Germanys almost united

■ The East German Parliament votes to discuss final barrier to unification, but then delays the historic decision that would unite it with West Germany.

By Mark Fritz

EAST BERLIN (AP) — Flirting with history on an emotional anniversary, East Germany's Parliament came dramatically close Sunday to dissolving the country and uniting with West Germany.

But the stunning move turned out to be more a symbolic gesture and acknowledgment that unification was imminent and inevitable.

The country's first freely elected Parliament voted overwhelmingly to discuss the final decision of German unification, but then put off the historic decision that would automatically result in immediate unification.

Lawmakers met in a rare Sunday session to debate unification and commemorate the 37th anniversary of a failed attempt by East German workers to overthrow Soviet rule.

With Chancellor Helmut Kohl and other top West German officials in the hall to mark the anniversary, lawmakers from the German Social Union proposed the final question of German unification be placed on the agenda.

"The Parliament would like to decide: Resolve to join the German Democratic Republic ... to the Federal Republic of Germany on this very day," lawmaker Hans-Guenther Schwarz of the German Social Union told the chamber.

But when debate opened, East German Prime Minister Lothar de Maiziere took the microphone and said he would not support the measure because of the many questions that need to be addressed before the two Germanys are united.

De Maiziere also referred to the June 17, 1953, uprising, in which an estimated 300 people were killed, as one of the earliest attempts to unify a nation cut in two by World War II.

He portrayed the Parliament's action more as a message to the world as the way German unity will take place.

"It appears therefore on this day good and right, to clearly acknowledge German unity and to describe the way that this will be done," he said in remarks that were greeted with a standing ovation.

Lawmakers then voted by an overwhelming show of hands to postpone the vote on unification, which is likely to come in the months ahead.

The two German states are to merge their economies July 2, when the West

Tar balls from spill likely to hit north of Galveston

By Scott Rothschild

GALVESTON (AP) — Shifting winds pushed an oil slick from the supertanker Mega Borg northeastward Sunday, and Coast Guard officials alerted communities north of Galveston to Louisiana that tar balls could soon be washing up on their shores.

"The way it's going, no one will be surprised if they see tar balls on the beach tomorrow morning, or equally surprised if the finger (at the leading edge of the slick) changes direction," Coast Guard Chief Warrant Officer Rick Meidt said Sunday.

The 30-mile slick, which lingered about 11 miles offshore, had stretched into a light sheen in places Sunday and continued to drift slowly from the Norwegian tanker, crippled 57 miles offshore from Galveston.

Coast Guard officials said the 886-foot tanker has stopped leaking oil.

The Mega Borg was rocked by a series of explosions beginning June 8 and spewed an estimated 4.6 million gallons of crude into the Gulf of Mexico, making it the fifth worst spill in U.S. history. Two crew members died and two are missing and presumed dead. The cause of the blast has not been determined.

The Coast Guard predicted early Sunday that tar balls could begin showing up on a 45-mile stretch of coastline from High Island, some 30 miles north of Galveston, to Sabine Pass at the Texas-Louisiana border.

"It's not as bad as it would have been, if it would have hit Galveston Bay — there's

About 5,000 expected at national LULAC meeting

■ Although the theme of the convention is "Unidad Hispana" — Hispanic Unity — the national office continues to be embroiled in controversy with some members.

First summer concert features show tunes

A fast-moving Tahitian dance, a child's solo and an eerie duet from the musical "Phantom of the Opera" were only some of the numbers performed by the Midland Community Theatre Singers on the grounds of the Museum of the Southwest Sunday evening.

About 200 concert-goers toted picnic baskets, blankets and lawn chairs to the museum to attend the outdoor concert which featured tunes from Broadway shows including "Cabaret," "Les Miserables," "My Fair Lady," "West Side Story," "Little Shop of Horrors," "Cats" and "Pippin."

Concert-goer Charlotte Windecker said she has attended the museum's lawn performances in the past.

"There is a real sense of family here," she said. "You can bring children, let them play on the grass freely and enjoy a live performance. The grounds are beautiful and there is just a nice ambience which attracts people who support the arts."

When asked what he liked best about the summer concerts, Ms. Windecker's son, Forrest, 7, replied, "the good grass," and bent down to pat the grass before running off to toss a Frisbee with fellow "grass enthusiasts."

Niran and Polly Kellogg, a couple of seasoned concert-goers, brought along a wicker hamper of picnic fare.

"We have been coming to these concerts ever since they started having them," Mrs. Kellogg said. "Where else can you go on a nice summer evening and enjoy free live entertainment?"

Kellogg said that he and his wife are such dedicated summer lawn concert fans that they braved a downpour last year to watch a performance.

The lawn concert, the first in a series of 10, was presented from 7:45-9 p.m.

"This is our fourth year having the Summer Sunday Performance Series," said Shari Koziol, development officer for the museum.

"We like to take any opportunity we can to bring people to the museum grounds," she said.

The MCT Singers, an outreach group of the theatre, are sponsored by Texaco Inc.

Summer performances will continue on consecutive Sundays through Aug. 19.

Mother charged in daughter's 'suicide'

By Leslie Dreyfous

BEVERLY, Mass. (AP) — Why? That's what Marcia Biancardi's friends wanted to know long after word of the popular cheerleader's apparent suicide came over Beverly High School's public address system on Valentine's Day.

It was a question that fingered until last week, when the 4-month-old case took a rare twist. Marcia's mother was charged with taking a shotgun and shooting the 16-year-old as she slept.

"All along, we just wanted the facts," said sophomore Eric Wade, who was a year behind Marcia. "None of us believed it was a suicide."

Now the counselors who initially helped students confront suicide are trying to help them accept what authorities say was a homicide.

The mother, Susan Biancardi, is charged with first-degree murder and could face life in prison if convicted. Her attorney, Robert F. Peck Jr., says Mrs. Biancardi was linked to her daughter's death through "innuendo, hearsay and suggestion." He entered an innocent plea for her Tuesday.

He also indicated Tuesday that he did not think his client was mentally ill and described her as an "active, loving parent and wife," the Salem Evening News reported.

"For some kids there's fear and for some there's anger," said Lauren Terry, who counsels students at Beverly High School, about 15 miles north of Boston. "For a lot of them, it has finally put a closure on a long, long spring."

When Mrs. Biancardi was arrested last week following an inquest into her daughter's death Feb. 14, it fell into line with what many of Marcia's friends had suspected from the start.

"Even that first day it was very clear that there were questions surrounding the death," said Kimberly Wilkins, who directs the community's Project RAP crisis response center.

"And that made it really tough for the kids to start going through the process of grieving."

Classmates couldn't make it add up. They didn't understand why a well-loved girl with a passion for singing, sports and people would take her own life. Had they missed some hint of suicidal despair?

There also were questions about how Marcia manipulated the shotgun to shoot herself in the abdomen, and why, if she pulled the trigger, there was no trace of gunpowder on her hands.

"It's much easier to understand that someone (else) shot a gun. With suicide, we don't understand why," said Terry, whose caseload has tripled since Marcia died.

Marcia's father, a bricklayer, was not at home at the time of the shooting. But her 14-year-old sister was in the house. Witnesses at the Salem District Court inquest included scores of the girl's friends and relatives, many of whom were familiar with the sometimes stormy relationship she had with her parents.

Stephen O'Connell, spokesman for the Essex County district attorney, and police said they had ruled out suicide, but declined to comment on the inquest or any specific problems in the family or between the mother and daughter.

"Yes, we knew her life was not perfect," the Rev. Donald Remick of the Second Congregational Church had said at Marcia's funeral. "Though none but God knows all her pain, we do know that in the midst of the suffering and struggle, a choice was made."

Mrs. Biancardi was placed under 20 days' psychiatric observation in a state mental hospital. According to James Fox of Northeastern University's national crime analysis program, only two or three times a year, on average, is a mother suspected of shooting a teen-age daughter in the United States.

Wilkins said the filing of charges is "very scary" for teens in the area.

"Adolescence is typically a time when kids test their parents and then you have a case ... that raises the possibility of a murderous potential in all parents," said Wilkins.

"The kids will need a catharsis now, some constructive way to deal with their grief," said Dr. Pamela Cantor, a suicide expert affiliated with the Harvard Medical School. "They need to talk about the fact that a mother is under arrest."

SPILL: Officials hope oil hits beach, not marsh

not an estuary up there — but it's still bad," said Gary Clark, president of the Houston Audubon Society.

The area includes a combination of small, sandy beaches and thick marshland. In addition, there are national wildlife refuges — Anahuac in High Island and J.D. Murphree near Sabine Pass — and the Sea Rim State Park. On the Louisiana side, there is the Sabine National Wildlife Refuge.

Coast Guard Petty Officer Mark Sedwick said if the slick arrives in the marshland, it will be more difficult to clean up.

"The best case scenario is a sandy beach," Sedwick said. "It's easier to clean up a nice, sandy beach than it would be a marshy area. So that's what we're hoping for."

Clark said without a barrier island like Galveston, the coastal section will face the brunt of the spill.

"If it hits the marshlands, it seeps into the ground and kills off the vegetation and the eggs in that area," Clark said, adding that many birds could starve to death without the vegetation. "If it gets into those marshlands, it's going to be there a while."

■ 'Lightering' threat to gulf, related photo/3B

Still, he said, it could have been much worse if the slick had hit Galveston Bay, where brown shrimp are in a breeding cycle, as are many fish-eating sea birds.

Clark said his 4,500-member chapter has established an oil spill response team to save any birds affected by the spill.

"It's kind of like when I talk about a hurricane: I don't wish it on anyone, but I certainly don't want it to hit here," said Gary Stone, spokesman for the Galveston County Emergency Management Office.

Emergency cleanup crews had expected the Angolan light crude to begin washing ashore late Sunday near Galveston, but a morning flyover showed the slick moving north-northeast of the area.

"Of course we're concerned," said Danny Magouirk, assistant superintendent at Sea Rim State Park. "But we haven't had anything to come ashore yet.

"If it's tar balls, the wildlife seems to avoid it," Magouirk said. "The main thing would be if there is a slick that would come ashore. That would be really bad."

At Dirty Pelican Pier at High Island, manager Denise Starnes said tourism already had begun to fall off, though no tar was reported ashore by late Sunday.

"The beach is kind of vacant because word has spread though the media and some of the business owners here are complaining," Ms. Starnes said.

Divers attempting to rescue five loggerhead sea turtles spotted Saturday near the leading edge of the slick were unable to locate the reptiles, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said. But NOAA continued searching for the threatened sea turtles on Sunday.

Salvage crews working on the Norwegian tanker Sunday began transferring oil from a leaking cargo tank to another holding bin aboard the vessel.

"The ship has definitely quit leaking," Sedwick said. "A reconnaissance crew flew over at 6 this morning and didn't find any oil within 5 miles of the ship. That's a pretty good indication that they've stopped the leak."

LULAC: Organization seeks to represent all Hispanics

(From 1A)

LULAC elections will be held Sunday.

Also during the convention, a national panel of educators, lawyers and Hispanic leaders organized by the LULAC staff will hear testimony on complaints of discrimination at the University of New Mexico.

"We need to unite all the various nationalities of Hispanic Americans under one agenda," De Lara said. "People view our organization as a predominantly Mexican-American one, but in reality it is a Hispanic-American effort. We need to recognize that instead of pulling separately, we need to pull together."

The call for unity comes at a time when LULAC's national office is struggling with upheaval and dissension in its ranks.

LULAC was founded in 1919 in Texas and has been recognized as the nation's oldest and largest Hispanic advocacy group with 110,000 members in 45 states.

National LULAC leaders have been faced recently with allegations of misuse of funds, abuse of power and complaints that leaders used their positions for personal gain.

De Lara said the organization has "some internal problems" but "is on a positive trajectory."

"I think this organization is purging itself, as other organizations have, from any semblance of wrongdoing or the appearance of wrongdoing," he said.

An organization called the LULAC Foundation, a group of 10 past national presidents, was abolished in September after an internal investigation found a secret financial account estimated at $88,000. The foundation collected corporate donations for LULAC's education, job and civil rights programs.

De Lara, who won re-election last year on a promise of fiscal reform, demanded that the 10 former presidents resign.

Six of the 10 sued De Lara and other LULAC officials for slander and defamation. The lawsuit was recently dismissed.

In April, LULAC's special legal counsel, Ruben Sandoval, was indicted by a Texas grand jury on two counts of barratry — the legal term for ambulance chasing — after he allegedly solicited clients involved in a Sept. 21, 1989, bus crash in Alton, Texas, that killed 21 students.

Ruben Bonilla, a Corpus Christi lawyer and former LULAC president, has said the infighting has caused LULAC's agenda to become a "footnote" and that "no one knows what LULAC stands for today."

Raul Yzaguirre, president of the National Council of La Raza, said he is worried the LULAC troubles will damage the credibility of other Hispanic advocacy groups.

"It reinforces the negative stereotypes that Hispanic organizations are not professional and that there is no accountability," Yzaguirre said from his Washington, D.C., headquarters. The non-profit La Raza council works to improve opportunities for Hispanics nationwide.

Cruz Chavira, LULAC's chief of staff, said the UNM discrimination complaints will be a major issue during the convention.

"We need to take a real good look at what this institution is going to do in the next five to 10 years," Chavira said. "If we have an administration that is directing the institution against our interests we need to expose that now."

UNITY: Social, economic barriers remain

(From 1A)

German mark becomes the currency of East Germany.

Banks stayed open through the weekend and hundreds stood in lines, opening accounts and filling out forms so their money can be changed to West German marks.

But the two nations still must find ways to merge their vastly different legal, economic and social systems, and resolve the key question of the strategic future of a united Germany.

The superpowers are to hold talks in East Berlin Thursday on the worldwide implications of German unity. The United States insists that it be a part of NATO, while the Soviet Union is staunchly opposed.

East Germany also is expected to face high unemployment as it moves to a free market and its aging enterprises are forced to compete.

The question that lawmakers voted to put on the agenda for discussion was whether to support Article 23 of the West German constitution, a method under which the entire country could dissolve itself and become a part of West Germany.

The article was written after World War II to allow individual sections of disputed German territory to decide whether to become a part of postwar West Germany.

Kohl and de Maiziere both have supported the article as the constitutional tool under which East Germany could most quickly unite with the West.

Another method favored by other officials would involve both countries dissolving themselves and writing a new constitution to form a completely new nation, which would take considerably longer.

However, when unification comes, it will likely occur when East German lawmakers vote in favor of Article 23.

De Maiziere's Christian Democratic Union finished an overwhelming first in East Germany's first free elections on March 18 by promising to support Article 23.

But an actual vote on it was not expected for months after the economic union of the two nations takes place on July 2.

The original purpose of Sunday's parliamentary session was to debate changes in the East German constitution that would make it easier for the two nations to merge their vastly different social structures.

Cardinal's words create stir

N.Y. Times News Service

NATION

NEW YORK — Cardinal John O'Connor said Sunday that an article he wrote last week saying that Roman Catholic politicians who support abortion rights could be "at risk of excommunication" had been widely misinterpreted.

"I have no intention of excommunicating anybody," he said.

"Read the column — not read my lips — but read my column," the cardinal said in his first news conference since the article was printed in the newspaper of the Archdiocese of New York last Thursday, causing a flurry of condemnations from politicians who saw themselves as the targets.

In the article, the cardinal wrote that Roman Catholic politicians who were persistent in their support of abortion rights "must be warned that they are at risk of excommunication."

"If such action persists," the cardinal wrote, "bishops may consider excommunicating the only option."

Catholic officeholders, including Gov. Mario M. Cuomo and Rep. Charles B. Rangel, both of New York, said they had found the cardinal's warning upsetting, but added that they had no intention of changing their stand in favor of abortion rights.

At his news conference Sunday at St. Patrick's Cathedral, O'Connor read parts of his article out loud, giving special emphasis to his comments on excommunication, which were widely quoted.

"Bishops may consider," he repeated, adding the following grammatical notation: "Conditional and subjunctive."

"I have never threatened to excommunicate anybody," he said. "I have never suggested that any other bishop should excommunicate anybody. I have no intention of excommunicating anybody. And I don't say in any way whatsoever that I'm threatening politicians."

Asked if his article could have the effect of encouraging other bishops to excommunicate, the cardinal said: "Quite to the contrary. I've been hearing too much talk about excommunication and, to a degree, I'm trying to mute it. This isn't something that is done lightly."

Part of the purpose of his article, he said, was to respond to those "in the pro-life community" who ask him why he has not imposed religious sanctions against those Catholics in public life who support abortion rights. "This a direct answer to the question, 'Why don't you do this?' And I'm saying why we don't do it."

He added: "It would be dishonest of me not to answer the questions that I'm asked. It would also be dishonest of me if I said that no one can be excommunicated."

O'Connor, who holds a brief news conference each Sunday after the 10:15 Mass at the cathedral, seemed annoyed at the persistent questioning about the column. An assistant handed him the paper, and the cardinal said, "It's right here, my goodness; you can read it."

Fifteen times during the 15-minute news conference, the cardinal asked that people read the article. The article, some 19,000 words long, fills a special 12-page section of Catholic New York. Using a question and answer format, the cardinal responds to what he says are questions he has often been asked about abortion, from "What is abortion?" to "What is the church's current penalty for abortion?"

850 attend capital rally

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Organizers of a national rally of black college students said Sunday they were "very happy" that 850 people showed up for an event in which they had predicted more than 5,000 people would turn out.

"If we had 10 people immersed in a movement, it is a far greater asset than 10,000 with lukewarm enthusiasm," said Ural Hill of Atlanta, chairman of the National Collegiate Black Caucus, chief sponsor of the march.

Small groups of students from all over the United States gathered in the morning at the Department of Education, on the south side of Washington's monument-lined mall.

Along with activist Dick Gregory, television actor Glynn Turman, Rep. Ron Dellums, D-Calif., other celebrities and a few local politicians, the students — mostly black, but accompanied by some Asians, non-black Hispanics and whites — marched north across the mall and down Pennsylvania Avenue toward the White House. They sang songs like "We don't need no music 'cause all we want to do is read, write, study hard and stay in our schools."

Issues listed on the conference agenda for discussion during the week included "racism, homelessness, educational access, the drug crisis, jobs, and international solidarity with Southern Africa, El Salvador and elsewhere."

In Oklahoma City Sunday, officials watch the burning wreckage of an air show crash that killed pilot Tom Jones, the show's director. Jones was performing when his plane hit the ground and exploded.

Air show director dies in fiery crash

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The director of an air show died Sunday when his plane crashed in a ball of fire while he was performing a stunt, officials said.

Tom Jones, 46, a former national champion aerobatic pilot who was directing the Aerospace America '90 show, was killed in the 1:45 p.m. crash, the show's chairman, Ted Strenczek, said in a statement.

"When it hit, it just exploded," said Kevin Ellis, one of thousands who saw the crash at the Will Rogers World Airport. "No matter how fast the trucks got there, he was dead. It was just a ball of fire."

Witnesses said Jones' Soviet-made, civilian Sukhoi-26 stunt plane apparently did not regain power after he flipped it during an intentional stall.

"It didn't even come out of the stall," said spectator Ranee Woodall. "I didn't hear his engine."

Death toll from flooding reaches 19

SHADYSIDE, Ohio (AP) — The death toll from flash floods that swept through a rural area of eastern Ohio increased to 19 Sunday as searchers dug along two creeks and dived into the Ohio River. Eighteen people remained missing.

Workers used shovels and picks to dig along the creek banks, and sifted through debris at places marked with red flags, where search dogs indicated they'd detected human scents, said National Guard Capt. Jim Boling.

Divers worked where the two creeks empty into the Ohio.

One body was found Sunday in debris along Wegee Creek, about three miles from where it meets the river, said Belmont County coroner's investigator Chuck Vogt. Another was pulled from the Ohio near a bridge at Moundsville, W.Va., about 10 miles south of Shadyside, he said.

The body of a man was found Sunday afternoon in the Ohio River, a half-mile south of the mouth of Wegee Creek and about seven miles south of Shadyside, said Vogt.

That brought the confirmed death toll in Thursday's floods to 19, including five children.

Twenty-three dog teams from four states were searching for victims, said Boling. The digging will continue at least through Tuesday, said Fire Chief Mark Badia.

"The thing you find once you start into these brush piles and piles of trees are cars, and they have to be torn apart and searched separately," Badia said. "Everything you turn up creates a different situation."

But Vogt said he doubted many of the missing would be found alive.

"It's just been too long. I don't think there's anybody alive out there," he said. "You can't swim out there that long in the Ohio River."

The Wegee and Pipe creeks overflowed Thursday night during storms that poured 5½ inches of rain onto eastern Ohio in 3½ hours. The floods destroyed as many as 70 houses and damaged up to 40 others.

Authorities said Friday that 60 people were missing; some of those were later found dead, while others notified authorities that they were safe.

Officials also learned that some of those feared missing had moved out of the area. Officials were comparing county property lists and data from the Census Bureau with information from residents and relatives, Boling said.

That left 18 still missing, Vogt said. The list was not revised to account for the third body found Sunday afternoon because the man had not been identified, the investigator said.

ACT UP promises to at AIDS meet

NEW YORK (AP) — A prominent AIDS activist is calling for riots at this week's Sixth International AIDS Conference, and while most demonstrators won't go that far, many have promised to disrupt the meeting with protests inside and outside the convention hall.

The call for riots came from Larry Kramer, one of the founders of the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power, or ACT UP.

