3-year pact averts strike

GM, union agree on contract without deadline

■ Agreement reflects improved labor climate at world's largest automaker.

Associated Press

DETROIT — General Motors Corp. and the United Auto Workers tentatively agreed to a new contract Sunday without ever setting a strike deadline, strong evidence of improved labor relations at the world's largest automaker.

The three-year pact follows a pattern on wages and benefits set between the union and Ford Motor Co. last month. Some Wall Street analysts had said they believed the agreement was too expensive for financially ailing GM.

GM has lost $17 billion making and selling vehicles in North America in the last three years. It is in the process of cutting 74,000 jobs and closing at least 21 plants — a fifth of its factory space — by 1995.

With that backdrop, the labor talks proved peaceful. Most telling was the lack of a strike deadline during negotiations, which began in June and intensified two weeks ago. Labor observers had expected a deadline to be set quickly.

After a 24-hour bargaining session last week, UAW president Owen Bieber asked 400 plant-level union leaders for more time, not a deadline.

"I think it reflects the improvement in the relationship," said John Casesa, an analyst with Wertheim Schroder & Co. "I don't think the sides love each other, but they finally respect each other. They're not diametrically opposed forces anymore."

Irving Bluestone, a former UAW vice president and now a professor of labor studies at Wayne State University in Detroit, said he couldn't think of a time since World War II the UAW had reached a contract without a strike date.

GM won some financial flexibility under the proposed contract in relocating laid-off workers to plants with vacancies. Under the 1990 pact, most laid-off

A Midland woman died Sunday afternoon after the car she was driving collided with a building. Willie Campbell, 90, was pronounced dead at approximately 4:40 p.m. at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, Midland police reported. Ms. Campbell was driving southbound on Abell Hanger Circle at about 4 p.m. when the vehicle failed to properly negotiate the roadway. Police said the failure to follow the road may have been due to a medical problem. The vehicle then struck the residence at 130 Abell Hanger Circle.

Loss of perks, fears of traps put bill on hold

WASHINGTON (AP) — A proposal to ban most gifts by lobbyists to members of Congress — including meals and golf outings — is running into quiet but forceful opposition that has delayed House consideration of lobbying reform.

Lawmakers in both parties have let their House leaders know privately that they don't want to lose certain benefits they now enjoy, said both Democratic and Republican aides, speaking only on condition of anonymity. The issue is politically explosive, and few will talk about it openly.

Other opponents say they fear stricter rules will become a trap for members of Congress who do nothing wrong but become ensnared in technicalities that can be exploited by political opponents.

Still others believe Congress is being stampeded by incorrect public perceptions of high living in Washington, and believe enacting further curbs would amount to an admission of guilt.

Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., had scheduled action on a lobbyist disclosure bill for this week, which was to be designated "reform week" in the House. In line with Foley's plans, the lobbyist bill was set for action in the Judiciary Committee last Thursday.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. John Bryant, D-Texas, was to include a provision barring any gifts by lobbyists — including meals — that total more than $20 per occasion, or more than $50 in a year. The Senate put pressure on the House to act by passing a similar bill in May.

Junior high celebrates community's support of children, education

Although Abell Junior High School has been operating for over six weeks, Midland's new junior high school was dedicated Sunday in front of an audience that included the sister of the school's namesake.

Mrs. Harry Denton, sister of George T. Abell, sat on the front row of about 200 residents who witnessed the dedication ceremony and ribbon-cutting by Midland Independent School District Board President Jack Hightower.

The event included two presentations, including a drawing of the school given to John Younger, president of the board of trustees at the Abell-Hanger Foundation, who in turn gave the school a portrait of George Abell to hang in the front lobby.

MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi called the event "a celebration of community support for its children and for education."

"I am proud to be an administrator in a town that cares as much about its children's education as Midland does," Baressi said. "You will see three

'Screaming Eagles' had to throttle down unit in humanitarian mission

By Karin Miller
Associated Press Writer

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. — Trained to fight under any conditions, to fight better than any enemy, to deploy quickly and hit hard, the soldiers earned the nickname "Screaming Eagles."

But in Somalia, the battlefield rules were changed: The mission was humanitarian, to serve as so-called "peacekeepers," and the airborne unit from the Fort Campbell Army post was under orders not to shoot first.

"That was very stressful," Sgt. Scott Clemons said.

Clemons, 23, spent five months in Somalia as a Blackhawk helicopter crew chief with the 5th Battalion of the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault).

"We would do missions at night and see 20 or 30 armed Somalis walking through the streets," he said. "But unless they engaged you, you were unable

Girl Scouts breaks with tradition, allows members to pledge to their god of choice

By Cate Terwilliger
The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Promising to serve Allah instead of God, or simply to serve, is OK with most Girl Scouts, but some people outside the organization view any tinkering with the traditional pledge as moving a step closer to the proverbial lion's den.

"This is one more organization that has become morally relativistic and that's deeply disappointing," Tom Minnery, a spokesman for Focus on the Family, an evangelical Christian organization based in Colorado Springs, Colo., said Sunday.

The Girl Scouts, whose national convention delegates voted 1,560-375 on Saturday to allow girls to pledge service to the god of their conscience, see the move as embracing spiritual diversity.

While substitutes are now acceptable, the official wording of the promise remains intact. It reads: "On my honor, I will try to serve God and my country, to help people at all times, and to live by the Girl Scout Law."

Minnery said that's exactly the way it should stay — for all girls.

The new flexibility springs from "a rather small movement within the leadership

STATE

Most of Texas had mild temperatures and cloudy skies Sunday, but there was little precipitation.

West Texas skies were mostly sunny and clear Sunday, with temperatures mostly in the 70s. Childress had the area's low at 69, and El Paso reported a high of 78.

Skies should remain clear through Tuesday, but it should be cooler and windy. West Texas lows could dip into the 30s today, and highs were expected in the 70s.

South Texas was cloudy most of the day Sunday, but began clearing in the evening. Afternoon temperatures ranged from the high 60s to the low 80s.

South Texas should see lows in the 40s and highs in the 80s.

North Texas was mostly cloudy Sunday, with the exception of the western portion of the region. Temperatures were in 60s and low 70s.

The southeastern section of North Texas should be cloudy today, but the rest of North Texas should be clear. Highs should be in the high 70s and lows should be in the high 40s.

NATION

Strong wind blew across parts of the Rockies and the Northeast on Sunday, and rain fell in the Southeast.

A large difference in pressure between a high along the East Coast and a low pressure center moving across southeastern Canada generated strong, gusty winds from the eastern Great Lakes into parts of New England, the National Weather Service said.

Southwesterly wind blew at 20 to 35 mph across much of the region, with gusts to 46 mph at Massena, N.Y., and to 48 mph at Buffalo, N.Y.

High wind also blew across northern sections of the Rockies and the Plains, in association with a low pressure center moving into south-central Canada.

In Montana, wind gusted to 54 mph at Great Falls, 52 mph at Havre and 47 mph at Glasgow.

Rain fell across parts of the Southeast during the afternoon, mainly near a frontal boundary stretching across the Florida Peninsula.

Thunderstorms were widely scattered in warm, humid air south of the front in southern Florida.

North of the front, radar showed a few patches of light rain creeping northward across parts of Georgia and Alabama.

Southwesterly wind spread milder air into the Northeast and afternoon temperatures were in the 60s, 10 to 20 degrees warmer than Saturday, from western New York and northern Pennsylvania into western Maine.

Earlier in the day, northern New England was one of the colder regions in the nation with lows mostly in the 20s.

A few places across the Rockies and the Intermountain region also reported lows in the 20s.

Sunday morning's low in the Lower 48 states was 18 degrees at Alamosa, Colo.

workers could reject a job outside a 50-mile radius and continue receiving full pay and benefits.

The union also agreed to have its 241,000 GM workers take two weeks of vacation during a company shutdown. GM had to pay hourly workers $200 million in layoff benefits during the shutdown in the last two weeks of July in 1992 and this year.

A union source who spoke on condition of anonymity said GM will pay for one vacation week and the union the other, in part by forfeiting a $600 Christmas bonus. One of the weeks will include Independence Day. The union won a new paid holiday to around July 4th in 1995 and 1996.

While more job cuts at GM are likely, the company and union expect early retirements to account for the bulk of them. The last such program at GM — again allowed under the new contract — coaxed 16,500 workers to leave early.

"We look forward to maintaining GM's momentum in improving its operating performance in the United States," Gerald Knechtel, GM's vice president of labor relations, said in a statement.

UAW local leaders are expected to meet later this week in Detroit to review the contract agreement. After that, it will be voted on in GM's 150 local bargaining units.

GM was the last stop in the UAW's every-three-years bargaining ritual. It picked Ford as the so-called "target" company, believing the No. 2 automaker would be best able to provide gains in a pattern agreement that GM would not.

Highlights of the contract, which also was adopted by Chrysler Corp., include:

— A 3 percent wage increase in the first year followed by 3 percent lump sum bonuses in the second and third years. Those are the same increases as in the 1990 contract.

— Continuation of fully paid health care benefits. The union had said it would strike if the automakers tried to introduce premiums or increase co-payment levels.

— Increased job and income security funds. At GM, the fund is expected to be about $4 billion, though the changes in laid-off worker relocation should mean GM will use less than the $3.35 billion spent under the 1990 contract.

— Increased pension benefits. Workers who retire after 30 years would receive $2,030 a month by the end of the new contract in 1996, up from $1,800 a month now.

EAGLES: Unit changes for humanitarian mission to engage them."

The goal was clear enough in the beginning — deliver food to starving masses.

It changed in June after 24 Pakistani soldiers in the U.N. force were killed by clan guerrillas. The rules became combat rules and U.S. soldiers were on the alert, but they still couldn't shoot first.

This month, the rules switched back just as suddenly to diplomacy, winning the release of U.S. Army helicopter pilot Michael Durant from his Somali captors. By next March 31, all American troops should be gone.

Who's the enemy? What's the mission? What day is it?

In Operation Desert Storm against Iraq, it was easier to tell the good guys from the bad guys, said Clemons, whose hometown is Kensington, N.H.

"In Somalia, the only real way to determine the enemy was if they were in possession of a weapon," he said. "Lots of times they would shoot at you or engage the aircraft for a few moments and then drop the gun and join the crowd."

"You really can't react to it," said Pfc. Richard Bray, a 21-year-old helicopter door gunner from Indianapolis. "There's nothing you can do."

Clemons and Bray said their unit received no special training for the Somali mission.

But Lt. Col. David H. Petraeus, who helps coordinate training in the 101st, said soldiers sent to Somalia were given special instructions at Fort Campbell and at their destinations.

"They were trained how to react if ambushed and trained on force protection skills and how to protect themselves when they are around an airfield," Petraeus said.

Regular training for soldiers at the 101st now includes urban warfare and dealing with civilians in battle conditions.

The 101st was created in 1942 as a parachute division. The "Screaming Eagles," whose badges bear the profile of an eagle, led the night drop of soldiers before the D-Day invasion of Normandy on June 6, 1944.

The 101st fired the first shots in the Gulf War, flying deep into Iraq and knocking out radar sites to open an air corridor for Air Force bombing runs.

Members of the 101st were among the Fort Campbell contingent that first reported to Somalia on Dec. 26, 1992. Since then, some 1,500 troops from the division have served in the African nation, and more than 900 are stationed there now.

First activated at Camp Clairborne, La., the 101st has been based since 1956 at Fort Campbell, which straddles the Kentucky-Tennessee border. Also calling Fort Campbell home are the 5th Special Forces Group (Airborne) and the 160th Special Operations Aviation Regiment (Airborne).

The 160th is the unit of Durant, who was injured when his Blackhawk assault helicopter was shot down by militiamen loyal to Somali warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid on Oct. 3. Recovering from surgery for injuries, Durant was wheeled out on the airfield tarmac Sunday to meet some comrades at a homecoming ceremony.

LOBBY: Loss of perks slows reform bill

(From 1A)

But Foley's plans were abruptly put on hold last week after Democratic and Republican leaders met privately to discuss the matter. Instead, each party formed a four-person task force to take soundings from its membership.

The first such meeting, with about 70 Democrats present, was Thursday. Some asked "Why are you trying to do this to us?" one official close to the issue said. The most vociferous objections came from what members have dubbed "the golf caucus," a group of lawmakers who enjoy expense-paid golf outings and don't want them curtailed.

Some say while they see no widespread ethics abuses, the public is demanding more assurances, and should get them.

Rep. Bruce Vento, D-Minn., acknowledged that he has in the past accepted such things as football tickets that would be ruled out under the proposed new rules. Others might have to give up gifts such as expensive bottles of wine, rounds of golf or fancy boxes of candy.

"We are in a political environment in which we didn't set the table," Vento said. "Nobody is going to be selling their votes for a $25 dinner. But the public sees these as special benefits that are not available to the average person. It's time to deal with this."

Rep. Eric Fingerhut, an Ohio freshman who is helping push reform initiatives, said he doesn't believe opponents will be able to derail the bill.

"The majority of the House knows and understands that we have to take extraordinary measures to address the public's concern," he said. The bill is now scheduled to come up the week of Nov. 8.

Divisions on the gift issue reflect a split between younger lawmakers — including the 110-member freshman class — who are acutely aware of public dissatisfaction and were elected on reform platforms, and some veteran members who see the move as driven by irrational fears.

But whatever their position, House members know that any restriction seen as a reform move will pass overwhelmingly if it gets to the floor. No lawmaker can afford to be seen as casting a vote to defend the perks or high lifestyle of a Congress which already is held in low esteem by the public.

Asked about the delay, Foley acknowledged "a strong bipartisan feeling on the part of many members that you ... should not include meals" under any revised gift limits. He voiced fears that reform mania could lead Congress to what he considers ridiculous extremes.

"Then it gets down to saying if you're having a conversation with someone who is a lobbyist, and he said, 'Would you like a cup of coffee?' we have to say, 'No, we can't accept coffee from lobbyists.'"

Foley added: "Lobbyists are not evil people in my view. They perform an important function." Current gift rules, which were revised in 1992, "function very well, and personally I do not think there is any great need to change them," Foley said.

Current rules say no lawmaker may receive gifts worth more than $250 from any source in a year, but anything worth less than $100 doesn't count toward the limit. Only gifts worth more than $100 must be disclosed.

