Hearing reveals details in Gilkerson abduction

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A Midland police detective detailed the alleged plan to abduct June Gilkerson and sell her to a Mexican prostitution ring for $15,000 today in the first public testimony in the 15-month old case.

U.S. Magistrate Darrell Smith heard the testimony during a hearing on Kenneth Wayne Parker's eligibility for release on bond.

Smith ordered Parker held without bond because of the "danger" he poses to several prosecution witnesses in the case.

In arguments before Smith, U.S. Attorney Wayne Speck described Parker as "a man who does what it takes, does what is needed. Here, he needs to get rid of witnesses."

Parker, 41, is accused of conspiring to kidnap Ms. Gilkerson on Nov. 8, 1986. She has never been located.

Parker was arrested Feb. 4 by FBI agents near the video store in Garland where he worked.

He was indicted on Jan. 28 by a federal grand jury in Midland.

Det. Sgt. B.G. Johnson, who has worked on the case since Ms. Gilkerson disappeared, was called to the stand by Speck and testified about how investigators were led to Parker by his alleged accomplice.

Soon after the abduction, Ms. Gilkerson and David Russell Alderink were linked by evidence of a phone call made to her home, Johnson testified. Alderink initially denied seeing the woman on Nov. 8, but after lawmen discovered he was lying, he admitted participating in the alleged kidnapping with Parker, who he had met at the Midland County Public Library where Parker worked, Johnson said.

Alderink and Parker drove to Austin on Nov. 7, "partied," and then drove back to Midland. Along the way, "He told me they talked about abducting June Gilkerson for money," Johnson testified Alderink told him.

"Kenneth Parker abducted her, and he (Alderink) hasn't seen her since," Johnson said he was told.

Alderink — who pleaded guilty to aggravated kidnapping on Feb. 1 in exchange for a 20-year state prison sentence — said he and Parker talked about selling Gilkerson for money, Johnson testified.

Soviet troops are retreating to defensive positions and dependents are being withdrawn, a solid sign the soldiers will not be far behind, a senior U.S. official said.

In addition, soldiers in the 115,000-man Soviet force are not being replaced when they complete their tours of duty, said the official, who briefed reporters on Shultz's flight to Brussels on condition of anonymity.

Shultz said Monday at the end of two days of talks in Moscow that he did not have "the slightest doubt" the Red Army would depart. And after briefing NATO officials in Brussels today, he reaffirmed his expectation the Soviets would quit Afghanistan.

But he evidently did not get a specific timetable from Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev or Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze.

The garrisoning of Soviet troops and departure of dependents is "solid evidence" the eight-year military intervention in Afghanistan will soon end, the U.S. official said.

On Feb. 8, Gorbachev offered to begin the pullout May 15 if Pakistan and Afghanistan reach a settlement by March 15 in negotiations due to resume in Geneva next week. He said the withdrawal could be achieved within 10 months.

The Soviets have, however, accused Pakistan of obstructing a settlement by insisting an interim coalition government be created in Kabul to prevent the protracted civil strife Islamabad says would otherwise ensue.

Shultz has said such a government could facilitate the troop withdrawal and return of about 3 million refugees from Pakistan. But another senior U.S. official said Washington does not endorse Pakistan's position. Referring to the anticipated withdrawal, the official told reporters: "We wouldn't want to miss the bus. We've been trying to get the Soviets out for years."

Gorbachev has said Moscow would not make the composition of the government it leaves behind a condition of withdrawal.

Shultz stopped at NATO headquarters in Brussels today to brief the Western allies, who were especially interested in the steps taken on arms control.

From Brussseis, Shultz was flying back to Washington for a 26-hour respite before heading for the Middle East try to push Arabs and Israelis into negotiations.

"I don't think many people give me much chance," Shultz said with a smile. But, he added, "Even if the chances are small, it's worthwhile trying."

Also today, Shevardnadze left Moscow for Prague, Czechoslovakia, to brief Warsaw Pact foreign ministers, the Soviet news agency Tass said.

Monday, U.S. and Soviet negotiators were directed to prepare within a month three draft agreements for a treaty to reduce long-range, or strategic, nuclear weapons by 30 percent to 50 percent. Such missiles have a range of more than 3,400 miles.

The drafts will deal with verifying compliance with the cutbacks, disposing the weapons, and exchange of information.

Israelis kill two more Palestinian youths

JERUSALEM (AP) — Two Palestinian children were reported killed by Israeli gunfire today in the occupied West Bank, including a 13-year-old girl believed to have been shot by a Jewish settler as she stood in her doorway.

In the Gaza Strip, two more Arabs were reported to have been buried alive by Israeli soldiers on a beach near the town of Khan Yunis last week, said Israeli lawyer Felicia Langer.

It was the second alleged case of live burial by soldiers. Earlier this month, four Arabs from the West Bank village of Kfar Salem said soldiers used a bulldozer to bury them in mud and sand. They were rescued by local residents.

The army arrested two soldiers in that incident and said more would be detained. The Jerusalem Post reported today that a third soldier who operated the bulldozer had been arrested, but the army would not confirm the report.

In a sworn affidavit on the latest incident, 18-year-old Abdel Ali Massoud said about 14 soldiers buried him and another Arab youth in sand covering their heads at a beach just west of Khan Yunis.

Swaggart to undergo two years of rehabilitation

ALEXANDRIA, La. (AP) — Repentant television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart must stop preaching for three months and undergo two years of rehabilitation, including counseling, church leaders decided after questioning him about his sexual misconduct.

"We accept his confession of specific incidents of a moral failure," Cecil Janway, Louisiana District superintendent of the Assemblies of God said late Monday night. "Based on his detailed confession and the evidence we observed of true humility and repentance, we have offered him rehabilitation."

Janway made the announcement after Swaggart met here for more than 9 hours with the state council of the nation's largest Pentecostal denomination.

The Executive Presbytery of the 2 million-member denomination in Springfield, Mo., can approve or modify the rehabilitation plan, said Everett Stenhouse, assistant general superintendent.

The evangelist, whose Sunday church services are videotaped for distribution in more than 100 countries, will be relieved of his duties as co-pastor of the Family Worship Center in Baton Rouge, Janway said.

Co-pastor Jim Rentz confirmed earlier that he would take over as chief pastor of the church, where Swaggart tearfully confessed his sin Sunday before a crowd of more than 7,500 people.

Swaggart did not describe his misconduct, and the state council urged him not to.

Janway said Swaggart would be counseled and supervised weekly by three members of the Louisiana District Presbytery during the two-year rehabilitation. He will be required to submit quarterly and monthly reports to church officials, Janway said.

Robertson says scandal aimed at him

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Republican presidential hopeful Pat Robertson said today that charges of Jimmy Swaggart's sexual misconduct had been known for a few months, but somebody planned the scandal to embarrass him before the Super Tuesday elections.

Swaggart, a television evangelist accused of sexual misconduct, was ordered Monday by the hierarchy of his church in Baton Rouge, La., to limit his preaching and enter counseling.

Robertson, who bristles at the label of former television evangelist, said today that evidence showing that Swaggart had been involved with prostitutes had been "dormant since last October."

It "stretches the imagination and stretches credulity" that it came two weeks "before the most important primary in the nation," the Republican candidate said during a news conference in Columbia. A round of primaries and caucuses will be held Super Tuesday, March 8, in 20 states.

Standoff in Plano hospital parking lot ends in death

PLANO (AP) — A standoff in a hospital parking lot ended after nine hours with the fatal shooting of a man armed with a small-caliber automatic pistol, police said.

"Apparently the man wanted to die and unfortunately he got his wish," police Sgt. J.R. Chilton said early today.

The man, identified as Zdanek Stepanek of nearby Dallas, was in his mid 30s, Chilton said.

"No one knows why he was there," Chilton said, adding the man had not been a patient at the psychiatric facility, Charter Hospital of Dallas.

Stepanek was shot once by a police emergency response team rifleman after pointing his pistol at several officers, Chilton said.

The shooting took place about 9:15 p.m. after Stepanek broke off negotiations which had been carried on since noon Monday when the drama began.

Officers attempted to end the standoff by firing tear gas, but Stepanek emerged from his car with pistol in hand, police said.

"When he got out of the car he pointed his weapon at several officers," Chilton said.

He was taken to HCA Medical Center Plano, where he was pronounced dead about midnight while undergoing surgery, the police spokesman said.

"He apparently died on the operating table," Chilton said, adding, "They (the emergency response team) have been practicing that stuff for a long time to avoid any bloodshed. What else can you say, it's a shame," Chilton said.

The standoff began when officers were called to investigate a suspicious person sitting in a car.

He displayed a pistol, but was blocked by squad cars as he tried to drive away.

Midland County students get reprieve from ECISD

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — About 80 western Midland County students who attend Ector County schools won at least a one year reprieve from paying tuition.

The action came on a motion from Ector County Independent School District trustee Jim Nelson after a legal opinion from the board's legal counsel, Mike Atkins, was read to board members by assistant Superintendent Don Mercer.

Board members had been stalemated on the question last week when Nelson abstained from voting on the imposition of tuition fees for out-of-district students. He said the law firm he is associated with has represented HBP Corp., developers of Mission Dorado, and, therefore, a possible conflict of interest might exist if he voted in the case.

The opinion from Atkins stated Nelson had no conflict of interest because of the action of his firm.

In making the motion to exempt Midland County students who live in the Mission Country Club Estates and Ridgewood areas from the $1,885 tuition fee they would be required to pay if found to be "eligible transfers," Nelson said the one year fee deferment would give residents time

Man who shot two officers, held hostages, surrenders

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A man who officials say shot two plainclothes policemen, then took refuge in an office building and held hostages, was a transient with mental problems, the city manager said.

The gunman, whose name was not released pending the filing of charges, had taken up to six hostages at an office building Monday night, released all of them and surrendered to police shortly before 10 p.m., said police spokesman Sgt. Paul Buske.

"The hostage negotiators just spoke to him and he eventually just gave up," Buske said.

The man is accused of shooting two officers after a struggle on a downtown street at about 6:30 p.m., before fleeing into the Travis Park Plaza, Buske said.

The man took two people hostage on one floor, released them, and then took three other people hostage on the third floor. The three escaped when the gunman walked into another area to take another hostage, Buske said.

The last man was released at about 9 p.m. and the gunman surrendered about an hour later and was taken to police headquarters.

City Manager Lou Fox said the suspect apparently was a transient.

"He's a black male, apparently described as a street person," Fox said. "My understanding is he had some mental problems and it's your typical downtown problem that we've been faced with."

Last month, a mentally ill homeless man shot and killed Dallas police officer John Glenn Chase in a downtown parking lot. The killing touched off a wave of public support

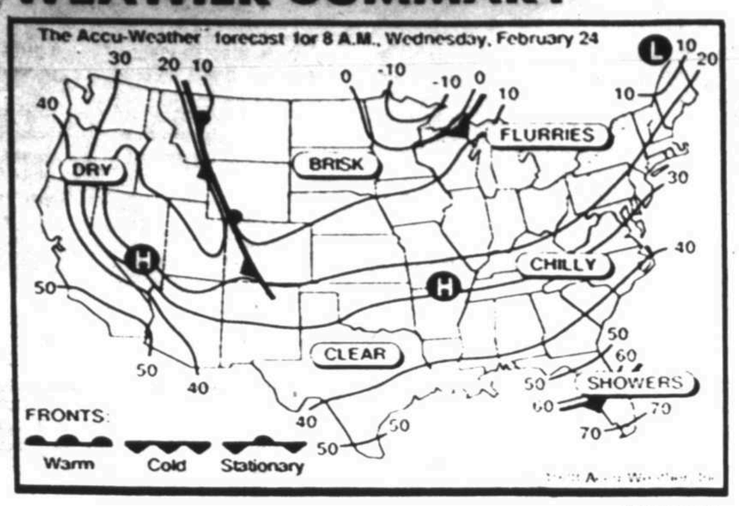
WEATHER SUMMARY



AP Lasermap

The forecast for Wednesday shows sunny skies for most of the nation.

Skies continue fair, sunny

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies should be fair and sunny through at least Wednesday, forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport said.

Tonight will be fair with a low near 30. Winds should be from the east at 5-10 mph.

Wednesday will be bright and sunny, forecasters said.

The high will be near 60 and winds will be from the south to southeast at 5-15 mph.

The record high for Monday was set in 1977 when it reached 86. When it dipped to 14 in 1966, a record low for today was set.

STATE

A ridge of high pressure behind a cold front brought colder air to west and northwest sections of Texas early Tuesday. The cold front stretched from Texarkana southwest to central Texas and west to the southern Concho Valley and northern Trans-Pecos.

Variable high-level clouds covered most of the state. Strong northerly winds followed the front and contributed to the temperature drop. Wind gusts of 15 to 25 mph were reported in north central Texas while lighter winds of 5 to 15 mph prevailed in the High Plains and Low Rolling Plains. Most sections ahead of the front had winds from the south at 5 to 15 mph.

Early morning temperatures were in the 20s in the northern part of the High Plains, 30s in the Low Rolling Plains, 40s across the rest of the west, Hill Country and western sections of North Texas, and 50s were common across South and East Texas.

NATION

Gale warnings continued today over parts of the Great Lakes and New England, after high winds in the Midwest and Rockies cracked windows, knocked down electrical poles and fanned wildfires.

Advisories for blowing and drifting snow were posted over upper Michigan, where snowshowers were scattered early today.

Light snow also fell over western Minnesota, the eastern Dakotas, and from eastern Montana across eastern Wyoming into north-central Colorado.

Rain fell from north-central Kentucky across Ohio and northern New York state.

Gale warnings were posted today over lakes Huron and Erie, and in much of New England.

Ninety windows cracked or shattered in Chicago's Sears Tower early Monday when winds gusting to 56 mph flung gravel and debris against the world's tallest building, a Sears spokesman said. No injuries were reported.

Broken glass forced authorities to block traffic during the morning rush hour on the four streets surrounding the 110-story building, police said.

Gusts up to 120 mph were clocked at Mines Peak, Colo., early Monday. Power outages were reported in southwestern Missouri and at Fort Smith, Ark., where gusts reached 52 mph.

A 64-year-old man died Monday when the truck he was driving went off a road to avoid a fallen tree near Garwood, Mo., police said.

Firefighters in Missouri responded to about a dozen wind-fanned grass fires Monday, including one that destroyed a farm building just east of Springfield, authorities said.

Elsewhere, damage was estimated at more than $1 million Monday from a wildfire whipped by winds of up to 70 mph, that blackened 2,400 acres of southwestern Montana on Sunday, destroying 39 buildings, including four homes, before being brought under control. No one was injured, officials said.

VIOLENCE

"They tied me to a jeep and dragged me while driving fast. Afterward they beat me again and buried me in the sand, filling my mouth with sand also," said the affidavit, which was published in the daily Jerusalem Post.

Ms. Langer, a left-wing activist who frequently represents Palestinians, said she intends to bring the case before the Israeli Supreme Court.

The military police said the reports are being investigated.

The deaths of two Palestinians today brought to 63 the number of Palestinians that Israelis have killed, mostly with gunfire, since anti-occupation unrest began Dec. 8.

Police arrested an Israeli civilian in connection with the shooting death of Rawda Najeeb, 13, said an army spokesman who spoke on condition of anonymity. He refused to release the settler's name or give other details.

Miss Najeeb was shot while standing in the doorway of her home in the West Bank village of Baqa Sharqiyah, about 15 miles north of Tulkharem, Israel radio and the Arab-owned Palestine Press Service said.

The Press Service said villagers there had blocked roads with twisted metal and burning tires overnight following a demonstration.

Israeli soldiers shot and killed a second Palestinian early today during a clash with Arabs in the nearby village of Yamoun, the army said. It said the Arabs hurled flaming Molotov cocktails, rocks and broken glass at troops, injuring two soldiers.

The Palestine Press Service identified the dead boy as 13-year-old Mahmoud Niman Hasheyeh and said six other Arabs were wounded by gunfire. The army said it was investigating.

In other developments, an aide to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir today said there was a possibility Shamir would agree to early elections in July or August if relations with his political rival, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, continue to deteriorate after this week's visit of Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Elections are scheduled in November.

The aide, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Shamir had not received a response from Peres on his proposal to adopt a joint negotiating position on the new U.S. peace proposals to be presented by Shultz. Israel's Cabinet is to debate the issue Wednesday, the day before Shultz is expected.

Israel's Vice Premier and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres listens to a Palestinian woman in Nablus, Occupied West Bank, Tuesday, ruing Peres' tour of the area. The woman was complaining about soldiers' "violent behavior" toward her people.

Shultz plans to give separate letters to Shamir and King Hussein of Jordan when he presents his proposed peace initiative in five days of shuttle diplomacy, the daily Haaretz newspaper said.

The letter to Shamir would promise Israel will not have to withdraw to its pre-1967 borders, guarantee there will be no Palestinian state and pledge Jerusalem will not be divided.

In the 1967 Middle East war, Israel seized the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip and annexed Arab east Jerusalem.

The letter to Hussein would guarantee implementation of the principle of land for peace and the creation of a confederation between Jordan and the West Bank and Gaza, the newspaper said.

The proposal appears designed to provide something for everyone, leaning toward the Arab demand for a return of territory, while trying to overcome Israel's fears that this will lead to an independent Palestinian state.

Monday, Shamir said Israel must retain control over the occupied lands and reiterated his commitment to the principles of the 1978 Israeli-Egyptian Camp David accords, which call for limited self-rule for Palestinians.

Visiting the West Bank city of Nablus today, Peres was thronged by Arabs who told him soldiers had repeatedly entered their homes and beat people.

"When there is peace, there won't be an army," he responded. "But when people throw stones or Molotov cocktails, the army needs to defend the lives of all the residents both Arabs and Jews."

SWAGGART

"Again no doubt, much speculation and rumor will find its way into the secular media, but for the church, the body of Christ, such speculation and rumor has no place," he said.

"We urge Brother Swaggart and his associates to resist the request of those outside the church to respond to questions. Brother Swaggart has been in complete cooperation with the Assemblies of God and has pledged to work within the structure of the church," Janway said.

Rentz's mother, Edna Cooper, said her son, whose stepfather was an Assembly of God minister, was "saved" at 10 and began attending church services regularly.

A decade after Rentz became a railroad engineer, he quit to become pastor of the Bethel Assembly of God church in Hialeah, Fla.

"He is a tremendous pastor," said the Rev. David Lively, who took over the church when Rentz left. "He knows people and cares for them."

The Rev. James Robison, a TV evangelist for 26 years, said early today on ABC's "Nightline" that he expected Swaggart could weather the crisis.

"I believe that he can have a greater ministry than he's ever had due to the strengths that he can draw from having gone through a crisis and a fall which is tragic, but it's not the end of the world," Robison said.

Photographs allegedly showing Swaggart with a prostitute reportedly were given to church officials by New Orleans evangelist Marvin Gorman, who had once filed a $90 million suit charging Swaggart with unjustly accusing him of numerous affairs.

Gorman's attorney Hunter Lundy said of the photographs, "I know they exist and they're relevant."

The Washington Post reported Monday, quoting a source who spoke to a Jimmy Swaggart World Ministries board member, that Swaggart said he did not engage in sexual intercourse with the woman but "paid her to perform pornographic acts."

One church official said Swaggart had confessed that his sexual misconduct had continue for years.

"He tried and tried and tried through prayer and fasting and everything he could do to lick it and it beat him," the Rev. Glen Cole, pastor of the Capital Christian Center in Sacramento, Calif., told a Sacramento television station Sunday. Cole is one of 13 denomination officials who examined Swaggart's case last week.

Janway told reporters that Swaggart will be prohibited from preaching a minimum of three months, "except in fulfillment of present commitments involving foreign governments during that period." He did not elaborate.

Swaggart, a cousin of rock 'n' roll pioneer Jerry Lee Lewis and country singer Mickey Gilley, combined his singing and piano playing with old-fashioned, fire-and-brimstone preaching to build a ministry with an income estimated at $142 million in 1986.

Figures from 1986 showed that Swaggart donated $12 million to the Assemblies, and more than $10 million went to a foreign-missions program, making up about one-fifth of its budget, Assemblies spokeswoman Juleen Turnage said.

She said Monday night that Swaggart's donations will have no bearing on his case.

"Nothing happens to people by accident," Robertson said in an interview Monday with the Anderson, S.C., Independent-Mail. "It is kind of funny this came up two weeks before the most important primaries in the nation. People probably wonder what went on.

"I think somebody had something to do with it," said Robertson. "Somebody else planned all these things, I am afraid."

Asked again today whether he had any evidence to show that the scandal broke just before Super Tuesday, Robertson replied: "I have no knowledge. It's certainly a coincidence."

Monday, Robertson offered no proof of his contention, and declined to say to whom he was referring. However, in the same interview he accused the campaign of Vice President George Bush of "dirty politics" and "trickery" directed at him.

A Bush campaign official, asked about the remarks, said Robertson had apparently adopted a new campaign strategy of "making bizarre statements in order to make news."

"To suggest that we had something to do with (the Swaggart affair) borders on the outlandish," said Jay Morgan, Bush's deputy Southern political director, in a telephone interview from his home in Atlanta.

Robertson repeated his charge today that the Bush campaign plans "dirty tricks" in South Carolina, saying he was told that the vice president's campaign plans to run some television ads "dealing with religious bigotry in the few days before the (South Carolina primary) elections."

Bush campaign ad director Sid Rogich said today the only ad running in South Carolina is a biographical commercial.

Two weeks ago, Robertson scolded NBC anchor Tom Brokaw, who interviewed him live on the night of the Iowa caucuses, for referring to him as a former television evangelist.

Robertson, who founded the Christian Broadcasting Network and for years hosted its flagship program "The 700 Club," says he wants to be described as a former religious broadcaster, or a television businessman.

for police when Dallas Police Chief Billy Prince blamed some City Council members for creating an atmosphere that led to the shooting by criticizing police.

The wounded San Antonio officers, Ed Gorrell, 33, and Onofre Serna, 26, were part of a downtown foot patrol police initiated to deter street crime.

"It has been quite effective in corralling or bringing to an end the muggings downtown and the misfits that we've been having problems with and, more specifically, the panhandling," Buske said.

Gorrell, a two-year veteran, was in critical condition after undergoing surgery earlier today at Brooke Army Medical Center, hospital spokesman Robert Clark said.

Serna, a three-year veteran, suffered a graze to the chest area and was in stable condition today at Medical Center Hospital, hospital spokeswoman Ruby Salazar said.

Buske said that Gorrell had stopped a man and a woman, who appeared to be intoxicated, on a downtown street. Buske said the man began arguing with Gorrell, who called for assistance after a struggle ensued.

Serna arrived and tried to help Gorrell, but the man grabbed Gorrell's .380-caliber semiautomatic pistol and shot Serna once in the left chest and Gorrell once in the head.

"The officers stopped the individual...and a struggle ensued. One of the officers lost his weapon. (The suspect) picked up the weapon and several shots were fired," Buske said. Police Chief William Gibson said that the gunman made no demands and made a few calls. Gibson also said he did not immediately know why the gunman was stopped.

A co-worker of one of the hostages, Jerry Renaud, said she called her office after hearing about the shooting.

"I called up to the office because I knew some of our workers would be working late," said Judy Walsh, a partner in the accounting firm of Deloitte, Haskins and Sells.

"Jerry answered the phone and I told him about it and he said, 'I'm up here having a party with some friends.' I said, 'Jerry, are you one of the hostages?' He said, 'You bet.'" Ms. Walsh said she then hung up and called police.

ECISD

to complete their appeal of Texas Education Agency Commissioner Bill Kirby's rejection of efforts to incorporate the more than 4,000-acre area into the ECISD.

The Midland school district has protested the disannexation, contending too much tax base would be lost.

ECISD trustees also heard Dr. Bill Walker, associate superintendent for business affairs, explain various financing strategies if county voters approve a proposed $9.8 million bond program May 7.

According to Walker, the funding option selected by trustees will determine whether district tax rates increase a few cents per $100 of assessed valuation or if no increase is required.

He explained that a two-cent increase in the tax rate for debt service reduction would translate to a total increase of about $5.40 a year, or about 45 cents a month, for the owner of the average $40,000 home in Ector County.

Trustees set a special noon meeting for March 7 to discuss the most effective method of disseminating information to the general public concerning specifically how the $9.8 million in bond revenues will be utilized if approved by voters.

The planned improvements include construction of three new elementary schools and the addition of a sufficient number of classrooms at existing schools to bring ECISD into compliance with classroom pupil-teacher ratios mandated by state law.

The planned expansion is expected to allow ECISD to remain in compliance with those ratios over the next fours. School district projections anticipate elementary school enrollment during this period will increase about 948 students, while pre-kindergarten enrollment is expected to increase by about 295 students.

GILKERSON

"Parker had told him he could sell a good-looking woman into Mexico or South America," for $15,000 cash, with Alderink's share half of that, the detective testified.

Parker "bragged" about his affiliation with criminal organizations in Mexico, including groups that regularly bought women from the United States for prostitution, Johnson said.

When questioned by lawmen about his whereabouts on Nov. 7 and Nov. 8, Parker claimed he had driven to Del Rio, and had spent the night with prostitutes across the border in Ciudad Acuna, Mexico, Johnson said.

He returned alone the morning of Nov. 8, Johnson said Parker told him.

But investigators who traced the route Parker gave them were unable to find any evidence supporting his alibi, Johnson said.

Johnson told Speck he considered Parker "very dangerous," and said after his arrest the defendant asked to borrow an FBI agent's revolver so he could "settle things" with Johnson. The gray-bearded Parker, dressed in a blue plaid shirt and blue jeans, bristled at the detective's claim, and whispered something to his court-appointed attorney, Tom Morgan.

Johnson, who testified about 40 minutes, was the only witness called by the government at the hearing — but Alderink's testimony before the grand jury was entered as evidence and read by Smith during a recess.

Parker's sister, Joanne Hines, testified that the defendant was "very easy going, very laid back...humble, he's not arrogant."

Under cross-examination by Speck, Ms. Hines said her brother had moved from Midland several months after Ms. Gilkerson's disappearance because of "24-hour a day harassment by the police."

