Local man charged with sexual assault

A Big Spring woman reported she was sexually assaulted early Wednesday morning and police took a local man into custody hours later.

Lt. Terry Chamness said officers arrested Timothy Threats, 20, 511 Goliad St., at about 11:30 a.m. Wednesday. He was charged with aggravated sexual assault in connection with the rape of a 34-year-old woman at about 2:26 a.m. Wednesday.

"He had just been recently released from prison and he matched the description of the subject reported," Chamness said. "We arrested him on the information and description (the victim) had given us."

Chamness said the alleged assault occurred in east central Big Spring after a man reportedly broke into the woman's house.

"He totally caught her by surprise," Chamness said. "He came through the front door."

Chamness said the woman was asleep, while her husband and children were sleeping in another part of the house. They apparently did not hear the assault, he said.

The victim was threatened with "deadly force," Chamness said, and received bruises on her neck.

City considers funds requests

By RUTH COCHRAN
City Editor

The City Council reviewed requests for items ranging from police cars to computers Wednesday night and will consider more unfinanced needs tonight during a third consecutive day of budget work sessions.

The council will meet at 5:30 p.m. in terminal building 1106 at the Big Spring McMahon/Wrinkle Airpark to hear more requests to fund items that city officials deem necessary to the city. The council also is expected to decide which requests it will grant. In a Tuesday workshop, the council reviewed a proposed $15.625 operational budget for 1990-91.

In last night's session, Police Chief Joe Cook made requests for 15 patrol cars, radio equipment, a computer, radar units and radio telephones. Cook, who asked the council last year to purchase much of same equipment, said the cars and radios are a matter of citizen and officer safety.

The cars are needed, he said, to replace old and worn patrol units that are not only costly to operate, but also unreliable. Cook said cars have broken down on the way to calls and when officers are transporting prisoners to jail.

Recently, he said, the rear end of one car literally came apart while an officer was patrolling.

"It's got to be evident to everybody that we've got more mileage and more years (on the cars) than the law allows," Cook said. "It's going to come down to an emergency and you're going to have to pass the hat around town."

The council seemed to agree as several members pointed out that the city has not followed an annual

Construction accident kills Big Spring man

A Big Spring man suffocated to death in Midland on Wednesday after a construction ditch collapsed on him.

Solomon Zepeda, 57, 903 N. Goliad, had been working for Big Spring company Cline Construction and Paving.

ing, laying telephone cable for Southwestern Bell in the northeast section of Midland, according to Midland police. He was cleaning dirt out of a ditch in the 3700 block of Lamesa Drive shortly before 4 p.m. when a wall of earth caved in, burying him, according to the police report.

A backhoe operator also working with the company reportedly attempted to dig Zepeda out of the hole immediately, but was unsuccessful.

Police and firefighters were called to the scene and began to dig with heavy machinery and shovels in an attempt to rescue the man. A Midland County justice of the peace said Zepeda died while still buried.

He was pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe when authorities pulled him from the hole at about 4:35 p.m.

Jobe said he has determined that

Hotdogging in Big Spring

Mike Stanek, a "hotdogger" for the Oscar Meyer Weinermobile, was in Big Spring Tuesday afternoon on his way from El Paso to Dallas. The 21-year-old driver is taking a year off between his junior and senior years at college to travel all over the Southwestern United States with the well-known advertising vehicle. Stanek said the giant hotdog generates "miles of smiles" wherever it goes. "You just have to laugh when you look at it," he said.

Oil imports growing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation was more dependent on foreign oil imports in the first six months of 1990 than ever before, the American Petroleum Institute said.

From January to June, the United States got 49.9 percent of its oil from other countries, API said Wednesday. The previous six-month high was 48.8 percent during the first six months of 1977.

In June, the United States imported 52.3 percent of its oil.

The group said the country was relying on imports more because domestic crude oil production had declined and inventories were built up.

Edward Murphy, finance and statistics director of the petroleum group, said the figures signal "worrisome, even potentially ominous trends in the American energy environment."

"This situation is bad and is going to get worse," said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas. "Realistically, we cannot expect to eliminate our trade deficit as long as our dependence on foreign oil is increasing at this rate."

The United States produced 6 percent less oil than it did during the same six months of 1989. About 7.3 million barrels of oil per day were produced from January to June, the lowest level in 29 years.

Without Alaska, oil production from January to June fell to 5.3 million barrels per day, the lowest level in 40 years.

While the country is relying more on oil imports, it is consuming less oil overall. Consumption fell 2.5 percent compared to the same period a year ago, the institute said.

Part of that is due to unusually warm weather nationwide.

Water has residents seeing red

By MICHAEL DUFFY
Staff Writer

A recurring problem for longtime Big Spring residents and city officials — rusty water with its inherent problems — has some newer arrivals here vocally expressing their displeasure.

Bill Williams, 2605 Chanute Drive, who moved here about two years ago, said he observed the running water in his home become a much darker shade of amber about a week ago.

He displayed the rust-colored water that's badly stained his sink, toilet and bathtub.

"It's been a continuing problem for two years, but last Thursday it just became much worse," he said. "If I am going to have to pay for this stuff, I at least want a decent product."

Not satisfied by the answers he received from city hall about correcting the problem, Williams and a neighbor took the offensive this week and began contacting area residents to see what could be done.

On Wednesday night, he spent three hours going door-to-door in an effort to mobilize support to improve conditions.

Williams and other residents are also particularly upset that clothes washed with the water often become stained.

"This is a brand new shirt," Williams said as he pointed to several rust-colored stains on both sides of the cotton athletic fabric.

Patricia Smith, 2614 Ent St., who moved to Big Spring in 1987, said the stains on her children's clothing from the wash water is her primary concern.

"I live alone and I just can't afford to replace them (clothing)," she said.

Houses in the Greenbelt area have been plagued with the water problem, which is staining appliances and is being regarded by many of the residents as unhealthy.

HC faculty survey declared off limits

Copyright, Big Spring Herald
By DEBBIE LINCEUM

Howard College campus climate — described by faculty as repressive, intimidating and punitive during last month's board meeting — has apparently been addressed by a faculty survey.

President Bob Riley has declared the specific results of the survey off limits to the public, however, and has warned faculty members the details are protected by law. Disclosure can lead to legal action, with the threat of imprisonment and fine, he has said.

Riley said he, administrators and board members have identified areas in the faculty-administration relationship that need work, as a result of the survey.

Completed and returned by 53 faculty members, the survey quotes a statement presented by the faculty senate at a recent board meeting. The faculty had appeared at the meeting to protest a change in the faculty load policy.

The statement says, "If you were to ask the HCJCD (Howard County Junior College District) faculty to describe the current climate of our organization, you would hear the words repressive, intimidation, suspicion, fear, punitive, adversarial, lack of trust, loss of credibility, low morale."

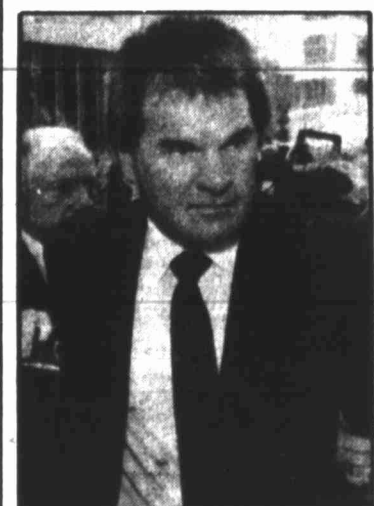

Faculty members were asked to answer "yes" or "no" whether each word fit their idea of the college climate. If they answered yes, they were asked to give specific examples.

The surveys were not signed, and were reportedly destroyed after compilation by Cheri Sparks, assistant to the president, and Faculty Senate President Mel Griffin.

Riley said he would not give specific information about what faculty members wrote on the surveys.

"They are very much personnel-related, and not for public view,"

Doubts raised on alleged suicide

RICHMOND (AP) — Fort Bend County Justice of the Peace Gary Gieck says an autopsy shows no evidence of gunpowder residue on the hands of a country music singer believed to have committed suicide.

Gieck said Wednesday the finding of the incomplete tests backs up his doubts that Isaac Payton Sweat, known as the "King of the Cotton-Eyed Joe," committed suicide.

Sweat, 45, was found dead in the garage of his home June 23 and investigators have not determined whether the death is suicide or murder. He died of a contact gunshot wound through the left temple from a .25-caliber automatic pistol, officers said.

The autopsy does not narrow the scope of the investigation or lead to any conclusions, Sheriff's Sgt. Jerry Clements said.

Authorities are awaiting test results on undisclosed evidence taken from the death scene from the FBI lab in Washington, Clements said.

Man guilty of hijacking

AUSTIN (AP) — A man who admitted trying to hijack an America West jet to Cuba in January faces up to life in federal prison after being found guilty of air piracy and assaulting a flight attendant.

A jury on Wednesday rejected Jose Manuel Gonzalez-Gonzalez's contention that he was insane at the time of the Jan. 16 hijacking, in which flight attendant Stacey Wood was briefly taken hostage.

"If that was my sister or my daughter, I'd want him (Gonzalez-Gonzalez) locked up for as long as possible," said jury foreman Graham Wyllys. The jury deliberated about 2½ hours.

A federal judge is responsible for sentencing. Besides the prison sentence, Gonzalez-Gonzalez faces a maximum fine of $500,000.

U.S. District Judge James Nowlin said sentencing would be in about 30 to 45 days. Benjie Ray, attorney for Gonzalez-Gonzalez, said an appeal is likely.

Judge drops federal charges

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Federal charges have been dismissed against a woman who investigators say was the high priestess of a Mexican drug cult that sacrificed 15 people, but she remains in jail facing state charges, her lawyer says.

Federal Criminal Court Judge Bernardo Tirado dismissed charges of homicide, resisting arrest and causing injuries to others filed against Sara Maria Aldrete Villareal, 25, a former honors student at Texas Southwest College in Brownsville, attorney Horacio Moyar Quintanilla said by telephone Wednesday.

Ms. Aldrete also had faced a fourth federal charge of criminal association. The judge ruled that Ms. Aldrete, who has been jailed since her arrest in May 1989, would not have to face any further penalties.

Officials suspect voting fraud

BEEVILLE (AP) — Two Texas Rangers who specialize in public corruption and voter fraud have been assigned to investigate allegations that campaign workers coerced elderly Hispanic voters into voting in recent elections in Bee County.

Rangers Capt. Jack Dean, who described the men as "sharpshooters for public corruption," said Wednesday Rangers Rudy Rodriguez and Ramiro "Ray" Martinez were expected in Beeville today to review information on the alleged fraud gathered by the Bee County Sheriff's Department and the Beeville Police Department.

VP Quayle stumps for Texas Republicans

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle today concludes a whirlwind fund-raising swing through Texas which he said will help the White House determine how deep GOP roots are in the state.

Quayle, the featured speaker at high-dollar fund-raisers in Austin and San Antonio, also used the visit to fire back at critics of President Bush's son Neil.

Neil Bush has been at the center of controversy over his role in the failure of a Colorado savings and loan, but Quayle said the attacks have been "unfair and unjustifiable."

"The only reason that he is taking a few lumps and the only reason that he is being scrutinized the way he is, is because he's the president's son," Quayle said.

Neil Bush, one of President Bush's four sons, is a former director of Denver-based Silverado Savings & Loan, seized by federal regulators in December 1988. Its failure is expected to cost taxpayers more than $1 billion.

David Beckwith, Quayle's press secretary, said the vice president had taken up the younger Bush's defense while others in the administration skirted the issue because "he feels strongly about it."

Speaking during a stop in San Antonio, Beckwith said Quayle had planned to talk about Neil Bush even if reporters had not asked him.

Thrift regulators say Bush violated conflict-of-interest rules by accepting a loan from a businessman who later received a $900,000 line of credit from Silverado. Bush has denied wrongdoing and will appear at an administrative hearing in September to defend himself.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh said this week he had no indication Neil Bush broke laws in his handling of the bank. Congressional Democrats are seeking an independent counsel to investigate Silverado.

Neil Bush has become a symbol in the burgeoning S&L crisis, expected to cost taxpayers $500 billion.

Quayle ends his visit today in Houston at a Harris County GOP luncheon.

Prior to speaking on behalf of Republican state attorney general nominee J.E. "Buster" Brown, Quayle said, "The attorney general's race ... could be a threshold test of how deep the roots of Republicanism really is in Texas."

Quayle said winning downballot races would be important for the GOP next year when state legislatures begin the process of redistricting.

Brown's opponent in the November general election, state Rep. Dan Morales, D-San Antonio, downplayed the vice president's appearance.

"Vice President Dan Quayle is campaigning for Republican statewide candidates all across the nation. If a Democrat was in the White House, they would probably be doing the same thing for Democrats," said Robin Rorapough, Morales' campaign manager.

Was shooting victim's idea?

DALLAS (AP) — Friends and family members of a 61-year-old polio victim say her fear of being institutionalized may have led her to devise a plan for her death at the hands of her father.

But those who knew Alta Jeanne Drake said they're sure she wanted it that way. Her 94-year-old father opened her iron lung and shot her to death before committing suicide Tuesday.

Ms. Drake's health was failing and her father's cancer was terminal, relatives said. Sometime early Tuesday, retired oilman Ammy Harlin Drake opened the iron lung Jeanne had depended on for 39 years.

Drake shot her twice in the chest, then returned to his lounge chair and shot himself with a .32-caliber revolver, authorities said.

