Sandinistas suffer stunning upset

Returns indicate Chamorro victorious

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Opposition leader Violeta Barrios de Chamorro defeated President Daniel Ortega in a stunning rebuke to 10 years of leftist Sandinista rule in this war-weary nation, election returns showed today.

Sunday's peaceful balloting — the freest elections in Nicaraguan history — was closely watched by thousands of international observers and, with more than half of the vote in, Mrs. Chamorro was winning nearly 55 percent.

Ortega, 44, stopped short of formally conceding, but said in a television appearance: "These numbers and these percentages form a tendency that cannot be ignored."

He said the precincts that had not yet reported held 50 percent of the vote, but admitted a Sandinista victory would "break mathematical rules."

"I want to tell all Nicaraguans and all the nations of the world, that the president of Nicaragua, and the government, will respect and accept the popular mandate," Ortega added.

The Sandinistas remain by far the largest single party — the United Nationalist Opposition Mrs. Chamorro heads is a fractious alliance of 14 parties ranging from far right to far left — and it was unclear how power would be transferred.

Defense Minister Humberto Ortega, the president's brother, has said that if Mrs. Chamorro won, "she would still have to deal with me," and that the army might disobey orders it considered unsound.

Whether he commands that kind of loyalty remains to be seen. UNO has said it will eliminate the draft and greatly reduce the size of the army, the largest in Central America.

Another question is how UNO, whose members' only common interest was getting rid of the Sandinistas, could form a government strong enough to stand up to the Sandinista bureaucracy.

Ortega had branded Mrs. Chamorro, the 60-year-old publisher of the opposition newspaper La Prensa, an instrument of U.S. policy and had hoped to capitalize on Nicaraguan pride at standing up to the colossus of the North.

But the voters rejected Ortega's one-party rule, which led to economic decline that the Sandinistas blamed on the U.S.-supported Contra insurgency and a U.S. trade embargo.

"The Nicaraguan people have shown that they want to live in democracy, in peace and in freedom," Mrs. Chamorro told more than 1,000 cheering supporters. If her victory is confirmed, she will take office on April 25.

In Washington, President Bush hailed the upset victory in Nicaragua as "another victory" for democracy in a remarkable year.

Some disputing gubernatorial poll

DALLAS (AP) — Longshot candidates for governor disputed results of a poll for two Texas newspapers that found them virtually out of the race.

The poll for Sunday's editions of the Houston Chronicle and The Dallas Morning News showed former Gov. Mark White locked with State Treasurer Ann Richards in the Democratic field and Midland businessman Clayton Williams leading Republican contenders.

The poll also found most down-ballot races, such as for attorney general, state comptroller and state treasurer, are still up in the air.

White moved slightly ahead of Ms. Richards, who led in January. Among likely Democratic voters, White had 34 percent, Ms. Richards had 31 percent and Attorney General Jim Mattox had 17 percent.

Mattox said the poll was faulty. "Anybody that believes Mark White is in the lead needs to be carted off to an institution because they are dangerous to themselves," he said.

Mattox said a survey by a Washington D.C. pollster showed him leading among likely Democratic voters.

Williams has support from 45 percent of likely GOP voters, the poll said. But other Republican contenders said their surveys showed Williams with a smaller lead.

Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance was the choice of 22 percent surveyed. Former Secretary of State Jack Rains had eight percent and Dallas lawyer Tom Luce had seven percent, according to the poll.

Phyllis Spittler, a spokeswoman for Rains' campaign, said surveys for his campaign indicated, "We're within striking distance of a runoff and we believe we are going to make it."

A poll by the Luce campaign found support for Williams to be "soft," said spokeswoman Lisa LeMaster.

In down-ballot races, the poll found that Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower was likely to win the Democratic nomination for re-election. It also found Democrat Nikki Van Hightower and Republican Kay Bailey Hutchison are favorites to win nominations to replace Ms. Richards in the treasurer's post.

But no leaders can be discerned from the other races because there are so many undecided voters, the poll found. In the attorney general's race, 60 percent of Democratic voters and nearly 70 percent of Republican voters say they're not sure who they will support.

The survey for the newspapers was conducted Feb. 18-20 by the Public Policy Center at the University of Houston and has a margin of error of 5.5 percentage points.

Despite 'danger,' recession may be avoided

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy is in "a danger zone" but will avoid a recession in the next three years, according to a survey of the nation's top business economists released today that found little hope of ending inflation.

The survey by the National Association of Business Economists found 60.6 percent of the professional forecasters believing the economy will skirt a recession through 1992, nearly the same as the 62.1 percent making the same prediction in the last survey released in December.

NABE President James F. Smith said the biggest news in the survey is its confirmation of the "sea change" of optimism among the participants in December. A NABE survey last May found 63 percent of the economists expecting a recession this year.

"There was some trepidation that was a fluke," Smith said at a news conference called to release the new

Nation's 'safest' teen driver killed in head-on collision

HENNIKER, N.H. (AP) — A youth driving a car he won for being named the nation's safest teen-age driver may have fallen asleep at the wheel before he and another driver were killed in a two-car accident, police said.

A car driven by Michael Doucette, 17, of Concord, drifted over the center line and slammed into one being driven by Sharon Ann Link, 19, of Lebanon, according to police reports.

Both were pronounced dead at the scene Friday evening.

Police said it appeared Link may have tried to swerve out of the way before the collision in the extreme right side of her lane.

Last July, Doucette won the safe driving title in a contest called "Operation Driver Excellence," sponsored by Dodge and AMVETS, a veterans' group.

He won a $5,000 scholarship, a trophy and the use for a year of an 1989 Dodge — the car he was driving Friday.

Doucette, driving the winning car, was one of the attractions in a New Year's Eve parade down Concord's Main Street.

Concord High School Principal Charles Foley was shaken by the news. "He was just a fine kid from a good family," Foley said.

Man in New Zealand to reclaim daughter

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — The father of a 7-year-old American girl whose mother was jailed for 25 months for refusing to disclose her whereabouts arrived today to press on with the couple's highly publicized custody battle.

The mother of Hilary Foretich, who claims her ex-husband sexually abused the child, accused him of hunting down their daughter like "an animal."

Dr. Eric Foretich denies he abused the child. Last week, the Falls Church, Va. dental surgeon traced his daughter to New Zealand, where she has been living with her maternal grandparents.

Dr. Jean Elizabeth Morgan was released from jail in September after Congress passed a law tailored for her that limited civil contempt imprisonment in Washington, D.C. to a year.

"My daughter deserves to come back and have a normal life," Foretich, 45, said today.

After arriving in the northern city of Auckland, he immediately went to meet his New Zealand lawyers to discuss the next step of action: "Certainly we're going to do what we need to do to rescue my daughter."

Aided by private investigators, Foretich found that Hilary was living in the South Island town of Christchurch, 190 miles southwest of Wellington.

The Family Court in Christchurch granted an interim order Friday giving the grandparents custody of the girl, and today William Morgan, the child's grandfather, vowed to call police if the father approached the girl.

Hilary on Sunday spoke to her mother for the first time in two years and cried, said her maternal grandmother Antonia Morgan.

Dr. Morgan, a 42-year-old plastic surgeon in Washington, was jailed in August 1987 for refusing to say where her daughter was despite a U.S.

Fair skies, low in mid-40s likely

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies will be fair tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, with the low in the middle 40s and winds out of the southwest at 10-15 mph.

Increasing cloudiness is expected for Tuesday with a 20 percent chance of showers in the afternoon. The high will be in the lower 60s and winds will be from the southwest at 10-20 mph, becoming northeasterly by midday.

Sunday's high of 78 was five degrees cooler than the record high of 83 set for that date in 1989. The overnight low of 45 was 31 degrees warmer than the record low of 14 set for this date in 1934.

STATE

A south to southeast wind flow was responsible for bringing moisture back into Texas from the Gulf of Mexico.

The moist air had pushed dew points up into the 50s as far north as the central Brazos Valley and at Lufkin in the piney woods of East Texas. Patchy areas of fog had also formed around College Station.

Cold air and north winds continued to keep temperatures below the freezing mark over the Panhandle as a stationary frontal boundary stretched across the High Plains.

Skies were clear over parts of the middle Rio Grande plains, coastal region and across much of East Texas. Partly cloudy skies prevailed elsewhere.

Winds were blowing from the northwest across most of the Panhandle while south to southeast winds prevailed over the rest of the state. Wind speeds were generally 5 to 15 mph.

Temperatures were in the 20s and 30s in the Panhandle and over the mountainous southwest. The 40s and 50s were common over all but far South Texas where a few readings were in the 60s. The early morning extremes ranged from 28 degrees at Amarillo to 63 degrees at the Naval Air Station in Corpus Christi.

The forecast calls for increasing clouds over parts of North Texas tonight, otherwise fair to partly cloudy with a slight chance of showers over far West Texas and the Panhandle. Expect partly to mostly cloudy skies Tuesday with a slight chance of showers over parts of North and West Texas, and rain or snow possible in the northwest Panhandle.

Court leaves gay soldier ban intact

The court, without comment, rejected appeals by a woman denied re-enlistment in the Army Reserve in Wisconsin because she is a lesbian and a California man released from Navy active duty because he is gay.

The action today was not a ruling on the legality of the military ban but simply a summary rejection of the appeals. The justices did not preclude the possibility that in some future case they will agree to review the policy toward homosexuals.

In other actions, the Supreme Court:

■ Said it will decide whether a federal law that requires some losers of lawsuits to pay the winners' lawyer fees also covers fees for expert witnesses.

■ Refused to force the CIA to release its documents on the 1985 sinking of the Greenpeace ship Rainbow warrior by French government agents. The justices let stand rulings that the spy agency may withhold the documents from a Houston lawyer who is seeking them under the Freedom of Information Act.

■ Let stand the 15-year prison sentence and $6.6 million fine of a California businessman convicted of conspiracy and violating u.s. export restrictions by selling two airplanes to Libya.

Army Reserve Sgt. Miriam Ben-Shalom, 41, is stationed in Milwaukee and has been allowed to remain in the military pending the outcome of her appeal on the homosexuality issue.

Ms. Ben-Shalom joined the Army Reserve in 1974, and was discharged in 1976 because she is an acknowledged lesbian. The Army policy at the time barred anyone who "evidenced homosexual tendencies, desire or interest," even though never having engaged in any "overt homosexual acts."

A federal judge ordered Ms. Ben-Shalom reinstated, and she served out an enlistment that ended in August 1988.

She then was prohibited from re-enlisting under an amended Army regulation.

The new policy says, "Homosexuality is incompatible with military service," and bars "persons who engage in homosexual conduct or who by their statements demonstrate a propensity to engage in homosexual conduct."

The 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last August upheld the revised policy.

The appeals court, although acknowledging there never has been any complaint about Ms. Ben-Shalom's performance of her military duties, said the Army has acted to protect "morale, discipline and the effectiveness of our fighting forces."

Judges should not put the Army's interests at risk by imposing change "with possible consequences we cannot safely evaluate," the appeals court said.

James M. Woodward of Spring Valley, Calif., challenged the Navy's general ban on homosexuals.

He enlisted in 1972 for a six-year hitch in the Naval Flight Officer Candidate Program.

He was allowed to enter the Naval Reserve program even though he had answered "yes" to a questionnaire that asked whether he was sexually attracted to men or desired sex with men. Woodward answered "no" to a question whether he had ever engaged in homosexual conduct.

Woodward was serving in an air squadron stationed in the Philippines when in 1974 he was seen in the Subic Bay Officers' Club sitting with a sailor who was to be discharged for homosexual conduct.

The Navy generally bars homosexuals but has retained some.

When questioned by his commanding officer, Woodward acknowledged his homosexual tendencies. After Woodward refused to resign, the commanding officer recommended to the chief of naval personnel that Woodward be discharged.

Bush calls for 'peaceful transition' in Nicaragua

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush today hailed Violeta Chamorro's upset election in Nicaragua and called for "peaceful transition" to democratic rule. Administration officials said he would decide swiftly on lifting the economic sanctions that hindered the Sandinista regime.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III embraced Mrs. Chamarro's triumph and praised ousted Sandinista President Daniel Ortega for carrying out a fair election. He said he hoped the election would lead to a national reconciliation.

"For years the people of Nicaragua have suffered. And today the people of Nicaragua have spoken," the president said.

The president said he had talked with Venezualan President Carlos Andres Perez about "appropriate trade and economic measures that we can take to support the new government of Nicaragua."

Bush didn't address the issue of sanctions directly. But White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the president would decide "fairly soon" on whether to lift them, and there already were calls in Congress for the president to do just that.

The United States employed a variety of military, economic and political challenges to Ortega's Sandinistas over the past nine years and the sanctions were likely a factor in the weak Nicaraguan economy.

"We must provide her new government with aid, and let's not kid ourselves — it will take big bucks," said Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan. "She needs our help and she deserves it," he said of Mrs. Chamorro.

"Nobody said democracy was cheap," added Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Dante Fascell, D-Fla.

The trade embargo against the nation of 3 million was imposed by President Reagan on May 1, 1985. It bars imports from Nicaragua and bans U.S. exports to that country except to support the Contra rebels fighting the leftist Sandinista government. It also prohibits Nicaraguan aircraft or boats from entering the United States.

The challenge to Ortega was a controversial hallmark of the Reagan years, but last year Bush abandoned his military support of the Contra rebels.

In brief comments to the nation's governors gathered at the White House, Bush offered congratulations to Mrs. Chamorro on her victory and to Ortega for permitting the fair elections to be held.

He said there is "space in a democratic Nicaragua fort all political points of view."

He said there was "no reason at all for further military activity from any quarter and we hope the ceasefire will be reestablished without delay and respected by all sides."

ELECT

His spokesman said a lifting of economic sanctions would be a "first consideration."

Secretary of State James A. Baker III said the internati nal community would insist "full civil and military power be transferred to the newly elected government."

The Supreme Electoral Council said that with about 60 percent of precincts counted, Mrs. Chamorro had 459,655 votes, or 54.8 percent, to Ortega's 347,778, or 41.5 percent.

Ortega's speech was filled with sadness and seemed at times almost like a valediction, tracing the course of the Sandinista party from the time it led the revolution that toppled President Anastasio Somoza in 1979.

"Just as we managed to defeat Somocismo, so we also managed to defeat the counterrevolution and to indict before the world those who launched a policy of death against the people of Nicaragua," he said, referring to the United States.

"We were sure that this electoral process would bring all Nicaraguans that peace and stability we need so much," Ortega said.

At times Ortega looked pained and it seemed as if he simply could not bring himself to say flatly that the party had lost.

Flanked by top aides and his common-law wife, who looked pale and shaken, Ortega told Nicaraguans he was proud, in any case, that the Sandinistas had brought a democratic election to Nicaragua.

Aristides Sanchez, a Contra leader, called the election result "a triumph of the people.

"All Nicaraguans must now back the new government and attempt to achieve a national reconciliation," he said.

The United States ended military aid to the Contras in February 1988, but, at Bush's urging, Congress has continued to supply the ontras with non-lethal aid to pressure the Sandinistas into holding free elections.

Mrs. Chamorro was asked as she left her house for campaign headquarters if she thought a transfer of power after 10½ years of Sandinista rule would be smooth. "That's the commitment. We want peace and reconciliation."

As they battled the Contra rebels, the Sandinistas muzzled dissent for years. Most pre-election polls said Mrs. Chamorro was trailing Ortega, but many Nicaraguans were afraid to reveal their true feelings outside a truly secret ballot box.

Civil rights debate deepening

By MIKE ROBINSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Getting agreement in Washington on the need for a civil rights bill is proving almost ridiculously easy. But it's a little tougher to find an accord on what the measure should say.

"I don't believe we have to overhaul the American legal system to ensure equality," says Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah.

He and other conservatives say the sweeping proposal backed by the civil rights community to remedy workplace bias against minorities and women goes too far and needs to be limited in scope.

And yet, civil rights supporters say the Supreme Court itself overhauled much of the U.S. civil rights law last year in a series of rulings on job bias cases.

Civil rights forces say those decisions — from a Supreme Court whose conservatism deepened considerably in the Reagan era — represent the most severe setback in years for civil rights in the workplace. They say the bill they support would merely restore the previous legal standards.

The Supreme Court rulings came at a time when opinion polls show an easing of worry about civil rights among white Americans. And that may in part explain the bill's popularity on Capitol Hill.

It has gained broad sponsorship in both the House and Senate, including more than a smattering of Republicans.

Critics contend the measure is guaranteed to usher in racial hiring quotas, an idea that would be much harder to sell in Congress. But sponsors declare that nothing in the bill's language requires hiring quotas.

Almost everyone agrees change is needed. "I have no doubt that more needs to be done to combat the evil of discrimination in our society," says Hatch. As a senior member of the Senate Labor and Judiciary Committees, he could play a pivotal role in any eventual negotiations on the issue.

The Bush administration already is recommending a bill that would overturn two of last year's decisions. But that does not satisfy Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and other bill sponsors.

"The administration cannot stop there or its response will be inadequate," says Kennedy.

The administration and the bill sponsors agree that something must be done about the Supreme Court's decision in the so-called Patterson case.

The case concerns Brenda Patterson, a former credit union filing clerk from Winston-Salem, N.C. She said her bosses harassed her and discriminated against her for a decade because she was black.

"I was actually told to dust and sweep the office, even though we had a janitor every day and no white employees were ever told to do this," she said.

The court ruled that the alleged harassment and discrimination was not against the law and that a Civil War-era statute, under which she had brought suit, did not apply in the case. The reaction against the decision has been so overwhelming that it appears all but certain the law will be changed.

But other cases are more complex.

The Lorance case involves discrimination in company seniority plans. The Martin vs. Wilks decision focuses on court-approved fair-hiring agreements.

Civil rights forces and conservatives may be most at odds over whether changes are needed as a result of the Wards Cove case, which involved alleged hiring bias.

survey. "Fortunately, it wasn't."

Smith, a finance professor at the University of North Carolina, cautioned that "we have not repealed the business cycle and we will have a recession some day."

But, he added, "our members are confident ... that we will shatter all records for the U.S. economy with the current expansion. When we get to October 1991, we will tie the glory days of the 1960s and break the record of the 1961-1969 expansion."

"Most of the credit for this relatively confident outlook over the next three years is placed squarely on the shoulders of (Federal Reserve Chairman) Alan Greenspan and his colleagues on the Federal Open Market Committee" who formulate monetary policy, Smith said.

Still, nearly 46.2 percent of the 65 participants said the risk of an economic downturn increased in the fourth quarter of 1989 while only 21.5 percent said they believe the recession risk has decreased.

And, of the 39.4 percent who thought a recession would occur in the next three years, 18.1 percent believe it started in the last quarter or will begin sometime this year.

"Thus, even though the best guess is no recession in either the next 12 months or even as far ahead as three years, the economy is in a danger zone," the NABE survey concluded.

"The probability of recession is not trivial and almost 80 percent of respondents think it has risen or remained the same over the last quarter," it said.

At the same time, inflation is projected to be 4.2 percent in both 1990 and 1991, the survey found. Inflation as measured by the Consumer Price Index was 4.6 percent in 1989, up from 4.4 percent in both 1988 and 1987.

judge's ruling for the former husband's unsupervised access.

The couple separated before Hilary was born.

In an interview from the United States, Dr. Morgan accused her ex-husband of seeking publicity and said: "He has hunted her down like an animal. She does not want to see him, and he knows that."

Dr. Morgan's attorney, Stephen Sachs, said he would file papers in Washington today asking a superior court judge to return her passport so she can travel to New Zealand. She was forced to hand over the passport during the custody battle.

Prime Minister Geoffrey Palmer, noting intense U.S. media interest in the case, said it was for the family court in Christchurch, not his Labor government, to rule on the matter.

"The paramount consideration in those cases is one issue: the welfare of the child," Palmer said.

Palmer hinted that the family should not expect instant attention to appeals for residency while a report said that the girl would be reassessed by a psychiatrist to determine what effect the custody battle is having on her.

Hilary has spent the past two years in Christchurch, a famous cathedral town that is the staging post for "Operation Deepfreeze," as the U.S. activities in Antarctica are called.

Opposition National Party member Philip Burdon, voicing sympathy for the girl's mother, said that she chose to hide her daughter in New Zealand because it had a respected legal system and was an English-speaking country that the grandfather had visited before.

"We are not dealing with crackpots here," Burdon said. "I have little sympathy for the motivations of the father who had already separated from of the mother of his child before she was born."

Sexism runs rampant in South Africa

Women conditioned to accept sexual discrimination

EDITOR'S NOTE: In South Africa, feminism is viewed with suspicion as a foreign philosophy, even among many women. With racial discrimination the overriding social issue, sexist practices go unchecked in both white and black communities. There are few protests, for a variety of reasons.

By LAURINDA KEYS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — In a country where racial segregation is a way of life, most women in South Africa endure an additional, pervasive form of discrimination that draws little protest or publicity — sexism.

Black and white women experience and react to it differently, but most accept paternalism and restriction of their freedom as a routine part of life.

While attitudes toward women in South Africa may be no worse than in many Third World countries, South Africans like to point to the "First World standards" of their society. But their tolerance of male chauvinism, sexist treatment in the media, and the inferior legal status of women would provoke outrage in North America and most of Europe. Some examples:

■ John Bishop, the evening news announcer on government-run television, says, "Coming up next, acceptance by the South African Air Force of its first girls for pilot training."

■ The country's premier black actor, John Kani, gives a newspaper interview about being directed in "Othello" by actress Janet Suzman: "I am an African man, and, as such, I find it hard to take orders from a woman. But Janet is very wooing. She makes you feel well cared for."

■ Foreign Minister Pik Botha tells a heckler who opposes his politics: "I don't argue with pretty women. I do other things with them."

THE COMMENTS don't prompt letters to the editor, pickets, protests or calls for the minister's resignation as they might in many Western countries.

"The average South African woman doesn't notice that because she's conditioned to that kind of thing," says Sheena Duncan, a prominent member of several anti-apartheid organizations, including the Black Sash, a civil rights group founded by white women.

"There is so much to do, one gets tired. I'm not saying the struggle for black political liberty takes priority, but in practical terms, you have got only so much time and energy and skill to devote."

Anti-apartheid groups such as the African National Congress and the Congress of South African Trade Unions have anti-sexism clauses in their anti-racist constitutions.

But in practice, despite the examples of women who have marched, staged sit-ins, endured beatings, detention and assassinations, black men are no more shy than whites about ridiculing or patronizing women.

At last July's national convention of the mostly black Congress of South African Trade Unions, a resolution to condemn sexual harassment in unions was defeated amid comments that women brought such treatment on themselves and had contributed little to the labor movement.

EMMA MASHININI, 60, who founded one of the largest black unions, the Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers Union, says she's disappointed that no woman has been elected to the congress's executive committee.

Of the dozens of black and white officials and activists who had streamed to Victor Verster prison farm in Paarl to discuss the political future of South Africa with ANC leader Nelson Mandela, only a half-dozen have been women, including his relatives and old friends.

"It's very prestigious these days to say you have gone to see Mandela," Mashinini says. When she called the trade union congress to complain about the absence of women in the union delegation, a woman told her it was all right because Mandela had named those he wanted to see.

"The issue of sexism is totally subordinated to larger political questions in this country and women are allowing it," says Jo-Anne Collinge, a journalist who worked for many years at The Star, the nation's largest daily.

A beauty queen or some other young woman in a swimsuit or shorts is on the front page of most mainstream papers several times a week.

In news stories, women who have their own businesses or other accomplishments "are treated with a degree of frivolity. They're almost always referred to by their first name," says Ms. Collinge, 36. "The way she dresses, speaks, her size and coloring would be remarked on, whereas different characteristics would be highlighted in an article about a man."

Two white policewomen lead Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu away after clerics attempted to march on security police headquarters in Cape Town, South Africa, to protest against police action in the township last year. It was the first time female officers were used to quell a demonstration.

THE STAR carried this headline last June about Lt. Lettie Hugo, South Africa's first woman police station commander: "Petite Mother is Best Man for the Job."

Nokwanda Sithole, 25, a journalist who works for a black-oriented magazine, Tribute, says: "It is just up to us to say that the liberation of women should be an integral part of the national liberation struggle. We can't let men say, 'Wait until later.' What will make them pay attention to us then?

"Black men are taking part in our oppression and we can't really entrust our liberation to them."

A few years ago, few black women activists would discuss the subject of sexism in the liberation struggle. Many South African women are still suspicious of feminism as a foreign philosophy.

A woman as prominent as Helen Suzman, who spent 36 years fighting apartheid laws in Parliament, often as the only opposition voice, begins a conversation on the subject with the disclaimer, "I'm not a feminist."

"I myself have not made women's rights a major priority in my political career, simply because the really overriding issue in this country is racial discrimination," Mrs. Suzman says. But she worked for changes in the tax and marriage laws, which restricted women's rights to own property and control their own wages.

"UP UNTIL 1984, women were humiliated in terms of what they were not able to do without their husband's consent," she says.

Black women are still restricted by tribal customs, and all women have trouble conducting any business that requires them to sign a contract.

Since they gained the vote in 1930, fewer than 20 women have been in Parliament. Last year, President F.W. de Klerk appointed the first woman Cabinet member, Health Minister Rina Venter.

There are now seven women in a Parliament of more than 300 members, and one woman judge out of 130 in major courts. There are no black judges or members of Parliament.

Lydia Kompe, a Black Sash field worker, says women in isolated communities raise their children, grow the crops and tend the cattle, but behave like slaves when their husbands return home once a month from work in the cities. There is a stigma against a black woman who is divorced, even if the husband abused her and provided nothing for the household.

A common sight in South Africa, as on the rest of the continent, is a black woman with a huge package on her head, a heavy suitcase in her hand and a baby on her back, walking along with her husband, who carries nothing.

"THEY THEMSELVES accept that they are inferior. They have to obey men regardless of color. Their role is to serve," said Ms. Kompe, 54, the daughter of peasants.

A man forced to leave his family behind to find work in the city may get a girlfriend, or start a new family, and his wife will do anything to ensure that he keeps sending money.

"The men sometimes come home with their girlfriends and expect their wives to look after her," Ms. Kompe says. "If you say, 'Enough is enough,' then your parents will have to pay back the lobola (bride price) to him. Maybe they can't afford it, and you will be deprived of your children."

