Kidnapping trial begins Monday

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Prosecutors believe Kenneth Wayne Parker kidnapped June Gilkerson. Starting Monday, they will have to prove it.

The burly 42-year-old Parker, a native Midlander, decorated Vietnam veteran and former firefighter, is scheduled to go on trial before U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton. According to a federal indictment charging him with two counts of conspiracy to commit kidnapping, he and another man plotted the Nov. 8, 1986, abduction of Ms. Gilkerson.

Gilkerson

Alderink

The other man, 22-year-old David Russell Alderink, pleaded guilty to the crime February 1 and is serving a 20-year state prison sentence for aggravated kidnapping. He is expected to offer key testimony against Parker.

The proceeding, which attorneys on both sides estimate will take about a week, may finally halt what lawmen call the most extensive investigation in Midland Police Department history.

The government has charged that on Nov. 7, 1986, Parker and Alderink — a fair-haired, athletic burglar a day away from a Michigan homecoming — left Midland together. The alliance was to have taken the two men to a small town 50 miles northeast of Austin, where another kidnapping allegedly had been planned.

Prosecutors contend that scheme was botched — that the two men drove back to Midland, turned their attention to Ms. Gilkerson and planned to sell her into prostitution south of the border.

Prior to Monday's trial start, prosecuting attorneys — including Assistant U.S. Attorneys Wayne Speck and Tom Beery and Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre — declined comment. Also silent were investigators who are familiar with the case.

In explanation, some cited a motion filed by Tom Morgan, who Bunton appointed to represent the indigent Parker, who has been jailed since his arrest. Morgan claims publicity surrounding Ms. Gilkerson's disappearence has made finding a fair jury impossible, and he has asked Bunton to move the trial. The judge has not ruled on the motion.

Morgan, a former Midland County prosecutor, also declined to comment on the trial.

However, the scenario that has emerged in conversations with investigators, from court records and documents, and pre-trial hearings offer a twisted chain of events and at least one mystery: June Gilkerson has never been seen again, at least not in Midland.

By early November 1986, Ms. Gilkerson — a dark-haired, dark-eyed beauty from North Carolina with a degree in criminal justice — had been a part-time volunteer at the Midland Restitution Center for several months.

She was a few days away from starting a salaried position at the center when she attended a Nov. 7 hearing at the Midland County Courthouse.

According to court records, the Friday hearing in 238th State District Court concerned the release of Alderink from the restitution center, and the transfer of the remaining 10-year probated sentence to his native Michigan. Judge Vann Culp approved the order, and Alderink signed it.

The former construction worker had finished a six-month stint at the center for a December 1985 burglary he had admitted committing, court records show. While serving his time, he was assigned to a work detail at the Midland County Public Library. A maintenance worker there was named Kenneth Parker.

According to a police report filed after the disappearance, June's husband, Ronald, answered a telephone call at the couple's Delmar Drive home at 9 a.m. Saturday, Nov. 8, but gave the call over to his wife.

The man on the other end talked to June for several minutes. She then told her husband a problem had developed with an inmate's release, and she needed to go to the restitution center, the report noted.

June left the house and told her husband and visiting grandmother, Mary Caspar of Tampa, Fla., she would be back in an hour.

Six hours later, her blue 1986 Honda Civic was found parked at the Best Western Motel on Interstate 20 near the Permain Basin Petroleum Museum with keys, tennis shoes and a purse containing credit cards still inside.

Angelo retains committee post

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

HOUSTON — Midland Republican top gun Ernest Angelo Jr. remains today a Republican National Committeeman after a winning a two-thirds majority of state convention delegates Saturday over another Texas oilman.

About half of the almost 11,000 delegates voted in the race. Angelo won his fourth four-year term over Roy Farrell Jr., the former Dallas County coordinator for Pat Robertson's presidential campaign.

Angelo won 2,986 to 1,793, unofficial results showed.

"I think the delegates decided that my years of experience and broad range of political activity was an advantage. He is a relative newcomer," Angelo said Saturday night.

But the key to Angelo's win, he said, was the "tremendous amount of support the Midland delegation" gave him, working three full days to get him re-elected.

"Midland made a good impression as always," Angelo said.

The NRC is a 162-member governing body which directs party policy, financial endeavors and is in charge of the national convention held once every four years.

Angelo's race against Farrell was fairly low-key in comparison to others, the Midland oilman said.

"Bloodbath" was a term heard often by Republican pundits predicting intense conflicts at the state convention between ultra-conservative backers of television evangelist Pat Robertson and more moderate delegates supporting Vice President George Bush's run for the presidency.

Angelo maintained that a tense situation failed to arise during the weekend convention.

Robertson's speech prior to the Angelo-Farrell vote didn't affect the outcome of the race, Angelo said.

"He made a good speech and it was totally one of party unity and harmony," he said, adding that the "Robertson people are satisfied.

"I think everyone is just a Republican now...not for Bush, Kemp, Dole or Robertson," Angelo said.

Furthermore, the Robertson faction shouldn't radicalize the party or scare away more mainstream, moderate voters, he added.

Bush is in a good position as far as Texas support goes, Angelo said. Should Democratic front-runner Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts choose Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas as a running mate, the good stance could improve, the Midlander predicted.

Angelo guesses voters would be offended by a Bentson run, though he added he doesn't see the ticket in the offing.

"Texans wouldn't be pleased to have him running for two offices. It worked for (former President Lyndon) Johnson, but I don't think it would work for him," he said.

The choice "could very well help us win the Senate seat," he added, alluding to U.S. Rep. Beau Boulter's run for Bentsen's seat this November.

City pours ideas into chemical spill plan

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

In Trent, Texas, last week, 13 cars become derailed from a freight train about 30 miles west of Abilene just off of Interstate 20. Two of the cars were carrying cyclohexane and propylene. While no leaks were reported, both are listed by the state as hazardous chemicals.

Accidents happen.

So do toxic spills.

No community knows when they'll occur. Few are necessarily equipped to handle a sudden plume of poisonous gas or a fireball of flammable material harbored in the cargo beds of trains and trucks which meander innocently through the neighborhood streets, highways and railways of Texas.

Robert Lansford knows about hazardous chemicals. As coordinator for the Texas Department of Safety's Division of Emergency Management in Austin, Lansford has had the unpopular task of making certain that communities like Midland have a working plan in place.

"It's been real hard trying to get everyone to move down the same road," said Lansford. "We're trying to educate places like Midland and Odessa — even ourselves."

Under the federal Superfund Amendment and Reauthorization Act of 1986, Texas communities like Midland must have a working action plan by Oct. 1 or face the possibility of being penalized by the Environmental Protection Agency.

Lansford won't even second-guess what EPA has in store for those that fail to heed the act, he just knows that time is running out for a number of communities — most of which he concedes are still downright confused about what's required.

"It's one thing to pass a statute. It's another to arbitrarily set a bunch of rules and regulations," says Lansford, noting EPA hasn't bothered to provide funding for the massive, nationwide emergency plan.

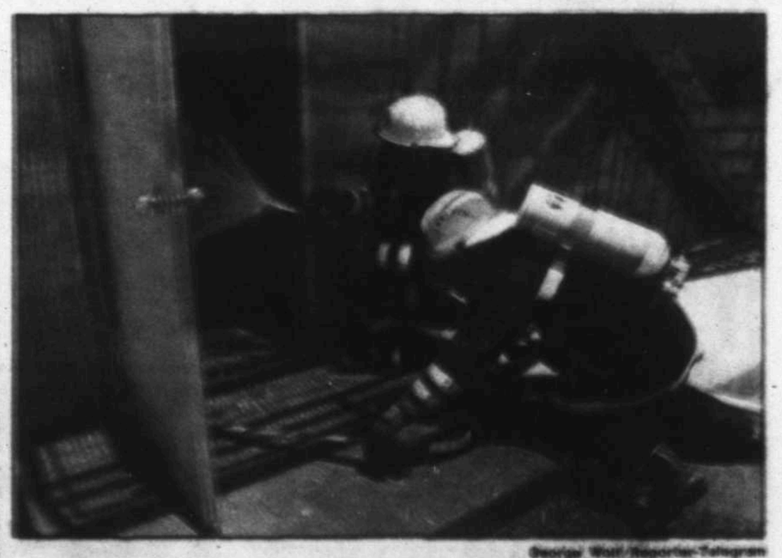

Lansford isn't the only one clenching his fist toward Washington, D.C. Midland County Commissioner Win Brown says the federal act created an immediate liability issue.

"The guidance has virtually been nonexistent, but if we don't pick up the slack, we leave our necks out for a suit. It's frustrating, but we're a lot further along than most cities in Texas, with the exception of the Gulf Coast," he said.

Brown, who chairs the Local Emergency Planning Commission, says the public sector as well as private industry have put together what he views as a viable working disaster response.

Not surprisingly, much of what Midland adopted was lifted from other plans related to floods and tornadoes. What the city lacked was a formidable identification system, listing the location and amounts of hazardous chemicals stored inside the county.

Wright says Republicans using charges to deflect sleaze issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Jim Wright says he's confident the ethics committee inquiry into his financial dealings will show he has done no wrong, but Republicans aren't waiting to make political hay out of his troubles.

Wright, D-Texas, says the charges against him never would have been raised had the Republicans not needed an issue to deflect the sleaze issue from their presidential candidate, George Bush.

"I have absolute confidence that the committee will find that no rule of the House has been violated," Wright said. "I don't think there's any question but that they're politically motivated."

Wright said Friday he had underestimated the amount to which a speaker could become a political target. But if Attorney General Edwin Meese III and other Reagan administration officials hadn't themselves been in ethics trouble, "I don't think there would have been a formal charge and all this fanfare," he said.

The ethics committee, consisting of 12 members equally divided between the two parties, unanimously voted to begin an inquiry into six possible violations by Wright. They included:

STATE

— Contacting Egyptian president Anwar Sadat on behalf of a friend and financial associate when the Camp David accords threatened the friend's Middle East oil interests.

— Intervening with federal officials on behalf of another Texas oil company which might have had some financial relationships to the speaker.

— Whether Wright's campaign financed publication of a book for which the speaker earned $55,000 in royalties.

— The use of a Capitol Hill staffer and office funds to help with the drafting of the book.

— The use of a Fort Worth condominium, owned by the family of a business partner, as his Texas home without having to pay a monthly rent.

The committee was silent on whether it planned to hire an outside counsel to handle the case, as Republicans were demanding.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Some cloudiness continues

From Staff and Wire Reports

A slight chance of thunderstorms exists throughout the weekend and on Monday, forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport said.

Partly cloudy skies should remain for today and Monday.

Today there is less than a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms, with that figure increasing to 20 percent tonight.

The high should be in the mid-90s today with winds from the southeast at 10-20 mph. Tonight the low should be in the upper 60s.

Monday there is less than a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and the high should be in 90s.

The record low for today was set in 1979 when it reached 55, while the record high for Saturday was set in 1959 when it reached 104.

STATE

Temperatures around most of the Lone Star State crawled into the 80s and 90s by mid-afternoon Saturday, as the only rain clouds in the state lingered over the Gulf Coast and in the Big Bend Valley.

The showers dotted the coastal bend area, and thunderstorms lingered over the lower coastal waters, while more fierce and numerous thunderstorms rumbled over the Big Bend Valley.

Elsewhere, skies over parts of north Central, East and far West Texas were clear, while most of South Texas and the Panhandle was covered with high thin clouds.

The National Weather Service reported high temperatures ranging from 81 degrees at Stephenville to 93 at Del Rio, El Paso, McAllen and Wink.

The northwest corner of the Panhandle continued to produce high wind gusts extending into the South Plains, the weather service reported.

Winds around 30 mph were common in the Amarillo area during the afternoon.

Meanwhile, east to southeast breezes in the 5 to 15 mph range swept most other areas of the state.

Isolated late afternoon and evening thunderstorms will remain over far West and Southwest Texas, the Panhandle and the lower coast. The weather service said skies will be mostly fair over North and West Texas and partly cloudy throughout South Texas.

NATION

Temperatures were unseasonably cool Saturday over the eastern half of the nation and in the Pacific Northwest, with low temperature records tied or broken in 33 cities.

Rain was scarce with showers and thunderstorms primarily over southern Florida. No city reported more than an inch of rain during the six hours up to 2 p.m.

The low temperature of 47 at Knoxville, Tenn., toppled a record that had stood since 1878, and the low of 49 at Nashville tied a record on the books since 1877. The low of 43 at Topeka, Kan., tied a record set in 1889.

Other records: Astoria, Ore., 40; Atlantic City, N.J., 45, tie; Batesville, Ark., 47, tie; Baton Rouge, La., 59, tie; Birmingham, Ala., 50; Bristol, Tenn., 41; Calico Rock, Ark., 41; Camden, Ark., 49; Chattanooga, Tenn., 49;

Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 55 degrees at Sexton Summit, Ore., to 98 at Tuscon, Ariz. The low for the day was 32 degrees at Flagstaff, Ariz., about 250 miles north of Tucson and more than 4,000 feet higher, and at West Yellowstone, Mont.

For Sunday, showers and thunderstorms were forecast over southern and central Florida. Scattered showers and thunderstorms were forecast from northern New Mexico to Montana and North Dakota.

Highs in the 70s and upper 60s were predicted from the northern Rockies to the northern Pacific Coast and along the coast of California; generally in the 80s and lower 90s east of the Rockies; and in the 90s and above 100 in the desert Southwest.

Mexico not trading in debt-for-nature swaps

By JAMES ANDERSON

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The growing popularity of debt-for-nature swaps in developing countries has failed to catch on in Mexico, which for political and legal reasons has not pursued the conservation and debt-reduction strategy.

Under the debt-for-nature concept, an ecology organization buys or receives as a tax-deductible donation foreign debt paper from creditor banks. It obtains the paper at a discount, since most Third World foreign debt is worth much less than its face value on the secondary market.

Mexican debt, for example, currently trades at about 50 cents to the dollar in the secondary market. The country's $100 billion debt is Latin America's second-largest, after Brazil.

The ecology group then exchanges that paper for currency or bonds issued by the debtor government. Proceeds are used to buy lands for conservation purposes or to fund ecology programs.

Creditor banks benefit by retiring unprofitable loans from their books. Debtor governments benefit by reducing their debt burden and increasing their capacity to fund ecological projects.

Bolivia, Costa Rica and Ecuador have reached nature swaps with private ecology groups. But swaps of the type concluded thus far are prohibited by Mexico's Constitution and the juridical framework under which the Department of Ecology and Urban Development, known by its Spanish initials as SEDUE, operates.

"SEDUE cannot work directly with international ecology groups on any such type of equity proposal under constitutional law," said Graciela de la Garza, the department's general director of ecological conservation of natural resources.

"The law gives exclusive jurisdiction over the management of ecological zones to SEDUE — without conditionality or loss of sovereignty. An equity agreement that gives management or funding responsibility to outside organizations would mean losing the ability to select those projects for conservation, to allocate resources and priorities. This is unacceptable," she said in a recent interview.

Bolivia struck the first debt-for-nature swap last July, when Conservation International purchased $650,000 of the country's foreign debt at an 85 percent discount.

In turn, the government agreed to create a trust fund to manage the Beni Biosphere Reserve in the Amazon. The government holds joint title over the lands with a private Bolivian ecology group, with Conservation International acting as consultant.

Giving up partial ownership of federal lands is prohibited by Mexican law, Ms. de la Garza said.

"We've analyzed the Bolivian agreement," she said. "Once the government signed it, it could not modify it or consider other options for managing the zone. This type of arrangement cannot be considered by Mexico."

In nature swaps authorized by Costa Rica and Ecuador, private ecology groups have cashed in foreign debt paper to buy bonds, the proceeds of which are used to maintain national parks, ecological reserves and tropical forestland.

SEDUE and other government departments reserve the exclusive right to manage financial resources for conservation in Mexico, Ms. de la Garza noted.

Moreover, SEDUE's traditionally adversarial relationship with Mexico's leading ecology organizations renders politically unfeasible, if not impossible, the prospect of joint management or co-ownership of federal lands.

SPILLS

While a number of companies have volunteered that information, many remain unaccounted for. "The one thing people don't realize is a lot of major stores and nurseries around here store this stuff," remarked Midland Emergency Management Coordinator Bob Edgerton.

He claims a lot of work remains to be done. "We just don't have the manpower to do it...the feds didn't give us any money." He says the effort, to date, has been 100 percent voluntary.

And Midland Firefigher Eddie Klatt, also a member of the emergency planning commission, calls the whole thing confusing. "A lot of these counties don't even have fire departments. I don't think anyone knows where we really stand for sure, but we do have a plan in place."

Klatt's convinced the city is prepared for tangible disasters. What scares him are wrecks and rollovers of trucks and train cars.

"You just never know what they're carrying...being in the middle of the oil patch, there are a lot of different types of corrosives and interstate traffic moving coast-to-coast. We don't know what's flying in and out of here."

Currently, the city's battalion chief has undertaken an in-house study to determine whether Midland is in need of a Hazardous Materials Team.

"My feeling is, the only way to go is with a HazMat team. Right now we can seal off an area and protect lives, but that falls short of what an emergency response team could do...I'm not trying to infer we couldn't do the job, but that (HazMat) capability would be nice," he said.

The fire department, city and county also have received considerable cooperation from the private sector, in particular through the chemical industry-sponsored Community Awareness Emergency Response program.

Ironically, the CAER program was in place in Midland, and in other communities as well, long before EPA ever declared it was forcing emergency action plans down the throats of unwilling participants.

"Ashland (Chemical Co.) is one of the bigger ones here," said Klatt. "They've done a lot to help us out." Others, agree.

In the meantime, Edgerton and Brown said that come the Oct. 1 deadline, Midland will be ready to go.

And that brought praise from Lansford, the state's emergency response coordinator. "From my standpoint, Midland and Odessa have done an outstanding job...most people recognize the need for this program. I just think EPA's deadline was pretty unrealistic...that's why I've been upset."

TRIAL

The Honda was unlocked, and witnesses at the motel first recalled seeing the car about 10:15 a.m. Several uniformed officers arrived, and the pastures around the motel were searched, yielding nothing, according to the report.

The car's tires were muddied, and prickly burrs marked its sidewalls, officers at the scene noticed, even though the route from Ms. Gilkerson's home to the restitution center is paved.

Four partial fingerprints were found on the car doors, according to police.

Eleven days after Ms. Gilkerson was reported missing, a DC-3 airplane equipped with infrared, heat-sensitive equipment searched the flat areas of the county. No evidence was found.

After Alderink's Friday release hearing, investigators believe he and Parker drove to Austin. From there they drove to Rockdale, some 50 miles northeast of the capital city, investigators have said, and at about midnight, the duo stopped.

"On or before November 7, 1986, Defendant Parker obtained two pistols and handcuffs," the indictment states. "Defendant Parker placed a telephone call to the residence of Susan Lindsay.... Parker and Alderink drove to an apartment complex where Susan Lindsay lived."

In his first brush with the law in Midland, Alderink was indicted Jan. 30, 1986, for burglary and auto theft. He pleaded guilty to the burglary in exchange for a 10-year probated sentence. The auto theft charge was dropped April 2, but Alderink apparently remembered the woman who told police he had stolen her car: Susan Lindsay.

Ms. Lindsay, 25, formerly of Rockdale, now lives in Midland. She and her husband John also are expected to testify at the trial. John Lindsay and Alderink were friends when David worked for a Midland construction firm. On occasion, he had stayed at the Lindsay home.

After they left Rockdale, Alderink and Parker drove back to Midland — stopping on the way at convenience stores in Brady and Llano, according to court documents.

By the time they approached Midland Saturday morning, they had talked about taking Ms. Gilkerson, according to court records.

"He (Alderink) told me they talked about abducting June Gilkerson for money," Det. Sgt. B.G. Johnson testified at a Feb. 23 hearing. "Parker had told him he could sell a good-looking woman into Mexico or South America" for $15,000 cash, with Alderink's share half that, Johnson testified.

Parker had "bragged" about his affiliation with criminal organizations in Mexico, including groups that regularly bought women from the United States for prostitution, Johnson said.

About 9 a.m. on Nov. 8, officers believe Parker drove his pickup truck to a convenience store on the Garden City Highway, just north of U.S. Interstate 20. Alderink then located a phone, and that's when the call was made to June Gilkerson, lawmen say.

Ms. Gilkerson then drove not to the restitution center, but to a bowling alley on Loop 250, according to the indictment.

"On Nov. 8, 1986, Defendant Parker drove David Alderink to the Fairmont Lanes bowling alley in Midland," the document states. "Defendant Kenneth Wayne Parker bound June Gilkerson and placed her in a pickup truck and drove away."

Investigators are not sure whether the scheme to sell the woman into prostitution in Mexico ever materialized. Privately, they have said Alderink lured the woman to the bowling alley — but they also believe shortly after Parker is alleged to have abducted her, the younger man drove her car back to the Best Western, where it was later found.

The police investigation focused on Alderink from the beginning, according to testimony at a June 2 pretrial hearing. Detectives had no reason to suspect him, but after he twice lied to officers, they became suspicious, testimony showed.

In one of the many twists in the case, Parker initially was contacted to verify a third story Alderink had told: that the men were in Austin together about the time the woman disappeared. Parker was not considered a suspect at the time, Johnson said at the hearing.

But on Nov. 26, police announced a break in the case. A 40-year-old man had been linked to the missing woman's car by "independent physical evidence," which later was identified as the fingerprints on a door. The suspect was Parker.

In a sealed indictment filed with the 238th State District Court April 28, 1987, a grand jury found enough evidence to name Alderink. He was indicted for aggravated kidnapping, conspiracy to commit aggravated kidnapping, and kidnapping. Parker was named as an unindicted co-conspirator.

Alderink — who had returned to Michigan after the disappearance — was arrested without incident May 4 at his home in Jenison, Mich. He was returned to Midland and arraigned on the charges.

As months passed, the investigation continued. Alderink, who made several trips between Michigan and Midland to talk to officers, seemingly had a change of heart and decided to plead guilty in January. His court-appointed attorney, Jim Bobo of Odessa, said his client felt "remorseful" about his part in the case.

"He felt like he had aided and assisted another gentleman who actually committed the kidnapping," Bobo said after the plea agreement was made public February 1. "He got involved in something, was led into it, and things just went from there. He thought June Gilkerson was a nice woman, and he would have wanted nothing to happen to her."

The attorney also said Alderink "has no idea" what happened to the woman after the abduction.

While detectives continued to gather evidence, District Attorney Schorre and his first assistant, Ralph Petty, began to consider how to proceed with the prosecution of Parker. They decided to seek federal help.

Two days before Alderink pleaded guilty, a Midland federal grand jury indicted Parker, who had moved to the Dallas area. The indictment was sealed.

He was arrested Feb. 4 by FBI agents and Detective Johnson at a Dallas-area video store where he worked.

In the Feb. 23 hearing before Judge Bunton, Johnson said Parker had been quizzed about his whereabouts Nov. 7 and 8. Parker claimed he had driven to Del Rio and had spent the night with prostitutes across the border in Ciudad Acuna, Johnson said. He returned alone the morning of Nov. 8, he told officers.

But investigators who traced the route Parker gave them were unable to find any evidence supporting his alibi, Johnson said.

At the same hearing, relatives of Parker countered Johnson. Parker's sister, Joanne Hines, testified that the defendant was "very easy going, very laid back...humble."

She testified her brother was forced from Midland several months after Ms. Gilkerson disappeared because of constant harassment by police.

Roland Moreland, Parker's nephew, said in testimony he was "outraged" by the charges against his uncle, who he described as a "gentle person, a gentleman...one of the few gentlemen left in the world."

While June Gilkerson has never been located, investigators have said they believe she was killed shortly after her disappearance.

If prosecutors' scenario of the crime is right, the only person who may know where she is — alive or dead — will be seated at the defense table on Monday.

Young Jessica's Saturday bout benefits boy

LANCASTER, Texas (AP) — Toddler Jessica McClure on Saturday appeared at a benefit with wrestler Kevin Von Erich to help raise funds for a boy with severe heart and lung problems.

Jessica's rescue from an abandoned well in Midland attracted international attention last fall. The two-year-old and her mother, Cissy McClure, came to this Dallas suburb in March, saying they wanted to help Brennan Bolin, 5, to get a transplant.

Mrs. McClure said she couldn't resist the request to use Jessica's celebrity status to help raise funds. Jessica became involved in the fundraiser because families of the children are acquainted, said benefit coordinator Bonnie Arnold.

Jessica arrived at Cedar Valley College for a "wrestling match" with Kevin Von Erich shortly before 8 p.m. CDT. Four matches were scheduled, organizers said.

Von Erich was delayed briefly in arriving for the event after he said he had to stop to render aid in an automobile accident.

Plans were for Jessica to appear in the wrestling ring with Von Erich, then kiss the wrestler and "knock him for a loop," an organizer said.

Brennan has idiopathic pulmonary hemosiderosis, a rare condition in which bleeding occurs within the lungs' linings.

In March, Jessica and her mother flew to Lancaster by private plane for a reception with the children. Jessica participated in a balloon release attended by children from Lancaster elementary schools.

Brennan's family hoped that he could receive a heart-lung transplant at the University of Minnesota this summer, said Mrs. Arnold.

Schools blamed for Hispanic dropout issue

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Schools are to blame for much of the problem of Hispanic dropouts, Hispanic researchers and officials said Saturday.

The national Hispanic dropout rate officially stands at 8 percent, but officials say the figure could be as high as 40 percent because schools do not keep accurate records.

Researchers and officials who discussed the high school dropout rate at the National Association of Latin Elected Officials conference Saturday said that school administrators are partly to blame for the phenomenon, and that dropout prevention programs should begin as early as fourth grade.

"Our kids are forced into the streets and once they are in the streets, street life is all that is left for them," said Roberto Rivera, chief legislative aide for Democratic state Sen. Miguel Del Valle of Illinois.

He said school financing programs should be changed so administrators would want to help potential dropouts.

"What we found in Illinois and in Chicago is that because school financing is based on average daily attendance of the first three months of enrollment, our schools can literally be paid for kids that are not in the classroom and, therefore, there is no sense of urgency," Del Valle said.

"I would suggest that you must work very hard to create a financial incentive for teachers and school administrators to keep kids in school, and we found out that when that takes place the attitude, the philosopy, the thinking behind the victim-blaming all of a sudden changes because we are talking about paychecks and we are talking about schools," he said.

Aurelio Montemayor, director of the San Antonio-based Southwest Dropout Collaborative, Intercultural Development Research Association, said community leaders should help potential dropouts and their parents deal with the problem.

He said, however, that many parents of Hispanic students do not meet with teachers or administrators because they are intimidated.

"What you see right now is there is a moral judgement on family and kids. It is one-sided. There is nothing wrong on the side of the institution. The parents are to blame," Montemayor said.

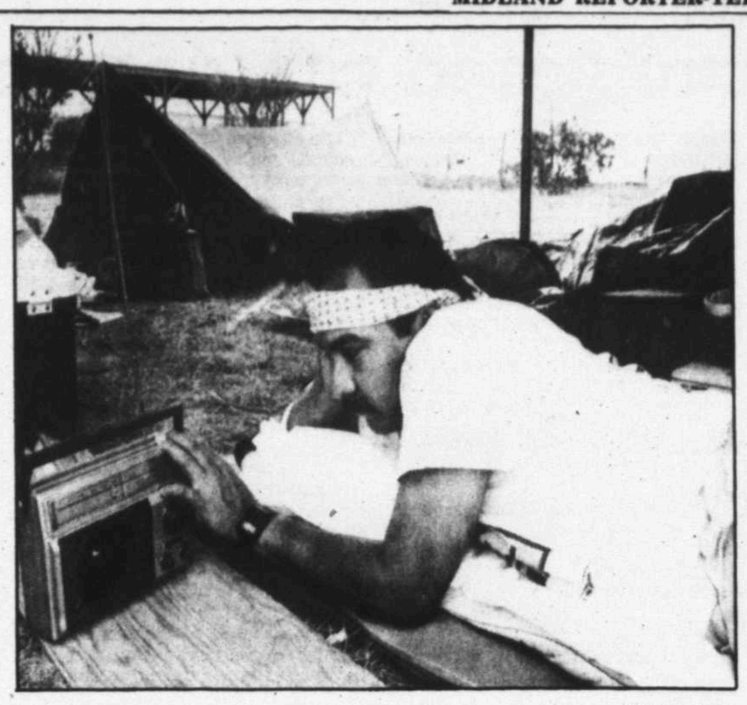

"As long as solutions are based on changing the kids and the families it is not going to work," he said. "The morals (of Hispanics) may be different, but if I have been a family that for three generations has been slave labor in this country, there is not a lot of time to develop middle-class morals."

Salvador Calderon, secretary for the Mexican-American Engineering Society, talked about the group's PACE program, which is aimed at trying to reduce the Hispanic dropout rate to the national average within five years.

Augustina Reyes, vice president of the Houston Independent School District, said that Hispanic dropouts are a disappointment to the community because some of them turn to crime.

"What we see are children who are achieving less than their parents had achieved and that is a disappointment that is occurring across the state and across the country," she said.

"It would be much easier to pay the $2,000 to $5,000 per year per student (for education) than the $30,000 to keep them in prison," she said.

Convoy willing to risk jail to finish voyage

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — Members of a convoy stalled by federal officials in their attempt to bring food, clothing and medicine to Nicaragua say they are willing to risk imprisonment to finish their trip.

But, meanwhile, the 100 members of the Veterans Peace Convoy are receiving food and support from sympathic organizations, including lemonade apparently sent by actor Paul Newman, a spokesman for the group said.

"Paul Newman sent down 40 cases of lemonade for the peace convoy," said Tom Hansen, a member of the Veterans Peace Convoy. "It just says lemonade instead of salad dressing, and his picture is on it."

A public relations agent for Newman said he couldn't confirm whether the lemonade came from Newman, but he said it probably did.

"I will almost guarantee it. He's active in doing for other people. He's that kind of guy," said Warren Cowan. "I would think he would've approved that."

The group is ready to go to Nicaragua, Hansen said.

"We'll be pulling out Wednesday morning for Nicaragua. If they say no, they're going to have to impound the truck and arrest us," he said.

Hansen said in a telephone interview Saturday that federal officials had reneged on an earlier promise to let them proceed to Nicaragua.

U.S. Customs officials have delayed the convoy that arrived Tuesday in Laredo, saying the trip would violate trade sanctions placed on Nicaragua.

Since being delayed, the group has waited at a commercial campground in northern Laredo. Hansen said the group will stay attempt to leave for Nicaragua, with or without federal approval.

"We're going to give the Treasury department until Wednesday to come to their senses and recognize that what we're doing is completely legal, and then we'll be pulling out Wednesday morning."

He added, "There are 100 people here prepared to go to jail."

The convoy had planned to leave the United States Wednesday, but U.S. Treasury Department officials informed the veterans group that the trip would violate restrictions imposed on the Central American nation in 1985.

Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control said the group would have to apply for an export license, post cash bonds equal to the value of the trucks, cars and buses, and give assurance the vehicles would be returned to this country within 30 days.

Robertson pledges party unity

HOUSTON (AP) — Pat Robertson, the last GOP presidential hopeful to drop his challenge of Vice President George Bush, traveled to Bush's hometown Saturday to tell Texas Republicans to stand together now that the primaries are over.

"We are here as Republicans. And we are here united. The Republican Party is on the rise and we're going to win in November," Robertson told a cheering state GOP convention.

In an address interrupted repeatedly by cheers and applause, Robertson sounded his themes of traditional values and urged party unity.

"I am a Republican, and I have no intention of turning over the streets of America to drug dealers, to organized crime or to radical, homosexual activists," the television evangelist declared.

"We are Republicans, and we believe that the first priority of government should be to strengthen the American family unit, not tear it apart," he said.

Robertson said he believed the 1988 election could "determine the course and direction" of the nation for the remainder of the century.

Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, who appears to have clinched the Democratic nomination, is too liberal to be president, he said.

"It matters whether the man in the White House is a mediocre liberal who would return us to the policies of Jimmy Carter or a good conservative" who will continue the work of President Reagan, Robertson said.

Robertson also blasted House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, who will be the subject of a House Ethics Committee investigation over some of his financial dealings.

"It does matter to us and our children whether the speaker of the House of Representatives is Jim Wright. It's time we had a new speaker," he said.

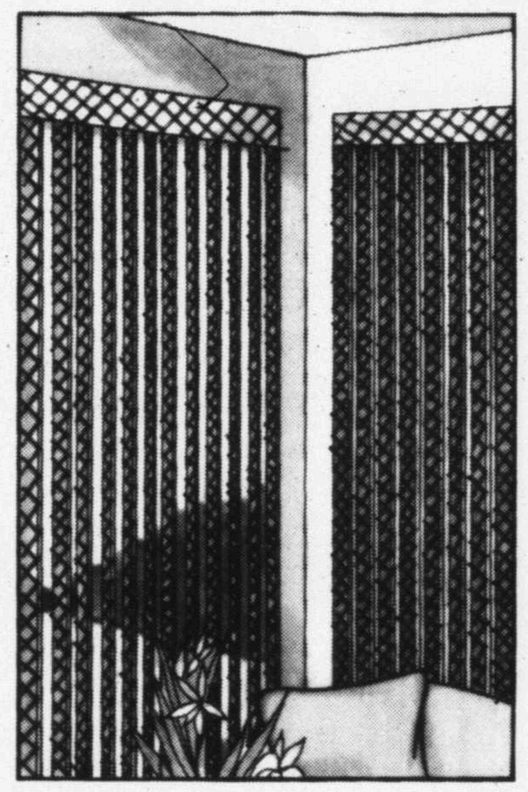

The convention, which ended Saturday, chose the 111 Texas delegates who will attend the GOP National Convention in New Orleans in August, all of whom are pledged to Bush since he swept the state primary on March 8.

Party unity was a theme sounded repeatedly during the three-day convention, which saw Bush and Robertson delegates agreeing on several key issues, including the party's platform.

In a convention-floor interview, Gov. Bill Clements said he had no doubt that Republicans — regardless of their presidential preference — would rally behind the GOP ticket in November.

"Unity? Absolutely," Clements said. "When you get down to the general election, everybody comes to the realization that united we win and divided we fall. It's not complicated.

"The intramural fusses are over with. I've seen this happen in all the elections I've been involved with since 1972," the governor said. "We're getting ready to really turn loose the forces of good here."

Bentsen: War on Drugs needs 'shot in arm'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said Saturday that the United States' war against drugs is poorly coordinated and should be brought under the control of a drug czar.

He said the nearly $3 billion annual federal campaign against drugs involves 26 law enforcement agencies and eight Cabinent members.

"But all of them do it part-time, they have full time duties elsewhere. So you've got everyone in charge and no one in charge," Bentsen said in a news release.

Bentsen said he will draft legislation to put one person in charge to coordinate the anti-drug effort.

He said sometimes "turf battles" erupt between law enforcement agencies, hampering attempts to intercept drug shipments and arrest dealers.

He said a recent jurisdictional dispute between the Drug Enforcement Administration and U.S. Customs allowed drug traffickers to slip their shipment from the Bahamas into the U.S.

"And that's why I'm drawing legislation, drafting it, to say that we have a drug czar. You have one person in charge to coordinate the entire effort, to see that we do an effective job of winning this war against drugs," Bentsen said.

Since 1981, the federal government's anti-drug budget has grown 360 percent from $1.1 billion to $3.8 billion for fiscal year 1989, according to legislative staff report. Of that $3.8 billion, nearly $3 billion is used for drug enforcement.

The staff report says that coordination of the agencies rests with a Cabinent-level committee chaired by Attorney General Edwin Meese III.

Last year, the House Committee on Government Operations criticized this committee saying that anti-drug programs are "characterized by overlapping jurisdictions, uncertain leadership, and 'turf battles' that frustrate the success of...programs."

Mayor says he likes 'Henry C.' cologne

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Mayor Henry Cisneros, whose political career so far has been a sweet success, now has a cologne of his own that the creator said matches his personality.

The cologne is called "Henry C." and is touted as the "scent of success for the natural man."

The 2.2 fluid ounce bottles were unveiled earlier this week, and on Saturday the mayor splashed some cologne on his neck and said he is thinking about dumping his regular cologne, Kourous, for his namesake fragrance.

"I do like it. I need all the help I can get," said Cisneros, who frequently works 15-hour days.

"I use a whole bottle a day. No, I'm just kidding."

The cologne, which sells for $25 at several retail stores in San Antonio, was created by Grace Houriet, who approached the mayor about the idea in 1983.

Houston man arrested

HOUSTON (AP) — Murder, aggravated kidnapping and auto theft charges were filed Saturday against a man arrested in the death of a 3-week-old girl who was sitting in a car stolen from a convenience store parking lot, police said.

Donald Dwayne Mackey, 31, of Houston, was being held without bond in the Harris County Jail on Saturday on the three charges, said homicide Sgt. L. Elbe. A hearing in the case was scheduled for Sunday.

Mackey was arrested Friday night in connection with the death of Kanditz Hughes whose body was found beside a road about 13 hours after the car she was in was stolen Thursday night, police said. The car had been found abandoned earlier in the day on another road.

Kanditz's mother had left the infant and her 6-year-old sister, Danielle, in the car with the keys in the ignition while she went into the convenience store Thursday night.

Danielle jumped out of the car shortly after it was stolen.

AIDS carrier sought

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A man carrying the AIDS virus apparently is having sex with high school students without informing them of his condition, and health officials say they're powerless to act until a victim complains.

"It is a very deadly serious situation," said Dr. Laurance Nickey, director of the El Paso City-County Health District.

If someone makes a criminal complaint, the unidentified man could be quarantined undar a new state law. Nickey and Jaime Perez, director of an AIDS hospice and counseling center, favor quarantining the man and placing him under house arrest.

But the quarantine order would have to be carried out by a state district judge, and the judge could only respond to a criminal complaint — possibly assault or attempted murder charges.

Two people have written to the health district, complaining they learned only after having sex with the man that he had earlier tested positive to the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome, Nickey said Friday.

But neither victim wants to file a public, criminal complaint with police — leaving officials' hands tied, Nickey said.

Jail time questioned

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa (AP) — Attorneys differed on how much jail time, if any, Steven R. Hadley should serve on his guilty pleas to three federal charges he took more than $1.1 million in cash from an Iowa credit union and lived under an assumed name in Texas.

"I think it's still up to the judge to determine if probation is appropriate," defense attorney James Reynolds of Dubuque said Friday after Hadley had entered the guilty pleas.

"I'll be arguing for a substantial incarceration," U.S. Attorney Bob Teig said.

Hadley, 41, pleaded guilty to the theft of $1,136,000 in cash from the John Deere Employees Credit Union in Waterloo and to flying out of Iowa with the money. He also entered a guilty plea to charges he used a birth certificate bearing the name of Richard G. Finley to obtain a U.S. passport in Texas.

Trustee to oversee home

DENTON, Texas (AP) — Operation of a Pilot Point nursing home that officials said had deplorable conditions that threatened lives and safety of residents was taken over by a trustee.

The nursing home has been cited three times since December for violating minimum standards to protect patients from "life-threatening" conditions.

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox petitioned for the trustee after the state Department of Health described conditions at Pilot Point Nursing Center as unbearable, the Dallas Morning News reported Friday.

Ed Campbell, of Senior Care Consultants Inc., was named trustee in a special court session last Saturday.

Texas school voted off accredited list

AUSTIN (AP) — Citing problems over 33 years, the State Board of Education tentatively voted Saturday to remove accreditation from a North Texas school district, an action that could cut off state funding.

The board also rejected coaches' efforts to raise a $10 limit on certain summer camps and denied a petition that would have allowed students below sixth grade to play on seventh and eighth grade athletic teams.

Two superintendents of smaller school districts said sometimes the younger children are needed to fill out squads.

Board member Paul Dunn of Levelland said the board's 9-2 vote rejecting the petition would eliminate junior high athletics programs in over 60 school districts.

Carolyn Crawford, board member from Beaumont, called it her "sad duty" to bring forward a committee recommendation to remove the Westminster Independent School District, north of Dallas, from the list of accredited schools, effective at the end of the 1988-89 school year.

"This is a school district that has had problems for over 30 years. It has problems in all areas of their school life," she said.

The board followed a recommendation of State Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby, who asked only for a preliminary vote Saturday on Westminster. He said by postponing a final vote until its July meeting, the board would allow Westminster school officials a chance to present their case.

Kirby described Westminster as a poor district that collects only 65 percent of the taxes it levies. It has an average daily attendance of 189.

Without accreditation, Kirby said, the district could:

— Operate as an unaccredited school.

— Operate some classes and contract with a neighboring district to take Westminster children.

— Consolidate with a neighboring district.

— Do nothing and "leave the children on their own."

Kirby said Friday the decision to drop the district from the list of accredited districts is the first he knows of, and certainly the first in recent times.

Numerous concerns and violations since 1984 were listed by the Texas Education Agency staff. They included questionable curriculum objectives; lack of materials for students and teachers; lack of proper credentials in certain personnel files; disregard of required practices for building maintenance; too-short class periods; and non-compliance by the school board with the Open Meetings Act.

The district was first warned in 1955 that its accreditation might be in jeopardy.

The board voted 10-1 to deny a petition to eliminate the $10 limit for summer camps for seventh, eighth and ninth graders conducted by school personnel within school district boundaries.

The petition was brought by Kathy Harston, a coach at Plainview High School, who suggested that campers pay a fee that has been agreed upon by the coach and local school administrator.

That position had the support of the Texas Assoication of Basketball Coaches.

Two attempts to keep the issue alive with the thought of raising the $10 limit failed 4-7 and 4-6.

Board member Volly Bastine Jr. of Houston said some coaches had spent up to $1,500 on camps scheduled to start Monday because they had relied on University Interscholastic League published notices that camp fees would be determined by school superintendents.

"If I were a coach, I'd send the bill to the UIL — the money I lost," said board member Jack Strong of Longview.

"If they would like for me to, I could refer them to a lawyer here in Austin that loves to sue the UIL," Strong added.

UIL Athletic Director Bill Farney said the UIL had erred in publishing notices, before the board acted on the camp rule in May. The notices did not mention the $10 limit and also tied fees to superintendents. He said the notices should have made it clear that board action was pending.

"It was an oversight on our part," Farney said. "But we had no idea there would be a problem with it."

Kennedy says Bush 'dead duck' in race

Associated Press

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy pronounced George Bush a "dead duck" in the presidential race, even as the vice president's campaign manager and former GOP rivals said Saturday they weren't alarmed by his weakness in the polls.

Bush campaign manager Lee Atwater said he is not worried yet about Democrat Michael Dukakis' lead in the polls, saying Bush "operates better in the underdog position.

"He enjoys it more," Atwater said. "I don't care if we're behind. We may be behind all along."

Bush and Dukakis, both of whom are assured of winning their parties' presidential nominations this summer, stayed close to home Saturday. The vice president took the day off in Houston, while the Massachusetts governor was in Boston for his home state's Democratic convention.

Democrat Jesse Jackson also kept to home turf Saturday with an hour-long speech in Chicago to supporters at Operation PUSH, the civil rights group he founded.

Jackson repeated his claim he should be offered the No. 2 spot on the Democratic ticket and said he would continue gathering delegates to force the party to accept his issues as part of its platform.

"We're going to Atlanta with the ability to help shape the platform," Jackson said. "Jesse is working on solidifying the Rainbow Coalition movement and unifying the Democratic Party."

Atwater was attending a "Unity '88" conference in Denver, where party leaders from Western states heard Bush's vanquished GOP rivals urge them to help defeat Dukakis.

"It is not for the vice president to win this election by himself," Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole told the conference. "The task is too large, the stakes are too high and the opposition too bitter."

Dole, the winner of the Republican caucuses in Iowa, said he has been wary of polls since his own loss to Bush in the New Hampshire primary.

When he looks at the Dukakis poll numbers, Dole said, "I think of New Hampshire, and I think of my pollster. God bless his soul."

"I remember coming into the hotel one day, whistling 'Hail to the chief,' but I was the only one there,'" Dole said.

But Massachusetts Democrats were crowing about the political strength their home-state candidate was showing in the public opinion polls, some of which have Dukakis leading Bush by as many as 15 percentage points.

"President Dukakis, it has a nice ring, doesn't it?" Kennedy said in his speech to the state convention.

"Some people say don't count your chickens before they're hatched," Kennedy said. "Well, I say the Republicans have already hatched their chicken in this campaign — and George Bush is a dead duck."

"You have made me what I am, and I am eternally grateful," Dukakis told his state convention. "Nobody has been blessed more than I."

But Dukakis, who has been criticized for a lack of experience in foreign policy, was taking heat Saturday for his suggestion earlier in the week that the United States should move its embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem.

Israel declared its capital to be Jerusalem after seizing the eastern part of the city from Jordan in the 1967 Middle East war, but the United States and most other nations continue to keep their embassies in Tel Aviv.

Dukakis said U.S. embassies should be placed "where the host nation says its capital is."

Dukakis was quickly criticized by Secretary of State George P. Shultz, and on Saturday, Arab League spokesman Clovis Maksoud said if the governor was indicating the course of his foreign policy "then the U.S.'s future role in assisting to bring about a just peace in the Middle East will further erode and will be seriously jeopardized."

And Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek dismissed Dukakis' statement as just election-year rhetoric.

"It happens every time," Kollek said Saturday on Israeli radio. "Jerusalem is a controversial issue, and therefore everybody will try to exploit this in order to attract votes."

Meanwhile, Democrats drafting the party's platform clashed over whether to include a call for raising taxes on the rich. The proposed plank is backed by Jackson's supporters and opposed by the Dukakis forces, who want to keep talk of raising taxes out of the party platform.

Drought threatens crops across farm belt

Associated Press

Droughts are parching pastures and cutting crop yields from the northern Plains across the Midwest, letting wells go dry in parts of the Southeast and imposing rationing on irrigators and homeowners in California.

"I've never seen apple trees wilt in May in my life. But I have this year," said horticulturalist Mike Thomas of Paw Paw, Mich.

"In my judgment, there hasn't been a drought like this since the '30s," North Dakota Gov. George Sinner said last week after touring scorched areas of his state.

"We'll probably starve the grasshoppers to death if we don't get rain. That's the good part," said Ken Solberg, who owns a livestock auction market in Rugby, N.D.

An unusually dry and hot spring is to blame on much of the Plains and Midwest. But in the Southeast, the Tennessee Valley is heading into its fourth dry year.

The West Coast has had two dry winters, especially in the mountains where the snowpack supplies much of the region's water, and irrigation districts and municipal systems are adopting voluntary or mandatory water saving.

In Georgia, almost every government in the Atlanta area has restricted the hours when lawns can be watered and cars washed, and people are snitching on neighbors who break the rules. State wildlife biologist Bill Cooper says coyotes have taken to raiding watermelon patches in the area.

Indiana Cities Water Corp. threatened to disconnect service to homeowners who ignored a ban on lawn sprinkling. Communities across Illinois also are pleading for conservation.

"This is supposedly our rainiest season of the year," said forecaster Al Morrison in Chicago, where only 1.77 inches of rain had fallen since April 7, when 7.74 inches is normal.

Total crop loss won't be known until harvest time. For now, crop damage is showing up largely in shriveling leaves and plants stubbier than expected for this time of year.

"Within the next week, if we don't get rain, our small-grain crop is going to be 75 percent lost," said Don Friederich, executive director of the Minnesota Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

In some places, plants never had a chance.

On his tour last week, North Dakota's governor kneeled in dusty fields and dug up wheat and barley kernels that had never germinated. What crops had sprouted had grown just a few inches.

In some hard-hit areas of northwestern Ohio, some farmers have plowed crops under rather than face sharply reduced yields while still bearing the costs of fertilizing, said Alan Brugler of the 140,000-family Ohio Farm Bureau Federation.

The effects of the heat and lack of rain appear sooner in early maturing hay crops.

"Normally, we have two to three cuttings of alfalfa a year. The yield from the first cutting was way down, and there won't be much of a second cutting," said Don Keyes of the Minnesota Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service. Much of the state has less than half normal rain this year.

Dry pastures forced David Rendahl, who farms 2,800 acres near Fillmore, N.D., to let his 70 cows graze clover he was going to save for the winter, he said. "That's supposed to be January hay, and I'm eating it now," Rendahl said.

The Department of Agriculture is already allowing farmers to cut hay or let animals graze land that was set aside for crop reduction or conservation in struggling counties in Montana, the Dakotas, Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio.

The grain futures market in Chicago has surged upward as traders bet on a smaller and smaller harvest. Soybean futures rose 25 percent in a month and on Friday broke the $9-a-bushel barrier, highest since late 1983. Oats traded last week up to the daily limit — 10 cents, raised to 15 cents at midweek — four of the five days.

The only down day of the week was Wednesday when the market opened sharply lower after reports that parts of Iowa got rain, with more than 5 inches at Coon Rapids and almost 2 at Des Moines. But the showers were spotty and the forecast was for continued warm, dry weather.

A report by the state statistical bureau said Iowa pastures were at their June 1 driest since 1956.

Health bill would increase income tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — The catastrophic-care bill awaiting President Reagan's signature will mean the biggest expansion of a federal health program in a quarter century but carries a less-welcome surprise for millions of elderly Americans: a big income tax increase.

For many Medicare recipients, the increase would more than wipe out the gain won when the tax system was overhauled in 1986.

The tax increase would kick in for 1989 income for anyone who is eligible for Medicare. It would start by adding 15 percent to regular tax next year, jump to 25 percent in 1990 and then rise by as much as one percentage point a year thereafter, conceivably reaching 35 percent by the end of the century.

This tax increase would pay for about two-thirds of the cost of protecting Medicare recipients against catastrophic hospital, physician and drug expenses; the program would cost an estimated $33 billion over the next five years alone. The remainder of the cost would be covered by raising the monthly Part B premium paid by recipients for doctors' services.

Thus, those who benefit from the expanded program would pay the entire cost — at least for the near future. "We have not asked our children to pay the medical bills that we incur," said Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas. "These benefits will be paid for by the men and women who will use the coverage."

But even some members of Congress who voted for the bill worried aloud that as the tax burden on the elderly grows, pressure will mount to have other taxpayers share the cost.

The compromise bill cleared by Congress last week is considerably more generous than the version recommended by Reagan. Nevertheless, there is no indication that the president will veto it, even with the tax increase.

Sponsors of the bill are reluctant to use the term "tax increase." Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, repeatedly referred to it as "a new income-related premium."

Negotiators who wrote the final version of the bill decided that paying for the expansion solely by raising the Part B premium would have made it prohibitively expensive for lower-income people.

The final compromise, said Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., "takes into consideration an individual's ability to pay for this protection and in doing so allows this coverage to be more affordable for low-income beneficiaries."

Congress estimates the average tax increase will be $285 per person in 1989 and $506 in 1993.

The bill includes several restrictions on how the tax would be applied:

— It would hit only those people eligible for Medicare (generally age 65 or older or disabled) whose incomes are high enough that they already pay at least $150 income tax. Typically and elderly couple with adjusted gross income of $11,000 or less would not be subject to the increase.

Congressional staffers estimate that in 1989, about 40 percent of Americans over the age of 65 would have to pay the tax increase. A private organization, the Institute for Research on the Economics of Taxation, estimates 46 percent next year and 56 percent by 1993.

— The maximum tax would be $800 per person in 1989 ($1,600 for a couple if both spouses are eligible for Medicare), rising to $1,050 ($2,100 per couple) in 1993.

— The tax will be at a rate of $22.50 for each $150 of regular income-tax liability in 1989; by 1993, $42 per $150 of liability.

According to the Institute for Research, a couple with $21,000 adjusted gross income and taking the standard deduction would face a tax increase of $236 in 1989 and $441 in 1993. At $31,500 income, the increase would be $473 next year and $882 in 1993.

On the average, taxpayers with incomes between $20,000 and $30,000 were given a $220 tax cut in the 1986 tax overhaul; those between $30,000 and $40,000 averaged $273.

The increase in the monthly Part B premium required by the bill would be the same regardless of income. In 1989, the $27.10 premium would rise to $31.10, and by 1993 would be $42.60 a month.

Backers of the bill acknowledge that no more than 7 percent of the elderly and disabled who are eligible for Medicare would benefit from the bill.

Report: Star Wars won't get off ground

WASHINGTON (AP) — The early version of a Star Wars anti-missile defense can't be deployed until at least 1998, and even then would cost more and offer less protection than the administration admits, a Democratic report issued by three senators said Saturday.

President Reagan has been pushing for development of a "phase one" version of the program, but it "is not going to get off the ground, either militarily or fiscally," the 110-page report said.

The report was written by the majority staff of the Senate Appropriations committee and was released by three members of the panel, Sens. Bennett Johnston of Louisiana, Dale Bumpers of Arkansas, and William Proxmire of Wisconsin.

It was the second major criticism in the past five days from Capitol Hill of Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, as Star Wars is formally known.

Last Tuesday, the Office of Technology Assessment, an arm of Congress, said the highly sophisticated computer software needed for Star Wars might fail. The OTA report also said an American Star Wars defense could easily be thwarted by the Soviets, and would likely set off a new U.S.-Soviet space arms race.

The senators' criticism focused on SDI's so-called phase one, which involves construction of an early version of the system. Star Wars researchers are looking at a variety of exotic technologies, including lasers, to use as a missile defense, but phase one envisions using existing, ground-based rockets and orbiting "garages" of space-based rockets to fire at attacking Soviet nuclear weapons.

The Pentagon told Congress last year that deployment of a phase one system could begin by the mid-1990s, and would cost between $75 billion to $150 billion.

But the senators' report disputed those estimates. "A significant phase one deployment cannot occur before 1998 at the earliest, with a full operational capability after the turn of the century," it said. Costs could be as high as $171 billion, and could approach $750 billion when combined with a later, phase two program, it said.

In addition, the Senate report said, a phase one system would intercept less than 16 percent of the expected Soviet nuclear warheads.

The senators noted that ongoing U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms control talks are aimed at reducing each superpower's arsenal of long-range weapons by 50 percent.

The Strategic Defense Initiative Organization said the Senate report "contains more misleading assertions than facts."