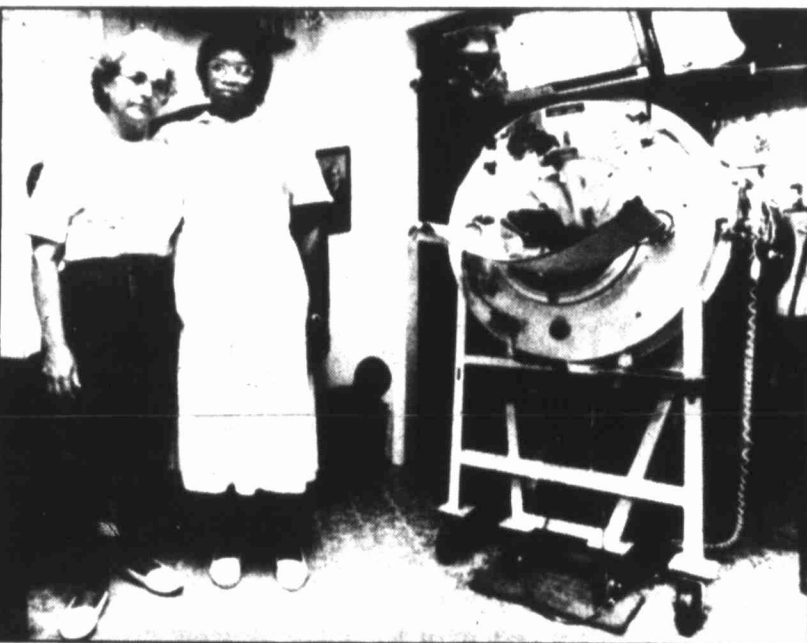

The next morning, family caretaker Helen Jackson found their bodies. A note from Ammy Drake was also found, detailing funeral arrangements.

"The (note) indicated he couldn't take care of her anymore and that there was no one around to take care of her," University Park Police Capt. E.L. Holman said. University Park is a suburb near downtown Dallas.

The Dallas County Medical Examiner's Office on Wednesday ruled the death a homicide-suicide.

"They didn't want to be left one without the other," said longtime family friend and neighbor Elizabeth Spears, 79. "He took care of her so well."

Paralyzed by polio, Ms. Drake had been confined to an iron lung since 1951, one year after she was graduated from Southern Methodist University with majors in history and religion. She had married only six months before.

Her husband left her one week before Christmas 1956. Her mother, who learned she was going blind the same year Alta Jeanne contracted polio, died in 1973.

Ammy Drake slept in a bed three feet from her in case she needed anything during the night, authorities said. He prepared her meals, although two caretakers who lived behind the house could have done it.

Friends and family members said the two watched nature programs on TV, listened to "talking" books and discussed current events.

"You never came to see a sick person, ever. When people would say, 'I get kind of down and blue,' I'd say, 'It's time to go to Jeanne's,'" said Ms. Spears.

Ms. Drake used a mouth stick to type letters and historical articles, and in 1975 was editor of "Responant," an international publication for people with respiratory problems.

Soviets to use horizontal drilling

HOUSTON (AP) — Horizontal drilling is scheduled to make debut in the Soviet Union soon under the guidance of a small local energy company.

Anglo-Suisse, whose 10 employees specialize in international oil exploration projects, has reached an agreement with a Soviet state oil cooperative to develop two massive oil fields in western Siberia.

Gilles Labbe, company president, said Anglo-Suisse will use horizontal drilling both on existing wells and on the 400 additional wells the company plans to drill throughout the 250,000 acres that compose the Tagrinskoye and West Varyeganskoye fields.

Labbe said the 50-50 joint venture will mark the first known Soviet foray into the popular drilling technology, already credited with reviving previously dead oil fields in Texas, Oklahoma and Wyoming, the Houston Chronicle reported today.

Horizontally drilled wells begin as conventional, vertical wells. Once deep underground, they are gradually turned at a 90-degree angle, enabling the drill bit to travel horizontally across hydrocarbon reserves, rather than simply piercing them from above.

The development project is expected to produce as much as 800 million barrels of oil over its 25-year life, officials said.

"There are a tremendous number of prospects here," said Bob Bryngelson, president of MER Engineering, a Houston firm working as a subcontractor on the Anglo-Suisse venture. "It's just like the Middle East, but it's cold." Anglo-Suisse will split the cost of the $100 million project with the Varyegan Oil and Gas Association, a Soviet state oil company.

Varyegan is providing the energy infrastructure for the project, including electricity, pipelines and roadway systems. Anglo-Suisse will contribute the engineering work and the drilling technology. Labbe said the company will begin soliciting investors for the venture later this year.

The costs and the profits will be split by the two partners.

Anglo-Suisse began negotiating terms of the venture in March, after being introduced to the Soviet association through contacts in Burma. A contract was signed last month and work is scheduled to begin next January.

Former rep sentenced for fraud

AUSTIN (AP) — Former state Rep. Charles J. "Chip" Staniswalis today was sentenced to three months in jail after pleading guilty to theft and fraud charges involving falsified travel vouchers.

In a plea bargain agreement with state prosecutors, Staniswalis will also pay a $2,000 fine and $8,976 in restitution to the state.

He also was ordered to perform 400 hours of community service and will be placed on 10 years probation.

"God only knows how sorry I am for doing something so stupid," Staniswalis said as he left a Travis County courtroom.

A Travis County grand jury indicted Staniswalis on charges he collected state money in 1988 for trips he never took.

Staniswalis will begin serving the sentence Monday in the Travis County Jail. While there, he will perform community service as part of a work-release program.

Staniswalis, a Republican former lawmaker from Amarillo, served four terms in the Texas House from 1981-1988.

Coast Guard absolves Exxon in spill

NEW YORK (AP) — The Coast Guard absolved Exxon Corp. of major blame in an oil spill in a New York Harbor waterway last January, but said workers who ignored an alarm added to the extent of the spill.

According to a report released Wednesday a crack in an underwater pipeline caused the Jan. 1 leak of 567,000 gallons of heating oil into the busy ship channel between Staten Island and New Jersey.

The leak was not discovered immediately because a computerized leak detection system failed to shut off the oil flow, and workers at the refinery disregarded alarms that oil was leaking, the report said.

The report also concluded that dredging equipment probably dented the 12-inch underwater pipeline, which runs about 6.7 miles from a refinery to a terminal on the New Jersey side of the Arthur Kill waterway.

Exxon spokesmen did not immediately return calls.

Federal and state grand juries in New Jersey are still investigating the spill. It was the first in a series of mishaps that have plagued the Arthur Kill and the adjacent Kill Van Kull this year, polluting the waters and shorelines, endangering wildlife and disrupting ship traffic.

FTC won't endorse health warnings

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission says health warnings on alcohol advertisements could help curb drinking problems, but it's not endorsing a bill to require the labels.

Janet D. Steiger, FTC chairwoman, told a House panel Wednesday that requiring advertising warnings, like the labels now required on alcohol cans and bottles, "can be an effective component of a multi-faceted effort" against alcohol abuse.

The beer and alcohol industry is waging a strong fight against legislation sponsored by Rep.

Joseph Kennedy, D-Mass., and Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., that would require five rotating health warnings on beer, wine and liquor ads — including television commercials.

Steiger said "the evidence is inconclusive" whether advertising encourages alcohol consumption.

"The decision whether to require the proposed rotating health warnings in alcohol advertisements is a question of public policy that is most appropriately decided by the United States Congress," she said.

Nixon opens presidential library

YORBA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — Richard Nixon returned to his birthplace for the opening today of the presidential library that traces the heights and depths of his career — a collection he hopes will lead people to judge him more kindly.

President Bush and former Presidents Reagan and Ford were expected at the ceremony to lend support to the only president to resign the office.

Jimmy Carter was the only living former president — and the only Democrat among them — not attending the opening. He had a previous commitment, said Carrie Harmon, spokeswoman for the Carter Presidential Center in Atlanta. She would not elaborate.

The 37th president and his wife, Pat, visited the $21 million library Wednesday for the first time and viewed restoration of the house where he was born. A handful of tourists applauded him.

BAGUIO CITY — A man carries the young daughter of a tourist past the rubble of the Hyatt Hotel Wednesday in the northern Philippines city of Baguio. Authorities began evacuating tourists and other from the city.

Death toll nears 500 on Philippines island

BAGUIO, Philippines (AP) — Hopes faded today for hundreds of people missing and believed trapped under rubble three days after a devastating earthquake on the main Philippines island of Luzon. The official death toll neared 500.

Monday's quake, which registered 7.7 on the Richter scale, toppled buildings and triggered landslides across a wide area north of the capital.

Rescuers said there could be 250 more dead in the ruins of a school in Cabanatuan City, two flattened hotels in Baguio and in this city's factory district, where search operations have not begun.

That does not include others who may be in cars, buses and trucks, reported buried in landslides or hurled into ravines elsewhere on Luzon in the temblor.

As many as 30,000 people fled on foot from this mountain resort north of Manila, heading for the lowlands along a highway blocked by landslides, an official said.

All roads to the city had been cut off in the quake and authorities hoped to blast through remaining mudslides and open one today.

Figures compiled by the Office of Civil Defense and the Red Cross showed at least 490 people were killed and 1,000 injured in the quake. Officials said two Americans were among the dead and five were missing.

Manila television stations reported that hundreds of thousands of people in central Luzon lacked electricity, drinking water and food and many were camped along highways for fear of aftershocks.

President Corason Aquino ordered price controls on rice, pork and other commodities in short supply throughout the affected area. But survivors complained of price gouging and food shortages.

Especially hard-hit was Baguio, 10 miles north of Manila, where 1,200 Americans live. Officials said scores of people were believed trapped in eight hotels that were severely damaged.

American rescuers today said they halted search operations at the Nevada Hotel in Baguio after recovering the bodies of Richard Finley, an official of the U.S. Agency for International Development, and the wife of former Education Minister Jaime Laya.

Both had been attending a USAID conference. Officials said about 10 Filipinos working for USAID were missing and feared dead in the hotel.

U.S. officials said an American woman was killed but her name was withheld pending notification of her family.

The rescue effort at the Nevada is over, said John Mitchell, a fireman from Miami, Fla., who was among Americans sent by the U.S. government for the rescue effort. "Nobody's alive in there."

Authorities arrest fugitive student

BEIJING (AP) — Authorities have arrested a fugitive student leader of last year's crushed pro-democracy movement who later set up an underground organization to agitate for reforms, the student's university confirmed today.

A student source, meanwhile, said a second protest leader had been placed in solitary confinement for trying to organize a hunger strike among prisoners.

An official at the Student Affairs Office of the Beijing Economics Institute, contacted by telephone, confirmed unofficial reports that fugitive student Zhai Weimin had been arrested and jailed, but said she had no details. She did not give her name.

Zhai is the fourth Beijing student known to have been arrested without publicity in the past three months, even as the government tries to ease foreign criticism by announcing large prisoner releases.

The other three were students at Beijing University suspected of involvement in underground activities.

The student source, who spoke on condition of anonymity for fear of official punishment, said Zhai was placed in Beijing's Qincheng Prison for political prisoners in May.

Fighting broke out June 4 in a land dispute between members of the Kirghiz and Uzbek ethnic groups. Both are largely Sunni Moslem and speak Turkish.

The unrest has caused damage estimated at $60 million in both more than 400 people missing and possibly dead, the newspaper Rabochaya Tribuna reported. Earlier, Soviet media had reported 800 people were missing in the area.

Soviet authorities have bolstered the contingent of Soviet troops in the region by sending Col. Gen. Yuri Shatalin, commander of Interior Ministry troops, to the region, Tass reported.

A series of violent ethnic disputes have erupted intermittently in the Soviet Union since President Mikhail S. Gorbachev came to power.

Shiites kidnap rival members

SARBA, Lebanon (AP) — Real Shiite Moslem militias battled today with artillery and rockets around mountain villages of south Lebanon for a fourth day and kidnapped each other's members in Beirut.

Fighting between the Iranian-backed fundamentalist Hezbollah, or Party of God, and the Syrian-backed Amal militia wounded at least two women and an Amal militiaman.

That raised the casualty toll from four days of fighting to 64 Shiites killed and 231 wounded in the area southeast of Sidon, the provincial capital and port 25 miles south of Beirut.

Both sides agreed to a midday "mercy cease fire" so casualties could be evacuated, said the International Committee of the Red Cross.

Clashes raged on for several hours after the cease fire was to have taken effect.

Agreement clearing way for constitutional talks

By BARRY RENFREW

Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The South African government and the African National Congress are close to an agreement that would pave the way for constitutional talks on ending white-minority rule, a report said today.

The Star newspaper, citing government officials, said the two sides appeared to be on the verge of resolving problems that had been blocking talks, including an ANC demand for release of political prisoners.

The report, which came a day after ANC leader Nelson Mandela returned from a triumphant 14-nation tour, said Mandela and President F.W. de Klerk were "likely to meet within days."

The Star, an English-language newspaper, has been supportive of de Klerk's reform efforts.

On his arrival at Johannesburg's international airport on Wednesday, Mandela said the world was behind the fight to end apartheid in South Africa and that white-minority government could not last much longer.

"We return home full of hope for the future of our country," Mandela told cheering supporters. "The world is with us in wishing for the speediest resolution to the country's problems."

Government officials said today no date had been set for a meeting between Mandela and de Klerk, but they expected contacts fairly soon.

Mandela said he was optimistic the ANC and the government were moving toward an agreement to end apartheid and give blacks political rights. Having held their first-ever meeting in May, the government and ANC are trying to clear the way for full-scale talks.

"They are one with us in demanding the end of apartheid now," Mandela said. But he ruled out any concessions on the ANC's refusal to end its armed struggle and accept a cease-fire, for which the ANC has set various conditions.

The conditions include the release of hundreds of prisoners the ANC says are political internees.

"The agreement between the government and ourselves is as soon as the government has removed the obstacles to negotiations. ... Then we would be prepared to consider the suspension of hostilities," he told an airport news conference.

Mandela and his aides said the ANC had gained major political support on their six-week tour of North America, Europe and Africa, but they gave few details. Mandela was lauded and idolized in the United States, where vast crowds turned out to cheer him.

The ANC said Mandela's return from neighboring Mozambique was delayed several hours after it received anonymous threats against its leaders and its offices.

ANC officials said they received a message by facsimile mail saying: "July 18, 1990 the last day of freedom for the ANC inside the Republic of South Africa."

The message also claimed there were bombs on Mandela's flight and at the airport. Scores of heavily armed police guarded the airport and searched for bombs, but reported finding nothing.

Victim of a lynching party

Should Neil Bush, the President's son, be held liable for his role in the collapse of Denver's Silverado Banking, Savings & Loan Association? On a civil basis, the answer clearly is yes. He was a member of the thrift's board of directors; the shareholders and depositors deserve a complete accounting of how the institution went under due to bad investments.

