency supplies of rice, wheat and sugar and to start evacuating the injured, Darshi said.

The officials in Dehra Dun said police and rescuers were hamstrung by big landslides in the mountainous region, which can only be reached by tortuous and narrow roads.

Uttarkashi and Chamoli form a lush undulating terrain at the base of the Himalayan mountains and stretch 125 miles along the border with Chinese-ruled Tibet. No casualties were immediately reported in Tibet.

Communications between the Himalayan region and other parts of India, shaky even in normal times, snapped. Telephone contact halted seven hours after the quake early Sunday, and officials had to rely on infrequent radio connections, one Dehra Dun official said on condition of anonymity.

At least three bridges and one dam were damaged, said police in Dehra Dun, a city of 250,000 people 120 miles north of New Delhi, the nation's capital.

Police said there were fears of flooding farther south, because landslides had dammed the Bhagirathi River, which flows down the Himalayas.

The river's name changes to the Ganges at the pilgrimage town of Hardwar and traverses the breadth of India's fertile Gangetic plains to the Bay of Bengal on the eastern coast.

The epicenter of the earthquake was in the Almora district, 135 miles southeast of Uttarkashi. Initial surveys found no damage or casualties in Almora.

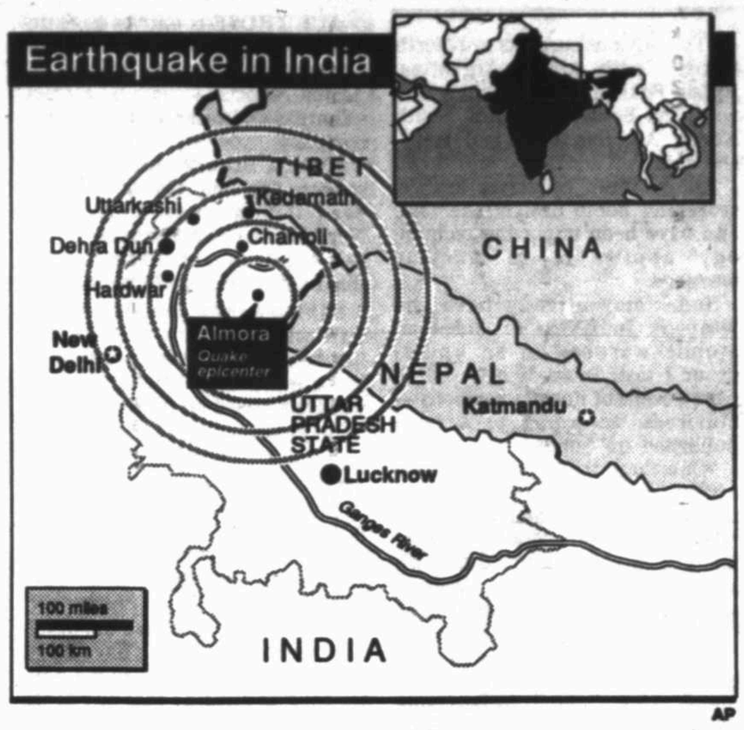

The tremors were felt in New Delhi and as far away as Jammu, 355 miles northwest of the epicenter.

In Nepal, chief government seismologist M.R. Pandey said about 16 aftershocks were felt in the western region of the neighboring country, but there were no immediate casualty reports. He said none of the aftershocks measured more than 3.5 on the Richter scale.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus a reading of 7, which is considered major, reflects an earthquake 10 times stronger than one of 6, which is considered severe.

The last major earthquake in the region occurred Aug. 21, 1988, along the Indian-Nepalese border. More than 1,000 people were killed.

Seismologists say the area is highly prone to earthquakes because it lies along a geological deformity, the Main Boundary Fault that runs 1,800 miles from India's eastern border in Arunachal Pradesh to beyond its western frontiers in Kashmir.

Israel, Egypt close to agreement on artifacts

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Israel and Egypt are nearing agreement on the return of thousands of artifacts removed during the 15-year Israeli occupation of the Sinai, Egypt's antiquities chief says.

"The climate of peace in the Middle East is giving a push to the discussions," Ibrahim Bakr, the chairman of antiquities, said in an interview Saturday.

Israeli and foreign archaeological teams excavated the relics in the ruin-rich Sinai peninsula from 1967 until 1982, when Israel ended the occupation that began with its victory in the Six-Day War. Teams from Israel's leading universities and archaeological institutes found prehistoric tools, pottery, statues, coins, and portions of pharaonic temples.

At least some are on display in Israeli museums, antiquities sources said.

Bakr said experts from various branches of his organization and Foreign Ministry officials will travel soon to Israel to discuss the artifacts' return.

He said the trip could come as early as November.

"We feel for the first time everything is in order," Bakr said. "From our side, we're ready. From their side, they're ready."

Discussions about the artifacts began with the 1978 Camp David Accords that led to a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel. Many of the agreements, particularly involving cultural disputes, are only now being realized.

Bakr characterized the coming discussions as a "first step in cultural cooperation" between the former longtime enemies.

In 1986, the late Ahmed Kadry, then the chairman of antiquities, announced he was sending antiquities officials to Israel to fetch the missing artifacts.

But he stopped short after examining photographs of some of the antiquities Israel planned to return, labeling them "junk."

Bakr, a veteran excavator, said he has "no doubt" the information being provided by the Israelis now is accurate.

U.S. blacks visit South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Musician Quincy Jones and former tennis star Arthur Ashe headed a group of prominent black Americans who arrived Sunday to assess political changes in South Africa.

The 31-member delegation visited at the invitation of African National Congress President Nelson Mandela, and is to spend most of its three-day visit meeting leaders of the ANC, the main black opposition movement.

The Americans have no plans to meet with the white-led government or any other black opposition groups. Many prominent black Americans have refused to visit South Africa because of its apartheid policies.

However, Mandela called last week for an easing of so-called people-to-people sanctions, such as tourism, sports and cultural exchanges. The ANC continues to favor economic sanctions until President F.W. de Klerk makes additional reforms.

De Klerk has abolished all major apartheid laws and now seeks to negotiate a new constitution that will extend voting rights to the black majority.

Mandela hosted a luncheon Sunday for the delegation at a hotel in Johannesburg, and several meetings were planned before the group's departure Tuesday.

President Bush lifted the main U.S. economic sanctions against South Africa in July, but dozens of state and local governments maintain punitive measures.

Experts fear other nations to join nuclear club

By Peter James Spielmann
Associated Press writer

UNITED NATIONS — Iraq's success in secretly building a nuclear weapons program makes experts fear that other countries could vault into the nuclear club.

Baghdad had the advantage of oil money to finance its $10 billion nuclear program and a closed society under Saddam Hussein to keep the program secret. U.N. experts say Iraq might have perfected an atomic bomb in about 15 months had it not been for the Gulf War.

Iraq's defeat forced it to open its laboratories and military bases to U.N. inspectors, resulting in the discovery of a weapons program that astonished scientists with its breadth, complexity and advanced stage of development.

Meanwhile, a network of nations have been secretly trading nuclear technology, expertise and materials.

Experts worry most about countries in flashpoint regions where tensions are chronically high.

"THERE ARE plenty," said Diana Edensword, research analyst for the Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control in Washington.

■ An Analysis

"The obvious suspects are North Korea, South Africa, Argentina, Brazil, Pakistan, India, Libya, Taiwan, the Soviet republics, South Korea, Algeria, Israel and Iran," she said.

All of these countries are researching bomb design, she said, and have been importing technology applicable to nuclear weapons.

Some may already have the weapons. India has exploded an atomic warhead in an underground test. Israel is believed to have dozens of nuclear weapons — hundreds, according to a book published on Sunday.

"One thing that's going to come out is the cooperation among these countries," Edensword said. "One country develops the trigger mechanism, they trade that with another country that has uranium, someone else provides other parts."

She contended Brazil and Iraq had a secret nuclear agreement under which the Brazilians supplied the Iraqis with tons of uranium concentrate. She said that South Africa and Israel have been linked and that China also aided Iraq.

ALL THOSE countries have denied helping other nations develop nuclear weapons, despite repeated reports — some by former scientists and technicians — to the contrary.

Michael Brower, director of research for the Union of Concerned Scientists, nominated North Korea and Pakistan as the two countries most likely to cross the nuclear threshold next.

Pakistan has fought several wars with India, and North Korea has built up a nuclear program to counter U.S. tactical nuclear weapons based in South Korea.

"Pakistan is fairly well understood, but I think we don't know very much about North Korea's program. They might well surprise us with the extent of their program," Brower said in a telephone interview from his office in Cambridge, Mass.

"Other countries have the disadvantage that they don't have Iraq's immense oil revenues, so it's a little hard to imagine that any other country would have such a vast nuclear complex," Brower said.

Foreign Minister Lee Sang-ock of South Korea predicted earlier this month that North Korea would be able to build atomic bombs within four years.

NORTH KOREA denies it is developing nuclear weapons but says it will not allow international inspections of its nuclear program until the United States removes its tactical atomic weapons from South Korea. There were news reports over the weekend that President Bush has decided to pull out those weapons.

The technology to build a crude atom bomb is fairly simple. Scientists are more worried about the advancing sophistication among Third World countries in building components for more powerful thermonuclear weapons.

U.N. weapons experts found the "smoking gun" for Iraq's thermonuclear program in documents seized in a Sept. 23 raid in Baghdad.

"A program was under way to produce lithium-6, a substance that has only one use, namely use in thermonuclear weapons," said Hans Blix, director of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

The agency is supposed to monitor nuclear plants around the world and ensure countries that have signed the 1970 Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty are not developing weapons or sharing weapons technology.

David Kyd, a spokesman for the U.N. agency, based in Vienna, Austria, said it "has no reason to believe" that North Korea — or any nation, for that matter — has a nuclear weapons program.

"HOWEVER, NOBODY knew how close Iraq was to developing nuclear weapons," he added.

Iraq, as well as arch-rival Iran, both signed the Non-Proliferation Treaty as well as safeguard agreements that allow the IAEA to inspect nuclear plants.

The Iraqis simply organized an alternative nuclear program, letting the IAEA inspect its two legal research reactors while secretly running another program to develop atomic and hydrogen warheads.

"You often hear that if Iraq did this, how many more countries are doing this?" said Blix.

A book published on Sunday by investigative reporter Seymour Hersh says Israel built a false control room and other fake sites to trick American inspectors in the 1960s into believing the nation's nuclear center was only for academic research. Israel has not signed the Non-Proliferation Treaty and does not allow international inspections.

The United States has estimated that Israel has less than 100 nuclear weapons, a contention never acknowledged by the Israelis. But Hersh's book, "The Samson Option," says Israel has 300 or more nuclear warheads, including low-yield neutron warheads designed to kill people while leaving property undamaged.

THE BOOK says Israel has loaded its nuclear missiles on launchers three times — twice during the war with Egypt and Syria in 1973 and once during the Gulf War when Iraqi missiles were falling on Israeli cities. Hersh also says part of Israel's nuclear strategy has been to target some weapons in the Soviet Union to pressure Moscow to restrain aid to Arab states during times of war.

Many other nations knocking on the door of the nuclear club also have not signed the Non-Proliferation Treaty, including India, Pakistan, Algeria, Argentina and Brazil.

John Paul rails against killing Brazil's poor

By Alan Cowell
N.Y. Times News Service

SALVADOR, Brazil — In an impassioned address as he neared the end of a 10-day tour of Brazil, Pope John Paul II inveighed Sunday against the abandonment and killing of children born to a life of poverty and hazard in the slums that coil about this country's cities.

'There cannot and should not be children assassinated... on the pretext of preventing crime...'
— Pope John Paul

John Paul

Then, at a meeting with several hundred schoolchildren dressed in dazzling white, he sang along with them, pressed among them to bless them and exhorted their elders to practice "responsible parenthood."

The pope's words were a tacit acknowledgment of the perils of an explosion that has given Brazil, the world's biggest Roman Catholic country, a population of around 150 million. They also reflected the sense of gathering crisis that has infused his visit to a country where the gulf between rich and poor is rapidly widening.

In 30 homilies and speeches since he arrived in Brazil nine days ago, the pope has evoked a troubled image of a land in which the Catholic faith is being eroded by Protestant fundamentalist sects, where political leaders have done little to counter violence and mounting poverty and where ordinary people are mired in moral degradation.

"There cannot and should not be children assassinated and eliminated on the pretext of preventing crime, marked for death," he declared Sunday. "Do you want all the children to be happy? Do you want a city, a state, a country without abandoned children, and without street children?"

While he was addressing relatively well-to-do youngsters, Vatican officials said, his message was directed at Brazilian president Fernando Collor de Mello, whom the pope has on many occasions urged to embark on reforms that will give jobs, homes, schools, hospitals and land to the growing ranks of the country's poor.

Vatican officials, speaking in return for anonymity, expressed dismay at what priests here say is a practice, ascribed to some Brazilians, of killing abandoned children and others who roam the streets, begging and stealing, on the ground that it prevents harassment and crime.

As the pope stepped through garbage and puddles in driving tropical rain in a slum near the city of Vitoria on Saturday, Graca Andreatta e Silva, a community leader, told him, "Tell God that our decimated Indians ask for help, that our blacks are still slaves, that the number of slaves has increased to include all of us and that people are dying of hunger."

For the Roman Catholic Church, the population problem presents a dilemma between theology forbidding artificial methods of birth control and the sense of some Brazilian priests that unchecked population growth will only bring more suffering.

Thus, while the pope has frequently condemned abortion, sterilization and contraception, he seemed to shift emphasis Sunday to underline permissible notions of family planning.

Through "natural methods," the pope said, Catholics could insure that "among the initiatives to create a normal and balanced population growth, the public powers will not have the right to promote abortion, mass sterilization and the indiscriminate spreading of artificial methods of birth control."

Relief convoy delivers injured Croats

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Braving mortars and minefields, a relief convoy pulled in safely behind Croatian lines Sunday to turn over to hospitals scores of seriously wounded people evacuated from an embattled Croat stronghold.

Doctors and European Community monitors on the convoy criticized both Serbs and Croats for failing to adhere to the cease-fire during the 13-hour journey from the besieged town of Vukovar. They were especially concerned for residents left behind, including more than 2,000 children, in the battered town.

Fighting resumed in Croatia's eastern Slavonia region on Sunday afternoon, and Croats and Serbs blamed each other for violating the latest cease-fire attempt.

Fighting also was reported around the medieval Croatian port of Dubrovnik. And mortar shells reportedly fell on villages south of Zagreb, as well as the eastern strongholds of Osijek and Vukovar.

More than 1,000 people have died in the fighting that began after Croatia declared independence June 25. All previous cease-fires have failed.

Early Sunday, a convoy of doctors and nurses from Doctors Without Borders and EC monitors dropped off 113 seriously wounded people from Vukovar to two Croatian hospitals, said Martin Mossinkoff, a spokesman for Doctors Without Borders.

Mossinkoff told reporters in Zagreb that a 60-year-old man, suffering third-degree burns, died six hours after arriving at a field hospital in Mikanovci, 24 miles southwest of Vukovar.

The convoy came under shelling as it prepared to leave the embattled stronghold Saturday afternoon, and it was forced to make a 70-mile detour that took it through some of the most fought-over territory in Croatia.

One truck carrying aid workers and several wounded hit a land mine outside Vukovar, seriously injuring two nurses hurled from the vehicle. Both were reported in satisfactory condition Sunday.

The convoy finally moved into Croatian-held territory early Sunday morning, and dropped off the most serious cases at a field hospital 24 miles southwest of Vukovar. The rest went to a hospital in Djakovo, 50 miles west of Vukovar.

Describing the scene in Vukovar, Dutch EC monitor Bert Nauta said: "It was terrible. The people came out to meet us waving, crying, like my people came out to greet the Allies liberating us at the end of World War II."

Defense officials in Vukovar, on the Danube River border with Serbia, said as soon as a downpour ended at 2 p.m. Sunday, about 100 rockets fired from multibarrel rocket-launchers rained down on the city from the Serbian bank of the Danube.

Croatian defense officials also accused federal troops of shelling villages 18 miles south of Zagreb, the republic's capital, as well as villages north of Osijek.

However, the army blamed Croat forces for fighting in western and central Slavonia, particulary around Nova Gradiska and Jasenovac, according to the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug.

Tanjug also quoted military sources as saying fighting was continuing on the outskirts of Dubrovnik, with the army hitting Croatian positions in two well-known hotels in Srebreno and Kupari, south of the famous tourist resort.

Croatian media said the army was shelling the main coastal road north of Dubrovnik from hills.

Panel to query ex-budget director about BCCI

The Nation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The BCCI scandal, overshadowed by the furor surrounding Clarence Thomas, is likely to take center stage again this week as a Senate panel questions Washington super lawyer Clark Clifford and former budget director Bert Lance.

"We're going to look at the impact on people's lives in America," said Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., chairman of the Foreign Relations subcommittee on terrorism, narcotics and international operations.

The Bank of Credit and Commerce International has been at the center of a global controversy that reached fever pitch in Congress early last month.

Some lawmakers charged that U.S. officials ignored danger signals concerning the foreign-owned BCCI and missed a chance to stop illicit activities much earlier. Officials of the Federal Reserve and other agencies were called to account before several congressional committees.

Interest in the banking scandal flagged in recent weeks as the nation became transfixed by allegations of sexual harassment leveled against Thomas, a Supreme Court nominee.

Financial regulators around the world shut down BCCI's operations over the summer amid allegations of massive fraud, drug money laundering and support of terrorists. The high-flying bank, its Pakistani founder and its former chief executive officer were indicted by a New York grand jury for alleged fraud, falsifying records and stealing more than $30 million from depositors.

Last Friday, Miami lawyer James F. Dougherty II told the subcommittee that U.S. prosecutors ignored repeated warnings about illegal activities in the United States by BCCI and its customers.

Dougherty, who represents an insurance group that has sued the bank, said he appealed directly to then-Attorney General Dick Thornburgh in December when he found evidence the bank was likely to destroy or move records.

"We received no response to that," Dougherty said, adding that the only indication of interest from U.S. officials came from Internal Revenue Service criminal investigators.

This week, the subcommittee is scheduled to hear testimony from Lance, Clifford and his law partner Robert Altman, as well as from a former BCCI executive and officials of the CIA and State Department.

The CIA used BCCI in the mid-1980s to collect intelligence about drug traffickers and terrorist groups. An internal review of the CIA's dealings with the bank found no evidence of wrongdoing, the agency said last week.

Clifford, a powerful Washington insider and adviser to Democratic presidents, resigned in August as chairman of First American Bankshares Inc., the bank holding company the government says was illegally acquired by BCCI in 1982. Altman quit as a director of Washington-based First American and president of an affiliate.

The two weren't named in the New York indictment. Both have denied any wrongdoing and said they were unaware of BCCI's secret ownership of First American.

Kerry said he and other subcommittee members plan to question Clifford and Altman on points raised by their previous testimony as well as about other issues.

Lance, who left the Carter administration in 1977 amid an investigation into his finances, was represented then by Clifford. Lance is believed to have introduced Clifford and Altman to Agha Hasan Abedi, BCCI's founder. Lance has denied any misconduct.

Their Washington law firm, Clifford & Warnke, represented BCCI, Abedi, Lance and others in 1978 lawsuits by the Securities and Exchange Commission and First American's predecessor bank. After Clifford and Altman took the reins at First American in 1982, they earned millions of dollars as lawyers for First American and BCCI.

Ghaith Pharaon, a Saudi tycoon alleged by the government to have been a key front man for BCCI, bought National Bank of Georgia from Lance in 1977. The Federal Reserve has said that acquisition helped BCCI secretly make its initial entrance into the U.S. market.

Pharaon sold the Georgia bank in 1987 to First American.

CIA Acting Director Richard Kerr also has been asked to testify this week.

