War update

■ An American Apache attack helicopter firing Hellfire missiles destroyed two American military vehicles, killing two soldiers and wounding six.

■ American and Iraqi patrols clashed along the border with Saudi Arabia in seven separate engagements between 5 a.m. and 10 a.m. Sunday.

■ Allied commanders increasingly believe Iraq has limited data on U.S. troop locations and was sending patrols into Saudi Arabia to get facts.

■ Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz arrived in Moscow and a meeting today with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev.

■ President Bush's security adviser, Brent Scowcroft, said Sunday that past Soviet attempts to help Saddam Hussein engineer an "elusive withdrawal with dignity" had ended in failure.

■ The Pentagon declined to comment on a newspaper report that the allies planned a big ground and sea attack on Iraq this week. Citing unidentified U.S. officers in Washington, the Los Angeles Times reported the attack would come if Iraq did not surrender or agree to a "diplomatic deal" in the next three days.

■ Secretary of State James Baker refused to comment on a French claim that the allies had set a date for a ground offensive.

Teacher's trial

EXETER, N.H. — A 23-year-old teacher goes on trial this week, accused of hiring three students, one of them her alleged lover, to kill her husband of less than a year and make it look like robbers did it. Three teen-age boys already have pleaded guilty and are expected to be key witnesses in the trial of Pamela Smart. A fourth teen also is charged. The former media services teacher at Winnacunnet High School is charged with conspiracy to commit murder, being an accomplice to murder and witness tampering in the May 1 death of her husband, Gregory, 24. She is also accused of trying to hire someone to kill a 16-year-old girl, also a former student, who is expected to testify against her.

■ Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz arrives in Moscow for talks that may offer Baghdad's last chance to avoid invasion.

N.Y. Times News Service

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — As Tariq Aziz, the Iraqi foreign minister, arrived in Moscow for talks that may offer Baghdad its last chance to avoid a bloody land war, American troops only hours earlier had fought a series of sharp skirmishes with Iraqi forces on Saudi Arabia's northern borders.

Aziz is to meet with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbchev today. He arrived in Moscow after a day full of official, sometimes contradictory statements on when the allied forces might start a ground offensive.

Roland Dumas, the French foreign minister, said in a radio interview in Paris that "we are on the eve or the pre-eve of the ground offensive for the liberation of Kuwait." But the French defense minister, Pierre Joxe, said that no date had been set. "The table is set," an American general said, predicting an attack later this week unless Gorbachev made quick progress toward a peace settlement at his meeting with Aziz.

In addition to such statements, there were reports of the densest traffic in weeks on and north of the Tapline Road, which runs along the Kuwaiti frontier. Further eve-of-battle tension was generated by a pool dispatch from correspondents in the Persian Gulf that said 31 American amphibious assault ships, loaded with troops, had gathered offshore in preparation for possible landings in Kuwait.

But there was no official confirmation, and some suspected an effort was underway to spread confusion to veil the allies' true intentions from President Saddam Hussein.

President Bush said in Kennebunkport, Maine, that he expected Iraq's occupation of Kuwait to end "very, very

War twists leave churchgoers somber

By Robert D. McFadden
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — It was not the trauma of Hiroshima or the euphoria of V-E Day, but New Yorkers at religious observances on Sunday looked back on a four-day emotional roller coaster.

It had plunged with the killing of innocents in Baghdad, risen with Saddam Hussein's offer to withdraw from Kuwait, plunged again as President Bush rejected it as a cruel hoax and lurched once more with talk of a ground war perhaps only days away.

After a month of censored reports, military euphemisms and images of precision bombing that looked more like fuzzy video games, the reality of the war had been brought home in stark pictures of burned children and mutilated bodies, of wailing and rage in the streets of Baghdad.

In churches, synagogues and mosques across the New York area, most worship pers seemed to accept the explanations of American officials who insisted that the Baghdad shelter had been a military command center. In more than 70,000 aircraft sorties, most people said, a tragic mistake was bound to happen.

But expressions of profound regret suffused prayers and commentaries that touched on the bombing, and while only a few people suggested that Iraq's peace proposal had been rejected too swiftly, the antiwar themes that stirred the na-

Drug-pricing law backfires on Medicaid

By Robert Pear
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Congress recently passed a law requiring drug companies to give Medicaid the same deep discounts they give other big customers. But instead of reducing Medicaid drug prices, many companies are now raising the prices those other big customers must pay.

For two decades, Medicaid, the federal-state health program for poor people, has paid more for prescription drugs than other large purchasers, like government and private health groups, which have negotiated discounts of 25 percent to 60 percent or more off the usual wholesale prices.

Until last year, the government did not demand such discounts because federal Medicare officials did not focus much on the cost of drugs and drug companies argued that their prices were justified by the high costs of pharmaceutical.

Under the law, which was passed despite objections from the drug industry and took effect on Jan. 1, drug makers must offer state Medicaid programs the lowest price available to any purchaser in the market.

Now drug companies are increasing

Big Spring's mayor is, well, a character

BIG SPRING — Maxwell Dee Green figures that he is some sort of character.

It's not just the way he talks or what he does but his whole attitude.

Green, Big Spring's mayor, is a plainspoken sort whose country background figures strongly in his slow, deliberate, folksy lingo.

He fiddles, sings a bit, rides motorcycles, dabbles in politics, touts Big Spring, works with a pencil for a living, and smokes no more.

"At one time, I smoked up to four packs of cigarettes a day," he said. "I never said I quit smoking; I just don't smoke 'em no more."

He doesn't claim to be particularly tough even though

Williams backers jump on Richards' 'late train'

DALLAS (AP) — Dozens of supporters who helped Republican Clayton Williams outspend Democrat Ann Richards gave her more than $148,000 shortly after she was elected governor, a newspaper reported.

At least 60 donors — both individuals and political action committees — that supported Williams exclusively before the election came through with contributions after Richards was elected in November, according to a copyright story in Sunday editions of The Dallas Morning News.

Donors to Richards in one of the costliest gubernatorial races ever included Austin lobbyists and at least two state agency appointees of the previous Republican governor.

Lawyers, chiropractors, nursing home operators and oil industry executives also contributed to Richards.

"I basically did not want to be on her out list," said Donald Bonham of Houston, chairman of the Fiesta Mart stores.

The post-election windfall is a practice known in Austin political circles as joining "the late train."

Bonham supported Williams in the general election with contributions totaling $25,000. But after Richards won, he gave $10,000 to help retire her campaign debt.

Officials promise probe of former Contra's death

Bermudez

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — An official from the Sandinista-controlled security police Sunday promised a full-scale probe into the slaying of former Contra chief Enrique Bermudez, whose death cast doubt on government assurances for the safety of other rebels who laid down their arms.

But a right-wing radio station blamed the slaying of Bermudez late Saturday on Sandinista sympathizers, some of whom cheered the news of the killing.

Officials said they had no suspects and no one immediately claimed responsibilty for the killing.

A gunman shot Bermudez, 58, outside his car near the downtown Intercontinental Hotel Saturday night then fled on foot.

Vice Interior Minister Jose Pallais said it appeared Bermudez was followed, and was shot twice from a distance of five to six feet.

Sports Minister Carlos Garcia, who graduated from the Military Academy in 1952 with Bermudez, said he saw the former Contra leader in the hotel bar shortly after 9 p.m.

Produce growers wary about free-trade impact

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fruit and vegetable growers are keeping a wary eye on free trade negotiations with Mexico, fearing competition could mean declining profits for U.S. producers.

"Anybody who grows (produce), or who works for growers has a considerable stake in this matter," said John McClung of the United Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Association.

And Wayne Showers, president of Griffin and Brand Inc. in Texas' Rio Grande Valley, one of the country's largest produce growers and importers, says "there will be some serious competition here on certain fruits and vegetables."

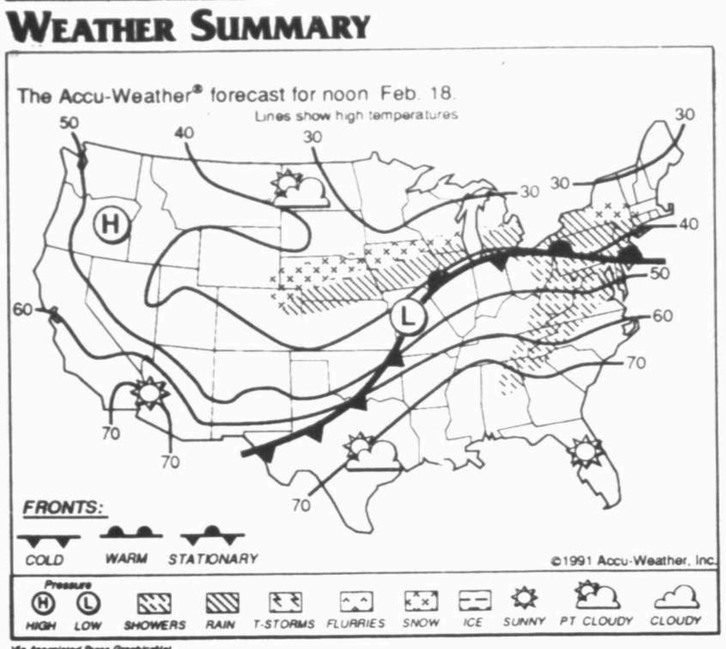

The industry fears, and a government study confirms, that U.S. growers could face significant competition from Mexican produce, harvested with far cheaper labor, if tariffs and other trade barriers are lifted under a free trade agreement.

But producers of fruits or vegeta-

Tonight to be cold, cloudy

Today's forecast is for variable cloudiness turning cold in the afternoon with a high near 60. Winds will be southwest to west 15-25 mph, shifting to north by afternoon, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight is predicted to be cold and cloudy with a 20 percent chance of light rain and a low near 30.

Tuesday's forecast is cold with decreasing cloudiness and a high near 50, the NWS said.

Sunday's high was 75, compared with the record high of 82, set in 1977. The record low for today's date is 12, set in 1942.

STATE

Light rain and scattered showers developed across most of Texas Sunday as a low-pressure system in Oklahoma pulled moist gulf air across the state.

Thunderstorms were forecast for the beginning of the week, with fog and drizzle in Central Texas and the Hill Country and a chance of snow in the Panhandle.

Afternoon highs Sunday ranged from 60s in West Texas and 70s in the north to the 80s in the Rio Grande and Concho valleys and the Edwards Plateau.

Small hail fell briefly during a storm at the El Paso Airport.

Winds, mostly southerly under the influence of the low-pressure system, were clocked at 15 to 25 mph, with gusts of up to 75 mph at Guadalupe Pass in far West Texas, the National Weather Service said.

NATION

Snow fell Sunday in parts of New England, the Dakotas and some of the western states. Rain dampened the northern Pacific Coast and parts of the South.

Snowfall stretched from central New York state through parts of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Virginia, South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado and the mountains of central Washington state.

TIMETABLE: A day of contradictory statements

soon." Secretary of State James A. Baker III declined comment on Dumas's statement when he was asked about it in a Cable News Network television interview, but Brig. Gen. Richard I. Neal, the American military spokesman in Riyadh, told reporters: "I don't know the date, and I don't think there is a date."

Two Americans were killed and six were wounded, the United States command said, when the their M-113 armored personnel carrier and Bradley fighting vehicle were hit in one of seven clashes with Iraqis probing south from their bases in Iraq and Kuwait. The command said they were probably struck by American Hellfire missiles fired from Apache attack helicopters.

A total of 20 enemy soldiers were reported to have been captured in two of the engagements. All the engagements happened between 5 a.m. and 10 a.m. on Sunday, Neal said, and all were initiated by Iraqi units "trying to determine the disposition of United States and coalition forces." Some were long, some short, he added, some involved close combat, and some involved only artillery barrages at long range.

The American troops, apparently including both Marines and Army forces, destroyed three enemy tanks with TOW missiles, plus two armored cars, mortars, and a rocket launcher. The 20 captives, who were said to have brought documents with them, surrendered while their positions were under attack by Apaches, and the choppers herded them to the rear — "kind of unique," as Neal described it.

Of the 14 American ground troops killed in the 32 days of fighting to date, 10 have now been listed as the confirmed or suspected vistims of "friendly fire." Only four have died so far at the hands of the enemy.

Since the last "friendly fire" incident two weeks ago, Neal said, procedures intended to avoid such epsiodes have been reviewed and changes have been made. He would not specify the changes, but insisted that "we have a solid program of trying to avoid friendly casualties."

The Apaches which fired the missiles into the Bradley and the M-113 — a large armored vehicle with special electronic equipment to scan the battlefield — carry cannon, laser-guided missiles, and rockets. Their job is to kill enemy tanks, and the incident apparently came when Iraqi tanks engaged the Americans in the dark.

There was no suggestion that the clashes along the border, which ended a period of relative calm there, were directly connected with an impending attack by coalition forces.

"I think Saddam feels like he's blind," Neal asserted, "so that he's trying to find out what the hell's out there in front of him."

There was also no letup in the air attack on Saddam's forces, despite hints that the Iraqi leader might be preparing to improve his offer to discuss a withdrawal from Kuwait.

TWISTS: Reality of war has been brought home

tion a generation ago resounded anew from pulpit and pew as the mood in many houses of worship turned darker in a difficult week of war.

"It ought not to be considered radical to ask the government for an immediate cease-fire," the Rev. James A. Forbes Jr. told 1,500 members of his congregation at Riverside Church on the Upper West Side of Manhattan. "God can't achieve his purpose by destruction."

In a service that resounded from stained glass window to Gothic arch, with choir and congregation singing new lyrics to John Lennon's "Give Peace a Chance," Forbes said: "We as a Christian community have a responsibility to ask that we give peace a chance. We can't look to the military-industrial complex to solve our problems."

After the service, Eleanor Hiatt of Maywood, N.J., said: "I'm appalled that we are on the eve of a ground war. The war never should have started."

At the Union Church of Pocantico Hills in Westchester County, N.Y., the Rev. William B. Doster called Saddam Hussein "one of the most evil men who ever lived," but cautioned congregants against embracing "the idol of military power" to fight him.

"Missiles killed hundreds of people, including women and children, although all military intelligence showed it was a military target," he said. "It's nice to think that only the enemy does it, but the fact is if you're serious about winning the war we all do it."

The mood was somber and reflective at St. Patrick's Cathedral in midtown Manhattan, where Vatican and American flags hung in the vaulted nave and Cardinal John O'Connor, the archbishop of New York, recalled soaring hopes and guttering disappointment at the news of a peace plan offered and rejected. He asked for prayers for an end to the war.

"No decent person wants this war," said the cardinal, a former Navy chaplain who has called for peace since the fighting began but has never denounced the war or President Bush. "We all want to end it very rapidly."

PRICING: Supporters of the legislation are furious

prices to some of those other purchasers, including the Department of Veterans Affairs, prepaid health plans like the giant Kaiser Permanente group, hospitals, family planning clinics and community health centers for migrant workers, homeless people and the indigent.

Health care experts say these added costs may soon trickle down to consumers in the form of higher medical costs, and ultimately, insurance premiums.

In October, the Congressional Budget Office estimated that the Medicaid discounts would save $1.9 billion for the federal government and $1.4 billion for the states over five years.

Assuming that such savings would be achieved, Congress substantially expanded Medicaid benefits for pregnant women, children and frail elderly people.

Supporters of the 1990 legislation are furious. The chief sponsor, Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., chairman of the Special Committee on Aging, said the price increases appeared to be "an attempt to circumvent the new Medicaid law," shift costs and nullify the savings envisioned by Congress.

Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., acknowledged that the price increases were legal,but he added: "This is a very foolish move by drug companies. It will be seen as a transparent attempt to get around the intent of Congress."

In opposing the legislation, the drug industry termed it a violation of "free-market principles" and warned that it would disrupt the market.

Jeffrey C. Warren, vice president of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association, said its 100 member companies "make their own decisions about prices and do not talk among themselves about the effects of the new Medicaid drug law on individual companies because such discussions could raise substantial antitrust issues."

But a lobbyist for the drug industry, who would speak only on the condition of anonymity, said: "We are surprised that Senator Pryor is surprised. I don't know what else he would have expected.

"It's logical that companies would re-examine their prices if Congress passes a law saying that Medicaid, which accounts for about 10 percent of our revenues, must get the best price given to any pharmaceutical customer."

PROBE: Death casts doubt on assurances of safety

local time Saturday.

Bermudez told him he had been looking in vain for someone.

"'I'm leaving,'" Garcia said Bermudez told him. "'I don't want to get you hurt. There are people here who think only evil.'"

Minutes later, Bermudez was sprawled on his back next to his Jeep with two bullet holes behind his left ear. Police said he never had a chance to use his Walther PPK pistol.

Taxi driver Rene Sanchez said a man looked at the body and said, "This man died by the bullet. He is 380, Enrique Bermudez," then hurried away. Bermudez's nom de guerre was "Comandante 380."

Garcia added that the slaying clouds the government's ability to guarantee the safety of ex-Contras.

Bermudez only months earlier said he feared death at the hands of the Sandinistas.

During Sunday Mass, conservative Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo said Bermudez had told him in a letter that he felt in danger.

"'If something happens to me, I hold responsible all those who conspire with the Sandinistas,'" Bermudez said in the Nov. 21, 1990, letter, according to the cleric.

Right-wing Radio Corporacion, in a Sunday broadcast, blamed the Sandinistas.

"The eyes of the people say the Sandinistas are responsible for his death," the radio asserted.

Pallais promised an "exhaustive" investigation and called the killing "an attack against the policy of reconciliation by the government of President Violeta Barrios de Chamorro."

The Interior Ministry, responsible for internal security, remains under the control of the Sandinistas, who Mrs. Chamorro's broad coalition defeated a year ago at the polls.

Elsa Bermudez said she was taking her husband back to Miami, where he lived for years until returning to Nicaragua last October.

"We're not going to bury him in Nicaragua," she said after identifying the body. "I want to feel tranquil at his tomb, to cry there. I'm not coming here to visit it."

Scattered groups of people were seen celebrating Saturday night after the news of his death was broadcast.

"He finally got blown away," said one person celebrating.

TRADE: Growers could face significant competition

bles not widely grown in Mexico are enthusiastic about opportunities for sales in a country of 85 million people.

"Mexico does represent a market of considerable magnitude, but we just don't know how much," McClung said. "It certainly isn't as attractive a market as the United States. There are plenty of mouths to feed down there, but you don't have the dollars to make the purchases."

The Bush administration hopes to begin formal negotiations with Mexico this spring and conclude the talks by year's end.

Showers, whose company has had operations in Mexico for nearly 40 years, predicted that labor-intensive crops would be most affected by a free trade agreement because a Mexican farm worker earns in one day what a U.S. farm worker earns in 60 to 90 minutes.

U.S. producers, unlike their Mexican counterparts, also must provide workers' compensation insurance and abide by regulations that cut into their profits, Showers said.

Workers' compensation insurance costs for his company have risen from $250,000 five years ago to $1.3 million last year, Showers said.

But he said the cost of doing business in Mexico isn't cheap, noting that freight costs, herbicides and insecticides there are more expensive than in the United States.

A study by the International Trade Commission found that the elimination of trade barriers would generate a significant increase in U.S. imports from Mexico and a moderate increase in U.S. exports to Mexico.