Most rural women see no solution. But even Ms. Sithole, an urban professional who is interested in feminism, expresses the common fear that women who stand up for themselves will not keep a man:

"Nobody really wants to be alone. So in our own homes, we are still scheming against being feminist."

Local power struggle leaves 2,500 blacks dead

By GREG MYRE

INANDA, South Africa (AP) — Bright, sunny days, lush green hills and streets full of laughing children belie this township's nights of blacks killing blacks in a struggle for power.

Most combatants are in their teens and early 20s, and their focus is largely on a local power struggle in South Africa's Natal province rather than national political issues.

Supporters of the United Democratic Front, a nationwide anti-apartheid coalition, and Inkatha, a relatively conservative Zulu group, have been killing one another at a furious pace since late 1986, leaving an estimated 2,500 dead in the province.

The United Democratic Front advocates sanctions, boycotts and strikes to put pressue on South Africa's white-led government and generally favors a socialist-oriented economy.

Inkatha is headed by Mangosuthu Buthelezi, leader of the self-governing KwaZulu homeland, who often is cited as the black leader most acceptable to white South Africans. He is a proponent of capitalism and maintains that sanctions harm blacks.

The violence, which began around the provincial capital of Pietermaritzburg, about 35 northwest of here, has spread across Natal and now is most intense in Inanda, about 10 miles northwest of the important port of Durban.

"There's no way to avoid the fighting. Everyone is involved," said Thulani Ncwane, 19, a supporter of the United Democratic Front. "Even if you are peaceful, you must defend your home against attack."

Ncwane's chin is scarred from a bullet wound. His younger brother was less fortunate; he was killed a year ago.

More than 160 blacks died in factional violence near Durban in December, the highest monthly toll yet, according to a monitoring group from the anti-apartheid Democratic Party. The second worst month was November, when 62 died.

In Inanda, a town of several hundred thousand people (it takes no census), rows of burned out houses sit incongruously on gently rolling hills. Frightened residents seek sanctuary in churches and the homes of their white employers and friends. Young men gather in small groups to patrol their neighborhoods through the night.

"The political temperature just keeps rising," said Roy Ainslie, head of the monitoring group. "The legal situation has collapsed and the leadership on both sides is not active in controlling its members."

Natal's conflict began heating up in 1987 as the rest of the country's black townships began cooling off after two years of nationwide turbulence.

Poverty, unemployment, overcrowding and lack of political rights all are cited as causes for the Natal violence, though the same conditions prevail elsewhere. What distinguishes Natal is that it is the one part of the country where two powerful black factions exist side by side.

Buthelezi, the KwaZulu leader, was long the major black political force in Natal. His Inkatha movement, which claims 1.5 million members, dominates rural areas.

But when the United Democratic Front was established in 1983, it won support from young, urban blacks who embraced the organization's aggressive anti-apartheid tactics and its alignment with the outlawed African National Congress guerrilla movement.

Militants consider Buthelezi a collaborator with the government because he participates in the homeland system. But the Zulu leader says he sees the tribal government an interim step on the road to black majority rule.

A government official who requested anonymity said surveys indicate Buthelezi has minimal support aside from his fellow Zulus, who account for about 7 million of South Africa's 28 million blacks.

"Black-on-black violence (has) become uglier and uglier and has now got about as ugly as it can get," Buthelezi told a sparsely attended rally in December in Soweto, the sprawling black township near Johannesburg, about 300 miles northwest of Inanda.

Both sides have called repeatedly for peace, but talks broke off in August. Both groups concede they have large numbers of young supporters they cannot control.

Frustrated residents have taken the law into their own hands, forming "defense committees" and "people's courts." One punishment handed down by informal courts is "nude modeling," whereby the accused is stripped and marched through township streets.

The most important feature I look for in a judge is honesty. This means more than being fair. A judge must faithfully adhere to the highest moral and ethical standards.

I like the fact that Nick Taylor has neither solicited nor accepted contributions from personal injury, plaintiff trial lawyers who have a direct interest in the outcome of litigation before the court. Nor has Nick solicited or accepted any contributions from out of town trial lawyers. Nick will be the type of Judge who stands for the highest ideals and moral standards we expect from our judges.

Hundreds of thousands rally across Soviet Union

■ Moldavians go to the polls seeking more independence from centralized Soviet rule — 1D

MOSCOW (AP) — Despite ominous government warnings and a high police profile, pro-democracy activists marched by the hundreds of thousands in more than 30 Soviet cities to demand an end to one-party Communist rule.

The rallies Sunday, unprecedented in scope in the Communists' 72-year rule, came a day after voters in the independence-minded republic of Lithuania apparently stripped the Communists of their parliamentary majority. The day also saw republic-wide elections in another restive republic — Moldavia.

A series of official warnings last week that extremists would provoke violence kept the turnout low in some cities Sunday and prevented some protests altogether. Riot police dragged away people who tried to hold an unsanctioned demonstration in Leningrad, but there were no reports of major unrest.

"We heard about tanks, about police waiting with gas and shovels," said a middle-aged woman who was not deterred from demonstrating Sunday in Moscow along with more than 100,000 people.

Thousands of uniformed police and internal security troops guarded the authorized march route in Moscow. Sand-filled dump trucks, water trucks and snowplows blocked all approaches to the Kremlin. About 17,000 police and Interior Ministry troops stood by with nightsticks and water cannons, eventually relaxing and stashing their riot gear.

"All was against us," Gavril Popov, a member of the Congress of People's Deputies, told the crowd in Moscow's Zubovsky Square.

He accused the Communist Party and state apparatus of engineering a campaign of fear not seen since Stalin in an attempt to thwart the outpouring of popular sentiment for a swift change to democracy.

Demonstrators demanded democratic reforms ranging from direct popular election of the president to the establishment of private property and creation of a multiparty system.

One demonstrator charged that the Sunday morning broadcast of a Polish science-fiction film called "The Sex Mission" — with nudity rare on Soviet TV — was a deliberate attempt to entice people to stay home.

The protests were planned after a successful Feb. 4 pro-democracy rally in Moscow in which about 200,000 people demanded the Communist Party give up its monopoly on power.

Party leaders voted to do so shortly afterward, but the day when the Communists must compete with other parties for the right to run the country appears far off to many Soviets. The Communists, with their long-established omnipresent patronage system, still firmly control the government and economy nearly everywhere.

Reports from police, local activists interviewed by telephone and state-run media indicated as many as 276,000 people took part in protest rallies in 32 cities outside Moscow, from Petropavlovsk-Kamchatky in the Soviet Far East to Leningrad on the Baltic Sea coast.

In Moscow, red, blue and white flags of czarist Russia fluttered along with red and black flags of anarchists and the sky-blue cross on a white background of the Memorial Society, which is dedicated to remembering Stalin's victims.

"General, are you with the people?" shouted a woman in the crowd to a stocky Interior Ministry officer directing crowd control at Gorky Park, one of the gathering points for the march.

"Sure, I am!" replied Maj. Gen. Georgy Postoyuk. Contrary to widespread rumors that authorities planned to provoke violence to justify a crackdown, he said officials worked closely with rally organizers and the result was "a very good, orderly meeting."

Speakers urged demonstrators to endorse progressive candidates running in March 4 parliamentary elections in the Russian federation and demanded the ouster of members of the ruling Politburo and Council of Ministers, as well as KGB chief Vladimir A. Kryuchkov.

With a show of hands, the crowd voted in support of a platform presented by historian and parliament deputy Yuri Afanasyev that proposed a direct presidential election, the establishment of private property and turning over state media from party control to editorial collectives.

"We're fed up with how we live," said one demonstrator, Celestine Langovaya, a music teacher in her 50s.

New Nicaraguan leader wins despite inexperience

WORLD

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Violeta Barrios de Chamorro, publisher of the nation's opposition newspaper, led a 14-party coalition to victory over Sandinista rule despite political inexperience and a broken knee.

"The Nicaraguan people have shown that they want to live in democracy, in peace and in freedom," Mrs. Chamorro told more than 1,000 cheering supporters at her election headquarters today.

"I am very happy," she said. "The people wanted a change."

As a girl, Violeta Barrios wanted to learn to type and be a secretary when she grew up.

Instead, she married a man who became one of Nicaragua's revolutionary heroes and was assassinated in 1978. As a gray-haired widow of 60, Mrs. Chamorro found herself the political symbol at the center of an electoral storm.

Mrs. Chamorro ran for president with gusto and a common touch.

Dona Violeta, as she is called even by President Daniel Ortega, said in in an earlier interview, "I am nothing."

"But in this life, you can learn anything," she added.

An elegant woman with graceful manners, Mrs. Chamorro's two main strengths are her martyred husband and her lack of alignment with any one political party.

That was enough to qualify her as a candidate for the disparate and fractious United National Opposition, a coalition of 14 parties known as UNO.

The memory of Pedro Joaquin Chamorro has been used by all sides, even by Mrs. Chamorro's four children, two of whom support Ortega.

"My father's enemies are within UNO," wrote Mrs. Chamorro's eldest daughter, Claudia. The phrase was used in Sandinista campaign graffiti throughout Nicaragua.

Mrs. Chamorro's late husband, whose father started what is today Nicaragua's sole opposition newspaper, La Prensa, was shot down by assassins in January 1978.

The slaying, believed to have been ordered by dictator Anastasio Somoza, ignited the popular revolt that brought the Sandinistas to power in July 1979.

Mrs. Chamorro, who still publishes La Prensa, became a member of the junta that took over from Somoza but quit after nine months.

She has bitter memories of what she considers the Sandinistas' betrayal of her husband's democratic goals and her own faith in the revolution.

"I'm not praising Somoza's government; it was horrible, but the threats that I've had from the Sandinistas — I never thought they would repay me in that way," she said.

Her pain as a widow, strong religous convictions and loyalty to Chamorro's memory — she pays weekly visits to his grave to leave fresh flowers — made her a symbol of dissatisfaction with the Sandinistas. But there have been many drawbacks.

Even after months of campaigning, she stumbled over speeches and made baffling blunders. Last year, during a trip to Europe, she was asked about UNO's government program.

"It's a secret," she replied.

The Sandinistas have tried to paint Mrs. Chamorro as empty-headed. A pro-government newspaper runs a daily column where nearly every joke portrays her as slow-witted.

Perhaps responding to this, Mrs. Chamorro told a rally early in the campaign, "I am not a dummy."

One of her top advisers is her eldest son, Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, who returned from exile in Miami, where he had been a director of the U.S.-backed Contra rebels who tried to topple Ortega's government by force.

The son feared his mother would be manipulated by vice presidential candidate Virgilio Godoy and top aide Alfredo Cesar, two strong-willed politicians.

Mrs.Chamorro, the eldest daughter of a landowning family, was sent to U.S. finishing schools to learn English.

With her father's death in 1948, she returned to the family home in the southern town of Rivas and married Chamorro.

Her political awakening came after years of being a housewife and mother.

On one of the various occasions Chamorro was imprisoned by Somoza, Mrs. Chamorro blew up at being kept in the dark.

"There had been something political and they threw him in jail," Mrs. Chamorro said. "I asked Pedro what was going on. Then I told him, 'Look, let's make a deal. From today on, you're going to tell me all that's happening, so I won't be caught unaware.' "

She has played the role of presidential candidate with gusto.

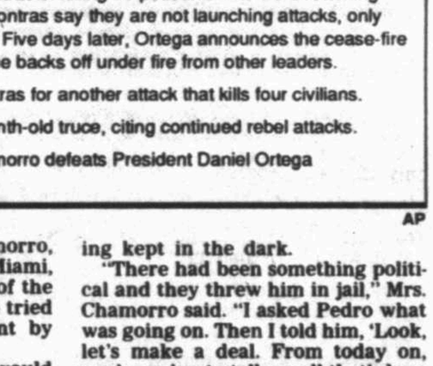
Beaming smiles at peasants, Dona Violeta was familiar and neighborly, calling people "papito" and "mamita."

"I try to help, to do good things for the country," Mrs. Chamorro said. "I am what I am."

Nicaragua Timeline

Events leading to Presidential elections held Sunday



The Sandinista National Liberation Front took power on July 19, 1979 after a popular uprising drove out Pres. Anastasio Somoza and ended 40 years of pro-U.S. Somoza family rule. The United States initially supported the revolution. But differences intensified, with Reagan accusing Nicaragua of arming Salvadoran rebels. On April 1, 1981, Reagan cut off U.S. economic aid. He later began covert aid to the anti-communist Contra rebels and imposed a trade embargo.

Feb. 3 U.S. military aid to the Contras runs out; Sandinistas grapple with the worst economic crisis since revolution.

March 21 Contras and Sandinistas signing an accord in the Nicaraguan border outpost of Sapoa, agreeing to a 60-day truce and further talks. An unofficial truce goes into effect April 1.

July 1 Nicaragua unilaterally renews the truce for 30 days, setting a pattern that holds until Nov. 1, 1989, despite scattered clashes. Contra leaders say they consider the truce indefinite in any case.

Sept. Talks to turn the Sapoa agreement into a lasting peace collapse. With U.S. non-lethal aid continuing 12,000 Contra troops move out of Nicaragua into Honduran camps.

1989

Feb. 14 Ortega and the other Central American presidents agree at a summit in El Salvador to devise a plan for disbanding the rebels holed up in Honduran base camps. Contras not present at summit. In exchange, Nicaragua promises free and fair elections in 1990.

April 18 Bush signs a 49-million-dollar non-lethal aid package for Contras that runs through February 1990. Declines to renew military aid.

Aug. 7 Agreement to disband and relocate the Contras by Dec. 8 is signed at a summit in Tela, Honduras. Contras not present. U.S. officials note disbandment is voluntary and say Contras should be kept in place as a guarantee of fair elections.

Aug. 26 Contra army commander Israel Galeano says his men will ignore both the Tela accords and U.S. advice, moving their troops back into Nicaragua to await the elections.

Oct. 22 Nicaragua accuses Contras of killing 18 peasants who were returning from military training. Contras say they are not launching attacks, only defending themselves. Five days later, Ortega announces the cease-fire will end. The next day he backs off under fire from other leaders.

Oct. 30 Nicaragua blames Contras for another attack that kills four civilians.

Nov. 1 Ortega ends the 19-month-old truce, citing continued rebel attacks.

Feb. 25 Violeta Barrios de Chamorro defeats President Daniel Ortega in national elections.

'Big Three' observers pronounce Nicaraguan elections fair

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Big Three international observers dashed around in motorcades through the predawn hours today, racing from the president to a challenger who suddenly looked like an upset winner.

The men one Sandinista adviser once called "the holy trinity" were reluctant to comment on the delicate situation.

"I really don't want to characterize it at all," said former U.S. Attorney General Elliot Richardson, head of the 240-member U.N. observer mission.

Early returns suggested publisher Violeta Barrios de Chamorro was scoring a stunning upset and the question of the hour was how President Daniel Ortega and the Sandinistas might take defeat after more than a decade in power.

"You'll have to ask him," said former President Jimmy Carter.

The meeting between Ortega and the umpires he'd invited anticipating victory ended abruptly, said a witness.

"Let's just wait for the rest of the results," Ortega said, turning his back on the distinguished guests.

Carter, Richardson and Organization of American States Secretary General Joao Baena Soares then sped off, each in his own motorcycle-led motorcade, to Mrs. Chamorro's house.

"Carter is telling her that she had won," one of Mrs. Chamorro's closest advisers, Emilio Montalban Alvarez, told The Associated Press.

Baena Soares also asked Mrs. Chamorro not to claim victory until all the returns were in, according to a high-ranking source inside her fragile coalition, the United National Opposition. (Mrs. Chamorro apparently ignored the request, claiming victory with 30.6 percent of the vote counted.)

Lights flashing and tires squealing, the three umpires returned to Election Central.

Throughout the bitter campaign, opposition vice presidential candidate Virgilio Godoy had said the Sandinistas would cheat rather than lose.

But Baena Soares said the count, one of the most closely monitored in history, appeared clean so far. "No problems," he said as he hustled into the counting center. "No problems."

The ballots were being counted twice, once at each polling place and again at regional election centers. The results were being telegraphed to the capital and compiled by the Supreme Electoral Council.

International observers, more than 3,000 of them, were present at hundreds of local polling places as the ballots were tallied and in all nine regional centers. More than 1.75 million people had registered to vote in the nation's 4,394 polling places and the turnout appeared high.

Key observers said the voting had been clean and peaceful.

Richardson said none of the UN observers had reported any irregularities in the voting: "It was essential here to convince skeptics that the vote could be conducted without fraud."

The Sandinistas had been counting on an internationally endorsed victory to pave the way for improved relations with the United States. They were not prepared for defeat.

Nicaragua was the first nation ever to invite the United Nations to monitor its election. The leftist Sandinista government had also invited the Organization of American States (OAS), former President Carter and hundreds of smaller groups.

Observers from smaller missions also said they were impressed with how the vote was carried out.

"People were very serious about it," said Erin Saberi of the Southwest Voter Registration Project, based in San Antonio, Texas. She and other observers said they were warmly treated by voters and election officials alike.

The only observers other than party poll watchers allowed to watch the actual counting were from the United Nations, the OAS and the Carter group.

The U.N. and the OAS, which deployed 430 observers, have been in Nicaragua since August, monitoring virtually every step of the electoral process from voter registration to campaign rallies. While none called the campaign perfect, all agreed a free and fair election was possible.

Both teams included everything from political analysts to statisticians to communications technicians drawn from their staffs and from member nations.

Both teams were doing their own partial counts, a statistical sampling of returns aimed at detecting any fraud. Neither planned to release the results.

The Supreme Electoral Council said it had issued credentials for more than 3,000 international observers from hundreds of groups, which meant one official watcher for every 550 or so voters — or about the same number of observers as Contra rebel fighters believed to be in the country.

"The OAS was everywhere," Guatemalan lawmaker Edmond Mullet

With 'peace breaking out' all over ...

'Peace dividend' could be used to ease deficit woes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Governors would like more federal money for education, health care, transportation and repairing bridges and roads. But most of the state officials say they'd just as soon see any "peace dividend" used to reduce the federal deficit.

With few exceptions, the governors responding to an Associated Press survey said they expect defense spending to drop as a result of the dramatic changes in Eastern Europe where communist regimes have crumbled in recent months.

They sounded much more confident that federal funds would be freed for domestic needs than has President Bush or his budget director, Richard G. Darman.

Gov. William Donald Schaefer, a Democrat from Maryland, has drafted a letter to congressional leaders urging that any defense savings be used to "ease the pain of transition for the workers and businesses most affected by the reductions."

An aide to Schaefer said last week that several other governors, including Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts, Richard Celeste of Ohio and L. Douglas Wilder of Virginia, were joining the Maryland governor in the appeal.

Schaefer wants money for retraining displaced workers, increasing research and development, and rebuilding the nation's infrastructure.

Bush has brushed aside suggestions that a substantial "peace dividend" is in the offing.

"Many speak of the peace dividend. Few discuss the short-term cost of peace," he said in an address to the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco earlier this month.

"There will be costs as we cross the bridge to a better future," he added.

In an introduction to the Bush's 1991 budget, Darman, director of the Office of Management and Budget, said people were overestimating the dividend. He portrayed members of Congress as devising spending plans that would total "about 10 times the overestimated dividend."

Gov. Buddy Roemer of Louisiana, a Democrat, predicted the savings from reduced military spending could total $100 billion over the next three years.

"The thing that can help Louisiana the most is to lower the deficit," he said.

"There's no question there's going to be a dividend if you're using that term in the sense that the defense budget will come down," said Republican Gov. William Clements of Texas, a former deputy defense secretary.

Arguing that any such savings should go toward reducing the deficit, Clements said, "The proliferation of our domestic programs is a no-no as far as I'm concerned."

Clements' emphasis on reducing the budget deficit was echoed in the responses of most of the governors.

"First and foremost, we should reduce the national budget deficit," said Republican George Deukmejian of California.

"Any peace dividend should go primarily to balancing the budget," said Democrat George Sinner of North Dakota.

A few governors were hesitant about advocating sharp cuts in defense spending.

"I believe the peace dividend is probably overstated," said Gov. Mike Hayden, a Republican from Kansas. "If there is one, it should be used to lower the deficit."

Republican Gov. Stan Stephens of Montana warned against getting "carried away with the euphoria of what is happening in Eastern Europe."

Stephens said that if there was a peace dividend it should be used to lower taxes. "It belongs to the people," he said. "I think we should give the taxpayers of this country a break."

Among the dissenters from the call for earmarking the money for deficit reduction were Govs. Robert Casey of Pennsylvania and Neil Goldschmidt of Oregon, both Democrats.

Goldschmidt called for "shifting resources to those things we care about in life — arts, science, health, education and, above all, children."

"As billions are pared from the Pentagon budget, it's time for the federal government to return a substantial portion of that dividend to the states," said Casey.

He singled out mass transit as an area where federal funds are needed. He said the budget proposed by Bush includes no money for the Philadelphia area transit system, which was receiving $27.4 million this year.

Defense could spend as much as $70 billion on B-2 bomber

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon should delay buying the B-2 bomber until it is certain the aircraft can pass critical flight tests, says an investigative agency that forecasts the program will cost more than its estimated $70 billion.

In its first unclassified report on the radar-evading aircraft, the General Accounting Office said Defense Secretary Dick Cheney is reviewing a revised cost estimate for the program due to changes in the inflation rate and a recent strike at the Boeing Co., a major subcontractor.

"We estimate that the changes will add another several billion dollars to the B-2's estimated cost," said Frank C. Conahan, assistant comptroller general and a member of the GAO, the investigative arm of Congress.

Questioned after the House Armed Services Committee hearing about the increase, Conahan said that due to inflation, the revised five-year plan for defense spending beginning in fiscal 1992 shows a jump of $51 billion for all defense programs.

Conahan said he did not know how much of the $51 billion was for the stealth bomber.

The Air Force was forced to raise the cost of buying 132 B-2 bombers due to a redesign of the plane to enable it to fly at low altitudes, extensions in the production schedule and underestimates of material costs.

In 1981, the service said the planes would cost $32.7 billion, but by June 1989 the cost had risen to $70 billion.

Governors, White House opposing tax hike to fund unemployment reserves

WASHINGTON (AP) — Only four states — Hawaii, Mississippi, South Dakota and Vermont — have enough unemployment insurance in reserve to maintain jobless benefits for 18 months in a severe recession, congressional auditors say.

And only 22 state programs could survive a year without raising unemployment compensation taxes, curtailing eligibility or borrowing heavily from the federal government, as they did in the last downturn in 1981-82.

Three states — Illinois, Michigan and Ohio — with the highest concentration of the manufacturing workers who would be most subject to layoffs in a recession have reserves of six months or less, a House subcommittee was late last week.

Nonetheless, the Bush administration and the National Governors Association told the panel they oppose a bill by House tax writers to raise the federal unemployment insurance taxable wage base from $7,000 to $10,000 by 1993.

"We see no programmatic justification for such an increase," Deputy Assistant Labor Secretary Carolyn Golding told the House Ways and Means Committee's subcommittee on human resources.

She testified that as of Dec. 1, overall state accounts had reserves totalling nearly $38 billion, compared with just $8.6 billion a decade ago.

Employers must now pay $434 in combined state and federal taxes a year on the first $7,000 of each covered worker's wages. About $56 goes to the federal government and the states get the rest.

Thirty-six states have adopted bases above the $7,000 level — ranging from $7,100 in Connecticut to $20,900 in Alaska — subject to state taxes. The federal base was last raised in 1983, when it was $6,000.

Subcommittee Chairman Thomas Downey, D-N.Y., and other tax writers want to raise the base to $10,000 over the next three years to avert a repeat of the eligibility cutbacks by many states at the depth of the last recession.

By 1983, the system had run up a $21 billion debt. It was paid off last year with the exception of Michigan, which still owed $800 million as of last June, after the Reagan administration began charging states interest on their borrowings.

Although the state and federal Unemployment Trust Funds now have combined reserves of $45 billion, the General Accounting Office said that would last only 11 months in a recession similar to the 16-month downturn in 1981-82.

The reserves "still appear to be inadequate to handle a severe recession," Assistant Comptroller General Lawrence Thompson told the subcommittee.

Using a model developed by the Labor Department, congressional auditors projected 13 state funds becoming insolvent to the tune of $8.9 billion if a similar recession begins next year.

The governors expressed anger at having to close unemployment offices and spend more to run the program because of a $124 million shortfall in fiscal year 1990 from budget cuts and more claims as a result of greater joblessness than they had anticipated.

But they said through a representative at the hearing, Ohio Employment Services Administrator Ellen O'Brien, states should get a larger share of the existing taxes rather than have to raise taxes.

"Employers who finance this system through the Federal Unemployment Tax Act are investing enough money to provide adequate service," she said. "No new taxes are necessary to return the program to its proper funding level."

Women posing strong challenges in 1990 elections

By JOEL CONNELLY
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

SALEM, Oregon — New York's feminist Rep. Bella Abzug launched a congressional career in the 1970s with the slogan: "A woman's place is in the house — the House of Representatives."

In the 1990 election, however, politically seasoned women aren't content to stay in the House or lesser offices: They've become strong contenders to take over governors' mansions in nine of the 36 states holding statehouse elections this year. That's the most ever.

"We're seeing a culmination of women working their way up in the political system," says Oregon Secretary of State Barbara Roberts, the near-certain Democratic nominee to replace Gov. Neil Goldschmidt.

Alaska's Republican State Sen. Arliss Sturgulewski, making her second bid for governor, notes, however, that only nine women have ever occupied statehouses.

"It has been a very long apprenticeship, adds Sturgulewski, who financed her education by slinging hash in Seattle before moving to Alaska. She moved to Alaska, was widowed in her 30s, and went on to become a millionaire businesswoman. She has won three terms in the state senate.

Richards

Women are leading candidates to capture three of the nation's most important statehouses. State Treasurer Ann Richards is seeking the Democratic nomination in Texas; former San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein has lately gained in her bid to become governor of California, and Pennsylvania State Auditor Barbara Hafer is running as a pro-choice Republican against Democratic Gov. Bob Casey.

But getting to the governor's mansion — or staying there — is still tough. Three states now have female governors, but all three may have male chief executives by year's end.

Arizona Gov. Rose Mofford, who took the office when former Gov. Evan Mecham was impeached, is not seeking re-election. And both Republican Gov. Kay Orr in Nebraska and Democratic Gov. Madeleine Kunin in Vermont face tough re-election battles.

