

TEACH CONSERVATION IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

MOVEMENT WILL DIE IN GENERATION IF NOT INCULCATED IN YOUNG.

BEYOND TURNING POINT

We Have Barely Awakened to Fact We Are Wasting Our Heritage.

By Associated Press.
Jacksonville, Fla., April 21.—Soundings of a note of warning at the policy of forest destruction, "which we have been following for so many years" and we find ourselves in the same condition as "these nations of Asia who like ourselves, though for a longer time because a longer time has been given them, have constantly neglected the great resources of forest with which nature has endowed them."

Don Carlos Ellis chief of the division of education, U. S. Forest Service, speaking before the Conference for Education here today, called attention to the present situation which came year after year from Asia telling of horror and distress in the stricken districts which were plaintively appealing to the world for help. These conditions, he declared, were caused by the deforestation of the slopes with the logical consequence of floods in the lowlands resulting in the fertile soil in the valleys being washed away.

Mr. Ellis pleaded for the use, but not the abuse of the forests, and strongly urged the teaching of conservation in the schools. "You may print conservation in the press, preach it from the pulpit, disclaim it from the rostrum, but unless you teach it in the schools, it will die with the generation that gave it birth."

The problem of teaching practical conservation in the schools has already been worked out, and, he said, more than half the normal schools of the country today are teaching forest study in some form. "My purpose is solely to urge you to consider whether the introduction of this subject in your schools is not worth while and whether by its introduction you may not contribute something toward the development of the rich resources and industries of the region, toward making this development a true and permanent one, and toward retaining the best of the country as a more prosperous, happier, and a better home."

After declaring that we are using the forests three times as rapidly as they are growing, he continued: "And yet I find no fault with the use of food. Wood has been given to us to use. It is in the enormous, needless waste going on all the time that the fault lies. From the time that the log leaves the stump in the woods until it is put to its final use by man, only one-third actually used, and then every year an average of $50,000,000 worth is destroyed by fire. Last year this loss was even heavier."

As a reason why the forests demanded special attention, he said, it is of all our resources, "the one which is in imminent danger of exhaustion." The forests of a country are always the resources to become scarce first for it is the resource which is easiest to reach. It is immediately at hand awaiting, inviting, exploitation. In a new country it is at first in the way of agriculture and has to be fought back with ax and fire, until the people acquire the habit of destroying it.

"Then comes a turning point," he said, "beyond which such methods are wasteful. We have passed far, far beyond that turning point, and we have barely awakened to the fact that we are wasting our heritage, that we are ruthlessly squandering one of the greatest assets of our national wealth. The Southern states, including Texas, and the border states of Maryland, West Virginia, and Kentucky, produce almost as much lumber as all the other states, three-fourths as much veneer as the rest, nearly twenty times as much co-operative stock, and all of the naval stores."

The forests of the Appalachian region, which are mostly upon land not suited for agriculture, now furnish he said, about 50 per cent of our entire hardwood supply, but with the opening up of new regions and the introduction of scientific methods of forest management which should follow, should permanently supply at least 75 per cent for the future.

Mr. Ellis declared no wood-using industry had done more toward its own extermination and the destruction of its source of supply than the industry of producing naval stores. After citing how the old methods of collecting the resin had added in destroying the southern pine forests, he explained a method of placing a cup on the tree to catch the resin. Trees thus treated produce 30 per cent more resin and better resin, he said; are not so easily wind thrown, or so susceptible to fire, and finally when the trees are bled to death are fit for the making of good lumber. The introduction of this new method, he said, "has been the salvation of the pine stores industry and of the beautiful pine forests which have long been the pride of Dixie land."

Vital as are the benefits of protecting the forests in the East and West from the ravages of fire and other needless waste, "they will follow," continued Mr. Ellis, "only as incidental to the primary purpose for which these forests in the Appalachians are to be created, which is the protection of the navigable streams."

Water for power and navigation, he said, is rapidly becoming more important to us. With our wonderfully increasing commerce, the decrease in fuel supply and the marvelous strides being made in electricity, water is rapidly becoming the greatest source of power.

Mills, he said, have been installed on streams, and many of them have been compelled to install coal engines or even to shut down because the streams have been so irregular, because of a flood or low water. These conditions can be traced largely he said, to the deforestation of the slopes at the heads of the rivers.

"Do we love the children of our generation?" asked Mr. Ellis in concluding. "Then remember that they will love them and so to the end of time, and let that love be something more than mere sentiment. Let it result in a wise frugality and an abatement of the greed and vandalism which has already gone so far toward despoiling our fair land. Take upon your own shoulders some of the responsibility of conserving what is left. The work is primarily one for the educator, and the educator should begin in the school."

GOMEZ DOES NOT EXPECT ARMISTICE

By Associated Press.
Washington, April 21.—Dr. Gomez believes confusion in the interpretation of the armistice proposal was responsible yesterday for General Madero's refusal to consider an armistice which would prevent bringing up of reinforcements to north Mexico to relieve Juarez from the expected insurrection.

Gomez in his telegram pointed out that the armistice included the maintenance of the status quo—which meant that neither side would move men or arms and this would prevent bringing up of reinforcements to north Mexico to relieve Juarez from the expected insurrection. Dr. Gomez did not, however, expect favorable response. He thinks no assurance that Diaz will resign will be given until after all other conditions of peace have been arranged.

The following answer was received last night from Madero in response to an armistice proposal submitted by General Gomez.

"The peace commission came unofficially and asked under what terms I would make peace. I said I would agree, as I have already said to Dr. Gomez that in the interest of peace I would resign as provisional president of Mexico, but only if I consider that the will of the people has been satisfied, otherwise the revolution will continue, notwithstanding any peace negotiations."

"I know all the people want the retirement of General Diaz and no reelection. For that purpose I will accept as provisional president any one of the members of the present cabinet who will call a new election. "If this condition is agreed upon we want Juarez to be delivered to us and then an armistice will be signed. "I will wait until tomorrow evening to hear the result of the peace negotiations which are being directed by Dr. Vasquez Gomez. If tomorrow night no answer comes, I will commence hostilities."

MEXICAN AND REBEL ARMIES MARK TIME

PRACTICALLY CERTAIN THAT ATTACK WILL NOT BE MADE ON JUAREZ UNTIL MIDNIGHT.

REBELS ENCIRCLE TOWN

Federal Forces in Juarez Number 750 and They Are Well Equipped To Repulse Attack.

By Associated Press.
El Paso, April 21.—The armies of Diaz and Madero marked time today, the insurgents encircling the town on the northwest, west and southwest. Madero awaited a reply to his ultimatum that Diaz resign as the price of an armistice, and the federal forces were watching behind entrenchments, not knowing just when the attack would begin.

While it is intimated that this assault may begin at three this afternoon Madero has not definitely fixed any time. Meanwhile all the available United States troops have moved their camp close to the border. Francisco Madero Senior is due to arrive today but it is not expected he will alter his son's resolution.

Not a shot was fired on either side last night. The force in Juarez numbers about 750. The officials seem confident of their ability to hold the town. Their equipment includes several field and four rapid fire guns. The federal General Rabago is said to be en route with heavy artillery and cavalry reinforcements.

Late this afternoon it was practically certain that no attack will be made until midnight as the Mexican government's reply to the demand for Diaz' resignation cannot arrive until then.

The suit case contained a quantity of clothing including a pair of shoes, overalls, shirts and under wear, with a bottle of hair oil and a piece of Star tobacco. There was nothing included in the contents to indicate the owner and the property will be held at the city hall until claimed and identified.

Hard telephoned his father who lives in Fort Worth early yesterday morning and the Elder Hard immediately went out to Hodge from which place he telephoned the officers who drove out and took the prisoner into Fort Worth.