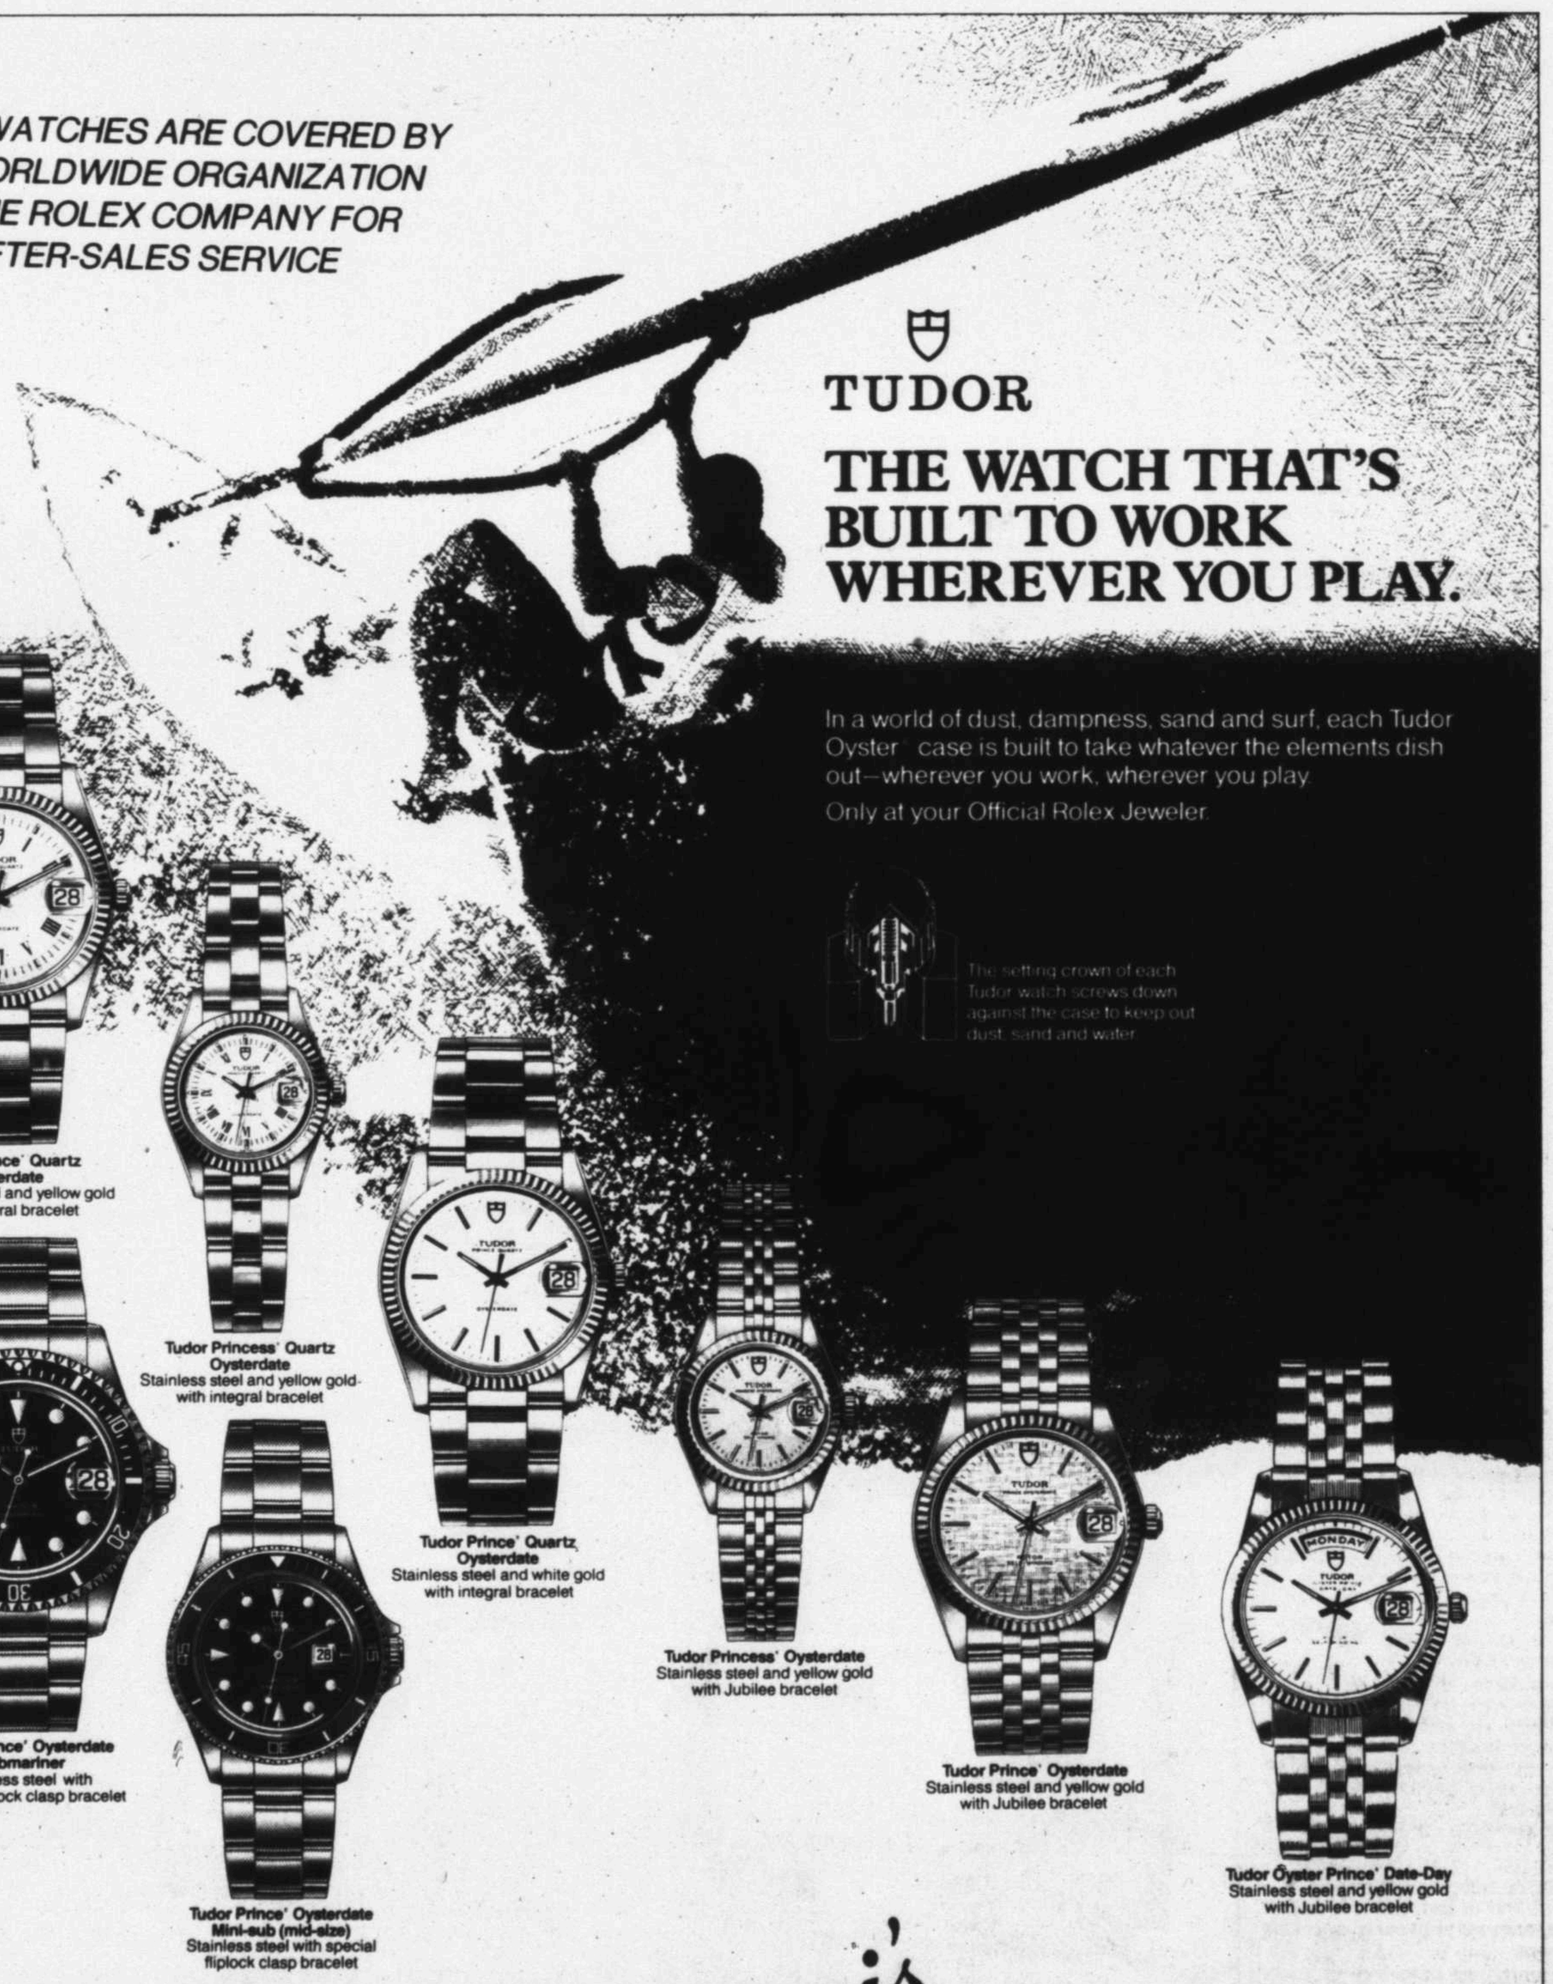

It specifically disputed the estimate that only 16 percent of expected Soviet warheads could be intercepted.

Final arguments in Mecham trial slated

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — A jury will be asked to decide next week whether Evan Mecham and his brother committed a crime when they failed to itemize a $350,000 campaign loan — a case the former governor insists is based on "smoke and mirrors."

The defense rested Friday in the trial of Mecham and his brother, Willard, without calling either defendant to the stand during the seven days of testimony. The Maricopa County Superior Court jury is to hear final arguments on Tuesday before starting deliberations.

"I'm confident that the state has not proved its case," Mecham, 64, told reporters as he left the courtroom Friday.

The former governor stopped short of predicting acquittal but said, "I think the smoke and mirrors that this whole thing has been created by...has been totally revealed to the world."

However, co-prosecutor Michael Cudahy said, "I think the state position is even stronger after the witnesses called by the defense."

Church debates issues

ST. LOUIS (AP) — In a victory for anti-abortion groups, Presbyterian leaders have urged a change in the denomination's pro-choice position, while others struggled with a major church statement on nuclear weapons.

A subcommittee today planned to continue revisions of "Christian Obedience in a Nuclear Age," a paper that has been criticized by groups within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) who say it improperly glorifies civil disobedience and resistance to government policies.

Abortion and nuclear weapons were among the controversial issues being debated during the nine-day meeting of the 3-million-member church's 200th General Assembly, which ends Wednesday.

On Friday, full committees of the assembly adopted a wide-ranging statement on religious freedom; including recommendations that pastors give up their tax exemptions for their housing allowances, and adopted a paper titled "Is Christ Divided?" which complains that special interest groups have split the denomination and calls for more serious theological discussion of issues.

A committee Friday called for a change in the church's position on abortion and a new study of the issue, but supporters of the denomination's generally pro-choice position say they expect a floor fight on the question. The assembly is scheduled to consider the matter on Tuesday.

VDT bill veto angers union

HAUPPAUGE, N.Y. (AP) — Union leaders criticized the Suffolk County executive for his veto of a bill that would have made the county the nation's first major municipality to regulate video display terminals.

"I'm outraged at the county executive's submissiveness to the business community, whose arguments of the cost of the legislation are innocuous and untrue," state AFL-CIO President Edward J. Cleary saud Friday.

But Executive Patrick Halpin told reporters that several businesses threatened to leave the county or cancel relocation plans if he signed the legislation.

"In both cases, the consequence would be hundreds, if not thousands of jobs lost, and these are losses that I do not think Suffolk can afford," Halpin said.

Under the bill, employers would be required to pay 80 percent of the cost of eye examinations, glass lenses and frames on a yearly basis, if needed.

Decayed bodies found

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Authorities have discovered dozens of decaying bodies "stacked like cord wood" inside a closed funeral home and dug up the yard outside in search of more.

"We're treating it as a mass disaster right now," said Lou Eliopulos, chief investigator for the Medical Examiner's Office.

So far, 44 bodies have been found inside the Howell Morning Glory Chapel funeral home.

The state Department of Professional Regulation suspended owner Lewis J. Howell's permit to operate a funeral home on Wednesday after the initial discovery of eight decomposed bodies.

After the bodies were discovered during a routine state inspection last week, Howell said he hadn't disposed of the bodies either because family members couldn't be reached for instructions or because the city hadn't given him needed paperwork for indigent burials.

The chapel has no refrigeration units.

Quake jolts California

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Southern and central Californians were jolted by a strong earthquake that sent rocks flying onto a freeway and closed an aqueduct that supplies half of Los Angeles' water.

Three people in nearby Whittier were injured by a falling avocado tree in Friday's earthquake. One woman was treated at the scene and two men were taken to a hospital for tests.

The quake forced the closure of the 440-mile-long California Aqueduct when power to at least two pumping plants was knocked out.

The temblor, measuring 5.2 on the Richter scale, struck at 4:06 p.m. and was centered on the Garlock Fault, 11 miles north-northeast of Gorman, or about 70 miles northwest of downtown Los Angeles.

Baker says 'no chance' of pre-summit decision

WASHINGTON (AP) — Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, in an upbeat assessment of the upcoming seven-nation economic summit in Toronto, said that the world economy is in better shape now than it has been for any of President Reagan's previous seven summits.

Because U.S. officials don't want to upset financial markets in the midst of a presidential election campaign and because U.S. allies would prefer to wait and deal with Reagan's successor, few new policy initiatives are expected during the session.

In an interview late last week, Baker also said that he won't let widespread reports that he's about to leave his post to join George Bush's Republican presidential campaign distract him from giving his full attention to the economy.

The Treasury secretary said there was "no chance" that any decision would be made in the coming week before the summit. Republican sources have said they expect Baker to resign sometime this summer to help run Bush's campaign.

The economic summit, the 14th in as many years, provides a forum for the leaders of the United States, Japan, West Germany, Britain, France, Italy and Canada to map out strategies to promote world growth.

But because the world economy is doing surprisingly well at present, world leaders see no reason to launch any grand new initiatives at the three-day meeting, which begins June 19.

Economic growth has accelerated, stubborn trade imbalances have finally begun to narrow and the dollar, after a dizzying, three-year plunge, has stabilized.

"I think the world economy is in the best shape that it has been in going into any of the eight economic summits that I have attended with President Reagan," Baker said at the end of last week during a relaxed interview in his office.

Baker, considered one of the president's savviest political strategists, served for four years as White House chief of staff before taking the Treasury job in early 1985.

He said that the drive he began in September 1985 for closer international economic coordination among the summit countries, known as the Group of Seven, had helped the major industrialized countries withstand the shock from last October's stock market collapse.

"The Group of Seven countries in the aftermath of that event refused to turn inward. They continued to cooperate closely...to spend an extraordinary amount of time conferring by telephone, with the result that some rather major remedial actions were taken," Baker said.

Tobacco companies begin PR campaign during trial

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — While six jurors decide a lung-cancer victim's damage claims against three cigarette-makers, the defense is gearing up its public relations engine.

Each day the jury deliberated last week, a public relations firm for two of the defendants reserved satellite time for a package of background videotape, expert commentary, graphics on 30 years of tobacco cases and live interviews with lawyers. The material is intended for use on television stations.

The federal lawsuit waged by Antonio Cipollone over the 1984 death of his wife, Rose, at 58 has drawn heavy media coverage, and the tobacco companies have waged a major public relations offensive throughout the 4½-month trial.

The jury deliberated last week for four days, beginning Tuesday. It took the weekend off and will return to the case Monday.

Lorillard Inc., Liggett Group Inc. and Philip Morris Inc. are accused of misleading the public about the dangers of cigarette smoking through advertising, public relations and inadequate research.

Anti-smoking advocates have hailed the trial as a gold mine of bad publicity for the $22 billion industry because of dozens of confidential company documents presented as evidence.

The documents spoke of a "gentlemen's agreement" not to conduct cancer research, of an industry "strategy" to create "doubt about the health charge without actually denying it," of a research program designed "so that (the) results can not harm" the industry.

The companies say the documents were taken out of context, that Mrs. Cipollone freely chose to smoke knowing the risks and that smoking is not a proven cancer cause.

On hand almost every day for damage control during the trial were five public relations experts, including three from the Daniel J. Edelman Inc. firm, which represents Lorillard and Philip Morris and arranged for the satellite feed. A lawyer also was present to answer reporters' questions.

After Liggett's attorney delivered closing arguments, a spokesman at the courtroom door handed out a news release containing the lawyer's statement.

"This is, by everyone's admission, the most critical case, the one that attracted the most attention" among tobacco liability suits, said Edelman Senior Vice President John Scanlon.

Philip Morris spokesman Tom Ricke said the satellite feed is partly a solution to the large number of requests for interviews from television stations.

"One of the problems we have is, win or lose, our side historically hasn't gotten a lot of play, especially in the electronic media," he said.

Researchers to discuss advances in AIDS fight

By PAUL RAEBURN

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Seven years after its discovery, AIDS is still spreading rapidly around the world and researchers still lack answers to some of the most perplexing questions about how the virus causes disease.

Beginning today in Stockholm, 6,500 researchers from 125 countries will gather for the Fourth International Conference on AIDS, the largest and most important of the hundreds of AIDS research meetings held every year.

The scientists are expected to make some 3,000 presentations of fresh research on AIDS at the conference, which concludes June 16.

"I think what's going to be clear at this meeting is that all the earlier ideas about the magnitude of the problem and the potential dangers this poses to world health have been confirmed over the past year," said William Haseltine, a molecular biologist at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston.

"The earlier projections have, if anything, been underestimated," he said. "The notion of how the virus spreads has been confirmed."

Its principal means of spreading remains through sexual contact, hypodermic needles shared by drug abusers and unscreened transfused blood. U.S. blood is screened for the presence of the virus.

The sexual transmission of AIDS has been further clarified, he said.

"We're beginning to understand the potential roots of sexual transmission as mediated not by blood to blood but by virus-infected cell to mucosal lining," Haseltine said. That is, cells carrying the virus often gain entry to an uninfected person through such mucosal linings as those in the vagina or the anus, Haseltine said.

At the time of the last international AIDS conference in Washington in June 1987, reports on AIDS were appearing in scientific journals at the rate of about 100 per week.

That figure has climbed to 135 per week, according to the Institute for Scientific Information in Philadelphia, and the trend is continuing.

The explosion of research has brought scientists closer to understanding the life cycle and reproduction of the AIDS virus but, unfortunately, not dramatically closer to a vaccine or a cure, researchers said.

"I think the meeting will show substantial basic science and clinical progress," said Dr. Robert Gallo of the National Cancer Institute, one of the discoverers of the AIDS virus.

No breakthroughs are expected in the early trials of vaccines that are now underway, Gallo said. In fact, he said he thought the current vaccines — generally consisting of a part of the AIDS virus's outer coat — will not trigger the kind of immune response needed to prevent AIDS infection.

"I'm not enthusiastic," he said. Indeed, the human trials should be considered only scientific experiments, he said, not trials of potentially useful substances. "The term vaccine should not be being used," he said.

"Everybody now agrees that we face formidable problems with vaccines," Haseltine said. "It's a sober realization.

"This virus has evolved to evade our immune systems, and it does so by hiding out, by coating itself with sugar and by changing when necessary."

The vaccine trials have shown that people make antibodies to the virus when injected with a fragment of the virus, but the antibodies don't protect the subjects. "The reason they don't is that the viruses have evolved to live with humans a long time," said Haseltine.

One recent study by a Japanese group led by Masanori Hayami suggested that a progenitor of the AIDS virus might have infected the common ancestors of chimpanzees and humans at least 20 million years ago.

Other studies suggest that the AIDS virus mutates very rapidly and might not have infected humans until perhaps 100 years ago.

On the treatment front, Dr. Martin Hirsch of the Massachusetts General Hospital, a leader in the evaluation of potential anti-AIDS drugs, said he foresees no dramatic advances.

"We've learned an enormous amount about the molecular biology of the virus," he said. "We know a lot less about how it causes disease in humans."

That has made research difficult. Nevertheless, the development in the laboratory of potential anti-AIDS drugs has moved very quickly, Hirsch said. "The progress in testing them has been more difficult, because you have to do clinical trials evaluating each drug."

Such clinical trials are becoming more difficult in part because AIDS sufferers are obtaining experimental drugs illegally through a network of guerrilla clinics. That makes it difficult for doctors to be sure their subjects are free of drugs that might confound the results of their experiments.

"I can understand the frustration, but it does make things more difficult," he said.

In an article published Thursday in Nature, a British scientific journal, Dr. Jay Levy of the University of California, San Francisco, identified four important and unresolved questions surrounding AIDS:

— What determines whether infection will occur?

— How do different strains of the AIDS virus arise?

— How does the virus cause disease?

— And what determines the course of the infection?

"Concentration on these areas of research should provide valuable information to help in the attack against HIV (the AIDS virus)," he wrote. "In the process, we will learn a great deal more about viruses and the function of the immune system."

Sand dunes deadly

Over the past 18 years, nearly 70 people have been killed on California's Imperial Sand Dunes, most in accidents involving recreational vehicles, says National Geographic.

Students hurl firebombs at Seoul building

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Radical students hurling firebombs stormed a major government building Saturday and grappled with riot police after security forces blocked a reunification march to the North Korean border.

Police said 26 students forced their way past guards at the huge Combined Central Government Complex in the center of Seoul, which houses the prime minister's office, the foreign ministry and other major government offices.

Students smashed windows and damaged a police post and a waiting room in the complex with firebombs, police said. The complex is across a main road from the U.S. Embassy.

Eight attackers barricaded themselves in a third-floor cafeteria in one building and hurled firebombs at riot police before being seized.

No injuries were reported. Police said 18 students were arrested.

"Punish the Roh Tae-woo government!" and "Fight for unification!" the attackers screamed.

The students have accused President Roh Tae-woo of repressive and undemocratic tactics aimed at keeping South Korea separate from the communist North and allied with the United States.

The students launched the raid after the government on Friday blocked their plans to march to the North Korean border for talks with northern student delegates on reuniting the Korean Peninsula.

North Korea's state-run Korean Central News Agency said students rallied Saturday in the North Korean capital, Pyongyang, to denounce the suppression of the march. The report, monitored in Tokyo, gave no attendance figures.

It said Ko Ung Sam, head of the North's student delegation to the planned border talks, vowed to continue a "persistent struggle" for the meeting.

South Korean riot police firing tear gas battled students hurling firebombs and rocks in fierce street clashes Friday after the government blocked radicals' attempts to march the 30 miles to the border.

Police said Saturday that more than 800 students were arrested in the clashes and more than 100 police and students were injured.

Radical leaders at a rally Saturday at Yonsei University in Seoul vowed to mount another march to the North Korean border on August 15, the national independence day. They said they would not stop their struggle for reunification of the peninsula, divided since 1945.

"Our struggle has ignited the mind of the people who want reunification of our land," one leader said in a speech.

About 2,000 students applauded the speakers and shouted slogans. But the students' mood was subdued, and thousands of others who had gathered at the campus for the march Friday left during the night.

Speakers continued to denounce the United States and demand the withdrawal of the 42,000 U.S. troops based in South Korea under a mutual defense pact.

"Yankee go home!" and "Reunification!" they chanted.

Radicals claim the United States enforces partition of the Korean Peninsula so it can rule the South. A wave of violent anti-American protests has hit South Korea during the past month.

Small clashes denouncing the blocking of the march were reported in the provincial cities of Taeju and Kwangju. Riot police firing volleys of tear gas dispersed students hurling rocks and firebombs.

The hard-core radicals — who are often joined in protests by more moderate sympathizers — represent no more than about 10 percent of South Korean college students and have failed to attract wide popular support with their reunification campaign.

Most South Koreans fear the totalitarian North is determined to conquer the South. North Korea invaded the South in 1950 to start the Korean War and the two nations remain bitter enemies.

Roh, who took office February 25 after elections in December, has liberalized debate on unification but said the government, not students, should lead any dialogue with North Korea.

KGB agents accused of beating protesters at demonstration

MOSCOW (AP) — A dissident said Saturday that KGB agents in civilian clothes beat and threw protesters to the ground while breaking up an unauthorized demonstration by dissidents demanding the release of political prisoners.

Yuri Mityunov said at least 12 members of the Democratic Union opposition political group were dragged away and detained 15 minutes after the protest began Saturday in Moscow's Pushkin Square.

"The KGB were extremely rough," Mityunov, the Democratic Union's spokesman, said in a telephone interview. "They threw people to the ground, and beat one woman so badly that people became indignant."

Western journalists at the scene said young men in civilian clothes dragged the demonstrators off the square. A week ago, a demonstration was held in the same square but was not interrupted.

The protesters Saturday, said by Mityunov to number about 100, had gathered to call for the release of Valeriya Novotvorskaya, 38, who was detained at 6 a.m. Friday at her Moscow apartment.

The philologist and library worker, one of the founders of the fledgling Democratic Union, is accused of taking part in an illegal demonstration on April 15. Other members of the group say she has a history of heart problems and is very ill.

Mityunov said police did not permit her to take her medicine with her when she was detained and said police refused her request for medical assistance.

Mityunov said the protesters in Pushkin Square carried banners calling for the release of Ms. Novotvorskaya, for freedom for all Soviets imprisoned for their views and for "an end to repression."

He said one man was detained for handing out leaflets that called for Ms. Novotvorskaya's release and that the others were taken away by police because they had been carrying protest signs.

"They are now in one of Moscow's militia stations," Mityunov said. "Officials are not telling us where."

Last Sunday, members of the Democratic Union joined with groups of Armenians and Crimean Tatars on Pushkin Square to call for the release of Soviet political prisoners.

When the demonstrators marched down Gorky Street, they were given a police escort. Although they were not allowed to proceed to Red Square, their chosen destination, police made no move to stop them when they gathered across from Moscow's city hall and chanted slogans.

The Democratic Union was organized last month by a group of Soviets who want to challenge the political monopoly of the Communist Party. Among other goals, they are seeking a multi-party parliamentary system along Western lines and the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Eastern Europe and territory incorporated by the Soviet Union during World War II.

Group members say that if Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's policy of "glasnost," or openness, is genuine, they will be allowed to campaign for office.

However, Mityunov said the fact that KGB agents, and not police officers, broke up Saturday's demonstration was significant and potentially worrisome.

The Committee for State Security, known by its Russian-language initials as the KGB, is attached to the Council of Ministers, the equivalent of the country's Cabinet.

"Authorities here have decided to permit a small possibility of democratization, but now they're starting to make differentiations," Mityunov said. "I think the powers that be want to make a selection and arrest members of groups that are hostile to them."

He said other unofficial groups were allowed to gather on Pushkin Square at 4 p.m., less than one hour after the Democratic Union's protest was broken up, and that no official move was made to disperse them.

German firm to pay millions to Nazi victims

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The industrial giant Daimler-Benz, which forced thousands of people into work programs to fuel the Nazi war effort, will pay nearly $12 million to the laborers and their families, the Red Cross said.

Heinz Galinski, chairman of the West German Jewish Council, on Saturday welcomed news of the payment but said the company should have made reparations years ago.

"To wait this long is a horrible betrayal of all those who suffered," Galinski said. "It comes too late for the thousands who have died in the meantime."

The Red Cross, in a telex statement Friday to the news media, said a total of 20 million marks, or $11.7 million, would be distributed to forced labor victims from the company.

The agency said the money would go to former forced laborers and to the families of people who died while in forced labor with Daimler-Benz.

Daimler-Benz, the largest industrial conglomerate in West Germany, joins other major German companies that have paid such reparations. It manufactures buses and automobiles, including the Mercedes-Benz, and its wide-ranging subsidiaries include a major aerospace manufacturer.

The announcement of Daimler-Benz's payments followed a lengthy study the company commissioned to determine the extent to which forced laborers were used in its plants during World War II.

Daimler-Benz had no immediate comment on the payment but scheduled a press conference Monday at its headquarters in Stuttgart and said details of the company study would be released then.

Company officials said the conference would focus on the "dark chapter of forced labor during the Nazi regime" at Daimler-Benz.

Like other German companies during Adolf Hitler's Third Reich, Daimler used forced laborers to help the Nazi effort. Thousands of forced workers died from ill-treatment or were murdered in Nazi concentration camps.

According to a study released in 1987 by an independent historical research group, more than 46,000 forced laborers were being used in Daimler-Benz factories in 1944.

The study, compiled by the Hamburg Foundation for 20th Century Social History, concluded that by the end of the war, half the company workers were forced laborers.

They included people deported from occupied territories, prisoners of war and concentration camp inmates, the study said.

The study detailed brutal work conditions and executions of workers accused of sabotage.

It also concluded that Daimler management conspired with Nazi leaders in the early 1930s to make the company the country's chief producer of engines and vehicles for the military.

Many of the laborers were from France and the Soviet Union, a 1986 study by the Cologne Society For Industrial History indicates.

In 1986, the giant Flick conglomerate paid $2.9 million to slave labor victims. Other West German firms, such as the giant Krupp concern, a major weapons producer during World War II, have also paid reparations.

In addition to the company payments, West Germany has paid billions of dollars in reparations to victims of the Nazi regime.

In 1952, the Luxembourg Agreement was signed between West Germany and the World Jewish Congress.

Under terms of the agreement, West Germany has paid $45 billion to Holocaust survivors.

Two Arabs arrested in arson fires across Israel

JERUSALEM (AP) — Dozens of forest fires erupted across Israel on Saturday, and police detained two Arabs suspected of setting blazes as part of the Palestinian rebellion against Israel's occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Hundreds of stone-throwing Palestinian students battled Israeli troops in the most widespread protests since the army opened high schools in the West Bank after a four-month closure.

In the Gaza Strip, a 9-year-old Arab boy was hospitalized in serious condition after being hit by rubber bullets in the head, chest and right shoulder, doctors at Gaza City's Shifa Hospital said.

The boy was hit when soldiers fired rubber bullets to disperse a crowd trying to stop them from beating a 17-year-old Arab youth in Gaza City, said an Arab reporter. The army said it was checking the report.

Firefighters have blamed Palestinian militants for setting more than half the fires that have ravaged at least 35,000 acres of forests and farms since early May.

David Angel of the Jewish National Fund, which manages Israeli forests, said a helicopter crew spotted two men setting a blaze near Jerusalem with torches and rags and that at least two other fires were believed intentionally set.

"When the fire starts in five or six places at the same time, there is no doubt that it's arson," he said.

In a leaflet issued last week, underground leaders of the Palestinian uprising urged Arabs to "destroy and burn all the enemy's agricultural and industrial resources."

In the West Bank city of Hebron, about 200 students shouting "Allahu Akhbar!" Arabic for God is great, piled stones and burning tires on main roads through much of the city, an Arab reporter said.

The students threw stones and soldiers fired in the air to end the hour-long protest, said the reporter, speaking on condition of anonymity. There were no reports of injuries.

Dozens of Arab students also demonstrated in the West Bank cities of Ramallah and El Bireh, the reporter said.

An army official, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed protests in Hebron. He did not elaborate and said he had no reports of student demonstrations elsewhere.

The army closed the West Bank's nearly 1,200 schools in February, saying they had become centers of violence. The schools were gradually reopened in the past three weeks, and high school classes resumed Monday.

At least 204 Palestinians and two Israelis have been killed since December 8, when the Arab uprising began in the territories that Israel captured in the 1967 Middle East war.

A military source said the army might reclose some schools where disturbances persisted but had no immediate plans to shut down the whole West Bank school system.

Jerusalem police spokesman Rafi Levy said authorities detained a man seen setting a fire near the communal farm Maalei Hahamisha northwest of Jerusalem. Angel said police also arrested an Arab suspected of starting a forest fire in northern Israel's Lower Galilee region. Fires also were reported near coastal cities of Ashkelon and Haifa.

In Jerusalem, the attorney for Mubarak Awad, an Arab-American advocate of civil disobedience, said Awad vowed to physically resist efforts to deport him.

Millions worldwide hear concert honoring anti-apartheid leader

LONDON (AP) — Entertainers from the Bee Gees to Sting denounced South African apartheid Saturday and honored jailed black leader Nelson Mandela in the biggest charity rock concert since the 1985 "Live Aid" extravaganza.

More than 70,000 fans jammed London's Wembley Stadium for the concert in honor of Mandela's 70th birthday on July 18.

Modeled on Live Aid's "global jukebox," which raised money for starving Africans, the anti-apartheid concert was beamed by radio and television to an estimated 750 million people in 60 countries, including the United States and the Soviet Union, organizers said.

Among the performers were George Michael, Roberta Flack, Stevie Wonder, Joe Cocker, Whitney Houston, Phil Collins, the Eurythmics, the Bee Gees, Wet Wet Wet, Dire Straits, Hugh Masekela, Miriam Makeba, Salif Keita and Sting.

The British Broadcasting Corp. said it was covering the 10-hour concert not as a political but as a musical event, but it broadcast opening comments that attacked South Africa's policy of apartheid, under which the nation's black majority has no voice in national affairs.

Half the proceeds will go to anti-apartheid activities in Britain, and the rest will go to to seven children's charities in southern Africa. Tickets cost $45.

Kicking off the show, singer-actor Harry Belafonte — a veteran anti-apartheid campaigner — called Mandela "the leader of South Africa's oppressed black people" and "a symbol of the fight against the cruel and unjust system of apartheid."

"We salute you, Nelson Mandela, and we want to see you and your fellow political prisoners freed!" Belafonte declared.

The mostly youthful crowd cheered and sang "Happy Birthday." Some waved placards. One showed a black hand clasped with a white hand. Another showed a broken chain around a black man's neck.

Anti-apartheid banners festooned the stage, which was dominated by a huge portrait of Mandela behind bars.

Mandela, leader of the outlawed African National Congress, was sentenced in 1964, along with seven others, to life in prison for sabotage and conspiracy to topple the government. The ANC is the main guerrilla group fighting South Africa's government.

At one point, the crowd was asked to clasp hands in a Mandela tribute. They did so, creating a sea of upraised arms.

George Michael croons a tune at Saturday's Rockfest at Wembley Stadium in London.

British idol Sting, the first performer, sang his hit "Free, Free, Set Them Free," and the BBC's commentator, Robert Denselow, referred to Mandela as "a man politically imprisoned in South Africa."

Sir Richard Attenborough, director of the anti-apartheid film "Cry Freedom," called Mandela "a man of unshakeable principle and extraordinary courage."

The concert, organized by Britain's Anti-Apartheid Movement, launched five weeks of rallies and celebrations in honor of Mandela.

South African Ambassador Rae Killen complained the BBC's broadcast aids the ANC, which South Africa regards as a terrorist organization.

The BBC said it paid no money for the broadcasting rights and was covering the concert only because it was an "outstanding international musical event."

But right-wing British politicians complained that the publicly funded BBC was violating its duty of impartiality.

"The whole thing is a gigantic con trick to make people believe the ANC is a respectable organization and not a bunch of gangsters," said Conservative lawmaker John Carlisle.

ANC President Oliver Tambo was billed by organizers as the concert's "guest of honor."

Richard Caborn, secretary the opposition Labor Party's Anti-Apartheid Group, denied the charges of liberal bias leveled against the BBC.

"Their allegations are totally unfounded," he said, "and we welcome the robust attitude of the BBC in resisting pressures on them, notably from the South African regime itself, not to televise this event."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Capitalism changing Chinese ideology

BEIJING (AP) — In China, a nation that takes its political slogans seriously, a large billboard in a provincial capital, reading "Efficiency Is Life — Time Is Money," is a dramatic sign of the times.

It is an indication of how Communist Party ideologists, the shapers of public opinion, have been backed into a corner by the rapid acceptance of private ownership, shareholding and free markets — all capitalistic challenges to Marxist-Leninist doctrine.

"Capitalism has absorbed things from socialism — now we should absorb some good things from capitalism," said Zhao Yao, dean of the Communist Party Central Committee College, a training ground for ideologists.

Capitalism was once dismissed in China as an evil opposed to socialism.

"But we now believe that was wrong," added Zhao.

The official doctrines that have often forced the Chinese to worry about whether they are being good communists have been in a state of flux since Deng Xiaoping, the pragmatist famed for saying, "It doesn't matter if a cat is black or white, as long as it catches mice," came to power 10 years ago.

Soldiers raid armory

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Former soldiers loyal to deposed President Ferdinand Marcos raided a military armory Saturday in a failed attempt to free colleagues jailed for past coup attempts, the military said.

Maj. Gen. Ramon Montano, chief of the Philippine Constabulary, said the group got away with 24 automatic rifles. Montano said they had intended to free Orlando Dulay, a former army colonel, provincial governor and assemblyman who was close to Marcos when he was president.

Dulay has been jailed at suburban Camp Crame for more than a year on charges he ordered the killing of several supporters of President Corazon Aquino during the 1986 presidential election that ended Marcos' 20-year reign.

The military also announced that it filed murder and kidnapping charges against a Swede, a West German and a Filipino of German descent who were arrested in a rebel-infested area on Wednesday.

They were accused of taking part in a raid by communist New People's Army guerrillas on a town southeast of Manila in February. Two people were killed and two soldiers were abducted in the raid.

Premier to visit Greece

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Premier Turgut Ozal will become the first Turkish prime minister in 36 years to go to Greece when he flies there Monday on a historic visit to improve ties between the archrivals.

His trip was viewed as unlikely to produce any breakthough in major disputes dividing the two Aegean countries, but as one high-level Turkish official remarked, "The visit in itself is a major achievement."

The last Turkish prime minister to go to Greece was Adnan Menderes, later executed after a military coup. He paid a visit in 1952.

For Ozal, 61, the trip is the realization of a goal declared years ago. He said after coming to power in 1983 that he was extending an olive branch to Greek Premier Andreas Papandreou and was willing to meet him "anywhere, any time."

He suggested that Turks and Greeks put off trying to solve major conflicts and first establish a dialogue aimed at building confidence, with cooperation in areas such as tourism.

Iranians attack freighter

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Two Iranian gunboats today attacked an American-chartered freighter with rocket-propelled grenades and machine-gun fire, killing one crewman and wounding two, shipping sources said.

The 11,744-ton West German vessel Dhaulagiri was attacked at 2 p.m. as it sailed into the Strait of Hormuz, the executives said on condition of anonymity. The waterway connects the Persian Gulf and the Gulf of Oman.

It was manned by a crew of five Germans and 14 Filipinos, the sources said. The casualties were Filipinos.

The executives said a man with a Filipino accent was heard radioing for assistance. "He was begging, almost crying for helicopter assistance to remove the wounded," said one executive who monitored the radio call.

An Omani patrol boat later carried the injured to a hospital, they said.

Blast death toll nears 100

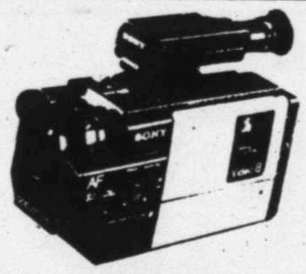

MOSCOW (AP) — The death toll in a Soviet train explosion neared 100 as workers picked through rubble in the city of Arzamas, a newspaper said today, blaming the blast on the improper transport of industrial explosives.

The force of the explosion made it difficult to determine exactly how many died, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda reported, saying the toll "was approaching 100." It added that 200 people were hospitalized and 700 familes left homeless in the industrial city 240 miles east of Moscow.

Shortly after the explosion, a week ago today, the state-run media put the death toll at 73. It rose to 80 on Wednesday. More are missing and unaccounted for, Pravda said.

Doctors, utilities can help 'beat the heat'

Learn to prevent 'heat syndrome'

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

If you can't stand the heat, you're better off in the kitchen than outdoors, a Midland physician warns.

As temperatures soared into the 100s last week, so did the potential for over-exertion and falling ill from dehydration or "heat syndrome," a trio of heat-related maladies, said Dr. Chip Klunick, a Midland Memorial Hospital emergency room physician.

Prime times for falling prey to heat sicknesses are during a four-hour period between 2 and 6 p.m. — the hottest times of the day, a National Weather Service meteorologist said.

Heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heatstroke comprise the trio of heat syndrome conditions that can affect someone who stays outside for too long a time.

Cramps and exhaustion occur when the body loses salts and water as a result of intense exposure to heat or a physical inability to adjust to the heat, Klunick said.

The cramps usually occur after vigorous physical exertion in very hot weather or in other conditions that cause heavy sweating.

Cramps may also signal the exhaustion condition which is also marked by weakness, dizziness, nausea and fainting.

Heatstrokes, though rare, can be deadly, the physician cautioned.

During a heatstroke "the body's heat defense has failed...his temperature may go as high as 106," Klunick said.

People in heatstroke are in comatose states; that is, they are unresponsive to any external stimulation, explained Dr. James Knochel, vice chairman of the internal medicine department at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center in Dallas.

"Sweating usually ceases, so their skin is dry, flushed and extremely hot to touch. If their temperature reaches 108, the heat starts altering proteins, which is what the whole body is made of, Knochel said.

"What happens is that every tissue and organ — including the brain — gets cooked. At that temperature you are likely to have permanent brain damage," the Dallas physician explained.

A person's age and the condition of his cardiovascular system contribute to his tolerance of the hot weather, Klunick said.

Young people with healthy hearts and in good physical shape may be able to withstand almost any activity in the heat, but an elderly person may be a candidate for a heat syndrome illness because of his decreased cardiovascular system strength, the physician said.

However, Klunick warned that no one is free from the possible dangers of heat over-exertion.

"In this weather we are having it's a potential for anyone."

Drinking water before and after outdoor activities in the sweltering summer heat is one easy way to combat the incidence of heat-related maladies, Klunick said.

Wearing a hat or visor and loose-fitting clothing made of natural fibers is also advised for people doing activities outside, an emergency room nurse advised.

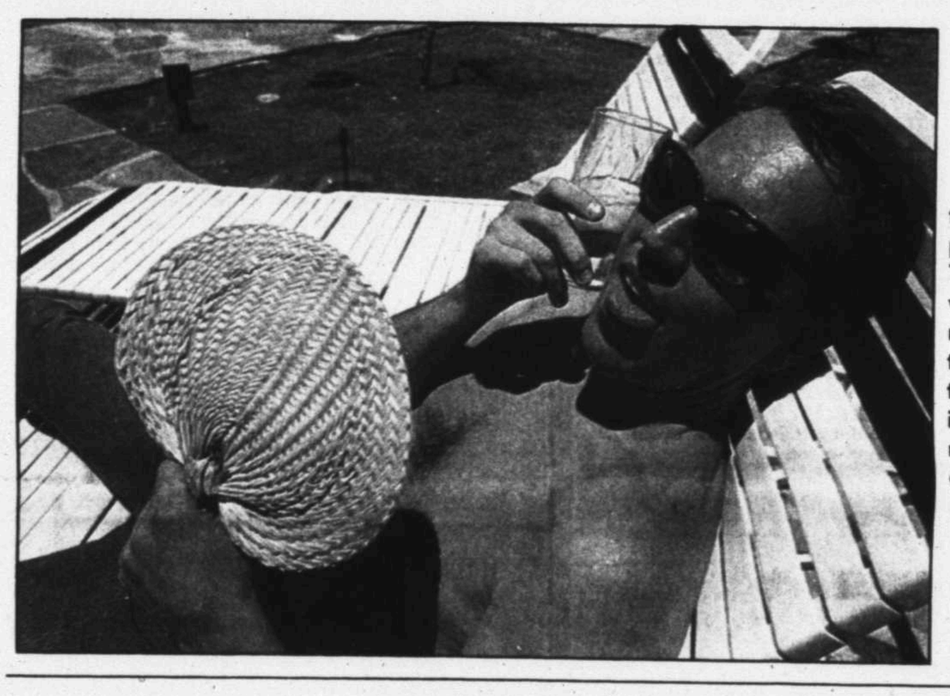

Someone under the influence of amphetamines, diuretics, blood pressure medication or alcohol should stay out of the sun, Klunick added.

Those drugs interfere with the body's ability to release heat and contribute to the loss of bodily fluids, he said.

WHEN THE HEAT IS ON

SYMPTOMS	DIAGNOSIS	TREATMENT
Muscle twitching; spasms; weakness; severe muscle cramps; falling blood pressure; rapid, pounding pulse; cool, pallid skin; slight fever	HEAT CRAMPS	Hospitalization unnecessary; take salt tablets and drink liquids such as Gatorade to replace sodium; loosen clothing; lie down in a cool place; massage muscles
Muscle cramps; nausea and vomiting; decreased blood pressure; rapid pulse; cool, pallid skin; headache; mental confusion; giddiness; dilated pupils; thirst; no fever	HEAT EXHAUSTION	Hospitalization usually unnecessary; immediately take salt tablets and drink liquids to replace sodium levels; loosen clothing and lie flat in a cool place place; have muscles massaged
Severe headache and muscle cramps early (later disappearing); vomiting; hypertension, followed by hypotension; hot, dry, red skin which later may turn gray; confusion which may progress to unconsciousness; temperature higher than 102; dilated pupils; slow, deep, breathing; body odor of burned flesh	HEATSTROKE	Hospitalization necessary; to replace fluids, a docor or nurse may start an intravenous infusion with an electrolyte solution; oxygen may be given; body temperature should be cooled rapidly with ice packs

Sick and tired of hot temperatures? Two physicians warn that too much sun and too little water can end in illness and in rare cases, death.

City prepared with plenty of power

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

When temperatures soared beyond the century mark last week, Midland's utility companies moved expeditiously to bring relief to thousands of sweltering households.

However, the sustained heat wave translated into nothing more serious than the electric and water companies having to dip into their reserve systems to keep customers cool, calm and collected.

Even under the most unusual circumstances, spokesmen for the city of Midland and Texas Utilities Electric Co. say the reserve capacity of the local public utilities is sufficient enough to carry residents through the dog days of summer.

"Hot and dry is our normal condition and we're prepared for that," said John Lowe, director of Utilities for City of Midland, whose historically-based data predicts a peak consumption of 37 million gallons of water by residents this year.

A combined ground water and surface water system supplied by the Colorado River Municipal Water District and the Paul Davis Well Field, located about 24 miles north of town, could pump as much as 42 million gallons of water into Midland if necessary.

With that much water available, there's no need for drastic conservation measures, such as the ones imposed because of a crop-searing drought, which has gripped the Midwest and parts of the Southeast in the past six weeks, said Lowe.

Restrictions on watering lawns have been imposed in Georgia and Alabama. The same stop-gap measures have been used in Chicago's suburbs in recent weeks.

"Fortunately, we haven't experienced anything that strange and unusual," he said, observing that Midland made it through the 1984-85 drought with no water conservation program, despite a record consumption of 38 million gallons of H2O.

In fact, a water-conservation program is no where to be found in the city of Midland's books — other than a nuisance water ordinance which city councilmen passed into law last summer, Lowe acknowledged.

"Other than the nuisance water ordinance, we don't have any particular strategies to alleviate our peak-day demands," he said. "If we were to approach something beyond the system's capability, I imagine we would make appeals to the public to conserve. The nuisance water ordinance might also be intensified, but that's an ongoing thing and is designed to combat the problem on a daily basis."

TU Electric Co. recorded a peak consumption for the year at 6 p.m. Wednesday when its 2 million customers consumed 14,680 kilowatts of electricity.

But that didn't come close to the Aug. 6, 1987, record consumption of 16,680 kilowatts, according to Stan Garrison, customer service manager for the company's western region, which supplies electricity to nearly one-third of all Texas residents, including those in Dallas-Fort Worth.

"Wednesday was the hottest day so far on the system, although it was only 96 degrees in the Dallas-Fort Worth area," Garrison said. "When it gets really hot in Dallas-Fort Worth, that's when the demand goes up."

With a peak generating capacity of 21,187 kilowatts, the electric company boasts a reserve margin of 16.67 percent and projects an annual consumption of 17,298 kilowatts this year based on the growth patterns in its service territory.

Bustamante to lead gathering of Hispanic chambers

From Staff Reports

U.S. Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, will open the Texas Association of Mexican American Chambers of Commerce convention, which is expected to attract more than 500 delegates to Midland, organization officials said last week.

The four-day convention will begin July 28 with Bustamante speaking on July 30 at a Legislators' Breakfast, said Darlene Gifford, publicity chairman for the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, which is hosting the event this year.

Early registration continues through July 3.

The TAMACC convention — deemed the largest forum of Hispanic businessmen in Texas — will be represented by more than 500 delegates, small business owners, corporate representative and public officials. Delegates will meet through July 31 at the Holiday Inn Convention Center.

Workshops designed to improve management skills and provide insights into new business opportunities also are slated during the four-day convention.

Included in the list of workshops are Opportunities for Texas Business in the Mexican Maquidalora Program presented by F.J. Spencer, president of International Management Services of Houston; Corporate and State Resources presented by Ray Chapa of the Midland-Odessa Minority Development Center, and Julia Moake, associate director of the Texas Department of Commerce's Community Initiate program; Financial Assistance Using SBA Programs presented by the Joseph J. Luna, assistant regional administrator for Minority and Small Business and Capital Ownership Development with the Small Business Administration;

Also, Marketing and Promotion for Individuals and Businesses presented by Henry Molina, president of H.M. Inc. public relations and advertising, and Roland Cordobes, president of Di-Rec Services; Financial Planning and Tax Reform Changes presented by Richard Brown, director of Partnership Investments for the Southwestern Region New York Life Securities Inc.; and Womens Issues, Concerns and Opportunities of the '80s presented by Cookie Mapula of The Communications Group of El Paso, and Vickie Gomez, director of Registrations at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Other events include a Hawaiian Luau and a performance by Little Joe Y La Familia on Thursday, July 28; a Salute to Corporate America Breakfast, Salute to Hispanic Business Women Luncheon and Mex-Tex Fiesta on Friday, July 29; a Salute to Hispanic Public Officials, President's Awards Dinner and Ball on Saturday, July 30; and Menudo Breakfast on Sunday, July 31.

For additional information about the convention, or to obtain a registration form, call the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce office at 682-2960.

Midlander has marrow transplant

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Doctors at Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas were cautiously optimistic about Heather Preas, a 16-year-old Midland girl who underwent a two-hour bone marrow transplant Friday.

The Midland High School honors student, who suffers from acute, leukemia-like aplastic anemia, has been hospitalized in Dallas and Midland for the rare blood disease since mid-January.

She was in serious but stable condition Saturday in the Dallas hospital's Bone Marrow Transplant Intensive Care Unit after undergoing the procedure from 9 to 11 p.m. Friday, according to Baylor spokeswoman Susan Hall.

Heather has "about a 50-50" chance of surviving the $100,000 transplant, which resembled a blood transfusion, said John Gossett, a registered nurse and supervisor of the hospital's Special Blood Services Laboratory.

"Everything went well and as expected," Gossett said of the operation performed by Dr. Joseph Fay, director of the marrow transplant program. "Her spirits are good and she's glad that the long wait is over, although she has experienced some minor abdominal discomfort."

Figures reflect 'slow, steady' economic recovery

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Increases in the labor force and retail sales indicate a slow, steady economic recovery is underway in the Midland-Odessa area.

Rising retail sales receipts in Odessa this year, says Fiscal Services Director Frank Muser, "do seem to indicate there's a little bit of pickup, which we're real happy to see."

Terming the increases "not super sensational from a historical perspective," Muser said, "I feel real positive. It's nice to see better numbers coming in."

Midland Finance Director Troy Gifford called city sales tax revenues "healthy for the current fiscal year. I expect our sales tax receipts (for the 1987-88 fiscal year) to exceed budget expectations by a little bit."

City sales tax receipts are generated by the one-cent tax cities are allowed to levy on retail sales and services in addition to state sales tax.

Muser estimates Odessa's 1988-89 sales tax receipts will increase from the last year's $5.9 million to about $6.4 million. However, he observed the anticipated increase is being projected "because of the broadening of the sales tax base as of the first of this year."

Gifford is projecting an almost 2 percent increase in Midland's sales tax receipts for fiscal 1988-89, which he anticipates will up from $7.125 million to as much as $7.375 million. "That's predicated on the supposition that the price of oil will not cave in," he said.

Economist Jim Williams, who operates the Midland-based Texas Business Forecasts, expects wage and salary employment will add "a couple of thousand jobs over the next 12 months" in both Midland and Odessa.

"I expect our rate of growth this year, from the standpoint of employment," he said, "to be better than twice what the U.S. rate of growth for employment normally is." He believes area wage and salary employment will increase "between 4 to 6 percent," probably to around five percent, he says.

Terming this "a very healthy economy," Williams noted that, while "this is very healthy growth, it won't be enough to bring us back to 1981 levels for a very long time."

Williams speculated that "before too long, we're going to start getting some diversification too," adding that "I think we'll start getting a few plants coming in, but these things often take several years to develop."

The adjusted Year End 1987 Sales and Use Tax Analysis Report published by the State Comptroller's Office won't be available for another month or so, but reports covering the separate four quarters of last year show that sales in nearly every category tracked by the state accounting office continued to deteriorate from 1986 levels.

However, the deterioration of sales in all categories from 1986 to 1987, while significant in both Midland and Odessa, was far less than the drop recorded from 1985 to 1986.

At the end of 1985, according to figures released by the state comptroller's office, the total of all sales in Odessa was nearly $3.5 billion. The reduction in sales by the end of 1986 revealed the economic impact on the area of the disastrous drop in the price of oil that occurred in late January 1986.

Gross sales in all categories for 1986 declined 32.3 percent from 1985 levels, from nearly $3.5 billion, to slightly more than $2.3 billion. In 1987, gross sales further deteriorated, to a bit more than $2.1 billion, but dropped only 9.2 percent from the previous year in Odessa.

The end of 1985 in Midland had seen gross sales in all categories climb back to slightly more than $2.4 billion. By the end of 1986, this total declined 26.5 percent, to nearly $1.8 billion. The end of 1987 showed an additional decrease of 4.9 percent, to slightly more than $1.7 billion.

Through the end of 1985, Midland's retail sales had begun to recover from the earlier economic downturn, climbing to nearly $1.1 billion. By the end of 1986, retail sales in Midland declined to slightly more than $796 million, a decrease of 26.3 percent.

However, the decrease from 1986 through 1987 was only 2.8 percent, considerably less than the decline recorded in Odessa. Total retail sales in Midland for 1987 were a bit more than $774 million.

Of the 20 separate gross sales categories tracked by the state comptroller's office, Midland showed a gain in only six from 1986 through 1987. Nine of the 20 categories showed increases in Odessa during the same period.

At the end of 1986, Midland and Odessa each showed increases in only three of the 20 categories tracked by the comptroller's office. The two cities both showed increases in financial services. Agricultural-forestry products and drug store sales rose in Odessa, while total sales for transportation-utilities and general merchandise rose in Midland.

Midland and Odessa each recorded significant sales increases in the agricultural-forestry products category. The Midland increase from 1986 to 1987 amounted to 74 percent, from nearly $1.9 million to more than $3.2 million. For Odessa, the 1986-87 increase was 102.3 percent, from $692,199 to more than $1.4 million. These increases can be attributed, in part, to state agriculture department efforts to open local fresh fruit and vegetable markets, which allow area farmers to sell their produce directly to consumers.

Oilfield (mining) activity continued to suffer through 1986 and 1987, with the greatest decrease recorded in Odessa. At the end of 1985, oilfield activity had climbed back to nearly $594 million.

Boost in sales tax rebate signals improving trend

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midland's June sales tax check is up nearly 18 percent over last year, signaling part of a trend that shows the state's economy is improving, Comptroller Bob Bullock said Friday.

Midland will receive a $488,926 sales tax allocation from the state this month, a 17.81 percent increase over the $415,007 the city received in June 1987.

Midland County will get $279,208 in June.

Bullock said the 23.5 percent growth in local sales tax payments statewide is a sign the state's economic recovery is gaining momentum.

"This increase is too great to be attributed to the Legislature's broadening of the sales tax base, which was estimated to bring in an extra 3.5 percent in local revenues," he said.

Odessa will receive a June payment of $441,458 a 16.46 percent increase over its check from a year ago.

Bullock said Texas' economic outlook will continue to improve barring a collapse in oil prices or a national recession.

Since January, the state has sent $465.9 million in local taxes to Texas cities, an increase of 10.3 percent compared to the same period last year.

"Local governments will continue to see a healthy increase in revenues from their sales taxes as the state's economy mends and consumer confidence grows," Bullock said.

He predicted that local sales tax revenues statewide will increase at an average annual rate of more than 8 percent through 1991.

Among major cities, Houston received an $11.2 million check from the state this month, a 35.6 percent increase; Dallas received $7.4 million, an 18.1 percent increase. San Antonio's $3.9 million payment reflected a 17.7 percent increase over June 1987.

DEATHS

Francisco Bonilla

Bonilla

Francisco Bonilla, 77, died Thursday at his residence after a sudden illness.

Rosary will be recited 8 p.m. today in the Thomas Funeral Home Chapel. Funeral services are scheduled for 11 a.m. Monday at Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church with the Rev. Domingo Estrada officiating. Burial will follow in Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Thomas Funeral Home.

Sweetwater makes list as 'All-American'

HOUSTON (AP) — Residents of Sweetwater, Texas, who rebuilt after a tornado caused millions of dollars in damage were in the list of 10 "All-America Cities" named Saturday by the National Civic League at an annual meeting of the organization.

The award is given to cities which prove that through community service, they offer citizens a better place to live, league officials said.

Other winners were: Paramount, Calif.; Hutchison, Kan.; St. George Island, Alaska; Blackstone Valley Region, Mass.; Rochester, Minn.; Meridian, Miss.; Butte-Silver, Mont.; Kinston, N.C.; and Roanoke, Va.

Sweetwater Mayor Rick Rhodes, in accepting the accolade for his city, said, "I only regret that all 12,500 citizens of Sweetwater could not be here to accept the award."

The city, one of 25 finalists, won the award for three different community service projects. They were reconstruction of buildings after a savage April 1986 tornado, construction and preservation of a downtown historical district and a project to keep the county coliseum open after the oil market that the town depends on went bad, causing a drop in city funds.

"We're ecstatic," Rhodes said. "We feel very fortunate to win out of such a great list.

"It is especially gratifying in light of the kind of economic times that we have had in West Texas," he said. "It's good to be on the winning list."

The twister, which struck on April 19, 1986, killed one person, injured about 100 others, and caused $20 million in damage.

Sweetwater is the first winner in Texas since 1985.

The 15 finalists were Chandler, Ariz.; Inglewood, Calif.; West County, Calif.; Aurora, Colo.; Fort Lauderdale, Fla.; Winter Park, Fla.; Park Forest, Ill.; Peoria, Ill.; Augusta, Maine; Salisbury, Md.; Lowell, Mass.; New Bern, N.C.; Dayton, Ohio; Miami, Okla.; and Lakeview, Ore.

ARMED FORCES NEWS

Airman Troy L. McKay, brother of Tammy L. Beckett of Midland, has graduated from Air Force basic training at Lackland Air Force Base.

During the six weeks of training, the airmen studied the Air Force mission, organization and customs and received special training in human relations.

In addition, airmen who complete basic training earn credits toward an associate degree through the community college of the Air Force.

He is a 1984 graduate of Midland High School.

The 14th Armored (Liberators) Division will hold its 24th annual reunion September 14 through 18 at the Town & Country Hotel, San Diego, Calif.

As a unit in General Patch's Seventh Army during World War II, the Division acquitted itself nobly in the drive through the Vosges Mountains, into the Alsatian Plain and through the Maginot Line.

It was also part of General Patton's Third Army, fighting into the heart of Germany, and then driving deep into Bavaria in an encircling movement. The division participated in three European Campaigns: Ardennes-Alsace, Rhineland and Central Europe.

The Division liberated more than 250,000 Allied POWS from German Prison Camps, hence the name — Liberators. It also achieved fame in its tenacious stand against a counter-attacking German force of more than 5 Division, after the Battle of the Bulge. It was for this engagement, during the winter of 1945, that General Jacob Devers, Commanding General of the Sixth Army, and the Seventh US Army, gave the Division its highest accolade when he said that the 14th Armored Division fought one of the greatest defensive battles of World War II.

Former members of the Division and former POWs from the Moosburg Prison Camp who wish to know more about the association and plans for the forthcoming reunion are asked to contact: Andrew D. Tierno, 42 Vestal Ave., Binghamton, N.Y. 13903, (607) 724-1958.

The marrow, which closely matched Heather's, was drawn from a Manchester, England woman at 2 a.m. (CDT) Friday and was flown to Dallas for the transplant.

During the two-hour procedure, the marrow — taken from the donor's hip bone — was injected into Heather's blood stream.

Gossett said doctors hope that Heather's body will not reject the donor's marrow and that the marrow will be regenerated in Heather.

In aplastic anemia, the bone marrow — which produces blood cells — malfunctions and fatigue and readiness to bleed occur, severely impairing the body's immunity system. Heather has lived with the aid of regular blood and platelet transfusions and medication.

Heather will be "in isolation for about four or five weeks," said Gossett. "And if all goes well, she could be back in Midland in time to start school in the fall."

The Manchester donor was located through the Anthony Nolan Laboratory, a tissue bank in London, he said.

ECONOMY

The end of 1986 saw this decline to slightly more than $331 million, a decline of 44.2 percent. At the end of 1987, oilfield activity-related sales recorded a further decline of 73.5 percent, to slightly more than $87.8 million.

From 1985 through 1986, oilfield activity sales declined more in Midland than Odessa, down 49.7 percent, from nearly $308 million to almost $156 million. However, the decline in oilfield-related sales in Midland from 1986 through 1987 was only 12.2 percent. Odessa construction-related sales from 1985 through 1986 declined nearly 21.8 percent and from 1986 through 1987 the decrease was only 13.3 percent.

Midland's construction-related sales at the end of 1986 had decreased only 17.1 percent from 1985. This declined increased to 29.8 percent from 1986 through 1987.

Manufacturing sales in Midland declined nearly 40 percent from 1985 through 1986, from more than $266 million to slightly more than $160 million. From 1986 through 1987 this declined decreased to only 15.3 percent, from slightly more than $160 million to nearly $136 million.

Odessa saw manufacturing sales from 1985 through 1986 drop nearly 35.8 percent, from nearly $594 million to slightly more than $381 million. The 1986 through 1987 drop in Odessa manufacturing sales dropped to only 16.7 percent.

Muser, noting that "a couple of new subdivisions have been platted for the first time in several years" in Odessa, said, "There are small indications in the community of increased economic activity. Little by little it seems the worst is going behind us,"he stated.