The agency's director-designate, Robert Gates, has said that starting in 1986 the CIA relayed what it knew about BCCI's activities to the Treasury Department, believing the information would be passed on to relevant government agencies.

Scientists to study remains of alleged killer of Huey Long

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — The tomb of the man labeled by history as Huey P. Long's assassin was opened Sunday as a forensics sleuth hoped to settle questions about the death of the Louisiana political legend.

Aware of the tombs of other family members nearby, workers carefully scraped away 19 inches of hard dirt on top of the vault of Dr. Carl Austin Weiss, who died in a hail of bullets along with Long in 1935.

If traditional historic accounts are correct, Weiss, a 29-year-old physician, shot the "Kingfish" as he strolled down a state Capitol corridor, then was killed by Long's bodyguards.

But questions have arisen on whether Long was fatally wounded by his overeager watchdogs who pumped dozens of bullets into Weiss outside the Senate chamber.

After the vault was lifted from the grave with straps and chains, black plastic was held high by sheriff's deputies to hide the wooden coffin while it was X-rayed.

James E. Starrs, a forensic scientist at George Washington University in Washington, D.C., said the vault was in good condition, but that time had caused the wooden coffin to come unglued. Although the coffin fell apart when the lid was lifted, there was a complete, usable skeleton and some tissue, Starrs said.

The remains were then taken to a laboratory in Lafayette, about 55 miles away, for extensive study. Results were not expected to be announced before February.

Starrs, who is also publisher of the Scientific Sleuthing Review, said an examination of Weiss' remains could shed light on the dispute over who killed Long. He said he is paying for most of its $7,000 to $10,000 cost.

"We are using scientific evidence to corroborate or not what the eyewitnesses had to say," Starrs said. "What we're after is who did what, when and how."

Long, Louisiana's governor from 1928 to 1931, was killed at age 42 when he was U.S. senator. After moving to Congress, Long left behind a crony as figurehead governor, O.K. Allen, who took his orders from the Kingfish. A rubber stamp Legislature almost always gave Long what he wanted.

A rival of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Long was beloved by many for his "share the wealth" philosophy of a guaranteed income for the poor and limited income for the rich. Enemies called him a demagogue whose eventual goal was to become dictator of the United States.

Carl Weiss Jr., an orthopedic surgeon in New York who was only 3 months old when his father was killed, gave permission for the exhumation and was at the cemetery Sunday.

"We have no reason to believe there is any logic in thinking he contemplated a violent crime like this," said Weiss.

Historians have suggested that Weiss may have gone to the Capitol to confront Long about a racial slur against his wife's family or a Long-backed bill to gerrymander Weiss' father-in-law, Judge Benjamin Henry Pavy, out of office in St. Landry Parish.

Ed Reed, a Baton Rouge author who has studied the Long killing, said he believes Long intended to be a martyr and is convinced that Long was shot by his own bodyguards.

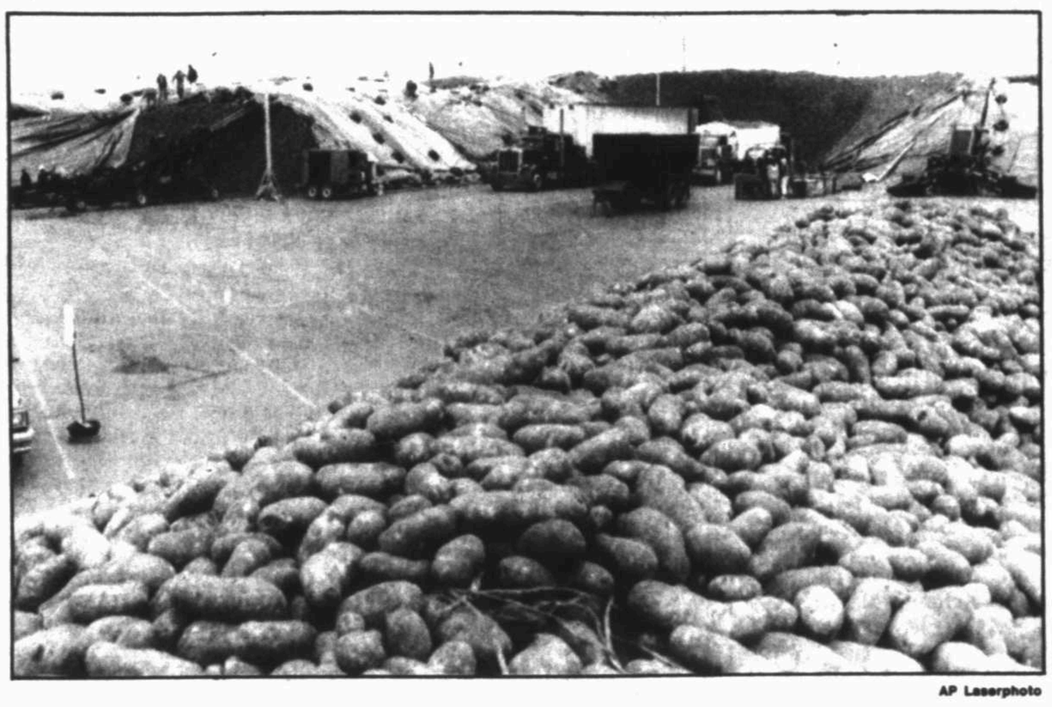

"I am sure he (Weiss) did not hit Long," Reed said.

Reed said he believes differences in the calibers of bullets fired could provide the definitive evidence.

State police recently reopened the investigation of Long's death after evidence including the purported murder weapon and investigative documents, were recovered from the daughter of a former state police superintendent who retired in 1940. Possession of the evidence is now the subject of a civil court suit in New Orleans.

After the project is finished, Carl Weiss Jr. said he hoped to have his father's remains cremated.

"We don't want to have another press gathering at another gravesite," he said.

Mountain of spuds

A mountain of potatoes 21 feet high and covering 40,000 square feet looms in a parking lot at Ore-Ida Foods in Stevens Point, Wisc. A quick harvest contributed to the record-breaking 30-million pound pile, which was created earlier this month after storage facilities were filled, according to John Landa, an Ore-Ida field manager.

Man threatens to push his baby off roof

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — A man put his baby daughter on the edge of a 19-story building in the Bronx and threatened to push her off Saturday, then was shot by the police to end the rooftop stand-off, officers said.

The man, Alfred Taliaferro, 24, had stood on the edge of the same roof once before in the last two weeks, threatening to jump himself, the police said.

This time, he was distraught over a custody battle for his 1-year-old daughter, they said.

"I can do whatever I want with the baby. It's my baby," a police spokesman, Det. Ralph St. Just, said Taliaferro told the officers trying to coax him away from the edge of the roof Saturday night.

The police said Taliaferro had broken into the apartment of the child's mother, Audrey Edwards. He bit Ms. Edwards, they said, then grabbed the infant and headed for a stairway that leads to the roof. Ms. Edwards' apartment is in a building adjacent to Taliaferro's apartment building, police said.

As Taliaferro was setting the child on the edge of the roof, threatening to push her off, Officer LeMar Rein of the 40th Precinct shot him twice, once in each leg.

Taliaferro, who was treated at Lincoln Hospital, was arrested and charged with second-degree attempted murder, burglary, endangering the welfare of a minor, reckless endangerment and second-degree assault, St. Just said.

The child was unharmed.

Swaggart blames 'demon spirits'

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Evangelist Jimmy Swaggart, recently found associating with a prostitute, told his followers Sunday that "demon spirits" were responsible for his woes.

Appearing somber but tearless before 500 members of his congregation, Swaggart said he was temporarily stepping down but "will not quit."

Sitting in a leather chair in front of the pulpit at his 7,000-seat Family Worship Center, Swaggart said he had a problem, but didn't say what it was.

"In my mind I knew it was demon spirits ... without warning, without any stimulation. Psychology says something has to trigger it ... but when demon spirits function, they don't have to have any stimulation or triggering devices.

On Oct. 11, Swaggart was driving in Indio, Calif., near Palm Springs, and was pulled over for a traffic violation. In the car with him was a woman who said she was a prostitute. The woman said Swaggart had picked her up and asked her for sex.

Man charged in family's murder

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A man who tried to jump from a Boston bridge was charged with killing his wife and three children Sunday, police said.

James Colbert, 39, was charged with four counts of first-degree murder, said police Chief David Walchak, who called the slayings "the worse tragedy in the city's history."

The bodies of Mary Jayne Colbert, 30; Emily, 2½; Elsie, 1½; and Patricia, 10 weeks, were found early Sunday in their Concord apartment, police said.

The victims apparently died of asphyxia, said Michael Ramsdell, the state's senior assistant attorney general. Autopsies were scheduled.

Police in Boston received a call early Sunday that a man was trying to jump from Boston's Tobin Bridge, said Massachusetts State Police Sgt. John DiFava. Boston is 74 miles south of Concord.

Two troopers persuaded the man not to jump. He identified himself and "said he just killed his wife and three children," DiFava said.

Ramsdell said the couple had separated, with the mother and children living in Concord and the father living in Chester, about 25 miles to the southwest.

Ed King, a Concord neighbor, said Colbert was an unemployed truck driver who told him he had lost his rig two or three months ago.

"To kill a little, tiny kid ... I can't believe any human being doing that," King said.

Colbert was scheduled to appear in court today in Boston, where officials will seek to extradite him to New Hampshire.

Lincoln letter sells for $28,600

DETROIT (AP) — A letter written by Abraham Lincoln in 1863 sold for $28,600 during a telephone auction.

Collectors and dealers nationwide bid on the letter Saturday at the DuMouchelles gallery in Detroit.

A Beverly Hills, Calif., dealer and a Detroit collector battled for the letter until the Detroit collector, whose name was not released, prevailed.

The president's letter is dated Oct. 16, 1863, and addressed to T.C. Durant, an employee of the Union Pacific Railroad.

DuMouchelles spokesman Joe Walker said the letter was of interest because of Lincoln's apparent befuddlement with a telegram sent to him by Durant.

"I remember receiving nothing from you ... and I do not comprehend your dispatch of today," Lincoln wrote.

Peace Prize aids Myanmar leader

By awarding the 1991 Peace Prize to Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, the inspirational leader of Myanmar's democracy movement, the Norwegian Nobel Committee gives fresh hope to a people oppressed by one of the world's ugliest remaining tyrannies.

This recognition may shame Asian nations like China and Thailand into withdrawing economic and political support from Mrs. Aung San Suu Kyi's jailers, the State Law and Order Restoration Council, or Slorc. Even if these neighboring regimes remain unmoved, Myanmar's democrats can be heartened by the examples of previous Peace Prize winners like Lech Walesa and Archbishop Desmond Tutu.

To be heartened, Myanmar's people have to learn the news. The Slorc, which holds Mrs. Aung San Suu Kyi under house arrest, will make that as difficult as possible. So tight is its grip that her husband, now residing in the U.S., cannot be certain that his wife is even alive.

Her prestige has probably spared her. She is the daughter of the man who led the country then called Burma to independence, and she carried her party to overwhelming victory in last year's parliamentary elections. Yet thousands of others have been killed in Myanmar's struggle for democracy. And the Slorc still brazenly refuses to honor those decisive election results.

Fortunately, the world is now too small for tyrants to feel protected by the old conventions of absolute national sovereignty. The U.S., thanks in large measure to Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., now pressures the Slorc with economic sanctions. The European Parliament, which awarded Mrs. Aung San Suu Kyi its Sakharov Prize, and now the Nobel Committee exert another kind of useful pressure.

This faith that Myanmar's people are as entitled as any other to share in the emerging new world of democracy and basic human rights will eventually be vindicated. If China and Thailand believe that too, they have it in their power to accelerate democratic change. How long will they choose to hold themselves apart from the conscience of the world?

Parental involvement means better schools

Time was when much of America assumed its children lived in an Ozzie and Harriet world. Little Johnny or Jill came home from school to milk and cookies and a Mom who made them do their homework, which Dad checked later.

In this world the United States so dominated the world's economy that people assumed nothing would ever dislodge it from that summit.

People don't think that anymore.

The Light's issue San Antonio poll of parents, teachers, school administrators and business leaders found that these key groups are far from united on an action plan.

But one thing they agree on is that more parental involvement may be the key to turning the schools — and this nation — around.

Of course, the experts have not ignored it — they've been waving red flags for years, as have business leaders who know that the American work force is not measuring up. But nothing really will change until most parents recognize the true dimensions of the problem.

Only then will they demand more from their children, and from the public schools. And only then will this nation be able to summon the political will to really meet this challenge.

FOI move evens odds on scandal-makers

In light of the latest scandals in Congress, there could be no better time than now for a reformation movement designed to bring the lofty, pampered and arrogant senators and representatives down to earth with the rest of us.

But who is to get the ball rolling? Why, 10 freshmen Republican representatives, who have just introduced legislation that would remove Congress' exemption from the Freedom of Information Act.

A small step, to be sure, considering the enormous number of unmerited privileges and perks Congress has bestowed upon itself, not to mention its self-granted exemptions from practically every employment and civil rights act on the books ... But it's a beginning.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Oct. 21, the 294th day of 1991. There are 71 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 21, 1805, the Battle of Trafalgar took place off the coast of Spain. A British fleet commanded by Adm. Horatio Nelson defeated a combined French and Spanish fleet, thwarting plans by Napoleon I to invade England. Nelson, however, was killed.

On this date:

In 1797, the U.S. Navy frigate Constitution, also known as "Old Ironsides," was launched in Boston's harbor.

In 1917, members of the First Division of the U.S. Army training in Luneville, France, became the first Americans to see action on the front lines of World War I.

Truth plays hide and seek in Washington

WASHINGTON — In a city that functions on lies, the Clarence Thomas-Anita Hill drama demanded that the full truth come out. It didn't. Americans watched the televised hearings as though viewing a nightmare tennis match — the advantage bounding back and forth depending on who had the microphone.

Anderson

She's telling the truth; he's lying.

He's telling the truth; she's lying.

It was a nationwide head-throbber of a migraine that left many with a sense of hopelessness about the process. But as the Dutchess said to Alice in Wonderland, "Tut, tut, child. Everything's got a moral if you can only find it."

The moral is this: Americans crave to be told the truth. They know their government is doomed if lies continue to be the order of the day. And they are not yet so jaded that they have stopped demanding honesty.

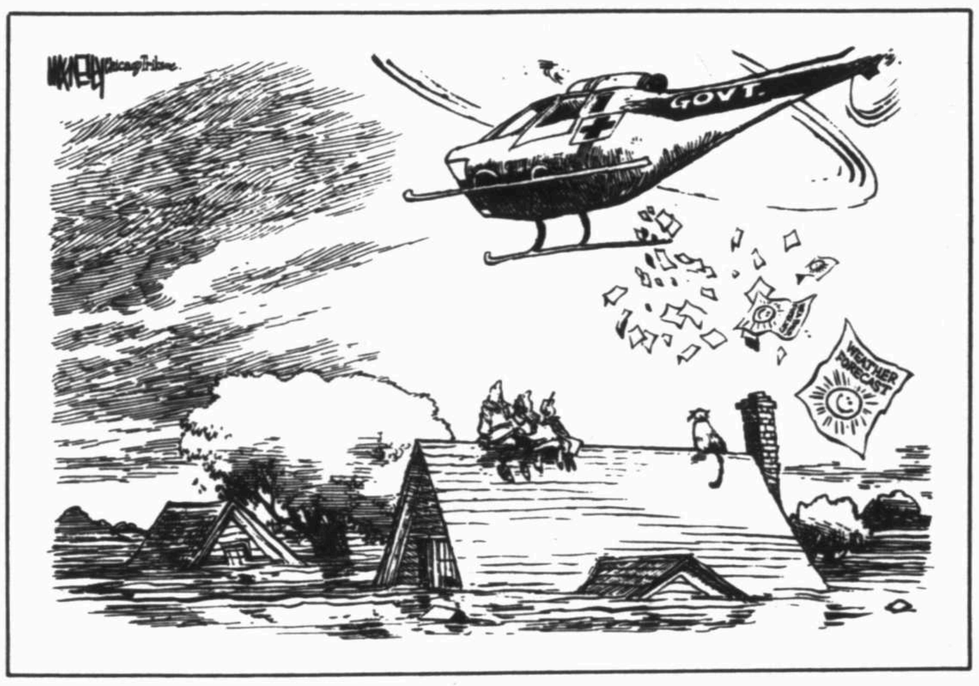

We agree with Sen. James Exon, D-Neb., who said the lies in this sordid episode began when George Bush ridiculously proclaimed that Clarence Thomas was chosen not on the basis of race or political conservatism, but because he was the absolute best person in the land to sit on the Supreme Court. That was a lie, but in Washington that kind of lie is called "political hyperbole" and it is swallowed every day, usually with a dose of euphemism to make it go down easier. The president can say with impunity that there will be "no new taxes," as long as he calls tax increases "revenue enhancements."

Thomas was not the wisest, the fairest, the most impartial or the most deserving person in America to put on the Supreme Court. The notion that the Supreme Court is made up of such people is a lie. But in Washington, that kind of lie is called "advise and consent." When we elect a president, we elect a whole slate of Cabinet officers, department heads and judges who are not necessarily the best people for the job. They are the choices of the president we choose, and that is where our choice ends.

Thomas, in round one of the confirmation hearings, implied that he had never had a discussion in which he expressed his opinion about the merits of Roe vs. Wade in his time as a law student, lawyer or private citizen. That was probably a lie. But in Washington, that kind of lie is called "spin control." Without it, a nominee to any federal post will be drummed out of consideration by those who do not share his or her opinion on vital issues of the day. The nominee with no opinions is the one who gets the job, so the system has made lies a necessity.

With lies so pervasive and accepted in the nation's capital, it was refreshing to see the Senate faced with having to determine the truth in this case. Still unaccustomed to getting at the facts, the Senate failed, but the exercise served as a bucket of cold water on Congress, which normally follows Mark Twain's maxim, to get the facts first and then distort them at your leisure.

So tangled was this case in a web of lies, that the Senate had neither the time nor the will to answer a question more pressing than the issue of whether Thomas is a sexual predator in the workplace. That more disturbing question is, does Thomas get his kicks from pornographic videos that demean women and make rape and bestiality a matter of entertainment? Because the Constitution protects his privacy, he had no obligation to expose his video library to the nation. Sexually bizarre conduct taken into the workplace is a matter of public interest, but sexually bizarre conduct in the privacy of one's home is nobody's business.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Myths of Thomas hearings need exploding

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — Myths are already being made about the Clarence Thomas hearings that should be exploded before they become received truth.

Myth 1. Because Anita Hill was sharply cross-examined and ultimately not believed by a majority, abused women will now refuse to come forward.

Safire

The fact is that women now know their rights in the workplace as never before. When a supervisor abuses power, the harassee should (a) make plain the advance is unwelcome; (b) start a "Specter diary"; (c) tell a confidant like a pastor or a lawyer; and (d) if it continues, go to the boss' boss or file a complaint. The hearings drilled a consciousness of power-abuse into every boss' head; that's good. We also learned that belated complaints urged by political coaches won't fly; that's good, too.

Professor Hill herself never did "come forward," 10 years after thinking she had been harassed; she was drawn forward by a political pressure group that used her to try to destroy a nominee.

Myth 2. Black Americans were diminished in this black vs. black confrontation. The opposite is true. Instead of seeing the usual parade of black politicians or militant leaders demanding entitlements on television, or seeing blacks portrayed as humorous Cosbys or sitcom characters, the nation was exposed to an array of articulate, sincere, fiercely loyal (on both sides) witnesses from the upwardly mobile professional class.