According to the statement of his father, his son talked in an irrational manner and could not explain how he had reached Hodge.

THE ARDMORE TEAM IS NOW COMPLETE

Special to The Times.
Ardmore, Okla., April 21.—This morning Manager Rogers and the Ardmore baseball team left on the southbound Santa Fe for Cleburne, Texas, where they are scheduled to play a series of exhibition games with the Cleburne team.

Yesterday afternoon Manager Rogers completed his roster of players for the team, which will open the season at Bonham on the 25th, and he feels confident that he has made a good selection.

The team as it now stands will consist of Rogers, manager; Trammell, Hinton, Towers and Jeske, pitchers; Williams, catcher; Onslow, first base; Cooper, second base; Spence, shortstop; Gordon, third base; Parrish, left field; McCullum, centerfield; and Boudin, right field. In case of accident to Williams, the receiver, Manager Rogers will go behind the bat. The team looks very good on paper, and from reports received here from teams who have clashed with the other teams in the league should be able to give a good account of themselves. Every member of the team is a hustling youngster with ambitions to go higher, and under the coaching of Rogers will develop.

Ardmore has the best ball team in its history and it is up to the citizens to get in behind the movement and give it their hearty support. Clean ball will be the order in this league. The president has surrounded himself with competent umpires, and every manager in the league is a baseball man of experience. Here's hoping for the success of the league, and especially that Ardmore will have the honor of winning the first flag in the new Texas-Oklahoma league.

THREW GLASS EYE IN FRONT OF JUDGE

ACTION OF WITNESS NECESSITATES ADJOURNMENT OF CAMORRA TRIAL.

CRIES, GROANS, CURSES

Esposito at Conclusion of Testimony Tears Out Artificial Member and Then Faints.

By Associated Press.
Viterbo, Italy, April 21.—Gastano Esposito, a witness, forced an adjournment of the Camorra trial today when at the close of his testimony in his own defense he tore out his glass eye and threw it on the floor.

Esposito in defending his attempt to escape arrest exclaimed, "I was suffering even as I am now from heart disease. In my boyhood I lost one eye. I feared I would die in prison from the malady that had seized me or what would be even worse, that I would lose my other eye."

Here he became hysterical, sobbing with his face in his hands. Suddenly he raised his head and defiantly threw his glass eye to the floor in front of the judges bench. Posing for a few seconds he dropped to the floor in a faint. The prisoners in the steel cages shouted, cried and cursed. One of the jurors who was a physician went to Esposito's assistance.

HONOR HOUSTON WITH MONUMENT

MEMORIAL TO FAMOUS SOLDIER AND STATESMAN UNVEILED AT HUNTSVILLE.

SAN JACINTO SURVIVORS

In Attendance—Hon. William Jennings Bryan Delivers Principal Address.

Huntsville, Texas, April 21.—The memory of General Sam Houston, whose twenty-five years ago today broke the power of the Mexicans by administering a decisive defeat to the forces of Santa Anna in the battle of San Jacinto, was fittingly honored today by the unveiling of a monument over the grave of the famous soldier and statesman in the Huntsville cemetery. The unveiling was an event of state wide interest. Visitors from every section of Texas attended, among them being many members of the society of the Daughters of the Texas Republic, whose annual convention has been in session here this week. Several members of the Houston family were present as guests of honor, together with W. F. Zuber and Alonzo Steele—the only survivors of the battle of San Jacinto. The committee in charge of arrangements was fortunate in securing William J. Bryan to deliver the principal address at the unveiling exercises.

The monument which cost $10,000 was erected through an appropriation of the Texas Legislature. The memorial consists of a low granite shaft bearing a bas-relief figure of General Houston, mounted upon his favorite charger, with his hat in one hand, waving his troops onward in his attack upon the forces of Santa Anna in the battle of San Jacinto. Upon the two sides of the shaft are allegorical figures representing war and peace. Upon the reverse side of the shaft appears the Masonic emblem. The memorial was designed by Pompeo Coppali.

Bryan paid a long and glowing tribute to the memory of Sam Houston, and near the closing he said: "Houston's eldest son enlisted in the Confederate army and that too with his father's approval, and General Houston's sympathy were with his people during war, but he faced criticism that was overwhelming when he refused to endorse his state's action. What stronger evidence could be had of the spirit which should actuate the statesman. It is this willingness to die for what one believes in, this civilization possible—Houston had the wisdom to foresee and the moral courage to foretell. He deserves to be ranked among the nation's statesmen."

San Jacinto day is closer to the hearts of the South Texas people than to those of other parts of Texas. Here the early struggles of the nation took place here was written that history which today is a priceless heritage to the sons and daughters of the Republic, here Houston and Travis and Austin and De Zavala and Deaf Smith lived and in these cemeteries rest their ashes.

Here are the battlefields of the early struggles with Mexicans and Indians and here still live a small number of those who can point to the landmarks of Texas independence and say "There we fought."

Many a private home holds cannon balls or "Bowie" knives or pistols that were used by the first head of that family in Texas in his fight for freedom; and many of these homes today are located upon the same land granted their forebears by Mexico or the Republic of Texas.

No wonder then that San Jacinto has a place in the hearts of South Texas people and no wonder that they have gathered here today to honor the memory of the victor in that fight. No town in Texas is more closely connected with the history of the state than Huntsville and no town has held a greater number of the men who have made Texas history. Almost every old home has housed at some time in its history a man prominent in the public affairs of the Republic or the state; and in the cemetery Sam Houston's body rests beside those of such men as Rev. Daniel Baker (the pioneer Texas Presbyterian for whom Daniel Baker College at Brownwood received its name), Henderson Yorum, (Texas' most truthful early historian) William Barrett, G. W. Farrie, Robert Smith, (all Mexican war veterans) and other preachers and teachers and warriors.

Most of these men are represented in the city today by descendants who have inherited the strength of body and mind of their forefathers and occupy relatively as prominent place in the world of affairs.

Here in Huntsville is still standing the plain little house which was Houston's home the latter years of his life. This has been moved about two blocks from where it stood and fitted up as a boarding house. The little office where he transacted his private business affairs has fallen today to decay. Within the last few years, some efforts have been made to preserve these landmarks from further decay. The Alumni Association of Sam Houston Normal Institute has acres of land, which contains the spring which furnished water for the Houston family and on which were

Mails Used to Circulate Information
That Was Misleading and Deceiving Is Charge.

Boston, Mass., April 21.—The Joint case against Warren B. Wheeler and Stillman Shaw of Wheeler & Shaw, Inc., who were arrested two weeks ago charged with having used the mails in a scheme to defraud, was called for a hearing before United States Commissioner Hayes in this city today. Wheeler and Stillman were arrested at the request of Post Office Inspector Charles H. Clapham, who had for some time been investigating the connection of the firm with the promotion of the American Rubber Company, $5,000,000 corporation, organized under the laws of the state of Maine, which is said to control a secret process of making rubber at small cost and large profit.

According to the statement of the Federal officers who have been engaged in the investigation of the case about $500,000 in stock of the company have been sold at various prices to about 500 or more small investors, most of them in the New England states. It is charged by the Federal officers that Wheeler, who was formerly the treasurer of the rubber company, and his associate, in selling the stock of the corporation, used the mail to circulate information concerning the condition and prospects of the rubber company, which they must have known to be misleading and deceiving.

Among other things, it is claimed by the government, the promoters of the company in their efforts to attract purchasers for the stock, had made the statement that there was a profit of 150 per cent on every pound of rubber turned out by the company's factory in Hyde Park. This statement, the Federal officers say, was never supported by the facts in the case, and constituted a fraudulent misrepresentation. As a matter of fact, the government officials assert, the price which the company received for their products of its factory did not even cover the cost of manufacture.