In the East and Midwest, a pair of lieutenant governors, Massachusetts' Evelyn Murphy and Iowa's JoAnn Zimmerman, are seeking the next highest rung.

Women have unprecedented clout at the polls. Richards gets a boost from the fact that women accounted for 56 percent of Texas voters in 1988. In the nation as a whole, 55 percent of the registered voters are women.

But women candidates face problems even among women voters.

"There continues to be a lingering reservation about a woman's ability to lead," says Alan Secrest, a Washington, D.C., pollster.

Secrest believes a woman candidate can expect more difficulty in a governor's race than running for the U.S. Senate or a lesser state office. "It's seen as a more hands-on position," he adds. "Usually a woman candidate must go further than a male counterpart in credentialing herself."

In this year's California race, Feinstein has taken a head-on approach to the hands-on issue.

She mounted a $600,000 statewide television blitz, with a commercial showing an unforgettable 1978 scene with Feinstein announcing the murders of Mayor George Moscone and Supervisor Harvey Milk.

But women candidates face criticism when they act too tough. In Pennsylvania, the GOP's Hafer is trying to shake off controversy stemming from her description of Gov. Casey as "an Irish redneck from Scranton."

Library of Congress support essential

It's hard to argue that Congress deserves a bigger budget. Yet one of the largest chunks of the annual appropriation for the legislative branch goes to support the Library of Congress, one of those invisible but vital parts of everyday government that's getting starved because it has no political constituency. Unless it is taken off that diet, it will fall further behind in its ability to serve the nation.

The Library of Congress is the library of U.S. libraries, a jewel in the nation's cultural and intellectual life. It has a collection of 90 million items, including the nation's most extensive book collection and an unsurpassed archive of manuscripts, films, records, photographs and prints, which constitute the nation's collective memory. It provides central cataloging services for the nation's libraries, a service that saves other institutions an estimated $320 million. It registers a half-million items a year for copyrights. It runs a national reading service that supplies recorded and braille materials for the blind and handicapped.

Yet since 1984, the library's budget has grown by only 13.8 percent, less than the rate of inflation. It has twice been hit by automatic Gramm-Rudman budget cuts, and it has annually been forced to absorb mandated pay increases from its operating budget. As a result, the understaffed library now has 38 million items that are unavailable to scholars and the public because they have not been processed and cataloged.

"This library is increasingly unable to carry out its mission because of inadequate funding," says James H. Billington, librarian of Congress.

Letting the Library of Congress fall into decline would be foolishly shortsighted. As electronic information and communications technologies improve, the materials in the Library of Congress will increasingly become, as Billington puts it, "a library without walls," a database that Americans can access from any place in the nation. The $326 million the Library of Congress has requested for next year, a 22 percent increase over current spending, represents a tiny slice of the nation's $1.2 trillion budget but one of the most important investments a knowledge-based society can make.

Barriers tumbling

A pace which was glacial for nearly half a century suddenly has become a rush of reform, freedom and new puzzles. From Gdansk to Pretoria, barriers are falling. The world is being forced to rethink its equations.

The most difficult equation may be one in German math. Question: When does one plus one equal one?

That seems certain to be answered for us very soon. East and West Germany are speeding toward reunification. ...

Americans are justifiably wary about the future of unified Germany, since some of the same people who slaughtered Jews and marched for world domination remain on their feet.

However, reunification is inevitable. America has dedicated itself to the concept of democracy and self-rule around the globe. German self-determination is only a logical extension of that, especially since free Germany has been peaceable and progressive in the 45 years since the Nazi regime was crushed.

What's important is for the United States to try and hold NATO together, to gain assurance that a new Germany will be a part of that. As for U.S. monetary aid toward reunification, forget it. West Germany, a vibrant economic competitor, has shown that it can fend for itself.

Good riddance bad idea

Wall Street's "junk bond" revolution seems to be over with the collapse of Drexel Burnham Lambert, the brokerage firm that started it.

Good riddance. This high-risk, high-yield form of corporate financing was like a house built of cards.

It fueled the mad scramble for corporate takeovers during the 1980s, financing enormous deals by selling bonds that had little backing beyond faith in the corporations and investment houses that issued them.

The junk-bond revolution has left dead, dying and wounded across the landscape. Many companies and individuals who bought junk bonds have found their investments in severe trouble. Some of the bonds, although not all, are either worthless or worth only a fraction of their purchase price.

... The day of the buy-out artists financed by big bucks from junk bonds appears to be over. That will be a relief to companies that lately have had to spend too much time looking over their shoulders for corporate raiders and not enough time looking after their business.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 26th, 1919, Congress established Grand Canyon National Park in Arizona.

On this date:

In 1846, "Buffalo Bill" Cody was born near Davenport, Iowa.

In 1870, the first New York City subway line was opened to the public. The line, run by pneumatic power, was a failure; it was not until 1904 that the city's present subway system opened.

In 1940, 50 years ago, the U.S. Air Defense Command was created.

In 1942, during World War II, Navy flier Donald F. Mason sent a four-word message from the Pacific to the U.S. Navy in Washington: "Sighted sub, sank same."

In 1951, the 22nd Amendment to the Constitution was ratified, limiting a president to two terms in office.

In 1952, Prime Minister Winston Churchill announced that Britain had developed its own atomic bomb.

In 1962, after becoming the first American to orbit the Earth, John Glenn told a joint meeting of Congress, "Exploration and the pursuit of knowledge have always paid dividends in the long run."

In 1979, a total solar eclipse cast a moving shadow 175 miles wide from Oregon to North Dakota before moving north into Canada.

In 1984, the Rev. Jesse Jackson acknowledged in Concord, N.H., using the word "Hymie" to refer to Jews during a private conversation, saying it was "insensitive and wrong."

In 1987, the Tower Commission issued its report on the Iran-Contra affair, rebuking President Reagan for failing to control his national security staff.

Ten years ago: In New Hampshire, Ronald Reagan won the Republican presidential primary while President Carter defeated Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts in the Democratic contest.

Bush friend caught in prostitution sting

WASHINGTON — A close friend of George Bush was arrested in a sleazy Washington, D.C., prostitution sting in 1988. Less than a year later, he was given a key government position and security clearance.

Jack Anderson

Until Feb. 2 of this year, Jonathan (Jack) Sloat was a special assistant to Bruce Gelb, the director of the U.S. Information Agency. Gelb kept Sloat on the job with a security clearance even after he learned about Sloat's arrest for "soliciting for lewd and immoral purposes." Gelb confided to friends that he needed Sloat for his "social connections" and as a pipeline to Bush.

The president also knew about the arrest, but did not ask Sloat to resign.

Sloat and Bush go back a long way. They were contemporaries at Yale and soccer teammates. Sloat became an ardent Bush backer and fund raiser during the 1980 presidential campaign. Bush stayed at Sloat's home during campaign visits to Washington. The two play tennis together.

In 1981, Bush put Sloat in the job as general counsel at USIA and then as congressional liaison for the agency. He lasted for four years under USIA head Charles Wick. Wick didn't think Sloat was suited for USIA, so he gave him six months to find another job. Sloat didn't, so Wick gave him another six months, and then another six months. Finally, Wick simply let him go.

Sloat, a lawyer, found work at the Washington Area Tennis Patrons Foundation. At least that was who he listed as his employer on the night of his arrest on sexual solicitation charges, March 29, 1988.

Confidential police files in Washington, D.C., say that Sloat was arrested by a policewoman posing as a prostitute. The policewoman, Karen Moss, and her partner, Mark Gilkey, reported that Sloat offered Moss $15 to perform a sex act in his car.

Sloat's guilt or innocence was never determined. He took a route offered to first-offenders — doing community service in exchange for having the charges dropped. Sloat completed 40 hours of community service work in Washington and the charge was dismissed.

He told us the whole thing was a misunderstanding. He said he stopped to ask the woman for directions to a gas station and she must have misunderstood him. In their banter, Sloat told us, he may have told her to "stop giving me a snow job," and she may have mistaken that for solicitation for a sex act.

Sloat thought the embarrassing incident was behind him when Bush was elected president and appointed him to head the USIA transition team. Then Sloat was made a special assistant to the new USIA director, Gelb, at a salary of $63,900.

Gelb tried to get Sloat "Top Secret Codeword" security clearance so he could read the National Intelligence Daily, which goes only to the president and less than 100 top federal officials. When the Central Intelligence Agency did a background check, the arrest was found. Then the USIA began its own investigation.

A knowledgeable source told us Sloat then called Bush at his Kennebunkport, Maine, home and told him about the arrest. Sloat refused to tell us what transpired in that conversation, but he kept his job and was eventually cleared to read no higher than "top secret" materials.

According to one intelligence source, the CIA was "in a dither." Sloat is a married, socially prominent, wealthy man. That makes him a target for entrapment by the KGB or other hostile agents who catch people in compromising positions and then threaten to expose them.

We started asking USIA officials about the Sloat case in December. When they were reluctant to discuss it on the record, we sent a written list of questions on Jan. 30. Two days later, Sloat's employment at USIA was terminated.

LONG, HOT SUMMER — It looks like a long and possibly explosive summer is in store for the nation's prisons. Federal auditors report a whopping 36 percent increase in the prison population between 1986 and 1988 — a trend that is expected to continue through this decade. Drug offenders are a big part of the increased population. Studies show that they are the least likely to be violent. Among drug offenders, 94 percent have no history of violence. That makes them good candidates for alternatives to incarceration, and that would help alleviate prison overcrowding. But it is an option that politicians are reluctant to accept because it doesn't enhance a law-and-order image.

MINI-EDITORIAL — College campuses are supposed to be bastions of free and open thought. No idea is too base or too controversial to be discussed. At least, that's what we believed, until we read about a neo-Nazi catalog making the rounds on campuses. The book catalog includes the usual racist blather of neo-Nazis — praise of Hitler and debunking of the "Holocaust myth." These are books that should be welcome on any college campus — in the trash cans doused in kerosene.

Eastern European situation may just be scam

I'm not that keen on German reunification, not that Germans give two hoots in a barn what we think about it. And that's one of the reasons I'm not keen on it. To many Germans, being German is more important than being either a democrat or a communist.

Charley Reese

Besides, I still think most of what's happening in Eastern Europe is a scam. The Soviets have always wanted us out of Europe and NATO dead. Pull West Germany out of NATO and NATO, as a war-fighting alliance, becomes the equivalent of a wrestling tag team consisting of Pee-wee Herman and Emo Phillips.

Yeah, I know the Cold War is supposed to be over and the new millennia of peace arrived, but if you don't mind, I'll just wait until I see a few more plowshares and few less T-80 tanks and Soviet missiles.

In the meantime, we should all recall what apparently no one teaches very well in school these days, namely history. Germany was destroyed and defeated in World War II and forcibly split by the war-winning Allies. As these Allies had their falling out, one piece of Germany was forcibly incorporated into one military alliance and the other piece, into an opposing military alliance.

At no time, did either East or West ask the Germans their preference. People in the West tend to be naive but anybody who thinks West Germany, given a choice between NATO and a whole Germany, will choose NATO is gullible as well as naive.

However many faults the Soviets have, they are not naive. They know that the most intensely Marxist German and the most intensely capitalist German agree on one thing — neither one of them likes Russians.

Therefore you can bet the only kind of reunified Germany the Soviets will tolerate will be a disarmed and neutral Germany. That effectively means the end of NATO. As for the Warsaw Pact, no Soviet general ever trusted its armies anyway, which is why the Red Army has remained in Eastern Europe and East European soldiers had to account — to Russians — for every bullet they were given to shoot on the practice range.

Geography is not a big deal in school either, but the Soviet border is only 600 kilometers from the present West German border. That means that even if the Red Army withdrew, which I don't think it ever will, it would still be a real threat to Western Europe. An American Army, 3,000 miles of ocean away, would be little to zilch comfort.

You can listen to Gorbachev's speeches; I prefer to recall the words of Dimitry Manuilsky (a Soviet official who lectured American Communists in the 1930s): "To win, we shall need the element of surprise. The bourgeoisie will have to be put to sleep. So we shall begin by launching the most spectacular peace movement on record. There will be electrifying overtures and unheard-of concessions. The capitalist countries, stupid and decadent, will rejoice to cooperate in their own destruction. They will leap at another chance to be friends. As soon as their guard is down, we shall smash them with our clenched fist."

If ever a statement looked prophetic, that's it.

Remember that all of these electrifying overtures and unheard-of concessions are always couched in the future. We will start talks about withdrawals at the end of the year. By the mid-'90s, we will make these reductions. Three years from now, we will have free elections.

But what about the present moment? At the present, the Soviets continue the deployment of new strategic missiles and massive production of modern weapons.

In love, life, history — and in war — timing is everything. I would feel a lot better if Americans would look at actions, rather than words, and pay attention to timing.

In the age of the nuclear missile, even a year is a very long time indeed.

Our policy, both diplomatic and military, must be based on Soviet actions and capabilities, not on words about intentions. And, in regard to both the Soviets and Germany, it should be based in part of memory. Nations, like people, rarely change.

Get the ball near Andre, he can catch it.

Everybody wants Andre. Notre Dame wants him. Michigan wants him. Georgia and Georgia Tech, of course, want to keep him in the state.

Lewis Grizzard

Here's what I like most about Andre:

We've all heard those recruiting stories. Young recruits demand cars, clothes, sex and money to sign, and, quite often, they get what they ask for.

I even knew of a respected Southern school that was recruiting a young man who wanted to become a doctor.

So, the kid was taken to the hospital on campus, given a robe and allowed to sit in on a hysterectomy.

But none of that for Andre Hastings. What he wants in a school that signs him is simple: He wants his own bathroom.

"I want to have my own separate bathroom," Andre was quoted as saying in the Sunday sports section.

"That's a personal thing with me," he went on. "I just don't want to share a bathroom, and I've told coaches that."

Michigan seems to be in big trouble with Andre. He visited Ann Arbor and said, "I've been led to believe I'd have to share a bathroom with an entire dorm hall there."

I'm thinking of the reaction coaches are having to this unique situation.

"Dammit," says Coach Norman Hardrock of Cheat U., "I've got six BMW convertibles and three cheerleaders to give away and this kid wants a private bathroom. We got any alumni who are plumbers?"

I don't blame Andre for wanting his own, as the author of the Sunday piece put it so well, "private potty."

When I was in college I had to share a bathroom with an entire dorm hall. I didn't go to Michigan, but that was the toilet situation at the University of Georgia.

You get 19 guys in the bathroom at the same time and you've got to wait in line for the shower, and inevitably some bully starts going around attempting to pop a wet towel on your bare backside.

It was worse after I got married and had to share a bathroom with my wife. Women will hang wet panty hose on the shower rod and cover the sink area with an assortment of exotic shampoos and oils not to mention spare parts for their Volvo station wagons.

At least in college nobody ever took my razor to shave his legs, which often happened to me when I was married.

Of course if somebody had taken my razor to shave his legs, I would have sought an immediate transfer to another housing unit.

We know not the reason why young Mr. Hastings is suffering from flushophobia, the fear of having to share a bathroom, but it could be from some traumatic experience he underwent as a child, such as being frightened by a can of Drano when he was 3.

I'm also not certain if providing a private bathroom for high school recruits is against the rules of the National Collegiate Athletic Association, which governs such things.

But if it's not, after the season my beloved Georgia Dawgs had last year, I'd suggest it start now on the Andre Hastings Private Bathroom Complex.

I'll donate four towels, a couple of bars of soap and a rubber ducky myself.

Top that, Notre Dame.

Smokers must cope with airlines' ban

By HERB LASH
Associated Press Writer

Smokers puffed away in airport terminals as they tried to figure out how to cope with a new ban on smoking on virtually all domestic airline flights. Non-smokers breathed a bit easier.

Dave Noeth, a traveler at La Guardia Airport in New York City, said under certain circumstances he was prepared to violate the ban that took effect Sunday.

"If the plane starts to go down, I'm lighting one up," he said.

USAir flight attendant Kelly Brown in Atlanta said a colleague told her "she had one man nearly miss his plane because he was just standing by the gate trying to finish his cigarette."

In Seattle, Leo Haag complained that the new law is not fair.

"It doesn't bother me, two or three hours flying without a cigarette, but I don't think it's treating everybody equally," he said, puffing on a cigarette in an airport terminal.

But non-smoking travelers said air quality on Sunday's flights had improved, and they were relieved not to breathe the smoke or have it foul their clothes.

"It's great," said Ron Upham in Newark. He said he and his wife used to try to get seats far away from the smoking section, but sometimes smelled smokers' air anyway.

"I feel like they're inflicting something on me," Upham said.

The federal ban, in force since 1988 on flights of less than two hours, now applies to 99.8 percent of domestic flights. Only flights to Alaska and Hawaii of more than six hours are excepted. Overseas fights are not affected.

Under the new law, smoking is allowed on only 28 of the nation's regularly scheduled 17,000 flights every day, said Jeff Boyer of the Coalition on Smoking or Health in Seattle.

Passengers were told not to try smoking in airplane bathrooms. Tampering with smoke detectors in the plane's restrooms is a federal offense punishable with a $2,000 fine.

Some smokers didn't resent the ban.

"It's probably going to add more years to my life," said David R. Merkel as he waited for a flight at Raleigh-Durham (N.C.) International Airport. "But given my druthers, I'd rather have a cigarette."

Other smokers were unequivocal.

'I'm going to go nuts," said Joseph Golad of Chicago, resigning himself to a smokeless 2½-hour flight to Dallas from O'Hare International Airport.

To help passengers like Golad, the Chicago Lung Association distributed "Smoker Survival Kits," which contained sugarless chewing gum, breath mints and tips on how to cope.

The association recommended passengers doodle to keep hands busy, stay away from the common cigarette companions of coffee and alcohol, and take a walk around the plane or go to sleep.

In Seattle, the Coalition on Smoking or Health offered their own tips, and gave away candy and pins that read: "I'm kissable, I don't smoke."

A co-author of the ban, Democratic Sen. Frank Lautenberg of New Jersey, a former 20-year smoker, said the measure was the most popular he had ever worked on.

"It's the most positive thing in terms of response that I've ever done," he said.

Airlines now considering requiring safety seats for traveling infants

WASHINGTON (AP) — Erin Donnell has flown on airliners four times in six months and she's never had to buy a ticket. She's also never had a seat of her own during takeoff or landing. She's 6 months old.

But if airlines have their way, Erin won't be allowed to fly in her mother's arms between Washington and Rochester, N.Y.

The airline industry's Air Transport Association last week joined calls from members of Congress, consumer safety groups and flight attendants for a rule requiring safety seats for all passengers under 2 years old.

If safety seats are made mandatory, Erin's mother, Judy Donnell of Alexandria, Va., might have to buy a $130 ticket for a seat where she could strap in the child restraint.

Some travel agents say many travelers can't afford the extra expense, and a Federal Aviation Administration official said the proposal likely would do little to improve infant air travelers' safety.

The proposal would affect the 5,000 to 10,000 babies who fly each day. In most cases, the same safety seats that states now require for infants riding in cars can be used in a jetliner.

The FAA proposes only to require that airlines offer use of safety seats as an option to travelers — as most airlines do now — but the agency is seeking public comment on the tougher proposal.

Launch delayed at least two days

By PAUL RECER

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Poor weather forced the launch of shuttle Atlantis' secret military mission to be scrubbed today for the fifth time, the most delays since the doomed Challenger.

NASA set the next attempt for early Wednesday.

Peekaboo clouds and erratic winds tantalized NASA with possible launch opportunities for almost two hours early today and officials kept Atlantis and its five-man crew poised and ready for any momentary break in the weather.

But the break never came. At 2:32 a.m. launch director Robert Sieck abandoned the launch attempt and announced NASA would not try again until early Wednesday.

Experts saw little chance that launch weather would improve later in the week.

"We're just in kind of a stalemate because of the weather," said Tom Strange, an Air Force weather forecaster. He said there was only a 20 percent chance of favorable weather on Wednesday and a 40 percent chance on Thursday.

Winds and clouds early today were on the very edge of acceptable limits and NASA extended a pause in the launch countdown in hopes that the weather would improve. Eventually the winds calmed enough for launch, but a cloud cover hung on stubbornly and Sieck decided to give up.

NASA spokesman Kyle Herring said exhaustion among the astronauts, launch-pad technicians and engineers played a role in the decision to delay the next launch attempt until early Wednesday.

"We just want to give the crews a rest," Herring said.

The shuttle mission originally was scheduled to begin last Thursday. Two launch attempts were abandoned after commander John O. Creighton developed a sore throat and head congestion. An attempt early Saturday was blocked by unacceptable weather conditions.

Early Sunday, with clear skies and ideal weather, NASA counted down to within 31 seconds of launch and then had to call it off when a computer broke down.

This mission has been postponed more times than any shuttle flight since Challenger, which had seven delays and then blew up shortly after liftoff on its eighth try on Jan. 28, 1986. All seven crew members died.

Atlantis' flight is a classified military mission. As a result, the precise launch time and length of the flight are secret.

However, sources said the spacecraft is to be launched just before 1 a.m. EST on Wednesday, is to fly about 4½ days and will land at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

The sources, who spoke on condition they not be named, said Atlantis' cargo is a $500 million spy satellite capable of taking high-resolution reconnaissance photos and listening in on electronics communications all over the world. Atlantis is to deploy the satellite in an orbit that will carry the craft over more of the Soviet Union than any satellite previously launched by a shuttle.

United Germay would stay in NATO, Bush and Kohl say

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, following "extraordinarily frank" talks at Camp David, say the world has nothing to fear from a united Germany and promise it will stay tethered to the Western military alliance.

Emerging Sunday from two days of talks at the presidential retreat, Bush and Kohl sought to allay fears from Moscow to Warsaw to London that the two Germanys are marching to the altar too rapidly.

Bush said they shared "a common belief that a unified Germany should remain a full member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, including participation in its military structure," but with "a special military status" for the territory of what is now East Germany.

Kohl, without mentioning NATO by name, said, "The alliance of free democracies in Europe and North America ... are of fundamental importance for peace and security. This is true now. This will be true in the future."

Kohl also ruled out a Warsaw Pact connection for the new Germany, saying, "A united Germany cannot belong to two different pact systems." He added, "We will have transition situations" which will have to be negotiated.

The Soviets now have 380,000 troops stationed in East Germany, which holds parliamentary elections March 18 that are expected to speed the union of East and West Germany.

Kohl reiterated that a neutral Germany is out of the question.

"Neutralism would be a very false solution," said Kohl, adding that his country learned that lesson the hard way after World War I. The isolation of the Weimar Republic was followed by the terror and militarism of Hitler's Third Reich.

Poland, decimated by the Nazis in World War II, has expressed fear a united Germany might demand old lands back.

On that score, Bush said the United States regards the current European borders, including Germany's long border with Poland, as inviolable.

Kohl said the border question "will be settled definitely by a free elected all-German government and a freely elected all-German parliament." He said he cannot speak now for what the German state will decide.

But Kohl emphasized, "nobody has any intention of linking the question of national unity with changes in existing borders."

Bush said the U.S. position "is not to be afraid of German reunification," but to understand the longing of the German people to end the artificial division imposed after World War II.

"We've already crossed that bridge. We welcome reunification. But it's not for the United States to set a timetable. It's not for us to say how fast," said Bush, who acknowledged that events "are moving faster than we expected."

He called the talks with Kohl "extraordinarily frank." Both leaders said they saw no need to add Poland to the group of four nations that will discuss reunification with the two German states. Poland, like East Germany, has abandoned its communist monopoly government.

The allies which defeated Germany in World War II — The United States, Soviet Union, Great Britain and France — have agreed to convene meetings that are likely to lead to a unified Germany, perhaps as soon as this year.

Bush and Kohl fielded questions from reporters for nearly an hour in a recreation hall at Camp Greentop, just down the road from Camp David atop the Catoctin Mountains of Maryland.

Kohl said West Germany had proven its commitment to democracy in the last 40 years.

SPELLING BEE 1990

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1990 Regional Spelling Bee March 31 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through March 30. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

par'ka

parka (noun) — The Alaskan Eskimos still use animal skins and fur to make the warm and practical coats with protective hoods that came to be known as parkas. Today parkas are made with wool or down and also space-age materials that are warm and lightweight. A favorite of people who work or play outdoors, parkas are often sealed with a coating that repels the heaviest rain. The word has its origin in Aleutian, Russian, and Samoyed languages.

NATION IN BRIEF

Jackson won't run, advisers say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jesse L. Jackson has decided not to run for mayor and instead will continue his drive to gain statehood for the nation's capital, say top advisers to the civil rights leader.

Jackson planned to announce at a news conference today he will not run for mayor, said the advisers, who spoke Sunday on condition of anonymity.

"We have tried to persuade him to run, but he remains convinced that he should not," said one local supporter. "He is convinced he should work for statehood."

The supporter, who said he spoke to Jackson for more than three hours over the weekend, said the two-time Democratic candidate for president is committed to gaining statehood for the District of Columbia.

Jackson declined to comment on his plans after preaching at a Washington church on Sunday.

Last body recovered

MAMMOTH LAKES, Calif. (AP) — Aided by a sophisticated underwater video camera, divers spotted and retrieved the body of the last of seven victims who died after plunging into an icy lake.

The body of Dave "Grandpa" Meyers, one of four would-be rescuers who perished trying to save three teen-agers who fell through thin ice on Lake Convict on Feb. 19, was recovered Sunday.

Divers recovered the other six bodies last week.

Meyers, 53, of Bishop, was a counselor at Camp O'Neal, where the three teen-agers were residents. Also killed were another counselor, a volunteer firefighter and a forest ranger.

Camp O'Neal, near the lake in the Sierra Nevada 250 miles north of Los Angeles, is a home for youngsters placed by county social-service agencies as well as youths who have committed minor crimes and are on probation.

Defense impact studied

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reducing U.S. defense spending will have no more impact on the economy than cutting money for education, health and other programs, says a report issued today.

Using previously published data, economist David Gold concludes that on average over the past four decades, "defense spending has been a relatively neutral feature of the American economic landscape."

Gold's findings differ from the accepted belief that reducing the defense budget, which in the latest Bush administration proposal totals $292 billion for fiscal 1991, will generate revenue for other programs and trigger economic growth.

Nomination opposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Groups representing teachers, probation officers and Washington-based liberals are joining in a campaign to derail the Bush administration's nominee as head of $81 million in juvenile justice programs.

