U.N. chokes off Serbia

Vote imposes harsh sanctions on Yugoslavia

■ Security Council hopes to halt Europe's bloodiest fighting since World War II.

Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — The Security Council on Saturday imposed harsh trade sanctions on Yugoslavia in an attempt to choke off the Serb-led government's economy and halt Europe's bloodiest fighting since World War II.

The vote — 13 in favor and none opposed — put Yugoslavia in the same league as Iraq and Libya in facing worldwide condemnation and sweeping embargoes. Zimbabwe and China abstained from the vote.

The sanctions on Serbia and tiny Montenegro, Yugoslavia's remaining republics, halt oil imports; suspend air service; ban all trade except food and humanitarian supplies; and bar Yugoslav teams from international sports competitions such as the Olympics.

The council also urged nations to freeze Yugoslav assets. President Bush ordered officials to begin seizing Yugoslavia's U.S. holdings. About $214 million is expected to be frozen by Monday, the White House said.

Hoopla, hope envelop Rio's Earth summit

■ Officials from 160 countries to discuss what's wrong with the planet, how to pay for repairs.

By Paul Raeburn
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — This week, environmentalists and diplomats from 160 countries will gather in Rio de Janeiro for their version of Brazil's carnival: a chaotic, 12-day negotiating marathon and an ecological festival.

The aim is to figure out what's wrong with the Earth and how to pay for the repairs.

As many as 100 presidents, prime ministers, princes and kings will be among the throng of 40,000 foreign visitors flooding into Rio between now and Wednesday, when the meeting — the United Nations "Earth Summit" — begins.

Officially known as the U.N. Conference on Environment and Development,

Safety concern causes hospital to end birth list

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

The birth of a baby warrants the whole world knowing.

But nationwide concern about publicly announcing births in light of fears of kidnapping has a growing number of hospitals ending the practice of publishing newborns' names.

Added to that list this week is Midland Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, which stopped providing names of newborns to the Reporter-Telegram for publication each Sunday.

"We quit distributing the baby list for the protection of the parents and baby,"

Claim center lull

ODESSA — Compared with Friday's rush, the State Comptroller's office was remarkably quiet Saturday. Officials there said many people may not have known the office, which serves as a lottery winnings claim center, was open. Beginning this week, the office at 4682 E. University Blvd. will be open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. "Also, I think there was a problem with our number not being listed in (Directory Assistance)," said supervisor Linda Fowler. "But we got that taken care of." The lottery claim center can be reached at 368-5243.

Library to dig in

Friends of the Library will hold groundbreaking ceremonies for the $2.5 million expansion-renovation of the Midland County Public Library following the Friends' 2 p.m. annual brief meeting today at the library. The library, which was built in 1957, will double in size with the expansion. Groundbreaking will be on the south side of the 301 W. Missouri Ave. library. Funds were raised through grants and donations by the all-volunteer Friends group and by certificates of obligations authorized by the Midland County Commissioners' Court.

Baker to rescue?

WASHINGTON — Warned by friends and advisers that his re-election is imperiled by Ross Perot's unexpected strength and a perception that he is not doing anything about the country's problems, President Bush is under growing pressure to call in Secretary of State James A. Baker III to rescue his re-election campaign. Bush on Saturday denied published reports that a senior aide, Robert Mosbacher, had urged him to dismiss Samuel K. Skinner as chief of staff and replace him with Baker. Friends and advisers of Bush said the president had indeed made no decision to shake up a team that he rearranged six months ago in hopes of stopping his political slide. But Bush not only failed to rebound, he is now facing a challenge from Perot that he had never taken into account.

'New' council to meet on District 2 issues

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff writer

Midland City Council members will meet twice Monday — first for ceremony, then for public discussion.

Newly elected members will be sworn in at 10 a.m. in the chambers at City Hall. Then the "new" council will meet at 7 p.m. with District 2 residents to talk about issues and funding that affect their neighborhoods.

That meeting is set to take place at Casa de Amigos, 1101 Garden Lane.

Discussion will center around Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) funding, a total of $905,000 in federal money to be spent in south and east Midland or to benefit low-income residents.

An earlier public hearing drew much discussion of the needs of the community. Nearly 20 social-service and public-support programs formally have applied to use the money.

Mayor-elect J.D. Faircloth, who becomes mayor Monday, said the evening meeting's purpose is two-fold.

"At the first public hearing, most of the attendees were black, so we want to make sure the Hispanic community is aware of the CDBG process," he said. "We also wanted to get some general input from the residents of District 2."

Other possible subjects include the pending replacement of two council members — Faircloth, who will resign Monday to become mayor, and the Rev.

1 man's recession

Work search is full-time job

By Robert Dvorchak
Associated Press writer

PITTSBURGH — When James Morton lost his job overseeing 240 Mister Donut stores more than five months ago, he set a goal for himself: He would be back on someone's payroll by July.

Though he's come close a few times, he remains on the jobless roller coaster, complete with plunges, buildups and twisting turns akin to the denial, anger and depression that make up the four stages of grief.

All that's missing for Morton is the final stage — recovery — even though economists say it has arrived

RECESSION: Finding employment becomes one man's full-time job

following the longest recession since World War II.

"There are days I could have slammed the door out of sheer frustration," he says. "I go through a range of self-doubt every day. The mood swings are enormous. When you don't have a job, you're perceived as a loser. How do you take your resume and say to yourself you're a winner?

"Recently, I've been in some valleys. I get home and walk up the steps very slowly. The longer you're out here, the more negative you become. They say the first year's the toughest."

MORTON, 47, had never been out of work until his job as director of operations for two regions of Mister Donut stores was eliminated on Dec. 13, 1991, after the chain was bought by a British company.

Less than two weeks before Christmas, he had to tell his wife and two daughters that his status as breadwinner had evaporated with his paychecks.

Now his full-time job is finding another full-time job.

In a typical week, Morton makes 50 to 75 phone calls, writes 20 to 40 letters, scours the want ads, and networks, networks and networks.

He's learned that there's one chance in 100 he'll get a response to a letter.

A man with a salesman's practiced pitch and nervous energy, Morton has been forced to do things he's never done before — like standing in an unemployment line in his business suit and polished loafers, and rehearsing for job interviews in front of a home video camera.

For the first time in 21 years, he needed a resume. It took three weeks and eight rewrites to get it just right.

And then there were the cuts: He cut back on socializing, he cuts his own grass instead of paying a college student $60 a month to do it, he cuts out newspaper coupons for bargains and he cuts costs by BOGO-ing — his term for buy one, get one free supermarket specials.

"I'm working harder now that when I had a job," said Morton, who belongs to three jobless support groups. "The way I see it, I'm the chief executive officer of my own corporation, and the product I'm selling is me."

A MARKETING MANAGER delivered the bad news in person: He and Morton were riding down Interstate 77 in Charleston, W.Va., in Morton's company car.

"I was slam-dunked," Morton said. "In our society, your job is your identity. Your whole vision of yourself revolves around your job. If you don't have one, it's like you have the plague."

Although his wife's nursing salary cushioned the blow, the family had to learn to do without Morton's salary and perks, which totaled more than $60,000. He had to tell his daughters, Traci and Kristin, ages 20 and 16, to curb their spending.

"I told them we weren't going to starve or have to dress in rags," he said. "Then my younger daughter asked, 'Will I still be able to buy some hairspray?' I felt so insignificant, like an ant in a world of giants."

Kristin got a job at a fast-food restaurant and offered Morton her first two paychecks.

Then came the initial trip to the unemployment office to sign up for $300 a week to supplement his severance and savings.

"Guys were looking at me with a smirk that said, 'How does it feel, big shot? You have to sign up, too.' That's humble pie — the entire seven cuts," Morton said. "This whole process has humbled me."

As part of his severance, he was enrolled with Bizet & Co., an agency that helps find jobs. Among his out-of-work colleagues were bank presidents, chief financial officers and accountants.

Bizet is Morton's new headquarters, a place to work the phone and typewriter, to thumb through Ward's Business Directory of companies and the National Ad Search.

"You can always tell a new person," Morton said. "They keep their doors closed. They don't want anyone to know they're hurting. I insulated myself the first four days."

His windowless work space is purposely Spartan. The only ornaments are a portable radio, a philodendron sprouting from a coffee cup and a sheet taped to the wall that begins "Each new day is an opportunity to start all over again."

"I don't want to be too comfy. I want to keep nails on my chair. I want to get out of this jail cell," Morton said. "I'm used to being on the road. All those days in the car, the bad meals, the nights in strange hotel beds — I miss that. It eats away at me every day."

IN FIVE-PLUS months of searching, Morton has been interviewed seven times and has received three offers. None worked out, and the experience underscored some painful realities about the job market.

There are more job seekers than openings, especially for white-collar middle managers. And in a buyer's market, salary offers are lower. The jobless rule of thumb is that for every $10,000 in salary you want, you have to expect to be out of work one month.

One offer meant a move to the Midwest for a three-month trial. Another was for half his old pay.

"The guy said, 'You need the job.' Well, there may come a time when I have to accept half an orange, but not right now," Morton said. "One of the worst things you can do in a job search is not put enough value on yourself. I'm willing to bend a little bit, but I made a decision I'm not going to settle for anything less."

The third job he rejected was the toughest to turn down. Again, the bottom line was money; the offer was for a fraction of his old salary.

Weight Loss Surprises Researchers

WASHINGTON --A nutrition organization was hopeful that a nutritionally complete "hi-tech" food tablet would help erase world hunger problems, until a study revealed that one of the ingredients could cause significant weight loss.

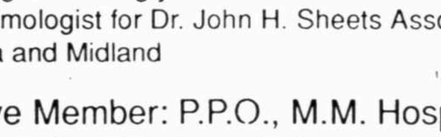

Although other studies and scientists may not agree, researches in Europe found that the ingredient, a natural plan colloid, actually caused people to lose weight, even though specifically instructed not to alter normal eating patterns, according to one study published in the prestigious British Journal of Nutrition. Researchers in an earlier study had speculated that the weight loss was due to a decrease in the intestinal absorption of calories.

While the development of the product called Food Source One, a project of National Dietary Research, would not be used to successfully ful-fill its original goal, the formula which has since been improved with other natural colloids has been a windfall for some overweight people. A Daytona Beach, Florida woman fighting a weight battle for 12 years used the product on a recommendation of her physician and lost 30 pounds. She stated, "Not only have I lost 30 pounds but my cholesterol has dropped from 232 to 143. I have two closets full of clothes which have not fit me in two years that I can now wear." In a separate report, a telephone interview revealed that a Wilmington, North Carolina pharmacist lost 14 pounds in 3 weeks on the product and was over hungry.

Food Source One tablets are part of National Dietary Research's comprehensive plan to bring a rapid end to obesity in this country. A variety of nutritionally sound diet plans, specially prepared by NDR, accompany each bottle and provide a natural drug free alternative for confronting the problem of obesity.

U.S. blasts Europeans into action on sanctions

By Maureen Johnson
Associated Press writer

LONDON — A year after telling America to mind its own business over Yugoslavia, the European Community has been goaded into action by a blast from Washington.

Early last week, U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III demanded evidence of a "willingness on the part of our European colleagues to act."

Now, in the view of many commentators, it's like old times: America calling the shots and the 12-nation community getting into line.

"James Baker has shown yet again that when it comes to a security challenge to the West, you cannot do much without America," said Jonathan Eyal of London's Royal United Services Institute, a private think tank.

The European Community hastily smoothed over divisions — German and British impatience for action, French reservations and Greek resistance — and imposed a trade embargo on Serbia effective June 1.

At U.N. headquarters in New York, Britain was back in its place as America's prime ally: it joined a U.S. diplomatic blitz aimed at getting the Security Council to impose harsh sanctions to try to stop the bloodbath in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Yugoslavia was the big test of the 12 nations' aspiration to closer political union with a common foreign policy.

In June 1991, when Slovenia and Croatia became the first republics to break away from the Serb-dominated Yugoslav government, the community's 'leave-it-to-us' message was unequivocal.

"This is the hour of Europe, not the hour of the Americans," declared Luxembourg Foreign Minister Jacques Poos.

Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic has played on the long memories of the Old World, reflected in differences among the community nations.

SANCTIONS: Toll from resistance has been severe

(From 1A)

Serbian and Montenegran governments," Bush said in a letter issued in Dallas.

The resolution — sponsored by the United States, Britain, France and Belgium — is binding on all U.N. members. Many nations have already withdrawn or reduced diplomatic staffs in Belgrade, the Serbian and Yugoslav capital.

The sanctions seek to force Serbia and Montenegro to agree to a cease-fire in the latest Yugoslavia battlefield, Bosnia-Herzegovina. But some diplomats warned stronger action may be needed.

U.S. Ambassador Edward Perkins told the council the United States would support "further measures until the Serbian regime changes course."

Some diplomats have suggested a possible naval blockade and armed escorts for relief shipments is possible.

Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic called the sanctions "typical pressure on a small country."

"I would even say this is tyranny," he was quoted by the Belgrade-based Tanjug news ageny.

"Now others will know how we feel," said Iraq's U.N. ambassador, Abdul Amir al-Anbari, whose nation was hit with sanctions after it invaded Kuwait in August 1990.

In Bosnia, fighting raged Saturday in Sarajevo, where Muslim forces traded fire with Serb-led Yugoslav troops trapped in their barracks. Clashes also were reported in eastern and western Bosnia.

The toll from Belgrade's 3-month-old resistance to Bosnia's secession has been severe: at least 2,200 killed and thousands wounded, historic cities left in ruins, and about 1.3 million people forced to flee their homes.

Yugoslavia claims it cannot control ethnic Serb forces responsible for much of the bloodshed.

Yugoslavia's U.N. ambassador, Dragomir Djokic, was not invited to speak at the council session and refused to talk to reporters afterward.

China's envoy, Li Daoyu, had urged a negotiated settlement and abstained because "sanctions will probably lead to further deterioration of the situation."

Zimbabwe's envoy, Simbarashe Simbanenduku Mumbengegwi, urged U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali to take a greater peacemaking role in the conflict.

In an eleventh-hour bid to avert sanctions, Yugoslavia asked Boutros-Ghali to hold an urgent international meeting to seek a settlement to the Yugoslav crisis.

Belgrade then appealed to the United States and Russia to take control of war-torn Bosnia. Officials refused to say if they were seeking military intervention.

Russia's ambassador, Yuli Vorontsov, said his government would consider a joint U.S.-Russian command only after sanctions were adopted and hostilities halted.

"We've heard all kinds of talk from Belgrade for a long time," Vorontsov said. "But there's a limit to everything. Now they must comply with the decisions of the Security Council. And then we'll talk about a conference."

Belgrade residents besieged shops to stock up on gasoline and cooking oil, flour, gasoline and other supplies.

Serbian TV said the republic boosted oil imports in anticipation of the embargo and had several months of reserves.

An oil embargo "will not influence the mood of the Serbian people. If necessary, Serbs will walk," said Serbian Vice Premier Nikola Sajinovic before the U.N. vote.

Serbia's economics minister, Bozo Jovanovic, said he expected "enormous shortages." Others predicted widespread rationing.

Anxiety over sanctions overshadowed the Yugoslav elections called for today. Opposition parties say the vote is rigged and that they will boycott the elections, in which only the successor to the Communist Party and ultra-nationalist parties are running.

Much of the world community blames Serbia for the violence in Bosnia, whose Slavic Muslim and Croat majority voted to break away from Yugoslavia on Feb. 29.

BIRTHS: Parents can mail information directly said Laurie Johnson, public relations director for the hospital.

The move doesn't necessarily mean parents and parents-to-be should be alarmed about the safety of their little ones.

"Across the nation, there's been an increase in infant abduction. We haven't seen that problem in West Texas at this point, but in many cases, abductions have been directly traced back to the releasing of the baby list," Ms. Johnson said.

As a result, "We have decided to cease giving out the baby list," she said.

But that doesn't mean proud parents won't be able to let others know about a new child.

"What we will be doing is giving mothers a form to fill out, so, if they would still like to have it printed, they could mail it (to the newspaper) directly. But it will be their decision rather than ours," Ms. Johnson said.

FBI and police reports indicate that kidnappers have used newspaper birth announcements along with telephone directories to facilitate their crimes, according to an article in the March edition of the Public Relations Journal.

Before 1983, there were no statistics on infant kidnappings because of the rarity, the article said.

But, since that year, more than 110 infants have been abducted, 16 occurring in 1991, the article indicated. Of those taken last year, 16 were from hospitals and the remainder from parents' homes shortly after leaving the hospital, the article said.

New parents should mail their announcement form to the Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702, Attn: Tammy Neatherlin.

SUMMIT: Negotiating marathon set for Wednesday

(From 1A)

it will be the largest summit meeting in history.

That alone guarantees its place in history books. But it might turn out to be more.

Years from now, historians might look back on the meeting as a historic occasion marking the end of the Cold War and the beginning of a "green war" against the spoiling of the Earth's resources.

Or it might turn out to be simply a dud, a conference that tried to do too much too soon.

The conference's organizers have certainly not been shy about tackling large problems.

The long Earth Summit agenda includes protection of the atmosphere, the oceans, forests, threatened species, fresh water and the cleanup of toxic and hazardous wastes.

As if that weren't enough to keep negotiators busy, the conference will also deal with issues of poverty, population growth and restructuring of the world's economy.

Diplomats hope to devise a way to transfer money and technology from the wealthy industrialized countries to the poor developing countries.

"We must change our political mindset and shift our priorities in the allocation of existing resources," said the secretary general of the conference, Maurice F. Strong of Canada.

The conference was timed to mark the 20th anniversary of the 1972 United Nations Conference on the Human Environment in Stockholm. The Stockholm conference produced a set of principles for environmentally sound development and led to the establishment of the United Nations Environment Program, an agency to study environmental threats and plan preventive action.

The goals this time are broader. Strong wants environmental concerns integrated into international affairs and financial planning, not set aside as separate issues.

Much of the work of the conference has already been done, in anticipation of the signing of agreements in Rio. Here is the tally after three years of negotiations:

■ A treaty to curb the carbon dioxide emissions that can lead to global warming has been drafted. Under pressure from the United States, provisions to require reductions in carbon dioxide emissions were removed in favor of optional goals.

■ An agreement to preserve diverse biological species and ecosystems was also reached, but its fate is uncertain. The United States announced late Friday it wouldn't sign the treaty, which it called "fundamentally flawed." But the agreement is likely to get the support from 30 nations needed for it to go into effect.

■ An effort to devise an "Earth Charter" laying out simple principles for environmentally benign development failed. Instead, the conference will produce a less ambitious "Rio Declaration," which will not be legally binding.

■ A 900-page document called "Agenda 21" will be completed in Rio. It is a detailed blueprint for actions to be taken by governments and development agencies. But again, it is not legally binding.

■ Negotiators failed to devise a treaty to protect the world's forests. Instead, they will issue a "Statement on Forest Principles," which will not be legally binding.

It is a mixed record so far. The ultimate outcome will depend partly on what the negotiators will devise as a follow-up to the Earth Summit. They are discussing the creation of new U.N. agencies to foster environmentally benign development and implement the accords reached in Rio.

They are also talking money. Strong believes the industrialized countries should contribute $125 billion to a "green fund" to help developing countries find a better way to encourage their economies to grow.

COUNCIL: Discussion to center on grant funding

(From 1A)

Michael DeVaughn, District 2's representative.

DeVaughn has issued a letter to the remaining council formally endorsing restaurateur Juluis Brooks to take his seat.

Any District 2 resident may apply to be considered for the position.

"... As the first African-American seated on the council, I believe the seat should be given to someone who played a major role in that endeavor," DeVaughn wrote in his letter to the council.

The meeting, as all council meetings, is open to the public. Faircloth said it is likely to become the first of regular "town hall-type" meetings in the city's various districts.

Also in the morning ceremony, newly elected representatives Claudia Egan, District 4, and Buddy Sipe, District 3, will join Faircloth on the council.

City Secretary Bill Clanton, creator of the installation ceremony, will administer the oaths of office.

VISIT: Federal energy officials to arrive Monday

(From 1A)

General Counsel William S. Scherman and associate general counsels Susan J. Court and William J. Forehlick.

Aides to members of House and Senate energy panels visiting Midland include Ross Frommer, aide to Rep. James Scheuer, D-N.Y.; Alan Steinbach, aide to Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska; and Patricia McDonald, aide to Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo.

Special guest will be Martha Hesse, former FERC chairman.

The visitors will arrive at Midland International Airport late Monday morning and proceed to the Midkiff Processing Plant operated by Western Gas Resources, where they hear about natural-gas processing and conditioning, marketing, measurement and transportation.

After touring the processing plant, they will visit a drilling rig operating on a Parker & Parsley lease, where they will discuss prospect generation, risk analysis, financing and drilling techniques.

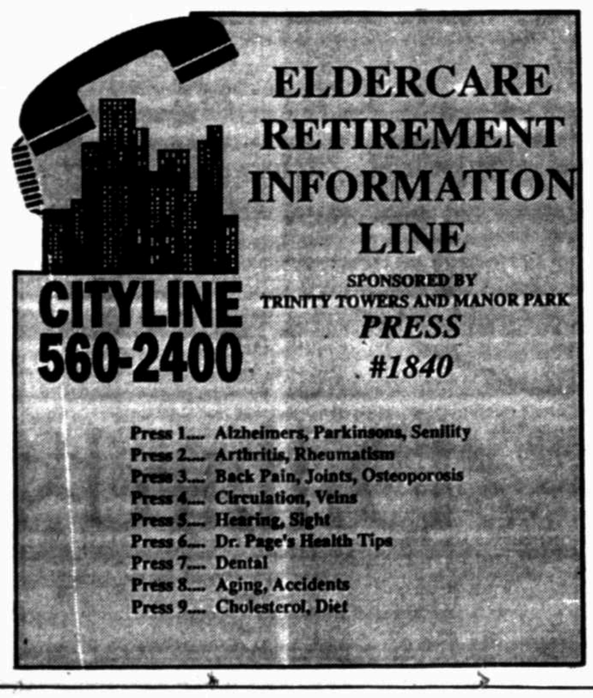

A tour of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, which will include a cocktail buffet and test drives of compressed natural gas-fueled vehicles provided by Enron Corp. and Don Evans, will follow.

On Tuesday, the group will tour Lone Star Gas Co.'s Spraberry Station to discuss gathering, compression and electronic measurement. Compressor Systems Inc. will then provide lunch for the group, conduct a tour of the company's manufacturing facilities, and host a presentation by David Griffin on "Wellhead to Burnertip" and informal discussion.

The group will return to Washington around 2:50 p.m.

This is the first field visit sponsored by the NGSPB, a non-profit organization based in Midland and composed of members of the natural-gas business from all over the country.

Gas consultant Robert K. Anderson and Terry Claiborne are co-chairmen of the field trip committee.

Russia seeks delay on interest payments

Associated Press

MOSCOW — Russia wants a five-year moratorium on paying interest on its huge foreign debt, the European Community chief said on Saturday.

Jacques Delors said Russian Deputy Prime Minister Yegor Gaidar proposed the moratorium during a Kremlin meeting that included President Boris Yeltsin. Yeltsin is under pressure to soften the impact of his economic reforms.

Yeltsin agreed during a Cabinet meeting Sautrday to get money to workers who have not been paid in months.

"Today people still support the reforms and the president, but if we go beyond a critical point we'll set off a general disaster," Yeltsin said, according to the Interfax news agency. He ordered a committee to study ways of lifting controls while protecting consumers from resulting price rises.

Delors told reporters that the European Community needs to study the moratorium proposal. European banks and governments lent most of the money Russia owes. Delors chairs the EC's executive body, the European Commission.

Because of its enormous economic problems, Russia already has all but stopped making interest payments this year. The Bush administration and commercial banks have rejected calls for the debt to be either forgiven or reissued under more favorable terms, insisting that such an action would prevent Russia from getting new loans.

The amount of money the former Soviet republics owe to foreign banks and governments has been estimated at between $60 billion and $81 billion, with Russia responsible for most of it.

Earlier this month, an American expert on international banking told U.S. lawmakers that the cash-strapped former Soviet republics would spend $24 billion on interest and principal this year.

Karen Lissakers, director of international business and banking studies at Columbia University, noted during Senate hearings that foreign governments agreed to defer principal repayments late last year on part of the debt.

Nepal leader wants invitations to West

N.Y. Times News Service

KATMANDU, Nepal — First came the democracy movement, then the election. The voting was a year ago, and that was the easy part.

Like people all over the world who have joined the trend toward democracy, the people of Nepal, a Himalayan kingdom only recently transformed into a constitutional monarchy, are in the crucial process of building the institutions needed to cement the power of the ballot.

"We are just beginners," said Daman Nath Dungana, speaker of the lower house of the first freely elected Parliament in 30 years.

In an interview here, Dungana, who recently fended off an assault on his speaker's rostrum by angry leftists impatient with the pace and substance of debate, echoed a plea heard from many poor nations:

In precarious times for fledgling democracies, the established ones should think about new kinds of aid for political development to countries besides the former Soviet republics. Nepalese, for example, want invitations to visit the West.

"Many of our Parliament members, being long in opposition, have not been exposed to the West, and that is necessary because 82 of them are Communists," Dungana said. He referred to people who emerged from the political underground to take part in the elections for the 205-member house.

The most radical leftist factions remain more inclined to street action than to legislative deliberation.

The speaker continued: "I want to see many of them visit Western democracies and see how it is actually works.

"How great is freedom: Let them see and understand. Let them be in touch with the realities of the Western world. It may succeed in giving them a certain vested interest in parliamentary procedure.

"If a country like the United States, a great democratic country, can look at things from my viewpoint, for every symposium or conference for years to come, somebody from Nepal must be invited to attend and observe."

Dungana, a lawyer, was active for 30 years in the outlawed Nepali Congress Party, during a period King Birendra called "partyless democracy." In the spring of 1990, violent street protests forced the King to name an interim government drawn from the Nepali Congress Party and an alliance of leftist groups.

A year later, an election was narrowly won by the Congress Party, whose leader, G.P. Koirala, became prime minister.

Dungana quickly realized the magnitude of his task. "There was a change of political system, but there was no change of other systems," he said of the staff he inherited from a former assembly beholden to the royal palace.

"They couldn't understand what I was doing. To their surprise, I am not even consulting with my party always, or the government or the palace."

Dungana runs Parliament on a shoestring. Members receive salaries of less than $100 a month.

Cinderella bares all

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — Cinderella video tapes have been removed from toy stores nationwide after one of the fairy tale cartoons was found to contain pornographic scenes, a newspaper reported Saturday.

The tabloid Ekstra Bladet said a grandmother was surprised to discover close-ups from a porn film at the end of a Cinderella video cartoon she had bought for her grandchild.

"We immediately withdrew all Cinderella cartoons from our shop," said Henrik Gjorup, executive manager of BR, the country's largest toy store chain.

Gjorup said he could not explain why the video had the offensive scenes. A Copenhagen regional radio station said other Cinderella videos containing sex scenes had been discovered previously.

Don't be the last to find out what's happening.

Haiti is on right path to consensus, military leader declares

N.Y. Times News Service

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Surrounded by seven of the highest-ranking officers of his staff, Brig. Gen. Raoul Cedras, commander of the Haitian army that overthrew the government in September, declares himself satisfied.

"We are on the right path," he said in an interview Thursday, smiling faintly. "We are on the verge of applying an agreement between all the parties here. As soon as this accord is formalized, we will have a consensus government that will be acceptable for everyone concerned, including the international community."

Despite the general's air of self-confidence as he spoke outside his freshly remodeled headquarters, a white, columned building built during the American occupation early this century, foreign diplomats and Haitian analysts say that his military may be splintering, and his grip on the country has never been weaker.

A mile away, at this city's grimy port, Coast Guard cutters are returning Haitians who for weeks have been fleeing by the thousands. Within view, across a broad avenue, is Haiti's gleaming white National Palace, where the provisional government Cedras saw installed after his coup shows every sign of resisting public calls and army nudges that it step down.

The accord and consensus government the general speaks of have elicited no interest from exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, or from many of the supporters who gave him a landslide victory in Haiti's first democratic elections, 17 months ago.

Most worrisome, diplomats say, is the rising disorder and division within the army. Nights here are frequently punctuated with bursts of automatic-weapons fire.

By daylight, bullet-riddled bodies are routinely found around town. But worst of all, soldiers have begun killing soldiers in what many fear is the beginning of the unraveling of Haiti's 7,000-member military.

Some elements have begun proselytizing for Aristide's return. Others have gone on the radio to demand that the high command quit politics.

While the outside world insists that Aristide must be part of the solution and must have the power to choose a prime minister, other army factions threaten to overthrow or kill the leadership if concessions are contemplated on either score, Haitian political experts said.

All has been complicated by the slow but steadily rising resistance of Aristide's supporters. In the aftermath of the violent army coup, there was virtually no resistance on behalf of Aristide, who had been a stirringly popular leader.

But in recent weeks, the army has been rattled by strikes and rising student demonstrations, the buzzing overflight of the capital and other cities by a small unmarked airplane dropping leaflets bearing Aristide's likeness, and private shortwave radio broadcasts from the United States that have encouraged resistance.

Despite statements to the contrary, all of that has made Cedras a visibly bitter and somewhat insecure man.

Sitting ramrod straight in his office, lighting cigarettes frequently, or doodling with a red felt pen while he reflects on questions, he condemns the outside world for destroying his country, repeatedly catalogues what he says were Aristide's defects as president, and pleads for Haiti to be treated with the indulgence he says has been accorded Peru.

"People are just speculating," Cedras said, explaining that the recent radio message condemning the high command was the work of imposters who had never been in the military. "There are no divisions in the army."

Told that a reporter had information that the soldiers on the air had deliberately used a pseudonym and carried a valid-looking military identification card, several of Cedras' men quickly blurted out, "Help us find them, then," before their commander could recoup.

"We too have that information," Cedras, 42, said with a semblance of calm. "The people identified in those cards left the army in 1986."

India fires missile

NEW DELHI (NYT) — India on Friday successfully tested an Indian-built medium-range missile capable of hitting targets at a distance of more than 1,500 miles.

The firing of the two-stage missile was a clear indication that India would continue to pursue its missile development program despite pressure from the United States and other Western countries to halt it, officials at the Ministry of External Affairs said. India is working on five varieties of missile, including short-range weapons.

The test was the second for this particular model, which is called Agni, the Sanskrit word for fire. Officials said the 60-foot rocket, which weighs 14 tons, lifted off on schedule, went into space and reentered the earth's atmosphere to a splashdown in the Bay of Bengal.

The Agni is described by military officials as an intermediate-range ballistic missile that uses a solid-propulsion booster rocket in the first stage and a liquid-propulsion rocket motor in the second stage with a high-altitude engine.

Chinese look to future, away from democracy movement

■ Analysis

BEIJING — "The memories scare me even now," a woman said, recalling the fear that gripped her after the violent suppression of the Tiananmen Square democracy movement three years ago.

"I remember waiting in my house, wondering if they were going to knock on my door," said the woman, who like many others asked to remain anonymous for fear of reprisals.

Her husband was among thousands of people jailed in the Communist leadership's crackdown on dissent after the military crushed pro-democracy demonstrations in the square on June 3-4, 1989. Hundreds, possibly thousands, were killed in the assault.

As the third anniversary approaches, many Chinese say they want to forget the turmoil of 1989. They prefer to focus on the future, now that senior leader Deng Xiaoping has urged the country to press ahead with economic reforms that stalled after the violence.

"Now everyone just thinks of making money and their own future," said a 27-year-old businessman who identified himself only as Mr. Sun.

The leadership's inability to decide what to do with ousted Communist Party chief Zhao Ziyang ensures that the crackdown will remain a political issue. Zhao was accused of sympathizing with the student-led protesters and splitting the Communist Party.

Security in Beijing was heightened several weeks ago. Roadblocks were set up in several areas, more police are on major streets and there are more guards at universities.

Under pressure from authorities concerned about large gatherings, two hotels canceled planned rock concerts.

Some Chinese told foreign friends to stay away until after June 4 because conditions were too sensitive for meetings, and security agents have increased surveillance of foreign journalists.

A taxi driver exasperated by security on the Avenue of Eternal Peace, which runs along Tiananmen Square through the heart of Beijing, said: "It's unnecessary for them to deal with it like that. It just makes us remember."

"They were only students," said the 37-year-old driver, who gave only his family name, Zhang. "I think the leaders use these strong-arm tactics because they're scared. What have they got to fear? No one's going to go demonstrating again."

Others were less willing to reflect on the anniversary.

"I don't like to talk about it," a factory worker said. "What's the point? It only makes me angry."

A man who took part in the 1989 demonstrations said: "I'm numb to it now. All I care about is my own future and making some money."

Internationally, China is trying to gain goodwill and improve its image.

During the past year, authorities granted early release to several people jailed for crimes linked to the failed democracy movement. Such releases fall short of Western demands for an amnesty, but help China deflect some criticism about human rights.

Foreign investment, which declined because of concerns about political stability after 1989, has picked up dramatically in the past six months, said John Frisbie, director of the U.S.-China Business Council office in Beijing.

Saddam increases attacks on Shiites

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Saddam Hussein has stepped up his offensive against Shiite Muslim rebels holed up in Iraq's southern marshes and named his defense minister to take command of the operation, Iranian-backed rebels and travelers from Iraq say.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Cyprus, quoted "reliable sources" as saying 500 Iraqi soldiers were killed in four days of fighting that ended Friday.

It gave no figure for rebel casualties. But reports last week by Iran's official media and travelers from Iraq said scores of Shiite refugees hiding in the marshes were being killed every day in round-the-clock artillery bombardments and helicopter gunship attacks.

There was no way to independently confirm any of the reports.

An estimated 10,000 rebels and 200,000 refugees sought sanctuary in the marshes last year, fleeing Saddam's army after it crushed a month-long Shiite rebellion in southern Iraq.

Saddam launched his offensive in mid-April in what appeared to be a major effort to eliminate the ragtag army of rebels in the marshes, which cover about 6,000 square miles and straddle the Iraq-Iran border.

AP reporter Anwar Faruqi, who spent three days with the rebels in early May, said Saddam's forces were thrusting into the marshes daily and building roads to move in artillery and armor.