But should the Justice Department appoint a special prosecutor to investigate potential violations of federal law? Just as clearly, the answer is no. Neil Bush has not been accused of any crime. And were he to be so accused, there is considerable doubt about the legality of a private citizen's being scrutinized by a special prosecutor appointed under the federal Ethics in Government Act.

Much is being made inside in the Washington beltway about Neil Bush as a "metaphor for the savings and loan scandal." Our guess is that he will turn out to be a footnote by the time this mess is sorted out.

There is no doubt, however, about the political motives of those on Capitol Hill who are baying for young Bush's hide. The howling pack of congressional Democrats is headed by Colorado's Rep. Patricia Schroeder, whose shrill partisan manner has made her a mainstay on the political talk shows emanating from the capital.

Schroeder is less concerned about Neil Bush's culpability in the Silverado case than in dumping the mess at his father's doorstep. This explains her campaign to round up signatures on a letter to Attorney General Dick Thornburgh demanding the appointment of a special prosecutor to investigate the President's son.

The House Democratic leadership is right to be wary of Schroeder's lynching party. There is plenty of bipartisan blame to go around in what has become the nation's largest financial scandal. In fact, the resignations of former House Speaker Jim Wright, Majority Whip Tony Coelho and Banking Committee Chairman Fernand St. Germain, Democrats all, were hastened in large part by their dealings with shady S&L operators.

This is not to suggest that Neil Bush is blameless in the Silverado crackup. He probably had no business accepting a position on the board of directors at age 30, particularly when he had no experience with financial institutions. Nor should he have helped his friend and business associate Kenneth Good secure a $900,000 line of credit from the financially overextended thrift for a risky Argentine oil exploration deal. (In 1984 Good lent Bush $100,000, which was never paid back; he subsequently contributed $100,000 to George Bush's presidential campaign.) Nor should Bush have failed to disclose his business relationship with Bill Walters, a Denver developer, when he voted to approve loans to buy property from him.

But these mistakes in judgment scarcely constitute criminal behavior. Neil Bush's reputation already has been drawn and quartered from coast to coast. Patricia Schroeder and her pack of hounds would do well to back off and let the President's son respond to the $200 million civil suit that may be leveled soon against him, along with Silverado's other directors and officers, by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Telescope for repair

By ART BUCHWALD

When the $1.5 billion Hubble telescope went awry, the powers at NASA immediately called the telescope repairman. Naturally, they got a recording. "This is Ernie, the telescope repairman. I am not in right now. At the sound of the beep leave your name and information about your telescope and I'll get back to you as soon as I can."

Several days later the Hubble manager was still waiting to hear from Ernie. They called him at home.

"I was going to get to you today," Ernie said. "What's the problem?"

The manager answered, "The mirrors on the telescope seem to be showing a spherical aberration."

Ernie said, "Do you have a service contract?"

"No, I don't," replied the manager. "The telescope was under warranty for the first four million miles."

"That's only if the telescope falls into a black hole," Ernie explained. "You're going to have to pay for the repairs yourself."

"All right, but when can you get up there and work on it?"

"I don't have any telescopic mirrors in stock. I'll have to get them from Spokane. The way they're shipping these, it's going to take 14 weeks."

"We can't wait 14 weeks. The publicity is killing us."

Ernie said, "Let me ask you a question. Who put in the mirror in the first place?"

"John Scarsi of Telescopes-R-Us," the manager answered.

"I thought as much," Ernie replied. "He sells every piece of cut-rate space hardware in the book. Ever since NASA has been trying to save money, nothing works. You would have been much better off going to Sears Roebuck."

"We don't need a lecture," the manager said. "All we want is the mirror fixed so we can get some photos on the Ted Koppel show."

"I can probably put a temporary mirror in the telescope, but I can't guarantee what kind of picture you're going to get."

"That would be better than nothing. When can you do it?"

"Tomorrow morning. I have to fix a flawed radio signal antenna on the space station, so I'll be in the neighborhood."

The next day when the manager didn't hear from Ernie he called him. "You promised to fix our mirror today."

Ernie said, "I forgot when I talked to you I had a golf game. I'll get on it tomorrow."

"A promise is a promise," the manager spluttered angrily. "I have a good mind to find another space telescope repairman."

"Good luck. The way NASA is putting these things together you'd be lucky to find one who isn't tied up until 1995."

The manager asked, "Suppose you can't repair it in the sky? Can you lend us a mirror until you fix this one?"

"All my telescopic mirrors are out. I can rent you one for $50 million a month."

"That's outrageous."

"Don't get mad at me. You want to see the Milky Way — I don't," Ernie told him.

"Do I have your word you'll take a look at it tomorrow?" the manager demanded.

"Of course, you do," Ernie said.

"A licensed repairman never lies."

Bishop poorly leads flock

By JESSE TREVINO

The case against abortion clinic director Rachel Vargas of Corpus Christi is more a case against its Catholic bishop, Rene Gracida. That is the easy answer to the controversy that has erupted after Gracida, notorious within Catholic circles for his conservative and often provocative ways, proclaimed that Vargas was excommunicated, or separated, from the church of her birth.

But, of course, it is not that easy — especially if you're Catholic on the one hand but refuse to support the imposition of church or government decisions on women.

Despite the difficulty of this dilemma, many Catholics do not pay enough attention to the responsibility bishops have in this matter. Before they are policemen, they are allegedly pastors of their flock. One cannot dismiss Gracida's responsibility in this case.

One suspects Gracida and the church have not done their job if Vargas, who considers herself Catholic, only goes to church sporadically. The church's responsibility is to instruct its flock before it has to herd them back into the fold with threats of eternal damnation.

Indeed, Gracida and Vargas have never met. Gracida would have no way of knowing Vargas was the clinic's director and a Catholic if she had not publicly proclaimed herself a pro-choice Catholic. Only after her public statements did Gracida reprimand her. A second letter cautioned her as well, but not once did the bishop seek to counsel her personally.

The U.S. Constitution should not pay for the church's failings. By seeking to deny Vargas her God-given conscience and force her to submit to the church's view, Gracida — and other bishops like him — raise the specter that individual conscience and rights must be sacrificed.

Is there no middle ground? There usually isn't in a battle of absolutes that involves what one extreme calls sin and the other only a matter of individual rights.

Jesse Trevino

The issue is fraught with implications, as everyone knows. But as the abortion debate has grown more emotional, all matter of distinctions have been lost, among them the possibility that some Catholics might be able to separate in good conscience the morality of abortion from a woman's right to choose. In this highly personal debate, lost is the responsibility the bishop should have exercised.

Gracida's move, following the statements made by John Cardinal O'Connor of New York on the danger Catholic public officials face who support abortion, carries the debate one step further, without church guidance on the issue: to what limit does responsibility for abortion extend to other actors in this debate? One would think that the moral responsibility for an abortion rests on the woman who opts to have one, and does not rest on the doctor or the abortion clinic director, who handles administrative affairs. Does it rest on public officials who vote public funds to support those clinics? Does it extend to editors who endorse State Treasurer Ann Richards for governor, knowing she is an avowed supporter of choice? This is a profound dilemma for many Catholics who oppose abortion but have to make choices. And matters are not helped that Gracida has hidden behind the walls of the diocesan mansion off stately Ocean Drive in Corpus Christi, in direct abdication of his pastoral role.

So much of what the church does in the matter of birth control effect so many, especially poor Catholics, many of them belonging to the Latino community. A third person, Elvia Bustamante, has been threatened by Gracida.

The first was Eduardo Aquino, an obstetrician who performed abortions.

Gracida's moves should trouble all Catholics. The issue should be left to the woman and her doctors not because it absolves everyone else from responsibility, but because the matter of choice lies in two realms, which the church, even with all its powers over people who have grown up as Catholic, cannot invade: the responsibility each person bears for his or her actions and the inability of the Church to override personal liberty as provided by the U.S. Constitution.

The two should not conflict if the Church instructed its flock well. Having instructed its members well on the issue, then the Church should surrender its role and not trespass into public policy nor individual conscience.

Many Catholics personally opposed to abortion but unwilling to dictate to others draw the line at public policy. A great difference exists between the private action of an individual and his or her relationship with God and how other people see those acts. How, for example, would Gracida react if in the near future, as it is expected, the so-called French pill makes its way into the United States? The French pill aborts a fetus but in a different way: in the privacy of her own household a woman may, in the near future, adopt a method of abortion over which the bishops and the anti-abortion lobby will have not one ounce of control.

In this private setting, the moral responsibility of a woman will have to suffice. In this private meeting between God and woman, Gracida should be present in the mind of the woman — but only if he has done his job.

Many Catholics cannot support him automatically when he has done only half his job and depends on cruel exclusion to do the rest of it — all the while bringing into question the personal and constitutional rights of everyone.

Oh well, isn't love grand?

Around The Rim

Love — isn't it wonderful

By TIM APPEL
Staff Writer

It has been said that love is the most complex of human emotions. I know that it certainly makes for the most bizarre wire stories.

Over the course of two days, two Associated Press stories have cropped up in the Herald computer, both (somewhat) dealing with love, but as far apart as the planet Pluto is to the Jimmy Hoffa seats at Giants Stadium.

The first story deals with some nut on his wedding anniversary. As a present for his wife, he took diamonds and rubies from jewelry she had received as a teen, and with these precious baubles he had an exquisite ring made for her.

Sounds good so far, eh? However, this kook decided that when giving it to his beloved, the ring would look real cute if attached to several helium-filled balloons.

Need I say more? And off it went, sailing into the horizon. The frantic husband quickly publicized his plight, only to see it pay off in mixed results. A farmer in a nearby town found the balloons in a field. But the ring was nowhere to be seen.

As of last reports, the couple were attempting to hire a psychic in order to locate the missing present. And unfortunately, the story said that the couple would not tell the value of the ring.

And speaking of the love connection, the next day's menu of stories contained this oddity.

An 81-year-old Baptist minister who, one would think, would preach and uphold traditional family values, plans to divorce his 27th wife and marry her 15-year-old sister.

Reading further, the story states that the 15-year-old is currently living in poverty in the Philippines, as her older sister probably did. The minister, "Scotty" Wolfe, eventually wants to bring the whole family over to the United States, perhaps by marrying them one at a time.

Plus, he wants the 15-year-old, named Luealla, to be in the states so that by the time he dies, his current, soon-to-be former, wife will have somebody in the states that she knows.

Is this guy running for sainthood or not?

I highly doubt it. In order to raise money for his future wife to get here, he wants his current wife, Daisy, to pose nude for Playboy magazine. Needless to say, she has declined to do so — the heartless wench.

Wolfe also says he enjoys the company of younger ladies.

"They don't gripe, they're just so wonderful, and I'm training and teaching them life," says Wolfe.

Do the authorities know of this man?

And despite his record for marital bliss, Wolfe claims he is not the "love-em-and-leave-em" type.

"I marry 'em for keeps," says Wolfe. And the minister that performs his wedding ceremony must snicker at the phrase "till death do you part."

Now I realize that ministers are human too. I've drank a few beers with ministers. I've watched hockey games with ministers (though I tempered my language when yelling at the officials). I even know of ministers that have gotten divorces.

But is this not to the point of being insane, or what? Does this guy have a form letter wedding invitation, with only the spot for the bride's name being blank?

Oh well, isn't love grand?

States battle garbage gap

By MARIO CRISTALDI
Herald Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The small town of Center Point, Ind., once had a modest dump that handled no more than two truckloads of garbage a day from about 250 local residents.

But last year, out-of-state investors turned the quiet dump into a bustling landfill that has accepted some 6,000 tractor-trailer loads of trash estimated to total 240 million pounds.

"Center Point does not want to be the dumping ground for other states' trash," Sen. Dan Coats, R-Ind., told the Senate Subcommittee on Environmental Protection at a hearing Wednesday on interstate waste disposal.

The contentious issue has prompted a civil war of sorts, with harsh criticisms being heaped on such states as New York and New Jersey for the mountains of garbage they "export" to neighbors with more landfill capacity. Rural and urban areas within the same states are also clashing.

In Center Point, angry citizens have held a year-long vigil outside the landfill, copying down license numbers of entering trucks.

"We're tired of truckloads and trainloads of trash pouring into Indiana," Coats said. "We're simply creating state warfare here."

Other senators from "import" states are equally frustrated, saying they are trying to dig out from under their own garbage woes while being buried in out-of-state trash.

"We used to call Ohio 'the heart of it all,'" said Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, a member of the environment panel. "But now some people are calling it 'the dump of it all.'"

Metzenbaum conceded that garbage disposal is a national issue that states need to work on together — but he said some states are being unfairly burdened.

"Something is dreadfully wrong when the dumping is in only one direction, from New Jersey and New York to Ohio and elsewhere," Metzenbaum said.

Senators and others who testified at the hearing said the garbage problem is difficult to put a lid on for a number of reasons:

America's garbage output has increased in recent years, with today's "throwaway society" generating about 180 million tons of garbage a year — about four pounds per person every week.

America's garbage output has increased in recent years, with today's "throwaway society" generating about 180 million tons of garbage a year — about four pounds per person every week.

Two-thirds of the nation's landfills have closed since the 1970s, and many others are at or near capacity.

It has become very difficult to get permits for new landfills because of stiff public opposition commonly referred to as the NIMBY syndrome — "not in my back yard."

Indiana Sen. Coats has proposed legislation to allow states to ban garbage imports or raise their landfill fees. But courts have generally held such restrictions unconstitutional because they hinder interstate commerce.

Export-state lawmakers also strongly oppose the curbs and say they should at least be given time to make other provisions.

"The question really comes down to whether we're going to draw walls around our states," said New Jersey Gov. Jim Florio (D), who said his state was a "net importer" of garbage until recently.

"By failing to recognize this is an interstate concern," Florio said the Coats' measure "compounds the problem by allowing each state to determine what it believes is best in for the nation."