However, Muser and Gifford both expect city council members in both cities will continue to face hard decisions when they begin considering budgets for the next fiscal year. As Muser put it, "We'll see the same kind of struggles as last year."

Magna Carta signed in 1215

King John of England signed the Magna Carta June 15, 1215. The most important document in English constitutional history was originally designed to ensure feudal rights and guarantee that the king could not tamper with baronial privileges. When King John later repudiated the charter, he was released from its observance by the Pope, and civil war broke out in England. The reissued charter, known as the Charter of Liberties, came to symbolize the supremacy of constitution over king.

HEAT

With such high reserves, Garrison believes that even with a sustained heat wave, the company can handle the heavy drain from air conditioning units.

"Yes, we have adequate reserves," he said, noting that a brownout — a reduction in amount of power transmitted to local transformers — wouldn't be necessary except in the event of a major catastrophe.

Yearly maintenance on TU Electric's generators is the reason why the company has been successful at providing consistent service to its customers, Garrison observed. "We usually do that in the fall and spring and do all kinds of maintenance and repair work so that everything's up to snuff for the peak seasons," he said.

TU Electric's closest generating plants are located in Monahans to the east and Colorado City to the west of Midland. A co-generation facility also is in operation near Big Spring.

Garrison said most of the electricity produced by the firm is generated from natural gas and coal, although the company has embarked on the nuclear power with the construction of the Comanche Peak nuclear facility near Glen Rose. The plant is slated to go on line in late 1989.

The electric company's gas and oil plants represent about 43 percent of its total energy supply. And four lignite plants make up another 44 percent. The remaining 13 percent comes from purchased power, he added.

HEALTH

The heart is the key to a person's ability to cope with heat, Knochel said.

"It must increase its output in order to pump the hot blood to the skin surface where the heat is then dissipated by sweating," Knochel said last week.

"If the heart is not able to respond properly or if the blood volume is low, as it is in dehydration, then the sweat mechanism will fail and the body temperature will rise," Knochel said.

Judge says you can't hide divorce

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A judge says he will refuse to accept divorce papers filed only under the initials of couples, but a colleague says the judge should respect their wish for privacy.

"If people are too ashamed to let the world know that they are getting divorced, they should stay married," Judge Margarito Garza wrote in a memo to 148th District Court Clerk Oscar Soliz.

Divorce petitions are public record and appear regularly in many newspapers. Initials in some cases are used to obscure the identities of couples.

Garza asked Soliz to call the new policy to the attention of anyone who is filing a divorce suit.

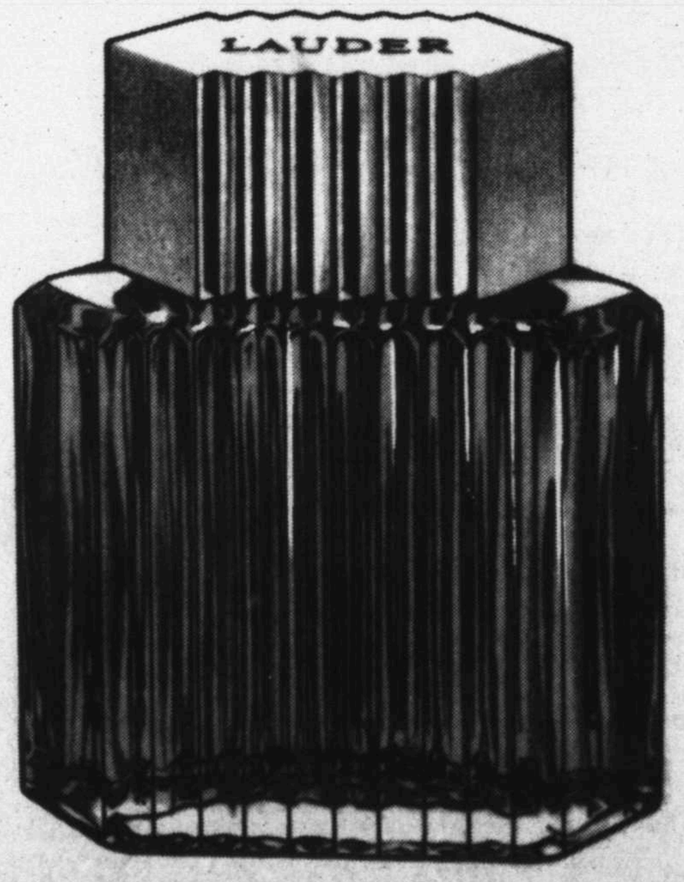

Judge Joaquin Villarreal of the 347th District Court said he disagrees with Garza's stance.

A divorce "is a personal matter between husband and wife," Villarreal said. "If the two parties don't want the public to know they are getting divorced, it's fine with me."

Soliz said he cannot refuse to accept such a case if the petition is in order, and that cases are assigned randomly by computer.

In initials-only cases assigned to Garza's court, Soliz said he will ask attorneys to modify the papers to fit with the judge's specifications.

Varied curb colors indicate area's traffic control funtion

By LYN MILLER

Ever wonder what those colored curb markings mean? They come in various colors and are used to perform a specific function in the control of traffic.

In accordance with the Texas Manual on Uniform Traffic Control Devices and the City of Midland Code, these markings are used to supplement the regulations and warnings conveyed by other traffic control devices, such as signs and signals, or, in some cases, used alone to produce results that cannot be obtained through the use of any other device. With regard to the latter, painting the curb with the proper marking serves as an effective means of indicating certain regulations or warnings that could not be clearly understandable.

The color of the curb marking — yellow, blue, white or green — signifies a specific traffic control use.

A curb painted yellow indicates that a vehicle may not be stopped or parked by that curb, except as is necessary to avoid conflict with other traffic or in compliance with law or the directions of a police officer or traffic control device.

White marking on a curb indicates a freight loading zone of 30 minutes between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, and use of the zone requires a permit issued by the city of Midland in the form of a permanent nontransferable loading zone sticker. Vehicles not displaying this sticker are not allowed to stop or park in the zone for any purposes or length of time.

An application for a loading zone permit may be obtained from the Traffic Division of the City of Midland Police Department for submission to the Chief of Police. The application must receive approval from the City Traffic Engineer and the Police Chief before a permit will be issued.

Permits are issued for placement on the right-hand side of the windshield on commercial vehicles, which must display the name of their firm, as specified in the City Code, on both side of the vehicle.

Curbs painted blue signify a zone for use in the loading and unloading of passengers, whereby persons should not stop or park in the roadway for this purpose, but should drive to the right hand sidewalk, as nearly as possible, or to the extreme right hand side of the road as nearly as practicable.

Green curbs signify a bus loading or unloading zone and are, primarily, used in school areas for the loading and unloading of passengers. No other vehicles are authorized to stop or park in that zone.

The curbs of traffic islands are also marked with either reflectorized yellow or reflectorized white paint indicating delineation of traffic. The yellow paint is placed on curbs of islands located in the line of traffic flow and serves to channel traffic to the right of the obstruction. The white paint is used to indicate that traffic may pass on either side of the island. For those islands that do not have curbs, the appropriate color of paint is placed on the street beside the island.

The use of traffic control devices in the City of Midland is under the direction of the Traffic Division of the City of Midland's Engineering and Transportation Department.

For additional information, contact Fred McGary, traffic engineer, at 683-4281, ext. 282.

Pianist to make rare appearance in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — When famed pianist Van Cliburn plays in Dallas next year, the event will mark two firsts.

It will be the first time in 11 years that Cliburn, who lives in neighboring Fort Worth, has played in Dallas. The concert will also mark the inauguration of the new home of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra: the Morton S. Meyerson Symphony Center.

The concert is scheduled for Sept. 8, 1989, a symphony official said Thursday.

The Dallas Symphony and the Public Broadcasting Service have been discussing a possible national telecast of the Cliburn concert, according to a source at the network.

The pianist began to perform again recently after 11 years.

CULLIGAN DRINKING WATER SYSTEM GIVEN SEAL OF APPROVAL!

THE ONLY WATER TREATMENT MANUFACTURER THAT HAS RECEIVED THE NATIONAL SANITATION FOUNDATION'S LISTING FOR REDUCTION OF 11 WATER CONTAMINANTS

The nation's leading environment and health standards and certification organization, the National Sanitation Foundation, has granted its official Listing Mark and authorization to use it to Culligan International Company's Aqua-Cleer H-82 drinking water system.

Culligan's Aqua-Cleer H-82 system is the first drinking water system to be listed under National Sanitation Foundation Standard 58. The Aqua-Cleer H-82 is a reverse osmosis system representing the best technology available to reduce a wide variety of undersirable contaminants, such as lead, sodium and nitrates, at the point-of-use.

"This mark is an unprecedented third-party certification for our system," says Donald Mahlstedt, vice president of Culligan, household products division. "No other water treatment manufacturer has received the Listing for reduction of these contaminants."

The listing under these standards is specifically for reduction of the total dissolved solids, hexavalent chromium, trivalent chromium, arsenic, barium, cadmium, flouride, lead, mercury, selenium, asbestos and nitrate. In addition to contamination reduction testing, NSF also verifies that product materials do not impart impurities into the water. All of these chemicals are regulated by the EPA under the Safe Drinking Water Act and are potentially harmful if ingested in significant quantities.

Banking proposal won't solve woes

For the most part, we have supported deregulation of the banking industry, in the interest of keeping it competitive and serving the needs of customers. But we're not convinced at this point that a proposal to allow banks to sell insurance would be in the best interests of either the banking industry, the insurance industry or their customers.

Under the Texas Insurance Code, the Board of Insurance is the only agency authorized to license insurance agents and banks may not apply for those licenses. But now the Banking Section of the Texas Finance Commission has proposed to change the rules to allow banks to sell insurance.

While the motivation is good, that's where it stops. For one thing, bringing about a change such as this really isn't in the realm of the Texas Finance Commission, but should be handled through the Legislature. Beyond that, Texas banks are caught in difficult times nowadays and the banking agency ostensibly is only attempting to give banks a way to diversify and to become more "full-service" financial institutions. On the surface, it would seem that allowing banks to sell insurance would be a logical step.

But we have a couple of concerns from that standpoint. Since regulations on banking have been loosened, the banking public apparently is finding it more difficult to ascertain what shape those financial institutions are in. That means that as banks continue to diversify, moving into other areas of business activity, the public has more difficulty determining what shape banks are in to do the normal banking functions. Thus, greater diversification could mean an even greater chance of the public losing confidence in the institution of banking.

On another point, what would happen, say, when a person went in to borrow the money for a new car and the loan officer informs the potential borrower that he (the borrower) will have to provide coverage? There might not even be an insinuation that he would have to buy that insurance from the bank, but the unspoken implication would still be present: Get your insurance here, or the loan might not be approved.

We honestly don't believe most banking institutions would operate in that manner, but the possibility would certainly be present with this expansion.

The more likely result of this move would be a more precarious financial situation for two industries already struggling in today's economic climate. It could, in fact, lead to a crisis situation in one or both and that wouldn't be in anyone's best interest.

There's every justification for attempting to help both the banking and insurance industries gain the means to overcome their financial problems. But pitting them against one another, and further shaking public confidence in both, isn't the way to help.

U.S. must meet technology challenge

WASHINGTON — The future is bearing down on the United States like an onrushing express train. It will catapult Americans from the Industrial Age into the High-Tech Age, where they will face a changing, complex, bewildering world.

Jack Anderson

The city of tomorrow will be a techno-metropolis. The pace will be fast, with information and services at the consumer's fingertips. The work force of tomorrow will be highly skilled and competitive.

For most Americans, the technological transformation will be a wrenching experience. Their status quo will be upset, their comfortable routines shattered, their individual worlds turned upside down.

The key to tomorrow is technology. It will open the door to the 21st century. The United States hasn't lost the key, but it seems to have forgotten how to turn it.

New technologies are still coming out of America, but they're being developed, packaged and marketed by Japan. Unless present trends are reversed, Japan will surpass the United States as the world's No. 1 technological power.

By apt diagnosis and timely treatment, a calamity can still be averted. America has not yet lost its greatness; its decline does not have to happen.

The United States still leads the world in technological research. High-tech regions have sprung up across the nation, usually with universities at their hubs. From these centers are coming the technologies of tomorrow, the ideas that can keep America ahead.

Yet, all too often, the discoveries are developed and produced in far away foreign factories. Then, the products of U.S. research are sold back to American consumers, with foreign interests raking in the profits.

As a beginning, the United States must protect and promote American inventions. Congress must pass laws to stop the pirating of U.S. discoveries, to allow U.S. firms to patent government-financed research, to punish foreign patent violators with reprisals.

But most important, the United States must keep ahead in the development of space. The technologies of tomorrow will be developed. Exploration will extend our reach and expand our knowledge into the infinite.

Fantastic discoveries — that could range from the opening of new worlds to the acquisition of new vistas of knowledge — await us on these limitless frontiers. The nation that leads there will likely develop a superior technology, and the nation that leads in technology will dominate the 21st century.

Yet, even as space exploration opens up future worlds, it will continue to advance science and enrich our lives in the here and now. The exploration of the moon created many times more wealth than it cost — new jobs, new products, new industries. Studies show a 9 to 1 return on every dollar the government has invested in the space program.

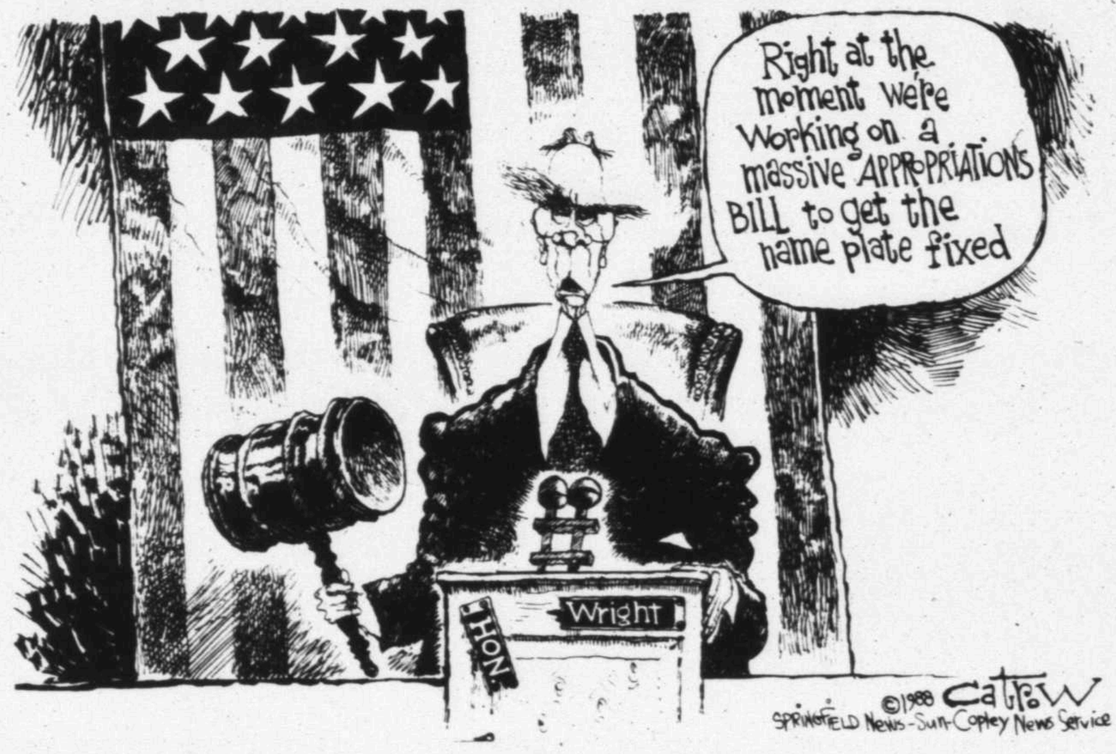

The federal government now spends $300 billion annually on human programs, $500 billion for transfer payments, but less than $10 billion on space exploration. Yet, the space program is developing cutting-edge technology that will determine the country's future progress and prosperity.

The United States cannot raise its level of prosperity by merely shifting its assets around, taking from some, giving to others. Nor is America likely to discover new oil fields or generate another gold rush that will increase the national wealth.

If America hopes to raise living standards, it must excel in technology. New technologies can increase prosperity by reducing the time and effort it takes to produce goods and services. Technological improvements can also save on valuable national resources. New technologies might make it possible, for example, to draw more oil from abandoned wells or to increase the mileage a car can get from a gallon of gas.

It takes research, of course, to develop technological breakthroughs. Yet, less than 2 percent of America's gross national product goes into research and development. The United States has fallen shamefully to fourth among nations in research. Without research, progress will founder. Without progress, prosperity will fizzle. And without prosperity, there will be less money for the other programs that politicians hold so dear. Finally, Americans must speed up their pace from slow motion to double time if they hope to compete in the High-Tech Age. The schools must improve education; the workers must improve productivity; and the plants must improve their products.

STEVE LEVINE

VP choices vital to presidential races

AUSTIN — Now that the Democrats and Republicans have picked their field generals for the fall presidential campaigns, it's time to take a step back and look at each party's game plan.

Levine

Obviously, the selections of George Bush and Michael Dukakis tell us something about the broad strategy. At this point, at least, it appears that neither man can step back in the pocket like Ronald Reagan and throw the long bomb. We're probably in for a grueling ground game with a few short passes into the flats just to keep the other side honest.

For starters, both parties have selected more centrist candidates than 1984's Reagan and Walter Mondale. It's part of the philosophical cycle that seems to rumble through presidential contests.

Each party reaches a sort of political extreme and then — winning or losing — moves back toward the middle. It doesn't always happen at the same time, so a GOP choice of Pat Robertson or a Democratic nod towards Jesse Jackson wouldn't have broken any hard historical pattern.

It's important, however, to keep an eye on those who are now second- and third-string players. Will they do their part, coming in off the bench when needed? Or will their unhappiness at losing the starting jobs lead them to sit out the season?

The next few months, through the conventions and up to about Labor Day, give both camps time to do a little public image painting. The brush strokes there seem to favor the Democrats. Here's why.

Democratic National Party Chief Paul Kirk has already begun his campaign to portray Bush as, in the words of one GOP activist, "being elitist and a country clubber and concerned about the big guys." If that works, it plays to the Democrats' advantage two ways.

First, there aren't many American voters who identify with the country club set. Although his economic policies supported the rich, Ronald Reagan never had to fight off the image of being one of them. He built his coalition, which included a lot of blue-collar Democrats, by portraying himself as a common man.

Second, Kirk's strategy could work to expand the growing division in the Republican Party. The target here is the moral conservative, the guy whose deep feelings about such issues as abortion and school prayer motivated him to vote and work for Reagan.

Many of these folks are southerners who voted Democratic much of their life and backed Pat Robertson in the Republican primary this year. If Kirk can convince them that Bush is more concerned about dollars than fetuses, they just may well stay home this fall or return to the Democratic lever.

The GOP strategy, on the other hand, seems to be following a familiar pattern. They'll work to paint Dukakis as a flaming liberal, a tax-and-spend Democrat who's sold his soul to the "special interests."

As recent election results prove, that kind of move seems to work. There's lots of voters out there who fear for their pocketbook, who don't want to turn the White House over to organized labor and minorities and feminists.

On the other hand, that kind of PR ploy could help Dukakis where he needs it most. Jesse Jackson attracted many of the so-called liberal and special interest voters and Dukakis needs Jackson's power if he's to win in November.

So while both sides will try to paint the other in negative tones, the Democratic plan could split the GOP base, while the Republican operation might help unify the Democrats.

All of this could change, of course, once Bush and Dukakis pick their running mates. More than any other office in the nation, image is central to a vice presidential candidate. The selections could have a big impact on the painting process, and here the Republicans look stronger.

If Dukakis taps Jackson, he plays into the liberal paint but further solidifies the party. He can attract conservatives by picking a Sam Nunn or a John Glenn but risks turning off the Jackson wing.

Bush can solidify his all-around conservative credentials by selecting a Jack Kemp or a Jeane Kirkpatrick. He could run into trouble by picking a moderate running mate, but there's little advantage to that and that wing of the party offers few contenders.

RUSSELL BAKER

Journalism can turn any tragedy to hokum!

NEW YORK — The 20th anniversary of Robert Kennedy's murder has set flocks of aging journalists to sentimentalizing about their pasts. Beware old men reminiscing about their lost youth, especially if they are journalists. The codger's normal wail for the passing of the good old days is insufficient to gratify the journalist's habit of turning inconsequential happenings into momentous events. An old journalist looking back on his youth is not content to sorrow for the passing of the good old days; he must lament the death of a golden age when giants strode across his ken, and men dreamed nobler dreams than are dreamed today and glory was still possible in the land.

Russell Baker

This natural defect of the journalistic vision is intensified when old-timers turn their attention back to the age of the Kennedys, which was the 1960s. To news people of the period, Kennedys were irresistible. They provided material for romantic news writing and, after the national horror of the first assassination, of instant mythologizing. Thus Camelot. It sprang from a Life magazine article by Theodore White, the one journalist all other journalists admired.

It began with Mrs. Kennedy telling White that she and the president had enjoyed listening to the tunes of the Broadway musical "Camelot," about King Arthur's court. In this fragment about the Kennedys' liking a piece of show-biz tinsel, Theodore White found a literary metaphor even children could recognize, and the myth arose of the Kennedy White House as a modern assemblage of Round Table knights.

A similar journalistic impulse to submerge the Kennedy reality in sentimental malarkey appears in many of the reminiscences about Robert Kennedy's last campaign. What is freely recalled in these pieces is a humane quality in Kennedy's view of American society during the final weeks of his life. His sympathy for America's underdogs, the same constituency Jesse Jackson now courts, seemed to become pronounced, so much so that increasingly large crowds attracted to his presence, needed to touch him physically, just as the excited crowds of 1960 had struggled to touch his brother Jack.

Most of the reminiscers recall sensing that he had changed from the old warrior politician, had become humane and visionary, that if elected president he just might change America for the better. He had altered mysteriously, grown, turned into a new kind of politician, been touched by the mysterious power that sometimes transforms undistinguished seekers of the presidency into great men.

Had he? We were never to know. The reporters who sensed something wonderful happening might, after all, have been watching nothing more than the result of changing speechwriters or of adopting a new set of tactics dictated by polling specialists. In presidential business you can never tell much from a campaign about what a man will become; performance in the White House is the test.

Kennedy in 1968 was a far more interesting human specimen than suggested by these laments for what, after all, might never have been even had he lived. There was, first, his cautious refusal to challenge President Johnson for the nomination, despite what was said to be his passionate opposition to Johnson's Vietnam policy.

It was Sen. Eugene McCarthy who led the fight. "We'll take it to the people," he said, when Johnson's man told him the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution amounted to a formal declaration of war. While McCarthy campaigned in New Hampshire's Democratic primary, ignored by most of the political wise guys, Kennedy listened to advice to play it safe, to stay out.

Then the startling McCarthy vote proved Johnson was beatable on the war issue. And who but McCarthy had ruined him? The game had gone past the time for good sportsmanship, for which Kennedys were never bred, anyhow. Before McCarthy's big day was out, Kennedy poisoned it by announcing he was running.

McCarthy, understandably, was angered, but the Kennedy group couldn't help that. Opportunity was knocking. Being courteous to McCarthy could cost a man his chance for the presidency. So the two went at it in the primaries, McCarthy offended by Kennedy for obvious reasons, Kennedy people angry at McCarthy for not stepping aside like a gentleman and giving Bobby his chance.

They were two complex characters fit for a tragedy by Shakespeare. In journalism's hands, tragedy is constantly turning to hokum.

GEORGE F. WILL

Court's fine-tuning killing death sentence

WASHINGTON — Last Monday was a good day at the Supreme Court for two murderers. They demonstrated how difficult it is for a killer to get killed when he is in the hands of a state that desires his death.

George F. Will

In May, 1982, in Oklahoma, William Cartwright, a distraught ex-employee of Hugh and Corina Riddle, entered their home, shot her twice with a shotgun, killed her husband, then slit her throat with a hunting knife the Riddles had given him as a Christmas present. She survived.

Cartwright was convicted of murder and the jury imposed the death sentence, having found this "aggravating circumstance" as defined by statue: The crime was "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel." A court of appeals reversed the sentence on the ground that the words "heinous," "atrocious" and "cruel" are unconstitutionally vague because they do not sufficiently limit the discretion of jurors. Discretion in imposing capital punishment leaves room for "arbitrariness" in imposing it.

Eight years ago, the Court forbade imposition of the death penalty by a jury guided only — only? — by the standard that the crime in question was "outrageously or wantonly vile, horrible or inhuman in that it involved torture, depravity of mind, or an aggravated battery to the victim." The Court said that "nothing" in those words implies "any" restraint on "arbitrary and capricious" infliction of the death penalty because an ordinary juror might characterize almost every murder as "outrageously or wantonly vile, horrible and inhuman." The Court simply ignored the qualifying language that followed the words "in that."

The Court's unanimous position in the Cartwright case was that no set of facts, "however shocking," is sufficient to remove the vagueness from the guidance supplied by the words of the Oklahoma statute — "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel." Mrs. Riddle probably does not find the meaning of the words vague.

James Mills was saved by a different but similar sort of judicial scrupulousness. Mills was serving a 30-year sentence in Maryland for murder when he threatened to kill his cellmate if the prison warden did not meet certain demands. A few weeks later, while the cellmate slept, Mills butchered him, stabbing him six times in the chest and 39 times in the back with a prison-made knife.

Last Monday the Court held, 5-4, that there was a "substantial possibility" that Maryland's sentencing procedures were unconstitutionally tilted toward imposition of the death penalty. This is so, Justice Blackmun said for the majority, because jurors in Mills' case might not have understood a fine point about one of the myriad fine points by which the judiciary has fine-tuned, nearly to paralysis, the administration of the death penalty.

At the sentencing stage, Maryland jurors used a form on which they could check off one or more of 10 aggravating circumstances, if they could agree unanimously. They agreed, in Mills' case, on this one: "The defendant committed the murder at a time when he was confined in a correctional institution." If the jury agrees about an aggravating circumstance but not about any mitigating circumstances, the death penalty is mandatory.

A second section of the form lists mitigating circumstances. Mills' death sentence has been overturned because the Court majority thinks the jurors might have believed that they needed to agree unanimously on the existence of a mitigating circumstance. That is, if 11 believed in a mitigating circumstance and one did not, that one would prevent consideration of it, and that would be an unconstitutional tilt toward the death penalty.

Chief Justice Rehnquist, joined in dissent by Justices O'Connor, Scalia and the new fellow, Kennedy, argued that it is reasonable to assume that the Mills jury acted on the judge's clear and reiterated instructions. The instructions were that every decision must be unanimous. Therefore, it is reasonable to assume that the jurors marked "no" next to each mitigating circumstances because they were unanimous in rejecting it.

Both of these cases, with their minute distinctions about nuances, demonstrate how recondite law can become when it is the result of negotiated compromises between judicial factions sharply opposed on a polarizing issue such as the propriety — not just the constitutionality — of capital punishment. Judicial opponents of capital punishment, splitting judicial hairs with judges who are ambivalent about it or eager to split differences, have nibbled capital punishment nearly to death with rococo procedural requirements.

As a result, Mills' life is secure as long as he is in the custody of Maryland. His cellmate's life was not.

Teen-agers find growing up is always hard to do

Modisett

Growing up has never been easy. It wasn't easy for my parents' generation. It wasn't easy for my generation. It won't be easy for the current generation. And, the odds are it won't be easy for the next generation either.

So, the national poll released this week that showed 62 percent of the teens surveyed believe that life will be harder for them than it was for their parents should come as a surprise to no one. They have plenty of reasons for feeling pessimistic. They've grown up in the drug culture in which peer pressure to use drugs is staggering. To be successful in the years ahead, they're going to have to be better trained at what they do; there will be plenty of competition for the jobs out there in the marketplace. And, no, the world of tomorrow likely will not be any safer or more peaceful than the one today. Disease and war will still present great risks.

Why shouldn't today's teen-agers be pessimistic? Primarily because pessimism can be a destructive force, poisoning all of one's thoughts and moods, and the simple fact that the life they face is no tougher than the life other young people have faced at other times.

Of course today's challenges are different from the ones my class faced 20 years ago. But there's nothing any tougher today. In fact, stacking today's young people up against the ones of two decades ago, I'd give today's kids better odds of succeeding. The reason is simple: Society has progressed markedly in those 20 years. Technology has given us millions of new jobs and a much better lifestyle. The Information Age has made us all better informed.

Yes, from a medical standpoint the future is a little scary. But it always was and always will be. The unknown, which is what the future is, will always be frightening. But compare today with the world of 20 years ago. Today's big medical threats — probably cancer and AIDS — have a wealth of knowledge lined up against them. Many types of cancers that would have killed victims two decades ago are successfully treatable today. Although AIDS is a very real danger, medical researchers are closing in on ways to combat it and, once again, its one of those diseases that, apparently, can be controlled through knowledge and education.

Will the United States fall into another economic depression? Well, I've been startled for years by our government's free-spending ways and teens seem to feel the same. About 30 percent said the country is heading for an economic depression.

But what the young people should not overlook is the underlying economic strength of this nation and the ingenuity of its people. Wealth in any nation is generated by the creativity and hard labor of individuals willing to go the extra mile to get a better life. Of course, not everyone succeeds. It's the American way that he who works the hardest and is the smartest earns the most reward. There's plenty of that entrepreneurial spirit in the United States today and as long as young people believe their hard work will bring them rewards, this will remain the land of opportunity.

As far the outlook where war is concerned, that's always hard to predict. But 20 years ago, this nation was still sending young men to Vietnam. The chances of ending up in a rice paddy were pretty good. I was one of the lucky ones; I didn't have to go. Today, America isn't at war and appears to be moving into a new relationship with the Soviet Union. That could mean a safer world in the future, but it will take cool heads and calm thoughts to keep us moving toward peace instead of toward war.

Sure it's tough to grow up today. It was tough to grow up yesterday and it will be tough tomorrow. But that is simply a part of life. The real key, though, is learning to control one's own life and not to let other people or things control it.

Today's teen-agers will do fine. The American dream is still alive — and it's theirs for the asking.

Telephone selling invasion of privacy

You've had this happen:

Telephone rings (all day and early evening).

"Hello Mr. Howard (or "are you head of the house?" or "is the lady of the house in?) I'm with (blank) company/organization and we were wondering..."

"Do you know me?"

"No."

"Then why would you call and wake me when you have no idea of my wants, needs, desires or buying habits? I'm at a disadvantage in that you have my telephone number; now may I have yours?"

They hang up.

I'm of the opinion that telephone "selling" is an invasion of personal privacy unless the caller knows you and your sleeping habits, showering habits, private habits, etc.

Now that the pre-Christmas "cheerful calls" have started, I think we need to ask the powers that be to help us stop telephone solicitation calls for the sake of mental sanity at home.

In case you don't know, the telephone company charges you for an unlisted number and an unlisted number does not always stop the automatic dialers or those who use the city directory to call house-to-house in a given area.

If you agree with me that the invasion of home privacy, via the telephone system, needs to be stopped, please write to me and I will direct all the replies to someone who can help us unload this "short cut of selling."

Channel 2 deserves praise for teen show

Today, television gets talked down a lot for the poor role models and values it exhibits. I thought that credit should also be given when something very positive is aired.

Last Sunday at 1 p.m. Channel 2, at their own expense, televised a show entitled "Someone's Listening: Teens From Crisis to Caring." It was hosted by Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears and dealt with several problems facing teen-agers today. These problems are: teen-age pregnancy, AIDS, drug and alcohol abuse, gang violence, and teen suicide. This program, which was produced by a coalition of churches and service agencies, didn't stop with just describing problems, but also had valuable suggestions for teens and parents in overcoming these problems.

I want to publicly say "thank you" to Channel 2 for showing this program.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, June 12, the 164th day of 1988. There are 202 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

Twenty-five years ago, on June 12, 1963, civil rights leader Medgar Evers was shot to death in front of his home in Jackson, Miss. He was 36.

On this date:

In 1665, the English installed their own form of municipal government in what used to be the Dutch settlement of New Amsterdam — which the English renamed New York.

In 1776, the state of Virginia adopted a Bill of Rights — the first colonial legislature to do so.

In 1838, the Iowa Territory was organized.

In 1898, Philippine nationalists declared their independence from Spain.

In 1917, the Secret Service extended its protection of the President to his family as well.

In 1937, the Soviet Union executed eight army leaders as a purge under Josef Stalin continued.

In 1939, the National Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum was dedicated in Cooperstown, N.Y.

In 1963, one of Hollywood's costliest failures, "Cleopatra," starring Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton and Rex Harrison, premiered in New York.

In 1967, the U.S. Supreme Court unanimously struck down state laws prohibiting interracial marriages.

In 1971, Tricia Nixon and Edward F. Cox were married in a ceremony in the White House Rose Garden.

In 1977, ground-breaking ceremonies took place in Boston for a library honoring the late President John F. Kennedy.

In 1979, a 26-year-old cyclist, Bryan Allen, flew the man-powered Gossamer Albatross across the English Channel.

Ten years ago: David Berkowitz was sentenced in New York Supreme Court in Brooklyn to 25 years to life in prison for each of the six "Son of Sam" 44-caliber killings that had terrified New Yorkers.

Five years ago: Academy Award-winning actress Norma Shearer died at a hospital in Woodland Hills, Calif., at age 80.

One year ago: President Reagan publicly challenged Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to "tear down" the Berlin Wall during a visit to the western side of the Brandenburg Gate.

Today's Birthdays: Banker David Rockefeller is 73.

Galveston beaches no longer belong to public

By E.J. DICKERSON

E.J. Dickerson of Midland is a consulting geophysicist in rural Midland County. He says he has seen Texas beaches as a fisherman, tourist and research scientist.

Linda Anderson's article recently about Galveston brought back many happy memories of that historic city. At the same time, it brought back unhappy memories of circumstances that took place there a decade ago; neither she nor most West Texans could know about these events or realize what was taken from all Texans by fiat.

In common law, from the earliest times, Texas beaches belonged to the public — serving as roads, stage routes, access to fishermen such as I. This concept of public domain dates from before the establishment of our republic.

In response to increasing efforts by private coastal interests to develop our beaches and to exclude public use, our Legislature, in 1959, passed the Texas Open Beaches Act in an effort to affirm the traditional rights of free beach access to Texans everywhere.

This restricted building or development within the strip of sand between the "vegetation line" and the water. Efforts by many developers and individual builders to extend the vegetation (and bypass the law of the land) were doomed to failure. Mother Nature doesn't tolerate bulkheads on the seashore. But, there was a loophole in the law that came to a dismal conclusion in 1978. It left "control" of traffic, law and order, etc. in the hands of municipalities with beaches within their corporate limits.

The City of Galveston annexed West Beach, 21 miles of public beach. Then, they made only minimal efforts to control reckless driving and crime, fomenting public outcry against beach users.

Eventually, yielding to the will of the "public" (read: beachfront communities and property owners), the elected City Council banned all vehicular traffic on West Beach. Few Texans realized, or cared, that only Galveston citizens could elect and influence councilmen and that this elite group was well attuned to the wishes of owners of high-cost beach real estate along the island; they had no regard for the common law rights of all Texans or for that spirit of the Texas Open Beaches Act. It is likely that few West Texans even knew of Galveston's action; Ms. Anderson apparently does not.

A child could see the reasoning: if the public were effectively banned from West Beach by prohibiting vehicles, the beach-front homeowners (and to a lesser degree the communities just inland) would gain de facto private beaches. Property values would soar (they did; real estate ads spoke of beach houses with private beaches); private building would increase (it did, faster than at any time in my memory). Galveston's tax base would broaden and bring in more monies, none of which seemed to be spent in behalf of the general public; precious little appears to be spent on the non-beach residents of Galveston.

Much is spent annually to try to lure tourists to the city. I suspect that much of Ms. Anderson's story came from these sources, for she writes, "the city's beaches 'overflow' " during Spring Break, and of "summer heat leaving Galveston's beaches open to visitors (italics mine) seeking sun and surf." Surf fishing, with all its logistical requirements, is practical only for beach-front residents.

I can assure my fellow West Texans that there is no beach on the Texas Gulf less accessible to non-residents than West Beach. The only beach that overflows is East Beach and it is not anything like most of us visualize as a place for spring break; it is much like a prison compound. The beach outside the sea wall has been gone for many years, also the victim of those who would fool Mother Nature; where we once drove off the eastern end of the wall onto the beach, that beach (along with all its seedy dives) is gone now. Visitors who seek sun and surf had better be prepared to rent a beach house or stay with friends who now own a de facto "private beach." Limited access is afforded at county and state parks, but don't plan on a riotous beach party there.

As of April 1987, there were perhaps a dozen parking areas for the public, some accommodating less than 20 cars. They were covered with litter, both from users and offshore shipping, with no apparent effort by city or county to pick it up; little or no road maintenance permits sand to pile up, making access impossible for passenger cars in some of the parking areas. There are no restroom facilities. For that matter, the restrooms spaced along the sea wall were demolished years ago — that was cheaper than maintaining them or keeping the junkies and perverts who delighted in out-of-town visitors, from preying on these innocents.

Basin residents who seek sun, surf, sand should visit Surfside, Matagorda, Corpus Christi, Padre Island (closer than Galveston), South Padre Island; or try Monahans Sand Hills and Water Wonderland.

If you like history, try Galveston — for that, it is really fine. Linda Anderson is certainly right about that.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 700 words or less.

YOUNG PERSPECTIVE

Unholy trinity honor students in Chemical High School

By PETER ZIMMERMAN

During April, the Midland Independent School District observed "Just Say No To Drugs" Month. Students participated in speech and essay contests as part of the observance. Winning entries from Midland's two freshman schools and two high schools are appearing on this page. Today's is by Peter Zimmerman, a junior at Lee High School.

Welcome to Chemical High School. I'm your host, Alcohol. I was voted class favorite this year. I'm real popular in this town, and not just with students. Some parents like me, too. I'm always going to parties the parents throw for their kids so they can make sure they get drunk at home where it's safe.

I lead a real wild life; I have been in more car wrecks than a stock car racer. Kids carry me into the car more than they remember to bring licenses. I have seen more suicides than the Israelis at Masada. It isn't that hard to find me; I'm allowed in this community. I'm socially acceptable. And that's why I am so deadly. I am the most popular of all controlled substances, and I am one of the most addictive. Eighty percent of high school students use me, and many will become alcoholics. I can come on strong like whiskey or slow as in beer. I play quarters every weekend and I'm the one who really wins. You can see me in the parties at Padre or in parties of one.

But I'm not the only game in town. Drugs are popular, too. They are a close knit group, and not as easy to meet as me. But they're still around. There is at least one drug for every type of person. Need energy? Talk to speed or go out with some uppers; they'll do the trick. Need to relax? Smoke some pot or take a downer out to lunch, you'll feel much better. And if you just want to have fun, there are lots that fit that category. Have some Coke and smile, we've got Coke Classic and New Coke. New Coke is a lot cheaper than Old Coke, and it's a lot more concentrated. Crack is its street name. There are lots of other Drugs, and they are one group of Latin immigrants that are definitely not discriminated against. Drugs are a lot less forgiving than I am. They have their own society, their own rules, and their own way of life. They demand that everything be signed over to them. In return they will give you a ticket to heaven...or hell, depending upon whom you ask.

Tobacco is a good old boy who has finally gotten around to shedding his chauvinist ways. You've come a long way baby, especially in lung cancer. In 1950, the average hospital treated fewer than 10 women a year for lung cancer. In 1985, over half of the thousands of cases dealt with at Mount Sinai Hospital in New York were women.

Tobacco is an easy-going kind of guy. He doesn't affect people the way Drugs do. He won't bankrupt you or cause you to lose your job. He is not considered an immoral friend — he's more like a vulgar habit. He will stick with you through thick and thin, or at least until your lungs get so thick with disease that your life thins away. Tobacco comes in many forms, and can fit any lifestyle. Rednecks and jet-setters alike find this substance to be one that they just can't say no to. But Tobacco use has dropped off in the adult population. Every year, a higher percentage of smokers are under the age of 18. The youth of our country more readily believe the tales that Tobacco tells. "You won't get cancer; it's not like you're taking drugs; you can quit any time; use filters, they are healthy."

Drugs, Tobacco and Me. We've been called the unholy trinity of substance abuse. I am a killer, and so are my friends. I can say this to your faces because you will never believe my lies. I have no power over you. But I'm not worried. The kids today don't believe what adults tell them. Statistics mean nothing to the average youth. What they know is that Alcohol means acceptance by their peers. Tobacco is a taste of sophistication, and Drugs will do it for you when there is nothing else to turn to. And they will never believe what you tell them, unless you make them listen. Hitler killed six million before they stopped him. I've killed more than that myself. Drugs add on over a million, and Tobacco has killed as much as I in the last 20 years.

Until you realize that controlled substances are just as deadly as any other weapon, we're home free. Only you, the parents, can get your kids straight. The schools can't do it. They don't have the time or the authority. The police force can't handle the volume. My estimation is that the police stop about 20 percent of the kids out drinking and driving on a Friday night. That seems like a pretty bad record, but they do a great job for the understaffed service they provide.

It is your duty. And so now, for a limited time only, we offer The Parent. Each kid comes equipped at least one of these amazing educational devices. One responsible adult who can help his kid just say no. One adult watching out for one or two kids, it sounds like a great system. But it isn't working. Parents continue to think that it isn't their kids. I don't just hang out with the dropouts or the losers. I am no respecter of persons. In one city, I was found in the car of the president of the local SADD chapter. I go on church youth trips. I'm imbibed by the honors students, just as much as I am by the Drug crowd. So for you, the parents, our tour of Chemical High is over. But for you kids, it has only begun. I leave you confident; confident that you will do nothing or little to stop our curriculum — confident that you will allow your students to stay enrolled at Chemical High.

For that is the real question. Are you going to let your child enroll, or are you going to try to shut this school down?

Soviet people finally being told truth about revered Lenin

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Astonishing things are continuing to happen in the Soviet Union under Mikhail Gorbachev's reform attempt to avert the economic disaster the country faces as the result of 70 years of communist misrule.

The latest startling development this week was an article by a leading Soviet journalist and historian in the Moscow magazine Novy Mir (New World) accusing Vladimir I. Lenin of creating a terrorist communist regime.

It was the first time Lenin, founder of the Soviet state and most sacred icon of Soviet communism, has been held responsible in the Soviet press for the use of terrorism to maintain the communist dictatorship.

The writer, Vasily Selyunin, said the use of force was "expanded without limits" by Lenin's secret police chief Feliks Dzerzhinsky, who established concentration camps for forced labor.

First, Selyunin added, force was used to suppress opponents of the communist regime, then shifted to "potential opponents, and finally it became a means of solving purely economic tasks."

Selyunin warned that unless radical changes for economic and social freedom are made by the mid-1990s, "our economy will fall apart" and "it will be too late to talk about democracy."

After Nikita Khrushchev came to power, Moscow's public policy was to blame Joseph Stalin, not Lenin, for converting the communist regime into a brutal totalitarian system. Now the Russian people are being told the truth — that both Lenin and Stalin were terrorists.

The internal toppling of Lenin from his idolatrous pedestal as the founding father of Soviet communism coincides with the growing and unprecedented public criticism of the communist system that has mushroomed in the wake of Gorbachev's so-called glasnost (openness) policy.

Reformists and old guard Bolsheviks are dueling through the press and arguing in the streets. Never before has there been such a free exchange of ideas under Soviet communism. I wonder how long this can continue without a violent political eruption or the ouster of Gorbachev and an end to freedom of expression.

As Jeffrey Hart, our King Features Syndicate columnist, wrote recently, there have been serious signs of change in the Soviet Union under Gorbachev, but we should certainly remain militarily strong, "keep our powder dry and our eyes open."

The exposure in Moscow of Lenin's initial role in the brutalization and incompetent management of Soviet communism gave me personal satisfaction because my father was pilloried by the radical left in this country for his early denunciation of Lenin and the communist system.

Pop favored the "Social Democratic" revolution against the Czar toward the end of World War I, and even supported Lenin when he first returned to Russia from Switzerland to join that revolution. But when Lenin overthrew the freely elected democratic Kerensky government in November, 1917, and established a communist dictatorship, my father denounced in his newspapers the "new atheistic despotism" as "more ruthless and horrible" than the Czarist regimes.

He never believed the Russian people would have freely voted for communism or that the suppression of the free enterprise system would serve the economic interests of the people. So I feel that what is now happening in the Soviet Union is vindication for Pop's foresight and wisdom.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC to begin new registration system on second summer session

By H. A. TUCK

Tuck

The college's new early registration system gets underway Monday with Summer Session II enrollment for students now taking Summer Session I classes. Under the new system, students will be registered in alphabetical order, according to the following schedule: A-E on June 13, F-L on June 14, M-R on June 15, and S-Z on June 16.

Those wanting to take Summer II classes, but not currently enrolled, will enroll as follows: A-E on June 20 or 27; F-L on June 21 or 28; M-R on June 22 or 29; and S-Z on June 23 or 30.

When students come for early registration, they will be assigned to specific classes. They may pay their fees at that time, or they will receive a bill. Those who are billed must pay their fees by the June 30 deadline or they will be deleted from the class rolls. If fees aren't paid by the deadline, the students will have to come to the regular registration on July 7 in the Physical Education Building.

This system will be used this fall, with the first priority for early registration going to those who were students last spring. With the new system, students will only have to come to the campus once.

English As A Second Language classes are being offered this summer at the campus and at Casa de Amigos. ESL classes are taught at three different levels, according to the English skills of the students at the time they enroll. Classes at the college are taught from 10 a.m. to noon Monday through Thursday and from 7 to 9 p.m. on Monday and Wednesday.

The ESL classes at Casa de Amigos are from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday.

These classes are free and pre-registration isn't required. Those who want more information can call Midland College at 685-4566 or Casa de Amigos at 682-9701. Students can enter ESL classes at any time.

Dr. Deana Lusk, dean of community services, has been named to two state offices. She was named president-elect of the Texas Administrators of Continuing Education for Community-Junior Colleges and is slated to assume the presidency of that group in May, 1989. She also has been named to a three-year term on the Board of Directors for the Texas Association for Community Service and Continuing Education. The latter organization involves both community college and university personnel.

Dr. Richard Holmes, dean of occupational studies at MC the past six years, has resigned to accept the position of Vice President for Academic Affairs at Piedmont Community College in North Carolina. A Michigan yankee when he arrived in Midland, Richard left with an appreciation for cowboy boots, chicken-fried steak, Mexican food and West Texas' climate. He even noted that the folks in North Carolina think "y'all" is two words!

MC is accustomed to winning national titles, but now it has collected its first international championship...the First International Sputum Bowl! It was a contest between the MC team, which had won the national title last fall, and a team from Canada. The Chaparrals were triumphant by a point, 13-12, over the Canadians during the 23rd annual Symposium of the Canadian Society for Respiratory Care.

Representing MC, Texas, and the USA were Terry Gilmore, director of the Respiratory Care Program and team captain; Bob Weidmann, director of Clinical Training; Gary Elliott, clinical instructor, and coach Ruth Pena, a critical care nurse.

There are four continuing education classes starting this week and two of them are very short. A Speed Reading Clinic meets Monday only from 2 to 5 p.m. at a cost of $6. A Study Skills Clinic meets Tuesday and Thursday from 2 to 4 p.m. and costs $8.

Introduction to Computer Usage in Business meets Tuesdays and Thursdays from 5:30 to 8 p.m. through July 7. Cost is $45.

Country and Western Dance meets from 7 to 8:30 p.m. for three weeks and costs $17.

To enroll, just visit the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building between 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. More information is available by calling 685-4518.

• • •

Enrollment has opened for the Midland College Chaparral Champions Basketball Camp. The camp is scheduled July 11-15 for students who will be in the fourth grade up through varsity level. Campers will be placed on teams according to their skill levels.

MC head coach Reggie Franklin is camp director. He'll be assisted by assistant coach George Walker, athletic director Delnor Poss, and Harold Wilder, former Howard College head coach and now the head coach for Conroe High School.

Cost is $95, which includes lunch each day. For more information or an enrollment form, visit the Athletic Department office or call 685-4576.

Deadline for registration is June 15, so take care of it this week if your child is interested.

Six students who completed the college's Citizenship Class were sworn in as U.S. citizens at recent ceremonies in the U.S. Federal Court. The new citizens include Maria Cartel, Margo Dinka, Elena Haney, Dagoberto Lopez, and Pilar Rogers.

Another citizenship class began last week, with instruction in U.S. History and Government. The class, which is taught in English, meets on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. in Room 136, Occupational-Technical Building. The class is free and any prospective student is welcome to attend.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

Posters chosen in Glenwood contest

Jarrod Barnes' delightful picture of a toothy grin was judged "Best of Show" for the first through third grade entries, and Taylor Wayne Lemon's brightly colored "Happiness is...knowing you can!" little red engine that could — did win "Best of Show" for the fourth through sixth grade entries. These young artists each won cash prizes in Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital's recent "Happiness is..." Poster Contest which commemorated May as National Mental Health Month.

Barnes, a first grader, and Lemon, a fifth grade student, both from Odessa, were among the more than 200 Permian Basin students who entered their masterpieces in the poster contest.

Thomas LaFarelle, a first grade student from St. Ann's School, was named first prize winner in the first through third grade category. Second and third prizes went to Shelby Maldonado and Mike Stephen, respectively, who are both first grades in Odessa.

Joel Solloway, a fifth grade student from Odessa, won first prize in the fourth through sixth grade category. Sherry Chau, fourth grade, and Eric Brions, fifth grade, both from Odessa, won second and third prizes, respectively.

Judges for the Poster Contest were Jean Hagman, director, Museum of the Southwest; Pat Kile, promotions director, KNFM/ KMND/ TV Cable Spot; and two local artists Dolores L. Petersen, a volunteer with the Art Institute for the Permian Basin and Barry Phillips, III, art instructor with Odessa College.

The Poster Contest is an annual event sponsored by Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital to help promote May as National Mental Health Month. Look for information about next year's contest in April of 1989.

Students to be honored

From Staff Reports

The Grand Lodge of Texas, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, this week will be presenting the Mirabeau B. Lamar award to outstanding graduating senior students in Texas.

Locally, at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, the awards will be presented to the outstanding boy and girl students from Midland and Lee high schools. The presentations will be made by Sam E. Hilburn, past Grand Master of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Texas.

Two students were chosen from Lee High School by a committee from Midland Lodge No. 623, and two students from Midland High School by a committee from Acacia Lodge No. 1414.

Thursday's ceremony will be held at Midland Masonic Lodge, 1600 W. Wall, and will be open to the public.

Small-scale farms tend to produce more

Small-scale farmers in Latin America make a contribution to production far in excess of the proportion of the land resources they control, according to the Inter-American Bank. Among other reasons, larger farms tend to have a greater proportion of land devoted to pasture or woodland, or simply left idle.

MAKING YOUR FINANCES FIT

from Patteann Daniel
A "Sure" Investment
Looking for a sure thing, an "investment" that's guaranteed to pay you a return of about 18 percent, with no risk and no taxes? Sounds almost too good to be true--but there's no secret. All you have to do is pay off the balance on your credit cards.
Though interest rates on investments have dropped in recent years--20-year Treasury bonds fell from 13 percent to 9 percent since the 1982--credit card rates remain about 18 percent.
The tax break you once got on personal interest is fast disappearing. No longer can you write off all the interest you pay against a tax that could run 50 percent or even more. Only 40 percent of interest expense is deductible in 1988, 20 percent next year, 10 percent in 1990--and then it won't be deductible at all. The deductions won't be worth as much, either, against lower tax rates. The $1,000 of interest you pay this year will cost $868 from your pocket, after taxes at the top bracket.

Local NWS officers win bronze medals

From Staff Reports

Four employees of the National Weather Service Office in Midland have been awarded the U.S. Department of Commerce Bronze Medal for the life-saving actions they took in the moments before a deadly tornado struck the town of Saragosa in May, 1987.

John V. Wright Jr., meteorologist-in-charge; Eddie G. Brite and Patrick A. Tyra, meteorological technicians; and Constantine L. Pashos, meteorologist intern, swiftly and accurately identified a developing severe weather situation and issued a tornado warning 20 minutes before the tornado unleashed its fury killing 30 people and injuring 121.

The National Weather Service is the section of the Commerce Department's National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration which provides the forecasts and warnings.

Commerce Department officials cited that the toll of the violent twister would have been much high had it not been for the actions of the Midland Weather Service forecasters. Issuing timely and effective warnings for such a rare severe event is difficult, particularly in areas where they are uncommon. The 20-minute lead time they provided was "excellent," officials noted in a press release.

"Their prior preparedness and coordination efforts paid off in cooperation and immediate response," the press release stated. "Trained volunteer radio operators reported to the Midland WSO the formation of a possible tornado southwest of Saragosa. This report, combined with weather surveillance radar, assured the staff that a tornado warning was necessary."

Local radio and TV stations promptly disseminated the tornado warning, and one radio station broadcast the warning and safety rules in both Spanish and English, according to the Commerce Department.

A majority of the fatalities occurred among 80 people attending a graduation exercise in the community center, where warnings were not heard. However, one individual who stepped outside spotted the tornado and quickly alerted others. In two terrifying minutes that followed, many individuals were able to save their lives by taking the protective actions learned in preparedness programs.

"The survey and evaluation conducted after the tornado confirmed the effectiveness of the preparedness efforts by John Wright and the WSO staff, National Weather Service Director E.W. Friday said.

Did you know that approximately 464 million dollars a year is spent by West Texans outside the West Texas area? If we could put that money back into our economy, it would have a tremendous impact. In fact, if we could just save 30¢ out of each of those dollars, it would amount to about 139 million dollars, or the equivalent of 3000 jobs. HOW THEY VOTED

Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending June 10, 1988.

KEY SENATE VOTES

Senate fails to override trade bill veto. Unable to muster a two-thirds majority, the Senate June 8 failed, 61-37, to override President Reagan's veto of massive and politically-charged legislation designed to promote U.S. trade and competitiveness abroad.

Proponents of the measure fell five votes short of an override, but a parliamentary maneuver by Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., left the door open for another Senate override vote at a later date.

Despite swift House action in overriding the president's veto on May 24, the measure was given little chance of survival in the Senate. Byrd was the only senator to change his position from the original vote on the bill. By voting to sustain the president's veto, thus voting in the minority, Byrd was allowed under Senate rules to ask for another vote on the bill, salvaging it temporarily. Another vote, though, is unlikely to change the end result, and new trade legislation is an uncertain prospect for the remainder of this Congess.

After three years of legislative wrangling — including nine months of negotiations between House and Senate conferees — the only barrier to enactment has been stubborn presidential opposition to the controversial plant-closing notification provision, and more muted opposition to minor provisions such as a restriction on Alaskan oil exports.

While the president held his ground on these provisions, the core of the legislation has been relatively free of controversy. The bill seeks to stiffen U.S. response to unfair trade practices by foreign countries, while enhancing federal aid to American industries and workers injured by import competition. The measure also contains sections dealing with intellectual property rights, agriculture, telecommunications, and education and training for workers.

The sweeping, emotional pleas of supporters hinted at the political volatility of the measure — the plant-closing provision in particular. "This is not an economic issue. This is not a business or labor issue," suggested Paul S. Sarbanes, D-Md. "This is a family issue and a fairness issue. We are trying to provide some fair treatment to our nation's workers." But opponents waved the president's banner in their criticism of the plant-closing language. Reflecting the emphasis of the president's veto message, critics questioned the merits of government intrusion in the free market. "I think this issue is one of persuasion versus one of coercion," said Dan Quayle, R-Ind.

Voting to override the president's veto of the trade bill: Bentsen (D).
Voting against: Gramm (R).

Senate adopts fiscal 1989 budget plan. Following the House's lead, the Senate June 6 had little trouble in approving a $1.1 trillion budget compromise for fiscal 1989. The 58-29 tally reflected a more bipartisan mood than in the House, which passed the measure May 26 by a scant 20-vote margin.

The budget resolution does not have to be signed by the president and does not have the force of law. It is designed to be a spending blueprint for the 13 individual appropriations measures that both chambers must pass for the fiscal year beginning October 1. But the measure is expected to be largely ignored by Appropriations committees, who have the final say over how the money will spent.

Senate action culminated more than six weeks of negotiations between House and Senate budget leaders, who had expected an easy budget year after last November's bipartisan budget-summit agreement. Conferees agonized over how to divide the pot for "discretionary" domestic programs, which turned out to be smaller than expected.

The compromise plan would produce no new taxes and is expected to leave a deficit of $135.3 billion, just under the $136 billion target set by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings anti-deficit law. Senate negotiators prevailed on spending levels for many domestic programs, including $13 billion approved for science and space programs, and $2.6 billion in funding set aside for a major anti-drug initiative. Unlike their House counterparts, farm-state Republicans warmed to a $275 million allowance to expand the Agriculture Department's cheese and butter program for the poor.

Supporters of the budget compromise acknowledged that while not all of their domestic spending priorities were realized in the measure, funding levels remained close to anti-deficit law and budget-summit targets. "(T)his is a painful budget, but it strikes a necessary balance and moves us forward in the task of reducing the deficit," said John Kerry, D-Mass.

Opponents of the measure remained unconvinced of the accuracy of deficit-reduction figures touted by budget leaders. They further argued that the bill would allow real spending decisions to be put off until the next administration. Carl Levin, D-Mich., one of a handful of Democrats who voted against the resolution, said it "would still represent, at best, treading water, and at worst, more likely, taking a step backward in what should be a continuing aggressive struggle to reduce the budget deficit."

Voting for the fiscal 1989 budget compromise: None.
Voting against: Gramm (R).
Not Voting: Bentsen (D).

Senate votes to avoid war powers controversy. By a 54-31 procedural vote, the Senate June 6 sidestepped an opportunity to invoke the War Powers act and formally authorize continued U.S. Navy convoys in the Persian Gulf. The vote blocked floor consideration of a resolution that would have given Senate approval of the U.S. presence. The 1973 War Powers act gives Congress a role in the deployment of forces in hostile situations short of war. When Congress invokes the act, it requires troops to be withdrawn in 60 to 90 days, unless Congress votes to extend their stay. But Congress has traditionally balked at invoking the act and has never forced the withdrawal of U.S. troops.

Last year, after President Reagan introduced the U.S. naval presence in the gulf to escort re-flagged Kuwaiti tankers, the Senate debated the war powers issue, but did not invoke the law. The House has not acted on the issue.