Francis the little son of Charles Richardson, formerly of this city died at the home of his parents in Clinton, Wednesday, from injuries sustained by jumping from a wagon. The child was seated on a wagon which was loaded with brick and moving slowly. He jumped to the ground, a distance of only 26 inches, falling on his head. He was struck on the ground. He went into the house, complaining of being sick at the stomach. It was thought he was suffering merely from indigestion. In a little while, however, his condition became serious, and a physician who was summoned found that he had been ruptured. He died in a few hours after the accident occurred. The boy was five years old. The dead child was a grandson of W. A. Richardson, of near Frederick. The body was brought to Frederick, Thursday morning, accompanied by the bereaved parents and other relatives. Funeral services were held at noon from the home of C. W. Richardson, and burial was made in the city cemetery. The services were conducted by Rev. Father S. Gillman, of Lawton.—Frederick Leader.

FLOWER BATTLE AT

SAN ANTONIO TODAY

Flower Pageant An Event of Indescribable Beauty.

San Antonio, Texas, April 21.—This year's annual spring carnival, which has attracted many thousands of visitors from all parts of the southwest to this city, culminated today in today's "Battle of Flowers" in commemoration of the anniversary of the battle of San Jacinto, in which Texas' Pioneers broke the power of Mexico for all time to come. Never before did the people of the entire southwest section of the state take so much interest in the celebration as they did this year and the result was the unprecedented success of the carnival and particularly of today's anniversary celebration.

The decorations throughout the city was on a more elaborate scale than ever before in the history of the city and the flower pageant was an event of indescribable beauty and magnificence. Particularly interesting and attractive were the big electrically propelled floats loaded with flowers and beautiful young women or bearing groups representing many of the most important and stirring scenes and events in the history of the Lone Star State.

TAFT'S BASEBALL

ADMINISTRATION

Chief Executive Heads Most Enthusiastic Bunch of Rooters for the Home Team.

Washington, D. C., April 21.—Baseball fever, like other fevers, is said to be a matter of accident. It strikes high and it strikes low, but to the statesman, the military hero or the diplomat or even the jurist it comes with the same certainty as to the ordinary run of mankind. In Washington the victims of the American summer epidemic are numbered by the thousands.

The Taft administration may be said to be a better baseball administration than was that of Roosevelt. The head of the nation, himself, is responsible for this condition. Roosevelt would go to a ball game once in a while. He rooted with an enthusiasm that seemed real to the casual onlooker, but the real rooters knew the difference. Not so William Howard Taft. Taft is a fan. He is also a "home team rooter."

Out in his home town of Cincinnati Judge Taft was a supporter of the "Red-legs." He read the "hope" he saw the games. He even knew the players by their first names.

Finally, when Judge Taft became President, he transferred his affiliation and his enthusiasm to Jimmy McKeever's blue socked Senators. Out at the American League Park they have a box reserved for the Presidential party. This means the President, Major Archie Butt and Gen. Clarence Edwards.

Vice-President James S. Sherman is reckoned in Washington as the king of fans. In the old days when "Sunny Jim" was a member of the lower house he was as regular in his attendance as the umpire, or the ground keeper. Like the President, Mr. Sherman favors the boxes. His position at the park is just to the rear of the home plate. He likes to watch the pitcher in action.

Former Senator Hemenway of Indiana is Sherman's co-fan. The two sit together and root together. They are acknowledged chums at the ball park. Hemenway is only a shade less demonstrative than the Vice-President. Chief Justice White is another fan. Ex-Speaker Cannon is a recent accession to the ranks of the ground keeper. Uncle Joe dodged the issue. Last year Hemenway and Sherman got him in their clutches. They dragged him away from the cares of state. Uncle Joe succumbed, and now he is ranked among the leading advocates of the sport.

Diplomacy and baseball mix well. Ambassador Bryce and Baron Hengelmüller have not yet succumbed to its fascination, but others of the foreign residents of the capital are counted among the regulars. Baron Yasuya Uchida, the Japanese Ambassador is a regular attendant.

OKLAHOMA'S 22ND

BIRTHDAY TODAY

Thrown Open to Settlement On April 22, 1889—Eighty Niners Celebrate.

Oklahoma City, Okla., April 21.—The busy and tempestuous pioneer days of Oklahoma are vividly recalled to many of the old residents, who were on the then new spot when the territory was thrown open to settlement on April 22, 1889, by the throngs attracted to this city by the two day celebration of Oklahoma's 22 birthday. The celebration which began here today under the joint auspices of the Aprilia Fiesta company and the 29th Association, which is composed of Oklahoma pioneers who were in any part of Oklahoma at the time when the territory was thrown open to settlement, will be continued tomorrow and will be concluded with a grand banquet of the 29th Association at the Auditorium. The whole city is profusely decorated and several thousand visitors have arrived here to witness the grand parades which form the most attractive features of the two day celebration.

"It was Burt, the drayman from Carson City," writes S. Glen Andrus in Sunset Magazine for May, "who with a working capital of $1,000 gave the ranch kings of northern California and the capitalists of the East the economic lesson of their lives. With his $1,000 savings, Burt made his first payment on a little farm, built his house and barn with his own hands and began to farm it as farming should be done. With only seven acres of land for cultivation, Burt sowed three acres to alfalfa and around the home he planted a small orchard; between the trees he planted a small patch of berries and vegetables; under every tree he placed a beehive so that the bees might pollinize his trees while storing for him their golden honey. He kept on planting and sowing things until every foot of land was made to do double and treble service. Still he had land left sufficient to devote to a chicken yard, a pigsty and a cowpen. In the year 1910 Burt took from his seven acres a total of $2,063 and with his aggregate savings he purchased forty acres more of river-bottom land.

THE FREAR-BRIN ROCKING CHAIR WILL BE WON BY TO-MORROW NIGHT

Ten O'clock Saturday Night Ends Your Opportunity to Secure the 50,000 Bonus Votes on Every $25.00 Club.

THE CANDIDATE WHO DOES THE WORK WILL WIN---WE HAVE NO CHOICE

Ten o'clock tomorrow night will decide who wins the Handsome Solid-Mahogany Rocking Chair, that has been donated by the Messrs. Frear-Brin Furniture Company as an extra prize to the contestant who turns in the greatest amount of business between Monday morning April 10th and tomorrow night.

No one contestant has much of a lead over another at this writing and there is sufficient time for a persevering contestant to make a successful fight for it. If you are in doubt as to its value drop in at the store and ask Mr. Brin to show you its many advantages.

We are counting the hours that must pass before the close of this extra inducement and the termination of our Bonus Vote Offer, and are wondering how many of you will complete or bring in a club of $25 before it is too late.

Don't wait until Monday as it will not count on the Rocking Chair and you will positively receive a less number of votes than you can now secure. It is possible for you to obtain a club by tomorrow evening, do so, and bring it to us or mail it before ten o'clock.

It may mean the difference between your owning this valuable Chair and some other contestant. A single club will more than make up the difference between some of the leaders for our Grand Prizes. If you are one of these you should take advantage of this Bonus Offer and at the same time advance your standing for the Extra Prize.

Another thing: are you sure that you have gotten entirely over the notion that our prizes are to be won with lucky numbers? The numbers in the corner of the credit slips that we have returned to contestants are for your own reference only.

How anyone can read the Times and what we have said about the contest and the way it is conducted, and still think the prizes will be won by lucky numbers is beyond us, but there are some entered who evidently believe this yet, or they would endeavor to secure more subscriptions than the few they have turned in.

Do not labor under the impression that our $500 in Gold or our $250 in Gold will be won for a few three months subscriptions to the Times, as we are right here and am telling you that they won't as several of our contestants have already turned in considerably more than this number. If you are one of these, start out immediately and make a record for yourself.

