Governor to visit

Texas Gov. George Bush is to be in the Midland-Odessa area at noon Monday to sign Texas House of Representatives Bill 2115 which designates the highways which are to be part of the "La Entrada al Pacifico" Texas-Mexico trade corridor. The Texas Department of Transportation (TxDOT) is to erect signs along the route to designate the corridor. The governor is to sign the bill, which was sponsored by Texas Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland, at noon Monday on the west patio of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin's Center for Energy and Economic Diversity (CEED). "The erection of these signs along the La Entrada al Pacifico corridor will be a constant reminder to those who drive portions of the route and will be of great benefit in promoting the corridor," said Charles R. Perry, who is chairman the Midland-Odessa Transportation Alliance (MOTRAN). MOTRAN had proposed the bill. Highways to be designated "La Entrada al Pacifico" include Texas Highway 349 from Lamesa to Midland; Interstate Highway 20 from Midland to Odessa; United States Highway 385 from Odessa to Fort Stockton, and U.S. Highway 67 from Fort Stockton to Presidio, which borders Ojinaga, Mexico.

Local tax base expands by 8 percent

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The 1997 countywide $4.4 billion tax base, which the six taxing entities in Midland County key to in setting their ad-valorem property tax rates and in levying taxes, is 8 percent higher than last year's tax base, according to Chief Appraiser Ron Stegall of the Midland Central Appraisal District.

"The economy is pretty strong right now," Stegall said Thursday, explaining what the increase suggests.

The tax base hiked to $4.4 billion from 1996's $4.1 billion due to gains in real estate and mineral values. Last year, the tax base had increased by 4 percent.

Mineral values went up 16.8 percent due to increases in the prices of oil and gas.

"Houses definitely increased, generally, somewhere around between 8 and 9 percent, for the most part, throughout the city," Stegall said. "The tax base went up throughout the city."

There are 31,000 houses in Midland County, Stegall noted.

The 1997 tax-base increase reflects that "houses and so forth are selling for more this year," Stegall said.

The northwest part of town and property along Loop 250 particularly were rife with new construction.

"We have had a lot of new construction," Stegall said. "In the last two years, we have had about $250 million in new construction," including $120 million in 1997 and $130 million in 1996.

"The real-estate values are way up in Greenwood, too," he said.

Stegall noted that any increase in the tax base would "automatically" lower the effective tax rate, which is that rate computed to bring in the same revenue from one year to the next.

For instance, if the tax base were to increase by 10

Dispute over MISD bus driving settled with software

By Alice Ashmore

"It's all a matter of perception." That's how Midland Independent School District's executive director of auxiliary services characterized a grievance that was filed against the school district by MISD school bus drivers and the Texas State Teachers Association (TSTA).

Some bus drivers contended that certain employees were getting preferential treatment in the assignment of non-scheduled bus runs.

But the controversy was resolved at a recent MISD Board of Trustee's meeting. The board approved the implementation of a new $4,000 software package that chooses drivers by hire date for "unassigned" trips.

Heidelberg defined "unassigned trips" as special trips not part of a driver's usual assigned route. The trips are commonly called "field trips," according to Heidelberg.

Transportation to athletic events and other competitions is also considered "unassigned."

Previously, all drivers were assigned to those trips "manually," Heidelberg said.

Linda Lindsey, TSTA UniServe representative, was

Bullock says he won't run for re-election

AUSTIN (AP) — After a career spanning four decades in which he forged a reputation as the most powerful person in Texas politics, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock said Thursday he won't run for re-election.

Instead, the veteran Democrat said, he wants to focus on his family and friends.

Bullock

The announcement — made before an overflow crowd behind the Senate chamber where he has presided since 1991 — marks the beginning of the end of a political journey that Bullock began 40 years ago with a two-year term in the state House.

In that time, Bullock made his mark on major state policy from managing water resources to funding education to preserving Texas history. He is legendary for his personal exploits, ability to work his will in politics and government, and his love for his home state.

"On and off for 40 years, I have walked through the halls of this magnificent Capitol building, 40 years in partnership with the people of Texas," said Bullock, 67. "It was sure a once in a lifetime journey through some of the most historic times ... in our state.

"Never did I dream that I would be the one to take that walk," he said. "And as it nears completion, I announce today that I will not be a candidate for re-election."

Bullock, who would not take questions, said he made the decision last year after discussions with his wife, other family members, two senior partners in the law firm with which he is associated and political adviser Jack Martin.

Last year Republicans for the first time in more than a century gained a majority in the Senate, although they made no attempt to strip the presiding officer of such powers as committee appointments.

Searing images of bombing survival bring jurors to tears

DENVER (AP) — Jurors winced and dabbed at tears Thursday as prosecutors seeking the death penalty for Timothy McVeigh confronted them with searing images of survival, from an amputation with a pocket knife to a slide show of torn flesh and shattered bone.

As the penalty phase shifted from the horrors of death to the torment of the injured, Dr. James Sullivan recounted how he crawled into a dark, wet cave of rubble from the Oklahoma City bombing to free a woman by cutting off her leg, without anesthesia.

"Once I started cutting she started kicking and screaming," said Sullivan, a University of Oklahoma surgery professor, who performed the operation on Daina Bradley in a cramped corner while lying on top of his writhing patient.

Finally, his surgical tools dulled by scraping concrete, and with two efforts to free her already failed, Sullivan reached into his back pocket for his remaining tool: "I completed the amputation with a pocket knife."

Soft gasps rose in the courtroom audience section where bombing survivors, victims' relatives and reporters sit. Two women jurors who sit in the front wiped away tears with tissues.

But at the defense table, McVeigh's face was as blank as always. He sat in the same pose he had when he was convicted of murder and conspiracy Monday: hands clasped tightly and pressed up against his chin.

Prosecutors, who were winding down their penalty case, have argued death by injection is the only verdict that fits the deadliest terrorist attack on U.S. soil. The April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building killed 168 people and injured more than 500.

Following the prosecution's presentation, the defense will begin its attempt to spare McVeigh the death chamber. The witnesses are expected to include McVeigh's family members, teachers and military officials to describe the ODESSA — With the year 2000 two years and 208 days away, the American character faces challenges on issues ranging from medical ethics to morality, race relations to foreign relations.

The John Ben Shepperd Public Leadership Institute of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin brought to town five prominent experts and analysts on these issues to participate in a roundtable/town hall discussion themed "Challenges to the American Character in the 21st Century."

One challenge comes from both outside and inside the United States as Americans adjust to the end of the Cold War, said participant Lawrence Eagleburger, who served as secretary of state under President George Bush.

The Cold War between the United States and the Soviet Union brought about a period of relative stability, Eagleburger said, with each side able to predict what the other would do.

Now that the Cold War has ended, he said, the world will be relatively unstable for some time because there are no longer the two superpowers to keep their allies in line.

The former Yugoslavia is and will continue to be a hot spot, said Eagleburger, who once served as ambassador to that nation. Other hot spots include Central Africa, where the former Zaire, now known as the Republic of Congo, will be unstable for sometime. In the former Soviet Union, Chechnya will continue to be a troubled area, as may be other areas in Russia that are occupied by people who are not ethnically Russian.

North and South Korea are other hot spots, he said, especially in light of North Korea's growing economic

Tight security marks Algerian parliamentary vote 5 years after coup

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — After more than five years of violence that has killed 60,000 people, millions of Algerians voted in relative calm Thursday in elections organized by the military-backed government in an effort to build the basics of democracy.

A bomb exploded south of Algiers, the capital, reportedly injuring three people. Otherwise, voting for the country's first multiparty parliament was reported quiet.

Algerians voted in relatively large numbers, the government said, although not as many as in presidential elections two years ago.

Before polls closed Thursday, a key opposition party complained of widespread irregularities.

Some 300,000 soldiers and police stood watch. They guarded school houses in the capital, where voting stations were located, and patrolled the sun-washed streets.

Muslim insurgents seeking to replace Algeria's government with a state based on Islamic law have carried out a campaign of terror aimed at sabotaging the election.

Three bombs this week in the capital of Algiers killed nearly two dozen people. Bombings and massacres, including brutal beheadings in mountain villages, have shaken the country in the months leading up to the balloting.

Authorities refused to comment on Thursday's bomb and few details were available. Sources in the Arab League and U.N. observer missions, speaking on condition of anonymity, denied reports that three international observers were injured.

President Liamine Zeroual, a retired general, left his polling booth saying he hoped the Algerian people would "vote to combat terrorism."

Thursday's vote came five years after the army canceled similar elections, triggering the Islamic insurgency. The coup in January 1992 thwarted a likely victory by the Islamic Salvation Front, which was banned from running in this election.

Zeroual needs a large turnout among the 17 million eligible voters to achieve his goal of conferring new legitimacy on his government. Even so, the parliament's powers will be far less than the one that would have been elected in 1992 because the president will have virtual veto power in a new upper house.

The Interior Ministry said turnout was 56 percent, less than the 65 percent turnout for Zeroual's presidential election. That could be a sign that many Islamic voters heeded the Salvation Front's call for a boycott.

Many voters, worn down by violence, said they were casting a ballot for peace in this petroleum-rich North African country.

Bombings "paralyze us. We're living in a veritable psychosis," said Amel, a 26-year-old doctor. Like others questioned, she refused to give her full name, fearing reprisals by the military-backed regime.

Some 40 parties fielding 7,747 candidates were vying for 380 seats.

Shortly before polls closed, Society for Peace leader Sheik Mahfoud Nahnah said his party filed complaints about 397 election irregularities, taking its case to both U.N. and Algerian authorities.

The main contenders are the Movement of Society for Peace and the National Democratic Rally, which was created in February and is considered Zeroual's party.

Other contenders are the National Liberation Front, which ruled Algeria for nearly 30 years, the fiercely anti-Islamic Rally for Culture and Democracy, and the Front for Socialist Forces.

Coup leaders vow to 'defend the motherland'

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone (AP) — Admitting they lack the firepower to win another clash with Nigerian forces, Sierra Leone's coup leaders nonetheless vowed Thursday "to defend the motherland" and mounted guns on bunkers not used since World War II.

Nigeria defended its military intervention in this West African country, describing the renegades as "rapists and killers" and saying a naval bombardment of the capital Monday was just a taste of things to come if they did not capitulate.

Despite coup leaders' promises to bring order to Sierra Leone, chaos was still the rule Thursday, with looting and summary killings plaguing Freetown.

Three other countries have joined Nigeria's military efforts to oust Sierra Leone's junta, military spokesman Col. Godwin Ugbo said in a statement released in Lagos, Nigeria, and others were also planning to join.

Ugbo did not identify the three countries he said had joined the Nigerian operation, nor did he say which other countries were ready to come in.

For the first time, the renegades offered a partial compromise. They said ousted President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah could return — but not as president — if Nigeria agreed to release Foday Sankoh, the leader of the Revolutionary United Front, a rebel group that has conducted a bloody five-year insurgency.

Sankoh is under house arrest in Nigeria on gun-running charges.

The Nigerians, who have been insisting on Kabbah's unconditional return to power, were not likely to agree.

In Lagos, military spokesmen said further reinforcements were arriving in Freetown.

"We do not have the weapons capability to fight the Nigerians," said Brig. Samuel Koroma, Chief of Defense Staff of the mutineers' Armed Forces Revolutionary Council — and the elder brother of the coup's leader, Maj. Johnny Paul Koroma. "But we have nothing to do but defend our motherland."

Despite reports that negotiations were going on, it was unclear who had negotiated with whom — or even if there had been talks. A Ghanaian delegation that had been said to have been in secret meetings with coup leaders on Wednesday returned to Ghana on Thursday saying they had never gotten into the country.

Koroma said he was negotiating with senior Nigerian officers. The Nigerians denied that.

PANEL: Experts discuss potential challenges of 21st Century

depression. It could become dangerous, he said, because North Korea either has nuclear weapons or is very close to having nuclear weapons. Trouble in that area could cause problems for China, he said.

The Clinton Administration's foreign policies are troubled because the administration has failed to think in a coherent way about where potential hot spots are and what problems will occur, said Eagleburger. He called current policy reactive, related to nothing other than the immediate moment, and said that has put the nation on the edge of being too militarily involved around the world.

While it is understandable that a number of Americans sat back when the Cold War ended and felt it was time to relax, Eagleburger said, he sees little danger of America becoming isolationist.

"We have a lot of reasons to be concerned about our domestic situation, and that detracts from foreign relations," he said. "If we don't have a strong domestic situation, we can't have a strong foreign policy and we can't have a strong foreign policy unless the people stand behind it."

Americans are becoming increasingly aware that the nation cannot close itself off from the rest of the world, he said, especially because our economic and trade systems are too interdependent with the rest of the world.

Relations within the country, specifically between the races, in the aftermath of the race riots in Los Angeles, the acquittal of O.J. Simpson and legislative efforts in California and Texas to end affirmative action, also polarize citizens.

"I think we're at a crossroads with affirmative action," said panel member Clarence Page, a nationally syndicated columnist for the Chicago Tribune and 1989 Pulitzer Prize winner for commentary. "And it was inevitable because we're talking about a concept that's 30 years old and wasn't intended to be permanent."

The consensus that was formed in the 1960s that something needed to be done has broken down, he said, and Americans are arguing over what needs to be done now.

While he supports affirmative action, Page said he feels it is proper to talk about "Where do we go from here? We Americans, at some point, need to have a serious talk about race relations."

Alternatives must deal with the underlying problems, which are a lack of equality and a lack of access to the American dream, Page said.

He applauded a bill signed by Texas Gov. George W. Bush that requires state universities to accept all Texas high school applicants who finish in the top 10 percent of their class.

"Why not geographic diversity?" he asked. "You can guarantee racial and class diversity — you give the kid from the inner city the same shot at finishing at the top of his class as the kid who lives in the suburbs."

While Americans are divided along racial lines on such issues as the Simpson verdict and the L.A. riots, Page said, when an event such as the bombing in Oklahoma City occurs, citizens across all racial lines come together to help victims.

In the long-term, he is optimistic, he said, because today's children, while aware of differences such as skin color, don't attach any value to those differences as adults do.

As the new millennium approaches, some Americans are convinced that morality is on the decline, a perception disputed by Dr. Tanya Luhrmann, associate professor of anthropology at the University of California, San Diego, and a member of the panel.

"I don't think there's a decline in morality," she said. "But we have less of a road map, there's fewer traffic rules that state you must have a certain lifestyle, live in a certain type of family. There's so much diversity that we must respect different backgrounds, religions and families."

She said such diversity will require more maturity from Americans.

"This demands wisdom rather than compliance," she said. "You can no longer say you're a good person because you're married with 2.5 kids and the husband's the breadwinner and Mom stays home. There's too many different kinds of families, yet we can still tell the difference between a loving family and an outlaw family. That demands wisdom rather than being caught in a stereotype."

Such diversity could sharply fragment American society, but that depends on how maturely such changes are accepted, Ms. Luhrmann said.

"I'm optimistic; I'd like to think we're mature enough to be increasingly tolerant. There's still a sense of moral goodness, as illustrated by the popularity of William Bennett's book The Book of Virtues. Morality has been a perennial concern; Americans are among the most religious people in the world. What I see happening isn't a loss of our moral center but an abstraction in our perception of what's loving and respectable."

Ethics in medicine has also become a major topic, especially after the news that a sheep in Scotland had been successfully cloned. Debate rages in America about the ethics and morality of cloning humans, of assisted suicide and whether a human life is worth the cost of saving it.

Panel member Dr. Thomas Murray, professor of biomedical ethics and director of the Center for Biomedical Ethics in the School of Medicine at Case Western Reserve University, serves on the Presidential Commission on Cloning and said the commission will be putting final touches on its report to the president this weekend.

Speaking personally, he said, "I don't see any good reason to rush to create human babies. Cloning is not simply another reproductive technology."

He added that there are some good reasons to be concerned about cloning but cautioned that "cloning is not what people think."

Other technological advancements that can prolong a person's life also give rise to difficult choices, he said. A person afraid of living a long life completely incapacitated may choose the technology of assisted suicide, he said.

The increasingly business-oriented focus of the health industry is not all bad, he said, and has addressed a number of inefficiencies.

Still, he said, there is a great deal of concern among doctors that their efforts to provide more efficient care may actually deny care to some patients.

And there is a distinct possibility, he said, that the American people will at some point in the future stand up and say the dominance of managed care has gone too far and that changes need to be made.

The panel discussion was moderated by Al Hunt, executive Washington editor for the Wall Street Journal and a member of CNN's Capital Gang and other political shows.

He noted that Americans have traditionally not held journalists in high esteem, attributing that largely to the "Kill the messenger rather than accept bad news" tradition and Americans' failure to distinguish between traditional media and the tabloids and some television talk shows.

BULLOCK: Lieutenant governor won't run for re-election

(From 1A)

"This is not a hasty decision. And it was not one that was hard for me to make," said Bullock, family members by his side and Republican Gov. George W. Bush near him. "It's time for me to set aside public office ... and focus on my family and a host of friends."

At one point Bullock turned to Bush, who stood behind him, and pulled him forward, thanking him for his leadership and "your love for Texas."

In an emotional moment, Bush clapped Bullock on the back, telling him, "You're a good man." Bullock, who has predicted the son of former President Bush someday will be elected to the White House, returned the compliment.

Later, Bush called Bullock a friend and a Texas legend, saying, "God blessed Texas with Bob Bullock." House Speaker Pete Laney, D-Hale Center, said Bullock is a leader "of the same caliber and cloth of Texas' legendary heroes."

As a visual symbol of the import of Bullock's announcement, his press conference was attended by friends, family, political advisers, lobbyists, current and former employees and legislative leaders from both parties.

"It's an end of an era. There are not many giants, true giants, in Texas history. He's got to be among a handful," said Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bill Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant, who has not ruled out a run for Bullock's post.

Bullock said he made his announcement early to allow time for those who wish to seek the office. Among those mentioned as contenders have been Democratic Comptroller John Sharp and Republican Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry.

Whoever is elected in 1998, some senators said, likely won't be accorded the same powers that Bullock and his predecessors have had.

"I would predict to you that Bob Bullock probably will be the last super-powerful lieutenant governor," Ratliff said. "I think the Senate is probably going to feel that the Senate ought to, from here on, be more involved in the procedural calls and on the organizational calls."

Senators didn't change the rules on Bullock because they didn't want it to appear changes were aimed at him, Ratliff said.

Senate Economic Development Committee Chairman David Sibley, R-Waco, who also hasn't ruled out a lieutenant governor's race, said Bullock's power stemmed from his vast store of information and ability to use it.

"You talk about budget, you talk about where the bodies are buried, intuitive use of power — he had it all. ... I really have never known anybody like that in my life — a person who could literally change the course of a river almost just by force of personality," Sibley said.

"When he was mad, it was a woeful and awful thing to behold. When you were in trouble, there was no more loyal friend that you had."

Bullock's public career began in the state House in 1957. After a stint in private law practice and lobbying, he returned to state government in 1967 as an assistant attorney general. He then served as a governor's aide and as secretary of state before being elected in 1974 to the first of four terms as state comptroller.

When he was sworn in as Texas' 38th lieutenant governor, Bullock called himself "a person rich in human frailties."

Married five times, he has battled to quit smoking cigarettes and underwent voluntary treatment for alcoholism in 1981. There are stories of his temper and firing of employees who are then rehired, and of his round-the-clock work ethic.

He had part of his right lung removed in 1972, was treated for depression in 1977, had a heart attack in 1979 and underwent heart bypass surgery in 1994. An aide said Thursday's announcement had nothing to do with his health.

Through it all, Bullock cites one constant, his love for the Lone Star State and its people.

"I will leave the office no ill will to anyone, none, but only admiration and respect and love for the people of Texas who made this all possible for me," he said. "Only death will end that love affair with Texas."

BUS: Drivers claimed favoritism in distribution of 'field trips'

pleased with the outcome. "We were asking for a way to prevent unfairness or the perception of unfairness. We got that." She added, "There was a big discrepancy between drivers."

Shirley Howard, an MISD bus driver for 7 years, spoke before trustees at Tuesday's board meeting. "Bus drivers will not speak out because of fear of retaliation," she told the Reporter-Telegram Thursday.

Ms. Howard said she was one of eight drivers on the original petition. "So many of them came up to me and said 'we appreciate you coming forth and speaking out for us.'"

Wilford Plumlee, another driver complaining as part of the grievance process, could not be reached for comment.

"The bus drivers are at-will employees. It makes it hard for them to complain," Ms. Lindsey said. She added that drivers had complained about favoritism "for years."

Ms. Howard said she sensed veiled threats during her meeting with Heidelberg last Monday. "He said if we keep airing our dirty linen in public that we might have privatization."

"My statement is that we need to keep running 'lean and mean' or we will face privatization," Heidelberg countered. "I never used (the phrase) dirty linen."

MISD has studied privatization of the district's transportation system in the past, he said. "The lowest bid was $220,000 more that what we are paying now."

The $4 million transportation budget makes up about four percent of the district's $100 million dollar budget, he said.

"One of the ways that we can run more cheaply (than private companies) is that we do monitor our system and minimize overtime costs," Heidelberg said.

He added that the "picking at all the little things" drives costs up and increases the chance that private transportation providers could become competitive.

"If you treat people fairly we would not have this kind of problem," Ms. Howard said, adding, "We shouldn't have dirty linen anyway if things were going the way they were supposed to."

Under current MISD policy, bus drivers are guaranteed work for four hours a day, Heidelberg said. "Our bus routes are not equal ... I'll say that right up front." He noted that longer rural routes generate more time.

"We asked for the records to be pulled," Ms. Howard said. "Some driver's paychecks would be $800 to $900, some of ours would only be $200 or $300."

The software package, called TOM, short for Transportation Operation Management, also takes into account driver overtime in choosing who receives an additional trip. "It watches the time and when a driver hits overtime, it skips them," Heidelberg said.

Emergency bus trips, those given to the closest available driver, also came under scrutiny. "The perception was that we were 'creating' emergency bus trips," Heidelberg said. "That is ludicrous."

It was decided by the MISD board that a list of emergency drivers and their trips would be posted every two weeks. "I appreciate their decision to post," Ms. Howard said.

Ms. Howard weighed into the bus driver battle because "I am a challenger. I am one of these verbal people who normally does everything." She feels she is one of the "least liked" employees by the administration because of her positions.

"She is no different from anyone else in my view," Heidelberg said.

She runs a tight ship on her bus route which carries both elementary and high school children to and from school. "I don't just drive a bus — I take a real interest in my kids to help motivate them," Ms. Howard said. "I am really trying to reach them."

She also was happy at the outcome of the grievance process. "I appreciate the board being sound in their decision making. I feel we can come to them and they won't turn a deaf ear."

MCVEIGH: Onlookers watched survivor with 'horrid fascination'

influences and events — including the FBI siege at Waco — that turned the decorated Gulf War veteran against his own government.

It will have to counter a wrenching series of photographs presented Thursday of the wounds suffered by bombing survivors. Although the judge edited out the most gruesome images, the presentation still had jurors looking sickly.

