GOLF GOSSIP

By D. A. Davis

Folks, as long as I have been playing golf I've often wondered if any of my ancestors were great golfers. I was down at Houston I made it a point to visit some of my distant cousins the ones that do not live in Herman (Park in cages) and get down the old family Bible and see if I could not trace my ancestors back to some great golfers that were great golf players, but what do you imagine I found? Away back yonder I found that one of my ancestors were named Edson, and, folks, "Edson" don't sound Scotch to me at all; in fact, it sounds a little "Swedish." However, Edson could possibly be Scotch, but I'm awfully afraid it will turn out to be Swede. However, I somehow believe with the proper training and practice even a Swede could play golf a little, so folks, I ain't greatly discouraged after all.

And speaking of family records, makes me wonder how in the world our descendants a hundred years from now are going to know anything about us folks that are living now, and even if I do turn out to be a great golfer, how will my great great grandchildren know anything about it since we have done away with the old family Bible and the records that were kept years and years ago? It seems to me we modern folks are neglecting a most important part of our family history by doing away with the old family Bible and using a calendar in its place.

And speaking of ancestors, I happened to run into quite a lot of cousins down at Houston that I didn't know anything about, and the surprising part about it was that some of the "wimmin" were really good looking and some of them were regular "flappers;" but the bad part of it all is how in the world am I going to make "Wimmin" believe they are my cousins when she goes down there with me next spring?

And boy, oh boy, old Jess Lynch here did find a lot of his wife's "pieces" down there, and what I am trying to tell you, they shore were good looking. Mrs. Lynch says she's going to do some investigating, also.

And another thing, if you all remember some time back I accused Old Man Lynch of being the biggest liar in Gray County; and folks, there was never a single person that ever denied it. And if you want to know something, I ain't changed my mind, either; so folks, some of the stuff he is telling on me ain't so, and if you want any further proof, I can get plenty of it from my cousins down there.

It won't be long now until our golf grounds will be badly crowded with folks of all kinds trying to make a hole in one, because I have just got an offer from one of our noted brewers (I don't mean our local ones) that have kindly offered to send anyone a case of their famous cheese wash who makes a hole in one during the season of 1933.

And speaking of this 32 beer not being intoxicating, it is all baloney, because I tried just one bottle in order to see for myself and I got gloriously drunk, because I dreamed of giving my wife one of the worst beatings a woman ever got; and folks, I simply know I was drunk, for I never would have even dreamed of such a thing unless I was. Don't tell me, folks, don't tell me it ain't intoxicating—I'm thoroughly convinced.

Little by little we are getting our greens, fairways and tee boxes in good shape again, and if the wind would just stop blowing for a little while we would soon have it in fine shape. We are hoping to finish up everything this week so we can get a match with some of our neighbors right away. However, I find that most of them have already matched games for Sunday, but boys, don't fail to go out every day you can so you can be in good practice. I'd hate like blazes to match up a game and most all of us get our ear beat down and force me to bawl anybody out, golf or no golf.

A DREAM IN YOUTH

By John B. Vannoy

Bill Jones was sure a loyal friend: All times on him I could depend: He would my pleasures always share, And secrets of his heart lay bare.

In confidence—the strictest kind—He opened up his honest mind And told a tale, so full of grief, That it now seems beyond belief.

Great woes may fall on me, galore, And fortune tightly shut her door; But here, in rhyme, I will unfold The very tale that friend Bill told.

"In those sweet, aimless days of youth, When life was in its teens, forsooth, I fell in love with a little maid, With whom, at school, I often played.

"Her father—rich beyond compare, While I went 'round with pockets bare.

He was religious, that I knew; While I religion did eschew.

"This wide difference in our lives Brought to my heart vast heaps of sighs;

For, sure, I knew he would object To me as son-in-law, prospect.

"But love in youth is very brave, And restless as an ocean wave, It quickly grows to giant size, Then, just as quickly, wilts and dies.

"So, when that term of school was out I went, at once, to look about To find a plan to see my girl As often as the days unfurl.

"I chose, forthwith, an honest plan: I sent a note, just like a man, To see if I could call that night. Her answer gave my heart delight.

