'Relentless' Soviet weapons drive reported

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger today issued a new report which he said documents a "relentless" Soviet drive toward military superiority in all fields, including space warfare.

"The recent change in Soviet leadership gives every indication that neither the direction or the pace of military programs is likely to slacken," said the 107-page document detailing Soviet arms gains since late 1981. That was when Weinberger put out his first such report.

"The U.S.S.R. during the past year has pushed ahead with force modernization, expansion and forward deployment on a scale even larger than before," the report said.

In a forward, Weinberger said that "the updated facts presented in this report leave no doubt as to the U.S.S.R.'s dedication to achieving military superiority in all fields."

A senior defense official, asked to assess the overall thrust of the Soviet buildup, told reporters at a briefing: "It looks like they're trying to dominate the world."

However, under questioning, the official — who spoke on the condition that his name not be used — said that "strategically we are better" than the Soviets in strategic nuclear weapons. "We are holding our own," he said.

Another official, said the Soviets are superior in intercontinental ballistic missiles but that the United States is "obviously superior" in missile-firing submarines, although the Soviets are starting to deploy a giant new missile-launching submarine called the Typhoon. He said the two countries are about even in bombers.

The document was issued in an obvious attempt to muster support for President Reagan's embattled defense spending plans at a time when even Republicans loyal to the administration are calling for cuts.

Unlike many government documents, the latest Pentagon report — entitled "Soviet Military Power" — was printed in a form designed to attract readers in the general public, as well as Congress. The red-covered report is filled with multicolored sketches, photographs, illustrations and easy-to-read charts.

It contained no real surprises but does provide details on a wide variety of Soviet weapons and confirms some unofficial reports, such as the recent Soviet testing of a second new solid-fuel, intercontinental ballistic missile.

The report was issued several days after government specialists on the Soviet Union reported that Soviet military spending from 1976 to 1981 rose at a slower rate than they previously had estimated — about 2 percent a year rather than an average 3 percent a year during that period.

However, those specialists cautioned that Soviet research and production facilities have expanded rapidly, suggesting that "we may be facing a new burst of Soviet weapons output."

Indicating rising concern about Soviet space developments, the report devoted much more attention than the 1981 document to what it refers to as a "Soviet quest for military supremacy" in space.

It said the Soviets could be able to launch their first prototype of a space-based laser anti-satellite system in the late 1980s or very early 1990s.

Anti-missile systems using space-based lasers could be tested in the 1990s "but probably would not be operational until the turn of the century," the report said.

The Pentagon said the Soviet program to develop high-energy laser weapons is three to five times bigger than the U.S. effort.

Since 1981, the Soviets have tested high-energy laser systems for land- and sea-based air defenses, it disclosed. In the late 1980s, the report said, "it is possible that the Soviets could produce laser weapons for several... ground, ship and aerospace applications."

Laser weapons, using intense beams of light to destroy targets, would represent revolutionary advances in warfare.

The report said also said the Soviet commitment to its manned space program is growing.

"The development of a large manned space station by about 1990 to maintain a military presence in space is one of the goals of the new heavy-lift launcher (rocket) systems now in development," the report said.

In addition, it suggested that, before the end of the century, the Soviets will send aloft space stations that could weigh more than 100 tons "and be able to support a large crew for extended periods without replenishment."

The United States has no plans for a manned space station, and its program for possible development of a space laser weapon is in a preliminary stage, with a firm decision due in 1987 on whether to proceed.

Available evidence indicates that the Soviets are developing a space system similar to the American space shuttle as well as what was described as "a smaller space plane."

The Soviets already have conducted some orbital developmend without elaboration.

Discussing Soviet advances in the current generation of strategic weapons, the report acknowledged that the Soviets have conducted their first tests of a new solid-fueled, long-range ballistic missile similar in size to the planned U.S. MX missile, and have conducted the first test launch of a new, small, solid-propellant ICBM that could be made mobile.

Pentagon briefing officers said the solid-fueled ICBM would not violate terms of the SALT II arms control treaty because it represents a "variation" of a previously tested such missile.

The report gave fresh details on the new long-range Soviet bomber, code-named Blackjack A, which it said could join the Soviet air force as early as 1986 or 1987.

This bomber, said to be bigger than the new U.S. B-1, will be capable of flying unrefueled more than 4,500 miles with a full load of bombs and cruise missiles, and will be able to reach 1,200 mph. That is about the same combat radius as the B-1, but nearly twice as fast, according to the report.

British ambassador says oil stabilization desired

Hamilton Whyte, ambassador of the United Kingdom to the United Nations, today said Britain wants oil prices to stabilize in light of discussions by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries today in London.

"We don't want the price and supply situation such that it will be chaotic," Whyte said today during a news conferene at the Petroleum Museum as part of a visit to Midland sponsored by Elcor Corporation. He was to speak at a luncheon at noon at the Petroleum Club.

After a tour of the museum, he remarked on the history of Midland and England, noting that Midland began about 100 years ago, but 100 years in England is nothing. However, when it comes to the oil business, England is just catching up to Midland.

"We got into the oil industry rather belatedly," he said.

The price of oil on the world market is being negotiated right now at an OPEC conference in London. "The OPEC price is of great concern to the British," he aid. "We have a stake in the sale of crude oil. The oil price will work through the economy. We use receipts from the sale of oil to update our industry and our technology."

Whyte turned to Britain's problems resulting from recession, including high unemployment, high interest rates and high inflation. He noted that inflation is going down, but the country needs new business investments.

City finance director submits his resignation

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Grant Walton has resigned his position as finance director, to become effective when a replacement has been hired, according to City Manager James Brown.

Walton, who has been with the city about three years, telephoned his resignation to Brown on March 2, but hasn't turned in a written notice, the city manager said.

Brown cited a lack of communication from the finance department as a major reason for the resignation, adding that what finally "tipped it over" was learning in February the city was $1 million behind in sales tax rebates.

About one-third of the city's general fund revenues comes from that one cent sales tax rebated monthly by the state comptroller's office. Walton told the Midland Reporter-Telegram in a Feb. 17 story that the city had planned on $11 million coming in from sales tax. At that point, the city was about $1 million below where it should have been.

The fiscal year started Oct. 1, 1982, and rebates had fallen each month starting in November.

Brown said the finance department had followed a practice of submitting a monthly financial statement to him and the city council. "Since Oct. 1, we haven't had a monthly statement. We didn't know where the city stood financially."

After one city councilman had read in a newspaper article that the city of Fort Worth was cutting its budget due to dropping sales tax rebates, Brown called for the figures from the finance department.

Brown saw that the city's revenues had dropped each month, with the total adding up to $1 million. At this rate, he said, the city may be $3 million below what had been expected when the fiscal year ends on Sept. 30.

"I had relied on them (finance department) to let me know," Brown said.

Part of the problem, he noted, is that outside auditors had been in the department since Oct. 1, and didn't finish until Sunday.

Brown said Walton, 40, might stay with the city in a lower position after a new finance director is hired, although the decision will be up to the new director.

"Walton is a very fine accountant and very honest. There was just not enough communication," Brown said.

Walton's salary is $4,131 per month.

Parents sue city, county in son's death

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Parents of a 15-year-old Midland high school student who was killed when the sports coupe in which he was riding and a pickup collided at a construction site on Fairgrounds Road in northeast Midland on Dec. 11, 1981, have lodged a $3 million lawsuit in Midland's 142nd State District Court against the city of Midland, Midland County and the owner and driver of the car in which the youth was riding.

The parents claim "gross negligence" on the part of the county and city.

Ezequiel Laing Sr. and his wife, Inez Laing, allege that the 1980 Ford Mustang sports coupe in which their son, Ezequiel Laing Jr., was a passenger, struck a concrete block on the roadway, glanced off and careened into the path of a 1981 Chevrolet pickup being driven by Jose Sanchez.

'Little bird' tells Stripling's panel Alger Hiss' secrets

part four

EDITOR'S NOTE: The 1930s and '40s were a period of self-examination for America as the fear of communism spread. This is the fourth of a six-part series on Midlander Robert Stripling's experiences amid this political climate through two decades in Washington. Today's article deals with Richard Nixon's involvement in the Alger Hiss investigation.

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Alger Hiss left his house in Washington, D.C., one Sunday morning to indulge in his favorite pastime: bird-watching. On the banks of the Potomac River he spotted a rare bird, a prothonotary warbler.

Excitedly, he went back home and told his family and others about the find. A few years later, that small bird proved to be part of the unraveling of Hiss in testimony before the House Unamerican Activities Committee.

Robert Stripling, as chief investigator for HUAC, was seeking verification of charges by a Time magazine senior editor that Hiss had leaked secrets to the Communist government.

David Whittaker Chambers contended he and his family had lived with Alger Hiss during part of the time that he, too, was involved with the Communist Party.

Straightening out this tangled web of stories was Stripling's last assignment with the committee before he resigned to enter the oil business in Midland. He worked closely with one committee member in particular — Richard M. Nixon. And while the Hiss case closed Stripling's career in government Nixon used it to put him on the road to the presidency, conveniently forgetting what the chief investigator and HUAC members had done.

TO THIS DAY, Stripling refers to himself as "Tricky Dick's first victim." And he would like to see the record corrected.

During that HUAC closed session with Hiss, Stripling asked if he had any hobbies. Hiss replied, "Bird-watching."

The panel sat behind a long, enclosed table and Hiss couldn't see when Stripling kicked Rep. John McDowell of New Jersey. The congressman picked up his cue and noted that he, too, enjoyed bird-watching. In fact, he said in pulling Hiss along, "he had once seen this rare warbler," Stripling says in relating the event. "Hiss got excited and said he'd seen one, too, and described that Sunday morning which Chambers had told us about."

The committee had its confirmation that Chambers had been telling the truth about knowing Hiss. What followed was the famous meeting between Hiss and Chambers in a New York hotel room with Stripling and Nixon as witnesses. Hiss admitted he knew Chambers but only by the name of George Crosley. He continued to deny charges of being a Soviet spy.

Investigation into the case then came almost to a standstill as the panel of congressmen concentrated on the fall elections.

But, said Stripling, a pre-trial deposition was being taken of Hiss and Chambers in Baltimore by the Justice Department and it was there that the senior reporter handed over copies of State Department papers that contained secret information. These, claimed Chambers, came from Hiss.

Testimony to start in officers' trial

Black officer to be key witness

DALLAS (AP) — A black New Orleans detective who claims he helped beat and torture blacks while investigating a policeman's murder will be the government's key witness in the civil rights trial of seven white officers, lawyers said.

The defendants are accused of terrorizing residents of the mostly black Algiers section of New Orleans during interrogations into the Nov. 8, 1980, shooting death of white policeman Gregory Neupert.

Both sides outlined their cases in opening arguments Tuesday after an all-white jury was selected to hear the case. They also clashed over the credibility of each other's witnesses.

Testimony in the case was to begin today before U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer.

The trial was moved to Dallas because of publicity in New Orleans, where protests over four deaths during the investigation of Neupert's death prompted the resignation of Police Superintendent James Parsons.

Defense attorney Ralph Whalen on Tuesday called star prosecution witness Oris Buckner, a black homicide detective, "notoriously incompetent," and said Buckner's immunity to prosecution will taint his testimony.

But government lawyer Linda Hagerty said the detective would be an articulate witness who would describe taking part in at least one police attack.

Many government witnesses in the case "are black and white, poor and relatively uneducated, and will have difficulty telling you what they know, because they have difficulty expressing themselves," the prosecutor said.

But Whalen called the prosecution witnesses "street smart... Their testimony will be so filled with inconsistencies that you will wonder why you are here at all."

The seven defendants face a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine if convicted on a felony civil rights charge, and a year in jail and a $1,000 fine if convicted on a separate misdemeanor count.

The indictment alleges the defendants handcuffed and tied interrogation subjects to chairs, hit them in the head with a large book, punched them in the chest and put paper sacks over their heads to prevent them from breathing.

They also are accused of taking people to secluded areas to be "restrained, beaten, assaulted, bagged and threatened with firearms."

One of the defendants, Stephen Reboul, 29, was fired from the New Orleans police for misconduct unrelated to the trial.

Five of the seven New Orleans police officers on trial in Dallas arrive at the Federal Courthouse Tuesday for the second day of jury selection. The officers are accused of violating and conspiring to violate the civil rights of people they questioned in connection with the death of fellow officer.

Former repairman is murder suspect

HOUSTON (AP) — An unemployed maintenance worker is a prime suspect in the slaying of a 74-year-old woman found dead in the bathtub of her westside apartment, police say.

The 29-year-old Houston resident, arrested in San Antonio on an unrelated felony theft warrant, also was being questioned about the deaths of three other wealthy woman, including the estranged wife of former Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus, living in the same area.

No charges had been filed against the man late Tuesday, detectives said.

Police Lt. H.W. Kersten said the man became a suspect throuogh a "process of elimination."

Kersten said detectives learned the man had worked as a repairman at the Brittany Place Apartments where one victim, Bertie E. Eakins, had lived.

Detective J.C. Mosier also said the man was spotted driving a 1982 ivory-colored Cadillac similar to one stolen from Mrs. Eakins. "He took it home with him," Mosier said.

Bexar County authorities in San Antonio were searching Tuesday for the missing Cadillac.

The man had worked at the apartment complex from January to September 1982 repairing plumbing and appliances, said manager Laverne Witt.

"He was always very polite, respectful, the kind of guy you wouldn't be afraid to let in your home," Ms. Witt said.

However, she said, he was dismissed after he "got messed up. He and his wife started having marital problems and he wasn't doing the work so I had to fire him."

Before he left the complex, she said, he tore up a refrigerator, drapes and a kitchen cabinet and knocked holes in the walls.

Mosier said investigators had questioned the man's wife Monday night, but declined to elaborate further.

Mrs. Eakins' beaten body was found March 1 first in a bathrub at her fashionable westside apartment. Her hands had been handcuffed behind her.

White supports revised death penalty measure

AUSTIN (AP) — Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Rockwall, said Tuesday he has drawn Gov. Mark White's support for a measure allowing the death penalty for murders involving aggravated sexual abuse.

At present, Texas' capital murder law allows the death penalty only for the slaying of a peace officer or a murder committed during a kidnapping, burglary, robbery, aggravated rape or arson.

Lyon said a 1980 Dallas murder shows the need for the revision. A 14-year-old girl was slain after being sexually assaulted with a tree limb.

"Her body was so badly mutilated that the medical examiner could not determine whether or not the man had raped her. As a result, he could not be convicted on capital murder charges," said Lyon.

The defendant in the case was allowed to plead guilty to a lesser charge.

Secretary of State John Fainter said at a Tuesday news conference that White would make the Lyon bill "part of his criminal justice package."

Teen to be tried in mom's death

BELTON (AP) — A Central Texas teen-ager accused of killing his mother after an argument over a traffic ticket and his grades has been certified to stand trial as an adult.

State District Judge William Black, acting as the juvinile court judge, certified Clint Reed, 16, of Temple as an adult after a day-long hearing Tuesday.

Truck spills hydrochloric acid

BEAUMONT (AP) — Seven thousand gallons of hydrochloric acid spilled from a truck onto a major highway today, creating an acid cloud that forced the evacuation of more than 400 people, police said.

One police officer was hospitalized briefly for treatment of acid burns, and the driver of the tank-truck also got acid on his hands and clothing when the tank ruptured at about 12:40 a.m., said police Capt. Joe Crutchfield.

He said 400 to 500 people were evacuated from a nightclub shortly after 1 a.m. when the acid, combining with liquid in the air, formed a corrosive cloud that drifted toward a residential subdivision.

Officials were uncertain why the tank, owned by Dow Chemical, split open east of Interstate Highway 10. The tank-truck remained upright as acid spilled onto the highway, witnesses said.

Mattox rules on interracial marriage

AUSTIN (AP) — Three Tarrant County justices of the peace cannot refuse to marry interracial couples, the state attorney general has ruled.

An opinion by Attorney General Jim Mattox, requested by the State Commission on Judicial Conduct after a complaint from the Texas Civil Liberties Union, said the justices' policy violated equal protection guarantees in the U.S. Constitution.

Justices John Forbes of Arlington, Sandy Prindle of Hurst and Eldon Sheffield of Mansfield had said they would not marry interracial couples because such marriages often failed.

Mattox' opinion, issued Tuesday, said justices of the peace can decide not to perform any marriages, but cannot "refuse to conduct a marriage ceremony for the reason that the parties are not of the same race."

Man sentenced for throwing child

HOUSTON (AP) — A man who threw his 5-year-old stepdaughter to the pavement, apparently out of frustration that his car had stalled on a road, has been sentenced to 10 years in prison.

John M. Gravese, 41, was convicted in January on a charge of injury to a child and sentenced Tuesday by State District Judge William Hatten.

Witnesses said they saw Graves throw the child on the pavement and they flagged down passing police officers.

The child's mother was walking to a service station to get gasoline for the stalled car at the time, police said.

The child, who suffered scratches and bruises, was placed in the custody of the Harris County Child Welfare Unit.

Dead patients' families sue Autumn Hills

GALVESTON (AP) — Relatives of eight patients who allegedly died of improper care at a Texas City nursing home have sued the Houston-based nursing home chain, the state of Texas and a former Galveston County prosecutor.

The suit, alleging a "civil conspiracy" surrounded the controversial case against Autumn Hillls Convalescent Centers Inc., was filed Tuesday by Galveston attorney Robert Moore on behalf of Margarethe E. Kantowski, one of eight patients who died at the facility between 1978 and 1979.

The suit did not seek specific damages, but sources told the Galveston Daily News that they hoped to be awarded several million dollars.

In addition to the nursing home firm, former prosecutor David Marks, Galveston County and the Texas Department of Health were named as defendants.

Marks declined to comment about the suit, saying it would be "inappropriate to talk about it." Dr. Robert Bernstein, health department commissioner, said he was unaware of the suit and refused comment.

Austin attorney Roy Minton, who represents Autumn Hills, failed to return telephone calls.

The corporation and eight current and former employees were indicted by a Galveston County grand jury for allegedly murdering the eight patients by neglect and abuse.

Former Galveston County District Attorney James Hury in December agreed to a plea bargain allowing the corporation to plead no contest to a charge of involuntary manslaughter in the death of one patient. In return, all murder charges were dismissed.

But the agreement was nullified in January and District Attorney Mike Guarino indicated the case will be heard soon by another grand jury.

The suit filed Tuesday claims the Texas Health Department shunned its role as an enforcer of nursing home regulations and has a protective attitude toward the nursing home industry.

Marks, who objected to the plea bargain and was fired, now is investigating the case for the Texas attorney general.

Oil price stability sought

Questioned about the current status of the Falkland Islands, Whyte said it is unlikely there will be any settlement with Argentina in the near future. "All attempts by the British government to get back to business as usual in Buenos Aires have failed," he said, adding that Argentina and Great Britain are still haggling over the sovereignty issue.

He noted that the war kept going because previous negotiations between the United Nations, Alexander Haig and the Argentinian government failed.

"If there had been any indication for an agreement, we could have worked it out" and avoided a war on the "windy, cold piece of real estate in the south Atlantic," he said. "But there was nothing.

"We have no alternative but to maintain a garrison (at the Falklands)," he added.

Concerning the United Nations and its purpose, he admitted that mediation by the U.N. in disagreements between countries has not been very effective. Comparing the makeup of the U.N. to the board that runs a company, he said it is comprised of 157 countries and "we all speak different languages. It's a wonder the railroad runs at all."

However, he pointed out "it's the only multi-national organization that we have."

Whyte said he wishes that more countries would use the U.N. to mediate their differences before they get involved in a war.

He also criticized the United States' role in the U.N., saying "the U.S. is not conspicuous for trumpeting the positive aspects of the United Nations and for not going to the U.N. with their problems.

"The U.N. is little understood, less than sexy, much derided. Increasing use should be made of it. The planet gets smaller and more populated. No one can police the world more effectively than the U.N. We need to hang on to this organization and try to make it work better," he said.

Questioned about Central America and the U.S. involvement there, he suggested that the Organization of American States might be able to play a mediating role. "From the British point of view, El Salvador and its neighborhood is very much in the backyard of the U.S., even though it's a long way from the United Kingdom."

Concerning a proposal that the United States support a nuclear freeze, Whyte said "it won't come out with an equitable result in East-West terms. We need to develop the nuclear score before you can freeze it."

Stripling, Nixon and 'little bird' unravel Alger Hiss investigation

THE BREAK that led Stripling to the now-famous "Pumpkin Papers" came from a man called Nicholas Vazzana who dropped by Stripling's office on the ground floor of the House office building on Dec. 1, 1948.

"He walked into my office and sat down and said, 'If I were Hiss, I would,' and he drew his finger across his throat as if to to say, 'If I were Hiss I would cut my throat.'

"I asked him to repeat it. He went through the same motion, saying he couldn't say anymore about it," Stripling said of that day.

Vazzana was a lawyer who knew about the documents turned over by Chambers to the Justice Department and didn't want to let the case die.

His planned drop-in visit that morning spurred Stripling into action. He grabbed Vazzana and took him up to Nixon's fifth floor office. "Vazzana said it involved documents and was a bombshell."

While Nixon wanted no part of Vazzana, Stripling was convinced the lawyer had been sent to get them moving on the case.

From this point on, stories differ as to what happened. Nixon has one version in his book, "Six Crises". Chambers has another in his book, "Witness." And Stripling paints a third scenario.

THE FORMER CONGRESSMAN wrote in his book: "Playing a long hunch, I suggested to Stripling that we drive to Westminster at once and talk to Chambers."

Wrong, said Stripling. That's not the way it evolved.

Nixon wasn't interested in working any more on the Hiss case. He and wife Pat were leaving the next day for a Panama cruise. Stripling, however, wanted Nixon to accompany him out to Chambers' farm in Westminster.

"I asked him to have lunch with me at Ted Lewis' place, which is just across the street from the old House office building," Stripling recalled. "I tried to explain to him that I was convinced that Chambers had been withholding information and he had decided to come forth with some very damaging information and that was the reason Vazzana had been sent to us."

Nixon didn't agree. Stripling vividly recalled that lunch and Nixon's remarks. "He said, 'I'm so — damned sick and tired of this case I don't want to hear anymore about it. To hell with it and you and the whole damned business.'"

Stripling wanted to break the case before he left Washington for the oilfields in two weeks.

But Nixon still fought the idea of driving out to see Chambers. "'You can do what you damn want to, but I'm through with it.' He worked me over real good, something that had never happened to me before by a member of Congress," Stripling said. "I recall it very well in that it upset me so that I didn't touch my lunch."

THE TWO MEN walked back to the House office building and parted. Stripling called his secretary, Rose Purdy, who was also a court reporter, to get her notebook and have a car waiting at 3 p.m. As they were going out the door, Stripling hesitated and went back in to call Nixon.

"I got him on the phone and said, 'Congressman, I'm ready to go, come on and go with me. I'm convinced it will break this case.' He said, 'Damn it, if it'll shut your mouth, I'll go.'"

Nixon climbed into the back seat and "sulked all the way. He didn't say one word."

But Stripling did. Sitting in the back seat of the car without uttering a word, Nixon listened as Stripling predicted the congressman would some day be president.

"I told Nixon I'd worked on Capitol Hill for 18 years and had seen a lot of people come and go. 'If you get over this limbertail, you could get to be president of the United States. You're a damn smart man.'"

Stripling was correct in his predictions, but he didn't know it would be at his expense.

Nor did Nixon realize he was about to have the first of a series of problems with "tapes" in his life.

Natural gas plan opposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's plan to lift all price controls from natural gas faces an uphill battle in both House and Senate, largely because of consumer fears over climbing prices, congressional leaders say.

Leaders of both parties say it seems unlikely that Reagan's plan to lift all price lids on the fuel by 1986 will be enacted without major modifications.

For one thing, the bill has plenty of rivals — some 20 separate competing versions in the House and six in the Senate, ranging from partial decontrol of prices to reimposition of controls that have already been lifted.

"There is going to be a terrific battle because people just don't understand why natural gas prices have been climbing," said House Republican Leader Robert Michel of Illinois.

Reagan against freeze

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, saying a nuclear weapons freeze now would be a fraud, is campaigning against the proposal by drawing attention to the Soviet Union's "enormous and unparalleled military buildup."

The president traveled to Florida Tuesday where he asked church leaders to spread his anti-freeze message from their pulpits and support "peace through strength."

Also on Tuesday, the House Foreign Affairs Committee approved a resolution calling for a "mutual and verifiable freeze" of U.S. and Soviet arsenals, as supporters and opponents staged rallies on the Capitol steps.

Today, the administration is making public a 107-page, glossy booklet updating a two-year-old report on Soviet military strength.

Larry Speakes, the chief deputy White House press secretary, said the speech and the booklet were part of the administration's effort to publicize the Soviet's military growth.

The administration hopes that "once the American people understand the threat," they will be more amenable to the president's efforts to increase U.S. military spending by 10 percent and negotiate an arms reduction agreement before freezing weapons strength, Speakes said.

Proponents of a freeze advocate holding weaponry at current levels and then moving to talks aimed at reductions.

"I would agree to a freeze if only we could freeze the Soviets' global desires," the president said.

Parents file $3 million lawsuit in connection with son's death

The Laings claim the construction zone at the city-county line was under control of the city of Midland and Midland County.

Co-defendants in the suit are James Nunez, then 16, who was driver of the Mustang and, Ruben Nunez, owner of the car, says the suit's petition.

Site of the mishap on Fairgrounds Road was near Pecan Avenue and near Ranchland Hills Country Club.

The Laings alleged the city and county of Midland were negligent in:

—"Leaving a large concrete block in the roadway.

—"Failing to use warning devices of any kind to warn users of the roadway that a large concrete block was in the roadway.

—"Failing to place flashing lights near the concrete block to warn users of the roadway of such hazard.

—"Placing only one flashing light next to the curb so many feet away from the location of the concrete block that it could not properly warn users of the roadway of such hazardous condition.

—"Failing to erect barricades at the construction zone.

—"Failing to erect any type of traffic control devices at such construtions zone.

—"Failing to inspect the roadway in question for unsafe conditions."

The parents contend the "dangerous condition" of the road "exhibited such an entire want of care" on part of the county and city "so as to raise the belief that such was the result of a conscious indifference to the rights and/or welfare" of other people traveling on the roadway.

For that alleged "gross negligence," the parents are seeking $2 million in punitive damages. In addition, they are asking for $1 million in actual damages, $50,000 for the suffering of their son and $10,000 to cover his funeral expenses.

In complaining of the Nunez youth, who allegedly was operating the Mustang with the "full permission and consent" of Ruben Nunez, the Laing parents allege that the driver:

—Failed "to keep a proper lookout."

—Failed "to make timely and proper application of the brakes on the vehicle he was driving."

—Operated the car "at a rate of speed in excess of that which an ordinarily prudent person" would have driven.

The parents, who seek a jury trial, are being represented in the suit by Odessa lawyer Warren Burnett.

Defense report details Soviet weapons drive

At the same time, the report said the Soviets are developing at least one long-range, air-launched cruise missile, which would be able to strike targets nearly 2,000 miles away.

On the defensive side, the report disclosed that the Soviets are improving their anti-ballistic missile system around Moscow with a gigantic new radar that will provide wider coverage.

Also, the report said, the Soviets are building additional ABM sites and installing new launchers. These improvements, which could be completed by the mid-1980s, are allowed by the 1972 treaty limiting ABM defenses, the report noted.

The Soviets also have started deploying the Foxhound A, described as their first interceptor plane capable of looking and shooting down at enemy planes that might try to sneak into Soviet territory under the view of ground radar.

In addition, the Soviets are working on two other "look-down, shoot-down" fighters for air defense and these may enter service soon, the report said.

Meanwhile, the Soviets are deploying their new SA-10 surface-to-air missile, which the report said can engage a number of enemy planes and possibly cruise missiles simultaneously at any altitude. The SA-10 is replacing a 30-year-old defensive missile network around Moscow, the report said.

A mobile version of this potent air defense missile is said to be in the works.

The report spoke of major Soviet advances in conventional land, air and sea power.

At least several hundred of the new Soviet T-80 tanks, equipped with nuclear, biological and chemical protection and greater firepower, have been deployed to Soviet forces in Eastern Europe, the report said. Briefing officers said the Soviets had produced 1,900 of the tanks.

Counting improved versions of older tanks, the document spoke of "a dramatic shift in the proportion of these modern tanks as part of the total Soviet inventory opposite NATO."

The booklet contained what appears to be the first declassified photograph of a T-80.

In the air, the report said the Soviets have sent their new SU-25 Frogfoot ground attack jet to forward bases in Afghanistan to provide close air support for more than 105,000 Soviet troops attempting to suppress Afghan resistance to Soviet occupation.

Other new weapons deployed to Eastern Europe and to border bases in Asia include long-range SU-24 Fencer ground attack planes, SS-21 short-range ballistic missiles, and 152mm self-propelled guns. All these weapons are rated as potentially nuclear.

As for naval power, the report said Soviet shipards are producing four new classes of surface warships, including nuclear and conventional cruisers and guided missiles. At the same time, five Soviet shipyards are said to be turning out new attack submarines "for the world's largest submarine force."

Weinberger said the Soviets have more than 4.9 million men in the ground, air and naval forces, an increase of about 100,000 since 1981.

The United States has strengthened its forces by about 19,000 to slightly over 2.1 million over the same span.

Contoversial freeze resolution headed for house vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. is predicting a "very, very close" vote next week on a nuclear weapons freeze resolution, even though a key panel approved the measure overwhelmingly.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee endorsed a freeze resolution 27-9 Tuesday as opponents and supporters rallied in gray, drizzling weather outside the Capitol.

Meanwhile in Orlando, Fla., President Reagan urged evangelical leaders to speak out against backers of the freeze and "those who would place the United States in a position of military and moral inferiority."

At a Capitol Hill rally, the Rev. Jerry Falwell, head of the Moral Majority, predicted, "The American people will have repudiated the freeze-niks" by the 1984 elections.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., on the other hand, said it is "voodoo arms control" for the administration to argue that an arms buildup is needed as a prelude to a meaningful agreement to curb nuclear missiles.

Capitol Police estimated that between 4,000 and 5,000 people heard Kennedy and others at the pro-freeze rally, and between 600 and 700 freeze opponents attended the Falwell counter-demonstration.

Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., a leading supporter of a freeze, said he expected the resolution to be approved when it comes to a vote in the House, possibly next Tuesday.

O'Neill, D-Mass., made the "very, very close" assessment in a meeting with reporters.

Randall Forsberg, a leader of the Nuclear Weapons Freeze Campaign, told a meeting of supporters earlier this week that the resolution is expected to fall short by 10 votes or less in the Republican-controlled Senate.

Rep. Clement Zablocki, D-Wis., chairman of Foreign Affairs, said the resolution was "the best way of achieving progress at the START negotiations" — the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks being negotiated in Geneva.

"This is not an exercise in congressional boat-rocking or meddling in the affairs of the executive branch," Zablocki said.

Rep. Henry J. Hyde, R-Ill., however, said, "The resolution by definition rejects START and says 'stop.' I suggest this is politics, not policy."

The resolution calls upon the administration to use the START talks for the purposes of "pursuing a complete halt to the nuclear arms race" and "deciding when and how to achieve a mutual verifiable freeze on testing, production and further deployment of nuclear warheads, missiles and other delivery systems."

Tuesday's vote was little different from one last year in which the committee approved a similar resolution 28-8. That measure failed on the floor, 204-202, on Aug. 5.

Markey maintains enough freeze supporters were elected in November to put the measure over in the House.

At the pro-freeze rally, Kennedy said the United States currently has about 9,000 nuclear warheads while the Soviets have about 7,000.

Speaking along with Falwell at the freeze opponents' rally was Rep. Phil Gramm, R-Tex.

City has granny signs

DEERFIELD, Ill. (AP) — This Chicago suburb, which put up "No Kissing" signs at a commuter train station three years ago, has come up with "Granny Crossing" signs for elderly pedestrians.

The signs, showing a purse-toting elderly woman hand-in-hand with a Boy Scout, were put up near a senior-citizens housing complex after the complex manager complained to the village board about an unsafe traffic crossing.

"Several times I have seen near-misses," manager Gail McGilliard said.

The board recently accepted an idea by assistant village manager Marge Emery to use granny-crossing signs instead of the traditional pedestrian crossing versions.

Ms. McGilliard said she doesn't know if the signs are having much of an effect, but they cause "a good double-take."

"People are stopping for them," she said. "Maybe there is an extra watchful eye now that the signs are there."

Mrs. Emery also thought up the village's no-kissing signs in 1979, when commuters and their spouses caused regular necking bottlenecks at the local Milwaukee Road station.

The original sign depicted a woman in curlers smooching a hat-wearing man — with a red slash across the drawing. A similar sign — but without the slash — was marked "Kissing Zone" and erected in a nearby parking lot.

The no-kissing sign was stolen, as were several successors before the village replaced the $50 metal signs with a tar-backed cardboard version. It also began selling hundreds of the cardboard signs for $2.50, and smaller, ceramic-tile versions for $3.

New Yorkers win

WASHINGTON (AP) — High school students from New York State are the winners of eight of the 10 top prizes in the 42nd annual Westinghouse Science Talent Search.

Paul Chih Ning, 16, a Taiwan native who came to this country at age 3, was the first prize winner.

A paper on advanced number theory won a $12,000 scholarship for the Bronx High School of Science student, who said earlier he hoped to do well "to make the principal happy."

His efforts were in theoretical math, and the youngster responded to a question on practical use of the work with the comment: "It doesn't have to have an application."

Ning said he got the idea for his project in a special program last summer at Ohio State University. He has also participated in math projects at Columbia University.

Second prize and a $10,000 scholarship went to Michael Hyman, 18, of Ellicott City, Md. A student at Centennial High School, Hyman constructed a three-dimensional system of graphics for small computers.

