

TEXAS SWELTERS IN HEAT WAVE

"DEAD BANDIT"
REWARD CASE
VENUE SHIFTSPlea of Privilege Is Granted by Judge
Klapproth

Plea of privilege asked by counsel for the Texas Bankers association was sustained by Judge Charles L. Klapproth in 70th judicial district court at Stanton Saturday, and a suit for collection of a $5,000 "dead bandit" reward will be tried in Dallas.

The suit is brought by Sheriff Milt Yater, French Gray, Maurice Zimmerman and Les Thompson of Stanton, plaintiffs alleging Clinton Hare, alleged bank robber of Big Spring, was shot to death in a gun battle June 2, 1932, following an attempted holdup of the First National bank of Stanton.

Plaintiffs allege further that when the alleged bandit became frightened during the attempted holdup he fled in an automobile and was trying to escape after fastening a ranch gate in the face of the sheriff and his posse when the officers burst through the gate and engaged him in fire.

G. W. Dunaway of Midland, attorney for plaintiffs, said in his complaint the bankers association repeatedly refused to pay the reward, ignoring the request of the Stanton men; further reciting that Sheriff Yater and his men fulfilled all necessary requirements to receive the reward, notice of which hung in the Stanton bank at the time of the alleged attempt.

ASSAULT CASE TO GO TO BAT HERE

Venue was moved to Midland county in the case of State vs. Mary Atkins, Stanton man charged by indictment with assault upon Marjorie Usty, 13-year-old orphan, who testified she lived at the Atkins home. The case will be tried here in the November term of court.

District Judge Charles L. Klapproth discharged a 70th judicial district court jury at Stanton at 6 o'clock Saturday afternoon after it reported it could not arrive at a decision. It was reported to be standing at 3 to 4 for conviction. The jury was given the case at 4 o'clock on Thursday afternoon.

G. W. Dunaway of Midland was attorney for the defense, and John B. Little of Big Spring was special prosecutor assisting District Attorney W. R. Smith for the state.

BUSINESS OFFICIALS REPORT TEXAS
EMERGING FROM BUSINESS' LOW EBB
AND THAT FAILURES ARE DECREASING

By JOSEPH L. MYLER
United Press Staff Correspondent

DALLAS, Texas, June 10. (UP).—Local interest in the federal public works program dominated news from all over Texas during the week ending Friday, June 9.

From widely separated points came reports of plans to participate in the $250,000,000 expected to be available to Texas from the $3,300,000,000 provided in the Administration's industrial recovery measure.

EX-SOLDIERS TO HAVE CHANCE TO JOIN CCC ARMY

On June 12 the veterans' administration at Dallas, Texas will begin to select 655 men for enrollment in the Emergency Conservation corps. This work, insofar as the veterans' administration is concerned, is to be completed on or before June 22. Ninety-three per cent of the 655 selected will be World war veterans. The remaining seven per cent will be veterans of other wars.

The 655 men will be selected from 150 counties which includes all the counties assigned to the Dallas regional office and those 26 counties composing the Panhandle, which are for other veterans' administration purposes under the jurisdiction of the Oklahoma City office.

The number of applicants selected from each of the counties will be based on the 1930 census. In other words, a county with a population of 10,000 will be in position to secure enrollment for two veterans provided applications are submitted by those eligible. A county with a population of 49,000 is entitled to the acceptance of 10 applicants, nine of which would be World war and one a veteran of other wars. Those with dependents will be given preference. Those who are accepted will be requested to report to a conveniently located army recruiting station between the dates of June 26 and July 6.

Those wishing to enroll should immediately submit their requests to the regional office of the veterans' administration, Dallas, Texas, according to a letter from Read Johnson, manager, to Maj. Harry Johnson of Midland.

The letter went on to say that those reporting to the army recruiting station who are accepted will be sent to some point designated by the officers of the army. Those applicants who are rejected at the army recruiting station will be returned to the place from which selected, at the expense of the government.

Those veterans selected by the Dallas office should report to the designated station prepared to remain away from home for a period of six months. They will not have an opportunity to return. They should travel light. In other words, they should not carry a lot of extra clothing. They should take toilet articles. Clothing, blankets, etc., will be furnished by the government.

Lions Club Proposes Sponsoring Horse
Racing Program for Benefit on July 4

Recommendation that a benefit horse racing meet be held July fourth under auspices of the Lions club, to defray cost of eye glasses bought for needy children of Midland county, will be made at the club meeting Wednesday by a special committee composed of J. S. Noland, Joe D. Chambers and M. C. Ulmer.

Permission to use the track for the benefit meet was given late Friday by B. W. Floyd, joint owner with Spence Jewell of Cowboy park, a mile south of Midland. Details of races and purses had not been completed, but committees had been named, subject to adoption by the club of the plan for a race meet.