"Her home was such a costly kind, The like of it you'd seldom find: The parlor had a big fireplace, With chimney reaching into space.

"Until that night I never knew That time took wings and fairly flew; So steeped was I in golden bliss, All because of a little kiss.

"Her parents came to us, just then, And said: 'The clock is striking ten; Now come along and follow us; And please, my dears, don't make a fuss.'

"They straight into the fireplace walked, While I stood still and gawked and gawked; For hardly had they entered there When quickly did they disappear.

"My sweetheart gently took my hand: Without entreaty or command, She led me into that fireplace; Then swiftly flew into space.

"When did we land? I never knew: But in a palace, real and true, I found myself just standing there, With eyes bugged out in wondrous stare.

"I saw, at once, a beautiful hall, So spacious, grand and very tall; With musical things of every kind, By angels played, and by mankind.

"The music had a mystic chime, For all the players played in rhyme. Of all the players playing there, My girl was fairest of the fair.

"My gentle call I plainly heard, Though naught was said—no, not a word— A wireless of a mystic kind Conveyed her message to my mind.

"She asked that I come play with them— Play anything that pleased my whim. But I knew naught of music lore, So her request I did deplore.

"Another message came to me: 'Surely, my love, you ought to see These musical things—by magic made By any mortal can be played.'

"Thus encouraged, I sought to find Some musical things that pleased my mind. Horns and harps and pianos, grand— None really seemed to fit my hand.

"A small hand-organ, standing near, Completely filled my heart with cheer: I'd listened to them times before: Their music sweet, I did adore.

"I seized the crank, it swung around: Amazing beautiful was the sound. I was awakened by a wail, For I was wringing old Tom's tail."

BRIEFS

By A. P. ANGELLO

Mr. J. P. Morgan is still keeping ahead of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. Is it possible that they will find one man too smart for them?

At least one victim of a kidnapping scheme liked it. Miss McElroy, a grown young woman of Kansas City, said she held nothing against her abductors. Her father, who paid thirty thousand dollars to free her, feels differently about the matter.

Memorial Day fills every heart to overflowing with both joy and sorrow. Let us honor both those soldiers who died and who are alive. One flower to the living means more than an armful to the dead.

Boom! Up go market prices. If they keep on rising the farmer ought to get more than an average price for his crop this fall.

The inflation of the currency is the main stay that is bringing prices up. If President Roosevelt can keep it in control, it may have a definite part in readjustment. The difficulty is in keeping either artificial or natural inflation in control. Inflation is like a balloon. It can't stay up all the time, and when it is punctured, there is depression.

Mr. Ghandi has completed his three weeks fast, and is still in fair health. Whether his fast will avail even in part his original purpose or not, remains to be seen. A decade may disclose a secret yet veiled today.

Another state has voted repeal. A wise man of old saw and forewarned mankind in words like these: "Who hath woe, sorrow, contentions, wounds without cause? They that tarry long at the wine. And at last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

Some souls by being raised up can see the meaning of our nation taking a backward step in its civilization. Others will have to have their souls lowered to degradation by the sting of that adder to realize the truth. Then it will be too late for that class to be redeemed. That serpent will have already have fastened itself too tightly upon their souls.

P. S. Thanks for the advertising, Mr. Wheeler Bonehead. When you are again in need of something to fill up your column, you will know exactly where to go.

Next Sunday's Lesson

THE GOSPEL OF THE SON OF GOD

By Rev. Cecil G. Goff

Lesson text, Mark 14:17-31. Golden text, Isaiah 53:3.

There is no record of the activities of Jesus and His disciples from the time of their return to Bethany from Jerusalem on Tuesday evening until He makes arrangements for the feast of the passover on Thursday evening. Jesus on that afternoon sent Peter and John to Jerusalem with instructions to have an upper room prepared for the feast. We are not told where that upper room was, but we may rest assured that it was in the home of some friend. It is thought by many that it was in the home of Mary, the mother of John Mark. In the evening about sundown Jesus started with the remaining ten disciples to the place of the supper. When they arrived the room was prepared, and Jesus with His disciples entered.