GREEN: Mayor fiddles, sings, rides and dabbles

(From 1A)

he rides those big bikes and survived a four-pack-a-day habit.

Maybe he's just safe.

Certainly, he's no Hollywood star. But among the folks in Big Spring and the Big Spring-area troops over in the Middle East conflict, he and a slew of others may be sort of popular in some music circles.

With his fiddle, Green joined up with other Big Spring musicians in making down-home cassette tapes (Operation Spirit Lift) to send to the West Texans "over there."

"We just want to make hometown tapes with hometown talent and comedy and so forth" in hopes of making the troops in Saudi Arabia "feel good," Green said.

He joined in to play a comedy song, "Little Brown Jug," and fiddled a dance-hall song played by Western-swing artist Bob Wills.

Green, who is a certified public accountant (CPA), long ago decided to be a fixture in West Texas. And before that, he decided never again to shovel grain — wheat.

Back in his youth, Green, 60, worked for a grain-elevator operation in Paducah.

"Late one night," he recalled, "I was unloading a truck-full of grain into a granary with a hand shovel. I got to noticing that that shovel was awfully heavy. And I also discovered that there wasn't much weight involved in the use of a pencil."

That's why he got into "pencil-pushing accounting."

"I figured it would be much easier being a CPA, lifting a pencil, than lifting those big, old shovelfuls of wheat."

Early on, Green attended a three-room country school called Double Mountain and later enrolled at Peacock, Aspermont, Paducah (Class of 1947) and Odessa College.

At Double Mountain in Stonewall County, he recalled the old syrup-bucket trick.

A mischievous boy would place a syrup bucket of water on the old pot-bellied coal-burning stove, put the lid on tightly, and "let it blow and watch the teacher get all stirred up."

Green, who is ingrained in Big Spring and West Texas, said that he has traveled the country over and has never "found any prettier place than West Texas.

"I'm quite comfortable in Big Spring," which he has called home since 1961. "The economy here is picking up — mostly boot-strap operations," which is a testimony to enterprising Big Spring businessmen, inventors and entrepreneurs.

Since he got the urge to be in politics and since he was elected mayor in 1989, Green, at times, has been too plainspoken. He became unpopular with some City Council members and townspeople who campaigned for a recall election to get him out of office.

The scheme didn't work. Green wasn't that unpopular.

Some folks didn't "particularly approve of my methods" of running city government. "They didn't approve of my idea of economy in government.

"My attitude was, 'No, we don't need (new) taxes. We need (good) management.'" And an old sign in his office casts a barb at government and taxes: "Government can give to the people only that which it has first taken from them."

Some folks weren't comfortable with Green's direct methods of dealing with problems and issues.

"Once I make up my mind," said Green, then he does "what I think is best for the community. I try to make it just as clear as I possibly can.

"I try to act instead of react," Green said. "I can be an extremely plain-spoken person, my wife (Neva) says. And, that is not good in politics."

But it is good for making a character out of a man.

"I just figured the best thing to do was to go ahead and be old Maxwell Dee and couldn't anybody act any better than what I could," he said. "No one can act like me except me. I guess the best thing you can say about me is 'I'm a character.' In a way, I consider that a compliment."

viser and major financial contributor who gave more than $9,000 to Williams, sent Richards a check for $1,000 after the election, the newspaper reported.

The News, using campaign finance reports filed with the Texas secretary of state, reviewed contributions of at least $500 in cash or in-kind contributions reported by Richards and Williams between Jan. 1, 1989, and Jan. 1, 1991.

For Richards, who was outspent in the contest by the wealthy Midland businessman, many of the late-train donations were made at a post-election fund-raiser at a private club in Austin.

Richards did not immediately return a telephone call Sunday by The Associated Press. But a spokesman said the contributions are a sign of political goodwill, not an attempt to buy influence.

"I just think they see the handwriting on the wall," said Bill Cryer, Ms. Richards' press secretary. "They are trying to say, 'Look, the election is over. Our will is good, and we hope your will is good."

Among other findings:

- Lawyers accounted for about one-quarter of Richards' total campaign contributions for the entire race. At least $3.6 million of Ms. Richards' $16 million total came from attorneys, most of them trial lawyers whose practice includes representing injured clients against companies.
- Half of Richards' 42 appointments to boards and commissions to date were financial backers during the campaign. Records show that the new governor collected at least $688,960 from people she has named to positions on university and state agency boards.

OPERATION DESERT STORM

Protester confronts Bush in church

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — A man at a Sunday church service attended by President Bush stood and demanded the United States "stop this massacre, stop this bombing" of Iraq.

The man, who identified himself as Massachusetts lawyer John Schuchardt, was silenced only after police officers moved into the church and stood by his side. After a second outburst a half-hour later, he was dragged from the church.

Schuchardt was in the front pew of the First Congregational Church, about 20 feet away from Bush and his wife, Barbara. The Bushes sat stonily during the man's outbursts.

The incident began when Pastor Patricia Adams asked members of the congregation if they had any special concerns to express.

"We need to think of the 18 million people of Iraq, half of them are children under the age of 15 years old," Schuchardt stood and said. "We must think what it means to be bombed every day by 2,000 planes and cruise missiles."

Adams thanked the man for his comments and urged him to sit down. But Schuchardt persisted, saying "the spirit of the Lord is upon me."

The congregation, in a spontaneous effort to stop Schuchardt's speech, rose and sang "God Bless America." But when they concluded, he began anew.

"This is the most vicious, immoral act," he said. "Stop this massacre; stop this bombing."

A man in the church rose and shouted: "This is not a political forum. This is a church of God. Get out of here."

As police were brought into the church, young children were ushered out so they would not witness the confrontation. The president sat impassively during the episode, but occasionally looked behind him at other parishioners.

After being quieted and sitting silently for 30 minutes, Schuchardt arose near the end of the service.

"I have a word this morning," he said. "I am the voice for the voiceless, for those who cannot worship."

He went limp when police tried to remove him and then was dragged from the church shouting, "In the name of God, stop the bombing."

Bush appeared upset as he watched the man being removed.

But asked by reporters as he left the church if he was upset by the incident, Bush said, "Not in the least."

At the close of the service, the pastor said she wanted to "apologize for what happened, not only to our guests but to ourselves."

"We need to listen to everybody," she said.

Schuchardt was taken to the York County jail in nearby Alfred, said Lt. Robert Sullivan. He was booked there on a charge of disorderly conduct and held pending bail, said jail supervisor Steve Wilder. Bail was set at $1,000 cash or $5,000 surety. Arraignment was set for Tuesday if he does not post bail.

Married with children: New military gets wartime test

By Leslie Dreyfous
Associated Press writer

The average American soldier in Saudi Arabia is a husband or wife, has children and a habit of eating dinner at home.

These aren't the same teen-age draftees who fought in Vietnam. Many are reservists or National Guardsman, older and perhaps long out of duty.

But exactly how the U.S. military's new demographics will shape the Gulf War is an open question.

"We have been living for 20 years in a situation where you could be a soldier and have a family and both could be orchestrated fairly well," said Peter A. Morrison, an Army demographics researcher at the Rand Corp. in Santa Monica, Calif.

"But suddenly being a soldier is being a soldier and going out to fight a war," he said. "And all the change that unfolded gradually has suddenly come into sharp focus."

The military has been jolted from its peacetime orientation. The child care, household and other domestic safety nets designed for wartime are being tested.

Sixty percent of military personnel today are married compared with 40 percent in 1970, and the average number of dependents has risen to nearly two from one, according to the Defense Department.

The Pentagon says that 16,300 single parents and 1,200 military couples with children are among the 513,000 U.S.troops deployed in the 6-month-old gulf crisis.

"This is unprecedented in that we've never had a situation where so many family members have been pulled apart for so long," Morrison said.

Members of the volunteer force are likely to have better attitudes than the Vietnam-era draftees who often spent five or six months of a two-year hitch in training. These are professionals, many with years of experience.

But they also are parents, people with community commitments and mortgages to pay. Whether both parents in dual-military marriages should be deployed at the same time has generated some controversy.

Just last week, Barbara Bush said she and the president had been discussing the problem. "This is a new world we live in," she said during a quick trip to a veteran's hospital in Indianapolis. "We've got to sort it all out."

The issue could become even hotter in the event of a bloody ground campaign, which would leave more widowed spouses and orphaned children than in previous wars.

"We've got this mass of people who are going overseas and there's an element of danger that we just really didn't have before," said Maj. Richard Pugh, who directs the family support center at Travis Air Force Base in northern California.

"We're having to deal with a lot more fear and stress," he said. "We didn't even have a family support center in 1970. We're still expanding ... and learning a lot."

In addition to being married, the typical soldier is six years older than during Vietnam. The average active serviceman or woman today is 27, while the reserves and National Guardsmen who make up 15 percent of Operation Desert Storm tend to be in their 30s and 40s.

Older soldiers may be more aware of their own mortality, less willing to take risks.

"Somebody who has got a spouse and a couple of children is going to have a very different perspective on risk-taking than a 19-year-old who wants to get out there and be gung-ho," said James Thorson, head of the gerontology department at the University of Nebraska in Omaha.

Thorson has come up with a "lethality scale" through his research into individual attitudes toward and actual behavior in risky situations. His surveys indicate young males are the most willing to undertake dangerous tasks.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1991

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actors Matt Dillon and John Travolta, actress Cybill Shepherd, artist Yoko Ono.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A prominent person gives your career a boost and lifts your morale as well. Introducing innovative work procedures will increase your wealth and prestige. Listen to constructive suggestions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A good time to invest in additional education or acquire new job skills. A complex project deserves top priority. You can wrap things up with help from a partner or close associate.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A teen-ager needs your love and attention. Some sympathetic understanding will go a long way toward setting things right. Curb a tendency to be extravagant. Postpone buying luxuries.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Assess your priorities and then go after what you want. Someone may be talking about you behind your back. Ignore it. Heed a clever financial tip.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A project you have been planning may not materialize. Take things in stride and explore the other options available to you. If a loved one acts oddly, adopt a wait-and-see attitude.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Both business and social affairs enjoy favorable influences today. You can score big gains by moving swiftly. A friendly encounter could develop into something more.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your growing confidence could make you a little too trusting. Do not let someone lead you astray or deter you from pursuing your primary objective. Be more diplomatic with mate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Guard against skimming over important details when reading agreements or contracts. Take the time to get everything perfectly clear in your mind. Dreams can be prophetic. Build for the future.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are more alert and incisive early in the day. Plan accordingly and tackle complex problems first. A relationship can be salvaged if you work harder at it. Show more consideration.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Streamline your work procedures and you will accomplish more. Delegate routine tasks to reliable subordinates. Capitalize on a stroke of good luck. A long-sought reconciliation is possible.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may have to change your mind about a friendship. Try to be less demanding or impatient. Modifying your diet will help you look and feel better in a hurry. Show self-restraint.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Tempers may be short today. Tread lightly around higher-ups. Fortunate developments unfold where your entertainment plans are concerned. Sharing a secret with loved ones brings peace of mind.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ96 ♡AJ83 ◇AK52 ♣6
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	Dbl	Pass	1 ♠
Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—In support of spades your hand is worth some 20 points. Bear in mind, though, that you have forced partner to bid and North could have a complete bust. Show your power by jumping to three spades, which is invitational. Partner will go on to game with a smattering of working cards.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK1063 ♡75 ◇AQ98 ♣A6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—In the old days you would have had to jump to three diamonds, crowding the auction unnecessarily when you don't yet know where or at what level you want to play the hand. These days a two-over-one response promises at least one more bid, even by a passed hand if opener changes suit, so you need bid only two diamonds for the moment.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A10943 ♡K7 ◇K96 ♣AJ6
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—When this hand cropped up in a rubber bridge game, South rebid three no trump to show his stoppers, and a slam was missed. After a jump shift, the primary duty is to set a possible trump suit, and you should almost always raise partner with three trumps to a high honor. Bid four diamonds.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQJ6 ♡52 ◇AJ7 ♣Q1095
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—On this sequence partner promises a six-card suit, so you know you have an eight-card major fit. Nevertheless, with your balanced hand and no heart honor you should prefer a jump to three no trump over four hearts. If partner is very unbalanced, he can still correct.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A984 ♡763 ◇952 ♣QJ6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner's jump shift is unconditionally forcing. There is a strong tendency to bid three no trump, since you have a flat hand and a club stopper, but that's wrong. Partner has an unbalanced hand, and with three trumps and an ace you have nothing to be ashamed about. Take a preference to three hearts.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠3 ♡A762 ◇AK984 ♣AK6
The bidding has proceeded:

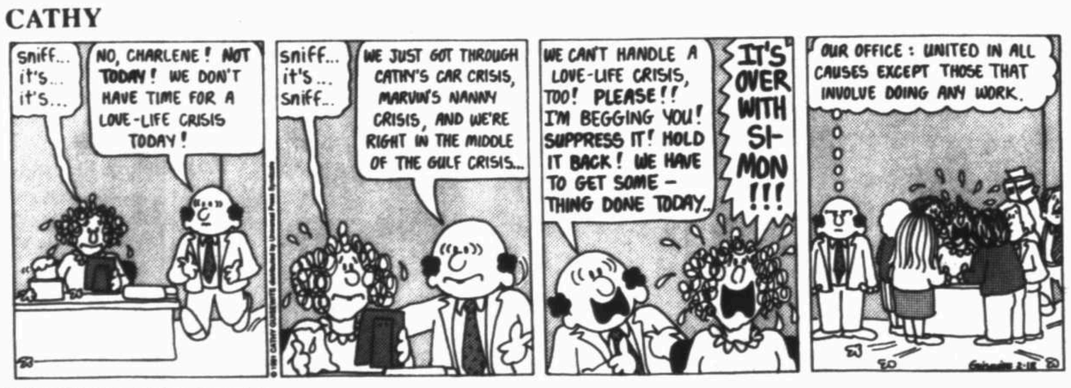

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—While the possible misfit is disquieting, your hand is too strong for any pussyfooting. Although the quality of the suit leaves something to be desired, we would make the reverse bid of two hearts. At least it describes the overall strength and distribution of the hand accurately. Plan to bid your club fragment next if partner persists in spades.

Ten thousand apply for parts as extras in assassination film

DALLAS (AP) — A casting call for extras to fill roles in a movie on John F. Kennedy's assassination more closely resembled a cattle stampede, with an estimated 10,000 applicants.

The man director Oliver Stone hired to organize Saturday's auditions for the yet-untitled film said he was elated. About 1,000 people an hour responded to the casting call at the Dallas Convention Center.

"We have some really good stuff here," said Kevin Howard, a veteran of "Talk Radio," another Stone movie. "We were looking for a lot of Texas, Texas, Texas people, especially people who were here when Kennedy was shot."

Howard did not want to elaborate on details of the upcoming movie, but noted that "the rumor is that Kevin Costner is going to star, but we can't confirm anything yet."

Aspiring actors queued up at the center as two casting assistants moved among them, deciding who would get to read for one of 199 speaking parts to be cast.

Those not chosen were still eligible for one of 2,000 nonspeaking roles. All will learn the outcome next week, and could return for another elimination round.

Kennedy, the 35th U.S. president, was slain by an assassin on Nov. 22, 1963 as his motorcade traveled through downtown Dallas. Lee Harvey Oswald allegedly fired the fatal shots from the former Texas School Book Depository.

That building has since been restored, and the Sixth Floor Museum opened in what is now-the Dallas County Administration Building.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Lynn Anderson failed to bar the media from the courtroom in a custody battle with her former husband over their two children.

Anderson

The 43-year-old singer, best known for the Grammy Award-winning song "I Never Promised You a Rose Garden," had been awarded custody when her four-year marriage to oilman Harold "Spook" Stream III ended in divorce in 1982.

But last year, Stream was granted custody based on allegations that Anderson and her longtime boyfriend, Mentor Williams, were abusing the children. The children, 11-year-old William and 9-year-old Melissa, are living with Stream in Lake Placid, N.Y.

On Friday, Circuit Judge Muriel Robinson denied Anderson's motion to bar reporters from covering the custody proceedings. A hearing to set a trial date will be held Tuesday.

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Roseanne Barr no longer fights with staffers on her hit television show but says she still feels like a walking target.

Jay Daniel, executive producer of "Roseanne," told TV Guide magazine in its Feb. 23 issue that Miss Barr "is calm this year. It's the difference between night and day. Something has happened to Roseanne and it's good."

What doesn't get worse is the show and Miss Barr is responsible for that, Daniel said. The highly publicized quarrels with staff members are over because Miss Barr had the writers replaced and she is producing, which were both good moves, he said.

"She was always right on target with what she wanted to do with this show," he said. "She really knows what works. But no one listened to her."

Miss Barr said the fracas with the writers "was all a class thing and a women's thing. I wanted them to write more from the woman's point of view and they thought it meant putting in tampon jokes and castration jokes."

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — As Kirk Douglas recovered from injuries suffered in an air collision, a Hebrew university honored the 74-year-old actor and his wife for their lifelong commitment to the arts.

Douglas

The American Friends of the Hebrew University bestowed its Scopus Award to the couple Saturday for their contributions to the arts and their work with mankind, said university spokesman Lee Solters.

The actor's wife, Anne, and son Eric attended the black-tie gala to accept the award.

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Charlton Heston picked up an honorary doctor of fine arts degree and amused the crowd by wearing the academic hood backward.

Heston

Abilene Christian University Ppresident William J. Teague presented the honor during a private dinner Saturday at the Abilene Civic Center, during which Heston, known for roles in films on biblical themes, read selections from the Old Testament book of Exodus.

When he put on the hood — a fold of cloth worn over the back of a scholarly robe to indicate the earning of a degree — backward, the audience began to snicker and ACU board chairman H. Lynn Packer quipped, "That's OK. You can wear it as a bib or a hood."

Heston responded, "One thing I should know how to do is wear funny suits."

Freedom struggle raging in Baltics

The war in the Persian Gulf should not blind Americans to another war, one with even greater potential for determining the future struggle between freedom and totalitarianism, now unfolding in the Baltic states.

Locked in a battle of wills with the current communist leadership in Moscow for almost a year over the question of independence, the Baltic states — Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia — are attempting to break away from the Soviet Union, which seized them in 1940 and made them Soviet republics.

The three Baltic states had been independent countries from 1918 until 1940 when Soviet troops occupied the nations and brought them into the Soviet Union. The ceaseless quest for independent status grew in intensity during the late 1980's until last March when the Lithuanian Parliament voted unanimously to secede from the Soviet Union. Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev termed Lithuania's declaration of independence "illegal and invalid."

The other Baltic states during the past year also launched moves toward independent status and as Gorbachev's troubles mounted with other restive Soviet states, the rift with the Baltic states grew. The quest for independence from Moscow bubbled just underneath the surface until mid-January when Soviet troops and tanks rolled into Lithuania and clashed with demonstrators outside a broadcasting center. Violence erupted, 11 Lithuanians died and 100 were injured. Gorbachev's intentions became clear at that point; he is not the freedom-loving reformer his public relations demeanor seeks to portray.

Startling changes that Gorbachev's perestroika brought to the Russian republic and other Soviet states since the middle 1980's — seemingly free elections, use of more capitalistic adaptations in the economy and more leeway for dissenters — may have garnered the Soviet leader the Nobel Peace Prize and greater acceptance among leaders of the free world, but those changes may only be cosmetic. Behind the facade of a man of peace is a communist leader with unprecedented powers who still rules the communist nations with an iron hand.