Roland Moreland, Parker's nephew, said he was "outraged" by the charges, and claimed his uncle had been "harassed out of Midland."

Moreland described him as a "gentle person, a gentleman...one of the few gentlemen left in the world."

Slain woman's son fears father convicted of murder

HOUSTON (AP) — A teen-ager whose father is on death row in Texas for hiring a hit man through Soldier of Fortune magazine to kill his mother says he fears a similar fate.

"If he could hire someone out of Soldier of Fortune magazine to kill my mother, he could hire someone out of Soldier of Fortune magazine to kill me, too," Gary Black testified Monday.

Black, 18, and his grandmother, Marjorie Einmann, are suing the military magazine for $22.5 million, accusing it of negligence for running an ad that led to the slaying of Sandra Black.

Mrs. Black was Gary's mother and Mrs. Einmann's daughter.

Robert Black is on death row for paying John Wayne Hearn $10,000 to kill his wife at their home in Bryan Feb. 21, 1985. Hearn is serving three life terms in Florida for the Black slaying and two others in that state.

"She just was the worst person I could lose," Gary Black said, fighting back tears.

Asked if his grandmother, with whom he now lives, ever could replace his mother, he replied: "Nobody can."

Mrs. Einmann, who also testified Monday, said her grandson was so devastated after discovering his mother's body he would not sleep alone or enter his house alone for a year and a half afterward.

"The first 18 months were a nightmare," Mrs. Einmann, 64, said, describing the mental condition of her grandson. "I slept with him every night."

The boy, who was 15 at the time of the shooting, told counselors how much he feared his father, she said.

"They said his mind was so damaged...He feared if someone could get into his own home to kill his own mother, someone could get into my house to kill him."

A jury of eight people is hearing the suit before U.S. District Judge David Hittner, who canceled testimony today because he was summoned to jury duty in a Houston municipal court.

Monday's testimony of Gary Black and Mrs. Einmann completed their case against the Boulder, Colo.-based "Journal for Professional Adventurers."

Attorneys for the magazine do not dispute the magazine ad brought Hearn and Black together, but insist publisher Robert K. Brown had no way of knowing the ad was for illegal activity.

Hearn's ad appeared in four issues of the magazine in late 1984, offering services of former Marine and Vietnam veterans and weapons specialists with jungle warfare expertise for "high-risk assignments" in the United States or overseas.

A criminologist, Park Dietz, testified last week the reference to "high-risk" meant the person placing the ad was willing to commit a crime.

Publisher Brown has testified he would have halted the classified ads for personal services if he had known they were linked to crimes.

"I didn't believe a word Mr. Brown said during cross examination," Ron Franklin, the plaintiff's attorney, said Monday.

Magazine attorneys called retired Army Col. Charles Beckwith, commander of the Army's Delta Force in the unsuccessful attempt in 1980 to rescue the American hostages in Iran, who said he was in court on behalf of his friend Brown.

Beckwith said he read the magazine and enjoyed articles on guns and knives.

"A good knife — it makes my heart beat fast," he said.

But Beckwith said he paid little attention to the classified ads and didn't believe they were intended for criminal activity.

"It sounded so macho, but it didn't make my heart beat fast," he said.

A former CIA agent, William Askins of San Antonio, said the magazine was well-read in some departments of the agency because it reported war information from remote areas of the world, like Afghanistan, but said he saw no criminality intended in the wording of personal services ads.

Joan Steele, the former magazine ad manager, said a formal advertisement rejection policy she implemented in 1984 was an effort to attract a broader range of ads and not in response to information the personal services ads were being used for illegal activity.

She said it never occurred to her the ads were being used by people other than what she called "good guys."

Oldest alien tapes commercial for INS

WESLACO (AP) — With a television commercial under her belt, 98-year-old Clara Escobedo de Martinez will ride a festival float to urge others to join the parade of successful amnesty recipients.

Mrs. Escobedo, the oldest person in the nation to receive amnesty under the new immigration law, spent Monday morning taping a television commercial that encourages other aliens to follow suit.

In the spot for the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the agency's best-known alien tells those eligible for amnesty not to miss out on the opportunity before the May 4 deadline.

Her next appearance will be live, when she rides on the INS float Saturday during the Charro Days festival in the border city of Brownsville.

The Spanish-language commercial shows the diminutive great-grandmother sitting in a rocking chair flanked by two towering U.S. Border Patrol agents.

"Are you afraid of the Border Patrol?" asks Mrs. Escobedo, who never learned English. "I used to be, but not any more. My name is Clara Escobedo Martinez and I waited 98 years to become a legal resident of the United States."

"It was the first and last time" she will do a television commercial, Mrs. Escobedo joked after finishing the taping Monday at KRGV-TV in Weslaco.

She said she went through the videotaping "con mucho gusto y mucho susto" (with much pleasure and much fear).

"I'm thankful the Lord has blessed me enough to be able to do this," Mrs. Escobedo.

In Saturday's parade, some of the entries will cross the bridge into Mexico, but the INS float will not. The agency prefers to stay on this side of the border, said Charlie Perez, the INS' chief legalization officer in Harlingen.

The public service announcement is part of a new, aggressive promotional campaign to attract more applicants before the May 4 deadline.

"I think one of the things we're contending with is that there is some discussion out there that there are people who are eligible for amnesty who aren't coming forward because of fear," INS spokeswoman Virginia Kice said. "We felt that Clara would be an excellent person to help us try and assuage some of those fears."

Most aliens eligible for legalization under the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 were given a one-year period to apply for legal residency if able to prove they lived in this country illegally since before Jan. 1, 1982.

The application period began May 5, 1987, but because fewer have applied than anticipated, some, including members of Congress, are calling for an extension of the deadline. The INS is fighting the extension proposal.

The widow, who lives in Brownsville, first came to the United States in 1927, and lived here legally until 1962, when immigration officials revoked her legal resident status because they thought she had been living in Mexico.

She returned to live illegally in 1979, and obtained permanent resident status Feb. 9 through the new immigration law. Officials also are speeding up her application for citizenship.

Rakel Zarate, one of Mrs. Escobedo's granddaughters, who helped accompany her to the studio, said her grandmother had been looking forward to the taping session.

"The only problem was the more she rehearsed it, the more she forgot," Ms. Zarate said.

Police find mayor's body

ADDISON (AP) — Mayor Jerry Redding was found shot to death minutes after he called police and gave them the location where his body would be found, authorities said.

Police Chief Rick Sullivan said Redding called him from his car telephone shortly after 3 p.m. Monday and told the chief to "get someone down here to find me."

Redding, who was one of several town officials under investigation for allegations of fiscal mismanagement at Addison Town Hall, told Sullivan to send officers to a town-owned jogging trail. Minutes later, police found Redding's body near the trail.

Sullivan, who found four notes at Redding's home, said there was no evidence the mayor's death was prompted by the investigations or his firing last spring from his job as an assets manager at Vernon Savings and Loan Corp.

"The notes did not give some definitive answer as to why he did it," said Sullivan, who declined to reveal details. "Most of the notes' concerns were of the welfare of his wife, child, friends, mother and father."

Redding was shot once in the right temple with a .38-caliber revolver, Sullivan said. Officials with the Dallas County medical examiner's office said Redding's wounds appeared to be self-inflicted, but a formal ruling was not expected until today.

Redding, 46, an insurance salesman, was mayor of this north Dallas suburb for 13 years.

He had been fired from Vernon after federal regulators declared the Addison-based thrift insolvent. Regulators said the thrift was drained by runaway growth, risky loans and exessive compensation to some bank officials.

The investigations by the Dallas County district attorney's office and a private attorney hired by Addison officials focus on allegations that city officials, under Redding's leadership, spent more than $400,000 in tax dollars on a series of trips and a now-defunct song-and-dance troupe.

Workers abandoned sinking rig

GALVESTON (AP) — A motor vessel early today rescued 34 oil workers who abandoned their rig when it began sinking in the Gulf of Mexico 82 miles south of Galveston, a U.S. Coast Guard official said.

The vessel "Casey Chouest" radioed the Coast Guard at 1:17 a.m. it had picked up all 34 workers of rig E-302 owned by Keyes Offshore Inc. of Sugar Land, said Coast Guard duty officer Don Merwin.

The research vessel "Geco Longva" relayed a distress call to the Coast Guard from the rig at 10:17 p.m. Monday and Merwin said Coast Guard aircraft and rescue ships were dispatched from Houston, Corpus Christi and Sabine.

Southwesterly winds at 30 knots, causing 7 to 10 foot waves, may have contributed to the collapse of one of the rig's three legs, Merwin said.

"That kind of wind, though, shouldn't have been enough to sink a rig like that," Merwin said, adding the rig was capable of drilling 20,000 feet.

He said the Coast Guard Marine Safety office would investigate the accident.

The rig, which has been used since 1981, had been placed in the spot of the accident Sunday or Monday, Merwin said.

He said the tugs that towed the rig to its new location were returning this morning to see if the rig could be salvaged.

Merwin said only the bow of the rig was protruding from the water at the time of the rescue.

The "Casey Chouest" with the rig workers was expected to reach Galveston by 9:30 a.m., Merwin said.

Chemical firm fined for safety violations

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Health says a Pennsylvania chemical company paid a $900 fine for violations of the Texas Hazard Communication Act in the first penalty of its kind in the state.

Betz Entec Inc. failed to specify on required material safety data sheets possible dangers of two of its products and to fully cooperate with the department's investigation, the health department announced Monday.

The 1985 act requires manufacturers to inform commercial customers in Texas of potential hazards associated with their products, the department said.

Problems have been found with other companies under the act, the department said, but they have been consistently corrected within 14 days of their first departmental notice of noncompliance with the law.

The investigation of Betz Entec's case began in 1986, after a Texas prison inmate complained that he had not been adequately warned of dangers associated with two boiler treatment products he was ordered to use.

The health department said the inmate's complaint was quickly resolved but the manufacturer did not correct the data sheets to warn other users. The department also said the company failed to supply certain information to the department throughout its investigation of the violations.

Clements, Justice to discuss prison overcrowding

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements and federal Judge William Wayne Justice scheduled an April 15 meeting to discuss the state's prison overcrowding and resulting inmate population problems at county jails.

"I'm going to ask him for some sympathy and some understanding of that problem," Clements said Sunday.

The meeting comes on the heels of a decision by Justice to reduce federal control of the Texas Department of Corrections.

Clements said he asked for the session with Justice and it will be held in the judge's chambers in Tyler. He made the comments during a break in the National Governor's Association winter meeting.

The state is limiting admissions to the prison system, under court order to relieve overcrowding. But doing so has caused a backup in county jails where many inmates are held until room is found in TDC facilities.

Justice is presiding over implementation of concessions the state made in the settlement of a decade-old prison reform lawsuit.

Texas is trying to add 10,000 beds to the TDC. But officials are afraid Justice will rule county jails also must meet strict standards of the prison reform lawsuit.

State and local officials also will be looking for prison solutions during this weekend's criminal justice summit at The Woodlands near Houston.

Webb's resignation reveals intensity of Pentagon infighting

Webb

WASHINGTON (AP) — Navy Secretary James Webb's abrupt resignation blew the lid off his split with Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci and revealed bitter infighting at the Pentagon as it grapples with budget cuts after years of Reagan-era increases.

Webb resigned Monday and decided to air some dirty linen on the way out, accusing Carlucci of needlessly sinking the administration's dream of building a 600-ship fleet.

He further accused Carlucci of ordering him to lie about internal budget fighting, saying the defense chief had written him a note saying he should deny news stories reporting it was the Defense Department — and not the Navy — proposing to mothball ships.

"Now, I'm not going to deny the truth," Webb said.

"This building needs to be led...It needs some vision," he continued. "If I had a piece of advice to give to Secretary Carlucci, it would be to spend a lot more time with the top leaders in this building.

"He's been spending a lot of time with the State Department and a lot of time on the (Capitol) Hill. I think they (Pentagon leaders) need to feel his vision and to understand what he believes in."

Carlucci declined to respond Monday, issuing a written statement saying only that he learned of Webb's resignation "with regret."

The Pentagon added in a separate statement, though, that if Webb decided he could not "defend the department's decisions" on the budget, then "under the circumstances, he has done the honorable thing."

An administration official who asked not to be identified said Carlucci was recommending that William L. Ball III, the assistant to the president for legislative affairs, be nominated to replace Webb.

The White House might announce Ball's nomination today at the same time it formally accepts Webb's resignation, the source said.

The 42-year-old Webb, a highly decorated Vietnam combat veteran who earlier worked as an assistant defense secretary, said he had been contemplating resignation for some time but didn't make up his mind until Sunday.

The final impetus, he said, was the submission to Congress last week of the fiscal 1989 Pentagon budget. Carlucci shaped it without regard to the advice of the Navy's top civilian and military leadership, Webb said.

"I cannot support the reductions that are in this budget," he said.

The massive military buildup under President Reagan, which has seen the Pentagon's budget more than double, is coming to a halt because of concerns about the huge federal deficits run up during the Reagan years.

Carlucci, following up on a deficit-reduction agreement reached by the White House and Congress in December, submitted a fiscal 1989 budget proposal totaling $299.5 billion, slightly more than for fiscal 1988 but unlikely to cover inflation. It cuts the Navy's original 1989 spending plan by $12.3 billion and calls for, among other things, mothballing 16 older frigates.

Those ships are at the heart of the dispute that erupted Monday. Webb said they didn't have to be retired and that if they were, the Navy could never reach its goal of deploying a 600-ship fleet. The Pentagon maintains the Navy will end fiscal 1989 with 580 ships and can still reach 600 by fiscal 1992.

Reagan, former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, and Webb's predecessor, John F. Lehman, all have insisted that the Navy needs a minimum of 600 warships to satisfy U.S. commitments around the world without requiring overly long deployments.

Webb, in his letter of resignation and in a meeting with reporters, said he had provided Carlucci with three different plans for cutting the necessary dollars without mothballing the ships. At the very least, he said, the 16 frigates could be transferred to the Naval Reserve at a cost of less than $100 million and stay on standby.

"In each case, the advice of this senior (Navy) leadership, concurred in by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was ignored," Webb wrote.

"I can only conclude that the decision to reduce the level of our fleet...was motivated by other than military and strategic reasoning."

Webb declined to say why he thought Carlucci had ignored his advice.

A ranking Pentagon official who asked not to be named, however, said Defense Department executives for a time eyed the 16 frigates as ships that could be offered for sale to Portugal at a cut rate. Portugal wasn't interested, the source added.

The administration is trying to find ways of increasing military assistance to Portugal to preserve access to an air base on the Azores Islands.

Justices eyed because of former club memberships

WASHINGTON (AP) — Private clubs that exclude women and racial minorities are at issue before the Supreme Court, which includes two members who only recently resigned from men-only organizations.

The court was to hear arguments today on a New York City law intended to prevent private clubs from excluding women and minorities, and the eventual decision could affect similar ordinances in at least five other major cities.

The justices are being asked to decide whether such clubs should be treated as public accommodations, banned from practicing such discrimination.

Feminist groups are closely watching Justices Harry A. Blackmun and Anthony M. Kennedy, who themselves only recently quit male-only clubs.

The city law, which is being challenged by the New York State Club Association, exempts "distinctly private organizations" from its anti-bias requirements.

But it deprives non-religious groups of that designation if they have more than 400 members, provide regular meal service and regularly receive payment of member dues from non-members such as employers.

Similar ordinances were enacted recently in Buffalo, Chicago, Detroit, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

New York's highest court upheld the law, rejecting arguments that it unconstitutionally creates an irrefutable presumption that such organizations are not truly private.

In previous rulings, the Supreme Court has ruled that states, through their public accommodation laws, may force the U.S. Jaycees and Rotary International to admit women as members.

In ruling unanimously in the Rotary case last May, the justices suggested that numerous other male-only or female-only private organizations may have to comply with laws requiring equal access to public accommodations.

After assessing May's ruling, Kiwanis International voted to end its men-only tradition and allow its 8,200 clubs worldwide to admit women.

The New York State Club Association is composed of about 125 private clubs and associations. Many of its groups are male-only or are organized along national origin or other ethnic lines.

Its challenge of the New York City law has been supported in the Supreme Court by, among others, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Loyal Order of Moose, the Improved Order of Red Men and the Club Managers Association of America.

The city law was defended by, among others, the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the Council of State Governments, the National Association of Counties, the National League of Cities, the American Civil Liberties Union and the American Bar Association.

Kennedy, the court's newest justice, was criticized during his recent Senate confirmation hearings for his past membership in exclusive private clubs.

Kennedy quit San Francisco's all-male, all-white Olympic Club, after he was mentioned as a possible Supreme Court nominee. He had been a member since 1962.

He quit the all-male Sutter Club in his hometown of Sacramento, Calif., eight years ago.

Blackmun recently quit the Cosmos Club in Washington, D.C., where he had held a longtime membership.

Fundamentalists' suit over texts rejected

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court's rejection of a suit challenging what a Tennessee fundamentalist group calls godless textbooks will enable schools to get on with teaching children, an education official says.

"We've been relieved of a lot of pressure, pressure that's been on our shoulders since 1983," Robert Cooper, Hawkins County school superintendent, said Monday.

The lawsuit was filed that year by seven born-again Christian families, who objected on religious grounds to the list of required reading textbooks for grades 1-8. The books included passages in "The Wizard of Oz" and "Cinderella," works by science fiction writer Isaac Asimov, Hans Christian Andersen and anthropologist Margaret Mead.

After a trial, U.S. District Judge Thomas Hull ruled in 1986 that the families' religious freedom had been violated, awarded them $50,000 in damages and allowed their children to avoid the reading classes.

But the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed that ruling and threw out the families' lawsuit.

Monday, the high court dismissed the families' appeal of that decision.

"At this time we have no alternative other than to accept the Supreme Court ruling," said Vicki Frost, one of the plaintiffs.

Farley Meade, another plaintiff, said: "There are a lot of poor Christian parents who can't send their children to religious schools. To me that's a sad day for religious freedom in America."

The president of the organization that financed the lawsuit called the Supreme Court action "the most coercive ruling in the history of religious liberty litigation."

"We are confident that this dreadful ruling will eventually be overturned," said Beverly LaHaye, president of Concerned Women of America, in a statement issued in Washington, D.C.

State Attorney General W.J. Michael Cody praised the court action, saying, "Any alternative disposition would have been the cause of chaos in the school system."

Cooper said the protracted case did not particularly disturb the county's 6,800 public school students "but as far as administrative personnel, school board members and even some teachers, it was very disruptive." He said making copies of records and testifying in court took time that could have been better used in teaching.

The seven children involved in the lawsuit have long since transferred from to private schools, he said, adding that about 4,700 children in grades 1-8 were affected by the lawsuit.

Robert Sharp, legal counsel for the state Education Department, said the case never interfered with the state's selection of approved textbooks or otherwise changed operation of the department.

"The one issue that could have caused turmoil was...whether there would be other parents who would seek to 'opt out' of reading programs in other schools," he said. "None did."

Prosecutors submit witness list in Mecham trial

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — House prosecutors for Gov. Evan Mecham's impeachment trial have submitted a list of 41 potential witnesses, including the governor and his brother, Willard.

But Mecham's attorney Murray Miller wrote a letter Monday saying he does not want to provide a witness list or to turn over any documentation yet.

In a letter to Chief Justice Frank Gordon, who will preside over the trial that's scheduled to begin Monday, Miller said Mecham believes that holding the Senate trial before his criminal trial would violate his constitutional rights.

"He therefore does not wish to turn over any documentation or witnesses that he may call in his defense at this time," Miller said.

The governor's lawyer has indicated that he may go to court in an effort to get the Senate trial delayed until after the criminal trial on charges of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan. That trial was delayed on Monday until March 22.

The House impeached Mecham on Feb. 5 and accused him of hiding the $350,000 loan, misusing $80,000 from the governor's protocol fund by loaning it to his auto dealership, and trying to thwart an investigation of an alleged death threat.

The witness list submitted Monday by the prosecution included many people who appeared before the House select committee on impeachment, including state Department of Public Safety Director Ralph Milstead and Mecham campaign fundraiser Bill Long.

Also in the new list were people who did not testify before the House panel, including Tempe developer Barry Wolfson, who provided the governor's $350,000 campaign loan. Wolfson was subpoenaed on Monday to provide documents and testify before the Senate.

Mecham also was subpoenaed on Monday to provide documents, according to House attorney Paul Eckstein.

Also on the list were Donna Carlson, the former Mecham aide who was the subject of the alleged death threat, and former state official Lee Watkins, who is accused of making the threat.

The list included an unidentified polygrapher who performed a lie-detector test on Watkins to determine if he actually made the threat.

FBI denies CISPES investigation started for political reasons

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI today denied it had conducted a political investigation of anti-Reagan activists, saying it had information that members of the targeted group planned or discussed disrupting the 1984 Republican convention and shutting down a public utility.

The FBI's executive assistant director, Oliver B. Revell, came before a Senate panel to defend the probe of the Committee In Solidarity with the People of El Salvador. The probe was ended without any charges being filed.

The group has said it was investigated because it opposes President Reagan's Central America policies.

Documents previously released in the March 1985-June 1985 probe show that FBI agents and informants sent to spy on CISPES collected so much information on peaceful protest activities that bureau headquarters was worried that the investigation had gone too far.

The documents, released under the Freedom of Information Act, have shown that while the investigation was targeted at CISPES, the files eventually included information on hundreds of other individuals and groups, ranging from Roman Catholic nuns to union leaders who opposed Reagan policies.

In defending the probe, Revell told the Senate Intelligence Committee that in addition to possible violence, CISPES was involved in circulating forged U.S. documents and had strong ties to the U.S. communist party.

"Some have insinuated that this investigation was politically motivated as many individuals associated with CISPES were opposed to Reagan administration policies in Central America," Revell said. "Nothing could be further from the truth.

"We did find indications that some CISPES members were at least discussing and planning violence. Our investigations uncovered one CISPES member who was tasked to determine response times of emergency services in a major American city; another CISPES member stated he had developed a system to shut down a public utility in a major midwestern city; as well as plans to violently disrupt the 1984 Republican convention."

The bureau initiated the investigation under foreign intelligence and counter-intelligence guidelines, designed to protect the United States against crimes such as espionage and terrorism, in which foreign powers or groups are involved.

These guidelines allow the FBI to focus more on politically oriented groups and their missions than on specific crimes that are planned or carried out. Because of this wider latitude, some lawmakers and the American Civil Liberties Union warn that it is easy to cross the line and investigate free speech.

Gang violence, police response to it splits neighborhoods in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When extra officers were deployed in an upscale neighborhood after a woman was killed in street-gang crossfire, a battle of rhetoric erupted over police priorities.

Two weeks after the shooting, an off-duty black policeman from a blue-collar suburb was arrested by Los Angeles police as he stood on a street corner in the same neighborhood, accompanied by six black youths. The officer said his group was conducting an informal "sting" operation to investigate alleged harassment by city police.

The policeman's arrest and the Jan. 30 shooting of 27-year-old bystander Karen Toshima during a gun battle between gangs occurred in Westwood Village, a theater and restaurant district that soaring housing prices have turned into a relatively wealthy neighborhood.

Authorities say there were more than 300 gang-related murders in Los Angeles County in 1987 and the rate is increasing. But gang violence usually is confined to the predominantly black and Hispanic southside neighborhoods of the nation's second-largest city where turf battles between drug dealers have led to drive-by shootings.

Five people were killed and five others were injured in gang shootings last weekend even as police staged a crackdown. Deputy Chief Glenn Levant, newly appointed as the city's anti-gang czar, said the more than 80 arrests were part of a strategy to prevent murders by taking gang members out of circulation.

Children playing in parks and a 67-year-old woman sitting in a wheelchair have been killed when gang hitmen missed their targets.

"And that's not the way it should be. We should be able to live normally," said Barbara Thomas, spokeswoman for the South Central Organizing Committee, which says it represents thousands of black families.

City Councilman Nate Holden, who is black and represents a largely black district, said the yearning for more police protection crosses racial lines.

"I've had white people complain about the gangs. They all just want to feel secure in their community and their homes," he said.

At the same time, the sting by Sgt. Don Jackson of the Hawthorne Police Department called into question the racial sensitivity of the Los Angeles police.

"None of those kids did anything except stand on that corner and be black — and that was enough," said Jackson, who was released on his recognizance after being arrested on a misdemeanor charge of resisting an officer.

The police department defended the arrest of Jackson and frisking of the others, saying the group, dressed like gang members, was blocking the sidewalk and refused to move.

The question of police harassment is among the issues being considered as the city moves ahead with a plan to hire 180 more officers, increasing the force to its largest strength ever, 7,800 officers.

Police Chief Darryl Gates Monday declined to say anything about how he will deploy his forces until after a March 8 hearing of the city's advisory Police Commission.

Mayor Tom Bradley, as he approved the new hiring last week, said the additional forces would help "return this city to a drug-free, gang-free atmosphere."

John P. Kenney, a criminologist and former Police Commission member, said more police officers is not the answer. "It wouldn't solve the problem. It would for a few days or for a few weeks. Then you get complaints of overpolicing and harassing," he said.

"Historically, there's a resentment to an excessive show of force," said Garrett Capune, professor of criminology at the University of Southern California. "It has a racist overtone, you know, there seems to be more crime because there's more officers. It becomes a sort of self-fulfilling prophecy."

'Cap the Knife' to be 'Cap the Knight'

LONDON (AP) — Caspar Weinberger received an honorary knighthood from Queen Elizabeth II today, the highest royal honor Britain has bestowed on an American.

The brief, private ceremony at Buckingham Palace didn't mean the former U.S. defense secretary would become Sir Caspar. That accolade is reserved for the queen's own subjects. But it was Britain's way of saying thanks to an exceptionally good friend.

Asked why he got the knighthood, Weinberger modestly replied: "I haven't the faintest idea."

But the announcement Feb. 1 cited his "outstanding and invaluable contribution" to Anglo-American defense cooperation, and his "unfailing support and assistance" during the 1982 Falkland Islands War between Britain and Argentina.

The 70-year-old Weinberger, who counts Winston Churchill among his heroes, did not have to kneel before the queen as a commoner and be tapped on both shoulders with a sword, as is the custom for British subjects.