Supporters of the procedural move to block consideration of invoking the act said that the law is unworkable in its present form and that it infringes on the president's prerogative in foreign affairs. More hawkish proponents said that to invoke the act would threaten the effectiveness of the current Persian Gulf policy. "The men and women who are serving in the Persian Gulf today know very clearly what their mission and their role is....(I)t is to defend the freedom of the seas and to preserve the right of neutral shipping," said John McCain, R-Ariz.

Senators opposing the procedural maneuver argued that the War Powers law requires the Senate to invoke the act when American forces are involved in hostilities. They said that if the Senate did not move to apply the law, it would be ducking its responsibility in foreign affairs. "Are we going to recognize the facts and vote to uphold the law — or are we going to continue to give away our constitutional responsibility?" asked Brock Adams, D-Wash.

Voting to block consideration of invoking the War Powers act: Bentsen (D), Gramm (R).
Voting against: None.

Senate votes to end filibuster on death penalty bill. The Senate June 9 voted 70-26 to invoke cloture and end a filibuster on a bill that proposes the death penalty for individuals convicted of drug-related killings. Cloture was invoked with well over the 60 votes needed.

The bill, which was originally offered as an amendment to the fiscal 1989 defense authorization bill and then removed, would allow but not require the death penalty for drug dealers who are convicted of killing or ordering the killing of others in connection with illicit drugs.

Supporters of the bill saw the measure as another effective deterrent to the growing drug problem in this country, while opponents claimed that the threat of the death penalty would be no more effective against "drug gangsters" than it has been against other criminals.

Voting to invoke cloture and limit debate on the death penalty bill: Bentsen (D), Gramm (R).
Voting against: None.

Senate agrees to limit employer use of lie-detector tests. With almost half the Republicans joining the Democratic majority June 9, the Senate voted 68-24 to approve a compromise measure that would restrict the use of polygraph tests by private-sector employers.

The bill would ban the use of polygraphs in the screening of job applicants or employees. Federal, state and local governments, security agencies and drug companies would be exempt from the restrictions. Any company investigating wrongdoing by an employee could use a lie-detector test, provided the employer had specific reason to suspect the worker.

Voting for restricted use of lie-detector tests: Bentsen (D).
Voting against: Gramm (R).

Senate clears catastrophic health-costs bill. Capping months of negotiation, the Senate June 8 passed, 86-11, a compromise measure designed to greatly enlarge the scope and depth of coverage under the 23-year-old Medicare program.

The bill proposed changes in the Medicare system that would protect the current 32 million beneficiaries from catastrophic costs associated with acute and long-term illnesses. The bill's supporters hoped to shield the elderly and disabled from potential financial devastation as a result of a catastrophic illness, by capping annual out-of-pocket expenses to a $564 deductible for hospital care, and placing a $1,370 limit on Medicare's Part B premium (doctor's services and outpatient care).

The measure also would provide partial coverage for out-patient prescription drugs. Other provisions in the bill would expand home-based health care and nursing home coverage; provide a respite benefit for persons providing care of an elderly relative at home; and extend services to low-income elderly and poor women and infants.

Changes in the Medicare program were first proposed two years ago by Health and Human Services Secretary Otis R. Bowen, and supported by the president. Last week's overwhelming passage of the bill in the House and this week's Senate action clear the way for the president's signature.

Voting for the catastrophic health-costs bill: Bentsen (D).
Voting against: Gramm (R).

KEY HOUSE VOTE

House kills long-term home-care bill. In what many members deemed to be a false start to discussion of long-term, home-care assistance, the House June 8 defeated, 169-243, a resolution that would have allowed debate of a bill to broaden Medicare to cover long-term health care.

The bill calls for the federal government to pay for at-home, long-term care to the chronically ill of all ages, not just the elderly, at a cost of just under $28 billion over five years, according to the Congressional Budget Office. The benefit was to be financed by eliminating the $45,000 annual cap on income subject to the 1.45 percent Medicare tax paid by workers and their employers.

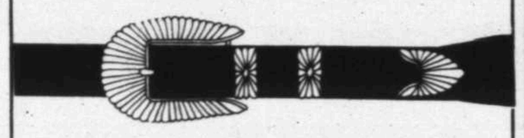

Plans originally called for the long-term care proposal to be added to the recently-passed Medicare catastrophic-costs bill, but members feared the president would veto the bill if a long-term care amendment was added.

Voting in favor of debate of the long-term care bill: Gonzalez (D).
Voting against: Smith (R), Combest (R), Stenholm (D).
Not Voting: Boulter (R).

MS golf event still under play

From Staff Reports

Fundraising efforts to assist the fight against Multiple Sclerosis — utilizing long days of golf — continue in Midland during the month of June.

The latest effort came from Midlanders Fred McCann, Dan Garlington, John Gilley and Dan Cornelison who recently played 72 holes on a single day at Hogan Park.

It is all part of the "Longest Day of Golf" event, sponsored by the West Texas Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis.

Citizens make pledges to a particular golfer, who then plays as many holes as possible in a 24-hour period. The amount of money he or she raises depends on the number of holes completed. Proceeds go to the fight against MS.

The four most recent participating golfers are now eligible for several prizes, including a "Duffer's Delight Vacation" for two, courtesy of the Hyatt Regency Hilton Head, S.C., with round trip airfare provided by American Airlines, a drawing for a weekend vacation with gallery tickets to the PGA Championship and many others.

For additional information about the "Longest Day of Golf," call the local MS office at 699-7787.

Albany readies its annual Fandangle

ALBANY — Tickets are currently on sale for the 50th anniversary version of the Fort Griffin Fandangle set for its traditional six performances on June 16-18 and June 23-25 at the Prairie Theater located just northwest of the Albany city limits.

Herds of buffalo and longhorns, Indian villages, covered wagons loaded down with pioneers, cowboys and their horses, and gunslingers will be filling the theater with the sights and sounds of the "Old West" as over 300 local residents prepare to celebrate their rich heritage and bring back to life the founding of this portion of the state.

"We are doing a composite theme of our other shows from the past," stated Fandangle Director Marge Bray. "We will be bringing back a lot of the older songs and crowd-pleasers, and also mixing in some new songs."

Mrs. Bray added that the Fandangle will continue to retell and keep alive the history of the settling of the Clear Fork area, as well as honoring the founding performers who started the show 50 years ago.

The Fandangle was created in 1938 by Albany playwright Robert Nail as a senior class play. The production grew to include the entire community that same year and has been held almost continually on an annual basis since that time.

The gates at the Prairie Theater open at 7 p.m. each night of performance and visitors are welcome to come early and enjoy the calliope concert preceding the show. The performance will begin at dusk — approximately 8:30 p.m.

In addition to the annual Fandangle performances and the parade, Albany has a lot to offer visitors and natives alike during this special time of the year.

The old Jail Art Center will be featuring a special exhibit of Indian art and artifacts during the Fandangle season entitled "The American Indian: Conbributions of a Culture." The art center is open free to the public until 7 p.m. each day of performance.

Other points of interest such as the Ledbetter Picket House also will be open to the public. Located in the First National Bank Park, the house was one of the first permanent houses built in the area, and offers a fine example of building methods, materials and furniture used by early settlers in the mid-1800s. Other historic homes also will be open for tours including the Jacobs house, the oldest frame home in Albany.

Each night of the Fandangle visitors will be able to enjoy a barbecue meal with all the trimmings prepared by Joe Allen's Bar-B-Q of Abilene. The meal will be served on the courthouse lawn from 5 p.m. until 8 p.m., and includes brisket, sausage, beans, cole slaw and all the trimmings.

The barbecue is available for $5.50 per plate for adults and $3.50 for children under 10 years old.

Allen, who has been catering the Fandangle barbecue for several years, prepares and serves the meal from an authentic cowboy campfire and chuck wagon setting.

Visitors are encouraged to come early to have time to browse around the historic sites of Albany including visiting the 15 historical buildings and institutions in town that are designated by state historical markers.

When guests drive out to the Prairie Theater, which is located on the northwestern outskirts of Albany they will be treated to calliope music and free programs prior to the performance.

The natural two-acre stage provides the audience with the "look and feel of times long since past," using herds of longhorns and buffalo, wagons, a stagecoach, an entire recreated street scene from the "wild and wooly" town of Fort Griffin, and even the replica of the first train to roll across the prairie heading west.

The Fandangle is a non-profit organization, which is supported by its memberships and ticket sales. For more information contact the Fort Griffin Fandangle Association, P.O. Box 155, Albany, 76430, 1-915-762-3642 or 1-915-762-2294.

Museum to focus on black women

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Presidential Museum will kick off Odessa's Juneteenth Celebration with Thursday's opening of "Black Women: Achievement Against the Odds."

The public is invited to attend the free reception planned for 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. that day.

Children will enjoy "Unsung Heroes," featuring "Lost, Stolen or Strayed," a film narrated by Bill Cosby. After the film, participants will recreate some of their favorite black inventions and make some of their own special gadgets on a mural that will be incorporated into the exhibition.

"Black Women: Achievements Against the Odds," an exhibition on black women and their contributions to American history, culture and society, closes July 9. A set of 20 posters produced by the Smithsonian Institute Traveling Exhibition Service acquaints viewers with black women whose accomplishments have changed American life.

Originally researched and developed in 1975, this exhibit was the first series museum study on the topic. The 120 women selected for this new version of the exhibition represent 200 years of achievements in 16 subject areas including religion, military, civil rights, arts, sports and education.

Each panel includes a quotation and story of the featured woman, plus reproductions of vintage photographs and statements about five to seven other women whose lives reflect the challenges and inspirations of other women in their area of study.

Examples of women featured in the exhibit include C.J. Walker, the first female black American millionaire who worked her way from washerwoman to head of her own cosmetics manufacturing company; Katherine Dunham, an anthropologist who studied African, Caribbean, central European and classical ballet dances and formed her own troupe to perform a unique combination of these dance traditions; and Harriet Tubman, who is familiar for her work in the underground railroad and the only woman in American history to plan and lead a military raid.

The exhibit has been funded by Delma and Richard Abalos, Bill Loves' Frame-a-Rama, Mr. and Mrs. Gene Collins and the Odessa Cultural Council.

A series of special events complementing the exhibit are planned to celebrate black history.

Arts Day, June 23, will feature special resource centers set up throughout the museum that will give participants a chance to make their own mask, listen to African stories and legends and try their hand at writing stories.

On June 30, the museum will show "The Autobiography of Miss Jane Pittman," an award winning movie starring Cicely Tyson.

The series concludes July 7 with "Making Changes," where participants learn how to make positive changes in the government.

All events begin at 2 p.m. and are free. For more information call the museum, 1-332-7123.

Dance workshops to begin Monday

From Staff Reports

Cheryl Jones and Gregory Mitchell will be conducting two workshops at the Cherry Jones Dance Studio, 3320 N. Big Spring St., Monday through Wednesday.

Miss Jones, a former Midlander, was a principal dancer with The Feld Ballet, founded by Eliot Feld. More recently, she danced with Twyla Tharp's company, touring Europe and South America.

She will be teaching ballet.

Mitchell has danced with Song and Dance with Bernadette Peters, and in several Broadway shows including "Merlin" and "The Phantom of the Opera."

He has made about 15 national and international commercials and danced in the movie "A Chorus Line." A graduate of Juilliard, Mitchell was also with Feld Ballet.

Mitchell will be conducting a jazz workshop. In addition, he will do a question and answer session on Broadway dancing and the auditioning process.

Miss Jones and Mitchell are married and live in New York City.

UT's McWilliams sees SWC regaining respect

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

ODESSA — University of Texas football coach David McWilliams admitted here Saturday at the annual Odessa Coaches Clinic that the scandal-plagued Southwest Conference has suffered major image damage over the past three years, but he thinks some positive signs are now being seen because of the conference's woes.

The SWC has suffered the two-year football loss of SMU, penalties at TCU and Texas Tech and numerous investigations at other schools that are still to be decided. In fact, Texas itself may have some positive news to announce this coming week in matters of a lifting of football probation from the NCAA.

"There is no question that we (the SWC) have a low image around the country, and I think deservedly so," said McWilliams. "I know that it is tougher to recruit because of our problems in the conference and we are losing a lot of good kids to out of state teams. We can't deny this."

But spilt milk is spilt milk and McWilliams says the job at hand is turning that image problem around.

"We're not going to do it in one year. That's for sure," said McWilliams. "The only way we can solve our problems is to straighten up our act. We will be no better off if the NCAA comes back in two or three years and finds something wrong. People will think that we don't care about rules that we must live by and we'll be back in the same boat. We now have to build our image over a period time in a manner that deserves trust."

McWILLIAMS SAYS that he has already seen changes within the coaching ranks of the SWC.

"I've seen a change within the conference. You go to a school now and there might be two or three Southwest Conference coaches there. We are always asking each other what we can and can't do.

"On the road this year, I've heard less rumors and have had less examples of recruiting wrongs going on. In fact, I can't remember one time where I thought another school was intentionally breaking the rules. We've had trouble with rules interpretation on occasion, but that is because the NCAA may tell me one thing and another coach something else. We need more consistency from the NCAA in that area.

"But the major thing is that everyone seems to be trying to live by the letter of the law and it is a much more positive approach than I've seen in the past. In fact, because of what our conference has gone through, I've seen a change all over the country. We don't hear much about major recruiting violations anymore.

"The NCAA is serious about getting things straightened out. I don't know, but there may be some other conferences that will have to go through what we've have gone through. But, hopefully, the lesson has been learned."

ON THE upcoming season, McWilliams thinks Texas A&M, Arkansas and TCU are all teams that can make the SWC exciting.

"A&M is the big leader going in. They are coming off three straight titles and won last year when they weren't expected to and they have nearly everything back," said McWilliams. "Arkansas should be very good, but there is a quarterback problem there. TCU has more experience back than anyone, but they have to get through a season without a major mishap. TCU has played well recently, but it always seems like something happens to them during the season that distracts them. They led us and A&M last year before the wheels fell off.

Risen Star runs wild

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Racing Writer

NEW YORK — Risen Star, a son of Secretariat, ran away with the $506,200 Belmont Stakes Saturday, 15 years after his sire won the race to become a Triple Crown champion.

Winning Colors, the filly who won the Kentucky Derby, finished last in a field of six 3-year-olds and was struggling as she came under the wire.

The 14¾-length victory by Risen Star over Kingpost made him the 14th horse to complete a Preakness-Belmont double. He finished third in the Derby.

Belmont

Brian's Time finished third, two lengths behind Kingpost and 11¼ lengths in front of Cefis. Granacus finished fifth and the filly was last.

Risen Star had suffered a minor foot injury May 28 and trainer Louie Roussel said there was a slight swelling above his right front ankle Saturday morning. But he certainly was magnificent Saturday afternoon.

His winning margin was the fourth-largest in the 120 years of the Belmont. Secretariat won the 1973 Belmont by 31 lengths, Count Fleet by 25 in 1943 and Man O' War by 20 in 1920.

Ridden by Eddie Delahoussaye, Risen Star completed the 1½ miles in 2:26 2-5. It was the second-fastest Belmont ever, topped only by the American-record 2:24 raced by Secretariat.

It had to be a bitterly disappointing end to the Triple Crown for D. Wayne Lukas, who trains Winning Colors. She scored a front-running victory in the Derby and then, after dueling for the lead with Forty Niner, finished third in the Preakness.

Winning Colors went off the second choice in the Belmont and she was in the lead for three-quarters of a mile before fading from contention. She and Genuine Risk, the 1980 Derby winner, are the only fillies to run in all three Triple Crown races.

"It's a great feeling," said Delahoussaye after picking up his first Belmont victory to go with his two Derby victories. "It's great to win the Belmont. Louie Roussel did a hell of a job."

Gary Stevens, who rode the filly, said, "She just didn't run her race. She just didn't fire. I have no excuses. She's still a tremendous filly in my book."

Winning Colors, who carried 121 pounds to 126 for each of her male rivals, broke on top as expected. Risen Star went right after her, as expected. The filly led Risen Star and Kingpost around the clubhouse turn and into the backstretch, where there was one mile remaining.

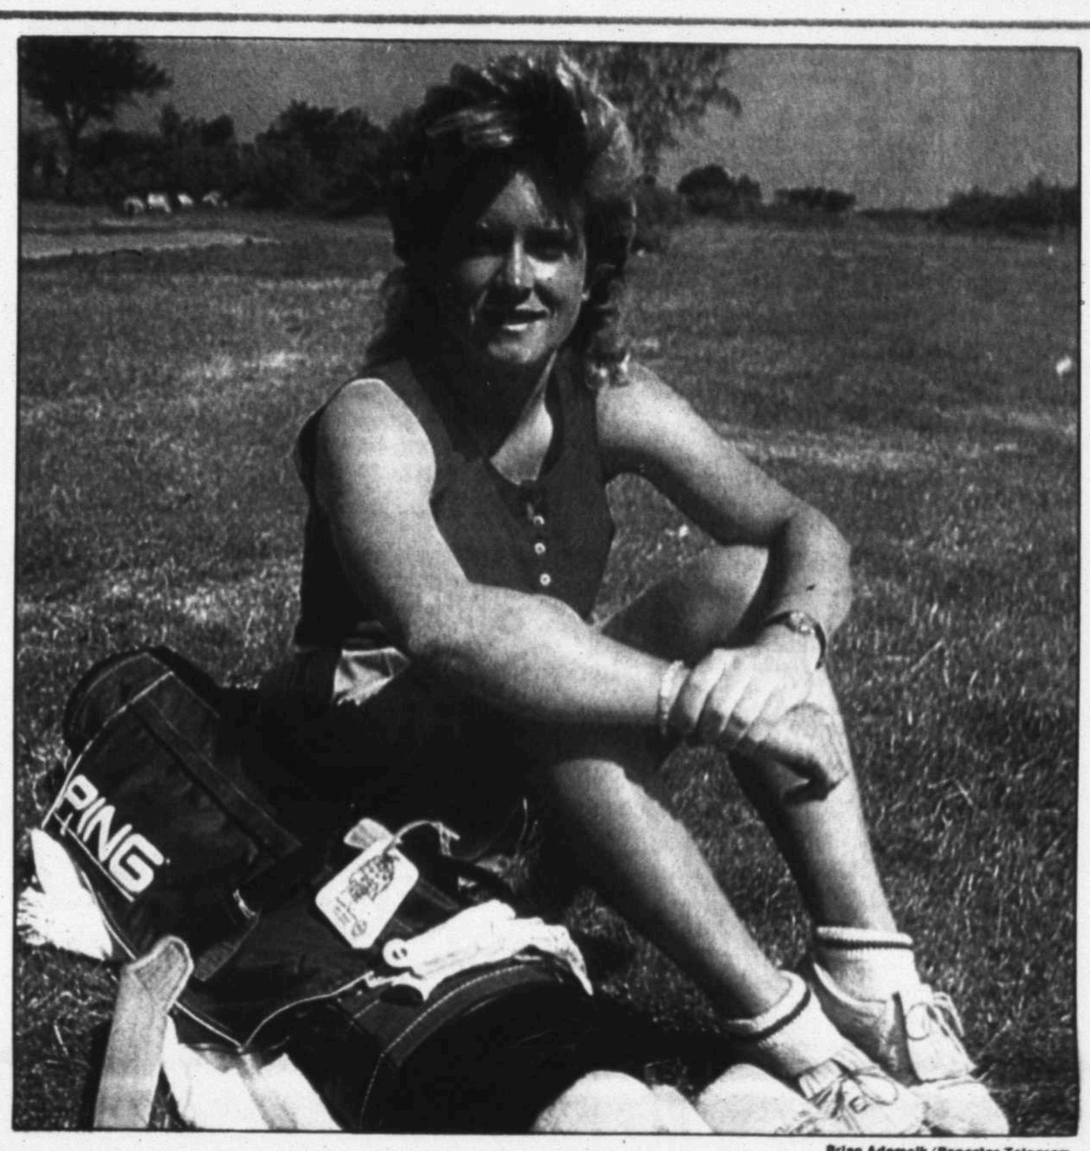

Risen Star took the lead by one-half length with one half-mile to go, with Kingpost in third. When they reached the half-mile pole, Risen Star, a strapping dark colt, was six lengths ahead of Kingpost, with Brian's Time third. Winning Colors had dropped to fifth, between Cefis and Granacus.

The race was over, for all intents and purposes, but Risen Star made sure by continuing to draw away in a finish not nearly as a shocking as Secretariat's but certainly reminiscent of it.

Before the race Lukas had said, "Given the fractions are realistic, she's going to be out there by herself. If anyone goes with her, they'll compromise their chances."

The fractions were realistic — 23 2-5 for the quarter, 47 1-5 for the half, and 1:11 4-5 for three quarters. Risen Star went with her and his chances kept looking better and better as the race progressed.

Janice Littlefield ... striving for an LPGA berth.

Futures looks bright for Littlefield

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Former Midland High golfer Janice Littlefield is hoping that this is the year she lands that coveted LPGA card, but the road is cluttered with red ink, wearisome travel and pressure-packed competition.

Currently, Littlefield is playing golf on the Futures Tour, a mini-tour made up of young professionals all trying to earn their way into the LPGA ranks where "real" money can be earned.

The Futures Tour is much like the men's PGT mini-tour that will hit Midland in July at Green Tree Country Club. The Futures Tour is made up of 33 tournaments, limited to 144 women at each tournament.

The top 70 women each week make the cut and 33 will make money. Littlefield has played in 12 Futures events this season and failed to make the cut only twice. She has earned $2,500 this year with her best showing coming in North Carolina where she placed third for a paycheck of $1,337.

"You can definitely say I'm not making expenses, but I'm playing well right now," said Littlefield. "You have to pay a $220 entry fee for each tournament, so there really isn't much left over even if you do get in the money.

"But I played seven Futures tournaments last year and never made the cut. It cost me about $7,000 to play in those seven tournaments. So, you can see I'm doing much better this year, but it still takes a lot of money to play."

LITTLEFIELD HAS no sponsor and her father, Odell Littlefield of Midland, is making it possible for her to make the tour events.

"No one really wants to take a chance on someone just playing in the Futures Tour. However, a lot of the girls have some kind of sponsorship, but I haven't been able to put together anything like that," says Littlefield. "I'm only able to do this because of my father.

Magic home for Pontiac's Game Three

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

PONTIAC, Mich. — Home.

Magic Johnson is happy to be there. The Detroit Pistons are happier.

The NBA Championship series, tied at one victory each, shifts Sunday from the Fabulous Forum to the Pontiac Silverdome, an indoor football stadium where the sun and wind are factors.

"It isn't like other arenas," Detroit coach Chuck Daly said.

The road trip isn't like any other for Michigan-born Magic. His family and friends will be in the huge crowd watching Game 3 as his Los Angeles Lakers try to regain the homecourt advantage.

NBA

He said Saturday he won't meet with them until after the game. He might even be able to enjoy a home-cooked meal after struggling with the flu.

"I'm feeling a lot better now. I ate food finally for the first time last night," he said.

Although "it's exciting" to play in front of people dear to him, he is postponing his reunion with his rooters.

"It doesn't matter if they're upset or not," said Johnson, who played at Michigan State. "I have a job to do. If they're upset, they don't really know me."

Johnson's job is to resist dwelling on the strangeness of the Silverdome and play like he did in Thursday night's 108-96 victory in which he had 23 points and 11 assists in 42 minutes despite his illness.

"You can't come in and say, 'Oh, man, we're playing in the Dome,' " Johnson said. "I'm ready to go. I don't run away from it. I'm here to play. I'm here to play for a championship."

With hot, sunny weather forecast, the shooting background would be brightened because daylight shines through the roof. There also is glare from indoor lighting. The system that suspends the roof creates a breeze in the building.

Laker guard Michael Cooper, who made just one of 12 shots in the first two games, said, "If it's windy I might even hit the backboard Sunday."

Because of the background, "you really have to concentrate on the target and follow through, stay right with the shot," Los Angeles coach Pat Riley said.

In their only Silverdome visit this season, the Lakers won 106-104 before 40,278 fans Jan. 8, breaking a three-game losing streak in the building.

They didn't seem to have any problems with the background, Pistons guard Vinnie Johnson said.

"People let themselves get defeated, saying the lighting's different," Lakers' guard Byron Scott said. "You just have to shoot like you shoot at any other basket."

Now, said Detroit center Bill Laimbeer, the fans are different.

"Our crowd has gone from looking to come to the games and cheering to being fanatical. That's really going to be a big plus for us," said Laimbeer, who played Thursday night with an injured left arch. "We'll have 40,000 screaming maniacs."

Asked about his injury, sustained in Detroit's 105-93 victory Tuesday night, he said, "don't talk about it. If you don't talk about it it's not there."

Stanford upsets ASU for college series title

By TOM VINT
Associated Press Writer

OMAHA, Neb. — Stanford third baseman Ed Sprague says a second consecutive national championship was beyond his wildest dreams when the Cardinal struggled through the first half of the season.

Dreams, even wild ones, do come true.

Seventh-ranked Stanford was there in style at the end and won the NCAA baseball championship with a 9-4 victory over No. 1-ranked Arizona State on Saturday.

"In the middle of the year I would have bet the ranch against us being here again," Sprague said. At one point, Stanford was 19-10 after losing three straight to ASU.

CWS

"This is great to come back here to win it two years in a row," Cardinal second baseman Frank Carey said. "You need a lot of intangibles to work. This is unbelievable."

The Cardinals, with a .667 winning percentage this season, had the worst percentage of any World Series champion in the 42-year history of the event. Five of those losses were to Arizona State.

"In 1976, we beat Arizona seven times during the regular season and they beat us for the right to play in the championship game," ASU coach Jim Brock said. "I still think back on that game as a fluke. I don't feel that way at all about this situation. There was no question in my mind or anyone's mind that Stanford had an outstanding ball club."

Coach Mark Marquess' team made the CWS a tournament of paybacks for regular-season losses. During the season, the Cardinal were 5-14 against other teams in the tournament but were 5-1 against those teams in the CWS.

"We played one of the toughest schedules in the nation and that paid off for us," Marquess said. "The turning point in the year was to come back against Fordham (in the Northeast Regional) in a tough game after losing to St. John's earlier in the day."

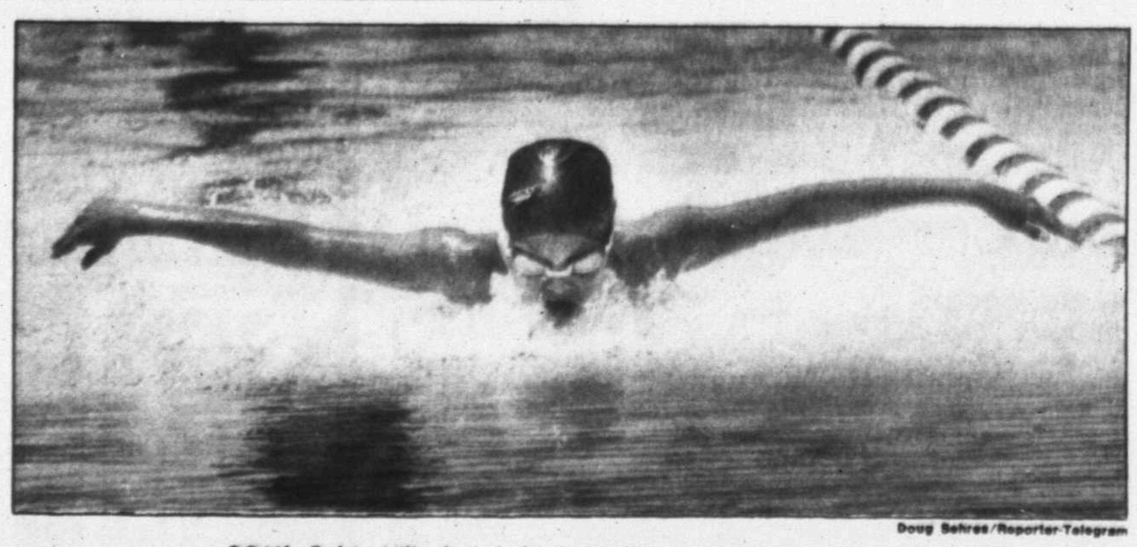

Stanford freshman Stan Spencer handcuffed top-ranked Arizona State for seven innings and Sprague hit his 22nd homer of the year.

Stanford became the first team to win successive titles since Southern California won five straight from 1970-1974, and it was the first time that two teams from the same conference, in this case the Pac-10, played in the championship game.

It was Arizona State's ninth championship game. The Sun Devils won titles in 1965, 1967, 1969, 1977 and 1981.

Stanford made the CWS a tournament of paybacks for regular-season losses. During the season, the Cardinal were 5-14 against other teams in the tournament.

Arizona State, 60-13, won the Pac 10 Southern Division title while Stanford finished second.

Long-standing record falls at meet

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Amber Goodwin broke a 19-year-old meet record in the girls eight-and-under 100-meter freestyle, and her City of Midland Swim Team improved to third place in the 42nd annual West Texas Invitational at Doug Russell Pool Saturday.

Goodwin's time of 1:35.19 broke a record of 1:35.70 set in 1969.

Going into today's last session of competition, the Houston Dads' Club held a slim lead over the El Paso Aqua Posse, 563.0 to 558.5. COM was a distant third with 442 points.

WT Invitational

Matthew Houston and Robin Hill were double winners for COM. Houston won the boys 13-14 100-meter butterfly and 50-meter freestyle, while Hill took 50-meter backstroke and freestyle titles in the girls 10 and under division.

Other COM winners were Lindsay Bickley in the 50-meter freestyle for girls 11-12, Howard Flowers in the 50-meter backstroke for boys 11-12, and Cody Marcum in the 100-meter freestyle for boys eight and under.

Here are Saturday's results:

Team Totals

Houston Dads Club (DADS) 563.0; El Paso Aqua Posse (AP) 558.5; City of Midland (COM) 441.0; El Paso Water Ranch (H2OR) 286.5; Amarillo Aquatic Club (AAC) 78.0; Pecos Swim Team (PST) 71.0; Odessa Aquatic Club 43.5; Aqua-Tex (ATEX) 33.0; United Swimmers of Abilene (USA) 33.0; Silver City Sharks (SCS) 13.0; Lubbock Swim Club (LSC) 9.0; First Colony (FCST) 9.0; Plainview Y Aquatic Team 0.0; San Angelo Swim Club 0.0.

Associated Press Writer

PITTSFORD, N.Y. — Lauri Peterson decided to skip to her 10th high school reunion to play in the $300,000 Rochester International golf tournament, and on Saturday she moved to the head of the class.

"It's the first time I've made the right decision," she said after shooting a 7-under-par 65 to move into a three-way tie for the lead going into Sunday's fourth and final round.

Nancy Lopez, the LPGA tour's leading money winner, and Caroline Gowan, who led the tournament by herself Thursday and Friday, were tied with Peterson at 4-under-par 212.

They probably wished Peterson had gone back to Phoenix, Ariz., to see her old classmates, after seeing the six-year tour veteran put together a string of six birdies and come from eight strokes behind.

"I said to myself I might as well not stop making birdies," she said. "I felt like I deserved to make these five- or six-footers."

Her string began on the par-3, 174-yard seventh hole, with a five-foot putt, and ended on the 338-yard, par-4 12th hole with a 10-footer. Another birdie putt on No. 14 rolled around the lip and just missed.

"If I had made that, who knows what I would have shot," she said of her round that tied a career best. "I want to break that record. Maybe tomorrow."

Overall, she had eight birdies and one bogey on the 6,182-yard, par-72 Locust Hill Country Club course.

Gowan, who started the day in the lead at five-under, survived three bogeys on the first six holes and shot a 1-over-par 73 to hang onto a share of the lead.

"It was a great scrambling round," Gowan said. "I'm starting to feel like I deserve to be out there, that it's not a fluke."

Lopez had a consistent round of one-under 71, with one bogey and two birdies, and would have finished with a "pretty boring" round if it weren't for the final hole.

Her drive on No. 18 went down the right side and bounced into a spectator's pants pocket. Tournament officials allowed her a free drop and she went on to par the 337-yard, par-4.

"Pretty unbelievable," she said. "I gave him a kiss and I gave him a ball and I said, 'Thanks.'"

Patty Sheehan, who had a 3-under 69 Saturday, was in second place, one shot behind at 213.

BELMONT—

The victory was worth a winner's share of $303,720 to Risen Star, who also picked a $1 million bonus for having earned the most points in the three Triple Crown races — 11 for his third and two firsts. Winning Colors also had six points going into the race.

The bonanza gave Risen Star a bankroll of $2,029,845 on a record of eight wins in 11 career starts.

Just as in the week leading up to the Preakness, trainer Roussel kept people guessing whether he would start his 17.1 hands star.

Risen Star worked three-eighths of a mile in a sizzling 33 3-5 seconds Friday, raising many eyebrows, including Roussel, who also co-owns the colt with Ronnie Lemarque.

"It was too fast but it's over with and there's nothing we can do about it," Roussel said.

However, Cowboy Jimmy Nichols, Risen Star's exercise rider, said, "He done it easy. He came back good ... I think he's a winner."

Right on, cowboy.

Green takes lead at Westchester

PGA

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

HARRISON, N.Y. — Ken Green birdied three straight holes for a 67 that lifted him into a one-shot lead Saturday after three rounds of the $700,000 Westchester Classic.

Green, a playoff loser at Greensboro earlier this season, pulled away from a six-man scramble with his burst of three consecutive birdies beginning on the seventh hole.

He led the rest of way and completed three trips over the Westchester Country Club course in 206, seven strokes under par.

Dick Mast and Australian Steve Elkington came on to share second at 207. Mast had a 3-under-par 68 and Elkington scattered six birdies across his card in a 69.

South African David Frost, not yet a winner but seven times a runner-up in this country, was next at 208 after a 69.

Seve Ballesteros of Spain, a former winner of this title and a playoff loser here a year ago, chipped in from about 25 feet for an eagle-3 on the 18th hole. It finished off a 69 that left him three back.

"It put me back in the tournament with a chance to win tomorrow," Ballesteros said.

"It was a very difficult chip. I used a pitching wedge instead of a sand wedge and hit it against the heel.

"As soon as I hit it I knew it was good. I didn't know it was in, but I knew it was good," said Ballesteros, twice a Masters champion and a two-time British Open winner.

While Ballesteros put himself in the thick of things going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $126,000 first prize, some of the other major foreign stars could not keep pace.

British Open champion Nick Faldo of Britain struggled to a 75 and was at 220, seven over par. Bernhard Langer of West Germany, hampered by a back problem, shot 76-219.

Australian Greg Norman moved up with a 69 and was at 212, six back with 18 holes to play.

Loren Roberts, who led through the first two rounds, slipped to a 73 and dropped back to 210.

Ladies ready for Mission

WWTGA

From Staff Reports

The Women's West Texas Golf Association stages its 54th annual tournament at Mission County Club June 13-17.

This year's tournament is dedicated to the late Bobbye Prichard, popular area golfer who was a longtime participant in WT tournaments.

A field of 144 ladies from 32 West Texas clubs will be competing. More than 50 golfers from Midland and Odessa are expected in the field.

Robin Madison, Amarillo, will be back to defend her title. One of the prime challengers will be Mona Jennings, Wheeler, who was last year's medalist at Wichita Falls.

Also in the field will be Carol Tidwell, senior medalist from Odessa CC.

OCC last year won the team trophy with the two lowest individual scores.

There will be a championship flight and eight other flights with qualifying rounds Monday. Handicaps of the contestants range from three to 36.

Among the former champions who have gone on to play on the LPGA tour are Sandra Palmer and Linda Hunt.

This year's tournament chairman is Miriam Gaddy. Cochairmen are Pat Barton and Linda Koontz.

Barber leads by a hair

Seniors

By FRED GOODALL
AP Sports Writer

PONTE VEDRA BEACH, Fla. — Miller Barber rode a strong wind to a 68 and came from four shots back Saturday to take a one-stroke lead over Gary Player and Al Geiberger after three rounds of the Senior Tournament Players Championship.

Barber, winner of the inaugural Senior TPC in 1983, birdied the third hole to begin a steady climb up the leaderboard and will take a 54-hole total of 7-under-par 209 into Sunday's final round.

Player, the defending champion, and Geiberger will start at 6-under after rounds of 67 and 68, respectively, on the par-72, 6,646-yard Valley Course at Sawgrass Country Club.

Billy Casper, Bob Charles, Bruce Crampton, Charles Coody and Don January all trailed Barber by two shots at 5-under, and Lou Graham was one stroke behind them at 212.

Sunday's winner will earn $60,000, and Barber felt fortunate to move ahead in gusting, 25-mph winds that made club selection difficult.

"Shooting under par on a day like this, with the wind whistling like it was, you've got to be pleased," said Barber, winner of 22 tournaments since joining the Senior PGA Tour in 1981. "I'll just try to do the best I can the rest of the way."

A's continue Ranger-bashing

Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas — It was bat night for 42,028 Texas Rangers fans and three Oakland Athletics.

The largest crowd of the season at Arlington Stadium saw Dave Henderson, Carney Lansford and Terry Steinbach each homer and drive in three runs as the Athletics overpowered Texas 13-4 Saturday night.

"This is one game that has gotten us back on a positive note," said Lansford, whose two-run homer, his fifth, triggered a five-run fifth. "It's nice to score some runs and we hadn't been doing that over the previous week."

Earlier this week, Oakland was shut out in consecutive games by the Kansas City Royals and lost five in a row.

"That's why you can't ever figure this game," said A's manager Tony LaRussa. "(Texas starter) Jose Guzman is a good pitcher. It's tough to figure."

Henderson had three hits, including his eighth homer, and has hit safely in 10 of his last 24 at-bats.

"He has a reputation as a streak hitter but he has been consistent for us," LaRussa said.

With the A's leading 2-1, Walt Weiss led off the fifth with a walk against Jose Guzman, 6-5, and Lansford homered. Henderson was hit by a pitch and two outs later, Mark McGwire walked. Steinbach then hit his second homer to chase Guzman.

"Tonight was the best I felt all season. But you can't make any mistakes against Oakland," Guzman said. "It was one of those games when you have your best stuff and can't win."

Greg Cadaret, 1-0, who relieved Steve Ontiveros in the fifth, allowed one hit and walked two in four innings. Rick Honeycutt worked the ninth and allowed Cecil Espy's first major-league home run.

Yankees 8, Orioles 6

NEW YORK — Rookie Jay Buhner hit his first major league grand slam and John Candelaria won his seventh straight start, as the New York Yankees beat the Baltimore Orioles.

The victory kept the Yankees in first place in the American League East, one game ahead of the Cleveland Indians.

Rick Rhoden, the loser Friday night against the Orioles, was the Yankees' designated hitter, the first pitcher to start a game as a DH since the inception of the rule in 1973.

Candelaria, 8-2, allowed six hits in six innings, struck out four and walked one. He was making his first start since May 29, when he left a game against Seattle after five innings because of a sore left elbow.

Buhner, who also singled home a run in the fourth, capped a five-run fifth with his second homer of the season, an opposite-field shot off reliever Doug Sisk.

Eddie Murray's seventh homer of the season, following a two-out single by Cal Ripken in the eighth, brought the Orioles within 8-5.

Blue Jays 4, Red Sox 3

TORONTO — Sil Campusano's run-scoring single with two outs in the 10th inning gave Toronto to a victory over Boston, the Blue Jays' eighth straight victory over the Red Sox.

Fred McGriff led off with a single off Dennis Lamp, 1-2. After Kelly Gruber's forceout, Nelson Liriano's groundout moved Gruber to second and Campusano singled.

AL Roundup

Duane Ward, 3-0, pitched three innings of one-hit relief, striking out one and walking one.

The Blue Jays have not lost to Boston since Roger Clemens beat them last Aug. 10.

Toronto pulled within a run in the bottom of the inning when Tony Fernandez singled, went to second on Bruce Hurst's wild pitch and scored when shortstop Spike Owen threw away the relay on George Bell's potential double-play grounder.

Tigers 11, Indians 3

CLEVELAND — Jack Morris beat Cleveland for the seventh consecutive time and Gary Pettis had three hits and drove in two runs, leading the Detroit Tigers past the Indians.

Morris, 6-7, allowed one earned run and eight hits in seven innings before Eric King finished. Morris is 21-8 lifetime against Cleveland.

Detroit, which had 13 hits, has won four straight and moved into second place in the American League East.

The Tigers scored three runs in the sixth to snap a 2-2 tie. John Farrell, 6-4, walked Chet Lemon with two outs and Lemon took third on Matt Nokes's single.

Luis Salazar beat out a bunt single, scoring Lemon, and Dave Bergman's run-scoring single knocked out Farrell. Pettis greeted reliever Bud Black with an RBI single.

Royals 7, Angels 0

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Mark Gubicza allowed only two hits and Kurt Stillwell had the first four-hit game of his career, as the Kansas City Royals beat the California Angels.

Both hits off Gubicza, 8-5, were singles — by Chili Davis in the fourth inning and an infield bouncer by Darrell Miller in the eighth. Gubicza walked one and struck out nine, his high for the season.

The Royals jumped on Kirk McCaskill, 2-5, for two runs with two out in the second. Singles by Mike Macfarlane, Brad Wellman and Stillwell produced the first run. Wellman then scored on a double by Willie Wilson.

White Sox 5, Brewers 3

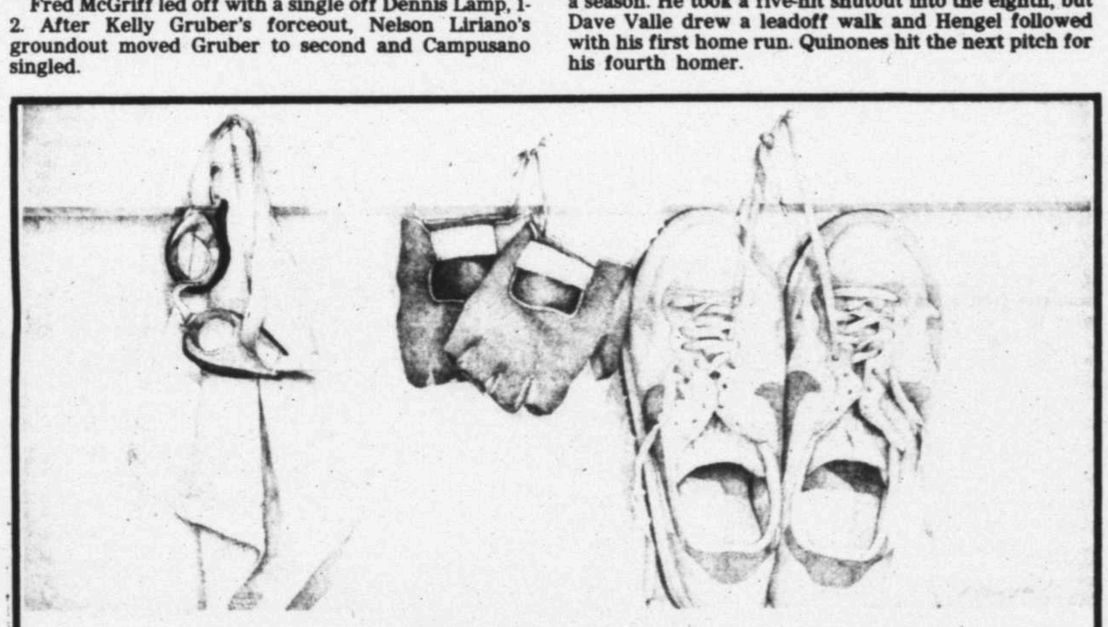

CHICAGO — Daryl Boston homered in the third inning and scored the go-ahead run in the fifth after hitting a controversial triple as the Chicago White Sox defeated the Milwaukee Brewers.

Boston's triple against Paul Mirabella, 0-2, appeared to bounce in and out of the right-field seats for a ground-rule double but first base umpire Mark Hirschbeck ruled that the ball hit the top of the fence. Milwaukee manager Tom Treblehorn argued the call and was ejected by third base umpire Rich Garcia.

Mariners 3, Twins 2

SEATTLE — Dave Hengel and Rey Quinones hit consecutive home runs in the eighth inning as the Seattle Mariners rallied past the Minnesota Twins and ended Frank Viola's nine-game winning streak.

Viola, 9-2, had not lost since opening day and was trying to set a Twins' record for consecutive victories in a season. He took a five-hit shutout into the eighth, but Dave Valle drew a leadoff walk and Hengel followed with his first home run. Quinones hit the next pitch for his fourth homer.

Bass does it all as Houston goes 11 to beat Atlanta

Associated Press

HOUSTON — A great player can hit, hit for power, field, throw and run. On Saturday night, Kevin Bass was great for the Houston Astros.

Bass, who threw out the potential go-ahead run at the plate an inning earlier, scored from second base on Terry Puhl's infield single in the 11th inning as the Houston Astros beat the Atlanta Braves 5-4.

Earlier in the game, Bass hit his first home run at the Astrodome since Sept. 8, and in the eighth he scored the tying run.

In the 10th, Bass fielded Ron Gant's single to right field and made a strong throw that caught Gary Roenicke trying to score from second base.

Bass then drew a leadoff walk in the 11th from Charlie Puleo, 0-3. One out later, Bass took second on Rafael Ramirez's groundout. Puhl followed with a high bouncer that second baseman Gant knocked down but did not field cleanly. Bass kept running and slid home just ahead of Gant's throw.

"I anticipated well on that play," Bass said. "I was running all the way until somebody stopped me. I heard the crowd and saw Denis (third base coach Menke) waving me on."

Bass reached base on a force out in the eighth and was already running when Henderson doubled.

The Astros ended a three-game losing streak and won their first extra-inning game after five straight losses.

Dave Smith, 3-3, the loser in Houston's 10-3 loss in 13 innings Friday night to Atlanta, got the victory.

"We took some chances tonight and that's what you have to do when you're not getting the hits," Astros manager Hal Lanier said.

Houston got seven hits. Atlanta had 14.

NL Roundup

Reds 7, Giants 2

SAN FRANCISCO — A throwing error by shortstop Matt Williams scored the go-ahead run in a six-run eighth-inning rally as the Cincinnati Reds defeated the San Francisco Giants.

It was the second consecutive game that the Reds had scored six runs in the eighth.

Pirates 8, Phillies 2

PITTSBURGH — Andy Van Slyke homered and drove in four runs and Mike Dunne pitched a five-hitter as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Philadelphia Phillies.

Dunne, 4-4, overcame 10 walks and pitched his first complete game in 10 starts. He struck out four.

Sid Bream hit a solo homer and a sacrifice fly during a four-run fifth that put Pittsburgh ahead 6-2.

Cubs 2, Cardinals 0

ST. LOUIS — Rick Sutcliffe, activated earlier in the day, gave up two hits over six innings and outdueled St. Louis' Joe Magrane as the Chicago Cubs defeated the Cardinals.

Sutcliffe, 4-4, who had been sidelined since May 21 with a strained rib cage muscle in his left side, retired the first nine batters. He struck out seven and walked one.

Expos 6, Mets 4

MONTREAL — Hot hitting Tim Wallach drove home three runs with a double and two singles as the Montreal Expos sent New York to its fourth straight loss.

Wallach, who has seven hits in his last eight at-bats, hit a two-run double that capped a four-run third inning against Dwight Gooden, 9-2. The Expos won their third consecutive game and extended the Mets' longest losing streak of the season.

Padres 2, Dodgers 1

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Recently acquired Dennis Rasmussen pitched a five-hitter, struck out 10 and hit a sacrifice fly as the San Diego Padres defeated Don Sutton and the Los Angeles Dodgers 2-1 Saturday night.

LITTLEFIELD

"I went to New Mexico State on a golf scholarship and told my dad that he is now paying for my college education. He said that would be OK, but I think this is even more expensive than he thought it would be."

Playing on the Futures Tour has no bearing on earning the LPGA card that would allow Littlefield to enter LPGA events, but it offers her the competition and money pressure events that allows one to develop the mental approach that is needed for professional golf.

"AT FIRST, it was hard getting used to playing for money and making cuts. In college, you never got cut," said Littlefield. "Now, I'm a lot less nervous than I was before a tournament in college. You learn to roll with the punches and adapt to different kinds of courses each week."

Littlefield will try to earn her LPGA card this year. That entails doing well in two different tournaments.

"The first LPGA qualifying tournament is Aug. 16 in Wichita, Kan. Anywhere from 150 to 170 girls will compete and they will take the top 25 to the finals in Houston in October," noted Littlefield. "If you don't make that round, there is another qualifying event in Florida in September."

The finals in Houston will feature the top 100 golfers seeking an LPGA card. The top 25 in Houston will earn non-conditional cards that will allow entry in any LPGA event. The next 25 will earn conditional cards and those players can enter LPGA events that have openings.

"Just for the one try at Wichita, it will cost me another $1,750," said Littlefield. "I tried to qualify last year, but missed by one stroke. I feel my chances are much better this year because I'm hitting the ball so much better and my confidence level is much higher."

Littlefield has spent some time with Midland's Judy Rankin, who was the first woman on the LPGA tour to crack the $100,000 barrier.

"Judy has helped me a lot. I play with her nearly every time I'm home and she knows what it takes to get out there. She tells me that it will be much easier to get sponsorship once I get my LPGA card."

For now it's the Futures Tour for Littlefield. She left Midland Friday for a tournament in New York after taking a week off from the tour.

WHILE ON the tour, Janice and her tour mates stay in private housing, but that, too, has drawbacks.

"It's nice money-wise, but that doesn't give you a lot of privacy. The people are really nice to you, but they want to know all about you and want you to spend a lot of time with them," she noted. "But it's a great experience. Sometimes you have to get a motel room to get a break."

The Futures Tour started this year in Florida and since then Littlefield has traveled to Louisiana, Alabama, South Carolina, North Carolina, Tennessee and New Jersey. Tournaments lie ahead in New York, Ohio and Illinois.

"Golf is really an individualized sport. There is no one to blame but yourself when things go wrong, but I like it that way. My confidence is a lot better. At least my bad rounds are getting better.

"The toughest part is playing courses of different kinds. When you travel from North Carolina to New Jersey, the grasses on the courses are completely different. And you are usually playing courses you have never seen before."

Littlefield brings some impressive credentials to pro golf. She graduated from Midland High in 1982 where she played on three district championship teams and was district medalist her senior season. She went with the MHS team twice to the state meet and was the state's third place medalist her senior season. She was also named MHS' Outstanding Female Athlete in 1982.

At New Mexico State, she was named as the team's outstanding freshman in 1983 and was on a High Country Athletic Conference championship team in 1986 and was an individual conference co-champion in 1985.

Also in 1985, Littlefield won the Women's West Texas championship.

TWU admitted to LSC

Associated Press

DALLAS — The Lone Star Conference voted unanimously Saturday to accept Texas Woman's University as its ninth member, with the Pioneers officially beginning conference play in the fall of 1989.

Current members of the Lone Star Conference include Abilene Christian, Angelo State, East Texas State, Texas A&I, West Texas State, Cameron University, Central (Okla.) State and Eastern New Mexico University.

"We're delighted to have Texas Woman's University in our conference participating in the women's sports they have," said Dr. Ed Roach, the incoming chairman of the conference Council of Presidents and president of West Texas State.

Angels win

From Staff Reports

EL PASO — The Midland Angels scored five runs in the seventh inning to push past the El Paso Diablos 11-8 in Texas League play at Dudley Field Friday night.

The Angels return home to begin a six-game series with San Antonio tonight. The series with the Missions closes out the first half of the Texas League season.

Magic's homecoming jogs memories

LANSING, Mich. — Behind a brick building on St. Joseph's Street there is a playground. There are swings and slides, logs to climb on, pipes to crawl through, bars to hang from.

This is where a legend was born.

Where kids swing and slide today, a tall, wiry kid with an afro and a basketball played two decades ago. This is where he raced back and forth, imitating his idols, Detroit Pistons guard Dave Bing at one end and Wilt Chamberlain at the other. This is where he made his first game-winning shots and won his first championships, even if they were make-believe. This is where the no-look passes and the behind-the-back dribbles and the scoop layups were honed.

This was when the playground was a basketball court. This was when the tall, wiry kid was just Earvin Johnson Jr.

The basketball court — Magic Johnson's basketball court — is gone now, pre-empted last winter for the playground. The day-care center that occupies the Main Street Elementary School building had no use for a basketball court. So tan bark replaced asphalt. Swings and slides replaced backboards and rims.

Johnson, now known by a nation as "Magic," probably will drive by his old dribbling grounds sometime this week. He usually does when the Lakers come to Pontiac, an hour or two east by car, to play the Detroit Pistons. This time, the Lakers are in town for a whole week, not a day, and to play for the NBA championship. Game 3 of the best-of-seven NBA finals is this (June 12) afternoon at the Pontiac Silverdome. Games 4 and 5 are there Tuesday and Thursday nights.

"When I go back to Lansing, it gives me the feel of being around real people and knowing how things are," Johnson has said. "Sometimes in Los Angeles, you don't get a real feeling about things. People are moving so fast. They want something from you. And there is the star syndrome. That's always there. You can't escape it.

"It's nice to go home because it brings me down. I can see my boys and hang out with them. I can see my family. And people call me, 'Earvin.'"

Johnson has had homecomings before, but never for so long for so much. To him, this is the homecoming. In yesterday's editions of the Detroit Free Press, beside photos of him in high school, college and the airport Friday, was a huge headline: "Welcome Home, Magic."

He has been dreaming a lifetime about this week. He led Lansing Everett High to the state title in 1977. He led Michigan State to the NCAA title two years later. Chapter 3 of the dream had him winning the NBA championship in Detroit.

But for the Pistons, not a team from a city and a state that, in many ways, are the antithesis of Detroit and Michigan.

All of us should encounter such misfortune.

But before all that, before he could wear championship rings on four fingers, before he drove down Middle Street in a limousine, before his unmistakable smile flashed across TV screens coast-to-coast, before he made $3 million per year, before he redefined the position of point guard, before he was "Magic," he was just another modest kid chasing a not-so-modest dream.

His Middle Street neighbors, many of whom still live there, tell stories of the legend before his time. One tells of how Johnson would shovel snow from the Main Street court so he could play.

SERIES

The Pistons' 34-7 regular-season home record was the league's fourth best. They are 7-2 there in the playoffs. The Lakers' 26-15 road mark was the NBA's best but they are 2-5 away from home in the playoffs.

"They also believe they can beat anybody on the road," Daly said. "We lost to Boston in the playoffs here. We also lost to Chicago here. So we're vulnerable."

The Pistons can capture their first NBA title with home victories Sunday, Tuesday night and Thursday night. If they lose at least one, the series will return to Los Angeles for games next Sunday and, if necessary, the following Tuesday night.

First the Lakers, trying to become the first team to win consecutive titles since Boston in 1969, must contend with their current surroundings.

Detroit forward John Salley recalled when Daly, before last season, showed him and fellow rookie Dennis Rodman the Silverdome for the first time. The artificial football surface was still in place.

"Chuck was trying to describe where the court would be," Salley said. "I said, 'oh, yeah, sure.' ... It's not a basketball stadium. The Forum is for basketball."

But once the baskets are in place, the Lakers will try to put the Silverdome's quirks out of their minds.

"As long as the rims don't move," Los Angeles center Mychal Thompson said, "we'll be OK."

Vander Meer was really somethin'

Remembering two straight no-hitters

By JIM DONAGHY
AP Sports Writer

AP Laserphoto

Cincinnati's Johnny Vander Meer warms up before his second straight no-hitter, June 15, 1938.

Fifty years ago, the stars came out at Brooklyn's Ebbets Field and one was born on the mound.

On June 15, 1938, Cincinnati's Johnny Vander Meer pitched his second consecutive no-hitter to beat the Dodgers 6-0. There were 38,748 on hand to see the first night game at Ebbets and Vander Meer's unmatched piece of baseball history.

"The lights at Ebbets Field were just as good as today, and the players were used to playing night games in the minor leagues," said Vander Meer, who now lives in Florida. "I never played day ball until I got to the major leagues."

On June 11, Vander Meer had no-hit the Boston Braves 3-0 at Cincinnati's Crosley Field.

The first night game at Ebbets Field had a carnival atmosphere, and as the hours elapsed the ebbing shouts and shrieks conjured sounds of a distant Ferris wheel.

The bleacher gates at Ebbets that breezy June night were opened at 5 p.m and it took no time until the stands were filled. Prior to the start of the game, Olympic track star Jesse Owens gave an exhibition, finishing second to Brooklyn outfielder Ernie Koy in a 100-yard race in which he gave Koy a 10-yard handicap. Owens also finished second to Dodgers outfielder Gib Brack in a 120-yard race, in which he hurdled while Brack ran on the flat.

A smoke bomb exploded behind second base to signal the playing of the national anthem by a uniformed band and by 8:36 the gates were closed. It was estimated that 10,000 to 15,000 were unable to get in.

There was still a glimmer of daylight left when 615 floodlights went on at 8:35. And, when the game eventually started at 9:23, the lights were thankfully still on as the Dodgers went out, out, out.

Like many an opening night, Vander Meer saved his best scene for the closing act.

Until the ninth, only one Dodger had gotten as far as second base. In the seventh, the 23-year-old left-hander walked Cookie Lavagetto and Dolf Camilli. In the eighth, with the crowd on Vander Meer's side, he mowed down Woody English, Kiki Cuyler, and Johnny Hudson.

With one out in the ninth, Vander Meer walked Babe Phelps, Lavagetto and Camilli to load the bases.

With a count of 1-1, Koy hit a grounder to third and Lew Riggs' carefully aimed peg to catcher Ernie Lombardi got the force for the second out.

The next batter was Leo Durocher, a name that would dot baseball history on more than one occasion.

Vander Meer's first pitch to Leo was hit for a scary liner that twisted into the right-field stands. Durocher then lifted a short lazy fly to center that Harry Craft caught.

Hundreds ran into the night and congratulated Vander Meer as his teammates escorted him off the field.

"I filled the bases in the ninth because I was bearing down too hard," Vander Meer recalled. "I tried to bear down too hard. I wasn't tired. I wasn't tired at all."

Among the record crowd that starry, starry night was his girl friend and mother and father of Midland Park, N.J.

Prior to Vander Meer's consecutive no-hitters, only seven pitchers threw two no-hitters, and none were in the same season.

Since his historic week, many no-hitters have been pitched but only a few have come close to doing it in succession.

Vander Meer doesn't feel jealous of the record, saying "it would be good for the game if someone did it again. Someone could tie the record, but I don't think anyone will ever break it."