The hope for freedom inside the Baltic states, as well as in the other communist-dominated countries, rests with the courage of the people leading the fight against Moscow. As Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis said following a vote in his country Saturday in which 90.5 percent of the voters cast ballots in favor of independence from Moscow, "The great majority of people in Lithuania no longer have any fear, and once again express their determination to the world. Today we did good work, and we took one more step along the road to independence."

The struggle for freedom is endless. May the journey of those in the Baltic republics be fruitful.

LETTER

A winning ticket may be real loser

Once upon a time, there was a man — Mr. Downandout — who really wanted a better life for himself and his family. He went to the store with a dollar for as much milk as he could buy. But he noticed something strange at the store. Everyone who was coming from the store was carrying a ticket . . . or two . . . or 20.

He stopped a man who he recognized, Mr. Pooradvice, and asked him about the tickets. "Why man, haven't you heard about the lottery?" asked Mr. Pooradvice. "Everyone is buying these tickets . . . they're a ticket to happiness!"

Mr. Downandout heeded the advice of his acquaintance. After all, a dollar couldn't buy much anyway . . . and maybe, just maybe, this would be his lucky day. Maybe he would win everything he needed and wanted to be able to give his family.

Well, you can probably guess the outcome. The lady who won the lottery lived in Suburbia, Texas. She had been given the ticket as a gag gift at a birthday party. Mr. Downandout was now out of milk money. And who will give him the milk money he needs? Who will help him provide for his family? Who will pay for all the wasted milk money throughout our state? A person named Every Texas Taxpayer.

Multiply Mr. Downandout by thousands and thousands and multiply the dollars they will risk by thousands and thousands and then ask yourself, "Will the lottery really be a problem-solver or will it only be a problem-causer?"

Of course, there is an answer . . . just make it illegal for anyone receiving government support to play the lottery. But try to run that one through and watch how fast the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) jumps, not to mention lottery supporters. Call it whatever you want to call it, but the lottery is a monster that preys on the poor, and the taxpayers of Texas will be the ones who have to foot the bill.

Christians often get accused of trying to legislate morality. Wouldn't it be nice if someone would just legislate good business?

Tunes from '60s fill Saudi airwaves

"THE EMERALD CITY," Saudi Arabia — At this huge military base north of Riyadh, the popular sounds on the airwaves are news and the tunes of another war.

These soldiers, many of whom learned about the Vietnam War in history books, prefer the songs of the 1960s. On any given day, either from the ubiquitous Walkman or over military radio stations, one is likely to hear Jimi Hendrix, Janis Joplin or The Doors.

Anderson

This base is the Saudi kingdom's most secret city, capable of housing tens of thousands of soldiers. At the center of the base is a spectacular building complex with fountains and greenery, much like Dorothy found at the end of the Yellow Brick Road — thus the nickname, "The Emerald City." Its real name and location are classified.

The radio station that broadcasts to the troops from here, in keeping with the theme, is called Wizard 106.

During the buildup of troops, before the war started, the chief radio entertainment came from Iraq's Baghdad Betty — a heavily accented propagandist who lamely tried to get U.S. troops to defect.

How bad was Betty? She was so bad that she told the soldiers their wives were sleeping with all the big American celebrities — Tom Selleck, Tom Cruise and Bart Simpson. Betty was obviously the victim of bad research. She was also one of the first "casualties" of the war when the radio and television transmitters in Iraq were bombed out of service.

One of the most clever secret operations of the war so far was when the allies immediately began broadcasting on the same frequencies of the Iraqi stations that they had obliterated. It so confused the Iraqis and unsettled Saddam Hussein that he put out the word that the Central Intelligence Agency was imitating his voice in those broadcasts.

The programs from Iraq were of little interest to the U.S. troops anyway. They rely on the BBC over shortwave for war news, and those without a shortwave are woefully uninformed at the front. Many of the people here in The Emerald City did not know where they were on the map. And at least half of the enlisted people randomly questioned did not know that Norman Schwarzkopf was their commanding general. If it doesn't come in a letter from home, they have few other ways of finding out the details of the war that they are fighting.

Those who can tune into Wizard 106 get half news and half music. The station takes requests. After a Scud missile attack, the most in demand songs are Pat Benatar's "Hit Me With Your Best Shot," or Queen's "Another One Bites the Dust." A consistent favorite is Edwin Starr's 1970 hit "War" with the refrain, "What is it good for? Absolutely nothing."

Armed Forces Radio caters to the '60s tastes, greeting the day with "Gooooooood morning, Saudi Arabia!" in the tradition of Vietnam DJ Adrian Cronauer a la Robin Williams.

"Face it," one private from Boston said. "Rap sound don't make it out here with the scorpions and such. It's OK for punks trying to act bad back on Dot Avenue. But we grunts are the mean green machine that is going to make that King Saddam wish he never was born to breathe. We need real war music from the war movies."

KEATING ONE — The Keating Five is about to turn into the Keating One. The Senate Ethics Committee is approaching a final decision on disciplinary action against the five senators who are accused of intervening for savings and loan executive Charles Keating after taking campaign money from him. Committee sources tell us that the three Democrat and three Republican members are squabbling about whether to follow the special counsel's recommendation to cut loose Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz. The other four are Democrats and that makes this a Democratic scandal. Sources told us that in the end, all will walk except Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The new Bush administration energy strategy is callously indifferent to the hundreds of thousands of American troops who have been asked to risk their lives for cheap oil. Bush has scratched from the plan all the significant programs that would have reduced oil consumption so Americans would never again have to fight to retain access to oil. Bush wants to leave consumption to the market to regulate. So far, the free market has kept prices low, so Americans remain gas guzzlers — dangerously dependent on Persian Gulf oil. Now that Saddam Hussein is threatening to control the free market, Americans are dying to stop him. George Bush's energy strategy sets up this country for an endless string of oil wars.

CHARLEY REESE

President's budget based on pie in the sky

Judging from President Bush's budget proposal with its whopping deficit and usual smoke and mirrors, this new world order he keeps talking about must be a sort of high-class deadbeats' society.

Reese

The federal government is certainly acting like a high-class deadbeat — rolling over the principle, paying the interest, and adding to the debt year after year.

The assumptions, such as a short, cheap war and a short recession, on which the president built his budget resemble some of the business plans submitted to the banks to justify the kind of real estate deals that wrecked the savings and loan industry. Pie in the sky.

It would be distressing, even laughable, except for one ugly fact. We, the people, are the source of the federal government's income. If it doesn't get its fiscal affairs in order, it's going to be extremely difficult for us to improve ours. Everytime we put our hand in our pocket, we're going to find Uncle Sam's already there as well as the hands of the state, county and city governments.

In the meantime, the annual interest on this debt is about to catch up with the defense budget. That's a heck of a note — to have to pay your creditors as much in interest as you do the entire armed forces. Maybe we ought to rent the armed forces to the creditors. After all, they own us; why shouldn't they pay for our protection? If something happens to us, we can't pay them.

Perhaps the government should seek protection under Chapter 11. It certainly can't pay its debts, much less its debts plus all of its underwriting liabilities. A bankruptcy judge might just be what Congress and the White House need to focus their minds.

Japan could throw a bucket of cold water on us if it just decided not to fund anymore of our debt and to sell its computer chips, which are in all of our major weapons systems, to the Soviet Union. I bet that would get somebody's attention in Washington.

No kidding, folks, this situation is getting out of hand. Take New York, for example. New York City is facing a $2.5 billion deficit but can't get help from the State of New York because the state is facing an $8.5 billion deficit. The state can't look to Washington because it is facing a $300 billion deficit.

If you ask me, I'd say unemployment is about to reach the ranks of the bureaucrats, and that's a sure sign the system is breaking down.

It seems only fair to me that a president and Congress, which expect 20-year-old youths to have the courage to face an Iraqi chemical attack, should somehow muster the courage to face the necessity of cutting government expenses. It's true that some might not get re-elected, but after all that's considerably less painful than dying of nerve gas. Come on, guys, the private sector isn't all that bad. It doesn't have the perks of the Congress and the White House but it isn't hell. Most of us enjoy it.

What do you think would happen if a majority in Congress suddenly decided to act like reasonable human beings? Do you think the earth would implode? The sun go out?

I think the sun would rise on a renewed America where people would have faith and trust in their government. I think we'd ring bells and celebrate, because it would feel so good to be in control of our own destiny again, instead of just drifting toward the abyss.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Hunkered down against terrorist attacks

No reason to take any unnecessary chances during these tense times so I've been preparing my house against a terrorist attack.

I really can't think of any reason a terrorist would attack my house but you never know.

Grizzard

Perhaps terrorists sometimes just pick a place to terrorize at random or they blindfold one of their party and spin him around and around.

Then, they tell him to walk and whatever he walks into first, that's the spot they terrorize.

Sort of a pin-the-tail-on-the-infidel sort of thing.

The first thing I tried to do was buy a couple of gas masks for me and my dog, Catfish, the black Lab.

I went to Kmart but they were out of gas masks.

"Been a real run on them lately," the salesman said. "But could I interest you in a couple of Patriot missiles?"

Unfortunately, the missiles wouldn't fit in my car. I did buy a camouflage outfit and a can of green spray paint to put on Catfish in case we should need to hide behind the houseplants in my living room.

I wound up at Honest Gus's Used Gas Masks after that.

"I was in the used car business before the war," said Gus. "Now," he went on, picking up a gas mask, "let me show you this little dream boat . . . "

I bought two masks, a clean one-owner for me and a '63 model for Catfish, most recently owned by a little old lady schoolteacher from Pasadena who used it only when she drove in to L.A.

Then, I picked up some canned food for storage. If terrorists used a chemical weapon in my neighborhood I might not be able to leave my house for days.

I picked up a couple of cans of Spam for me and some Alpo for Catfish. I bought a couple of bottles of vodka in case the water became contaminated.

I also bought a handy book on frequently used Arabic phrases such as "Be bop, fallah, gunga, arahmafungo," which means "Me? An infidel? Heck no, and neither is my dog, Catfish — which is English for Mohammad."

Of course I'm also taking precautions against terrorist attacks while outside my house.

I have cancelled all previously scheduled flights for instance. Especially on Eastern. When fundamentalists even Baptists, decide to force the pilot to fly us to Baghdad or The Shrine of Jimmy Swaggart in Baton Rouge.

Indications are that terrorists might target U.S. tourists spots as well, so I've also cancelled an automobile trip to Dollywood in Tennessee, despite the fact there is a new museum there, featuring such artifacts as Dolly's first wig, and her training bra, which still has the original wheels.

I've also decided not to go near any military installations, oil refineries or CNN headquartes in downtown Atlanta.

In fact, I think until this thing finally is over, I'll just stay in the house with my dog, Mohammad, and watch the mysterious Roto-Rooter van that's been parked across the street for a couple of days.

I don't mean to get hysterical or anything, but unless somebody tried to flush a gas mask down the toilet, nothing should take that long to unclog.

Cargo plane crash kills 2 in Cleveland

CLEVELAND (AP) — Witnesses said they saw an explosion shortly before a cargo jet carrying mail crashed early Sunday, killing the two crewmen aboard.

The DC-9 flipped upside-down onto the snow-covered main runway at Cleveland Hopkins International Airport, demolishing the cockpit containing Capt. David Reay and First Officer Richard Duney.

Witnesses to the crash included passengers aboard a Continental Airlines flight from Denver that had landed and was taxiing as the cargo jet was preparing to take off.

"It looked like it exploded right in the middle," said passenger Darren J. Wheeler. "It looked like it flipped, and then it slid right by us upside down on the runway. It was 200 feet from us, at the most.

"It's odd. I didn't hear anything. But it lit up my eyes and it felt like my heart stopped. Everybody on board was freaked."

He said the Continental pilot calmed passengers by saying the accident apparently involved a cargo plane, not a commercial flight with passengers.

Another Continental passenger, Jeff Glidden, recalled that the pilot said, "Let's say a short prayer for (the crew.)"

Officials refused to speculate on the cause of the 12:20 a.m. crash or whether the cargo, U.S. mail, might have contained an explosive.

Airport spokesman Mark Courtney, when asked whether a bomb might have been planted in the plane's cargo, said: "We have no reason to believe that is a possibility."

NATION

Mort Edelstein, a Federal Aviation Administration spokesman in Chicago, said there were flames in the jet's left engine as it tried to take off.

Investigators for the FAA and National Transportation Safety Board arrived Sunday to sift through the wreckage, seeking the flight data recorder and cockpit voice recorder as well as other clues. The overturned fuselage had a charred, gaping hole, and the wings were sheared off.

Alan Pollock, a spokesman for the NTSB team, said the investigation would probably take about a week.

At a briefing Sunday night, NTSB investigator Barry Strauch said the agency had not ruled out any possible cause of the crash.

Reay, 44, of Oakland, Calif., and Duney, 28, of Belle Mead, N.J., were pilots for Ryan Aviation of Wichita, Kan., a subcontractor to Emery Worldwide Airlines, based in Palo Alto, Calif. Emery Worldwide contracts with the U.S. Postal Service for cargo flights.

Teacher's murder-hire trial begins Tuesday

EXETER, N.H. (AP) — A 23-year-old schoolteacher goes on trial this week, accused of hiring three students, one of them her alleged lover, to kill her husband of less than a year and make it look like robbers did it.

Three teen-age boys have already pleaded guilty and are expected to be key witnesses in the trial of Pamela Smart. A fourth teen also is charged.

The former media services teacher at Winnacunnet High School is charged with conspiracy to commit murder, being an accomplice to murder and witness tampering in the May 1 death of her husband, Gregory, 24. She is also accused of trying to hire someone to kill a 16-year-old girl, also a former student, who is expected to testify against her.

The trial begins Tuesday in Rockingham County Superior Court.

Mrs. Smart, described as a popular teacher and a loving wife, has denied involvement in the murder and disputed allegations that one of the teens, William Flynn, was her lover. Her lawyers, Mark Sisti and Paul Twomey, asked to have the trial moved, maintaining that media attention has made it impossible for her to get a fair trial in Rockingham County. But Judge Douglas Gray rejected the motion.

Gregory Smart was found dead in the couple's Derry condominium May 1. Police at first suspected he had surprised burglars because jewelry and other items were missing and the home appeared ransacked.

But, with the help of Ralph Welch — a cousin of Raymond Fowler, 19, the fourth teen-ager charged in the case — police began building their case against Mrs. Smart and the teens.

According to police, Welch, 18, suspected the teens' involvement and confronted them, and they told him what happened. On June 9, Welch, fearing for his safety, went to police and asked for protection. About the same time, a parent of one of the teen-agers turned in the gun believed used in the killing.

On June 12, Flynn, 17, Vance Lattime, 18, and Patrick Randall, 17, were arrested. They agreed to plead guilty to lesser charges last month and are expected to testify against Mrs. Smart, who was arrested Aug. 1.

According to a police affidavit, Fowler, Flynn, Lattime and Randall agreed to participate in the murder in exchange for money from Mrs. Smart — either $1,000 or $500.

Flynn and Randall have told police that Fowler expected to take things from the Smart home, such as the stereo, videocassette recorder and jewelry.

Prosecutors claim that on May 1, Fowler drove his three friends to Smart's home, then stayed in the car with Lattime while Flynn and Randall went inside.

Police say the two ransacked the home to make it look like a burglary, then overpowered Smart when he returned home. Police say Randall held Smart down and Flynn shot him once in the head.

Mrs. Smart was arrested after her intern and friend, Cecelia Pierce, wore a concealed microphone and police recorded several conversations she had with Mrs. Smart. Police allege Mrs. Smart discussed the slaying's details with Pierce.

Early in the murder investigation, Pierce said she knew nothing about the killing. She later cooperated with police "because I couldn't sleep; I felt guilty." She added that Smart's family "had a right to know what really happened to him."

Meanwhile, Pierce has acknowledged she has been guaranteed $100,000 by a Hollywood film company for her version of the murder, regardless of the outcome. She also has been paid for appearances on two national tabloid television programs, but insists the money hasn't influenced her story.

If convicted of being an accomplice to murder, Mrs. Smart faces life imprisonment without parole. Flynn, Randall and Lattime face up to life imprisonment.

Fowler, indicted recently on charges he attempted to kill Smart several weeks before the actual slaying, faces a probable cause hearing in Derry District Court on Thursday.

Ex-rebel leader fears U.S. has forgotten Nicaragua

Copley News Service

WORLD

The other day, a former Contra commander expressed a concern that is heard increasingly through Central America.

Ex-rebel leader Julio Zelaya said in Managua that the Persian Gulf War has shoved Central America to the bottom of the U.S. foreign policy agenda, intensifying a trend that began a year ago.

"The United States has forgotten about us," said Zelaya, who returned to Nicaragua in November after a year's residence in San Diego.

A senior State Department official insisted that the United States remains keenly interested in the region. But a leading U.S. scholar suggested that a little benign neglect for Central America might not be such a bad idea.

The electoral defeat a year ago of the Sandinista government in Nicaragua was a watershed event in terms of U.S. foreign policy toward Central America.

For many analysts, the ouster of the Marxist-led Sandinistas from power — a goal of U.S. foreign policy for a decade, dramatized by its support of the former Contra rebels — led to a dramatic lowering of Central America's profile in Washington.

Now, those analysts say, the region's profile has been all but obliterated by the Persian Gulf War.

"You can almost hear Central America falling off the map," said Daniel Wolf, a University of Ccalifornia, San Diego, political scientist and Central American specialist who is a Fulbright Fellow in Nicaragua.

Wolf said that with the exception of supporting the rightist government in El Salvador in its civil war against leftist rebels, the United States has virtually stopped playing a "pro-active" role in Central America.

"It would be hard to say that the U.S. government is really as interested in Central America as it was during the years when the Sandinistas ran Nicaragua," Wolf said recently in Managua.

However, the senior State Department official said appearances are deceptive.

"It might appear that the Persian Gulf is a much more burning, immediate issue than Central America," he said. "But the reality of the situation doesn't support the contention that the United States has lost interest in the region."

For example, the official said:

— U.S. economic aid to Central America in the current fiscal year has risen to a record $479 million, almost double the previous high in 1985.

— If Jordan loses its $85 million in U.S. aid because it has tilted toward Iraq, Central America "is going to be at the head of the line" when the money is redistributed.

— The United States is pressing for significant financial aid to Central America from Japan and Western European nations.

— President Bush has met with all the leaders of Central America, "a valid litmus test for importance." Mr. Bush plans to confer with Nicaraguan President Violeta Chamorro in April and later this year with newly elected Guatemalan President Jorge Serrano.

WORLD in brief

Benin conducts multiparty polls

COTONOU, Benin (AP) — The first multiparty parliamentary elections in 21 years were held Sunday in this West African nation, although journalists said some voting stations lacked ballots for some parties when polls opened.

There were no reports of violence in the election, in which candidates from 24 parties ran for 64 seats in the parliament. Results were expected to be announced Monday.

President Mathieu Kerekou's party, the People's Revolutionary Party, was on the ballot under a new name, the Progressive Party.

There were about 2 million registered voters in the nation of more than 4.4 million people.

In a surprise announcement Saturday, Kerekou said he would run in the March 10 presidential election. He declared on the final day for candidates to announce, and many people had predicted he would retire.