"Her Majesty was nice enough just to present it to me," he said, adding: "I'm very honored, very pleased, and still very astonished."

He received a red ribbon with the badge of the Order of the British Empire, and a separate silver star signifying the title Knight Grand Cross — the highest order of chivalry for a foreigner.

It means he can now call himself Caspar Weinberger GBE.

Weinberger, wearing a gray suit, was accompanied by his wife, Jane, and Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe, who had recommended him for the honor.

The 25-minute ceremony was held without reporters or photographers present in the small, blue-walled Queen's Audience Room where the 61-year-old monarch often receives official visitors.

"She was very gracious as always, and very generous in her remarks," Weinberger told reporters afterward. He politely avoided mentioning what they discussed.

He carried his new insignia in a blue presentation box which he opened for photographers just before driving away to a luncheon hosted by U.S. Ambassador Charles H. Price II.

When Weinberger's award was announced, reporters asked him whether he was ready to be called "Sir Cap." He replied: "Good God, no. Our constitution has some harsh words about titles. But I really am flattered."

Asked after the ceremony whether he was now more of an Anglophile, he replied: "well, it's hard to be not."

The United States provided critical intelligence and logistical support to Britain during its 74-day campaign to oust Argentina's invasion force from the British-ruled South Atlantic islands. Weinberger insisted Monday that his role was "a comparatively modest, small one."

Buckingham Palace said only a very few of the 55 other Americans who have received honorary knighthoods were made GBEs. The most famous Americans who have received honorary knighthoods were made Knights of the British Empire or KBEs, a lower order of chivalry.

They include former Secretary of State Dean Rusk, industrialist Henry Ford III, philanthropists Paul Mellon and John Paul Getty II, actors Douglas Fairbanks Jr. and Sidney Poitier, former Sen. J. William Fulbright, D-Ark., and food magnate Henry J. Heinz II.

Shiites have three of kidnappers, sources say

Troops of the United Nations peace-keeping forces in south Lebanon search a van with the aid of a trained police dog near the port city of Tyre Monday.

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The nation's mainstream Shiite Moslem militia captured the three gunmen who kidnapped a U.S. Marine officer in southern Lebanon last week, security sources said today.

The sources said the three gunmen are among dozens of suspects the Amal militia rounded up while searching for Lt. Col. William R. Higgins but that the man who masterminded the U.N observer's abduction remained at large.

The gunmen, who were not identified, could not give their leader's whereabouts or say where Higgins was being held, said the sources, who spoke on condition of not being further identified.

Reporters in southern Lebanon last week reported that the Amal militia had detained more than 40 suspects, but this was the first indication that the three gunmen were among those held.

The same sources said today that at least two Israeli soldiers were killed and several wounded when their armored patrol was ambushed by Arab guerrillas in the southern Lebanese village of Braachit at sundown Monday.

It was not clear whether the ambush and kidnapping were related.

Higgins, 43, of Danville, Ky., was kidnapped south of the ancient port of Tyre on Wednesday. The security sources said the three gunmen were captured in a dragnet in the two days following the abduction.

"Among the detainees are the three gunmen who seized Col. Higgins and forced him into the first getaway car," one source said.

Another three suspects who were being held monitored Higgins' his movements before the abduction, the same source said.

The source provided the information when asked for confirmation of an NBC News report that the three kidnappers had been captured.

The gunmen were being held by Amal in Tyre and had been interrogated, but they were unable to provide useful information because their leader had kept them in the dark, the source said.

The security source played down the significance of the gunmen's detention, saying the unidentified person who masterminded the kidnapping already had slipped out of south Lebanon.

"The operation was a masterpiece from a professional standpoint," the source said. "The mastermind used five identical brown Volvo cars plus two additional getaway cars, a white Peugeot and a red Mercedes, in the abduction. The squad in each car did not know who was in the other car."

The Organization of the Oppressed on Earth, a pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem group, released a videotape Monday in which Higgins recited its demands for his release, including an Israeli pullout from a border zone in south Lebanon.

The organization charged that Higgins was a CIA spy. U.S. and U.N. officials denied the claim.

Higgins heads a 76-man U.N. observer group drawn from 16 nations that monitors border violations of a 1949 armistice signed by Lebanon and Israel.

Floods force slum dwellers to abandon homes

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Slum dwellers gathered possessions from condemned homes and rescue workers searched mud and rubble for victims of four days of floods and mudslides in Rio that have killed at least 75 people.

Civil defense spokewoman Sonia Hadid said Monday that many poor people, who live in homes on the steep hillsides that jut up through this city of 5.6 million, were refusing to obey orders to abandon their shacks.

"They prefer to risk their lives than abandon their worldly goods," she said. Officials warned that torrential rains that let up Monday had loosened boulders and earth and said they expected more mudslides.

"Get out while there's still time," Mayor Roberto Saturnino Braga told slum dwellers as civil defense officials condemned whole hillside communities.

Flash floods and mudslides have pummeled Rio de Janeiro state since Feb. 2, killing at least 268 people and leaving more than 13,000 homeless.

Rains devastated the nearby mountain resort of Petropolis during the first 10 days, briefly let up for Carnival, then returned late Friday to plague Rio.

The Weather Bureau said an Antarctic cold front over Rio dumped 5.1 inches of rain on Saturday alone. Normal rainfall for the month is 5.5 inches.

Roads turned into raging rivers that tossed cars and carried away shanties, rubbish and stones. The rains washed out city streets, power lines, knocked down large trees and filled homes with mud.

In the wealthy Santa Teresa hillside district, a massive mudslide tumbled onto a three-story hospital wing, killing at least 11 elderly patients and staff. More victims were expected to be pulled from the thick mud.

In the working-class Abolicao district, firefighters continued their search for at least one more resident of a three-story building of six apartments built on a hillside that fell face forward late Sunday.

Officials said 12 bodies were pulled from the concrete and twisted metal, while 16 dwellers were pulled out alive.

Anniversary of Austria's annexation to Germany under cloud

By KEVIN COSTELLOE

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — The government's plan to have President Kurt Waldheim address a ceremony marking the 50th anniversary of Austria's annexation by Nazi Germany is becoming a major point of dispute.

German troops marched into the country nearly 50 years ago, officially linking this Alpine nation with Adolf Hitler's Third Reich. Austria did not become independent again until 1955.

Austrians are marking the annexation — called the Anschluss in German — as a time of reflection on a troubled period when throngs cheered Hitler, Jews were harassed and resistance fighters executed.

Austrian television and radio, along with many of the country's newspapers, are giving much attention to the March 11 commemoration. The issue is especially sensitive because of the widely held opinion in Austria that the country was a "victim" of the Third Reich.

Now, with Waldheim under fire for his role as a first lieutenant in the German army in the Balkans during World War II, it is increasingly uncertain what the bickering coalition government will do on the March 11 anniversary.

Many Austrian Socialists have made it clear they are against the ceremony during which the 69-year-old Waldheim is scheduled to deliver a speech.

"I have misgivings about this event," Fred Sinowatz, the Socialist Party chief and former chancellor, told reporters at a news conference Monday after a meeting of the party's leadership suggested that Waldheim should step down.

The Socialists, senior partner in the government, adopted a resolution saying a report on Waldheim's wartime record released earlier this month has "badly shaken the president's moral authority at home and abroad."

"It has become obvious that...Waldheim...cannot realize the most important aims he has set for himself, that is to promote domestic peace in Austria and to increase Austria's prestige in the world," the resolution said.

The leadership at the meeting, which included Chancellor Franz Vranitzky, stopped short of asking for Waldheim's resignation.

The report on Waldheim's wartime record presented no evidence that would clearly back allegations that he committed wartime atrocities, but it left open the question of whether he was guilty of any crime.

The report, written by an international panel of historians, said he was "in close proximity" to some Nazi atrocities in the Balkans, knew they were going on and made no attempt ot prevent them.

It also said Waldheim concealed his wartime past and tried to make it seem harmless once he could no longer hide it.

Waldheim has denied any wrongdoing.

Instead of a commemoration ceremony, Sinowatz called for reflection of "what happened on March 11, 1938, and what must be done so that such a thing never happens again."

But Deputy Chancellor Alois Mock, a leader of the conservative People's Party, the junior member in the coalition government, rejected the idea of scrapping the ceremony and the Waldheim speech in Vienna's Hofburg Palace.

"That's a suggestion that will never be accepted by the People's Party," said Mock, Waldheim's most vigilant public defender, at a separate news conference Monday where he spoke on behalf of the party.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soviets promise to be flexible on emigration

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union has promised to be more flexible in granting emigration visas to its citizens, Secretary of State George P. Shultz said after conducting two days of talks with Kremlin officials.

However, Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze said the matter of emigration was not open to negotiation.

Soviet officials traditionally define emigration policy as an internal matter. To improve relations with Washington, however, they may have agreed privately to a more lenient look at applications.

Shultz said at a news conference Monday that his meetings with Shevardnadze and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev produced "helpful clarifications" on human rights. Shultz described humanitarian concerns — divided families, Jews refused permission to emigrate, and free expression and practice of religion — as the most important subject on his agenda.

Shevardnadze, in contrast, said the meetings focused on "the pivot of Soviet-U.S. relations": prospects for concluding a treaty by late spring that would reduce the strategic nuclear weapons of both nations by 50 percent.

Protesters 'open books'

LONDON (AP) — Fifty book-lovers spent their third straight day holed up inside a London public library Monday to protest the library's planned closure. They passed the time reading and talking.

"Libraries are vital to civilized life," said protest organizer Roy Charterton, 62, a marketing consultant.

Supporters in the street below the St. Pancras Reference Library used a rope to hoist food supplies up to the protesters.

"We are sleeping on the floor and bringing food up through a window...as we have been told if we leave we cannot get back in," Charterton said.

The sit-in began Saturday and is scheduled to continue until today, when Camden borough councilors are due to meet.

Bombs explode on U.S. base

GOEPPINGEN, West Germany (AP) — Four small bombs exploded in the parking lot of a U.S. military compound early Monday, damaging several cars but causing no injuries, police reported.

They said at least one person climbed the fence around the Cook Barracks before dawn and set six homemade devices on the ground beside parked cars, but only four of the bombs went off.

Police estimated the damage at $2,900. They said no individual or group claimed responsibility for the attack. U.S. officials did not comment on the incident.

Shultz lives it up in 'Fairy Tale'

MOSCOW (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz tasted the fruits of Mikhail S. Gorbachev's reforms first-hand Monday as he hosted a candlelight dinner at a cooperative restaurant that was once a money-losing bar.

The red-brick Skazka ("Fairy Tale") restaurant off southeastern Moscow's Taganka Square would have been illegal before last year's decision by Soviet authorities to loosen laws governing individual labor and cooperative ownership.

"As soon as we heard they were authorizing cooperatives, we decided to start one," said Sergei V. Kutuzov, the head of the nine-member collective that runs the Skazka.

The restaurant, which can seat 34 customers in its upstairs dining room, opened April 1 last year. Its hearty Russian fare swiftly made it so popular with Muscovites and foreign residents that profits soared to as much as $23,300 a month, Kutuzov said.

Skazka's friendly waitresses and prompt service are in stark contrast to the situation that prevails at most of Moscow's state-owned restaurants, where customers sometimes wait for hours before being served.

Cooperatives are also more expensive than state-run restaurants, which has led some Soviets to oppose them as socially unjust.

The dinner menu offered Shultz cost between $25 and $33 per person, Kutuzov said, compared to an average of $3 to $6 for an evening meal in a government-owned restaurant.

Presidential picks VP Bush, Al Gore

Presidential politics being what they are necessarily lend a lot of confusion to voters attempting to choose this important leader. The future of the United States will rest, to a large degree, in the hands of this powerful individual over at least the next four years.

The large number of presidential hopefuls and the complexities of the various issues have muddied the process of narrowing choices to a great extent. But choosing capable and qualified leaders should always rest primarily on an assessment of the duties of the office and the qualifications of the individuals seeking it.

George Bush

Although Bush lived in Midland in the 1950s and has visited here numberous times in the years since, that is not our primary reason for endorsing his candidacy. Rather it's the vice president's extensive governmental experience both domestically and abroad that qualifies him for this top leadership position.

For years Bush's New England roots have been used by his opponents as a weapon to deny his true status as a Texan. Of course it's impossible to deny that Bush was not born in Texas but the same fact applies to thousands of other people who now proudly call Texas home. But all that is truly a non-issue. The fact is Bush did live here for several years, then in Houston and in those years he gleaned invaluable knowledge of the oil and gas industry's importance to the security of the nation and the industry's special needs. While it goes without saying that Bush will not be able to single-handedly awaken the nation to the importance of this industry to the future security of the country, it also must be noted that the nation now needs a president with as much knowledge of the energy industry as possible. Of all the candidates running, Bush is that man.

His critics also charge that Bush cannot lead effectively and that he lacks forcefulness. On the contrary, we believe that Bush has served ably and admirably in a difficult second-in-command position for eight years and can bring to the presidency a wealth of expertise gleaned in that office, while directing the Central Intelligence Agency and while serving as the United States' representative to the United Nations.

Bush has done a great job in all the positions in which he has served. In fact, President Ronald Reagan recently praised Bush as "the finest Vice President I have any recollection of." In an article that appeared in Fortune magazine earlier this month, it was noted that one matter Bush did not receive credit for was his management of the U.S. invasion of Grenada. At the time Reagan was vacationing in North Carolina with Secretary of State George Shultz. Robert McFarlane recalled that Bush analyzed the Cuban threat to Grenada and urged Reagan to invade. McFarlane was quoted as saying:

"Bush squeezed all the available knowledge out of the bureaucracy, using a clear setpiece checklist that included defining the threat, the available resources, and the impact on Soviet and allied relations. He was methodical, efficient, steady, and quite composed. It was fairly impressive."

That's only one insight to the quality of leadership Americans would see under George Bush. We believe he should be the clear choice of Republican voters March 8th.

Albert Gore

Although the numerous Democratic presidential hopefuls have been categorized as the "seven dwarfs" and as lacking in both substance and identity, Gore appears to be an exception in a couple of significant respects. One is that he is deemed by far the most conservative of the pack, which will make him more palatable to a greater number of Texans. The second is that he is enough of a rebel to not merely go along with the crowd for the sake of sameness.

While serving in the House of Representatives, Gore acquired the reputation of a "muckraker" for his instigation of a number of investigations. But after winning election to the Senate, Gore quickly became noted for finding the middle ground to help resolve sticky issues. In fact, he has been something of a team player on recent issues and should be a rising star in the Democratic Party in coming years.

The real difficulty for Gore appears to be removing himself enough from the pack to appeal to Texas voters without appearing to be so different that he loses the conservative Democrats who still don't want to vote Republican. In any case, we believe Gore is the best choice for Texas Democrats.

Don't frighten public

Recently three girlfriends, a 5-year-old child and I stopped at a convenience store to use the pay phone. While our friend was dialing we saw something we will not easily forget. A man came out running. He had a plastic garbage bag wrapped around his head. Holes were cut for his eyes, mouth and nose — ski-mask style, terrorist-style. In one hand was a weapon; in the other, money falling to the ground.

For what seemed an eternity he stared right at us. We expected him to shoot us or run toward us so we yelled frantically at our pregnant friend to get in my little car. I immediately took off in reverse and stayed in reverse for a block, almost running over a fence into a backyard.

After calming down we went to a nearby home to call the Midland police. They said they would check on it. We carefully drove back, staying a safe distance away to watch what developed. We saw a woman with a child go in and not come out. As a mother, I pictured them held hostage!

Finally a kind-looking gentleman came out and got into a pickup. Being more curious than brave we approached him saying, "We saw the robber, the money." He said, "Yes, you did! You saw a Crimestoppers re-enactment of a crime that really took place. They are filming it for television."

We felt a variety of emotions — silly, happy, relieved, and even a little angry. What if instead of four women and a child we had been four cowboys with guns in our pickup? What if I had driven forward and run over him? Or wrecked my car? Who would be responsible?

We feel catching criminals is very important. Although we do have an exciting memory to talk about and laugh at ourselves over, couldn't they prevent frightening the public by posting a sign telling what is going on?

Terrorists' methods crude, effective

WASHINGTON — Terrorists have demonstrated a curious lack of imagination when it comes to exploiting high technology to achieve their deadly aims.

Jack Anderson

This is the conclusion reached by a task force of Pentagon experts who spent last summer studying the means and methods used to detect and neutralize drug traffickers and terrorists. We previously reported the panel's opinion, published in a secret report, that drug kingpins and law enforcement authorities are engaged in a furious "technology race," and the likely winner is still in doubt.

Terrorists, on the other hand, seem mired in the era of rotary phones and mimeograph machines. Their devices are effective — diabolically so — but they are essentially updated versions of old techniques. The good news is that the technology is primitive. The bad news is that primitive still works.

"Most of the tactics and operations (terrorists) have considered are essentially 'more of the same,'" the task force's secret report states. The old standbys include the letter bomb (an invention of the 1940s for which Jewish extremists in Palestine get credit), the car bomb, the radio-controlled car bomb, the radio-controlled boat bomb and the suicide vehicle bomb.

"There also have been innovations in fusing and detonating devices: the barometric-pressure fuse invented by the Palestinians to blow up airliners in flight, the long-term delay mechanism used by the IRA in the attempt on British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's life, the manufacture of homemade mortars," the report says. "These innovations could all be categorized as enhancements and variations. The basic tactics have changed little over the years."

What technological and tactical advances are terrorists likely to make use of in the coming years? The experts offered these prognostications:

■ Security measures designed to protect American embassies from car bombs could persuade terrorists to attempt "aerial suicide attacks ... or standoff attacks, using remotely fired rockets or mortars."

■ Better security at U.S. embassies might cause terorists to "engage less heavily defended targets such as American schools abroad."

■ Attacks on electrical power grids and energy systems will continue to be used as a routine tactic by both rural and urban guerrilla groups.

■ It is virtually certain, in the opinion of most terrorist experts, "that by the year 2000, terrorists will employ shoulder-fired, precision-guided, surface-to-air missiles to shoot down civilian planes."

■ Contamination of food, pharmaceutical products and water supplies are crimes "clearly on the rise," but they have been favored more by "criminal extortionists, malevolent pranksters and mentally unbalanced persons" than by terrorists. It remains to be seen whether this will change.

■ Large-scale terrorist use of "chemical or biological warfare is considered to be unlikely — though not impossible — in the near-term future."

One high-tech device terrorists have exploited to the hilt is television. The task force addressed the subject but tactfully offered both sides of the argument:

"Terrorist acts are newsworthy, and the media see coverage as a professional, competitive responsibility. Some in the media have claimed that intense coverage helps to preserve the key factors in an incident, and that putting the hostages on television may actually save their lives.

"Others contend that information released by the media can interfere with resolution of an incident, foreclose options for dealing with it, or unwittingly provide intelligence information to terrorists."

ANOTHER REASON TO QUIT? — You may be inhaling more than smoke if your cigarettes are made with imported tobacco. Federal investigators have looked at the way the U.S. Department of Agriculture inspects foreign tobacco and found that much of it does not get checked for poisonous pesticides. If a tobacco grower tells the USDA that he does not use poisons, the inspectors usually take his word for it. They test only one out of every 50 pounds of tobacco if the importer admits to using dangerous pesticides, and only one out of every million from importers who say they don't use the poisons.

The USDA also fails to test for such potential dangers as radiation.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The Chinese are rattling their diplomatic sabres, complaining that the United States meddles too much in their internal business. A Chinese magazine recently printed a commentary to that effect by a government official — sort of a diplomatic request to "butt out." Excuse us if we complain when they sell Silkworm missiles to Iran. Pardon us for pointing out that they are brutalizing Tibetans. If we lack courtesy, it is better than lacking courage. Our State Department is already too timid when it comes to criticizing the Chinese. It is smart to keep them on our side rather than letting them lean too heavily toward the Soviet Union. But that cannot be done at the expense of principle.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Going to dentist isn't really that painful!

Because I have an artificial aortic valve in what's left of my heart, I must be on constant guard against infections.

Grizzard

Get an infection of any sort, and the bugs can go directly to my implanted valve and eat it.

This happened to me once, and it was necessary to go through a second valve surgery to replace the one that infection had damaged beyond repair.

Sometimes, I can take the antibiotics orally. Other times, such as when I go to the dentist, for instance, I must take the antibiotics intravenously.

The reason I must take antibiotics before going to the dentist is because of all the ugly things I've said about dentists.

I've been so nasty to dentists, one is likely to drill a hole in my gums to get even and such a thing could cause an infection.

Taking antibiotics often can have side effects, such as causing one to itch terribly, which has happened to me.

I can take the itching, however. The very real problem I have is Jack the Ripper couldn't find one of my veins into which he could successfully insert an IV needle.

"Not you again," say the nurses who greet me at the treatment room where I get my antibiotics before being placed on the dentist's rack.

The greats and the near-greats have attempted to stick me successfully with an IV needle without a great deal of time and effort, and they all have failed.

"You have the worst veins I've ever seen," I've heard hundreds of times.

My veins, in other words, are located deep under my skin and they are small. When one of those needle people tries to stick me, my veins, intelligent that they are, move even deeper under the skin and become moving targets thus harder to hit.

I had to go to the dentist just the other day. First, I had to stop at the hospital to get my antibiotics.

Several nurses attempted to insert a needle for the IV.

They poked the top of my hands. They poked on the side of my wrists and arms.

I gritted my teeth, squirmed, screamed, moaned and groaned. Then, I became abusive and threatening.

On my most recent trip to the dentist, it took three hours to get a needle into me and shoot my body full of infection fighters. I left feeling like George Bush's Robert Dole voodoo doll.

The only positive side of all this is that after being gouged by needles for half a day, going to the dentist doesn't seem nearly as painful or frightening as it once did.

I didn't tell my dentist that, though. I just didn't have the heart to ruin his day.

CHARLEY REESE

Listen to Robertson rather than attackers

The more Pat Robertson succeeds in the Republican nomination race, the more intense the attacks on him will become.

Charley Reese

To evaluate these attacks, there are several things to keep in mind.

One source of the attacks will be the Republican Party establishment which always resents outsiders. You would think a partisan party official would welcome new recruits but they never do if those new recruits wish to challenge them for control of the party.

The fight for Barry Goldwater took place inside the Republican Party as political conservatives switched registration and ousted the old line Republican regulars who opposed Goldwater. The most vicious attacks against the Arizona senator came not from Democrats, but from Republicans. The old line party regulars were saying the same things about conservatives in the 1960s as today's regulars are saying about Robertson's supporters.

These attacks have nothing to do with Robertson per se but are just a repeat of the eternal conflict between the new and the old, between change and status quo, between the ambitious and the privileged.

Robertson is also being attacked by libertarians because he does not bow down at the altar of blind faith in laissez-faire capitalism. An executive of the Cato Institute, a libertarian think tank, recently ridiculed Robertson as a crack populist for his distrust of big banks and his condemnation of greed.

It is the libertarians, however, who are the crackpots. Robertson is in the good and wise company of such men as Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, and Teddy Roosevelt who recognized the immorality of monopoly and greed and also took a dim view of big banks.

Only the crackpot de la creme would view the fraud, deceit, bribery, and other immoralities of the robber barons as a desirable working of the free market. Especially since a free market was an idea hated intensely by these monopolists. The original Rockefeller did not go to such extremes to destroy his rivals in order to foster a free market for the Standard Oil Trust.

The main attack against Robertson, however, will come from the secular folks. Secular folks come in a broad range of political and economic beliefs but they share one thing in common — a disbelief in and hostility toward traditional religion.

Since in their minds religion is superstition, all religious people are by definition ignorant cranks. What they despise and fear in Robertson are not his political views but his religious faith. To a secular mind, Robertson is hardly any different than the Ayatollah Khomeini.

In fact, of course, many of the greatest intellects in history have been people of deep religious faith and many of America's most revered and wisest leaders have been men of deep religious faith — George Washington and Abraham Lincoln to name just two. Robertson is certainly no more religious than these two men.

Because the secular mind is found in profusion in the media, entertainment and academia, the reality of religion in America has been largely banished from public sight and only hauled out occasionally as an oddity or object of ridicule. Unfortunately the chief characteristics of the intelligentsia these days are ignorance and superficiality. It takes a far greater leap of faith to believe in the perfectibility of man than it does to believe in the existence of a deity.

I don't know if Robertson will succeed or fail but he deserves a fair hearing and unfortunately, he's not likely to get it from the TV networks or from most of the print writers. Yes, Virginia, there really is bias and it isn't all racial.

The best advice is to examine Robertson's own words and pay not much attention to what others say he says or has said. For that matter, it's wise to do that with all the candidates.

Driver's life is on the road

AP Laserphoto

Vera Brewer, a seasoned truck and bus driver, says driving the city bus in Waco has been her favorite job.

WACO (AP) — After driving a city bus for eight hours a day, Vera Brewer climbs into her pickup for a few more hours on the road.

Between work and personal errands, Mrs. Brewer estimates she drives more than 100 miles a day.

That might seem like a lot, but it's almost normal for this Waco woman who has spent half her life driving trucks and buses for a living.

"When I was 22 years old, I drove an 18-wheeler and later drove a school bus for WISD," she said.

Mrs. Brewer also worked as a courier for the Waco Pathology Clinic and drove a transportation vehicle for the Family Practice Clinic.

While working for a company in West Texas, Mrs. Brewer said, she drove an 18-wheeler about 150 miles a day. As a courier for the pathology clinic, she covered about 219 miles a day.

"My husband had been driving an 18-wheeler and he quit, so I went to work for the company," Mrs. Brewer said. She had done relief work earlier and decided she liked driving enough to make it a full-time job.

"My daddy was a cemetery caretaker, and I said anything beats what he's doing," she said. "I used to have to pull weeds when I was a kid. I wanted something easier."

What Mrs. Brewer did not want was an office job that kept her indoors all day or an outdoor job that left her outside in all types of weather. Driving seemed to offer that something in between, she said.

One of her favorite jobs was working for the Family Practice Clinic driving people to and from the doctor's office. Cuts in government funds eliminated that position, and Mrs. Brewer went to work for the city.