It is the most militant AIDS organization. And Kramer may be its most militant member.

In articles published in gay newspapers around the country, Kramer wrote, "Every human being who wants to end the AIDS epidemic must be in San Francisco ... screaming, yelling, furiously angry, protesting at this stupid conference. WE MUST RIOT!"

ACT UP is a grass-roots group without leaders or a hierarchy. It was founded in New York in 1987, and now has perhaps 2,000 members there. Twenty-five chapters have sprung up across the country.

Some 12,000 scientists and 1,800 members of the news media are registered to attend. The conference, which begins Wednesday in San Francisco, was established as an annual forum for presentation of the latest scientific reports on AIDS.

1 killed, 13 injured in Winnebago fire

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Adults en route from Mississippi to a bingo game on an Indian reservation jumped from a burning, moving motor home Saturday. One died and at least 13 were hospitalized.

Eyewitnesses said about 14 passengers were aboard the Winnebago when it caught fire about 4 p.m. on Interstate 65 near Creola, about 21 miles north of Mobile and 40 miles from the Poarch Creek Indian Reservation.

"There was a flash fire inside the vehicle and they abandoned it while it was going down the road," said Jim Teague, Creola assistant police chief.

'Dick Tracy' movie distributor sees big bucks at box office

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "Dick Tracy," the ultra-hyped Disney movie facing a gremlin and a muscleman as summer box-office enemies, will make up to $23 million in ticket sales in its opening weekend, it was estimated Sunday.

Dick Cook, president of Buena Vista Pictures Distribution for Disney, said "Tracy" was a record opening for the company and had all the signs of a summer winner.

The movie, directed by its star, Warren Beatty, received mostly rave reviews.

"The way it's been reviewed, and the favorable way it has been received — it is going to do extraordinarily well. And there's a lot of summer left," Cook said.

He estimated a weekend box-office of $22 million to $23 million, and said "Dick Tracy" would get "double the amount of business that any other movie will do this weekend."

An industry observer who spoke on condition of anonymity said the opening was "not great — somewhere in between. ... It's not a bad opening." That source estimated the take for "Tracy" would be $22 million.

Both noted "Tracy's" debut against a slate of movies hothouse-grown to bloom as summer hits: "Total Recall," "Back to the Future III," "Another 48 HRS.," and the new "Gremlins."

NATION IN BRIEF

Justices to rule on 'right-to-die'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first "right-to-die" case to reach the Supreme Court is among two dozen still awaiting decision by the justices before they embark on a summer-long recess.

The court will announce rulings twice this week, on Monday and Thursday, and could wrap up its term next week.

The most closely watched case awaiting decision centers on the asserted constitutional right to withdraw life-sustaining medical treatment, including feeding tubes.

The issue is presented in the case of Nancy Cruzan, a permanently unconscious Missouri woman being kept alive with food and water supplied through a tube surgically implanted in her stomach.

Ms. Cruzan's parents want to end her life, but the Missouri Supreme Court, bucking a trend among courts nationwide, refused in 1988 to let doctors remove the feeding tube.

Many experts expect the nation's highest court to issue a narrowly worded ruling, but whatever the justices say likely will have an enormous impact in the continuing national debate.

Congregation robbed

PHILIPPI, W.Va. (AP) — A man armed with a sawed-off shotgun entered a Baptist church Sunday and robbed the 132-member congregation as they lay on the floor amid the pews "for an eternity."

No one was hurt, authorities said.

The man made off with at least $500, but didn't get the Faith Way Baptist Church's collection, according to church officials.

"He had a gun and he said, 'This is a holdup. Everybody get down.' Everybody looked at him and they were just stunned," the pastor's wife, Mary Gregory said. "Everybody was down and they were praying and he was going around the pews and taking billfolds and purses and things.

Robot locates gold

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A gold bar plucked by an underwater robot from a shipwreck in 1,500 feet of water off southwest Florida provides strong evidence that treasure hunters have located part of a gold-laden fleet sunk in 1622.

Official seals of the Spanish crown on the 1 pound, 8 ounce bar indicate it may be part of a fleet of ships lost in a 1622 hurricane in the treacherous waters south of Key West, said marine archaeologist Robert Marx.

The bar resembles gold carried by the Nuestra Senora de Atocha, a galleon discovered in shallow water in the Keys by treasure hunter Mel Fisher in 1985.

PBS considers free air time

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Public Broadcasting Service is looking at ways to provide 1992 presidential candidates and the major political parties free air time beyond the normal news coverage to present their views, PBS President Bruce Christensen said Sunday.

"What we're looking for is the way to increase the political dialogue," Christensen said in a telephone interview from Dallas, where PBS' board of directors is meeting this week.

Hawking a 'class act'

EDITOR'S NOTE — He's been called the most important theoretical physicist since Albert Einstein. He pioneered work on black holes and the Big Bang theory of the origin of the universe. Above all, Stephen Hawking, despite severe physical handicaps, is a teacher.

Noted Cambridge University professor and bestselling author, Stephen Hawking, is the center of attention during a lecture and slide presentation at Northeastern University in Boston. Despite battling Lou Gehrig's disease for 25 years, Hawking wrote the bestseller "A Brief History of Time" and continues to travel on the lecture circuit.

BOSTON — Like any good teacher, Stephen Hawking knows he has to grab his students' attention and hold on tight.

That isn't easy when your field is theoretical physics. It's even harder when you are paralyzed and must use a machine to talk.

But Hawking succeeds, with the aplomb of a seasoned comedian who knows how to work an audience.

For example, while kicking around the concept of black holes, collapsed stars that snare everything, even light, with their powerful gravity, Hawking tells you what it's like if you're unlucky enough to fall into one.

"I'm sorry to disappoint galactic tourists, but flying into a black hole would be like going over Niagara in a barrel.

"It might be useful for getting rid of garbage, and some friends, but any astronaut venturing into a black hole would get torn apart and turned into spaghetti."

THE SETTING was a cavernous lecture hall at Northeastern University packed with about 800 people for a free public speech on subjects ranging from black holes to wormholes in space.

In his motorized wheelchair, under hot floodlights, Hawking looked tiny and helpless sitting in the middle of the huge stage, before an audience of about 800. As the lights dimmed, Hawking, unmoving, began the recorded lecture in his synthesized, mechanical voice.

Hawking, a British-born Cambridge University professor and author of the best seller "A Brief History of Time," has been called the most important theoretical physicist since Albert Einstein.

He pioneered work on black holes and the Big Bang theory of the origin of the universe. In the process he helped legitimize cosmology, the study of the foundations of the cosmos.

His theories are as thorny and dense as theories come, but Hawking brings them down to earth, explaining the cosmic with the comic.

In some ways, Hawking is straight from an academic ivory tower. He wears a slightly frumpy brown tweed suit and thick glasses. His hair is a ragged mop.

But at age 48 he is hopelessly paralyzed, the victim of a 25-year battle with amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, or Lou Gehrig's disease.

Ask him a question and painful moments pass as Hawking, using his crippled right hand to manipulate a computer cursor, composes an answer letter by letter, word by word.

He remarked that black holes were first discussed at Cambridge. "I mean the real Cambridge," he added, to the delight of the Boston audience.

Discussing his book, Hawking tells the audience, "I knew it was going to be a success when it was translated into Serbo-Croatian."

Hawking also reserved time for several more-personal gatherings just with students. In one small meeting room, on a sunny afternoon, physics students clad in jeans and sweat shirts waited patiently as Hawking was wheeled into the room for a question-and-answer session.

Nervously at first, then gathering courage, the students stood to ply Hawking with their queries. Once a question was asked, the room was silent as Hawking took eight, 10 or even 15 minutes to compose his answers.

The answers, the students said, were worth waiting for.

Hawking was born in Oxford, England, on the 300th anniversary of the death of Galileo. "About 200,000 other babies were also born that day," he says. "I don't know whether any of them was later interested in astronomy."

The son of a Scottish mother and a Yorkshire doctor, Hawking grew up near London. As a boy, he seemed so average academically that a friend bet a bag of sweets he would never amount to anything.

"I don't know if this bet was ever settled, and if so, which way it was decided," Hawking says.

AT OXFORD, Hawking studied physics and then began doctoral work in cosmology at Cambridge. But in his early 20s he was diagnosed with ALS, and the disease

Doctors said the affliction would eventually kill him, and Hawking became depressed. "There did not seem much point in working at my research, because I didn't expect to live long enough to finish my Ph.D.," he says.

Then, he became engaged to Jane Wilde, who later became his wife.

"This gave me something to live for," Hawking says. "If we were to get married, I had to get a job. And to get a job, I had to finish my Ph.D."

Hawking finished his degree, the disease stabilized, and he and his wife eventually had three children. Today he is Lucasian Professor of Mathematics at Cambridge, a position once held by Isaac Newton.

"Science fiction is written and read by people who would like to understand the universe, and maybe, to control it," Hawking says.

"Now that I have learned to do real science, I don't need science fiction. However, some people would say that my work is all science fiction."

"The stuff he's doing is way up there, it's kind of extraterrestrial," says Robert Sneddon, a graduate physics student at Northeastern. "The kind of math he's using you don't learn in grad school until the fourth or fifth year.

"But he's hilarious. I laughed my head off," Sneddon adds. "It shows how brilliant he is, that he can make his work interesting for people who aren't so brilliant."

Dallasite gives money away

After giving $150 million in recent years to a variety of educational, medical and artistic causes, he admits he's almost exhausted the fortune he built as co-founder of Texas Instruments.

"I've given most of it away now," Green said in a rare interview from his high-rise Turtle Creek condominium, "but the idea is to get it down to the last nickel before I die."

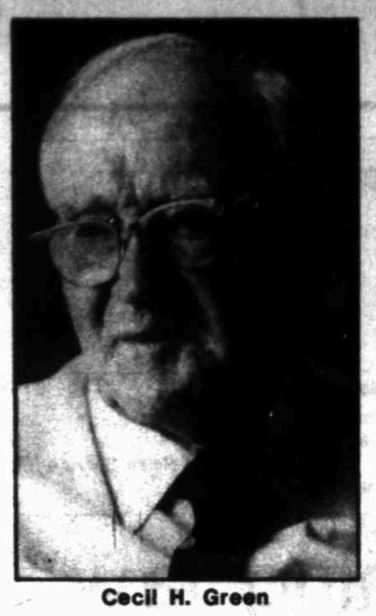
Green, 89, considered one of the nation's leading philanthropists with his wife of 61 years, Ida, who died in 1986, gave away a king's ransom. A list of the academic and medical facilities built by their largesse would go on for pages.

Explaining the philosophy behind his philanthropy, Green says, "Our giving has always been what we wanted to do. We never did it just because we were asked."

The childless couple also gave out of a sense of adventure.

"We had no children, so what were we going to do with it?" asks Green. "Instead of our estate's trustees giving it away, we thought we'd give ourselves the pleasure of doing it. Giving is an investment in pleasure."

As for the plethora of college buildings and medical centers named after the Greens, he claims, "I never asked for it. None of our giving was done on the basis of 'you name this after us and we'll give you the money.' "



Cecil H. Green

GREEN WAS BORN in 1900 in Manchester, England. His parents moved to eastern Canada when he was 2. They later moved to Vancouver via San Francisco, where his father, an electrical mechanic, operated a cable car.

Cecil and his mother were waiting to join his father in Vancouver when the Great Quake of 1906 hit.

"I remember being awakened by plaster falling in my face," says Green. "We had to sleep in tents in Golden Gate Park and stand in soup lines. I remember it vividly."

The family finally settled in Vancouver, British Columbia, where Green remained until going to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology where he earned bachelor and master's degrees in electrical engineering.

While working on his master's thesis at the General Electric Research Center in Schenectady, N.Y., in 1923, he met his wife-to-be, Ida Flansburgh. They married in 1926.

A series of job possibilities took the Greens to California and back again to Boston. During several transcontinental trips looking for work, the Greens slept in tents and their car. Green's desire was to return to Vancouver but there were no jobs.

Green eventually went to work for Geophysical Services, Inc., an oil exploration business in Tulsa, Okla. In 1941, Green and three partners, J. Erik Jonsson, Eugene McDermott and H.B. Peacock — decided to buy the company when they heard the owners planned to sell to Standard Oil Co. of Indiana.

"We borrowed money from Republic National Bank, took out a mortgage and scraped together everything we owned to pay our $75,000 share," recalls Green.

As things turned out, it was a stupendous investment. Under Green and his partners, Geophysical Services became a petroleum industry leader. But it was the subsidiary electronics firm they founded, Texas Instruments, that was to make history and its founders extremely rich.

OVER THE YEARS, Texas Instruments created: the first silicon transistor (1954), the first integrated circuit (1958), the first single-chip microprocessor (1970), the first single-chip computer (1971) and the first single-chip speech synthesizer (1978).

"Our business went up remarkably," says Green. "But we discovered it was hard to find young, highly technically trained young people in the Dallas-Fort Worth area. We realized our competitors — Boston, San Francisco Bay area, New Jersey and Los Angeles — all had higher education environments in the sciences. If we were really going to grow in a healthy way, we'd either have to move, or create a higher educational environment in Dallas."

Green and his Texas Instruments buddies Jonsson and McDermott founded the Graduate Research Center of the Southwest for the training of engineers. It eventually became the University of Texas at Dallas.

"We don't have to be ashamed or worried about our higher education now," says Green.

While Green's philanthropy stretches from Australia to British Columbia, a large part of his giving has been to Dallas institutions, including bequests to Children's Medical Center, Southern Methodist University and the Dallas Museum of Art.

Green's giving is especially noteworthy because of its diversity, according to Robert r. Shrock, who wrote a book about the Greens for the MIT Press.

"For instance, he hasn't picked one level of education, but supported a broad spectrum from the kindergarten at St. Mark's School in Dallas to postdoctoral studies at the Green College at Oxford University in England."

Green's involvement in the sciences continues unabated, according to A.D. Suttle Jr., professor of nuclear biophysics at the University of Texas Marine Biomedical Center in Galveston and a colleague of Green's.

"I'm at the age now where I'm prone to say there are only two important things in life," Green says. "Provided you have a roof over your head and enough to eat, all you need is good health and good friends."

As for showy displays of wealth, Green says: "Castles in Spain, private jets and yachts — they're all a damn nuisance."

Flag-burning law isn't a solution

It is one of those acts so blatantly contemptible that, like child abuse, it strikes at the heart of everything good, wholesome, and, well, American about this country.

But during the past year, since the issue was first pushed to the forefront of American consciousness by the Supreme Court, the public attitude has changed drastically about the way to counter flag-burning. Basically, the attitude now is don't try to remedy one problem by creating a potentially bigger problem.

President George Bush, a good and patriotic man who risked his life flying missions in World War II, proposed a constitutional amendment to make flag desecration illegal. He still wants that action.

But on this issue, we part ways with President Bush. Amending the Constitution — in fact, going even so far as to amend the Bill of Rights — is a grave decision reached only 16 times since the Bill of Rights, which comprises the first 10 amendments, was ratified in 1791.

In Eastern Europe currently, nations are struggling to reshape their governments with freedoms and rights they've never known. Yet in this great nation, are we going to take the step of limiting one of the most precious freedoms granted us 200 years ago? Are we going to allow our patriotic fervor to lead us away from the proper course of action?

Witnessing a naive person setting fire to the flag because they think it makes a "statement" or because they think they are more open-minded than they truly are is a despicable sight. But that is his right, as much as it is yours to love the flag, belong to a political party or attend the church of your choice on Sunday.

A free people face a tremendous responsibility in remaining true to the vision with led this nation to be created. The glorious glow of freedom can blind us to the duty we each have to permit disagreement so that, once espoused, we may find the proper course.

That means at times we may be subjected to that which is reprehensible and we may have to argue time and time again against forces that would seek to turn us into a nation with less liberty.

Yet there are other ways short of a constitutional amendment in which Americans can bring about a change for the better. Permit different views, but teach the good aspects of our system. Remind dissenters that at least in this country they can voice their complaints freely — that literally hundreds of thousands of their countrymen have died to maintain that freedom.

In overturning the law Congress passed last year banning flag-burning, the Supreme Court sought to uphold that most precious of all our freedoms: the right to oppose that which most Americans hold in highest regard, the symbol of this great land.

ANOTHER VIEW

Romania's Iliescu needs restraint

For Eastern Europe's nascent democracies, the acid test is whether they can bring themselves to tolerate opposition.

Romania's misnamed National Salvation Front fails it.

Challenged by peaceful demonstrators, it has responded with Tiananmen-like ferocity, staining Bucharest with ever more blood.

The rampages in Bucharest come in the wake of flawed elections that gave former Communists who dominate the front a semblance of a mandate.

For President Ion Iliescu to contend he is saving democracy by loosing police and armed workers on "Fascist rebels" is sheer effrontery, typical of the tyrant he once served.

At a time of national elections in all six former Soviet-bloc countries, this savagery sets Romania apart.

Its authors should not doubt the revulsion it arouses -- especially since violence could spill into Bulgaria, where former Communist leaders also confront mass demonstrations.

Just as in Beijing, it wasn't Fascists but hunger-strikers who aroused the Romanian regime's wrath. Bucharest's University Square had been occupied since April 22 by demonstrators demanding the resignation of high-ranking former Communists.

Until this week, dissidents thought they had a deal with middle-echelon officials to end their protest in return for access to state-run television. On Wednesday, the regime struck without cause.

Hundreds were wounded when protesters retaliated by storming police headquarters and a television station. Miners armed with clubs were trucked into Bucharest and exhorted to search out dissidents.

Responsibility for this brutality lies squarely with the leaders who seemingly concluded that a skewed election provided a license for violence.

It offends sense for Iliescu to accuse opposition newspapers and proven democrats of joining in a Fascist plot. The charge comes from rulers who have failed to disband the despised, though renamed, Securitate police force and who ordered the secret execution of President Ceausescu and his wife.

Romania's lapse points to its distinctiveness. Unlike other bloc countries, its uprising was bloody but left the power structure intact. Both the poorest and most repressive of Warsaw Pact states, Romania remained grimly aloof.

Iliescu has said he seeks a new course that would bring Romania social democracy and eventual membership in the European Community.

He needs to be reminded, and clearly, that if he seeks peace at home and approval abroad, his government has to show the restraint and respect that it demands from opponents.

Thais can't stop Bangkok sex market

WASHINGTON — Sex is big business in Bangkok. There is only so much that the Thai government can do to stop it, and the government doesn't do that much.

Anderson

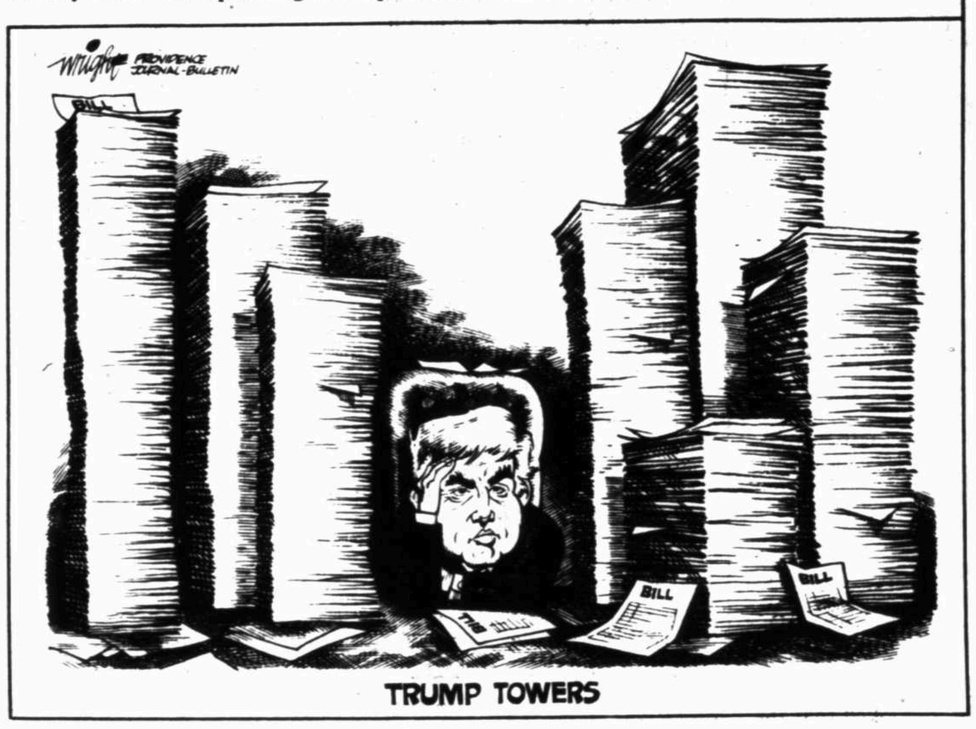
At almost every hotel in Bangkok, the free weekly tourist magazine in the lobby is laced with ads for traditional or "special" Thai massage. There are escort services pitching male or female companions "far beyond your expectations." The color ads offer lean-bodied "delicious, young" go-go dancers.

What's the harm if Bangkok has an overactive libido? This is not just a fantasy land for consenting adults. It has plenty of victims whose only fantasy is to make enough money to stay alive. The sprawling metropolis has become the hub for international child prostitution. The young boy leaning against the massage parlor wall is not waiting for his parents to pick him up.

Bangkok's sex arcade isn't relegated to a red-light district where only the earnest seeker or the dedicated deviant find it. It is part and parcel of the Bangkok tourism package. People come here to see the local culture and they find that it's permissible to do what they might not even fantasize about back home.