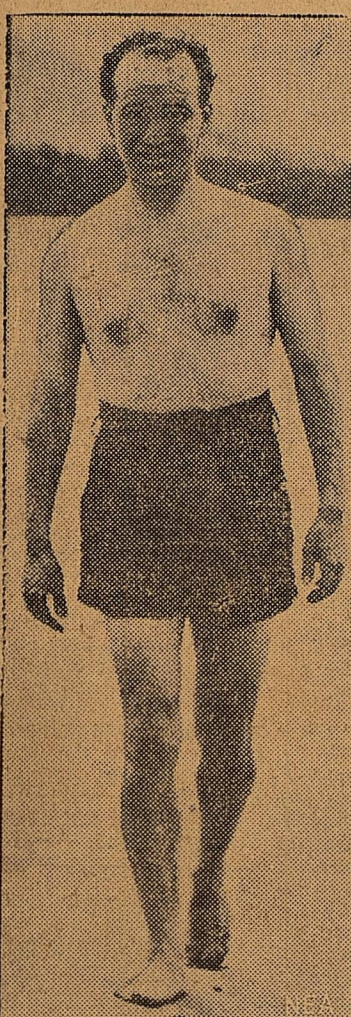

The celebration was planned at a special meeting of the Lions directors several days ago but publicity was withheld until a conference could be held with the park owners.

It was believed likely that five races and donkey polo game would comprise the program. Suggested races included quarter mile, three-eighths and half mile events, a quarter mile yearling race, an eighth mile race for "jelly beans," similar to the special feature used in the races two years ago.

The donkey polo game would be played between the Lions and Rotary clubs. Boys owning donkeys were being listed by committees this week and will be seen within the next few days to see if the event can be staged.

Horse owners had not been solicited, on account of the fact that

FOUR MONTHS
MAY BE USED
FOR OIL SUITGreat Battery Sets for Action in the Trial

AUSTIN, June 10. (UP).—Three, perhaps four, months will be required to try the $17,850,000 anti-trust penalty and ouster suit against major oil companies which has been ordered to begin October 2 in the 98th district court here.

The suit was begun January 4, 1932. Preliminary battles over service on the defendants, weeks of legal arguments over the pleadings and more weeks of taking preliminary testimony have brought the celebrated case near the jury stage.

Now, unless something intervenes, 12 Travis county citizens will decide if the 15 defendant oil companies, the American Petroleum Institute, and the Texas Petroleum Marketers association acted in restraint of trade in a way the Texas law forbids.

Trial was set, tentatively, for May 23. A session of the Texas legislature prevented it. If an attorney is a member of the legislature, he can not be forced into a trial while the legislature is in session. T. H. McGregor, house member from Travis county, is an attorney for one of the defendant oil companies.

The oil company defendants at whom Attorney General James V. Allred levels the accusing finger are Standard Oil company of New York, Standard Oil of New Jersey, Standard Oil of California, Shell Union and Oil corporation, Humble Oil & Refining company, the Texas company, Gulf Refining company, Pasotex Petroleum company, Continental Oil company, Sinclair Refining company, Magnolia Petroleum company, Simms Oil company, Shell Petroleum corporation, Cities Service Oil company and the Texas & Pacific Coal and Oil company.

There are 136 typewritten pages to the petition in which the Texas attorney general arraigns the defendants. Summed up, the charge is that a code of ethics to be used by the oil companies was a cloak under which they sought to drive out independent competitors and to control the marketing of petroleum products.

The plan originated in 1928, the state asserts. The first plan, according to the state's theory, was to get the "pretended approval" of the Federal Trade commission in 1929. Such approval, it is asserted, was beyond the commission's authority.

Using this as a cloak, it is complained, all men representing defendant companies met in Dallas, September 27, 1929, and made the agreement which is now attacked.

This "true agreement," Allred contends, was to fix prices in accordance with posted prices. Another alleged step in the plan was the waging of a war on independent filling stations so as to dispose of their competition. This campaign drove out 90 per cent of the independents, the state asserts.

The code of ethics helped in this, the state contends. Under it former services, discounts and courtesies extended were withdrawn. Independent stations were taken over and the former independent operators made employees of the buying companies.

A combination in restraint of trade under Texas law is punishable by a fine of $50 to $1,500 a day. The suit claims violation continued over 700 days. Maximum fines and forfeitures of charters or permits under which business is conducted in the state also are sought.

More than 50 lawyers will take part in the trial. The state has, besides the attorney general and his assistants, Bernard Martin of Wichita Falls, Travis County Attorney Lryan Blalock, Cofer & Cofer and George Mandell of Austin.

On the other side are the Texas staffs of the oil companies including a former associate justice of the supreme court, a former chairman of the board of regents of the University of Texas, and many of the state's most noted lawyers.

Following submission of the plans to the Lions club Wednesday, committees were expected to call meetings of horse owners to work out definite plans.

Plans were under way for use of welfare labor to put the track and grounds in shape for the community event, although no definite action had been taken Saturday.

An advertisement carried in this issue of The Reporter-Telegram lists minimum rates contractors shall pay the rates being based on an 8 hour working day.

No labor or jobs can be assigned until the contract has been let, and the commissioners court or the chamber of commerce will have nothing to do with assigning the work unless the contractor requests it, it was explained.

Plans and specifications for the road work are available at the office of G. B. Finley, division engineer, Balmorhea, Texas, and the state highway department at Austin.