Of course, we are not expecting very much but we do hope that our circulation will be increased several hundred before this contest ends, if only that we may take in enough to reimburse us for the prize and the other expenses pertaining to the contest. If the subscriptions so far taken in were for $10 each we would have no complaint to make, but you would be surprised if you knew the proportion that are for three months each.

We have no choice as to who shall be the winners of the money on display in The First National Bank Window or The Frear-Brin Rocking Chair. But you can be assured that if you receive the largest number of votes you will be given as a reward the $500 in Gold.

In addition to this you have the opportunity of a life time to win a valuable piece of furniture, something that is comfort personified. Look over your stubs and see how much you have secured on this Extra Prize—if anything—are you satisfied it will win for you? We doubt it, as the writer knows he would not feel safe if he had turned in twice the sum that our hardest working contestants have so far turned in.

The same can be said in relation to our original prizes. The writer would not feel more than safe if he had turned in twice the business that has been turned in to date by any one contestant.

A mistake that is being made by the majority of our contestants, is that they permit themselves to be side-tracked with a paltry $1.25 subscription by men well able to pay in advance for five years.

Every paid subscription earns more than the lost interest to the subscriber in the annoyance saved each month through the non-appearance of the collector. The difference to Wichita Falls subscribers should also be taken into consideration, as they save 20% by pre-paying, and the mail subscribers save 40% by subscribing for six months a year or longer.

Yesterday we published the ten vote coupon for the last time. If you wish to have those counted that you have on hand, you must return them to us not later than next Monday night.

The elimination of this coupon will now permit every candidate to devote all their spare time to securing subscriptions. As these count up so much faster in votes, this should materially help every one who is in the race to win.

As old subscriptions count the same as new ones, why overlook a single person who now takes the Times? Our old subscribers have not been half canvassed, why this is so we cannot tell, seeing that every old subscription helps in your race for the Rocking Chair in addition to the original prize of your choice.

FOR A SMALL EFFORT.

Contestants should remember these facts. In each of the three districts THE TIMES will give absolutely free one $50.00 award, one $25.00 award, one $10.00 award and one $5.00 award. Then there are the two Grand Awards, $500.00 and $250.00, respectively. All that is necessary to win is to receive the largest number of votes, according to the conditions in THE TIMES.

GET FULL INFORMATION.

If there is one single point in connection with this contest that you do not understand get in communication with the Contest Manager at once, either by phone, 167, or by mail, and have your doubtful points cleared at once. Then when you clearly understand everything lose no time in getting started.

BACK PAYMENTS COUNT.

Subscribers to THE TIMES who are in arrears on their subscription account and who pay up the same are entitled to votes according to the amount paid. When you pay up your subscription be sure and secure the votes to which you are entitled, because it will be impossible for us to allow them afterwards; they must be secured at the time payment is made. And remember that no votes can be allowed on a subscription for less than three months to THE DAILY TIMES or one year to THE WEEKLY TIMES.

HOW VOTES ARE SECURED.

Votes are secured by subscribing to THE DAILY or WEEKLY TIMES, or by purchasing a Classified Advertising Book. These ballots can be held and voted later in the contest by the person holding them, but the daily coupon clipped from THE TIMES are only good for one week from date of publication and will not be counted if voted after the vote date printed upon them expires.

HOW TO WIN.

Any resident in the three districts mentioned in our double-page announcement, who desire to compete in this great contest and win one of the valuable awards offered, should at once see that their names are sent to the Contest Manager. Those who get in on the start have the best chance of winning, so it is desirable that the names be entered at once. Candidates who enter do not necessarily have to subscribe to THE TIMES. Enter your name and our friends will assist you to do the rest. Should there be a tie for any one of the prizes offered the same will be divided equally between those so tying. The time is short, as the contest will end April 29th. There is no lottery attached to it in any way, you must get the votes to win. There is no lucky number or element of chance connected with it, and you will never know how popular you are until you enter a contest of this kind.

Petroleum and Gas Accumulation

One of the very interesting features of the Oil & Gas Producers' Convention, held at Tulsa, Okla., on March 25, was a paper, entitled, "Theories of Accumulation of Petroleum and Natural Gas," read by L. L. Hutchison, formerly assistant director of the Oklahoma geological survey, and now consulting geologist of Tulsa. The treatment was masterly, thorough scientific and appreciated by all. The paper is as follows:

The fact that petroleum and natural gas are not, like water, almost universally distributed throughout the earth's outer strata, has given rise to many hypotheses, and theories to account for their accumulation into limited areas. The attempted explanation may be divided into three groups, namely, the crevice and the syncline, though the notion that certain lines control oil deposition does not deserve to be considered even as a hypothesis. It must be given space for the sake of completeness: the anticlinal theory and the hydraulic theory. These will be discussed in the order named, except the hydraulic theory which is not yet well defined.

Accumulation in Crevices.
One of the earliest hypotheses seems to have been advocated by Professor Evans of Marietta, O. He said that oil is contained in cavities or fissures in the rocks, together with water and gas, arranged according to their specific gravities. He believed that the cavities were often of great dimensions and sometimes connected in such a manner that when one was tapped it was often possible to drain others from the same well. There are some early reports extant which state that drilling tools sometimes fell several feet into cavities from which oil gushed, and Penniman records a similar phenomenon in the Florence, Colorado field. Therefore, the idea of accumulation in crevices is not without some foundation, though it is rarely reported to occur thus.

Many persons, unacquainted with conditions in the old fields, seem to think that an oil pool is where oil has drained from the surrounding strata into a vast cavern or a subterranean drainage basin such as surrounds a pond or lake on the surface. The ordinary way, however, in which oil and gas are present in the rocks is as a saturating substance filling the interstices of the coarser grained rocks.

Oil Lines.
Another idea which early gained credence among the oil operators was that of "oil lines." It is not an attempt to explain how oil originates or collects that there is, as a rule, a well-defined trend to the oil-producing areas of a region, the drifters and often operators, reasonable in all other matters, assert that "oil" will be found along any line extending in a given direction if it is persistently prospected.

The notion became popular in America during the early days of the development of the Pennsylvania fields, and is still held even by oil men of considerable reading and culture. The "oil lines" of the Appalachian region trend about N. 45 E. Careful investigations tend to show that this trend is intimately related to the geological structure of the country, as is also the general north-south trend of the Oklahoma oil pools.

That many oil men disregard these structural relations and depend on the "line" is easily discovered by a short association with them when they are freely discussing development and prospecting.

The Anticlinal Theory.
The fact that by far the greater number of oil wells in the United States and Canada are along anticlinal axes was early noticed. This observation gave rise to the anticlinal or structural theory of oil and gas accumulation. It is impossible to say to whom the whole credit is due for the origin of the structural theory, because a number of geologists proposed it, independently, at about the same time. T. Sterry Hunt, who published a paper setting forth the principles of the theory in the Canadian Naturalist in 1858, was, it appears, the first to publish on the possibility of the relation of oil deposits to structure. F. S. Andrews of Marietta, O., reached the same conclusion independently of Hunt, and published his opinions in the American Journal of Science in 1883, while H. Hofer of Austria records similar observations, independent of either Hunt or Andrews, in his "Petroleum Industry of North America," page 77-80.

Though it is difficult to determine who was the first geologist to discuss the principles of the theory, the first to put them in the circular test was C. White of West Virginia. As a result of these tests, White succeeded in locating several of the most prolific gas fields in West Virginia.

The theory briefly stated is: Since petroleum and natural gas are lighter than water, they will rise, when associated in the strata with it, into the arches of the anticlinal folds in the rocks. Assuming the presence of petroleum and natural gas in the rocks, there are, according to this theory, four prerequisites before oil and gas can collect in paying quantities. These requirements are: First, water in the formation; second, porous reservoir; third, an impervious stratum above the porous reservoir rock, and fourth an anticlinal fold.