Cincinnati's Ewell Blackwell no-hit the Boston Braves on June 18, 1947, and then went 8 1-3 hitless innings against Brooklyn in his next start on June 22.

On Sept. 25, 1986, Houston's Mike Scott no-hit the Giants and pitched six hitless innings in his next start at San Francisco.

Vander Meer says if anyone does equal his record it will be a strikeout pitcher.

"If someone's going to do it, it won't be the kind of guy who gets four or five strikeouts," Vander Meer said. "You need to be a hard thrower like Nolan Ryan. If you get 10-12-14 strikeouts, that's half of the batters you need for a no-hitter. That gives you a better chance."

Ryan has pitched a major-league record five no-hitters, and this season took one into the ninth against Philadelphia.

Vander Meer says his two no-hitters was not the biggest thrill of his career.

He said he hurt his arm the year after his no-hitters, and was sent to the minors because the Reds were in a pennant race and couldn't afford to let him work out his problems. He had only a 5-9 record in 1939 and feared that his career was in jeopardy at age 24.

"But I came back late in the 1940 season and pitched 13 or 14 innings to clinch the pennant," Vander Meer said. "I was throwing just as hard at the end than I did at the beginning of the game. That was my biggest thrill because it not only won the pennant, but I was so excited that I knew my career would continue."

Indeed, Vander Meer had his best seasons in 1941 and 1942, winning 16 and 18 games, respectively, before World War II interrupted his career.

Vander Meer says he is donating many of his baseball mementos to a historical society in Midland Park, N.J., where he grew up, but he is keeping the two balls he used to pitch his two no-hitters.

"I've been offered a lot of money — I'm not saying how much — for those balls," he said. "I'm as sentimental as the next guy but I might sell them some day if the price is right."

New book further reveals legend of Babe

There are many colorful stories about Babe Ruth, some confirmed and others that persist no matter how unlikely they seem. Now, a new book titled "My Dad, the Babe" (Quinlan Press, $17.95) gives an inside look at the facts and legends that built Ruth into a larger-than-life character.

Anyone who doubts the book's authority can argue with Ruth's daughter, Dorothy Ruth Pirone. She wrote the book with Chris Martens, a senior producer for Major League Baseball, and she is the source (although second-hand) for the book's major revelation, that Ruth's first wife, Helen Woodford, who died in a fire in 1929 when Dorothy was 8, was not her mother.

That has long been suspected. When Helen made her first public appearance with Dorothy, on Sept. 23, 1922, the little girl was said to be 16 months old. It was known that Helen, who had suffered several miscarriages, had not been pregnant during the previous two and a half years. Helen and Babe, moreover, gave conflicting birth dates and other details.

According to Dorothy, not even her stepmother, Ruth's second wife, Claire, knew that the woman who later became one of her closest friends was Dorothy's mother.

Her father covered his tracks so well, Dorothy said, that she didn't learn the truth until 1980, when the woman she now accepts as her natural mother told her the full story two weeks before her death.

So who was the mother of Babe Ruth's daughter? Her name, Dorothy said, was Juanita Jennings, a California woman who had an affair with Ruth in 1920 and who later married his chum, Charlie Ellias.

Dorothy, who dropped into Mickey Mantle's restaurant to help celebrate the book's publication, had another revelation on Saturday. Including Dorothy, who has five surviving children (one died) and nine grandchildren, Babe Ruth has 15 descendents, none of whom have played baseball.

One of the grandchildren is about to get married, however, and who knows? The Babe would seem to be due.

Japanese fans rooting against popular team

By MICHIO YOSHIDA
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO — The Yomiuri Giants have had so much success as a baseball team the past 52 years that they now have a cheerleading squad — to root against them.

More than 150 anti-Giants baseball fans have formed a club to rail against the team at games, urging players to be less diligent, maybe miss a few fly balls here and there, so the team doesn't dominate the sport.

"I was a Giants fan when I was a young boy," said Mineyoshi Eto, 49, who organized the Association for Anti-Giants People. But he said his interest waned as the Giants captured pennant after pennant, ruining the chances for other teams.

The Yomiuri Giants, founded in 1936, were the first professional baseball club in Japan. They have won 33 pennants, including 16 national championships. They captured the Central League pennant and won the Japan Series nine years in a row starting in 1965.

When the Giants play, they invariably draw a full house, and tickets are so valuable they are nicknamed "platinum paper."

More than 100 of the scheduled 130 games a season are nationally televised. Giants players are so popular that they make more commercials than other players.

Regardless of whether they win or lose, the outcome of a Giants game is usually the front-page story in daily sports newspapers.

This year, the team has been hovering near second place, which hasn't pleased the AAGP one iota.

More than 150 fans have paid about $8 each to join the club since it was formed April 1, and are willing to pay $24 a year in annual dues for the privilege of urging their team to lose, Eto said.

Members have received an eight-page "Report Anti-G" produced by Eto containing letters and congratulations from Anti-G members, and reprints of newspaper articles about the Giants' losing games.

Eto said the club's goal now is to select a president, and choose a winner of the Anti-Giants Award for the anti-Giants man who did the best job opposing the team — someone who may have a file of old newspaper stories reporting a Giants' losing streak, for instance. Or, even better, a story about the Giants being beaten in a "sayonara" game — a tie game ended by a run in the bottom of the ninth inning.

Eto has his work cut out for him. He's going up against one of the biggest fan clubs in the country, the powerful Giants Fan Club which has 30,000 members and is marking its 10th anniversary.

The Giants Fan Club is so popular that it had to limit its members to 30,000 because so many people wanted to join, said club spokeswoman Yukiko Sato.

The pro-Giants club members, who pay $22 a year, can receive six free tickets for outfield seats.

The anti-group members have to buy their own tickets. "It's very difficult to get tickets for Giants games and we have had to pay five times more than the regular price," Eto said.

Normal ticket prices range from $8 to $36 for a game at the newly built Tokyo Dome, the Giants' home stadium.

The Association for Anti-Giants People rules say its purpose is to promote professional baseball and the club does not intend to make trouble for other fan clubs. The AAGP will have a hard time making an impact, because the team already has so many eager followers.

"By forming the anti-Giants fan club, we hope to usher in a new phase in Japan's professional baseball," an undaunted Eto said.

However, Eto still has a long way to go.

Miss Sato of the regular Giants fan club said she hadn't even heard of Eto's group.

Midland quarterhorse wins at Ruidoso Downs

By JON SLOTNICK
MRT Correspondent

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. — Spend took control of the six furlong Norgor Derby at the top of the stretch to win the $37,000 event going away Saturday, while Josies Super Sound, owned by Clarence Scharbauer of Midland, held off a wave of competitors to prevail for the victory in the 400 yard, $12,000-added Mr. Kid Charge Handicap.

Ruidoso Downs' leading thoroughbred Jockey Mike Lidberg and Spend broke from the outside post, gradually moved up around the far turn, then took off down the stretch to win the Norgor by a 2 3/4 length margin in 1:11 2/5.

A 3-year-old Draconic colt, Spend improved off of his second-place finish in the Derby Trial for conditioner Cecil Crabtree. With the winning prize of $18,622, Spend has now earned in excess of $96,000 for owners Bob Kellerman and A.D. Bowen of Ft. Worth.

W.L. Clifton's High Wire Acrobat, ridden by Larry Payne, also attempted some come-from-behind tactics, ending up one length ahead of Blue Hoss, the show horse. William Leach trains High Wire Acrobat, a Miswaki colt. The second-place finish was worth $8,193.

In the co-feature, the crowd of 4,080 made Josies Super Sound the betting choice at 2-1, and the 5-year-old Super Sound Charge mare opened up a two length lead halfway down the lane. When it was all over, the favorite's lead had been sliced considerably, three noses hit the wire, but Josies Super Sound emerged on top in front of Sissy Salls and Whata Lucky Jet.

Josies Super Sound was in the hands of Jacky Martin and Jack Brooks, the leading quarter horse rider/trainer team at this point in the season.

140 CARD OF THANKS

THERE ARE NO WORDS...

to express my thanks for the love you've shown to me.

In our time of pain you all reached out to hold us close to Thee.

We've been on a journey for many long years not knowing our journey's end.

Now Michael's journey has been blessed With angels to walk him home.

For now we grieve and shed some tears, Our hearts do ache with sorrow.

But with each day the pain will ease as love brings each new tomorrow.

And so my friends - I thank you all for standing close and dear.

Sharing our loss, easing our pain
Showing us that LOVE is here.

From the Heart
Thank you friends

135 MEETING PEOPLE

IS HE OUT THERE? Career minded 30ish female, not interested in meeting men in bars, has decided to explore seeking a companion through the classifieds. The guys I work with think I'd be best matched with an intelligent, athletic type male with a great sense of humor who likes independant womeh. If this has spurred your interest - tell me why you think we should meet by replying to BOXP01 c/o The Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702.

140 CARD OF THANKS

To The Loving Friends of Eloise McGuffin
Thank you to all our relatives & friends for their kind expressions of sympathy, flowers & food at the time of the recent loss of our beloved wife and mother.
Bill McGuffin, Jackie Baxter

Quality Tudor Home

The exterior of this week's featured home is only one of the many highlights to be found in this home which was built in the early 1930's. The home was remodeled four years ago, with the addition of a new kitchen, masterbath, an upsrairs bedroom and bath.

This week's featured home was built in the early 1930's and combines quality workmanship with an up-dated interior which was extensively remodeled four years ago. The exterior of this Tudor-style home quickly enthralls any person who happens to pass by. This four bedroom and three bath home is situated on one-third of an acre of beautifully landscaped land and would be ideal for many families.

The quality workmanship of the home is immediately noticed upon entering the front door. A small entrance hall opens onto the home's family room that is highlighted by the original woodwork on the moulding, beams and doors. This quality workmanship can be seen throughout the lovely home.

QUALITY

The spacious family room focuses on a fireplace which helps warm the room during the winter and is brightened by a large window along one wall. A door provides access to a private patio and a large backyard area.

Bookcases line the entry walls leading to the formal dining room. This room is highlighted by a gorgeous arched wooden window and is stylishly decorated with a navy blue fabric wall.

When this home was remodeled in 1984, the kitchen, breakfast room and an upstairs bedroom with bath were also built. This addition is located to the right of the formal dining room. The country kitchen has beautifully carved cabinets and is separated from the breakfast room with a bar. The cabinets above the breakfast bar have glass doors on both sides, create a stunning effect with the light from the kitchen window. Both these rooms are decorated in a blue and tan small print wallpaper.

The kitchen also has a desk area, with a bookcase above and a walk-in pantry. The kitchen appliances include a General Electric dishwasher and microwave, and a Jenn-aire range with self-cleaning oven. Another highlight of the kitchen are specially designed corner cabinets with turn-tables that are ideal for storage of small appliances and a linen cabinet. Two doors open to reveal a utility closet with space for a freezer.

A staircase next to the kitchen leads to a guest room and a bath. The bedroom has private access to a deck area that overlooks the attractive backyard. With the addition of a pool table, this room would be perfect as a gameroom.

A spacious hall, situated next to the dining room, guides a visitor to three other bedrooms. The first bedroom features a grass cloth wall, with private access to the backyard. This room also has a large closet and a ceiling fan.

The second bedroom is highlighted by many windows and a feminine wallpaper border. This room has two walk-in closets with the larger closet having specially designed clothing rods and shelves.

These bedrooms share a hall bath that has the original make-up vanity and sink. The bath is lined with antique tile and features a bath tub and a storage closet.

The spacious master bedroom has four windows which affords a wonderful summer breeze. The master bath, which was added on four years ago, has two marble, shell-shaped sinks, a stall shower and a large walk-in closet. The closet was the home's original kitchen and has many shelves and cabinets for storage. This charming bath has a floral wallpaper in shades of rose, tan, peach and blue.

This older home also has a two-story house in the backyard. The house has plumbing for a small kitchen and bath, and could be finished out as guest quarters or as an office with exercise room.

The home, which was designed with quality insulation, has five ceiling fans and many of the windows have been replaced with storm windows. When the home was remodeled, the original part of the home was re-wired and the walls were replaced with new sheet rock. This home truly combines the qualities of an older home with all the amenities of a new home.

Home Realty is offering this home which has approximately 3,000 feet for $140,000.

The kitchen and breakfast room were added on four years ago. The kitchen has beautifully carved cabinets and a large kitchen window. The stairs to the right leads to an upstairs bedroom and bath.

This room is highlighted by four windows and two large closets. The quality workmanship of this 1930's home is seen in the woodwork throughout the house. This bedroom has access to a lovely hall bath that has the original sink and antique vanity.

Foster of Don Harvey, Realtors assist new Midlanders with tenth move in six years

Rick and Jan Saunders, along with daughter Brandy and son Brad, have just recently settled down again, this time in Midland. Their coming to Midland represents their tenth move since May of 1982. Rick was born and raised in Kansas and Jan is originally from Missouri.

Rick, an engineer with Arco Pipeline, obtained his degree in Civil Engineering from Kansas State University. Following his graduation, Rick moved to Tulsa, Oklahoma where he and Jan were married.

When Rick accepted a position with Arco Pipeline, he and Jan moved to Independence, Kansas to the home of Arco Pipeline. There they built their first house. After a short time had passed, however, they were transferred to Houston.

Their stay in Houston, only their first of three moves there, was to last only four months before they were transferred back to Independence, Kansas. But this second move to Kansas was also destined to be brief. Soon they were transferred to Raton, New Mexico, where they remained for nine months.

From Raton, they were transferred back to Independence. Again, they stayed only a brief time before they were transferred back to Houston. After another short stay in Houston, Rick and Jan were brought again to Independence. Their next two transfers followed by another return to Independence.

Their last move from Independence then brought them to the Tall City. "I was very impressed with how modern everything was in Midland," said Rick. "And the people have been so friendly," added Jan.

"Friends has told us we should go to Don Harvey, Realtors to find a home because they had the greatest number of listings for us to shop from," said Rick. "So, our first Saturday morning here, we just walked into Don Harvey's office and that's when we first met Karen Foster. We visited a while with Karen and discussed what we were looking for in a home and she began showing us homes that afternoon."

Jan said, "We were looking for a newer home that would not require a lot of 'fixing-up' because we had just been through that with our last house in Kansas. When Karen realized we were not really satisfied with the pre-owned homes we were looking at, she suggested we consider building one."

Karen Foster of Don Harvey, Realtors, lett, assisted Jan and Rick Saunder with their tenth move since 1982. The Saunders are pictured with their children Brad and Brandy.

"We had just built one new house before," added Rick, "and we weren't sure we wanted to face the time and trouble again. But Karen showed us some new homes built by Robert Graham which we really like and assured us we could have one built in only 60 days. We were very skeptical about being able to finish one that quickly since we would be facing the Christmas holidays. But, the home was ready in 60 days and we've been very pleased with it."

"Now, we're really glad Karen talked us into building," continued Jan. "Since we tend to move so frequently, we really did not want to have to take an existing home and try to rebuild it to our liking."

"We certainly appreciate the warmer climates we've found here in the south," said Rick. "And we're looking forward to finding some time to go to a few of the Angels games, and playing a little golf here. This summer, we are planning a tour of the Big Bend country and Carlsbad, New Mexico. And when winter gets here, we're really looking forward to skiing in Ruidoso."

We hope the Saunders get to actually stay in Midland for a while and have a chance to become a real part of our community. With all the moves they've been through, they've surely earned a rest.

Midland Realtors are raising funds for Brennan, local Realtor's grandson

Brennan Bolin

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

Midland Realtors are banning together to aid Brennan Bolin who is the five year-old grandson of Suellen Nall, a local Realtor. Brennan will hopefully be the first child with idiopatic pulmonary hemosiderosis to grow up. But Brennan needs a heart-lung transplant and many Midland Realtors are becoming involved in Brennan's plight.

The Women's Council of Realtors, in conjunction with the Midland Board of Realtors, recently held a bake sale with proceeds benefiting Brennan. He has been accepted by the University of Minnesota for the transplant pending a donor and many local Midland Realtors are trying to help raise an additional $125,000.

"These funds are needed to cover additional costs beyond Brennan's insurance. They are also needed for traveling and living expenses for Brennan's family while they are waiting for a donor to be found," explained Fran Henderson, chairman of the Brennan Bolin Fund. "Brennan comes from a family of Realtors, and I will be contacting other Realtors through the Texas Association of Realtors to inform them of Brennan's needs."

Brennan was diagnosed three and a half years ago with this rare disease, in which bleeding occurs inside the lining of the lungs where the oxygen transfer takes place. The excess workload has also damaged his heart. Brennan is the only living person with this disorder and the doctor who would perform the transplant has a 100 percent success rate in heart-lung transplants.

"Brennan comes from a long line of Realtors, including his mother, Kathlyn. His great-grandfather, A.H. (Cape) Caperton is a Realtor in Dallas and his grandparents, Frank and Suellen Nall are both local Realtors," explained Henderson. "With the help of local Realtors and the citizens of Midland, Brennan has an excellent chance to become a fourth generation Realtor in Texas."

If you would like to make a tax deductible donation to Brennan, please make checks payable to:
Brennan Bolin Fund

Attn: Fran Henderson, Chairman
702 Andrews Highway
Midland, Texas 79701
If, for any reason, Brennan can not take advantage of this fund, all monies will be donated to the Orphan Disease Foundation.

This space was respectively donated by Chaparral, Realtors.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

Recent storms, Delayed Funding, Midland's housing costs

Q. We closed the sale of our home last week but did not get our check for several days. Is this normal? B.B.

Langston

A. "Table funding", the delightful sequence of a seller going to closing, signing the papers and walking away with his check is an increasingly rare event except in the case of sales made on an assumption. Today most mortgage companies want to review the entire loan packet (all of those papers you and the buyer you and the buyer signed) before releasing the money. Quite often this can be accomplished on the same day, especially if your closing is scheduled in the morning. However, as it does take time for the title company to assemble and deliver the package, then for the loan officer to review the documents and for the check to be issued, it is safer to plan on a next day funding.

This delay is usually only an inconvenience to the seller; however, it can be a major problem if he is planning to follow the moving van out of town immediately after closing or if the seller is planning to simultaneously sell then buy another property. Any seller in this situation would be well advised to let his Realtor know ASAP so that he/she can work with the buyer, mortgage company and closing agent to coordinate and facilitate a quick as possible funding.

Q. We are supposed to close on the purchase of a new home next week. The property condition inspections were completed prior to the recent hail storm and we are nervous about possible damage to the roof. What do you suggest? J.G.

A. Run, don't walk, to the nearest phone and ask your inspector to go back and take another look at the roof or ask your seller to contact his insurance agent for a possible claim. If there are problems, the sooner you and the seller know this the better; don't wait until you get to the closing table to try to solve them.

Some suggestions if damage is found: ask for an assignment of the insurance settlement, request that the seller gets bids and leave money in escrow for repairs or replacement, or order the bids yourself and negotiate with the seller for a settlement. The tennis ball sized hail storm did create problems for many buyers and sellers, but they are problems that can be solved between reasonable parties.

Just keep in mind that when you originally signed the contract, you were not buying a property with a new roof and your seller was accepting a sales price that netted him a particular figure. Therefore, if it is determined that the roof needs replacement as a result of the storm and insurance does not completely cover these costs, your seller will obviously appreciate any consideration you can give him in return for the bonus of a new roof. But it is your right to expect the seller to turn the property over to you in at least as good a condition as found at the time the sale was negotiated and as covered in the provisions of the contract and the property condition addendum. Some "give and take" by both parties may be necessary to arrive at an equitable solution.

Q. How do housing costs in Midland compare with those of other cities? M.L.

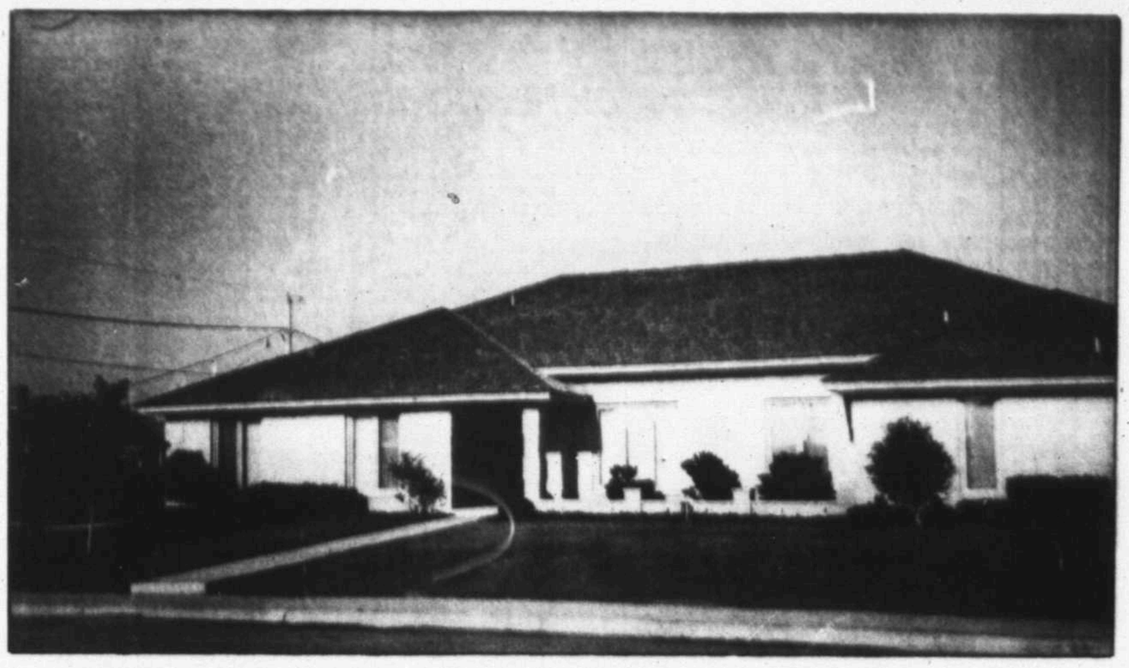

A. People moving into Midland usually tell us that costs of homes in Midland are higher than Houston/Dallas/Denver/etc. and people moving out of Midland indicate just the opposite. "I wish I could pick up my home in Midland and move it to Houston/Dallas/etc. because it would be worth twice as much!," is an expression that we hear all too often.

Fortunately, an unbiased report from the American Chamber of Commerce Research Association indicates that the cost of housing in our city at 88.9 percent is a very reasonable 11.1 percent BELOW a national average of 100 percent. Other cities below the average are Oklahoma City at 81.2 percent, and Houston at 79.6 percent, while cities above the average are Dallas at 101.7 percent, Bakersfield at 115.6 percent and Denver at 119 percent.

The same report shows costs of utilities in Midland also below the average of 99.7 percent while Dallas and Houston are above at 106.4 percent and 114.5 percent respectively. All in all, costs of living in our city are very close to median; we feel this is a welcome news to any company or individual considering transfers into the city.

If you have any questions on real estate that you would like answered in this column, you are invited to call or write me at Langston Realtors, 1908 West Wall, Midland, Texas 79701, (915) 682-9495.

RE/MAX offers lovely four bedroom home

This traditional style home features a beautifully landscaped front yard and is only one of the many highlights that will captivate any homeowner. This home is being offered by RE/MAX of Midland.

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

RE/MAX of Midland is offering a lovely four bedroom and three bath home which was built by Bill Brown five years ago. This home is located in Skyline Terrace and has a spacious backyard which would be ideal for entertaining friends during the summer.

The front entrance to the home features a fabulous door with an oval shaped glass inlay with two iris flowers etched in the center. A large foyer, whose walls are lined with a grass cloth with peach highlights, leads to the formal dining room and the home's main living area.

The formal dining room has a cathedral ceiling, paneled wainscoting and a gorgeous wallcovering. A large window that overlooks the well-manicured front yard brightens this room.

The main living area focuses on a corner fireplace with a mantle for displaying exquisite accessories. Doors open to reveal a wet bar with a gold faucet and a mirrored wall with glass shelves. An atrium door leads to the covered patio and large backyard.

To the right of the main living area, the kitchen and breakfast room are situated. The extra wide galley style kitchen features all Whirlpool appliances. These appliances include a ceramic cooktop, dishwasher, trash compactor, microwave and self-cleaning oven. Another amenity of this kitchen which would delight any gourmet cook is a large pantry with specially designed shelves for storage of canned goods.

The breakfast room is highlighted by an attractive wallcovering, with a floral border, in shades of rust, beige, and slate gray. A large window focuses on a beautifully landscaped flower bed with blooming spring flowers.

The sequestered master bedroom is adjacent to the kitchen and breakfast area. This lovely room could easily accommodate a small sitting area or an antique desk.

Two doors open to display walls of mirrors which reflect a stunning master bath. The bath has two marble vanity areas with gold fixtures. The ladies side features a sunken marble tub with a unique mirrored wall spanning to the ceiling. The other features include a built-in shower, two large walk-in closets with built-in shelves and two separate storage cabinets with laundry hampers. The bath is also enhanced by a floral wallpaper in shades of peach and a soft gray.

The utility room is also located in this part of the home. This room, which has a paneled wainscoting, includes lots of storage cabinets, space for an extra refrigerator or freezer and a built-in ironing board.

To the left of the main living area, three other bedroom are located. Two of the bedrooms have a large window that overlooks the front yard. Both of these rooms have ceiling fans and one of these bedrooms has an oversized walk-in closet with built-ins.

These two bedrooms share a hall bath which is highlighted by a marble vanity with two sinks and a lovely floral wallcovering. This bath also has a wall of storage cabinets and a tub with glass doors.

The third bedroom would delight any teenage girl. This room has a private bath with a large vanity area. The bath features a tub with glass doors and a walk-in closet.

The other amenities in this family-style home include an intercom system, a two car garage with an automatic door opener and a sprinkler system.

This five year old home has approximately 2,600 square feet and is being offered for $125,000.

Seatbelts save lives. Don't drink and drive.

6.9% APR financing.*

At this rate, you'll want one of America's best-selling Volkswagens, too.

Every Volkswagen is German-engineered to provide a generous measure of performance, handling, comfort and value.

Consider what a Jetta has to offer: 1.8 liter fuel-injected engine, rack and pinion steering, front-wheel drive, power-assisted disc brakes and a long list of standard features that bring new meaning to the words "fun to drive."

Come in and see for yourself. Take a test drive. You'll quickly understand why these Jetta models are so popular. And this financing rate will only make them more so.

*Financing only at participating dealers to qualified retail buyers through VW Credit, Inc., on new Jetta GL, GLI 16V and Carat. Delivered by 6/30/88. See your dealer for details. Dealer contribution may affect consumer cost.

Ends June 30 German engineering. The Volkswagen way.

Now Pick.

It's tough when they look so similar. And so with apartments. Many communities look similar, but looks can be deceiving. So how do you pick the good apple in the bunch?

Begin by looking at a Balcor Community. Saddle Club Apartments have been individually designed for their location. And developed to be worthy of the highest honor you can give it - to call it home.

But there's more...something at the core of each Balcor Community that can't be seen at all. And that's a passion for service. Saddle Club management professionals will go out of their way to ensure that your neighborhood is what you expect it to be. The very best.

So look beyond the first blush on the apple. And you'll pick Saddle Club every time.

Expect the Best.

It's now old news that America has an education problem: that many lack the basic skills to earn a living and are unprepared to enter the computer age work force. Educators are wringing their hands under a deluge of school reforms and their frustration is mirrored by corporate America.

With computers becoming common place in the business world, the skills required for empolyment has increased. Computer knowledge is necessary for many jobs, not just those we ordinarily think of as high tech.

FOR EXAMPLE, a janitor may have to fill out requisition forms or read manuals. He may have to order supplies or receive instructions with the aid of a computer. One recent study shows that blue collar workers are required to read 97 minutes of every 8-hour shift.

"Public schools are not turning out what hiring managers are looking for," Badi Foster, president of the Aetna Institute of Corporate Education, recently said before a congressional subcommitee on education and health.

Bridging the Gap

"You might say we have created a bridge between the community and the Midland College campus."

— Cindy Turland
Director of Adult
Basic Education, Midland College

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

College" is an ominous word to a high school dropout. But for an adult who never made it past grade school, it's even more threatening — and frightening. Fannie Burnett, 78, a Midlander for 50 years, was one of those students.

"I was deprived of an education. My daddy died when I was 11 and I began working — washing and ironing. I was promoted to the sixth grade, but I didn't go," Ms. Burnett said.

Although many years have passed since Ms. Burnett was forced to leave school, her eagerness to learn hasn't diminished. But because most continuing eduaction programs were conducted on college campuses, Ms. Burnett, like many others who have not completed high school, felt intimidated. The thought of driving to a college campus to enroll in adult education was a deterrent.

However, her problem was solved when an inovative educational program brought teachers into the heart of her community. The adult basic education classes, an offshoot of Midland College's adult basic education course, began meeting at Hollowell United Methodist Church for class.

The softspoken black woman pushed back a wisp of stray hair from her face. As she recalled having to leave school, her eyes misted over, but sparkled with determination as she spoke of her decision to continue her education now.

"It was always on my mind to get an education. Now not only do I have the opportunity to do it — I believe I can do it," she said.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

After honeymooning in San Diego and Coronado, Calif., John Oehsner II and his bride, the former Leslie Lang, are at home in Midland.

The social whirl preceding their May wedding in Trinity Presbyterian Church began with a Fajita party at the home of Amy and Steve Robnett. It was followed by a "Honey-Do" party at Ann and Wayne Westerman's home. Co-hosting were Bonnie and A.J. Cain, Sarah and Ron Holcomb, Donna and Mark Martin, Carol and Jerry Pitts and Carolyn and Barry Welton.

Jo (Mrs. Bob) Halpert entertained for Leslie with a luncheon in her home, while Deann and Greg Holcomb and Carmen and K.C. Westerman hosted a cocktail party at the Holcomb residence.

John's family hosted a Fiesta Party the evening prior to the wedding at the home of his brother and sister-in-law, Robert and Lyn Oehsner and their daughter, Alexandra. Also giving the party were John's parents. Lena and John Oehsner, and his sister, Julie Oehsner of Dallas. Lena and John also hosted teh wedding reception at the Plaza Club.

Before departing on their honeymoon, the couple was given a grand sendoff with a brunch at Wall Street Bar and Grill. The hosts and hostesses were Billie and Jack Besselieu, Gladys and Scott Hickman, Helen Lydecker, Janet and Joe Overton, Lou and John Scherer, Cathy and Dick Stump and Corky and Jim Trott.

CONGRATULATIONS TO Linda and Jim Hicks on the adoption of a baby girl whom they have named Sarah Adelle. She was born May 11.

The baby's arrival prompted a series of parties. Lynne and Robert Whitt invited friends of the Hicks family to their home recently to meet the little newcomer. Assisting with the party were Dianne (Mrs. Ed) Anderson and Fay and Dee Griffin of Odessa.

Among those stopping by were Sarah's grandmother, Monette (Mrs. Paul) Hicks; her aunt, Jann (Mrs. Vince) Bash; her aunt and uncle. Gloria and LaDoyce Lambert of Odessa, and a number of friends, including Linda and Kirby Terry, Rhonda (Mrs. Lynn) Durham, Natalie and Tom Eustace, Ann and Joe Hathaway, and Gana and Gary Durossette, who were saying their good-byes shortly before moving to Lubbock.

In addition, Sarah and her mother were honored at a couple of showers this past week. One was held Tuesday evening at the home of Donna (Mrs. Dennis) White, with Linda (Mrs. Chris) Whigham and Rae Jean (Mrs. Bob) Grady assisting. The other was Thursday evening when Linda's female co-workers at Unocal gathered at the home of Carol (Mrs. Rick) Schroeder.

THINKING SHE WAS hosting an end-of-school weiner roast for the faculty at Carver Cultural Center, Francine Weaver was totally surprised when the party turned out to be for her instead. The event marked her retirement after 35 years of teaching in the Midland public school system.

In addition to Carver, Francine has taught at South, Bowie, Milam, Crockett and Fannin Elementary Schools, as well as Lee High School. Her career also included a stint at Central Office.

The party was expanded to include not only other educators and co-workers, but many of Francine's other friends as well.

Special guests included Francine's mother, Okeman (Mrs. Francis) Weaver; Carver principal Patricia (Mrs. Bill) Maurer, Alma Marshall, Texas State Teachers Association area representative; retired teacher Bertha Starks and Bob Watkins, who was principal at Fannin when Francine taught there.

Party arrangements were made by Mary (Mrs. James) Wood and Mary Lou Simpson.

AILEEN AND GORDON CLARK of Newcastle-under-Lyme, England, paid their fifth visit to Midland recently. As guests of Rene and Art Dimney, they enjoyed renewing friendships made here over the past few years. Mr. Clark, an avid golfer and a member of the Newcastle Golf Club, participated in a tournament at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Denver and San Francisco were also included in their stateside travels this year.

The British couple took time out from their community involvements to vacation here. Mrs. Clark is a borough councillor at Newcastle-under-Lyme and a county councillor with Staffordshire County Council. A retired banker, Mr. Clark is a justice of the peace in nearby Stoke-on-Trent.

They have become enthralled with Texas and its people and look forward to many more pleasurable visits to the Lone Star State.

THE MIDLAND OPERA THEATER'S support group, the Operators, ended the year on a successful note with a luncheon recently at Midland Country Club.

To highlight the event, Jane (Mrs. Robert) Ward and Bill Lucas sang excerpts from "Cosi Fan Tutte." They were accompanied by Bill's wife, Joan.

In an installation ceremony conducted by retiring president, Susan (Mrs. Frank) Tirey, Frances (Mrs. Max) Levin assumed the presidency. Also taking office were Sigrid (Mrs. William D.) Lamm, vice president; Natalie Lake, secretary, and Aida Dunlap, treasurer.

Selma (Mrs. Ed) Winkler of Fort Stockton joined the group as a liaison member.

The fashionably-dressed group enjoyed visiting over wine prior to a delicious chicken crepes luncheon.

THE MAY 28 WEDDING Laura Laughlin and Chris Rooker in St. Ann's Catholic Church was preceded by a series of parties.

Festivities began in April when members of the bride's sorority, Delta Delta Delta, at the University of Texas at Austin honored her with an "Around-the-Clock" shower. In Midland, a bridal shower was given by Betty (Mrs. Harold) Abney and Amber (Mrs. Fred) Franklin of San Angelo at the Abney residence.

Wedding week festivities included a Mexican buffet and pool party given by Virginia and Bob Monaghan at their home; a bridesmaid brunch hosted by the bride's grandmother, Nona (Mrs. Charles) Laughlin of Odessa, at the Plaza Club, followed by a manicure party at Back Stage for the bridal attendants and given by the groom's sisters. Jeanne (Mrs. Craig) Manaugh of Edmond, Okla., Karen (Mrs. Lindy) Rachal of Houston, and sister-in-law, Kathy (Mrs. David) Rooker of Weatherford, Okla.

The groom's parents, Marjorie and Marlyn Rooker, gave the rehearsal dinner at Green Tree Country Club, and the bride's parents, Charlene and Gene Laughlin Jr., hosted a champagne reception in St. Ann's parlor.

BRIDGE

Cindy Turland, director of Adult Basic Education at Midland College, said the basic skills classes, which is directly funded by Midland College, was instigated by School Board Director and MC professor James Fuller. "Fuller set up the program with Midland College and the church donated the space for it," Ms. Turland said.

According to Fuller, he originally set up the program at the church a year ago last February, as well as a literacy program to appeal to people who might be apprehensive about entering a college setting.

"Can you imagine not being able to read?" Fuller asked. "The word 'college' would be intimidating in itself," he said.

The program directors at Hollowell United Methodist Church have taken great pains to ensure that their learning environment is home-like and inviting. For example, during a Thursday morning class (classes meet Tuesday and Thursday mornings and evenings), teachers and students were observed sitting at folding tables and chairs, chatting amiably. Homemade cinnamon rolls and coffee were doled out while students conversed about their favorite foods and cooking methods. But conversation soon died as — one-by-one — the students bowed their heads over their self-paced reading skills assignments.

THE STUDENTS in this program are working toward receiving their graduate equivalency diploma (GED). The students are allowed to take the GED exam one section at a time, according to Mary Hintermaier, Midland College instructor.

"The full eight-hour test is awfully long for anyone, but it is especially difficult for our older clientele," she said. Ms. Hintermaier said another benefit of the self-paced course is its flexible time scale. "If a student has to quit the course — due to an illness or death in the family — they can come back and start where they left off."

The program isn't geared entirely to elderly clientele, however. "We had one young person walk into our morning-class — which mainly consists of senior citizens — and decide to stay," Ms. Hintermaier said.

One of the younger students, LaDonna Stiles, 27, joined the program six months ago with a very limited reading ability. Although she had completed the ninth grade, Ms. Stiles said she couldn't even comphrehend the reading assessment sills test.

As the mother of two children, Ms. Stiles said not being able to read had always been traumatic for her, but the situation became worse when she lost her friends' support. "When my friends found out I couldn't read, they pushed me away, like I had a disease that was catching," she said.

MS. STILES SAID her children have been very supportive and proud of her progress in the literacy program at Hollowell.

"They insisted coming to the church to meet my teachers, since I go to their schools to meet their teachers," she said.

Ms. Stiles said her reading handicap inspired her children to be better readers. "They saw how frustrated I was and didn't want to be in my shoes," she said. Ms. Stiles said she and her tutor, Sherry Luckett, found out about the literacy program from a public service announcement on a local television station. The broadcast listed phone numbers to call following a television special about a man who couldn't read. Ms. Stiles said her level of self-esteem has risen since she began the literacy program.

"The teachers are so patient," said Annie McCarthy, 78, a student in the program. "The teachers are willing to help you with something until you do understand it," she said.

Aside from the hours she dedicates to attending class, Ms. McCarthy said there also is homework to do. "With all the time involved," she said, "it's hard to see how people manage to get a college degree."

But the support she gets from teachers and fellow students at Hollowell helps make the effort of studying easier, Ms. McCarthy said. Ms. Hintermaier added that the accessiblity of the course also helps make the courses easier to attend.

"These classes keep us in touch with the community," Ms. Hintermaier said. "We don't get hung up on tests and are more concerned with the learning process. The trouble for some of the older students is that they may get discouraged when they see how much work there is. But, there is a nurturing atmosphere — more of a family feeling — here (at Hollowell) and we also are able to reach those people whose mobility is too restricted for them to drive to campus."

However, Ms. Hintermaier said, despite the normal transportation problems some students have, when it is time for graduation, students, their families and their friends managed to "fill the MC auditorium."

MS. HINTERMAIER said about 15-20 students have received their GEDs since the program's inception. "It was rewarding to experience the great sense of accomplishment and support there (at the graduation)," she said.

"But even more rewarding is providing education to the entire Midland community," Ms. Turland said. "We will also be branching out with more classes, including English as a Second Language and Amnesty."

By bringing education into the community, Ms. Turland said, "you might say we have created a bridge between the community and the Midland College campus. In fact, some of our students have gained enough confidence from the adult edcuation classes to venutre onto campus."

Ms. Turland said "quite a few" of the adult education students have attended a computer course at MC and are continuing their studies on campus ... "Something they might never have attempted if it weren't for the 'bridge,' that gave the them the education and the confidence to try," Ms. Turland said.

Pay incentive plans beneficial to teachers, students

By VINCENT M. MALLOZZI
New York Times News Service

Five years ago this month, the National Commission on Excellence in Education declared that America was "a nation at risk" because of the failings of the American educational system.

One way to mitigate the risk, it suggested, is a "career ladder," an incentive pay plan that rewards teachers and administrators for doing better work or for taking on more responsibilities.

According to a recent survey by the Southern Regional Education Board, an education-research organization based in Atlanta, 14 states have adopted such ladders so far, eight are developing them, eight are funding them in some districts only and nine are conducting pilot projects.

The New York state legislature appropriated $131 million to increase teacher salaries, compared with $95 million last year.

A large portion of that money will help to develop and improve programs designed to attract more teachers.

The first career ladder in the state is emerging in Rochester, where the board of education and the Rochester Teachers Association have devised a program that calls for a beginning teacher to spend the first year as an intern, while working under the supervision of experienced teachers called mentor teachers.

The beginner will then have the opportunity to progress to resident status, through the fourth year, and then to fully licensed professional.

Beyond the professional level are lead teachers, who spend half their time in the classroom and the other half in such roles as mentor teachers or intervention teachers, who help with other teachers' problems.

If a teacher successfully climbs the ladder in Rochester, his or her salary would increase by more than 40 percent over a three-year period.

By the third year of the plan, the average teacher salary in Rochester would increase from last year's level of $32,651 to $45,774.

According to Tom Miller, project coordinator of one of South Carolina's three Greenwood school districts, near Greenville, the ultimate goal of its career ladders and incentive programs "is to raise the level of student achievement.

A financial incentive will not only achieve that goal, but will benefit the teacher as an individual."

Miller said that last year the top 35 teachers in his district each received a $2,000 bonus award.

They were evaluated on the achievement of their students, their own attendance and performance evaluation as well as on their professional service activity, such as postgraduate work.

"An incentive program really opens your eyes," said Janice Cothran, a 53-year-old teacher at the Northside Junior High School in Greenwood, who was among the recipients of last year's bonuses.

"It allows you to take a closer look at your own performance and gives you an idea as to how much you have contributed to a student's education."

The regional board's report, though, indicates that many teachers oppose the idea.

In South Carolina some teachers disliked the award system because it seemed as if they were being graded on their performance.

RESPONSIBLE

"And those of us scurrying for entry-level people are beginning to see the gap," Foster said.

Although it seems the responsibility of supplying funds for education is being placed on the doorstep of corporate America, Foster said the problem won't be resolved by one sector or set of institutions. "There's a role for business, higher education and for federal and state government," he said.

In are recent issue of "Training," Donald Clark, president and CEO of NAIEC, said, "To affect the dropout rate and the functional illiteracy rate, employers have to look to the primary human resources delivery system — and that happens to be the schools."

Clark said employers have to "quit tinkering at the margins" of education and collaborate with the schools by offering time and funding for curriculum planning, staff development for teachers, instructional materials, equipment and educational management practices.

ALTHOUGH THERE are no businesses offering funding to the Midland Independent School District, Maridell Fryar, director of secondary education, said there is a "Partners in Education" program whereby a business adopts junior high school classes and works with studens on computers. Another program which has businesses collaborating with the schools is "Junior Achievement."

Some experts say preparing students for the work force may take the same amount of careful planning that was used in preparing disadvantaged children to enter into the school environment.

Head Start, a federal program which allows children first-hand experience versus vicarious experience with the "real world" helps to develop self-esteem in pres-schcool children who have seldom ventured out of their neighborhoods.

Programs such as Head Start, help students to become assimilated into the classroom before they start school. It also is designed to enhance their pre-reading and pre-math skills. The program is funded by the Department of Health and Human Services and is operated by Midland Independent School District in conjunction with Casa de Amigos.

"School can't provide all of a child's needs," said Dr. John McAfee, local Head Start advisor and Pease Elementary School principal, "but imagine starting school if you've never been to a bank or an airport.

"Although the greatest inspiration to achieve has to come from the home, which has a profound impact on a children's development," McAffe said, "Head Start can provide a positive experience for a child outside the home. Then when they do enter school and are asked how they spent their summer, they will have some place to describe — they have been somewhere."

THE EDUCATOR said that constructive experience eliminates a feeling of being lost. Students become encouraged to attend school rather than being discouraged by their limited social experiences.

"A child doesn't decide to quit school in the tenth grade," McAfee said.

Instead children's feelings of failure in the primary years may simply progress and escalate in the high school years. Although many experts concentrate dropout preventative measures on ninth graders, McAfee said an equally important "target age" for nurturing is fourth grade.

"If you make a difference earlier, students will be less likely to drop out of school later," he said.

Programs in the community which work to instill confidence in potential high school dropouts include:

■ PREVENT ANOTHER STUDENT FROM DROPPING OUT (PASD) — Sponsored by Casa de Amigos in conjunction with MISD, PASD recruits adult mentors to work with 7-9th grade students several hours a week. Mentors are in contact with the student's family and teachers. Group activities are often planned and PASD sent four students to the Step Up to Success State Conference in Austin. Some group activities sponsored through the program have included trips to the Ice Capades, a performance of Up With People, the movie "Stand and Deliver," a charm class from P.S. Images and participation in an All-Star training program.

Students are referred to PASD from MISD and home visits by Casa de Amigos representatives.

■ YOUTH OPPORTUNITY UNLIMITED (YOU) — Designed to familiarize students with a college atmosphere, this year's YOU program, sponsored by the Permian Basin Product and Industry Council, sent two students to the University of Texas at El Paso for eight weeks. The students will earn 2½ college credits. Local contact is W.C. Wilson.

■ STAY IN SCHOOL — sponsored by the Midland Black Chamber of Entreprenuers, Inc., this program provides tutors and other needs of potential dropouts. For information call 682-2864.

■ STEP UP TO SUCCESS — SUTS is sponsored by the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. The program, established by the Texas Association of Mexican-American Chambers of Commerce, was designed to help minority youth develop an awareness about entrepreneurship and free enterprise, to provide business career opportunities, and to introduce minority role models to the students. Several hundred students attended the Midland program and 19 attended the state conference Austin.

Other self-esteem building programs include:

■ JUNIOR ACHIEVEMENT — A non-profit organization funded through private business organizations, JA is a program which brings business role models into the classroom. Midland Senior Program Manager Robert Smith said that although many of the business consultants are minorities to provide minority youth with role models, consultants are accepted "from all walks of life."

Smith said the Midland JA program serves all of mid West Texas and is specifically designed to teach students practical economic education. Business professionals present economic programs at history classes for JA's Project Business and explain economics throughout history.

JA's Applied Economics program presents business and marketing conditions through the aid of computers. Students evaluate the programs and one unique aspect of JA, according to Smith, is that high school students serve as role models for younger students when they speak at elementary schools.

Smith said JA is a community effort and has been supported by the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, the Midland Hispanic Chamber, MC and the accounting community. The program, which coordinates its efforts with MISD, is currently in need of business consultants and volunteers to teach business basics for the next school year. Interested persons may contact Smith at 682-4966.

■ LORENZO DE ZAVALA YOUTH LEGISLATIVE SESSION — Sponsored by the National Hispanic Institute, the annual legislative and supreme court youth simulation has met since 1982. Activities include a districting process, party primary, elections and three day mock session in the state capitol chambers where members debate bills in the legistlature or test issues before the supreme court. The event ends with an all-day college fair. MHC has sponsored 5 students in two years.

One MISD program, which helps students age 16-21, who have already dropped out of school, re-enter the school environment or complete their GED through examination is the Alternative Center, Dell Wood Mall, Midland, Texas, 697-7102.

Director and head teacher Helen Lackey said the program is self-paced and is designed for students who may need "an extra push."

Ms. Lackey said, "The program is for students who are academically frustrated. They may have gotten behind due to an illness, had one subject which became a personal Waterloo for them, or they have discipline problems and can't function in a typical school setting.

"If a student fails a semester course, there is no way for them to recoup that credit without repetition," Ms. Lackey said. "At the Alternative Center, students set their own goals and study times, therefore absenteeism is kept to a minimum."

Organizations to contact for dropout prevention programs are:

■ CASA DE AMIGOS, 1101 E. Garden Lane, Midland, Texas, 79701, 682-9701.

■ MIDLAND BLACK CHAMBER OF ENTREPRENEURS, P.O. Box 50473, Midland, Texas, 79710, 682-2864.

■ MIDLAND HISPANIC CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, INC., P.O. Box 11134, Midland, Texas, 70702, 682-2960.

Brides watch waistline for wedding

Associated Press

For the bride-to-be who hears "wedding" and thinks "waistline," Weight Watchers magazine says there is hope.

"With a little advance planning," says editor Lee Haiken, "you can arrange for a menu including hors d'oeuvres, soup, salad, entree, vegetable, champagne, punch, dessert and wedding cake that adds up to about 900 calories." She suggests starting with a low-calorie cocktail hour, with a non-alcoholic beverage option, and hors d'oeuvres such as lemon shrimp, melon with smoked turkey, and curried yogurt dips with fresh vegetables.

For the meal, she recommends a light chilled cucumber soup, followed by a seafood or chicken entree, an asparagus salad with olive dressing and a side dish like wild rice. A fresh fruit platter and a low-calorie lemon-apricot cake complete the Weight Watchers meal.

"The bottom line," she says, "is to keep it simple but elegant. With a little foresight, delicious food can enhance the beauty of a wedding day without adding to one's waistline."

Big wedding makes for happier marriage

Copley News Service

Having a big, elaborate wedding will make for a happier marriage, according to University of Michigan psychologist Martin Whyte. His survey of 459 Detroit-area women age 18 to 75 shows that weddings with 150 or more guests held in churches or synagogues make for more marital satisfaction.

Whyte isn't sure why, yet. He suspects it has a lot to do with tradition and a built-in social support that elaborate weddings provide. His figures show that the average wedding guest list has tripled to 150 in the past 50 years; and three-quarters of today's weddings are held in synagogues or churches, up from two-thirds 50 years ago.

Designer creates for individual

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — When Dr. Winkie wed, he did not plan an ordinary wedding. No, Winkie of DV8, the South of Market hot spot, ordered himself and his bride a brand new Gothic arch ruin so tall that three people could stand on one another's shoulders and still not reach the top. A man of style, he insisted on bent Greek columns and huge steps leading to the altar.

All this, Edward Martinez Fabrications made for him.

The ruins were only a few days old, and they and the curved columns and the oversized steps were all sculpted in a shop on Folsom Street that carves art out of polystyrene, one of those miracle foams no one can live without.

Dr. Winkie may have his quirks, but he is not alone. Americans will go to great lengths to express their individuality. That's to Edward Martinez's advantage.

He sculpts gigantic dinosaur eggs for people wanting something different in their yards. He makes candied apples that are bigger than kids. He creates fossils so big you could hold a tea party in one leaf, and wheeled gondolas for people to ride in. For those craving history, Martinez will whip up an ancient urn.

His clients include not only individuals of taste but most of the major retailers in California.

Martinez is most accommodating. Not only will he make rocks, he will customize them. Sometimes, he says, when he goes to the mountains of Yosemite, he'll look at a rock and think, "Boy, that looks like foam." These experiences "inspire me," he says. An artist by training, Martinez sometimes takes small rocks from Mount Tamalpais to use as models.

"We have a rock line that is very well priced," he says. "These are not the best rocks that we have, but they are the best rocks for an affordable price." You have more money, you get more rock.

Martinez knows anyone can go to the mountains, and anyone can find a rock. But moving rocks is cumbersome. Besides, depending on a customer's preference, Martinez can turn stone into "granite or sandstone or a ledge to stand on." Better go with foam, Martinez says. Do it his way, he says, and "you get to have what you want and where you want it."

His business is based not only on creativity, whimsy and art, but on the premise that copies are sometimes better and always cheaper than the real thing. A column smuggled out of Athens would probably cause a break in relations between Greece and the South of Market.

Martinez, 33, works at a long, concrete, gray desk that isn't concrete at all. The walls are pockmarked concrete, or appear to be.

For his commercial clients, Martinez lets the imagination flow. For the outdoorsy North Face, he built an eight-foot brook trout. For the posh Georgio shop, he designed an abalone shell you could meditate in. For Knotts Berry Farm, he made dinosaurs and rocks and mammoth leaf fossils. And for the Smithsonian Museum store, he built a pterodactyl. He's enlivened shopping malls with giant grasshoppers and eight-foot Bon Voyage life preservers.

Women's clothing designer Jessica McClintock is one of his most loyal clients. Under her Gunne Sax label, she designs dresses that are hopelessly romantic. He designs 12-foot columns, arches, walls and stones for her stores and her showroom in New York.

A trend spotter, Martinez sees movement in American taste. "We're not into high tech anymore," he said. "We're getting away from neon and moving into ancient ruins.

"Maybe we are starving for primitive art."

If it's primitive art you want, Martinez will produce it. You want Pompeiian motif, he says, you got it.

Flowers add color, beauty to wedding

From Staff Reports

Selecting flowers for your wedding is one of the most enjoyable aspects of wedding planning.

Flowers bring beauty and color to your ceremony, and with the tremendous variety of available flowers, the colors can, indeed, be stunning.

Keep in mind that certain flowers will cost less if they are in season but, of course, almost any flower can be available if you are willing to pay enough.

The following list of flowers and their special meanings can help you choose your wedding arrangement.

- Apple Blossoms — good fortune
- Bluebells — constancy
- Blue Violets — faithfulness
- Carnations — distinction
- Forget-me-nots — true love
- Gardenia — joy
- Lilies — purity and innocence
- Lily of the Valley — happiness
- Orange blossoms — purity and fertility
- Roses — love
- White daisies — innocence

Lifestyle policies

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle sections of The Midland Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within one month of the anniversary date.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons in Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted. The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo due to quality or content.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Course steers children away from violence

By CECELIA GOODNOW
Hearst News Service

Derrick accidentally breaks the librarian's cup when she isn't looking.

What should he do?

"He could go to the library teacher and tell her the truth," suggests Shantil.

Sonya suggests he just leave a note and not sign his name.

Ian has two ideas.

Derrick could apologize and offer to pay for the mug or, Ian suggests grinning, he could leave a note that says, "Arf, arf, arf."

These second- and third-graders are part of an experiment in Seattle to curb violence. The pilot program, called Second Step, operates on the assumption that today's playground bullies may be tomorrow's criminals.

Teacher Lynn Pruzan is perched on a stool by the lesson chart. She accepts the children's suggestions without judgment.

"We're getting all the possible solutions because we're brainstorming — the first step in problem-solving," she tells the class.

Pruzan runs Ian's "arf-arf" example through four tests to evaluate it as a possible solution: Is it safe? How does it make people feel? Is it fair? Does it work?

Leaving a note that says "arf, arf, arf," the class decides, would not be the best solution. Ian's first idea is better.

From here, the kids go on to learn the nitty-gritty of apologizing: arranging a time, telling what happened, saying you're sorry and offering to make amends.

THE DAY'S SESSION ends with an enthusiastic exercise in role-playing. Kids team up in pairs, huddle in whispers and wave their hands for a chance to act out their assigned morality plays, such as, "You forget to go over to a friend's house" or, "You break the chain on your friend's bike."

It sounds like a white-glove affair, but this lesson in responsibility has a more serious goal — steering kids away from violence. Students in this pilot program for grades one through three are learning to control their impulses, think clearly and put themselves in the other guy's shoes — abilities lacking in most violent offenders.

"We're starting young, because this is where kids go wrong," said curriculum designer Kathy Beland. Research shows that the pattern of adult violence begins to emerge as early as kindergarten to third grade, she adds.

Beland is director of research and development for the Seattle-based Committee for Children, a private, non-profit corporation specializing in abuse prevention.

Second Step is a companion program to Talking About Touching, a personal safety curriculum used by an estimated 1.5 million students around the country, from preschool through junior high. Talking About Touching tries to prevent kids from becoming victims of sexual and physical abuse; Second Step tries to keep them from becoming victimizers.

CONCERNED ABOUT GANGS and drugs and the use of weapons among elementary-age students, the Los Angeles school district plans to begin phasing in the Second Step program this fall.

"I think it's probably the only one of its kind in the nation," said Lorna Round, associate superintendent in the Los Angeles district.

Second Step teaches the kind of rudimentary social skills that kids used to learn at home. To start, children learn to recognize people's feelings by reading their facial expressions and drawing inferences about their situations. Children who can empathize with other people, the theory goes, are less likely to hurt them.

Next, students learn to be less impulsive through lessons on ignoring distractions, resisting temptation and telling the truth, to name a few.

Anger management is the final stage. Students learn to identify the situations that trigger their anger and use techniques such as deep breathing and counting backwards to head off aggressive responses.

Brainstorming and other problem-solving techniques help kids come up with healthy alternatives to punching and name-calling.

Although most teachers have enough work without teaching social skills, Pruzan said she doesn't mind the extra task.

"Kids simply don't have these skills," she said. "Nobody can do the job of teaching unless the climate in the school is one of cooperation."

Besides, Beland said, kids who learn to solve social problems tend to apply those skills to classroom work as well.

Response to the program so far has been good.

Pruzan said that kids who once had behavior problems are getting along much better in the classroom since they began Second Step. "There has been a real change."

UNFORTUNATELY, the six-week trial in her class is ending. Because of lack of money, the program is unlikely to be offered in Seattle's other schools next fall, except on a trial basis.

At The Little School, a private school in Bellevue, Wash., where Second Step was field tested, Steve Goldenberg, who teaches 6- and 7-year-olds is convinced it can have dramatic results.

"No question about it," he said. "This is a skill that kids need to be trained in. That's why I'm doing it – hoping to make a dent in the cycle of violence in society."

Television violence contributes to the problem, he said. And some kids are just too young to care much about other people's rights.

Quality of education improving at Prairie View A&M

PRAIRIE VIEW, Texas (AP) — Five years ago, nearly 20 percent of the student body at Prairie View A&M University was on academic probation, buildings were dilapidated and the library was in bad shape.

Administrators tried to improve conditions, but there was little money and little support from the state.

"The school was regarded as a court of last resort," said Elaine Adams, vice president for academic affairs, who came to the school in 1983. "There was a negative attitude among the students as well as the faculty."

Now, things have changed.

More than 17 multimillion-dollar construction projects have been completed. The Texas A&M University System, through a federally approved desegregation plan and endowment funds that until 1984 couldn't be used for Prairie View, has sunk $53 million into facilities.

Another $30 million in construction is in the works.

Enrollment has climbed from 4,495 in 1982 to 5,307 in the most recent semester. Between 1986 and 1987, the increase was nearly 18 percent, the highest at any Texas college or university.

Minority enrollment — at Prairie View that means white and Hispanic students — also is up with whites making up nearly 10 percent of the student body.

The changes at Prairie View are remarkable, observers say.

"It's a promise realized," said Kenneth Ashworth, state commissioner for higher education.

When Percy Pierre was named university president in 1983, the school had fallen on hard times.

Pierre, former dean of engineering at Howard University, and his staff launched an attack on several fronts, aided by the Texas plan, special legislative appropriations and a constitutional amendment giving Prairie View a share of money from the Permanent University Fund.

The Texas plan is an agreement between the state and the federal government to integrate state universities. A large part of it requires increased spending at Prairie View to upgrade facilities.

The PUF is a state endowment funded by oil and gas royalties from 2 million acres of West Texas land. Money from it had been earmarked exclusively for Texas A&M and the University of Texas until voters approved a constitutional amendment that gave Prairie View a share.