DALLAS, June 10. (UP).—Texas was facing a sweltering week end today, with the only relief forecast being thundershowers in the extreme east, cloudiness in the Pales-tine area and partly cloudy at Corpus Christi.

The mercury was in the nineties here, near the season record of 93 last Thursday. Dry, hot winds slowed down cotton planting on the west plains, with only half the crop in. In the south plains it was believed the estimated increase in acreage of 200,000 to 300,000 would be reduced by adverse weather.

There are some pretty substantial and prominent business men here who have gone native to the extent that they are eating raw meat. They even ganged up and made some sort of a ritual of eating raw meat the other night.

And when they meet to eat raw meat, they surely can find funny things in the paper.

They will have to admit that such funny things as they found in our paper the other day sometimes really happen.

A PROPHET OF DOOM

It is a little reassuring, somehow, to read that a London business man is going about the British Isles trying to convince people that the world is going to come to an end on June 12. These dire prophecies of doom always appear in troublous times; to hear this one is to realize that our present difficulties will eventually get solved, just as past ones were.

This Londoner is said to be spending $5000 a week on his self-supported mission—he is, it should be added, a wealthy chap. He has made hundreds of converts, many of whom are rapidly giving away all they own in order to be ready for the great day.

It might be possible, of course, to read an unpleasant omen into the fact that the date this man has chosen for the end of all things is also the date on which the world economic conference is to convene. If that conference fails, the prophecy might come uncomfortably close to fulfillment.

Wells Describes Glacier Park

Carveth Wells, explorer and Continental Oil company radio entertainer, who says he saw fish climb trees in Malay and shivered in a snowstorm on the African equator, is scheduled to tell some tall but true stories about Montana and Glacier National park Wednesday night, June 14, over 20 N. B. C. stations.

Montana, according to Wells, would still be a great mountain playground if Glacier park had never existed. But that doesn't mean that the Glacier isn't a real phenomenon, he says. The Glacier Park lakes, for example, are the most beautiful in the world, and the streams that feed them appear to be milky.

The Conoco program may be heard by local listeners who tune in on station WFAA, Dallas, Wednesday night at 8:30 o'clock.

Striking Portrayals of Barrymores in "Rasputin and Empress" at the Yucca

The ill-fated Russian family, Rasputin the Mad Monk, those machinations that wrecked the empire, and the pomp and panoply of the most colorful royal court in the world, all come to life under the magic spell of John, Ethel and Lionel Barrymore in "Rasputin and the Empress," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's spectacle of the fall of the Romanoffs, playing at the Yucca theatre today and Monday.

Here is modern history—the inside of the plots, counterplots, intrigues and orgies in the shadow of a tottering throne. Only slightly fictionalized, it breathes veritable life.

Live Their Roles

John Barrymore as the romantic Prince Chegodieff, victim of Rasputin's plotting and later as nemesis; Ethel Barrymore as the tragic Czarina, blaming herself for the illness of the little son whom she loves more than life; Lionel as the wily Rasputin, ruling an empire through its superstitious monarchs—all fairly live their remarkable roles.

The czar is reincarnated in the perfect makeup and acting of Ralph Morgan. The little Czarievitch lives again in Tad Alexander, and such historic personages are brought to life as the beautiful Princess Natasha, played by the English stage star, Diana Wynyard, the Grand Duke Igor (C. Henry Gordon), and the celebrated court physician who tried in vain to cure the Czarievitch and freedom; equal citizenship Jews to the Teutonic cause by representing Germany as a nation friendly to the Jewish people. At the beginning of the war, after Germany had begun its occupation of Poland, German planes dropped the following proclamations in Yiddish and Hebrew, over the Polish towns: "To the Jews of Poland: "The heroic armies of the great rights, freedom of belief, freedom to work undisturbed in all branches of economic and cultural life in your own spirit. Too long have you suffered under the iron Moscovite yoke. We come to you as friends. The barbaric, alien government is at an end. Do not allow yourselves, as you have many times before, to be fooled by flattering promises. "Did not the Czar in 1905 promise equal rights for Jews, and did he not substantiate that promise with a royal manifesto? But how did he fulfill that promise which he made before the whole world? Remember the daily expulsion of Jewish masses from their settled places! Remember Kishenev, Homel, Bialistok and the many hundreds of other pogroms! Remember the Bells affair when the barbaric government itself spread the terrible lie of ritual murder by Jews! That is how the Czar kept the royal promise he gave under pressure. "It is now your holy duty to gather all your might to cooperate with us for your freedom. All your powers: your young generation, your communities, your organizations must rise as one man to aid in the holy cause. We hope that you will prove your loyalty and understand-

Ninety baby chicks were ordered several days ago and Mrs. Jones has reported that 88 of them are becoming healthy chickens, two having been the victims of a falling tank.

Mr. and Mrs. Anther Oliff are making storage shelves for preserved food. Mrs. Oliff is one of the 4-H pantry demonstrators of the Cotton Plats home demonstration club.