There will be 16 candidates for the presidency. A second round will be held March 24 if no candidate wins a majority.

The last multiparty elections in this former French colony were held in March 1970. Irregularities in the voting led to widespread violence. The military named a three-man ruling council to run the country.

Islamics attack activists

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — About 30 Islamic fundamentalists stormed the ruling party headquarters Sunday and left four people injured, including two guards who were set on fire, the Interior Ministry reported.

Hours later, President Zine El-Abidine Ben Ali replaced Interior Minister Abdelhamid Escheikh with the minister of defense, Abdallah Kallel.

It was not immediately clear if Kallel would hold both posts or whether Escheikh would assume new duties.

A presidential statement gave no reason for the change. The Interior Ministry oversees the national police.

Officials said the attackers were members of the outlawed En-Nahda movement, which has been the target of a recent government crackdown.

The ministry said police arrested some of the assailants, who wore masks and were armed with knives and clubs when they entered the Constitutional Democratic Rally party building. The number of people arrested was not immediately released.

The attackers tied up two security guards, doused them with a flammable liquid and set them on fire, the ministry said. Two party activists in the building were attacked with knives and clubs, it said.

Islanders cast votes

PRAIA, Cape Verde (AP) — Voters in this African archipelago nation on Sunday chose their head of state for the first time in a presidential election following the end of one-party rule.

Aristides Pereira is defending the president's post he has held since independence from Portugal in 1975. He faced Antonio Mascarenhas Monteiro, a former Supreme Court judge who is widely favored to win.

Mascarenhas Monteiro has the backing of the Movement for Democracy Party, which swept to power last month in the islands' first multiparty legislative poll.

The party captured 56 of the legislature's 79 seats, with the remainder going to the leftist African Party for the Independence of Cape Verde, which supports Pereira.

BALMORHEA — Mike Balog is a pretty good ol' boy, a fast-paced fellow who sometimes lingers, a West Texan who is blessed with a sense of humor, good looks, fine family, and a snappy twist to his rolling tongue.

Gotadollar. Willyougivemetwo,two,two? Wouldyougivetwodollars?

He doesn't want much — just your attention and a fair bid.

He's an auctioneer with a two-speed, fluid-drive transmission: fast and faster.

"It's kind of like typing, when you first start (slow and laborious)," he said. "But after you do it everyday, you get to where you don't think about it."

It's like that automatic transmission.

"We have a blast," said Balog, who left the oil field awhile back to drum up a more lucrative and, for him, more exciting business.

He and his staff, including his wife, Donna, and 12-year-old son, Dustin, travel a lot. They auction off just about everything from plastic fishing worms and old clunkers to farms and classic cars.

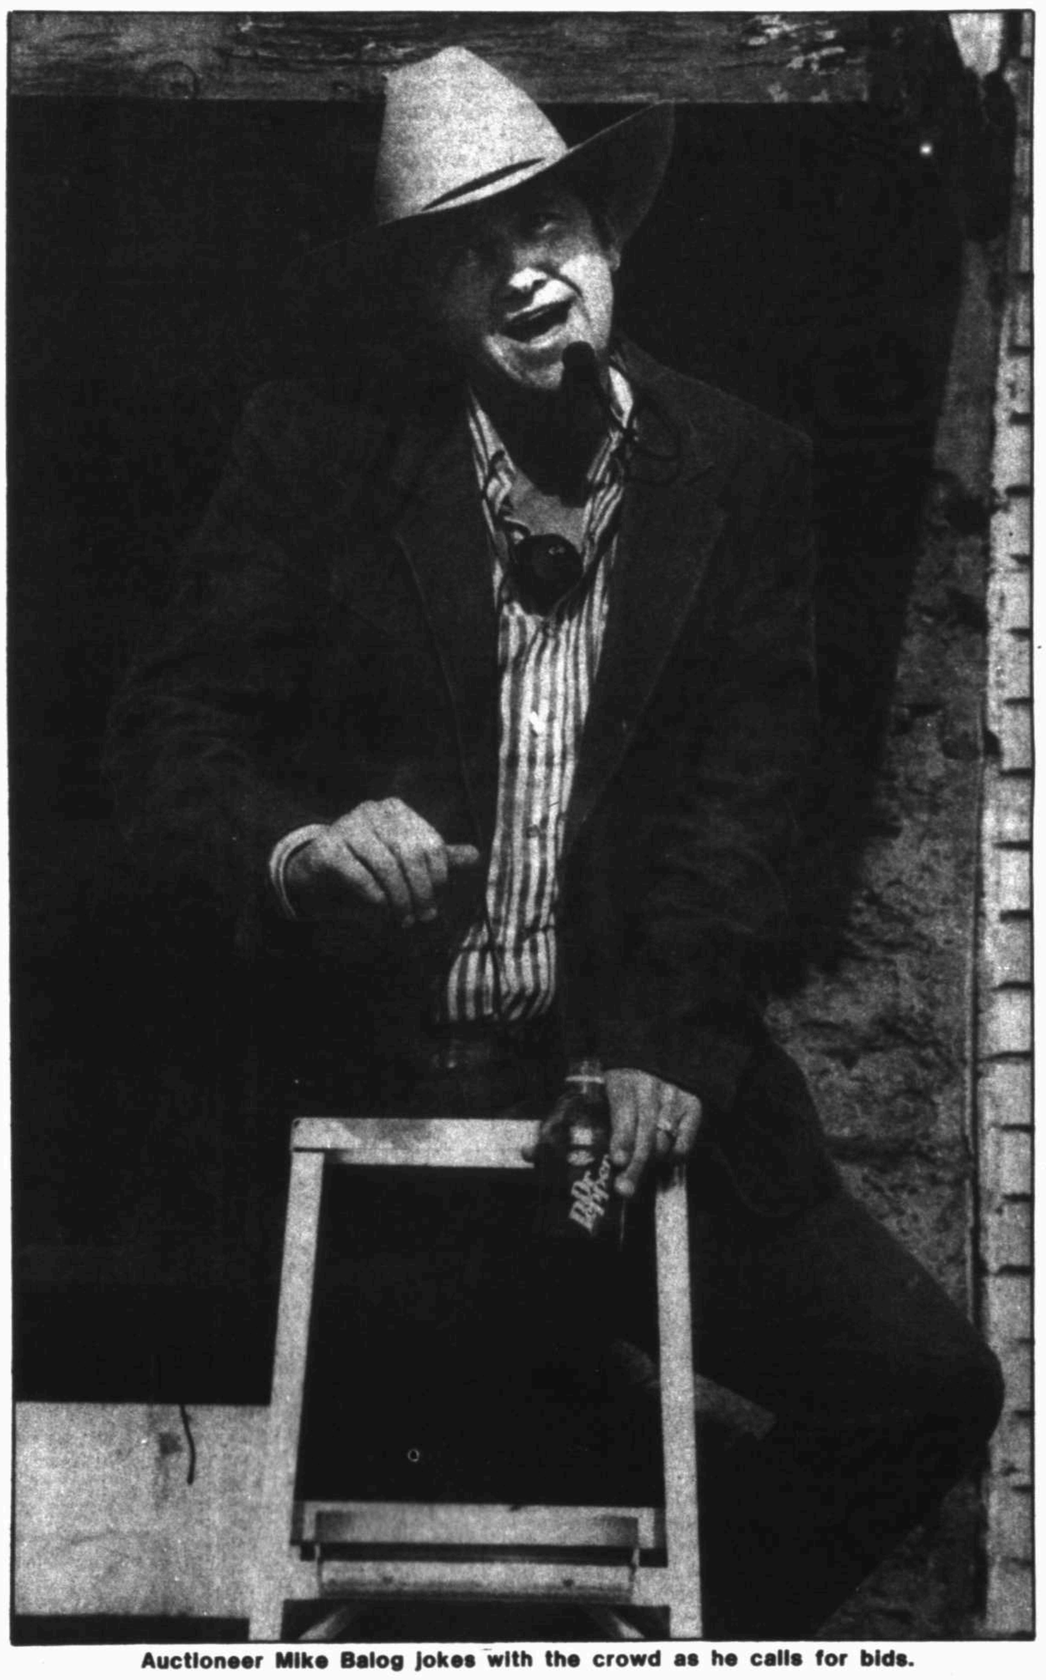

"I get as excited selling a small item as I do one of them big-dollar tractors."

On a Saturday in Balmorhea at the distant foothills of the Davis Mountains between Pecos and Alpine, Balog set up shop on the sidewalks and lots and in the stores.

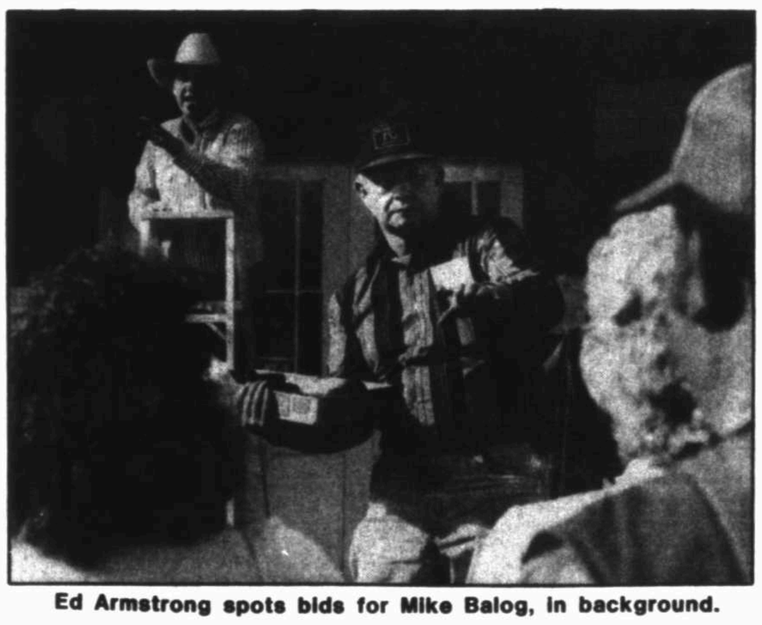

While staff handed out buyer numbers, Balog set out the ground rules for bidding on and buying stuff — junk to treasures — from an old Junk 'n' Stuff shop to a rock shop's miscellanea plus some old cars, typewriters, cowboy hats, farm tools, barbed wire, blacksmith tongs, costume jewelry, and a cow yoke.

Midland fire fighters and paramedics transport the driver of a Chevrolet van involved in an accident Sunday night at the intersection of Midkiff and Illinois streets.

Police probe 2-car cruncher

Staff Report

A blue Chevrolet van upended on its passenger side Sunday night appeared to have been flicked by the finger of a giant and sent careening into the curb like a matchbox toy.

A box of Christmas decorations and a flattened license plate yards away from the vehicle were interspersed with crushed glass at the scene.

The van apparently collided with a black two-door truck at the intersection of Midkiff and Illinois streets about 7:40 p.m. Sunday before it turned on its side.

Although the front end of the truck looked like wadded up aluminum foil, Todd Dillard, the driver of the truck, said he wasn't hurt.

"I didn't even see the van coming," Dillard said, visibly shaken and nursing a cut lip. "It was flying. It was just flying," he said.

Dale Parks, 23, said he arrived at the scene just moments after the accident. He said a woman who had been standing half a block from the curb at the time of impact became hysterical and fled the scene.

"She was running north on Midkiff, crying and yelling when I got here," Parks said.

Dillard and the driver of the van, who was pulled out through a front window, were both transported to Midland Memorial Hospital.

Officers were investigating the accident late Sunday evening.

AUCTION: Balog tries to keep bidding moving by using humor gathered, Balog got on his public-address system, said a down-home prayer and, mostly from a step ladder he climbed up on and leaned on, he went into his auctioneer's chant.

But before that, he laid out the rules at a slower pace:

"Also, we do ask for complete payment (today) whether or not you pick it up next month. We still want complete payment."

And he forewarned the bidders and gawkers: "We ask you to look it over" because everything is "as is, where is."

No exchanges.

No refunds.

No guarantees.

"We're going to be bid a little fast today, so y'all hang in there with us. Get in with the rhythm (and) bid. We've got a lot of items. We want to move fast."

And he did.

"Don't get your feelings hurt. You know that old saying. Now, I can't even think of the old saying."

Momentarily, he did: "Stutter long, you stutter wrong."

The crowd seemed ready, and so did Balog.

"So, just jump in there."

With a pleasant smile, he quipped: "If your wife gets unhappy because you spent too much money or whatever, we'll try to get y'all back together before you go home, OK? We will try."

The bidding started out with five-and-dime stuff.

"If you've never been to an auction, just holler out a bid, and we'll go from there," Balog said. "Give us a bid, and we'll jump and go."

He started up.

"Whatdoyouwanttogiveforthem?"

"I'll give you a dime," yelled a bidder.

"I won't start that low."

'The only thing you have to think about during a chant is humor. . . .The rest of it comes automatic.'

— Ed Armstrong, of Andrews, auctioneer

Auctioneers Dale Sheets of Colorado City and Ed Armstrong of Andrews and ring-man Jim Miller of Midland spotted bidders. "Gotadollar. Willyougivemetwo,two,two? Wouldyougivetwodollars?"?

The sale, as auctions do, went on and on.

"You simply have to be perfectly honest with those you represent," auctioneer Ed Armstrong, an old rodeo announcer, said before the bidding had started. In this case, the auctioneers were representing Johnnie Perez, who owns about half of downtown Balmorhea, including the cafe, inn, stores, and lots. In the auction, she was getting rid of hundreds of things in the old Junk 'n' Stuff and other shops she bought.

On this Saturday, the auction was the main show in town.

"The only thing you have to think about during a chant is humor," said Armstrong. "What's your next joke? How are you going to keep them entertained? The rest of it comes automatic."

Balog enjoys auctioneering and, he figured, so should the bidders.

"There's always a bargain."

He sold a box of plastic worms for $9.

"Let's blow and go."

He got rid of 40-some-odd "cancer starters" — cigarette lighters — for $21.

Out back, Balog auctioned off some old clunkers.

One, a yellow compact station wagon, just sat there. Again and again, Fred Boyce turned the engine over and over and over.

The battery was strong, but the engine seemed puny, maybe out of tune.

"I'll give you 25 (dollars) for the battery," yelled Brad Whitfield, a cowboy.

Finally, the engine started, and the old car sold for $125.

A pickup truck went for $500.

"They're a tough old boot," said Balog.

A good-looking, and running, 1970 Mercedes-Benz 280 SEL sedan got the auctioneer's attention but not a high-enough bid. The owner wanted at least $1,500.

Regina Blair drove over from Odessa to shop at the auction.

"There's a lot of junk," she said. "There's a lot of good stuff. Just like the old saying goes: "One man's trash is another man's treasure."

Doyce Stroade, who owns the farmers-and-ranchers supply store in town, shopped around. But, as the auction headed into the afternoon, he hadn't tendered a bid.

"Not yet," he said. "They haven't got anything I need."

Balog likes an auction, big or not. Who knows, a small auction could lead to a big one, such as a farm sale.

"Sometimes you have to kiss the old frog before you get the prince," he reasoned. "That's what the old gal says. We'll have fun with this (auction)," Balog said at the outset. "We treat a small auction just like a big one."

Candymaker keeps sweet secrets

By Bridgett Cary

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Rodolfo Segovia has led a sweet life, but not in the sense most people think of when they hear that phrase. The 71-year-old Segovia is one of a disappearing breed — the maker of handmade Mexican candy.

A third-generation candymaker, he was raised learning the secrets of pumpkin, sweet potato and nut candies. Segovia learned from his father, Ignacio, who had learned from his father in the Mexican state of Aguascalientes.

Ignacio, who came in 1912 from Mexico, taught his 10 children the secrets of candy making, but San Antonio-born Segovia is the only one who made a lifetime business of it.

"Before we used to go to school, we used to punch holes in the pumpkins," he said. "Then when we came home in the evening, we put the sugar in them. That's the way we learned."

Segovia remembers not only making the candy as a child, but also going out with his siblings and selling it. Since it was the craft he knew best, Segovia said it was a natural choice when he opened Segovia Mexican Candy Manufacture in 1937.

At that time he operated out of a 10-by-10 foot room at home, but Segovia has seen plenty of changes in the industry since. Changes, he said, that have left him as one of the last manufacturers of the confectionary delights in San Antonio. Now in a factory on Guadalupe Street, he remembers when at least 20 other people kept shop on the city's West Side.

Many were driven away by laws, such as those requiring makers to wrap the candy, he said. But Segovia said rising prices on pecans have done more to kill off the smaller Mexican candymaking enterprises than anything else.

Staff Report

An Eagle Scout Court of Honor was held recently at the Gateway Chapel for two members of Varsity Team 631 sponsored by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Bryan Paul Stevens, 14, son of Paul and Angela Stevens, and Brian Wayne Bagan, 16, son of Wayne and Betty Bagan were presented the Eagle Award by Jay Anderson, their scoutmaster.

Stevens earned 24 merit badges, his Arrow of Light, Order of Arrow and Faith in God awards.

For his project he conducted a bicycle safety program for more than 40 children at the church which included an obstacle course, a safety check and bicycle I.D.

He was assisted by his father, Doyle Snow and Troop 131. An eighth grader at Goddard Junior High, Stevens is a member of the National Junior Honor Society, the Raider Band and the Student Council.

Bagan earned 24 merit badges, Duty to God, Order of Arrow and Arrow of Light.

For his project he and the members of Varsity Team 631 put in over 100 hours working at the Salvation Army during the Christmas holiday recycling used materials.

INS order catches lawmaker's eye

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — U.S. Rep. Henry B. Gonzales is trying to keep a former Salvadoran army officer from being deported after the officer testified U.S. authorities knew of some death squad activities in his native land.

Cesar Vielman Joya Martinez is being held in a Jourdanton jail, 30 miles south of San Antonio, under a U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service order.

Attorney Daniel Alcorn has sought the help of former President Jimmy Carter and Gonzalez, D-San Antonio, to protect Martinez from being illegally deported to El Salvador by the INS.

On Friday, Gonzalez wrote to U.S. Attorney General Richard Thornburgh and Richard Casillas, INS district director in San Antonio, warning the government not to summarily deport Martinez to face what the congressman called certain death in El Salvador.

Because Martinez has publicly testified his claims of U.S. military knowledge of Salvadoran death squads, Gonzalez said deportation looms as a motive to silence the defector.

"The government is embarrassed. The American policies in Central America are bankrupt," Gonzalez told the San Antonio Express-News in a telephone interview from his San Antonio home Saturday.

"We know if this guy goes back to El Salvador, he's going to be executed," he said. "There is no question about it. I don't think the (U.S.) government would waste a minute — they wouldn't blink an eye — if it would help out their cause."

But Casillas said charges the government is planning to summarily deport Martinez were ludicrous.

"We do not summarily deport," he said. "Everybody will have their day in court. That's the law, and we will follow it."

Casillas, however, would not talk about the specifics of the case, or why Martinez was suddenly moved last Wednesday from a Bureau of Prisons facility in Eden to INS custody at the Atascosa County Jail.

The jail provides space under contract to federal agencies.

Martinez, 28, was an officer in the 1st Brigade Army of El Salvador, assigned to a G2 intelligence unit, according to court testimony.