CHANGE: Some don't agree with break from tradition

that is trying to act on what it sees as a politically correct position," he said.

Dean Gupta, a Hindu board member of Geeta Ashram Church in Brooklyn Park, Minn., said the word "God" is not exclusively Christian.

"Saying the word 'God' I think creates some kind of uniformity," Gupta said. "Lately, with crime and other things ... the word 'God' might be a little bit of a calming influence."

But such pleas for uniformity often translate into something less benign, according to a theology professor from Georgetown University in Washington, D.C.

"God does not stand in for everything," Diana Hayes said. "That's like saying 'man' stands in for everybody, which we have discovered is not true also. ... Often, uniformity is in the mouth of those who believe that their understanding should be the one everyone should accommodate."

Hayes, a former Girl Scout, said the organization's decision "opens the gates to young women who can benefit from being Girl Scouts and the values of Girl Scouting without having to give up the values of their own culture as well."

Ed Sellner, a St. Paul, Minn., theologian, likened the more flexible promise to the broad concept of a "higher power" used by Alcoholics Anonymous.

Flexibility "attracts many people who might disagree theologically with each other in an understanding of God, but in terms of practice and in terms of ideals, could work together," said Sellner, director of the master of arts in theology program at the College of St. Catherine.

The Girl Scouts, modeled on the British Girl Guides, were founded in 1912. The preamble to the group's constitution lays out a spiritual motivating force, but has never defined that force as Judeo-Christian.

Like the Girl Scouts, the Boy Scouts of America have always pledged service or duty to God. The organizations are separate, a spokesman for the Irving, Texas-based organization said, and the Boy Scouts have no plans to tinker with their oath.

Boy Scouts will continue to say the word 'God," Richard Walker said. But "we understand that that may mean something different for you than it does for another scout. ...The deity is between the scouts and their parents."

plaques dedicated to three separate school boards as you came in. In 1989, when the district went to single-member districts, the board developed some goals for long-range planning. Today is the culmination of one of the major projects in that long-range planning."

Baressi said the board visited with other junior highs and studied different architects in an effort to provide a school that was cost-effective.

"Regardless of how pretty this is or how much it cost, it is the people that are going to make it a success," Baressi said. "To the faculty and staff and students of this school — the community supports you and the school system is very proud of you."

Abell Principal David Adams, who emceed the program, announced that 45 percent of the school's students made the A/B honor roll during its first six weeks of operation.

"This staff and its 825 students are already setting a proud example," he said.

Virtual reality: It's not just fun, games

NEW YORK (AP) — There's a string quartet playing this week in the lobby of a New York museum.

Big deal, happens all the time, you might think.

But you can walk up and touch these musicians. Or place your ear really close to their instruments. They won't mind, and no one will see you do it.

That's because they're not real. They're virtual.

The Guggenheim Museum's Soho gallery for the next week is exhibiting five examples of virtual reality. Visitors don headsets and gloves to enter computer-generated worlds where the rules of movement and space and even simple manners disappear.

The concept of virtual reality, or VR, has been around for 25 years. However, only a few companies and government agencies could afford it and only the most tenacious computer explorers dabbled in it otherwise.

But VR today is where video games were 15 years ago, on the verge of popular familiarity.

A number of companies plan to put virtual reality games in video arcades next year. Sega of America will sell a VR helmet that attaches to the company's home video game system.

And a new casino in Las Vegas has a theater in which an audience of several hundred "rides" through a virtual pyramid, chasing kidnappers.

But the Guggenheim exhibit is meant to show that VR can be more than a hyperventilated space race.

"Virtual reality initially got the buzz of being this super video game," said Kevin Teixeira, virtual reality project manager for Intel Corp., which is sponsoring the exhibit. "In fact it's a very powerful way of using computers for many uses."

VR teaches pilots how to fly and tank drivers how to maneuver. It has shown university researchers characteristics of the galaxy that couldn't be gleaned from telescopes or two-dimensional graphical displays.

And it's now opening up a new field in the world of art.

"It's not unusual in the history of art and visual arts that artists would be exploring the use of every new medium that is available to them," said Michael Govan, deputy director of the Guggenheim.

The museum's interest in VR was spurred by contemporary artist Jenny Holzer, who has gained fame for putting eclectic messages on scoreboards and other electronic message systems.

Holzer developed two programs for the exhibit, one inspired by the strife in the former Yugoslavia. The participant wanders through an abandoned virtual village. When he or she walks into a house or building, the voice of a soldier, rape victim or observer is heard.

"What's nice about this is there aren't even laws of physics other than what you decide," she said.

Musician Thomas Dolby, whose techno-pop song "She Blinded Me With Science" was popular a decade ago, created the virtual string quartet exhibit.

As technology and communication companies provide new interactive games and other products, Dolby worries that their first efforts will exclude many older people.

"I think it's very important to grab a stake in this new technology for the other half of the world," Dolby said. "We're not all teen-age boys."

The exhibit seems an obvious project for technology companies such as Time Warner Inc. and Sony Corp. that also own movie and record studios and have access to artists.

But Intel, the world's largest maker of the chips that run personal computers, pulled it together as part of a program to put advanced technology in the hands of artists and small businesses.

The company benefits from new ideas for computer uses and, through the public exhibit, gets to show off the power of its latest chip, called Pentium, since the programs are run on desktop personal computers.

Report: 2nd Hutchison aide to assist prosecutors

DALLAS (AP) — The second of two aides indicted along with U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison says he will assist prosecutors in their investigation of alleged wrongdoing within the state Treasury, according to a published report.

Chris Gunter, an attorney for former Deputy Treasurer Michael Barron, says his client will cooperate with Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle in his probe of the Treasury under Mrs. Hutchison.

"He has cooperated up to this point and intends to cooperate fully and completely," Gunter said in Sunday's editions of The Dallas Morning News.

Another indicted Hutchison aide, David Criss, said in published reports Saturday that he "won't be the scapegoat" and also would cooperate with prosecutors.

Mrs. Hutchison, 50, was indicted last month on charges of using state employees and equipment for political purposes while serving as state treasurer, then destroying records as part of a cover-up.

She resigned her 2½-year tenure as treasurer after winning landslide election to Lloyd Bentsen's vacated Senate seat June 5 over Democrat Bob Krueger.

Criss and Barron also were indicted on charges of official misconduct.

Their promises to help in the Treasury probe come just days after Earle announced he would seek to throw out the indictments because a grand juror was found to be ineligible.

Earle, a Democrat, said he would pursue re-indictments from a second grand jury.

Gunter said he hopes that Barron's cooperation will mean he won't be indicted a second time. However, he would not say whether he was trying to negotiate immunity from prosecution in return for his client's testimony.

Barron maintains that he had computer and telephone records destroyed on orders from Mrs. Hutchison. The senator contends the records belonged to her and not the state.

Criss, who resigned last year as Treasury planning director, has admitted he did political work for Mrs. Hutchison on state time. He also contends Mrs. Hutchison lied when she said she didn't know about his activities.

Mrs. Hutchison has denied any wrongdoing.

Mrs. Hutchison's attorney, Dick DeGuerin, said Saturday that no documents were destroyed illegally under the senator. He said the only records ordered erased from the agency's computers were documents that should not have been there in the first place.

"Because records are discarded doesn't mean there has been a violation of the law," DeGuerin said.

DeGuerin said Barron's testimony is "no problem" because there was no legal obligation to keep the documents that were ordered destroyed.

He acknowledged that some computer records were ordered erased from the agency's central memory bank. However, he said removing them was not against the law.

"First the state says it's a crime to put personal business on a computer, then they say it's a crime to take it off," he said. "For them, a year and a half later, to claim that this was destruction of records is politics in its purest form."

Mrs. Hutchison, a Republican, has maintained the district attorney's investigation is a Democratic conspiracy to derail her political career. Earle, whose office carries the responsibility of investigating state officials, said his office is merely doing its job.

Margraves, A&M vice president wined, dined by company

AUSTIN (AP) — After landing a $10 million contract to operate Texas A&M University's bookstore, the winning company paid for top school officials to travel to New York to complete the deal, putting them up in expensive hotels and providing limousine service, meals and Broadway show tickets.

Regents Chairman Ross Margraves acknowledged Sunday that Barnes and Nobel Bookstores Inc. paid for at least four trips, but said there was nothing wrong with the practice.

"As far as I know, that (the trips) was standard procedure," Margraves told The Associated Press. "My general counsel was fully aware and my board of regents was fully aware. They were not secret trips . . . . I have to assume they were legitimate. As a fairly astute person on ethics, I don't see anything wrong with that."

Sarah Woelk, of the Ethics Commission, which monitors state business and political campaigns, said Sunday, "Trips were not illegal under the lobby law in 1990. The law is much more restrictive now. A lot of trips that were legal then are illegal now."

Robert Smith, who oversees all contract negotiations for Texas A&M, and Margraves were flown in Barnes and Noble's corporate jet to sign the contract in mid-July 1990, Margraves said.

"Barnes and Noble has bought me plane tickets to New York before," said Margraves, a Houston attorney. "When Robert Smith and I were negotiating, they picked up hotel and business expenses. And let me say there is not a damn thing wrong with that. That's common practice."

Smith declined to discuss any expenses Barnes and Nobel may have paid.

"I don't know that there was any of that (expenses being paid) in the decision-making process," Smith said. "I don't want to say we didn't have dinner."

When pressed further, Smith said, "I am not going to be interviewed about this."

During one of the trips Margraves said he took to New York earlier this year, groundwork was laid for a contract extension signed in June that could pay the book company as much as $25 million in net sales.

Margraves said the travel was for legitimate business and posed no conflict of interest because the earliest trip was taken after Barnes and Noble had been selected to run the bookstore.

Several A&M officials have said the Barnes and Noble agreement was a winner for the school because the company agreed to pay $800,000 in bookstore renovations, guarantee millions of dollars to the university and provide student and textbook scholarships.

Alan Kahn, who is chief of the college division for Barnes and Noble in New York, did not return phone calls on Friday and was unreachable on Sunday.

Calls to the company's headquarters went unanswered Sunday.

Kahn was aboard the jet, which picked up Margraves and Smith at the university's College Station airstrip, Margraves said.

"Barnes and Noble normally has a car pick me up," Margraves said. "Sometimes I have taken a taxi. Sometimes I have taken a limo. That's customary when we go on bond business. They had show tickets, but I have probably been to one play in the past five years."

Margraves said the bookstore company has put him up at the Waldorf Astoria and the New York Helmsley Hotel, considered two of the city's finest hotels with rates roughly $200 a night.

The president and a vice president of the University of Oklahoma resigned this year following an internal personnel investigation that found, among other things, conflicts of interest arising from four trips paid all or in part by Barnes and Noble.

Both President Richard Van Horn and vice president for administrative affairs Art Elbert denied the investigation affected their reasons for stepping down.

Barnes and Noble signed a contract to run the OU bookstore in 1990, the same year the company signed the deal for A&M's bookstore.

The Texas Rangers are investigating allegations made in an anonymous letter that Margraves may have directly benefited from several of the A&M System's business deals.

Margraves said he had been appointed in 1990 by then-A&M System regents chair William McKenzie to study the privatizing of the bookstore and assist in ironing out a deal. Margraves, who won election as chair of the regents in March 1991, said the full board knew his trips were being paid for by Barnes and Noble.

"I was aware of it," said board of regents vice chairman Raul B. Fernandez, who like Margraves was appointed to the board by then-Gov. William Clements in 1989.

"Either they can come here or we can go there. We have two options, they can pay or we can pay. Is there a conflict of interest? Anybody could have any kind of perception they want, depending on what they want to portray of a person giving his time. Frankly, given the individuals involved and the integrity involved, there is not a problem."

James Bond, who served as deputy chancellor and general counsel for the A&M System in 1990 and is currently interim general counsel, said, "Each situation needs to be judged on its own merits.

Bond is currently heading an internal inquiry into the allegations leveled against Margraves in the anonymous letter.

Fernandez defended his fellow regent Margraves against any questions of conflict of interest.

"That gentleman makes a lot of money as an attorney," Fernandez said. "When he takes time for A&M, he is cutting into his business. It's a great sacrifice for people who do those kinds of things and for them to get whacked, I don't understand the process."

Custody battle ignites over twin daughters of AIDS victim

HOUSTON (AP) — They lost their father to AIDS. Their mother, who also had contracted the virus, committed suicide.

Now, twin 5-year-old girls are caught in the middle of a legal battle in which judges in Texas and Minnesota have awarded custody of the girls to different parties.

Five months before his death Sept. 2, Rob Schlaepfer had a will drawn up that called for his daughters to be raised by a couple in Duluth, Minn., who had become the twins' foster parents. It was to replace an earlier will in which the girls' paternal grandmother was named as guardian.

The girls, Felicia and Natasha, currently are living with Phyllis Durichek, their grandmother and Schlaepfer's mother, who took the twins from Minnesota back to Houston following her son's death. The Minnesota couple is fighting to get them back.

Schlaepfer was living in Duluth when he was diagnosed with the AIDS virus. His daughters, who have tested negative for the HIV virus, were only 6 months old.

The disease was passed to his wife, who killed herself with an overdose of methadone in 1990.

As the disease continued to take its toll on Schlaepfer, an older couple became foster parents to the twins. They would care for them whenever their father and mother needed a break. Those foster parents were eventually replaced by Kandi Geary, a teacher at the school the twins attended, and her husband, Lance Rhicard.

They say they became such close friends that Schlaepfer eventually asked them to consider raising his daughters after his death.

"He talked about it with his counselors, his social workers, his friends," Rhicard recalled. "I don't know what prompted him to finally ask us. He loved our family very much, and we cared deeply for him. He knew that his girls loved us, and we loved his girls."

Rhicard says Schlaepfer was firm in his decision to leave the twins with him and his wife.

Schlaepfer's mother and stepfather, however, dispute that notion. They say Schlaepfer even refused a request to sign over custody of his children to Geary and Rhicard.

"He was getting upset," recalled Schlaepfer's brother, Rick, who supports his mother in the custody dispute. "He didn't hardly have the energy to talk, but he was telling them right out he wasn't going to sign it."

The family says Schlaepfer's refusal to sign the papers is a repudiation of the will that called for the twins to be left with Geary and Rhicard.

Rhicard disagrees, saying Schlaepfer refused to sign the papers because he could not let go of his children while he was still alive.