Book-of-the-Month On Library Shelf

The Book-of-the-Month selection for June is now on the rent shelf at the county library. "Little Man, What Now?" by Hans Fallada. "The tenderness, the poignance, the tragedy of this beautifully simple story are not fully revealed until the reader finishes the book, lays it down, and asks himself the question in the title—Little Man, What Now? What now, indeed? Is all this love, sacrifice, courage, humble decency in vain? Are the poor necessities of fire and food and shelter to be impossible for so many? Perhaps Herr Fallada wrote this book to impel the strong and fortunate to ask themselves this question."

The book seems strangely timely, as beautiful things often so oddly are. Its huge success in Germany—where it is said to be the most widely read novel since "All Quiet on the Western Front," shows that it has touched a deep human anxiety." Christopher Morley.

James G. Harper and family of Fort Worth have moved here. Mr. Harper, an insurance man, will be associated with Sparks and Barron.

June and brides have become synonymous—and rightly so, with spring in the air and love in the heart. But we must settle down to a serious subject—namely, what flowers the bride will carry this spring and summer. At present the veils are voluminous, dresses are long of line and fairly simple, though there are many ruchings and trimmings creeping in to adorn the hem and the long train of today.

Due to this cloud of tulle or net enveloping the bride, her bouquet becomes quite an important item and consequently should not be too small or insignificant. At present, bouquets are carried fairly high, the bouquet itself is closely arranged, slightly or indefinitely, as one wishes, resembling a muff.

From the bouquet extends a wide, flat cascade of lilies-of-the-valley, gardenias and an orchid or two interspersed, or any flower one may choose if it is not of too stiff a character.

When using orchids in the major section of the bouquet, you should have your florist arrange them so the cluster may be removed and worn on the traveling suit. This is really a romantic gesture, as well as an economical one.

The stiff calla bouquet is not so popular as it was formerly. The Harems or Easter Lily, combined with the calla lilies in an informal bouquet, is quite smart for the tall bride and really very flattering.

When cost becomes a serious consideration, there is a number of lovely effects that can be achieved in the less costly flowers—white sweet peas, pure white double stock arranged simply; white freesia in a round bouquet effect, white Killarney roses fairly well opened and allowing plenty of their own foliage and stem to show, no other flower being combined with them of course. Then, a great favorite of many brides is the bridal bouquet of white roses, white sweet peas, and lilies-of-the-valley in shower effect.

One of the favorites for the bridesmaid is the small muff. If the maids wear make or brown, they probably will wear hats of the same color, made of petals or tulle. Their muffs should complement their hats and would most likely be of yellow daisies or Joanna Hill roses.

If the arm bouquet is preferred, a pretty suggestion would be yellow snapdragons, yellow calla lilies or the lovely spring mixture with bronze and yellow predominating. If the maid's dresses are blue, there is a number of lovely flowers ranging from light blue and orchid to the deep, lovely blue of the delphinium. Such a bouquet, made entirely in the blue shades, is lovely tied with wide silver ribbon, using one loop and two rather long ends.

The lot of flowers to wear or the garland of flowers to be carried from one bridesmaid to another is new and graceful.

The men of the bridal party wear a white flower in their right lapel, unless in uniform as for a military wedding when no flowers at all are in order.

One of the loveliest bridal ensembles is the all-white. The bridesmaids as well as the bride are in white and carry all-white flowers. Of course, the bride's bouquet is of a different type or arrangement than those of the maids. The maids may carry all-white garlands in a wedding of this type.

A yellow and white bridal party is also lovely and spring-like. It constitutes a refreshing change from the various and varying colors we have used for some time. The head dress, flowers and dresses should all be very soft and elusive-looking in an ensemble of this type.

Misty blue dresses, carrying a spray of deep-colored orchids, are very striking and elegant. The clip-pers and hat should match the orchids.

There are many charming effects too numerous to enumerate, but the present trend is toward combinations of two flowers rather than toward mixtures of many varieties.

CASES WOULD TAKE 20 YEARS

BOSTON (UP).—The Massachusetts Judicial Council estimates that if all the jury cases now pending in superior court actually went to trial it would take 20 years to try them. And meantime, it was pointed out, new cases would be piling up at the rate of 30,000 per year.

WILSON DRY GOODS CO.

We look toward the day when business prospers

T-bone steaks on a million dinner tabs... new sheets for the bedroom... new chintzes for the living room... a million gasoline tanks freshly filled for week-end excursions in the family car...

When everyone has money for these things, business prospers in the Southwest. Telephone wires hum busily with voices. Installers are kept on the run by the demand for new telephones.

But let the nation tighten its belt and go without beef steak. Let it use frayed sheets, and turn the collars on last year's shirts...

During three years of declining business, the telephone company has found what happens when the nation economizes.

For when bales of cotton stand in idle rows in the gloom of Texas warehouses... when oil tank cars rust in endless strings on railroad sidings... when wheat hits a low of 27 cents a bushel...

When these things happen, business stagnates in the Southwest!

Three years of business stagnation have proven a heavy burden on this company. Net revenues have declined to where, in spite of the most rigid economies, they do not pay the cost of the actual dollars that built the telephone system.