Ex-German leader dies

BONN, Germany (AP) — Karl Carstens, a former president of West Germany who came under criticism for his Nazi past, died Saturday at age 77.

The cause of death was not given, though he suffered a stroke two weeks ago. Carstens died at his home in Meckenheim near Bonn, the government press office said.

Despite his membership in the Nazi party during World War II, Carstens helped build good post-war relations with the United States and played a significant role in unifying Europe.

"He was a patriot who unwaveringly strived for German unity. And he was just as convinced of the importance of Europe's political union," said Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

"Karl Carstens was one of the best German statesmen of the postwar era," said Carstens' successor, current President Richard von Weizsaecker.

Carstens served as an officer in the German army in 1939-45, and was harshly criticized later by some for his Nazi affiliation. Carstens said his membership was a formality and that he was not an active member of the party.

Others defended Carstens, pointing out that many Germans who served during World War II had become good democrats. Carstens was never accused of any war crimes.

Carstens was born in Bremen on Dec. 14, 1914, and received a law degree from Yale University.

Ho Chi Minh City returns to its Saigon days of glory

By Henry Kamm
N.Y. Times News Service

HO CHI MINH CITY, Vietnam — A big red sign on a bustling central square exhorts citizens to work to make the former Saigon worthy of the name it was given when the Communists conquered it in 1975.

Underneath, as if in mockery of Ho Chi Minh, the founder of Vietnamese communism, an even bigger sign plugs a Japanese brand of cameras.

All around the square, and throughout the center of this city of 4.5 million people, signs trumpet the names of consumer products of the non-Communist East and West.

In Vietnam's attempt to extract itself from the economic lurch in which the Soviet Union's collapse left it, Ho Chi Minh City represents the contradictions of a nation led by dogmatic Communists trying to have their cake and eat it.

The leaders want to maintain absolute power through constant repetition of slogans few believe in, yet reap the benefits inherent in the economic energies of its people and the opening of this potentially rich country to development through free enterprise.

What would Ho Chi Minh say if he could see Vietnam's surrender to capitalism since the decline of the Soviet Union deprived it of its main source of aid?

"Ho Chi Minh was a very realistic personality," Maj. Gen. Tran Cong Man, an old revolutionary and former editor of the armed forces daily, said when asked this question in an interview in Hanoi. "He was never ideologically intransigent."

No place illustrates better than this city the pragmatism, at least in economics, that this response conveyed. Deprived of its customary vibrancy for years, Ho Chi Minh City now looks, at least on the surface, as Saigon did. Officials acknowledge this with joyless smiles but without contradiction.

"We used to be called the 'Pearl of the Orient,'" said Nguyen Xuan Oanh, managing director of the organization that guides foreign investors. "We have lost the luster and are now trying to regain it, to catch up with the rest of the world."

At least part of the population is indeed catching up. The products that are advertised — television sets, videos, stereos, watches, motorcycles, Western beer and cigarettes — are plentiful in shops.

The central market is rich in gold jewelry and textiles. Officials profess to be puzzled over where the money comes from, because wages are pitifully low.

Laborers earn between $10 and $20 a month if they work steadily, but many work only when they find a day's job and eke out less. What officials cannot admit, for the sake of appearance, is that a "gray" economy, totally out of official circuits, is the engine that drives Ho Chi Minh City.

Three main sources of capital are the fuel: gold hidden since 1975, largely in Cholon, Ho Chi Minh City's bustling Chinatown; overseas Chinese from Hong Kong and Southeast Asia who invest through family connections, and overseas Vietnamese, refugees since 1975, who send substantial remittances to their families.

Moreover, much of the foreign investment so far — optimistically estimated by the Chamber of Commerce in Hanoi at $1.5 billion — has flowed to this city if it has not gone into the petroleum industry. It finances light manufacturing and an expanding tourist industry. Taiwan and Hong Kong are its main sources.

Vatican blasts population control

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The Vatican Saturday denounced population control proposals as substitutes "for justice and development in the developing countries."

Population growth, of and by itself, is seldom the primary cause of environmental problems, the Vatican said in a position paper for the U.N. Earth Summit, to begin Wednesday in Rio de Janeiro.

"The less-populated nations of the North are directly or indirectly responsible for most of the abuse of the global environment," the paper said.

"Programs for reducing population directed and financed by the developed nations of the North easily become a substitute for justice and development in the developing countries of the South.

In international relations, the paper said, "economic aid for the advancement of peoples should not be conditioned on acceptance of programs of contraception, sterilization or abortion."

The Vatican has been accused of lobbying to have family planning knocked off the summit agenda.

The only method of family planning sanctioned by the Roman Catholic church is abstinence during a woman's fertile periods.

Commenting on biotechnological experiments, the paper also declared that any genetic intervention "not aimed at correcting anomalies" violates people's "bodily integrity."

Afghanistan militias start new battles

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Renegade rebels and a militia loyal to the interim government battled with rockets and cannon Saturday, one day after an attempt on President Sighatullah Mojaddidi's life, officials said.

The radical Hezb-e-Islmai faction of rebel chief Gulbuddin Hekmatyar and a militia headed by Gen. Abdul Rashid Dostum traded fire in a suburb southeast of Kabul, shattering a six-day truce. There were no immediate reports of casualties.

"We were fighting to keep Hekmatyar's forces from entering Kabul," said Brig. Gen. Mohammad Nawab, the militia commander who oversees the capital's security.

On Friday, Mojaddidi's family accused Hekmatyar's forces of firing on the president's aircraft as it landed at the airport in eastern Kabul.

Other members of the caretaker government don't dispute the claim, but they say they doubt Hekmatyar ordered the attack.

The rebel chieftain has refused to participate in Mojaddidi's government. The president is an unabashed supporter of Dostum, the leader of the fierce Uzbek militia that helped topple Communist President Najibullah's government last month and then prevented Hekmatyar's forces from seizing power.

Hekmatyar decries the alliance with Dostum, which once supported the Communist government.

Troops loyal to Hekmatyar and Dostum have clashed frequently in the past month.

Airport officials said a rocket crashed into the runway as the president's aircraft landed, sending shrapnel flying through the cockpit window and injuring the co-pilot. Investigators also reported a burst of anti-aircraft artillery fire that apparently sheared off the plane's nose.

Cholera kills 35 in Zambia town

LUANSHYA, Zambia (AP) — A new outbreak of cholera has killed 35 people in three days in this mining town, a health official said Saturday.

Dr. Davison Kwendakwema said 270 people suffering from diarrhea and vomiting had tested positive for cholera in Luanshya, 250 miles north of Lusaka.

"I have never seen such a rapid outbreak of cholera," Kwendakwema said. "The first case was reported on Thursday and already 35 are dead."

He said a likely source was the drinking water in Mikonfwa township, one of the poorest areas of Luanshya.

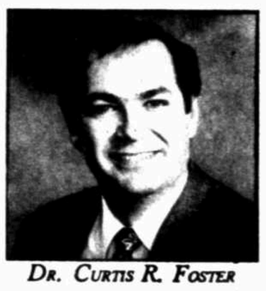

The water-borne disease has recurred in Zambia over the last two years, killing at least 800 people in 1991 and more than 200 the previous year.

Kwendakwema and his team of foreign and local doctors have set up three makeshift cholera centers to try to isolate the disease in the affected township.

He said they still lacked sufficient space for all the victims, and some were lying on the ground with intravenous drips hanging from tree branches.

Confrontation

Protesters attack a Ku Klux Klan supporter Friday night in Dubuque. The assault came after a rally and speaking appearance by Tom Tobb, national director of the KKK. The attackers escaped before police arrived.

Primary season ends Tuesday

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — President Bush and Bill Clinton are familiar favorites in Tuesday's wind-up of the presidential primary season when the Arkansas Democrat expects to clinch the nomination. But undeclared candidate Ross Perot is providing most of the drama.

Clues to the fall terrain are expected as well when primary voters in six states choose hundreds of delegates to the national party conventions.

Primaries are being held in California, Ohio and New Jersey, all rich in electoral votes next fall, as well as Alabama, Montana and New Mexico. Bush and Clinton are favored everywhere while Patrick Buchanan and Jerry Brown face the final hours of their unsuccessful challenges.

With the nominating contests long decided, most of the drama has been replaced by intrigue over Perot. The Texas billionaire isn't on any ballot, but the undeclared independent's broad appeal has thrown both the Clinton and Bush fall strategies into confusion.

"Today it seems all you here people talking about is Ross Perot, not Bill Clinton, not George Bush but Ross Perot," said Sam Barone, executive director of the Ohio Democratic Party.

After Tuesday, one presidential primary does remain, a Republicans-only contest in North Dakota.

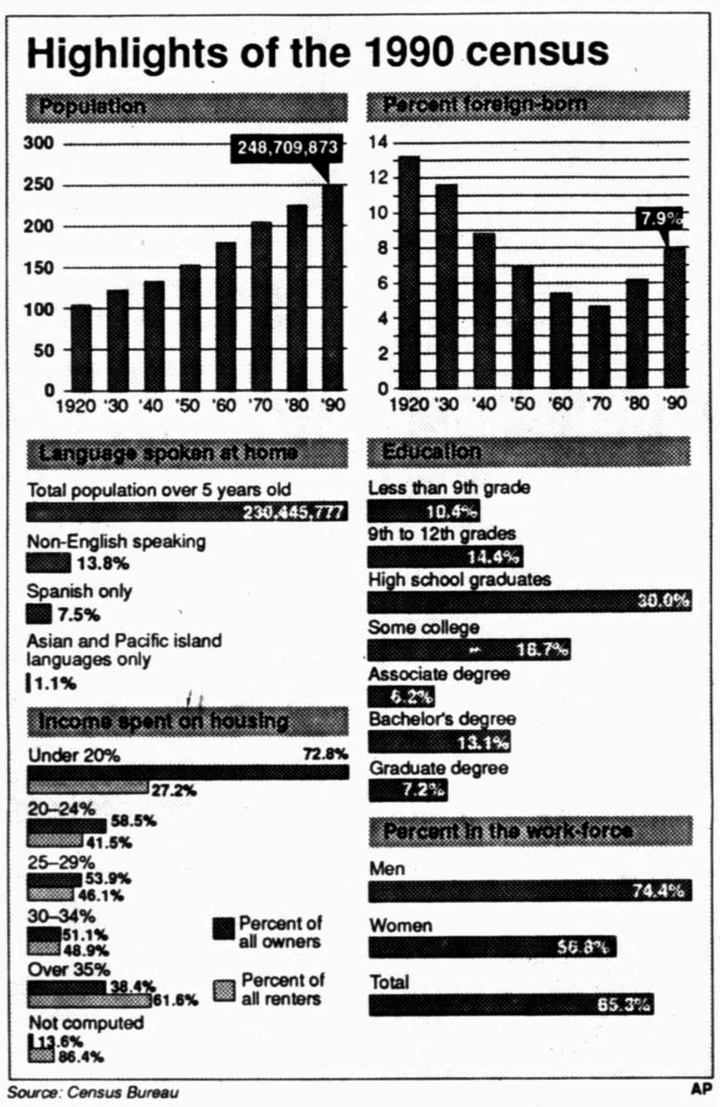

But the final clash between Clinton and his lone Democratic rival in Brown's home state of California is the last matchup on the calendar to offer even a little suspense. Brown is given an outside chance of stinging the Arkansas governor but not stopping his nomination.

Also in California, two Senate races are adding interest to a primary that has been overshadowed by the Los Angeles riots and spiced most by Perot's early strength.

Perot has led both Bush and Clinton in Ohio and California polls. Exit surveys of voters in those and the other states will be watched as closely as Tuesday's results for hints of how voters view the presidential contest five months before Election Day.

Despite his unbroken string of primary victories, there are abundant trouble signs for the president.

WASHINGTON (AP) — More people are living in poverty, the middle class is shrinking and there's a prosperity gap between the young and the old.

Those are the revealing findings from an outpouring of new information, given to the Census Bureau by 17.7 million people — one in six of American households — who filled out the long-form questionnaires in the 1990 census.

It surveys ancestry, education, housing, family income, disabilities and such details as how many do, and how many do not, have indoor plumbing.

Of the nation's more than 102 million housing units, 2.8 million had five or more bedrooms. But more than a million units lacked complete plumbing facilities and more than 1 million lacked complete kitchen facilities.

The survey shows a middle class being squeezed with 42 percent of households living on less than $25,000 a year in 1989. A decade earlier that number was 31 percent.

Earlier this year the Census Bureau reported that nearly two-thirds of Americans were living on middle incomes in 1989, compared to nearly three-fourths a decade earlier.

But while middle income declined, high incomes increased.

Those Americans with high incomes grew from 11 percent in 1979 to 15 percent 10 years later. In 1989, 1.4 million households had income of more than $150,000 a year.

In the '80s, poverty increased. And so did the cost of housing.

In 1989 the census found 31.7 million people living below the poverty level, compared to 27.4 million in 1979. In 1989, there were more than 20 million children under the age of 18 living in poverty. And 8.5 million households had incomes of less than $10,000 a year.

But the numbers of older people living in poverty is far less.

The census counted nearly 30 million persons over the age of 65 of whom just one in 10 was living below the poverty level.

Some analysts say older people are doing relatively well because of the indexing of Social Security payments to inflation. The census found 24.2 million households receiving Social Security income in 1989.

According to the census numbers, housing costs rose dramatically. A median mortgage rose 27 percent to $737 a month. Median rents increased 16 percent to $437.

The federal government rates affordable housing as that costing 30 percent or less of a household's income.

By that standard, households paying more than 30 percent of their income for housing rose to more than 40 percent.

The survey also showed a nation on the move.

Of the housing units surveyed, more than 45 million householders had moved during the previous five years while more than 19 million had moved in the previous 12 months.

But more than 33 million householders had stayed put since 1970.

The decade of the 1980's also made its mark in immigration.

Some 8.6 million people told the census they entered the country during the decade, a number not matched since the beginning of the century.

Across the country, the census found that 19.7 million people were born in other lands. That's just under 8 percent of the population.

And in another sign of a multicultural society, the Census Bureau found 32 million people who speak a language other than English at home. Assessing their own language ability, more than 40 percent of these said they do not speak English very well.

As in past decades, the largest ethnic group in the country was German, with nearly 60 million people declaring their ancestors came from the land of the Rhine.

News Leader: Nevermore

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — It was shortly after 11 a.m. Saturday when The Richmond News Leader's city editor, David L. Burton, strode into the newsroom holding a copy of the newspaper's last edition.

"Nevermore" read the banner headline.

There was a smattering of applause from the news staff — some of whom were not scheduled to work but felt a need to come in and bid the 95-year-old daily farewell.

With a chant of "Jerry, Jerry," the staff summoned Managing Editor Jerald A. Finch to offer a toast.

"Here's to the GONL," Finch said, using the term of affection adopted by employees of the "good ol' News Leader."

And with that, Richmond became a one-newspaper town. A newspaper that had produced television newsman Roger Mudd, syndicated columnist James J. Kilpatrick and Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist Jeff MacNelly was history.

Most of the News Leader's reporters and editors will work for the Times-Dispatch.

Richards just keeps on talking

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Silencing Texas Gov. Ann Richards isn't easy. Just ask Jay Rockefeller.

The towering West Virginia senator tried to cut short a Richards speech Friday night at a fund-raiser hosted by Walter Shorenstein, a legendary figure in California Democratic politics.

Rockefeller stepped onto the stage and put a finger to his lips — the universal hush sign. Richards turned, put her finger to her lips, and then turned back to finish her speech.

The crowd was clearly on Richards' side, chanting, "We want Ann." One man shouted, "Sit down Jay."

He didn't, choosing instead to stand on the side of the stage, swaying back and forth as Richards, looking more than a little peeved, finished her speech, rushing nary a word.

FBI rescues software executive

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — The president of a computer software company was rescued unharmed Saturday, four days after kidnappers who had demanded a $650,000 ransom seized him as he arrived at work, an FBI official said.

Charles Geschke, who heads Adobe Systems Inc. in Mountain View, was rescued Saturday afternoon from a residence in Hollister, said FBI spokeswoman Barbara Madden. He had been held there since his abduction from his company's headquarters on Tuesday, Madden said.

Mouhannad Albukhari, 26, of San Jose, and Jack Sayeh, 25, of Campbell, were taken into custody, Madden said. There was no immediate word on whether they had been booked on formal charges.

Geschke's wife contacted the FBI shortly after her husband's abduction to say a caller had demanded $650,000 for her husband's release. The FBI did not release any information about the case until Geschke was freed.

Madden said Sayeh was arrested trying to flee after an FBI SWAT team surrounded the Hollister house, about 60 miles south of San Jose. Albukhari was arrested in Marina a short time later, Madden said.

No other details of the case were immediately released.

Adobe, which invented software that prints graphics, text and images, is best known for its PostScript printer and computer language, which Apple Computer Inc. helped popularize with its original Macintosh computer.

Detective nails police imposter

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — State police Detective Cpl. Brendan P. Doherty has arrested a few criminals in his day, but none so strange, he said, as the man accused of impersonating him for five years.

Stranger still, Doherty helped search the home of Albert LaBonte, and there DOHERTY was, staring down from a picture that LaBonte had laminated and hung on his wall.

"I thought that it was just bizzare that he had my photograph," Doherty said Saturday.

LaBonte, 24, a former trash hauler, was arraigned Friday on a charge of impersonating a state detective, said state Police Lt. John S. Scuncio. He faces up to a three years in prison if convicted, said Assistant Attorney General Gerald Coyne.

LaBonte, who had an earlier breaking and entering conviction, also was charged with violating the terms of a seven-year suspended sentence, Doherty said. He didn't know what the suspended sentence was for.

District Court Judge Gilbert V. Indeglia set bond at $25,000 on the charge of impersonating an officer and ordered LaBonte held without bail on the violation charge.

Unions postpone phone strike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negotiators for two unions and the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. failed to reach agreement on a new contract before the old one expired at 11:59 p.m. Saturday, but the unions agreed to continue talks rather than strike at midnight.

"There's still quite a long way to go," Morton Barr, president of the Communications Workers of America, said shortly before midnight. "We have made real progress in intense negotiations ... and they will continue at it as long as progress is being made."

Barr declined to specify where progress was made and where more needs to be done from the union standpoint. But assessing the gap remaining between the two sides and the time it might take to bridge it, Barr said, "We're talking about hours, not many days."

William Ketchum, vice president of labor relations for AT&T, said that workers scheduled to report in the "near-term ... should report to work unless they get other advice" from the unions.

AT&T and union leaders suggested a likely scenario would be for talks to continue for a few hours past midnight and then recess until later in the day if no quick settlement was reached in the post-midnight hours.

Asked whether talks were likely to continue through the night, Barr said, "None of us want to make mistakes because we're tired."

The agreement to keep talking averted, at least temporarily, a strike by 125,000 workers seeking better pay and job protection.

While leaders of the two union had strike authorizations in their pockets, they were under no obligation to invoke them and the relaxed demeanor of officials on both sides had suggested all during the day that both were more interested in settlement.

Earlier in the evening, union officials had reported some progress in wage and pension discussions, but stressed that both issues remained the main sticking points.

"We're still pretty far apart on the key issues," said Gaye Mack, a spokeswoman for the Communications Workers of America.

"There are still some issues to be discussed and they are hard at that," said AT&T spokesman Herb Linnen. "Negotiations are proceeding and we are hopeful a settlement can be reached before contract expiration time."

He said the negotiators took a brief break for food and were back at the bargaining table by 9 p.m.

While negotiations were underway in Washington, an estimated 200 CWA members marched to AT&T Chairman Robert Allen's home in Millburn, N.J., Saturday afternoon chanting "No contracts, no peace." They stayed about 10 minutes and left. The demonstrators said they doubted Allen was home.

The contracts due to expire at midnight cover AT&T employees who belong to the CWA and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Great white shark dies in captivity

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A great white shark that was snagged in a fisherman's net died of shock a few hours after being transferred to a 100,000-gallon tank at the Steinhart Aquarium.

No zoo or aquarium has been able to keep a great white shark in captivity for an extended period of time.

"They're animals that are accustomed to the open ocean, that don't adapt well to having walls around them," said David Shaw, a spokesman for the California Academy of Sciences.

The shark that was snared in the fisherman's net Thursday died Friday. It was about a year old, weighed 200 pounds and was nearly 6 feet in length. It was caught off Pacifica, 15 miles south of San Francisco.

In 1980, the aquarium held a great white for four days but set it free when it became apparent it was not doing well in the tank, Shaw said.

Chicago shoulders repeat burden

■ A tougher playoff road has not deterred Chicago from its goal of another NBA title.

Associated Press

CHICAGO — After breezing through last year's playoffs, the Chicago Bulls have run into a whirlwind of postseason problems and controversies this season.

The Bulls have survived every test, however, and now have just one remaining, against the Portland Trail Blazers in the NBA Finals. A victory in the best-of-7 series would make the Chicago the third team in six years to repeat as champions.

"This is the goal we've all been waiting for, to repeat," Michael Jordan said after the Bulls won the Eastern Conference title with a 99-94 victory over Cleveland Friday night.

Chicago is 11-5 in three postseason series against Miami, New York and the Cavaliers. The Bulls went 15-2 last year in winning their first NBA title.

"The toughest part of repeating is the mental approach," Jordan said. "We found that out against Miami even though we swept them, and we certainly learned that against New York and Cleveland. Mentally, you have to have the same hunger and mental attitude you had when you win it the first time, and that hasn't always been there."

Jordan thought the Bulls proved last season that they are more than a one-man team, but the criticism has surfaced once again.

Incredibly, Jordan is the only one of 12 Bulls who has raised his scoring average in the postseason. His 34.0 average in 16 playoff games is 3.9 higher than his regular-season norm, while his teammates' collective average is 14.8 points lower.

The trend was reversed Friday night as Scottie Pippen scored 29 points, Horace Grant 20 and Bill Cartwright 10 — all improving their playoff averages.

Jordan, meanwhile, scored 13 points on 5-for-20 shooting through three periods before hitting 5 of 7 shots and scoring 16 points to lead a Chicago comeback in the fourth quarter after Cleveland opened a 79-72 lead early in the period.

"Scottie and Horace should have the city back in their corner after this game," Jordan said. "Scottie had the media attacking him the whole series and the Cavaliers attacking him on defense the whole series."

Pippen started and finished the series with 29-point performances, but in between he averaged 15.3.

He was 4 for 14 from the field in the Bulls' second-game loss to the Cavs and scored 13 points in Game 4 while taking

I can't hear you

NEW YORK (AP) — Mets outfielder Bobby Bonilla, who has been booed at Shea Stadium the last two games, wore earplugs during New York's 6-1 loss to Atlanta on Saturday.

"I guess he thought it would help his concentration," Mets manager Jeff Torborg said.

Bonilla went 0 for 4 and is now hitting only .137 at home this season (10 for 73) with no home runs. He is 33 for 95 (.347) on the road with five home runs.

"I know the makeup of the New York fan, I know the mentality," Bonilla told The New York Times. "People want to see you do well. It's nothing more than I ask of and want from myself."

Bonilla signed a five-year deal for $29.5 million with the Mets during the off-season. He is making $6.1 million this year.

He says the booing won't affect his play.

"What do people think I'll come to the park and sulk?" Bonilla said.

Astro draft

NEW YORK (AP) — The Houston Astros may not take the top player available when they pick first Monday in baseball's amateur draft. He may cost too much.

"High price has a bearing on the thing," Houston general manager Bill Wood said Friday. "We want to have some degree of certainty that we'll be able to get an agreement."

Some draft experts say the top player is Stanford outfielder Jeffrey Hammonds, who hit .377 this season with six homers, 33 RBIs and 30 steals. However, the Astros are thought to be focusing on third baseman Phil Nevin of Fullerton State.

Men's seeds squashed

■ Michael Stich, Stefan Edberg and Michael Chang are all eliminated in the third round of the French Open Saturday.

Associated Press

PARIS — First Michael Stich, then Stefan Edberg, and finally Michael Chang. In one stunning day, three of the top five men's seeds were knocked out of the French Open.

After five days of relative calm, upsets jolted the tournament at its halfway point Saturday and left the bottom half of the men's draw with no big names.

The first to go was Stich, the reigning Wimbledon champion and No. 4 seed. He was outclassed in straight sets by flamboyant Frenchman Henri Leconte 7-6 (7-3), 6-4, 6-4.

Edberg, seeded No. 2, was ousted by Andrei Cherkasov of Russia, 6-4, 6-3, 7-6 (7-4).

Chang, No. 5, saved eight match points in the fifth set before bowing to Nicklas Kulti of Sweden 7-6 (7-5), 2-6, 6-3, 3-6, 8-6.

Two other men's seeds were eliminated — No. 12 Richard Krajicek of the Netherlands and No. 13 Aaron Krickstein of the United States, who was forced to retire with a foot blister while losing 6-2, 1-0 to Uruguay's Marcelo Filippini.

No. 7 Petr Korda of Czechoslovakia remained the only seeded player in the bottom half of the draw. The top half is still loaded with big names, including Americans Jim Courier, Pete Sampras and Andre Agassi — all of whom will be in action on Sunday.

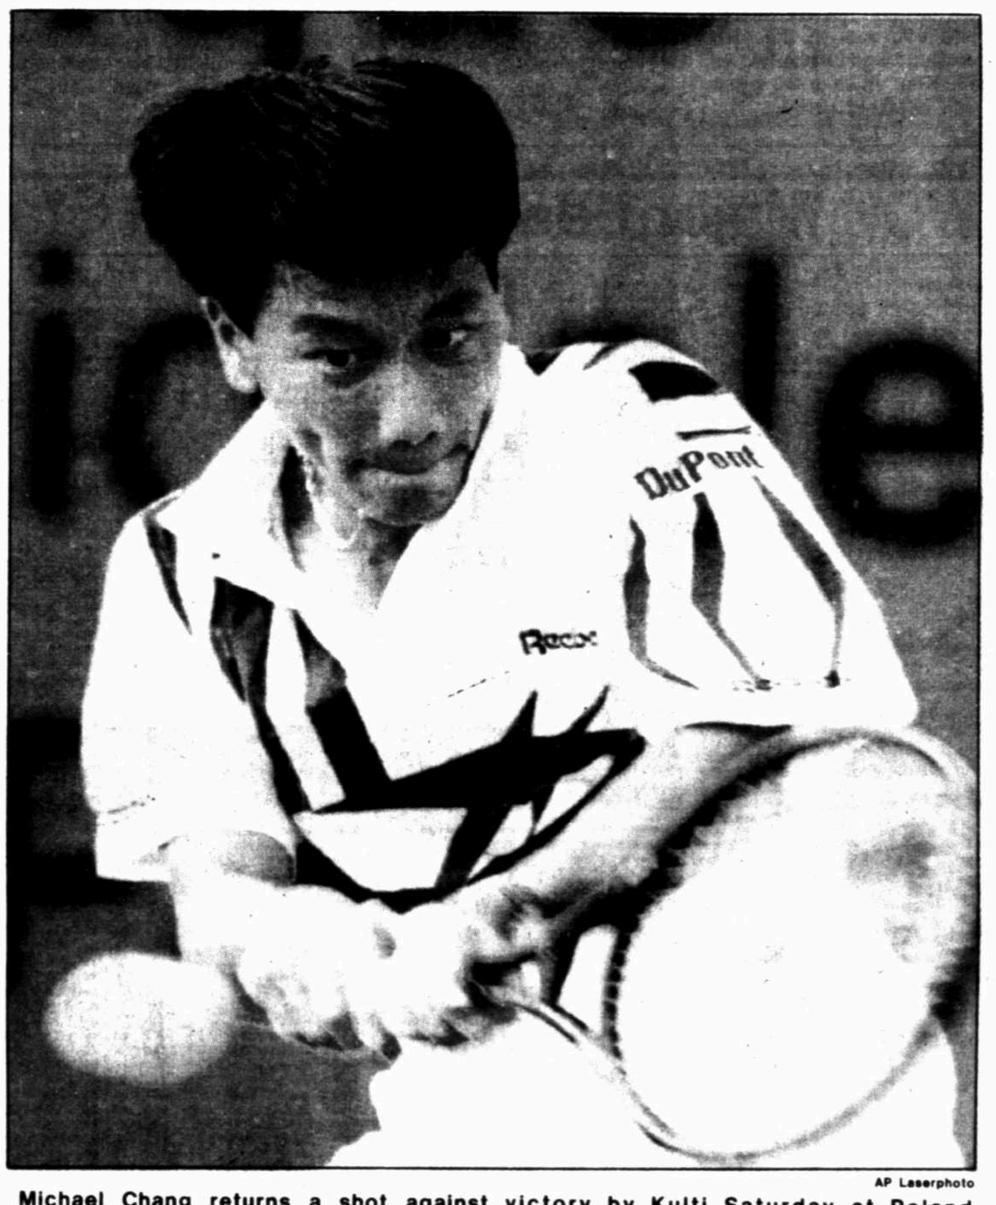

While the top men faltered, the women continued to avoid any major upsets. No. 1 Monica Seles, No. 3 Gabriela Sabatini and No. 5 Jennifer Capriati all advanced to the round of 16.

Seles needed just 45 minutes to beat Lori McNeil of the United States 6-0, 6-1; Sabatini downed France's Julie Halard, 6-1, 6-3; and Capriati rallied to beat Czechoslovak Karina Habsudova, 4-6, 6-4, 6-3.

The day's most dramatic match was that between Chang, the 1989 French Open champion, and Kulti, the 21-year-old Swede who beat John McEnroe in the first round earlier this week.

OMAHA, Neb. — Texas made it look almost too easy.

"We really didn't expect to score like that," Texas coach Cliff Gustafson said after the fourth-ranked Longhorns, led by Tim Harkrider, Braxton Hickman and Brooks Kieschnick, pounded Oklahoma 15-3 Saturday night in the first round of the College World Series.

Harkrider's two-run, bases-loaded single sparked Texas to a nine-run sixth inning that helped the Longhorns coast to their biggest winning margin in 105 CWS games spanning a record 38 appearances in the NCAA baseball tournament. The previous biggest margin for Texas was 11 in a 17-6 win over South Carolina in 1975.

Angels' longest win streak of season ended at 3 games

■ Midland's Texas League success is short-lived, as the Jackson Generals defeat the Angels 5-3 Saturday night.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant sports editor

Midland baseball fans were treated to a surprise reunion of Tony, Orlando & Donne Saturday night.

Only one problem. These guys were not the group that epitomized bad Las Vegas music in the '70s, but they did have plenty of noteworthy hits themselves — and they did have the Angels singing the blues.

Jackson's Tony Eusebio and Orlando Miller combined for five hits and three RBIs, and starting pitcher Donne Wall scattered seven hits over 6⅔ innings as the Generals stopped the Angels' three-game winning streak, 5-3.

The bats of Eusebio and Miller sang the loudest, but Dave Hajek and Jeff Baldwin did some back-up work, too. Hajek and Baldwin had two hits and scored two runs apiece, and when the game reached its final stanza, the top four hitters in the Jackson lineup had accounted for 90 percent of the Gens' offense.

Hajek, Miller, Baldwin and Eusebio, the Nos. 1-4 hitters, recorded nine of Jackson's 10 hits, scored four of the team's five runs and delivered all four RBIs.

To a guy like Midland starter Mark Zappelli (1-1), all this offense is mystifying.

"These guys have my number," Zappelli said. "They must be telepathic. They know what I'm going to throw. Everything I throw up there they hit.

"I felt great tonight, they just hit me well. The two times I've pitched (against Jackson) I thought I had good stuff, they just hit me. But that's just baseball. That happens."

When Zappelli faced the Generals in Mississippi on May 19, the reliever-turned-starter surrendered five runs (four earned) on seven hits in four innings.

"I'm just glad I don't have to see them again this year," Zappelli said.

Although he had his down moments, Zappelli did pitch out of a handful of jams in his 4⅔ innings, including when runners were poised on first and third with just one out in the third, after Jackson had already plated its third and fourth runs of the night in the inning.

One bright spot for Midland was the relief work of Steve Peck. In his 3⅓ innings worked, Peck faced 11 batters and struck out seven, including five straight in the seventh and eighth innings. Zappelli, Peck, and closer Ken Edenfield finished the night with 11 strikeouts.

The Angels staged a threat in the ninth when, down 5-2, a Dan Rumsey single knocked in Jeff Kipila. Midland had runners at first and second with two outs before Jim Edmonds grounded to third, ending the rally and any hopes the Angels held of extending their winning streak to four games.

Midland scored a single run in the fourth, and another in the fifth when catcher Fausto Tejero scored on two consecutive wild pitches by Wall.

"We came in swinging the bat well, and they cooled us off quick," Jackson manager Rick Sweet said of his team's first three losses. "The top of the order for us did a good job tonight and had

Royals halt Texas win streak

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Mike Macfarlane, one day after snapping an 0-for-17 slump, doubled to key a four-run fourth inning Saturday night that propelled Kansas City past Texas 8-2 and snapped the Rangers' seven-game winning streak.

Kevin Appier (4-3) went seven innings in handing the Rangers just their second loss in a 13-game surge that saw them take over first place in the AL West.

Appier, who entered the game with the fourth-best ERA in the league at 1.94, gave up two runs and left with an ERA of 1.99 as the Royals won only their second game in seven outings. He struck out four and walked three. Tom Gordon pitched the final two innings.

Blue Jays 2, White Sox 1

TORONTO — Jeff Kent doubled home the winning run with two outs in the 11th inning and Toronto beat Chicago, the fifth straight loss for the White Sox.

Kelly Gruber got an infield hit with two outs in the 11th against Donn Pall (2-2) and stole second. Kent lined a 2-2 pitch into the left-field corner.

American

David Wells (2-2) allowed three hits in scoreless three innings for the victory.

Orioles 7, Athletics 6

OAKLAND, Calif. — Brady Anderson, Sam Horn and Chito Martinez hit home runs as Baltimore defeated Oakland.

Baltimore beat Oakland for the first time in five games this season by tagging A's starter Joe Slusarski (4-3) for six runs and seven hits in five-plus innings.

Yankees 8, Brewers 1

MILWAUKEE — Scott Sanderson became the ninth pitcher to beat all 26 major league teams as the New York Yankees frustrated Chris Bosio and the Milwaukee Brewers.