Another New Yorker won the $10,000 scholarship for third place. He is Eric Koide of Dobbs Ferry, whose project involved genetics research into cancer in mice and rats.

Fourth through sixth prizes, each a $7,500 scholarship, went to Larry Gene Spears Jr., of Houston; Caroline Gomez of Cohoes, N.Y., and Elihu H. McMahon II of New York City.

Winners of $5,000 scholarships were Alexandra Kroeger of Shoreham, N.Y., Gina Levy of New Rochelle, N.Y., Jeannie Lo of Brooklyn, N.Y., and Janet Pan of Flushing, N.Y.

Another EPA official joins suspicion list

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chief of the Environmental Protection Agency's pesticide program may have destroyed or altered appointment books sought by a House committee, according to a congressman who says such an act would be a criminal offense.

Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., chairman of a House government operations subcommittee probing allegations of scandal at the EPA, said Tuesday night he is investigating the allegations he received against Dr. John Todhunter, assistant administrator for pesticides and toxics.

Charles Dempsey, acting inspector general of the EPA, said he began his own investigation after Synar told him of the accusation.

Todhunter has an unlisted telephone number and could not be reached for comment.

EPA spokesman Rusty Brashear said the department is "looking at" Synar's allegations but added, "any other comment is premature."

Todhunter's boss, EPA Administrator Anne McGill Burford, also came under renewed congressional fire Tuesday, with House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel calling for her resignation.

"I don't know a thing about the inner workers of the EPA. All I do know is that the agency has not been managed well and that the administration has already taken steps...to clean up the mess with the appointment of several top-notch civil service administrators," Michel said in a speech.

"Now all logic dictates that if things were so bad as to bring you to that point, you're eventually going to have to go all the way and make a move at the top," the Illinois Republican said. "Eventually, there's going to have to be new leadership at the very top, along with the new management people recently chosen."

Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., said Tuesday night that Mrs. Burford's troubles present "an opportunity to change the direction of an agency that could be much more effective than it has been in the past."

Another Republican senator, Alfonse D'Amato of New York, said earlier in Albany, "To get down to doing the very serious business of the people, there should be a new administrator."

Six congressional committees are investigating the EPA's handling of a $1.6 billion "superfund" to clean up hazardous wase sites.

Synar's subcommittee is trying to determine whether Todhunter had improper contacts with representatives of companies regulated by EPA.

It also is investigating whether there was a conflict in the award of a contract by Todhunter's office to a former employer of the assistant administrator.

"The subcommittee has received information alleging that documents requested by this subcommittee, including appointments books kept by Dr. John Todhunter...have been altered and perhaps destroyed," Synar said in a statement.

Times Beach aid causes hesitation

Legislators unsure of procedure

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — A legislative committee has balked at appropriating $3.5 million to help buy out dioxin-contaminated homes and property in Times Beach, saying federal officials have refused to explain how the purchases would be handled.

The special House-Senate negotiating committee took the action Tuesday. But it said if Patrick Breheny, regional director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, answered their questions, the money could be added to another appropriation bill later this week.

The $3.5 million would be added to $33 million from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to buy the contaminated property in Times Beach.

"I can't release a plan until we get a commitment," Breheny said Tuesday.

Earlier, a former Times Beach resident, Laine Jumper, charged before the committee that families in the town had experienced a suspicious number of serious illnesses.

He said residents of a two-block area had gotten together over the last few months and compared stories of illnesses they had suffered.

Of 33 families, "27 have members who have had serious health problems," Jumper told the committee. He said his own newborn daughter had died of massive heart problems and a neighbor's baby had died of cancer.

In addition, a mother died during childbirth because her body's immune systems had broken down, and another child was born with severe brain damage. The rate of birth defects, cancer and other serious illnesses among the residents was much higher than the average for such diseases generally, he added.

Jumper said the EPA had downplayed the seriousness of the dioxin-related health problems.

Twenty-six sites in Missouri are known to be contaminated with unsafe levels of dioxin, a highly toxic byproduct of herbicide manufacturing.

Four new sites were confirmed by the EPA this week, and the agency has said it suspects there may be 30 other dioxin-tainted sites in Missouri.

Vote overwhelmingly anti-acid rain

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — New Hampshire residents voted overwhelmingly at town meetings to tell Congress they are tired of pollution falling on them as acid rain — fouling waterways, damaging forests and threatening drinking water.

Residents of at least 61 towns around the state approved a resolution Tuesday calling on Congress to halve by 1990 emissions from Midwest factories that are blamed for causing acid rain in the Northeast.

"I don't know who could be opposed to this," Town Moderator Russell Shillaber said in Strafford.

No one in his town and very few people in others were against the proposal. Preliminary reports showed the resolution was not defeated in a single town — although voters in Croydon tabled the question.

By the time the meetings statewide end next week, the resolution will have been debated in 194 of the state's 224 towns.

"Five ponds in this state are dead — not even a weed will grow," said Paul Hanson at Rollingsford's Town Meeting, arguing for the resolution. "A mountain is dead in Vermont and it's caused by acid rain, and there's more coming."

His neighbors then voted overwhelmingly to approve the resolution to cut the acid rain pollution.

Most of the approvals came on unanimous or near-unanimous voice votes or a show of hands in the 102 towns where acid rain was on the agenda Tuesday.

The question shared the spotlight with more mundane issues such as potholes or local elections, and some towns debated the nuclear freeze issue.

Members of the Acid Rain Education Project, which organized the drive that put the resolution on Town Meeting warrants, or agendas, were delighted at the results.

"It's an unprecedented, nearly unanimous...indication that the people of this state speak with one voice on this issue," said spokesman Bob Chlopak.

"They understand that there must be federal action to curtail acid rain and this outpouring of support, I think, speaks to the urgency with which people here want action taken."

The group said pollution has made rain that falls on New Hampshire 40 times more acidic than normal, killing fish in lakes and threatening forests and drinking water.

EPA wants new discharge rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — New rules covering the discharge of hazardous industrial chemicals into the nation's waterways have been proposed by the Environmental Protection Agency.

The chemicals involved are 38 organic compounds, seven metals and cyanide. They are found in some 25,000 industrial materials.

The agency said Tuesday that the rules would affect about 2,100 plants and cost industry about $800 million to comply with.

The rules, to take effect in about a year, were required by court orders in a long-running suit involving the EPA, chemical companies and environmentalists.

Former Ohio official sentenced to prison

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Ohio's former cashier, who admitted stealing more than $1 million from the state treasurer's office in what a judge called a "massive violation of public trust," was sentenced to two to 10 years in prison.

Elizabeth Jane Boerger, 49, once diagnosed as suffering from amnesia, remained free on bail after her surprise guilty plea and sentencing Tuesday. She will report to jail March 15.

Her co-defendant and friend, bandleader Robert Yeazell Jr., pleaded guilty to failing to file state income tax returns and will be sentenced later.

The money, stolen between 1977 and January 1980, was used to finance Yeazell's musical career, according to his attorney.

Hostage-holder's threat fake

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man who held up to 30 people hostage in a Hollywood bank before surrendering peacefully had only toiletries in a satchel that he claimed contained a bomb, police said.

Some people were "a little shook up" but no one was hurt after the 3½-hour bank takeover Tuesday by the man identified as Harvey Lee Green, police said. Police Lt. Dan Cooke said the satchel "was full of toiletries and personal effects."

Green had said he "wanted to dethrone" President Reagan, the hostages said. Police said all of the 25 to 30 people in the Bank of America branch escaped or were released while the siege dragged on.

Baby abandoned at truck stop

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A sickly 5-week-old infant abandoned at a truck stop 60 miles away from home, but noticed by a driver, was in fair condition at a hospital, officials said.

Agents were seeking 23-year-old Pamela Kern for questioning after the baby, Tera Strickland, was found on the ground Tuesday near a garbage can.

FBI Agent Andy Ragsdale said the baby was apparently left Monday with a regular baby sitter who was not able to watch her as long as necessary, so gave the child to Ms. Kern.

Inmates may have to pay

HAYWARD, Calif. (AP) — Weekend inmates at Santa Rita Rehabilitation Center may soon be asked to pick up the tab for their time behind bars under a cost-cutting program.

"People must pay for the damage they do," said Joseph Bort, a member of the Alameda County Board of Supervisors, which tentatively approved the idea Tuesday and scheduled a final vote next week.

Offenders would be billed on the basis of their ability to pay.

The weekend rate for room and board would be $35 a day, plus a $25 booking fee.

There would be a maximum $100 charge for a public defender, covering up to three court appearances, and probation supervision would cost $25 a month.

The board said it hopes to recover $175,000 a year from the charges.

China 'reincarnates' superstitions

By VICTORIA GRAHAM
Associated Press Writer

PEKING — "Witches" murder peasants to exorcise demons, families commit ritual suicide to hasten their journeys to heaven and virgins have been sacrificed by a reincarnated "jade emperor."

There has been a resurgence of superstition in parts of the Chinese countryside, a macabre, medieval world where 30 years of communism have had virtually no impact on folk religion.

"Feudal superstitious activities have regained ground in our rural areas," the national magazine Fortnightly Conversations said recently. "They are harmful to our production and construction and to the people's physical and mental health. They pollute the general mood of society and affect our stability and unity."

All good communists, it said, should study science and propagate atheism.

Peasants burn fake paper money for the dead, along with paper television sets and stereos. Real, hard-earned cash sometimes is placed in the mouths of the dead, distressing communist ideologues who want it spent on the living, or at least put in the bank.

Fortunetellers are frequently consulted about the sex of an unborn child and women often refuse abortions if they think their next child will be a son and heir.

Tales of superstition, all with futile or fatal endings, abound in virtually every province as China tries to exorcise its self-proclaimed witches, wizards, sorcerers, ghosts, goblins, snake, toad and fox gods and emperors come back to life.

Many are charlatans, extorting money from gullible peasants with promises to cure cancer, heart disease, tuberculosis or other diseases.

Some pass themselves off as emperors. Many, however, actually believe they have supernatural powers and their followers include more than one member of the officially atheistic Communist Party.

The resurgence of superstition began in 1979 when the Communist Party restored the right of religious freedom after years of suppression during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution. For many Chinese, however, religion and superstition are much the same.

Official Chinese press reports have been extensive, including these stories:

In northern Shanxi province, two alleged sorcerers treated a woman's kidney ailment by using chains, needles and fire to beat, bleed and burn the demons from her body. Cui Erxu died after they poured gasoline on her and set her on fire.

In Liaoning province, a Communist Party member Liu Wenxue asked a self-proclaimed witch to exorcise the demon possessing his wife, who had been treated in a hospital for heart disease.

The witch pierced the woman's nose with a knife, put a cord through her nose and strung her up on a ceiling beam. She wound a whip around the woman's neck, repeatedly jerked it to expel the demons, then stabbed the woman's veins with needles. While her husband watched impassively, the exorcism went on for days until the woman died.

The exorcist was sent to prison but the husband who invited the witch home was only scolded by the Communist Party which maintains its own disciplinary system.

In southwest Sichuan province, an avaricious would-be witch and her husband hoped to prove her powers to their neighbors by curing their son's gangrenous hand. After muttering incantations for days and scraping off rotten flesh, she finally ordered it chopped off so that a new hand would grow.

Even near more sophisticated Shanghai, a grandmother who claimed she was possessed by a deity drowned her 4-year-old grandson to "test him." Her brother, a Communist Party member, prevented the boy's family from rescuing him.

In Sichuan province, China's heartland, a man passed himself off as the reincarnation of an emperor, seducing eight women and extorting money from several others. A previous would-be emperor was condemned to death for sacrificing two small girls at his "coronation."

Also in Sichuan, a peasant, Yin Xianfu, set fire to his house because a sorcerer told him he and his seven family members would immediately enter heaven.

His family died in the flames but he was injured as he tried to set fire to his hut and could not fling himself onto the pyre. On the way to the hospital he wept because he had been left behind.

Young girls have drowned because they think they can walk on water. Workmen die because they rush to finish a house by an auspicious day — but before the concrete dries and the house collapses.

China bans the sale of superstition paraphernalia, but authorities often look the other way.

U.S. also urging negotiations in El Salvador

WASHINGTON (AP) — While talking tough on the need for more U.S. military help for El Salvador, the Reagan administration is taking steps on several fronts to encourage negotiations aimed at ending the conflict there.

President Reagan met with congressional leaders Tuesday on El Salvador and told them he is determined to provide the Salvadoran regime with arms and training in their war against leftist guerrillas.

And a congressional source, who spoke only on condition he remain anonymous, said the military aid package Reagan wants for El Salvador might total $110 million, instead of the $60 million discussed earlier.

But he and administration officials cautioned the decisions were not final.

A senior State Department official, who insisted on anonymity, said the package would include "an accelerated training program" for the Salvadoran army, more weapons, ammunition and spare parts.

The aim, said the official, is to enable El Salvador's "security forces to hold it (the military situation) together until we get elections."

He also disclosed tentative plans for Reagan to deliver a formal statement on El Salvador later this week, possibly Thursday.

A presidential statement would likely include assurances to Americans that the United States is not embarking on a Vietnam-type involvement in El Salvador, the official said.

"Somehow there seems to be in the midst of the debate about this, all kinds of political ramifications, the whole Vietnam thing and the rest of it," said the official. "He (Reagan) will try to try put it in perspective."

Reagan also is likely to disclose whether more American advisers will be sent to El Salvador above the current ceiling of 55.

At the same time it talks about military aid, the administration is signalling it would sanction talks between the government and the leftist leaders to resolve many key issues prior to elections scheduled late this year. But the focus of talks would still be on the elections.

The official confirmed that strategy Tuesday. But rather than describe it as a change in policy, he said the strategy is to encourage the Salvadoran government to call the shots on negotiations.

"I don't think anybody is sitting down and cutting a deal with guerrillas," he said. But he added, "I suppose once they sit down with them (the guerrillas) there isn't anything you can't discuss.

"If they want get into the electoral thing and it's a good idea to discuss this (other issues) somehow, okay," he said.

"What we are talking about is an acceptance for that kind of discussion to take place," he added. "I think we have to keep nudging" the Salvadoran government."

U.S. sanctions for negotiations obviously would have a considerable influence on the Salvadoran government.

Depite union lobbying, British coal miners vote to stay on job

LONDON (AP) — The threat of a national coal strike eased today as several news reports said Britain's 204,000 miners had voted decisively to stay on the job in defiance of their union leaders.

The union today began counting votes cast in balloting Tuesday, but newspaper, radio and television reports all forecast a sound defeat for the strike call issued by Arthur Scargill, militant leftist president of the National Union of Mineworkers.

"Miners' ballot runs decisively against Scargill strike call," reported the Financial Times.

'Remains' carried to embassy

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The U.S. Embassy today received two plastic bags which former Green Beret officer James "Bo" Gritz claims hold the remains of a U.S. serviceman killed in Laos during the Vietnam War.

An embassy spokesman said the contents of the bags would be examined by military identification experts.

Gritz' brother-in-law, Walter "Butch" Jones, brought the bags to the embassy today. He said the remains were given by a Laotian to Gritz and his group of Americans, who face trial in connection with their efforts to enter communist-ruled Laos and hunt for missing U.S. servicemen.

Gritz has said the remains were found in Laos at the crash site of a U.S. warplane.

French army leader ousted

PARIS (AP) — The government fired French Army Chief of Staff Gen. Jean Delaunay today, Defense Minister Charles Hernu announced.

Hernu said Delaunay would be replaced by Gen. Bene Imbot.

The minister denied widespread reports in the French press that Delaunay had resigned because of his opposition to government plans to reduce army manpower and move tactical nuclear weapons away from army control.

Nkomo flees to Botswana

GABORONE, Botswana (AP) — Zimbabwe opposition leader Joshua Nkomo fled to neighboring Botswana following repeated clashes with the government of Prime Minister Robert Mugabe, officials here said today.

A Western diplomatic source said Nkomo arrived in Gaborone, the capital, this morning by Land Rover and met with Botswana President Quett Masire.

The source did not say whether Nkomo asked for political asylum.

Breakthrough in talks hoped

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials hope Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir's visit here this weekend will lead to a breakthrough in negotiations aimed at removing Israeli and other foreign troops from Lebanon.

Shamir's meeting with Secretary of State George P. Shultz was requested by the Israeli government and some U.S. officials take that fact as a sign that significant progress may be on the horizon.

One barometer of such progress is likely to be a decision on whether Shultz will visit the Middle East soon.

A Shultz trip could take place as soon as the end of the month or in early April.

Ferry rammed by fishing boat

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A ferry boat carrying 97 people burst into flames and later sank after it was rammed Tuesday night by a fishing boat, but all those on board were rescued, shipping officials said.

The owners of the ship said all 54 passengers and 43 crewmen were rescued by coast guard and civilian boats after they leaped overboard near the port of Cebu in the central Philippines.

Study links cholesterol level, disease

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Children who have high cholesterol levels in their blood often fall prey to cholesterol-related ailments such as heart disease and strokes later in life, according to a nine-year study.

"Our prediction of adults who are going to have high cholesterol is good enough that measuring cholesterol early in childhood is worthwhile," said Dr. Trevor Orchard of the University of Pittsburgh Graduate School of Public Health.

"If a child is found to have relatively high cholesterol, then it would be advisable for them to change their diet," he said.

Every year since 1971, seventh-graders in nearby Beaver County have been tested to determine the amount of cholesterol, or fat, in their blood. The screenings were conducted by the Beaver County Heart Association.

Orchard, assisted by three colleagues, attempted in 1981 to track down 1,440 students who were tested during the 1972-1973 school year for a follow-up study.

The researchers found 560 of the original participants, who were by then 21 and 22 years old.

About half those who had ranked in the top 20 percentile of cholesterol levels as children remained in that group as adults, Orchard said.

Those whose cholesterol levels dropped during the nine-year period "tended to be more active, smoke less and to have gained less weight" than those whose cholesterol levels were normal and then worsened, Orchard said.

"This healthier lifestyle seemed to be associated with falling cholesterol levels," he said. "This gives us additional reason to believe that early intervention will help."

Conference on role of Hispanics slated

Fahrenkopf and Mannatt will speak on "The Increasing Importance of the Hispanic Community as a Political Force."

San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros will open the conference. Panel discussion topics include immigration practices, the U.S. legal system, Hispanic social issues, and Hispanics in the business community.

Entrepreneur: Slates give immediate reinforcement

TYLER (AP) — School principals occasionally think they're too messy, and some teachers can't imagine classrooms without paper, but an East Texas entrepreneur says his chalkboards can revolutionize education.

Clyde Connell makes small slates that he says are cheaper to use than paper, more stimulating and better for practicing motor skills.

In five years, Connell has sold nearly 2 million of the boards, which retail for $1.59.

This may be the age of the computerized classroom, but what may be the lowest of low technologies is one of the nation's best-selling teacher's aids, Connell says.

Connell says that schools are wasting their money buying students computers — "Christmas morning toys," as he calls them.

"You spend all this money on an expensive toy when a kid would much rather play in a cardboard box," he said.

Connell's World Research Co. turns out 500,000 boards a year from a tiny storefront factory in this East Texas city.

The lightweight, Masonite boards are painted green to give them the texture and look of a blackboard.

"With the slates, each student gets immediate reinforcement," Connell said. "The teacher yells out a problem and the kids hold up their slates. It's Pavlovian, or whatever."

Connell began making them five years ago, when he was teaching Sunday school and his wife taught kindergarten. He made the boards of plastic at first, but switched to Masonite when the price of oil increased.

Some elementary schools have ordered the slates for each of their pupils, and Connell receives fan mail from all over the nation.

"This is the greatest teaching aid I have ever used in 22 years of teaching," wrote Jan Coughenour of Port Huron, Mich.

Teachers who like to use ditto sheets for schoolwork are the most reluctant to use his slates, Connell says.

"The biggest resistance comes from teachers who say, 'But what will we send home to the parents?'" he said.

But Rita Bryant, associate professor of education at the University of Texas at Tyler, said the slates give teachers "instant feedback."

"Teachers can instantly see which children grasp a concept and which ones don't," she said. "With ditto sheets there's too much delay and shuffling of paper."

It is fine and dandy to win all the tricks you can. But if you lose sight of your overall goal—to make your contract—there is a flaw in your thinking.

The auction followed a course we hear quite often, except that this time it was correct. After North-South bid all four suits, they settled in the no trump game.

West had a difficult lead to make, and he eventually settled on his fourth-best heart. Declarer ran that to his ten, cashed the ace of diamonds and then continued with the eight of diamonds. West dealt declarer a savage blow when he showed out. Since he could not make the contract without bringing in the diamond suit, declarer ducked the diamond to East's jack.

East found the killing shift to the jack of spades. No matter how declarer elected to play, he had to lose four spade tricks and a diamond—down one.

Had declarer paused to count his tricks before playing to the first trick, he might have realized that he needed only five diamond tricks and three hearts to bring home his game. Since he was vulnerable to a spade attack, his priority should have been to keep East off play.

The winning line is to take the first heart in dummy and lead a low diamond, inserting the eight from the closed hand if East plays low. That enables West to win the first diamond, but if spades are attacked from the West side, declarer cannot lose more than three tricks in the suit, no matter how the cards are split. If you don't believe us, try it!

Europeans gathering crop of alleged Soviet agents

LONDON (AP) — A crop of alleged Soviet agents has been rounded up in Western Europe in recent weeks — evidence, intelligence experts claim, of a Kremlin campaign to steal the West's technology secrets and details of its newest fighter planes.

At least 10 Soviets have been expelled from Western European countries in as many weeks this year. Last year, at least 13 were ordered out.

The total could be higher because some Soviet agents are quietly shipped home after they have been discovered, according to the West European intelligence sources, who agreed to interviews on condition they would not be named.

They said the main espionage targets appear to have been high-tech hardware and the secrets of the West's most sophisticated supersonic strike planes, the General Dynamics F-16 Falcon and the Panavia Tornado developed jointly by Britain, West Germany and Italy.

The Soviets allegedly launched the high-tech hunt after President Reagan, saying Moscow was responsible for repression in Poland, cut off the export of advanced technology to the U.S.S.R. on Dec. 29, 1981.

Although the overall ban was revoked in November 1982, Western high-technology sales to the East bloc continue to exclude equipment that would contribute significantly to Soviet military potential.

"U.S. technology, whether it's military or purely industrial, is spy target No. 1 for foreign intelligence operations," William H. Webster, director of the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation, said recently.

"I don't think there's been another time in our history when our country has been under such a sophisticated espionage assault."

Most authoritative sources questioned by The Associated Press said they believe that as many as 40 percent of the Soviet diplomats and trade mission officials in the West work secretly for the KGB, the secret police, or its military counterpart, the GRU.

Much of the Soviet activity in the United States centers on Silicon Valley in northern California — named after the silicon micro-circuitry important to computer hardware, the sources said. Many of the 11,000 companies dealing in classified technological are based in the valley.

But, according to European agencies contacted by The AP, the Soviets also are making a determined drive to gain access to technology through U.S. subsidiaries or related companies in Western Europe.

Denmark was described as such a target. One highly placed intelligence source in Copenhagen, the Danish capital, claimed Soviet operatives there have become markedly more active and "more serious" in recent months.

He said their activities include "political blackmail" — an apparent reference agents' efforts to compromise political and industrial figures to obtain technological secrets.

Denmark expelled Evgeni Leonidovich Motorov, science and technology attache at the Soviet Embassy in Copenhagen, on charges of espionage of "an unusually serious nature." The government declined to elaborate.

But newspapers described Motorov as a senior KGB agent trying to penetrate Danish electronic and computer industries for data that could be used in Soviet missile guidance systems.

Two Soviet diplomats were expelled from Sweden last December for what was termed "industrial espionage," particularly in shipyards at Goteborg.

Agents in West Germany picked up a member of the Soviet trade mission in Cologne Feb. 18, allegedly as he went to a rendezvous with a German businessman to buy plans for an electronic coding machine.

A Hamburg court late last month jailed Herman Gassmann, a 56-year-old official in the IG metal workers' union, after convicting him of spying for East Germany and the Soviet Union for a quarter-century. The court said he had handed over sensitive documents to East bloc agents.

Two alleged Soviet agents were arrested last month in Italy.

Victor Pronine, 38, an official of the Soviet airline Aeroflot, was charged with military espionage. Italian businessman Azelio Negrino was picked up the same day with a briefcase officials charged was stuffed with microfilmed "highly strategic" NATO documents and plans for the twin-engined, all-weather Tornado fighter, to be handed over to Pronine.

Japanese population's aging alters family patterns

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese life expectancy is rising and the graying of the population is having an impact on one of the nation's ancient traditions — the extended family, in which three or even four generations live under one roof.

Experts interviewed on the subject say cramped housing, changing patterns of living and the need for professional nursing care have forced many elderly Japanese to give up living with their children.

"When the time comes when an old person must depend on someone, whom does he turn to? In the past there was only the family, but today's family structure is different," said Masaaki Hashimoto, operator of the 250-resident Shisei Home for the elderly in Tachikawa, a western suburb of Tokyo.

Although the custom of several generations living together remains strong in rural areas, the percentage of old people living alone or in nursing homes is increasing. About 68 percent of aged Japanese now live with their adult children, generally the eldest son's family, while 27 percent live alone or with a spouse.

Mariko Bando, deputy counselor in the Prime Minister's Policy Office for the Aged, said a Confucian "sense of duty" will keep the number of multi-generation families higher than in other industrialized countries, but more facilities will be needed for those requiring professional care or having no place else to go.

"When the extended family system flourished, there were many members and someone could take care of the elderly (while the others worked). But now the family size is shrinking so the capacity to care for the aged is decreasing," Mrs. Bando said.

Mechanization reduced the need for large families to work in the rice fields, and the high cost of urban housing and education helped lower the birth rate. With more leisure time and a chance to contribute to family income, more married women seek jobs, leaving fewer wives at home to care for the infirm.

At present, says the Health and Welfare Ministry, 180,050 people over 65 live in 2,421 facilities providing full or minimal care. But official estimates show 510,000 elderly people need full-time care, with the number of bedridden old people expected to surpass 1 million in the year 2000.

"In one sense Japan's old people today are chosen," said Soji Tanaka, a government gerontologist. "They survived the war. They are strong. Today's young people do not engage in much physical labor and may be weaker as they age."

The average life expectancy in 1981 was 73.8 years for Japanese males, the world's highest, and 79.13 for females, second only to Iceland.

Japanese 65 or older make up 9 percent of the population; in the United States it's 11 percent, Britain 14.6 percent, France 13.8 percent and West Germany 15.3 percent.

But demographers predict that the proportion of oldsters will more than double, to 21.3 percent, by 2025, making Japan perhaps the world's oldest society. They project that by that time in the United States 15.8 percent of the population will be 65 or older; in Britain and France, 18.6 percent; and in West Germany, 20 percent.

"Japan is a very 'young' country now, but the composition of the population will change rapidly. Those born during the baby boom — people now in their mid-30s — make up a substantial portion of the work force. As the number of children decline and the proportion of older people swell, the burden on the work force will grow," Hashimoto said.

Nihon University's Population Research Center said the tax burden, including social security deductions, will soar from the present 31 percent to 63 percent in 2025.

Residents of facilities for the aged pay part of the bill for their lodging, food and medical care, which can cost as much as 190,000 yen ($815) a month. The amount contributed is based on a resident's assets, including pension funds and family support. National and local governments pick up the remainder.

Tanaka said the government is building and subsidizing new facilities, particularly those with private rooms. About one-third now share a room with four or more, while 56 percent have one roommate.

He wants to encourage healthy older people to live alone.

"I don't think the elderly should be spoiled and have everything done for them while they are still able," he said.

A little security

A recommendation by the National Commission on Social Security Reform will not lead to resolution of the retirement system's inherent problems. But older Americans living in fear their Social Security benefits will be reduced deserve peace of mind while the system's dilemma is being resolved.

U.S. Rep. Kent Hance of Lubbock has introduced a measure in the Congress to give elderly Americans that peace of mind. It should be approved.

Noting Social Security checks represent the primary source of income for 90 percent of this country's senior citizens, Hance said recently "there is great concern among Social Security recipients that Congress, in its haste to shore up the system, will place undue burdens upon current beneficiaries.

"We must not allow this to happen. We, as an elected, representative body, have an obligation to these people to protect their benefits," the congressman who formerly represented Midland said.

He's absolutely correct, of course. In the cold, political horse-trading necessary to find an acceptable solution to the Social Security problem, it's all too easy to forget that when you talk about Social Security benefits you're really talking about mostly elderly people and their futures. When you talk about cutting benefits and altering the future course of the retirement system, you should remember each action will be measured in human terms.

There is no denying the National Commission on Social Security Reform failed to address the overall problem. Growth in benefits — a 50 percent per capita increase in monthly benefits paid during the past four years — and the "graying" of America, along with other factors, point to the need for total reform. Getting there without stepping on some elderly toes is the problem.

Yet the importance of "getting there" should not be overlooked. Less than two weeks after the commission announced the current plan to save Social Security, experts inside and outside the Social Security Administration were predicting the possibility of insolvency by 1985 or 1986.

Hance, too, has recognized the system needs put back on its feet. "But let's not do it by taking away or reducing the benefits from those who depend on their monthly benefit checks for their basic needs."

To accomplish that goal the congressman has offered the resolution he says "would make it the sense of the House that no current recipients of Social Security would experience a reduction in the amount of money now received in his or her basic monthly Social Security check."

People on Social Security deserve to continue receiving at least the amount they currently receive without fear of having that amount cut, the representative says. We agree. Hance's resolution should be adopted because it puts a little security back in Social Security.

Another View:

Defending defense

When troubles at home loom larger than foreign policy or threats from abroad, national defense needs defenders. President Reagan should be the strongest. But by the cost and composition of his national defense proposals and especially by the skimpiness of his arguments in their favor, Mr. Reagan is undercutting defense itself. In Congress and among voters he is making defense a source of suspicion rather than of assurance.

There are few grounds for thinking — as many now seem to think — that armed defense and a military component of foreign policy are provocative or immoral. On the contrary, deterring attack and conducting relations with sometimes hostile foreign powers are necessary responsibilities of any nation. Moreover, they are core obligations of the national government, impossible to perform by the private sector or by lower levels of public authority. Thus military spending can logically claim priority over most other items in a federal budget — over student loans, for instance, or dairy-price supports or sewage-treatment plants. If the nation is threatened or the goals of foreign policy require strong armed forces, that money should be provided first.

Such has usually been the American consensus. Today that consensus is close to shattered. Increasingly, defense is perceived as a deficit problem, not as a problem of policy and survival. Congressmen commonly argue, for instance, that if Housing and Urban Development is cut, the Pentagon should be also — as though the two departments embodied comparable federal functions. Mr. Reagan is responsible for the damage. By treating defense as a super-sacred cow, he is making it instead an endangered species.

The president does this damage three ways. He demands defense spending without a credible outline of foreign threats to U.S. survival and without clear international goals that require armed support. Defense planning should flow from foreign policy purposes. In this administration the flow seems to be the other way around.

That backward procedure is especially disturbing in light of the composition of Mr. Reagan's defense requests. Much that he wants is surely needed; the country does face an aggressive rival whose arsenal has grown to dangerous dimensions. But the largest part of Mr. Reagan's proposed buildup — 34.6 percent, not counting the cost of producing and testing warheads — is for nuclear forces. Reasonable quantities of nuclear weapons are vital for deterrence. But conventional equipment and well-trained soldiers are more likely to be used. Yet Mr. Reagan insists on top-heavy accumulations of the ultimate weapon and consents to consider cutbacks only where he should not.

The result of his approach is an arms-spending budget that increases annually by more than 12 percent for the next four years. The growth rate is greater than Mr. Reagan himself proposed when campaigning for office. In the absence of any convincing rationale it is also greater than the nation should pay for. A bipartisan Congress will cut the budget back. But the cutting will be done by people who are neither responsible nor equipped for planning foreign policy and detailing the nation's survival needs. Defense will be the loser.

National defense needs strong defenders. Why is the president not among them?

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Shock tactics marred aging meet

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration used strongarm tactics reminiscent of an old-fashioned political machine to keep the 1981 White House Conference on Aging from getting out of hand and embarrassing the president.

Jack Anderson

They apparently tinkered with the temperature controls in the auditorium, used fake badges to infiltrate committees and plenary sessions, shouted down legitimate delegates and even physically obstructed Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., to keep him from reaching the speaker's platform.

The White House efforts to bully and harass the elderly delegates were outrageous. The grubby details are contained in sworn testimony and supporting documents obtained by the General Accounting Office, which has been investigating charges of improper White House attempts to rig the conference. My associate Indy Badhwar has seen the astonishing evidence. Some examples:

— "(A) planned attempt at confusing the final plenary session was apparently manipulating the air-conditioning system," declares a sworn affidavit. "It became unbearably hot ... One or two older women had to be medically assisted out of the ballroom because of the heat."

— One particular panel, known as "Committee Two," was regarded with deep suspicion by the president's men. They were afraid it was going to pass resolutions critical of the administration's Social Security proposals. So conference staffers were ordered to print up extra "Committee Two" badges, put them on and infiltrate the committee to manipulate any voice vote.

— A political tactician who reported directly to White House chief of staff James Baker was assigned to the conference as a sort of staff commissar "to assure that the conference was not a political embarrassment to the president."

— Like so many circus performers, "whips" were appointed to keep the supposedly dangerous "gray panthers" under control. The handpicked whips and deputy whips from the conference staff were assigned to various sections and given a list of "troublemakers" in their bailiwicks. Their mission was to position themselves behind the elderly firebrands and shout them down if they tried to speak.

— "It was ... greatly feared that the liberals would take over the conference and demand a number of concessions about Social Security from the Reagan administration. The whip system was supposed to squelch any spontaneous or preplanned actions by liberal delegates to turn the conference into a referendum on Reagan's Social Security policies."