"His girls had kept him alive," Rhicard said. "They had given him the hope and the strength to fight his disease, and by signing that, he just didn't want to give up."

On Sept. 15, a Houston judge named Mrs. Durichek the sole managing conservator of the twins. Meanwhile, a judge in Duluth has granted temporary custody to Geary and Rhicard.

The legal battle is expected to continue for months, and both sides remain resolute.

"I love these kids. They're my own flesh and blood," says Mrs. Durichek.

BRADY (AP) — McCulloch County authorities were searching for the mother of a newborn baby whose body, wrapped in plastic bags, was found on the side of a road.

A landowner told authorities he discovered the body Saturday afternoon while he was cleaning up around a vacant house near a farm road just northwest of Brady,

The McCulloch County sheriff's department said the baby was wrapped in towels, then placed inside several plastic bags and dumped in weeds.

Election takes back seat to World Series victory

TORONTO (AP) — Why worry about politics when you've won the World Series?

Even party leaders, wrapping up seven weeks of campaigning for Monday's general election, joined in the celebrations for the Toronto Blue Jays' victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Those seeking proper perspective could consult the Toronto Star on Sunday. Its entire front page was devoted to the Blue Jays' Saturday night feat. Election coverage was on page 10-11.

"That home run was just unbelievable, out of this world," Prime Minister Kim Campbell said, referring to outfielder Joe Carter's three-run game-winning blast in the bottom of the ninth. "The whole country is airborne."

But Ms. Campbell's party faces an abrupt landing. After nine years in power, her Progressive Conservatives could find themselves in the street when the dust settles from Monday's vote.

The most likely outcome was victory for Jean Chretien's Liberal Party, although it was unclear if the Liberals had enough support to win a majority in the 295-seat House of Commons.

The leader of the party with the most seats in the House becomes prime minister, whether or not the party has a majority. Minority government does not necessarily mean chaos in Ottawa, however. There have been nine minority governments since 1921, though none has lasted the full five-year term.

The latest polls showed the Liberals ahead, with Ms. Campbell's Progressive Conservatives a distant second.

The Western-based Reform Party was third, followed closely by the separatist Bloc Quebecois. The socialist New Democratic party was a distant fifth.

The final day of the campaign was overshadowed by the Blue Jays' victory, which set off wild celebrations across Canada. Politicians, heading to their home districts to await the vote, joined in.

Chretien sent a letter to Blue Jays' manager Cito Gaston saying Toronto's second World Series title in a row was "a source of great pride for the city of Toronto and all of Canada."

Ms. Campbell called the win "fabulous."

The 1993 campaign has been fought largely on economic issues, particularly jobs in a country where 11.2 percent of the work force is unemployed.

Ms. Campbell's promise to eliminate Canada's $26 billion budget deficit, allowing the economy to revive and create jobs on its own, seemed a little too vague and long-term to many Canadians.

Chretien's $4.5 billion public works plan was, if uninspiring, at least something voters could consider.

If the Liberals were poised to win power in Ottawa, it was less clear which of the five main parties contesting the election would become the official opposition. That status, which brings additional funding and privileges in the Commons, goes to the party finishing second.

The fear among many Canadians was that the separatist Bloc Quebecois, which is expected to take most of Quebec's 75 seats, could fill that role. That would mean the official opposition in the Parliament would be a party dedicated to breaking up the country.

Because the Bloc is running only in Quebec, its support is concentrated and its potential clout is great. Bloc support translates into 12 percent to 14 percent nationally but it has the backing of around 50 percent in Quebec.

Bloc leader Lucien Bouchard has said his party would not be obstructive in the Commons, but would work diligently on issues of concern to his French-speaking province. Not everyone believes him.

The Bloc Quebecois and the western-based Reform Party are politically conservative and are siphoning off votes from mainstream Conservatives.

There have been suggestions that the Conservatives and Reform might join forces to prevent the Quebec separatists from forming the official opposition, But both Ms. Campbell and Reform leader Preston Manning poohpoohed the idea.

"As far as I'm concerned, the idea of an opposition coalition is a non-starter," Ms. Campbell said in a speech in British Columbia. "The only alternative to a Jean Chretien government is a Kim Campbell government."

Berlin receives memorabilia from Marlene Dietrich's life

BERLIN (AP) — Love notes from Ernest Hemingway, a U.S. Army uniform and about 100,000 other memorabilia from Marlene Dietrich's life were returned Sunday to her hometown, where they will be enshrined at a movie museum.

Maria Riva, daughter and sole heir of the film legend who died last year, sold the possessions to Berlin for $5 million. She said she preferred to display the collection in one place rather than scatter it among fans.

Ms. Riva came to the German capital to hand over the collection in a ceremony at the Deutches Theater. The items are not expected to be on display for several years.

Along with glamorous film costumes came the olive-drab uniform Miss Dietrich wore while entertaining U.S. troops who were fighting her countrymen. Miss Dietrich left Germany and became a U.S. citizen during World War II. She died in Paris at age 90.

Ulrich Roloff-Momin, the city's culture director, said Miss Dietrich had been "the greatest woman of Berlin." As symbols of the full collection, he accepted two dolls that the actress used in early films, a black doll from "The Blue Angel" and a Chinese doll from "Morocco."

Werner Sudendorf, head of the German Cinema Foundation, said it would take several years to read all the letters in the collection and catalog the items. The film museum where the collection will be displayed is not expected to open before 1998.

ANC leader challenges black rival on his own turf

DURBAN, South Africa (AP) — Flanked by Zulu dignitaries in leopard skins and blessed by traditional healers, ANC leader Nelson Mandela asserted his authority Sunday in the home base of his chief black rival.

Addressing a mostly Zulu crowd of 60,000 people in this Indian Ocean Port in Natal Province, Mandela said: "It is the ANC that calls the shots."

The enthusiastic turnout was a defeat for Zulu leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi's Inkatha Freedom Party, which had told supporters to stay away.

Several people at the rally said they braved intimidation by Inkatha to attend the Sonke ("All of Us") rally. News reports said minor confrontations occurred, but no injuries or arrests were reported.

In the nine days since he won the Nobel Peace Prize with President F.W. de Klerk, the African National Congress leader has mounted a political offensive, first criticizing de Klerk, then challenging Buthelezi in his own back yard.

Mandela said he is determined to go forward with the the country's first multiracial election, on April 27, despite opposition by conservative blacks and whites.

Mandela blamed de Klerk last week on national television for "the killing of children" in a raid on a supposed terrorist base in the Transkei black homeland.

He also opposed de Klerk's idea of a referendum on an interim constitution before the April election. The ANC sees the referendum is a ploy by de Klerk's National Party to delay the vote, which the ANC is expected to win.

Buthelezi, who is chief minister of the KwaZulu homeland in Natal and claims to have the backing of the 7 million Zulus, wants guarantees that his territory will be autonomous in post-apartheid South Africa.

He also argues political violence that claims thousands of black lives each year makes free and fair voting impossible. Much of the political violence has been in Natal, pitting Zulu ANC supporters against Zulu Inkatha backers.

Buthelezi has allied himself with pro-apartheid whites who also oppose the election and want an autonomous white homeland. Leaders of two nominally independent black homelands — Ciskei and Bophuthatswana — also seek to retain their power instead of coming under an ANC-led government.

Mandela, a Xhosa, has dismissed election opponents as "spoilers" and illegitimate "creations of apartheid" who oppose democracy. He visited Durban to show he was even more popular than Buthelezi among Zulus.

"The festival is clearly a Trojan horse for (the ANC's) political agenda," said Inkatha spokesman Ziba Jiyane.

The slogan of the rally was, "Many Cultures — One Nation," and Mandela reminded the crowd of Zulu contributions to the ANC's history, from the organization's first honorary president in 1913 to Chief Albert Luthuli, the late ANC president who won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1960.

While never mentioning Buthelezi by name, which the Inkatha leader would consider an insult, Mandela spoke against those who would "distort history" by implying that South Africans had not become one nation.

Zwelithini, the Zulu king, turned down an invitation to the rally, and traditional healer Patience Koluko said many of the Zulu "sangomas," or healers, stayed away because of Inkatha pressure.

But she said "the ancestors" had approved the gathering.

"We came here because we want peace," she said, clutching a handful of herbs to be burned in Mandela's honor. "We want all of us to be united."

Shiite guerrillas attack Israeli security post; 2 attackers die

MARJAYOUN, Lebanon (AP) — Iranian-backed guerrillas attacked Israel's self-styled security zone in southern Lebanon on Sunday with rocket-propelled grenades and automatic rifles.

Security sources said two attackers were killed and three Israeli soldiers inside an armored personnel carrier were wounded. The Israeli army confirmed the deaths of the guerrillas and said one Israeli soldier was seriously wounded, while making no mention of any other Israeli casualties.

The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said that hours later six Katyusha rockets crashed near villages close to Marjayoun, which is the headquarters of the Israeli-backed South Lebanon Army militia.

No one took responsibility for the Katyusha attacks, but the rockets were fired from the Apple Province, the major south Lebanon stronghold of Hezbollah, or Party of God.

Israeli and SLA gunners retaliated with a massive artillery barrage on the Apple Province, the sources said. Israeli helicopter gunships also flew repeated strafing runs over the pine-wooded province, where several forest fires broke out.

The sources said the shelling was the heaviest in the region since Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization signed a peace accord Sept. 13.

The flareup came two days after U.S. State Department envoy Dennis Ross wound up a Middle East swing designed to promote a 12th round of Arab-Israeli peace talks.

The sources said the Shiite Muslim guerrillas blasted the posts of Sojod and Ghizlan in the security zone's eastern sector with rocket-propelled grenades and automatic rifles.

The Islamic Resistance, the military wing of Hezbollah, said its guerrillas destroyed the Israeli armored personnel carrier, a truck and a bulldozer, "inflicting many enemy casualties."

On Saturday, three Israeli-backed militiamen were wounded when Shiite guerrillas attacked an SLA outpost north of the zone, provoking howitzer and mortar duels.

Hostilities flare almost daily in the volatile region to protest the Israel-PLO accord, which is bitterly opposed by Iran and its main Lebanon ally, Hezbollah, as well as 10 radical Palestinian groups allied with Syria.

Why does Israel arm its enemies?

Israel is expanding its cooperation with China on military technology, according to the CIA. That's the latest sign of Israeli willingness to engage in dubious arms deals. In this case, Israel is supplying China with advanced technology that the U.S. and other Western powers won't supply.

In the past, compelling security needs drove an isolated Israel to forge alliances of convenience with outcasts like South Africa and Iran, sometimes with U.S. connivance.

But why would Israel engage in such risky trade now — especially with a country that has armed Israel's sworn enemies like Iran? Washington, Israel's protector, should demand a good answer before supplying its ally with more advanced military technology.

The Rand Corp. reported two years ago that Israel became "China's leading foreign supplier of advanced technology" after the 1989 Tiananmen massacre. The sales included missile technology like a new PL-8 air-to-air and air-to-surface missile and improvements in the CSS-2 ballistic missiles that China sold to Saudi Arabia.

Rand also detected "indications" that Israel had helped the Chinese develop a new fighter plane with technology from the canceled Lavi fighter. The U.S. originally supplied some of that technology.

In August, the General Accounting Office warned that the transfer of U.S. technology to Israel for developing the Arrow antimissile interceptor was inadequately supervised, raising the risk of possible diversion to third countries. Israel has repeatedly denied any such diversion.

Given the close cooperation between the two allies, it's often difficult to know exactly when Israeli designers develop an original device or when they produce a knockoff of a U.S. design.

The CIA, in answer to questions from a Senate committee, was circumspect about whether the military technology Israel was transferring to China was Israel's own or had originated in the U.S.

But it offered an unusually blunt public assessment of "broadening" Israeli-Chinese cooperation, noting that "a growing number of Israeli defense firms" are opening offices in China.

Israel's burgeoning cooperation with China is puzzling in the wake of progress in autonomy talks with the Palestinians and the prospect of peace with all its next-door neighbors.

There's no new indication that Israel is reselling U.S. military technology in violation of U.S. law. Even so, a further puzzle persists: Why does Israel do business with a country that endangers its security by arming Iran, Pakistan and others?

INS lack of knowledge on blockade astounding

Attorney General Janet Reno said so herself: The Immigration and Naturalization Service is a "stepchild" agency. The problems surrounding illegal immigration have been ignored by Washington for such a long time that the INS receives little direction from the capital.

It should be no surprise, then, that Attorney General Reno didn't know about the so-called border blockade by the U.S. Border Patrol in El Paso, Texas, before it happened. The Border Patrol is a branch of the INS, which is under the Justice Department. . . .

That Washington knew nothing about the blockade, which had political reverberations in the United States and Mexico, is astounding. It shows a singular lack of concern and communication between the top levels of the Justice Department and Border Patrol agents in the field.

Vidor's biased racial history should be left in murky past

It wasn't much of a surprise when U.S. District Judge Richard A. Schell ruled that something called the Nationalist Movement would be allowed to hold a parade and rally in Vidor. The First Amendment to the Constitution guarantees freedom of speech — even to the characters who have crawled here from Mississippi to spread their message of divisiveness and distortion.

While these goons are "celebrating" the (temporary) end of efforts to integrate public housing in Vidor, the people of Southeast Texas shouldn't give them the attention they crave.

In the spirit of the late Bill Simpson, the gentle giant who was driven out of Vidor by prejudice only to be gunned down in Beaumont, Vidor and all of Southeast Texas must show that the area's history of racial bias is just that — something that belongs in the past.

Many question U.S. support of Aristide

WASHINGTON — As the Clinton administration tightens the noose around Haiti, troubling questions remain about the man in the middle, exiled Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

Anderson

As Haiti's first democratically elected leader, Aristide arrived as a beacon of hope in a nation that's been ruled by a long line of despots. After retreating from his campaign pledge to halt the repatriation of Haitian refugees, Clinton has been lobbied by the Congressional Black Caucus and others to make Aristide's return a top priority.

During the Bush administration, the attitude toward Haiti was far more ambivalent. Publicly, the administration never wavered from its support of Aristide, but privately, reservations about the exiled leader grew as time wore on.