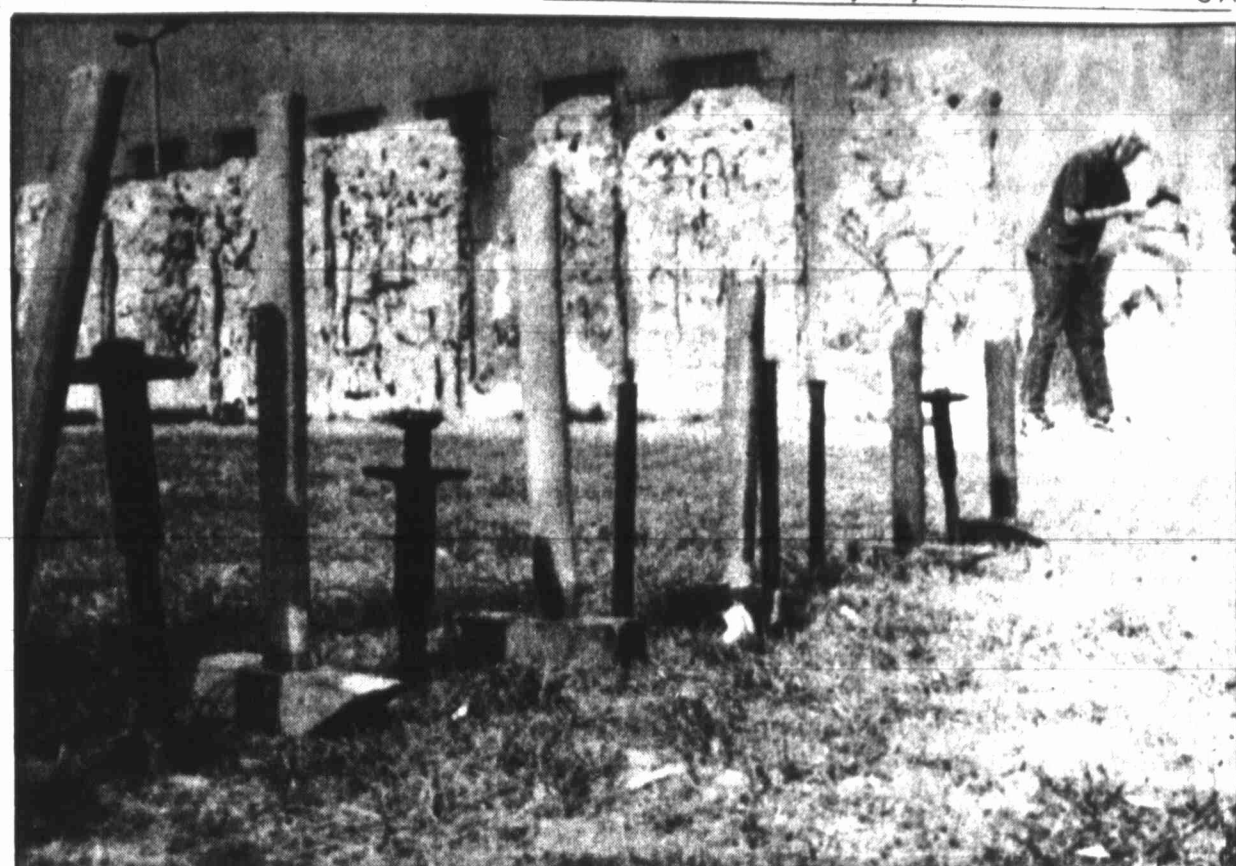

Sen. John Warner, R-Va., argued that "a state should just be allowed to say 'no' to waste from other states."

"The problem is more than just saying 'no,'" countered Sen. John Breaux, D-La.. "The problem is we've closed two-thirds of the landfills in this country, and we're generating 20 percent more waste."

Breaux, whose home state imports more solid and hazardous waste than it exports, has introduced legislation that would require states to come up with waste management plans. States would be given congressional authority to forbid any waste disposal that did not conform to their plans.

A National Governors' Association report released Wednesday urged a broad response that includes a strong emphasis on states' responsibility to manage their own waste.

"Unless we sharply curtail the waste we produce, and recognize that our waste is our problem and not somebody else's, we will continue to bury our waste management responsibilities along with our trash," warned Utah Gov. Norman Bangertner (R).

Ghost hunter to check out restaurant

WAXAHACHIE (AP) — A restaurant that its owners claim is haunted will be inspected later this month by a veteran ghost hunter.

Ghost hunter Larry Kuehn will inspect the Catfish Plantation restaurant in this Ellis County town south of Dallas on July 21.

Some say the business is haunted by three ghosts, and the restaurant's business has been increased by those curious about the supernatural.

One ghost is believed to be a man who moves around, creating cold spots. Another ghost reportedly is a woman in white who stays near a bay window. The third is a woman who "does a lot of throwing and door slamming," said Melissa Baker, who owns the restaurant with her husband, Tom Baker.

"We've had tips levitate off the table and menus fly across the room," Mrs. Baker said.

The ghosts seem to be friendly, Mrs. Baker said, and one of several ghost hunters who have visited the business captured a glowing apparition on infrared film.

FTC will not take sides on ad issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission declined Wednesday to endorse health warnings on all alcohol advertising — including TV ads — but said such labels could help curb alcohol abuse.

FTC Chairwoman Janet D. Steiger said her agency wouldn't take sides in the fight over the advertising health warnings. The "evidence is inconclusive" about whether beer, wine and liquor ads encourage alcohol consumption, she said.

However, Steiger told a House panel that requiring advertising warnings, such as the labels already required on alcohol cans and bottles, "can be an effective component of a multifaceted effort" against alcohol abuse.

The alcohol industry is waging a strong fight against legislation sponsored by Rep. Joseph Kennedy, D-Mass., and Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., that would require five rotating health warnings on beer, wine and liquor ads.

The warnings would include messages that drinking during pregnancy may cause birth defects, that drinking and driving is dangerous, that drinking may become addictive and that it's illegal to buy alcohol for people younger than 21.

"The decision whether to require the proposed rotating health warnings in alcohol advertisements is a question of public policy that is most appropriately decided by the United States Congress," Steiger told the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on transportation, tourism and hazardous materials.

Kennedy told the panel that beer and other alcoholic beverage ads glamorize drinking and are aimed at young people.

"Beer ads educate Americans, particularly younger Americans, that taking a drink is needed in order to win that race, or make it down the ski slope, or land that account, or score with that new girl or guy," he said.

Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., denounced the beer industry for aiming its advertising directly at young people. He waved a magazine ad for Bud Lite beer featuring the brand's dog "Spuds Mackenzie" wearing sunglasses and a guitar, beneath the headline: "Play that funky music, Spuds boy."

Producers of alcoholic beverages spend more than $2 billion a year on advertising and promotion in the United States, according to FTC figures.

The Beer Institute, launching an offensive against the bill Tuesday, said that requiring the warning labels could prompt beer producers to withdraw their sponsorship of major sporting events and ads that underwrite sports television coverage.

Play's characters are fun, familiar

By C.A. APPEL
Special to the Herald

"Oh, heartbreak, oh misery — oh shut up!" shout the collected cast members plus the audience when the too-good-to-be-true hero of "Calamity on the Colorado" beams fate's latest bitter blow.

This summer's melodrama is no exception to past summers' successes: The nasty moustached villain sneers an evil laugh as the sweet young thing sighs for her true love to come rescue her, accompanied by his ever-faithful sidekick and a slew of outrageous characters from every stereotype in the book.

So audiences, bring your blankets or stadium seats to sit on and plenty of change to buy popcorn to pelt the bad guys, and be prepared to have an enjoyable evening at the Comanche Trail Park amphitheatre this weekend.

In case of rain, Smith suggests that you bring an umbrella along since "the show will go on" as the old saying goes.

With such farflung locales as Austin, Washington D.C. and a fictional small town in West Texas, "Calamity" focuses on the evil manipulations of Snathely Snakecheese, played with much finesse by Jeffrey Harper. He and his evil Dick-Tracy-cloned partner, Gloria Halfman (Joyce Stewart) want the price of dairy products to go up to please their backers.

A humanitarian veterinarian has invented a process that allows cows to eat almost anything and still give milk, hence prices have plummeted. There is nothing for our villains to do but spread filthy lies and otherwise bad press on the man in order to save the industry.

However, small-town publisher and lieutenant governor Troy Blazier (Denny Conner) will have nothing to do with such a plan. Our hero meets and falls in love with the good vet's daughter, Wandalou Welby (Ra'Chele Phillips).

Her chaperone, Mammy Van Doren (Dee Dee Phillips), meets and falls in love with our hero's best friend, Kent Chance, played with much tongue in cheek humor by Keith Toomire.

They will meet with foulplay from our villains (of course) and be threatened with utter ruin until they can fight their way out of Snakecheese's slimey grasp (of course) and save the day after a riotous chase scene (of course). Originality is not the strong point of melodrama, but bad jokes, great sight gags and unbelievably silly supporting characters are.

A frito of a bandito, Taco Villa, played with great timing by Kyle Toomire, steals every scene he is in even without the pistol.

Melba Foxbody (Randi Smith) as proprietress of "Moanin' Melba's" gets a little help from two otherwise respectable members of the community, Margaret Lloyd and Mary Thomas, as her assistant call girls, Cher and Cher Alike.

Sen. Dip Jackson and his associate Henry Kissinheiny (De-Wayne Woodall and Adolph Labbe) demonstrate that Washington is indeed full of honest men with both integrity and briefcases full of red tape. (They also watch and enjoy Saturday morning superheroes.)

T. Pott Dome (James Meeks) and Miz Janie B. (Rhonda Meeks) keep things running smoothly at the governor's mansion. (Thank goodness the governor isn't there to mess things up.)

What more enjoyable way is there than to spend a balmy summer evening supporting the arts and Big Spring Community Theatre?

Proceeds from the sale of popcorn and other concessions will benefit the Humane Society. Producer/director Greg Smith hopes that the Big Spring Community Theatre will find enough support to present a musical later this fall.

"Calamity on the Colorado" begins at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday nights, $4.00 admission for adults. Raincoats may not be needed, but a good sense of humor will be.

Londoners list books they think are best

LONDON (AP) — So many books in the world. So what shall we read?

Three British bookmen and 15 collaborators have produced a list of 2,500 books they consider are the best in the English language.

"That's a lot of titles, but if you start young enough, we think you could get through it. You could read a book a week if you wanted to," said Brian Last, one of the three editors of "An English Library" from Gower Publishing Co.

Their book contains 15 categories of books, from fiction to reference, and cites 11 books of the Bible in the Old Testament and seven in the New Testament.

Charles Dickens' novels and William Shakespeare's plays mingle with the poems of the present poet laureate of England, Ted Hughes, and modern American novels such as Ken Kesey's "One Flew over the Cuckoo's Nest."

The new book is based on "An English Library" by the late Frank Seymour Smith, a librarian whose choice ran to more than 5,000 books in 1963, none of them by a living author.

"Our changes take account of more modern tastes," said Last in an interview. "We wanted to remodel Smith, put in contemporary writers and add new sections like world literature in English which takes account of important authors in Australia, Canada, India and Africa."

Last, 39, is managing editor of Scholar Press, a Gower subsidiary. He and co-editors Nigel Farrow, 50, chairman of Gower, and Vernon Pratt, a researcher at Lancaster University who is in his 40s, say they compiled their list with the single aim of extending people's enjoyment of reading.

"We all write, teach or publish books for a living but read them for enjoyment," Farrow said.

Smith put asterisks against his personal choices in what he called the "exhilarating wealth of genius in English books."

The editors of the new edition have not done the same but at the request of The Associated Press, Last and Farrow (Pratt was unavailable) selected their top books in each category. Here they are, with the original publication dates:

• English and American Fiction: Charles Dickens, "Little Dorrit" 1855-57. F. Scott Fitzgerald, "The Great Gatsby" 1925.

• World literature in English: the poems of Wole Soyinka, 1960s onwards.

• Children's literature: Lewis Carroll, "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland" 1865.

• Poetry: William Butler Yeats, 1890s onwards.

• Drama: William Shakespeare, "King Lear" 1605.

• Biography: James Boswell, "The Life of Samuel Johnson" 1791.

• Autobiography: Robert Graves, "Goodbye to All That" 1929.

• Essays and other prose writings: George Orwell, "Inside the Whale" 1940.

• Travel: Freya Stark, "The Journey's Echo" 1964.

• Literary criticism: Samuel Johnson, "The Lives of the Poets" 1781.

• History: David Thomson, "Europe Since Napoleon" 1957.

• Philosophy: John Stuart Mill, "On Liberty" 1859.

• The Bible: The Old Testament Book of the Prophet Isaiah. About the 8th century B.C.

• Fine arts: E.H. Gombrich, "The Story of Art" 1950.

• Reference: "The Oxford Companion to English Literature," 5th edition edited by Margaret Drabble 1985.

"There was some argument over the American novel, and 'Gatsby' was challenged by 'Huckleberry Finn' (Mark Twain)," said Last.

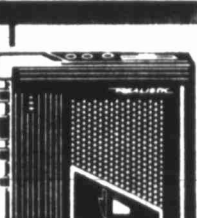

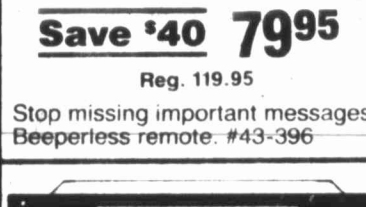

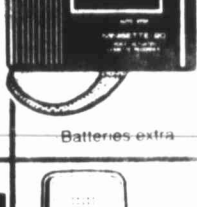

"There was a problem with the poetry as we felt that (Geoffrey) Chaucer, (Philip) Larkin, (Thomas) Hardy and (Andrew) Marvell had a right to the top spot but we agreed that Yeats had the edge.

"It was enormously difficult to choose a play of Shakespeare as all his plays should really be there, and on another day we might have picked 'Othello.'"

The editors' final advice: "If you don't like something, don't plow through it. Reading isn't competition, it's enjoyment. The classic you don't like is in our book because it is a classic."

"An English Library" costs $25.50. It is available in the United States from Barbara Church at Gower Publishing, Old Post Road, Brookline, Vt. 05036.