If any one of these conditions is wanting it does not appear that the theory can well hold, for the following reasons: (1) If there is no water present, then the oil is the heaviest liquid in the rocks and will tend to collect in structural troughs, or synclines, instead of the anticlinal arches. (2) Unless there is a porous reservoir, such as sandstone, dolomitic limestone or similarly porous substances, the petroleum will necessarily remain scattered throughout the formation. (3) If the rocks are of an homogeneous texture throughout, the oil and gas will not collect under the arches, but continue to percolate upward to the top of the ground water level at least, and as much higher as the force of the capillary and the expansion of the gas would carry them. (4) If there are no structural irregularities, such as anticlinal arches, the oil and gas will gradually percolate up the dip of inclined strata if the strata have a uniform dip, to the point of ingress of the water, or remain widely disseminated throughout the formation.

Experience has often seemed to so thoroughly prove the anticlinal theory that it has come to be considered, by many, as the anticlinal law of accumulation. If the rocks contain both oil and water, it seems to be uniformly true; but if there is no water present, it is but reasonable that the oil should seek the lower levels and be found in the synclines.

Ralph Arnold in his recent bulletin of the United States Geological Survey, has added much data to the positive side of the question of the structural relations of oil and gas fields. He reports oil from synclines in several localities. In some of the wells, as the Kentucky wells in the Seale field, he accounts for this phenomenon by the fact that the syncline is situated between the consequent anticlines on one limb of the great Topatopa anticline; while in some others, it appears, that the strata contain no water and the petroleum, therefore, seeks the synclinal trough.

Many of the most progressive oil operators of the world now begin prospecting in a new field along anticlinal arches, though those of the "oil school" and many of the speculative prospectors in a haphazard way along "oil lines."

With the important provision that the strata must contain water as well as oil the theory is, beyond doubt, worthy of consideration.

"On the continent of Europe and in Russia no other theory (than the anticlinal) has any followers whatsoever." White and others have shown its efficiency in the Pennsylvania fields; Blatchley maintains it is true for Illinois; Arnold reports it from California; the writer has found it true for many of the Oklahoma pools, though in some cases one or the other of the modifications must be discussed later, seems to be applicable; Penniman and others have shown that the small fields of the Gulf coastal plain are under quaternary anticlines, and Mr. Krusier of the great Holland syndicate told me in personal conversation, that his company always precedes development with a corps of geologists and prospects only approved territory.

The modifications of the anticlinal theory referred to above, are the arrested anticline of terrace, and the effect of large lenses of sandstone embedded in shale. The former was first observed by Edward Orton Sr., while the latter is mentioned by Gale in connection with the Rangely oil districts of Colorado.

The "arrested anticline" modification as stated by Orton is:

"Though distinct arches are for the most part wanting, in Ohio geology there is another sort of structural deformation found here which is connected in a direct way with the oil and gas. It is the arrested anticline, or the arrested fold. The former was first observed by Edward Orton Sr., while the latter is mentioned by Gale in connection with the Rangely oil districts of Colorado.

This form of structure obtains in the Coweta field in Oklahoma, and has been noted in other regions; yet, prospected, while anticlinal folds are frequent between the Kansas fields and Henryetta, and prevail in the Hoochshooter and shallow fields and thousands of acres upon well defined anticlines and in highly probable districts of Eastern Oklahoma are yet entirely undeveloped.

The petroleum and gas of Oklahoma fields occur, as a rule, in sandstone interbedded in a fossiliferous shale. These sandstones, where drilling has been extensive, have been found to be from a few to one hundred feet in thickness, but usually carry at different places in the same field, sometimes thinning out entirely on one side of the producing area. Where this phenomenon has been observed, there is sometimes little or no evidence of structural disturbance, but the rocks exposed at the surface usually show a uniform dip at low angles.

The sandstones, which have been exposed by erosion are with a few notable exceptions, narrowly limited throughout the Pennsylvania series in Northern Oklahoma. The lentils are usually from five to fifty feet thick and from two or three to twenty miles or more in lateral extension. Since the exposed sandstones are "lenticular," it seems that it is not presuming to assume that many sandstone lentils lie buried in the impervious petroliferous shales. Since these sand lenses were deposited as bars on the shores of the ancient sea, doubtless they are convex upward, so that one, for example with an maximum thickness of fifty feet and ten miles in diameter, would necessarily cause a gentle arch to be built in the superimposed sediments, thus forming a catchment basin for petroleum and natural gas even in regions of level-lying strata. In such a case, the oil should be most abundant where the sandstone is thickest, as on the other hand, the rocks form a monocline and the shales enclosing the sandstone are sufficiently impervious to oil and gas, those hydrocarbons will collect along the highest edge of the lens, provided there is associated water. Drill holes through the producing sand under such conditions would be likely to show that the sand increases in thickness from the territory down to the dip of the strata through the oil-bearing belt, and to persist beyond where oil is present in paying quantities, while the sand would pinch out up the dip from the gas pool.

Obviously, a deposit caused by either of the phenomena just described would present no surface criteria by which its approximate location could be determined. The only way in which such subterranean conditions can be learned is from a study of the logs and color levels of the wells. So far it has not been possible to collect sufficient data in any locality in Oklahoma to be certain that the accumulation is controlled by sandstone lenses. There are, however, one or two regions where there appears to be little or no evidence of anticlinal folding, or even an arrest of the normal dip of the rocks where oil is being produced. A few drillers' records show the sand to thin up the dip and the local operators and drillers speak of the oil sand pinching out to the east, so it appears that the petroleum is very likely obtained from sandstone lenses.

From the foregoing, it appears that the finding of petroleum and natural gas in large crevices in the rocks is rare, and that the idea that there are oil lines running in certain directions the world over, is erroneous; but that in regions where the strata contain both oil and gas, and water the lighter substances tend to collect in the arches in the rocks under impervious strata; but in the absence of water the oil seeks lower levels. The arches, under which oil and gas may collect in the beds are due (1) to gentle anticlinal folding; (2) to an arrest of the normal dip of the rocks, both of which can be determined by careful geological work; and (3) to accidental sedimentation by which great sandstone lenses were embedded in petroliferous shales.

WE SQUANDER TOO MUCH.

Last Year 423 Million Were Spent on Gum, Candy and Soda.

(Houston Post)
This high cost of living problem has penetrated the halls of Congress, and when it comes to the solving of problems of domestic economy Congressman J. Hampton Moore of Philadelphia has the frugal housewife all to the good. But Moore has overlooked the fact that the sugar and flour joined the Jim Hill districts of extravagance.

Congressman Moore has completed a list of luxuries apparently deemed essential in this era of rapid living which, comes short of being a joke. His statistics show that these luxuries consumed in a single year would complete a chain of canals from Boston to Key West; that the jewelry sold represents more than twice the cost of building the Panama Canal and that the nickels annually spent for the pink and brown sizing soda water are sufficient to complete the inland waterway system for which all South Texas is so ardently pining.

According to Moore the boys and girls of the country as well as the adult nationasters of chic spend 25 million dollars last year on chewing gum. The candy bill in the United States last year reached the astonishing aggregate of 78 million dollars. The soda water bill in this country, where it flourishes as in no other in all the world, was the shall we say cool-sum of 320 million dollars.

Aside from keeping track of your mistakes, you must use your own memory instead of the memory of others.