Narrated by Oklahoma epidemiologist Sue Mallonee, the pictures showed backs strafed and pockmarked by flying glass, eye sockets crushed and bruised, faces disfigured by palsy and necks scarred by ripped-open jugular veins.

During the presentation, Mallonee gave the ghastly details of the victims' plights:

"He still has glass embedded in his back."

"Her right ear was torn away from her scalp."

"She had a large door knob embedded in the back of her head."

Prosecutors then called on one of those wounded.

Susan Urbach, who was injured when the blast ripped through the window of her office in the nearby Journal-Record Building, recalled people watching her with "horrid fascination" as she picked her way out of the building.

She later discovered that her face, neck and back had been severely cut by flying glass. She recounted the first time she saw herself in the hospital mirror.

"What did you see?" prosecutor Beth Wilkinson asked.

"Fresh-stitched meat," Ms. Urbach responded.

"My ear was totally cut in half all the way through the cartilage," she said. "I groaned because I couldn't believe what I was seeing."

Yet Urbach, a smiling, boisterous woman with a musical background, left jurors with among their few smiles over the last two days when she spoke of her positive outlook and even pride in being left scarred to the face.

"It's my badge of honor," she said, explaining that a scar represents healing and renewal.

"So you're proud of your scar?" asked Wilkinson.

"Yes," she said.

Adultery clouds decision on candidate to head Joint Chiefs

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's military leaders shouldn't be held to "notions of perfection," Defense Secretary William Cohen said Thursday in support of a four-star general who remains a top candidate to head the Joint Chiefs of Staff despite admitting an adulterous affair.

Disputing charges the Pentagon was using a double standard, spokesman Kenneth Bacon said, "The issue is balance. The issue is doing the right thing. ... We are not voyeurs."

The question of who will become President Clinton's top military adviser was clouded after the admission by Air Force Gen. Joseph Ralston that he had an affair with a civilian woman while separated from his wife in the 1980s. Ralston has been Cohen's top choice as the next chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to replace Gen. John Shalikashvili in the fall.

In a written statement, Cohen said Ralston remains "a leading candidate" and that he will make a decision in the next week or two. The timing allows the administration time to assess public reaction to Ralston's situation, and gives Cohen, a former Maine senator, additional time to discuss the matter with his former colleagues on Capitol Hill — or allow Ralston a chance to bow out of contention on his own.

Bacon said such a step had not entered into Cohen's discussion with Ralston in recent days.

"I am satisfied General Ralston's conduct was neither prejudicial to good order and discipline nor discrediting to the armed forces," Cohen said in his written statement, using the legal definition of adulterous behaviour that qualifies as a crime under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Ralston, traveling in Asia, issued a statement saying he takes "full responsibility for my conduct" and that he has "worked diligently to learn from my mistakes." He said he intended to continue in the service.

Former Defense Secretary William Perry, who nominated Ralston to his current position as vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs, joined in support of Ralston, calling him an "outstanding officer" who would make "a truly gifted" chairman.

"I am gratified he remains under consideration," Perry said.

Shalikashvili also said he supports Ralston.

The White House stood by Ralston.

"He remains a leading candidate. He is an outstanding soldier, an outstanding vice chairman," spokeswoman Anne Luzzatto said. "But a (recommendation) has yet to come to the president."

On Capitol Hill, lawmakers questioned whether the Pentagon should promote a top general who has had an affair when lower-ranking officers have been punished for such conduct.

Army Sgt. Maj. Gene C. McKinney, the service's top enlisted soldier, faces multiple charges of sexual misconduct. The Pentagon said Thursday that McKinney has asked to retire with an honorable discharge, but he could be court-martialed.

Rep. Jane Harman, D-Calif., called for an end to "senseless witch hunts" involving the sex lives of military service members.

And Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., pointed out that the Air Force charged its first female B-52 pilot, 1st Lt. Kelly Flinn, with adultery.

"Whether this is due to rank or gender, it is still a double standard and it is wrong," Schumer said. "This morning, women all over America are scratching their heads over this."

"It is very clear that the Pentagon is selectively enforcing its rules on sexual conduct," said Rep. Nita Lowey, D-N.Y. "The Pentagon is employing a double standard. ... We cannot have one set of rules for the big boys in the Pentagon and another for the rank-and-file."

The National Organization for Women said Cohen's decision to support Ralston "demonstrates that the double standards that benefit the old boy's network are alive and well in the military."

Bacon denied the Pentagon had a double standard. He noted that Flinn, for example, was charged not just with adultery but also with disobeying an order and lying.

"The military does not worry about adultery for the sake of adultery," Bacon said. The key issue, he said, is whether such conduct causes favoritism or abuses of authority.

BASE: Commissioners' Court might lower tax rate

percent this year over last year, a governing body could reduce its tax rate by that same percentage and would still bring in the same amount of revenue.

Conversely, a drop in the tax base would mean that the effective tax rate would be higher than the tax rate to generate identical revenue amounts.

"I haven't heard of anybody wanting to go up above the effective (tax rate in 1997)," Stegall said.

Midland County Judge Jeff Norwood this week said that the Commissioners' Court is considering lowering the 1997 tax rate below the current rate due to the tax-base increase.

The current tax rates, which are subject to change this year, of the six taxing entities in Midland County are: city of Midland, 66.40 cents per $100 valuation; Midland County, 23.37 cents; Midland Independent School District, $1.3837; Midland College, 16.33 cents; Greenwood, $1.88, and the Midland County Hospital District governing Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, 16.90 cents per $100 valuation.

Army sergeant cleared of rape, convicted of indecent assault

DARMSTADT, Germany (AP) — A military jury cleared a U.S. Army sergeant of six rape charges Thursday but convicted him of multiple counts of indecent assault in the first of three sexual misconduct cases at a training base in Germany.

The jury of five male soldiers at the base in Darmstadt sentenced Sgt. 1st Class Julius Davis to two years in prison and ordered a bad-conduct discharge and a reduction in rank. The convictions had carried a maximum penalty of 31 years in prison.

Leaving the courtroom, Davis called the investigation "a witch hunt" and accused investigators of pressuring the women who alleged the attacks to file charges.

"They brought me in, they corralled the females," he said. "You ask me how I feel? I feel very betrayed by the court system."

By contrast, Davis was contrite in a statement to the jury before the panel began sentencing deliberations.

"I apologize to the women. I apologize to the army and the non-commissioned officer corps," Davis said. "I truly love the Army. I am truly sorry for the embarrassment I have caused to the Army."

Davis is one of three Army sergeants charged in a sexual abuse scandal that surfaced at Darmstadt in February. The two others are being prosecuted separately.

The investigation was part of an Army-wide probe of sexual misconduct that began in November in response to the sexual assault and harassment scandal at the Army's ordnance school in Aberdeen, Md.

Davis, 36, of Fayetteville, N.C., pleaded innocent to six counts of rape, one of attempted rape, one of forcible sodomy, several counts of cruelty toward a subordinate and indecent assault. The latter charge involves accusations that he groped, hugged or kissed women to satisfy his sexual desires.

During the three-day trial, 13 women testified that he had sexually assaulted or harassed them while he worked as an instructor at the Darmstadt training center. Another former soldier accused him of raping and assaulting her in 1993 when he was a drill sergeant at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

The jury acquitted him of the rape charges, four counts of indecent assault and one of forcible sodomy, but found him guilty of three other counts of indecent assault and four counts of cruelty and mistreatment — all for incidents at Darmstadt.

In closing statements, prosecutor Maj. Michael Klausner said Davis used his rank to take advantage of female soldiers and to keep them from turning him in to the military.

The defense assailed two of the rape charges, claiming that the women had consented to sex after a night of heavy drinking. Davis was acquitted on both counts.

Davis and two other sergeants accused in the scandal have been relieved of their duties at the Darmstadt training center, where soldiers deploying to the region take a two-week course about life in Germany and administrative matters.

Sgt. Paul Fuller, 25, of Columbus, Ohio, faces 17 charges, including rape and attempted rape at a trial scheduled to begin June 9. The third suspect has not yet been ordered to stand trial.

Anticipating aid, Congo admits some Hutu killings

KINSHASA, Congo (AP) — Backing down from earlier assertions it had nothing to do with the alleged massacres of Rwandan refugees, Congo's government now acknowledges that some may have been killed in crossfire during the civil war.

Laurent Kabila's government is hoping that the admission, while far from an acknowledgment that his forces committed atrocities, is enough to secure desperately-needed aid for his plundered, ravaged land during a visit Friday by U.S. envoy Bill Richardson.

Western countries are generally pleased with Kabila's conduct since he declared himself president three weeks ago. He has included opposition elements in his government and has promised a new constitution and free elections by April 1999.

But in Washington, officials have said he could squander much of his international good will if he continues to block U.N. access to areas south of Kisangani, in eastern Congo, where there have been consistent reports of massacres of Rwandan refugees.

Until now, Kabila's officials have dismissed as "absurd" allegations that refugees were killed, and have accused humanitarian agencies of being biased.

They have insisted that only the armed Hutu militants among the Rwandan refugees living in Congo died in clashes with Kabila's mostly-Tutsi rebel alliance. Kabila's forces swept across the former Zaire in seven months and ousted Mobutu Sese Seko's dictatorship.

Interior Minister Mwenze Kongolo backed off that stance Wednesday.

"At various times we fought against armed refugees, that is not a secret," he told The Associated Press. "We imagine that in a war there will be people killed who are not armed combatants."

He did not say how many civilians he believed had died in such fashion.

During his visit, Richardson will press Kabila to allow U.N. inspectors into parts of eastern Zaire where humanitarian officials believe massacres may have taken place. Recent newspaper accounts also suggest the presence of mass graves in western Congo.

Kabila agreed Tuesday to designate a Cabinet minister to deal directly with the United Nations on the plight of Rwandan refugees in Congo and "to work closely" with the U.N. on the issue.

His government also allowed the release of a report by a Lutheran bishop acknowledging that inter-ethnic conflict, war and disease cost "scores" of lives during the civil war.

The Rev. Ngoy Kasukuti said Kabila's forces killed refugees but did not say how many. While characterizing his report as independent, Kasukuti said he relied on the assistance of officials supporting Kabila.

The 22-page report said the animosity that led to civilian deaths during the war is also attributable to Mobutu's discriminatory policies against ethnic Tutsis and the U.N.'s failure to disarm the Hutu militants.

Western diplomats, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the report looked like an attempt to lay the groundwork for further revelations of atrocities by elements of Kabila's Alliance of Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Congo-Zaire.

The United States — and other Western countries — have made it clear that Kabila must demonstrate a commitment to democratic reform to win desperately needed assistance to reverse decades of plunder by Mobutu and his cronies.

Richardson's visit comes the same week that a five-member Agency for International Development team arrived for a preliminary assessment of assistance needs.

The hundreds of Hutu refugees that some have alleged were killed by Kabila's troops during the war had fled neighboring Rwanda to escape reprisals following the slaughter of a half-million Tutsis there.

Rwanda's Tutsi-led government reportedly aided Kabila during his campaign to oust Mobutu and a large segment of Kabila's forces were ethnic Tutsis from the eastern provinces of what was formerly known as Zaire.

Some of the reports of atrocities have come from non-Tutsi soldiers in the alliance resentful of what they view as Tutsi domination of the military.

Administration asks high court to steer clear of reverse-bias case

WASHINGTON (AP) — Changing course, the Justice Department urged the Supreme Court on Thursday to steer clear of a closely watched affirmative action case the Clinton administration had once sought to reverse.

The administration apparently feared that the court would use the New Jersey reverse-bias case for a decision that could set a national precedent.

The lawsuit was filed by a white teacher who had been laid off in 1989 while an equally qualified black colleague kept her job in a Piscataway high school.

Justice Department lawyers said in their Supreme Court brief that a federal appeals court was wrong in ruling that the Piscataway Board of Education's effort to preserve diversity amounted to illegal racial discrimination. But the administration nevertheless asked the Supreme Court to pass up the case.

Apparently worried that the Piscataway school board would be entering a high-stakes battle without enough ammunition, government lawyers said the court should wait for "a more typical" case.

The court is expected to say within the month whether it will grant full review to the school board's appeal in a case that became a rallying cry for Republicans in Congress who seek to dismantle many affirmative action programs.

The case drew national attention after the Bush administration supported Sharon Taxman's reverse-bias claim. After President Clinton took office, however, the Justice Department tried to switch sides and support the school board.

The 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals treated the government's switch as a request to withdraw from the case, leaving Taxman and the school board as the only combatants.

But the Supreme Court, increasingly hostile to race-based policies in recent years, asked the administration in January for its views as a "friend of the court." The court often seeks the department's views in cases involving interpretation of federal law.

Controversies over local police departments or state prisons seeking more racially diverse workforces were mentioned as better test cases.

White House spokesman Joe Lockhart said "some unique facts" in the New Jersey case "make it less desirable to put it before the Supreme Court."

He noted that both teachers were equally qualified and had the same seniority.

The government's brief also noted that the school board has abandoned the affirmative-action plan it is defending in court.

The New Jersey dispute dates back to the school board's 1989 decision to abolish one teaching position in Piscataway High School's business education department.

New Jersey law requires that tenured teachers be laid off in reverse order of seniority, but two teachers — Taxman and Debra Williams — both had started their jobs on the same day nine years earlier.

Taxman is white; Williams is black. Everyone agrees they were equally qualified.

The school board laid off Taxman because Williams was the only minority teacher in the 10-teacher department.

Soon after her layoff, Taxman filed a racial-bias complaint with the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. She said the board's action violated an anti-bias law known as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

By the time a federal judge ruled for Taxman, the school board's affirmative-action plan had been abandoned and she had been rehired. She was awarded $144,000 in back pay and damages, and the board was ordered to treat her seniority as if she had never been laid off.

The 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the judge's ruling by an 8-4 vote.

The appeals court said Title VII prohibits any race-conscious decision-making if it is not taken to remedy past discrimination. The school board had not discriminated in the past.

"By holding that Title VII prohibits all non-remedial affirmative action in employment, the court of appeals incorrectly decided an issue of broad national significance," the government's brief said Thursday.

But it said the Piscataway school board "is not well-positioned" to challenge the appeals court's ruling.

Singer Buckley's body found near Mississippi River

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The body of folk singer Jeff Buckley was found Wednesday night floating in a harbor leading to the Mississippi River, where he had gone for a swim last week.

Police told television station WMC that a passenger on the American Queen river boat spotted the body at the foot of the city's famous Beale Street.

The body had a pierced navel — like Buckley's — and was in the same clothes Buckley was described as wearing when he disappeared, police said.

The 30-year-old singer had been missing since jumping into the water at the downtown riverfront harbor on May 30.

Buckley, the son of cult songwriter and singer Tim Buckley, came to Memphis in February to record an album starting this month, said publicists at Columbia Records.

Unlike his father, Buckley's music tended more toward rock than folk. Critics compared his sweeping voice to Van Morrison and his bombastic lyrics to Led Zeppelin.

His last album, "Grace" in 1994, included the alternative hit "Last Goodbye."

Tim Buckley died of a drug overdose in 1975 at age 28.

Lawyer questions whether Shabazz confessed to fire

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — A conflict developed on Thursday between the lawyer representing 12-year-old Malcolm Shabazz and Yonkers detectives over whether the boy admitted to the police that he purposely set the fire that nearly killed his grandmother.

According to one of three detectives working the case, the child confessed to the crime, said that he intended to kill his grandmother, the widow of Malcolm X, and was motivated by a yearning to be reunited with his mother in Texas.

But Malcolm's lawyer, Percy Sutton, said that the boy had given him a different account. Asked if Malcolm had confessed, Sutton said, "Not to me." Asked if Malcolm had set out to harm his grandmother, the lawyer replied, "That is not what he told me."

Sutton said he would not describe the version of events as told to him by Malcolm until a hearing in Family Court on today in Yonkers, when the Westchester County attorney is expected to lay out the allegations in the case.

While law enforcement officials sparred, Dr. Shabazz spent another long day on the operating table at Jacobi Medical Center in the Bronx. As they had on Wednesday, doctors removed about 20 percent of her singed, dead skin and replaced it with a synthetic skin.

Dr. Shabazz also had a tracheotomy, to replace the breathing tube running through her mouth.

Auxiliary volunteers' gifts benefit us all

Memorial Hospital and Medical Center's Auxiliary volunteers recently gave the hospital a $150,000 donation that financed the purchase of a remote monitoring machine on which nurses can view vital signs of unborn fetuses and their mothers.

That machine, which will give expectant mothers and their unborn children a decided medical advantage, is a marvelous addition to Memorial Hospital's Labor and Delivery and Postpartum departments, thanks to the auxiliary's efforts under the direction of Auxiliary President Helen Harrison.

Yet the most recent example of the auxiliary's unbounded generosity is just that — only one example. The auxiliary's volunteers regularly give MHMC a gift of $100,000 or more each year. In fact, since it was founded in 1950 the auxiliary has given donations to the hospital amounting to $1, 495,375.43!

Through the years, those gifts have financed the purchase of a heart--lung machine, two ambulances, a medical library and much more. Currently, the auxiliary is working toward purchase of a breast biopsy machine that will cost $212,000 and is expected to arrive at the hospital this month or next, according to Volunteer Director Kimberly Modisett.

The auxiliary's donations to the hospital are collected through its operation of the hospital Gift Shop, popcorn sales, dues, commissions from baby photographs and private gifts.

All Midlanders and others who are treated at Memorial Hospital are the beneficiaries of the auxiliary's outstanding generosity. We salute the volunteers as well as all who support their efforts!

ANOTHER VIEW

Postponing lawsuits may benefit nation

Some critics of President Bill Clinton rejoiced Tuesday (May 27) after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled, unanimously, that Paula Jones' lawsuit would not have to wait until he vacated the Oval Office. But their glee could be short-sighted, because the same weapons used against the current president in 1997 could be unleashed on his successor.

Jones says Clinton sexually harassed her in 1991 when he was governor, and her lawyers had some good reasons for wanting the case tried in this century. Witnesses' memory could grow hazy by the time Clinton leaves office (if they're still alive), and a cornerstone of our democracy is that no person, no matter how rich or powerful, is above the law.

But the presidency is the most important job in this country, and presidents must be free to concentrate on their awesome responsibilities. Since they are already immune from virtually all lawsuits for official activity, it follows that the same exemption should be extended during their presidency for things that happened before they were elected.

Most people who could become president in the modern era have a track record in politics or business that could be used by their opponents for lawsuits. In the conflict of rights in this case, the national interests are better served if those potential lawsuits are postponed a few years.

JACK ANDERSON

Military may induct few, proud, felonious

America's military may be inducting "murderers, drug felons, crooks and thieves" into its ranks on a daily basis, according to government documents. And if that doesn't bother you, consider this: Some of those hoodlums and thugs will probably get "secret" clearance.

Anderson

The quality of the background checks required of all military recruits has badly deteriorated over the last decade. Once very effective, these background checks now often fail to root out even the most glaringly obvious problems in a potential recruit's past. These failures are a big concern to Pentagon officials, many of whom are worried about what they view as the declining morality of America's youth.

Internal documents from the Security Policy Board, an inter-agency panel formed in 1994 to review government security policies, paint a grim picture of the recruits entering military service — and the Pentagon's efforts to weed out those who are unfit for duty.

"To those of us within defense who must contend with the new order of what sociologists describe as 'youth without conscience' and 'youth without souls,'" begins one document reviewed by our associate George Clifford III, "it is a very serious matter, even when clearances are not required."

An October 1996 memo, from the security board's staff director to Joan Dempsey, a deputy assistant secretary of defense, is even more stark: "It is quite probable that we are bringing into the armed forces on a daily basis persons with serious felony arrest records," the memo begins. "It is also quite probable that some of these same individuals will end up with SECRET clearances."

Sending an unfit soldier into battle the memo's author suggests, may be just as bad as fighting a war with defective bullets.

"If senior officials within (the Defense Department) discovered that ammunition employed by our armed forces was defective, we would spend hundreds of millions of dollars in short order to remedy the situation," the memo continues. "While that scenario does not exist, we have ... discovered serious deficiencies in the tool used to ensure murderers, drug felons, crooks and thieves are not allowed into our military units where they have access to weapons, ammunition, and potentially classified information."

Things weren't always this bad.

A longstanding law forbids anyone with a felony arrest record from entering Uncle Sam's Army. To ensure that no crooks slipped into the ranks, the Pentagon adopted a system of background checks for all recruits.

The process worked well for years, largely because local and state law enforcement agencies cooperated in the program. When the Pentagon asked for background information on a soldier or a recruit, it was usually delivered. In return for their cooperation, local and state police departments were given cash compensation by the feds.

But over the last decade, the amount of federal aid given to local authorities has dwindled, according to the documents. Consequently, overburdened local cops are no longer quite as eager to retrieve records for the Pentagon.

Things have gotten so bad that almost half the states provide virtually no records at all, and many others are highly inconsistent, according to the documents, which were provided to us by the Federation of American Scientists.

The Pentagon did not respond to our request for comment. But according to documents and sources, the federal government is reworking its security procedures for all agencies. Steps are also being taken to improve the background checks run on recruits.

Although the documents we reviewed mentioned no specific cases of felons entering the armed forces, we recently reported on a similar situation that occurred at a Naval base in the Washington, D.C., suburbs.

For several years, this base employed a gun-carrying civilian security guard who had been convicted of rape in 1981. The convict then dropped out of sight without serving a single day of his sentence, and managed to get hired by the federal government. His conviction wasn't discovered until 1992, when the guard applied for a take-home gun permit.

At the very same base, another guard was given a job in spite of an outstanding bench warrant in another state for failing to appear for a drunken-driving citation. He was also being pursued by creditors for thousand of dollars in bad debt.

This time the snafu wasn't uncovered until two years after he was hired. Even then he was allowed to stay on the job.

CHARLEY REESE

Presidential behavior ain't what it used to be

The Supreme Court has ruled that Paula Jones can proceed with her sexual harassment suit against President Clinton. That's sensible. The president is, after all, only a temporary administrator.

Reese

I don't know exactly when this current trend of treating presidents as if they were emperors or kings got started, but nothing is more out of kilter with the Constitution, American history and American tradition.

In our country, sovereignty resides with the people. Public officials are just the people's employees, though you would certainly not think that when you are dealing with some of them. But, in fact, a president, senator, congressman or bureaucrat stands on exactly level ground with Joe the barber and Harry the garbage man. There is only one exalted title in this country, and that is citizen.

Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman were the last presidents to understand that they were just citizens like everybody else. Roosevelt was rich and Truman was poor, but neither man had the imperial trappings of recent presidents.

I often urge people to visit FDR's little cottage at Warm Springs, Ga. It is a very modest structure, unlike current or more recent presidential retreats. Roosevelt, who was a polio victim, took therapy at a then public facility at Warm Springs, where he splashed around in the pool with the children of plain, ordinary folks. He could have, of course, afforded to use an exclusive and private facility.

Roosevelt also liked to take a picnic lunch and a couple of friends and drive up Pine Mountain, pull off the road, spread a blanket and enjoy the scenery. There was no entourage, no gaggle of photographers — just the president and his pals doing what millions of other Americans did in those days. He also led the country during a global war with a White House staff of about 15. Today's staff is around 2,000 or more.