"When I first started, it was very tiring," she said of the bus-driving job she has had three years. "A lot of the rest of the other bus drivers didn't like relief, but it's something different."

Instead of one route, Mrs. Brewer basically has five and drives a different one every day.

"I enjoy my job, it's not boring," she said. "I've been asked by passengers, 'How do you do this all day? You act like you're driving a Volkswagen.'"

Watching Mrs. Brewer drive, one can hardly argue. Without hesitation, she pulls out into the lanes of traffic on Fourth street. Turning left onto Washington Avenue, her hand follows the steering wheel around the back to its former position with the ease of years of experience.

Throughout the bus trip, Mrs. Brewer made turns and lane changes with the ease of driving a compact car.

The majority of Mrs. Brewer's passengers are regulars who ride the bus to work every day. Mrs. Brewer said there is not much time for conversation, but she manages to learn names and a little personal information about many of them.

Much of her job satisfaction, she said, comes from the feeling that she is helping someone.

"Most of the people who ride the bus don't have any other way to work or to the store," Mrs. Brewer said. "I feel I'm doing something to help. It's not like I'm out here just drawing a paycheck."

However, there are times when driving her route doesn't seem to be enough.

"There are times when I wish I could take them to the store or to the doctor," she said. "Maybe I'll put that on my car, 'Vera's Taxi.'"

About two years ago, Mrs. Brewer expressed her care for others in the form of Christmas cards.

On a trip to a flea market, Mrs. Brewer found a large box of Christmas cards.

"I wanted to go through them all and pick out the ones I wanted, so I decided to buy the whole box," she said. Once home, she wondered what to do with the rest and decided to give them to her passengers.

"They were surprised."

Hubcap king has large collection

RIVERSIDE, Ohio (AP) — Oliff Brown is content to watch the world rush by his once-abandoned gasoline service station, knowing that in due course it will make a path to where he spends his days with 9,000 hubcaps.

For eight years motorists have helped Brown add to the collection of hubcaps in the back of the station and in a nearby shed.

From Nash and Studebaker to Cadillac and Buick, with some Volkswagen hubcaps thrown in, if Brown doesn't have it, it probably isn't worth having.

"I got some '55s there. I got a few '60s, too," Brown said, gesturing to a wall covered with shiny steel, then jabbing his finger to a pile on the floor. "Got some '62 Chevrolets right there...

"There's some I've got here I really don't know what they go on."

There are "wires" with wire-spoked centers and "spinners" with centers that look like knife blades on the wheels of a Roman chariot. Even plastic, which brings a sneer from Brown about the way new cars are built.

"If you even hit a curb with one of them, that's it," Brown said.

Brown, 64, said he spent most of his life as a construction laborer and factory worker, and still does that when the mood strikes him.

He said he bought the business from his brother-in-law, who moved to Tennessee. Three years ago, Brown moved it from Fairborn to Riverside, both suburbs northeast of Dayton.

Brown said he checked with police and learned 17,000 cars pass daily on the old Springfield Road.

"I get a lot of lookers," but few buyers, he said. "You couldn't make a living at this. You couldn't sell enough of them. It's just something to do."

So Brown doesn't worry about profit and loss or marketing, aside from the few shiny hubcaps he hangs outside.

Instead, he settles back into a plush car seat cover on his lawn chair, enjoys the warmth from his kerosene heater, listens to the radio and savors a plug of chewing tobacco, occasionally spitting into a nearby coffee can.

In summer he changes the routine a bit — he sits outside and waits for his stock to come rolling in.

"They'll come in here, and some guys want to sell 'em. They've picked 'em up on the road. Others, they'll come in and want to trade for a set of wires," Brown said.

Occasionally, Brown will go to a local scrap yard and pick up a load for 50 cents a pound. He said a well-made hubcap can weigh 2 pounds and wires up to 6, but most of the junkyard hubcaps are so dented he can't use them.

Brown said many of his suppliers are state workers who find hubcaps along the road when they mow grass. But he won't go out searching, partly because the police frown on it, he said, and because "I don't put that much time in it. I just come down here and open up."

Brown keeps inventory in his head and said he can tell almost immediately when a car drives in if he has what the owner needs.

He'll sell you a $100 wire hubcap for $25 and a regular one for $5 or $10.

With respect for workmanship, he grabs one of the wire hubcaps from a pile and begins describing how to take it apart for cleaning. Many people don't like them because they are difficult to keep clean, he said.

Brown said he spends many nights in the basement of his house cleaning hubcaps in big steel tubs of water.

Besides the Volkswagen set, Brown said he has few foreign hubcaps. They're hard to get and few fit other cars well, he said.

Deer snub protective highway tunnels

FROSTBURG, Md. (AP) — Possibly spooked by light at the end of the tunnel, deer have been shy about using four passageways recently installed for them under a new Maryland interstate highway.

The State Highway Administration built four corrugated steel culverts under sections of Interstate 97 near Annapolis in hopes of encouraging animals to cross under instead of over the roadway.

Researchers at the University of Maryland's Appalachian Environmental Laboratory in Frostburg are trying to find out if animals are using the underpasses. So far they've found mink, mice, muskrat and raccoon, but no deer have ventured through the dimly lighted pathways.

"To us, the opening (at the other end) looks fairly large," said William R. Gates, a graduate assistant working on the project. "But for deer, it's like going into a cave or tunnel and they aren't used to going into enclosures."

Several other states have tried culverts, but little has been done to document their use.

The state and federal highway administrations are funding the $210,000, five-year study in hopes of finding a way to reduce the number of animals killed on American highways.

According to the Federal Highway Administration, an estimated 200,000 deer die each year on U.S. roads. However, Doug Smith, an FHA ecologist, said the number was a conservative estimate. More than 25,000 are killed each year on roads in states with high deer populations, such as Pennsylvania.

The study also aims to learn more about what happens to a wildlife area when it is bisected by a highway. The interstate cuts through woods near Crownsville State Hospital.

Researchers are observing tracks and using a wildlife surveillance system to monitor animal activity in the culverts. Movement at the tunnel openings trips sensors on video cameras, which film the activity day or night.

"So far we had a deer enter the culvert and then come back out," Gates said.

Recent flooding inside the tunnels might have discouraged some animals from using them, but Gates said he suspected the culverts might not be large enough.

Three of the culverts are 15 feet high, 21 feet wide and about as long as a football field. The fourth is even longer, at more than 500 feet. Perhaps the deer assume they cannot get through what they perceive is a tiny opening at the other end, Gates said.

"The only evidence I have is that we have had several deer approach the culverts, but they have not gone in," he said.

If the culverts prove successful, they would be a cheaper than bridges, which cost four to five times more to build and maintain, said William L. Branch, environmental specialist with Maryland's highway administration.

Elderly in Britain's Polish refugee camp will remain

The original aim of the 40 camps was to provide accommodation while the refugees learned English and prepared for life in Britain.

LONDON (AP) — The locals call it Little Poland but the official name of Britain's last Polish refugee camp is Ilford Park, a quiet corner of rural Devon in southwest England.

In 1947, 650 refugees arrived there, part of a total of 130,000 Poles given asylum in Britain after World War II. Now only 130 live there. Their average age is 78 and some are over 90.

Some still speak no English and they live in homes converted from buildings first erected by the U.S. Army as a hospital and later used as a wartime barracks for American troops.

Conditions are Spartan but for the residents, Ilford Park is home and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government recently granted their wish and told them they could stay.

News that the department was preparing a report on the future of the 38-acre camp had worried the elderly residents. Ilford Park is the sole survivor of 40 camps set up in Britain after the war to house Poles who fought under British command, and their dependents.

The original aim of the 40 camps was to provide accommodation while the refugees learned English and prepared for life in Britain.

But, scarred by wartime hardships, some were temperamentally unsuited to a life outside while others found jobs in the kitchens and laundry and simply never left. As the camps closed, those who remained were sent to Ilford Park.

"Everyone here carries their own nightmares. The (wartime) suffering and hardship they endured is quite extraordinary," said camp manager Maurice Clark.

Janine Swiecicka, 60, who runs the camp shop, said: "Everyone likes living here. Those who remain like to be surrounded by others of their own nationality."

Another resident is Czeslaw Krynski, who joined the camp in 1986 with his second wife, Zophia. He arrived in Britain in 1946 and worked in sawmills in Liverpool and Manchester in northern England until his retirement in 1963.

Krynski, like thousands of other Poles, was sent to Siberia in 1940 with his first wife and son. He spent two years there before joining the 2nd Polish Corps under the late Gen. Wladyslaw Anders, the Polish leader captured by the Soviets after the partition of Poland between the Soviets and Nazi Germany in 1939.

Anders was released from prison in the Soviet Union in 1941 and led Polish prisoners into Persia, where the British had offered to arm and equip them to fight the Germans.

Krynski made his way with the corps to Tehran, then to Jordan and Palestine before fighting alongside the British in Italy, in particular in the bloody campaign to capture Monte Cassino. The 2nd Polish Corps captured the stronghold in May 1944 after three attempts by other troops failed.

Krynski said: "I chose to come to live in England but my health suffered after my retirement. We applied for the camp and we are very pleased to be living here."

Another resident, 82-year-old Stefan Polak, was working in an ammunition factory in southern Poland when the Germans invaded. He escaped but ran into the Soviets, who accused him of spying and imprisoned him. He was sent to Siberia in 1941 but later joined the Polish Air Force and made his way to Teliran.

He fought at the Allied D-Day invasion of Nazi-occupied Europe in June 1944 and after the war stayed in Germany until 1947, when he came to England and set up business as a barber in the south coast port of Southampton. He retired in 1971 and as a widower was one of 18 Poles accepted by Ilford Park last year.

burglar — (noun) The word "burglar" comes from a 13th century Anglo-Latin word, "burglator" from "burg," or dwelling and "latro," or thief. A burglar is one who enters a building illegally with the intention of stealing. Keeping doors and windows locked and a light on outside at night are two suggestions police often make in the effort to discourage burglars.

AN OPEN LETTER TO CUSTOMERS OF FIRST REPUBLICBANK

Dear Friends:

During the past few days there have been several articles and news stories about the current state of our bank. Many of the items reported in these articles have been misleading and some just plain wrong. Consequently, we feel it necessary to respond to these reports.

1. Merger Rumors:

   First RepublicBank has no plans to merge with another institution.

2. Deposit Safety:

   Your deposits are backed by more than $3 billion of total capital in the state's largest financial institution. We continue to have a well-diversified funding base, with about 88% of the company's assets funded through core deposits, regional sources and other non-interest-bearing funds -- primarily gathered through its 134 banking centers in Texas. And as you know, deposits are insured up to $100,000 by the FDIC.

3. Deposit Activity:

   There have been several misleading newspaper stories concerning our bank's recent deposit activity. Through mid-February, the corporation's average total deposits have only declined by approximately 4-1/2 percent this year. More than half of the reduction was an expected decline in foreign deposits with the balance due primarily to normal seasonal factors.

These are not the best of times for any of us in Texas. But we are totally committed to serving your needs and contributing to your success. We are here for the long term. And as we all know, it is tough times that bring out the best in all of us.

There is one additional thought we want to communicate to you. If you have any concerns or questions that we have not addressed here, we encourage you to call or, better yet, come in and visit with your friends at First RepublicBank.

We thank you for your trust and for your continued support.

County Commissioners table housing authority resolution

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Midland County Commissioners must find answers to legal questions before a resolution creating a county housing authority can be approved, according to the county attorney.

On Monday, the commissioners, county housing director Jerrie Westmoreland, County Auditor Floyd Jarnagin, and County Attorney Mark Dettman discussed the resolution and its impact on current programs administered by the county: rental assistance funded by the federal government and rental rehabilitation funded by the state.

Ms. Westmoreland, who appeared at the regular commissioners' meeting with several of the proposed housing board's five members, urged passage of the resolution so that application for grants could get under way.

"Apparently, realistically, we've got to form a (housing) board," Precinct 1 Commissioner Durward Wright said. "I would like to see the umbilical cord cut."

But Jarnagin and Dettman told commissioners that legal questions concerning the transfer of property and the legal relationship between the county and the housing authority had to be answered before the resolution could be adopted.

"It is a real headache dealing with the Feds, and if things work like it is proposed now, and keep the county tied into it, there will be an annual audit," instead of no audit if ties between the county and housing board are severed, Dettman said.

The resolution will not be re-presented to commissioners until sometime next month, Dettman said.

"I will not be able to do the research and find the answers until the month is over," Dettman said.

If approved, the county housing authority would be a separate government entity.

Commissioners also tranferred the Meals on Wheels program contract to Community and Senior Services, Inc., from Midland Senior Citizens, Inc. The program will receive continued funding from revenue sharing monies, Jarnagin told the group.

In other action, Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter told commissioners that because of the ongoing jail renovation, the jail kitchen will have to be closed for two months. In the interim, Painter said meals will be cooked at the South Side Lions' Club and transported to the jail.

Painter said the change requires that the jail's part-time cook be hired full-time for the two-month period.

Following the commissioners' approval, the jail now will have two full-time cooks temporarily, Painter said.

The commissioners' court next scheduled meeting is March 14.

Sweetwater lawyer garners Perot's SBOE endorsement

By JEANETTE ALLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — H. Ross Perot's political action committee working to protect school reforms made under House Bill 72 Monday endorsed a Sweetwater lawyer for the State Board of Education.

James Wilks is running against three Democrats in the March 8 primary for the West Texas-area District 14, which includes Midland.

Dallas billionaire Perot, chairman of the blue-ribbon panel that recommended the 1984 reforms, and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby join several dozen civic leaders on the political action committee called Texans for Education, Excellence and Schools (TEXAS).

The committee did not issue recommendations for the primary in four districts in which incumbents are running — two in contested elections.

Inmate gains partial victory on appeal

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A federal convict who repeatedly lost court battles, including an attempted jail-escape charge, finally "won" part of a case in federal appellate court.

The convict, Wayne Ross Brunson, has been convicted in federal court of carrying a hazardous chemical aboard an airliner, bail jumping, contempt of court, illegal possession of firearms, possession of drugs, and attempted jail escape.

For those offenses and convictions covering three cases, Brunson was sentenced by U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton to 22 years in prison.

Brunson and two other federal prisoners allegedly attempted to escape from the federal wing of Midland City Jail in April 1987 after Bunton already had sentenced Brunson to 17 years in prison. A jury convicted him of the escape attempt, and the 27-year-old Brunson got an additional five years to serve. His total prison time then came to 22 years.

But it was on the firearms-contempt-and-bail-jumping case in which Brunson got some relief.

A jury in March 1987 convicted Brunson for those offenses, and the judge later sentenced Brunson to 12 years on those convictions. Brunson received three years on each of three counts of unlawful receipt and possession of firearms and three years for bail-jumping. The three-year sentence for contempt ran concurrently with the bail-jumping sentence. Midland lawyer H.W. "Woody" Leverett Jr. had defended Brunson in the trial.

In its ruling, the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, La., said that a "defendant may not be punished for separate offenses of receipt and possession of the same weapons."

The appellate court said that three sentences for receiving and possessing the same weapons, a rifle and a handgun, were "improper."

"The district court (Bunton) at resentencing may choose only one of the first three counts for sentencing," the appellate court ruled.

Midland lawyer Tom Morgan, who handled the appeal for Brunson, noted that instead of nine years for the three firearms counts, "the most he (Brunson) can get now is three years. Six years have been knocked off."

If that turns out to be the case at resentencing, which has not yet been docketed, then Brunson's total sentences in three cases could be reduced to 16 years from 22 years.

Vogler's perseverance saves state water district millions

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Ed Vogler doesn't give up.

He perseveres like an unfaltering trooper marching with a sure and high cause through the dark shadows with only a flickering light to guide him.

He's not easily discouraged.

"If I believe in something, I'm going to follow it through," said Vogler.

And so he followed and hounded his snake-case cause and won a water-snake fight to save millions of dollars on the $70-million Stacy Dam and Reservoir project to provide water for West Texas well into the 21th Century.

Vogler, a Midland civic leader and consulting geologist and independent oil operator, suspected that the Concho River water snake wasn't so rare as to be a threatened or endangered species.

He said he had spotted the snake on his West Texas ranch and elsewhere and took up the fight to save most of the $3.7 million budgeted by the Colorado River Municipal Water District (CRMWD) to fund research into the snake and to build shallow-water habitats for the creature.

A federal permit to build the dam across the river was contingent on protection of the snake.

Vogler, convinced that the snake was not a rare sort, without fanfare called on the assistance of United States Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas to hound the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) into double checking into the snake's prevalence.

The USFWS did so. And the USFWS, apparently persuaded that the snake's habitats were extensive, temporarily withdrew its mandate that money be spent on protecting the snake.

Construction of the Stacy Dam and Reservoir ultimately will be paid for by users of Stacy water — West Texans, including those in Midland, Odessa, San Angelo, Big Spring, Abilene and Snyder.

"WHENEVER THEY (taxing or other public entities) say, 'Don't worry about it; we're not spending taxpayers' dollars,' that runs up a red flag," Vogler said.

"I always get a little suspect. Because if they are spending dollars, it's going to cost the taxpayers one way or another. That just throws up a red flag for me. You are going to pay for it through water rates" in the case of Stacy Dam or through "hospital bills, local taxes, or whatever" in other instances.

"When I first got down the road with Gramm, he went directly to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Washington (D.C.)," Vogler said. He said he knew Gramm would be persistent and would be effective in dealing with the agency.

Reagan warns governors against welfare moves

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan cautioned the nation's governors Monday against pressing for costly federal solutions to the problems of welfare and child care.

His remarks to the National Governors' Association were labeled a disappointment by Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, a Democratic presidential hopeful, who said Reagan should be backing the governors' bipartisan welfare reform bill in the Senate.

Reagan instead said he still strongly supports a less costly Republican alternative that the House rejected two months ago.

He also cautioned the governors to go slow on the issue of child care, where both Democrats and Republicans in Congress are proposing to expand federal support and subsidies for working parents.

"Maybe it's my conservative bent, but I can't help but feel uneasy sometimes," he told the governors gathered in the East Room of the White House.

Welfare programs have become "a crippling poverty trap...They keep the poor poor," Reagan said. "Now, much of the push for child care is designed to rectify the ills of earlier programs, and many of these efforts are timely and good. But in this area, more than any other, government should tread carefully."

Reagan said the alternative bill sponsored by House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., would also give states freedom to "develop your own ideas on child care."

Afterwards, Dukakis told reporters that he was very disappointed.

"Just one word from the president, I think, would get this bill passed and done before the election, and get it off the table as a partisan issue and get going," said Dukakis.

"He keeps telling us stories about California, and we're trying to explain to him that the vast majority of people on welfare these days are single mothers with young children, and it's a combination of real training for real jobs, combined with day care, that makes a difference," said Dukakis.

Howard Baker, Reagan's chief of staff, said Reagan would veto the House-passed welfare reform bill, but might approve a less expensive measure still being shaped by the Senate Finance Committee.

The governors are pushing Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan's bill, which would toughen enforcement of child support, help states pay for job training and make participation mandatory for most unemployed adults. It would also provide some transitional Medicaid and welfare benefits for families exiting the relief rolls for work.

Moynihan, a New York Democrat, has 56 co-sponsors for his bill, which would cost $2.3 billion over five years, compared to the $4.3 billion House bill, which would raise benefits and prohibit states from denying welfare to families with both parents in the home.

Baker said the Moynihan bill is not yet satisfactory, but he held out the hope that Moynihan and Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., might be able to fashion a compromise satisfactory to Reagan.

Heinz, like Moynihan a member of the Senate Finance Committee, has not introduced an alternative bill.

Moynihan said in a telephone interview he heard two messages from Reagan: "One says that we're going to veto the House bill. The other says we can try to work something out. I choose to respond to the second message. There's too much at stake here. If the president is interested in the subject, I'll be happy to work with Sen. Heinz on anything."

Rep. Tom Downey, D-N.Y., who spearheaded passage of the House bill, said in an interview, "The time to do something about welfare is now and the only person who seems opposed to it or looking at the past is the president. We're not going to end child poverty by leaving it to the states to do it. They don't have the money."

Illinois Gov. James Thompson, a Republican, told reporters, "I think there's just a fundamental disagreement about how far to go on welfare reform, especially with regard to cost. The governors changed their mind, not the president." But despite that sticking point, Thompson said, "I still hold out hope that between the administration and the Senate we'll get a bill."

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, a Democrat who is leading the governors' push for welfare reform, emerged from the meeting and said he felt Reagan was open to compromise.

"I am encouraged because basically their negotiating strategy with everybody always is to take the hardest possible line and then come off of it at the end," Clinton said.

Orange sheriff's office cuts drug confiscations

ORANGE (AP) — A federal probe of Orange County Sheriff James Wade is costing the county money by suspending government grants and other opportunities to defray costs of drug investigations, deputies say.

Last week, deputies said they were not invited to aid in the arrest of three men on marijuana charges because of the investigation of Wade in connection with the manufacture and distribution of methamphetamines. Wade has not been charged.

Nonetheless, the probe has meant Orange County will not share in proceeds from a $100,000 drug-related confiscation, deputies say. In addition, the county is being denied a $150,000 grant and money budgeted for use in so-called drug "buys," deputies say.

Suspension of money for narcotics work forced the layoffs of three undercover agents and a secretary hired with grant money, they say.

"They (county fiscal officers) won't even give us the funds we've been budgeted," Chief Deputy Newton Johnson said.

The grant was not taken away from the Orange area, but suspended from administration by Wade while the FBI investigation proceeds, according to Texas Narcotics Control Program Director John Coffel.

Coffel said a decision on who gets the money will be made by an administrative committee in Austin, based on the recommendation of Orange County Judge James Stringer.

Capt. Wayne Dial, head of the Orange county narcotics unit, said the sting operation originally was initiated by Orange County over a year ago.

Under the original plan, the marijuana would have been brought into Orange County where sheriff's deputies could have shared in the seizure of property associated with the arrests after a conviction was obtained, said U.S. Attorney Bob Wortham.

Instead the drugs were brought into adjacent Jefferson County and the arrests were made by agents there.

"I'm talking about a lot of man hours...Now they turn around and exclude us and we can't recover any of the taxpayer's money we have invested," said Lt. Carl Smith of the Orange County narcotics office, who was involved in the case for more than a year.

Had its officers been involved, Orange County would have received a shrimp boat valued at about $100,000, Smith said.

Wortham said he made the decision to exclude the Orange County officers because of the FBI investigation of Wade.

"I don't feel my office can work with the Orange County narcotics officers," Wortham said.

Orange County officers say they have remained silent on the sheriff's investigation because of a gag order placed on Wade's case by U.S. District Judge Howell Cobb last month.

"This has nothing to do with the sheriff, so we can speak up," Smith said.

In other developments, deputies say Orange County Attorney Steve Howard is not pursuing their drug cases and is participating in a total shutdown of anti-drug operations in the county.

"We have 23 dealer cases over there to be presented to the grand jury for sealed indictments," Dial said. "These are dealer cases, cases where people have sold dope to undercover narcotics officers, good cases. We took them to the county attorney the first week in January, and nothing's happened on them.

"Some of these people (drug dealers) are back in business right now, selling drugs," said Dial.

Howard refused to confirm or deny whether his office was accepting cases from the county's narcotics officers.

"The timing is at the sole discretion of the county attorney and the grand jury," Howard said of the presentation of the cases for indictments. "I can't confirm or deny anything having to do with the grand jury."

Ector County seeks bids on airport improvements

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners Monday authorized the county engineer to advertise for engineering proposals on $1.78 million in planned improvements at the county airport.

Explaining the request for permission to advertise for bids, Don Bonifay said the application for the project is currently being reviewed by the Federal Aviation Administration.

Because the project "will need to proceed at a rapid pace" if approved, he said he was recommending the court hire an engineering firm with the understanding the project would be dropped in the event the FAA rejects the proposal.

Commissioners on Nov. 8, 1987 approved submission of a grant application seeking $1.6 million in federal funds that would be used to improve drainage, runways and taxiways at the county-owned faxility.

Under FAA funding formulas, Ector County would put up the remaining 10 percent, about $178,570, of the $1.78 million.

In submitting the proposal last November, Bonifay, airport manager Lynn McLaughlin and airport board member Buzz Hurt explained that the condition of runways and taxiways at the airport were such that certain types of aircraft were precluded from using the facility.

Commissioners also approved a request to move the airport manager's office from the present location in the ECISD tax office building, immediately east of the courthouse where the county purchasing office has been located, to a location in the FBO (fixed base operator) building at the airport.

Bonifay told commissioners the relocation has been approved by airport board members, who believe Ms. McLaughlin and her secretary will be able to function more effectively with her office located at the airport.

Grand jurors won't issue felony indictment in burned body case

LUBBOCK (AP) — A Lubbock County grand jury declined Monday to return an indictment in the case of a man whose badly burned body was found in a trash bin.

The panel concluded that Jack Doherty, 84, died of pneumonia and that his body was burned after he was already dead. His body was found, burned almost beyond recognition, in a Dempsey Dumpster on Jan. 19, 12 days after he had been reported missing from Odessa.

Eddie Wayne Roberson, who was listed in a missing person report as an acquaintance of Doherty, was identified as a suspect after allegedly using the dead man's credit cards.

The grand jury also declined to indict Roberson for credit card abuse, for which he had been held in Lubbock County Jail in lieu of $50,000 bond.

Roberson, a state prison parolee, will remain in custody because of a pending parole revocation, said assistant criminal district attorney Marta Rosas.

The panel Monday heard evidence including autopsy findings and toxicology test results before deciding Doherty died of pneumonia, Ms. Rosas said.

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A fire in a small wooden structure apparently started by a cigarette claimed the life of a 59-year-old man late Monday night.

Odessa Fire Investigator Gary Peak said James Williams Jr. apparently tried to escape the fire that started in a bed, but was unable to make it to the door of the small building.

Peak said an autopsy has been requested, but it appeared Williams was a victim of smoke inhalation, though he did suffer some burns on his body.

VOGLER

As his witness, Vogler cited Gramm's effectiveness in helping Midland International Airport gain Port-of-Entry status and a soon-to-be-manned U.S. Customs Office and an impending Foreign Trade Zone.

Vogler is chairman of Midland's Airport Planning and Development Advisory Board to the City Council.