— One whip was assigned to a particularly dangerous delegate: Pepper, then the 81-year-old chairman of the House Committee on Aging. The whip was ordered to keep Pepper from the podium during one of the debates in the plenary session. "The whip successfully restricted Pepper from getting to the stage for about 15 minutes by blocking his path."

— Whips assigned to committees would keep in constant touch with a secret command post by telephone. The command post was guarded by Brinks security pesonnel. "In order to get into the command post, one had to be wearing a special lapel pin shaped like an oil barrel. Without the pin, it was impossible to get into the area."

— When reports of political pressure began leaking out, the command post disappeared in a puff of smoke. "Returning to the command post was eerie," one staffer testified. "Just one half-hour before, everything was normal. Now the command post was stripped bare. There was almost nothing left of what had previously been tables of books, documents, phones, typewriters ... Within 30 minutes, the entire place had been literally stripped."

SENDING A SIGNAL: The recent beheading by the Saudi Arabian government of three Filipino robbers is regarded as an ominous sign by Western observers. According to Koranic scholars, the punishment should have been no more than chopping off the ringleader's hand and flogging the two accomplices.

The severity of the punishment is seen as an indication that Prince Abdullah, the ultra-conservative, xenophobic commander of the national guard, is the power behind the throne — and wants foreigners to know it. The draconian sentence could only have been approved at the highest levels of the Saudi regime.

Non-Saudi Arabs feel particularly threatened by the beheadings, but American residents are also taking the message to heart: Mind your P's and Q's in Saudi Arabia, where strict Moslem morality is enforced.

• • •

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES: The nation's governors apparently have little interest in the workings of the federal government. After Chief Justice Warren Burger addressed the National Governors Association recently, the chairman opened the floor for questions. None of the governors had any. They even gave the same glazed-eye treatment to the congressional budget czars, Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., and Rep. Jim Jones, D-Okla.

— Blacks aren't the only minority group thinking of running a favorite-son candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination. Gov. Toney Anaya of New Mexico may field a candidate in the primaries as a means of holding onto a bloc of uncommitted votes at the Democratic convention. Lack of advance commitment translates into clout at convention time.

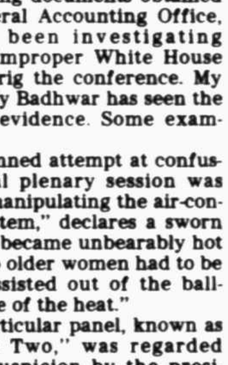
HEMISPHERE REPORT

Mexico's plight mirrors world's

WASHINGTON — To dramatize the increased U.S. stake in the world economy Secretary of State George Shultz cited the impact on the United States of Mexico's crisis in its international finances.



William Glaudemi

Mexico's "imports from the United States dropped 60 percent from the first quarter of 1981 to the last quarter of 1982," Shultz told the Senate Committee on the Budget recently.

"The drastic cut in Mexico's imports, if sustained, would represent a $10 billion loss in U.S. exports and the elimination of at least 250,000 American jobs," he said.

Mexico, of course, is a very special case. Mexico is the United States' third most important trading partner in the world, behind only Canada and Japan, and Mexico is currently the United States' principal source of imported oil.

That is why what happens in Mexico really should concern all Americans, not just the international bankers and the politicians.

Much of what is true of Mexico also holds good for other Latin countries.

Shultz's figures show that. He gave the Senate Budget Committee a list of the dozen major borrowing nations of the world, estimates of their foreign bank debt and how much was owed to U.S. banks. The figures, as of June 1982, were much lower than those now widely quoted in speeches and commentaries but they do provide an indication of how much more exposed U.S. banks are in Latin America than elsewhere in the world.

First on the list was Mexico, with a total bank debt of $64.4 billion, 37.7 percent or $24.3 billion of which was owed U.S. banks.

Then came Brazil, with a total of $55.3 billion, 37.4 percent or $20.7 billion owed U.S. banks.

Venezuela, with $27.2 billion, 40.8 percent or $11.1 billion owed the United States.

South Korea, $20 billion, 43.5 percent or $8.7 billion.

Argentina, $25.3 billion, 34.0 percent or $8.6 billion.

Chile, $11.8 billion, 53.4 percent, $6.3 billion.

Spain, $23.7 billion, 24.1 percent or $5.7 billion.

Philippines, $11.4 billion, 42.1 percent, $4.8 billion.

Taiwan, $6.4 billion, 68.8 percent, $4.4 billion.

Colombia, $5.5 billion, 49.1 percent, $2.7 billion.

Greece, $9.7 billion, 27.8 percent, $2.7 billion.

Yugoslavia, $10.0 billion, 25 percent, $2.5 billion.

In other words, six of the major borrowers are Latin American countries, indebted to U.S. banks for from a third to a half of their foreign loans.

Total foreign debt of the world's developing countries reached $500 billion by mid-1982, "five times the level of 1973," Shultz said.

"Of that total roughly $270 billion was owed to commercial banks — more than half of that by three countries, Argentina, Brazil and Mexico," Shultz said.

He suggested that the global recession of the last two years, rather than over-lending by banks or over-borrowing by countries, brought on the current problems.

Shultz pointed out that "after the oil price increases of 1973-74, lenders and borrowers acted on a set of assumptions — buoyant export growth and low interest rates — that, though proven false, were thought reasonable at that time."

Mexico got caught on that, as well as on the more recent drop in oil prices.

"Economic expansion in the 1980s" is the solution of the problems of the decade of the 1970s, Shultz said.

"The fundamental problem faced by high-debt developing countries is one of reviving their exports — an income earning problem, rather than a debt problem."

Shultz said that the recent drop in oil prices may stimulate global economic expansion, although the decline will harm Mexico and Venezuela.

He noted that private banks and Western governments, including the United States, have a stake in advancing developing countries new money to service their debts and to pay for imports that will enhance their productivity.

In that respect, Shultz said, "The United States has provided, as in the case of Mexico, temporary bridge financing." He called it "only short-term relief," though.

Charlatans fall via ample ties

To The Editor:

It was predictable that Robert Creighton's one-liner of two weeks ago would prove irresistible to those who are determined to see Biblical portents in the fact of a born-again state of Israel.

Last week, "Israel lover" Jackie Heilman notes that Creighton's continuing criticisms of Israel (which she is compelled to answer) is causing her to become "a bore." I can see what she means.

Joining Heilman in taking Creighton to task, is Biblical expert Norma Otto, who points out that "according to the Word of God, the Bible, America is a loser if we don't have her (Israel) as an ally." For Mr. Creighton's elightenment she refers him to several books of the Old Testament, "Exodus, Second Chronicles, and Isaiah." Is it worth mentioning that all this recommended reading was written by Jews? Likewise, is it really surprising that a book, written by Jews, should claim that "God" promised the disputed lands in the Middle East to the Jews? I could devise as likely an argument that "God" had promised me Texas.

I'm guessing that Mrs. Otto has been listening to the "Reverend" Jerry Falwell who mostly wants your money and a forum from which to pursue it.

Without pretending to assess blame or penalties, I have to wonder about the expectations of those who have made of "God" their oracle — a scripted ediface, dumb and blind, telling factions what they want to hear. Is this God-as-oracle, this God of factions, the same God that Jesus describes? I begin to appreciate the sentiments of Leo Tolstoy who said, "I fear I am too ardent a follower of Christ to be a conventional Christian" — and of the well traveled Mahatma Ghandi, who revered the teachings of Jesus and mentioned that he himself would become a Christian if he had "ever seen one."

Must Christianity continue to bear the encumbrances of a power-hungry priesthood, and the real estate claims of the parasitic state of Israel? May we "come to the Father" except by praising Israel?

The more than ample ties binding America to Israel render superfluous the efforts of the charlatans who would play fast and loose with the faith of our fathers.

Unfair tax

To The Editor:

The U.S. Congress, those people who gave you the Internal Revenue Service, has sprung another surprise imbedded in the tax bill passed last fall.

Effective July 1, financial institutions will be required to withhold 10 percent of interest or dividends earned by their customers. Yes this includes all banks, money market funds, credit unions, and any other payers of interest and dividends. As with payroll deductions, the funds withheld will be forwarded to the I.R.S., while you watch a significant portion of what would otherwise have been interest you earned on the amount withheld, go swirling down the federal drain.

U.S. Rep. John Edward Porter (R-Ill.) complains, "What the act amounts to is an interest-free loan to the government that will lead to a drop in investments. It will mean a great cost in paperwork for institutions and consumers, with little revenue benefits for the government."

Write personal letters to your congressmen calling for the repeal of the interest withholding tax before it takes effect. This effort could very well make the difference as opposition to the law is spreading throughout Congress.

Take it to heart

To The Editor:

Such a generous outpouring of community cooperation Midlanders are providing in connection with Midland County Families-In-Action! There is constant amazement at the energy that civic clubs, churches, schools, businesses, drug intervention agencies, law enforcement agencies, parent-teachers organizations and youth are generating for the purpose of replacing substance abuse (and all its attendant problems) with a more positive, wholesome atmosphere in which to live and grow.

In this regard, "Take It To Heart...A Conference on Juvenile Substance Abuse" is being offered as an outstanding opportunity for personal enrichment on the subject.

Keynoting the conference is Dr. Carlton Turner, director of the Office of Drug Policy, the White House.

Drug abuse prevention is a broad subject which only the "community family" can hope to bring into reality. Come be a part of the celebration on March 18-19...and "Take It To Heart."

'Clustering' satellite system devised

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — It's the latest concept in space-age communication: a "cluster" of satellites functioning as one.

Scientists at Hughes Aircraft Co. have conceived of just such a mini-network in space featuring six or more communication satellites, all clustered around a central "switchboard" directing their movements and signals.

In fact, Hughes Aircraft Co. received a patent last week on its cluster satellite concept. The idea originated with Paul Visher, a vice president in Hughes' space and communications division.

Grouped in tight formation, the satellites would remain in a fixed position 23,000 miles above the equator by rotating at the same rate as the Earth.

According to Hughes, the satellite cluster could be used instead of a proposed space platform as a center for worldwide communication.

Now all the Culver City-based company has to do is find a customer.

Emery Wilson, a Hughes spokesman, said scientists believe the satellite "squadron" would be cheaper to build and easier to operate than a space platform, a kind of relay station. And by remaining relatively close to each other, the cluster would help avoid emerging traffic jams in space.

More than 60 satellites have been launched into so-called geo-synchronous orbit above the equator — a prime spot for receiving satellite signals all over the world — and the location is fast becoming saturated.

"This concept would help conserve orbital space," Wilson noted.

No price tag has been put on the satellite cluster since the system could be expanded at any time to fit the needs of customers.

"It would allow for a building-block approach to a space communications system," Wilson said.

Sen. Mark Andrews, D-N.D., may be a Republican, but that doesn't stop him from being a vocal critic of administration policies.

Administration gets what Senator feels it deserves

WASHINGTON (AP) — He rarely makes speeches on the Senate floor, issues press releases or holds news conferences, but when Sen. Mark Andrews gets officials of the Reagan administration before him, he eats them up.

Andrews has emerged as one of the severest critics of the president among congressional Republicans.

"I wasn't elected to come down here and represent the White House," says Andrews, 56, a large-framed, deep-voiced farmer who was elected to the Senate in 1980 after serving 18 years in the House.

Andrews, an independent-minded Republican from North Dakota, has been making life miserable for top Reagan aides. His blunt criticisms may have dropped him from the White House social list, but he says that's a small price to pay for being able to speak his mind.

OVER THE PAST months, speaking his mind has increasingly meant blasting the president and scolding the administration witnesses who parade before the numerous Senate committees on which he sits.

He recently told Budget Director David Stockman that a proposed cut in child nutrition programs was one of the "dumbest ways" he'd ever heard of saving money.

And in one of his frequent confrontations with Agriculture Secretary John Block, Andrews told Block he didn't buy the administration line dismissing budget cuts as efforts to increase efficiency, saying, "This administration ought to have a better story."

While he once confined his criticism mainly to agricultural issues — not uncharacteristic for a farm-state senator — Andrews has become a wide-ranging critic of the president's economic and defense policies.

Despite his initial support for Reagan initatives and his generally conservative voting record, Andrews said he's no longer a team player when it comes to Reagan's plan for economic recovery.

"I THINK THE president is slow in realizing that the tax cut just didn't work," Andrews said. "It was too big a cut.

"Anything as sensitive as the economy needs to be fine-tuned."

Reagan's 1984 budget calls for another $1 billion cut in the food stamp budget, which has already suffered many major cuts. Another $300 million would be removed from school lunch, breakfast and other nutrition programs for children.

"I think it's abominable," Andrews said in an interview. "We're short-changing the future of the children of America."

Andrews said he isn't particulary impressed with the administration's management team, especially Stockman, a favorite target. "Everybody (other Republicans) said Stockman was all right. But Stockman is not all right."

Andrews says Republicans stand a good chance of losing the Senate in 1984. "It depends entirely on the economy and how President Reagan is perceived," he said.

In his nine-term House career, Andrews focused on agricultural issues, developing expertise he was able to carry with him when he came to the Senate in 1980.

Of his switch from the House to the Senate, Andrews said he sometimes misses the anonymity of working in the House and finds that, in the Senate, "Things don't move as rapidly as you'd like to see them." He plans to seek re-election in 1986.

Otherwise, Andrews said, he doesn't find that much difference between the chambers. "Same zoo — different cage," he joked.

Absentee voting starts Monday

Absentee voting in the city, school and hospital election will start Monday and continue through March 29, according to Elections Administrator Janeice Builta.

Voting site will be the school Administration Building, 702 N. N St. There are 43,507 registered voters in the county.

Election day is April 2, which falls between Good Friday and Easter, noted Ms. Builta. A lot of persons will be going out of town for the Easter holiday and should remember to vote absentee, she added.

Shelter extends hours

The Animal Control Shelter at 1601 Orchard Lane will be open late on Thursdays, according to a spokesman.

Instead of closing at 4:30 p.m., the shelter will be open until 7 p.m.

This should give people who work a chance to drop by the shelter to check for a lost animal or to adopt one, the spokesman said.

'Ernest' wows 'em back in Oklahoma

Braum's likes his stuff

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — He's just about the most loud-mouthed and dimwitted redneck what ever gulped buttermilk straight from the carton, know whata' mean?

But ol' buddy Ernest is likely the best thing that's happened to the Braum's Ice Cream Co. since fudge ripple.

Oklahoma-City based Braum's is still waiting for the cold sales figures resulting from its current series of TV commercials, featuring the know-it-all Ernest P. Worrell and Ernest's long-suffering (but never seen) neighbor, Vern.

"A BRAUM'S TRIPLE-DIP banana split, Vern...It's got your goops and goops and goops. It's got your roasty, toasty almonds. And look at that little cherry, Vern, that little splash of color. Mmm, mmm."

The question, though, is not whether Ernest is making a go of it, said Braum's spokesman Tony Borthick — but whether Ern's success is merely big or a whole lot bigger.

The commercials have been running only since mid-January, Borthick said, but people already are thinking of Braum's as "Ernest's place." They buy the cottage cheese because Ernest said so. They ask in the store, "Where's Ernest?"

Well, Vern, he was right there Wednesday — right in the Braum's at 1415 S. Lewis Ave. in Tulsa, Vern. Coulda seen 'im for real, coulda shook his hand and got him to sign up a picture, Vern. But you woulda had to stood in line.

"I signed 1,100 autographs in one day back in Tennessee," said — well, no, not Ernest, but Jim Varney, the actor, showing the blistered finger he got that day.

VARNEY IS KNOWN as Ernest P. Worrell around here and into Kansas and Texas because of the Braum's ads. But he first played the character about four years ago in some ads for an amusement park in Kentucky, and he works now for eight other companies besides Braum's.

Ernest was thought up by the Carden and Cherry Advertising Agency out of Nashville, and just got to be more and more "outrageous," Varney said.

"Lots of people think I'm really kind of grotesque," he said. "I think I'm pretty normal."

That's a wide-angle camera lens they use that makes his nose look the size of a summer squash, Vern — same thing they use to use take pictures of the ground out of an airplane.

People like to watch Ernest "because they know him. They live next door to him. He's the guy who comes over and tells you how to fix the lawnmower," without knowing a thing about it, Varney said.

AND ALL THIS time — all through this interview — people are coming up, asking for signed photographs, no matter that "autograph time" is supposed to be over now.

"I never expected this, not from commercials," Varney said.

Varney is 33, with a background in Shakespeare and a liking for classical music. He was doing pretty well in Hollywood in the mid-70s, having picked up some roles in the TV series "Alice" and "Fernwood 2Night," but the actors' strike knocked that 'bout as cold as a frosty glass-a Braum's orange juice, Vern.

So he went home to Lexington, Ky., where he landed the role of "Sgt. Glory" in a bunch of ads for another dairy.

"He wasn't like Ernest," Varney said. "He would come out and just about order you to buy milk."

EITHER WAY, IT turned out that Varney had the kinda knack that'd sell feathers to a chicken, Vern. And the way he's bein' noticed, could be the start of a new shot at TV and the movies.

Meantime, the Braum's company still has five more Ernest commercials to show, each one "an adventure of Ernest," Varney said. "People like to watch to see what's going to happen to him."

Know whata' mean?

Bulldogs click with 6-0 shutout

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

For the first time in this week-old baseball season, everything fell into place for the Midland High Bulldogs. They got strong pitching, key hitting and perfect defense enroute to a 6-0 victory over Lubbock Coronado Tuesday at Memorial Stadium Field.

Jose Carrasco pitched three no-hit innings before running into trouble for the first and only time in the game in the top of the fourth. Mustang third baseman Jerry Foster led off with a single to right field to end Coronado's hitless streak and a second single by catcher Chris Blacklock and a walk by Kent Meador loaded the bases with one out.

Carrasco was able to pitch out of the inning to preserve his shutout, striking out designated hitter Bart Armstrong and getting center fielder Carl Stewart to ground a shot to Bulldog shortstop Doug Daehling, who made the force play at second to end the frame.

THE THREE base runners in the fourth inning accounted for nearly half of Coronado's total for the game. The Mustangs were able to get four walks to go along with the three hits off Carrasco, but couldn't get the hits to bring them home. Carrasco also had five strikeouts in the game.

"It's nice to have a pitcher throwing strikes and a defense playing like we did today," said MHS head coach Tim Whalen. "You have a chance to win when you don't make any errors."

While the defense was working to keep Coronado from crossing home plate, the Midland High offense was getting it's job done with the help of two big errors in the third inning and nine hits throughout the game.

Leading 2-0 going into the frame, Bulldog Chris Herbert got a break when third baseman Meador mishandled a shot down the line, allowing Herbert to reach first. Mike Foulds, who went 3-for-4 including a double for the game's only extra base hit, reached first on the following play when second baseman Monty McClean went for the lead runner at second and threw the ball away, sending Herbert to third and allowing Foulds to advance to second.

Carrasco then gave support to his pitching cause by stroking a single to left field and two outs later Judd Ryan drilled one up the middle for a 4-0 lead. When Coronado pitcher Jeff Richardson walked James Pitts after Ryan's hit, Coach John Dudley decided it was time for a change and moved shortstop Steve Rodriguez to the mound to finish the game.

Midland catcher Tommy Davis took Rodriguez to a two-out full count before stroking a two-RBI single down the third base line to account for the final Bulldog runs of the game.

"We put the bat on the ball," said Whalen. "We got base hits with runners in scoring position. I think we will be able to hit the ball and score a few runs, but I'm happiest with the way the defense played. You've got to have defense to win."

The victory improved Midland's record to 2-4 on the season going into this weekend's Tournament of Champions action at Cubs Stadium. On Friday the Bulldogs will open tournament play against Lubbock Monterey at 1:30 p.m. Midland High and Monterey opened their baseball seasons against each other on March 1 with the Plainsmen taking both ends of a doubleheader.

Rebs, Plainsmen split twinbill

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

The Midland Lee Rebels split their doubleheader with Lubbock Monterey at the Lee field Tuesday, but it took some luck to gain the lone victory.

"We lucked out in the first game," Lee coach Ernie Johnson said. "We made too many mistakes and they gave it back to us. Then we got bombed out in the second game."

In the opener, the Plainsmen (7-2) held a one-run lead going into the bottom of the seventh before snatching defeat from the jaws of victory.

Rebel Ted Leps walked to open the inning and scored the tying run despite being caught off first and second base on consecutive plays.

With Leps leading too far off first, Lubbock catcher Jimmy Simpson threw over first basemen Chad Boykin's head, allowing Leps to advance to second.

BUT LEPS didn't learn his lesson. He made the same mistake by edging too far off second. Fortunately, Simpson's throw was behind the runner and Leps was lucky enough to beat the long relay from Simpson to second baseman Curtis Hogan and Scott Smith at third.

With coach Johnson standing in the third base box, Leps stayed glued to the bag long enough to allow Darrell Holmes to double into left center.

Losing pitcher Kevin Short gave an intentional walk to Barry Blackwell, who was two-for-three including a solo home run, to set up the double play.

The strategy worked as Steve Woodlee grounded to second and the infield made the turn with Holmes moving to third.

When Mike Mercurio rapped a grounder to David Hagood at short, it appeared the game was headed for extra innings. But Hagood's throw was too tall for Boykin and suddenly the Rebels had the victory.

IN THE second game the Plainsmen came back with a vengance scoring 10 runs on seven hits while terrorizing Rebel pitcher Craig Ray by holding a track meet on the base paths while he was trying to pitch. Ray didn't help his own cause as he walked six batters, four of which scored, and gave up three extra base hits.

His troubles started early when he walked the first two batters followed by a defensive blunder which loaded the bases on a fielders choice, or lack of one.

With two men on, Joachim bunted to Dareen Webb at first. Webb looked to third and then second but couldn't make up his mind where to throw. When Joachim scooted past him, the bases were loaded with no outs.

Bill Lance's double followed by a sacrifice and a Webb error gave the Plainsmen a 4-0 lead.

It was downhill from there as Lubbock scored one in the second, three in the fifth, and two more in the sixth.

In the fifth inning, Ray struck out the first and third batters with a walk in between. Then the roof fell. Hagood hit a triple, Short singled and Joachin followed with another triple.

The Rebels out hit the Plainsmen, but their 10 singles were scattered well enough to stop any chances of a big inning.

BLACKWELL HAD a hot day at the plate for Lee, collecting six hits in sevens trips, including a line drive solo home run over the right field fence in the first game.

The Rebels committed six errors, three in each contest, and left seven men stranded.

"We've got to play people to get personnel picked for district," Johnson said. "And I'm becomming more convinced who can play and who can't."

Kansas shocks Sooners, 87-77

By The Associated Press

Bo Overton was down, Wayman Tisdale was off — and Oklahoma is out of the Big Eight basketball playoffs as a result of it.

"Maybe it just wasn't meant to be," said Oklahoma's assistant coach, Mike Newell, after the 19th-ranked Sooners were bounced out of the Big Eight playoffs 87-77 by Kansas Tuesday night. "You know, they shot the lights out. That makes the difference between winning and losing."

Meanwhile, the Sooners couldn't hit the side of the backboard, shooting a pathetic 39 percent as they suffered a shocking first-round knockout on their home court.

One of the reasons was the ineffectiveness of Tisdale, the freshman sensation who scored a sub-par 13 points. The other was the absence of Overton, one of the Sooners' starting guards who severely strained his ankle just hours before Tuesday night's game and had to sit on the sidelines.

"Wayman's human," said Newell, subbing for Coach Billy Tubbs who was hit by a car recently. "He's going to have a bad night. He had good shots but they just weren't falling."

PART OF the reason was a terrific defense put up by the Jayhawks.

"Our defense has been and is our strength at KU," said Jayhawk Coach Ted Owens. "We wanted to play OU man-to-man and by doing so it made a big difference in the ballgame."

Kansas freshman Calvin Thompson scored 30 points to lead all scorers.

"We just, you know, couldn't miss anything," said Thompson.

Missouri, the nation's 12th-ranked team, was a first-round Big Eight winner, as were Nebraska and Kansas State.

Mark Dressler scored 24 points and Steve Stipanovich had 21 to lead Missouri to an 88-73 victory over Colorado. The Tigers took control by outscoring the Buffs 12-2 in a four-minute span to open up a 58-46 lead late in the second half.

The victory marked the final home appearance of Stipanovich, Jon Sundvold and Dressler. The trio helped lead the Tigers to four consecutive Big Eight conference championships, and Stipanovich became the school's all-time scoring leader. His performance Tuesday night gave him 1,782 career points.

DAVID PONCE scored 14 points to lead Nebraska to a 94-71 victory over Iowa State. Ponce was one of five Cornhuskers who scored in double figures as Nebraska produced its highest point total of the conference season.

Lorenza Andrews scored 18 points while Matt Clark and Raymond Crenshaw each added 16 as Oklahoma State blitzed Kansas State 75-61.

The Big Eight playoffs were one of several tournaments as college basketball teams continued to shoot for berths in the NCAA playoffs starting around the country March 15.

In the Missouri Valley Conference, Voise Winters scored 15 points, including six free throws in the last 1½ minutes, to lead Bradley to a 63-53 victory over Drake.

"We are playing well enough now to beat anyone in the conference," said Bradley Coach Dick Versace, whose team won the National Invitation Tournament last year.

Michael McKenny's 18 points led Illinois State to a 64-54 win over Southern Illinois. ISU Coach Bob Donewald said Lou Stefanovic helped the Redbirds in the first half when he "came off the bench to give us a lift in scoring. In the second half, defensive plays and free throws helped us to hang on. Once we were on top, we got some key rebounds."

Herb Johnson scored a game-high 34 points as Tulsa crushed Indiana State 108-89. Gil Williams had 20 points to pace New Mexico State to a 95-80 victory over West Texas State.

In the Mid-American Conference, Vic Alexander scored 16 points to lead Ohio University over Eastern Michigan 74-60. Ray McCallum, playing what may be his final home game for Ball State, tied his career high of 32 points in becoming the Mid-American Conference's all-time scoring leader as the Cardinals downed Miami 85-79. Ken Epperson poured in 26 points as Toledo broke open a close game in the second half to down Kent State 79-64.

Bumbry, Shelby fight for position

By The Associated Press

This spring, veteran Al Bumbry and rookie John Shelby are vying for the Baltimore Orioles' starting center field position.

And each made a different sort of impression in exhibition baseball Tuesday.

Shelby continued to dazzle new Manager Joe Altobelli when he tripled and doubled as the Orioles crunched the Montreal Expos 11-5. Shelby's performance came a day after he had four hits in a victory over Atlanta.

BUMBRY MADE his impression on Montreal starting pitcher Charlie Lea by lining a ball off the pitcher's head in the third inning. The ball was caught in the infield and it was later determined that Lea was not seriously injured.

The San Diego Padres, however, did not make out so well on the medical front. The team announced that shortstop Garry Templeton would undergo arthroscopic surgery Thursday in an effort to correct an arthritic condition in his left knee.

"It's not good news for the club," said Padres spokesman Jim Geschke. "We have no idea how long he will be out. It's a wait-and-see type of thing."

Back on the field, Cy Young Award winner Pete Vuckovich of Milwaukee was raked for seven runs in the third inning by a Chicago Cubs' split squad, though the Brewers eventually triumphed, 9-8. Vuckovich got little fielding support as Ed Romero made a throwing error and outfielder Gorman Thomas dropped a fly for another miscue in the big inning.

RON CEY homered for the Cubs while Ned Yost homered for the Brewers, who also got a two-run double from Paul Molitor.

San Francisco's Mike Krukow also got little help as the Giants dropped a 9-6 decision to the Oakland A's. The Giants made five errors, leading to four unearned Oakland runs, as both Krukow and A's starter Rick Langford yielded four runs.

High-priced free agent Floyd Bannister made a successful pitching debut for the Chicago White Sox. The left-hander, who signed a multi-million dollar contract after leaving the Seattle Mariners, threw two scoreless innings in a 7-1 victory over the Kansas City Royals. He allowed only Willie Wilson's line single.

Rookie infielders Lorenzo Gray and Fran Mullins homered for the White Sox.

Another big-money free agent, Don Baylor of the New York Yankees, turned in a big performance in a 7-6 victory over the Texas Rangers in 10 innings. Baylor homered, doubled twice and singled to knock in four runs, but it was Rick Cerone's two-out single in the bottom of the 10th that capped a two-run rally that lifted the Yankees to victory.

Dave Hostetler smacked a two-run homer for Texas and Bobby Johnson homered off New York reliever Goose Gossage.

WHILE ONE split squad of Cubs lost, the other half won as Steve Trout pitched 22-3 scoreless innings in a 3-1 victory over the Cleveland Indians. Craig Stimac, a former Indians' farmhand, drove in two runs with a pair of singles.

Smith will be springboard for return to Hutchinson

TERRY WILLIAMSON

San Jacinto looks awesome on paper. San Jacinto looks awesome to some of the teams that have had to play them this year.

The Ravens have four players ranging in size from 6-6 to 6-8½. Midland College can't match up with that. The Chaparrals have 6-7 Chester Smith and everything in between 5-6 Spud Webb. The Ravens average 95 points per game while the Chaps are in the 70s per outing.

Considering those facts, it looks like the road has ended for the defending national junior college champions of Coach Jerry Stone.

If that is the thought that has been passing through the mind this week as the Chaps prepare to face San Jacinto in Fort Worth tonight, your memory needs some jogging exercise.

MC didn't win the national championship a year ago by playing small teams. Smith was the Chap post then too. He didn't play in a game where he had a height advantage, but he was a main key in winning the national title in Hutchinson, Kan., one year ago.

Take the championship finals in Hutch. Smith was paired against Miami Dade North's Yvon Joseph, a 6-10 giant who was supposed to be the main major college talent in the national tournament.

The Chaps went double overtime to beat Dade, but the score between Smith and Joseph was even more telling. Scoring: Smith 20, Joseph 13. Rebounds: Smith 13, Joseph 9. Blocked Shots: Smith 4, Joseph 2. Fouls: Smith 3, Joseph 3. Make your own choice of who won that battle.

Some say Smith was not an impressive player until the national tournament last year. There may be some truth to that, but he had a good mental approach to his job and by the time MC was crowned the national champion, Smith had grown up — almost.

Stone had to sit him down a couple of times early this year. The reasons are not fully known, but Smith didn't come back with an intense attitude. Whatever the problems, Smith had returned to tournament form by conference time and the big numbers started coming.

He ended his Chaparral Center career Saturday night with a career high 36 points. He may only be 6-7, but he is one of the most dominating centers the conference has seen.

Smith was humble at Hutchinson last year as Webb and Puntus Wilson drew most of the rave notices, but he made it known Saturday that being named as the Region V MVP was the first such honor he had ever received.

Smith's groundhog work under the basket at the nationals last year did go unnoticed for the most part. Those close to the Chaps from Midland knew what he had done. But the fans of Hutchinson were captivated by the Webb and Wilson duo, who were equally spectacular. Smith kept his place in the background.

"Coach Stone told me I had a job to do up here and that's what I've tried to do," Smith said after one of the tournament games in Hutchinson after scoring a game high 28 points.

Saturday after the Region V tournament Smith said, "I think we are going to win it again. I've got to do my job and everyone else has to do theirs. That's the way it's been since I've been here."

So now Smith faces another challenge and that seems to be when he plays the best. He may not be an early season player, but he sure knows how to handle the pressure moments. It's like he enjoys this time of year.

So now let worry rest in the front court of San Jacinto.

World Free hurts Houston's chances for Sampson

HOUSTON (AP) - Houston Rockets Coach Del Harris knew six weeks ago that the Rockets no longer had a lock on Ralph Sampson and the No. 1 draft pick in the National Basketball Association draft.

He's just now announcing the fact to the rest of the world.

Harris kept hoping he was wrong but his worst fears came true before his eyes Tuesday night as World B. Free scored 37 points to almost singlehandedly rally Cleveland to a 102-99 victory over the bumbling Rockets.

It was a game the media had labeled as a "must win" for the Rockets if thy were to keep pace in the race for Sampson, the prize collegiate plum from Virginia.

But Harris said the turning point in the "Race for Ralph" came on Dec. 15 when the Cavaliers acquired Free from Golden State in exchange for Ron Brewer.

"Ever since they got Free it has been academic," Harris said. "We're going to have a coin toss for No. 1. I've known that for six weeks. When Cleveland has a guy like Free, all they have to do when he's hot is get him the ball and they'll win close game like tonight."

The Rockets, who have lost 12 of their last 13 games and stand only 11-51 for the season, and Cleveland, need to finish with the worst records in the NBA's East and West conferences for the Rockets to be assured of drafting the 7-4 center.

Houston owns Cleveland's first selection in the upcoming NBA college draft and would get the first overall pick in the draft if the Cavs finish last. If a team other than Cleveland finishes last in the Eastern Conference, the Rockets would have to flip a coin with that team for the right to select Sampson.

The coin toss came closer to reality Tuesday night as the Cavaliers relinquished last place in the NBA Eastern Conference's Central Division to the Indiana Pacers, which lost their 10th straight game and have little hope in Harris' analysis of getting off the bottom.

"Cleveland simply has better players than Indiana," Harris said. "They (Indiana) might not win another game if they didn't have a good coach."

Free scored six straight points in the crucial closing minutes to rally the Cavaliers to victory. Houston had led by 15 in the second quarter and blew a five-point lead with 2:47 to play.

"There is no science to it, he (Free) just jumps up over people and makes the baskets," Harris said.

The Houston Post has brought the Rockets' predicament into focus by using an agate listng under the heading of "Sampson Sweepstakes" in which the NBA standings are reversed to show the Rockets leading with "51 victories and 11 losses."

The Rockets have been keeping up their end of the bargain in a topsy-turvey season where losing now means winning later in the NBA draft.

The Cavaliers had cooperated with the master plan until recently when Coach Tom Nissalke directed Cleveland to eight victories in 14 games, including Tuesdy night's victory that finally pulled them out of the cellar.

Free could care less about Houston's pursuit of Sampson, highly coveted since the Rockets traded NBA most valuable player Moses Malone to Philadelphia prior to the tart of the seson.