Long after we forget who was on which side, we will remember the intellectual sparkle of the history professor Nancy Fitch, and the moving testimony of Ellen Wells, the welfare manager. The cut-the-comedy summation of Carlton Stewart shut up Senators Simpson and Leahy, and Stanley Grayson — who looked at first like a tackle for the New York Giants — turned out to be an incisive investment banker whose authoritative presence contrasted with the bowl of quaking Jell-O that was the senator from Alabama.

Myth 3. The public will be swayed by "lie detector" stunts. The accusation publicity machine hired an ex-FBI sweat merchant to apply a no-lose nervousness test to its client, and of course she displayed her cool — which was announced as proof of "truth." Some media and a few hypocritical civil libertarians played along with this insult to the public's intelligence and are now sorry they did; the next step is to get the FBI to stop suggesting the possibility of such tests in its interviews. The polygraph stunt backfired; the populace is not as stupid as some inside the Beltway think.

Myth 4. A U.S. senator has an unbeatable advantage over a citizen witness. Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, not under oath, declared his innocence in the leaking of the Hill affidavit, but he soon demonstrated his willingness to go beyond the bounds of decency in seeking to discredit John Doggett, one of the Hill discreditors.

Not even the panel's Democrats could stomach this attempt to read an interview based on unsworn smears into the record, and the vicious intimidation was expunged. That was the low point of the hearings, but the way Metzenbaumism repelled everyone augurs well for the future. In the end, the besmearer was alone and despised by his peers; Ms. Hill leaves the field with her head high, but Metzenbaum and his staff slink away.

Myth 5. The process destroys good people. Certainly the leakage of unsubstantiated sex charges must be stopped, but the near-victimization was self-cleaning.

The man the Senate confirmed is better than the man the president nominated: we are fortunate that Thomas did not melt in the firestorm.

CHARLEY REESE

Government nourishes itself from private sector

Government is a parasitic organization which feeds off the private economy. If you do not understand that — and lots of people apparently don't these days — then you will have trouble understanding the situation in America today.

Reese

Even though lots of people get government checks in their mail — about half or a little more of the population — government does not create wealth. The money government spends all comes from the private economy, either in the form of tax revenue or borrowing. A lot of important things can be derived from this fact.

First of all, the private economy is more important than the government. You might never realize this since so much attention, especially by the media, is focused on the government. In fact, however, the private economy can survive without government (see Beirut), but government cannot survive without a healthy private economy.

Thirty-four of the 50 states are in financial difficulty as are many cities. The less said about the federal government's fiscal malfeasance the better. The reasons for these difficulties besetting governments at all three levels, however, are the same: the private economy is shrinking. Vampires get less blood from anemic victims, and government gets less revenue from an anemic private economy.

Most public officials, however, live so far out of touch with reality and are so uneducated that often their response to shrinking government revenues is to increase taxation. Instead of seeing their shortfalls in revenue as an alarm bell signaling real trouble in the private sector, their instinct is to take more out of the private sector and thus make the situation worse.

Taxing unemployment insurance benefits is one vivid example of this kind of political mentality.

A lot of the trouble with the private economy rests with government. Despite the rhetoric of reducing regulations, if you have some capital and decide to start a business which will actually produce a product or service and provide jobs for people, government officials will descend on you like grasshoppers.

Every one of the non-productive government officials will be there to tell you what you can't do with your own money and your own property, and they will all charge you fees for the telling. Another set of bureaucrats will be there to tell you what you must do with your own money and your own property. The slice of freedom left between the can't-dos and the must-dos imposed by government bureaucracy has grown progressively smaller.

That's why smart people with capital often choose to invest it in government folly (also known as bonds and notes) or overseas. What we have done in the name of this or that is to create conditions which restrict people's ability to become economically self-sufficient. That's about as self-destructive a course of action as any society can take.

To no small extent there is a mindset in this country which views success as sin and failure as evidence of sainthood. On the other end of the spectrum there is a mindset which views accumulation of money as success no matter how morally repugnant the method of accumulating the money has been.

At any rate, suffice it to say, that if the private economy goes to the land really down below, government will follow it. To suppose that government can save us when the economy goes is like imagining that the passengers on the plane can save us by flappping their arms when the engines stop.

We had best turn our eyes away from government toward the private sector and encourage true productive activity. I add that qualification because to the Reagan-Bush Republican types, the private sector seems mainly to be Wall Street wizards, lawyers and bankers — a group of people as non-productive as bureaucrats.

The Rev. L.D. Marion, center, associate pastor of Bible Way Missionary Baptist Church in Copperas Cove, leads prayer Sunday morning. The church's pastor, the Rev. Shannon McMullen, was injured during Wednesday's mass shooting at Killeen's Luby's Cafeteria.

Residents grieve for 22 victims of Luby's rampage

KILLEEN (AP) — Residents flocked to churches Sunday to pray and grieve for 23 people killed in a gunman's rampage through a restaurant.

Church services began a day of funerals for more victims of George Hennard, who rammed his pickup truck through a window of Luby's Cafeteria on Wednesday and methodically shot customers before killing himself.

It was the worst mass shooting in U.S. history.

The restaurant, where black plastic covered broken windows, was cordoned off with police tape. A police officer escorted those who wanted to place flowers in front of the building.

At the Bible Way Missionary Baptist Church, about 200 people prayed for the recovery of their pastor, the Rev. Shannon McMullen, who was among those wounded in the lunchhour shooting.

"I know there is a dark cloud that hangs over the city of Killeen," said the Rev. L.D. Marion, an associate pastor.

The Rev. Joseph Fagg, senior minister at First United Methodist Church, asked his congregation to pray for help.

"Our minds are laid heavy today with grief and confusion and shock, with the tragic events of the week past," he said.

Fagg read out the names of the dead. Some worshipers wept, and one sobbing woman was led outside. One of the victims, Ruth Pujol, 55, was a member of the congregation.

"In the last few days, no person in this community has gone untouched by the tragedy," said state Rep. Parker McCollough, who gave a guest sermon. "I and the rest of the nation watched in stunned disbelief as this quiet town writhed in agony over this senseless loss and violence."

Flowers were placed at the front of the sanctuary in memory of Mrs. Pujol and the other victims.

Next door, where the First Presbyterian Church of Killeen was meeting, the congregation also mourned the victims.

Funerals for Michael Griffith and Su-zann Neal Rashott were held Sunday. Funerals for five victims were held Saturday.

In Killeen and nearby cities, residents wore white ribbons in remembrance of the dead and raised money for victims' families.

Church members reminded of 1980 Sunday massacre

DAINGERFIELD (AP) — The cafeteria massacre in Killeen was a jarring reminder of the Sunday morning 11 years ago when a heavily armed man in military fatigues ran into the sanctuary of the First Baptist Church of Daingerfield and began firing.

He killed five and wounded 10.

Daingerfield, 35 miles north of Longview, hasn't forgotten that nightmare, the church members they lost nor the two men who died trying to save the lives of family and friends.

As a tribute to those who died on June 22, 1980, the church dedicated a marker in their memory Saturday morning.

"When I stand here, I think of a battlefield, because the gunman yelled 'This is war!' when he came in, and it was," the church's pastor, the Rev. Norman Crisp, said during the ceremony.

A black stone marker, flanked with yellow flowers on either side, a basket of white flowers placed underneath and a single red-rose lying in front, was inscribed with the names of the people killed on the front and a Bible verse on the back.

"The timing of it all makes it hard," said Ken Williams, referring to the Killeen shooting and the church's dedication of the marker. His grandmother, Thelma Richardson, was killed in the church shooting.

The marker reads "In Memory of Gene Gandy, Gina Linam, and Thelma Richardson — killed by a gunman as they worshiped — June 22, 1980."

At 7, Gina Linam was the gunman's youngest victim.

Underneath these names was a tribute to the two men killed in a fight with the gunman. "In honor of James Y. McDaniel and Kenneth A. Truitt — who gave their lives to save others."

For McDaniel's wife, Laverne, the dedication was extra special. She didn't get to attend her husband's funeral because of two gunshot wounds she suffered.

She doesn't remember much of the shooting, she said, except for her words to her husband during the shooting.

"I said, 'Red, I have been shot!' He got up, and that was the last time I saw him."

Slayings called 'satanic murders'

The State

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — The arrest of a couple in the robberies and slayings of eight young women has evoked images of the ritualistic murders committed in 1989 by a group of drug-trafficking occultists.

The news that a former Texan and his Mexican girifriend would be charged in the alleged murder-for-money scheme generated loose comparisons to the mutilation slayings carried out two years ago by the so-called "narco-satanicos," or drug Satanists.

Mexican newspapers last week carried headlines that screamed of the "satanic murders" that had taken place over the last two months at Ejido El Ebanito, where Rodolfo Infante, 28, and Ana Maria Ruiz Villeda, 20, are accused of luring eight young women with the promise of money and jobs.

El Ebanito, a communal farm that is home to some 600 families, is only about five miles from the notorious Santa Elena Ranch. It's at that now-abandoned ranch that a drug-trafficking cult led by Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo reportedly murdered 13 people as part of religious rituals.

Among the victims was 21-year-old University of Texas student Mark Kilroy, who disappeared in Matamoros while on spring break. Authorities say the cult committed the slayings while seeking magical protection from the law and rival smugglers.

"That had been forgotten," said Maria de los Angeles, a 75-year-old resident of El Ebanito who refused to give her last name. "Now this thing comes up."

Alfonso Avila Carrillo, a cab driver who can relate the story of the ritual slayings with vivid detail, said many people call the area around El Ebanito and Santa Elena Ranch "el triangolo de la muerte," the triangle of death.

"Because that's where a lot of people disappear," Avila said.

Even though the killings at El Ebanito have not been connected to any cult activity, some police agents have been referring to Infante and Ms. Ruiz as "los satanicos."

The two, who have been in a holding tank at State Judicial Police headquarters since their arrest last Wednesday, are charged with murder and robbery. Infante also has been charged with rape.

The victims, all women in their teens or early 20s from the interior of Mexico, were drowned.

A judge will decide the fate of Infante and Ms. Ruiz over the next few months. They each face 30 years in prison if convicted of the homicides. Also pending in a Matamoros court are verdicts for five men charged in the ritual slayings.

Police say Infante and Ms. Ruiz have confessed to all eight slayings. But the couple denies that.

Infante, formerly of San Benito, admitted in various interviews to slaying three of the women, but said Ms. Ruiz killed the rest and masterminded the crimes. Ms. Ruiz, a former resident of the Mexican state of San Luis Potosi, denied taking part in the drownings or of plotting the crimes.

Meanwhile, the story of how the couple allegedly lured their young victims to the ranch and killed them has grown in the telling. Conflicting reports gave the rapes and murders of the girls an even more sinister air as Mexican media reported the bodies had been sexually violated.

Authorities say none of the corpses were violated in that manner. Still, people have begun to talk and a quiet fear has spread among many in this city, particularly those residents of El Ebanito who are still reeling from the killings in their midst.

"You would never see these things before on this farm," said Maria de los Angeles, 75, who lives about 75 feet from the one-room shack rented by Infante.

"There aren't evil people here."

State university to study cow dung

■ $3 million earmarked to study environmental impact of manure in Erath County.

Associated Press

HOUSTON — The state is planning to spend $3 million to study the environmental and economic impact cow dung has on Erath County, where more than 80,000 dairy cattle produce about 7.9 million pounds of manure a day.

Questions abound as to whether the dairies are polluting local groundwater supplies, stock tanks on neighboring farms and the Bosque River, which flows into the Brazos River southwest of Fort Worth.

"It's like living next to an open cesspool," said Pat Wilson, a Lingleville ostrich farmer who lives downwind from a dairy calf feeding operation. "The odor would literally make you throw up, it's so bad. It's sickening."

However, dairies in Erath County produce milk valued at $144 million each year. A statue of a Holstein called Moola stands in the Stephenville town square.

"You're not going to find any elected person going out to make waves for the dairies because they're the power here," said Travis Brown, president of Cross Timbers Concerned Citizens, a 45-member local group.

"People up here still have the mentality that if it makes money, it's good, no matter what the environmental cost," he told the Houston Chronicle.

But state Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, said, "There's got to be a way business and the environmental (groups) can coexist."

Glasgow is a lawyer who represents some of the largest dairies and cattle firms in their pollution fights with state agencies.

He also is the author of the $2.7 billion tax increase passed by the Legislature this year. While lawmakers were making major budget cuts, $3 million was added to finance the Institute for Applied Research at Tarleton State University in Stephenville.

"We're getting out to do the research ... so somebody can say what you've got to do to protect the environment and make it economically feasible," Glasgow said.

The dairy pollution problem in Erath County cropped up about four years ago, when industrial-style dairies began moving to Texas. Before 1987, most of the county's dairies had been small operations, with 100 or 200 head spread out on hundreds of acres of pasture.

Now, dairies can consist of 1,000 or more cows jammed into a feedlot operation of 50 acres or less.

Hopkins County, long the dairy capital of Texas, has almost as many dairy cows as Erath. But there are only 10 dairies with more than 250 cows registered with the water commission, and none has more than 1,000 milking cows.

By contrast, Erath has 49 dairies of more than 250 cows each, with some milking about 3,000 head.

Ron Jones, director of the Institute of Applied Research, said the state may want to consider regulation that helps farmers comply with pollution laws.

Jones also said the environmental complaints in Erath County are unusual because most are made by other farmers.

"The people who are complaining here are not traditional environmental groups," he said. "These are other landowners who live downstream or down wind from the dairies. They are very conservative people of the land."

Activists distribute condoms outside high school game

HOUSTON (AP) — A group of AIDS activists who distributed 1,000 condoms outside a Houston high school football game sparked reactions ranging from gratitude to those who felt the action was "totally inappropriate."

The giveaway Saturday night outside the Lamar-Madison game was organized by Brian Bradley, a former nurse for M.D. Anderson Cancer Center.

Bradley was removed from that position after disclosing he was infected with the human immunodeficiency virus that causes AIDS.

"I appreciate it," said Richard Harris, 15, of the giveaway. "They saved me money.

"It's helpful, because if you're sexually active and you stay protected, you have nothing to worry about," he said.

However, some parents disagreed. Ruth Attar, who was at the game with her 11-year-old son, called the giveaway "totally inappropriate."

"We're out here to enjoy a football game," Mrs. Attar said. "Eight- and 10-year-olds shouldn't be exposed to this."

"It's encouraging kids to do something we don't approve of. This is giving them a carte blanche to do anything they want," said her husband, Mike.

Houston Independent School District officials wouldn't let the activists on stadium grounds, saying it is against policy to distribute materials on school property.

HISD Superintendent Frank Petruzielo said condom distribution should be handled by health clinics, not schools.

But Bradley replied that he would "rather educate (teen-agers) than bury them."

Touch guides blind man's hobby

LUBBOCK (AP) — Lea Johnson does not know which is worse: hearing the sounds of saws, drills, sanders and routers coming from her husband's darkened shop — or not hearing them.

When the equipment is operating, Allen Johnson is busy making miniature covered wagons, buckboards, cotton trailers and other wooden items.

Everything is made by touch, and Johnson, who lost his eyesight to a debilitating eye disease 12 years ago, will never see the fruits of his labor.

Johnson said his hobby began a few years ago when a friend challenged him to build a wooden train. Today, working in the dark, he not only creates rustic pieces straight from the past, he also builds hope for people facing struggles of their own.

"You can do anything you want to do if you want to bad enough," Johnson said, repeating a message he has taken to Boy Scouts and civic clubs throughout the region.

Mrs. Johnson said her fears about her husband's unusual hobby are tempered by the knowledge that he was determined to take it up.

"You have to let go. If they have that much determination and willpower ... you have to let go," she said.

"I admire him, but he's not the handicapped person in this family. He can get out of the car, walk up to the house and put the key in the keyhole. I have the porch light on and I still can't find the hole."

Mrs. Johnson said her husband's combined handicap and hobby have led to some unusual moments around the house.

"There have been lots of times when I have walked out there at night when it's pitch dark and heard the saw going," she said.

She added that she is afraid that one day Johnson will call her at work for a ride to the hospital after hurting himself in the shop.

So far, he said his only serious injury was when he misjudged the location of a piece of wood while working on the router, and then grabbed the spinning bit, shredding the tip of one finger.

Johnson admits to severe depression after losing his sight.

"There was no one in the world who was any sorrier for me than I was," he said. But after a friend told him he would lose everything he had worked for if that attitude persisted, he said, he changed his ways and ultimately enrolled in Texas Tech University.

Johnson gained much of his inspiration for his current art work while studying for a bachelor's degree in history with an emphasis on the Southwest.

He combines what he learned in school with what he hears from elderly residents, who recount the early days of West Texas, to build his art work, while at the same time preaching the doctrine that anyone can do whatever he wants.

AP Laserphoto

Allen Johnson displays the many wooden toys he has made with power tools despite his blindness. John, who has been blind for 12 years, took up the hobby to overcome depression.

Johnson said the task of teaching himself woodworking came partly from memories of building his own toys in childhood and of his job making machine parts before he lost his sight.

Other than that, he said, "You simply have to realize they (the tools) can't hurt you." To compensate for his lack of sight, Johnson said, he uses a sample piece of wood or string to determine wood lengths, and he has installed back stops on his radial arm saw and uses guides and push blocks on the table saw and router.

Until last year, Johnson was scoutmaster of a local Boy Scout troop. He said he quit the post — not because of his vision, but because the troop ran out of boys.

At one scout campout, Mrs. Johnson said, her husband and another leader were walking in the dark from the council circle to the mess hall.

Only after they got almost to the building did the companion realize he had shone his flashlight the entire trip on Johnson's white cane, illuminating the path for the blind man.

"He can tell a blind joke with the best of them," Mrs. Johnson said.

DEAR ABBY

Bisexual husband can pass AIDS to spouse

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband is bisexual. I have known it since the third year of our marriage, but I expected him to be faithful, so I figured his fantasies were his own business. Well, as it turns out, he has not been faithful, and he is HIV positive! We have two small children, and he is a good father. We have a lot in common, we rarely fight, and I love him.

Van Buren

But now the BIG problem: To be blunt, I would miss the sex and will not be unfaithful. Also, there is the whole AIDS problem. Will he get sick? Will he infect me or the kids? Can my children have their friends over? Should I be sterilizing the dishes and the towels? What and when do we tell the kids? Our families? He wants to stay married; now I'm not sure I do. I have been to a counselor several times, and I still can't make up my mind.

Please do not publish my name or location, for obvious reasons! —HIS WIFE

DEAR WIFE: I directed your questions to Dr. Merv Silverman, president of the American Foundation for AIDS Research. His response: "Unless more effective treatments are developed, eventually almost all HIV-infected individuals will have symptoms and, ultimately, AIDS.

"The only way your husband can infect you is through unprotected penetrative sexual activity. Will he infect the children? No.

"Your children can have friends over, and it is not imperative that dishes and towels be sterilized. Studies of households with an infected individual have shown absolutely no transmission of the virus unless there was unprotected sexual activity with the infected person.

"What and when to tell your children depend upon their ages. Since a person can look and feel well for years, it is probably not necessary to tell your small children until the symptoms start appearing.

"What and when to tell your families depend upon the relationship you have with those family members. Remember, however, that this disease is very difficult to deal with alone."

As to whether you should stay married, only you can make that decision. Regardless, you should be tested for HIV because, if you have been infected, you, too, should be under a doctor's supervision.