The school, established in 1878 as an agricultural and mechanical school for blacks, also has undertaken an extensive recruiting program, aimed at improving the quality of the student body.

Pierre also has lured more faculty with doctorates to the 1,440-acre Waller County campus. Of the 178 full-time faculty members, 66 percent have doctorates and nearly 34 percent have master's degrees.

Whites and Hispanics also have started attending Prairie View in greater numbers.

Get Into the Swing of Summer!

Kelley Dowdle, 3, (above) hangs on for dear life on the hand-to-hand bars. In the tire swing (right) Rudy Loya, 12, gets a big push from AdrianCarrasco, 8.

School's out. It's time to get in the swing of summer, and it's time for the children to get in the swing. At least that's what a lot of children have on their minds — swings, slides, monkey bars, merry-go-rounds, teetter-totters, jungle gyms and all the other playground equipment that is so much fun.

But not everyone can accommodate such a whirl-wind of entertainment equipment in their backyard — a situation that can be very frustrating for children and parents alike.

THAT'S WHERE the City of Midland's Parks and Recreation Department can help out. With playgrounds featured at over 25 of Midland's public city parks, there is bound to be one that will appeal to mom and dad as well as tots. Of course, the safety of children at these playgrounds is up to the parents, but each supplies the basic equipment, and sometimes more, for any youngster to have a good time.

"We are continually upgrading and expanding our facilities," said Chuck Swallow, PRD administrative assistant for Community Services. He added that if any equipment was in need of repair, that Midlanders should notify his department.

After a long morning at the playground, children may be ready to swing into a cool pool, but having a swimming pool in the backyard is probably even more far-fetched than having a full-scale playground.

Once again the PRD can help out. According to Swallow, the PRD maintains four public pools. Although swimming at the pools is not free, the cost is minimal and varies upon which pool you attend.

The pools are supervised by lifeguards and swimming classes are offered throughout the summer. Swimming class schedules are available by contacting the PRD.

Although there are many more parks in Midland, the following is a list of local parks which have playgrounds or swimming pools, their location (most by intersecting streets), and a list of any other amenities the park may have. For more information about other Midland parks or services provided by the PRD call 683-4281, extention 318.

J.P.BUTLER PARK: Located on the corner of Lindora and Sinclair, this park is contained in 5 acres and includes a playground, a pavilion, a picnic table and two benches.

E.P. COWDEN: The corner of Princeton and Maberry is the home of this 10 acre park hosting a playground and a picnic table.

DENNIS THE MENACE PARK: This 3.9 acre park is on the corner of South Garfield and Indiana and is a popular one. The park has a colorful array of playground equipment, 9 benches (many appropriately placed under shade trees), 4 picnic tables, restrooms, a fountain and a parking lot.

DOUG RUSSEL: Although this 5.7 acre park at 900 N. Midland Drive doesn't feature a playground, it does have a swimming pool. The pool opens everyday at 2 p.m., unless a special swimming event is taking place.

Swimming: All-around exercise

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Few human athletic endeavors are as beautiful as an accomplished swimmer gliding through the water, a study in grace and precision of movement.

For such people, swimming appears to come naturally.

For others of us, bullied into the deep end of a pool by a physical education teacher long ago, swimming is an ungainly struggle, a battle to breathe correctly and stroke efficiently.

Still, swimming for fitness has something to offer both groups. The naturals will find they can effortlessly stroke from one end of the pool to another, restrained only by their lack of aerobic conditioning. With some work, conditioning will come easily.

The strugglers will find they must work harder to perfect the technique and sustain the pace because there will be much wasted motion, particularly at first. But persistence will bear rich rewards of enhanced skills, better coordination and a new self-confidence in the water.

Vigorous swimming burns 660 calories an hour, as many as running at a speed of six miles an hour. It is among the best aerobic fitness activities.

Three hours a week of swimming, if sustained over weeks and months, will bring superb conditioning, in an aerobic sense, and in terms of muscular strength and flexibility.

There are few fitness activities that use so many of the body's muscles, provide a constant resistance against which the muscles must work and also produce a continuous gentle stretching of muscles and ligaments.

Swimming has a special bonus: the buoyancy of water. Aching knees and legs that take a pounding during running or aerobic dancing are supported by the water. Recreational athletes for whom pain made the pursuit of fitness a constant trial find themselves liberated.

Also, people who are overweight and out of shape will have an easier time turning their bodies around if they begin with swimming. The water will naturally support them and the knee and leg injuries that can crop up when someone overweight begins a serious terrestrial fitness program are not a threat.

Beginners should start slowly.

"Swimming in a pool is ideally suited to begin a fitness program," said John Troup, the physiologist who is director of sports medicine and science for U.S. Swimming, the national governing body for the sport.

Troup advises beginning with a 500-yard task, which is 20 lengths of a 25-yard pool.

In the first weeks, one might swim a length, stop and rest, swim another length and then walk a length. In Troup's plan, the eventual goal by the end of the sixth week is to be able to swim the 20 lengths without stopping.

Then concentrate on increasing speed and refining technique. As skills increase, mix strokes, using the crawl, backstroke and breaststroke.

After six weeks, even a poor swimmer who has persevered will find that his technique has improved significantly and that the level of fitness will be impressive.

Troup then recommends increasing the distance 10 percent a week until the total amount of swimming is about 45 minutes, three or four times a week.

Reaching this point is likely to take a new fitness swimmer several months, so the challenge alone should sustain the enthusiasm.

Eventually, however, fitness swimmers must cope with boredom. The scenery never varies, nor does the weather. There is no aerobic dance instructor urging you onward.

When boredom finally appears, it is time for interval training — short but fast timed swims with brief rests in between. Further conditioning of the body will result, boredom will be held at bay and swimming skills will inevitably be further honed.

Approaches to interval training vary from swimmer to swimmer. There are no set speeds or rest periods. The idea is to work against the clock, pushing the body to build endurance and aerobic capacity.

You might begin with 10 100-yard swims, or even 10 50-yard swims. Swim a lap at a fast pace and then rest 10 to 15 seconds. Next swim at your normal fitness pace for four to five minutes minutes. Now swim one fast lap again.

Rest for 15 seconds, and then swim another fast lap. Do 10 laps this way. Another approach might be to swim three 100-yard sets with 15-second rest periods after each, followed by a rest until you have recovered from the breathlessness. Then repeat the set, cutting the rest time, if possible.

Take your pulse as a gauge of how hard you are working. Pulse rates vary widely among individuals, but a rate in the area of 150 to 160 beats a minute would signify a demanding workout. Now swim the set again, decreasing the length of the rest periods slightly.

With swimming, the cues that tell how hard you are working are difficult to interpret.

Breathlessness may be somewhat harder to gauge because of the aquatic environment. You may not be able to tell whether you are working up a sweat because of the water's cooling effect. So you must learn to gauge how your body feels.

Again, a rate of about 150 would indicate a good workout. Avoid pushing so hard that you become exhausted.

Dallas service pairs children to camps

DALLAS (AP) — Getting a child off to summer camp usually is a simple process: Read a few pamphlets that promise all kinds of fun, mail off the check, pack the belongings and pray the child doesn't end up in a dark log cabin, alone on a bunk bed, homesick and crying.

Which is what can happen if a child is sent to the wrong camp — like a computer whiz shipped off to a sports camp.

"If you send a non-competitive child to a competitive camp, and they're picking teams and he's always picked last, it really does a lot to his ego. It's terrible," said Evie Hirsch, who founded Student Summers in Dallas three years ago.

Mrs. Hirsch, with partners Priscilla Sebel and Claire Greenberg, operates Student Summers as free service that tries to match children with the right summer camp. It receives a commission from the camps for which it finds summer placements. Student Summers maintains a file of more than 500 summer camps, programs and trips for students from age 7 to their early 20s. The company interviews families and makes referrals based on children's interests.

Student Summers does not limit its referrals to traditional log-cabin camps that feature hikes, swimming lessons and campfires. It has sent children to computer camps, to foreign-language camps and to weight-reduction camps. Students counseled by the camp-finding service have traveled to the Caribbean on a sailboat, to Africa and to China.

Student Summers also helps find camps for physically handicapped and learning-disabled children.

Investigating camps is too time-consuming and expensive for many parents, and some falsely assume that what works for one child will work for another, Mrs. Hirsch said. Some parents read only brochures, but those can be misleading, she said.

Mrs. Hirsch or her colleagues visit camps and programs while they are in session to check out the facilities and counselors. They talk to the children. They eat the food.

In its first year of operation, Students Summers placed 10 children; this year, the group is working with 500 families.

The cost of summer camps range from $250 per week for a traditional setting to more than $2,000 plus air fare for organized trips to Europe, said Mrs. Hirsch.

Summer camps offer diverse experiences

By KEVIN ANDERSON
Copley News Service

When you were a kid, summer camp meant horses to ride, a lake to swim in, laughter, new friends, games, singing and shenanigans.

Today's summer camps are even better.

Traditional woods-lake-horse camps still exist. But nowadays, many of these offer at least one fun, unusual activity or adventure.

Junior woodchucks can attend resident or day camps that target a special skill. They learn to play a musical instrument, sharpen their academic expertise, become confident around computers or perfect the way they perform at all kinds of sports.

Not all summer camps are exclusively for kids. Some offer adult programs that will tempt you back to camp — perhaps with your entire family in tow.

■ FINDING THE RIGHT CAMP — Consider your budget. Costs vary, but private resident camps average upward of $2,000 for sessions lasting six or more weeks. Day camps are considerably less expensive.

The American Camping Association is an organization that evaluates camps. In order for a camp to be accredited by the ACA, it must meet stringent requirements for health, safety, program development and camper-to-counselor ratios.

The ACA's "Parent's Guide" ($5.95) covers maps throughout the United States. To order the guide, contact the Publications Service of the American Camping Association, Bradford Woods, Martinsville, IN 46151.

Some of the best — and often least expensive — camps for adults, as well as children, are operated by community organizations. These include YMCAs, YWCAs and the Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts.

TRENDY YET TRADITIONAL — Gone are the days when children's postcards from camp reported little of interest except recovery from "dire rear."

Now kids send glowing reports of how they explored a ghost town, rode minibikes, branded cattle and learned video filmmaking — in addition to horseback riding, archery, swimming and canoeing.

Other non-traditional activities at traditional camps include photography, theater, guitar, golf, high adventure ropes courses, rock climbing, jazz dance, soccer, baseball, tennis, sailing, reading enrichment programs, riflery, jet skiing, farm tours, white-water rafting, mountaineering, branding (animals), mule packing and covered-wagon trips.

Many camps have facilities and programs for children who are asthmatic, blind, deaf, diabetic, epileptic, mobility-restricted or wheelchair-bound. "We ease them into mainstream activities," explains a camp director.

SPECIALTY CAMPS — This summer, open the world to your child in a whole new way. For example: At a West Coast science camp, children explore "comparative ecosystems" "adaptation" and "photosynthesis." When they're done, they understand their environment in terms of the "Six R's:" Respect, responsibility, reuse, recycle, reducing and reform.

Near NASA's Kennedy Space Center in Florida, anyone from 10 to 19 can attend U.S. Space Camp — a program that offers an in-depth look at space exploration. As a result, they're excited about studying science, math and technology.

At resorts throughout the United States and the Caribbean, boys and girls ages 10-15 attend financial camp. They learn how to manage money, read business journals and put together an investment portfolio.

Adults go to health spas; kids go to slim-down camps. "It helped to get away from home to learn new eating habits," says a happy 13-year-old. "At the end of the summer, I felt like a butterfly who finally came out of her cocoon."

Other specialty camps teach children to survive in the wilderness, perfect abilities in gymnastics (or football, wrestling, martial arts) and develop talents in the arts of painting, drama, dance or music.

ACADEMIC CAMPS — Some camps claim to raise grades and SAT scores.

"Kids learn how to break through their barriers by climbing ropes and breaking boards, and they carry forever that excitement into their schoolwork," says Eric Jensen, a co-director of Supercamp (a nationwide program).

"In the past, camps were either for outdoor fun, academic or personal growth. Now we're mixing all three."

"We teach kids that they are learning machines, and that learning is easy," educational psychologist Ann Nevin told the Wall Street Journal. "They learn how to memorize, strategies for test-taking and to gain confidence in themselves."

The experience is intense — usually 18 hours a day for 10 days — but it's popular. Thousands of teen-agers throughout the United States and from at least six foreign countries have gone through the program.

GROWN-UPS, TOO — Ask your travel agent about special camps for adults and families. You'll be surprised at the variety.

Many colleges and universities have vacation programs for all ages that combine learning with fun. Some will let you stay on campus in dormitories.

Learn while you luxuriate. There are resorts, such as the Keystone in Colorado, that offer programs geared to local flora and fauna. While you study meteorology and mountain wildlife, your kids explore plant and river ecology and the area's history and geology.

Lose weight (or avoid gaining it) and maintain a healthy regimen at any one of a variety of resorts and spas for sports and fitness enthusiasts.

The frustrated novelist inside you has no doubt yearned for a peaceful retreat. Writer's camps typically combine courses in writing fiction and non-fiction with recreation programs and night-owl campfire sessions.

There are camps just for seniors. Others are just for moms. Mother's Camp at Big Bear Lake, Calif., for example, features horse-drawn buggies, cozy fires, ski excursions and rooms furnished with antiques.

Automatic baby swing boon to parents

By NANCY MEANIX
Associated Press

ELVERSON, Pa. — Thirty years ago, David Saint — ex-sculptor, ex-rocket designer, ex-toaster maker — came up with the product for which mothers will remember him most: an automatic baby swing.

Saint, 71, a designer in the research and development department of Graco Metal Products, invented the Swyngomatic, a free-standing baby swing that now sells a half-million copies a year in six styles.

Saint's voice is low, his manner unassuming. His eyes twinkle above a long, thin beard that ranges from reddish-brown to white.

He demonstrated one of the original Swyngomatics, proud that it still works. Decals show an old-fashioned little girl swinging on an outdoor swing next to her dog.

The new logo is a tree swing that holds a brown teddy bear in bright red pants.

Both of his grandfathers were inventors, and Saint picked up the family tradition early. He designed a sailboat as a child and took alarm clocks and other toys apart to see what made them work.

When Saint mentioned to Bob Cone — a friend and the founder of Graco — that he stayed up almost all night wrestling with ideas, he was hired to make a new product.

"It was Rex (Thomas) who one day told me how he had watched his wife sitting outside for hours reading while she pushed the children on a swing," Saint said.

"Rex thought someone should invent an automatic baby swing, and we set to work on the design. In about a year, it was on the market."

Judging from the response of customers, it was just what parents wanted.

Saint studied full time for five years with noted Philadelphia animal sculptor Albert Laesslie, beginning in his last year at Lower Moreland High School in Huntington Valley. He has had no other formal training in engineering or design.

"Laesslie emphasized keeping a sense of proportion, planning the whole idea in my mind at the beginning," Saint said. "Designing mechanical ideas is very much the same."

Saint left sculpting, joined the Army, worked in rocket research and then designed toasters for Proctor-Silex. The first of nine patents he won was for the wire design that holds the bread away from the heating element.

After joining Graco, Saint headed the design department for several years and was the only model maker and the chief of quality control. He still works full time as a designer.

The company employs 400 at the plant and headquarters, where it manufactures swings, walkers, strollers, play yards and high chairs. Another plant is in California.

DEAR ABBY

Molester exposed as liar

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: We are writing to you on behalf of the Fifth Judicial District Attorney's Office, Roswell, N.M. — the office that convicted "No. 34661, Las Cruces, N.M." of being a child molester and an habitual offender.

You've been had, Abby, and had badly. The letter you published from 34661 was a pack of lies. His wife is alive. The girls who accused him of molesting them did not go to his wife, as he claimed, shortly before she "died" to confess that they made up the story, saying they got the idea from the TV movie, "When Touching Is a Crime." His victim is not a 15-year-old runaway, she's a 10-year-old girl, and he is not 66 years of age — he is 56.

No. 34661 is a member of a large fraternity, all right — the fraternity of child molesters, to whom you gave a national forum from which to disseminate his propaganda.

Child molestation cases are extremely difficult to prosecute. It is only after careful culling and corroboration that these cases ever reach a courtroom. I wonder how many future jurors will be influenced by the lies this convicted sex offender managed to spew forth from the cover of anonymity that your column granted him.

No. 34661 has been paroled and has returned to live in our community. The nightmare belongs to No. 34661's 10-year-old victim. She lived through the pain of his molestation and trial, and now she lives with the knowledge that he is free to roam the streets of her hometown. — THOMAS A. RUTLEDGE, DISTRICT ATTORNEY; GENANNE V. ANDERSON, SENIOR TRIAL PROSECUTOR; VERNON O.M. HENNING, SENIOR TRIAL PROSECUTOR; CHARLES J. PLATH, DEPUTY DISTRICT ATTORNEY; JAMES S. FARRIS, D.A. INVESTIGATOR

DEAR MR. RUTLEDGE: You say that I've been had, and had badly. That, sir, is an understatement. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: My name is Charles W. Smith, and I am the parole officer for No. 34661, whose letter you published.

Abby, that letter is filled with lies. When I confronted No. 34661 about these lies, he said, "I did not write any lies. Abby must have added them to my letter!"

I then contacted you, asking if you would send me the original letter, explaining my reasons for wanting it. You sent it promptly, and my suspicions were confirmed. Nothing was added to his letter. In fact, there were other fabrications that were not included — I presume due to space limitations.

For example, he claimed that he had never been in any kind of trouble before. Not true. He has a past history of child molestation and he has served a felony probation for forgery. The man is an accomplished liar.

In New Mexico, convicted child molesters are not required to accept counseling while incarcerated, but it is available if they want it. No. 34661 refused rehabilitation counseling, so now he is paroled, a free man, to do whatever he pleases. You can be assured that this man will be watched carefully — which is my job.

Finally, needless to say, Abby, you have my extreme gratitude for your cooperation in this matter. You will never know how much you have helped. — CHARLES W. SMITH, NEW MEXICO STATE PAROLE OFFICER

DEAR ABBY: I am planning my wedding and have engaged a photographer to take pictures. My problem is that I am blind in my right eye. I have no control over the movement — the eye "floats."

How can I take a nice wedding picture? — AUGUST BRIDE

DEAR BRIDE: Tell the photographer about your problem. It's possible for him to shoot the picture at an angle that will not show your "floating eye."

DEAR ABBY: For the last four or five years, my family has been plagued by a question that has started many arguments. Even though it's really a dumb question, my sister, brother, mother and I argue about the answer.

OK, here it is: Do chimpanzees have lips? Abby, for the sake of family peace, please give us an answer. — FAMILY FIGHT IN KENTUCKY

DEAR F.F. IN KY: My staff nearly went bananas researching the animal anatomy literature, and then I got the bright idea of phoning my friends at the San Diego Zoo.

The answer is: Yes, chimpanzees do have lips!

CONFIDENTIAL TO 'L' IN WILLIAMSPORT, PA.: No one said it better than George Bernard Shaw: "The great secret is not having bad manners or any other particular sort of manners, but having the same manners for all human souls."

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Number of homebound increasing

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

In our aging society, the number of homebound elderly persons is dramatically increasing. While an elderly person state of being homebound may be only temporary (although some may be long term), there are many simple, inexpensive ways to make a home safer and more comfortable for these individuals.

In fact, most of the equipment needed to make these adjustments may be purchased at a local hardware store. Some adjustments can be made with no cost. For special home care supplies and equipment, major drug and department stores have catalogs available.

In arranging the homebound person's environment, the following arrangements should be considered:

■ If a person is confined to the bed or spends much time in a particular chair, make sure a TV, radio and telephone are accessible. Within reach also should be books and magazines, a reading lamp, a call bell, a water pitcher and glass, and a calendar.

■ A colorful room with a lot of light and a nice view is pleasant surrounding for a bedridden patient.

■ A bathroom should be close by. Grab bars or hand rails should be accessible. These can be purchased and installed in hallways and in bathrooms next to the toilet and in the shower. Bars make walking and getting up and down much easier and safer. (Cost: Approximately $10-$35.)

■ Due to the danger of possible falls, shag carpets, slick floors and scatter rugs should be eliminated.

■ An escape plan should be prepared for the bedridden/homebound person in case of fire.

■ For those who are hard of hearing, install an amplifier on the phone and turn the phone buzzer to "loud."

■ Apply adhesive strips to the bathtub to prevent slipping. (Cost: Approximately $5.)

■ A bench can be placed in the bathtub for easy and safe access. (Cost: Approximately $18-$160 depending on style and material.)

■ Wrist-straps made of tape, velcro or cloth can be attached to walkers and canes to prevent dropping them.

■ Enlarge handles on knives, forks and spoons make handling the utensils easier for the for the weak or arthritic. Foam rubber, velcro, cloth or tape could be used.

■ Change door handles to a lever style rather than a knob to assist weak or arthritic patients. (Cost: Approximately $15.)

■ Plastic mattress covers help protect a bed if a person eats or bathes in bed or is incontinent. Add a mattress pad over the plastic for comfort and to avoid slipping.

At more expense, the following equipment can be obtained to make a homebound person more comfortable. These items may be rented or purchased through a hospital, medical supply store or pharmacy. Depending on the medical condition of the patient, Medicare of Medicaid may reimburse the patient for some of these items.

■ Electric or manual hospital bed to help the patient sit up and get in and out of bed. (Cost: Approximately $1,400 for new electric bed — rental costs vary.)

■ Side rails for a regular bed if a person needs help getting in and out of bed or needs something to hold on to when turning in the bed.

■ Water bed, air mattress or foam padding will help reduce the chance of bedsores for the bedridden patient.

■ Trapeze installed above the bed will provide the patient with more mobility while in bed. (Cost: $40-$300.)

■ Over bed table used for eating, reading and writing in bed. (Cost: $20-$175.)

■ Standard hospital type wheelchair. (Cost: $300-$800 — rental costs vary.)

■ Walker to increase safety and ease in walking alone. (Cost: $40-$60.)

While the homebound patient may require special equipment and supplies, for many individuals there are simple, inexpensive ways in which to make a home safer and more comfortable. The patient's condition should be assessed and the home environment planned accordingly.

Support group for fathers over 50

Copley News Service

If Floridian Vico Confino gets his way, first-time fathers over the age of 50 will come out of the closet. that's because the 55-year-old Confino, who will be a new dad this year, is starting a support group for over-50 fathers. He said first-time fathers over the age of 50 are shy.

Confino says many over-50 fathers wonder if society accepts them.

Or, they get hurt when people think their own kids are grandkids.

Confino says over-50 fathers also worry whether they can handle the financial commitment of a new baby while in their twilight years.

Families trying group vacations

By FRANNY HELLER ZORN
New York Times News Service

Last summer the Bellows and Willis families spent their August vacations together in Portugal. During the Christmas holiday, the Sangers and their three children skied in Colorado with another couple and their two children. And over the Easter break, the Lowys let each of their sons bring a friend to ski with them in Utah.

These days schools receive requests for calendars a year in advance so parents can coordinate their vacation schedules with those of their children. For many families, vacations are a rare opportunity to spend uninterrupted time together, in part because more mothers now work outside the home.

Since most families are not used to being together 24 hours a day, false expectations and forced intimacy can turn the most carefully planned vacation into a disaster. As a result, overworked parents looking for a rest are finding practical solutions to prevent the stress of everyday family life from following them onto the plane.

One way to decrease the possibility of tension in a family vacation is to increase the size of the family. Two of the most popular "extended family" vacations are those in which unrelated families with children the same age travel together, and those in which families invite their children's friends.

"This trend is peculiar to New York and urban areas," said Dr. Howard Weiss, a psychologist and family therapist who is director of research at the Ackerman Institute in New York. "Families lead complicated lives that are connected to work systems and social systems, which complicate planning a vacation.

VACATIONS UPROOT children and adults from these networks, so that the child is not used to having as much time with his or her parents. Twenty-four hours a day is stressful. Bringing another child along maintains closer ties to the familiar network."

At first, Mrs. Lowy, a New York actress, was leery of inviting her children's friends. She thought only unhappy families traveled that way; she and her husband, Thomas, do not like to travel without their sons, 13-year-old David and 16-year-old John. It was the rivalry that developed between the boys that changed her mind. "What I figured out," Mrs. Lowy said, "was that bringing friends broke up sibling dissension that can intensify on a vacation. Now I know that family vacations don't have to be torture sessions."

Keven and Jim Bellows agree that the key to a good vacation is keeping the children happy. Mrs. Bellows, the executive director of the Alcoholism Council of Greater New York, and her husband, the editorial director of Trintex, a videotex company, always try to bring a friend for their 15-year-old daughter, Justine. "Because we are both working," Mrs. Bellows said, "we feel guilty leaving her for a length of time. Having a pal makes the difference between a good or bad time for her." And it makes a difference for Mr. and Mrs. Bellows. "We get to be alone," Mrs. Bellows said. "It's our vacation, too."

Mrs. Lowy and Mrs. Bellows said the most delicate and awkward part of this kind of travel was handling finances. Economics differ widely among families. "I wouldn't ask someone to do something that I wouldn't do myself," Mrs. Lowy said. "And I'd feel obligated and uncomfortable if my son went away and I didn't pay anything."

BUT MRS. BELLOWS sees it another way. "When someone is in a different financial situation than we are," she said, "and they expect nothing in return, I am learning to say, 'thank you very much.'"

Sometimes these differences can present problems. One family was appalled when their daughter returned from a ski trip with tales of her host's lavish spending. A week later, they were even more shocked to get a bill for their daughter's share of the rented limousine taken from the airport in Denver to Aspen, about a four-hour trip.

Money is one thing Shelby and Chuck Warner of New York refuse to argue about. Mrs. Warner, an investment counselor, and her husband, a sales and marketing executive, often travel with another family when they vacation with their 10-year old son, Nick.

"There are some people who count every penny," Warner said. "You know the type. 'Who paid for the cab last night?' Well, we never go with them again."

Disciplining another family's children is a touchy issue. The Bellows faced the problem when they shared a house in Portugal last August with Mary and Jack Willis. "The problem was the behavioral expectations the Bellows had for our girls," said Mrs. Willis, a writer in New York. "They are disciplinarians. We thought they were overly prissy and they thought we were overly liberal."

WITH TENSIONS RISING, the four adults worked out a compromise. Each parent was put in charge for a 24-hour period. For Bellows, who was more of a stickler for rules, it was a perfect resolution. "It made it a lot easier for me," he said. "When it wasn't my day, it wasn't my problem."

Although they won't be vacationing together this summer, both couples said they would do it again. "Traveling with another family is like a marriage," Mrs. Willis said. "It can't work without maturity, a sense of humor and compromise."

Computer illiterates not alone

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

A person who is regarded as a "computer illiterate" is a lot like a woman who is pregnant for the first time. You are the only person in the world to experience this phenomenon. You are embarrassed to ask questions because everyone else but you knows the answer. And you never tell anyone your secret until it begins to show.

This inability to enter the 21st century has turned my entire life into a living lie. I laugh at computer jokes when I have no idea why. I nod with intelligence when people mention a new piece of software. When I'm asked if I have a word processor, I give a phony look of shock and say, "Does the pope work Sundays? Of course I have a word processor!" (It is 3 years old and I have no idea where the switch is.)

This has filled me with self-loathing and disgust. I am sickened by my dishonesty.

Enter John Allen Paulos, a mathematics professor at Temple University, who wrote an article on computer illiteracy. Here's a man with a doctorate in mathematics who writes, "Unless I spend an inordinate amount of time, I can't program anything on a computer more interesting than tic-tac-toe." He is far more disturbed by our "cultural" illiteracy than our computer shortcomings. "Ignorance of computers is not the sort of ignorance we should worry too much about. After all, a lot of people drive cars, but they don't know much about the internal combustion engines that drive them. They don't have to."

Thank you, Dr. Paulos, from all the "computer dead" of the world, people who don't have the courage to speak out. Say hallelujah! You have given me the strength to rise from the ashes of chips and disks to lay bare my weaknesses and to live my life computer-free as it was meant to be.

I can say publicly that I use paper clips because I cannot load a stapler. I still use carbon paper instead of a copier. I still use an IBM typewriter instead of a word processor. There is a portable radio on the seat of my car because I have never learned how to "program" the buttons on the car radio. Thank goodness someone has finally admitted that "Man does not live by Apple alone."

Dr. Paulos observed that teaching children anything beyond elementary skills on a computer is laughable when so many students are marginally literate in English.

I had someone turn our computer on for me the other day. Cautiously, I typed in the names of Thomas Hardy, Willa Cather, William Shakespeare and Mark Twain. It burped, "No filename found."

You see, they don't know anything.

Summer campers may 'catch' homesickness

By Dr. LAWRENCE KUTNER
New York Times News Service

Within a few weeks thousands of parents will receive a tear-stained letter or a telephone call from a small choked-up voice saying something like "I'm miserable. Everyone at camp hates me. I wanna go home!"

Yet not all children are homesick the first time they're away from their families for more than a few days. The way a child is prepared for a first summer at camp may be more important than the child's personality or even his age in determining whether he'll be homesick, say psychologists. In most cases a child's homesickness can be prevented or, at the very least, reduced if parents take a few simple steps in the weeks before camp starts.

"The more a child knows about a camp before he goes, the more likely he'll adjust well," said Dr. Bruce Muchnick, a psychologist in Philadelphia who has been consulting with summer camps for eleven years.

Find out the daily schedule from the camp director and go over it with the child. Knowing a few details of what to expect every day, like what time mail from home is delivered and that there is a campfire every night, gives the child a sense of control during his first few days at camp. This sense of control lowers the likelihood of homesickness.

SEEING SOME familiar faces on the first day away from home can ease the transition. Ask the camp director to have your child's counselor write him a letter and include a picture a week or two before the season begins. Arrange for get-togethers with nearby families whose children go to that camp.

A new camper who has never spent time in the country can have some very frightening fantasies about the hidden dangers of summer camp. To an 8-year-old, the woods of New Hampshire might be filled with dangereous wild animals. The small lake in the Poconos might harbor a distant relative of Jaws. Scary campfire stories the child may have heard from older children who've come back from camp or scouting trips don't help the situation. Ask the child about the animals and people he pictures living in the woods and lake, and reassure him without belittling his fears.

Although you should talk to the child about what homesickness might feel like, be sure to explain that it goes away after a day or two. "Talking about it can inoculate your child against becoming homesick," advised Dr. Hugh Leichtman, a clinical psychologist and camp director in Boston. Feelings of longing are much less disturbing if the child knows they're normal and don't mean something is wrong with him.

Examine your own feelings about your child's leaving for the summer. "Homesickness is as much a parent's problem as it is a child's problem," said Bob Ditter, a social worker and former camp director. "If the parents have concerns about the child going away, they send cues to the child. The child always wants to accommodate his parents' secret wishes." Let your child know that even though you'll miss him, you expect him to have a good time.

TALK TO YOUR CHILD about the successes he will have at camp, but be careful not to put pressure on him to perform to a certain standard. It's often better to say "Won't it be great when you can show us all around and introduce us to the people you've met" than "You'll be able to show us how you've learned to swim the lake and to ride a horse." If the child is nervous about meeting your expectations, he'll have much more trouble adjusting to camp.

As the departure day approaches, some children start saying they don't want to go to camp after all. Often a child's nervousness about leaving home may mask a larger concern the child is embarrassed or afraid to discuss unless a parent brings up the topic.

"One of the big issues for children is a fear that they will be humiliated or put down by people they don't know," said Ditter. Talk to the child about the successes he has had in other new situations like going to a new school or joining the Cub Scouts.

Two final techniques can help lower the likelihood or the severity of homesickness. Have a letter from you waiting for your child when he arrives at camp. In it, encourage him to try new things and remind him how often you'll write. Also, don't buy an all-new wardrobe for your child. The memories stored in an old pair of jeans or a T-shirt with a grape-juice stain from a family picnic can help a child face and overcome his fears.

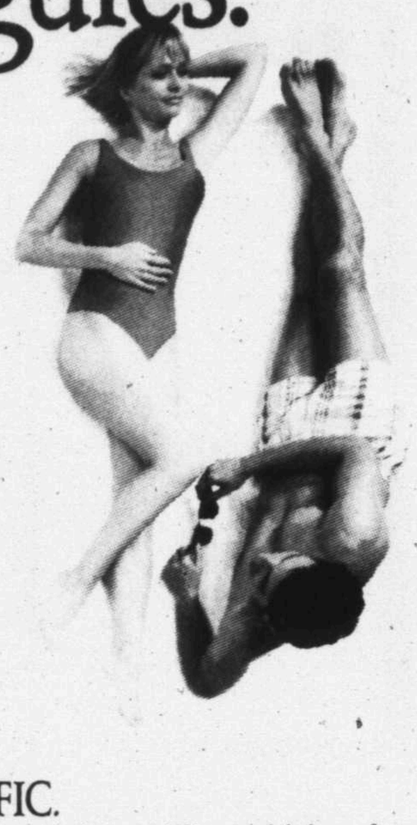

MOST CASES of homesickness start as soon as the child leaves for camp and disappear in a few days. The plaintive cries of "Come pick me up now!" are best met by telling your child that you know he's upset, and reassuring him that things will soon get better.

If the teary letters and phone calls last more than 10 days, say child psychologists, it may be a sign of a more serious problem than homesickness, or that the child is not ready for the stresses of sleep-away camp.

Retirement Living for People 62 Years and Older

The boom goes on

Franchising growth rate spectacular

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Look at the business signs on any main street of Midland. Scan the yellow pages. One thing becomes obvious: the number of familiar, franchised logos is on the increase.

To call franchising a growth industry would be a gross understatement. It is booming. In Midland, one can now find a franchised formula for almost any business category — from printing and hamburgers to windshield repair and maid service.

Megatrend-spotter John Naismith predicts that franchises, which now account for one-third of all retail sales will account for one-half by the year 2,000 — only 12 years down the road.

Leading the franchise boom are restaurants. The U.S. Department of Commerce estimates that the number of franchised restaurants will hit 91,000 by year end, up 13,000 from just two years ago. Of these 91,000, 64,000 will be owned by franchisees, whose restaurants will generate $41 billion in sales. Total sales for all franchised restaurants is $63 billion.

What about saturation? That does not seem to be the problem at this point. Arby's which opens about 200 new franchises each year, reports that it has identified 3,500 potential development sites throughout the nation.

The popularity of franchises continues to grow basically for security reasons.

Consumers like them because they know they will receive consistent service and product quality wherever they go. The independently-owned hamburger place on the corner may be good or bad; McDonald's is always McDonald's. Franchised stores with strict quality control take the gamble out of eating out, and today's mobile world likes it.

Franchise owners like the formula concept for the same reason — low risk. While 26 percent of all independent businesses failed last year, only 3.7 of all franchised units went out business, according to Dun & Bradstreet Corp.

Franchises are generally safe, but no franchise can protect you from a downturn as severe as we had in Midland, recalls one local franchise owner.

While some go into franchising as an investment form. For many more, franchises become avenues for new directions in life, providing a proven, relatively safe, business plan, with training and support.

"Support in training, merchandising, marketing, finance, and advertising is probably the best reason for owning a franchise," says Jack Hampton, who owns three Postal Instant Printing (PIP) stores in Midland and Odessa.

After 24 years in the retail business, Hampton decided to go into business for himself in the printing trade six years ago, even though he didn't know a thing about printing.

FRANCHISING

RED LIGHTS GREEN LIGHTS CAUTIONS

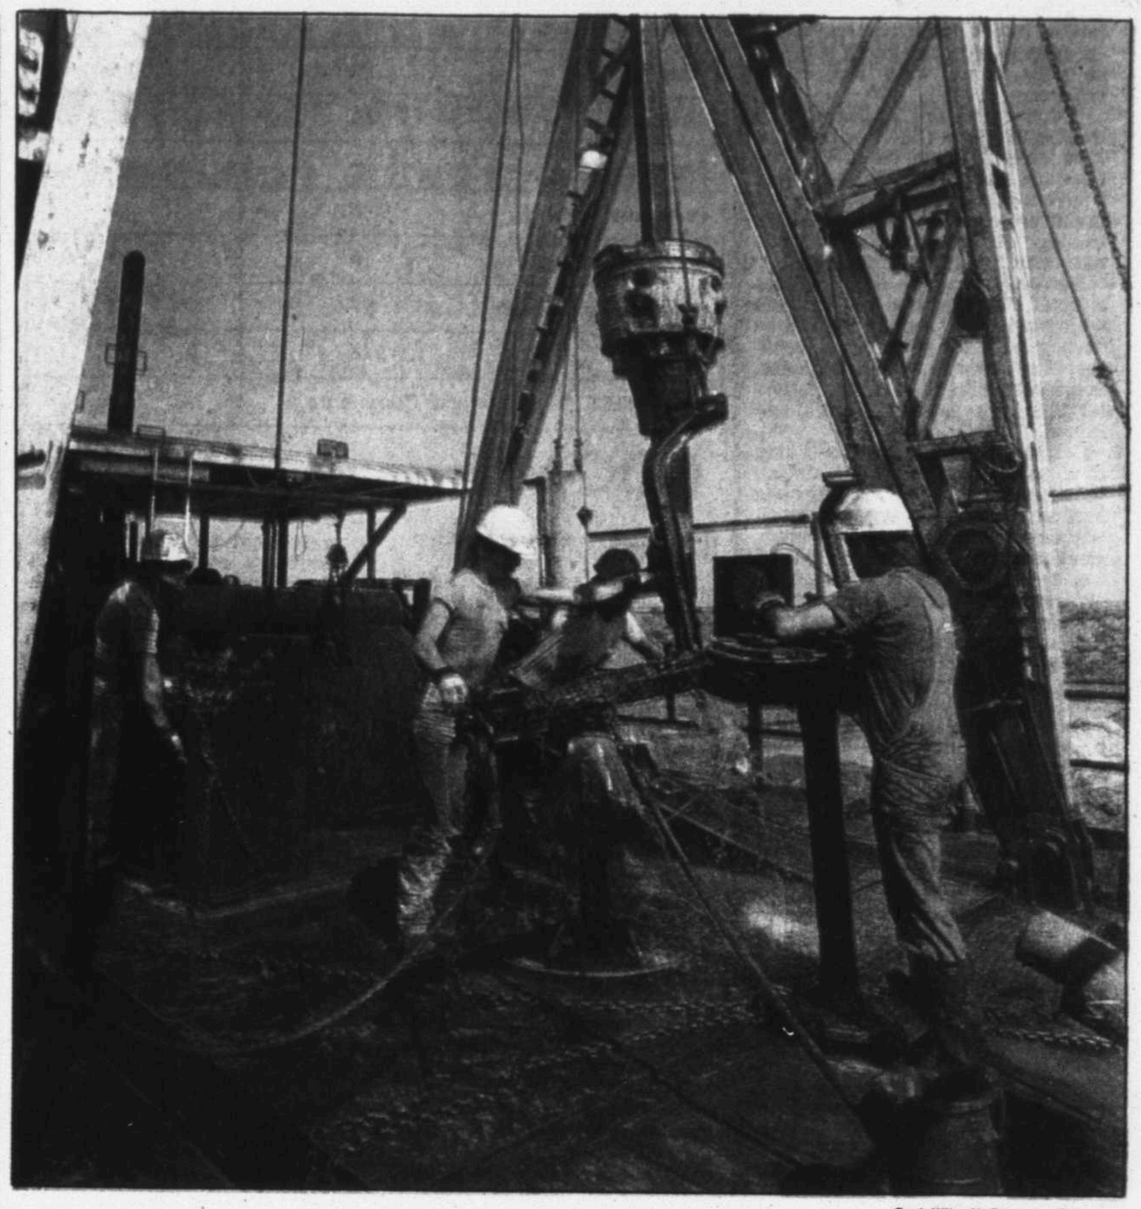

From Staff Reports

The temptation to own your own business is offset by a certain amount of risk. To reduce that risk here are points to ponder as you consider a role for yourself in the fastest growing segment of American retailing — franchising:

- KNOW THE HOT SPOTS — Fastest projected growth will be in franchising for food, recreation, entertainment and travel, construction and home services, business services and non-food retailing.
- KNOW THE ANTE — Franchising is not cheap. The required investment can range from a low of $9,000 in some service franchises to a high of $325,000 in the cast of a large restaurant chain. Most reputable franchisors have certain minimum assets and liquidity they expect of their franchises.
- MAKE SURE YOU HAVE THE RIGHT PERSONALITY — Franchising calls for a mix of individualist and team-player, somebody who doesn't mind doing the down-and-dirty detail work when needed, but who also values working with others in a lock-step pattern established by the franchisor.
- FRANCHISES REQUIRE TIME — If you don't want to devote full-time to your franchise, you had better have a partner who does, or a fine manager to do it for you. Paying those people, of course, will reduce your own share of the pie.
- BE CAREFUL IN SELECTING A FRANCHISE — A franchise is like a marriage, and should be done with great care. Here are a few basic tips for selection:

1. Make sure the product or service is something that motivates you.
2. Select a franchise organization you respect.
3. Look for the right fit. It should be a franchise that works with your personality, finances and lifestyle.
4. Have all details of a franchise agreement checked by a lawyer and accountant.
5. Talk to other franchise owners. Are they satisfied?

Drill bit manufacturers pleased by rising prices

From Staff and Wire Reports

Prices are firming at the cutting edge of the oil business.

Makers of drill bits say prices have climbed to levels not seen since the energy boom peaked in 1981, restoring profits eroded by oversupply, vicious discounting and the oil price crash of 1986.

Drill bits come in hundreds of different shapes, sizes and prices. The $500 million worldwide rock bit industry is dominated by four companies, who saw discounting lop as much as 40 percent off prices during 1986 and early 1987.

Late last year, prices improved as the nation's rig count, a barometer of drilling activity, moved up, industry officials say.

Many costs squeeze drillers

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Higher drill bit prices, while squeezing already thin margins even further, pale in comparison to other mounting costs, say local drilling contractors.

"Since the first of the year, costs of all kinds are up about $1 per foot," said Don Laxton, drilling superintendent for FWA Drilling Co. in Midland. Of that, higher bit costs are only about one-fourth, he said.

Added labor burden, insurance and taxes have all raised drilling contractors' cost of doing business. But highly competitive bidding for jobs keeps them from passing much, if any, of those costs on to operators, Laxton said.

Ban Green, vice president and West Texas manager for Grace Drilling Co. in Odessa, noted that the rates contractors are able to charge in established Permian Basin fields are down considerably over the last three to four years.

Multi-millionaire developer, teacher learns to read at 48

LOS ANGELES (AP) — John Corcoran graduated from high school, got a college degree, taught school and made millions in real estate development while living a deception. He couldn't read.

It all came undone when a drop in business forced him to fire the people who did his reading and return to the classroom, this time as a student.

"It's a national crisis. It can't be put on the back burner any longer," Corcoran said in a telephone interview Monday. "This isn't something like drugs or AIDS. This is something we can do something about."

Corcoran, a resident of Oceanside, came to the city over the weekend to promote Project Literacy L.A., an effort to "make other people aware of the slavery of illiteracy in America."

"There's a chaos that goes on when you're illiterate in America," he said. "There's a world out there that functions with the written word, and you don't know that. All you can do is orally communicate."

He learned to read after enrolling in the Carlsbad City Library Adult Learning Program in September 1986, studying and sounding out words 40 to 50 hours a week for more than 14 months.

On Sunday, Corcoran demonstrated his new skills by reading during services at the First Congregational Church of Los Angeles.

"There's a real desire in me to do everything I can to try to make other people aware of the slavery of illiteracy in America," he said. "We have a problem that we can solve. That means reform. It means change."

Corcoran, now 50, said he attended many schools as a youngster because his parents changed jobs often. He was never at one school long enough for teachers to realize he couldn't read.

"If you tell somebody you can't read, you're telling someone you're dumb," he said. "I couldn't really reach out for help."

To compensate, Corcoran said he made friends with people who had good vocabularies, and he used a lot of analogies and metaphors when he spoke. He said his wife Kathy was the only one who knew about his illiteracy.

He received a bachelor's degree in education from Texas Western College, now University of Texas, at El Paso, where he was the captain of the basketball team.

Corcoran won National Science Foundation grants to study in graduate schools at San Diego State, Louisiana State University and University of Santa Clara.

He said he avoided reading by misbehaving in grade school, and in high school he cheated on tests by preparing answers beforehand or refusing to turn in tests.

In college, he faked or cheated his way through general education courses, then chose classes where take-home tests were assigned, or accounting classes where tests involved numbers, which gave him no trouble.

As a teacher, he said he relied on students in his social studies, business and math classes to call roll and to read to the others.

"Everything was oral," he said. "I taught to them the modes I learned by."

Corcoran said he went into the real estate development business while he was teaching, and eventually became the owner of a multi-million-dollar company. Secretaries, accountants, bookkeepers and lawyers surrounded him and did all of his reading and writing.

Corcoran said the loss of his employees in 1986, combined with public service announcements he saw on television, prompted him to seek help.

Illiteracy is common among people at every level, and it may be more difficult for people with Corcoran's success to come forward and admit the problem, said Lynda Jones, program coordinator for the Carlsbad Library's adult learning program.

"In daily life they're probably dealing with more stress because they're dealing with people who don't know," she said. "They want to be sure that no one is going to see them."

Corcoran took part in a literacy symposium in Washington, D.C., and has made a dozen tips around the country promoting literacy, and said he is writing a book to tell his story.

Look who brought the ironing lady back

Pitts

A few decades ago — thanks to the miracle of modern petroleum chemistry — a lock was put on one of the world's biggest and most onerous sweat shops. Now — thanks to modern fashion tastes — that industry is in danger of being revived. It's the ironing industry.

Almost any day in Midland you can see them, Yuppie women in faded, tent-grade denim or tennis shorts, rushing about in BMWs, Saabs and Volvos, with the latest status symbol — a clothes basket — in the back seat.

A basket of clothes? Status symbol? Indeed. This is the generation, with its down-the-nose attitude toward polyester, that is largely responsible for bringing back the "ironing lady." A basket in the back seat says two things: I wear only cotton clothing — not that disgustingly, durable, economical, and practical polyester. And, I can afford to pay someone else to iron it for me.

This snobbishness is 180 degrees from the grateful attitude of the '60s. That was the decade womankind breathed a sigh of relief and fell in a worshipful pose at the feet of the god polyester. The dream of generations had finally come true.

Before the revolutionary fiber came along, rumors came and went about magical new chemicals that could be sprayed on clothes to remove wrinkles. Everyone was convinced that someday such a chemical would be invented, but in the end it was a magical thread made from oil that did the trick.

Blended with cotton, polyester clothing could be washed, thrown in a dryer, hung on a hanger ready to wear. The term has almost disappeared now, but then we called it wash-and-wear. Wrinkles literally fell out of clothing and creases were permanently installed. Not only did clothes become wrinkle-free, but they were suddenly cheaper and more durable.

The polyester industry was born. Since 1968 when records were first kept for polyester production, it has skyrocketed. Today the industry produces over 3.5 billion pounds of the petroleum fiber.

It was a modern miracle that completely altered lifestyles. Electric irons were put away (we lost ours). Ironing boards were no longer built into kitchen walls. Gas and electric dryers became a must-have appliance. And the ironing lady ads almost disappeared from the classified sections of newspapers and the bulletin boards in laundromats.

Millions of women (and a few men) were freed from the dreaded, mundane drudgery of spending hours each week rubbing a hot iron over cotton clothing.

My mother raised six boys in that time before polyester, wasting much of her life over a hot iron that evolved from a flat iron heated on a wood stove to an electric iron. Most of the ironing was for the family, but sometimes she "took-in" ironing from other people to help buy our school clothes. Talk to her today about "unfashionable" polyester and you may get "whupped" with a broom stick.

I don't know if the correlation can be established. But I find it curious that the feminist movement began about the time polyester found its way into blouses and skirts.

But now, several decades later. A fad-hungry generation, who has never stuck a wet finger to a hot iron, has "discovered" the glory of "100 percent natural cotton fiber." And America once again has its belly (or back if you will) to the ironing board.

One working lady reports that she spends 15 hours a week at the ironing board, and occasionally splurges on an ironing lady.

The giant step backward came so fast that it has produced a severe shortage of ironing ladies, who now enjoy almost the same status as French nannies and English butlers.

"I put an ad in the newspaper in January and now have had more business than I can handle. Most of the customers that came with the ad, have since referred me to their friends, and friends of friends," one ironing lady told me.

She for one doesn't mind the return to cotton, because with a flat rate of $8 per dozen, she sometimes earns up to $80 a day and is still able to stay home with her small children.

"I don't think the old image of an ironing lady in a shack with a cigarette hanging from her mouth applies any more," said the housewife. I have a friend who lives in one of the nicer areas of town and takes in ironing," she said. "She buys furniture with her ironing money."

Her customers, she adds, includes a lot of Volvo owners and mothers with teenagers. "I don't think they (teenagers) know how to iron, or either they're too busy," she explains. Some customers even bring polyester to be sprayed with starch and ironed.

Cotton has been around for a long time and served man well. Cotton grew wild in Mexico 8,000 years ago and was used by the Aztecs for textile purposes. It was cultivated in ancient Pakistan 5,000 years ago, and was brought to Europe by the army of Alexander the Great around 300 B.C. from Persia. The Persians had used it primarily as bindings for sandals and elephant harness, but in Europe, it was woven into clothing for the very rich.

Cotton's popularity opened world trade routes, established textile industries and put most of early America under the plow. In the South it "King Cotton."

No one faults cotton. It's society's fetish to make it wrinkle-free that has made it less than desirable.

Who knows how the custom of ironing originated? It could have been Mr. Herodius, a woman-hating designer, who wanted to make a fashion statement by pressing all the wrinkles out of his fall line of togas.

But whoever he was or however it got started, generations of women once heaped curses on the person who first foisted ironing on them. It is a hostility that is bound to repeat itself as those who have rediscovered fashionable, 100-percent pure, made-in-America, cotton fiber also rediscover the ironing board.

BOOM

"There was a CPA, advertising executive and school teacher in my training class. No one had experience in printing. It is the feeling of PIP that you can hire qualified printers. They were interested in businessmen," said Hampton.

For four Dallas Cowboy football players, looking for a life after football, a Kentucky Fried Chicken franchise was the ticket. Preston Pearson, Ed "Too Tall" Jones, Benny Barnes and Butch Johnson founded Imperial Foods Inc. in 1979 for the purpose of owning KFC franchises. The quartet of gridiron stars now have 11 KFC stores including Midland, Odessa, Sweetwater, Dallas and Corpus Christi and expect to have 13 by the end of next year.

"The best thing about a franchise," said Pearson, secretary-treasurer of Imperial, "is that you don't have to recreate the wheel. They have worked out the system and that's why they charge royalties. Individuals who buy franchises often make the mistake of not availing themselves of the knowledge and experience they pay for in a royalty, but not us we get our money's worth with our royalty fee."

He explained that the four teamed together to open the franchises because they were still busy with football at the time and thought four heads and eight hands would give them an edge in the business. He said they were not passive owners, but definitely hands-on owners of the franchise business.

For Loyd Garrett, a former driller for Sharp Drilling Co., the decision to go into a franchised business was more or less made for him when the oil patch went south. "I had to find something else to do," said Garrett.

After reading in the Reporter-Telegram that Rainbow International Carpet Dyeing and Cleaning had a franchise opportunity in Midland he made a call to Rainbow's corporate office in Waco, and provided with the names of six Rainbow franchise owners around the nation.

Said Garrett: "They all told me the same thing: that if I followed the system and did not deviate from it, I could succeed. That's all I do. I just follow the system. I bought a franchise that was doing $20,000 a year. Now, two years later, I expect to do $175,000."

He said two other drillers he worked with have since bought franchises in Vail and Aspen, Colorado and are very successful in those areas.

Garrett emphasized: "I would never consider going into another business without a franchise. The support is worth it. If I have a problem in any area of my business, I can call someone at corporate 24 hours a day and get it talked out. I feel secure."

One of the draw backs to franchising, however, is the lack of ability to "shoe string" it out of your garage. A sizable chunk of capital is usually required to cover start-up and operating costs, real estate and fees.

Garrett paid $30,000 for his franchise. But a prospective owner of an Arby's franchise is required to haves a net worth of $250,000 and $100,000 in liquid assets before he can be considered. He must also agree to an extensive training program.

Pearson said the football player-owners of 11 KFC franchises did not have to go through the extensive training, but hired a professional manager instead. "He has 14 years experience. We pay him an attractive salary and he has an equity position in one of the stores."

The franchising boom is on, and many will find a niche for themselves in a franchised business. But one should exercise extreme caution and good judgment before entering into a franchise agreement. "It's a lot like a marriage," says one franchise owner.

BITS

The biggest price jump came last November when Hughes Tool Co., the biggest player in the industry, rescinded a discount amounting to about 25 percent. Within four days, the other three major manufacturers followed suit, according to one drilling contractor.

The company's average bit now sells for about $3,000, said product manager Robin Robinson. For a typical 7⅞-in. button bit used in West Texas, the cost is about $3,700, said Ban Green, vice president and West Texas manager for Grace Drilling Co.

"There was an inadequate return in the business, and there was desire to improve results," said Jim Crandall, an oil services analyst for Salomon Brothers Inc. in New York. "Inventories of drill bits also were getting down to low levels.

"I think not only will the price hold at present levels, but I expect another increase this fall," said Crandall. "I would say 5-7 percent."

For those in the highly concentrated drill bit industry, the news is welcome.

"It's made life easier," says Roy Caldwell, president of Reed Tool Co., one of the four largest companies in the industry. "The good times aren't here yet, but it's better than it was."

"After 1986, everyone was cutting back to try to survive," said product manager Robinson of Hughes Tool, a subsidiary of Baker Hughes Inc. "We're in pretty good shape now."

Robinson said the company is back to its 1981 list price for many bits, up from discounts as high as 40 percent in 1986.

"We reported a profit for the first quarter, which was our first operating profit in three years," said Doug Rock, president of Smith Tool of Houston, another of the industry's four largest companies.

"At the beginning of 1987, our production was only 17 percent of capacity because we were drawing down inventory," Rock said.

Caldwell, saying that the few players in the industry watch each other "like hawks," would disclose only that the effect on profits at his company has been "substantial."

"Once discounting ends, it flows right down to the bottom line," Caldwell said. "We're not bleeding to death anymore."

"We believe most of the market has bottomed out, and bottomed out last year," said Herb Ryan, spokesman for Dresser Industries Inc., whose Security Division manufactures drill bits.

"The perception of the future is much better than it has been for a long time," said Ryan. "Most companies have downsized, and done what they could to remain major players."

The worldwide market for rock bits is about $500 million, Crandall says. Hughes holds about 37 percent of the market, followed by Smith with about 28 percent; Reed Tool Co., a division of Camco Inc., holds about 16 percent, and Dresser Industries Inc. of Dallas, with about 14 percent of the market.

For Art Dumont, president of Cactus Drilling Co. in Midland, the price increases have hurt, especially when the cost of drill bits can equal about 15 percent of the cost of a well.

"It's causing us difficulty; it's hurting," he said. "We're simply having to absorb the cost when we can ill afford it."

Cactus operates 30 drilling rigs in west Texas. Dumont said he and others have been working to find alternative suppliers of drill bits, such as smaller industry players like Walker-McDonald Manufacturing in Dallas.

Green of Grace Drilling said that in the "hard rock" country of West Texas bits can account for as much as 30 percent of costs.

"Lower up-front costs can sometimes be overshadowed by a lack of R&D, quality control and other support services from the smaller manufacturers," Green said.

"We have to look at a cost per foot basis and see if longer bit life of the higher priced bit can save a trip and lower total costs."

"We have a list price that is say, about 15 percent under those guys," said Byron Chitwood, general manager of Walker McDonald. "That has helped us gain market share."

Walker McDonald's 1986 suggested price for a common type of rock bit was between $1,650 and $1,850, but by late 1987, the suggested list price for the bits had risen to between $1,850 and $2,250.

Chitwood declined to say how much has flowed down the bottom line, other than saying that the company is profitable. Walker McDonald is a subsidiary of Masco Industries, an industrial conglomerate serving the automotive and energy industries, among others.

One contractor who does not begrudge bit makers their higher prices is Sherman Norton, president of Norton Drilling Co. in Lubbock.

"I'm glad they're able to do it. There ought to be somebody in the service sector of the business able to make a profit," said Norton.

Norton said competitive price pressures are keeping contractors from showing a profit, but added that most of the operators his company works for will allow the direct bit costs to be passed through.

Robinson said that while the industry did not appear to be having any trouble servicing buyers, shortages could materialize if the nation's rig count rises dramatically.

At its lowest, the rig count was 663. The number of working rigs peaked at 4,500 in December 1981.

"We've got about 900 rigs (working) now," Robinson said. "If we get up to 1,200 rigs by the end of October or November, we're going to have some problems getting to every customer."

COST

In comparing rates charged in eight older fields in the region last week with 1984-'85 levels, Green said what he found "doesn't look good." On average, rig rates in those fields are down about 18 percent, covering a range from 8 percent lower rates in the Denver City Field to a 35 percent rate drop in the Levelland Field, Green said.

On top of a 25 percent hike in Workers' Compensation insurance premiums and a "significant" increase in quarterly unemployment insurance taxes, the most "unbelievable fiscal burden is from the 15.1-cent per gallon federal diesel fuel tax," said Sherman Norton, president of Lubbock-based Norton Drilling Co.

Norton estimates that the diesel tax will add at least a $250,000 burden to the cash flow of his 13-rig operation. "And it could be double that," he added.

Collections of the diesel tax began April 1, and oilfield contractors, farmers and other users who are able to prove off-road use will be able to apply for refunds at the end of the year.

"But until we've gone the the process once, we can't be sure what all is going to be involved," said one contractor.

While rapidly escalating taxes and insurance premiums affect contractors around the state to much the same extent, higher bit costs may be having a disparate impact on Permian Basin drillers.

In West Texas, bits can account for as much as 30 percent of costs, said Green of Oklahoma City-based Grace. That compares to about 10-12 percent of the total in "softer" rock areas such as the Texas Gulf Coast and Louisiana.

With discounts — once as large as 40 percent — vanished and more price increases predicted, the 30 percent figure may keep growing.

When rig counts slip, as they have in the Permian Basin — from 137 to 123 over a four-week period — contractors feel added competitive pressures to keep rigs working and avoid stacking them, Green said.

"We don't like to face having to put 15 people out of work when a rig is stacked. Plus it's a very expensive proposition to stack and unstack equipment," he said.