"I think we should do everything possible to make Midland a better place to live," said Vogler, who noted the "unlimited" economic potential of the Foreign Trade Zone. "Gramm has more than demonstrated his willingness to accomplish worthwhile goals."

Vogler said that more than 700 Concho River water snakes have been "tagged, numbered and impregnated" with microchips in "various and sundry locations" in West Texas.

VOGLER SAID that it was Gramm's "perseverance entirely" that convinced the USFWS to relax its snake-case mandate, since the Concho River water snake appears far more numerous than initial research had indicated.

Joe Pickle of the CRMWD staff noted that the USFWS had suspended requirements on developing snake habitats but required continued research into the snake's range.

Vogler had encouraged a "snake hunt" among outdoorsmen, oil-field workers and ranchers who could report sightings of the snake.

"It's just like so many other things that the Lord created," Vogler said of the snake. "They are not going to stay there and be wiped out if they can move out. The snake has moved up and down the Colorado River. That's been demonstrated." The snake is a survivor, he suggested.

Vogler, who said he respects wildlife and promotes a balanced environment, said that he has his priorities "straight" and that the top priority is survival of the people.

"The Stacy Dam project is vital, not in today's environment," he said. "But down the road, it's going to be vital to the survival of the entire Permian Basin." The dam project is southeast of Ballinger about 150 miles east of Midland in West Central Texas.

IN THE OIL BOOM of the 1930s, "oil sold for less than drinking water, but water is becoming very critical alongside of the oil," Vogler said.

For awhile in the 1930s, oil was selling for 10 cents a barrel and water hauled in by railroad was going for $2 to $3 dollars a barrel.

"Water is critical to the economy," Vogler said. "You cannot develop or survive without water."

Vogler compared the "Concho River water-snake fiasco to the fiasco" involving a supposedly endangered darter fish when the Tennessee Valley Authority projects, including dams and reservoirs, were being developed in the 1930s.

"All it did was delay construction and run the construction costs up," Vogler said. As it turned out, the fish was in "much greater numbers in other locales."

Vogler faults certain "so-called" environmentalists, such as Sierra Club advocates, for assuming "no responsibility" in matters where development and wildlife resources seem to conflict or overlap. Environmentalists had intervened in the Stacy Dam project and had alerted the USFWS to the projected dam's encroachment on the snake's territory and of the snake's possible extinction were the dam built and its habitats were destroyed.

"I'm an avid hunter and fisherman — bird hunter," Vogler said. "I believe in protecting (wildlife) when necessary. But I have my priorities in order, and the number-one priority is survival of the people. I don't want to destroy the environment."

Vogler figured that most of the $3.7 million allocated to the snake project will be saved by sidestepping the snake in the Stacy Dam project. About $1 million already has been spent on snake-related research.

OVER A 30-YEAR period, Vogler estimated that Stacy Dam Reservoir water users would have paid several millions of dollars, including principal and interest, in water rates to finance the snake project.

"It's just ridiculous," he said. "That's why I stepped in the picture and took up the cause."

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas said that Vogler "played the key role" in purging the snake from the Stacy Dam project.

"Ed is the kind of man that when he sees something he thinks is wrong, he grabs hold of it and won't let go. He feels real strongly that this Concho River snake thing was a bad deal and inaccurate, and he has been determined to get the record set straight — get it cleared up. And he has been consulting with the city staff as to what he has been doing. We have been encouraging him."

Purging of the snake from the project will be reflected in lower water rates, Thomas said.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

The Japanese Zen Master Haito was approached by a disciple who was in quandary. "Sensei," the student asked, "what must I alone do to attain enlightment?"

"You alone," replied the master, "must sit nine years before a wall."

So, the student sat and sat and sat, and one day, near the end of his nine year period, arose and sought out his master once again.

"Sensei," he said proudly, "sitting before the wall for nine years, I have come to realize that not alone does one seek enlightment, but united in brother and sisterhood with all other sentient beings of the universe."

The master nodded and the student continued. "It is all so simple. Why did I not know it from the beginning without having to spend nine years of my life sitting before this wall?"

"To answer that," replied Master Haito, "you must sit nine more years before the wall."

Why spend nine more years before a wall seeking enlightment, when nine minutes on the phone to the Volunteer Center will enlighten you to the possibilities of helping out some of your fellow sentient beings?

This week the Center has the following volunteer opportunities waiting just for someone like you.

— Bilingual readers/recorders for an agency that helps the blind and the physically handicapped. Great way to polish up on your speaking abilities.

— Assistant counselors are being sought for a very busy law enforcement agency. Want to meet new people? This opportunity would help you do just that, plus it would allow you to help someone in need at the same time.

— Responsible, dependable and organized individual needed to assist a local human service agency in coordinating their volunteer staff. This type of "grass roots" experience would be an outstanding attribute for a resume.

— Bilingual individuals, especially Hispanics, are needed to co-lead an alcoholism-related support-group. Excellent way to use your problem solving abilities, and to make an impact on our society today.

State suit seeks quarantine halt

AUSTIN (AP) — Florida citrus growers have filed suit in federal court to prevent Texas from enforcing its emergency quarantine of the fruit.

The suit by non-profit Florida Citrus Mutual and Tuxedo Fruit Co., a citrus grower and shipper, alleged that Texas' quarantine would cost the Florida citrus industry millions of dollars.

Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower stated that he had ordered the quarantine to protect Texas' $65 million-a-year citrus industry from citrus canker, which he said had infected some Florida citrus groves.

"If we let it in, we are letting in an economic disaster for Texas farmers and workers, for the Rio Grande Valley economy and the entire Texas economy," Hightower said.

Hightower charged that the U.S. Department of Agriculture had bowed to pressure from Florida growers in lifting a ban that had been placed on shipments of Florida citrus to other citrus-producing states.

Max Woodfin, spokesman for the state department of agriculture, said the 30-day quarantine applied to fruits and plants.

The Florida petition, which seeks a preliminary injunction, said an amended quarantine in Florida permits interstate movement of fruit from Florida under certain rigorous federal standards.

The federal order "is such that there is no significant danger that harm would result to the defendants by the court's granting of the injunctive relief requested," the Florida petition said.

In Lakeland, Fla., Executive Vice President Bobby McKown of Florida Citrus Mutual, which represents more than 12,000 growers, said federal protocol was biologically sound.

"The federal quarantine in Florida has been lifted based on that protocol, and individual states cannot take actions that further restrict the movement of fruit from this state. We believe tahe Texas action is illegal because it attempts to preempt actions by the federal government."

Defendants include Hightower, state Department of Agriculture and state of Texas.

The suit said "even if a very slight risk of contamination is present, the concerns of the Texas agricultural commissioner must yield to the greater, paramount national interest in a free and open market."

Woodfin said Texas agriculture officials are not surprised at the suit, and are prepared to defend the quarantine in "any peaceful forum available."

Woodfin noted that a public hearing has been scheduled for Thursday in McAllen. Testimony is expected from Florida, California, Arizona, Louisiana and U.S. Department of Agriculture officials, as well as Texas producers and experts on citrus disease.

"We would prefer to discuss it there (McAllen)," Woodfin said, "but if it's necessary to go to court, we are certainly prepared to do so."

WILKS

Hobby said the committee did not endorse the incumbents because it failed to reach a consensus. The committee endorsed three candidates — a Democrat and two Republicans — in the Houston-area District 5, also because it could not decide which was more qualified.

"After the primary we will endorse one candidate for each district without regard to partisan politics," he said.

Voters will be electing the 15-member board for the first time since 1982, Hobby said, so the committee wants to be sure voters make informed decisions. "It will be their (the board's) responsibility to maintain the gains we have already made in public education through HB 72 and other reforms of recent years."

The committee will provide money and resources — such as mailing lists — to the primary candidates, Hobby said.

Hobby said he knows of no one candidate running for the board who has built a platform based on eliminating HB 72. The 1984 bill included sweeping changes in school finance and policies, including the controversial no-pass, no-play rule.

"The public seems to have survived the idea that schools are there to provide education," Hobby said.

Other TEXAS members are Peter O'Donnell, Dallas philanthropist and former chairman of the Texas Republican Party and Charles Duncan, a Houston businessman and current Board of Education member who will not run for another term. Duncan served with Perot on the Select Committee on Public Education that pushed for HB 72.

Wilks will face Charles McDonald of Bangs, William Hudson of Wichita Falls and Ben Suddeth of Comanche in the primary. The winner will face the victor in the Republican primary between Peter Micale of San Angelo and Don Dorsett of Stephenville.

Man questioned in shooting death

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — An argument between friends reportedly over money Monday afternoon ended with the fatal shooting of a 39-year-old, according to Ector County Sheriff's Capt. Gene Kloss.

Kloss said Garry Ray Holland, 5903 El Paso, was shot once in the right shoulder with a .22 caliber revolver. He was pronounced dead at the scene by Peace Justice Julian Pressly, who ordered an autopsy scheduled to be performed today by Dr. Robert Bright.

The shooting occurred at the Courtesy Paint and Body Shop, 6705 Kermit Ave. The fire department received a call for an ambulance about 2:09 p.m., Kloss said.

A 42-year-old man has been questioned concerning the shooting but has not been charged because he is claiming the shooting was an act of self defense, Kloss said.

Investigation of the case continues. When it is completed, Kloss said, the case will probably be turned over to the district attorney's office for presentation to the grand jury.

Runzas' Midwestern popularity could crown cabbages as king

AP Laserphoto

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Runza fast-food restaurants have something McDonald's, Burger King and Wendy's don't — cabbage and a cult following.

The chain offers hamburgers and other traditional fast foods, but it's the Runza sandwich — a mixture of ground beef, cabbage and onion in an oblong loaf of dough first cooked up in 18th-century Russia — that's the object of devotion.

The Runza is available only in Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas and Colorado, but its following doesn't end there.

Ex-Nebraskans living in New York have been known to order several dozen Runzas — with cheese and Italian variations — when they hold their "Taste of Nebraska" parties in the Big Apple.

New customers often react with disbelief when they learn that cabbage is a main ingredient in the Runza, says chain chief Don Everett.

"Ninety percent of the people who don't like cabbage normally like the product," Everett said. "I say to people, 'If you don't like it, I'll give you your money back or I'll buy you a hamburger.' "

Sales have increased every year since Runza Drive-Inns of America was incorporated in 1966, Everett said. But the Runza's roots stretch back to the Russia of Czarina Catherine the Great.

Germans who were invited to settle in the Volga region by the Russian ruler in 1763 developed the Runza or bierock, said Ruth Amen of the American Historical Society of Germans from Russia.

A century later, many of the Germans migrated from Russia to the Americas.

"Our people, when they came from Russia, brought the Runza with them," she said. "I can't say, and I don't think anyone can say, whether they picked them up from the Russian people."

Mrs. Everett's brother, Alex Brening, and her brother-in-law, Milan Everett, found themselves looking for work shortly after World War II. With an investment of about $500, the three opened the first Runza restaurant in 1950.

Mrs. Everett and Brening still own the original Runza, but they sold the trade name rights to Don Everett in 1966.

A subsidiary, Runza National, has franchised 42 of the restaurants, Everett said. Thirty-six are in Nebraska, and there are three in Kansas, two in Iowa and one in Colorado.

Everett, a major stockholder in about half the restaurants, has enough franchise applications on file to expand the chain rapidly. But he said Runza Drive-Inns will only grow as quickly as qualified owners and managers are found.

Kathi Krause started working at Everett's first Runza Drive-Inn in 1972 at age 16 as a $1 per hour carhop. Today, she's a major stockholder in nine Runza restaurants.

"It's kind of been a word-of-mouth recipe that people in Nebraska have really grown accustomed to," she said. "Outside Nebraska, we've had to work a little harder to let people know what they are."

Herman Reichart, 89, stands under a photograph of his in-laws John and Margaret Reuther, in the general store that was opened by the Reuthers in 1902. A wrecking ball soon will raze the site to make room for the city transit stop.

Company will preserve store's hidden treasures

By ED WHITE

CHICAGO (AP) — The Depression swallowed John Reuther.

The German immigrant locked the door on his general store in 1934. No more penny candy, no more fresh meat, no more kitchen goods.

"Most of the business was on credit," recalls Reuther's 89-year-old son-in-law, Herman Reichert. "He got disgusted and closed the place."

Windows that stretched from floor to ceiling were replaced with walls of concrete, and for decades, the old Reuther store — opened in 1902 — has been inconspicuous, a building without an identity on the city's Southwest Side.

A wrecking ball soon will raze the site to make room for a transit stop. But owners of a western Illinois museum first plan to strip the general store's interior, then reconstruct it, piece-by-piece, to preserve a slice of history.

"I call this a hidden treasure," said Randy Donley, who runs the Seven Acres Museum in Union, about 25 miles east of Rockford.

Inside are some of the gems of years past: a giant scale, the old cash register, marble counters and a walk-in meat cooler once kept chilled with blocks of ice.

Sturdy wooden shelves rise 12 feet high. To retrieve a bag of flour, a clerk would climb one of two ladders that rolled from the front of the store to the rear.

"This is what Chicago neighborhoods were built around," Donley said. "If it wasn't for the city building a train stop, it might have sat here for another 20 years."

As his in-laws once did, Reichert lives in a small apartment in back of the old building. When city officials told him he had to move by the end of April, he started hunting for a way to keep portions of the general store alive.

"If the Reuthers were still here, they'd probably holler," Reichert said, referring to the wrecking ball. "This store is part of the family. But what else are you going to do? No need to fight the city — you'd lose."

Donley agreed to buy everything for a price he won't disclose. By fall, the store will become an exhibit at Seven Acres Museum to show visitors how Chicagoans shopped before the age of supermarkets.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Get out and socialize and new career opportunities will surface. You cannot make it to the top, or even through the front door, without a helping hand. Get over the idea that you must do everything alone. You exert more influence over others than you or they realize. Put out positive signals and you will win big! You will be able to work out a romantic problem if you do not walk away.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor James Farentino, fairy tale author Wilhelm Grimm, artist Winslow Homer, attorney Mark Lane, conductor Michel Legrand, singer Renata Scotto, first baseman Eddie Murray, naval hero Adm. Chester Nimitz.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Traditional values are a source of strength. Others may judge you by what you own. Pay no attention. Be the peacemaker when the situation demands it. Complete old projects before starting new ones.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Try to vary your routine and you will feel more inspired. A clash of wills should be avoided at all costs. A message or telephone call brings welcome news from overseas contacts.

Opening lead: Three of ♠ Don't flog a dead horse! If it is obvious that your line may not succeed, cast around for an alternative.

When this hand was played in a recent tournament, most pairs reached six spades on an auction similar to the above. South's opening two-club bid was artificial and strong, and North's first response was negative. Three clubs was a second negative, and his jump to four spades not only confirmed trump support, it denied first- or second-round control in any side suit. Thus, South's jump to six spades had some element of risk, but to bid less would have been cowardly.

After a trump lead, most declarers pursued losing lines. When dummy's seven of trumps held, they used the entry for a diamond finesse. West won and returned a trump. Declarer cashed the ace of diamonds and ruffed a diamond, then ran all his winners in the hope that something would develop. Nothing did—down one.

Others went for a better chance. They drew two rounds of trumps in case there was an even break. When that did not occur, they tried to cash three high hearts. Unfortunately West ruffed—down one again, since declarer still had to lose a diamond.

Only one player found the winning line. After winning the first trump lead in dummy, he led the queen of clubs and discarded a heart from hand! In with the ace of clubs, East tried a diamond shift. Declarer took his ace, cashed one high trump and the ace-king of hearts. He then entered dummy with the ten of trumps, and the three good hearts on the table brought his total to 12.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Pulitzer Prize-winning author Alex Haley will be the first recipient of the Bootstraps Foundation Award for overcoming adversity.

He will be honored for "pulling himself up by his bootstraps" at an April 14 banquet in Nashville at which 45 high school seniors will be honored and seven will be awarded college scholarships.

The program was announced Monday by its sponsors, the afternoon daily Nashville Banner and Shoney's Inc., which owns a restaurant chain.

Haley, who was reared in the small western Tennessee town of Henning, won a Pulitzer Prize for his book, "Roots," which traced his ancestry about 200 years. He determined that his fourth great-grandfather was Kunta Kinte of Gambia, West Africa, who was kidnapped in 1767 and brought to America as a slave.

Haley enlisted in the U.S. Coast Guard in 1939 as a mess boy and served for 20 years in the military before starting a free-lance magazine writing career.

Dey

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Susan Dey, the sulky legal eagle on NBC's "L.A. Law," married movie industry executive Bernie Sofronski during a private ceremony, her publicist says.

With a few show business pals as witnesses, Miss Dey recited wedding vows with Sofronski on Saturday at the Bel-Air Hotel, publicist Nann Sumski said Monday.

The entire "L.A. Law" cast attended, including Harry Hamlin, Corbin Bernsen, Michele Greene, Jill Eikenberry, Michael Tucker, Richard Dysart and the show's creators Terry Louise Fisher and Stephen Bochco, said Ms. Sumski.

It was the second marriage for Miss Dey, 35, who has a 9-year-old daughter. Sofronski, 47, formerly with CBS Television, is an executive at Warner Bros.

They met through a friend at a party and dated for two years before announcing their engagement 18 months ago, the spokeswoman said.

DENVER (AP) — Outspoken former Gov. Dick Lamm is back in the public eye, this time as a twice-weekly commentator for a Denver television station.

"You can make fun of television. I sometimes do," Lamm said in a recent interview. But he quickly added that polls show more than 70 percent of the public's political information comes from TV.

"It's sad but true, we've gone from town hall America to airwaves America," he said. "How many senators are more powerful than John Chancellor?"

Denver's KMGH-TV, which is running Lamm's commentaries during its news programs on Tuesdays and Thursdays, says that if Lamm gets too controversial, it will add a "counterpoint" speaker for balance.

"All they told me is there are seven words you can't use on television. I didn't even ask what they are," Lamm said.

Lamm, a Democrat, has made a cause of pointing out the pessimistic aspects of the high cost of medical care, earning himself the nickname "Governor Gloom."

Lamm also is a professor at the University of Denver, and says he may run for the U.S. Senate in two years.

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Members of the police department took Bonnie Blair under their wing six years ago, when they began raising funds to pay for her training as a skater.

And Monday night, they watched and cheered as the 23-year-old Champaign native set a world record in the women's 500-meter speed skating race at the Winter Olympics in Calgary, Alberta, and become the United States' second gold medalist at the games.

"Everybody just went crazy," said Jerry Schweighart, a 28-year police veteran who was one of an estimated 400 people watching Blair via a wide screen at a hotel here.

Schweighart is past president of the Champaign Police Department Benevolent Association, which has helped sponsor Blair with fund-raisers.

"We have helped a lot of kids in the community," Schweighart said, "and we thought she had a good shot.

"Her biggest asset is her personality. Bonnie always is so friendly and bubbly," he said.

Blair, 23, is the youngest member of a skating family. Her brother Rob was diagnosed last year as having a brain tumor, but he was able to join the rest of the family in Calgary to cheer her on.

"All of my family is here, and I couldn't ask for a better fan club," she said after her victory.

Blair's time of 39.10 seconds topped the world record of 39.12 set just minutes earlier by Christa Rothenberg of East Germany, her chief rival.

Jackson is confident about his tour, press manager Lee Solters said.

"He's a hard worker, a perfectionist," Solters said. "Everybody is in tune with him.

By DEBORAH BLUMENTHAL
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Retin-A, prescribed to treat acne since 1971, is suddenly in the spotlight as an alluring lotion that makes wrinkles disappear, fades brown spots and gives skin a rosy glow. Dermatologists say it does, to some degree. But it is strong medicine, involves a long-term commitment and is not for everyone.

To be effective, said Dr. Albert M. Kligman, who developed Retin-A, the medication must be used every day for one to one and a half years and then twice a week for maintenance.

Dr. Arthur K. Balin, who has been studying the effects of Retin-A in the laboratory for investigative dermatology at Rockefeller University, agreed that while "it is beneficial for fine wrinkling and brown spots and for the appearance of the skin, its effects are quite modest, and they take a long time to be apparent. It's not a miracle drug."

USERS WHO are in the sun for part of each day or week have to be extremely diligent about applying a strong sun screen, because the medication thins the upper layers of the skin. This makes users more susceptible to burning.

According to instructions that accompany the product, users should also avoid excessive exposure to extreme wind or cold.

Retin-A is available in this country only by prescription, and physicians say its use should be supervised by a dermatologist, who can adjust the treatment to individual needs; it may cause redness, scaling and irritation. The drug should not be bought from foreign pharmacies where prescription requirements are often ignored. Pregnant women should not use it, because of insufficient information on how it affects fetal growth.

At this point the Food and Drug Administration has approved the drug only as a treatment for acne; a spokesman for Johnson & Johnson, whose Ortho Pharmaceutical subsidiary produces Retin-A, said the agency will be asked to approve its use to reverse sun damage as soon as several studies are completed.

RETIN-A IS a vitamin A derivative, known generically as tretinoin. It drew national attention after a study by Dr. John J. Voorhees and colleagues at the University of Michigan Medical Center showed that the medication can reverse photo-aging, or damage from sun exposure.

The medication, available in five strengths and in cream, gel and liquid form, has a faint medicinal odor, is greaseless and is easily absorbed. To reverse sun damage, dermatologists commonly prescribe the mildest preparation, 0.05 percent. A 20-gram tube costs about $20. It is usually applied at bedtime, and a moisturizer should be used in the morning.

Retin-A doesn't improve appearance instantly. But within a month or two, dermatologists say, the drug visibly plumps up the skin, smoothes fine wrinkles and begins to reverse other, less visible, sun damage.

Those effects can be fleeting, though. "If it's used for a few months and then stopped, you lose everything," said Kligman, a professor of dermatology at the University of Pennsylvania. "If it's used for years, many of the improvements are permanent."

ACCORDING TO dermatologists, the drug increases cell turnover, so dull surface cells are shed more quickly. It thickens the epidermis and improves texture, elasticity and blood circulation. And it helps normalize uneven cell growth.

"It seems to be excellent for crow's-feet around the eyes and it's good for a lot of fine wrinkling crisscrossing the cheeks," said Dr. Alan R. Shalita, chairman of the department of dermatology at the State University Health Science Center in Brooklyn. Retin-A won't, however, eliminate deep wrinkles or furrows or sagging skin.

DEAR ABBY

Abby's survey shows saints outnumber sinners

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR READERS: Last June I invited you to participate in a survey. The question: Have you ever cheated on your mate? I received 210,336 responses: 149,786 from women, and 60,550 from men.

The results were astonishing: 22,468 (or 15 percent) of the female respondents said they had been unfaithful, and 15,743 (or 26 percent) of the men admitted they had cheated.

Putting it in more positive terms: 85 percent (127,318) of the women said they had been faithful and 74 percent (44,807) men claimed fidelity. Surprised? So was I. For all the recent publicity the media have given the cheaters, there are far more faithfully wed couples than I had surmised.

Face it, friends, well-behaved, law-abiding folks seldom make the morning headlines, the Dear Abby column or the evening news, even though they far outnumber the transgressors.

I had expected mostly postcards, but more than half the respondents wrote letters. And although this was to be an anonymous survey, upward of two-thirds of the respondents — cheaters and non-cheaters alike — signed their names!

The oldest respondent was a 99-year-old widower who described himself as a country doctor — now retired. He wrote:

"I've had three wives and cheated on all of them. Wife No. 2 was the woman I cheated with while married to Wife No. 1, who divorced me when she found out. When I was 66, Wife No. 2 died; then I married the nurse I had been cheating with off and on during my first two marriages. (I also cheated on her until she died.) I was only 79 and still going strong, but I decided no more wives for me — only compatible housekeepers."

The youngest respondents wrote from Indiana: "We're both 18, we've been married for three months but we went together for nearly three years, and we haven't cheated yet."

This heartwarming letter came from Harrisburg, Pa.: "Thanks for asking. I am proud to say that in the 45 years I've been married to this wonderful woman, I have never cheated. And this includes two years during which I served with the U.S. Navy. I had no girl in any port! My upbringing and moral values would never have allowed me to live in peace should I have strayed. Furthermore, I'm sure my wife can make the same statement." — HARRY HOKE

The most surprising revelation in this survey was the number of male bisexuals that surfaced. Although mental health professionals in the past have estimated that 10 percent of the population is either gay or bisexual, my survey indicated that there are possibly twice that number. Many are married with "fine families." "I am a 67-year-old male who has been homosexual (or bi) since I can remember. Because of the social pressures of living in a small Iowa town in the '40s, I married and remained married until my wife died. While married, I cheated whenever I could find a willing partner."

From a Vermont wife: "Married 36 years, we both had extramarital affairs. All mine were heterosexual, but I'm not sure about his."

"I'm female, 49, now divorced. Fourteen years ago I had an affair with a close friend of my husband's. It lasted three years — until I caught him in bed with my husband. That ended my affair and also my marriage." — CONNED IN CONNECTICUT

Many wrote at length to justify their affairs: "I was married to a wonderful man for 38 years. Did I cheat? You bet I did! My husband was great at a lot of things, but a lover he wasn't. Back in those days nobody ever spoke about a woman's need to be satisfied. I mentioned it a few times — even bought him a book on lovemaking — but he just looked at the pictures. He's been dead for 13 years. I'm 72, and if I could find a decent man who wasn't after my money, I'd go for it!" — SEXY SENIOR IN FLORIDA

From Albany, N.Y.: "Have I ever cheated? Yes. Am I sorry? No! We've been married for 22 years. I'm 48, and 'Miss Untouchable' is 47, and she hasn't had her nightgown off in 10 years. She announced, 'We have our family now. I've done my duty, so don't bother me'!"

Here's an upper: "My husband and I just celebrated our 34th wedding anniversary, and if our sex life was any better, we couldn't handle it. I was 19 and he was 22 when we married. We were both virgins. I swear sex is the fountain of youth. My mother told me that the way to a man's heart was through his stomach, but I think I found a shortcut."

Tomorrow: More quotes from the survey.