Sanderson (4-2) joined Nolan Ryan, Tommy John, Don Sutton, Mike Torrez, Rick Wise, Gaylord Perry, Doyle Alexander and Rich Gossage as those who have defeated every club. Sanderson had lost his only previous decision against the Brewers, and had a no-decision against them earlier this month.

Twins 7, Tigers 5

MINNEAPOLIS — Shortstop Travis Fryman couldn't handle pinch-hitter Lenny Webster's bases-loaded grounder, Detroit's third eighth-inning miscue, capping a five-run rally that gave Minnesota a victory over the Tigers.

Mariners 3, Red Sox 0

SEATTLE — Rookie Dave Fleming pitched a five-hitter for his first major league shutout as Seattle beat Boston.

Fleming (7-1) has won seven straight decisions and leads all major league rookies in wins. He tied Jack McDowell for the longest winning streak in the majors this season.

Angels 3, Indians 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Bert Blyleven pitched three-hit ball over seven innings for his 280th career win and first victory since 1990 as California beat Cleveland.

Blyleven (1-0) retired 15 of the last 17 batters he faced to help snap the Angels' five-game losing streak and end the Indians' winning streak at four. Bryan Harvey pitched two innings for his 13th save in 15 opportunities.

Deion steals show in Brave win

Associated Press

National

NEW YORK — Deion Sanders singled four times, stole three bases and scored three runs and Terry Pendleton hit a three-run homer as the Atlanta Braves beat New York 6-1 Saturday, the Mets' fourth straight loss.

Steve Avery (3-5) gave up six hits in eight-plus innings in Atlanta's third consecutive victory. The Mets again struggled, having scored only two runs during their losing streak.

Sanders capped the Braves' romp by dashing home from second base on Ron Gant's infield hit in the eighth inning. Mark Lemke also had four of Atlanta's 14 hits.

David Cone (5-3), who had pitched shutouts in his last two starts, had his scoreless streak stopped at 20 innings when David Justice hit an RBI single in the third. Pendleton's ninth homer, and second in two days, broke a 1-all tie in the fourth. Cone lasted only four innings, giving up seven hits and walking four.

Astros 5, Phillies 4

HOUSTON — Craig Biggio singled home the go-ahead run in the sixth inning, rallying Houston to a victory over Philadelphia that stopped Terry Mulholland's five-game winning streak.

Mulholland (5-4) had won all five of his starts in May and had pitched into the ninth inning in each game. He allowed 10 hits and struck out five before Mike Hartley relieved to start the seventh.

Jimmy Jones (2-0) allowed three runs in the first inning before settling down for the victory. He struck out three and walked three in six innings.

Doug Jones pitched the ninth for his 12th save in 14 chances.

Dodgers 3, Cubs 2

CHICAGO — Dave Hansen had a career-high three hits, including a home run and a run-scoring double, and Eric Karros also homered as the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the Chicago Cubs.

Orel Hershiser (4-3) was the winner and reliever Ken Patterson (0-1) was the loser. Hershiser was pushed up a day and started in place of Kevin Gross who had the flu.

Hershiser left the game in the sixth after jamming his right foot attempting to bunt in the top half of the inning. He allowed six hits and two runs, one of them earned. Roger McDowell pitched the ninth to pick up his seventh save.

Reds 9, Expos 4

CINCINNATI — Bill Doran's bases-loaded single capped a three-run first inning and led to a bench-clearing brawl as Cincinnati beat Montreal.

Hal Morris was thrown out at home while trying to score from second base on Doran's single and wound up fighting catcher Gary Carter after their collision, emptying the dugouts. Order was restored after a couple minutes and both players were ejected.

Cardinals 5, Padres 1

ST. LOUIS — Bob Tewksbury pitched a four-hitter and lowered his National League-leading ERA to 1.78 as St. Louis broke a season-high three-game losing streak.

Tewksbury (6-1) walked none and struck out two. In 76 innings this season, he has walked only six. San Diego spoiled Tewksbury's shutout bid in the eighth on Oscar Azocar's RBI grounder.

Pirates 3, Giants 2

PITTSBURGH — Don Slaught's foul sacrifice fly scored Jeff King in the 10th inning to give Pittsburgh a victory over San Francisco.

It was the Pirates' second straight victory.

Little League sometimes takes on jungle atmosphere

EDITOR'S NOTE — Associated Press writer Dan Sewell coaches his two sons in the Plantation Athletic League.

By Dan Sewell
AP Sportswriter

PLANTATION, Fla. — By day, John Spencer evaluates or treats hardened criminals and other sociopaths. Evenings, he is a coach, umpire and league director for preteen baseball players.

Sometimes, the contrasts aren't as sharp as would be expected.

"It can be a little disheartening," said Spencer, a forensics psychologist who has also been active for two decades in youth baseball programs. "You'd like to think that you're going to an ambiance that would be conducive to a fun time, that the focus would be recreational.

"But it can be a microcosm of the world. ... It really does become the law of the jungle," Spencer said.

In Whiteville, N.C., one coach of 10-and-younger players on May 18 slashed a rival coach's throat with a pocketknife, blood splattering on one player's shirt.

Spencer agreed that the shock of the Whiteville slashing may not be that it happened, but that such violence doesn't erupt more often at youth games.

Across the nation, more than 2 million children each year play Little League baseball and tens of thousands more play in spin-off organizations such as Knothole, Baseball USA, Khoury League or Dixie League. Many enjoy youth baseball for what lumber-yard clerk Carl Stotz intended when he started the first three-team Little League in Williamsport, Pa., on June 6, 1939: "to assist youth in developing qualities of citizenship, discipline, teamwork and physical well-being, with proper guidance and exemplary leadership."

It doesn't always work out that way, though.

"There may be only one incident in Little League a year like the slashing, but maybe a million kids are going to be embarrassed and think less of an adult or even their parents," said Bill Geist, a CBS News feature correspondent and author of a new book, "Little League Confidential."

A sampling:

— In 1990, a Little League coach was hospitalized in intensive care in Willow Springs, Ill., after being assaulted by a rival coach and player.

— A manager was clubbed with a bat by a rival manager in Terre Haute, Ind., in 1989.

— In 1989, El Centro, Calif., league play was suspended after an umpire was threatened by a knife-wielding parent.

— In 1989, competition in a Houston suburb was halted after a coach whose team was in a playoff race protested another team's use of a too-old player — who had cerebral palsy and was batting .167.

Ray Recchi, youth coach and columnist for the Sun-Sentinel of Fort Lauderdale, wrote last week that so far this season in his league, a parent tried to scale a fence to get at a coach who ordered his son to bunt; coaches had to be restrained after one threw a clipboard at the other, and police were called to quell a brawl spurred when a manager was ejected for profanity.

"The kids ... seldom cause problems," Recchi wrote. "In fact, accusing adults of childishness for arguing or fighting is actually an insult to children."

"I think some of these people might not know what the real reasons for Little League are," said Stotz, now 82. "It's for the kids."

"He got a lot out of it," said Tony Drabek, former Little League coach in Victoria, Texas, whose son, Doug, went on from the neighborhood team to become a star pitcher for the Pittsburgh Pirates. "He learned the game, and he learned to win and lose gracefully. And I think all the kids learn how to get along with each other when they're in Little League."

But the elder Drabek also remembered other coaches who "instead of teaching the kids sportsmanship, it was win, win, win."

Doug Drabek joined hundreds of Little League players who have made the major leagues beginning with Joey Jay, a 20-game-winning pitcher for the Cincinnati Reds in the 1960s. He was followed by Hall of Famers Carl Yastrzemski and Jim Palmer and likely Hall of Famers such as Nolan Ryan and Mike Schmidt. Other Little Leaguers include Vice President Dan Quayle, Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., rock star Bruce Springsteen and actors Tom Selleck and Danny DeVito.

Sheryl Mahler doesn't know whether any of her four sons will follow their father, former Braves and Reds pitcher Rick Mahler, to the big leagues, but she doesn't like the start they've gotten in youth baseball in West Palm Beach.

"I would hate for another parent to go through what I just went through with Ricky," she said of her oldest, a 9-year-old whose harsh introduction to organized baseball brought him home crying and wanting to quit.

"Coming from the major leagues, it's really a surprise to see how intense these games are. These coaches and parents are really out there to win," Mrs. Mahler said, adding that she may become a coach next year to protect her other children from having experiences that sour them on the game.

Geist, who has coached his son and daughter from their early childhoods, said the intensity can be almost unavoidable.

"There's something that makes your sap rise; you want to protect your young," Geist said, recounting his fury at an umpire that had his daughter in tears the night before. Also, he decided after driving into New York City that "the same people who cut you off on the highways are the people who are doing little things in order to win these games. There's something deeply psychological going on."

Indeed, say psychologists.

Thomas Tutko, a San Jose State University psychologist who authored a book titled "Winning is Everything and Other American Myths," said youth sports for many are "child abuse in a subtle, emotional way."

Coaches who overemphasize winning, parents who push their children to excel until they burn out, and parents who have gifted children and "start picking on everybody else" create an atmosphere of pressure that makes it "really hard for a mature, child-oriented coach to do well."

"Parents too often are trying to undo their own frustrations and living through their kids," Tutko said.

Spencer said rootless suburban neighborhoods help make children's fields a battleground.

"You don't know your next-door neighbor. The days of the Sunday afternoon church-picnic game are gone. Everybody's trying to get theirs. Maybe you can't afford the car the Joneses have, but your son can play shortstop and theirs can't," he said.

Tutko said he believes there are many values to be learned from youth sports, but it would be better to save "the adult model" for teen-agers and use "alternative approaches" as in some communities.

Some leagues rotate rosters every week or two so there are no team standings. In some leagues, no scores are kept in tee-ball or coach-pitch leagues. In many leagues, every player must play; in some, every player must play in the infield at least part of the time.

The Plantation Athletic League screens coaches, cracks down on unruly parents, and holds hearings on complaints filed about coaches. Usually no more than one coach a season gets suspended, said league director Jim Jacobs, but others who seem to go too far will not be assigned teams the next season.

Jacobs rushes home each day from his furniture design business to spend up to 20 hours a week coaching his son's team and directing three leagues; making schedules, presiding over meetings, settling arguments.

"I enjoy working with kids, being involved. I feel it's important for me to be part of the program my children are in," said Jacobs, adding: "It's cheaper than therapy."

Tennessee's Majors listed in good condition

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Tennessee football coach Johnny Majors was listed in good condition Saturday after undergoing angioplasty at Baptist Hospital-East to relieve chest pains, a hospital spokesman said.

Majors, 57, was passing through Memphis Friday on the way to a meeting of the Collegiate Football Association in Dallas when he was stricken with chest pains.

Majors did not have a heart attack.

He was moved Saturday into a room where he is receiving a level of care higher than routine rooms but is less than he would get in intensive care, said hospital spokesman Mike Calhoun.

Majors underwent angioplasty — often called balloon dilation — on Friday in a procedure where doctors used tiny inflatable balloons at the end of a catheter to relieve blockage in two blood vessels.

Tennessee spokesman Haywood Harris said Majors ate dinner and was resting in good spirits at the hospital Friday night.

"He's doing very well. This doesn't look like the kind of thing that will keep him away from work too long," Mary Lynn Majors, the coach's wife, said.

She flew from Knoxville to Memphis Friday to be with her husband after he was hospitalized.

Harris said he did not know when Majors would be released.

Harris said Majors had been experiencing milder chest pains for several days.

Majors went to a doctor in Memphis Friday morning and was sent to the hospital.

TENNIS: Edberg 'sapped' after Friday

match," Chang said.

With Kulti leading 5-4 in the fifth set, Chang saved four match points to hold serve, attacking on short balls and moving up to net to close out the points.

With Kulti leading 7-6, Chang fought off another four match points before the Swede finally put it away. Kulti teed off on a forehand passing shot, and Chang could barely get his racket on a lunging forehand volley.

"He knew that he wasn't expected to win and he was able to just go out and swing," Chang said. "At the end, some of the shots he was hitting were pretty incredible. When he hits the ball that good, you can't really do anything."

Edberg could do little against Cherkasov, a hard-hitting baseliner ranked No. 34 in the world.

Edberg tried serve-and-volley, he tried coming in on Cherkasov's serve. But the Russian passed him time and again with his two-handed backhand.

"I think I played maybe the best match of my career," Cherkasov said. "Everything was working today. My pasing shot was perfect."

Edberg said he felt mentally sapped after his five-set win over Gabriel Marcus on Friday.

"It's always going to take a little out of you when you play a match like the one yesterday," he said. "I still had a fighting spirit today but I had a little bit less mental strength."

Edberg looked like he might be able to get back into the contest after saving two match points at 5-5 in the third set and breaking in the next game for a 6-5 lead. But he failed to serve out the set as Cherkasov broke at love to force a tiebreaker.

Cherkasov reached match point at 6-3 in the tiebreaker when the chair umpire overruled the linesman and called his serve good for an ace. The center court fans whistled in protest for several minutes before play resumed.

Edberg saved another match point with a service winner to make it 6-4. But the match ended on the next point when Edberg hit a backhand volley into the net.

Edberg said the line call disturbed him.

"You feel like you want to sink through the ground," he said. "You just need a little bit of luck, but everything goes against you. But it's history, there's nothing you can do."

The unquestioned star of the day for the hometown fans was Leconte, who displayed the same magic that carried him and Guy Forget to victory over the United States in the Davis Cup final in Lyon last December.

Leconte pranced all over the court for spectacular winners, celebrating with primal screams, pumped fists and shuffle dances. Despite 13 break points against him, he never lost serve.

"I haven't played such a good match since Lyon," he said. "In the last game when I served for the match, I felt like I was in the final of the Davis Cup."

Leconte has played sparingly on the tour because of injuries and needed a wild card invitation to get into the tournament. He has a reputation as a streaky player, but facing Stich helped him stay motivated.

"When I'm playing somebody whose ranking is very high and I have nothing to lose, my game goes up," he said. "When you play somebody that is better than you are, you just go for it all the time."

Leconte's career nearly ended last year after he underwent a fifth operation on his back.

"My doctor told me it's a miracle for me to play tennis," he said. "So I thought I would just play and try my best. And it's working."

Penguins go up 3-0 on Chicago

Associated Press

NHL Finals

CHICAGO — Good goaltending, good defense and good fortune have the Pittsburgh Penguins in commanding position to win their second straight Stanley Cup.

With goaltender Tom Barrasso at his best — and luckiest — the Penguins beat the Chicago Blackhawks 1-0 on Saturday night in a high-tension thriller at noisy Chicago Stadium to take a 3-0 lead in the best-of-7 Stanley Cup finals.

The defending champions can complete a sweep of the Blackhawks in Game 4 on Monday night and become the first team to win back-to-back NHL titles since the Edmonton Oilers did it in 1987 and 1988.

The 3-0 hole is a big one for the Blackhawks to climb out of. Only one team in NHL history has come back from a 3-0 deficit to win the finals — the 1942 Toronto Maple Leafs.

Barrasso and the Penguins' defense formed a devastating combination for the Blackhawks on Saturday night. The only goal of the game was scored by Kevin Stevens at 15:26 of the first period, and that's all Barrasso needed as he made 27 saves, many of them spectacular.

Barrasso was lucky, too — two Chicago shots hit the post in the first period as he recorded his second playoff career shutout. His first came against the Minnesota North Stars in last year's 8-0 Cup-clinching game.

Typical of Barrasso' work was a great stop on Brian Noonan on a rebound with 8:08 left in the game. A couple of minutes later, Barrasso stoped Noonan on a breakaway. And with a little over a minute left, Barrasso got his blocker on a close-in shot by Michel Goulet.

Along with the two Chicago shots that hit the posts, by Chris Chelios and Steve Larmer, the Penguins also had a bit of luck with their goal.

The Penguins' defense dominated the second period, holding the Blackhawks to just six shots.

gional, scoring a lot of runs, I feel that gave us a lot of momentum and hopefully it will keep up," Kieschnick said. Texas won the Central Regional title game 12-3 over Virginia Commonwealth.

An CWS record crowd of 19,772 witnessed the romp, which sends Texas (47-15) into Monday night's second-round game against Pepperdine (45-11-1), a 6-0 winner over Wichita State in Saturday's first game. The previous record crowd was 18,206 last year.

Oklahoma (42-23) dropped into the elimination round against Wichita State (56-10) on Monday.

Harkrider's two-run single to right was followed by a three-run homer by Hickman and a two-run shot by winning pitcher-designated hitter Kieschnick (11-2). It was Hickman's second homer of the season and Kieschnick's ninth.

Harkrider also tripled in a run and scored on Hickman's single in a three-run second inning as the Longhorns defeated Oklahoma for the fourth time in as many games this season.

Oklahoma starter Casey Mendenhall (11-2), whose only defeats this season were against Texas, left in the fifth inning trailing 5-2. Three Sooner relievers couldn't stop Texas in the sixth.

"It really wasn't a good performance by our club," Oklahoma coach Larry Cochell said. "Casey wasn't as sharp as he had been and we didn't swing the bats very well."

Pepperdine 6, Wichita State 0

Third-ranked Pepperdine used the long ball and Patrick Ahearne's right arm to beat second-ranked Wichita State in the first round.

Ahearne (14-2) allowed three hits and struck out nine in 7 1-3 innings against the Shockers, who led Division I in scoring with a nine-run per game average. Relief ace Steve Montgomery finished for Pepperdine.

Pepperdine (45-11-1), seeded seventh in the school's second CWS, got a run in the second when Charlie Giaudrone's pickoff throw glanced off the runner and allowed David Main to score from third.

only three shots in the second half.

"I never got the ball," he whined at the time. "I guess there were other guys out on the court that were more important."

Pippen quieted his critics Friday with 12 rebounds, four assists and four blocked shots to go with his 29 points.

"My game plan going into the game was that I wanted to be very aggressive offensively," Pippen said.

In the Finals, which start Wednesday night in Chicago, the Bulls face a Portland team that handed the Utah Jazz their fifth loss in 50 home games to end the Western Conference finals on Thursday night.

"Portland is one of the most athletic teams in the league," Jordan said. "They have athletic players with talent. To beat them, we have to play like we did in the fourth quarters the last two games."

Chicago broke open a close game with a 15-0 run at the start of the fourth period in Game 5, and Jordan took care of the Cavaliers in the final quarter Friday night.

Last year, Jordan and the Lakers' Magic Johnson grabbed most of the attention in the NBA Finals. This time, it's Jordan and Portland's Clyde Drexler, a distant second to Jordan in the regular-season Most Valuable Player voting.

"I'm sure the hype will begin again with Clyde and myself, but for me, it's my team against his," Jordan said. "We won't underestimate any of their players. They've been accused of not being smart, but they're smart enough to be where they are."

Mizzou's Peeler arrested

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — University of Missouri basketball star Anthony Peeler was arrested Saturday on suspicion of weapons and kidnapping charges after allegedly threatening a female acquaintance with a gun.

Peeler, the Big Eight player of the year last season, entered the woman's unlocked apartment about 2 a.m., said Columbia Police Sgt. Becky Covington. Peeler went into the woman's bedroom, bit her four times and placed a .45-caliber revolver to her head, Covington said.

"I think he was angry over some minor, little squabble they were having," Covington said. "She is a female acquaintance. He called her and told he was coming over. The door was unlocked."

Peeler, expected to be a first-round pick in the NBA draft next month, later left the apartment, and the woman called police, Covington said. He was arrested less than a mile away about 9:15 a.m. Police found a gun in his car that matched the description of the one he allegedly used.

Energy bill has unfair provision

Just when the domestic oil industry needs the cavalry to top The Hill with bugles blaring and sabres drawn, the House of Representatives passed a national energy bill last week that stops far short of meaningful change.

Moreover, the bill represents a retreat from the real issue of greatly aiding the domestic oil industry and promotes continuing decline of the industry which would only push the United States deeper into the dangerous position of relying on even more imported oil. The bill also casts away, for the moment, any hope for a redirection of the nation's energy self-sufficiency quest.

Adding insult to injury, the House included in its bill a provision called the Markey Amendment which, if allowed to stand in the House-Senate Conference Committee, would essentially end the concept of states' rights in relation to natural resources.

The Markey Amendment would strip from Texas and give to the Congress the power to regulate natural gas in Texas, a move which U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith of San Antonio correctly termed "intolerable."

Whatever became of the concept of states' rights and the inviolable right of a state to regulate its own resources? If that right is lost, a state truly cannot determine its own destiny. At that point, the very thought of sovereignty will become moot.

The attitude expressed through the Markey Amendment is one of regionalism, stripping away in the interest of another part of the country the rights of states to control their own resources. That is not fair or equitable; in fact, it is the height of arrogance!

While the Markey Amendment is by far the worst aspect of the energy bill passed by the House, it is not the bill's only flaw. Overall, the House bill is weak in that it does not help oil producers at all. The bill did repeal the Alternative Minimum Tax, which was a positive point for the oil industry. But the weak aspects of the bill rendered it largely too little and too late for the oil industry. Many Texans in Congress voted against the bill as drawn, including U.S. Reps. Lamar Smith and Larry Combest.

When the bill gets to the conference committee, the first order of business should be to remove the Markey Amendment. Without that step, the energy bill is unacceptable at a time when the nation needs a strong energy plan for the future.

Convention boosts Houston

Houstonians are right to want to put their best foot forward during the Republican National Convention here in August. State and local officials, however, are showing a proper reluctance to hobble the other foot in the process.

Houston Police Chief Sam Nuchia . . . has taken the responsible position that — except for the unique security requirements during the actual days of the convention — police units will be deployed in the way that is calculated to provide the most protection for all citizens.

(Unlike the 1990 Economic Summit), this year's more down-to-earth approach might indicate a new level of maturity for Houston. One of the advantages of being a great city with an international reputation is that one doesn't have to resort to Potemkin villages when important guests come to visit. As the staging of the Economic Summit proved, Houston is a city whose native charms, competence and enthusiasm outshine the poverty, crime and congestion it shares with every other major city in the world.

Phone records act just excuse

Not long after the Houston Chronicle used state records to show the misuse of state telephones by state employees, the state suddenly discovered it no longer has room to keep state telephone records.

It's a Texas-size excuse that stinks to high heaven. It doesn't do a great deal to build confidence in the honesty and efficiency of state government. The evident coverup decision needs to be hooted down in derision.

It turns out Pouland, a longtime Democratic Party activist, worked with Mauro during his 1978 U.S. Senate campaign. He should correct his bad decision.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, May 31, the 152nd day of 1992. There are 214 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 31, 1889, more than 2,000 people perished when a dam break sent water rushing through Johnstown, Pa.

On this date:

In 1809, composer Franz Joseph Haydn died in Vienna, Austria.

In 1819, poet Walt Whitman was born in West Hill, N.Y.

In 1910, the Union of South Africa was founded.

In 1913, the 17th Amendment to the Constitution, providing for the popular election of U.S. senators, was declared in effect.

In 1916, during World War I, British and German fleets fought the Battle of Jutland off Denmark.

In 1961, South Africa became an independent republic.

In 1962, World War II Gestapo official Adolf Eichmann was hanged in Israel for his role in the Nazi Holocaust.

In 1970, tens of thousands of people in Peru died in an earthquake.

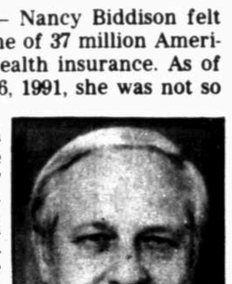

In 1976, Martha Mitchell, the estranged wife of former Attorney General John Mitchell, died in New York.

In 1977, the trans-Alaska oil pipeline, three years in the making, was completed with the final weld made by construction workers near Pump Station Three.

Blue Cross' mistake will cost a bundle

WASHINGTON — Nancy Biddison felt lucky not be one of 37 million Americans without health insurance. As of the morning of March 6, 1991, she was not so sure.

Anderson

Biddison woke with a crushing migraine headache — in itself nothing extraordinary for someone who had been visited by migraines since the age of 15, more than 20 years ago. But this one made her head feel like it was going to explode.

By lunch time it practically did. Biddison was rushed to the hospital from her job at the University of Maryland after an aneurysm ruptured in her brain, causing a stroke.

Her doctors believe it was avoidable and blame her insurance company, Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Maryland, which declined to pay $1,200 for a magnetic resonance imaging test that probably would have detected the aneurysm before it nearly killed her. Such aneurysms are typically correctable with early detection and surgery.

Blue Cross' bean-counters made an actuarial decision that is repeated millions of times every year by the some 1,500 companies comprising the U.S. private health-insurance industry. It is the de facto rationing of care in the brave new world of medical-omics.

The Biddisons have become dice rolls for the insurance industry — dice rolls they make among the 4 billion claims processed each year nationally.

This was a bet Blue Cross lost. The cost to the carrier for her medical care and rehabilitation could exceed $700,000. After 16 months of surgery and excruciating rehabilitation, Biddison will live the rest of her life with severe neurological damage, partial paralysis and permanent vision problems.

"With the diagnostic test and corrective surgery, they (Blue Cross) could have gotten off with less than $20,000," one of Biddison's physicians commented ruefully. He pointed out that $700,000 would buy nearly 1,000 MRI tests.

In an election year in which health care will be center stage, this case is a loud warning for reform as health-care costs are expected to soar to $1 trillion by 1995.

Before her stroke, Biddison and her doctors believed they were facing a classic Catch-22 — the insurance company imposed the burden of proof to show something was wrong before they paid for a diagnostic test. But only the MRI — and ultimately the stroke — could make the case. Biddison couldn't afford to pay out-of-pocket for the MRI, and was ineligible for government assistance.

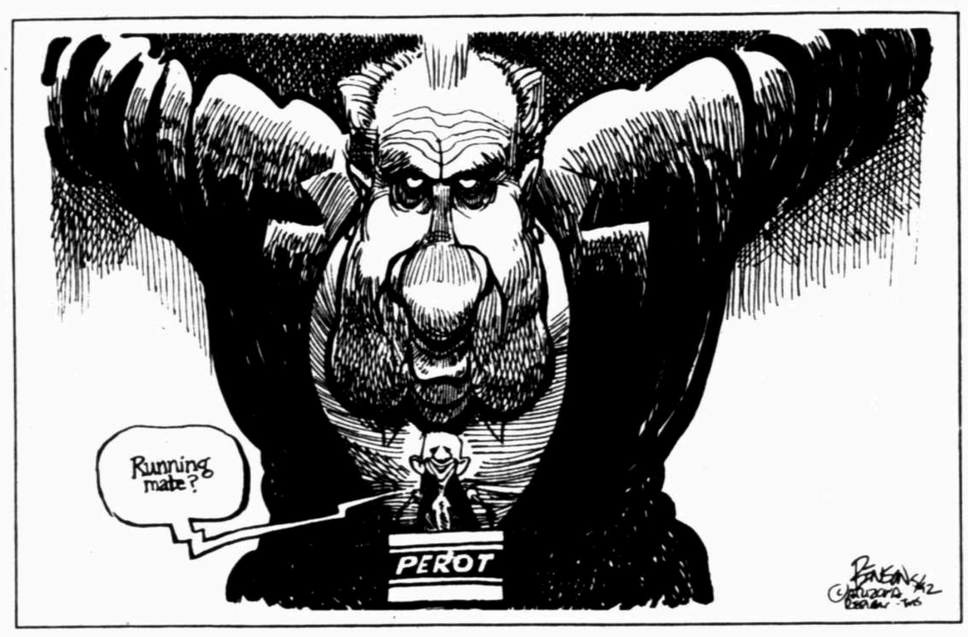

For years, her headaches had been growing worse and more frequent, and led her to consult three separate doctors between 1987 and 1990. All three advocated an MRI. Biddison didn't anticipate a problem since her plan claims to pay for diagnostic tests. It doesn't mention that MRIs for headaches are excluded.

A Blue Cross spokesperson refused to comment on Biddison, but maintained that the company operates under strict contractual procedures governing what is covered, and that patients can appeal. Blue Cross broke no laws or regulations.

Critics charge that the appeals process normally winds up in the hands of a medical review board, which is comprised of certified doctors who are paid by insurance companies.

Ron Karp, former head of the D.C. Trial Lawyer's Association, called this the equivalent of police officers sitting in judgment on a police brutality case.

Panic-stricken doomsayers overlook truth

WASHINGTON — Many confidently — even eagerly — predicted catastrophes are late in arriving. There is a lengthening list of traumas to the planet that were supposed to have happened but haven't. This is one reason to be unimpressed by the "Earth Summit" in Rio.

Will

The Audubon Society calls that summit "the most important meeting in the history of mankind." (So much for the Council of Trent, the Congress of Vienna and the first meeting of Plato and Socrates.) But any time agents of 160 governments gather, remember: Some Third World governments (which are most of the world's governments) are "kleptocracies." They would rather redistribute the First World's wealth than abandon the statism that is the basis of their power. Statism also is the impediment to their people's prosperity and therefore a cause of environmental injury.

Some environmentalists (usually at comfortably endowed universities in developed countries) dislike economic growth, and many environmental measures hinder it. But growth is a prerequisite for environmental improvement. The worldwide pattern is that environmental damage increases until per capita income increases to a point where people enjoy a social surplus and feel they can ask government to trade some growth for environmental healing.

So before we are stampeded into growth-inhibiting actions to combat global warming, we should recall that less than 20 years ago — not long in a planet's life — the politically correct panic concerned global cooling. Then there were "many signs pointing to the possibility that the Earth may be heading for another ice age" (The New York Times, Aug. 14, 1975), heading "toward extensive Northern Hemisphere glaciation" (Science magazine, Dec. 10, 1976), and facing "continued rapid cooling of the Earth" (Global Ecology, 1971) and "the approach of a full-blown 10,000-year ice age" (Science, March 1, 1975).

It was then said that "a new ice age must now stand alongside nuclear war as a likely source of wholesale death and misery" (International Wildlife, July 1975) and that "the world's climatologists are agreed" that we must "prepare for the next ice age" (Science Digest, February 1973). Newsweek reported (April 28, 1975) "ominous signs" that "the Earth's climate seems to be cooling down" and meteorologists "are almost unanimous" that "the trend will reduce agricultural productivity for the rest of the century." The Christian Science Monitor reported (Aug. 27, 1974) that armadillos had left Nebraska, retreating south, and heat-loving snails had retreated from central European forests, and "the North Atlantic is cooling down about as fast as an ocean can cool," glaciers "have begun to advance" and "growing seasons in England and Scandinavia are getting shorter."

Nowadays Newsweek's Greg Easterbrook, writing in Washington Monthly, offers his "Law of Doomsaying": Predict catastrophe no later than 10 years hence but no sooner than five years away — soon enough to terrify but far enough off that people will forget if you are wrong. Easterbrook has not forgotten Stanford's infallibly wrong Paul Ehrlich, who in 1968 said, "The battle to feed humanity is already lost . . . we will not be able to prevent large-scale famines in the next decade." Since 1968 world grain production has increased 60 percent. For 30 years world excess food stocks relative to consumption have grown faster than population.

In 1980 Ehrlich bet economist Julian Simon $1,000 that in a decade the prices of five resources (copper, chrome, nickel, tin, tungsten) would rise. The prices of all five fell. Ehrlich paid. And Stephen Moore of the Cato Institute reports (in The Public Interest) that, contrary to predictions that increased population and industrialism would produce scarcities, "by every objective measure natural resources became more, not less plentiful in the 1980s."

Indeed, "many environmentalists now complain of the ecological damage that will be done by cheap and accessible energy," Moore says. Measured in terms of the amount of time a person must work to purchase them, natural resources are, on average, 20 percent cheaper than in 1980, half as costly as in 1950 and five times less costly than in 1900.

Eco-pessimism persists, more solid than environmental science, in part because it serves a political program. Some environmentalism is a "green tree with red roots." It is the socialist dream — ascetic lives closely regulated by a vanguard of bossy visionaries — dressed up as compassion for the planet.

Various reasons for gloominess come and go (dioxin and acid rain have recently been demoted as menaces) but the supply of gloominess is remarkably constant. A recent Science magazine editorial, "The Attractiveness of Gloom," satirically offered a new version of Murphy's Law: "Things are worse than they can possibly be." It quotes a fictional Dr. Noitall, who says his fellow gloommongers are handicapped by the fact that standards of living, and life expectancy, keep rising. However, he takes comfort from the fact that anxiety will remain high because "expectations always increase more rapidly than productivity."

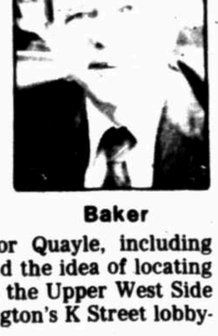

And he contentedly anticipates "the panic that will spread through the population when they read about the epidemic of deaths through natural causes." You read about it first here.

'Liberals for Quayle' get off to a rocky start

We journeyed from Manhattan over to Far Hills, N.J., the other day to look into Liberals for Quayle, the organization set up to rally liberals to the vice president.

Baker

Its chairman, Basking Ridge III, said his phone banks had been swamped with calls, such is the excitement among liberals about, as he put it, "this chance to finally get with a winner."

Ridge introduced us to several of the founders of Liberals for Quayle, including Hugh Highspire, who had the idea of locating in Far Hills, rather than the Upper West Side of Manhattan or Washington's K Street lobbying corridor.

Highspire said he "felt Dan was an outside-the-Beltway kind of guy as well as an outside-the-West-Side kind of guy." In locating its headquarters, he said, Liberals for Quayle wanted a place "where Dan can be comfortable dropping in for a visit, without being too far from a good golf course."

Herman Swatara, chairman of the Ethnics Committee, said liberal ethnics were not a bit uneasy about the headquarters being in Far Hills, a community more closely identified with Wall Street than with East Baltimore, Harlem or Cracow.

"The media should realize that a liberal who happens to be an ethnic can be just as eager as any Bush Yalie for a cut in his capital-gains tax," said Swatara. "Wasps aren't the only kind of liberals with capital gains."

We suggested that Swatara persuade the media to popularize the expression "ethnic limousine liberals," so as to raise public consciousness about the multicultural nature of capital-gains recipients.

"Media's not my department," said Swatara, introducing us to Edgar Allan Poe, chairman of Liberals for Quayle's Dead White Males Committee.