'We went out of the cellar tonignt ad that's all I'm worried about, staying out," Free said.

Larry O'Brien to meet with NBA's leaders

NEW YORK (AP) — National Basketball Association Commissioner Larry O'Brien will report to the league's Board of Governors in Los Angeles Friday on the status of deadlocked negotiations with the players association.

"We reviewed all elements and proposals and it was a true business session," O'Brien said after Tuesday's meetings in New York between management and players representatives. He declined to elaborate further on the five-hour talks, which were held under threats of an April 2 strike deadline imposed by the players association.

O'Brien said no new talks have been scheduled.

"We basically were meeting to clarify the issues," said Players Association general counsel Larry Fleisher. "We're no closer to a settlement than we were before."

The length of the meetings was in sharp contrast to last week's acrimonious session that lasted just 24 minutes.

"No one is changing positions, but at least we're talking," Fleisher said.

The previous collective bargaining agreement expired last June and the 23-team league has played its regular schedule since Oct. 29 while labor talks have taken place only sporadically.

Charles Grantham, the union's assistant general counsel, and Seattle SuperSonics guard Fred Brown, vice president of the players union, attended Tuesday's meetings with Fleisher. Brown played in a game against the New York Knicks Tuesday night.

"The mere fact that we're talking is positive," Brown said. "Whenever you can sit at a bargaining table there is a reason for optimism. But we're still far apart."

O'Brien was joined by the NBA's executive vice president for business and legal affairs, David Stern, at the talks.

The NBA, plagued by financial troubles, has proposed a revenue sharing and guaranteed compensation plan to the players in exchange for a salary cap for each team.

The players have expressed interest in the proposal but want to wait four years to implement it because of the effect it would have on free agency. Teams who exceed the salary cap would not be able to sign free agents.

Sampson thinks Virginia will win NCAA title this year

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Virginia's Ralph Sampson says he thinks the No. 2 Cavaliers will win the national basketball championship this year in his last shot at the title.

But he says, "I'm not going to get caught up in the last chance aspect of it. I've never been burdened by that. The motivation, the drive, the determination was already there."

Sampson, who has led Virginia to 108 victories in four years, more than any other college during that span, said Tuesday he wants just eight more wins before ending his collegiate career.

That would carry the Cavaliers to the title in both this weekend's Atlantic Coast Conference tournament and the NCAA championship, which would be a first for the Cavaliers.

"I don't deal with anybody's expectations but my own," Sampson told a news conference. "I don't worry about what fans, sportswriters or what anybody else thinks. Now that it's tournament time, it's on my mind to get to Albuquerque (site of the NCAA finals). I think we're going to win it.

"Every year since I've been here, we've been the best team in the country at one time during the season. At this particular time of the year, this is the best team we've had. We're peaking when we need to peak."

Coach Terry Holland is resigned to the fact that some Virginia fans will be disappointed by anything less than the national championship.

"That's just the way it is. It's part of athletics in total. We understand that. We feel good about ourselves right now and we're playing excellent basketball," he said.

Holland says Sampson normally reacts to pressure positively, and he hopes that will be the case the next few weeks.

Pistons stay in NBA's postseason hunt with victory

By The Associated Press

The Detroit Pistons, clawing toward the playoffs, called it a "must win." The Indiana Pacers, meanwhile, had "nothing to win but pride."

As it turned out, Detroit stayed in the National Basketball Association postseason hunt Tuesday by beating Indiana 107-101, sending the Pacers to a club-record 10th consecutive defeat.

Pistons Coach Scotty Robertson said this was the only time during his three years with the team that he told his players before the game, "We must win this one tonight."

NBA Roundup

With the victory, Detroit remained two games behind the New York Knicks in the battle for the last Eastern Conference playoff berth.

Nuggets 129, Spurs 118

Denver won its eighth consecutive game as its front line of Alex English, Kiki Vandeweghe and Dan Issel prevailed in the battle of Midwest Division leaders. English, the NBA's leading scorer, had 28, Vandeweghe got 27 and Issel had 24 as the Nuggets led from start to finish.

The victory enabled Denver to pull within 4½ games of San Antonio, which got 21 points from Mike Mitchell and George Gervin's 19.

Mavericks 120, Suns 98

Jay Vincent scored 22 points and led a parade of seven Dallas players in double figures. The Mavericks, who got 17 points apiece from Mark Aguirre and Brad Davis, built a 25-point lead in the third quarter.

Lakers 116, Warriors 112

Earvin "Magic" Johnson scored 31 points, had 12 rebounds and nine assists as Los Angeles held off Golden State in the fourth quarter.

Mickey Johnson, who finished with 28 points, scored 19 in the fourth quarter as the Warriors pulled within one point twice in the final period.

"They kept coming on and coming on and I thought they were going to catch us," said Earvin Johnson.

Said Mickey Johnson: "He (Warriors Coach Al Attles) was stressing that I should ad lib a little more on the court and not be so formal. I've been trying to learn the plays, but he told me just go out and play my game."

Knicks 107, Sonics 98

New York reached the .500 mark for the first time this season (30-30) as Bill Cartwright scored 28 points and Bernard King added 25. New York broke the game open with a 12-1 spurt early in the fourth quarter, sparked by Rory Sparrow's six points, while holding Seattle without a field goal for the opening 4:40 of the period.

Gus Williams had 25 points and Fredie Brown had 20 for Seattle, which has lost five of its last seven games.

Hawks 110, Trail Blazers 93

Rookie Dominque Wilkins matched his season-high with 30 points as Atlanta led from the start. Atlanta had a 64-38 lead late in the second quarter and Portland could not overcome the deficit.

"That was the kind of effort you need night in and night out to make the playoffs," Wilkins said. "I think at this point we are playing well."

Cavaliers 102, Rockets 99

Cliff Robinson's 20-foot jumper with 17 seconds sealed Cleveland's victory in a game that could have a bearing on the No. 1 choice in the upcoming NBA draft. Houston, with the worst record in the Western Division at 11-51, also owns Cleveland's first-round pick. A Houston victory could have helped ensure that the Cavaliers finish in last place in the Eastern Division, which would give Houston the top two picks if the Rockets also come in last.

USFL may produce drain on CFL quality

TORONTO (AP) — More than a dozen high-profile Canadian Football League players are being wooed by the United States Football League officials to play out their options and join the new league.

"We want to see the USFL succeed," said linebacker Ben Zambiasi of the Hamilton Tiger-Cats, one of four TiCats being pursued by USFL officials. The others are defensive back David Shaw, quarterback Dave Marler and wide receiver Keith Baker.

Running back Cedric Minter of the Toronto Argonauts and several of his teammates — quarterback Condredge Holloway, linebacker John Pointer, slotback Dave Newman and kicker Dean Dorsey are also being encouraged to head south.

Other CFL players include receivers Tom Scott and Brian Kelly of the Edmonton Eskimos and quarterbacks Dieter Brock and Mark Jackson and receiver Rick House of the Winnipeg Blue Bombers.

Zambiasi, a perennial all-star, said discussions he has had with his counterparts have left him with the impression that the majority of CFL imports are anxious to finish their contracts and join the USFL as soon as possible.

He said many of the players, including himself, regret the fact they locked themselves into long-term contracts prior to the USFL's inception.

Zambiasi has been tempted by Denver Gold, even though he still has two years left on his Hamilton contract.

"The USFL gives us a far more attractive option than the CFL does," said Zambiasi.

Zambiasi said when he told Red Miller, head coach and general manager of the Gold, that he earns $60,000 annually with Hamilton, Miller "didn't back down."

"He (Miller) said I could have a home in Denver with a better salary as soon as I wanted to," Zambiasi said. "Personally, I think the CFL is in trouble.

"If the USFL existed when I came out of college, I'm sure I would have opted for the USFL instead of the CFL," he added. "I think fans will see a noticeable deterioration in the caliber of the CFL, not as much this year, but eventually, as players' contracts start running out."

Pointer, an all-star linebacker with the Argonauts, has held several discussions with owner John F.Bassett of Tampa Bay Bandits. Bassett says Pointer will visit Tampa next week.

"Not all that many days have gone by when we haven't got a call from a CFL player who is interested in playing for us," Bassett said. "I'm sure 95 percent of the American players up there would prefer to play down here.

"An American football player wants to play in the United States," he added. "He's just like a sailor who is looking to get lucky every Saturday night."

Eugene Goodlow and Joey Walters are two prominent former CFL players who joined the USFL in time for its inaugural season, which began Sunday.

Miracle workers seek NM crown

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Sometimes, the play that gets a team to the New Mexico State High School Basketball Tournament doesn't come out of a playbook — it's born more out of desperation than preparation.

Take the case of the defending Class AAAA champion Farmington Scorpions.

A week ago, Farmington's chances of making it back to Albuquerque for a shot at another title appeared precarious at best. Playing a talented Gallup team in the quarterfinal round of the District 1AAAA Tournament, the Scorpions trailed the Bengals by eight points with less than three minutes left in the game.

But somehow, as champions are apt to do, Farmington hung in there and after cutting the deficit to one point in the final 30 seconds, senior guard Mike Sanders bombed home a 20-foot jumper that gave the Scorpions a one point victory.

Ironically, the play that Farmington Coach Marv Sanders, the player's dad, diagrammed during a last minute timeout was designed to get the Scorpions a shot inside, not Mike Sanders' airmailed game-winner. But when the Farmington guard couldn't find anyone open inside, he changed the game plan.

Two nights later, Farmington clinched a berth in the State Tournament with an overtime win over Santa Fe. Again, it was Sanders that provided the big play, forcing the extra period with a basket near the end of regulation.

On Thursday, Farmington opens defense of the title it won a year ago, when it meets Las Cruces in one of four opening round games of the Class AAAA tournament.

In other opening round games, Albuquerque Eldorado meets Goddard, Hobbs takes on Albuquerque Cibola and Los Alamos faces Albuquerque Highland.

Opening round winners advance to Friday's semifinals, with the championship game in AAAA scheduled for 8:30 p.m. Saturday at University Arena.

Unlike 1982, when Marv Sanders brought an unbeaten team to the tournament, this year's Farmington team has had to repeatedly battle back. The Scorpions are 21-5 going in the tournament and finished second in District 1AAAA behind Los Alamos.

"If ever a group deserved to go to the State Tournament, this one did," said the Farmington coach. "They have battled one thing after another all year long."

How much longer Farmington can prolong its season will depend on the play of Sanders — the team's anchor — and how well the Scorpions can contain Las Cruces' 6-foot-9, 250-pound center. Paco Larsen.

Hobbs, 21-5, is making its 23rd straight appearance in the tournament. But the Eagles are very young, with speedy guard Morris Taylor the only senior in the starting five. Taylor, along with cousin Dennis Taylor and 6-foot-4 junior Clark White, all average right around 13 points a game.

Cibola, 17-9, hasn't played to its potential this season, but according to a rival coach has as good a starting five as any in the state. A veteran team, Cibola starts five seniors.

The tandem of Scott Jaster and Ralph Tarpley, both 6-4, give the Cougars rebounding strength while the backcourt trio of Brian O'Neill, Derrick Clark and Erik Sparks all are considered solid scoring threats.

Cougars still on top

By The Associated Press

The top-ranked Houston Cougars, largely underestimated in the national collegiate basketball rankings last season, now say the polls don't matter.

"We learned last year that you can be ranked and get bumped off in the first round," Assistant Coach Terry Kirkpatrick said Tuesday as the Cougars retained their top billing in this season's next-to-last Associated Press poll.

"We know this year that the only thing that really counts is when you get to the Final Four and win there. Then you are really No. 1."

The Cougars slumped midway through last season and were ignored in the polls before becoming a Cinderella team and advancing to the NCAA semifinals where they lost to eventual champion North Carolina.

"Last year it was all peaks and valleys, we just peaked at the right time," Kirkpatrick said. "We are just more mature this season. This team has not had any peaks and valleys. We are playing at a high rate of efficiency."

That efficiency has resulted in a 25-6 record going into this weekend's Southwest Conference tournament in Dallas, a 20-game winning streak, the nation's longest, and two victories over SWC rival, No. 6 Arkansas.

The Cougars strengthened their lead over No. 2-ranked Virginia, polling 43 first-place votes to nine for the Cavaliers.

Louisville, 27-3, remained third followed by UCLA, 22-4 and North Carolina, 25-6.

Rounding out the top 10 were No. 6 Arkansas, 25-2; No. 7, Indiana, 22-5; St. John's, 24-4; Nevada-Las Vegas, 25-2 and Kentucky, 21-6.

TV effort may have more woes than USFL

By DAVE GOLDBERG
An AP Sports Analysis

Like the United States Football league itself, the television networks carrying the USFL's games have a long way to go.

ABC's telecast on Sunday and ESPN's Monday night game contrasted sharply — ESPN was little more than a USFL cheerleader; ABC was so blas as to be sleep-inducing. But the primary impression left by both is that if the league is to depend on television for its survival, television had better shape up faster than the teams.

The best news for the networks is the ratings — ABC's overnight returns from Los Angeles, Chicago and New York, all of which had local teams on, were comparable with a National Football League Sunday. The NFL averaged 16.5 on CBS last year; NBC did 13.9. The USFL last Sunday did a 16.5 in New York, a 14.7 in Chicago and a 16.7 in New York, far above ABC's projections of ratings between 5 and 6.

NETWORK OFFICIALS, however, caution that national ratings probably will be lower and many people may have tuned in out of curiosity. Indeed, figures for the third hour in New York — when the Los Angeles-New Jersey game was moving toward an exciting end — had dropped off to 13.5.

But aesthetically, parity with the NFL is a long way off.

ESPN was the bigger offender with, perhaps, the better excuse — it's banking on the USFL to help erase some of its losses. But it will be hard to keep an audience when soundtrack resounds with "great," "magnificent," "outstanding," "super," particularly from the likes of Jim Simpson, normally a solid professional.

The ABC telecast that three-quarters of the country saw — Los Angeles-New Jersey — wasn't awful. But it was vague, particularly about what was going on in the rest of the USFL. There were few updates on other games and at one point, Frank Gifford announced that Boston had beaten Tampa 21-17. Half an hour later, Jackson casually corrected it to 21-17 Tampa.

Technically, a lot of replay opportunities missed. On a roughing-the-passer call against Los Angeles, there was no replay to confirm or deny analyst Lynn Swann's suggestion that the officials blew it.

When the Express' Vister Hayes caught a touchdown pass, Jackson asked, "Where, oh where was the General defense?" A commercial and three plays later we finally got a view that showed a New Jersey defender (never identified) slipping in the corner of the screen.

SWANN PERFORMED like the rookie he is. Like most fresh from the locker room analysts, he was overly technical and narrow, forever talking about secondaries rotating to the strong side and split safeties, ignoring overall strategy to concentrate on individual plays as if they were an end in themselves.

Moreover, he forgot that players — even USFL players — have names as well as numbers. "Good block by No.64," he said on Herschel Walker's touchdown for the Generals. "That big No.99 really was in there," he said after Los Angeles swarmed on New Jersey quarterback Bobby Scott. And so on.

Gretzky wants more than goals

By The Associated Press

Wayne Gretzky may be the National Hockey League's scoring leader. But right now, scoring is not the first thing on his mind.

"We have a lot to prove," says the star of the Edmonton Oilers, looking back to last year's loss in the first round of the NHL playoffs and ahead to this year's Stanley Cup competition.

"We heard a lot about that loss (to Los Angeles) all summer and all season. Hopefully, we learned from that experience and it won't happen again."

Gretzky's Oilers are playing up to his expectations so far this season. With Tuesday night's 9-4 victory over the Hartford Whalers, the Oilers have a 25-point lead over Calgary in the Smythe Division and have already clinched a playoff spot.

Gretzky's three goals paced the Edmonton scoring spree, giving him 62 for the season. Once they got their offense going, the Oilers needed only three minutes to erase Hartford's early 2-0 lead, getting goals from Tom Roulston, Paul Coffey and Dave Hunter between 9:56 and 12:56 of the first period.

NHL Roundup

Bruins 11, Nordiques 5

Ray Bourque knocked in three goals in a six-goal splurge by Boston in the second period to pace the Bruins over Quebec.Center Peter McNab and Keith Crowder notched a pair of goals for the Bruins, who have won five of their last six games.

Black Hawks 4, Flyers 1

Tony Esposito turned back 28 shots on goal and Steve Larmer scored the winning goal and added an assist as Chicago downed Philadelphia.

Capitals 5, Devils 4

Bobby Carpenter scored two goals as Washington held off a late New Jersey rally to preserve a one-goal victory over the Devils.

North Stars 5, Sabres 1

Tim Young scored three goals and Brian Bellows and Neal Broten each added their 28th of the season, powering Minnesota over Buffalo.

Maple Leafs 3, Canadiens 3

John Anderson slapped in a rebound at 17:18 of the third period to lift Toronto into a tie with Montreal. A pair of goals by Mario Tremblay and another by Guy Lafleur had given the Canadiens a 3-0 lead midway through the second period. But Bill Derlago, with a late second-period goal, and Bill Harris, with a goal early in the third period, had moved the Leafs within one goal.

Blues 6, Islanders 0

Rick Heinz kicked out 39 shots while making only his second goaltending start of the year, leading St. Louis over the New York Islanders.

Kings 6, Flames 4

A controversial goal by Jim Fox on a 40-foot slapshot in the second period snapped a 3-3 tie and sparked Los Angeles over Calgary.The dispute erupted when neither referee Brian Lewis nor the goal judge called Fox' shot a goal. But seconds later, linesman Ron Finn ruled that the shot went into the net before bouncing out.

Canucks 7, Rangers 3

Thomas Gradin assisted on three goals in a four-goal first period which carried Vancouver past the New York Rangers for the Canucks' fourth straight victory.

Landry wants new punter

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys say coach Tom Landry is "more serious than ever" about finding a punter to remove Danny White from the kicking team.

The Cowboys have signed South African rugby star Naas Botha, who will join the team in training camp next summer along with at least six other punting prospects, Cowboys spokesman Greg Aiello said Monday.

"I think coach (Tom) Landry is more serious than ever about finding a replacement for him (White)," Aiello said. "I think he might even settle on a guy who's not as good as Danny. After the championship game, he (Landry) doesn't want to have to worry about who's going to punt."

White was injured at the end of the first half of the National Football Conference championship game, which Dallas lost to Washington.

"Danny's punting has fallen off in playoff games. We don't want him to have to worry about anything but quarterbacking," Aiello said.

Botha, 25, who spent two years in the South African police force, was signed last month. He will be signed to three one-year contracts, if he makes the team, Aiello said.

Billy likes Mantle over Willie Mays

By SCOTT OSTLER
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Unfocus your eyes a little and the man — short and thin and worried, eyes fixed straight ahead — is an Old West gunfighter, standing on the saloon porch, watching for the arrival of the afternoon stage.

Focus your eyes and the gunfighter becomes Billy Martin, standing on the sidewalk in front of the Beverly Hilton Hotel, watching for the arrival of his rental car.

Billy Martin, looking distinctively out of place in the Land of Mellow, was on his way to spring training, where he would attempt to whip a ragged group of impostors into a Yankee baseball team that even George Steinbrenner could be proud of.

"Hey," he said, by way of greeting. We had made an appointment to talk at an earlier hour, but had missed phone connections. So I drove over to the Hilton anyway, just in time. "Let's go inside, we can talk for a few minutes."

MARTIN HAD been in town less than 12 hours, a quick stop to tape a TV show where he and two other former Yankees debated three ex-Giants on the topic of which player had been greater: Mantle or Mays. The debate, in its unedited form, had been way too polite and uneventful.

Martin took the arguments for Mays hard. He had flown to Los Angeles, not so much to tape a fun TV show as to defend the honor of his best friend, and obviously it was still on his mind.

When I asked him what he thought of the Mays situation, meaning Mays being thrown out of baseball for working for a casino, Martin thought I was referring to the debate.

"They're (the Mays debate team) talking stats," he said. "You take any ballplayer that's seen Mickey play, and seen what he had to go through just to play ... A lot of people couldn't walk with those things (bandages) on 'em, never mind play.

"They talk about Mays playing every game. Mickey never begged out of a game. Played in a World Series when he was bleeding through his uniform. Mickey never begged out of anything. What a lot of people can't read, is when a player brings a team to a World Series. Ted Williams never did that. Joe DiMaggio did. Mickey Mantle did ... Willie Mays was a great player, but he didn't have that kind of thing in him that could make all the other players rise up and want to win, by his deeds. But Mickey did it with his deeds."

MARTIN WAS warming up. He and Mickey have been pals for 23 years, very close pals. They still golf and hunt togethev every year, and Martin still goes down to Mickey's place in Texas every year for the holidays. Except this winter — "When I got fired (as manager of the A's), I just kind of hibernated," Martin said. This is one of baseball's great lasting friendships.

"When they say Mays hit a ball as far as Mickey, they're smoking something," Martin said quietly. "Ain't no way Mays ever hit a ball, in his best shot, as far as Mickey Mantle. In his best shot! I'll give him his two best shots, back-to-back. Wouldn't be as far as Mickey. Mays might have hit balls 450 feet, yeah, might have hit a shot 460. but he ain't never hit one over 600 feet. Babe Ruth never hit one 600 feet, nobody ever hit one that far except for Mickey.

"And speed? If you want to check it, Lou Miller was a writer for a New York paper, he covered horse racing, and he's the guy who clocked the 3.1 (seconds to first base) left-handed and the 3.3 right-handed. And I was 3.6, would you believe it? No question Mickey's the fastest ever been clocked.

"If there is any edge at all, Mays had it in the outfield, but that's all. In everything else, Mickey just went right by him. If the old man (Casey Stengel) would let Mickey steal, a hundred bases a year would have been nothing, they couldn't throw him out."

MARTIN WAS on a Mickey Mantle roll, and soon he was back to the subject of power.

"No man in the history of baseball had as much power as Mickey Mantle. No man. On opening day ('53) in Washington, Mickey Mantle hit two balls — dead center is 440 feet and there's a 60-foot fence and a three above it — he hit two line drives like 2-irons over the tops of the trees, off Camilio Pasqual.

"You're not talking about ordinary power. Dave Kingman has power, Willie Mays had power. Then when you're talking about Mickey Mantle — altogether different level. Separates the men from the boys.

"He had an 18 1-2 neck, wore a 52 jacket, 33 waist and was 5-foot-11. He had the power of a heavyweight, with the agility of a featherweight and the speed of a track star."

"I didn't know him then, you know. But his power was awesome. And run? Nobody'd want to run (race) him. Jim Busby was supposed to be the fastest runner, he was a track man. They raced; no contest. Then after Mickey beat everybody, nobody wanted to race him."

Compiled from wire reports

Texas catcher Jim Sundberg will not be traded to the Los Angeles Dodgers or any other team this season because Rangers general manager Joe Klein said he wants everyone in baseball to know he means what he says. Klein said Monday he told Dodgers general manager Al Campanis last Friday to get a possible trade together early or "I'm not interested."

"He couldn't do it. I told him I wasn't going to wait until the end of March to do something. It is important for him to know how I operate for the next time I deal with him," said Klein.

"I won't trade Jim Sundberg," said Klein. "And I want all of baseball to know I mean what I say."

An ABC television crew working at the Montreal Expos' spring training camp here won't be taping any more interviews with players when the latter are on the field. Manager Bill Virdon cast a baleful eye on the crew interviewing controversial left fielder Tim Raines on Monday while the remainder of the players were taking part in an exercise program. Raines was asked for an interview, and after he obliged, the TV people set up their cameras on the third base side of the diamond. Virdon was not amused.

Football

Five Southern University football players have pleaded innocent to aggravated rape charges stemming from an allenged attack on a woman at a New Orleans hotel after last November's Bayou Classic. State District Judge Dennis Waldron accepted the pleas Monday, and set May 23 for trial.

Indicted were Thomas E. Hudson, 21, a freshman defensive back from Houston, Texas; Ernest Bell, 20, a receiver from Houston; Herman Coleman, 20, a freshman quarterback from Houston; Kim Ray Davis, 20, a sophomore punter from Atlanta, Ga.; and Linwood Hamilton, 25, a freshman guard from Easton, Pa.

Former Penn State football Coach Charles "Rip" Engle, whose teams achieved national prominence, has died at the age of 76. Engle, who retired from Penn State following the 1966 season, died Tuesday in a nursing home in nearby Bellefonte following a lengthy illness, the university said in a statement.

Basketball

Kentucky center Sam Bowie can begin exercising immediately to rehabilitate weak muscles in his left leg, his doctor said today. Bowie, a 7-foot-1 center who has missed two seasons because of a slow-healing hairline fracture of the leg, was examined in Memphis, Tenn., by Dr. R.A. Calandruccio and X-rays taken during the examination were "very encouraging," Calandruccio said in a statement issued by the university's sports information office.

Golf

Anne-Marie Palli says she was "a basket case" at this time last year on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour. Now, she is a champion.

The 27-year-old native of Cibourg, France, won the Samaritan Turquoise LPGA Classic here Monday by seven strokes in the rain-shortened, 54-hole tournament.

"It was like a dream come true for me," said Palli, who burst into tears after the awards ceremonies. "I feel like I'm on another planet right now. I don't think I quite realize what's happened yet."

Last year, the two-time European champion missed the cut in 17 of 22 events and lost her LPGA card.

Auto Racing

Roger Silman, 36, manager of England's Toleman Formula One auto racing team for the Brazilian Grand Prix, was stabbed during a robbery Monday night. The British-born Silman was treated and released from a local hospital and returned to his hotel.

Lewis guides Houston to nation's highest spot

By ISH HALEY
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HOUSTON — Guy Lewis, in 27 seasons, has compiled 524 victories as basketball coach at the University of Houston, but no one has ever included him on a list of master tacticians.

"I'm not telling you or anyone else I'm a great coach," said Lewis, whose current Cougars are ranked No. 1 by The Associated Press and United Press International. "I don't believe in that. But I am a competitor. I enjoy competing, and I feel like I can do that with the best of them."

Lewis, three years ago, was judged by Inside Sports magazine as one of the country's five most overrated coaches. Houston, the week the article was published, walloped Texas, 84-59, in the finals of the Southwest Conference Post-Season Classic.

"I don't read most of the articles written about me," said Lewis, "especially those who use unidentified writers who are quoting unidentified pro scouts who have never seen one of my practices. Anyone who says we are complete run-and-gun has got to be completely ignorant. We run — every coach does. But if one of my players takes a bad shot, he hears from me. I abhor bad shots. I tell my players a bad shot is worse than a turnover. With a turnover, at least an official has to handle the ball."

LEWIS, 60, does not seek out reporters. He attempts to divert interview requests from himself to his players. It is said he either has the smallest ego of anyone in his profession or that if he has a big ego he does a better job of hiding it than most of his peers.

"You called me a 'we' person instead of an 'I' guy, but if I say that it makes it sound as though I am an 'I' guy. I'm a team person. I think that describes me best," Lewis said. "Sincerely, I don't think I need any publicity. I want to help my players get it and I like to see them get it. Winning is its own reward. Any success I've had must be shared first with my wife (Dena), and players, and coaches and then with administrators and faculty at the university. Every coach has an ego of some kind, but I'm not interested in developing into a television personality. I'm not interested in anything except coaching."

"I've seen the University of Houston grow from no athletic department to one of the finest athletic programs in the country," Lewis said. "Without sounding corny, being affiliated with the University of Houston has been more than a job. It's been a dream, a crusade. ..."

LEWIS WAS coaching when Oscar Robertson played at Cincinnati and Chet Walker played at Bradley. Lewis coached against Oklahoma State when Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton was a player there. Lewis coached Elvin Hayes and Don Chaney and coached against John Wooden and Lew Alcindor, before he became Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. He was national coach of the year in 1968, when the Cougars were voted No. 1 by Associated Press and United Press International.

"You never get too old to enjoy basketball," Lewis said. "You can play, or at least shoot. If you ever catch a guy walking through the gym, if there's a basketball lying around, he'll pick it up and shoot it."

Houston has held memberships in the Lone Star, Gulf Coast, Missouri Valley and Southwest conferences. Between 1961 and 1975, the Cougars were independent. Houston defeated UCLA, 71-69, Jan. 20, 1968 before 52,693 fans in the Astrodome in what was billed as "The Game of the Century." Lewis supported SWC membership for Houston, at the expense of his program.

"At the time, I thought joining the conference would hurt our basketball, help our overall athletic program and ultimately help basketball," Lewis said. "But during the five years before we began our conference schedule we were neither fish nor foul. We were in limbo. The independents and the conference schools both used this in recruiting against us. When we finally got into the conference, we were competitive, but we weren't very strong. At times during our first year, we started three freshmen."

THE OTHER conference schools used Houston basketball as a model and Lewis' name for credibility. The Cougars, in their first SWC appearance, were crushed, 92-47, at Arkansas. A week later, Houston overcame an 18-point deficit and defeated Arkansas in Hofheinz Pavilion, 72-71.

"When we finally started playing, the conference wasn't the league it is now," Lewis said. "Eddie had just started at Arkansas, and Abe (Lemons) hadn't gone to Texas. Some of the schools in the league weren't as committed to basketball as they are now. Now the schools in this league are as committed as the schools in any league."

Houston, 25-2, has become the 11th undefeated SWC champion. But it has taken the Cougars eight years to win a title and their first game at Arkansas. His 1981 and 1982 teams were marked by slumps that took the Cougars from first place in the conference to second.

Lewis has not experienced a losing season in 24 years. But his team struggled in 1979, finishing 16-15, and again in 1980, going 14-14. Lewis never worked harder during those two seasons.

Call him 'Darling' without smiling

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — You can call him "Darling," and you don't have to smile when you say it.

That's his name. He's the darling of the New York Mets' developing young pitching corps, and people who know say he'll be bowling over batters at Shea Stadium in a year or two.

Maybe another Nolan Ryan or Tom Seaver. But he is unique in ways other than his name.

Ron Darling is right out of those 10-cent paperback Frank Merriwell books you read as a kid.

He is finishing up at Yale University, busy completng a thesis on the internment of Japanese-Americans in World War II for his BA degree in history. He is half-European, half-Asian and All-American.

His father is French, his mother Chinese. He was born in Honolulu, spent his early childhood on the island of Maui but moved with his family to the mainland when he was seven.

The family settled in the little New England community of Millbury, Mass., and that's where young Darling got interested in football and baseball, coached by his father, a member of the Air Force Reserves.

Now Ron Darling is all grown up, a handsome looking athlete at 6 feet, 3 inches and 195 pounds. A right-hander, he throws the ball like a bullet, has a good curve, slider and changeup.

"He's going to be one of the best," says Mets Manager George Bamberger, once a pitcher himself.

Having already spent two years in the minors — with double-A Tulsa in 1981 and triple-A Tidewater last season — Darling is one of the non-roster players working out with the Mets at spring training here.

He came to the Mets April 1, 1982, with pitcher Walt Terrell in the deal that sent Lee Mazzilli to the Texas Rangers.

It's easy to pick him out among the Mets' huge training squad. He's got Asian looks and he's the only guy with a couple of heavy books always under his arms.

When he isn't throwing, Darling is reading and taking notes.

"I've about finished my research, it's just a matter of assembling my material," Darling said. "I've used about 1,000 volumes in my research.

"I am anxious to know where the Mets will send me so I can have my books sent there.

"I chose this subject because there has been a revitalization of interest not only in this issue but in the broad Asian-Oriental culture, possibly because of the Vietnam War."

It's rare when an Ivy Leaguer chooses baseball as a career.

"I played both football and baseball in high school and had a few scholarship offers," Darling said.

Volcker proposes increasing energy taxes

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Federal Reserve Chairman Paul A. Volcker proposed Tuesday that Congress raise energy taxes if oil prices plunge below $25 a barrel, absorbing some of the savings for consumers to reduce federal budget deficits projected at $200 billion or more in 1984 and beyond.

Volcker made the suggestion in congressional testimony as both the House and Senate Budget committees intensified their search for revenue-raising measures before they draw up their alternatives to President Reagan's spending plan for the 1984 fiscal year.

"The case is quite compelling" for a temporary new tax on oil of up to $5 a barrel if world petroleum prices continue to fall sharply, Volcker told the House panel.

Imposing a $5 levy on a barrel of oil would increase gasoline taxes by about 12 cents a gallon, industry officials have estimated. Although Volcker frequently has exhorted Congress to reduce spending in order to bring down record deficits, he rarely makes an explicit suggestion for budget cuts or revenue-raising measures.

"A deep decline in oil prices would suggest early re-xamination of the case for energy taxes," Volcker said in his testimony. "One possibility would be to bring forward the kind of oil tax proposed by the aministration on a standby basis in fiscal (year) 1986."

Reagan proposed a standby tax increase, including a $5-a-barrel increase in oil taxes, but recommended that it take effect in October 1985 — when the 1986 fiscal year begins — only if deficits remained above the $100 billion level and the economy was expanding.

Under questioning by Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., Volcker did not suggest any date for making an energy tax effective or spell out details of its possible size or scope.

But, when asked if an oil price decline to $25 a barrel from the $34 benchmark price set by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, he replied: "If it went below that, I'd consider it quite seriously."

Meanwhile, the Senate Budget Committee prepared to work Wednesday on a spending program for fiscal year 1984, which begins Oct.1, without the benefit of a recommendation from Chairman Pete Domenici, R-N.M.

"There's a lot of polarization, so he decided to let the committee battle it out for a while," said a committee aide who requested anonymity in exchange for candor. "There hasn't been enough hissing and gnashing of teeth yet to get a consensus."

But Domenici hopes to get a better feeling for the views of fellow committee members by Friday night after a series of votes on budget totals for major categories of spending, the aide added.

President Reagan's controversial proposal for a 14 percent increase in military outlays will be a target for reduction by most members of the panel, but there was little agreement in advance on how far back the president's request will be pared back.