It's impossible to miss the sex sales pitch. One of the city's largest craft markets where tourists can buy Thai souvenirs fills Patpong Road, creating a sweaty gridlock of international foot traffic weaving around the craft booths and past the strip joints.

Manic street hawkers coax passersby into "freak shows" and live performances. Every taxi driver seems to know a "lady who gives good massage" and more. Neon has replaced sunlight in a way that makes Las Vegas look like a Sunday school picnic.



TRUMP TOWERS

Before you pooh-pooh the Thais for creating this Sodom and Gommorah of Southeast Asia, remember, they are not in this alone. Europeans and Americans make up a big share of the clientele and have even cashed in on the business side.

Earlier this year we reported the story of Mark Morgan, a Utah man who was arrested by Thai police because they suspected he was running a house of child prostitution under the guise of an orphanage. The "orphanage" was shut down, but the boys who lived there are still a marketable commodity. They were snapped up like assets in a going-out-of-business sale.

Our associate Jim Lynch visited Bangkok and talked to Santhana Dhammasaroj of the Street Children Assistance Project. He said most of the boys in Morgan's house are now living with another American man suspected of being a pedophile.

Santhana said there are many foreigners buying and selling Thai boys. The demand for child sex is soaring. Boys 8 to 14 are plying the trade, charging $40 per customer, but they keep only about $12 and the rest goes to their pimp. Five downtown hotels are in on the racket.

What the boys have in common are fresh faces and poverty. They come from the slums where entire families live in rickety shacks with rusted sheet metal roofs. Adults prey on the boys, coaxing them into prostitution by promising them more money than they have ever seen.

One 8-year-old boy has been selling his body in Bangkok for seven months. He works downtown at nights and spends his days in a second-grade classroom. He supports his family, and his parents haven't told him to stop.

Santhana tries to talk the kids out of their work to keep them alive. AIDS has ripped through Thailand with a vengeance in the past three years.

In a country where heroin and sex are business staples, AIDS could do more than put a damper on the tourist trade. It could kill boys who, in spite of their profession, are not savvy enough or informed enough to understand that they are flirting with an epidemic.

CHARLEY REESE

First step deciding we won't go over there

We would be better off if we could find a way to abolish all the think tanks in Washington without regard for their ideological bent. A terrible amount of nonsense issues from these intellectual busybodies.

Reese

There was, to me, an alarming story in a recent issue of the "Navy Times" based on a study by the Center for Strategic and International Studies. The gist of it was that the military needs a lot of new weapons to fight wars in the Third World.

I don't argue with their thinking in regard to the kinds of weapons. I argue strenuously with the whole proposition that U.S. forces will be fighting wars in any Third World country.

What most aggravates me about the typical Beltway thinking is they always seem to talk about budgets and weapons first and then strategy. Anybody with bat brains knows you should reverse the process. Your weapons and budgets are dictated by your strategic choices, not the other way round.

Why in God's name should we ever, under any conceivable circumstances, send American troops to fight a ground war in a Third World country? No Third World country without intercontinental missiles and nuclear warheads can threaten us no matter how much they hate us. I believe it will be a considerable time before they get those, and when and if they ever do, the proper response would not be to land ground forces but to turn them into radioactive glop with one or two of our own missiles.

We are not an empire. We have no colonies. We do not need to concern ourselves in the least with what kinds of governments come and go in the Third World. Our sphere of interest is the North American continent and the Caribbean. Our interference there should extend no farther than preventing a major outside power from stationing its military forces in that area where they could attack us. Beyond that it's none of our business what kinds of governments they have.

Korea and Vietnam were enough. We Americans ought to put our politicians on notice, in unmistakably clear terms, that never again will we allow a bunch of dumb politicians to send our sons to fight a conventional ground war in Asia, Africa, Latin America or Europe.

The minute we put our boys on the ground, rifleman to rifleman, we are no longer a superpower. We are a superpower only if we use our nuclear weapons. When we rule out those, we are a conventional, not very strong power. Our Army at the present time has 700,000 souls. North Korea alone has an army of 930,000 with 3,500 tanks. North Korea is one of the smaller communist countries.

I'm warning you that globalist idiots are buzzing all around the Washington Beltway planning for Third World wars and we — especially we conservatives — should lead the charge and stop this nonsense now.

Beyond using the Marines to rescue Americans or a special commando unit to nail a terrorist, we have absolutely no need whatsoever for expeditionary forces because there is no place to send them where we ought to send them.

I'll lead the next anti-war protest and the slogan will be: No more no-win wars. No more wars without a formal declaration by Congress. No more wars without a clearly defined objective and a 100 percent commitment to use 100 percent of our power to win.

We should put all of our so-called allies on notice right now. If you got enemies, better build up your army because aside from sending you money and arms, we ain't coming.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

In trumped-up tale, Donald given advice

Donald Trump's chief accountant, Fillmore, sat down in The Donald's plush office.

"What is it this time, Filbert?" asked The Donald.

"It's Fillmore," said the accountant.

"Details. What do you need to see me about?"

"I have some bad news for you, sir."

"What is it, Philpot?"

"We're out of cash, sir."

"What do you mean, 'We're out of cash, sir'?"

Grizzard

"I mean just what I said — we don't have any money."

"Well, you idiot, call the bank and arrange for them to send some over."

"I've already tried that, Mr. Trump. The bank won't loan us any more money until we've paid back what we already owe them."

"Pay them back, Fennimore?"

"Yes, sir. That's how banks make their money. They loan money to you and then you pay it back with interest."

"I always wondered how that worked. Well, there's another solution. Sell off some real estate."

"I'm afraid that's impossible, sir. The real estate market is very soft, and there's the matter of your pending divorce. The court would likely stop us from selling off anything until your settlement with Mrs. Trump is completed."

"What else could we do?"

"May I be perfectly frank, sir?"

"You can be anything you want to be as long as you know the art of the deal."

"What I mean, sir, is, can I be completely truthful?"

"Certainly, Frank."

"There's nothing you can do. You're finished. You're tapped out. It's Negative Cash Flow City."

"But how could this happen?"

"It was your extravagance and greed, sir."

"Extravagance and greed?"

"Like the time you spent — and I have the exact figures here with me — $17,478.66 to fly to Rio with Miss Maples for dinner."

"That much? But we didn't even have dessert. OK, so that's a little extravagant but I've never been greedy."

"I beg to differ, Mr. Trump. Remember when you tried to buy New Hampshire?"

"But I've always wanted my own New England state since I was a little boy."

"Yes, and if the deal had come through you were going to make everybody in New Hampshire move to Iowa so you would have some privacy."

"I forgot why that deal didn't come through."

"You decided to spend the money on your hotel and casino in Atlantic City."

"How's that doing, Finneman?"

"Snake eyes."

"Not anymore, sir."

"You mean Marla has. ..."

"Her exact words were, 'I don't do ex-billionaires.' But there is some good news, sir."

"What is it, Phinezy?"

"There is a concerted effort in this country to do something about the homeless. I'm certain they'll have shelter for you within the month."

"I'm a street person?"

"You start in the morning at 8. Goodbye, Mr. Frump."

Actress Cassandra Peterson, in character as Elvira, Mistress of the Dark, poses with her new perfume, "Evil," at a recent press conference in Dallas. The perfume, expected to debut in stores in August, is billed as a "cruelty-free cosmetic product."

'Mistress of Dark' unveils perfume

DALLAS (AP) — Elvira revealed her new perfume in Dallas recently, then jokingly apologized for somewhat less revealing store displays in which she was wearing slightly more demure clothing than her usual slinky costume.

The news conference kicked off a campaign that the president of her perfume company, Bob Bauman, said will be "a little bit zany" and "a little bit off the wall."

What it will bring to the market is an inexpensive fragrance aimed at those who take the cosmetics industry to task for research and development involving animals. The perfume called "Evil" is billed as a "cruelty-free cosmetic product."

The product also continues the strong marketing of the Elvira character created by actress-comedienne Cassandra Peterson. The character, which began in 1981 when she debuted as hostess of a Los Angeles horror movie show in Los Angeles, has brought her into the national limelight.

Elvira is the consummate vamp of the occult, looking much like a cross between the cartoon heroine Vampirella and Morticia Adams of TV's "Adams Family." She wears black fingernails, black eye shadow and a slinky black dress with a neckline that plunges almost to her navel. Her outfits are accessorized with daggers and spiked bracelets.

But as she lined up Tuesday alongside an aisle display for her new perfume, it was obvious that her merchandising image is more conservative. She looked at the life-size cardboard cutout and joked that she was able to wear less than the picture on this day "because of the heat." Instead of stopping close to her waist, the neckline ended about six inches higher.

Elvira said she helped develop the fragrance by giving suggestions to Florasynth, a leading essential oil supplier.

She said she was specific in her instructions: "It has to be just like me: sexy, beautiful — and inexpensive."

Evil was not the first choice for its name, she joked. "First of all, they suggested cleavage," she said, pronouncing the word slowly with an exaggerated French accent.

Also rejected, she said, was "Smells from the Crypt."

Because of her love for animals, a portion of proceeds will be donated to a non-profit group that works to prevent animal abuse.

"We haven't firmed up that percentage yet," Bauman said.

There was some initial concern by officials of the new Elvira Perfumes company of Santa Fe Springs, Calif., that her character might draw criticism from some fundamentalist Christians.

"We were a little concerned about that," said David J. Kuff, vice president for marketing for the new perfume.

Prankster performs practical jokes

Tom Antion, a professional trickster and founder of Prankmasters, a company that does a booming business in customed-designed practical jokes, poses in a coffin outside his suburban Washington home. "Our motto is, whatever we do for you will be remembered forever," Antion said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — If playing a practical joke is your idea of fun, but exploding cigars and whoopee cushions have lost their charm, it's time to summon Tom Antion and his merry pranksters.

Antion is a jovial, 34-year-old professional trickster and founder of Prankmasters, a company based in his brick rambler home in suburban New Carrollton, Md., that does a booming business in custom-designed practical jokes for all occasions.

Good-natured embarrassment is Antion's stock in trade. "Our motto is, whatever we do for you will be remembered forever," says Antion, whose business card features an impudent red devil sticking out his tongue.

One bride and groom won't soon forget Antion and partner Bonnie Lichtman, who appeared at the wedding reception as "a nerd couple from West Virginia" who carried the invitation of a fun-loving couple who couldn't make the festivities.

Antion wore white socks and a red paisley dinner jacket over a Hawaiian sports shirt. He scarfed dinner rolls from the banquet tables, gawked at the chandeliers and wormed his way into every photo taken for the wedding album.

He may be remembered forever — but not exactly with affection — by the owner of a fancy hairstyling salon whose friends called at the last minute to request a birthday surprise.

Antion appeared at the door with Freeway, his 50-pound pet mongrel, and complained irately that the dog's missing patches of fur had resulted from a badly botched perm at the salon the day before.

"I said, 'This is a show dog. Just look at his coat.' Freeway, who is totally untrained, was running around in circles. I said, 'Look how upset he is. He knows he's got a show tomorrow.' I demanded they ship me a canine toupee kit by express mail or I'd sue.

"They were thinking, this guy's really from outer space. There was a stunned silence until I came back with the birthday balloons and started singing," he said.

Antion charges $19.95 for an imposter's "teleprank" to perhaps $1,000 for a more elaborate scheme. One of his costliest involved fooling a Wall Street investment banker into believing that one of his Midwestern nursing homes had bilked a little old lady who was suing him for $12 million.

"He was sweating bullets," Antion said. "His friends on the board of directors let him suffer for a very long day."

Antion maintains a stable of three dozen paid accomplices, including several midgets, a striptease artist who performs in a gorilla suit and a 450-pound man who delivers "moon-a-grams" with comic messages scribbled across his exposed backside.

A native of rural Claysville, Pa., Antion entertained himself as a child by playing practical jokes. After graduating from West Virginia University, he ran a nightclub in Morgantown, W.Va., for several years. It was an unhappy experience.

"I was always dealing in misery," he said. "People were getting drunk. There were knife fights and fistfights. I was throwing people out the door and getting sued. I decided that when I got out of there, I'd be dealing in happiness instead of sadness."

Inspired by his nightclub sideline of delivering party balloons and novelty telegrams, Antion moved to Washington to "make money and have fun." He established Prankmasters three years ago, and says "it's going great guns."

Antion sat at their table, put on white gloves and opened the briefcase shackled to his wrist. "I pulled out a love telegram, and she started laughing," he said. "Then I pulled out an engagement ring, and her boyfriend asked her to marry him. She burst into tears."

Desert killing shrouded in mystery

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — It took nearly three years for Marcia Wheatley to make her first visit to a patch of desert where her daughter's skeleton was dug from the sand, a place she calls the killer's trophy room.

Returning to the site where the body of Desiree Wheatley and five other young women were found made her skin crawl.

"It just made my insides get real quaky," said Ms. Wheatley. "Going to her (cemetery) grave is one thing, but going out here, where she was actually killed ... I wonder, as she was going down this road, was she aware then what was actually going to happen? Did she suffer? At what point did she know: 'This is it.'?"

Despite a $25,000 reward recently posted at Ms. Wheatley's urging, no one has been charged in the deaths of the six women and police won't talk about the case. Still missing are three others who disappeared about the same time as the victims.

A $1.88 million municipal golf course is near completion on the same stretch of desert and a new section of freeway comes within a few hundred feet of at least one of the makeshift graves.

City officials look forward to commercial and residential development they expect the golf course and highway to spawn, swallowing the rest of the desert and its horrible secrets.

Some relatives of the victims believe the development desecrates the killing ground.

"That's actually their grave," said Denise Frausto, a victim's sister. "All the girls' ... that's their grave, and it is like taking the cemetery and going and building something on it," she said.

"We should call the (highway) bridge, Desert Deaths Memorial Bridge and call the golf course Desert Deaths Memorial Golf Course and we should name each hole after one of the girls," Ms. Wheatley said.

RICHARD McCARTHY, city parks and recreation director, said location of the golf course near the graves has not been an issue in its construction.

"It has not been a problem," McCarthy said. "This is a good, clean wholesome opportunity ... "

Marcia Wheatley places fresh flowers on the grave of her daughter, Desiree, during a recent weekly visit to the El Paso cemetery. Her daughter's remains were found on an isolated stretch of desert in 1987. The killer has not been found.

Between Sept. 4, 1987, and March 14, 1988, police found the remains of Karen Baker, 20; Desiree Wheatley, 15; Dawn Smith, 14; Angelica Frausto, 17; and Ivy Susanna Williams, 23, all of El Paso. Maria Rosa Casio, 24, was from Addison.

Still missing are: Marjorie Knox, 14 when she disappeared, of Chapparral, N.M.; Cheryl Lynn Vasquez Dismukes, then 19, of El Paso; and Melissa Alaniz, then 13, also of El Paso.

Some of the victims were runaways and prostitutes, and police were criticized for not responding more quickly to reports of their disappearances.

Detectives involved in the case refused interview requests, despite a supervisor's approval.

Capt. Charles Skanes, commander of the Criminal Investigations Bureau, would not say whether the site's development means police don't believe any graves remain to be found. Nor will police say whether they believe the missing women are dead or alive.

"We have to be comfortable with that development. It's progress," Skanes said.

Blistering desert dust storms slowly are filling the shallow depressions where the victims lay hidden for months. There are wind-smoothed sand piles left by bulldozers and prison dogs that dug for bodies. A swatch of bright yellow police tape still clings to a cresote bush near one of the graves.

ONCE A WEEK Ms. Wheatley takes fresh flowers to her daughter's cemetery plot and talks to her.

"That bothers me that I can't put a date right here," she said pointing to Desiree's headstone. The marker shows the date of Desiree's birth and the year of her death.

She disappeared June 2, 1987. Ms. Wheatley can recite conversations she had with police in the early morning of June 3 when she tried to convince them her daughter was not a runaway.

"I could not get them to understand that I knew this child. I had known her for 15 years and she was not a runaway," Ms. Wheatley said. Desiree's body was found Oct. 20, 1987, the same day Dawn Smith's remains were found.

Since then, Ms. Wheatley's obsession has been hounding police to find out who killed Desiree.

At her request, county commissioners posted the reward for information leading to the conviction of the killer or killers. Ms. Wheatley is now lobbying El Paso's Crime Stoppers chapter to advertise the reward.

"I call this my therapy. My therapy is getting somebody to get off their butt and do something about this," Ms. Wheatley said.

When Erika Dismukes learned of the reward, she taped a new flyer to her car to replace the yellowing one that had been there since her daughter-in-law, Cheryl Lynn Vasquez-Dismukes, disappeared June 28, 1987.

UNLIKE MS. WHEATLEY, Mrs. Dismukes has been to the desert many times conducting her own investigation. She believes Cheryl Lynn is still alive.

"A lot of times I'm sitting here on the couch and I come out here and look for Cheryl," Mrs. Dismukes said. "I just want her back. I have a dream about Cheryl and I say, 'Lord, let Cheryl talk to me' and I hear her outside saying, 'I just wanted you to know I'm all right.' "

Mrs. Dismukes said she believes Cheryl Lynn was abducted and hasn't returned because she's been threatened.

"Maybe she's the key to it. Maybe whoever took Cheryl did that to the other girls," she said.

The only suspect ever named by police in the case is David Leonard Wood. Wood is now serving a 50-year sentence for the 1987 rape of a prostitute who said the sexual assault occurred near where the bodies were found.

Last year, Wood filed a $20.5 million suit against Police Chief John Scagno, claiming police schemed to implicate him in the slayings because they could not solve the case.

Ms. Wheatley is sure Wood killed her daughter. Mrs. Dismukes believes police are on the wrong track.

Report says parents healthier than teens

WASHINGTON (AP) — America is raising a generation of adolescents plagued by pregnancies, illegal drug use, suicide and violence, a panel that included medical and education leaders said Friday.

"We are absolutely convinced that if we don't take action immediately, we're going to find ourselves with a failing economy and social unrest," said Roseann Bentley of the National Association of State Boards of Education.

The commission's report concluded that "young people are less healthy and less prepared to take their places in society than were their parents." The 36-member panel gathered from a variety of sources statistics that Bentley said astonished commission members. Among the trouble signs were:

- 1 million teen-age girls — nearly 1 in 10 — get pregnant each year.
- 39 percent of high school seniors reported they had gotten drunk within the two previous weeks.
- Alcohol-related accidents are the leading cause of death among teen-agers.
- The suicide rate for teens has doubled since 1968, making it the second leading cause of death among adolescents. Ten percent of teen-age boys and 18 percent of girls have attempted suicide.
- Teen-age arrests are up 30-fold since 1950.
- Homicide is the leading cause of death among 15-19 year old minority youths.

The commission was formed by the National Association of State Boards of Education and the American Medical Association to make recommendations on the role of the school and community in improving adolescent health.

The panel members included former Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, Pollster George Gallup Jr., former Education Commissioner Ernest Boyer, Illinois Gov. James Thompson and California school chief Bill Honig.

The commission recommended that all teen-agers be guaranteed access to health services, regardless of their ability to pay. That health care should include psycho-social as well as medical services, the report said.

Also, communities should set up adolescent health centers in schools or other convenient locations, financed by local, state and federal funds as well as by private money.

The commission also called on schools to play a larger role in improving adolescents' health. It suggested "a new kind of health education — a sophisticated multi-faceted program that goes light years beyond present lectures about personal hygiene." Such a program should include sex education, the panel said.

Antiques of Tomorrow

Dollmaker's work combines new methods, timeless charm

In a large studio and hobby shop behind her home in south Midland County, she combines porcelain faces and bodies with acrylic or glass eyes and yards and yards of exquisite fabrics and lace to create lifelike dolls.

Fine 18th- and 19th-century ladies peek shyly or imperiously from beneath wide hats cleverly trimmed in lace and feathers. Every child's dream of a grandmother sits in a rocking chair, peeling a basket full of apples.

One figure looks as if she'd be right at home as a flapper in the Roaring '20s. Another seems to have stepped off a Las Vegas stage. Yet another, complete with beauty mark and dressed in black fishnet tights and a shiny black, low-cut blouse, could be a shady "lady of the evening."

"These will be your antiques for tomorrow," Mrs. Miller said, because once the real antique porcelain dolls have been bought by collectors and museums, "people who like dolls are going to be forced to start collecting the reproductions."

Mrs. Miller, who made her first porcelain doll in 1978, admitted that sewing is her favorite part of doll-making.

"The part that I like the best about the dolls is sewing the clothes. I hate to dress that doll after I get it all finished!" she said, laughing. "You've got to put on the panties, you have so many slips to put on, then your dress on top. And I hate to do that. But I love to sew.

DOLLS: Maker likes to improvise

"I don't like to use someone else's patterns. I'd rather just sit down and improvise. If I've got three yards of material that I'm sewing for a big doll, then I'll try to figure out some way of using all three yards of material for that doll, 'cause I don't like to have little scraps left over.

"I like to do the larger dolls, 26- or 27-inch dolls. You can dress them more elaborately, you can add more laces and trims and petticoats, big hats."

To make one of her porcelain dolls, Mrs. Miller first pours liquid porcelain clay — "slip" as it is called — into a clay mold, which gradually absorbs the moisture from the slip. Various molds form the dolls' heads and faces, as well as torsos, arms, legs, hands and feet.