AT WIT'S END

Teaching offspring to drive no laughing matter

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

A couple of years ago, a driving school in California noticed that students did better in class when their instructors had a sense of humor. So the owners discarded their original "business concept" and went for the laughs. They hired 40 professional comedian/teachers and renamed their enterprise the "Lettuce Amuse U-Laff 'N Learn Terrific School." Today, their business has increased 50 percent.

My question is, how long will these comedians be able to hang on to their sense of humor once they've started teaching people how to drive? Look for a big turnover in personnel. I had a sense of humor once. Honest. You're not going to believe this, but I actually used to do a funny column about raising children. And then one day my daughter said, "Momma, I'm going to be 16 in 39 months. When are you going to take me out and watch me drive? I already know how."

We all had a good laugh over that. Imagine, this small child whose only accomplishment to date was taking a bell out of a rubber ball in 13 seconds wanted to drive my car.

On her 16th birthday, we took our learn-to-drive act on the road for eight weeks. It wasn't the material. I told her, "Our car should be painted red on one side and yellow on the other so that when we have an accident, all the witnesses can contradict one another." I said I could just see the headlines, "Mother of Three Killed for Failing to Stop." We just didn't have the fun we thought we would.

Life was just beginning to have some meaning for me again when our second child said, "Dad's busy. Can you take me out to drive?" Oh sure, I was amused when he put a diet cola in the radiator when it boiled over, and everyone laughed when I told my husband we had a phone in our car and he said, "Cellular?" and I said, "No, it's still in the booth with a person talking on it," but somehow it wasn't the same.

When the third child waved his "temps" at me, I tried to psych my humor up for it, but when the policeman stopped him for driving 40 miles an hour in a 25-mile zone and he said, "Impossible! I haven't been out an hour," something in me snapped. I lost it. Nothing was funny anymore — not the blaring radio that gave me chest pains, the way he drummed on the steering wheel between lights, the eight times he changed lanes in a city block and the carpet worn thin on the passenger side from my foot hitting an imaginary brake.

Comedians are used to living on the edge. In terms of risk and danger, they're right up there with men who disarm bombs and are double agents for the CIA. When you think of it, there is only one difference between comedians who die working a small room in Indiana and those teaching someone to drive a station wagon in California. The latter can't walk out on you.

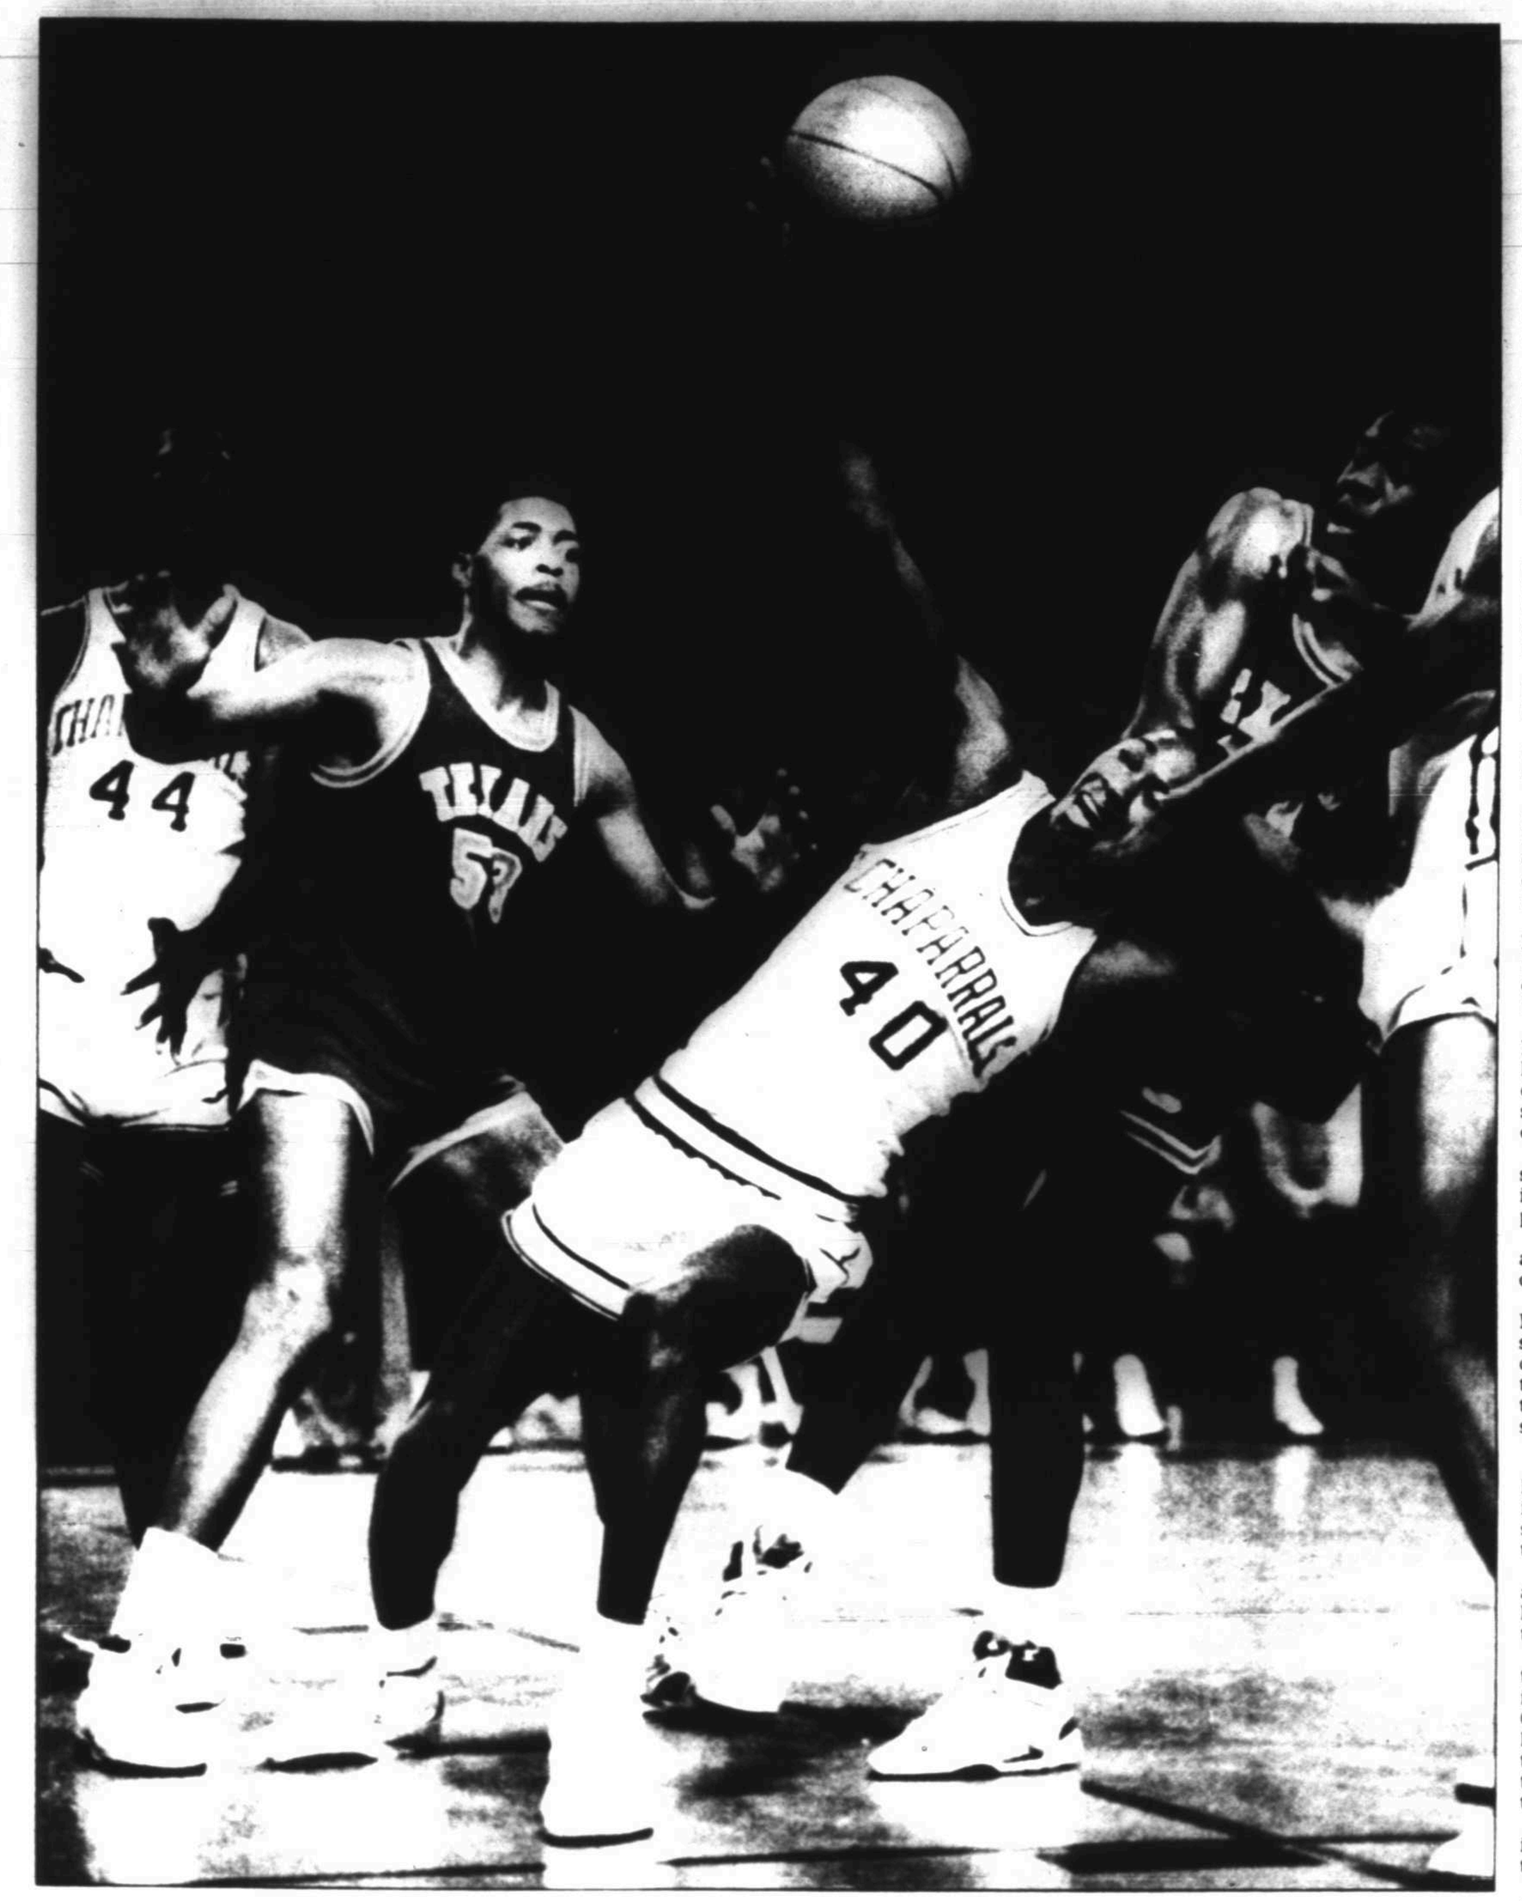
Chaparrals run conference winning streak to six



George Wolf Reporter-Telegram

Midland College's Herman Henry (40), who scored 31 points, shows he can also mix it up in the defensive department in a key victory over South Plains College Monday night at Chaparral Center. Sydney Rice (44) and SPC's Ron Teamer watch.

MC plunders Texans, 80-65

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland College made it six in a row with an 80-65 win over South Plains College and as the season heads toward its final regular season game, Chap fans, who six weeks ago might have wondered if this team would even make the Regional playoffs, now are wondering if they are good enough to win it.

This wasn't just another win over a Region V tournament team at the Chap Center Monday. It was an impressive dismantling of a team that just a week ago handed Odessa College its only Western Junior College Athletic Association defeat of the season.

ONCE AGAIN the Chaps did it with an awesome first half, just as they had against New Mexico Junior College, the team that could tie Odessa for first with a victory at Hobbs, N.M., Thursday night.

In that one, MC raced to an 18-0 lead on the way to a 47-20 halftime bulge with a dazzling offense.

This time Midland led 38-18 at halftime and did it with a suffocating defense.

"It was pretty close to the way we played against NMJC in the first half," admitted Midland College Coach Reggie Franklin. "If we'd cut down the turnovers, we'd have been up a little more at half."

The final 10 minutes of the first half were fatal for the Texans. It was 17-12 after Don Hayden, SPC's best college prospect, hit a 13-footer at 10:42.

That's about the time 6-10 Sydney Rice entered the game, established his presence with a couple of discouraging blocks and then used his size to intimidate shooters the rest of the half.

From 10:42 until Dennis Green scored from the circle with 1:01 left in the half, SPC scored just two points as MC ran up a 36-14 lead.

"Sydney was playing well tonight and when he plays well, he'll intimidate people," Franklin noted.

When it was over, SPC coach Bob Mayberry had no argument with the scoreboard, "The score is indicative of the difference between the two teams," said Mayberry. "Revenge for the loss at Levelland earlier? I guess so."

SIX-SEVEN Herman Henry again had a big night for the Chaps, scoring 31 points, hitting his first two shots for six points and a 6-2 lead that was never topped.

In the second half when the Texans tried to tighten up defensively, Henry simply converted 9-of-12 free throws.

The way Henry has been playing the last month has been a big factor in turning the season around for the Chaps and it also has Division I college scouts buzzing around for a taste of that honey. That's something the Garland sophomore is putting on the back burner.

"The only thing on my mind now is winning Region and going to nationals. The other can wait."

Billy Ray Smith had 14 points, and Charles McCovery 10 as the Chaps raised their WJCAC record to 11-4 and season's record to 22-6. South Plains slipped to 10-4 and 20-7.

"Herman and Billy Ray were outstanding for us and Stewart (Barnett) and Smokey (McCovery) turned the kind of steady performances we needed," Franklin appraised.

BARNETT, the 5-8 playmaker, took charge and worked precious seconds off the clock when the second half deteriorated into a foul-shooting contest.

The Texans are a team that relies on outside shooting to get inside and this was not a night for the SPC marksmen, Hayden and Ron Shields. They scored 17 and 14, respectively, but were a combined 11 of 31 from the field. As a result, six-eight Keith Stewart made just six points, four in the first five minutes.

CHAPSTYQUES: As the season winds down, the Chaps are shaping up as an "S" of a team with Smokey, Skeeter, Slam, Sleepy, Stewart, Sydney, Steve and Smith...If they keep playing as they have in recent weeks, the Chaps could be an "H" of a team before it's over.....MC winds up against Frank Phillips Thursday and a week later the Region V tournament begins at the Chap Center....MC, SPC, OC and NMJC are the WJCAC entries. Likely representatives from the Northern Conference are Cisco, TSTI, McLennan and Ranger...McCovery was 6-for-6 from the line, all in the last half....

Blair gives U.S. gold

Sets world record in 500-meter race

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — She is The Little Engine That Could, a feisty, freckle-nosed kid who just won't quit.

She's America's child, sponsored by the local cops, skating her heart out, winning on guts, singing the national anthem with tears in her eyes then celebrating at a beer bash with her family.

Bonnie Blair, who took her first wobbly steps on ice at 2 as the youngest of six skating children, Monday night glided to victory in world record time and captured the second U.S. gold of the Winter Games.

Wearing a sleek silver and orange racing skin, Blair's 500-meter race shattered the relative quiet of a day that saw the Soviets and East Germans forge farther ahead of the other countries in total medals with 18 and 14, respectively.

FIERCE, FRIGID winds again caused the postponement of the 90-meter ski jump and prompted one official to complain of the "psychological tor ture" on the jumpy jumpers.

Host Canada played Sweden to a 2-2 tie in a hockey game that pleased neither team and hurt both as they enter the medal round against the favored Soviets.

Austria's Sigrid Wolf won the new women's super giant slalom and kept her country in third with three golds and seven medals overall. Neighbor and rival Switzerland, which was expected to dominate the Alpine events, has only one gold among its seven medals.

Sweden finally won a cross-country ski race, the 4x10-kilometer relay, and joined the United States, Finland and the Netherlands with four medals each.

For the Americans, though, the shortest event of the day was the best.

"When I crossed the finish line, I think it was the happiest moment of my life," Blair said. "When they played the national anthem, I think it was the second.

"You try telling yourself it's just another race," she said, "but the jitters, the thrills, the crowds, the hype of the Olympics means it's a lot different."

Her time of 39.10 seconds was faster than any Olympian, man or woman, until Eric Heiden's winning mark of 38:03 in 1980. She was faster than Soviet Yevgeny Kulikov when he won the men's 500 gold in 1976, and less than a second off Soviet winner Sergei Fokichev in 1984.

Blair, smaller than her rivals but with a smile worthy of a cereal box, felt going into the race she could beat East Germany's Christa Rothenburger, who set the previous women's world record of 39.39 here in December.

"This past week, I had gone a lap that I knew would be good enough to beat her," Blair said. "That's what I kept telling myself, that I could go faster. When I opened up faster than she did, I almost knew there that I had it."

WHEN SHE finished she knew she'd been fast, but didn't really grasp it until she saw the numbers on the board.

"It brought tears to my eyes," she said of the flashing world record. "I think I just got it on guts."

Guts or talent, Blair nipped by two-hundredths of a second the world record set a few minutes earlier by Rothenburger. East Germany's Karen Kania won her sixth Olympic medal by finishing third in 39.24 seconds.

On the same track over the same distance that the Heartbreak Kid, Dan Jansen, fell hours after his sister's death last week, Blair soothed some of the speed skating team's anguish.

Jansen was there again when Blair skated, after returning from his sister's funeral, but his eyes were more on his fiancee, Canadian skater Natalie Grenier, who finished 11th among 30 skaters.

Watching Blair from the stands were her parents, including a brother who has a brain tumor and her father, who missed her birth 23 years ago when he had to serve as a timer at a skating event.

"Everybody just went crazy," said veteran police officer Jerry Schweighart, who was among 400 people viewing the action in a hotel banquet room.

American Bonnie Blair
...in golden celebration

He is past president of the Champaign Police Department Benevolent Association, which has helped sponsor Blair and held fund-raisers to help pay for her training expenses since 1982. Jack Sikma, star of the NBA's Milwaukee Bucks and a college friend of one of her brothers, also chipped into a fund for Blair.

"Her biggest asset is her personality," he said. "Bonnie is so friendly and bubbly."

Characteristically, when the anthem was over, Blair pulled Rothenburger and Kania up with her on the top level of the podium, hugged them both and waved flowers to the crowd.

The Soviets lead the medal standings with 18 total, seven gold. East Germany, which took 3-3 in both the bobsled and speed skating 500, have 14 medals, six gold.

Today's Question: He played for the 76ers in 1946-47 and 20 years later his son played for the 76ers.

Monday's Answer: Greg Pruitt, David Overstreet, Billy Sims and Joe Washington, University of Oklahoma running backs, were all from Texas.

McWilliams hopes Longhorns return to glory days

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — "We were really horrible at the start of last season," Texas Coach David McWilliams concedes.

By the end of the 1987 season, the Longhorns were good enough to beat Pitt 32-27 in the Bluebonnet Bowl.

And in 1988, McWilliams expects Texas to again contend for the championship of the Southwest Conference, which it once dominated. A return to national prominence also is in his plans.

"That's certainly my goal. That's what I'm working toward," McWilliams said Monday during the NCAA's annual College Football Preview. "It would be untruthful for me to tell you I didn't think that would happen. I do.

"I'd like to do it next year, but I don't know if we can get it done that quickly. We made great strides this year."

In 1987, McWilliams' first season as head coach at his alma mater following the firing of Fred Akers, the Longhorns dropped their first two games but won seven of their last 10 to finish 7-5, including a 5-2 SWC record. They had a shot at the title until a 20-13 loss to champion Texas A&M in the regular-season finale.

"We contended last year," McWilliams said. "But I don't know that we're back to the point yet of contending every year because we only signed five linemen last year and redshirted four of them. We went into the Texas A&M game with only seven offensive linemen. We really struggled there throughout the season.

"This year, we signed 11 linemen on both sides of the ball, but these are incoming freshmen who haven't played yet. But we've at least got the numbers in those positions and I think we've got the quality, but the experienced depth is not going to be there.

"We lettered eight true freshmen last year because I felt we needed to play some of them to get our depth built up. The same thing is true this year. In order for us to catch up at all, we've got to play some of them.

"There's two types of depth, or lack of depth. One is you just don't have numbers — you don't get linebackers or you don't get defensive tackles

"The second thing is you have some numbers but they don't have that experience.

"Probably we had a little bit of both at Texas. We had not recruited very many linemen the last few years and there was a major deficit. I was just as responsible as anyone else (McWilliams was an assistant under Darrell Royal and Akers from 1970-85, then became head coach at Texas Tech for one year). I lost some guys in that time."

The major reason for Texas' decline, McWilliams said, "was the problem that the whole conference, including Texas, had with the NCAA (investigations and penalties). There were a lot of things going on in the conference, and a lot of articles — substantial, legitimate articles — came out about violations and infractions before it ever got to the NCAA for an official investigation.

"Right after SMU got hit with the death penalty (last February), there was a big migration of (high school) players out of the state because of some of the problems within the conference."

Having played and coached at Texas, McWilliams was familiar with "the fact that we had been ranked nationally and had competed in bowl games and competed for national championships, and all of a sudden we're not not even winning the conference."

But Texas lost only seven seniors, including record-setting quarterback Bret Stafford — "Shannon Kelley played a lot, so we're not going in with someone who hasn't played" — and three of four starters in the secondary, the main concern. The top returnees are middle linebacker Britt Hager and, hopefully, running back Eric Metcalf, who finished third nationally in all-purpose yardage and rushed for 105.55 yards a game.

Metcalf, however, is a world-class long-jumper and McWilliams expects him to compete in the Olympic trials. If he makes the team, Metcalf would sit out the year since the summer Olympics conflict with the start of the football season.

"I would certainly encourage him to go to the Olympics if he qualifies," McWilliams said.

Seton Hall rips No. 6 Pittsburgh

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — It's trivia time.

Name the only team in the Big East Conference that has never gotten a bid to the NCAA tournament.

Seton Hall, 18-10, took a major step toward landing its first NCAA bid Monday night. Riding an 18-2 run late in the second half and a career-high 32-point performance by Mark Bryant, the Pirates upset No. 6 Pittsburgh 89-72.

"The NCAAs have been our goal since the beginning of the season," Bryant said. "This win should help us toward that."

In other Top 20 games, it was No. 7 Michigan over Michigan State 77-67 in a Big Ten contest and No. 17 Bradley over Detroit 122-107.

An ESPN audience saw the Pirates outscore Pittsburgh 25-6 in the final 6:22, holding the Panthers to just one field goal during that span.

But the biggest factor was Bryant. Early in the game, the 6-foot-9 senior told his teammates he wanted the ball and they made sure he got it.

Bryant hit 13 of 22 shots from field, all six of his free throws and proved a force underneath on both ends of the courts, matching his season high with 16 rebounds.

"It was easily the best game Bryant has ever played against us," Smith said. "We knew that Seton Hall was going to put everything on the line tonight and still we weren't able to handle it."

Pittsburgh, 19-4, had entered the game with nine wins in 11 Big East games and had just moved up two notches in the college basketball poll.

"This was a case of Seton Hall outhustling and outworking us and wanting it more," he said. "Our intensity was very poor. We may have been drained emotionally after the Georgetown game, but we shouldn't have been."

P.J. Carlesimo said the victory was his biggest in his six years of coaching at Seton Hall.

"To beat a nationally ranked team in a big game means a lot to us," he said. "We played our way back into postseason contention."

No. 7 Michigan 77, Michigan St. 67

Glen Rice scored 33 points to help Michigan send Michigan State to its fifth straight loss.

The win improved the Wolverines to 22-4 overall, 11-2 in the conference. Michigan State fell to 8-15 and 3-10.

Michigan State opened the second half with a 25-18 run that narrowed Michigan's lead to 55-53 with 9:12 left. But Gary Grant, who had been held to five points in the first half, scored six points in a 10-0 Michigan run that broke the game open.

No. 17 Bradley 122, Detroit 107

University of Detroit players and coaches, despite getting beat, were among the many admirers of Hersey Hawkins after the Bradley guard scored a career-high 63 points.

"It's really a pleasure to play against somebody like him," said Archie Tullos, who set a school record himself by scoring 49 for Detroit. "I picked up some things that I'm going to try to incorporate into my own game. That's what I try to do whenever I'm able to play against a spectacular player."

Hawkins' 63 points also broke a Bradley record the previous Missouri Valley Conference record of 62 points, set in 1960 by Cincinnati's Oscar Robertson against North Texas State. Hawkins, the leading scorer in NCAA Division I, went into the game with a 34.4 scoring average.

Bird becomes Celtics' second all-time scorer

NBA Roundup

Associated Press

The loss in Hartford, Conn., where the Celtics play three regular-season games, extended the Knicks' team-record road losing streak to 18. New York is 1-23 away from home this season.

"Winning on the road is tough," said Gerald Wilkins, who led New York with 24 points. "The best teams, the Celtics and the Lakers, seem to be the only ones who can win consistently. We have to realize that we just have to play ball, just like we do at home."

Bird moved into second place on the Celtics' all-time scoring list with 16,964, nine more than Bob Cousy. John Havlicek is No. 1 with 26,395.

"Bob Who?" joked Bird. "Well, Bob shot about 35 percent and I don't think I can take that (record) away."

Rockets 119, 76ers 106

Akeem Olajuwon had 18 points and 11 rebounds for the Rockets in their 10th victory in 12 games.

After Philadelphia tied the score at 57, Olajuwon had a pair of baskets as Houston opened a 71-63 lead.

Mavericks 114, Suns 107

Mark Aguirre added 19 points as the Mavericks won their fifth straight game. Dallas coach John MacLeod, fired by the Suns last season, beat his former team for the fourth time without a loss this season.

Tarpley became just the third Dallas player in club history to get 20 points and 20 rebounds in the same game. Tarpley, a forward, tied his career-high in rebounds.