All four Gospels tell the story of the happenings of the upper room. Mark tells it in a short eight verses, Matthew in eleven, Luke in twenty-four verses, and John devotes five entire chapters to it. Jesus took this opportunity to bring many messages to His followers of teaching concerning their activities, of sorrow, and of love. As a lesson of humility He washed the feet of the disciples. He pointed out the one who was to betray Him, and sent him on his way that He might confide mightier truths to those who loved Him. He told them how that He must die, but that He would send the Holy Ghost among them to dwell eternally in their hearts to take His place when He was gone. He gave to them teachings concerning love toward God and their fellow men. He gave them an insight into His second coming and the after world which He would prepare for them. In fact, some of the dearest and most cherished teachings of the Master were spoken upon this night before His going to Gethsemane. And, in the midst of it, after the disciple which was a devil from the beginning had gone out to betray Him, He instituted the Lord's Supper.

At the beginning of the supper in the upper room, the feast of the passover was observed. Dummelow has described the details of the feast of the passover as follows: "(1) The first cup was blessed and drunk. (2) The hands were washed while a blessing was said. (3) Bitter herbs emblematic of the sojourn in Egypt, were partaken of, dipped in sour broth made of vinegar and bruised fruit. (4) The son of the house asked his father to explain the origin of the observance. (5) The lamb and the flesh of the thank offerings were placed on the table, and the first part of the Hallel (Psalms 113, 114) sung. (6) The second cup was blessed and drunk. (7) Unleavened bread was blessed and broken, a fragment of it was eaten, then a fragment of the thank offering, then a fragment of the lamb. (8) Preliminaries being thus ended, the feast proceeded at leisure till all was consumed. (9) The lamb being quite finished, the third cup, the cup of blessing, was blessed and drunk. (10) The fourth cup was drunk, and meanwhile the second part of the Hallel (Psalms 115-118) was sung." All of this was carried out by the Master and His disciples. And during the eating of the feast, as noted in the eighth point, Jesus told of the one who was to betray Him. He made it certain to Judas, and sent him away without the rest of the disciples ever knowing what he left for, so John tells us. It was after Judas left and the feast was finished that Jesus instituted the Lord's Supper.

First, Jesus took the bread. Possibly the bread was unleavened, since unleavened bread was used in the feast of the passover. But it is left for us to guess as to whether the bread was unleavened or not. The word used for bread in this relationship in the Gospels, is the Greek word for just common bread. The same word is used in Acts and in 1 Corinthians when referring to the Lord's Supper, and is the same word used for the loaves which Jesus blessed for the purpose of feeding the four thousand in the eighth chapter of Mark, and the feeding of the five thousand as recorded in the sixth chapter of the same book. The word for unleavened bread is an entirely different word and is used in connection with the passover in Mark 14:12. Therefore, it seems that there are no scriptural specifications as to the type of bread. It is specified that the bread was broken. Jesus Himself broke the bread. This represented the broken body of the Lord, and that that body was broken by His willingness to pay for the sins of men. He had chosen before the foundation of the world that His body should be broken for the sins of the world. He by His own will had permitted His own body to be broken. After He had blessed the broken loaf He gave it to His disciples to eat, as representative of His broken body.

Then He took the cup. The word wine is not used in this instance, as a commonly supposed. The word used instead is the fruit or produce of the vine. Therefore, we are not again bound to use any specified type of wine. The word does not even designate the grape vine. No doubt the wine or drink used by Jesus was the common wine of the country diluted with two parts water, as was the custom in making the ordinary drink for the common people for such occasions. Nevertheless, we are not specifically told the fruit of what vine to use, or which He used. This He also blessed and gave to the disciples to drink. It represented His spilled blood which was the blood of the New Testament which was shed for many. Now it is probable that Jesus used unleavened bread, and the ordinary wine drink of the day, but the thing of significance is that He does not say, and we are left to follow the spirit of the sacrifice it represents, rather than minute details.

