Edwards stomps Duke

Former governor regains Louisiana office

■ With 88 percent of the vote counted, Edwin Edwards leads 60 percent to 40 percent.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Democrat Edwin Edwards resoundingly defeated former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke on Saturday, reclaiming the governorship he had lost in disgrace. The election riveted national attention on Louisiana, where many voters saw the contest as a tragic choice between a racist and a rogue.

With 88 percent of precincts reporting, Edwards had 913,916 votes, or 60 percent, to Duke's 604,169 votes, or 40 percent.

Duke, a Republican state representative, was repudiated by most state and national GOP leaders, including President Bush, because of his white supremacist background. In addition to leading the Klan, he at one time publicly embraced Nazi ideology.

Edwards, claiming victory before jubilant supporters at his headquarters, declared: "Tonight, Louisiana became first, first to turn back the merchant of hate, the master of deceit.

"Tonight is the first night of our journey to decency, to honesty, to fairness, to justice, to respect, to honor, and to hard work. ...

"I will make our people proud of our state, proud of our governor," added Edwards, who will be serving an unprecedented fourth term. His first three terms were marked with scandal, including his trial on federal corruption charges. He was acquitted.

"We lost, but the message goes out loud and clear

School problem

An 11-year-old girl at Crockett Elementary School was the victim of sexual harassment in recent weeks. While a young girl being the target of inappropriate sexual behavior is nothing new, the perpetrator was a fellow sixth grader at Crockett Elementary School — a 12-year-old boy. The boy was cited with simple assault following a school carnival where the incident occurred./1C

BRUSH WITH THE LAW

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Chief Warrant Office Jim Tenison, armed with an arrest warrant, knocks on a door of an unidentified local resident. Some taken in will go before the judge; others straight to jail.

Violations lead to lower court

Class C misdemeanors and the lower courts where they are heard can lead to a jury trial or jail time.

In the first of a two-part series, municipal and the county Justice of the Peace courts are examined, as well as the roles of warrant officers, constables and bail bondsmen.

TALE of the TICKET

On Sept. 24 Midlander Charles Preston was clocked driving nine miles over the speed limit in a school zone near Midland High School.

The geologist insisted he was innocent.

Preston later appeared before Municipal Court Judge Gordon Marcum II where he pleaded not guilty and requested a jury trial.

Six weeks later he got one.

Before six of his peers, Preston attempted to prove the officer in question had neither the proper training nor understanding of how to operate a radar gun and that other factors came into play when he was measured traveling 29 miles an hour.

Five hours after it had been selected, the jury returned a guilty verdict, costing Preston $200 plus court costs.

"We need to control speeding, but we don't need to increase the number of radar fines.... The whole system is a revenue-generating process," Preston said. "I don't think I should have to pay a radar tax, but that's the way it

Bond agents promise offenders will return

Some people collect art.

Some coins.

And some people, for one reason or another, collect tickets.

For those using their glove compartment as a filing cabinet for parking tickets, speeding tickets and other Class C misdemeanor citations, the real surprise comes the day of the warrant "hit."

If a warrant has been issued by the court on a charge of failure to appear, police can and will take the person to jail where misdemeanor offenders are treated the same as felons — booked, fingerprinted and photographed.

For those taken in, posting bond is the only remaining option.

"If you're in jail there are two ways you can be bonded. You can put up cash and be immediately released or you can go through a bail bondsman," said Odell Walker, manager of Red's Bail Bond Co. in Midland.

But how does a bondsman work and what does it cost to get out of a jail cell?

Bondsmen put up what's known as a "surety bond," which in effect involves one person who promises to answer for a debt to a third person on behalf of a second person.

Seminars to explore pre-WW II conditions

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The economic, social, political, diplomatic, and military issues leading to U.S. involvement in World War II will be explored in the international symposium, "Prelude to Pearl Harbor: The Interwar Years," Dec. 3-6 at the Holiday Inn Convention Center in Midland.

"We want to look into the conditions, assumptions and contributing factors that went into the attack on Pearl Harbor" on Dec. 7, 1941," said David Smith, co-chairman of the symposium, sponsored by The American Airpower Heritage Museum.

"It is going to be a very broad-ranging, broadly focused, symposium."

The symposium is attracting some of the nation's leading historians, political scientists, writers and scholars who are versed in various aspects of the war, Smith said. It is drawing flying aces and engineers who designed some of America's foremost World War II warplanes.

Reservations for attending any portion of the symposium may be made by telephoning Midland College at 685-4756. Registration fee for the four-day symposium is $275. However, tickets to individual events may be purchased for $5 to $50.

Principal symposium speakers include:

The symposium is sponsored by the American Airpower Heritage Museum at Midland International Airport and by Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene.

Coordinating the four-day event are David Smith, executive director of the Midland-based Abell-Hanger Foundation, and Barbara Breier, director of Academic Development for Hardin-Simmons University.

Arrangement for attending the symposium may be made by telephone Midland College at 685-4756.

More than 35 papers have been selected to be presented first-annual American Airpower Heritage Museum symposium, "Prelude to Pearl Harbor: The Interwar Years."

Boy found chained dies Saturday

FORT WORTH (AP) — A 13-year-old boy found chained and starving in his family's trailer two weeks ago died Saturday, officials said.

Stephen Hill had been in a coma since his mother called authorities to their suburban White Settlement home Nov. 3. He never regained consciousness.

The boy's parents had kept him on a plastic chain, out of reach of food, for at least six months, police said.

When he was found, the bruised, 55-pound boy had suffered a heart attack and had a blood infection caused by malnutrition, said doctors at Cook-Fort Worth Children's Medical Center.

An autopsy was scheduled.

"I figured that it was inevitable, but I was hoping for better," said White Settlement Police Detective David Place, who headed the department's investigation.

State District Judge Scott Moore on Friday refused to allow the boy to be disconnected from a life-support system, as had been requested by a doctor who said his condition had worsened.

His parents, Jay and Linda Hill, remained jailed Saturday on charges of injury to a child. The father, an engineer, also was charged with aggravated kidnapping. Bond was $200,000 for Hill and $100,000 for Mrs. Hill.

Prosecutor David Montague said earlier it was unlikely charges against the couple would be upgraded to murder if the boy died. Deliberately withholding food doesn't meet the legal criteria for a murder charge, he said.

The couple's other child, a 12-year-old boy, has been in state custody since the parents were arrested.

The couple, managers of a mobile home park, told police they kept the boy on a plastic chain and padlock out of reach of food to discipline him.

U.S. caused extra deaths, group claims

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — The United States and its allies caused needless civilian deaths during the Persian Gulf War with indiscriminate bombings while projecting an image of a "squeaky clean" war, a human rights group says.

Middle East Watch, in a report to be released Sunday, says the allies violated international conventions by, among other things, bombing during the daytime, using bombs less precise than they had to, and choosing targets that worsened food shortages and the health conditions of civilians.

The report, made available to The Associated Press in Nicosia, also faults the allies for the silence they maintained about civilian casualties in Iraq, despite "persuasive evidence" of the bloodshed. It does not estimate the number of civilian casualties.

"During the war, military briefers emphasized repeatedly the allies' observance of the rules of war and persistently projected the image of a squeaky clean bombing campaign," the report says.

In Washington, Pentagon spokeswoman Jan Walker said "If we feel the allegations warrant a response, we will make one. The air war was conducted in accordance with the law of armed conflict.

"We carefully selected targets to minimize collateral damage and civilian casualties. Many times American pilots put themselves at greater risk than necessary to avoid civilian injuries and collateral damage," she said.

The report also contains harsh criticism of Iraq's missile attacks against population centers in Saudi Arabia and Israel. But the bulk of the report involves the allied actions.

Middle East Watch said its findings were primarily based on interviews with Iraqi residents of various nationalities who fled to Jordan during the bombing.

The report evaluates allied conduct under the laws of war, primarily the standards of the First Additional Protocol of 1977 to the 1949 Geneva conventions.

Hill wants law to meet needs

CORONADO, Calif. (AP) — Anita Hill, the law professor who provoked a national debate by accusing Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment, urged 1,000 legislators to tighten laws against such abuse.

"The law has to do more," Hill said. "It needs to be more responsive to our experiences. ... What we are seeking really is equality."

Wild applause, table-banging and chants of "We believe Anita" punctuated her speech Friday at a national forum of women state lawmakers.

The event was sponsored by the Center for the American Woman and Politics at Rutgers University. Organizers said Hill was not paid for her speech but her travel costs were covered.

Replying to written questions, Hill said she wants to educate people about women's issues. Women must work together to help victims of sexual harassment come forward and find ways of "slaying the beast," she said.

Current laws have failed women, she said, in urging the legislators to draft bills offering real protection. She also said courts should focus on the behavior of abusive employers instead of putting victims on trial.

"After my own experience, I can understand why sexual harassment goes unreported," said Hill, who was accused by Thomas supporters of lying and fantasizing.

Hill said she has received letters from women harassed on their jobs as long ago as 60 years but who never talked about it before.

Baker stresses human rights in talks with China leaders

TOKYO (NYT) — Leading an Asian push by the Bush administration, Secretary of State James A. Baker III pressed Chinese leaders on human rights, trade and nuclear weapons proliferation issues Saturday, the second day of the highest-level U.S. talks in Beijing in nearly three years.

"We have some difficult issues that we need to discuss face to face," Baker said during a brief session for TV and still cameras before talks with the Communist Party's general secretary, Jiang Zemin. The men avoided each other's eyes and did not shake hands.

In Tokyo, meanwhile, U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills put Japan on notice that world trade would be hampered and Tokyo would be blamed for it if Japan doesn't give up its ban on imported rice over the coming weeks.

The third member of the U.S. team, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, will spend this week in Seoul and then Tokyo discussing security arrangements with U.S. allies that together host some 90,000 American troops in Japan and South Korea.

After two years of focusing on change and challenge in the Soviet Union, the Middle East and Eastern Europe, the administration's new world order has embraced Asia.

President Bush himself had been due to visit the region toward the end of the month until he postponed the trip two weeks ago. White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Friday that the trip is being rescheduled. U.S. and Japanese officials have said in recent days that Bush might reset the visit for late December.

The flurry of cabinet-level officials visiting Asia coincides with the first comprehensive outline of U.S. policy in the region since the end of the Cold War.

That outline, delivered in a speech here last week by Baker, recognized the advantages of two-way trade across the Pacific. It now tops $300 billion a year — nearly one-third larger than trans-Atlantic trade — though Americans are pressing for more balance.

Urging more Japanese concessions on agricultural trade, Hills in Tokyo said, "It is truly beyond my comprehension that Japan would contemplate causing a failure of the Uruguay Round" of talks.

Lennon guitar brings $70,000

CHAMBLEE, Ga. (AP) — An acoustic guitar used by John Lennon in the Beatles' early days was valued at $300,000 but went for $70,000 at an auction Saturday.

Several hundred pieces of Fab Four memorabilia were sold by the Great Gatsby's auction house.

President of the auction house, Dave Tribble, said the economy was to blame for the low price on the Lennon guitar. It was purchased by a rock 'n' roll memorabilia collector from Colorado who asked to remain anonymous, Tribble said.

A harmonica used by Lennon to record the group's first album sold for $6,500. It had been expected to bring between $3,500 and $5,000.

The guitar was the priciest item sold during the two-day auction that began Friday.

Also auctioned was a portrait of the Beatles painted by Lennon's first wife, Cynthia. She had presented the painting to Scottish Rite Children's Hospital in Atlanta 10 years ago.

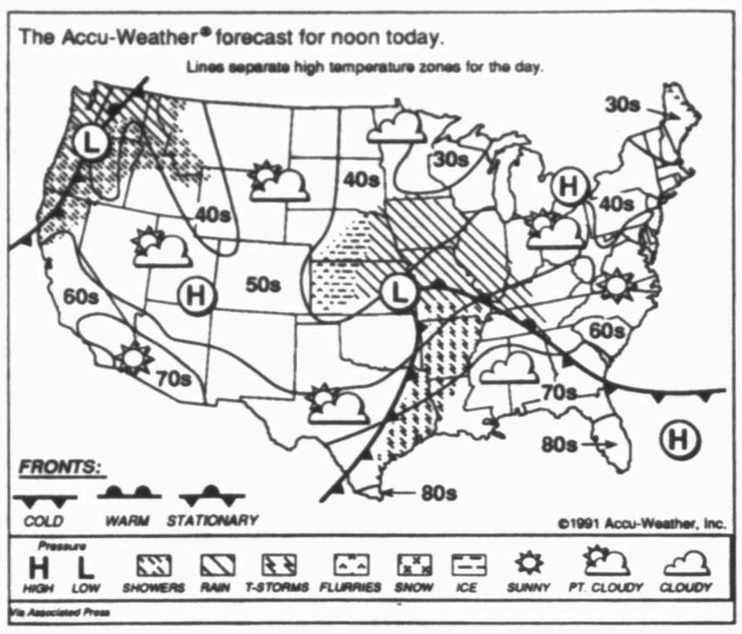
WEATHER SUMMARY



Sunny, warmer days ahead

Staff Report

Today should be mostly sunny with a high in the mid-60s, according to the National Weather Service.

Winds are expected to be from the south at 10 to 20 mph and gusty. Tonight, the sky should clear with a low temperature near 40 degrees.

Monday should be sunny with a high in the low 70s. Through the week, temperatures should drop slightly, with mid-week lows in the 30s, highs in the 50s.

Saturday's high temperature was 64, compared with the record high for that date of 86, set in 1963. The low was 53, much above the record low of 18 degrees set on that date in 1959.

STATE

A weak cold front triggered showers and thunderstorms across North Texas on Saturday. Skies were mostly cloudy to partly cloudy elsewhere, with sunshine in far West Texas.

Moist air from the Gulf of Mexico continued to flow into North Texas because of a sustained winds from the south or southeast. However, relatively drier air was behind the line of thunderstorms in the western region of North Texas. Winds just behind the line of thunderstorms were west to northwesterly.

Wind speeds were mainly 10 to 20 miles an hour with gusts near thunderstorms. Guadalupe Pass reported gusts to 56 mph.

Temperatures warmed into the upper 60s to the mid 70s ahead of the front and mid 50s to mid 60s behind the line, with 30s in the Panhandle and 80s in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Forecasters said West Texas would have decreasing cloudiness Sunday with mostly sunny skies by Monday. Highs were to be in the lower 50s in the Panhandle to the upper 60s in the Concho Valley, Edwards Plateau and Big Bend lowlands. Highs Monday were to be in the lower 60s in the Panhandle to upper 70s in the Big Bend.

NATION

A winter-like storm spread heavy snow over New Mexico and Colorado on Saturday. Another storm system whipped the Northwest with rain and strong wind.

The southwest mountains of Colorado were the hardest hit. Wolf Creek Pass received 17 inches of new snow for a total of 29 inches in 24 hours. In New Mexico, the storm dropped 14 inches of snow south of Tijeras.

The storm threatened to usher heavy snow into the Plains, the National Weather Service said.

Gale-force wind prevailed along the northern half of the Pacific Coast, with 70 mph gusts reported in Washington state. Rain fell over western Washington state, western Oregon and northwestern Calfornia.

Rain fell across much of the southern Plains to Missouri.

Strong northwesterly winds behind a cold front ushered cold weather into the Northeast. Showers along the cold front were scattered along the middle Atlantic Coast and southern New England.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Foss will speak at noon, Friday, Dec. 6. Admission to the luncheon is $20.

A Medal of Honor winner, Foss was the Marine Corps' second-ranking ace who scored 26 aerial victories against Japanese pilots over the Pacific. The Marine's top ace, with 28 kills, was Gregory "Pappy" Boyington, who flew the Curtiss-Wright P-40 Warhawk with the "Flying Tigers" and later piloted the Chance Vought F4U Corsair when he commanded the VMF-214 "Blacksheep" squadron in the Pacific.

Foss "did a marvelous job" in the war, says fellow Marine Corps ace Archie Donahue. Foss flew the Grumman F4F Wildcat fighter, the U.S. Navy's and the Marines' premier fighter at the beginning of the war.

■ Dr. Tom Hatfield, University of Texas historian will discuss Japanese strategy at Pearl Harbor.

Admission to his noon luncheon talk on Wednesday, Dec. 4, is $20.

■ Edward L. "Ned" Beach, naval historian and author of "Run Silent, Run Deep" about submarine warfare and "The United States Navy," a 200-year history of America's sea power. Beach's book on the U.S. Navy "expresses the almost mystical spirit of the navy" and "has captured the eternal soul of the navy," according to the Washington Post.

Admission to Beach's noon presentation on Thursday, Dec. 5, is $20.

The symposium will lead into the grand opening and dedication of the Confederate Air Force International Headquarters and the American Airpower Heritage Museum at Midland International Airport at 11 a.m. on Saturday, Dec. 7.

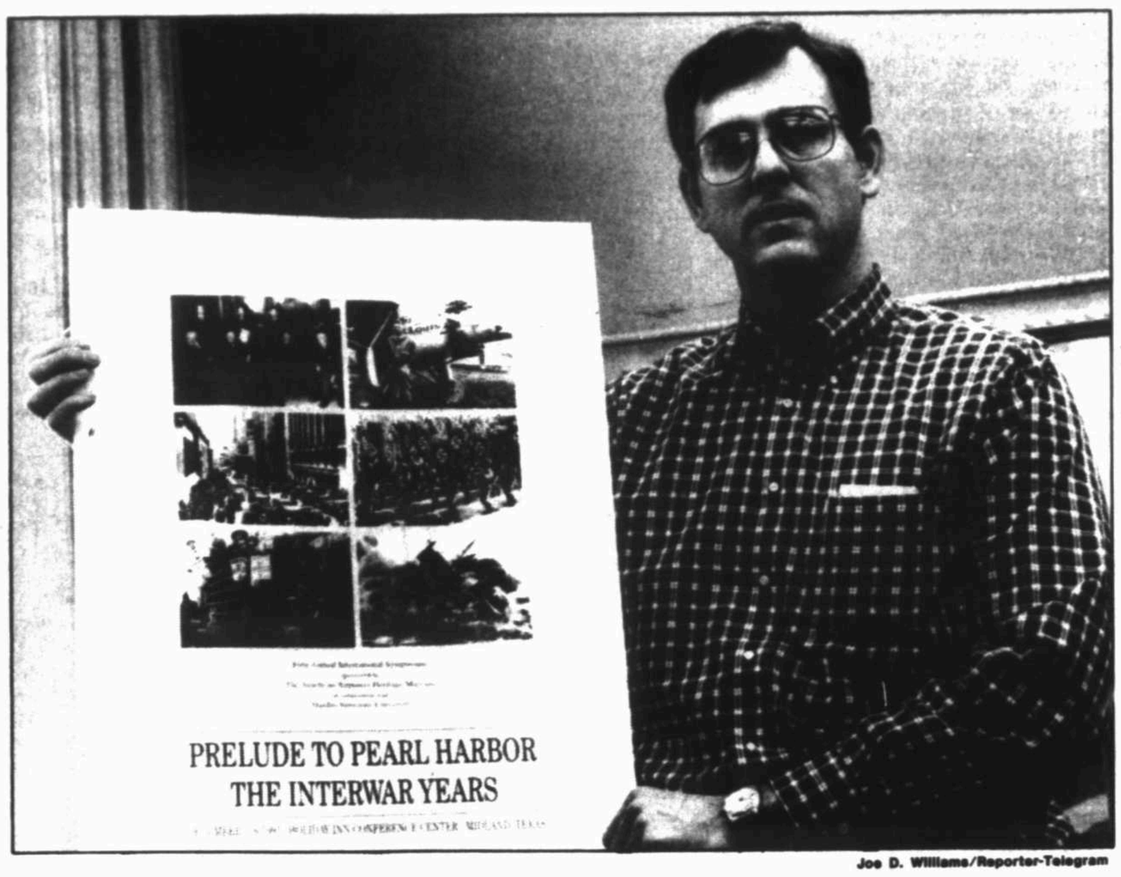
At 11:55 a.m., 50 years to the minute after the Japanese aerial attack on Pearl Harbor, silence will fall over the CAF headquarters to honor those who lost their lives at Pearl Harbor, those who survived and to commemorate the U.S. war effort.

The silence will be followed by the playing of "Star-Spangled Banner" and the "Bugle Call."

At 12:55 p.m., the CAF Flying Museum's "Tora! Tora! Tora!" Pearl Harbor squadron will re-enact the attack of Pearl Harbor in World War II-vintage fighters and bombers.

"There's no other museum that is able to do that," said Joe Mabee, the CAF's chief of staff.

The CAF's Ghost Squadron is the only flying museum in the world capable of that Pearl Harbor dramatization, Mabee said.



Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

David Smith, executive director of the Abell-Hanger Foundation, is a co-chairman of the symposium preceding the American Airpower Heritage Museum opening.

A major benefactor of the CAF and the American Airpower Heritage Museum, Mabee said the lectures and the more than 35 academic papers to be presented in the four-day symposium will be published in book form.

The symposium is an annual series sponsored by the American Airpower Heritage Museum.

The museum's 1991 theme, now its initial development, is "Wars and Rumors of War: 1931 to 1941."

Subsequent themes on each of the 50th anniversaries of the war years will be keyed to war preparations and on the home front, to major air, sea and land battles linked to the role of air power and Victory in Europe (VE-Day) and Victory over Japan (VJ-Day). The impact of the war on post-war air power and on America and the world will be explored in the symposiums after 1995.

Symposiums from 1992 through 1995 will examine "major air battles and historical events, including the 1942 Tokyo air raid commanded by Jimmy Doolittle, the battle of Midway in 1942, the D-Day Invasion in 1944, and the end of the war, and the dropping of the atomic bomb," noted Smith, executive director of the Midland-based Abell-Hanger Foundation.

For millions of Americans, the World War II years were "central in their lives," Smith said.

"They go back and remember the sacrifices that were made by their friends and the entire country to win that war."

Fifty years later, "It's a time for remembrance," he said. "There is a lot of sadness for any of those family members that lost someone. Many did. Many made tremendous sacrifices."

Barbara Breier, co-chairman of the symposium, noted the importance of insight into the world's "economic, social, political, and diplomatic" situations prior to outbreak of the war.

"You have got to know that background to understand the military actions," said Breier, who is director of Academic Development at Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene.

"The goal of the symposium has been to bring together scholars, researchers, students and participants of World War II and engage them in a dialogue and a discussion about the events surrounding World War II," she said.

"By focusing people's attention and making them aware of these events and bringing scholars together to discuss their research and their knowledge base, you further increase people's awareness of this period," Breier said. "You pique their interest and keep it alive for our children and grandchildren. And you help shape some of the ways that history is eventually recorded."

However, observed CAF spokesman Richard "Ish" Ingram, "The military has the advantage of being able to win or lose and blame politics."

Ingram is executive director of the CAF and the American Airpower Heritage Group, which includes the American Airpower Heritage Museum, the American Airpower Heritage Flying Museum (CAF Ghost Squadron), and the American Airpower Heritage Foundation.

LOUISIANA: Edwards regains governor's post

across Louisiana and this whole country," he told disappointed but cheering campaign workers at his Baton Rouge headquarters. "... We have to begin to heal the liberal welfare system that is causing crime and drugs.

"Right doesn't win every battle, but right always triumphs in the end," he added.

Speaking of his future in politics, Duke, whose term in the Legislature expires this year, said, "I have no plans — no plans to run for any other office. But I have to say 'at this time.'" There has been speculation he might run for Congress, the Senate, or challenge Bush in some GOP presidential primaries next year.

More than a 72 percent turnout of 2.2 million registered voters had been expected, election officials said. A record number of absentee votes was cast — nearly 78,000.

Edwards captured majorities of the vote in areas where Duke had to do well, including parishes — Louisiana's equivalent of counties — taken by Duke in the Oct. 19 primary. In the largest parishes, Orleans and East Baton Rouge, Edwards swamped Duke.

Duke had called East Baton Rouge a pivitol parish and said he had to at least split the vote. With 162 of 243 precincts reporting, Edwards had 58,840 to 32,018 for Duke.

Duke also lost his home parish of Jefferson. In majority-black Orleans parish, which includes the city of New Orleans, Edwards had 41,087 votes in partial returns to Duke's 5,336.

Duke was doing well in the rural parishes of north Louisiana, which was expected. But two-thirds of the state's population is in south Louisiana.

Both Duke and Edwards had tried to convince voters they had reformed, abandoned their past and atoned for earlier indiscretions.

The campaign, with its explosive racial and political implications, drew attention around the world — and sent ripples of fear throughout the nation.

Bush and other national political leaders of both parties denounced Duke, as did Louisiana's business, labor and political establishment. But some political experts, gauging the disenchantment of Louisiana's voters, said those denunciations only helped Duke's cause.

Tehran Times reports American, British hostages to be freed

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — The Tehran Times says in a report to be released Sunday that two Western hostages, an American and a Briton, will soon be freed from captivity in Lebanon.

The report in the English-language Iranian newspaper did not say when the release might take place. It said the kidnappers "would most probably give priority to a British hostage."

The Tehran Times has been accurate in previous reports predicting the release of hostages.

The only Briton still held in Lebanon is Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite, 52, who disappeared in Beirut Jan. 20, 1987, while trying to negotiate the release of American hostages.

Four Americans are still held hostage by Shiite Muslim fundamentalists linked to Iran. The longest held is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who was abducted March 16, 1985.

"Our correspondent reported that the captors of Western hostages will release two Western hostages, one British and one American, on humanitarian grounds," the Tehran Times report said.

Waite's family reacted cautiously. His brother, David, said: "We'll wait and see. That's all we can do at the moment."

The Tehran Times also said United Nations envoy Giandomenico Picco had arrived in Damascus, Syria, to pursue efforts to end the saga of the foreign captives in Lebanon.

Syria is the main power broker in Lebanon, with 40,000 troops deployed in the country, and is the first stopover for most released hostages.

U.N. officials in New York confirmed Friday that Picco had left for the Middle East to pursue efforts to free the hostages but did not say where exactly he was headed.

Four hostages — two Americans and two Britons — have been freed since August, when Perez de Cuellar began efforts to institute a three-way swap involving the Western captives, Israelis missing in Lebanon and Shiite prisoners held by Israel.

In the piecemeal release process, Israel has received the body of one soldier and information that two others are dead. It has released 66 Arabs and sent home the bodies of nine Shiite Muslim guerrillas.

An Iranian envoy who visited Beirut last week said Tehran hoped all hostages would be freed by the end of November.

Mohammad Kazem Khonsari, head of the Iranian Foreign Ministry's Middle East department, made the statement on Wednesday at news conference at the Iranian Embassy in Beirut.

Yeltsin's decrees strip Gorbachev's economic powers

MOSCOW (AP) — Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin, in a sweeping set of decrees released Saturday, claimed control over the Soviet money supply and trade in oil, gold, diamonds and foreign currency.

The 10 presidential decrees and government resolutions would effectively transfer responsibility for the economy from Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's central government to Yeltsin's Russian Federation, the largest republic.

The decrees fit Yeltsin's plan to move Russia toward a free market with the kind of "shock therapy" used in Poland. He has promised to free prices before the end of the year on all but a few staples, such as bread, milk and vodka.

The decrees also make significant steps toward allowing the ruble to be traded freely on international markets. Western leaders have said a freely convertible ruble is a prerequisite for large-scale foreign investment in the Soviet economy.

Salaries also will rise under the decrees, and Yeltsin has said he will free them after Jan. 1.

Hyperinflation is widely expected to follow the freeing of wages and prices. Food prices already have jumped 50 to 100 percent in farmers' markets in the past month,

TALE OF THE TICKET

It's judge or jail when law comes calling

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

With 15,000 outstanding warrants and more issued every day, it is little wonder why Jim Tenison stays busy.

As chief officer of the city's warrant division, Tenison and his co-workers search for those who ignore attempts by the court to have them appear before the judge.

Some have seen him already, promising to pay their fines over a period of months while acqnfrontation neither side wants.

It's raining this day and Tenison is armed with a batch of arrest warrants, determined not to let the morning slip away.

Some will be arrested at work, like one disc jockey — the officer took him off the air and straight to court.

Others will be caught off guard, at home, like Linda (not her real name) who asked the municipal court nearly a year ago for time to pay her warrants and tickets.

After one payment, another speeding ticket and several attempts by the court to contact her, more warrants were issued.

Time has run out.

Tenison knocks on her door, identifies himself and proceeds to verify her identify, which matches the warrants.

Linda is arrested and taken to court, where it is determined she is unable to pay the full amount of fines, which is now required by the judge because she failed to live up to her end of the earlier bargain.

After several futile attempts to call family members, Linda is taken to the Midland County Detention Center, where she will sit until someone can raise enough cash to satisfy the court.

"These warrants entitle us to literally go out and arrest everyone that's on warrant, but that's not practical," Tenison said. "It's physically impossible due to time and personnel constraints."

So it becomes a selective process — one that points the finger generally to the flagrant abuser, the one who has no intent of paying or returning to the court in the near future.

Municipal Court Judge Gordon Marcum II said he advises people who have unpaid tickets — including those for parking — not to hold them.

"If their tickets get too high, we also have the option of having their car hauled in because of non-payment."

Tenison said the court system gives residents more than enough time to clear up their tickets as well as provide an option other than being picked up, booked, fingerprinted and photographed and winding up in a jail cell.

Each month, the city system serves 900 warrants between three employees. "But we have several methods by which we attempt to clear them," Tenison said.

The first is the computer-generated warrant, which is issued for failure to appear in court on a traffic violation, or other Class C offenses ranging from simple assault to criminal trespassing.

When the warrant pops up, the division uses direct mail to notify offenders that they are wanted in court.

"We get a fairly good response to those notices," Tenison said. "I'd say 40 or 50 percent come down at that point and take care of it."

Those failing to respond are then called, either at home or at work. "We then tell them it would be to their advantage to come down and take care of it, and a lot do."

If all else fails, Tenison said officers will go knock on doors. For those not home, a "Notice of Arrest" is left behind.

"And that means just what it says. If that fails to get their attention then we're left with no choice but to find them, arrest them and put them in jail," he said.

If court happens to be in session, those arrested are taken straight to the judge, who then decides how the case will be disposed.

"But technically speaking, once they're on warrant and arrested, the fine is then due in full," he said.

Much of what occurs in the municipal system is similar at the county end, where offenders are taken before Justice of the Peace court.

In the case of Class C misdemeanors — those offenses that require fine payments — the officer who writes the ticket is the same one responsible for the arrest of the person who fails to appear on a given date.

Traffic violators who ignore warrants are arrested either by the Department of Public Safety or the Midland County Sheriff's Department.

Other Class C offenses and/or civil proceedings as well as more serious offenses — such as driving while intoxicated and bad checks — are handled by the office of Midland County Constable Ron Rice.

Although 50 percent of the 2,850 active warrants are related to check-writing offenses, the handling of those cases basically mirrors the warrant division process for the city.

"We serve all the civil processes for the justice court," Rice said. "We get all the small-claim suits and all the eviction notices as well as warrants on other Class C cases."

Like the Municipal Court, the constable's office sends out notices letting offenders know that a warrant has been issued for their arrest.

"We do that as a courtesy to them so that they won't be picked up on the job or off the street or arrested at another inopportune time," he said.

In the case of the constable's office, for the first nine months of 1991, of 2,026 criminal warrants issued, 1,691 were disposed of.

According to Municipal Court records, 10,838 warrants were issued during the past fiscal year. Of the thousands more issued during the past five years, the warrant division cleared 11,186 for the same-year period.

Both courts also have other duties.

In JP court, the constable must serve all civil processes related to small-claims court; and in the case of the city, subpoenas are served to reluctant witnesses who have been called to testify before the court.

Rice said it has been his experience that once people realize their position with the court, most will come in and either pay what they owe or talk with the judge.

"A good number just put it off because they don't have the cash . . . so they try to prolong it as long as possible," he said.

Like Class C offenses, Class Bs involving bad checks also are handled with a time lag built in before arrests are made by the constable officers.

According to Rice, those writing bad checks receive four notices: one from the bank, which informs them the check is no good; from the merchant, who must send a certified letter; from the county attorney, who lets them know the check must be made good; and then from the constable, who lets them know a warrant has been issued for their arrest.

Municipal Court deals only with Class C offenses, which are primarily fines that can be worked out through the court.

"I'm willing to work with them and even lower their payments, but I want to see some effort on their part," Marcum said.

The judge recalled one person who came to see him who had three citations, which eventually led to a warrant for his arrest.

"He promised to come in and didn't. His fines went from $350 to $560. In the meantime, he added three more tickets, which tacked on even more so his fines went from $560 to $945."

Marcum said those who agree to pay the court and then ignore that agreement are only looking for trouble — even jail time.

Is it fair?

"Well, sometimes it's the only way to get their attention," he said. "It all depends on the situation."

Tenison said he won't drive to Houston for a few tickets, but if a person lives in Lamesa and has been building them up, that's a different matter.

To illustrate his point, Tenison said one recent arrest involved a resident with 34 Class C offenses who was doing time in San Angelo on a car theft charge.

Total fines: $4,000.

"The man ended up serving 40 days," he said. "That was on 17 warrants and 17 failures to appear (in court). The booking procedure is the same on failure to pay parking tickets (with warrants issued) as it is for a felony offense. . . . You get mugged, printed, searched and put in a cell."

TICKET: Class C can mean jail

was decided."

When it comes to a brush with the law, most people find themselves on the receiving end of what is known as a Class C misdemeanor.

It could be just a parking ticket or failure to provide proof of insurance — some of which can be dismissed, some of which can result in fines — but there are literally hundreds of such offenses on the books.

In the city of Midland, police filed 28,109 non-parking misdemeanors for the first nine months of 1991, covering everything from speeding to failure to wear a safety belt. Officers also wrote 27,215 parking tickets.

Most offenses are taken care of by mail or in-person at the city's Municipal Court, where a daily line can be seen forking over thousands of dollars in fines or arranging time payments over a period of months.

Some choose to see the judge, where they plead no-contest or guilty to the charge, at which time the fine is set and payment or other arrangements, such as attending defensive driving school, are made.

In other cases, the defendant has the option of a jury trial or a trial (alone) before a judge, where the facts are heard and a verdict is rendered.

It is a simple enough process — one that keeps both the lower courts in the city and county busy enough to require a full-time warrant division employed by the municipal end and a full-time constable office on the Justice of Peace court side.

"I'd say we see about 2,000 people a month," said Municipal Court Judge Robin Smith, who five years ago instituted a film on defendant rights that is shown before several daily court sessions.

On the day of Preston's hearing, Smith, president of the Texas Municipal Court Association, was busy juggling four trials in order to make a speaking engagement the following day.

But that is unusual, according to the judge, because many of those who ask for trials either fail to show up, thus forfeiting their cash bond, or settle with the City Attorney's office before a jury is ever selected.

"If they do show up, some of them have had a sufficient amount of time to cool off from the time they were issued the ticket," Smith said. "They don't want a trial at that point. They just want to pay it."

Of the total number of cases heard on the municipal end, Smith estimated that 50 percent appear before him, 40 percent pay by mail and 10 percent are never seen, but later issued arrest warrants.

It is no small amount of money.

Smith's budget — which includes the operation of two courts and a full-time warrant division — was set this fiscal year at $798,139.

"The reason it's so high is that we do run our own warrant division, unlike a number of other courts," he said.

Of the $345,715 collected in court costs, $311,145 went to the state for such programs as the victims of crime fund and the training of other municipal judges that make up the lower court system. Other costs are returned to the city's general fund.

At the JP court, which is divided between Judges Robert Pine and Keith Jobe, total court fees collected for first six months of 1991 amounted to $27,102; total fines, $227,185.

While thousands of dollars are paid in fines by Midland residents each year, a number also choose, for one reason or another, to pile up tickets, leaving themselves open to arrest and jail.

Municipal Associate Judge Marcum said those who fail to pay their fines and eventually ignore arrest warrants are asking for trouble if they fail to go to court and work something out with the judge.

"It happens. People get tickets and forget about them. They're pulled over for a (failed) brake light or something and an officer finds an outstanding warrant and takes them to jail."

Marcum and others interviewed for this series said they don't understand why people ignore their court dates and take the risk of being booked, photographed and fingerprinted even after they've been notified by mail.

Danna Gallegos, an assistant city attorney who spent time with the municipal court, said ignoring a ticket only leaves open the possibility of larger problems later.

"My position is, 'Look, we're all adults here. We all have to accept responsibility. If you forget something, then you have to accept the consequences.' I would expect no less of my own self in that same situation, so I don't think it's too much to ask."

Marcum said what many people don't understand is that when they sign a (traffic) ticket, it's a promise to the court that they will appear in 10 to 14 days of its issuance, or make an immediate appearance after they've been contacted on non-traffic offenses.

"So now, you might not only have a speeding ticket, but face a separate charge on failure to appear," he said.

For example, in the case of a $50 speeding ticket, a failure to appear notice carries a $200 fine, plus two $35 warrants on each offense for a total fine of $320.

Although costs on certain offenses differ between the city and the county, compounding charges do not, whether it involves Midland police or the Department of Public Safety.

"I can understand it if they're out of work and they have no way to pay, but I can't read their minds" Marcum said. "They have to come in and explain (their situation) to me. What I try to do is at least get them started. I'm willing to work with them, even lower their payments, but I need to see some effort on their part."

Agreeing was Jobe.

"We cannot sentence someone to jail," he said. "We have to give them an opportunity to pay it out. If they are unable to, then we have another hearing where we summon the people in to show cause why they haven't paid. If it's determined they are unable to pay, then there are other things we look into. Municipal Court does the same thing."

Both courts also give defendants, particularly those with huge fines, the option of "laying out" their offenses in jail, where they are credited by the Midland County Detention Center at a rate of $100 a day.

Like others interviewed, Jobe said ample opportunities are given all residents before an arrest warrant is ever issued by the court system.

"If they're willing to come in and talk with us, we're not going to throw them in jail," he said.

Despite that fact, on the city end there are more than 15,000 outstanding warrants, in addition to thousands of other cases that are filed each year in both the city and county.

"In a lot of ways, it's (lower courts) the only contact with the judicial system that many of these people will ever see," Smith said.

What concerns him and others is the perception that the lower courts are just another arm of the police.

"That's a misconception, at least as far as this court is concerned. We certainly try to do our best to be fair and impartial," Smith said. "A lot of people who come in here don't think they'll get a fair shake . . . that the police and the judges are in cahoots. But I think anyone who has gone through the system puts those misconceptions aside."

BAIL: Bonders explain process

(From 1A)

The bond is signed by the defendant and the "surety" or, in this case, the bondsman, who both promise the defendant will show up on a desginated court date.

Debbie Brown with 24-Hour Bail Bonds in Midland said a surety bond is collateral put up by the company, which consists of assets such as land, homes or cash.

"A surety bond is a legal document. . . . As I explain it to people, it's kind of like a check that we'll leave with the Sheriff's Office assuring that the defendant will appear in court," Ms. Brown said.

If the defendant appears in court, the bond is returned.

"But if the defendant runs off and we don't hear from him again, that check (bond) becomes cash. We then end up going to court and paying the court costs on a forfeiture."

In the case of a $500 bond, which is typically assessed on a driving-while-intoxicated charge, if a person fails to appear, the company is responsible for the $500 bond, in addition to whatever court costs are levied by the judge.

When a bail company is called, the bondsman will take a certain amount of personal information, usually related to how long the person has lived in a particular city, where he or she is employed and for how long, as well as the names and number of friends and relatives who can be contacted if the offender flees.

According to Rayshell Ford with Tall City Bail Bonds in Midland, the defendant is then quoted a fee, which is paid either by the person that is jailed or by friends or relatives.

That fee is a percentage of the bond that is determined by the bond amount, type of crime that allegedly has been committed and the past history of the defendant.

"Now, if it's a person we've dealt with in the past, we might give him a discount," Ms. Brown said. "If we've had a bad week and haven't done a lot of bonds, we might charge a little less to get the bonds coming in. It just all depends."

Ms. Ford said some of the common questions involving bondsmen have to do with the fees and procedures related to their release from jail.

"We explain to them if a fee is paid (for the bond), that fee is non-refundable . . . that it's the cost of getting them out of jail."

However, she said some people think that if their case is dismissed or if they're found not guilty the bonding fee will be returned to them.

Not true.

"Like I said," Ms. Ford said. "When you go through a bondsman, no matter how your case turns out, the money is non-refundable."

Another misconception, according to Ms. Brown and Ms. Ford, has to do with the bond itself.

"A lot of people think they have to pay the whole bond. Say it's $500. We tell them they have to come up with 10 percent of that. They do not pay for the bond. We post the bond and they pay us a fee. The bond is just to get them out of jail. That's where our collateral comes in. That's where we make our money," Ms. Brown said.

Bondsmen interviewed for this series said most scrapes with the law occur on weekends, usually between the hours of midnight and 6 a.m.

When a person is arrested, a bondsman cannot be called until they are booked into the jail.

"On weekends, sometimes they're backed up down there, so it might take six hours just for them to be booked before they can even call a bondsman."

In most cases, court dates will be set every Tuesday in municipal court and two weeks after the incident in Justice of the Peace court, unless a more serious felony charge is involved.

"When they're released, we tell them when their court date has been set and then notify them again ahead of time," Ms. Ford said.

Although most first-time offenders do make their court date, some don't, requiring the company to notify them again.

"Say you start at a $500 bond and you miss your court date. That is considered a bond forfeiture because you didn't show up for court. That bond is now $1,000," Ms. Ford said. "We can still get you out, but now because the bond has been raised the fee is a little higher."

And that, she said, is a common occurrence, either because the person forgot about the date or the bonding company failed to notify them again. "It's not always the case of a person trying to run."

Unfortunately, not all Class C offenders can be freed from jail.

According to Ms. Brown, those who have previously seen a judge and agreed to time payments but failed to make them are stuck in jail until they can come up with the total sum.