The House Budget Committee planned to begin voting next week on its version of a fiscal year 1984 spending plan, with Chairman James R. Jones, D-Okla., showing a similar reluctance to get too far out in front of the House troops.

Jones distributed an "exercise in hard choices," a multiple choice test on tax and spending issues, to all Democratic members of the House and asked them to send in their answers to the budget panel.

Last year Jones' proposed budget was rejected by the House, along with several other versions proposed by conservative Republicans, liberal Democrats, the black caucus and the GOP leadership. This year, according to House Budget Committee spokesman Wilson Morris, Jones hopes to get a better understanding among House members of the difficult choices facing the budget panel.

Reagan's budget, together with its contingency tax plan, a freeze on government pay and additional reductions in social programs, was regarded as unacceptable in major aspects, Morris said. "It (the president's budget) just disappeared without a trace," Morris said.

Warm spring may be bad omen for OPEC

LONDON — A surprising spurt of sunshine in the last week has pushed up tulips and forsythia ahead of schedule in Hyde Park, just across the street from the meeting of Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. But for the member of the OPEC delegation from Venezuela, it was just another ugly omen.

"That is all we need now — an unseasonably warm spring after an unseasonably warm winter," the Venezuelan economist said. He was standing in the lobby of the hotel where the Arab-dominated cartel was finding that halting the slide of world oil prices was akin to holding back the changing seasons.

When the population centers of the northern hemisphere warm up, furnaces are clicked off throughout the industrialized world. Longer daylight hours mean less electrical power generation. The demand for oil, already falling worldwide, slumps further until summer, when vacationers fill up the family car. The spring slump is just one of the formidable realities that has transformed the OPEC juggernaut into a handful of scrambling Third World politicians.

The group that once made the world tremble is now intimidated by a bloody feud that not too long ago would have occurred unwitnessed by all but the desert combatants. It pits Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini against Saudi Arabia's King Fahd, who is financing Iraq's war with Iran. The feud had far more to do with OPEC disarray in Vienna, Austria, in December and again in Geneva, Switzerland, in January than the $34-a-barrel benchmark price and production differentials.

In openly undercutting the OPEC price, Iranian oil minister Mohammed Gharazi said then — as he does now — that Iran is challenging Saudi domination of the Moslem world. And he threatens the Saudis with a rising in their own country by the fundamentalist followers of the ayatollah.

"The only ones who take the Iranians seriously are the Saudis," explained an Indonesian OPEC delegation member. "They, the Saudis, are very reluctant to crack down on the Iranians."

Even if Iran and Nigeria agreed — which seems very unlikely this week — to holding a new and lower OPEC price, it is virtually impossible for the cartel alone to keep the world price from falling further in the face of dropping demand. The group's most formidable obstacle is that most of the world's oil production is now in the hands of non-OPEC members.

Since 1982, the United States, Britain, Canada, Mexico and Norway have been producing more oil than 10 OPEC nations. As OPEC has cut back production to maintain its benchmark price, non-OPEC countries have gained control of the market. While OPEC production currently is 17 million barrels a day, non-cartel countries produce 19 million.

Today, the former victims of OPEC gouging are in position to stand back and let the cartel's fortunes plummet to whatever level market forces dictate. But that step backward has become a difficult one for Britain. On the record, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has said repeatedly that she would side with the marketplace. But her energy minister, Nigel Lawson, is waffling all over Whitehall.

Because Britain owns and sells oil from its North Sea fields to private oil companies, a decline in the world price means a loss in revenue to the Thatcher government. Worse, the falling revenues undercut confidence in the British government and the pound sterling, which has plummeted in relation to the American dollar. And, because oil is priced in dollars, British consumers have been forced to pay more for oil and gasoline even as the world price dropped.

That was the reason Mrs. Thatcher's government reluctantly cut North Sea prices from $33 a barrel to $31 a barrel last month, a cut that left British oil almost $2 higher than oil on the Amsterdam spot market that has replaced OPEC as the world price setter. The temerity of Mrs. Thatcher's action was soon underscored when Nigeria, an OPEC maverick, cut its price to $30 a barrel.

Limiting price reductions and curtailing production to keep world prices high is relatively easy for the public to observe in the United Kingdom. But it is almost impossible to monitor in the United States, where the massive multinational oil corporations have separate production and refining subsidaries.

Exxon, Mobil, Texaco, Gulf and Chevron have almost forsaken OPEC contracts in favor of the lower-priced spot market. But those companies have future windfall profits at stake in bolstering OPEC's pricing efforts. They have little incentive to use oil-well production in the lower 48 states to further undercut a collapsing OPEC.

Expert says decontrol will have little effect on gas prices

By JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

It would be a "cop out" not to decontrol natural gas soon, said a guest speaker at the Natural Gas Society of the Permian Basin's Tuesday luncheon. "There really won't be much difference at all, under quicker deregulation, in what will happen to natural gas prices. It will just happen sooner."

Dr. Ruth A. Maurer, mine economics professor at Colorado School of Mines, said "If the Natural Gas Policy Act is allowed to work, or (President) Reagan and (Secretary of Energy) Hodel's proposal is enacted, the same thing will happen. There will be a short-term flyup in natural gas prices under either plan."

A short-term increase will be followed by an even market adjustment for all fuels, Maurer said, and the free market price curve will be "...optimal for producers and consumers of gas."

Changing oil markets are related to the legislated conditions of the current U.S. natural gas market, and linked to price drops in crude value, she said, and "Oil products' prices have been kept artificially high in recent years."

Maurer studied consumer and producer fuel-price welfare under the NGPA for Denver's Intrawest Bank. "Decontrol of gas is needed to even out prices of all fuels so they are near-equal in price per unit," she said.

The professor, researcher, and mother is now preparing a new edition of the price study to deal with the introduction of the Hodel-Reagan gas decontrol bill.

Her research compares gas vs. fuel oil in different price and regulation-deregulation scenarios.

The heating value of fuel is measured in Btus and thousands and millions of Btus — British Thermal Units of heat energy.

These units are used to determine which fuel is cheapest to burn. Industry demand for fuels to make electricity and produce goods has been affected by the incremental increases in natural gas prices in the NGPA. This in turn has pushed up per-MmBtu prices for fuel oil and other petroleum products, Maurer said.

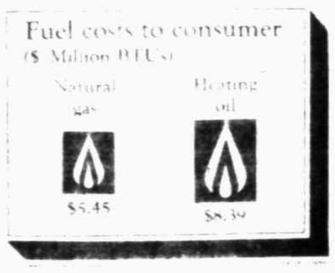
"As a result of the NGPA, industries are penalized for using gas — they pay fixed, artificially high prices. So they are cutting out the use of gas — it's very easy to convert to No. 2 fuel oil or a similar product," Maurer said in an interview after her talk on the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.

Maurer would like to see restrictions on industrial gas usage abolished. She noted that this kind of restriction on the free market puts producer and consumer supply-demand "welfare" in trouble.

She believes a near-term jump in gas prices due to deregulation would — in today's producer-consumer market — do very little to raise the price of natural gas over the long run.

Quite the opposite. Dr. Maurer believes that natural gas prices will start to come down at the wellhead because of the de-emphasizing of deep and tight sands (expensive) types of gas.

Present incentives to produce and artificially high prices are having adverse effects on natural gas consumers and producers because of the confused and many-faceted nature of the NGPA, the Fuel Use Act and other legislation the U.S. Government relies on for energy policy, she said.



Maurer said the natural gas market is not competitive enough and is surely not as competitive as gasoline or other petroleum products selling environment.

"For example, I have one supplier for my house. The chances of having a choice of several suppliers of natural gas are slim, partly because of the cost of getting that gas to the consumer."

Maurer thinks. Right at first, under ordinary circumstances, — and today is not ordinary — there probably would be some increase in (wellhead) price as a result of decontrol — while the gas market worked itself into free pricing.

"There are some adjustments that have to be made. But then, after adjustment, prices should start to come down, partly because you would see producers working more with the cheaper gas."

Craddick oil bill moving

AUSTIN — Legislation by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, to create a security interest on oil and gas royalty owners' protection after an initial sale, has been sent to the House by its Natural Resources Committee.

Craddick, who chairs the committee, presented a substitute version of his original proposal, which was adopted and sent out by the panel on a unanimous vote.

Midland attorney Martin L. Allday represented himself, as a royalty owner, and Midland oilman John L. Cox. Allday said the bill Craddick presented is designed to protect royalty owners and producers when a purchaser goes "belly up."

"The purchaser shouldn't be able to take that production...and the royalty owner not get paid," the attorney said.

He noted the substitute bill is a complex law, because "it has much to do with Federal bankruptcy laws."

Colin K. Kaufman, law professor at St. Mary's University, San Antonio, said he drafted most of the substitute bill. He said that this legislation, HB 846, "sets up a schedule for the determination of payments."

He agreed the bill is "very difficult to follow" for anyone not familiar with bankruptcy law. "The intent is to give people who have an interest...the best rights they can get."

Scott Anderson, who represents TIPRO, the state's producer-royalty owner organization, endorsed the measure, and asked that a commentary on the bill be submitted with the measure as part of the committee's report.

Ex-Im Bank writes off bad loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Export-Import Bank says it will write off $554 million this year in bad loans it has guaranteed to Third World countries, particularly Mexico.

William H. Draper III, speaking to a Senate foreign operations subcommittee Tuesday, said the bank already has received $240 million in claims.

"Claims will be arising because countries like Argentina and Mexico are experiencing balance-of-payments and debt-service difficulties, which prevent them from making payments when due on their debts," he said.

Draper said he believes the bank will be able to recover the losses when the finances of countries such as Mexico, Argentina, Venezuela and Guatemala improve. All of those countries have loans on which the bank is facing potential losses.

"Many of them arise from transactions involving private buyers who will continue to remain in business," Draper said, suggesting hope that the loans may be repaid eventually.

The amount of bad loans is far greater than usual for the Export-Import Bank, and the money must be made up from the U.S. Treasury. Until 1982, losses averaged about $20 million a year.

Bell Petroleum reports third-quarter loss

(SWN) — Bell Petroleum Services Inc. Tuesday announced revenues for the third quarter ended January 31, 1983 were $3,129,000, down 43.3 percent from the same period last year. The Company reported a loss of $295,000 or $.13 per share, for the quarter, compared with net earnings of $404,000 or $.18 per share for the year-earlier period.

The Company said that the earnings decline was due to revenue decreases caused by the continuing weakness in the oil and gas industry. The number of jobs performed and products sold was comparable to the previous quarter, but margins declined signi-ficantly due to more intense price competition among oilfield service companies. Additionally, inventories in the wireline equipment manufacturing division were written down $135,000.

Revenues for the nine months ended January 31 were $11,255,000, a decrease of 31.3 percent from last year's revenues of $16,375,000. Year-to-date losses were $404,000 or $.17 per share compared with last year's earnings of $1,358,000 or $.64 per share.

Bell Petroleum Services, Inc., is an oilfield service and manufacturing company headquartered in Midland, Texas. It manufactures and sells oilfield rubber products, as well as electrical wireline tools and equipment. Its services include electrical wireline logging and completion services, oil and gas analyses and H2S services.

THE WOODLANDS (SWN) — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. Monday reported earnings of $80,303,000, or $1.68 per share, on revenues of $961,713,000 for the fiscal year ended January 31, 1983.

In the preceding year, the company had record earnings of $115,217,000, or $2.41 per share, on revenues of $1,064,844,000.

Fourth quarter earnings amounted to $22,446,000, or 47 cents per share, compared with $35,280,000, or 74 cents per share, in the same period of the prior year. Fourth quarter revenues were $255,785,000, down from the year-earlier $285,666,000.

Price war may end

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Atlantic Richfield Co., the prime architect of the West Coast's year-long gasoline price war, may be moving toward a truce that some analysts say could mean an end to big cuts in gasoline prices.

On Tuesday, the company raised its wholesale prices by 3 cents a gallon, which is believed to be its biggest increase since it launched its low-price, no-credit-card strategy last March. Officials of Los Angeles-based Arco declined to comment on the reasons behind the latest move.

Arco's gasoline prices have dropped significantly faster than those of its competition since its decision last spring to scrap its credit-card program and slash its prices to draw bargain-conscious cash customers.

Persian Gulf oil leaders threaten price cut

LONDON (DPA) — Persian Gulf oil ministers threatened Tuesday to lower the price of crude oil to below $30 a barrel if the 13 Oil Exporting Petroleum ministers meeting here fail to agree on a new benchmark price that would avert a world oil-price war.

The OPEC ministers appeared to be stalled on a new agreement because of Iran's adamant opposition to lowering the official OPEC price of $34 a barrel.

Tehran has consistently refused to agree to lowering the official price, although oil industry experts here noted that Iranian oil is being sold at discounts of up to $10 a barrel.

Reports reaching here from Bahrain in the Persian Gulf said that the Arab ministers, concerned that the OPEC meeting might fail to respond to the worldwide oil glut, were considering their own price reduction, a move that would further shatter OPEC's control over the oil cartel.

Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates were all prepared to reduce oil prices "drastically, and to a greater extent than other countries are planning" should there be no general OPEC agreement on a basic price, UAE Oil Minister Mana Said Otaiba told the official Kuwaiti News Agency.

OPEC delegates met for two hours Tuesday, then agreed to meet again Tuesday night when it became clear that Iran was not budging on the price issue.

Meanwhile, in Jakarta, Indonesia, the director of the Indonesian state-owned oil company Pertamina, Udo Sumbona, said that Indonesia had already lowered its oil price two weeks ago in anticipation of a lower OPEC price.

Petroleum industry experts said that Britain's state-owned oil company, BNOC, might lower its prices even further if the OPEC countries agree on a price of $29.50 a barrel or slightly less.

Weaver hasn't exactly lived dangerously

BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF. (AP) — When Sigourney Weaver recently appeared on the "Tonight" show, host Johnny Carson paid tribute to her father as one of television's greatest forces — as the man who originated the spectacular as well as the "Today" show.

"And the 'Tonight' show," the actress reminded Carson.

Sigourney Weaver

Ah, yes. If Sylvester (Pat) Weaver had not installed the late-night talk program on NBC during the infant years of television, Carson might still be emcee of daytime game shows.

As chief of the network's programming, Weaver was the prime architect of the shape of today's TV programming.

SIGOURNEY Weaver was young when her father wielded power in the television industry, and she was largely unaware of his corporate dealings.

"I thought everybody's father was in the business," she said during a visit from her New York home to promote her latest film, "The Year of Living Dangerously."

"The only evidence I had of my father's power was the gold pass to the Radio City Music Hall," she said. "That meant we didn't have to line up in the snow to see the winter attractions. I thought that was really neat. When Dad lost the pass, I realized something important had happened."

The daughter of Weaver and British actress Elizabeth Inglis, Miss Weaver grew up constantly on the move. "If we stayed in one house for more than a year, my parents said, 'These are your roots!' "

HER FAMILY primarily lived in the East, but Miss Weaver spent a year in California in 1962, when her father tried to introduce pay television. He was ahead of his time.

Perhaps because of the constant moving, Miss Weaver did a lot of play-acting when she was young. Her romantic nature was touched when she read "The Great Gatsby," and she immediately changed her name from Susan to Sigourney, after F. Scott Fitzgerald's heroine.

"But even in my senior year at Stanford, I hadn't decided to become an actress," she said. "I thought I would get my Ph.D. in English. Then I was admitted to the Yale Drama School, and I became committed. If that hadn't happened, I might have made another choice."

Her slender elegance and dramatic intensity led to roles on and off Broadway. Her coach was John Gielgud.

Film offers followed, but she has been selective. So far, she's done only four films in five years: "Alien," "Eyewitness," "The Year of Living Dangerously" and the recently completed "The Deal of the Century" with Chevy Chase.

"LIVING DANGEROUSLY" proved to be just that during locations last year in the Philippines. The Australian film company was caught in a feud between Moslem factions.

"It was a very touchy situation," the actress recalled. "Mel (Gibson, her co-star) and I walked through a Moslem village outside Manila looking very rich and white and healthy amid unbelievable squalor.

Jagger still strutting his stuff

Show goes on with new movie

NEW YORK (AP) — The eyes. They play, they mock. That's when it's fun. Sometimes they curve into thin crescents. Rough, scary.

The mouth. A work of gymnastic art. It folds and bends in scorn, mockery, pleasure, frenzy.

With Mick Jagger, middle-aged Rolling Stone, there's always definition. And he delights in serving up many different ones. He's a showman who entertains nonstop, with his half-naked jumps and kicks and undulations on the stage, sometimes wrapped in the Union Jack or lost in a football shirt.

He's also a megastar who never dreamed of such lofty heights.

"I never thought of being famous," he says. "I just wanted to do music. When I started out, I just wanted to be a blues singer because that was the music we liked.

"Suddenly, you're in there and you're dragged around to every magazine for interviews. You don't think too much about yourself. I stopped reading books for two years because I didn't have the time, or maybe I didn't have the mental application."

His fingers scan a row of leather-bound classics on a shelf near the sofa he's stretched across in a hotel suite. "I read," he says, face one cavernous grin. And then, the put-on: "I read all of this."

Jagger, who has sold over 30 million albums in his 20-year career, put $2 million into the recently-released film, "Let's Spend the Night Together," which features 25 of the Stones' songs, as performed at the Sun Devil Stadium in Tempe, Ariz., and the Meadowlands' Brendan Byrne Arena in East Rutherford, N.J.

And it shows the 39-year-old Jagger doing what he does best: strutting, stomping, singing, screaming, soaring. Jumpin' Jack Flash in action.

The songs in the film mirror the career of the rock world's most enduring group, from 1964's bluesy "Time Is on My Side," to 1981's funky hit, "Start Me Up."

Still, Jagger says, "this film is not part of my imagination."

"If I were to do a film, I would like a lot more locations, and no reportage because I'm bored with it," he said. "I'd have some interaction with other performers, and some kind of story line and production numbers and love and sexuality."

But he's not disappointed with the effort and even got to sit in on the editing. "On screen, you're a third person," he said. "In fact, everyone speaks of you in the third person while editing it. You're moved from one spot to another. But it takes a lot of viewing to get that way — that detached."

Jagger is an institution and has been dubbed the rock idol of two decades, a pagan Pied Piper who could rattle young minds. But he treats the label with scorn.

"It's a distraction," he says. "It's not a responsibility at all. I don't think I have any power at all, nor do I wish to acquire it."

He was born in Dartford, Kent, the son of a British educator. He attended the London School of Economics and remained there during the embryonic beginnings of the band, leaving in 1963.

Jagger, lead guitarist Keith Richards, the late Brian Jones on rhythm guitar (he was replaced by Mick Taylor after his death in 1969. Ron Wood later replaced Taylor), drummer Charlie Watts and bassist Bill Wyman formed the original group in 1962. But the Stones didn't begin to roll until 1963 when they had their first big British hit, "I Wanna Be Your Man."

Their first American single was "Not Fade Away" in 1964. "Time Is on My Side," that same year, paved the way for the monumental popularity of "(I Can't Get No) Satisfaction," which dominated airwaves during the summer of 1965.

From the start, the group was all bad image. In 1967, Jagger was convicted of pep pill possession and Richards was sentenced to a jail term for allowing hashish to be smoked on his property. Richards began to correct his drug habits after a heroin arrest in Toronto in 1978, and entered a rehabilitation clinic.

Town's residents believe in naming things differently

RAJNEESHPURAM, Ore. (AP) — The comprehensive plan for this central Oregon city, populated by disciples of Indian guru Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh, reads like a map of Asia.

The John Day River is called the Radha, the Big Muddy Reservoir is called Kabir Reservoir and Little Muddy Creek is called Kamaal Creek.

The new town, incorporated by the guru's followers last year near their religious commune, published its official comprehensive plan with dozens of creeks, buttes, canyons and other local landmarks listed with foreign-sounding names.

Several people questioned the town's authority to put new labels on old, familiar places, says Dan Durow, head of the Wasco County Planning Department.

"Practically speaking, anybody can call anything by any name they want to, but when it comes out in an official document, that's when we begin getting questions," he says.

Landmark names are under jurisdiction of the state geographic names board.

Millard McClung, secretary to the names board, says no formal proposal has been submitted to make the new names official. "They can rename these things any way they want, but until they appear on a map, there's nothing official about them."

It suits Rajneeshpuram just fine if the local names aren't officially recognized on the state level, says Swami Deva Wadud, director of community development for Rajneeshpuram.

Members of the religious community have renamed hundreds of roads, landmarks and buildings after "people who we feel made a significant spiritual contribution to the world," says Wadud.

MTV's brand of programming seems to work

NEW YORK (AP) — A man, naked from the waist up, lies in bed cuddling a giant boa constrictor. He kisses the snake as it winds through his arms.

A frightened woman loses most of her clothing to the ravages of a bullwhip.

Another woman whips open a trenchcoat to reveal a bikini and screams, "Do you want to touch me there?"

It's weird. Some people think it's wonderful. It's MTV.

"It's what's happening in 1983 and those who don't know it will be left in the dust," says Les Garland, vice president in charge of programming for the Music Television cable network.

The formula is simple. The biggest rock 'n' rollers of the day record their songs, and then create video vignettes for them. MTV and its good-looking "VJs" — video jockeys — broadcast the segments 24-hours-a-day to cable television subscribers around the nation.

MTV STARTED in 1981. In 18 months, it has become the technological darling of the music business and the rage of the rock 'n' roll set.

Potential viewership has risen from 2.5 million to 8.5 million; about one-third of all American homes with cable have MTV. Groups ignored by radio are featured on MTV, sending record sales soaring. Musicians enjoy the creative opportunities of working in a new medium.

Warner Amex Satellite Entertainment, the corporation behind MTV, has not seen any profits yet, but executives are hopeful.

"It is not a profit-maker in dollars and cents, but is a critical success," says Garland.

When the idea was new, there were only 400 videotapes in the MTV library. But the idea caught on, and now MTV has 900 videos to choose from, including the snake, bullwhip and bikini tapes created by the Boomtown Rats, Devo and Joan Jett and the Blackhearts, respectively.

RECORD COMPANIES use the tapes to promote their groups and provide them to MTV for free. The name of the group, the name of the song depicted and the record album it comes from and the name of the record company appear in the corner of the screen before and after each song.

For the record companies, MTV is 24 hours of non-stop commercials. And it is cheaper than sending groups on tour.

Brian Setzer, lead singer of the Stray Cats, credits MTV in part with the group's success. The Stray Cats did not get radio airplay until its album, "Built for Speed," was No. 2 on the charts.

"Young people are saying, 'I want different music than what I'm being exposed to on my favorite radio station.' I think it says a lot about the way those stations are programmed. They have become very stagnated in their programming."

"College radio and MTV were the only two sources that were hip to us; promoters couldn't understand why we had no air play and were selling out on our first tour," he says.

Singer John Oates says, "One of the greatest benefits...is that it gives groups a chance at exposure both nationally and internationally, in a time when its difficult to tour, especially for new bands."

BUT THE videotapes also "give groups another way of expressing themselves," says Oates who, along with his partner, Daryl Hall, has become one of MTV's most popular acts.

Some videos harken back to the '60s, in a loosely psychedelic style that flashes images depicting the lyrics. Some are mini-movies, telling stories from beginning to end. Some show simple concert footage.

"Our restrictions are pretty simple," Garland says. "If it fits a rock 'n' roll genre, it will get played on MTV."

Garland concedes that "genre" is very narrow. No soul, rhythm & blues, country or middle-of-the-road music appear on MTV.

"You can't start throwing real obvious R&B tracks on because you're making the mistake that traditional television made when you try to be all things to all people," he says. "We believe in the philosophy of narrowcasting here."

"NARROWCASTING," in MTV's case, means intensive audience research to appeal to well-to-do 12- to 34-year-olds and the advertisers of pimple medicine, stereos and other youth products who want to reach them.

"I mean, how many times can you play 'Layla' and those same records that those stations quite frankly were guilty of beating into the ground?"

Could 'St. Elsewhere' become 'St. Nowhere?'

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC has done everything to resuscitate "St. Elsewhere." They tried more romance, more muggings and even scheduled the network's most popular programs as lead-ins, hoping that viewers would happen by the hospital.

Nothing worked. NBC's worst fears are being realized. Viewers are actively turning away from "St. Elsewhere," the most humane and intelligent new program this season.

At last, NBC has a popular show opening its Tuesday night lineup. The intimidating Mr. T, barking that Fonzie's "Happy Days" are over, has helped make the wacky "A Team" a hit. But there has been little viewer carryover to "Bare Essence" at 8 p.m. CDT, and even less for "St. Elsewhere" at 9.

"One week in December we finished in 75th place out of 75 shows," says Bruce Paltrow, the executive producer of 'St. Elsewhere.' "We were thinking of taking out ads: 'Just watch us now. PLEASE.' "

Paltrow still has a sense of humor, a rare commodity in the failed-ratings business. What keeps him sane is the conviction that he's making the best show he can, and "St. Elsewhere" certainly is the most realistic and involving show to ever own a stethescope.

In fact, it may be too lifelike; there may be too much death in "St. Elsewhere." Women generally watch medical shows, and "St. Elsewhere" could be too bold for their blood. They evidently prefer the magical medicine and 60-minute cures in "Trapper John, M.D" and its ancestor programs.

"I loved 'Ben Casey' and 'Dr. Kildare,' but I get off on doing things that have a high level of reality," Paltrow says. "I wouldn't want to stay on the air if I had to make a show I didn't want to do."

Paltrow doesn't object to NBC's entreaties to bring more love-lust to the show and more personal jeopardy to the doctors.

"I wanted more personal involvement, too," he says. "NBC also wanted us to simplify our stories, making it a little easier for the audience."

"St. Elsewhere" also suffers because it's not "Hill Street Blues."

"If people expected 'Hill Street Blues' in a hospital, they were bound to be disappointed," says Paltrow. "The similarities are that we both have ensemble casts and multiple stories. But we're more like 'M*A*S*H" and 'Lou Grant.' "

One compelling feature of the gritty "Hill Street" is that the regulars constantly drop in and out of danger. "Hey, be careful out there," Sgt. Esterhaus advises. In "St. Elsewhere," it's the patients — the guest stars — who are sticking their necks out.

"Our doctors wait for the problems to come to them. We're counterpunchers," says Paltrow. "Our jeopardy is emotional. It's tough to visually excite in a hospital."

"St. Elsewhere" isn't the first Paltrow show with humor, interesting characters and an urban setting. His "White Shadow" was never a big hit, either. "Maybe my lot in life is that I do good shows with low ratings."

Set builders assault the mountain being built for the stage production of "K-2." The story of a life-and-death situation at 27,000 feet atop that mountain opens in late March at the Brooks Atkinson Theater in New York City.

Most should like 'Pirates'

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

"The Pirates of Penzance" is not for everyone. Gilbert and Sullivan purists, beware. Rock fans, watch out. But for those who like a rollicking good show, full of inspired silliness and performed in high style, by all means go.

This is a slightly cinematic version of Joseph Papp's long-running Broadway production, played against painted backdrops. But Wilfred Leach's fluid direction — he also wrote and directed the stage version — guarantees that this is a movie.

The singing is full and rich, the casting inspired. Kevin Kline is brilliantly inventive as the loony Pirate King, as are Angela Lansbury as Nurse and George Rose as the triple-tongued Major General. Linda Rondstadt looks and sings like an angel, exhibiting an unsuspected coloratura soprano.

Another pop singer, Rex Smith, makes an appealing Frederic. And Tony Azito as chief of the Keystone Kops dances bonelessly, a marvel to watch. In times when even Disney films are rated PG, it is a pleasure to welcome an unashamed G.

Mr. T believes good fortune's his destiny

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mr. T. is 216 pounds of muscle and has a face like a clinched fist. He's also the reason NBC has a hit series on its hands with "The A-Team."

He wears a Mandingo warrior hair style, bizarre clothing, $250,000 worth of gold and jewelry and stars on "The A-Team" as B.A. Baracus. The B.A. stands for Bad Attitude.

"The A-Team" made its debut in the Top 10 in the ratings. Mr.T promoted the show during the telecast of the Super Bowl. Its ratings have continued to be very high.

Mr. T

B.A. is one of a band of outlaw mercenaries headed by Hannibal Smith, played by George Peppard in this adventure-comedy-fantasy created by Stephen J. Cannell. One member of the team is a con man, played by Dirk Benedict, another is a pilot (Dwight Schultz) who must be spirited out of a mental ward and the last is a reporter (Melinda Culea) hooked on excitement.

Mr. T., a former bodyguard for Muhammad Ali, Leon Spinks and others, and the bad guy in "Rocky III," says the meteoric success of "The A-Team" came as no surprise.

"I figured it would be, not being cocky or conceited, knowing the type of guy I am," he says. "I've always been a winner. There's something that sets me apart from everybody else.

"When Stephen Cannell called me about 'The A-Team' I said if you let me do my thing, can't anybody do it any better. Don't restrict me or hold me back; it'll flow," he said as he relaxed during a lunch break in his dressing room trailer.

"There's just a certain chemistry that I have that draws people to me," he says. "Maybe they're awed in my presence, or maybe they like me...Like I said, not being cocky or conceited, everything I touch turns to gold. I know if I do my best God'll do the rest."

Mr. T.'s conversation is filled with frequent references to God and to the Cosmopolitan Community Church of Chicago. He is an active member and devotes much of his time and money to its work and to serving as an inspiration to young people who grew up in poverty as he did. He is also devoted to his mother and is planning to build her a home.

He said he believes the role of B.A. was created with him in mind.

Mr. T. was born Lawrence Tero 30 years ago in Chicago. He was a three-time city wrestling champion and a star football player. After service as a military policeman, he was invited to try out for the Green Bay Packers, but a knee injury ended his

Debbie Reynolds back on stage after blacking out

NEW YORK (AP) — Debbie Reynolds won a standing ovation for her return performance in "Woman of the Year," three days after she collapsed on stage with what a doctor said was a rare form of amnesia.

But the producer of the Broadway musical said Tuesday the show could close Sunday unless attendance improves.

"When you're the star of a show...you're supposed to go on every night," said Miss Reynolds, explaining why she defied her doctor's wishes and returned to the stage Tuesday night.

"In 34 years, I've never been sick more than four performances. I've gone on with a broken ankle and I've practically given birth on stage," she said. "But when your mind goes to Mars, I think it's time to go to the hospital."

Miss Reynolds, 51, held a news conference after she was discharged Tuesday from Roosevelt Hospital, where she was taken after collapsing on stage Saturday.

Miss Reynolds "blacked out" on stage at about 3:30 p.m. Saturday, five minutes before the intermission of the first act.

'M*A*S*H' nets first place for CBS

Audience tops that of 'Who Shot J.R.?'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — CBS parlayed the final episode of "M*A*S*H" — which got the highest rating and attracted the largest audience ever for a single TV program — into a big ratings victory for the week ended March 6.

Nearly eight out of every 10 television sets in use was tuned to the 2½-hour show on Monday, Feb. 28.

An estimated 125 million people saw the final episode, according to CBS. The show got a rating of 60.3 and a share of 77 percent. It was seen in 50.3 million homes, nearly 10 million more than saw the previous record holder.

"M*A*S*H" broke the ratings record set by the "Who Shot J.R.?" episode of CBS' "Dallas" Nov. 21, 1980. The "Dallas" show got a rating of 53.3. In 1980 that meant it was seen in 40.6 million homes. A ratings point equaled 763,000 homes in 1980 but it has since increased to 833,000 homes.

The audience estimate breaks the record for a single show of 111.5 million, which NBC set for Super Bowl XVII last Jan. 30.

"Alice," which ran immediately before "M*A*S*H," was the second-highest rated show of the week. But its rating was 30.7, only about half the "M*A*S*H" rating.

ABC and NBC threw in two movies against the "M*A*S*H" juggernaut and they sank to the bottom of the ratings. "The Night the Bridge Fell Down," shown on NBC, was third from last, and "American Gigolo" on ABC was second from last.

The "M*A*S*H" victory gave CBS a huge margin over the opposition in the weekly averages compiled by the A.C. Nielsen Co. CBS had a rating of 22.9. ABC was second with 15.6 and NBC had 14.1. The networks say this means that in an average prime-time minute 22.9 percent of homes with television were tuned to CBS.

For the season to date, CBS leads by a single rating point. CBS has 18.5, ABC 17.5, and NBC 15.5.

CBS had seven shows in the Top 10 and ABC had three. The shows, in order after "Alice," were CBS' "60 Minutes" and "Dallas," CBS' 'Falcon Crest" and ABC's "Dynasty" (tied for 5th place), ABC's "Three's Company," CBS' "Simon & Simon" and "The Jeffersons," and ABC's "Fantasy Island."

NBC's highest-rated show was "Hill Street Blues," which was No. 11. NBC's "The A-Team" finished in a three-way tie for 12th place with ABC's "The Fall Guy" and "9-to-5."

Briton Boyd dies

LONDON (AP) — Lord Boyd, Britain's colonial secretary from 1954 to 1959, was struck by a car and killed, Scotland Yard reported today. He was 78.

A Scotland Yard press officer said Boyd was hit by a car as he and his brother-in-law Lord Moyne crossed a street after leaving a restaurant in west London's fashionable Chelsea quarter.

Boyd, as Alan Tindal Lenpox-Boyd, became one of the best-liked colonial secretaries of his time.

One of Boyd's major problems as colonial secretary was Cyprus.

Ex-hostage given medal

ATLANTA (AP) — Former Army Col. Charles Scott, one of 52 Americans held hostage for 444 days in Iran, has been awarded a Defense Meritorious Service Medal for enduring his captivity with valor.

The medal was presented Tuesday by Gen. Richard E. Cavazos, commanding general of the Army Forces Command in a ceremony at Fort McPherson.

Scott, who retired in January 1981 after 31 years in the Army, said the memories of his captivity are still vivid.

In 1979, Scott's job at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran was to secure spare parts for the Iranian Army's military equipment. That all changed in November 1979 when the U.S. Embassy was taken by the Iranians. He spent most of his time as a captive in "a (windowless) cell that amounted to a closet."