Warriors 123, Spurs 111

Otis Smith came off the bench to score 23 points and several Golden State reserves played key roles in the victory over San Antonio.

Tellis Frank had 15 points, Dave Feitl 14 and Terry Teagle 12 as Warriors backups.

Nuggets 100, Bullets 87

Alex English scored seven straight points during the Nuggets' 20-6 burst that started the final period for 94-78 lead. The Bullets had only one field goal in the first 9½ minutes of the quarter.

Pennsylvania becoming basketball's showcase

Associated Press

Kentucky, North Carolina and Indiana come to mind when people talk about good states for college basketball. But this season, look out for Pennsylvania.

Temple maintained its No. 1 ranking this week in The Associated Press basketball poll and Pittsburgh moved up to No 6.

The top-ranked Owls, who on Sunday beat then-No. 5 North Carolina 83-66 in the Dean Smith Center, got 44 first-place votes and 1,231 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters. The Owls, 22-1, are No. 1 for the third straight week and have begun to impress those who derided the quality of their schedule.

"We don't really concern ourselves with the rankings," Temple forward Mike Vreeswyk said after beating the Tar Heels. "I guess this will make people take notice of us."

North Carolina guard Ranzino Smith agreed.

"Temple proved they deserved to be number one," he said.

Pittsburgh, 19-4, jumped two places to sixth with 930 points after Big East Conference victories over Providence and then-No. 18 Georgetown. But the Panthers were upset 89-72 Monday night by Seton Hall.

"This was a case of Seton Hall outhustling and outworking us and wanting it more," Pittsburgh coach Paul Evans said. "Our intensity was very poor. We may have been drained emotionally after the Georgetown game, but we shouldn't have been."

Purdue, 22-2, remained in second with 10 first-place votes and 1,185 points after Big Ten victories over then-No. 13 Iowa and Indiana.

Arizona, 25-2, remained third with three first-place votes and 1,114 points. Next was No. 4 Oklahoma, 24-2, with five first-place votes and 1,110 points.

Duke, which received the final first-place vote, improved one place to fifth with 1,001 points. The Blue Devils, 20-3, beat Virginia and Kansas last week.

Michigan, Nevada-Las Vegas, North Carolina and Syracuse completed the Top Ten for the week.

The Wolverines, 22-4, were 10th last week, but jumped to seventh with 831 points. They beat Michigan State 77-67 Monday night.

Nevada-Las Vegas, 23-3, also improved three places with 754 points, six more than North Carolina, 20-4, which beat Maryland and Wake Forest before losing to Temple.

Syracuse, 20-6, was 10th with 671 points, two more than Brigham Young, which led the Second Ten after being seventh last week.

Court takes on Tarkanian

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than a decade after the NCAA first tried to suspend Jerry Tarkanian as basketball coach at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, the case will go before the Supreme Court.

The court on Monday agreed to hear an NCAA appeal of a Nevada decision barring the NCAA from suspending Tarkanian for alleged illegal recruiting and other violations.

Tarkanian declined comment on the court's action, but Sam Lionel, his attorney, said "I'm not concerned. ... I'm confident our position is right."

Lionel said the case will likely be heard sometime after October, possibly early next year. He said a decision was possible sometime next year.

The NCAA ordered UNLV to suspend Tarkanian in 1977 for two years and put the school on probation. Tarkanian won a court order blocking the suspension, however, and has continued to coach at the school.

"We are pleased that the Supreme Court has agreed to review the decisions of the Nevada courts," NCAA spokesman Jim Marchiony said. "We expect the Supreme Court to focus on the general question of whether the members of the NCAA can adopt rules governing themselves, the student-athetles and coaches with respect to intercollegiate athletic matters.

"The NCAA maintains that regulation of student-athlete recruitment, admission, financial aid matters and the conduct of institutions, students and coaches in these areas should be left to the NCAA membership, and not be deemed to be governemental actions."

Mets changing tune on Johnson

Blue Jays infuriate Bell with designated hitter idea

Associated Press

Mets general manager Frank Cashen said last October that this would be Davey Johnson's final season as manager. Now, Cashen is not so sure.

"I never said Davey Johnson could never manage for me again," Cashen said Monday at the Mets camp in Port St. Lucie, Fla. "We announced that Davey was relinquishing his post as manager at his own request. Would I have him back next season? Sure."

Johnson said last October that Cashen was forcing him out. Now, Johnson won't talk about the future.

But Cashen implied Monday that this was a misunderstanding.

"Davey is going to have to decide if he really wants to be here," Cashen said. "He's got so many other things going on in his life — his fishing camp, his real estate business — that it's something he's going to have to come to terms with."

RINGING THE WRONG BELL

"I don't know anything about being a DH," Bell said Monday. "They didn't say that to me. They'd better leave me alone. They know where I want to play — in the outfield.

"If they wan't to win, they'll play me in the outfield," said Bell, who led AL left fielders with 14 assists last season. "If they want to lose, they'll play me at DH."

WORKING OUT THE KINKS I

Dr. Arthur Pappas, the Boston team physician, was happy with the work of pitchers Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd and Bruce Hurst, who if healthy could combine with Roger Clemens to give the Red Sox one of baseball's best starting staffs.

Pappas said Boyd, who underwent right shoulder surgery last August after appearing in seven games, "threw well, feels comortable and has no discomfort. All signs of his return to pitching on a regular basis by the start of the season are extremely favorable."

Hurst, 15-13 last season, seven of his last eight decisions, had mononucleosis that originally was diagnosed as "arm fatigue." Hurst had a slight relapse in January.

"Bruce is doing the same program as other pitchers with slightly less intensity," Pappas said. "But I see no reason he should not be ready for the start of the regular season in April."

Pappas also had favorable news on right-hander Rob Woodward, who learned three weeks ago that he had diabetes.

WORKING OUT THE KINKS II

In Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Jack Clark, who batted .286 with 35 homers and 136 runs batted in last season for St. Louis, batted against a pitching machine for 20 minutes after a New York Yankees doctor gave permission to test his injured injured ankle.

Clark, who tore ligaments Sept. 9, will not face live pitching until next week and will do no running until then.

"I had no pain and the ankle really feels good," he said. "It's really a lot of pressure off my mind."

And in West Palm Beach, Fla., Braves second baseman Damaso Garcia, who missed 1987 with a knee injury after his trade from Toronto, arrived a week early.

"It's a good sign that he's here now. But he has to show us he can play," Tanner said of Garcia, who will compete for the second-base job with rookie Ron Gant.

FREE AGENTS

Carlton Fisk reported to the Chicago White Sox camp in Sarasota, Fla., but said he may not be there for long.

Fisk, who signed a $700,000 contract with Chicago last December, was made a free agent last month by arbitrator Thomas Roberts. Fisk, 40, has until March 1 to decided whether to terminate that contract.

"I'm here and I'm ready to play," Fisk said. "But my situation is the same as before. I'm still a free agent."

Oscar nominee Kirkland finds overnight success

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sally Kirkland has much to talk about these days.

There's the best actress award the Los Angeles film critics gave her for her performance as a faded Czech actress in "Anna" and the Golden Globe for best dramatic actress presented by the Hollywood Foreign Press Association for the same film.

And she's been offered four movies in the wake of her "overnight success" — a success that came after 25 years as an actress, she points out).

No wonder Kirkland is more voluble than ever. She has waited for this. And waited.

"I have tested for the leading role in 25 movies, and each time the choice has narrowed to another actress and me," she recalled. "Each time the other actress won.

"The last time was 'The King of Comedy,' and the other girl (Sandra Bernhard) got the part. Bobby DeNiro, who is an old friend of mine, told me, 'Don't worry, Sally, you'll get your shot.' That was in 1981, and it has finally happened."

"I wanted to be an actress since I was 8 years old. I took acting and dance classes from the age of eight. Because my mom was fashion editor for Life magazine and her name was Sally Kirkland, I was always Sally Kirkland Jr. That presented me with an identity crisis," she said.

"I went to a dramatic camp at 12. It was an all-girls camp, so I had to play all the men's roles. I was Macbeth at the age of 12. Then when I went to The Masters School at Dobb's Ferry (N.Y.), I was Prince Albert to Queen Victoria because I was five feet 10 — right? Finally I got around to playing a woman when I was 17.

"I didn't go to college, much to the shock and chagrin of The Masters School. They said it was the first time in history a student hadn't gone on to Vassar or Sarah Lawrence or something. I went right down to Avenue B and 11th Street (in New York) and lived in a $34-a-month apartment and was a waitress at Figaro's. I got a job with James Earl Jones off-Broadway in a play called 'The Love Nest.'

Acting, yes, but never as a star in the big time. She worked with Andy Warhol's group and the LaMama Troupe and Joe Papp and achieved Manhattan fame as the Queen of Off-Broadway. But those top movie jobs went to other actresses.

Did she despair?

"No," she said. "You know why? I was lucky to meet (producer) David Selznick when I was a kid. He adopted me, in a way. I was dating (son) Danny Selznick and (stepson) Michael Walker, and he kept hoping one of them would propose to me, because he wanted me in the family.

"David was my mentor. He said to me: 'Sally, with all my experience, I'm telling you right now you're going to be a star one day.

"'But it's not going to be easy for you, because there's no studio system anymore. You remind me a lot of Ingrid Bergman and Katharine Hepburn. But they had studio contracts, and you don't have that. What I suggest is to rack up as many credits as possible. If they say don't do television, forget it. Do it.

"'Get 300 women (portrayals) under your belt. Do as many classes as possible. Do everything. Because I don't think your shot will come until your late 30s or early 40s. Don't give up. You have the talent, but because you're 5 feet 10 and you're very strong, they won't know what to do with you as an ingenue or even a young leading lady.'"

At first, director Yurek Bogayevicz was unimpressed, even though she was playing a Czech woman in the New York Public Theater play, "Largo Desolata." Kirkland persisted, perfecting her accent and even testing her scenes at the Actors Studio before her friends Shelley Winters and Robert DeNiro. Finally Bogayevicz gave in.

Is an Academy Award next?

"I cannot tell a lie: My fantasy ever since I was 5 years old was to hold that (statue) and say, 'Thank you, thank you, thank you. Thank you for validating my entire experience.'"

Author's apartment gets wrecking ball reprieve

New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — The stucco, Victorian-style apartment building here where Margaret Mitchell began and finished the first draft of her novel "Gone With the Wind" has received a reprieve from the wrecker's ball, with Mayor Andrew Young turning down a developer's permit to demolish it.

The action Monday represented a change of heart by the mayor, who just last month warned local groups seeking to save the building that he would allow demolition if they had not raised their own funds to restore the structure.

On Tuesday, in response to Young's refusal to approve the demolition, the Trammell Crow Co., the developer that owns the property and planned to raze the building to build a park, filed a suit in Federal District Court here contending that city officials were depriving them of their property without due process of law.

The mayor's decision took many people by surprise. Last October he grudgingly agreed to withhold approval of demolition while preservationists tried to raise money. In a time of spirited building and commercial development, the city and the Young administration have prided themselves on supporting plans of private developers.

This was the second time in his nearly seven years in office that the mayor acted on a request to block demolition of a structure considered to have historic significance, according to Gail Timmis, director of the Urban Design Commission.

Miss Mitchell's novel about the South in the Civil War, which was published in 1936 and was one of the top best-sellers, was written on an old Remington typewriter in a cramped, two-room apartment in the building where she lived from 1926 to 1932. Called "the dump" at the time by the author herself, the 73-year-old building fell on even harder times in recent years but still remained an unofficial tourist attraction in the city. Miss Mitchell died in 1949.

Last summer the Dallas-based Trammel Crow Co., after finding it economically infeasible to renovate the building that sits at the edge of 11 acres being redeveloped just north of downtown, applied for the permit to demolish it. Action on the permit was delayed when groups with the rallying cry "Save the Dump" emerged.

Neal Horton, a spokesman for Young, said the mayor made his decision after being persuaded on Monday by Mitchell House Inc., the private group attempting to save the building, that it had nearly $1 million in pledges and commitments to finance restoration of the apartment house.

"The mayor has now made a decision not to sign the permit because the group has found a resource to save the house and restore it," said Horton. "He was convinced that it was from someone who could deliver on a commitment."

John Taylor, president of Mitchell House Inc., said that since the mayor's ultimatum last month the group obtained $850,000 in pledges of funds or contributions in kind to renovate the property. While the largest single cash donation was of $25,000 from an anonymous source, the most significant offer was one from the Builders Institute of Georgia, which offered to restore the building free of charge as a demonstration of skills and techniques.

By GARY LANGER

NEW YORK (AP) — Pop artist Andy Warhol, who gained fame by calling fame fleeting, has proved otherwise by his death.

A year after his fatal heart attack in a New York hospital, Warhol's legacy is a mirror of his life: a melange of high art, low kitsch, dramatic tension and, as much as ever, the gaze of a fascinated public.

"It's going to take a while still for his legacy to be sorted out," said David Bourdon, an art critic and Warhol biographer. "But if anybody thought he was going to be a flash in the pan, they are quite mistaken."

Artistically, scrutiny of Warhol's work has risen to a level it probably never attained in his life. Major film and painting retrospectives are in the works, as are several biographies and the publication of his private journal.

Socially, the cultish lifestyle in which Warhol enveloped himself will be unwrapped this spring at a huge auction of the artist's possessions, from Old Master paintings to a Superman touch-tone phone.

Commercially, the managers of Warhol's estate have signed a licensing agreement that principals say could create a billion-dollar business in retail goods, from calendars to towels, bearing Warhol images.

And legally, in its least expected ramification, Warhol's death continues to reverberate in the medical world. The state has accused New York Hospital of rendering him deficient care, and his estate has sued over his death.

"What would he think of all this? As far as the brouhaha is concerned, it's consistent with the way he lived — action, tension, all those kinds of things," said Edward Hayes, lawyer for the estate. "But in terms of his death? He'd probably just think his death was stupid."

Warhol, 58, died in his hospital bed early Feb. 22, 1987, the day after a surgeon removed his gall bladder. Pathologically fearful of hospitals and distrustful of doctors, he had put off the surgery for years.

His death remains an enigma. The city coroner was unable to say what caused Warhol's heart to stop, and the state Health Department, while citing deficient care, did not say the problems — such as inadequate supervision of nurses and incomplete record-keeping — harmed him.

"There are cases when cardiac arrest is unexplained. This will probably be one of those cases," said Diana Goldin, spokeswoman for the hospital, which maintains that Warhol was well cared for.

In some ways, the inconclusiveness of Warhol's death is fitting. His life was equally enigmatic, a mix of nightclubbing and reticence, public persona and intense privacy, counterculture innovation and determined marketing.

The everyday object was his icon, the provocative phrase his byword. "In the future," said Warhol's famous assertion in a 1968 exhibition catalog, "everyone will be world-famous for 15 minutes."

"He was an incredible character," said Bourdon. "There are just so many conflicting stories and irreconcilable anecdotes; I don't think it can ever be sorted out. I think he's just going to evaporate into legend. He wanted it that way. Facts were always a little unglamorous to him."

"You take a look at the work and the personality becomes less of an issue," said Barbara Haskell, curator of the Whitney Museum of American Art. "The social presence that he projected is no longer part of the evaluation, and one can look at the work more clearly."

That appraisal is going on intensively, as often happens after the death of an artist. The Whitney plans a spring retrospective of Warhol films.

There are some signs already of the increased value of Warhol's work. At auction in October, a Warhol painting that was expected to sell for $70,000 went for $220,000; another with an estimate of $50,000 sold for $176,000.

Those sums pale in comparison to the potential value of an agreement between Warhol's estate and Schlaifer Nance & Co., the marketing firm behind the Cabbage Patch Kids dolls. Warhol, who often blurred the line between fine and commercial art, had started the discussions with Schlaifer two years ago.

The company may put his name and images on bedding, cosmetics, paper goods, jewelry — a huge range of retail items whose sales it has said could reach the billion-dollar level. Warhol may have approved; "Being good in business," he wrote in 1975, "is the most fascinating kind of art."

He's relieved and thankful to be alive. But perhaps even more, he yearns to leave the steaming jungles of Vietnam to return home.

The soldier is a bronze "sketch" of sculptor Fredda Brilliant's latest work, "After the Battle" — her statement about the futility of war.

"It was a useless killing," said Ms. Brilliant of the Vietnam War, clearly emotional in viewing the 12-inch-high sketch. "He didn't want to kill, but he didn't want to die. It was a terrible dilemma."

Ms. Brilliant probably is best known locally for a sculpture of Delyte W. Morris, the former president of Southern Illinois University at Carbondale.

The idea for a war sculpture had been in her mind for at least 10 years, Ms. Brilliant said, ever since she saw a newspaper photograph of a group of men returning from combat. The pose is taken from her memory of one of those men.

Ms. Brilliant said it wasn't until several months ago that she was able to begin work without being overcome with emotion.

"It's getting it off my chest," she said. "Every time I wanted to do it, I was crying."

The statue will be unusual because it attempts to capture the mood of a soldier without showing his face; his forehead rests on his hands. She tried to make the figure's features universal, allowing a variety of people to identify with it.

Greenspan outlines goals for Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan said today the country faces "formidable challenges" in keeping the economic recovery alive, urged further progress on reducing the federal deficit and cautioned Congress against passing protectionist trade legislation.

Greenspan confirmed that the central bank, in an effort to keep the recovery alive, had taken a "small easing step a few weeks ago."

The Fed chairman said the central bank agreed with the Reagan administration that recovery from the 1981-82 recession should last through this presidential election year, but said prospects for growth would be enhanced through further efforts to reduce the huge federal budget deficit, which raises U.S. dependence on foreign investment.

Greenspan

"We face formidable challenges over 1988 and beyond in meeting national economic goals of sustaining growth and progress toward price stability," Greenspan told a House Banking subcommittee.

Greenspan's comments came as part of the Fed's semi-annual report to Congress on the conduct of monetary policy. It was the first time Greenspan has delivered the monetary report since he took over as chairman from Paul Volcker in August.

Volcker repeatedly lectured Congress during his eight years as Fed chief over the need to reduce the soaring federal budget deficits and warned that the central bank could not be expected to carry the full burden of keeping the economic recovery going.

Greenspan, sounding very much like Volcker, echoed those same themes, contending in his testimony that the challenge of managing the economy "cannot be negotiated by the Federal reserve alone."

"For the United States, the most direct and beneficial approach would be to address the problem at its major source — the federal budget deficit," he said. "Reducing the deficit further would give us the opportunity to add to domestic saving and reduce dependence on foreign capital, while still encouraging much-needed investment spending."

Since January a variety of interest rates, including home mortgage rates, have declined, leading many economists to speculate that the Federal Reserve had eased credit conditions.

Greenspan confirmed the move toward easier money, saying the Fed had made the change amid indications of an economy that was slowing as the year began. He said the Fed had the leeway to loosen credit conditions because the U.S. dollar had stabilized on foreign exchange markets.

Comptroller eases First RepublicBank concerns

By NATHANIEL C. NASH
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Comptroller of the Currency tried Monday to ease concerns about the financial stability of the First Republicbank Corp., the largest banking institution in Texas.

In a news conference, Robert L. Clarke said that his office, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. had sent about 55 examiners into the bank recently to conduct "a routine multinational-bank examination." He said that the exam, which will take several weeks, was like every other multinational-bank exam, and that it had been scheduled for months.

At the same time, Clarke criticized accounts in some Texas newspapers about the precarious financial condition of First Republicbank. "It concerns me that simply because we have examiners at a bank, its financial health is questioned," he said.

Nevertheless, Clarke acknowledged that the bank's finances had deteriorated in recent months. First Republicbank lost $347.8 million in the fourth quarter, bringing its losses for all of 1987 to $656.8 million.

In another matter, Clarke in general endorsed hostile takeover bids for the nation's largest banks, though he did not specifically endorse the $1.08 billion hostile bid by the Bank of New York for the Irving Bank Corp.. He said regulators, including the Fed, "should not treat financial institutions any differently than any other institution that operates in the free market."

The Fed said Monday that it planned to consider the hostile bid for Irving at a closed meeting on Wednesday.

Meanwhile, in Dallas, executives of First Republicbank issued strong denials of reports in Texas newspapers that it was engaged in merger talks with another institution and that the FDIC was planning a bailout of the $33.2 billion bank.

The company took out full-page advertisements in The Dallas Morning News and The Dallas Times-Herald denying the reports of an impending merger and maintaining that depositor funds were safe. "These are not the best of times for any of us in Texas," the ad said. "We are here for the long term. And as you all know, it is tough times that bring out the best in all of us."

First Republicbank, like other financial institutions in the Southwest, has experienced major loan losses because of the slump in oil and real estate prices.

The bank also objected to press reports about an outflow of deposits at its flagship bank — the First Republicbank of Dallas. Though the lead bank has lost about 7 percent of its deposits during the first part of this year, the bank described that as both

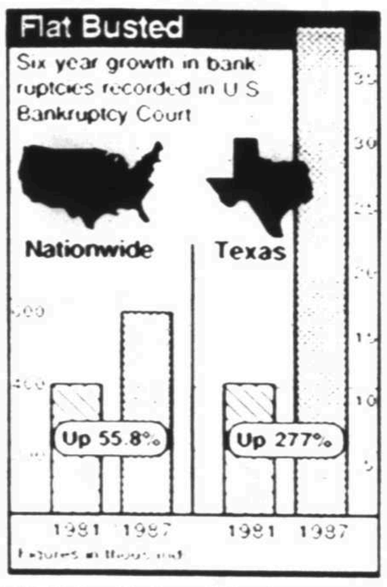
Bankruptcy boom still on for former wealthy Texans

DALLAS (AP) — Experts say more people, including many formerly wealthy Texans, are filing for bankruptcy because of a change in the law which made filing easier and removed many provisions considered punitive by corporations.

Last year, 38,809 bankruptcy cases were filed in Texas and 561,278 nationwide, according to the U.S. Bankruptcy Court. In 1981, 10,295 cases were filed in Texas and 360,329 nationwide.



A change in federal bankruptcy laws in 1978 made bankruptcy a haven that allowed businesses to renegotiate debts rather than fail at the majority vote of creditors.

The list of people who have filed bankruptcy papers in Texas includes such high-profile people as former Texas Gov. John Connally; the Hunt brothers — Nelson, Lamar and William; Fort Worth industrialist T. Cullen Davis and Houston surgeon Denton Cooley.

"A lot of wealthy individuals are not afraid to file bankruptcy," said Andy Jillson, a lawyer with Jenkens & Gilchrist in Dallas. "And certainly the more they hear about bankruptcies, it removes some of the concern that they will be thought of adversely in the community."

Connally, the son of a tenant farmer, amassed a fortune that included art, sprawling ranches and beachside condominiums. He built his wealth as an attorney, politician and businessman.

Texaco Inc. agrees to settle oil price dispute for $1.25 billion

NEW YORK (AP) — Texaco Inc. said today it has agreed to pay the government $1.25 billion to settle disputes related to its pricing of crude and refined products during the 1973-1981 period of price controls.

The payments will begin with a $400 million first installment when the agreement is closed, and will be stretched over the next 5¼ years, the company said at its White Plains, N.Y., headquarters.

"Texaco has set aside reserves for this contingency and, as a result, this settlement will have no impact on current earnings," James W. Kinnear, the company's president, said in a statement.

Texaco is by no means the first oil company to tangle with the Department of Energy over this issue.

In January 1986, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld a lower court decision ordering Exxon Corp. to repay consumers more than $2 billion in refunds and interest for overcharging on the sale of oil from one Texas field between 1965 and 1981.

The DOE has recovered — or been seeking to recover — billions of dollars more from numerous oil companies and other businesses on essentially the same premise: that during the 1973-to-1981 era of federal price controls, companies made illegal profits by classifying so-called "old" oil as "new" oil, thus permitting it to be sold at higher prices.

Texaco's settlement "resolves an unusually massive, complex set of issues arising out of the more than $70 billion worth of business the company conducted in crude oil and refined products in the U.S. over this period," Kinnear said.

Texaco said the DOE had estimated that its claims against Texaco "could have totaled $2.1 billion."

Like Exxon, Texaco had maintained that it could not be held accountable for confusing federal regulations defining what was "old" oil and what was "new" oil.

These were "ambiguous and were clarified and revised several times during the period in question," Texaco said.

The settlement is subject to agreement on the final terms, various regulatory approvals and appropriate confirmation by the U.S. Bankruptcy Court.

"Conclusion of these matters will free Texaco from years of additional and costly litigation — allowing us to concentrate our efforts on making our company stronger and more productive as we emerge from Chapter 11," Kinnear said.

Durables take steep plunge

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders to U.S. factories for "big ticket" durable goods plunged 2.8 percent in January, the biggest decline in a year.

The Commerce Department reported that orders for durable goods, items expected to last at least three years, totaled a seasonally adjusted $112.23 billion last month, down $3.28 billion from the December level.

The steep decline followed a 4.1 percent increase in December, which had been the largest gain in nine months.

Analysts had been anticipating a sharp January decline in orders, given the big December increase. They contended that the setback did not alter their view that manufacturing would be one of the sources of strength in the economy this year.

Even with the setback last month, new orders were still 15.5 percent ahead of a year ago, reflecting the strong export demand caused by the decline in the value of the dollar.

Pauley acquires refinery

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pauley Petroleum Inc., which former Atlantic Richfield Co. Chairman Robert Anderson is seeking to build into a major independent oil firm, said Monday it has agreed to aquire Fletcher Oil & Refining Co.

The deal was relatively small, but it will more than double Pauley's refinery capacity, indicating Anderson is moving aggressively to expand Pauley, which he took over in January by merging it with his privately held Hondo Oil Co. of Roswell, N.M.

Pauley will pay a total of $8 million for Fletcher, which has been operating under Chapter 11 protection from creditors. A bankruptcy court order confirming Fletcher's reorganization plan and allowing the acquisition by Pauley is to become effective March 1.

Fletcher owns and operates a 30,000-barrel-a-day refinery in Long Beach, about 25 miles south of downtown Los Angeles. Pauley currently has refinery capacity of 22,000 barrels a day at its plant in Newhall, about 30 miles northwest of downtown Los Angeles.

