Police, firemen move for civil service board

By DONNY BROWN
SDN Managing Editor

It appears Snyder voters will be asked to decide the implementation of a civil service commission here--a three-member body with the power to consider matters related to both police and paid fire department personnel.

City officials were working Friday to verify if the correct number of names were obtained on a petition submitted to them which calls for this vote.

Some 131 signatures are required to call for the ballot, and City Administrator John Gayle said Saturday morning it appears this number will be exceeded.

The petition asks that the question of implementation be placed on an August ballot.

If approved, the commission--comprised of three local citizens appointed to serve--could hear such matters as citizens complaints or questions regarding either department.

In addition, it would hear and act on similar questions or complaints generated from within both departments.

In this capacity, the commission could decide both police and fire officer's questions related to hiring, firing and disciplinary action within each's department.

As a result of such hearings, the commission would have the right to overrule such actions if it was deemed that the reasons for the dismissal or disciplinary action were not fair under the guidelines of the civil service statute.

The commission would not have the power to become involved in pay disputes, however, nor to set specific policy for either department. These functions would remain with the department heads and the city council.

If approved by the voters, the commission would be appointed by the chief executive officer of the city, in this case the city manager.

These appointments would then have to be approved by council vote. The members would serve without pay and would be in session whenever action was required of them.

Such an action could be in-

Snyder teachers recognized here upon retirement

Nine retiring Snyder ISD staffers were honored during the system's annual awards presentation Saturday.

The nine, including Assistant Superintendent Jack Gorman, were each presented retirement gifts.

Taking early retirement last Oct.31 were Beth Curry and Dorothy Lavender. Staffers retiring with the end of this school year include James Wesson, Evelyn Young, Joye Loyd, Cleo Keller and Ann Walton. Gorman will retire June 12.

A librarian at North Elementary, East Elementary and briefly at Central Elementary during her 27 years with Snyder ISD, Beth Curry earned a bachelor of science degree from East Texas State University in 1971. She began her career as a librarian here in 1959.

A 1968 graduate of Wayland Baptist University with a bachelor of arts degree, Dorothy Lavender also attended Texas Tech University. She has served as a resource teacher for the high school since 1971. Prior to joining the school system, she taught with Pettit ISD in Hockley County.

She is married to Dale Lavender, also a retired SISD teacher.

James Wesson began his career here 29 years ago as an elementary physical education teacher. He assumed his present post as a junior high counselor in 1973. After receiving a bachelor of science degree in 1958 and a master of education degree in 1970 from Texas Tech University, he has also pursued graduate studies at Sul Ross University.

His wife is Janet Wesson, currently a counselor for Snyder High School.

Alta Lynch has completed her 23rd year as an English teacher at Snyder High School. Beginning with the system in 1967, she taught one year in Brownsville ISD and one year in the Ruidoso Municipal School District before moving to Snyder.

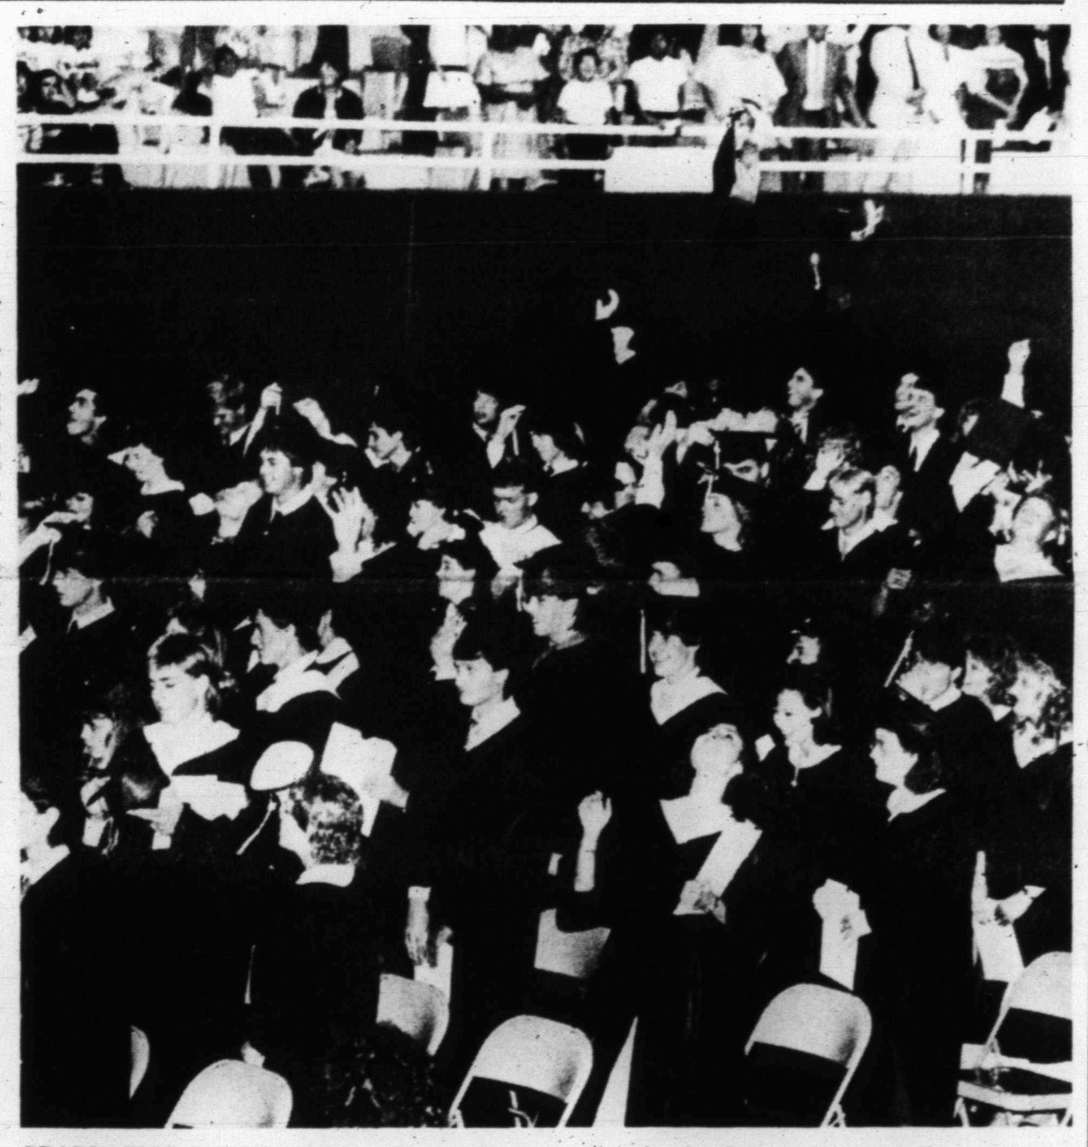

Completing requirements for the bachelor of science degree from Howard Payne University in 1962, she earned a master of arts degree from Hardin-Simmons University in 1977. She is married to Kenneth Lynch, who is also a Snyder ISD teacher.

A teacher for the past 16 years, Evelyn Young has taught fifth grade at Central Elementary for eight years. The prior eight years, she taught in the Good Shepherd Diocese in Dallas.

She earned a bachelor of science degree in 1946 from East Texas State University and a master of science in 1977 from the same institution. Married to Joe Young, she has done additional graduate work at Texas Tech University, the University of Texas-Permian Basin and UT in Austin.

Currently a resource teacher at Central Elementary, Joye Loyd served the first 13 years of her 25-year stint with Snyder ISD at

The feller on Deep Creek says, "If you think you have influence, try ordering somebody else's dog around."

It's bound to be a combination of spring fever and the uncertain economy. We've observed that folks seem to have a shorter fuse than in the past.

We had noticed this in recent months, but some other folks have made the same observation. People are just more uptight than in times past--and perhaps for good reason.

Those observing this situation all agree it has to do with depressed economy and the current uncertainties. Said one, "When times are good, few people complain. But when times are tough, it doesn't take much to set off a long line of negatives."

Athletic coaches have known about this psychological factor for a long time. When the home team is winning, fans are cheerful, but when the home team gets behind, it's time to find somebody to blame.

The above can best be described as "life." We just need to remember the solution isn't jumping down the throat of your fellow citizen--he's probably in the same boat.

Now that summer has arrived, folks going on vacation are eager to try out the new 65 mph limit on rural interstates. You might want to keep in mind this story:

A man died and arrived at the Pearly Gates. "Have you ever done anything wrong," the gatekeeper asked.

"Well, I stole a watermelon, but that was 40 years ago," explained the deceased.

"Have you done anything else, perhaps more recently?" asked the heavenly gatekeeper.

"Yes," replied the man. "A Texas highway patrolman stopped me and was writing out a ticket for exceeding the new speed limit. I got very angry and spit on his boots."

"When was that?" asked St. Peter.

"About five minutes ago."

Abduction angers British officials

LONDON (AP) — The Iranians released a British diplomat in Tehran on Friday after Britain protested angrily that he was beaten and abducted at gunpoint in front of his wife and children 24 hours earlier.

In a diplomatic row, Iran protested what it called the "illegal arrest" of an Iranian consular official in Britain.

The Iranian was free on bail charged with shoplifting, reckless driving and resisting officers who arrested him Thursday. An Iranian diplomat claimed that police tortured the official.

The Foreign Office rejected any link between the Iranian's arrest and the abduction of British diplomat Edward Chaplin, 36, in Tehran.

"If there were any question of it being tit-for-tat it would be a disgraceful affair," Timothy Renton, a deputy foreign secretary, told reporters before a meeting with Iran's top diplomat in London, Charge d'Affaires Akhunzadeh Basti, who was summoned to hear Britain's demand for an explanation.

Basti said afterward: "I don't think there was a connection between these two incidents. It was a coincidence, you may say."

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher expressed relief that Chaplin, the first secretary of the British Interest Section at Sweden's Embassy in Tehran, had been released.

Chaplin did not suffer any broken bones in the beating and was "as well as could be expected," the Foreign Office said.

Asked what the incident meant for relations between Britain and Iran, Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe said it was too early to reply. "We shall have to find out more of what happened," he said.

Britain closed its embassy in Iran in 1980 following Iranian charges that Iranian students detained after a violent anti-American demonstration in London were ill-treated by prison guards.

Chaplin was driving with his wife, 3-year-old daughter, infant son, and a colleague and another small child when a car stopped suddenly and caused a collision with his car. Six armed men got out, beat Chaplin, dragged him into their car and drove off, the spokesman said.

One gunman got into Chaplin's car with his family and friends and drove off recklessly, finally stopping and leaving them, the Foreign Office spokesman said.

The abductors were later identified by the Iranian news agency as members of the Revolutionary Komiteh, an internal security force.

William Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania, landed at what is now Chester, Pa., in 1682.

Pact offers talks on defense doctrine

BERLIN (AP) — The Warsaw Pact called on NATO to join it in talks to mutually reduce armed strength to the minimum required for defense.

The seven-nation communist alliance, concluding a two-day summit here Friday, also called for abandoment of the concept of nuclear deterrence.

In addition, Herbert Krolikowski, secretary general of the alliance, told a news conference in East Berlin the Warsaw Pact favors negotiations on battlefield nuclear weapons once medium-and shorter-range nuclear missiles are eliminated from Europe. Battlefield weapons have a range of less than 300 miles.

A Warsaw Pact communique said the battlefield weapons talks should be part of the alliance's proposed multilateral negotiations on reducing conventional forces, not handled separately.

The Warsaw Pact offered NATO talks on conventional weapons a year ago, but nothing has come of the proposal.

"The participants in the session ... call for a new way of thinking ... for the abandonment of the concept of 'nuclear deterrence,' which supposes that nuclear weapons are the guarantee for the security of states," the communique said.

"In a nuclear war, there can be no winners," it said.

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has espoused the eventual elimination of all nuclear weapons, and President Reagan supports the idea in principle. But Washington's West European allies oppose "denuclearization," convinced that a nuclear power balance has helped preserve peace.

Gorbachev kept a relatively low profile during the summit and did not speak to the news media. He flew to Moscow late Friday.

Krolikowski said NATO and the Warsaw Pact should discuss defense strategies and commit themselves to defenses at the lowest possible level.

The two alliances, he said, could talk about "inequalities" in weaponry and forces and ways to eliminate them, but he was not specific.

Warsaw Pact conventional forces in Europe are superior numerically to those of NATO.

He said the NATO-Warsaw Pact talks could start this year in Warsaw or Brussels, the headquarters of the Eastern and Western alliances respectively.

Krolikowski also said the Warsaw Pact sought an "immediate" conclusion of a treaty with the United States on the elimination of U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles in Europe, and the "simultaneous" abolition of shorter-range rockets.

The communist alliance's willingness to negotiate on battlefield weapons seemed aimed at concerns that West Germany would bear much of the risk of nuclear attack if the West embraced Soviet offers to remove medium- and longer-range missiles from Europe.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl has held up NATO agreement on a Western response to the Soviet proposals because of those fears. He says the battlefield nuclear weapons threaten Germans "on both sides of the (Berlin) Wall and barbed wire."

Slain girl's father testifies in trial

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Testimony in the second day of the Cullen Davis wrongful death suit centered on an apology he made to the father of a girl killed in a 1976 shootout at the Davis mansion.

But Jack Wilborn, the father of 12-year-old Andrea Wilborn, acknowledged Friday that Davis didn't say why he was apologizing.

Wilborn and Priscilla Davis filed a civil suit against the Fort Worth industrialist in connection with the slaying of their daughter. Davis was acquitted of criminal charges in the shooting and has denied he was the killer.

Mrs. Davis, 45, who previously was married to Wilborn and was divorcing Davis at the time of the shooting, contends Davis killed her daughter.

Mrs. Davis' boyfriend, Stan Farr, 30, also was killed and a friend, Bubba Gavrel, was wounded. Mrs. Davis is seeking $6 million in damages. Testimony in the case resumes Monday.

Wilborn testified Friday that Davis apologized to him last year at the Word of Faith Church in Farmers Branch and asked for his forgiveness. Wilborn said the exchange went like this:

"He said, 'Hi Jack, how are you?'"

"I said, 'Just fine.'"

"He said, 'Can you ever forgive me for what I did?'"

"I said, 'Cullen, I forgave you a long time ago.'"

Wilborn said his wife, Betty, was standing nearby and began to cry. He testified that he and Davis embraced, and "it was a very emotional experience."

Under cross-examination, however, Wilborn acknowledged that Davis didn't say exactly why he was apologizing.

On Thursday, prosecutors introduced a photograph of Davis wearing a black turtleneck sweater, which they said Davis had denied owning.

Mrs. Davis' lawyer, Bob Gibbins of Austin, showed jurors the photograph. Witnesses of the shooting at the Davis mansion have said the gunman was wearing black.

Saragosa likely to rebuild better

SARAGOSA, Texas (AP) — Jose Candelas showed the yellowed, creased newspaper clipping about his general store.

Published in 1963 with a photograph of the business, it detailed how the store had served Saragosa for more than a decade.

Twenty-four years after the story appeared, Candelas, 67, sat in his car on a hot Tuesday afternoon in front of where his store used to be. He also showed off a new photograph taken last Saturday of him standing in the rubble of the small business.

Last weekend's killer tornado obliterated much of this small, poor predominantly Hispanic hamlet in West Texas. Survivors now are organizing to rebuild their lives and town, but in so many ways it can never be the same.

Candelas said he wanted to rebuild his store but he was uncertain that he could get the money to do it.

When the twister dipped from the sky without warning May 22, it razed more than 70 percent of Saragosa, destroying the Catholic church, Candelas' store and more than 55 mostly handmade adobe and concrete-block homes. It left 29 people dead and more than 162 injured. Damage was estimated at about $3 million.

In devastating Saragosa, the tornado also thrust this close-knit, community out of its isolation and into the national spotlight.

The 250 or so residents of pre-tornado Saragosa had a simple life by modern standards. Mostly farmworkers, their days were long and filled with hard, manual labor.

"Most of these people don't know how to read or write," said Reeves County Sheriff Raul Florez, who during part of his 31-year career with the sheriff's department was deputy for Saragosa's end of the county.

"If they had any kind of legal matters, they would bring it to me to look at."

Most residents owned their homes but few if any could afford insurance. And their economic status could preclude their receiving certain types of government rebuilding aid.

"These people are so poor that I don't think many can qualify for low-interest loans" offered by the U.S. Small Business Administration as part of federal disaster relief, said state Rep. Larry Shaw, D-Big Spring, whose district includes Saragosa.

Many Saragosans are second and third generation Americans, others are Mexicans. But almost all have retained their Mexican heritage and culture, a tradition that has family and church at its center.

It was on this tradition — family and church — that the surviors fell back on in the first days after the tornado. And it likely is this tradition that will be the cornerstone on which Saragosa rebuilds.

The church was there in the form of the Rev. Ralph Barranger, the Saragosa pastor who has worked after the tornado to help and console his parishioners, and Bishop Raymond Pena, who has pledged his diocese's resources to help the town rebuild.

The family was there, too. By the end of the first day only a couple of families of survivors were staying in the Red Cross shelter set up in nearby Balmorhea. The rest had found refuge with families or friends.

Relatives came from hundreds of miles away to be with the survivors in their sorrow. The clannish community closed ranks around itself.