"We vehemently oppose his appointment," says Kenneth F. Melley, the National Education Association's director of governmental relations.

The dispute centers on the nomination of Robert Sweet, a Senate Republican Policy Committee staff aide, to be administrator of the Justice Department's office of juvenile justice and delinquency prevention. Conservatives praise his record and say he has become the victim of an unreasonable attack on the part of liberals.

The agency funnels millions of dollars in federal grants designed to assist state and local government's in their fight against delinquency.

Campaign funds raised

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four Senate incumbents raised more than $3 million each last year in preparation for this year's elections, according to federal statistics that show total fund-raising of $62 million by all candidates.

Republican Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas topped the list with nearly $6 million in contributions, according to the analysis released Sunday by the Federal Election Commission.

Others in the top four were Sens. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., with $4.7 million; Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., with $3.6 million; and Paul Simon, D-Ill., with $3.3 million.

Twenty-two candidates reported contributions of more than $1 million, all of them incumbents except for three Republican House members and Texas Democrat Hugh Parmer, a state senator taking on Gramm.

Rep. Lynn Martin, R-Ill., reported raising $1.5 million for her challenge to Simon. The FEC said GOP Reps. Hank Brown of Colorado, running for an open seat, and Tom Tauke of Iowa, contesting incumbent Democrat Tom Harkin, also raised more than $1 million apiece last year.

Governors expect friendly meeting

WASHINGTON — President Bush is meeting with the nation's governors to promote "the future of our kids" by discussing the state leaders' revisions to his goals for U.S. schools to meet by the year 2000.

Leaders of the National Governors Association predicted an amicable meeting today since they made only minor changes in Bush's six goals. Their proposal to give education a share of any savings in defense spending was relegated to a resolution one governor said was so bland no one could object.

"I expect full well for the president to endorse what the governors have approved," NGA Chairman Terry Branstad of Iowa said after the group approved the changes on Sunday.

Later, at a dinner for the governors at the White House, Bush toasted them and "our commitment to work together toward ... an American education system that is second to none."

"We came together not as Republicans and Democrats, not as partisan competitors, but as fellow chief executives with our hearts and minds focused on a single goal: the future of our kids, the future of our country," said Bush.

Branstad said, "We all expect that there's a lot of work ahead of us."

Bush outlined the six goals in his State of the Union address last month. The governors spent two days tinkering with the language before they approved the goals and added a list of objectives for attaining them.

■ Related stories and graphics — 5A

The goals call for giving poor youngsters preschool services that include nutrition and health screening and making sure American students are competent in math, science, English, history and geography.

Attached to the goals is a document seeking a commitment "to provide at least one year of preschool for all disadvantaged children." It also said, "federal funds should target those students most in need of assistance due to economic disadvantage or risk of academic failure."

The resolution on defense savings called on the president "to dedicate the peace dividend in a balanced manner among the federal budget deficit, education" and other domestic programs.

New Jersey Gov. James Florio said the language "is so generalized, I don't know how anybody can be unhappy with that."

The governors rejected a proposal by Democratic Gov. Roy Romer of Colorado urging the president to "direct substantial federal resources from defense to educational needs and other productivity investments."

Post offices a place for free speech?

By RICHARD CARELLI

WASHINGTON (AP) — Are the sidewalks outside many post offices free-speech havens or speech-free zones?

The Supreme Court tackles that question today, and Bush administration lawyers want all Postal Service property declared off-limits to those who pass out literature or solicit contributions.

At issue in a case from Bowie, Md., is a federal regulation banning "soliciting, electioneering, collecting debts, vending and advertising" on Postal Service property.

A federal appeals court ruled in the Bowie case that the regulation impermissibly interferes with free-speech rights, but other courts have upheld the ban.

The high court's decision is expected by July.

Marsha Kokinda and Kevin Pearl were arrested outside the Bowie post office Aug. 6, 1986, after they refused to stop soliciting contributions and distributing literature from a table they had set up on a sidewalk adjacent to the building.

The two are volunteers for the National Democratic Policy Committee, the political arm of an organization headed by political extremist Lyndon LaRouche.

The two were convicted of violating the federal regulation although there was no evidence they had blocked or interfered with people entering and leaving the post office.

Ms. Kokinda was fined $50 and sentenced to 10 days in jail. Pearl was fined $100 and given a suspended 30-day jail term.

The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals threw out the convictions — and the federal regulation — last January.

The appeals court rejected the government's argument that there is a difference between a city sidewalk, long recognized as a "public forum" where free-speech rights must be considered, and a sidewalk entirely on Postal Service property.

The post office in Bowie, like many in suburban and rural communities, is a free-standing building with its own sidewalk and parking lot. A municipal sidewalk runs in front of the post office property, separating the parking lot from the street.

The 4th Circuit court said Ms. Kokinda and Pearl had engaged in "classical political speech pursued peacefully in a place that traditionally has been held open to the public for expressive activities."

Government lawyers previously told the justices that conflicting rulings among federal appeals courts are preventing the Postal Service from enforcing "a single nationwide standard."

SCENES FROM 911

The poster on the wall at the central fire station says it clearly enough.

It reads: "And on the seventh day even He rested. We don't. Emergency Medical Services."

Such is the mission of the 141 firefighters and paramedics working out of Midland's nine fire stations. For them, life is a series of round-the-clock adventures in lifesaving and firefighting that can range from snuffing out minor grass fires to jump-starting heart attack victims to rescuing motorists trapped in burning vehicles.

"You never know what you're going to do," says Batallion Chief Gary Chastain, a 14-year veteran. "It's everthing from getting a kid out of a hole to getting a kid out of a tree."

Each shift sees 47 rescue workers distributed throughout the stations. Each shift lasts 24 hours, and firefighters and paramedics work only three shifts per nine days.

A shift begins at 8 a.m. The first task for a firefighter is scrutinizing a long checklist of the equipment kept on each fire vehicle. After that, there's a period set aside for exercise.

From there, the rescuers spend much of the day performing peripheral tasks like training exercises, checking hydrants to make sure they're functioning properly, or learning and studying new techniques of firefighting and lifesaving.

Since firefighters and paramedics have days off between each shift, many of them have jobs on the side. Midland's rescuers hold a wide variety of secondary jobs, such as nurses, electricians, plumbers and construction workers.

The unpredictable nature of being in the rescue business can be both a blessing and a burden. Midland's firefighters and paramedics can count on each shift presenting new challenges, but the fact that one day is never quite like another can be a drawback as well. Stress is one obvious by-product of the lifestyle. According to the Amercian Heart Association, firefighters are the most stressed workers in America.

"Every time the bell goes off you can check your pulse, and it might have doubled," Chastain says. "All the time in

West Texas counties fight nuclear dump site

FORT HANCOCK (AP) — Residents disagree with experts who say a proposed low-level radioactive waste dump will be a blessing to the local economy.

State officials contend that 33 people — 25 of whom will be hired locally — will work at the facility, which will have an annual payroll of $900,000 and pay up to $1 million in taxes annually.

But many Hudspeth County officials and leaders from nearby El Paso say potential problems outweigh the benefits.

"My main concern is that I don't think it's right to transport that stuff all the way across the state to be disposed of here in the desert," said Hudspeth County Judge Bill Love.

The dump would hold low-level radioactive wastes mostly from Texas nuclear plants, hospitals and research institutions.

The state must find a place to store low-level radioactive waste by 1993, when it will no longer have access to the three dumps that have been accepting such low-level wastes from throughout the United States — in Barnwell, N.C., Beatty, Nev., and Hanford, Wash. Federal law has allowed those sites to shut down.

Low-level radioactive waste is generally equipment, material and clothing that has been contaminated. Eighty percent of such waste in Texas would be in the form of by-products from two nuclear power generating plants, the South Texas Nuclear Project near Bay City and Comanche Peak near Glen Rose. The rest comes from such places as hospitals and research institutions.

Low-level waste is considered hazardous for as long as 300 years, and as a precautionary measure, the storage facility for such waste is supposed to be stable for 500 years, said Rick Jacobi, general manager of the state Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority.

Officials here and in nearby El Paso see the proposed site near Fort Hancock as an example of their political isolation.

"I think they said, 'Let's find a place where the senators and the judges can't run us off,'" said Mark Turnbough, a consultant hired by El Paso County, which has spent $1.5 million to fight plans for the facility.

A lawsuit, filed by El Paso and Hudspeth counties and scheduled for hearing April 16 in state district court in El Paso, alleges the authority did not study other potential locations adequately. The suit also says the Fort Hancock site is not suitable from environmental and public health standpoints.

The authority is several years away from getting a final designation of the site, officials said. It is expected to complete an informational report for public review and hold at least one public hearing.

Jacobi estimates that it will be mid-1993 before the Bureau of Radiation Control, part of the Texas Department of Health, issues a license.

Well-known carnival showman dies

DALLAS (AP) — Joseph Giacherio, who was a carnival showman for more than 50 years in the Southwest, died Sunday of a heart attack at Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas. He was 82.

Known as "Joe Murphy" in carnival show circles, Giacherio had owned and operated rides, games and food concessions that played the State Fair of Texas in Dallas for more than a half-century.

Giacherio was president of the Lone Star Showmans Club and the Hot Springs Showman Association.

Services for Giacherio will be 11:30 a.m. Tuesday in Dallas. Burial will be in Bessemer, Mich., where Giacherio was born.

400,000 souls revel in Galveston Mardi Gras

GALVESTON (AP) — The island's second weekend of Mardi Gras attracted more than 400,000 revelers who jammed the streets to toast the traditional Fat Tuesday.

Live bands played on downtown street corners as people twisted with Chubby Checker, jumped and shouted with Otis Day and the Nights, and rubbed navel-to-navel as Houston's Uptown Street Dance Company instructed the latest craze, the lambada.

"The mood strikes you and you can't help it," said Ligia Carpenter, a registered nurse from Clear Lake who sashayed to the rhythm of the Samba Police near the "Samba Jamba" stage on the Old Galveston Square.

"It's just unbelievable," said City Manager Doug Matthews as traffic backed up for 15 miles on the sunny Saturday afternoon. "This kind of weather tends to make people come and have a good time ... We want to be Houston's playground."

The "Carnaval de Brasil," this year's Mardi Gras theme in Galveston, was highlighted by the Momus Grand Night Parade Saturday, which featured 16 floats depicting Brazilian culture, 16 marching bands and more than 100 costumed dancers.

The parade squeezed down the narrow streets of the Strand, past tuxedo-clad celebrators who paid $275 each to attend a masked ball at the historic Tremont House.

Houston oilman-developer George Mitchell, who revived the annual celebrations in Galveston five years ago, led the well-heeled crowd. Mitchell, whose bald head was painted in swirling colors, was ecstatic over the turnout and the balmy 75-degree temperatures.

"We're entitled to it, after what happened last year," Mitchell said. Last year freezing weather was blamed for small crowds.

Mitchell was joined by noted Italian architect Aldo Rossi and Michael D. Anzilotti Jr., of Houston, in smashing champagne bottles at the base of a new arch monument.

Rossi designed the arch, and Anzilotti financed its construction.

To help celebrate Mardi Gras on the island, Alex Arizpe instructed lambada hopefuls to keep their knees bent and bodies low to the ground.

"As soon as you bend your knees, you can't help but shake it all," he said. He maintains anyone can do the lambada because of the simple, 1-2-3 beat.

But Eric Koehne, 23, a chemical company employee trying to turn dancer, was not so sure.

"I can't dance. But it's a lot of fun and she's a good teacher," he said of partner Lora Bromley, 23, a sales representative from Houston.

But Nathan Morris, 7, of Midlothian, excitedly out-twisted Chubby Checker when he was randomly called on stage with the '50s rocker.

"He loves music and he loves to dance," said Nathan's mother, Lisa Morris. "He watches 'Dirty Dancing' all the time."

High court closes out Pecos River dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today closed out a 16-year-old dispute over water from the Pecos River, saying New Mexico has agreed to pay Texas $14 million for past violations of an agreement between the two states.

The justices unanimously accepted the huge payment suggested by "special master" Charles J. Meyers, and previously agreed to by lawyers for both states.

The high court in 1987 had ruled that Texas was entitled to either money or extra water as compensation for New Mexico's past violations of the water-use agreement.

The dispute began in 1974, when Texas sought to sue New Mexico in the Supreme Court. A year later, the court agreed to hear the case even though it had not previously been aired in a lower court.

New Mexico's lawyers did not disagree that a 340,100 acre-feet water shortfall occurred in Texas from 1950 through 1983. But they initially objected to paying any compensation retroactively.

Meyers, the special master appointed by the justices to supervise the lawsuit between the two states, originally recommended that New Mexico pay back about 34,000 acre-feet of water a year for 10 years. But in 1987 the court said Meyers should consider letting New Mexico pay monetary damages instead.

The two states subsequently agreed on the $14 million payment.

In a brief, unsigned ruling today, the court said New Mexico must pay Texas by March 1 in final settlement of the dispute.

The court ruling also said that Texas has agreed to deposit $13.8 million of the money in the Texas Water Assistance Fund of the state's Water Development Board.

That money is "to be used for agricultural and irrigation projects ... and any necessary associated studies in the Texas counties of Loving, Ward, Reeves and Pecos," the court said.

"In funding such projects and studies," the ruling said, "the board shall give preference to projects and studies affecting surface water irrigators in the Red Bluff Water Power Control District in the four designated Texas counties, if appropriate."

The court said Texas' attorney general could treat the remaining $200,000 as fees incurred by his staff.

The case is Texas vs. New Mexico, 65 Original.

Teacher suspended over parking dispute, TSTA says

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

A state teacher group representative said today that a dispute over parking has led to a Midland Independent School District teacher's suspension.

Alamo Junior High School teacher David Spears was suspended with pay for "gross irregularities" in his grade book, said Kay Walling, Texas State Teachers Association regional representative.

However, Ms. Walling said the disciplinary action was a result of Spears' refusal to park in his reserved space in the 3800 W. Storey Ave. school's parking lot.

MISD board members will hold an open hearing on the case at 5 p.m. Thursday. District spokesman Ted Miller said the suspension has nothing to do with the parking dispute.

"That lady (Ms. Walling) needs to get a grip on reality," Miller said. "We would not terminate a person because they would refuse to park in their assigned parking spot."

Ms. Walling said the dispute began last November, when Spears was told by Principal David Adams that he could no longer park his truck on the street next to the school.

However, Spears' truck was too big to fit in the assigned space in the school parking lot, she said.

Adams threatened to suspend Spears, a science teacher and five-year MISD veteran, for three days without pay if he did not park his truck in the lot, Ms. Walling said.

On Dec. 1, 1989, Spears, represented by Ms. Walling, filed a grievance with the district complaining that it was unreasonable to keep him from parking legally on a public street, she said.

"The Midland Independent School District has done everything to avoid hearing this grievance," Ms. Walling said. "It's so ridiculous it's funny."

Earlier this month Spears was suspended with pay after school administrators investigated the teacher's grade book and lesson plans, Ms. Walling said.

Miller said school officials are still investigating Spears' grade book.

He said allowing the staff to park on the street poses a health hazard for the pupils. "The kids run out from in between the cars," he said.

FIRE

the back of your mind, you're waiting for the bell to go off."

In addition, rescue workers can never predict when a shift can be slow, busy or a little of both.

"We might have nothing for two or three days," Chastain says. "We might have 10 calls in four or five hours."

Being away from home for 24 hours at a time can be rough as well, he says.

"They're stuck here for 24 hours," he says. "You spend more time here than you do with your personal family."

Being a firefighter or paramedic is more than just a job for most of the men and women in the Midland Fire Department.

"It's hard to describe," Gonzales says. "I get a pretty good feeling when I go out and do good for somebody."

Chastain, though, says the biggest thrill for most firefighters, of course, is battling a structure fire.

"It's sad to see someone's house burn," he says. "But that's what we're here for. It's a challenge."

STATE IN BRIEF

Private hospital care for inmates saves funds

SNYDER (AP) — Sending inmates to a private hospital here rather than several hundred miles away to the Texas Department of Criminal Justice system's facility in Galveston is saving the state money, officials say.

The department has started sending prisoners to Cogdell Memorial Hospital, which has offered a 10 percent savings over the state's standard costs of treating inmates.

The change is due in part to the long distance between new west Texas prisons and the prison system's hospital in Galveston, said Tom Hochwalt, administrator of the Snyder hospital. The arrangement has helped the hospital attract specialists, he said.

The state contract enabled the hospital to hire 23 additional people for an inmate wing and to staff a medical and dental clinic at the 1,000-bed Price-Daniel unit near Snyder.

The hospital is projecting an 18 to 20 percent increase in net revenue, about $1.2 million, in 1990 from the Texas Department of Criminal Justice contract, Hochwalt said. The hospital is projecting a total net revenue of $6.6 million for this year, officials said.

Amnesty seekers exploited

DALLAS (AP) — Mexican workers applying for documentation under the 1986 U.S. Immigration Reform and Control Act are being exploited by some employers, who are paying salaries below $5,000 a year, according to a new study.

An examination of general amnesty applicants in South Texas and Special Agricultural Worker applicants in Pennsylvania — released in Tijuana, Mexico, Saturday — also indicated that some of the applicants are not having Social Security taxes taken out of their paychecks.

Sociology professor Judith Ann Warner of Laredo State University, who co-wrote the study, said inefficiencies within the Immigration and Naturalization Service have allowed some employers to take advantage of applicants with temporary residence.

That group, needing employment documentation to obtain permanent residence, often are unwilling to alert the INS about abuses by their employers, the study said.

"Many of them have a strong relationship with their employers," Ms. Warner said at the annual conference of the Association for Borderland Scholars.

Suspect in killing held

EL PASO (AP) — A man suspected of killing a U.S. Customs inspector by driving through an international bridge as the inspector clung to his van is charged in an arrest warrant with murder, police Lt. Paul Saucedo said today.

The man identified as Manuel Nevarez, 28, remains in the El Paso County Detention Center on a $250,000 bond that was set when the warrant was issued.

Nevarez was arrested Saturday after a five-day search, said Terry Kincaid, a spokesman for the FBI in El Paso.

El Paso police were holding another suspect in El Paso in connection with the case

Tim McCaghren, 35, died Tuesday of injuries he suffered the previous day while he was working at the Zaragosa international bridge.

MISD trustees will meet Tuesday

Staff Report

The Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees will meet at 4 p.m. Tuesday at the district administration building, 701 N. "N" St.

Board members will hear a report on the feasibility of reorganizing grade configurations to create more district classroom space.

Trustees are expected to vote on budget allocations for the 1990-91 school year and changes in MISD employee insurance coverage.

Trustees also are expected to vote on a proposal to lower entrance requirements for Level 3 of the Career Ladder merit pay system.

Accounting Game makes figures count

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Back when Bob Ricksecker ran a grocery store, the shelves were always stocked, the bills were always paid and the checkbook was always balanced.

But there was one thing he was never really sure of: Was he really making any money?

"We seemed to be making a profit, but were we?" he still asks himself nine years later.

It's hard to believe a man could run a business and never know his bottom line, but according to accounting teacher Susan Fine it's a common problem and it isn't just limited to small-town grocers and shopkeepers.

Fine recently enrolled Ricksecker and 24 other area business executives, office workers and others in "The Accounting Game," a $295 seminar in which she covers a college semester's worth of accounting in a single day.

Designed to overcome the average adult's inability to concentrate for longer than 50 minutes, the game turns facts, ledgers and figures into fun, thus keeping the players alert, interested and learning.

Fine, a former school teacher, said she can relate to people who find themselves mystified by numbers when running a business; she owns and operates a Vermont weight-loss franchise.

"When I bought it, I didn't even know what questions to ask," Fine told the players.

The game uses chants, dances, puppets, costumes, balloons, bells, whistles, table boards and game pieces and even 1950s rock'n'roll music to help transport modern business people back to childhood.

Players pretend to be 7- and 8-year-olds as they think in terms of fixed assets, accounts payable, retained earnings and other accounting terms while running a lemonade stand.

Participant Gary Roberts, president of First National Bank in Beeville, had 12 credit hours of accounting in college but said playing the game was still very helpful.

"What it did for me," Roberts said, "is help me think through some things that I hadn't thought about in a long time. I don't deal with the day-to-day numbers like you would in the accounting department, so, consequently, while I understand the principles, it was a refresher for me."

Roberts said most business owners have difficulty comprehending their finances.

"Ninety percent of the people I talk to in business that are successful don't even understand their own taxes," Roberts said. "They're doctors and lawyers and business people, and they think as long as there's money in the checking account they're making a profit."

Accounting Game instructor Susan Fine uses a puppet to help keep players alert.

Sometimes they only think they're making a profit, but can't prove it, and in fact are carrying losses and are in jeopardy of failing, he said.

Participants who were tested on accounting principles before and after the class improved their score by more than 60 percent, from an average score of 61 at the beginning to an average of 96 at the conclusion. Course and teacher approval ratings approached 100 percent.

More than 4,000 people throughout the United States took the course last year.

Sponsored locally by the Whittington & Cummins accounting firm, the game is operated by Quantum Educational Discoveries in Burlington, Vt. It is offered three times a year in Corpus Christi.

Mannti C. Cummins, a partner in the CPA firm, and other staff accountants intervene during the game to answer tricky questions as they arise.

Playing the game has helped him communicate with his clients, Cummins said.

"If you're going to be in business, you have to understand the language and that's what accounting is," Cummins said. "You have to be able to speak the language."

Lake Highlands wins academic championship

HOUSTON (AP) — The competition was close, but it was Richardson's Lake Highlands High School that garnered the most points to win the Texas Academic Decathlon.

Lake Highlands scored 45,515 points to claim victory Sunday and advance to the national competition in Des Moines, Iowa, April 19-21.

"We knew we were close, but we knew it was going to come down to the end," said coach Kris Whelan, wiping away tears. "It was within a few hundred points almost all the way throughout the competition."

Deer Park, last year's state winner, was runner-up with 45,141 points, followed by Richardson's J.J. Pearce with 44,068 points.

"Considering all the hours we spent working toward the final goal of national and winning it, it's sort of disappointing to come so close to the team that won and just winning second," said Ian Morgan Gross, 18, a senior at Deer Park. "If one person would have written a better essay, we could have won."

Alamo Heights was the winner of the small schools division — those with 1,000 or fewer students — with a team total of 36,899.

The awards were given at a banquet Sunday following two days of competition.

Deer Park won the Super Quiz event, which featured fast-paced questioning on a single topic. The American Indian was this year's topic.

Students compete individually in seven-minute interviews, give two speeches, write an hour-long essay, and take 30-minute exams in math, science, social science, economics, language-literature and fine arts.

The six-member teams and three alternates compete in divisions by grade averages: Honors, A-average; Scholastic, B-average; or Varsity, C-average.

Lake Highlands senior Jody Utter took first place in the individual Varsity competition, having finished in the top three in four of the 10 events.

"In regionals I came in first place also, but the state is really wide open," said Utter, 17, as six medals on red, white and blue ribbons dangled from his neck. "I'm looking forward to winning at nationals."

Utter, who won a $1,500 scholarship as a member of the nine-member winning team and a $4,000 scholarship for his individual award, plans to attend the University of Texas next fall.

"I definitely needed the money," said teammate David Campbell, who plans to attend Tulane University.

In addition to the team award, Campbell won third place in the Varsity Division for the overall individual scores, which carries a $2,000 scholarship.

"It's 51 percent coaches and 49 percent personal work," said Campbell, adding that team members studied about 30 hours a week together over their individual time for the competition.

First place individual winners in each division were Sean Grimsley, Berkner High, honors; Gregg Costa, Richardson High, scholastic; and Utter, Varsity.

In the Super Quiz, three schools tied for second-place honors: Kempner High, North Garland High and Dobie High.

Deer Park finished in second place nationally last year, while Pearce won state and national titles in 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1988. Dulles High School won the state event in 1987 and placed second nationally that year.

Link between education gains, money not obvious

DALLAS (AP) — As state lawmakers try to create an equitable system of school finance in a special session that starts Tuesday, some scholars warn it is difficult to define the link between spending and student achievement.

The Texas Supreme Court declared the current system unconstitutional because of vast disparities in the amount spent per pupil among the state's more than 1,000 school districts.

Studies that show increases in funding did little to improve student achievement have led scholars to suggest restructuring teaching strategies, The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday.

"It doesn't say that no programs work," said Eric Hanushek, a University of Rochester economist whose analysis of 187 studies found few correlations between educational program changes and subsequent student achievement.

"What it does say is that some programs work, some programs don't work, and that overall you shouldn't expect much of a gain," Hanushek said.

"In the research we are doing, we are not finding much connection between the amount spent and educational output," said Gary Orfield, a professor at the University of Chicago.

Although some studies found that certain factors improved achievement, the majority of the research detected no improvement. In fact, several studies found that student achievement dropped after the supposed improvements were put in place.

"What we find in general is that we reduce class sizes by a couple of students across the district, and the teachers don't change their behavior one bit. And costs went up by 10 percent," Hanushek said.

But there is evidence that the traditional method of funneling additional funds into classrooms will produce improvements — as long as the money is spent on a specific goal.

"Let's say you wanted to improve the health of people in Dallas, so you gave the hospitals twice the money. The impact would likely be minimal," said Robert Slavin, a researcher at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

"But," he said, "if you identified some specific diseases and then found cures and put the money there, you would see better health."

Records sought to keep Vietnamese boy in jail

The boy said he believed Vietnamese friends who told him that lying about his age would result in probation. Dallas County authorities accepted Luan's story and tried him as an adult.

DALLAS (AP) — Prosecutors searching for evidence to prove that they did not send an underaged Vietnamese refugee to prison are also trying to make sure the right person was convicted.

Luan Van Hoang, believed to be 17, has already spent four years in a maximum security prison. Documents show he was only 13 when he was sentenced to 38 years in an adult prison.

Luan originally was tried in 1986 as an adult on charges of aggravated robbery after he gave police a fictitious name and claimed to be 17, officials said.

Last week, District Judge Jack Hampton ordered the teen-ager returned to Dallas for a hearing to determine his actual age.

Luan's age, however, no longer remains the only question about his conviction, The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday. A transcript of testimony in his trial raises the issue of whether officials prosecuted the right person.

Luan said he told authorities his name was Michael Nguyen and that he was 17 to avoid being returned to the Juvenile Court in Riverside County, Calif., where he had spent eight months of a nine-month term for joyriding and auto theft.