With those memories still strong, Scott said the simple experience of waking to daylight brings him joy.

"I thank God that I'm here and not rotting in some prison in Iran," Scott said.

Northeast states post recent population gains

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two states which were losing population have reversed that trend, but the number of residents in five other states has dropped, according to a new Census Bureau study.

New York and Rhode Island, which lost people in the 1970s, are gaining them again, the study said.

Figures released Tuesday disclosed shrinking populations in Michigan, Indiana, Iowa, Ohio and West Virginia.

Donald Starsinic of the bureau's population division speculated that a strengthening economy may be helping the Northeastern states.

"THE NORTHEAST is much stronger now (economically) than it was in the 1970s. Apparently they went through a rough period then and now are stronger to withstand the recession better," he said.

He noted that no formal studies have been conducted to determine the reasons for growth or decline since 1980.

But the problems of the auto industry have affected several North Central states, he observed, possibly leading many residents to leave and look for work elsewhere.

Besides the North Central states, Washington, D.C., also lost people, continuing a decline begun in the 1970s.

Nationwide, the population grew by about 5 million between 1980 and 1982, the bureau said, to an estimated 231,534,000 as of last July 1. That's a growth of about 2.2 percent.

THE WEST continued to be the fastest growing region, increasing almost 4.3 percent. The South increased by 3.7 percent, the Northeast 0.7 percent and the North Central states only 0.1 percent.

The fastest growing state was Nevada, followed by Alaska, Texas, Florida, Wyoming and Utah.

Photographer arrested during accident

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — A newspaper photographer taking pictures of a four-car accident was arrested on a misdemeanor charge that he obstructed a city police officer.

Maurice G. Rivenbark, 25, who works for the St. Petersburg Times and Evening Independent, was released on $150 bail Tuesday.

According to an affidavit filed by arresting officer Richard Allen, Rivenbark was arrested after he "refused to produce identification upon request."

Jack Belich, photography editor for the newspapers, said Rivenbark had already shown his press identification to another officer investigating the accident.

St. Petersburg police spokesman Bill Daniel said the case will be sent to the state attorney's office for review Thursday.

Insurance may now supplement Medicare

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

If older Americans rely solely on Medicare for health care, they may face an expensive surprise when the bills come pouring in.

Medicare has been a prime target for government cutbacks, and there seem to be more on the way.

But, there may be a way for the 26 million aged and 3 million disabled persons on the Medicare program to curb some of the effects.

Although the Medicare program was never meant to be an all-inclusive health insurance program, many elderly citizens rely on it.

In Midland Memorial Hospital's 1982 fiscal year — October to September — there were 1,656 Medicare admissions and 1,637 discharges to the hospital. According to Arlene Strickland, MMH public relations director, the number of days Medicare patients were in MMH totaled 15,031 with an average length of stay of 9.1 days.

ACCORDING TO government statistics, Medicare pays an average of 44 percent of medical bills. That means persons who do not have supplementary coverage — public or private — must pay more than half of the bills.

The federal health care program, designed for the elderly and disabled, has gaps that may be closed with supplemental insurance, according to insurance representatives.

Medicare is divided into two parts — Part A for hospital insurance, and Part B, insurance for physician and surgeon charges in or out of the hospital.

In October, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act (TEFRA) of 1982 resulted in some significant Medicare payment cuts to hospitals and physicians. TEFRA has slightly affected patients' pocketbooks: Medicare recipients' monthly premium payment for physician and surgeon coverage will increase.

Part B is optional medical insurance, for which everyone must pay a monthly premium, now $12.50. This will jump to $13.50 in July with another hike next year, bringing the payment to $15.90.

PRESIDENT Reagan's 1984 budget proposes that Medicare patients pay a greater share of their hospital bills as part of a move to curtail soaring increases in government spending on health care.

Currently, after a deductible of $260 is paid by the elderly, Medicare — Part A — pays for 60 days of full hospital care for illness, including all the charges customarily associated with the bill. These include semi-private room rate, meals, regular nursing services, laboratory and X-ray fees, intensive care costs, operating and recovery room, drug, casts, dressings, splints and in-hospital therapy.

If an illness goes beyound 60 hospital days, the patient is responsible for a $65 daily co-payment through the 90th day.

The Reagan administration is proposing recipients pay not only the cost of the first day of hospitalzation, but also 8 percent of each subsequent day for the next two weeks and 5 percent of daily charges for the 15th through 60th days. Then Medicare would pay in full for all services after 60 days.

Part B is a little more complicated. After a $75 deductible, the Medicare program will pay 80 percent of "reasonable charges." The key word is "reasonable."

ACCORDING TO the Health Insurance Association of America's booklet on "How To Use Private Health Insurance With Medicare," Medicare determines what is a reasonable charge. While some physicians accept the pre-determined figure, others do not.

The booklet suggests that Medicare recipients ask their physicians whether they will "accept assignment," that is, only what Medicare will pay. If not, out-of-the-pocket expenses will be the standard $75 deductible and 20 percent of the bill is the responsibility of the patient. In addition, the patient must pay that part of the doctor's charges in excess of Medicare's definition of a "reasonable charge."

Staff Artist: Jan Drake

Recent changes in the structure of Medicare have forced the elderly to take a closer look at their Medicare dollar.

Randy Kurtz, a representative from the Dallas-based Authur Andersen & Co., an accounting firm, has followed the Medicare program closely since the introduction of TEFRA.

"An example of this payment (reasonable charge) would be a $100 physician charge for a particular test," he said. "The Medicare schedule may determine the test charge at $80. Medicare will pay 80 percent of $80, or $64. The patient is responsible for the remainder."

ACCORDING TO Paul Hughes, of Midessa Insurance Company, "there are reasonable insurance policies that do fill this gap," between what the government will cover and what the patient pays. He added that it is important for a person to apply for Medicare six months before his 65th birthday.

"But the biggest problem is over-insurance," Hughes said. "It's a known fact that older people are targets for scare tactics. It's not unusual to find an older person living off of Social Security carrying four or five insurance policies."

If an elderly person chooses to acquire private insurance, Hughes recommends a policy that will cover Part B, the physician and surgeon's charges.

"The main thing is to have comprehensive coverage for A and B," he said. "But, especially Part B because this where Medicare falls short."

MISD Trustees OK road work

Road in front of school to be paved

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The first steps toward a yellow brick road were taken when Midland Independent School District trustees voted Tuesday to expend an additional $124,500 to pave, curb and gutter the street in front of the new Santa Rita Elementary School.

In other action, trustees approved Quanah Parker Elementary School and plans for the renovation of Midland High School offices.

Construction of the street, which runs between Bluebird and Mockingbird lanes in far north Midland, originally was set at $244,000, according to Dr. James H. Mailey, consultant for school plant planning. Because of possible drainage problems with the 51-foot wide street, he recommended the addition of a curb, gutter, sidewalk and retaining walls at a total cost of $124,514.46.

To date, $55,521 has been spent on land, utilities and site work, he said. Added to the $41,208 for water and sewer lines, some $10,250 would remain within the estimated sum for site development.

"And we'll use all of that," Mailey said.

Renovation plans for offices at Midland High School were approved although costs about doubled from original projections, according to Mailey.

The recommendation for approval, made by the architectural design committee composed of Trustees Ron Britton, Joe Golding and Bill Jackson, was accepted by the board. Plans call for renovation of the older units to be completed by the end of the year with the rest of the construction scheduled for completion this summer.

Renovation costs were increased to $67,000 because of needed replacement of an air conditioning system at a price of $25,000, Britton said.

Trustees also accepted Quanah Parker Elementary following a tour of the school. Both the Parker and Santa Rita elementary facilities are scheduled to be ready for classes next fall.

A charter meeting of Parker PTA will be March 21 at Emerson Elementary, according to Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi. Santa Rita PTA is expected to meet later that week.

In related action, Baressi noted students probably will move into the new De Zavala Elementary School building on the Tuesday following Easter vacation. De Zavala staff will have an orientation seminar Tuesday.

A status report on the clinical supervision program, in its second year of implementation, was given by Dr. Duane Moore, assistant superintendent of instruction.

The faculty and staff observation program, which mandates three classroom visits a year by principals, assistant principals, department heads and cluster coordinators, was instigated to alleviate previous observation procedures which varied from campus to campus.

Baressi pointed out the difference in an observation, "the act of being in the classrooms," and an evaluation, "judgment on the observation." Only principals are responsible for evaluations, he added.

"It is designed for positive rather than negative (purposes)," Baressi said. "We're trying to make everybody the best teacher they can be. They're going to have to live up to the standards — but we'll be fair."

Trustees also approved a request for the use of Lee Freshman High School facilities for a summer recreation program sponsored by the Department of Parks and Recreation. A $2,136 gift of library carpeting and a $1,500 laminating machine for Jane Long Elementary School were accepted from the Long PTA.

Under the new policy, all teachers receive a minimum of three visits — announced and unannounced.

Several trustees questioned the attitude of teachers who were hostile to the program when it began.

"From an administrative standpoint, there's been a 180-degree turnaround," Moore said.

Texas Tech head: Hispanic attitudes must change

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Hispanics make up the oldest group of immigrants in the country. Soon, according to Texas Tech University President Dr. Lauro Cavazos, it will be the largest.

Nevertheless, Hispanics continue to use their heritage as a crutch for not succeeding — in education and as citizens of the United States.

During Hispanic Night at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin Tuesday, Cavazos said Hispanic attitudes toward education and the responsibilities and rights of citizenship must be changed.

"It is not the Anglos that have held you back," he told the almost 100 people attending. "It's not the system. It's we, as Hispanic parents, who have failed."

Educational opportunities are there, he said. They, in turn, open the door for civic opportunitities.

"We have endless opportunities before us. They are so variable that each of us must select those opportunities which are available. We're going into the age of high-technology. A whole new high-tech world is opening. Are the Hispanics going to get a part of that?"

About 6.5 percent of the total population in the country, or 14.6 million, claim Hispanic heritage, according to a recent Ford Foundation survey. About 83 percent of the white and 72 percent of the black populations graduate from high school. Only 55 percent of the Hispanic population receive high school diplomas.

Of the 38 percent of whites who enter college, 23 percent graduate. Twelve percent of blacks graduate out of the 28 percent who enter college, according to the third-year Tech president. Only 7 percent of the Hispanics graduate out of the 23 percent who enter college.

Acording to the survey, the percentages of students entering professional schools are as follows: 18 percent of the white population, 8 percent of the black population and 4 percent of the Hispanic population. Of that 4 percent, only 2 percent will graduate.

"I often am asked why you don't see more Hispanic university presidents," he said. "We had a meeting (of university presidents) the other day and managed to get three-fourths of us in the same room. There were only three — one didn't make it."

There are only 14 Hispanic presidents of universities, colleges and community colleges in the nation, he added.

"We have dreadful numbers (of Hispanic students enrolled) at Tech," he said. "Only 4 percent out of just over 23,000 students are Hispanic. Thirty-two percent of the youngsters in the Lubbock Independent School District are Hispanic. That tells you something else.

"Obviously, we have a problem here."

The problem is the attitude toward education shared by many Hispanic parents.

Cavazos mentioned one excuse often heard: "Some say Hispanics get off to a slow start. They have to learn another language."

The excuse is not valid past a point, he said, citing examples of other immigrants, such as the Vietnamese, who have not allowed a new language to stop them from excelling in America.

Cavazos' attainments in education came from the role model established by his parents while he was growing up on the King Ranch in South Texas, he said.

"I remember him (his father) saying, 'Son, educate yourself. That's one thing no one can ever take way from you.'

"When the school bell tolls and rings across the land, is it ringing for just you or me, or just a select few? I don't think so," he continued.

"There must be an interest established in pre-school. It must be nurtured through elementary school and encouraged in junior high school. I say to push, pull, drag — I don't believe in child abuse — but get them in school," he said with a small laugh.

"Some say there is a prejudice of all non-Hispanic people. 'They don't want us Hispanics to move ahead, to succeed.' Well, I don't agree with that viewpoint.

"We've all experienced prejudice — whether you an Hispanic, Anglo or black. Women complain about it. Anglos complain about reverse discrimination.

"We're all in the same boat. Any citizen, Hispanics included, can make things better by perseverance and the pursuit of equalness — not only for ourself but for all citizens."

He cited common problems of the world, including hunger, racism, disease and the threat of nuclear war.

"All the problems can be solved by a group of educated people."

Low interest home loans available to Midlanders

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Area residents could be eligible for low interest loans to finance single family homes through a Permian Basin Housing Finance Corporation program which recently received some unexpected funding.

The PBHFC learned recently that its request to sell $33 million worth of state bonds to finance the program will be partially — and perhaps completely — granted, providing the corporation can secure loan commitments from area lending institutions.

Representatives from area lending institutions interested in the program are invited to a PBHFC meeting at 1:30 p.m. Monday in the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission conference room at Midland Regional Airport.

Commitment forms and applications will be distributed at the meeting and a bond underwriter will explain procedures governing the program.

The state is offering $490 million in bonds for housing finance organizations throughout the state. Pam Hammit, PBRPC director of personnel and administrative services, said the PBHFC was denied funding earlier after its application — when ranked chronologically with 20 others statewide — finished 16th, out of the money.

But when other housing organizations failed to secure commitments from lending institutions on their allotments, additional bonds became available for unfunded corporations, including the PBHFC.

Ms. Hammit said first indications were that the PBHFC would receive about $12-15 million. She said now it looks like the full $33 million in bonds will be granted.

The PBHFC will sell the bonds through a broker and distribute the proceeds among lending institutions that have committed themselves to accept loan applications.

Applicants must meet certain restrictions, including having an annual income of less than $40,000. The low interest loans are available on mortgages up to $65,000 for existing homes and up to $70,000 for new homes.

The PBHFC includes the counties of Andrews, Dawson, Ector, Gaines, Glasscock, Howard, Martin, Pecos, Reeves, Terrell, Upton, Ward, Winkler and the city of Big Spring.

Century Pipe, Leasing Associates sue Stamets Co.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland's Century Pipe & Supply Co. and Leasing Associates of Houston have joined together in filing an alleged breach-of-contract suit against Wm. K. Stamets Co., which, according to Century, has failed to deliver two pipe-threading machines to Century.

Century and Leasing Associates seek at least a half-million-dollar refund from Stamets on the equipment.

The suit, which initially was filed in Midland's 238th State District Court, has been moved to federal court jurisdiction at the request of the Columbiana, Ohio-based defendant.

Century, which sells pipe and other tubular goods, says that in 1980 it negotiated with Stamets for the purchase of the two pipe-threading machines and a walking-beam table. But after reviewing Stamets' proposal, Century "concluded that it would be more advantageous" to lease the two threaders rather than to own them. Subsequently, Century contacted Leasing Associates, which agreed to purchase the two machines from Stamets for $549,850 and then would lease the threaders to Century. Century went ahead and bought the walking-beam table for $128,697, and Leasing Associates made payments of $458,000 for the threaders, according to the suit's petition. Stamets is a subsidiary of the Taylor-Winfield Corp.

The threaders were to be delivered to Century by March 1982.

In an Oct. 12, 1982, letter, which was made part of the court record, from Century President Carles W. Gibson to Stamets General Manager Clem Borucki, Gibson noted that Century had to use third parties to thread pipe at a profit loss of $120,000.

"Century has been forced to use third parties to thread pipe for its accounts since April 1, 1982, the date by which such machines should have been delivered," Gibson wrote. "Further, Century and Associates have suffered due to Stamets' wrongful detention of $586,697 paid to Stamets."

Gibson asked Stamets for $726,797, which would be a refund on the threaders and the walking-beam table, compensation for the $120,000 profit loss, interest and attorney fees.

Were Stamets not to make restitution of $586,697 for the threaders and walking-beam table, Gibson said Century and Leasing Associates would seek treble damages of $1.76 million.

Publisher fined $10,000, must pay restitution

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

The owner of a Midland publishing company was fined $10,000 in San Angelo district court Tuesday and ordered to pay restitution to 28 advertisers who bought ad space in tourist guide magazines which were never published.

During Tuesday's trial of State of Texas vs. John Stumpff and Lance Publications, the state produced 28 witnesses — 26 from San Angelo and one each from Corpus Christi and Lubbock — who testified that they bought advertising in magazines Stumpff promised, but failed, to publish.

A San Angelo Better Business Bureau spokeswoman said San Angelo merchants paid Stumpff about $19,750 for advertising.

Neither Stumpff nor any representatives of his company appeared before 51st District Judge Royal Hart.

Hart's decision in favor of the state grants restitution to the 28 witnesses and charges Stumpff a $10,000 fine plus court costs. Hart also issued a permanent injunction against Stumpff and Lance Publications.

In the lawsuit filed Dec. 29, the state attorney general charged Stumpff with violating seven sections of the state's Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act.

In its original petition, the state charged that Stumpff had "engaged in false, misleading and deceptive acts or practices" while in the process of publishing "Forte" tourist guides for several Texas cities, including Midland, San Angelo, Lubbock, Corpus Christi, Austin, Laredo, El Paso and San Antonio.

Stumpff told the Midland Reporter-Telegram on Sept. 30 that printing delays, over-optimistic promises made by ad salespeople and a "cash-flow problem" contributed to delays in publishing and distributing several directories.

He said the publications — including directories for San Angelo, Corpus Christi, Lafayette, La., and Midland — would eventually be published and distributed.

The phone at Lance Publications, 808 W. Missouri Ave., has been disconnected or is no longer in service. Stumpff, whose address is listed as 1606 Neely Ave., could not be reached for comment this morning.

Linda Truitt, president of the Permian Basin BBB, said her office was contacted by only one Midland company which bought ad space from Stumpff. She said the company was referred to the attorney general's office.

Ms. Truitt said a recent report indicates Stumpff may have moved to Oklahoma.

School for deaf needs funds to remain open

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Southwest Collegiate Institute for the Deaf will close its doors if the Legislature does not grant an additional $5 million in funds over the $2 million recommendation already approved, an official told a subcommittee of the House Higher Education Committee Tuesday.

"We could not operate a quality program (on a $2 million appropriation)," said Charles Hays, president of the Howard County Junior College District, which operates the deaf institute. "If we can't offer a quality program, the money ought to be diverted back to the state to be used elsewhere."

Though HCJC District trustees have officially requested an $11 million appropriation from the Legislative Budget Board for the school, which currently provides post-secondary education for 104 full-time deaf students, Hays told the subcommittee they could operate on $7 million for the 1984-85 biennium.

Most of the appropriation, $4.4 million, would pay for equipment, salaries, utilities and general operations of the institute for the two-year period, Hays said, while $2.6 million would fund construction and renovation projects.

Such projects would include converting two former barracks on the campus in Big Spring into dormitories, renovating an ex-hospital facility to make it more compatible to education and building a new vocational/industrial building, Hays said.

"Educating the handicapped is expensive, but it costs less than subsidizing those on welfare," Hays said. "It costs the taxpayer $10,000 a year to subsidize welfare recipients."

While it costs an average of $11,000 per year to educate a handicapped student, he noted they become productive after graduation, while those on welfare keep receiving benefits. "It's a small investment compared to those on the welfare rolls."

Big Spring Rep. Larry Shaw called SWCID "a valuable institution" and told the subcommittee he did not know why the Legislative Budget Board cut the school's request.

"Perhaps they did not understand the full scope (of the school)," Shaw said. "Perhaps they do not consider deaf people a priority."

Application process to be outlined

The process of taking applications for the 1983 housing rehabilitation program was to be outlined to the City of Midland Housing Authority at its regular meeting at 2 p.m. today in City Hall Council Chambers, 300 N. Loraine St.

Gloria Ellis, executive director of the Human Relations Council, will report on the process her agency is using to take applications for the program.

Another $250,000 is available from the Department of Housing and Urban Development for the program, which follows the same lines as that started last year with $500,000. The money comes under a Community Development Block Grant and is designated for rehabilitating homes in south and east Midland.

Susan Howell, CD coordinator for the city, and Horace Berry, rehabilitation inspector for the city, will review the status of the 1982 program.

In addition, the board will consider a contract with James R. Griffin of Brady to audit the authority for a 36-month period ending June 30, 1983.

The board will look at certain expense items covering Extraordinary Maintenance, Replacement of Equipment and Property Betterment and Additions.

Police arrest robbery suspect

It took police less than 10 minutes to arrest a suspect in the robbery of the Colonial Food Store at Thomason Drive and West Wall Avenue late Tuesday night.

In the city jail this morning awaiting the filing of formal charges was a 34-year-old ex-convict and former Midland resident who, according to police, has a lengthy criminal record that includes two burglary and two robbery convictions.

The suspect, who said he now lives in Ranger, was found hiding in an abandoned storage building behind the Kingsway Motel on West Wall at 11:15 p.m. — nine minutes after a clerk reported she had been robbed of an undisclosed amount of money by a man who played video games until two customers left the store.

Department of Public Safety Trooper Matt Andrews arrived on the scene shortly after hearing a description of the man being broadcast by city officers, who had begun tracking the suspect with a police dog.

Andrews said he found a door ajar at the nearby storage building and saw the suspect crouched in a corner. A blue coat with a large amount of change on it lay nearby.

Police said the clerk later identified the man as the same one who held his hand in his pocket as though he had a weapon and demanded that she turn over the money.

He fled on foot after obtaining some currency and a large amount of change. No weapon was found on the suspect when he was arrested, however.

Broken valve will lower pressure

Businesses and residences east of Andrews Highway and Ward Street will be suffering from low water pressure until a valve on a water main at Midkiff and Wadley streets is repaired, said Public Works Director Fred Baker.

When the water line broke two weeks ago, city workers discovered the valve on that line was broken, and Baker surmises it may have been broken when installed in the 1950s.

The WTCC group later met with key congressional office staff members.

H & R BLOCK CAN HELP YOU KEEP WHAT'S YOURS.

Most taxpayers feel their return is done correctly and to their advantage if they are not audited and they receive the refund shown on their tax return. This is not always true. The IRS does not check every return to see if the taxpayer took all the legitimate deductions or if the taxpayer's financial circumstances have changed from year to year.

Year's of solid experience in the tax preparation field has shown H&R Block's preparers are trained to dig out deductions and credit for their clients through a personal interview. Internal Revenue could charge you 16% interest if you make an error on your return, plus a lot of worry and correspondence. If H&R Block does your return and IRS has any questions, whether you moved to another state or not, the nearest H&R Block office is there to assist you.

H & R Block does all types of returns from 1040EZ, and business returns to complete corporate returns. You can't afford not to use H&R Block.

Drinking champagne like swallowing stars

Mushroom-corked bottles emit cool effervescence

Copley News Service

Now, let's get this straight: Champagne is a sparkling wine. All sparkling wines are not Champagne.

With that behind us we can step right into the world of mushroom-corked bottles emitting cool effervescence. Historically sparkling wines are most evident at times of celebration. In fact, considering the current wine boom, sparkling wine is the country's fastest-growing type of wine.

According to Alan Portney, vice-president of Champs d'Ore sparkling wine, we Americans have shifted allegiance since 1978 from red wine as the most popular drink of the vine to white, now out-selling red two to one. Considering our national enjoyment of cold drinks, the demand for cold sparkling wine makes sense.

If you are a little confused about our opening statement, the facts are clear — in France, Champagne's prestige label adheres only to the wines produced by the minuscule French region designated as "Champagne." Within that country other sparkling wines created outside the borders of that postage-stamp-sized area cannot be called Champagne. According to the purists, neither should the tongue-ticklers from California, Spain, Italy, Germany, New York or anywere else.

Despite that view, it seems that many sparkling wines produced by classical methods are appropriately called champagnes, in the generic sense.

We are happy to report that many sparkling wines are absolutely delightful for imbibing and that the price range is broad enough to cater to most palates — even Champage tastes with beer pocketbooks. A note to the wise: Beware the incredibly inexpensive sparklers. They are priced that way for a reason: some could grow hair on a billiard ball. Probably give it a headache, too.

If you want a bubbling non-alcoholic drink for celebration, try sparkling apple cider, which costs $1.35 per bottle, available in grocery stores.

Chill sparkling wines to about 45 degrees by placing the bottle in an ice bucket for about 1/2 hour, turning occasionally. Or, two hours before serving, place the wine in the refrigerator.

• Freezing "shocks" sparkling wines, decreasing the effervescence. The taller the glass, the longer the bubbles' flight from the base to the rim. This increases the visual beauty of the wine.

• Any soapy film on the glass will flatten the wine quickly.

• To uncork the bottle remove the foil and wire muzzle. Then hold the cork firmly with one hand, tilting the bottle at a 45-degree angle away from yourself. Hold the cork between your thumb and forefinger, and then twist the bottle, allowing the pressure to ease out of the cork. The cork will slide out with a soft pop and brief spray of white carbonic gas.

• Fill the glasses gradually, letting the foam subside, finally filling to about 2/3 full.

• How to "read" bubbles: Active bubbles indicate fresh wine. Flat bubbles suggest improperly rinsed glasses. Odorless bubbles and wine mean the wine is being served too cold.

After you have your chosen Champagne or sparkling wine and have followed the above suggestions, you'll join Dom Perignon, the legendary 17th-century French monk who claimed to have created the method of making Champagne. It is said that upon his discovery, he exulted, "Come quickly. I'm drinking stars!"

Here is another way to use your sparkling wine: cook with it. These recipes are sure to bring sparkling results.

CHAMPAGNE BORSCHT

At one time the Russians consumed almost as much Champagne as the French. Today Champagne consumption by the Russians is second to the consumption of vodka.

2 (16-oz.) cans julieme beets
1/2 cup onion, minced
2 cups chicken stock
3 cups Champagne or sparkling wine
2 teaspoons salt
1/4 cup lemon juice
3 tablespoons sugar
Whipped cream or sour cream

In a large saucepan combine the undrained beets, onions, stock, Champagne, salt, lemon juice and sugar. Bring to a quick boil and reduce heat to simmer for 20 minutes. When cooked, chill for five hours. Serve cold in chilled soup bowls and top with a dollop of whipped cream or sour cream. Serves six.

CHICKEN BREASTS CHAMPAGNE

3 large chicken breasts, boned, skinned and cut in half
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon white pepper
1 cup chicken broth
1 cup Champagne or sparkling wine
1/2 teaspoon leaf thyme, crumbled
1 tablespoon finely chopped fresh parsley
2 or 4 egg yolds
Fresh watercress

Arrange boned chicken breasts in a single layer n a buttered heavy skillet or shallow, flame proof casserole. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Pour chicken broth and Champagne over chicken. Sprinkle chicken with thyme and chopped parsley. Cover and simmer for about 20 minutes over medium heat or until chicken is tender. Drain off cooking liquid and measure. For each cup of poaching liquid, lightly beat 2 egg yolks (NOTE: You will either have one or two cups of reserved liquid. If necessary, additional Champagne may be added to make two cups liquid.) Heat poaching liquid in the top of a double boiler directly over source of heat until simmering. Spoon a small amount into yolks and return to pan. Set over simmer water. Heat and stir until thick and there is no raw egg taste. Pour over chicken and garnish with watercress.

CHAMPAGNE APPLES

One of the better ways of ending a meal is with fruit. This method of presentation is delicious and easy.

1 tablespoon dried raisins
1/4 cup Champagne or sparkling wine
1 medium apple, cored and halved
1 teaspoon sugar
1/2 teaspoon fresh grated lemon peel
1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon butter

Drop the raisins into the wine for 30 minutes. This will plump them. In a small baking dish place the apple halves face up. Drain the raisins and reserve the wine. Mix raisins with sugar, lime/lemon peel and cinnamon. Divide this mixture in two and top the apples with it. Divide the butter in half and top the apples. Pour over the reserved wine. Bake 25 — 30 minutes in a 350 degree oven. Spoon juices over apples when serving. Serves two.

Texas 'Wine boomlet' burgeons

By the Los Angeles Times - Washington Post News Service

HOUSTON — If there is any doubt that Texas is solidly ensconced in the wine world, a recent tasting here would dispel that feeling. The Houston Chapter of the International Wine and Food Society hosted one of the world's finest tastings, a superb 21-bottle foray into claret's most heralded vintage of this century, the glamorous 1945.

The successful event not only presented the formidable '45s, but also marked the inauguration of an artfully constructed dining room and wine cellar at Charley's 517 Restaurant, a suitable site for the tasting and dinner.

Gathering 1945s is no small task, even for Texans. Most of the wine came from the personal collection of member Robert Pacini, who generously shared them with his fellow members.

Texas in general is enjoying a kind of wine explosion. Besides burgeoning consumer interest there are at least seven wineries currently producing a range of creditable wines as well as experimental ones.

Texas wine production is really nothing new.

There is talk today of adding considerable acreage with such vinifera grapes as Cabernet, Chardonnay, Merlot, Sauvignon Blanc, Chenin Blanc, Riesling, Petite Sirah and Semillon that ultimately will challenge California for consumer favor.

Wine industry breaks glass bottling habit

Copley News Service

Glass bottles for wine may be tradition, but wine industry analysts seem to feel that the 1980s will be the decade of marketing — and by marketing they mean selling wine in containers other than glass.

Geyser Peak Winery popularized the bag-in-the-box concept with its Summit wines, and today hundreds of thousands of them are now sold in the four-liter size for home use. Pop them in the refrigerator and you can dispense wine for weeks, in theory, without the wine spoiling.

Geyser Peak also has made inroads with wine in cans — 187-milliliter pop-top cans that chill easily and may be taken to picnics. Taylor California Cellars and Villa Bianchi likewise are making use of wine in cans, and have experienced some success.

The best campagnes in the world still reputedly come from that golden area in northeastern France that is about the size of Rhode Island and includes hundreds of sparkling little towns with appropriate names like Moussy, Dizy and Bouzy.

But Connoisseur magazine's editor Thomas Hoving was determined to find out for himself and for his readers, so he corraled a panel of wine connoisseurs and had them blind-test 14 different blends of the bubbly, 13 from France and one from — you guessed it — the U.S.

San Francisco shelters its 'nouveau broke;' religious agencies assist

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Each day, Linda and Robert King settle themselves on a downtown sidewalk and display a sign that reads, "Please Help a Homeless Family."

There they wait for evening when they can return to one of the city's shelters for the night. Neither one of them has a job, and Linda is four months pregnant.

The Kings never know where they will sleep, but the city provides bed space in a variety of places from run-down hotels in the seedy and dangerous Tenderloin district to the opulence of Nob Hill, where the Grace Cathedral has transformed its gift shop into a soup kitchen and an overnight shelter for the homeless.

An unemployed waiter, King, 22, faces keen competition for the few jobs available. Linda, 35, is a nurses' aide who says her pregnancy has prevented her from finding work.

Like many other cities in the nation, San Francisco's social services are being stretched to a maximum to meet the needs of the increasing numbers, estimated here at anywhere from 900 to 5,000, but city officials believe they are unique in their approach to the problem.

Philip Weinfield sets up cots for fellow homeless individuals in San Francisco's Trinity Episcopal Church.

WORKING WITH relief and religious agencies, the city is providing beds and meals for hundreds of homeless, many of whom are sleeping in temporary facilities established in churches.

The homeless frequently are new arrivals who look upon this as a liberal and tolerant city, where it will be easier to find work or obtain assistance. Others simply lost their homes when they lost their jobs.

Church organizations like St. Anthony's Dining Room and Glide Memorial Church have been serving hot meals to transients, street people and the poor for many years.

"This year is different," said Dusty Williams, director of human services and crisis at Glide. "Things all the way around are just worse this year than last. In the 12 years I've been here, this is the worst I've seen it."

Mayor Dianne Feinstein recently announced the kickoff of the Mayor's Fund for the Homeless to help raise money for expanded city services. The fund was opened with $50,000 each from the Levi Strauss Co. and the Gannett Foundation.

In addition, $750,000 from an obscure city fund started in 1945 and discovered recently by a city attorney also may become available, but the money's legal status must be resolved first.

From early December, when Mayor Feinstein established the Mayor's Committee on the Homeless, overnight shelter space has grown from 148 beds to 915. Most of that space is being donated by churches.

"MAYOR FEINSTEIN challenged churches because they have the space and we're trying to get away from the warehouse syndrome," said Steve Wise, director of the Central City Shelter Network.

One of the 10 church shelters is th stately Grace Cathedral. It is, according to the Rev. William Barcus, the first cathedral in the nation to open its doors to the poor and homeless.

Until Jan. 1, when the church converted its street-level crypt and gift shop into a sleeping facility for 100 people, many of the homeless had been sleeping in adjacent Huntington Park, across the street from the Fairmont and Mark Hopkins hotels and the prestigious Pacific Union Club.

Barcus, who started the program at Grace, said the neighborhood reaction has been "overwhelmingly supportive." According to Barcus, volunteers at the shelter include members of the Junior League and other "very highly placed people." For those who can make the steep climb up the hill to the church, new designer cots await them.

"The folks who come here just break your heart," Barcus said. "Some have always been without, but many are what I call the nouveau broke."

One family that found refuge at the Episcopalian cathedral was that of Steve and Denise Staggs. With their 4-year-old son, Shane, they came to the Bay Area from Elkhart, Ind., with $700 in savings and hopes of making a new start.

Steve, 23, an unemployed construction worker, and Denise, 33, an unemployed optician, were forced to live in their car for two weeks after Steve's wallet was stolen.

"I've tried to get work but there's just too many people vying for day-labor jobs here," Staggs said.

ACROSS TOWN, in a much less exclusive neighborhood, Trinity Church allows the homeless to sit in the nave of the church to watch television until regular church functions end at 10 p.m., when the meeting rooms are converted into temporary sleeping halls.

"It's a dynamic situation," but there has been no violence or vandalism," the Rev. Richard Kerr said.

Most of the churches do not set a limit on the number of nights an individual or a family can stay, although two- or three-day limits are imposed at some city facilities.

However, these temporary shelters do promise the homeless a chance to consult with welfare aides and get advice on how to obtain more livable accommodations through programs such as Aid to Families With Dependent Children.