After two days of being harried by reporters toting notebooks, tape recorders and mini-cams, the survivors and their families and friends decided it was too much. At their request, the sheriff's department kept reporters away from them.

"You see, these people don't know what this is all about," said Kelly Davis, a deputy who covers Saragosa. "You pull all these big TV trucks in there, and for all they know it's an atomic bomb.

"They just want to be with each other in their grief."

But after Tuesday, when 17 of the dead were buried after an outdoor funeral Mass that drew thousands, Saragosa began rebuilding.

The community faces more than the usual kinds of problems. As an unincorporated town, Saragosa had no elected mayor or city council. Some of its leaders died in the storm.

And as the debris was being cleaned up, county officials discovered that their property records of Saragosa were useless. Their town plat had Saragosa sitting a mile away from its present site.

But residents this weekend were hoping to resolve these problems. They are holding a community meeting to choose representatives, who will begin working with the Red Cross, church groups and governmental agencies.

They plan to redraw property lines, resettle survivors in temporary housing at Saragosa and choose contractors to replace houses and buildings.

Local family doctor serves as physician for a day

AUSTIN--Dr. James Burleson, Snyder physician, volunteered to give his time as the "Physician for the Day" for the Texas Legislature on Friday. Dr. Burleson participated in the program as a member of the Texas Academy of Family Physicians.

The Texas Academy of Family Physicians has sponsored this program, in cooperation with the Texas Medical Association and the Texas Department of Health, for each legislative session since 1971.

Dr. Burleson volunteered a day of his time to staff the Capitol Aid Station. He was available to treat any emergencies involving anyone in the Capitol building or on the grounds. However, the primary concern for the "Physician for the Day is the care and well being of the legislators and their families.

Man credited with reshaping school said coming to SMU

DALLAS (AP) — The new Southern Methodist University president is credited with shaking up Duke University when he was at the helm of the North Carolina school.

Friends and colleagues of A. Kenneth Dye say it was that bull-by-the horns attitude that propelled Duke into a first-class private university. And they say more of the same can be expected at SMU.

Pye, 55, a law professor and two-time chancellor at Duke, was named president of SMU Friday and has the task ahead of restoring the reputation and spirit of the scandal-plagued university.

"Ken will be an absolutely outstanding president at SMU," said Duke president H. Keith H. Brodie. "He brings to the SMU presidency exactly the right skills: integrity, commitment to academic excellence and a sense of the right balance between athletics and the academic mission for the university."

"The trustees have made a splendid choice. Kenneth Pye will provide the strong leadership that will advance SMU in every respect," said U.S. Sen. Terry Sanford, who was president of Duke from 1969 to 1985.

Faculty members who met Pye Thursday night were equally impressed.

"He has one of the best analytical minds I've ever seen," said SMU English professor Marshall Terry, a 30-year SMU veteran and former presidential assistant.

"One of his great abilities was leading Duke through a very difficult period," said Andrew Bryant, SMU admissions director who was associate admissions director at Duke when Pye was chancellor.

Bryant was referring to what Duke officials call the period of retrenchment, when Pye, as chancellor, eliminated the undergraduate schools of education and nursing and cut staff.

He also added the Institute of Policy Studies, a public affairs school, and strengthened the graduate business school.

"He generally shook the place up," said Bryant. "He developed a plan for the university and developed a mission for the university. And do you know what happened to Duke? It just took off."

Pye is known for helping create an atmosphere in which education and athletes' graduation became a priority.

The graduation rate for football and basketball players at Duke is now more than 90 percent, compared with a 20 percent average in the Southwest Conference, said John Weistart, a Duke law professor and longtime colleague of Pye's who is writing an article on the subject.

"It is clear that Ken Pye deserves most of the credit for that," he said. "It goes all the way back to admissions decisions."

In his seven years as chancellor, 1970-71 and 1976-82, and one year as acting president, Pye raised admission standards for athletes. That hasn't necessarily hurt the athletic program, though: the Blue Devils, the Duke basketball team, made it to the NCAA championship game in 1986.

"Ken's friendly toward athletics. He knows a lot about it and cares about it and has a strong sense of what is proper and what isn't," said John Blackburn, provost at Duke while Pye was chancellor.

During the administration of President Jimmy Carter, Pye was recommended for appointment to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Pye is known as a candid, tough administrator.

"He's a very strong person, he doesn't put up with nonsense," said Blackburn. But Pye also has a good sense of humor.

"He's very funny," added Blackburn, recalling Pye's one-liners.

"Will he fit in with Dallas?" asked Bryant rhetorically. "He's a commanding person, He's very direct but strongly sensitive to human beings. This guy could fit in anywhere."

Southern Methodist University...

Roman Catholic chosen president

DALLAS (AP) — A Duke University professor hired to lead Southern Methodist University out of its scandal-marred mire says that his brand of scholarship and Texas' famed football mania may not be compatible.

"And if it is incompatible, then academics must prevail," A. Kenneth Pye declared Friday after SMU's Board Of Trustees chose him to replace L. Donald Shields as the Southwest Conference school's ninth president.

Shields resigned from the president's post Nov. 21 after growing allegations of illicit payoffs to athletes. The scandal eventually cost SMU its 1987 football season and embarrassed officials all the way to the governor's mansion.

Pye, a 55-year-old Roman Catholic, quickly distanced himself from the payoffs mess and pledged to maintain athletic integrity and academic excellence at SMU.

"I accepted this post because I see it as a challenge in some senses and a remarkable opportunity in others," said Pye, who twice served as chancellor at Duke. "I'm not buying a pig in a poke and I'm not responsible for what happened here.

"The university faces challenges, but even greater opportunities. The football scandal is behind it. The future is before it," he said. "I am deeply honored by my selection as president of SMU."

Pye was selected from among the more than 225 candidates reviewed by the presidential search committee headed by Dallas oilman Ray Hunt, acting chairman of the board of trustees.

The Rev. Spurgeon M. Dunnam III, editor and general manager of the United Methodist Reporter, said the appointment breaks with Methodist tradition because Pye is a Roman Catholic heading the Methodist university.

Dunnam said it may be difficult initially for Methodists to accept Pye, but "it's not an insurmountable task."

Pye starts at SMU in the autumn, and his appointment comes at a time of upheaval as the school faces two years without football and an overhaul of its governing structure.

But "this is not a university that needs a miracle man. It is not a university that needs a general on a white horse.

In the harshest penalty ever against a college football program, the National Collegiate Athletic Association suspended SMU football for 1987, citing $61,000 in illicit payments to 13 SMU players or former players. The school subsequently decided not to play football in 1988.

San Antonio transit may lose because of charter service

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The city's Metropolitan Transit Authority could lose about $1.7 million in revenue because of a new regulation that prohibits federally funded transit systems from operating private charter bus services.

The regulation, approved by the Urban Mass Transit Administration, is expected to gut VIA's vast $2 million annual local charter service, which includes the transit system's Gray Line Sightseeing Tours operation.

But the new regulation is not expected to complicate VIA's plans to use its fleet of 500 buses for charter service during the September visit of Pope John Paul II, officials said.

The rule, approved by the administration last month and effective May 13, contains five exemptions, one of which allows local transit systems to apply for a waiver of the rule if they can establish a need in the event of "special sporting events" and "visits by foreign dignitaries."

VIA spokeswoman Elizabeth Bingham said Friday that VIA has not yet applied for the waiver because there still are some questions as to when the regulation should take effect.

She said the Archdiocese of San Antonio has been aware of the situation since VIA's plans for charter services were first presented.

"We will work this out," Ms. Bingham said. "There will be bus service for the papal visit. Chances are almost zero that we wouldn't provide the service."

UMTA spokeswoman Kay Sundstrum said the regulation was designed to prevent federally funded systems from using their money to compete with private companies in providing private services.

Donelson earns honor at SMU

Laurie Donelson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mal Donelson of Snyder, recently received her highest honor since attending Southern Methodist University. She was one of 30 students selected from 280 eligible candidates to Mortar Board, a national honorary based on outstanding scholarship, leadership and service to the school and community. She maintains a cumulative GPA of 3.73 on a 4.0 scale and has been on the honor roll for three years.

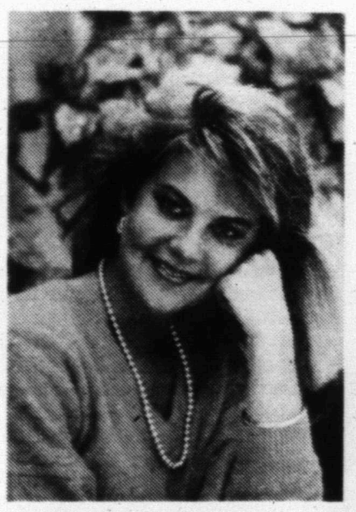

Donelson has completed her junior year at SMU where she is majoring in art history and English. Her freshman year she was elected as a member of Phi Eta Sigma and Alpha Lambda Delta. She also served on various Student Senate committees. She was a docent for the Meadows Museum of Spanish Art.

With the museum she worked with Dallas area public schools' art projects for gifted children.

She also served as vice president of Pledge Education for Delta Gamma Sorority and formerly served as activities chairman and historian for the sorority.

During her 1986-87 school year, she was chosen as an Academic All-American and a member of Outstanding College Students of America. She is one of six students inducted into Sigma Tau Delta this year, a national English honorary. She was selected a member of Order of Omega, a Greek honorary based on leadership, scholarship and service within the Greek system.

Donelson attended SMU-in-Australia last summer and will attend SMU-in-Paris in the fall of 1987. She will graduate from SMU in the spring of 1988 and plans to attend graduate school.

Gunman couldn't be talked out of room

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Hidalgo County sheriff's deputy Bob Davis didn't have much success when he phoned one of his officers suspected of firing indiscriminately at a hotel swimming pool, then barricading himself in his room.

The suspect hung up on Davis.

"I said, 'Hey, remember, you're a police officer,'" said Davis. "He just paused for a minute and hung up."

Keith Allen Faires, 27, a criminal investigator for Hidalgo County in south Texas, was in the El Paso County Jail Friday, charged with attempted murder. Bond is set at $75,000. He has been suspended without pay from the sheriff's department.

The 100 or so detectives Faires joined in El Paso Thursday for the first annual Homicide Investigators of Texas convention agreed that the incident gave law enforcement a black eye. But they were praised by hotel officials for their swift response.

"They're embarrassed. They feel worse than anybody could possibly feel," Marriott Hotel general manager Mike Shoffit said. "But it could have been a lot worse. Because they were here, they knew just what to do."

Japan announces expanded package of spending plans

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone on Friday announced an expanded $42 billion emergency spending package designed to spark flagging economic growth and satisfy foreign demands to increase imports.

The package met with favor in the United States, which has pushed Japan to help ease world economic imbalances on the eve of a seven-nation summit conference in Venice on June 8-10.

"Prime Minister Nakasone can take that package to Venice with pride," U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter told a group of foreign journalists in Washington. He said Japan now needs to focus on accepting more farm imports.

The measures, approved by Cabinet ministers at a morning meeting, entail public spending worth nearly $35 billion and income tax cuts of almost $7 billion.

"This package is much more substantive and should be more effective than any previous package Japan has ever attempted," said Kunio Miyamoto, director-general of the Economic Planning Agency's Policy Coordination Bureau. "We have really gone as far as we can."

"With this package, I think we will be able to overcome the recession (in Japan) caused by the yen's appreciation," he said.

Sen. Graham files bill to mark de Soto trail

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill that would require a study leading to the designation and marking of Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto's trail through Texas and other Southern states has been introduced by Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla.

Graham said Friday he wanted the de Soto Trail to be marked by 1989, the 450th anniversary of the explorer's landing in Florida.

"We know the trail de Soto and his expedition carved out from 1539 to 1543, a trail more bloody that benign ..., was one of the greatest expeditions of the New World and one of the causes of the eventual decimation of the American Indian population," Graham said.

"De Soto irrevocably altered the history and pattern of Western civilization," he added. "As we follow in his footsteps, we will fill in the epic narrative of where we have been."

State archaeologists recently discovered the first physical evidence of de Soto's expedition at the site of one of his encampments in Tallahassee.

Graham said that find, including Spanish chain mail and other artifacts, is a reminder that the history of the nation's exploration and discovery is still being written.

De Soto's expedition also took him through Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Texas and Louisiana a century before the first English settlement at Jamestown.

He died on the banks of the Mississippi River in 1542, a broken and disappointed man because he had failed to find gold or other treasures he was seeking, Graham said.

Ventura swats in 57 straight as Cowboys top Arizona State

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) - The hit parade continues for Robin Ventura, and his Oklahoma State teammates are in step at the College World Series.

Ventura extended his NCAA-record hitting streak to 57 games as the Cowboys State beat Arizona State 8-3 Friday in the opening game of the series.

In the second game, Gregg Patterson came within an out of throwing the first complete game shutout in the series since 1983 as he pitched Louisiana State past Florida State 6-2 in 10 innings.

Ventura extended his hitting streak with a sixth-inning single off Linty Ingram, 10-5. The sophomore third baseman added an RBI double in the seventh to improve his batting average to .435.

"There's no pressure," Ventura said. "This team's good enough that if I don't get a hit, I'm not worried that we can't win."

The Cowboys' Pat Hope, 12-2, allowed Arizona State only six hits and one earned run.

Brad Beanblossom hit his second home run of the year to start a three-run sixth-inning rally that put Oklahoma State ahead 5-3.

Beanblossom, Ventura, Adam Smith and Benny Castillo had two hits each and an RBI for the Cowboys.

Patterson surrendered a two-out homer by Barry Blackwell in the bottom of the ninth that tied the game 1-1.

"It wasn't so much that he hit the home run," said Patterson, 10-2. "It was that I made a bad pitch. That's what upset me."

Louisiana State bounced back with five unearned runs in the top of the 10th to beat Florida State starter Richie Lewis, 15-3. Lewis, who threw 156 pitches, struck out 12 to increase his career total to 507, second in NCAA history.

"We'll be back," Lewis said. "If need be I'll throw another 156 pitches Sunday."

That's when the Seminoles, 54-17, play Arizona State, 40-26, in an elimination game. Louisiana State, 48-17, plays Oklahoma State, 57-11, on Monday.

Saturday's first-round games pitted No. 1-ranked Texas against Southwest Conference rival Arkansas and Stanford against Georgia.

Pete Bush scored Louisiana State's winning run on a one-out squeeze bunt by Mike Papajohn in the top of the 10th. Andy Galy hit a two-run single one out later and Jack Voight added a two-run triple as LSU took advantage of errors by Richie Lewis and center fielder Ronald Lewis.

Patterson allowed seven hits and no walks in 9 1-3 innings. Barry Manuel got the final two outs for his ninth save.

Florida State entered the game with 227 stolen bases.

Rangers win big, 16-5...

Parrish, 'Pete' pound Royals

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - Pete O'Brien, Larry Parrish and the rest of the Texas Rangers felt like leaning back and saying, "Thanks - we needed that."

The Rangers, starved for runs as well as victories during a disappointing start of this baseball season, rose up Friday to smite the Western Division-leading Kansas City Royals 16-5.

O'Brien and Parrish each set club offensive records as the last-place club ended a four-game losing streak with its biggest offensive explosion of the season.

It was the Royals' most lopsided loss of the year and the first time since May 10-11 they have lost two in a row.

"Every team offensively needs a night like this," said O'Brien, whose five runs scored set a Ranger record. "It was a nice time. We were not in too good a mood and we came out and took it to somebody. That was nice. I had a couple of balls go through."

Parrish had two singles and a three-run home run for five runs batted in and a total for May of 33. That erases the club record for May RBI of 29 that he had shared with Jeff Burroughs. His seventh May home run tied the club record.

"We just haven't been able to be consistent," Parrish said. "We've had games like this but we just haven't been able to put any consistent streak together."

With two days left in May, Parrish will have opportunity to pad his team RBI record.

"I don't care if May leaves as long as the stroke doesn't leave, as long as it hangs around," he said. "I think I've really swung the bat well for the month of May. Not only in homers and RBIs, but I've had a lot of good at-bats and a lot of good games back-to-back where I felt like I was swinging the bat really well."

"He's swinging the bat so well right now, you just want to get on base for him," O'Brien said. "Any time a guy has a month like that, he carries the load for the whole team. You don't want to leave it up to one guy like that, but he's capable of doing it."

The Royals' lone bright spot was rookie outfielder Bo Jackson, who hit two home runs.

"We just got blown out. These things happen," said Royals' Manager Billy Gardner.

Charlie Hough, 5-1, went seven innings as he raised his lifetime record against the Royals to 12-6.

"We never seem to do much against Hough," Gardner said.

Mark Gubicza dropped to 3-5 and was chased in the five-run third inning.

CFA considers holding playoff

DALLAS (AP) - The College Football Association, conceding that an NCAA Division I-A football championship is not likely to occur in the near future, is considering the possibility of holding its own playoff.

Without endorsing any proposal, the CFA's Long Range Planning Committee gave its members a number of playoff proposals Friday and urged appointment of a committee "to study the playoff format and make a specific recommendation."

"It's been on-stage long enough," said Glen Tuckett, committee chairman and athletic director at Brigham Young University. "It's time to play or put it away."