Coahoma FFA members attend 62nd annual State Convention

By CLARA JUSTICE

FFA members from Coahoma traveled to Lubbock recently to attend the 62nd annual State Convention. According to Jason Grigg, chapter reporter, more than 5,000 people attended the convention held July 10-13, including Coahoma chapter members, Katie Cobb, Jason Grigg, Cory Anderson, Sam Justiss, and Ag instructor Wayne Ivey.

Keynote speaker was Donnell Brown, national Future Farmers of America president, Throckmorton. Donnell's speech was interrupted by a standing ovation during comments about his position concerning flag burning.

Other activities included an award ceremony in which two chapter members were honored, Mandi Walling received the Lone Star Farmer Degree, the highest degree given to high school students, and Coley Dobbs was the recipient of a $600 scholarship from Production Credit Association. Members also attended leadership workshops.

Pam, are headed for Six Flags this weekend. The group held a car wash and a bake sale to earn money for the trip. They will hold a garage sale in August to raise funds for a camp out and are accepting donations at the church.

Motorcycle trip

Rick and Rhonda Nelson have returned from a motorcycle trip that included a visit with Rhonda's grandmother, Mary Womack, a resident of the Lutheran Sunset Home, Clifton, and a two-night camp out at Steele Creek Park on Lake Whitney. They enjoyed a visit with a local family in the park who explained to them the area they were camped in had been under 13 feet of water during the floods in late spring. According to Rhonda, they were camped 15 feet above the existing water line at the time. She said she noticed the absence of small creatures, ants and mosquitoes but had not noticed the logs, branches and debris lodged in the tree tops until they were pointed out by the local family. She described the area as awesome.

Youth return from camp

Several young members of the Coahoma Church of Christ have returned from Pine Spring Camp near Cloudcroft, N.M., where they enjoyed a week of christian fellowship and fun. It rained the entire week but did not dampen their spirits, they hiked, had a mud slide event, skits, and a banquet. Attending from Coahoma were: Jay Bingham, Bobby Nelson, Jennifer Sullivan, Brandy Gressett, Shea Ward, and Matt Scroggins. Bobby was crowned "Mud Wrestling Queen" and Jay and Matt received an award for the cleanest cabin.

Class reunion

The graduating class of 1950 and 1951 will host a reunion Friday and Saturday. Special guests will be former teachers Ed and Mamie Robertson, Dale and Cullen Parmer, Pat and Mildred Hogan, Joyce (Bell) Hancock, and Swann Cramer from out of town. Former classmates will be returning from Saudi Arabia, Colorado and other Texas areas to enjoy the two-day event. Friends, families and former teachers are invited to join the classes at the Coahoma cafeteria Saturday 9:30 a.m.

Dog bites the hand that fed it

Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: Two months ago my husband brought home a dog he'd been feeding at the construction site where he works. It was a beautiful male golden retriever, gentle and obedient, even though he was half-starved, filthy and covered with sores. We fed him, bathed him, loved him and kept him in the house at night.

Early one morning, our 9-year-old daughter was sitting on our bedroom floor petting him. She didn't startle him or hurt him — but he suddenly turned on her, biting her on the face, hand and arm! She threw herself at me, screaming and crying. I was half-asleep and the dog was still coming at us, snarling and growling. I threw my daughter to my husband and barred the way. The dog continued to attack me, so I kicked him to keep him away. He bit me on the leg and wouldn't let go.

Thank God my daughter's bites were superficial. We went immediately to the emergency room for tetanus shots and some small bandaging and disinfectants for her. Physically, she is fine. Emotionally, she still has nightmares and is afraid of dogs!

I wasn't so lucky. The bit on my leg was serious, and yesterday, after a month and a half, the final stitches are out. My leg is still very sore. He damaged not only the tissue, but the muscle, and I will always have a big "dip" and scar on my leg.

Abby, we've taken in a lot of animals over the years and never had this happen. I don't want to make people afraid to adopt animals. But I wish someone had reminded us that strange animals can be unpredictable — and therefore very dangerous. If I had thought of it, my daughter would have been much more closely supervised until we all knew this beautiful dog much better. — SHOULD HAVE KNOWN BETTER

DEAR SHOULD HAVE KNOWN BETTER: Don't blame yourself for what happened. You had no way of knowing what trauma the dog might have experienced before it found a home with you.

I would advise anyone considering adopting a stray or abandoned pet to have it examined by a veterinarian for possible medical or behavioral problems that may not be immediately apparent. (A rabies vaccination is a must!) And allow at least one month for the animal to adapt to its new surroundings before completely letting your guard down.

DEAR ABBY: You were off the mark when you stated that you and I pay for the many changes in stamp design. Stamp collecting is big business worldwide, and the millions of stamp collectors request a continuous flow of commemorative stamps to honor famous people, places and important events. Collectors purchase these stamps, which are never used for postage, and the sale of those stamps more than pays for the stamp design, and even makes a profit for the U.S. Postal Service. — MICHAEL J. DIGLIO

DEAR MICHAEL: You're right. And since I published that letter I have learned that thousands of stamp designs are submitted, most of which are rejected. Two recent rejects: A stamp with beer-flavored glue on the back, and a commemorative stamp to honor the first outhouse.

How's that?

Q. What are the statistics on newborn drug addiction?
A. Last year approximately 375,000 babies were born addicted to drugs, most often "crack" cocaine. These "drug babies" are the children of women who abuse drugs during pregnancy, according to a Sen. Lloyd Benson news release.

the cause of death was suffocation, and ruled the death an accident.
"It looks like he suffocated," Jobe said. "He also had massive head injuries from where they hit him with the back hoe, but it looks like he suffocated first."

Zepeda was apparently buried for at least 45 minutes before rescuers could get to him, Jobe said.

"It appears that he had already stopped breathing when they got to him," Jobe said. "Normal functioning (breathing) would have stopped before then."

Lt. Jerry Morris of the Midland Police Department said rescue teams had used heavy machinery and shovels dirt by hand, working more than an hour.

"The (Midland) fire department, police and the company employees were trying to get him out of there," Morris said. "I understand they were using their (company) heavy equipment and then started digging with shovels. We had about four or five (officers) there and I believe the fire department had half a dozen."

An employee of Cline Construction said the company had no information about the accident and would not make a statement.

Funeral arrangements are currently pending at Myers and Smith Funeral Home in Big Spring.

he said.

"Both I and the faculty felt morale was low," Riley said. "All this goes back to the faculty load policy. They (faculty members) apparently felt the administration had been intimidating."

"Out of the wide array of information (provided by faculty members in the survey), I have identified six areas that need work."

He said those areas are: the communication process; organizational perceptions and misperceptions; policy concerns; job security; off-campus programs; and administrative style and intent.

Riley said he will meet with all departments to discuss the problem, and will use information gathered to formulate his "President's Plan," a yearly report on the Underground water testing scheduled

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

Testing and information gathering on possible underground water contamination in the county will begin next month, according to a soil and water conservation official.

Johnny Oswald, state field representative for the Howard County Soil and Water Conservation District, told district board members at a meeting Tuesday that they have known of possible pesticide pollution problems between here and Lubbock "for some time now."

A non-point source pollution program being implemented by the district will attempt to identify pollution areas while they can still be pinned to particular sources. When pollution occurs over a long period of time, contaminated areas will overlap, causing the sources to be undetectable, he said.

"We will go and identify what the problem is and whether it's point or non-point," Oswald said. "If it is a problem, (we will) get education out on how to correct the problem."

"We will try to gather as much information as we can from other agencies that have done tests and we will do some of our own."

Underground water testing done in Howard County includes studies conducted in the Knott area by the Texas Department of Agriculture, the Martin County Underground Water Conservation District, the Texas Railroad Commission and the Texas Water Commission.

An eight-county TDA study performed in 1988 found that of 21 wells tested between Knott and the county line, 15 contained unsafe levels of the cancer-causing agent arsenic. Another contained unsafe levels of the cancer-causing agent bromacil.

Testing around Knott and the county line from September through March by the MCUWCD, TRC and the TWC showed that up to a third of 30 wells have unacceptable levels of chloride, a substance found with salt.

"That is a possible concern," Oswald said of the Knott area.

But, he said, the problem probably extends further than that. "Most of the area between here and Lubbock is a possible concern," he said.

MCUWCD Manager Mark Hoelscher, who has conducted water tests upon request for a number of individuals in Howard County in addition to those from around Knott, said Tuesday that results show there could be at least one other pollution problem in Howard County. "I am aware of one around Luther," he said.

Oswald said that work done by underground water districts provides valuable information on pollution. "I'd say underground water districts are very helpful in identifying (problems)," he said.

bathtub created by the water are also a problem, according to Smith.

She did say, however, that a relative recently gave her an industrial-strength cleaner called "Pretty Potty," that cut through the rust stains.

"But it returns the next day," Smith sighed.

For Pam Smith (no relation to Patricia), 2606 Ent. St., who along with her husband and young daughter moved to Big Spring from Tuscola (near Abilene) in January, the red water problem "has been awful."

She displayed a severely stained inside dishwasher door, and dark stains in the bathroom fixtures. The entire inside of the toilet is dark red and the water resembles thick paint.

"These stains have occurred just since we moved here," Smith said, pointing to a discolored scrub brush. "I've scrubbed and scrubbed, but it's useless."

For Public Works Director Tom Decell, the rusty water problem has been a continuing headache, and there are no all-encompassing solutions immediately available.

Decell said city crews worked until 6 p.m. Wednesday — and are performing the same task today — on a process called pipe pigging.

"With that we insert a foam plug into the water system which breaks up the crustation in the lines and allows a stronger flow of water," he said.

A more constant water flow helps dilute the red tint, the public works director said.

Although residents of the Kapehart addition are the primary victims of the red water scourge, Decell said it is a citywide problem.

He added that the occupancy rate in the addition is down — as it is throughout Big Spring — a condition that results in reduced water flow and darker-colored water.

Decell informed the city council at Tuesday night's budget workshop that pipe pigging "is not the panacea that will solve all our problems."

The public works director also said he has been working with a firm conducting a computer analysis of the problem and is working on reconfiguration of valves — along with closely monitoring the Ph balance of the water.

Decell said if the current methods prove unsuccessful, the city will begin replacing pipe on Randolph Boulevard.

Although optimistic about the corrective measures being implemented, the public works director is acutely aware that elimination of the problem will require a great deal of money plan for the so-called "fleet program" because the newest unit is five years old. Councilman Tim Blackshear said the city is forced to replace so many cars at once because previous councils have not funded replacements.

"When I came on the council they said pay now or pay later," said Councilwoman Pat DeAnda. "This is later. Much later."

"I think it's a necessary expenditure that we're going to have to face," said Councilman Chuck Condray. "I think it will be more cost effective."

According to department estimates, 15 new cars will cost about $210,000. Another 15 cars in the fleet will need to be replaced next year, Cook said, allowing the city to consistently replace from five to seven cars each year.

Cook said the city might be able to save money by adding its 15 cars to the 41 patrol units the Odessa Police Department plans to buy, in increase purchasing power.

The city also will need to purchase 15 light bars and switches for the new patrol units, at an estimated cost of $6,900.

Cook also requested the council approve the purchase of a mainframe, in-house computer. According to department estimates, the current computer, purchased in 1984, is outdated and cannot be expanded or changed.

"The system will be completely filled up in another four to five months," said Sgt. Oscar Everett of the computer's memory banks.

Everett also told the council that maintenance on the current system will cost the city $54,000 over the next six years. A new computer system will cost from $42,000 to $50,000, including maintenance,

Local groups request funds

HERALD STAFF REPORT

Four groups asked the City Council for funding Wednesday night, led by the Convention and Visitors Bureau's request for 100 percent of the motel tax.

The occupancy tax, expected to generate revenues of $156,000 in 1990-91, also funds the Dora Roberts Community Center, the Municipal Auditorium, the Heritage Museum and the Potton House. The proposed budget had allotted $18,000 to the visitor's bureau, while the community center was to receive $71,000, the auditorium $22,000, the museum $12,000 and the Potton House almost $3,000.

Linda Roger, director of the bureau, said some of those groups could receive supplemental monies through fund raisers. She said from $20,000 to $30,000 could be raised in the community to pay for renovations at the community center. The other groups, she said, could make requests for funds from the visitor's bureau.

"We subsidize them to some extent right now," Roger said. "If we were in control of 100 percent... we would still be allocating like the city is doing."

over that same period, he said.

The police department's third request was for 25 mobile radio units and 14 portable radios with extended microphones. The expected cost is $24,100.

"These radios are our life line," Cook said. "(And they) have proven not to be reliable."

made a plea to the council for $15,000. Franklin said the group, which she said has made great strides in revitalizing the downtown, may go under without some help.

"I'm here to tell you that without your support it's a very good possibility that Big Spring Main Street, Inc., can no longer function," she said. "I'm asking for the support and a joint effort."

The council previously funded the downtown group, but did not fund it during the past year.

Other requests were:
• Rape Crisis and Victim Services for $10,000, a $4,000 increase. Director Lisa Brooks said one full-time and one part-time case worker are trying to juggle 455 clients of violent crimes, and the increase is needed to help pay for a new case worker, as well as utilities.

• Heritage Museum for $22,000. The museum is requesting its previous allotment of $12,000 plus $10,000 more so that it can take over care of the Potton House. Mayor Max Green said the museum would like to open the house for tours six days a week from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. The landmark house currently is staffed by volunteers and is not open for regular tours.

Cook said some officers use a portable radio plugged into a charger while patrolling. When the officer leaves his car, he removes the unit from the charger and uses it as a hand-held radio, Cook said.