The boy said he believed Vietnamese friends who told him that lying about his age would result in probation. Dallas County authorities accepted Luan's story and tried him as an adult.

In 1986, police portrayed Luan as the "ring leader" of a youth gang that committed a series of armed robberies in Dallas County. Luan was identified during his trial as a gun-wielding robber.

But Luan, who did not testify in his trial and appeared with an interpreter, said he waited outside the home of a Vietnamese couple in Carrollton, a Dallas suburb, while they were robbed by four of his companions. He said he did not enter the home, use a gun or receive any of the proceeds from the robbery.

Testimony in Luan's trial reveals several inconsistencies.

Luan, abandoned by his companions, was arrested less than an hour after the robbery at a car wash, where police found a broken watch worth $50 and a costume jewelry pin worth $5, taken during the robbery. A $1,500 gold chain and $2,000 in cash were among other items stolen in the robbery.

Not explained in the trial is why the alleged gun-toting "ring leader" of the robbery gang would be stranded at a car wash by his subordinates and left with the least valuable items taken in the heist.

Carrollton police obtained what appears to be a statement from Luan that says he was at the scene of the robbery. But his signature doesn't match other signatures on family letters and official documents, the newspaper said.

"I never signed it," Luan said. "I know it was somebody else. It was somebody else's statement, not me."

The statement, in which Luan purportedly admits to being a "lookout" but not entering the house — wasn't used as evidence in the trial.

Testimony showed that police were unable to find Luan's fingerprints at the robbery site. The state's case against Luan hinged on the testimony of a victim who, according to the police report, was blindfolded during much of the robbery, the newspaper reported.

Prosecutors, however, have requested information from California authorities that they hope will challenge the growing number of records — some of them sworn statements — that show Luan would have been 13 at the time of his trial.

Luan was returned to Dallas from the Texas Department of Corrections last week after the newspaper reported that immigration and school records show he was born Oct. 10, 1972.

Liver-recipient taken off respirator Sunday

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Stormie Jones, the world's first and longest surviving heart-liver transplant patient, got some good news as she continued to recover from her second liver transplant.

Stormie, 12, of White Settlement, Texas, was listed in critical but stable condition this morning in the intensive care unit of Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh, the hospital said.

Stormie was listed as critical Sunday afternoon, but was upgraded after she was taken off a respirator about 7 p.m. and was breathing on her own, according to a hospital spokeswoman.

The girl had been placed back on a respirator to relieve breathing problems she experienced Friday after fluid began collecting in her lungs and other parts of her body.

Her doctors were "trying to give her body a chance to rid itself of some of the fluids," spokeswoman Lynn McMahon said.

Physicians downgraded Stormie's condition to critical, a step down from critical but stable, when she was placed on the respirator. She was listed as critical but stable after Tuesday's 10-hour transplant and a subsequent nine-hour operation Wednesday to halt internal bleeding.

Soviet emigre may not know English but he knows our jazz

By BILL MARVEL
The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS (AP) — Monday night jam sessions at D'Jazz club draw an eclectic crowd, from haute amateurs to grizzled veterans of the Dallas jazz scene.

There's a dentist who regularly flies his plane down from Tulsa to jam for a few hours. Saxophonist Marchel Ivery, dean of the local scene, might drop by, or Tim Alexander, accordionist with the country-swing band "Asleep At The Wheel."

But this Monday night is special. All the way from Moscow, just three days off the plane, a very nervous Gregory Slavin sits down at the piano. Every eye in the room is on him. He's going to play the jazz standard "Green Dolphin Street;" that much has been established. But nobody's sure yet what key he's going to play it in.

Slavin doesn't know any English and the other musicians don't know any Russian.

Within a few bars, everybody in the north Dallas club agrees that Slavin may not know English, but he sure speaks the language.

The language is jazz, and Slavin has been speaking it since he played Gershwin as a Moscow teen-ager. He learned it from the black market Charlie Parker records, passed along the Moscow underground, and from jazz broadcasts on the Voice of America.

"He would stand in front of the music stores and ask if anyone had any records to trade," says his friend, Lev Zaltsberg, translating. "Records went from hand to hand, to the point where you couldn't even decipher them."

He listened to and absorbed others over the years — Bud Powell, Miles Davis, Marian McPartland — but Charlie Parker remains a favorite.

"After Charlie Parker, music changed a great deal," says Zaltsberg, still translating. "He was the first. He opened the door."

It was Lev Zaltsberg who brought Slavin here — to the United States, to Dallas to D'Jazz Club. "He's my best friend," says Zaltsberg, a food-service manager for a retirement home.

"I've known him since we were 8-year-olds in Moscow. We sat side by side in school."

Eventually, Slavin went on to conservatory training, and in 1976 Zaltsberg emigrated to the United States. "The chances were we'd never see each other again," he says. But a little over a year ago, when Zaltsberg's aunt came to Dallas to visit, she brought a message from Gregory.

"I couldn't believe it. He found her through God-knows-what source — the grapevine, I guess — and gave her his telephone number."

Zaltsberg called his old friend in Moscow, and the two began writing regularly, taking up their friendship where they had left it 13 years before.

Slavin had built quite a career for himself, as careers go in the Soviet Union. He was teaching improvisation in a Moscow conservatory, performing concerts and playing in a chic nightclub, "The Prague," right next to the Kremlin.

The concerts paid well, he says, but the repertory was controlled by the Ministry of Culture, an agency not known for venturesome tastes. At least the "Prague" patrons were willing to listen to some jazz along with a steady stream of 1960s-era Russian and American popular songs, such as "Sonny," and "Yesterday."

Not surprisingly, Slavin had been thinking of leaving the Soviet Union.

"I told him I have limited facilities," Zaltsberg says, "but I would love for him to come here and I would do my best for him. I told him that Texans were very friendly."

Although not a jazz fan himself, he set about finding a club where Gregory might at least get acquainted with the local jazz scene. When he spotted a newspaper ad for D'Jazz, he phoned the manager and asked if he could bring Gregory in.

There is an irony in all this. During the years Slavin was scrounging for records, for any scrap of information on jazz, the music was becoming an endangered species here in the land of its birth. One by one, the old Dallas jazz clubs dropped by the wayside, pushed out by the business of rock.

D'Jazz is one of the very last places in the city where the faithful still gather.

"It's very tough to make it here as a jazz musician," says manager Michele Sanders. Most of those who show up to play Monday nights work regular eight-hour jobs before they come to the club. Few earn their livings as musicians.

Slavin says he is amazed that, in the face of such difficulties, the musicians remain so dedicated to jazz.

But his biggest surprise has been the warmth and openness with which the other musicians have accepted him. "The second day he was here," Zaltsberg says, "he felt like he knew everybody."

Since his debut, Slavin has been here almost every Monday night. In the meantime, word has spread through the jazz grapevine and local musicians have been dropping by to listen and to play with him.

Ms. Sanders has offered to open the club during the day while she works in the office, so he can practice on the club's big Steinway.

"He's an excellent player," says her husband, Robert Clayton Sanders, who plays piano and recorder and organizes Monday's jam sessions at the club. "It speaks to his classical training."

It also speaks to those years listening to scratchy jazz records.

"You can hear Bud Powell in his playing," Sanders says.

"His improvisation is good," says Mark Magilow, a corporate attorney who plays alto sax. "But he's a good product of whatever records he has been able to get on the black market."

For example, Magilow notes Slavin plays "Green Dolphin Street" in the key of C, instead of the E-flat it was written in, because that's how he learned it from the Miles Davis record.

"He has a tendency to play behind the beat a little bit," adds Magilow.

Magilow has given Slavin a copy of the "Real Book," an unofficial and unauthorized compilation of American tunes and songs that is every jazzman's companion and bible.

"I'm trying to find him a happy-hour job playing the piano," Ms. Sanders said, "something I feel he can do where he's not going to have a lot of requests."

In the meantime, there are Monday nights at D'Jazz.

On a recent Monday, there was one of those brief, transcendental moments when jazz players inspire each other, when the music catches fire. Slavin had started improvising on a minor blues theme. Then tenor saxophonist Charles Walker picked it up and carried it out of sight. Slavin was listening intently, watching out of the corner of his eye. When his turn came, he answered with great blocks of chords, partly jazz but also partly Rachmaninoff. Robert Sanders rounded things out with a gentle passage on the recorder.

Afterward, everybody knew they had done something extraordinary together. Still grinning, Walker walked over the shake hands with the piano player who had come all the way from Russia. They didn't say anything. But they didn't need to.

Search for grill marks leads to the 'frank ad'

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — The search for fake grill marks on hot dogs has spawned a promising by-product that advertisers may relish: frankfurter ads.

A peek between the buns could reveal "Hebrew National," "Go Dodgers" or some other promotional message tattooed on the frankfurter, if Viskase Corp.'s idea takes hold.

Viskase, one of the world's biggest producers of hot dog holders, has developed the E-Z Mark Nojax cellulose casing. The company says it allows a hot dog maker to transfer a message printed in a "USDA-approved food-grade ingredient" from the casing to the meat.

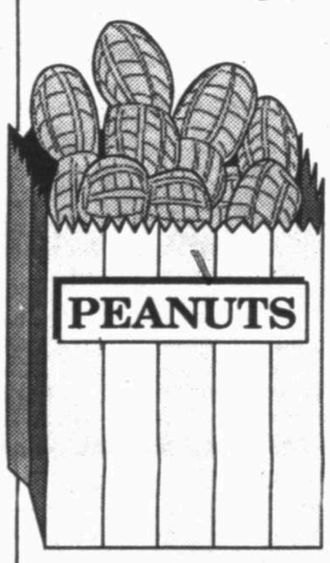
Viskase spokesman Doug Morris says the company steamed up the idea of making the hot dog an edible billboard while trying to figure out how to put fake grill marks on franks to make them look barbecued.

Morris predicted that the printed dogs could begin turning up at special events and promotions within two months.

But John Trosper of ARA Leisure Services Inc., concessions manager at Anaheim Stadium, said he's not sure the idea would work at the ballpark's high-volume refreshment stands.

"Our hot dogs are already cooked and in a bun and wrapped when they're sold," he said. "You wouldn't see (the message). And by the time you unwrap it, where is it? It could be face down, in mustard and ketchup."

A nut by any other name



Some nuts grow on trees, and some fruits bear nuts, but there is one nut hiding out in the pea and bean family that is really not a nut at all. The name is "Peanut" – classification: legume. You may find them in candy bars or posing as nuts at parties. This American favorite grows underground at the root of the peanut plant, where its seeds are encased in a shell-like pod, waiting to be dug up and used for food, oil, soaps or paint. Nearly half of all peanuts eaten by Americans are made into peanut butter, while a quarter are sold as dry roasted snacks. Despite not being real nuts, they're just as nutritious and full of protein as almonds, cashews or pistachios.

Kristofferson has new album, new cause

Associated Press

Kris Kristofferson and his band, the Borderlords, have been touring to promote their new album, "Third World Warrior." And from March 3 through 17, Johnny Cash, Willie Nelson, Waylon Jennings and Kristofferson tour — for the first time together — promoting their new album, "Highwayman 2."

All four were present during all the recording, Kristofferson says, though they didn't all play and sing on every track.

"We will on the road. We'll all be on stage, backing each other up the whole time. That could be interesting. You've got four total individuals who are known for going their own way.

"I had to laugh. Waylon, referring to Willie and John, said, 'Now, if we can get Truman and MacArthur to decide which is going to come out of the plane first ... ' That's one thing that will save us. Those guys have a sense of humor."

People who've heard Kristofferson recently have heard "Sandinista" and "Aguila Del Norte" ("Eagle From the North"), songs on "Third World Warrior." He says, "I've been singing some of them for a couple of years now.

"It is really interesting to me the way the reception is changing. When I was first getting involved in Nicaragua, there was some opposition to the message and a lot of lack of comprehension. Now people are really receptive. We (America) have a terrible record of interference in El Salvador and Nicaragua.

"It surprises me to read polls that 80 percent of the population supports the invasion of Panama and Bush has the highest rating of any president. You would expect I would be running into some opposition on the road.

"It's just the opposite. It reminds me of the '60s.

"We played Raleigh last night. A guy who interviewed me said he didn't know what kind of reception we'd get; the last standing ovation was for Lee Greenwood singing 'I'm Proud To Be an American.' It was packed. The whole place was rocking."

About his songs, Kristofferson says, "I've always written what I felt passionately about, making love or loneliness or social concerns."

The first song by him that somebody recorded, in 1965, was an anti-protest Vietnam talking blues. "It was 180 degrees from where I came to be on the war. I got hot looking at a bunch of protestors I didn't understand. All my friends were in Vietnam."

For "Highwayman 2," on Columbia Records, a follow-up to 1985's "Highwayman," Kristofferson contributed two songs, "Anthem '84" and "Living Legend."

'Bear repair' goal of MMH auxiliary's annual clinic

Midland Memorial Hospital had an influx of new "patients" Sunday afternoon when about 500 Midland children and their parents brought sick teddy bears, bunnies, dolls, dinosaurs and other assorted friends to be cured of their ills. The event was the third annual Teddy Bear Clinic, sponsored and presented by Midland Memorial Hospital Auxiliary.

Parents with children clutching well-loved toys lined up at "admitting" tables at the hospital's Ohio Street entrance, as auxiliary members checked in "sick" toys. Each child and his or her toy were given matching identification numbers, then the toys were whisked to "surgery," where auxiliary members and other volunteers sewed up ripped seams, patched torn paws, fixed missing ears and repainted smiles.

While their friends were being repaired, children were taken on tours of the hospital. Auxiliary members guided the tours, showing the children the emergency room area, the surgery area, testing and diagnosis, and even the inside of an ambulance. The children were fingerprinted, for their parents to keep, and were given teddy bear cookies prepared by auxiliary members. "We baked 1,000 cookies," said Elsie Hugly, public relations volunteer for the auxiliary.

At the end of the tour, children were reunited with their friends, who had been "cured" of their ills and "discharged" from the hospital. "If they can't be cured, we give them a 'purple heart,'" said Carol Hobbs, auxiliary member.

A display of health- and safety-oriented brochures and information was set up in the hospital's lobby for parents read while the children were on their tours. Agencies providing information and personnel for the display area included American Cancer Society, Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD), Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program (CAPP), Rape Crisis Center and Clearview.

The auxiliary presents the annual Teddy Bear Clinic to "familiarize children with the hospital, so if they have to come in later, they are not fearful," Ms. Hugly said. "We have found that children who have done this when it is fun, then when they come in as patients, or if they have a parents in the hospital, they are not as frightened. It's a community service."

'Cute litte teddy bear' doubles as car alarm system

Copley News Service

To keep crooks out of your car just put a cute little teddy bear inside.

Actually, it's a new security device hidden inside a teddy bear that sounds an alarm when it detects motion.

The Security Bear is 12 inches tall and is equipped with a system that detects any changes in the internal pressure of your car.

When it does, Mr. Bear emits a 110-decibel alarm. The manufacturer claims the sound is so loud it's like having a fire engine inside your car.

Charlie Brown teaches children about cancer

Associated Press

"You're not going to die, are you?" asked Charlie Brown.

"Good grief!" said Linus. "What kind of question is that?"

It's the kind of question that children — and adults — want to ask when a friend becomes ill, especially when that friend has cancer.

"Why, Charlie Brown, Why? A Story About What Happens When a Friend Is Very Ill" by Charles M. Schulz was developed in cooperation with the American Cancer Society, "with special thanks" to the California Division, American Cancer Society, and Sylvia Cook of Stanford's Children's Hospital.

It tells the story of Janice, who is diagnosed with leukemia. Janice and Linus are good friends, and after a visit to the hospital, Linus asks the question, "Why, Charlie Brown, why?" Charlie Brown has no answer.

The book talks about the fear that cancer is contagious, and shows the reaction of classmates and siblings who feel Janice is getting too much attention.

Schulz has interspersed the story with humorous moments, including Snoopy racing up and down the hospital steps, dressed as "the world famous surgeon."

The publisher says a specialist in childhood illnesses first suggested the book to Schulz as an educational film. Schulz worked with Pharos Books, the American Cancer Society and CBS-TV to produce the full-color trade paperback book and a 30-minute animated television show. (The tentative air date for the CBS-TV special is Friday, March 16.)

CELEBRATE THE SEQUEL

Real life doesn't have to be like the movies. You know the problem: the first show brings excitement and acclaim, the second is judged against the first, groans and gags accompany the third. How many jokes did you hear about the last in the series of Star Trek movies?

But real life doesn't have to be like the movies. In a couple's relationship, the first year brings excitement, the second can build stability, rich appreciation can accompany the third. Yes, there are lots of jokes about bad relationships. That's what makes the sequel so worth celebrating in relationships that work.

Gemstones, those precious gifts of nature chosen for their scarcity, their durability, and their beauty, are an excellent choice to celebrate the sequel. This anniversary list will help you really celebrate.

'The Donald' is also a duck

By LINDA ROSENKRANTZ
Copley News Service

There aren't many people around who can remember when Mickey Mouse was a brat. But for a few years after his creation in 1928, Mickey was capable of out-menacing Dennis by pulling on cows' udders and banging on their teeth as if they were xylophone keys, tormenting cats in ways that would be beyond the dreams of any ordinary rodent.

But, like all naughty little boys, Mickey had to be either punished or reformed, and in this particular mouse's case, it was the latter.

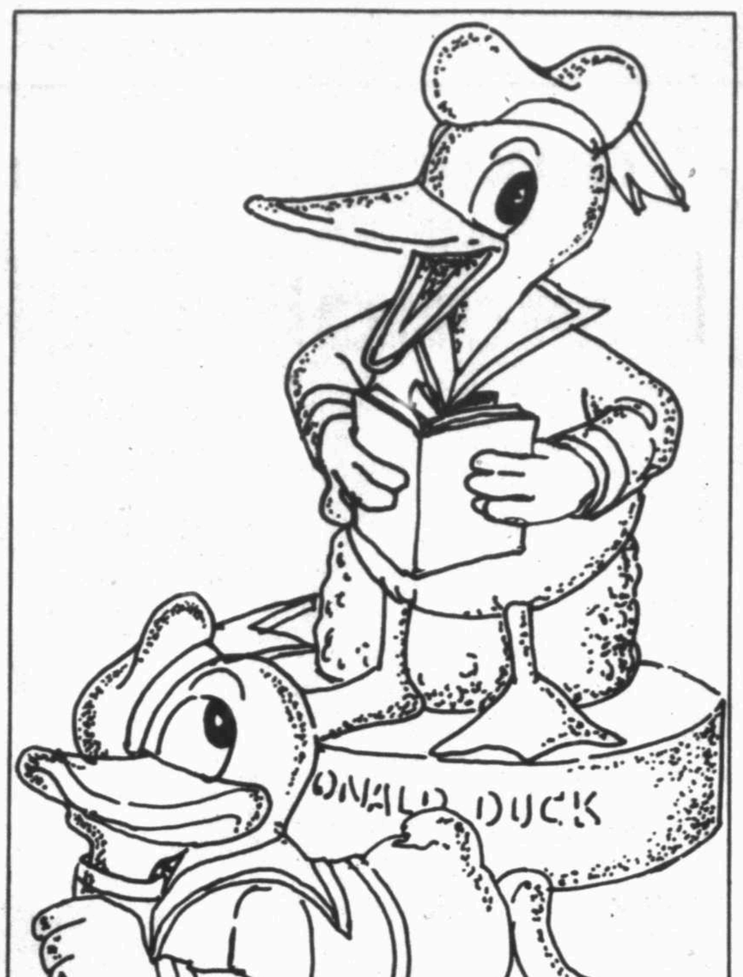
With the immediate surge of popularity of the character — by 1930 he had become an international celebrity — there came a backlash of criticism, both from individual moms and such organizations as the PTA, protesting that Mickey was not a suitable role model for their children.

The Disney organization responded to this outcry, and before long Mickey was no sassier than Andy Hardy, a veritable Goody Two-Shoes.

But how to fill the Disagreeability Gap? Clearly, a character with the spunk of the old (young) Mickey, who could vent the public rage against the inequities of the Depression, was needed and the opportunity to fulfill this need came in the form of a bit player in the 1934 cartoon, "The Wise Little Hen." The following year, the loud, squawking quacks of Donald Duck all but overwhelmed Mickey in his first color short, "The Band Concert," and a star was born.

In the sphere of merchandising as well, the Duck was second only to the Mouse. There have been such masses of material, in fact, that any listing becomes a catalog of Disney product in general.

A glance through Tom Tombusch's invaluable four-volume "Tomart's Illustrated Disneyana Catalog and Price Guide" finds Donald (his beak gradually growing shorter with the passing years until the present size was reached in 1938) prominent in just about every category: books, including Big Little Books, coloring books, cut-out books pop-up books and comics, ceramic, wood, plastic and rubber figures, glass ashtrays, rubber balls, toy cars and planes, Christmas tree ornaments, clocks and watches, cookie jars and cookie cutters, dolls and stuffed animals, puppets and marionettes, board and card games, puzzles, pull toys, lamps, jewelry, lunch boxes, banks, telephones and tea sets — to name just a few.



CNS Graphic

As might be expected, prices move all across the board for Donald Duck collectibles, since a trip to Disneyland can still produce any number of currently manufactured items. But the prices for early rarities, especially those with the long-beaked Don, are escalating rapidly. Here are a few examples from the third edition of "Warman's Americana and Collectibles:"

- Plaster bank in blue, orange and red with green base, raised hand holds a round object, c. 1940 — $25.
- Plaster bookends, green, red, yellow and brown. Donald carrying school books, c. 1940 — $75.
- Eleven-by-16-inch glazed china cookie jar, c. 1940 — $50.
- Glazed china lamp, Donald standing in front of anchor, c. 1940 — $60.
- Eleven-inch red wood marionette, wearing red jacket and black hat, Madame Alexander, 1938 — $150.
- Watch with color image on blue ground, Donald's hands point to numbers, c. 1948 — $140.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am an adult woman whose mother-in-law is always telling me how bad smoking is for me. Every time you have something in your column about smoking, she clips it and mails it to me. I read your column every day and she knows it — but she sends these articles anyway.

Van Buren

The point is if my mother-in-law didn't have any bad habits of her own, I would be touched by her concern about my health. But she drinks coffee all day long. Everybody knows that coffee is a health hazard, so look who's talking. I wish people would clean up their own backyards before criticizing someone else's.

Abby, please print something about the dangers of too much coffee. And thank you for not using my name or town. — ME

DEAR ME: The most important ingredient in coffee, which accounts for its popularity, is caffeine — a drug that stimulates the central nervous system and provides that "lift" most coffee drinkers enjoy. It's also a morning waker-upper and a quick pick-me-up during the day. (Legend has it that its sleep-inhibiting properties led to coffee's discovery thousands of years ago by Arabian shepherds who noticed that their sheep walked around all night after eating berries of the coffee plant.)

Most physicians agree that an excess of caffeine can cause insomnia, irregular or rapid heartbeat, upset stomach, high blood pressure and nervousness.

Obviously, habitual coffee drinkers hurt only themselves, while habitual smokers (unless they never smoke in the presence of others) offend — and possibly harm — those around them.

DEAR ABBY: "No problem" is getting to be a replacement for "You're welcome." This irks me. I didn't mean to be a "problem." — JANE IN SUN CITY WEST, ARIZ.

DEAR JANE: Apparently it doesn't take much to irk you. In response to "Thank you," "You're welcome" acknowledges, rather stiffly, that a "thank you" was in order.

"No problem" is a less formal way of saying, "Aw — it was no big deal."

DEAR ABBY: Albeit a very late but heartfelt response to "Alone in Wichita, Kan.," who caught herpes from her husband: Please let her know that she is not alone.

Having herpes made it easy for me to say "No." I never let it keep me from dating and having a normal social life, but if it came to the point where sex was the question, I would ask myself if I knew this person well enough to tell him that I had herpes.

If the answer was no, I said no to sex. I felt that any man who was interested in me as a person would stick around anyway — and they generally did.

I was not promiscuous. I was a healthy, attractive young woman who was divorced at 24 and had only one relationship at a time. So, please tell "Alone" that there are plenty of right people out there who will not let a little thing like herpes stand in the way of a loving relationship. I know. I was lucky enough to find one. We've been happily married for four years. — ALIVE AND WELL IN GEORGIA

DEAR ABBY: The following incident just happened, and it occurred to me that you could publicize it to warn others:

One recent afternoon, a man phoned and asked if I was "Mrs. G" living at (my address). I verified the facts, then he said he handles my account at the bank and asked me if I would be so kind as to get my Visa and Mastercard so he could check the numbers and expiration dates, as the bank is issuing new cards and he wanted the information to be correct.

I laughed and told him he must be out of his mind to think I would give that kind of information over the telephone. Then I hung up.

After thinking it over, I wondered how many people would give out such information without stopping to realize that banks don't operate that way. I called the police department and reported the incident, and I was transferred to the bunco squad, who happily took all the information and said I was a "smart lady" because, since the caller already had my name, address and telephone number, all he needed were my credit card numbers to make purchases by phone. Now, THAT is something I sure don't need!

Abby, please let people know that if they ever get a telephone call (supposedly from a bank employee) asking to "verify" their credit card numbers, they should get the person's name and call the bank to verify it. JUNE G. IN DEL MAR, CALIF.

DEAR JUNE G.: You are, indeed, a "smart lady" — and thanks for a valuable tip! You deserve a lot of credit.

DEAR ABBY: We must take exception to the nurse's comments that dogs are trained and nurses are educated.

As technical training specialists, we often ask a question that clearly distinguishes between training and education: Would you rather have your child attend sex-education classes or sex-training classes?

If we must have a shot, or have blood drawn, we would want our nurses to be not only well-educated, but also well-trained. — BRETT CREASY AND FAYE FAILEY, RICHMOND WORKS TRAINING ORGANIZATION, RICHMOND, VA.

Don't put off writing thank-you notes, letters of sympathy, etc., because you don't know what to say. Get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Midland High's Jamey Johnson (3) and Kentaro Sakuri of Midland Lee fight over the ball in Saturday's cross-town battle. Both teams gear up for play Tuesday.

Kickers' playoff hopes alive

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Time has passed, but nothing else has really changed for either local entry in the District 3 soccer wars after Midland High and Midland Lee finished in a 1-1 tie Saturday.

Midland High is still tied for second place — though not with the same team — going into a match with Odessa Permian at 4:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Midland Freshman field.