The committee's report estimated that a one-game championship playoff could bring in from $14.57 million to $23.13 million. The figures included TV revenue of from $11.85 million to $21.3 million and ticket sales of $3.5 million based on 70,000 tickets at $50 apiece.

Assuming that $4 million is used for expenses, including payment to the competing teams, the report estimated that the payoff for each of the CFA's 63 members would range between $168,000-$303,000. If all the NCAA's 104 Division I-A schools were includ-

Rain, records keep falling at Memorial Golf Tourney

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) - First the rains fell, then the temperatures soared, now the records are dropping at the Muirfield Village Golf Club.

Scott Hoch shot an 8-under-par 64 to match the 18-hole course record Friday and total a record 13-under 131 through two rounds for a 4-stroke lead in the Memorial Tournament.

"If a couple more people score low, we're liable to see the pins in the fringe," Hoch joked after his morning round. His 64 tied the 18-hole course record set by Mark McCumber three years ago and matched in the first round by Curt Byrum. Defending champion Hal Sutton joined the party with another 64 later in the day.

Hoch's 131 is three strokes better than Roger Maltbie's record low through 36 holes in 1982. His 66 and 64 are the best consecutive rounds ever in the tournament.

Six golfers posted subpar rounds through 36 holes in the first Memorial in 1976. In the 12th edition of the tournament, 49 players were under par at the midpoint.

Hoch, 31, won the Vardon Trophy for low scoring average last year but has won only three tournaments in his eight years on tour, none in the last three years.

Hoch has yet to have a bogey through 36 holes over the 7,104-yard, par-72 layout designed by Jack Nicklaus. Heavy rains early in the week have combined with temperatures in the 90s and a lack of wind to soften the fairways and greens and lower scores.

Four shots in back of Hoch was first-round leader Byrum, who followed his opening 64 with a second-round 71 to stand at 9-under 135.

At 8-under 136 came Tom Watson, Scott Simpson and Fred Wadsworth. Watson shot a second-round 69, while Simpson and Wadsworth, who had a hole-in-one during the first round, each shot a second straight 68.

Don Pooley was all alone at 7-under 137 after a 67, while at 6-under 138 came Craig Stadler, David Frost, Larry Nelson, Sutton, Jim Thorpe and John Cook. Sutton struggled to a first-round 74, but came back with yet another record-tying 64 late in the day.

The figures disregard a proposal that a portion of the playoff money be used for some worthwhile cause or project. The report also said that for a format to be optimally profitable, it should eventually become a part of the in-season TV package. This fall, the CFA begins a four-year, $133 million deal with CBS and ESPN.

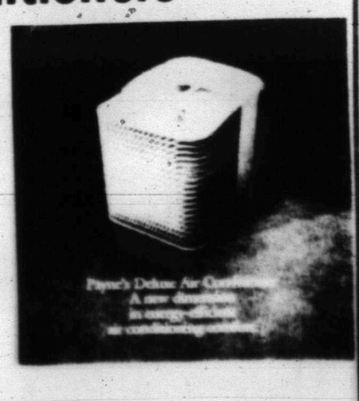

Because any playoff could affect the bowls, the report said it is necessary to explore and consider:

1. A Division I-A format incorporating the present bowl structure.
2. A Division I-A format independent of the present bowl structure.
3. A CFA championship incorporating the present bowl structure.
4. A CFA championship independent of the present bowl structure.

Falwell says PTL will be okay by summer's end

GRAPEVINE, Texas (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell is working to save the debt-ridden and scandal-plagued PTL ministry, but that doesn't mean the politically active preacher has put aside planning for next year's elections.

Falwell, who took over the multimillion-dollar television ministry and its wide array of ancillary properties from Jim Bakker after Bakker's role in a sex scandal was revealed six weeks ago, predicts PTL will be back on its financial feet by summer's end.

"During the same time, we hope to get the thing spiritually in alignment so that this credibility problem is history," he said Friday night.

PTL — either Praise The Lord or People That Love — has raised more than $6 million in the last 11 days to make its payroll and to begin to pay off its debts and avoid creditor lawsuits, Falwell said before a meeting of his Liberty Federation at a Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport hotel.

He said he hoped that PTL partners would raise that total to $10 million by Tuesday when May receipts are counted.

"That would at least start getting us out of the intensive care unit," he said.

Falwell, who said his own Lynchburg, Va., church had not suffered from his role at PTL, compared the situation at PTL with the Iran-Contra affair.

"We're having a lot of the same problems that conservative Republicans have with the Iran-Contra situation," he said. "The prolonging of the soap opera, the drama, the saga at PTL is not to the benefit of what we're trying to accomplish."

But Falwell said both the PTL and Iran-Contra scandals are "isolated, high-profile material" and don't indicate a reversal in the spiritual revival he claims still is sweeping the country.

"The overall picture is a good one," he said, citing declines in the number of abortions, divorces and the divorce rate, and the number of stores selling pornography.

"Family values are back in today," Falwell said. "I am very, very glad that our country feels such a negative revulsion against the Gary Hart issue, the Jim Bakker issue and of course Iran-Contra.

"Our people in this country today are looking on moral issues the way they should — with a very dim look."

But later, during the Liberty Federation meeting, Falwell said the Iran-Contra situation never would have happened "if a spineless Congress" had supported the Contras in their fight against the Sandinista government of Nicaragua.

"Jim Wright (the Fort Worth Democrat who now is House speaker) is a major problem by not taking a stand for the freedom fighters," he said.

The meeting sponsored by the Liberty Federation — the successor to Falwell's politically active Moral Majority organization — drew only about 100 participants despite extensive newspaper advertising.

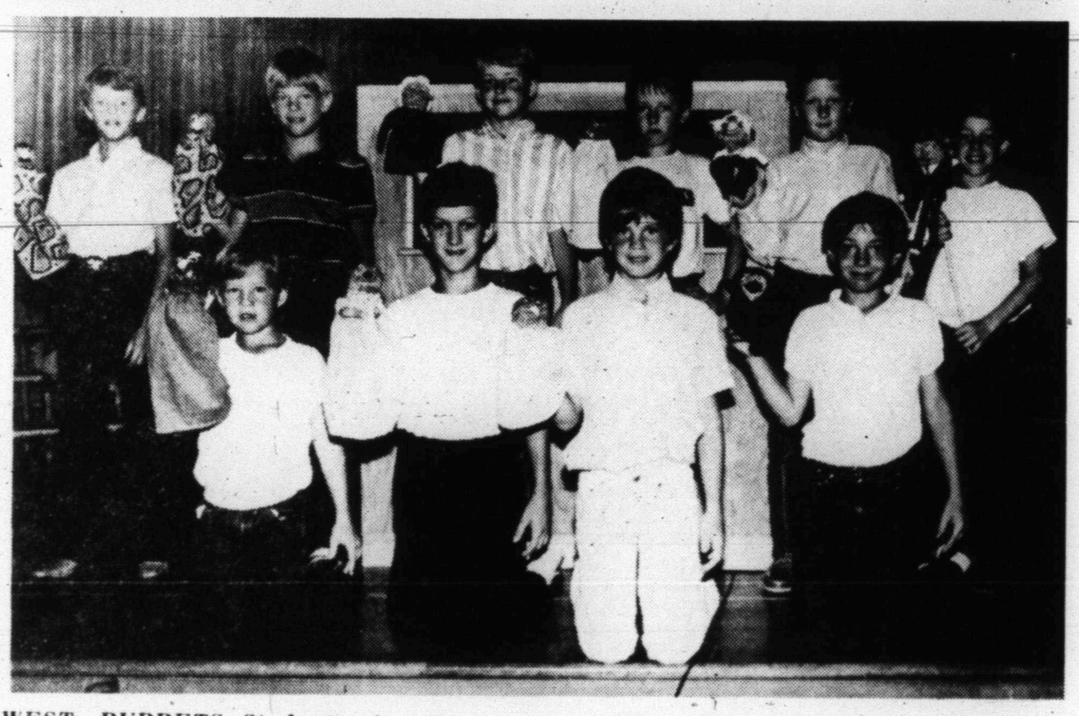

But the people who came were true believers, responding to Falwell's comments on the rise of the New Right and the power of the evangelical vote with "amens" and applause.

"Without the Christian vote, a candidate can't be elected president," he said.

Neither party has yet produced a presidential hopeful for that 20 percent of the electorate that identifies itself as born-again Christians, Falwell said.

"But if we pray on it, God will raise up the right candidate next fall," he said, urging those attending to work at voter registration and to discuss the issues in their churches.

U.S. says Cuban defector has 'significant' information

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department on Friday portrayed the Cuban general who defected to the United States as a potential source of "significant political and military information," but Cuban officials suggested his career had been in decline because of emotional problems.

Brig. Gen. Rafael del Pino Diaz told American authorities after arriving Thursday at Key West Naval Air Station in Florida that he had recently been appointed deputy chief of staff of the Cuban Armed Forces Ministry.

But a statement issued by Cuba's Revolutionary Armed Forces Ministry said that del Pino has been assigned for health reasons to "historical tasks," including the organization of an Air Force museum.

U.S. officials, insisting on anonymity, said the conflicting claims appeared to be irreconcilable.

Amid tight security precautions, del Pino, 48, was flown shortly before 1 p.m. Friday to an undisclosed location from the Key West naval facility, where he had landed his white Cessna 402 aircraft on Thursday accompanied by his wife and three children.

Regardless of his status at the time of his defection, State Department spokesman Charles Redman indicated that the administration looks on del Pino as a defector of considerable importance.

"As a senior military official with experience reaching back over many years in several areas of Cuban activity, he is obviously in command of significant military and political information," Redman said.

In addition to his military duties, Redman said, del Pino also was once head of Cuba's civilian airline Cubana de Aviacion, was a delegate to two Communist Party congresses and is the author of two books. He reportedly was a pilot in the Cuban Air Force at the time of the Bay of Pigs invasion in 1961 and one of his books was devoted to that subject.

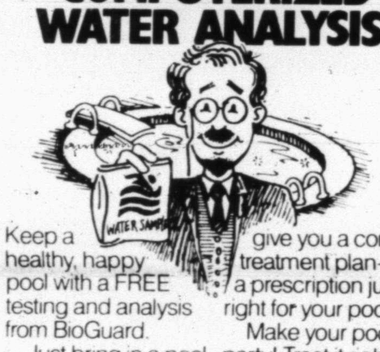

The statement by the Cuban military, a copy of which was made available by the Cuban Interests Section here, said that del Pino had been suspended by a military medical commission as a combat pilot on Jan. 27 due to "successive states of psychic stress" and eye problems.

All defendants said innocent in 'Twilight Zone' incident

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A jury found "Twilight Zone" director John Landis and four associates innocent of involuntary manslaughter Friday for the movie set deaths of actor Vic Morrow and two children nearly five years ago.

The Superior Court jury had deliberated for nine days after the 10-month trial of Landis, associate producer George Folsey Jr., production manager Dan Allingham, special effects coordinator Paul Stewart and Dorcey Wingo, pilot of the helicopter that crashed in a firestorm, decapitating Morrow and one of the children and crushing the other.

It was Hollywood's first criminal trial resulting from deaths on a movie set and the case was watched anxiously in the film community, where it was viewed as an indictment of safety standards.

All five defendants sat motionless as the clerk read the verdicts. Landis' wife Deborah wept softly. Some of the lawyers and defendants patted each other on the back.

"I'm very grateful to the jury and very appreciative to their patience in my trial," Landis said later. "A truly terrible, tragic accident happened on set of the 'Twilight Zone.' This has changed my life and the lives of others. This (the verdict) doesn't change that. I'm grateful to the jury."

"This is a wonderful time," Wingo said as the defendants left court. "I wish we could get the jurors close for a minute; I would like to kiss half of them and hug the rest."

If convicted, Landis, Folsey and Allingham could have been sentenced to six years in prison, while Stewart and Wingo could have received five-year terms.

Prosecutor Lea Purwin D'Agostino shook her head slightly as clerk Sylvia Feline read the words "not guilty" 15 times, enumerating all the charges.

"I'm shocked, appalled and disappointed," said Mrs. D'Agostino, who claimed her case was hampered because Hollywood film industry witnesses were reluctant to testify for fear of being blackballed. She praised director and former child actor Jackie Cooper for having the courage to do so.

"(But) if we have succeeded in saving one life, and deterring one director ... then the prosecution was successful," she said.

In closing arguments, Mrs. D'Agostino said all five moviemakers were guilty of criminal negligence, but she reserved her most vitriolic attacks for Landis, whom she denounced as a liar and "a tyrannical dictator" who risked disaster in his quest for cinematic realism.

Landis' attorney, James Neal, who had argued that the deaths resulted from an unforeseeable accident, called the verdicts "wonderful," and said "I think they are richly deserved."

U.S. & Mexico agriculture secretaries said conferring

WESLACO, Texas (AP) — Fruit flies, African bees and the pesticide EDB were on the agenda as agriculture secretaries of the United States and Mexico met Friday to improve cooperation and smooth out potential areas of friction.

U.S. Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng met behind closed doors with his Mexican counterpart, Eduardo Pesqueira, along with other high-ranking officials from both countries in a wide-ranging session.

One of the most important issues of interest to Mexico is its attempt to persuade the United States to declare certain areas of Mexico "pest-free," U.S. officials said.

The U.S. view has been that there is no pest-free region in Mexico because of historic problems with Mexican fruit flies.

But because fruit flies have not been detected in certain areas of the states of Chihuahua and Sonora for several years, a protocol between the two countries allows Mexico to export peaches to the United States without expensive fumigation, said Fernando Rodriguez, the U.S. Animal and Plant Inspection Service's plant protection and quarantine programs in Mexico.

The Mexicans would like that status extended to allow U.S. import of unfumigated citrus from those same areas through the declaration of "pest-free" zones, which the U.S. Department of Agriculture is now considering.

Those taking part in the discussions included U.S. Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, chairman of the Agriculture Commitee; his Mexican counterpart, Salvador Robles Quintero; and Americo Villarreal, governor of the border state of Tamaulipas.

Texas Gov. Bill Clements was to attend, but was prevented by heavy rain in Austin.

Mexico, the world's No. 1 exporter of honey, also is seeking help from the United States on dealing with the problem of Africanized bees, which entered Mexico from Guatemala last December and have traveled about 200 miles into the country.

RUUD® IS PROUD OF THESE NUMBERS

They represent the range of the Seasonal Energy Efficiency Ratios of Ruud's central air conditioning units. The higher the S.E.E.R. number, the greater the energy efficiency, and the higher the efficiency, the lower monthly cooling costs will be.

If your present air conditioning unit was made more than 10 years ago, it's probably less efficient than any unit Ruud® now makes.

Call today. Take Advantage and get Ruud's energy efficiency and save on cooling costs.

The coolers have been donated to the county by the congregation of First Baptist Church who recently acquired the building and property.

Mobile home fire put out

Units of the Fluvanna Volunteer Fire Department extinguished a mobile home fire Thursday evening.

Damages to the mobile home were minor and confined to a wall behind the dryer.

Police recover stolen motorcycle

Snyder police picked up two suspects Friday in connection with a motorcycle theft Thursday night.

Larry Michael Almanza, 17, of Snyder and a 16-year-old juvenile were initially picked up by authorities in Fisher County around 2:30 a.m. Friday due to the fact that they were riding a 1983 Honda motorcycle and a 1983 Honda motorscooter in that county with no driver's licenses or proof of ownership.

The vehicles were discovered to have been taken from the fenced yard at Key Brothers Lawn and Leisure in the 1600 Block of 37th St. earlier Thursday night.

The vehicles were recovered and both suspects were relased to the custody of their parents Friday evening.

If you are a sole proprietor or a business partner, don't let the paperwork required for "tax-qualified" retirement plans scare you, says the Equitable Assurance Society of the U.S. Despite changes made by the new tax law, these plans can still be good tools for building substantial retirement wealth on a tax-favored basis. That's because they still offer two favorite tax advantages: deductions and deferrals.

No deaths are reported in Lubbock-area tornadoes

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Twin tornadoes raked across a military housing community near Reese Air Force Base Friday night, destroying at least eight homes but causing no serious injuries, police said.

The twisters touched down west of Lubbock at about 6:20 CDT near Wolfforth, 7 miles southwest of Lubbock, and struck a mobile-home community called Country Haven, Lubbock County Sheriff's Capt. Anthony Vaughn said.

Six mobile homes were destroyed, and at least two permanent residences north of the mobile-home park were also flattened, he said.

Police were searching through the rubble to make sure no one was hurt, but they believe most people were able to escape in time, Vaughn said.

"There were actually two tornados. There was a lead tornado that appeared to wrap and unwrap itself," said Reese spokesman Bill Tynan, who added there were no injuries at the base or damage to Reese aircraft or facilities.

"It would drop to the ground, then move back into the clouds. There was a second, larger funnel, what appeared to be a larger funnel behind it that as far as I could see did not touch down."

After strafing about 12 miles of Lubbock County, one of the tornadoes pulled back into the clouds, but the other stayed on the ground and headed northeast toward the community of Shallowater, police said.

Officers seek civil service

itiated by citizens of the community or officers of the respective departments.

The members would serve staggered three-year terms.

The petitions, turned in Thursday, contain 190 signatures in all. The verification involves determining if all of these are residents inside the city limits and registered voters.