Since our hearing is not the best, we thought Swatara had said "Dead White Whales Committee," so naturally our first question to Poe was why he, rather than Herman Melville, had been made chairman.

"Melville can't stand Quayle," said Poe. "Quayle reminds him of Ishmael, the human nonentity destined to be sole survivor of a catastrophe brought on by a mad captain. Melville goes around referring to Quayle as 'Ishquayle.' If you ask me, Melville's a loony."

At this point Basking Ridge III came by and said Poe's keen ear for language was desperately needed in a meeting where Liberals for Quayle was trying to decide what to call themselves.

Some, favoring the example of the old Democratic liberals who years ago started calling themselves neo-conservatives after they saw the light, want to be "neo-Quavlers."

Quayle is said to have personally vetoed this one in a one-word memo: "Nevermore."

SPEAKING OUT

Rebelettes say good-bye

By Connie Staton

Staton

Connie Staton was born in Midland and started to school at Lee High School the year it opened. She was a member of the Rebel Pep Club in 1962.

As I watched those remaining eight girls — the Rebelettes — receive award letters for service recently, I felt someone must write the obituary for what those girls represented.

I remembered 1963 and how excited I was to become a part of the Rebel Pep Club. Our mothers made those A-line maroon skirts and white blouses and we all cut out our own two-foot card section signs. We took up one section of the bleachers during pep rallies and football games. Pride and school spirit was expected from each participant and we gave back respect for the school and its teachers.

Sometime in the '80s that large pep club divided into the Dixie Dolls, Flag Corps and Rebelettes. Instead of supporting each other, competition began. Rebelettes supported the cheerleaders and all sport teams, decorated lockers at school and spread school spirit. Rebelettes took on the job of painting the "run-through" signs football players break at the start of each game and at halftime. Today Coach Miller believes these signs are a major morale booster for his "boys."

But as society has changed, school organizations have changed. A-line skirts costing two yards of material were exchanged for $175 uniforms. Working teen-agers have become the norm, leaving no time for school activities. Rebelettes just over five years ago had a roster of over 200 girls; the 1991-92 year finished with only eight girls. These eight girls spent over 12 hours weekly painting those giant signs (for which Midland Lee has become famous). They attended the games, taping the huge signs to irrigation pipe, and raising them at the right moment come rain, wind or snow for the football boys to run through.

The "powers that be at Midland Lee" have decided to dissolve the club and assign its responsibilities to other organizations within the school. It was just too hard for only eight girls and no one seems interested in working for school spirit anymore. The Rebelettes, who once worked in great numbers to make Midland Lee the best, said good-bye at the annual awards banquet. I just wonder which club or organization will be next? Anyone want to buy a $175 uniform I thought I was buying for my daughter to use for three years?

READERS' VIEWS on: Bus mishap

Bus accident could have been avoided

I received one of the most terrifying phone calls a parent can get yesterday. "Mrs. Botes, Peter is all right but there has been a bus accident." I was told that the bus went a bit too fast over a bump in the road and some of the children had to be sent home. On further investigation I got the rest of the story.

It is my understanding that two children had to have a total of 20 stitches, a monitor received cracked ribs, there were bruised ribs and sternums, and heads that were hit so hard parents were instructed to be watchful of concussion. And what about the trauma these children suffered? They saw their friends crying and bleeding and some of them being carried away in an ambulance.

The reason for all of these injuries was not the fact that the bus went over a bump. The reason for this is that the seats on bus 50 were not bolted down! When the bus went over the bump, up went the children and their seats came up with them.

Please ask your children who ride the bus if their seats do the same thing. Ours have been able to tip the seats forward, bounce on them and get them to jump and the seats would slide from side to side when they took a turn. It is my understanding that this was reported about bus 50 three weeks ago. It is a shame that no one could find the time to correct the problem until this catastrophe happened. Of course, now bus 50 has been repaired but who knows about the rest of the "Golden Calves" of the Midland Independent School District (MISD) school system.

The school system mandates that our babies ride in these unsafe, unlawful, "accidents waiting to happen" from one side of town to the other twice a day, five days a week and they can't even maintain them properly. We parents and children were lucky this time, if you consider "luck" the fact that no one was fatally injured. Could a seat belt have removed some of the risk of injury? I thought that the seat belt law was a mandated law. Why would school buses be exempt? Would it cost too much money to install seat belts on all of the busses of MISD? If the answer is yes, could you please tell me the dollar value of a daughter or son?

Seat belts need to be installed in our busses

On Friday morning, May 15, I received a phone call to inform me that my son's school bus had an accident. Apparently, the bus hit a dip at a rate of speed which launched many students in the air, causing a few bumps on the head from hitting the roof, bruises, scrapes, and cuts requiring stitches.

This was very traumatic to the children. The staff at Parker Elementary put forth a commendable effort in taking care of our children upon arrival at the school. Nurses from other schools, counselors, and even paramedics were called in. The teachers had their hands full just calming down the children, much less trying to teach the rest of the day. The secretary called every parent, whether their child was injured or not.

All of this ordeal could have been prevented by the installation of safety belts in our school busses. Our children have been taught about safety since pre-school. Are we, as parents, supposed to teach our children that the law says we have to wear seat belts, but only in certain circumstances? It isn't enough that we have to send our son all the way across town to school when he could walk a few blocks, but do we also have to endanger his life by sending him off in a bus with no seat belts? These busses are often so crowded that three kids are packed in one seat. I strongly believe that our tax money should be used to correct this problem before it is too late.

Mrs. Stringer handled crisis situation well

On Friday, May 15th, the school bus seat frame, in which our son, Adam, was riding became unbolted when the bus went over a bump. Other seats also dislodged and children were thrown to the ceiling, falling back upon the seats, cushions or floor. Some required stitches and, others, ice for various chest bruises. Fortunately, no one was critically injured. Please note that Wes Washam (quoted in the May 16th Reporter-Telegram) described the accident much differently ". . . jostled some students out of their seats."

The purpose of this letter is to commend Mrs. Stringer for her actions during this time. She stopped the bus and assessed the situation. She then continued to Parker where help was immediately available. This action served to maintain safety and prevent the anxiety that would have occurred had she not continued and requested that 30-45 of the children be evacuated on Haynes Street. All of the children, whether injured or not, were very frightened and many were crying.

This is the fifth year that our children have been bused. It is the first year that an elementary school age child has NOT complained of a "bumped head" after riding over bumps, burned shins, or "being upset" after a poorly-handled discipline problem.

Mrs. Stringer has been caring and helped the children feel safe throughout her year. Obviously, she functions appropriately in emergencies as well.

READERS' VIEWS on: Dan Quayle's remark

Quayle needs to get in tune with middle class

As I was watching the 10 p.m. news recently, I listened to our vice president voice his opinion on the issues of single-motherhood and the problem of illegitimate children in our country. I cannot remember when I have been so angered in my life.

These opinions are coming from a man that has no concept of what he speaks. I am a 30-year-old single mother raising one child. Like most single mothers I had the choice to abort this child or to go through with the pregnancy at the young age of 21. The decision was mine and mine alone, as my child's father took off for parts unknown after he learned that I was pregnant. Much to my family's dismay I decided to have this child and to raise it myself.

Two weeks after my little girl was born I went to work to support myself and my child, because as I was taught at a very young age, if you're going to make your bed you had better be ready to lie in it. I get no government support. All that is achieved in my family is done by hard work and a love that Dan Quayle evidently does not understand.

This man has never had to work at a job for nine hours a day and then come home to be mommy and daddy for his children. The decision to have a child by yourself, if you are a responsible adult, should be no one's business but your own.

I also heard Dan Quayle say something to the effect that most illegitimate children are born to minority families. Wake up Dan, non-minority groups are just as prone to this as anyone. I feel that if our government were more in touch with middle-class America, they would not be so hasty as to make such ignorant comments.

Regarding his opinion that children from single-parent family homes do not do as well as children from two-parent families, I feel that really depends on the parent raising the child. I know that my child will excel because we have had to work hard for everything that she has achieved and she does not take life for granted. Dan Quayle should stick with the issues at hand — homelessness, the problems in Los Angeles, and the economy, etcetera. Striking out at women who decide to have children on their own will not get the voters running to the polls to vote for President Bush.

To tell you the truth, H. Ross Perot is starting to look better all the time.

Webster defines the real definition of quail

The quail, according to Webster, is a chicken-like Old World bird with limited vision — it sees a fictional character, whose fictional husband takes a walk after a fictional baby is conceived, as immoral and less responsible than a real-life Murphy and a real-life Bishop who conceived a real-life son out of wedlock, or a real-life Ronald and a real-life Nancy who conceived a real life Patti out of wedlock. Such is the quail's vision of reel morality and real morality.

Teen-agers need public facility to skateboard

It was a beautiful Saturday while seeing some patients at my office when I noticed three teen-age boys skateboarding down the sidewalk immediately in front of our building and leaping off of the concrete steps to another sidewalk at the side. I had two concerns. One was for their safety since they were not wearing pads or helmets, and another for liability of our partnership should they be hurt on our property. The latter concern is an unfortunate product of our present litigious society.

Two of the boys were named Michael and one was named Gary. They gladly listened as I explained to them the two reasons why I preferred that they would not skateboard in the front of the building and leap off onto the sidewalk below. I also asked if there were any public places available to them to skateboard. They told me there were not and that the police had even asked them not to skateboard in the streets. Other people, as well, had run them off their private property.

Public parks are available in Midland for the handicapped, children of all ages, adults; but they are not allowed to skateboard in these areas for safety reasons. There are roller skating rinks, bowling alleys, baseball diamonds, soccer fields, golf courses, and other recreational facilities, none of which are available for skateboarding. Skateboarding is a very popular sport among preteens and teen-agers. My grandson, Barry, is only 3 years old and likes to sit on one and skate.

I would like to see some public facilities in various areas of the city for these young people. I am afraid that the current economic times and constraints on the city and county budgets plus the cost of liability insurance may make such a facility a daydream or fantasy, but it would be one more recreation for our West Texas area that would occupy many teen-agers who might otherwise spend that time doing things that are not quite so harmless to our community.

I sympathize with these three young men who were willing to listen to my concerns and discuss the matter in a mature and courteous manner. Michael, Michael and Gary listened to me. Perhaps it is time that the community listens to them.

Window pane area badly needs our city's service

I was not surprised when Mayor Carroll Thomas, assisted by some of inexperienced city council members, voted down the compromise offered by Mayor-elect J.D. Faircloth to solve the problem of the window pane area. This area badly needs the city's services of sewer and water lines for the people to exist in this substandard living area.

Midland County has spent something in the order of $1 million plus eight years of effort to correct this problem. The incoming city council members, without Mayor Thomas, need to annex this area as it lies within the city limits of Midland. At present, the city council is pouring millions of dollars into the three chambers of commerce and the Confederate Air Force under the ploy of economic development. Yet when we have a problem directly related to economic development of the people that are already living within the bounds of the city, we are unable to solve that problem. This problem is right at our doorstep and if not solved now, the money and effort that has been put forth will have been wasted.

A company or individual seeking a place to locate would never consider a city that allows raw sewage to be poured into the ditches or roadways within that city. The outdoor toilets, systems, cesspools and septic tanks should be eliminated at once. If someone looking at Midland to locate were to read the newspaper or listen to the radio or TV or hear or read about the recent action of the city council on this matter, I doubt if they would desire to move to Midland. I feel confident that as the city council was able to locate $500,000 to buy the parking lot for the police command center, they should be able to find the money necessary to correct this problem.

Try again, Mayor-elect Faircloth. Possibly with new council members you may be able to salvage the window pane area and eliminate the sewage and outdoor toilet situation. Are parents aware that two schools, Midland Freshman and Travis Elementary, are in this area?

School district shouldn't throw our money away

For the first time since last summer, I had the occasion to walk across the Lee High School campus to reach the track at 11:30 p.m. on Friday, May 15. To my amazement, air conditioners were running full blast in one of the school-operated houses across Neely Street and in the field house. Both of these buildings were deserted as were the adjacent parking lots. As an aside, I noticed that last summer the field house air-conditioner was running quite frequently late at night. I knocked on the doors last summer as I did on May 15 and I am quite certain no one was inside.

To my dismay, upon my return to the campus at 9:45 p.m. on Sunday, May 17, the same two air-conditioners were still running full blast. Also, I noticed that the tennis office had its lights on as well as its air-conditioner going. I also knocked quite loudly on the office's door and window with no response. Again, the parking lots were deserted.

I know in the grand scheme of things we are not talking about a lot of money. But I think the Midland Independent School District (MISD) should take at least a passive interest in preserving the limited funds of the taxpayers. This may be symptomatic of other wastes and abuses that may be occurring inside this and other campus walls. If we are asked to absorb additional bond issues and tax increases, please do not frivolously throw our money away.

Addition of Perot to ticket could have 'amazing' results

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — With maverick Ross Perot showing strong poll strength against President Bush and Gov. Bill Clinton, D-Ark.), a three-way presidential race could conceivably lead to one of the most amazing results in our political history.

My belief and hope is that President Bush, who is strongly ahead in key states, will get the necessary 270 electoral votes to win the presidency.

Charles J. Lewis, our Washington news bureau chief, reports that if, as many analysts expect, Perot's popular surge drops and Clinton picks up steam, a close race in November could result in no single candidate getting the required 270 electoral votes.

In that event, the election would be decided by the House of Representatives, with each of the 50 states having one vote. The House members from each state would vote to determine how that state's single vote would be cast. The House will include members elected in November, so it's impossible to predict how each state would vote.

However, the present political lineup in the House is not encouraging for President Bush if the issue goes to that body. Democrats now have 268 House seats. Republicans have 166 and there is one independent.

So far, 67 members of the House will not be running for re-election. Of that total, 39 Democrats and 19 Republicans have announced they will not seek re-election. Nine other vacancies are due to failure of incumbents to win their primary elections. Most of those quitting are doing so because they are fed up with congressional failure to cope with domestic problems. More retirements are expected.

If voters replace these people with Perot supporters, it could mean a close vote in the House.

If the election of 1992 ends up being decided in the House, I believe it would eventually lead to abolition of the Electoral College. As far back as November 1977, I urged in my column that the Electoral College be replaced by direct popular election of the president. In September 1977, the Senate Judiciary Committee voted in favor of a constitutional amendment to do so, but it was opposed by partisan politicians of both houses of Congress, who wanted to perpetuate the two-party system.

Joe Kingsbury Smith, our national editor, reminded me that on two occasions, in 1800 and 1824, the selection of the president went into the House of Representatives.

In 1824, Andrew Jackson won a plurality of the popular vote but not the required majority of the vote in the Electoral College. Under the 12th amendment to the Constitution, the election was thrown into the House. Under the one-vote-per-state rule, John Quincy Adams won the election on Feb. 11, 1825, in defiance of the popular vote.

In 1979, then-Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., proposed for the second time a constitutional amendment to abolish the Electoral College and replace it with direct popular election by the people. It failed.

Now, in view of all the disarray that might be created if the presidency is once more thrown into the House, I strongly believe the candidate who wins a plurality of the popular vote should be elected president.

U.S. soccer team stuns Ireland 3-1

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sparked by two new Americans playing their first games and the return of several European-based veterans, the United States shocked Ireland 3-1 Saturday night in its best soccer performance in years.

Roy Wegerle, an English League star forward born in South Africa, and German defender Thomas Dooley made their debuts after receiving U.S. passports.

John Harkes and Tab Ramos, the best Americans during the 1990 World Cup, played together for the first time since the final game of that tournament.

Although it was an exhibition game, the start of a four-team tournament known as U.S. Cup '92 that also includes Italy and Portugal, the result was quite a surprise. Ireland, a 1990 World Cup quarterfinalist, started six players from Tuesday's 2-0 World Cup qualifying victory over Albania and had thrashed the Americans 4-1 at home last month.

Fabel's no fairy tale

Associated Press

POTOMAC, Md. — When they all finally came in out of the rain, Brad Fabel had survived the miserable conditions and a late charge by John Daly to cling to a share of the lead with Duffy Waldorf in Saturday's suspended third round of the Kemper Open.

Fabel, who started the day in a first-place tie with three others at 8-under, never relinquished the lead. With two bogeys and two birdies, he stayed in position for his first victory in eight years on the tour by shooting par over 13 waterlogged holes before play was stopped by darkness.

Earlier in the day, rain stopped play for two hours. The 10 players still on the course when darkness set in will complete their round Sunday morning before the final round begins.

Waldorf, also striving for his first victory, was 8-under with three holes left in the round. He joined Fabel atop the leader board with a 15-foot birdie putt on No. 15.

Daly, the leader in the clubhouse after completing his round, had four birdies and a couple of bogeys on the back nine for a 70 and a 6-under 205 total. For the day, he had a zany round that included six birdies and five bogeys.

"On a day like this you can't expect six birdies. But you can expect five bogeys," he said.

Only 13 of the 62 players who finished the round broke par-71 on the rain-soaked TPC at Avenel course.

Mark Calcaveccia was 6-under with three holes to play in the round, and Brian Kamm and Payne Stewart reached the clubhouse at 5-under. Five other players, including second-round co-leaders David Toms and Bob Gilder, were still on the course at 5-under when play was suspended.

Toms lost ground with bogeys on Nos. 3, 9 and 12. Gilder parred the first 10 holes before a double-bogey on No. 11. He followed that with a bogey, then parred No. 13, his final hole of the day.

The rain strated in the morning and never stopped, finally forcing a halt of play in the afternoon with just one-third of the 72 golfers in the clubhouse.

Dill, Douglass tied at Commemorative Seniors

SCARBOROUGH-ON-HUDSON, N.Y. (AP) — Terry Dill, still recovering from surgery last November to remove a non-malignant tumor from his brain, birdied three of the last four holes Saturday in shooting a 3-under-par 67 and joined Dale Douglass atop the leader board after 36 holes of the Commemorative senior golf tournament.

Douglass, who shot a 66 over the par-70, 6,645-yard Sleepy Hollow Country Club course, and Dill were at 133, one shot ahead of George Archer and Jim Ferree. Archer, Douglass' playing partner on Saturday, shot 67 and Ferree had a 66.

Bob Charles, the left-hander from New Zealand, had a 65, the best round of the day, and was tied at 135 with Lee Trevino, first-round leader Don Bies and Gay Brewer. Trevino, who leads the Senior PGA Tour with five tournament victories and $555,488 in earnings, shot a 67, Brewer had a 70 and Bies a 71.

"I discovered the tumor in April of last year," said the 53-year-old Dill, who is winless since joining the tour in 1989. "Doctors felt that I could make it through the end season before surgery was necessary.

"However, I was losing my balance, so the date was moved up. Even after that, I was told that it would be six months before I would recover. Without the operation, I could have died.

"I was back on the tour in February and not once have I backed off. I'm playing full out."

The 6-foot-3, 195-pound Dill, also without a victory in 17 years on the PGA Tour, had four birdies and one bogey in his round, with the late rush pushing him into the a share of the lead.

"My game has not been what I wanted," said Dill, who lives in the San Antonio suburb of Tapatio Springs. "However, the operation has nothing to do with that. It was my technique, and I had some videos taken of my swing and got that squared away. I'm not telling what I changed, but I will say that it made a big difference."

Light rain fell late in Saturday's round and heavier rain forecast for Sunday, leading some players to wonder if the tournament might be washed out.

"I'm hoping we play," Trevino said. "I'm two shots back and I want an opportunity to win, but i can't if we don't play."

LPGA pair tied in Olds Classic

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Barb Mucha, who played varsity golf at nearby Michigan State, shot a 7-under-par 65 Saturday and climbed into a share of the third-round lead with Deb Richard in the Oldsmobile Classic.

Richard, playing over intense back pain on a cool, gray, rainy day, followed her second-round 64 with a 69 at Walnut Hills Country Club.

Mucha and Richard were at 11-under 205 in the $500,000 LPGA event, two shots ahead of Jane Geddes, who shot 65.

Richard, playing several holes behind Mocha, slipped to 10-under with a bogey at the par-4 15th. But she hit a sand wedge to within six feet of the pin on the 17th and rolled in the putt for birdie.

Mucha, whose only win in six years on the tour came at the 1990 Boston Five Classic, had eight birdies without a bogey. She had three saves: from five feet at the ninth, six feet at No. 12 and two feet at the 15th.

New York rule thins out field for Belmont Stakes

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Two European-based horses could influence the running of the Belmont Stakes. New York's medication rule already has.

While Cristofori will ship in from France and My Memoirs will travel from England for the race, Lil E. Tee, the Kentucky Derby winner, will remain in Louisville and Alydeed, the Preakness runner-up, will stay in Canada because their trainers have decided not to risk racing them at this time without the diuretic Lasix.

New York is the only racing state that does not allow horses to compete on any medication. Lasix is used to treat exercise-induced pulmonary bleeding.

It's possible Lil E. Tee would not have run in the Belmont even with Lasix because of a lung infection.

Preakness winner Pine Bluff will contest the Belmont, but probably won't be the favorite, as he was in the Preakness despite his fifth-place finish in the Derby. The favorite is likely to be A.P. Indy, who missed the Derby and Preakness because of a bruised left front hoof.

A.P. Indy was impressive in winning the 1⅛-mile Peter Pan last Sunday at Belmont for his sixth straight victory and first since he won the 1⅛-mile Santa Anita Handicap April 4.

A victory in the 1½-mile Belmont by either Cristofori or My Memoirs would duplicate the feat of Go And Go, who shipped in from Ireland to win the 1990 Belmont.

Cristofori is co-owned by Sheik Mohammed Al Maktoum of Dubai, who also co-owned Arazi, the odds-on favorite who finished ninth in the Derby. Cristofori, trained by Andre Fabre, won the Prix de Conde at Longchamp as a 2-year-old, but is winless in two starts this year.

My Memoirs, who was purchased by a California stable called Team Valor, will remain in the United States after the Belmont. The colt earned his Belmont start by winning the 1¼-mil Dee Stakes on the grass in England in May.

Lil E. Tee, who raced on the analgesic Butazolidin in winning the 1¼-mile Derby, bled while finishing fifth in the 1 3-16-mile Preakness. The colt has not raced on Lasix this year, but he did run on it twice as a 2-year-old.

Alydeed, who has only five career starts, bled while finishing third in the Whatapleasure March 29 at Calder. He raced on Lasix in his two starts — a victory in the 1-mile Derby Trial and the second in the Preakness.

Alydeed's style of running on or near the pace, his natural speed and the benefit of the Preakness could have made a formidable challenger in the Belmont, a race that often is won from on or near the lead despite the 1½-mile distance.

Trainer Roger Attfield said he thought the colt might be able to run without Lasix, but, "Why experiment."

The major goal for the Canadian-bred, Canadian-owned colt is the Canada Triple Crown, which begins with the Queen's Plate July 5 at Woodbine.

Casual Lies raced on Lasix while finishing second in the 1¼-mile Derby and third in the 1 3-16-mile Preakness, but owner-trainer Shelley Riley did not hesitate in announcing the colt would run in the Belmont. Casual Lies has a chance to win the $1 million bonus that goes to the biggest point-earner in the three races on a basis of 10, 5, 3, 1 for the first four finishers.

Casual Lies has 8 points, and the only horse that can beat him is Pine Bluff, who has 10. A horse must finish all three races to be eligible for the bonus.

Pine Bluff raced on Butazolidin in the Derby, but has never raced on Lasix.

Other 3-year-olds being considered for the Belmont include Al Sabin, Colony Light, Montreal Marty, Agincourt, Jacksonsport and Dixie Brass.

Local company's success sparks economic growth

■ Jacobs Electronics expects to double its business and create more jobs by the end of the year.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

As the oil business continues to wane, one business in Midland is expanding at a phenomenal rate.

Jacobs Electronics, a manufacturing firm that moved to Midland last year from Los Angeles has doubled its business since December and expects to double again before the end of the year, according to national sales manager Steve Bowen.

Bowen said the number of telemarketing salesmen at Jacobs has gone from seven to 32 in the last five months and he is still hiring. Total employment has increased from 12 to 70 and is expected to top 100 by year's end, he said.

Since December, monthly sales revenues have jumped from $186,000 to more than $500,000 per month and continue to grow.

Chris Jacobs, founder and president of the company, said the impressive results come from doing a number of things right: "First, we introduced a new product — a new 'super computer' version of our Energy Team system, then we increased our advertising budget from $7,000 to $50,000 per month."

Jacobs said the company's success is feeding on itself: "Our company is advertising in more national automotive magazines. This produces more leads, which allows the company to develop a sales organization to more effectively utilize leads generated by the ads. More sales generated by the leads allows for more incentive for motivated salesmen and more revenues to increase the advertising budget. It is a system that is finally producing results."

Jacobs sells computerized automotive systems nationwide to retail stores and direct to customers.

"We had to get better before we could get big. We got better, now we are getting bigger," the founder said.

The rapid growth, however, has not come without problems. One of the most serious is a backlog of orders.

"Our sales have been growing so

Robbyne Fuller shows cultural activist George Richardson a blueprint for a cultural center proposed for southeast Midland. Mrs. Fuller and her husband, James, are participating with "Coming Home to America's Roots," a celebration of the black cowboy spearheaded by Richardson's public relations firm.

Group shoots to celebrate black west

■ George Richardson was in town Saturday to promote a movement that introduces the contribution blacks made to the west.

George Richardson remembers the first time he heard about black cowboys.

The public relations specialist and former New Jersey legislator was at a football game in 1968, and he thought the idea was crazy.

"I had been active in the civil rights movement," Richardson said. "This was right after a time of a lot of uprisings in the cities."

But he soon saw home movies of a black rodeo in Oklahoma, and quickly got hooked on a "new" aspect of the history of his people.

Now Richardson's public relations firm, Periscope Associates of New York, is heading up an effort to introduce the public to the contribution of blacks to the American West. The celebration is called "Coming Home to America's Roots."

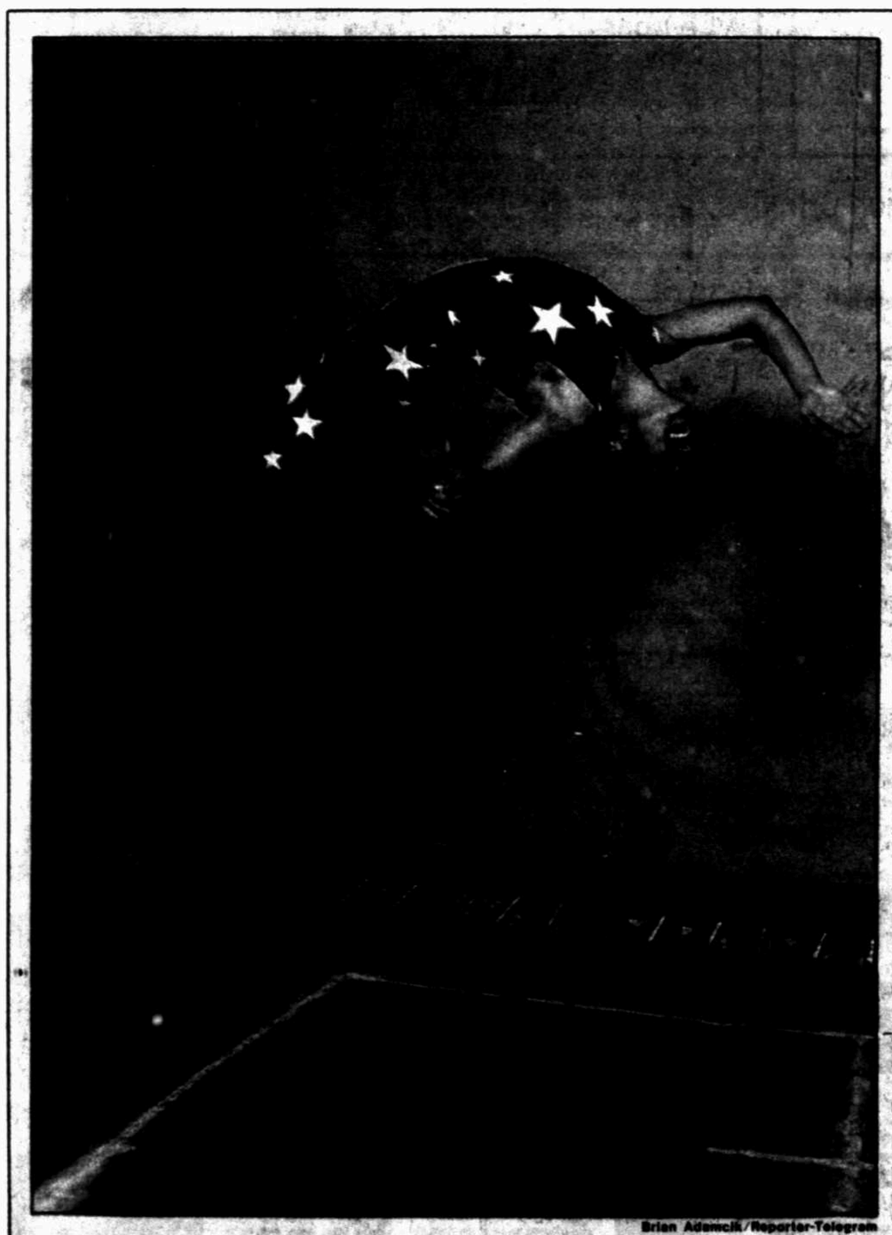

"The whole goal is to bring America back to its roots with the cowboy and black western heritage, to stimulate all kinds of activities that use the black western heritage," Richardson explained.

He and Eric Strong, a Lubbock historian and cultural activist, came through Midland Saturday after introducing the movement at the Fourth Annual National Cowboy Symposium in Lubbock.

Strong's group, the National Forgotten West Memorial Project, is working to build a monument in Lubbock honoring the black cowboy's contribution to the west.

Locally, Robbyne and James Fuller are hoping the local com-

Tykes flip over new power-type gymnastics

Unlike all-around gymnastics, acro-gymnastics does not discriminate.

"Anyone can do it. Kids don't have to be five-feet tall and 80 pounds to compete," said Michael Hooper, coach of the Tall City Hi-Lites.

Three months ago, Hooper opened his gym at 5025 Princeton Street and began teaching the finer points of power-tumbling and trampoline moves to about 35 children. Last week, 11 of his proteges, including two-year-old Jarred Boone, competed in an area meet in Lamesa with 125 other children.

"They did real well, especially after just three months of training. We got 12 firsts," Hooper said.

Hooper began coaching the sport about four years ago as an assistant for a Lamesa club. He decided to introduce the sport to Midland in February.

"He's changed his attitude a lot since his days as a roughneck," said Hooper's wife, Mary Ann.

"But I'm hard on my own kids," Hooper added. "They'll do something real good at a meet and I'll say 'That was good, but . . .' I also won't coach my own kids at a meet. It's too emotional."

But Hooper's children, Heather, 10, and Nick, 8, along with 14-year-old Kym Ward, are three of the main highlights for the Hi-Lites.

All three have qualified for the National Championships in Dallas on June 16-20.

Heather will compete in three events; power-tumbling, trampoline and the double-mini trampoline. Nick will compete in the trampoline and the double-mini trampoline and Kym will compete in power-tumbling.

When Rusk Elementary School pupils planted yellow marigolds and red geraniums on their school campus Friday, it culminated months of activities for the youngsters sponsored by K mart.

The store provided the flowers and Parent Teacher Association mothers provided the muscle — digging up beds and loosening dirt prior to planting.

"My kindergartners are very excited about planting the flowers," said Rusk teacher Nan Sublett.

GARY OTT

Here's to the Stephanie Luckenbachs of the world

This is that special time of the year when you pick up the daily newspaper and inside it you find all kinds of stories about outstanding high school graduates. Invariably, included in those stories is a list of the students' past accomplishments.

They usually go something like this:

Ott

"Stephanie Faye Luckenbach, daughter of Herman and Sadie Luckenbach, has received a scholarship to attend Westminister College. Miss Luckenbach, an honors student who never scored less than a 98 on any test in any class during her entire high school career and, as a result, ruined the curve for all of her normal classmates, also lettered in tennis and was president of the student body her senior year.

"She was vice-president of the National Honor Society, and was a member of the German Club, the Spanish Club, the Latin Club and the French Club. She was a cheerleader her junior and senior years and was named the Rotary Club's Outstanding Student 19 months in a row.

"Miss Luckenbach, who had a popular country-western song named after her, also was involved in church activities, singing in the youth choir and teaching a Sunday school class for underprivileged children. Her hobbies include working with the handicapped and visiting the elderly in nursing homes. During her spare time, she discovered a cure for cancer and won the Nobel Peace Prize for her work with lepers in Calcutta."

Accompanying the "brief" news item is a photograph of the award-winning student. It goes without saying that our perky little Stephanie Faye Luckenbach is just "cute as a bug." In other words, this 17-year-old girl is darn near perfect. No acne, no braces, no nothing.

Who said being a modern day teen-ager was tough? As far as Stephanie Faye Luckenbach is concerned, life is a breeze. Her future plans include becoming a corporate lawyer, marrying a doctor, having three precious children (all of whom will have wavy hair and flawless skin) and living happily ever after in a rich suburb with a name that ends in "Estates."

Yeah, right, and gag me with a spoon.

Now tell the truth, didn't you know Stephanie Faye Luckenbach back in your high school days? Of course you did. We all did.

And didn't she just gross you out?

I thought so.

She was the kind of kid your parents always threw in your face. "Why can't you be more like Stephanie Faye?" your mom would whine. "I bet Stephanie Faye doesn't do that," your dad would chime in.

Stephanie Faye this, Stephanie Faye that . . .

Get that spoon and gag me again.

Now, you might be saying, "Gary, I detect just a hint of jealousy in your comments. Admit it. Deep inside, you always wanted to be like Stephanie Faye."

No I didn't. Call me madcap, but I've always had this peculiar desire to be normal. A flaw now and then, while not something to be aggressively pursued, is not an altogether bad characteristic. It is, in fact, what makes us human.

And that — being normal, or, rather not being normal — is what has always bothered me about the Stephanie Fayes of this world. They are too perfect. A part of me even feels pity for them. It is as though they have never suffered disappointment, never been disillusioned, never confronted pain.

Life is too easy for them. Looks, intelligence, talent. You name it and they got it.