Next month the Scholastic Census is to be taken, and in this connection it might be well to state that for every child within the scholastic age, between 7 and 17 years, who the enumerators fail to enroll, the public school fund loses about $6.50. Doubtless many parents, for one cause or other, fail to have their children enumerated, but from the fact that the statistics show that over 100,000 white children within the scholastic age who were enrolled by the enumerators last year, but who were not enrolled as pupils in any of the various schools throughout the state would indicate that the scholastic enumerators had performed their work well. In fact, it looks rather like that "padding" might have been indulged in in some localities, or else there are a great number of children in Texas who have for their parents or guardians people whom nothing short of a compulsory education law will suffice to teach them their duty to their children. Commenting on the statistics covering this subject furnished by the state superintendent of Public Instruction, the Dallas News has to say:

"As regards education, those statistics given out the other day by the Superintendent of Public Instruction as to school attendance make, it seems to us, a shameful indictment against this state. He stated that of the 750,000 white children of scholastic age, 90,000 are not enrolled in any school. That is, about 12 per cent of the white children in Texas are not even seen inside a school. If this number of non-attendants were added to the number of those who attend so little as to get no appreciable instruction, we should have a mass of growing ignorance that might well excite apprehension of those who feel that education is essential to good citizenship. These figures, it must be remembered, exclude negro children from the count. They constitute probably a larger stream of ignorance toward the mass of those who will be the citizens of tomorrow. It is a condition which the men of Texas can not tolerate, if they believe, as indeed they must, that next to a corrupt ballot, an ignorant ballot is the greatest menace to a free government."

Many of the cotton spinners of this country, as well as Europe, complain of slackness in the textile trade. Prices of the finished product do not keep pace with the rise in the cost of the raw product.

Business hangs fire. Here and there, curtailment is deemed imperative. Interview some of the more pessimistic of them and you will gather the impression that things are going to the "demolition bow-wow."

This state of mind and the condition upon which it is founded, are the outgrowth of a basic economic misconception that needs to be thoroughly corrected before the pendulum swings back to normal, so far as the mills, the jobber and the consumer are concerned.

It is not, ordinarily, the custom of The Constitution to reproduce the trade circulars of market firms.

But the statement issued recently by S. H. P. Peel & Co., a leading exchange firm of this country, so pertinently analyzes the conditions indicated, and points the remedy, that we give it elsewhere without amendment or revision.

All of the confusion and uncertainty existing today in the textile world may be traced to the vague belief that somehow, sometime, prices for cotton, being artificially high, are destined to drop.

The logical arguments of the firm cited knocks the props from under the delusion with a sledgehammer.

Here is the core of the situation as expressed in the statement:

"There is no mystery as to the true reason for the present prices of cotton. It is that that consumption is progressing more rapidly than production, and neither the present price of cotton nor in fact, any price under thirty cents per pound will in any way affect the consumption by the ultimate consumer, even at such a price could not find a satisfactory substitute."

The statement is supported by statistics giving production and consumption for the past seven years.

In that period the world production of cotton was 386,426,600 bales. The world's consumption was 88,200,000 bales, or more than 2,000,000 bales in excess of supply.

Given these figures, it is unnecessary to go further in search of the cause of present prices.

As a matter of fact, with the supply way behind demand, the prices are not high enough.

They may be expected to advance, since the steady tread of consumption upon the heels of production means the world next year will be no further ahead of the game than at present.

It is also shown in the Peel analysis that the present prices do not cover the cost of the raw material, the added cost to the consumer would barely be perceptible. The cotton dress that weighs two pounds, and the shirt that weighs half a pound, is not going to be found on the probability list should the staple itself increase five cents a pound in value.

But by far the most convincing argument exhibited is that even should the price of the staple go to thirty cents, no substitute could be found—wool, silk, flax, hemp, whatnot—to compete on equal terms with cotton.

The world must have cotton. It is one of the few indispensable staples and the price for which it now sells and for which it promises to sell, is not only in response to economic laws, but is destined to climb higher. And it can go on soaring almost indefinitely, without bleeding any of the parties to its handling or consumption.

The meat in the nut is that the cotton trade—jobbers, mills, importers, consumers—must make up their minds to that fact.

All and singular they must abandon hope, founded on utter fallacy, that prices are going to drop.

Once that bed-rock principle is beaten into their heads, conditions in the textile fields will readjust themselves, and the world will go steadily forward, striving to do its best in meeting the appetite of the new and broadening markets under every sun with the supplies at its command.

The most fortunate factor is that no one will thereby be the sufferer except unimaginative traders who have been "caught out" with contracts they cannot fill—contracts based upon guesswork, rather than sound economic study.

And at bottom, it is this class mainly responsible for the curious psychological conditions now obtaining in the trade—Atlanta Constitution.

At a meeting of a committee of prominent citizens of Fort Worth the other day, steps were taken to prevent the spread of the social evil by picking out a reservation in which all such characters shall be required to confine themselves. A few months ago Fort Worth broke up her reservation, or at least there was considerable agitation along that line, with the result that its inhabitants were scattered to different parts of the city, and those who used their influence to have this done are now members of a committee to seek and establish a reservation—another "Hell's Half Acre," which they were instrumental in breaking up. This is a problem that confronts every city and just what is the best way in which to handle it will probably never be solved.

For a time Fort Worth thought the way was to have these places located on her main streets, in order that they might be properly policed, and this scheme, apparently, was tried, with the result that Ft. Worth's reputation as a city of good morals was not improved to any great extent, and now, it seems she has decided to go back to the old city for that particular purpose.

LYING.

And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were come together, Peter sat down among them. But a certain maid behind him as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him and said, that man was also with him. And he denied her, saying, woman I know him not. Luke, 22:55-57.

Peter lied. He had been with Christ every day for nearly three years and yet when a little frisky maiden pointed her finger at him he wilted, and lied—lied three times, and clinched it, "cursed" like a Roman soldier. The trouble with Peter was that he had been a fisherman by profession, and all fishermen, of course are natural born liars. But Peter didn't always lie. He quit after his experience with fire at Pentecost; and so the reader must not get the idea that he (the reader) is in the line of apostolic succession just because he is addicted to prevarication.

We are all liars—unless newspaper men and preachers are exceptions. A woman meets a neighbor whom she despises, at the door, and overwhelming her with expressions of delight at her coming. She is lying. She paints her face and goes upon the street, as much as to say: My face is rosy and healthy. She is lying. She pads her form to deceive the public eye. Her heart is sad and yet she puts on a counterfeit smile as much as to say: I am as happy as a clam. She is lying. The merchant tells his customer his wagon is the best in town. He is a liar—there are a dozen other makes just as good. The farmer stacks his wood cross-wise in the bottom of his wagon-bed and lays it thick and close on top. He is lying. The preacher buries an old sinner who was a servant of the devil and says: "The Lord has given, the Lord has taken away." He is a liar. The editor writes a flowery notice of a wedding, telling of the beauties of the hook-nosed bride. He is—honestly mistaken.

Reader, quit lying; it is neither biblical nor Jeffersonian; it is unconstitutional and un-Christian. It stamps its brand upon your brow and the world will sooner or later find you out. The noblest work of God is an honest man or woman, absolutely honest; honest with himself as well as with the public.—Honey Grove Signal.

The city sewer has been completed for more than two years, and while many citizens whose property is located off the sewer line are complaining, the sewer line has not yet been connected, though the Times believes there was an ordinance adopted compelling that all property located within a certain distance of the sewer line should be connected. If this ordinance was enforced, it might be possible that the present sewer tax could be reduced.

HONOR SAM HOUSTON WITH MONUMENT

stated the Houston home and the little office. The Alumni Association will continue to care for this park.

The ladies of the Outlook Club have charge of the spring and will restore it to its former beauty. Particular interest attaches to this spring because around it camped many Indian chiefs, who came with their followers to get Houston's advice in their tribal affairs, and around it were made many treaties which secured to the white people the friendship of their red neighbors.

The student body of 1910-11 has purchased the residence which will be moved back to its former site and be restored to exactly its former appearance.

The little office has become the special care of the Ladies' Reading Club and by them is being preserved from further decay.

Houston's Grave.