Washington sources said Martinez fled El Salvador when he bungled an execution of a human rights worker and feared the army would retaliate. He fled to Harlingen, where he applied for political asylum in 1989.

Records show the case was moved to Washington, D.C., where he again filed for political asylum on May 29, 1990. While filing for asylum, Martinez was arrested when a fingerprint check turned up a prior deportation from the United States in 1983.

He was convicted of illegal reentry in September 1990 in Virginia and sentenced Dec. 7 to six months in jail. Alcorn, a Virginia lawyer who represented Martinez on his illegal re-entry conviction and who has filed an appeal, said his client was put on a bus to Eden to begin serving the sentence.

Companies make beach erosion their problem

SARGENT, Texas (AP) — Several chemical and refining companies have joined a coalition formed to find a way to halt beach erosion that threatens commerce on the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway.

Sargent residents Bill Templeton and Neill Amsler, executive director of the Victoria Economic Development Corp., created the Coalition to Save the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway.

The coalition wants to help the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers develop a solution to the erosion of Matagorda Peninsula. It was formed to apply political pressure on lawmakers and federal officials to try and convince them that the Sargent situation is an immediate threat to national commerce.

Various statistics show that the beach is losing 30-60 feet per year, The Houston Post reported Sunday. At one spot near Sargent, only 423 feet separate the Gulf of Mexico and the canal.

Templeton said he believes the peninsula will be breached by 1995, while the Corps of Engineers predicts the Gulf will meet the canal around the year 2000.

"Three years ago, they were telling us in Sargent, 'We realize you have a problem and we hope you can do something about it,'" Templeton said. "But it's gotten to the point now where industry is saying, 'Maybe it's not just your problem anymore."

Companies on the coalition's advisory board include Chevron, Occidental Chemical Corp., Hoechst-/Celanese, Du Pont, Valero Refining & Marketing Inc., Union Carbide, Alcoa, Diamond Shamrock R&M Inc., Koch Refining, Coastal States Refinery and Chemicals, Formosa Plastics Corp. and BP Chemicals.

The port authorities along the canal also have agreed to participate.

"Corps projects historically take longer than anyone anticipates," Amsler said. "What we are concerned about is that if we don't get political pressure behind this, we'll see it slip and see a disaster."

Companies use the intracoastal canal to receive raw materials for use as feedstocks in their plants or to distribute products. An estimated 9,125 boats moving cargo-laden barges pass through the swing bridge at Sargent annually.

The waterway is used annually to transport about 73 million tons of commodities valued at more than $21 billion, according to an economic impact study compiled by the Texas Transportation Institute at Texas A&M University.

The coalition plans to commission another economic impact study to help develop material to distribute this summer to Congress through lobbyists and contacts of the companies on its advisory board, Amsler said.

In the fiscal budget presented to Congress earlier this month, there was $410,000 in it to continue a feasibility study for correcting the erosion problem as well as $450,000 for pre-construction design and engineering work for whatever solution the Corps of Engineers recommends.

That recommendation is expected to be made in April, said Ken Bonham, the Corps' spokesman.

Valentine's spirit still aglow at benefit's fashion show

By Tina Stewart
Staff Writer

Valentine's day was still in bloom Saturday evening at the Midland Center in honor of the fourth annual "Hearts on Parade" Scholarship Fundraiser and All Male Fashion Show and Charity Ball sponsored by the Women's Department of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce (MHCC).

A crowd of approximately 500 gathered for the event — many dressed in formal wear sporting festive red and white Valentine colors and black. The event drew a crowd of approximately 500 people.

Elvia Hernandez, special advisor for the Women's Department said the MHCC hoped the fundraiser would net $10,000 this year. Last year Ms. Hernandez said the group raised $6,500. Proceeds from the event will go toward a scholarship fund and other Chamber projects.

Welcoming address and introduction of guests were given by Felipa Lara, chairperson of the Women's Department of the MHHC. Ms. Hernandez introduced master of ceremonies, Katherine Lee of Magic 102 and J. Gordan Lunn of KMID Channel

The All-Male Fashion Show featuring 28 well-known Midland men and five female models, began at approximately 7:40 p.m.

Sportswear, provided by Oshman's included fashions fit for any sportsman's fancy. Models, many actively demonstrating each sport, took the stage in everything from brightly colored skateboarding and jogging wear, to formal white golfing attire, to earth tone hiking and camouflage hunting wear.

"Men in Suits" as described by the master of ceremonies, referred to men modeling business attire provided by JCPenney. They were interspersed between the sportswear fashions.

The highlight of the evening came, however when the male models "strutted their stuff" to the popular song "U Can't Touch This."

Not only did the male models display a wide range of evening wear, but they also entertained the crowd with a variety of dance moves.

For the finale of the fashion show, the models again appeared in a plethora of tuxedo styles, ranging from the Michael Jordan tuxedo to the western tuxedo.

Special guests for the event were Charlene Romero Wurtz, chairman of the board of MHCC, and Dee Anna Velasquez, Senorita Hispana Del Permian Basin. Ms. Velasquez will compete in the Miss Texas USA Pageant in San Antonio.

Members of the Women's Department of the MHCC were each introduced and escorted on stage by one of the male models. Julia Castro, immediate past chairperson, was named the group's "Sweetheart of the Year."

After the presentations were made, the lights were turned down low and the runway was removed to make room for dancing. Music was provided by the Twin City Band from New York City.

Models for the 1990 All-Male Fashion Show and their sponsors were Horace W. Brown Jr., Big 2 News Team; John Castro, Southwestern Bell Tel. Co.; Hadley Edwards, United Way Staff & Volunteers; Mike Flores, Mr. Vending, Inc.; Reggie Franklin, American Airlines; Mike Gutierrez, Jorge's Mexican Cafe; Sal Gutierrez, Olsten Temporary Services; Jim Hays, Magic 102; David Jones, Clajon Productions; Adam Lara, Transcom Mobil; Rick Menchaca, First City, Texas; Rick Menchaca, First City, Texas; Angel Nunez, Nunez Attorney at Law; Gary Painter, Midland Softball Asso.; Eddie Parada, CMC Business Systems; Russell Price, JTPA; Rugger (Reg) Provenghi, Provenghi Attorney at Law; Roman Reyes, Permian Distributing Co.; Roger Robels, Robles Real Estate; Charles (Bro) Seltzer, J.E. Borron; Charles Spence, Midland Reporter-Telegram; Victor Torres, Torres & Torres; Ruben Vargas, Trendy T's; Rick Villarreal, Pepsi Cola; Frank Garza White, Coca Cola; Scott Wieditz, Big 2 News Team, Hank Wurtz, Webco Printing; Eddie Flores, Big 2 News Team; Tony Chavez, attorney at law; and Roger Guess, Texas Instruments Inc.

Organizers of the event were Ms. Hernandez, models and arrangements; Ms. Lara, registration; Gloria Acosta, advertisements; Adela Quiraz, program; Melva Cardenas, decorations; Celia Morales, flowers; Lucy Granado, food; and Lucy Granado and Mona Mefford, wardrobe.

Wardrobe for the fashion show was provided by JCPenney, Oshman's and Janee's Evening Wear. Special drawing for a round trip for two to Orlando, Fla. was provided by American Airlines.

The Women's Department of the MHCC is a Permian Basin area organization dedicated to promote effectiveness and advancement of women in public, corporate and civic life.

DEAR ABBY

Breaking up bad marriage is right thing to do

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: A writer signed "From the Tall Corn State" asked, "Are there any other children who want to thank their parents for splitting up?"

Van Buren

Count me in. When my father moved out of the house, it was the biggest favor he could have done our family. He should have done it a lot sooner. I was a teenager when Dad moved out. He and Mom never got along. After he and Mom divorced, believe it or not, they became good friends. They both met other people and eventually married. Their only regret was waiting so long to end a marriage that was all wrong from the beginning.

So tell "From the Tall Corn State" she is not alone — there are many children who are glad their parents had the courage to split. Sign this ... FOUR KIDS FROM THE LONE STAR STATE

DEAR KIDS: I received a surprising number of letters from grown (and some not yet grown) children voicing the same sentiments. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: My parents finally divorced after 22 years of "staying together for the sake of the kids."

They were just kids themselves when they eloped, and when they finally grew up, they grew in different directions. I don't believe people should be condemned to a lifetime of unhappiness because of one mistake made when they were too young to know any better. By that time, they wasted a lot of good years. As I look back, I realize that their staying together while we were growing up was no favor to us. We were affected more by their unhappiness together than we were by their divorce.

I wish parents would be more honest with their children instead of trying to pretend that everything is OK, when in reality it's a mess. I can still remember my sister and I pulling the covers over our heads at night to drown out the yelling and cursing of those late-night family fights.

I'll bet you get a lot of mail on this subject. — ALSO FROM THE TALL CORN STATE

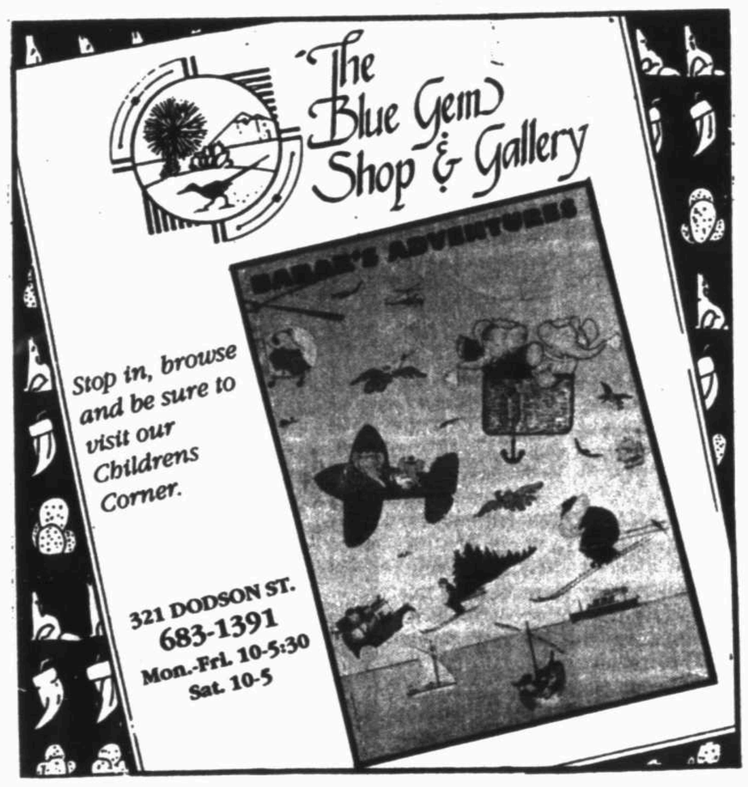

DEAR ABBY: Speaking of staying together for the sake of the kids, I think our parents probably hold the record. They split up at least a dozen times in my recollection. They were actually divorced twice during their first 15 years of marriage, but got married again. My mother said she'd rather live with the devil she knew than the devil she didn't know. Theirs was a very poor example of what a marriage should be.

They had all kinds of excuses for getting back together after they split. There were four daughters and two sons in our family, and my mother kept reconciling because she thought every father owed it to his daughter to walk her down the aisle. After each wedding, there was a big fight and Father moved out of the house for a while.

Deep down, we kids always had the feeling our folks tried to stay together for our sakes, which laid a terrible guilt trip on us. If I could give young couples one piece of advice, I would tell them not to have any children until they were absolutely certain they could get along with each other. Staying together for the sake of the kids is a big mistake. A lot of couples should split for the sake of the kids. And STAY split.

If you print this, please don't say where it came from. — ONE OF THE KIDS

Surprise! Irvan wins 500

■ Dale Earnhardt's misery in the Daytona 500 continues as NASCAR lands a new hero.

AP Laserphoto

Dale Earnhardt loses his bid to win the Daytona 500 in this spin Sunday after colliding with Joe Ruttman, left, during the final few laps at the Daytona International Speedway.

Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Ernie Irvan, who tried all week to convince people he had a real chance to win the Daytona 500, went out Sunday and did just that, outrunning heavily favored Dale Earnhardt and pole-winning Davey Allison when it counted.

"It just proves people better listen to me next time," Irvan said with a laugh.

His victory was aided considerably by Earnhardt's continuing ill fortune in NASCAR's premier stock car race, with a spin three laps from the end curtailing his chance of winning it for the first time and sending Irvan on to the victory under a caution flag.

Midland native Bobby Hillin Jr., who started in 36th position, also had an impressive race, finishing seventh overall. Hillin came to this race without a ride and ended up qualifying for the race and then a Top 10 finish.

Earnhardt, whose heart was broken here a year ago when he shredded a tire about one mile from the end of what appeared to be a certain victory, tried hard to be philosophical.

The defending Winston Cup champion said, "They're going to run another one of these things in '92 and I'll be back."

For Irvan, there was pure joy and some disbelief in his second Winston Cup victory and a trip to Daytona's Victory Lane — especially since he nearly ran out of gas after the biggest triumph of his 32 years seemed assured.

Irvan was second to Earnhardt and Allison was seventh when the field was given the green flag with seven laps remaining following the eighth caution period of the race.

By the end of lap 194 around Daytona International Speedway's 2½-mile track, Allison was up to third and he and Irvan were hooked up chasing down Earnhardt.

Irvan's yellow Chevrolet Lumina then took control, moving to the front on lap 195 and leaving Earnhardt's Lumina and Allison's Ford Thunderbird in a side-by-side duel behind him.

"I figured I could have stayed behind him and pushed him to the Daytona 500 win or he could push me to the Daytona 500 win," Irvan said. "I can't think of anybody I'd rather see win this race, because he hasn't won it yet, but I decided I'd rather him push me."

After he rocketed by Earnhardt, Irvan kept a close eye one what was taking place behind him.

NCAA sued

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Robert Morris College, saying it was punished too harshly for repaying part of a basketball player's bank loan, has filed a lawsuit against the NCAA.

A hearing has been scheduled for Thursday in Pittsburgh on the lawsuit, filed in Allegheny County Common Pleas Court.

The lawsuit asks that the NCAA be stopped from banning Robert Morris from postseason play and and require the return of $88,145 in 1989 NCAA tournament revenue.

"I hated to address it this way, but there is no other way to get relief, and I think relief is due," Robert Morris president Edward Nicholson said.

Bonds fails

NEW YORK (AP) — Pittsburgh's Barry Bonds, the National League MVP, lost his arbitration bid for $3.3 million on Sunday and was awarded $2.3 million instead.

It was the second straight victory of sorts for the Pirates. On Saturday, right fielder Bobby Bonilla lost his request to receive an arbitration record of $3,475,000 in 1991 and will make $2.4 million.

Crime plays key role in ITCA finals

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Midland College's Tonney Van de Pieterman lunges at a shot on his way to winning the ITCA men's singles title at The Midlander Sunday.

■ It was a perfect national tournament sweep ending for Midland College, except for the loss of a wallet.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

No one ever figured crime would play a part in the finals of the Intercollegiate Tennis Coaches Association National Junior College Indoor Invitational.

But it did.

Midland College men's singles finalist Greg Muller lost to teammate Tonney Van de Pieterman, 6-1, 7-6 (7-4), Sunday at The Midlander, all the while finding concentration in the title match nearly impossible at times because of the theft of his wallet several hours before.

Muller had $500 stolen from the wallet in the men's locker room while he showered following Saturday's semifinal action.

"I was thinking about it quite a lot," Muller said after the loss. "It affected my mood a little. But I don't want to take anything away from Tonney because he played much better than me today. I was fortunate to get even in the second set. I thought my concentration was much better by then."

In the women's singles final, No. 3 seed Seiko Ichioka, of Midland, defeated teammate Myriam Berthe, the tourney's No. 1 seed, 6-4, 6-3.

MC also claimed championship titles in both men's and women's doubles, giving it a clean sweep in all four events.

Muller said a changed plan of attack in the second set allowed him to make the match a close affair before Van de Pieterman finally pulled out a tie-breaker win.

"I had to change my strategy to more baseline," Muller said. "I was missing too many first serves and having too many double faults."

"He blew me away from the backcourt," Van de Pieterman said of Muller.

Van de Pieterman's service rarely missed the mark. The 6-0 lefthander escaped with just one double fault; Muller was able to break Van de Pieterman's serve on only one occasion, during the sixth game of the second set, to go up 4-2.

Van de Pieterman returned the favor quickly, though, breaking Muller's serve in the next game, on his way to winning four of the next six games to bring on the tie-breaker.

It was a Van de Pieterman break of a Muller serve in the tie-breaker that iced the win. Tied at 4-4, Van de Pieterman broke to go up 5-4, and with

Coogs' Smith hits 29 to sink No. 24 Texas

HOUSTON (AP) — Until Sunday, Houston coach Pat Foster said his team's best game of the season was a loss to the Texas Longhorns. Now their best game is a victory over the Longhorns.

Byron Smith found his shooting touch to score 29 points and lead the Cougars to an 82-73 victory over No. 24 Texas, snapping the Longhorns' 10-game winning streak.

"Today we played with great intensity for 40 minutes," Foster said. "At Texas (a 90-84 loss Jan. 17), we played hard for 30 minutes. We weren't as high emotionally today as we were up there. But front to back this is our best game."

Smith, 2-for-18 in his previous two games against Arkansas and Rice, said he had to redeem himself.

"I let the team down against Arkansas and I had to come out and set the tone today," Smith said. "They set some great screens for me and got me the ball. I was open and made some shots."

Foster was happy to see Smith's turnaround.

"We have to have him scoring to win," Foster said. "I thought he worked a lot harder today without the ball. We set some good screens for him and he got some good shots."

SWC Basketball

The Longhorns, who fell to 17-6 for the season and 11-2 in SWC games, took their biggest lead of the game, 61-56 with 9:50 to play but the Cougars regained the lead for good at 63-62 on a 3-point basket by Smith with 7:30 to play.

"The long winning streak finally caught up with us," Texas coach Tom Penders said. "But don't forget, Houston is a very fine basketball team. They play very well against us every time we match up. We got beat by a team that played better than we did today."

Teheran scored 22 points for Houston, including 10 consecutive free throws in the second half, as the Cougars boosted their record to 15-8, 7-5.

The Cougars hit 23 of 28 free throws, including 20 of 23 in the second half.

"Free throws were a big key to the game," Teheran said. "I've been shooting a lot of free throws after practice. After the Rice game we got together and decided to do things a lot better."

Locksley Collie led the Longhorns with 24 points and Joey Wright added 2 points, but had to sit out part of the second half with four fouls.

Howard College fears Chaparrals' potential

■ Hawks' coach Steve Green would just as soon Midland College miss the Region V basketball tournament.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

The Howard College Hawks may have the better team. And they may have Monday night's home court advantage. And they may have a spot already assured in the Region V tournament next month in Waco.

But that doesn't stop Howard College head coach Steve Green from being concerned about Midland College, a team which visits Big Spring's Dorothy Garrett Coliseum on the Howard College campus today at 8 p.m. Green considers the Chaparrals potentially explosive.

"They scare me," Green said. "They do. I don't want them to make the tournament because I don't want to have to play them there.

"Anytime you've got Carroll Boudreaux and Eugene Witherspoon on the same team, you're capable of doing anything."

Green said he considers Boudreaux, averaging 20 points a game, the best sophomore player in the conference.