And Midland Lee still has a flicker of playoff hope going into Tuesday's match at last-place Odessa High, though Rebel coach Eddie Bull admits that his fifth-place squad will have to win their last five matches to justify that hope.

Both local teams will have to compete without some key players Tuesday in the aftermath of Saturday's wild match, which featured 50 fouls and five cards.

Midland High will go without midfielder Chris Lanning, who picked up his third yellow card of district play Saturday and thus must miss one game. However, Bulldog coach Tom Esikhati welcomes back Chris' brother Jeff Lanning, who missed the Lee game after picking up his third yellow against Abilene High last Tuesday.

Also, leading scorer Shane Barden is doubtful after spraining an ankle in the 13th minute of Saturday's match. Barden tried to play in the second half, but was ineffective.

Midland Lee will have an even more extreme numbers problem Tuesday. It would be more of a problem if the Rebs were playing anyone but hapless Odessa High, but still — fullbacks Russ Moore and Marc Wittman will have to sit after three yellows, while forward Mark Ferguson will be out after picking up a red card for foul language toward the end of the first half Saturday.

Bull said the remainder of the district schedule works in the Rebels' favor. "We get Odessa (High) out of the way, then we have two tough ones (San Angelo and Abilene High) here before our open date.

"We have a legitimate chance at the playoffs," Bull said. "If we win the rest of them, we're no worse than second."

Meanwhile, Esikhati just wants to overcome a lackluster home field record on Tuesday. Both Bulldog losses in district play have come at the Midland Freshman field.

Time runs short for baseball settlement

NEW YORK (AP) — Will the baseball season start on time or will it be delayed?

Though no one knows the answer, today's bargaining session between players and owners may hold the answer.

On the 12th day of the spring training lockout, negotiators will go at it again, with the issue of salary arbitration eligibility still holding up an agreement.

Donald Fehr and Chuck O'Connor didn't have much to say to each other Sunday, leaving just one day before baseball talks take a break that threatens the start of the season on April 2.

Fehr will head to Phoenix tonight for an executive board meeting Tuesday and he said he'll probably spend the rest of the week on the road. Owners have meetings for three days next week in Dallas, so not much negotiating time is left before it becomes to late to start the season as scheduled.

The talks are statemated over the union's demand that eligibility for arbitration be rolled back to two years, where it was before the 1985 agreement. The first signs of a split among the players appeared today, when several Pittsburgh Pirates were quoted as saying they differed from the union leadership.

"We feel it's going to be awful tough for the owners to give back that year, so if it's the only thing holding this back, why not go ahead and agree?" pitcher Bob Kipper was quoted as saying in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette. "Who's complaining? Probably the first-and second-year players. But I didn't complain after two years."

"I have mixed emotions," pitcher Neal Heaton was quoted as saying. "Basically, it's for the younger players. I'm kind of leaning toward, 'Let's sign.' This is getting ridiculous. I'm ready to go."

"I'm 20 days short of having two years in, so it would benefit me," shortstop Jay Bell was quoted as saying. "But if that's the only holdup, if that's the only issue we're squabbling over, I don't think it's that big an issue. Let's keep it at three years. It's not that big a deal. We've gone four years with it at three years, and it's worked out well. If we're good enough to stick around for three years, we're going to get paid. We're ready to get started to get ready to play."

If Fehr does not return to the bargaining table for a while, opening day is threatened, since both sides say players need three-to-four weeks of spring training and several more days to travel to camp.

Fehr said he spoke on the telephone with Commissioner Fay Vincent and O'Connor, management's chief negotiator, but said it was "nothing much."

"Some 'How you doings?' 'Got any ideas?' 'Nope.' 'None,' stuff," Fehr said.

"Somebody called me this morning and asked if I had any bright ideas," Fehr said earlier, without identifying the caller. "I said, 'No.'"

Devils, Tors in area

By BILL GRIMES

After the Rankin boys basketball team beat Grady 83-60 last Thursday in Class A bi-district action at the Chaparral Center, Red Devil head coach Ken Peel went on a fishing expedition.

But instead of going to Lakes Spence or Colorado City, the Red Devil mentor went to the Rankin record books to see if the Red Devils had ever won a playoff game.

"This is the farthest the Rankin boys have ever been (in the playoffs)," Peel said. "I was searching through the records and I can't see where they've ever won."

Tuesday, the 20-2 Red Devils will try for their first-ever Region I tournament berth in area round action against 11-4 Fort Hancock at 7 p.m. in Alpine. In other area round action, Lamesa will try to get past Dalhart at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in Hereford.

Fort Hancock hammered Fort Davis 84-52 in bi-district action Friday, behind 24 points by Chris Gomez and 14 by Jaime Aguilar. But while Peel is wary of the Mustangs' full-court press, he doesn't hesitate to remind anybody that his Red Devils can run with anybody.

And, Peel thinks there are a few things working in Rankin's favor against Fort Hancock.

"I think we're a little bit quicker than they are, and we'll get on the boards a little better than they do," Peel said.

"If we can handle their press, we can score a lot of points on them."

Not many have been able to handle the Mustang press, which is executed by many of the same quality athletes who have won two straight state championships in six-man football. Yet that's the one thing the Devils will have to concentrate on Tuesday.

"They run up and down the court like we do, so it's going to be won by who can take care of the ball best."

Point guard Brian McCravey will trigger the Red Devils' press offense, while off-guard Terry McCravey,

What does Oklahoma get for beating the No. 1 team? Maybe a chance to do it again.

The 10th-rated Sooners scrambled the national rankings Sunday, beating No. 1 Missouri for their 44th straight victory at home.

On Tuesday night, Oklahoma might get another chance to play with the poll when Kansas comes to town. The Jayhawks moved up from No. 2 to No. 1 with Missouri's loss.

A record crowd of 12,157 at the Noble Arena saw the Sooners pull away from a 49-45 halftime lead. Missouri has not won at Oklahoma since the 1982-83 season.

"Did you notice we beat the No. 1 team in the nation and our student body didn't run out on the floor?" Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said. "What does that tell you? It tells me we expect to win."

Oklahoma (21-4, 9-3) prevented Missouri (25-3, 11-2) from clinching a share of the Big Eight title.

"That's life in the Big Eight," Missouri coach Norm Stewart said.

Jackie Jones had 28 points, 10 rebounds and seven blocked shots for Oklahoma. Damon Patterson scored 24 points, William Davis added 20 points and 15 rebounds and Terry Evans had 15 points and 12 assists.

"This gives us an opportunity to show we can play and that we're one of the top teams in the country," Evans said. "If we can beat them like we beat Missouri, I think we'll get a lot of recognition."

Doug Smith had 27 points and 11 rebounds for the Tigers. But Anthony Peeler, averaging 18 points, was just 3-for-16 from the field and finished with 10 points.

"I was thinking all game that I wasn't shooting from the same spots as usual," Peeler said. "I'm used to the corner and the wing. I thought about it a lot during the game."

Bright wanted to give Tom 'Bum's rush'

DALLAS (AP) — A year to the day after selling the Dallas Cowboys, H.R. "Bum" Bright said his one lingering regret is that he didn't fire Tom Landry himself.

New owner Jerry Jones installed longtime friend Jimmy Johnson as the Cowboys coach and continues to suffer a public relations problem because of how Landry, the only head coach the team had ever had, was let go.

Jones has gotten a bad rap over Landry's release, Bright said, adding that he tried to talk General Manager Tex Schramm into firing Landry in 1987, but Schramm refused, saying he didn't have a replacement ready.

"If I had known there would have been this much heat over Tom, I'd have taken it myself," Bright told The Dallas Morning News Sunday.

"I know that Jerry doesn't deserve all this stuff. It wouldn't have been as hard for me as it has been for Jerry, because he was the one continuing. I just didn't realize."

Schramm had realized for some time, Bright said, that the Cowboys were "in trouble, skidding downhill fast."

MHS, Lee cagers found way to win

At the beginning of the 1989-90 basketball season, Midland High boys coach Jack Stephenson made a point of emphasizing just how seriously boys hoops is taken in the Tall City.

Price

Stephenson could have taken that assessment one step further, because after witnessing action all across District 4-5A, observers could say that basketball is big-time throughout the district.

It doesn't matter that the 4-5A representatives (Abilene High and San Angelo) were eliminated in the first round of the playoffs; 1989-90 saw some great high school basketball being played from the Chaparral Center to cracker-box gymnasiums — by today's standards — like those at Abilene High and Odessa High.

With that fact taken in consideration, what MHS and Midland Lee accomplished this season was a tribute to the good old Puritan work ethic.

THE BULLDOGS were 4-5A's answer to James "the hardest-working man in show business" Brown in '89-'90. MHS returned only one player with any varsity experience from a year ago, and had only one player taller than six feet. Despite facing teams with players in the 6-5 and 6-6 range, Stephenson rated the inexperience factor as a larger hurdle to overcome that the lack of height.

Yet, using a fast breaking, full-court pressing style of play that required the kind of aerobic fitness Jane Fonda would envy, the 'Dogs marched through this year's schedule and laid waste to most of their opponents.

MHS finished the season with a 20-win record (21-12) and tied for second in 4-5A with San Angelo at 9-3. In the district playoff between those two teams last Tuesday, the Bobcats shot better than 50 percent and might have been unbeatable on that particular night. But the Bulldogs sure gave them a run for their money.

The 'Cats led for most of that game, but could never shake the Hounds, who came within two points midway through the third quarter before eventually falling 96-89. MHS also split with league champion Abilene, taking a 76-62 win over the Eagles at the Chap before falling 70-65 at AHS' packed home court, where fan noise was comparable to that at the end of a Midland International Airport runway.

LEE'S REBELS posted what, on the surface, appeared to be an unimpressive record (13-16 and 4-8 in 4-5A). But the Rebs posed a threatening stance against every team that they played. In four home games against the top three teams in the district (the Rebs played both 4-5A games against MHS at the Chap), Lee was as competitive as Rebel coach Paul Stueckler is resilient.

Three of those game Lee lost by two points or less, and in the fourth were beaten by only six.

Contrasting MHS' game, the Rebs played a slow-down ball control game that would make Dean Smith yearn for the days before the collegiate 45 second clock.

Using that tactic, Lee frustrated opposing defenses and patiently worked the ball until the high percentage shot appeared. The Rebs were predicted as a 4-5A cellar-dweller in the preseason polls, but some how when the final standings were compiled, landed in fourth place behind Abilene, MHS and San Angelo.

Also, the Rebs handed Stueckler his 700th career coaching win in their last game of the season.

However, 1989-90 has now passed with Abilene's 92-90 loss to Amarillo High Friday and San Angelo's 93-60 defeat at the hands of Plainview that same night. Local high school basketball fans may be wondering what MHS and Lee have up their sleeves for the next season.

It may be too early to speculate on exactly what '90-'91 will bring, but rest assured Midland's team will find a way to be competitive.

'Mailman' delivers against lame Lakers

Associated Press

Utah's Karl "The Mailman" Malone made a delivery and the Los Angeles Lakers paid for it.

Malone's 3-point jump shot with six-tenths of a second left gave the Jazz a 104-103 victory over the Lakers Sunday night in a game between the NBA's Western Conference leaders.

"My first position was to post up, but they had it packed in so I backed out and yelled to John for the ball," said Malone, who scored 27 of his 34 points in the second half as Utah overcame a 56-46 halftime deficit.

The Lakers' Magic Johnson just missed a 36-foot hook shot at the buzzer for the Pacific Division leaders. Johnson had 32 points and 16 assists and scored 11 of the Lakers' last 17 points, including a short hook shot with 1:30 to play that gave Los Angeles a 102-101 lead. His free throw with 12.8 seconds remaining made it 103-101.

For Utah (Midwest Division), Thurl Bailey had 21 points and John Stockton 15, plus 19 assists. James Worthy had 20 points for the Lakers, who played without starting center Mychal Thompson, who sprained an ankle Friday night.

In addition, their No. 1 draft choice, 7-foot-1 center Vlade Divac, was helped off the court in the second quarter after he collided knees with Malone while going for a rebound.

The 6-9 A.C. Green, who made the Western Conference All-Star team as a starting forward over Malone, played center and had 12 points and a game-high 13 rebounds.

Pistons 98, Knicks 87

Detroit won for the 14th time in 15 games as Joe Dumars continued to dominate New York, scoring 15 of his 31 points in the third quarter. Dumars, averaging 28.7 on 63.5 percent shooting in three victories over the Knicks this season, made seven of 11 shots in the third period.

Spurs 107, Clippers 106

Pacers 117, Blazers 112

Reggie Miller scored 35 points and Chuck Person shook off foul trouble to lead a late Indiana surge. Miller had 20 points in the first period, keeping the Pacers in the game as they missed 10 of their first 11 shots while falling behind 11-2.

Celtics 115, Nuggets 107

Boston finished a long road trip with a 4-4 record as Larry Bird had 25 points and 17 rebounds and rookie Michael Smith scored 24 points in his second start. Smith, a 6-10 forward, started a decisive 13-2 run with three minutes to go when he hit a 12-foot bank shot and added a free throw.

Bulls 107, Nets 106

Michael Jordan's 18-foot jumper from the baseline with 25 seconds left in overtime handed New Jersey its 16th defeat in 17 games. Purvis Short lost the ball out of bounds with six seconds left on the Nets' final possession and Chicago ran out the clock for its fifth consecutive victory.

Jordan had 32 points, eight rebounds and eight assists while New Jersey's Sam Bowie had 22 points and 13 rebounds and Short scored 20 points.

Bucks 113, Heat 108

Milwaukee blew most of a 23-point lead before holding on behind Ricky Pierce's 30 points. The Bucks led by 23 late in the third quarter and still had a 109-95 advantage with 3:01 left. But Miami scored the next 10 points and made it 110-108 on a basket by Grant Long and Billy Thompson's free throw with 38 seconds left.

Mavericks 87, Timberwolves 82

Dallas won for the seventh time in eight games behind Roy Tarpley's 26 points and 16 rebounds and Sam Perkins' 20 points. Derek Harper's five straight points keyed the Mavericks' fourth-quarter comeback and gave them an 83-82 lead with 16 seconds remaining.

Herb Williams stole Minnesota's inbounds pass and Perkins was fouled in the ensuing scramble. He made both free throws with 11 seconds left, sealing the outcome. Tod Murphy led Minnesota with 16 points.

SuperSonics 110, Warriors 102

Derrick McKey scored 11 of his 33 points in the final four minutes as Seattle won its fifth straight and handed Golden State its sixth straight loss.

Cavaliers 102, Hornets 86

Cleveland used a 12-0 run in the second quarter and a 15-0 burst in the final period to subdue Charlotte, which lost its fourth straight.

'Tony C' an unlikely hard-luck case

BY RON RAPOPORT
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Tony Conigliaro was the kind of ballplayer who would sometimes spit — literally spit — at the pitchers.

"Come on, dammit!" he would yell at them. "Get the ball up here!" And then he would spit.

Tony Conigliaro was the kind of ladies' man who would be standing on a street corner and suddenly find himself in the company of a woman so beautiful that mere mortals might be afraid to draw a breath in her presence.

"Excuse me, miss," Conigliaro would say, "but do you ever get the feeling people are following you?" For the next three days, or until Conigliaro's team left town, that woman would adoringly follow him around like a puppy dog.

Tony Conigliaro was, in short, the most unlikely hard-luck case I ever knew.

He could hit home runs a mile, he could charm the copper out of a penny and he could make his hometown of Boston forget about Bobby Orr and Carl Yastrzemski.

Then one day, Jack Hamilton of the Angels hit him in the head with a pitch and everything changed.

Life was a series of comebacks for Conigliaro after that and for a while it looked as if he was going to make it in more ways than one. He came back to have two more good years with the Red Sox and when they traded him to the Angels in 1971, damned if he didn't just happen to move into an apartment complex where Raquel Welch was a neighbor.

It soon became clear, however, that something was wrong. Conigliaro's batting average dropped, his power production deteriorated and his teammates doubted his courage. Before one game in Anaheim, Conigliaro found his uniform laid out on a stretcher and decorated with a pair of crutches and some sanitary napkins dripping with ketchup.

It all came to a head one night in Oakland where the A's and the Angels played a scoreless game into the 20th inning. Conigliaro went 0-for-8, struck out five times and, after being called out on strikes in the 19th inning, swung his bat at his batting helmet. It was the hardest he hit anything all night.

"I have lost my sight and am on the edge of losing my mind," Conigliaro told a sleepy group of writers he summoned to the hotel lobby at five o'clock that morning. He was quitting baseball again, he said.

Conigliaro made one more comeback after that, with the Red Sox in 1975, and for a time he was doing pretty well. But early in the season, he pulled a hamstring running out a bunt in Yankee Stadium. The Red Sox gave his job to a young outfielder named Jim Rice and Conigliaro was out of baseball for good.

Later, there was a heart attack that put him into a coma and for the last years of his life, he required constant care. Saturday, at the age of 45, Conigliaro finally, and perhaps mercifully, died.

Ken Harrelson, who played with and against Conigliaro, recalls his first comeback with the Red Sox in 1969 and 1970. He had 56 home runs and 198 runs batted in those two seasons, which was not bad for a man who was half blind.

"The amazing thing," Harrelson says, "was every time you pitched him high, he'd hit it out. But if you got the ball down low, he'd miss it by a foot and a half. Which means he was doing it with one eye."

Becker went to power

STUTTGART, West Germany (AP) — When Boris Becker had a chance to move closer to the top spot in men's tennis, he went to his power.

The reigning Wimbledon and U.S. Open champion overpowered top-ranked Ivan Lendl 6-2, 6-2 Sunday to capture the Eurocard Championship.

"Breaking him in the first game of the match was very important," Becker said. "I knew the key was to serve very well and take the ball early and not to rally too much. I played the perfect match."

It was the first time the world's top two players had met since the U.S. Open in September. Becker won there, also.

Lendl captured this year's first Grand Slam tournament, the Australian Open, in January. He had won 21 consecutive matches and was seeking his fourth straight tournament title Sunday when he ran into Becker.

The West German needed just 73 minutes for his fifth straight victory over Lendl, who got into trouble immediately when he dropped his serve to begin the match. With Lendl attempting, uncharacteristically, to charge the net on almost every shot, he became an easy target for Becker.

"He was serving and volleying many times. I don't understand why he did it," Becker said. "But it felt very good to have won like that.

Becker broke Lendl's serve for the second time to lead 5-2, then wrapped up the first set in just 32 minutes, holding his serve at 15.

"I had to come into the net a lot because the court is so quick," Lendl said.

Martina demolishes Zina

WASHINGTON (AP) — As she continues her quest to once again be No. 1, Martina Navratilova is putting some distance between herself and the players ranked below her.

Navratilova, the No. 2 player in the world, improved her record against Zina Garrison to 27-1 Sunday with a 6-1, 6-0 victory in the final of the Virginia Slims of Washington.

Navratilova is 9-0 this year after winning last week's Virginia Slims of Chicago. She has yet to lose a set this year, and lost only 10 games in four matches en route to winning for the 10th time at this stop on the tour.

As Navratilova pursues top-ranked Steffi Graf, she showed there is still a huge gap between her and Garrison, who is ranked No. 4.

"She's a good all-around player. I'm just a little better," Navratilova said. "She doesn't have a weapon to threaten me with, whereas I can threaten her with my serve-and-volley game."

With Graf and No. 3 Gabriela Sabatini out with injuries, Navratilova figures all she can do is keep winning and let the rankings take care of themselves.

"There's a simple way to be No. 1 — that's not to ever to lose," Navratilova said. "Bottom line is you've got to win."

Of course she knows that she's got to defeat Graf to regain the top spot she owned from 1981-86.

"I hope that she can come back and I can get to play her, because the only way I can be No. 1 is by beating her," Navratilova said.

In the meantime, Navratilova will have to be content with beating just about everyone else.

Navratilova's aggressive net play enabled her to continually frustrate Garrison throughout the 50-minute match. Garrison repeatedly hit the ball wide, deep or into the net in a futile effort to pass the charging Navratilova.

Navratilova, the top seed, earned $70,000 with the victory, her sixth in a row over Garrison since her only setback against the 26-year-old Houston native at the 1988 U.S. Open. She has lost only four sets to Garrison.

Garrison, the No. 2 seed, won $35,000. Afterward, she gave credit to Navratilova.

Frogs hand Tech 14th SWC loss

LUBBOCK (AP) — Mike Strickland scored 27 points, including six three pointers, to lead Texas Christian to a 90-68 victory over Texas Tech Sunday in a Southwest Conference basketball game.

Eleven of the 12 Texas Christian players scored as the Horned Frogs improved to 16-10 overall and 8-7 in the SWC.

The Red Raiders, 5-20 overall and 0-14 in the conference, lost their 16th game in a row and made ineligible for the SWC post-season tournament for the first time.

Strickland scored on 10 of 17 field goal attempts, including 6 of 10 from 3-point range.

Tech forward Will Flemons, a freshman who entered the game leading the conference with 10.4 rebounds per game, only had six. He scored two points in the first half and finished with 13. J.D. Sanders also hit 13 to lead the Red Raiders.

Erik Martin scored 15 for TCU and Tony Edmonds added 13.

One of Strickland's 3-pointers broke a 25-25 tie and ignited an 18-2 run with 4:07 in the first half, and Texas Christian went into halftime with a 43-27 advantage.

"Strickland's shooting really helped us, no doubt about it," Texas Christian coach Moe Iba said. "For the most part, I thought he only took a couple of questionable shots all game, and our athletes off the bench really did a nice job."

Tech coach Gerald Myers expressed frustration over the TCU's 18-2 first half run.

"If anybody has an answer to why we allow those runs to happen, then let me hear it because I might implement those ideas in our game Wednesday night," he said. "It's just incredible the way those things have gone. It just seems hard for us to hold our game together when we get in the middle of one of those runs."

Myers said there was only one good thing about missing the SWC tourney: "We can get a jump on recruiting," he said.

Dallas shops Walsh, can't find any takers

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys have found little interest in quarterback Steve Walsh on the trade market and may be forced to keep him for another season, officials with the Cowboys and other NFL teams say.

When the Cowboys selected Walsh in the supplemental draft last July, Dallas owner Jerry Jones and coach Jimmy Johnson said Walsh was a "franchise quarterback."

Jones vowed the team would be able to recoup at least the value of the 1990 first-round draft choice they forfeited to get Walsh after going 1-15 last season.

But the Cowboys have been testing the market for Walsh, and so far only San Francisco and Minnesota have expressed more than a passing interest in him, The Dallas Morning News reported.

A Vikings official said Friday they have not talked to the Cowboys about Walsh since they tried to make him a part of the restructured Herschel Walker deal last month.

Another Cowboys source said team officials have notified Walsh that he could be with the team another season and that Walsh is upset about that possibility, the newspaper said.

"He'll go crazy if that happens," the source said.

So might Troy Aikman, the Cowboys' No. 1 draft pick in 1989 and $11 million starting quarterback. Several sources said despite public images of harmony, Walsh and Aikman rarely speak to each other.

"It will be brutal around here if Walsh stays," one player told The Morning News. "Troy and Steve don't get along at all."

But Johnson, who coached Walsh at the University of Miami, sounded enthusiastic about Walsh being on the roster for another season.

"Oh yeah," Johnson said. "We're approaching it that way, rather than saying he might not be here."

Jones, who said there are "between three and five teams" interested in Walsh, concurred with his coach.

"Not only might we keep him, we would like to keep him," Jones said. "I am even more convinced now that he will be an outstanding NFL player."

Johnson said he did not expect there to be much interest in Walsh until after March 22, the deadline for college juniors to declare for the draft.

"BRUNO" HANSON ENDORSES
NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE

I have been a consulting geologist and independent oil operator in the Permian Basin for thirty years. I am supporting Nick Taylor for District Judge. I feel he is best qualified to be the judge because Nick is one of Midland's best most widely respected experts in oil and gas, tax and commercial transactions.

Nick has a good balance of trial and out of court experience. He's been in both Midland District Courts, Federal courts, the Texas Court of Appeals and even the U.S. Supreme Court. But more importantly, Nick has the expert legal qualifications needed for our community and Nick has unquestioned honesty.

I hope you will join me in voting for Nick Taylor on March 13th.

Martin wins 400 miler

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — After slapping Mark Martin with the biggest fine in stock car history, NASCAR officials stopped short of accusing his illegal engine part of helping him win the Pontiac 400.

"We don't know if it's an advantage or not," Dick Beaty, competition director for NASCAR's Winston Cup circuit, said in announcing that Martin's winning Ford Thunderbird had failed technical inspection.

Martin was not stripped of Sunday's victory, but he was fined $40,000 and penalized 46 points in the season standings because a spacer between the carburetor and intake manifold was found to be a half-inch too tall. NASCAR rules limit the height of the spacer to two inches. Martin's was 2½ inches.

MC netters take on big schools

From Staff Reports

SAN ANTONIO — Midland College's Maria Vago won flight championships in both doubles and singles, as the Chaparral tennis team ended play Saturday as the only junior college squad entered in the Texas-San Antonio Invitational.

Vago downed Rachel Forney of Baylor in the finals of the women's singles flight two, then teamed with Allison Bradford for a doubles win over Baylor in the first flight, 6-2, 6-2.

The MC men will be in action at 2 p.m. Tuesday on their home court against Odessa College.

TOP 25

Oklahoma used a 15-2 burst early in the second half for a 66-51 lead. The Sooners are 92-0 under Tubbs when scoring at least 100 points.

In other Sunday games, it was No. 3 Duke 78, No. 21 Arizona 76; No. 11 Syracuse 93, Providence 89; Georgia 86, No. 12 LSU 85; No. 14 La Salle 74, St. Peter's 66 in overtime; No. 15 Michigan State 72, No. 25 Indiana 66.

No. 3 Duke 78, No. 21 Arizona 76

Phil Henderson got 28 points as Duke (23-5) won its 56th straight non-conference game at home. Arizona (19-6) played its third road game in five days, a trip that has covered 6,500 miles.

No. 11 Syracuse 93, Providence 89

Billy Owens scored 33 points and led a late 22-4 burst as Syracuse won at Providence. The Orangemen (20-5, 10-4) had lost two of their last three games. The Friars (15-10, 7-8), who ended a 15-year, 21-game losing streak against Syracuse Jan. 20, are 2-23 against the Orangemen.