Truman liked to get together with a few cronies and play poker or else go down to the Navy base at Key West and go fishing. He would stay on the base. As most people know, Truman bought his own stamps to use on personal mail while he was in the White House. He didn't think taxpayers should pay the postage for his personal mail.

Clinton's staff, on the other hand, stole the towels and bathrobes off a Navy carrier. If anybody on Truman's staff had done that, he would have fired him instantly.

I think the imperial bit got started in Eisenhower's second term and really accelerated with the election of John F. Kennedy. The Washington press corps, never famous for its objectivity, went gaga over JFK and acted like a bunch of teen-age groupies chasing a rock star.

Kennedy's election is as good a marker as you need for the beginning of the decline of the United States. I think, however, he was more a sign of, rather a cause of, the decline, though he was indeed an inept president.

By the way, it's an interesting lesson in the power of propaganda and myth that JFK is now the darling of the liberal left when, in life, he was a staunch supporter and ally of Sen. Joseph McCarthy. Bobby Kennedy, another icon of the left, worked for McCarthy during his communist-hunting days. Far from wanting to end the war in Vietnam as current mythology claims, JFK blundered us into it and created a disaster by authorizing a coup against South Vietnam's longtime anti-communist leader.

But at least Kennedy had some social class. Now we have the spectacle of a president who may have to drop his drawers to disprove Paula Jones' contention that he has distinguishing marks on his private parts. She claims, you recall, that Clinton exposed himself and asked her to perform a sex act.

What a sordid, petty way to end what some folks have called the American Century.

WILLIAM MURCHISION

American churches AWOL from the culture wars

Whaddaya know? The publishers of the New International Version of the Bible canceled a revision that would have pruned offensive he-man words, replacing them with nicely neutered, spiffily spayed formulations. "People" for "mankind," and such like; "we" for "he."

Murchison

What happened? The Southern Baptists, heavy consumers of the NIV, raised a howl over the Scriptures' being tampered with. The NIV's publishers came to wish they were in some more salubrious venue — like the Congo.

What shocks is the decision to call off the enterprise entirely. This sort of thing almost never happens. Whenever the feminist lobby crooks its finger, persons of the cloth normally come arunning. Yes'm, yes'm, what can we do for you? Sure there isn't something else? This summer, the Episcopal General Convention will pass a canon relegating to the back of the church bus all priests and bishops (as well as lay leaders) with lingering doubts about the validity of ordaining women as priests. The putative victims won't go along with such silliness, but hey, when the feminists want it ... !

Time was when the churches believed their primary job was to proclaim the Gospel: "God so loved the world (to quote the NIV) that he gave his one and only Son, that whoever believes in him should not perish but have eternal life."

This was until the gentle dominies — fearful possibly that God's much-loved world was ignoring them — wrapped themselves in politics and sociology, commonly of a drab, humorless, left-wing variety.

The Big Three causes with the National Council of Churches crowd are anti-racism, feminism and gay rights. The last, though lagging behind the other two in broad approval, is coming along nicely. (Avante-garde Episcopal bishops started ordaining practicing gays a few years ago.)

Even if racism and feminism aren't especially hot issues these days, the liberal churches sweat copiously lest it be imagined they aren't on the Right (meaning Left) Side. Last year's media-concocted hoax about a white conspiracy to burn down black churches restored to the dominies their public relations leverage. Hands were wrung. Yes, it was terrible that black and white churches were being burned at about the customary rate for church arson! It would have been worse had there been an actual conspiracy. Investigation proved there hadn't been.

Nothing escapes the churches' social vigilance — except the biggest thing going on, the culture wars. The what? The culture wars: the assaults on enduring touchstones that churches used to care about, such as holy matrimony, the value of human life and conduct rooted in heavenly, not earthly, standards. In the culture wars, whose front lines they should be manning (personning?), the churches are disarmed.

The churches care about evils such as "sexist" lingo. Fie, fie, no more of this "humanity" talk, lest Karen De Crow get ticked! What many churches care less about is the junking of marriage and the burgeoning of illegitimacy; the siphoning-off of children into crime and drug abuse and barbarism; sex and carnality at the center of everything; desire as the diesel fuel of life.

What's to make us think the churches care? We don't see them mounting a counterattack, do we? Don't see them asserting Christian standards in opposition to the secular world's? Preaching chastity over incontinence? Restraint over passing pleasure? Sacrifice over gratification? Well, yes, we do see them. Here and there, now and again. "Points of light" — W.H. Auden's phrase before it was George Bush's — do pierce the cultural darkness.

Otherwise, an ungodly number of churches are AWOL in the culture wars, on whose outcome our civilization, if you still call it civilization, depends. Why no counterattack (save by t[illegible] Baptists and Catholics) against abortion and Kevorkianism? Why no crusade against sex-ed and easy divorce, pornography and rap music?

Ah, well. They nearly frightened "humanity" out of the NIV, didn't they? Wait'll next time. Just you wait.

Disaster relief bill nears veto over items unacceptable to Clinton

WASHINGTON (AP) — Courting a veto, the Republican-controlled Congress on Thursday passed an $8.6 billion bill that blends aid for disaster victims with politically charged items that are unacceptable to President Clinton.

Senate passage came on a vote of 67-31, and the House followed suit a few moments later on a 220-201 roll call.

Even before the measure cleared both houses, White House spokesman Barry Toiv said Clinton would veto it "as quickly as possible." He urged lawmakers to pass a replacement measure promptly.

"This bill is going to go down to the White House today," taunted Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota. "And my hope is that the Republicans will keep the car running" to return it immediately to the Capitol after the veto.

"Vetoing this bill is playing politics with disaster," countered Rep. John Boehner of Ohio, a member of the House Republican leadership.

While the disaster relief commands bipartisan support, Republicans attached two provisions opposed by the White House.

One would prevent a government shutdown this fall regardless of whether the White House and Congress reach agreement on regular spending bills. While the measure would continue funding at current levels for another year, Democrats said it would set levels below what is envisioned in the balanced-budget accord the White House and congressional Republicans reached last month.

The second provision would ban the Census Bureau from using sampling techniques to provide a more nearly accurate count of Americans in the 2000 census. Republicans say that approach is of questionable constitutionality, and want to provide Census officials with enough money to physically count everyone.

Beyond that, though, Republicans fear that if sampling is used, their majority in the House could be in jeopardy when legislative district lines are redrawn in several states before the 2002 elections.

The disaster portion of the measure totaled $5.6 billion for victims of disasters in 35 states, including the flood-ravaged Dakotas and Minnesota.

In addition, the bill includes $1.9 billion for the Pentagon, much of it to cover expenses incurred by peacekeeping operations in Bosnia.

With lawmakers scheduled to depart at day's end for a long weekend, Republicans declined to say what action they would take if Clinton made good his veto threat. "We have a lot of options," said Rep. Tom DeLay of Texas, House GOP whip.

Whatever the outcome, the battle provided a textbook example of how a must-pass bill becomes a pawn in the ceaseless struggle between the political parties.

When the bill became bogged down two weeks ago, Republicans refused to approve a down payment for fear of losing leverage against Clinton.

Maneuvering for advantage, the two sides disagreed on the need for some of the funds in the bill.

Republicans said disaster victims were already receiving federal aid, and virtually all the money in the measure was necessary only to refill the pipeline for the future.

Democrats, backed by the White House, said money was needed immediately for certain housing programs, and to reimburse farmers for livestock losses and in other accounts.

Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., speaking for Republicans, said the anti-shutdown provision was essential to prevent the type of hardship that resulted when parts of the government closed in 1995 and 1996.

"The shutdown of the government was a man-made disaster that afflicted millions of people," he said.

Congressman backs down on segregating basic training

WASHINGTON (AP) — Faced with opposition from fellow House members and military leaders, a Maryland congressman withdrew proposed legislation to segregate men and women in basic training.

Thursday's decision by Republican Rep. Roscoe Bartlett may be only a temporary setback, however, for an issue sure to draw further debate this year in the House and Senate.

A spate of rapes and sexual assaults by drill sergeants at Aberdeen Proving Ground in Bartlett's home state sparked disagreement in Congress over whether the Army, Air Force and Navy should continue to put men and women through basic training together. The Marines train separately.

Some lawmakers blamed the problem on unacceptable behavior by a few individuals. Bartlett and others said that throwing young men and women together in close quarters invites such abuses. Bartlett, who said his proposal had 123 co-sponsors, defined the core issue as how best to train the military.

"This is not an issue of women's rights. It is not an issue of equal opportunity," Bartlett said.

He nevertheless withdrew his proposal from consideration by the House National Security personnel subcommittee when it became clear it lacked the votes to pass.

Several lawmakers pointed out that Bartlett's bill could not have prevented the Aberdeen assaults because the Army conducts advanced training there, not basic. The bill dealt only with basic recruit training.

In the Senate, Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., promised to file legislation to suspend sex-integrated training until the question can be studied in greater depth.

"It is quite clearly the case, as Aberdeen and other scandals indicate to me, that gender-integrated training is having a very bumpy ride," Byrd said in a Senate hearing Thursday.

New footnote to assassination to be made public

WASHINGTON (AP) — The papers of Clay Shaw, a New Orleans businessman who was acquitted of conspiring to murder John F. Kennedy, are going to be made public.

The papers — seven boxes of material that had been kept by one of Shaw's friends until two weeks ago — were given to the Assassination Records Review Board, an agency created by Congress to gather all available records of the assassination of President Kennedy on Nov. 22, 1963, and open them to the public.

The board said that at the donor's request, it did not identify him. The papers, which include Shaw's diary, correspondence, business records, passports and photographs, will be opened at the National Archives within a few months, it said.

"The Shaw papers will surely add another dimension to this particular chapter of the assassination story," said chairman John R. Tunheim, a federal judge in Minnesota.

"Because we had previously acquired records from District Attorney (Jim) Garrison's office and one of Clay Shaw's defense attorneys, the addition of the Shaw personal papers means we now have an even more complete picture of events that relate to New Orleans," Tunheim said. "All of these materials will enrich the historical record of the assassination for future generations."

Garrison refused to accept the conclusion of a commission chaired by Chief Justice Earl Warren that a "perpetually discontented" Lee Harvey Oswald, acting alone, had killed Kennedy. He opened his own investigation and ordered the arrest of Shaw, director of the International Trade Mart in New Orleans.

In court two years later, Garrison charged that the murder had been planned by Shaw and others.

IRS is found to have retaliated over insult

DENVER (AP) — In hindsight, insulting the IRS agent during an audit was probably not a good idea.

But Carole Ward let fly with this gem: "Honey, from what I can see of your accounting skills, the country would be better served if you were dishing up chicken-fried steak on some interstate in West Texas, with all the clunky jewelry and big hair."

A short time later, federal agents raided Ward's business and then released confidential information about her taxes to the media in what Ward called "character assassination."

This week, a federal judge reprimanded the IRS for its actions and awarded the woman about $325,000 in damages and attorney's fees.

"By this award, this court gives notice to the IRS that reprehensible abuse of authority by one of its employees cannot and will not be tolerated," U.S. District Judge William Downes said after the non-jury trial. "Part of that responsibility requires that you accept criticism, however inaccurate and/or unjustified, in silence."

Ward, 49, said she is not proud of what she said to auditor Paula Dzierzanowski during the 1993 audit. The meeting was one of several regarding income taxes owed by the children's clothing stores owned by her son, Tristan, then 20.

Two weeks later, IRS agents seized and padlocked the stores with a so-called jeopardy assessment demanding $325,000 in back taxes from Ward.

Such an order is considered extreme and is normally used when the IRS fears it is in danger of never collecting the taxes, said Ward's attorney, William C. Waller.

Ward's family depended on the stores as their sole source of income, and the seizure put them in desperate straits. She said her family even lost their electricity because they were unable to pay bills.

By July, Ward had hired a tax attorney and the parties had agreed that the actual amount owed by Ward was about $3,500.

"It was over and done," Waller said. But then the IRS went public with information about Ward that was the crux of her lawsuit.

IRS District Director Gerald Swanson and his assistant Patricia Callahan appeared on a Colorado Springs talk show and disclosed tax return information. They also discussed the original $325,000 dispute and allegations against Ward even though the case had been settled, Waller said.

The IRS also disclosed information to TV's "Inside Edition" in the form of a fact sheet about the dispute.

The IRS agents said that since Ward had already gone public with information about the dispute, they were within their rights. However, the judge found their behavior negligent.

Another IRS agent, James Scholan, further disclosed information about the dispute in a letter published in a local newspaper. Scholan said he had obtained that information from newspaper accounts, but the judge ruled that he had obtained it as an IRS employee, committing a "blatant violation."

Ward was also upset about notices posted in the windows of her stores during the seizure that she said implied she was a drug smuggler.

The judge found that the IRS had caused mental distress, emotional damage and humiliation to Ward.

"Public servants cannot be arbitrarily selective in their treatment of citizens, dispensing equity to those who please them and withholding it from those who do not," the judge said.

The IRS had no comment on the case. Nor did the Justice Department's tax division.

Ward said she is glad to be vindicated. But her son's stores are still struggling, she said, and the fight took a huge toll on her personally.

"When you take on these people ... it would be wonderful if I felt like dancing on graves, but by the time you get the victory, it doesn't feel like a victory," Ward said.

Freeh admits FBI problems, touts triumphs

WASHINGTON (AP) — House lawmakers pelted FBI Director Louis Freeh with criticism of the bureau Thursday — one accusing a former lab official of "point-blank" lying in a murder case.

Freeh pledged to find out what had happened in that case and assured the House Judiciary Committee's crime panel, "Nobody is going to get a free ride or an easy ride at the expense of honesty."

He told the lawmakers of bureau successes, including foiling of a conspiracy to shoot down 11 U.S. airliners, the arrest of Unabomber suspect Ted Kaczynski and four accused spies and the Oklahoma City bombing investigation.

But he also acknowledged the bureau's problems and urged Congress to watch the FBI closely.

"We are potentially the most dangerous agency in the country if we are not scrutinized carefully," said the former FBI agent, federal prosecutor and federal judge.

And scrutinize they did.

Rep. Steve Chabot, R-Ohio, ticked off a list of "serious scandals that have rocked the FBI," including the raid on the Branch Davidian compound in Waco, Texas; the shootings during the Ruby Ridge, Idaho, standoff; the handling of one-time Olympic bombing suspect Richard Jewell, and FBI lab problems.

They have caused "irreparable harm to the American people's confidence in the FBI," Chabot said. "Clearly, the FBI leadership has ... done a disservice to their agents in the field and to the American people."

Freeh said one way to measure the FBI's success is by how it deals with problems.

"The Freemen standoff, which got about six hours' worth of news last year, was the successful ending of an 81-day standoff in Montana, where the FBI demonstrated that it had learned the lessons of Waco and Ruby Ridge," he said. "The only person killed in that siege was an FBI agent, who was killed in a car accident."

Rep. Robert Wexler, D-Fla., said his former "unbridled ... confidence in the FBI" started crumbling when FBI officials testified about a Justice Department report that had uncovered altered forensic reports and inaccurate and misleading testimony by FBI lab officials.

Also shaking his faith were reports on Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald, a former Green Beret convicted of killing his family in 1970 although he has always blamed drug-crazed intruders at their Fort Bragg, N.C., home. Now he is seeking a new trial, contending FBI forensic expert Michael Malone, criticized in Justice's report, gave misleading information about fiber evidence in his case.

"It appears to me that Mr. Malone lied, just pointblank lied, to a court of the United States," Wexler said.

"All of the allegations that you mentioned are the most serious ones to me," responded Freeh, who promised to track down the truth.

Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., unleashed a torrent of criticism over this week's theft of an unmarked FBI van loaded with weapons from outside a Memphis, Tenn., hotel.

"How stupid can anybody in America be to ... leave an unguarded truck with weapons that are banned from the general public?" Conyers asked. "I mean, is this comic-strip time or something? What on Earth?! And then you say, 'We're investigating it.' What do you do with guys like that immediately? You suspend them! You transfer them out! You send a message out to any other knuckleheads."

Freeh said, "If we don't have a regulation, we're going to have one very, very quickly."

International trade fair planned

Businesses from states of Durango, Coahuila to attend

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Charles Perry, chairman of the Midland-Odessa Transportation Alliance, has said the Permian Basin's future lies in international trade.

It is a belief the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce agrees with, and officials would especially like to see increased trade with Mexico.

Fernando De La Rosa, Department of International Trade specialist with the chamber, explained, "the purpose of this department is to promote international trade between Mexico and the Permian Basin, using NAFTA."

He said the North American Free Trade Agreement, which passed Congress a few years ago despite heavy opposition from labor unions and others, has reduced some trade barriers between the U.S., Mexico and Canada. He added that efforts by Perry's group to improve Permian Basin highways and develop "La Entrada al Pacifico," a trade route from the Permian Basin to the Mexican Pacific coast, also spurred the chamber's efforts.

As part of those international trade efforts, De La Rosa began the annual Cinco de Mayo soccer tournament between Texas, U.S. and Midland teams and teams from throughout Mexico. The most recent tournament, last month, brought in 1,500 players from Mexico as well as players from Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico, which translated into 450 hotel rooms being used as well as money spent at restaurants and retail shops.

In February, the chamber held a trade show involving local businesses and businesses from the Mexican state of Chihuahua. De La Rosa said the program, which included matching Permian Basin businesses interested

Restaurant experiments with incentives

By Johnnye Montgomery

BIG SPRING — You've heard the complaint. The gap between the top and bottom is getting wider. The company president makes nine gazillion dollars, while the employees make minimum wage.

Nobody cares about anybody any more.

It's not necessarily so, at least not at Al's and Son Bar-B-Q restaurant in Big Spring, where for the past five years, owners Chuck and Sue Bagwell have conducted an ongoing work relations lab that experiments with such possibilities as pay incentives for quitting smoking, regular attendance at work and punctuality, help with college tuition, and time off to study for exams, and most recently, insurance for all employees.

The Bagwells said the concept was a long time developing.

"Before we left the corporate world to come to Big Spring, we had a lot of time to think about what it would be like to have a business of our own," said Ms. Bagwell.

"We worked for 18 years at Frito-Lay in the Dallas-Fort Worth area before we bought this place from Chuck's dad, and during that time, we were treated fairly, and unfairly. We know how hard it is to make a living where you have three children and you can't buy shoes for all three of them, so you stagger the purchases, and do without.

"All the time we worked for other people, we were learning how we like to be treated."

Ms. Bagwell said when she and her husband took over the business, they didn't sweep the place clean with a new broom.

"Al's and Son has been in Big Spring for over 35 years," she said. "We knew the food was good, or the place wouldn't still be here."

The experiments start with the hiring process itself. Prospective employees first go through a lengthy telephone interview process, with the Bagwells asking

Rowlett murders still haunt town

Associated Press

ROWLETT— A picture of Devon and Damon Routier in white tuxedos is tucked into the edge of a bulletin board in Lt. Grant Jack's office — a momento the 11 year police veteran kept from the boys' funeral.

"I put it on my dresser at home, and I looked at that picture every day, and I took it down shortly after the trial ... and brought it to work," he said.

Four months have passed since the young boys' mother was sent to death row. But Darlie Routier's mug shot, along with a more glamourous photo of the 27-year-old housewife, also occupy space on Jack's bulletin board.

"This thing affected everybody. It's continuing to affect some people," said the former Marine, adding that some officers sought counseling to deal with the case.

"There are no winners here," Jack said. "There's two boys dead, now somebody else has to die because of it."

One year ago Friday, police responded to Mrs. Routier's frantic 911 call and found 5-year-old Damon and 6-year-old Devon fatally stabbed on their family-room floor.

A Kerr County jury found the mother guilty of capital murder in the younger boy's death, rejecting her claim that an intruder broke into the home, slashed her throat and killed the children.

Prosecutors said Mrs. Routier cut herself and staged a crime scene at the two-story, Georgian-style house in this quiet lakeside suburb of Dallas.

The condemned woman now spends her days making Cabbage Patch-like dolls for hospitalized children. She also sorts through thousands of letters she's received from supporters and peruses an assortment of women's magazines, books and photos her family sends her.

Her husband, Darin, is struggling to rebuild his electronics business, as he fights to free his "true soulmate," whom he maintains is innocent.

Emilio performs

Eight-time Tejano Music Awards Male Entertainer of the Year and Grammy-nominated artist Emilio performs at Twin Cities Speedway at 11:30 p.m. Saturday. Emilio will perform hits form his Tejano albums, including his latest release "Quedate." The Speedway is located south of Highway 80 between Midland and Odessa.

Odessa curfew

A new teen curfew in Ector County is making drivers of all ages a bit more wary. To enforce the curfew in and around Odessa, sheriff's deputies will begin carry ticket books for the first time since 1981. Their main purpose is to cite minors who stay out past 11 p.m., but motorists are fair game too. "The main reason is for the curfew," said Chief Deputy C.B. Choate. "That does not mean they can't issue a ticket for running a stop sign." Deputies stopped writing tickets in 1981. For grievous driving offenses, they've traditionally called on state troopers or other law enforcement personnel. County Commissioner Mike Patton said he's glad deputies once again will have ticket-writing abilities. "I feel it's the duty of law enforcement to uphold the law, and that includes traffic laws," he said.

Tornado reports

Two twisters touched down Thursday near the Galveston beach, flinging sand and shingles and causing minor damage at a grocery store and an apartment complex. No major injuries were reported. Lifeguards said few people were on the Gulf of Mexico beach when the tornadoes touched down early Thursday afternoon. "We had two small ones hit the ground," said Sgt. Chuck Walsh, assistant director of the Galveston Beach Patrol. "There may have been one or two people that may have been hit by some debris flying through the air, but nothing substantial." The only damage reports were of broken windows and downed power lines, said Nancy Williams, a team member of the Galveston Emergency Management Office. One person was injured in the grocery parking lot by flying glass but refused treatment, she said.

WORK: Business owners thought about how they liked to be treated

such questions as "Why do you want to work here?" and "How do you feel you could please your customers if you worked here?" Ms. Bagwell says the final question — perhaps the most telling of all — is, "Is there any reason you can think of that I shouldn't hire you?"

Ms. Bagwell says the answers to the final question continue to astonish her. On the basis of the telephone interview, prospects may or may not be invited to come to the restaurant to interview ... not with the Bagwells, but with the restaurant manager who has worked his way up from dishwasher. "If he likes them," said Ms. Bagwell, "they talk to us." But even after the exhaustive three-part interview, there is more before the prospect becomes an employee. Next, he/she must pass muster before one or two other employees. Ms. Bagwell says the reason for this is that teamwork is crucial to pleasing customers. Also, if there is a potential problem, someone on Al's payroll is probably going to know of it.

"This is a small town," said Ms. Bagwell, "and a lot of times, our other employees will know them."

The Bagwells say the lengthier interview process has paid off in superior employees who, after a probationary period on minimum wage, are eligible for the benefits they can achieve, based on positive behavior.