7-Up introduces new spicy, gold soft drink

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas-based Seven-Up will introduce an amber colored soft drink labeled 7-Up Gold designed to reach young adults, company officials said Monday.

The soft drink is being characterized by the company as "the wild side of 7-Up" and is described as a natural spice flavored soft drink sweetened with aspartame.

"7-Up Gold is the missing link in the 7-Up family," said John R. Albers, chief executive officer.

Company officials said they are trying to reach a mostly male 18- to 34-year-old market with the new drink. The company also will introduce a Diet 7-Up Gold.

Russ Klein, senior vice president of marketing, said that while the image of 7-Up is clean-cut and conservative, 7-Up Gold will vie for mainstream soft drink consumers who generally drink colas.

But like all 7-Up products, it will be "light, refreshing, thirst quenching, crisp, natural and translucent," Klein said.

Shipments of the new drink will begin in April, in time for the spring and summer seasons, with national distribution expected by the end of May, officials said. The company will spend more than $10 million in advertising for the drink this spring and summer, Klein said.

The new drink follows the introduction of Cherry 7-Up and Diet Cherry 7-Up last year. Those drinks have captured 1.7 percent of the lucrative soft drink market.

Cost of high living is higher

NEW YORK (AP) — The cost of living the high life in New York rose last year at more than twice the rate of the Consumer Price Index, with Beluga caviar showing the most increase, according to a champagne producer's survey.

Whereas the CPI rose 4.4 percent last year, the life of luxury in the nation's most expensive big city went up 9 percent, according to the "Moet Index."

The survey has been compiled since 1963 by Moet and Chandon Champagne.

Largest increases included: 14.7 percent for 30 grams of Beluga caviar, up from $29 in 1986 to $33.25 last year; 11.7 percent for a wash, cut and blow dry at a top hair salon, from $60 to $67; and 10 percent for a day's maid service, from $80 to $88.

Luxuries with lower price hikes included: 3 percent for a round trip New York-Paris flight on the Concorde, up from $4,396 to $4,496; 4.8 percent for a full-length mink coat, from $15,750 to $16,500; and 5.3 percent for a limousine rental, from $38 an hour to $40 an hour.

Crude oil prices move lower

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices were making a slight recovery at mid-morning, with April contracts for West Texas Intermediate gaining 11 cents, to $16.59.

"We're really trading on no new news," said John H. O'Connell, an analyst at Refco Inc. Commodities, on Monday. "Its just a roller-coaster. Up and down. But I don't think we're falling apart here."

At the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for March delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S.crude, closed at $16.62 per 42-gallon barrel, down 8 cents from Friday.

Among March contracts for refined products, wholesale heating oil settled at 45.79 cents a gallon, down 0.01 cent, while unleaded gasoline closed down 0.11 cent at 46.32 cents per gallon.

O'Connell said the market had been rife with stories about overproduction and other problems within the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. But he said none of the stories have been considered reliable.

Dollar slightly lower, gold falls

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell in light European trading early today as markets waited for clearer signals of how the U.S. economy was performing.

Gold prices also declined.

The dollar was trading at lower levels against all major foreign currencies at midmorning, but was fluctuating within a narrow range.

Many traders stayed on the sidelines ahead of Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan's scheduled testimony later in the day before the U.S. House Banking Committee, traders said.

They said the testimony might provide a better insight into U.S. monetary policy, which could give the dollar some direction.

— 5.7255 French francs, down from 5.7500

— 1.8983 Dutch guilders, down from 1.9040

— 1,246.50 Italian lire, down from 1,252.25

— 1.2713 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2738

The dollar closed in Tokyo at 128.50 Japanese yen, down from Monday's close of 129.95 yen. In London trading later today, the U.S. currency traded at 128.70 yen.

London's major bullion dealers fixed a recommended gold price at midmorning of $443.95 a troy ounce, down from $446 late Monday. A trader said the market was extremely thin.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market chalked up another broad gain Monday, extending its recent rally in a mood of increasing optimism about the economic outlook.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 25.70 to 2,040.29, hitting a new six-week high for the third straight session.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $33.07 billion, or 1.29 percent, in value.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Supreme Court upholds cable ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court has upheld a ruling that sharply curtails the power of communities to regulate cable television.

The high court turned away an appeal by Palo Alto and Atherton, Calif., which wanted to enforce public access and other rules challenged by cable operator Century Federal Inc.

Survey: Most companies restrict smoking

EVANSTON, Ill. (AP) — A survey of 226 large and medium-sized American companies found 70 percent have restricted or are prepared to limit smoking in the workplace.

"I was really surprised at the extent to which this had surfaced as a personnel issue," Victor Lindquist, author of the Northwestern University Lindquist-Endicott Report, said Monday.

Application to acquire Southern Pacific filed

DENVER (AP) — Rio Grande Industries Inc. has filed an application with the Interstate Commerce Commission to acquire Southern Pacific Transportation Co. for $1 billion from Santa Fe Southern Pacific Corp.

Rio Grande's action Monday will affect Kansas City Southern Industries Inc.'s rival bid of more than $1.25 billion for the Southern Pacific.

The ICC is expected to decide on the application in six months, Rio Grande said.

Henley seeks $780 million in Santa Fe stock

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — Dissident investor Henley Group Inc. has proposed that Santa Fe Southern Pacific Corp. scrap part of its financial restructuring and instead sell $780 million in new stock to Henley.

The move Monday, which would boost Henley's stake in Chicago-based Santa Fe to 34.3 percent from 15.7 percent, was expected to receive a cool reaction from Santa Fe, which has been fending off Henley's unwanted overtures since mid-1987.

Judge rules Ohio statute unconstitutional

CINCINNATI (AP) — A federal judge has blocked as unconstitutional an Ohio takeover statute aimed at thwarting Campeau Corp.'s attempted hostile takeover of Federated Department Stores Inc.

Toronto-based Campeau has a hostile $6.4 billion offer pending for Cincinnati-based Federated. Campeau is offering $6.8 billion if Federated agrees to a friendly merger.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

IRA fees depend on account adoption agreement

By BILL DOYLE

Doyle

Q. While I was employed, I put $2,000 a year into a bank individual retirement account. The money went into certificates of deposit, with maturities from 1989 through 1992. The annual statement I received in January lists a $12 fee. As no fee was charged before, I telephoned the bank and was told the fee resulted from the fact that I did not put any money in the IRA for 1987.

I did not work last year and am still unemployed. So I am not permitted to add to this account. This is unfair. I am a widow, 55 and this annual charge is forced on me.

Three of the CDs pay 14 percent interest, making it unwise for me to move my IRA to a different bank. Do You have any suggestions?

A. Read your IRA adoption agreement very carefully. You might have only one such agreement or you might have one for each year you put in money. That can vary from one institution to another.

Study the fine print to see if there is any wording prohibiting that bank from laying on fees that were not in force at the time you set up the IRA.

You might find the agreement states that the bank can charge a fee when you don't make an annual IRA contribution. Even if there is no such statement, the bank has the authority to charge IRA fees — as long as there is no specific prohibition in the adoption agreement. Absent that prohibition, each IRA sponsor can set whatever fees it chooses.

When IRAs first became available to all working people in 1982, most banks and savings and loan associations charged no IRA fees. In recent years, however, more and more banks and S&Ls have been hitting their IRA customers with fees of various types and sizes.

Q. For three years before I left work, I was able to invest in an individual retirement account. Now that I am retired and past age 59 1/2, I thought I could draw money out of my IRA without penalty.

At my bank, I was told the certificates of deposit in my IRA are like all other CDs and I will have to pay a penalty if I withdraw money before the maturity date. Are banks really allowed to hit retirees with penalties such as this?

A. Unfortunately, yes. Banks and S&Ls are not required to charge early withdrawal penalties on IRA CDs held by people over

Moreover, it noted that it had lost only 4.5 percent of the entire bank holding company's deposits and that half of those losses were foreign deposits. First Republic said that only 8 percent of its total deposits were from foreign sources, and that 88 percent of its deposits were made up of "core deposits," including Government-insured savings and checking accounts, consumer money market accounts and certificates of deposit.

Bank officials said there were no lines of depositors seeking to withdraw their funds at any of the 75 banks that make up the First Republicbank network.

DURABLES

The 2.8 percent drop in January orders was the largest setback since an 8 percent fall in January 1987.

The weakness came from two primary sources, a setback in transportation and orders for primary metals such as steel, two categories which had posted unusually large increases in December.

Demand in transportation industries fell by 12.4 percent to $27.21 billion last month following an 8.6 percent advance in December, a surge which was attributed primarily to new aircraft orders placed with the Boeing Co. of Seattle.

Orders for primary metals fell 15.5 percent to $10.19 billion after having shot up 10.5 percent in December. Analysts said the big December jump in orders came because of fears of pending price increases.

FED

For part of last year, the central bank had been forced to push interest rates higher in an effort to support the dollar, which was declining rapidly in value. Higher interest rates in this country tend to make dollar-denominated investments more attractive to foreigners.

The Fed released an economic forecast that was very close to the predictions made by the Reagan administration when it released its budget last week.

The Fed said it believed the overall economy, as measured by the gross national product, would grow at rate of 2.0 percent to 2.5 percent this year, down from last year's growth of 3.8 percent. The administration is forecasting 2.4 percent GNP growth this year while many private economists believe growth will not reach 2 percent.

In response to a question, Greenspan said that while the Fed was expecting sluggish economic growth this year, it saw no evidence that a recession would occur because the economy was not exhibiting the kinds of imbalances that normally start appearing at the end of an expansion.

The Fed predicted that the unemployment rate, because of the more sluggish growth, would not show any improvement, holding at around 5.8 percent to 6 percent. The unemployment rate currently is 5.8 percent.

On inflation, the Fed predicted that consumer prices, as measured by an inflation index tied to the GNP, would rise 3.25 percent to 3.75 percent this year, a slightly better forecast than the administratin, which is looking for a 3.9 percent rise in the GNP price deflator, as the index is called.

Greenspan also revealed the money growth targets the Fed has set for 1988. These targets, while covering a broad range, serve as a policy guide for the central bank as it tries to supply enough money to keep the economy growing at a healthy rate while guarding against pumping out so much money that inflation is rekindled.

In one measure of the money supply, M-2, which includes checking deposits plus cash held by the pubic along with savings accounts and money market accounts, the Fed said it was aiming for growth of 4 percent to 8 percent. This was the same target set for a somewhat broader measure of money known as M-3.

The central bank, as it did last year, decided to set no growth target for M-1, the narrowest guage of money, because of its erratic behavior in recent years.

The ranges for M-2 and M-3 were slightly lower than the 1987 targets of 5.5 percent to 8.5 percent.

M-2 actually grew much more slowly last year than the target, increasing only 4 percent, a fact that raised criticism inside the Reagan administration from some officials who contended that the central bank was pursuig a tight-money policy which was driving up interest rates and threatening a recession.

The president's Council of Economic Advisers issued a report on Friday which said tight Fed money policies were partly responsible for triggering the Oct. 19 stock market crash.

Greenspan, less than a month after succeeding Volcker, led the central bank to increase its discount rate from 5.5 percent to 6 percent on Sept. 4. The action raising the rate the Fed charges to make bank loans occurred as the value of the dollar was falling sharply and causing fears of higher domestic inflation.

After the record 508-point fall in the stock market on Black Monday, the Fed reversed course and pledged to pump as much money as was needed into the economy to cushion the effects from the sudden loss of stock wealth.

Western Auto dealer receives award for 15 years service

M. C. Diaz (center left) receives award and handshake from Bill Rood of Western Auto, for 15 years service as a Western Auto Dealer, as family members (from left) David Diaz, general manager M.C. Diaz, Inc., Louisa Diaz, Ray Diaz, and Rudy Diaz. Located at 301 E. Illinois, the Diaz Western Auto is the only independently-owned store in Midland.

In a recent ceremony M.C. Diaz of Western Auto, 301 E. Illinois, was presented a plaque for 15 years as a Western Auto Dealer.

A native West Texan, M.C. Diaz has lived in Midland for more than 35 years and Western Auto has been located in the same spot since 1976.

This family-owned and operated mercantile features more than 10,000 square feet of display space, about half of which is dedicated to Western Auto Automotive supplies. The remainder of the store includes lawn and garden equipment, Black & Decker appliances, Bassett furniture, Whirlpool appliances and plumbing and electrical supplies.

Western Flyer bicycles, Magnavox televisions, stereos and video cassette recorders, Sharp VCRs and televisions and Pioneer audio equipment are also on display at Western Auto.

"Western Auto is very convenient for downtown shoppers, especially at lunch and after work," said David Diaz, general manager of M. C. Diaz, Inc.

"We are active in community organizations and support Midland in any way we can," David said. The family holds memberships in such diverse organizations as Midland Crimestoppers to the Lions Club. David is presently serving on the Board of Directors for the Midland Chamber of Commerce and is a member of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. Rudy, manager of Bike Masters in Permian Mall, is active in the Midland Jaycees and Ray, manager of Bike Masters in Midland Park Mall, is a recent graduate of the University of Texas and is involved in the Midland Big Brothers-/Big Sisters organization.

Discount prices, which Western Auto passes on to its customers, is a major advantage to shopping at Western Auto. "We have an established reputation for carrying top-quality merchandise for very competitive prices," David explained. "We are the only independently-owned, locally owned and operated Western Auto Store in Midland. When you purchase something here, you know the money generated is going to stay in our community."

Western Auto offers revolving charge accounts and Visa and MasterCard are always welcome. Western Auto will honor the prices of any area Western Auto advertisement, including the store on Andrews. Store hours are 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday. Stop by today and check out the savings at Western Auto, 301 E. Illinois.

Customer service is Number One at Quatro Products Corp, 2507 W. Illinois. That's why they stock top-quality Pittsburgh Paints and supplies. And that's why Quatro Products recently invested in the latest state-of-the-art computer color-matching equipment.

The new Accu-Match, a computerized color matching system from McBeth Systems, uses an electronic "eye" to scan the desired color. It then accesses a vast number of color combinations before selecting the colors that will combine to match or cordinate with the pre-selected color.

"Prior to this very few people could match colors by visual comparison," explained George Bogle, manager of Quatro Products. With more than 28 years of experience in the paint business, George is an expert at matching colors. However, the process can be time consuming and tedious.

"Mixing the colors by hand entails doing a small sample, letting it dry and comparing that color to the original. Then the process starts all over again, until the colors match," Bogle said. "Sometimes you get it the first time out. Other times it can take hours."

"With the new Accu-Match system the color can be matched in about 30 seconds," he said. "Basically, we can match or coordinate the color from just about any surface, including fabric, formica, wood, paper. Anything that has a color on it can be inserted into the computer for processing."

And to ensure the highest quality, always use Pittsburgh Paints from Quatro Products. Quatro Products stocks a complete selection of interior and exterior Pittsburg Paints. Everything you need from Pittsburgh Paints for residential, industiral and commercial use. They also have a airge selection of sundry items, such as paint brushes, sand paper, drywall tools, drop clothes, accoustic sprayers, aluminum ladders, caulking and filling products, pressure washers and airless sprayers. Rental is avialabe on accoustic sprayers, pressure washers and airless sprayers. Quatro Products has everything you need for your home or business.

"Pittsburgh Paints has been manufacturing paint for more than 100 years," he said. "They invest a lot of time and money into research and development to meet very high quality standards." Quatro Products can also supply materials to painting contractors and apartment complexes.

Located at 2507 W. Illinois, this Quatro Products store is the newest in a chain of four stores owned by Odessan Phil Fouche, Jr. The other stores are located in Odessa, El Paso and Abuquerque, NM.

Quatro Products is open Monday through Friday, 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturday from 7:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Delivery in Midland is free. For more information on how the Accu-Match color-matching system can help you, call 687-3326 or go by 2507 W. Illinois. Stop in today and see how the new Accu-Match can make selecting the colors you want to paint easier!

Dole, Gephardt look to fellow Midwesterners for political help

Associated Press

Republican Sen. Bob Dole and Democratic Rep. Richard Gephardt, both second-place finishers in the New Hampshire primary, were looking for help from fellow Midwesterners today as voters in Minnesota and South Dakota registered their presidential choices.

Other candidates turned their attention to today's campaign contests.

"We believe in the people in this part of the country," Dole told a rally in Minneapolis. His Midwest roots served him well in Iowa, where he was a big winner in GOP presidential caucuses.

Dole chided Bush, his chief Republican rival, for concentrating on the South which will have the largest share of votes on Super Tuesday, March 8, when 20 states hold primaries and caucuses.

"Why vote for somebody who doesn't come to the state?" Dole asked his Minnesota audience.

"I think I'm going to be the next president of the United States," Bush said as he campaigned in South Carolina, which holds its primary three days before the Super Tuesday contests of March 8.

In South Dakota, 18 GOP convention delegates were at stake in the primary. Democratic voters were expressing their preference in a non-binding beauty contest primary.

Minnesota voters will attend more than 8,000 precinct caucuses tonight — 4,076 in each party — to register their presidential choices.

Democrats will start the process that will lead to allocation of the state's 78 national convention delegates. On the Republican side, the principal order of business is a non-binding straw poll.

Gephardt, the Missouri congressman who finished first in the Iowa Democratic caucuses, spent most of the week since the New Hampshire primary campaigning in South Dakota, while Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis split his time between that state and Minnesota.

For at least two campaigns — those of Kemp and Democratic Sen. Paul Simon — the Minnesota and South Dakota contests were survival tests for their heavily indebted efforts.

"I have to say candidly it is unlikely I am going to win in Minnesota or South Dakota," Simon told reporters after an appearance at the University of Minnesota. But he vowed to continue his campaign through to the Democratic nominating convention in Atlanta in July.

GOP presidential candidate Bob Dole, left, raises a large foam rubber hand with the help of Rep. Arlan Stangeland Monday night at a rally in Minneapolis, Minn.

The latest figures released by the Federal Election Commission showed Gephardt, Simon and Kemp ended January in debt, as did former television evangelist Pat Robertson, who was the biggest spender of the entire campaign.

Robertson reported $5.5 million in loans and contributions of $1.3 million during January, in addition to the $6.5 million he got in federal matching funds. Robertson had earlier said he might not use the matching funds because he was philosophically opposed to the public financing system.

Religious broadcasters fear fallout

By ROBERT BARR

Religious broadcasters who lost financial support following last year's scandals and controversy face another potentially hard blow from the Rev. Jimmy Swaggart's confession of sexual misconduct.

"My feeling is that there will be more damage, and the credibility of those of us in Christian broadcasting will be hurt a little bit more," Jerry Rose, president of National Religious Broadcasters, said Monday.

"This is not what we are about, and we have spent an inordinate amount of time dealing with these issues," said Rose, who operates religious station WCFC-TV in Chicago.

Swaggart, among the nation's most widely watched television preachers, stepped down from his pulpit Sunday after confessing he had sinned against God and his family.

Officials with his church, the Assemblies of God, said he had admitted to a long history of sexual problems and would be prohibited from preaching for a minimum of three months while he undergoes rehabilitation.

"I look at the example of a Gary Hart moral failure — that did not ruin the Democratic party or other Democratic candidates, but it did ruin Gary Hart," DeMoss said.

It didn't work that way a year ago. Some of the big ministries, including Swaggart's, bled from the wounds inflicted by Jim Bakker's adultery and high living in the PTL ministry, and Oral Roberts' do-or-die appeal for $8 million.

In the aftermath, no one sounded more cynical and disillusioned than Swaggart. "You can stay more holy a lot of times watching 'Miami Vice' than watching so-called Christian television," he said in one of his rousing sermons a year ago.

"A lot of people saw Jimmy as a pacesetter for doing what needed to be done in the church, so in this case it is shocking," Rose said.

The Rev. James Robison, a TV evangelist who is seen on about 150 stations around the country, said the fear of criticism from Swaggart and other preachers may have led Bakker to hide his own problem, rather than address it.

"Jim Bakker told me himself, he said, 'I wanted help, but I was so afraid of what would be said,' " Robison said early today on ABC's "Nightline."

At CBN, whose operations include the Christian Broadcasting Network and CBN University, spokesman Benton Miller declined to speculate on the impact from Swaggart's problems.

Last year, however, he said contributions to CBN dropped 32.5 percent from April to October, and have remained flat. When CBN cut nearly 500 employees last summer, founder Pat Robertson blamed the controversies surrounding Bakker and Roberts.

Roberts, based in Tulsa, Okla., had said that God might "call me home" if he didn't raise $8 million by the end of March, the month of Bakker's confession and resignation from PTL. CBN's fiscal year started April 1.

"We had to take the whole hit of that, plus the change in the talent mix for the 700 Club, plus the drop in oil prices...plus the recent October stock market plunge," Miller said Monday. "All four of those factors hit us all at once."

The change in the talent mix involved Robertson's departure from the broadcast to seek the Republican presidential nomination, and the resignation of co-host Ben Kinchlow. CBN cut 145 more employees in November, leaving a workforce of 1,174, though it has also managed to expand its television programming and launch a radio service, Miller said.

DeMoss said contributions to Falwell's ministry had rebounded, but on Monday, WPGH-TV in Pittsburgh announced it was dropping Falwell's program because he was $50,000 in arrears.

Oma Bradner, who handles Falwell's television accounts, said late Monday a check was mailed on Friday.

Assemblies of God church believes in emotion

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The Assemblies of God church, once again enmeshed in a scandal involving a prominent television evangelist, offers a highly personal, emotional approach to religion that has made it the fastest-growing major Christian denomination in the United States.

The latest scandal, which prompted the Rev. Jimmy Swaggart to step down temporarily from his pulpit Sunday after an inquiry into his sexual conduct by the denomination, is likely to reopen a debate over whether an emphasis on emotional religious experience undermines religious discipline.

According to figures published by the National Council of Churches, the Assemblies of God has grown from 318,500 members in 1950 to more than 2 million in 1985. The church says it has 14 million more members overseas, 9 million of them in Brazil.

A 1987 survey reported 11,000 Assembly of God churches in the United States. The church has more than 30,000 ministers, about 3,700 of whom are women.

The denomination's roots are in what is called the "Holiness Revival," a wave of religious fervor that swept through the ranks of American Methodists in the decades after the Civil War.

The movement expressed a rigorous quest for personal Christian perfection, a traditional Methodist concern that the "holiness" adherents believed to have been attenuated as Methodist churches became more sedate and middle class.

Church members also looked for a "second blessing" by the Holy Spirit that marked their sanctification. One strand of the holiness movement became known as Pentecostals for their belief that all Christians should seek the same gifts of the Holy Spirit, including speaking in "tongues," that Jesus' disciples received on what Christian churches celebrate as the feast of Pentecost.

Today, groups emphasizing these gifts — or charisms — of the spirit form charismatic movements within almost every major branch of Christianity.

In April 1914, representatives of scattered Pentecostal groups came together in Hot Springs, Ark., to form the Assemblies of God church.

NATION IN BRIEF

Exner paid for interview

NEW YORK (AP) — People magazine paid Judith Campbell Exner $50,000 for interviews in which she claimed to have served as a courier and contact for President Kennedy and a Chicago mobster, the author of the article says.

Kitty Kelley said Monday that she and Exner, who claims to have arranged at least 10 meetings between Kennedy and Mafia boss Sam Giancana in the early 1960s, split a fee of "about $100,000."

Parts of Exner's story were questioned today by Giancana's daughter Antoinette, the author of "Mafia Princess," in an interview today on "CBS This Morning."

Ms. Giancana said that she never met Exner but knew that she was her father's girlfriend. And she said that her father wanted to help in the alleged assassination plot against Cuban leader Fidel Castro.

But she said that as far as she knew, her father never spoke to Kennedy during his time in the White House.

Back yard treehouse saved

ST. LOUIS PARK, Minn. (AP) — A man who fought City Hall to keep his seven-tiered tree house in his back yard can continue to use the structure as long as he makes some safety improvements, city officials say.

"I feel just fine with all of this," Mark Tucker said after officials announced the outcome Monday. "My kids feel fine that they can play in their tree house."

St. Louis Park officials had objected to the tree house last May, saying it was unsafe and exposed the city to possible lawsuits.

Tucker, 38, gained national publicity during his fight over the tree house and for a pair of 10-day jail sentences he served in November 1987 and in January for housing code violations at Minneapolis apartment buildings he owns.

Heroin found in statues

CHICAGO (AP) — A pit bull terrier unhappy with the smell coming from shipping crates full of Oriental statues led U.S. Customs officials to up to $1.8 billion worth of heroin at O'Hare International Airport, authorities said.

"It was the largest inland port seizure of heroin in United States history," U.S. Attorney Anton Valukas said Monday after authorities announced the arrest of six people on drug charges.

Spike, a pit bull terrier trained to locate drugs by the U.S. Customs Service, sniffed suspiciously at the seven shipping crates destined for New York from Bangkok, Thailand, on British Airways on Feb. 5, said his handler, customs officer Jeff Gabel.

Mickey Gilley thinks Swaggart was set up

PASADENA, Texas (AP) — Country-western singer Mickey Gilley, one of the Rev. Jimmy Swaggart's two famous cousins, thinks the scandal surrounding Swaggart was a setup orchestrated by a Louisiana archrival.

But if Swaggart willingly consorted with a prostitute, Gilley said it would burst his personal image of Swaggart as a morally pure person.

The reference is to the fact that cousins Swaggart, Gilley and rock 'n' roll pioneer Jerry Lee Lewis grew up together in Ferriday, La., separated in age by two years. Gilley and Swaggart are second cousins.

"If that happened (the allegations against Swaggart), then I am in total shock," Gilley said. "We are all subject to making mistakes, (but) we were raised in the Assembly of God and told there is only one perfect person in the world, and that is Jesus Christ."

Gorman reportedly triggered the church investigation of Swaggart. Gorman was defrocked by the Assemblies of God after he told Swaggart that he had committed adultery in 1980.

Gilley said that, during the dispute, Gorman hired a detective to dog Swaggart for eight months. The allegations against Swaggart apparently resulted from the surveillance, Gilley said.

Swaggart was ordered by church officials Monday to undergo two years of rehabilitation and refrain from preaching in the United States for at least three months because of "moral failure" said to involve a motel encounter with a prostitute.