The petition has been instigated by members of the Snyder Police Association, whose president, Sy Tabor, issued a statement Saturday.

In it, he said the group feels implementation of the civil service commission would "secure for Snyder efficient police and fire departments, composed of capable personnel, free from political influence and with permanent tenure of employment as public servants."

The secretary-treasurer of the association, Robert Harbin, said he felt the implementation would encourage greater professionalism among both departments.

He noted the right to appeal to an impartial panel decisions which might affect their jobs would attract both "better" personnel and encourage these staffers to stay with the respective departments longer.

The Snyder city council is expected to discuss the petition calling for the civil service commission at its regular June meeting Monday.

Three minor mishaps occur

Three minor traffic mishaps were reported in Snyder Friday.

Rick Schwertner of 114 33rd St. filed a hit-and-run report at 7:34 a.m.

The second accident occurred at 12:38 p.m. in the 1900 Block of Ave. E.

Involved in it were a 1981 Buick driven by Mickie Joe Emmett of Snyder and a 1979 Chrysler driven by Anabelia Lopez Lujan of Snyder.

The third mishap was reported in the 1900 Block of 40th St. at 10:39 p.m.

Involved in it were a 1979 Datsun driven by Jesus Molina Oliva Jr. of Snyder and a 1982 Ford driven by Bill Ray Engeling of the Arah Rt.

operated by Aid and will operate out of office space provided by the county in Room 160 of Cogdell Memorial Hospital.

According to Westmoreland, the staff of the new service will include five other local men on full-time call and use a number of part-time personnel.

All of those working with the service are state certified as at least Emergency Care Attendants with the full time staffers all certified Emergency Medical Technicians.

The day staff will include Jamie Baldwin, Sterling Williams and Westmoreland while the night staff consists of Albert Cannon, Kenny Wood and Troy Hall.

All are Snyder volunteer firemen and have previous experience with the local ambulance service.

Karen Westmoreland will be in charge of the business office which will be open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays.

The 573-1911 phone number rings at the Snyder police department and fire department in addition to the office at the hospital to insure that it is answered 24 hours per day.

The phone also rings at the homes of the staffers on full time call and may also be answered by them.

Non-emergency calls to the service will be taken through 573-1912 during regular business hours.

House rejects tax plan

AUSTIN (AP) — The House voted Friday against a Senate plan to wipe out the temporary sales tax increase at the end of the year instead of making it permanent.

It will now be up to a House-Senate conference committee to work toward an agreement on what to do with the 5¼ percent sales tax rate now in effect. If no action is taken, the sales tax would roll back to 4⅛ percent in September.

In March, the House voted to make the 5¼ percent tax rate permanent. But the Senate voted Wednesday to continue that rate only until the end of the year.

The House version of the sales tax is part of a $2.9 billion tax plan that also includes making the 15 cent-per-gallon motor fuels tax permanent, instead of rolling it back to 10 cents per gallon in September.

Senators agreed to the permanent 15-cent fuels tax, but sent the bill back to the House with other changes. The House took no action on that measure Friday.

Gov. Bill Clements has vowed to reject any tax increase above the $2.9 billion continuation of the temporary taxes. Approval of that tax package could give Clements an upper hand by allowing him to veto any other tax measures approved in the upcoming special session on the budget.

The Snyder Singles Organization will have a picnic at the Kiddie Park at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Decline noted

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said Friday its main economic forecasting gauge plummeted 0.6 percent in April. It was the biggest decline in two years and provided evidence, private economists said, that the U.S. economy is slowing down.

The Commerce Department's Index of Leading Indicators posted its biggest setback since a 0.8 percent fall in April 1985. The setback followed a revised 0.8 percent increase in March.

While analysts said they did not believe the huge drop signaled an impending recession, they said the index has been flashing signals of slower growth since the beginning of the year.

Evidence of giant mastodons and other creatures of the earth's early years still exists near Hermleigh, according to Vance Clift, who says he has discovered prehistoric bones in at least three locations.

Clift, of 301 S. College in Hermleigh, made most of his discoveries in the early 1930s, usually by accident. While bird hunting on property now belonging to Jimmy Beck, he found the skull and tusks of the large, elephantlike mammal in a canyon.

"I was walking and had to step over what I thought was a tree in a gulley. I had my eye on a covey of birds, so I just shelled off a little as I stepped over. Then I just stuck it in my pocket," he said. "When I looked at it that night, I realized it wasn't vegetation."

He and his brother later returned to the spot and dug out a tusk. "It lacked three inches being 14 feet long. When we tried to move it, it broke into sections. I daresay the skull itself is still there," he added.

Born and raised in Hermleigh, Clift noted he had made several finds on the Pyron Ranch as well, including a complete skeleton, an Indian painting and what he believes was a portion of a dinosaur egg.

"I found a complete skeleton standing up in a pile of sand. I took one of the teeth and donated it to the museum at McMurry (College in Abilene). I also found half of a stone-type structure and sent it to McMurry. They confirmed through the Smithsonian (Institute) that it was half a dinosaur egg," he explained.

Several years ago, Clift found a painting on some sandstone bluffs along a creek on the Pyron Ranch. "When I first saw it, there was a painting of two Indians facing south. There was also a painting of a man wearing a big brim hat. The painting was about two feet high and the length covered, I'd say, about five feet," he said.

Area residents told him that four men had been included in the original painting, but that part of the bluff had eroded and broken away, he noted. A search of the area revealed a stone and pestle that Clift speculated had been used to mix the ochre (a stain made from clay) for the painting.

"An Indian told me that he thought the painting had probably been a boundary marker," Clift said.

Later, he verified the theory through a book. "I met a man in Dumas with a book written by a French priest who had explored part of the area. The book contained a drawing of the same painting and described it as a boundary marker."

In 1938, Clift also discovered bones near what was then called Gunsight Mountain. "John Vernon had been hired to haul sand to the school for the gym construction," he explained. "While loading the sand, we found an animal with a head like a rhino. Its lower jawbone had five or six-foot tusks."

In addition to his interest in prehistoric animals, Clift considers himself a historian of the Civil War era. He knows a great deal about Southern society immediately following the end of the Civil War primarily due to stories handed down by family members and through study of family records.

In the 1940s, he and two cousins began tracing his family history on his mother's side.

His great, great grandfather, a soldier in the Revolutionary War, was granted a parcel of property in Tennessee near present-day Nashville by the federal government.

Clift's grandfather later moved the family from Tennessee to Arkansas where he farmed and served as a Presbyterian minister. Clift's father was five years old at the time.

Even today, Clift enjoys recalling the story of the family's encounter with the mother of the notorious Frank and Jesse James.

"When the family moved from Tennessee, they crossed the Mississippi River into Missouri. Later in the mountains, they crossed a stream and noticed a nice house on a hill. As they started to camp, a woman from the house came down the creek and told them to camp near the house because a snow storm was on the way," he said.

"If they hadn't moved up, the little ones would have frozen to death. So they tried to find out what the woman's name was. She wouldn't tell, but my great grandmother insisted.

"As she helped load children on to the wagon, the woman said, 'Just tell folks you stayed with the James boys' mother.'"

Clift's interest in electrical and mechanical work lead to the acquisition of two patents for a controlling device for electric meters.

"I guess I've always enjoyed electrical work. When I was a kid, several of us learned Morse Code. We hung around the (train) depot and got good enough at it that we could read most of the messages coming in," he explained.

The youngsters also developed their own telegraph system that later interfered with early wireless radio transmissions.

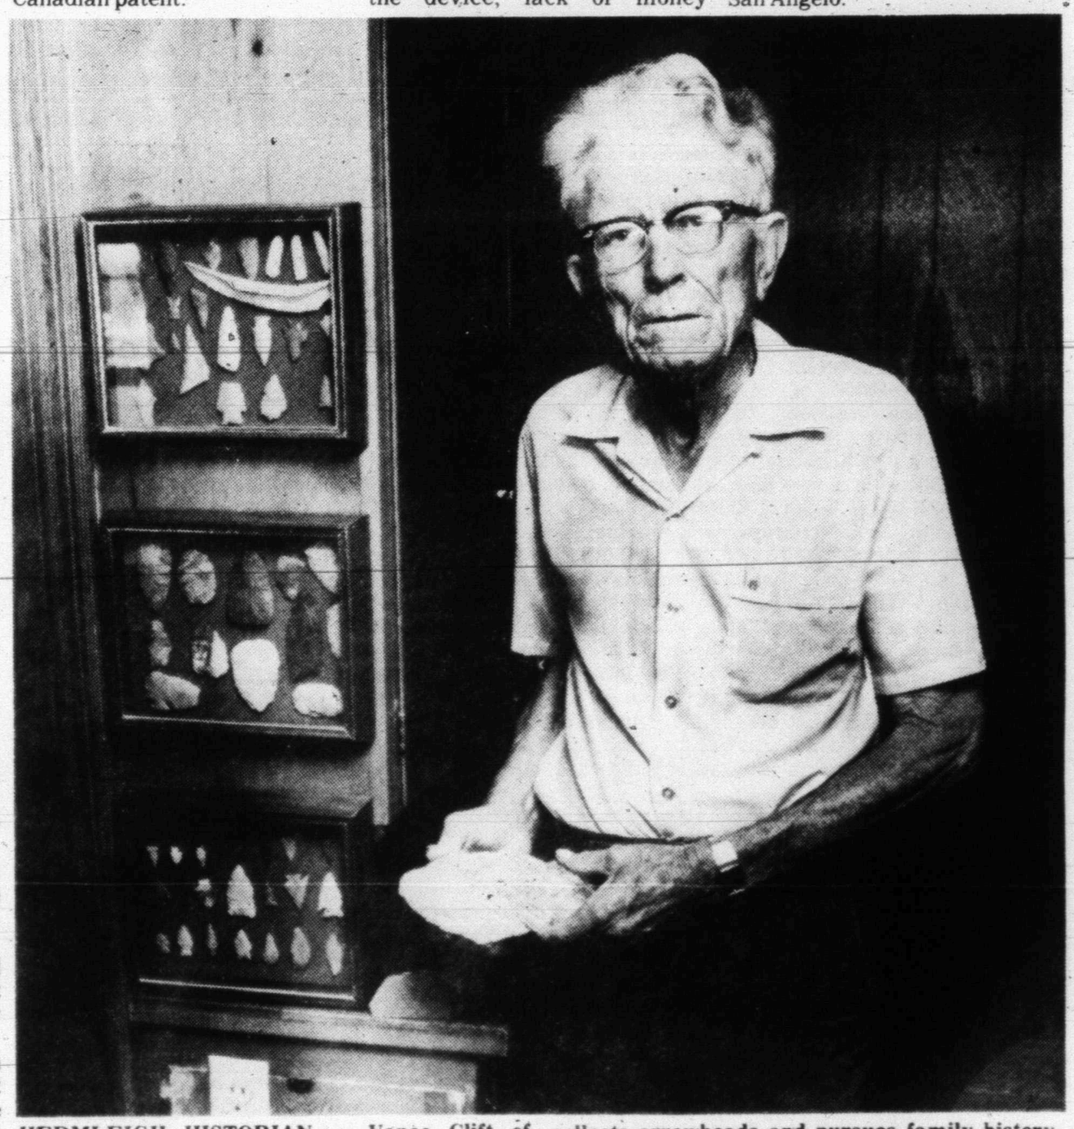

Clift developed his device as an employee for Brown and Root Electrical Contractors when the company had contracted water treating stations for SACROC.

He was granted a United States patent on Jan. 11, 1966, for the device, installed on a pump for example, that would without human supervision automatically shut down a system if a malfunction occurred. The following year, he also obtained a Canadian patent.

"It was designed to shut off to prevent motors and other equipment from overheating and burning up," the 78-year-old explained.