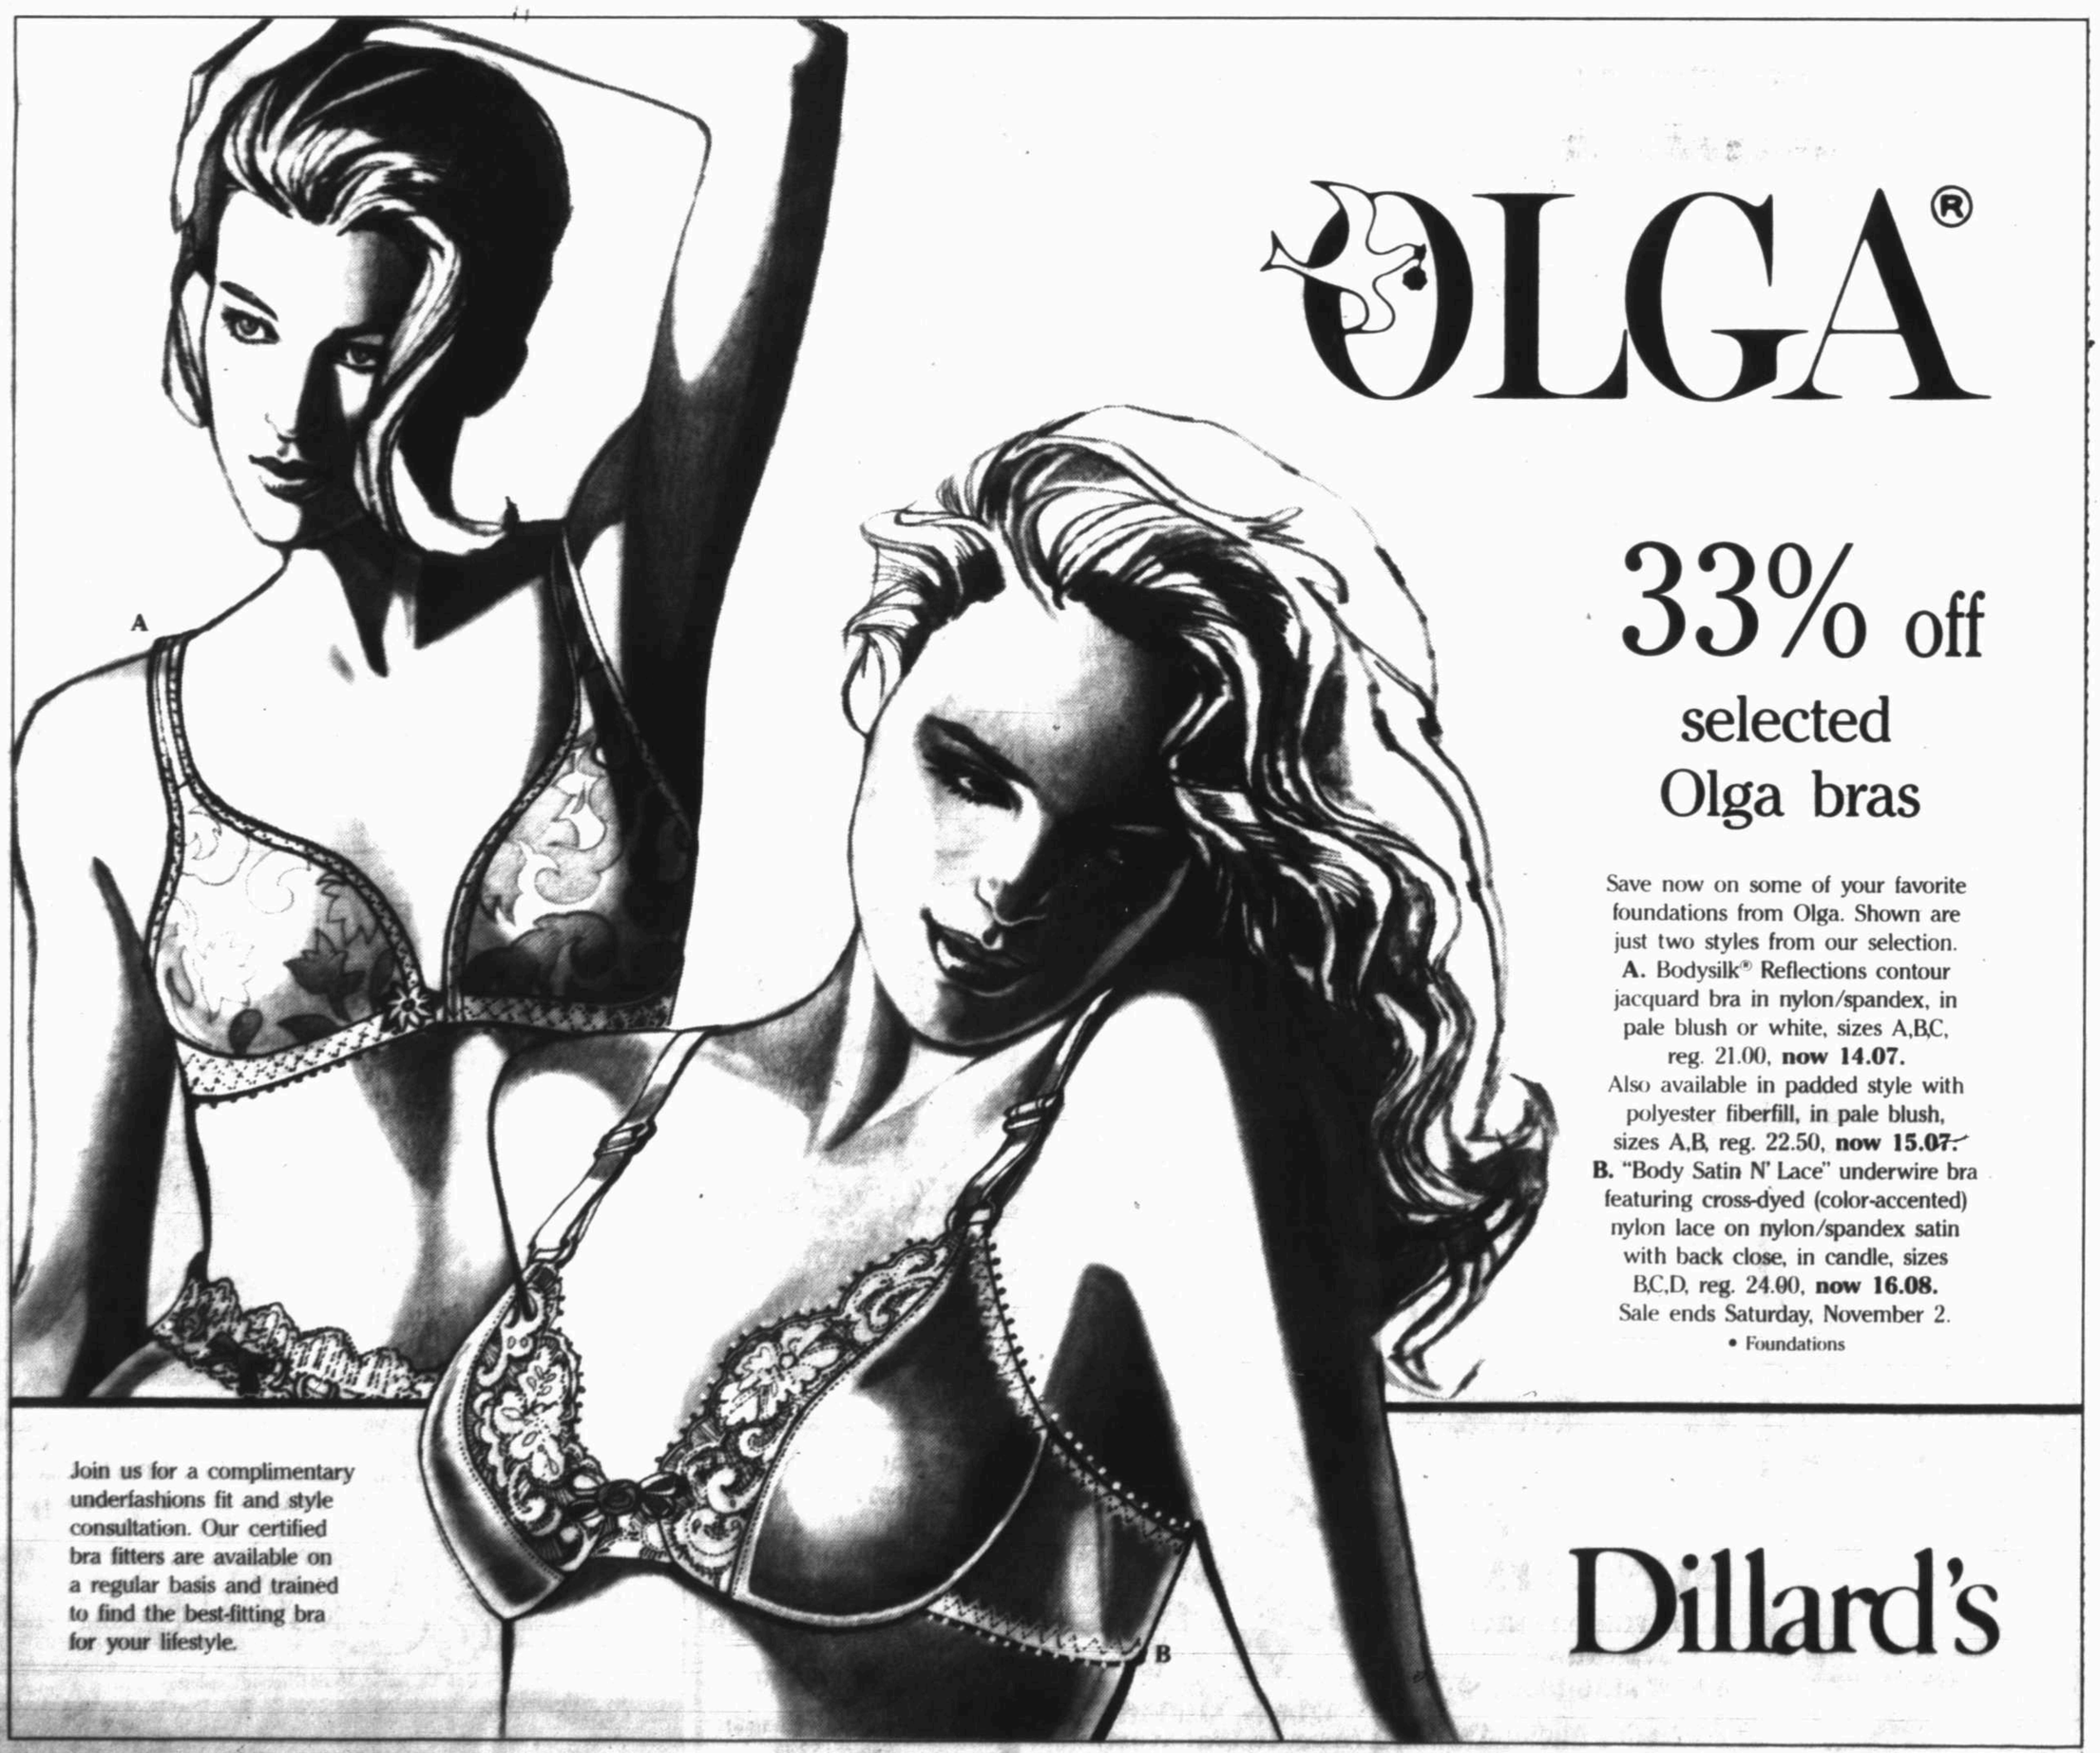

DEAR ABBY: My husband (I'll call him Barry) received an invitation to the wedding of his first cousin — I'll call him Joe. I realize that the wedding invitations were sent out by Joe's fiancee, whom we have never met, but it was addressed only to my husband, Barry. We have been married for 15 years and have two children. We see Joe only once or twice a year and he knows that we are married.

Am I to assume that I am not invited to this wedding? Or am I to assume it was an oversight on the part of Joe's fiancee? Also, are the children invited? — BARRY'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Your husband should call his cousin Joe, and explain this dilemma. I hope Joe will advise his fiancee that cousin Barry has a wife and two children, after which you will probably be invited. But don't bring your children unless they are specifically invited.

LIFESAVERS

ROOKIE FIREFIGHTERS BEGIN THEIR TRAINING

With only two weeks of training left, seven aspiring Midland firefighters can see their futures burning bright.

The group is near the end of an intensive three-month training program that started in early August. Upon completion of the program, the group will be certified for action with the Midland Fire Department.

Texas state law requires a minimum of 400 hours of training from a certified school, but the Midland Fire Department's program exceeds the mandate.

"We teach more than that number because we feel there is a lot more to learn," said Midland Fire Department Chief James Roberts. "One of those areas regards personal safety. That, of course, is very important and you can't learn enough about it."

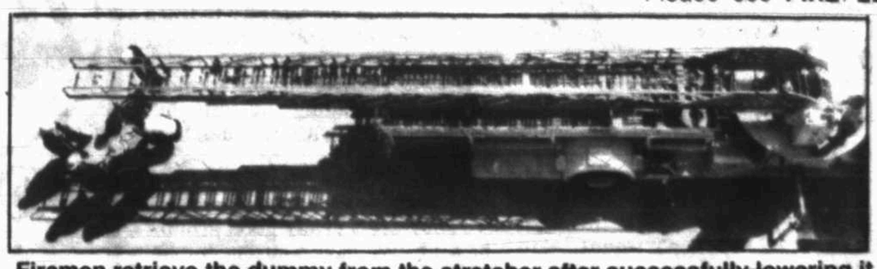

Hands-on experience encompasses nearly every possible situation or practice a firefighter may encounter, said Roberts.

For example, rope subject training includes the study of the various types of rope, care and maintenance of the ropes, knot-tying and identifying and demonstrating the types of uses for life and rescue lines.

Four of the trainees have been hired by the city but the others are paying their own costs.

"This saves the city thousands of dollars and it also puts them at the top of the hiring list," said Mansell. "Not to mention the fact that they are losing three months of income during this time."

Families, loved ones can talk to inmates via radio program

HOUSTON (AP) — The Prison Program, a two-hour weekly radio show, provides some families with the only contact they have with loved ones behind bars, and gives inmates a rare glimpse of the outside world.

The show airs from 3-5 p.m. on Sundays.

Mothers talk about the chocolate cake they baked but can't give to their sons, wives describe missed pizza dinners and kids' soccer games and children send hugs and kisses to their daddies.

Nielsen ratings indicate that 1,000 people listen during the first hour of the show, which is meant to keep inmates informed about legal and social issues. Listenership doubles for the second hour's family call-ins.

Inmates are not counted in listener surveys, nor are they allowed to talk to their loved ones over the airwaves.

But they are listening, insist the spouses, children and parents who jam the radio call-in lines every week.

Prisoners listen alone, wearing headphones, trying to escape for a few minutes the bars, gates, locks and miles that separate them from their families. Some go to great lengths to pick up the show as far away as Huntsville — many buy boosters for their radios and one inmate was even caught shimmying up a flagpole to try to build himself a more powerful antenna.

The developer and host of the show since it began 11 years ago is Ray Hill, a gay activist and former convict. Several times during a recent program, Hill lectured inmates on how to mend their lives.

The call-in format works, he said, because friends and relatives of inmates are far more eloquent than he.

"I have had everything on this show," he told The Houston Post. "Everything from 'the baby was born' to 'your mother died' to 'you S.O.B. I got the letter you intended for the other woman.'

"Then I get the real tear-jerkers: 'Daddy, I'm 5 years old. I'm having a party. Do you remember me? This is Ruby,'" he said.

Participants in the radio program say they want criminals to be punished, but also want people to remember that inmates are human beings.

"Early release does concern me," said Sandra, who has a close friend on death row. The newspaper did not use her last name.

VFW auxiliary head at area post

Louise Reid, president of the Department of Texas Ladies Auxiliary to the VFW, visited District 25 recently. The meeting was held at Post 4372 in Odessa.

Reid

Mrs. Reid was elected state president at the department's convention in Dallas in July. She directs the patriotic and service programs of the more than 50,000-member organization in Texas.

Her theme, "Caring & Sharing: We Make a Difference" urges all Americans to rally to the support of veterans, echoing the national organization's theme of, "We Serve Those who Served America."

During the District 25 convention, in which all auxiliaries in the district were represented, a raffle was held and $811 was collected to aid patients in the Veterans Administration Hospital in Big Spring.

Besides the hands-on experience, a significant portion of the training is conducted in the classroom, including 40 hours of first-aid training.

"We try to do as much of the practical as possible. It's definitely important for them," said Mansell.

Although everyone must pass a written test before certification, many of the applicants don't make it past the physical fitness test.

"On the first day we give a physical agility test. Someone always fails it, which is disappointing for them and me," said training chief Monty Mansell. "We always encourage them to try again."

The physical test includes pull-ups, sit-ups, a half-mile run, a balance beam exercise and several simulated firefighting exercises. Each skill has a minimum time limit.

"We had a female try this year but she failed the physical test. But that doesn't take anything away from her because we've had men fail it too," said Mansell. "It requires a lot of upper-body strength. I expect to see her try again though. She was pretty determined."

Typically, the program is offered once a year. However, that number can increase if the need arises at the department, said Mansell.

Mansell has worked with trainees for about three years, including a 2½-year stint as the training captain.

Ellery Stowell replaced him at that position.

"My position is filled by new captains. You can do it for up to two years," said Stowell. "The position is a good opportunity to learn a lot because you're constantly dealing with the fundamentals."

Stowell's duties include administering and grading the tests, but he also helps with the hands-on exercises.

Mansell seems proud of his current recruits.

"They are a really good group," he said. "We have a strong emphasis on teamwork and these guys have really built a camaraderie with each other."

'Pinkie' opened first liquor store in 1934

EDITOR'S NOTE: He was a gambler and a bootlegger and as crafty and cunning as a West Texas coyote. The late Tom "Pinkie" Roden was also a widely admired civic and political activist who wove his unique magic behind the scenes. As both a legal and illegal whiskey merchant, he cast a long shadow over the lives of many Texans. Maybe longer than even he knew. Part two of a five-part series examining Pinkie's life.

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press writer

ODESSA — When Prohibition was repealed in 1933, Pinkie Roden went semi-legitimate, opening his first liquor store the following year in Big Spring.

That's not to suggest that Texas was suddenly awash in legal whiskey.

At the time, vast stretches of West Texas were dry, and would remain so for years to come. Across thousands of square miles, Prohibition was not dead or even gravely wounded.

Those wanting to purchase legal whiskey often had to travel a hundred miles or more. Even today, large sections of the region remain dry except for scattered tiny and remote crossroads where beer and liquor are sold.

To label Pinkie a visionary or an entrepreneur would not be straining the truth; his actions speak for themselves. With West Texas ripe for the taking, he took.

The Big Spring store provided a facade of legitimacy and an early base for what would become a multi-million dollar enterprise, both legal and otherwise.

AND WEST Texans always were a thirsty lot with a lusty affection for cold beer and good, bad or bootleg whiskey.

"Pinkie never considered bootlegging a crime," joked one of his old cronies. "He considered it a public service."

Pinkie roamed his kingdom endlessly, meeting people, mapping routes, scouting potential store sites and almost always befriending bankers and making loans or deposits.

Years later, nephew Frank Deaderick marveled at Pinkie's travels.

"There was a standing joke that you'd better eat when you could because you might not stop until the next day," he said. "He hauled me to Lubbock one day and we wound up in Abilene three days later. We had no change of clothes or anything.

"You never knew."

Legislators created the Texas Liquor Control Board in 1935 to regulate the industry and ride herd on the bootleggers, who were prospering in the wide open spaces of West Texas.

From his corner hotel suite in Big Spring, Pinkie used binoculars to keep an eye on the local LCB office down the street, notifying his runners when agents were in and out and on the prowl.

His gifts of holiday hams, turkeys, steaks and liquor would come later.

Dan McCarty, a weekly newspaper publisher in Glen Rose, would one day maintain that "Pinkie's clout with the LCB was almost mystical," but his spell was not universal.

"If he had an unfriendly sheriff," friend Gene Garrison said, "he wouldn't drive through his county. But he would send in gifts to make friends."

Pinkie showed up one day in brother Bill Roden's office and said, "I've got to find a way to drive from Big Spring to Lubbock without getting on a highway," a distance just over 100 miles.