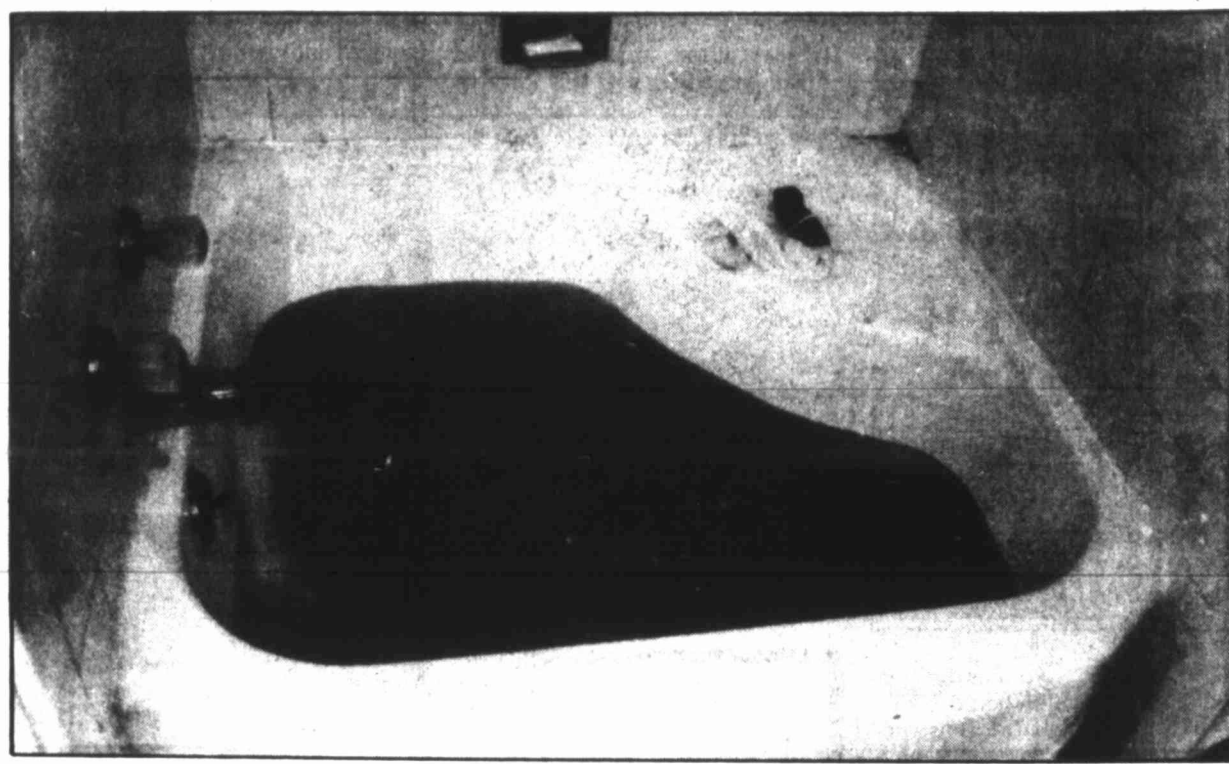

The radios don't stand up to the use, he said, and sometimes they don't work.

Representatives with the Freedom of Information Act differed with Riley's interpretation Wednesday and encouraged pursuit of the results based on the anonymity of the survey. The Big Spring Herald has filed formal requests for the results of the survey.

"Items that are personnel in nature and are confidential cannot be spelled out in public," Riley said. "That's all I told them. They can make all the comments they want (about the survey), but they cannot breach that law."

When asked whether he thought faculty could have misinterpreted his memo, Riley said that was possible.

"Whether they may have misunderstood what I meant, I don't know," Riley said. "There are protections built into the law."

time.

"Certainly no one likes to come home, turn on the faucet and have red water come out, or have new clothes stained," he said.

Williams has requested discussion of the red water problem be placed on the agenda of Tuesday's council meeting and is encouraging the public to attend.

He has also scheduled a Monday meeting at his home for persons interested in discussing the problem. It will begin at 7:30 p.m.

"The meeting will be held, come hell or clean water," Williams joked.

Two tied for British Open lead

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland (AP) — Michael Allen of the United States, a true "who's that?" guy on two pro golf tours, tore up the storied Old Course Thursday to tie Greg Norman for the first-round lead in the 119th British Open.

The Road Hole, the notorious 17th at St. Andrews, was making its presence felt on a balmy summer's day by the Scottish seaside, with top golfers such as Seve Ballesteros and Nick Faldo having problems there.

But Allen, winner of just one tournament and ranked way down on both the U.S. and European tour this year, never blinked as he nearly mastered the birthplace of golf for a 6-under par 66. He could have held the lead alone but missed a 4-foot par putt on the final hole.

The 66 matched the round of Norman, the 1986 Open champion who put together a 6-birdie, no-bogey round, and was one in front of Faldo, the two-time Masters champ who holed a fairway chip on the final hole for a birdie.

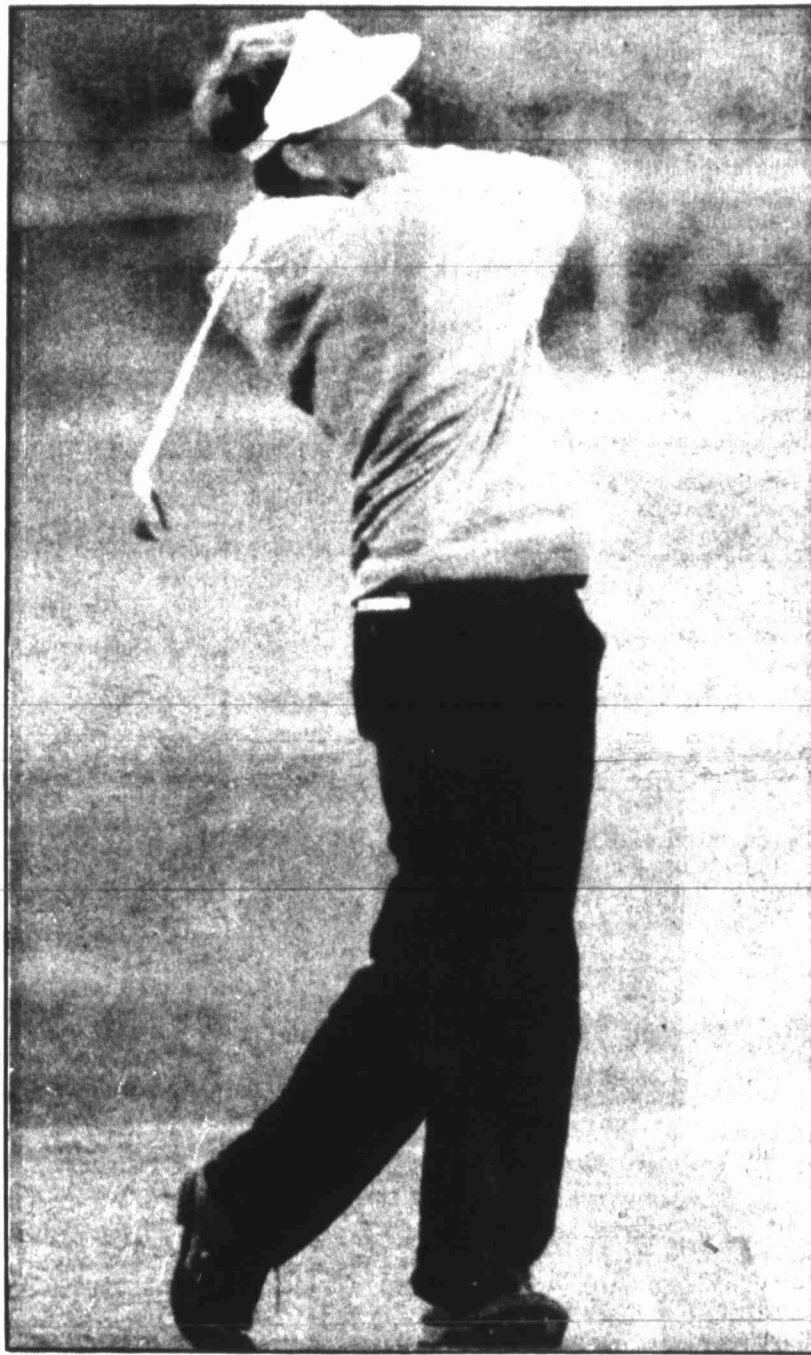

As haze moved in and the wind picked up in late afternoon, another American was making a charge.

Peter Jacobsen, winner of the Bob Hope event on the U.S. tour this year, was 6-under par after a birdie-3 on No. 10. Jacobsen birdied five consecutive holes, from the par-4 third to the par-4 seventh, to put pressure on the leaders.

Allen, a 31-year-old from Phoenix, birdied the par-4 first hole, then strung together seven consecutive 3s, from the seventh to the 13th, to go 6-under par. That string included birdied on Nos. 7, 9, 10, 12 and 13.

Allen then birdied the par-5 14th and had a chance to go to 8-under on the Road Hole. He sent his second shot to within five feet of the flag but barely missed the birdie putt and settled for a par-4.

On the 18th, Allen — ranked 118th in his rookie season on the U.S. tour and 187th on the European money list — had a very makeable putt for the lead. But he missed to the right and had to make a come-backer of about a foot for his lone bogey.

Faldo bogeyed the par-4 17th hole that runs by the most famous road in golf, but then took an eagle-2 at the 18th when he chipped in from the Valley of Sin, the depression that fronts the final green.

"A good break," said Faldo, the bookies' favorite to win a second Open title. "The 2 made the day."

He was at 67, one stroke in front of five veterans — Australians Craig Parry and Ian Baker-Finch, Christy O'Connor Jr., of Ireland, Martin Poxon of England and Ian Woosnam of Wales.

They were in at 4-under 68s, with Poxon getting a birdie-3 at the 17th and O'Connor and Baker-Finch taking bogey-5s there. Parry took a double-bogey 6 at the 17th to fall out of the lead.

Also running into trouble at the Road Hole was 1984 winner Ballesteros. The Spaniard finished at 4-under 68 with a birdie on the final hole.

"I played nicely except for 17," Ballesteros said, a lament that could become repetitive through the four days of the tournament. He took a drop after pulling his second shot left, then played a wedge over a bunker only to have it run down a slope to the back of the green.

With about half the 156-player field finished for the day, the Road Hole was the toughest on the course, yielding just four birdies compared with 33 bogeys and playing at an average of 4.73 strokes.

One of the biggest cheers of the first day was saved for Arnold Palmer. Teeing off for what he insists is his final British Open, Palmer was cheered wildly by the crowd at the first hole and was even-par through the first three.

The uncharacteristic weather gave golfers excellent conditions to tackle the oldest course in the world and Norman showed everyone how to do it.

He opened with a birdie-3 on No. 1, birdied the par-5 fifth to go

2-under, then took off on the back nine.

The Australian, winner of the Open in 1986, birdied the par-4 10th and 12th, the par-5 14th and, after a par-4 at the Road Hole, added a final birdie-3 at the 18th.

"You have to take advantage of every chance you have," Norman said. "Anything under 70 was basically my target. I thought that would be close enough to stay in touch with the leaders, so obviously I'm very pleased with what I did."

Other low scores among the early finishers were 69s for Lee Trevino, Eduardo Romero of Argentina and Greg Turner of New Zealand; and 70s for nine players including Americans Steve Pate, Don Pooley, Mark O'Meara and Mike Reid.

Defending champion Mark Calcavecchia of the United States had a 1-under 71, taking bogey-5 on No. 17, and U.S. Open champ Hale Irwin finished with an even-par 72.

Poxon's best performance in previous Opens was 40th here in 1984, and his best career finish was a third-place tie in Portugal in 1985.

But on a warm, still day on Scotland's east coast, the veteran professional played the Old Course better than any of the other early starters.

"Even a blind pig can sometimes find the occasional acorn," Poxon said. "Law of averages, I guess."

Out in the first group, Poxon got a birdie-3 on the first hole.

"After I got that birdie, I thought, 'With four days of rain now, I might just win this.'"

The 17th generally is regarded as among the toughest, if not the toughest, holes in golf. But Poxon had no problems mastering it on Day 1.

He put his drive in the middle of the fairway, then lofted a 5-iron he described as "better than sex" to within a foot and putted for birdie.

"I birdied it in practice yesterday, too," Poxon said. "But I've had a lot of sixes and sevens at that hole, as well."

Another hit for Rose; five month prison term

CINCINNATI (AP) — Pete Rose, baseball's all-time hits leader, was sentenced to five months in prison today in U.S. District Court on tax charges.

Rose must also serve three months in a halfway house after the prison term and then must perform 1,000 hours of community service with inner-city youths in Cincinnati.

Rose was given the sentence by U.S. District Judge S. Arthur Spiegel for two felony counts of failing to report income from his memorabilia sales, autograph appearances and gambling. Spiegel could have given Rose up to six years in prison and a $500,000 fine.

Today's sentencing was the beginning of the end of an 18-month ordeal for Rose, who went from baseball hero to convicted felon. He blames his troubles on a gambling problem, for which he's getting treatment.

The former Cincinnati Reds manager agreed last Aug. 23 to a lifetime ban from baseball, but denied betting on baseball. A. Bartlett Giamatti, the late baseball commissioner, said he believed Rose had bet on his own team.

Rose, limping slightly from a knee injury suffered last weekend, showed no visible reaction when Spiegel issued the sentence during the 25-minute hearing. The courtroom was filled to capacity.

Rose's wife, Carol, sat behind him. She also showed no reaction. However, a few moments earlier, Rose's voice broke as he told the judge he was sorry for what he had done.

"Your honor, I'd like to say I'm very sorry, very shameful to be here today in front of you," Rose said.

His voice broke once when he recounted for the judge how his wife had to tell their child that "daddy's a jailbird."

"I have no excuses because it's all my fault," Rose said during a two-minute statement before the sentencing.

"I hope no one has to go through what I went through the last year and a half," he said. "I lost my dignity. I lost my self respect ... and I almost lost a lot of dear friends."

The judge also fined Rose $50,000 on the charges and ordered him to pay $100 in court costs.

A few Rose fans in the back of the courtroom applauded briefly when Rose entered.

Spiegel repeatedly referred to Rose's standing as a baseball hero, but said he had to put his Rose's fame aside in considering the proper punishment.

"Foremost, we must recognize that there are two people here: Pete Rose, the living legend, the all-time hit leader and the idol of millions; and Pete Rose, the individual who appears today convicted of two counts of cheating on his taxes," Spiegel said. "Today we are not dealing with the legend."

NFL Notes

By The Associated Press
The Dallas Cowboys, who rarely saw rain while training in California, are getting more than they want in Texas. But to coach Jimmy Johnson, it might be a good omen.