"I wish to be buried in the old Huntsville grave yard among my old friends and neighbors," was Houston's request and here in Oakland cemetery was placed July 27, 1863. A plain marble slab marked the spot with the simple inscription, "General Sam Houston, born March 2, 1793, died July 26, 1863—after a life of vicissitudes such as seldom falls to man's lot."

Houston's death was not unlooked for and only one member of his family was away from the bedside. This was Lieutenant Sam Houston, who was wounded and a prisoner in a Yankee prison. The end came to the patriotic soldier peacefully. His last words were "Texas, Texas," followed in a few moments by "Margaret," his wife's name.

The Monument. Today Mrs. Nettie Houston Bringham will unveil the monument which will show in a measure the appreciation of the people of Texas. Mrs. Bringham is a granddaughter of Sam Houston and a resident of the city named for him.

The monument was designed by Pompeo Coppin, a Texas artist and shows General Houston mounted and with his hat in hand waving his men on to victory. Back of the horse and just visible is one of the "Twin Sisters," the cannon which had much to do with the winning of the battle of San Jacinto.

The last legislature appropriated $10,000 to pay for the memorial and it constitutes a tardy recognition of the debt owed by Texas to this great man.

Senator Culberson Opposes

Statewide Prohibition

Washington, April 21.—The following letter clearly sets forth the attitude of Senator Culberson upon the prohibition question as it pertains to statewide prohibition of the liquor traffic, to which proposition he goes on record as being unalterably opposed:

United States Senate, Washington, D. C., April 11, 1911.—Colonel B. F. Sherrell, Jefferson, Texas: Dear Sherrell—When I was in Jefferson recently I talked casually with you about the proposed constitutional amendment, relating to prohibition, and stated to you, as I have to others, that I intended to vote against its adoption. Not having an opportunity to state to you then my reasons for that course, it has occurred to me that I ought to give them to you now; and I take the liberty of doing so in this letter.

The present state constitution was adopted by the people in 1876. In the convention which framed that constitution were many men of exalted patriotism and distinguished service to the state, and doubtless they gave this important subject most careful attention and consideration. Among the phases of the question which were presented formally, and directly to the convention and considered by it, as shown by the journal, were local option and a modified form of absolute and statewide prohibition.

The latter proposition was presented by a resolution which declared: "That the committee on the legislative department be instructed to inquire into the expediency of inserting a provision in the constitution inhibiting the legislature from passing any law to license the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage."

Stands by Local Option. This was not adopted, but instead, the local option feature was embodied in the constitution to the effect that the legislature should at its first session thereafter enact a law whereby the qualified voters of any county, or certain other subdivisions of territory, by a species of referendum, may by a majority vote from time to time determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits. Such a law was passed, and with some amendments, is now in force. The journal of the convention does not give the debates upon the question. It is naturally to be assumed, however, that, broadly speaking, it was urged in its favor, as I do, that the local option provision while yielding something to so-called summary legislation would yet retain the principle of local self-government on the subject and thus allow each community to control the matter for itself and effectively through law and public opinion enforce the will of the people where local option is adopted. In this connection I have no doubt that the framers of the constitution properly gave consideration also to the fact that some communities have more efficient police facilities than others for abating and controlling the evils which often result from the traffic in liquors. So, too, they must have remembered as I have done in reaching a conclusion on the question, that many localities of our state are inhabited by a mainly sturdy, intelligent and patriotic race, whose habits in the use of such beverages, while temperate, are fixed and the deprivation of which would be regarded by them as an invasion of their personal liberty. They are besides, an exceptionally law-abiding and tax-paying people. Often their jails are empty and the delinquent tax list unknown to them.

Unwise and Unsafe.

The adoption of constitutional statewide prohibition, in my judgment would be particularly unwise and unsafe. In view of the experience of such states as Alabama, Maine, and others, statewide prohibition at best would be an experiment. If constitutional prohibition is adopted in Texas, and it is shown not to be effective or satisfactory to the people, it will be difficult to repeal it. This can be done, it is true, by a majority of

RAISING FUNDS FOR 1ST MONDAY CELEBRATION

F. H. Day has been soliciting today to a fund to assist in defraying the expense incident to the Trade Day to be held the first Monday in May, for arrangements for which are now in progress. In addition to the matter of looking after the finances to defray the expense, arrangements are being made for suitable premiums and the program for the occasion is being outlined and will be ready for distribution sometime next week.

The Trade Day on this occasion will be devoted largely to the livestock industry and some very attractive premiums are to be offered for the best exhibits in the different classes. In addition to the exhibition features of the day, amusements and entertainment will be provided to the extent that it will be a red letter event in the history of the city. A large crowd is anticipated many of whom are expected from the surrounding counties and towns.

LITTLE LIKELIHOOD OF INTERVENTION

Congress and President Unite in Putting Damper On Jingo Talk.

Washington, D. C., April 21.—Texas congressmen who conferred with President Taft today were given further assurances that intervention in Mexico's troubles is not being considered by the administration, and that the whole matter in that direction rests with congress.

Representative Garner, as chairman of the subcommittee of the foreign affairs committee, with Representative Sharp of Ohio and Foster of Vermont, spent much time at the White House, and Garner stated that while the De la Barra note was not what had been expected, that no hasty nor harsh reply would be made by this government. It is evident that the foreign affairs committee of the house is going to sit on the lid as tightly as possible for some days yet awaiting developments. Whether creation of a neutral zone extending ten miles on either side of the boundary line will be recommended by the house committee was not disclosed.

Congressman Slayden had an interview with the President this morning, in which the whole Mexican situation was reviewed.

The representative told the President of the receipt of a message from the El Paso Chamber of Commerce and of many private letters and messages, all deprecating the intervention in Mexico that some irresponsible people and sensation mongers have been urging. In reply to the statement made by Mr. Slayden, the President said:

"You may assure your friends that I have not thought of and do not think of, nor will I send any troops into Mexico to intervene in her local affairs. Should intervention ever occur while I am President, it will be on the order of congress, and that I do not expect."

The President spoke of the reply of the Mexican government to his protest against fighting immediately on the border line, and the consequent danger to American lives and property. He was not in the least irritated at the language of Minister De la Barra, in which counter charges are made. He apparently regards it as diplomatic skirmishing for position in order to avoid responsibility for damages or otherwise. The President, according to the Texas congressman, not only appreciates the gravity of the situation and the possibility of even greater trouble in the future because the Mexican civil war is actually being fought on the border between Mexico and the United States, but intends so

Fort Worth, Texas, April 21.—With receipts of 1,000 head and an active demand the hog market recovered some of the ground lost yesterday and closed from ten to fifteen cents above yesterday's quotations. Tops brought $6.30 today, the bulk of sales being from $5.90 to $6.15.

Far as he can do so with propriety, to bring the Mexican government and insurgents into harmony. He is gratified at the mass of evidence submitted every day that the country is for peace and supports him in his purpose of avoiding complications with Mexico if possible. In reply to a question from Congressman Slayden, the President admitted that our neutrality laws are inadequate, and the Texas left with the impression that an effort will be made to amend them into a state of efficiency.

Senator Culberson introduced a resolution in the senate today which was referred to the foreign relations committee. The resolution recites that the extent to which this country should go at present is the enforcement of neutrality laws with vigor and property along the border. The rights of citizens of the United States residing in Mexico, he declared are those of neutrals in belligerent territory.

Mrs. J. E. Casselberry, who was brought to this city about three weeks ago for a surgical operation is recovering nicely and will be taken to her home at Seymour tomorrow.

The party of capitalists who with officials of the Wichita Falls Route left yesterday for a trip over the Wichita Falls & Northwestern Railroad, were expected home late this afternoon and the visitors will spend the night here, expected to leave for their homes tomorrow. Last night was spent in Albus, following the inspection of a portion of the line and today a trip was made over the remainder of the road.