Many people realize this. They know that declining telephone usage and declining telephone revenues go hand in hand.

The remedy sometimes suggested to us is this: "Lower the rates, and you will get enough new subscribers to make up for your losses."

But it is not that simple.

Our experience, gained over many years of telephone operation in good times and bad, proves definitely that lower rates would bring back few telephones.

Lower rates would not, for example, keep telephones in use in business houses that have closed their doors.

Lower rates would not keep a telephone working in a vacant cottage, whose tenants have gone to live with relatives. Lower rates would not keep a telephone in the home of a man who has no job and whose savings are gone.

Instead, they would only diminish our present revenue and cause our losses to become still greater. Telephone rates have been lowered in a few places and that has been the experience.

In these times, we feel that our big job is to keep service good. This we have done to the best of our ability. Long distance connections are made, in most cases, while you hold the line. Switchboards and central offices are manned by experienced employees. There has been no slackening in the effort to give the type of good, reliable telephone service our subscribers need and want.

We look hopefully toward the day when, in Texas harbors, cotton will again slide into the dark holds of waiting ships... when smoke again rolls from factory chimneys and the whistle calls a full day shift to work... when the cattle on a thousand ranches begin to look like money... and when the wool and wheat, the hogs and corn, the vegetables and fruits of the Southwest will again move in steady streams to markets and consumers that have been too long without them.

And when, incidentally, the telephone lines of this vast area will once more hum with the torrent of words and messages essential to reawakened business. Then, as now, we will strive to furnish the best possible telephone service at the lowest cost consistent with financial safety.

HOKUS-POKUS MANAGES TO WIN EVEN THOUGH BLACKMANMEN MORE STEADY WITH STICK; PAPOOSES TAKE GAME

Hokus-Pokus, although out-hit, managed to win over Bill Blackman's gas sellers Friday evening in the playground loop. Three errors, while the winners were playing errorless ball, was responsible. Straughan gave up only one clean hit in the first five innings.

Doc Ellis' Papooses won a 12-5 marathon with Magnolia, Brown, right fielder, making three of his club's six vital errors. The Redskins made 11 hits, the Oilmen eight.

Rooving the Reservation

With the Indians

By R. C. Hankins

Golf, the only thing that deprecates above par, may find its way into this column today, inasmuch as the regular conductor, Mr. Jess Rogers, a rabid baseball fan who coined the expression "The elbow causes most trouble for a golfer, particularly if it starts lifting at the clubhouse" is ill from having done an hour's work Friday.

Nowadays, all golfing doctors know that when a patient has a stroke the thing to do is make him count it. Dr. Winston F. Borum, whose degree comes from the school of divinity instead of medicine, says it another way. It's no sin he says to play golf on Sunday, but the way some play is a crime.

M. D. Johnson, having a lot of trouble losing a match to Pat Riley, "Digging" is a good hobby for a middle-aged man, but why does he call it golf?

Frank Day, talking to his son, Bill, "I see where you got 73 in history. What's par for the course?"

Jess, who is familiarly known as "Ironhead," drops in to say when a man bites a dog he's likely at a ball game.

Doc Ellis, Indian skipper and he doesn't have high cheek bones either, says a man here is so dumb he thinks the St. Louis Cardinals are appointed by the pope.

Judging from the way the crowds attend the playground league, the busiest little "sphere of influence" in this town is sewed up in a horse-hide cover.

One fan writes this department, not having the grace to address the note to Mr. Rogers, asking us to print the baseball standings for the Permian basin league upside down, on account of local pride. Wonder if Bill Collins had anything to do with the request?

Bill Blair, back from a revue, says among the makers of one-piece bathing suits the thigh's the limit. Also the only one who feels overdressed in such a suit is chorus girl.

Johnson Phillips says he caught a real fish the other night when fishing with Ben F. Whitefield. The booger was five feet, four inches in its socks, wore Oxford trousers and was soon on speaking terms with the fishermen. It took Phillips and Whitefield and a negro cook standing in a row to tell how long it was.

Midland and Wink indulge in a tennis match here this afternoon on the Neblett courts on West Texas. There's no charge to the public for watching the games, but there's no news in that: no tennis player is satisfied with the net profit.

Incidentally, here's a list of women who play regularly at country club, having obtained some sort of a lease on the court and a franchise for squealing about the time a golfer tries to sink his putt over on nearby No. 9: Mmes. A. E. Horst, S. M. Warren, Offie Walker, J. S. Schow, A. P. Baker, Carl W. Covington and Misses Celeste Hankins, Hester Williams, Virgie Locklar, Laura Jesse and Lucille Cole. About

Several Recent Books Found on Library Shelves

New books on the rent shelf of the county library are:

"Buckaroo," by Eugene Cunningham. "Vern Dederick, sergeant of Captain Tandy's X company, Texas rangers, is assigned the job of cleaning up Ord and Paradise counties, the hide-out of nearly 300 bad men wanted by the state. He clashes chiefly with 'Snake' Stett, brains of the outlaw outfit, 'Pache' Ord, unscrupulous ranchman, and Priscilla Ord, 'Pache's' beautiful daughter. After many setbacks he succeeds in his mission and wins the hand of Priscilla. Fast, exciting and humorous. (Author of "Riders of the Night.")