ECONOMY

Economic pessimism growing

By MERETE MCDONALD
Copley News Service

A majority of Americans believe the economy is at a key crossroads and one-third of them express pessimism about their personal economic outlook, feeling that the American dream of financial independence is impossible to achieve.

According to a poll of 1,008 Americans released recently by the International Association for Financial Planning, the young emerging affluent who earn between $50,000 and $79,999 annually — Yuppies — are the most nervous of all. That does not surprise savvy observers, who feel the young professionals got bruised the worst during the Oct. 19 stock market cataclysm.

Robert Hewitt Jr., chairman-elect of the association, said the crossroads of confusion is built on fears of a recession or depression created by the 1987 stock market crash, current fears of inflation, the complications of the 1986 Tax Reform Act, and public concern about the national budget and trade deficits.

"People are seeing a lot of dark clouds robscuringp clear vision ahead," Hewitt said. "They are not being able to see clearly because of all this confusion."

According to the survey, Americans are feeling down about their financial prospects because of major economic and household concerns such as the national budget, trade deficit, paying monthly bills and taxes. Inflation and taxes are back as major long-term financial fears, especially among Yuppies.

Hewitt said the concern about inflation is justified because the cost of living will rise at the end of this year.

Higher-income Americans, those who have annual incomes of more than $50,000, included paying for their children's education as a top concern.

Among all Americans, 50 percent more than last year said inflation and the cost of living were major financial household concerns. These concerns more than doubled among the higher-income group.

"Their income is not keeping up with most of their expenses," Hewitt said. "The cost of education and retirement keeps spiraling because of inflation."

The two top financial goals regardless of income are retirement and providing for children's education. Only about one in four polled were not concerned about reaching long-term goals such as retirement.

Those polled also stated that instability of the economy and stock market fluctuations foretell potential economic problems such as recession, depression or inflation.

However, market fluctuations did not cause people to reduce their savings and investments, IAFP chairman Larry Carroll said in a summary with the survey.

Citing primarily the sharp fluctuations in the financial markets in 1987, 39 percent of those polled said that, compared to a few years ago, it is harder now to pay living expenses and have money left over.

Business Council draws 6,000

AUSTIN (AP) — More than 6,000 Texas taxpayers participated in 12 regional meetings of the Texas Business Council, according to Commissioner Mary Scott Nabers of the Texas Employment Commission.

The series of meetings, which began in Corpus Christi and ended in Midland, provided a forum for taxpayers on such issues as workers compensation rates, unemployment insurance taxes, economic development and job creation.

Agencies participating in the council include the Employment Commission, Department of Commerce, Industrial Accident Board, State Treasury, Department of Agriculture and State Board of Insurance.

"This interaction between government and taxpayers has opened channels and improved communication between Austin and the rest of Texas. With a state as large as this and needs as great as they are now, we saw a real need to get decisionmakers and taxpayers together," Ms. Nabers said.

A second series of meetings will begin Sept. 8, she said.

Basin rig count shows gain

From Staff Reports

Both the U.S. and Permian Basin rig counts continue to fluctuate, with the U.S. count showing a loss and the Basin count showing a gain.

According to Baker Hughes of Houston, the U.S. count dropped seven to stand at 898 while the Basin count rose eight to stand at 131.

Lea County, N.M. continues its reign as the most active county in the Permian Basin, with 21 rigs at work this week. Next is Andrews County with 15, followed by Gaines and Yoakum counties with 10 each. Midland County dropped one to total three this week.

Rig utilization — the percentage of available rigs being used — was mixed this week, with the U.S. percentage holding steady at 21.7 percent, and the Basin percentage dropping to 25.9 percent.

Among major oil producing states, Oklahoma lost five rigs, California lost four and Colorado's count was down by three. Texas, Michigan and Wyoming each lost two rigs, while Ohio lost one.

Kansas gained four rigs and Louisiana's count increased by three. New Mexico, Pennsylvania and North Dakota each gained one rig.

News of major oil discovery in Brazil too early

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — When President Jose Sarney announced a major oil discovery on the Amazon River last week, the news touched off an epidemic of "oil fever" in Brazil. But the reports were premature.

There is no oil being produced in the field, the state oil company Petrobras said last week.

"There was a certain euphoria in the government, but we have nothing concrete yet. The existence of a major field is still a hypothesis," Petrobras spokesman Carlos Pinto told The Associated Press.

"We have signs of oil, and the geological formation is similar to that of the North Sea. But there haven't been any tests yet, and we can't even say if the strike is commercial."

The discovery was made by the Texaco Exploration Brazil Co., a subsidiary of the U.S. oil company, drilling on Marajo Island, at the mouth of the Amazon River 2,200 miles northwest of Rio.

In late May, an exploratory well in a jungle clearing hit oil-impregnated rock at a depth of 18,100 feet just as technicians were about to give up on the site as a dry hole.

On May 31, Sarney went on nationwide television to announce the discovery of "a region as rich in oil as the North Sea." With cameras rolling, the president telephoned a Petrobras geologist in Marajo to congratulate him on "this historic event."

Texaco issued a statement saying it was "too early to evaluate the significance of this discovery."

If the Marajo strike is found to be commercial, Texaco will receive 35 percent of the income from sale of the oil for 15 years; after paying 25 percent Brazilian income tax, Pinto said.

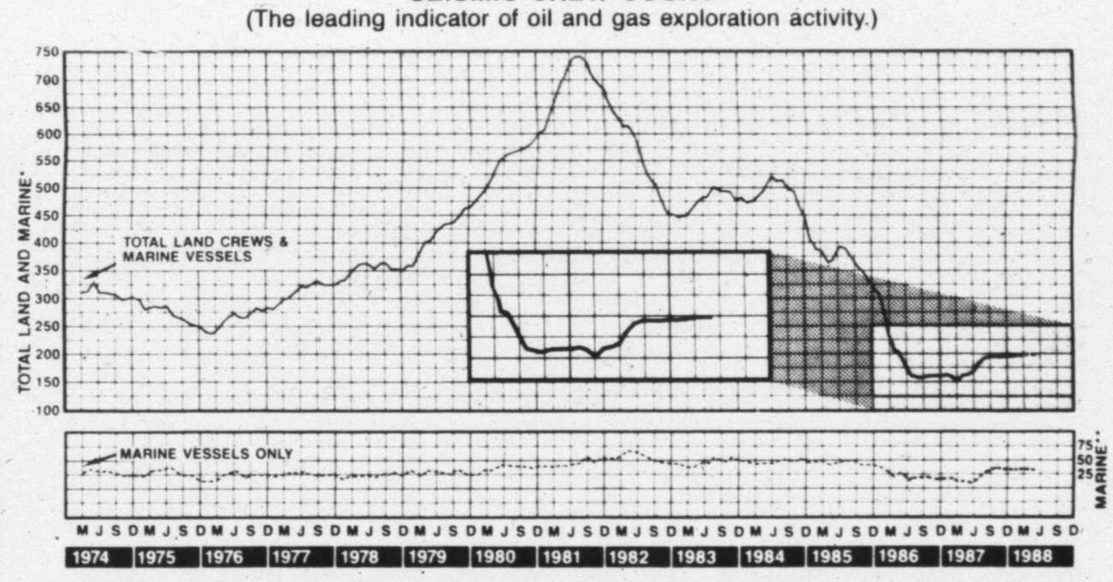

The report and rumors of a super oil field have rekindled a decades-old dream of oil self-sufficiency in this South American country.

Brazil is bigger than the continental United States but traditionally was an oil importer. Still, many Brazilians believed there had to be petroleum somewhere in the mostly unexplored interior.

In the 1970s, Brazil was hit hard by the OPEC oil crisis, which sent petroleum import bills soaring and was widely blamed for raising inflation and the foreign debt, now at $121 billion.

SEISMIC CREW COUNT

(The leading indicator of oil and gas exploration activity.)

Seismic count decreases

During May, the number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and U.S. waters fell, according to the Society of Exploration Geophysicists. The SEG found that the land crew total fell three and the marine crew total rose one, for a net decrease of two.

Next administration will have final say on offshore Northwest lease sale

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interior Department has no intention of delaying or withdrawing plans for offshore oil and gas drilling leases off the Washington and Oregon coasts as it has for northern California, a department spokesman said Wednesday.

But the spokesman, Tom DeRocco, said the next administration would have the final say on whether to proceed with leasing off the Pacific Northwest coast.

"It would be inappropriate for this administration to preclude any options of the next administration," DeRocco said.

In a strongly worded statement released Tuesday, Washington Gov. Booth Gardner demanded that the Northwest coast lease sales be canceled, calling the Interior Department's plan "ill-conceived and ill-timed."

Oregon Gov. Neil Goldschmidt and Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus, a former interior secretary, have also objected to including the Northwest's outer continental shelf in the department's leasing program without protection of sensitive environmental areas.

DeRocco said the department is well aware of the opposition in the Northwest, but said the lease sales aren't scheduled until the spring of 1992 while the northern California sales were planned for early next year.

"We feel it would be premature to make any judgement about withdrawing the Washington and Oregon sales at this time," he said. "They are scheduled in such a way that the next administration will make the decision on whether to go forward."

Amoco, Exxon top producers during 1987

AUSTIN (AP) — Amoco and Exxon were the top oil and gas producers, respectively, in Texas during the 12 months ending March 31, according to statistics compiled by the Texas Railroad Commission.

Amoco led in oil with average daily production of 197,621 barrels, which was 10.6 percent of the total oil produced in Texas, and Exxon was second with 167,453 barrels a day.

Exxon was the top gas producer, averaging 961,601 Mcf (thousand cubic feet) per day, which represented 8.5 percent of total state production, and Mobil was second, averaging 650,309 Mcf.

Cookware maven: Never take no for an answer

By KATHLEEN MYLER
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON (AP) — Heida Thurlow spreads a simple gospel among employees of her Houston cookware company.

"I teach them not to accept no for an answer," she says. "It's not true. It can be done."

Perseverance is the primary reason Mrs. Thurlow's Chantal cookware commands a presence in some of the best-equipped kitchens in the country. Her pots and pans are also the cookware of choice in 12 television show kitchens, including those of "The Golden Girls" and "Cagney and Lacey."

Mrs. Thurlow, 43, is president of Lentrade Inc., maker of a colorful line of enamel-on-steel cookware that competes with the finest brands offered at such stores as Neiman-Marcus, Foley's, Macy's, Williams-Sonoma, Bayliwix, Bering Home Center and even Harrod's in London. Mrs. Thurlow named the line Chantal in homage to her role model, Coco Chanel, "since she was the first woman to fight her way into the design world, and I am the first woman to run a cookware company."

As strange as it seems, given the fact that the majority of sales in the $2.5 billion-dollar housewares industry are to women, Mrs. Thurlow remains the only female owner of a company that makes pots and pans.

She was honored last year as one of the first five Women of Enterprise recognized by Avon Products and the Small Business Administration. By year end, 1987, her business had shown a 35 percent increase in sales volume to $5 million. Mrs. Thurlow expects Lentrade to show similar sales this year, despite the difficulties of dealing with changes in department store ownerships and a weak dollar in the overseas markets where she buys her cookware components.

Her success was no overnight matter, however. "It took many years of development. Many thoughts, and many defeats," she recalls.

Mrs. Thurlow moved to Houston from her native Essen, Germany, to marry a Texas steel importer in 1970, leaving behind a career in sales of refinery materials to German steel mills. Once settled in Texas, she dabbled in importing — selling handpainted dinnerware and clay baking pots.

With the birth of her first daughter, Natasha, in 1971, Mrs. Thurlow decided that developing her own company would give her the flexibility she wanted and permit her to spend time with her children. At the same time, as an avid cook, she was growing disgruntled with the quality of pots and pans she found here.

"The cookware I found was either very functional, but very masculine and heavy, or very attractive, but not very practical. The handles would get hot, or there weren't enough sizes and variety of shapes."

Mrs. Thurlow put her knowledge as a mechanical engineer to work with a German enameling firm to develop the now distinctive Chantal line. To help pay the rent on a small office with a part-time secretary, she spent every weekend at Houston flea markets, hawking thousands of clay baking pots she'd been stuck with when the German exporter went belly-up.

It wasn't until 1979 that Mrs. Thurlow finally brought her first product to the market. She introduced her covered oval roaster (featuring offset handles so that it can be easily grasped from either end) at a Chicago housewares show.

AP LaserPhoto

Houstonian Heida Thurlow's top-drawer cookware not only graces the shelves of top retailers such as Neiman-Marcus and Harrod's but also the sets of The Golden Girls, Cagney & Lacey and 10 other television shows.

Hardly anyone noticed.

"I was in this tiny booth between huge companies," she said. "The first day, no one stopped at my booth. So that evening, I went out to one of the fancy shops on Michigan avenue and bought an outrageous hat."

Back at her booth the next day, the plumed chapeau grabbed attention. Buyers stopped to comment on her hat, and she'd say, "Why don't you look at my cookware, too?"

Among those she hooked by her subtle lure was Chuck Williams of Williams-Sonoma. "He liked my hat, and he liked my roaster," Mrs. Thurlow said. And his stores and catalog have been carrying her line ever since.

"But I ended up forever after having to come to the shows wearing a hat," she added, laughing. As a matter of fact, she has cultivated the hatted image for all her public appearances. Her collection now includes 52 of them. Mrs. Thurlow apologized when a photographer arrived at her office for seeming out of character. "I don't wear hats at the office," she said.

With a major distributor signed, Mrs. Thurlow began a rapid expansion of the Chantal line to include stock pots, skillets, steamers, casseroles, saucepans and teakettles. Most recently, Lentrade has added a stainless steel line of cookware being distributed, on a trial basis, through specialty stores only. An eight-piece set of the Chantal enameled cookware retails for about $250. The stainless steel pots and pans are priced from about $45 to $200 each.

Each of the new products featured two more innovations in the high-priced cookware market — glass lids, so the cook can see what's going on in the pot, and stay-cool stainless steel handles.

Adding the stainless steel handles to an enamel pot took some more not-taking-no-for-an-answer. The engineers at Mrs. Thurlow's German factory told her it couldn't be done. "Nonsense," she said, and sat down to design the attachment mechanism — including a simple, insulating air pocket between the pot and handle that keeps the handle from getting hot.

Mrs. Thurlow was amazed, when she won a patent on the handle design, that no one before her had thought of it.

To build the handles she turned to a Scandinavian manufacturer. For the glass lids, she turned to a Japanese firm, expanding her network of suppliers to two continents. At the same time, Mrs. Thurlow designed the lid handles to fit through each pot or skillet handle so that the pieces may be hung together from a rack.

The pots and pans are put together at Lentrade's 22,000-square-foot headquarters on North West Belt, where warehouse products manager Jerry Barnes oversees assembly and packing for shipments throughout the United States and back overseas again. "We have even sold the teapot to Japan, which I think is a tremendous accomplishment — selling teapots to the Japanese," Mrs. Thurlow said.

Although her schedule now includes frequent travel around the world, Mrs. Thurlow still makes an effort to spend time with her children, as well as a stepson from her second marriage.

Her office is filled with pictures of her family and a huge, framed collection of her children's early artwork hangs on the wall near her desk.

Lightened load keeps Panhandle oilfield service company afloat

By DANNY BOYD

PAMPA, Texas (AP) — With the oil price downturn of 1982 and the subsequent price collapse of 1985-86, one of the hardest hit sectors of the petroleum industry was the oilfield services division.

But Service Fracturing Co. — SERFCO — has weathered the storm of stagnant oil and gas exploration efforts and heavy discounting by large rivals, while slashing the number of its operating divisions by one half and cutting the company's workforce by more than that during 1986, said Jerry Guinn, SERFCO president and chairman of the board.

"We started Jan. 1, 1986, with 242 employees and 10 operating districts," Guinn said from the firm's corporate headquarters on Texas Highway 152 in Pampa. "Jan. 1, 1987, we had 76 employees — that's down about 70 percent — and we had five operating districts."

The company's workforce now numbers 120.

SERFCO's plight mirrored that of the services industry, an industry which chemically treats newly drilled and existing oil and gas wells to make them produce more efficiently.

Oilfield service giant Halliburton Co. cut its total workforce from a high in 1981 of 115,000 to its current number of 48,000, and the crash in oil prices and slowdown in demand for oilfield services helped lead Eddie Chiles and his Western Co. to file for Chapter 11 protection in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Fort Worth on Feb. 2.

About 60 percent of SERFCO's fleet of service trucks and equipment were idle assets, parked in SERFCO's Pampa yard, during the height of the slowdown, Guinn said, and the firm operated with a negative cash flow for four quarters during the period.

"We had to go get money somewhere to live through it, but we did get that turned around in the June quarter of last year and showed the first positive working capital," he said.

April marked 15 years of performance for SERFCO, a company founded in Pampa when 28 independent oil and gas producers purchased the original stock on $250,000 capitalization. The firm opened an operating division in Perryton in 1977 and purchased a small service company in eastern Oklahoma in 1979, which led to an expansion of three districts there in 1980-81.

SERFCO expanded its operations in Kansas with a divison in Liberal during the same period. In 1982, SERFCO purchased Mercury Fracturing Co. in Fort Morgan, Colo., and opened an operating division in Brownfield.

In 1984, the company expanded its operations in the Permian Basin by opening an Odessa division. In 1986, SERFCO closed the Odessa division amid intensive competition and price-cutting, Guinn said.

"Where we had to compete with that on a regular basis, we just backed out. Odessa was atrocious," Guinn said. "From December (1985) and January, February, March of '86, you didn't get anything that was above breakeven. By the end of February it was less than what the cost of the materials you sold were, and we just shut it down. The finest facility SERFCO owns is in Odessa, and it's idle, it's just sitting there empty."

But what's not idle any more is 60 percent of SERFCO's fleet of service trucks. With the closing of the Odessa operation and subsequent closings in Oklahoma and Kansas, the company sold off 1979 model and older trucks, consolidated division operations and climbed back to black revenues and achieved a healthier debt-to-equity ratio.

Despite weakened industry conditions, only 8 percent of the firm's equity is tied up in debt, Guinn said, which is down from the highest debt-to-equity ratio of 55 percent.

SERFCO's current assets are worth 334 times the company's liabilities, he added.

The firm re-opened the Liberal division last year as well as a division in Pratt, Kan. The two expansions resulted from a jump in drilling activity when the Kansas Corporation Commission began to allow infill drilling of the state's 640-acre gas well spacings in the Kansas Hugoton Field, Guinn said.

SERFCO, now has seven operating districts: the Kansas operations; Fort Morgan, Colo.; Woodward, Okla.; Brownfield; Perryton; and Pampa.

"Right now our Pampa district is as slow as it has been even in the bottom of the 1986 downturn," Guinn said, citing uncertainty about the Texas Railroad Commission's future actions on Panhandle Field rules as the reason for exploration inactivity.

SERFCO, like all service companies, is in a long-term recovery posture, said Jerry O'Rear, an investment broker with A.G. Edwards & Sons Inc. in Amarillo.

From March 1987 to March 1988 — SERFCO's fiscal year 1988 — the company averaged a loss of 41 cents per share on 2,890,000 shares outstanding, an improvement over losses per share of $2.86 in 1986 and $1.75 in 1987, O'Rear said.

A.G. Edwards & Sons predicts that an increase in drilling activity by 10 percent this year — caused by stabilizing oil prices — will have obvious benefits for SERFCO and other service companies.

Oil slump puts companies in flight

By BRUCE NICHOLS

HOUSTON (AP) — When failed rocket seals turned out to be the cause of the space shuttle Challenger disaster in 1986, Ed Fisher and others in the oil field industry sat up and took notice.

"They were talking about O-ring problems. We sat around here and wondered who'd know more about O-rings than we do," said Fisher, executive vice president of Houston-based Cameron Offshore Engineering Inc.

"We contacted NASA and said 'we'd like to work with you if possible.' They were very open to us," Fisher said.

Since then, Cameron Offshore has done several pieces of work for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration projects, including producing a portable seal-testing unit for solid rockets, Fisher said.

Reaching out to the aerospace industry has become a trend in the oil field in recent years.

When the oil industry was booming in the 1970s and the early 1980s, oilfield-equipment companies were too busy to promote a link between aerospace and oilfield technology. But with oil in a slump since 1982, they have been looking for opportunity, officials said.

"We're not going to get out of the oilfield business, but we want to get further involved in aerospace," Fisher said.

The list of Houston companies doing aerospace subcontracting is growing. Among companies involved are:

■ Cameron Forge Co., another division of Cameron Iron Works, has been making aircraft engine components since the early 1960s and has seen its business grow in recent years.

■ Brown & Root Inc., the oilfield construction giant, has a $100,000 subcontract with McDonnell Douglas Astronautics Co. to help plan a proposed offshore platform launching system for Air Force rockets.

■ Thomas Instrument & Machine Co., which makes oilwell tools, is making rocket casings and cargo loading rails for airplanes.

■ Reflange Inc. is making high-pressure, high-temperature pipe connectors for aerospace facilities that are similar to the connectors it makes for petrochemical plants.

■ Bowen Tools Inc., another oilfield toolmaker, has made ground-handling equipment for satellites and rockets and is involved in other ongoing projects.

■ Vetco-Gray Inc., a subsidiary of Baker Hughes Inc., has applied its oilfield seal and joint experience to develop a new joint design that may be used on future solid rockets for the shuttle.

In several cases, companies already had an oil-stained boot inside the hangar door or on the launch pad. Vetco-Gray had made joints and seals used in pipes at the Vandenberg Air Force Base launch complex in California.

But becoming involved in aerospace work hasn't always been easy as picking up the telephone and calling NASA.

Petroleum equipment companies have had to overcome a long-standing idea in aerospace circles that the oilfield industry is not sophisticated enough for high-technology work, said Eleanor Aldrich, aerospace development executive for the Houston Economic Development Council.

"If you're just coming in as an oilfield company, they expect you to wear cowboy boots and chew tobacco," said Frank Adamek, advanced seals program director for Vetco-Gray.

Even some oilfield denizens have been uncertain how much they could contribute. "We thought going in we'd find we were quite a bit behind, but we've found we do quite well," said John Hellums, a project engineer at Cameron Offshore.

Larry Bell, a partner in the Houston-based Bell & Trotti space architecture firm, said there's plenty of room for oilfield expertise in the aerospace business. "Everything does not have to be built with white gloves," Bell said.

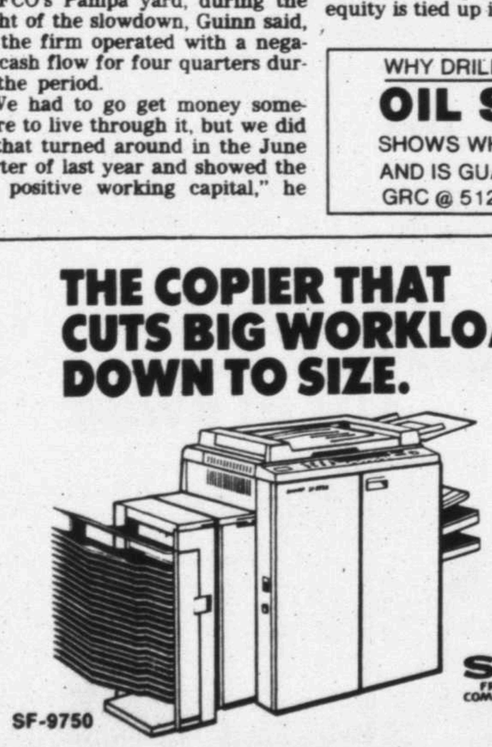

Still, Julian Ward, vice president for technology at Brown & Root, said the linkup is "kind of like a cross-cultural courtship. We're still trying to speak a common language," he said.

The oilfield companies have had to learn patience. The oil business tends to be a quick-decision, quick-results affair, whereas winning and completing government-supervised aerospace work tends to take a while, said William Clifford, a NASA veteran who is now vice president of Thomas Instrument.

"It takes staying power and it takes getting to know the system....There's nothing overnight, as there is in some commercial areas," Clifford said.

Analysts pick niche favorites for last half of 1988

By PHILLIP H. WIGGINS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — As a directionless first half in the stock market nears its close, the attention of stock pickers is naturally turning to selections based on what the economy will be like in the last half of 1988.

Many research analysts and money managers believe that, although the economy seems to be stronger now than in the beginning of the year, the second half could be a tougher corporate earnings period. They say the emphasis should be on secondary stocks with above-average growth potential because they dominate niche markets that are relatively immune to sharp turns in the economy.

"While the current odds would seem to favor a stronger economy for the remainder of 1988, this is by no means a certainty," said Michael P. Marshall, chief executive and founder of Marshall & Co., an Atlanta brokerage firm.

"There exists a high degree of confusion about the direction of the economy, with both the inflation and recession scenarios claiming wide support," he said. "At the same time, however, there is a growing minority view that foresees a period of slow growth with little inflation."

"We believe the United States experienced the lowest rate of inflation for the year in the first quarter of 1988," said Don Eller, research director of Prescott, Ball & Turben, in Cleveland. "There will be increasing concern about the probability of higher inflation in the second half."

Based on this, he recommends two stocks, the Mead Corp. and the Eaton Corp. He says Mead, a major integrated paper producer, is an undervalued company with a high cash flow that could be a strong asset play in an inflationary period. He adds that Eaton, a world leader in vehicular component production, also offers a good cash flow.

Higher inflation would also be a major benefactor to commodity trading companies. Charles Akre, director of research for Washington-based Johnston, Lemon & Co., recommends the Kay Corp., soon to be known as the Balfour Maclaine Corp.

In the last few years, the company has structured its operations to focus on four core commodities: coffee, cocoa, rice, and copper concentrate. Moreover, Kay, according Akre, is taking advantage of consolidation trends within the commodity trading industry to recruit some of the top talent to its key operations. He said 1987 earnings of $1.20 a share should rise to $1.30 to $1.50 a share this year.

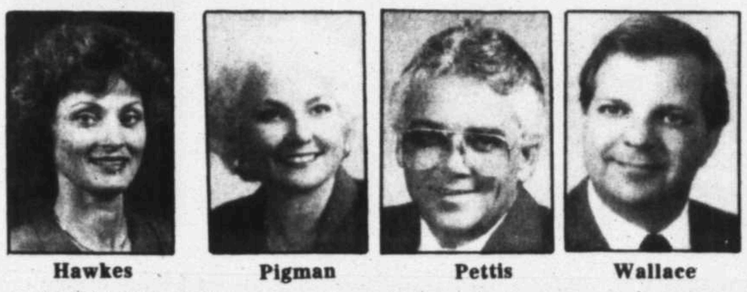

Wal-Mart Stores, a logical beneficiary of a rising economy that encourages consumer spending, is a favorite of Roger Engemann, president of the Pasadena Growth Fund.

He says Wal-Mart should be able to maintain its 30 percent growth rate in the foreseeable future and forecasts earnings of $1.40 a share for the fiscal year ended Jan. 31, 1988, up from $1.11 a share a year earlier. A middle-of-the-road picture is painted by John Tauer, assistant research director at Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood in Minneapolis. He thinks interest rates are headed slightly higher as the economy strengthens later this year. At the same time, he said, corporate earnings would increase sharply in the first half of this year and show moderate improvement in the second half, with secondary stocks continuing to gain popularity, and acquisition activity remaining strong.

One of his recommendations for this type of market is Golden Valley Microwave, a producer of microwave popcorn, pancakes, and french fries. He expects the company to increase its earnings from $1.50 a share this year to at least $1.95 a share in 1989.

Among the analysts who believe the economy will slow in the second half, with corporate earnings generally not so strong as they have been, is Tom Bailey, president of the Denver-based Janus Funds. He likes Calgon Carbon, a Pittsburgh environmental concern that uses cerbon to treat water.

WTGS members to hear from local geologist

Dr. Al Reid, consulting geologist and biostratigrapher, will be the guest speaker at Tuesday's meeting of the West Texas Geological Society. The meeting will begin at 11:30 a.m. at the Midland Center.

Reid's talk will cover "Revised Fusulind Biostratigraphic Zonation and Depositional Sequence Correlation, Subsurface Permian Basin." According to Reid, current revisions in fusilind zonation are allowing subdivision of the fossiliferous Pennsylvanian and Lower Permian sections of the Permian Basin into more biostratigraphic zones than the older scheme of R.V. Hollingsworth.

Cost of the luncheon is $7 per person, and reservations can be made at the WTGS office by noon Monday.

Mortgage lending up in April

DALLAS (AP) — Mortgage lending activity rose 14.5 percent in April from $1.1 billion to $1.3 billion, the third consecutive monthly increase, say Federal Home Loan Bank of Dallas officials.

The increase reported this week followed an 18.2 percent rise in March. Permanent loans closed by Ninth District thrifts rose 18.6 percent to $1.1 billion. Nearly three-quarters of that amount, or about $766 million, were loans for the purchase of one-to-four family dwellings.

Of the $811 million in residential mortgate loans closed in the Ninth District during April, $580 million were made in Texas, said Mike Edgar, chief economist for the bank.

"This shows a continued growth in housing sales over the last three months — a positive early sign of the anticipated turnaround in the Texas economy," Edgar said.

Idaho, Texas, Turkish firms teaming up

COEUR d'ALENE, Idaho (AP) — Empire Airways will join firms in Texas and Turkey to assemble the first Turkish commuter airline, Empire president Mel Spelde said.

An Empire Airways Metroliner has been transferred from Coeur d'Alene to San Antonio, Texas, where it will be outfitted to handle its new commuter duties in Ankara, the Turkish capital, Spelde said.

The Coeur d'Alene-based Empire has contracted with Metroliner manufacturer Fairchild Aircraft Corp. of San Antonio, and Turk Hava Kurumu of Ankara, Turkey. Empire will supply pilot and maintenance training.

Spelde said he and a lead inspector, Larry Powell, will assist with start up in Turkey.

Scheduled service is to being within two weeks, Spelde said. "We'll be flying to the smaller communities along the Mediterranean, Black Sea and eastern mountain regions of Turkey," he said.

Howard Nicholas, Fairchild's manager of international government sales, said the Texas corporation will lease the Metroliner for six months. The fledgling Turkish airline will then decide to continue leasing or buy aircraft, Nicholas said.

Fairchild has sold aircraft in overseas markets for 17 years. This marks its first go at the international aircraft-leasing market, Nicholas said.

Poultry prince not chicken to tackle future

Perdue slows down, keeps on chugging

By THERESA HUMPHREY

SALISBURY, Md. (AP) — Arthur Perdue never retired and he had a few words of advice on the subject for his son.

"It's like the throttle of an engine," Arthur's son, Frank Perdue, recalled. "As you get older you turn the throttle down a little bit."

Frank Perdue, at 67, may be slowing down, but it's hard to tell. Although he recently stepped aside as chief executive officer of Perdue Farms Inc., the nation's fourth-largest poultry producer, he's still known nationwide as the tough guy who sells tender chickens.

"It's nothing like the end of an era," said Perdue, who made himself and his poultry products famous through his television sales pitches. "I have lots of things to do."

Perdue, who followed his father into the chicken business at age 10, remains chairman of the board and chief promoter of his products. He plans to stay active in the business and keep peddling his wares on television, while Donald W. Mabe, president of the company, takes over the reins as CEO.

"I will be very visible and I'll probably be on the road a lot," Perdue said in an interview.

Mabe, who has answered only to Perdue for 28 of his 30 years with the company, is content with Perdue in the forefront of their marketing and advertising efforts.

"I don't think I can replace Frank. It would be like someone trying to replace Colonel Sanders. Frank is so identifiable with our product, he would be hard to replace. ... Frank Perdue is here to stay," Mabe said.

And so is his poultry business. Today, Perdue Farms has seven poultry processing facilities and a turkey processing subsidiary, enabling it to process 6 million broilers and 1.5 million pounds of turkey per week.

The company has more than 14,000 employees and holds contracts with more than 2,000 independent chicken and turkey producers in Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina and Indiana.

Perdue products are found along the East Coast from Maine to North Carolina and are breaking into the Midwest market in Cleveland. In fiscal year 1986-87, Perdue Farms had sales of $964 million.

"There are going to be ups and downs in this business because there always has been," said Perdue, assessing his company's prospects for growth. "There is an awful lot of production right now and when you get into a position of oversupply, you suffer lower earnings.

"But looking ahead 10 years, the odds are people will be eating less beef and less pork due to a diet-conscious public," Perdue said.

AP LaserPhoto

Frank Perdue, left, chairman of the board and chief pitchman for the chicken company that bears his name, plans to turn the CEO's reins of the nation's fourth largest poultry producer over to Donald Mabe.

If anyone is qualified to make such a judgment, it's Perdue, who has worked his way up from the chicken coop to the boardroom. In 1920, Arthur Perdue bought 50 Leghorn chickens for $5 and entered the table egg business in Salisbury. Frank was put to work at a tender age and given responsibility for the care of a few dozen chickens.

After graduating from high school, the young Perdue attended a local college for two years then decided "the egg business wasn't as bad as I thought."

In 1939, Frank left college to rejoin the family business, which then consisted of three employees, Frank and his father included.

The operation grew, eventually shifting from selling table eggs to the hatching and growing of broilers. When Frank became president in 1950, Perdue Farms had 40 employees and was one of the largest chicken growers on Maryland's eastern shore. The broilers were sold to major companies such as Swift and Armour, which marketed the Perdue chickens under their own brand names.

In 1968, with 400 employees, Perdue Farms purchased its first processing plant in Salisbury and Perdue brand chickens hit the market.

The company's recent expansion into turkeys was a natural extension of the processing business. And with turkey becoming a year-round food, the move was timely.

Perdue Farms entered the turkey business in 1984 with the acquisition of Shenandoah Valley Poultry Co., Inc., in Bridgewater, Va., and Shenandoah Farms, Inc., in Washington, Ind.

The turkey market is growing slowly, but Mabe and Perdue predicted it will continue to become more attractive to consumers. The company recently began producing ground turkey, which Perdue said is popular because "it looks a little like hamburger, but has tremendously less calories."

Mabe called it a "low-cost alternative to ground beef."

In the expanding prepared food market, both men said the company's pre-cooked chicken called Perdue Done It!, has a "good future."

"Anytime you're on the leading edge like we are with the fresh-cooked chicken products, there are some difficulties," Mabe said.

"The problem is getting the trial. Take the hot roast chicken. It's probably better than what you can roast at home, but people aren't used to buying like that," he said.

Mabe said the chain stores were anxious to stock the products because they're competing with fast-food restaurants.

"We've had no trouble getting shelf space on this product and as more people take it, we'll move more of it," Mabe said.

Perdue summed up the future of the company without giving away any secrets.

"I think we will continue to do what we do better and as opportunities present themselves, we'll look at them."

Asked if Mabe would one day become chairman, Perdue replied, "I would say that my demise has been tremendously over-exaggerated and let's just say he's certainly capable. But I hope to be around for a while."

Executives learn tips for meeting better

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER
New York Times News Service

Top executives spend 17 hours a week in business meetings, a recent study found, and more hours are spent getting ready.

"Preparations for the meetings average another six hours," said Ronald E. Gerevas, president of Heidrick & Struggles, a management recruiting firm.

Because top executives typically work 61 hours a week, the meetings — and thinking about them — account for almost 38 percent of their time.

The fact that many hours are spent in meetings has been well known for years, but it is surprising that so little has been done to juggle executives' time more effectively in these days when millions of corporate dollars flow to management consultants and trainers.

The time often wasted in millions of meetings a year boggled the minds of executives at the Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co.

The company, usually known as 3M, produces graphics for presentations at meetings, as well as manufactures such products as Scotch brand cellophane tape.

The company recently opened an educational unit, called the 3M Meeting Management Institute, to help make American business meetings more productive.

Based in Minneapolis, 3M's headquarters, the institute sponsors research, seminars and publications.

"We will act as a clearinghouse," said Virginia Johnson, who will act as manager of the new institute while continuing in 3M's audio visual division.

She explained that the institute, as "an information resource," will offer its findings free or at small cost to any organization interested in improving its meetings.

"Good meetings are essential to overall organizational productivity," Ms. Johnson said.

"With corporations constantly restructuring and competitive pressure mounting, it is essential for business people to communicate ideas and plans and concerns within their organizations."

She identified two basic types of meetings — those for sharing information and those for solving problems.

Other types include those for training, building morale and recognizing achievements.

Before the institute was formed, 3M published a book titled "How to Run Better Business Meetings" in 1979 and revised it last year.

It has also sponsored research on meetings at the University of Minnesota and the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton Center for Applied Research.

Ms. Johnson is busy organizing an advisory group that includes representatives from the State Department, the International Business Machines Corp. and Corning Glass Works, among other organizations.

Also a member is Dr. Lynn Oppenheim, a psychologist and vice president of the Wharton center who has just completed a study for the institute called "Making Meetings Matter."

The group will focus on what makes meetings effective. It will consider such issues as how to determine criteria for meetings, develop leadership skills and transfer the information obtained.

There might even be a new career developing — manager in charge of meetings, Ms. Johnson said.

A 3M survey found that "enhancing meeting productivity is rarely the specific responsibility of anyone."

"No one can easily identify who is responsible for white-collar productivity," she said, explaining that the question has often been asked of chief executives. "They would be hard pressed to name the title of a person who has responsibility."

Sometimes, she said, the executives reply that human resources people are in charge and sometimes they say training directors are responsible.

Yet, Ms. Johnson said, corporate profits can be affected by time wasted in poorly directed meetings and by difficulty in transferring information to the company at large.

"Many of us have taken public speaking course 101 in college, but who has ever had a course called 'Effective Meeting Management,' " Ms. Johnson said.

Indeed, one of the 3M institute's first ventures will be a survey of graduate business schools to find out whether any have such a course and what is being taught, she said.

Making meetings more efficient may be one of the last frontiers for improving productivity, ranking in importance with developments like computers, robotics and speedy air travel.

Namedropping Policy

Namedropping is intended to inform readers of promotions, achievements, and changes among the professional business personnel and leaders of Midland.

Information for Sunday pages must be in the Business-Oil Department by the preceding Thursday at noon.

All information must be submitted in writing and include the name and telephone number of the person submitting it.

If a photograph is included, the person in the picture must be professionally dressed.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color portraits may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

Information for Namedropping may be sent to the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Business-Oil Department, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702.

PRECONSTRUCTION BRIEFS

The following listings of new plant construction, provided by Construction Information Services is intended for the benefit of local contractors and fabricators who may have an interest in bidding on the listed projects. If your product or service fits, further information may be obtained by calling 1/800-762-3361 for key contacts, phone numbers and additional information.

MERTZON: All American Pipeline has approval for a 1,700-mile, 300,000-barrel per day pipeline. Scope: To place unmanned pump/heater station along the 30 inch line. Subcontractor selection third quarter 1988. Construction kick-off first quarter 1989.

GRUVER: Valley View Energy Corp. awarded engineering contract on an $80 million, 50 megawatt power plant. Plant will be fueled by 95 tons/hour of feedlot cow manure. Construction kick-off fourth quarter 1988.

BEAUMONT: Mobil Oil Corp. awarded contract for a $30 million conversion of a 2,000 lb./hour continuous catalyst regeneration unit. Requires platforming unit conversion, process and piping modifications, pumps, valves, E&I, plus insulation and coatings. Subs and bid documents third quarter 1988. Construction kick-off late third quarter 1988.

JENKS: Kimberly-Clark Corp. awarded $150 million "grassroots" tissue mill contract. Requires civil/site, foundations, structural, boilers, water softeners, condensate return, agitators, skimmers, piping, pumps, valves, filters, traps, tanks and mixers. Subcontracts for site prep and foundations third quarter 1988. Construction kick-off fourth quarter 1988.

LUFKIN: Champion International is performing process design to increase the paper machine speed from 1,700 ft./minute to 3,000 ft./minute. Requires dryers, felts, pumps, piping plus instrument and electrical hardware. Subcontractor selection third quarter 1988. Construction kick-off late third quarter 1988.

TATUM: Texas Utilities Generating Co. is planning maintenance outage at the Martin Lake station near Tatum. Requires boiler tubing, packing, insulation, seals, plus E&I. Turnaround begins October, 1988. Bids open fall 1988.

LAGRANGE: Lower Colorado River Authority is conducting an energy analysis for a $1.5 million fuel conversion project. Requires resurface steam generator, additional tubing in reheater & superheater, fan workover, plus E&I. Specialty subs late third quarter 1988. Construction kick-off first quarter 1989.

PASADENA: Simpson Pasadena Paper has begun preliminary process design for recovery plant upgrade. Requires caustic tank installation, digester heaters, installation/workover, piping modification plus E&I. Sub selection late third quarter 1988. Construction kick-off fourth quarter 1988.

CHANNELVIEW: ChemLink awarded a $3 million contract for the firewater and utilities expansion at this site. Requires 400,000 firewater tank, 2,000 gpm diesel pump and other miscellaneous pumps, pumphouse, 2,000 ft. of underground piping, valves, plus instruments and strainers. Construction kick-off second quarter 1988.

Efforts to fight software sabotage lacking

Defense-system, business, personal computers vulnerable to 'virus'

By BARTON REPPERT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sophisticated weapon-system computers are vulnerable to "viruses" just like business and personal computers, but experts say efforts to fight such software sabotage are barely beyond the planning stages.

Viruses — actually small strings of computer code — can be stealthily inserted into software programs, where they may lie dormant for months or years before causing oomputers, and the weapons they help control, to go haywire.

"Software attack, often best carried out with the aid of well-placed insiders, is emerging as a coherent new type of systematic offensive warfare," Scott A. Boorman, a Yale University sociology professor, and Paul R. Levitt, a mathematician, wrote recently in the military electronics journal Signal.

"It can be waged far removed in space and time from any battlefield to affect not only combat outcomes, but also peacetime balances of power," they wrote. It can "strike key civilian targets, such as electronic funds transfer, other financial and data communications, air traffic control systems and even the vote-tallying machinery at the heart of the democratic process."

Their article discussed the threat "viruses" pose to computers used by the military and government agencies with a national security mission.

Within the last year, viruses have "infected" computers at NASA, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, information systems on Capitol Hill, George Washington University, Lehigh University and Hebrew University in Jerusalem. They also have slowed IBM's electronic mail system to a crawl and reportedly caused video monitors in Silicon Valley to burst into flames, apparently by speeding up the cycle speed of certain video functions.

TACTICS THAT can be used to disrupt computer operations include:

—Viruses, essentially small programs that can hide in the computer's operating system, giving orders that range from a relatively benign message that flashes on the screen to destruction of data files or erasure of disks. A virus differs from other sabotage in that it clones itself and spreads.

—"Trojan horses," programs that look and act like normal ones but contain hidden commands that eventually take effect and cause havoc.

—"Logic bombs," small sets of instructions surreptitiously entered into other software, where they remain undetected and inactive until the computer arrives at a certain result during normal computation.

—"Time bombs," which go into action at a set date and time.

The supersecret National Security Agency, based at Fort Meade, Md., is responsible for safeguarding the security of U.S. government computer systems. It has set up the National Computer Security Center at Fort Meade to help the military, defense contractors and other private companies cope with software warfare and other threats to vital computer systems.

Spokeswoman Pat Coulson said the NSA had no comment on the Signal article.

Michael Harrison, a computer science professor at the University of California at Berkeley, said the center has developed criteria for "trusted computer system evaluation... This is a practical attempt to decide what systems are more trustworthy than others."

BOORMAN AND Levitt said much more needs to be done to develop effective technical countermeasures, and to alert military commanders as well as civilian managers. "Strategic, tactical and logistic planning to meet the software warfare challenge remains in its infancy in many cases," they wrote.

Harrison agrees. "They're making some progress, but there's so much further to go... The security techniques to deal with (software sabotage) are developing but not fast enough."

Bruce Shriver, a computer expert at the University of Hawaii, agreed that software tampering has much wider implications than just computer hacking. With the massive growth in computer use by companies, "it's easy to understand that complete businesses — both national and multinational firms — are potentially exposed to people manipulating their data."

Ted Lewis, a computer science professor at Oregon State University, said that "certainly anyone with an undergraduate degree in computer science could go in and mess up the programs of a weapons delivery system or an accounting package, either one."

Boorman and Levitt wrote that the military threat of software malfunction was illustrated during the 1982 Falklands war, when a flaw surfaced in guidance software controlling the Sea Wolf missile system used by British warships for air defense. It "proved unable to cope with a combat situation that arose when two Argentine aircraft attacked along closely parallel courses. Faced with the dilemma of which aircraft to shoot at first ... the software simply shut down the defense system."

THE PROBLEM was found to have resulted from "a subtle error of omission" in writing the missile system software.

Although that error was unintentional, Boorman said a serious case of deliberate software sabotage was uncovered in the 1970s affecting the computer system for a major U.S. Army supply depot at Taegu, South Korea.

A group of South Koreans and U.S. enlisted personnel manipulated the inventory program "to siphon off many million dollars a year — $18 million is one figure that's been indicated — worth of U.S. military supplies," he said in an interview.

He said the case demonstrated the potential of software sabotage for "quietly undermining U.S. preparedness... If you can manipulate an inventory control program ... it hampers an army's ability to fight."

In their Signal article, Boorman and Levitt argued that "software saboteurs may be far easier to recruit — and far harder to identify, prosecute and convict — than traditional saboteurs.

"Software sabotage requires no working with explosives or hazardous materials ... whose effects may dissuade many potential recruits for multiple reasons of fear or conscience. Devices such as logic bombs may have greatly delayed effects, or may never surface at all, which could assuage conscience while tending to produce stale evidence trails."

PAUL ABRAHAMS, president of the New York-based Association for Computing Machinery, said, "The problem of detection is exceedingly difficult.

"Computer programs are typically rather hard to understand, and somebody who is deliberately concealing something in one of them has all kinds of ways of covering his tracks."

One of the best defenses against either deliberate or unintentional programming problems is so-called software auditing, he said. Under such a procedure, "before a program is installed in the system it has to be looked at by more than one person, which is much in the same spirit as bank auditing."

Young futures trader tops list of well paid Wall Streeters

NEW YORK (AP) — A 33-year-old trader who made between $80 million and $100 million in 1987 topped a published list of Wall Street's biggest earners in the year of the stock market crash.

Paul Tudor Jones II earned his millions by trading $75 billion worth of financial and commodity futures, according to Financial World, which published "The Wall Street 100" in its June 28 issue.

Jones, founder and president of Tudor Investment Corp., "guessed right in the futures pits," the magazine said.

George Soros of Soros Fund Management was ranked second on the list, with income of at least $75 million, the magazine said.

Henry Kravis and George Roberts of Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. each made more than $70 million while Michael Milken of Drexel Burnham Lambert brought in at least $60 million, Financial World reported.

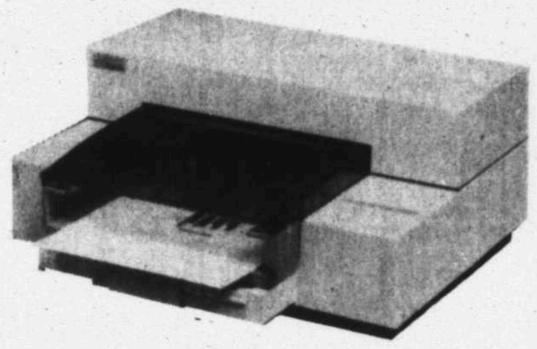

Michel David-Weill of Lazard Freres made $54 million and Jerome Kohlberg of Kohlberg Kravis Roberts brought home at least $35 million, it said.

The top 10 was rounded out by John Winberg of Goldman Sachs with at least $32 million, Donald Carter of the Carter Organization with between $30 million and $32 million and Theodore Forstmann of Forstmann Little with at least $30 million.

Because 48 Goldman, Sachs partners qualified for the Wall Street 100, the magazine put them on a separate list and included only Chairman John Weinberg on the top 100 list.

The magazine said the top 100 grossed about $2 billion or an average of about $12 million per person, not including the Goldman, Sachs partners.

ASK BOB BULLOCK

Many fine lines divide non-taxable, taxable services for state businesses

By BOB BULLOCK

Q. I recently heard something about a change in tax on livestock feed used to feed wild animals. Could you give me more information on this?

A. I'd be glad to. It used to be that if you sold feed such as corn for cows, the corn was not taxable. But if you sold the same corn for wildlife, such as deer, the corn was taxable.

Bullock

That's changed. Now, if you sell feed normally given to livestock (such as cows, pigs, chickens and turkeys), it is not taxable, regardless of how it will be used.

However, feed bought for pets such as cats and dogs is still taxable.

Q. I own some restaurants in Texas, and I buy background music, or Muzak, that is transmitted into my businesses. Is this taxable?

A. When you pay for a music service such as Muzak, which is transmitted by radio frequency, you're buying a telecommunications service, which is taxable. You should pay local taxes on it. Music that's transmitted by an FCC-regulated station isn't taxable.

Q. I own a business with large parking facilities, and I hire someone to sweep it for me. Should I pay tax on this service?

A. There is not a tax on this service. However, sweeping parking garages, which are considered to be buildings, is taxable.

Q. I record depositions on video tape as one of my services to attorneys. Is this videotaping service taxable?

A. You should collect tax on the total charge for this service. If you make copies of tapes for attorneys, that is also a taxable service.

If you are asked by an attorney or by the court to edit a video deposition, that is also a taxable service. But transcribing a video deposition is not taxable.

Q. I am a locksmith, and I need to know if I should collect tax on the labor to open a locked car or building. Also, is my fee for going to and from a job taxable?

A. There is no tax on your fee for opening a locked car, a locked building or locked personal items such as a briefcase.

If you're charging a travel fee when performing a taxable service, such as installing a lock in a commercial building, you should collect tax on the travel charge. However, if you're performing a service that is not taxable, then the fee for the trip to and from the job is not taxable, either.

'British are coming' could mean good news this time around

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

BUSINESS MIRROR

NEW YORK (AP) — Like Paul Revere, Sandy Simon goes around shouting the British are coming. But he does it as the bearer of good news, and his advice differs from Revere's. Don't resist, he might say. Sell out.

It is partly through activities of people such as Sanford R. Simon that British interest in American business has never been higher, with purchases announced weekly if not daily.

For many Americans, it is one of the more baffling business developments in years, particularly since the British economy had until the 1980s spent years in the doldrums.

Simon's activities help explain the phenomenon.

Representing buyers rather than sellers, Simon, president of American Corporate Services, searches out small- and medium-size companies that might make attractive acquisitions.

Many of his clients are American companies, but 20 are British concerns and one is Swedish. All are corporations seeking to expand, and all view the American market as the place to proceed.

Simon's organization researches the possibilities, seeks out companies that conceivably could be for sale and then approaches them. "We find and make available for sale something that isn't on the market," he says.

The potential acquisition usually involves a privately or tightly held enterprise, perhaps headed by a middle-age founder. His records show that 14 percent of U.S. private enterprises are willing to talk when asked.

"They'll keep saying they're not for sale," says Simon. But he observes that 80 percent of them have the financial information already prepared, in their desk and ready for discussion by the end of the interview.

Having completed 70 transactions, Simon is acutely conscious of the psychology involved. He knows that it is human nature for hard-working ntrepreneurs to think about getting their cash out of the business.

Meanwhile, British companies are trying to build their markets, and that isn't as easy to do in Britain as it is in the United States.

The British are members of the European Economic Community; still, says Simon, they have an island economy. Their thinking hasn't yet evolved into the larger economic unit; they are foreign. "They butt heads in a small market."

If they have cash flow, says Simon, it benefits them to go outside for growth. British tax laws don't encourage the distribution of dividends, but profits must be used. The island economy might not accommodate them.

They think about the United States, he says, because it makes up one-thi to one-half of the Free World market in textiles, construction, transport tion and several other categories.

So, says Simon, "they have the money, they are closed out of their ow market, and we can sell to them at a 25 percent to 30 percent discou because of the dollar-pound relationship."

They also have an advantage in raising capital, mainly through righ issues. For capital, British concerns often go to existing shareholders first; percent to 90 percent of money they raise may be from these shareholde

Among other things, this enables them to make a purchase agreeme subject to a one-month delay for a rights issue to take place. A rights iss offering additional securities to shareholders is quick; the risk of not raisi money is lowered.

The British come well-prepared. They know how to go after market sha because they've had to fight for it over the years, refining their techniqu and eliminating errors. They know their business, says Simon.

There is still another advantage in investing abroad rather than in the o economy. While the British can contribute to the new market they can lea too. They can acquire a knowledge of new business techniques to use ba home.

As he views it, the situation is win-win.

IRS backs away from plan to tax sick leave pay

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service is backing away from a ruling that could have required immediate taxation of accumulated vacation, sick leave and other benefits paid to employees of state and local governments and tax-exempt organizations.

Although the IRS now says it never had any intention of taxing such benefits, union leaders say the agency's clarification on Wednesday could benefit more than 14 million workers.

O. Donaldson Chapoton, assistant secretary of the treasury for tax policy, said Wednesday that pending IRS regulations will spell out that "bona fide vacation leave, sick leave, compensatory time, severance pay, disability pay and death benefits are not deferred compensation subject to" tax under Section 457 of the tax code.

Chapoton outlined the government's position in a letter to Rep. Ray McGrath, R-N.Y. McGrath, a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, has been fighting an earlier IRS interpretation that left open the door to taxation of certain employee benefits at the time they were accrued, rather than when they were used.

"It was never the intention of Congress to allow the taxation of bona fide employee benefits," McGrath told reporters in releasing Chapoton's letter.

The change, he said, "signifies the fact that the IRS will not be picking the pockets of these kinds of taxpaying employees."

The debate centers on a 1978 law that allowed employees of state and local governments to take part in deferred-compensation retirement plans. In 1986, Congress brought employees of universities, non-profit hospitals and other tax-exempt organizations under that law.

The IRS traditionally considered immediately taxable only "elective" forms of deferred compensation, such as salary that a worker voluntarily postponed receiving. "Non-elective" compensation, where there is no option to receive it immediately, was taxed when received, rather than when it was earned.

In 1987 the IRS issued a notice that was widely interpreted as requiring immediate taxation of "non-elective" compensation and extending that definition to such basic benefits as vacation and sick pay. That set off an outcry by unions representing affected workers and by several members of Congress.

"Under the IRS interpretation, many state and local governments and tax-exempt employers wuld have to substantially restructure their compensation and retirement arrangements to bring them into compliance with the restrictions," said Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., author of a bill to overturn the initial IRS position.

He said the 1987 interpretation would have placed such employers at a competitive disadvantage with private industry in keeping employees.

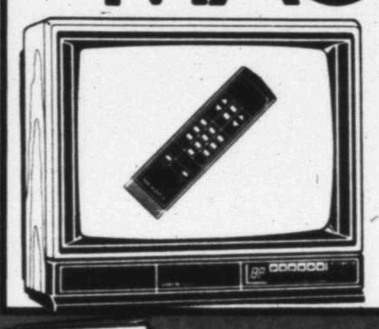

McGrath said he had enlisted the help of Vice President George Bush in fighting the IRS interpretation.

A full moon rises over the Hotel del Coronado, which is celebrating its 100th birthday this year. A National Historic Landmark, the hotel has hosted the Prince of Wales, over a dozen U.S. presidents and been the filming site for numerous movies and television programs.

This Dragon Tree, located outside the ballroom which overlooks the ocean, has been a part of the the hotel almost since it's beginning, and a scene in the movie "Some Like It Hot" was filmed next to it. The species, Dracaena Draco, is found in Southern California, the Canary Islands and China.

Suspense, romance, fantasy, farce and comedy have walked the halls of the Hotel del Coronado during its 100-year history.

Referred to by Southern Californians and those who have stayed there as "the Del," the hotel is celebrating its 100th birthday this year, and the town of Coronado has been celebrating its centennial this week. Among the numerous activities planned for 1988 is a special centennial "Del Mar Racetrack" weekend package Aug. 26-28 at the hotel.

Nestled on 33 beach-front acres across the bay from San Diego — 16 miles north of Mexico and 120 miles south of Los Angeles — the hotel is the largest beach resort on the North American Pacific Coast from Alaska to Acapulco.

During its illustrious history, it has been visited by 12 U.S. presidents — either before, during or after their terms — including Benjamin Harrison, Woodrow Wilson, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan; served as the filming location for movies and television shows; and provided inspiration for such writers as L. Frank Baum, the creator of the "Wizard of Oz.".

"Baum was a longtime Coronado resident and used the Hotel del Coronado's castle-like structure as his inspiration for the creation of the fabulous city of Oz," says Patrick Hennessey, director of communications for the hotel.

The chandeliers in the hotel's Crown Room restaurant, Hennessey says, are said to have been designed by Baum, who wrote part of his "Wizard of Oz" series at the hotel.

"Later, the film of the same name reproduced the essence of the Emerald City illustrations from the Baum books, whose sketches were themselves almost carbon copies of the hotel's grand towers," Hennessey says.

"The Wizard of Oz," the 1939 classic starring Judy Garland, and five other movies are shown free of charge on a rotating basis from 6 p.m. to midnight at the hotel for its guests. Included in the free showings is "The Spirit of St. Louis," which stars James Stewart as Charles A. Lindbergh in his May 21, 1927, 33½ flight from New York to Paris.

"Lindbergh left for this flight from Coronado's North Island and celebrated his triumph at the Hotel del Coronado when he returned," Hennessey says. A dinner was held Sept. 21, 1927, in the Crown Room where a small model plane tailored after his historic craft flew overhead for the occasion. Lindbergh constructed his plane, the Spirit of St. Louis, in San Diego.

Romantics believe that the hotel was the site of the first meeting of the Prince of Wales, later King Edward VIII and then the Duke of Windsor, and Wallis Warfield Spencer Simpson. In 1920 when he stayed at the Del, she was the wife of Coronado's naval air station commanding officer.

"It is said that the prince met his wife-to-be, Wallis Simpson, for the first time at a Hotel del Coronado dinner in his honor," Hennessey says. "Although her name was not on the guest list, Simpson was one of the leading socialites in the small community of Coronado and surely would have welcomed the chance to meet the prince."

The prince's visit made a lasting impression on the Del. Visitors will find pictures of the prince and Ms. Simpson lining the walls to the hotel's gourmet restaurant — the Prince of Wales Restaurant. In 1936, Edward abdicated his throne before his coronation to marry "the woman I love."

The hotel, designated a National Historic Landmark in 1977 by the U.S. Department of the Interior and listed in the National Registry of Historic Places, provided the inspiration for another love story, this time one which existed only in fantasy.