Paul, in quoting the words of the Master, as revealed to him by the divine spirit, gives us further insight that this supper is not a communion between or among those loving the Lord. The word communion is not used in referring to it, except by inference in 1 Cor. 10:16. Paul says that we are to carry out the commands concerning the supper in remembrance of only one and that One is Christ Jesus who instituted it and permitted His body to be broken and His blood to be spilled as payment for the sins of mankind.

The Master continues by saying that He shall not taste of the fruit of the vine until He drinks it new in His Father's Kingdom with them. The reference here is not an actual carrying out of the Lord's Supper after we are all in heaven. The reference is a spiritual one. There will be no eating or drinking in heaven, but there will be throughout the endless ages of eternity the remembrance of the eternal sacrifice made by Jesus that men might dwell eternally with Him. The redeemed of God will never cease to adore and bless the Son of Man for that compassionate suffering.

The Master then, with His disciples, sang an hymn, which was probably a Psalm, and left the upper room for that weary, even though short march to Gethsemane. He told of the trouble ahead and the disciples in their ignorance avowed that they would never leave Him. Yet how like ourselves, before the day came they had all deserted Him and Peter, who was strongest in his intentions, had deserted deepest.

The Legislature shall enact laws to enforce this Section, and may from time to time prescribe regulations and limitations relative to the manufacture, sale, barter, exchange or possession for sale of vinous or malt liquors of not more than three and two-tenths per cent (3.2%) alcoholic content by weight; provided the Legislature shall enact law or laws whereby the qualified voters of any county, justice's precinct, town or city, may, by a majority vote of those voting, determine from time to time whether the sale for beverage purposes of vinous or malt liquors containing not more than three and two-tenths per cent (3.2%) alcohol by weight shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits; and provided further that in all counties in the State of Texas and in all political subdivisions thereof, wherein the sale of intoxicating liquors had been prohibited by local option elections held under the laws of the State of Texas and in force at the time of the taking of effect of Section 20, Article 16, of the Constitution of Texas, it shall continue to be unlawful to manufacture, sell, barter or exchange in any such county or in any such political subdivision thereof, any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors or medicinal bitters, capable of producing intoxication or any other intoxicant whatsoever, unless and until a majority of the qualified voters in said county or political subdivision thereof voting in an election held for such purpose shall determine it to be lawful to manufacture, sell, barter and exchange in said county or political subdivision thereof vinous or malt liquors containing not more than three and two-tenths per cent (3.2%) alcoholic content by weight, and the provision of this subsection shall be self-enacting."

Those voters opposing said proposed Amendment shall write or have printed on their ballot the following words: "Against the Amendment to the Constitution of Texas, authorizing the sale of vinous or malt liquors of not more than three and two-tenths per cent (3.2%) alcoholic content by weight."

Section 3. The Governor of the State of Texas is hereby directed to issue the necessary proclamation for said election and to have same published as required by the Constitution and Amendments thereto.

W. W. HEATH,

"JOURNALISTIC"

Why have American newspaper men so long resisted the term "journalist" as the equivalent of "newspaper man"? The question is raised by Vernon McJannet, head of the department of Journalism, University of Washington. He says quite truly that the old-time defined journalist as one who "wears spats and carries a cane, though he does not limp."
There is a vast amount of nonsense in craft posing of course, but the behavior of newspaper men is no more eccentric than that of the followers of any other profession or art which makes demands upon personality. Most American newspaper men are democratic spirits, a reaction, no doubt, to the pretensions of a generally hypocritical world with which they are in painfully intimate contact. Reporters come to despise false fronts and years ago turned against such innocent yet useless appendages as spats and canes, symbols of the "journalist" of former days.
It is, of course, utter nonsense, and indulgence of this prejudice has deprived the craft of a good, descriptive word. Editor and Publisher uses the term "journalist," rather than "newspaper man," because it is both apt and convenient. In recent years we have noted less antagonism to the word all along the line.—Editor and Publisher.