"At that point, bail bond is no longer an option," she said. "If they're picked up (on warrant) and put in jail, bond will not be set. They'll have to pay before they can get out."

Israeli predicts Palestinian will avoid charges

JERUSALEM (AP) — An Israeli Cabinet minister predicted Saturday that the government will not prosecute Palestinian spokeswoman Hanan Ashrawi for allegedly meeting PLO officials despite a police recommendation to do so.

Palestinian leaders and liberal Israelis have said prosecuting Mrs. Ashrawi would harm the U.S.-sponsored Middle East peace talks. The United States also sent a message to Israel urging that no legal action be taken against Mrs. Ashrawi, Israel television reported.

"In the end, Ashrawi will not be put on trial," said Health Minister Ehud Olmert.

He called the police recommendation, reported Friday by Israeli media, "wrong from the public point of view, from the point of view of timing and also not practical."

Israel bans contact with the Palestine Liberation Organization, which it considers a terrorist group. Conviction carries a maximum three-year sentence.

Mrs. Ashrawi, 45, an articulate English literature professor at Bir Zeit University in the West Bank, met frequently with Secretary of State James A. Baker III prior to the peace talks last month.

She gained international prominence as the Palestinian delegation's spokeswoman during the conference in Madrid, Spain.

She and another top Palestinian adviser, Faisal Husseini, have repeatedly said they are guided by the PLO, but have denied meeting with senior PLO officials.

Police based their recommendation to prosecute Mrs. Ashrawi mainly on an interview with Jordan Television in which she allegedly acknowledged that she met with PLO officials, radio reports said. They did not give a date for the interview.

Speaking on Israel army radio, Olmert indicated that attention given to the recommendation was itself harmful.

The government can decide either to pursue the recommendation or drop the case for lack of sufficient public interest.

According to news reports, State Attorney Dorit Beinish will decide next week whether to file charges against Mrs. Ashrawi. But after Olmert's comments, it appears unlikely charges will be filed.

"To a large extent, we identify her (Mrs. Ashrawi) with the PLO, and that was the reason why we didn't want her to be on the Palestinian delegation to Madrid," said Olmert. "Should we try her for meeting with herself?"

He added that the law was vague regarding the question of PLO supporters meeting with the organization's officials.

In other developments Saturday:

■ The army announced it will allow family visits beginning Monday to the southern Ketziot detention center, where thousands of Palestinian activists are jailed. The visits will be arranged with the help of the International Committee of the Red Cross.

■ The body of an Israeli army officer was found near the West Bank town of Tulkarem, Israel radio said. Reserve Cpt. Shlomo Naeh was found shot in the head inside his car. His weapon was discovered in the vehicle. The military said it is investigating.

University endures chaos in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The American University of Beirut, an oasis of learning in the turbulent Middle East for more than a century, is once more defying the extremists who have sought to close it down.

A car bomb explosion on Nov. 8, the university's 125th anniversary, wrecked its landmark College Hall, the library and other buildings. One person was killed and eight wounded.

The bombing came at a hopeful time for the university, with the end of the 15-year civil war last year signaling an apparent end to the violence, kidnappings and political divisions that scarred the campus.

Yet rather than frighten the school, the bombing renewed the determination to survive that kept it going throughout the civil war.

"The bombing triggered a wonderful, positive reaction on campus. It made AUB's survival a cause that everyone wants to support," said Marilyn Rashka, an American from Hatford, Wis., who taught English at the university and still lives in Beirut.

"It energized a worn-out faculty and inspired the students. The administration, accused of being lethargic, was suddenly on the scene and full of ideas," she said. "If this spirit continues ... AUB will survive another 125 years."

Classes resumed two days after the bombing, and many of the 5,000 students and 500 faculty members have helped sift through the rubble of the library to salvage books, manuscripts and microfilms.

The university's acting president, Ibrahim Salti, was in the United States when the bombing occurred, but said that when he returned two days later, financial donations were pouring in to help rebuild.

He said several engineering firms offered to help rebuild for free. Officials said College Hall, which housed the administrative offices, will be torn down once files have been recovered.

Yugoslav battles continue despite called cease-fire

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — Victorious federal forces hoisted Yugoslav flags Saturday over a key part of the defense around besieged Vukovar, dealing a stinging battlefield blow to Croatia as the latest cease-fire deadline passed.

It appeared the fall of Borovo Naselje, a village just north of Vukovar on the Danube River, and fighting in Vukovar itself doomed the truce, just like the previous dozen.

The European Community and the United Nations, both seeking an end to Europe's bloodiest conflict since World War II, have said that a firm cease-fire must be established before any peacekeeping troops are sent.

Both Croatia and the federal army have agreed to permit a peacekeeping force, but have established different conditions.

Army and Croatian officials met in Zagreb, the Croatian capital, on Saturday to discuss relief shipments to besieged Croatian cities including Vukovar and the withdrawal of the army from barracks in the republic. No agreements were reached.

After the 6 p.m. (11 a.m. CST) cease-fire deadline, heavy fighting was reported to be continuing in Vukovar, a city that has become a potent emblem of Croatia's defense against the Yugoslav army and Serbian insurgents opposed to Croatia's June 25 declaration of independence.

Thousands of people are living in basements because Vukovar has been almost leveled in the three-month siege. Serb-led forces are said to be no more than 200 yards from Vukovar's center.

Sihanouk says he would support genocide trial for Pol Pot

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (NYT) — Prince Norodom Sihanouk said on Saturday that he would support holding genocide trials for Pol Pot and other Khmer Rouge leaders responsible for the deaths of more than a million Cambodians in the 1970s.

The announcement by the prince, the country's former head of state and now chairman of a transitional council to lead the country to elections, was made the eve of the return to Phnom Penh by political associates of the Khmer Rouge. According to terms of the Cambodian peace treaty signed last month in Paris, the Khmer Rouge are to take part in a new coalition government.

But Sihanouk, who has been known as a man of fast-shifting alliances, made it clear on Saturday that he will work to prevent the Khmer Rouge, his rebel allies during the 12-year civil war against the Vietnamese-installed government, from securing any power in the government that is to be formed.

"I support 100 percent the idea of setting up a tribunal to judge, to condemn, the Khmer Rouge leaders, the ones who are responsible for the deaths of so many innocent people," the prince said at a boisterous two and a half hour news conference, his first since returning to Cambodia on Thursday from more than 12 years in exile.

"I don't trust them," the prince said of the Khmer Rouge, recalling that he was held virtual prisoner by them in the royal palace for more than two years in the late 1970s before being released into exile only days before the Vietnamese army overran Phnom Penh early in 1979.

In the hope of politically isolating the Khmer Rouge, the prince also disclosed on Saturday that his followers had formed an alliance with the current Vietnamese-backed government of Prime Minister Hun Sen, the one that rebel followers of the prince and the Khmer Rouge fought to overthrow.

The prince said he expected the two factions to form a coalition government after the United Nations-supervised elections, scheduled in 1993.

As the head of the Supreme National Council, the coalition organization that will join with the United Nations and the current government to run the country until the elections, the prince noted that he was supposed to remain neutral on political issues.

But he said it was "inevitable" that his longtime followers, and those of Hun Sen and his associates, would take control of the government after the elections.

"Certainly they will win," the prince said with the high-pitched laugh that has become almost a trademark during his half century on the international political stage. "There is no risk of a return to power of the Khmer Rouge."

The World

Aristide calls for officers' punishment

CARACAS, Venezuela (NYT) — Six weeks after a violent army coup ousted his government, Haiti's exiled President, the Rev. Jean-Bertrand Aristide, has called for national reconciliation, but says it must begin with the punishment of the officers who overthrew him.

Aristide's comments in an interview Thursday came a day after a mission of the Organization of American States left Haiti with an agreement from legislators to continue efforts to restore constitutional order in the country.

Throughout the interview, Aristide returned bitterly to the army commander, Brig. Gen. Raoul Cedras, and a group of Haitian officers under him who he said must be punished before any solution to the country's political crisis could be achieved.

Weight Loss Surprises Researchers

WASHINGTON --A nutrition organization was hopeful that a nutritionally complete "hi-tech" food tablet would help erase world hunger problems, until a study revealed that one of the ingredients could cause significant weight loss.

Although other studies and scientists may not agree, researches in Europe found that the ingredient, a natural plan colloid, actually caused people to lose weight, even though specifically instructed not to alter normal eating patterns, according to one study published in the prestigious British Journal of Nutrition. Researchers in an earlier study had speculated that the weight loss was due to a decrease in the intestinal absorption of calories.

While the development of the product called Food Source One, a project of National Dietary Research, would not be used to successfully ful-fill its original goal, the formula which has since been improved with other natural colloids has been a windfall for some overweight people. A Daytona Beach, Flordia woman fighting a weight battle for 12 years used the product on a recommendation of her physician and lost 30 pounds. She stated, "Not only have I lost 30 pounds but my cholesterol has dropped from 232 to 143. I have two closets full of clothes which have not fit me in two years that I can now wear." In a separate report, a telephone interview revealed that a Wilmington, North Carolina pharmacist lost 14 pounds in 3 weeks on the product and was over hungry.

Food Source One tablets are part of National Dietary Research's comprehensive plan to bring a rapid end to obesity in this country. A variety of nutritionally sound diet plans, specially prepared by NDR, accompany each bottle and provide a natural drug free alternative for confronting the problem of obesity.

Her Majesty's voice

Stephanie Millard, curator of acoustics at London's Science Museum, holds up a fragile wax cylinder over a replica of the Bell and Tainter Graphophone in London Monday. The cylinder, which had been lost in the museum's archive for 60 years, contains a total of about 40 words, parts of which are believed to be Queen Victoria's voice.

Spain bans neo-Nazi salute

MADRID, Spain (AP) — In the first crackdown in memory on Spain's neo-Nazis, police on Saturday blocked a group of ultra-rightists from placing red carnations on a monument to Nazi aviators.

About 50 people gathered outside Madrid's main cemetery, holding a banner reading "Freedom Of Expression." But police refused to allow them inside on the orders of Madrid's civil governor, Seguismundo Crespo.

Although Spain has no laws banning fascist, neo-Nazi or racist activities, Crespo banned the neo-Nazi demonstration last week, saying he did not want Madrid to become "the fascist capital of Europe."

Spain's neo-Nazis are generally low-profile in their activities. But some in Spain worry that increasing immigration may spark a rise in racism and in neo-Nazi groups. In Germany, such groups have burgeoned along with immigration. Many rightists believe scarce jobs are being taken by the foreigners.

At the Almudena cemetery Saturday, police checked identification and allowed in only journalists — who outnumbered the neo-Nazis — and those they deemed bona fide mourners.

Scientists study goose, duck fat as health food

By Molly O'Neill
N.Y. Times News Service

AUCH, France — Here in the land of the Three Musketeers, the Gascony region of southwest France, goose and duck fat are slathered on bread instead of butter, the people snack on fried duck skin and eat twice as much foie gras as other Frenchmen, and 50 times as much as Americans.

It was no surprise when Dr. Serge Renaud, in a 10-year epidemiological study that included surveys of eating habits, concluded that Gascons eat a diet higher in saturated fat than any other group of people in the industrialized world. Renaud is the director of research at the National Institute of Health and Medical Research, a government center in Lyons.

But scientists crinkled a collective brow over Renaud's related finding about this region, which produces much of the world's foie gras, the fattened livers of ducks and geese. "The foie gras eaters of the Gers and Lot Departments in southwest France have the lowest rate of death from cardiovascular disease in the country," he said.

According to the World Health Organization's Multinational Monitoring of Trends and Determinants in Cardiovascular Disease, or MONICA, which is currently studying eating habits and mortality rates in Toulouse and a surrounding area that includes much of Gascony, the difference is remarkable. Out of 100,000 middle-aged French men, approximately 145 die of heart attacks annually, but in Toulouse the number is about 80. In the United States, 315 of every 100,000 middle-aged men die of heart attacks each year.

In a paper presented to a convention of duck and goose producers in France last spring, Renaud suggested that goose and duck fat may improve cardiovascular health. Only clinical studies can determine the benefits of the fat from web-footed birds, but chemists agree with Renaud, who said in a recent telephone interview: "Goose and duck fat is closer in chemical composition to olive oil than it is to butter or lard."

Renaud has teamed up with Dr. Curtis Ellison, chief of preventive medicine and epidemiology at the Boston University School of Medicine, to request a $3 million grant from the United States National Institutes of Health.

"The changes in the American diet in the past 10 years are laudable," said Ellison. "But we are still dying faster and of more heart attacks than the French, and I want to know why." While taking into account the role of genetics and life style, his study will focus on the role of consumption of wine, dairy fats, vegetables, fruits, and goose and duck fat.

To the American heart specialists, whose research has brought about lean-beef and the low-fat diet, the very thought of a beneficial dietary fat is anathema.

"Heart attacks are less frequent in France, but they are still the leading cause of death there," said Dr. Dean Ornish, a heart specialist at the University of California in San Francisco. For several decades, the low rate of heart disease in France has stumped scientists.

Sanctions won't hurt Gadhafi, opponents say

PARIS (NYT) — The latest confrontation between Western powers and the the government of Col. Moammar Gadhafi comes as Libya's ties with African and Arab countries are fraying, its ability to carry out or support international acts of terror severely constrained and its economy beset by mismanagement and huge expenditures on questionable development projects.

Still, Libyan opponents of the Gadhafi leadership say the expected imposition of further economic sanctions, possibly next week, will only complicate the lives of ordinary Libyans without provoking Gadhafi's fall from power.

"The idea of squeezing the Libyan people so that they in turn squeeze Gadhafi out does not work in our region," said Mansour Kikhia, a former Libyan foreign minister and now a leading opponent of the government who is living in exile in France. "This has been amply demonstrated in Iraq where Saddam Hussein is still in control."

Like other opponents, Kikhia concedes that the external opposition groups are too feeble and divided to overthrow the 22-year-old Gadhafi leadership.

Another prison inmate dies of new TB strain

NEW YORK (NYT) — Another New York state prison inmate suffering from a new strain of drug-resistant tuberculosis died at a hospital in Syracuse on Saturday, correction officials announced. They also told of fresh evidence that the new strain had spread to widely separated points in the prison system.

The new death brought to 13 the number of inmates, along with one guard, who have been killed in the prison system this year by a rare strain of the disease that health and correction officials have called the most alarming medical development in the state prisons since AIDS was discovered a decade ago.

Correction officials also got another piece of bad news about the disease yesterday when federal health officials confirmed that a single new strain of drug-resistant tuberculosis was responsible for all the deaths, even though eight victims died in New York City and six others died upstate.

That meant that the new strain of the disease was apparently spread by inmates between at least two widely separated points in the correctional system and that the strain may have been transmitted through the transfer of infected inmates to other units of the 68-prison system as well, the officials said.

"It's the worst-case senario," said James Flateau, a spokesman for the State Department of Correctional Services. "It means that the strain has moved through the system. It means it was carried, and we believe by inmates, between the two facilities. And it may be at others."

Word that a single type of bacteria was responsible for all the deaths came from the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, where samples were sent for analysis more than two weeks ago, Flateau said. Separate strains for the two clusters of deaths would have suggested no spread, only different infections limited to their respective prisons, he said.

To combat the spread of the new strain, Thomas A. Coughlin III, the commissioner of correctional services, on Friday announced that the State Health Department had provided a sweeping plan to identify, isolate and treat victims of tuberculosis in the prison system — a plan whose urgency appeared to be underscored by Saturday's developments.

Mandatory tuberculosis tests for all inmates and employees of the prison system will begin Monday in an effort to control the new strain, Flateau said.

Medical experts said the new strain, which had been recognized earlier in the year in hospitals in New York City and Miami and was recognized in the New York State prison system in September, is treatable.

CNN reveals secret agency of government

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the event the U.S. government is felled by nuclear war, who takes over?

CNN's Special Assignment team says it has found out and will tell viewers in a one-hour special called "Doomsday Government," to be aired tonight at 8 p.m.

The program reveals the existence of a super-secret agency run by the White House, which has devised an alternate plan for presidential succession and a network of bunkers and mobile command centers to enable the government to function if the country is attacked.

The agency, called the National Program Office (NPO), was authorized in a secret 1982 directive issued by then-President Ronald Reagan, and came under the jurisdiction of his vice president, George Bush, CNN says.

Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North, then an aide on the National Security Council, was instrumental in setting up the covert project, which he discussed briefly in his recently published book, "Under Fire."

The NPO's mission is to make sure civilian leaders can maintain control over the military in case of attack. If all 17 legal successors to the president are incapacitated, the plan provides for others — elected and non-elected officials — to take over, CNN says.

Among those who at one time were in the NPO reserve to serve as alternate successors were former White House chief of staff Howard Baker, former CIA director Richard Helms, former U.N. ambassador Jeanne Kirkpatrick and former energy secretary James Schlesinger, according to CNN.

The agency spent $8 billion on the Presidential Support System network, which includes a nuclear-resistant communications system, but as recently as last winter it still couldn't get the network to run, the program says.

In 1987, the House Armed Services Committee and the Army began investigating contract irregularities in the NPO, CNN says. Investigators spoke with Tom Golden, then an NPO official and now head of counter-intelligence for the Army's Strategic Defense Command.

After cooperating with investigators, Golden told CNN, he was the target of four federal investigations. The Army and the congressional panel concluded he had come under retaliation for cooperating with the authorities in their investigation of the NPO.

FDIC squanders bailout funds, reports say

WASHINGTON (AP) — The agency overseeing the bailout of failed banks and thrift institutions is squandering millions of dollars in hiring private lawyers to do its work, two reports conclude.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Co. will spend $700 million on outside lawyers' fees and legal expenses this year, and has done a poor job of holding down the costs, the reports say. The chief counsel for a House subcommittee said Saturday that the figure actually is more than $1 billion.

The studies found the FDIC failed to use competitive bidding or negotiate discounts or fixed fees in hiring lawyers, despite the fact that many firms are looking for work.

A government source who has seen the reports confirmed their contents Saturday. The New York Times and Washington Post first detailed the reports in their Saturday editions.

One study was done by a Philadelphia consulting firm, the other by the accounting company Price Waterhouse.

Atlantis crew carries secrets on military, reconnaissance mission

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Six astronauts bound for space this week on a semi-secret Pentagon mission will drop off a missile-warning satellite, then do a little reconnaissance of their own.

For 1½ weeks, the Atlantis crew will zoom in on naval ships, ports and U.S. military compounds to determine how much detail can be seen from 224 miles up. The astronauts also will talk by radio with tank commanders and other officers who pass within camera view.

"If we are able to make out things on the ground with any kind of detail or resolution, that would be something of significance should that information be needed in time of crisis," said astronaut Mario Runco Jr.

Atlantis was scheduled to blast off on NASA's 44th shuttle flight at 5:51 p.m. CST Tuesday. The countdown was to begin at 11:01 a.m. CST today.

"I've been waiting a long time for this, and I'm anxious to get going on Tuesday night," Runco said after the crew arrived at Kennedy Space Center on Saturday evening.

It will be the ninth time a shuttle has gone up at the Defense Department's behest. The first seven military missions were completely secret. Not even launch times were made public until nine minutes before.

This time, like the eighth military mission last spring, almost everything is open to public scrutiny to save the multimillion-dollar cost of spy-proof procedures.

Still, there are secrets — the final destination of the $300 million Defense Support Program satellite, the number of DSP craft already in orbit, and many of the military sites to be observed by the astronauts.

"The techniques we use in our data collection operations in the military, we certainly don't want to give that to other people," said Thomas Hennen, an Army imagery analyst who will conduct one of two observation experiments.

The 10-day flight's main event, release of the surveillance satellite, will be an open affair despite two decades of secrecy surrounding the Air Force's Defense Support Program. It is the first time a DSP satellite is going up on a shuttle.

Tax burden hits post-war peak

By Peter Passell
N.Y. Times News Service

With the economy mired in recession and incumbents running scared, tax cut fever is once again loose on the land. But recent history offers little reason to believe this latest rush to placate voters will yield enduring tax relief.

A decade after property tax revolts in a dozen states and the across-the- board tax cuts of the Reagan era, the percentage of income that Americans pay in taxes is back to a post-war peak. Only the very richest, and perhaps the poorest, have remained a step ahead of the tax collector.

Few people doubt that voters are ready to punish the bearers of bad tax tidings. In New Jersey, for example, Republicans gained veto-proof control of the Legislature in an election widely seen as a referendum on the $2.8 billion tax increase sponsored last year by Gov. Jim Florio, a Democrat.

But one way or another, economists and budget analysts maintain, the political pressure for tax reduction will be dissipated by the immovable realities of government finance. Unless Americans are prepared to sacrifice cherished services and retirement benefits — notably Social Security — the cost of government will continue to rise faster than incomes.

In 1980, Washington collected 20.3 percent of the gross national product in taxes and fees. The enormous tax cuts of 1981, the result of political competition between the Reagan administration and congressional Democrats, knocked a percentage point and a half off the take from the personal and corporate income taxes. Declining revenues from excise taxes clipped a bit more off the overall tax burden.

Yet those cuts were offset by a steady rise in Social Security payroll taxes and a series of minor tax increases aimed at containing the budget deficit. By the end of the decade, taxes had come full circle. After slipping to 19.6 percent of GNP in 1985, total federal revenues from taxes reached 20.3 percent in 1990.

The numbers tell a similar story for state and local governments. In 1980, their revenues stood at 14.3 percent of the GNP — seven-tenths of a percentage point less than in 1975, before the property tax revolts that forced rollbacks in many states. By 1990 the figure had crept up to 14.7 percent.

And the burden on taxpayers was far greater than these statistics suggest, said Robert Ebel of KPMG Peat Marwick in Washington.

Mickey Rooney calls for TV show about Boys Town

BOYS TOWN, Neb. (AP) — Mickey Rooney, star of the 1938 movie "Boys Town," said Saturday he wants to reprise his role as a reformed juvenile delinquent in a television series about the home for troubled youth.

"Boys Town runs solely on love and the honor system. Now wouldn't it be magical if our great country and our government was run on love and understanding?" Rooney said.

"And wouldn't it be magical if we could put that on the tube?" said the 71-year-old Rooney, who came to Boys Town to help kick off its 75th anniversary celebration.

"Boys Town" starred Rooney and the late Spencer Tracy, who won an Academy Award for his role as the home's founder, Father Edward J. Flanagan. Rooney and Bobs Watson, 61, played the pals Whitey Marsh and "Peewee."

Salvadoran army leaders planned killings of Jesuits, panel says

WASHINGTON (NYT) — An inquiry by a special panel of House Democrats into the 1989 killings of six Jesuit priests in El Salvador has concluded that there is strong circumstantial evidence to suggest that the crime was plotted by senior Salvadoran army officers, including the current defense minister, according to an internal report.

A six-page internal memo concludes that Gen. Rene Emilio Ponce, now defense minister and then army chief of staff, and the other officers planned the attack at a meeting at the Salvadoran military academy the day before the killings, which caused an international outcry and hardened the resistance of El Salvador's leftist guerrillas to negotiations with the government.

The House task force has previously accused Salvadoran army personnel of trying to cover up the involvement of senior officers, but the report for the first time names high-level officers it asserts were involved.

The findings extend responsibility for the killings substantially beyond the two lower-level officers found guilty in the affair and raise embarrassing questions for Salvadoran government negotiators at the very moment a peace accord to end the civil war is going into effect. The memo could also threaten the prospects for future American military aid to San Salvador, which is supported by the Bush administration and opposed by many congressional Democrats.

The memo is signed by Rep. John Joseph Moakley, D-Mass., chairman of the Speaker's Special Task Force on El Salvador. It is being distributed this weekend to the 19 other Democratic representatives who make up the task force.

Moakley said House Speaker Thomas S. Foley had appointed a Democratic task force, rather than a bipartisan select committee, to avert months of negotiations over the parameters or objectives of the inquiry.

He said, however, that Republican congressmen had repeatedly accompanied task force members on their trips to El Salvador and had also signed the panel's statement of preliminary findings in February 1990. Administration officials have called subsequent interim reports, issued in April 1990 and January 1991, generally fair.

In a telephone interview, Ponce denied he had anything to do with the plot and said that he was not even at the academy that day.

"I definitely had no prior knowledge," he said.

Of Moakley, he continued, "He has the good intention of wanting to have justice in our country, but unfortunately he has used information that is not confirmed, that is rumor."

Administration officials who monitor El Salvador said that while they were aware of the allegations that a meeting had taken place at the military school among senior officers, they had no hard evidence that such a meeting had anything to do with the Jesuit killings.

A senior administration official, who insisted on not being identified, said, "If someone is serious about the Jesuit case and had credible evidence about the case, it's hard to understand why they would wait until the second anniversary of the deaths and release that evidence to the media rather than turn that evidence over as quickly as possible to the judge in this case, who has proven his commitment to prosecute whoever has been accused."

The six priests, their housekeeper and her daughter were slain two years ago Saturday, at a time when the Salvadoran military was battling the most serious rebel offensive of the war. After what was billed as an exhaustive investigation and a three-day trial, a Salvadoran army colonel and lieutenant were convicted on murder charges in September. Seven other soldiers were cleared, including four who rescinded confessions that they took part in the killings.

Politicians worry losses will come at ballot box

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press writer

Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — The huge sell-off in the stock market served to highlight a growing perception that President Bush and Congress don't have a clue about how to help a troubled U.S. economy.

While the fifth largest stock market loss in history hit investors in the pocketbook, wiping out $130 billion in stock values in one day, Bush and other politicians are worried their losses will come at the ballot box.

Trying to project an air of doing something, both the administration and Congress have scrambled in recent weeks to come up with a winning prescription for what ails a sick economy.

The trouble is that everything they've tried so far has made the problem worse.

Financial markets were first rattled last month when a batch of proposals to give tax cuts to the middle class were unveiled in Congress. Worried investors promptly sent interest rates rising out of fear that a tax-cut bidding war would make already record budget deficits even worse.

Then last week, Bush tried to jawbone commercial banks into lowering their credit card rates so consumers would spend the economy back to prosperity.

Congress got into the act the next day when Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., led a successful effort in the Senate to pass an amendment imposing a 14 percent cap on bank credit card rates, which are averaging 19 percent.

Many analysts believe the credit card cap played a part in triggering Friday's huge 120.3-point drop in the Dow Jones industrial average as investors worried about the effects such a cap would have on the already troubled banking system.

While the House Banking Committee was scheduled to take up the cap proposal Monday, there were a variety of signals in the wake of the market turmoil that policy-makers were furiously backing away from the idea.

Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp said Saturday that if the credit cap proposal did make it through Congress, Bush would veto it.

But still, many were left with an uneasy feeling.

"There is a sense in the land that Washington is losing control of the economy," said David Jones, an economist at Aubrey G. Lanston & Co. "The president doesn't have a plan to get the economy moving again except for relying on the Federal Reserve to lower interest rates and that hasn't had much of an effect."

Bush's top economic policy-makers have been sharply split among themselves over what should be done.

Kemp has been leading a fight inside the Cabinet for Bush to come up with a bolder approach to stimulating the economy that would couple the administration's proposed capital gains tax cuts with at least temporary tax breaks for the middle class.

Investors bombard brokerages with calls but not panic

NEW YORK (AP) — Investors lit up phone lines Saturday at mutual fund operators and stockbrokers, the day after the Dow Jones industrial average plummeted 120 points, but there was little panic.

"What people are doing, 3 to 1, is just inquiries on quotes, checking in on their accounts. We're not seeing moves to sell," said Marsha Sawyer, a spokeswoman for Fidelity Investments, the nation's largest mutual fund concern.

She said investors apparently are not as spooked by a severe drop in the Dow as they were during the market crash of October 1987 and the big drop of October 1989.

"People are more used to seeing downturns every once in a while," she said.

However, calls to Fidelity ran about 25 percent above normal Saturday, and the company added 100 operators.

Customer calls also rose at Dreyfus Corp., another major mutual fund company, though not as much, said Dominick DiMercurio, a supervisor at Dreyfus' customer center.

He reported few moves to sell funds in response to the Dow's plunge, its fifth-worst ever.

"For the long-term investors, it's really insignificant," he said.

Grad students bring up issue of unionization

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — Striking graduate assistants at the University of Massachusetts say they're employees first, students second. Administrators say state law puts things the other way around.

It's an issue that students, educators, government officials and sometimes courts are thrashing out in battles around the country. Just last month, New York state's Public Employment Relations Board recognized the union for graduate students who want to represent teaching assistants in that state's university system.

The question now lies at the vortex of a strike launched Thursday by hundreds of graduate teaching and research assistants at 23,000-student campus here, the state system's largest.

The strike has forced cancellation of many classes, soured relations between students and administrators and threatened to worsen the school's already severe financial problems.

The Graduate Employee Organization has demanded that the university collect mandatory union fees from all graduate employees — in effect recognizing the group as a bona fide union.

The administration says it can't legally demand fees for a non-certified group, though it wouldn't oppose a certification bid to the state Labor Relations Commission.

The group is skeptical.

"The membership is convinced the administration is trying to break this union," said Emily Isaacs, a GEO leader.

The group was formed last year as an affiliate of the United Auto Workers and for the past 10 months have been negotiating a two-year contract with the school. Talks broke down last week, largely over the issue of mandatory union dues, both sides say.

Chancellor Richard O'Brien says legal constraints create "absolutely zero flexibility" for the university administration on the issue.

Administrators say capitulating would risk a flood of lawsuits from angry graduate employees.

"If we started simply docking the pay of graduate students who don't wish to join the GEO, that would be a serious infringement on those people's rights," said Susan Pearson, an associate chancellor acting as the school's chief negotiator.

Administrators buttress their argument by pointing to a 1979 ruling by the state Labor Relations Commission rejecting certification for an earlier group of University of Massachusetts graduates.

The panel found collective bargaining inappropriate for graduate students, said Maria Walsh, the body's current chairwoman. The ruling gives priority to the academic over the employment role of students, she said.

To avoid AIDS, heroin users shift from injecting drug to inhaling

By Joseph B. Treaster
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Finally responding to the terror of AIDS, thousands of people who use heroin are turning away from the old practice of injecting the drug with a hypodermic needle and are simply inhaling the crystalline powder the way many people take cocaine.

In New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, the region in which about half of the nation's heroin addicts live, at least one of three addicts entering drug rehabilitation for heroin use report that they had been snorting, or sniffing, the drug to avoid contracting the disease, experts say. These experts add that in some clinics as many as 80 percent of the addicts report that they have been shunning needles. The shift is also taking place in several other states including California, researchers and drug experts say.

For years, even after the dangers of the AIDS epidemic became widely publicized, few addicts stopped using needles, mainly because injecting was cheaper and gave a quicker and more powerful high with smaller amounts of the drug than could be achieved through sniffing. But now, with more than 50 percent of the 250,000 or so intravenous drug users in the region believed to be infected with the virus that causes the disease, practices and rituals are changing.

There are even signs, researchers and drug experts say, that heroin use has become a more solitary practice and that the old street institution of the "shooting gallery" may be disappearing from some neighborhoods. Some people have also begun smoking heroin like crack.

"They're terrified of AIDS," said Dr. Stanley R. Yancovitz, a specialist in drug abuse and AIDS at the Beth Israel Medical Center in Manhattan, which operates the biggest narcotics rehabilitation program in the country.

"Almost every heroin user," said Jeraldine Bryant, director of Orchard Hill Treatment Services in New Haven, Conn., "knows someone who has died of AIDS."

The shift may also have implications for drug policy. Some drug experts, for example, wonder whether moves toward distributing clean needles — like Mayor David N. Dinkins's decision to do so on a limited basis — may now be counterproductive, luring addicts back to the more unhealthy practice of injecting the drug into veins.

At a garbage-strewn intersection not far from St. Mary's Park in the South Bronx the other day, young men in bulky parkas and baseball caps, two or three to a corner, hawked heroin, crying out brand names. "Perfect High," one shouted. "Aries, Black Pearl," sang another.

Hovering against a wire mesh fence, a woman, who gave her name as Mable D., said she had been "shooting," that is, injecting, heroin for seven years. Five months ago, she said, she went into a clinic to reduce her need for the drug and, when she got out, started snorting. "It was because of the AIDS," she said. "You never know when you're gonna get sick."

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

AMARILLO — Predicted blowing snow didn't show up at Dick Bivins Stadium Saturday afternoon, but Midland Lee's future made an impressive debut in a 35-0 Class 5A Small School bi-district romp over Amarillo Palo Duro.

Sophomore quarterback Courtney Turner, coming off the bench to replace injured starter Jimmy Patton, guided the Rebels to 26 second half points, passing for 94 yards and leading all rushers in the game with 65 yards and two touchdowns.

Turner has played sparingly for Lee this year, coming into the game with 13 carries for a minus 40 yards and one pass completion of 28 yards in six attempts. But it was evident that his career started here Saturday.

"Patton sprained a shoulder near the end of the first half. The doctor said he could go back in, but we decided against it," Lee coach Earl Miller said. "I was extremely proud of the sophomore. There comes a time when you have to grow up and Turner did today."

With Lee leading only 9-0 at the half, Turner opened the second half by hitting wide receiver Ryan Tucker for 34 yards to the Palo Duro 10-yard line.

Hillin qualifies

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — Bobby Hillin Jr. led second-day qualifying Saturday for the Hardee's 500 NASCAR stock car race, turning a fast lap of 174.264 mph on the Atlanta Motor Speedway oval.

Hillin, who improved from a lap of 171.230 on Friday, will start 21st in Sunday's 40-car lineup. He would have started 13th if he could have turned Saturday's lap during first-day qualifying.

"The difference ... was that today we had a different set of tires," Hillin said. "We had an older set of tires on the car (Friday) and I wasn't comfortable driving on them and I didn't push the car as hard as I did today."

It was the second time this season that Hillin led second-round qualifying and he was among 14 drivers who were eligible for the rich blind draw that will determine the wild card entry for the Busch Clash in February at Daytona Beach, Fla.

The race will be broadcast on ESPN beginning at 11:30 a.m. today.

COURTING A NEW KING

■ No one will argue that football has long been king, but basketball is kicking up its heels and growing by leaps and bounds — even in West Texas.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

It's no secret that football has long been king in these parts. As long as 35 to 40 years ago, crowds averaged in excess of 16,000 per game, according to Midland athletic director Jack Tayrien.

It's hard to find a sport that possesses the excitement and charm that high school football does on a fall Friday night with a chill in the air and an upset in the making.

However, if one were to set out to look for a sport that approaches the simple pleasure of the above scenario, he or she need look only as far as the nearest prep gym.

It may come as a surprise to some, but high school basketball — buoyed by the popularity of the sport at higher levels — is growing by leaps and bounds. Even in West Texas.

One local coach feels that basketball has the potential to catch football, in terms of mass appeal.

"Basketball will be as big at Lee and in West Texas as football," Midland Lee head basketball coach Jon House said. "It all depends on the coach. And you have to get fan support.

"The sooner you win the quicker it happens. You see that in the small schools. If Lamesa, Denver City and Brownfield can do it, why can't the bigger cities?"

Permian struggles before 22-9 win

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

AMARILLO — District 4-5A completed a broom sweeping of District 3-5A teams here Saturday afternoon, as the one whisker-thin victory came from none other than 4-5A champ Odessa Permian.

Mighty Mojo survived 5-6 Amarillo Tascosa 22-9, but had no nails left to bite after entering the fourth quarter for the first time this year trailing, 9-7.

But Mojo is still Mojo when it comes to finding magic as the sun darkens into the shadows of prowlers. And the key prowler here was one Malcolm Hamilton.

Trailing 9-7 with just under 10 minutes left in the game, Hamilton turned magic on the simplest of plays, the old 30-Trap up the middle, which sailed for 49 yards, a 13-9 Panther lead and advancement to the Class 5A Small School area playoffs next Friday night at 8 p.m. against 5-5-1 El Paso Austin in Odessa's Ratliff Stadium.

"It was just the 30-Trap," Hamilton said of his game breaker. "I was kind of surprised for it to break because Tascosa's nose guard (Brandon Slay) was in the way all night. But (center) Brusse James and (guard) Eric Louvin got great blocks on the linebacker and nose guard and it was wide open.

"Before that play, I was getting frustrated, but the guys on the sideline helped keep us all up by pumping us up."

Permian then proceeded to mop up with a safety and another one-yard touchdown by Hamilton down the stretch.

Same old song and dance: Miami foils FSU bid for title

Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — After 59 minutes, 35 seconds of sweat, struggle and fierce fighting, the battle between No. 2 Miami and No. 1 Florida State came down to this — one foot.

Gerry Thomas' 34-yard field goal attempt sailed wide right by the length of a football with 25 seconds left Saturday, giving Miami a heart-pounding 17-16 victory and a solid shot at its fourth national championship in nine years.

It was the fourth time in the last five years that Miami (9-0) spoiled the Seminoles' (10-1) bid for their first national title. But this may have been the most painful loss of all for Florida State.

Thomas, a walk-on sophomore who had made all three of his previous field goal tries in the game, walked onto the field with Florida State facing a third-and-nine from the Miami 17. When he kicked the ball, the outcome was in doubt for a few agonizing seconds until the official under the goalposts made the no-good signal.

That triggered a wild celebration by Miami players, who threw their helmets in the air, ran onto the field and hugged each other for several minutes. The Hurricanes were penalized for the display, but it didn't matter.

Quarterback Gino Torretta kneeled down to kill off the final seconds, then rose and threw the ball skyward as Florida State fans in the record crowd of 63,442 at Doak Campbell Stadium sat in stunned silence and Miami supporters chanted "We're No. 1."

The victory snapped Florida State's 16-game winning streak and extended Miami's to 15, now the longest in the nation.

It was the 26th meeting between the nation's two top-ranked teams, with No. 1 now holding a 17-7-2 edge. It was also Miami's eighth consecutive win over No. 1 teams dating back to 1981.

Florida State took a 16-7 lead on Thomas' 20-yard field goal with 14:22 remaining in the game. But Miami rallied to move ahead 17-16 on a 45-yard field goal by Carlos Huerta with 9:48 left and a 1-yard TD run by Larry Jones with 3:01 remaining.

Aided by a pass interference penalty on Miami's Ryan McNeil, Florida State then drove 53 yards to the Hurricanes' 17

Locals geared to make a difference in race

☐ Speed, size, returners have MHS in first division

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Jack Stephenson and his Midland Bulldogs are 180 degrees opposite of Jon House and his Midland Lee Rebels.

On the one hand, there's House, who says his Rebels like playing the role of the underdog, which is what they've been chosen to be this season.

And on the other hand, there's Stephenson, whose Bulldogs made it to the bi-district round of the playoffs last season where they were defeated 65-63 by Plainview.

Back this season with plenty of firepower, Stephenson indicated recently he wants no part of an underdog label, not that the Bulldogs will suffer from that in '91-'92. Last season's 19-12 overall and 9-3 district records, along with a second place finish, will assure that MHS will not be tagged a dark horse.

"We're picked to win it," Stephenson reminded. "I'd rather be picked there than last. I say 'Pick me to win it and I'll try my best to make your dream come true.'

"We're at 6-8, 6-6, and we have a 6-5 and a 6-4. I've got some size that I'm not accustomed to, but I'd hate to pick a winner or contender.

Returning for the Bulldogs this season are All-District 4-5A forward Antwan Goodley, three-year letterman Brian Rounding, a 6-2 senior, and 6-6 senior Phil Koss.

Midland High opens the season this Thursday at Chaparral Center against Amarillo Caprock. Less than 24 hours later, the 'Dogs switch partners with Lee for a 2:30 p.m. game Friday against Amarillo High at the MHS gym. District play starts for the 'Dogs January 7 against Midland Lee, also at Chap Center.

Quickness and Midland High's uptempo style of play have always been pluses for the 'Dogs in years past. This year should be no exception, plus MHS has, as Stephenson said, the added bonus of height to go with their transition game.

Goodley, a 6-4 junior, is the best athlete on the MHS team and is one of the better players to come out of Midland in several years.

"He's one of the strongest rebounders in the entire league," Stephenson said. "He'll be a fun one to watch.

"Brian (Rounding) is one of the few three-year letter winners in Midland High basketball history. He's extremely knowledgable about the game and when he's out there, it's kind of like having another coach on the floor. He's perhaps the best leader we've had in our basketball program in years.

"Phil (Koss) is probably the best defensive player on the roster. He'll fight to deny the ball to anyone he's guarding."

A transfer from Midland Baptist, Koss was on the varsity roster last season.

Joining the three returners are six seniors, eight juniors and one sophomore:

■ Charlie Thomas, 5-8, Sr. Thomas' strength lies in his long-range shot success. "He is just as comfortable shooting from 20 feet as he is from 10," Stephenson said.

■ Nate Branson, 5-11, Sr. Described by Stephenson as the most physical of any of the Bulldog guards, Branson, a football letter winner, will get ample playing time. Branson was one of the numerous instrumental players who contributed to the JV's 23-6 record last season.

■ Scott Lunsford, 6-1, Sr. Another JVer from last year, Lunsford put plenty of work into his game in the offseason which, Stephenson said, "gives him a chance to be one of our best players. He's a very physical player who can shoot the ball as well as put it on the floor if the defense gets in his face."

■ Robert McKee, 6-0, Sr. Fastest and one of the quickest of the Bulldogs this year. "If somebody beats him down the floor, he'll catch up quicker than most."

■ Watu Todd, 6-2, Sr. "His jumping ability and quickness is amazing. And his desire to be as good a player as he can possibly be is what has given him the opportunities he has."

■ Jeff Chancellor, 6-1, Sr. "Not the tallest inside player we have, but whoever's guarding him better get ready." A member of the Bulldog JV last year, Chancellor has "excellent basketball skills and a desire and determination which makes it difficult for opponents to beat him."