There's the no-smoking incentive.

"Chuck and I both take a strong stance against tobacco," Ms. Bagwell said. "For the past two years, we've offered a 25-cent-per-hour bonus if they stop smoking. They must come to us and make the commitment, then if after 30 days they are still not smoking, they get the bonus. If they start smoking again, the only thing that happens is that they get 25 cents less per hour."

So far, two have quit.

To reward dependable employees, Al's and Son hands out movie gift certificates every month to all employees who have come to work every day, on time. They have a quarterly drawing from all the winners of movie gift certificates with the winner receiving $100.

To encourage their employees to continue their education, they offer to help pay for attendance at Howard College.

"After an employee has worked for us for one year, we will pay for tuition and books at Howard College," says Ms. Bagwell. "If they finish with a grade of C or above, we'll reimburse them for that cost. And if they will let us know ahead of time when they're going to need to study for exams, we'll make arrangements for them to be off on that day."

Of all the incentives, the insurance provision is the one that means the most to most employees. The Bagwells can appreciate that, too.

"When we left Frito-Lay, we couldn't get insurance because our middle son has diabetes," said Ms. Bagwell. "Until the law changed two years ago, we were without insurance. That's really scary. It means a lot to us to be able to provide this for our employees."

The Bagwells readily admit their grand experiment is still very much in the experimental stage. Only two employees have taken advantage of the no-smoking bonus. Two employees have left since the restaurant began offering insurance. And there are still the occasional no-shows at work.

Yet, Ms. Bagwell says the success of Al's and Son is proof that sharing the good times works. "Our customers simply love our employees, and they love our customers."

EXPO: Trade show to provide opportunities

in joint ventures, exporting to or importing from, or investing in, businesses in Chihuahua, was successful and involved 20 companies, of which nine received matches with Mexican firms.

That trade show caught the interest of officials in the state of Durango and now De La Rosa is organizing a similar program for local businesses and businesses in Durango.

He explained that a portion of the state of Durango and a portion of the neighboring state of Coahuila form a region called La Comarca Lagunera or "La Laguna," which he compares to the Permian Basin. Industries in that region; where the main cities are Torreon in Coahuila and Gomez Palacio and Lerdo in Durango, include retail, construction and industrial manufacturing. Items include clothing, construction material such as lumber, marble, onyx and steel, and industrial items that could be used in the oil field such as valves, gears and belts.

He hopes to hold the trade fair this fall at Midland Center and invited area businesses interested in being matched with businesses in Durango to contact his office.

De La Rosa said that he hopes in the near future to expand his scope even more to include a fourth Mexican state, Sinaloa, which is on the Pacific Rim and includes the city of Mazatlan.

A TIME FOR THEIR QUESTIONS

Children are full of them. Like the young girl quoted in Parent's Magazine who was writing a prayer note to God and asked, "Instead of letting people die and having to make new ones, why don't you just keep the ones you got now?" Got a good answer for that one?!? Death is one of those profound realities which brings many inquiries from kids as well as adults. And, we find that God's Word, the Bible, gives truth and reason to life better than anything or anyone else. About death, God explained in Hebrews 9:27, "and as it is appointed for men to die once, but after this the judgment." Why? Corinthians 15:50 says, "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God..."

This week, June 9 thru 13, a devoted group of teachers will provide instruction about life and living to youngsters, Age 3 through 6th grade, at the Westside Church. There will be singing, praying, lessons from puppets, and personal Bible lessons. Maybe some of their questions will be answered, and directions provided for the decisions ahead. Another from Parent's magazine said, "Dear God, Thank you for the baby brother, but what I prayed for was a puppy!" Love, Joyce

Appeals court overturns libel judgment

Associated Press

PECOS— A federal appeals court has thrown out a $5 million libel judgment awarded last year to a New York company that spreads wastewater sludge on a ranch in far West Texas.

A three-judge panel of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed an award of $2 million in actual damages and $5 million in punitive damages from TriStar Television and Hugh B. Kaufman, an employee of the Environmental Protection Agency.

Merco Joint Venture had brought the suit, claiming it was defamed by a film, "Sludge Train," that was shown on TriStar's now-defunct "TV Nation" series on Aug. 2, 1994.

The program tracked the New York sludge from first flush to a 128,000-acre ranch owned by Merco three miles west of Sierra Blanca, where it was applied as fertilizer. Sierra Blanca is 75 miles southeast of El Paso.

Merco claimed the film was defamatory, and the jury agreed. But the appeals court, in a decision released Tuesday, found that Merco failed to prove actual malice and rendered judgment in favor of Kaufman and TriStar.

Merco claimed the show damaged its reputation and put future business deals into jeopardy.

The case was heard by a jury in U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton's court.

"I am thankful I won't have to look at that film again," Bunton is quoted as saying in Thursday editions of the Pecos Enterprise.

The sludge train segment was shown to jurors during the weeklong trial in March 1996. It depicts a reporter riding the train that carries sludge in specially designed cars from New York's municipal waste facility to the ranch headquarters near Sierra Blanca.

Sierra Blanca residents shown in the film were unanimous in their opposition to the Merco project. In the trial, Merco obtained and showed segments of film that were not broadcast in which several people praised the project because it provided jobs to Sierra Blanca residents.

Michael Moore, who produced the program, said the segment was meant to be humorous.

Review finds racism at Kelly AFB

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A black aircraft mechanic is entitled to monetary damages and an apology for being forced to work in a racially hostile environment at Kelly Air Force Base, a military report says.

The Air Force Civilian Appellate Review Office found that Kelly management took inappropriate and ineffective action to investigate the complaints of civilian mechanic Phil Head.

It was common for inappropriate jokes to be directed at Hispanics and blacks at Kelly, according to the 27-page report issued this week in Washington.

"These circumstances suggest that in the general working atmosphere hostility is prevalent toward employees of (Head's) race, national origin or color, as well as toward Hispanic employees."

FAMILY MATTERS

Breaking up is sometimes very hard to do

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: I am very worried about my best friend. Her boyfriend broke up with her over a year ago, and she won't stop chasing him. He broke up with her because he said that she was too possessive and jealous. She said that if he would marry her that she would feel secure and then everything would be all right. I had thought that she was right on this, but now I'm beginning to have my doubts.

May

In the last year she has told me that she has followed him when he's gone out on dates, called and hung up on him at all hours, and gone to his house several times to beg him to take her back. When I talk to her she agrees that she doesn't want to do any of this, but she just can't stop thinking about him. She says that no matter what she does, she gets these "movies" in her head of him with another woman and has to do something. She "knows" that it's wrong for her to do what she'd doing, but she says it's like she's possessed!

I have known her since we were children together, and she has always been a worrier and afraid to try new things, but I have never seen her like this. Even in college she would be overly worried about her grades or a certain class, but I thought she just wanted to make good grades. She never dated much when we were in college and she badly wanted a boyfriend. So I was very happy for her when she did finally start dating someone.

I am really worried about her. I don't think that this is a normal way for a 27-year-old adult to act, do you? She is an attractive, very smart lady with a great job, but it's like she has no self-esteem at all to keep throwing herself at this guy.

I'm writing you because she says that she wants to stop doing this, but just can't stop thinking about him and then doing something she doesn't want to do . Can you or someone help her? WORRIED FRIEND

DEAR WORRIED: Your friend does need help, and she is very fortunate to have a friend like you to support her.

She may be suffering from an obsessive-compulsive disorder (OCD). The obsessive component of the disorder often leaves the person "in constant psychic pain, tormented by recurrent, intrusive thoughts." The intrusive thought — about the boyfriend — is a source for anxiety, and then the compulsion — contacting the boyfriend — takes over.

With the disorder, the person knows that "both their apprehensions and ritualistic responses are without basis but they have little control over either." It is usually not a matter of low self-esteem.

Her actions may be due to some combination of environment and brain chemistry. In some cases people suffering from this disorder have had a difficult childhood, possibly with traumatic event (s). Other evidence suggests that an abnormality in the brain neurotransmitter, serotonin, is a big factor.

Also, other research findings suggest a relationship in women between OCD and fluctuations in hormones.

The short answer is yes, your friend can be helped. Research indicates that between 40 percent and 60 percent of those who undergo a combination of psychotherapy and drug treatment report significant improvement.

I encourage her to consult with a psychiatrist and a counselor to begin the healing process. She may also like to read Dr. Judith Rapoport's book, "The Boy Who Couldn't Stop Washing," to find out more about the disorder.

Several medications have been approved for the treatment of OCD — for example, Prozac and Luvox — that have been developed since Dr. Rapoport wrote her book.

Your friend can also write The OCD Foundation, P.O. Box 70, Milford, Conn. 06460, for additional information.

THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES OFFER THE FOLLOWING SUGGESTIONS FOR SKILLS/ACTIVITIES THAT PARENTS CAN USE TO SET AND ENFORCE LIMITS IN THE HOME:

- Planning: Control the home environment; develop alternative activities; plan for advance preparation of activities; and respond with empathy.
- Communication: Listen and send "I" messages.
- Action: Establish family rules; set clear consequences; have family meetings; and encourage.

DEAR ABBY

Woman's fear of kissing upsetting to her fiance

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: We are 83 and 86, and engaged to be married. This is my problem: I haven't had a "real" kiss for some time.

My fiancee, Emma, had a sore throat several months ago, so she stopped kissing me on the lips. Recently she told me she had seen on television that there was an outbreak of the "kissing disease." Now she has become completely paranoid about it.

Van Buren

Emma says she loves me and is always very attentive when we're together. However, when I try to kiss her, I have to settle for a kiss on the cheek.

Am I being unreasonable to want a kiss on the lips? —TIRED OF TURNING THE OTHER CHEEK

DEAR TIRED: In view of the fact that you and Emma are engaged to be married, you are not being unreasonable in wanting to be kissed in a romantic fashion.

Ask Emma to be frank with you. She may be reluctant to tell you that you have a halitosis problem. If that's not it, schedule a visit with a physician who can explain to Emma how the "kissing disease" (infectious mononucleosis) is transmitted, and screen you for it. If neither of you has it, you won't get it from each other — and she can kiss you till the cows come home with perfect peace of mind.

DEAR ABBY: You published a poem years ago that I clipped and enjoyed very much. It was a poem that compared the behavior of man and the apes, and was quite humorous. I think the title was "The Monkey's Disgrace." Would you put it in your column again, please? — CHESAPEAKE, VA.

DEAR CHESAPEAKE: With pleasure. That poem last appeared in my column in 1987. It's one of my favorites.

THE MONKEY'S DISGRACE

Three monkeys sat in a coconut tree
Discussing things as they are said to be Said one to the others, "Now listen, you two,
"There's a rumor around that can't be true
"That man descended from our noble race
"The very idea is a great disgrace.
"No monkey has ever deserted his wife
"Starved her babies and ruined her life
"And you've never known a mother monk
"To leave her babies with others to bunk
"Or pass from one on to another
"Till they scarcely knew who is their mother.
"Here's another thing a monkey won't do
"Go out at night and get on a stew
"Or use a gun or club or knife
"To take some other monkey's life
"Yes, man descended, the ornery cuss
"But, brother, he didn't descend from us."

DEAR ABBY: I have noted several "random acts of kindness" mentioned in your column lately, and thought you might appreciate what we, as employee/owners of Phelps County Bank, are doing.

We are divided into 12 groups, and each group has been assigned a month with one day designated "Random Acts of Kindness Day." In January, the group went out to highway construction sites and served hot chocolate to the snow removal crews. The February group arrived early in the morning at the Veterans Hospital in St. James, Mo., and baked chocolate chip cookies and visited with the residents. Our March employee/owners went to the local fire stations and brought them goodies.

Every time a group goes out, the rest of us wear our "Random Acts of Kindness" shirts. It tells the citizens of Rolla that Phelps County Bank, their employee-owned community bank, is again thanking them for their support. It's a great way to help the community while contributing to it through public service. — KAREN DOPHER, ROLLA, MO.

DEAR KAREN: Hats off to the employee/owners of Phelps County Bank! If I lived in Rolla, I'd put my money in your bank.

DEAR ABBY: I wonder if it would be too much to ask to have salespeople and other businesspeople speak a little more slowly and clearly? I wish there were something I could wear, like a pink button or something, to show that I can hear, but not very well. People who can't see have the white-tipped canes, so why not something for those of us who have difficulty hearing? I have gone the route of hearing aids, but all they do is amplify the sound. They do nothing to clarify it.

Many large businesses like Sears, J.C. Penney, etc. employ young girls with accents who speak in very high-pitched tones that are impossible to hear, and they usually get angry if you ask them to repeat themselves.

It's just a thought, but if someone could think of a universal signal to let people know they have trouble hearing, a great number of people would thank you. — BETTYE MEEKER, MCKENZIE BRIDGE, ORE.

DEAR BETTYE: Many people have some degree of hearing loss, which is nothing to be ashamed of. The solution to your problem would be to simply tell the salespeople (or strangers) that you have a slight hearing loss and would appreciate it if they would speak a little slower and more distinctly.

To receive a collection of Abby's most memorable — and most frequently requested — poems and essays, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 to: Dear Abby's "Keepers," P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447.

DASH diet helps address modern health concerns

By Jane E. Brody
N.Y. Times News Service

Can one diet help prevent heart disease, cancer, high blood pressure, obesity and diabetes? And will people eat it and enjoy it and leave the table satisfied? The answer to these questions increasingly appears to be yes.

This "miracle" diet is available now in the grocery store. It is relatively low in fat, deriving less than 30 percent of daily calories from fat, but loaded with fruits and vegetables (eight to 10 servings a day) and grains (seven to eight servings). It also contains two to three daily servings of low-fat or nonfat dairy products but only modest amounts of lean meat, poultry and fish (two or fewer three-ounce cooked servings a day) and dried beans, nuts and seeds (four to five servings a week). No exotic foods, no supplements, no herbal concoctions.

And, unless most of your meals are from coffee shops and fast-food restaurants, it is not as challenging to live on the diet as many people think.

IN THE MOST recent demonstration of its benefits, a study financed mainly by the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, 459 men and women with mild hypertension or borderline high-normal blood pressure lived on just such a diet for eight weeks.

The main complaint the researchers received about such a meal was that it was too much food. The participants were not used to eating as much bulk as the diet provided and the meals often filled them up before they finished. This means that under ordinary circumstances, people might be inclined to eat less and, free from the strictures of a study that insisted on keeping weight steady, they would probably lose some weight.

No changes were made in how much salt they consumed (three grams of sodium a day, which is about the national average) or alcohol they drank or physical activity they undertook. In addition, their caloric intake was adjusted to keep their weight stable, even if they were overweight. They took no pressure-lowering drugs or vitamin-mineral supplements.

Remarkably, even though participants did not lose weight, reduce salt and alcohol intake or exercise more — the usual prescription for controlling mild hypertension — their blood pressures dropped significantly, as much as might be expected if they had taken medication to lower blood pressure. And the drop occurred within two weeks of starting the diet and persisted throughout the study.

As Dr. William M. Vollmer, a coordinator of the study, put it, "This means that people with mild hypertension can lower their blood pressure with more natural means and get off drugs or reduce the amount of medication they have to take."

Vollmer, of the Kaiser Permanente Center for Health Research in Portland, Ore., also noted that "this diet is consistent with the disease-preventing diets that have been proposed by other groups," including the American Heart Association, the American Cancer Society, the American Health Foundation and the National Cancer Institute.

The new findings also suggest that "foods, not supplements, are the way to go," Vollmer said in an interview. "We can't tell whether the good results were due to calcium, low fat or less protein combined with lots of fruits and vegetables," he said.

But the researchers did show that a low-fat diet that included dairy products and lots of fruits and vegetables was more effective in lowering blood pressure than a diet rich in fruits and vegetables that was not low in fat and contained few dairy products.

Previous studies that tested the ability of single nutrients to reduce high blood pressure have yielded contradictory results. Once again, it seems that a combination of nutrients and other beneficial substances found naturally in foods, rather than isolated vitamins or minerals, provides the optimal health benefit.

Many Americans are intimidated by the current recommendation to eat even five servings a day of fruits and vegetables, so it is reasonable to assume that increasing to eight to 10 servings will seem formidable to most.

BUT BEFORE you say "forget about it," look at how little food a single serving really is. It is half a cup of cooked fruit or vegetables, half a grapefruit, a medium apple or orange, a small banana, 6 ounces of fruit or vegetable juice, a quarter cup of dried fruit or 1 cup of raw leafy greens. Keep in mind that for most adult Americans, portion sizes are usually twice as big as what the government considers a serving.

Have fruit juice and perhaps a banana, berries or a wedge of melon with breakfast and you're off to a good start with two servings. Lettuce and tomato on your lunch sandwich, a side order of slaw and an apple or grapes for dessert or a snack add three more servings. A salad with dinner and one or two cooked vegetables would add four or more servings, and you have met the goal.

As for the grains, one slice of bread, half a cup of rice, pasta or dry or cooked cereal each equal a serving. Now, who eats just half a cup of pasta or cereal or even one slice of bread? You are more likely to have a cup of cereal (two servings), two cups of pasta (four servings), two slices of bread (two more servings) and a New York-size bagel (two to three servings), and you have met that goal, too.

The dairy products are easy: one glass of milk in cereal, a container of yogurt in the afternoon, and an ounce and a half of low-fat or nonfat cheese on a sandwich or as part of dinner will give you three servings and enough calcium to meet the daily recommended intake for adults.

Here is a sample dinner menu from the national study, known as DASH, for Dietary Approaches to Stop Hypertension: three ounces of baked cod, one cup of rice, one-half cup broccoli, one-half cup of stewed tomatoes, a very small spinach salad, one small whole wheat dinner roll, a teaspoon of margarine and half a cup of melon balls. This adds up to these servings: one fish, three grains, four vegetables and fruits and one and one-half fat.

The main complaint the researchers received about such a meal was that it was too much food. The participants were not used to eating as much bulk as the diet provided and the meals often filled them up before they finished. This means that under ordinary circumstances, people might be inclined to eat less and, free from the strictures of a study that insisted on keeping weight steady, they would probably lose some weight.

AS FOR HOW to go about learning to eat the DASH way, start slowly, making evolutionary, not revolutionary, changes in your usual diet. Begin to plan meals around the carbohydrates and vegetables instead of the protein-rich food.

For desserts and snacks, think low-fat and low-calorie: fruit, pretzels, nuts, diet drinks, nonfat yogurt, perhaps a little low-fat cheese and whole-grain crackers. And be moderate about alcohol: one drink a day for women, two at most for men.

Barbie's family tree can be confusing

By Shirley Jinkins
N.Y. Ti News Service

Barbie's family tree is changing a few leaves — again. Skipper, the perennial adolescent, is growing into a teen-ager. Barbie has a new friend, Becky, and Ken has a little brother, Tommy.

Barbie's immediate family also includes Stacie, who's about 8, and Kelly, the baby sister. This isn't counting twins Todd and Tutti from the '60s, who somehow disappeared from the clan.

Barbie's official family tree also includes friends. She's had 28, counting boyfriend Ken (since 1961) and best friend Midge. Barbie has also had 25 pets. Ken's friends number six, including Allan, who married Midge.

But what about Barbie's parents? "I don't think there is a concept of the parents," a Mattel spokeswoman says. "Just what's in children's imaginations."

Well, we have a concept of Barbie's prolific parents:

Dad, otherwise known as Todd, resembles Mel Gibson. He retired from neurosurgery when his invention of a unique, quad-hull surfboard was bought by Sea-Doo. His hobbies, besides surfing, include (low-fat) gourmet cooking and batik fabric design.

Barbie's mom, Stacie, is a Suzanne Somers look-alike, works out at the gym four days a week, and is a corporate executive by day and a research scientist by night (for Revlon, natch). She is a champion of environmental causes and enjoys origami.

Plutonium pioneer still in his element

By Michelle Locke

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — The erudite body of scientists had a problem with naming element 106 after co-discoverer Glenn Seaborg.

The trouble, they said, was that Seaborg, the Nobel Prize-winning physicist best known for identifying plutonium, was still alive.

"They claimed they could prove that, too," jokes Seaborg, who celebrated his 85th birthday April 19, still keeps regular office hours and plans to "keep working until I get old."

After scientists worldwide rallied in favor of seaborgium, the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry dropped their insistence that element-naming be a posthumous honor. Element 106 is expected to be officially christened seaborgium at the group's August meeting.

FOR SEABORG, the elemental namesake is the latest — and in some ways the greatest — triumph in a lifetime of unlocking the secrets of science.

"That's a great honor because that lasts forever," he said. "One hundred years from now, or a thousand years from now, it'll still be seaborgium when you'd probably have to look in obscure books to find any references to what I had done."

No need to worry about obscurity just yet — Seaborg's fingerprints are all over this century's history.

In addition to element 106, he co-discovered elements 94-102 as well as a number of radioactive isotopes, including one that was used to treat his mother for cancer.

In 1951, he shared the Nobel Prize in chemistry with Edwin McMillan for discoveries in the chemistry of transuranium elements.

During World War II, Seaborg worked on the Manhattan Project that unleashed the atomic bomb. He would go on to campaign for the peaceful use of atomic energy and against the testing of nuclear weapons.

Outside the laboratory, Seaborg served as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, forerunner to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, from 1961-1971.

Before that, he was chancellor of the University of California-Berkeley, from 1958-61, an era when Cal went to the Rose Bowl and won the NCAA basketball championship. UC Berkeley now has an award named after Seaborg for football players who go on to distinguish themselves in subsequent careers.

A keen sports fan, Seaborg points out with a twinkle in his eye that the level of athletic success Cal achieved under his chancellorship, "never happened before I was chancellor. It has never happened since I was chancellor. I rest my case."

Dashes of such sly humor permeate Seaborg's reminiscences.

In his book "National Service with Ten Presidents of the United States," he describes how in 1965, he and then-congressman Gerald Ford sneaked out of the annual Gridiron Club dinner in Washington to watch the NCAA basketball final between UCLA and Michigan. Ford went to Michigan, Seaborg to UCLA. The Bruins prevailed, he notes with quiet pride, 91-80. The truants then returned to the head table where "no one showed any sign of having missed us during our absence."

Dr. Glenn Seaborg, the Nobel Prize-winning physicist who discovered plutonium and who has the Sg element on the elements table, seaborgium, named after him, shows an elements display sculpted by a fan on April 17 at the University of California at Berkeley. The Sg element is in the lower right corner of the scupiture. Seaborg, who celebrated his 85th birthday on April 19, still keeps regular office hours and says he plans to "keep working until I get old."

Seaborg's ready way with words, scientific brilliance and administrative aplomb have made him a good ambassador for his field, says colleague Albert Ghiorso, who with Kenneth Hulet, Seaborg and others co-discovered element 106.

"He was the one who really first popularized nuclear chemistry. It was started by other people; he was the one who really pushed it to the fore and he deserves a lot of credit," said Ghiorso, who proposed the name seaborgium for element 106.

Seaborg's career in science began his junior year at a Los Angeles-area high school under the impetus of a teacher who "not only taught chemistry, he preached it."

