Rotary Head Talks To Club and 'Anns'

A joint meeting of Memphis Rotarians and their "Anns" at noon today heard Dr. Thomas H. Taylor, governor of Rotary's 41st district and president of Howard Payne college at Brownwood.

Dr. Taylor was high in his praise of local Rotary officials and was particularly complimentary with reference to the local club's attendance record which was 91 per cent last month.

"Last month," Dr. Taylor said, "the New York club's attendance record was only 37 per cent and Chicago's 50 per cent. It seems to me those boys could learn something from you Memphis Rotarians about getting their members out to luncheon."

The official also remarked that the St. Louis club might take pointers from Rube's Coffee Shop on how to properly serve a Rotary meal.

Dr. Taylor's address was punctuated with spontaneous humor—the good, down-to-earth kind one might expect from Farmer Jones rather than from a college professor.

He said in part: (Continued on page 4)

The flowers are sent each day by Carole Lombard, film star to whom Columbo was reported engaged at the time of his death.

Mrs. Columbo is critically ill in a Santa Monica hospital and because of her condition physicians fear to tell her that her son is dead. Members of the family have told her Russ is in Europe making a picture.

'CANNING' IS ORDER OF THE DAY

CANNING of foodstuffs probably has been at a greater height in the United States during recent months than ever before in the history of the nation. Even in the days when "grocery stores", or trading posts, were few and far between, the people probably never knew what it really meant to "put up" almost every kind of foodstuff to be saved for winter consumption.

This is a practice that, now it is here on such a large scale, we believe will never be allowed to lag again—at least, until we quit relying on mother nature to provide us with fruits and vegetables and livestock for our meats. It is the hope of farmers who are far-sighted enough to become self-sustaining insofar as possible rather than to attempt to "cash in" on high cotton, wheat or peanut prices by planting every inch of ground in whichever commodity his land happens to be fitted for—and then going to town to purchase his meat and eggs and turnip greens.

During recent years, agricultural colleges and home demonstration agents have been teaching "canning" as never before. They have pointed the way to substantial farm living.

Then, with thousands of starving cattle, hogs and sheep abounding throughout a great section of the country, the government turned to "canning" as a means of serving two ends: saving as much food from the drouth stricken animals as possible and providing, in this manner, great stores of foodstuff for people on relief rolls. Perhaps unwittingly, the government has taken a big step in the advancement of this art.

The extension service department of Texas A. & M. college, always a proponent of "canning all you can", is further advancing this program by sending out representatives to stage canning schools. One such representative, Mrs. Ima C. Hensarling, will hold a demonstration here tomorrow. The study of preparing and canning of fruits and vegetables and the preparing of a complete "canned meal" will be the feature of the demonstration. It will be held in the W. H. Craven building at 605 Main street.

The Democrat urges every woman in the Memphis Area to attend.

The Clew of the Forgotten Murder

by CARLETON KENDRAKE

BEGIN HERE TODAY

CHARLES MORDEN, reporter for The Blade, telephones the newspaper a report of the death of EDWARD SHILLINGBY, private detective, believed to have been killed by "CINCINNATI RED" LAMPSON, gangster.

The same night a man giving the name of JOHN SMITH is brought to police headquarters on suspicion of driving while intoxicated. With him is a girl who says she is MARY BRIGGS, hitch-hiker. The man changes his story several times, finally is identified as FRANK B. CATHAY, wealthy suburbanite and candidate for city council. Both Cathay and the girl are released.

Morden telephones the facts to his newspaper. Next day the real Cathay calls on DICK KENNEY, city editor of The Blade. Cathay claims his reputation has been injured, and demands damages and a retraction.

Kenney and Morden decide to put the matter before DAN BLEEKER, junior publisher of The Blade.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Dan Bleeker, junior publisher of The Blade, was in the late forties. He was thin of frame, saw-toothed of complexion. His black, smoldering eyes looked up in swift appraisal at the faces of the two men as they entered his private office.

"Looks serious," he said. "It is," Dick Kenney assured him.

"Sit down and wait until I finish these letters," Bleeker snapped.

Kenney and Morden found chairs. Bleeker pulled freshly typewritten letters into position on his desk, read briefly, drove his pen across the paper with nervous haste. He signed his name in the same manner that he did everything else—a swiftly nervous manner. One gathered that his mind was in a state of perpetual irritation at the inability of the physical environment to keep pace with his thoughts.

Bleeker shoved his pen across the last of the letters, jabbed a button and a tall, gaunt young woman strode into the room. She cast an appraising glance at the two men who occupied chairs, picked up the letters and departed.

As the door closed Dan Bleeker turned to the two men. "All right," he said, "what is it?" "That Frank B. Cathay story we ran last night," Kenney said. "What's the matter with it?" asked Bleeker.