"Lefty" Miller, the south-law twirler secured by the local team, arrived today, accompanied by Mrs. Miller, and will at once begin working out with the boys preparatory to the opening of the season on next Tuesday. Miller, who has been given a try-out, gives the team two left handed pitchers in addition to the three right-handed twirlers signed earlier in the season.

At the meeting of the managers of the baseball teams in the city league held at the rooms of the Y. M. C. A. last evening, it was decided to postpone the filing of the names of the players in the different teams until after the first round of games had been played. This action was taken in order that the various managers might have a better chance to judge those who will be connected with the teams. Another meeting will be held a week from Monday night at which time the various line-ups will be filed with the president of the league and after that time only to these players, included will be permitted to play, each club being limited to fifteen.

Seventy Fifth Anniversary of Battle of San Jacinto Today

Today celebrates the seventy-fifth anniversary of the engagement at San Jacinto between the "Army of Freedom" and the "Army of Texas," which put an end to the Texas revolution, won an empire for Anglo-Saxon civilization and determined the future of this Great Southwest. It was not so many years ago, just the lifetime of a man, and yet in those years free Texas has marvelously developed, railroads, enormous industries, cities and institutions have been built. The town of Houston, a straggling frontier village when those old squirrel rifles in the hands of the infuriated avengers of the Alamo and Goliad broke the quiet stillness of that April afternoon in 1836, is a city today, built and grown out of the ruins of the old and new steel, the center of an enormous industrial and commercial life, one of the hives of modern civilization.

And the fact that lies behind this and behind the growth of the other cities of Texas, and behind the tremendous development in agriculture and natural resources, that the State has experienced since 1836 is just this: That a band of sturdy white settlers in Texas rose up in revolt against a despotic government, first in protest against its own rebellion, desiring their independence and sovereignty as freemen; that the government, the Mexican republic, denied the protests of its subjects in the province of Texas, and sent an army to put down the rebellion; that this army, numbering thousands, beset a little garrison of 183 Texans in the Alamo mission at San Antonio, finally took the fort on March 6, 1836, and killed all of its brave defenders; that at Goliad another garrison of about 400 Texans surrendered their fort to the overwhelming numbers of the Mexican army, and were treacherously put to death on March 27; that the Army of Freedom, under the command of General Houston, gathered at Gonzales, proceeded eastward, joined by terrified colonists all along the way, and followed by the Mexican army under Santa Anna; that the wise Houston led the Mexicans on and on, permitted them to go into the natural trap formed by the converging of streams at the mouth of the San Jacinto and on the afternoon of April 21 charged with his small force of 783 men into the Mexican camp, surprising them, routing them and winning a victory after eighteen minutes of fighting. Of the Mexican forces 1,500 were killed, wounded and captured. Only two Texans were killed and twenty-three wounded.

This is the bare statement of what transpired on the banks of the bayou near the mouth of the San Jacinto on April 21, 1836. Alonzo Steele, one of the two survivors of the battle, who is in attendance at the unveiling of the monument to General Sam Houston, at Huntsville, has contributed an account of the battle in a biography just published.

Mr. Steele tells of the march of the Texans, with Santa Anna in pursuit. Steele reported that Santa Anna had short-circuited across the country from Harrisburg. "Then we marched to Harrisburg," says Mr. Steele, "going down Buffalo bayou on the north side. Santa Anna had gone on the south side. When we reached Harrisburg we learned that Santa Anna had burned the town and gone on. We camped right on opposite Harrisburg, and when we camped at Deer Smith dropped on our trail and captured a Mexican courier. From him we learned that Santa Anna was ahead of us.

"We left a guard behind at Harrisburg to protect the women and children and property, and William P. Zuber, now living in Austin, Texas, was a member of the guarding party and was thereby prevented from being in the battle of San Jacinto.

"We crossed the bayou as fast as we could for we had but one little old leaky boat to cross the river. There we got on Santa Anna's trail and followed it until we crossed Vince's bayou, marching all night.

"We quit Santa Anna's trail when we crossed Vince's bayou, we turning north, he east. About sun-up we were halted to get something to eat. About the time we got our fires kindled and some beavers shot down, the scouts came dashing in and said the enemy were just over the ridge. We were immediately ordered to arms and to move on. We camped on Buffalo bayou, just above the junction of the San Jacinto river and the bayou. Some more beavers were driven up and killed and we went to cooking and eating.

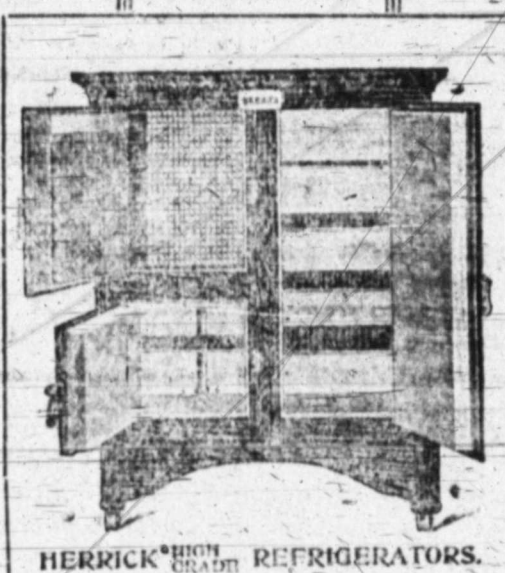

"Feasted on Bread.
"There was a body of Mexicans in a little grove about 200 yards north-east of us all the time we were cooking and eating, but they did not dare move on. We camped on Buffalo bayou, just above the junction of the San Jacinto river and the bayou. Some more beavers were driven up and killed and we went to cooking and eating.

FORT WORTH RUMOR WITHOUT FOUNDATION

A rumor that one prominent and wealthy Fort Worth man had shot and killed another of equal prominence in that city cannot be confirmed. The rumor gained currency here last night.

The Times this afternoon telephoned the Fort Worth Star-Telegram and that paper gave the information that it had investigated every claim and had found the rumor without the semblance of foundation.

The man supposed to have been killed left the city several days ago for Albuquerque, New Mexico, and answered a telegram from the Star-Telegram this afternoon saying he was alive and well.

CACTUS BECOMES VALUABLE PLANT

Chemists and Stockmen Say It Has Many Possibilities—Pulp for Making Paper.

San Antonio, Texas, April 21.—The cactus which grows so spontaneously over the southwest Texas and many parts of the west appears to have unlimited possibilities. Mr. Burbank, by his processes of nature shocking, has denuded it of its spines and more than doubled the size of the blade. This makes it fine forage for stock, both in the green state and in the form of ensilage. Recent experiments made by chemists prove that the juice of this plant, when properly treated, is highly productive of alcohol and that the residue makes splendid paper. It is also understood that several by-products obtained in the process of making alcohol have valuable commercial uses.

It has been demonstrated by the stockmen of southwest Texas for years that the native cactus, when the spines have been singed off, is an excellent stock food, particularly at the season of the year when range is scarce. In a number of localities, herds of cattle have been fed for two months or more at a time entirely upon cactus from which the spines had been singed. The animals not only lived, but thrived and gained weight upon this food, proving conclusively that it is highly nutritious. The discovery that it is a fit plant for animals' food came about by herdsmen noting that deer ate the leaves of the cactus plant when the spines had been singed off by some hunter's or trapper's campfire. To use the exact words of one of the pioneers: "The deer started something and then we concluded to try cactus on cows."

It is understood that a number of stockmen in southwest Texas who have been feeding singed cactus will apply the Burbank method and grow the plant extensively for forage purposes. But while this is going on, other experiments are being made and it is predicted that much of the paper in the near future will be made from the pulp of this plant.