AFTER GRADUATION, he worked the graveyard shift for 40 cents an hour as the sole control chemist at the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co.

A chemistry degree from UCLA followed and then it was on to the brave new world of graduate work at Berkeley, a mecca for the burgeoning world of nuclear science.

"The whole atmosphere at Berkeley was just like magic to me," Seaborg said in a recent interview in his office at the Ernest Orlando Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory. "I just felt like I was in a new world, transported to a kind of Valhalla."

There he studied under the same professors who had written the textbooks used at UCLA, and it was there he attended Monday night meetings of the Physics Journal Club, whose members read like a Who's Who of nuclear science pathfinders. "Ernest Lawrence, Robert Oppenheimer were holding forth. I just thought I was on top of the world."

His work as a radioisotope hunter began almost by accident in 1936 when he was handed a "hot" target by physicist Jack Livingood and asked to process it and identify the radioisotopes (isotopes are forms of an element that have the same chemical properties but different atomic weights).

Seaborg went to work, using the rudimental tools of sink, tap water, fume hood and a small workbench. The isotopes he would eventually help discover became workhorses of radiation medicine, including technetium-99m and the iodine-131 that was used to prolong his own mother's life in the 1950s.

Seaborg's experiences with radioisotopes led him to the field of transuranium elements, substances heavier than uranium, the heaviest natural element.

Then, at a club meeting in January 1939, came revolutionary news. German scientists had split the atom and discovered that what nuclear scientists had been studying up to then were fission products, not new elements.

Chagrined, Seaborg walked the streets of Berkeley for hours, torn between embarrassment and excitement at the new discovery.

The following year, the first real transuranium element was identified by McMillan and Philip Abelson — No. 93, neptunium.

Then, on a stormy night in February 1941, it happened. Working with Arthur Wahl and Joseph Kennedy, Seaborg fed uranium into an atom-smasher, bombarded it with deuterons and identified the new element — plutonium. A month later, joined by Emilio Segre, the team identified the isotope plutonium-239 and showed that it was fissionable. That made it the candidate to be the explosive ingredient in a bomb as well as the fuel for nuclear power plants. Forty percent of the energy produced in nuclear power plants comes from plutonium-239, Seaborg notes.

DID HE KNOW what he had back in February 1941?

"I'm always asked that question," said Seaborg. "I was a 28-year-old kid and I didn't stop to ruminate about it. I didn't think, 'My God, we've changed the history of the world.' "

He did, however, keep Washington apprised of his discoveries, sending them reports that were typed up by Ernest Lawrence's secretary, one Helen Griggs, later Helen Seaborg.

The two married June 6, 1942, and have six children.

"'When I'm asked ... what my biggest discovery is, I say, 'My wife, Helen,' " he said.

The newlyweds started married life in Chicago, where Seaborg was part of the intense race to beat the Germans to atomic weaponry. Once that was achieved, Seaborg was among those who recommended demonstrating the bomb's power by dropping it on an uninhabited island the Japanese could observe. But he doesn't criticize President Harry Truman's decision to bomb the cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

"Using the bomb that way did end the war and we didn't have an extra bomb in case it (the demonstration plan) hadn't worked and it saved hundreds of thousands of lives on both sides," he says.

As chairman of the AEC, Seaborg strongly supported the Limited Nuclear Test Ban Treaty. He served through the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, but left three years into the Nixon administration.

"They were a tough crowd," recalls Seaborg, who first met Nixon when both made the list of "Ten Outstanding Young Men of America," of 1947.

Although he opposes nuclear weapons testing, Seaborg remains a staunch supporter of nuclear energy, "the most environmentally sound and benign way of producing electricity."

Others, of course, don't agree, particularly in Berkeley, hotbed of hot-button issue protests. The Berkeley city council has voted for an international ban on plutonium production, a prohibition fueled by worries over the legacy of radioactive waste.

He views radioactive waste storage as largely a political problem and, like other advocates of nuclear energy, points out that it comes without the fossil fuel evils of acid rain, air pollution and ozone-layer damage.

Meanwhile, Seaborg works on. After he recovered from a heart bypass operation 10 years ago, he resumed his busy agenda.

His schedule is "just packed" with meetings, lectures and writing, among other things. He likes it that way.

"I just have to put in full days," he said.

Older persons may need assistance later in life

By Henry F. Page, M.D.

The oncoming millennium brings with it a unique problem never before witnessed in world history — namely, people no longer die at 65 but hang on, for better or worse, 25 additional years. Although still breathing, a goodly number of these older individuals need a little or a lot of assistance.

Page

No longer can we as a society manage the problem as of yore, when one simply shoved ancient Eskimos into the great North Sea or deposited the old Indian chief on the other side of the mountain. Our Judeo-Christian inheritance demands loving care for even the most decrepit of these individuals.

The newest answer to this problem consists of pure residential communities, assisted living quarters, personal care facilities and nursing emporiums, all theoretically committed to helping the individual maintain an active lifestyle rather than decompose like an isolated pruned and watered plant, a described by The Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court: "Me thinks thou art filled with the juice of the prune."

Assisted living complexes now sprout up like mushrooms after a rain shower, and to the unwary may possess a similar lack of substance. Please remember that they are all there to make a profit, and use slick, chrome-plated, motel-like structures as a lure. Before entering, be sure that the infrastructure is sound, including experienced administration; geriatric-minded registered nurses, licensed vocational nurses and certified aides; stable chefs and help that can speak English; and on-going recognition of each resident's physical and mental status with a willingness to take appropriate action. Wheelchairs exhibit a propensity to overwhelm dining rooms, etc., and the users must be capable of maneuvering unaided and not be in a position to clutter fire exits.

In my personal opinion, the answer to these problems lies in continuous care retirement communities (CCRC), where one leads a full, normal life but when the need arises can be transferred to supportive living tailored to the individual's needs, shifting levels as required. All this is done under one umbrella of care by persons familiar with the residents' health and social problems. The attendants comprise persons skilled in their respective areas of care and who are available and present 24 hours of the day.

CCRCs are mostly non-profit, motivated by humanitarian ideal and less liable to skimp on overhead; and therefore constitute the best port in aging's tumultuous seas.

Caveat: "All that glitters is not gold!"

Experts estimate millions of elderly abused every year

By Dr. Hap LeCrone
N.Y. Times News Service

It has been estimated by mental health professionals that at least 2 million older Americans are abused and neglected each year.

This abuse shows no preference for gender, ethnicity, economic well-being or health status. The abuse can occur at the hands of paid caregivers or family members. It can occur at home or in institutional settings.

The three largest categories of abuse/neglect include:

■ Physical or psychological neglect, which may be obvious or subtle, overt or covert, intentional or unintended. As in all types of elder abuse, it is important to recognize that the abuse may be real or simply threatened.

■ Physical or psychological abuse, including obvious acts of violence, sexual misconduct, misuse of external devices designed to help the patient such as restraint or medication, withholding of goods or services designed to assist the elderly such as hearing or visual aids.

■ Exploitation of the elderly, financial abuse or violation of the elder individual's rights. This includes scams designed to cheat or fraudulently take advantage of elderly, blatant stealing of money, possessions, etc., or mismanaging the elder person's estate and assets.

Manifestations of elder abuse can include poor hygiene, inappropriate clothing, depression, untreated medical problems, dehydration, malnutrition, etc.

It is important to understand that many of these difficulties may be due to illness or deprivation due to factors other than abuse.

Detection of abuse often comes during medical examinations, or quite often from third-party observers. Older people often don't report abuse for a variety of reasons, including fear of retaliation, fear of not being believed or a desire to protect the abuser.

Reporting abuse/neglect is imperative. You can report suspected abuse to the National Elder Care Locator Hotline at (800) 677-1116.

THE PROBLEM

Steve and Lisa had been married for several years. Lisa had always fancied herself as an amateur detective and was constantly second guessing local police when it came to unsolved mysteries. Steve, while amused by this characteristic his wife possessed, was also frustrated that he had never been able to truly surprise her. He was determined that their anniversary this year would be different.

Lisa was awakened on the morning of her anniversary by the sound of birds singing in their backyard garden. It was how they usually arose, and Lisa took extra measures to ensure the birds would always serve as their "natural" alarm clock. This morning, she noticed Steve was already up when she got out of bed. When she called out to him, he told her to stay in bed because he had something special for her.

A few minutes later, Steve came into the bedroom carrying a tray containing a beautifully prepared breakfast, including a fish-shaped pate mold, topped with a wild bluebonnet. "You know I hate pate" she told him. "Oh, I know, that's for me" said Steve.

"Happy anniversary, darling" he said, and placed the tray on her lap. As she was eating, he told her today was a special day for them, because he had an unusual present for her. He explained that he had spent the previous afternoon shopping at Oak Ridge. "Well, where is the gift?" she exclaimed. "It's a mystery!" he told her, then further explained that he had left clues as to what her present was with several of the shops at Oak Ridge Square. She was to go to these shops, gather the clues, and solve the mystery.

Lisa was ecstatic. She quickly got dressed, then headed to Oak Ridge Square, located at the northeast corner of Wadley & Garfield. She returned home later, and called Steve's name when she burst through the door. He was still in their bedroom reading the paper. "Hey, honey, you look terrific! Well?" He asked, and noticing she was carrying several shopping bags, queried "Did you find it?"

"Not yet; these are just some of the things I couldn't resist when I was there." She then walked over to the bed where the breakfast tray was still sitting, picked up the untouched pate Steve had brought with her breakfast, and starting digging in it with her fingers. Inside, she found a small key, exactly like those used in airport and bus station lockers. She picked up the key, grinned at Steve and said "When do we leave?"

Now it's your turn to be a Super Sleuth. Each of the shops whose ad appears on this page have one of the clues to the mystery. You must visit each shop, gather the clues, and find out the following:

1) What did Steve get Lisa for their Anniversary?"
2) How did Lisa know where the key was?

Government defers to Native American tribes under Endangered Species Act

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal agencies enforcing the Endangered Species Act will defer to tribal plans on Indian lands under an agreement signed Thursday.

Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt and Commerce Secretary Bill Daley said the special order is intended to clarify the act's application to 95 million acres of tribal lands held in federal trust.

It establishes procedures to provide tribes with technical and scientific support to develop habitat-protection plans and acknowledges Indian lands "are not federal public lands ... and are not subject to federal public land laws."

"For too long we have failed to recognize the needs of Indian tribes to be consulted and part of the process from the beginning, and the traditional knowledge they can share about species, habitat and conservation," Babbitt said Thursday.

Babbitt oversees the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Bureau of Indian Affairs and Daley the National Marine Fisheries Service. They signed the agreement with tribal leaders in the Indian Treaty Room at the Old Executive Office Building, next door to the White House.

"Tears, anguish, setbacks, broken treaties must have happened in here. We are saying we want to amend that," said Ronnie Lupe, chairman of the White Mountain Apache Tribe of Whiteriver, Ariz.

Actually, Babbitt said, research by his staff showed the ornate two-story Indian Treaty Room, completed in 1880, was misnamed. A peace treaty with the Balkan states was signed there in 1947, but no treaty with Indians ever was, he said.

"By signing the equivalent of a treaty here today gives new meaning to the name," Babbitt said. "It is my hope from this day on that we will banish forever the traditional treaty process that has been one-sided, overbearing and not infrequently unfair."

Nelson Wallulatum, chief of the Wasco tribe of the Confederated Tribes of the Warm Springs Reservation in central Oregon, opened the ceremony with a tribal song he said "signifies a victory."

Other signers for the Indians were Billy Frank Jr., chairman of the 19-tribe Northwest Indian Fisheries Commission in Olympia, Wash.; Jaime Pinkham, treasurer of the Nez Perce tribe; and John Ecohawk, director of the Native American Rights Fund, Boulder, Colo.

Fireworks explosion kills four

LaFOLLETTE, Tenn. (AP) — A warehouse full of Fourth of July fireworks exploded Thursday in a thunderous blast felt miles away, killing at least four workers, setting buildings on fire and raining pyrotechnic shells on front yards.

Several residents dove to the ground after the blast at the warehouse operated by Pyro Shows Inc., a major supplier for Independence Day festivals around the country, including the display on the Mall in Washington.

"At first, I thought it was an airplane crash," Sheriff Ron McClellan. "It rumbled five or 10 seconds, and then there was a massive explosion followed by numerous smaller explosions."

He added: "At point zero, there's just nothing there."

Four plant workers getting ready for a show this weekend at Norfolk, Va., were killed, said Diane Watson, spokeswoman for the state Department of Commerce and Insurance, which regulates fireworks.

The cause was not immediately known. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and state fire officials were investigating.

Emergency crews rushed to the site at the edge of this coal mining town 30 miles north of Knoxville in eastern Tennessee, battling to keep the fire from spreading to other trailers full of fireworks. Heavy rain extinguished the flames about an hour after the explosion, which happened around noon.

By late afternoon, authorities were still trying to see whether anyone was unaccounted for.

State Rep. Mark Goins, whose mother works at the warehouse but was not there on Thursday, said five to 13 people worked there.

"I live 13 miles away and it sounded like thunder," Goins said.

"Our building shook and we thought it was an earthquake," said Betty Siler, whose Campbell County Chamber of Commerce office is three miles away.

A Baptist church and two of every five homes near the plant were damaged by fire and falling fireworks shells, metal siding and other debris. The explosion shattered plate-glass windows at a car dealership nearby.

Pyro Shows is known for intricate programs that combine traditional fireworks with lights, music and lasers. In 1993, Pyro Shows was crowned grand champion of the first North American Fireworks Competition, beating four other leading U.S. competitors.

FOGERTY: Situation involving singer, CCR remains troubled

many of Creedence's long string of hits — "Proud Mary," "Green River," "Bad Moon Rising," "Who'll Stop the Rain," "Fortunate Son."

In the mid-1980s, when he had emerged from another decade-long silence, Fogerty avoided Creedence songs because of business feuds with Saul Zaentz, his former record company president, and other members of the band.

"Going to Mississippi and seeing how a whole life ties together instead of the 10 minutes you're thinking about right now, I began to sense that I could feel and appreciate the songs that I had written in past times," he said.

"Before, I was so bitter that I was afraid that if I got up and did 'Proud Mary,' I would see this leering, Jabba the Hutt figure in front of me saying, 'Ha ha, I got your songs, I got your songs,'" he said.

He realized the songs held other memories for his fans, and it was wrong to hold back.

Fogerty now dismisses one of the two albums he made during the 1980s, "Eye of the Zombie," as a failure since it was infected by his anger.

After beating Zaentz in a well-publicized court battle — Zaentz had claimed Fogerty had plagiarized himself for the hit, "The Old Man Down the Road" — Fogerty said he tried to make peace.

"I put a lot of personal energy into it," he said. "It seemed like a worthy goal, but I'm sorry to say it entirely failed."

Fogerty said similar efforts to heal old wounds related to the breakup of Creedence, a band that included his late older brother, Tom, ended the same way.

Asked to reflect on it, he flashed some of the same bravado that must have angered his mates.

"It's just a ... shame, to have started out on such a right track and be sidetracked by so much stuff — in a word, I'd say, by so many selfish people that didn't understand what a gift they were close to.

"I don't mean that to sound highfalutin about myself," he said. "The fact that it had started and was going so well, that's a very happy, lucky gift in life for anyone that's involved. In my opinion, they really screwed it up. Creedence is no more and those times are no more because of it."

If Fogerty made any serious peace overtures, it's news to former Creedence bassist Stu Cook. He said Fogerty snubbed them at Creedence's Rock and Roll Hall of Fame induction and went to court to prevent him and drummer Doug Clifford from performing under the name "Creedence Clearwater Revisited."

Fogerty wrote some great songs, but still has trouble accepting there was more to the band than him, Cook said.

"The idea that we should be happy to have been close to something so great is bewildering," he said. "We were part of that, we weren't just close to it."

Completing his busy period, Fogerty also remarried and became a father. His wife is the subject of "Joy of My Life," the first love song Fogerty said he's ever written.

Still, it was 11 years between albums for Fogerty — the second decade-long silence in his career. It was finally broken with the release of "Blue Moon Swamp" a few weeks ago.

Fogerty said he was ready to record most of the songs for the new album in 1992.

He was dissatisfied with the group of session musicians he first gathered together. He even burned through two-dozen drummers before settling on one he liked. Kenny Aronoff, who spent many years with another demanding bandleader, John Mellencamp, was the first one to satisfy him.

Even his wife, sick of hearing Fogerty's endless tinkering, wondered when he'd consider the songs good enough.

"I'd tell her, you know, honey, it doesn't sound right," he said. "It sounds like junk. I want joy and I don't want junk."

The results will be instantly familiar to anyone who knows his music.

Fogerty gets upset when jazz musicians or others put down rock 'n' roll as a simplistic music form. Doing rock well is the hardest thing in music, he said.

"It's still the coolest stuff," he said. "As a unit, as an ensemble, a rock 'n' roll band is a force of nature not to be standing in the way if everything is going great — like the Stones at their peak or the Beatles, even somebody like Tom Petty now or Pearl Jam."

SWAMP: First four tracks best on album

for Fogerty, as evidenced by his new Blue Moon Swamp. Unlike fellow '60s warrior Neil Young, who constantly feels compelled to respond to whatever musical movement is taking place at the moment, Fogerty has never needed to be down with the kids. That attitude is at the heart of Blue Moon Swamp's appeal, where Fogerty remembers much of what made Creedence Clearwater Revival arguably the top American band of the late 60s and early 70s.

The first four tracks of Fogerty's first offering in 11 years are so good, they obscure the rest of the album, which is, on balance, ordinary. There's a quaintness to Fogerty's arrangements and production that no one else can imitate or has even tried. Where he seemed to be battling with his Creedence legacy on Centerfield and ignoring it on Zombie, he embraces it on Blue Moon.

That retro consciousness is reflected immediately on album opener "Southern Streamline," perhaps the best train song of the last two decades. The theme of movement switches to automobiles on "Hot Rod Heart," where Fogerty's guitar has a fiercely thick tone which drives home a trademark melody.

The groove of the next two tracks is more comfortable, relying more on atmosphere than muscle. "Blueboy" is a swampier sequel to "Down on the Corner," a tale of "Ol' Dooley," an old blues player who draws people from miles around. There's a joyfulness to the song which borders on goofiness, particularly on the "pullin' on-a, pullin' on-a, pullin' on-a pony" refrain of the chorus.

"A Hundred and Ten in the Shade" is far darker, yet is Fogerty at his most soulful. It's a working-on-a-chain-gang tale which lyrically and musically sounds like a lost gospel tune, helped no doubt by the backing vocals of the Fairfield Four.

Unfortunately, the remainder of the album doesn't hold up as well. Two tracks ("Rattlesnake Highway" and "Bad Bad Boy") are nearly unlistenable, and Fogerty has a habit of recycling Creedence riffs a little too close to home for comfort. "Swamp River Days" is "Green River" not only revisited but copied note for note. It might be fully intentional, since lines like "hucklebums on cane-pole time" and "old memories out in the crick" (that's how it reads on the lyric sheet!) reek of a good-natured self-parody.

When it comes right down to tunes, though, Fogerty delivers. "Joy of My Life" is one of those songs which might seem sappy, but give Fogerty points for effort since it's probably the closest thing to a pretty love song he'll ever write. Following that with the spare rockabilly charm of "Blue Moon Nights," you can't help but feel good for the guy. And on the album's first single, "Walking In A Hurricane," Fogerty shows he can crank it up and rock out, sounding modern without embarrasing himself.

The years which have passed since CCR last made music have only made that band's legend that much more intimidating, even to its creator. So if Fogerty sounds a little old-fashioned, it's probably for the better. He's let trends come and go, and now seems to realize that the belief in his own music is the only thing that matters.

MEG: Being a celebrity an 'abstract experience' for ex-journalism student

(From 10B)

But as writer Nora Ephron once said about her: "She's very strong and very centered. She knows who she is and what she wants."

In fact, she can be matter-of-fact. And Ryan will have you know that she's not a romantic in any treacly way — although she and Dennis Quaid did get married on Valentine's Day in 1991.

"I'm not gooey, and kind of mushy. I feel like I'm kind of unsentimental," she says.

And unlike the character she plays in "Addicted to Love," she's never really done anything crazy for love herself — even though she notes that it would serve her in doing publicity for this film to tell a story like that.

"It would make me too nervous to do something like that. I often feel, if I've been rejected, I've been rejected. I can take it — I'll just go quietly and lick my wounds."

Such thinking apparently applies to the ever-so-sore point of her estrangement from her mother, too.

When Ryan was about 15, her mother left her and her three siblings to pursue a career. By most reports, Ryan felt forsaken, and things went downhill from there — especially since her mom and mom's current husband, writer Pat Jordan, had some unkind things to say about Quaid.

Ryan has had little to say in response over the years, a move that can be seen as taking the highroad. And in talking with The Associated Press, she concedes that while she sees little downside to stardom, she chafes at her bitter nonrelationship with her mother becoming fair game for the entertainment-news media.

Pushed a little more to elaborate on the scale of her anger, distaste or whatever she's feeling in her head and heart, she begins, "It's ..." Then she stops and says simply, "No comment."

She quickly brightens, though, when told that some 25 Web sites on the Internet are devoted to her and her movies.

"Really! I had no — really! ... Oh my God!"

Then she launches into how being a celebrity is an abstract experience for her.

"Because the reality of it is, you're not like famous every minute. Like when I'm not acting, I don't really think of myself as an actress. When the movie's about to come out, I realize that week I'll be a little more famous than the week before, because of all the commercials.

"But other than that, it's not how I define myself. It's not what I say I am to myself."

And it can have a Max Headroom-meets-Marshall McLuhan surrealism to it.

"It's weird to do the David Letterman show. ... You're kind of looking at David Letterman's face, and you're thinking, 'I usually see his face on TV. There's his face right there, so I guess I must be on TV.' So then your mind goes outside yourself. ... It's not normal, and I hope it never gets normal for me. I just don't want that to be normal. I have a fun time while I'm doing it. But in that way it's abstract."

Anyway, she says, what supersedes everything is that she's a mom.

"It's this thing you give yourself to, and it gives back to you," says Ryan, whose son Jack Henry turned 5 in April. "So I love that part. You love your child and he loves you back."

There's little abstract about that, she says, and she enjoys being a mother so much that it even feels recreational to her.

"I have great friends. I have a really good marriage and a really good thing going. So being at home is fun for me."

And the key to a successful marriage?

"I don't know. A lot of it is just luck," she says, giggling that giggle that so many moviegoers find endearing. "Just luck that you think the same way about wanting to keep your marriage together, and not thinking of it as an institution, just thinking (of it) as two people who are gonna be changing, and the whole thing is going to be in flux."

CAGE: Star puts a lot into main character

complex, evil for a change) stages a mutiny, kills a bunch of guards and steers the bulky C-123 toward some extradition-phobic nation to the south.

The only thing standing between the cargo of violent psychos and certain death for the surviving hostages is Poe. Lots of luck, violent psychos.