IN BILL'S single engine airplane, Pinkie scouted out every dirt road between the cities, but could not figure a way to get around a small town.

"He finally found a rancher who gave him a key to his gate," Bill Roden said.

Meanwhile, the good folks of Big Spring struck a surprise blow for temperance, voting the city dry while other cities were going wet. Pinkie was not pleased, though he learned a valuable lesson.

Never again would he be blindsided by a political election, an episode that left him feeling more than a little vindictive.

"If it stays dry, I'll still be selling whiskey in Big Spring, you know that," Pinkie reportedly warned Police Chief Pete Green.

But lock, stock and barrel, Pinkie moved his budding liquor empire 60 miles west to Odessa and never looked back.

He would eventually reopen a Big Spring store when the town reversed its dry vote, but he had found a home in Odessa. Instinctively, Pinkie knew Odessa was his kind of town, young and brash and prone to wink at any law that might intrude on the good times.

It was a marriage made on the southern outskirts of heaven.

Odessa has a hard-earned, richly deserved reputation as a raucous, wide open desert oil town, distinctly blue collar and borderline crazy over its high school football teams.

Through boom and bust, its civic braintrust never surrendered its splendid sense of humor, even toying with the idea of a new city slogan: "Odessa is Crude."

Pinkie's press clippings indicate his empire kept pace with the city's saucy flavor and astonishing growth, which more than doubled between 1950 and 1960 to just under 100,000.

In the mid-1950s, the Texas House Crime Investigating Committee convened in Amarillo to look into bootlegging activities in West Texas, particularly Lubbock. Then the biggest and wettest dry town in Texas, Lubbock was a tempting 120 miles north of Pinkie's Odessa base.

State Rep. Waggoner Carr, a Lubbock Democrat destined for higher office and subsequent scandals, subpoenaed liquor store owners, operators, records and a significant number of liquor agents.

The Houston Post, in a series on bootlegging, reported:

"TESTIMONY, TELEPHONE calls and other records showed beyond a doubt that a multi-million dollar syndicate, controlled by one Tom (Pinkie) Roden of Odessa, sold most of the liquor which ended up in Lubbock and other dry West Texas cities.

"A single store called The Farm near the Ector County line on the Odessa-Andrews highway sold $47,266 of liquor within three days after it opened. Its monthly sales thereafter ... ranged from $279,310 to $93,639, and never lower.

"And that for a country store 25 miles from a city."

In reality, the country oasis was not that remote but it most likely was a legal entity created for a nefarious purpose, namely to service a network of bootleggers.

"It was a fantastic store, sittin' out there in the boonies," says Gabe West, who once ran the operation for Pinkie. "There wasn't nothing else out there.

"You'd have to see it to believe it."

The Amarillo testimony also revealed that 10 stores which Pinkie controlled "through a system of demand notes" grossed $8,788,711 in 1951 and 1952.

"A SINGLE Lubbock bootlegger bought whiskey at wholesale for $47,000 in 30 days from one of the 10 stores," the Post reported. Pinkie's unusual blend of legal and illegal whiskey dealing was a law enforcement nightmare.

"He guaranteed delivery," recalls John Sliney, a former Odessa newspaperman. "Abilene, Amarillo, Lubbock. If it didn't get there, you didn't pay."

Jerry Hall of Austin, another former newspaperman, attended Texas Tech in the Fifties and says Pinkie's whiskey fleet in Lubbock included false bottom cattle trucks, taxis and even a hearse.

"He pretty much froze out the opposition," Hall laughed.

A princely renegade, Pinkie had the soul if not the style of a Robin Hood. He did in fact share the fruits of his often ill-gotten wealth and much of what he did was cemented in myth.

"People would tell all kinds of stories about him and he would never confirm or deny them," says brother Ted Roden, an Odessa beer distributor. "If he said no, they'd think he was lying. If he said yes, they'd think he was bragging."

MOBSTER MICKEY Cohen once took a purported interest in West Texas and flew into the Odessa-Midland airport, where he was met by Pinkie and a welcoming party of Texas Rangers.

According to the story, Cohen climbed back on the plane, flew off and never returned.

For Pinkie, life was a game. Like politics, he played it to the hilt, but by his own unique rules.

When a golf hustler beat one of his Lubbock bootleggers out of several thousand dollars, Pinkie paid a visit to brother Bill, then a scratch golfer.

"Get your golf clubs, Skeet's in trouble," Pinkie said.

He bankrolled a game in which Bill strung along the hustler for a couple of rounds. When the bet reached the proper level, Pinkie told Bill to bear down.

"I shot four or five under par and beat the guy and got Skeet's money back," Bill grinned. "Pinkie and I didn't make a dime."

TED RODEN got a speeding ticket once and told Pinkie, "I know you gave old so-and-so some whiskey. I'm going to get this fixed."

Don't do it, Pinkie told him. "Never ask your friends for anything," he explained. "If they want to do it, they'll do it."

No one ever accused Pinkie of offering a bribe, but as his business and his reputation grew, so did his largesse.

On occasion, he lobbied state liquor officials to replace troublesome agents with more compliant colleagues. But he probably used less subtle methods of persuasion, too.

In at least one instance, Pinkie was suspected of sending an aide to fire a warning shot through the window of an uncommonly aggressive investigator.

No one was hurt, but the bullet narrowly missed the agent's wife and the infant child she was holding.

A DEVOUT Democrat, Pinkie worked tirelessly behind the scenes to elect political cronies or oust political enemies, and associates claim the latter seldom knew he or she was on his hit list.

Pinkie's political credo was simple and sensible: Never ever put a politician on the spot. If something goes wrong, take the blame. If it goes well, surrender the credit.

Pinkie's political expenditures were not so clear cut.

"You'd hear stories about some outlandish political contributions," Ted Roden said. "He'd just grin but never deny it. He probably got credit for some things he didn't do."

The brothers Roden maintained that Waggoner Carr, a Texas House speaker and attorney general, waged a vendetta against Pinkie, who just shrugged it off.

"Aw, he's all right," Pinkie insisted. "That's just politics."

At Pinkie's suggestion, a friend sent Carr a $500 check for his attorney general race. But the friend included this note:

"Pinkie told me you have changed your ways. If you have, you can cash it. If not, send it back."

Montford says Roden was 'a great man'

Associated Press

Although Pinkie made a great deal of money, he didn't care much for material things.

He owned expensive clothes, but seldom wore them. He preferred jeans, a frayed jacket and crumpled old hat. And while he provided big, fast and mostly new cars for his runners, he drove his personal cars "until the wheels fell off."

State Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, tells of the time Pinkie picked him up at the airport in an old Ford. A genuine clunker, it was in such disrepair that one door opened only from the inside.

The two had never met.

"Frankly, after all I'd heard, I expected Pinkie to be nine feet tall and driving a Cadillac limousine," Montford laughed.

Pinkie drove him to his office, which, Montford said, was even less impressive than his clothes and his car.

"The furniture was awful and I kept waiting for the roof to cave in."

But the meeting went well. Pinkie supported him in the general election that year and Montford won his first senate race.

They became fast friends.

"He was great man," the senator said. "He was everything I didn't expect. No muscle, no pressure, very low key, very unassuming. He never asked me to do anything that didn't help West Texas.

"He was a gentleman, a man of honor, and I really loved that old man."

Pinkie's siblings fared quite well. Bill is an oilman. Ted and Ann oversee a family empire that includes an Odessa beer distributorship and Pinkie's old liquor store chain. One sister, Frances, married a minister and Jake, now dead, was a doctor.

Biennial gala 'beefs up' CP Center's programs

By Linda Anderson
Staff Writer

The atmosphere had an Oriental flare, but the event was pure West Texas as two of the area's more famous talents — raising beef and extending helping hands — were combined at the Beefeater's Ball of 1991, presented Friday night at Holiday Inn Convention Center. The biennial black tie benefit, hosted by the board of directors of the Midland Cerebral Palsy Center and the Children's Service League, raises funds for the CP Center.

"Everything goes to the CP Center," said Missy Rasnick, president of Children's Service League. "We're hoping to raise $100,000 this year."

The center currently helps provide education and therapy for about 200 area children in about 2,000 treatments a month, she said, including physical therapy, occupational therapy, aquatic therapy and hippotherapy, or therapy on horseback. The center also offers dance classes and, in the summer, karate classes for the children.

The children served by the center come from all parts of the Permian Basin, including parts of New Mexico.

"One of the neatest things about the CP Center is, as far as I know, it's the only privately funded CP Center anywhere," said Cynthia Gilbreath, chairman of the board of Children's Service League. "The children who come to the CP Center pay nothing."

About 400 people attended Beefeater's Ball this year, Ms. Rasnick said. During alternate years, the Children's Service League sponsors a luncheon and style show as its fund-raiser for the CP Center.

— Cynthia Gilbreath
chairman of the board of Children's Service League

The evening began with cocktails and hors d'oeuvres of stuffed mushrooms, creamed pasta, cut fruit and cheese. As party-goers mingled, they had the opportunity to view the items presented for the silent auction, including jewelry, works of art, children's furniture, golf games and scuba lessons.

Every Beefeater's Ball includes, for its live auction, an auction of choice steers, and this year's event was no exception. Members of Midland's 4-H club assisted in this portion of the evening. However, this year's live auction also gave participants the opportunity to bid on a Spanish goat and a black Labrador Retriever puppy. Also included was a chance to bid on a trip for two to any city in the continental United States, provided by American Airlines.

After the auction, a buffet dinner, catered by the Holiday Inn, was served. The menu included assorted salads, Chateaubriand, Squash Medley and Green Beans Almondine, followed by cheesecake and other assorted desserts.

Music throughout the evening was by the Dallas band, Infinity, presented by Wemus Entertainment.

Glen Fradenburg served both as chairman and as master of ceremonies for the event. Co-chairmen were Dr. Andrew Kauffman and John McGuigan. Smith Thomason of Waco was auctioneer.

Special contributors were Mr. and Mrs. Jack E. Brown; Campbell Construction Company; Mr. and Mrs. John L. Cox; Dr. Thurston Dean; Lynn Durham; Mr. and Mrs. John F. McGuigan; Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Monroe; Frank Pannell; Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Scharbauer Jr.; Texas Commerce Bank, Midland, N.A.; Trobaugh Properties; Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Wagner; Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Wynne and Mr. and Mrs. Ron Holcomb; and Mr. and Mrs. W.B. "Dub" Yarborough.

Chairmen for Beefeater's Ball were Dee Morris, decorations chairman, and Joan Henry, co-chairman; Barbara Bruno and Betty Gemmill, invitation design and artwork; and Ann Walten and Candice McPheron, silent auction.

Decorations were by James Van Stavern of Van Stavern Interiors; special lighting was by Nick Carlton; flowers were from Manning's; and art work was by Pat Thames.

Twins double their pleasure

AP Laserphoto

Atlanta's Ron Gant argues with American League first base umpire Drew Cole after Gant was called out rounding first base.

■ Minnesota jumps out to a 2-0 lead in the World Series following a pair of home runs that gave the Twins a 3-2 win over Atlanta Sunday.

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The pitch from Tom Glavine was down and in, but Scott Leius sent it up and out of the Metrodome.

Leius' improbable homer leading off the eighth inning barely cleared the left field fence, but it was just enough to give the Twins a 3-2 victory over the Atlanta Braves Sunday night and a 2-0 lead as the World Series moves south for Game 3 Tuesday night.

The Twins, suddenly so strong that even No. 8 hitter Leius reaches the fence, got their other runs on Chili Davis' two-run homer off a down-and-in Glavine slider in the first inning.

"I was just looking to get on base and he laid it in there," said Leius, a rookie who hit only five home runs all year. "Once I saw it go out, I was just trying to touch all the bases, to make sure that was covered. I've never done anything like this. Well, maybe in Wiffle ball."

Minnesota now has scored seven of its eight runs in two games on four homers by four different players, a third of the way to the Series record of 12 by the 1956 New York Yankees.

Minnesota hit 140 home runs this season, in the middle of the pack of the more powerful American League. The Twins hit only 62 of them at the Metrodome. Power or not, the Twins are 9-1 in postseason games at their park.

Lemieux's back

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Penguins have listed center Mario Lemieux as day-to-day because of back spasms.

Lemieux was forced from Saturday night's loss to the New York Rangers in the third period. The Penguins lost 5-4 on Darren Turcotte's goal with 1:10 to play.

Lemieux has been troubled periodically with back trouble after missing most of last season recovering from surgery and a back infection. He has played every game this season.

Rocket man

TORONTO (AP) — Rocket Ismail raced 69 yards for his first professional punt return touchdown, giving the Toronto Argonauts a 34-27 victory over the Calgary Stampeders in a Canadian Football League game Sunday.

Ismail caught the punt on the right sideline, cut across the field, got great blocking and went into the end zone untouched with 1:44 remaining.

Darryl Ford sealed the victory by intercepting a Danny Barrett pass with 1:25 to go and Lance Chomyc kicked a 31-yard field goal.

Houston muddles by Miami

■ The Oilers eke out a 17-13 win over Miami as Dolphin back Sammie Smith fumbles in the end zone for the ninth turnover of the game.

Associated Press

MIAMI — In a game of giveaway, the Miami Dolphins and Sammie Smith fumbled their chance to upset the Houston Oilers.

Smith coughed up the ball on a first-and-goal dive play at the 1-yard line Sunday, and Houston's Cris Dishman recovered in the end zone with 3:10 left to clinch a 17-13 victory.

Miami's five turnovers also included rookie Darryll Lewis' interception he returned 33 yards untouched for the game's first touchdown. Surprisingly stout defense by the Dolphins limited Houston's run-and-shoot to one touchdown, partly by forcing four turnovers.

"When it gets ugly, this team is known for losing," Oilers quarterback Warren Moon said. "But today we found a way to win. That's the mark of a good team.

"Sometimes the defense has to carry you, and we've been waiting for that for a long time. Now we have a defense that can get it done."

The Oilers improved to 6-1 and increased their lead in the AFC Central to three games.

Smith's fumble was his second at the goal line in as many weeks. The earlier bobble sparked a 42-7 Kansas City rout as Chris Martin returned it 100 yards for a touchdown.

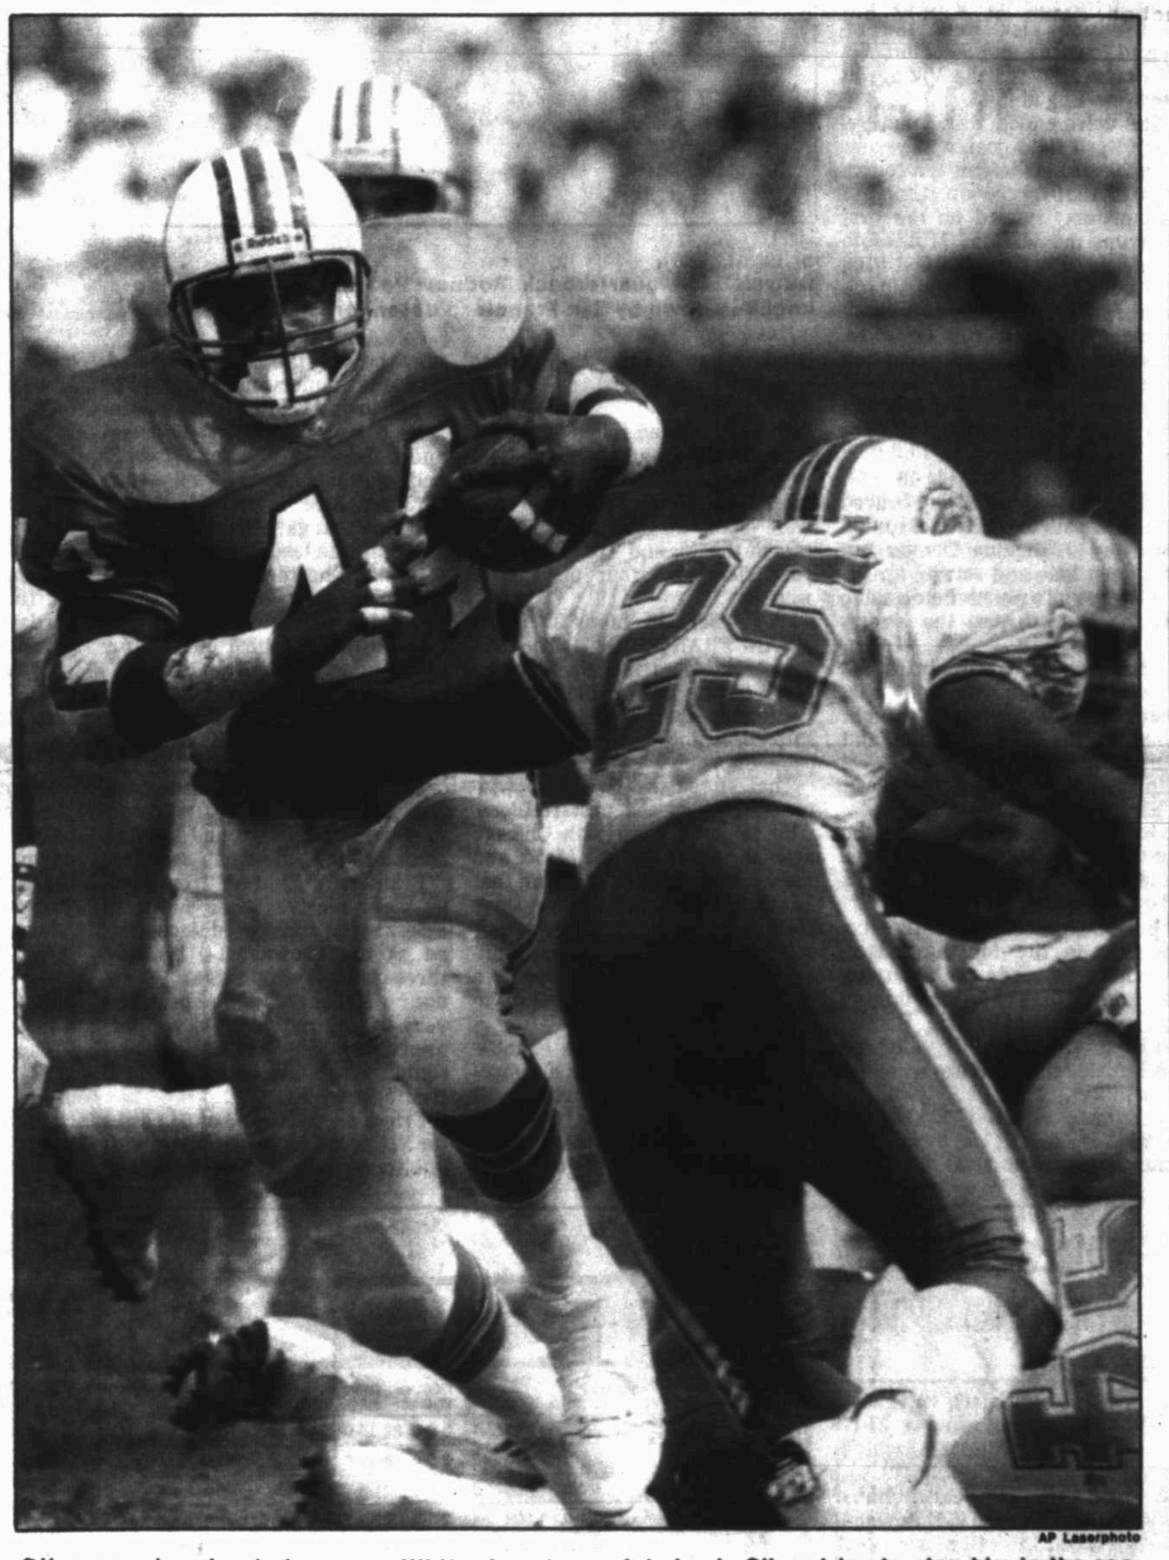

"It was the same play they fumbled on in Kansas City," Houston coach Jack Pardee said. "We were hoping for a repeat."