"The Album," by Mary Roberts Rinehart. "The middle of a bright afternoon—a house full of people—and a helpless old woman killed with an axe. 'It doesn't make sense,' says one of the characters in 'The Album.' When the murder is followed by two others, by the theft of a trunk full of gold, by the revival of an old scandal, and, finally, by a totally unexpected denouement—it may not make sense, but makes a corking good story."

"A Case for Mr. Paul Savoy," by Jackson Gregory. "Another kind of Sherlock Holmes, where the master amateur detective takes up a case which has baffled the San Francisco police, and by deductive reasoning, carried on for a few days in his own office, brings about the detection of the criminal."

"The Pink House," by Louise Platt Houck. "When Roger Westmore's business crashed he committed suicide and left his widow and daughter to face the world alone. For Jocelyn, grief was intensified because her fiancé had recently jilted her. But Jocelyn was resourceful. She bought the 'Pink House,' and, with her mother, started life anew, next door to Philip Van Corland."

"Ranchero," by Stewart Edward White. "In the splendid tradition of the mountain men, Andy Burnett remains the hero and moving spirit of this sequel to 'The Long Rifle.'"

30 members of the Naomi recreational club are in on the broadcast.

Crane comes here today to play the Mexican Colts on the Indian diamond at 2:30. The Indians are has been announced repeatedly, go to Crane. Odeon, a new club, will be here next Sunday.

Midland's Sand Belt club goes to Colorado today. The Kat Klaw will stay home and wait a week before playing in front of a gallery.

CLAIM IS IN BAG

DALLAS (UP).—It was "in the bag" for a Dallas home owner to collect for damage done to his trees and shrubs when a deflated balloon fell in his front yard recently.

For he held possession of the bag—and possession, as all the world knows, is nine points of the law.

When a stunt aerialist, who jumps each Sunday from the balloon in a parachute, asked for the deflated bag, the man in whose yard the bag landed demanded indemnity for his damaged shrubbery.

The police agreed with the home owner.

BABY ACQUIRED ODD TITLE

WICHITA, Kan. (UP).—Peggy Cleone Hale, 17 months old and red-haired, has acquired the title of "Wichita's Youngest Whistler." The baby is more interested in whistling than in acquiring a vocabulary and is learning to "follow tunes."

The soot discharged into the atmosphere of England each year represents three days' coal output of the entire country.

Under water, penguins use their wings as rudders and their feet only as rudders.

The reader senses early in the story a change in Andy; slow, but powerful in its consequences. A new way of life opens for him when he meets a young Californian, Ramon Rivera, in the valley of the Sierras. Andy accepts the new life with the determination to adjust himself to its changing conditions. But he keeps, perhaps inevitably, the individuality and spirit of the mountain men. The 'Long Rifle' finds its true resting place over the fireside of his new home.

"The Green Scamander," by Maude Meagher. "Told with beauty, with irony, and with subtle psychology that brings out fine nuances of character, 'The Green Scamander' is a romance that the most sophisticated reader will enjoy. A great danger threatens Amazonia. The barbarous Greeks, who years before carried off many Amazonian maidens to captivity, are besieging the city of Troy. Foreseeing a disastrous invasion of her own country, Penthesilea, cold, austere Queen of the Amazons, determines to fight with Priam against their common enemy. In the face of insuperable odds she leads her splendid army to the relief of the beleaguered city. The meeting of Penthesilea with the sophisticated Helen of Troy and with Achilles is described with exquisite tenderness. With the restraint, dignity, and swift fatality of a Greek tragedy, the story moves to its dramatic conclusion."

mela Frankau: "A witty entertaining novel about a man and a woman who thought they were cynics and sniffed at the illusion of romantic love. The story is a refreshing study of sophisticated modern people who cannot escape from the human need for old-fashioned romance."

belief, freedom to work undisturbed in all branches of economic and cultural life; of justice.

The Lesson of History
Dean Inge, in a sermon last week at St. Paul's Cathedral in London in which he denounced the Nazi persecution of the Jews, stated: "The Jews have stood by the graves of all their oppressors in turn."

The famous author and thinker, Montesquieu, in the year 1748, wrote in his "Esprit de Lois": "If anyone in days to come should ever dare to say that the people of Europe were uncivilized in the century in which we are now living, you (referring to the Inquisition in Spain) will be cited as proof that they were barbarians."

Mark Twain in 1898 wrote: "The Jew has made a marvelous fight in the world, in all ages, and has done it with his hands tied behind him. The Egyptian, the Babylonian and the Persian rose, filled the planet with sound and splendor, then faded to dream-stuff and passed away; the Greek and the Roman followed, and made a vast noise, and they are gone; other peoples have sprung up and held their torch high for a time, but it burned out, and they sit in twilight now, or have vanished. The Jew saw them all, beat them all, and is now what he always was, exhibiting no decadence, no infirmities of age, no weakening of his parts, no slowing of his energies, no dulling of his alert and aggressive mind."