We have kept a close watch on Aristide since he was deposed in a September 1991 coup. Despite his shortcomings, he remains the best hope for a democratic Haiti. Under his rule, political violence and human rights abuses dropped significantly. He talks the talk of democracy. Unfortunately, he also sometimes walks the walk of a demagogue.

"How can you support someone who thinks putting a rubber tire and lighting it around somebody's neck is a way to deal with your political opponents?" Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., recently asked about Clinton's efforts to restore Aristide.

"That's an outrageous and vicious lie that's being spread by the Republicans and there's no evidence of it," said an outraged Rep. Charles Rangle, D-N.Y., in response.

Indeed, some of the charges being spread by Aristide's critics lack supporting evidence. But one incident, which we first reported last year, speaks volumes about the ambivalence that greets Aristide among many in foreign policy circles.

The circumstances surrounding the murder of Aristide opponent Roger Lafontant were murky from the start. Less than a month after Aristide's election, Lafontant tried to forcibly take power.

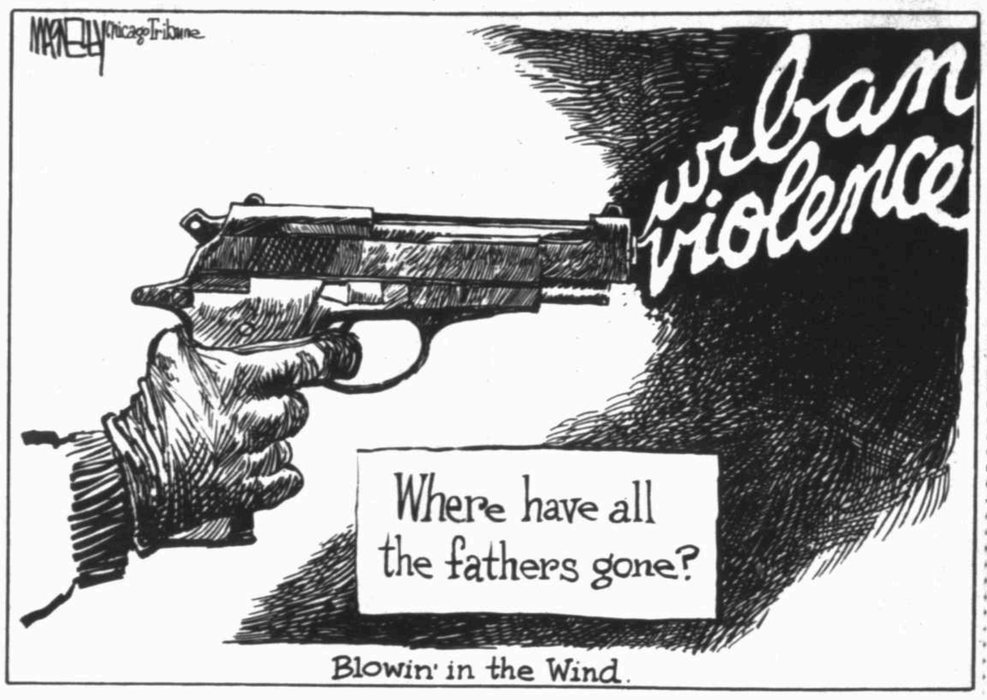

In a trial that was marred by death threats from Aristide's supporters, Lafontant was convicted for his role in the coupe attempt and sentenced to a life of hard labor. But, Lafontant's execution in his prison cell, only hours before Aristide was deposed, raised even more troublesome questions. At a post-coup news conference, Haitian Gen. Raoul Cedras read a sworn affidavit from Capt. Stagne Doura alleging that the order to kill Lafontant came directly from Aristide.

On Sept. 1, 1992, an FBI polygraph expert secretly flew to Haiti to administer a lie detector test to Doura, who was still in jail. Doura passed the test.

Though a polygraph test is not proof of guilt or innocence, the results were clearly stunning to Bush administration officials. They immediately began to distance themselves from Aristide, and let word of the probe leak to the press. In response to a past column, Aristide's ambassador to the United States denied that Aristide or anyone in his government was linked to the murder and dismissed the allegations as an attempt to discredit Aristide. Roger Lafontant's widow is now suing Aristide in a U.S. court for $10 million in damages she says she suffered as a result of her husband's murder.

These disturbing allegations merit further investigation before Americans are put in harm's way.

Officials send men to die in distant places

The last time the United States was attacked was December 7, 1941. Since that attack — successfully answered in a war wrapped up in 1945 — over 100,000 young Americans have been killed overseas in battles with people who had not attacked the U.S.

Reese

The last time the United States Congress declared war was on Dec. 8, 1941. The more than 100,000 young people who have died since have died without their country being at war. They have been sent to die in distant places by presidents acting without constitutional authority.

The Congress has been cowardly silent, trying to obfuscate the issue and evade its responsibility, as if there were anything at all unclear about the sentence in the Constitution: "Congress shall have the power to declare war."

Too often the public has swallowed the political swill poured down their throats by politicians trying to justify the sacrifice of American lives for weird, bonehead or private reasons. These cruel politicians put people into the position of either accepting their unconstitutional and morally and strategically unjustified wars or appearing to be disloyal to the young men and women dying in them.

Political swill can be recognized by its high level of abstraction. Now that's not a difficult concept. Language can go from a low to a high level of abstraction. If I say, "I wish to help Jack Smith rebuild his house on Maple Street," that's an example of a very low level of abstraction. I refer to specific acts and to specific people and places. You know exactly what I'm saying.

High-level abstraction would be a statement such as this, "We Americans should help human beings realize their dreams." That statement, which refers to no particular acts and to no particular people, is really meaningless, which is why politicians love to talk at that level. In the speech-writing trade it's called "blue-skying it." On the street, it's called bull-you-know-what.

That's how politicians justify the unjustifiable. In honest language, it's impossible to justify Americans being killed in Somalia because no matter how long they stay, no matter how many millions we spend, no concrete benefits will accrue to the American people from the operation.

So it becomes, according to President Clinton, a matter of America's leadership, of doing the right thing, of finishing the job, etc., and so forth. Swill. Bull. Meaningless talk. Ditto, sending Americans to Haiti, which hasn't had a decent government since they slaughtered the French in the 18th century.

We, the people, should never consent to our sons and daughters being sent into battle without a declaration of war by Congress, as our Constitution dictates. Their lives, however, will continue to be spent on wasted causes in unconstitutional actions by these sorry politicians until the American people direct their wrath toward the political process. And, frankly, also toward those touts and shills who try to rationalize it.

I'm by no means a pacifist and I served in the Army, but I have discouraged my children everytime the subject of military service has come up. I have the greatest respect for the honorable profession of arms, but I have no respect for the politicians who abuse it.

Don't forget the Americans in Somalia who were killed because Secretary of Defense Les Aspin denied requests made weeks earlier for heavy armor. Aspin was a protege of the worst public official in American history, former Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara of Bay of Pigs and Vietnam fame. Aspin has shown bad judgment. He is extremely clever, bright and arrogant, but he isn't wise.

When Americans are in combat, a wise civilian will listen to the professional soldier. But the Aspins, McNamaras and Clintons never do.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Fashionable words make speech seamless

At the Pentagon, the vogue word is win-win, the strategy of being able to fight two non-nuclear wars at the same time. This supplanted the "win-hold-win" strategy, designed to hold one war on a back burner until the other war is won, then to win the first one. These locutions are based on the "no win" derogation of strategy of a generation ago, which in turn was antedated by a slick "no lose" bet by gamblers.

Safire

In academe, the vogue word is daunting. A professor may be intimidated, cowed, appalled or even spooked by the lengthy work of a colleague (which is what a co-worker is always called), but the only term to use this year is the present participle of daunt (rooted in the Latin for "tame"), as in "The subtext is daunting." (Sighted subtext; sank same.)

In politics, feckless is still in vogue — the feck has the same root as the middle of ineffective — though we've been getting a nice run of parlous lately (better dangerous than feckless). Seamless is in, too, meaning "smooth," as in "a seamless presentation of the condition on the ground."

In music, Thomas J. Famularo of Brooklyn, N.Y., signs on with the vogue use of signature. Recent New York Times articles have commented on the musician Billy Joel "with his piano adding a personal signature" and a revival of the musical "On the Town," with "that exuberant signature love song to a town: 'New York, New York.' "

What are the words in fashion in fashion? More than anywhere, that is the field in which same-old-same-old — the vogue derogation of anything un-new on campus — is to be avoided. Life in the fast lane is for slowpokes; to live on the cutting edge has been cut to living on the edge. People in the fashion world (which, to their credit, they don't call "the fashion community") wouldn't be caught dead using a word like seamless (which originated in the leg community), because the trend is toward taking metaphors from the anti-fashion world.

The linguistic question in fashion is: Have we come at last to the post-grunge era?

Grungy is a 1960s adjective defined by Robert K. Barnhart in his etymological dictionary as "bad, inferior or ugly," perhaps a blend of grubby and dingy. It was picked up (more accurately, picked up on) and back-formed into the noun grunge by rock musicians in Seattle like Nirvana and Pearl Jam in the late '80s to express their anomie-tooism. In Britain, also afflicted with punk rock, the discordance was translated into clothing: hobnail boots and bag-lady knits soon appeared on the catwalks of couture, the carefully designed sloppiness racing against the genuine anti-fashion statements of the youth culture. For a time, as the mass culture followed the elite culture following the grunge-rock subculture, frumpiness was next to godliness.

Hegelian antithesis followed. When Donna Karan held her Family of Grunge show in New York this year, Cathy Horyn of The Washington Post wrote: "In the general droop of things, sweaters withered from shoulders, sweat pants slid from waists. . . . Nothing new, and one suspects that grunge is already over and out."

How to praise the new fashions? Glamour magazine's long-running fashion feature — Dos and Don'ts — promotes do and don't as nouns for good and bad styles. Oprah Winfrey's talk show has popularized fashion do for any stylish look, while more recent street slang offers the compliment of "That suit is dope!"

My favorite current fashion locution is all-American, snatched with great panache from everyday life. You know those half-automated carwash emporia that advertise an "all-cloth wash," where machines jiggle gloppy lengths of wet chamois (pronounced SHAM-ee) against your car as you ride through? I always feel, as those flat fingers of sodden material slop heavily against my windshield, that I am experiencing virtual reality inside a giant's lower intestine. At any rate, lengths of material hanging from the waist, looking like a slit skirt produced by a designer who couldn't stop slitting, now go by the name of a carwash skirt. Fashion has a future.

■ Illness-inducing parasite reappears

MILWAUKEE — A parasite in tap water that sickened thousands of people earlier this year has returned — but only in trace amounts, health officials say.

Cryptosporidium, a microscopic organism, was found at one of the city's water purification plants for the first time since last spring's widespread infestation, officials said Saturday.

The Milwaukee Health Department said the Oct. 17 discovery didn't warrant telling residents to boil tap water. Later test results showed no sign of the parasite, said Jeff Fleming, an aide to Mayor John Norquist.

For eight days in April, residents were advised to boil water. Thousands of gastrointestinal illness cases were blamed on the parasite.

■ Vice president's mother suffers stroke

WASHINGTON — Pauline Gore, mother of Vice President Al Gore, was hospitalized Sunday morning for a mild stroke that impaired her peripheral vision, a spokeswoman said.

Mrs. Gore, 81, was in good condition and recovering well, Gore spokeswoman Julia Payne said Sunday evening.

"The vice president has been with her all day," Payne said. "She's doing great."

The stroke, on the right side of Mrs. Gore's occipital lobe, damaged the left side of her field of vision, but apparently caused no other problems, Payne said.

It was unclear when Mrs. Gore would be released from George Washington University Hospital, Payne said.

Mrs. Gore was at her home in Washington when she suffered the stroke, Payne said. She and Albert Gore Sr. also have a home in Carthage, Tenn.

■ Astronauts continue rat experiments

SPACE CENTER, Houston — The space shuttle Columbia's astronauts took more blood samples from their rodent passengers Sunday as a planned two-week medical research mission neared its midway point.

Shuttle commander John Blaha said the seven crew members were glad to be left out of the day's poking and prodding with needles and catheters.

The 48 white rats on the shuttle are undergoing some of the same tests as the astronauts.

Astronauts stuck tiny catheters into the tails of five rats Saturday to take blood and inject iron and iodine as part of a space anemia study.

Researchers want to know why red blood cells dwindle in space. They're unsure whether more are destroyed or fewer are produced in weightlessness.

■ Heiress loses bid to dismiss lawsuit

SOMERVILLE, N.J. — Tobacco heiress Doris Duke got no relief from a judge asked to toss out a lawsuit filed by the 80-year-old woman's adopted daughter, who claims the millionaire promised to take care of her for life.

Judge Edward Coleman denied a motion Friday to terminate Charlene "Chandi" Duke Heffner's lawsuit accusing Duke of fraud and breach of promise. Neither woman was present in court.

Duke was proclaimed the "richest girl in the world" in 1925 upon the death of her father, J.B. Duke, president of American Tobacco Co.

Earlier this month, her fortune was estimated at $750 million by Forbes magazine, which ranked her 110th on its list of the country's richest people. In 1981, Duke met Heffner, a former belly dancer and Hare Krishna devotee. They became friends and began traveling together in 1984, said Benjamin Michel, Heffner's attorney.

She began living with Duke in her 2,700-acre Hillsborough mansion. Duke promised to provide for her and leave her the family estate, Michel said.

Duke adopted Heffner in 1988. But the relationship ended abruptly in 1991 when Duke locked Heffner out.

■ Sheik does time in $12,000 jail 'suite'

NEW YORK (AP) — The government is spending about $12,000 to build a two-room jail "suite" for Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman.

Besides the standard bed, sink and toilet, Abdel-Rahman will have his own shower and a conference room with table and chairs in the Metropolitan Correctional Center, according to jails spokeswoman Sandra Burks. The Muslim cleric has sought a transfer from an upstate federal prison to be closer to his lawyers while awaiting trial.

Abdel-Rahman, 55, of Jersey City, N.J., is accused of masterminding a terrorist conspiracy that included the Feb. 26 World Trade Center bombing and a plot to blow up other New York City landmarks. Six people were killed and more than 1,000 injured in the Trade Center bombing.

Clinton's foreign policy problems far from over

By Donald M. Rothberg
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — While a noisy debate rages on Capitol Hill, the Clinton administration and key allies in Congress are quietly examining what went awry in foreign policy and how to fix it.