"The rain doesn't bother me," Johnson said. "The most successful season I had at Miami we practiced in a monsoon almost every day. Then we went undefeated."

The Cowboys had previously trained in the dry Pacific winds at Thousand Oaks, Calif., but moved to Austin this year because Johnson thought the heat would get his players into shape. Temperatures are usually in the mid-90s in July in Austin, about 10 degrees more than the average in Thousand Oaks.

Instead of the heat, though, the Cowboys were greeted by rain and cooler temperatures as most of them pulled into town. It had rained for three straight days by the official opening Wednesday, forcing the cancellation of a get-acquainted golf outing.

The Cowboys have two grass practice fields at St. Edward's University. Both will be soggy when two-a-day practices start today.

Johnson said the Cowboys won't be making a big push to win preseason games like they did last year before collapsing in the regular season and finishing with a league-worst 1-15 record.

"We are outwardly trying to

Bone chip retires Easy Goer

NEW YORK (AP) — The gallop had been nothing out of the ordinary for a race horse, a brisk morning workout. But when Easy Goer got back to his barn on this particular morning, trainer Shug McGaughey found trouble.

The thoroughbred's right ankle had filled.

"We took X-rays and sent the pictures to the vets in Kentucky," McGaughey said. "Monday afternoon, they told us even if you give him time and he's sound, he won't be 100 percent."

The diagnosis was a small chip on the inside of Easy Goer's right front sesamoid, the bone just above the ankle. It ended the horse's racing career with McGaughey announcing Wednesday the retirement of the thoroughbred, who won 14 of 20 career starts and earned $4,873,770.

"He's not dead lame," assistant trainer Buzzy Tenney said. "He's not in any real distress but he can't train with the chip."

The vets told McGaughey that even rest would only restore Easy Goer to 90 percent of efficiency. And that's just not enough.

"It's not sensible to bring him back," the trainer said. "I'm disappointed, of course."

The first casualty will be the Aug. 4 Arlington Challenge. Originally billed as a $1 million race that would resume the rivalry between Easy Goer and Sunday Silence, bitter opponents as 3-year-olds in the Triple Crown series and Breeder's Cup, the value of the race drops to $600,000.

"Sunday Silence and Easy Goer were much the best as 3-year-olds last year, and it would have been nice to have seen them run with each other this year," said Charlie Whittingham, trainer of Sunday Silence. "It's sad to see him go out this way."

downplay preseason games," Johnson said. "We are pointing toward the regular-season opener with San Diego."

The Cowboys have never finished first in their 31-year history.

They worked at Pacific University in Forest Grove, Ore., at St. Cloud College in North Platte, Neb., and at Northern Michigan College on the shores of Lake Superior in Marquette, Mich., before former club president Tom Schramm found them in 1959.

"We wanted to get back to the core of our fans in Texas," owner Jerry Jones said. "We wanted them to be able to come out and see us practice."

St. Edward's University is a private liberal arts university founded in 1885 by The Rev. Edward Sorin, who also founded Notre Dame University. It has an enrollment of 2,980 students.

The city of Austin spent $191,000 to construct two practice fields on the St. Edward's campus.

The move could save the Cowboys some $250,000.

Names in the news

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Harry Belafonte was hospitalized after being awakened by chest pains, but tests showed no heart problems, a spokeswoman says.

"They checked his heart and it was very strong and very healthy," said Pat Story. "They think it must have been a muscular spasm from stress or he may have sprained the muscle."

The 61-year-old singer went to the emergency room at Los Gatos Community Hospital on Monday. He was transferred to Good Samaritan Hospital and released after tests.

The scare came after a performance Sunday at the Paul Masson winery in suburban Saratoga.

AIKEN, S.C. (AP) — Soul singer James Brown, serving time for assault, may soon be allowed to live at home while completing a work-release program.

The Godfather of Soul is finishing paperwork for the so-called extended work release. The request is subject to approval by state corrections officials.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Kim Carnes, actresses Donna Dixon, Diana Rigg and Natalie Wood.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An intellectual conversation opens new doors in your mind. Working out at a gym relaxes you. A weekend get-together with relatives can be very enjoyable, especially if you are the host.

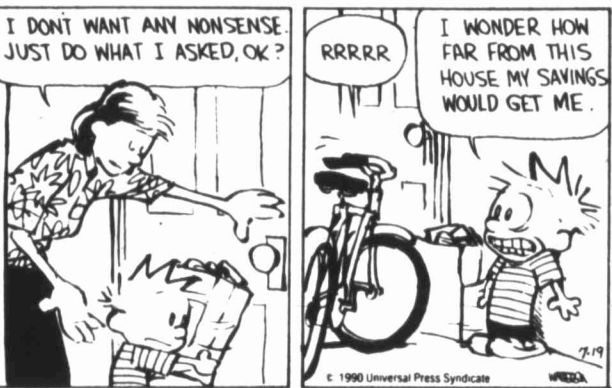

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your personality lets you persuade others to fall in with your plans. Base decisions on facts—especially when money is involved. Be cautious about discussing your travel arrangements.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Use your ability to influence others wisely. Be cautious about making or seeking long-term commitments. A startling event occurs on the home front. Prepare for a possible change in life-style.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Joint finances are helped by a new agreement between you and your partner. Tonight is made for romance, music and candlelight. Show a little less independence in a relationship. Teamwork is vital.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A hidden talent surfaces. Something you acquired years ago has increased in value. Socialize with people in other professions and you will learn more about your own. Express your convictions with feeling.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Concentrate on finishing projects begun a long while ago. Someone you meet on your travels can be very helpful. Your domestic situation improves. Assist a friend who is going through difficult times.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Rely on a friend to fulfill a promise. Distant affairs may require your attention—particularly if money is involved. Use the written and spoken word judiciously. Turn your social life inside-out.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not let your friends influence you unduly. What worked for someone else may not help you at all. Show more tenderness and consideration toward your mate and relatives. Dine out tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A relative or close friend could provide financial backing for a pet project. Be of service to someone who is going through a rough time. Your kindness will be repaid many times over.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A home-based enterprise could prove highly lucrative. Get your ideas on paper and investigate costs. Answer letters promptly. A short trip brings you and your loved ones great pleasure.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Tomorrow could prove quite hectic; tend to personal chores today. Playing a more active role in community affairs is rewarding for a recent retiree. Make important telephone calls.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be flexible when it comes to your personal plans today. Laugh at your own foibles. A friend may be well-meaning but misinformed. Conduct your own investigation. Try your hand at creative writing.

Beeson to represent Lions

Attendance was higher than usual at this week's Noon Lions club meeting Tuesday afternoon. Because of the summer slump, the club usually experiences a slow membership attendance.

Program director Charlie Pinkerton stated that a candidate for Miss Martin County Beauty Pageant representing the club, will be Tommie Beeson.

Mark Hoelscher presented a program on the "Water Supply of Martin County." He showed maps drawn up by several people demonstrating water loss for past ten years. Irrigation is one of the causes of some of the losses.

Officials will continue to make studies of water losses and the problem of water pollution. He concluded the program by asking that groundwater problems or questions be directed to his office so they can be looked into. If anyone has any input that would benefit groundwater problems, come by his office.

County cotton producers beware

Martin County cotton producers must be on the lookout for an abundance of bollworms as a result of the recent much-needed rains.

According to MC Entomologist Victor Lucero, "A high egg and worm count has been spotted. Since the rain, the moths have been attracted to the green cotton plants. Farmers must scout their fields periodically for these pests."

Lucero recommends the use of pesticides that are approved by the Environmental Protection Agency.

"After scouting their fields, the farmer must use some type of pesticides, as an alternative to combat budworms and bollworms. The pesticides that I recommend are Larvan R, Lanniate R and Bollstar R," Lucero said.

"Last week's rain helped the farmers with their crops, but the moisture also helped the bollworm eggs to hatch in these green cotton plants. Irrigated cotton looks better than dry land cotton, but that's the more reason for the cotton farmer to look for signs of these early problems," Lucero said.

Rancher group fighting listing

FORT DAVIS (AP) — A species of pondweed found in the Davis Mountains has rekindled feelings among some West Texans that government intrusion can be dangerous.

Area ranchers and some Boy Scouts leaders are expected to challenge the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service's plans to list a native pondweed species as endangered in a hearing here tonight.

Willie blasts bills

By EVAN RAMSTAD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Farm bills being debated in Congress will drive more family farmers from the land, country music star Willie Nelson charges.

Nelson, organizer of four large benefit concerts called Farm Aid, said 400,000 family farmers left their way of life since the last farm bill in 1985.

"We're not giving our family farmers enough to make a living," Nelson said at a news conference Wednesday before going to Capitol Hill to lobby for changes in the bill. The Senate may take up its version of the farm bill Thursday. Debate in the House is likely to begin next week.

Nelson and Ben Cohen, co-founder of Ben & Jerry's Ice Cream, joined several farm groups in criticizing the bill.

"Farmers don't want handouts or subsidies," Cohen said. "They want a fair price for their products and a rational production policy."

Ben & Jerry's has started carrying the Farm Aid logo on its ice cream cartons to increase support for family farmers, Cohen said. The company was taking a stand "to protect the livelihood of our suppliers and the health of our consumers."

Survivors gather on crash anniversary

By ROGER MUNNIS
Associated Press Writer

SIoux CITY, Iowa — Survivors of United Flight 232 left flowers at the site of the DC-10's cartwheeling crash that killed 112 people a year ago today.

More than 100 of the 184 survivors were expected at a reunion today. Several relatives of the dead also were expected at the reunion. Several passengers arriving late Wednesday sought out Al C. Haynes, the pilot who managed to fly the crippled plane after its flight controls were severed by an engine explosion. The jumbo jet cartwheelled in flames on landing at Sioux Gateway Airport.

Haynes patiently greeted the passengers but saved his remarks for a news conference today.

Survivors and victims' relatives also planned to attend a prayer service near the crash site and meet privately with mental health experts today.

Several survivors and relatives of the victims visited the airport Wednesday. Some left flowers at the perimeter.

Some survivors attending the reunion flew for the first time since the tragedy.

"You could feel the plane heat up with emotion as we came in for a landing," said Becky Larson, who flew with crash survivors on a United Air Lines flight from Denver late Wednesday.

"A lot of people said they hadn't flown since the crash and some of them wouldn't look out the window. But I did. I wanted to see it from the air," said Ms. Larson, a United flight attendant who saw the crash from the ground and was among

Hunt's belongings go on auction Saturday

WESTLAKE (AP) — One of Nelson Bunker Hunt's favorite retreats, a North Texas ranch, is the site for Saturday's public auction of everything from art to wastebaskets.

The former billionaire may have a different estimate of his net worth these days than when Congress was investigating his role in the silver market crash a decade ago.

"My Daddy always told me," the now-bankrupt oilman reportedly drawled to the congressional committee, "that people who know how much they're worth generally aren't worth that much."

The public auction of Bunker Hunt's personal property at the Circle T Ranch in Westlake will include everything from salt-and-pepper shakers and wastebaskets to expensive bronze statues and porcelain figurines.

The items go on display Friday. Carter Pate, the trustee for the bankrupt estate, expects to take in up to $200,000 from the one-day sale.

"The public will really have a rare inside look into the lives of one of America's most interesting families," Pate told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

"But this is one of the most unfortunate parts of being a trustee for a bankrupt estate. This is distasteful for all parties involved."

In New York last month, a 2,500-year-old Greek vase and two ancient silver coins brought record prices at a court-ordered auction of antiques.

FORT WORTH — Among Nelson Bunker Hunt's furniture to be auctioned Saturday is this master bedroom set. The auction will take place at the Circle T Ranch in Westlake.

Bunker Hunt and brother William Herbert Hunt were ordered to sell off possessions to pay their creditors, the biggest of which was the Internal Revenue Service.

Bunker Hunt's family is allowed by Texas bankruptcy law to keep $50,000 worth of possessions from their Dallas home, Kentucky horse farm and the Circle T. Pate said he doesn't expect Hunt to attend the auction Saturday.

However, some of the oilman's children and wealthy friends are expected to purchase items with the intention of returning them once the bankruptcy proceedings are finished, officials said.

Antique dealers said they are excited by the collection of porcelain birds by Edward Marshall Boehm.

The premier piece of the auction may prove to be Hunt's gigantic rocking chair, complete with a cowhide seat and his name burned into the back.

Richards: Williams 'marching backward'

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

GILMER — Democrat Ann Richards' campaign says Republican rival Clayton Williams is "marching backwards" when he jokes that citizens need guns because they may have to march on the government someday.

"It's a bizarre thing to say in a democracy where the ballot box replaced weapons for changing the government some time ago," said Bill Cryer, Ms. Richards' press secretary.

Williams made the joke Wednesday while speaking to a rally of about 250 supporters during an East Texas campaign tour.

Williams said he opposes any further restrictions on guns and accused Ms. Richards of favoring further controls. Her campaign said Williams was distorting her position.

"We may have to march on the government one day if it doesn't straighten out. We need to keep our guns," Williams told the rally at the Upshur County courthouse.

"That's in jest," Williams later told news reporters.

"But you know, that was the reason for that (second U.S. constitutional) amendment for people to bear arms ... in case the government wasn't doing right they could go take it back," he said.

"I'm joking about that, but that

The United States produced 6 percent less oil than it did during the same six months of 1989. About 7.3 million barrels of oil per day were produced from January to June, the lowest level in 29 years.

Without Alaska, oil production from January to June fell to 5.5 million barrels per day, the lowest level in 40 years.

While the country is relying more on oil imports, it is consuming less oil overall. Consumption fell 2.5 percent compared to the same period a year ago, the institute said.

Part of that is due to unusually warm weather nationwide, the institute said. But Murphy added, "This size of this decrease is larger than we would have expected, given the slow but positive growth in the economy and the fact that petroleum product prices remain low relative to the levels of several years ago."

The institute said demand increased for only one oil product, kerosene jet fuel.

German unification will affect U.S. farm exports

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON — The rejoining of East and West Germany will mean some changes for U.S. agricultural exporters, an Agriculture Department trade expert says.

East Germany has imported up to one-fourth of its annual grain needs, said Steven Yoder of the department's Foreign Agricultural Service. Part of that has been U.S. corn and durum wheat for pasta, and sometimes some oilseeds.