Spain no longer seeks to drive out her Jewish populace but welcomes back Jewish learning, industry and initiative. And this week word comes from Cairo that Egypt, from which took place the first great Jewish exodus, looks at the persecution of Jews in Germany with different eyes today. For the Egyptian government decided to authorize 200 Jewish doctors and lawyers who have been compelled to leave Germany as the result of recent events to take up their residence and exercise their professions in Egypt.

The testimony of history predicts in advance that what happened to Israel's temporary oppressors or conquerors of the past will be the fate of Hitler Nazism. The Jewish people will be flourishing and enriching the world's progress when Hitlerism will be "preserved" in history's museum side by side with the other "barbarians."

"You come," he said, "I show you," and led the cook in the rear of the tent and opened a slit just wide enough to let Ptomaine peer through. What he saw aroused the cook to quick thought. The sought-for Limey was inside the tent putting on a kangaroo suit.

"A shill, huh?" said Ptomaine.

"De kan-gore-roo already he put five men in de hos-pit-talle. Dey get man to fighta."

Ptomaine rubbed his hands together with lively satisfaction, emitting a grunt of satisfaction. He went quickly back to MacDougal who was still watching the kangaroo, and yelled out to the barker:

"I'll fight your kangaroo, Mister."

The people around the platform turned lively eyes upon the lanky Yank. MacDougal eyed him aghast.

"Are you nuts? That boundin' zoo-will commit mayhem all over you."

"It's a shill," said Ptomaine in a low voice. "The Limey."

He strutted and swaggered up to the entrance to the tent, the crowd surging after, fighting to buy tickets to see a man tackle the ferocious looking beast that had already laid out five men. Ptomaine was taken to a dressing room where he quickly stripped to the waist. MacDougal, of course, acted as his second. Once in the ring, the cook took the acclaim accorded him by the expectant natives in a great big way, bowing, smirking and shaking hands with himself. He was not quite so confident when the kangaroo, in chains, was brought down the aisle and struggled to break its leash to get at him, but when the animal had been dragged into a dressing room he resumed his strut.

"Peace lovin' ain't he," he remarked to MacDougal.

"What do you care? You ain't fightin' it."

"Naw. But did fate play into my hands! Did fate play into my hands!"

To keep the sequence of events straight it now becomes necessary to follow the peeper and the kangaroo made a leap for the Sergeant-Limey was completely outfitted with the kangaroo suit, except for the headpiece. He took a look at the kangaroo and then peeked out through a slit in the tent to the ring and became aware that his adversary was the "pelican"—the Yank with the mammoth nose. The kangaroo made a leap for the Sergeant-Major and was restrained with difficulty by its keeper who chained the animal to a post. With gestures and hurried Italian words he urged the Marine to get into the ring.

The attendant went out into the tent to watch the fight, leaving the Limey alone with the Kangaroo. A look of small cunning crept over the Britisher's face and he detoured cautiously around the animal until he was at its back when he un-snapped the chain. The kangaroo made one bound upto its liberator and landed two teffic swings on his jaw, after which he bounded out of the dressing room, down the aisle to the ring, cheered and applauded by the spectators. The animal made one great bound from the aisle, over the ropes, into the ring, and the eyes of the barker-manager grew big with surprise and fear. He gesticulated frantically to Ptomaine, trying to tell him that it was the real, bone-breaking kangaroo in the ring with him and not the shill. Ptomaine, without having looked as his opponent, thought the manager's display was to inflame the curiosity of the audience, and he made reassuring gestures to the manager and the audience, pointing to the floor triumphantly as much as to say that it was but a matter of a few moments until his opponent would be stretched out on the floor.

"Don't forget and go to leadin' with yer right," cautioned MacDougal.

"Don't worry, Mac. I'll devastate him. I'll devastate him."

The kangaroo, having located its opponent, danced mincingly towards Ptomaine's corner, as MacDougal climbed out of the ring. The cook advanced with jaunty confidence to meet the shill. The kangaroo gave his opponent a tap on the shoulder; Ptomaine replied with a tap to the snout.

"Boy, you're a swell kangaroo," said Ptomaine. "Jeeze, yuh even smell like one."

For reply the kangaroo pushed the cook away and gave him a resounding smack on the chin that staggered him. For the benefit of the audience he managed to summon up a sickly grin.

"Ha, ha. I wasn't lookin' that time," he said. "Come on, big boy, let's see what yuh got."

The kangaroo responded with another blow to Ptomaine's chin that brought him to his knees, reeling. To keep from falling flat he grabbed the kangaroo and went into a clinch. He whispered in the animal's ear:

"Take it easy—take it easy. What do you want to give 'em for ten bucks? A murder?"

The kangaroo wrapped its forelegs about Ptomaine's neck and landed a terrific wallop on the back of his head.

"Lay off, will yuh? Gettin' me mad is liable to bring out the beast in me," warned Ptomaine in a sibilant whisper.

He received another hard sock in the back of his head—so sudden and unexpected that it squashed his nose against the kangaroo's chest. He rubbed his nose and saw blood on the glove.