"The man who was arrested wasn't Cathay at all."

Dan Bleeker gulped. He whirled about in his swivel chair, stared at the men with black-eyed, aggressive rage, jumped to his feet.

"Haven't you been in the newspaper game long enough to know that you can't run a story like that without being absolutely sure of your grounds?" he demanded.

Dick Kenney's voice was anxious. "It was just one of those things that couldn't be helped," he said. "It came in at the last minute. The man gave the name of John Smith. The police checked back on where he'd rented the roadster and found that he'd given the name of Frank B. Cathay of Riverview. They confronted him with that statement and he admitted his identity. He produced cards, all sorts of identification."

He looked over at Morden. "Morden," he said, "was in a tough spot. The paper was all ready to go to press. Whipple of The Planet suspected something."

Dan Bleeker snorted contemptuously. "Cards," he said. "My God! You couldn't get a $20 check cashed on the strength of that identification. Yet you go ahead and plunge the newspaper into a libel suit on identification that hasn't got any thing more to it than that!"

"No, wait a minute," Dick Kenney told him. "We did a lot more than look at the cards. We telephoned to Riverview and talked with Mrs. Cathay. She admitted her husband was in the city. And Tom Carsons down at the detective bureau didn't release the man until he had given proof of his identity. There were signatures on the cards. Carsons had him duplicate those signatures."

Bleeker stared steadily at the city editor. Dick Kenney met his gaze calmly.

"That all your story?" asked Bleeker.

Kennedy nodded. "It's a damned poor way to verify the man's identity," Dan Bleeker said.

"We were just going to press," the city editor reminded him.

"That doesn't make any difference."

"But, after all," Kennedy pointed out, "you can't run a newspaper like a bank. It's run at high speed. There's—"

"Wait a minute," Bleeker interrupted. "There's something fishy about this."

"Of course there's something fishy about it," Morden said.

Bleeker raised black, smoky eyes and regarded the young man for a full second before saying, "Shut up!"

He dropped his chin to his hands, stared at the floor for a few minutes, then looked up at the city editor.

"How did you find out the man wasn't Cathay?" he asked.

"Frank B. Cathay, himself, came to see me."

"What did he want?"

"Plenty." "How much?" "He didn't say. He wants a retraction, and he wants damages."

"Oh he does, does he?" said Bleeker grimly.

"He seems to have us on the spot," Kennedy said. "He's a prominent man in Riverview. He's running for city council. He's been president of the Chamber of Commerce, the president of the town's biggest luncheon club—"

"Never mind all the details," interrupted Bleeker explosively. "I know the type. I know all about him, more than he knows about himself. His wife is a social leader. She fixes the social status of every woman in town. People toady to her and toady to him. How much money does he want?"

"He wants a substantial check so he can have a facsimile published in The Riverview Daily Press, which is his backer in the political campaign."

"Wants to what?" yelled Bleeker.

"That's what he said," Kenney remarked. "He wanted to have a facsimile of the check published so he could convince the local citizens that atonement had been made for a great wrong."

"What—?" Bleeker whirled toward Morden. "You're the one that got us into this, huh?" he asked.

"I reported the case when it first came in. It was a John Smith case then. I was instructed to get a human interest article and—"

"And you're the one that got us into it, huh?"

"Yes, sir,"

Bleeker sighed. "That's a lot better, my boy," he said. "When I give you a direct question, give me a direct answer. The alibis can come later. If you'd kept beating about the bush I'd have fired you. As it is, I don't mind telling you that you did what any wide-awake newspaperman would have done under similar circumstances. How did you get an exclusive on it?" "I was covering the thing from a human interest angle," said Morden, "when they started checking up on the man's identity. Then they found out the car he was driving a rent car; that when he rented the car he had given the name of Frank B. Cathay of Riverview, had shown his driver's license and exhibited his lodge and club cards by way of reference."

"How did he get those cards?" asked Bleeker of Dick Kenney.

"Cathay says his pocket was picked."

"Did he make a complaint to the police?"

"No."

"Did he say how much cash he lost?"

"No."

"Did you ask him what he was doing in town?"

"He said he was here on business."

"Did he tell you the nature of the business?"

"No."

"Tell you where he was stopping?"

"No. I asked him and he refused to answer."

Dan Bleeker fastened his glittering black eyes on Morden. "Ever work for a newspaper on a libel suit, Morden?" he asked. "Know how it's done?" asked Bleeker.

"All right," Bleeker told him. "Go into the morgue, dig out everything you can find on Frank B. Cathay of Riverview. If he's been a prominent citizen there for 15 years we'll probably have a lot of stuff about him. The Riverview Daily Press is his paper. That means The Riverview Chronicle will be fighting him. Go up to Riverview and see the editor of The Chronicle. Find out all they can tell you about Cathay. Find out where he made his money, where he spends his nights when he's in the city. Find out all the things about him that he doesn't want to come out in public."