■ Kirk French, 5-10, Jr. "Perhaps the person we'd like to take the last shot for the win." His shooting is a strength — "as good as any on the Bulldog team."

■ Mike "Goob" Melzer, 5-11, Jr. Stephenson says of Melzer, "He plays for keeps and loves the game. He can handle the ball with the best of them." Not to mention he wins the nickname contest hands down.

■ Rob Foster, 6-0, Jr. Jumping ability, speed and quickness are Foster's top strengths. "He can shoot the ball from anywhere on the floor with a great amount of success."

■ Chris Mayfield, 5-10, Jr. Possesses more quickness than probably any other MHS varsity player. Intense offseason work allowed Mayfield to jump directly from the sophomore team to the varsity squad. "He can play defense as well as anyone and has excellent ball handling skills."

■ Justin Hobbs, 6-0, Jr. This may be a little confusing, but Hobbs is a transfer from Artesia, N.M., not the other way around. Like Mayfield, his offseason work allowed him to make the jump directly from the sophomore squad to varsity. "Another excellent shooter who has complete control of all phases of the game."

■ Brian Roberts 6-0, Jr. As a member of the sophomore team, Roberts, along with Mayfield and Hobbs, helped lead the team to a 20-8 record. Shooting ability and size lets him play all positions on the floor.

■ Phil Warlick, 6-5, Jr. Provides physical presence in the paint for MHS. Warlick lettered in football and is one of the top rebounders for Stephenson's varsity basketball club as well.

■ Andre Gill, 6-8, Jr. Another example of Midland High's added height this season, Gill draws high praises from Stephenson. "The most improved basketball player I've ever seen. Since the end of last year, he's developed his game beyond my wildest imagination. He'll draw extra attention from opponents because of his work habits."

■ Joseph Golding, 5-11, Soph. One of the few sophomores to make varsity in the last 25 seasons at Midland High, Golding "handles the basketball better than anyone we've ever had in the program. He's also an excellent passer and is very unselfish. He'll probably lead the team in assists."

Again, Stephenson says he hesitates to pick winners and contenders, but points out the strengths of other teams he'll be facing twice in district this season.

"Abilene High has (District MVP Tyerone) Washington coming back and last year finished third. He's got six lettermen back at Abilene. At Cooper, they've got a 6-1 and a 6-9. Andre Patterson (a junior) is an NBA prospect.

"Permin's got a 6-6, and a 6-7; San Angelo, I don't know if they're down. He knew he was going to be losing a lot and they'd all been starting since they were sophomores.

"Odessa High (Greg Baucom) and Cooper (Jack Alldredge) both have new coaches."

"I think it's as strong a district as it's been in some time," Stephenson said. "People always want to compare our district with the district up north. Anybody that gets out of District 4-5A has a chance to go to Austin."

☐ Bulked up, fast Rebels don't mind underdog tag

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Every time Midland Lee senior Wayne Wilson had the ball last basketball season, his cheering fans in the Lee student section would wildly yell "Wayne's World! Wayne's World!" after the popular skit on Saturday Night Live.

So it only seems natural that the Rebel varsity has apparently taken a cue from another SNL skit. In the true mold of Hans and Franz, the Rebels hit the weight room during the offseason and pumped ... themselves up.

"We're running faster and jumping stronger," second-year Lee head coach Jon House said. "We'll be improved this season. We won't be doing anything different, we'll just be doing it better. We'll execute better. And we may be more athletic. We've gotten bigger, faster, and stronger."

The Rebels — 11-19 overall, 4-8 in district last season — open the 1991-92 season with a home date against Amarillo High Thursday at 8 p.m. at Chaparral Center. At 2:45 p.m. Friday, the Rebels host Amarillo Caprock at Lee gym. District play begins January 7 against Midland High.

House feels with first year jitters out of the way, he and his Rebels should finally end up on the same page this season, which will help both what he's trying to get across and what his team needs to know to be successful.

"When you come in," he said, "it takes a year or two to get your mindset into the kids. I expect them to practice hard and to play hard. I'm a hard person to play for. I expect you to do everything right. They know me now.

"We have a close knit bunch of kids. Last year they wouldn't even hang around the locker room together. Now you can't get them away from each other."

Possessing some of the smaller players in District 4-5A, House hopes the Rebels will use their strength to overcome the taller teams. Although he won't go so far as to say the Rebels will win district, he will say they'll make a difference in some regard.

"We'll be average to above average. We'll get better every game. How good we'll be I don't know, it's up to the kids.

"They (the Rebels) like the underdog role. They expect to be in the hunt. I'll be sorely disappointed if we're not. Our goal is to have something to do with the outcome of the district race."

While not coming out and picking a winner for this year's district race, House did point out why he thought five teams would be in the hunt. The one inter-weaving factor, as is easily noticed, is the presence of at least two big men.

"Midland High is strong and big," he said. "They have a 6-8, a 6-7 and a 6-5. Cooper has a 6-11, a 6-8 and a 6-6. Permian's got one at 6-11, and a 6-6. Odessa High has a 6-5 and a kid who clears 7-feet in the high jump. Abilene High has two 6-8s and the best player in the league in Tyerone Washington."

Once out of football, junior Ryan Tucker, at 6-6, is the tallest of the Rebels. Seven other Rebels measure in in the low 6s, and the remainder of the Lee roster is filled out by the players standing in at between 5-9 and 5-11.

Wilson joins junior Martin Lattibeaudiere as two of the predominant players back for another season.

As good as Lattibeaudiere was as a sophomore player, he has worked during the offseason to increase his skills even further.

"I call him The Doctor," House said, "because he's a cure all."

Lattibeaudiere, who averaged 12.8 points per game in all 30 Rebel games last season, has become, according to House, "a threat from anywhere on the floor.

"He's improved his range. He can dunk it on you, and take it to the baseline."

One of the players who emphasized strength conditioning in the off-season, Lattibeaudiere is now a stronger player and "one to watch in district," House said.

Wilson, at 6-3, returns having averaged 15.3 ppg in district .

"He's a good technician. He can post up on you or get you in foul trouble. Last year as a junior, he kind of got thrown into it. He'd play tough for 2½ quarters and then cost for a quarter-and-a-half. If he'll play four quarters the way he played 2½ last year, he'll be tough."

Other returning lettermen include:

■ Jeramy Skaggs, 5-11, Sr. Listed as a probable starter at off-guard, Skaggs "worked his tail off" during the off-season and developed shooting and ball handling skills above his level of last season.

■ Keenan Henry, 5-9, Sr. Henry should slide into the starting point guard position when the Rebel football team completes its playoff trek. Henry shot 60 percent from the field last season and averaged 9.8 ppg and four assists per game. "His play was very instrumental in defeating Abilene High at their place last season," House said.

Others who've made the Rebel roster include:

■ David Wilson, 6-2, Jr. Leading scorer on Rebel JV in 1990-91, Wilson, House said, will be "a sleeper in district. He's one of those who's capable of scoring 20 points on any given night. The only thing that's hurting him is lack of varsity experience. As soon as he has one good night, that'll turn everything around for him."

■ Ryan Tucker, 6-6, Jr. A tight end in football, Tucker, who transferred from Abilene Cooper, is counted on for his size.

■ Henry Stewart, 5-10, Sr. One of the better JVers who's made the climb to varsity, Stewart is a full court press defensive specialist.

■ John Elliott, 6-2, Sr. Up from the junior varsity, Elliott, according to House, pays great attention to the technical side of the game and will likely fill a role player position on the team.

■ Kenneth Looney, 6-2, Sr. After developing a good shot in off-season training, Looney is expected to have a role off the bench, much in the fashion of Elliott.

■ Eli Columbus, 5-1, Sr. Another Rebel off the bench, House said "If someone needs rest, Eli won't bat an eye if he has to go in. He holds the rope for the starters. One of Lee's better defensive players, Columbus has discovered a better shot and improved his strength.

■ Kerry King, 5-9, Sr. A transfer who played for the Austin Westwood junior varsity last year, King is working on developing consistency in his game. Could be a role player at the point.

■ Michael Brown, 5-9, Sr. Another transfer, Brown split time between JV and varsity last season at Wichita Falls Hirschi. Still learning the system, House said while the jury is still out, Brown is in complete understanding of his role as a point guard off the bench.

■ Howard Griffin, 5-11, Sr. Another role type player, Griffin's shooting and strength was a main off-season focus of improvement. A steady type shooter, House said "He'll have a big part in our success."

■ Pat Kimble, 6-0, Sr. Can play any one of three positions from point to small forward because of his shooting abilities. Should compete with Skaggs for 2 guard spot.

■ Noble Kendrick, 6-0, Sr. A transfer from Denver, Kendrick is capable of starting at times because of defensive capablities.

■ Darryl Lucas, 6-2½ Sr. Another transfer, Lucas played on Bronte's state tournament team last season; currently football team's punter.

KING: Fan support, youth basketball on the upswing such as ESPN has begun to trickle down to the high school level, according to House.

"The kids see the enthusiasm in college basketball on television, and it gets them going, I think," House said. "We're starting to get fan support carry over. Our kids look and see 10,000 people in Memorial Stadium every Friday night, and they wonder, why aren't there 5,000 in the basketball stadium?

"I've accepted the fact that I'm in a football area. The problems you face coaching basketball at football schools is what you make them. You can be hard headed, or you can use the athletes that are available to you."

House said Lee football coach Earl Miller has "made a concerted effort" to see that his football players play basketball — if they want — following the completion of the playoffs. As many as three members of the Rebel football team are expected to see playing time on the hardwood this season.

Tayrien, now in his third year as athletic director in Midland, agrees that the basketball scene in Midland has come far, and continues to improve.

Tayrien cites an upgraded schedule in the middle and freshmen schools, and youth basketball programs that continue to grow.

For the first time this season, ninth-grade cagers will compete against freshmen from Odessa, in addition to having their annual post-season tournament.

In addition, programs in the seventh and eighth grades are growing. There are four 7th grade teams this year in each middle school, and this season brings the first post-season tournament between 8th graders in Midland and Odessa.

Players In Progress, a basketball ball handling and fundamentals program for kids from kindergarten through sixth grade has also began its first year in Midland. Kids in that program will perform at half times of numerous games this season.

The booster club at Lee has grown to 50 members, and pre-season coaches' polls show both Midland High girls and boys teams as possibly headed to the playoffs.

"Our youngsters are encouraged by coaches throughout the school system to participate in as many things as possible," Tayrien said. "We've had some success (with cross-over athletes) and we like to give our kids every opportunity available. And we try to provide as many coaches in ratio in basketball as we do in football."

"Just watching Michael Jordan makes kids want to play basketball," MHS head coach Jack Stepehenson said. "I think basketball is one of the really hot things going right now. Texas basketball in the last two years has really grown and gotten better."

Attendance increases annually at both the boys and girls tournaments in Austin, Stephenson said.

In terms of co-existing in a predominantly football oriented area, Stephenson said he tries not to concern himself with that.

"I know some basketball coaches that do think in terms of the pros and cons," Stephenson said. "I've just tried to take our program as far as I can take it and not worry about football.

"And sometimes, the media is the organization that puts the football dominant concept in an area."

On the flip side of the coin, there's Indiana. The basketball-crazy state no doubt has its share of high school football coaches wondering how they can get their sport to experience the same success and crowd support as basketball.

Tayrien agreed with Stephenson concerning the leaps-and-bounds growth in popularity basketball is experiencing in Texas.

"We see a lot of kids going to major Division I basketball programs from Texas," Tayrien, an Odessa High graduate, noted. "So we've got to be doing something right."

"Forty years ago, we probably averaged 13,000 people at football games my junior season. We played in front of 20,000 people even back then.

"Basketball has made great strides. But as far as a spectator sport, I don't know that it'll ever get to that point."

Red Raiders upset 20th-ranked Baylor, 31-24

Associated Press

WACO — Robert Hall threw a touchdown and ran for another and Donny Brooks returned a fumble 99 yards for a score as Texas Tech upset 20th-ranked Baylor 31-24 in a driving rain storm.

All three of Baylor's losses have been at home.

The Bears (7-3, 4-3 in the Southwest Conference) were unable to move the ball against Tech's defense, which sacked quarterback J.J. Joe on the game's final play.

Tech (5-5, 4-3) turned the game around early in the third quarter with a 21-yard field goal by Lin Elliott, which tied the score 17-all, and a 6-yard touchdown run by Hall, which was set up by an interception and put the Red Raiders on top for good.

The Red Raiders took a 31-17 lead when the Bears' Creig Stephens fumbled at the Tech 1 and Donny Brooks recovered the ball in the air and ran 99 yards untouched for the score.

Al O'Brien, a representative of the Copper Bowl, said the Bears' loss would not affect a Baylor invitation to the Dec. 31 game in Tucson, Ariz., Sunday.

Houston 41, Rice 21

HOUSTON — After sitting out the first quarter with a side injury, Houston's David Klingler riddled Rice's defense with five touchdown passes, rallying the Cougars and keeping alive hopes for a winning season.

Klingler complained of a sore left side before the game and backup Donald Douglas started the game as the Cougars fell behind 14-0 on runs of 2 yards by Trevor Cobb and 9 yards by quarterback Josh LaRocca.

Houston (4-5, 3-3 in the Southwest Conference) ended Rice's hopes of getting its first winning season since 1963. The Owls dropped to 4-6, 2-5.

LaRocca's touchdown run came on the first play of the second quarter before Klingler came on the field and led the Cougars to a 21-14 halftime lead.

Klingler first passed 60 yards to Veriond Brown down the sideline and then he hit Daniel Adams for touchdowns of 3 and 17 yards to get the lead.

AUSTIN — Butch Hadnot ran 52 yards for a touchdown, quarterback Peter Gardere set a school career passing yardage record and Texas' nationally ranked defense scored on a pass interception in a victory over Texas Christian.

Texas (5-4 overall, 4-2 SWC) extended its victory string to 24 over TCU (6-4, 3-4).

Texas led 26-0 at halftime in the rain as the its defense — ranked third in scoring defense and sixth in yardage allowed — yielded only 47 yards and two first downs.

Walk-on kicker Craig Dickey, playing for the first time this season, kicked 22- and 27-yard first quarter field goals to get Texas moving, and Hadnot burst 52 yards up the middle with 14:01 to go in the half.

Gardere capped a 10-play, 80-yard drive with a 5-yard scoring run, and junior cornerback Grady Cavness scored his first career touchdown by intercepting a Darren Schultz pass and returning it 23 yards with 6:10 left in the half.

MCS blasts SW Christian

Staff Report

ABILENE — The Midland Christian School Mustangs rolled over Fort Worth-Southwest Christian Academy 52-6 in the opening round of the Texas Association of Private and Parochial School playoffs here Saturday in a game that ended via the 45-point rule on the first play of the third quarter.

The victory by MCS puts the Mustangs up against Christway Academy in the TAPPS quarterfinals. Christway, which downed Agape Christian Academy 36-25 Saturday in Midland, is tentatively scheduled to meet MCS at 2 p.m. next Saturday in Abilene.

The Mustangs (10-1) barged out to a 46-0 lead late in the second quarter before SW Christian (7-4) turned in a 75-yard touchdown on a kickoff return with under a minute left in the first half.

But MCS quarterback Andy Awtry returned the opening kick of the third quarter all the way to the SWC two-yard line and Don Gilbreath ended the game with a two-yard TD plunge.

Neil Truex tossed a pair of nine-yard TD passes and another of 14 yards as MCS outgained SWC 240-9 yards in the contest. Jay Dallas added TD runs of five and three yards for the Mustangs.

Colorado keeps Orange Bowl hopes alive

Associated Press

BOULDER, Colo. — Backup quarterback Vance Joseph, who rallied No. 16 Colorado from a 24-10 third-quarter deficit, drove the Buffaloes 80 yards through a snowstorm for James Hill's scoring plunge with 40 seconds left to down Kansas 30-24 on Saturday.

With 2:09 left, Joseph took the Buffaloes to the end zone in eight plays. He passed 22 yards to Rico Smith, and Lamont Warren broke loose on a 28-yard run, setting up Hill's 1-yard TD run off the left side.

The Buffaloes (7-2-1 overall, 5-0-1 Big Eight) remained in bowl contention by averting disaster for the second straight game. They got a touchdown on a fake field-goal play in the closing seconds last week to squeeze past Oklahoma State 16-12.

If Colorado beats Iowa State next week and if No. 11 Nebraska loses to No. 18 Oklahoma, the Buffaloes would go to the Orange Bowl for the third straight year.

No. 5 Florida 35, Kentucky 26

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Florida's passing game has worked so well this season that Tre Everett's absence for nearly half the season was barely noticed during the team's drive to the Southeastern Conference championship.

The Gators' best receiver returned to the lineup after sitting out three games with a hamstring injury, and he caught two touchdown passes to spark a victory over Kentucky, which rallied from a 22-point halftime deficit to make Florida scramble to put the game away.

Justice's moves merit watching

The ruling last week by the U.S. Department of Justice that the redistricting plan offered by the Texas Legislature for its state House of Representatives violates the Voting Rights Act has effectively put the future of the 1992 elections in doubt on the existing timetable.

In ruling that the state House redistricting plan does not treat Hispanics fairly, the Justice Department has said, in effect, that were elections to be held on the basis of the boundaries as drawn by the Texas Legislature, the results potentially could be thrown out in a court of law.

This week, the Justice Department is expected to issue additional rulings on the plans for the state Senate, U.S. Congress and state Board of Education, all of which have been challenged, and those close to the process say that it's likely more of the plans will not pass the department's standards. It's also likely that if more of the plans are ruled in violation of the Voting Rights Act, the three-judge federal panel in Washington, D.C., that state Attorney General Dan Morales has asked to approve the Texas plans will not do so at its Dec. 2 hearing. Were that panel to approve interim use of the plans, candidates might be elected to positions that they would not be qualified for after the final district boundaries are determined.

Texas really has limited options since the redistricting plan drawn by House Democrats has failed muster. Gov. Ann Richards doesn't want to call a special session of the Texas Legislature to resolve the issue. She has called on Morales to ascertain whether the state can reshuffle some lines to fix the problem rather than calling the Legislature back into session. Morales would rather see the Legislature deal with the problem or at least obtain input from a group of legislators.

Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland, who heads the House Republican Caucus, has said he doesn't think the lawmakers deserve another shot at redistricting either. Texas Republican Party officials are urging a federal panel to avoid delaying the 1992 election by accepting the GOP's alternative redistricting plan for the House.

Time is quickly running out on state officials. Soon they'll be faced with the realization that they must push the filing deadline of Jan. 2 for the March 1992 primary elections back or risk having to call two different elections — one for all the offices in which lines are certain to stay as they are and one for those in which the district boundaries are questionable. That's not a good alternative. Such expense would be foolish, since local counties would have to bear the brunt of it.

It would be absurd to hold two elections in an era when the taxpayers want public officials to look at their every expenditure they make and be accountable for their actions. State officials need to watch the developments relating to the redistricting plans now before the Justice Department and be ready to push the election filing deadline and the election dates back if necessary.

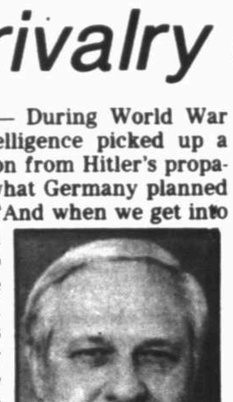
Hate, rivalry empower Yugoslavian war

WASHINGTON — During World War II, British intelligence picked up a grisly prediction from Hitler's propaganda minister about what Germany planned to do with Yugoslavia: "And when we get into Yugoslavia, we will have many strings to play upon. We will have those people dig a ditch between themselves and fill it with their own blood so no bridge will ever be built to bring them together again."



Anderson

The plan by the Germans to get the different ethnic groups in Yugoslavia to kill each other is etched in the mind of retired U.S. member of Congress John Blatnik. In 1944, he was briefed on what British intelligence knew about the German plan before he led OSS soldiers into that fractured country. The words still shock him as he reads about Yugoslavia's brutal civil war today. "They've resurrected this bloody, murderous genocide that the Germans originally had in mind," Blatnik said.

Numerous cease-fires have been violated in the Yugoslavian civil war. The fighting is driven by more than just a crusade for independence by the Croatians. It is powered by hatred and revenge, the same ingredients Adolf Hitler intended to harness. The ethnic rivalries have left the rest of the world puzzled about what to do with this internal war.

The confusion begins at the top with Yugoslavian President Stipe Mesic. He came to Washington recently to speak behind closed doors to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Mesic is the figurehead of the Serbian-dominated Yugoslavian government, but his presidency is powerless. He is a Croatian and an advocate of secession for Croatia.

U.S. senators sat through his pro-independence speechifying, expecting that they would eventually hear some substance. But all they got was a partisan plea for the support of Croatia.

Serbians, headed by their president Slobodan Milosovic, have been prone to stretching the truth too. The Yugoslavian military denied that one of its warplanes had dropped two bombs on the Croatian Palace in Zagreb on Oct. 7, even though eyewitnesses saw the passing Yugoslav Air Force bombers.

The U.S. government has responded to the confusion with its own indecisiveness. The House Foreign Affairs Committee has been inundated with proposed resolutions from members of Congress who want the House to come out in support of the Croatians. But little of substance has been agreed upon.

The State Department has waffled too. It originally supported a "unified Yugoslavia." Some Eastern European analysts now tell us that this was interpreted by Serbians as a thumbs-up to attack the Croatians and repress the secession movement. But in late September, Secretary of State James Baker shifted gears by scolding the Serbians for their "growing responsibility for the grim future which awaits the peoples of Yugoslavia if they do not stop the bloodshed."

It isn't as simple as denouncing a communist aggressor for drubbing a peace-loving republic. The Croatians have repeatedly broken the cease fire themselves, and their leadership is laced with many former hardline communists. But as the world community sifts through the facts and propaganda, its sympathies will likely side with the outgunned Croatians.

They are fighting almost exclusively a defensive battle with light weaponry against the tanks and warplanes of the Serbian military — a military built up in part with $130 million in U.S. aid between 1984 and 1988.

The Serbians clearly want to settle the conflict with guns instead of talk, and the world community may have to jump in to prevent a slaughter. As Blatnik put it, this is an internal matter, but even in a domestic dispute "a policeman has to come into a home if a husband's beating up his wife."

GEORGE WILL

Pease enjoys work but wants to drop out

WASHINGTON — Donald Pease wants it crystal clear that his decision to leave Congress at the end of this, his eighth term, does not derive from job dissatisfaction. He likes the work. That's his story, and he's sticking to it.

Will

And it's true. Sort of. Up to a point.

This northeast Ohio Democrat speaks with evident sincerity of the pleasures of attending hundreds of pancake breakfasts and rotary lunches and spaghetti suppers and weddings of daughters of people who ring doorbells for him. And if just reading the list makes you weary, you are not cut out for Congress. Your consolation can be that you are normal.

Thirty years ago Pease began the career that led from the Oberlin City Council through both houses of Ohio's legislature to Congress. When he became a professional politician, meaning one who regards elective office as a career rather than a leave of absence from one, he made, as a matter of course, a decision normal for that abnormal life, a decision that speaks volumes about, and conditions, the tone of American politics. He decided on "immersion" in politics, "to go every place, accept any invitation, never to make personal plans." It would, he thought, make him a good in-touch representative.

If, he says, friends invite him to dinner two weeks in advance, he thinks: Better wait a week and see if some event — a Farm Bureau meeting, perhaps — might conflict. "It is," he says, "part of the psychology of politicians that you can never do enough."

A coronary bypass operation and then heart-valve surgery have slowed him this much: He has, he says, trimmed his travel to and from and around his district enough to lower the odds on his re-election to 5-to-1. Those odds are quite comfortable but are way below the 10-to-1 that incumbents want to produce — what the vast majority had in 1990 — negligible opposition.

The country's condition he anticipates 10 years hence is "not good" and "already it's not pleasant being in Congress." There is no consensus in the country about what government should do and, because of deficits (and first the Gramm-Rudman restraints, and now the 1990 budget agreement), there are no fiscal tools to work with, anyway.

There are, he says, two ways to curb deficits — spending cuts and tax increases — and voters hate both. Actually, there is a third way, economic growth, but from Pease's district that looks impossible.

The district has Cleveland suburbs and a steel mill, two automobile assembly plants and many dairy farms. It has lost upwards of 15,000 high-paying blue-collar jobs in the last decade. A shipyard that employed 1,500 people has closed. It built boats that brought iron ore to many Midwestern steel mills now closed. Many of his constituents are feeling the anxieties that elected Harris Wofford to Pennsylvania's Senate seat, anxieties that are produced by industrial decline and that produce the defensive politics of new entitlements (such as national health insurance) and protectionism.

Pease is depressed by the governmental paralysis that prevents creative action. But he wants it clearly understood that he likes the job.

Pease says, "The demands of a congressional career can tend to crowd out other facets of a person's life" but "I'm not complaining. I recognized the trade-offs and I accepted them willingly. I would do so again."

But the satisfaction of House service is supposed to come from participation in national success. "Rationalize as we might, the truth is that we are in charge while our nation's future is being mortgaged and its economic strength sapped ... the bottom line is that we have failed. It's depressing to be part of the corporate 'we.'"

Fourteen months from now he won't be.

JOHN POWERS

Incumbents, issues make race exciting

AUSTIN — About a dozen bumper stickers and assorted memorabilia are stuck to a mirror behind the bar at a popular chili parlor near the Capitol.

One reads: "If voting would change the system, it would be illegal."

Well, people finally may be fed up enough to vote for changes in the system — before Congress makes it illegal.

Let's get a couple of truisms out of the way first.

One, it is difficult to defeat an incumbent. Incumbents do a lot of favors for people and help a lot of citizens with their problems. That is their job.

As a result, few incumbents even get a challenge unless there is serious scandal or a change in the political winds.

That change may be at hand, however, and incumbents, regardless of party, are worried.

The greatest truism is that the economy will determine the election results.

Voters always put the pocketbook issue first. And why not? It is about food on the table and shelter for their families and savings to live on after retirement. It is about survival.

If the economy improves and voters feel confident again, they will re-elect Bush. If the economy remains in trouble, and certainly if it gets worse, he is vulnerable to an articulate Democratic challenge.

If the economy is so-so, do other issues prevail? If they are serious enough, they can tilt the undecided vote and the election.

Voters may question Bush about racism, education, the environment, an energy policy, a drug war he has been in charge of for more than a decade, a tax policy that enriches the wealthy and penalizes the middle-class and the poor, Dan Quayle, John Sununu, Clarance Thomas, Robert Gates, China, an inflexible anti-abortion stance and Reagan-Bush policies that deregulated the savings-and-loan industry and made America the greatest debtor nation in the world.

And a coverup may be brewing at the White House on the alleged connection of Sununu and White House counsel Boyden Gray with the drug-dealing and criminal-infested Bank of Credit and Commerce International.

Whatever the state of the economy, those ought to be enough issues to make for an interesting race.

RUSSELL BAKER

Reality visits America twice in one week

Reality dropped in on America twice last week. One visit any time is remarkable; two in a week, extraordinary. Press and television were flabbergasted. They are so benumbed by make-believe that so much reality was bound to make them giddy.

Baker

The first visit occurred at midweek. Scattered election results, subjected to intense scrutiny, revealed that, yes — yes! — there really was a middle class. What a commotion in the press. What an upsetment in television. "Middle Class Lives!"

This was followed almost instantly, so swift is the analytic genius of the media, by "Middle Class Suffers!" What it suffers has, of course, been obvious for months to everybody not addicted to kidding himself. For the first time in maybe 50 years, people who cannot be dismissed as shiftless louts are worrying about how they are going to pay the doctor, pay the rent and pay the butcher.

To recognize this had been impolite until last week's elections, for press and television, despite conservative belief that they are hotbeds of Bolshevism, have been exceedingly timid about offending Republican presidents since the Washington Post took on Richard Nixon way back when.

Not surprisingly then, they largely accepted the official statistics and official pronouncements from official pronouncement issuers, and played the Republican tune on the economy, which went, "Let's make believe and keep our fingers crossed." With last week's elections, economic reality finally became an acceptable subject for press and TV to dwell upon.

Before the country could relish this rare onset of reality about the economy it was confronted by Earvin "Magic" Johnson forcing it to face another reality, which is that AIDS is a disease that threatens absolutely everybody. So far it has been politically and economically convenient to consider it an affliction visited only on certain luckless minorities.

As Johnson pointed out with such eloquence in his news conference, it can strike even the noblest among us, and surely will, if not directly then through those we love. The media response to Magic was an astonishing torrent of film and print such as one rarely sees except for the start of wars and the fall of tyrants. It filled newspapers and television for three or four days, instantly obliterating from memory the big midweek visit of economic reality.

This is one reason reality has such a hard time surviving in America. Media overdosing quickly wears out reality's welcome, stimulating appetites for the relief of make-believe. After bombardments of news about the pain of unemployed fathers and the despair of young home buyers in a world of $150,000 "starter homes," we want to cry out: "Enough! I've been hit by reality from my cradle. Now stuff me with fun!"

Magic Johnson may escape this destiny and keep the country at grips with reality for the long run. Let's hope so.

The overwhelming media absorption in Magic's case reflects the astonishing importance which Americans give to sports and sports heroes. To be sure, it helps that Earvin Johnson is not just another sports hero, but also a gentleman of surpassing charm. Still, is there any actor, any statesman, any warrior, any politician less than a sitting president who could produce such massive outpourings by announcing that he had tested positive for HIV?

Sports are almost as hostile to reality as politics. Sports lull us with romantic speechifying about the glory of team and teamwork while it corrupts our universities and exploits poor talented kids not quite talented enough ever to play in Magic's league. Politics beguiles us with shabby hocus-pocus which creates "images" and "perceptions" to distract us from realities.

LETTERS

Parents should teach kids values about sex

I was planning to write a letter about how our quest for convenience has resulted not only in our society's economic woes (using plastic to buy now rather than saving up for what we want), to disposing of our unwanted unborn children, and now even our old and sick (euthanasia bills are now in Washington, Oregon, California and I hear there is one sliding around Texas). But with Magic Johnson's announcement of having the HIV virus, the reactions I've seen have been disturbing.

Yes we should give our children better information, and yes we should realize this is not just a gay disease, but so far most all the answers have been, "Let's talk safe sex."

How about no sex? I think if we as children of the '60s had known that our example of free love was going to result in the deaths of our children we might have reconsidered the philosophy that has spawned such a permissive society today.

Is it now just convenient to tell our children to "just wear condoms," rather than face the difficult subject of abstinence?

A lot of people say they are "pro choice." Well, women were for years except the choice used to be "yes" or "no." Now as a society we teach our children to do "what just feels right." As parents we need to wake up and not teach about "safe sex," but about a responsible life that holds intimacy as something special, instead of something passing in the night.

In 1962 we took all religion out of the schools and some would say that's OK. But then any moral teaching that might be associated with religion had to go for fear of legal conflicts. Then all teaching of responsible living had to go, because we had to have sex education but with no values attached.

Think back parents, were condoms the answer when you were young? I think not. The young don't think, they just feel and react. If we don't teach our teenagers to "just say no" and what the value of waiting can hold, we will be holding them in our arms as they pass from this world far too soon. Everywhere around us — TV, movies, commercials — are telling the kids this is the way life is, "Why ask why?"

Why, because we love them.

Child's condition due to parents' treatment

I am a 20-year-old citizen of Midland. Although I've only lived here a year and a half, I've learned that Midland is quite a bit more caring than most places in the world. Today I opened the Midland newspaper and on Page 1 C the headline read, "Starved boy ate from trash, says friend of parents." After reading this article I was outraged and heartbroken.

In this article, Mrs. Hill blamed her son's condition on society and poor parenting skills. I would like to inform Mrs. Hill that the only one she can blame is herself and her husband for the cruel deed that has been done. Poor parenting skills is not an excuse either for what has happened. Idiocy and coldness of the heart is the reason for this young man's condition.

I hope that the judge for this case will not only punish the parents accordingly, but that he will make them go through extensive counseling. I pray that whomever gets custody of the boys will get them counseling also. I thank God above that I don't live in a community where this is an everyday thing.

Man looks for soldier who served in WW II

I need the help of your newspaper to locate a resident of the Midland area who served with honor in World War II. Specifically, I am trying to locate a man who fought for his country in Belgium and Germany during the Battle of the Bulge and beyond. He served in the U.S. Army, Company "A" 324th Combat Engineer Battalion, 99th Infantry Division.

I am looking for Ysidro F. Nunez. His last known address was Box 1877, Midland, Texas.

If information pertaining to Nunez is located, please contact William "Frank" Kyser, 3226 Cawein Way, Louisville, Ky. 40220-1934. My telephone number is (502) 458-5931. Your help in locating this Texas native will be deeply appreciated. I am representing the 99th Infantry Division Association.

Faulkner trial verdict renews system faith

The jury in the Danny Faulkner trial has renewed faith in the judicial system. They proved defense attorneys — the average citizen is able to make judgments on right and wrong.

Their hard work and commitment has taught my four children more of a history lesson than any books. Adults teach out of their lives!

Thank you Joyce Sherrod and each juror!

SPEAKING OUT

We must fulfill handicapped peoples' needs

By Oralia "Lilly" Corrales

Few individuals in a lifetime have the opportunity to have in their midst and in their home a person who has so very much pure love to offer and the chance to learn from an individual that perhaps to those who did not know him or understand him were cheated out of a most rewarding experience.

Oralia "Lilly" Corrales is a former member of the Midland City Council. This article was written by her out of concern for the mentally disabled.

My brother, Joe Castellon, and his twin sister were born Sept. 14, 1935 in Midland. At the age of 18 months Joe suffered from a mastoid ear infection which caused him to be mentally disabled.

I write about Joe as I knew him and of his many attributes. I believe there is so much that needs to be done for the mentally impaired, but somehow monies are always needed and used for other purposes.

Joe was able to care for himself very well. He came to live with us at the death of my mother eight years ago. He was familiar with our home as he had spent many days over the years in our home. My mother's greatest concern had always been what would become of Joe in the event of her death, yet the Lord always took very special care of Joe.

Joe's capacity for love and joy had no limits. He loved children and was very good with them. The specialists claimed that his intelligence was that of a 3-year-old, yet Joe could put a 1,000-piece puzzle together backwards without seeing the design or colors. He also loved to sew, put buttons on clothes, do his own mending, shave and he loved to color with crayons.

He loved music and always slept with his radio turned on. He was bilingual, but he preferred Spanish music and loved to see the Three Stooges on his television. He also loved to sing. His favorite music in English was gospel and his joy when he got to attend Cornerstone Christian Fellowship and participated in the praise hymns was one of his greatest. The love he received from the people who knew Joe and were just around him was a joy to experience.

Joe was also fortunate to attend some activities at Midland Association for Retarded Citizens (MARC) and the fellowship and friends he made there were many. He also enjoyed on occasion participating at Casa de Amigos.

Always a very healthy individual who loved to eat all the things he was not supposed to have, it was not unusual to run into Joe in a dark kitchen as he raided the refrigerator at all hours of the day or night, his favorite being ice cream.

He loved to go shopping and selecting those food items he preferred. His great love was coffee and he was very partial to the type of coffeemaker that is set on a time basis where the coffee was ready at his convenience.

He loved animals and one of our favorite pastimes together was to walk in the park where he could enjoy the ducks.

Joe never met a stranger, and he had a great capacity to remember people and names.

One area we always had a concern for Joe was his love to take apart electrical appliances, be they a television, irons or radios. He could also put them back together, but our concern was due to his safety in not realizing he could get shocked and it happened a few times that he learned from his experience.

His color coordination was unreal. He could pick out his own clothes and match them perfectly. He loved to dress up and get his hair groomed. I remember once my husband, Jesse, was standing and looking at Joe, exclaiming that God had not been very fair. I turned, puzzled at his statement, and asked what he meant.

Jesse replied, "Look at that beautiful mop of hair he has, and look at the very few strands I have!"

On another occasion Tom Scott, Joe's attorney and a family friend, told Joe he had life "made in the shade." Tom had a very special love for Joe and that memory will always be treasured.

After his death, Joe's eyes were donated and a recipient received the gift of sight the following day.

Joe was my brother, but he was also my child and my friend, and I will miss those times when we would sneak out and have Chinese food or a huge hamburger with fries and a shake. I will see him everytime I walk in Wadley-Barron Park and enjoy the ducks he loved so much.

My sincerest thanks go to Dr. Robert A. Vogel for the kindness and respect he showed Joe. To the staff of the Midland Memorial Hospital rehabilitation unit for the tender loving care given to Joe, for the memorial service they had in his memory, to the chaplain who consoled us during this most difficult period in our life.

Joe has gone to a much better place promised to us by our Lord. Joe had a love of the Lord which was expressed in his singing and pure love of people.

My sincere appreciation to Louis Mata and Ray Unterbrink for their love and compassion. It was Ray who made me aware of all the needs of individuals with handicaps like Joe. The only people who can work to make available what is necessary to fill those needs are our congressman, Lamar Smith, our state representative, Tom Craddick and our state senator, Bill Sims. It is my hope that they will come to see people like my brother, Joe, as a person with all the attributes of any other human being and understand that we must provide for those needs.

Do you know that it is impossible to get insurance for someone in Joe's condition or even a dentist who will agree to treat them? Many nursing homes do not meet the standards to care for the mentally retarded. Some offer custodial care, but that is about the extent of what they will do.

It is my hope that by personalizing my brother and others like him that those in positions to help meet the needs of these individuals will make every effort to provide for them.

Baker's article hints at trouble for China if its actions continue

In an otherwise uneventful Foreign Affairs quarterly article by Secretary of State Baker, there is a tantalizing sentence about China. Some will call it simply an observation. But according to key Bush administration officials, it is an observation that could develop into the ultimate sanction — a threat to the territorial integrity of the Middle Kingdom — if Beijing leaders continue to defy new standards of world behavior on arms sales and human rights.

Gelb

Baker will not play, or even hint at, this "card" in China later this week. It would be too explosive. But Beijing's rulers know the card is now in the deck, waiting for their next moves on a host of legitimate American grievances.

The development of a large free-market sector, Baker's carefully crafted sentence says, "has led to the integration of China's coastal provinces with Hong Kong, Taiwan and the global economy."

On the surface this is merely a statement of an interesting fact. Chinese provinces that have embraced free enterprise have become part of the outside trading world.

At another level it is a statement of fact aimed at those who criticize President Bush for being too indulgent of Beijing's misdeeds. It is a way of telling them that Bush's policy of engagement, and particularly of maintaining trade ties with China, is paying off. It warns critics against arresting this evolutionary process by doing things like cutting off China's special trade status with the United States.

On the deepest plane, however, it is a statement that can send shivers down the back of Beijing's ruling gerontocracy. For it suggests that instead of China eventually absorbing Taiwan and Hong Kong, as now prescribed in various solemn agreements, the exact opposite could happen — Taiwan and Hong Kong could absorb the southern tier of China.

Of course, this could be taken simply as fair warning of trends. It says to Beijing, make China more attractive. Otherwise the southern provinces and Hong Kong (which is to revert to China's sovereignty in 1997) could become so attached to the outside world that they will refuse to be treated as a part of China. And along with Taiwan (which now accepts the idea of one China), they could all demand self-determination.

More than simply citing a trend, however, Baker seems to be signaling that the Bush administration might actually encourage — or be forced by political circumstances to encourage — separatism if China remains an "outlaw" state. Herein lies the ultimate meaning of that one seemingly innocuous Baker sentence.

Beyond doubt, Bush and Baker fear instability and do not want to promote Chinese disintegration. But with China causing so much trouble, they are not above using the implied threat of separatism:

Thus over Beijing's objection, Bush will press for Taiwan's membership in GATT as a "customs territory" before China's entry into the world trade organization.

Thus to Beijing's unhappiness, the president has not opposed a new Senate bill that demands China live up to its agreement about the rights of Hong Kong residents if eventual Chinese sovereignty is to be recognized over the islands.

Thus in a rebuff to Chinese sovereignty in Tibet, Bush received the Dalai Lama, spiritual leader of Tibetans now under China's yoke.

George Bush is China's best friend in Washington. Rather than beating Beijing over the head, he would strongly prefer that congressional critics allow him to work on the problems quietly and without constant public crises. But he and his secretary of state are telling Beijing to face an American political fact: Rough-and-tumble times lie ahead if China retains its unfair trade practices, persists in selling dangerous missiles and nuclear technology and continues its human rights abuses.

These Chinese actions go far beyond the pale. Americans and others may take extraordinary measures, including kindling separatism, to stop them. Beijing's leaders will be making a terrible mistake to think otherwise.

Energy breakthroughs lighten tunnel to 21st century

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — There is good reason to believe that when our young children and grandchildren reach middle age they will benefit from one of the greatest scientific discoveries in the history of mankind.

Hearst

They will live in a new world order that promises to provide permanent prosperity for the human race in general.

It will be a new kind of inexpensive, virtually inexhaustible, almost completely non-dangerous energy that will end the need for oil. It will produce no nuclear waste and create only a little radioactivity which can be easily controlled. It will neither pollute the air nor contaminate the earth as nuclear power does. And it does not produce carbon dioxide.

This new energy will be produced basically with small amounts of water. It is estimated there would be enough water in 10 surface inches of Lake Superior to supply America's current energy needs for 5,000 years. It would produce far more energy from the top two inches of water from Lake Erie and Lake Huron than exists in all the earth's known oil reserves. It will create a new industrial revolution and transform the life of humanity.

This is not the fiction fantasies of Jules Verne who wrote with incredible foresight in the late 1880s about rockets to the moon and going 20,000 leagues under the sea. It is the result of nearly half a century of painstaking experimentation primarily by American and European scientific geniuses.

The historic breakthrough came last weekend. With my tremendous admiration but understandable disappointment, the Europeans won the race. They brought about, in effect, the birth of fusion energy. For the first time in history, a significant amount of power was produced from controlled nuclear fusion. The achievement is a momentous step in harnessing for constructive human use the kind of thermonuclear fire that lights the sun.