A doll may have an all-porcelain body, or the porcelain head, hands and feet may be sewn onto a cloth body. A doll with a completely jointed body — where the hips, knees, elbows and hands all move — may have 15 separate porcelain pieces that must be made, she said.

When the clay has set in the mold and the piece has dried to the desired thickness, Mrs. Miller pours the rest of the slip out and takes the piece out of the mold. She then uses old nylon hose to rub off seam lines from the places where the mold fit together.

'There's a lot to do in a doll. It's not something that you just sit down and finish in a day's time.'

— Merle Miller, local dollmaker

She stressed that the porcelain clay shrinks, and, as it does, any seam lines become very noticeable. At this point, the clay is dry but very soft, and Mrs. Miller rubs the entire piece with cotton balls to remove any blemishes. She also engraves her name and the year on the back of the doll's neck.

Finally, an "eyesizer" puts grooves in the doll's eye sockets so that a glass or acrylic eye will easily fit into it. The porcelain pieces next are fired in a kiln for 6 or 6½ hours at 2300 to 2400 degrees Fahrenheit, Mrs. Miller continued. Then it takes about a day for the kiln to cool enough so that she can remove the fired porcelain from it.

After the firing, Mrs. Miller sands the porcelain, then paints the pieces, adding an overall skin color, blush to the cheeks, and perhaps painted eyelashes or eyeshadow.

Mrs. Miller makes everything about her dolls except their acrylic or glass eyes, their wigs and their shoes.

"There's a lot to do in a doll," she said. "It's not something that you just sit down and finish in a day's time."

Although she's never kept track of the total number of hours spent on any one doll, she did keep a record of the time it took her to make one very elaborate dress.

"By the time I did the dress and the two or three slips and the pantaloons and the hat, I had sewed 44 yards of lace on that dress. It took me 49 hours to do the clothes.

"So, I figure by the time you count the pouring and the cleaning and the painting and the stringing (putting the jointed porcelain body parts together) — all that stuff — I figure that I've got, oh, 80 or 90 hours in that doll."

Besides selling her "Porcelain Treasures" at her shop, which is open by appointment only, Mrs. Miller belongs to Midland's Paint Daubers and sells her dolls at their two annual Midland Park Mall shows.

Her 26- or 27-inch-high dolls dressed in layers of elaborate clothes, sell for about $500; 17- or 18-inch-high dolls range in price from $200 to $250. The lifelike infant dolls called "Sugar Britches" are $165; dressed in exquisite lace christening gowns, they are $250-$275. Many of her customers purchase the dolls on layaway, which gives them up to a year to buy the dolls.

"If I keep a doll for awhile and I don't like it, I may redress it, put a new wig on it or reduce the price," said Mrs. Miller, who views her doll-making as somewhat more than a hobby but less than a business. In her shop, she has more than 300 molds, 300 pairs of shoes and 250 wigs. She also sell supplies to other dollmakers.

"I enjoy making the dolls. I keep track of who buys them and where they go," she continued. "This year, I've sold more already than I did all of last year."

However, Mrs. Miller is not sentimental about her dolls.

"I never have made a doll that I wouldn't sell. If you see as many as I do, then you'd wish you'd never see it again!" she said, laughing.

Cafe's only visitors now are just curious

FORT WORTH (AP) — The clientele at a cafe that once doubled as an illegal gambling joint for high-rollers has been replaced by gawkers seeking a glimpse of Fort Worth's bloodiest crime scene in years.

The Glass Key is closed now. But the infamy of the May 14 shooting spree — which cost five men their lives — lingers.

"It's a monument now," said Larry Williams, who lives across the street from the cafe.

People in cars ranging from new Mercedes Benzes to old Cadillacs pass by daily, Williams said, asking "Is that the Glass Key?"

Curiosity-seekers want see the place where a gang of masked gunmen burst in on a dice game and opened fire with high-powered assault rifles. Three men were wounded in the attack.

The robbers escaped with an undetermined amount of money. The case remains unsolved.

Shortly after the shooting, two brothers implicated in the crime were jailed for three days but released for lack of evidence.

"We've got a number of leads and number of names, none of which has panned out yet," said homicide Lt. J.P. Foley.

So this cafe where five people lost their lives in an early-morning massacre has become an unlikely tourist attraction.

Fort Worth's Glass Key, a one-time cafe, not-so-secret illegal gambling parlor, is closed now, but it still attracts scores of curiosity seekers who want a glimpse of one of the city's bloodiest crime scenes in years.

James Williams, 36, said the driver of an 18-wheeler once stopped to look at the Glass Key. "We gave him a tour," he said.

"We showed him the bullet holes and everything," said Larry Williams, who is not related to James Williams.

Both men spoke in harmony about the cafe's ability to lure an audience, but they disagreed about it reopening.

"I've eaten in there all my life" James Williams said. "I don't know if I'd go back in there to get something to eat. I don't know how I'd feel going in there after that."

But 42-year-old Larry Williams said: "I hope someone opens it back up. I need to eat again. I'm a bachelor."

Cafe owner Albert Huey-You, 73, who suffered a slight wound in the shooting, has vowed to keep the place closed. He still won't say much about the incident, except that he got the name "The Glass Key" from a 1935 movie based on a novel by Dashiell Hammett about a politician involved in a murder mystery.

His former cook, Opal Jean Peoples, is free to take over the cafe where she served up fish, chicken and pork chops for 35 years, Huey-You said.

"I told her I didn't want to have nothing to do with it. She can have it," he told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Ms. Peoples said the recent violence would probably discourage some patrons, but she said she needs the job.

"After they find out I'm over there and back in business, a lot of my customers will come back," she said. "I'm a lady. I don't gamble. I don't play cards."

Bribery case threatens ex-Republican leader

FORT WORTH (AP) — The former head of the Tarrant County Republican Party could be disbarred as a result of a bribery scheme that has led to prison sentences for two Mississippi public officials and indictment against a Dallas millionaire.

The State Bar of Texas has accused Frank Sears, a legal expert in international trade, of refusing to account for more than $700,000 that Dallas oil and aviation mogul Travis Ward put in his care in 1985.

An indictment against Ward and others in Mississippi alleges the money was intended as bribes for two members of Mississippi's Public Service Commission. The two former commissioners are now in federal prison.

The State Bar asserts that Sears lied about placing Ward's money in a Cayman Islands bank, refused to transfer the money back to Ward, failed to account for the money and never notified authorities of the likelihood that it was intended for illegal use.

Although no criminal indictments have been returned against Sears, the bar's action could lead to his public reprimand or the suspension of his license to practice law, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Sunday.

Reached at his home on Sunday, Sears told The Associated Press that he had to withhold his comments on the matter because of pending litigation. "I'm at a total disadvantage," he said.

But the 57-year-old attorney has denied in court documents that he mishandled or misused Ward's money, lied about it or involved himself in any criminal activity.

Ward retained Sears in the fall of 1985. That December, Sears went to the Cayman Islands, where one of Ward's business associates gave him more than $700,000 to place in an island bank, the newspaper reported.

Ward, facing criminal charges in Mississippi, has sued Sears to reclaim the money.

Former U.S. Attorney Frank McCown, who is representing Sears, said that Ward's money is secure and that Sears has given bar association officials his reasons for refusing to return the money.

The Mississippi case now threatening Sears' career is linked to a 1985 rate hearing for a Mississippi power company and that hearing's suspected tie to a $20 million deal between Ward and a Houston oil and gas company.

The 70-year-old Ward, whose holdings include Ward Oil Co., Pan American Sales Corp. and Dal-Jet, told officers at United Energy Resources that he "knew people" in Mississippi and could help the company settle the case, according to the indictment.

In return, Ward asked United Energy to pay him $20 million for some South Texas oil wells he owned.

The indictment alleges that Ward conspired with two members of Mississippi's Public Service Commission to veto the rate increase the power company was seeking until the company settled its suit with United Gas Pipeline Co. for less than half of the $400 million it had originally sought.

Teacher, women rescue Lufkin man

CONROE (AP) — A junior high school teacher on the way home from his moonlighting job as manager of a fast-food restaurant pulled an unconscious man from a wrecked car minutes before it was engulfed in flames, authorities said.

Don Reed, 38, was credited for probably saving the life of Gilbert Bara Jr., 22, of Lufkin, who was reported in good condition Sunday at Tomball Regional Medical Center.

"He's to be lauded," Bob Morrison, spokesman for the Montgomery County Sheriff's Department, said of Reed. "It's certainly heartening to see someone come upon an accident scene and get that involved."

Reed said he was driving home from work about 2 a.m. Saturday on Farm Road 2978 in east Montgomery County when he noticed a car that had gone down an embankment into the woods, and another smashed into a guardrail.

He ran to the nearest car, on the guardrail, and found Bara inside, with the engine on fire.

Reed pulled Bara out of the car and, with the help of four women who also stopped, dragged him away as it erupted in flames.

Police and medical workers arrived a few minutes later.

Tanker spill may prompt transfer review

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — More and more in the Gulf of Mexico, the oil industry is using the process of lightering — moving cargo, usually crude, from a larger vessel to smaller tankers — and that could be disastrous to Louisiana's fragile coast, state officials said.

The lightering process carries with it the dangers of spills and collisions that could reek havoc on the state's marsh and estuaries — the nurseries for the nation's largest seafood harvest, said Virginia Van Sickle, Secretary of the state Department of Wildlife and Fisheries.

At least 15 percent of Louisiana's imported oil is being lightered off the Louisiana and Texas coasts, she said.

The Mega Borg was involved in a lightering operation when she was racked by the first of a series of explosions that has resulted in a major spill off the Texas coast, according to the U.S. Coast Guard.

However, proponents of the process said it's a safe, cost-effective way to import crude, and that while the Mega Borg was involved in a lightering operation when the first explosion occurred, it has not been established that it played a part in the catastrophe.

The incident is still under investigation and may spur a broader look at lightering operations, the coast guard said.

There were 848 reported lighterings off the U.S. coast in 1988, officials said. Last year that number rose to 1,530.

"If done right, as with any operation, lightering is a very sound, effective and safe way of transferring oil," said Tom Moore, general manager of operations for Chevron. "It shouldn't be looked upon as a back door approach. It's how the Navy refuels their vessels at sea.

"The statistics on lightering are excellent," Moore said.

Chevron has been doing it for 17 years and for every 100 million gallons of oil transferred, only one gallon is spilled, he said. The hoses have automatic shutoff devices in case there is a rupture.

But it is not small accidents, caused by broken hoses, that are worrying those entrusted with protecting Louisiana's coastal environment.

It's the less likely, but more catastrophic accident, such as a collision or explosion, that could spill huge amounts of oil on the Louisiana coast.

"With ships operating that near each other, there is always the possibility of collision," says Capt. Ted Thompson, chief of the U.S. Coast Guard's Port Safety and Security Division.

The potential for such accidents are lessened by having trained "lightering masters" on board who make the decision on whether to go ahead with the operation considering weather and other factors, Moore said.

STATE

Oil-eating experiment continues

GALVESTON (AP) — Oil-eating microbes that were spread over part of an oil slick from the supertanker Mega Borg appear to have done their job, but officials said Sunday they have launched another experiment to make sure.

On Friday, state officials and scientists spread about 100 pounds of hungry microbes over a square acre of the slick from the crippled Norwegian tanker that exploded June 8 in the Gulf of Mexico.

It was the first use of the process — called bioremediation — on open waters.

A flyover Sunday of the area marked by a buoy showed little oil in the treated waters, state officials said.

"There certainly wasn't any oil over there," said Texas Water Commission Chairman B.J. "Buck" Wynne. But Wynne said it could not be determined if the oil was removed by the microbes, or water currents, or if the buoy had moved.

"Visually, it appeared there was hardly anything left. It appears degradation of the oil has occurred," Blanton Moore, of the Texas General Land Office, said.

But Moore said officials won't know for certain from the first application, so they started another experiment Sunday by encircling two areas of the slick with 15-foot diameter booms.

In one area, officials will spread the microbes. In the other, they won't.

Gulf aquarium's goal is illusive

By Joel Williams

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Everyone becomes a sea creature at the new Texas State Aquarium, where the waterfall spilling over the entrance marks visitors' imaginary exit from the terra firma into the depths of the Gulf of Mexico.

"We try to create the illusion that you're going under water," aquarium Director Quenton Dokken said as he walked through the entrance tubes leading visitors through the waterfall.

Inside, exhibits are designed to give the sensation of plunging ever deeper into the Gulf of Mexico.

The mission is to educate as well as entertain, Dokken said, at the only United States aquarium devoted to the Gulf. The aquarium's first phase opens July 6.

"Mankind's history can be traced to the history of the ocean, our exploitation of the ocean," he said, "and the sad thing is that the general public has no idea of the importance of the ocean in their lives."

One example: Seventy percent of the oxygen in earth's atmosphere is produced by ocean plankton, he said.

The wildlife and fisheries scientist hopes at least a trace of appreciation for the ocean — particularly the Gulf — will rub off on the 600,000 to 900,000 visitors expected to visit the aquarium its first year.

They won't have to sit through lectures or read lengthy texts to get the message. Interactive exhibits will allow hands-on exploration.

Visitors will have a chance to touch some sea creatures, use microscopes and weather satellites, talk to a submerged diver and play the role of a city official reacting to an approaching hurricane.

AP Laserphoto

Quenton Dokken, executive director of the Texas State Aquarium, stands in front of the $3 million Gulf of Mexico Exhibit Building in Corpus Christi.

The $31.5 million Gulf of Mexico exhibit building with its 300,000-gallon salt water aquaria is but the first phase of a $60 million project expected to expand throughout the decade.

Planners say Phase II, an education, research and administration building, could be among the nation's premier marine science research and education centers. Caribbean and Gulf-Caribbean mammal exhibits also are planned.

The aquarium exhibits aim for realism, though the aquarium produces its own sea water to keep its animals in a cleaner environment than they might find in the polluted Gulf.

The visitor's route begins with marshes, bays, estuaries and shoreline, and progresses as if one has stepped off the Texas coast into the Laguna Madre, across the barrier islands parallel to the mainland and on into the Gulf.

Pelicans and other live, rehabilitated birds that no longer can survive in the wild will grace the barrier island exhibit with its live dune grasses.

For reality's sake, there's also a display of beach garbage and plastics dumped in the ocean.

Visitors move ever deeper through the habitats and species of the continental shelf near shore.

The largest aquarium features an abundant artificial reef community at the base of an offshore oil and gas platform. Sharks, barracuda, sawfish and other creatures swim in the 132,000 gallons of water, separated from viewers by a 8-foot-by-20-foot window of plastic polymer seven inches thick and weighing 10,000 pounds.

Plastics also form what looks like colorful, genuine coral in the Flower Gardens reef exhibit. It offers a glimpse into life in the Gulf's only coral reef, 115 miles off the Texas coast, and some of its 175 types of fish.

Many of the creatures on display came from the Sea Arama park that closed in Galveston earlier this year. Others were collected in the Gulf by aquarium staff.

City promoters hope the aquarium will help revive its surrounding Corpus Christi Beach area, separated from the rest of the city by the ship channel. The area has declined since its heyday as a tourist resort earlier in the century.

Tourists will have the option of taking a boat across the ship channel from downtown to the aquarium.

Its unique Gulf focus is expected to attract people from other countries, said Tony Bonilla, chairman of the Corpus Christi Chamber of Commerce.

The aquarium was proposed in 1969 as a joint project of the Chamber of Commerce and Junior League, but support grew slowly until 1985, when the Legislature declared it the state's official aquarium. It remains a title only; the aquarium receives no state money.

Admission will be $6.50 for adults, $3.50 for children and $4.50 for students, senior citizens and active military. Children under 4 can enter free.

It's also free for anyone to roam the exterior sidewalk decorated with inlaid images of dolphins and hammerhead sharks and life-size models of whales.

But a caveat: the unwary visitor may find it hard to resist passing through that waterfall to take a stroll beneath the waves.

Mayors seek repeal of Gramm-Rudman

CHICAGO (AP) — America's mayors Sunday gave initial approval to a broad, costly domestic agenda that asks Congress to repeal the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law and cut Social Security taxes for nearly 120 million workers.

The more than 70 resolutions approved by the U.S. Conference of Mayors key policy committee contain repeated pleas for a multibillion-dollar infusion of federal funds for anti-drug, housing, education and anti-poverty programs.

Also endorsed was a resolution asking Washington to give cities broad powers to regulate billboards alongside federal roads. But the panel balked at a proposal that would have put the mayors on record as opposing alcohol and tobacco advertising.

The issue came to the forefront in Texas in March, when Dallas County Commissioner John Wiley Price was arrested for defacing billboards with tobacco and alcohol advertising. Price has been charged with a misdemeanor count of criminal mischief.

The resolutions endorsed Sunday will go before the full conference of more than 200 mayors Wednesday. But the panel's decisions are rarely changed significantly in those votes, which set the lobbying agenda for the organization's Washington staff.

The mayors, who have spent much of the first three days of their six-day annual meeting criticizing the federal government for slashing aid to cities, said repealing Gramm-Rudman would force lawmakers to confront the deficit.

"Too many of our members of Congress are using this as a crutch to hide some of the true problems of our economy," said Mayor Paul Soglin of Madison, Wis. "A series of budget gimmicks have been implemented."

Under Gramm-Rudman, automatic spending cuts take effect if Congress and the White House do not meet specified deficit reduction targets. The mayors complained that city-level services are the first to feel the automatic cuts.

"It has the effect of putting cities and towns, urban programs, first on the chopping block," said Mayor John K. Bullard of New Bedford, Mass.

Conference staff said the mayors group — if the full conference endorses the proposal as expected — would be the first organization of elected officials to call for repeal of Gramm-Rudman.

Youth's 'hello' leads to his death

DALLAS (AP) — A Wichita Falls teen-ager visiting relatives in Dallas was beaten and shot to death after he greeted a group of strangers he was walking past, police said.

Ryan Adams, 17, died at Baylor University Medical Center late Friday night, about an hour after being shot in an apartment courtyard, said homicide Det. Virgil Sparks.

Adams' aunt, Alice Wright, said her nephew left her apartment to walk to a nearby park moments before the 10 p.m. shooting.

"He was only gone two or three minutes when my son heard gunfire and ran out there," Ms. Wright said.

Sparks said Adams walked by a group of men, some of whom had guns.

"He said something like, 'Hi, what's going on?' They took offense to that because they didn't know him. They started beating on him, then one or more of them started shooting at him," Sparks said.

MONDAY, JUNE 18, 1990

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: columnist Sylvia Porter, critic Roger Ebert, baseball great Lou Brock, rock star Paul McCartney.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You and a newcomer make an effective team. An opponent may try to interject a note of fear into your negotiations. Ignore all threats. The facts are on your side. Romance is joyful.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your words carry great weight with a young follower. Do not allow even a good friend to exploit you. Return phone calls promptly. Entertaining is delightful when you invite fun guests.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An aggressive approach wins approval from a co-worker who shares your ideals. Consolidate bills and get help in paying them off; new peace of mind will follow. Call home frequently when you travel.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be more assertive in business. Although success may be within reach, avoid acting overly optimistic. Reorganize your domestic environment. Stay on your toes in financial negotiations.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A talk with a prestigious individual will swing weighty matters your way. Question stock tips suggested by friends. Be calm but cheerful. A sagging relationship is rejuvenated!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Leadership is your forte; your words seem to have a powerful spell. Emphasize the many benefits of working together. Surprise certain people by loosening up a little at a social gathering.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Being on the go today will help you put your plans into action. Make good use of the phone. A private meeting helps you secure needed funding. You have considerable influence with your mate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An open-door policy prevails between you and VIPs today. Seek their business advice on overcoming any obstacles. A health routine keeps you feeling fit. Encourage a new love.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Humanitarian goals come to the fore; your work with a special group could benefit many people. A helpful word arrives under fascinating circumstances. The pieces of a puzzle fall into place.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Keep your distance until the boss has all the facts regarding a sensitive office matter. A former link should be restored. A cash bonus is possible. Be honest with your loved ones.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A creative project benefits from your talents. Good intentions are of value only if you follow through. Give a child a chance to confide in you. Listen without passing judgment. Romance sizzles!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Payments and collections brighten your day. Get to the heart of a matter that is creating tension at work. Handle documents with great care to protect company secrets. A romance deepens into true love.

TODAY'S CHILDREN need a lot of parental approval and direction. A kindly but firm approach will work best. Encourage these youngsters to develop a somewhat thicker skin. These Geminis will seldom give someone who offends them a second chance. They tend to withdraw from conflict and have a great dislike for confrontations. Outgoing and dramatic, many of these children will seek a career in the public eye. They thrive on applause and make dedicated actors or politicians.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

♠A63 ♡A85 ◇A54 ♣AK106
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—There's a book bid to describe a balanced 19-20 point hand—a jump to two no trump. We can think of no reason why you should choose to bid anything else.

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A83 ♡K95 ◇A ♣K98742
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Obviously, the choice lies between a raise to two hearts or a rebid of two clubs. We have never been averse to raising partner's major with only three-card support, and here we would clearly prefer showing our good three-card support to rebidding a porous six-card minor.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A83 ♡J65 ◇A ♣KQ9872
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—While this hand has the same distribution and point count as the previous example, there are key differences: The heart support is weaker and the club suit is stronger. That's just enough to sway us to a two-club rebid.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A ♡A108764 ◇AJ ♣QJ32
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You don't have to rebid a six-card major just because of its length. As a rule of thumb, rebid the major with a minimum opening; show a second suit with a better-than-minimum hand. This hand clearly falls into the latter category, so bid two clubs.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A63 ♡A85 ◇A54 ♣AK106
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 ♣	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—If you think that partner is trying to get out with a weak hand, stifle that thought. Partner might be making the first move on a hand good enough for slam. It's time for you to show your support for his suit. Bid three hearts.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A63 ♡A85 ◇A54 ♣AK106
The auction has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 ♣	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—You have told partner that you have a balanced hand of 19-20 points with three-card heart support. Armed with that knowledge, partner has elected to sign off in four hearts. Is there something about your hand that should persuade you to bid again? No. Pass.