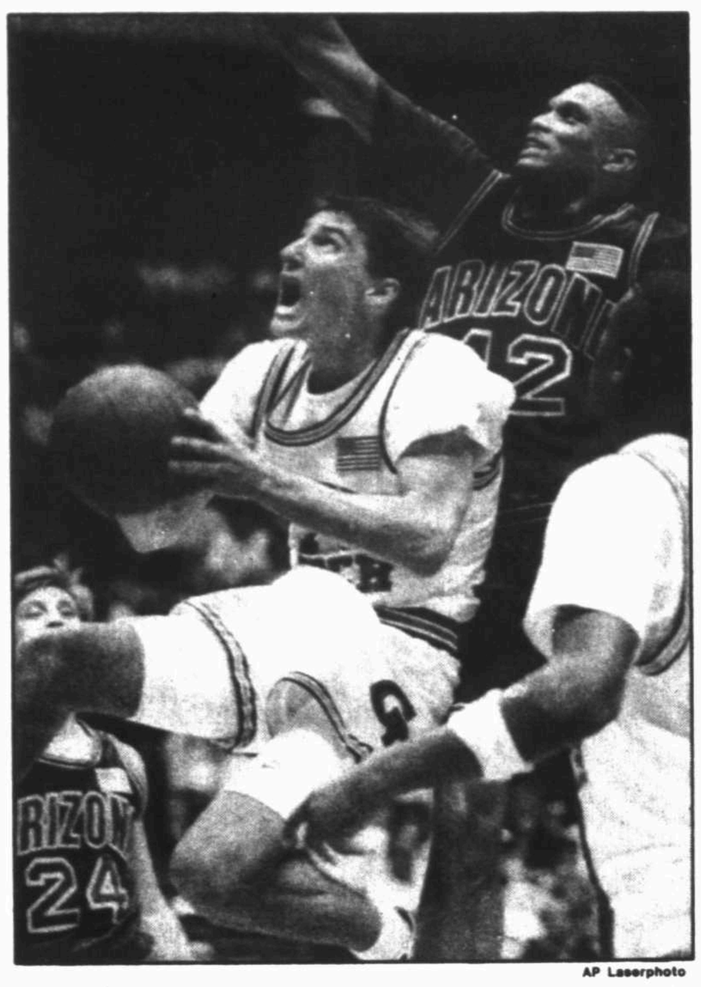

"You don't have UNLV and Nebraska and Arkansas after Boudreaux because he looks good. He's a heckuva player."

Howard, with three major college candidates themselves in guard Harvey Petty, and forwards Cecil Pittman and Johnny McDowell, is ranked fifth in the country with a 26-1 overall record, 12-1 in conference. The Hawks' sole loss was to South Plains earlier this season.

UNLV has shown interest in Petty; McDowell has drawn the attention of Wyoming, Kansas State, Texas Tech, Houston and Texas-Arlington, and Pittman is being courted by New Mexico State, Southwest Missouri and Tulsa.

Ohio St. survives double overtime

Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Treg Lee, who tied the game in the first overtime, scored with four seconds left in the second extra period Sunday to give No. 2 Ohio State a 97-95 win over No. 4 Indiana.

Lee's 10-foot baseline jumper was a duplicate of the shot that tied the dramatic showdown in the first overtime and enabled the Buckeyes to take over first place in the conference.

Jim Jackson scored a career-high 30 points for Ohio State (22-1 overall, 12-1 in the conference), including the basket that tied it at the end of regulation play.

Indiana (22-3, 10-2) was led by a career-high 32 points by frershman Damon Bailey.

Neither team led by more than six points and there were 24 lead changes and 22 ties. Ohio State hadn't lost at home this season in 12 previous games and Indiana hadn't lost on the road in its eight previous outings.

Indiana, which lost to Ohio State in Bloomington 93-85 on Jan. 21, had a 5-point lead with a minute left in regulation. But Ohio State came back on two free throws by Jamaal Brown and two more by Lee to pull to a 77-76 deficit with 20 seconds left.

After Bailey hit the front end of a bonus situation with 12 seconds left, Ohio State rebounded and called timeout with seven seconds remaining.

Jackson took the ball near midcourt and worked his way into the lane, from where he lofted a short shot over Indiana's Eric Anderson with one second left to force overtime.

In the first overtime, the Hoosiers took an 85-81 lead on a 3-point field goal by Bailey with 2:52 left in the five-minute extra period. Ohio State, trailing 87-83 after another Bailey basket with 2:06 remaining, scored the next four points on baskets by Perry Carter and Lee, a 10-foot baseline jumper from the right side that tied it.

Jackson blocked a potential game-winning shot by Bailey, then forced Chris Reynolds to alter his shot at the buzzer, pushing the teams to a second overtime.

Jamie Skelton, substituting for Mark Baker, who twisted an ankle in the first half, hit a pair of 3-point shots for a 94-92 Ohio State lead with 2:28 left.

Ga. Tech 62, No. 6 Arizona 56

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Jon Barry scored 19 points and forced a turnover with 30 seconds to play and Georgia Tech upset No. 6 Arizona.

The Yellow Jackets (14-9) almost had to win the game to keep alive any at-large postseason chances. They did that without a sterling effort from Kenny Anderson, who finished with 15 points on 6-for-21 shooting with six turnovers.

Mackey finished with 13 points. Williams led Arizona with 20 points and Chris Mills had 11.

The game was played at the Meadowlands as part of a benefit for the homeless and raised $150,000 for Comic Relief.

No. 20 LSU 88, Alabama 81

BATON ROUGE, La. — Shaquille O'Neal blocked seven shots, hauled in 19 rebounds and scored 36 points, including five from the free throw line when the game was in balance, to lead 20th-ranked Louisiana State over Alabama.

The victory moved LSU (17-7) into a tie with Alabama for the lead in the Southeastern Conference, with both teams having a 10-4 league slate. Alabama is 16-7 after seeing a six-game winning streak snapped Sunday.

Kentucky (18-5 and 10-3 in the SEC) is ineligible for the conference championship and postseason play.

Ewing, Knicks dismantle Pistons

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Patrick Ewing scored 28 points and the New York Knicks played their best game of the season Sunday, outscoring Detroit 62-34 in the middle two quarters en route to a 116-88 victory.

With another loss at Madison Square Garden, the Knicks would have had the worst home record in the NBA. Even with the victory, they are 11-15, an embarrassing decline from their 35-6 record at home two seasons ago.

Instead, New York recovered from a slow start to rout the defending champion Pistons, outscoring them 18-4 after turnovers in the pivotal second and third quarters.

Detroit lost for the fourth time in six games, although it is still 7-4 since Isiah Thomas was lost for the remainder of the season after wrist surgery.

Vinnie Johnson led the Pistons with 23 points, but leading scorer Joe Dumars had only seven on 3-for-12 shooting. Dumars had scored 58 points in Detroit's previous two games.

Kiki Vandeweghe scored 20 points for New York and Charles Oakley had 15 rebounds.

The Knicks, who made seven of 22 field-goal attempts in the opening period, made 15 of their first 25 shots in the second quarter, outscoring Detroit 33-15 for a 49-39 halftime lead. The rally featured Vandeweghe's 3-point goal and three-point play and rookie Jerrod Mustaf's three inside baskets.

New York continued to dominate the Pistons in the third quarter, making 13 of 20 shots and outscoring them 29-19 for a 78-58 lead. The margin peaked at 30 points in the final period.

The Pistons used a 14-4 run in the final 5:50 of the first quarter to lead 24-16, but it was the Knicks' game thereafter.

Celtics 126, Nuggets 108

DENVER — Larry Bird scored 17 of his 24 points in the first period, sparking Boston to its seventh consecutive victory.

The Celtics took command with only two minutes gone in the game and breezed to a 36-23 lead after one quarter.

It was more of the same in the second period as Boston opened a 67-41 lead at halftime.

Although using their reserves for most of the second half, the Celtics shot 52.7 percent in handing the Nuggets their fifth straight loss.

Denver, again playing without injured point guard Michael Adams, was unable to mount a cohesive offense.

Orlando Woolridge had 23 points, Chris Jackson 20 and Reggie Williams 19 for Denver.

Kevin Gamble scored 21 points, Reggie Lewis 17 and Dee Brown 16 for the Celtics. Brian Shaw had 12 points, nine rebounds and nine assists.

Boston built its biggest margin at 80-47 with 8:28 left in the third quarter and the reserves took over late in the period. Bird departed with 3:48 remaining in the third period and did not return.

Bullets 108, Cavaliers 104

BALTIORE — Rookie A.J. English scored 31 points and added 10 assists as Washington ended Cleveland's three-game winning streak.

English, forced into the starting lineup because of injuries to the Bullets' regular guards, made 12 of 20 field goal attempts to surpass his previous career-best of 30 points.

English's effort almost went for naught when the Bullets blew most of an eight-point lead in the final 5:49. Down 105-102, Cleveland had a chance to tie in the last 11 seconds, but Craig Ehlo and Steve Kerr missed 3-pointers.

Larry Nance scored 27 points and Brad Daugherty had 22 for Cleveland, which lost its 14th game in the last 16 on the road.

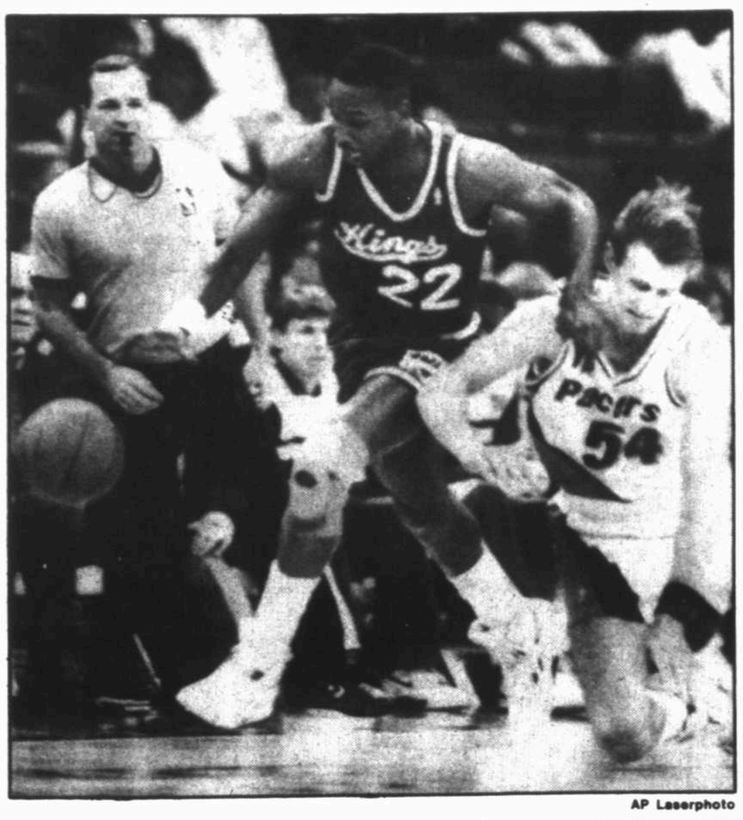

Pacers 113, Kings 110

INDIANAPOLIS — Micheal Williams scored 22 points, including two free throws with 11 seconds left, lifting Indiana over Sacramento, the Kings' 18th consecutive road loss.

Rik Smits also scored 22 points for the Pacers, followed by Reggie Miller with 21. Williams added seven assists and four steals.

Antoine Carr led the Kings with 35 points, and Lionel Simmons scored 29.

While Sacramento closed within one point four times, it never caught up.

NBA Roundup

Bucks 111, Magic 103 OT

ORLANDO, Fla. — The Milwaukee Bucks overcame a five-point deficit in the final 1:20 of regulation for the second time in three days, then outscored Orlando 13-3 in the first three minutes of overtime.

The Bucks won for the second straight time since trading All-Star guard Ricky Pierce to the Seattle SuperSonics, despite shooting only 32 percent from the field in the first three quarters and playing without starters Jay Humphries and Frank Brickowski.

Humphries missed the game with a sore big toe on his right foot, while Brickowski and Orlando's Greg Kite were ejected for fighting with 3:57 remaining in the first quarter.

Danny Schayes led Milwaukee with 26 points, 22 of them in the second half when the Bucks overcame a 15-point deficit. Orlando led by 11 after three quarters and 92-87 when Schayes made two free throws with 80 seconds left to set the stage for the comeback victory.

76ers 114, Clippers 104

LOS ANGELES — Charles Barkley and Hersey Hawkins each had 24 points as Philadelphia snapped a three-game losing streak and a seven-game road skid.

In winning for only the fourth time in their last 14 games and the first time away from the Spectrum since Jan. 11 at Milwaukee, the Sixers also got 17 points from Ron Anderson — eight in the fourth quarter — as they dealt the Clippers their seventh defeat in eight games.

Danny Manning paced Los Angeles with 21 points.

Hawkins, a No. 1 draft pick by the Clippers in 1988, scored nine points for the Sixers in a 3½-minute span of the first quarter.

Rare fit of anger paces Don Blake win

PGA Tour

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A fit of anger last Monday may have paved the way for Jay Don Blake's first PGA Tour victory Sunday in the Shearson Lehman Brothers Open.

The 32-year-old Blake threw his old putter — one he'd used since his high school days — into a pond at Palm Springs, Calif., while playing with some friends.

"I don't know what came over me," Blake said. "That's very much out of character for me. I'd just got tired of missing all those short birdie putts, reaching the par-5's in two then 3-putting.

"I was playing with some friends, and we had a few dollars going, and I wasn't making anything. Finally, I missed a short putt on the 17th hole. I just turned around and threw the putter about 30 yards into the middle of a pond."

With that blade putter gone, he went to a back-up Blue Goose putter he'd been carrying around when he crossed the mountains to the California coast for this event.

He made two critical birdie putts down the stretch and pulled away to a two-shot victory Sunday, the first in five seasons on the PGA Tour for the 1980 National Collegiate champion.

"I always thought I had the game to win out here. I just hadn't done it," he said. And he gave full credit to the new putter.

"If I'd still had that old putter, I might have kept on missing putts and messing up and not won today," he said Sunday.

Blake won this one — and gained entry to such exclusive events as the Masters, Tournament of Champions and World Series of Golf — with a 5-under-par 67 in the final round at Torrey Pines and a 268 total, 20 under par.

Bill Sander, a former national amateur champion who has yet to win in a 14-year Tour career, finished off a 66 with a birdie on the final hole and won the largest check of his life, $108,000, with a solo second at 270.

Dan Forsman and Ben Crenshaw, both very much in the title hunt until Blake rolled in the decisive putts on 15 and 17, finished third and fourth, respectively.

Forsman, the defending titleholder, shot 68-271. Crenshaw, who damanged his chances with consecutive bogeys early in the day.

ITCA: Chaps pull national sweep

(From 1C)

and with the next two points coming off his own service, Van de Pieterman quickly put away Muller for the 7-4 tie-breaker win.

"One point in a tie-breaker can make a big difference," Van de Pieterman said. "I got away with some lucky shots."

MC tennis coach Joe Williams said the different styles of play of the two – as well as the theft of Muller's wallet – told the story of the championship.

"When kids go to college, money is an important factor," Wiliams said. "He didn't come in today feeling good about anything under those circumstances.

"Tony plays a high percentage game. Greg plays a riskier game and he's very talented at it. But percentages normally win out."

In the women's singles final, Ichioka repeatedly pushed aside threats from Berthe to grab the win.

With a 5-4 edge in the first set, Ichioka fell behind 15-40 in the 10th game but won the next two points to force deuce in a game she eventually won. Berthe claimed two advantages at deuce before Ichioka won three straight points to claim the first set.

The second and deciding set, though was even more impressive for the Japan native. Ichioka fell behind 0-3 and proceeded to reel off six straight games as Berthe slowly fell apart.

Berthe double faulted twice and landed her last shot mid-net in the ninth game, giving Ichioka the 6-3 come-from-behind win.

"Some stupid mistakes" was how Berthe described her downfall. "She's a great player and she played really well."

Ichioka returned the "great player" compliment to Berthe, and said when she was down 0-3, she didn't grow overly concerned.

"I just think about my best tennis," Ichioka said. "I don't think about love-3 or love-4 or love-5."

Added Williams: "Seiko's the best thing that ever happened to Myriam. (Seiko) doesn't give up points easily. She's a tough cookie. She knows what she does and she does it well. Her best asset is the Japanese work ethic that is inherent in their culture."

Van de Pieterman and Toby Curtis combined to defeat Laurent Becouran and Alexander Lindholm, of Anderson (Ga.) CC, 6-4, 6-3 in the men's doubles finals. Berthe and Janneke Garos defeated Midland teammates Boba Tzvetkova and Ichioka in the women's doubles championship, 6-2, 6-4.

Gabrielle Villiger, of Anderson, defeated Tyler's Susana Labrador, 2-6, 6-3, 6-4 in the women's consolation final. Becouran and Lindholm did not complete the men's singles consolation final because of travel conflicts.

Tyler's Vladimir Krystic and Pease College's Sussanah Hobb received the tournament's top sportsmanship awards.

FINALS

Men's Singles: Tonney Van de Pieterman, MC, def. Greg Muller, MC, 6-1, 7-6 (7-4).

Women's Singles: Seiko Ichioka, MC, def. Myriam Berthe, MC, 6-4, 6-3.

Men's Doubles: Van de Pieterman-Toby Curtis, MC, def. Laurent Becouran-Alexander Lindholm, Anderson College, 6-4, 6-3.

Women's Doubles: Berthe-Janneke Garos, MC, def. Boba Tzvetkova-Ichioka, MC, 6-2, 6-4.

Women's Singles Consolation Final: Gabrielle Villiger, Anderson, def. Susana Labrador, Tyler, 2-6, 6-3, 6-4.

Men's Singles Consolation Final: Becouran, Anderson vs. Alexander Lindholm, Anderson. (Match not played due to travel conflicts but is expected to be played on the Anderson CC (Ga.) campus this week).

Trevino rally beats Douglass

NAPLES, Fla. (AP) — Lee Trevino sank a 12-foot putt on the 18th hole for his sixth birdie of the day and beat Dale Douglass by one stroke in the Senior PGA Tour's Aetna Challenge on Sunday.

Trevino shot a bogey-free 66 to overtake Douglass, the 18- and 36-hole leader who shot a 68, also without a bogey. Trevino finished at 205, Douglass at 206.

The two dueled throughout the day over the par-72, 6,682-yard South course at the Vineyards.

"I said to myself today was going to be a better day," said Trevino, who shot a 68 on Saturday to get within a shot of the Douglass' lead heading into the final round.

The win was the first of the season for Trevino, the defending champion.

MVP award not good enough for Bonds

NEW YORK (AP) — Winning the National League's MVP award wasn't quite good enough to pull out a victory in arbitration for Barry Bonds.

The Pittsburgh left fielder lost his arbitration bid for $3.3 million on Sunday and was awarded $2.3 million instead.

It was the second straight victory of sorts for the Pirates. On Saturday, right fielder Bobby Bonilla lost his request to receive an arbitration record of $3,475,000 in 1991 and will make $2.4 million.

Bonds hit .301 last season with 33 homers and 114 RBIs in leading the Pirates to the NL East title. When negotiations for a long-term deal stalled, Bonds said he wanted to be traded and would someday come back and haunt the Pirates.