Smith took the handoff and was airborne when linebacker Lamar Lathon hit his arm and the ball squirted out.

"My arm came across the ball, and I was able to punch it out," Lathon said. "It was an exciting moment."

Smith, who fumbled eight times last year, refused to comment. The fumble squandered a nine-play, 75-yard drive; the Oilers took over at the 20 and ran out the clock.

Auburn tapes incriminating

Associated Press

AUBURN, Ala. — An Auburn booster and friend of coach Pat Dye gave former football player Eric Ramsey hundreds of dollars, free beef and performance bonuses while he was with the Tigers, according to tape recordings made by Ramsey.

The Birmingham News published a copyrighted story Sunday detailing the contents of the tapes that were released by Ramsey and his attorney.

Meanwhile, former Auburn basketball star Chuck Person gave a sworn statement saying he, too, received cash payments while in college, The Montgomery Advertiser reported in another copyrighted story.

Person, answering attorneys' questions in July 1988 as part of a lawsuit, said he got money from two Auburn boosters and alumni during his college playing days. Person is now with the NBA's Indiana Pacers.

The charges, if true, could result in severe NCAA penalties against Auburn, where the NCAA is looking at both the football and basketball programs. But Dye, who also serves as athletic director,

New England stuns Minnesota in overtime, 26-23

Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. — Jason Staurovsky redeemed himself with the biggest kick of the day after watching the Minnesota Vikings get their kicks all game long.

NFL

Staurovsky, who missed an extra point in the fourth quarter and a 36-yard field goal in overtime, hit a 42-yarder with no time left that gave the New England Patriots a 26-23 victory Sunday.

The Patriots (3-4) got the ball at their 20-yard line on David Pool's fumble recovery with 2:38 to go at the end of an 18-yard pass play from Rich Gannon to Steve Jordan.

Hugh Millen's 27-yard completion to Greg McMurtry got the ball to the Minnesota 33 with 39 seconds to go. A 5-yard completion to Marv Cook put it at the 24 with 5 seconds remaining to set up Staurovsky's kick.

Minnesota's kicking had kept the game going to that point. After Gannon's 4-yard touchdown pass to Anthony Carter cut New England's lead to 23-20 with 1:37 left, the Vikings (3-5) recovered an onside kick.

Brent Novoselsky got it, but the replay official ruled he touched it after it traveled just 9 yards. The next onside kick went the required 10 yards, and Solomon Wilcots recovered for the Vikings at the New England 43.

The drive ended with Fuad Reveiz's third field goal, a 23-yarder with 20 seconds left in the fourth quarter that forced overtime.

Staurovsky missed on the first overtime possession. Minnesota then punted but got the ball back at its 40 on Audray McMillian's interception.

Carter's 10-yard run on a reverse and his 12-yard reception moved the ball to the 38. The next play set a record for Gannon, but was the beginning of the end for the Vikings.

Broncos 19, Chiefs 16

DENVER — John Elway heaved a 71-yard pass to Mark Jackson on third-and-17, digging Denver out of a deep hole and setting up David Treadwell's fourth field goal to lift the Broncos past the Kansas City Chiefs.

The Broncos (5-2) snapped the Chiefs' four-game winning streak, beat them for the ninth straight time at Mile High Stadium and climbed ahead of Kansas City (5-3) into first place in the AFC West.

Elway's 22-yard touchdown pass to rookie Derek Russell late in the first half and Treadwell's three field goals had staked Denver to a 16-9 third-quarter lead.

But the Chiefs seized the momentum in the fourth quarter, marching 58 yards for the tying touchdown thanks to the running and receiving of rookie Harvey Williams. He dashed 14 yards off the left side for the score with 5:40 remaining.

On the next series, Elway was sacked for a 7-yard loss by Derrick Thomas and Bill Maas, and the Broncos appeared in a desperate situation with a third-and-17 from their 13.

But Elway then rolled out to his right and threw an across-the-field pass that traveled at least 60 yards in the air to Jackson, who was wide open at midfield. Jackson ran to the 16, and Treadwell's 27-yard field goal four plays later won it.

49ers 35, Lions 3

SAN FRANCISCO — The San Francisco 49ers turned back the clock on the Detroit Lions on, returning to their their championship form and turning the Lions back into cubs.

That ended the five-game winning streak of the upstart Lions, who fell into a tie with Chicago atop the NFC Central at 5-2 and looked every bit like the team that hasn't had a winning season since 1983. Sanders, who had had four straight 100-yard games, was limited to 22 yards in six carries by a defense that allowed 39 points to Atlanta last week.

The win improved San Francisco to 3-4, putting at least a temporary end to the squabbling and finger-pointing at the troubled four-time Super Bowl champions, who lost Montana to an elbow injury before the season started. Montana underwent surgery 10 days ago and is lost for the season.

He completed his first 16 passes and finished 18 of 20 for 237 yards and two touchdowns — a 2-yarder to Jerry Rice 49 seconds before halftime that gave San Francisco a 21-3 halftime lead, and a 22-yarder to Mike Sherrard in the third quarter. He also scrambled seven times for 40 yards before being lifted after the third quarter for Steve Bono.

Browns 30, Chargers 24, OT

SAN DIEGO — Former Charger David Brandon scored on a 30-yard interception return with 7:20 remaining in overtime, lifting the Cleveland Browns to a wild victory over San Diego and spoiling John Friesz's finest day as a pro.

Brandon, a Charger from 1987-90, beat receiver Nate Lewis to Friesz's pass and scored uncontested as the Browns (3-4) broke a three-game losing streak. Brandon, a linebacker who spent last year on injured reserve, was left unprotected by the Chargers and signed with Cleveland as a Plan B free agent.

Friesz completed 33 of 54 passes for 321 yards, all career bests, with one touchdown and two interceptions. Kosar rallied Cleveland from a 17-3 deficit, completing 26 of 42 passes for 297 yards and two touchdowns, both to Leroy Hoard.

Bernie Kosar, who extended his string of passes without an interception to a club-record 233, eluded pressure and threw a 15-yard touchdown pass to Hoard with 4:09 left for a 24-24 tie. Kosar completed four of seven passes for 72 yards, and gained the other 5 yards on the drive with a run.

Saints 23, Buccaneers 7

NEW ORLEANS — Steve Walsh turned a rough beginning into a starring role in his first start of the season.

He converted key third-down plays on three scoring drives and passed for a fourth-quarter touchdown that clinched a victory for the New Orleans Saints over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

Walsh started in place to the injured Bobby Hebert after having relieved him in 13-6 victory over Philadelphia last week. Hebert has a bruised right shoulder.

The Saints remained undefeated at 7-0, and the Buccaneers fell to 1-6. The Bucs, ranked ninth in the NFL defensive standings, had kept every game close except, a 31-3 loss at Detroit, until Sunday.

Walsh had two of his first six passes intercepted after failing to communicate with his receivers. Both were thrown well behind Saints receivers directly to Tampa Bay defenders — one to Darrell Fullington and one to Carl Carter.

Raiders 20, Rams 17

LOS ANGELES — Ronnie Lott made two fourth-quarter interceptions to set up the tying and winning points as the Los Angeles Raiders rallied for a victory over the Los Angeles Rams.

Jeff Jaeger's 34-yard field goal with 2 seconds remaining gave the Raiders (5-3) their second straight come-from-behind victory.

Lott, whose interception set up a 37-yard field goal by Jaeger that gave the Raiders a 23-20 overtime win over Seattle on Oct. 13, made his second interception of Jim Everett at the Rams' 39-yard line with 3:07 remaining. The pass was deflected by defensive end Howie Long and Lott was at the right place to catch it.

Nick Bell then carried six times for 25 yards, putting the Raiders in position for Jaeger to kick his 19th field goal in 22 attempts this season.

The Raiders had tied the game 17-17 on a 1-yard run by Bell with 4:08 remaining, capping an 80-yard, five-play drive after Lott's interception in the end zone. Bell's touchdown was the first rushing TD for the Raiders all season.

Everett had thrown a 19-yard touchdown pass to Vernon Turner in the third quarter to break a 10-10 tie. It was Turner's first reception of the season.

There was no scoring after that until Bell's run, which came a little more than two minutes after it appeared the Rams (3-4) were in command and about to score the clinching points.

Seahawks 27, Steelers 7

PITTSBURGH — Six weeks on the sidelines didn't make Dave Krieg rusty at all.

Krieg, returning from an injury layoff, directed two Seattle second-period scoring drives as the Seahawks turned a blocked punt and a fumble into a 17-point halftime lead and a victory over the punchless Pittsburgh Steelers.

Seattle (4-4), which leads the AFC in takeaways, continued Pittsburgh's offensive struggles by holding the Steelers scoreless for the third consecutive first half, taking a 17-0 lead.

Steelers quarterback Neil O'Donnell, making his first NFL start, wasn't able to repeat the magic of the 20-point second-half comeback he led in last Monday's 23-20 loss to the New York Giants. He was intercepted once and couldn't get Pittsburgh (3-4) on the scoreboard until connecting with Dwight Stone on a 57-yard scoring pass play in the third quarter.

Jets 17, Colts 6

INDIANAPOLIS — The New York Jets didn't need much to outscore Indianapolis' invisible offense.

Ken O'Brien passed for one touchdown and Brad Baxter ran for another score as the Jets stretched the winless Colts' streak to 16 quarters without a touchdown. The Colts (0-8), the NFL's lowest-scoring team with 55 points for the season, haven't scored a touchdown since the fourth quarter of the fourth game.

Their points came on a pair of second-period field goals by Dean Biasucci, who has accounted for all of the Colts' 18 points the past four games.

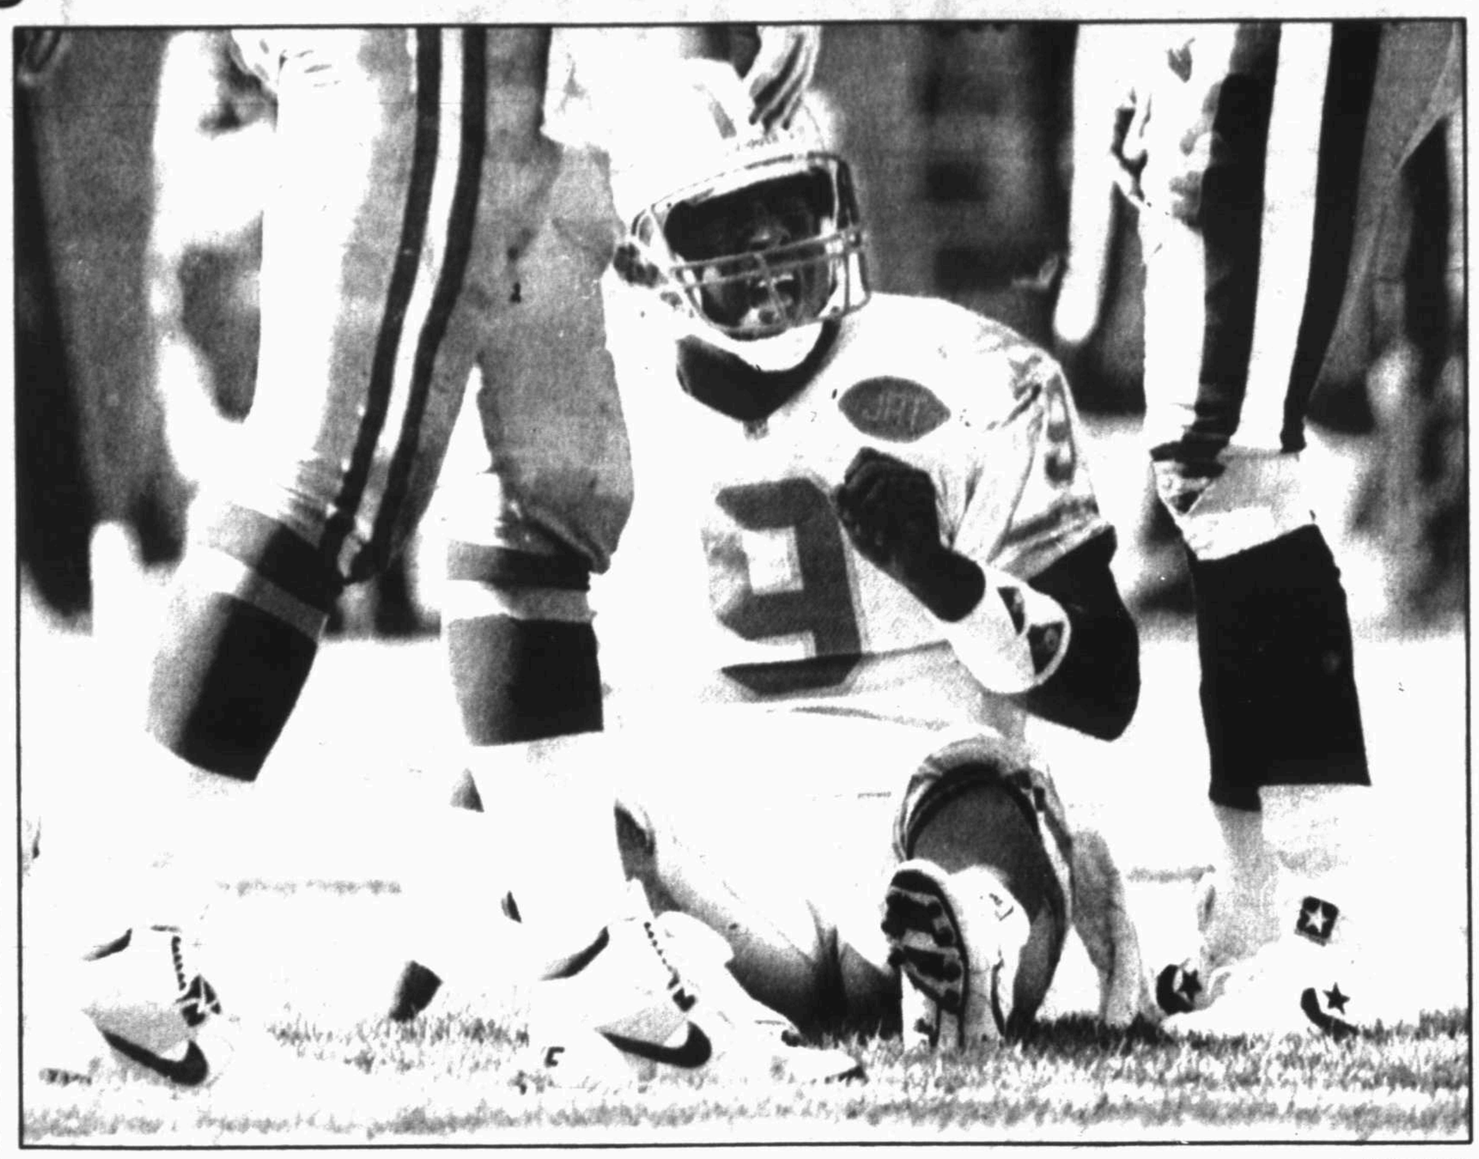

O'Brien hit nine of 10 passes in the first half, including a 47-yard scoring pass to Rob Moore, and finished with 14 of 19 for 205 yards for the Jets (4-4).

Cardinals 16, Falcons 10

TEMPE, Ariz. — Tom Tupa threw a 31-yard touchdown pass to rookie Randal Hill to tie the game, and Greg Davis kicked three field goals against his old team as the Phoenix Cardinals defeated the Atlanta Falcons.

Tupa's pass dropped over cornerback Tim McKyer, who jumped too soon and was falling when Hill rose for the catch in the end zone. McKyer protested that Hill pushed him in the back.

The result left the Cardinals at 4-4 halfway through the season, ending a two-game skid, and dropped the Falcons to 3-4.

OILERS: Houston 3-1 on road

(From 1C)

"A ballcarrier has to protect the ball," Miami coach Don Shula said. "You know you're going to be getting hit down there. You have to be able to handle it. We didn't and haven't now for two weeks."

The Dolphins fell to 3-5; last season they finished 13-5. The team is below .500 halfway through the season for only the third time in Shula's 22 seasons at Miami.

"I thought this game was crucial," Shula said. "I thought we had to come out 4-4. We didn't, and now we just have to put it together ... until somebody says we're mathematically eliminated."

The Oilers, trying to shake their reputation as a poor road team, improved to 3-1 away from home.

"The big difference is that we're a better team this year," Pardee said.

Houston's winning score, on a 1-yard pass from Moon to Curtis Duncan with 9:30 left, culminated a 16-play, 71-yard drive. The Oilers converted four third-down situations, one with the aid of an encroachment penalty on Miami's T.J. Turner.

That the Oilers took so long to get in gear was an upset. Their offense entered the game ranked second in the NFL, while the Dolphins defense was ranked next-to-worst.

Coody holds off Trevino for Seniors win

Associated Press

NAPA, Calif. — Charles Coody shot a 1-under-par 71 Sunday to withstand a charge by defending champion Lee Trevino and win the Transamerica Senior Golf Championship.

Coody's 12-under 204 total for 54 holes on the 6,630-yard Silverado Country Club south course was two strokes better than Trevino this year and one better than Trevino's previous tournament record set last year.

Coody's fourth senior tour victory earned him $75,000, increasing his 1991 earnings to $479,517. Trevino, who had a final-round 69, won $44,000, boosting his 1991 earnings to $609,472.

Tommy Aaron birdied the final three holes for a 68 and third alone at 207. George Archer, who had won two consecutive senior tournaments, Arnold Palmer and Dale Douglass tied for fourth another stroke back.

Coody had allowed Trevino to creep within two strokes when he followed Trevino's birdie on No. 17 with a three-putt bogey. But after Trevino narrowly missed a birdie putt on No. 18, the tournament was Coody's to lose, a fate he avoided with a conservative par on the final hole.

Coody, a co-leader the first two rounds, began the day at 11 under, two strokes ahead of Jim Colbert.

After playing even par on the front nine, Trevino began his charge with birdies on Nos. 12, 14 and 15 to move within three strokes of Coody.

Colbert, who was one of three players to move within two strokes of Coody early on the back nine, took himself out of contention with a triple-bogey 7 on No. 12.

Meanwhile Coody, who had birdied No. 11, also birdied No. 12 to suddenly pull seven strokes ahead of Colbert and three strokes ahead of DeWitt Weaver, his closest challenger at that point. Weaver promptly took a double-bogey on No. 13 to drop to seven under.

Coody said Sunday's weather — temperatures in the high 80s and winds gusting 25 to 30 mph — helped prevent anyone from making a serious charge.

"It would have been very difficult for someone to go out there and shoot 65 or 66 today," Coody said.

Bob Charles became the first senior golfer to surpass the $3 million in career earnings. Charles' 213 total earned him $9,000, boosting his earnings $3,005,575 since he joined the senior tour in 1986.

Ballesteros claims 5th World Match Play title

VIRGINIA WATER, England (AP) — Severiano Ballesteros equalled Gary Player's record of five World Match Play titles with a 10-birdie, no-bogey performance that gave him a 3 and 2 victory over Zimbabwe's Nick Price Sunday.

"This has to be the best final of all five," the Spaniard said after collecting the biggest check of the European tour golf, $255,000.

Ballesteros' previous four Match Play triumphs were in 1981, '82, '84 and '85. Player won in 1965, '66, '68, '71 and '73.

Battling the flu, a bad back and a painful foot, Ballesteros rallied from three down after only four holes against Price. It was his 49th triumph in Europe, his 64th overall and his eighth at Wentworth.

"I think it is a miracle the way I was feeling," he said. "But I know this course as well as my own in Santander. I know where to go and all the breaks on the greens."