Growing unhappiness over how the administration has handled crises in Haiti, Somalia and Bosnia has led to public and private calls for the dismissal of Secretary of State Warren Christopher and Defense Secretary Les Aspin.

"It's fair for the president to bring his secretary of state and his secretary of defense in and ask if they're really handling these situations in the best way possible," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.

"There has to be a thoroughgoing re-evaluation of policy," said Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. "I don't know for a fact that's occurring but it would seem to me it's likely."

Leahy and Hamilton spoke at the end of an unusual sequence of events abroad and at home. A firefight in Somalia left 18 Americans dead. Angry Haitians forced a U.S. ship to turn away. And into the leadership vacuum stepped Congress, riled and willing to take on the inexperienced president.

In the end, the White House defeated efforts to tie Clinton's hands on military deployments. But last week's Senate votes were only a skirmish in what promises to be a long war over the conduct of U.S. policy abroad.

There are signs the administration realizes more must be done to smooth out its handling of foreign policy. "At the highest levels of the administration, there is an understanding that they need to look very critically at their team to see if it needs improvements," said an administration official who insisted on anonymity.

Implied criticism of Christopher and Aspin from Leahy, a strong Clinton ally, undoubtedly weighs heavier with the president than recent public attacks on the two Cabinet members from Rep. Frank McCloskey, D-Ind., and Sens. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., and Hank Brown, R-Colo.

Many friendly critics of the administration's foreign policy are also unhappy with Christopher and Aspin. While none is ready to join in public demands that they be fired, they are quietly suggesting to Clinton that he is not being well served by his two most visible foreign policy advisers.

The unease in Congress with the two Cabinet officials crystallized shortly after the firefight in Somalia.

Christopher and Aspin went to Capitol Hill and briefed 200 members of the House and Senate. Their performance was criticized as muddled and meandering. Lawmakers who expected the two to spell out U.S. policy in Somalia were themselves asked what they thought it should be.

Despite the attacks on Christopher and Aspin, the likelihood is that any changes will be structural — a shuffling of organizational slots rather than changes in the people who fill them.

"The president is fully satisfied with his foreign policy team," said White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers. "He has great confidence in them and I don't expect to see any changes."

Members of Congress concerned with foreign policy are telling Clinton that if he wants to avoid a series of similar confrontations, he must give foreign policy more of his time.

Hamilton said that when it comes to committing U.S. troops to places like Somalia or Haiti, "the president has to persuade a reluctant public to generate support."

Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware, the second-ranking Democrat on the Foreign Relations Committee, said he doesn't blame Clinton's national security advisers for missteps on foreign policy as much as his political and domestic team.

Biden said Clinton is restrained by domestic advisers who believe he can't afford to use political capital needed for such domestic issues as health care and the economy.

"If you don't see the president speaking out on this, then I think the president's foreign policy, no matter how well-conceived, is not likely to succeed," said Biden.

Sen. Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, a Republican who opposed attempts to place limits on Clinton's ability to deploy U.S. forces, said he hopes the recent foreign policy debate taught Clinton that "foreign policy comes with the job."

Black leaders show little unity at gang truce meeting

CHICAGO (AP) — Jesse Jackson told members of street gangs meeting in a national truce summit Sunday that they represent the "new frontier" of the civil rights struggle. But Jackson left town before a hoped-for meeting of national black leaders.

NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Chavis and Nation of Islam Minister Louis Farrakhan both said Sunday they would go forward with plans to meet over differences that have separated factions of the civil rights movement in the past, even though Jackson would not attend.

In a rare display of unity at a Washington forum last month, Jackson, Chavis, Farrakhan and Congressional Black Caucus Chairman Kweisi Mfume, D-Md., identified ending gang violence as an issue on which they could work together.

Mfume, who contacted summit organizers about participating and was scheduled to conduct a Saturday session on political unity, had not arrived by Sunday morning.

In a speech to gang members, Jackson stressed the need for unity but gave no explanation for his failure to meet with Farrakhan and Chavis.

"There will be attempts to discredit you," Jackson said. "There will be an attempt to separate you. But you are on the cutting-edge issue of our day."

He told gang members they represent "the new frontier of the civil rights struggle."

"No one is losing their organizational identity. We're just coming together for one purpose," Jackson said in a speech at Operation PUSH, the civil rights organization he founded 20 years ago.

Jackson returned to Washington later in the day.

About 2,500 people attended a later session in Farrakhan's Mosque Maryam. Farrakhan followers and NAACP members in business suits and African-styled clothing mingled with casually attired gang members in the mosque.

Chavis said he hoped Jackson would join him and Farrakhan in a follow-up meeting to their earlier declaration of unity.

"Minister Farrakhan is here. I'm here. We're going to meet," Chavis said. "It is a necessity. The biggest chain of all is the chain of disunity. It will make us sink down."

Farrakhan, speaking at the mosque, said, "Words are not adequate to say what is going on here today. We may not understand fully at this point in time but as time goes on, you will see how God so firmly had his hand that it will force us to overcome the pettiness that has kept us apart for so long to seek a greater good."

Attacks, mutilations of horses puzzle Maryland investigators

UPPER MARLBORO, Md. (AP) — Herman D'Aulerio used to worry about stray rifle shots striking his horses during deer hunting season. Now, he worries about something more sinister.

On Oct. 18, D'Aulerio discovered his 12-year-old thoroughbred stallion had been attacked in its pasture and deliberately mutilated — stabbed in the genitals with a knife. The retired racehorse, named Revere Paul, apparently broke its neck during the attack and had to be put to death.

It was the sixth intentional mutilation of a horse's sex organs to be confirmed by Maryland police since June. Police said they are trying to link the cases, which occurred in suburban counties near Washington, but have no suspects.

The attack at the D'Aulerio farm, about 15 miles southeast of Washington, was the first to a male horse.

"I was stunned," D'Aulerio said. "It was very depressing. I couldn't understand why anyone would do something like that. He was a very gentle horse."

D'Aulerio said he believed his horse had been tied by the neck to a tree and had hurt itself trying to get away. A veterinarian said it appeared the attacker was trying to castrate the animal.

It's possible more than one culprit is involved, said Trooper Gary Bachtell of the Maryland State Police.

Police west of Washington, in Loudoun County, Va., made an arrest two years ago in a similar series of attacks, and nearby Fairfax County, Va., has also reported such incidents.

A string of particularly brutal attacks on horses was reported in southern England earlier this year.

About 300 horse owners met with police Friday night in Mt. Airy, Md., to discuss the attacks and ways to protect their animals.

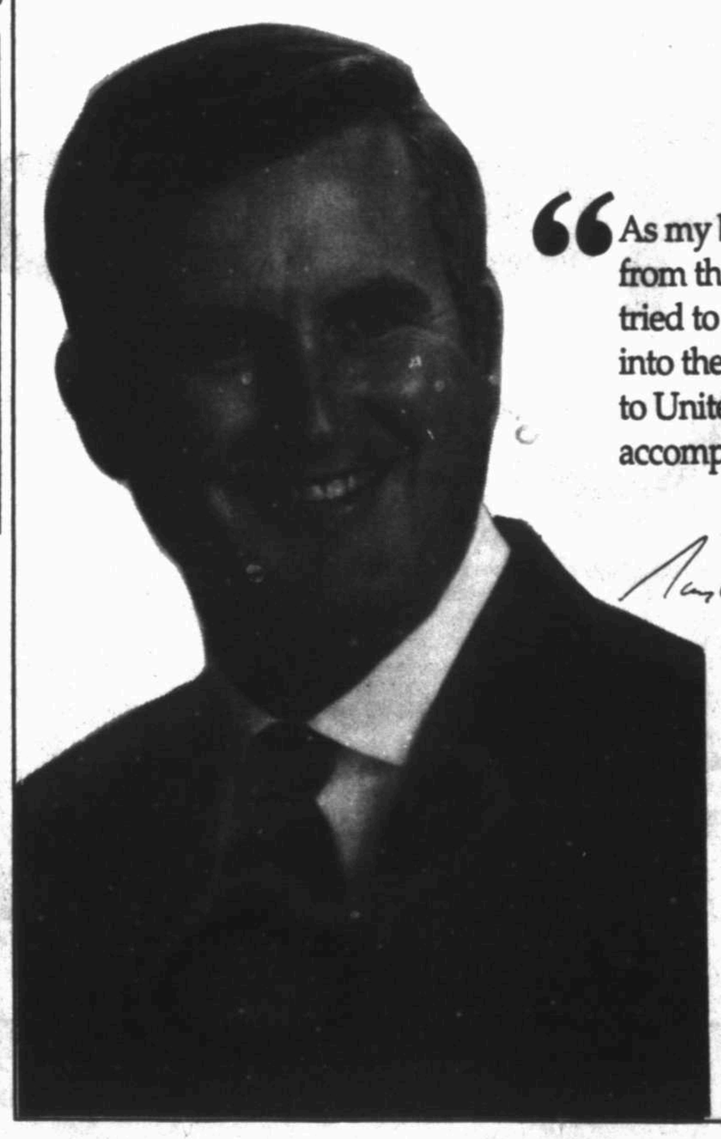

"It's very bizarre," said Trooper Gary Bachtell, of the Maryland State Police. "Horse owners are taking a look at their own locations. Some are installing alarms."

Reforms bring democracy to once-corrupt Local 507

CLEVELAND (AP) — Something new is coming to Teamsters Local 507:

Democracy.

It was Local 507 that Jackie Presser formed in 1966, organizing workers in small plants and warehouses around Cleveland. In 1983, it was Local 507 that propelled Presser to the Teamsters throne. When Presser died in 1988, he was under indictment for corrupt dealings in the local he ran with an iron fist.

Now, the reforms that have blown through the 1.4 million-member International Brotherhood of Teamsters have reached Local 507. This month, the local's 3,500 members are reviewing bylaws. Next month, they nominate candidates for office.

In December, Local 507 will count ballots from its first free elections.

"It's democracy working," said Ron Carey, the reform-minded president of the Teamsters. "The membership there will determine who will be right for them, and that's what it is all about. A fair, hotly contested election is democracy at work.

"You fix corruption with democracy. It's the only way."

With a history of corruption and a legacy of iron-man rule by Jimmy Hoffa, Frank Fitzsimmons, Roy Williams and Presser, change has not come easily to the Teamsters at large — or to Local 507.

For decades, Local 507 was basically a two-man show — Presser and Harold Friedman, his longtime friend and a Teamsters International vice president. Presser was secretary-treasurer, and Friedman was president.

Even after they were elected to their international posts, they continued to hold their Local 507 titles and collect large salaries, a practice then common in the union.

In 1986, they were indicted on embezzlement and labor racketeering charges for paying $700,000 to employees who did little or no work.

Presser died of brain cancer in 1988, before his case went to trial. He had claimed he was an FBI informant helping agents investigate union ties to organized crime, and that he had FBI approval to continue the scheme.

In 1989, Friedman was convicted of racketeering, conspiracy, embezzlement and filing a false report with the Labor Department. He was put on probation and suspended from holding any Teamsters office at least until 1994.

Gerald Yontek took over as president and Barbara Walden — Friedman's wife — became secretary-treasurer. They have been on unpaid leave since June, when an independent administrator recommended they be permanently suspended for permitting Friedman to "interject himself" into the local's business.

In the meantime, Carey won the international presidency in a free, rank-and-file election held by agreement with the Justice Department. And Carey put Teamsters International Representative Hugh Thompson in charge of 507 — one of 20 locals to be placed under trusteeship.

When Thompson called for a general membership meeting last November, hundreds showed up, and the tension was so thick, "you could slash the air with a knife," recalled Thompson, a 50-year-old former trucker from St. Louis.

"It was a very cold situation," Thompson said. "There has been a fear instilled in all the members all these years. . . . I had a microphone set up to let them all speak. I listened to each and every one.

"There were critics. But there was freedom."

Any tension, claimed Gerald B. Chattman, who worked closely with Friedman as attorney for the local, was due to loyalty to Friedman.

Friedman and his officers never had opposition because rank-and-file Teamsters were satisfied, Chattman said.

Chairman challenges Republicans on crime bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph Biden urged quick passage of a crime bill Sunday and said he would support tougher mandatory sentencing in exchange for Republican backing of gun control.

"I'll make a deal with you right now, Phil, before all of America," the Delaware Democrat told Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, on CBS' "Face the Nation."

Biden said he would support Gramm's demands for strict sentencing requirements for crimes involving guns if Gramm would drop his opposition to the Brady bill. That legislation requires a five-day wait for purchase of a handgun, and a more comprehensive ban on assault weapons.

Bills introduced in Congress last month would provide $5.9 billion over five years to put 50,000 more police officers on the streets, specify new federal death penalty crimes, restrict death-row inmates' rights to federal appeals and establish alternative punishments such as boot camps for young, nonviolent offenders.

Congress will separately take up the Brady bill, named for former White House press secretary James Brady, who was shot in the 1981 assassination attempt on President Reagan.

The crime legislation is similar to a measure that failed last year after Gramm and other Senate Republicans threatened a filibuster.

Gramm stressed that "when we pass a crime bill, we're going to have minimum mandatory sentencing for gun violations."

He said he wanted 10 years in prison without parole for possessing a firearm during a crime or a drug felony, 20 years for firing a weapon with intent to do harm, life imprisonment for murder, and the death penalty in aggravated cases.

Gramm, responding to Biden's challenge, said he was against gun control. "The way to deal with crime is not taking away guns." He said the five-day waiting period stipulated in the Brady bill was "not a big deal," but warned that Attorney General Janet Reno was moving toward a gun ban.

"If someone is going to break into my mama's house, they've got to worry not just about the sheriff and the police chief, they've got to worry that she has a gun and she might shoot them."

"We're not going to take Phil's mama's gun," Biden said. "If you want to do something about crime," he said to Gramm, "step up to the ball, old buddy. Don't filibuster this time."

Reno, speaking earlier on the same program, said waiting periods, stiffer bans on assault weapons and a proposal to prohibit the sale of handguns to minors were "very important first steps, but we've got to go further in making sure that people who have a gun and use it in the wrong way get punished."

She said she also supported state licensing of guns. Asked about the National Rifle Association and its campaign against gun controls, she said, "I don't think they make things very good."