Dysart of 'L.A. Law' argues volunteering case to lawyers

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Richard Dysart, who plays a senior partner on NBC's "L.A. Law" television series, encouraged real-life Kentucky lawyers to do more volunteer legal work.

Dysart

Dysart, who plays Leland McKenzie on the series, was the keynote speaker Friday at a banquet for the Kentucky Bar Association.

Dysart also played McKenzie in a 30-second public service announcement taped Friday for the KBA. Dysart did the tape free in hopes lawyers will follow suit and perform more volunteer legal work.

"I say if it gets one Kentucky lawyer to go out to a senior citizens center and show someone how to fill out a government medical form, it's worth the effort," Dysart said.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Madonna, who canceled the first of three engagements here because of a sore throat, performed the second show for 14,000 stomping, screaming fans.

Madonna

Deafening cheers greeted the singer Saturday as she emerged from a cloud of smoke on the elaborate set of her "Blond Ambition" tour.

As late as early Saturday afternoon, local promoters were still awaiting word from the singer's doctor on whether the pop star would make the Saturday and Sunday night concerts.

The Friday night concert was the third canceled in the last three weeks by the singer, who started the tour six weeks ago. The throat problem was blamed on a viral infection.

• • •

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Bill Cosby, television's well-known dad, may be a ghost soon, but he was quite visible to tens of thousands of visitors at the Riverbend Festival on Father's Day weekend.

Cosby

Cosby, wearing a Dad T-shirt saying "Ghost Dad" to promote an upcoming film by that name, kept many of the 100,000 estimated partygoers spellbound during a 75-minute monologue Friday night, festival organizers said.

Part of his routine included asking the audience to ponder the philosophical question of why humans continue to care for their young when animals get rid of them after six months.

• • •

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — The Kid is 11 years old, 4½ feet tall and weighs 57 pounds. But Charlie Korsmo came close to stealing the show from his elders in the new "Dick Tracy" movie.

"Wasn't he great!" exclaimed the Kid's co-star and director, Warren Beatty, last week after the film had its premiere here.

Charlie's first movie role was as Jessica Lange's son in "Men Don't Leave." Initially, he wasn't interested in the role offered by Beatty in the film based on the square-jawed comic strip character.

But Beatty insisted, and the sixth-grader from Minneapolis finally agreed, partly because "I hate to go to school."

Now, Charlie considers himself "one lucky kid."

"Everybody says the movie will be a hit, so it will probably help my career," says the slightly built youngster who professes more interest in becoming a philosopher than a full-time actor when he grows up.

"I would sit around and think a lot — like inventions and theories and stuff like that"— and then give advice to others, he says of his real goal in life.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Blanche Moore Hodge, one of the first women to hold leadership positions in the Baptist church, died Thursday at age 89.

She had suffered a stroke in January and died in a hospice.

In 1948, Hodge became the first woman president of the Oregon Baptist Convention. She was the first woman to serve as president of the Portland Council of Churches, now called the Ecumenical Ministries of Oregon.

LONDON (AP) — Dame Eva Turner, a soprano with extraordinary range and power and a memorable star of Puccini's "Turandot," died Saturday at age 98.

Miss Turner, who had suffered a broken hip three months ago, died at Devonshire Hospital in London, said Katherine Morgan, a relative.

Born in Oldham, Lancashire, Miss Turner joined the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company in London in 1916. She made her debut a year later as a page in Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" and rapidly took on lead roles in productions of "Tosca," "Aida" and "Madama Butterfly."

Miss Turner made her debut at La Scala in Milan in 1924 as Freia in Wagner's "Das Rheingold."

From 1950 to 1959 she was a professor of voice at the University of Oklahoma. She returned to London and taught voice at the Royal Academy of Music until 1966.

DEAR ABBY

Felony conviction is not a failure sentence

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: "Concerned Mother" wrote to say that her 21-year-old son was facing a felony conviction for buying some electronic equipment that turned out to be stolen. She said, "He thinks if he's convicted he'll be branded a failure, and his life will be ruined because nobody hires a felon." Then she asked if there were any convicted felons who had turned their lives around and become successful. Here's my story:

Van Buren

In my early 20s, I was convicted of delivering a controlled substance (marijuana). I was not a dealer; I did it as a favor to a co-worker. It was the only time I had ever done such a thing. It was a grave mistake — I was guilty of a felony — but I lived through it, and will soon complete a 10-year probated sentence. I was depressed and felt like a failure at 24 until a friend told me that he believed in me, but in order to succeed, I had to believe in myself and pull myself up by my bootstraps. And that's exactly what I did.

I sent out resumes and had many interviews in search of a job that paid better than minimum wages. I got many polite turndowns when my conviction was discussed, but I never let it get me down. I finally got a job and worked my way up the corporate ladder. I've proven myself to be a valuable employee and refused to let one mistake ruin my life. I continue to grow because I believe in myself. Today, this convicted felon is a very successful businessman.

"Press on; nothing in the world can take the place of persistence.

"Genius will not; unrewarded genius is almost a proverb.

"Persistence and determination alone are omnipotent." — NO NAME, NO CITY, NO STATE, PLEASE

DEAR NO NAME: I was overwhelmed with success stories from convicted felons. Read on:

FROM ARIZONA: What constitutes success? Is it a high school dropout who got his G.E.D. two years later? I did that.

Is it a man who went to prison twice, and 18 years later earned a presidential pardon and became a police officer? I did that.

Is it a man who married a wonderful woman and raised five great children — no drugs, no jail, no problems? I did that.

I'll always be an ex-con, but I don't have to be a failure. — SUCCESSFUL

FROM OKLAHOMA: At the age of 18, I was convicted of murder (armed robbery) and spent 15 years in prison. I learned a trade in prison and now I'm one of the best electricians anywhere. People do hire felons. But they don't hire quitters. Today I own my own business and I made $125,000 last year. — A FELON BUT NOT A FAILURE

DEAR READERS: Tomorrow, more success stories from ex-felons who are far from failures.

Physical ailments changed history

By R.H. Growald
Copley News Service

So says Dr. Paul Wolf.

Wolf is professor of pathology at the University of California at San Diego School of Medicine. He is autopsy director at the Veterans Administration Medical Center. He helps the living by determining what ailed the dead.

Wolf is writing a paper on "the interaction of illness and the course of world history."

"It has been established that various diseases had a profound effect on political and military leaders and the productivity and decline of various cultures," he says.

Take the American Colonies' fight for independence from Britain. The Colonies at first did not seek to break away from mother England. But London so stubbornly refused Colonial requests to ease tax and trade laws that revolt ensued. Much thanks, says Wolf, to Britain's King George III.

"He died in a madhouse," says Wolf.

But George was active on the throne in the 1770s when, says the professor, "he was afflicted by the congenital metabolic illness called acute intermittent porphyria."

He suffered belly pains, manic overactivity, skin rash, red urine, paralysis, delirium and psychosis, says Wolf. George, now championed by Prince Charles, was unfit to make the decisions he had to make about the North American Colonies.

William Pitt the Elder rose in Parliament to campaign to have George tone down his anti-American policies. But, says Wolf, gout soon floored Pitt.

CNS Graphic

The pain and kidney damage due to gout robbed Britain of Pitt's advice when it was needed. Wolf says upper-class Englishmen of the time drank too much port and this helped bring on gout.

Also, he says, the port wine of those days — because of the vats in which it was stored — contained 10 times more lead than port today. Drinkers of today's moonshine should beware, Wolf says.

In America today, he says, lead poisoning gout "is most often related to the habitual consumption of moonshine alcohol with a large lead content." The worst, he says, is moonshine produced in such vats as discarded lead batteries.

Napoleon I lost his final battle, 1815's Waterloo, says Wolf, because rain and his "severe hemorrhoidal pain" delayed his assault at Waterloo on the smaller forces of Britain's Duke Wellington.

The delay allowed Prussia's army under Field Marshal Gebhard Bluecher to reinforce Wellington. Napoleon was a medical mess, the professor says.

Napoleon's autopsy showed urinary bladder infection and stones, stomach cancer, a pituitary insufficiency that may have resulted in his short stature and signs of arsenic. Someone had been trying to poison the emperor.

Further, the professor says, France's hero was "a manic-depressive and very narcissistic."

He calls Napoleon "a notable example of a psychopathic leader." He says Napoleon "was driven to conquer and to abuse his power."

Napoleon was not alone among destiny's darlings, says Wolf. Other psychopathic leaders, he says, include Julius Caesar, Alexander the Great and Adolf Hitler.

President Kennedy, says Wolf, suffered from Addison's disease. The adrenal glands control salt and water functions; the ailment slowed down and weakened Kennedy, the professor says.

Kennedy's World War II combat injuries "may have initiated his Addison's disease.

"Kennedy always had the deeply tanned skin which is characteristic of Addison's," Wolf says.

According to Wolf, illness also touched history in these ways:

President Abraham Lincoln was, in his lifetime, called by foes "The Ape." Wolf says Lincoln had a genetic disease, the Marfan syndrome. Marfan victims tend to be unusually tall and thin with unusually long extremities. "The face is long and narrow."

President Franklin D. Roosevelt suffered from polio. But it was his arteriosclerosis, hardening of arteries, and high blood pressure that are blamed by some for what they regard as his weakness with the Soviet dictator Josef Stalin at the 1945 Yalta Conference, Wolf says. Winston Churchill's physician, at the conference, correctly predicted FDR had but a short time to live.

President Woodrow Wilson failed to get the U.S. Senate to approve American participation in the League of Nations at the end of World War I. Wolf says Wilson might have been successful had he not fallen victim to arteriosclerosis and high blood pressure. A stroke left Wilson crippled.

Syphilis deranged and helped kill such as Russia's Ivan the Terrible, France's Charles VIII, England's Henry VIII and Lord Randolph Churchill, a would-be prime minister and Winston's father.

Malaria was, the professor says, the prime reason for the decline and fall of the ancient Greek empire.

Sir Henry Clinton, assigned by London to crush the American Revolution, largely failed because malaria and typhus decimated his troops.

Legionnaires' disease cases linked to hospital's showers

N.Y. Times News Service

Researchers studying a spate of Legionnaires' disease cases in a South Dakota hospital have identified showers as the vehicle for transmitting the bacteria that cause the disease.

They have also linked the abundance of the bacteria in the shower heads with the presence of certain amoebas in the water supply.

The study, conducted by Robert F. Breiman and colleagues at the Federal Centers for Disease Control and the South Dakota State Department of Public Health, was published in the current issue of The Journal of the American Medical Association.

Legionnaires' disease is a form of pnuemonia that is caused by strains of the Legionella bacteria, which are frequently found in water in small amounts without a known disease association.

Research suggests that the disease follows the inhalation of heavily contaminated water droplets.

Scientists have suspected that the bacteria could be transmitted through shower use, but most outbreaks have been traced to the air-conditioning systems in large public buildings.

The disease is named after an outbreak that caused the death of 29 members of the American Legion who were attending a convention in a Philadelphia hotel in 1976.

In the South Dakota hospital, which was not identified, 26 cases of Legionnaires' disease developed from 1985 to 1988. Ten patients died.

Showering was the only exposure risk identified in all cases, but most patients had underlying health risks that made them more suseptible, like smoking, steroid use or chronic lung disease.

The scientists isolated Legionella pneumophila bacteria from shower heads in the patients' rooms. The hospital eventually eradicated the bacteria by heating the water supply and treating it with chlorine.

The researchers found a striking association between the presence of amoebas of the Hartmannella and Vahlkampfia species and large amounts of Legionella bacteria in the hospital's water supply.

John Spika, an epidemiologist who contributed to the study, said it would be an overreaction for patients to be wary of showering.

Rather, he said, researchers need to identify other risk factors and explain the new-found link between amoebas and the Legionella bacteria.

"Just having Legionella in the water supply is not the important thing," he said. "Evidence suggests that it may be necessary to have a combination of Legionella and certain species of amoebae that allow the bacteria to multiply."

White Sox upset

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago White Sox general manager Larry Himes said Sunday the club is continuing an investigation that could lead them to file tampering charges against the New York Yankees.

It was reported last week that prior to this month's draft, the Yankees talked to pitcher Alex Fernandez, who became Chicago's No. 1 selection. The New York Daily News said the Yankees spoke to Fernandez, a junior from Miami-Dade South, in an attempt to convince him to hold out for a guaranteed roster spot with the White Sox if Chicago drafted him.

"(The Yankees) knew we were interested in (Fernandez)," Himes said. "If that's what occurred, then it would be an attempt to manipulate him, and that would be tampering.

"At this point, we're still gathering information," Himes said. "If we find sufficient information to substantiate this, then we will file tampering charges against the New York Yankees."

Earlier this season, the California Angels filed a grievance against the Yankees, claiming they interfered in negotiations in the Dave Winfield deal.

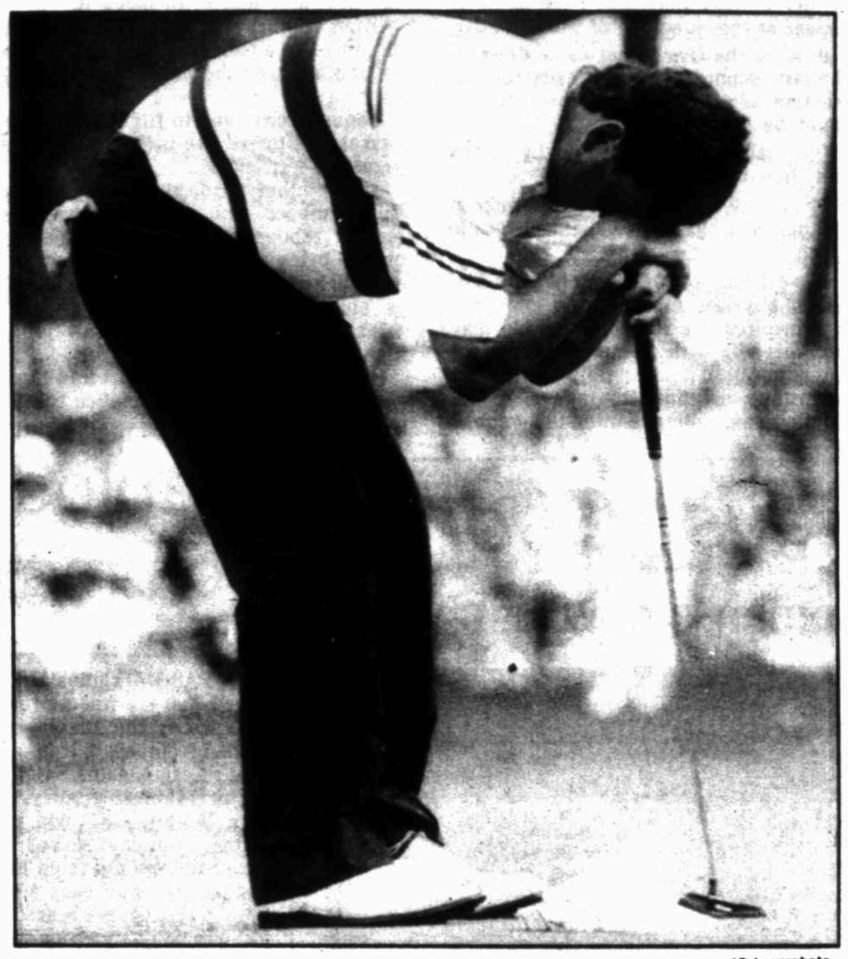
High-fivin' Hale forces playoff



AP Laserphoto

No one was more disappointed Sunday than Billy Ray Brown, who missed a birdie putt on 18 and a chance to force a three-way tie.

■ Irwin's monstrous putt on 18 forces extra day of golf with co-leader Mike Donald at 90th U.S. Open; former leader Billy Ray Brown sits down after .

Associated Press

About 24 hours premature.

The 45-year-old Irwin thought his long-distance, last-hole birdie putt — perhaps 50 feet — was the winner in the 90th U.S. Open Golf Championship.

But the long putt, which finished a round of 67 Sunday and sent Irwin on a joyous romp around the 18th green, simply set up a long wait.

He had underestimated the grit of one of golf's also-rans, Mike Donald, who had nine holes to play when Irwin ran — not trotted, ran — around the green slapping high-fives with startled spectators and blowing kisses.

Donald, winner of a single title in an 11-year PGA Tour career, carried the burden of the lead in one of golf's great championships through a string of 13 consecutive pars. He made a bogey from a bunker and then toted a tie into the clubhouse with a gutsy closing round of 71.

Two hours after Irwin had celebrated a third U.S. Open victory, Donald matched his 8-under-par 280 total and set up Monday's 18-hole playoff.

On the surface, it would appear to be no contest.

In one corner is Irwin, undeniably one of the great players of his generation and a potential Hall of Famer, winner of 17 tour titles and the U.S. Open in 1974 and '79.

The methodical, articulate Irwin long has been noted by his peers as one of golf's great grinders, a man able to extract the most from a difficult situation.

On the other side is Donald, a scrambler and a struggler, a man who delivered flowers and umpired baseball games for a living after he lost his golf scholarship at Georgia Southern.

His credentials are modest.

He went through nine seasons on the tour before achieving his first victory in 1989. And, due to lack of performance, he was in danger of losing his playing rights on the tour in 1988 before he birdied eight of 10 holes in the last round of the last tournament of the season.

But both Irwin and Donald know strange things happen in playoffs.

Example: In 1955, an obscure golfing vagabond named Jack Fleck scored a three-stroke U.S. Open playoff victory over the greatest player of the era, Ben Hogan.

"I'm going to have the chance of a lifetime and I'm going to go out there and take it," Donald said. "Today there were 27 guys within a few shots. Tomorrow I've got a 50-50 chance."

Irwin was considerably more subdued.

"The difficult part for me will be bringing back the adrenalin surge. My scores have been up and down this week. I haven't had the same consistency Mike had," he said.

The playoff, scheduled for 12:15 p.m.

Bogey leads to GTCC win

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

Wayne Youngs said it was his partner's bogey putt on the sixth hole that shifted the momentum and led them down the avenue to the top prize at Green Tree Country Club's Jamboree golf tournament Sunday.

Youngs and teammate John Bettis, a pair of Midlanders that entered the final round trailing Dub and Ron Huckabee by three strokes, forged a team total 141 Sunday and won the Championship Flight with 269 strokes, four better than the second place Huckabees who teamed for a 148 over the last round.

"John made a really big putt on the sixth hole for bogey after he'd gotten into some trouble, and we just sailed after that," said Youngs, whose four-under-par 67 led the way.

"We played real good as a team," Youngs added. "When you count both balls like we did today, you can get in trouble pretty quick. But we played smart and got ourselves in good shape early."

Bettis contributed a 74 in the duo's come-from-behind win over the West and East Courses at GTCC.

"In this format you can make up four or five shots, but we thought maybe even par would be good enough to win," said Bettis. "We shot one under because Wayne just played great golf, and that was plenty good enough."

Youngs and Bettis shot 65 Friday and were tied for first place with the Special Olympics under fire

■ Wilmer-Hutchins head basketball coach used up to six players ineligible under guidelines, newspaper reports.

Associated Press

DALLAS — Special Olympics teams at Wilmer-Hutchins, which won state basketball championships last month in both boys' and girls' competition, apparently contained several ineligible players, a newspaper reported Sunday.

The Dallas Morning News said its review of school records indicated that four members of the boys' squad and two members of the girls' squad may not have taken enough special education classes to participate in the competition.

Special Olympics games are open to mentally retarded people and those identified as handicapped because they have significant learning or vocational problems.

Leon Burrell, whose students have won championships for the past six years, told the newspaper he has known some of the students since they were in the fifth grade and assumed they were still in special education classes.

A moose and Noah's Ark, only in the minors

Midland baseball fans have long been exposed to a myriad of unique promotions. The lifeblood of minor league ball, it's almost as if general managers of lower level clubs have a league among themselves to see who can come up with the strangest promotion, or the one that brings in the most fans.

Patterson

There's Juice the Moose at Angels Stadium. I have no earthly idea what the big lug has to do with baseball or angels or West Texas, but he works. Don't know how, but he keeps the fans coming.

Ask yourself this question: How badly would you like to chase Juice around the basepaths for a chance at even just a small cash prize? I don't think it's the money people care about, they just want the chance to prove they can beat Juice.

It must be Juice. The Angels as a team don't have what it takes to draw the kind of fan numbers they've received this season. Their ace pitcher is on a pace to win a less-than-remarkable 10 games this year, and the parent club just yanked the team's two best hitters — Ruben Amaro and Steve DeAngelis — up to Edmonton.

Regardless, the Angels are doing something right, and are en route to a record attendance mark — again. So it must be the promotions. Why else would 3,000 people regularly come to see a team that is blown away more often than not?