Research over the past 40 years has cost many billions of dollars in the United States and Europe. Victory was achieved a week ago Saturday by researchers at the Joint European Center (JET) Center in Oxfordshire, England.

Between 1.5 million and 2 million watts of power were produced at the JET lab near Oxford when a few drops of tritium were added to deuterium, both variants of hydrogen, in a doughnut-shaped reactor called a torus. Scientists had to use about 15 million watts of power to produce the heat and pressure needed to get the nuclei of the hydrogen atoms to fuse, but when they did, approximately 2 million watts of power resulted.

By 1996 the scientists hope to hone the process so that about 50 percent tritium will be used with 50 percent deuterium to produce a "break even" reaction; that is, as much energy will be produced as is used to create the fusion reaction.

The Oxfordshire team had scientists from 14 European countries, putting Europe ahead of the United States, Russia and Japan — a late comer.

It is questionable whether we will be able to catch up by ourselves until we have solved our federal budget deficit problem, although American researchers were among the first to start exploring the possibility of controlling nuclear fusion.

President Carter was enthusiastic about the idea. In October 1980, he signed a bill calling for development of fusion energy by the end of this century. The Magnetic Fusion Engineering Act became law that year. However, President Reagan sharply cut the funding to build up our military power to induce the Soviets to end the Cold War.

President Bush has expressed the hope the Europeans might let us collaborate with them because who controls fusion could control the world, for a while at least. We would probably have to give the Europeans something they badly want.

The main fusion fuel at present is deuterium, a heavy form of hydrogen. Deuterium can be easily extracted from water in nearly endless quantities. It then has to be mixed with tritium gas and heated to temperatures of around 200 million degrees Celsius — nearly more than 10 times the temperature in the center of the sun.

It took a few days to gather this fascinating information from the Oxfordshire Center and from Dr. Michael Saltmarsh, associate director for the Fusion Nuclear Division of the Oak Ridge (TN) National Laboratory. Other sources were our own Hearst Newspapers reporters, the N.Y. Times, the Washington Post, and Princeton University, the top U.S. collegiate center for fusion studies.

It all makes me realize we are on the threshold of what promises to be a miraculous 21st century.

No. 12 Notre Dame 13

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Notre Dame's worst defeat in four seasons won't stop the Sugar Bowl from taking the Fighting Irish over Penn State.

Wide receiver O.J. McDuffie caught two touchdown passes and ran 37 yards on a reverse for another TD as the eight-ranked Nittany Lions beat No. 12 Notre Dame.

The Nittany Lions are going to the Fiesta Bowl to play Tennessee and Penn State players couldn't understand why the Sugar Bowl didn't wait until after Saturday's games to pick its teams.

"We definitely took it as an insult," McDuffie said.

Richie Anderson ran for 136 yards on 26 carries and scored twice as the Nittany Lions (9-2) handed Notre Dame its worst defeat since the 1988 Cotton Bowl.

CLEMSON, S.C. — Senior DeChane Cameron threw for more than 200 yards for only the second time in his career as Clemson beat Maryland to win the Atlantic Coast Conference championship and a Citrus Bowl berth.

As champion of the ACC for the 13th time, the Tigers (7-1-1 overall, 5-0-1 ACC) will likely play California on New Year's Day at Orlando, Fla.

Maryland (2-8, 2-4) scored on its first possession when Jim Sandwisch hit Jason Kremus for a 56-yard touchdown with 12:33 left.

It was the fourth consecutive win for Syracuse (8-2), which scored 24 straight points after falling behind 10-0 in the first quarter. Syracuse is expected to receive a bid for the Hall of Fame Bowl to be played at Tampa, Fla., on New Year's Day.

Junior tailback David Walker carried 18 times for a career-high 148 yards, the third time in four weeks he's topped 100 yards.

No. 18 Oklahoma 21
Oklahoma St. 6

NORMAN, Okla. — Mike Gaddis slashed through Oklahoma State for 203 yards as Oklahoma beat the winless Cowboys for the 15th straight time, and set up an important season finale against Nebraska.

Gaddis matched his career high with 35 carries as the Sooners (8-2, 5-1 Big Eight) got by without quarterback Cale Gundy, who had minor hernia surgery last weekend.

Gaddis has 1,177 yards and is the first Oklahoma back to have a 1,000-yard season since Spencer Tillman in 1983. Gaddis's 690 yards in three games against the Cowboys (0-9-1, 0-5-1) are the most by any Sooner against one opponent.

Kenyon Rasheed scored on runs on 3, 5 and 10 yards and Oklahoma's defense did the rest on a rainy, windy day. The Sooners came up with a goal-line stand in the third quarter, then broke open the game with two fourth-quarter scores.

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Carlos Snow ran for two touchdowns and Ohio State survived a last-second scare to beat Indiana.

Snow scored on runs of 6 and 13 yards and gained 124 yards on 32 carries as Ohio State (8-2 overall, 5-2 Big Ten) closed in on a Hall of Fame Bowl berth against No. 17 Syracuse.

Vaughn Dunbar had 125 yards on 28 carries for Indiana (5-4-1, 4-3), which is said to still be in the running for a spot in the Copper Bowl against Baylor — if the Hoosiers beat Purdue next week.

The kick would have been good last year, before the goalposts were narrowed by almost five feet. But with the new rule, it sailed a dozen inches wide.

MOJO: Tascosa leads going into fourth quarter

(From 1B)

"The condition of the field played a big part in the game and maybe worked toward Tascosa's advantage," Permian coach Tam Hollingshead said of a soggy, slow field. "It certainly negated some of our speed and our strength. Still, Tascosa played an excellent game and it looked at one point like we might end up shooting ourselves in the foot."

Permian had some major woes in the first half as the Rebels limited the Panthers to only six plays in the first 22:45 minutes of play, taking a 3-0 lead on a 20-yard field goal by Josh Conklin early in the second quarter.

Tascosa got its three points on a 26-yard drive that consumed an amazing 5:17. A John Williams fumble at the Permian 26-yard line set up the drive.

Amazingly, 5-5 Tascosa held a 3-0 lead on the state's No. 2 ranked team.

But if Tascosa was doing what it needed by running right at Permian and converting key third and fourth down plays, Permian was still Permian when it came to the two-minute drill.

The Panthers marched 87 yards in 12 plays behind the arm of quarterback Stormy Case to take a 7-3 lead at the half, covering the distance in just 1:32 minutes.

Case hit Kendrick Parrett with a 19-yard scoring toss with 23 seconds left before the half.

But Tascosa struck back in the third period, ramming in a touchdown after a Hamilton fumble set up a 41-yard Rebel drive. Stephon McQueen got the final seven yards for a 9-7 lead and appeared to have Permian reeling.

"We had our chances and took advantage of the Permian turnovers, but we just couldn't close the door on them," said Tascosa coach Duane Huey. "Permian is a great football team and they don't make many mistakes. Fortunately, we did take advantage of what they gave us, but we didn't get the whole job done."

Hamilton ended the game with 159 yards rushing on 23 carries while sophomore John Williams had 59 yards, most coming in the fourth quarter when Permian took over. Tascosa was led by McQueen with 65 yards on 25 carries.

Chaps upend hosts, 85-68

Staff Report

PRESCOTT, Ariz. — Morris Conley scored 20 points and Chris McKinney and Bruce Patterson each hit for 19 as the Midland College Chaparrals defeated Yavapai College 85-68 Saturday night in the final round of the Yavapai Basketball tournement.

The Chaps finished second at the three-day tourney, while upping their season record to 5-1 and dropping host team Yavapai to 2-3.

Good Sheppard, which handed the Chaps their only loss of the season in second-round play, took the tourney championship.

McKinney and Ari Rodriques of MC were named to the all tourney team.

After MC bolted out to a 42-31 lead at the half, Yavapai pulled back to within six points, 53-47, with 15:06 to play. But Patterson turned in a three point play and Terrance Rone hit a three-point bomb that turned the momentum back to MC for good.

The Chaps return home for a rare Tuesday night game at 7:30 p.m. when Ranger Junior College comes to Midland.

It will be the last home game for the Chaps in November.

Tabb sinks ace

Staff Report

The 69-year-old Tabb used a 6-iron to ace the 143-yard No. 4 hole. Witnesses were Bobby Dyer, Robert Cooke and Bill Henson.

FSU to Cotton?

DALLAS (AP) — Florida State's 17-16 loss Saturday to Miami all but assures the Seminoles of a Jan. 1 trip to the Cotton Bowl.

Cotton Bowl executive vice president Jim Brock will issue the invitation today.

"We're trying to live by the spirit of the rules," Brock said Saturday. "Most people have Florida State coming, but you have to ask them."

LEE: Rebs host Andress Saturday

(From 1B)

After a five yard penalty, Turner shook off a big hit by Don defenseman Daniel Hampton and raced 15 yards for a score as Lee was on its way to four touchdowns in four consecutive possessions.

Turner opened the fourth quarter of play on a keeper sweep that went for 52 yards. The youngster has good speed, but the soggy, slippery field, made it look as if he was on the way to a long distance TD romp in slow motion. Still, there was no question he had more speed than any trying to catch him.

"I had no idea I was going to get to play this much, but you just have to stay ready all the time," Turner said. "It really feels good as a sophomore to come in and get a chance like this. I was nervous at first."

Turner got off to a rugged start when he came in to replace Patton in the second period. He couldn't find his footing on two carries for a loss of nine yards and bobbled the snap from center K.C. Jones a couple of times.

"You've just got to keep playing the game," Turner said. "This was great."

Tucker caught three of Turner's passes for 86 yards, missing a TD when he was tripped up from behind on a 43-yard carry to the PD five-yard line in the fourth period.

"I wanted that touchdown so bad," Tucker said. "I was really excited when we started throwing the ball some. We hardly ever throw."

Tucker, a junior transfer from Abilene Cooper this year, would have had plenty of chances to catch passes if he had stayed with the Cougars, but he isn't disappointed in the move to Midland.

"If I had stayed at Cooper, I wouldn't be in the playoffs. I'm excited about being in the playoffs, so I'm not at all disappointed in the way things have gone."

Junior running back Sherman Dedrick had 61 yards rushing and two touchdowns while Brett Sullivan had the other, scoring Lee's first points near the end of the first period of play.

The Lee defense was excellent again, forcing two fumbles and three interceptions. Safety Henry Stewart had two interceptions, following on the heels of his first two picks of the season just last week against San Angelo.

"I really felt I accomplished something big," Stewart said. "I'm hitting my stride now with four in two weeks."

Donovan Bushman had the other interception to end the game. Linebacker Jovan Tellez set up Lee's first score with a fumble recovery at Palo Duro's 34-yard line.

The Lee defense also produced a safety as defensive end Tony Olivas tackled Tremaine Brown in the end zone for a five-yard loss.

"I think it was supposed to be a counter-deuce," Olivas said, "but the guards didn't pull and he (Brown) was left all alone in the end zone. I just tackled him. I think it help set the tone for us the rest of the day."

And the rest of the day went fine. Palo Duro was held to a meager six first downs, 38 yards rushing and 67 passing. The Dons' deepest penetration was to Lee's 33-yard line on its first possession of the day. Three of PD's first downs came on that drive.

"I'm pretty well pleased with this game," Miller said. "A win in a deal like this is good. That field was in bad shape and we had to do a lot of sliding around."

Lee line coach Ronnie Stephens said of the playing field, "I'm just glad we had the first game. That place is chewed up. This is over and I'm glad."

"It was tough out there, but you just had to keep plugging away," Lee tackle Max Stuart said. "You couldn't get your footing."

PLAYOFF NOTES: Lee advances to the Small School area playoffs at 2 p.m. Saturday in Midland's Memorial Stadium against El Paso Andress, a 7-0 winner over El Paso Bel Air Friday at Andress.

Midland athletic director Jack Tayrien said that season ticket holders could purchase tickets Monday and Tuesday and may get only the number of season tickets they own. All other tickets go on sale to the general public Wednesday at 8 a.m. at the Memorial Stadium ticket office. Tickets are $6 for adults and $3 for students. All tickets at the gate will be $7. Lee and Andress are both 10-1 going into the area battle. Palo Duro exits the playoffs with a 4-7 record.

Cowboys try to make it two straight over Giants

Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The New York Giants hadn't lost to the Dallas Cowboys in a long time, and no one took it harder than cornerback Mark Collins.

In fact, the image many people recall when they think of the Cowboys 21-16 win in late September was Michael Irvin breaking a Collins' tackle at around the Giants 5 and going in for the winning score late in the fourth quarter.

It capped a miserable day in which Cowboys receivers caught passes for 142 yards on Collins' side of the field. Not all the yardage on the left side was Collins' responsibility, but a good chunk was.

The performance bothered Collins so much that he walked out of a team meeting the following day, got into his car and drove around for a couple of hours to clear his head.

"It had nothing to do with the team," Collins said. "It was me. I was unhappy with the way I was playing."

Collins will get a chance for a little payback Sunday when the Giants (5-5) play the Cowboys (6-4) at Giants Stadium in what has become a must game for the defending Super Bowl champions.

"We lose, we're out," Collins said.

Collins said the danger for the Giants will be someone trying to do too much by himself.

Giants defensive coordinator Al Groh said Collins took it upon himself to better his game, and he has.

"He did a lot of film work, looking at previous games, previous seasons, his footwork, his position on receivers and all those kinds of things," Groh said. "He didn't just go out on the field and work. He spent a lot of time thinking and analyzing his play."

Collins also watched the Cowboys game again, and it wasn't any better the second time around. He'd like that to change this time.

"You just want to show them that you can play a little bit better than you played before," said Collins, who last year felt he should have earned a Pro Bowl berth. "You play a bad round of golf, you can't wait until you play that same course again so you can do well. Same thing here."

For the most part, the Giants did everything right against Dallas in the first game except win. They outgained Dallas 487-327 in total offense, never punted and had quarterback Jeff Hostetler hit 28 of 34 passes for 368 yards.

"We got three turnovers and they were key turnovers," Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson said. "The first one prevented a touchdown and the next allowed us to score. Then we got one to save the game. Turnovers were a big key for us and our offense was able to score enough points to win."

Winning Sunday would put Dallas in great position for a wildcard berth.

"At our stage of development, we're just trying to win games," Johnson said. "I don't know if we realistically look down the road. I think there is a real danger if a football team tries to do that, especially a young team like we have."

The one thing that might be working in the Cowboys favor is that they might be a little hungrier than the Giants, who have been inconsistent all season.

"We need to string together more than a couple of wins," coach Ray Handley said.

Strippers return to action in Astrodome

Associated Press

HOUSTON — The Houston Oilers defense will be honing its newfound ball-hawking skills in the Astrodome Sunday night against the Cleveland Browns.

The turnover-conscious Oilers have developed the technique of stripping the ball from runners and receivers so well they've come to expect it to happen in every game.

Linebacker Lamar Lathon has forced seven turnovers in the last four games, two of them leading to game winning points. Cornerback Cris Dishman had a seven-game stretch with at least one turnover per game.

"The Oilers weren't a big takeaway team but now they have it in their minds that they can make the big play at any time," Lathon said. "They can will just about anything to happen on the field. We have guys with that mentality and that's what makes us successful."

The Oilers rank first in the AFC and fourth in the NFL with 15 interceptions and their turnover ratio of plus-six is tied for sixth in the NFL.

"Our defense has the attitude of never say die," Lathon said. "Dishman started this trend of getting the strip and everybody has it in their mind now that's what we're going to do."

"It's not that the running back is not able to hold onto the ball, it's just the element of surprise," Lathon said. "You have a guy running free thinking he's going to score a touchdown.

"His emphasis is getting to the goal line. It's very easy to strip the ball if you can catch him in that situation. It's not that easy in the middle of the field where he's protecting the ball.

The Oilers appeared headed for their second straight overtime loss Sunday with Dallas' sure-handed Emmitt Smith running toward the Oiler goal line. But Lathon came up behind Smith and got a hand on the ball, causing a fumble.

"Hustle makes a lot of things happen in this game and that's why we were still hustling in that game," Lathon said. "Somebody knew that somebody would make a big play."

Houston drove the other direction to a 23-yard field goal by Al Del Greco and a 26-23 victory.

The Browns (4-6) are trying to make this a comeback season from last year's 3-13 finish but they keep losing by narrow margins. They have lost the past two weeks to Cincinnati 23-21 and to Philadelphia 32-30.

The Oilers would like to continue their takeaway tactics against Browns quarterback Bernie Kosar, who last week set an NFL record with 308 consecutive passes without an interception dating back to last season. Philadelphia's Ben Smith ended the streak in the second quarter.

Charlotte, which beat Boston for only the second time in 14 games, charged ahead on a third-quarter run sparked by Kendall Gill, who scored 24 points.

Gill's 16-footer with 1:40 left gave the Hornets an 80-79 lead and he added a transition basket 28 seconds later. Dell Curry's dunk at the buzzer raised Charlotte's margin to 87-81.

Spurs 106, Knicks 89

SAN ANTONIO — Terry Cummings scored 18 points and the San Antonio Antonio Spurs broke open a tight game with a 16-4 fourth-quarter spurt to defeat the New York Knicks.

The victory was the fourth straight for the Spurs, whose 6-1 record in the best in the NBA.

The Knicks, winless in four road games, were led by Patrick Ewing with 20 points and 12 rebounds.

Mavericks 91, Suns 88

DALLAS — Derek Harper hit a 22-foot jumper for the lead with 27 seconds remaining then added a pair of free throws, leading the Dallas Mavericks over the Phoenix Suns.

The basket and free throws 11 seconds later were Harper's only points of the fourth quarter. They came after Dallas went 2-for-17 from the floor in the waning minutes.

Cavaliers 127, Pacers 117

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Brad Daugherty and Larry Nance combined for 59 points on 23-for-29 shooting, dominating the front-court as the Cleveland Cavaliers beat the Indiana Pacers.

Nance scored 32 points, two shy of his high since joining the Cavaliers in 1988, and Daugherty had 27, leading Cleveland to its third consecutive win. The Pacers have lost six of their last seven overall and five straight on the road.

Jazz 107, Bullets 98

LANDOVER, Md. — Jeff Malone scored 28 points and ignited a pivotal fourth-quarter run that lifted the Utah Jazz past Washington, their ninth straight victory over the Bullets.

Michael Adams scored 27 points for Washington, which hasn't beaten the Jazz since Feb. 20, 1987. The Bullets are 0-8 at home against Utah since November 1983.

76ers 89, Pistons 86

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Ron Anderson scored 13 of his 19 points in the fourth quarter when the Philadelphia 76ers rallied for a victory over the Detroit Pistons.

The Pistons led 63-58 after three quarters and increased the margin to 71-63 before the 76ers started their comeback.

Philadelphia scored the next seven points, making it 71-70 with 5:49 to play, and they finally took the lead when Johnny Dawkins' jumper made it 79-78 with 2:15 left.

Magic 102, Nets 102

ORLANDO, Fla. — Dennis Scott scored 25 points and Jerry Reynolds scored on a driving layup with 4.3 seconds left, giving the Orlando Magic a victory over New Jersey, extending the Nets' losing streak to seven.

Nuggets 122, Trail Blazers 111

DENVER — Reggie Williams scored 31 points, and the Denver Nuggets shot 66.7 percent from the field in the second half to rally for a victory over Portland.

School tackles issue of improper sexual behavior

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

An 11-year-old girl at Crockett Elementary School was the victim of sexual harassment in recent weeks.

While a young girl being the target of inappropriate sexual behavior is nothing new, the perpetrator was a fellow sixth grader at Crockett Elementary School — a 12-year-old boy.

The boy was cited with simple assault following a school carnival where the incident occurred.

"In my 19 or 20 years as principal, I had never experienced something like this," said Crockett Principal Romeo Canales.

The principal said that John Miller, police chief for Midland Independent School District, exercised "the strength of the full letter of the law" to cite the pupil with a Class C misdemenor.

According to an investigation by Miller, the incident began with horseplay and "boys chasing girls." However, it ended with the 12-year-old grabbing a girl and "humping" her, he said.

"The boy also threatened my daughter," said the mother of the 11-year-old victim. "She is scared to death to go to school."

Canales said that the incident was reported the night it occurred. He said an investigation revealed that boys had been inappropriately touching girls when in the school hallways which had gone unreported prior to the investigation.

"Our school counselor, Karen Burkett, talked to the sixth grade girls and told them they have a right to say 'no' to this type of behavior, not to put up with it or be intimidated by it, but to report any incidents of this nature immediately," he said.

The principal said he took the boys aside and told them, "This is wrong. You have no right to invade personal spaces or private bodies."

The boy was suspended for three days and will appear before the Justice of the Peace to execute a judgment "to help the child acquire better judgment skills," Miller said.

But some mothers, who say their daughters have been "grabbed in wrong places" by the boy, say they want him out of the school.

"He's going to end up raping someone whether he is in sixth grade or not," one irate mother said.

Canales said the school counselor is working with the children who were involved in the incident. "We are pursuing the idea of getting them to sign up for family counseling."

"If the boy had been 17, assaulting my 12-year-old daughter," another mother said, "He would have sent to jail. But he is the same age as my daughter, what is the difference?"

If the perpetrator is under 17, he is referred to the juvenile authorities, according to Miller. "Minors are not adjudicated or convicted," he said. "Also, from a legal standpoint, unless there is more than a two-year age difference (between the perpetrator and the victim) you can't prosecute," as a sexual assault.

"What people have to understand," Miller said, "is that the juvenile justice system protects juveniles."

Miller said the purpose and interpretation of the law is to "provide for the care, the protection, and the wholesome moral, mental, and physical development of children."

It also, however, is designed to "protect the welfare of the community and to control the commission of unlawful acts by children." But the law also intends to remove "the taint of criminality and the consequences of criminal behavior and to substitute a program of treatment, training and rehabilitation."

Miller said the boy was cited with simple assault or "intentionally or knowingly causing physical contact with another when the person knows or should reasonably believe that the other will regard the contact as offensive or provocative."

"The laws on sexual assault do not apply to this case, nor does injury to a child," the school district police chief said.

"Criminal justice procedures for juvenile offenses do not provide for a young person to be brought into juvenile court on this charge," he said.

"There just needs to be stronger discipline," one mother said. "Personally, I think the boy should be locked up."

Incarcerating adolescents is "the worse thing that could happen," according to Meg Branson, therapist at Midland Rape Crisis.

She said that the young perpetrator and his victims need counseling.

"When there is one kid performing sex acts on other kids in a neighborhood, the neighborhood would like to lynch the whole family (of the perpetrator)," she

Psychiatric center opens

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

For Christians seeking psychiatric help, a local facility to accommodate their faith — integrated into the treatment — has recently opened.

The program, called Rapha, from Jehovah Rapha, Hebrew for "God who heals," opened on Sept. 30 at a unit in, but separate from, Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital.

"What we are trying to do is integrate a professional clinical approach with a Christian approach," said Tom Wynne, interim program director of the local Rapha unit.

"The program is targeted at Christians and not trying to make people something they are not," Wynne said.

The treatment center uses a basic approach modeled after Rational Emotive Therapy that incorporates Christian biblical principles, Wynne said.

Henson touts new hopes

■ Doug Henson, Chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, hopes that communication will vitalize Midland's economic growth.

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

President Ronald Reagan was known as "The Great Communicator."

It's a title that Doug Henson hopes to live up to during his year as the chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

A high priority for Henson and other chamber officials will be communicating, not only with potential new businesses, but with businesses already established in Midland.

"To the industry or business that has been here a number of years, paid taxes, has a payroll, given to local charities and says 'Why is the chamber not interested in us? They're always talking about someone new. Why aren't they helping us?'

"I want to communicate with them that they're vital to us and we have programs available to help them as well as new businesses," he said.

Henson, president of SBC Corp., hopes he and chamber economic development officials can spend 60 percent of their time and energies with existing business in the coming year.

Attention on established businesses could pay big dividends for the community, Henson said, noting that 80 percent of new jobs are created through the expansion of existing industries.

Johnny Warren of CSI, head of the chamber's economic development committee, noted that a survey of businesses recently revealed an established

Where have all the likeable 'blowhards' gone?

"You know," the middle-aged man said to his companion. "I really don't like that guy."

"Yeah, I know what you mean," the companion replied. "He gets on my nerves, too."

"He's such a know-it-all," the first guy said. "You can't mention a subject he isn't an expert on."

"You're right. He's a major league blowhard."

They both rolled their eyes knowingly and laughed.

Ott

The conversation took place at a local convenience store last Thursday night while I was waiting in line to pay for gas, but that's not really important.

It could have been at a thousand different places. Anytime two or more people get together to chat, the subject of not liking certain people is sure to come up. It is as much a part of human nature as being bored at stuffy dinner parties.

But this particular conversation caught my attention for one very special reason: They were talking about "blowhards."

It has long been a subject of intrigue for me.

Unlike with some people, there are certain blowhards who truly fascinate me. Howard Cosell, for example. Monday Night Football has not been the same since he left the press box. His arrogance is sorely missed. When Don Meredith would say something, no matter how trivial it might have seemed, Cosell would take the bull by the horns and pontificate on the matter endlessly, or at least until another touchdown was scored, which would require the subject to be changed.

Likewise with Pat Buchanan. I can't stand his political views, mind you, but for some reason I find myself pulling for him whenever he gets into one of those patented shouting matches with his liberal counterpart on CNN's "Crossfire." Sure he's a know-it-all, but I like him.

By the same token, there are other people, many of whom possess the identical traits of a Howard Cosell or a Pat Buchanan, who I can't stand. Predictably, a lot of them are politicians. Two who immediately leap to mind are Sens. Orrin Hatch and Alan Simpson, a couple of blowhards you probably recall from the Clarence Thomas hearings. Like Cosell and Buchanan, they are loud, arrogant, boorish and cocky, yet unlike Cosell and Buchanan, they grate on my nerves.

Peculiar, isn't it.

It's the same, though, with people you meet in every day life.

We are all surrounded by know-it-alls, yet we find ourselves liking some of them and detesting others.

In other words, there are "good" blowhards and "bad" blowhards.

It's a phenomenon worth pursuing. And as a public service to you, the reader, I shall do so at this time. Thank you, very much.

There are three key ingredients that go into comprising a — quote — "good blowhard," or as some people refer to them: a likable know-it-all.

I will detail them at this time. Feel free to take notes.

Rule No. 1: He must be a fast talker. The ability to throw out "facts" and "figures" at a rapid rate is absolutely critical. You will note, however, that quote marks have been placed around the words facts and figures. That's because it is not necessary for them to be accurate. Rather, it is much more important that they sound accurate. Thus, the need to talk fast. The good blowhard states his facts and figures quickly and then dances on to another subject before the other person has a chance to dispute their accuracy.

Rule No. 2: The likable know-it-all must possess a keen sense of humor. This is critical. Any blowhard, even a good one, runs the risk of alienating certain people. No one, after all, likes to be constantly put down and corrected by an overbearing know-it-all. So it is imperative that the successful blowhard be able to mix in a witty one-liner or two with his "facts" and "figures." Here's an example. When shooting down a conservative's view on foreign policy, the good blowhard might arch an eyebrow ever-so-slightly and then say in a condescending sort of way, "Who did you study political science under, anyway? Bob Hope?"

Rule No. 3: The popular know-it-all needs to have a strong command of the language without going overboard. He doesn't want to come across as a poor man's William F. Buckley, yet, at the same time, a big word or two can be an important tool in his overall arsenal. While it is good to know the meaning of the words, it is not absolutely necessary. Instead, it is more important that the good blowhard know how to pronounce them correctly. He must sound like he knows what he is talking about.

It is a matter of putting style above substance. It is also an art form that is being lost in today's humorless society.

Where is Howard Cosell when you need him?

CONCERN: Victims need counseling

said. "But everyone needs all the loving support and care they can get at that time. Pointing fingers and calling for legal recourse is very detrimental. This is not to say that we don't want the behavior to be stopped."

Ms. Branson said that sexual gestures, language and lewd actions are not "usual behavior for 12-year-olds."

"Most likely this behavior is a result of witnessing pornography or the boy has been sexually abused himself," she said.

If the boy had been abused by an adult, she said, "He would be afraid to tell. And, his masculinity would be threatened. Boys don't cry. They are not supposed to have feelings so they close down. Then how can he express anger, rage or frustration? He assaults other kids."

The therapist said that when anger can't be expressed to an authority figure, it trickles down. "It's like the old saying," she said, "Dad gets angry at mom, mom gets angry at the kid and the kid kicks the dog."

Ms. Branson said the perpetrator of sexual abuse against his peers may be "trying to get his intense needs for intimacy met and is misinterpreting it. Or he may become aggressive with a need for power or control."

She said the adolescents on both sides of the issue may need counseling. "There needs to be a process of restoring self esteem," she said, "when people feel violated, it may lead to later victims."

Miller said, "Mothers need to teach their daughters to draw that line and warn boys before they get to the line. The boy involved also needs to change his behavior. Retribution won't do that."

Dallas near killing record

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas has tied last year's murder total, with still more than month to go in 1991.

A 30-year-old man found stabbed to death Friday morning makes homicide No. 444 for the year. That ties the all-time murder high for the city, set in 1990.

The daily average of 1.4 murders leads officials to project a year-end total of 506 slayings.

Definition of rape shifts for children

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Child's play. When is it horseplay and when is it abuse?

The lines are clearly drawn when adults involve children in sexual behavior. But when children or adolescents involve their peers in inappropriate touching, when is it wrong?

"The definition of rape is any action that takes place between two persons, where there is not consent, it's forced or there is not a willing partner," said Meg Branson, therapist with Midland Rape Crisis Center.

According to the law, however, when adolescents are the same age, the definition of sexual abuse can be narrowed to "experimentation."

The law notwithstanding, Ms. Branson said, "Without consent, there is a sense of violation, anger, guilt and fear of being out of control with one's body. It can cause chronic life problems and such compulsive behavior as overeating, drinking, drug abuse or sexual dysfunction."

She said sexual abuse with children "is so much more prevalent then we want to believe."

Romeo Canales, an elementary school principal, said inappropriate sexual behavior is difficult to ascertain in grade school children, especially sixth graders.

"At the sixth grade level, the social process is starting where boys are beginning to notice girls," he said.

"Sex is prevalent in our society," said John Miller, police chief for Midland Independent School District. "Students are learning about sex at a younger age. Unfortunately, a rite of passage in some of the younger gangs is to rape somebody."

Miller said gang activity in Midland is usually relegated to minor crimes such as vandalism. And school campuses are made "off limits" or "neutral territory" to gangs.

He said sexual harassment, like physical assault, can be a judgment call.

"What is fighting and what is assault?" he asked. "You can have two students pushing and shoving each other until they get into a fight. Then you can have someone who just walks up and sucker punches someone. That is not a mutual confrontation or a fight."

Miller, who recently cited a sixth grader with simple assault for inappropriate sexual behavior, said that type of citation is generally unheard of for adolescents that age.

"Children that age are just learning what proper behavior is," he said.

Ms. Branson said "expressing sexual behavior" is not usual in a 12-year-old. "While shoving or pushing is usual behavior, grabbing someone and acting sexual is not a behavior an 11 or 12-year-old would express unless this behavior had been introduced to them"

Dealing with inappropriate sexual behavior becomes a family matter, the therapist said. "Uncovering this family secret can be a family's worst nightmare, the thing they fear the most," she said.

"The courts may recommend counseling. The police may recommend it. But the family doesn't want their secret out or to uncover abuse," Ms. Branson said. "But when the body is violated, it results in psychological trauma, and that needs to be dealt with."

RAPHA: Center will combine faith, treatment

(From 1C)

The spiritual aspects of treatment allow a religious person to be more relaxed in a psychiatric hospital environment, and in turn, makes the treatment more effective, Wynne said.

Don Poage, community relations representative, said Rapha fulfills a need for Christians to seek treatment and not feel alienated from their faith.

"We believe that the core of every human being is the spiritual side of man and believe that anyone's connection with God is essential to their, not just mental health, but physical, emotional and social interaction. We feel it is at the core of all their relationships."

Although Rapha is Christian-based, the program is open to everyone, Poage said.

The local facility is one of 26 such Rapha Hospital Treatment Centers located across the nation, Poage said. Rapha is privately owned and funded.

In Midland, Rapha provides adult-only family-oriented treatment for all psychiatric disorders (including general psychiatry, chemical dependency and co-dependency) on an in-patient basis.

The 16-bed facility employs a staff of 15.

Rapha was founded by Robert S. McGee in the mid-1980s. McGee, while a church counselor in Houston, created Rapha as an alternative to psychiatric hospitals that ignored the faith of patients during treatment.

HENSON: Businesses vital to Midland

business was considering leaving the area.

"We helped them solve their problem, and they're still here," he said. He added that his committee will visit with businesses, identify problems they are having and try to help them solve the problems.

During a recent retreat, Chamber leaders identified several potential areas of economic development for Midland, which Henson said will be the primary objective for the year.

■ Aviation. "The airport offers opportunity in the aviation technology service area and we're working both direct mail and trade shows in that area. We think the skills of our people, and with Midland College's vocational technical program in place, plus our airport and our weather make it a reasonable target to expand in this area."

Commenting on the controversy regarding a new airport facility, Henson stated that "The chamber's position is the airport is paramount to our success and viability.

"We don't have the facts to say if a new facility is needed or the existing one should be expanded. But we stand behind the need for a viable facility in Midland. It's our connection to the rest of the world."

■ Tourism and conventions. Henson said the opening of the Confederate Air Force museum in Midland next month "affords us a whole new arena in which to deal."

The Convention & Visitors Bureau has taken the CAF as the focal point and coupled it with tours of both Big Bend or Carlsbad Cav-

ODESSA — Police have a 32-year-old man in custody after the early Saturday armed robbery of a convenience store.

Ector County Jail officials said Paul Escandon was being held late Saturday on a total of $33,500 bond for charges of aggravated robbery and possession of a stolen vehicle.

According to police reports, a man entered the 7-Eleven store at 100 N. Dixie about 5:20 a.m., displayed a gun and demanded money from the clerk. He left the scene with an undetermined amount of cash, reports said.

Police apprehended Escandon about 40 minutes later in the 300 block of South Tom Green Avenue, where they said he was seen in a vehicle that matched the description of the car used by the armed robber. The vehicle was later identified as stolen, police said.

Gas station robbed

LAMESA — Police are seeking leads in the Saturday armed robbery of a gas station. They believe the perpetrator may have been headed to the Midland area after the incident.

According to reports, a white man about 6 feet tall and weighing 200 pounds entered Jackson Brothers Fina, 1400 S. Bryan, shortly after 1 p.m. The suspect reportedly was wearing a white shirt with a blue design and blue jeans, and carried a dark blue sweater and beige knit cap.

Police said the man demanded money from the attendant and displayed a knife, leaving the scene with about $220.

Officials arrest eight protesters at women's clinic

DALLAS (AP) — Eight anti-abortion activists were arrested outside a women's clinic Saturday during a five-hour protest that kicked off a week of demonstrations dubbed "Days of Rescue."

At the protest's peak outside the Routh Street Women's Clinic, north of downtown, the crowd totaled about 250. But it quickly dwindled to less than 100 before noon.

"I think that it shows they can be a nuisance, but not a serious threat," said Victoria Hellman, an administrator at the clinic.

Last summer in Wichita, Kan., more than 2,400 arrests were made during a seven-week siege of women's clinics. About 40,000 people participated on that protest's final day.

Local and national members of the militant anti-abortion group Operation Rescue had hinted earlier in the week of a possible Wichita-sized protest.

Operation Rescue believes in physically blocking doors to women's clinics that perform abortions. They contend they are "rescuing" innocent babies from being killed.

By 11:30 a.m., eight of about 35 designated "rescuers" were arrested for blocking clinics. About 14 other protesters blocked the clinic periodically but left when asked by police.

Rick Blinn, a rescue organizer, said a large police turnout of about 90 officers — including about 15 on horseback — left few clinic entrances unguarded.

"The obvious rescue strategy wasn't going to work," Blinn said. "We just tried some other things."

Ms. Hellman said between 40 and 50 women had appointments for abortions Saturday. By the time the protest ended, about 15 women actually kept their appointments.

Ms. Hellman said patients who decided against coming because of the protests will likely reschedule after the week of protest is over.

Seven of the eight arrested on criminal trespass charges included Dallas Rescue leader, the Rev. Phillip "Flip" Benham, a chief organizer of the protest. Another man was arrested on an obstructing a passageway charge.

"God is not looking to the U.S. Supreme Court," Benham told supporters before his arrest. "He has called the church."

Also arrested for the second time was 13-year-old Jamie Ann Tellier of Plano. The youth admitted she was scared but smiled as police placed handcuffs on her wrists, while she clutched a book of prayers.

"If I had a second chance, I'd do it again," she said.

The teen-ager got involved in Operation Rescue about four months ago when she was arrested for the first time at another clinic.

"These people say they have freedom of choice to kill their babies," she said. "I also have the freedom of choice to protest."

Officials look into rat-spread virus in deaths of animals

DALLAS (AP) — The curator of the Dallas Zoo Saturday cautioned against quick conclusions that a virus possibly spread by rats caused the puzzling deaths of five animals in four days.

Officials say the encephalomyocarditis virus, or EMC, is deadly when it attacks an animal's heart. Some animal experts have pointed at EMC as a conceivable theory.

"EMC is one possibility," Ron Kagan said. "The possibilities are pretty significant — it could be a bunch of viruses, it could be something toxic. We're not speculating at this point."

The string of deaths at the zoo began Tuesday when a 12-year-old African elephant named Moja died suddenly from fluid in the lungs.

Two monkeys, Kai, a 3-year-old male, and Ayla, a 2-year-old female, died Wednesday. Miles, a 6-year-old red panda on loan from the National Zoo in Washington, D.C., died Thursday.

All four had enlarged hearts.

And Cory, a 9-year-old female red kangaroo, died early Friday. Initial tissue testing showed heart abnormalities and fluid around the organs, as the other four animals had.

Kagan on Saturday hesitated to link the deaths. Instead, he said he would wait on the University of Florida and Texas A&M University to complete various tests on tissues and blood samples.

Meanwhile, zoo officials are using extra caution, Kagan said. A panda named Posha remained in quarantine Saturday after she became particularly listless. She was in good condition, he said.

The investigation continues as officials look further into the EMC virus. Experts say zoo animals can ingest rat feces or urine that contacts the animals' food, one way of spreading the virus.

HENSON: CAF will be used as advantage

(From 2C)

erns and from there to the CAF museum and other attractions.

"By packaging these together, we feel we have a better chance of making the area a tourist destination."

Already, since the CAF announced its relocation to Midland, the CVB has identified the possible need for a new recreational vehicle park or expansion of the existing KOA park, Henson said. "Our staff spent the year before the air show working on literature telling visitors about our retailers, our restaurants and our culture."

As for conventions, "we have a tremendous professional base here and we ask all our professionals to think about their associations and suggest Midland as a site for quarterly meetings or workshops or conventions. Working through the local hotels, Midland Center and Chaparral Center, we have adequate facilities for meetings."

■ Taking advantage of the California exodus. "Already we've had three California companies join our ranks in the past 18 months," Henson said. Among Midland's attractions are its real estate — though a number of commercial buildings are no longer on the market, its quality of life and even the time zone, which gives companies two additional hours of marketing time to the East Coast. For example, Isotrol and Isoduct, which relocated here from Los Angeles last year have increased sales to the East Coast by 40 to 50 percent since the move, he pointed out.

■ Health care. He observed that health care is one of the fastest-growing economic sectors in the U.S. and said it offers opportunities for Midland as well; particularly in establishing Midland as a regional health center.

"When you look at the outlying communities, this area has a population that's amazing. But these communities aren't sizeable enough to sustain hospitals. Midland Memorial is looking at a regional marketing scope and the airport could also bring people in for specialized treatment."

He also said retailing is another area that the Chamber intends to promote on a regional scale. "We need these communities. They're a part of us and we're here to serve them."

■ Education. He praised Midland College's technical preparation programs as a way to adapt the local workforce to employer needs. "The days of everyone needing a college education to open the door to a job is behind us. Technical jobs and health service jobs don't require a regular four-year degree, they require a two-year associate's degree."

In all these facets, and in econcomic development and diversification, he said, communication is the key. "We need to communicate on a regional and national basis that Midland is open for business, that we have areas here that can be profitable for companies if they come and join us."

Center to offer free screening

In recognition of National Diabetes Month, the Midland Regional Center of the Texas Society to Prevent Blindness will conduct free glaucoma screening Tuesday at Memorial Hospital. It will take place in room E-18 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The screening will be conducted in conjunction with the American Diabetes Association.

OPTIMIST YOUTH APPRECIATION

OPTIMIST YOUTH APPRECIATION WEEK.

WE SALUTE THE YOUTH OF OUR COMMUNITY

Optimist Clubs of Midland have joined together to honor our young citizens for their outstanding service to the community. The Youth Appreciation Week is for the recognition of those 95% of our young people who are following the "juvenile decency" road to adulthood.

For the past Twenty-three years, Optimist Clubs nationwide have set aside the second week of November to pay tribute to the vast majority of youth often overlooked and unrecognized.

On November 14, 1991, at 7:00 p.m., in the Midland Community Center, the Optimist Clubs of Midland sponsored a banquet to honor young people who represent schools and organizations which provide learning experience of good citizenship for our youth. Parents and friends attended the banquet along with the leaders of our community to honor these young people.

- Midland Optimist - Jackie Swanner
- West Side Optimist - Bill Schammel

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Early registration dates around corner

By H.A. Tuck

Early registration for the 1992 spring semester starts tomorrow and lasts through Dec. 6. This is a time for efficient students to get registered for the spring term, including selection of classes, class meeting times, and payment of fees. Those who do this then have nothing else to do regarding the spring term until classes begin in mid-January.