Reno also suggested on NBC's "Meet the Press" that putting more trained police on the streets of Washington, D.C., was better than introducing the national guard, as requested by Mayor Sharon Pratt Kelly.

"I think it is imperative that we get the crime bill passed so that we get community police to the streets in forms and fashions that can prevent crime," she said.

Vice President Al Gore responded similarly on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley," saying the national guard issue "shows why President Clinton's crime bill needs to be passed this year."

More than a fad

Stocks of small companies have posted impressive gains recently, but will they do better than stocks of large companies over the long haul?

A growing number of investment managers say yes, and several studies bear them out. Over the last 30 years, small companies have produced a cumulative return more than twice that of large companies, albeit with some years of gut-wrenching losses, according to Dimensional Fund Advisers, a San Mateo, Calif., investment company.

For an investor who has a long view and a stomach for sharp downturns, small stocks look promising, regardless of current market conditions. "We stress the long-term approach to investing in small companies, and downplay the idea that investors should try to time their investments to hit the market at a low," said George U. Souter, a vice president of the Vanguard Group of mutual funds.

Some analysts say the outstanding returns of small companies reflect superior business skills and an ability to adjust quickly to economic and market conditions. Other analysts say the top performance merely shows a lack of attention from big investors, who are deterred by skimpy research, high trading costs and an unwillingness to make hundreds of small investments in small companies rather than a few investments in large ones.

Whatever the reason, small companies have smiled on investors lately.

Boom for real

NEW YORK (AP) — If anybody could claim credit for having seen the mutual-fund boom coming, it would logically be a pioneer like Thomas Bailey.

After all, he had the foresight to start the Janus Fund in 1969, when the industry was a small, specialized corner of the investment world that was about to embark on two decades of spectacular growth.

But Bailey is quick to say he had no vision of anything like the enterprise that the Denver-based Janus Capital Corp. has since become — managing $21.68 billion in assets in a family of a dozen funds, with 750 employees.

"Are you kidding? I thought it would be fun and I could make some money at it," he recalled in an interview. "What I saw was that I liked stocks and bonds, that I liked doing it and it wasn't like a job to me."

However, now that the fund industry has blossomed, growing forty-fold in less than 25 years, Bailey says it has established itself as a business with a sound product that he believes has further room for growth.

Funds advance with warning flags flying

■ Mutual fund companies are warning current and potential customers in advance of built-in risks of investment.

By Chet Currier
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Imagine a restaurant chain spending big money to warn you of the health hazards posed by the high-fat dishes it serves.

Or a car manufacturer publishing information in grisly detail on the dangers of a highway crash.

Or a bank going out of its way to alert you to the debt perils posed by its credit cards.

Unlikely as such visions may be, something very much like that is taking place these days in the booming mutual-fund business.

For an industry that is enjoying enormous success, fund managers and sponsors are spending a lot of time and effort warning current and prospective customers about the risks inherent in their products — in educational brochures, in letters to shareholders, even in some of their advertising.

With stock funds, the subject most often is the question of an "overvalued" market; with bond funds, the threat of falling net asset values should interest rates rise.

With funds of every description, there is the standard warning that federal deposit insurance doesn't apply.

The situation has even reached the point of urgings from fund industry leaders that government regulators be given more money and manpower to ride herd on them.

What's behind this behavior? Are fund executives somehow kinder, gentler and more caring than other types of business managers?

Surely not. The situation arises from a mixture of politics and prudence, with a healthy measure of bottom-line sense thrown in.

"It's probably a good case of enlightened self-interest," says Brian Mattes, vice president for corporate communications at the Vanguard Group, a big fund family in Valley Forge, Pa.

"We make nothing by bringing somebody in and having them get whacked right away," Mattes observes. "We don't like the way the markets look right now, and I guess people are looking to us to tell them that."

In the midst of all its successes, the fund business finds itself in a tricky position. Its very popularity has brought extra scrutiny, from economic and investment analysts, from the press, and from Congress.

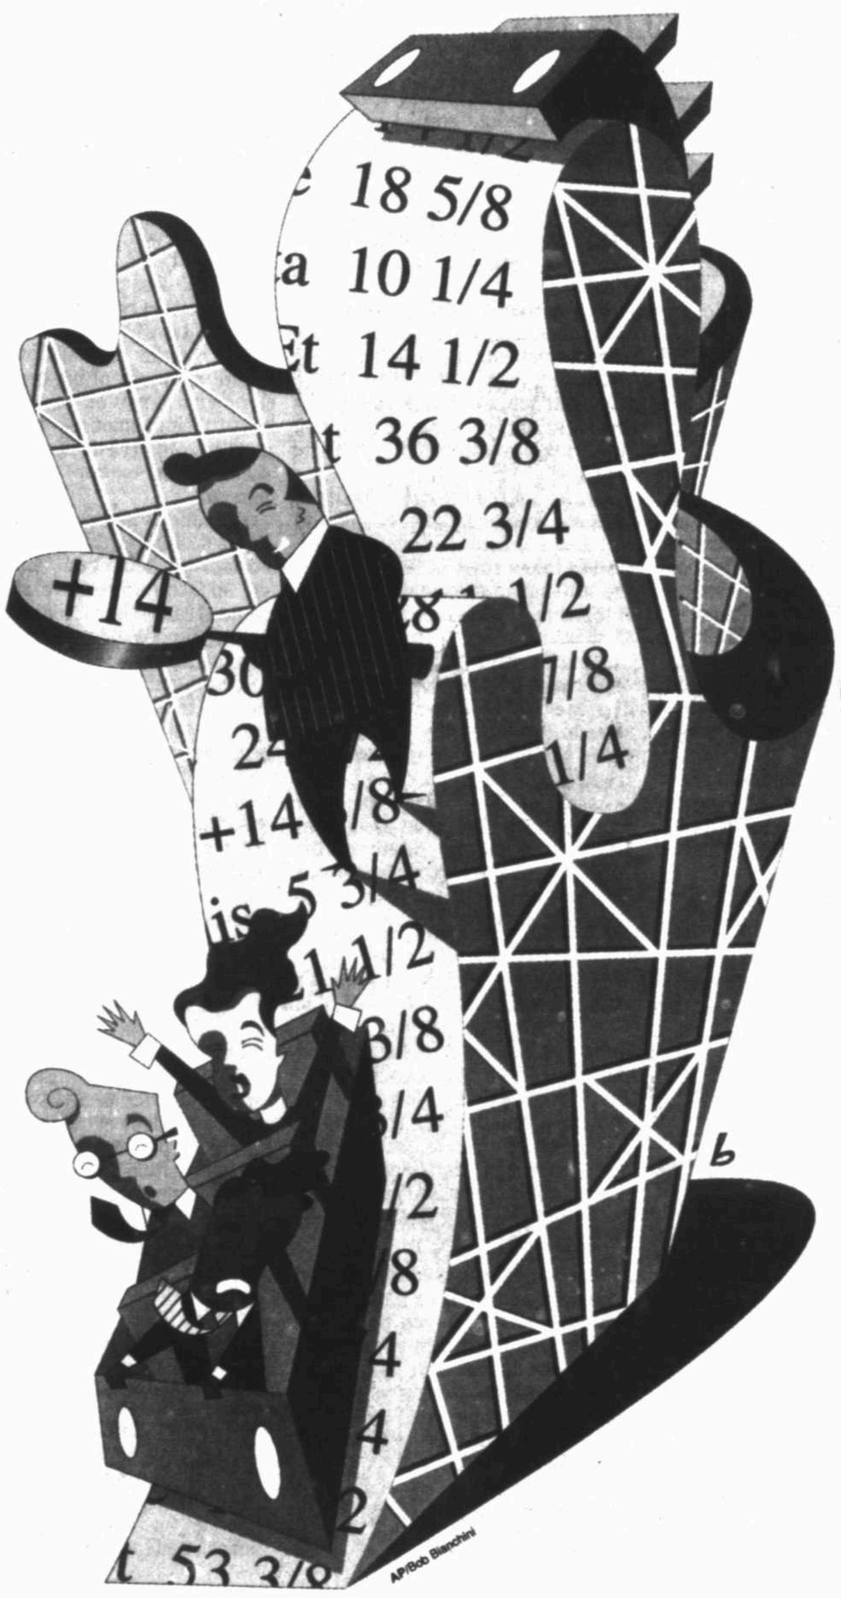

Memories are still fresh of scandals in another financial-services industry, the savings and loans. So the scouts are out in earnest searching for any early signs of trouble in the fund business.

In that climate, it's only natural for industry leaders

Know all the risks before investing in health care stock

■ In 1992, a record number of health care companies sold stock for the first time.

By Mariann Caprino
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Leaf through a passel of investment research reports on health care companies and a singular message resounds: buy, Buy, BUY.

Zoll Medical Corp., Cerner Corp., Vivra Inc., Haemonetics Corp., Genta Inc., Syncor International Corp., Medaphis Inc., McGaw Inc., Kinetic Concepts Inc ... the list of unfamiliar names goes on and on.

Many are smaller concerns focused on narrow niches of a fast-changing marketplace. But expectations are running high for these and other health care companies, with predictions of double-digit growth rates.

Some companies could see earnings increase as much as 35 percent as health care reform unbridles a wealth of opportunities for those that provide quality —and save money.

But beware. Not everyone will emerge a financial winner.

"Investors have got to be extraordinarily selective in their stock choices going forward," said Jonathan Osgood, a securities analyst with Alex. Brown & Sons Inc. in Boston. "It's a mine field out there."

Besides established companies, 39 health care and biotech companies went public in the first three quarters of the year, raising about $1.13 billion, says the Securities Data Co., a research group.

Last year a record 109 health care and biotech companies launched initial public offerings of stock that brought in $4.6 billion.

As fee-for-service medicine fades into the background, managed care, with its emphasis on cost containment, is transforming the health care industry. Doctors are banding together to form large group practices. Hospitals are providing more outpatient care since fewer and fewer medical procedures require overnight stays.

Companies that provide off-site care, in-home care, prescription drugs by mail, computer software that eliminates people and paper, drugs and devices that avert surgery, will flourish in the new environment. But they must demonstrate that their product or service lowers costs and improves patient outcomes.

"Companies are going to go wrong if they ignore the fact that they are going to have to have hard data showing cost effectiveness," Osgood said.

David Saks, an analyst with Gruntal & Co., said investors should only put money into companies that "clearly can document products that have a real benefit of enhancing quality of life and ...save real money."

Investors should be skeptical of companies that proclaim "We save money in in the health care system" without proof.

Health maintenance organizations, founded on the notion of cost-conscious care, have been in the health care vanguard by requiring primary care physicians to serve as "gatekeepers," sanctioning referrals to pricey specialists and monitoring overall patient care.

Stockbroker arbitration

Q: How can a client initiate arbitration when he has a complaint against a stockbroker?
— Dan Harrison, Briarcliff Manor, N.Y.

A: Arbitration is the method used by member firms of the nation's major securities exchanges and the National Association of Securities Dealers for resolving disputes with their clients. These brokerage firms require individuals to arbitrate, rather than litigate, claims or controversies — a process that is intended to make decision-making faster and cheaper.

When opening a brokerage account, "the investor must sign an agreement to submit the dispute to arbitration," said James Buck, senior vice president of the New York Stock Exchange. To begin an arbitration, the investor has to "provide a typewritten statement describing his or her claim and pay a filing fee, which varies depending on the size of the claim," he said.

Among the most frequent complaints that investors bring against brokers at arbitration hearings are excessive trading for the purpose of generating commissions (a practice often called churning), and providing misleading information about investments.

Liquidation after retirement

Q: When I reach 70½ and must begin taking distributions from my IRA at a brokerage firm, will I have to liquidate some of the stock if there is not enough cash in the account? — Betty Shave, Amityville, N.Y.

A: Not necessarily. Although distributions from an individual retirement account are normally made in cash, they do not have to be. They can be a transfer of securities or an annuity contract.

"The amount taxable is generally the fair market value of the assets transferred, or deemed transferred, as of the date of the distribution," said Edward Mendlowitz, a partner in the New York certified public accounting firm of Mendlowitz Weitsen. "However, there are special rules when the assets are pledged or where life insurance is part of the transaction."

Premium bond advantages

Q: Are there any advantages to buying premium bonds?
— Neil Moran, Floral Park, N.Y.

A: A premium bond is a bond that was issued with a higher interest rate than is available today and therefore sells now at a higher price than it will be worth at maturity. If the extra interest income more than offsets the loss you will suffer when the bond matures, it may be worthwhile to buy a premium bond.

Another reason that premium bonds usually yield more than comparable bonds selling at par is less demand. Many individuals and institutions avoid buying bonds at a premium because of such factors as more complicated accounting, tax ramifications and the effects of early redemptions of the bonds.

Easing pain of the big inevitability

By Mary Rowland
N.Y. Times News Service

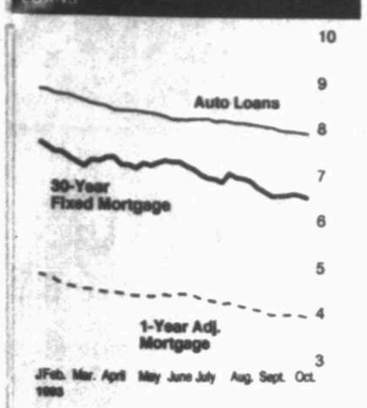

Most people never do the necessary planning to reduce the taxes on their estates for two good reasons: They don't want to think about dying, and they refuse to give away money just so their heirs will pay less tax.

While dying is inevitable, parting with your money before death to reduce taxes is not.

An alternative is a disclaimer will, which is typically used by a surviving spouse to disclaim part of an estate, put it in a trust and shield it from taxes when it passes to the children of the couple.

FUNDS: Analysts applaud attention given funds to take an up-front position on questions like risk. That kind of thinking is reinforced by some even more practical considerations.

"Mutual funds have a strong interest in seeing to it that fund shareholders have realistic expectations about their investments," Matthew Fink, president of the Investment Company Institute, said in congressional testimony last summer.

"Industry compensation is based on assets under management, rather than transaction fees, and shareholders can redeem their shares at any time."

"It's good business," says Steve Norwitz at T. Rowe Price Associates, which is running advertising that focuses on the subject of risk-adjusted performance.

"It costs us about $300 to get a new investor, and we usually have to keep them a couple of years before we make any money on them."