Without even seeming to try, they become the star athlete, the ace student, the most popular kid in school. While everyone else is fretting over that unsightly blemish, they just laugh because they have never even been tempted to purchase a tube of Clearasil.

Why should they?

Their skin is perfect. So are their legs, their hair, their personalities. God looked down from heaven one day and said, "Hmm, I'm in the mood for perfection." So He created Stephanie Faye Luckenbach.

The flaws that normally would have gone to her were dispersed among the rest of us. Is it fair?

No, of course not. All you have to do is look at the first four letters of her last name to see that it is not fair. But, hey, such is life. No one said there would always be justice. In the real world, you learn to take the bad with the good. And you should be mature about it.

Wait a minute. What am I saying? Me? Mature?

You were right awhile ago. I am jealous. I do want to be just like Stephanie Faye Luckenbach.

To heck with those nasty old flaws. Perfection is what Stephanie Faye and I are all about. And I'm sure our children, wavy hair and all, will be just darling.

munity will back a black cultural project in Midland as part of the celebration.

They want to build a cultural center in southeast Midland and revive the community as a tourist stop in tribute to black cowboys and settlers.

Most people, Richardson admits, are as ignorant about the black contribution to the west as he was. History books left the stories out or obscured them, Strong said.

"The problem is the mindset of writers, educators and publishers was exclusive, not inclusive, to define how America came to be," Fuller said. "African-Americans were put out on the edge of the frontier as soldiers to wipe out the Indians so the Anglo settlers could come in. It's time to uncover the true story."

Strong said black soldiers, known as buffalo soldiers, black marshalls, cowboys, even outlaws, were a powerful force in the settlement of the west.

Mrs. Fuller said the southeast side of Midland could become a well-visited memorial and cultural center devoted to the history.

"This used to be a booming area of businesses," she said, indicating the barren, dilapidated area just north and west of Mount Rose Baptist Church — Midland's oldest black church.

"If we can develop tourism here, we've got economic development and we've got jobs for people," Mrs. Fuller said.

"The challenge we have is to convince first the people in our immediate community that this is viable," Fuller said. "We're talking about entrepreneurism."

The Fullers and Strong talked of a "tourist trail" that could include Lubbock's memorial and park, San Angelo's Fort Concho where buffalo soldiers stayed, Midland's cultural center and attractions in other area towns. Mrs. Fuller said they would like to pay tribute to "80 John Wallace," a black rancher who owned many acres near Loraine in Mitchell County.

To build the center, a small building with seminar rooms and space for art and memorabilia, the Fullers estimate they would need $500,000 - 600,000. They've considered applying for some of the city's Community Development Block Grant funding for their project.

Richardson said the idea, like others springing up all over the country along with Coming Home, is viable.

"We're not just talking about black tourists," he said. "The black west is really regenerating interest in the 'Old West' and all that goes along with it."

Coming Home's main event will be a televised three-day festival in Houston. But Richardson and his partner, Ingrid Frank, are working to be sure the celebration's influence is widespread.

They have been developing the idea of the celebration for 15 years, Richardson said. Now, he said, they hope it will become a catalyst for awareness, and an awakening of a forgotten contribution blacks made to their country.

succession on a floor mat, Hooper said.

"Dancing is not involved. This is pure competition. If I wanted to see dancing, I'd watch some dance show on TV," Hooper said.

For Kym, competing on the national level is old hat.

"She placed first at nationals in 1988 and then placed fourth in world (competition) in Lubbock," her mother, Cherl Ward said.

This year's world competition will be held in New Zealand in the fall. Those placing sixth or higher at the national competition can advance to world.

"Kym took three years off before coming back this year. She was burned-out," Ms. Ward said.

"Burn-out can happen," Hooper said. "It takes a lot of working out to get real good."

The Hoopers advise parents interested in getting their children involved in the sport to start early.

"The younger the better. It gets them in the swing of things early," Hooper said. "But at age two, there really isn't much for the judges to go on except their smile."

Hooper ultimately hopes to attract between 100 and 125 children to the gym.

"I think being here can and will help a lot of children. It gives them something to do. It keeps them off the streets," Hooper said.

On Saturdays, Hooper voluntarily opens the gym for children who want to practice on the weekends.

Hooper is safety certified with the American Trampoline and Tumbling Association. Mrs. Hooper and Ms. Ward will be certified this summer. Kym Ward is also training to become a part-time coach.

"We also teach them safety. When they fall, we teach them the right way to do it," Hooper said. "There is a safe way to fall."

Ms. Ward believes that the lessons learned from training have helped her daughter in other aspects in life.

"She has been rewarded from her years of performing. She doesn't get nervous in speeches or anything anymore. And she takes her training less seriously than before she stopped for the three years," she said.

Winners at last week's Lamesa meet, their age and their competition follow: Jarred Boone, 2, sixth in power tumbling and sixth in trampoline; Karita Drumm, 4, first in power tumbling and first in trampoline; Lindsey Moore, 6, first in power tumbling and first in trampoline; Justin Dodson, 3, first in power tumbling and second in trampoline; Justin Olgin, 3, second in power tumbling and first in trampoline; Dalyn Peters, 9, first in power tumbling and first in trampoline; Jennifer Carter, 9, first in power tumbling and second in trampoline; Jessica Steppe, 7, first in power tumbling and fourth in trampoline; Emily Wyrick, 3, first in power tumbling and first in trampoline; Heather Hooper, 10, first in power tumbling and first in trampoline and Nick Hooper, 8, second in power tumbling and second in trampoline.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Woman dies in fire

Staff Reports

ODESSA — An elderly woman lost her life in a house fire Saturday afternoon.

The fire, which began shortly after 12:30 p.m., spread quickly throughout the home at 903 W. 25th, reports said. Odessa's Fire Department sent five units to the scene, where workers rescued one woman suffering smoke-related injuries. The injured woman's elderly mother died in the fire — probably due to smoke inhalation — reports said.

Neither victim's name had been released late Saturday.

Woman is injured

A Houston woman was briefly trapped under her car at a Midland motel Friday, suffering internal injuries and a fractured arm, police said.

Gayle Sanders, 50, remained in satisfactory condition at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center Saturday, a nursing supervisor said.

The accident ocurred when Ms. Sanders put her car in reverse in the parking lot of the Plaza Inn about 4 p.m. Reports said she tried to disengage the parking brake and the handle broke. While kneeling next to the car trying to put the handle back on, Ms. Sanders was apparently trapped under the wheel as the car moved.

The car rolled in a semi-circle and hit an unattended vehicle a few parking spaces away.

Drug bust

ODESSA — Authorities rounded up 12 people suspected of illegal drug sales and prostitution Friday. More arrests are expected, police said.

The bust followed the issuance of 28 warrants for 22 people believed to be involved in cocaine and marijuana dealing and prostitution in the city. Reports said the investigation has been ongoing since September and is aimed at "street-level" activity.

Twelve were in custody Saturday. Two of those targeted are already incarcerated in the Texas Department of Corrections.

Reports said those arrested Friday and the charges against them were: Sharon L. McDaniel, 29, delivery of cocaine; Michelle J. Stone, 23, delivery of cocaine and prostitution; Dale Clark Webb, 29, delivery of cocaine and delivery of marijuana; Olivia Girror, 29, prostitution; Esmeralda Minjarez, 27, prostitution; John T. Allen, 23, delivery of marijuana, two counts; Abbey J. Morrer, 40, delivery of cocaine; Obie King, 66, delivery of cocaine; Bryce T. Jones, 27, delivery of simulated narcotics; and Michael Arrington, 31, delivery of cocaine.

Police said their investigation was continuing.

Five car accident

Five vehicles were involved in an accident in the 3500 block of Andrews Highway Friday, but no one was injured.

No citations were issued in connection with the accident, which police said occurred when one car lost control, forcing other drivers to swerve. The first car then slid across the median into the oncoming traffic.

He also has hired a new production manager, Clarence Percy of Odessa, to work out some of the inventory and production problems. "Percy formerly owned the Honda dealership in Odessa. He has had assembly experience at Texas Instruments and knows D-base programming extensively."

Jacobs said the move to Midland from California cost more than anticipated, but that is behind them and the company is are now dedicated to the process of getting bigger and better.

He said a new line of racing products and planned development of an ignition system for compressed natural gas vehicles could create another round of phenomenal expansion for the Midland company and create even more jobs.

Jacobs said everyone in Midland — the City Council and the Midland Chamber of Commerce — had been very helpful in assisting the company in its move to Midland.

months.

"We had the Star Student recognition program. It was an incentive for the kids. The winners went to K mart for lunch," Ms. Howbert said.

K mart is just one of many businesses donating supplies, money or employee time to volunteer in the schools. Businesses are becoming partners in enhancing the school environment and financing supplies with the district's "Partners in Education" program.

"Businesses offer patronage and support for students and teachers," said Martha Manulik, VIPS (Volunteers in Public Schools) supervisor for Midland Independent School District.

"Some of the businesses can allow their employees one hour of release time per week," she said.

Ms. Manulik said more important than the need for volunteers is that the volunteers from the business community enforce the idea that schools deserve their support.

"Any kind of parental or community involvement is saying the schools are important. When someone outside of the schools comes in, it says: 'This is important enough for me to be here,'" she said. "That's what it's going to take as a nation to improve our schools."

"A business may function like a patron and donate cups for children to plant dirts and seeds in for Earth Day," the VIPS supervisor said.

Other joint efforts between schools and businesses this past school year included the partnership between Taco Villa and Bowie Elementary, Mobil and Crockett Elementary, TEAM Bank and West Early Childhood Center, Oxy Petroleum and South Elementary, Southwestern Bell and Bunche Early Childhood Center, Southeast Senior Citizens Center and Carver Center. First City Bank also offers banking experiences to the district sixth and seventh graders.

Businesses interested in the Partners in Education program may call Ms. Manulik at 689-1008.

Judge says test may be illegal

GILMER (AP) — A federal judge allowed two students who failed a state-required competency exam to participate in commencement exercises after saying the test "may not be legally valid."

Parties in the case said U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice's ruling could lead to a court determination that the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills (TAAS) is unconstitutional.

Tuck

Late registration is limited to the first four days of classes — Tuesday through Thursday and Monday, June 8. Late registration is handled in the Student Services area of the Student Center. Hours of late registration are 7 a.m.-6 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday and 7 a.m.-5 p.m. on June 8.

More information is available by calling 685-4501.

It's now just another chapter for the Midland College history. With the conclusion of the men's National Junior College Athletic Association's national tennis championship in Corpus Christi, intercollegiate tennis at MC is over.

For more recent residents, we'll remind you that once upon time there was a men's swimming-diving team, a women's swimming-diving team, and a women's golf team. All of them were dissolved for the same reason: a lack of available competition and the cost of maintaining the programs.

And, like the tennis programs, a lack of success certainly wasn't a factor. The men's and women's swimming teams both were national runners-up and the women's golf team won a national championship during its brief existence.

But we'll pause for a moment in tribute for the wonderful job that all the tennis coaches and all the tennis players did during their stays at MC. Their efforts, and their accomplishments, were nothing less than remarkable.

Chaparral golfers, meanwhile, have been tuning up for their national championship tournament, which is being played in Scottsdale, Ariz. This is the first year in which only Division I NJCAA teams have played their championship alone. Last year, when Midland College hosted the national golf tournament, there were Divisions I, II, and III all competing at the same time.

With 10 victories in 14 tournaments this season, the Chaps are among the favorites to win the title, which will be contested on the McCormick Ranch Resorts course June 9-12.

A news conference is scheduled at the college Thursday at 10 a.m. concerning ways in which many Midland citizens can become more involved with Midland College through a new volunteer program. You'll learn much more about the Chaparral Corps in weeks to come.

There are some openings in some classes for both sessions of Kids' College at Midland College. Most of the remaining slots are in the July session, but there are some in a few of the June classes.

Kids' College is for youngsters who have finished first through sixth grades. They can attend afternoon classes — one, two, or three each day — Monday through Thursday June 15-25 or July 13-23.

Registration is handled in person at the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building between 7 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

For information, call 685-4518.

For adults, there are scores of classes starting this week through the auspices of the Continuing Education department. Since a large number of them begin Monday, you'll need to hustle in tomorrow morning to get enrolled. But you'll be able to choose from: 50-plus Aerobics (limited to those at least 50 years of age), Basic Reserve Law Enforcement Course, Conversational or Business Russian, Law Enforcement Arrest, Search, and Seizure, Tae Kwon Do for adults and youth, Tummy Trimmers, Accounting I or II, Better Business Writing, Introduction to Business, Business Communications, Calculating Machines, Computer and You, Grandparents' Computers, Health Unit Coordinator, Principals of Insurance I, II or III, Lotus 1-2-3 Level I, Quicken Level I, Spanish I, Beginning, Intermediate or Advanced Typewriting/Keyboarding, Word Processing Training, and Word Perfect Level I or II.

Register in the Continuing Education Office or phone 685-4518 for information.

H.A. Tuck is Public Relations Director at Midland College.

HOMES & CLASSIFIED

Photography by Curt Wilcott

By Sonja Merrick

Vibrant colors, classic shapes, dramatic angles, sophisticated patterns blend together to create a perfect dream of a home.

Strolling up the walk you'll find yourself surrounded by impeccable landscaping — mature trees, raised flower beds and lush shrubbery that hugs the house and walkway. All meticulously cared for and verdant.

Open the leaded-glass door, step onto the Mexican tile of the foyer floor, enjoy the rich blue and deep-red patterned paper that adorns the walls. Then turn right for a breathtaking sight.

The immense formal living and dining area is nothing short of spectacular. Sink into plush, deep-blue carpeting, look up at the pitched ceiling that boasts twin skylights. Clerestory windows bring in even more light. Light that bounces merrily across the rich-red walls and the pristine white trim. To the left, find a wall of white-painted wood built-ins. Then right, a corner of the wall is constructed of stone that rises to the ceiling. Housed in it is a glowing fireplace. Another wall is dominated by glass — windows and doors that open to a covered patio and magnificent pool area.

Step up two wide stairs that flow into the formal dining area. It shares the stone corner with the living area — and houses yet another fireplace. A French door opens to a delightful outdoor atrium.

Turn left from the dining area and find a lovely, blue-papered guest bath /hobby room combination.

A right turn from the foyer leads to a den that's sophisticated and at the same time cozy. A high ceiling pitches dramatically downward — at its low point there are three skylights that shine merrily on indoor plantings. Floors are Mexican tile, one wall is glass — and reflects the light and beauty of the room.

Another right turn leads to a glorious kitchen. Elegant floral wallpaper frames the profusion of white wood cabinets. A huge center island has storage cabinets on two sides. There's a sizeable kitchen desk, and, nearby, a wet bar that opens both to the living and pool areas. Counters and splashbacks are deep-blue in color. Appliances include double-oven, built-in microwave, dishwasher, compactor and disposal.

The nearby breakfast area is papered in the same glorious pattern as the kitchen. Ceilings are white, sliding glass doors open to the pool. A butler's pantry is situated nearby.

Continue walking and find a delightful master suite. A cozy nook situated on one side makes a perfect study or sitting are. Mirrored walls, red paint, coordinated borders add drama and warmth. The adjoining master bath is huge. It boasts double vanities, a separate makeup area and floor-to-ceiling mirrors. Also two huge, separate walk-in closets, an oversize shower and a whirlpool tub.

And still, there's more. An entire second floor, in fact.

It consists of a large hallway, off of which lie three sizeable bedrooms. Two are connected by a full bath. The other has a full bath of it's own, plus a large alcove that can serve as a sitting area.

Other amenities include plantation shutters and recessed lighting throughout. Also ceiling fans, oversize three-car garage, cabana by pool, sprinkler system, circle drive and dog run.

This exquisite Saddle Club North home is being offered by RE/MAX for $259,000. Shown by appointment only. Please call 682-8820.

Association supports continuing education

Committed to promoting professionalism in the real estate industry, the Midland Association of Realtors, Inc. supports new laws requiring mandatory continuing education (MCE) for real estate agents in Texas.

In 1989, the 71st Texas Legislature added a requirement to the Real Estate License Act requiring MCE for real estate license renewals.

"Mandatory continuing education for real estate agents will assure clients and customers knowledgeable, professional assistance when buying or selling real estate," said Pat Paxton, President of the Midland Association of Realtors, Inc. "Realtors have always promoted professional standards within our membership, but MCE now requires licensees to keep abreast of changes in the industry."

The Midland Association, a member of the Texas Association of Realtors (TAR), is working closely with the state organization to provide quality courses for agents trying to meet MCE requirements. TAR was the first organization to become a provider of MCE in Texas and offers its courses to both members and non-members.

The Midland Association will provide the location for a TAR sponsored course on Thursday, June 25. For more information, contact the Association office at 682-9725.

Trees can be root of homeowner problem

AP Special Features

When Joyce Kilmer wrote that he'd "never see a poem lovely as a tree," he didn't have in mind a tall pine raining sappy needles all over his car, raking mountains of leaves in the fall or listening to a snow-laden elm creak in a high wind as it threatens to crash through the roof of his house.

Your own yard may have problem trees that present a hazard to property and personal safety, and would be better off removed. Should you attempt the job yourself? Felling a tree in your yard is not the same as it is in the forest. A tall tree may have to be removed in sections and felled in a precise manner to avoid crashing down on power lines, roadways and nearby homes.

Once the tree is down, you'll have to contend with cutting up the trunk and branches and disposing of all the waste wood — not to mention removing the stump. Of course, you can rent the equipment that a pro would use to handle the job. However, it's likely that you'll find the rental costs, specialized knowledge and hard work required make hiring an expert a real bargain.

Getting the right people for the job also takes some know-how. First, make sure the company carries liability insurance. Without this, personal injury to anyone (including those hired to do the work), or damage to nearby property, can open you up to a serious personal lawsuit. And, don't just take the company's word on insurance — ask to see a copy of their insurance certificate.

While costs can vary depending on location, you're better off paying a flat rate for the entire job rather than paying on a time-and-materials basis. This way, you know the total cost before you start and can shop around to find the best deal.

As a rule, you can expect to pay about $500 to $600 per eight-hour day, which includes the crew and equipment. You shouldn't have to pay anything before the work starts, and it's a good idea to look for a company that's been in business for a while and has references you can check.

Where a tall tree can't easily be felled due to potential damage to property, it's removed in sections. The first step is to remove the branches — working from the bottom up to avoid getting the upper branches entangled in the lower ones. A cherry picker and a chain saw are standard tools for this work.

Alternatively, some pros use a rope and climbing saddle, and cut the branches with a handsaw. Large branches are best lowered to the ground with a rope rather than letting them fall. Once the trunk is cleared, sections are cut off starting at the top.

Stump removal is best handled with a stump cutter or grinder. This powerful machine (at least 30 horsepower) has a large wheel that's fitted with carbide teeth. The cutting wheel is positioned hydraulically, and is moved back and forth over the stump until the wood is ground away to the desired depth.

If you want to plant grass over the area, the grinder should work down to about 6-8 inches. Increase the depth to about 1 foot for a paved driveway.

First-time homebuyer's dream can be reality

Today's real estate market and current low interest rate have made it the opportune time for first-time home buyers to buy their dream home.

According to a national survey potential home buyers have three common anxieties:

- First, they wonder of their personal finances qualify them to make such a purchase.
- Second, they are apprehensive about selecting a permanent location.
- Third, they feel intimidated due to their lack of real estate knowledge and want to avoid being taken advantage of by a realtor or a seller.

Many young people believe their dream of owning their first home is not obtainable because of financing or credit problems. Most are not familiar with the many options available.

A common reason a young couple may rent instead of own is they do not have enough savings for a down payment. The options in this case could be a lease purchase, government financing, help from a relative or even the consistent help of a good Realtor in finding a "Bargain"; such as a non-qualifying assumption of an existing home loan.

Mortgage companies may also offer creative financing ideas. For example, an adjustable rate mortgage initially has a low monthly payment that increases over time to handle the gradual increase in monthly payments.

Seeking a permanent location is never easy, but here are some tips: If you have a family, the subdivision should meet certain criteria. Examine the school district, availability of public transportation, traffic, taxes and other children in the area.

A growing family might also consider if the home they select is conducive to adding on another room, such as a game room or extra bedroom.

Finally, you might have postponed buying a first home because of your lack of real estate knowledge. The language and terms used in real estate may seem unfamiliar and confusing.

What is an Earnest Money Contract? What are points? What is an assumable mortgage?

Don't be intimidated. Contact a trained professional Realtor to help you understand the home buyer's process. A Realtor can provide answers to the points covered in this article.

Make buying your first home a memory to treasure forever.

SELLING YOUR HOUSE

by Jo Dennis

BE CAREFUL WHAT YOU SAY

When you are selling your house the wrong word can jeopardize the sale.

Selling is psychologically oriented. The prospect must see himself living in your home before he will make an offer. The Salesperson may be moving the buyer through your home with a certain rhythm that will bring the prospect to the realization that this is the house he's always wanted.

If you are home when the salesperson arrives with a prospective buyer, greet them at the door with a warm smile and welcome. Then, hard as it may be, retire and let the Salesperson do her work. Our people are trained.

If you list your house with us, we'll know your house inside and out. And, without a wrong word, we'll try to guide the prospect to that happy conclusion: an offer to you of the highest possible price the market affords.

Price shocks

A shot of the Midland Tank Farm, a major pipeline hub for the United States. Oil prices sent shockwaves through the rest of the markets this week when they surged over $1 Tuesday amid indications Saudi Arabia was dropping its insistence on maintaining market share and backing efforts to increase crude prices. By the end of the week, crude futures were hovering just under the $22 mark and posted prices were shy of $21.

Reserve values

A report by Houston-based Strevig & Associates found that the median value for domestic oil and gas reserves fell 20 percent in the first quarter in transactions dominated by natural gas. But experts say they still see large deals being made, and the key word is conservative

Fewer cutbacks

PORT ARTHUR, Texas — Closing half of Chevron U.S.A.'s Port Arthur refinery will eliminate fewer jobs than company officials first estimated, refinery officials have said.

Shutting down the refinery's oldest and least efficient units will eliminate about 500 of the 1,950 jobs at the refinery, manager Lance Gyorfi said last week.

Refinery officials earlier had estimated 700 jobs would be lost in the downsizing.

Gyorfi said the company is trying to find jobs for all the displaced workers, but estimated only about half the 500 workers could escape layoffs.

"I hope we don't have to lay anybody off, but that's not realistic," he said.

The Texas Employment Commission will set up a program at the refinery next month to begin training workers to find other jobs in the Port Arthur area, he said.

The pumpjack superimposed over a production map of the Permian Basin is indicative of how the face of the Basin is being changed by the sale of producing oil and gas properties by the majors to smaller independent companies.

Divestiture activity heats up in Basin

■ As the majors sell off their oil and gas properties, smaller independents are left with an abundance of properties to evaluate for purchase.

By Ellen Hopkins

As many of the major oil companies reduce the number of employees in order to increase efficiency, so are those same companies reducing the number of oil and gas properties in which they hold an interest.

Most of these properties are either marketed in a bid package format or sold at auction. Some properties are traded for similar value properties in a different geographical area. And some properties are sold to unsolicited parties.

As a result many independent oil and gas companies have been targeted with an abundance of properties to evaluate and consider.

Evaluations Manager Ron Milligan, of Texaco, described the properties his company is trying to sell as "non-core."

"When we consider a property we ask 'Does this fit into our operations; does it fit our description of a core property?' Non-core properties are typically located on the fringes of our operations," he said. "We regard them as detracting from our focused efforts of CO2 floods, waterfloods, and good development drilling projects."

He described his properties as evenly split between oil and gas interests.

"The properties we would move to sell at this time are packaged to make them attractive to the independents in the Permian Basin." Milligan said Texaco has considered solicited bids only.

"We're just focusing locally on companies with offices here, even though they may also have offices in Dallas or Houston."

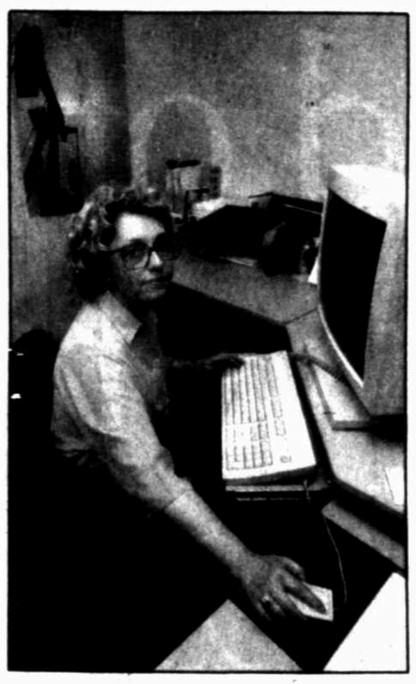

"Our divestitures aren't of the scope that some of the majors have as far as the number of properties and size," Milligan said. "We operate in 42 counties and maybe there will be only a half dozen we'll get out of all together. But those are the counties where Texaco now has only one or two properties. This is what we call 'on the fringe' and not core properties."

Milligan said these sales should in no way be construed as Texaco diminishing its presence here in the Permian Basin.

"Texaco still has a bright future in the Permian Basin," he said. "We've been pleased with sales and find a significant interest among the independents here."

Mike Kimmit, public affairs manager for Mobil in Dallas, said Mobil began in 1986 to identify those properties it felt would be more valuable to

THE ART OF ACQUISITIONS

Acquisitions, divestitures involve most of oil patch

■ As activity in acquisitions and divestitures continues to grow, many oil companies are establishing special groups for 'doing deals.'

By Johnnye Montgomery

According to Ronyld Wise, president of PLS Inc. of Midland, almost everybody in the oil patch is involved in one way or another in acquisitions and divestitures.

"Five years ago very few people knew what an acquisition and divestiture manager was, but now almost every major oil company and even large independent companies have set up groups within their organization that are totally responsible for acquisitions, corporate developments, business developments –doing deals.

"It's taken some responsibility away from the land man and now you have financial people involved in it, and engineering. Different people. What's unique about the acquisition business is that you don't see the same disciplines. There's always been exploration, land, engineering. Now all of a sudden you have a new arena out there, and it's headed by different people within different companies.

"For instance, Exxon predominantly has engineers in their divestiture group. But there are other companies that let landmen handle it. Arco uses a lot of land people. And then the thing that's happened in the last six months is that now you have another group being de-

Banks shift lending for acquisitions

■ Banks that once made only drilling loans have switched to acquisition loans.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

As acquisition and divesture activity heats up, energy-lending banks are playing an expanded role in financing.

"Probably 90 percent of our energy loans are for acquisition of producing properties," says Sidney K. Smith, senior v.p. of energy lending at First City, Texas of Midland.

"Moreover, we expect acquisition activity to remain strong for the rest of the year and at least through 1993."

Decline of major oil presence will be felt

Pitts

As the major oil companies downsize in the Permian Basin and move on to greener pastures the question on many minds is: What will be the impact?

There are some variables to be considered: Will the downsize be a disaster, that will wipe out Midland's prime economic base and bring severe financial difficulty to the entire Permian Basin? Not hardly. There will be some hardship, but the oil is still here and has only changed hands.

Will the Permian Basin be better off when the major oil companies finally sell all their properties to local independents and move on. Absolutely not.

Some say independents will spend more to keep the wells profitable and they will spend their profits in the Permian Basin, unlike major oil companies who sent profits somewhere outside the Basin for distribution.

There is also the notion that the transfer of properties will create a whole new generation of millionaires in Midland, to get behind worthy community projects. "Look who really makes things happen in this community," said a local banker. "It's the wealthy independents."

If few major oil company profits stick in the Basin, there are other compensations.

Majors oil companies spend loads of money here — for wages, taxes, rent, royalty, services and wages. Independents will operate more efficiently and will give more attention to production — even the majors admit this. But they will do it with fewer people and fewer people means fewer jobs.

Many independents who live here will spend their profits in the Basin, but there's no accounting, for the profits of independent outfits from Houston, Denver and elsewhere that own large chunks of oil properties in the Permian Basin. Chances are those profits will be spent in Houston, Denver and elsewhere. Exported profits are exported profits, whether its by majors or independents.

Independent millionaire oilmen with money to give away do account for much of the excellent lifestyle in Midland. One only has to look at the good that has been brought to Midland by its excellent foundations, and generous entrepreneurs. What other city in America has a foundation that gives a free year of college to graduating seniors.

Buddy Sipes, local independent and city councilman remarked recently: "People in other communities are amazed that we in Midland can get so many grand and worthy community projects up and going, while they flounder with the most elementary civic projects. It's because we have a contingent of wealthy individuals and families who can and do jump-start every worthy project."

But this is not to say major oil companies are not good corporate citizens. They also get behind worthy community projects with funding and leadership.

At the same time, the millionaire independents from Houston and Denver that own Basin production will more likely get behind the Boy Scouts and symphony in those communities than Midland.

Any way you look at it there are a host of variables associated with the decline of the major oil companies in the Permian Basin. But to suggest that the Basin somehow might be better off when the major oil companies are finally gone is simply not accurate.

The oil industry seems to work best when there is a healthy marriage of aggressive entrepreneurship and deep pockets. And, in that respect, the aggres-

BANKS: Energy lending moves to production

(From 1E)

He noted that loans for lease acquisition and drilling used to account for nearly 100 percent of the bank's energy lending, but now accounts for only 10 percent.

"We are budgeted to loan $36 million for energy this year," said Ed Jones, president of Texas Commerce, "but we could lend much more. We are not restrained by funds."

Jones noted that the bank had just finished a "call blitz" to inform customers and potential customers of its ability to make energy and other loans.

"Our customers are telling us that there are more oil properties out there for sale than they can look at. It is definitely an acquisition game now." He said that the bank had zero requests for loans to drill. "Nobody is drilling, except for drainage purposes. We have had no requests this year."

Other banks who are looking to play a strong hand in energy lending are: Team Bank, NationsBank, Midland American and Texas National.

Joe Andrews, president of Team Bank, said his bank had been a small energy lender in the past, but with the high level of acquisition activity was looking to become more active.

"We are now trying to move in the direction of becoming an energy lender, using our Fort Worth office for engineering assistance," said Andrews. "We see great opportunity with the current number of properties on the market."

Currently energy loans at Midland banks are ranging from 50 to 80 percent and take three to five weeks to approve. In some rare cases, however, a few 100 percent loans have been made.

In most cases cash or producing properties are used as collateral for loans, says Sid Smith.

Smith says a big concern of bankers in making an energy loan — probably more so than decline curves — is environmental issues. Field inspections are made of each lease and if potential environmental problems are spotted, an environmental survey by a consultant may be required.

"Environmental concerns have not become a major problem yet, but we see where they could," he said.

Operators looking to use behind-the-pipe reserves as collateral for an acquisition loan might find it more difficult. While behind the pipe reserves are used to make development loans, once the property has been acquired, they are seldom considered in acquisition loans.

Jarrett Dean, petroleum engineer for Texas Commerce, noted that there will probably be extended development lending once operators pay down acquisition debt and go looking for upside potential on newly purchased properties.

veloped in the oil companies which is for international which really is brand new. I ran into the man with Enserch in the airport in Dallas last week. One of their key acquisition people is now heading up their international objectives. And that's the same thing with Plains Resources set up a guy to handle acquisitions."

But Wise is quick to point out that while the big players all seem to be going international, that doesn't mean the news is all bad. It just means there will be new opportunities for the wide-awake operator with lower overhead.

"Everybody's rationalizing assets, trying to figure out if there's other opportunities out there (internationally) that are more rewarding and richer than can be found in the States."

Wise sees the majors' divestitures as a normal reaction to the changing political and economic climate.

"Of course, the goals for a major oil company are a lot different than the goals for a guy in Midland Texas. They're looking at taking limited capital and resources and spending them where they can make the most money. I think that there's a lot of opportunity here for a little independent.

"A lot of the big companies that have made major acquisitions aren't making any money. If they can't make any money off that stuff in the states, it's going to leave a lot of it to smaller people.

"One operator tells me that what he sees happening is the same thing that happened to the Eastern Shelf between Abilene and Fort Worth about 20 years ago, when all the majors got out and started selling to the independents. Those independents that got in there and made good acquisitions and picked up acreage and so forth have done real well in the last 10 or 12 years. For instance Graham (Bettis, Boyle, and Stovall) has done real well.

"I think there will be a lot of opportunity for independents in Midland and West Texas and Oklahoma and all over the Permian Basin to come along and pick up properties behind the majors and manage them a little bit better because they can pay attention to them. The majors a lot of times can't do that."

Wise says in recent years new buyers such as utilities, with ready sources of capital, have come into the energy business in a big way, through acquisitions of large oil and gas reserves.

"It's a different type of buyers. GNI, Graham, Torch, and other larger independents made all the major acquisitions in 1989. GNI made one acquisition last year in the neighborhood of $22 to $26 million. Now you're seeing less of them and more of the utilities. Those are the fund companies."

However, as could be expected, some of these utilities' ventures fell upon hard times through a lack of experience and expertise. In a recent issue of his newsletter, Wise questioned the effect of the poor performance of these subsidiaries upon the future of oil and gas purchases by other utilities.

Yet, Wise says, the utilities he's contacted don't seem to be backing off.

"They all say, 'Oh, we're still solid on gas,' " he said. "I don't know what's going to happen. You can look at all the companies using fund money. Utilities made a lot of gas acquisitions offshore. There's been different trends out there."

However, although the faces of the buyers and sellers may have changed, the action has kept steady. "We've been really busy – involved in over 150 deals in the last two and a half years – that's one a week or more. That might range from a $50,000 property to a group of 30 $50,000 properties."

"The people here in Midland do deals under $5 million. Most do deals under a half million.

"We've seen a lot of deals get done for all the properties under $100,000, and that's why we think the market's real strong. I'm pleasantly surprised at it. Of course, for the upper markets, when you get into properties above a half million dollars, it's a little harder to get the money. The funding is in real short supply."

Wise says major companies aren't just divesting. They are also doing a lot of like-kind trading.

"A guy called yesterday and he traded two low-end properties for one. Then I had a man call me yesterday, from Fort Worth, and he had ten leases in north Texas, and he doesn't really want to sell them. He wants to trade them, or merge them, or do something with them. He's not interested in selling out; he wants to stay in business. So maybe that's an indication that some of the low-end guys and some of the smaller independents are looking at doing trades too. The majors have been doing trades for at least the last three or four years.