ADVERTISING OPINIONS

When is an advertisement advertising?
According to the Better Business Bureau of Tulsa, Okla., it is when the matter is printed in a newspaper.
In order to ascertain the opinions of a number of people as to the reception given modern forms of publicity, the bureau sent out letters in the Tulsa territory, receiving more than 1,000 answers. In reply to the question: "What form of advertising influences you most in making your purchases," 817 persons called newspapers the best medium. They constituted 80% of those answering. One and one-half per cent found billboards the most appealing and 10% favored radio. Only 1% regarded circulars as influential, and no one approved of circulars or cards placed in automobiles. Seven hundred and seventy-eight persons answering the questionnaire said they read only 12% of the circulars received.
There is no reason for thinking that the Tulsa residents are more interested in newspapers than citizens in any other part of the country, or that their reactions to advertising in various forms differ materially from those of other intelligent people. Business men with an advertising budget to apportion might do well to consider the figures uncovered by the bureau.—York (Neb.) New Teller.

MARKETING EGGS

By Zella Wigent
Nobody wants an "almost good" egg. At certain seasons of the year it used to be a great risk to order eggs in a restaurant. Now it is practically safe—another proof that the world is growing better.
Any farmer who has a mongrel flock producing fertile eggs laid in dirty nests, who lets broody hens laze on the nests in the summer, who gathers eggs only when the spirit moves him, who markets them only when it is convenient to go to town, is rendering a poor service. He cannot expect quality price.
Marketing farm eggs is more or less of a community proposition, whether one sells through a local dealer or through a cooperative marketing association, for few farm folks produce enough eggs to justify their seeking a special market. All the eggs of the community are collected by some local dealer or some local organization for shipment to the city market. Eggs on the wholesale market are handled in carload lots. The quality of the carlot determines the price.
The common method of buying eggs from the farmer "case count" makes the good producers of the community carry on their shoulders all the poor, careless, shiftless producers. Local buying of eggs on a graded basis encourages better promotion, means fewer losses higher up the line, and correspondingly higher prices to the quality producers.
There is not much money in an ungraded mixed shipment of eggs and the market for such shipments will be less favorable five or ten years from now.
Marketing eggs on the graded basis is the only fair way of marketing them.
It's already here in some sections—it's coming to others—let's get ready for it by bringing up our standard of production.
To produce good eggs we must:
Breed for good egg size, shape and color.
Breed and feed for good, strong shells.
Produce infertile eggs.
Have clean litter—furnish clean nests.
Clean dropping boards often.
Put wire netting under the roosts to keep hens from getting their feet down on the dropping boards.
Keep hens shut up until noon on wet, rainy days.
Gather eggs regularly.
Keep in a cool, dry place.
Don't sell washed eggs.
Don't store near oil or onions.
Wash twice a week; oftener, if possible.

FREE—A DOLLAR BILL!

Bruce Brewer, vice president of the Ferry-Hanly Advertising company, is authority for the following test of the value of advertising made by a country merchant who thought no one read his ads.
To convince him, the editor suggested writing and ad with a lot of copy in it, such as the merchant believed "nobody read," and "somewhere buried in the copy, offer a dollar bill to every one who reads the ad and brings it to your store. If you do that, I will run the ad free, just to prove folks do read advertisements."
In spite of the warning of the editor that it would cost money, the merchant accepted the challenge.
The ad contained so many words that it had to be set in type even smaller than that of the regular reading matter, but, buried away down in it was this offer: "To every one who brings in this ad we will give a one dollar bill." That was all that was said about the dollar.
The newspaper had not been out an hour before the store was full of people waving copies of the ad. The experiment cost that merchant nearly $500, but it proved to him, as nothing else ever had, that subscribers to the local weekly read it from end to end and everything in it.—California Publisher.

Wife—"You used to say you were unworthy of me."
Hubby—"Well, what of it?"
Wife—"Nothing, only you seem to be spending your whole married life trying to prove it."

Customer—"Can you guarantee that this black is fast color?"
Saleswoman—"Well, black isn't considered a very fast color, you know; but I can show you something pretty swift in stripes."

Hubby—"Darling, don't make any more of those biscuits, will you?"
Wife—"Why not, Fabian?"
Fabian—"Because, you're too light for such heavy work."

"I'll examine you for $10," said the specialist.
"All right," said the victim, "and if you find it I'll give you half."