People-watching may also have something to do with it. Angels Stadium could easily replace the mall or the airport as a great place just to watch people. And if I were a bettin' kinda guy, I'd place a hefty wager that more pick-up lines are tossed around at Angels Stadium than at any bar on any night.

Monty Hoppel, the Angels' first-year general manager is succeeding where some thought he might not. Bill Davidson, who left the team prior to the start of the 1990 season, was a great promotional thinker, not to mention a media favorite. He was a tough one to replace. But Hoppel knows what he's doing just as well, and he proves it every time the Angels have a home game.

But back to the strangest promotion ... The winner, hands down, would have to be Davidson, now the GM at Chattanooga, Tenn. The Lookouts are one of Richard Holsman's teams, same Chicago businessman who owns the Midland Angels. The Lookouts have had it rough this year, having suffered through numerous — almost countless — rainouts.

At one point, about a month ago, Chattanooga and its fans suffered through a week's worth of game's cancelled by foul weather and heavy rains. Davidson, who for some odd reason is struggling for media support in Tennessee, had to come up with a promotion to bring the fans back to the park following the rain and the negative publicity dished out by the press.

So Davidson came up with what he called Noah's Ark night. At Noah's Ark Night, anyone who brought in a stuffed animal — to be donated to charity — was admitted free. It worked. Fans returned, and I'd guess Davidson might've even made some of the cynical media types grin because of the cleverness of the promotion.

Is the NBA season too long? No, it's too short

By IRA BERKOW
N.Y. Times News Service

The recently concluded National Basketball Association season was too long.

They all are. It's ridiculous. You think it'll go on forever.

I miss it already.

Miss all that ball-thumping and sneaker-scraping and whistle-skirling?

Upon self-examination, I determined that I should have my head examined.

Or hit it against a wall, whichever came first. I mentioned this situation to a friend of mine, one Highpockets Holt.

"You're wrong," said Highpockets Holt. "The season isn't too long."

"It's not?"

"No," he said. "It's too short."

A vision sprang into mind: Highpockets Holt and I lying on twin couches, a doctor in a white jacket is seated between us, and strokes a long black beard, and periodically mumbles to himself: "Long? Hmmm." Then, "Short? Hmmm."

"Highpockets," I said, "the season starts at the begining of November and ends, as it just did, in the middle of June. That's seven and a half months. That's not long for a basketball season?"

"There's the problem," said H.H. "The season starts only at the end of April, and goes to the middle of June. That's about a month and a half. That's long for a basketball season?"

Suddenly, it all came clear.

High was sizzling again.

The season is too short!

The NBA plays nearly six months to get to the playoffs, and the playoffs pick up the rest of the term.

"The regular season, which is what they like to call those 82 games before the playoffs, is nothing more than an exhibition season," said High.

"They eliminate a bunch of teams that didn't have much of a chance to begin with, and then 16 teams are left to really play serious basketball."

Most people in the game concede that the playoffs are different from the regular season, not only in that teams play each other in a series, and so can make tactical adjustments after each game, but also because the players seem to play harder, the coaches coach more zealously and the referees call the game closer or looser, depending on the style of play they are observing.

The whole regular season is geared to an eye peeled to playoffs.

Before this past regular season, Larry Bird was asked how his heels, which had been operated on, were coming along. "I'll be ready for the playoffs," he said.

All this surely helps to make Highpockets' point about what constitutes a basketball season.

And the basketball in the playoffs is often of a most dramatic and satisfying, even esthetic, quality.

This year's finals, in which Detroit beat Portland, 4 games to 1, matched the caliber of play that fans have come to expect at this juncture of the calendar.

Four of the five games came down to the last seconds of play — even the last fraction of a second — before a victor could be determined.

One game was decided in overtime, and then by 1 point.

Physically, the game of basketball at its apex is as close to a ballet as exists in sports.

It is difficult to convey on paper a particular physical move seen on television that inspires one to spontaneously leap from his sofa with a yelp of amazement and admiration (and possibly causing the downstairs neighbor to take a broom handle to his ceiling to quell the commotion overhead).

But the "Swan Lake" of moves in the playoffs may have been that fast-break drive by Isiah Thomas in the second half of the fifth game.

As he did, a lone Portland defender came racing at an angle to cut him down.

The defender was about 6 feet 7 inches.

Then Thomas sort of hesitated in midair, and, like a polite motorist at an intersection, allowed the defender to simply soar on by.

At the other physical extreme stands Bill Laimbeer, who is 6-11 and was the leading rebounder in the finals despite others' being even taller, and almost everyone, including the foot-shorter Thomas, able to outjump him.

"It's not that Laimbeer doesn't jump high; he doesn't jump.

He is all canniness and heart and hips, with a soupcon of happy malice tossed in.

Butch van Breda Kolff, who played in the NBA in its very first year of its existence — he was a member of the Knicks in 1946 — and who coached in the NBA finals twice and now is the basketball coach at Hofstra, said that in the NBA finals, "all the chaff has been eliminated, and it's talent versus talent."

"The team that wins is usually the more intelligent team," he added. "That's what it comes down to."

"It was a matter," Buck Williams, the Portland forward, said afterward, "of mental toughness."

This was Portland's first in 13 years.

The Pistons were poised enough not to panic under pressure.

In Game 5 they were down by 7 points with just over two minutes to play; they were perceptive enough to keep pumping the ball to the player with the hottest hand at the moment, and brilliant enough to have a more talented bench.

Now it is over. But as Highpockets Holt, or someone else, said, the lease on the real basketball season hath all too short a date.

A thundering herd? No, just George

Former heavyweight champ George Foreman is now just heavy

By THOMAS STINSON
Cox News Service

LAS VEGAS — To the umitigated joy of the American food industry, George Foreman had lunch Wednesday.

He even invited a few people to join him. George Foreman used to weigh 315 pounds. With men like this, lunches become economic variables for farmers and ranchers and short-order cooks everywhere. Foreman doesn't really say what he weighs now, but make no mistake that dining remains a raison d'etre.

"I'll tell you, I have not concentrated on being skinny," he said, a pair of sunglasses perched upon that bald head. "My goal when I left Houston in 1965 was to come back and become fat because I was so poor, I tell everybody we had to leave out one 'o' and the 'r.' We was po'. And I said then if I ever got the money, I was going to come back and eat all the hamburgers I wanted.

"In 1977, I had money, and I went back to Houston to do nothing but buy hamburgers. When you saw me, you saw an investment. You wanted to see where my money went? I can show you. I put it in my mouth."

It is a curious comment on boxing today that 30 reporters clustered around Foreman in a suite of a fancy hotel Wednesday, wanting so much to hear these tales of gluttony. And Foreman, 41 years old, a veteran of 68 professional fights and currently somewhere around 250 pounds, comprehends what people want to know. Boxing may not have cried out two years ago for George Foreman to unretire. But now that he is here, throwing this buffet and waxing philosophic, he realizes better than anyone the opportunities this new life present him.

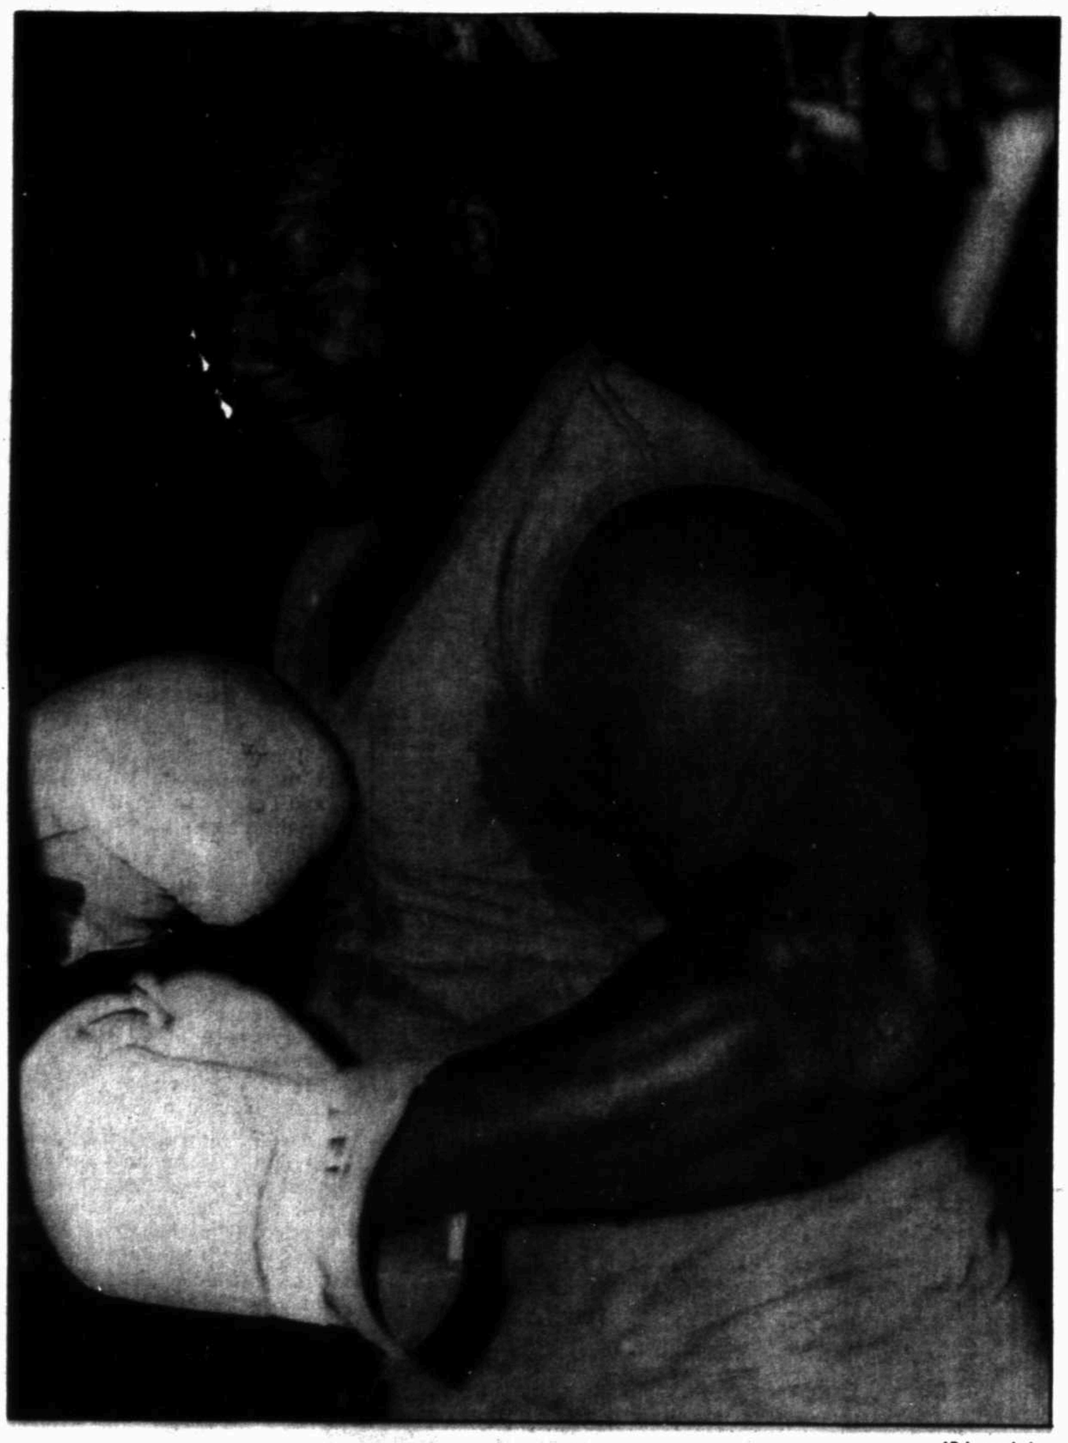
"Say what you want about me," he said. "I'm old, I'm fat. I'm bald. But one thing you've got to say for me: Here I is!"

Saturday night, Formean scored a first-round knockout of Brazilian Adilson Rodrigues (36-4), a durable fighter who had won his last 20 fights except for last July 15, when Evander Holyfield knocked him out in the second round at Lake Tahoe. Since resuming his career, Foreman has won 21 of his 22 fights by knockout.

And do not underestimate that Saturday was a big night for him. For a man whose comeback was so long ignored, he is finally appearing on a Mike Tyson undercard. (Tyson knocked out Henry Tillman, first-round as well.) Foreman is not properly positioned yet for a championship shot, rated ninth by the World Boxing Council, the only organization to rank him. But exploiting the prickly legal mess Buster Douglas created for himself, Foreman is undeniably here. And there are many insiders who feel a Tyson-Foreman fight has become the game's new hot commodity.

So he sits at lunch and talks about anything suggested. And maybe like never before, the people listen.

"I took my first punch in the '40s," he said. "I learned how to punch in the '50s. I even won a gold medal in the '60s. I won the world heavyweight championship in the '70s. I made you sports writers scratch your heads in the '80s. And I'm telling you, I'm the fighter of the '90s. Believe me."



AP Laserphoto

That's the hardest part, the believing. Foreman has fought a group of awfully strange names during this comeback. He said the hardest he has been punched in this campaign was by Gerry Cooney, who had not been known for hitting anybody anywhere in recent history. Foreman insists he picked this line of soup cans himself because only by little steps could he come back.

"They were saying I only fought guys who were on a respirator. That's a lie," he said. "They had to be eight days off the respirator."

If his plan contained genius, it was because it played to his last remaining strength: The anvil inside his right hand. Only four of his comeback fights have gone beyond five rounds, Foreman always able to knock out the critter du jour before stamina became a problem. But if he was to take his act back to the big stage, he had to confront the biggest issue: His stomach.

"Someone said if George wants to come back as the prodigal son, he better stop looking like the fatted calf," he said. "I said I didn't know they knew so much about Sunday School. Then I looked in the mirror and, boy, they were only saying that because it's true."

From the 315 pounds when he came out of retirement, he has dropped as low as 229 pounds before he fought Dwight Muhammad Qawi in March 1988. But Foreman complained "something went wrong with gravity. My legs kept going up. So I had breakfast and got that right."

Ever since, he trains without a scales, weighing himself only before fights. If it was a changed man who returned to boxing after 10 years of evangilistic work, he is changing still during this second time around. The brawler who lost to Muhammad Ali that night in Zaire 16 years ago doesn't live here anymore. Listening at lunch was to hear a very happy man.

"I volunteered for this," Foreman said. "I didn't come back just because this was the only thing I could do. The first time, the guy I was trying to imitate most was Sonny Liston. You just sit back and stare people down. The guys who were teaching me were telling me how rough it was. People are always trying to get you so you start to think like that.

"The next time around, the world belongs to me. I can see out of my eyes and I like it. Really."

After Rodrigues, Foreman wants to fight again in a month. He says he could get a shot at Tyson by September. He is also unconvinced Evander Holyfield and Buster Douglas will fight in September because, "You gotta understand. I've been in boxing so many years and I've seen and heard so many things rise up and never take place. It's nothing until it happens."

But most of all, Foreman wants a championship. Although he says his challenge was greater when Tyson was still undefeated, he covets the title he held for those fine 647 days between January 1973, and October 1974. He doesn't joke when he talks about the championship either, at least until someone asked what a 41-year-old boxer feels like.

"Hey, Archie Moore told me I'm just a growing boy," Foreman said before slipping his shades down over his eyes and walking out the door alone. He was well down the hall before anyone realized at his own little luncheon, he hadn't eaten a thing.

Diablos top Angels, command TL race

Staff Report

EL PASO — Chuck McGrath allowed just six hits and went the distance as the Diablos beat the Midland Angels 2-1 in a crucial Texas League game Sunday night.

The Diablos' victory, coupled with Wichita's 6-5 win over San Antonio Sunday, served to eliminate San Antonio from the Texas League first half race and put El Paso in the driver's seat. One Diablos' win or one loss by Wichita in the two games remaining in the league's first half would make the 38-28 Diablos the first half champs.

El Paso took a 1-0 lead off Midland starter Kyle Abbott (1-5) in the second inning when Shon Ashley doubled and moved to third on a Bert Heffernan infield single that bounded off Abbott's glove, then scored on Rafel Skeete's sacrifice fly.

The Angels tied the game at 1-1 in the top of the fourth when John Skurla led off the inning with a triple and scored on a ground ball by Mike Knapp.

But the Diablos made Abbott the loser in the bottom of the fourth as Craig Cooper singled and moved to third on a sacrifice bunt and a bunt single. He scored on Skeet's second RBI, this one a ground out.

McGrath became 2-0 with the win, surviving Wiley Lee's two-out double in the ninth by getting Reed Peters to ground out to short stop for the final out.

Midland, which has now split the first four games of the El Paso series, will remain there for the two-game duration of the league's first half of play. Carl Hamilton, 3-3, will take the mound for Midland tonight, while Steve Monson, 5-8, gets the call for El Paso.

Johnson leads M's by Rangers

McGwire, Jose lead Athletics by Chisox in Father's Day action

Associated Press

His 65-year-old father, Bud Johnson, a former sheriff's deputy in Duluth, Minn., who now lives near Sacramento, Calif., threw out the ceremonial first pitch. It bounced in the dirt.

But that's about all that went wrong for the Johnson family Sunday. Johnson won his fourth straight start, a 6-3 decision over Texas.

"It's gratifying to pitch and get a win on Father's Day," Johnson said. "My dad's had a big impact on my life. I remember he used to rush home and go to my games in his police uniform when I was pitching in Little League in Minnesota. You don't forget things like that."

The big hit for Johnson was Darnell Coles' first home run since April 17.

The Mariners, just 15-20 at the Kingdome, won consecutive home games for the first time since May 5-6. Seattle defeated Nolan Ryan and the Rangers 5-0 Saturday night.

Johnson (7-3) survived a shaky first inning when he allowed one run on three hits, a walk and a stolen base. He gave up two runs on eight hits, walked five and struck out seven in eight innings. Johnson began his winning streak June 2 with a no-hitter against Detroit.

"I don't want to talk about that," Johnson said of his winning streak. "The bottom line is I am superstitious. I'm wearing the same spikes, the same shirt and I'm sitting in the same seat on the bench."

Seattle's Jeff Leonard is forced out at second by Texas' Jeff Huson in the fourth inning of Saturday's Ranger game with the Mariners. Texas lost Saturday, as well as Sunday.

Athletics 5, White Sox 2

Mark McGwire hit his 17th homer and Felix Jose singled home the go-ahead run as the Oakland Athletics scored twice in the eighth inning and beat the Chicago White Sox.

Jamie Quirk added a two-run double in the ninth as Oakland won three of four at Comiskey Park. The Athletics opened a four-game lead over the White Sox in the American League West, and the teams play three times next weekend in Oakland.

McGwire hit a solo home run with one out off Donn Pall (0-2) that made it 2-2. Terry Steinbach followed with a single and Doug Jennings met reliever Barry Jones with a single.

Scott Radinsky took over and Jose, batting for Steve Howard, hit a single to left that scored pinch runner Lance Blakenship. Quirk doubled off Radinsky for insurance.

Mike Moore (5-6) pitched seven innings and gave up six hits. Dennis Eckersley went 1 1-3 innings for his 22nd save.

Blue Jays 8, Yankees 1

Todd Stottlemyre pitched a seven-hitter and Fred McGriff hit a three-run homer to help Toronto complete its most successful road trip ever as the Blue Jays beat the punchless New York Yankees.

The Blue Jays, who have won six straight, took nine of 10 on the trip by winning three of four from Milwaukee and sweeping three-game series from Minnesota and the Yankees. Toronto's previous beat trip was 7-3 on two occasions.

Meanwhile, the last-place Yankees have lost 12 of 15 and have the worst record in the major leagues at 21-39.

Stottlemyre (7-6) made his first career start at Yankee Stadium, where his father, Mel, pitched for 10 seasons. He lost a bid for his first major-league shutout in 48 career starts when Matt Nokes homered with two outs in the ninth inning.

Red Sox 6, Orioles 5

Carlos Quintana hit a three-run homer and Jody Reed drove in three runs as the Boston Red Sox beat Baltimore, the Orioles' fifth straight loss.

Boston has won three straight games and 11 of 15. Baltimore is 3-6 on a homestand that ends Monday night against Roger Clemens and the Red Sox.

Angels 7, Tigers 3

Twins 4, Royals 1

Indians 12, Brewers 4

Cory Snyder hit two of Cleveland's five home runs, including the last of three in a row in the seventh inning, and Bud Black got his first win over Milwaukee in six years as the Indians beat the Brewers to complete a three-game sweep.

Michel's hat trick leads Spain to win

Associated Press

World Cup

UDINE, Italy — Midfielder Michel's virtuoso performance gave him the first hat trick of the World Cup, lifting Spain past South Korea 3-1 Sunday night.

He scored the winner in the 62nd minute with a curling free kick from outside the penalty area into the corner of the net, then capped his sensational night in the 81st minute with a close-range shot after beating two defenders.

The victory made Spain 1-0-1 in the tournament. Its other game was a scoreless tie with Uruguay. South Korea also has lost to Belgium.

Belgium 3, Uruguay 1

Captain Jan Ceulemans finished off an impressive night of offensive ingenuity with a goal while his team was down one man on Sunday, helping Belgium to a 3-1 victory over Uruguay and into the second round of the World Cup.

Defender Eric Gerets was sent off just before halftime with two yellow cards. But Ceulemans stunned Uruguay with a 20-yard drive in the first minute of the second half, adding to earlier goals by Lei Clijsters and Enzo Scifo.