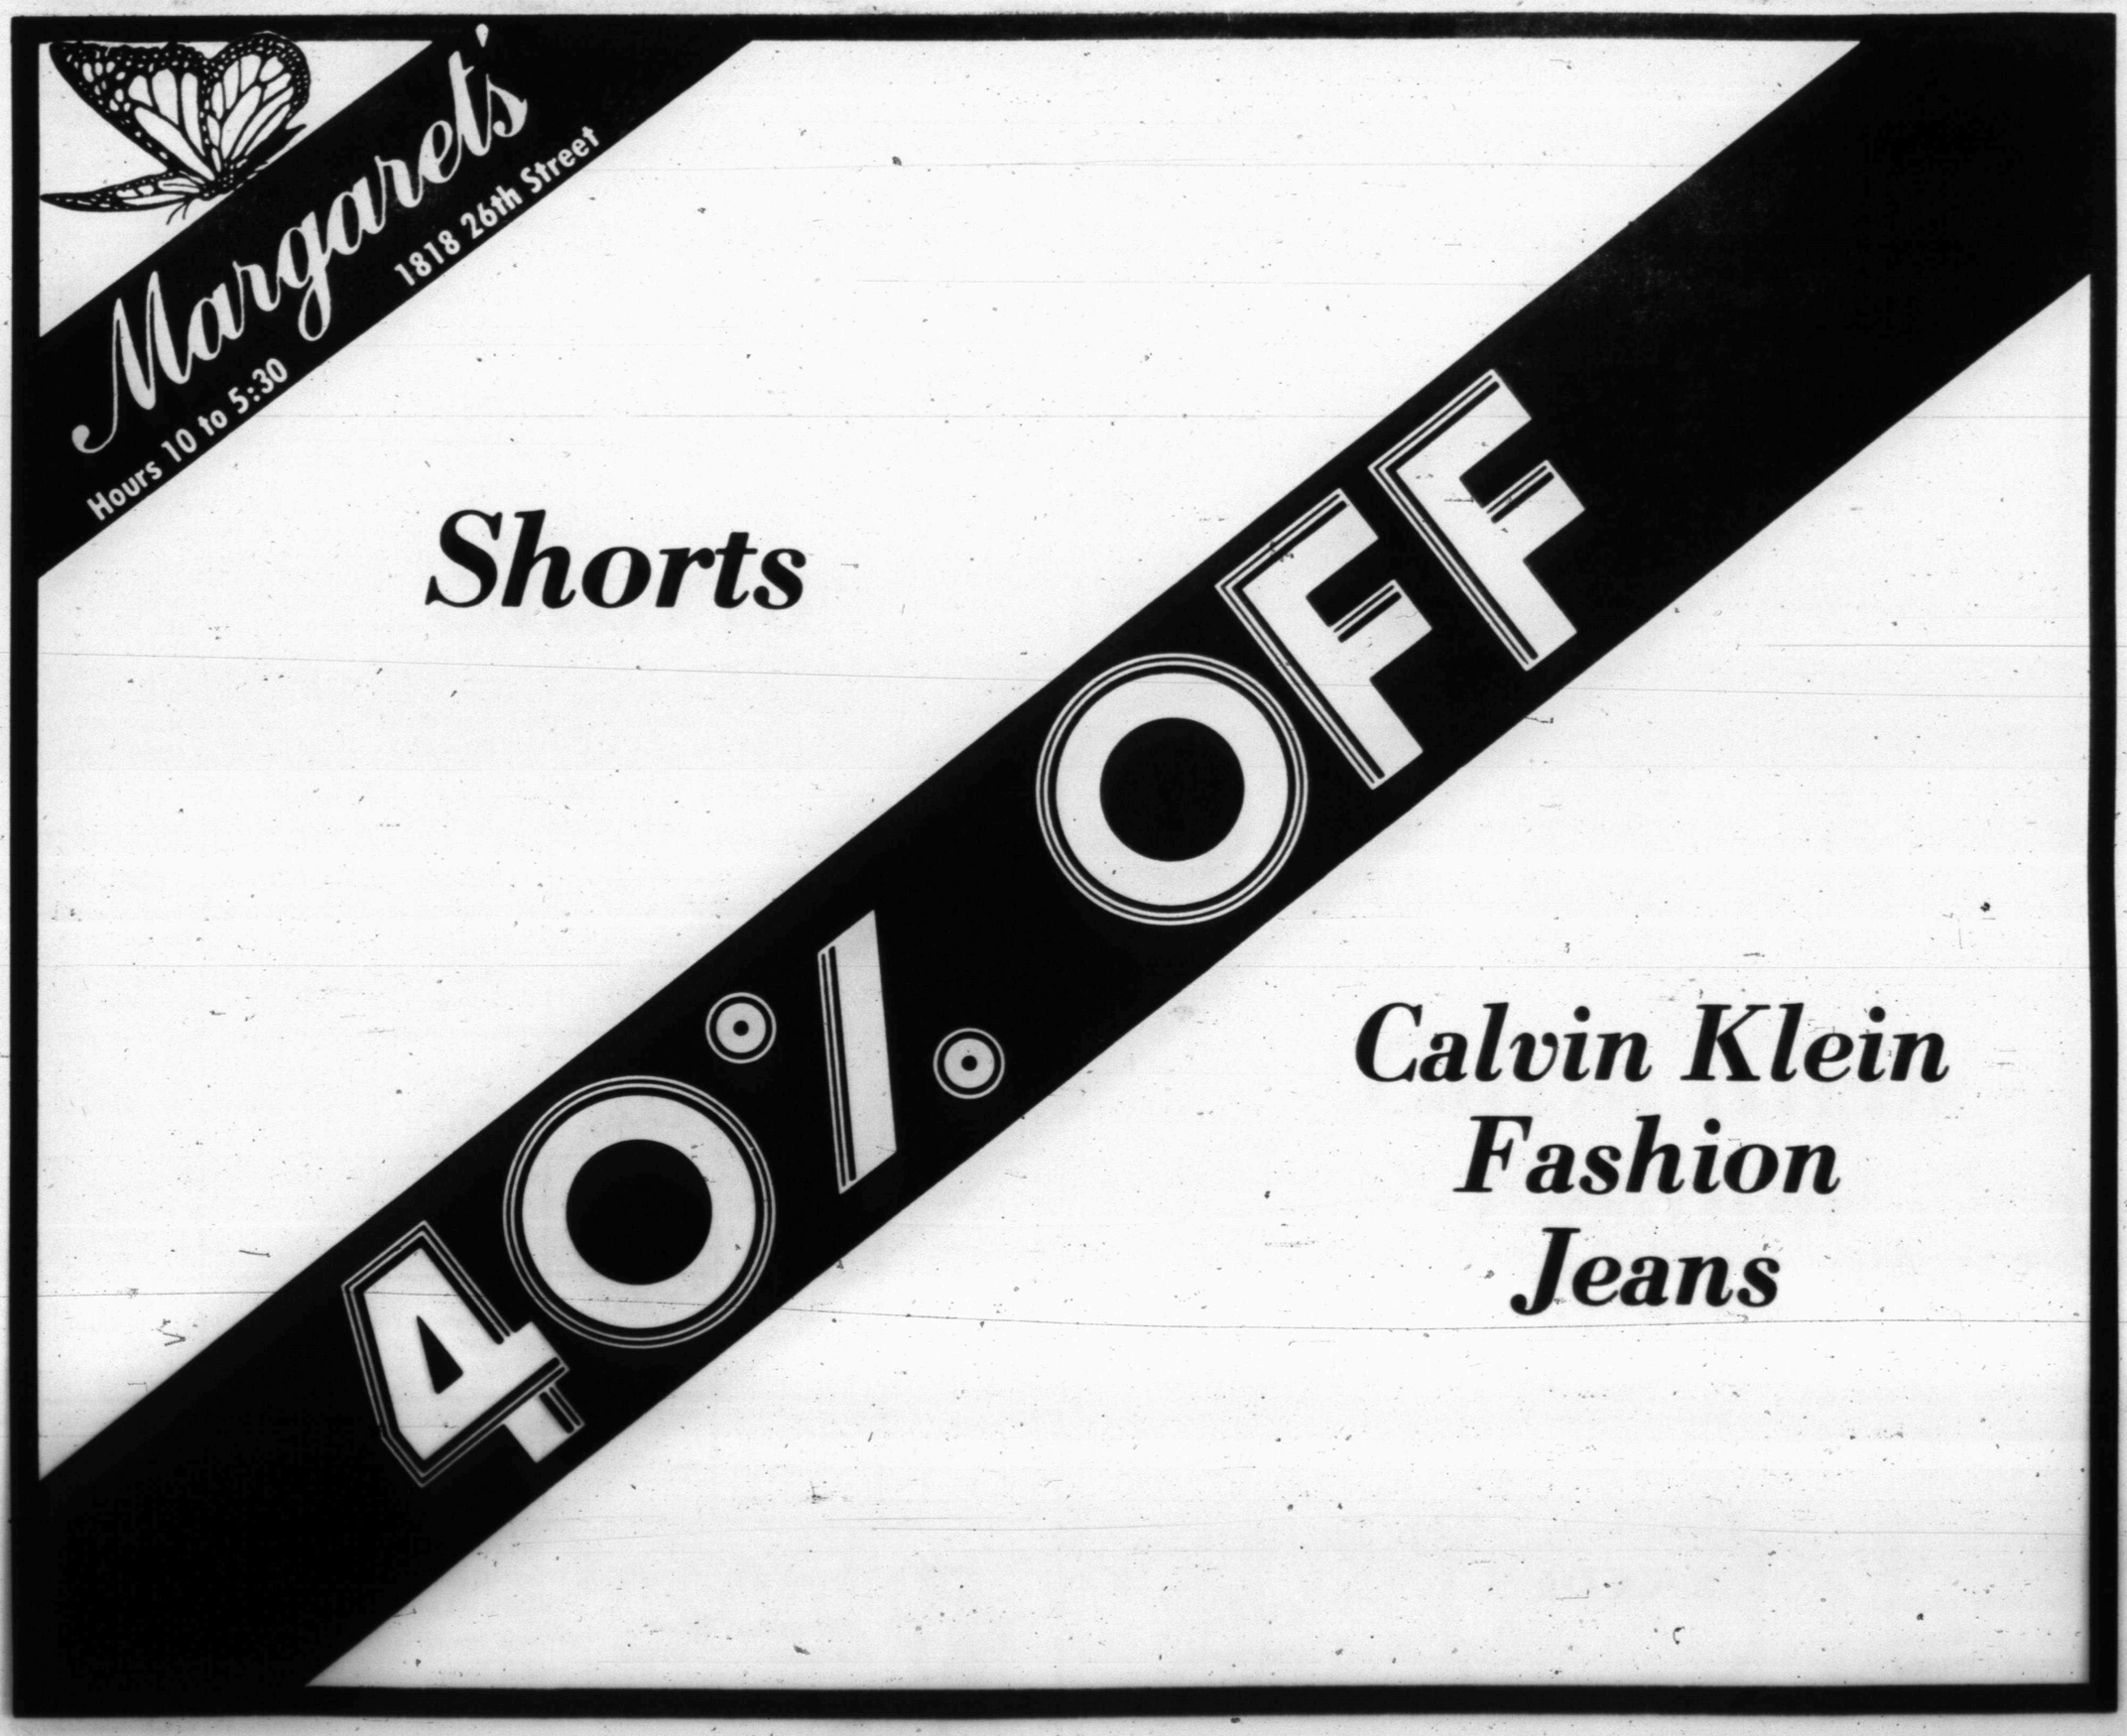

Although an Abilene manufacturer made a few prototypes of the device, lack of money prevented large-scale development.

Clift and his wife Edna have two children, Jerry, a Hermleigh accountant, and Carolyn DeLacruz, a music teacher in San Angelo.

THE HEALING POWER OF LAUGHTER

Researchers in family relationships identify a sense of humor or laughter as an indicator of strong families. When family relations become strained or the family experiences difficult financial times, laughter is harder to generate, or may cease to exist.

Holding on to our sense of humor is serious business. Sometimes the only way to bear our burdens is to laugh and bear them anyway. Life is tough, but without laughter it is intolerable.

Recent medical studies indicate a connection between immunity and the mind. For instance, deep laughter releases substances into the body that seem to block pain. Some physiologists have found that stressful events often precede illness. Then, control over stressful events is important.

Humor is evidence of our freedom — the freedom to transform our pain, fears and anxieties into absurdities. With humor, we choose to accept the world the way it is and laugh at it instead of getting hung up on the way we know it "should" be.

Laughter is also the body's way of realizing that despite everything that has happened to us, we are not doomed. Laughter allows hope.

There are great moments of mirth in every family that conjure up scenarios of dealing with very serious problems in unconventional ways. Humor often defuses anger and heals pain.

When families come together in shared laughter, they enjoy a deep feeling of common humanity and unity. Laughing at our troubles presents us with an offer we can't refuse.

HELPING THE CHILD MANAGE FEELINGS

An important but sometimes neglected area of early childhood education is the identification and explanation of inner feelings such as anger, frustration, jealousy, happiness, love and sadness or grief.

The child who can't complete a puzzle, fit pieces of tinkertoys together, or complete a block structure may be frustrated and as a result, angry. The child-rearing person in attendance does well to size up the situation, deciding whether or not the child is attempting something too difficult for his or her developmental stage. If so, talk about the situation with the child, offer assistance, or put the game, toy or task away for a few months.

When the jealous child grabs toys, stockpiles to avoid sharing, complains of not having as many toys or as much freedom as another child, an attempt should be made to explain that the feeling they are experiencing is one of "jealousy." At about the same time it is useful to teach acceptance and being satisfied with what is rightfully ours.

Moderation in exercise needed

NEW YORK (AP) — Moderation in exercise is better for you than running marathons or trying to set fitness records, says the Reebok Aerobic Information Bureau.

According to a recent study of 17,000 male Harvard alumni by Dr. Ralph S. Paffenbarger Jr. of Stanford University, men who engaged in a modest exercise program, like a brisk three-mile daily walk, had death rates one-quarter to one-third lower than the sedentary alumni.

The ideal life-extending programs used between 2,000 and 3,500 calories a week. Beyond that, there was no added benefit, and, in some cases, there was a slight detrimental effect.

Nothing wrong with a good guess

What did South's two-spade bid mean? Conservative readers may think it dangerous to come in with just an ace and a queen over East's two-heart bid. Since the takeout double promises spades, one should view the South hand as though it were supporting an opening bid of one spade. South's bid says: "I think I can make this contract. Period."

North bid game, since he had extra values, and East's heart raise suggested that South would have no more than a doubleton heart. But the contract was not easy to make against proper defense. South played low from dummy on the opening heart lead. East won the queen and returned the suit to dummy's ace. Declarer now played a club to his ace and a spade up to dummy. West played low and declarer won the king. Now we can all see that declarer can ruff a heart and lead again toward dummy's spade queen. But it should be equally apparent to West that his partner has the jack. It will be child's play for him to play a fourth heart so that East will make a trick with the spade jack.

Declarer solved the problem. Instead of returning to his hand to lead up to dummy again, he led a low spade from dummy, guessing correctly that West had started with only the A-3 of spades. Was this absolutely the right play? No one can say for sure. Declarer must base his judgment on the perceptions he receives at the table. It's certainly true that West might have been dealt A-J-3 of spades, and some other play would work. But not this time.

A new book by James Jacoby and his father, the late Oswald Jacoby, is now available at bookstores. It is "Jacoby on Card Games," published by Pharos Books.

SPRAY DATES SET FOR PECAN TREES

From observations made throughout Scurry County, the control sprays for the pecan nut casebearer should be applied from June 1-6. Because of continued egglay we recommend that local homeowners spray a second time 7 to 10 days later. Field observations were made by Deanna Myers, County Entomologist.

The adult pecan nut casebearer is a gray moth about ⅓ inch long. These moths fly at night and spend the day in concealment. The casebearer moth deposits from 50 to 150 eggs on the tips of developing nutlets. These eggs are barely visible by the naked eye and are greenish white when first laid.

The first generation larvae hatch in four or five days and migrate below to feed on buds. Nut penetration follows a day or two of this outside activity. This is the critical stage of control.

When young worms are working over a cluster of pecans, they deposit waste material in pellets around the entrance holes. When this frass is observed, control becomes difficult. Chemical sprays will not penetrate the nut to kill burrowing worms. Complete clusters can be destroyed by one developing casebearer larvae.

Insecticides recommended for casebearer control include Zolone, Guthion, Malathion and Sevin. Homeowners may want to include a fungicide such as Benomyl for scab control and NZN should be added for growth and control of rosette.

The most important part of this mixture of course is the insecticide for the control of the pecan nut casebearer, the other ingredients can be added at the discretion of the homeowner.

This year's spray schedule is later than the past few years, but it is critical to treat this pest at the right time. Early or late treatment will not control the pest.

Self-esteem is vital in choosing males

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Why do some women have an unerring instinct for choosing men who are either emotionally or physically abusive? Why do they choose the men they do, and what can they do to break this destructive pattern?

"Generally, we look for people who confirm our own self-image," said Arlene Goldman, an instructor of psychiatry and human behavior at Jefferson Medical College of Thomas Jefferson University.

"If we're not feeling good about ourselves, then the person we're likely to choose will reflect our low self-esteem," she said.

Self-esteem is composed of many factors, but most theorists agree that early upbringing is very important.

"How your mother felt about herself, as well as how she felt about you, will affect the way you perceive yourself," said Ms. Goldman, who is also an assistant director of Jefferson Psychiatric Associates, the adult outpatient psychiatric service of Thomas Jefferson University Hospital.

"You should also think back to the early messages you received as a child: Were you valuable? The answers to such questions can help you understand how your self-image developed," she said.

The relationship between father and daughter is also important, according to Ms. Goldman. Young girls learn about men through their fathers, and the messages a father imparts to his daughter about her sexuality may create behavioral patterns that follow her the rest of her life, she said.

"Most girls fantasize about marrying their fathers. If a father deals with his daughter's seductiveness by acting distant, or not being there emotionally, the message the child may receive is that men are not available," Ms. Goldman said.

"A woman in this category may consistently be attracted to cold, distant, or unavailable men, thinking that, if she could figure out what she's done wrong, they would love her," she added. "Of course, she's done nothing; she's simply playing out an old conflict."

Another scenario is that of the father who is too closely involved with his daughter. She becomes filled with guilt because she has won the Oedipal battle over her mother so doesn't allow herself to have healthy adult relationships with men, according to Ms. Goldman.

This type of woman may feel that no one will ever live up to her father and may be emotionally or physically abusive to men as a way of keeping her distance, Ms. Goldman said.

Women who are physically abused were probably abused as children and may not realize that there is another way to be treated, according to Ms. Goldman.

"If the parent was inconsistent, both loving and abusive (as is often the case with alcoholic parents), the child will get the message that love and violence go together," Ms. Goldman said.

"While I don't believe that women ask to be abused, some women know which buttons to push to incite familiar reactions. Perhaps the only touching or attention they received as a child was when they were being abused," she added.

Does this mean that women in destructive relationships are forever trapped by their childhoods, doomed to repeat the same unhealthy situations? Not at all, according to Ms. Goldman.

Finger foods are great for parties

By NANCY BYAL
Better Homes and Gardens
Food Editor

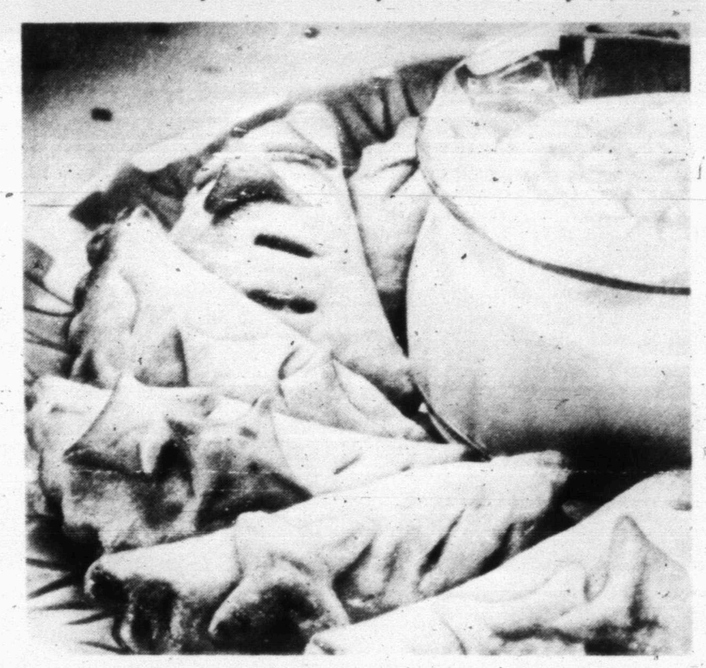

Make these party nibbles ahead and place them on baking sheets. Cover and store in the refrigerator for several hours. Just before your guests arrive, bake half the turnovers; bake the other half after the party starts. That way your guests can enjoy the pastries while they're warm.

CURRIED BEEF TURN-OVERS

½ pound ground beef
½ cup finely chopped onion
1 teaspoon curry powder
1 tablespoon dry sherry
1 tablespoon soy sauce
¼ cup mashed cooked potato
Pastry for 2-crust pie
1 egg yolk
1 tablespoon water
Dairy sour cream or plain yogurt (optional)

For filling, cook beef, onion and curry powder until beef is brown and onion is tender. Drain. Stir in sherry, soy sauce and potato. Cool. On a lightly floured surface roll half the pastry ⅛-inch thick. Use a 3-inch scallop-edge cutter to cut circles. Reroll to make 15 circles plus cutouts for decoration from remaining pastry. Place 1 teaspoon of filling on each circle. Brush edges lightly with water. Fold pastry over filling, forming a half circle; seal edges. Place on baking sheet. Repeat with remaining pastry and filling. Combine egg yolk and water; brush over turnovers. Place cutouts on turnovers; brush with egg-yolk mixture. Using a knife, make ½-inch slits in pastry. Bake in 400-degree oven for 18 minutes. Serve warm with sour cream. Makes 30.

Nutrition information per turnover: 79 cal., 3 g pro., 6 g carbo., 5 g fat, 14 mg chol., 117 mg sodium.

Summer reading program planned

Monday will begin "Animal Antics" at the Scurry County Library; it will continue until Aug. 13. Children who have completed grade K-6 may participate in the Texas Reading Club and may register anytime during the summer.

Each child who reads 10 books earns a Texas Reading Club certificate. The first 100 participants to read 10 books will receive an "Animal Antics" T-shirt transfer. The next 50 participants to earn their certificate will receive an "Animal Antics" button. Thereafter, there will be a library balloon for those earning a certificate.