Price, who beat England's Steven Richardson, Australia's British Open titlist Ian Baker-Finch and two-time Masters champion Nick Faldo on the way to the final, was impressed by Ballesteros' form.

"It was vintage Seve," he said. "His putter has given him so much confidence and he didn't give me an opportunity."

Price birdied four of the first seven holes, but Ballesteros equalled that on the second nine and they were tied at the halfway point of the 36-hole match.

Ballesteros went ahead at the 20th hole, however, and never trailed after that. Price bogeyed that hole and the 21st, and a five-iron shot to within two feet on the short 23rd put Ballesteros three in front.

Price birdied the 26th from four feet, but drove into the trees from the next tee, had to hit out sideways and lost the hole.

Ballesteros finished with four pars.

In the third-place match, Faldo beat American Billy Andrade 5 and 3.

SERIES: Braves outhit Twins

(From 1C)

"It's fun to play at home, there's no doubt," Minnesota manager Tom Kelly said. "I think the ballfield helps us, especially in the World Series."

The Braves, meanwhile, are struggling as much as the Twins are streaking. In two games, they have outhit the Twins 14-13 only to be outscored 8-4.

In Game 2, they had runners at second and third with none out against the Twins' Kevin Tapani in the second inning and scored only once, and they had first-and-third and one out in the eighth and didn't score at all.

Their frustration may have reached a peak much earlier when Twins first baseman Kent Hrbek hoisted Ron Gant off base and tagged him out, ending a Braves rally.

"I don't like to talk about umpire's calls," Braves manager Bobby Cox said. "There were a lot of factors. We could've won the game on our own."

Atlanta best hope now is that the Twins, who beat the St. Louis Cardinals in seven games in 1987, have been just as bad on the road in the World Series as they have been good at home — 6-0 in the Metrodome, 0-3 outside it.

On the Twins' side, of 41 teams to take a 2-0 lead in the World Series, 31 have gone on to win.

Steve Avery, the MVP of the NL playoffs after pitching a record 16 1-3 shutout innings, will try to get the Braves back on track when he faces Scott Erickson in Game 3 Tuesday night.

Glavine and Tapani, both winless in the playoffs, each pitched well enough to win. Tapani allowed two runs on seven hits in eight innings, while Glavine gave up just four hits in eight innings and retired 15 straight batters from the second to the seventh innings.

"I think he'd say it was a mistake," Leius said of the pitch he hit. "I went up there looking for a fastball and got one."

Rick Aguilera relieved Tapani to start the ninth and struck out Sid Bream. After Brian Hunter singled, Aguilera got Greg Olson and pinch hitter Tommy Gregg on called third strikes for his second save in two days and fifth in the postseason. Twins relievers have not allowed an earned in 26 1-3 postseason innings starting in the 1987 World Series.

Hrbek gave the Twins a big lift — literally — in the third inning.

Lonnie Smith was on second base with two outs when Gant singled sharply to left. Smith stopped at third, and Gant took a wide turn when the relay trickled away briefly in the infield.

Tapani, backing up the play, snapped a throw to Hrbek at first, and Gant went in standing up.

"I hate it when the boys start throwing the ball around," Kelly said. "I didn't even see what happened."

What happened was the 250-pound Hrbek and the 170-pound Gant became wrapped up and Hrbek tagged him as he appeared to push him off the bag.

Hrbek has often said he wants to become a pro wrestler when he retires from baseball, and even has his future nickname picked out — "T-Rex."

First base umpire Drew Coble called Gant out, ending the inning with the Braves trailing 2-1 and Justice on deck. Gant had to be restrained by coach Pat Corrales and teammates, and vented more anger at the end of the Twins' third by throwing his glove into the dugout and turning over three coolers.

"In my judgment, momentum carried him over the top of Hrbek," Coble said. "No, he was never set at all. There is a judgment call by this umpire. There is no appeal."

The Braves, after playing a sound defensive game in the opener, fell victim to the Metrodome's twin terrors on Glavine's first pitch.

Dan Gladden lifted a high fly to shallow right that second baseman Mark Lemke seemed to lose against the white Teflon roof. Right fielder Justice saw the ball and rushed in, but apparently Lemke could not hear him calling for it.

At the last instant, Lemke spotted the ball and it hit the pocket of his glove, but was jarred loose when Justice ran into him.

TAPES: Dye doesn't see penalty

said his department would escape sanctions.

"I still can't see any (penalty) after everything is told," Dye said of the allegations leveled by the 23-year-old Ramsey, cut from the Kansas City Chiefs earlier this year after being drafted in the 10th round.

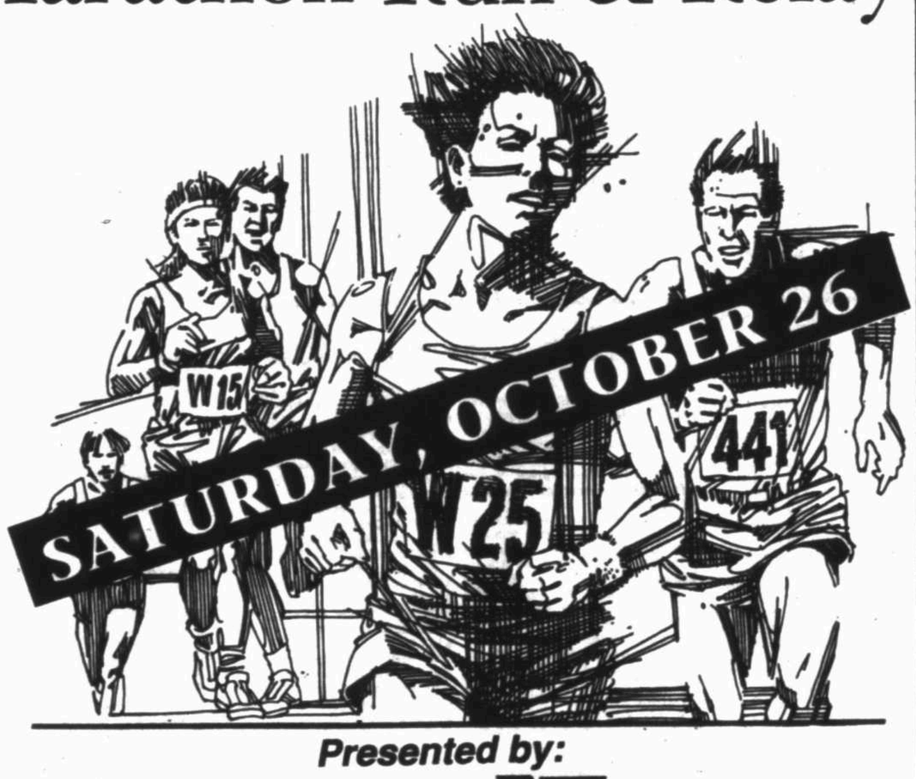

The release of some of Ramsey's tapes comes weeks after he first went public with allegations of cheating in the Auburn football program.

Ramsey's attorney, Donald Watkins, played six tapes for Birmingham News reporters on Thursday. Watkins said there were too many tapes to release at once, so they will be made public in batches over the next few weeks.

The NCAA had asked Ramsey to withhold the tapes while an investigation was ongoing, but he refused. Ramsey said he knows of at least 15 players to took cash from coaches and boosters during his five years at Auburn.

Prices rally

NEW YORK — Oil prices soared to new postwar highs on Friday, wrapping up a week when traders decided just about every bit of news or rumor was a good reason to buy more.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in November settled at $24.14 per barrel, up 21 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange. Oil had not closed that high since Jan. 22, when the final price was $24.18 during the early days of the Gulf War.

Trading focused on stormy weather in the North Sea, which forced one platform closure and delayed oil shipments. Given the tone of a market that has pushed up the per-barrel price by more than $2 over the past month, that was enough to prompt more buying.

Oil analyst Peter Beutel of Pegasus Econometric Group Inc., in Hoboken, N.J., said the market was nervously jumping at anything, even more than it did during certain points of the Iran-Iraq war.

"There were times a couple of years ago when we had a tanker hit every day by a missile, and it didn't do a darn thing," Beutel said. "Now, we have tankers being delayed and it sends the market scurrying."

Natural gas prices were mostly lower Friday. But contracts for delivery in November settled at $2.025 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 1.1 cents for the day and 7 cents for the week.

Group to meet

The Natural Gas Producers Association will meet Thursday at the Petroleum Club beginning at 11:45 a.m.

Speaker will be Corby Considine, attorney with Cotton, Bledsoe, Tighe and Dawson in Midland. He will discuss recent oil and gas environmental developments.

Reservations should be made by noon Wednesday by calling 682-4030.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar fell sharply against most currencies Friday as traders took profits following another bearish report on the U.S. economy.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose to a closing 129.85 Japanese yen from 129.53 yen on Thursday.

In London, the British pound rose to $1.7245 from $1.7090 late Thursday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Thursday's rates included: 1.6865 German marks, down from 1.6965; 1.4750 Swiss francs, down from 1.4815; 5.7480 French francs, down from 5.7760; 1,261.25 Italian lire, down from 1,267.00, and 1.1268 Canadian dollars, down from 1.1284.

Homeowning dream fades for young

Costs outpace ability to pay, study finds; population grows skewed

By Iver Peterson
N.Y. Times News Service

Young couples struggling to pay the rent and still save for a down payment on a house fell further behind their homeowning parents last year, according to a new study of home costs and ownership rates.

The problem among the young lingered despite the hopes of economists, home builders and uncounted rent-paying non-owners that the recession, lower interest rates and falling prices would make homeownership easier for them.

As a result, the population is growing more and more skewed toward homeowners who are white, middle-aged and middle-class, and a renter population that is more and more minority and lower middle class or poor.

This analysis comes from the latest home tenure statistics of the Joint Center for Housing Studies at Harvard University, which was released Wednesday. It saw two distinct trends in America:

"Rapid growth in the number of high-income households has fueled a strong homeowner tradeup and renovation and repair market, while slow income growth at the low end of the distribution has expanded the number of households unable to afford even minimally adequate housing."

The problem, unsurprisingly, can be summed up as one of cost vs. income. In the 20 years from 1970 to 1990, the median price of a starter home for a typical married couple between 25 and 29 years old rose by 21 percent in constant dollars, while the income of this typical couple declined by 7 percent, from $28,500 to $26,700, also in constant dollars.

At the same time, the incomes of couples 10 or more years older than this age group stayed even or rose, and this group took advantage of their improving finances to increase their share of homeownership.

So the proportion of all households headed by people aged 25 to 34 years of age who own their own home has dropped, from 51.4 percent in 1973 to 44.3 percent in 1990, while the proportion of people 45 to 64 years old who began climbing the homeownership ladder in the 60s and 70s rose from 75.9 to 78.1 percent, according to the Harvard study.

There is some evidence that couples who were in their early 20s five or so years ago are falling behind those who are that age today, since houses were more expensive, and interest rates higher, in the mid-80s.

Conoco chief draws honors from Houston 'Clean' group

HOUSTON (AP) — Constantine S. Nicandros, president of Conoco Inc., has been honored with the Clean Houston program's top award for his efforts to make the oil company environmentally conscious.

Nicandros was named Outstanding Proud Partner by Clean Houston Friday at an awards luncheon.

"Among presidents of oil companies, Constantine Nicandros absolutely stands out," said Jane Scheidler, president of the Houston Audubon Society, which once nominated Nicandros for a seat on the society's national board. "As a corporate citizen, I would rank Conoco as outstanding."

Nicandros was lauded by Clean Houston for leading Conoco to reduce air emissions and hazardous wastes beyond legal requirements, the creation of citizen advisory councils, an environmental fellowship program, an active recycling program and a decision to construct only double-hull tankers before they were required by legislation.

The company also donated Atkinson Island in the Houston Ship Channel to the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department late last year.

Bank files lawsuit against Salomon

NEW YORK (NYT) — A Philadelphia savings bank has accused Salomon Brothers Inc., Travelers Corp. and some top executives at both of colluding to deprive the bank of money it is owed by four real estate partnerships.

The dispute involves real estate partnerships that had attracted investments from more than 200 of Salomon's most prominent current and former employees.

Meritor Savings Bank in Philadelphia, in a little-noticed lawsuit filed in June in Philadelphia County Common Pleas Court, contended that the Salomon group was secretly negotiating to release Travelers and its Prospect Co. investment unit from obligations that would ensure that the partnerships' loans to Meritor are repaid.

Analysts call for U.S moves to nudge economy

By Kenneth N. Gilpin
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — With the economy showing few signs that it is doing little more than limping along, some analysts are becoming increasingly convinced that a measured dose of fiscal stimulus is needed to ensure a modest recovery.

That view is also held by the Bush administration, which last week made plain its intention to introduce a number of measures it claims will stimulate growth.

The steps mentioned are a familiar lot and include a cut in the capital gains tax, incentives for new home buyers and expanded Individual Retirement Account deductions.

But looking to the federal government for help is not without risk, the analysts acknowledge.

In past recessions, Congress and the White House have tended to pile on goodies like tax cuts and new spending programs, not to measure them out in dollops.

The administration insists its proposals will be "revenue neutral," and the huge budget deficit would seem to be an effective check on an impulse to overdo the economic stimulus. But the risk is there.

Adverse reaction from the financial markets is another potential problem. Any stimulus package that is perceived as excessive will almost certainly drive up interest rates, making the medicine less effective.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Precious metals are sterile investments

By Bill Doyle

Q. What would be your advice concerning 24 Krugerrands I purchased in 1980 at a cost of $17,725? Where would one redeem them? As I am 59, married and have four adult children with families, thse gold coins will be part of my estate in the not-too-distant future.

It seems to me, I should take my loss and invest in blue chip stocks.

Doyle

A. In all the years I have been pounding out this column, my advice about Krugerrands and all other so-called precious metals has remained constant, to wit: "Don't buy them."

Since you either missed those words of wisdom or ignored them, it's time to once again stress that gold, platinum and silver, whether in coin, bar, wafer or any other form, are among the world's worst gambles. Besides being prone to wide-price swings, they are sterile — meaning they produce no income in dividends or interest.

For people who are ready, willing and financially able to speculate, there are many other methods available. For those who enjoy a roll of the dice, visits to Atlantic City, Las Vegas orsome of the other casinos popping up around the country are more enjoyable. My sainted mother-in-law likes bingo.

Your final thought makes sense. By getting out of Krugerrands and into high-quality common stocks, you'll be investing — not gambling.

You can't "redeem" those coins... each of which contains one troy ounce of gold... by sending them back to the Republic of South Africa government, which minted them. You'll have to sell them to a coin dealer.

From your letter, it's clear you realize you will take a big loss on the sale. As I write this, the Krugerrand is trading at $347.25. If you can get that price — and you'll have to shop around at various coin dealers to do so — my arithmetic shows you'll have a $9,390.75 loss.

Q. Besides Krugerrands, I hold 300 shares of one of the country's biggest banking concerns, bought in 1990 at a cost of $12,937 and now worth $8,926. Wouldn't it be better to sell, take my loss and invest in something else? This is a debatable issue in my household.

A. It can't be nearly as hot a family topic as your big blunder — holding gold coins. Count that stock a a reasonable long-term investment that has taken a temporary bad turn.

The good news is the market price of the stock you named rose almost $5 per share between the time you wrote your letter and I write this, making your shares worth $10,275. That should help stifle dinner table debate. You're still in the hole, but not nearly as far down.

Despite the banking industry's well-reported troubles, most of the big corporations in that business — including the one in which you hold stock — are on solid financial ground. You're getting a reasonable dividend on your investment, which has potential — although no guarantee — of future gains in value.

I'd be inclined to hang onto those 300 shares.

Q. I bought an oil painting in a 52-inch by 29-inch old frame from an elderly couple. It shows a city intersection with seven corners. It has a hotel on one corner, a cafe on another, horse-and-buggies going down the streets and lots of people.

How can I find out if it has any value?

A. A rule of the art world is an item is worth what a buyer will pay. For you, that makes that painting's value the amont at which you purchased it.

To learn if it would fetch more or less if you sell, you'll have to have the painting appraised by art dealers and/or museums. It would be wise to get at least two or three appraisals. A good starting point is your public library, where you should find reference books on art, artists and appraisers.

Q. I have a platter with a fish picture on it, dated 1918. I also have an unusual cut-glass dish and a few plates stores gave as Christmas gifts. They are not for sale, but I would like to know their value. Any suggestions?

A. Visit the reference section of your public library, one of the most helpful and under-used facilities in this nation. You're almost certain to learn those store gift plates, which were produced in abundance, have no resale value.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KQ74 ♡AQJ9 ◇AJ5 ♣73
The bidding has proceeded

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—With no 4-4 fit in the majors, you should give up all thoughts of a perfectly fitting grand slam. With 17 points facing 16-18 in partner's hand, you have enough for a small slam, so don't waste time—jump to six no trump. Even if your range is 15-17, the no trump slam rates to have play.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠95 ♡AQ10865 ◇A ♣KQ107
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
3 ◇	3 ♡	Pass	3 NT
Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Pass. Don't let that sixth heart blind you to what surely is the best contract. Partner expects to make nine tricks at no trump opposite your overcall, so trust partner's judgment and be happy you are delivering such a fine hand.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠1084 ♡AJ6 ◇K7 ♣KJ632
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Dbl

What action do you take?
A.—You have a minimum hand with no unexpected support for partner's suit, and your five-card suit can hardly be called robust. The easiest way to describe your holding is to pass. That tells partner you have nothing to contribute at this point beyond what you announced with your opening bid.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠10843 ♡AJ6 ◇K7 ♣KJ63
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	Dbl

What action do you take?
A.—In terms of point count, this hand is exactly the same as the previous example, which might suggest that you should still pass. Here, however, you do have a significant contribution to add to the offensive potential of your hand—four-card support for partner's suit, as well as ruffing and positional values. Bid two spades.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q74 ♡KQ10962 ◇A ♣QJ9
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	Pass	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—A balancing bid of one heart in this position could be made on as little as 7-8 points. However, your hand is not good enough to double first and then bid hearts. The solution is to jump to two hearts which, in the pass-out seat, shows the equivalent of an opening bid with a six-card suit.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠1097643 ♡5 ◇KQ8 ♣Q103
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
Pass	Pass	1 ♡	Dbl
Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Revalued in support of partner's promised spade suit, your hand is worth some 12 points. To make an invitational jump to two spades would be pusillanimous. Make partner's life easy by going directly to four spades.

Bon Jovi's drummer, father end 20-year estrangement

HENDERSONVILLE, N.C. — Tico Torres, Bon Jovi's drummer, ended a 20-year estrangement with his father thanks in part to Hector Torres' dislike for rock music.

"There's nothing worst than missing someone," Tico Torres, 38, said last week when he came to town for the reunion.

It came about because Andrew Torres was watching a Bon Jovi video called "Never Say Goodbye" and his father told him to turn it off.

"I said 'Pop, you should be happy they got a Cuban in the band,' " Andrew Torres said. "And he said, 'A Cuban? Where?' I pointed him out, then rewound the video, and he asked 'Where is he from?' and I said he was from Jersey ... and that's when he said ... 'That's Tico.' "

The video shows photos of band members in childhood.

"Once I realized that it was Tico on the music video, I cried like a baby," Hector Torres said.

Andrew Torres got his brother to call their dad.

The family said father and son had separated for personal reasons they wouldn't disclose.

PITTSBURGH — Actress Valerie Bertinelli says she doesn't mind being in the spotlight when she's working — but she likes her privacy at other times.

In Pittsburgh, one woman walked right up to her, then asked a friend, "Is that a movie star?"

"If I was just walking around on the street that would bother me, but not when I'm working," Bertinelli said Friday.

Bertinelli was shooting a scene for the NBC television movie, "For I Have Sinned," about an assistant prosecutor investigating organized crime. George Dzundza co-stars as the prosecutor's father, a New York City police officer.