Tuck

The spring course bulletin lists class offerings for both credit and non-credit courses, along with the schedule for the two summer sessions, the interim sessions, and such other sessions as Kids' College and Teens on Campus.

If you didn't get a copy of the bulletin, you may pick one up in the Student Services area of the Student Center. That also is where early registration is taking place.

If you didn't see the Chaparral basketball team in one of its first three home games, you have one more chance this fall.

The Chaps host Ranger Junior College at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in Chaparral Center. It's their last home appearance of the fall semester.

Play shifts to Pasadena, Friday and Saturday as the Chaps compete in the San Jacinto Classic, hosted by the Runnin' Ravens of San Jacinto. Midland faces Lee College of Baytown on Friday at 6 p.m. and San Jacinto on Saturday at 8 p.m.

If you get tired of football with your turkey during Thanksgiving, the Chaparrals will be playing three games during the Odessa College Whataburger Classic, Nov. 28-30.

Their conference opener is Saturday, Dec. 7, at Roswell, facing the New Mexico Military Institute Broncos. That also is their final game of the fall term.

Another seminar is underway to help aspiring business owners to develop business plans with the aid of some nifty computer programs. The sessions are free and space was limited, but if you'd be interested in taking something like this in the spring, call the BEDC at 685-4575.

There's a regular meeting of the college's Board of Trustees at 4 p.m. Tuesday in the Board Room. Several items on the agenda are of more than routine interest. Included are such items as a report on the proposed new access road to the campus, and a marquee signboard.

An absolutely wonderful group of topics and speakers has been compiled for the 50th anniversary observance of Pearl Harbor Day. Midland College's involvement primarily is registration for those attending the presentations.

We are most appreciative that David Eisenhower has agreed to meet on the MC campus with a select group of area high school and college students. It's a rare opportunity for those invited to hear him talk about his grandfather.

Teen to be tried as adult

PORT LAVACA (AP) — A 15-year-old Calhoun High School girl will be tried as an adult in a classmate's stabbing death, while three Houston teen-agers face federal charges alleging they brought a gun to school.

Calhoun County Court-at-Law Judge Mike Fricke on Friday ordered Clemencia L. Archangel to be tried as an adult for the April 2 slaying of senior Sharon Hall, 17.

The stabbing occurred outside the Calhoun High School lunchroom.

"There is a lesson to be learned. We must have zero tolerance for weapons in our schools. If we are going to make our kids go to school, then we've got to make it safe for them," Fricke said.

Midland Tour de France co-president Karen Pridgen talks with student Natasha O'Neal about her duties at the organization's Tupperware party Saturday. The event, hoped to be the world's largest, was held as part of a fund-raising attempt for a group trip to France.

Students go for new world record

Staff Report

A group of Midland young people hope a giant Tupperware party will help propel them toward a dream come true — a trip to France.

The kids, ages 6-15, are with Midland Tour de France, a non-school club of students who are studying French. They are trying to raise $130,000, or about $2,600 each for a 16-day, multi-city tour.

Although some of them face financial odds and all of them must work very hard to raise the money, the students said they're willing to make the effort.

"It's not every day you have a chance to do something like this," said Michael Denton, 15.

"It's really like once in a lifetime," said Sarah Urbanovsky, 15. "It's worth working hard to do this."

They staged what they hope will be the "World's Largest Tupperware Party" Saturday at Fairmont Park Bowling Lanes to raise part of the needed funds. They have already sponsored a turkey shoot, a car wash and plan a number of other fund-raising activities.

Club sponsor is Bruce Pridgen, a French teacher at both Midland and Lee freshman high schools. His wife Karen is co-president.

"The kids will be earning their own money to go to France," Pridgen said. "The purpose is to show them they can reach for something which seems to be way off in left field."

He said a trip to France could be a great, eye-opening experience for the students.

"The world is becoming a smaller and smaller place. It's very important to be able to relate to and get along with, enjoy and be friends with people from other lands," Pridgen said.

Mrs. Pridgen said the students have shown amazing dedication.

"There's such a large amount of faith in this group," she said. "They believe in this, that it can happen and their parents believe it can happen."

Cable channel targets disabled viewers

By Suzanne McAuliffe
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Deaf-blind actress Kim Powers "signs" the story of Snow White for a group of children. A one-legged skier whisks down a slope in an Olympic fight to the finish. Experts discuss technology for teaching the disabled in the classroom.

ADC is a year-old San Antonio-based cable channel targeting the nation's 43 million disabled citizens. It focuses on disability issues, including special programming for the deaf, but uses a format designed to attract mainstream audiences as well.

Programming is fed by satellite to 41 states, 198 television markets and nearly 39 million viewers. But despite the San Antonio link, owners say the channel has received little local recognition.

The channel's programs air only twice a week for a total of five hours (7:30 to 10 a.m. Thursdays and Saturdays) on Paragon Cable's public access Channel 18.

"Most places have us on three hours a day, seven days a week," said Bill Nichols, president of ADC, adding that Dallas recently announced plans to air the show seven days a week. "Paragon has been promising us for over a year they're going to put us on seven days a week, and they haven't done it.

ADC's programming includes a children's show, a magazine-format interview segment, a talk show for deaf Americans, a sign language class, a visual arts show and special features.

"They're like a lot of cable companies that do not have the expanded channel space so it would mean they'd have to shuffle things around. It's always a choice which program service you want to put on."

Paragon spokesman T.J. Connolly said his company planned to increase ADC's air time next year, but that it would not be considered for a "full-time public channel" until after Paragon expands its system, a project expected to begin in 1995.

In addition, Connolly said the ADC programming currently does not have a strong enough local market to warrant significantly more air time.

"We agree that the quality of their programming is outstanding, and the fact that they're San Antonio-based is another interest," he said. "But our market studies show us that right now we have the mix we need to have, although the strongest desire out there right now is additional Hispanic programming. We must address what are the overriding large demands out there."

Nichols, however, pointed to statistics showing that 17 percent to 20 percent of any given market is disabled.

"We think this very large minority deserves channel space," he said. "There are more disabled people than Blacks and Hispanics put together and yet we have two Hispanic stations in San Antonio on cable."

ADC's programming includes a children's show, a magazine-format interview segment, a talk show for deaf Americans, a sign language class, a visual arts show and special features.

Since it offers "open captioning" for the deaf, anyone who receives cable service can view the programs.

Nichols and others involved in ADC are encouraging viewers to contact Paragon if they would like to see more of the programs aired.

ADC was created after Nichols joined with four other local investors last year to buy the Silent Network, established in Los Angeles in 1980, and move it to San Antonio.

The investors formed ADC and expanded programming to include information of interest to people of all disabilities — not just the deaf.

Since then, the organization has gained national and international recognition and recently was asked to film the 1992 para-Olympic games in Barcelona, Spain, and Albertville, France.

"I'm getting a lot of calls from people across the country about the shows we are producing," ADC anchor Donna Cline said. "There really is a need out there."

One local viewer agreed the shows are filling a void, but complained the local Thursday-Saturday morning schedule is inconvenient.

"I wish it would be shown in the afternoon or that it would be shown continuously so I could see what I'm missing because I know I'm missing quite a bit," said Lupe Marquez, a receptionist for San Antonio Independent Living Services, which advocates for the disabled.

Sheriff's probe begins in alleged theft of drug money

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal polygraph test has prompted the Harris County Sheriff's Department to investigate charges that undercover officers stole more than $40,000 from a drug suspect in a sting operation 18 months ago.

A U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration polygraph test showed that James Allen, who claimed the money was confiscated during his arrest in May 1990, was telling the truth, said Maj. Ed A. Macaluso of the sheriff's department.

An internal investigation five months ago, however, concluded Allen was "either confused, ... lying or both." Macaluso called the previous probe "not operable" and declined to discuss the new investigation "because it could result in criminal charges."

In a telephone interview from a Florida jail, Allen told the Houston Chronicle for its Saturday editions that he had $41,000 in a shaving kit when he was arrested May 11, 1990, at an east Houston body shop for trying to buy 100 kilograms of marijuana.

Co-defendant Jeffery Scott Bisagna had about $105,000 in a separate bag, also for buying marijuana, Allen said. Allen subsequently pleaded guilty and was sentenced to eight years in prison.

A Harris County narcotics officer first examined the money, but sheriff's department and DEA officials who officially counted the money together May 14, arriving at the same amount: $111,000, including money taken from Allen's and Besanga's pockets.

Macaluso said the money had been sealed, but he would not elaborate on where that was done. He said $106,090 was placed in the sheriff's vault May 11. It was transferred to the DEA on May 14.

On May 6, a year after Allen's arrest, his attorney, Thomas J. Bevans Sr., wrote to Ruben Monzon, the DEA's agent in charge in Houston, saying the $41,000 had not ended up in evidence.

"I am interested in integrity of law enforcement, integrity of justice," Bevans said.

Company launches rocket into space

WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE, N.M. (AP) — After a four-day delay, a 3-ton rocket sailed into space in a "picture book" launch Saturday, taking with it hopes of perfecting money-making ideas and boosting the commercial space industry.

The 52-foot Starfire 1 rocket jetted into the clear morning sky after a smooth countdown that began at 2:30 a.m. Its fiery blastoff and spiraling trail of smoke kept a small audience about a mile away spellbound until it was out of sight.

"It was picture-book perfect," Rich Scredon, EER Systems mission manager said after the launch.

EER Systems of Vienna, Va., provided the rocket and launch services for the Consort 4 flight. The services are funded by a grant from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration Office of Commercial and Space Programs.

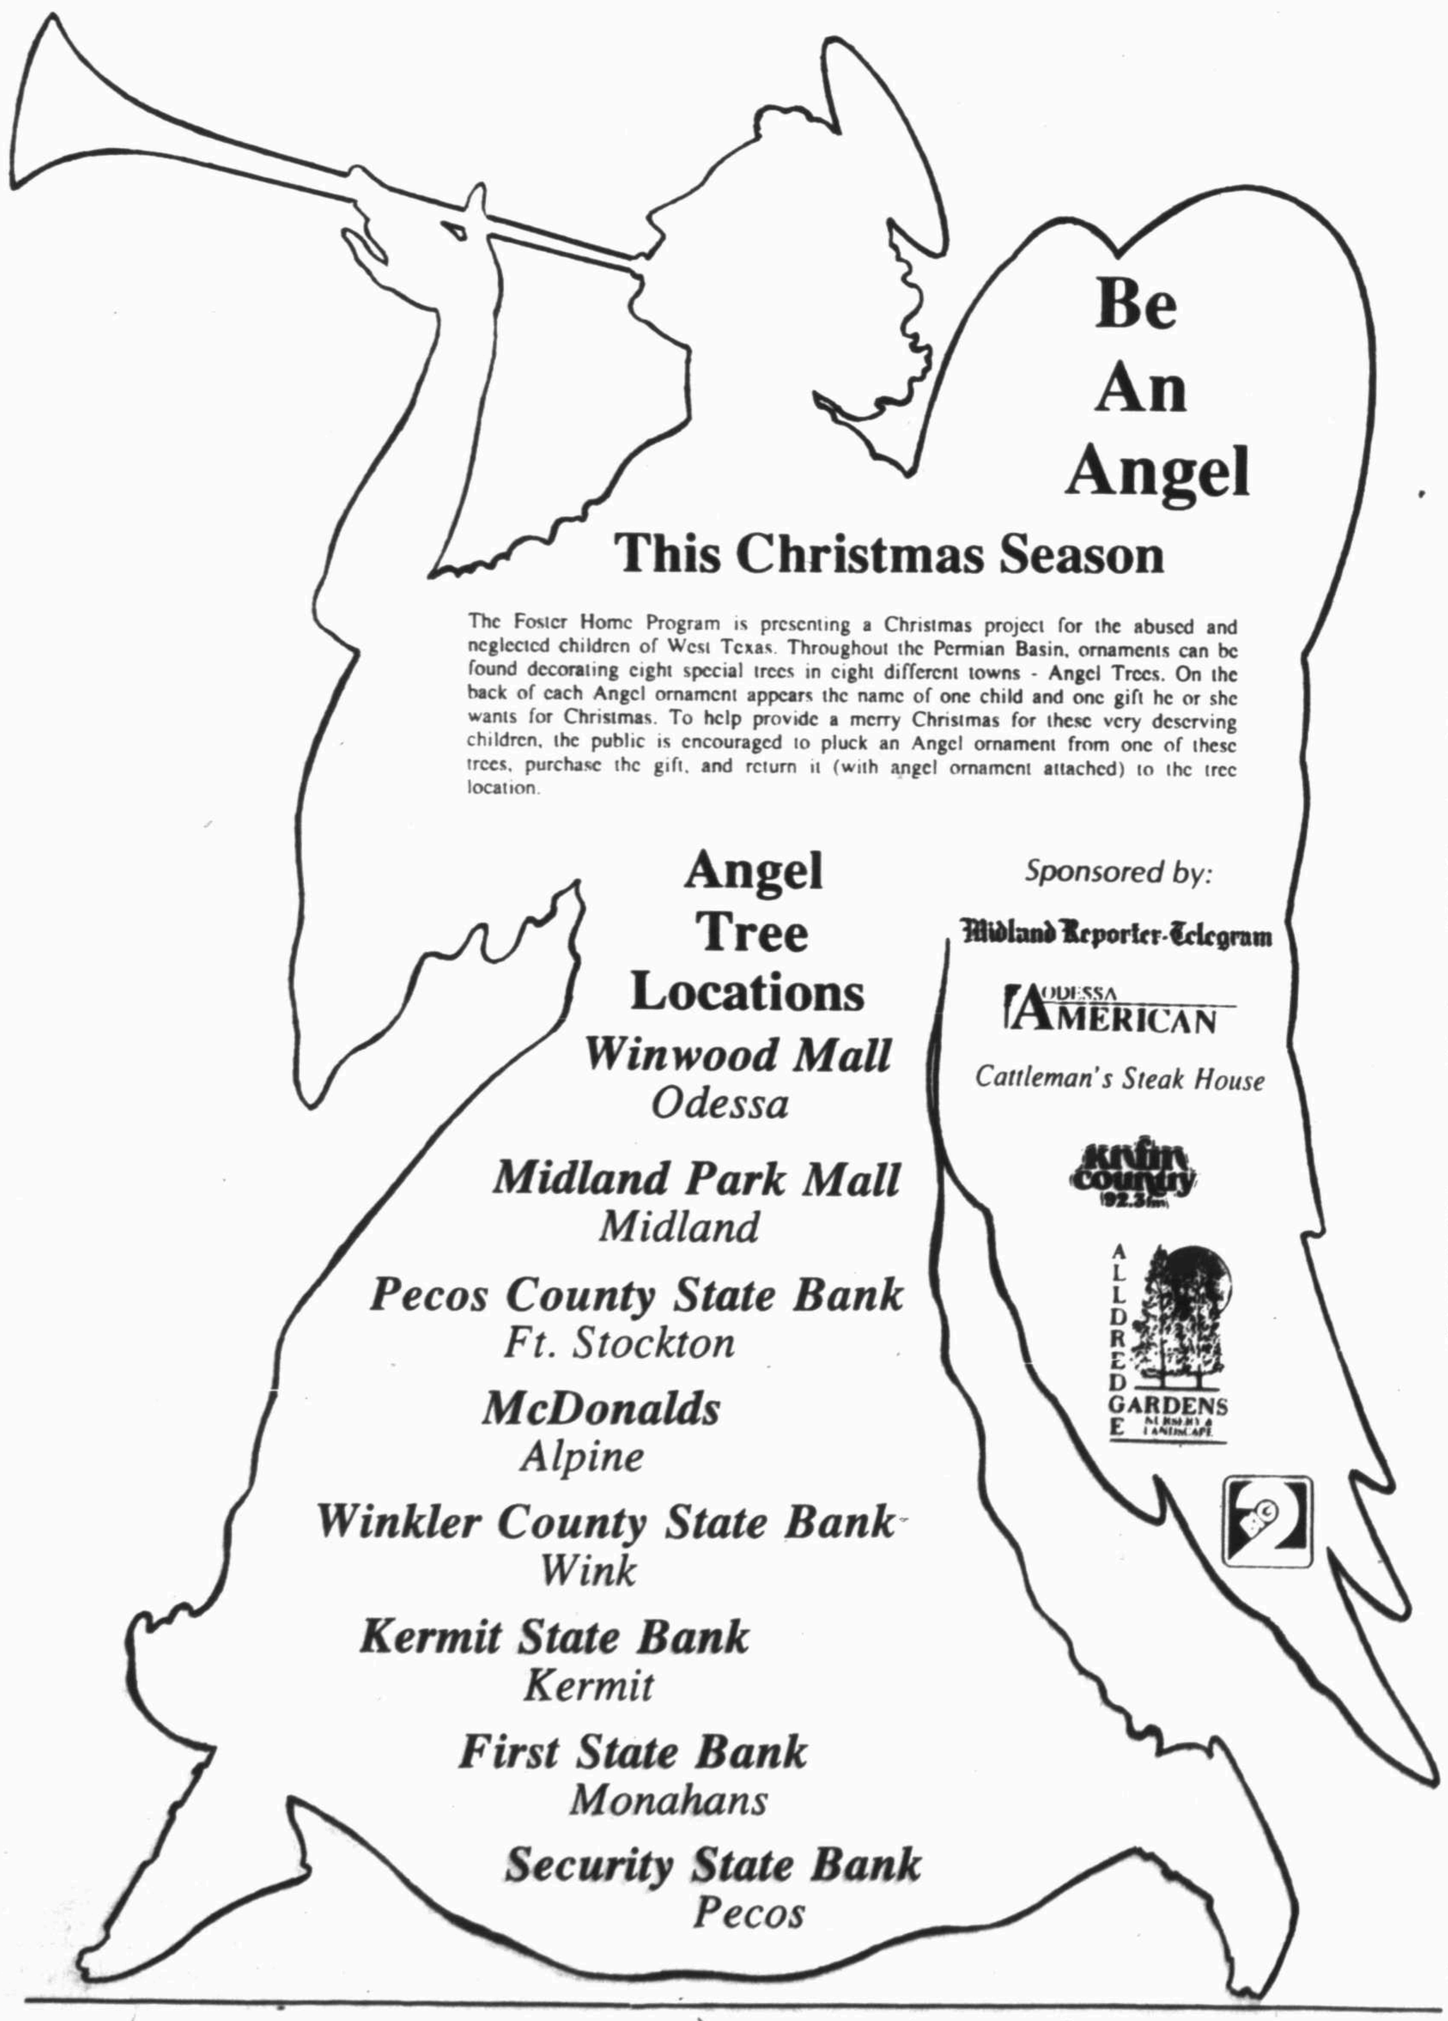
Researchers began disassembling the rocket's payload about two hours after the launch at White Sands Missile Range. They said they would not know if all the experiments were successful until they had time to analyze data.

An experiment to see if strong foam can be made in space appeared to have worked. Researchers were to analyze a yellow-green, embryo-shaped piece of foam, and a Sony minicam would have recorded whether it created a sphere.

"We hope to understand how to make economic foam structures for use in space at all times," said Charles Lundquist, director of the University of Alabama at Huntsville's Consortium for Materials Development in Space.

"If you wanted to build a 300-foot in diameter satellite dish, that's very difficult to carry into space as opposed to having it all rolled up and you just unroll it and blow it up like a balloon," he said.

The experiment has been on four Consort rocket flights.



Be An Angel

This Christmas Season

The Foster Home Program is presenting a Christmas project for the abused and neglected children of West Texas. Throughout the Permian Basin, ornaments can be found decorating eight special trees in eight different towns - Angel Trees. On the back of each Angel ornament appears the name of one child and one gift he or she wants for Christmas. To help provide a merry Christmas for these very deserving children, the public is encouraged to pluck an Angel ornament from one of these trees, purchase the gift, and return it (with angel ornament attached) to the tree location.

Organization recognizes local government teacher

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Dr. James Bradford — a local government teacher — is the first Texan to be named Secondary Social Studies Teacher of the Year by a national organization.

He will travel to Washington, D.C., Thursday to accept the award.

The National Council for the Social Studies selected Bradford for the award which is sponsored by Time magazine.

"I was very surprised," Bradford said. "This was the crowning of a very successful teaching career."

Bradford, a former Lee High School social studies chairman, retired last year. But he is back in the classroom teaching government part time at Midland High School.

"I knew he was out there when I needed him," said Jane Carrens, MHS principal. "He is wonderful. He is absolutely one of the most outstanding teachers I have been privileged to work with. He certainly challenges the students and literally fascinates them."

Bradford said he couldn't stay away from the classroom very long. "I'm very much attached to the young people," he said. "Being in the classroom in general is a fantastically rewarding experience."

The educator said his students also inspire him when they "work hard."

Bradford teaches two honors government classes which students may take for advanced placement.

"The courses are accepted for college credit in many colleges across the country," he said, "and students in advanced placement may be offered scholarships from a number of universities."

The teacher has devoted numerous hours to advancing social studies outside the classroom in programs such as the Close-Up Project which takes students to Washington, D.C., and the State Mock Trial Competition.

He admits he can't say "no" to invitations to work or teach in or out of the classroom.

"I also believe in community service," he said. "Education can be instilled in more ways than just in the classroom."

Bradford began his teaching career at Midland's Carver High School in 1958, and was instrumental in easing tensions during integration when the predominately black school was closed and its students were bused to LHS.

LHS Principal Jack Fryar said, "Bradford has helped to close the racial gap which used to exist at Lee High School. His insights into racial tension helped us to achieve racial harmony."

The teacher said he has tried to live his life according to the slogan coined by his first high school principal, the late C.A. Thomas — "Learning is the main business of a school and the teacher is the chief motivator of it all."

Bradford said he appreciates his award, but seeing his students succeed has been his greatest reward.

Ms. Carrens, however, said Bradford "is so deserving" of being recognized.

Bradford is involved in several community activities and is a member of the Midland Housing Authority Board of Directors, and State Bar of Texas organizations including the District 16-B Grievance Committee, and the State Grievance Oversight Committee.

He is a former member of Midland's United Way Board, the Planning and Zoning Commission of the City of Midland and the Ford Foundation Selection Committee for local communities in Texas, New Mexico, Colorado and Arizona.

His professional honors include the Excellence in Education Certificate of Recognition presented by the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, Inc.; and the Close-Up Foundation Award for Leadership in Advancing Civic Literacy.

Bradford

He also helped to develop the Martin Luther King Jr. Park in northeast Midland.

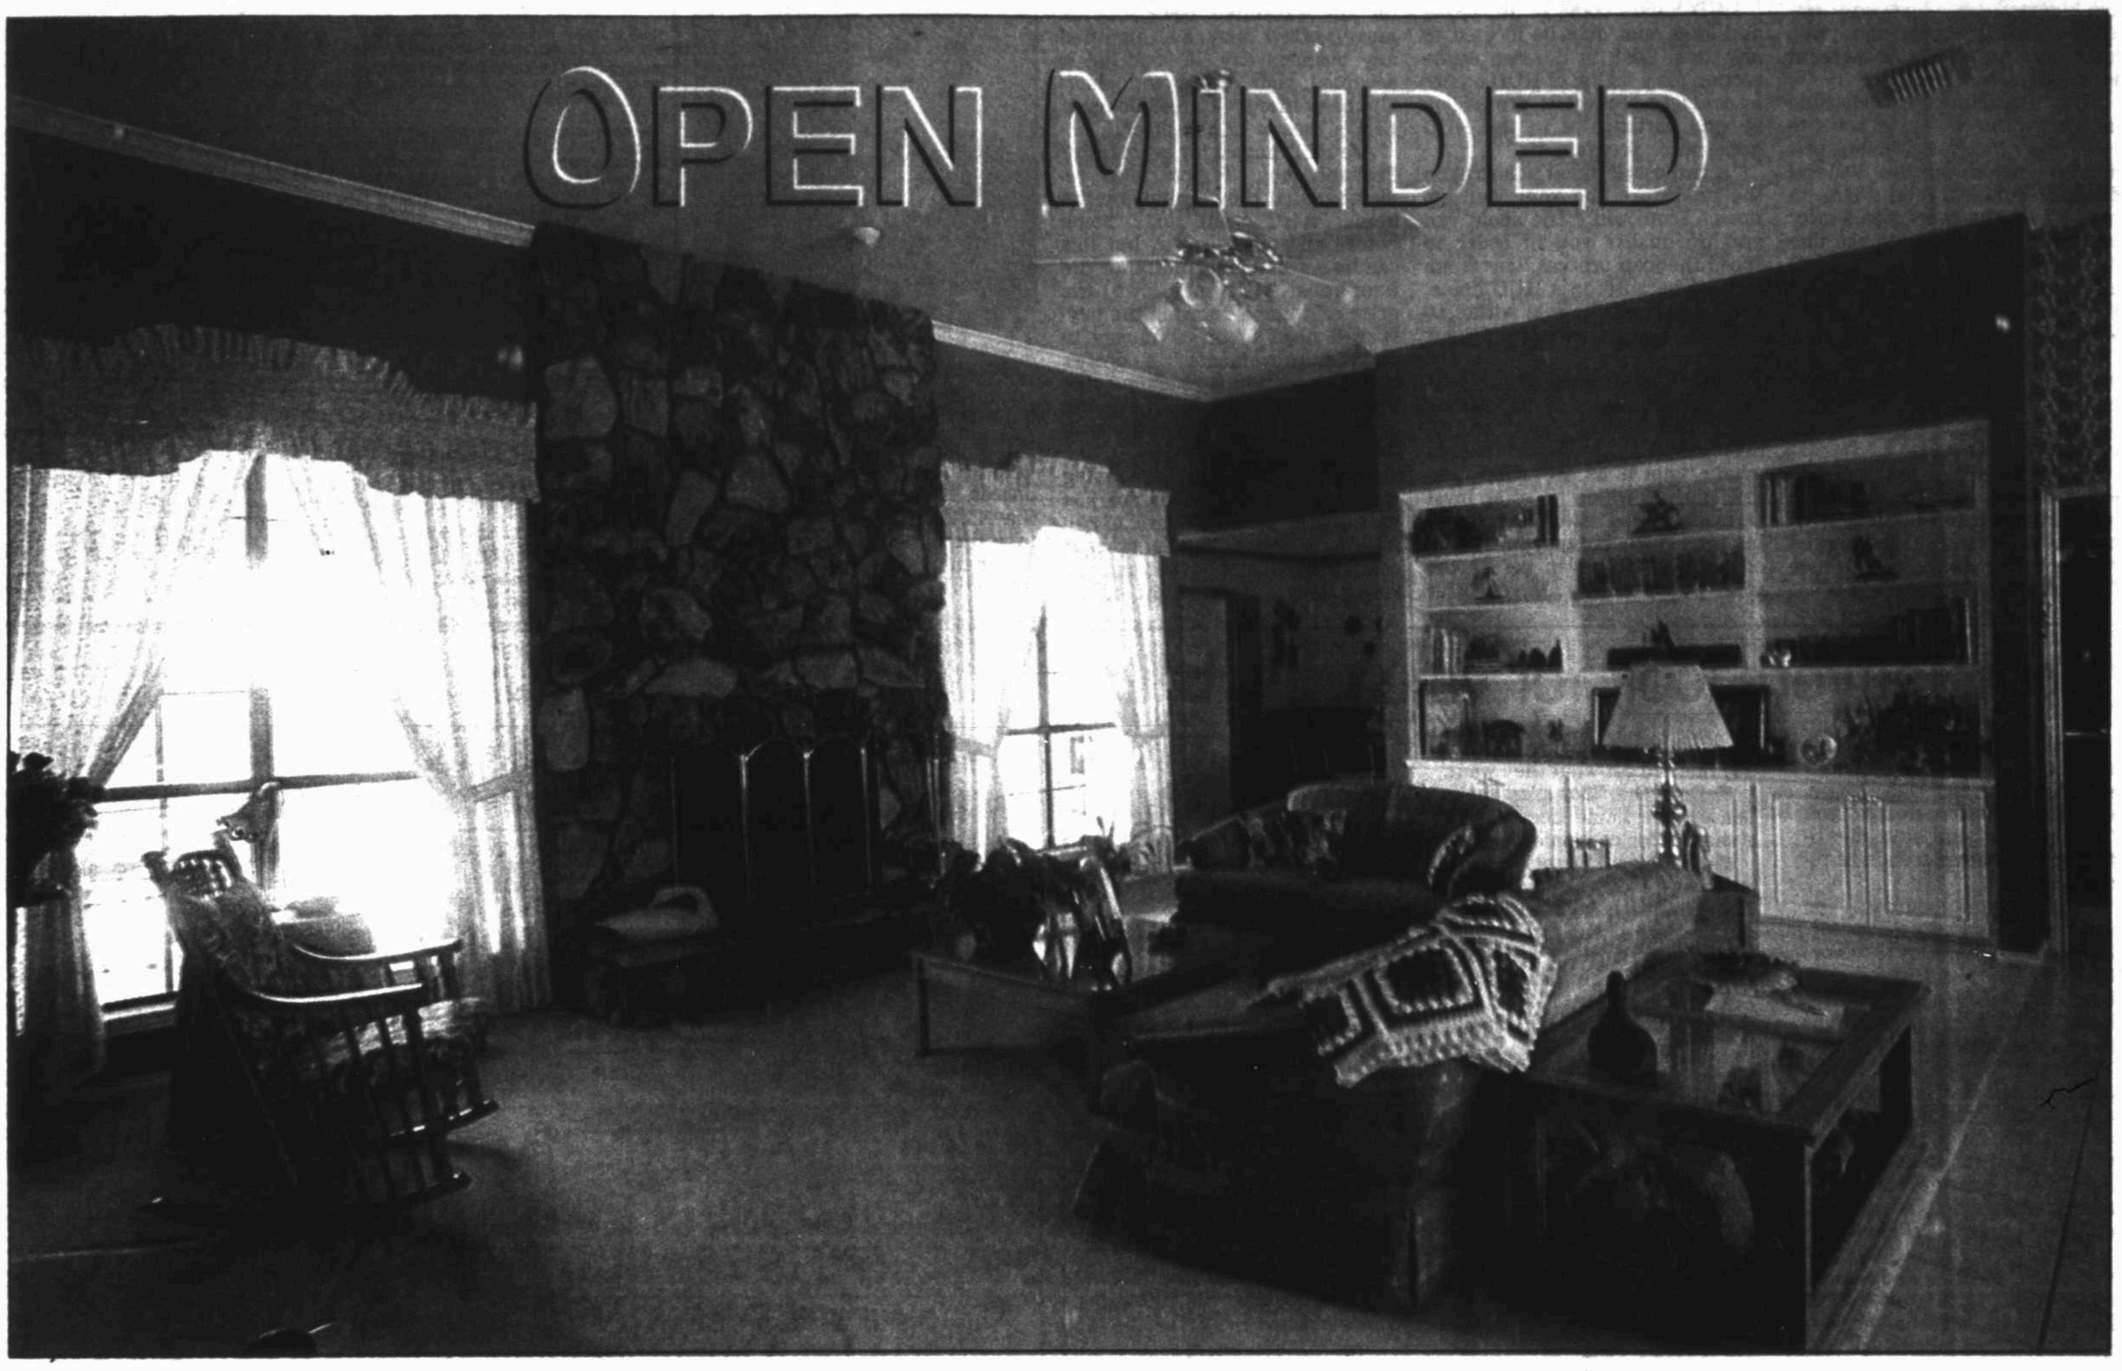
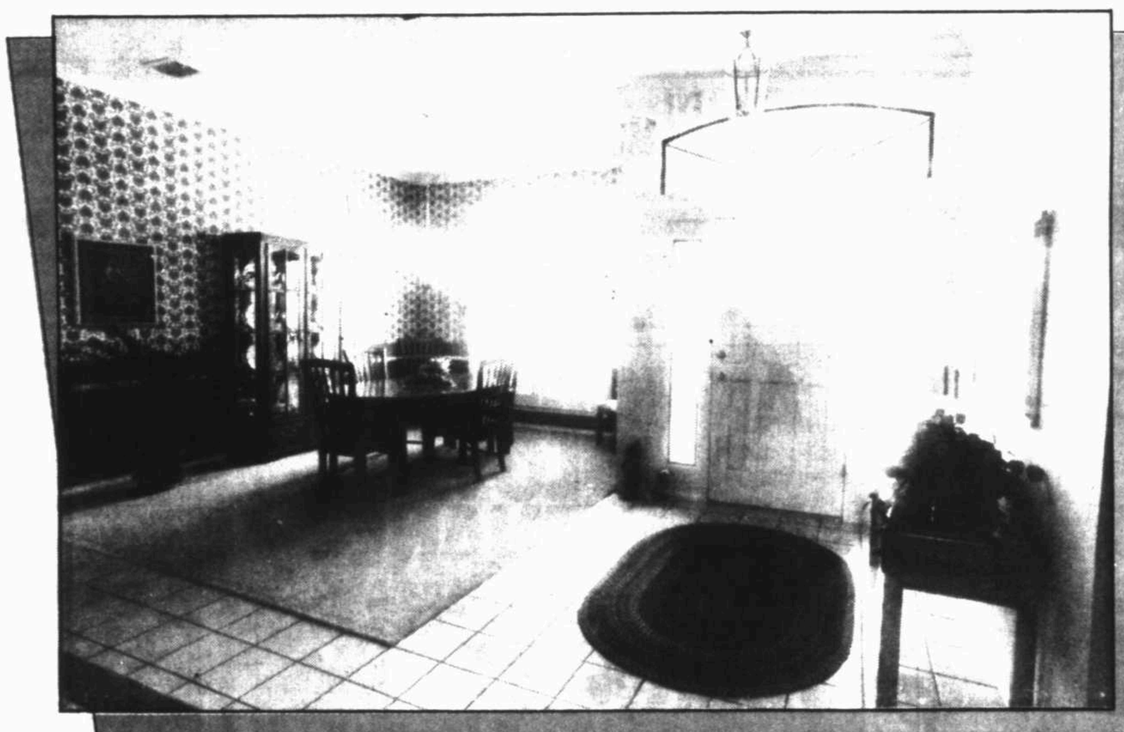
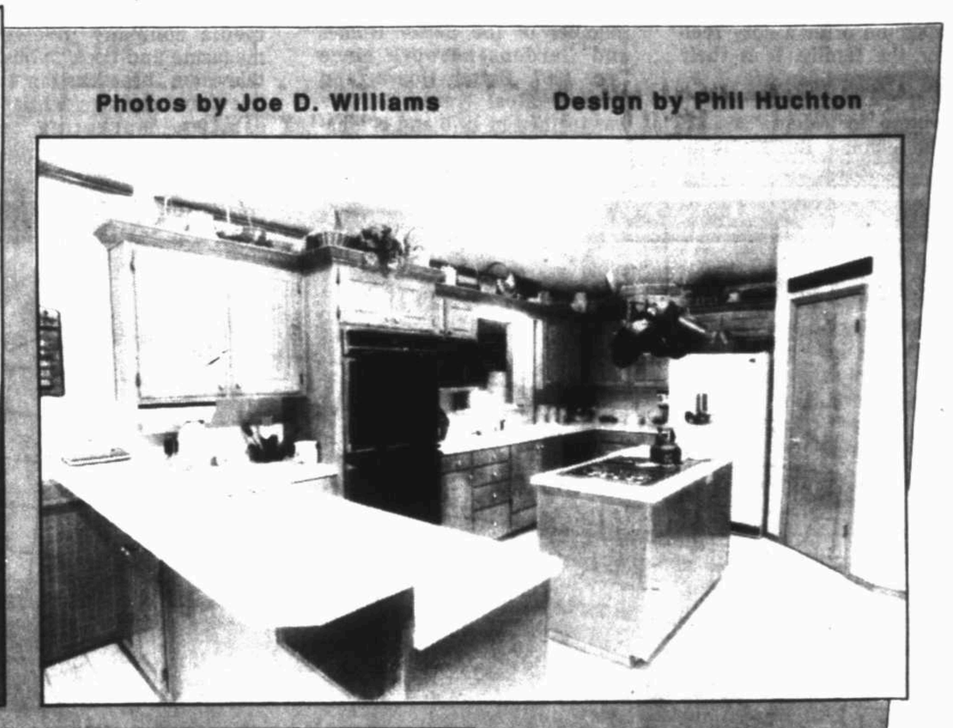
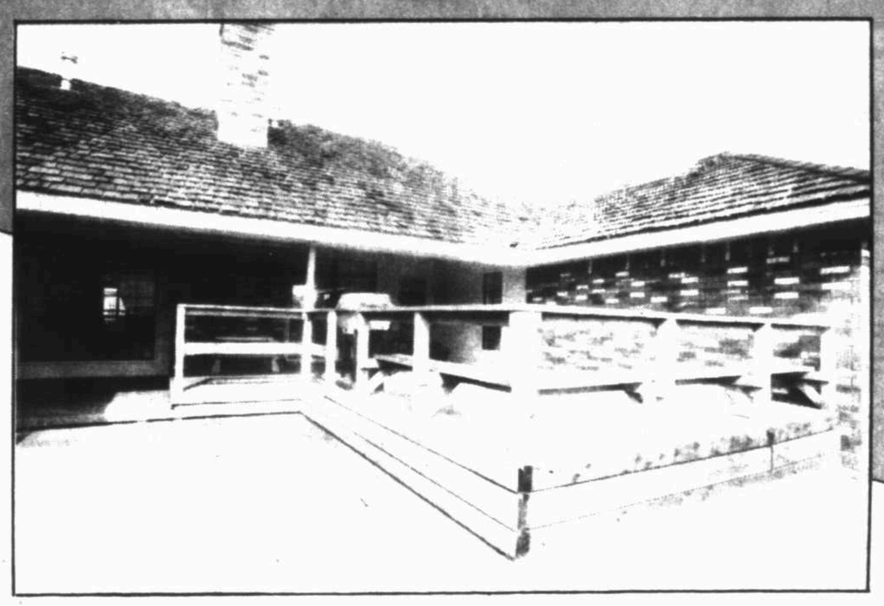
HOMES & CLASSIFIED







Photos by Joe D. Williams Design by Phil Huchton



By Sonja Merrick

This home's beveled glass door opens to a spacious, flowing interior. White ceramic tile with a delicate, intricate scroll design gleams from foyer and passageway floors. To the right lies a beautifully appointed, ecru-carpeted formal dining area. Palladian windows extend the expanse of glass, filling both rooms with golden sunlight.

Straight ahead a high-ceilinged formal living area is dominated by a brick fireplace which is flanked by large, dramatic windows. Walls in the entry and formal areas are a symphony of wine colors in solids and patterns all perfectly orchestrated to create a sense of glowing warmth. Built-in shelves and cabinets cover another wall — a perfect spot for books, collectables, photos.

To the right of the formal living area there's a large kitchen. It boasts pitched ceilings, a center cooking island, double oven and dishwasher. It has a vast amount of storage — including a walk-in pantry. A long bar divides the kitchen from a huge breakfast area.

Immediately to the right of the kitchen, divided by a wall with pass-through window, is a cozy wood-trimmed family room. Beside it is a full bath and beyond the bath a large bedroom — ideal for use as a guest room.

Back to the formal living area, a left turn from the fireplace leads to a small hallway whose door opens to a large three-level deck — perfect for good-weather lounging or entertaining. It's especially lovely at night — the lighting from below casts romantic shadows across it and the fenced yard.

Back indoors, a left turn from the deck door leads to the master suite. All carpeted in plush ecru, it has a domed ceiling and a splendid view of the outdoors. The connecting bath is enormous with separate shower. It also contains a wrap-around closet so large that it can easily serve as a dressing area.

Other amenities include recessed lighting and crown molding throughout, ceiling fans, wood plantation shutters on all front windows and zoned heating and air conditioning. Also a three-car garage with work shop, curved flower beds with sprinkler system and insulated windows.

The home is being offered for $149,900 by The Prudential Ruth Young Realtors.

HUD helps with down payment hurdle

Saving money for a down-payment is one of the biggest obstacles many first-time home buyers face, according to Sandy Scott, president of the Midland Association of Realtors. "Time and again our members encounter prospective homeowners whose only reason for renting is their inability to come up with a 10 to 20 percent down payment," she said.

HUD (Department of Housing and Urban Development) holds title to many foreclosed homes previously insured by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA). In these cases, the mortgage lender seeks from HUD the balance due on the mortgage. In turn, HUD takes title to the property and offers it to the public at fair market value.

"Although the home buying process with HUD homes is similar to that of homes owned by individuals, there are some important differences," Scott said.

"Most notably, many HUD homes require only a 3 percent down payment. In addition, HUD may pay the closing costs charged by your mortgage company. Since these costs average 3 to 4 percent of the price of the home, this can be a significant amount.

"To purchase a HUD home, buyers must work with real estate brokers," Scott said. "However, HUD will pay the real estate broker's commission on the sale price."

HUD homes come in all shapes and sizes, and may be located in any area. Look in the real estate section for a listing of HUD homes or contact a real estate professional who participates in the HUD home sales program.

"A real estate agent will explain the procedure and your loan options," Scott said. "The agent can also pre-qualify you in order to speed the loan process. This is important because on a HUD home, you must close the sale within 60 days of the acceptance of your offer."

"Unlike traditional home buying, no bargaining is involved in making an offer on a HUD home," Scott said. HUD homes are sold in what's known as an "offer period," during which an offer must be made. If you offer the full asking price, your bid may be accepted immediately, even before the offer period is over. If you offer less than full price, your bid will be opened with all other bids at the end of the offer period. You may attend the opening of the offers, and your broker will be notified if yours is accepted.

Other HUD homes are just listed on an "extended basis" which means offers may be submitted any business day. If your bid is accepted, your broker will generally be notified within 48 hours of HUD's receipt of the offer.