All books read must be on the child's reading level, and the librarian will be the final judge on whether books may be counted.

In addition to the individual reading awards, the library will sponsor a contest between the eight Scurry County Elementary Schools. There will be a display for each school, and for the first 10 books a child reads, his/her name will be put up on the display. Thereafter, for every 15 books a child reads, his name will be put up again.

The school which has the most books read will send those whose names are on display to be treated to an ice cream social on the library lawn Aug. 20 at 10 a.m.

Pre-schoolers will receive a "Read-to-me" certificate if 10 books are read to them this summer, but they will not be eligible for participation in the "Animal Antics" program or the school competition.

There will be a story time at the library every Friday morning from 10 a.m. to 10:30 a.m. for three- to five-year-old children.

June 4 at 10 a.m. summer activities at the Scurry County Library will begin. Children will make fingerprint animals to display at the library for two weeks.

Two movies will be shown as time permits. They are "How Beaver Stole Fire" and "Morris the Midget Moose."

Ulcer myths delay treatment

WEST POINT, Pa. (AP) — Myths about ulcers can lead people to avoid seeing doctors and instead to diagnose and treat themselves, sometimes delaying needed medical help, according to Merck Sharp & Dohme Research Laboratories.

The firm, developer of Pepcid, a new drug approved to treat the most common form of ulcers, says it's a myth some people have "ulcer personalities." In fact, all kinds of people get ulcers. And, while it was once widely believed that mostly men get ulcers, in the 1980s, women in about equal numbers get them, too.

Further, the commonly held notion that spicy foods cause ulcers has never been scientifically proven. And, though many people think milk and bland foods are good for ulcers, while they may ease ulcer pain temporarily, they can also stimulate production of excess stomach acid.

Also, it's not necessarily true that when pain is gone, an ulcer is healed. Treatment may ease pain in days. But ulcer healing usually takes four to eight weeks.

Control bagworms now

Bagworms are one of the major pests of junipers and other trees and shrubs in Texas. Insecticide control is most effective in late May and early June when the bagworms are small.

In the spring, bagworm larvae emerge from hatching eggs inside last year's bags and begin feeding on leaves. They soon begin to construct their own protective bag of silk, twigs and leaves, making them camouflaged and hard to see. As the larvae and their bags continue to grow, control becomes more difficult.

Bagworms feed throughout the summer months, building their bags until the bags are about 1½ inches long. In the fall, the bagworms become adults, mate and the females lay eggs inside their bags. They then overwinter in these bags in trees and shrubs. Each overwintering female bag on a tree contains from 500 to 1,500 eggs.

Since the bagworm only completes one generation a year and spreads very slowly from plant to plant, picking the bags off infested plants in the winter will help a lot toward controlling this pest. But if bagworms were present on the plant last year and control measures were not applied, chances are very good that an insecticide will be needed this spring.

Insecticides which can be used to control bagworms include sevin, dursban, diazinon, malathion, dylox and orthene. The biological insecticide Bacillus thuriengensis can also be used. To obtain effective control, thorough coverage of the foliage is important. The addition of a small amount of liquid soap or surfactant to the spray solution will improve control because it helps adhere the insecticide to the treated trees and shrubs. Always read and follow label instructions when applying insecticides.

High self-esteem needed

"If a woman finds herself thinking that all men are lousy," Ms. Goldman said, "she should ask herself if she's doing something to select a certain type of man. And while most men who are going to be abusive are not so initially, a woman can train herself to look for behavioral clues.

"For example, observe how he reacts with family and friends; how other people feel about him; and how he gets angry."

Women already in unrewarding relationships should stop trying to change their partners and concentrate on becoming more assertive, she said.

"You can't change other people, but you can change yourself. You will find that your partner will react to you differently; he may leave, or he may change. If he does leave, you will form a better relationship next time," Ms. Goldman said.

Sometimes, simply growing older and gaining life experience are enough to enable women to feel better about themselves, Ms. Goldman points out. For others, therapy may be the best vehicle for improving self-image, she said.

"It all comes down to liking yourself and allowing yourself to feel good about your accomplishments," Ms. Goldman said.

Buffalo roam Okla.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. (AP) — Back in the 1860s, millions of bison roamed the Western plains.

By about 1895, the number had been reduced to a few hundred animals.

At the Wichita Mountains Wildlife Refuge in southwestern Oklahoma, there is a herd today of 600 American bison. The animals are descended from 15 bison that were raised in a corner of wilderness at New York's Bronx Zoo. The buffalo were shipped to Oklahoma in 1907.

Preparing for a hospital stay

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT — Are there any books or publications dealing specifically with hospital stays? Can you recommend a few for patients, their friends and families?

DEAR READER — Most patients do not need books about hospitals because their doctors act as patient advocates and can take care of the many questions that hospitalized patients have. Your family doctor should be your most valuable resource in dealing with the unpleasantness of hospitalization.

However, some people prefer to have written material to which they can refer. In my new book, "No House Calls" (Poseidon Press), I address some of the problems that stem from being a patient (or visitor) in a hospital. You may find my comments helpful.

Another useful book is "Take This Book to the Hospital With You," by Charles Inlander and Ed Weiner (Rodale Press). This paperback is a sort of survival manual for hospitalized patients.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I am a nervous person and my doctor prescribed Valium. I tried it once and it was very helpful. Now several doctors tell me that I should take Thorazine instead, because the Valium is not good for me. The Thorazine does not work as well. What is so bad about the Valium that doctors would prefer a less effective tranquilizer?

DEAR READER — Valium (diazepam) is a minor tranquilizer that has been widely prescribed as an antidote to anxiety and tension. Some experts believe that Valium is prescribed too often for symptoms of stress. The drug is habit-forming, and many people have come to rely on it, as on alcohol, for its calming effects.

In my opinion, nervousness is not an appropriate reason for a doctor to recommend (and patients to take) Valium. This medicine is indicated only for the short-term control of anxiety disorders. Nervousness is a common adult affliction, and I believe that it is better treated by non-drug methods, such as counseling and stress reduction.

Thorazine (chlorpromazine) is not less effective than Valium and, in fact, may be more dangerous. It is a major tranquilizer, and the manufacturer recommends that it be administered, if at all, in small quantities for no longer than 12 weeks. It is useful therapy for the management of serious psychiatric disorders (major emotional instability). Thorazine has several notable side effects. One of the most important is tardive dyskinesia, a permanent neurological impairment that causes uncontrollable twitching and tic-like repetitive movements. Do not take Thorazine unless you do so under strict medical supervision.

Your interests will be best served by avoiding medicine altogether for minor emotional upsets. However, if your doctor insists that you take drugs, make sure that you understand exactly why, the side effects of the medicine, and whether a non-drug approach would be preferable.

To help you understand these medicines I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report, CONSUMER TIPS ON MEDICINES. I'm also sending you a free copy of my Health Report on MENTAL ILLNESS, which discusses non-drug approaches to emotional problems. Others readers who want either of these reports should send $1 for each Health Report ordered with their name and address to P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to mention the title of each newsletter you request.

Fact is duller than fiction

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

I wish that TV programs would stop their unrealistic depictions of hospitals and doctors. Script writers make a singular effort to show the hospital environment as glamorous when, in fact, writers try to complicate and glorify, rather than to portray hospitals as they really are.

I'd had it up to here with the Jim Kildares and Ben Caseys of yore. As healers, they were too perfect and always managed to respond in appropriate ways to unmanageably inappropriate situations. They were radiantly fanciful, but their intrigues pale in comparison to the Machiavellian machinations of modern characters who inhabit the worlds of "General Hospital" and "St. Elsewhere."

Out of curiosity, I recently watched an episode of "St. Elsewhere." In it, a beautiful, unmarried, female staff psychiatrist in her late 30s rhapsodized about having a baby out of wedlock. She needed some help, so she picked an attractive young intern to do the deed. The assignation was supposed to take place in her office, in the afternoon, between patient visits. As the tale unfolded, the intern chickened out. It seems he objected to being simply a sex object; he didn't want to take the responsibility for fathering a child in almost the same way he would have made a deposit in a sperm bank.

I don't know any psychiatrists who fit this image. Good-looking women psychiatrists usually are married (to pathologists) long before they are out of their residencies. Those who aren't are seldom at a loss for companionship. They certainly have more than one hour of prime time to find Mr. Right — or Dr. Right, as the case may be. And they work out their emotional conflicts in more imaginative ways than putting the make on interns who are 10 years their junior.

That reminds me: Television medical shows are laced with sex. There's a lot of playing around. It's unnatural. In real life, residents are too exhausted for obsessive hanky-panky. How sexy can a doctor be when he or she has just come off a 36-hour rotation in the emergency room? Propped by an endless endowment of black coffee, he has had to handle every conceivable form of disaster. His senses have continually been accosted by hordes of hemorrhaging, writhing, caterwauling patients. At the end of his shift, he can barely see straight. All he wants is to collapse into some clean sheets, alone, for 40 winks. If you don't believe me, check it out with a resident's spouse. Medical training is no honeymoon.

In another episode of "St. Elsewhere," one of the doctors wrote a book about all the sexual funny business happening in the hospital. He called himself "Dr. Z." Where did he get the time to write a book? How did he find out about the goings-on? If I were to write that kind of book about my community hospital, the document would be about two pages long — double-spaced.

Let's be sensible: Doctors-in-training bust their buns just trying to keep up with their menial responsibilities. No resident has enough energy to write an expose — until he or she is out of training. By then, it's too late.

Scriptwriters compose material out of their own kinky fantasies because make-believe medical centers — not real hospitals — are what sell shows to the networks and the public. Any writer who described what really goes on in hospitals would be providing a real service, but sponsors would be as hard to find as a clean scrub suit on Saturday night. People wouldn't watch real hospital drama. How would you fill a 30-minute segment with the apocalyptic vision of a patient being readied for a barium enema? What is the literary value of a drug addict, with acute brain syndrome, trashing the reception area? How are you going to interest the viewer in a drunk who has just blown lunch all over himself, the gurney, the floor and the nurses' aide? This type of realism will not boost ratings, compete with a National Geographic Special or sell antiperspirants.

The unsophisticated TV viewer has been told that behind all the run-of-the-mill medical situations, there is a real drama, in the form of sex and power. If this weren't so, why would so many young men and women undergo the voluntary brutalization inherent in their training? There's got to be something going on in the linen closets and the administration offices — something that makes it all worthwhile.

Sorry, folks, it isn't so. Doctors and hospitals aren't all that fascinating. Actually, they're quite mundane. What I'd really like to see on TV is the unmasking of an unpublicized profession. For example, how do dentists get their kicks at night after they have put down their little drills and picks?

Send your questions to Dr. Gott in care of this newspaper at P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Due to volume of mail, individual questions cannot be answered. Questions of general interest will be answered in future columns.

Clements, Hobby are arguing

AUSTIN (AP) — With the state budget deadlock unbroken, Gov. Bill Clements and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby are voicing sharply disparate opinions about the problem.

"There's a lot of people around this town that don't realize the election's over. And they don't realize who won the election and why I won," Clements said Thursday, again urging lawmakers to understand that taxes won't go up.

"I think there's a mandate from the people to proivde a first-class education system in the state, to keep our prisons open, to keep our hospitals open," said Hobby, explaining why lawmakers voted for a larger budget than Clements wanted.

The Legislature has only four days left in its regular session, and if no budget passes, a special session will be needed.

Clements denies blame for the stalemate and again vowed to veto any tax increase greater than $2.9 billion, saying that's what voters wanted when they elected him.

"I don't feel any blame whatsoever ... I was elected to come down here and I'm going to do the things the people elected me to do," he said.

Hobby, leader of the Senate and the man Clements now blames for the stalemate, said the dilemma would have ended weeks ago if Clements had compromised.

"It wouldn't have been impossible to have it done some weeks ago," Hobby said. "The governor continues to make puzzling statements."

Asked what it would take to break the deadlock, Hobby replied, "Some reality therapy, I suppose."

Their charges in separate news conferences Thursday appeared to leave little room for negotiation before Monday's adjournment.

Clements has proposed a $36.9 billion, two-year budget. The House approved a $39.4 billion spending plan and the Senate budget totaled $40 billion. Neither the House nor the Senate has approved enough new taxes to fund their budgets.

Clements said he sees no end to the deadlock until legislators realize that most Texans oppose higher taxes.

Railroad Commission tohunt down pollution-risk wells

ODESSA, Texas (AP) — The Texas Railroad Commission plans to do sleuthing by computer to hunt down abandoned oil and gas wells that could become pollution risks, officials say.

The program that may be ready by fall would flag wells out of production and pinpoint operator names and field locations.

"This year we expect anywhere from 700 to 800 inactive and abandoned wells to reach the point where they may endanger the state's fresh-water supplies, and frankly, we don't have enough money in the state well-plugging fund to take care of them all," Commissioner John Sharp said.

"We're trying to identify some of these wells that can be rehabilitated before they go sour," he told the Odessa American Thursday.

Through the beginning of May, the commission spent $331,532 in fund money sealing off 54 wells in District 8, which incorporates Midland and Ector counties.

Midland-based district director Ron Strong said the wells ranged from 1,350 feet to 12,925 feet and were scattered across the 38,000-square-mile district.

District 8 is home to about 61,000 producing wells and has its share of abandoned ones, he said, estimating another 55 remain unplugged.

In the standard process, cement is pumped to the bottom of the well, closing off holes and restoring the well bore to near-original condition.

"People are walking away from marginal wells because of the price of oil," said District 8 plugging overseer De Witt Carnes. "We make certain they don't leak anymore — that's our prime concern."

The state does not appropriate money for well-plugging. The RRC's Austin spokesman, Brian Schaible, said those funds are generated from $100 drilling application fees and pollution penalties the RRC collects.

Plugging requests are filed with the Austin office that then develops a statewide priority list for funding. The state closed off 714 wells in 1986 where no financial operators could be pinned down to foot the bill, Schaible said.

The RRC usually contracts private companies and last year paid an average $3,000 to $5,000 to plug a typical well, a cost sometimes rocketing to $25,000 for more complex jobs.

Each one eats into the plugging fund. Schaible said about $2 million remains in the fund, but warned that by Sept. 1, it will be exhausted, leaving 400 wells still unplugged across Texas.

"If abandoned wells aren't properly plugged, leakage could run out at the surface or into subsurface fresh water," Schaible said. "It's difficult, if not impossible, to clean up that pollution."

The computer program will not turn up new information as "it's something we keep track of," Schaible said. "But we've never put it together in a handy-dandy list like that."

The data will be broken down by district or county and made available to operators interested in taking over wells on the verge of abandonment.

Once a well goes past 90 days without a production report, its operator is required to either bring it back into production or plug it properly. But the RRC is anxious to know in advance what that operator is planning, Schaible said.

On a U.S. Army base, during the late, lamented period of the military draft, you would often hear it--"Shooooooort! Short!"

The first exclamation was drawn out and the second clipped off--"Shooooooort! Short!"--and it sounded like the looney call of a souped up dental patient overdosed on laughing gas.

You would hear it at odd times outdoors, drifting over the air from some long distance. You heard the holler but you almost never saw the source.

What it was, of course, was soldiers celebrating the fact of their "ETS," Army jargon for the Estimated Time of Separation. In other words, they were about to get out of Uncle Sam's Army. They were short-timers. They were about to be free.

"Shooooooort! Short!" was a sound of freedom, which causes us to think of public school students--as of Friday, let loose again for the summer.

As students have been waiting for May 29, the draftees of the early 1970s went around with their ETS date permanently tatooed on the backs of their eyelids. They saw it in their sleep.

Our's, written Army style, was 15 Jun 73, a date we don't expect to ever forget.

For the first year of a normal Army stint, the date was more or less a mythical image--too far in the distance to be real.

But once that first 12 months were past, the reality slowly dawned on you that you might just get out of this deal with your hide intact.

You couldn't officially consider yourself a short-timer until you had less than six weeks to go, but the joy of the prospect sent a bubble of joy in your chest that rose up like a helium balloon.

At six weeks and holding, the unwritten code said you could begin to make the sound. Out-of-doors, the longer version--the "Shooooooort! Short!" refrain--was most common. It was normally called out in long, excited tones, like a coyote yodeling at the moon or a long "V" of gray geese proclaiming their escape from the wintry winds of Canada.

Indoors, where the threat of reprising NCOs was always a danger, the preferred redition was the quicker and more to the point "Short!" This sound, not unlike a joyous hiccup, was brief enough to make identification of the guilty short-timer impossible.

Short-timers walking alone across an Army marching field might suddenly give out with a happy yelp of "Shooooooort! Short!"

Another, blocks away, would hear it and respond--brothers in a spirit that mixed both rebellion and knowledge of the shared experience.

Fourteen years later, the call still has the ability to lift our spirits. And, remembering it, we feel the same satisfaction the coyote and the goose must receive from calling to the wind.

When the last school bell rang Friday, we expect that feeling was shared by a bunch of folks.

As for ourself, we can't remember any sound before or since which has given us more pleasure.

Country Life

By Deanie Francis Mills

The June issue of "Success" magazine has an article entitled, "How to Be Class-Conscious." The idea is, how to market your goods to the various social classes, which are divided into two major classes, "Upscale" and "Downscale."