Georgia 86, No. 12 LSU 85

Neville Austin made one of two foul shots with five seconds left, breaking a tie at Georgia. The Bulldogs (19-6, 12-4) rallied from a 19-point deficit in the second half for their sixth straight victory and need one more win to clinch their first Southeastern Conference basketball title. Chris Jackson scored 31 points for LSU (21-6, 11-5).

No. 14 La Salle 74, St. Peter's 66

La Salle survived in overtime at St. Peter's and won its 17th straight game. Lionel Simmons scored 18 points for the Explorers (25-1, 15-0 Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference), who scored the first nine points of overtime. Tony Walker scored 19 points for St. Peter's (14-13, 7-9), but missed a foul shot with 26 seconds left and the game tied.

No. 15 Michigan St. 72
No. 25 Indiana 66

Michigan State never trailed and won its sixth straight Big Ten victory, its longest streak since 1979. Steve Smith scored 21 points for the Spartans (22-5, 11-3). Freshman Calbert Cheaney scored 32 points for Indiana (16-8, 6-8).

AREA

wing James Watson and post Michael Ramos will probably handle the bulk of the scoring.

Red Devil depth will be key, Peel said.

"The ones who come off the bench have to perform for us."

Not every team has backups with the athletic ability of guard Francisco Gonzales, an all-district pick last season who missed most of this season with a broken leg; and sophomore forwards Kirk Kennedy and Kevin Braden, both of whom are outstanding football players. The trio combined for 24 points in the win over Grady.

Lamesa-Dalhart

Lamesa forward Dwight Mason welcomed himself back to the active roster by coming off the bench for 20 points in the Golden Tornadoes' bi-district win over Clint last Friday.

Dalhart may be a little tougher to crack than Clint, however. The Golden Wolves nipped Dimmitt 70-67 in bi-district play last Thursday. Dimmitt defeated Lamesa in last year's area round.

The Panhandle team features an unusual mix of three-point shooting range and inside strength. Swingman Koby Koelzer was eight-of-13 from three-point range, while 6-8 center Bobby Smith had 19 points and 16 rebounds — including nine offensive boards.

But Lamesa has plenty of weapons of its own. Off-guard Bert Butler averages almost 22 points a game, and had 27 against Clint; while forwards Mason, Lavert Hawkins and Dewayne Hall, along with point guard Keene Hunter, all score in double figures for the traditional West Texas cage power.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Long-lasting results are easier to achieve now. Fine new career and business prospects are part of the picture. A summer romance could be the real thing. Postpone making a commitment until December. You will need time to adjust to certain domestic changes. Real estate ventures could prove highly profitable in November. Put any extra money in the bank. Climactic events in late fall will change a close relationship dramatically.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: superstar Elizabeth Taylor, poet Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, crusader Ralph Nader, actress Joanne Woodward.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be careful not to show your whole hand in business matters. Give yourself time to evaluate the people you are dealing with. Financial worries subside when an unexpected check arrives.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Refuse to make a financial decision until you have all the facts. What other people do today will have a direct bearing on your business plans. Do not expect social events to relieve tension.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not be in too much of a hurry! Contracts should be negotiated with great care. Use the evening hours to patch up a disagreement with your mate. Trips are best postponed.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Go slow when it comes to travel, education and legal matters. Quiet meditation will help you sort out a difficult personal problem. Postpone any financial discussions with your mate or business partner.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Seek a peaceful solution to any differences with your loved ones. A new assertiveness prompts you to take a big career step. Overreacting could put a damper on a promising, fun relationship.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Develop the self-discipline you need to complete important assignments. Finish your work before thinking about recreation. Those who work at home put spare time to good use. Dine with good friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A small gift sends your spirits soaring. If you achieve something special today, it will be due to your efforts alone. A compromise helps you patch things up with your loved ones.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Teamwork is the key to financial success. Smooth over your differences with others to gain their cooperation. A close relationship brightens your evening. Avoid unfamiliar places and people.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can lay the groundwork for a special project today. An influential person will be impressed. Although romance is rewarding, do not press for a permanent commitment.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Rearrange your work schedule to deal with a personal matter. You can probably get a deadline postponed if you have a legitimate excuse. Whip an artistic project into shape. Romance is idyllic.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Curb an urge to take financial risks. You need to be more imaginative about a new job assignment. Learn a popular sport or game. Do everything possible to correct a bad habit.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A meeting with someone influential will prove highly productive. The boss's thinking is similar to your own. Romance seems more settled. Spend a happy evening relaxing at home with close friends.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ108 ♡8 ◇AQJ98 ♣Q95
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one heart. What action do you take?
A.—To overcall two diamonds risks losing the spade suit. Actually, your hand is suitable for play in any of the unbid suits, including clubs, so the correct action is to make a takeout double.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ108 ♡8 ◇AQJ98 ♣Q95
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	Dbl	Pass	1 NT
Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Partner's response is not a weak bid—it's forward-going, showing some 8-10 points. With 15 high-card points and good intermediates your hand is certainly worth a try for game and the obvious choice is to bid two diamonds. That is not forcing, but encouraging.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ108 ♡8 ◇AQJ98 ♣Q95
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	Dbl	Pass	1 NT
Pass	2 ◇	Pass	3 ◇
Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Partner was free to pass, so the raise to three diamonds should show a maximum for his original response, probably about 10 points. Since the spade finesse is surely working and partner has announced a heart stopper three no trump seems like the obvious move.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K ♡Q6 ◇KJ1063 ♣107652
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	2 ♣	?

What action do you take?
A.—The trouble with bidding two diamonds is that it is forcing and you won't like anything partner does unless he can raise. Don't double—neither the hand nor the trump quality is good enough. Pass and hope partner reopens.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K ♡Q6 ◇KJ1063 ♣107652
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	2 ♣	Pass	Pass
Dbl	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Partner's double is for takeout. However, North should have a better than minimum opening for such action, so the chances for a penalty have brightened. Pass. Even if they make the contract, no great harm will have befallen you.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠2 ♡Q65 ◇QJ96 ♣A9742
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Partner could have quite a good hand on this sequence without being able to rebid any more than two clubs. With 9 points in high cards and five-card support the least you can do is raise to three clubs.

Malcolm Forbes lived up to his epitaph

NEW YORK (AP) — For Malcolm Forbes, multimillionaire publisher and flamboyant pitchman for capitalism, it wasn't how much money you have but how you spend it, family and friends recalled as they mourned his death at age 70.

Forbes died Saturday from a heart attack while sleeping at his estate in Far Hills, N.J. He had returned earlier in the day from London.

"What he wanted inscribed on his tombstone says it all: 'While alive, he lived,' " said Forbes' son, Malcolm Jr., at a news conference Sunday with his sister and three brothers.

"Death happens to everyone but we never believed it would happen to him; he always defied the odds," Malcolm Jr. said.

The son will succeed his father as chairman and chief executive of Forbes magazine and its parent, Forbes Inc., and as editor in chief of the New York-based magazine. He formerly was president and chief operating officer of the parent company and deputy editor in chief of the magazine.

His worth was estimated at anywhere from $400 million to $1 billion, but whatever the amount, he relished his riches.

Forbes made the first free flight over Beijing in a hot-air balloon and set six world ballooning records. He owned 68 motorcycles and was the first to tour China on one. He globe-trotted with movie stars and heads of state aboard his gold-fixtured, helicopter-equipped yacht, the Highlander.

"It's not how much money you have but what you do with it," Forbes once said. "The joy of living is incredible. We work hard at the things we have to do, so why not take time to enjoy the things we want to do?"

It was that credo that led Forbes to invite 1,000 guests to a $2 million, 70th birthday bash last August in Tangier, Morocco. Billionaire developer Donald Trump, Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca and former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger were among those invited.

"He was a real free spirit," said opera star Beverly Sills, who sang "Happy Birthday" at the Tangier extravaganza. "He had such a joy of life. I think he would have had it if he had been a poor man."

"He was the quintessential American — optimistic, buoyant and lots of fun," Kissinger said. "He was a very good friend and I'll miss him."

"I feel like a great light has been turned off," said Elizabeth Taylor, a frequent companion of Forbes. "He was one of the best friends I ever had."

Forbes was born in Englewood, N.J., on Aug. 19, 1919, two years after his father, Scottish emigrant Bertie Charles Forbes, founded Forbes magazine.

He graduated from Princeton in 1941, then published two weekly newspapers in Ohio for a year. He enlisted in the Army in 1942, was wounded in combat and received the Bronze Star and Purple Heart.

After six years as state senator, Forbes ran for governor of New Jersey in 1957, losing to Robert B. Meyner.

After his father's death in 1954, he took over Forbes, home of the annual "Forbes 400" list of the richest men and women in the country. The magazine rode the 1980s bull market and the pro-business Reagan era to its greatest success since its founding.

Malcolm Forbes and Elizabeth Taylor

Lee

The $10 million film starring Denzel Washington is about a trumpet player torn between his love of music and his desire for two women, a singer played by Cynda Williams and a Harlem schoolteacher played by Lee's sister, Joie.

Joie Lee said she had no problem working with her brother in scenes that called for nudity.

RUTLAND, Vt. (AP) — Former Olympic skier Suzy Chaffee has been touring the country speaking out against animal-rights activists who would ban the sale of fur coats.

Chaffee

For the past three years, Chaffee, 43, has helped design and promote a collection of fur-lined skiwear called Suzy Chaffee Sport Furs.

She spoke in Aspen, Colo., before the recent defeat of a proposed ordinance that would have banned the sale of furs in the resort community, and has been appearing on talk shows.

"My credibility is very important to me, and I feel I am really being responsible to the animals and to nature and to the environment because trapping them is better than letting them die the disease-and-starvation route," she said.

NEW YORK (AP) — So what should Marla Maples, the alleged "other woman" in billionaire Donald Trump's marital mess, expect from her involvement in the scuffle?

Not much, said some other "other" women interviewed by People magazine in its March 5 issue.

After word of her sexual liaison with television evangelist Jim Bakker, Jessica Hahn posed for Playboy for $1 million, was host of a mud-wrestling contest and now receives at least $2,000 for personal appearances.

But Hahn told Maples, "Unless he's prepared to marry you, and I don't think he is, you're better off just keeping your feet on the ground and pursuing your career."

T&P still trying to liquidate land

Trust is second biggest landowner in Texas

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Pacific Land Trust has been trying to go out of business longer than most companies have been in business.

Somewhat like the Resolution Trust Corp. created by Congress to sell the assets of failed thrifts, Dallas-based Texas Pacific Land Trust was established in 1888 to dispose of real estate owned by the Texas and Pacific Railroad Co., which went bankrupt in 1885.

The idea was to raise cash to pay off owners of the railroad company's defaulted bonds. The task continues 102 years later.

Texas Pacific Land Trust has sold about 2.29 million acres of west Texas prairie and desert. Yet with 1.16 million acres still in its possession, the trust remains the largest private landowner in Texas. Only the state government owns more.

The trust has no long-term debt and makes an after-tax profit of 45 or 50 cents on every dollar it takes in from oil and gas royalties, grazing leases and land sales, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

In the first nine months of 1989, the trust earned $1.9 million on revenues of $3.74 million — even while paying $1.16 million in federal, state and local taxes.

TPL is a curious business antiquity in the 1990s.

The salary for the three trustee posts has stayed the same for 102 years. Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Maurice Meyer Jr. of New Jersey is paid $4,000 a year. The other two trustees get $2,000 each.

All three are elected for life or until resignation and, says TPL General Agent Maurice D. Walls, cannot otherwise be voted out of office — a business anachronism that makes TPL virtually invulnerable to the threat of a takeover raid.

Unlike other publicly owned companies, TPL doesn't have annual stockholder meetings. TPL shareholder meetings are held only when a trustee dies and a new one is elected. There have been only 20 trustees since 1888.

The origin of the trust can be traced to 1871 when the state of Texas, eager to get in on new business opportunities provided by railroads, granted the railroad 5.34 million acres of state-owned land as an inducement to build a line across the state.

A little more than 13 years later, an entire season's cotton crop failed in Texas following torrential rains, ruining thousands of farmers and sending the railroad company into bankruptcy.

Nikkei records second worst day

TOKYO (AP) — The Tokyo Stock Exchange's main index suffered its second largest one-day fall today, and exchange officials reportedly sought to restrict a form of computer-guided trading seen as a major factor in recent declines.

The dollar closed sharply higher.

The 225-share Nikkei Stock Average plunged 1,569.10 points, or 4.5 percent, closing at 33,321.87, its lowest level since 33,309.71 last July 5.

Today's plunge was second only to the 3,836.48 on Oct. 20, 1987. That fall of 14.9 percent, however, still was well below the previous day's 22.6 percent on Wall Street, on the "Black Monday" that triggered a global crash.

Volume was a light 400 million shares on the first section.

Analysts said stock, bond and yen prices were driving each other down in a vicious cycle.

In an effort to stop the fall in stock prices, the Tokyo Stock Exchange asked that securities firms limit their index arbitrage selling to the beginning of the morning and afternoon sessions until March 8, Kyodo News Service reported without elaborating.

In arbitrage trading, which also was cited as a cause for Wall Street's "Black Monday" crash, investors profit from differences in prices for the same security in different markets, for instance, the spot and future markets. Computers spot the price gaps and guide the trading.

But arbitrageurs, seen by many analysts as the key factor in the Nikkei's 2,570-point loss for all of last week, were not very active today as futures prices fell the maximum amount allowed during the morning session.

On the foreign exchange market, the dollar rose 2.18 yen, closing at 148.65 yen. It opened at 147.50 yen and ranged between 147.42 yen and 149.05 yen. The dollar now has gained 4.13 yen in the last five trading days.

At one point today, the Nikkei average fell to 32,477.46 points, 2,413.51 beneath its Friday close.

Masahiro Umemori, an analyst for Nomura Securities, said that about an hour before the market's close, some investors began to feel stock prices were reasonable again. The index climbed 844.41 points in the last hour.

Because of overall light trading, the few buy orders had a large impact on the index, Umemori added.

Robert Alan Feldman, an economist for Solomon Brothers Asia Ltd., said such last-minute turnarounds were common on the Tokyo market and did not signify that the market's fall had been stopped.

Johsen Takahashi, director of Mitsubishi Research Institute Inc., said the Tokyo market's problem was "cheap yen, cheap stocks and cheap bonds — the decline of each one has accelerated the decline of the other two."

In a vicious cycle, analysts said, the weakening of the bond market had reduced demand for the yen, whose cheap value reduced the attractiveness of buying stocks.

THE LAST DAYS

N.Y. Times News Service

Behind the seemingly sudden collapse of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. were months of missteps and pressures from outside forces that were fully understood by the firm's executives only as Drexel was drawing its last breaths.

There is little agreement among the major participants about some critical events of the final days.

But interviews with dozens of current and former Drexel employees, government officials and officials of various stock exchanges make clear that by the time the crisis was addressed, the time to save the firm had passed.

In the end, the firm that helped shaped much of Wall Street in the 1980s and that raised hundreds of billions of dollars for its clients eventually went into liquidation for want of a few hundred million dollars.

Drexel, which made its name peddling high-yield, high-risk bonds, was the victim of too much risk.

"We were too close to the edge," one senior Drexel executive involved in many of the firm's recent decisions said Sunday. "We just didn't think we faced so much risk."

On Wall Street last week, financial officers of a number of large brokerage firms said Drexel's demise was unlikely to be repeated.

Many people involved in the developments that led to Drexel's collapse point to changes in the firm that resulted from the agreement it reached with the government last year to plead guilty to six felony counts and pay $650 million.

As part of the agreement, the firm said it would dismiss Michael R. Milken, head of its "junk bond" unit.

Under his guidance, Drexel had become the lead player in the takeover battles that raged through America in the 1980s.

Days after the firm reached a final settlement with the Securities and Exchange Commission, Frederick H. Joseph, Drexel's chief executive, announced the firm had decided to sell its retail unit.

That meant thousands of employees who had stood by Drexel for years were now leaving.

Bush pressures Japan on trade

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration and an increasingly impatient Congress are intensifying pressure on Japan to slash import barriers and work down some of the nearly $400 billion of surpluses that Japan enjoyed in its trade with the United States over the last decade.

After a respite during last week's elections, which gave Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu's Liberal Democratic Party a new mandate, the United States and Japan have resumed talks on an unusually broad range of bilateral trade issues against the backdrop of what many here consider a dangerous erosion of levels of tolerance.

The White House announced Saturday that to try to improve the atmosphere, Prime Minister Kaifu and President Bush had agreed to meet this Friday and Saturday in Palm Springs, Calif.

"It's clear that the trade relationship will be front and center," said the U.S. trade representative, Carla A. Hills, after the announcement.

While the two countries have made little progress in easing trade tensions, the calls for action within the United States, echoing the bilateral differences, have become ever more strident.

"For the first time in at least two decades, you have open hostility between those on either side of the trade debate," said Alan W. Wolff, a former deputy U.S. trade representative now representing chiefly domestic trade clients in Washington.

"What troubles me is that markets are not open so that we don't have a growth potential," Mrs. Hills said, referring to the Japanese. "It creates a very bad public policy background."

Banks concerned about credit union competition

N.Y. Times News Service

Already nettled by Third World debts and bad real-estate loans, banks have begun complaining about another burr in their side — increased competition from credit unions.

With more than 60 million customers, credit unions are a fast-growing industry whose numbers almost equal those of banks and savings and loans combined.

True, their total assets are still relatively small. But they are expanding rapidly, thanks to their tax-exempt status, which allows them to offer more attractive rates and an easing of restrictions that once limited their membership.

Take Gene Bell, a Pacific Telesis manager earning more than $70,000 a year. Although a prime prospect for banks, Bell and many others like him are ignoring their pitches.

Although he does have a bank account, Bell keeps a minimum balance — just enough, he said, to get a free safe-deposit box. Most of his income and investments pass through the Patelco Credit Union, where he has a checking account, a money-market account, a credit card and home-equity loan.

"It's great," said Bell, a member of the credit union since 1962. "I wouldn't even think of going to a bank."

Talk like that scares bankers. Claiming credit unions have unfairly exploited their competitive advantages and expanded beyond their original purpose, bankers want to rein in what they call "those rogue institutions" that are luring away some of their best customers.

This year, the American Bankers Association, the industry's biggest trade group, has launched a campaign to drum up support for taxing large, multistate credit unions.

The banking industry already has scored at least one minor victory. Last week, after heavy lobbying by bankers, a Colorado legislative committee passed a bill that would pre-

MARKETS

Oil prices higher in early trade

Oil prices have turned higher in early morning trading. West Texas Intermediate is up 12 cents to $21.54. Many market participants look for weakening of prices this week.

Heating oil could show strength as cold weather returns to several parts of the U.S. The outlook for crude oil prices is generally down, with some energy futures brokers expecting West Texas Intermediate crude for April delivery to test $21 a barrel this week on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

In futures trading Friday, the April crude contract closed the week at $21.42 a barrel, down 33 cents. Meanwhile, West Texas Intermediate for May delivery declined 26 cents to $21.47 a barrel.

"The bottom line is that we are heading into 'turnarounds' and the refiners aren't doing much buying of crude oil," said Peter Beutel, assistant director of Elders Futures Inc.'s energy group.

Several refiners in the U.S. and Europe have scheduled early turnarounds, or temporary plants closing for annual maintenance. This indicated reduction in demand already has contributed to a softening of prices for some crudes, particularly those for prompt delivery. On Friday, leading U.S. refiners reduced the prices they will pay for West Texas Intermediate crude in the field by 25 to 75 cents a barrel, putting their new postings generally around $20.50 a barrel.

Even if temporary, the slackening of interest immediate purchases of crude also has led to an unusual pricing formation in futures trading called a contango in which the near-month crude, in this case the April contract, is priced at a discount to the later month, reflected in Friday's price for May delivery.

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was slightly higher in moderate trading late this morning in Europe, helped by weakness in the Japanese yen and West German mark. Gold prices fell.

The dollar was benefiting from a drop in the yen as traders sought refuge in the U.S. currency after the Tokyo stock market fell sharply early today, dealers said.

The West German mark, meanwhile, was lower due to concerns about its possible exchange rate with the East German mark under German unification, dealers said.

But traders said the dollar's outlook still was bearish.

"While the dollar has clearly taken the high road, it has lost some momentum," one Milan trader said.

He added that "the fundamentals of the U.S. economy aren't all that rosy."

In Tokyo, where trading ends as Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose 2.18 yen to a closing 148.65 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at a higher rate of 148.70 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning compared with late Friday:

In London, the dollar rose against the British pound, and was quoted at $1.6973, compared with $1.7090 late Friday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $413.00 a troy ounce, down from 416.50 bid late Friday. At midmorning, the city's major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $412.75.

In Zurich, the bid price was $412.75, down from $415.50 late Friday.

Wall Street stock market stumbles

Stock prices stumbled Friday on Wall Street, but the decline appeared mild compared with an overnight plunge in Tokyo, where stocks took their fifth-biggest drop ever.

The decline in Japan reverberated in key foreign markets where, which not only declined on the day but also posted big losses for the week.

The Dow did dip initially, but the key barometer moved into plus territory within an hour. After seesawing throughout the session, the Dow finished down 10.58 to 2564.19 at the closing bell.

Declining issues outnumbered advancing ones by about 2-to-1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 468 up, 987 down and 510 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 148.49 million shares, down from 184.49 million in the previous session.

Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 174.77 million shares.

The U.S. market's modest response to the turmoil in Tokyo, which this past week suffered two of its five biggest drops ever, and other potentially negative factors heartened some analysts.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

General Motors to lay off thousands

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. will shut down parts of three assembly plants Monday, laying off 4,200 people in a reflection of the wave of cutbacks by major automakers attempting to weather the industry's hard times.

GM will eliminate one of two shifts at each of its car assembly plants in Doraville, Ga., and Linden, N.J., resulting in 1,900 and 1,600 layoffs, respectively.

Auto sales fall 12 percent from year ago

DETROIT (AP) — Vehicle sales by the major automakers fell 12.1 percent in mid-February compared with last year as January's minivan buying frenzy appeared to take some steam out of this month's sales.

The eight companies with North American plants reported Friday they sold cars and trucks at an average daily rate of 32,258 during the Feb. 11-20 period this year, compared with a rate of 36,687 during the same time last year.

Car sales were down 1.5 percent, and truck sales, which include minivans, slumped 13 percent.

Federal regulators seize junk bond holders

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal regulators seized the savings and loan industry's second-largest holder of junk bonds, a California institution that worked closely with indicted financier Michael Milken.

The Treasury Department's Office of Thrift Supervision on Friday turned Imperial Savings Association, San Diego, over to the Resolution Trust Corp., a federal agency created in August to dispose of insolvent S&Ls.

Environmentalists blast Exxon settlement

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department said any settlement with Exxon Corp. over possible criminal charges from the Alaskan oil spill won't compromise civil claims by the state or its citizens.

Spokesman David Runkel delivered a statement Friday in response to criticism from environmentalists and Alaskan officials that the department was trying to force the state to go along with what it considered an inadequate settlement of the federal case.

COMPUTER NOTES

Understanding modems

By PAUL H. PAUSE'

Pause'

The interaction between a modem, a computer, and communications software reduces our more familiar frames of reference — files, letters, words, etc. — to their most basic level: bits and bytes of electromagnetic information.

If the process of sending data with a modem was completely automatic, it would be easy and we wouldn't have to worry about all the technical stuff. But it's not, and it isn't, so we do. Let's see what we can make of such tele-terminology as "baud rate," "bits-per-second," "data bits," and "parity."

One of the first things you have to coordinate between your modem, the receiving modem, and your communications software is the speed you'll be operating at. This is commonly, and usually incorrectly, referred to as "baud rate." The correct speed-term is "bps" for bits per second.

Bits, you'll recall, are the smallest units of information a computer can recognize. "Bits" is an acronym for BInary digiTS. Physically, a bit is a memory cell within the computer, a magnetic "spot" on a disk or tape, or a pulse of voltage travelling through a circuit.

The important common characteristic here is that a bit has only two possible states or conditions. (This is why it's a binary system: binary means "two.") This is the fundamental principal behind the design and function of all digital computers, personal and otherwise: The memory cell is either "on" or "off," nothing in between.

On a disk, bits are recorded as positive or negative charges. In a circuit, such as a communications line, a bit can be a pulse of either high voltage or low voltage. All of our input into the computer is converted into binary numbers made up of just two digits, 0 or 1, represented by these "on/off" conditions.

Baud rate is a measure of the number of times an on-line signal changes every second. This is a "modulation rate," NOT a data rate. A 300-baud modem's signal changes state 300 times a second. At 300 baud and less, baud rate is equivalent to bits per second: each bit sent is represented by one change of state.

But a "change of state" can be used to represent more than one bit. At higher speeds, one change of state — one baud — transmits more than one bit, so the number of bits per second is actually higher than the baud rate. Most 2400 bps modems, for example, use a transmission technique that transmits 4 bits in every signal change (baud). So a "2400 baud" modem is really a 2400 bps modem that operates at 600 baud (600 baud x 4 bits per baud = 1200 bps).

The simple concept of zeros and ones — bits — is critical to understanding PC communications, because it helps us understand how we can transfer certain kinds of data between otherwise "incompatible" computers. PCs, Apples, Macintoshes, and Commodores can all talk to each other using the common language of bits and bytes.

The secret is called ASCII ("as-key"), short for American Standard Code for Information Interchange. The ASCII code specifies a combination of seven bits to represent 128 (2x2x2x2x2x2x2) possible characters — upper and lower case letters, the numerals 0 through 9, common punctuation marks and symbols, and some printer control codes. An "ASCII file" is a text or data file that contains only recognized ASCII code characters, and so is "understandable" to virtually all computers.

IBM and others use one more bit — an eighth bit — to double the number of possible characters (another x2). These "extended ASCII characters" are used to add lines, borders, and some foreign language characters to the standard ASCII set, but no universal agreement exists as to which code stands for which symbol.

Computers use a common unit of storage called a byte that represents one alphanumeric character. A byte consists of eight bits. When we type the letter "A," for example, our keyboard sends the number 01000001 to the computer's memory as a series of electronic pulses.

Remember, though, that ASCII only needs 7 bits to represent all the characters that we use in text files, and there is no universal acceptance of what the extended or "high ASCII" codes stand for. So the lowest common denominator for all computers to talk to each other is to recognize just those 7 bits as our data — true ASCII characters. So when our software asks us to set the number of "data bits," we choose "7."