Are HUD homes for everybody? Probably not. "Buyers must remember that they are buying the home 'as-is'," Scott said. "Some homes may need repair, but this can be a great opportunity for the fixer-upper. HUD may lower the price of a home knowing the buyer will need to invest money to make improvements." A professional inspection is recommended before making an offer because HUD provides no warranties with its homes.

"If you're having trouble saving for a down payment, or are just looking for an alternative to the traditional home buying process, contact a real state agent and ask about HUD homes," Scott said.

Appraising the Situation!

The "market value" of a home is said to be "that price which a buyer is willing to pay and a seller is willing to accept..." It is the price on which all parties in a real estate transaction agree.

There is another value judgement made in most real estate sales. It is called an "appraisal", and is usually required by the mortgage lender. An appraisal is conducted by an unbiased third-party, usually an individual certified to do appraisals.

Appraisals are required by most lenders for their protection and, ultimately, for the protection of the responsible party, the buyer. The purpose of the appraisal is to assure the mortgage lender that the price being paid is no more than the property's fair value.

Mortgage loans are usually based on a percentage of the purchase price, say 80%. For example, a home that apprises for $100,000, might justify a loan of $80,000. It is very important to the lender that the home is worth the price paid, otherwise they would be loaning an amount in excess of the percentage committed.

How are appraisals conducted? First, the appraiser gathers information about the property being appraised. This includes square footage of the home, lot size, condition of the home, special features, amenities, and location.

Next, the appraiser compiles comparable data for other similar homes which have sold recently in the area. Only completed sales are taken into account by the appraiser.

The property being appraised is then compared with the other homes which have sold. Adjustments are made based on differences in square footage, the recency of sales, and condition.

Because the final appraised value is based on completed sales only, it is assumed that the property would resell, if necessary, at that price. With that assurance, the lender then makes a permanent loan commitment based on a percentage of value.

Home buyers look for value, livability

While most buyers have their own specific agendas when searching for the right home, editors at Better Homes and Gardens magazine have identified some general trends in today's market.

"Buyers want good value for the dollar," said Roy Proctor, broker/owner of Roy Proctor, Realtors/Better Homes and Gardens Real Estate. "It's a reflection of a recession consciousness. Buyers are also looking for homes built with the family in mind. A home should provide an environment conducive to the way families live. Family time is limited, so a home must provide places for the family to share time together while on busy schedules."

According to Joan McCloskey, senior building and remodeling editor at Better Homes and Gardens, these are seven questions home buyers are asking when looking at homes.

■ Is it comfortable? The home should offer a cozy feeling for the family. It is their retreat from a busy life.

■ Is it the best deal? Buyers are willing to accept "second best" in a home. But it should only require a facelift in order for them to get what they want.

■ Does the floor plan make sense? The home needs to be designed for convenient living.

■ Will it last? Buyers are shying away from trendy-looking homes, especially if they look out of place in the community.

■ Is the house environmentally correct? The home should not propose any health and safety risks — and it should have plenty of green space and trees.

■ Is it energy efficient? This should help save them money and be friendly to the environment.

■ Is it maintenance free? Most working couples don't have time to maintain the systems in the home.

"In the final analysis, today's buyers believe that homes are meant to be lived in, not looked at," Proctor said.

Roy Proctor, Realtors/Better Homes and Gardens has been a member of the Better Homes and Gardens network since Dec. 1987. Better Homes and Gardens Real Estate Service was formed in 1978 and is a national network of over 690 firms with more than 1,300 offices and over 23,000 sales associates.

Langston Realtors Talk About

Local commercial real estate market takes upward turn

By Penny Willhite

Two weeks ago, in the Simi Valley northeast of Los Angeles, the $57 million Reagan Library was dedicated. The structure, built entirely by public donations, was opened to an enthusiastic crowd that included President and Mrs. Bush, all four living past presidents and their wives, and, our community's own former mayor, Ernest Angelo, currently serving as the national Republican committeeman, and his wife Penny.

Glowing speeches were delivered, and a spirit of camaraderie and optimism prevailed. Richard Nixon reminisced that Breshnev once poked his finger in Nixon's chest declared, "Your grandchildren will live under communism." Nixon's quick retort was, "No! YOUR grandchildren will live in freedom!"

Ronald Reagan, the great communicator, noted that he has the good fortune to be born an optimist. While others see the glass as half empty, he always sees the glass as half full.

Talking with Angelo about these men's positive attitudes reminds me how important attitude is in determining success. We at Langston Realtors make a living seeing the glass half full. The good news-bad news antithesis which often makes for good jokes also makes for good business.

In June, 1991, amidst increasing reports of distress sales, failing banks and S & Ls, deal-killing environmental issues and a major corporate move-outs, Langston Realtors decided to expand its commercial brokerage department. All this bad news had to be good news for someone. Yes, we decided it was buying time in Midland.

Im May we started weekly formal training classes for our agents who wished to specialize in commercial sales, and we established policies and practices aimed at increasing our commercial inventories.

The results have been astounding. We expected to acquire a broad base of motivated sellers and a few prudent buyers whose needs could easily be matched, To date, our calls are running 20 to one BUYERS to sellers, and it's getting increasingly difficult to make matches.

Not since the "boom" have we experienced such a dominance in buyer interest. But unlike the boom, buyers today are a new and refreshing class of investors: not big businesses, not millionaires, not syndicators, and not speculators. They are small business operators, shop owners and tradespeople — all with a specific and immediate use for the properties they seek. A few examples of recent transactions within our office:

Balog & Balog Auctioneering (Mike and Donna Balog) has moved its base of operation from their living room to a 5,000 sq. ft. building east of town.

Acid Engineering (Ricky Dyer) has expanded and moved to a suite of offices in the upstairs of Bob and Jodie Slaydon's building at 2709 N. Big Spring.

A manufacturing firm out of San Antonio will be opening a 10,000 sq. ft. warehouse facility west of Midland on Dec. 1.

Claire Air Conditioning (Tim Claire) outgrew his space on South Industrial and purchased a 4,600 sq. ft. building with three acres for expansion on Highway 80 West. His neighbor on Industrial, A-Quick Signs, quickly appropriated Tim's vacated spaces for its own expansion.

Last week PLS, Inc. (Ron and Loretta Wise) doubled its space by moving into the 4,000 sq. ft. two-story office building at 2608 Loma (another Slaydon property).

Discount Optical Club (Halley Brookshire) has opened a Midland outlet in the Craddick/Biscoe building at 910 W. Wall.

Spindletop Exploration (Joe and Holly Hughes) has moved its headquarters from Dallas to a beautiful 1500 sq. ft. suite in Clay-Desta's Twin Towers.

Texas Water Perfection, Inc. has purchased several Midland locations for its water vending business.

Victor and Gracie Martinez will be opening an authentic Mexican food restaurant and market in the Conners Delicatessen building this month.

The Forest Oil Building, recently vacated by that company's move to Denver, is already 70 percent occupied by new tenants — all independent operators and consultants with small suites. (All credit here to our agent Bea McGrath who handled all the marketing).

Robby Winford, Winford's Meats, last week acquired a major interest in a 4,000-tree pecan orchard. He will be carrying this season's freshly harvested crop in his holiday product line.

Buyers and tenants such as these are typical of the players in today's market, and they are the strength and the hope of our future as a stable and diversified city. We are no longer a one-industry town sustained by the exploration budgets of major oil companies. And even as we are sad to see any move-outs of big corporations and their people, we rejoice in our lively collection of small businesses with big plans to make their mark in a city where mere survival is a measured success.

More good news: In a city that leads the nation in office space per capita, we are 75 percent occupied (not 25 percent vacant!). The occupancy rates are slightly better for retail and multi-family residential is now up to 85 percent. Even the pessimists will have to admit that we're considerably more than half full.

The market for small industrial buildings is extremely active, and inventories are rapidly decreasing. This could lead to a shortage and upward pressure value — it could even lead to new construction. (you heard it from Langston's!)

The prime lending rate is at at a 14-year low because of a sluggish national economy — but what better time to finance a commercial property than through a local bank.

Expectations for short or long term gain in today's market are uncertain. But neither is there the spiraling inflation that snuffs out the small user, who, we believe, is the rightful heir to Midland's bountiful commercial resources. I am reminded of the observation of Max Ehrmann author of the beautiful poem, Desiderata:

"And whether or not it is clear to you, no doubt the universe is unfolding as it should."

MOONLIGHTING!
The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals.
OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:
Is it worthwhile for adults also? Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?
Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!
How long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!
When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.
Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!

HOW TO RECOGNIZE A REAL ESTATE BARGAIN WHEN YOU SEE IT.

The truth is, you usually can't.

You can't squeeze or weight it. It's not dented, scratched, a factory close-out or last year's model. So it's usually difficult to determine the value of a property.

Our business is to furnish you with the necessary, but hard-to-obtain information that can help you make a good buying decision.

We are in the field everyday helping buyers and sellers to make profitable decisions. While at the same time evaluating the Midland area real estate.

When you go bargain-hunting for Real Estate, why not call me to go along. I can help you find the good deal you are looking for.

YOU CAN'T AFFORD A HOUSE. WHO SAYS?.....

Call me about this 2 Bedroom, 1 Bathroom house the seller is ready to deal on. Across from Trinity Towers - close to shopping. Qualifying Assumption - Call for details.

We deliver expectations.

When buying or selling a home, your objectives must be met, your desires fulfilled - your expectations delivered. We understand.

We also understand that the first step toward reaching your objectives is learning. We must learn what you want to accomplish, so we ask. When you answer, we listen.

The more you answer, the more we listen. As you tell us what's right for you, we formulate a plan - one designed to translate what you want into what you receive. Step-by-Step, your dreams become reality. No, there is no magic involved, only hard work.

We begin the process as strangers to your expectations, and leave as friends.

BRIEFING

In the doghouse

Gas truck

General Motors Corp. has introduced the nation's first mass-produced pickup truck designed to run solely on natural gas, which is less polluting than other alternative fuels except electricity.

The first shipments of the three-quarter ton Sierra model trucks are scheduled to arrive at dealerships in April and will cost between $17,000 and $20,000, depending on option packages.

The company will build 10,000 of the trucks in 1992, said Mark Hogan, director of planning for GM's Truck Group in Pontiac, Mich.

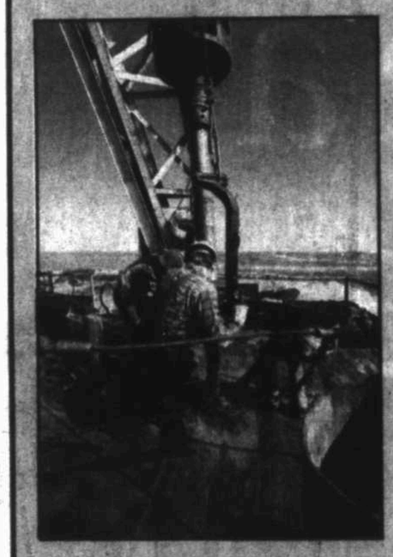
Amerada cutbacks

TULSA, Okla. — Amerada Hess Corp. reportedly will cut its workforce by at least 10 percent nationwide but won't notify federal regulators, as is normal in such cases.

Amerada Hess, an oil and gas company based in New York City, said Wednesday it would not discuss the layoffs. The 10-percent figure came from employees who asked not to be identified.

"We made a decision not to make an announcement," said a company spokesman who didn't want his name used. "We're not going to get into a count."

Employees said about 40 of the company's 500 Tulsa workers will lose jobs. Twenty workers in Houston lost jobs, and five in New York City were laid off.



Making hole

A drilling rig makes hole near Midland. The rig count has shown signs of modest improvement in recent weeks, with the Permian Basin rig count posting a second consecutive gain, to 107. The U.S. rig count rose three to 796.

Industry looks at natural gas future

■ Despite soft prices and dim view, future of natural gas appears guaranteed by stable supplies.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

As we move into the fourth quarter and the forecast season, some are already beginning to take down-the-road glimpses at where the natural gas industry might be headed in the months and years ahead.

One of the most respected surveys is the Arthur Andersen Oil & Gas Industry Outlook. Published just this week, it is the combined opinions of 700 oil and gas executives who attended the accounting firm's twelfth annual Oil & Gas Symposium in Houston in September.

It is no surprise that the survey shows a very strong shift in focus among producers, from natural gas to oil and a shift from the U.S. to overseas. Last year 53 percent of those surveyed said their exploration and acquisition focus was on natural gas, but in the current soft market, only 36 percent will remain focused for the next three years on natural gas.

Surprising, however, is the negative view toward natural gas demand. Despite soft prices, most natural gas experts have remained convinced that the Clean Air Act and other environmental considerations would put a growing demand on natural gas.

In fact, natural gas demand is on the rise everywhere in the world except the U.S. and Canada, according to Jofree Corp. Chairman Carol Freedenthal. Worldwide, says Freedenthal, natural gas demand is growing about 5 percent per year and is close to parity with oil at $3.60 per MMBtu in England and $3.20 per MMBtu in Japan.

But the U.S. executives surveyed are not so optimistic. Only one third of the executives now see natural gas demand on the increase in the U.S. market, compared to 44 percent who, in 1990, were predicting a demand increase.

Another significant factor affecting natural gas drilling is the shift of major oil companies overseas. One-quarter said they would explore less in the U.S., and only 52 percent of the executives indicated their companies would increase domestic exploration in the next three years, compared to 68 percent last year.

FDIC sells producing properties

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

As Texas banks fell during the 1980s when the oil boom turned bust, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. inherited a number of oil and gas producing properties that had been used as collateral for energy loans.

Bob Carman, manager of the FDIC's Midland office, reported that "through the years we have managed to sell most of our producing properties."

He stated that, as of the middle of the year, the FDIC had remaining approximately 15 properties that were "very small, of small value." He said the agency sold most of those properties in a package of 15 to 16 properties. To date, all that remains if five small fractional interests in marginal wells, which had received no offers when the FDIC advertised the package this summer.

Price uncertainty, lack of capital impacts energy company stocks

■ Unstable prices and lack of capital have hurt the bottom line at many oil companies, but one local stockbroker thinks he sees a positive trend developing.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

It has not been a pretty financial picture for energy companies in the third quarter.

Most majors saw quarterly profits plunge. Phillips Petroleum, for example, saw earnings fall 69 percent to $56 million; Amoco earnings fell 45.3 percent, and Chevron Corp. posted a 22.3 percent drop in earnings. Oryx Energy suffered an $8 million loss.

The few companies that posted earnings did so on the strength of cutbacks and asset sales. Union Texas, for example, posted earnings of $60 million, aided by a $41 million net gain from the sale of its U.S. onshore oil and gas business. Panhandle Eastern's sale of its stake in a pipeline company helped lift its earnings to $15.9 million for the quarter.

These earnings reports have an impact on the stocks of these companies. Midland broker Glenn Little of Little & Co., observed that, in light of the weakness in natural gas prices, "there was a downdraft for companies with a great deal of production."

Still, Little said "I don't see one big trend, actually. I don't see any particular trend to hang my hat on. We (in America) still walk a (energy) tightrope, seeing the percentage of foreign oil imports rising."

He pointed out that the main problem is price uncertainty. "If you have a good idea of what your numbers are going to

Action on energy bill unlikely

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Despite optimistic predictions by proponents of conservation and renewable fuels that major new energy legislation would be on the Senate floor by Thanksgiving, congressional officials say it may be impossible to pass anything more than a limited alternative for months.

Ten days ago, liberal Democrats and an unlikely coalition of environmental groups, small utilities and the automobile industry derailed the Bush administration's energy bill. Building a coalition for a substitute will be much more difficult.

"It's going to be a tall order to come up with a new energy bill," said Sen. Frank H. Murkowski, R-Alaska, a

Energy dependence through conservation

Pitts

If there is anyone who still doubts that a liberal Congress would cut off America's nose to spite the oil industry, they would do well to consider the facts surrounding the failure of the Johnston-Wallop energy bill, rejected earlier this month for debate on the Senate floor.

The bill, introduced by Senators Bennett Johnston (D-La.) and Malcom Wallop (R-Wyo.) was in essence the National Energy Strategy. Supposedly, it was passed over by the Senate because it did not stress conservation enough.

Some Senators claimed, also, that the bill was merely a major oil company ploy to get the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWAR) open to oil development — just another devious oil company conspiracy.

But if the truth of the matter were known, the bill, which actually reeks with conservation measures, was probably blocked for consideration because it would have given some incentive to producers. There is such an intense dislike and distrust of the oil industry among the liberal members of Congress that anything that even remotely resembles incentive for the oil industry is immediately axed. It doesn't matter how good it is for the nation. If it's good for oil, it's adios. Too bad for America.

In his response to the Senate vote not to bring the Johnston-Wallop energy bill to the Senate floor for debate, Secretary of Energy James D. Watkins said: "They won't even bring this bill up for debate and they know how important it is for American jobs and to cut our trade deficit." Watkins added that rejection of the energy bill could end up costing the nation 300,000 jobs while adding billions to the trade deficit.

Warned Watkins: "Energy imports now account for more than 50 percent of the trade deficit, and foreign imports will increase from the present 45 percent to 67 percent by the year 2010 because of increasing demand and declining domestic production."

Watkins said the Senate's vote against the bill was a major disappointment, because it voted down a jobs bill, a trade deficit bill and an energy bill.

True there were probably some elements of the NES that would have benefitted the oil industry. There were some dollars for research, to find ways to get more oil out of the ground. And, ANWR would have been opened for exploration.

But since when is it a crime for an American industry to profit from public policy, especially if it is an ailing, shrinking industry and the policy would benefit all Americans? Answer: Never, unless it's the oil industry. As Daniel Yergin, energy expert and author of The Prize commented in an interview last week: "The oil industry is judged differently and treated differently than any other industry in this country." By "differently" he meant harshly.

Strip away the political politeness, mathematical smoke and save-the-world rhetoric from the liberal, anti-oil arguments and you end up with a hostile logic that goes something like this:

NOV 17 91

BILL: Devising new energy bill will be 'tall order'

(From 1E)

a member of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. "The birth pains that came with the last one were extensive."

The old energy bill, which was backed by the White House and the oil industry, tried to stitch together a grab bag of provisions that addressed off-shore and Arctic oil drilling, conservation, incentives to promote greater efficiency in buildings and appliances, deregulation of the utility industry and alternative energy sources like nuclear and hydroelectric power.

Without the impetus of a crisis, like the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait last year, which gave the old energy bill a push, Congress is likely to change its approach and deal with such issues individually, in a fashion that will fail to establish a coordinated strategy, analysts say.

"It's out of sight, out of mind," said Sen. J. Bennett Johnston D-La., chairman of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. He had sponsored the defeated legislation.

"The price of gasoline is OK now, so there must not be a problem," he said. "A Gallup poll shows that nearly a majority of the American people don't know that we import any oil."

Nearly half the oil consumed in the United States is imported.

A few alternative bills are now in play, but none appears to have a chance of passage until late next year, at least.

One, sponsored by Sen. Richard H. Bryan, D-Nev., would mandate an increase in automobile fuel efficiency from the current 27.5 miles a gallon to 40 over the next decade. The Senate Commerce Committee passed the measure, which environmentalists say would conserve 2.5 million barrels of oil a day, but lobbying by the auto industry has so far helped impede action by the full Senate.

The auto industry helped defeat the original energy package because executives feared liberals would add amendments on the floor to mandate fuel efficiency. With the industry reeling from decreased sales, several senators who helped Bryan sink the original bill are now opposing his efforts to raise mileage standards.

Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., who heads the House Committee on Energy and Commerce and is one of the strongest advocates of the auto industry in Congress, is working to keep anything similar to the Bryan measure from being considered in the House.

Daniel Becker, a lobbyist for the Sierra Club and a primary strategist for the environmental movement on energy legislation, said Dingell could stop his committee from considering the Bryan bill, but he would be unable stop the full House from adding it as an amendment to a House energy bill next year.

But a number of House staff members who monitor energy policy are not as confident.

"Dingell is a very formidable adversary," Bryan said.

But even if both congressional chambers do pass the bill, the White House has threatened to veto any legislation that includes stricter fuel-economy standards, arguing that the country cannot afford to burden the industry with more costs.

The House Merchant Marine Committee is considering legislation that would allow oil drilling in the Alaskan National Wildlife Refuge. It was the strong opposition by environmental groups to opening up one of the country's last virgin preserves that sank the old energy bill, and the House measure is not considered any more passable.

Rep. Philip R. Sharp, D-Ind., chairman of the Energy and Power Subcommittee, is sponsoring legislation that would promote the construction of natural gas pipelines, seek reductions of carbon-dioxide emissions that cause global warming and encourage the development of renewable energy sources like wind, solar and geothermal power.

Sharp's panel overwhelmingly approved his measure, but not before it carved out several of his most ambitious proposals.

FDIC: Will try to sell producers

(From 1E)

Still, Carman said, "We will continue to hold them and will entertain any offers. We'll continue to hold these properties as long as long as there is a net profit from the production."

He said the FDIC has gotten a fair price for the properties it has sold. "If we didn't get what we felt was a fair value, we wouldn't have sold them."

He noted that since the FDIC opened its office in Midland in 1983, it has closed a number of banks that had producing properties, including leases in the Panhandle field involving the controversial white oil issue.

(From 1E)

All of this will have a profound impact on the future of natural gas, says the office of State Comptroller John Sharp. In a report entitled Texas to 2011, Texas oil and gas production is seen steadily declining as prices remain soft and major oil companies flee the state for overseas ventures. While 2011 may be a little far out in forecast terms, it does offer indications of what might lie between now and then.

According to the report, the Texas economy was 27 percent tied to the oil industry in 1981 and is now only 15 percent tied to the industry. A similar decline is seen for future years.

By the year 2011, concludes the report, oil prices will not be much above present prices, at approximately $20-25 per barrel in 1991 prices. Today's oil reserves, estimated at 631 million today will be down to 250 million by 2011.

At the same time, natural gas production will drop from 5.9 trillion cubic feet to 2 trillion cubic feet, and will account for only 11 percent of the state's economic activity, compared to today's 15 percent.

That is a position not shared by Texas' top geologist, Bill Fisher, director of the University of Texas Bureau of Economic Geology. In a recently published analysis paper of the natural gas supply and reserve situation, Fisher says tight sands incentives coupled with new natural gas technology have been responsible for keeping supplies up despite soft prices and a lack of drilling. Fisher says incentives and technology added .85 Bcf to 1.65 Bcf during the 1980s, adding 40 percent more reserves than expected and thus putting the current price squeeze on producers.

"While the price squeeze for producers is real," says Fisher, "this supply and reserve response, with eventual restoration of demand, spell a positive future for Texas natural gas. In fact, under the right circumstances, we could see in Texas as much gas in the future as we have had in the past."

The Arthur Andersen survey also takes a dim view of natural gas in the near term, as respondents now see a gas price 15-20 percent lower than previous predictions. An average of $1.60 is expected for next year, with a price of $2.80 seen for the end of the decade.

The gathering of oil executives has also lowered its expectations for increasing natural gas reserves. Last year half the respondents predicted that a price of $3 to $4 would be needed to increase U.S. gas reserves. This year, 63 percent said a natural gas price of $2 to $3 would be enough to stimulate drilling and increase reserves.

And what about shutting in gas production? Is this a phenomenon that is just getting started? A majority (57 percent) reported that they had shut-in gas in 1991, and more than half said they would shut-in again if prices drop below the threshold price of $1.20 per mcf.

At a recent press conference in Midland, FERC Chairman Martin Allday said he could not fault producers for shutting-in production. "You can hardly blame them, when they have to sell for below the replacement cost," said Allday.

Allday noted that a couple of cold winters could help natural gas prices. But even then long term help is probably out of the picture.

According to a survey of 16 pipelines and more than 75 LDC's and producers, gas supplies and deliverability for the 1991-92 winter will be more than adequate.

The American Gas Association survey concludes that peak month supply capability for the 1991-92 winter is expected to be 2,531 Bcf. It further states that the maximum monthly consumption of natural gas ever recorded in the U.S. was 2,436 Bcf in January of 1979.

STOCKS: Price impact trickles down

be, you can set up a budget and correctly analyze the data and business transactions. But when you have uncertainty, you can't sit down and say what your growth projections, your revenue will be. You're at a serious disadvantage. You're in a situation where you stop making decisions, and that's the worst of all."

He continued: "With inadequate information, management makes no decisions. With no decisions, there's no drilling, and when there's no drilling, there's no (need for) drilling mud. It trickles down to the food companies that cater to the rigs, to the guys who make work clothes for drillers."

Joe Liberty of PaineWebber in Midland said one of the main problems the energy business has is a lack of capital needed for drilling and exploration projects. "That's what's really hurting our local onshore business."

Still, Liberty believes he's seeing the start of some good news for the oil and gas industry.

"What we've been seeing the last several weeks is the stocks of small exploration companies have started reacting very strongly in the market. Harken, Triton, Plains Resources, any number of companies, their stocks are reacting in a positive phase. From what I've seen in the past — and this may not be an indication of what's happening now — is that this is the first stages of capital trying to get back into the business. In past cycles, I've noticed that sometimes actual capital for drilling and exploration follows this type of activity, coming directly into the business. (These observations) are born of 30 years of being here in Midland in the investment business."

He said he's watching these developments closely, observing that Parker & Parsley Petroleum stock is up 30 percent in recent weeks. Small companies are attracting attention, he said, because "they're looking at the problems of the energy business in a different way, than they were, say, five years ago, and some are doing very well."

"There's a lot of undertones going on that I think are very positive. Earnings are the history of a company's performance; stock prices are people's concepts and ideas of what they think will happen."

PITTS: Anti-oil sentiment historical

(From 1E)

"All America needs is more fuel-efficient automobiles, trucks and airplanes. That will mean smaller fuel tanks and less fuel. Then, because we need less fuel, we will not need to drill anywhere, and we can keep our environment clean from the tundra-raping, oil-spilling, blood-sucking oil companies, who only want to open ANWR to make more profits for their greedy stockholders."

The logic goes on: "We can probably conserve our way to energy independence, but if not, we can count on our friends in the Middle East to supply us with all we want at a reasonable price. And, if we can't count on them, we will send an army to kill them and take their oil."

Sure it sounds stupid, but sadly enough, many Americans, including some in the Senate, believe it, despite convincing evidence to the contrary.

Never mind that the greedy, tundra-raping oil companies have given America the lowest energy prices in the world for most of the past 50 years. Or the fact that you cannot buy five gallons of conservation anywhere in the U.S.

Conservation is good, but America also needs homegrown production.

Arkla Exploration earnings fall

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — Arkla Exploration Co. posted net income of $642,000, or 2 cents per share, for the third quarter, the company announced Tuesday.

For the third quarter of 1990, the company posted net income of $1.21 million or 4 cents per share. For the nine-month period, Arkla earned $5.31 million, or 16 cents per share, compared to $5.29 million for the first three quarters of 1990.

According to the company, third-quarter results were affected by lower summer spot market prices for gas, reduced sales volume, tighter margins and lower volumes on gas purchased for resale, and a drop in oil prices compared to the rise that occurred after the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in August 1990.

The company did post its sixth consecutive quarterly increase in crude oil and liquids sales volumes, officials said.

New Mexico producers say utilities squeezing them

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — Independent producers of natural gas in New Mexico say two major California utilities are squeezing them out of the market.

"California has written off the San Juan Basin. I can't get my gas there," said Sylvia Little, a Farmington-based independent and president of the Independent Petroleum Association of New Mexico.

The producers blame the situation largely on Pacific Gas & Electric Co. in San Francisco and Southern California Edison in Los Angeles.

Those utilities virtually control pipeline capacity through New Mexico because they are the biggest buyers here and contract with non-New Mexico producers in Canada, Texas and Oklahoma for space in the lines.

"We're victims of being totally a captive of the California market," state Land Commissioner Jim Baca said.

El Paso Natural Gas Co., a pipeline owner in New Mexico, said it must carry whatever gas the utilities want.

With deregulation of the industry, El Paso and other pipelines are no longer gas merchants that buy gas and then re-sell it.

Instead they are transporters regulated by the federal government.

New Mexico producers therefore have to try to sell their gas directly to the big California utilities. But often the quantity they can deliver each day isn't large enough to interest buyers.

And pipelines must deliver the gas California wants, locking up space in the lines before smaller producers can make a deal.

Some independents say they are living month to month.

"It's almost a meal-to-meal situation for many of our members," said Alvin Baca of Santa Fe, executive director of the Independent Petroleum Association.

The producers say pipelines heading west out of the San Juan Basin — the only direction they go at this point — are full of nearly everything except New Mexico gas.

Membership in the independents' trade group, the Independent Petroleum Association, has dropped from 720 to fewer than 400 from 1985 to the present.

In 1988, California bought about 55 percent of its gas from New Mexico. That figure has dropped below 45 percent.

Production capacity exceeds actual deliveries. New Mexico gas production currently averages 2.6 billion cubic feet a day compared with a possible maximum production from existing gathering systems of 4 billion cubic feet a day.

"The small producer is an endangered species," said Jack Cole, a producer for 25 years in the San Juan Basin near Farmington.

The independents are being further hurt by federally subsidized coal-seam gas, which is flooding the pipelines. Only the bigger oil companies can afford to drill in coal formations because it requires a large capital investment, the independents say.

Demand for gas is down and supply is up partly due to efficient operating levels at the Palo Verde nuclear power plant west of Phoenix. When Palo Verde sells more electricity, less natural gas is needed to run gas-fired power plants.

The health of New Mexico's economy is tied to natural gas production because state severance taxes on natural gas, as well as oil, help fund essential services.

New Mexico is the fourth largest producer of natural gas in the nation.

"I'm getting real sick of California, and the California utilities' vertical and illegitimate plundering of the state of New Mexico," said Rep. Max Coll, D-Santa Fe.

Coll, who owns interests in oil and gas properties, said Pacific Gas & Electric's ownership of pipeline and gas marketing interests in Canada have been used to exert monopoly control at New Mexico's expense.

Leonard Anderson, a spokesman for PG&E, said the utility buys more than half its supplies from Canada, about 30 percent from the Southwest and the rest from inside California.

A ratepayer group within the California Public Utilities Commission alleged in a recent report that PG&E overpaid for Canadian natural gas supplies by $130 million a year since 1988 and passed the costs onto consumers.

The group accused the utility's affiliated interests of creating a monopoly that has hurt ratepayers.

BIOREMEDIATION

The high tech, low cost solution in...
• dealing with hydrocarbon based soil or water contamination
• reducing paraffin build-up in oil wells
• enhancing oil recovery

Bioremediation is the natural demanufacturing of waste into non-harmful elements. Alpha West supplies naturally occurring (not genetically engineered) biological products in a proprietary Bio-Catalyst which enhances decompostion, even in oxygen-depleted environments.

Hydrocarbon-based contaminants are transformed by reduction/oxidation, ultimately to carbon dioxide and water.

Bioremediation allows us to "speed up nature," resulting in a natural, cost effective way to remove problem materials.

Since 1985 we have been actively involved in bioremediation through our parent organization, Alpha Environmental, Inc. Alpha West utilizes Alpha Environmental's AE-Petrologic® 1, 2, & 3 for well bore treatments, and the Alpha Microx®-T Process for land treatment of wastes.

Ensco to operate Venezuela drilling barges

N.Y. Times News Service

Energy Service Co., a Dallas-based oilfield services firm, has reached an agreement to build and operate four oil well-drilling barges on Lake Maracaibo in Venezuela.

An Energy Service affiliate, ENSCO Drilling (Caribbean), expects to receive approximately $100 million to $125 million in revenues over a five-year period as a result of the agreement, said company spokesman Allen Brooks.

The affiliate has been granted a five-year contract by Lagoven, a subsidiary of the Venezuelan national oil company.

The contract is subject to negotiation of final terms.

Harken drilling Bahrain well

N.Y. Times News Service

GRAND PRAIRIE, Texas — Harken Energy Co., still bathing in red ink, hopes soon to be swimming in black Persian Gulf oil.

Following on the heels of another dismal earnings report issued last week, the oil and gas exploration and production firm announced Monday that it has begun drilling a well off Bahrain.

Both analysts and Harken officials have described the well as a potential "company-maker."

Deutag Drilling, a German firm, began drilling the Jarim No. 2 well on Monday, Harken said.

The company expects drilling to take 90 days, followed by 30 days of testing of potential oil- and gas-bearing zones.

Harken has specific hydrocarbon targets in mind. It is hoping to find oil at approximately 7,300 feet in the Jurassic Arab formation and will be looking for natural gas at about 13,300 feet in the Permian Khuff formation.

In January 1990, Harken reached an agreement with the government of Bahrain that permits it to explore for oil and gas in the tiny Persian Gulf emirate, which consists of a group of islands east of petroleum-rich Saudi Arabia.

Oil market may go 24-hours

NEW YORK (AP) — If all goes as the world's largest energy market plans, futures players will soon be able to sell millions of barrels of oil around the clock.

But if a trader loses too much money in the computerized trading system that the New York Mercantile Exchange hopes to have in place by late next year, the machines will cut him off.

"No one can run amok," Nymex Chairman Z. Lou Guttman told a Thursday news conference where he introduced the Nymex ACCESS system.

Nymex hopes to install the system so oil traders can instantly respond to world news moving the price of petroleum. For example, when the U.S.-led forces began bombing Iraq on Jan. 17, it was hours before the Nymex opened.

When the market finally opened, oil prices had fallen so far that some traders had lost millions of dollars.

"Wars and catastrophes don't wait for the Nymex to open," Guttman said.

The exchange is developing the new system with American Telephone and Telegraph Co. and Task Management Inc., a computer consulting firm from Riverside, Ill. The cost of the system wasn't disclosed.

The move by Nymex comes as other financial markets delve into after-hours trading in a gradual but relentless trend to 24-hour dealings in stocks, bonds, currencies and commodities.

The New York Stock Exchange, for example, now permits computerized trading after the closing bell, although stock prices do not change from the close, and Chicago futures markets are developing after-hours trading programs.

Some oil traders worry it could lead them into a life of sleepless nights and create a market where big players could easily manipulate prices in the wee hours.

"You could have all kinds of new strategies and new manipulations and tactics by players in the middle of the night, and that's one thing we've got to be fearful of," said Thomas P. Blakeslee, an energy analyst at Pegasus Econometric Group Inc., in Hoboken, N.J.

A handful of traders could buy all the oil up for sale, he said, running up the price and hitting "buy stops," or levels at which other players automatically will buy. That would enable the players who bought the oil in the first place to quickly sell at a profit.

It is a strategy sometimes employed during regular trading sessions on the exchange floor, and Blakeslee said he believes the computer system will make it easier to accomplish. For example, the computers will show traders how many contracts are for sale at a certain price, information they do not currently have access to.

Nymex disputed the contention that the system could make market manipulation easy, saying the exchange's regular compliance procedures and protections will remain in place.

Phillips plans to upgrade Utah refinery

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Phillips Petroleum Co. did not get what it considers a fair asking price for its Utah refinery and now will invest $50 million to upgrade it, the company says.

The Woods Cross refinery and related product terminals had been on the market since June. Spokesman George Minter said the recession created the low offers.

Minter could not identify the 20 companies interested or what they offered. Phillips would not disclose the value of the Woods Cross refinery, which had 1990 revenues of $288 million.

The refinery, located 10 miles north of Salt Lake City, has a processing capacity of 25,000 barrels of crude oil per day.

Minter said the $50 million would be used for safety and environmental improvements. He said the company believes there will be an increase in the availabilty of crude oil because Amoco recently announced it would close its Wyoming refinery.

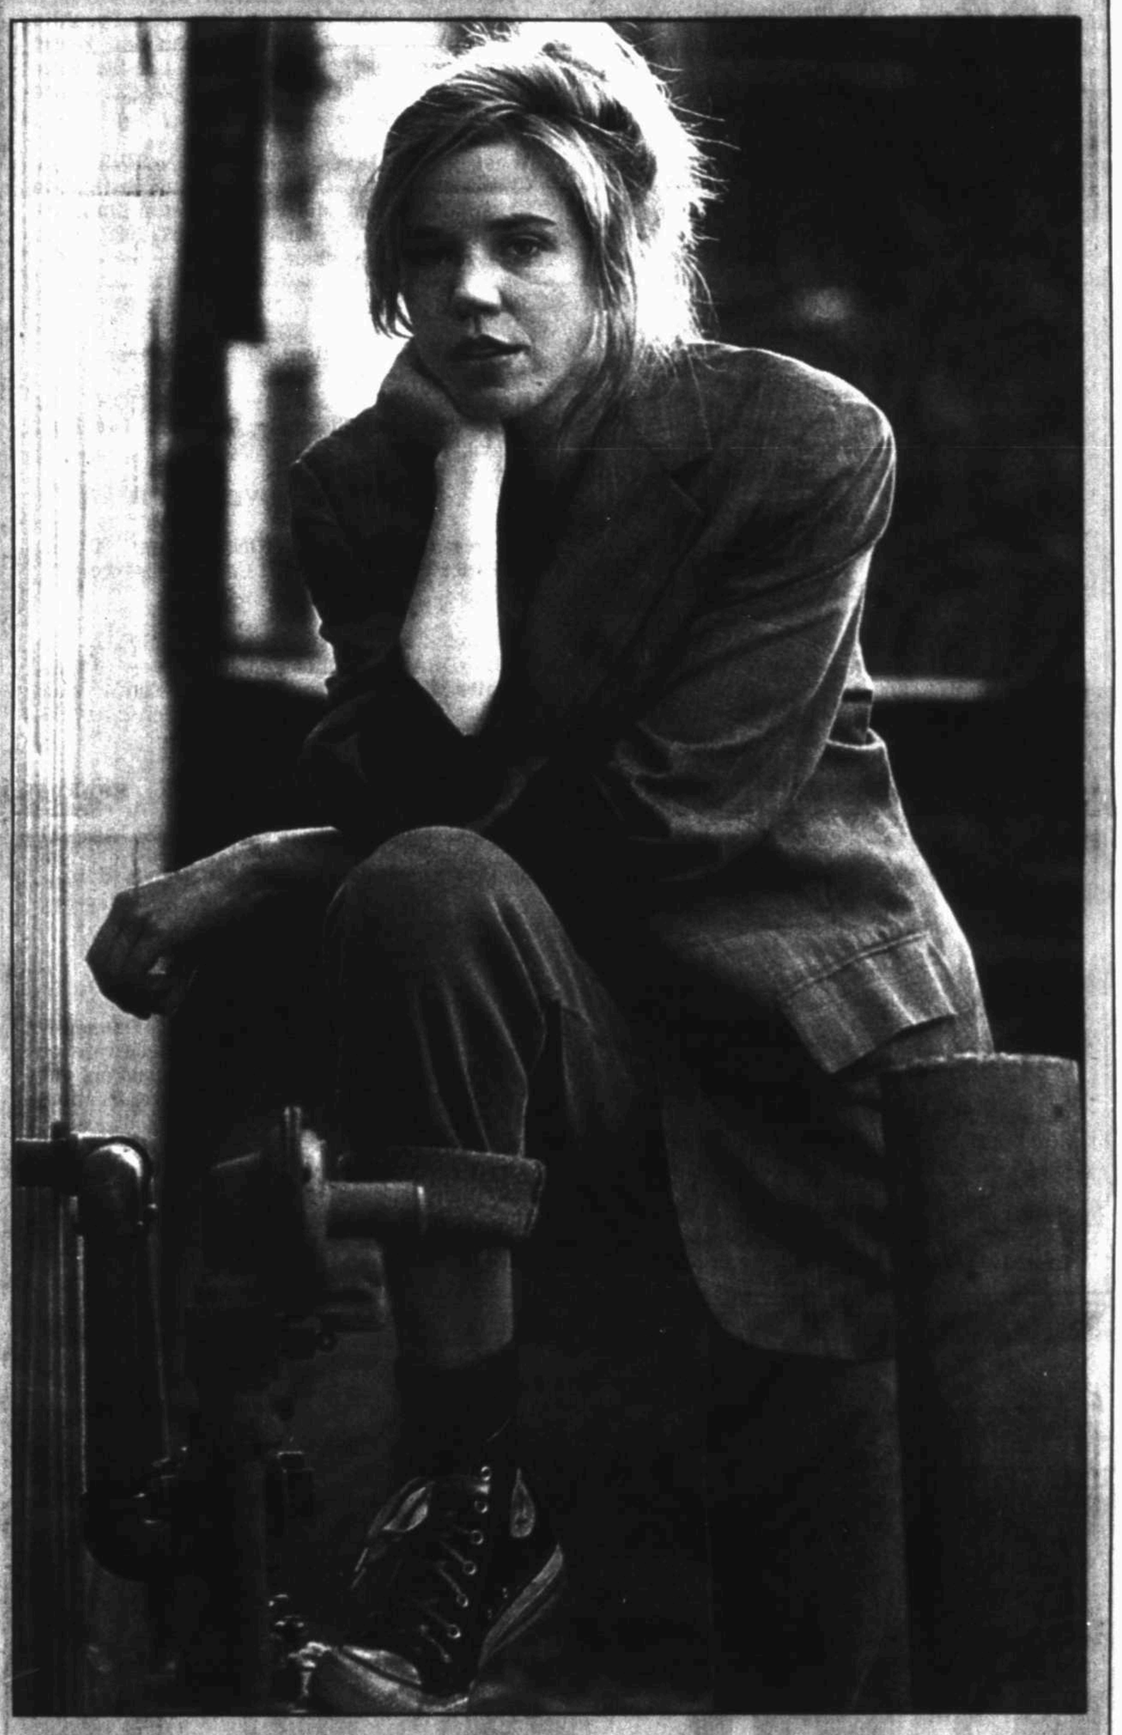
Longbow Productions presents

A Mother's Justice

Ronnie D. Clemmer



The movie "A Mother's Justice" airs at 8 p.m. Monday, Nov. 25 on NBC. Former Midlander Ronnie D. Clemmer and partner Bill Pace, both of Longbow Productions, are executive producers of the film. Meredith Baxter, above, stars in the movie as Lilah Comminger, a mother who is overcome by outrage when she learns her 23-year-old daughter, Debby Lacey, played by Carrie Hamilotn, has been beaten and raped.