Some sure-fire indicators are given to help you pinpoint whether someone is Upscale or Downscale, such as education, occupation, status of family and neighborhood. But one indicator really caught my eye: "The Great, Absolutely Infallible Living-Room Test," which I repeat here in full:

DOWNSCALE INDICATORS

—Television in living room.
—Religious pictures.
—Floral-print drapes.
—Print wallpaper.
—Bowling trophies.
—Plastic furniture.
—Doilies, slipcovers.

UPSCALE INDICATORS

—Television in den or bedroom.
—Abstract oil paintings.
—Plain, solid drapes.
—White or off-white rooms.
—Crystal, porcelain.
—Hardwood furniture.
—Tapestry wall hangings.

Now, I'm at a distinct disadvantage here, because we don't have a living room. Or maybe it's a den we don't have. At any rate, we have one room in the middle of the house, not counting the kitchen, that we all live in. For lack of a better term, we call it the "living room." Looking around, I can see that I am definitely in trouble.

This reminds me of Dolores, a friend of mine back in Dallas who is definitely Upscale. Dolores has an all-white living room, complete with a white baby-grand piano, a crystal chandelier and a spiral staircase.

Her den (the size of a museum) has two-story glass walls overlooking the pool, several "conversation pits," and a wet bar. There is a game room which holds the specially-designed pool table, a book-lined, leather-chaired study I'd give years off my life for, and His and Hers bathrooms off the master suite. More bedrooms than I could count.

Dolores's daughter, Madeline (what else would she be named?) attends Hockaday, Dallas' prestigious girls' school. Her husband, a financial advisor, is into yachting.

Dolores and I got to be friends in junior high. Her dad was only then amassing his fortune, half of which Dolores later inherited when her mother died. Dolores was a shy girl, completely unaffected by money. She didn't give a hoot where you lived or what your daddy did for a living or where you bought your clothes, which was lucky for me. She was a person of integrity who accepted you on your own merits. She still does. Lately, though, Dolores has felt pressure to social climb on her daughter's behalf, and she's not comfortable in the role. I suspect that, as her daughter hits adolescence, she will no longer be comfortable with her mother.

Back to my living room. Well, we'll just have to Upscale things a little bit here, won't we? First of all, we'll have to get rid of those tacky 4-H Horse Show trophies my son won. They don't belong in an Upscale living room and there isn't room for them anywhere else. Out they go.

Next, that beautiful painting that was a gift to me from my dear friend, Mike Thornton. Sorry, Mike. It's just not abstract enough for Upscale living. And we must get rid of this Bible. It's simply too religious. I'll have to hide it somewhere so my Upscale friends won't see it. Better yet, I'll just throw it out. Religion just isn't in this year.

The TV and VCR will have to be moved to the bedroom. The kids can watch the Disney Sunday movie by themselves. It wouldn't fit with my new Upscale image. The well-thumbed books with shabby covers will definitely have to go. They'll have to be replaced with artsy coffee table books that no one ever reads. Family pictures: out. There's no room for them in an Upscale living room. One more thing. I'll have to paint over all that paneling, make it white and sterile as a hospital waiting room. There. All done.

Hmmmm. It's so...empty. So...cold. There is something missing from this room. Oh, I remember. It's love.

Quick, get those trophies down from the attic...bring that painting back in here...Honey, have you see the paint remover! I want to restore the paneling, and a few other things.

On Memorial Day, even though it happened 43 years ago, Truss Farquhar of Snyder said he remembered the death of his sister who was killed during World War II "as if it were yesterday."

LaVerne Farquhar, then 28 and a second lieutenant in the Army Nurse Corps, was killed on Feb. 10, 1944 on the Anzio Beachhead in Italy when the field hospital was bombed. She was the only Texas nurse killed in actual combat.

First Baptist Church has acquired the old Furr's building located adjacent to the church grounds east of downtown Snyder, it was reported Monday.

TUESDAY
May 26

Phil Spradling, Western Texas College men's basketball coach for the past three years, resigned Tuesday morning.

"There were a lot of different reasons for it. Basically, I decided to get out of coaching for a year or so and see how I feel and see if that's what I really want to do the rest of my life," said Spradling.

With some 37 years experience in the county clerk's office, Frances Billingsley was named "acting" county clerk by county commissioners Tuesday.

Meeting in regular session, court members noted an opinion by the Texas Association of Counties (TAC) made the appointment possible.

County commissioners Tuesday urged department heads to trim spending by 20 percent for the 1988 budget year.

The direction came during preliminary budget discussions held Tuesday afternoon in the county courtroom.

Price was selected for his work on "Hamlet," which placed second in the Class AAAA division this year at state.

Faced with a recommendation from both the business manager and superintendent for Snyder ISD that the Scurry County Appraisal District should be allowed to continue to collect school taxes, the Snyder school board Wednesday temporarily backed away from a final vote regarding which of two local entities should have this responsibility.

The action did set aside, at least from the school district's viewpoint, an option proposed by a member of a fellow taxing entity--that of holding a non-binding referendum election in August to allow voters to show a preference.

Company offers two options to pay debt

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — The Hylsa steel company has offered its foreign creditors up to 35 percent of its stock under one plan to pay off its $1.5 billion debt, a company spokesman said Thursday.

Roberto Cavazos, Hylsa assistant vice president, said the company offered two plans to creditors at a meeting Wednesday in Houston.

"The company offered two options so the lenders would have enough room to maneuver and come to terms with the restructuring plan," Cavazos said by telephone.

He said creditors could accept either plan or a combination of both.

Hylsa, the largest subsidiary of the Monterrey-based Alfa conglomerate, has suffered severe finanancial difficulties along with the rest of Mexico since 1982 when the currency was devalued. The peso, valued at 27 to the dollar in February 1982, is now worth about 1,260 to $1.

Hylsa would pay creditors $20 million in cash under both plans, Cavazos said.

Under the first plan, Hylsa proposes to divide the company's debt into three groups.

In the first group, $450 million would be financed over 15 years at a low interest rate, the London Interbank Borrowing Rate, or Libor, plus 1 percent. The company would be given a five-year grace period before paying this portion back.

Another $450 million at Libor plus one would be paid according to the company's ability to pay, but with a minimum level set, Cavazos said.

But, he said, if Hylsa makes payments over the minimum level established then that portion of the debt could be reduced to as low as $200 million under an "incentive" agreement.

In exchange for these incentives, Hylsa proposes to turn over up to 15 percent of its stock to creditors while leaving up to $100 million to be paid at low interest rates.

In the third group, another $250 million would be exchanged for up to 20 percent of stock in the company, Cavazos said.

"The lenders would receive up to 35 percent of Hylsa's equity," Cavazos said.

He said, however, that Hylsa's proposal would require the creditors holding Hylsa stock to offer it for sale first to the Alfa parent company, called Giasa, before selling it to anyone else.

The second plan simply calls for creditors to cancel $580 million of Hylsa's debt and accept $550 million worth of United Mexican States bonds plus the $20 million in cash so the $550 million portion of Hylsa's debt would be owed to the Mexican government.

Cavazos said the banks have no set deadline to accept or reject the plan.

Cisneros subpoenaed by defendant

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Mayor Henry Cisneros, who said the slaying of a suspected vigilante cop may have saved several other lives, has been subpoenaed to testify for another patrolman charged in the case.

Farrell Tucker, 35, faces a murder trial next week in the slaying of his former partner, Stephen R. Smith, 31.

Smith was suspected of vigilante activities and allegedly planned to kill three top law enforcement officials he blamed for damaging his career. Tucker maintains he shot Smith in self-defense last Aug. 18.

The highly publicized case cost two police chiefs their jobs and prompted a federal investigation and an $8 million lawsuit over alleged civil rights violations.

At the time of the shooting, Cisneros said Smith was not a well man.

"Maybe we were spared a multiple murder," Cisneros said. "One has to wonder where this thing might have gone. It is a sad turn of events."

On Wednesday, Bexar County District Clerk David Garcia issued subpoenas requiring Cisneros, City Manager Lou Fox and Assistant City Manager Bill Donahue to testify for Tucker.

Tucker's attorney, Terry McDonald, requested the subpoenas for the city officials, saying they had testified at length before the Bexar County grand jury that indicted Tucker in Smith's slaying.

"They weren't listed as state witnesses and I don't have access to their grand jury testimony," McDonald said Thursday. "So I would have to assume that they have something to contribute."

He said he may ask the city officials if they had any direct knowledge of Smith's alleged vigilante activities.

Fox said Thursday that neither he nor Cisneros had received the subpoenas.

"If I can contribute anything I'll be happy to do that," Fox said. "I'll be happy to provide anything so that this gentleman receives a fair trial."

Donahue and Cisneros did not return telephone calls to The Associated Press.

Tucker, who was Smith's best friend, has been suspended since his indictment last October. He has told investigators that Smith, who was accused of brutalizing prisoners, planned to kill then-District Attorney Sam Millsap, then-Assistant Police Chief Frank Hoyack and then-Deputy Police Chief Robert Heuck.

On Aug. 18, Tucker met with the three officials, who told him to keep a planned meeting with Smith that night. Armed with two revolvers and a voice-activated tape recorder, Tucker met with Smith.

Tucker said that during a conversation in Smith's car, Smith grabbed one of the two handguns and threatened to kill him.

Tucker reached for the other revolver and shot Smith five times. The tape recorder did not produce anything audible, police said.

Twin concerts on July 4th are planned

AUSTIN (AP) — Music lovers in the Austin area will have a choice on July 4 between dueling concerts — one featuring the Beach Boys and the other a more traditional peformance by the Austin symphony orchestra.

Both will be on the shores of downtown Town Lake and both will feature elaborate fireworks displays.

Since the Bicentennial celebration of 1976, the Austin symphony has entertained at Auditorium Shores as part of the Austin Jaycees' free celebration that started in 1954. About 100,000 people viewed last year's fireworks show that followed the symphony performancy.

This year, the Beach Boys will headline a day-long, Jaycees-sponsored concert inside a fenced portion of the Zilker Park soccer fields. Tickets are $3.

The Austin Symphony will play for free at Auditorium Shores, several blocks east of the city park.

"Isn't it a shame?" said Jane Sibley, president of the Austin Symphony. "You cut into the sense of freedom and the Fourth of July when you start charging."

Brad Meyer, chairman of the Jaycees July Fourth celebration advisory board, said the group decided to stage a separate show because they needed to attract a large, paying crowd to pay production expenses previously shared by the city.

The Jaycees and symphony officials, who wanted to continue free concerts that would allow families to bring in picnic baskets, tried unsuccessfully to settle their differences.

"We wanted to work this out," Meyer said. "We just ran into obstacles that we couldn't overcome."

A.L. Williams & MILICO
Not the most publicized.
Only the most progressive.

Just north of Atlanta, an amazing success story is unfolding. Two organizations with the most unique relationship in American business are rewriting the insurance industry's record books.

A.L. Williams, a marketing organization over 100,000 strong, is presenting its "Buy term and invest the difference" philosophy everywhere from Pasadena to Puerto Rico. The concept calls for consumers to buy low-cost, high-protection term life insurance, and invest the money they save by not paying for higher-cost cash value insurance.

MILICO, the nation's leading term life insurance company, processes A.L. Williams' business at its regional office near Atlanta. MILICO (Massachusetts Indemnity and Life Insurance Company) has pioneered efficiency in administration for the industry, with less than one employee for every $100 million of insurance in force.

In 1984, the teamwork of A.L. Williams and MILICO produced an industry record $38.3 billion of business, making MILICO the No. 1 writer of individual life insurance in the world.* A new all-time record, $65.5 billion, was set in 1985.†

Nixon kept all his personal papers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Until the day he resigned, Richard M. Nixon kept a White House desk full of papers and items revealing an obsession with his own standing in the polls and with the journalists who covered his presidency.

Those who cleaned out Nixon's desks on Aug. 10, 1974, a day after he flew into the sunset of San Clemente, Calif., found stacks of papers tracking opinion about him in polls dating back to 1952, when he ran for vice president with Dwight Eisenhower.

NASA seeks boosters study

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — NASA has announced plans to study the feasibility of using liquid-fueled rockets to replace solid rocket boosters blamed for the Challenger disaster.

The Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., said Thursday it was asking contractors to develop concepts for the design of liquid-fueled boosters that could be used to launch the shuttle or future spacecraft.

Marshall spokesman L.T. Spears said the center will consider the submitted proposals this summer and select two contractors to conduct a detailed, nine-month, $6 million study.

The 1986 accident that destroyed Challenger and killed its seven crew members was blamed on a flawed solid-fueled booster rocket.

Spears said liquid-fueled rocket engines are more versatile than solids because they can be throttled, held down on the launch pad after ignition and shut down in flight.

Solid rockets, however, instantly fire at full thrust and will continue to burn at that rate until the fuel is exhausted. The burn rate can't be modified once solids are ignited.

Spears said the request for proposals issued Thursday did not specify what kind of fuel could be used in the liquid rockets. NASA has flown rockets that use kerosene and oxygen, or hydrogen and oxygen as propellants. The shuttle's main engines use hydrogen and oxygen.

The rocket study would also consider whether proposed liquid-fueled rockets should be reusable or discarded after one use.

Hulls of the shuttle's solid-fueled rockets are recovered at sea and reused. Liquid-fueled rockets, however, such as the Saturn 5 used in the Apollo program, were used once and discarded.

The proposal reopens a debate that raged through the National Aeronautics and Space Administration during the 1970s when the space shuttle was being designed.

Some concepts then called for a liquid-fueled rocket booster system that would carry the shuttle to a high altitude, detach and then be flown back to a landing site near the launch pad, while the shuttle went on to orbit.

Law caused drop in apprehensions

McALLEN, Texas (AP) — Alien apprehensions have dropped drastically in the Rio Grande Valley, and the regional U.S. Border Patrol Chief attributes the decline to the new law making it illegal to hire undocumented aliens.

Employer sanctions are the most important aspect of the new immigration reform law, Silvestre Reyes, chief of the McAllen sector, said Thursday.

"From an enforcement perspective, the employer sanction is the cornerstone of the legislation, because it removes the magnet that brings the alien to the U.S.," Reyes said.

He said during fiscal year 1987, which ended Wednesday, alien apprehensions dropped to less than half the figure recorded during fiscal 1986 in his sector.

A total of 47,465 people were apprehended in the border region during fiscal year 1987, while 123,197 were apprehended during 1986, according to Border Patrol statistics.

"That (1987) was the time when the new law was starting to get publicity in other countries," Reyes said.

In Mexico, employer sanctions were considered much more significant than the amnesty offer, Reyes told Leadership Texas 1987, sponsored by the Austin-based Foundation for Women's Resources during a forum on immigration issues.

The amnesty for illegal aliens proving continuous residence in the United States since 1982 began May 5. The employer sanctions go into effect Monday, but may be postponed because the government has not provided necessary forms to employers.

Many school children will benefit from the new law, a school superintendent said during the panel discussion.

"Parents will be able to openly participate in school," said Pablo Perez, superintendent of the McAllen Independent School District. "Of course that is very supportive to our youngsters."

Perez said that although the U.S. Supreme Court has required schools to educate all children, regardless of their legal status, the parents have been hesitant to spend much time at schools for fear of apprehension.

He said the district has 20,000 students, about 85 percent of whom are Hispanic and 1,000 of whom are undocumented aliens. Studies show that the dropout rate falls considerably when parents become active in schools, Perez said.

The district does not expect much of an increase in student population with the new law, he said, because it already is required to educate them.

Senate okays bill to delay marriage

AUSTIN (AP) — Love-struck couples would have to wait three days after getting a marriage license before they can tie the knot under a Senate-approved bill designed to prevent impulse marriages.

The waiting-period proposal cleared the Senate on voice vote Thursday, and was returned to the House with amendments. Thirty states now have such a waiting period, according to a written bill analysis, which said the delay is designed to prevent "impulse marriages."

Senators also approved a measure Thursday to authorize the state agriculture department to administer a grant program to stimulate the development of new businesses.

The measure also was returned to the House, with amendments, on voice vote.

"We need to see if we can't do a better job processing what we produce here," said sponsoring Sen. Chet Edwards, D-Duncanville, adding that Texas is the second-leading producing state but processes only 6 percent of its agricultural produce.

A House-approved bill that would make it a crime to remove the serial number from tangible personal property was defeated 10-18 after Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, objected to the proposal.

Glasgow said the bill could have a bad effect on garage sales and discount stores where goods are sold without identification numbers.

He said manufacturers who over-produce often will take off numbers to remove the warranty on a piece of equipment and sell the surplus equipment at a big discount.

"I believe you're going to create mass confusion among discount dealers," Glasgow said.

In other action Thursday, the Senate approved proposals that would:

— Extend the life of the Texas Youth Commission. The Senate adopted a House-Senate conference committee report on voice vote.

McAllen policeman charged in fellow policeman's death

PHARR, Texas (AP) — A McAllen police officer was charged with involuntary manslaughter after he allegedly pointed what he thought was an empty gun at a fellow officer during a chess game and pulled the trigger, police say.

Officer Jesus A. Ruiz, 22, was pronounced dead on arrival Thursday at McAllen Medical Center with a bullet wound in his abdomen, Pharr police spokesman Lt. Jesse Medina said.