Globe in search of fire eaters, stilt walkers

Temple

Wanted: stilt walkers, jugglers, clowns, fire eaters and sword swallowers. Call: 1-332-1586.

The response to this request will no doubt jam the telephone lines at Odessa's Globe Theatre. After all, Permian Basin residents have had more practice than most in swallowing sharp, bitter pills, putting out financial fires, juggling check books and walking stilts above economic devastation while feeling sillier than a first-time clown at being caught in one of the worst busts in the region's history.

Alas, the Globe is looking for those who practice these arts in their literal meaning for its 14th Street Association Parade which comes at the end of Act I in the upcoming production of "Hello Dolly!"

Appropriate is it not, that the scene provides the climax of Act I when Dolly Levi is in steady pursuit of the well-known half-a-millionaire, Horace Vandergelder? Half is better than none, is it not?

"People of all ages, groups or clubs with a unique talent or ability are asked to call the Globe and join the parade," said David Weaver, the Globe's director. "Groups can use the parade as an opportunity to call attention to their particular organization or projects."

Specialty acts can appear in one of all performances of "Hello, Dolly!" A minimum of rehearsal time will be required. Performance dates and times are 8 p.m. June 23-25 and June 30-July 2 and 2:30 p.m. June 26.

Over 50 actors, actresses and crew members are already working on the production which stars Dana Ritter as Dolly and professional actor Robert Lambert, currently starring in the national Broadway tour of "Big River," as Cornelius, who works for Mr. Vandergelder.

Prior to "Big River," Lambert played Seymour in the Boston company of "Little Shop of Horrors" and in Chicago he played the roles of Bobby in "A Chorus Line," Constantine in "A Day in Hollywood..." and George M. Cohen in "Give My Regards to Broadway." He has appeared in such films as "Ferris Bueller's Day Off," "She's Having a Baby" and "Jack and Mike."

Lambert joins the local cast Monday. Unlike amateurs, his song and dance routine isn't free. Funding for his appearance is being provided by Mrs. Alvin H. Parker, Holloman Construction Company, The Odessa American, Jack and Jody Streicher and Holly Sorrell Realtors.

Also coming up this week in Odessa is an act of a different sort — Run-DMC, playing Ector County Coliseum along with other rap acts Wednesday. Showtime is 8 p.m. Jonathan Hafter of the Howard Bloom Organization, LTD., in New York City assured me over the phone Wednesday that the rumors of violence around this group are unfounded.

"The group is concerned with its image and providing positive role models for its audiences," he said, adding that the group is "anti-violence, anti-drugs, pro-family and pro-success."

General admission tickets, priced at $14, may be purchased at Endless Horizons in Midland and Odessa. Two other concerts are slated this month at Ector County Coliseum — David Lee Roth and Poison June 20 and Linda Ronstadt June 29.

In Midland this month, a nerd alert is in progress. Those looking for some laughs and creative ways to rid themselves of unpleasant people may want to catch Midland Community Theatre's production of "The Nerd," which opened in Davis Theatre One at Theatre Midland Friday (too late to make the deadline for this column). For reservations call 682-4111.

And some of the speciality acts volunteering for duty on the Globe stage may want to check into the annual Summer Mummers's olio. This year's case of mummering summer madness begins a week early — opening night is set for June 24.

"Banditry on the Border," this year's melodrama, was authored by the late William S. Davis who lived in Midland from 1958 until 1984. Davis also authored seven other melodramas, including "Peril on the Pecos" and "Rascality on the Rig," both of which were produced twice in Midland and also at two Irish theater festivals.

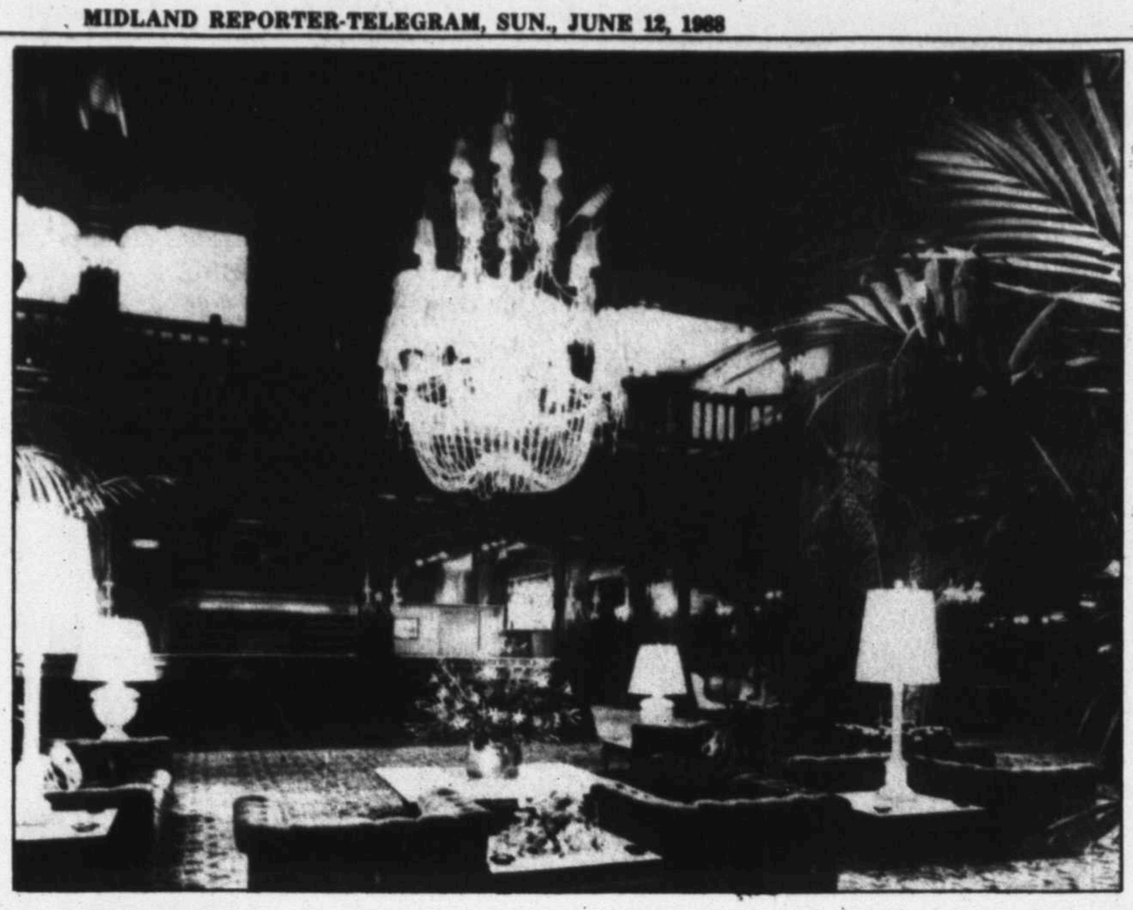

The following is an item for travelers holding Premium Pack books. In short, most area residents.

Those interested in flying into one destination and out of another may do so with America West Premium Pack books purchased by March 31, 1988, with point of origination being Midland or Lubbock. As Diane, supervisor 54 for America West says, "An open jaw ruling is allowed. We would take the higher of the two zones involved and apply the higher fare to the entire trip."

Most special fares require that the traveler fly into and out of the same airport. This one doesn't.

In closing, I want to thank Henry Sara-nec for telling me during a chance conversation that no trip to San Diego is complete without seeing the Hotel del Coronado. He was right.

The lobby of the Hotel del Coronado as it appears on its 100th birthday features muted Victorian-style lighting and antique furnishings. At the hotel's inception, the lobby was designed as an open area with sitting rooms visible from all vantage points. Since then, some activity areas, such as the card room, have been renovated as the addition of the Palm Court Lounge area, also called the Lobby Bar, and other changes altered the lobby. The Lobby Bar opens onto the Garden Patio, which lies in the center of the original five story structure. The hotel is located on Coronado peninsula across the bay from San Diego.

HOTEL

Richard Matheson's novel "Bid Time Return" was set at the hotel, but the location and title were changed in the film version. The screen version, also written by Matheson, starred Christopher Reeve and Jane Seymour. In the movie, Reeve plays a young writer who sacrifices his life in the present to go back in time to find the woman he loves "Somewhere in Time."

Listed in the California Landmark Registry, the hotel, which is both a San Diego County and Coronado Historic Landmark, is considered to be one of the finest examples of Victorian architecture in the world.

The Crown Room, one of three restaurants in the hotel, has no nails or interior supports in the 30-foot high sugar pine ceiling. The ceiling, held together solely with wooden pegs, was for many years the largest pillar-free room in the United States. Antique furnishings and muted Victorian-style lighting continue to highlight the hotel's main lobby.

The original elevator, complete with an operator, is still operating just off the main lobby.

"The original five-story structure remains in use today, complemented by two newer sections closer to the beach," Hennessey says. "the 700-room hotel has undergone only minor structural changes since its opening. Each of the original rooms in the main building — about 400 — has been renovated continually, keeping the hotel as modern as any newer facility."

MODERN PLUMBING has been added, but not air-conditioning. Only the new buildings are air-conditioned. The other rooms enjoy large windows, which may be opened to let in the ocean breeze.

During the centennial year, vistors will find the hotel's most famous guests being portrayed by the Centennial Players, actors dressed in period costumes. They may also view the new mini-museum open in 1988, which upgraded the existing History Gallery and is located on the first floor, beach side. Also located in the downstairs area of the Del are over 20 shops.

The Del's story begins in the 1880s when railroad tycoon Elisha Babcock and H.L. Story, successful businessmen and avid rabbit hunters, were attracted to Coronado peninsula, then 4,100 acres of sagebrush and a good spot for hunting.

The syndicate they formed purchased the peninsula for $110,000. Architects for the proposed Victorian hotel were James Merrit, and Watson Reid. The Reid brothers hired Chinese laborers who were trained on the job during construction. As the months raced by, construction continued non-stop on a 24-hour basis.

"All of the rooms are different, and often the plans were drawn up at night for the next day's work," says Richard Gilbert, an employee at the Del.

AFTER CLOSE to 11 months of construction, the hotel officially opened Feb. 19, 1888.

"Thomas Edison personally supervised the installation of the original lighting system, and the hotel's power plant would generate energy for the entire city of Coronado until 1922," Hennessey says. "Edison returned in 1904 to flip the switch lighting the West Coast's first electrically lit live outdoor Christmas tree, which still stands on the hotel grounds next to the Crown Room restaurant."

Then, rates in the hotel were a "shocking" $2 a day for monthly guests. Today's per-day rates begin at $125 for a room in the main building with no view and go to $750 for a two bedroom apartment.

By 1902 J.D. Spreckels had gained controlling interest in the hotel while publishing San Diego's two leading newspapers, The San Diego Union and the Tribune. He owned the hotel when Tent City was born.

"The hotel had closed for a short period as a result of renovation, so tents were erected to house guests along the beachfront," Hennessey says. "As Tent City grew, bands and other forms of entertainment helped insure the liveliness of the area, which had become one of the nation's premier vacation playlands."

IN HONOR of Tent City, which closed in 1939, visitors will find a 7,000 square-foot, 30-foot tall pavilion located on the beach. The pavilion is being used for special events and parties during 1988.

The Del served as the filming location for movies as early as 1927 when scenes from "The Flying Fleet" starring Anita Page and Ramon Navarro were filmed there. Then, in 1958, Billy Wilder's "Some Like It Hot," starring Marilyn Monroe, Tony Curtis and Jack Lemmon, was filmed at the hotel. The comedy was released in 1959.

Two movies were filmed there in 1980 — "The Stunt Man," starring Peter O'Toole and Steve Railsback in a suspense-filled, behind-the-scenes look at the real and illusionary world of filmmaking, and the made for television movie "Loving Couples," starring Shirley MacLaine and James Coburn in a farce about modern-day relationships.

The hotel also has been the filming location for such television programs as "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous," "Simon & Simon" and "Hart to Hart."

Through the years, the hotel has hosted several historic political events.

In 1970, the Del was the site of a State dinner given by then-President Richard Nixon in honor of Mexico's President Gustavo Diaz Ordaz. The occasion marked the only State dinner given outside Washington D.C., and included former President Lyndon Johnson and California Gov. Ronald Reagan.

REAGAN RETURNED to the hotel as U.S. president in 1982 for a luncheon with Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid. The luncheon, held in the hotel's Coronet Room, was attended by international notables and followed by a mini-summit in Room 3253, since renamed the Summit Suite.

Then, in January 1986, the hotel was chosen as the site of a trade summit by the U.S. Trade Representative, only the third such gathering held in the United States.

All of the historic landmark designations the hotel has received have come about since 1963 as the result of the efforts and hard work of the resort's sixth and current owner, M. Larry Lawrence.

The man who maintains order among the hotel's 1,200 employees and 250,000 yearly guests is 37-year-old Scott W. Anderson, who entered his 10th year as top administrator in April. Anderson's association with the hotel dates back to 1966. He worked at the Del as a dishwasher, waiter and bellhop throughout high school before going to the University of Washington to earn a degree in hotel management and administration.

In addition, Jeanne K. Lawrence, vice chairman of the board and Lawrence's wife, has played a major role in preserving the historic nature of the hotel, focusing on a new renovation plan emphasizing the Victorian architectural tradition.

"THIS HISTORIC hotel has a reputation as one of the world's finest ocean-front resort convention facilities, and this extensive program will only improve on that standing in the international community," Mrs. Lawrence says.

"Eighty million dollars has been spent on renovation and new construction here during the past 25 years, making this landmark a successful business while simultaneously preserving its historical heritage," she says.

Museum to host Summer Concerts

From Staff Reports

Summer Concerts on the Lawn will be hosted again by the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., beginning June 19.

It features a series of Sunday evening family entertainment programs of music and dance. The programs will be held on the front lawn beginning at 7:45 p.m.

Those attending are invited to bring lawn chairs or blankets to sit on and a picnic supper or cool drink. In case of rain, the programs will be held inside the museum.

The series begins June 19 with "A Musical Potpourri," featuring Darryl Knapp, keyboard; Gloria Steelman, violin and flute; and Troy Andra Rodden, harp.

On June 26, the Winning Season Singers will be featured with "Spotlight on MCT." This group from Midland Community Theatre will sing numbers from musicals performed at Theatre Midland.

Next up is James Cramer and his Midland College Dancers who will be "Gamboling on the Green" with an array of dance numbers July 10.

Then, the United Spiritual Singers will hold a "Contemporary Gospel Celebration" July 17.

An evening of "Jamming: Music from the '30s, '40s and '50s" is the fare for the evening of July 24 provided by the Dow Jones Average.

"A Night Out with the Boys" will be featured July 31 when the Sun Country Gentlemen and The Men's Chorale split the evening with barbershop harmony and choral music.

Soprano Janice Archer will entertain Aug. 7 with "Baubles and Bangles," a potpourri of vocal music.

The series ends Aug. 14 with "Ballet Midland at Sunset." Dancers will perform from the repertoire taught in the ballet's fourth annual workshop.

'Crocodile II' too long on plot

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

Although not as amusing as the first film, "Crocodile Dundee II" is still fine family entertainment, thanks to the off-the-wall antics of Michael J. "Crocodile" Dundee (Paul Hogan). Written by Hogan and his son Brett, "Crocodile II" maintains the Aussie's persona of casual ease combined with a love of mischief.

The character fits Hogan like a glove, probably because he is somewhat like the character he portrays. Hogan and John Cornell, his longtime manager of 16 years, revealed in the recent issue of Premiere magazine that the duo shun agents, ocassionally go to work barefoot, and have never signed a contract in their deals with each other because a handshake between friends suffices.

The first film, which cost $14 million to make, earned more than $300 million and was a boom to Australian tourism. The box office success of the first effort virtually guaranteed the sequel would fare equally well. With "Crocodile II" stealing the box office limelight from "Rambo III," it's safe to say that America appreciates the refreshing innocence and wry humor of the outback hero over barbaric violence.

In "Crocodile II," the hero once again demonstrates the best Aussie qualities: laconic charm, honesty, a gruff exterior, a penchant for mischief, and a soft heart. The premise finds Crocodile tangled up with drug runners when his girlfriend, Sue (Linda Kozlowski), is captured by the same men who killed her exhusband. The plot moves from New York — where Crocodile is a fish out of water — to his more familar Australian territory. The pursued Aussie flees to the bush so when his pursurers arrive he will be able to "see them coming."

Most of the fun scenes in the movie take place in Australia. The best part in New York is the character LeRoy Brown (Charles Dutton), a stationery salesman who is rumored to be involved in shady dealings. "People expect me to be bad like the song ...I kinda like the edge," he says.

Although "Crocodile II" has some good moments, it tends to be too long on plot and too short on character development. Maybe that's why some of the supporting characters emerge as the most memorable.

Dundee's best friend and the world's worst tracker, Walter Reilly (John Meillon), is hilarious when he attempts to bamboozle drug kingpins with his jungle lore. To cover for Crocodile, he describes mysterious noises as the "mating call of the Tera-Tera" which is "very large and has been known to carry off small children." The Aborigines also add some real spice to the film, and the scene where they terrorize captives with hints of cannibalism is hilarious (even though its has been seen over and over in the previews). In fact, too many of the best scenes in the movie were in the previews. The overkill was evident when moments that should have been funny were already too familiar and got no laughs.

"Crocodile II" would have fared better if the "long night" Crocodile promises his pursuers would have been more fleshed out — a snake and a few bats didn't seem threatening enough, and one rescue scene was too long. But, just the same, you have to admire the film for its sense of adventure and its hero, who doesn't have to resort to murder to beat out the bad guys.

"Crocodile Dundee II," rated PG, for some sexual innuendo, is playing at the UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert.

'Funny Farm' subtly humorous

Chevy Chase stars in "Funny Farm," the light comedy which features a sportswriter who leaves his job to "live out a dream." The film opens with the ex-sportswriter, Andy Farmer, bidding farewell to his newspaper cohorts. He shows his friends his check for $10,000, an advance from a publishing company for a novel he intends to write. "What's the book going to be about?" a friend asks. "About 300 pages," Andy deadpans.

The would-be writer sets off with his wife, Elizabeth (Madolyn Smith) for the bucolic town of Redbud. He intends to write the Great American Novel, buy a house in the country and start a family. The small-town atmosphere seems ideal for Andy's needs until he meets the townsfolk. The mailman is a maniac who hurls mail out his car window while traveling at high speeds. "He's pretty liquored up by the time he gets to your route," explains the sheriff (who travels in a taxi since he flunked his drivers test).

The villagers have some of the best lines in the film. When some movers lose their bearings, they ask a porch-sitter: "Hey Mac, which way to Redbud?"

The conversation which transpires is a good example of the salty personalities which abound in the film.

The resident answers, "How did you know my name was Mac?"

"I just guessed."

"Well, then guess your way to Redbud."

Most of the comedy revolves around the eccentric townfolk, Andy's writer's block, and his wife's success at writing. The film has a few ingenious moments — Andy developing his own eccentricities when he has a corpse planted in his garden to avoid a funeral bill, and his insistence that Redbud residents act like a Norman Rockwell painting when he wants to sell his house to unsuspecting city slickers.

But for the most part, the humor in "Funny Farm" is subtle and warmhearted and not laugh-out-loud funny. Some of the best moments literally "go to the dogs," an Irish Setter on the lam, and a dog too lazy to move his tail from a fire.

While the Norman Rockwell sequence, which turns the town into Christmas postcard, is fun, too much of the humor misses the boat. There are some flaws in the script, also. No publisher would give an author a $10,000 advance without so much as a synopsis of the book to come, nor would they pay for a 300-page comedy-adventure novel and then accept a children's book in its stead.

But technicalities aside, "Funny Farm" is undemanding entertainment. It's just not Chevy Chase at his best.

"Funny Farm," rated PG ("parental guidance suggested"), includes some mildly vulgar language.

Carlsbad Caverns extends hours for summer

From Staff Reports

Carlsbad Caverns National Park's full summer schedule began at the start of the Memorial Day weekend, and runs through Labor Day, September 5.

Under the summer schedule, the park visitor center will open at 8:30 a.m. and close at 7 p.m. daily. The Cavern itself will open at 9 a.m. for both the three mile long Blue Tour and the one and a quarter mile Red Tour.

The Blue Tours will be open continuously from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., and the Red Tours open continuously from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. The closing times for both tours have been set in order to have everyone out of the cavern by 6:30 p.m.

Evening bat flight programs also have begun on May 28 and will start off the season at 7:30 p.m., but times will be adjusted during the summer to coincide with sunset and changes in the bat colony's flight time. When days are longest, in the middle of the summer, programs could be as late as 8 p.m., then advance to 6 p.m. or earlier in the fall.

Fees for the Cavern tours remain the same as last year and are $4 for adults, $2 for ages 6 through 15, and $2 for any U.S. citizens age 62 or over as well as for handicapped persons who have, or qualify for, either Golden Age or Golden Access passes. Visitors wishing to use interpretive radio receivers to listen to recorded messages about the cavern as they walk through on their tours, may rent them for 50 cents per receiver in the visitor center.

For visitors interested in an undeveloped cave trip, New Cave in the park's Slaughter Canyon area provides this opportunity. The New Cave flashlight trips are being offered on a daily basis, with two trips scheduled at 9 a.m. and 12 noon. Reservations are required for the primitive New Cave trips and may be made up to two weeks in advance by calling 1-505-785-2232. The limit is 25 people per tour.

Cost of the New Cave tours is $5 for adults and $3 for all those under age 16. The New Cave trip is not recommended for children under 6 years of age. Approximately 1¾ hours need to be allowed to reach New Cave from either Carlsbad, N.M. or the park visitor center, with 30 to 45 minutes spent hiking to the cave. The trip itself, once reaching the cave entrance, takes about 2¼ hours. Shoes or boots with low heels and good traction are recommended for all cavern trips, either at the main Cavern or New Cave.

Recorded information about the park is available 24 hours per day by calling 1-505-785-2107.

Concession facilities at the park include a child care nursery, pet kennel, food service, and a gift shop. Picnic facilities are located near the visitor center, several locations along the park entrance road, and at the park's Rattlesnake Springs unit which is five miles south of White's City and three miles west of U.S. 62/180 on Eddy County Road 418. A 9¼ mile scenic drive along the ridge and through Upper Walnut Canyon west of the park visitor center is also open to visitors.

Approximately half of Carlsbad Caverns National Parks annual visitation comes during the summer travel period from Memorial Day to Labor Day.

MCT to be performing 'Greater Tuna' at contest

From Staff Reports

Midland Community Theatre has been chosen to perform at the National Convention of the American Association of Community Theatres June 15-19 in Kalamazoo, Mich.

"We're honored to be included in the AACT productions," says Don Bachmann, executive director of MCT. "Greater Tuna" will be staged by MCT during the convention.

"We've had such success presenting 'Greater Tuna' in Midland that we feel it will be a hit at the national convention," Bachmann says. "We're really looking forward to it."

"Greater Tuna" has been staged three times in 1985-87 in Midland, playing to capacity crowds each time, Bachmann says. The two lead roles will be played at the convention by Mike McLaren and Buster Tiemann.

Other community theaters and their productions include Omaha Community Playhouse, "House of Blue Leaves;" Guelph, Ontario, Little Theatre, "Waiting for the Parade;" Los Alamos, New Mexico, Community Theatre, "The Gin Game;" and Des Moines Community Theatre, "Six Women with Brain Death or Expiring Minds Want to Know."

Kalamazoo's Civic Players will perform "Penalty for Early Withdrawal," their children's theater will do "Masque of Beauty and the Beast" and the Kalamazoo Civic Black Theatre will perform "Split Second."

The AACT convention will feature workshops on stage dialect, acting, adjudication, directing, children's theater for young participants, building and painting, special effects, costumes, budget and marketing, volunteers and minority theater.

The public is invited; however, AACT members receive a registration discount. Lodging is available at the Kalamazoo Hilton. For more information call MCT's business office, 682-2544.

WaterWorld in Houston open

HOUSTON — WaterWorld, Houston's 15-acre waterpark, is opened daily for the summer. This year marks the park's 20th year of operation.

For family members who enjoy the thrill and excitement of a free-fall water slide, the Edge is a winner. The Edge, Houston's tallest water slide, sends riders down an 80-foot drop in only four seconds.

The park opens at 10 a.m. WaterWorld tickets are $11.50 for adults and $9.50 for children under 48 inches.

An AstroWorld/WaterWorld combination ticket is also available, which allows guests to enjoy one admission to AstroWorld and one admission to WaterWorld for $18.95.

For more information please call 1-713-799-1234.

Event a real corker

DUNKIRK, N.Y. (AP) — A physics professor set a world record in a corker of an event.

Heinrich Medicus opened a bottle of champagne to launch a cork 177 feet and 9 inches, beating the mark set last year of more than 68 feet at Kensington, England's Oval Cricket Grounds.

A land surveyor used laser equipment to measure the shot, and a wine expert testified that the bottles of champagne were undoctored.

Medicus, a professor at Rensselear Polytechnic Institute in Troy, plans to send the results to the Guiness Book of World Records.

Presidential Museum to be holding children's workshops

ODESSA — The Presidential Museum is offering eight workshops this summer.

Each will be taught by a qualified instructor who has mastery of their topic as well as experience in teaching. Classes will be small and informal, insuring individual attention to each child enrolled, says a release from the Odessa museum.

For the first time, the museum will offer workshops designed for junior high students, including "Jewelry — Wearable Art," from 1:30-2:30 p.m., July 18-22; and "Discover Watercolor" 1:30-2:30 p.m., July 11-15.

Six workshops are scheduled for grades 1-6. Those are:

— "Paper Magic" 9:30-10:30, grades 1-3; and 10:45-11:45 grades 4-6, July 11-15;

— "Indians of the Southwest" 10:45-11:45 grades 1-3; and 9:30-10:30 grade 4-6, July 11-15;

— "Texas Legends In Mime" 1:30-3:30, grades 4-6 only, July 11-15. Enrollment fee is $15;

— "Crayons Do More Than Just Color" 9:30-10:30, grades 1-3; and 10:35-11:45 grades 4-6, July 18-22;

— "Young Authors — All About Me" 10:45-11:45 grades 2-3; and 9:30-10:30 grades 4-6, July 18-22;

— and "Pottery" July 25-29, a special workshop for the creative child.

Workshop fees are $5 per student, per class, for members of the Museum and $7.50 per student, per class, for non-Museum members, unless otherwise stated. This includes all supplies needed for the workshop.

For more information, call the Presidential Museum at 1-332-7123. Registration can be made by mail or in person. Classes will be limited, and will be filled on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Eating your way into swimsuit shape

By MONICA PEREZ
Copley News Service

Though the fashion trend this summer is toward a romantic look, this season's bathing suits are eclectic. Get into swimsuit shape through a good fitness program.

After months of hibernation, warm weather finally is here. You have sunbathed, listened to the radio and completed the latest book on your vacation reading list. But perhaps your winter body needs more than a good tan. After months of inactivity, it might be time for a good fitness program to firm up muscle tone and lose winter weight.

You don't have to embark immediately on a spartan diet and non-stop exercise regimen to make up for all those sedentary months. In fact, you can walk your way to a toned, summer body and improved cardiovascular fitness.

Health walking, one of the hottest forms of exercise in the United States today, is an ideal summer activity. Nearly 60 million Americans are avid walkers.

Still, lazing by the poolside is easily the preferred activity when one is faced with the prospect of working out in the dog days of summer. Howard Jacobson, author of "Racewalk to Fitness" and consultant to Mazola corn oil, first official sponsor of the U.S. Race Walking Team and a sponsor of the 1988 U.S. Olympic Team, provides these simple tips for taking the heat out of a summertime fitness plan:

Drink plenty of liquids. "The key to safe walking in hot weather is water," Jacobson says. It is essential to keep fluid levels high so your blood volume remains at its normal level. Heat exhaustion can occur when the body loses water and electrolytes — sodium, magnesium, potassium — through perspiration during prolonged exercise.

Dress for the weather. In hot, humid weather, it is important to let your body breathe as much as possible. Nylon track shorts with built-in underpants are cool and lightweight — a popular choice for both men and women. Choose a cotton T-shirt to absorb sweat and keep you comfortable, and thin cotton anklet socks to prevent abrasions from walking shoes. Be sure the sock fits snugly, with no wrinkles or holes that can cause blisters.

Select lightweight, easy-to-care-for shoes. While leather shoes are wonderful for cooler weather, sneakers with nylon uppers will serve you well during the warm months. Opt for athletic shoes that fit comfortably and provide adequate support for both heels and ankles.

Wear headgear to protect yourself from the rays of sun. A lightweight cap provides protection against the powerful rays of the sun while keeping your entire body cool.

Use a sunscreen. Regardless of the season, whenever participating in an outdoor activity, protect your skin from harmful ultraviolet rays with a strong sunscreen.

Walk in the early morning or early evening to avoid the sun at its highest — and hottest. The middle four hours of the day — from 11 a.m. until about 3 p.m. — are the times in which the sun is at its strongest.

You also can take your walking regimen indoors. Air-conditioned malls and health clubs with indoor tracks — even high school gymnasiums — provide the necessary terrain for a workout as well as a welcome respite from the heat.

Walk on the beach. The wet, firm sand along the water provides a steady surface to maintain the posture and technique necessary for health walking.

When shaping up, diet goes hand in hand with exercise. Here are a few eating tips devised by Lauve Metcalfe, one of the top 10 Healthy American Fitness leaders named by the President's Council on Physical Fitness, and a spokeswoman for V8:

Pack some clout into your calories. Instead of drinking diet soda or coffee, opt for juice instead. Yogurt instead of sour cream on a power-packed baked potato; bran muffins; peanut butter on rice cakes; and a steady supply of crunchy raw vegetables are other good choices.

Don't eat like a race car driver. Many of us are full long before our brain has a chance to tell our stomach. Choose slow eating foods such as fruits that need to be peeled and hot soups. Or, try using chopsticks — they're fun and reduce the amount of food you can eat in one sweep.

Lose no more than 2 pounds a week. Crash diets might yield immediate results, but really do more harm than good. If your calorie intake drops below a certain level, your metabolic processes will slow down and your body will resist losing weight. When more calories start coming in, they are stored rather than burned.

Eat those foods you love — just not all the time or in huge quantities. A strict deprivation diet will be hard to stick to. Remember, it's not the one piece of cake that makes you fat, it's the whole cake.

Learn portion control. Watching how much you're eating is as important as monitoring what you eat. Because something is good, it does not mean a lot is better. Everyone needs protein, but no one needs to eat a 12-ounce steak. You don't have to weigh, measure and count, just employ good judgment and moderation.

Spice up your life. If you crave interesting tastes but think dieting means boring foods, learn new ways to add flavor without adding fat. Try a new herb or spice such as coriander or cumin. And, look for low-fat and low-sodium versions of products and enhance them with special seasonings.

Safety precautions make boating trips more enjoyable, fun for entire family

By BILL SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

Boating is fun for the entire family — as long as you take a few simple precautions.

Before leaving home, check all boat and trailer lights and accessories, both on your boat and on the trailer, to make sure they're working. If not, check for a burned-out fuse, broken wires or loose or worn connections. Replace them as needed.

If only one light or one accessory is not working, it could be a simple as a burned out bulb or a broken accessory.

Attach an extra tie-down rope from the boat's bow to the trailer. Don't rely on the trailer winch rope alone to hold the bow in its cradle.

Lock or tie the outboard motor securely in place, and leave sufficient road clearance. Don't rely just on the boat's steering of tilt mechanism to hold the motor in place while banging over bumps and potholes.

On a small outboard, a block of wood will do the job. Braces are available for larger rigs.

There are specific things to check to make sure your boating day ends when you're ready to quit, not when the motor quits.

Start with the fuel tank. Make sure there's no bubble of water rolling around on the bottom. If there is, dump the tank, clean out any corrosion, particularly if it's a metal tank, and refill with a fresh fuel-oil mixture.

Pump the primer bulb to pressurize the fuel system.

Check all hoses, carburetors and gaskets for leaks. Make sure all fasteners are in place.

Doublecheck all hoses.

Unleaded fuels include alcohol to boost octaine. Alcohol eats into rubber hoses. Replace them if there's any sign of damage, particularly around connections.

If this is your first trip of the year, remove the engine cowl, make sure no little friends are nesting under it. A new set of sparkplugs is a great investment.

Follow manufacturer's recommendations in checking for grease and oil in the engine. Always check for apparent leaks. Look for cracks around fill holes in the casing.

Make sure all drain holes and speedometer pickup holes are open. Inspect remote control cables and wiring harnesses. Operate the shift handle, turn the wheel. Lubricate parts if necessary.

Check the hitch. See that it's securely fastened to the tow vehicle, and all bolts are tight. Make sure the coupler is locked on the hitch ball and the safety chains are crossed under the tongue and secured to the hitch.

Trailer wheel lugs should be tight. Be sure the tires have proper air pressure.

If you are carrying any gear in the boat, make sure it's lashed down tightly. Watching your tackle box or rods fly out of the boat on the freeway is no way to start the day.

At the launch ramp, talk to other boaters about conditions on the lake. Let the trailer sit 15 minutes or so for the wheel bearings to cool, so cooling bearings don't suck water into the bearing cases while launching.

Disconnect electrical connections between the trailer and tow vehicle, remove all tie-downs and any braces on the outboard and make sure you've installed the transom plug on boats equipped with one.

Leave the motor tilted up for launch.

Then you can load your gear in the boat.

Try not to get the tow vehicle's wheels in the water. The underwater part of the ramp can be extremely slippery.

Helpful hints for traveling with children

School's out! Pack the suitcases, get the children ready - the vacation is about to begin!

Family travel is a wonderful time for children to expand their horizons - to see new places and new faces. To help make the most of your vacation, be sure to get organized before you depart.

Here are some helpful hints to keep in mind when getting ready for your next family vacation.

• Involve your children in the selection of a vacation spot. Give them a choice of several potential destinations, and have them "research" each one by checking travel books out of the library and writing to tourist bureaus to receive informaiton.

• Let the children help with the trip preparations. Give them plastic bags and encourage them to fill them with some of their favorite books, cards, toys, coloring books and crayons. These selections should keep them busy on long car trips.

• Encourage your children to keep diaries fo their trip adventures. Also have them keep "visual" notes by taking photographs of special spots along the way.

After the trip, when the pictures are developed, let the children create an album for a complete collection of trip memories.

• Buy postcards at stops along the way. Encourage children to mail postcards to their friends, gradnparents and neighbors.

Family travel is sure to be a rewarding experience for all. Just remember that the key to successfu travel lies in the advanc preparation.

For a free guide on planning an organizing for family or busines trips, send a self-addressed stamped, business-size envelope to "Tips for Making Travel Terrific," Department #1400, P.O. Box 78980 New Augusta, IN 46278.

Disposable camera produces picture perfect vacation

Travel and photography may be a perfect combination, but a heavy or expensive camera and outdoor activities are not always so compatible.

The new disposable cameras offer an alternative, however. Compact, inexpensive and weighing just a few ounces, disposable cameras are ideal for both experienced photographers and novices.

the beauty of the disposable camera is its simplicity. Designed essentially as a roll of film with a built-in lens and shutter, there's no film loading or unloading to worry about - it's all done for you.

After you've finished the roll, just take the entire package to any processor. No special processing techniques are required.

And, using a disposable camera does not mean having to sacrifice quality. Fuji pioneered the 35mm disposable camera in 1987 with the introduction of the Fuji-color Quicksnap, which gives you 24 snapshots on top-of-the-line Fujicolor Super HR 400 film. The larger 35mm negative size produces pictures that are sharper and clearer than 110 or disk format film.

A Quicksnap is the perfect "second camera" - capable of producing the high quality pictures you have come to expect from traditional 35mm cameras.

Disposable cameras are available at a number of convenient locations, such as camera counters, food and drug stores, and resort areas.

They can be easily carried in a pocket or knapsack, and are always ready for spontaneous picture-taking - even on that mountain climb or ski trip, and other locations where you risk loss of or damage to your more expensive camera.

Area art students win national awards

From Staff Reports

Nine high school and junior high school art students from the West Texas-Eastern New Mexico region, which includes Midland and Odessa, won 10 national honors in the National Scholastic Art Awards in New York.

This was the 61st year of the national Scholastic Art Awards program for the encouragement of student achievement in creative art. The competition is conducted nationally by Scholastic Inc., Eastman Kodak Company, Hallmark Cards Incorporated, and the Strathmore Paper Company.

The 1988 West Texas Regional Competition, sponsored by the Department of Art, Texas Tech University in Lubbock, sent regional gold key finalist winners to New York for competition in the national competition. National judges reviewed junior and senior high school gold key finalist award winning art works in March.

Terry Morrow, chairman of the Department of Art at Texas Tech, recently received the listing of National Award Winners from this region. Those winners include:

— Jose Martinez, 13, San Jacinto Junior High, teacher: Janet S. Haney, Midland, medal for a mixed media;

— Don Ewalt, 14, Nimitz Junior High, teacher: Essie Chandler, Odessa, medal for a watercolor;

— Jeremiah Hernandez, 14, Nimitz Junior High, teacher: Essie Chandler, Odessa, Hallmark Honor Prize for a watercolor;

— Sean Williams, 12, Nimitz Junior High, teacher: Essie Chandler, Odessa, honorable mention for a mixed media; — and, Darlene Orneiaz, 13, teacher Lois Lawrence, Slaton Junior High, Slaton, medal for work in printmaking.

The exhibition will run from June 24 through July 13, beginning with the opening reception from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. June 24.

Videos will be shown on art

Video Tuesdays at the Museum of the Southwest are continuing through the summer months as part of the Museum of the Southwest's educational and entertainment programming.

The videos, shown at noon, 2 and 4 p.m. each Tuesday, are on topics relating to Museum collections, exhibitions, art history, art techniques and archaeology.

Those attending at noon may bring a lunch to eat while viewing the video.

Programs scheduled through July include:

— Tuesday, "At the Met, Flowers and Gardens," which deals with the relationship between art and flowers, and "The 18th Century Woman," which shows an array of gowns, costumes, accessories, jewelry and paintings to evoke the lives of the century's most important women and the Age of Enlightenment";

— June 21, "Georgia O'Keeffe," a look at the artist who talks about her work;

— June 28, to be announced;

— July 5, "Treasures of the Holy Land," ancient art from the Israel Museum;

— July 12, "New World Visions, Part I," American art and the Metropolitan Museum, 1650 to 1820;

— July 19, "New World Visions, Part II," American art and the Metropolitan Museum, 1820-1914;

— July 26, "The Hudson River and Its Painters," major artists from American's first native school of landscape painters.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, JUNE 13, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You need your associates and partners more than you realize! Do your regular work, but also take time to provide for the future.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: poet William Butler Yeats, producer Ralph Edwards, football star "Red" Grange, comedian Paul Lynde, actors Basil Rathbone and Richard Thomas.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Lots of travel or correspondence will be dumped in your lap this week. Your leadership skills will be tested. Get to the point quickly in discussions with higher-ups. Be concise, factual.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You will have the advantage in almost any confrontation today. Guard your rights in a relationship or you could end up losing. Good health depends on your getting enough sleep and eating the right food.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Narrow your field of interest. If necessary, go back to school to get the skills you need to become a specialist. Financial help will be available when you need it. Have faith.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You find that you do not really like life in the fast lane. Look for a job that offers you a challenge as well as money. Facing reality will greatly improve a relationship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Force an issue and roadblocks will spring up. Avoid frustration. Bide your time and you will eventually get your way. Do not take criticism so personally. Use it to improve your performance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid someone at work who asks too many personal questions. You could hit the jackpot on a shopping spree. Buy necessities only. A strong-willed child needs firm but loving guidance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be tactful with a young person going through a tough time. A public argument could lead to the breakup of a longtime relationship. Quietly work out your differences with mate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your plans could be dealt an unexpected setback. Business people change their minds. You gain valuable time. Devote more attention to the personal side of your life. Romance perks up.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Important career gains can be made now. Shun the limelight and you will learn somebody's secrets. Avoid interfering people. A compromise helps mend a rift between you and loved one.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A real estate deal can be highly lucrative if you move quickly. Influential people may not be in a helpful mood. Do not ask for special favors. Romance has its ups and downs.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Higher-ups applaud your work performance. A raise or promotion is a certainty. Keep your actions open and aboveboard. Check correspondence carefully. Travel requires special caution. Protect your belongings. Stay alert.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be prepared to make some personal sacrifices if you are serious about improving your finances. Decide the best way to recoup recent losses. Consult mate about evening plans before volunteering to work overtime.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 ◇	Pass	2 NT	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	3 NT	Pass
5 ◇	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠ Even seemingly simple contracts can have their pitfalls. When planning the play, be sure you have taken care of all contingencies.

The auction was straightforward. South showed a hand that expected to take 11 tricks with diamonds as trumps, and North concluded correctly that his hand was unlikely to produce a trick.

Declarer ruffed the opening lead and banged out the ace of trumps to get the bad news. He realized that he was in danger of losing a trick in each suit except spades, so he tried to ruff a club after cashing the ace-king. Unfortunately, West ruffed higher, led a heart to his partner's ace and got another club ruff for down one.

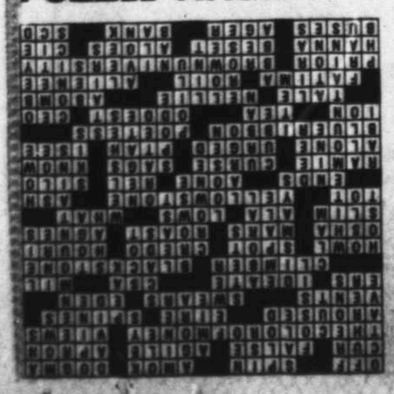

No one is denying that declarer ran into a decidedly unlucky lie of the cards. But as is so often the case, there was a way to get home even though both minor suits were unfriendly.

Suppose that, when he learns the bad news in trumps, declarer leads a heart. That cuts the line of communication between East and West before East could put his entry to good use. And West cannot afford to win the heart and lead a trump, because that would be giving away his trump trick.

Now, when declarer regains the lead he can cash two high clubs and then lead a low club, and West is faced with a Hobson's choice. If he ruffs, he gives up his trump trick; if he does not, dummy can ruff and the club suit is good. Either way, declarer will lose only two tricks.

PUZZLE ANSWER

Grand Prize poem worth $1,000

Prizes worth over $10,000 will be awarded to 151 winning poets in the American Poetry Association's current poetry contest.

The Grand Prize winner receives $1,000. Poems must be mailed by June 30 to be eligible to win. Contest entry is free and everyone is welcome to enter.

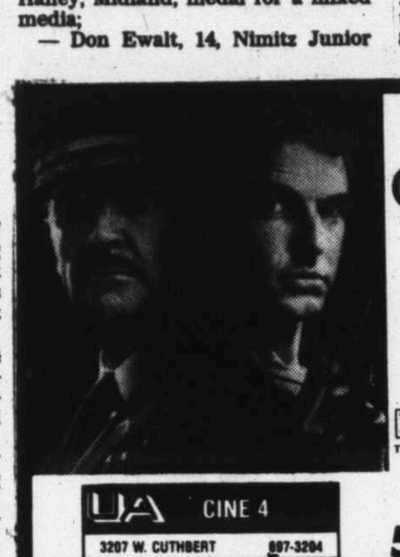

"New and little-known poets are just the ones we are looking for," said John Frost, chief editor of the Association. "We want to discover them and spotlight their talent."

Interested poets may send up to five poems of no more than 20 lines each, with name and address on each page to American Poetry Association, Dept. CN-63, 250 A Potrero Street, P.O. Box 1803, Santa Cruz, Calif. 95061-1803.

Poems mailed by June 30 are eligible to win, prizes awarded by August 31. Another contest begins July 1, ends December 31, prizes by February 28.

Poems are judged on originality and sincerity, and every poem is also considered for publication.

In the last six years the American Poetry Association has sponsored 26 contests and awarded over $91,000.00 in prizes to more than 2,400 poets.

Midlander combining art, golf

George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

Midlander Pat Barton warms up at Odessa's Mission Country Club for Monday's Women's West Texas Golf Association's 54th annual tournament tee-off. In addition to playing in the tournament, Mrs. Barton is the artist whose painting provides the cover for this year's program.

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Pat Barton's memory doesn't recall a time when art wasn't a part of her life.

"For as long as I can remember, I have painted and studied art," says the former Odessa resident who now lives in Midland. "When I was at Permian High School in Odessa, I was named 'Most Artistic.' I started taking private classes and training in high school and have continued throughout my life with classes in various media."

Mrs. Barton has another interest, one she has been involved in for 15 years.

Golf.

This year the two interests have found a singular expression. When golf enthusiasts attend the Women's West Texas Golf Association's 54th annual tournament Monday through Friday at Odessa's Mission Country Club, the program bears a rhinestone cowgirl painted by her.

"Being involved in the tournament and being a co-chairman of the tournament means a lot to begin with, but being able to personally produce something tangible for the participants themselves means a lot to me, too," Mrs. Barton says. "Each of these girls will be presented with one of these souvenir books and will take them home with them to the cities they are representing."

Mrs. Barton is serving as co-chairman with Linda Koontz. Chairman is Miriam Gaddy.

The tournament is dedicated to the late Bobbye Prichard, a popular area golfer and longtime participant in the West Texas Tournament. To date, 144 women from 32 clubs in West Texas will be competing including over 50 from Midland and Odessa. All of the women's golf associations in both towns are represented.

"For as long as I can remember, I have painted and studied art. When I was at Permian High School in Odessa, I was named 'Most Artistic.' I started taking private classes and training in high school and have continued throughout my life with classes in various media...Being involved in the tournament and being a co-chairman of the tournament means a lot to begin with, but being able to personally produce something tangible for the participants themselves means a lot to me, too."

— Pat Barton

"So many of us that have worked on the tournament have put some of ourselves into it in different ways — I painted the program cover, Peggy McCrary wrote a song about Midland and Odessa that will be sung at the welcome party tonight — and numerous girls took it upon themselves to canvas the Midland and Odessa business communities to solicit the financial support necessary for a tournament of this magnitude," Mrs. Barton says.

"It's taken a lot of man hours from a number of people to get us to this point and we're looking forward to a successful tournament."

Last year's champion, Robin Madison from Amarillo, will be returning to defend her title. Mona Jennings from Wheeler, who was last year's medalist at Wichita Falls, also will be competing, as will Carol Tidwell, senior medalist from Odessa Country Club. OCC also won last year's team trophy, with the two lowest individual scores.

The tournament includes a championship flight and eight other flights, with qualifying rounds to be held Monday. Contestants' handicaps range from 3 to 36, with 15 of the golfers having single digit handicaps and over two-thirds having handicaps of 20 or under.

Some champions of this tournament have gone on to play professional golf, including Sandra Palmer and Linda Hunt.

"This is the third Women's West Texas I have competed in," says Mrs. Barton, who has her Texas Real Estate License and is employed as one of two administrative assistants at Dave Leonard Construction Co.

"I played in it in El Paso and last year when it was held in Wichita Falls. It is a fine tournament, and we feel privileged to be having it here in our area this year."

Mrs. Barton was a contestant in the Women's Southwestern for five years; a Flight Runner-Up in 1975 in Tucson, Ariz.; received Most Improved in 1975 at Horizon Country Club, El Paso; and was in 1986 the President's Flight Winner, Club Championship, Mission Country Club and the 1987 Club Champion at Mission Country Club.

Her most enthusiastic supporter is husband David, vice president of Bosworth/C.A. Gray Company.

"My husband is also an avid golfer and is my biggest supporter, both in golf and in my artistic endeavors."

At Texas Tech University, Mrs. Barton studied architecture and commercial art.

"Presently, most of the painting I do is 'tole painting.' I supply pieces to a gift shop in Midland and enjoy painting items for family and friends," she says.

Those family members include Mrs. Barton's children Daylan Barton, 29, and Darren Barton, 21, who live in Mesa, Ariz., and Tracy Leak, 24, who lives in Midland, and her grandchildren Christopher and Ashlee Barton and Russell Leak.

"All my life, painting has been a very enjoyable and rewarding hobby for me," Mrs. Barton says. She laughs and adds, "Golf and painting rank right up there as being almost as much fun as being a grandmother."

Granbury schedules July 4th celebration

GRANBURY — Lots of cookin' and stirrin' will blend the ingredients for a sizzlin' Fourth of July Celebration in Granbury. In keeping with the theme, "Catch The Country Spirit!" visitors will be able to step back in time the good old country way.

"Two spirited and fun-filled days, July 3rd and 4th, are planned to make this Fourth a delight," says a release from the Granbury Visitor's Center.

The arts and crafts booths will open at noon July 3rd. Located under huge tents on the historic Courthouse Square and at the Shanley Park Footbridge, the booths will offer a wide range of handcrafted items such as Victorian lace items, Country French dresses, exotic leathercraft, Appalachian handmade baskets, wheelthrown pottery, watercolor and oil painting, and Christmas in July gifts. The talents of the 160 craftsmen represent Granburians as well as distant travelers from as far away as New Orleans, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and of course, East and Southwest Texas.

The flagship of the food booths will be the ever-popular "Buffalo Burgers," first cousin to the all-American favorite hamburger. All of the food concessions will be located at Shanley Park, site of "Picnic-In-The-Park." Tables and chairs under the protection of a huge tent will offer a cool setting for the enjoyment of food and drink, or a place to sit and relax.

To cap off the day, a twilight street dance will begin at 7:30 p.m.

"July 4th will be a no-holds-barred razzle dazzle day as all the events begin to unfold," the release says.

The Firecracker Five 5K Race will blast off at 8:30 a.m. from the Old Hood County Depot Station. "Friendly" contests of all kinds, a petting zoo, the children's mini-carnival, and live entertainment will keep revelers busy for the day.

At 10:00 a.m. the parade will begin.

"No small town parade here — traditionally this monster lasts 1½ to 2 hours! Bands, floats, horses, clowns, antique cars, kids on bicycles, and firetrucks with sirens wailing will snake through town," the release says.

Water ski enthusiasts will enjoy the Ski Spree, presented by the Slalom Shop.

"Professionals and amateurs will delight the crowd gathered at the private lake inside Water's Edge," the release says.

The grand finale to the entire festival will be a fireworks display over Lake Granbury. "Spectacular with lots of sizzle, glitter, and flash, this show will play on the emotions that are so much a part of our Stars and Stripes celebration," the release says.

Applications for the 5K race, parade, arts and crafts booths, or food booths may be obtained by contacting the Granbury Visitor Center, (817) 573-5548, P.O. Box 100, Granbury 76048.

Gilley reflects on 'Urban Cowboy'

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Singer Mickey Gilley, whose earthy Texas nightclub was the focus of the movie "Urban Cowboy," hasn't set foot in the honky-tonk for two years.

And he hasn't regularly worn a cowboy hat for three years.

Gilley

Eight years after John Travolta and co-star Debra Winger launched a fad known as "cowboy chic," Gilley has broken the ties that symbolized him as the country music singer most associated with the craze.

The 52-year-old performer is in litigation over the nightclub in Pasadena, Texas, where most of the 1980 movie was filmed. He claims an associate has let the cavernous club get run down.

"I drive by the club all the time, but I've not been in it for two years," Gilley said in a telephone interview. "The business has practically died. The parking lot used to be full; now you can count the cars. I think it's just a matter of time until it goes under."

And his cowboy hat, part of the Western attire that became fashionable because of the popularity of the movie, has seen its last roundup.

"I've got hair; there's nothing to cover up," Gilley said. "I don't feel like a cowboy hat is something that's going to make or break my career. People had fun with that era and I did too. People wonder where's my hat, but I haven't worn one now for three years. People just haven't seen me as much."

As one of the country music stars who sang in the movie, Gilley shot to the top in show business on the tails of "cowboy chic."

He appeared in "The Dukes of Hazzard," "The Fall Guy," "Hollywood Squares" and "Fantasy Island."

His concert fee rose from $5,000 to $25,000. One night he was paid $50,000 for 90 minutes to perform at Billy Bob's nightclub in Fort Worth, Texas, a club that has since closed as the fad tailed off.

Gilley had six straight No. 1 country hits in the early 1980s when the movement peaked. His hits included "Stand by Me," "True Love Ways" and "Don't the Girls All Get Prettier at Closing Time."

Now, the era is a memory just like the mechanical bulls featured in the movie.

"Everything has its day," he said, reflecting on the "cowboy chic" heyday. "Nothing lasts forever. People don't realize that the 'urban cowboy' fad had gone on in Texas for years and years.

"People had fun with it. When 'Urban Cowboy' hit, it affected the whole world. Travolta brought everything to front and center. It was like a billboard going up.

"Had it not been for him playing that part, it would not have had the impact. He had done 'Saturday Night Fever,' and this was 'country night fever.' It was a different lifestyle, and it worked.

"Everyone became a cowboy or cowgirl. It was like when the Beatles came over and everyone grew their hair long and shook their heads. Everyone wanted to be part of what was happening. I'll remember it forever."

In the movie, Travolta learned how to ride a mechanical bull at the nightclub in order to win the favor of Winger, who was then a relatively unknown actress.

Today, Gilley is not sure the devices were such a good idea. They were contraptions, ridden as one would a bull, whose gyrating was controlled by an operator.

"It was a rodeo training device and should never have been put in an entertainment establishment in the first place," Gilley said. "We still have suits pending over it."

Nevertheless, nightclubs such as Gilley's sprang up across the country, many of them with mechanical bulls. Some were converted discos and were patronized by customers in snappy cowboy hats, shiny cowboy boots and stylish Western wear.

"I probably remember the impact on country attire the most," Gilley said. "It was the first time you could walk into a casino in Las Vegas or Reno or Lake Tahoe or Atlantic City and see guys in cowboy hats. It changedthe mood. It had its flash in the pan."

Conference slated about mushrooms

TELLURIDE, Colo. — The eighth annual Telluride Mushroom Conference, a teaching conference designed for persons interested in edible, psychoactive, and poisonous wild mushrooms, will be held in Telluride, Colo. on August 25-28.

The Conference is sponsored by Fungophile, a Denver-based nonprofit organization.

An array of nationally recognized authorities on edible, psychoactive, and poisonous wild mushrooms will present three days of lectures and workshops: Gary Lincoff, Past President of the North American Mycological Association, on the Identification of Wild Mushrooms; Andrew Weil, Research Associate, University of Arizona, on Mushrooms, Health and Nutrition; Alexander Shulgin, psychopharmocologist, on Mushroom Tasting and the Federal Law; Bob Harris, President, Mushroompeople, on Mushroom Cultivation; John Corbin, Cultivation Specialist, on Growing Mushrooms on Straw; Linnea Gillman, Past President, Colorado Mycological Society, on Mushrooms of the Southern Rocky Mountains; Emanuel Salzman, Co-editor, Mushroom Poisoning, on Poisonous Mushrooms.

Daily forays will be led by experienced guides in the forests surrounding Telluride, generally productive of a wide variety of wild mushrooms, particularly the edible species.

For information about registration and fees, write Fungophile, Box 5503, Denver, Colo. 80217-5503, or call 1-303-296-9359.

Laughing Joe Piscopo now riding high

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Joe Piscopo's beginnings on the comedy trail may well have started when his father took him to see Jerry Lewis in "The Nutty Professor" at a New Jersey movie house.

"I remember the theater, the seat, everything," he says. "Boy, I just thought that it was the greatest movie ever made. It may very well have been; I still feel that way when I watch it on videotape.

"I remember me and my dad and my brother watching the movie and seeing Jerry go into his character which I'm sure influenced me in later comedy years," said Piscopo as he did a Lewis imitation.

"Brilliant, brilliant, brilliant. Jerry directed that, too."

Twenty-five years later, Piscopo is riding high: television specials, concerts ("The Momentary Madness Tour"), a book ("The Piscopo Tapes"), constant exposure on commercials (Miller Lite) and movies.

The latest is "Dead Heat," in which he and Treat Williams do battle with a gang of thugs who won't die. You might think that the intense Williams and the loose Piscopo would make an incongruous couple both on and off the screen.

"Treat was great," the comedian said. "Treat's got as sick a sense of humor as I do, and it was wild. Between takes and everything, we had a great time. Treat worked very hard on this film; he had a lot of makeup he had to get in — eight hours of makeup for certain scenes.

"For some reason we both did silly things — like Jerry Lewis impressions throughout the movie. When we got punchy, we started doing Jerry back and forth; it kept us going. It's very important to be on the same wave length on a picture like this."

"Dead Heat" has had a lukewarm reception from both critics and audiences, and it appears that Piscopo hasn't quite found himself in films. Oddly, his first three roles have been crime-oriented: a wacky hit man in the gangster spoof, "Johnny Dangerously" which starred Michael Keaton; a mob errand boy with Danny DeVito "Wise Guys." Neither lighted up the box-office charts.

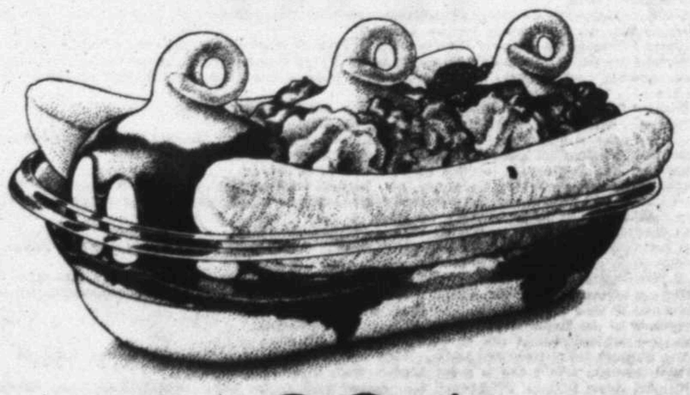

Piscopo observed that graduates of "Saturday Night Live" follow two courses in their film careers: they either arrive with a bang such as the late John Belushi and comedian Eddie Murphy; or, they have a slow buildup to the top such as Dan Aykroyd and Chevy Chase. Piscopo figures he's in the latter category.

The Piscopo story began 38 years ago in Passaic, N.J., where his father was a lawyer. The comic majored in surfing throughout much of his school life, but managed to earn a degree in broadcasting at Jones College in Jacksonville, Fla. He worked as a disc jockey and dinner theater actor, but his comedy career really began when he started performing at the Improvisation in New York.

The "Saturday Night Live" producers liked his stuff and signed him in 1980.

"It was pretty devastating," Piscopo recalled. "I had been doing very well at the Improv and with television commercials. On 'Saturday Night Live' we had to replace Bill Murray and Danny Aykroyd and Gilda Radner, and it was an impossible task. The show in its first year was an abomination, real bad."