Meanwhile, Cleveland pitcher Greg Swindell won his arbitration case to leave the owners with a 6-5 lead. With less than a week remaining in arbitration, 17 players remain scheduled for hearings.

"You've got to remember, the club offer was almost three times his salary," Pirates spokesman Rick Cerrone said. Bonds made $850,000 last year.

Bonds also lost his arbitration request in 1990. Last season, he asked for $1.6 million, up from his 1989 salary of less than $400,000.

Cy Young Award winner Doug Drabek, however, won his case with the Pirates and was awarded a record $3,350,000 in salary arbitration on Thursday. Bonilla's $2.4 million is the second higest total in arbitration history.

So since last Thursday, the Pirates have added more than $8 million to their ever-increasing payroll.

Bonds thinks he should be paid on a similar scale to Darryl Strawberry or Jose Canseco — more than $20 million over five years.

Bonilla gambled and lost he'd win in arbitration. Last week, he turned down a four-year contract worth $15.5 million, or $3.875 million a year — $1.5 million more than he'll make this season.

Swindell will make $2,025,000 in 1991 instead of the $1.4 million the club offered.

Swindell, the ace of the Indians' staff, was hurt by arm troubles last season and finished the season with a record of 12-9 and a 4.40 earned-run average in 34 starts. He made $890,000 in 1990.

"When we left the room we thought it was a hard-fought contest but we felt we won, not decisively but by a margin enough to make us feel comfortable," Swindell's agent, Randy Hendricks, said.

The Indians avoided arbitration with pitcher John Farrell on Sunday. Farrell, who made $320,000 last season, agreed to a one-year deal for $410,000.

Ivan Calderon avoided arbitration and signed a three-year contract worth $7.8 million on Sunday with the Montreal Expos.

The outfielder was scheduled for an arbitration hearing on Wednesday. He was asking for $2.25 million for the 1991 season, while the Expos countered with $1.7 million.

Hogs leave amazing SWC track legacy

FORT WORTH (AP) — The Arkansas Razorbacks have participated in their last Southwest Conference Indoor Track and Field championships but they left an amazing legacy.

In just two events, the Hogs scored a clean-sweep 62 points as they earned their 11th consecutive and final SWC indoor crown.

The Reuben Reina-led Razorbacks scored 31 points in both the mile run and 3000 meter run by sweeping the top six places in each event Saturday at Will Rogers Coliseum.

"It was a tremendous performance," Reina said. "We wanted to go out in style."

Arkansas, which participates in the Southeastern Conference next year, exits the SWC with its 12th indoor title in 18 attempts.

The Texas Lady Longhorns, paced by the return of the smooth-striding Carlette Guidry, successfully defended their women's title.

Reina won the mile in 4:05.63 and won the 3000 meter run in a meet record 7:58.85, beating his own mark of 8:01.35. In each instance, he was followed by a stampede of Arkansas runners.

Arkansas coach John McDonnell said he was sorry to see the end of the school's SWC run.

"We've been here so long I'm sorry we have to leave but our kids went out and put on a show," he said.

McDonnell added "this is a good a meet as we have ever had. I've never seen our team compete like this before."

Arkansas scored 151 points to 93 for Baylor and 60 for Texas.

Guidry, who missed last year's meet with an injury, won two gold medals with victories in the 55 and 200 meter dashes. Her clocking of 23.6 in the 200 meters bested her own meet mark of 23.77 set in 1988.

Texas scored 141 points to 80 by Arkansas, 76 by Baylor and 67 by Houston.

Longhorns crush Wildcats by 16-1

TEMPE, Ariz (AP) — Roger Luce and Brooks Kieschnick each hit a homer and had four RBIs as Texas crushed Arizona State 16-1 Sunday afternoon.

The Longhorns (8-4) salvaged the finale of a three-game series that saw them lose 4-3 here Friday night and 18-4 Saturday.

Sunday's game, which was stopped after eight innings so Texas could catch its flight home, dropped Arizona State's record to 10-5.

The Longhorns scored seven times in the third inning for a 7-1 lead on Luce's two-run single off Sun Devil starter Tony Pena (0-3), Kieschnick's three-run homer, Shane Halter's sacrifice fly and a bases-loaded walk to Paul Cherrone.

Oil drops sharply

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices fell more than $1 a barrel Friday on hopes that an Iraqi proposal to withdraw from Kuwait might lead to peace in the Persian Gulf.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in March settled at $20.88 per barrel, down $1.44, on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Oil traders initially responded to the announcement by bidding prices down sharply — as much as $2.49 a barrel lower in London. But as Bush called the Iraqi offer "a cruel hoax" and other allied leaders expressed skepticism, prices showed a partial rebound.

Friday's wild session left crude prices $1.04 a barrel lower for the week in New York.

Analysts said traders were cautious about adjusting their positions in advance of the three-day weekend. U.S. markets will be closed Monday for Presidents' Day.

In natural gas trading, the March price for 1,000 cubic feet rose to $1.385, up 1.8 cents for the day and 2 cents for the week.

Dollar rises

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar rose against major currencies Friday following Iraq's conditional offer to withdraw from Kuwait and a government report that raised concerns about inflation.

Gold prices fell. On the New York Commodity Exchange, gold bullion for current delivery settled at $364.40 per troy ounce, down $3.80 per troy ounce from Thursday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Thursday's rates, included: 1.4777 German marks, up from 1.4665; 1.2692 Swiss francs, up from 1.2570; 1.1528 Canadian dollars, up from 1.1523; 5.0320 Franch francs, up from 4.9950; and 1,110.50 Italian lire, up from 1,103.25.

On the New York Commodity Exchange, silver was $3.780 per troy ounce, down .046 cent from Thursday's $3.826.

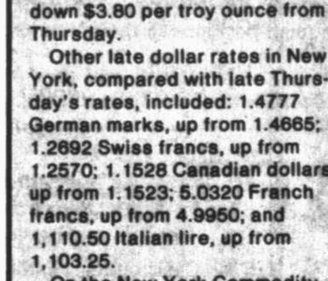

Stocks surge up

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices staged another strong advance Friday, reviving their early-1991 rally after Thursday's setback.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had fallen 31.93 on Thursday, jumped 57.42 points to 2,934.65.

That stretched its gain for the week to 103.96 points, on top of a 100-point rise the week before.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 222.37 million shares, against 230.75 million in the previous session.

Decline in imports narrow trade deficit

■ Cautious spending by consumers has contributed to a lower trade deficit.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The nation's trade deficit fell in December to a six-month low of $6.25 billion, the Commerce Department said Friday.

The improvement came entirely from a decline in imports, reflecting a weak economy in which cash-pinched businesses and consumers have been holding back on purchases of both domestically produced and imported goods and services.

"The good news is the bad news," said Ara J. Jelalian, an economist at First Chicago Corp., about the decline in imports.

The trade gap narrowed more than most economists expected, shrinking the imbalance for the full year to $100.1 billion, the smallest annual total in seven years.

If not for higher petroleum prices since Iraq's invasion of Kuwait on Aug. 2, the 1990 deficit would have fallen even lower — to $91 billion, according to a calculation given by Commerce Secretary Robert A. Mosbacher, who predicted "even greater progress in the years ahead."

The December gap compared with a deficit of $8.91 billion in November, which was revised downward from an initial report of $9.7 billion.

Imports fell by 7.9 percent, to $39.7 billion. Exports were also off, by 2.1 percent, but at $33.5 billion they were still at the fourth-highest monthly level on record. The trade figures measure the difference between imports and exports, one of the main economic barometers.

The volume of oil imports in December fell 7.6 percent, to 198 million barrels, the lowest amount imported since 191.5 million barrels were bought in May 1987. The price of the imported oil slid by $3.37 a barrel, to $26.07.

Bruce Steinberg, manager of the macroeconomics department at Merrill Lynch, said the smaller-than-expected deficit meant the economy actually performed better than indicated three weeks ago when the government reported the gross national product for the fourth quarter.

That report showed output falling at an annual rate of 2.1 percent and was taken as the most definitive proof to date that the nation had entered a recession after its longest peacetime expansion.

But in light of the improved trade deficit signaling the nation itself is producing a greater amount of what it consumes, Steinberg forecast that the Commerce Department will revise the first-quarter output decline to around 1.5 percent in its next report Feb. 27.

Most economists expect continued improvement in the trade deficit, reflecting what are projected to be further declines in oil prices and gains in American competitiveness arising from a weak dollar.

When the dollar falls in relation to other currencies, this has the effect of increasing prices of imports and cutting prices of exports.

Another factor cited by economists is the likelihood that foreign demand will continue to be generally buoyant. Although Canada and Britain are also in recession, Japan, West Germany and many other markets are still experiencing modest growth.

Moody's slices GM and GMAC ratings

■ In less than two weeks GM and GMAC have had two big blows from investment services lowering their ratings.

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — More than a week after Standard & Poor's Corp. lowered its ratings of the Big Three auto makers, Moody's Investors Service said Friday it had lowered the ratings of General Motors Corp., General Motors Acceptance Corp. and their subsidiaries.

The change affects about $71.8 billion in debt and reduces the senior debt of GM and GMAC by a notch to A-1, from Aa-3.

Moody's said it expected the car maker's market share to remain under pressure from intensified competition, publicized quality problems and a lackluster reception to some new models.

The ratings agency noted that GM's decline in market share occurred despite aggressive use of rebates and the introduction of expensive technology in the manufacturing process.

The agency said that despite GM's problems it retained substantial flexibility in the face of a recession and was relatively well positioned in the domestic market and strong in Europe. Moody's also cited GM's profitable non-automotive subsidiaries.

Industrial output drops at slower pace

In a newly released report government statistics indicate the nation may be nearing the end of the recession.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In a report hinting that the economy's decline may be bottoming out, the government said that industrial output fell much less in January than in the two months before.

Output was down four-tenths of 1 percent last month after declines averaging three times that much in November and December.

At the same time, prices received by producers edged down one-tenth of 1 percent over all, but rose five-tenths of 1 percent when energy and food were excluded, a rise that was more than twice the increase in that category in December.

The overall change in the Producer Price Index for Finished Goods was also firmer than the month before, and the prices report was taken by economists as a further indication that the worst of the recession might have passed.

"There is now embryonic evidence that the rate of decline in economic activity has slowed," declared Gordon Richards, economist for the National Association of Manufacturers.

"The continuing fall in industrial production is clearly serious," he added, but is markedly less worrisome than in preceding months.

In December, production dropped a revised 1.1 percent, nearly double the decline of six-tenths of 1 percent initially estimated by the Federal Reserve Board.

The November decline now stands at 1.6 percent, a slight change from earlier estimates of 1.7 percent and 1.8 percent. With the January drop, industrial production has fallen for four straight months.

An upturn in car and truck assembly was the main factor limiting the January slide in the index that measures the output of factories, mines and utilities, the Federal Reserve stated.

Output climbed to a still-depressed seasonally adjusted annual pace of 5.4 million cars last month, but this was significantly above December's total of 5 million, analysts noted. It was also below recent selling rates, which implies that in the months ahead the automotive sector will be a positive force in the economy rather than a drag.

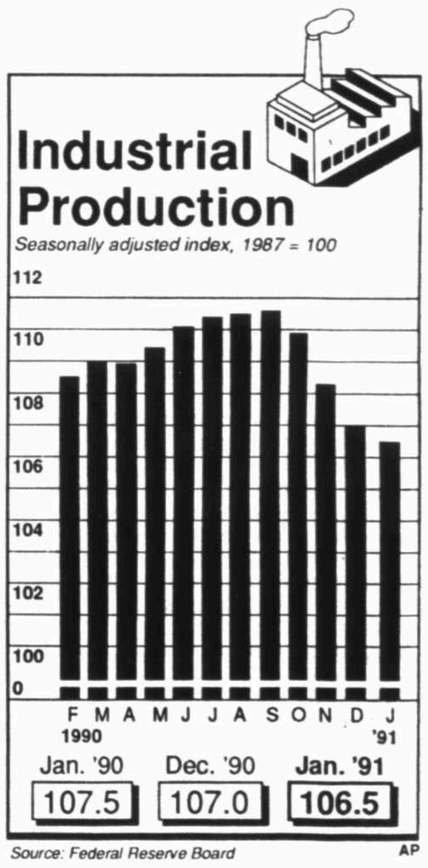

"The question this raises is whether the worst is behind us," said Maury N. Harris, chief economist at Paine Webber Inc., referring to the overall output report.

He said the recession, though likely to continue for another few months, would become increasingly less severe with the help of the recent decline in interest rates, oil prices that have dropped from their highs after the August invasion of Kuwait by Iraq, and a weak dollar that helps make American goods more internationally competitive in price.

The Federal Reserve also reported that utilization of industrial capacity fell five-tenths of a percentage point last month, to 79.9 percent, the lowest level since January 1987.

Still, the latest decline was about half the 1.1 percentage point drop in December, providing another tenuous sign that the downturn in the economy might be starting to lose momentum. The rate for factories alone also fell five-tenths of a point in January, to 78.8 percent, the lowest since September 1986 and 2.5 percentage points below its 1967-1990 average.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Custodian of stocks unable to use them

By Bill Doyle

Q. I gave each of my two young grandchildren 100 shares of stock, registered under the gift to minors act. I named my son, their father, custodian of both accounts.

Due to the recession, my son's business is in serious need of cash. What are his options to access these funds on a temporary basis?

Doyle

A. There is no legitimate way your son can get his hands on the dollar value of those stocks — even temporarily. Gifts made under the gift to minors act as well as the newer transfer to minors act are irrevocable. As the donor, you can't take those gifts back.

Nor is your son, as custodian, authorized to sell the stocks and use the sale proceeds for his own purposes. The rules also prohibit the custodian from using those securities as collateral for a loan. If your son sells the stock, he is required to keep the money in gift to minors accounts or reinvest it in securities in gift to minors form.

The custodian is required to follow the Prudent Man Rule by handling the account "as would a prudent man of discretion and intelligence who is seeking a reasonable income and preservation of his capital."

Regulations call for the stock and any cash in those gift to minors accounts to be turned over to your grandchildren when they reach the age of majority, which varies from 18 to 21 in different states. At that time, the new adults can demand an accounting from their father.

The rules do permit "custodial property" — meaning the stock — to be used for the support, maintenance, education and general benefit of minors.

Your son might contend that selling the stock and using the money to keep his business going and a roof over the family's head benefited his children. But that would be stretching the point. While it's hardly any secret that many families tap gift to minors accounts for less than legitimate purposes, I can't recommend such ploys.

Q. My husband and I are in our middle 50s and have a combined annual income of $40,000. I want to start saving for the college years of our 7-year-old daughter, but I will be able to save only $50 a month for this.

Should I put the money in a savings account for her or buy U.S. Savings Bonds?

A. Either would be a good choice but there are others. My suggestion is to build the savings account to about $1,000 and then open a no-load growth mutual fund in gift to minors act form.

That type of fund holds common stocks with past records and/or future potential for increasing in value, thereby taking the value of the fund shares higher.

Just be aware there is risk stock and mutual fund share prices sometimes fall. However, over the long term, such as the time until your daughter is ready for college, most growth funds have produced better investment results than savings accounts and savings bonds.

Q. After reading in your column that assets in beneficiary form avoid probate I consulted my attorney and then went to my two banks to have a beneficiary added to all my accounts.

Am I correct that this leaves my will simple and less likely to chance?

A. Yes. The beneficiary you named automatically will become the owner of those accounts when you leave this vale of tears. The accounts will pass to that beneficiary outside your will and will not have to go through the probate process.

As has been pointed out in this space often, however, this does not mean your estate will escape federal estate tax and state estate and/or inheritance taxes, if you leave a bundle. All states now have "death tax" levies, which vary from state to state. Check with your attorney for the situation in your state.

Opportunities

Through the resources of the International Trade Division of the Texas Department of Commerce and its Export Assistance Centers, a complete follow-up in pursuing exporting is now available in Midland.

For information contact Dr.Jerry Jones at 685-4657 or Sharon Hanzalik at 685-4670.

The following government agencies are seeking bids.

- Farming machinery and implements — A family owned Saudi Arabia company that deals in heavy machinery, equipment and supplies is interested in contacting U.S. manufactures of farming machinery and emplements. Presently the firm represents mostly European companies, but would like to import U.S. equipment and promote in Saudi Arabia. Refer to P0081.
- Golf balls, clubs, bags and other golf equipment — A small distributor, importer and retailer of golf equipment in West Germnay is interested in importing from the U.S. and to represent an American firm. Refer to P0008.
- Gate, ball and butterfly values; diesel-engine generator sets and water injection chemicals — A United Arab Emirates firm that acts as an importer of products and services in the oilfield industry is seeking additonal U.S. firms to represent. Refer to P0168A.
- Video tape recorders and video tape production — A firm in Saudi Arabia that deals in computer peripherals and software, aviation, kitchen furniture and general contractors is interested in contacting U.S. firms dealing in video film production and supplies. Refer to P0083.
- High denisty paper baler — A firm in Australia is seeking direct purchase of new or used balers. Company supplies old newsprint to de-inking mills for recycling into new paper. The baler is required for old newpapers that they export. Mimimum of 20 tons per hour throughput with ruffler. Refer to P0025.

Irish, Texas way of life collide

By Brenda Wharton
Staff Writer

An internship program by Medallion Hotels has allowed two Irish students the opportunity to find out all about West Texas.

Martha Cahill and Siobhan O'Dea remember vividly the day they arrived in Midland. "The landscape was very different, when the plane was descending at the airport all I could see was flat and brown," Cahill said. "Ireland is green with lots of trees and water, something that West Texas lacks," she added.

Cahill, a graduate of Galway Regional Technical College, is working as the assistant front office manager. She was more than a little shocked to see the big differences in style. "Everybody, including businessmen wear boots and hats, it's a much more relaxed way of life here," she said.

O'Dea, a student of Shannon College, is working as the Assistant of Food and Beverage. "When we first arrived people were mezmerized with our accent and had a hard time understanding what we were saying," O'Dea said. "In the beginning when I would ask a food server to do something, they would nod and walk away. Then when I'd come back later and the task still wasn't done I figured out that the person really didn't understand what I said," she said.

Key words that Cahill and O'Dea use cause quite a few people to turn their heads. Directing customers to the 'lifts' instead of elevators has caused some confusion. Telling busboys to set out 'cutlery' instead of silverware has also caused some blank stares. Bank tellers were also more than confused when Cahill wanted to 'lodge' her pay instead of deposit it.

Both Cahill and O'Dea escape to larger towns when they're able to get away from work "There isn't a whole lot for single people to do in Midland," Cahill added. "We've flown to Austin a couple of times to meet up with other Irish interns from Illinois, Kentucky and Austin," O'Dea said.

Cahill and O'Dea are spending 12 months working and learning at the Midland Hilton and will return to Ireland at the end of their term. An additional 25 interns currently are participating in the Medallion program at hotels across the country.

The internship program is designed to help students learn about American hotel management, while at the same time allowing American hotel employees to learn about the European style of management.

The Midland Hilton will host an open house sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce on Tuesday, February 19th from 5-7 p.m. The event is planned to show off the newly refurbished hotel. Approximately 350 guests are expected to attend the open house to discuss current affairs and exchange ideas about other topics impacting the local community.