McAllen police officer Noe Lara, 31, was charged with involuntary manslaughter in the shooting, and was later released from the Hidalgo County Jail on $20,000 bond, Medina said.

He said the shooting occurred about 4:40 a.m. while three officers and a civilian were at Lara's apartment playing chess.

ANTI-CANCER FOODS

People who regularly eat foods rich in vitamin A, carotene and C have a lower incidence of cancer of the lung, larynx, bladder and esophagus. However studies show the need to get these vitamins from nutritious foods: carrots, tomatoes, cantaloupe, strawberries, citrus fruit, etc., rather than to rely too heavily on vitamin supplements.

Texas Air chief says funds being held hostage

WASHINGTON (AP) — Billions of dollars earmarked for air safety, airport improvements and the Federal Aviation Administration are not being spent where they should, Texas Air Corp. Chairman Frank Lorenzo says.

"We pay an 8 percent ticket tax, and yet that ticket tax, which was designed to rebuild, modernize facilities has not been invested back in the system," Lorenzo told a breakfast meeting of Texans who live in Washington.

He blamed the increasing numbers of delays at airports around the country on the government's bottling up those funds.

"It's being held in a trust fund, and it's just not being spent. It gets caught up in the budget rhetoric, because by not spending it, it's still considered income."

Lorenzo joins several congressmen who have complained that funds are being held in the Airport and Airway Trust Fund, a major revenue generator into which is funneled 8 percent of all ticket sales, cargo charges and aviation fuel sales in the United States.

Rep. Norman Y. Mineta, D-Calif., introduced legislation this year to require the money collected from the airline tax be spent on improvements to the industry's infrastructure, including training air traffic controllers.

"The uncommitted surplus in the trust fund has increased from $2.1 billion at the end of fiscal 1982 to $5.6 billion at the end of fiscal 1987," said Mineta, chairman of the Public Works aviation subcommittee.

"The opportunity to use the trust fund to reduce the overall budget deficit creates irresistible incentives for the administation and congressional appropriations committees to reduce spending out of the trust fund below authorized levels," Mineta said.

Lorenzo, whose Houston-based corporation combines Texas Air, Continental, Eastern, New York Air and People Express to make up the largest commercial carrier in the western world, said the Transporation Department has to free the money if it wants to see an improvement in airline efficiency.

"The air controller situation is a serious one, there's no doubt about that. We're operating a ultra-modern system with many more airplanes than we had five or ten years ago, many more passengers, but the growth of the capability to provide the service in terms of air traffic control has not been keeping up," Lorenzo said.

Senior Transportation Department officials say the trust fund money will be spent in the years ahead to pay for a $12 billion modernization of the air traffic control system. That modernization has been criticized for being a year or more behind schedule.

As with many other carriers, Lorenzo's airline empire has been criticized in the past year for cancelled flights, long delays, lost baggage, and violations of other consumer protection rules.

The Transporation Department is seeking a settlement with Continental Airlines involving alleged violations of federal consumer protection rules. If no settlement is reached, the department could file a formal complaint and seek a civil fine of up to $1,000 a day per violation.

Lorenzo said the problems involve Continental's failure to provide prompt refunds on tickets wholly attributable to overbookings inherited from People Express when Lorenzo and Texas Air took over that carrier recently.

Parents to sell house

JERSEY VILLAGE, Texas (AP) — Too many memories exist in the home where two children drowned for the parents to live there anymore.

Craig Roberts, 38, and his wife, Rhonda, 28, have put the house up for sale after both their children died May 20 while the parents weren't at home.

Police said a housekeeper babysitting the children told them she had been cleaning bathrooms and watching television upstairs when she came down and found 3-year-old Joshua and 20-month-old Brei floating in the pool.

An autopsy determined they had been in the water about two hours.

"We based our life around our babies, and they grew up here," Mrs. Roberts said Wednesday. "We were always greeted by them in the morning and when we got home from work.

"This house was built for Brei and Joshua. We don't think we can live here without them," she said.

Ronald Reagan was elected governor of California in 1966.

'Handicapped' youth graduates from HHS

Even though Sonny Garrett of Hermleigh, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. D. Garrett, is partially disabled and must spend part of each day confined to a wheelchair, he is not handicapped. Thursday night he took his place along side the rest of the Hermleigh seniors of 1987 and graduated during commencement exercises.

In all but one respect, Garrett was a typical high school senior, taking part in class activities such as FFA, shop and UIL and last year he served as the junior class president.

As a senior he was in charge of music for the school plays and assisted the boys and girls basketball teams with keeping track of their shots.

He has earned his learner's drivers permit and can now drive a car especially equipped with hand controls. He now plans to attend a technical school where he will study computer electronics and computer technology.

To strengthen his body he likes to work out with weights and bench press.

During his eight years at Hermleigh, Garrett participated in many activities, including FFA and ag programs, shop classes, UIL prose reading and the school play.

Last school year he raised chickens and goats for FFA and ag classes.

Garrett's motto now is "If I think I can do it, I usually do it." But he admits to going through a "lazy" phase which his parents helped to bring him out of. In fact, he credits his mother with helping him the most and helping him to realize he can get things done. He said his parents "kept him going" by making him work even when he didn't want to.

Since some people said he couldn't do it (finish high school), he said he decided to prove them wrong and began to apply himself diligently to his schoolwork. The effort paid off in full Thursday night when he graduated with his class.

Tommy Riley, principal, has nothing but high praise for Garrett. "He has the finest attitude of anyone I know. He is always smiling and is always cooperative. It is amazing to me that he has kept his bright, cheery personality in spite of adverse conditions. He has done an excellent job and his attitude will make him a success in all his educational endeavors."

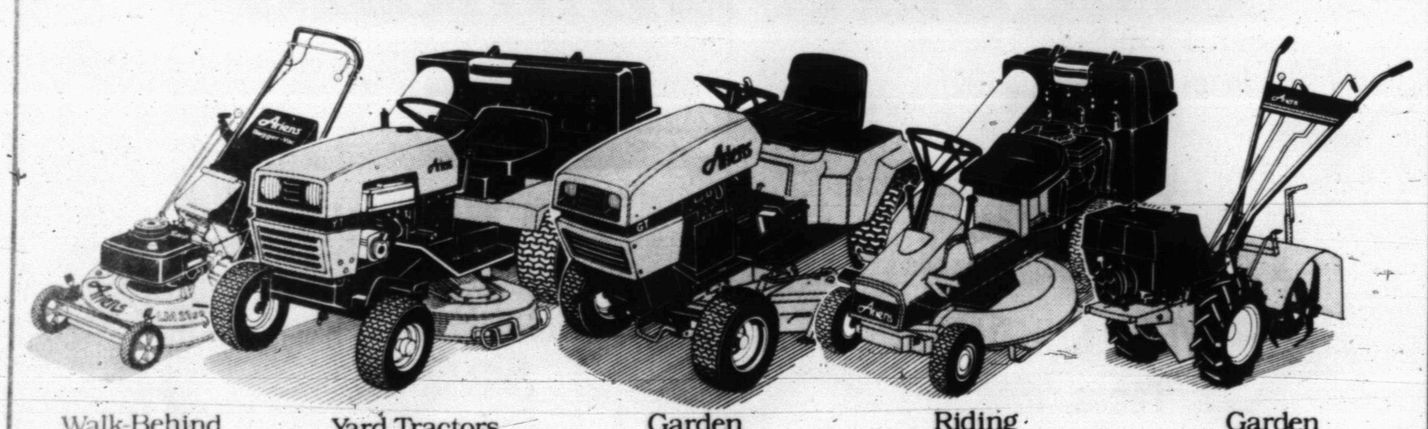

Garrett, who is adopted, moved to Hermleigh with his family eight years ago.

He is partially crippled by cerebral palsy which was first diagnosed when he was four years old.

The Guggenheim Museum, designed by architect Frank Lloyd Wright, opened to the public in New York in 1959.

"Mediocre men often have the most acquired knowledge," said French physiologist Claude Bernard.

Daughter's Close Call Shocks Some Sense Into Her Mother

DEAR ABBY: Yesterday I was cleaning the house and Kiki, my 2-year-old daughter, kept interrupting, so to keep her busy, I gave her my car keys to play with, then I went back to my work.

About 10 minutes later, I heard a loud thud, followed by a frightened little cry, so I assumed that my daughter had climbed up on a kitchen chair and had fallen off. Then she came running to me with arms outstretched, wanting me to hold her. I picked her up and told her to be careful on the kitchen chairs, noticed her eyes were a little bloodshot, put her down after she stopped crying and returned to my housework.

About 10 minutes later I went into the kitchen and to my horror, I saw my car keys were plugged into the electrical socket! I kicked them out of the socket — they were burned on the ends. The electrical current had burned a small hole in the baseboard and blown the fuse to the refrigerator!

Abby, by the grace of God my daughter is still walking around. I must have kissed and hugged her a zillion times! She didn't fall off a chair — she got "shocked" so severely she was knocked off her feet! How stupid of me to have given her my keys to play with.

Please warn your readers.

KIKI'S MOM

DEAR MOM: Thank you for sharing your close call to warn others. Mothers, fathers, grandparents, sitters, are you listening?

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I found the enclosed poem among the papers my mother had saved for many years. I hope it makes your column.

JOHN H. IN MUNCIE, IND.

DEAR JOHN: It did. (Does anyone know who wrote it?)

THE MONKEY'S DISGRACE
Three monkeys sat in a coconut tree
Discussing things as they are said to be
Said one to the others, "Now listen, you two,
"There's a rumor around that can't be true
"That man descended from our noble race
"The very idea is a great disgrace.

"No monkey has ever deserted his wife
"Starved her babies and ruined her life
"And you've never known a mother monk
"To leave her babies with others to bunk
"Or pass from one on to another
"Till they scarcely know who is their mother.

"Here's another thing a monkey won't do
"Go out at night and get on a stew
"Or use a gun or club or knife
"To take some other monkey's life
"Yes, man descended, the ornery cuss
"But, brother, he didn't descend from us."

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a "night person." He gets up at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and goes to sleep at 6 a.m. He won't even boil water for a pot of tea for himself, so I have to live according to his upside-down schedule, which I hate.

I get my room and board and $10 a month — and that's it. He honestly believes that's all I need — or deserve. (He pays all the bills.) He's far from poor. In a few years his investments will net him over a quarter of a million dollars, but he acts like we're headed for the poorhouse.

He will spend hours — all night if necessary — "balancing his books" until every penny is accounted for. He insists on knowing the menu for every day, and goes with me to buy groceries for the week to make sure I don't buy more than we need.

Is he crazy or am I? He retired three years ago and I haven't had a minute to myself ever since. I can't even go to the library without him. Abby, I've actually found myself wishing he would die. I've seen a counselor to help me vent some of my anger. I've tried to get him into counseling, but he refuses. He's not mean or abusive; he's never raised his voice to me. He'd cut off his arm before he'd strike me, but I feel as though I'm being nibbled to death by a velvet mouse.

NIBBLED

DEAR NIBBLED: You're worse than "nibbled"; you're emotionally battered. Your husband is a possessive, selfish, controlling man who is obsessed with money and concerned only with his own needs. You need further counseling to either learn how to live with this miserable miser, or gather the gumption to leave him. Yours is no life for a free woman — you are a prisoner as surely as if you were behind bars. Yes, he is a little "crazy," and if you continue to live with this penny-pinching tyrant, you're as crazy as he is.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: My brother's wife wrote to our children, inviting them to visit her, saying the plane tickets would be her treat. This entails a 900-mile flight. The children are 4 1/2 and 11 years old!

My husband and I are furious because we weren't asked how we felt about having our children make that kind of trip alone. Now they have been invited, and if we say they can't go, Mom and Dad are the "bad guys."

How should this be handled, Abby?

STEAMED

DEAR STEAMED: Write (or call) your brother's wife and tell her that when your children are of legal age, they can accept or reject all invitations, but until that time, they do not make those decisions — their parents do.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: My wife is older than I am. This was of no concern to her when we were married in our 20s, but as we are getting older, she is beginning to worry that I may seek a younger woman. How do I reassure her? She is almost 91, and I am 88.

RETIRED REAR ADMIRAL IN MARYLAND

DEAR WORRIED: Promise not to step out with a woman under 70. To paraphrase Benjamin Franklin in his advice to a young man to take an older mistress: "They don't tell, they won't swell, and they're grateful as h----."

Man likes to grow onions

DENTON, Texas (AP) — "I'd rather take a beatin' than mow the lawn," Robert Erwin says as he stands in his back yard, surveying the green stuff all around him.

He's not saying he's lazy, and those tall green spikes covering his entire back yard, growing along both sides of his house and in two of his neighbors' yards aren't overgrown blades of grass.

They're onions — 45,000 onions, give or take a few.

Erwin explains: "One day I was out here. It was hot, sweat was running down all over me. I was saying to my wife this was the last time I was ever going to mow this lawn."

That was about "oh, eight, 10, 12 years ago," he says, and since then everything's been coming up onions for the Erwins.

It took a dislike of lawn mowing and a love of gardening to turn the land around Erwin's north Denton home into a miniature onion farm that started in his back yard and slowly grew outward, eventually encompassing two of his neighbors' yards. Both neighbors are elderly women who asked Erwin to care for and keep their yards clean.

While many people would consider planting thousands of onions each year the equivalent of a beating, Erwin doesn't see it that way. The 75-year-old lifetime Denton resident believes gardening is what keeps him going.

"I just love to fool with 'em, and I love to eat 'em," he says.

The best onion slips, Erwin says, come from Farmersville, where he buys his plants every year. He plants only the yellow sweet variety, saying they're so good "you can eat them without bread or anything."

An eager gardener, Erwin puts his onions out in January risking freezes and other inclement weather. This year, he planted about 15 to 20 bunches of onions a day. His method was painstaking.

"I till the land in front of me, then lay down a string (to get the rows straight) and get down on my knees and put them in one by one," he explains.

By early March, he's planting again, but this time it's tomatoes and vegetables including okra, squash, peas and green beans. Those, however, don't compare in numbers to the onions.

He spends most of his time in the garden, and relies on help from his wife, Martha. "I work every day in it until I get tired and then I'll stop."

Erwin got his love of the land and a penchant for hard work from years of farming, a vocation he took up 54 years ago after he and Martha married.

He later sold the farm and worked for about 18 years for North Texas State University in the maintenance department. His wife also worked for and retired from NTSU.

Since he's been retired, Erwin has had surgery four times. Just three years ago, after suffering a stroke, doctors told him he wouldn't be able to walk again or be able to use his right arm.

Erwin laughs about that now. "You see me walking, don't you?" He rubs his arm and says, "I can let this arm get burned and not even feel it. It doesn't have any feeling. But I can still use it."

He admits he can't work from sunup to sundown as he once did on the farm, but he says age and any physical problems he's had have failed to keep him still. "If you've got willpower, you can do it," he says.

His garden has been a big hit, not only with the neighbors, but with family and passers-by. The Erwins' five children all of whom are grown and have children of their own, take advantage of the garden's abundance.

"They just come and get whatever they want," Erwin says. "The kids get a lot and put up a lot, and my wife puts up a bunch of them, too."

Over the years, the Erwins' onions have attracted a loyal following. "People know about us. They've been getting onions from us for years. It's no problem selling them," he says.

The onions go 20 for a dollar. Erwin says he isn't out to make a profit, only to make enough to cover the cost of the fertilizer and the slips.

"If we counted our labor, we'd really be in the hole," he says.

The onions will play out by late July or August, Erwin says, but until then, he'll continue to work his large garden, weeding, pulling up onions and selling them when he can.

Heater fire ruled cause of air crash

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 1985 plane crash that killed singer Rick Nelson and six others most likely was caused by a faulty cabin heater or electrical short near the heater, not drug use, federal investigators say.

The National Transportation Safety Board said Thursday it could find no conclusive evidence pinpointing the exact source of the fire, although "there is no doubt (it) ... did originate in the area of the heater."

The safety board's final report on the fire and crash of the privately owned DC-3, which was carrying Nelson, his fiancee and five members of his band, said the seven passengers died from flames and smoke and not the crash impact. The pilot and co-pilot escaped through a cabin window after the crash.

Shortly after the New Year's Eve accident, there was speculation that the fire might have been caused by passengers free-basing cocaine. The NTSB report, however, made no such conclusion and, according to a source familiar with the probe, investigators ruled out drug use as being involved in the accident.

Several of the band members and Nelson had measurable amounts of cocaine in their systems, tests showed, but the source, who spoke on condition he not be named, said there was no evidence indicating drug use during the flight and no drug-related paraphernalia was found in the wreckage.

Free-basing is a method of taking cocaine that requires an open flame. In it, the drug is mixed with flammable ether or ammonia.

According to the report, the plane's captain claimed he initially saw smoke coming from an area near where Nelson and his fiancee were sitting midway in the cabin, but investigators said no evidence was found indicating the fire began near the singer.

The plane crashed in a wooded area near DeKalb, Texas, during a flight from Guntersville, Ala., to Dallas, where Nelson was scheduled to appear at a New Year's Eve performance.

Killed in the crash, in addition to the 45-year-old Nelson, were his fiancee, Helen Blair, 29; and band members Andy Chapin, 30; Rick Intveld, 23; Bobby Neal, 38; Clark Russell, 35; and Patrick Woodward, 35.