For some, the improvement in their lot comes as a mixed blessing. The next step up from the night-to-night shelter often is a low-cost apartment or a run-down hotel in the Tenderloin where fund-disbursement days often are marred by muggings and strong-armed robberies.

The Michael Chapman family were victims. When they received their check, Chapman, 38, an unemployed construction worker, was robbed outside his apartment building, forcing him and his wife back to the streets with their two children.

The Chapmans spend most of their days in the Civic Center Library rather than wander the streets. "I hate to have my children exposed to the crazies on the street," said Mary Chapman, 32.

According to Sister Elizabeth Fries, about 75 percent of the families who come to the Rafael House seeking shelter are turned away for lack of space.

Because of the record number of people showing up at temporary shelters, San Francisco is considering a permanent facility that will replace them. The suggested site is an elementary school on Union Street that currently is under a 55-year lease to a private developer. The developer is negotiating to lease the school back to a social-service agency — probably the St. Vincent de Paul Society — that would run it under contract to the city.

THE CITY currently pays private hotel owners $10 a night per person for temporary housing. The new facility would take the cost down to $5 per person.

Ed Sarsfield, general manager of the Department of Social Services for the city and county of San Francisco, said that in the long run the project would save the city money as well as being more humane.

Citing the recent developments throughout the city in helping the homeless, he said, "It's kind of exciting to see what's happening here. It's a model for the rest of the country."

Liver transplant recipient improves

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Doctors say 3-year-old Terri Valverde, who was given a new liver because she had eaten poisonous mushrooms, is "improving daily."

But Dr. Richard Ward of the University of California, Davis, Medical Center in Sacramento cautioned Monday, "We're still not out of the woods. We're going along from day to day."

Ward said there is still the possibility of slight brain damage, or long-term kidney problems. She is also highly susceptible to infection and rejection of the new liver.

Terri's brother, 5-year-old Ben, was released from intensive care Monday. His pediatrician, Dr. Robert Moody, said he is "doing very, very well."

Designer says afro hair relaxing into manageably marketable curls

The Afro has declined in popularity and many black women are straightening their hair again.

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

HARTFORD, Conn. — The Afro arrived with dashikis and black history lessons in the '60s, when women (and men) with kinky hair adopted the unstraightened, full, rounded hairstyle as a symbol of racial pride.

"Kinky hair is bad hair," Bill Cosby said at the time, when "bad" was commonly understood to mean "good" and chemically straightened hair signified to adapting to the dominant culture.

Initially, many people wore the 'fro or "natural" only after careful self-examination and, perhaps, quarrels with older, conservative family members and friends. In some circles, however, blacks risked rebukes from their black sisters or brothers if they wore their hair in a "white" style.

But over the last several years, the Afro has declined in popularity. Many black woeen are straightening their hair again, sporting as many different hairstyles as Caucasians. And because their hairstyle is no longer considered a political badge, criticism is negligible.

Naomi Sims, a former black model and author of "All About Hair Care for the Black Woman" (Doubleday-Dolphin; $12.95), says she doesn't believe relaxed hair styles are more "white" than Afros.

"As free black women, we bow to no one telling us how to dress or wear our hair; we will be guided by what is smart, comfortable, healthful and, above all, expressive," she says, adding that both treated and untreated black hairstyles go back more than 5,000 years.

Dorothy Willis, an award-winning hairstylist and trainer with Soul Scissors at G. Fox & Co. in downtown Hartford, agrees that unstraightened hari is no longer mandatory. "We sort of have taken control of our lives," she said. "We are being judged and commended for what we have achieved."

In addition, Willis said, both black and white women are more aware today of the need to project a certain image through their appearance, particularly for career reasons. A hairstyle can help create the desired image.

While the Afro has not entirely disappeared, Willis said, it's mostly seen on women who can't afford a new hairdo or who have decided to stick with a look from the past — like white women who still tease and spray their hair into bouffants. She said women with fine hair may wear the Afrco because it is the only style suitable for them.

The consensus of black women surveyed informally at the Hartford Civic Center recently was that the Afro has taken a back seat to a look they called by trade names such as "Curly curl," "California curl" or "Classy curl."

"The curl for me is more manageable. It was chemically treated and now I just put moisture in. I wore an Afro before the curl, but it was hard to comb," said Joyce Welch, 28, of Hartford. "I basically picked it for personal appearance. My hair style is not a statement."

"My hairstyle is more of a career style — not wild or trendy," said Denise Smith, 28, of East Hartford, who was neatly dressed in business clothes. "It has to be straightened and curled. The trend is from Afros to curly permed Afros. My hairstyle suits my career, personality, and is just me."

This looser curly look begins with either a home or salon permament wave. At home, women care for the new hairstyle simply by washing it and applying a moisturizer. Setting is an option.

Anthony B. Colletti, a New York-based offical of Wilfred Academy Beauty Schools, said the black curly style, which he called the perm-a-curl, involves a technique that relaxes, softens and strengthens the hair chemically. "The new curl is larger, softer more flexible," he said. The advantage is that it can be worn longer and styled. But, he added, "The Afro is here to stay — not a trend, but a concept."

While the Afro and other black styles like braids and cornrows or the matted dreadlocks of the Rastafarians are styles that originated among black people themselves, permed and relaxed styles come from companies that produce hair-care products. Manufacturing and promoting hair-care products for black consumers is big business. Last year, blacks spent over $600 million for these items.

These relaxed and permed styles are urged on consumers through advertising and promotions like last fall's campaign from Chicago-based Johnson Products, the leading manufacturer of hair care products and cosmetics specifically for blacks.

Johnson Products ran a nationwide promotion for its Gentle Treatment no-lye relaxer. The promotion inolved a city-to-city hunt for a new black model. From 7,000 applicants, the judges chose Sarah Stavrou , a 19-year-old Chicagoan whose hair "shines in any hair style," the company announced.

Stavrou appears in publicity photographs in a number of striking styles that begin with relaxing her long hair. She wears her hair completely straight, in a full mass of curls or anywhere in between.

Toenail clips examined in cancer study

BOSTON (AP) — The lowly toenail plays a crucial role in a Harvard study of a possible chemical link between diet and cancer.

One million toenail trimmings were solicited from 100,000 nurses around the country who have been taking part in a nine-year study for the Harvard School of Public Health.

The goal of the toenail project is to see whether people's intake of an obscure trace element called selenium affects their cancer rate.

Although scientists have used clippings before to check for concentrations of elements, the scope of the latest survey makes it unique, a scientist says.

"Nobody has ever used it for this sort of large-scale application," said Dr. Walter Willett, one of the researchers.

Animal studies have shown that the cancer rate appears to be higher when the diet contains smaller than usual amounts of selenium. No one knows whether it makes a difference for people.

"The mechanism is not totally clear, but that's secondary to whether or not it works," says Willett. "We'll worry about the mechanism later."

Selenium finds its way into the food from the soil, but it is such a tiny part of the diet that it's hard to figure out how much of it people are getting. The doctors, however, found that the level in the nails seems to be an accurate reflection of the amount absorbed by the body.

They determined this by looking at nail clippings from people living in different geographic areas. Some were from South Dakota, where selenium is common in the soil, and some were from New Zealand, where the soil has very little selenium.

They found that everybody checked in South Dakota had more selenium in their nails than anybody from New Zealand. People in the same families had similar levels, presumably because they were eating the same food.

So far, the doctors have received 50,000 sets of toenails from the nurses, and they still are coming in, sometimes at a rate of 1,000 sets a day.

Willett says he expects to be able to reach some conclusion about the impact of selenium on cancer within two or three years.

Meanwhile, the toenails won't be tossed away. The doctors are looking into the possiblity of checking for other trace elements as well.

Rennetless cheese safe for vegetarians

Copley News Service

The trouble with most kinds of cheese, and a topic that always provokes definite opinions at vegetarian gatherings, is that the rennet it's made with rules it out of even the broadest vegetarian diet.

But then, the inevitable question, "What is rennet?" comes up. Don't you have to kill cows for it?

Yes, you do. Rennet is obtained commercially from the fourth stomach of an unweaned calf (at the same time they make veal), and has been an essential ingredient in cheese-making since time immemorial. It contains an enzyme, rennin, that separates the curds from the whey so that curds can be made into cheese. And it is used in almost all cheeses, even many that are labeled "natural."

Science has, however, discovered enzymes that come from plants to substitute for rennin. Cheeses labeled "rennetless" or "no animal coaguiant" have been made with these substitutes. Most cheeses labeled "kosher" contain these substitutes too, because kosher rennet is now even more expensive than the plant enzymes.

It's worth taking the trouble to read the label. Cheese is twice as rich in protein as beef and its origin from milk is only spoiled for us when rennet has been used.

Very soon, according to a dairy chemist I spoke with recently, even rennet itself will cease to come from animals because genetic engineers are working on a way to duplicate it in the laboratory. But that's for the future — the very near future, I hope.

In the meantime, enjoy those permissible, rennetless cheeses we already have.

BAKED TOMATOES

4 very large, firm tomatoes
Filling:
1 cup bread crumbs
3 tbsps. milk
2 tsps. soy sauce
1 egg
2 tbsps. minced onion
¼ tsp. ground rosemary
¼ tsp. sage
¼ tsp. thyme
1 cup Monterey jack, coarsely grated
Topping:
2 oz. finely grated Parmesan
2 oz. bread crumbs
3 oz. olive oil

Scoop out the centers of the tomatoes with a sharp paring knife and turn them upside-down on paper towels to drain. Preheat oven to 300 F. Beat together filling ingredients until well blended; mix cheese in thoroughly. Stuff mixture into tomatoes and place in heatproof casserole greased with olive oil. Mix topping ingredients together and spread on top of tomatoes. Bake for 20 to 25 minutes. Serves four.

BUBBLE AND SQUEAK is an ancient English dish designed to use up leftovers, so almost any substitution will do. (Chef Nigel of the quaint English Agatha's Tea Room in Los Angeles insisted on the capitalizing cheddar, and even though the dictionary doesn't agree with him, I do.) Be sure to follow the directions for melting the margarine in a frying pan over medium high heat, because, as Nigel says, "It doesn't bubble and squeak otherwise."

BUBBLE AND SQUEAK

1 head of cabbage, shredded
2 large potatoes, boiled and cubed
2 cups grated sharp cheddar
¼ tsp. ground marjoram
⅛ tsp. minced chives
2 tbsps. margarine
Salt and pepper to taste

Melt the margarine in a large frying pan over medium-high heat; add the vegtables and spices. Stir until it squeaks, add the cheese and stir until it bubbles. Serves four.

RAREBIT CASSEROLE

10 slices buttered toast, sliced
3 cups grated Swiss cheese
3 eggs
1 cup milk
1 cup beer
¼ tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. white pepper
¼ tsp. dry mustard

Alternate layers of diced toast and cheese in an 8-inch heatproof casserole until both ingredients are used up. Beat all other ingredients together and pour over the toast and cheese; let stand for half an hour. Bake at 350 F until well-browned (about an hour) and serve hot. Serves four.

Chinese-born star enjoys gourmet cooking

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

A charming young television personality from China cooked lunch for me the other day in her exquisitely decorated apartment overlooking New York's East River. The repast included some of the most delicious Chinese dishes I have ever tasted, few of which appear on restaurant menus in this country.

Yue-Sai Kan is hostess on the cable TV talk show, "Looking East," which won plaudits from New York's Mayor Edward I. Koch for serving as a bridge between East and West.

She also finds time to run an import business and occupies her spare moments cooking.

The daughter of an artist, she was born in China but moved with her family to Hong Kong after the 1949 of China, which has one quarter of all the earth's people," she said. "And Japan, of course, is exercising a powerful economic influence in this country."

Noting the spread of Oriental cooking in America, she said that in New York alone, the number of Japanese restaurants has tripled in the past five years.

"And as for my native cuisine," she said, "There are 1,200 Chinese restaurants in New York compared to 800 in Peking."

Her show includes interviews with Oriental chefs and food writers and she gives such tips as how to order a Chinese banquet.

Oriental cooking has always fascinated Yue-Sai Kan, and she owns more than 70 Chinese cookbooks. One of her favorite dishes is Tea Eggs, which are sold like hot dogs on city streets in China. Here's her recipe.

12 eggs, hard cooked

3 tablespoons black tea or

3 black tea bags

2 tablespoons soy sauce

1 tablespoon salt

1 tablespoon star anise cloves

Cool hard-cooked eggs in water, then make cracks in shells with back of spoon or by rolling them firmly on a table. Put cracked eggs and other ingredients in pot and cover with just enough water to submerge eggs. Cover pan and simmer 90 minutes. Remove shells and serve mottled eggs. They may be served hot or cold.

DEAR ABBY

Man's obscene

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Never in my wildest dreams did I think I'd be writing to you, but I don't know where else to turn.

To be as brief as possible, my husband and I have been married for 14 years. He's a wonderful husband, father and provider, and has always been a decent, respectable, churchgoing man. We've always been honest with each other and never had any trouble in our relationship. Lately, however, he has been embarrassed because of impotency, but I never made an issue of it.

I noticed that every time the phone rang he would rush to answer it — something he never did before. Then I did something I've never done before. I listened in on the extension while he was talking, and, Abby, I nearly passed out! He was talking all this vile, filthy talk to some woman. This went on for about five minutes. I got sick to my stomach and hung up.

After I pulled myself together, I told him I loved him very much and we needed to have a little talk. He knew I heard his conversation, so he broke down and told me he had joined a telephone club where the members called each other and talked dirty on the phone. I'd never heard of such a thing. He swore he never met any of these women and doesn't plan to. He just does it for kicks.

Can I believe him? I love him, Abby, and can't tolerate this kind of behavior. Please tell me what to do. — HEARTSICK IN MISSOURI

DEAR HEARTSICK: Don't be judgmental. Be compassionate and understanding and reassure him of your love. Tell him that he must get into therapy to find out why he needs this kind of filth in his life. His recent impotency is probably related to this "telephone club." You may also need counseling in order to understand his problem and be supportive. Call your local mental health community service and find out what is available near you. It could save your marriage.

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago you said in your column that a flower worn over the right ear means "I'm available," and a flower worn over the left ear means "I'm spoken for."

What does a flower worn over EACH ear mean? — LOVES FLOWERS

DEAR LOVES: "Let's negotiate."

DEAR ABBY: "Proud Navy Wife" missed the boat! When that other woman (not military) told her, "Our tax dollars go to pay for your doctor bills," P.N.W. should have informed her that the people in the military ALSO pay taxes.

In the 20 years my husband was in the Army, not only were federal income taxes and Social Security deducted from his pay, in every state we lived we paid property taxes (both county and state) on every home we mortgaged. We also paid school taxes, not to mention local sales taxes. At the commissaries we also paid a surcharge on the groceries we purchased.

My husband is now retired, and his retirement pay is taxed! We raised two fine sons who are now in the service — paying taxes.

My husband served in Vietnam three times while our children were growing up, and any "free" medical care we received was very much appreciated — but I wouldn't call it "free" considering the sacrifices we as a family made. Sign me ... RETIRED (BUT STILL PAYING TAXES) IN VIRGINIA

Dill works magic in microwave recipes

Copley News Service

Back in the Middle Ages, dill was said to be effective against witches. Its name originated from the Saxon word dillian which means "to dull," for dill was administered to restless infants to induce sleep.

Today dill takes its place next to the other popular herbs in the spice rack.

Dill and fish go together as well as dill and pickle, and sprinkled over new potatoes, it's divine. A less-known use for dill is as a stomach soother, when brewed into a tea with water or white wine.

Dill also stimulates the appetite and the seeds are a boon to insomniacs.

The shelf life of dill, as with any herb, depends on the potency it retains. Crumble the herb and if it's no longer pungent, it is past its prime. Fresh, quality dill is essential in helping achieve a delicious outcome — your microwave may produce magic, but not miracles.

Dill falls under the category of a sweet herb, as opposed to a salad herb, as it is used to season cooked foods. Salad herbs are fresh herbs which are chopped and tossed into salads. I have found, however, that fresh minced dill is an exciting addition to green salad as well.

Any fresh herbs, when used to flavor vegetables, should be added during the last minutes of cooking and, when used in salad, should be added to the dressing just before serving. Dried herbs, on the other hand, are best when added to a sauce during cooking to peak the flavor.

CREAMY DILLED FISH

2 lbs. fish steaks cut ¾-inch thick
2 tbsps. butter or margarine
¼ tsp. dill weed
3 tbsps. whipping cream
1 tbsp. dry Vermouth
Salt and pepper to taste

This recipe works equally well with halibut, swordfish, sea bass or salmon. If fish is frozen, thaw and pat dry. Place butter and dill weed in 7x11-inch baking dish and melt in microwave until bubbly. Stir in whipping cream and Vermouth. Arrange fish in single layer and cook 3½ minutes. Turn fish over, cover and cook 2 to 3 minutes until fish appears opaque throughout and flakes easily when probed with fork. Season with salt and pepper. Serve immediately, spooning sauce over fish. Serves 4.

DILLY SHRIMP AND CHEESE

2 cups small cooked shrimp
¾ cup Swiss cheese, diced
¼ cup green onion, thinly sliced
½ tsp. dill weed
2 tbsps. mayonnaise
1½ tsps. white vinegar
Salt and pepper to taste
6 hamburger buns, split, toasted and buttered

Coarsely chop shrimp (2 cans, 4½ oz. each, of shrimp may be substituted fo fresh); mix in cheese, onion, dill weed, mayonnaise, vinegar and salt and pepper. Spread mixture evenly over bottom bun halves; cover with bun tops. Wrap each sandwich lightly in paper and cook in microwave, allowing 30 to 45 seconds for each sandwich or until cheese is melted. Makes 6 sandwiches.

CHILLED BEET SOUP

6 cups peeled, diced beets
2 cans (14 oz. each) regular strength chicken broth
2 cups buttermilk
1 tsp. dill weed
Salt and pepper to taste
¾ cup green onion, thinly sliced
1 large apple
2 tsps. lemon juice
Sour cream

Put beets in 3-quart baking dish, add ½ cup of the broth, cover and cook in microwave 20 minutes or until tender when pierced. Stir several times during cooking. Add remaining broth. Whirl half of mixture at a time in blender until smooth. Stir in buttermilk, dill, salt and pepper and onion. Cover and chill thoroughly. To serve, pour into a serving bowl. Core and dice apple and mix well with lemon juice. Pass apple and sour cream. Makes 10 cups.

Recipes in this column are tested in 625- to 700-watt microwave ovens. Foods are cooked on HIGH (100 percent power) and uncovered unless otherwise specified.

Cuban black bean soup makes thrifty main dish

CUBAN BLACK BEAN SOUP

1 pound dry black beans
1 medium green pepper, chopped medium fine
¼ cup olive oil
1 medium onion, chopped medium fine
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 teaspoon ground cumin
1 tablespoon red wine vinegar
2 teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
Hot Cooked Rice

Pick over beans, wash well and cover generously with water. Soak overnight. Drain, rinse in fresh water and drain again. Turn into a 4- to 5-quart saucepot; add 8 cups water and the green pepper. Bring to a boil; cover and simmer, stirring occasionally, until beans are tender — 1 to 1½ hours, or much longer (time varies greatly).

In a 10-inch skillet, heat oil. Add onions, garlic and cumin; cook gently, stirring often, for 2 to 3 minutes. Stir in vinegar; cook a few minutes longer. Stir into bean mixture with salt and pepper.

Simmer, uncovered, until most of the liquid has been absorbed — about ½ hour. Mixture should be consistency of stew.

Serve over cooked rice and pass chopped onion.

Makes 6 to 8 servings.

LIVING TODAY

Family economics

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

In spite of concerns about the national debt, government spending and income taxes, for most of us the economy begins at home. The family remains the basic living unit, and the basic economic unit in this country.

In fact recent research indicates that economic status — including poverty status — is largely dependent on changes in family composition such as divorce, marriage or remarriage, the birth of children, children leaving home and widowhood.

Within the Texas Agricultural Extension Service there are resource management specialists who are concerned with assessing and improving the economic well-being of Texas families. Assessing family economic status involves research on income and poverty status, consumer spending, credit use, family saving patterns, economic decision-making and other factors related to the economic behavior of families. These economic behaviors affect the standard of living for Texas families.

Many Texas families lack the time, energy or money to fulfill their expectations for a desirable standard of living. Other families have problems using resources when those resources are subject to changing influences from within or outside the family.

Improving the economic well-being of families through education for effective financial managment is the primary goal of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Thurman Cleveland stands in the doorway of the little shack where he has been making fiddles for two years. Cleveland, 67, began making fiddles at the age of 65 when he retired after 36 years as a machinist for the railroad and found he had a lot of spare time on his hands.

Silsbee man has been fiddling around since retirement

SILSBEE (AP) — Off Texas 92 and down two nameless, unpaved roads bordered by mammoth pines lives fiddle-maker Thurman Cleveland. In two weeks, he can construct a fiddle that sells for the reasonable rate of $75.

Cleveland, 67, began making fiddles at the age of 65 when he retired from a 36-year machinist job with the railroad and found himself with a lot of spare time.

He had never worked with wood before, but thought he might like to carve a fiddle. He tried. It took him about three attempts before he built an instrument he wanted to keep.

The love of their music caused Cleveland to decide to build fiddles. He has played fiddle since his childhood, after having been given one. Later, he sat down beside it "and just started to make one like it," Cleveland said.

"I got a little shack out back where I make fiddles. It's not much, but it's all I need."

In the shack, a bare bulb illuminates a rough table where patterns of fiddles lie next to saws and knives and new pieces of wood about to be hewn into a shape similar to the old fiddle.

The new fiddles display various colors and types of wood, however. Cleveland uses maple, pine and cypress. Bodies of the fiddles are carved from pine and cypress bought in Silsbee.

"I start out with a one-inch board. I don't press the wood. I just shave the wood out with a knife. I like the grain in this wood for the body. It looks prettier than maple," Cleveland said.

For the sound, all the necks are made from maple, as are the keys and sides.

"I cut down a maple tree in the woods out back, saw it up and split it. Sometimes I also use maple for the fingerboards and bridge," Cleveland said.

Past the bridge, the strings tie onto a tail piece. For tail pieces, Cleveland procures beef bones from Hank Wolfe, a butcher in Silsbee.

"I made a five-string fiddle for the butcher and gave it to him for giving me bones," Cleveland said. "He plays fiddle, too. Sometimes we play together."

In addition to playing and making fiddles, Cleveland writes songs. Some of them he markets. He has sent about 15 songs to a national singer who says she may record one. He also repairs violins in his spare time, making bows that he retails for about half the usual price, and paints his homemade fiddles.

Said Cleveland of his pastime:

"I make handmade violins as a hobby. Except I'm just country, and I call 'em fiddles. Some are pretty good. I do pretty good, I reckon."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Most pediatricians believe breast-feeding good for baby

Dear Dr. Solomon: My pediatrician says that although he can't tell me what to do, breast-feeding would be best for my baby. Is this something that all doctors agree upon, or is it one-man's opinion? — Mrs. B.R., Houston

Dear Mrs. R.: I can't speak for all doctors, but breast-feeding has been recommended by the executive board of the American Academy of Pediatricians and unanimously by the membership of the American Pediatric Society and the Society for Pediatric Research.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father has been complaining that he doesn't eat as much as he used to because he can't smell the food too well. He says he used to become hungry while my mother was cooking and could hardly wait to sit down at the table. The odors from the food used to wake up his appetite, but now he is not aware of these odors. Can you please tell me what causes this and whether it is serious? — Anne, Trenton, N.J.

Dear Anne: A decrease in sensitivity to odors (hyposmia) or the complete absence of smell (anosmia) may have a number of causes, including neurologic conditions, drugs, lack of zinc and congenital disorders. To a large extent, the seriousness of the disorder depends upon the underlying cause. The condition can also prove serious if, for example, a person is unable to smell smoke or leaking gas.

I suggest that the first step would be for your father to see his physician. Some very simple tests can be used to determine the extent of the impairment. Based on the results of these tests, a referral to a neurologist or other specialist might be in order.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Everyone seems to be talking about high-fiber diets these days, but my father has been told he should have a low-fiber diet because of some trouble with his digestion. What foods should he avoid? I'd also like to know if he should take vitamins. — Ms. W.K., Great Neck, L.I., N.Y.

Dear Ms. K.: Individuals who are required to follow a low-fiber diet should avoid fruits and vegetables, nuts, raisins, seeds, bran, and whole grains. Since these foods contain dietary fiber, they cannot be digested as completely as other foods.

As I've noted on numerous other occasions, vitamin supplements generally are not necessary for anyone who has a nutritious, well-balanced diet; on the other hand, supplements may be indicated for a patient whose diet is restricted. Although I make every effort to satisfy my patients nutritional needs through the foods they eat, I will occasionally prescribe vitamins in selected cases.

How much and what kinds of vitamins are indicated for a specific patient is a very individual matter. In your father's case, whether he requires a supplement — and, if so, the kind and amount, will have to be determined by a physician who is familiar with your father's condition and who can follow his progress.

For Mrs. E.L., Paterson, N.J.: Why should food be used either as a reward or for punishment? The use of food in this manner may result in strong likes and dislikes that could have long-term consequences. Surely, there are better ways of rewarding or disciplining a child.

Soldiers lining the runway area push a young girl back into the crowd waiting for a glimpse of Pope John Paul II during arrival ceremonies Tuesday at San Pedro Sula, Honduras. The pontiff today concludes his tour of Central America.

Papal visit concludes with pledge of aid

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II ends his Central America trip today, having pledged that the Roman Catholic Church will work for social justice and human rights in an effort to free the region from a scourge of hatred and killing.

After a brief stop in Belize, he takes his message to the bishops of all Latin America meeting in the Caribbean nation of Haiti.

He is scheduled to spend 10 hours in that poorest nation in the hemisphere and then return to Rome on an overnight flight.

The pontiff's eight-day trip through Central America included pleasant, flower-strewn welcomes in Costa Rica and Panama, and confrontations with Nicaragua's Marxist leaders and the Protestant president of Guatemala, an unbending rightist army general.

Greeted by crowds of hundreds of thousands of in each country, John Paul consistently spoke for a need to help the poor and the downtrodden. He called for reconciliation and brotherhood to replace violence now raging between right and left, rich and poor, white and Indian.

On Tuesday, during a two-stop visit in impoverished Honduras, he urged the "betterment of the poor and the neediest" and called for an end to violence and injustice.

Honduran President Roberto Suazo Cordova, a country doctor who heads a new democratic government, told the pope his nation has neither "jails for people's ideas nor prisons for their thoughts."

In Guatemala, the pope pointedly chose as one of his audiences perhaps the most oppressed and ignored of all Latin American groups — its Indians. He assured them they are a race "blessed by God" and spoke out against discrimination.

The pontiff told Catholics who want social change to stay within the church — and away from ideologies foreign to it and from guerrilla movements that promote class war.

Selecting in Panama another downtrodden audience — peasant farmers — he delivered a stern warning: "There are those who are interested in seeing you abandon your work, grasping the arms of hatred and struggle against your brothers. You must not join them."

And he painted a straight line for the clergy to walk as it seeks social justice — stressing it should stay out of non-Christian political movements or public office in order to preserve its independence.

In leftist-ruled Nicaragua, the government denied John Paul a cross and confronted him with militiamen chanting revolutionary slogans as he tried to celebrate Mass.

His message there: a firm rejection of the "people's church" of radical priests which the government began promoting after a once-sympathetic local church hierarchy refused to toe the government's party line.

In Quezaltenango, a mountain city in a guerrilla-infested area of western Guatemala, he promised local Maya-descended peasants the church will defend them against injustice, and said they need not turn to Marxism.

The message was aimed beyond Central America as well, to the millions of poor Indians throughout Latin America. In many lands, they are an impoverished majority living under rule by whites.

The pope gave a similar message to El Salvador's land-starved peasants, caught in the middle of a civil war that has taken 42,000 lives in little more than three years.

In San Salvador, the pope paid homage to assassinated Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero — one of more than 30 clerics to have died in Central America's recent political violence after siding with the poor.

Later, he blessed a huge crowd at Mass and set off a simple, emotional chant: "We want peace." But in the countryside, the war raged on.

Even as the pope was being welcomed by peaceful Cost Rica's enthusiastic crowds at the start of his trip, barriers to peace in the region frustrated him. He asked Guatemala's Bible-quoting president, evangelist Gen. Efrain Rios Montt, to stop the planned execution of six men convicted of terrorism.

Rios Montt had them shot at dawn anyway. And when an angered, saddened pope arrived in Guatemala this week, he rebuked Rios Montt in private and included in one speech a series of pointed comments. Among them:

"Men are judged by their works, not their religious devotion."

10,000 subjects stand in rain to see Queen Elizabeth arrive

VICTORIA, British Columbia (AP) — Bands played in the rain and artillery boomed out a 21-gun salute as Queen Elizabeth II arrived to a tumultuous welcome from 10,000 loyal subjects in this Canadian city named for her great-grandmother.

The rain that plagued the British queen's 10-day U.S. visit followed her to Canada on Tuesday, and provincial Premier Bill Bennett apologized for the unseasonable "California weather."

"I think she's terrific," said Lucille Ladas of Victoria, one of those who braved the wet weather and brisk winds for the arrival. "I don't know her but what she does is marvelous.... There's only one like her, one queen."

As the queen and Prince Philip set off on a round of visits, smiling onlookers waved Union Jacks and the maple leaf Canadian flag.

A veteran of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Sgt. George Lawson, said he was thrilled.

"You figure after 25 years nothing moves you, but I got a little rush when the Britannia came down and the crowd started to hum," he said. "It's a natural high."

The Royal Canadian Artillery fired the salute and bands played as the royal yacht, Britannia, eased into the city's Inner Harbor in front of the Empress Hotel. A barge carried the royal party across the harbor to a lunch hosted by the Canadian government.

Meanwhile, the British Embassy in Washington forwarded a formal thank-you note from the queen to President Reagan, expressing appreciation for the hospitality extended during her time in the United States.

"I hope that this visit will have served to strengthen even further the friendship between our countries and to remind the world that we are allies for always," the queen wrote.

"I realize that a tremendous amount of work was involved in the arrangements for our visit and I should be grateful if you would express our appreciation to everyone who worked so hard to ensure its success," said the note, signed "Elizabeth R."

The royal couple, who arrived in the United States on Feb. 26, sailed from Seattle on Monday evening — ending a tour that included San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle.

"We are now looking forward to renewing our friendship with British Columbians during the coming days," the 56-year-old monarch said in Victoria.

ALCU official criticizes new polygraph test policy

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon plans to greatly expand its use of lie detector tests in screening personnel with access to classified data and, for the first time, to administer the tests at random and remove those who refuse to take them.

The proposed new policy drew sharp criticism from an American Civil Liberties Union official, who called it "objectionable" and "very, very disturbing."

A senior defense official said that the proposal had been in the drafting stage for several months but had not yet reached the desk of Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger, who must finally approve it. If approved, he said, the number of Pentagon officers, civilians and contractor personnel subjected to the tests could increase from 12,000 last year to 20,000 next year.

He denied that the proposed expanded use of polygraphs was intended to "chill" would-be leakers. He said that no questions during the tests would "be utilized to elicit information concerning an individual's contact with members of the U.S. news media or with members of Congress."

Some lawmakers have already been briefed on aspects of the proposal, which is a major revision of the 1975 guidelines now in effect.

An aide to Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on civil and constitutional rights, said that the panel, which held hearings on the matter several weeks ago, had not been aware at the time of the proposal that some officials were tested at random. She said that the congressman may now call for new hearings.

Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas, last week wrote Weinberger to request that the new policy not be implemented until the Office of Technology Assessment completes a study on the reliability of polygraph tests. He described the polygraph as a "questionable and highly intrusive device."

The senior Pentagon official, who asked that he not be identified, said that no personnel decisions would be taken solely on the basis of the test results, or on whether an official refuses to take it. Those decisions, he said, would be based on other factors as well, such as background investigations, personal interviews and the nature of the classified material with which the official is working.

Nevertheless, he said, a refusal to take the test, coupled with the other factors, "could result in adverse action...We would hope that this would not result in loss of employment, but frankly, candidly, it could result in someone not continuing in his career field."

As for the random tests, he said, only those Pentagon officials and contractors with access to the highly classified "sensitive compartmented information" would be subjected to them.

He said that about 12,000 defense officials took lie detector tests last year under current guidelines. Of those, 5,000 were administered to employees of the National Security Agency, 6,000 in the course of criminal investigations, and the remaining 1,000 to counter-intelligence and foreign intelligence sources.

If the new guidelines are implemented, he said, next year's total could increase to 20,000, and additional polygraph operators would have to be hired.

Gov. White says right thing about the wrong Texas town

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White was breezing right along, saying all the right things to the chamber of commerce officials.

The only problem was he was saying the right things about the wrong city.

In a gathering in his reception room, White rambled on about how nice a community Wichita Falls is and how the city is attracting new residents and business.

"All of these factors are going to make cities like Wichita Falls attractive," he said at the end of his complimentary remarks.

A voice from the small crowd of chamber of commerce members reminded the governor, "We're from Sherman."

White said he made the error because Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls was on hand.

"The same holds true in Sherman," White said about the nice things he said about Wichita Falls.

Amputee: Skiing easy for one-legged people

WHITE HAVEN, Pa. (AP) — There's a certain satisfaction in it and maybe it has something to do with controlling your own destiny, says Dave Fowler, describing what it's like for amputees to learn to ski.

He knows from personal experience. Now an instructor at Jack Frost Mountain in the Poconos, Fowler lost his right leg to a land mine in Vietnam.

"Skiing is perfectly suited for the handicapped person. Once they have the basics, they can progress at their own individual level," Fowler says. "You control your own destiny. What other sport allows you to do that?"

Fowler is director of four amputee ski clinics sponsored by the 52 Association, a non-profit volunteer group founded 40 years ago to help disabled World War II veterans.