The bad guys are played most amusingly by Malkovich, Ving Rhames as his race-obsessed henchman Nathan "Diamond Dog" Jones, and a bunch of distinctive supporting actors (Dave Chappelle, M.C. Gainey, Danny Trejo, Nick Chinlund) who bring as much flavor as they can to underwritten roles.

But by far the cleverest creation on this side of the law is Steve Buscemi's Garland Greene. Sort of a Dr. Lecter with a "Saturday Night Live" worldview, scrawny little Greene is, funnily enough, feared by all the other, beefier criminals. Maybe it's because of his mouth; Greene's withering observations on the lunacy of life in general and their situation in particular cause Poe nearly as much anguish as do all the brutal hijackers put together.

On the ground, John Cusack finds the tough core beneath his usual, well-spoken neurosis schtick as Marshal Vince Larkin, a guy who's screwed up big time but still has the best counter-measuring strategy. Colm Meaney ("Deep Space Nine") is enjoyably hissable as the thorn in Larkin's side, a trigger-happy DEA honcho.

As for Cage, he pours a little Eastwood, a little Confederate cavalier and some trademark absurd humor (the stuffed bunny business is a scream, at least until it's done to death) into Poe. It's a lot of work for a character who's mainly defined by his well-cut physique, which Cage displays with rightful pride.

Simon West, a British director of TV commercials, makes his feature debut with "Con Air." He knows how to showcase fine actors and maintains a nice level of nasty humor, but he doesn't film the climactic, logistics-heavy action pieces — big shootout at a desert airstrip, crash landing into a Vegas casino, "Mission: Impossible" business with a speeding fire truck in a tunnel — quite right. The framing is too often cramped, and there's not enough depth in many of the bigger, battle-heavy shots.

And, of course, the action itself is preposterous beyond belief. But that's standard issue in these kinds of movies. What "Con Air" delivers well — genuinely witty acting — is a rare escape from the numbing, explosive grind.

With Arista backing, Keen can move to forefront

Associated Press

"Picnic" (Arista Austin) — Robert Earl Keen

This twisted Texas tunesmith is bloody brilliant, and moving to a major label hasn't hurt him at all. Robert Earl Keen is never going to be known as a great singer, but his voice is serviceable and he writes swell tunes. On "Picnic," Keen puts Margo Timmins' velvet voice to good use (someone had to; it's wasted in the somnolent Cowboy Junkies) on several songs, and he and the band rock with fire and twang. Like his slightly more countrified releases on indie Sugar Hill, "Picnic" is well worth owning, and Arista's distribution muscle means it actually should be easy to find.

Long lost John Fogerty emerges again with another dose of Delta

By David Bauder
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Sid Graves was helping someone add a fresh coat of paint to a sign outside the Delta Blues Museum in Clarksdale, Miss., when he sensed someone behind him.

He turned to find John Fogerty, the man who sang "Born on the Bayou" for Creedence Clearwater Revival nearly 30 years ago.

Fogerty was full of questions. He asked about Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, Robert Johnson and all of the others this fertile musical territory produced. Graves, the museum's director at the time, supplied him with maps to ancestral homes and juke joints.

Although he's from Northern California, the Delta's music flows through Fogerty's veins. As a younger man, he never thought about these influences. He just played music.

As an older musician — Fogerty's now 52 — he wanted to understand where the music came from.

Fans can also be grateful for his tourist trip down South, because it helped lift the veil of bitterness that stopped him from performing some of his best-known songs.

When Fogerty embarks on a concert tour in support of his first album in 11 years, he will perform

John Fogerty, it seems, puts out albums about as often as Haley's Comet appears. So it's no surprise that when Fogerty does come out with new music, he can sound a little out of touch.

■ Review

In the decade between his first real solo album and his 1985 "comeback" Centerfield, Fogerty sat in the dugout while disco, punk, new wave and whatever popular music was at the dawn of the MTV era held sway over public tastes. And in the time since Fogerty's 1986 flop Eye of the Zombie, the angst of grunge, the rage of rap and the feel-good sloganeering of suburban country have pulled pop listenership in divergent directions.

Holding out while the industry plays binge and purge with various genres, though, is probably the best strategy

Meg has a peg for her latest film

By Douglas J. Rowe
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — A journalism major in college, Meg Ryan quickly shows how she might have developed a jeweler's eye for story angles if she had become a reporter.

The angle on her since her last film — the underappreciated "Courage Under Fire," in which she plays a medevac pilot nominated as the first female Medal of Honor winner — is that she's trying to depart from her cutesy, girl-next-door image, that she wants to relinquish the scepter of the Reigning Queen of Romantic Comedies.

Screen actress Meg Ryan, who stars in the new romantic comedy "Addicted to Love," says she loves romantic comedies and always hopes to be able to make such films.

That could be the angle on her latest film, too, for in "Addicted to Love" she plays a spurned lover whose single-minded interest in payback and Darth Vader-cum-Catwoman appearance make her seem more like the Queen of Mean.

But stop the presses!

That angle is wrong, she says.

"I don't have a career that I plan out and plot because ... I don't really think you can do that. It's more up to fate than anything," she says.

Plus, she points out, she's made a score of movies, many of which were dramas, including "Flesh and Bone," "Promised Land" and "The Doors," in which she played Jim Morrison's wife.

"I've played speed freaks and heroin addicts — movies that people didn't see but I've been doing," she says. "So I don't have this conscientious thing like I'm going to change my image, because I'm not cultivating one. It's for you guys to do. ... That's an angle people take — they've taken it on this movie, too, the 'conscientious departure' idea, which I don't have at all."

The 35-year-old actress, whose biggest successes were "When Harry Met Sally..." and "Sleepless in Seattle," says she loves romantic comedies and always hopes to be able to make such films.

Protests aside, Ryan is ... cute — and has been for a long time. (She was voted "cutest" at her Connecticut high school in 1979.) She can be giggly in person, almost girlish, just like her screen persona.

Cage pilots action-packed 'Con Air'

By Bob Strauss
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Lots of really smart actors do lots of dumb action movie posturing in "Con Air." The results, not surprisingly, are more amusing than in your typical, high-decibel head-banger.

Scott Rosenberg's script has been compared to "The Dirty Dozen," but the similarities end at the convicts-with-weapons concept. Otherwise, the discernible difference between precision plotting and a narrative free-for-all should be apparent to all.

To say there's not a believable moment in "Con Air" is to overstate the obvious. To acknowledge that things reach entirely new thresholds of absurd overkill in the last 20 minutes is, actually, something of a tribute to the talented actors who keep the wacko thing flying for as long as they do.

Nicolas Cage, decked out in long, Jesus-like locks and soulfully suffering eyes, is Cameron Poe, the ultimate wronged man who is nonetheless the right guy to have in the wrong place. A few seconds after completing Army ranger service, Poe was imprisoned for killing some scum who threatened his wife (Monica Potter).

Eight years later, Poe is paroled and anxious to meet the daughter he's never seen. He's in such a hurry that he hitches a ride home to Alabama on a U.S. Marshals' transport plane. Poe's fellow passengers are the meanest felons in the prison system, and they're on their way to a new, state-of-the-art, maximum-security penitentiary.

Paul and J.T.: Two old guys still in the game

It's been 20 years since J.T. first hit record shelves; 30 since Sgt. Pepper changed the course of popular music.

James Taylor and Paul McCartney have aged nicely, and while plenty of their efforts in the last two decades haven't even approached the worthiness of those earlier works, it is nice to know that these guys, despite being in their 50s, can still outwrite virtually anybody in music today.

Patterson

In the last two weeks, Taylor released Hour Glass, while McCartney completed the 1-2 punch with Flaming Pie, comfortably positioned at No. 2 on this week's list of Top Albums.

Overall, Hour Glass is optimistic, but Taylor's trademark cynicism comes shining through on "Line 'Em Up," and death is the central theme of "Enough To Be On Your Way." But it is the more upbeat tunes on the 13 song album — the last of which is unbilled on the liner notes and is a humorous send-up of cowboy movie theme songs — that stand out most.

Taylor fits like a warm glove, and listeners may swear they've heard some of these songs before, including "Little More Time With You," "Jump Up Behind Me" and "Up From Your Life." But as much flack as some artists catch for retreading old material, it is Taylor's familiarity that pleases his legions of fans.

Still, Taylor remains a worrisome soul; his agnostic tendencies come through loudly on "Gaia," a song in praise of nature, where he sings, "Pray for the forest/Pray to the tree/Pray for the deep blue sea/Pray for yourself and for God's sake/Say one for me/Poor wretched unbeliever."

Taylor has assembled a star-studded collection of talent for the album, including Stevie Wonder, Yo-Yo Ma, Branford Marsalis, Shawn Colvin and Michael Brecker.

And it is his mastery of the internal rhyme, alliteration and his overall poetic skill that work wonders in what some are calling possibly the best album of his career.

At least his best since J.T.

While Taylor has whittled through his career with passable efforts between true works of soft, Southern California-rock art, McCartney has given the masses the occasional single masterpiece ("Band on the Run," "Another Day," "Maybe I'm Amazed") but has far too often released syrupy, meaningless, silly love songs. It has, in fact, been years since McCartney has done anything worth remembering.

But Flaming Pie changes all that. A grand accomplishment in his library of solo work, the album, which also features Ringo Starr, recalls the music of the Beatles on several occasions.

Whether reflective, as on the lead track, "The Song We Were Singing" — one of the best songs McCartney has ever written; rocking on the title track, or effectively utilizing Eleanor Rigby-ish orchestration on "Somedays," McCartney has recorded a memorable album.

A collaboration with Plano, Texas, blues-rocker Steve Miller is reason enough to buy the album. The first of two songs the pair recorded together, "Young Boy" — a pop gem — has Miller giving the nod to McCartney; later, on "Used to Be Bad," it is Miller who takes the lead and steals the show.

By far the most fun on the album, the vocals on "Bad" were recorded on one mic in one take.

"Heaven on a Sunday," "The World Tonight," "I Really Love You," "Beautiful Night" and "If You Wanna" are five tracks that can stand up next to anything solo Paul has ever recorded.

In the album's liner notes, McCartney says the recent release of the Beatles Anthology served as a refresher course that set the framework for Flaming Pie.

And for that, fans of McCartney and the Beatles can be thankful for a very impressive record.

Midland's Womack leads Texas Men's Amateur after first round

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

Mark one up for the barbecue circuits and the hometown hero.

Midland's Trey Womack, a product of the former, became the latter as a he fired a first-round 66 Thursday to take a one-stroke lead at the 88th Annual Texas Golf Association Men's Amateur Championship.

"I'm sure everyone will be shocked," Womack said. "This is the best that I have played here even with a partner. I will take it while I can get it."

Womack's 6-under-par round was a product of six birdies and no bogeys. Womack needed just 27 putts — some longer than others as evidenced when he drained a 40 foot putt on No. 8 for his fourth birdie on the front side. It was almost like a dream round, because only in dreams do 80 foot putts go in and chips from off the green secure birdies. He did both, holing a county-long putt on 11 and knocking one in from off the green on 14. Considering his longest par putt was just three feet, it was a really good day.

"No bogeys, I don't do that too often," Womack said. "I have been playing well and putting well. Some of those putts started going in and it was one of those days. I was fortunate to shoot 66."

Womack's flat stick was on fire but the success in his round was also due to how he struck the ball. He missed just three greens and drove the ball well, keeping the big stick in the bag. On a tight course like MCC, that can make the difference.

"The course seemed to be playing easy," Womack said. "I did keep it in the fairway. I hit driver only three times."

Although living in Midland, Womack says that he

Hingis leaps into French final

Martina Hingis jumps for joy after defeating Monica Seles, 6-7, 7-5, 6-4, in the semifinals of the French Open Thursday in Paris.

By Stephen Wilson
AP Sports Writer

PARIS — Hopping for joy and kicking her legs like the 16-year-old kid she is, Martina Hingis celebrated as if she had won her second Grand Slam title.

She must, however, wait one more match for a French Open championship that would put her halfway to a rare Grand Slam.

"I mean, I have never been so happy after making a match point as this time," she said. "So far, this is the nicest victory of my career."

The top-seeded Swiss star defeated three-time champion Monica Seles 6-7 (7-2), 7-5, 6-4 in Thursday's semifinals to extend her 1997 record to 40-0.

After her celebratory leap, Hingis asked a ball boy to hand her some balls, then fired three of them high into the stands, nearly out of the stadium.

Her opponent in Saturday's championship will be another teen-ager, 19-year-old Iva Majoli. In a semifinal that seemed like an afterthought, the ninth-seeded Croatian overcame a bad cold and outlasted No. 11 Amanda Coetzer 6-3, 4-6, 7-5 to reach her first Grand Slam final.

For the first time since 1987, the women's champion at Roland Garros will be someone other than Steffi Graf, Seles or Arantxa Sanchez Vicario.

Hingis leads Majoli 3-1 in career meetings.

"I have nothing to lose," said Majoli, who was up most of the night with flulike symptoms. "I can really just play the best tennis of my life."

The semifinal results — coupled with defending champion Graf's quarterfinal loss to Coetzer — further consolidated the changing of the guard in women's tennis that Hingis represents.

"The way Martina is playing is just amazing tennis," said Seles, the No. 3 seed who is now 0-4 against Hingis. "Martina is really good everywhere. She doesn't have a weakness."

Hingis, who replaced Graf as the No. 1 player in March, had uncertain expectations coming into the tournament. She hadn't played a match since early April, and underwent knee surgery six weeks ago after falling off a horse.

Getting this far, Hingis said, was even more special than winning her first Grand Slam title at the Australian Open in January.

"My goal was to reach the semifinals," she said. "Now I am in the finals and I have a great chance to win the whole tournament. After the surgery, making the finals — thank God I could (even) play and compete at this tournament."

The poise Hingis showed in finding a way to beat Seles on a windswept Center Court showed a lot about why she is No. 1.

The match featured several long corner-to-corner rallies of more than 20 exchanges. Both players strained mightily to run down shots, with Seles grunting loudly, often forced to stretch for one-handed forehands.

In a ragged first set, which included six breaks of serve in the first eight games, Hingis struggled to find the timing on her shots and often missed badly with her forehand.

Always wearing her emotions on her sleeve, she grimaced, pouted and bounced her racket on the ground in frustration.

In the tiebreaker, Hingis made five unforced errors, three off the forehand and two off the backhand, as Seles took the first set in 41 minutes.

"In the beginning I maybe took it a little too easy," Hingis said. "She was making me run all the time."

The second set was evenly balanced until the turning point of the match came at 5-5. With Seles serving, she fell behind 0-40 and saved two break points. On the third, after Hingis hit a soft floater, Seles moved in for the kill — but her swinging half-volley landed in the net.

That gave Hingis the break for 6-5 and seemed to deflate Seles. Hingis held at love in the next game to close out the set, finishing with an ace.

"I thought, 'She's getting tired, as I am, too,'" Hingis said. "You could see it on her face that she wasn't really happy with her own game anymore either."

There was only one break in the third set and it was enough to propel Hingis to victory. It came in the third game and was set up

Buddies battle for Belmont

■ Silver Charm must beat out Free House one more time to earn horse racing's Triple Crown.

AP Racing Writer

NEW YORK — Those gray buddies, Silver Charm and Free House, will get together again Saturday, and this time a Triple Crown is on the line for Silver Charm.

Bob Baffert, trainer of Silver Charm, and Trudy McCaffery, co-owner of Free House, both say the colts are pals.

It seems, however, the only time the two hang out together is during stretch runs of stakes races, something they've done five straight times, including the Kentucky Derby and Preakness.

And it probably will happen again when they and five other 3-year-olds contest the 1 1/2-mile Belmont.

"Free House is the horse to beat, I think," Baffert said Thursday before entries were made.

"This will be the sixth time we have met, and I hope we can even it out this time," said Paco Gonzalez, trainer of Free House, who finished third in the Derby won by Silver Charm by a head over Captain Bodgit. Free House was second a head behind Silver Charm in the Preakness.

Silver Charm, bidding to become the 12th Triple Crown winner and first since Affirmed in 1978, was the 6-5 early favorite, followed by the entry of Touch Gold and Wild Rush at 2-1; Free House, 5-2; and Crypto Star, 6-1.

Rounding out the field are Mr. Energizer, supplemented to the race by owner Robert Perez for $50,000, at 30-1, and Irish Silence at 50-1.

Despite the five previous meetings in which Silver Charm built a 3-2 lead over Free House, Baffert doesn't consider it a rivalry.

"I like the owners (McCaffery and John Toffan), and Paco and I got along well. So the rivalry really was with Captain Bodgit (second in the Derby, third in the Preakness and now retired

SALT LAKE CITY — Michael Jordan is killing them, they look terribly uncomfortable performing on a world stage and their best player appears shell shocked.

No, things aren't going well for the Utah Jazz, who have little hope of making these NBA Finals competitive unless they can continue to do what they've done without fail since Feb. 23 — win at the Delta Center.

"We can't play like these are exhibition games," Jazz coach Jerry Sloan said Thursday.

But that's how the Jazz have been playing — halfheartedly.

Gone is the confidence they had when they made it through the first three rounds of the playoffs with three losses.

Missing is the type of intensity that the Bulls can summon at will.

An all points bulletin is needed to find the same Karl Malone who won the MVP award.

The finals resume Friday night with the Bulls holding all the momentum and confidence. Only two teams — the 1977 Portland

Winning a national championship in any sport is quite an accomplishment, but there are some national titles that you don't hear much about.

Midlander Scotty Chapman has a national title carved in his belt, but then again, you probably didn't read about it in great detail.

Chapman was a member of Texas A&M's national champion polo team. And he's not even sure that the university knows about it.

But for one glorious week, the A&M polo team was on top of the world, winning the United

Monterey advances; Coahoma falls

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Alex Garcia pitched six shutout innings and Cooper Vittitow went 2-for-3, scoring one run and driving in another, as defending champion Lubbock Monterey defeated Sugar Land Clements 4-1 Thursday night in the Class 5A semifinals.

Monterey (33-7), making its 13th trip to the state tournament, will seek its fifth state title in today's championship game against Round Rock.

Clements, which got a complete game from pitcher Mike Jacob in a losing effort, finished the season 25-9 and was hurt by stranding 11 players on base. Offensively, Clements was led by David Nelson, who went 2-for-2, and Chad Casey, who went 2-for-3.

Monterey, which beat Klein Oak in last year's title game, trailed 1-0 early and then capitalized on a key error to begin an offensive surge that helped the Plainsmen pull away.

With the game tied 1-1, Monterey's Brian Schmitt walked, advanced to second on a single by Robert Castilleja and then moved to third on a wild pitch by Jacob.

Garcia hit a grounder to Clements shortstop Mike Busby who tried to throw Schmitt out at home but overthrew catcher Jason Price, allowing Schmitt to score on the error and allowing Castilleja to advance to third.

■ AL Roundup

Red Sox 2, Brewers 1

MILWAUKEE — The Boston Red Sox profited from three questionable calls, including a disputed home run by Mo Vaughn, to beat the Milwaukee Brewers and end a five-game losing streak.

Tim Wakefield (2-4) tied a career-high with 10 strikeouts. The knuckleballer threw 168 pitches in 8 2-3 innings.

Mariners 14, Tigers 6

DETROIT — Alex Rodriguez became the first Seattle player to hit for the cycle in a nine-inning game as the Mariners homered four times and routed the Detroit Tigers.

Rodriguez, who drove in two runs and scored three, homered in the first, singled in the fourth, tripled in the eighth and doubled in the ninth. The only other Seattle player to hit for the cycle was Jay Buhner, who did it in a 14-inning game on June 23, 1993.

Athletics 4, Blue Jays 3

TORONTO — Jose Canseco hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning as Oakland handed Toronto its fourth straight loss.

Pat Hentgen (5-3) had retired 12 straight batters before Geronimo Berroa and Mark McGwire hit consecutive singles with Oakland trailing 3-1 in the eighth.

Angels 3, Twins 0

MINNEAPOLIS — Rookie Jason Dickson scattered six hits in eight innings and Luis Alicea broke a scoreless tie with a seventh-inning single as Anaheim beat Minnesota.

Dickson (7-2) limited the Twins to six singles as he outdueled Bob Tewksbury, who allowed nine hits after starting off with 4 2-3 perfect innings. Troy Percival followed Dickson and finished for his fourth save.

Indians 5, White Sox 4, 11 innings

Castillo (0-1) walked Manny Ramirez with one out, and Sandy Alomar doubled sharply down the left-field line. Candaele, a utility infielder called up from Triple-A Buffalo on May 24, fouled off several pitches before hitting a 2-2 pitch to center for his first RBI of the season

'Bama edges Miami, gets to play Hurricanes again

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Miami had hoped to get a day off and then play defending champion Louisiana State on Saturday in a rematch of last year's College World Series title game.

Instead, the Hurricanes lost to Alabama 8-6 Thursday and will play the Crimson Tide again Friday for a spot in the final.

"There's no one else we'd rather face than LSU," said Miami third baseman Pat Burrell, who had two hits and two RBIs. "But we've got Alabama in the way."

G.W. Keller hit a three-run homer in the fifth inning to help Alabama keep its championship hopes alive. Keller's homer, his 21st, put the Crimson Tide ahead 7-0 after five innings.

"Our club keeps coming back and battling back," Miami coach Jim Morris said. "We keep going to the end. Whoever executes best and gets ready to play is going to win tomorrow."

Heath Henderson (13-2) won despite allowing six runs and eight hits in five-plus innings. Jarrod Kingrey made his third relief appearance of the CWS, pitched the final four innings for his fourth save.

Alabama coach Jim Wells said he might use all of his four other pitchers — besides Henderson — on Friday.

"You can't really save anybody. You've got to go for the win," Morris said. "I'm just waiting for someone to throw a complete game. Everybody seems to have come out in the fifth or seventh innings."

Miami starter Alex Santos was hit hard. The freshman allowed seven runs and seven hits in five innings and hit two batters.

Alabama (55-13), which lost to Miami 6-1 on Monday, put the Hurricanes (51-17) in a familiar position. Southern California beat Miami twice to eliminate the Hurricanes two years ago. Louisiana State (56-13) beat Miami 9-8 in last year's final.

Andy Phillips hit an RBI single and Dustan Mohr hit a two-run single as Alabama took a 3-0 lead in the first. The Tide added four runs in the fifth on Phillips' RBI single and Keller's homer to right.

"It was a game of multiple-run innings," Wells said. "I liked the way we jumped on them early, but after that their pitchers did a great job."

Mike Lopez-Cao and Ryan Grimmett hit solo homers for Miami in the fifth, but Mark Peer put Alabama ahead 8-2 in sixth with his third homer.

Miami scored four runs in the bottom half, when Henderson failed to retire any of the first five batters. Aubrey Huff hit an RBI double, Burrell hit a two-run single and Burrell scored on a wild pitch by Kingrey.

Cincinnati substitutes do in Astros, 6-5

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Lenny Harris and Pokey Reese replaced injured starters and had three hits apiece Thursday, leading the Cincinnati Reds to a 6-5 victory over the Houston Astros.

Harris hit a solo homer, scored two runs and drove in two as a replacement for Deion Sanders, who left the game in the second inning after twisting his left ankle.