By Georgia Todd Temple

Former Midlander Ronnie D. Clemmer, now a movie producer, traces his success to his family, growing up in West Texas and working hard.

Now a California resident, Clemmer shares the duties of president of Longbow Productions with his partner Bill Pace. The two are responsible for the two-hour drama "A Mother's Justice," which airs 8 p.m. Nov. 25 on NBC. The movie stars Meredith Baxter, G.W. Bailey and Carrie Hamilton.

The movie, which is based on a true story, is Longbow's first completed production to air. It was co-produced with Green/Epstein Productions.

"A mother is furious at the rape of her 22-year-old daughter and frustrated at the inability of the policemen to find the rapist and winds up going on the streets as a decoy. Stripped down to its basics, it easily could have been a story that approximated the kind of vigilantism that you saw in 'Death Wish.' The story that we have crafted covers the events as they reflect on the relationship between a mother and daughter. And, that's the quality of the story."

Longbow Productions is interested in, Clemmer said, "Stories that explore and enhance the human condition."

The success that Clemmer has experienced has much to do with his West Texas work-ethic attitude. "You've got to pursue your joys. You've got to be disciplined about it; work hard," Clemmer said in a recent telephone interview adding, "Somehow that gets translated into you've got to suffer. I never got that message."

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

■ OC concert set

ODESSA — The Odessa College Jazz Band Concert is set for 8 p.m. Friday at the Globe Theater on the OC campus.

The concert will highlight music from the Big Band era, swing, jazz and pop. It will feature two vocalists, Patsy Allen and Dana Ritter.

Admission is $2 at the door or free with an OC identification card. For more information call Lonnie Clark, director of instrumental music, 1-335-6623.

■ Exhibit on display

ODESSA — The White-Pool House, 112 E. Murphy, has its final exhibit of 1991 on display.

Pictures, articles and memorabilia tell the history of medical services in Ector County. Coordinator of the White-Pool House is Barbara A. Baker.

■ Photos on display

The exhibit, "Changing Realities: Recent Soviet Photography," is on display in the Instructional Building Gallery from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday.

The work of 11 amateur Soviet photographers covers 1983 to 1989, depicting Russian people in everyday settings. A release from OC said a striking similarity among the photographs is the smiling children contrasted to the solemn looking grownups.

Unlike Western photographers who have been experimenting with new techniques in black and white and color manipulation, Soviet photographers seem to have preferred the stark realism reflected in the black and white photograph, the release said.

For more information call Steve Goff, 335-6497.

■ Shopper's bazaar set

Manor Park will be sponsoring a Crafty Christmas Shopper's Bazaar from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Dec. 7 at 2208 N. Loop 250 West.

Cost for the workshop is $28 per child and $20 for additional children in the same family. To register write Glenna Friedrich, 3838 Millbook, San Angelo, Texas 76904.

■ Club hosts exhibit

Paintings of landscapes and floral arrangements by Midlander Greg Price are on display from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. weekdays this month at the Midland Woman's Club, Hogan Park.

Price

The one-man exhibition includes 19 paintings primarily painted from life and memory. Price paints "en pliene aire" in an effort to capture the ambience of light and color in the landscape. His stated goal is to paint the poetry or mood of nature through the relationship of color notes as they are observed by the artist.

Price has studied art in Carnegie Hall, New York City, and with Russian master Sergei Bongart. Price graduated from McMurry College with a bachelor of art degree. While a student at McMurry, he was awarded a scholarship by the New York Watercolor Society. He was a recipient of a first place award for oil painting in nationwide competition at the ASI National Arts Competition.

In addition, he is a past recipient of the Grumbacher Award for outstanding art and has won numerous other regional Best of Show and first place awards in various competitions.

■ Institute hosts show

ODESSA — "Aspects of British Painting: 1550-1800," from the collection of the Sarah Campbell Blaffer Foundation of Houston, will be exhibited at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 E. University, until Feb. 2.

This exhibition includes portraits in the "grand manner," conversation pieces, genre paintings, landscapes, Marian paintings, carvings, illustrations, maps and sealed Elizabethan documents.

Paintings by such British masters as Sir Joshua Reynolds, Thomas Gainsborough, H.M.W. Turner, George Stubbs, Benjamin West and Sir Peter Lely are included in the exhibition.

Covering the broad range of types of british painting, the exhibition is a reflection of British life from the period before Henry VIII's rule to the first quarter of the 19th century. A small alabaster religious carving dates back to the 15th century.

A posthumous portrait of Henry VIII with his daughter, Mary Tudor, also depicts his favorite jester, Will Sommers. Paintings of nobility, wealthy merchants and military personages also reflect changes in the British class structure during this period.

For information call the Institute, 368-7222. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. No admission is charged.

■ Company hosts show

The Midland Community Relations Team of Southwestern Bell Telephone Company will host its 3rd Annual Arts & Crafts Show at the Midland County Exhibit Building today from noon to 6:00 p.m.

Admission is $1 with children under 12 being admitted free.

Weather permitting, a carnival will be on the premises for kids entertainment. Proceeds raised by this event will fund other projects for the team such as the Childrens Miracle Network and the Caring Cubs Express project with the Midland Police Department.

■ Patti to perform

SAN ANTONIO — One of America's best-known contemporary gospel recording artists, Sandi Patti, will perform in concert at Sea World of Texas in San Antonio on Saturday. All Sea World concerts are included in the regular price of admission to the park, however seating is limited and offered on a first-come first serve basis.

The concert will include works by Rachmaninoff, Dvorak and Mozart.

A special pre-concert lecture will be given by Robert Hunt, Chorale director and assistant conductor of the symphony, 30 minutes prior to the performance in commemoration of the 200th anniversary of Mozart.

This season, the quartet will perform five chamber music concert pairs in Midland and Odessa. The Midland performance was Saturday.

In addition, the Thouvenel has a group called "The Friends" which support and assist the quartet. Those interested in joining the group and participating in Thouvenel activities may call the symphony office, 563-0921.

"You've got to really live. You've got to have a good adventure, and you've got to live the adventure."

Clemmer's life bears witness to following that concept along with others he learned growing up first in Snyder and then in Midland.

"I've never ever done anything of any significance in my life when I was not at risk," said Clemmer. "There's a certain amount of fear with every risk and a certain amount of risk with everything that you do.

"You just learn that you can operate at peak efficiency with a certain amount of manageable fear attached. It becomes like an old friend. The real thing you have to fear is not doing what you want to do because of fear."

A cum laude English graduate of Dartmouth College who pursued graduate studies in drama and English at Oxford University in England, Clemmer has taught English, worked as a television news producer and reporter and anchored the nationally-syndicated television show "P.M. Magazine" in Detroit.

Multiplicity is a word which appeals to Clemmer, who spent his high school years involved in activities at Midland's St. Luke's United Methodist Church as well as athletics, including football, and drama at Lee High School. At Lee Clemmer was also president of the student council, and was voted class president and Class Favorite in 1967, his senior year.

A LIBRAN WHO WAS born on Sept. 27, Clemmer graduated in the top five in his high school class. He credits Lee High School's drama coach, Horace Griffin, with expanding his creative horizon.

"He really taught me I don't have to be one thing," said Clemmer, who referred to the importance of learning balance in life while still engaging in numerous activities. "Don't get set into one way of thinking or living. Try to live as many aspects of interest or potential as you can."

His teaching position at Detroit's Country Day School during his first years out of college allowed him to do just that.

"I loved the idea of teaching and it wound up being a wonderful thing. I taught English, coached football and lacrosse, directed drama at the school and counseled with students and did community theater on the side for myself. It was a great opportunity to see how many different aspects of life I wanted to pursue," Clemmer said, adding that "teaching was a laboratory for learning. I had to learn everyday."

Although Clemmer's career opportunities have kept him out of Texas, he has a "real fierce pride about Texas in general and Midland, too.

"It's one of the last places in the country where being from there matters. It carries a definition, something with it other than just a geographical location. When people ask my nationality, I say, 'Texan.'

"TEXAS HAS THE innocent-till-proven-guilty kind of philosophy that you don't fine elsewhere in the country."

He feels fortunate to have grown up in West Texas where he said the towns have a "sense of community.

"There is a sense of adventure you get from that land and from those people, I don't think you get from every other people. And there's no question the social atmosphere is much more open.

"Even at the tail-end of this awful oil and economic crisis Texas has faced there's a can-do attitude. If you work at it hard enough, you can do almost anything you want to. It makes you believe you can make things happen in your life. You can make dreams come true."

Consistently throughout his career, Clemmer has left secure positions for the unknown.

"I like the fact that I've had several careers," said Clemmer. "Every job I've had has taught me more, has been a challenge and another arena for growth."

Perhaps the career switch which required the greatest risk was the move to the West Coast.

"I always wanted to make movies. A friend of mine and I decided we would get serious about it," Clemmer said. "A hell of a lot of life is about the willingness to be at risk. I had a very stable job in a stable place making good money in a good market. I was afraid to drop everything I had and move 3,000 miles away and start over in another business. I learned not to be intimidated by fear."

THUS, FOUR AND a half years ago Longbow Productions was born. Working as a producer provides Clemmer with a multiplicity of roles.

"The concept of the producer is very similar to the concept of the general manager of a professional football team. You coordinate pretty much everything that goes on.

"You find the original concept of the movie, put on your salesman hat and go and sell that to a studio. If it's for a feature or a network or if it's for television, then you put on your creative hat and find the right writer to put together the script, and you help supervise that writing. Sometimes you go through four, five, up to 10 drafts before you ever see the camera.

"Then you have to put back on your salesman hat, go and convince them we have something worth putting the money together and go out and shoot.

"If they give you what's called the 'green light' for production, then you have to go and find the right director who really understands and is the best creative choice for the material, and then with the director go through the casting process, auditioning and making choices about the crucial roles.

"Now, put on a businessman's hat and start hiring the production team which can be dozens or even hundreds of people. During the production, you're the trouble shooter, spy, cheerleader and manager of all the workers.

"IF THERE ARE creative problems, you are working on those as well. Then, afterwards you supervise the editing, which can be as creative as the shooting process. A huge portion of the success of the film is in the post production stage as well.

'You just learn that you can operate at peak efficiency with a certain amount of manageable fear attached. It becomes like an old friend. The real thing you have to fear is not doing what you want to do because of fear.'

— Ronnie D. Clemmer

"Then you come back to your business hat and become a marketing consultant for the film," Clemmer said, adding that the foregoing process usually takes 18 months to two and a half years.

Clemmer attributes the success they have experienced so far to their commitment to quality.

Other movies Longbow Productions has underway include "A League of Their Own," a comedy for Columbia Pictures covering the exploits of two sisters who join an all-girls' professional baseball team in the early 1940s, starring Genna Davis, Tom Hanks and Madonna; and a Longbow/Mirage Enterprises co-production for HBO Pictures "Miss Sherri," which tells the story of Sherri Chessen Finkbine and stars Sissy Spacek.

"We are very passionate about the stories that we pitch. A lot of people in this business, like any business, do it just because of the paycheck or they do it just because it's what their mom or dad did.

"WHEN A PERSON really cares about what they are doing the quality of what they are doing is so much greater. 'Zen and The Art of Motorcycle Maintenance' concept of quality that my partner Bill Pace and I really buy into is something he learned in the Midwest and I learned in the Southwest from family and community — what you do represents the best you can do whatever you are doing. I have a real strong belief that it matters much less what it is you do than how you do it and the joy and the passion and the intensity that you bring to the doing."

Clemmer feels a strong responsibility to the viewers.

"They are giving you their time and energy and money," Clemmer said. "In a movie or conversation or relationship you want to feel your time and energy are being rewarded and you are getting something back for what you put in. You want to feel like the people on the other side of it cared a lot about what they were doing."

Cheatham to perform Tuesday

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

The West Texas Jazz Society brings Adolphus "Doc" Cheatham to Midland for an 8 p.m. cabaret-style performance at the Midland Petroleum Club Tuesday.

Cheatham, who has played with, among numerous others, Jelly Roll Morton, Tiny Parham, Teddy Hill, Fletcher Henderson, Benny Carter, Edgar Hayes, the Countsmen and at Eddie Condon's Jazz Club, New York City, is a member of the New York Jazz Repertory Company.

Now in his 80s, he plays festivals in Nice, France, Russia and New York.

Cheatham told the annual convention of the International Association of Jazz Record Collectors at the Cleveland Airport Mariott that he never drank, but still enjoys a cigar after a good meal.

"I went into the bank the other day and the teller said, 'You know you're going to ruin your health smoking?' I said, 'Listen, I'm 85 years old, and I can do what I want to do.' My grandmother grew tobacco and she rolled her own cigars. She smoked pipes. She dipped snuff. She chewed tobacco. And she died at 104."

Born June 13, 1905, in Nashville, Tenn., Cheatham recalls when he began playing a horn.

Cheatham

"A MR. MEREDITH, dean at Phillips Chapel, wanted to organize the BFS Band — Bright Future Stars — to compete with one such band in Franklin, Tenn.,' said Cheatham. "At the meeting where second hand instruments were donated by neighbors I selected the drums at the church. Each kid took what he wanted to play. A Mr. N.C. Davis came in as our teacher. He took the drums away from me and gave me a cornet. I was playing it in a week's time and by ear."

Cheatham later became interested in the saxophone and his father, a barber who wanted to be a doctor, bought him a soprano saxophone.

"I was playing it in a few days," he said.

The BFS Band had a short but successful life.

"We had a very good band playing at county fairs," Cheatham said. "The band lasted a year and broke up in a free-for-all fight with Mr. Meredith because he did not want the band to play jazz."

Cheatham continued to play, performing at Nashville dances as well as circuses and carnivals that came into Tennessee. When he became interested in playing shows, he played in the pit at the Bijou Theatre.

"There I sat and played with every show and blues singer on the TOBA circuit," Cheatham said. "I could not read, and I was not interested in learning to read music at that time."

CHARLIE JOHNSON CHANGED Cheatham's attitude about reading music.

"I went to Atlantic City during school vacation in 1924, and I was hired to play saxophone at the Paradise Club with Charlie Johnson's band. He fired me right away as I couldn't read the show music. Then I got busy with help learning to read and found it lots of fun."

Louis Armstrong provided the incentive for the 21-year-old Cheatham to play trumpet. The year was 1926, and the place was Chicago, and Cheatham was hearing jazz for the first time.

"After hearing him (Armstrong), I went to hear King Oliver, Freddie Kepperd and other trumpet players from New Orleans. I found out how pretty the trumpet can be played, so out went the saxophone."

Around the same time, Cheatham played the cornet with pianist Lil Hardin Armstrong, Louis Armstrong's wife, at the jobs she had in Chicago.

In the talk Cheatham gave to the International Association of Jazz Record Collectors in Cleveland, he said it was gangster Al Capone who brought the New Orleans musicians to play at his clubs in Chicago. Since Cheatham was fron Nashville, he said he had to get Capone's permission to play with the New Orleans bands.

Of Armstrong when he returned to Chicago from New York, Cheatham said, "He was the biggest thing I have ever seen in my life. They had parades with loudspeakers playing his Hot Five records. You could get them in the grocery store ... You couldn't get standing room in that theater anytime."

CHEATHAM RECALLS THE night Armstrong walked into the Dreamland where he was playing and wanted Cheatham to take his place. He also remembers the audience's reaction to not having Armstrong there.

"He said, 'I'm Louis.' I said, 'I know who you are.' He said, 'I'm going to take off Thursday, and I'd like for you to take my place.' I said, 'You can't be talkin' to me.'

"So I rehearsed and I played. I couldn't play like Louis, but I played it. And that night, people were standing all outside the theater trying to get in. That place was packed to hear Louis Armstrong.

"The band hit the big introduction, and I stood up, and the spotlight hit me right in the face, and the people began to scream. You couldn't hear one note I played because they were screaming ... I said to myself, 'Boy, this is the worst thing that ever happened to me in my life!' "

Cheatham received $85 for the gig. A few months later he made his first record backing blues singer Ma Rainey.

He left Chicago in 1927 and joined Bobby Lee's Cotton Pickers and then Wilbur deParis' group in Philadelphia. He then went to New York and played with Chick Webb before spending three years in Europe with Sam Wooding and an additional three years playing with McKinney's Cotton Pickers. In 1931, he joined the Cab Calloway band at the Cotton Club, which according to Cheatham, was run by the Dutch Schultz mob.

HEALTH PROBLEMS interrupted Cheatham's career.

"My health broke down, and I had to stop playing for a while and worked in the post office and also taught trumpet lessons. After two years of rest and getting myself together, I returned to play again."

At that time, Chetham played with Eddie Heywood at Cafe Society and recorded with Billie Holliday.

"I then realized my solo playing was not good," Cheatham said. "I hated everything I played. Later, I joined Teddy Wilson's big band. I met Carl George and Shorty Baker. I felt like throwing my horn away, but these men encouraged me to continue, and I did as I knew someday I would get myself together."

Cheatham spent the 1950s playing with Latin bands led by Perez Prado and Machito. He spent time in the 1960s playing with Benny Goodman's Orchestra.

"You know about Benny? He fired a man in that band every day. Our bass player, Al Hall, had worked with Artie Shaw — Goodman's longtime clarinet rival. We were rehearsing one day and Benny stopped the band and said, 'Al, you're not playing the right notes on the bridge.' And Al said, 'Well, Benny, I'm playing the same thing I played with Artie Shaw.' He was fired immediately."

WHEN HE PLAYED with Goodman, Cheatham said he again had some trouble with his solos. He discovered his problem.

"I then realized I had too many styles to play: Latin, New Orleans Jazz and New York Jazz. Then I joined Ricardo Rey as a soloist.

In addition to the "Cabaret Evening" performance, Cheatham will conduct a jazz clinic at 9:30 a.m. Wednesday at Lee High School. Admission will be charged for non-members to the "Cabaret Evening." The jazz clinic is free.

Church sponsors holiday concerts

Two Thanksgiving concerts are being presented by the Chancel Choir of First United Methodist Church, Midland, and the Sanctuary Choir of First United Methodist Church, Odessa.

The first concert will be held today at 7 p.m. at First UMC, 415 N. Lee St., Odessa. The second performance is set for 4 p.m. Nov. 24. at First UMC, Main Street at Ohio Avenue, Midland.

Included in the program will be two Thanksgiving oriented choral works. These include "O Sing Unto the Lord" by George Frederic Handel and a contemporary setting of the "Te Deum" by John Rutter. Also on the program will be the anthem by Canadian composer Healey Willan entitled "Sing to the Lord of the Harvest" and Rutter's setting of the familiar hymn, "Now Thank We All Our God."

The Handel composition is one of a group of 12 anthems which Handel wrote between 1717 and 1720 for an English nobelman James of Chandos. It is based on Psalm 96 and features soprano and tenor soloists. The "Te Deum" is one of the most ancient and inspiring of Christian liturgical texts, probably originating in the early fourth century. Rutter is a contemporary English composer.

In addition to the music, each concert will feature a Thanksgiving homily by the host pastor. The Rev. Charles Graff will deliver the message in Odessa and the Rev. Russell Parchman will speak in Midland.

The Midland concert will be a benefit for Area Methodist Outreach Services. All concert-goers are reqiested to bring a can of soup to help stock the AMOS food shelves.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Display your creative talents to best advantage and no one will be able to top you! A beneficial new partnership will both perk up your social life and increase your financial resources in the new year. An important love relationship is strengthened by events of next April. Leave any money you have invested where it is. A summertime deal that sounds too good to be true should be avoided. Seek professional advice if in a quandary next fall.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Love is in the air when you visit a friend today. Put more energy into pleasurable pursuits. Be careful not to forget a birthday or anniversary. Financial trends shift in your favor.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Romance improves when you and mate finally find time to be alone. Get together with friends another day. Check costs before committing yourself to a night on the town. Pay bills promptly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A misunderstanding could cast a cloud over your day. Move quickly to set things straight. Break the ice with a newcomer and romance could follow. Dress your best if going out this evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A favorite companion could show up on someone else's arm. Act unconcerned and eventually this loved one will return to your side. Do whatever you can to reduce domestic tensions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Steer clear of activities that you find tiresome or needlessly complex. You should be socializing now, reaching out to people who share your intellectual interests.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Social interaction could lead to a golden business opportunity today. While cultivating new friends, you learn of interesting developments related to your work. Meditate on what to do next.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A good day to lighten your load both financially and physically. Devote more energy to pleasing your offspring. New rapport is possible. Prime time comes tonight when you are a big hit socially.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Clear up a misunderstanding with your parents or mate. You have what it takes to reach the top on your own but would be foolish to reject help from those who love you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A chance remark could set off fireworks today. Keep your tongue in check — and your emotions, too. A love relationship settles into a happier, more positive rhythm this evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your sense of humor can turn a basically incompatible set of characters into a congenial group. Making a romantic declaration now could prove embarrassing. Wait a while longer.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are upset about something that is being done by a loved one. Speak from the heart. Romance heats up. A long-distance journey will be expensive but satisfying. Curb everyday spending.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Keep your ideas under wraps until it is time to put them into practice. Travel proves tiring. Rearrange your schedule so that you can get more rest. Pursue a favorite hobby.

Opening lead: King of ◇ Find us a player who always makes the best opening lead, and we'll show you the next world champion. However, there are hands where declarer will be able to prevail no matter what the opening salvo.

When South did not preempt but came into a strong auction at the three-level, North knew that his partner had a long, weak spade suit and a smattering of values outside. Since there was no guarantee that either the ace of spades or king of hearts would furnish a defensive trick, North wisely elected to compete with four spades rather than double.

This hand is from a pair event, and four spades was a popular contract. At those tables where the ace of hearts was led, the hand was soon over. Declarer was able to discard a minor-suit loser on the king of hearts and so lose only a trump, a heart and one trick in the minors.

A club lead gave only a moment's concern. Declarer won and led the jack of hearts. Once West rose with the ace and cashed a club, declarer was able to take a diamond discard on the king of hearts and land 10 tricks.

Our choice of opening lead, and the most troublesome for declarer, is the king of diamonds. Now declarer needs some skill laced with a bit of luck to land the game. The first step is to hold up the ace of diamonds. Best defense is for West to shift to the queen of clubs.

Declarer must win the ace and can no longer try to use the king of hearts for a discard—it will come too late. Instead, declarer must hope that diamonds are 3-3. A diamond to the ace and a diamond ruff sets up two long cards in the suit. Declarer enters dummy with the ace of trumps and leads a good diamond, discarding a rounded-suit loser as East ruffs with the master trump.

NIGHTLIFE IN PLEASURE

By Elizabeth Edwin
Lifestyle Editor

When the sun goes down and the theme parks close, its time to cross the bridge to the hottest night spot around. Pleasure Island in Walt Disney World's Resort sizzles with spectacular nighttime entertainment for adults.

Pleasure Island's 1989 debut marked Walt Disney World's first move into nighttime adult entertainment. Covering six acres, the nightclub theme park comes alive each evening for the 18-and-over crowd with live music, dance, comedy, food and more at a variety of nightclubs, restaurants, shops and boutiques. There is even a 10-screen AMC theater complex and a New Year's Eve celebration every night.

The nightclubs range from contemporary music at Mannequins Dance Palace (21-and-over only) where the decor is costumed mannequins everywhere and guests dance on a rotating dance floor to the live classic rock sounds of the '60s to the '90s at the three level XZFR Rock & Roll Beach Club. Neon Armadillo Music Saloon hosts live bands who play the best in country to music while visitors to the Cage (21-and-over only) dance to the latest Top 40 music videos.

If dancing is not your gig, or your feet are simply too tired from roaming the theme parks all day, duck into Adventurers Club where there are talking masks, fortune tellers and "eccentric travelers" telling outrageous tales. Some say anything

So you want to be a star ... or at least see one? Then the best place in the "World" (Disney World, that is) to be is Disney-MGM Studios at Walt Disney World Resort in Lake Buena Vista, Fla., where each day they are "shooting" stars in a variety of television shows and movies.

In fact, such shows as "Wheel of Fortune," and "Live with Regis and Kathie Lee" recently were filmed on the Studios' grounds.

To add to the excitement, Walt Disney World is celebrating its 20th anniversary with a 15-month surprise party that began Oct. 1 and will last through 1992, and numerous stars are participating in the celebration.

In fact, leading the party is Roger Rabbit. He is popping up everywhere in

The wedding was held at Truro Episcopal Church in Fairfax, Va., and was followed by a wedding brunch at Oakspring Farm, home of the bride's parents.

According to Vera, the fall foliage was beautiful and the weather perfect for the wedding reception, which spilled from the house outdoors into a large tent with a band and dance floor.

The newlyweds departed the following week for Manila, the Philippines, where the groom is assigned as a foreign service officer with the State Department.

By Bob Porter

DALLAS (AP) — The way Nancy Passell tells it, if she had not married the man who is her husband she might never have played bridge anywhere but at home with her friends.

That means she never would have flown off to Yokohama, Japan, recently and returned with a prized golden medallion, shining proof that she had won the honor of all honors for female bridge players, the Venice Cup, sponsored by the World Bridge Federation.

"It's just like winning an Olympic gold medal," says Mrs. Passell, 41, holding the highly coveted medal aloft. "You get up there (on the stage) and they put that medal around your neck and play your national anthem with your flag also flying.

"It's the crown jewel of bridge," she continued. "You are just proud. You are representing the United States. It is something you work for and want. It's as far as you can go (in bridge)."

A native of Corydon, Ind., Mrs. Passell began her journey to the Venice Cup — capping a 12-day marathon of championship bridge playing with the five other members of the U.S. team in this year's international event — more than a decade ago.

SHE BEGAN playing bridge with a group of fellow students while attending Indiana University. After college, however, her friends moved away while she stayed in Indianapolis to teach school.

"I was hooked on bridge but didn't have anyone to play with after my friends moved off," she recalls. "Someone told me about a place they played duplicate bridge every night. I went there to see if I could find some other bridge players."

That's where she first saw her husband, Mike Passell, a professional bridge player. He had been hired to play in the tournament.

"I went over to kibitz in one of the big matches, and there he was," she says. "He's been a big celebrity in the bridge world for a long time. I didn't meet him then, but I watched him ... not knowing that some day I would be married to him."

The two eventually met, and in her words, "started seeing each other." That prompted her to move to Dallas, Mike's home, where they got married six months later. They are the parents of a 9-year-old daughter, who attends school in Plano.

"I owe a lot of this to Mike," Mrs. Passell says, indicating the gold medallion once again. "He's the genius. He's been my teacher. When you've got someone at home who can give you the answers to your questions, that's very nice."

But, Mike Passell did not accompany his wife to Japan to help in her quest to win the prized Venice Cup. She did that strictly on her own — accompanied, of course, by her teammates whose homes range from as far away as San Francisco and New York City to Shreveport, La.

"It's just like winning an Olympic gold medal. You get up there (on the stage) and they put that medal around your neck and play your national anthem with your flag also flying. It's the crown jewel of bridge. You are just proud. You are representing the United States. It is something you work for and want. It's as far as you can go (in bridge).'

— Nancy Passell
bridge champion

THE SIX women began working toward the Venice Cup more than a year ago, Mrs. Passell explains. The process involves placing either first or second in three North American championships spotted through the year, then placing similarly in team trial events.

As to how teams are formed, Mrs. Passell says, "There is sort of a bridge world. You meet each other when you play in these tournaments. The same people go to these tournaments in and out. You find people you like to play with, and are compatible with, and you form a team you think can win."

The international competition is in a different country every two years. Japan was a natural site for this year's competition.

"Bridge is a big thing in Japan," Mrs. Passell said. "They had the big matches on satellite TV. We were treated like royalty, and TV was there covering us all the time."

Americans have dominated the championships in recent years, she says, having captured the Venice Cup the last three competitions.

"That means you have to beat American teams who have won in the past in order to get there," Mrs. Passell says, indicating the difficulty of reaching that level.

Bridge isn't, however, an all-consuming passion for Mrs. Passell.

"Bridge for me is just fun," she explains. "I love games and got hooked on it. It is a dream come true to have this happen to me.

"I'M KIND OF known as a seat-of-the-pants player," she continues, after a thoughtful pause. "I'm not that great technically at all. I kind of have a nose, or an intuitive type of thing, where some people can study and be real technical. I just like to have fun ... and maybe, be a little wild."

AstroWorld dresses up for holidays

Staff Report

HOUSTON — AstroWorld, the Houston-based Six Flags theme park, will be spreading cheer during its 21-day holiday festival. Complete with snow for sledding, ice-skating, carrage rides, holiday shows and of course, a spectacular display of Chirstmas lights, Holiday in the Park is truly a delight for the whole family. The festival begins Nov. 29 and the park is open Fridays, Saturday and Sundays through Dec. 15, then daily Dec. 16 through 31, except for Christmas Eve and Christmas Day.

Lights of every size and shape will adorn AstroWorld. Some of the more elaborate displays include a giant lit wreath which welcomes guests visiting the park with a message of "Peace on Earth." There's also a giant Christmas tree, measuring 140-feet in length, which runs down the side of the Skyscreamer and a 50-foot luminous star sitting atop the Astroneedle. Delicate twinkling angel light forms line the entry to the park and trees everywhere are dressed up in true holiday form.

For guests who have never experienced a snowfall, AstroWorld has even managed to control the holiday weather. Imagine 1.3 million pounds of the slippery stuff fresh on the ground for sledding. Another cool treat is the ice-skating rink where guests can take to the ice.

Most of the park's rides will be silent (only the Joustabout, 610 Limited, Antique Taxis, AstroWay, Astroneedle, Carousel and Enchanted Kingdom will be open) so guests can hear the holiday sounds through the park.

The park has produced five different holiday shows with something for everyone. Bugs Bunny® and his Looney Tune friends will be having a good time in the "Merrie Holiday Revue." Families wanting to share a traditional holiday experience should see "Jolly Holiday," which features a cast of singers and dancers performing holiday favorites like "Joy to the World" and "White Christmas." New for 1991 will be "Snow Flyers," an incredible show featuring acrobatic ski jumping on a show-covered ramp. What would the holidays be without the infamous grump, "Scrooge" and the "Twelve Days of Christmas?" Both of these shows are featured in AstroWorld's entertainment lineup.

The park has left no stone unturned in its preparation for the holiday festival. Even the jolly ol' man from the North Pole will be on hand to wish everyone the most joyous of holidays. After kids have visited with Santa, they can make Christmas ornaments and decorated snow flakes in Kris Kringle's Crafts.

The opening night of Holiday in the Park will be highlighted by a Christmas concert and special fireworks show. The Houston Children's Chorus will perform favorite holiday tunes at the Astroneedle stage beginning at 8 p.m. followed by fireworks show.

Holiday in the Park hours are 6 p.m.-midnight Fridays, 3-11 p.m. Saturdays, and 3-9 p.m. Sundays from Nov. 29-Dec. 15. The park is then open daily from Dec. 16-31 except for Christmas Eve and Christmas Day. The park is open from 5-11 p.m. Mondays through Fridays, 3-11 p.m. Saturdays, and 3-9 p.m. Sundays. New Year's Eve, the park will be open from 5 p.m.-midnight.

Tickets are $7.95 plus tax for all guests. AstroWorld is located off Loop 610 at the Fannin exit. For more information, call (713) 799-1234.

Forced bulbs brighten holidays

By Deborah A. Benge

What can be fun to do, interesting to watch and make your home more festive? Forcing bulbs for indoor blooms.

Benge

The meaning of forcing bulbs is to trick them by mimicking the conditions they would naturally go through outdoors, indoors, for earlier indoor blooms. By imitating the dark period, cold period and blooming conditions that bulbs get outside, you can get the same great looking blooms earlier indoors.

All bulbs can be forced, but different bulbs have different requirement to force them to bloom. Some bulbs need a long cold period of 15 weeks at about 40 degrees F., like tulips, hyacinth and crocus. Others need little or no cold peiod for forcing, like paperwhite narcissus and Dutch amaryllis.

Tulips, daffodils, crocuses and hyacinths lend themselves to forcing beautifully, but require more time and usually refrigerator space. They are one of those "prior planning" projects, something this writer is obviously lacking in. Since this information won't do you much good this year, save the article and mark your '92 calendar for late August and early September to have gorgeous pots of red tulips December of 1992.

■ Select large firm bulbs as early as is available.

■ Plant as many bulbs of a kind as you can in a container with ½-inch between each bulb.

■ Potting mix can be three parts peat, one part vermiculite and one part perlite with a tablespoon of a complete fertilizer like 10-10-10.

■ Place in a refrigerator at 40 degrees F. for about 12 to 15 weeks.

■ When roots protrude from drain hole or shoots have appeared move the pots out and place them in a bright, warm location to encourage growth and buds. When the bulbs bloom try to locate the pots in a cooler location to prolong bloom time.

Just in case I'm not the only procrastinator out there, there is a bulb that doesn't need a cold spell, or at least not much of one, paperwhite narcissus. This bulb can be planted for blooms in about five to six weeks. Blooms for Christmas time need to be planted in mid-November.

For these blooms, use the following guidelines:

■ Place two to three inches of pebbles on the bottom of the container and sprinkle a pinch of horticultural grade charcoal over pebbles.

■ Place the bulbs on top of the gravel as close together as possible but with ½-inch space between each bulb and container wall. Place bulb with pointed end up.

■ Add more pebbles so the bulbs won't fall over when they get top heavy with foliage and blooms. Add water until it reaches the bottom of the bulb.

■ Place containers in a cool, dark area for about two weeks, if sprouts and roots have developed, move to a cool, but bright location for the rest of the show. Keep water just touching the bottom of the bulbs and rotate pot daily to prevent leaning.

The Dutch amaryllis (Hippeastrum) is hard to beat for forcing Christmas time blooms. And unlike the spring flowering bulbs mentioned above, the amaryllis can be brought back into blooming each year. Here's how:

■ Choose the largest bulb you can find, one about the size of a grapefruit. This will not only give you big flowers but may result in mutiple flower stalks.

■ Plant your amaryllis in a pot just two to four inches larger than the diameter of the bulb. Use a potting mix three parts peat, one part vermiculite and one part perlite. Again you can add a tablespoon of a complete fertilizer like 10-10-10. Plant so that one-half to one-third of the bulb is exposed and the tip of the bulb is above the rim.

■ Water well, place in a warm, bright location. Flowers will appear in about four to six weeks. When the flowers fade cut them off and after all have faded cut the stalk off where it emerges from the bulb.

■ Continue to water and fertilize the leaves through the summer in a bright window. Stop watering in the fall to induce dormancy, store in a dark 50 to 60 degree F. location for about eight weeks. When new growth begins replace the top inch of soil and repeat step three.

Take steps now for Christmas and New Year blooms, by forcing paperwhite narcissus and Dutch amaryllis.

Early snow brings update to Ski Apache's opening day

Staff Report

RUIDOSO, N.M. — Ski Apache is more than looking for a repeat of last year's fine ski season, thanks in large to the early snow fall that dumped 17 inches on the slopes. The opening ski day has been updated.

Opening Nov. 22 will be the lower mountain areas of Smokey Bear, Snow Park, the Lower Deep Freeze, both sides of Capitan, and Easy Street and East Easy Street. The Teaching School also will be open. The areas open may be expanded if the weather obliges with more snow.

The lift capacity for Ski Apache — when in full operation — is capable of handling 15,350 skiers per hour, the largest lift capacity in the state. Non-skiers are encouraged to use the Gondola Lift to the Gazebo of the Lookout in Apache Bowl and enjoy the panoramic 200 mile view.

Oct. 30 and 31 brought the earliest snowfall of 12 inches since records for Ruidoso have been kept and, though Ski Apache coutinues to make snow nightly, it took the pressure off the snow making process, holding promise of a great season. Traditionally, November is the iffiest month of the winter for snowfall, except for the 26th which is the one date that receives the most snow.

For lift rates, call 1-800-243-2255. For snow report information, call 1-505-257-9001.

It takes a certain kind of love to last

By Ruthe Stein
N.Y. Times News Service

It may seem amazing anyone could stay on the same job for more than 30 years or be married to the same person for 50 years or go to the office every day at age 91.

But what's really amazing about these people — as well as an entertainer in the same show for 14 years and two women who have been buddies since third grade — is that they have lost none of their enthusiasm over the years.

The secret: constant infusions of energy.

"The greatest problem for a relationship is that it easily becomes taken for granted," said David Geisinger, co-author with Lonnie Barbach of "Going the Distance: Secrets to Lifelong Love."

"You have to keep putting energy into it — what we call 'endless courtship' — if you expect to get anything out of it."

You have to do the same with a job or a friendship or with life. The rewards are plentiful, as these examples show:

M&M — that's how Margaret McGill and Michelle Cummings were known all through school. They were best friends in the third grade and, at 26, are still best friends. Both grew up in a family of boys and have found in each other the sister they secretly wanted.

Cummings now lives in Sacramento — she's a counselor for the Department of Corrections — but comes back to Albany, Calif., often to visit. They hang out at their old haunts, including Walker's Pie Shop where McGill has been a waitress since high school, and talk about old times.

COMMON INTERESTS brought them together. They're both athletic and were the first girls to be allowed to play in the Albany Little League in 1975. They also have the same sense of humor.

"In class, we could just look at each other and start laughing," Cummings said. "It was like we had our own language."

McGill recalled a tense time before starting high school. "We were told that we would have to stop being friends because I was white, and Michelle was black."

But the other students chose not to make an issue of the race difference. She believes this was because they both had older brothers at school. "Nobody dared say anything racist because they would have had to deal with them."

The two often wound up going out with boys who were good friends. That meant they got to double date and giggle about it afterward.

They still confide in each other about men. When McGill was considering postponing her wedding, which she eventually did, the first person she talked to was her old friend.

"I listened closely and got her to talk about her feelings, but I didn't tell her what to do," Cummings said.

Making it past 90 isn't a big deal anymore — unless you happen to be triplets. When Vinal Mauss, Vilda Hughes and Velma Torp celebrated their 91st birthday a few weeks ago, it was a media event.

"There were more TV and newspaper reporters at our party than family," said Mauss, who traveled from his home in Walnut Creek, Calif., to Midvale, Utah, where his sisters live, for the bash.

The Mauss triplets have outlived their spouses and most of their friends and are just two years short of making it into "The Guinness Book of World Records."

MAUSS ATTRIBUTES their longevity to a positive attitude.

"I don't think any of us has ever had a negative thought about life itself. We don't get real hysterical about things. The best attitude is acceptance."

Mauss said they were all "blessed" with sound bodies, even though they weighed less than a pound and a half each at birth. And they have done everything within their power to maintain those bodies. They don't drink or smoke.

"I tried alcohol once, and it made me sick," said Mauss, who still goes to work in a newspaper distributor's office every day.

Unlike her brother and sister, Vilda Hughes will drink a cup of coffee occasionally. "I don't think it can hurt me."

She and her sister both have to use walkers now. "But I take care of my own apartment. I can cook for myself.

"I'm having a good time even if I can't do everything I used to. I'm crazy about sports. I watch all the games. I'm optimistic, boy. I'm going to live to be 100. I think all three of us will make it to 100."

Val Diamond was driving to work when she heard a radio interview with an actress whom the BBC claimed held the record for performing in the same show: 12 years.

Diamond happened to be on her way to "Beach Blanket Babylon," which she's starred in for 14 years.

It made her think she's the one who has set some sort of record "though I've never checked it out. I'm not really doing it for a record," she said.

THAT ANYONE could do eight shows a week — nine during the holidays — for that long certainly qualifies as amazing. "Beach Blanket" requires a lot of energy from its cast. You can't just walk through it.

Diamond, 40, plays a French hooker, a Jewish mother, a Japanese maid and an Italian pizza in the current production. She's always had one ballad and still manages real tears while singing it.

Sometimes, when Diamond is getting ready for work, she thinks about how nice it would be to stay put in her cozy home. As soon as she gets on stage, however, something instinctively clicks on, she says.

She also gets energy from the audiences. "Their faces are incredible, like those of expectant children on Christmas morning. They want to have fun, so you share the fun with them."

Another secret of her long run: contentment.

"I have never been the type to say, 'At this age, I want to win an Oscar.' I believe in just living a good life and making people happy along the way. What happens career-wise just sort of happens. To me, that is not what life is about."

Bob Fesler has taught history and economics at San Francisco's Lincoln High School for 32 years, but doesn't feel in a rut because the students keep changing. His classes are now filled with new immigrants.

"I try to find references that apply to their cultures or backgrounds or families," he said. "I have homework to do, too. I spend a couple of hours a day preparing."

Fesler, 62, now earns top scale: $47,000 a year. And, he says, he gets summers and lots of holidays off.

MORE THAN THIS, he clearly relishes his work and the chance to influence young people. Fesler wants to make good citizens of them. After the fire in the Oakland hills, he lectured on the obligations and responsibilities of businesses.

During the late '60s and early '70s, the real world intruded in ways that made teaching a real challenge.

"All that hippie stuff was going on. I can remember ducking behind a pillar in the cafeteria. A chair was flying from one end and the TAC squad was coming in the other end."

But he didn't consider bailing out then. Nor is he considering it now that he is on the brink of being able to collect retirement benefits.

"If I inherited a million dollars, I could think of a few things I would rather do," he acknowledged with a smile. "There are very few people who truly have a calling and can't imagine themselves doing anything else. This job is not all-encompassing. But it is something I mostly enjoy doing most of the time."

Alyce and Mark Schmid can hardly believe they've been married 50 years. It seems like yesterday that a mutual friend introduced them at the 1939 Golden Gate International Exposition at Treasure Island.