"One-legged skiing is easy," says the 6-foot-5, 205-pound Fowler.

"Everything is the same except the points of contact with the snow. The physically normal skier is transferring his weight from one leg to the other. I do the same thing on one ski, going from one edge to the other."

People who have lost a leg can ski on their other leg by using outriggers, forearm crutches with a shortened ski tip on the end to provide stability and a brake. They leave three marks in the snow, earning the name "three trackers."

Double amputees, known as "four trackers," use their artificial limbs along with the outriggers when they ski.

"The most important things are strength, balance and control," says Fowler. He usually wears his artificial leg when skiing.

He didn't plan to be a ski instructor. After what happened in Vietnam, he was sent to a hospital in Valley Forge, Pa., for rehabilitation, and part of his therapy included a ski trip.

"I really don't know why I wanted to go...I was tired of the hospital, of waiting to get out. Something inside me said, 'Go.'"

Fowler, now 34, later joined the U.S. handicapped ski team, the government's amputee demonstration unit.

In 1974, he happened to be skiing at Jack Frost at the same time the 52 Association was sponsoring a learn-to-ski program. He volunteered to share his experience, and that was the beginning of his work as an instructor, first part-time and then full-time as of two years ago.

The organization's learn-to-ski program began here 10 years ago. With funding from the Southland Corp., it now conducts other clinics at ski areas in New York, Utah and California. Blind people also participate.

Survey gives attitudes

By BARRY SCHWEID

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans like Canada, Pope John Paul II and keeping military spending about where it is. They don't like the Soviet Union, the Ayatollah Khomeini — and they're not wild about sending U.S. troops to El Salvador.

In fact, if leftist guerrillas appeared on the verge of victory in the Central American country, only 20 percent would send troops and 11 percent weapons. Twenty-nine percent would try to negotiate and 18 percent would favor doing nothing.

These findings, in a survey sponsored by the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, suggest President Reagan and his policy-makers face a long uphill climb if they intend to stake U.S. prestige and manpower on the Salvadoran struggle.

Vietnam may not be an apt comparison, but the sad U.S. experience in Southeast Asia still apparently acts as a restraint on extensions of American power overseas.

AND YET, if Western Europe, Japan or Poland were threatened by Soviet invasion, Americans would be far less reluctant to send U.S. troops. Sixty-five percent would try to rescue Western Europe, 51 percent Japan, and 31 percent Poland.

If the Arabs tried to cut off U.S. oil, 39 percent would favor armed intervention, or if they invaded Israel, 30 percent would step in, even though Prime Minister Menachem Begin's popularity slipped badly since the last poll in 1978.

So, Americans by no means have retreated to pre-World War II isolationism. They are wary of overseas ventures, but they are true to long-term commitments and willing to resist Soviet expansion.

They treat the communist threat in different countries with varying degrees of seriousness. Only in the case of Mexico did a majority — 61 percent — say that a communist victory through a peaceful election would be a "great threat" to the United States.

William Casey, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, readily acknowledges that the Reagan administration has been losing the struggle for public opinion on El Salvador.

ACCORDING TO Casey, Marxists in Central America have "mounted a propaganda program that has a large part of the American public brainwashed into believing that what's happening down there is just innocent peasants seeking their rights."

Without commenting on the survey directly, the CIA director said "we don't know how to go out and explain what's happening, explain the situation from our viewpoint. The government is a little clumsy at that."

The Americans surveyed listed Britain, France, Mexico and West Germany as their favorite countries after Canada. Besides the Pope, their favorite non-American leaders were Prime Ministers Margaret Thatcher of Britain and Pierre Trudeau of Canada.

Americans don't feel especially threatened by the Soviet Union, the survey said. Almost two-thirds think the United States and the Soviets are relatively on a par militarily.

There is substantial support for arms control and joint exchanges with the Soviets in education, culture and energy. "The one distinct limitation favored by 60 per cent of the public is limiting the sale of advanced computers," said John E. Rielly, president of the Chicago council.

THE SURVEY, conducted by the Gallup organization, sampled opinions of 1,547 men and women across the country.

F. Lee Bailey, attorney for William Marchiando, gives his summation Tuesday before Marchiando's $17 million libel suit against the Albuquerque Journal went to jury.

$17 million libel suit goes to jury

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — A 12-member jury began deliberations late Tuesday in a $17 million libel lawsuit filed by an Albuquerque attorney against New Mexico's largest daily newspaper.

Criminal attorney William Marchiondo, 55, sued the Albuquerque Journal for publishing a March 1977 article entitled "Organized Crime Showing Interest in New Mexico." A photo of Marchiondo playing cards was positioned beneath the headline, creating the illusion Marchiondo was a mobster, his attorney said.

By using Marchiondo's photo with an article about the Mafia's attempts to undercut legitimate New Mexico businesses, Marchiondo was cruelly defamed and nearly lost his law practice, F. Lee Bailey told jurors in closing arguments.

The seven-week-old trial has featured testimony from 50 witnesses, including convicted Mafia hitman James "The Weasel" Fratianno and former New Mexico Gov. Jerry Apodaca, who testified his career was cut short when his friendship with Marchiondo was criticized by the Journal during his unsuccessful 1980 senatorial bid.

Conversely, the Journal has alleged what it published about Marchiondo's ties with underworld figures was true and that they went to great lengths to corroborate that Marchiondo was involved in several business deals with known felons.

Among the allegations was that Marchiondo, Apodaca and convicted New York bookmaker James V. Napoli Sr. were involved in an Albuquerque shopping center deal that included a hotel to be financed by underworld money.

Marchiondo and Apodaca have denied the allegations.

Marchiondo also was involved in a clandestine stock scheme that involved then-state Attorney General David Norvell's partnership in the Huerfano Trading Post near Farmington, the Journal charged.

Marchiondo has denied any wrongdoing.

The Journal said in concluding statements that freedom of the press would suffer a serious blow if the paper was found guilty of libeling Marchiondo. "There is nothing false in that article," Journal attorney Eric Lanphere said.

Mom cleared in son's death

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — A 200-pound woman who said a counseling center urged her to sit on her son to punish him was acquitted of involuntary manslaughter in the boy's death.

Betty Mentry wept as the Santa Clara County Superior Court jury read its verdict Tuesday.

"I'm delighted. I didn't feel there could have been any other verdict," said defense attorney Cyril Ash. "It's been our contention that what she did was on the direction of her counselor."

Ash has filed a $2.5 million wrongful death suit against the Alum Rock Counseling Center on behalf of Mrs. Mentry, who claims a counselor at the center told her to "use your weight" to control the tantrum-prone boy.

Steven Mentry died May 31 — his ninth birthday — nine days after Mrs. Mentry sat on him to punish him for playing with matches and taking six pennies from her dresser. The coroner said the boy died of asphyxiation and a lack of blood to the brain.

Sister uninvolved in death, Jahnke says

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — A 17-year-old girl accused of plotting the death of her father became involved only because she had no way of leaving the house, says a brother already convicted in the slaying.

Deborah Jahnke, who will turn 18 later this month, is standing trial in Laramie County District Court on charges of conspiracy and aiding and abetting the murder of her father.

Her brother, Richard J. Jahnke, 16, was convicted last month of voluntary manslaughter in the slaying and is awaiting sentencing.

Subpoenaed by the prosecution, he took the stand Tuesday to tell a new jury the events leading up to the Nov. 16, 1982, shooting and outline his sister's involvement.

He testified that he alone decided to kill his father, Richard C. Jahnke, 38, to end years of mental and physical abuse and avoid what he expected to be a fatal beating. He said he carried out the plan by himself, shooting his father with four slugs from a 12-gauge "riot" shotgun through the garage door.

Jahnke said he wanted to get his sister away from their home in Cheyenne before the killing, but was unable to find keys to the family car. So he put her in the living room and showed her how to protect herself with a rifle that he loaded and put on the couch, he testified.

"I told Deborah she was going to have to stay and told her to stay away from the garage," he said.

But Laramie County District Attorney Tom Carroll confronted the boy with the testimony he gave last month — that when his sister learned of his plan to kill their father she responded by asking him "to kill Mom."

"It isn't exactly what she said, but it's close," Jahnke told Carroll.

As he spoke, Miss Jahnke wiped tears away with her hand.

Jahnke admitted to placing loaded rifles, shotguns and handguns around the house as backup for himself in case something went wrong, and arming himself with a .38-caliber handgun and the shotgun.

Earlier Tuesday, sheriff's department lab technician Edward Palma testified none of the more than 25 weapons found in the Jahnke house had fingerprints clear enough to be identified as Miss Jahnke's.

Terry Mackey, Miss Jahnke's attorney, then began cross-examination about why the boy killed his father. Carroll objected, but after a 40-minute conference with presiding Laramie County District Judge Joseph Maier, Mackey continued his questioning.

Jahnke said he resolved the years of beatings and name-calling would stop the night of Nov. 16. On that night, their father started beating them and then stopped so he and his wife could go out for dinner, but the boy said he feared what would happen when the father came home.

Soviet women not equal

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union today honors its women with an annual national holiday and a surge of sentimentality that contrasts starkly with their daily lives of drudgery.

Shops and workplaces close for the celebration, there's a gala at the Bolshoi theater, and flowers and candy are given by loved ones and admirers.

State media recounts communism's achievements for women and the government proclaims, as it did last weekend in Pravda, that "the party has unswervingly fulfilled Lenin's behest to integrate women in every way in the running of the state."

Soviet women officially gained liberation with the advent of communism 60 years ago and a constitution guaranteeing equality of the sexes, but most females have yet to get the same rewards as men from the social system.

"The bread is gained equally but at the hearth the woman finds herself mostly alone," concluded one woman from the Volga town of Kuybyshev writing in the government newspaper Izvestia last month.

"THE BOSS of the home," she noted, "is lying on a sofa with a newspaper or staring at television while his wife is hurriedly going to and fro."

The article, entitled "Men at Home," was an attack on men who, besides failing to cook or clean, also lacked the ability to do simple household repairs and refused to stand hours in long lines to buy groceries.

Takeout food is unknown in the Soviet Union and the array of household appliances is far more limited than in the West.

Figures showing that 92 percent of women hold jobs are cited regularly to prove their equality. But most female workers occupy lowly positions, and women in Moscow often are seen hacking ice from the roads, lugging heavy machinery or dirt and garbage.

Communist leader Yuri V. Andropov reportedly heard about the female worker's plight when he visited a Moscow tool factory last month. A woman told him that she and her female colleagues held machinery so heavy it "shatters" those working with it and that men shunned the women's jobs because they were dangerous.

There are few women in top leadership posts, and one Muscovite who recently described a colleague as "very, very lucky" summed up the Soviet vision of female virtue by explaining: "his wife cooks very, very well."

STATISTICS boast that women account for 27 percent of some 17 million Communist Party members, but there are no females in the ruling 12-member Politburo and only six women among the 322 full members of the Communist Party Central Committee.

Soviet women make up 53 percent of the nation's 266 million population. Yet despite their numbers and frequent complaints about lazy male partners, there are few young single women pursuing independence. Most single women are widows.

In Central Asia where women are raised along traditional Muslim lines, there is little demand for independence.

In European Russia, there is no women's liberation movement and four Leningrad women who tried to found one in the late 1970s were exiled.

Most single women live with their parents and marry to escape — although the acute housing shortage means they often end up sharing apartments with their parents or in-laws for many years.

The tension created by such cramped conditions is increased by factors such as the lack of birth control.

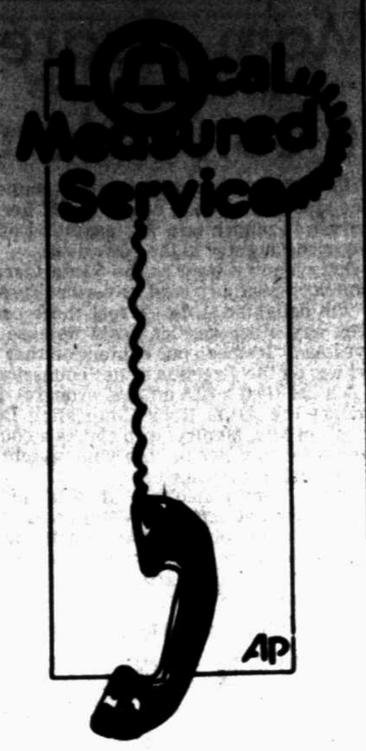
'Measuring by the call' unwanted option



WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite the resistance of consumer groups and state regulators, telephone companies across the country are trying to apply their long-distance pricing procedures to local phone service.

Local calls would be "measured" — in other words, billed — on the basis of time-of-day, day-of-week, the length of a call and distance — just like long-distance. The industry calls such pricing Local Measured Service, or LMS for short.

Telephone officials assert that Local Measured Service offers the best option to skyrocketing local rates while properly forcing the people who use the phone network the most to pay for that use.

The Florida Public Service Commission recently rejected a bid by Southern Bell to offer LMS as an option. Part of the problem, says Commissioner Susan W. Leisner, "was it just got too complicated for consumers. There's really no way to keep track of your calls or verify charges.

"AND SOUTHERN never really justified the variable cost by elements. For example, does it really cost them more if you stay on the phone for 30 minutes instead of 15 minutes?"

Ms. Leisner attributes Southern Bell's defeat to "an overwhelming local reaction. I think a lot of the uproar came from retirees from New York, where they had it and hated it."

The debate over Local Measured Service is not new. Cities like New York and Chicago have operated under various types of LMS billing for decades. The controversy is building, however, because of the pending breakup of the Bell System, major changes in regulation and suspicions that the phone companies want to make LMS mandatory.

"But the main obstacle is the very natural, instinctive reaction against change," says spokesman Pic Wagner of AT&T.

There is also the matter of money.

WITH ANY pricing system, there are winners and losers. Joseph R. Fogarty, a member of the Federal Communications Commission, is fond of pointing out a parent with teen-agers is not going to be a winner with measured service.

That's the point, counters Patricia Montgomery of Illinois Bell. Should a neighbor who doesn't place many calls subsidize that teen-ager? A flat rate can't be offered, she notes, without averaging every customer's usage.

"Chicago telephone rates are among the lowest in the country because customers pay for what they use," Miss Montgomery contends.

According to Wagner, the vast majority of Americans still obtain local phone service on a flat rate basis — meaning they are allowed to place an unlimited number of local calls for a set monthly fee. Only about 13 percent of Bell's residential customers use some type of measured service, he says.

On the other hand, he continues, more than 50 percent of the Bell System's business customers use some form of measured service — available as an option in more than 40 states.

THE PROBLEM with such statistics, however, is that they include all forms of LMS — simple systems where there is a flat charge per call, to "full-element LMS" where the billing takes account of time, day, duration and distance.

One example of the former is an option known as Economy Service in the District of Columbia. A customer pays $2.20 a month, plus 4.9 cents for each local call.

"We've supported that idea of a per-call billing option for years," says Dr. Lee Richardson, a marketing professor at the University of Baltimore and vice president of the Consumer Federation of America. "But the telephone companies have decided they want the full-fledged, so-called local long-distance system."

"And we are ardently opposed to that," adds Samuel Simon, the executive director of the Telecommunications Research and Action Center, a Washington-based public interest group. "It's too complex — unnecessarily complex — and the average consumer won't be able to understand and accurately guage his monthly usage."

The January 1984 breakup of AT&T has raised expectations that the 22 Bell companies will have to raise local rates to maintain profitability. For one thing, the system of subsidizing local phone companies with long-distance revenue is being overhauled.

WITHOUT NEW options, customers will be locked into flat local rates that could double or triple.

Rumors aren't true: Margaret not selling

LONDON (AP) — Despite reports in the British press, there'll be no "For Sale" sign posted outside Princess Margaret's vacation home on the Caribbean island of Mustique, a spokesman says.

Margaret

The Daily Mail had reported the sister of Queen Elizabeth II was distressed over an increase in tourism on Mustique and planned to buy another choice site on the island of St. Lucia.

Not true, says a spokesman at Kensington Palace, Margaret's official residence in London.

"Princess Margaret wishes it to be known that there is no truth whatsoever in reports that she is selling her house on Mustique, or contemplating buying another property on St. Lucia. Her Royal Highness' house on Mustique is not for sale," the announcement Tuesday said.

Mustique was where Prince Andrew, the queen's 23-year-old second son, vacationed with his American actress girlfriend Koo Stark last fall after seeing action as a helicopter pilot in the Falklands War against Argentina.

LONDON (AP) — British novelist Graham Greene, 78, doesn't want anyone thinking he arrived at riches easily, or early.

Graham Greene

The author of "Brighton Rock" and other successful books, including "The Power and the Glory," says he wrote for 20 years before making enough money to live on.

In a mild rebuke to the Times of London, Greene said in a letter published Tuesday that it was not until 1949, when he was 45, "that I was able to rely on my novels alone.'

The Times had referred to the "vast sales" of his early novels.

Greene has written more than 20 novels, along with short stories, plays, film scripts and an autobiography. He is considered one of the finest living writers in the English language.

From his home in Antibes, France, Greene wrote to the paper, "I had been in debt to my publishers for nearly 10 years when at last I broke even in 1938 with 'Brighton Rock.' "

INDIANA, Pa. (AP) — Actor Jimmy Stewart will be coming home to western Pennsylvania to celebrate his 75th birthday — and this town of 16,000 will be out in full force for a parade, a dinner dance and a festival of his many films.

Jimmy Stewart

Before the party May 20, the town of Indiana plans to erect a bronze 9-foot statue to honor its native son.

Stewart has accepted an invitation to return for the celebration, said organizer Marion Mahalcek.

However, Mahalcek said, the preparations have been marred by theft of a 100-pound marble slab marking Stewart's birthplace, now the site of a funeral home.

The marker apparently was stolen over the weekend, police said. Mahalcek made a public appeal for its return in time for the birthday bash.

Heart-lung recipient glad at anniversary

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — Two years ago Mary Gohlke received a new heart and lungs. She became the first person to successfully survive the operation and now says she has a heightened appreciation of life because of her surgery.

Mrs. Gohlke, 46, says most people ignore the daily progression of their lives, but transplant recipients don't take it for granted. She marvels at the morning sun, at birds singing. She looks on every day as a new horizon.

Mary Gohlke

"I think that everybody who's gone through the type of surgery I have...thinks that way," she said in an interview shortly before today's second anniversary of her surgery. "It has to change you. You've had a second chance. That's something not many of us get."

A lung condition called primary pulmonary hypertension that damaged her heart irreparably necessitated the surgery. Mrs. Gohlke became the first long-term survivor of the operation.

It's "kind of a lonely disease," she said. "You don't meet too many people who have it."

Doctors at Stanford University have performed 10 more heart-lung replacements since her successful operation there, with seven co-survivors, and similar transplants have been attempted elsewhere. No one before Mrs. Gohlke had survived for more than 23 days.

A year afterward, she resumed her career, though a viral illness last August and October hospitalized her locally for six days and forced her to quit as advertising manager for the Tempe Daily News, but she hopes to go back soon.

She said that the illness "was just a case of going back to work and working like hell, that is my way, working too much, too many hours, and I just had a little setback."

Now she's writing her autobiography with Max Jennings, executive editor of the Mesa Tribune, focusing on "my will to live and what I felt." She believes it will give people hope. She and Jennings hope to submit the outline and some chapters soon to prospective publishers.

"And I think what precipitated it was the letters and phone calls from people, wanting to know things, how I felt, how I handled it. There seems to be a large interest among a lot of people, and I just felt that this was one way of writing my experiences down and sharing."

Mrs. Gohlke carries only 87 pounds on her 5-foot frame, having had little luck in gaining weight after a successful operation more than a year ago to correct a stomach disorder. She undergoes physical therapy three times a week to try to build herself up.

She also continues taking five drugs, including Cyclosporin-A, which prevents her body from rejecting the heart and lungs transplanted from a 15-year-old California boy, daily.

That, she says, is the small price she is likely to have to pay every day she lives. She returns to Stanford annually for a checkup and probably will make this year's trip next month.

"I was the first one, and they learned a lot from me, so I'm told," Mrs. Gohlke said. "Even the doctors at that point didn't know what was right or what was good. It was a guessing game."

But Mrs. Gohlke was not complaining. "I'm mobile. I'm not restricted to the house or anything like that, so I think I'm living a quality life."

Marx details dinner incident

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Groucho Marx's daughter-in-law testified that she poured water on Erin Fleming at a restaurant because she was "frustrated and upset" that Miss Fleming had lied to the late comedian.

"I poured a glass of water over her heard, which was probably one of the highlights of my life," Lois Marx testified Tuesday during cross-examination by Miss Fleming's attorney in the Marx estate trial.

Mrs. Marx's colorful testimony marked the last day of rebuttal by the plaintiffs in the bitterly fought trial. Miss Fleming's lawyer, David Sabih, said he would call a few rebuttal witnesses today, concluding all testimony in the seven-week-old trial. Final arguments are expected by week's end.

It was Sabih who elicited testimony from Mrs. Marx about the incident involving her and Miss Fleming and about another time before Miss Fleming came on the scene when Mrs. Marx and her husband, Arthur, stopped speaking to the comedian for five months.

Early Reagan ranch studied

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — The possible historical value of another "Reagan Ranch" — one that was sold before Ronald Reagan became president — has prompted a state official to seek a new study of plans for the land.

The 252-acre ranch near Malibu is now owned by the state Department of Parks and Recreation, which bought it from 20th Century-Fox studios in 1974. Reagan, who bought the land in 1952 but never lived there, sold it to Fox in 1966. Eventually, Reagan chose a ranch northwest of Santa Barbara for his home.

The Malibu land, which includes grazing pastures, a barn and a stable, may someday have historical significance, said Edward Heidig of the Santa Monica Mountains Conservancy, a quasi-independent state agency.

Heidig, head of an agency advisory committee, said Tuesday he wants it to re-examine a 1974 master plan for Malibu Creek State Park, which includes the ranch, to protect against any future move to tear down the buildings. A bunk house has already been razed on the property in the coastal mountain range just north of Malibu along Malibu Creek Road.

"I don't think we should be premature," in terms of creating a historic site, he said Monday. "I just thought I'd red-flag that area and that issue so that 75 years from now, grandchildren of ours don't come up and say it's a shame you tore that down.

"We don't envision that this is going to become a tourist-type trap, a la Plains, Ga.," he said in reference to the home of former President Carter.

Congressmen change to suit their fancy programs', issues' names

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawmakers have an easy, time-honored way of dealing with programs or issues that take on an unpleasant connotation — they just change the name.

Thus "recesses" become "district work periods," taxes become "revenue enhancement measures" and "pork barrel" becomes a term used to describe only those federally financed projects placed in another's district.

The $4.9 billion jobs bill approved last week by the House and headed for the Senate contains a goodly number of such projects, funneled into districts of influential members.

Senate Minority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., has his own definition: "Well, if it's in West Virginia, I wouldn't call it pork."

House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, said it with a poem, noting that one member's pork was another's "bread and butter":

"To hold this job that we have got and earn the pay we're makin'
"Each works with might to earn the name of one who brings home the bacon."

Rep. Jamie Whitten, D-Miss., said it more prosaically: "A man that handles a national program and leaves the district out — he better not go back home."

Rep. William Natcher, D-Ky., also deals in euphemisms.

"I'm feeling fine because I just spent an hour at the library," he told a reporter recently.

"I bet you don't know about the library. There's one here in the Rayburn (House Office) Building. Some people call it the gymnasium. But I call it the library, because then my office can say 'he's at the library.'"

When former President Gerald Ford testified before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee the other day, he talked about helping set up the 1976 Bicentennial celebration.

After he finished, Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, asked Ford if Congress could call on him to continue to offer his counsel for ceremonies honoring the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Constitution.

"I'm not looking for a job," Ford replied with a laugh.

Hatch then said, "Even if we can play golf every now and then?"

"I'm getting better (at golf)," replied Ford. "The best example of that is I'm not hitting as many spectators."

Sen. David Pryor had some tough questions for John Svahn, the Social Security commissioner, at a Senate confirmation hearing on Svahn's nomination as under secretary of health and human services.

Svahn's wife and two children were present for the grilling. Pryor later said he couldn't vote for the nomination because he thought Svahn lacked compassion.

But he apologized for being so rough on Svahn in front of his family and made this peace offering:

"I told him I was going to send his children — they are beautiful young children — a dart board with my picture on it."

Professors profile mass murderer

BOSTON (AP) — He is in his 20s or 30s, a little shorter than average, a little overweight. He prefers a firearm — usually a rifle — and is likely to kill his victims in their homes. More often than not, he sports a mustache.

That, say two Northeastern University professors, describes the American mass murderer, a killer who they say does not fit the popular perception of a gibbering madman who kills strangers from rooftops or performs mutilations.

"The typical mass murderer is extraordinarily ordinary," said Jack Levin, a sociology professor who, with criminology professor James Fox, has studied 42 mass killers. "He's the guy next door. He doesn't stand out in a crowd."

Fox and Levin looked at cases involving murders of four or more people from 1973 to 1980, comparing them to single homicides.

The cases of mass killings, involving at least 500 deaths, provided the researchers with a strong impression of who is likely to kill and what factors lead to such deadly bursts of rage.

"The mass murderer is a distinct phenomena that we should try to understand," said Fox. "What we understood until now was based on a few case studies which are biased."

The researchers also say mass murder is on the increase, possibly because of the increasing pressures of society. Many of the killers studied had recently lost their jobs or undergone divorce. Others went on homicidal benders for money.

In the past two months, the country has recorded two separate mass murders. Twelve men and one woman were slain Feb. 19 in a holdup at a Seattle Chinatown gambling club. Two men in their early 20s have been charged with the crimes.

Last week six residents in remote McCarthy, Alaska, were shot and killed. Authorities have charged Louis D. Hastings, a 39-year-old unemployed computer programmer, with the deaths. No motive has been established in the killings.

Fox and Levin say mass murder is a masculine crime. Of the 42 cases studied, only one involved a woman. It is also a white man's crime. Fox said only eight of the mass murderers studied were black.

Geography also plays a role in mass killings. The researchers say such crimes are likely to occur on the East or West Coasts. They are more unlikely in the South, which Levin says has a higher than average homicide rate.

"Homicide usually emerges out of a fight, over money, out of honor or love. You don't have that kind of fight with four people at once," he says.

The researchers found that in half of the mass killings studied, the murderer knew his victims. More than likely, those victims were family members.

"Very typically, in these cases, the killer is a man who is trained in the use of weaponry, who has a gun in the house and who one day just kills his family," said Fox.

Levin said these killings often have their roots in revenge.

"There may be a divorce or separation involved," he said. "In order to get even the husband will come back and kill his wife and children as well."

Levin said the other large percentage of mass killings take place during another crime, usually robbery. These types of murders are usually the well-planned acts of a sane person.

"These people are not crazy in either a psychiatric or a legal sense," said Levin. "They are evil, but not crazy."

The researchers say only a small percent of mass murderers fall into the catagory they call "glassy-eyed, deranged killers." These crimes, they said, citing Ted Bundy, who was convicted of slaying two sorority sisters and a child in Florida, are the most gruesome.

'Chicken gun' fires carcasses at jet windshields

TULLAHOMA, Tenn. (AP) — They call it the "chicken gun," and it once came under the command of a colonel named Sanders.

The "gun" is a testing simulator operated by a defense contractor at the Air Force's Arnold Engineering Development Center, the nation's largest aerodynamics and propulsion testing facility.

The simulator fires chicken carcasses at more than 700 mph into cockpit windshields used in Air Force jets. Engineers are seeking to improve the windshields to protect pilots whose aircraft strike birds at high speeds.

The Air Force says the problem is getting more serious as jets fly at higher speeds and practice at lower altitudes. Lt. Col. D.L. Smith, a member of the Air Force Thunderbirds precision aerobatics team, was killed in September 1981 when his T-38 jet struck a flock of seagulls after taking off near Cleveland, Ohio.

The simulator consists of a long-barreled gun which fires the four-pound chicken carcasses at the aircraft windshields.

Air Force statistics for its F-4 plane show that 218 bird-strike episodes occurred in 1981, costing nearly $1 million.

The simulator is part of test facilities that were once under the command of a Col. James Sanders, who has since been reassigned to Patrick Air Force Base near Orlando, Fla.

The technicians obtain the chickens from local farms. The birds are asphyxiated with nitrogen gas before they are fired from the simulator, said Air Force spokesman John Blackburn.

PIK tax penalty subject of bills in House, Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional negotiators, facing a Friday deadline, are trying to resolve differences between House and Senate bills guaranteeing farmers they won't be unfairly taxed if they agree to swap idled land for free surplus crops.

"This legislation is of the utmost importance to the financial survival of America's 2.4 million farm families," said Sen. Roger Jepsen, R-Iowa, a primary sponsor of the Senate bill.

Farm leaders, both in and out of government, have been pressing for enactment of the bill by Friday, the deadline for farmers to decide whether to participate in President Reagan's payment-in-kind, or PIK, program.

The program is designed to deplete the burgeoning U.S. grain stockpile.

Rep. John Duncan, R-Tenn., said that without tax guarantees, "Farmers will not enter this program, which is a vital part of our agricultural policy."

BOTH THE HOUSE and Senate responded to those pleas on Tuesday, passing their own versions of the administration-backed legislation voiding a February Internal Revenue Service ruling that would have forced many producers to pay significantly more federal taxes than usual if they agreed to Reagan's plan.

The only negative vote was that of Rep. Glenn Anderson, D-Calif., who said it was "too much of a Mickey Mouse arrangement — the whole thing."

But differences between the two versions, many of them minor, must be resolved and the compromise repassed by both houses before the bill can be sent to the president for his signature. Congressional leaders hoped that could be accomplished by Thursday at the latest.

"Farmers may not enter the program and some who are in may come out of the program unless Congress acts quickly," Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said.

Administration officials hope PIK and other land-idling schemes can take as much as 30 million acres out of production this year, reducing current supplies so stockpiles can be tapped, market prices increased and federal price support costs reduced.

BUT, SAID Agriculture Secretary John Block, "There are still many producers that are waiting for the last week to make a decision, and those producers can have an important bearing on the final outcome of this program."

Initial reports show farmers embracing the PIK program with plans for major production cutbacks this year. Those preliminary indications have also driven up market prices for commodities covered by PIK.

Farmers who already idle 20 percent of their land this year in return for cash and continued price-support protection can leave another 10 percent to 30 percent unplanted under PIK.

In exchange for the additional idled acres, they receive free from the government surplus crops equal to 80 percent to 95 percent of what they normally would harvest.

More IRS aid could be cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — If the Reagan administration has its way, expert answers will no longer be just a telephone call away for taxpayers filling out their income tax returns.

The Internal Revenue Service has revived its plan to stop giving out such advice on the telephone. But the proposal apparently is just as unpopular as it was when it was first made a year ago and killed by Congress.

"I think that's terrible," Rep. Edward Roybal, D-Calif., chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee that oversees the IRS budget, said of the proposal Tuesday.

"If he (the taxpayer) does not get help from the IRS, he may say '...I'm not going to file this return,'" Roybal told IRS Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger.

The commissioner said IRS thinks it has more effective ways of answering taxpayer questions.

Egger went before the subcommittee to outline the proposed IRS budget for fiscal 1984, which begins next Oct. 1. The budget is for $3.3 billion, up from $3 billion this year, and it calls for an increase of 1,309 in IRS employees, to 92,548. Most of the new staff members would be for used for increasing audits of tax returns.

Egger said only 92 IRS workers would be used to implement 10 percent tax withholding from interest and dividends, which is due to go into effect July 1.

"If he (the taxpayer) does not get help from the IRS, he may say '...I'm not going to file this return.'"

A majority of both houses of Congress have signed bills to repeal withholding, but there is no assurance it will be repealed. The Reagan administration strongly supports withholding; the banking industry opposes it on grounds it will be expensive and will be a disincentive for savers.

For several years, IRS has operated toll-free nationwide telephone lines to give taxpayers direct answers to questions about filling out their tax returns. Under pressure from the Office of Management and Budget to save money, IRS asked Congress last year to cut or sharply curtail the service.

Congress refused. But because of delays in passing the IRS budget, the hotline did not go into full service this year until the end of January.

The hotline took more than 39 million calls in 1982, and the vast majority of them were from people with specific questions about completing their returns.

Let The Rapid Roof System STRETCH Your Roofing Dollars

Save time and energy with RAPID ROOF®
Conklin's RAPID ROOF® is the elastomeric roofing system made to weatherproof a variety of roof decking substrates. The lightweight, yet rugged RAPID ROOF membrane is many times lighter than conventional built-in roofing. And, deck irregularities that might pose problems for seamed membranes are overcome with the RAPID ROOF monolithic system.
Over new or remedial roofing, the lower installation costs of RAPID ROOF allow you to invest in quality materials, not expensive labor. You'll also get superior heat-reflectivity in natural white or choose from a variety of SHOW KOTE™ decorative cover tints.

69 Business Property, Offices Warehouse Space for Rent

Owning is better than renting.

If you're presently renting retail or office space, you already know some of the disadvantages-frequent cost-of-living rent increases, leases that give the landlord all the advantages, costly sales overrides on your retail sales. In short, you're not in control.

From a pure economic standpoint, ownership beats renting. Consider these advantages:

* You mortgage payments are fixed and not subject to escalation or overrides to a landlord.
* You receive tax deductions for interest and tax payments.
* You get a tax deduction for depreciation over the next 15 years.
* You have control over your space, and no one can cancel your lease.
* You can buy enough space to meet your future growth plans and lease the expansion area until it's needed.
* All maintenance and upkeep is furnished through the Owner's Association.
* Your real estate investment gains value.

In addition to all this, Mission Square is strategically located in one of the city's fastest growing areas; North Big Spring and Loop 250, just northeast of ClayDesta Plaza.

Mission Square is an ideal location for professionals, service businesses, and a variety of retails stores. Contact our office now, for a full color brochure and further details.