Whatever the motivation for it, many analysts applaud all the attention that has been directed at mutual-fund risk. If bear markets or similar misfortunes should strike, reasonably attentive investors won't be able to claim they weren't given any warning.

"We certainly can't know ahead of time whether a fund-led bear market would be any better or worse than previous bear markets," observed Don Phillips, publisher of the Morningstar Mutual Funds advisory service.

'What is assured is that it would be the most closely scrutinized downturn in history. Funds have put out a great product, marketed it effectively, and have snatched away their competing industries' customers. That's not a problem — that's progress.'

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Answers on individual retirement accounts

By Bill Doyle

Q: Don't panic when you see my return address is the county jail. I'm only here for a few weekends.

Doyle

I'm a 38-year-old construction worker and am beginning to worry about my future.

I make $32,000 yearly working for someone else, and I have no pension. I save about $3,500 a year. Should I open an individual retirement account? If so, how much would I accumulate by the time I am 63?

A: Starting an IRA and systematically putting money into it probably would be the best financial move of your life.

You can contribute up to $2,000 annually o an IRA -- $2,250 to a "spousal" IRA if your spouse is not employed. Using the lower of those two numbers, you can have tucked $50,000 into an IRA by the time you've reached age 63.

How much total money you would have in the IRA by that time is an unanswerable question. No one can predict what interest or dividends your account would earn during the next 25 years.

However, assuming you don't put your IRA money into something that goes bust, you would end up with a bundle -- easily hundreds of thousands of dollars -- as the result of compounding interest or dividends.

Meanwhile, because you are not enrolled in a retirement plan at work, the contributions you make to the IRA would not be subject to income tax. Each $2,000 IRA contribution you make would reduce your federal income tax burden by $300 if you are in the 15 percent tax bracket, or by $560 if you are in the 28 percent bracket.

Your IRA contributions and the money those contributions earn would remain deferred from income tax until you make withdrawals, as you would be required to do after passing age 70 1/2.

Providing you can afford to put money in an IRA, start doing so this year. And keep doing it, as long as you don't have longer sojourns in the slammer.

Q: I am aware that, by waiting until I am 59 1/2, I can take money out of my IRA and pay regular income tax on that withdrawal and, if I make an IRA withdrawal before age 59 1/2, I will have to pay an extra 10 percent penalty tax.

I also learned there is no penalty tax on IRA withdrawals before age 59 1/2 "in the case of death or disability." If I am dead, I won't be able to get at my IRA funds, and I don't intend to fake disability.

I am 52, out of work and in dire need of money. Isn't there any way I can get my hands on my IRA, which totals $175,000, without the 10 percent penalty tax?

A: There is one more exception to the age 59 1/2 withdrawal rule. It was written into the Tax Reform Act of 1986 with folks such as you in mind. However, you won't be able to withdraw the total amount in your IRA without being hit with that penalty.

You can avoid the 10 percent extra tax by taking systematic IRA withdrawals based on your life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of you and your IRA beneficiary for either five years or until you turn 59 1/2, whichever is longer.

In your case, that means you can make withdrawals of equal amounts for the next 7 1/2 years.

Q: My bank's literature says I am required to start making withdrawals from my IRA "when" I become 70 1/2. I note you write those withdrawals must begin "after" I attain that age. Who is correct, my bank or you?

A: Internal Revenue Service regulations specifically state, "You must start receiving distributions from your IRA by April 1 of the year following the year in which you reach age 70 1/2."

You needn't start your IRA withdrawals on the very day you hit that age milestone. That's why this column uses the word "after." For example, if you turn 70 1/2 this year, your first withdrawal must be made by April 1, 1994.

Q: Some places, I read about IRA "withdrawals." Elsewhere, the word "distributions" is used. What's the difference?

A: No difference. In this case the two words are interchangeable.

ESTATE: Time limit placed on disclaiming property

(From 1B)

"Disclaimer wills are used for post-mortem estate planning," said J. Stoddard Hayes Jr., vice president and senior trust counsel at the Wilmington Trust Co. in Wilmington, Del. "They provide the ability to plan a person's estate after he is dead."

Although not new, disclaimer wills are largely overlooked, said James K. Riley, a lawyer in Pearl River, N.Y., and a professor at Pace University. They are his choice for estates of $500,000 to $1 million or so.

"I practice in a middle-class area, and we do not have a lot of people walking around with $2 million," Riley said. "The disclaimer will is the best approach to estate planning for the middle class."

A disclaimer is simply a refusal to accept a gift of property. In 1976, when the federal estate and gift tax code was revised, a statute was added to explain when a disclaimer was valid.

A disclaimer must be an unqualified refusal to accept a property transfer or gift, and must be made within nine months of the transfer, Hayes said.

"Prior to 1976, disclaimers were a function of state law alone," he said. "Each state had a slightly different twist, and you never knew from one state to another whether you had a qualified disclaimer."

In most middle-class couples, if they bother to write wills, everything is left to the surviving spouse.

But a couple with an estate of more than $600,000 may trigger unnecessary taxes if they set up their wills that way. That is because they will not take full advantage of the lifetime personal exemption and the unlimited marital transfer.

Each person can transfer $600,000 free of federal estate and gift taxes during life or at death. Estate taxes start at 37 percent of the amount that exceeds $600,000. A top rate of 55 percent kicks in at $3 million.

Separately, a married person can transfer an unlimited amount of property free of tax to his or her spouse. But when the spouse dies, he or she can shield only $600,000 from estate taxes.

Assuming the heirs are their children, $600,000 could have been transferred on the death of the first parent and $600,000 on the death of the second without incurring estate taxes.

Couples often have estates of far less than $600,000 when they make their wills and do not make such provisions.

"Perhaps a couple has $500,000 in assets, and they don't know what they will have in 15 years," Riley said. "If they use the traditional will and their assets grow to $750,000, they will have to pay additional tax."

For couples with sizable assets, estate planners often recommend a bypass trust or credit shelter trust. When a spouse dies, $600,000 goes into the trust, making use of the lifetime exemption for each person.

The surviving spouse receives the rest, making use of the unlimited marital deduction. The surviving spouse can receive all the income from the trust. But the principal goes to the heirs at his or her death.

A problem is that many couples worry that they will not have enough to live on if they commit $600,000 to such a trust.

"Just because you have $1 million doesn't mean you want to put $600,000 of it into a credit shelter trust and lose access to it," said Joshua S. Rubenstein, a partner in estate and trust at the law firm of Rosenman & Colin in New York. "You may have $750,000 in the house and the rest in cash."

A disclaimer will allow spouses to leave everything to each other, but specifies what will happen to the property that is disclaimed. "What you say is: 'I give everything to Nancy. If Nancy should disclaim any part of this, it goes into a trust for her benefit and then ultimately to the kids,' " Rubenstein said.

The surviving spouse has nine months from the date of death to decide whether to disclaim any of the property. Any amount may be disclaimed, but it will be free from estate taxes only up to $600,000.

The disclaiming strategy does not work unless the will lays out specifically what will happen to the disclaimed property. "You can use some wording that says if the spouse disclaims or predeceases me, then the property goes into a trust," said Hayes of Wilmington Trust.

Riley said he advises clients with disclaimer wills to divide their assets. "If you hold a $100,000 certificate of deposit in both your names, it should be split into two $50,000 C.D.'s," he said. "There are some rulings that say you cannot disclaim a joint account."

HEALTH: Market known as highly fragmented

(From 1B)

"HMOs have been creating most of the changes," Osgood said. For that reason, HMO companies like United Healthcare, US Healthcare and Value Health are well positioned, he said, at least over the next few years.

Saks predicted it will take "a couple of years of shakeout before we see which companies are going in the right direction."

That means many promising forecasts will have to be redrawn. Some already have been scaled back.

For example, Bernard McDonagh, a managing director at Piper Jaffray Inc., a Minneapolis-based investment firm, lowered his growth projection for HealthCare Compare-Affordable, which provides managed care services, to discounted networks of doctors to large companies, from 30 percent to 20 percent.

The company's success is linked to selling access to its networks of doctors to large corporations, HMOs and insurance companies, but there is concern that "that business is not growing as rapidly as expected," he said.

Some companies will suffer from too-rapid expansion, as did EBP Health Plans. Earnings per share fell from $1.52 in May 1991 to the equivalent of a loss of $1.28 a share at the end of last year.

Competition heated up unexpectedly in the bid to provide small groups with reinsurance, extra insurance to protect against unexpectedly large claims. In addition, the small group market could change dramatically under reform, with small employers joining larger health alliances. "People are being appropriately cautious" about EBP's prospects, McDonagh said.

Most companies are highly specialized, like Amsco International Inc., which offers a sterilization service for surgeon and patient gowns and other operating room equipment like lighting systems and surgical tables. Or Haemonetics Corp., a blood processing company that is somewhat protected from reform's uncertainties, since nearly half its sales are abroad.

American Healthcorp has focused on marketing diabetes treatment services to hospitals, a recognition of the fact that 25 percent of all diabetics are hospitalized each year. But the company decided to expand through diversification and acquired AmSurg Corp., which owns and manages surgical suites in surgeons' offices.

Many companies have decided that bigger is better, setting off a wave of takeovers in a push to expand market share.

What's better, more cash for mortgage, or 401(k)?

N.Y. Times News Service

You just received a raise. Would you be better off using the extra money for a bigger contribution to your 401(k) retirement plan or a larger payment on your mortgage?

Like so many other personal finance questions, it is not a black-and-white decision. Your choice depends not only on the interest rates in both categories, but also on your feelings about home ownership and investment risk.

Nevertheless, when asked to choose between the two, many financial advisers recommend the retirement account. Because the money is made through a payroll deduction with pretax dollars, the return is usually greater, they say.

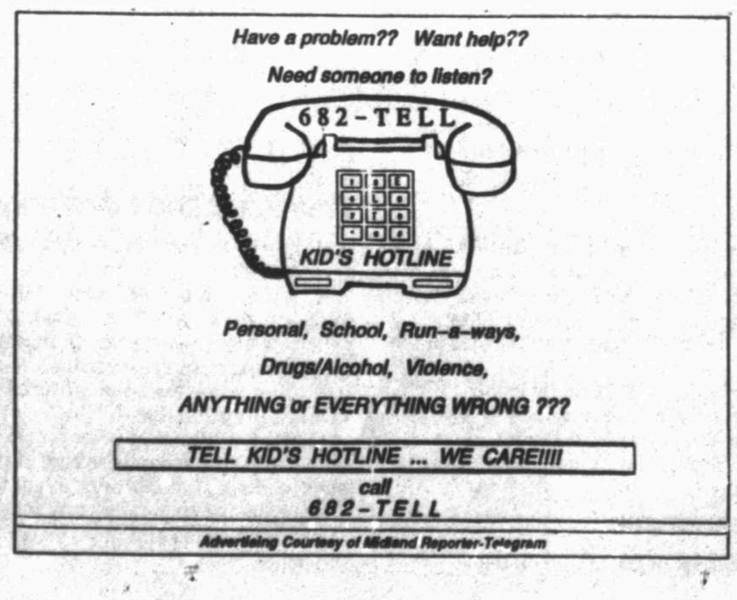

"From a long-term standpoint, contribute to a 401(k) plan," said Joel Isaacson, president of Joel Isaacson & Co., a New York financial planning firm. "You don't get rich by paying off a mortgage."

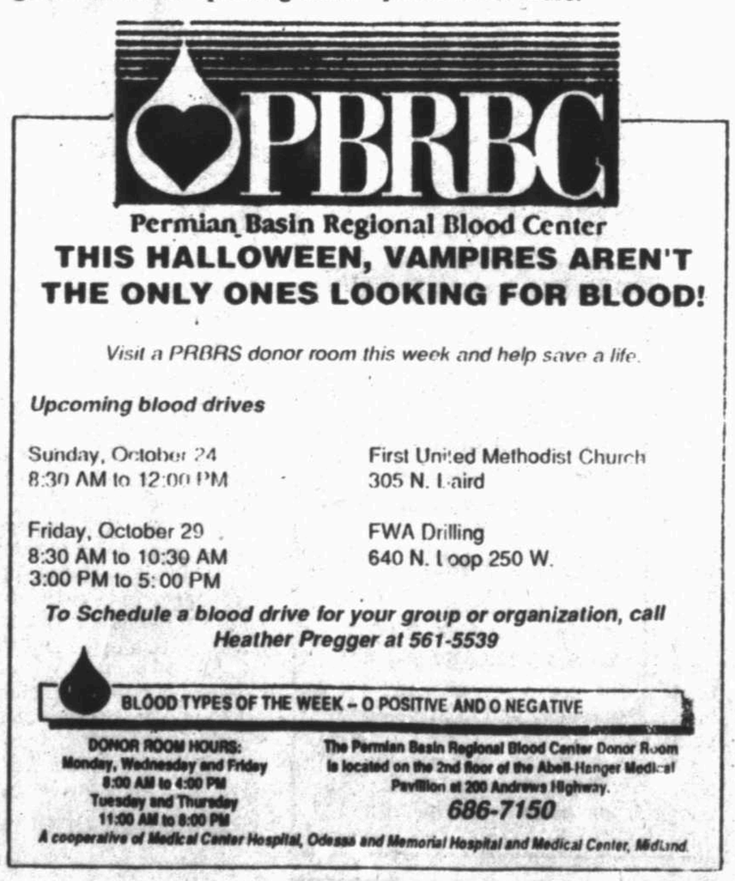

Gary Cvach, a partner in the accounting firm of KPMG Peat Marwick, concurred, noting that "a 401(k) plan directly reduces your income." By comparison, the interest on a mortgage merits only a tax deduction, a smaller tax benefit than a reduction in income.

The popular 401(k) plans are established by corporations to allow employees to put a portion of their compensation into special accounts. The money continues to compound tax-free until withdrawn — typically after retirement — when an employee is probably in a lower tax bracket.

For 1993, the maximum worker contribution to a 401(k) plan is $8,994. Some employers encourage participation by matching all or part of their employees' dollars.

DEAR ABBY

Adopted child can't shake feeling of being rejected

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I keep reading letters in your column from natural mothers who don't want to be found by the children they gave up for adoption.