The eighth bit is still there, however (8 bits to the byte), and the common practice in telecommunications is to use this "extra" bit as a simple form of error checking, called "parity." We can choose to make parity odd, even, or none.

Picture the seven data bits that represent an ASCII character: 1000001 ("A"), for example. Count the number of ones. For each character, the total will be odd or even. In this case, it's even (there are 2 ones).

If we choose "odd" parity, our system slaps a 1 in the eighth-bit position, so now the total number of ones in the byte is 3, an odd number. If we told it to make parity "even," it would make the eighth bit 0 so the total remained an even number.

It would only add an extra 1 if the number of ones in the first 7 bits was an odd number. The extra 1 would make the total even, to match the parity setting we prescribed.

Since both ends of the connection have to be set for the same parity, if the receiving system finds an odd number when it's supposed to be even, it knows a transmission error has occurred and asks the other system to re-send the data. We'll talk about the other case, "none," in a minute.

You don't have to go around counting bits in characters to determine parity, but you do need to know what it means. The MOST important thing is that both the sending and receiving system agree to the same parity setting.

When we send information over our modem, the system automatically tacks on another couple of extra bits — a bit up front, called the start bit, to let the modem know that a new character is coming, and a "stop bit" at the end to signal that it's received the entire character. So the "package" our system transmits to represent one character is actually 10 bits long: A start bit, a parity bit, the 7 bit ASCII character, and a stop bit.

When we're communicating at a rate of 2400 bits per second, then, this translates into 240 characters every second, since we're using a total of 10 bits for each character package.

Some very slow systems like Teletype machines require 2 stop bits in order to have enough time to interpret the 7 data bits. This is why you have to specify the "number of stop bits" to your communications software. It's almost always "1" for our purposes, but since it might be "2" we have to tell it which.

So the most common setting if you're working with ASCII files in the online world is "7/E/1" — which means "7 data bits, even parity, and one stop bit."

In some cases, such as program files, all eight bits of each byte ARE used to represent data. What if you want to send or download files like this that aren't ASCII text files? Well, just set your communication parameters so that the system knows how to interpret the package of bits to represent each character.

In this case you would set the system to "8/N/1." This simply means that the system will interpret all 8 bits as data, and since there is no "extra" bit to use as parity, you are setting parity to "none"("N").

To safely transmit files of this type, you have to specify a separate error checking method called a "protocol."

Federal officials want offshore pipelines fixed

HOUSTON (AP) — A lack of regulation and surveillance of offshore gas pipelines pose an increasing danger to marine vessels, according to federal safety officials investigating an explosion that killed 11 people after a fishing boat struck a pipeline in the Gulf of Mexico.

Pipelines that have become exposed on the bottom of the Gulf should be identified and fixed, says the report by the National Transportation Safety Board. Methods of inspection and maintenance of offshore pipelines should be developed by the U.S. Department of Transportation, with the assistance of the Department of the Interior, the NTSB said.

The report follows the NTSB's investigation into the offshore explosion involving the vessel Northumberland last October near Sabine Pass.

The report says regulations are needed to require surveillance to verify that buried pipelines stay buried. It says the absence of such rules "subjects the operators of marine vessels to potential danger, particularly in depths of water comparable to the draft of the vessel."

The NTSB said the extent of the problem is unknown because of the lack of complete information about offshore pipelines and lack of verification procedures.

A DOT spokesman said a formal response to the NTSB recommendations would be issued after they are closely reviewed. The DOT is the primary federal agency responsible for pipeline safety.

But Ted Kinne, vice president for safety, environment and operations for the Interstate Natural Gas Association of America, said there now is no practical way to closely inspect the pipelines.

Other than air surveillance to check for bubbles and leaks, the only way to inspect submerged pipelines in the muddy Gulf waters is with divers, Kinne said.

But he said that's expensive and murky water forces divers to use probes.

DREXEL

Within 90 days of the announcement, $250 million to $300 million of stock was redeemed, senior executives at the firm said.

"That was a capital drain we really didn't need, given what we now know was happening," one top executive with the firm said.

What was happening was that Drexel executives, by their own admission, were entering into deals that were not working, like providing financing for the Paramount Petroleum Co., which left Drexel holding a bridge loan of some $50 million that rapidly collapsed in value.

Such loans cannot readily be converted into cash and banks will not accept them as collateral for other loans.

The securities from the bad deals were held by the firm's parent, the Drexel Burnham Lambert Group, which was not required to report its financial condition to any regulatory body.

When the finances of Drexel's parent began to sag, there was little public sign of the impact the subsidiaries would eventually feel.

By October, the junk market, which had experienced a number of large defaults, was in turmoil, and Drexel was losing millions in other operations.

"The fall was just a disaster for us," one Drexel executive said.

The rating of the parent's commercial paper, which is used for short-term financing, was reduced, and banks began to get skittish about making loans to the firm.

As a result, investors who held Drexel's commercial paper, which are short-term IOUs, refused to reinvest when the securities matured.

As a result, Joseph and others began to worry the firm's book value would be reduced, which would take it out of compliance with agreements it had reached with some lenders.

To reduce the capital going out of the firm, the top executives decided that large amounts of the bonuses owed employees would be in Drexel stock.

Peter Ackerman, a senior executive and protege of Milken, invested twice his annual salary into the company.

Thousands of others took large percentages of their payments in stock or were asked to reinvest in the firm by Joseph.

But the firm still paid out $196 million in cash as bonuses in December and January.

Much of that, $113.4 million, was compensation that had been guaranteed to certain Drexel executives the previous January to assure they would not leave after the settlement with the government.

By early January, the Drexel parent had lost hundreds of millions of dollars in short-term financing and was relying strongly on cash from its commodities subsidiary to help its balance sheet.

The jitters in the commercial paper market rapidly created havoc for the firm.

Before the downgrading, Drexel had as much as $700 million in commercial paper outstanding, executives with the firm said.

But rumors about the firm's position caused more of the commercial paper to become unglued, and in the few weeks before the final days, Drexel had only about $150 million in such securities still in the hands of investors.

The events of February are a matter of great dispute.

A number of senior Drexel executives said the firm was caught short when banks providing short-term financing to the commodities subsidiary began to refuse to provide loans.

That left the subsidiary, which had purchased a significant amount of gold and other metals, holding onto illiquid assets without the financing it needed.

A spokesman for Drexel said the problems at the commodities subsidiary were not an important part of the cash crisis.

He said the problems came because investors in the parent's commercial paper were afraid to do business with the firm.

But other senior executives at Drexel said the problems with the commodities business resulted in an emergency meeting at Drexel's headquarters in lower Manhattan.

Robert Rubin, who oversees the firm's commodities operations, was said to have presented the problem to executives late in Drexel's last full week.

A Drexel spokesman said Rubin could not be reached Sunday for comment.

Executives had little idea what to do.

The parent was depending on the cash from the commodities group, as well as commercial paper, to finance the securities it held, as well as commercial paper.

Now, both were drying up.

As a result, Drexel executives said, the parent turned to siphoning $300 million of Drexel's capital the firm held above the level required by federal regulators.

That transfer stunned officials with the SEC and the Federal Reserve Board, who had already heard from some banking officials the parent company was troubled.

"With the holding company in the distress it was in, transferring capital up would only mean the dissipation of the capital," one government official said.

BANKS

vent state and local governments from subsidizing credit unions. The bill is scheduled to go before the full legislature this week.

"Credit unions are an issue that gets a rise out of bankers any time you mention it," said Chris Chenoweth, executive director of the California Bankers Association. "They've gotten completely out of hand."

But credit-union leaders counter that bankers have gone too far.

"Their real agenda is to wipe out the credit-union movement," said Ralph Swobota, head of Credit Union National Association, the industry's big trade group. He believes bankers are out to strip all credit unions of their tax-exempt, nonprofit status; tighten their membership requirements; and revamp their deposit insurance program, possibly merging it with the bank's fund, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

TRADE

David C. Mulford, under secretary of the Treasury for international affairs, noted that while Americans admire Japan's economic success, "We have been frustrated by a system that seems to operate contrary to many of our basic principles of fairness and openness."

The Bush administration is talking with Japan on everything from prohibitively high Japanese tariffs on wood products and "Buy Japan" practices in digital telecommunications to "dango," a Japanese term for the collusion among Japanese companies in determining bid levels and even contract winners in the construction market.

In what for the United States is also an election year, with Japanese trade issues being linked to jobs and economic competitiveness, Congress is closely monitoring all the negotiations.

Making the situation potentially more explosive than in prior years are legislatively mandated deadlines that reduce presidential discretion in judgments about imposing sanctions on Japan if there is no market-opening progress.

To keep the pressure on, lawmakers are preparing additional bills that would affect Japanese commercial interests.

On Thursday, for instance, the Senate Finance Committee expects to draft legislation initiated by its trade subcommittee chairman, Max Baucus, D-Mont., mandating retaliation if negotiations do not succeed by June in opening Japanese markets in wood products, supercomputers and satellites.

Mrs. Hills last year singled out these areas after finding that under the 1988 law they represent "priority" practices posing significant barriers to American exports.

She now has three choices. She can drop the cases if she finds the barriers have been removed, extend negotiations for six months on the ground that progress warrants continuation of the talks, or retaliate.

The Baucus bill, as now being shaped, would greatly reduce discretion by removing the option of extending the negotiations.

As a Montanan up for re-election in what is expected to be a tough fight this year, Baucus has his eyes chiefly on forest products, a big export of his state.

He said at a news conference Thursday that in wood products alone Japanese trade barriers are costing the United States between $1 billion and $2 billion of lost exports and 10,000 jobs each year.

Experts see interest rates rising

By H.J. MAIDENBERG
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Upward pressures on interest rates in Japan and West Germany are expected to continue to influence the domestic credit rate structure this week and in the near future.

The rise in domestic interest rates last week would have been higher had it not been for plunging Japanese stock prices and mounting fears of inflation in West Germany, credit market analysts said.

Both developments strengthened the dollar and placed a lid on the rate increases.

The Bank of Japan was forced to postpone an expected rise in its discount rate from the current level of 4.25 percent in an effort to arrest a further weakening of stock prices, which lost 7 percent of their value last week. As it was, the Bank of Japan reportedly bought large amounts of bonds to keep their interest rates from rising further.

West Germany's moves to hasten political and monetary integration with East Germany heightened fears of inflation, which was reflected in rising interest rates throughout Western Europe.

"If Japan behaved like West Germany and ignored the upward pressure on interest rates, we in North America would be in even worse trouble," said Francis A. Scotland, managing editor of the International Bank Credit Analyst in Montreal.

"By trying to hold the line on interest rates and letting the yen fall against the dollar, the Japanese were taking a big risk of inflation. But supporting their stock market appears to be their main concern.

"The decline in Japanese stocks," Scotland said, "partly spilled over into the United States equities market and caused a flight to quality, which helped prevent yields from rising further."

Nevertheless, interest rates continued to rise.

The yield on the Japanese government's 10-year bond, their longest maturity, rose to 6.90 percent at Friday's close, up from 6.86 percent the week before and 5.72 percent at the start of the year.

The yield on West Germany's 10-year bund soared to 8.72 percent from 8.55 percent a week earlier and 7.26 percent at the start of 1990.

By comparison, the yield on U.S. 10-year Treasury notes climbed to 8.53 percent last week, from 8.41 percent the week before and 7.91 percent on Dec. 31, 1989.

Leif H. Olsen, who heads an investment management consulting firm bearing his name in New Canaan, Conn., said that the fixed-income market's expectations of further easing by the Federal Reserve "have been clouded, to say the least, largely by developments overseas."

Earlier last December, Olsen continued, the Federal Open Market Committee reduced the key federal funds rate, which banks charge each other for overnight loans, to roughly 8.25 percent, from 8.50 percent. The reason was that most members of that policy making panel believed that the sagging economy needed help.

"This help was promptly eliminated by a surge in bond yields," he said.

"Now, two months later, market interest rates across the board are higher than they were the day after the funds rate was reduced. The bond market behaves as if it believes the economy will grow vigorously without additional rate cuts and, in fact, with rate increases as we have just had. These are contradictions. Somebody must be wrong."

Olsen, who spent many years at the Federal Reserve and as a bank economist, thinks long-term rates have risen largely because of fears that bond investors would move money abroad and not because the domestic economy will soon improve.

"If anything, the flow of economic data will continue to underscore the fact that the domestic gross national product will grow at a weak 1 to 2 percent this year," he said, "and this should convince the bond market that Fed easing is justified."

As for the fears of a flight of capital to overseas markets, Olsen said they were groundless.

'If liquidity actually moved abroad one would have expected to see bond rates in Japan actually decline. But that has not happened. Indeed, even the yen has moved down against the dollar, indicating weakened demand by foreigners seeking to buy Japanese securities," Olsen said.

But William M. Brachfeld, executive vice president at Daiwa Securities America Inc., the domestic arm of the large Japanese financial house, laid much of the outward confusion in the credit market to the difficult position faced by the Fed as well as overseas pressures that the central bank cannot control.

January machine tool orders fall

By JONATHAN P. HICKS
N.Y. Times News Service

Reflecting the continued downturn in the automotive industry, orders for American-made machine tools slipped 4.2 percent in January from December's level, according to a monthly report to be released Monday.

Analysts said the suspension of certain capital-spending programs among automobile makers helped to push down the level of new machine tool orders.

They also said that a surge in new orders typically occurs in December.

The Association for Manufacturing Technology, the trade association for the machine tool industry, said new orders dropped to $197.6 million in January, from December's level of $206.3 million.

New orders last month were also down 14.4 percent from $230.8 million in January 1989.

As a result of weaker orders over the last year, machine tool builders have increasingly been turning to business outside the automobile industry, as well as seeking new orders from customers overseas.

New orders from foreign customers increased 44.8 percent in January from December's level, while domestic orders were down 12.2 percent.

From January of last year, the level of orders from foreign customers increased 45 percent.

"We are pleased to see some positive numbers on the export side," said Albert W. Moore, president of the association, based in McLean, Va. "But with Europe and Japan retooling and East Europe gearing up, United States manufacturers must move even more aggressively in these very competitive markets."

Machine tools are power-driven devices that cut or shape metal parts used in a variety of products, from appliances and vehicles to aircraft and construction materials.

The strength of machine tool orders generally reflects the strength in industrial production, and economists consider their sales patterns to be important indicators of capital spending patterns by manufacturers.

Moore expressed optimism for conditions in the industry for the rest of this year, despite predictions by many economists of a slowdown or recession in the economy.

"There are several trends independent of the business cycle pointing to potential demand for machine tools," he said, adding that demand would be stimulated by high backlogs among aerospace companies, as well as by "the need to replace farm machinery and the increasingly urgent need to rebuild much of the nation's aging infrastructure."

Officials of machine tool companies expressed similar optimism for the prospects this year.

"From discussions we've had with our customers, it seems that capital spending programs are going ahead uninterrupted," said John F. Townsend, vice president of the planning business development for Giddings & Lewis Inc., a machine tool producer based in Fond du Lac, Wis.

"We are seeing greater strength in the area of general industrial equipment like pumps, valves and compressors," Townsend said. "We've also seen strength in the farm equipment sector and in aerospace, particularly commercial aircraft. Whatever downturn there has been seems to be pretty much confined to the automobile industry."

Still, a declining level of new orders from automobile makers, who account for about a third of the demand for machine tools, can depress the machine tool industry.

Consequently, many machine tool manufacturers have turned to Europe, where demand is growing at a steady pace.

At the same time, analysts say, sales by American machine tool manufacturers are being affected by a growing number of Japanese machine tool companies that have establshed a presence in the United States.

Figures from the Japan Economic Institute indicate that the number of such companies has grown to 36, from 17 three years ago.

The Association for Manufacturing Technology said it had no data on the market penetration of Japanese tool makers in the United States.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Stock transfers shouldn't take long

By BILL DOYLE

Q. On Dec. 4, 1989, I hand delivered to our broker a letter, signed by my wife and me, ordering that 250 shares of stock be registered in gift to minors act form for each of our two grandchildren. The letter specified that the stock certificates be delivered to our daughter, as custodian for the gift to minors accounts. The 500 shares were in the asset management account my wife and I have at the brokerage firm.

The stock was intended to be Christmas presents. Our daughter informs us the certificates have not arrived. How long should it take a brokerage to handle such a transfer?

A. It could be done in just a few days. Realistically, it should be completed within a week or two — three at the most.

Doyle

Stock in an asset management account is in "street name," registered in the brokerage firm's name. So there should have been absolutely no delay in transferring the registered ownership to gift to minors form. The brokerage should have had that done through the stock's transfer agent.

After that, two things remained to be accomplished — issuing new certificates and then delivering the certificates to your daughter as you instructed. The transfer agent issues certificates. Delivery, usually by mail, might be arranged by the transfer agent or the brokerage. Meanwhile, the brokerage should send you a statement confirming the transfer.

Considering the ridiculously long delay you have encountered, it's obvious somebody goofed. In your shoes, I would have some harsh words for that broker.

Q. My broker says neither he nor his firm is to blame for the delays in delivery of stock certificates to me. He always blames other brokerages and, especially, transfer agents. Should I believe him?

A. Transfer agents, usually big banks, are handy whipping boys for the brokerage fraternity, basically because investors seldom deal directly with transfer agents. A transfer agent's job is to keep a record of the name, address and number of shares owned by each registered stockholder. When a stock certificate is presented for transfer, the transfer agent cancels the old certificate and issues a new one in the name of the new registered owner.

Under Securities and Exchange Commission regulations, transfer agents must complete 90 percent of routine items within three business days. Failure to meet that turnaround schedule would result in penalties, not many of which have been imposed. Transfer agents cannot be blamed for most certificate delivery delays.

A delay can result when the shares of stock you buy are sold by an investor who has possession of the stock certificate. The seller might be slow in delivering the certificate to his or her broker. Sometimes, sellers do not make "good delivery" of properly endorsed certificates.

More often than not, however, delays in certificate delivery can be traced to slow action or just plain goofs at brokerage firms.

Q. All my stock is in street name. After encountering long delays when transferring stock ownership among family members, I wonder if I would be better off having the stocks registered in my name and taking possession of the stock certificates. Then, I could deal directly with the transfer agent. What do you think?

A. In theory, there should be no delays in transferring ownership of street name stock. In practice, you have learned that things often do not work out as they should.

You can make transfer of stock ownership a do-it-yourself project. Fill out the assignment form on the back of the certificate. Have your signature guaranteed by a brokerage firm, commercial bank or trust company. Deliver the certificate either by hand or by registered mail, return receipt requested, to the transfer agent. The new certificate should arrive in short order.

Willy Brandt, the honorary chairman of the East and West German Social Democratic Party (SPO) waves to the people during an election campaign rally in Leipzig Sunday. Elections are scheduled for March 18.

N.Y. Times News Service

LEIPZIG, East Germany — The East German Social Democrats, who are expected to get the most votes in the elections to Parliament on March 18, ended their first congress Sunday by choosing a candidate for prime minister and presenting a timetable without a deadline for German reunification.

After the bell sounded ending the four-day meeting, the party gathered about 60,000 supporters on the central square — which still bears the name of Karl Marx, but which many already name after King August of Saxony — and presented their candidate for prime minister and the party's biggest vote-getter.

Dutiful applause greeted Ibrahim Bohme, who was confirmed as party chairman.

He will lead the Social Democrats into the first free elections here since 1932.

But the crowd broke into shouting, clapping and chanting when Willy Brandt, the former West German Chancellor, appeared on the balcony of the opera house that faces the square.

The square was a main arena of last autumn's peaceful revolution, which brought about the rebirth of political pluralism in this country.

The Social Democrats' reunification timetable, which is to start as soon as an East German Parliament is elected next month, includes an early joint declaration by the two German legislatures guaranteeing existing borders.

The crowds in Karl-Marx-Platz cheered Brandt's graceful tribute to the people of Leipzig, whose mass demonstrations every Monday night in the critical October and November days played a central role in bringing down Communist rule.

They applauded enthusiastically also when Brandt broke with the long anti-clerical tradition of the German left and paid tribute to the churches, which for many years and through the revolutionary days provided a more or less safe haven for the dissidents who laid the groundwork for the Communists' downfall.

He spoke only briefly, in tribute to the Leipzigers, and sensing the crowd's mood, yielded to Brandt.

The former chancellor repeated the main themes of the speeches he delivered in provincial towns during his tour of Saxony and to the party congress.

He asked his listeners to give credit to Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev for refraining from intervention to save the East German Communists.

Brandt also won applause for demanding the economic and currency union proposed by Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany be delayed until a package of social welfare measures is put into place that would protect East Germans, whose currency is virtually valueless, against the effects of the introduction of the economic power of West Germany and its potent mark.

The unification program, which was approved as part of the Social Democrats' election platform, provided a detailed plan.

It proposed that on the day next month when the newly elected East German Parliament convenes, it and the West German legislature issue a joint declaration recognizing existing borders.

Moldavians seek more power within U.S.S.R. with Sunday vote

MOSCOW (AP) — A day after voters in Lithuania apparently voted the Communists out of power, Moldavia's restive citizenry cast ballots in their first free elections under Soviet rule.

Like the Lithuanians to the north, many ethnic Moldavians are seeking sovereignty and hoped Sunday's balloting would bring victory to pro-independence forces.

In Sunday's vote in Moldavia, a republic bordering Romania, the pro-autonomy Moldavian Popular Front hoped to win at least half of the 380 seats in Parliament from the Communists.

"We think part of the other deputies will come around to our side," said Yuri Roshka, a Popular Front leader and candidate.

One Popular Front voter, 26-year-old Anatoly Zhdanov, said after voting: "We are learning democracy and we want to use the Parliament as a peaceful way to gain our sovereignty."

Others in a park in Kishinev, the republic's capital, agreed.

"We want to be an independent republic — not with the Russians, and not with the Romanians. And above all we want our sovereignty," said Anatoly Goncharov, listening to results of the Lithuanian election on a radio.

The head of Lithuania's Sajudis Popular Front said Sunday that independence from Moscow might be attainable within months. Saturday, the republic's voters appeared to choose the country's first legislature not dominated by Communists.

Unofficial returns showed that of the 90 races decided, candidates endorsed by Sajudis took 72 seats and non-Sajudis candidates took 18, said Rita Dapkus, head of the Sajudis information agency. There are 141 seats, and the rest were to be decided in runoffs March 10.

"If that is not a landslide, then what is?" Algimantas Cekuolis, a Sajudis officer, told a news conference Sunday in the republic's capital, Vilnius. "It is a very clear indication of what the people of Lithuania think."

Sajudis gathered the election results by calling local election commissions, and the tallies were believed to be reliable. Official results in Lithuania were expected today, as were unofficial returns from Moldavia.

"We have a common and very clear goal. Our clear goal is statehood and the independence of Lithuania," said Vytautus Landsbergis, Sajudis chairman. "This goal is achievable this year."

Central American leaders recall Duarte's courage

Vice President Dan Quayle, Presidents Oscar Arias of Costa Rica and Vinicio Cerezo of Guatemala and former President Jose Azcona Hoyos of Honduras attended the funeral Mass for Duarte, who died Friday of cancer at age 64.

President Alfredo Cristiani did not attend the services Sunday because he was in Taiwan on a state visit. Leaders of Duarte's centrist Christian Democratic Party criticized Cristiani's rightist government for not declaring a national day of mourning.

At least 100,000 people paid their last respects to the former president, party leaders said.

Duarte's followers, many carrying photographs of the former president and cheering, "Duarte! Duarte!" tossed flowers at his flag-draped coffin as it was carried from the Roman Catholic church to a 21-gun military salute.

Arias and Cerezo were among the pallbearers at his burial. Arias, remembering Duarte's key role in regional peace talks, called him "the father of Central American democracy."

"Napoleon was a visionary pioneer and an untiring fighter for democracy," Arias said at the Mass.

9 killed in Natal despite Mandela's plea for peace

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Clashes in southeastern Natal province left at least 13 people dead, authorities said today, despite a plea by Nelson Mandela for warring black factions to throw their weapons into the sea.

Mandela, in a speech Sunday in Durban to about 100,000 people, said the black factional fighting in Natal hindered the battle against apartheid, South Africa's policy of racial segregation.

"My message to those of you involved in this battle of brother against brother is this: Take your guns, your knives and your pangas and throw them into the sea," Mandela said. Pangas are similar to machetes. Police say the violence has claimed about 3,000 lives over the past four years.

Police with shotguns killed two protesters and wounded four more today when they fired on a crowd attacking a community center in a black township near the central town of Kroonstad, police said.

Three men died and two were injured in clashes Sunday in Natal between rival factions, police said. Warring groups burned houses and huts in two areas of Natal during the fighting, they said.

Troops leave Czechslovakia

FRENSTAT, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Twenty-two Soviet tanks left this northern Moravian city today, beginning the Red Army's withdrawal from Czechoslovakia nearly 22 years after Moscow sent troops to crush "Prague Spring" reforms.

Few people came to wave goodbye and those who did showed little emotion.

The Soviet troops entered Czechoslovakia with a Warsaw Pact invasion that smashed the 1968 reforms.

Citizen participation is critical to police effectiveness. Do you care about your neighborhood enough to help protect it?

The Case of The Tucson Tip-off.

They started talking to each other about what they could do. They got fed up. About 400 people went to the police for advice. They learned about surveillance. They got to know their beat officers. Citizens and police became partners in crime prevention.

In just three weeks, 17 arrests were made and burglaries went down 30%. And Tucson is only one case where people successfully worked to beat crime. To find out more, write: The McGruff Files, 1 Prevention Way, Washington, D.C. 20559-0001. You can make a difference. You can help...

PART-TIME JOB$ AVAILABLE APRIL 1

Effective April 2, the Midland Reporter-Telegram will become a morning newspaper instead of an afternoon newspaper. As a result we have several routes which will need to be re-filled with qualified, responsible individuals. Due to this one-time large number of routes becoming available, now is the best time ever to obtain a route in your area!

Often asked questions:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 50% adult and 50% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- adults who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- youths who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $150 to $500 monthly! Some motor routes make even more, although currently none are expected to be available. Depending on your service record, you may qualify to move up to a motor route later!

How long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carriers choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Some collecting in person will be necessary though.

When do the papers have to be delivered by?

6:00 am Monday - Friday, and 7:00 am Saturday and Sunday.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