Sanders hurt the ankle while sliding into second base in the first inning, got it taped and played a half-inning before leaving. X-rays found no fracture, and the major leagues' leading base stealer is listed as day-to-day with a mild sprain.

Reese had a pair of singles and a double — his first career three-hit game — while filling in at shortstop for Barry Larkin, who was out with muscle spasms in his neck.

■ NL Roundup

Pete Schourek (5-4) gave up five hits and a pair of runs over five innings to get his third consecutive win. The left-hander allowed a game-opening homer to Craig Biggio, his 10th, and an RBI single in the third to Luis Gonzalez, who ran his hitting streak to 10 games.

Mets 6, Marlins 0

NEW YORK — Armando Reynoso pitched a five-hitter for his first career shutout and the Mets tied a club record with five double plays in a win over the Marlins.

Reynoso (5-0), who took a no-hitter into the seventh inning May 19 against Colorado, didn't allow Florida a hit until the fifth when Jim Eisenreich led off with a single.

Braves 9, Expos 0

MONTREAL — Denny Neagle scattered six singles for his second career shutout and Keith Lockhart, Javy Lopez and Andruw Jones all homered as the Atlanta Braves beat the Montreal Expos.

Neagle (8-1), who also singled and drove in two runs, struck out seven and walked two.

Pirates 9, Cardinals 3

PITTSBURGH — Joe Randa, hitting for power since replacing the injured Kevin Elster as Pittsburgh's No. 5 hitter, hit a two-run homer and RBI triple in a win over St. Louis.

The Pirates had lost seven of their last eight at home to St. Louis, including a 10-0 defeat Wednesday.

Rockies 9, Padres 7, 11 innings

DENVER — Larry Walker hit two homers, including a two-run shot in the 11th inning, as Colorado ended San Diego's six-game streak.

Colorado turned a team-record six double plays. The major league record is seven, done four times and last accomplished by St. Louis in a 10-inning game against Pittsburgh on June 16, 1994.

Phillies 9, Cubs 8, 10 innings

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Lieberthal hit a three-run homer in the ninth and Scott Rolen singled home the winning run in the 10th as the Philadelphia Phillies ended a six-game losing streak.

AMATEUR: Midlander leads tournament

only plays the MCC course just five times a year. However, Womack's story goes beyond how he played the course.

Womack calls himself a product of the "Little Barbecue Circuit," a reference to the "little town" tournaments in West Texas. Unlike those chasing after him, Womack, a Colorado City native, didn't play golf in college and this Amateur is his first. Knowing that is all he needs to stay humble.

"It is way too early (to think about the later days)," Womack said. "It is just fun to have one of the lower rounds. I will not make any predictions. I just want to shoot a respectable score tomorrow and go from there."

The fruit of Womack's labor is a one-stroke lead over three others: Irving's Chip Stewart, Dallas' Win Bruning and Keller's Robert Jacks.

Stewart, the 1992 Amateur champion, hit all 18 greens, making eight birdies and three bogeys — all of which were of the three-putt variety.

"I take eight birdies over the next three days and see what happens," said Stewart, the back-to-back winner of the Temple Cup. "I played a fabulous round. Any time you make eight birdies you've got to be playing pretty good. I have confidence, but at this level most good players playing well do. I'm not unique."

No he wasn't. The MCC course was vulnerable with calm weather, and the golfers were receptive of the advantageous conditions. There were 24 golfers under-par (71 or lower) for the day and, counting the six at even-par, 30 at even-par or better. That list includes former champions John Grace (70), Brad Elder (70), Larry Seligmann (70) and Stewart (66).

"Sure it does (matter that the wind was down)," Stewart said. "I don't think it was easy but it wasn't difficult. I think that the course was not without its defenses, but its guard was down."

The tournament continues today with the second round, which is scheduled to begin at 7:30 a.m. After the round is completed the field will be cut to the top 50 plus ties or those within 10 strokes of the lead.

TALL CITY SCORERS: Midland's representation at the Amateur was a successful one for the most part. Including Womack's 66, there were four Midland golfers at 72 or lower. Steve Whiteside was second-best at 71 while Kirk Branum and Reggie Howell both shot even-par 72. Other scores included Doyce Haney's 73, Michael Guss' 74, Mac McGee's 75, Harry Bettis' 77, Joe Sellman's 78 and Randy Geiselman's 78. Another Midlander, Charlie Prince shot a 73. The former Lee District 4-5A medalist is listed as being from Katy, where his mother currently resides. That is where he qualified for the Amateur.

GOOD SHOOTING: Robert Miller Jr. of Bastrop had a hole-in-one on the par-3 fourth hole. For the day, Miller shot 79. Win Bruning, who is tied for second after a 67, had two eagles.

"CHAMPIONS" PAIRING: The past three Amateur champions were paired in the first round. Bob Hullender (the 1996 champion), Brad Elder (1995) and John Grace (1994) kicked off their 1997 Amateur within a marquee threesome. Hullender, the top-ranked senior Amateur in the nation, was the only golfer not to break par while Elder and Grace each finished at 2-under.

Diablos pull even with Angels in battle for second in divsion

Staff Report

EL PASO — With the San Antonio Missions having already clinched the first half title of the Texas League West, the Midland Angels and El Paso Diablos can't quite decide who wants second place.

The Diablos bombed the Angels 14-6 here Thursday night to leave both teams tied with identical 29-31 records and both double digits behind the Missions in the first half standings.

But the two teams play two more times in El Paso (today and Saturday) to see who has the leg up on second place when the two teams break for other locations.

The Angels will have Sunday off before starting a home series with first half champion San Antonio. And that isn't a pretty prospect since the Angels recently left the Mission City, losing six of seven games to fall out of the first half race.

On Thursday, the Angels forged a 3-2 lead over the Diablos behind the starting pitching of Rob Bonnano, but when he departed for Bryan Harris (0-2), things fell apart in the sixth inning.

The Diablos tied the game with a solo home run from Scott Krause, and in the same inning, Mike Kincaid took Harris deep for a three-run shot and a 6-3 lead.

It got worse as the Diablos also scored two runs on a bases loaded error by Midland first baseman Danny Buxbaum in the seventh. And pitcher Bob Gamez gave up a run with a wild pitch in the eighth.

Kincaid had three hits in the game and drove in five runs, giving him 53 RBIs for the year. Diablo pitcher Steve Woodard took the win for his eighth win in 11 decisions this year.

Aaron Guiel had a couple of RBIs in the game as did Keith Luuloa. Bonnano had a good outing since this was his return to the starting rotation.

Still, the Angels and Diablos are tied at 2-2 in the current series with two games left to play.

Johnson will miss nationals

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Michael Johnson, the world and Olympic champion in the 200 and 400 meters, will not compete in next week's U.S. Outdoor Track and Field Championships because of a left quadriceps injury.

Johnson's withdrawal was announced Thursday by Brad Hunt, the sprinter's agent. Hunt said the decision was made after Johnson visited his doctor in Dallas.

After his 150-meter match race against Donovan Bailey on Sunday at Toronto, Johnson's coach, Clyde Hart, said the U.S. star was "extremely doubtful" for the national championships.

Johnson's absence follows the announcement that Dan O'Brien, the three-time world decathlon champion, will not compete in the U.S. championships because of a stress fracture of the right tibia.

Norman, Price set pace for Kemper Open

Associated Press

POTOMAC, Md. — The sun returned to the PGA Tour on Thursday, shining as radiantly as the smile on Greg Norman's face.

Norman, beaming even when he had to settle for par, had five birdies on the back nine for a 5-under-par 66 and a share of the first-round lead with Nick Price in the Kemper Open.

"It's a been a long time since we've seen the straw," said Norman, holding his trademark straw hat. "It's nice where when you have a day where don't have to carry an umbrella, when you can wear your nice hat instead of a cap."

Jeff Sluman, Paul Stankowski and Kelly Gibson were a stroke back at 67, and Tom Lehman and Ben Crenshaw topped a six-player group at 68.

Norman sloshed through a third-round 64 over three days to tie for second in the rain-shortened Memorial over the weekend. On Thursday, he eagled the par-5 second, had four birdies in five holes from No. 10, then hit a 6-iron to a foot to pick up another stroke at No. 16. He even feigned disappointment by putting his hands to his hips before letting out a big smile when his 65-foot birdie putt at No. 17 fell inches short.

"This is the first round of the Kemper; I wish it was the (canceled) fourth round of Memorial," Norman said. "I have taken a lot of responsibility off my shoulders. I'm enjoying being out here."

Norman attributed his revival to a recent decision to relieve himself from the day-to-day oversight of his Great White Shark course design company, an agonizing decision for a hands-on guy.

"I talked to myself every night, saying, 'You've got to do this, you've got to do this for my sanity, and you've got to do this for the game of golf,' " Norman said.

"It's done me a world of good. I go to the office maybe an hour, two hours a day if I need to, instead of eight hours."

Price, also playing a late-afternoon round after the sun dried the course from the weekend rains, had five birdies on the back nine in his bogey-free round.

■ Golf Roundup

"I drove the ball super today, hitting in the middle of the fairway, which bodes well for next week," said Price, referring to next week's U.S. Open at nearby Congressional Country Club.

And, like Norman, Price was playing with fewer distractions. Six weeks ago, he finished a book that had been in the works for 18 months. He said he was beginning to learn the lesson of overloading his life with off-the-course distractions.

"As you get older, your priorities change," Price said. "You can be a little firmer at saying no sometimes or being able to allocate interviews or whatever else might be the business side of our golf lives.

"You find out where your comfort range is, and I've certainly found mine now."

Golden leads Olds Classic

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Kate Golden, non-exempt after a dismal 1996 season, shot a 6-under-par 66 on Thursday to take the first-round lead in the LPGA Oldsmobile Classic.

Golden, who tied for fourth this year in the Diet Dr Pepper National Pro-Am in West Palm Beach, Fla., matched her career-best round for a two-stroke advantage over eight players.

"I hit it real close on the back side," said Golden, who started the back nine with four birdies in five holes. "I'm usually a real good short putter. I got a new driver last week and have been hitting real straight. I missed two fairways, which is good because the rough is thick."

Golden, an All-America selection at Texas, joined the tour in 1992, but did not play in 1994 and 1995. She made only $12,480 in 19 starts last season, but has rebounded this year with $49,868 in seven events.

Caddies allowed to wear shorts in U.S. Open

POTOMAC, Md. — Relief is on the way for the long-suffering caddies in next week's U.S. Open.

The Professional Tour Caddies Association said Thursday that the United States Golf Association will allow its members to wear shorts during the U.S. Open at Congressional Country Club in Bethesda.

According to a notice posted during the Kemper Open, USGA officials will allow caddies to wear shorts as long as they are tailored, Bermuda-length and a solid color.

Hogs' Howard follows in Conley's footsteps

By Bert Rosenthal
AP Track Writer

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Arkansas' Robert Howard is a pressure jumper, similar to former Razorbacks star Michael Conley, and Thursday he showed why.

After two jumps in the prelims of the long jump final in the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships, Howard — the favorite — was in danger of not making the final.

Then, on his final jump in the prelims, Howard soared into the lead with a leap of 26 feet, 11 1/4 inches. That mark stood up through the remainder of the competition, and Howard had his first outdoor long jump title, to go along with four other NCAA titles — one long jump indoors, one triple jump outdoors and two triple jump indoors.

"It's happened so many times before," Howard said of the necessity to produce a big jump. "I'm a pressure jumper."

Arkansas coach John McDonnell agreed.

"He's a great competitor," McDonnell said. "He possesses heroics like Conley used to have. He has a reserve tank all the time. He's a winner."

Howard, who swept the indoor long jump and triple jump titles at the NCAA Indoor Championships in March, will try and complete an outdoor sweep in Saturday's triple jump final.

If he does it, he would join Conley (1984 and 1985) and another former Arkansas star, Erick Walder (1994) as the only jumpers to win all four titles in the same year.

Howard's victory gave Arkansas 10 important points toward its quest for a sixth consecutive title.

In other finals, Tressa Thompson of Nebraska won the women's shot put with a meet-record 60-8 1/2, Ivan Wagner of Texas took the men's high jump at 7-6 1/2, and James Dunkleberger of Wisconsin won the decathlon with 7,924 points.

Wagner's triumph lifted Texas into the men's team lead with 23 1/2 points after five events. Arkansas is second with 16, one point ahead of UCLA.

Cheever makes most of new qualifying rules

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

FORT WORTH — When Eddie Cheever Jr. lines up on the inside of the fourth row in Saturday night's True Value 500K, he should look back at his pit crew and thank them for putting him there.

Cheever was the biggest beneficiary of a new qualifying method the Indy Racing League tested Wednesday night that seeded drivers based on two laps and a third trip around that included a right-side tire change.

Cheever finished seventh with a three-lap average of 161.606 mph, even though his two full-speed laps were the slowest among the top 16. He made up for it with a 13.2-second pit stop that was the second-fastest of the night.

"I'm ecstatic," Cheever said. "I think (the format) is great because now it's truly a team effort, just like it is in a race."

Not everyone thought that was a good thing.

Owner A.J. Foyt stalked the grounds furiously after the new rules backfired on his drivers, Davey Hamilton and Billy Boat.

Hamilton had two 211 mph laps, but ended ninth because of an 18.2-second pit stop, the worst among the top 12.

Boat, who had mechanical troubles before his first attempt, wasted laps of 210 and 212 mph when he overshot the pit. Boat's time was disallowed, sending him to the 21st spot. Alongside him will be Eliseo Salazar, who was thrown off by the rules and pulled into the pit after just one 210 mph lap.

"I misinterpreted when they gave me the green flag and I thought I was supposed to get in," said Salazar, one of only nine drivers to break 210 mph in qualifying. "It was very confusing."

Tony Stewart showed everyone how it was done, zipping around in 216.251 and 216.494 mph — the two fastest of the night — then pulling off a 12.9 second pit stop, the only one better than Cheever's.

"I was more nervous about this than I've ever been about qualifying because there was so much that could go wrong," said Stewart, who earned a $25,000 bonus for taking the pole.

"We go out there and put our life on the line for two laps, then you could have an air gun problem in the pits, or something, and have that cost you."

Gordon revs up for Pocono push

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — He is the driver to beat virtually every week. And when the track provides part of the competition, so much the better for Jeff Gordon.

Despite a late-race accident that spoiled his chance to make history in his most recent outing, Gordon is excited about being at Pocono International Raceway.

"If a driver likes a challenge, then Pocono is the place," he said on the eve of qualifying for the Pocono 500. "It's not like any other track where we compete."

But it's a track Gordon has mastered. A year ago, he dominated this race after setting a track qualifying record of 169.725 mph.

Now he's back with Blacker, the Chevrolet he drove to victory last year, hoping to put it on the pole Friday.

"We had Blacker last weekend at Dover and were capable of winning until we got ourselves in trouble during a caution," Gordon said. "Blacker won the previous three races at Dover."

A fourth would have been unprecedented, but Gordon can't look back. His focus now is the Pocono, at which he hopes to record his sixth victory of the year in just 13 races.

That would give the 25-year-old Hoosier 25 wins in just four years on stock car racing's top circuit. A victory Sunday also would leave Gordon tied with Jim Paschal for 19th spot in career victories.

"About 10 of our career wins came in that car, including our only win at Pocono," Gordon said of the Chevrolet Monte Carlo he drives for Hendrick Motorsports. "There is something really special about ol' Blacker."

There also is something special about the track, a relatively flat, two-mile triangular layout unlike any other on the NASCAR tour.

"It is unique because it has three distinct corners," Gordon said. "It's like throwing a short track, a superspedway and a road course all into one."

French semifinals feature unlikely men

By Salvatotore Zanca
Associated Press Writer

PARIS — On paper, it looks like your basic first-round matchup at a small tournament: 122nd-ranked qualifier Filip Dewulf of Belgium against No. 66 Gustavo Kuerten of Brazil.

It's hard to believe then that these two no-names are meeting in the semifinals of the French Open on Friday.

The other semifinal has higher-profile players, but was also widely unexpected. Sergi Bruguera, a two-time champion here, takes on Pat Rafter, an Australian serve-and-volleyer.

Dewulf, Rafter and Kuerten are unseeded. Bruguera is seeded 16th but would have been unseeded if Thomas Enqvist had not pulled out of the tournament a day before the final draw.

It's the first time in French Open history that three unseeded players have reached the men's final four.

"Who would have ever thought that these players would get so far in the semifinals?" Rafter said. "The chances are a billion to one. But it's happened, so that's tennis I guess."

For the second time in three years, there are unseeded players facing each other for a spot in the final. In 1994, Alberto Bersategui met Magnus Larsson. Berasategui lost in the final against Bruguera.

Dewulf is the first qualifier to make the semifinals of a Grand Slam tournament since 1977 when John McEnroe made the semis at Wimbledon and Bob Giltinan did it at the Australian Open.

Rafter is the first Australian since Phil Dent in 1977 to make the semifinals in Paris. While Australians have won more men's titles (11) than anyone else, the last to do it was Rod Laver in 1969.

Bruguera has been plagued by injuries the last two years and has not won a tournament since 1994. Rafter has improved his ranking from No. 62 at the end of last year to No. 25.

Dewulf and Kuerten have never met, while Bruguera has won five of six meetings with Rafter and taken all four of their clay-court matches in straight sets.

Rafter doesn't intend to change his tactics.

"I'm going to keep serve-volleying," Rafter said. "But I think I'm doing it better now than what I was in '94 and '95. He's going to have to hit a few more balls past me."

Kuerten has been on an historic run at the French Open, looking to become the first South American champion since Ecuador's Andres Gomez won the 1990 title.

Kuerten knows about qualifying for the French Open. In his first Grand Slam a year ago, he qualified for the main draw but lost in the first round.

On his way to the semifinals, he has beaten the French Open champions the last two years, Thomas Muster in the third round and defending champion Yevgeny Kafelnikov in the quarterfinals.

He knows Dewulf presents a different kind of challenge.

"Filip, like me, is a big surprise in the tournament," Kuerten said. "He's playing well, pretty solid, also with a lot of confidence."

It's not the first time Dewulf has gone a long way as qualifier. In 1995, he won in Vienna as a qualifier, beating Muster in the final.

"After that I played well for three months on the indoor circuit," Dewulf said. "Once I started the outdoor season I had a little problem with injuries. I had some problems in my head, too. I really thought my life was going to change. I was becoming a top 50 player. I really thought that would change my life."

JAZZ: Utah hopes home court pays off

(From 1C)

Trail Blazers and the 1969 Boston Celtics — have come back from an 0-2 deficit to win the finals.

And no team has ever come back from an 0-3 deficit in any playoff round.

The Jazz were back in familiar territory Thursday, the day after their 97-85 loss in Game 2 in Chicago.

Utah held a brief practice at Westminster College, then tried to express what had gone wrong during their first five days of experiencing the NBA Finals — and the pressure that comes with it — for the first time.

"We laid around Chicago for three days waiting to play a basketball game, and that was a factor when you analyze what we are and what they are," Sloan said.

"You have to analyze what Chicago is first. They've been through all those things. They've been through it and they know they have a great team. They saw the way we played the first game and they knew they could annihilate us because of the way we played in the first game."

And that's exactly what Chicago did, jumping out to a double-digit lead in the second quarter and maintaining it almost the entire way through. Jordan was at his best, scoring 38 points with 13 rebounds, nine assists and one of the most memorable drives to the basket of his career.

It came in the second quarter when he drove to his right and streaked past three Utah players before finishing with a left-handed reverse layup.

"When things weren't going well we stopped playing hard," center Greg Foster said. "We can't let Michael Jordan walk down the lane and get layups."

The Bulls scored 38 points on layups and tip-ins and outrebounded Utah 41-35. Sloan placed much of the blame on centers Greg Ostertag, Antoine Carr and Foster, who have not yet blocked a shot in the series.

But there was more to it than a lack of blocked shots.

The Jazz were lifeless for most of the game, allowing Chicago's defensive intensity and Jordan's hot hand set the tone for the way the game would be played.

Malone shot just 6-for-20 from the field and he had trouble scoring when the Bulls used center Luc Longley to guard him. Chicago also collapsed on John Stockton whenever he penetrated the lane, and the Bulls dared youngsters Bryon Russell and Shandon Anderson to beat them.

None were up to the challenge, and Sloan even admitted afterward his team was intimidated.

"I don't know if intimidated was the right word. It looks like the right word because we never knocked them down. Maybe we were too nice, but whatever word you use we weren't physical enough," Jeff Hornacek said. "I don't know if the guards can do much about it, the bigger guys have to knock someone to the floor and do a little more banging."

Maybe the best hope left for the Jazz is that they have been nearly unbeatable at home. Utah is 8-0 on its homecourt during the playoffs and carries a 21-game winning streak into Friday night's game.

The arena is one of the loudest, if not THE loudest, in the NBA. And the Jazz have lost only three home games all season — the same number of losses the Bulls have had in Chicago.

"It doesn't win anything for you, but it helps," Stockton said.

The Jazz might have to play without Anderson, whose father, Willie, died Wednesday. Anderson flew to Atlanta on Thursday to be with his family and Sloan said he had no idea whether Anderson would return for Game 3. If he misses the game, Chris Morris will take over his minutes.

One other problem for the Jazz is the shooting hand of Malone.

A floor burn tore the skin from his palm during the Western Conference finals, and the wound has remained open — and sometimes bleeding during games — ever since.

"If we lose this game, I admit it will be pretty bleak," Malone said.

FRENCH: Hingis goes for second straight major

by a brilliant, sharply angled forehand by Hingis that swerved off the court before Seles could get near it.

Both players looked tired as the set wore on.

"I didn't feel in good shape anymore," Hingis said. "I was almost shaking because I didn't want to lose."

Hingis was broken serving for the match the first time. But she didn't waste the second chance. On her second match point, after Seles offered a high, tricky shot, Hingis took her time and hit a delicately placed backhand cross-court winner, winning in 2 hours, 18 minutes.

Seles finished with 71 unforced errors to 50 for Hingis.

"I don't have the strength and intensity of the strokes that I used to have," Seles said. "I'm missing way too many shots that before would just go in."

BELMONT: Charm chasing history

(From 1C)

because of injury). It was an East vs. West kind of thing. But I never felt a rivalry with Free House."

McCaffer said she understood how Baffert felt, but also said, "I think the horses think it's a rivalry. They look at each other and say, 'Oh, it's you again.'"

The two California-based colts battled each other on the Santa Anita road to the Triple Crown races while Captain Bodgit took the Florida-New York path.

In their five meetings, the only time either finished worse than second was when Free House was third in the Derby. Silver Charm beat Free House by 1 3/4 lengths in the seven-furlong San Vicente, and Free House won by three-quarters of a length in the San Felipe and by a head in the Santa Anita Derby before the 1 1/4-mile Kentucky Derby and the 1 3-16-mile Preakness.

Should Silver Charm win again, he would earn a $5 million bonus from Visa, the Triple Crown sponsor, and $432,600 from the Belmont's $721,000 purse. He earned $700,000 in the Derby and $488,150 in the Preakness. A success in the Belmont would mean the colt would have earned $6,620,750 from three races in five weeks.