"In fact Amoco and Arco have trade groups set up within their divestiture group. They might have one person and all they do is trade. That's a hard way to do business when you trade because you have to get everybody to agree on the price. We did a package for (a major oil company). They didn't want to sell, they wanted to trade. Strategically, that's how they wanted to do it. I don't know how successful their efforts were, in trading or selling their properties, but they had some fields in there that needed secondary and tertiary projects, and secondary waterflood, and they were looking for partners to come in and help them develop them."

Wise says the smaller independent shouldn't overlook the possibility of dealing internationally, either.

PITTS: Majors add to Basin

sive independents and the monied majors have complemented one another very well for many decades in exploration and development venture. Who else but the cash-rich majors could afford to finance the development of giant enhanced recovery projects such as Texaco's Mabee field?

And now, as majors downsize, the two continue to complement one another on a buyer-seller level, establishing a chain of ownership from majors through the ranks of independents that is serving the industry well.

In another note on the issue of exporting profits, one fact is overlooked: Most major oil company offices in Midland are divisional in nature with responsibility for production in other states as well as the Permian Basin. This means far more jobs are created locally than if responsibility only went to the borders of the Permian Basin. For instance, Exxon covers the entire mid-continent area from Midland. Arco's area is even larger.

This expanded area of responsibility for major oil companies not only creates more jobs but more business travel in and out of the city. Major oil company executives coming and going account for a significant portion of the gate count at Midland International, helping to keep the gates open for all of us.

Then there is the matter of wages. If and when independents take over most of the major properties, it is unlikely they will ever be able to match the majors in wage contribution.

Most of the jobs at a division level are professional, and major oil companies pay top professional wages. These wages are pumped back into the local economy for mortgage payments, car payments, groceries, restaurant tabs, shoes etc. When 300 major oil company employees leave Midland so does about $15 million in wages. Move 300 into the community, however, and it puts a bloom on the entire economy.

Real estate prices improve almost immediately. Midland has many nice homes. A census of those homes would find a great many of them occupied by active or retired major oil company employees. I think we would all be surprised if we knew just how much of the current population of Midland is comprised of major oil company employees who came and never left or came back to live after retirement.

One of the best things major oil companies brings to the Permian Basin is quality citizens. Major oil company employees are, for the most part, spirited, eager, civic-minded individuals who join clubs, organizations, churches and civic groups to work and lead and make good things happen in Midland. If millionaires play a role in jump-starting worthy community programs, it is an army of energetic citizens, many of whom are provided by the major oil companies that keep them moving.

In short, the major oil companies bring a lot to this party called Midland and the Permian Basin. And if and when they leave, it won't be the same party.

Appraisal of Shell Oil shares upheld

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — The Delaware Supreme Court has upheld a lower court decision that would give $120 million to some 1,000 former holders of about 1 million Shell Oil Co. shares.

The court affirmed Delaware Vice Chancellor Maurice Hartnett III's December 1990 award of $71.20 per share to the stockholders.

Houston-based Shell Oil Co., the nation's seventh-largest oil company, became a wholly owned subsidiary of Royal Dutch-Shell Group in June 1985, completing a $5.7 billion merger launched nearly 18 months earlier.

The next step in ramp blending.

We offer total blending control with the most complete microprocessor-based ramp blending system in the industry.

Smith Energy Services developed the APAC/ALAC (Automated Proppant/Liquid Additive Control) Blender in conjunction with Stewart & Stevenson Services, Inc., to not only deliver the most precise proppant addition, but also complete liquid additive control and monitoring.

Precisely. As scheduled. Even during rapid proppant stage or rate changes. So our fluid is fully crosslinked and buffered and the correct amount of breaker is added.

Which ensures that you will receive the cleanest fluid and highest conductivity fracture. And optimum well performance.

Otherwise, we wouldn't be the choice of some of the country's finest oil and gas operators.

So if you're concerned about how your well performs and the next step for unearthing your profits, take the first step.

Smith Energy Services. We work best under pressure.

Tenneco finals sale of subsidiary

HOUSTON (AP) — Tenneco Inc. has completed a $500 million sale of Tenneco Minerals Co., its soda ash subsidiary, to a Belgian chemical and pharmaceutical company, Tenneco said.

Proceeds from the sale to Houston-based Solvay America Inc., a unit of Solvay SA of Belgium, will be used to pay down debt, company officials said. Tenneco said it would record a $100 million net gain on the sale.

The sale, announced April 23, is part of Tenneco's effort to cut costs and sell of some of its businesses.

"The Minerals sale is a major part of our restructuring program and another sign that we are following through on our commitment to strengthen our balance sheet and focus on our core business," Michael Walsh, Tenneco chairman and chief executive officer, said.

Tenneco Minerals employs some 400 workers in Green River, Wyo., and about 50 at its headquarters in Lakewood, Colo.

The company owns or controls trona ore deposits, production facilities for caustic soda and sodium sulfite in Green River.

Domestic oil reserve values fall, but experts unruffled

■ The median value for U.S. oil and gas reserves fell in the first quarter, but experts see reasons to be optimistic.

By Mella McEwen
Staff writer

Median value for U.S. oil and gas reserves fell 20 percent in the first quarter of 1992, according to a quarterly reserve report issued by Strevig & Associates Inc. of Houston.

According to the report, there were 55 acquisition and divestiture transactions in the first three months of the year valued at over $360 million or $4.66 per barrel equivalent. For the fourth quarter of 1991, there were 61 transactions with a value of $1.2 billion or $5.61 per barrel.

Kerry Thornhill, Strevig vice president, said in a phone interview from her office, said acquisition and divestiture activity was fueled by natural gas transactions as companies tried to balance their portfolio between natural gas and crude oil reserves.

Activity was especially heavy for those companies that had invested heavily in natural gas and been hurt by the low gas prices. She noted that companies were paying a premium to balance their portfolio away from natural gas reserves.

The report added that the first quarter was the first in seven quarters where reserve values fell below $5 per barrel equivalent and the decline in both transactions and value indicated domestic operators and investors weren't willing to spend significant sums of money.

The report also said both producers and investors see an abundance of properties on the market with fierce competition for quality properties.

Thornhill said she was surprised by the low dollar value of the transactions, which she attributed to trading in marginal properties.

"People were selling $2 and $3 million properties," she said, adding that most companies who operate on a calendar year wanted to complete transactions before the end of the year. "They wanted to clean up their asset base, get some cash flow and get rid of costs and overhead associated with these properties."

According to Thornhill, money for acquisitions may be tight but banks are being aggressive in lending money.

"But it has to be a clean property free of debt and it has to be priced right in terms of the expected return," she cautioned.

She said that, in terms of financing, the key word is conservative. Banks, she noted, are lending for oil and gas properties based on conservative prices.

"It's safer to run things on a conservative basis. Then, if prices do jump up, whether through a Middle East conflict, it's an added bonus and increased cash flow to the company or to service the debt. But it shouldn't be forecast or counted on."

And banks won't lend on properties with a lot of debt attached to them, she added.

"A lot of properties have debt associated with them. Several companies made bit acquisitions in gas reserves; they consistently bought gas and forecast gas prices would escalate, and they're not making the returns they need. They need to sell these properties but can't for less than what they borrowed to buy the properties-...banks are willing to lend money, and to consider development opportunities, but the debt associated with them does not make these properties easy to sell."

The recent surge in oil prices, fueled by indications Saudi Arabia was switching emphasis from market share to higher prices, can only increase reserve values, Thornhill said, causing the buyer to stop negotiating for a lower price and letting the seller negotiate higher prices for property.

This apparent shift in the Saudis' strategy underscore the Strevig report's assertion that "At present there does not appear to be a truly stable cartel."

According to the report, world crude production fell 0.9 percent last year, though OPEC members increased production to 23.4 million barrels per day or 39.1 percent of the world total, as opposed to 38.5 percent in 1990. Non-OPEC production fell 1.9 percent, accounting for 60.9 percent of the world total as opposed to 62.5 percent in 1990.

Though Thornhill noted that the first quarter and, so far, the second quarter, have been slow, she is still seeing $10 and $20 million acquisitions closing.

Estimates of oil and gas properties on the market are valued in the billions, but Thornhill said the value depends on when the sales are closed and what the buyer pays for the property.

There no area that is particularly "hot," according to Thornhill, but she said the Gulf Coast is always popular and "definitely West Texas and New Mexico, especially with its natural gas and transportation systems improving. The pipelines and increased capacity in those areas have increased values there."

She pointed out that "The areas people are investing in are long-life areas, the Gulf, West Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma; they're doing well. Companies are being conservative in drilling and acquisitions. The companies that are strongest are in specific areas — the major basins where there's consistency in either oil or natural gas; they're not really into new drilling."

She predicted that if oil and gas prices remain firm, there should be an increase in drilling activity. "That's what I'm hearing from companies we're working with. People are still willing to explore and invest in wells up to 16,000 ft."

She declined to make predictions on acquisition and divestiture activity during the second quarter, and the second quarter Strevig & Associates reserve report won't be available until late July.

DIVEST: Majors cut to core independents.

"We are continuing our efforts at about the same level as the past 3-5 years and are focusing on those smaller, non-capital intensive properties that are unlikely to receive additional development funding from Mobil's producing budget," Kimmit said.

"Like many of the majors, the properties we've acquired over the years are scattered about. Some don't represent a large part of our production, but do take lots of administrative time.

"For the most part the smaller Mobil-operated properties are being marketed to independent producers. We also are looking for the right opportunities to sell interest in selected properties that are operated by other companies," Kimmit explained.

"Through this process we have reduced the number of U.S. fields we had an interest in by about 1,300."

Kimmit said Mobil has looked hard at the wells producing 10 and 20 barrels per day.

"These are attractive to some independents who operate with a lower overhead."

He said certain wells in close proximity to those of another major are also considered.

"It can be uneconomical to try and operate them as a stand alone entity, so these are selected for trade," Kimmit said. "Most often the scattered properties are packaged as a single unit and proposed to operators in the vicinity who would be the most-likely purchasers because they can absorb the wells into their operations without a lot of additional cost."

Kimmit said Mobil is continuing to sell but also looking for value.

"More than 90 percent of our sales efforts involve bid packages but occasionally we have completed sales resulting from unsolicited inquiries.

"It's slower than we'd like because of the number of properties on the market. From our view we anticipate there is maybe $8 and $10 billion dollars worth of properties on the market right now overall," he said.

Bob Herrin of Midland's Chevron office said the overall idea for Chevron has been to trim the number of properties but keep the same revenue. He refers to his company's divestitures as "exiting."

"We still have a number of properties we want to exit. Our strategy hasn't been finalized yet, but these are mainly properties that we designate as having a greater value to someone else than as income to us," Herrin explained. "In other words they are not on our priority list because they don't fit our long-term strategy when we consider prices."

Herrin said most properties are within 125 miles of Midland and include oil and gas interests.

"They are probably more heavily oil, but are a fairly representative mixture of our portfolio."

Herrin said Chevron has used bid packages, unsolicited offers and auctions to move these properties and he feels it is the property which seems to dictate how it will be exited.

"Some of the lesser value properties go to auction because it's the cleanest, simplest, easiest way to sell them," Herrin said. "We've also found trades successful, that is, trading an interest we have in a field another company operates, for interest they have in a field we operate. A trade allows both companies to get a better concentration of properties in their area."

He explained, "Trading means you 'swap like-kind.' It also means because you aren't selling outright and rebuying somewhere else that the tax consequences are reduced."

Chevron has also targeted the independents in town as the most likely buyers.

"We've seen a high degree of interest locally," Herrin said, "but we've also crossed boundaries. For example, we may trade a Chevron Permian Basin property for another company's interest in a Rocky Mountain property.

"We've been successful overall negotiating significant trades with other companies," he said.

Marathon's Regional Manager Bob Kukla said, "Marathon has a very organized disposition program specifically for the Permian Basin."

He said the consolidation of Texas Oil and Gas into Marathon led to additional properties being handled out of this region. The company's internal evaluations group consists of engineering, land, geological and accounting personnel with a dispositions and acquisitions manager heading up the group.

"As an exercise we began looking at all properties," Kukla said. "We came up with a composite list of Marathon and TXO properties that didn't fit well because they are either marginally economic, or good economically but geographically situated in outlying areas."

He said they currently have 17 packages on the market and have considered a variety of disposition methods.

Kukla said Marathon is looking at an auction later this summer for certain properties.

Natural gas leads transactions

By Mella McEwen

According to the Strevig & Associates Inc. Quarterly Reserve Report for the first quarter of 1992, natural gas reserve acquisitions led activity during the quarter.

The report found that of the 55 transactions tracked during the first quarter, 57 percent of the activity focused on natural gas. The median for gas-dominated transactions increased to 74 cents per thousand cubic feet from 71 cents per Mcf during the fourth quarter of 1991.

Kerry Thornhill, vice president with Strevig & Associates, said she has seen a push toward natural gas reserves "because people perceive it as a distressed property because of the low prices earlier this year. They see it as an opportunity to get into the gas business in a distressed situation."

She said that the slight rise in value for gas reserves was "unusual" but was fueled largely by competition for the properties.

Thornhill added that companies are also looking to balance their portfolios more equally between natural gas and oil.

For companies that had invested heavily in natural gas expecting prices to climb, she said, the

Putting a value on oil properties

■ Selling an oil property is much like selling a house or a car, but putting a value on the property is more complicated.

By Brenda K. Cunningham

Remember the television commercials of the early '80s? A beautiful buxom blonde in a hardhat and short-shorts appeared between reels of the "Movie of the Week" and breathily told us, "If you don't have an oil well, get one!".

That's exactly what many individuals and companies have been doing over the past six years.

But how is an oil property evaluated, and how is its value established? And why is a property disposed of by one company and eagerly acquired by another?

Historically, oil companies, especially the majors, have drilled prospects, made new discoveries and developed them, and used those profits to drill and develop more prospects, thus perpetuating the cycle, and building large and powerful corporations. But, as provinces such as the Permian Basin have been heavily explored, opportunities for large discoveries have dwindled.

Because these older, mature areas are no longer a source of significant profits, and don't offer large exploratory targets, many companies are reducing or eliminating their positions. Personnel layoffs and sale of producing properties result.

But many other companies and individuals see these mature areas as opportunities for success. What may be marginal profit to a large company may represent significant profit relative to a smaller outfit with less overhead.

It's a fact that hydrocarbon production from a reservoir decreases through time, or declines. This decline may be prolonged by the implementation of secondary recovery methods such as waterfloods or pressure maintenance programs, but even then, decline is inevitable.

So, what's a producing property worth?. To begin, a reservoir engineer plots a graph of production volumes from a single zone in specific wells versus the time (usually months or years) it took to produce those volumes, generating what is called a decline curve for that property.

Using this curve and other techniques, an engineer can estimate the volume of future production, and forecast at what time the wells will no longer be economic to produce.

At this point in the evaluation, a reasonably accurate estimate of the remaining economic volume of hydrocarbons has been derived. To determine what those hydrocarbons are worth, an estimate has to be made of what the market price of oil and gas will be during the future life of the property.

Since oil pricing is influenced by outside factors such as OPEC, the Mercantile Exchange and global politics, estimating future value can be a dicey proposition. Multiplying remaining reserves by this estimated price now reveals future dollars. But the value of money never remains constant: Yearly inflation rates insure that tomorrow's dollar is worth less than today's.

A discount factor, which relates an investment to current interest rates, is then applied to determine what the property is worth in today's dollars.

The engineer isn't through yet. From this property value, he must subtract the costs necessary to produce the wells, including personnel, office expenses and taxes. Also, the wells will have to be plugged when they no longer produce, an expense occuring after the property no longer produces income.

Now that the property's actual worth has been estimated, a purchase price may be selected depending on the pace of investment and profit recovery (rate of return) desired from the investment.

If a company chooses to make their investment and profits back at a rate equivalent to an 8 percent annual interest rate, they will be willing to pay more for the property than a company needing to make their investment and profits at a 15 percent interest rate. These calculations are commonly performed by sophisticated computer programs.

No two companies will evaluate a given property the same way because of differing economic guidelines. Of these guidelines, variability in overhead may be the most important reason producing properties are bought and sold.

A major oil company, by virtue of its size, has much more corporate expense than, say a three man outfit headquartered in Midland. A producing property, then, may remain profitable for a much longer time when operated by a smaller company.

There are two basic reasons why properties are bought and sold, the first of which is that a buyer is willing to pay more to a seller than the seller could make producing the property themselves.

Differences in required rates of return and operating costs between the buyer and seller provide the margin from which the buyer and seller both hope to make their profit.

The second reason properties are bought and sold occurs when one party makes a mistake in evaluation. As examples, the seller could overlook potential production from zones not currently producing, or make an error in economic parameters, thereby selling for a price less than the property is ultimately worth to them.

Conversely, the buyer could forecast higher producing rates or prices than will actually occur during the life of the property, and therefore lose money or make less profit than anticipated.

General guidelines considered by a buyer when purchasing a property include: Price paid per barrel of oil and its gas equivalent, how many months of current profit are necessary until investment price is recouped, and the property's value after the purchase price has been recovered.

It's also believed important to physically inspect the property, if possible, to determine equipment and facility conditions, and to evaluate potential environmental considerations.

Because interest rates are currently low, non-industry or institutional investors are becoming active in oil and gas property purchases.

A property that generates an equivalent 15 percent annual rate of return is an attractive alternative to a certificate of deposit paying 6 percent per year, although somewhat riskier an investment. Permian Basin reservoirs often provide attractive acquisition opportunities because of their forecastable decline rates and long life.

In addition, multiple producing horizons and secondary recovery effectiveness common to the area may enhance a property.

Like-kind exchanges grow as tax regulations change

■ The like-kind exchange is coming into its own as a tax benefit for oil and gas producers, thanks to changes in the tax code.

By Johnnye Montgomery

After 70 years, the like-kind – or tax-deferred – exchange is coming into its own as a tax benefit in the oil and gas business.

Although the majors in the Permian Basin have routinely made like-kind swaps among themselves for years, the trades were a cumbersome process because of the necessity of making simultaneous transfers and finding properties that would be mutually desirable.

For the small operator or the independent with limited assets the cost in time and trouble often wasn't worth the saving in tax dollars. What the industry needed was a "delayed exchange" provision.

The first breakthrough came in 1979 with the Starker vs. The United States of America case in California, when the court ruled that simultaneity was not required in order for Starker Services Inc. to claim a tax exemption on a delayed exchange of property. Since the Starker decision, amendments were enacted and in 1991, final regulations were adopted allowing exchanges under Section 1031 of the Internal Revenue Code which governs like-kind exchanges.

The new rules state that a seller can dispose of a property without incurring tax liability if a like-kind property is purchased or contracted for within 45 days of relinquishing the sold property, and the transfer of the replacement property is made within 180 days of the transfer of the sold property.

Another provision in the new regulations states that proceeds from the sold property must be held by a "Qualified Intermediary," a disinterested party who will put the money into escrow until time to pay for the acquired property.

Furthermore, like-kind exchanges can be made among a wide range of properties and assets. Within this framework, the seller is free to search out replacements from among various grades or classes of real estate, royalties, overrides, working interests and other assets anywhere in the U.S.

Generally stated, the law provides the would-be trader with a "safe harbor" from threat of taxes as long as certain requirements are met. With the introduction of the qualified intermediary, it becomes possible under the law to structure a multi-property, multi-buyer sale, with the only stipulation being that a replacement of the sold assets is identified within 45 days and acquired within 180 days.

Dale A. Brown, president of Petroleum Strategies, Inc. of Midland, has served as a qualified intermediary for the oil and gas industry since January. He says one of the reasons the like-kind trade is so attractive in the Permian Basin is that typical oil and gas properties have a low basis in relationship to fair market value.

Since the cost to drill is in deductibles against taxes, there is no depletable or depreciable asset on the books. Properties that have been held for years thus have a lot of built in tax gain. The tax-deferred exchange provision since the 1991 amendments to Section 1031 allows a long-needed flexibility to the Permian Basin operator who wants to stay in business yet needs to liquidate certain assets in order to obtain others.

Brown expects the activity to continue to increase because of the changing nature of activity in the Permian Basin.

"The trend of oil companies buying and selling properties has emerged very rapidly. In exploration, you want to spread the ownership – and the risk. As we've entered the production phase as opposed to the exploration phase, divided ownership doesn't make as much sense anymore." He thinks a lot of trades will be made to maximize efficiency of management.

Yet Brown cautions that the unwary trader treads a mine field of complications.

"The rules that allow you to enter a deal like this (like-kind trade) are very generous in what they allow you to do, but they are very inflexible as well."

A lot of the stringency has to do with the function of the qualified intermediary, Brown says.

"We do not look for properties for buyer or seller. We don't even enter into the negotiations with the buyers and sellers of properties. We are not brokers of properties. We do the documentation of the transaction as a like-kind exchange.

"People buying or selling cannot function as their own qualified intermediary. At no time can they receive, pledge, borrow or otherwise obtain the benefits of the funds from the relinquished properties. A bank could serve as qualified intermediary, if that's the only service they provide.

"Say X company wants a property you have, but doesn't have anything you want. You enter into a contract with X and one of the provisions in the contract says you have the right to structure this as a like-kind exchange. At the last minute the qualified intermediary steps in and receives the proceeds of the sale. Then you find someone else with a property you want. You arrange to buy the property, with a provision in the contract for structuring it as a like-kind exchange. At the last minute, the qualified intermediary steps in and pays for the property."

Brown says tax-deferred exchange benefits are easy to arrange as long as you structure the sale ahead of time so that it can become a like-kind exchange. "If you change your mind and decide not to reinvest the proceeds in replacement property, you can always take the money with whatever interest you've gained, and pay the taxes. But once you accept the sale proceeds, you can't back up and arrange for tax-deferred benefits."

The number of like-kind trades since the Starker decision increased considerably in the West and East Coasts, mostly for real estate. In the Permian Basin, Brown says it's taken a while to get started.

"A lot of people are interested, and a lot of people are doing it, but the trades involved take a while to develop."

Will the royalty or working interest holder be affected by the change? Probably not enough to notice, according to Brown.

"The only change I can think of would be a little saving in cost of management," he said.

LEADS: Competition boosts prices

low prices "had hit them hard."

"A lot of properties have debt associated with them," she observed. "Several companies made big acquisitions in natural gas; they've consistently bought gas reserves, forecasting prices would escalate. They're not making the returns needed and they need to sell these properties,but they can't sell them for less than what they borrowed to buy them."

She said banks were willing to lend money for both natural gas and oil property acquisitions but the properties had to be free of debt and based on conservative, realistic valuations.

The report cites the Independent Petroleum Association of America's prediction that U.S. gas production will decline by 0.4 percent to 17.8 trillion cubic feet this year while gas consumption rises 0.8 percent to 19.6 Tcf. The report also notes that approximatelfy 1.3 billion cubic feet of deliverability from the San Juan Basin will be added with completion of Transwestern and El Paso pipeline expansion projects.

Natural gas prices have been rising in recent weeks boosted by a late cold snap and moves by a number of producers and the states of Texas and Oklahoma to curtail production. It's estimated approximately 1 billion cubic feet daily has been curtailed.

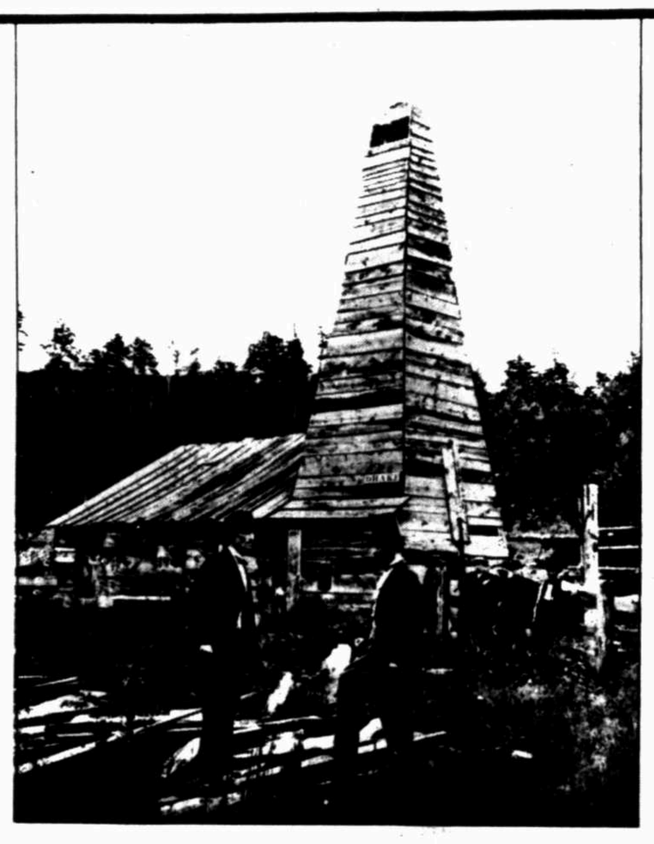

In addition, storage levels were recently estimated to have fallen 21 percent, to 42 percent, which is expected to produce a wave of purchases for storage injection purposes.

According to the report, Salomon Brothers Inc. expects a strong recovery in natural gas prices in 18 months, driven by a steady increase indemand and falling natural gas deliverability. Deliverability is expected to be impacted by a decline in production capacity, hurt by a decline in the natural gas rig count — down 30 percent in the first quarter — and lower gas well completions.

The Department of Energy has estimated natural gas consumption in 1991 at 19.6 Tcf, up 5 percent from 1990.

Acquisitions fuel Parker & Parsley Petroleum growth

■ Strategic acquisitions have helped fuel growth at Parker & Parsley Petroleum, which threatens to become to oil and gas producers what Wal-Mart has become to retailers.

By Joe Dominey

Attention shoppers: On sale now at your AMEX counter, a little stock trading at a price-earnings ratio of 14.9, and expected to grow in book value by 17 percent by year-end. Profits were up last year by 50 percent, and first quarter '92 earnings per share were up 89 percent on a 64 percent revenue rise, despite lower oil and gas prices. Ticker symbol — PDP.

Will Midland-based, publicly-owned Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. be to the independent oil and gas sector what Wal Mart was to retail merchandising? Its almost exponential growth in oil and gas assets and the popularity of its stock may indicate a parallel.

In 1991 P&P's shares ranged from a low of $6.87 to a high of $14.25. Earnings per share were 77 cents. Price-earnings ratio: 18.5. Book value per share: $9.40. Its stock is trading now in the $12.50 range. Revenues rose 135 percent to $150.6 million from $64 million in 1990.

Parker & Parsley has drilled over 1,000 wells in the past six years, accounting for about 20 percent of its growth. The remaining 80 percent came from strategic acquisitions.

In the span of one year Parker & Parsley achieved dramatic growth from acquiring all the oil and gas assets of Damson Oil Corp. and three Spraberry units from Mobil Oil Corp.

Damson, which had earlier acquired the assets of Midland's Dorchester and Petroleum Corporation of Texas of Breckenridge, was in bankruptcy proceedings when P&P began negotiations to buy its assets. Mobil was conforming to the policy of most major companies of disposing of its marginal properties in the continental U.S.

As a result Parker & Parsley's proved reserves increased by 181 percent during 1991 to 132.4 million equivalent barrels of oil, up from 47.2 million equivalent barrels a year earlier. The pre-tax present value of future net revenues (discounted 10 percent) more than doubled, from $261-million a year earlier to $534-million on December 31. This occurred during a period which saw a 35 percent decline in oil prices.

Net income grew by 50 percent, from $10.2-million in 1990 to $15.4-million in 1991, and would have been $7-million higher except for expenses related to consolidating various entities acquired last year into a new corporation.

By the end of this year Parker & Parsley president and CEO Scott D. Sheffield expects the present value of its reserves to rise to $700 million by using the financial leverage of currently owned and soon-to-be acquired oil and gas reserves.

In April P&P raised about $50-million through a new stock offering, reducing long-term debt and increasing its unused available line of credit to about $100-million.

During Sheffield's tenure the company has grown from a collection of partnerships operating primarily in the Permian Basin's Spraberry Trend to a widely-traded public corporation, which is now the nation's tenth largest independent oil and gas company. With 4,250 oil and gas wells, 11 gas processing plants, and 700 employees, P&P outstrips some major companies in drilling in the lower 48.

"Just recently Petroleum Information reported that we were number one in the Permian Basin in drilling activity last year," Sheffield noted. "We were number 11 in the United States in oil and gas completions, and we were fourth in the amount of footage drilled in the United States. That gives you an idea of how we fit with the majors in regard to activity. We still have a long way to go to be considered the size of a major oil company."

In 1979 Sheffield joined Howard Parker and Joe Parsley's partnership as their petroleum engineer, bringing the staff total to seven. He became president and chief executive officer in 1985 of Parker & Parsley, and soon afterwards spearheaded a series of acquistions.

The soft-spoken Sheffield detailed the complex history of P&P's acquisitions during an interview in his unpretentious ninth floor office in Midland's Hightower Building. Its decorations include University of Texas memorabilia and plaques commemorating stock offerings handled through investment banker Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc.

Parker & Parsley was a private partnership until 1981 when Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. was formed with $2-million in oil and gas properties.

Later this entity was sold to the Southmark Corporation for $32-million.

HCW Exploration Inc.: "The company's first acquisition was the HCW oil and gas properties, which we acquired in 1986. We used that acquisition to form our first public trading entity, a master limited partnership. We acquired the general partner of those oil and gas properties, then we subsequently, through an exchange offer in December of 1987, acquired the partnerships. That total acquisition was about $100-million."

The MLP formed in December 1987 was Parker & Parsley Development Partners, which was traded on the American Stock Exchange.

"The old Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co., the one Joe Parsley and Howard Parker started, is the general partner of this MLP. It's still a separate company that's growing itself. Just to put that in perspective, it's the entity that continues to raise public drilling funds. Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. owns about 20 percent working interest in all the drilling funds. So Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. hasn't started growing through acquisitions itself; it's growing primarily through the raising of public and private drilling fund capital and receiving an interest in those properties," Sheffield explained.

P&P Hits a Triple: "So to get back to 1987, we formed the master limited partnership in December 1987, and it was essentially a $100-million company, and Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. as general partner was probably about a $40-million company.

"And then in 1988 we made a series of three acquisitions. The first was Indian Wells, a company out of Tulsa, Oklahoma. The second was MGF Oil Corp. based here in Midland. They had a bankruptcy on that one. And the third was really our first direct property acquisition, we call it our Levelland Project."

The Levelland Project involved implementing a five-spot waterflood pattern to develop and exploit the secondary oil reserves. P&P paid $10-million and invested another $8-million in new capital to drill new wells and injection wells.

With ownership of the general partners in MGF's and Indian Wells' properties, P&P moved to acquire the partnerships underneath, and completed these transactions in August 1988. This enlarged the MLP from about $100-million to $175-million, including the Levelland Project.

Southmark Corporation: "The next step was in early '89, when Southmark Corp. got into financial trouble, and management had an option to acquire Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. which was the company that started with $2-million in '81. It was the general partner of the MLP.

"So it was appraised at approximately $50 million at that time. It had gone from $2 million to $32 million to $50 million. And we had an option to acquire it, and we acquired it in May of 1989," Sheffield recalled.

Southmark went into bankruptcy about 60 days later in July 1989 and came out of Chapter 11 in 1991 with a five year liquidation plan.

Southmark, which had owned San Jacinto Savings and a health care company, got caught in the plunge in commercial real estate values that plagued Texas in the late 1980s. Southmark financed its real estate acquisitions with junk bonds, and was stuck with huge debt and unmarketable real estate.

In 1989 Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. became part of the MLP.

The Midkiff Unit: "Also in 1989 — this is important, because this is where it was all coming together — we acquired the Midkiff Unit (in the Spraberry Trend). It took us about 18 months. We purchased 99.5 percent of the working interests from roughly 75 different working interest owners.

"That project had been sitting idle with about 200 undeveloped locations since 1960. There are about 2,000 undeveloped locations in a series of units that were formed back in 1960. And they had been sitting idle generally because of the majors' philosophy toward the Spraberry Trend area. They had been spending their money on major-return more high-yield projects."

The majors owned about two-thirds of the leases in these units. Through complex negotiations P&P acquired all of the existing production and proved undeveloped reserves in the Midkiff Unit for approximately $21-million.

The Spraberry Field accounts for 57 percent of P&P proven reserves. Parker & Parsley drilled its first Spraberry Field well in 1964. Since then the company has drilled over 1,400 locations in the Spraberry, with a 99 percent success rate. With more than 1,800 producing wells, P&P is the largest and most active operator in the Spraberry.

Since 1990 the company has drilled 62 wells in the Midkiff project, increasing production from 250 BOPD to 2,000 BOPD. Currently six rigs are working in the project, drilling another 66 wells. Every location in the Spraberry will produce some oil.

The New Corporation: In May of 1990 Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co., a Delaware corporation, was formed and began operations on February 19, 1991, with the combination and conversion to corporate structure of two partnerships that were under common control with the company D Parker & Parsley Development Partners, L.P., a publicly traded partnership listed on the American Stock Exchange, and its indirect general partner, Parker & Parsley, Ltd, a Texas limited partnership. The new corporation is traded on the AMEX.

Damson Oil Corp.

"Early in 1990 we began to evaluate the Damson oil and gas assets. And it took us a year to complete the transaction, but we acquired the oil and gas assets of the Damson partnerships in February 1991. And at the same time we merged (all of the various) Parker & Parsley entities and the Damson partnerships into a public corporation from a master limited partnership and stayed on the American Stock Exchange. This is the new Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co., which is now a Delaware corporation."

The majority of Damson's oil and gas assets were acquired when Damson bought out Dorchester in 1984. Damson's other major asset was a buy-out of Petroleum Corporation of Texas, headquartered in Breckenridge.

GROWTH: Fueled by strategic property acquisitions

(From 10E)

After the Damson buy-out was completed in early 1991, P&P's stock began trading at about $9.25 and rose to an all-time in December of $14.25. Today it's trading at about $12.50.

Mobil Oil Corp.: Their next acquisition was the $128-million Mobil purchase in December 1991 consisting of three large waterflood projects in the Permian Basin (the I-10, East Howard, Ackerly, Dean and State Strain).