Scifo had his second strong game in a row to put Belgium among the top contenders for the championship. The Belgians have four points in Group E — they also beat South Korea 2-0.

Ireland 0, Egypt 0

Johnson rides par to LPGA win

SOMERS POINT, N.J. (AP) — Chris Johnson ended a three-year LPGA victory drought by shooting a par round of 70 Sunday to capture the Atlantic City Classic by two strokes over Pamela Wright of Scotland.

The victory was the fifth for Johnson, and it came in a tournament in which no one was able to take command on the final day. There were only seven sub-par rounds Sunday, none from the leaders.

Johnson, 32, took the lead for good with a 5-foot birdie putt on the 165-yard second hole at the Sands Country Club and never surrendered it, winning with a 5-under-par 275 total and earning $45,000.

Wright, the LPGA rookie of the year who zoomed into contention with a season-best 64 Saturday, had the best chance. She was tied with Johnson at four under after nine holes.

However, the par-4, 370-yard 11th hole proved the turning point. Johnson hit her second shot 2 feet from the pin and birdied to go five under.

Dent manages Senior victory

Dent finished the 54-hole tournament at the Lafayette Country Club at 17-under-par-199, one stroke ahead of Archer, who came up inches short on a 15-foot birdie putt on the final hole that would have forced a playoff.

Archer shot a final round 65 and finished at 200. He matched Dent birdie-for-birdie over the final nine holes, but it wasn't enough to overcome the two-stroke advantage Dent began the day with or Dent's clutch putting.

Dent overcame a double bogey on the fifth hole that resulted from an errant drive. Then on the 17th green, Dent hit his drive off the fairway and his approach shot past the green onto an adjacent fairway.

Italian police happy with Saturday's violence control

N.Y. Times News Service

CAGLIARI, Italy — The day after, relieved Italian and British officials concluded it could have been a lot worse.

They had come away in fairly good shape from what many feared would be the worst night of violence in the 1990 World Cup soccer finals.

There was trouble enough Saturday night when some 1,000 English fans — clearly spoiling for a fight, the authorities said Sunday — battled with Italian police a few hours before the kickoff in Cagliari between England and the Netherlands.

Witnesses said the English youths had started the brawl, storming a police cordon set up to keep them away from a group of Dutch supporters.

They hurled stones, bottles and pieces of wood, and the police lost little time in charging back with raised clubs, rounds of tear gas and warning shots in the air.

More than 500 of the English were rounded up, but nearly all were later released and even allowed, if they had tickets, to attend the match, which ended in a 0-0 tie.

After the dust settled Sunday, the police held only five hooligans, including one in the hospital with a broken leg, all charged with vandalism and resisting arrest.

Officials said they had received advance word there could be trouble at the point where it occurred, and in a statement issued before leaving Cagliari for London, Colin B. Moynihan, Britain's sports minister, denounced the violence as an "orchestrated incident."

The episode topped the front pages in the Italian press, with a local newspaper, La Nuova Sardegna, carrying a banner headline that said, "Cagliari: Violence Won."

Given the reputations of the English and the Dutch for soccer violence, everyone had braced for much worse, especially for post-match brawls between the more than 14,000 fans from both countries who were on hand.

Sunday, Via Roma, the main boulevard Cagliari, a port city on Sardinia's southern tip, was peaceful even though young Englishmen started flocking to the bars at the stroke of 8 a.m., when a daylong ban on alcohol sales was lifted.

By noon, some were already bobbing and weaving along the sun-sprayed street.

In part, relative peace prevailed because the Dutch contingent was immediately whisked out of Sant'Elia Stadium after the game while the English had to keep their seats.

Giants streak reaches eight

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Matt Williams took the National League lead in RBIs as the San Francisco Giants established their longest winning streak in eight years with a victory Sunday over the Atlanta Braves.

William's run-scoring single cracked a 7-7 tie in the eighth inning, and the Giants rolled to thier eighth consecutive victory and 15th in 16 June games. The Giants last won 10 in a row in August of 1982.

"I'm in a pretty good groove," Williams conceded after extending his hitting streak to a career-high 14 games with a pair of doubles and a single. He has 20 RBIs in the 14 games for a league-leading 55.

"I'm getting good pitches to hit, and I'm taking adavantage when I do," said Williams, who is batting .317. "When the team is on a hot streak, and when you're on a hot streak, those hits fall in."

The Giants couldn't be much hotter. They are averaging 7.7 runs per game this month. It's the best San Francisco surge since the 1965 club went 17-1 with 14-game winning streak in September.

San Francisco swept the three-game series and is now 8-2 against Atlanta, outscoring the Braves 91-35. The Braves made five errors, accounting for two unearned runs.

Reds 7, Astros 1

Eric Davis hit two of four homers, bringing Cincinnati's total to nine in two games, and drove in four runs as Jose Rijo pitched the Reds to their fifth straight victory, over the Houston Astros.

Both benches emptied, but no punches were thrown, after Houston reliever Xavier Hernandez hit Todd Benzinger with a pitch following the second Davis homer, in the seventh inning. It scored Barry Larkin, the second of three batters hit by Hernandez.

Paul O'Neill and Glenn Braggs, who was hit in the sixth, also homered for the Reds. Davis and Braggs, with the first homer of his National League career, also connected in a 6-2 victory Saturday night.

Rijo (5-2) allowed four hits, struck out 10 and walked three in eight innings, raising his lifetime record against the Astros to 7-1.

Cincinnati swept the three-game series while breaking out of a season-long homer slump. The Reds entered the series with just 40 home runs — the third-lowest total in the league at the time.

Davis hit a two-run homer in the first off Mark Portugal (1-7). It was Davis' sixth homer overall and his fifth since May 29.

NL Roundup

Mets 4, Pirates 3

Mark Carreon had two solo homers among three hits and scored three runs, and Dwight Gooden beat Pittsburgh for the first time in two years to lead the surging New York Mets over the Pirates.

Gooden (5-5), winless against the Pirates since June 22, 1988, survived Sid Bream's three hits as the Mets won twice in the three-game series. The Mets have won five of seven from the first-place Pirates the last two weekends and eight of their last 10 overall.

Carreon, who has six homers and 11 RBIs in 16 starts, homered leading off the game against Neal Heaton (9-2). Heaton, losing for the second time in his last 16 decisions dating to last July 28, gave up three runs and six hits in six innings while failing to become the National League's first 10-game winner.

The Pirates got the run back in the second when Barry Bonds scored on Gooden's two-out wild pitch, but Carreon made it 2-1 in the fifth with his seventh homer. Carreon, who finished 3-for-4, hadn't homered before Sunday in 30 career at-bats against Pittsburgh.

The Mets added a run in the sixth on singles by Howard Johnson and Mike Marshall and Kevin Elster's sacrifice fly. Bonds doubled and scored on Bream's fourth consecutive hit over two games, a one-out double, in the bottom of the inning.

Cardinals 7, Expos 1

Jose DeLeon gave up two hits in 7 1-3 innings and Terry Pendleton hit a disputed homer and drove in two runs as the St. Louis Cardinals defeated the Montreal Expos in 97-degree weather.

DeLeon (6-5) struck out seven and walked six, ending a brief slump as the Cardinals won for the second straight time to end a 2-5 homestand. In his previous four starts, DeLeon was 1-3 and had allowed 15 earned runs in 17 1-3 innings.

This time, DeLeon gave up only a first-inning homer to Spike Owen and a single to Nelson Santovenia in the fifth.

In his last start, DeLeon lasted only three innings before leaving with a strained right hamstring. But he showed no ill-effects, striking out Andres Galarraga, Jerry Goff and Santovenia twice each.

Pendleton, whose second-inning homer off Zane Smith (3-5) led to the ejection of Expos manager Buck Rodgers, also had an RBI double in the fourth. Vince Coleman added a two-run double in the fourth for the Cardinals, who also got two hits and two RBIs from Pedro Guerrero.

Dodgers 6, Padres 3

Kirk Gibson had a three-run homer and Mike Sharperson a two-run single as the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the slumping San Diego Padres behind the pitching of Mike Morgan.

Morgan (7-5) worked into the ninth inning, allowing eight hits, including a two-run homer by Bip Roberts in the third and a solo shot by Fred Lynn in the sixth. Jay Howell came on after hits by Lynn and Mike Pagliarulo to start the ninth, and got his second save to send the Padres to their fifth loss in six games.

The Dodgers had lost five in a row prior to their victory Saturday night. No Los Angeles starter other than Ramon Martinez had won a game since Morgan, who retired 18 of the last 20 Padres he faced, blanked St. Louis 5-0 May 26.

Dennis Rasmussen, who lasted only one inning because of stiffness in his shoulder and was sent back to San Diego for an MRI exam, fell behind 3-0 before getting an out. After a walk to Lenny Harris and Stan Javier's single, Gibson drove a 1-0 pitch into the right field pavilion for his third homer since coming off the disabled list June 1 and his first at Dodger Stadium.

Cubs 5, Phillies 3

Jeff Pico settled down after yielding three runs and four hits in the first inning and the Chicago Cubs snapped a six-game losing streak by defeating the Philadelphia Phillies.

Philadelphia starter Ken Howell left for a pinch-hitter after giving up three runs and eight hits in seven innings. Jeff Parrett (2-6) retired the first two Chicago batters in the eighth, but Domingo Ramos singled, took second on a wild pitch and scored the go-ahead run when Joe Girardi grounded a single up the middle.

OPEN: Irwin, Donald aware anything possible in playoff

From 1C

CDT, was very nearly a foursome. Both Nick Faldo, the Englishman who won the last two Masters, and Open rookie Billy Ray Brown, came to the final hole with a chance to tie.

Each needed a birdie to do it. And each had the opportunity.

Faldo was at eight under par and had a playoff berth in hand until he three-putted the 16th.

He put his approach on No. 18 within 12 feet of the flag and his putt to tie looked good. In fact, it hit the back of the cup only to roll away and leave him with a 69 and 281 total.

But it missed on the low side and he bent over his putter in anguish, one stroke too high after a par round of 72.

He got in with a 69 and was tied for fifth at 284 with Tim Simpson and Mark Brooks. Brooks and Simpson each had a closing 73.

Nicklaus, at 50 seeking a record fifth U.S. Open crown, struggled to a fat 40 over the back, shot 76 and, at 289, failed to finish high enough to ensure an exemption from qualifying next year.

Strange, in search of a third consecutive Open title to match Willie Anderson's 85-year-old record, was two shots off the pace going into the final round, but played the front in 38 and wasn't a factor again.

"I think there's another U.S. Open in me," he said. "At least I have my name on it twice."

So does Irwin.

There seemed little likelihood he'd get a chance for a third. He's a year older than the oldest previous winner, Ray Floyd, who was 44 when he did it in 1986.

With a golf course construction business taking up his time, Irwin now is a part-time player. He hasn't won in five years.

He hit a 6-iron to about 6 feet and made the putt. His birdie putt on the 12th wasn't that long. A 5-iron approach left him with a 4-footer. That one, too, found the cup. And a 4-iron came to rest 2 feet from the pin on the 13th.

OLYMPICS: State games board starts investigation

From 1C

per: "(Mr. Burrell) told me he wanted me to play (on the Special Olympics team), and I went on and played."

His mother, when asked if her teen-ager was mentally retarded or handicapped, replied, "Oh no, no, no! He's just slow on some subjects."

Wilmer-Hutchins superintendent Charles Matthews at first denied attending a meeting at which the students' eligibility was questioned. Later, he acknowledged being at the meeting, but told the newspaper he was not paying attention.

Last month, as the Wilmer-Hutchins teams prepared to leave for the Summer Games at San Marcos, Celeste Madrigal, the school's special education director, wrote a memorandum to high school principal Clyde Stokes complaining that despite several conversations "seven ineligible students from your school and two from the junior high went to San Marcos."

She wrote, "The use of ineligible students in Special Olympics has been a history with Mr. Leon Burrell and his assistants."

The newspaper said its review found that one of the high school students cited in the memo was eligible; the others were not.

Stokes, who was not at the meeting where eligibility was discussed, said he did not recall getting the memo.

"I haven't seen it. If I had seen it with this many names on it, I would have said something about it," Stokes told the Morning News after a reporter showed him a copy of the memo.

Matthews said if ineligible players were allowed to compete, the team should be stripped of its championship.

The Texas Special Olympics organization also is investigating to determine whether any use of ineligible players was intentional, the newspaper reported. If so, Burrell could be banned from coaching Special Olympics teams. He was named Special Olympics Coach of the Year last year.

Students who participate in Special Olympics are selected shortly after the beginning of the school year by the school diagnostician, who then sends a list of eligible students to Ms. Madrigal, who forwards the list to the coach to submit to Special Olympics officials.

The list sent last fall to Burrell contained 25 names. The list he sent to Special Olympics had 33 names.

Futures slip

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices fell due to oversupply, as well as the approach of a contract expiration, analysts said.

The contract for July delivery of West Texas Intermediate fell 51 cents to $16.62 a 42-gallon barrel on the New York Mercentile Exchange. Later contract months posted smaller losses. The price of the July contract had fallen 45 cents Thursday.

"I think that the problem with the crude market is the high level of crude stocks," said William Byers, an analyst at Bear, Stearns & Co., who said the price decline also was connected to next Wednesday's deadline for trading the July contract.

"Nobody wants it, since they're basically awash in crude oil," he said.

Prices for natural gas were mixed, with the July contract unchanged from $1.547 per 1,000 cubic feet. The August and September contracts were down while October and November were up.

Record high

NEW YORK — The stock market weathered the uncertainties of its "triple witching hour," a weak bond market and disparate economic reports as the Dow Jones industrial average closed with a last-minute gain of 7.67 points to set a record high in strong volume.

The average closed at 2,935.89, up 73.51 points for the week and just ahead of its record close of 2,935.19 on June 4.

The market traded down most of the day until shortly before 3 p.m., when it moved to the plus side, slipped down again and finished in a burst of buying.

"The market's action was difficult to analyze," said Gene Seagle, director of technical research at Gruntal & Co.

Lost ground

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar lost ground in domestic dealings and finished mixed in Europe in volatile trading Friday following the release of a flurry of U.S. economic data.

Dollar rates in Europe: 1.6915 West German marks; 1.4340 Swiss francs; 5.6910 French francs; 1.9065 Dutch guilders; 1,241.00 Italian lire; and 1.1698 Canadian dollars.

Silver prices were unchanged to higher. On New York's Comex, silver for current delivery settled at $4.811 a troy ounce.

Trump misses bond payment

'Junk bonds' for Donald Trump's Trump Castle fell sharply Friday on news he missed a payment, but the woes didn't spill over into other bonds.

By Anise C. Wallace
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — "Junk bonds" of casinos owned by Donald J. Trump fell sharply on the news of a missed interest payment to holders of two junk bond issues by Trump's Castle.

But the decline Friday did not spill over into the rest of the market for low-rated bonds, where traders called the action quiet.

But in the afternoon bids improved and the bonds closed at about $56, down about $40 for every $100 face amount.

Bids on a smaller Trump's Castle issue, the 7 percent senior subordinated bonds due in 1999, dropped by about three points, to $51.50.

Quotes of Trump bonds were volatile all day, said David Feinman, a junk bond trader at Jefferies & Co. in Beverly Hills, Calif. But there was not a great deal of volume in the two securities issued by Trump's Castle.

Prices of other casino issues were also weak, although traders said there was no panic selling by portfolio managers.

The bonds issued by the Trump Taj Mahal were quoted down about two and a half points, to $51.50. And bonds of Caesars World were also down slightly, to $103.25.

Some traders said that when prices of the Trump's Castle bonds rebounded in the afternoon, investors appeared to be betting that the real estate executive would be able to borrow the cash to make the payment on the two issues within the 30-day grace period.

But others cautioned that liquidity in these issues was so thin that any bid, no matter how large or small, could move prices sharply up or down.

The markdown in the Trump issues was not more severe, traders said, because word of Trump's difficulties became widely known over the last few weeks.

Trading in issues of the RJR Holdings Corp. was strong, as investors bet that Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co., the buyout firm that took RJR Nabisco private in 1989, will use the $1.7 billion it raised from its limited partners to restructure the company's debts.

Prices of RJR's senior converting debentures due in 2009 jumped $1.75 points, to $92.50, and the exchange debentures due in 2007 climbed $1.625, to $77.75.

Car production lifts industrial production

After being flat in April, U.S. industrial production rebounded 0.6 percent, thanks to accelerated automobile production, as factory utilization also rose.

By John D. McClain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Industrial production rebounded 0.6 percent in May from a flat performance a month earlier because of accelerated automobile production, the Federal Reserve said today.

"A rebound from last month's sharp decline in motor vehicle production accounted for much of the May increase in industrial production," the central bank's report said. "Excluding motor vehicles and parts, industrial production increased 0.2 percent in May and 0.4 percent in April."

The Fed also reported the operating rate of the nation's factories, mines and utilities — which usually move in tandem with industrial production — rose 0.3 percentage point to 83.6 percent in May. The operating rate measures not only output but also changes in productivity levels.

Industrial production has risen each month since January except for April when it was unchanged. The flat April figure was revised from a 0.4 percent decline first reported last month.

Output was up 0.9 percent in February and 0.5 percent in March. It dropped 1.0 percent during the first month of 1990.

"The increase in production of motor vehicles and related parts in May boosted significantly the indexes for durable consumer goods, business equipment and durable goods materials," the Fed said. "Excluding autos and trucks, production of consumer goods was about unchanged in May and has been flat, on balance, since last fall."

Idea pipeline carrying ideas for cleaner fuels

By Jordana Bieze
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — Imagine working in a huge concrete tunnel suspended above the Bering Strait as thousands of gallons of Soviet oil course beneath you en route to the United States.

On the tunnel's top surface, Soviet and American citizens cross the international dateline aboard trains that hover just above their tracks through the magic of superconducting magnetic fields.

It's all part of T.Y. Lin's vision of glasnost, in the form of a 4,000-mile superpipeline that would send Siberian fossil fuels across the dateline and back to the future, ending up in Prince George, British Columbia.

Lin's San Francisco-based engineering firm, which needs $3 million for a feasibility study, is one of many groups seeking international leaders who are here this week for a symposium on energy technology.

The eighth Responsive Energy Technologies Symposium and International Exhibition begins today with the first-ever meeting between U.S. Secretary of Energy James Watkins and L.S. Davidov, the Soviet minister of power and electrification.

The two will join other international leaders in discussing global solutions to energy and environmental problems, including the introduction of new technology in developing nations.

Josef Simuth, the newly elected deputy chairman of the Czechoslovak Federal Assembly, will be present, and energy directors from Mexico, Australia, Canada and Japan have also been invited.

Though Lin's pipeline proposal may occupy one of the more imaginative booths in the Convention Center's Exhibit Hall C, the primary focus of the symposium is on alternatives to gasoline as fuels for transportation.

Energy commissioners from five states will meet Saturday with Rep. Al Swift, a member of the House Subcommittee on Energy and Power, to discuss alternative fuels as they pertain to the proposed Clean Air Bill.

The current draft of the bill, which has not yet been approved by the House of Representatives, calls for 1 million alternative-fuel cars to be on the road by 1998.

In the meantime, representatives from automobile and utility companies will do their best to sell the commissioners on the alternative fuel that they feel is most efficient.

"For a while, we weren't sure if we should develop the cars first and then find the fuel to power them, or build cars to run on the fuels we already have. It was like the chicken and the egg, which should come first?" said Patrick Morrisey, spokesman for General Motors.

"Now we understand we have to develop the fuels and the cars at the same time," Morrisey said.

The natural gas — primarily methane — is stored at 3,000 pounds per square inch in 4-foot tanks whose size restricts their effectiveness to use in buses and other larger vehicles, said San Diego Gas & Electric Co. spokesman Howard Levin.

Each tank contains about nine therms, where one therm is the energy equivalent of a gallon of gasoline and costs about 70 cents, Levin said.

Converting a car to run on natural gas costs about $2,300, though mass production will likely lower that figure, he said.

But because natural-gas filling stations are not easy to come by, even converted cars reserve the right to revert to gasoline power. The same is true of automobiles being tested with methanol, ethanol, propane and reformulated gasoline.

Workstation seminar set for Wednesday

By Paul H. Pause'

Pause'

ComLogic Corp. (CLC), Midland, is sponsoring a Sun Microsystems seminar this Wednesday, June 20, at the Midland Hilton. The program runs from 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

"Participants can come and go to attend the specific sessions that are of interest to them," according to J. David Ross, CLC president. There is no charge for the seminar, which is open to the public.

The scheduled talks represent a diverse cross-section of high-powered workstation applications. Winston Hey of Sierra Geophysics will kick off the program at 8:15 a.m. with a discussion of seismic interpretation applications. He will touch on 2D and 3D modeling, processing and interpretation capabilities, and log analysis. His presentation will be repeated at 3 p.m.

Also of interest to the oil and gas technical community will be "Automated Analysis of Well Cuttings," by Dr. Kathleen Hennessey of Texas Tech University, at 10 a.m. The paper is co-authored by two well-known Tech geologists, Dr. George Asquith and Dr. Lon Jacka. They document the ability to provide measures of porosity, permeability, capillary pressure, and formation factor through automated image analyses.

This technique could provide important supplementary formation evaluation data, especially in non-cored sections. Thin sections are viewed through a petrographic microscope attached to a video monitor, and digitized. The digitized image area is loaded into the workstation program, and the operator can then select the portion to be analyzed.