Bertinelli's rock star husband, Eddie Van Halen, and their 7-month-old son, Wolfgang, also were on the set.

"My life basically revolves around my son," she said. "He's in my head every second of the day."

Bertinelli plans to take the winter off from acting.

"Thank God they don't forget about me. I don't have to keep churning out product. I like having a life."

LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Even as an eighth-grader, Axl Rose expected to be famous someday and it got him in trouble, a former running coach recalls of the lead singer of Guns N' Roses.

Rose was still the obscure child William B. Bailey when cross-country teammates taped his mouth shut and another time stuffed him into a locker because of his incessant talk of future success, said Phil Hurt, Rose's eighth-grade cross country coach.

His fifth-grade teacher, Billy Johnson, said when the future star was growing up in Lafayette he was "very intelligent, very personable, always had a smile. If you weren't careful, he'd take the classroom away from you."

Rose, at 29, fulfilled his boasts. His heavy metal band, whose hit songs include "Patience" and "Welcome to the Jungle," has built a reputation as one of rock's biggest-selling if controversial acts for lyrics criticized as racist and homophobic.

GREEN BAY, Wis. — Michael Blake, author of "Dances with Wolves," calls his novel "the little book that could."

The book also brings people closer to the environment and to the American Indian culture, Blake said Saturday, speaking at an event sponsored by the Oneida Indian tribe that included traditional dances, food and art.

"I sense change in the air in America. We need to change from an attitude of exploitation in our world to an attitude of nurturing," Blake said.

Blake said his book defied the odds, as did the movie it inspired, which won seven Oscars at this year's Academy Awards. The book and film deal with injustices suffered by American Indians.

Ferraro on campaign trail again, this time for Senate

By Elizabeth Kolbert
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The sky is streaked with violet and the cocktails have turned watery by the time Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois, a late arrival, clambers onto the deck to introduce the guest of honor.

"She made history," he says. And then he adds, as if as an afterthought: "And she is going to make history!"

Through the dimness, Geraldine Ferraro flashes her familiar smile. A shiver of emotion passes through the crowd.

The first woman to run for vice president of the United States is running for public office again, hoping to win a Senate seat from New York next year. Everywhere she goes — fund-raisers in Washington, campaign stops in New York — she generates tremendous feeling. But is it excitement, or just nostalgia?

When Walter Mondale summoned her to Minnesota to be his running mate in 1984, Ms. Ferraro had been planning to run for the same seat she is running for today — the one held by Sen. Alfonse M. D'Amato. As she explains it, she is simply picking up where she left off.

"Everybody's gone on with their lives," she said recently. "It's time for me to get on with mine."

Yet to many New York politicians, there is something almost poignant about Ms. Ferraro's latest campaign, a "you-can-go-home-again" optimism that defies most electoral experience — especially her own.

The last time Ms. Ferraro was considering a Senate race, she was an up-and-coming but relatively obscure congresswoman from Queens. Now, at age 56, she has a permanent place in American history texts, and her candidacy for any office is a national event.

But fame for Ms. Ferraro came with unpleasant side effects. In 1985, her husband, John Zaccaro, a real estate developer, pleaded guilty to scheming to fraudulently obtain bank financing. Three years later, her son, John Jr., was convicted of selling cocaine to an undercover agent. Both events received extensive coverage, and they continue to exert an undeniable drag on her candidacy.

At a recent campaign speech delivered to a standing-room-only crowd at Columbia University in Manhattan, Ms. Ferraro said she thought crime was the biggest problem facing New York State. After the speech, a young woman asked with some embarrassment how Ms. Ferraro could be an effective voice against crime given her own family's experience.

Ms. Ferraro brushed aside the question, saying that her husband and son, now in law school, had "paid their debt to society." But as she travels across the state, the question always seems to be lurking just beneath the surface.

"There's a lot of interest in her out there," said one prominent New York state Democrat. "But I can't put my finger on a lot of support for her."

"Gerry," he added, "has a passion for this stuff that overcomes a lot of other factors."

This passion may be hard for many to understand. In her book about her vice-presidential race, Ms. Ferraro wrote that if she had known the pain the campaign would cause her family she would have asked Mondale to choose another running mate.

Now, though, Ms. Ferraro maintains that neither she nor her husband nor her three children ever regretted the race. "The good times so outweighed the bad," she said. "Who else had the opportunity to do what we did?"

Ms. Ferraro's propensity to talk about her feelings and experiences makes her unusual among politicians; she gives an impression of openness at a time when many other candidates seem preprogrammed.

"She distinguishes herself by having a real rapport with voters," said Madeleine Albright, a friend and foreign-policy adviser of Ms. Ferraro's. "People sense a personal warmth in her."

Ms. Ferraro says she is running for the Senate because she believes in public service, and thinks she can make a difference.

'Answer man' studies all aspects of Lincoln's life

By Dennis Conrad
Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. — Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian? Did he drink? And just how honest was he? Thomas Schwartz says he doesn't have all the answers, but as Illinois' "Lincoln answer man" he'll try to find them.

From his office in the basement of the Old State Capitol, the curator of the state's Lincoln Collection finds much of his time is spent not on the collection but in responding to inquiries about the 16th president.

It can be a call from the Australian ambassador on the accuracy of a quote, a Florida woman asking about the authenticity of a letter, or a movie researcher wanting to know all that has been written on Lincoln's dialect.

Sometimes it can even be a call from one of President Bush's speech writers, as was the case when the White House was preparing for a shift in Bush's no-new-taxes pledge.

The speech writer said she wanted to verify a Lincoln quote that was one of Bush's favorites. Bush could recall only the phrase "to think anew."

About an hour later Schwartz had tracked it down to Lincoln's second annual message to Congress: "As our case is new so we must think anew and act anew."

By Schwartz's calculation, the 36-year-old historian has only a 50-50 chance of answering questions posed to him.

"What's so difficult to do is to ever definitively say, 'No, that's not true,' " he said. "Lincoln was so reticent that you have to surmise, you have to draw a great deal from the very little he said."

Take, for example, the question of Lincoln's religious beliefs.

"People are very much concerned with his soul and whether or not any of the recollections of ministers can be believed where they claim that in private conversations he made a profession of Christ," Schwartz said.

"There's evidence to suggest when he was in New Salem he wrote a tract condemning Christianity. ... Supposedly, the offensive text was taken and thrown into the heating stove so that Lincoln's future political career would not be ruined."

Schwartz said it is also unclear whether Lincoln was a man of temperance.

There's evidence of Lincoln delivering a speech on the evils of drinking, but there's contradictory evidence as well.

"Brandy was used in cooking in order to preserve foods and it was used as a base for many of the common home remedies that are described in a household book that Mrs. Lincoln had," Schwartz said.

As to whether Lincoln deserves the moniker "Honest Abe," there's no question in Schwartz's mind.

"All the accounts we have from other lawyers at the time, they don't claim Lincoln was the best lawyer, but they'll always talk about how he's a reputable man, reliable," he said.

Schwartz is Illinois' second "Lincoln answer man" since the curator's position was created in 1958. He took the job in 1985.

Before then, Schwartz had worked for the Illinois Historical Survey and as a graduate student assistant on the Lincoln collection at the University of Illinois. At Illinois, he began his dissertation on Andrew Jackson's foreign policy — work he has yet to complete.

"In order to make myself credible with the Lincoln community academics, I've had to prove myself with publication of scholarly (Lincoln) articles," he said. "And it all takes time."

Dog-wolf hybrids can be volatile personalities

WASILLA, Alaska (AP) — Kessie is a canine that can't be housebroken, won't fetch and killed a 4-week-old infant. Her owner loves her, wouldn't buy another like her, and thinks the state should ban her kind.

The state may — once it figures out what Kessie and her kind are.

Prompted by the increasing popularity of hybrid wolves, the state Department of Fish and Game is consulting with lawyers with an eye toward regulating — perhaps even banning — the breeding, sale and ownership of the dog-wolves.

"The current law says it is illegal to own a wolf and legal to own a dog," says Phil Koehl, a wildlife biologist with the agency in Juneau. "The question is whether it is a wolf or a dog."

The state Board of Game could take up the question of hybrids when it meets this fall, Koehl said.

No agency regulates the breeding and sale of hybrids. No laws regarding hybrids are on the books, and a computer search revealed that no legislation dealing with them has been filed in Juneau since 1982.

Koehl said the breed's increasing popularity — and not the rare incident of violence — is prompting the department's look into regulation.

But officials in the Mat-Su Borough, center of much of the state's hybrid breeding, say there's a problem with vaccinating the hybrids against rabies, and the borough is considering local regulation.

Burton Gore, state veterinarian in Palmer, said national veterinary associations recommend against vaccinating "wildlife." Because it's unclear whether hybrids are dog or wolf, it's unknown whether the vaccine works on them.

Jerry Pineau, the borough's chief animal control officer, said the borough stopped licensing hybrids last year and is looking into its powers to regulate the breed.

At least a half-dozen breeders in the state sell hybrids, ranging, they say, up to 98 percent wolf. Pineau said counting hybrids is difficult because many Alaska dog-owners don't license their animals.

Nationwide, the number of hybrids has been estimated as high as 500,000 — a popularity, hybrid owners and breeders say, spurred by the wolf-dogs' beauty and, especially, by their mystique.

Mystique is the wrong reason to buy an animal whose instincts and personality are wild, said Barbara Heikes, owner of the animal involved in a rare but widely publicized incident last year.

"The combination of the dog and the wolf personalities produces a very volatile personality," said Heikes, who bought Kessie for her beauty.

"People who own hybrids are all a little strange," she said. "The hybrids are getting a bad shake because the wrong people own them. I really would like to see the state stop the breeding and selling of hybrids."

Heikes had given Kessie away, but got her back after she killed 4-week-old David Paul Mahler.

The baby's mother, Linda Borer, was visiting Kessie's second owner and offered the child to a pregnant Kessie to lick. Kessie, who Heikes said was in the midst of a difficult labor, grabbed the infant by the head, puncturing its soft skull.

Authorities decided not to prosecute.

Mother wolves carry their pups by the head, and the wolf-dog didn't bite the child, Heikes said. But the incident underscores her argument that essentially wild animals shouldn't be pets, she said.

"A wolf is naturally timid," she said. "Dogs are much more aggressive. The more dog in a hybrid, the more vulnerable it is to bite out of fear or aggression. Hybrids are incredibly unpredictable."

Werner Schuster, who said his Wolf Country USA north of Palmer is the world's largest hybrid-breeding operation, argued that the differences between wolves and dogs are situational and dietary.

"A wolf in the wild is a wolf. A wolf in captivity is a dog. It ceases to be a wolf when it leaves the wild," he said.

"We feed them dry dog food," Schuster said, pointing to the 80 or so hybrids that roam to the ends of 15-foot chains attached to log doghouses. "If we fed them raw meat, they'd revert to being wolves."

Schuster said he sells hybrids for $100 to $1,500. Buyers, he said, get good pets.

"Can you housebreak them? You bet. They housebreak themselves. They're easily trained if you're willing to work at it. They'll roll over, fetch, jump in the air."

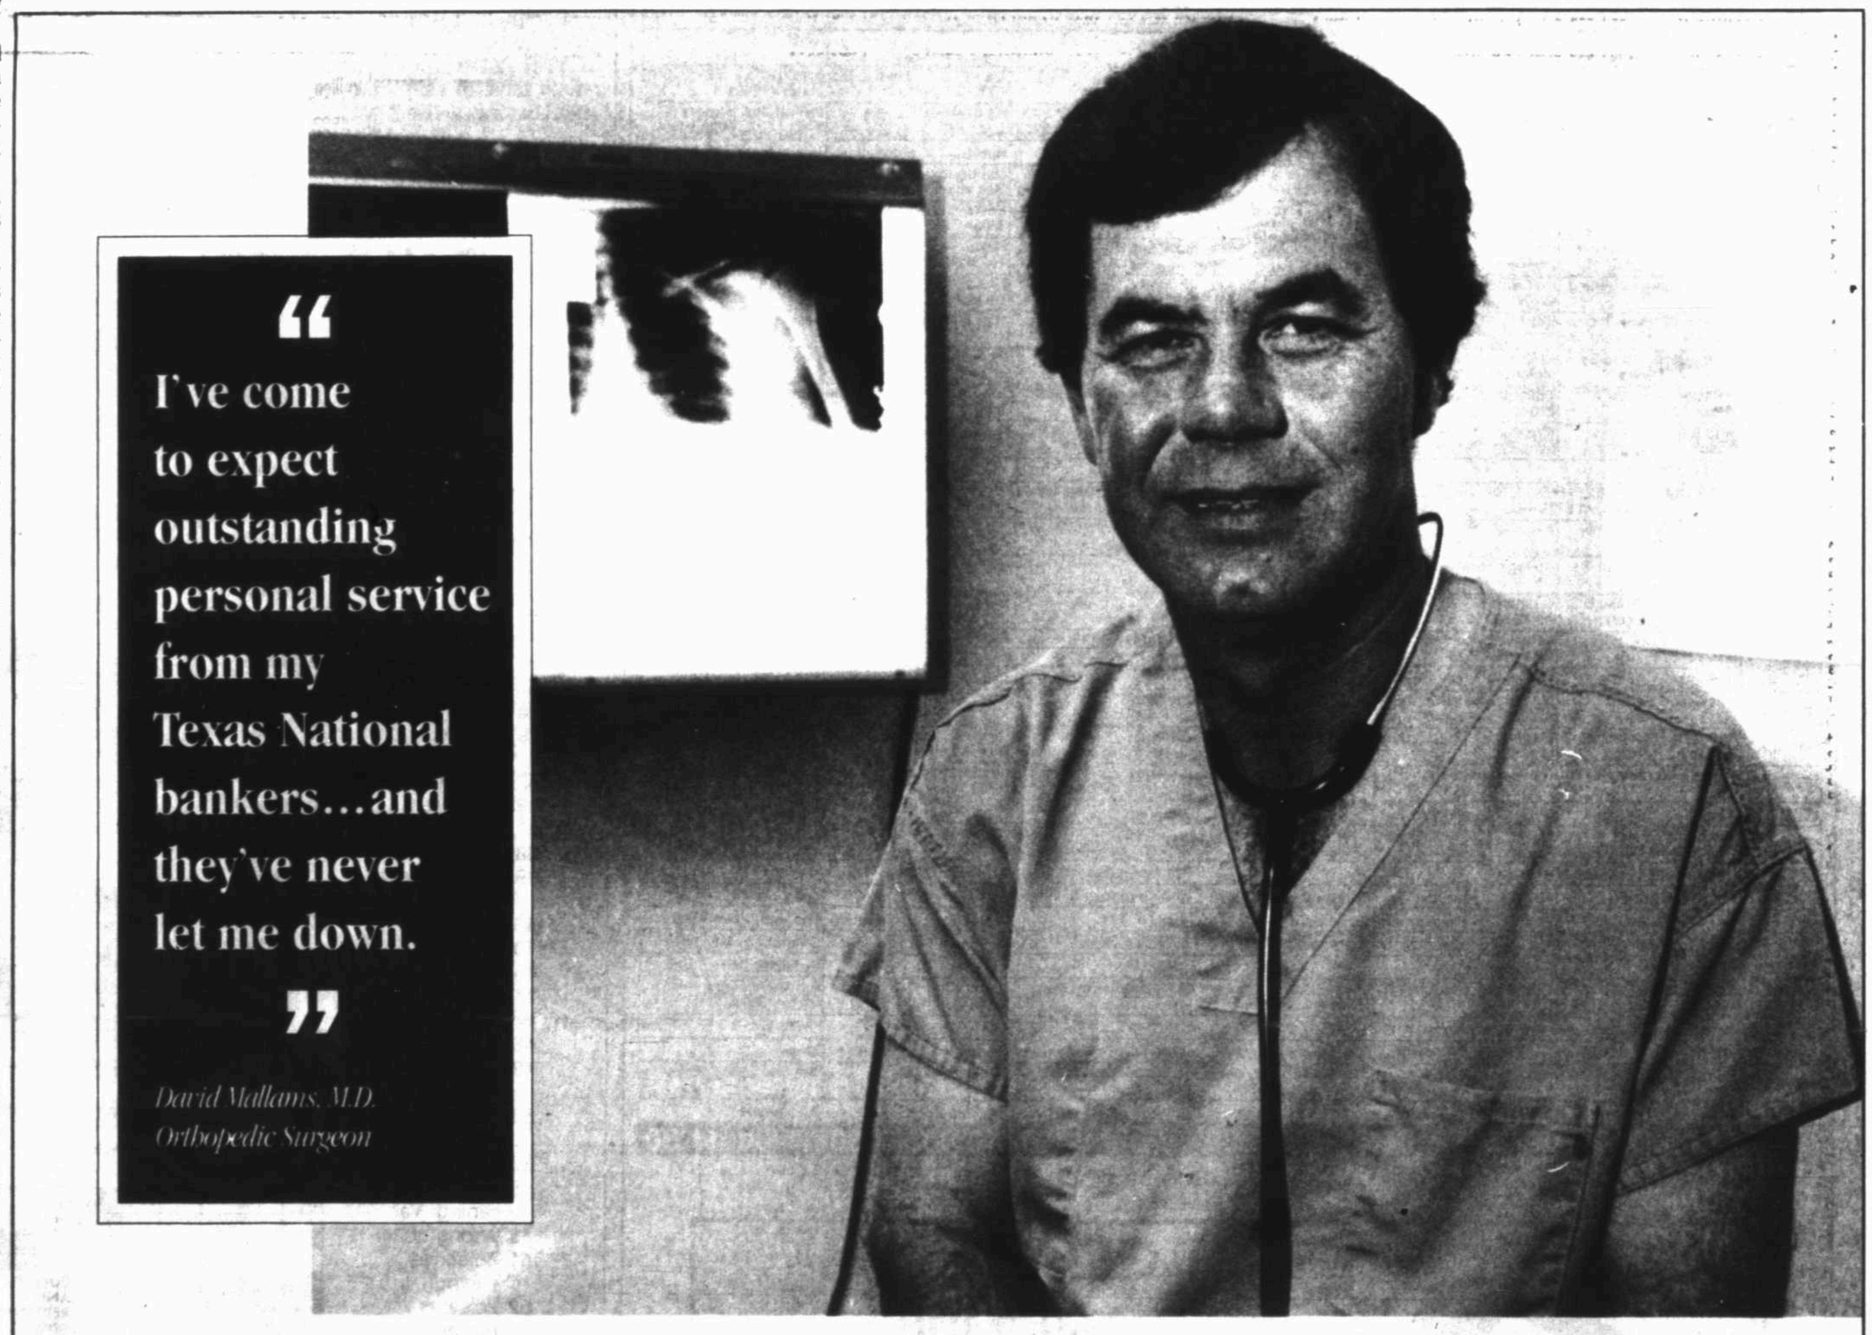

He opposes banning the breed, but agreed that "certain kinds" of people should not buy hybrids, and said he won't sell to them.

"Three kinds of people buy them. The macho kind — he'll say he used to have a wolf and it killed three other dogs and he wants another one. We say sorry. The other kinds want a really good pet. But some people don't have no place for them. They really shouldn't buy them."

He said his wife, Gail, screens potential buyers.

Heikes said her wolf-dog is beautiful — but not a pet. It lives in a 20-by-20 chain link kennel.

"I'm glad I got Kessie, but I wouldn't get another hybrid," she said. "It takes so much effort. You can't housebreak them, you can't turn them loose in the yard to play or fetch sticks because if they decided they wanted to go for a walk they would just start walking and go."

MOONLIGHTING!
The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals.
OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:
Is it worthwhile for adults also? Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
• ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
• MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
• COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
• SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.
How much money can I make as a distributor?
Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!
How long does it take?
The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!
When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.
Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!