But when East Germany is united with West Germany and becomes a part of the European Economic Community, "we're likely to lose those grain markets — regardless of what happens to East German grain production," Yoder said.

Yoder recently visited both East and West Germany for a firsthand look at farm production and markets. He was U.S. agricultural attache in East Germany during 1980-84.

"The other thing we've got to do is establish a strong presence for U.S. farm and food products in the East German marketplace before our competitors get it all sewn up," he said.

Yoder said traders from West Germany and other Western European countries "are moving into the market in a big way with consumer food products."

The West Germans, or course, have a language bond with the East, Yoder noted. Some have lived in East Germany and can go back to renew contacts.

"Sure, the market is not without risk," Yoder said. "There are no guarantees in such an unsettled situation. However, there are a lot of opportunities up for grabs, too."

The main thing, he added, is that U.S. traders "can't sit back and wait for everything relating to new-to-market food products to jell."

Yoder's remarks were in the forthcoming August issue of AgExporter magazine published by the USDA agency.

According to department export records, about $74.5 million worth of U.S. agricultural commodities, mostly grain, were exported to East Germany in calendar 1989. Sales to West Germany, by comparison, were about $1 billion.

Yoder noted that East Germany is a small country with about 16 million people, but "has many needs." West Germany's population is around 61 million.

"For example," he said, "the East German diet has always been largely a meat-and-potatoes-and-bread affair. Milk and milk products, including cheese, also are available, although not up to the quality expected in the West.

"But supplies of fruits and vegetables are much less than desired. And there's a wide-open market for high-value processed products ranging from ketchup to ice cream."

WASHINGTON — Exports of U.S. farm products declined seasonally in May to an estimated $3.26 billion but were still running ahead of a year earlier, according to Agriculture Department analysts.

The May export estimate, which was down $145 million from April, dropped as the result of lower values for dairy products, wheat, rice, grain sorghum, animal feeds, soybeans and cotton.

A monthly report by the department's Economic Research Service said Wednesday that those declines more than offset increases in May for corn, barley, live animals, meat, vegetable oils and horticultural products.

For the first eight months of the fiscal year that began last Oct. 1, however, export values totaled about $28.5 billion, up 2 percent from the comparable period in 1988-89.

Corn exports in May rose to 5.4 million metric tons valued at $667 million. The Soviet Union was the largest market, taking almost 1.5 million tons, with Japan second at 1.2 million tons.

Other major corn markets in May included Mexico, South Korea and Taiwan.

Wheat exports dropped for the second consecutive month to 1.9 million tons valued at about $294 million. Shipments to the Soviet Union declined sharply to 288,000 tons, ranking third behind China and Japan.

Soybean exports in May plummeted 48 percent in volume from April to 621,000 tons valued at $148 million. That was the lowest monthly volume since last September, but officials said soybean shipments "generally drop off in the second half of the fiscal year."

Cotton shipments fell 20 percent in May to 128,000 tons, following a 26 percent drop in April, the report said. However, the export value increased to $1,628 per ton from $1,573 in April.

The increase in the average cotton price was attributed to increased exports of higher-priced long-staple Pima cotton.

"Declining shipments to China, Taiwan, Thailand, Indonesia and the (European Economic Community) more than offset increases to Japan, South Korea, Hong Kong and Egypt," the report said.

sumers," he said. "Family farmers are independent, small businessmen working the soil with respect for the land and neighbors," Cohen said.

David Senter, national director for the American Agriculture Movement, said farmers will be squeezed by the farm bills' freeze on target prices, higher excise taxes and little assistance for rural development, health care, research and education.

He lashed out at Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter's threat to urge a veto of the bill because of its high cost.

"Takeoffs are difficult, landings are difficult, turbulence is especially difficult," he said. "Every once in a while when you are in the clouds for an extended period of time and can't see where you are going you get anxiety attacks."

Michaelson survived the crash with his wife, Lori, and their daughter, Sabrina. Mrs. Michaelson since has campaigned for mandatory child safety seats on commercial flights. Sabrina, then 1, was thrown from her mother's arms in the crash.

Passengers and their families have been arriving all week for the anniversary, said Linda Phillips, who is coordinating the event for the local Chamber of Commerce.

was the principle reason for that part of our constitutional process. It was not for hunting. It was for people, the population, to bear arms and defend themselves against an arbitrary type of government. It was not for hunting. It was for the people to have the right to bear arms to change if they so saw fit."

Cryer said the Republican's joke didn't make much sense.

"I think it is strange coming from a man who wants to be chief executive of the state government," the Richards spokesman said.

Williams said he is raising the gun control issue as an example of the differences between himself and his Democratic opponent.

"She wants to control our guns. I've been a hunter and a fisherman all my life. It's our right," Williams said. "She's for more gun control. I'm against any further gun control."

However, Ms. Richards' spokesman said the only new controls the Democrat favors are some limits on sales of semi-automatic assault weapons.

"She's generally against gun control, anything that would have to do with your normal types of guns for hunting and so forth. She's a dove hunter herself and wants to keep her shotgun," Cryer said.

Detective turns handicap to advantage

By ANN ZIMMERMAN
Dallas Times Herald

DALLAS — In the five years he spent as a New Orleans police officer, Darryl Hughes had seen his share of danger. He won police officer of the month after apprehending a trio of men suspected of committing a string of convenience store holdups. He and his partner brought them to justice after a high-speed chase. When his window wouldn't roll down, Hughes opened the door of his police car and shot out one of the tires on the suspects' Camaro.

In the months before he moved to Dallas to be close to his aging parents, Hughes had made several felony arrests as a motorcycle officer. It was a dangerous denial, working without the safety of a police car. But he never got hurt — until he moved to Dallas.

At 2 a.m. on Jan. 28, 1983, on his way home from working a temporary shift as a security guard at Texas Instruments, Hughes' van was slammed from behind by a 19-year-old drunken driver. It was on the highest point of the bridge at Northwest Highway and Interstate 635. Hughes' van hit the guardrail, flipped in the air and rolled end over end down the hill. Hughes was hospitalized the next four months recovering from a severed spine that left him paralyzed from the waist down and in chronic pain.

Today, after several frustrating years working a desk job at the Dallas Police Department and being turned down for several state investigative jobs, Darryl Hughes is a real-life Ironside, a private detective with a growing practice and a reputation for doggedness, despite the confines of his wheelchair.

"The wheelchair actually helps me as an investigator," says Hughes, sitting in the Oak Lawn office of the Star & Crescent detective agency. "Before I was 6-I and 200 pounds and people would be intimidated, especially when I was a police officer. More people are willing to talk to you when you are in a wheelchair. They don't feel threatened. And if you can get someone to talk, you can get the information you want."

The 37-year-old San Antonio native and father of three has learned to negotiate even the toughest obstacles with his wheelchair. Like stairs, for example. If there is no handicap exit from a building, Hughes has been known to simply bounce down the stairs in his wheelchair. He trained himself to do it after he was denied several state investigator jobs. Though he was never told that his wheelchair was the reason he didn't get hired, he wanted to make sure he was capable of handling any situation.

And in order to get a suspect who lived in a building without an elevator, Hughes, on more than one occasion, has climbed stairs while sitting and pulled the wheelchair behind him.

"Getting around is sometimes a little more difficult," he says. "Sometimes it's a pain if I have to climb stairs. But that's what I get paid to do. You got to get up there some way."

His accident wasn't the only obstacle Hughes had to overcome on his way to becoming a private investigator. After working for almost two years for the Dallas police, he opened a detective agency. But being relatively new in town, and never having been a police officer here, he did not have many of the contacts he needed to build his business. After several months, the agency folded.

In 1986, Hughes was hired by the State Bar of Texas, investigating lawyers suspected of ethical improprieties. But during the three years he worked there, Hughes was beset with medical problems. He developed a diseased colon and underwent major surgery to remove much of his large intestine. After he returned, his wound became infected and he was out for several more weeks. He went back to work and the staph infection reappeared. He resigned because the infection would require several months and several surgeries to heal.

Some of his medical problems Hughes attributes to overwork. "When you're in a wheelchair, you're always having to prove yourself," he says. "There were many days I went to work sick."

He spent from May to August of 1989 in the hospital and underwent three operations. From his hospital bed he began doing some investigative work for lawyers he met while he was with the State Bar.

By then he had made enough contacts in the legal profession that he was convinced it was time to open a practice again. He hung up his shingle in December and now has a client base of 25 lawyers, who have hired him for jobs ranging from investigating divorcing spouses suspected of hiding assets to uncovering evidence that would clear a man suspected of child abuse.

"The determination that man has is something else," says Dallas lawyer Ken Molberg, who has used Hughes on several cases. "He is very thorough and good on follow-up. If there is a missing piece of information that is difficult to obtain, he'll keep going until he gets it."

You have to have a little more strategy when you're in a wheelchair, Hughes explains. When he wanted to find out if a spouse suspected of philandering was at home, so he could trail him, Hughes sat in front of his house and called him from the portable cellular phone he takes everywhere. When the man answered, Hughes talked in an Indian dialect, so the man suspected it was a wrong number.

"The man left a little while later, and I caught him with his little filly," Hughes says.

His trump card as a criminal investigator, he says, "is that people talk to me. And I keep 'em talking. I had a truck driver who hit a car and killed a 2-year-old. When I went to talk to him, he said the insurance company told him not to say anything. I kept thinking, 'How can I get around this dead end?' I told him I understood, but could he at least tell me what he told the police on the accident report. Then I threw in the questions I needed a little at a time."

Only one time since the accident has Hughes gotten down about his fate. Shortly after he went to work for the State Bar, Hughes' boss and a lawyer friend convinced him he had a problem with the prescription drugs he was taking for his chronic pain. Hughes realized they were right and checked into a 30-day drug rehabilitation program at Baylor Hospital.

"I thought to myself, here I went through all these surgeries and now I'm being treated for drug dependency. I could only see my wife a few hours on Thursdays and Sundays and I could hardly see my kids at all. It was the first time I got mad at the driver. And then I got over it. Because through it all, the one thing I've had is a tremendous drive to succeed."

Ag news

Martin County CEA/Ag

The Texas Department of Agriculture and two chemical manufacturers will collect leftover supplies of the banned pesticide chlordimeform at eight sites in late July. Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower announced today.

"This is a free, no-strings-attached collection program to get rid of a banned chemical," Hightower said. "We won't even ask for names and addresses. And if farmers have unopened containers of the pesticide, the manufacturers will pay for them."

Chlordimeform, known by the trade names Galecron and Fundal, was banned by the Environmental Protection Agency in 1989 at the request of its manufacturers. EPA considers it a probable carcinogen. Its use, which was for control of budworms and bollworms in cotton, is no longer legal.

TDA, in cooperation with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, has picked collection sites in Pecos, Lamesa, Veggiebest, Taylor, Burdett, Canyon, El Campo, Robstown and Weslaco.

"Texas cotton farmers with leftover supplies haven't had a safe proper way to dispose of Galecron and Fundal," Hightower said. "Now, thanks to excellent cooperation from Ciba-Geigy and Nor-Am corporations, the pesticide can be returned to the manufacturers, who will handle the disposal."

Hightower said that all chlordimeform should be kept in its original container. If the original container has deteriorated, producers should call John Stone of Ciba-Geigy at 800-334-9481 at least two weeks prior to the collection date.

Producers who bring chlordimeform in unopened containers will be immediately reimbursed by the manufacturers.

No other pesticides should be brought to the collection sites.

The collection program is a cooperative effort of TDA, the Extension Service, the Texas Water Commission, the Texas Association of Cotton Producers Organizations and the two chemical companies.

Hightower asked that producers, particularly those with large quantities, call TDA's Leslie Smith at 800-832-7347 with the amount of chemical and the disposal site they intend to use, to be sure that adequate disposal containers are available.

Eligible Products
Galecron R 4E, Galecron SP, Fundal R 4E, and Fundal SP are the only products that will be accepted at the collection sites for this program. These products must be in their original containers (any package size). Opened and unopened containers will be accepted.

Costs
Once Galecron and Fundal have been received at a designated collection site, Ciba-Geigy Corp. and Nor-Am Chemical Co. (the former chlordimeform manufacturers) will pay all expenses associated with disposal of the material.

Paperwork Requirements
No forms, reports, or paperwork of any kind will be required of persons delivering chlordimeform during the collection program. All necessary documentation will be completed by Ciba-Geigy and Nor-Am at the collection site.

Transportation and Handling Requirements
Persons transporting Galecron or Fundal to a designated collection site should observe normal precaution for handling and transporting agricultural pesticides. No special requirements apply to this collection program.

Important Note: Special packing materials are available for chlordimeform product containers that are leaking or in poor condition. These materials consist of leak-proof packages in which original Galecron or Fundal containers can be placed.

If you have Galecron or Fundal containers of questionable durability, please obtain this "over-pack" material before transporting the product to a collection site. To order the special packaging materials, call: John Stone or JoAnn Tucker, Ciba-Geigy Corp., 1-800-334-9481.

Please allow two weeks for delivery. Do not attempt to transfer any chlordimeform product from its original container to a different container of any kind.

Reimbursement Procedures
Persons who deliver unopened containers of Galecron and Fundal to an authorized collection site on the designated day for that site will be reimbursed for the product by Ciba-Geigy or Nor-Am.

Reimbursement rates are: $75 per gallon for Galecron 4E or Fundal 4E. $18.75 per pound of Galecron SP or Fundal SP. No reimbursement will be made for partially full or opened chlordimeform containers. However, Ciba-Geigy and Nor-Am will bear all responsibility and expense associated with disposal of such product.

Legal Consequences of Non-Participation in Chlordimeform Collection Program

Proper handling of canceled agricultural pesticides is essential for your protection under certain laws. Since Galecron and Fundal were voluntarily canceled by the manufacturers, severe penalties can be imposed for improper handling of the product.

Any further use, as well as any improper storage or disposal of chlordimeform may result in severe civil and criminal penalties under state and federal pesticides and environmental laws. Participation in this voluntary disposal program could save you hundreds of dollars in penalties, clean-up and disposal costs.