Mathematical relationships and thin section derived measurements (length of interconnected porosity across the thin section, etc.) are used to determine the unknown parameters — cementation exponent, formation factor, etc.

For example, capillary pressure curves can be constructed by using the percentages of different pore sizes determined by image processing histograms of pore size versus cumulative percent porosity.

At 9:15 a.m. and 4 p.m., Dave Ross will discuss integrating workstations and DOS-based PCs, and will explore the differences between the two systems. Sun's SPARCstation 1 will be featured. This should be especially interesting to anyone who feels they are outgrowing their PC-based system, but aren't sure they're ready to make a full-blown workstation commitment. Start with one or two workstation units and integrate them slowly into your existing system. Mr. Ross will also present "Local Area Networks and 3270 Interconnect" at 1 p.m. This will involve a description of networked workstations and PCs in a graphical environment.

Finally, two separate discussions of using AutoCad will round out the day. At 11 a.m., Larry Lamprich with AutoDesk Inc., will preview the enhancements and features of the latest version, Release 11. He will also touch upon the advantages of networking with workstations. At 2 p.m., Harvey Hansen, Director of Engineering for the City of Midland, will discuss the use of AutoCad and Sun workstations for developing a base map for the City.

This is an ambitious project and the results are amazing. Digitizing city streets allows instant access to any area of interest, complete with engineering features — lighting, drainage, gas lines, water mains, etc. The displays are truly impressive. It's worth coming just to see some of this stuff.

Ongoing demonstrations of the various applications in action will be held throughout the day.

This promises to be an informative session for anyone interested in the

Iran will up oil production

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran's oil minister said Sunday that his country's oil production capacity will rise more than 25 percent to 4.5 million barrels a day in two years.

The announcement in Tehran said Iran is spending hundreds of millions of dollars to repair damage to the industry from the 1980-88 Iran-Iraq war. Iran's oil industry produces 90 percent of its foreign currency revenues.

The minister, Gholamreza Aqazadeh, exressed that Iran would adhere to the production quota of 3.14 million barrels a day set by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, even though its capacity was larger than that.

Aqazadeh told a news conference that Iran's output capacity in March was 3.8 million barrels a day. He said then that Iran would be able to pump 3.7 million barrels a day by the end of July, up to 4 million barrels a day next year and 4.5 million barrels in 1992.

His comments were reported by Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency and monitored in Cyprus.

Industry analysts say that much of Iran's infrastructure is aging and estimate that modernization to increase its output could cost as much as $8 billion.

Iran and Iraq have criticized other OPEC members for violating production quotas and driving down prices — a practice that costs their flagging economies millions of dollars a day.

Worldwide prices have fallen below OPEC's benchmark price of $18 per barrel, and analysts have blamed the drop on oversupply. On Friday, the price for West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude oil, fell 51 cents to $16.62.

The cartel's 13 member states agreed in May to cut their collective output by 1.445 million barrels a day to restore the benchmark price. They set the overall production ceiling at 22.086 million barrels a day.

Aqazadeh said Iran will rebuild jetties and reservoirs on southern Kharg island that were devastated by Iraqi air raids. He said a petrochemical complex on the Persian Gulf coast will produce 1 million tons of liquefied petroleum gas "in the coming months."

Aqazadeh also said Iran will drill 100 wells in the Caspian Sea, which it shares with the Soviet Union. The oil reserves there were "completely independent" of the Soviet fields, he said.

NYSE planning after-hours trading

By Floyd Norris
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — For the first time in its nearly 200-year history, The New York Stock Exchange will begin trading afgter its normal hours this year and hopes to start trading during the night in 1991, exchange officials have told brokerage firms.

In another sharp break from tradition, some of the trading may bypass the stock exchange's specialists, the floor traders through whom all trades now are routed.

The plans, which were disclosed by people who have been briefed by exchange officials, are an attempt to regain trading volume in Big Board-listed stocks both from foreign markets, particularly London and Tokyo, as the world moved toward global, round-the-clock trading.

Sometime in 1991, the plans call for the exchange to conduct auctions of each Big Board stock at 8 p.m., midnight and 5 a.m.

Each stock would trade only once, with all trades combined at whatever price could be agreed upon.

This year, at a date not yet chosen, the plans call for two after-hours sessions, with differing rules than during daytime trading. The exchangehopes those sessions will attract computerized program trades now made in London.

It is estimated that about 15 million to 20 million shares of NYSE stocks are traded each day outside of Big Board hours, many of them overseas.

Asked about the plans, Richard Torrenzano, a senior vice president of the NYSE said discussions about expanded trading had been going on for two years.

"If our customers want such a system, we will meet their demand in a very innovative way in a short period of time," he said. But he declined to comment on the specific plans.

The proposals must be approved by the Securities and Exchange Commission, but its clearance seems likely. Wall Street executives said the SEC had urged the Big Board to find a way to trade during the night.

The stock exchange, the nation's opikdest, traces its history to May 17, 1792, when 24 brokers met under a buttonwood tree on Wall Street — just down the street from his current home at the corner of Broad Street — and agreed to organize a market.

Ever since, all trades have been conducted on the floor of the exchange, although electronic systems have increasingly been used to deliver the orders.

That would continue for the Big Board's normal trading day, which now lasts from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m.

But the after-hours trading, and the overnight auctions, would be conducted electronically and the floor would be deserted, according to the persons who heard the Big Board briefing.

In a sense, however, the overnight sessions would return to a system of trading that dominated the stock exchange for most of its first century, known as a call auction.

Until 1871, each stock was called in turn by officials, and all trading in that stock was then conducted before the exchange turned to another stock.

Thus each stock would trade only once or, in later years, twice a day.

Under the proposal, brokers in their offices would be able to enter orders for Big Board stocks during the evening New York time, but as the day was beginning in Tokyo.

They would be able to see what other orders had been placed, a plan known in Wall Street jargon as "open book," and could change their orders if they wished.

At 8 p.m., the exchange would pair off as many orders as possible at just one price and that transaction would be reported.

Although there there be only one trade in each stock, it could include millions of shares and hundreds of buyers and sellers.

Since the normal New York trading day overlaps with the London day, traders in both Japan and Europe would be able to trade stocks in New York at least twice during their own trading days.

By limiting the trading to the three auctions, the hope is that the trading demand would be concentrated at specific times, creating the liquidity needed to allow institutions to trade the securities.

Also, it would avoid straining the resources of brokerage firms, many of which are are reluctant to provide staffing for all-night trading.

Since the trading would be done electronically, large brokerage firms could arrange to have the work done by traders already on duty overseas.

Although globalization has been a buzzword in the financial world for several years, efforts for 24-hour stock trading have not progressed far.

While stocks of many large companies are listed on exchanges around the world, only a handful trade in significant volume away from their home market.

Efforts to sell a large block of, for instance, General Motors shares in Tokyo, when the New York market is closed, can arouse fears that the seller knows bad news is about to come out about GM.

Why else would the seller not wait a few hours for New York to open? In that atmosphere, it is hard to sell a large block overseas except at a large discount, and volume in American stocks tends to be concentrated in New York.

It is unclear whether the Big Board's proposed system could overcome those fears, but by concentrating orders and making the book open to other traders, it might be able to do so, and it could take away business from exchanges overseas.

While all Big Board stocks would be eligible to trade overnight, the probability is that most of the action would take place in the shares of major companies. Although the primary goal of late-night trading is to attract foreign business, American institutions and individuals could also participate.

The National Association of Securities Dealers has announced plans to begin trading Big Board issues during the early morning here, when London's market is open, and commodity exchanges are developing an electronic trading system that would operate through the night, seeking business from both London and Tokyo.

The changes scheduled for introduction before the end of the year would be less dramatic but could help the exchange regain some volume that has migrated to Instinet and other electronic trading services, as well as to London.

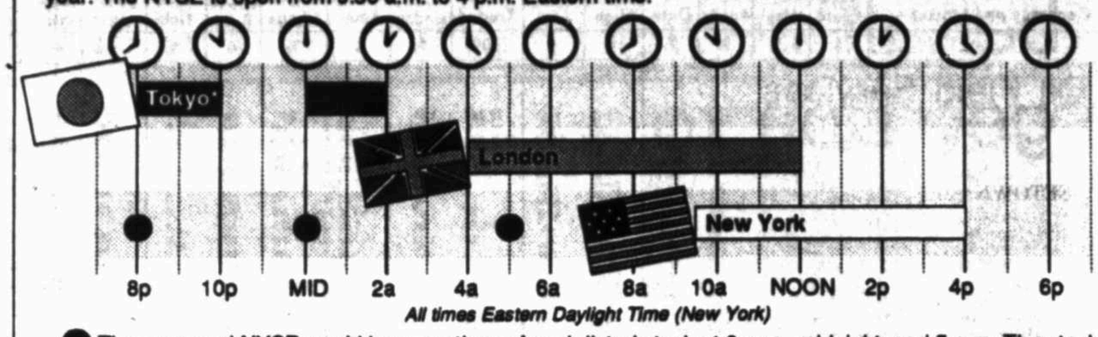
Stock around the clock

The New York Stock Exchange has a proposal to begin trading stocks outside its normal hours later this year. The NYSE is open from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Eastern time.



All times Eastern Daylight Time (New York)

● The proposed NYSE would have auctions of each listed stock at 8 p.m., midnight, and 5 a.m. The stocks would trade once at each auction, with trades combined at one agreed-upon price for each issue traded.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

What's the real and total story on GNMAs?

By Bill Doyle

Q. I have three GNMAs, two for $25,000 and one for $30,000. Two pay 10 percent interest; the other pays 9.5 percent interest. I receive three checks per month, one from each GNMA. Besides interest, each check contains a small amount of principal.

It seems to me that GNMAs beat certificates of deposit and money market mutual funds, but I can't recall you writing about GNMAs. You frequently write about CDs and money funds.

Is there something about GNMAs you do not like?

A. Not at all, providing you and other investors who own them have good understandings of them. GMNAs have been mentioned in this space, albeit not as frequently as CDs and money funds. The basic reason is that far more readers send in questions about the latter two.

Doyle

It's clear you own Government National Mortgage Association "modified pass-through securities" — GNMA by acronym and Ginnie Mae by nickname.

Each of those securities represents a share of ownership in a pool of mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration or guaranteed by the Veterans Administration and/or the Farmers Home Administration. As homeowners make mortgage payments, your share is passed on to you in those monthly checks. Hence the term "pass-through" securities.

As you are aware — but some other investors are not — each monthly check from a GNMA represents both interest and principal. That's because you are receiving your share of mortgage payments. Early payments are mostly from interest; later payments mostly from principal. Eventually, the mortgages will be paid off and the monthly checks will stop coming.

At that point, your investment will have been returned to you and your GNMA security will be worth zero. Letters to this column show that many people do not understand this. Instead, they think of GNMAs as bonds that pay interest and leave their principal intact. Not so!

Q. I would like your opinion on investing in GNMA securities. Is there any risk involved?

A. There's none, if you buy a newly issued GNMA and hold it until all the mortgages in the pool behind it are paid off. You will then have received the face amount of the GNMA — the money you invested.

Timely payment of interest and principal on GNMA is guaranteed by the full faith and credit of our federal government. So you get paid even if homeowners default on payments of mortgages in the pool.

However, this does not remove what is known as "market risk" — fluctuation of securities' values in the marketplace. If you sell a GNMA before all the mortgages are paid off, you might get more or less than the unpaid balance on your share of the market pool. You'll get more, if interest rates have dropped; less if interest rates have risen.

Q. What is the minimum amount in which GNMAs can be purchased?

A. It's $25,000 for newly issued GNMAs. But previously issued GNMAs can be purchased at prices close to the remaining balance of the mortgages they represent.

Shares of mutual funds and unit investment trusts holding GNMAs as investments can be purchased in smaller amounts. Collateralized mortgage obligations, also called mortgage collateralized bonds, backed by GNMAs and other pass-through securities are available in $1,000 minimum amounts.

Q. What is the brokerage commission on GNMAs?

A. There's seldom a separate commission because brokerage firms usually handle GNMAs as "dealers." That means they sell to you securities they have purchased or had in inventory. A markup, which can vary from 1 percent to 8.5 percent, is included in your purchase price.

Doyle welcomes written questions, but he can provide answers only through the column.

FUEL: Getting cleaner

(From 6C)

The car, which costs about 8 cents a day to operate, goes from 0 to 60 miles per hour in eight seconds, Morrisey said.

The down side is its 900-pound, $1,500 battery that must be replaced every 20,000 miles. The company is aiming for a model that can go 40,000 to 50,000 miles before needing a new battery, Morrisey said.

"Racing cars run on 100 percent methanol, but we can't market a car like that because methanol doesn't burn with a flame," Morrisey said. "You can't see it burning, and you can't smell it, which makes it very dangerous."

Methanol also eats through rubber, he said, so fuel lines in methanol-run cars must be converted to stainless steel at a cost of about $2,000 per car.

CARS: Increase production

(From 6C)

The Fed said its industrial production index in May stood at 109.7 percent of its 1987 base, up from 109.0 in April.

In its capacity utilization report, the Fed said the operating rate at factories producing durable goods rose 0.8 percentage point to 82.0 percent, while the rate at plants making non-durable goods inched downward 0.1 percentage point to 84.3 percent.

Liberian newspaper urges Doe to resign

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone (AP) — Sierra Leone's ruling party Sunday suggested that Liberian President Samuel K. Doe quit and leave neighboring Liberia to end the nation's 5½-month-old civil war.

The Liberian government and rebels fighting for its overthrow agreed to a cease-fire Saturday in peace talks in Sierra Leone. But Doe has steadfastly refused to resign, the rebel's key demand.

The United States, in the past a supporter of Doe's rule, has also urged him to step down and leave the country.

More than 1,000 people have died in the civil war. Doe's troops largely have been unable to stop the rebels' advance but did drive them from the country's international airport 10 days ago.

The Liberian government and the rebels called for the cease-fire pending further negotiations. Saturday was the fifth day of peace talks in the U.S. Embassy in Freetown.

'When all is said and done, the solution rests with one man, and the challenge is that of statesmanship.'

— Editorial in We Yone

Conference sources, including U.S. diplomats, have said little progress has been made at resolving the key rebel demand that Doe resign and leave Liberia.

Romanian protesters brave violence

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Anti-communist demonstrators Sunday returned to a main square where police and miners loyal to President Ion Iliescu beat people to put down protests last week.

"Down with Iliescu!" "Iliescu should be put on trial!" about 100 protesters yelled.

The small group of demonstrators thinned out by midnight after Interior Minister Doru Viorel Ursu offered to open a dialogue with the protesters. Ursu was appointed Thursday after his predecessor was forced to step down partly because of the brutal way in which police broke up the previous demonstration in the square.

"We are waiting for dialogue with you, and we are ready to meet you wherever you want," said the Interior Ministry communique published by the state Rompres news agency. "We are convinced we can live in harmony."

The demonstrators earlier Sunday issued a list of demands, including the release of all those arrested during the past week in connection with the protest and subsequent rioting and the publication of a list of people still hospitalized as a result of the violence.

About 200 hundred anti-government demonstrators invade the University Square in Bucharest, Romania, Sunday afternoon, to protest the current National Salvation Front government, led by President Ion Iliescu.

The government says 1,021 people were arrested in last week's protests. There were no reports that miners were among those arrested.

The government, having lost badly needed aid from the United States and Western Europe because of the recent repression, promised to uphold democratic principles in a statement published Sunday.

Opposition leaders say the government of Iliescu, whose National Salvation Front won last month's free elections by a landslide, is dominated by ex-communists from the regime of deposed dictator Nicolae Ceausescu.

Iliescu is to be inaugurated later this week.

In Timisoara, about 3,000 people gathered Sunday on a central square for a service to remember 94 people killed in the western city in December. The uprising grew into the bloody revolution that overthrew Ceausescu.

Scores of demonstrators appeared in Bucharest Sunday evening at University Square, the site of a 53-day protest demanding that Iliescu and other ex-communists be banned from office.

Riot police broke up the demonstration Wednesday, the start of three days of unrest in which six people died and 502 were injured.

Iliescu called on thousands of coal miners to maintain order, and they swarmed Bucharest on Thursday and Friday. Swinging iron bars and cudgels, they attacked anyone they suspected as anti-government.

Two Israeli military men named to panel despite massacre links

JERUSALEM (AP) — The right-wing Cabinet Sunday gave former generals Ariel Sharon and Rafael Eitan their biggest say in military policy since both were reprimanded for actions in two massacres during the 1982 Lebanon invasion.

At its first meeting, the Cabinet named Sharon, a former defense minister, and Eitan, chief of staff during the Lebanon invasion, to the 11-man Ministerial Defense Committee.

The committee is a forum for debating defense policies and also includes one representative of each of Likud's government coalition allies.

Sharon and Eitan were blamed by an Israeli inquiry for not anticipating that Israel's Lebanese Christian militia allies would massacre hundreds of Palestinians if they were allowed to enter Beirut's Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps in 1982.

Sharon, a leader of the conservative Likud bloc, also was named chairman of a Cabinet committee overseeing the immigration of thousands of Soviet Jews to Israel. Sharon is an advocate of Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

His appointment has raised fears that he would try to move Soviet Jews to the occupied areas, worsening already tense ties with the United States. U.S. policy considers the Jewish settlements obstacles to peace.

Israeli officials insisted Sunday that the new Cabinet would work for peace with Palestinians and for a smoother relationship with the United States.

"This government is interested in the peace process no less than the preceding government," said Police Minister Roni Milo, a Likud member and confidant of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

Milo said he expected talks soon between U.S. and Israeli officials to advance the peace process.

He also warned, however, that the new government would not accept "previous processes that were not brought up nicely" — a reference to Secretary of States James A. Baker III's efforts to organize an Israeli-Palestinian dialogue in Cairo, Egypt.

Baker urged including at least one Palestinian deported by Israel as a way to satisfy Palestine Liberation Organization demands that Palestinians living outside the occupied lands be included. He also proposed to include some Arabs who have homes both in the annexed east Jerusalem and in the occupied areas.

Israel argued such moves would allow the PLO to control the Palestinian delegation and raise the issue of Jerusalem, which Israel has declared its "eternal capital."

The new defense committee named by the Cabinet will be headed by Shamir, 74, a former agent of the Mossad secret service. The committee also includes Defense Minister Moshe Arens and Foreign Minister David Levy.

Sharon, 62, a hero in the 1967 and 1973 Middle East wars, was the architect of the Lebanon invasion. He was forced to resign as defense minister after the Sabra and Chatilla massacre in west Beirut.

Israeli-allied Lebanese Christian militiamen, who were bitter over the murder of their leader, went into the two refugee camps the day after Israel's army seized control of west Beirut. They killed more than 800 Palestinians, many of them women and children.

An Israeli inquiry found that Sharon "disregarded the danger of acts of vengeance" in allowing the Christian fighters into the camps. It found that Eitan failed to investigate reports of a massacre and did not act to stop it.

Sharon has repeatedly said he wants the defense minister's post back, but he has been kept in lesser Cabinet jobs.

WORLD IN BRIEF

More than 100 people killed in China floods

BEIJING (AP) — More than 100 people died in floods caused by torrential rains in China's southern province of Hunan, an official newspaper said Sunday.

A separate report said three people also were killed in neighboring Jiangxi province.

The flooding in Hunan knocked down about 16,000 homes, killed 2,905 farm animals and damaged 30,000 water conservancy projects, the People's Daily reported. It said more than 740,000 acres of farmland were inundated.

The newspaper said 39 Hunan cities and counties recorded more than 4 inches of rain in storms that hit the province between last Monday and Friday. Heavy rains also hit Hunan earlier this month.

5 killed in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Four black policemen and a black youth were killed in unrest incidents, police reported Sunday.

Authorities said the youth was fatally shot Saturday when police fired on a group of blacks stoning a police vehicle near Stilfontein, about 100 miles southwest of Johannesburg.

For the first time since the 1976 riots, the government permitted anti-apartheid demonstrations on "Soweto Day" without major police intervention.

Two policemen were fatally shot in Soweto, a third was killed in Katlehong township, southeast of Johannesburg.

Manuscripts recovered

TURIN, Italy (AP) — Police on Saturday found a trove of stolen medieval documents hidden in cars and houses. Two men were reported arrested.

Police became suspicious after seeing two men exchange boxes near a main square. Patrols in the area had been stepped up to keep order during the World Cup soccer tournament.

12 killed in Colombian drug capital; Suspect captured

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Gunmen have killed 12 more people in the violence-wracked drug capital of Medellin, and police said Sunday they have captured another suspected drug trafficker wanted in the United States.

The 10-month-old war between the government and traffickers heated up again last week when police shot and killed the man they described as the mastermind of the drug lords' campaign of terror, and a car bomb killed four people.

The communique said Sheuter, 49, is wanted in Pittsburgh on charges of conspiring to distribute cocaine. He is one of 15 Colombians currently awaiting extradition to the United States.

Bill Dempsey, a spokesman for the U.S. Marshal service in Washington, said the person arrested apparently is the same one listed on a Dec. 14, 1987, cocaine possession and distribution warrant from Pittsburgh in a state case.

There was no immediate confirmation of the arrest or details from other U.S. officials. Sheuter is not on the official U.S. list of the 12 Colombian drug suspects most wanted for extradition.

Four more police and two soldiers were shot and killed by terrorists in Medellin Saturday.