"We both admired it and kept going back, so she decided we really ought to get together," Alyce Schmid, 73, recalled.

THEIR INTERESTS have continued to dovetail over the years. Before they sold their house and moved to an apartment in San Francisco, they would garden for hours, side by side. They are great walkers, although they can't go the distances they once did together.

EC nations agree on maternity leave

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — European Community nations agreed to guarantee women 14 weeks maternity leave at wages at least equal to the sick pay offered in their countries.

The compromise, reached by EC social affairs ministers, was designed to move the trade bloc toward common standards before it forms a single market at the end of next year.

But EC Social Affairs Commissioner Vasso Papandreou complained the agreement fell far short of the EC executive body's original proposal to guarantee women 14 weeks leave at full pay.

"It's not up to the standards I would like it to be," Papandreou told reporters, saying it's wrong to equate pregnancy with sickness.

The accord, to take effect Jan. 1, 1993, will mainly benefit women in Britain, Ireland and Portugal. The other nine EC nations already guarantee at least 14 weeks pregnancy leave at wages higher than sick pay, some at full pay.

The accord also requires employers to provide safe working conditions for pregnant women and forbids companies from firing workers because of pregnancy.

The European Parliament must review the agreement, but the ministers can ignore the paliament's amendments as long as they do so unanimously.

Weddings can feature more than nuptials

By Mary J. Loftus
N.Y. Times News Service

Several of my friends hate weddings.

Can't stand them.

Where nobody's anybody 'til somebody loves them.

Just take a look at the ritual.

All the unattached guys and gals get a chance at the garter or the mini-bouquet, and a promise they will be next in line at the altar.

And, like Noah, weddings demand that invitations be sent for two, although some of the envelopes are made out to a single friend and the ever-available, popular and flirtatious "guest."

For those who are currently moving through life unescorted, a wedding can be an insufferable ode to duets.

On the other hand, I kind of like weddings.

They're like family reunions with purpose, a joining of the asunder, an excuse to drink and dance and buy dinnerware to excess.

I like the fact that, no matter how carefully orchestrated, something always goes wrong, as evidenced by the hundreds of "America's Funniest Wedding Videos" with fainting grooms, slippery cakes and mixed-up ministers.

At my own reception, my husband of one hour managed to pull a chair out from under me during a sentimental slide show I had prepared to Joni Mitchell's "The Circle Game."

The scene, three years ago Tuesday:

A picture of Jim as a baby flashes on the screen.

"Down in the front," someone yells.

Jim unknowingly pulls back the chair I was expecting to sit on, and sits down.

A picture of me as a baby flashes.

"And the painted ponies go up and down." I finish adjusting the focus, and sit down without looking behind me. Much farther down than I anticipated.

A picture of Jim from the 1970s flashes on the screen. People are torn between laughing at the sight of his hair below his shoulders, and helping me up.

No one is sure why I sat down on the floor, but everyone is sympathetic, since I'm probably nervous and all, being newly married.

Even the single folks in attendance seemed to enjoy this spectacle — especially the ones who bought their video cameras.

And, after three years of marriage, Jim and I are learning when to leave the chairs alone.

Some AIDS children know, some don't

By Lynn Berry

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Four-year-old Stephie knows she's sick, and she knows it's because her mother took drugs. She knows also that she will someday go to heaven, a beautiful place where angels live.

Six-year-old Tom knows none of these things. Like Stephie, he is infected with the AIDS virus; unlike Stephie, his mother has chosen to keep his infection a secret — from classmates, teachers, neighbors, even from Tom.

"It's a hush-up thing," she said. "Everyone's ignorant of the facts."

TEN YEARS into the AIDS epidemic, the contagion's course among its littlest victims is told with statistics — more than 3,000 cases of AIDS in children under age 13 reported to the federal Centers for Disease Control, 2,500 of them under age 5, though officials believe the actual number is much higher.

But the story is also told in the lives of Stephie and Tom — the one child whose illness is an open book, bathed in attention; the other whose infection is hidden for fear that hard hearts will turn against him and his family.

Stephie's grandmother, Edie Schaefer, has made AIDS education her cause and Stephie a local celebrity. The cheerful little girl with long blond curls has been on talk shows and in the news since she was less than a year old.

"If I feel we can help one or two other people, then Stephie will not die in vain," said Edie. "That's what keeps me going."

Stephie was 11 months old when she was diagnosed with AIDS. Her liver and spleen are enlarged and her lymph nodes are swollen and hard like dried peas.

Stephie's mother, an intravenous drug user infected with the AIDS virus, left Stephie with relatives and fled to Arizona, where she still lives. Another of Edie's four daughters kept the baby for a few months, but she wanted to work and was unable to find a day care center willing to take an infected child.

The family took their plight to their state senator, and Stephie made the news for the first time. Suitable child care was never found, Edie says, so she decided to stay home and take care of Stephie.

THE NEXT roadblock came when Edie wanted to have the baby christened. She says the first two priests she asked never returned repeated phone calls.

Stephie's bedroom is full of toys, many of them gifts from strangers. Stuffed animals are perched in rows around the room and piled on her bed. Games cover the floor, leaving only a narrow pathway to the door.

She likes to play house and one day brought a visiting reporter and photographer into the game. She called them her children and served up small bowls of her specialty: "chocolate soup."

One of her favorite toys is a child's tape recorder with a microphone that amplifies her voice when she sings along to songs she knows by heart.

In past years, most children born with the AIDS virus died before they were 2 or 3, according to Dr. Harold Lischner, chief of immunology at St. Christopher's Hospital for Children in Philadelphia. Now, he said, most live to see their sixth birthdays and the oldest are entering their teens, thanks to earlier detection and new treatments to prevent infections.

STEPHIE TAKES doses of the drug AZT three times a day, and since February she has received monthly infusions of gamma globulin to fight infection. She has fewer runny noses and does not tire as quickly as she once did, Edie says.

She seems healthy, but Edie has no illusions.

"We talk about God in heaven and she knows she's sick and someday she'll go to heaven — and so will I."

Tom, meanwhile, has no symptoms of his infection, which was diagnosed when he was 3 years old.

His mother, a former drug abuser, learned she had the HIV virus when she was six months pregnant with her second son. She worried about herself and the unborn baby, but assumed her older son was fine.

After the baby was born, both children were tested. The younger boy was fine, but Tom tested positive.

"I get depressed," his mother said. "Everytime I get sick, I'm afraid I'm going to die."

Tom attends a public elementary school in Philadelphia. According to the district AIDS policy, in force since 1985, only the superintendent, the district medical director and school nurse need know a child has AIDS; Tom's mother informed his principal before he began attending school.

TEACHERS ARE taught to don gloves before touching any bleeding child; blood transmits not only the AIDS virus but also hepatitis and other diseases.

Tom is not the boy's real name — for fear of AIDS discrimination, his mother has told her own mother and the principal but no one else of her son's infection.

He is not an outcast now; he is a playful, animated boy with closely cropped brown hair. He takes AZT and goes to the hospital for a gamma globulin infusion once a month.

His mother says she does not tell him about his infection because she does not believe he is old enough to understand. But try as she might, she knows she cannot shield him forever from the truth of the virus they share.

DEAR ABBY

Tattooed man's parents think he wears brand of shame

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You blew it when you advised the mother who signed herself "Unhappy Down South." Her college-aged daughter had come home with a small tattoo of an eye on her ankle. You reminded her that the ankle belonged to her daughter.

Van Buren

Abby, our son got his first tattoo when he was 17. His father and I thought it was just a fad. Well, today that son is 52 years old, and he is covered from neck to knees with tattoos, which include a naked lady on his stomach that reaches down each leg, and a large Mexican woman on his back wearing a sombrero. Abby, if you don't think that's embarrassing, try carrying him to a doctor or hospital.

Please tell that poor lady to see to it that her daughter's tattoo is removed, even if she has to be strapped down! And it might be well to use the strap in a few other places, too.

Decent, respectable people simply do not approve of tattoos. — TATTOO TABOO IN BROWNWOOD, TEXAS

DEAR T.T.: Begging your pardon, but an adult offspring — male or female — has the right to make his or her own decisions concerning tattoos. Also, please do not presume to speak for all decent and respectable people.

In addition, to suggest that a strap be used in "a few other places" makes you guilty of condoning physical violence. The advice from here is, "Back off."

Read on for a letter from a reader in Brooklyn:

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "Unhappy Down South" who is upset about her daughter's tattoo on her ankle.

A year and a half ago, I underwent 36 days of radiation for breast cancer. The area to be radiated had to be encircled by tattoos in order to leave a permanent "map" for the radiologist — to prevent any future radiation treatments from overlapping the original site.

How nice it would have been to be tattooed by choice rather than necessity. I surely would have preferred an "eye" on my ankle to a series of black marks on my chest as a reminder of what I'd like to forget.

So, to "Unhappy Down South": Please be grateful that your daughter is well and happy — let her enjoy her life.

Please get your priorities straight. I did. — MRS. JULIE KERR, BROOKLYN, N.Y.

DEAR JULIE: Yours was a very sobering letter. I wish you a complete recovery.

DEAR ABBY: I am a young girl who made the dumb mistake of having black eyeliner tattooed on my upper and lower eyelids. I hate it now and have called around trying to find someone who can remove tattoos, and can't find anyone who will attempt to remove tattoos from eyelids because it's too dangerous.

Do you know anyone in Orange County, Calif., who could undo this eyeliner? If not, I hope this will serve to warn other girls not to be as hasty as I was. Please answer in the paper because I can't receive mail at home; my family may see it and say, "We told you not to do it." — FOOLISH AND SORRY

DEAR FOOLISH AND SORRY: Unfortunately, I know of no way to remove tattooed eyeliner. My best recommendation would be to conceal the offending eyeliner with a product used to cover blemishes, freckles or an unsightly discoloration. Inquire at the cosmetic counter of your local department store. I recommend Covermark and Dermablend.

DEAR ABBY: Our son, who is 21 years old, is basically a fine person and he is usually very reasonable. He has a new girlfriend and she has been "sleeping over." Our son lives in our garage, which we have fixed up comfortably. He needed his privacy, and we needed peace and quiet. He feels that since he is in a separate area, it is OK to have his girlfriend sleep over, even though it goes against our values.

We have set certain rules for him and feel that as long as he is living in our house, he should discontinue this sleeping arrangement. He has always abided by our rules, but thinks we are off base on this.

What do you think? — LOVER BOY'S MOM

DEAR MOM: I think as long as your son is living in your house, he should abide by your rules.

DEAR READERS: "As our society ages and people are living longer, many older people suffer from aches and pains which they dismiss as signs of old age, and choose not to consult a physician," says Dennis Boulware, president of the Louisiana Arthritis Foundation.

"While over 37 million Americans suffer from arthritis, it is not a normal part of aging. (The symptoms of arthritis include pain and swelling in the affected joint.) Pain and swelling are not natural, and should not be tolerated — especially when there is medical treatment available."

This reminds me of a very old story my dear, departed father used to tell: An elderly man went to see his doctor about a pain in his right leg. The doctor examined the patient quickly, then said, "Well, what do you expect, Mr. Goldberg — that leg is 80 years old."

Mr. Goldberg replied, "Well, doctor, the other leg is also 80 years old and it doesn't hurt."

Problems? Write to: Dear Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Photographer opens traveling exhibit

By Dana Kennedy

NEW YORK (AP) — Annie Leibovitz is perched awkwardly on a platform in her enormous, white SoHo studio for what to her is an ordeal: facing the camera and posing for pictures. But if the instincts that have served her as both photojournalist and pop iconographer for the last 20 years are correct, Leibovitz makes an ideal subject.

"The people who scare me the most are the ones who feel comfortable in front of the camera," says Leibovitz. "The people who feel the most uncomfortable often work out to be more challenging and exciting."

Leibovitz, 41, is a tall woman (a 6-footer) with correspondingly large feet (size 12) and long blond hair, who manages to be simultaneously imposing and engaging. After two decades of photographing some of the world's most famous people, she has become a celebrity herself, often eclipsing her subjects.

"As I get better known, I realized how much I liked not being known so much," says Leibovitz. "I don't really know how it will change what I do. It feels weird to have the attention but it's too early to tell if there's been a backlash."

AP LaserPhoto

Photographer Annie Leibovitz stands on the terrace of her New York studio in September. Leibovitz is on the publicity trail to mark both the publication of a new book, "Photographs Annie Leibovitz 1970-1990," and her first solo museum exhibition, which will travel to cities in the U.S. and Europe through 1994.

SHE'S ON THE publicity trail, somewhat reluctantly, to mark both the publication of a new book, "Photographs Annie Leibovitz 1970-1990," and her first solo museum exhibit, which will travel to U.S. and European cities through 1994.

The photographs include some of her best-known work, such as the picture of a naked John Lennon embracing Yoko Ono, taken just hours before he was fatally shot in 1980, and unpublished shots, like the one of the Rev. Al Sharpton underneath a hair dryer in a Brooklyn beauty salon.

The photographs, from the world of dance, art, rock music, literature and drama, tell a social history of the last two decades. They also chronicle Leibovitz's career, beginning with her raw, untutored work for a fledgling Rolling Stone magazine, and continuing to the glossy, high-concept magazine layouts that have become her trademark.

Leibovitz is cramming interviews in between a ferocious schedule. Her work, which includes regular assignments for Vanity Fair and American Express, among others, takes her all over the world. Her shoots are planned three months in advance and outlined in huge calendars on the walls of her studio, a sweeping loft which overlooks the Hudson River.

"IT'S A LITTLE scary to me, doing this three-week book tour," Leibovitz says during an interview in her white-walled office, filled with memorabilia like a magazine cover signed by Michael Jackson ("Love to Annie — you're really magic.")

"I've hardly ever taken that much time off before. I have this little wish list of places I want to go — the pyramids, Morocco — except I know that when I do I'm going to want to take pictures."

Leibovitz seems overwhelmed by her growing fame. She chooses her words carefully and worries about what she's saying.

She plays with her hair and looks relieved when she's briefly interrupted by a phone call about a photo shoot with two young actresses the next morning. (Leibovitz asks that their names not be printed; Vanity Fair Editor in Chief Tina Brown "would have a fit.")

"Where are the hair and makeup people gonna be?" she demands to the caller, a staffer at Vanity Fair. "Tell them not to put hair and makeup on them before we get there. ... Make sure they're fresh out of the shower. ... I'm afraid they'll do something and it'll ruin what we want to do. ... Why in a chaise longue? ... I think it should be very stark. ... The movie is very psychological. ... What color is the furniture?"

Leibovitz says her approach to "making pictures" hasn't changed much since her early days at Rolling Stone. She got the job at the magazine when she was a junior at the San Francisco Art Institute. She brought in some pictures of a peace rally and three years later, at age 23, was named chief photographer.

"Part of the thing I did well at Rolling Stone was getting the person," says Leibovitz. "I was amazed when I got them and then I thought — uh, now I have to shoot them."

SHE APPARENTLY has retained that unpretentious quality over the years.

To get her pictures, especially some of the more sensational — Debra Winger French-kissing her dog in the desert, Lauren Hutton covered in mud, Whoopi Goldberg in a bathtub filled with milk, Demi Moore nude and pregnant — Leibovitz researches her subjects and collaborates with them.

"I do my homework," says Leibovitz, who likes to visit people at home the day before she shoots them. "I try to be a nice person. I have some ideas and I also listen to what they have to say. I'm not asking anyone to do anything they don't want to do. Basically, I'm looking for the truth."

When Leibovitz shot camera-shy Diane Keaton, "it was like working with another photographer." Leibovitz got her shot when Keaton "did this kinky little dance for less than a minute."

In contrast, Roseanne and Tom Arnold were totally uninhibited. Leibovitz says the couple approved of the shots of them in Vanity Fair in which they wrestled in mud.

"They really like each other," Leibovitz says. "They're sexy to each other. They couldn't keep their hands off each other, they were rolling on the floor. They were the ones who said you have to shoot us wrestling."

LEIBOVITZ SOMETIMES misses her days as an anonymous photojournalist but says her current work has broadened her professional scope.

"Portraiture opened things up for me," she says. "It's based on something real to me. A lot of my ideas come from a love of journalism."

Leibovitz always carries a 35mm-automatic camera with her, both for "snaps" of family and friends and for the unexpected picture that may come her way.

Leibovitz becomes emotional when the subject comes up.

"I think I'm still trying to figure it out," she says slowly. "It was just such an unbelievable situation when he was killed just a few hours later. For a good six months I wasn't very well. A photograph like that happens only once in a lifetime."

Shift work takes its toll on social, family life

By Hap LeCrone
N.Y. Times News Service

The demands of shift work are taken for granted today in a society where 25 percent of the workforce performs on a rotating basis.

During the production booms of the '40s and '50s — before and after World War II — there was more public awareness of the difficulties of working the swing and graveyard shifts. Songs and stories were written, often humorously, about reverse time patterns.

By necessity hospitals, power generating plants, transportation systems, police and fire protection, etc. are required to provide 24-hour service. Today there are food, drug and convenience stores that are open all night. Many industries operate 24 hours a day because of manufacturing processes and production demands.

Those who have experienced shift work know the kinds of physical and psychological problems that accompany these schedules. Not only can it produce stress on the individual, but the whole family may experience stress as a result of the shift worker's lifestyle.

Consider these family stressors:

■ Scheduling conflicts. Often shift workers will tell me of difficulties they impose on the family menu planner. When Harry gets off work at 7 a.m., he may yearn for spicy Mexican food. But he comes home to find his family having a breakfast of bacon and eggs. His suggestion for tacos is rather repulsive to them. Fortunately, Harry compromises with huevos rancheros and the whole family is happy.

Harry is then ready for a "night of rest," but the children are full of energy and ready to start a day filled with noisy activities. Their mother has learned to reduce the noise by moving activities away from the room where Harry sleeps and declaring parts of the house off limits until Daddy awakens.

Her household duties, such as cleaning, washing, ironing, vacuuming, scheduling for repair services, etc., are based on the time that Harry works. If she is also a shift worker, her daily schedule may require additional juggling of home duties.

■ The internal clock. For most people the internal clock works best when they work during the day and sleep at night. There is speculation that human beings operated this way since the beginning of time. When changed or reset, these internal clocks may produce digestive disturbances, chronic fatigue, irritability and even mood changes.

■ Social life. Shift work that least interferes with an individual's social life is preferable. For industries with a 12-hour shift, a 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. routine allows maximum opportunity to interact with family, friends and other segments of society.

Next week I will talk about experiences with families who have performed shift work and have established fundamental rules that have helped diminish the negative side effects.

Trees classified

ATLANTA (AP) — Not all hardwoods are hard, some softwoods aren't soft — and knowing which is which can make a difference when selecting wood for a fireplace, according to a forest products company.

Experts at the Georgia-Pacific Corp. explain that trees are classified by their leaves, not their density. Softwoods usually are evergreens with needles or scale-like leaves, while hardwoods have broad leaves.

For the most heat per cord, they advise, select dense woods like hickory, oak and beech, which are hardwoods, or yew, a softwood.

MGM: Roger Rabbit stars in 'Hollywood's Pretty Woman'

the resort to announce the "S-u-r-p-p-prise!" And one of his favorite places to pop up is the new stage show "Hollywood's Pretty Woman" at Disney-MGM Studios, where he is a featured star.

In this live spectacular of beautiful costumes, song and dance reminiscent of the golden age of star and screen, "Hollywood's Pretty Woman" takes audiences to "Club Hollywood," where proprietor Mickey Mouse hopes to impress actor-turned-movie-producer Roger Rabbit with the club's grand production numbers. The musical — featured on the outdoor stage "Theatre of the Stars" — salutes the talents of such Hollywood greats as Judy Garland, Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire and Carmen Miranda, as well as Disney greats such as Mickey and Minnie Mouse, Goofy, Donald Duck, Pluto and Tigger.

There are several showings of this production each day, so be sure to check the entertainment schedule at the beginning of the day for the times of this show — and other special attractions.

The "Theater of the Stars" is located just off Hollywood Boulevard, the street where star-wannabes frequent in hopes of their big break. The Boulevard is Tinsel Town at its best as talent agents, starlets, gossip columnists, cops and cabbies roam from corner to corner performing skits and talking with guests, humorously recreating the Hollywood of the 1940s.

All along Hollywood Boulevard are specialty shops, one which even offers movie memorabilia such as props, artwork and personal items used by the stars.

At the end of the Boulevard is the Chinese Theatre where the cement is engraved with the footprints, handprints, signatures and even faceprints of numerous movie stars.

INSIDE THE Chinese Theatre is the home of "The Great Movie Ride." This ride takes you through 11 recreations of Hollywood's most classic films and their stars such as John Wayne atop his horse, Clint Eastwood waiting outside a saloon, James Cagney in his role in "Public Enemy," Gene Kelly performing the infamous "Singing in the Rain," Julie Andrews and Dick Van Dyke in "Mary Poppins'" chimney sweep scene, and the Scarecrow, the Lion, the Tin Man, Dorothy and Toto, too, as they start for the Emerald City. You also encounter Sigourney Weaver in "Alien" (including the space monster itself), and Harrison Ford as Indian Jones recovering the ark from its tomb.

These famous characters are created through Audio-Animatronics — just as each likeness of the presidents was created in "The Hall of Presidents" in Magic Kingdom — and appear almost life-like.

Although "The Great Movie Ride" is worth waiting to see, beware that the wait is approximately 25 minutes once you enter the doors of the Chinese Theatre. If the waiting line extends outside the theater, you might come back at another time.

Another must see is the "Backstage Studio Tour." If special effects in movies have ever intrigued you, then this tour will show you some of the behind the scenes work it took to get the effects on film.

The journey backstage begins on an open-air bus. A guide rides along to explain the sights. Numerous props (particularly old cars and planes) from movies such as "Roger Rabbit," "Dick Tracy" and "Casablanca" can be seen. But if you want a picture of any these items, you better focus quickly. There is no stopping at this point.

Next, guests are taken to "Catastrophe Canyon," a perilous journey through a unique outdoor set staged with an oil tanker in a desert canyon.

WHILE IN THE canyon, you will experience fires, floods, explosions and an earthquake that transform the almost tranquil-looking set into a mountain of trouble. If you enjoy being close to the action, try to sit on the left side of the open-air bus. You will be able to feel the heat from the fires and take a bit of the flood with you on the remainder of the tour; just be sure to guard any personal belongings from the water.

When leaving "Catastrophe Canyon," the guide will take you behind — and under — the scene and explain the mechanics used to create the special effects under the 50-foot-high man-made wall.

This 30-minute ride through the production facilities also take you to the heart of the Production Center where you are shown:

■ The costuming center where skilled designers create the clothes worn by the stars. On display in this area are several famous costumes including the red evening gown worn by Julia Roberts in "Pretty Woman," the black sequined gown worn by Madona in "Dick Tracy," and Captain EO's leather suit worn by Michael Jackson in the 3D musical video picture by the same name, which can be seen at Epcot Center,

■ The Scenic Shop where studio craftsmen build the sets and props for the movies and television productions filmed at the Studios.

TO STEP INSIDE the magic, walk along the guided one-hour "Special Effects and Production Tour" for a delightful journey through the complete TV and production process.

If you like to get involved, this tour asks for a volunteer from the audience to help demonstrate how miniature battle ships are used in place of life-sized vessels during an ocean storm scene and a battle scene, but be prepared to get soaked.

You also are guided through the Special Effects Workshop where you can explore some of the fascinating science of optical and mechanical effects.

The second half of the workshop features the larger-than-life-sized bee used in "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids." Here, two children are selected from the audience to re-enact that scene for filming, which is then shown to the audience.

You also get a look at movies and television shows in production from a bird's eye view, behind the specially designed soundstages. The entertainment schedule will list what shows are in production for the day.

If animation is your cup of tea, be sure to stop by "The Magic of Disney Animation." This self-guided walking tour allows you to watch the animated story unfold, from the initial concept of the story and the artists' creations of the characters, to the transformation from paper onto plastic "cels" and the editing of the scenes.

However, if it's real action you want, head for the "Indiana Jones Epic Stunt Spectacular!" This live, action-packed production is filled with stunts and thrilling special effects, along with an explanation of how they were accomplished. If you sit close to the stage, you may get selected as an "extra" for a dramatic chase scene featuring a runaway truck and an explosion.

"Extras" are taken back stage for costumes and make up, so if someone you know is chosen, get that camera ready. Show times vary, so be sure to check the schedule.

ANOTHER ACTION attraction is "Star Tours," a runaway Star-speeder piloted by a looney robot zooming toward the Moon of Endor. Based on the creative forces of Disney, George Lucas and Industrial Light & Magic, this flight-simulator combined with a thrill-a-second motion picture creates a very real sense of movement through deep space. If you like roller-coasters, this attraction is for you.

To delight the children — or those who are kids at heart — there are a host attractions available.

On the Studios' Central Park Backlot, those zany Muppets appear for an on-location film shoot featuring favorite songs and performances by Kermit the Frog,

STUDIOS: Disney-MGM plans for several future attractions

(From 10G)

Miss Piggy and the rest of the cast of Muppet stars.

Also featured in "Jim Henson's Muppet Location" is the dynamic family of "Dinosaurs" who present two more memorable shows with a distinct Hollywood flavor at Disney-MGM.

Earl Sinclair and his prime-time fossil family, the "Dinosaurs" from the ABC-TV series, take Hollywood by storm when they appear as "guests of extinction" in a glittering display of Mesozoic mania.

In the Muppet Courtyard in front of "Jim Henson's Muppet*Vision 3D" theater is Miss Piggy's Fountain, christened by Miss Piggy herself on its debut in October. It was built in her honor and she is excited about everyone coming to see it during the 20th anniversary celebration.

A COURTYARD away is "Jim Henson's Muppet*Vision 3D" where a new dimension is created with state-of-the art 3D film magic, Audio-Animatronics figures, special effects and plenty of Muppet mayhem. This attraction premiered in October and it literally plunges the audience right into the middle of a rambunctious Muppets' adventure, thanks to the astonishing array of special effects never before experienced in a theater.

Action taking place on the screen actually spills over into — or onto — the audience, an experience you won't soon forget.

But hey, duds, it's fine to have some fun with the Muppets, but there's more fun awaiting the kids with the "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles." Here, turtle power rules and kids can see those bodacious crime fighters in person, appearing throughout the day for pictures, signing autographs and showing off their gnarly moves. Be sure to check the schedule for times the famous four can be seen in their daily show on the Backlot at the Studios, and — Cowabunga, dudes!

But for a child's truly larger-than-life experience, head for the "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids Movie Set Adventure." Children — and kids at heart, remember — can roam through 20-foot tall blades of grass, come knee-to-head with insects, be sniffed by a giant dog's nose and climb inside a giant Cheerio. Beware of the garden hose, however, because if you step in the wrong place, you'll be soaked.

Although this playground is a barrel of laughs for the kids, it could be a nightmare for parents. The park limits the number of people allowed in the playground at one time, but it can still get very crowded. If children are old enough, it is a good idea to establish a meeting place in case you get separated. If the children are very young, just keep an eagle eye on them. The playground is designed for ages 4 and up.

ANOTHER DISNEY-MGM Studios attraction to thrill the little ones is "The New Mickey Mouse Club." This high-energy troupe has returned to the Disney Channel with more of the music, excitement, guests stars and comedy that have made the series a huge success all these years. The show is taped at the Studios right where all can see.

One of the more beautiful sights at the Studios is the "Sorcery in the Sky Fireworks Fantasy" where Mickey Mouse makes a dramatic appearance as the Sorcerer's Apprentice from "Fantasia" atop the Chinese Theatre directing the nightly fireworks. The show celebrates nearly 70 years of Hollywood cinemagic, with music performed by the Paris Symphony.

Many of the restaurants in Disney-MGM Studios are as interesting as the rides and tours. One of the stand-outs is the Sci-Fi Dine-In Theater Restaurant. It is designed like a classic 1950s American drive-in movie theater where customers sit in special booths designed like vintage '50s convertibles and watch outlandish clips and trailers from science fiction films while dining on burgers and deli-style sandwiches.

The landmark of the park is the water tower, known to punsters as the "Earffel Tower." It is reminiscent of the types of towers looming over most Hollywood studios of the era. The tower is called the "Earffel" tower because it is topped — in great Disney fashion — with a mouseketeer-style hat.

Disney-MGM Studios Theme Park opened as a working TV and film studio — complete with production facilities — in the summer of 1988, while the entertainment facilities opened in May 1989. It sits on 110 acres southwest of Epcot Center.

Two more shows are planned for the Disney-MGM Studios Theme Park. Opening this month will be "Beauty and the Beast," an elaborately staged musical show based on the forthcoming Disney animated feature film (to be released nationally Nov. 22).

The musical score of "Beauty and the Beast" by the late Alan Menken and Howard Ashman is said to the best Disney — or even Broadway — has produced in many years. Described as having charm and affectionate cleverness, it is reminiscent to the songs of "Lady and the Tramp" (1955), and the score of "Sleeping Beauty" (1959), according to Katrine Ames in Newsweek, Inc.

THIS IS DISNEY'S 30th full-length animated film — lasting 84 minutes — since "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" (1937), and many say it has the feel of a classic.

"The Little Mermaid" will open at the Studios in January as a multi-sensory stage show combining lasers, video, film and live characters from the animated movie hit, according to Disney information.

Site work also is underway on the next major Studios expansion — Sunset Boulevard, creating a legendary Hollywood theater district with shops, adventures and shows.

Two of Sunset Boulevard's major thrill attractions will be based on Roger Rabbit exploits — "Toontown Transit," which will take visitors on a high-speed trip through the Cartoon Studios, while guests in oversized baby buggies duplicate Baby Herman's hilarious ride in "Tummy Trouble."

Today, the film and television industry view Disney-MGM Studios as a key player in the growth of production in the Southeast. In the three years since the Studios opened, television productions included the ABC-TV miniseries, "Separate But Equal," which earned seven Emmy nominations including one for best actor Sidney Poitier and which also starred Burt Lancaster; "Wheel of Fortune" with Pat Sajak and Vanna White; "Real People" with Sarah Purcell and Fred Willard; "Let's Make A Deal" with Monty Hall (who makes special guest appearances), and "All My Children," just to name a few.

AS FOR THE Silver Screen, filmmakers have produced "Earnest Saves Christmas," "Splash Too," and scenes from "Oscar" with Sylvester Stallone and "Quick Change," with Bill Murray. Commercial, documentary, music video and corporate training productions also have filled the stages and backlots of Disney-MGM Studios and Walt Disney World.

Every year, many stars come visit the park for live telecasts of Walt Disney World's "Very Merry Christmas Parade" and the "Happy Easter Parade," and the Studios just keeps on "shooting" stars.

Information about Walt Disney World, including theme park hours, tickets, recreation and accommodations, is available by calling Walt Disney World Guest Information at (407) 824-4321, or by writing to Guest Letters, Walt Disney World Resort, P.O. Box 10040, Lake Buena Vista, Fla., 32830-0040.

Reservations for the 17 resort hotels are available by calling (407) 934-7639.

PLEASURE: New Year's Eve celebrated nightly

can happen in this 1930's explorer's club.

Another retreat for the feet is The Comedy Warehouse where five stand-up comics and one musician provide hilarious improvisational comedy from the audiences suggestions. The tiered layout of the club ensures a relatively good view for everyone as you perch atop bar stools and enjoy a drink. Popcorn is the usual fare of the show.

But the real action on Pleasure Island is at the stroke of midnight when it's New Year's Eve every night. The celebration is complete with a barrage of fireworks, confetti and streamers, and a stage show of lights, music and dancers. The celebration — with its pulsating music — spills out of each clubs onto the streets and the party continues into the wee hours of the mornings.

There are 17 restaurants and eateries to tempt almost any taste bud and shops offering everything from clothing to books. One of the most fascinating facades on the island is Jessica Rabbit's souvenir shop, which features an animated, lighted likeness of Jessica herself that is over two-stories tall. She is "drawn" in her classic strapless red dress with the slit-skit, allowing for her leg to peek out and slowly swing back and forth.

Paradise Island has quite a history, according to legend (even though it opened in 1989).

Legend has it that Merriweather Adam Pleasure, a Pittsburgh entrepreneur, established an empire of sail-making and ship-building on the island in the late 1800s. After becoming quite wealthy, he went off to celebrate his fortune, leaving his heirs to take care of the business. But due to his sons' inept business practices, Pleasure's empire began to crumble and fall in the 1950s.

Enter Disney and a little of its magic, and the abandoned factories and warehouses once used for Pleasure's businesses were transformed into an island of adult entertainment.

The legend also says that New Year's Eve was Pleasure's birth date; a day which he believed was the greatest night to party because everyone celebrated new beginnings. In fact, it is said that one night, Pleasure wished that New Year's Eve would never end. Again, enter Disney's magic and Pleasure Island is the only place where it is New's Year Eve every night.

Dress on the island ranges from party cloths to shorts and T-shirts worn straight from a day at one of the theme parks.

The New Year's festivities begin at 7 p.m. and continue until 3 a.m. There is an admission price to enter the island after 7 p.m., but there are no cover charges for any of the nightclubs once on the island. No one under age 18 is admitted unless accompanied by a parent.

For those who would just like to explore the island, there is no age restrictions, cover charge or parking charge during the day.

For information about Pleasure Island, call (407) 934-7781. For group or banquet information, call (407) 828-3200.

By Erma Bombeck

Bombeck

I had an aunt who believed that if she attached herself to the nozzle of a vacuum sweeper and filled her nylon warm-up suit with hot air, the fat from her body would return to the atmosphere as dust. She would find a dustball under the bed, smile and say, "That used to be my thigh."

Since the beginning of time, women have been trying to come up with ways to lose weight without dieting or exercising. I read recently in Dear Abby's column that a group of hopefuls have stumbled onto what they feel is the ultimate motivational tool to shed pounds. They pull the blinds, take off all their clothes and do their housework in the buff. Every time they pass a patch of sparkling tile, a mirror or a reflection in their toaster, their consciousness level gets a jump-start.

I've always had a theory about nudity. If God had meant for us to roam around nude, he would never have invented the wicker chair.

Besides, how good could you feel about yourself when you answer the door and the UPS man loses the sight of his good eye?

I can tell you now this method is not going to work, and I will tell you why. Forget all the obvious pitfalls, such as a kitchen that is mined with knobs, drawers, door hooks, towel racks and hot surfaces. Forget the inconvenience of no pockets and the torture of hot coffee. No pain, no gain.

The reality is that women who procrastinate about dieting will be equally devious when wandering around the house nude. There are mirrors and there are mirrors. I have one in my bathroom that makes me look like an avalanche in progress. It belongs in a fun house. If everything had fallen as far as that mirror reflects, I wouldn't be able to walk. I never use that one. The mirror over my sink has a harsh light that belongs in a lighthouse. It misses nothing. I avoid that one, too. My toaster makes my face look like a four-slice toaster. Do I need that?

No. I would use only the two chrome strips on the refrigerator door to look into, as it divides me in half. Also the reflection from my bread box, which captures only my head and shoulders. And I would keep on eating.

Anyone who feels the need to walk around nude inflicting pain on herself should stand in the shower and leave a light on nearby, then check her silhouette in the tile. She won't eat for a week.

Adam Henson, 8, holds Lightning, his pet red-eared turtle, as his sister Meredith, 5, keeps her distance at their home in Hutchinson, Kan. Adam was playing with Lightning when the turtle clamped Adam's upper lip in it's jaw. Attempts to free Adam were unsuccessful and his mother was preparing to decapitate the turtle when they used a carrot to distract it.

Boy, turtle relationship ends in liplock

HUTCHINSON, Kan. (AP) — The best-buddy relationship between a boy and his turtle ended in a liplock and a call to 911.

Adam Henson, 8, was playing with Lightning on Monday when the foot-long turtle stretched its 3-inch neck sideways and clamped Adam's upper lip.

The boy's parents called 911 for help. But before rescue workers arrived, Adam's mother, Marie Henson, took her son's advice and used a carrot to entice Lightning into opening its jaws.

The family had tried for five minutes to get the pet to let up. Mrs. Henson stood at the ready with a knife, ready to decapitate it.

"I think the kids were playing with it and spooked it," said Randy Henson, Adam's father. "It's a shame. I think we're going to donate it to the zoo."

Adam and his 5-year-old sister, Meredith, had been told to keep animals away from their faces, but Lightning made a side attack, Mrs. Henson said.

"He's used to being played with. That was his (Adam's) best buddy all summer. ... He's never been aggressive before," she said.

Adam visited the doctor Monday to have his swollen lip inspected, but his pet's betrayal cut him deeper.

"I want to play football with him," Adam said.

N.Y. Times News Service

Three London hotels have introduced a plan to woo missing American visitors back to the city by offering refunds of up to more than $170 a day. Guests can get the refunds at the Ritz in Piccadilly, and the Stafford and the Dukes, both in St James's Place, through April 30. The Re-Fund-Ab e London Program allows guests reserving higher-priced rooms reimbursments for purchases or expenses. Standard room accommodations do not qualify, and restaurant bills are not included. On checkout, guests show receipts and the appropriate amount is deducted from the bill. Refund allowance per night works out at $52 for a superior single, $78 for a superior double and $173 for suites.

Another hotel, the St. James's Court, on Buckingham Gate in the St. James's section, says it is the first to introduce a program that repays to business travelers the 17.5 percent value added tax on their bill. On leaving the hotel, the guest completes and hands in a form. The information required includes the name of the traveler's company. The tax on room, meals, conference facilities and other expenses are repaid in dollars in the United States.

Pyramid opens with little fanfare

By Woody Baird

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The pyramid this Memphis built with $62 million and high hopes opened Nov. 9, but with nothing like the fanfare that marked the groundbreaking two years ago.

The project they once called "The Great American Pyramid," is now simply "The Pyramid." For the opening, a ribbon-cutting and a few speeches will do.

Wrapped in a stainless steel shell, the pyramid peaks at 321 feet, about 32 stories high, with a base the size of five football fields.

Promoter Sidney Shlenker promised to build a tourist magnet that would draw 3 million visitors a year to Memphis, a city of 610,000 people. It was to be this city's Eiffel Tower, its Statue of Liberty.

The idea suggested the pyramids of Egypt. The city's ancient Egyptian namesake no longer exists, but nearby pyramids in Giza have attracted visitors from around the world for centuries.

State and local tax money built the modern pyramid. Shlenker's job was developing a tourist attraction that would repay construction costs over 25 years.

The city staged a big party at the groundbreaking in 1989. Thousands of people jammed the streets to celebrate in a shower of fireworks, the joyful noise of rock 'n' roll bands and laser lights shaped like the planned pyramid. A hovering helicopter flew a display of electric lights forming a 75-foot shovel.

When the party was over, Shlenker's plans fell short. He was fired after failing to raise $50 million for financing. His management company eventually sought protection from creditors in bankruptcy court, citing debts exceeding $16 million.

Overlooking the Mississippi River, the structure houses a 20,000-seat arena for sports and stage events. The first show was a concert by the country music duo, the Judds. Memphis State University starts playing basketball there Nov. 29.

But an array of shops, restaurants and museums Shlenker foretold never materialized; 150,000 square feet remain empty.

Leisure Management Inc. of Houston replaced Shlenker as manager. Local municipalities will absorb any operational losses; a $600,000 deficit is expected this year.

J. D. is the son of mr. & Mrs. Ray Garcia; Tanya is the daughter of Mr. & Mrs. Javier Castillejos and Robert is the son of Mr. & Ms. Robert Evans.

FROM THE PRESIDENT

What is soccer? (saker) n. (association football). It's the largest participation and spectator sport in the world--even in America. According to the Soccer Industry Council of America Survey, 1991 total participation for youth and adult soccer is 15,945,000. Youth under 18 is 12,118,000.

Soccer is going to see an explosive growth in the next three years. In 1994, the World Cup of Soccer will come to America for the very first time! Over 134 countries have entered competitions that will span over the next two years to determine the final 24 teams to compete in World Cup competition. The USA, as the host country, is an automatic qualifier for this prestigious event. At this writing, Dallas is still in the running to be a host city through the hope and hard work of North Texas State Soccer Association (housed at Carrollton) and many other soccer enthusiasts in the Dallas area.

The USA Men's National Team, under new coach Bora Milutinovich, is doing admirally with a record of seven wins, two losses, and three ties since his arrival. This national team will compete aganist Costa Rica in Dallas on November 24 at Texas Stadium. The USA Women's National Team, coached by Anson Dorrauce of the University of North Carolina, will begin competition in China November 16 in the Women's Soccer World Cup. They are an overwhelming favorite to win this inaugural event.

On a more local note, the Midland Soccer Association has 144 recreational and club teams this season, ranging from U-6 through U-19. The annual MSA Turkey Shootout Tournament will be held this November 15-17, with 100 + teams from all over Texas and New Mexico in competition. Competition will start Friday, November 15, under the lights and end with semi-finals and finals on Sunday. Vendors will be on hand for those needing that unique soccer item.

It has been said that soccer is not a "spectator sport." Tell that to the 24 million parents and relatives who gather each weekend to watch their children's games. Nor can we forget those that attend college games, or those that watch college, national, or international games at home on television.

Soccer is most assuredly a "family sport." Both children and parents alike can play; parents are invited to try their hand at coaching, refereeing, or managing. Volunteers to work are always needed. As with all things done by our children, the success is often measured in the involvement and support of the family. If you want to become more involved, if you have a desire to assist in the success of our local association, please get in touch with the MSA office--there is a spot for all that truly want to help. Please remember, that in all recreational sports, volunteers make the difference. The hours are usually long, and there is no pay (not financial anyway), but you can make a difference for your child and others down the line. MSA offers a wide variety of assistance through coaching and referee clinics. The Association appreciates all its volunteers!

The time for soccer has arrived! Get on the soccer ball and enjoy the ride.

Al Weinkauf, President