"Now I am mad! Now I am mad!" he cried, broke away and swung his arm, landing such a powerful blow on the kangaroo's muzzle that the beast was floored. The crowd cheered wildly and Ptomaine looked contemptuously down upon his antagonist.

"Yuh asked for it, and yuh got it."

But yuh couldn't take it. Yuh couldn't take it."

He turned away from the kangaroo and clasped his hands over his head, accepting the applause with great ceremony and an air of braggadocio. But at a sudden roar from the crowd, he turned and saw the kangaroo leaping up and down in a menacing rage. He jumped three feet into the air and lashed the canvas with his tail. For a moment his eyes followed the powerful leaps with horrified amazement, then he realized that he had been fighting the real kangaroo instead of the shill. That realization sent him leaping over the ropes and dashing down the aisle in frenzied haste, pursued by the enraged kangaroo.

CHAPTER IX THE EMPTY DINGHY

As he dashed into the dressing room, Ptomaine bumped into the Limey, planted a long swing to his teeth, and flew on, stopping short against the canvas of the tent. It was fastened tight to the flooring and there was no means of escape in that direction. He turned, saw the Limey rising to his feet just as the kangaroo bounded through the flap, landed a swing on the Sergeant-Major's jaw and leaped on towards Ptomaine. He dodged a blow and fled towards the Limey. The kangaroo, with one powerful bound, was upon them, and then ensued a three-cornered fight that is impossible to describe in detail, so quick were the blows, dodges and feints. The kangaroo was pulled down to the floor and the three rolled out of the dressing room into the aisle of the main tent. The Limey sank his teeth in Ptomaine's nose; the cook twisted the kangaroo's tail, and the latter landed a number of unmerciful blows on the Britisher's back.

The animal, its eyes glowing with rage, managed to get one hind leg planted on Ptomaine's stomach, the other on the trunk of the Limey and with a terrific thrust flung them both far down the aisle, where they continued to fight, the crowd milling around, anxious not to miss one moment of the fracas. Two English sailors started to the Limey's aid.

"Old 'im 'tuff. 'Erry!" they shouted. "We're comin'!"

"Oh, no, yuh haint!" cried MacDougal, jumping on one of the marines and flooring him. As he turned to the second, other sailors, British and American, jumped in to help their friends, and in a moment a general brawl was in progress. The Italians took to cover, while the sailors, shouting, cursing, fighting, fell in heaps on top of Ptomaine and the Sergeant-Major until the original quarrelers were entirely shut from sight.

A police whistle sounded and a voice cried a warning! "The shore patrol!"

MacDougal saw the patrol running through the tent entrance and dug his way frantically thru the heap of struggling sailors on top of his friend.

"Ptomaine! Hey, come out of there! Was callin' me?" he heard the cook's faint voice. Then his head emerged.

"Yeah, come on—cheese it! The shore patrol!"

"Just a second!" cried Ptomaine, and there was an upheaval of the heap on top of him as he squirmed around under them. A moment later, just as the shore patrol reached the mass of struggling sailors, Ptomaine emerged and with his friend started on the run for the tent entrance. Ptomaine threw away something shiny in his hand. It hit a carabinieri! The latter stopped and picked up a pair of bloody extracting forceps. As the two Americans fled from the tent, the Limey came up from the mass of humanity, holding his hand to his mouth.

"ET say—ET say—O-w-w!" he heard through the hand that muffled his voice curiously.

Fog horns wailed, buoy bells boomed the black and menacing sea swished angrily against the sides of the mist-hidden submarine as it put out of the harbor at Taranto at night. Toler and Knowlton stood on the chariot bridge, straining their eyes to pierce the darkness. Their olfing gleamed as the revolving finger of light from a shore lighthouse struck them. Toler snapped on a tiny catch light for a moment, then snapped it off.

"Submerge her," he ordered Knowlton, gruffly.

"Aye, aye, sir." Knowlton stepped to the coming tower hatch and pressed a button. The strongbox and horn gave one wailing outcry. Then he pressed again, and the sound was repeated. From the open hatch he could hear Nelson order: "Flood main ballast. Down rudders."

As the ship began to angle down in a dive, the lookout and Henderson ducked down the hatch to the coming tower. Knowlton followed, and then Toler. Knowlton secured the hatch, overhead while the commander stored away the signal books. Water seethed up over the eyepoints.

"Knowlton," called Toler as the lieutenant was about to descend through the hatch.

"Well?" said Knowlton, turning his head.

Toler appeared to make a strong effort to control his emotion.

"Just couldn't be a man, could you?"

Business Report

ET.

Reports from cotton-growing sections were predominantly cheerful. Victor H. Schoffelmayer, agricultural editor of the Dallas News, and one of the country's leading crop experts, reported the Texas crop made mostly good growth during the week ending Thursday, June 8.

In some dry areas of the north-west and west the crop was about a week behind normal development, but rains in South Texas brought about 75 per cent of the crop to bloom. Some counties in the South Plains region were desperately in need of rain.

About 65 per cent of central Texas cotton was chopped to a stand. Schoffelmayer said, 75 per cent in East Texas and 50 per cent in North Texas.