"Then we acquired three Spraberry units. We purchased (Mobil's) entire position in the Spraberry Trend area. Most of that was located in three of these units which were north of the Midkiff unit. They were the Preston, Shackleford, and Germania.

"And lastly we acquired two South Texas gas fields, which is where we have several gas fields already from our previous HCW acquisition."

Damson Revisited

This year Parker & Parsley acquired the remaining 10 percent of Damson Oil Corp. for about $25-million.

"They went into bankruptcy in the summer of 1991. We only acquired the partnerships the first time. The second acquisition was the remaining 10 percent working interest of Damson Oil Corp. in all their previous assets that we acquired from the Damson partnerships. So we did not acquire new properties, but became 100 percent owners of those properties we already had. (The last) 10 percent had to be acquired from the creditors of Damson Oil Corp."

Involved are substantially all of the assets and liabilities of seven partnerships and two corporations affiliated with Damson Oil Corp., and Dorchester Master Limited Partnership.

Meanwhile, the company has been negotiating the purchase of the remaining interests in the Preston and Shackleford Units. "Mobil owned 71 percent in Preston and about 31 percent in Shackleford. So we spent about another $10-million in the last 90 days acquiring the remaining interests in those two units," Sheffield related.

1992 Stock Offering

"Lastly, and it'll affect future acquisitions, we completed a four-and-a-half million share stock offering in April of this year and raised approximately $50-million. We currently have now 27-and-a-half million shares outstanding. Immediately that $50 million proceeds was used to pay down bank debt, and we are currently looking for another $150-million acquisition. The primary focus is in the Permian Basin or Gulf Coast, or a combination (of the two). 'Primary focus' doesn't mean we won't buy in Colorado or Oklahoma or somewhere else."

Asked whether the $150 million for new acquisitions would come from cash flow, borrowed money, or sale of other assets, Sheffield responded: "It's a combination of borrowed money from the new properties that we acquire – they have a borrowing capacity, plus the current borrowing capacity of our company. We have currently $150 million of bank debt, and our bank line is $250 million, so we can borrow another $100 million against our existing properties in addition to borrowing against new properties."

Future Outlook: "To give you a summary number in regard to our oil and gas reserves as of December 31st, 1991, it was approximately $540 million, and that's based on flat pricing of approximately $18 a barrel and $1.90 for gas. And that's discounted at 10 percent. That represents 67 million barrels of oil, 230 billion cubic feet of gas, and 25 million of natural gas liquids.

"Already with our recent acquisitions of 1992 we are over $600 million, and would hope to be up to $700 million by the end of this year in what I would call SEC-10 value (based on flat prices for the life of the property, discounted 10 percent)."

Would he characterize Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. as a good opportunity for present and future shareholders?

"Yes. One of the important points we make to our shareholders is that management owns about 7.5 percent of the outstanding stock, which represents about 99 percent of our (individual) net worth. Secondly, we are taking advantage of the exodus of most of the major oil companies leaving the lower 48, and by staying in our back yard we are able to stand with a very healthy balance sheet. We're able to make further acquisitions of key properties by adding very little overhead.

"The key to staying in the lower 48 and to grow and be successful, once you have acquired the properties from the majors, is to be able to develop those properties, exploit them, lower the operating costs, and maintain your current overhead levels.

"For example with Mobil we added $120 million worth of properties while we only added $200,000 worth of annual overhead. We increased the value of the company by over a third.

"If we started acquiring properties in basins we're not active in, or if we get into other types of business such as the downstream business, then that would be inefficient for us to operate.

Leverage: As a corporate entity, Parker & Parsley has access to a larger universe of investors who benefit from holding a liquid asset as compared to a limited partnership. Because the current tax laws discourage private investors from directly participating in drilling funds, Parker & Parsley relies greatly on borrowed money to fund acquisitions and develop properties. Corporate policy is to hold debt to a fixed percentage of company assets.

"There have been two points in time when our debt level was over 40 percent of our total oil and gas value, and we have a corporate goal to maintain around 35 percent of our oil and gas value. When we go over that amount we will sell off assets to maintain the level.

"Also we have a program, like everyone else, of divesting of small outside operating interests throughout the United States that we have picked up through several acquisitions. We are currently getting out of several states, such as Mississippi, Louisiana, North Dakota, Montana, and Wyoming to become more efficient.

Whereas 80 percent of the company's growth has been from acquistions, Sheffield sees that percentage declining over the next four or five years. "Going forward, we feel it would be more of a balance to be about 50-50, because of our development of approximately 750 locations in these Spraberry Units we've acquired."

Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co.'s 11-member board of directors now includes five outside members. "One of the commitments management made to shareholders was to go to a full outside board of directors. We thought with the trends in corporate America, that it's probably important to us from an image standpoint to have a full outside board of independent directors."

The outside directors are James L. Houghton, a retired senior tax partner of Ernst & Young; Jerry P. Jones, an attorney with Thompson & Knight, P.C.; Arthur L. Smith, chairman and CEO of petroleum consulting firm John S. Herold, Inc.; Edward O. Vetter, president of Edward O. Vetter & Associates; and Michael D. Wortley.

School's out and most Midlanders are getting ready for a heat wave — especially after a rainy and cool Memorial Day weekend and the past week of unseasonably low temperatures. And while shorts and tank tops are fine for some occasions of summer fun, around the pool or beach, swimwear is considered the primary attire.

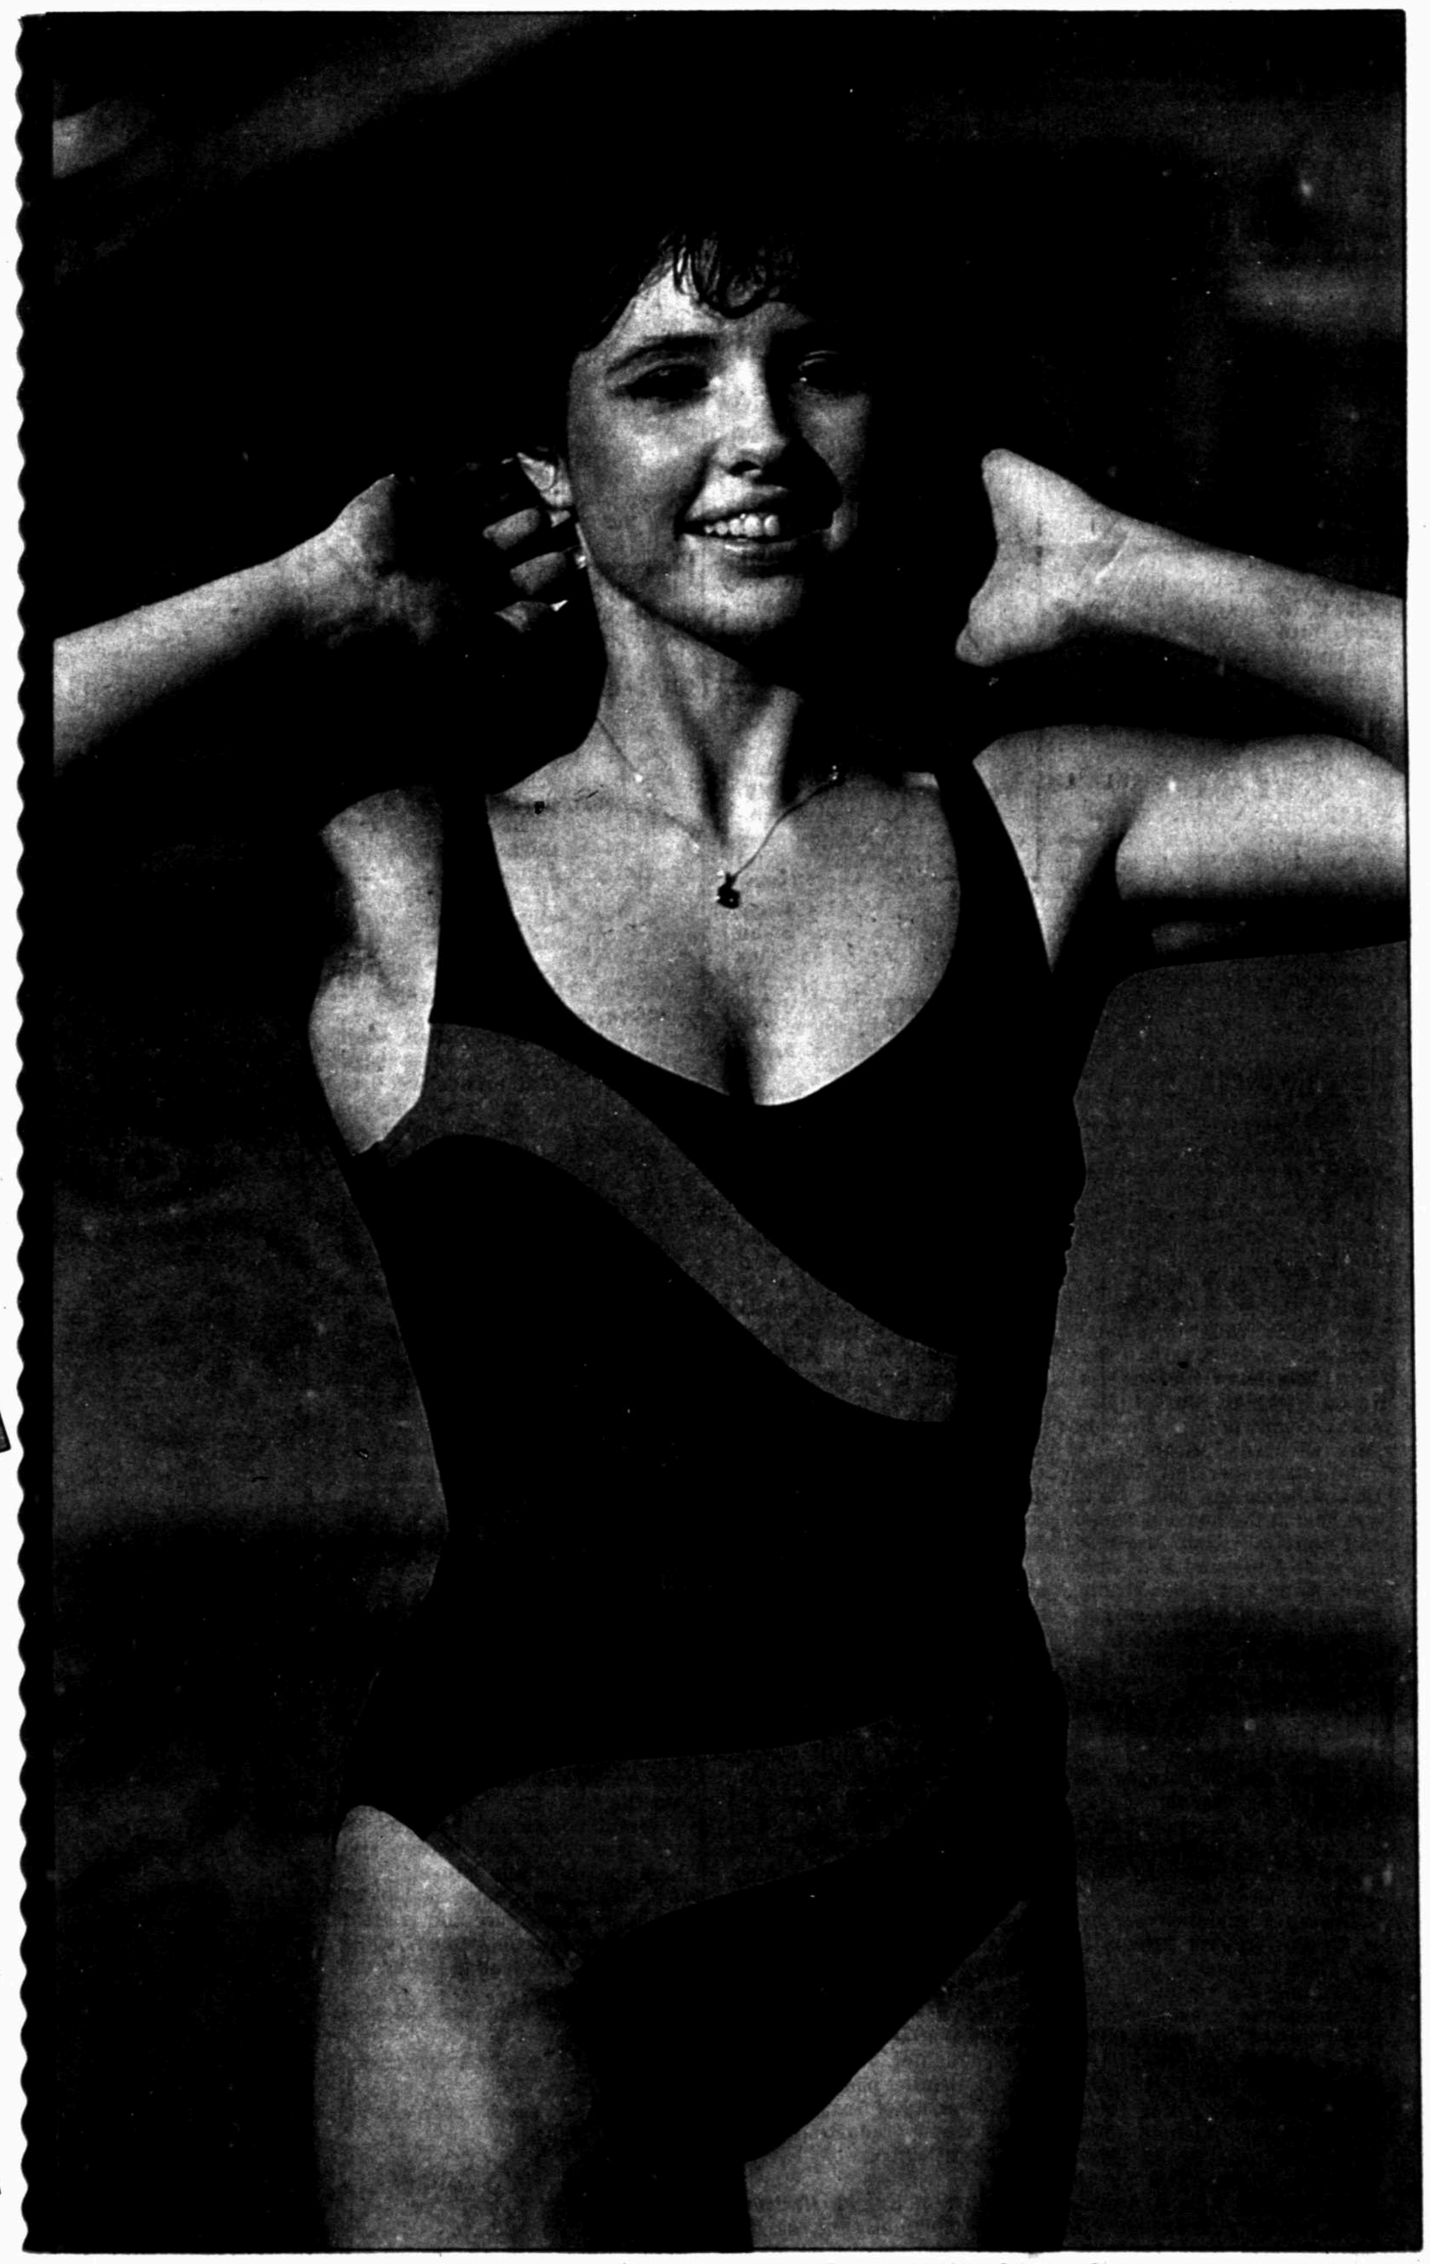

This season's offering in swimwear has something for just about everyone. Solids and prints are dominated by bright colors, and styles range from conservative to daring.

However the big news in swimwear the past couple of years hasn't focused on colors or styles, but rather on construction and fit. With an increasing number of baby boomers growing older and having less and less time to keep their bodies in tip-top shape, interest in the bare-as-much-as-you-dare suit has given way to a more conservative design that covers and enhances the figure. Even swimsuit designers have come to the rescue with swimwear that is fashioned to help camouflage the body's imperfections and accent its good qualities.

"What's happening is that as the baby boomers are getting older and they are wanting suits with a little more coverage. While these people are still body conscious, they have had children and are busy,"

SWIM: Select suits to flatter your figure

said Kevin Trice, senior merchandising manager for JCPenney in Midland. "They aren't looking for a grandma suit, but they do want something with a little more coverage that is still very fashionable."

"There are quite a few swimsuits with an underwire to help lift and shape the figure. In fact, there are some tops even designed with cups," said Cynde Watkins, assistant manager of Ski Skeller Sports. "There are several designs that try to help flatter the figure. For example, for a women with short legs, a suit cut higher on the hip with a V-cut in front helps lengthen the leg," she said.

Designs that appear to trim the waist, hide the hips and thighs or accent the bust line are all available. Some design labels have even color-coded their tags so consumers can easily identify what the swimsuit is designed to enhance or hide. But with just a few hints, you can learn what designs in swimwear will be most flattering to your figure.

First, decide what figure faults you wish to hide and what figure flares you wish to accent. Second, learn the importance of color placement on swimsuits (as well as any other clothing). Darker colors tend to slenderize and camouflage while brighter colors and patterns tend to accent and draw attention. Therefore, if you have large hips, for example, the best swimsuit choice would be a suit with a black or dark blue bottom. Third, understand the principles behind styling — such as high-cut legs, necklines and accessory treatments — in order to select the best designs for your figure.

SOME OF THE most commonly perceived figure flaws for women are heavy thighs and hips, short legs, long or short torso, a not-so-flat tummy, and overly endowed or less endowed chests. But through careful selection, each person with one or more of these less than perfect figure attributes can still find a swimsuit that will make the best of what she does have. The following compilation of tips from several swimwear designers may help you select swimwear to best suit your figure.

For women with heavy thighs and hips, suits featuring a skirt or sarong are helpful in camouflaging the problem. Suits with dark, solid colors on the bottom will help give the appearance of tapering hipline as well.

Bright colors, patterned fabrics on top and accents at the waist or top help draw attention away from the problem area. Sweetheart necklines help make the shoulder area look broader, therefore, also providing the illusion of slimmer hips.

Although the high-cut leg is still popular for many woman, those with heavy thighs should select a modified leg line.

However, if your problem is short legs, a suit that is higher cut on the hip will make the leg look longer. Vertical patterns also will help lengthen the appearance of the leg.

For those with long torsos, a suit with a blouson top, a high-waisted bikini or a cummerbund will help create a more balanced look. On the flip side, those with short torsos can make them appear longer with a solid-colored maillot or bandeau suit with boy-cut legs. Short torso people should avoid belts and other details on suits that cut the design in the middle.

IF THE TUMMY area won't tuck quite as well as you would like, you can create a flattering look by selecting a suit with constructed control panels. Also helpful in camouflaging the not-so-flat stomach is a suit with a detailed neckline — to help divert attention — and a wide band of dark color around the middle to de-emphasize the area. Small gathers or pleats also can help conceal an extra inch or two.

Women who are small busted and would like to appear larger can do so by selecting suits with ruffles or shirring at the top to add dimension. Push-up bras with light foam cups, and underwires and boned bras also help accentuate the bustline.

Bright colors and patterns on top of a solid, dark bottom also help maximize the bosom.

A V-neckline creates the look of an hour glass figure and is great for small busted women, while scoop necklines tend to flatten the chest area.

Constructed suits are the best answer for women who are large busted. For best support, wide shoulder straps, a high back, and an underwire bra or boned bra are best; and these styles can still be fashionable. Blouson tops help camouflage and dark colors will help minimize the area.

SWIMSUITS THAT are suited for large busted women generally also work well for women who have had mastectomies. Jo Smith, owner of Pennyrich Bra and Lingerie Shop, said that although her store doesn't carry swimwear specifically for mastectomy customers, many regular suits are styled so they can be worn by women who have had mastectomies.

While one-piece suits generally are more popular by the thirtysomething and over crowd, teens and young twenties-aged women seem to prefer the two-piece and bikini styles.

"Most of my customers are midaged and older and they usually want a more conservative but fashionable suit. However this year, I've had more call for two-piece suits," Ms. Smith said, "but when I find out what they are for, it's usually sunbathing, not to wear in public."

However, at Ski Skeller, Ms. Watkins said," One- and two-piece suits are selling just about the same, but the two-piece are usually going to the younger girls."

Many of Ms. Watkins customers are interested in a fashionable suit, but because they will be wearing the suit while participating in a sport, a tight, fixed fit also is important.

"For sports, we have a line of Speedos on the floor that are more of a fashion suit, but for speed swimming, diving or lap swimming, we have some others that have a little tighter fit. They are constructed a little differently to help solve the problems of straps falling down or slipping off in the water," Ms. Watkins said.

So before buying a swimsuit, it is important to put a little thought into it.

"It depends on what you are going to use the suit for and what figure type you have as to what you want to buy," Trice said. "But there really is not a clarity of trends to follow, so you can buy what's best for you and be fashionable."

DEAR ABBY

Peeping Tom gets no support

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Concerning the contractor who was working on the roof of a house, gazing at the nude housewife through the skylight, and was injured when he fell through the skylight:

Van Buren

I can't believe you said to the housewife, "Fortunately, you are insured." Abby, if the contractor was up there on a job, he should get his medical treatment through his workers' compensation, his bonding company should pay for the damage to the skylight, and he should throw in a few bucks for the entertainment.

Mrs. Housewife owes that guy absolutely nothing. — RETIRED CONTRACTING OFFICER

DEAR RETIRED: You are absolutely right — the housewife owes the guy absolutely nothing — but I owe my readers an apology for that thoughtless answer. And, lest you think you are the only reader to complain, read on:

DEAR ABBY: If this fellow fell through the skylight because he was doing something he shouldn't be doing, why should the people who own the house be responsible?

You said, "Fortunately, you are insured." Abby, please remember that when an insurance company pays, the rates go up for all of us. This is just the kind of incident that raises our rates needlessly.

This man's medical expenses should be covered by his own medical insurance. The house owners and their insurance company shouldn't owe a thing! — JAY PASACHOFF, WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.

DEAR ABBY: You really pushed my button. A workman came to repair a chimney, and while ogling a nude housewife, he leaned on the skylight to get a better look and crashed to the floor below.

Abby, you told the housewife, "Fortunately, you are insured. The injured man has every right to be compensated for his injuries." Well, this Peeping Tom does not have a moral right, and perhaps not even a legal right to be compensated for his injuries if he is guilty of voyeurism. Where is the justice in the offender being compensated for something he had no right to do?

Criminals have sued victims before when they were injured while committing a crime. Regardless of what the legal experts say, I see no justice in such cases.

You said the man can't be blamed for looking — implying he had no choice. That defense has been used many times: If it isn't the "Twinkies" defense, it's blaming "society," or having been born in a family without caring parents or a decent home.

I think it's high time people started to take responsibility for their own actions. — HUGH KILPATRICK, GLENDALE, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: I was under the impression that voyeurism is a crime, but the preoccupation with sex and nudity is just another symptom of our sick society.

From having enjoyed vacationing at nude beaches, I am convinced that if everyone in the country were nude for an hour, after 10 minutes people would wonder what the big deal was.

What bothered me most about your answer, Abby, was your giving the nod and wink to the "boys will be boys" attitude that is prevalent in American culture. — DEBORAH CUPPER, PORTLAND, ORE.

DEAR ABBY: Please don't give another person permission to break the law and escape punishment.

I recall reading about a taxi driver who saw a man running from a place he had just robbed. The police were chasing him, so this taxi driver joined the chase and followed the thief into an alley — then with his car, he pinned him against a building so the police could nail him.

Well, the thief had both his legs broken, so he sued the taxi driver for an outrageous amount of money — and collected. — AL IN TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

AT WIT'S END

They're baaack! Or are they?

By Erma Bombeck

Last weekend all of our grown kids came home for a visit.

Bombeck

I know this because there's a white spot under a towel on the living room end table, I am out of laundry detergent, and the gas gauges on our cars are on E.

I suppose there are some kids who return to their roots and bond with Mom and Dad, but to tell you the truth, I don't remember seeing them the entire weekend.

I tried to pump my husband for news of them. "So, what's new with our L.A. yuppie? You did pick him up at the airport, didn't you?"

"Actually, his brother picked him up. I hear they went to his apartment, had lunch, and in the afternoon, played a little tennis."

"Right. And then they came home?"

"I'm not sure. I heard the washer going and the hair dryer and the shower, and then they went out. So, what did they say to you?"

"I went into their rooms the next morning, but they were still asleep."

"They all look well," he said.

"Then you did talk with them."

"Not talk, actually. Our daughter was on the phone and I smiled and punched her on the arm and she waved back."

"Oh. I was going to set the alarm to see them when they got home, but they were watching TV in the dark and I couldn't make them out."

"One of the boys helped me unload some packages from the car."

"What did he look like?" I asked suspiciously.

"Tall, blond, baseball cap, overbite."

"That's not your son," I said. "That's their friend."

"I sorta wondered when he called me Mr. Bombeck."

We were silent for a moment, then he said, "They were here, weren't they?"

"What a question," I laughed. "Of course they were here. How else would $110 worth of food, a case of cola, our entire supply of shampoo and three shelves of towels disappear?"

"Why don't you give L.A. a call and see if he got home all right?"

I dialed and told our son how much we enjoyed having him home. I said it was like old times.

"Let me talk to him," said his father. He grabbed the phone and for 10 minutes told him the news and how he was glad to be able to spend this time with him.

I hated to tell him it was a recording.

Youngsters face images of real-life violence

By Lawrence M. Kutner
N.Y. Times News Service

Although the immediate crisis has passed, many children are still having trouble making sense of the issues underlying the beating of Rodney G. King by police officers more than a year ago and the riots that followed the officers' acquittal.

The repeated images of both on television simultaneously fascinated and horrified children. Some of their concerns may only be coming out now.

Children express their anxieties over situations like this differently than adults. Preschoolers and early elementary-school children may worry that the violence they saw on television will erupt in their neighborhoods, even though they live on the other side of the country.

It's a fear they may harbor for days or weeks, unable to talk about their feelings. Instead, they may change the patterns of their play, becoming more violent or acting out scenes of rescue and protection. Play, not words, is the language of their emotions.

Other children may try to handle their anxieties by regressing. They become clingy, insist on sleeping with a night light, or are afraid of going to school.

They fear not only for their safety, but for their parents' as well. These fears, and the changes in their behavior, usually respond to gentle reassurances and disappear within a week or two.

"L.A. looked like a violent revenge movie," said Dr. Deborah Prothrow-Stith, an assistant dean of the Harvard University School of Public Health and a founder of the National Institute for Violence Prevention, an organization that focuses on helping youth deal with feelings of hostility and aggression.

"It looked like what Rambo or the Terminator would do." She said she was concerned that both the beating and the riot reinforced children's beliefs that violence is an acceptable way to deal with personal and social problems.

VIVIAN JENKINS Nelsen, the president of the International Institute for Interracial Interaction whose headquarters are in Minneapolis, said, "It tells black children especially not only that the system doesn't protect them, but that we as adults can't protect them."

For the last year, the institute has organized retreats where youths and police officers could talk about social issues in their neighborhoods. "Many black children don't get to see adults from their community use their rage constructively," Ms. Nelsen said. "They're left with the impression that the only two options are to fight or to flee."

While older children of all races may use words to express their emotions, the underlying meanings are sometimes cryptic.

MANY TEEN-AGERS are uncomfortable asking for their parents' help on these issues directly, worrying that admitting their confusion might interfere with their hard-won independence.

Instead, they make an outrageous or ostensibly humorous statement, and watch their parents' response closely. That allows them to save face as they quickly retreat from their stated position, asserting it was just a joke.

"You can't let it slide," Ms. Nelsen said. "This is a teachable moment. Sound out your child as to where he got those ideas from, and why he thinks that. If you used to think that way, own up to it and talk about how you've changed. Don't just pretend to be liberal."

Reactions need to be discussed

N.Y. Times News Service

It's normal for children to be upset or frightened for days or even a few weeks after seeing violence like that in Los Angeles and sensing its importance when they hear adults talk about it.

Here are several things you can do to help your children cope with their feelings and understand what's going on.

Look for changes in your child's style of play.

Pay particular attention if your child seems stuck in a rut, acting out the same scenario or drawing the same picture over and over. Ask him to describe what he's playing or drawing.

You may, for example, find that he imagines another child caught in a burning building, but can't figure out how to save him. If that's the case, make some suggestions that might change the outcome.

Talk about your own feelings about what happened and why.

Remember that children will seldom ask you about the situation directly. You will probably have to take the initiative.

"This is the time to share your family's values," said Dr. Lenore Terr, a clinical professor of psychiatry at the University of California at San Francisco and the author of "Too Scared to Cry."

"Remember that you don't do that by preaching. Do it in a few short sentences, not in whole paragraphs."

Remember that other children, not just your own, are watching you.

Landmark restaurant back in business

By Greg Orwig

THURBER, Texas (AP) — The Smokestack is back.

And returning customers say the landmark restaurant, located off Interstate 20 in historic Thurber, is better than ever, according to proprietors Randy and Andrea Bennett.

It took a little while, but the Bennetts were able to find a silver lining in the clouds of smoke that billowed above the original restaurant after it was destroyed by fire four months ago.

They spent about a week just coming to grips with the fact that 20 years of hard work and memories had been reduced to blackened brick and ashes, Andrea said. But then they began to look at some of the other long-abandoned buildings and soon decided to rebuild in the north end of the old mercantile building.

Construction began Feb. 24 and, after they figured out what to do with the holes in the ceiling and how to break through 18-inch brick walls to add on to the restrooms, the restaurant re-opened May 9.

The building is, of course, made with Thurber bricks, which are responsible for putting the turn-of-the-century boomtown on the map. It also features the original patterned tin roof, beveled glass windows and more historic photographs than were in the original restaurant.

'But we got phone calls and letters with donations from all over the state of Texas encouraging us to rebuild. A lot of those old customers say they like this one better.'

— Andrea Bennett
proprietor of the Smokestack

"They advertised that they sold everything from cribs to coffins in here," Andrea said. "And this one has already burned so we figure we're all right."

The Bennetts opened the Smokestack in the old drug store in 1971 and it quickly became a favorite meal-time rest stop for people traveling between Abilene and the Metroplex.

The insurance company canceled the coverage shortly before the fire, so converting the imposing, weather-beaten mercantile building into a modern restaurant cost dearly and it came out of the Bennetts' pocket, though Randy refuses to say how deeply he had to reach.

"But we got phone calls and letters with donations from all over the state of Texas encouraging us to rebuild," Andrea said. "A lot of those old customers say they like this one better."

The Mercantile building is closer to the actual smokestack, which is left over from the plant that reportedly made Thurber the first town in America completely powered by electricity and which also gave the restaurant its name.

"You can also see the whole town of Thurber from here whereas you had your backs to the town in the other restaurant," Andrea said, acknowledging that the "whole town of Thurber" consists of about six buildings.

The Bennetts also have brought back the same home-cooked menu, featuring larger-than-life hamburgers, real chicken-fried steak and dinner rolls to die for.

"With Randy's mother's recipe, it takes 2½ hours to make a batch of rolls," Mrs. Bennett said. "I can buy frozen rolls from Cisco just like everyone else, but then we're just like everyone else."

And to finish off the palate, the house specialty is homemade buttermilk pie. Yes, buttermilk.

"Randy tells people if they don't like it they don't have to pay for it," Andrea said. "He has yet to buy a piece of pie."

The Bennetts put in 16-hour days to get the restaurant ready to open, but Andrea already is planning to put in a craft shop at the other end of the mercantile building. They say it looks about the same as where the new restaurant is built and it doesn't look like much. But Andrea says she sees great potential.

Every two years, the Hans Christian Andersen Award is presented to one author and one illustrator — living at the time of nomination — whose complete works have made an important and lasting contribution to children's literature.

The winner of the 1992 award for illustration is Czech illustrator Kveta Pacovska.

Hamilton was first chosen as the United States nominee for the Andersen Award by the U.S. Board of Books for Young People, according to her publisher, Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. She was then selected as the 1992 international winner from among 18 authors. Hamilton is the fourth American author to win the award.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Permian Basin gardeners choose heat-loving plants

By Deborah A. Benge

Benge

The first of June usually sees the Permian Basin with plenty of heat on hand. For those hot summer days we need plants that can take that kind of punishing heat and still perform. Let's take a look at some flowering plants that will add color to our landscapes regardless of how high the temperatures go.

Firebush is as good as it gets when it comes to plants that can tolerate heat, sun and adverse soils. Firebush is a relatively new summer annual that is perfect for planting this time of year after some of your spring flowering plants have wimped out due to the heat.

Firebush has bright green, clean and attractive foliage that has an added feature of turning brilliantly red in the fall for more color impact. Firebush grows to a height range of 12 to 18 inches and has terminal growth covered in scarlet red, very tubular blossoms with deeper red throats. These striking blossoms attract hummingbirds and butterflies, drop cleanly from the plant, eliminating the need to deadhead, and just keep coming throughout the summer months into the fall.

Firebush can tolerate any kind of soil except wet, soggy soils (not too many plants can tolerate those soil conditions). To keep it healthy and vigorous use a preplant slow release or organic fertilizer when you prepare the soil. Added organic matter will be appreciated as do all plants. Be prepared to side dress with nitrogen fertilizer throughout the growing season to keep plants vigorous.

Vinca is another hard to beat annual when it comes to heat and versatility. They prefer full sun and well drained soils but can tolerate some shade. There are many new beautiful varieties on the market in shades of white, purple, pink and lavendar and you will see these colors all summer long.

One sad note about vinca, they are very susceptible to some soilborne fungi (root, stem and stem tip rots). If you use vinca repeatedly in the same beds, the pathogens will build up to levels where the plants will not survive. Rotation, mulches and deep infrequent watering will reduce these problems.

Lantanas, another beautiful trooper when it comes to heat and sun. Lantanas many times overwinter in the Permian Basin and come back year to year. This plant too, is very versatile in color range and soil condition tolerances. There are many new varieties on the market for you to choose from. Some outstanding lantanas include the 'New Gold' that doesn't set seed so it stays in almost continuous bloom and the trailing lavendars are great. Colors range from white, cream, yellow, orange, red, pink, lavendar and combinations of these. You can't go wrong with some lantana in your hot, sunny areas.