Silver Charm is owned by Bob and Beverly Lewis, who chartered a plane that carried 110 of the horse's boosters to New York on Wednesday. Eighteen limousines were counted in the Belmont stable area Thursday morning.

The Belmont, however, doesn't shape up as just a two-horse race.

"It should be a very competitive race," Gonzalez said. "I think three or four horses should be pretty close for the first mile. We're to be right there. He (Free House) has natural speed. Wild Rush has speed and Silver Charm won't be far back."

Touch Gold also should be on the pace.

What that pace will be is one of the intriguing questions. Should it be an honest one, stretch-running Crypto Star could be right there at the end.

Touch Gold, owned by Frank Stronach and Janice and Robert McNair and trained by David Hofmans, went to his knees at the start of the Preakness. He fell far back but finished fourth, only 1 1/2 lengths behind Silver Charm.

Wild Rush, owned by Stronach and trained by Dick Mandella, has won four of five career starts, including a wire-to-wire victory in the Illinois Derby on May 10.

Touch Gold, winner of three of seven career starts, including two of three this year, will race with a patch on a quarter crack in his left front hoof that developed after the stumbling Preakness start.

Hofmans said the colt is fine.

"I would like to be head to head with him (Silver Charm) coming down the stretch," Hofmans said. "My horse is like Silver Charm. When he gets in front, he's hard to pass."

As for Wild Rush, Mandella said: "I'm not a bettor, but I think he's coming into himself for this race. There's some beauty in being a little fresher, but we won't know how much until Saturday night."

Crypto Star, winner of the Louisiana and Arkansas derbies, finished fifth in the Kentucky Derby after being 10th with a quarter-mile remaining.

Mr. Energizer, a Texas-bred colt, will be making his U.S. debut after racing 10 times in Panama and winning his last six this year.

Irish Silence is the only Belmont starter to have raced at Belmont Park, finishing eighth in the Champagne on Oct. 5. He has won two of eight career starts, with both wins coming in five starts against New York-breds.

The field in post-position order: Touch Gold, Chris McCarron; Silver Charm, Gary Stevens; Crypto Star, Pat Day; Wild Rush, Jerry Bailey; Mr. Energizer, Manuel Ortega; Free House, Kent Desormeaux; and Irish Silence, John Velazquez.

POLO: Chapman is national champion

States Polo Association's National Indoor Collegiate Championship. A&M defeated Cornell in the finals, 27-14, on April 12 to finish a perfect 12-0 season to go with its No. 1 national ranking.

The Aggies went into the national tournament ranked No. 1, thus drawing a first round bye at the Upchurch arena in Burleson. They then defeated Colorado State in the second round to earn the right to face Cornell in the finals.

"We had beaten Cornell twice in practice games in the fall," Chapman said.

For A&M, and for Chapman, it was a second consecutive national polo championship. And this one was sweeter for Chapman than the first.

"We had a great player in Shane Coventry last year, and when he graduated, everyone expected us to fall apart," Chapman said. "Actually, we beat teams by bigger margins this year than we did last year. A&M has won national titles in polo for four straight years. The women won in 1994 and '95 and now the men have won two straight."

But playing polo at the college level can be difficult. The A&M team held many of its practice sessions on weekends in Fort Worth.

"We have an arena at A&M, but it's more for rodeo than polo, so we would go to Fort Worth and practice in an arena there," Chapman said.

It cost around $25,000 to keep the team on the field of play and much of that money came from a fund raiser in Houston where the A&M team beat the host Houston Polo Club team in an exhibition game.

"That's where we got most of our money," Chapman said. "Feeding the animals is the greatest expense, about $12,000 a year. One guy has agreed to provide the feed for the team for next year."

Joining Chapman in the starting roles were Kevin Coventry, from Zambia, Africa, and a cousin of last year's star player Shane Coventry; and Greg Ford of Potomac, Md. The alternate was Adair Seager of Plains, Va.

Chapmans and Coventrys have been the stock of recent A&M polo teams. Scotty's brother, Jimmy, played polo at A&M from 1991 to 1994, winning the title of Intercollegiate Player of the Year in 1994. Then there were the two high-scoring Coventry brothers from Zambia — and another Coventry is on the way to A&M.

Chapman's college polo days are over, but he is headed for a reunion with the Coventry clan on July 9 when he heads for Zambia.

"I'm not really going to Africa for polo, but I think they have some tournaments lined up while I'm there. I'll be over there until Aug. 26 before coming back and finishing up school in December."

Although Scotty and Jimmy never played together as teammates, the younger brother's interest in polo was heightened by the older.

"I played some polo when I was in high school, but I never took it very serious," Chapman, a 1993 Midland Lee grad, said. "Watching Jimmy play when I was a freshman got me interested again. I guess I could have played with Jimmy when I was a freshman, but I didn't get interested until that year. I was the alternate both my sophomore and junior years."

There is one other brother in the Chapman family. Gary Chapman, the oldest of the three, also graduated from A&M, but he didn't play polo.

"We got Gary on a horse once and he could really drive the ball — when the horse was standing still. It was another story, however, when the horse started moving. Gary isn't going the same direction as the horses."

Scotty and Jimmy missed that natural brother rivalry by not ever being teammates, but rivalry is there just the same.

"Jimmy was the player of the year in 1994, but I got one up on him in the national championship category," Scotty said.

So, you can bet that at least one person has heard about the national polo championship.

Opening lead: Three of ♡

This deal is from the recent Spring North American Championships. In one room, with East-West silent, North-South comfortably bid to the small slam in clubs, losing only one trick to the ace of hearts.

The bidding was far more vigorous at the other table. First, East made a weak jump overcall of two hearts that most would never consider. Then West increased the preempt by leaping to five hearts when South introduced a new suit. That left North-South guessing about the quality of the minor suits at the six-level! South had no idea that North's suit was good enough to play opposite a singleton, but the diamonds appeared solid enough, so South corrected to six diamonds. That ended the auction in the second-best slam.

With diamonds breaking 3-2, it might seem that the diamond slam should also succeed after a heart lead. However, sitting East was Kit Woolsey of Kensington, Calif. and it did not take long for the defender to prove that was not the case. Woolsey won the first trick with the ace of hearts and immediately fired back a club, effectively cutting declarer's communications. South did as well as possible by winning in dummy and trying to cash another club, discarding a spade from hand, but the contract was beyond saving when West ruffed, and declarer ended up down two.

Oprah says she's not planning on coming out of a closet she's not in

CHICAGO — Oprah Winfrey says she couldn't come out of the closet if she wanted to — she's not in one.

"I'm not coming out. I'm not gay. I have nowhere to go, nowhere to come out to," the talk show host said Wednesday in a speech to TV promotion and marketing executives.

Winfrey, who is single and is the star of the highest-rated daytime talk show in TV history, has a longtime boyfriend, businessman Steadman Graham.

She said the rumors have been circulating since she appeared on the episode of "Ellen" in which the main character announced she was a lesbian.

Fanning the story was an April 28 report by gossip columnist Liz Smith that "one of the biggest and longest-running TV stars is contemplating coming out of the closet."

Winfrey said it isn't her.

"I am not in the closet. I am not coming out of the closet," she said in a statement.

LOS ANGELES — "Should I fly to Los Angeles?" the band Bush asks in the hit song "Everything Zen."

The answer was a definite "Yes!" for an unsuspecting audience, winners of a contest to attend a concert by a surprise performer.

The winners of Miller Brewing Co.'s "MGD Blind Date" contest were flown and bused in from around the country to see what they were told only was one of "the world's hottest rock bands."

Smiles and shrieks greeted Bush when the curtain finally parted at the Palace in Hollywood.

"We're the big secret," lead singer Gavin Rossdale told the crowd of 600. Laughing, he added: "Someone told me Tina Turner was playing."

Stephanie Fricker of Las Vegas was pleasantly surprised.

"We guessed Motley Crue," she said.

SOMERVILLE, N.J. — Former tennis star Roscoe Tanner pleaded guilty to failing to pay child support, though he keeps trying to prove the 3-year-old girl in question isn't his daughter.

Tanner, 45, claims he never met Connie Romano and therefore never fathered her daughter, Omega Anne. Still, the Georgia tennis pro agreed in July 1995 to pay Romano a lump sum of $500,000 in child support.

Romano, a former New Jersey resident, said she had an affair with Tanner in May 1993.

Tanner paid her $10,000, but said he couldn't pay the rest when a real estate deal fell through. In January 1996, Romano won a $1,000-a-week settlement, which Tanner never paid. He was arrested in March.

He agreed to pay $8,000 in child support, signing over a mortgage on his house in Georgia.

As part of Wednesday's guilty plea agreement, Tanner will serve a probationary-type sentence and later can apply to have his record cleared. Superior Court Judge Thomas H. Dilts reduced his weekly support payments from $1,000 to $310.

Last week, Dilts also granted Tanner additional DNA tests to determine whether he is Omega Anne's father. Tanner claims 1994 tests that indicated he was the father were flawed.

INDIANAPOLIS — Tom Arnold swiped a line from another Arnold — Schwarzenegger — as he promoted the upcoming opening of yet another Planet Hollywood restaurant.

Tom Arnold promoted the opening of another Planet Hollywood.

The restaurant opening June 30 is part of a chain owned by stars including Schwarzenegger, who regularly turns out for openings of the eateries. The other Arnold, comedian and ex-husband of Roseanne, plans to come too.

"I'll be back, for sure," Arnold said Wednesday.

"But that's Arnold's line, 'I'll be back.' He always says that, 'I'll be back.' He came to a party at my house last weekend, and a guy gave him a piece of pizza and he said, 'I'll be back.' He's got a problem with that."

ARLINGTON, Va. — Marv Albert agreed to provide hair and blood samples to authorities investigating charges that he bit and sexually assaulted a woman in February.

Commonwealth's Attorney Richard E. Trodden said an order outlining the agreement was filed Wednesday in Arlington County Circuit Court. Trodden said the agreement did not cover any dental records, which experts could compare with the bite marks left on the woman.

Albert, NBC's lead announcer for National Basketball Association games, was indicted last month on charges of forcible sodomy and assault. A Vienna, Va., woman told police that Albert bit her repeatedly on the back and forced her to perform oral sex in his room at the Ritz-Carlton early on the morning of Feb. 12.

Albert has not formally entered a plea in the case, but he has denied any wrongdoing. The trial is set for Sept. 22.

HOW TO READ THE MARKET IN REVIEW

Here are the 1,675 most active stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, 925 most active on the Nasdaq National Market and 405 most active on the American Stock Exchange. Stocks in bold are worth at least $5 and changed 5 percent or more in price. Underlining for 50 most active on NYSE and Nasdaq and 25 most active on Amex. Tables show name, price and net change, and one to two additional fields rotated through the week, as follows:

Name: Stocks appear alphabetically by the company's full name (not its abbreviation). Names consisting of initials appear at the beginning of each letter's list.
Last: Price stock was trading at when exchange closed for the day.
Chg: Loss or gain for the day. No change indicated by ...
YTD: Percent change in price since December 31.
How to use: The year-to-date percent change compares the most recent price with the company's price as of Dec. 31. The number is a good way to compare and track the performance of different companies in the same industry or the same town.

Benchmarks are important in investing and the year-to-date percent change can be a useful field of information when used as a benchmark. If you were considering investing in the automotive industry, for example, you could watch to see which auto stock was enjoying the best performance so far this year by looking at this field.

These numbers can be helpful in following stocks but as with all financial data are only one of many factors to use in determining how to invest. Consult your financial advisor before making any investment decision.

Stock Footnotes: cc – PE greater than 99. dd – Loss in last 12 mos. d – New 52-wk low during trading day. g – Dividend in Canadian $. Stock price in U.S. $. n – New issue in past 52 weeks. s – Split or stock dividend of 25 percent or more in last 52 weeks. ### Prices sink

NEW YORK — Crude oil futures dipped below $20 a barrel Thursday for the first time since early May in a continuing retreat prompted by perceptions of ample supply and little demand.

Crude oil for delivery in July settled at $19.66 per barrel, down 46 cents at the New York Mercantile Exchange. That marks the lowest since May 7.

The U.N. Security Council approval of another six-month term for Iraq to export oil to Western nations has weighed heavily on the market. Under the U.N. program, approved Wednesday, Iraq can sell limited amounts of oil to buy food and medicine for its citizens. Economic sanctions were imposed on Iraq after its 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

Also weighing on the oil market are industry figures that revealed rising crude and gasoline inventories at the beginning of the peak summer driving season, when they should be falling.

Reports of heavy imports from West Africa also pressured the market.

Unleaded gasoline for delivery in July settled at 59.82 cents a gallon, down 0.60 cent. Home heating oil for July delivery settled at 53.32 cents a gallon, down 0.84 cent.

Natural gas prices were higher, with contracts for delivery in July settling at $2.177 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 2.0 cents.

Dollar steady

NEW YORK — The dollar fell against the yen Thursday on hints that Japan's economy is strengthening, but the U.S. currency ended fairly steady in most other foreign-exchange dealings ahead of the May unemployment report.

In New York, the dollar cost 115.72 yen, down from 116.25 yen Wednesday. The dollar cost 1.7288 marks, down marginally from 1.7292. The pound cost $1.6351, up from $1.6324.

Other late-dollar rates in New York compared with late Wednesday: 1.4465 Swiss francs, up from 1.4453; 5.8300 French francs, down from 5.8330; 1,700.70 Italian lire, up from 1,697.50; 1.3766 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3757.

Dow rebounds

NEW YORK — Technology shares showed signs of strength after two losing days, but the overall market gave back more than half of Thursday's gains on profit-taking ahead of Friday's key employment report.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 35.63 to 7,305.29. The blue-chip barometer had gained as much as 82 points, moving within 32 points of a new high before pulling back.

Other leading stock indicators also retreated from more sizable gains, although the broad market held up better than the blue-chip sector.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by a 3-to-2 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume was a modest 452.62 million shares, down slightly from Wednesday's pace.

The Standard & Poor's 500-stock list rose 3.32 to 843.43, and the NYSE composite index rose 1.46 to 441.64. Both measures flirted with record highs before the afternoon wave of profit-taking.

The Nasdaq composite index rose 10.38 to 1,390.05 as several bellwether technology shares ended a two-day slump spurred by profit worries.

Panel would remove IRS from Treasury

■ Congressional panel studying overhaul of IRS recommends forming board of directors.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — After a year of hearings, a congressional commission recommended Thursday transferring oversight of the Internal Revenue Service from the Treasury Department to what would be a new board of directors.

"The reason we need to make this fairly dramatic step of truly shaking things up at the IRS and putting new management in place is because of this historical problem with the Treasury Department not giving adequate focus and expertise," the panel's chairman, Rep. Rob Portman, R-Ohio, told reporters.

The IRS is one of several agencies supervised by the Treasury Department.

The National Commission on Restructuring the IRS also proposed ways to simplify the tax code and better co-ordinate congressional oversight of the agency.

The commission's other co-chairman, Sen. Bob Kerrey, D-Neb., said the recommendations will be put into a bill within a month and hopefully will serve as the vehicle to "reform the IRS for the first time in 40 years."

Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin defended his agency's oversight and rejected the key recommendation. He called the proposal for a new seven-member board "substantially flawed."

"Running a public-sector organization is a very different exercise from running a private-sector organization," Rubin said, citing the IRS' major law enforcement role. "I think there are inherent conflicts of interest, both real and apparent, in having a law enforcement function report to the private sector."

The conflicting remarks by Rubin and Portman set the stage for a possible legislative confrontation later this year as the commission tries get Congress to enact its plan into law.

But there's little disagreement on the need to reform the IRS, which has mishandled a $3.4 billion computer modernization and suffers from such serious management flaws that the General Accounting Office considers the agency at "high risk" and keeps it under intense scrutiny.

"We believe in a culture of change at the IRS," Rubin said.

Kerrey said the panel would have the Treasury Department continue to handle tax policy, but place operational chores under the wing of the new board of directors, all appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate. The board would hire the IRS commissioner, approve the budget and design long-term plans, such as computer modernization.

"They will have power to make decisions on what the IRS is doing," Kerrey said.

The board's power over IRS purse strings bothered Rubin.

"This governing board is going to control the budget so they're going to make decisions on how much money is allocated to various enforcement activities," Rubin said.

The commission also recommended proposed bringing together the leaders of the seven congressional committees that now oversee the IRS into a new organization that would coordinate long-term issues with the agency's new board.

Kerrey said the panel voted 12-5 for the recommendations, which will be formally released later this month.

Kerrey recognized the board of directors will be a lightning rod of criticism, but dismissed Treasury Department criticism that the plan would undermine how the IRS administers tax policy. The Treasury has proposed its own IRS reform initiatives, but it doesn't propose giving power to outside experts.

NYSE votes to convert to decimals

■ Exchange first in U.S. to change from 200-year tradition of trading in fractions of dollars to pennies.

N.Y. Times News Service

New York — The New York Stock Exchange said it plans to quote stock prices in pennies by January 2000, in a move intended to give investors the best available prices.

In the meantime, later this month the world's biggest stock exchange will change the standard increment in which shares are traded to sixteenths of a dollar from eighths, pending approval by the Securities and Exchange Commission. The decisions were made Thursday by NYSE's board.

"The exchange saw the handwriting on the wall," said John Coffee, a securities law professor at Columbia University. "They initially resisted this, but with every other market going to sixteenths, and the Nasdaq studying decimals, there was a great deal of pressure and momentum."

The Big Board's move to sixteenths follows actions by rivals such as the Nasdaq Stock Market, the American Stock Exchange, the Philadelphia Stock Exchange. Quoting in sixteenths is expected to narrow the "spread" — the difference between the prices at which stocks are bought and sold. One Congressman said the move could save U.S. investors as much as $4 billion a year.

The NYSE will be the first U.S. stock market to announce an end to the 200-year-old practice of trading shares in fractions of a dollar.

The Big Board was prodded by regulators and lawmakers and finally forced by competitive pressures to adopt trading in sixteenths or risk losing trade volume to rivals, investors and analysts said.

"They're not doing this with any enthusiasm," said Seth Glickenhaus at Glickenhaus & Co., which manages $5 billion.

The NYSE said its trading systems will be prepared for decimal trading in less than a year. It plans to begin trading in decimals as soon as securities firms' computer systems are ready. The Big Board said the industry should be prepared to convert to decimals by January 2000 and plans to create a committee of executives to assist firms in making the change.

"Decimals will be a key step toward a more global NYSE and prices more easily understood by individual investors," said NYSE Chairman Richard Grasso in a statement. "The move to sixteenths will ensure that the NYSE continues to provide investors with the best possible prices," Grasso said.

NYSE President William Johnston has estimated that converting to decimals will cost stock markets and brokerages a total of hundreds of millions of dollars to adjust their software.

Jobless claims take unexpected jump

■ Analysts had expected decline, say economy continues to create jobs.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The number of American workers filing first-time claims for jobless benefits unexpectedly shot up by 19,000 last week to the highest level in a month despite a holiday-shortened work week.

The Labor Department said Thursday that new applications for unemployment insurance totaled a seasonally adjusted 337,000, up from a revised 318,000 a week earlier.

It was the highest since 348,000 during the week ended May 3 when the effects of auto strikes rippled through the industry. Claims for the week ended May 24 initially were estimated at 322,000.

Investors were encouraged by the report. They interpreted it as suggesting the monthly unemployment report due Friday would not signal a spurt in inflationary pressures calling for higher interest rates to slow the economy.

Many analysts had expected a decline of about 2,000 last week, due partly to the Memorial Day holiday that cut the number of days available to file claims.

Still, analysts contend the economy continues to create jobs. Some said the weather, including a deadly tornado in Texas, caused some temporary layoffs last week.

In fact, many analysts expect the department to report on Friday that employers added about 233,000 workers to their payrolls in May, even though the unemployment rate may have inched up to 5 percent from 4.9 percent a month earlier. The April rate was the lowest since a similar posting in December 1973.

The four-week moving average of new weekly jobless claims fell by 2,750 to 323,750, lowest since 321,750 during the period ended April 19. Many analysts prefer to track the less-volatile four-week average because it smooths out the spikes in the weekly reports.

During the week ended May 24, 29 states and territories reported increases and 24 registered declines. The state data is reported a week later than the national totals.

States with the largest gains were Wisconsin, 1,061; North Carolina, 1,037; Georgia, 1,021; Arkansas, 983, and Alabama, 889.

The biggest decreases were in Ohio, 1,903; Louisiana, 1,876; Kentucky, 1,849; Tennessee, 1,425, and Puerto Rico, 862.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Various issues play into decision on second home

By Eric Tyson

Q: We are a retired couple in our early 60s. Our annual income from pensions and Social Security is about $55,000, and we receive about $9,000 per year from our investments. In addition to retirement investments and our home, which we own free and clear of a mortgage, we also own a second home.

Tyson

We have been treating the second home as an investment. It has a mortgage of $125,000 and, after rental income, costs us out-of-pocket about $5,000 per year.

Do we appear in decent shape for the future? Also, should we sell our second home or should we pay down some of its mortgage debt?

A: Most people would be happy to have as much money to live on annually as you are enjoying. However, I don't know what your expectations and goals are for your standard of living throughout your retirement.

You should do some analysis to discern where you stand and how much money you can comfortably live on per year.

Among my favorite retirement-planning guides for folks such as yourselves are T. Rowe Price's Retirees Financial Guide workbooklet and Vanguard's Retirement Manager Software. Both helpful resources allow you to make some reasonable assumptions about your retirement investing and to determine what you can expect to live on per year.

When deciding what to do with the second home, you should weigh a number of issues. I'm assuming you get some personal use and value from the property. You also seem able to offset much of the property's expenses by renting it part of the time. However, you are still losing about $5,000 per year on it.

The retirement analysis should help you understand if you can afford to continue with such losses. If not, then perhaps you can find a way to rent the property more of the time.

Also, take into account the hassle factor: How much work is it for you to maintain the property and find and deal with renters? If you expect to be traveling more now that you're retired, renting and maintaining the property might become more burdensome.

You also should consider the property's appreciation potential. Is it located in an area with increasing demand for housing?

Are housing prices in line with the costs of renting? To determine that, compare the after-tax monthly cost of the home — to a new home buyer — to the monthly cost of her renting it.

If you do decide to hold onto your property, it would be a good idea to pay down some of the mortgage balance with extra cash. At your age, you're unlikely to be willing to take great enough risks with your investments to produce high enough returns to beat the interest cost on the mortgage.

Q: My question regards municipal bonds issued by my state. Are such bonds available to the general public?

A: When bonds are issued, they generally are distributed through various investment firms. You can purchase the bonds through retail brokerage firms that deal in such securities, or you can buy into a diversified portfolio of such bonds through a mutual fund company.

I prefer the mutual fund route for purposes of diversification and ongoing professional oversight of the bonds' credit quality.

Mutual fund companies offering low-cost, quality municipal bond funds include Fidelity's Spartan funds, USAA and the Vanguard Group.