There will be a charge for the open house and tickets can be purchased from the Chamber of Commerce or at the door.

PRICES: Economists say recession near end

(From 5C)

Some analysts thought the hefty rise reported Friday in the so-called core inflation rate of producer prices might jeopardize further monetary easing by the Federal Reserve, but others said the central bank would continue to push interest rates down.

The core rate is calculated excluding food and energy. The optimists pointed to two price increases last month that were unlikely to be sustained — 2 percent for cars and 5.9 percent for alcoholic beverages.

The price rise in alcoholic beverages, a record, was thought by some analysts to reflect increases imposed at the first of the year under cover of a rise in taxes. Taxes themselves are not included in the index.

Analysts also found encouragement in another part of the prices report, the decline of five-tenths of 1 percent in the price of goods at the intermediate stage of production, generally two steps short of retail shelves.

The production data showed that when motor vehicles and parts were excluded, output fell six-tenths of 1 percent, slightly less than in the preceding three months.

All major market and industry groups fell last month — except for mining, which was unchanged — but in most cases the declines were markedly less severe than in December.

Output of consumer goods eased one-tenth of 1 percent, business equipment eased two-tenths and materials fell five-tenths while construction supplies tumbled 1.8 percent, twice the December decline.

Factory output fell four-tenths of 1 percent last month after a 1.4 percent drop in December, with durables and non-durables both falling by four-tenths. Utilities, which are heavily affected by extremes in weather, had a decline of seven-tenths of 1 percent after a 1 percent increase in December that had initially been estimated at 1.9 percent.

Since October, output of consumer goods other than motor vehicles has fallen about 1.25 percent reflecting declines in clothing, energy products, appliances and furniture, the Federal Reserve stated.

Business equipment other than vehicles fell five-tenths of 1 percent, mainly reflecting a big drop in computers and other information-processing equipment, a decline that unnerved some analysts. Richards noted that capital spending on office automation had been holding up relatively well and he said he hoped this decline was temporary.

Citibank joins Cirrus network

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Citibank, which for years refused to allow other banks' customers to use its automated teller machines in the New York area, announced Friday it would join the Cirrus network.

On Cirrus, 7,200 banks and financial institutions in the United States and overseas share access to their machines.

The move means Citibank customers will have access to machines in the Cirrus system and Citibank machines will be open to customers of other banks in the system.

Networks of automated teller machines, operated though national and worldwide systems like Cirrus, or smaller regional systems like the New York Cash Exchange, allow consumers to handle many ordinary banking activities away from their local bank.

"Our reason for joining Cirrus is not for what we gain in the New York market, but for what we get around the world," said Susan Weeks, a spokeswoman for Citibank. "Ultimately we want a seamless and uniform service for Citibank customers around the world, which would include access to a single network."

When using teller machines of a bank other than their own, consumers can withdraw funds, check account balances and transfer funds among accounts. Deposits at machines of other banks are possible if they are in the same state, but many banks have chosen not to process deposits of other bank customers, because of the expense of handling checks and cash.

Generally, the consumer's bank charges a fee of as much as $2 for each transaction unless a minimum balance is maintained, and pays a charge of less than 10 cents to the operator of the system connecting the teller machines.

The bank whose machine is used is also paid a fee, which at Cirrus is about 50 cents a transaction. Citibank has not decided what fee it will charge its customers who use machines of other banks.

Citicorp subsidiary banks in Arizona, Florida, Illinois, Maryland and Washington, which have only small positions in their local markets, already belong to Cirrus.

But in New York, Citibank officials had previously said they prefered not to join a shared system because they had little to gain.

Businesses tread mine fields of war, recession

Associated Press

Outboard Marine Corp., maker of recreational boats, was a typical American company dealing with a typical American slump in demand — until Operation Desert Storm hit.

Some companies in oil and defense got an immediate shot of adrenalin from the Persian Gulf mobilization, but the equipment Outboard Marine makes is destined for the lake, not the gulf.

Like most businesses around the country, the boat builders at Outboard Marine still are struggling to figure out what the Gulf War means to them.

For many, it poses more obstacles than opportunities. Retailers are rethinking buying plans, big manufacturers are trimming staff and rejiggering production schedules, airlines are shrinking, and companies with far-flung offices and customers are dealing with people over the phone instead of traveling.

At Outboard Marine, managers can't estimate when business will improve, said Ronald Kuykendall, a spokesman for the Waukegan, Ill., manufacturer. That is, he said, unless "you can tell me the exact duration of this war and what we as a nation are going to spend on it."

The boat company's reluctance to gamble on what lies ahead illustrates the business planning conundrum posed by a declining economy and an escalating war.

The jarring coincidence of the first recession in eight years and the biggest military assault in a generation has handicapped strategic planners in corporate offices around the land. The uncertainty has convinced some to simply toss plans out the window — and then board the window up to ride out the storm. Business complications range from unpredictable costs to possible supply shortages. Firms also must weigh consumer fears about spending money or traveling far from home.

Companies hit particularly hard include those that rely on discretionary spending for survival, such as department stores, airlines, toymakers and other recreational equipment manufacturers, many of them already saddled with huge debts from the borrowing binge of the 1980s.

Even some of the country's mightiest companies have been forced to revise carefully drawn plans.

In some ways, management experts say, the war has hurt big companies even more than smaller ones, simply because of the enormous difficulties in putting brakes on any huge bureaucracy when unforeseen events arise.

"It is very, very hard for a large company to change direction because of the systems and the culture," said Karen C. Weeder of Change Management Associates Inc., a consulting firm in Winnetka, Ill.

Even for small- and mid-range manufacturers like Outboard Marine, which makes boats ranging from canoes to 40-foot cruisers, running a business during the war is the corporate equivalent of carrying a gas mask and skirting a mine field.

The war has affected other businesses in subtle but nonetheless ominous ways.

Newspapers and broadcasters are facing higher costs for covering the war at a time when they can ill afford the added expenses due to a prolonged slump in advertising income.

An important furniture industry exhibit in Germany recently was canceled because attendance was expected to be down due to fear of war-related terrorism. Some fashion designers and suppliers that ordinarily send emissaries to European shows at this time of year have scrapped their trips.

"I think, like a lot of other business people, that you get concerned about terrorists and traveling," said Howard Bloom, president of Chetta B. Inc., a women's apparel company in New York.

The war will increase the pressue on banks, already under severe strain from the aftermath of the easy-money '80s. Martin D. Weiss, publisher of the Bank Safety Directory of West Palm Beach, Fla., said he expects up to 35 banks will fail soon "due to the added financial burden of the war and its aftermath."

If there's a management lesson to be learned from the events in the Persian Gulf since Iraq invaded Kuwait six months ago, it's that nothing should be taken for granted anymore.

"We are moving into a world, of which the war is the first chapter, that's got very different alliances and very different problems, and inherently much more uncertainty than we had in the 1980s," said Gail Fosler, chief economist for the Conference Board, a New York-based research group that tracks broad trends in business and the economy.

Illustrating the range of possibilities and inability to predict which is most likely, the group recently spun four forecasts, depending partly on whether the war and recession are short or protracted.

IBM bridges gap faced by blind PC users

■ A new program developed by IBM will allow blind people to operate computers. The program reads computer images aloud.

N.Y. Times News Service

Last month, 24 people at IBM received an updated prototype of a computer program that could help them and thousands of others keep up with one of the most fundamental and popular changes in how computers display information and how people interact with them.

The new program allows blind and nearly blind people to operate their computers for the first time by choosing from on-screen pictures, icons and menus that represent instructions for the machines. It does so by basically acting as an interpreter that reads the images aloud.

The prototype program for the blind at International Business Machines Corp. is called Screen Reader for Presentation Manager.

It is being developed by Dr. James W. Thatcher, a researcher at IBM's Thomas J. Watson Research Center in Yorktown Heights, N.Y.

Thatcher is one of a handful of American researchers seeking innovative ways to keep advances in computers available to the blind.

"Blind people are concerned that they will look back at the 1980s as the zenith of their access to computers," Thatcher said. "There is a real fear that they will be cut off."

Existing software programs and reading devices can convert words and numbers typed on a computer screen into synthesized speech.

But the new program is designed to handle the especially complex task of recognizing the internal coding used to form pictures and then convert that data into digital information that allows the speech-reader to recite what it "sees."

By doing so, the program gives blind people access to a kind of software, the graphical user interface, that is fast becoming the operating system of choice for personal-computer users.

The most popular program is Windows, from Microsoft Corp., which is expected to sell 7 million packages this year.

That would easily make it one of the best-selling programs ever produced.

Graphical software virtually eliminates the need to type in lines of letters and other characters to find and run programs or change files.

Instead, computer users choose from lists and symbols.

Such programs typically use images like a file cabinet to represent stored files, a trash can as a symbol for deleting old files, a typewriter as a symbol for a writing program, and so on.

The Macintosh computers from Apple Computer Inc. have long displayed commands this way, but it took recent technical refinements to make such programs work smoothly with computers made by IBM, Compaq Computer and others.

Thatcher's program is still in the development stage and commercial sales could be a long way off.

But for Christopher Chaltain, a blind programmer at IBM's East Fishkill, N.Y., plant, the prototype arrived none too soon.

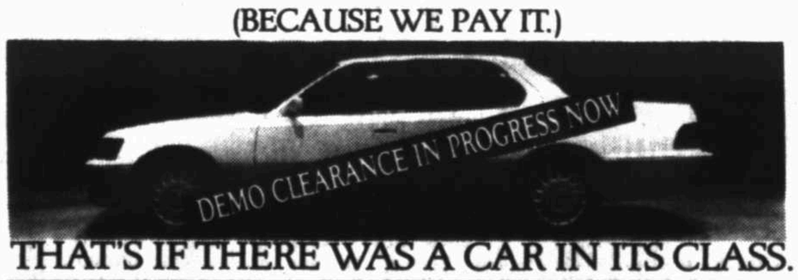

A move is under way inside IBM to shift the company's personal computer users from MS-DOS computing standards to OS/2, IBM's next-generation operating system.

For PC users who can see, programs like IBM's OS/2-based Presentation Manager, Microsoft's Windows 3.0 and X Windows for Unix represent the next wave of computing.

But for blind computer users like Chaltain, the use of graphics and pictures — instead of a keyboard — is a formidable barrier.

It threatens to shut out thousands of visually impaired users who cannot navigate screens of pull-down menus, multiple windows and colorful graphics.

Mountain lion attacks increase in West

DENVER (AP) — Man and mountain lion are in the throes of a violent struggle for space at the foothills of the Rocky Mountains. After a jogger was killed last month, some say the huge cats have "gone mad."

Others, however, maintain that's just how things are in the rugged West.

"We can't guarantee anyone's safety out there. There's a certain risk to living, and if you live in this part of the country, this has become a part of it," said Bob Davies, a Colorado Springs wildlife officer.

Recently, there have been mountain lion attacks reported in Montana, Colorado, California, Texas, Arizona, and even British Columbia in Canada. And over last summer, wardens and scared residents killed at least four mountain lions in the region that threatened humans or attacked livestock.

Two fatal attacks in recent years have particularly frightened residents in the West. In all, fewer than a dozen fatal attacks have been documented in the United States and Canada in the past century.

In September 1989, 5-year-old Jake Gardipe was killed by a mountain lion while riding his tricycle in his front yard in the small, wooded town of Evaro in western Montana. The boy was dragged from the yard, and his body was found nearby several hours later.

Lancaster

On Jan. 14, Scott Dale Lancaster, 18, was attacked as he was jogging near his high school in Idaho Springs, west of Denver. Wildlife officials theorize the running may have triggered a "cat-and-mouse" response in the 3-year-old male cougar, which attacked from behind.

The cougar apparently killed Lancaster before he could defend himself. The lion, still in the area when the body was found, was shot and killed.

Not long thereafter, Colorado Springs police shot and killed a 151-pound mountain lion after it killed a dog chained to a porch.

In the weeks since Lancaster died, wildlife officials have spent long hours meeting with concerned people who live in the mountain foothills, which mountain lions also call home.

"Even some who have lived here a long time now believe the lions have gone mad," said Mike Sanders of Boulder County Parks and Open Spaces.

Colorado Division of Wildlife officials, however, say people had better get used to it, because the humans aren't moving out and neither are the mountain lions.

Davies notes that one of the reasons people move to the Rocky Mountain region is to be near wildlife. Humans have built houses in the foothills of the Rocky Mountains because these are some of the choicest spots, featuring natural settings and wide open spaces.

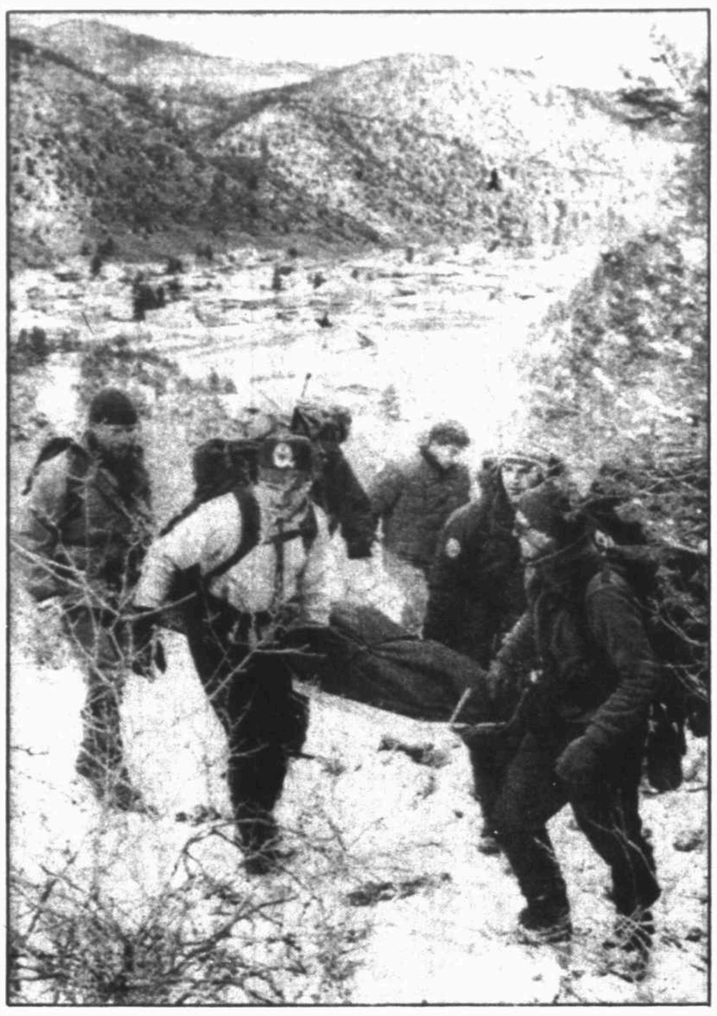

But it's also choice mountain lion habitat. Wildlife officials say some have made matters worse by trying to feed the deer and raccoons or even providing salt licks in their backyards.

"People here have been living with mountain lions for years, but people who move here haven't the foggiest notion how to live with them," he said. "They find deer, they find raccoons, but forget that there are mountain lions and, by the way, bears, too."

Mountain lions are tawny-colored cats that can grow up to 9 feet long, with a 36-inch tail, and weigh 200 pounds or more. They are also known as pumas, panthers, catamounts and painters. They have 1½-inch-long claws and 2-inch-long fangs and attack their prey by sinking claws into the shoulder and chest and biting the neck. They have enough strength in their jaws to break a deer's neck.

Todd Malmsbury, spokesman for the division, said the mountain lion population has skyrocketed, along with their prey — deer and raccoons — because of conservation efforts since the turn of the century.

Malmsbury estimates there are 1,500 to 3,000 mountain lions along Colorado's Front Range and eastern foothills, but said it is difficult to provide an exact figure because it is hard to do a nose count on the big cats, since each has up to a 300-square-mile range.

Rescuers remove the body of 18-year-old Scott Dale Lancaster from a brushy hillside in his hometown of Idaho Springs, Colo., where he was killed Jan. 14, by a mountain lion while jogging. A number of incidents involving human and mountain lion contact have been reported recently in several states where people and the cats share territory.

NATION IN BRIEF

Judge orders $9 trillion bond

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — A judge criticized by the mayor for being too soft on habitual lawbreakers raised a theft suspect's bond to $9 trillion, nearly three times the national debt.

Mayor Richard Arrington complained at a City Council meeting last week that District Judge Jack Montgomery repeatedly enabled suspects with serious criminal backgrounds to be released by setting low bonds.

Arrington cited Isaac Peterson, 34, who he said has been arrested seven times since July on charges of burglary and receiving stolen property. Each time, bond ranged from $500 to $5,000. But for someone with his criminal history it should be higher, the mayor said.

Peterson again was arrested Jan. 22 on a theft charge. His bond, initially set at $5,000, was raised by Montgomery on Thursday to $9 trillion, said a deputy at Jefferson County Jail, where Peterson remained Sunday.

"This is so he doesn't get in any more trouble," the judge said.

Two die in YMCA fire

NEW YORK (NYT) — One man jumped to his death, another died of burns and seven other men were injured late Saturday in a fire in a residential YMCA in Brooklyn, the Fire Department said.

The fire, believed to have started in a mattress in a room on the third floor of the seven-story brick building, was reported at 11:20 p.m. About 50 residents on the third floor were evacuated, and damage to the building was limited to the one room.

The dead man was identified as Jose Corporan, 32, a resident. The man who died of burns, at the New York Hospital Burn Center, remained unidentified on Sunday.

David Leiberman, 60, was in critical condition at the burn center with second- and third-degree burns over 15 percent of his body, said a hospital spokesman, Andrew Banoff. Six others received less serious injuries.

The fire was reported by Police Officer Peter Curtin, who was on foot patrol a block from the YMCA, after a couple ran up to him and said a man had jumped from a smoking window.

Tar, feathers expensive

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — The Alabama Supreme Court ruled two sisters still owe $35,000 awarded in a civil lawsuit to a woman they tarred and feathered a decade ago.

The court ruled Friday that sisters Robbie Jean McCorkle and Marita M. McElwey owe the money to Elizabeth Jamieson McElwey, who they were convicted of tarring and feathering at gunpoint.

At the time of the March 1981 assault in rural Lawrence County, McElwey was the fiancee of Dr. John McElwey. She went on to marry the doctor and later won the judgment against the sisters in a civil suit.

Marita M. McElwey divorced the doctor in 1975. The first Mrs. McElwey said the soon-to-be second Mrs. McElwey was after the doctor's money.

Cord blamed in fatal fire

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. (AP) — A fire that killed 10 people in a crowded tenement was caused by an extension cord connected to a portable heater, investigators said Sunday.

The cord ran under a living room chair that burst into flames when the cord's insulation melted, Fire Chief Thomas Keough said.

Among the 10 people who perished in Saturday morning's fire were six children under the age of 15, including an infant. A 17-year-old and three adults also died, Keough said.

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several routes which need to be filled with qualified, responsible individuals. Now is one of the best times ever to obtain a route in your area!

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 65% adult and 35% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- YOUTHS who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the route(s) from $200 to $600 monthly! Some motor routes make even more. Although no motor routes are expected to be available, depending on your service record, you may qualify to move up to a motor route later!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carrier's choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday and Sunday.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