Purslane is a low growing plant, somewhat similar to portulaca from which it descended. Flowers come in a variety of clear colors and can nearly cover the plants. Purslane has thick, succulent foliage and stems that tend to store moisture for long periods of time. These are great for the flower bed, containers and hanging baskets. One disadvantage — they close their flowers in late afternoon.

Globe amaranth is an old fashioned annual flower, but still a great one. They absolutely thrive in the hottest of summers and don't require much water after establishment. These plants grow about 12 inches high with some dwarf plants around. The flowers are globe-shaped and are everlasting — making great dried flowers. Now there are more colors available: white, pink, lavendar, purple, red and orange.

Globe amaranth is a good plant for the procrastinating gardener, like yours truly. You can plant this plant as late as August and still get some great color.

No matter what plant you select for summertime color, don't scrimp on soil perparation. Every plant will do better if you improve the soil with added organic matter worked well into the soil. Peat, compost, grass clippings and more, will do the trick. A pre-plant fertilizer is a good idea and be prepared to add a little nitrogen as they begin to grow and flower.

And don't forget about container growing. Many of these plants look great and do well in containers to go on your porch, patio, window box or in front of your business.

Whatever plant you decide on, you need to be sure to grow some firebush this year.

All gardeners are invited to attend the "Growing and Selling Vegetables in the Permian Basin" educational program 6:30 p.m. June 9 at Midland County Extension Office.

Deborah Benge is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

Summer camps have support from corporation

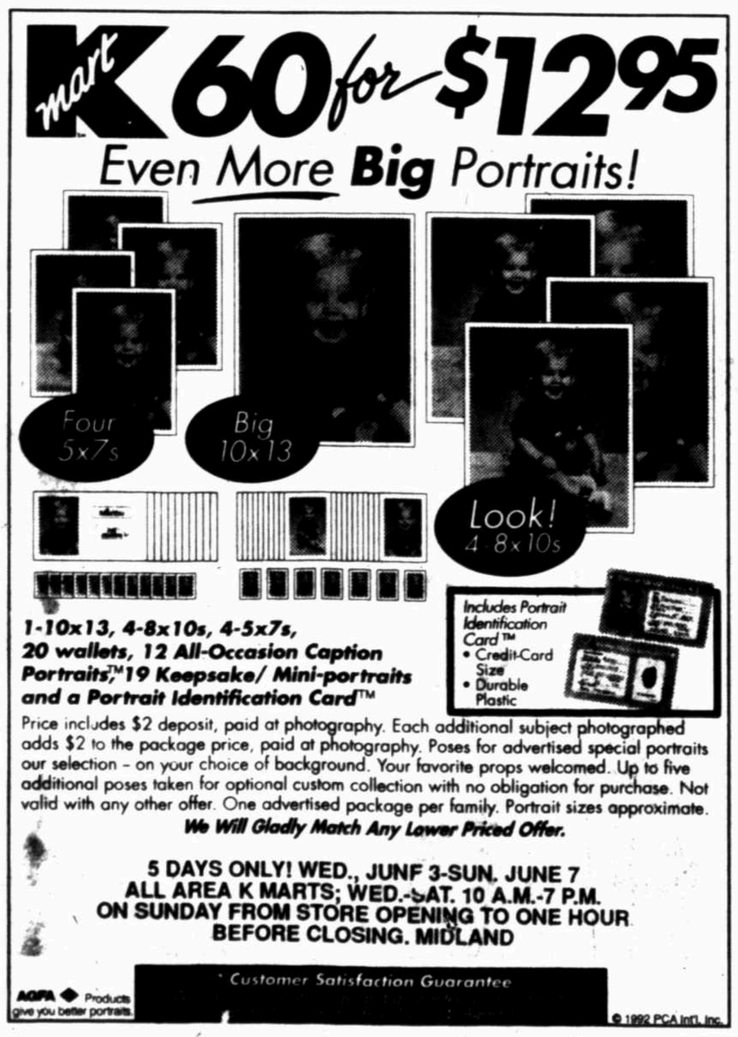

NEW YORK (AP) — When school is dismissed for the summer, who watches the kids?

It's a seasonal headache for working parents, about half of whom have children under 18 years of age, says AT&T, which has donated almost $400,000 to summer camp programs in seven states.

The money will be used to help create camping programs, extend camp hours and expand programs so that more children can attend, the company said. AT&T employees will have priority in enrolling their children.

Seven camp programs near Chicago received $91,100; four camps in the Dallas area received $82,200; and four camp programs in Maryland and Virginia received $43,200. Three camps in each of these areas — Orlando, Fla., Merrimack Valley, Mass., and Denver — received a total of $180,300.

Deborah Stahl, director of AT&T Family Care Development Fund, says many working mothers and fathers say they want their children in local camps rather than having them spend the summer at home without supervision.

SUMMER

The Museum of the Southwest Summer Museum School has located a special friend – the Arco Foundation.

"The Arco Foundation of Los Angeles has awarded $15,000 for the summer education program including tours and classes," said Susan Zellars, the museum's business manager.

"This enabled us to hire a master in residence and instructors for the summer and to increase our class offerings substantially," Ms. Zellars said.

Saturday workshop classes begin in June and conclude Aug. 8. In addition, the summer offerings include weekday classes.

Shelley E. Wright, who grew up in Midland, is serving as Master-in-Residence through September. Instructors are Faye Beery and Emily Ulmschneider.

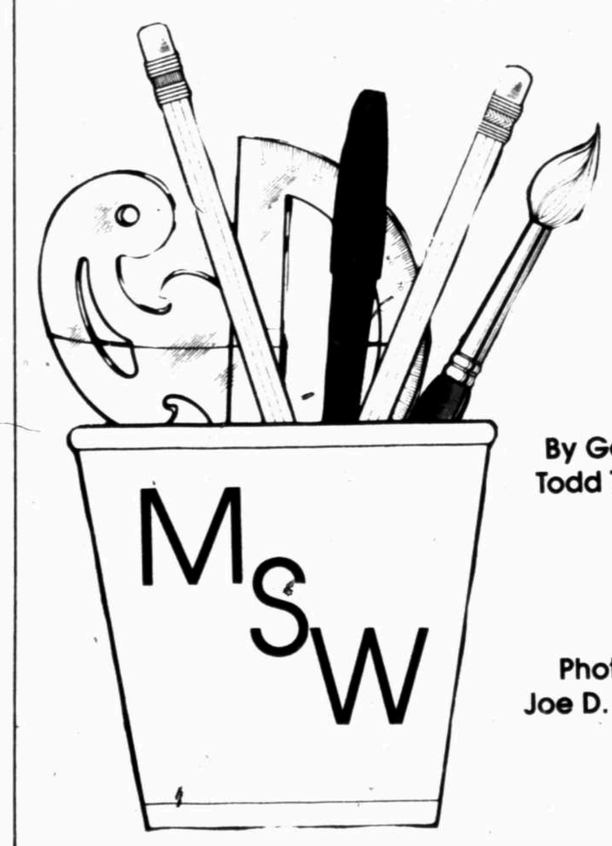

Ms. Wright calls the arts "the foundation of all learning.

"It's a terrible mistake to take art, music, any of the creative avenues of expression out of the schools.

"Some of the things that I like to do with the kids are things that I did growing up that children aren't doing anymore. They are playing Nintendo and being entertained by TV, rather than having experiences, such as getting a huge refrigerator box and making something out of it that they can play with for hours on end.

CRAFTS

"I feel very strongly that children are not tapping into their creative strengths when they aren't given the opportunity to explore their own interests or ideas."

All summer classes at the museum are designed for either 3- to 5-year-olds or 6- to l0-year-olds.

"I did request a limited enrollment so that the children would get the instructional help and support that they need," Ms. Wright said. "We set the program up for different age groups so that we could design it for their different needs. And we tried to provide a wide variety of experiences from basic art courses to environmental issues."

Ms. Wright credits her mother and a teacher at St. Ann's School for fostering her imagination. Her sister, Carol Bailey, now a ceramic artist, also encouraged her creativity, she said.

FUN!!!!

A graduate of Midland High School, Ms. Wright holds a bachelor of arts in psychology from the University of Dallas and has done work on a master's degree in counseling at the University of North Texas.

"When I was growing up, I was always busy doing some project or another. I never really took art courses," said Ms. Wright, who added that she had "always" been interested in arts and crafts.

"When I went to the University of Dallas, I majored in psychology, graduated from there and started my family. At that point my interest in education and art began to come together.

"One thing led to another. I was home-schooling my children for a while and when it became apparent I needed to go back to work, I found a school where I could teach art and my children could attend the same school.

"From then on it's become apparent in order to do what I want to do I need a master's degree."

She plans to earn a master's degree in education with an art emphasis through Texas Tech University beginning this summer in Junction. Her art has been exhibited in the Midland College Student

SUMMER: Classes will enhance creativity

(From 1G)

Art Show and at Gallery 1114.

"I'm used to juggling lots of things," Ms. Wright said. "I had already line up the museum classes. I only teach every other week.

"We have a team of teachers for the summer program. So, in June, I will be taking a watercolor class from Warren Taylor at Midland College, and then, in July, there are two weeks in there that I will be able to go down to Junction and get started on my master's program."

"Sounds crazy, doesn't it? It's a busy schedule. I've been doing that for a long time. I've been a single parent for about five years."

The single parent of three children, ages 8, 11 and 13, Ms. Wright said she was drawn back to Midland because "I wanted to be able to concentrate on my studies more and it was easier to do here as opposed to Dallas, where I was working and trying to go to school all at the same time."

Although she is still working and going to school, Ms. Wright said, "Midland just provided a less stressful environment for all of us."

Her teaching experience includes Highland Park Presbyterian Day School's integrated arts program where she taught and co-directed the art program for five years.

"It was a very unique program in that children were allowed to explore their ideas in depth," Ms. Wright said. "We had a small teacher-student ratio. The teachers facilitated the children's own efforts. It was a good experience for the children in terms of problem solving, creativity and learning how unique each of them were. All of the work became very individual. So they learned to respect each other's differences."

While living in the Dallas area, Ms. Wright also taught at St. Mark's School Day Camp.

Ms. Wright's goal is "to develop art programs for children of all ages, not necessarily within the school system, that provide in-depth experiences in art and creativity. I just felt like I would have more opportunities to do that with a graduate degree."

The reason her future plans include pursuing her goal outside the public school system is financial.

"With all of the budget cutbacks, it seems like the arts are cut first," Ms. Wright said. "There's a real need to fill this gap somewhere."

CLASS: Children's films series also planned

(From 1G)

"Painting," July 6-10, ages 6-10, 10:30 a.m.-noon; "Ways of the Wind," July 13-17, ages 6-10, 10:30-11:30 a.m.; "Painting," July 20-24, ages 3-5, 10:30-11:30 a.m.; "Feathered Friends," July 27-31, ages 6-10, 10:30 a.m.- noon; and "Imagine That!" Aug. 3-7, ages 6-10, 10:30 a.m.- noon.

Cost for each five-day class is $37.50 for non-members and $25 for members for ages 3-5 and $55 for non-members and $37.50 for members for ages 6-10. For reservations call the museum, 683-2882.

Also planned for children this summer at the museum is a film series when Dimension Cable Services and the Children's Museum present the "AMC Kids Classics Program."

The premiere film, "The Black Stallion" starring Mickey Rooney and Teri Garr, will be shown at the Children's Museum at 10 a.m. June 13.

The program is being provided in cooperation with American Movie Classics, the cable television industry's only all-classic film service, seen locally on Channel 29. All the movies in the series are based on classics from children's literature.

In addition to the films, Dimension Cable will provide several copies of each book highlighted through the films.

The second showing featuring "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" starring Kirk Douglas, James Mason and Paul Lucas, will be at 10 a.m. June 27.

The showings are free. Space is limited. Reservations may be made by calling 683-2882.

Mother, daughter team up as professional comedy duo

NEW YORK (AP) — Stand-up comics love to lambast their moms. Penny Barat is no exception, but she brings hers with her — on stage.

Known professionally as Penny & Coco, they bill themselves as the "only mother-daughter comedy team" on the circuit today.

"We're the Judds of comedy, if you will," says Penny, a small, perky woman with a high-pitched voice that is a hairbreadth from a whine.

"I'm the zany, kooky one," says Coco, a.k.a. Mom. "And I'm always embarrassed by her, just like many kids in real life," says Penny, jumping into a conversation that seesaws amiably between the two.

Penny, 25, usually plays the straight woman while the ample-figured Coco (who will admit only to being fiftysomething) delivers punch lines, rolling her Betty Boop eyes in comedic exaggeration.

The two have been on the comedy club circuit for six years. While they're not headliners yet, they've played most of the large clubs from Dangerfield's in New York to The Comedy Club in Los Angeles.

"We eat, breathe and sleep this act," says Penny, who conceived their stand-up routine after the demise of a musical revue she put together.

The revue was the first time the mother and daughter teamed up. "There was a part that called for a real wacky, crazy type and I immediately thought, 'Why not my mother?'"

It was not so out of character, since Coco spent most of her daughter's childhood trying to land off-Broadway roles and small television parts. Coco recently had a bit part on NBC's "Law & Order" television show, playing a seedy hotel keeper who discovers a corpse. She also played the girlfriend of Herve ("de plane, de plane") Villechaize in the 1970s movie "Moondreamers."

Vice President boosts Murphy Brown into national limelight

LOS ANGELES (AP) — CBS could never afford to pay for the publicity "Murphy Brown" has received courtesy of America's vice president.

Forget the aftermath of the L.A. riots, Yugoslavia in chaos, even Ross Perot's quasi-candidacy for president. The story that led newspapers and national network news broadcasts last week was Dan Quayle's blistering attack on a make-believe woman.

The only other story getting more national attention last week was Johnny Carson's retirement from "The Tonight Show." Marshall McLuhan's global village seems collectively obsessed not with information, but entertainment programming.

Quayle started with an assertion that the "Murphy Brown" plot line — the fictional TV anchorwoman had a child out of wedlock — was injurious to family values. He came right back with another salvo that accused "Murphy Brown's" writers of having their star give birth instead of having an abortion because they feared bad ratings.

All of this from a man who freely admitted he had never seen the highly popular show, which finished in first place in the recently concluded May sweeps period.

The reaction to Quayle's remarks fell loosely into three camps: those who thought it reinforced the perception, as comedian Robin Williams put it on Carson last week, that Quayle "is one taco short of a combination plate"; those who thought he had a valid point about the sanctity of the American family; and those who thought he was dumb like a fox.

"I don't believe that was a bumbling mistake," said Steve Friedman, executive producer of "NBC Nightly News." "I think they probably sat in a strategy session and said 'look, what we are talking about is family values and look what was on television last night.' I don't think they blundered into it at all."

Few in the television business missed an opportunity to respond to Quayle, though few did so publicly.

All of this from a man who freely admitted he had never seen the highly popular show, which finished in first place in the recently concluded May sweeps period.

"Murphy Brown" co-creator Diane English said "If the vice president thinks it's disgraceful for an unmarried woman to bear a child, and he believes that woman cannot adequately raise a child without a father, then he'd better make sure abortion remains safe and legal."

"Murphy Brown" star Candice Bergen refused comment, as did parent network CBS.

But in the last week of Carson's show, Quayle became an increasingly bigger monologue target. "Do you get the feeling that Dan's golf bag doesn't have a full set of irons?" Carson asked on his penultimate show.

David Letterman didn't let up, either. At one point he shoved his face toward the camera and admonished the vice president to listen up. "I'm only going to say this once. Murphy Brown is a fictional character!"

But Quayle was adamant. "My complaint is that Hollywood thinks it's cute to glamorize illegitimacy," to a group of reporters standing outside a South Central Los Angeles school in the community most ravaged by last month's riots. "Hollywood just doesn't get it ... They're out there in the world of comfort. They ought to be with me where the real America is."

Whether you think Quayle's attack on a TV character was ridiculous or relevant, there is one undisputed fact about the May 18 episode of "Murphy Brown" that sparked this whole brouhaha.

CBS will repeat the birthing episode. On Labor Day.

Elsewhere in television ...

CLINTON'S TURN: The probable Democratic nominee for president also is getting a little attention these days, courtesy of David Frost. The British conversationalist will interview Bill and Hillary Clinton on the next program of his monthly series "... talking with David Frost," scheduled for 9 p.m. EST on PBS (check local listings). "The Clintons are a remarkable team and I am greatly looking forward to talking to both of them," says Frost. Of course, Frost has already interviewed George and Barbara Bush, Ross Perot and even Pat Buchanan in this political year.

ROSEANNE'S DAUGHTER OFF TO YALE: Roseanne Arnold's TV daughter, 17-year-old Sara Gilbert, has been accepted to Yale University. The moody Darlene of ABC's "Roseanne" won't go Ivy League until the show is off the air. The network has renewed it for two more seasons.

Man signs on as musical interpreter

By Laurie Smith Anderson
Associated Press

BATON ROUGE, La. — Daniel Burch is an artist — a dancer, a painter, an actor and a musician.

Without a sound, he reaches into thin air to paint images on the imaginations of an audience.

At a recent performance of the musical "Cats," his images were distinctly feline. Nose turned upward and face held in proud profile, Burch stroked imaginary whiskers in the sign for cat and became one animal ... and then another and another.

A musical interpreter is not limited to one role in a production like "Cats," Burch said. "I get to do the whole show."

Hired by the Riverside Centroplex Theatre to make "Cats" accessible to deaf people, Bruch said he has been overwhelmed by the general community's response to his performance.

"I had lots of calls," said Burch, who coordinates sign language interpretation services for the Louisiana School for the Deaf.

"People said my interpretation enhanced the performance. Some thought I was with the company. A number of people have called wanting to learn sign language. Frankly, I was bowled over. I've never had that kind of response before."

Theatre manager Rochelle McCann said the reaction her office received was so favorable that the theatre is planing to hire him to interpret other shows.

Even people who had no knowledge of sign language told Burch that they had enjoyed his performance and felt it added to their understanding and appreciation of the play.

"I think what that says is that sign language hits at some basic, deep level of understanding and communication," Burch said. "People can pick it up. It may have been our first language."

Burch began his theater "career" with the musical "Hair." His favorite show was "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat."

"Cats" was a big challenge, he says, partly because he rehearsed only 12 hours, instead of his usual 40. He had seen the show only once when it was here before and had no opportunity to rehearse with the cast.

It is important that the interpreter be well prepared, he said, in order to blend in with the show. For "Cats," Burch wore a short-sleeved black shirt to allow free movement of his hands and arms. He rehearsed each song, interpreting words into signs. Creative license gave him the freedom to make signs for words or names that had no signs.

Once he had the signs down, Burch added movement and facial expression. "Your face is your tone of voice" in sign language, Burch explained. Then, there were technical aspects to consider — placement on or off stage and lighting.

Burch said he found the cast and crew to be very accommodating and, after his last performance, they presented him with an autographed poster he plans to hang in his office.

"It's a lot of fun, but it's hard work, too. It takes total concentration. I was physically drained, drenched in sweat, after each performance."

An animated man with an open, expressive face, Burch gestured frequently during the interview. Even when he was on the phone, speaking long distance to a freind, he was gesturing with abandon. "I can't help it," he shrugged, laughing when he hung up.

'People said my interpretation enhanced the performance. Some thought I was with the company. A number of people have called wanting to learn sign language.'

— Daniel Burch

The 42-year-old interpreter has been signing for 22 years. As a psychology student in Michigan, he once held a part-time summer job working with handicapped children — a group that included two deaf children. He learned sign language from a speech therapist and a deaf woman and hasn't slowed down since.

"I picked it up immediately and my future unfolded before me," Burch said.

He later became a foster parent to a deaf child and then married a woman who had a deaf child. Earning his master's degree from Gallaudet University, he spent six years in Washington, D.C., where he interpreted for presidents and senators.

Burch has been in Louisiana since 1981.

In Baton Rouge, Buch has interpreted in a a number of areas, including legal, medical, educational and governmental work. He interprets every Sunday at University Presbyterian Church. However, theater is his first love.

"There have been limited opportunities (for music intepretation) in Baton Rouge in the past, but I'd like to think that's changing," he said.

Movie sequels battle monsters, villains and burnout

N.Y. Times News Service

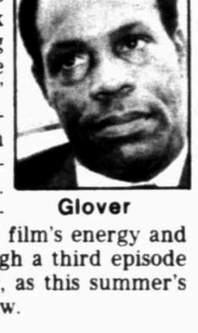

Trying to defuse a bomb set to go off in seconds, Mel Gibson tells his partner something as deep and profound as anything else in "Lethal Weapon 3." He looks down at the tangle of red and blue wires and says: "Oh, no. More plastic than Cher."

Gibson

For a while he and Danny Glover debate which wire to cut, two detectives doing a perfect Abbott and Costello routine, but soon the inevitable happens. A building explodes in a gargantuan fire burst and, from that big-bang opening on, "Lethal Weapon 3" never slows down as it mixes droll comedy and relentless action.

There's no need to look for messages or high art or even a plot here, but the film follows an unbeatable formula for commercial success. In its first weekend, it took in $33.2 million, making it the second-biggest opening in history, just behind "Batman." The major explosion at the start reveals the movie's simple, cautious strategy: pump up the volume and give the audience what it wants, only more.

Glover

That's not as easy as it sounds. Films like "Look Who's Talking Too" and "The Two Jakes" prove that major hits can spawn major-flop sequels. And maintaining the original film's energy and liveliness through a third episode is even trickier, as this summer's "3" movies show.

"LETHAL WEAPON 3" played it safe, with stunning results on screen and at the box office. "Alien 3" took admirable risks but might be sorry. Though it is more daring than "Lethal Weapon 3," it is also uneven and less entertaining. In its opening weekend, "Alien 3" could not dislodge "Lethal Weapon" from the No. 1 spot.

Sigourney Weaver's shaved head in "Alien 3" is only the most conspicuous difference between this movie and its predecessors. The latest installment is extremely dark, both in its subject and its intense, shadowy look.

Ms. Weaver, playing the alien-haunted Ellen Ripley, crashes onto a planet inhabited by prisoners turned religious fanatics. As the doctor played by Charles Dance explains, the sect is some form of "apocalyptic millenarian Christian fundamentalism." Oh. So when does the alien get here?

An adventurous sequel has to take a new direction without forgetting what worked in the first place. And in the midst of its claustrophobic darkness, "Alien 3" loses sight of the creature, which doesn't appear nearly often enough. When it does, it looks a little like E.T. on steroids.

On its own, "Alien 3" is an intriguing, cultish science-fiction movie. But it also has to live in the shadow of Ridley Scott's jump-out-of-your-seat "Alien" (1979) and James Cameron's high-tech, tough-mama "Aliens" (1986).

"ALIEN 3" TONES down the action and tries to replace it with thorny but vague moral questions, like: Is it better to live with an alien in your stomach or to die trying to save the world?

The best scenes bring to mind the wit and flair of "Aliens." After she has sex with the doctor, Ripley casually says, "You have a bar code on the back of your head." He answers with perfect, deadpan sincerity, "That does deserve an explanation, but I don't think now is the moment."

And the film includes some magnificent action sequences. The camera zooms at an impossibly fast speed through the brown, murky tunnels of the prison. But before long it seems as though the prison population (a steadily decreasing group) is being chased down those same old tunnels again and again.

It would be too easy to blame all this on David Fincher, 28, the first-time director; he's just partly responsible. The film was one of those difficult projects that chewed up at least one other director (Vincent Ward, who never started shooting) and more than a half-dozen writers.

But the stylishly existential "Alien 3" is also of a piece with Fincher's "Express Yourself" video for Madonna, in which giant gears, chains and slave-labor are a fashion statement.

THERE IS NO reason why the ambitious "Alien 3" could not have been a smashing entertainment. But there may be some connection between the high-energy escapist success of "Lethal Weapon 3" and the fact that its only ambition is to top itself.

'Lethal Weapon 3' never slows down as it mixes droll comedy and relentless action.

Of course, topping "Lethal Weapon 2" means coming up with something more inventive than a bomb stuck under a toilet (and therefore under Glover) — a funny scene, but we're not talking about visionary moments. And though "Lethal Weapon 3" may be the least inventive in the series, that still makes it very good.

Gibson, Glover and Richard Donner, who has directed all three "Lethal Weapons," have concocted the best action-buddy-comedy formula since "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid."

Glover is the family man supposedly heading toward retirement. Gibson is his manic partner, a cute version of all three Stooges, who happens to be as indestructible as the Terminator.

He compares scars with a glamorous, karate-kicking detective (Rene Russo). Then they go off to blow away bad guys together. Gibson takes flying leaps over cars and crashes through several floors of a house under construction. These characters are not quite tethered to reality, which means that every car chase, shootout and explosion can be a lark, an occasion for one-liners.

JOE PESCI, WHO returns from "Lethal Weapon 2" as the fast-talking Leo Getz, is this film's mascot. He is a walking visual joke with spiky, bleached-blond hair and nothing much to do. He's irrelevant, but so is the plot about a corrupt ex-cop and stolen guns.

"Lethal Weapon 3" is composed of dozens of such isolated elements — like Leo, familiar but slightly altered — that add up to a fluent whole.

The movie only goes wrong when it tries to be serious, introducing the idea of teen-agers with guns, a subject the film is not nearly equipped to handle. And this script certainly wouldn't address the irony of an action film preaching against street violence. A film that does that might as well ask existential questions about aliens.

Producers empty comedy clubs in search of talent

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES —There are few trends to spot in next season's TV lineup, though producers evidently still are mining comedy clubs in search of talent to headline new sitcoms.

This year, comedian Paul Reiser, who spent a few seasons on the air with "My Two Dads," comes back with the Seinfeldesque "Loved by You" at 9:30 Wednesday nights.

Other comedians who landed their own series are Martin Lawrence of "Martin," Ben Stiller of "The Ben Stiller Show," Roger Kabler of "Rhythm and Blues" and the funny Julie Brown on the sketch comedy "The Edge."

Though they are hoping to strike gold like Roseanne Arnold of "Roseanne" or Tim Allen of "Home Improvement," they are just as likely to end up in the cancellation category in the company of Lenny Clarke of "Lenny" or Billy Connelly of "Billy."

Speaking of trends — and if two or more of anything constitutes one — "Martin" and "Rhythm and Blues" are set in African-American radio stations; "Love and War," "Hearts Afire" and "The Round Table" are set in Washington, D.C.; and "Love and War," "Delta," "The Round Table" and "Up All Night" are among the new shows that prominently feature a bar.

And African-Americans also star in a record number of shows, from the returning "Fresh Prince of Bel Air," "Roc" and "A Different World," to the new "Here and Now," "Up All Night," "Hangin' With Mr. Cooper," "Martin," "In the Loop" and "Rhythm and Blues," among them.

In the anti-trend department, there is a noticeable lack of animation this season, with last year's shows spawned by the success of "The Simpsons" falling flat on their faces.

Gone and not mourned are ABC's "Capitol Critters" and CBS' "Fish Police." And whatever happened to CBS' "Family Dog," the much-touted cartoon from filmmakers Steven Spielberg and Tim Burton?

SAN ANTONIO — Paula Abdul's "Under My Spell" tour will bring the pop star to Sea World of Texas her for a concert appearance at the marine park June 12.

Abdul

Miss Abdul will perform for Sea World guests beginning at 9 p.m. at the park's outdoor concert area.

Sea World is open weekends and some holidays in the spring and fall and daily June 1 through Aug. 30. Beginning June 12, the 250-acre park will extend its hours of operation to 11 p.m. to accommodate Miss Abdul's concert-goers.

All Sea World concerts are included in the regular price of admission to the park along with more than 25 shows, exhibits and attractions. Concert seating is limited and offered on a first-come, first-serve basis.

In addition, Sea World guests can save $3 off the regular price of admission June 12 by presenting a discount coupon available at participating Taco Bell restaurants.

Throughout the '92 season, a child age 3 to 11 receives free admission to Sea World when accompanied by a paying adult. The offer is limited to one free child's ticket with each purchase of an adult one-day ticket and is not valid with passes.

The Paula Abdul concert at Sea World is sponsored in part by Kodak, Taco Bell, Advantage Rent-A-Car, the San Antonio Express-News and KTFM Radio.

Other performers scheduled for Sea World this season are Dolly Parton July 4, Reba McEntire Sept. 26, James Taylor July 25, George Strait Sept. 5 and 6, and Little Joey La Familia, La Sombra and the Texas Tornados, all on Aug. 22.

'Dennis the Menace' calls flood studio

CHICAGO (AP) — Hundreds of people called Warner Bros. studios earlier this week offering boys for the starring role in "Dennis the Menace," even though the company won't take suggestions by phone, a spokeswoman said.

Warner Bros. will choose a "Dennis" by screening videotapes of candidates, who must be boys 5 to 7 years old, of medium height and weight.

The company wasn't counting the calls, but the phones were ringing steadily, said spokeswoman Charlotte Kandle.

Filming of the John Hughes movie is scheduled to start this summer in Chicago. The movie is scheduled for release next year.

A videotape of no more than 5 minutes, along with a photo of the boy, should be sent to "Dennis the Menace" Casting Office, Warner Bros., 4000 Warner Blvd., Burbank, Calif. 91522. Submissions will be accepted June 1-10.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Display your leadership skills now and a nice promotion is possible. No one expects you to have all the answers — just some sensible suggestions. Financial backing is forthcoming for a special project next November. Be patient. Romance will force you to make a long-overdue decision early in 1993. Follow your heart. Community activities involving children should prove especially rewarding next March.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actresses Sharon Gless and Brooke Shields, actor Clint Eastwood, poet Walt Whitman.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Relatives may be difficult to please today. Take a trip to the countryside or spend time with old friends. You could get the urge to test your "green thumb." Buy some seeds or plants.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A speculative venture remains too risky. Protect jointly owned resources. Singles can further their romantic aims by attending parties. Be good to yourself; set aside more time for relaxation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Pour on the charm and you win new admirers today. A fun invitation will follow. Seek interviews with people who can help you make career or social connections.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Physical activity is the best outlet for anxiety today. When you busy yourself with household tasks or play a favorite sport, you will escape that hemmed-in feeling.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): No one wants to budge today; yield some ground in order to establish domestic harmony. Someone at a distance offers you wise advice. Enjoy the friendly atmosphere at a social function.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): It is full steam ahead today where personal relationships are concerned. One-to-one meetings and group events enjoy equally favorable influences. Celebrate tonight.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are as sharp as a tack today and can wrap up a work or domestic project in short order. Keep up to date with old friends and influential acquaintances.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your charismatic style still attracts admirers. Both social and professional gatherings provide you with an opportunity to seek financial backing. It pays to dress to impress!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You have a sixth sense about who you should trust and confide in. When a suggested course of action seems appropriate, go for it. Making secret plans with your friends boosts your spirits.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Friends, colleagues and organizations can be relied upon for good will and favors. A high profile serves your interests, and so does a showing of team spirit.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New ideas keep popping into your head. Focus on creative pursuits. Be careful not to neglect family life; domestic arrangements will benefit from your personal attention.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You are one lucky duck today! Your friends stand ready to help you in any way. Employment prospects brighten. The key is to circulate and be sociable.

WHICH FINESSE?

	NORTH
	♠ A 10 2
	♡ 9 7 5
	◇ A Q 5 3
	♣ J 6 4
WEST		EAST
♠ 8 7 6		♠ Q 9 4 3
♡ Q J 8 6 4		♡ K 2
◇ 10 8 2		◇ J 9
♣ K 3		♣ 10 9 7 5 2
	SOUTH
	♠ K J 5
	♡ A 10 3
	◇ K 7 6 4
	♣ A Q 8

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Six of ♡

When you have a choice of finesses, you can sometimes take both if you try them in the right order. However, your best bet could be to take neither!

Three no trump was an easy enough contract to reach. With at least 27 high-card points in the combined holding, North did not expect South to have any problem landing nine tricks.

After the opening lead of the six of hearts, the Rule of Seven tells us it is correct to hold up the ace of hearts for just one round. Therefore, South should allow East's king of hearts to hold and win the continuation.

With finesses in both black suits available, declarer can combine chances by first taking the spade finesse into the safe hand—East. If it wins, declarer needs only a normal split in diamonds to reel in nine tricks, but when it loses South will still be able to try the club finesse. Unfortunately, that also fails —and so does the contract.

With careful timing, declarer need take neither finesse; the enemy can be recruited to do South's work. After winning the ace of hearts, declarer should take exactly three rounds of diamonds to strip that suit from the defenders' hands. Then declarer exits with a heart.

West can cash two more hearts, on which declarer discards a spade and a club from dummy and a diamond and a club from hand. Now West must broach one of the black suits and whichever West chooses presents declarer with the fulfilling trick in that suit. Note that had declarer cashed all four diamonds, South would not have been able to discard safely on the last heart.

THE MOST IMPORTANT VIDEO YOU'LL EVER OWN.

June is KIDPRINT® month!

During June, visit your local BLOCKBUSTER Video® store and participate in KIDPRINT, our national community service program designed to safeguard America's most precious resource, your children.

KIDPRINT is the most important home video we'll ever make - YOU and BLOCKBUSTER Video - together! Here's how it works: bring your child (age 12 and under) and a blank tape to any BLOCKBUSTER Video from Monday, June 1 to Tuesday, June 30. Or, you may purchase a special SONY® blank videocassette for only $2.50. Net proceeds from this purchase will be donated to the National Center For Missing & Exploited Children.

We'll then videotape your child - FREE OF CHARGE!

In the unfortunate event that something should happen, you'll have a vital record of your child's appearance, as well as a source of vocal identification.

Hopefully, your KIDPRINT tape(s) will remain untouched on the home library shelf. Yet, should it ever be needed, police agree there is no better tool for use in the search of a missing child. To date, 200,000 children have been videotaped through KIDPRINT at BLOCKBUSTER Video stores.

KIDPRINT has been recognized by numerous national civic and law enforcement agencies, including the National Association of Elementary School Principals, the American Federation of Police, Optimist International, Boys and Girls Clubs of America and Girl Scouts of the U.S.A.

Remember to KIDPRINT your children at BLOCKBUSTER Video in June. It's the most important video you'll ever own.