"After you've got all that information I'll have a heart-to-heart talk with Mr. Frank B. Cathay. Going to have a facsimile of a substantial check printed in The Riverview Daily Press, is he? I'll show him. I don't know anything that'll give me greater

Miami Chiefs To Battle Cyclone Here Friday Night

SILVERTON TILT DROPPED FOR STRONG FOE

Claims Chiefs Five Touchdowns Better Than Clarendon

Attempting to give local fans a real football game, by bringing a team here capable of giving them a hard battle, the Memphis Cyclone has arranged for the appearance of the Miami Chiefs here Friday night.

The fixing of the game was completed this morning, after officials learned that Silverton, originally scheduled for this week, failed to comply with interscholastic league rules and therefore is not a conference opponent.

Rivalry Dates to 1925

Since it is not necessary that the Cyclone meet the Silverton eleven, Coach Chesty Walker immediately cast about for a worthy opponent this week. He was faced with the problem of riding a club this late that did not already have a game slated, but he found that club in the Chiefs, who should be able to put up a real battle.

Coach "Red" Locke has produced better than average ball clubs at Miami since the days of the famous mud battle of 1925 when Memphis defeated the Chiefs, 13 to 0, for the district championship.

However, local grid followers have only one game upon which to base Miami's reputation this season. That seems to be enough.

Chief Overpowers Clarendon

Last week the Chiefs defeated the Clarendon Broncs, 13 to 0, and on three different occasions marched within two yards of the Broncs goal line, with "breaks" preventing them from going over.

According to grapevine information, Miami might easily have scored five touchdowns had the "breaks" been about even. But it was one of those things in which everything seemed to go against the better ball club. Despite this, however, the Chiefs overpowered the Broncs and pushed up a safe margin.

It was generally conceded that Silverton would be easily smothered by the fleet, accurate Cyclone eleven. The team lost to Turkey, 21 to 0, last week, and the Turks fell before Wellington, with whom Memphis probably is about on a par, by a 34 to 0 score.

Expect Good Game

With Miami coming, however, backers of the Cyclone believe the local club will receive some keen competition and hope that the game will prove to live up to the requirements of fans.

The game will start at 8 o'clock Friday night at Fair Park stadium. Season tickets are to be recognized, since the change was made in an attempt to bring an outstanding club here and not as something added to the schedule. General admission is 50 cents.

Almost certain yesterday afternoon when they reported for training that they would have a battle on their hands this week rather than another "breezer", the Cyclone candidates went to work with vigorous preparations. They're still "passing and punting, blocking and tackling and running with the ball."

Shifting Backfield

Coach Walker is further improving the shifting backfield that was tested for the first time last week and proved exceedingly successful. Under this change, both halfbacks, Chester Grimes and usually either Walker or Powers, run from the tail-back position ordinarily occupied by Quarterback Norman.

With each possessing greater speed than the Co-Captain, this offers opportunity for longer

Others will make their initial appearances in Little Theatre shows. It is predicted that both former and new members will find favor with the public in these presentations.

Each play is under separate direction. "All for Glory," a comedy, was written and is being directed by Mrs. R. S. Greene. A fantasy, "My Lady Dreams," is under the direction of Mrs. T. M. Harrison, and "Cul-De-Sac," a tragedy, is directed by Mrs. Pete Clower.

The director of each play reports her individual play in splendid shape for public performance. Members and directors alike believe this will be the Little Theatre's best effort at play production.

Admission will be 10 and 25 cents.

"Rotary is a great movement of business and professional men that attempts to teach them how to get along with each other. I think the day is coming when Paul Harris, Rotary's founder, will be among this country's 10 greatest philosophers.

"We've had philosophy of government, philosophy of art, philosophy of music, philosophy of religion and so forth. But we've never had a philosophy of business. Business is something a lot of us have always thought of as some kind of a skin game.

"Isn't it fine to live in a free country? Isn't it good to know there's no law that tells you which shoe you must put on first in the morning? At least, there wasn't a law like that last week. The Legislature may have passed one in the last day or two; they're in their ninth special session, I believe.

"Like our lives, Rotary is no set of rules nor a set plan of activity. The main thing about Rotary is not attendance or committee work. The main thing is to 'make' Rotarians who understand and like each other. Then those men, once they become Rotarians, in spirit as well as in name, will solve the community's problems.

Certificate holders who will not produce their full allotment this year may list surplus exemption tags with the government for resale at four cents per pound to producers at other points who produce more than their allotments.

Six hundred and seventy cotton farmers in the county have already listed surplus certificates in the pool, and approximately 300 or 400 more are expected to make listings soon, Mr. Jackson said.