Van Buren

Every time I read one of those letters, I feel both angry and hurt. Angry because of the selfishness of these women, and hurt because I am adopted and it hurts to think that my natural mother doesn't even want to know me. No matter what the reason for giving us up for adoption, the bottom line is that we live our lives feeling rejected by our "real" mothers — the women who gave birth to us.

These women are more concerned about the questions that might be raised and the problems it would cause than they are about knowing the kind of people we turned out to be. Don't we have a right to know who we really are? Is it fair for us to grow up feeling that we never quite belonged and were never really wanted in the first place?

Being adopted isn't easy — always wondering if I look like my mother, wondering if she remembers me on my birthday, or if she ever regrets having given me up. Maybe she's dead, or maybe she's the lady who was standing next to me in the grocery store last week.

I love my adoptive parents and I owe them more than I can ever repay. They gave me the best life they could, and they'll always be my "real" parents. But there's someone missing, someone I'm afraid to look for, because if I find her, she may reject me again. — JUST ANOTHER ADOPTED KID

DEAR JUST: Not all adopted children were "rejected" for the convenience of their mothers. Many (and probably most) were put up for adoption because their birth mothers wanted them to have better lives than they could have given them at the time.

DEAR ABBY: I recently leased a studio apartment in a small complex — it's just the right size for me. When I first moved in, it was filthy, but I cleaned it up and now it's immaculate.

To my horror, I discovered that the neighbor woman with whom I share a wall is a prostitute and drug addict. People come and go at all hours of the night, and the television is on 24 hours a day. It stops for maybe three or four hours, then it starts all over again for another three-day orgy.

Her customers stand in the common patio and make a mess of it with cigarette butts and empty liquor bottles.

What should I do? Should I get a lawyer? Or are things so bad these days that the cops would be indifferent? — DISGUSTED

DEAR DISGUSTED: Your neighbor is clearly disturbing your peace. First, send written letters of complaint to this neighbor and to the building manager (keep copies for yourself). If the disturbance continues, call the police. And see a lawyer about getting out of your lease.

Good advice for everyone — teens to seniors — is in "The Anger in All of Us and How to Deal With It." To order, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Anger Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Experts: Day-care children can expose family to illnesses

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Any parent knows that children in day care often bring home flu and runny noses. Now, scientists have found that youngsters sometimes expose their families to more serious infections, such as meningitis.

Several reports presented at a meeting on infectious diseases Tuesday described cases in which outbreaks that spread through day care centers also made parents sick — in some cases, more seriously than the children.

Researchers say one clear messages for parents emerges from their investigations of these episodes: Wash your hands after handling your children.

"It works," said Dr. Janet Mohle-Boetani of the Santa Clara County Health Department in California.

At the conference, sponsored by the American Society for Microbiology, health experts described outbreaks in which germs that cause severe diarrhea and meningitis spread from day care centers to the youngsters' homes.

Dr. Cynthia Whitman of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention outlined an episode at a Las Vegas day care center last year in which 51 children and six staff members got sick from a particularly nasty form of E. coli.

Ordinarily, E. coli is a harmless resident of people's digestive tracts. But one variety, known in medical shorthand as O157:H7, can make people very sick and even kill. This strain is often passed through undercooked hamburger and unpasteurized milk, but also spreads from person to person.

In the Las Vegas outbreak, 39 percent of the sick children took the infection home to their families. And when this occurred, 19 percent of family members caught the bug.

Pop musician hopes to reach teens with anti-gang message

By Norma Rabago
Associated Press Writer

CORPUS CHRISTI — As pop musician Patsy Torres was leaving the stage after a high school concert last year, a crowd of students pressed forward seeking autographs. Pushing to the forefront was one student who continuously called her name, insisting on speaking to her.

"Then I heard him say, 'But I need to tell her about the gangs. I need to tell her I'm going to quit.' I turned around and said, 'What?' Then everyone parted the way for me," the San Antonio native said.

"It was like it was just the two of us standing there. He said, 'I just want you to know I got your message. I was trying to give this to you on stage but I couldn't get to you. I quit the gang.' He handed me his bandana, (a symbol of his gang membership.) I was thinking, 'How many others have I reached like that?' "

Torres hopes to touch at least 50,000 middle school and high school students during her Positive Force Tour. The tour will take Torres and her band into 50 schools throughout South Texas. Mixed in with a show featuring Top 40 Hits, Torres talks to students about staying in school, away from drugs and out of gangs.

The idea for the Positive Force Tour came about three years ago, Torres said. Frequently, she said, she was asked to speak to music students during career day.

"When I spoke to the music students, they started asking me other questions like, what it was like when I was in school and peer pressure," she said. "The kids are aware of the drug scene in music. I talked about how I said no, how I never tried it and how I dealt with it."

Teachers recognized her positive message and asked her to speak to larger groups of students.

Losing driver's license can be very traumatic

By Danny Reagan
Associated Press Writer

ABILENE — Great. Just great.

Just about the time I was regaining the will to live after losing my sunglasses, Gremlins struck again.

My driver's license disappeared, and I was at my wit's end. Or vice versa... whatever's most surprising to you.

Losing one's driver's license can be very traumatic. You have to obey all the traffic laws and everything, and you have to try to come up with a really good excuse in case you're stopped.

I sought out Abilene police officer Kim Vickers, who — no lie — happens to be a guy and — also no lie — almost arrested me one time for calling him the "Roper Cop from Hell" in this spot years ago and whose voice mail says "I'm sorry, Kim Vickers is not in ... he's out shooting something right now ..." OK, so that last one is a lie. Anyway, I asked him to tell me the worst story he had ever heard about a lost driver's license.

"You know it's against the law to drive without a driver's license," he said in that tone of voice that said he was just itching for an excuse to slap the cuffs on me.

He remembered the time a middle-aged journalist who was kind of a wise-acre lost his driver's license. He didn't brake completely at a four-way stop and tried to outrun a certain cop in roper boots and lost control and ran into a stock tank and had his face eaten off by snapping turtles while the aforementioned cop emptied his clip into him.

No, not really. Just trying to keep your attention.

Actually, Vickers told me of some actual excuses he and some of his colleagues have heard over the years as to why the driver didn't have a license: 1) the dog ate it; 2) dropped overboard while fishing; 3) ex-wife flushed it down the toilet; and my personal favorite and the one I was thinking of using ... 4) a guy handed him a wad of paper and said it was his license after he had washed it three times.

No telling who has his or her hideous fingers all over my little, plastic-encased photo ... or their little, plastic-encased fingers over my hideous photo, whatever's most hideous to you.

Not to be overly pessimistic, I figure a gang has my driver's license right now and they've just perfected forging my signature and they're buying Uzis with a fake credit card in my name to use to overthrow the government, and they'll get caught and the cops'll see my name and Kim Vickers and all his buddies will break into my home in the middle of the night and say "You're under arrest for trying to overthrow the government and write a sentence with more than 80 words in it. You have the right to wipe the gunk out of your eyes and have an attorney edit your copy."

I had to get another license, of course.

Struggling Oilers rally

■ Houston seems tight in a 28-12 comeback win over the winless Cincinnati Bengals.

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — After a week of controversy and national attention, the Houston Oilers should have been relieved to get back to football.

Instead, they seemed tight and had to overcome their ineptness and the boos of their fans for a 28-12 victory over the winless Cincinnati Bengals on Sunday.

All week, the Oilers took heat for their treatment of proud father David Williams, who skipped last Sunday's game to be with his wife and first-born child. The Oilers docked Williams' weekly pay check of $111,111 for missing a 28-14 victory over New England, but he returned to the starting lineup against the Bengals.

Williams still received plenty of attention. He got the biggest cheers in pregame introductions and he left the field flanked by television cameras and photographers.

"I'm just glad I got this game behind me," Williams said. "It's just incredible how things have gone. It amazed me last week how they snowballed. Hopefully that's all behind us now."

The Oilers (3-4) struggled through most of the game and trailed 12-7 until 1:11 remained in the third quarter, when Lorenzo White scored on a 4-yard run for a 14-12 lead.

"That was a big drive for us," Moon said. "I said when I got in the huddle, 'Let's put these guys away.' You should put them away earlier. When you let an underdog stay in the game, it can be trouble. But I think that drive put them away."

Moon hit Haywood Jeffires with an 11-yard touchdown pass with 6:14 left. Moon, benched last week for ineffectiveness, also had a first-half TD pass to Gary Wellman and Gary Brown

Series ratings fall

NEW YORK — CBS Sports' telecast of the clinching Game 6 of the World Series Saturday night drew an A.C. Nielsen overnight rating in 29 metered markets of 20.0 with a 34 share. That's down 11 percent from last year's overnight rating of 22.6 and 40 for Game 6, which also was a clincher.

Toronto was the winner in both, winning at Atlanta last year and winning at home against Philadelphia this year.

Full national ratings for Game 6 will not be available until Tuesday. A ratings point represents 1 percent of all TV households in America, or about 942,000 homes. The share represents the percentage of TV's in use.

Another fantastic finish

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

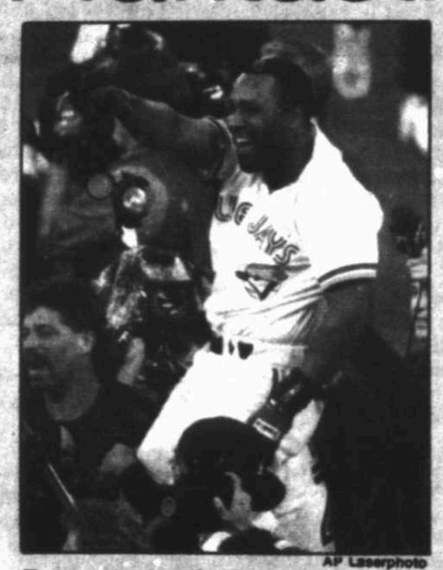

TORONTO — Another October, another fantastic finish. For the third straight year, baseball found a way to make its final game of the season one of its most memorable.

Just when it looked like the Philadelphia Phillies and Toronto were headed to a dramatic Game 7, Joe Carter swung the whole World Series with the last swing of the season.

■ World Series Wrapup

Carter's three-run homer with one out in the ninth inning off Mitch Williams on Saturday night gave the Blue Jays an 8-6 win in Game 6 and their second straight championship. Along with making Toronto the first World Series winner to repeat since the 1977-78 New York Yankees, his drive over the left-field fence gave fans something to remember during winter as they wait for spring.

"I'm sure people all over are emulating what happened," said Carter, who jumped for joy around the bases. "It's a dream everyone has."

Toronto's Joe Carter, a former Midland Cub, is carried off the field by teammates after his three-run homer was only the second home run in history to win a World Series.

"Bottom of the ninth, two strikes and you hit a home run to win the World Series," he said.

Only once before had the World Series ended on a home run. In 1960, Bill Mazeroski's leadoff homer in the ninth off Ralph Terry lifted Pittsburgh over the Yankees in Game 7.

There have been plenty of great finishes since then, but perhaps never three in a row like there have been lately.

In 1991, Jack Morris pitched one of the best games in World Series history, going all 10 innings in a 1-0 victory in Game 7 that led Minnesota over Atlanta.

In 1992, the Blue Jays were one out away from the championship when Otis Nixon singled home the tying run with two outs in the bottom of the ninth in Game 6 for Atlanta.

It went to extra innings, and Dave Winfield hit a two-run double for Toronto in the 11th. Again, the Blue Jays had to hang on, as Atlanta

By Rick Warner
AP Football Writer

Florida State and Notre Dame remained on course for a 1-2 showdown, while Kansas State moved into The Associated Press college football rankings for the first time in 23 years Sunday.

■ AP Top 25 Poll

Florida State, which didn't play Saturday, continued to be a unanimous No. 1 pick in the media survey. The Seminoles received all 62 first-place votes for the second straight week.

Notre Dame, which plays Florida State in South Bend on Nov. 13, remained No. 2 after beating Southern Cal 31-13.

If Florida State and Notre Dame hold their rankings for two more weeks, it will set up the 28th meeting between the top two teams in the AP poll. No. 1 has won 16, lost nine and tied two.

Notre Dame has played in eight 1-2

Wallace wins, closes in on Winston title

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

ROCKINGHAM, N.C. — Rusty Wallace recorded his ninth victory of the season Sunday, winning the AC Delco 500 to keep the pressure on Dale Earnhardt in their battle for the Winston Cup championship.

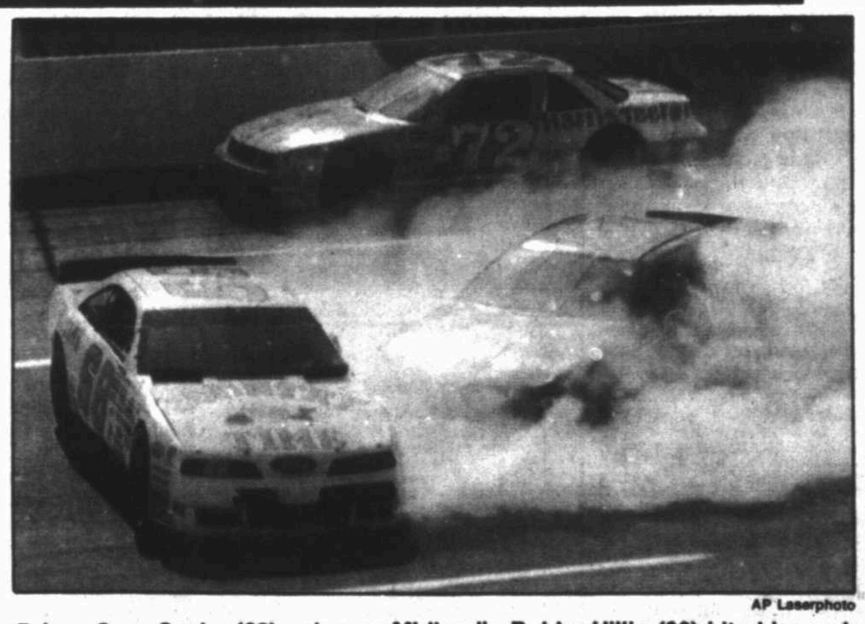

■ AC Delco 500

In a virtual replay of the finish of the spring race at North Carolina Motor Speedway, Wallace's Pontiac Grand Prix beat Earnhardt's Chevrolet Lumina to the finish line by 3.23 seconds.

By coming on strong in the final 100 laps to take the runner-up spot, Earnhardt, a five-time series champion, was able to keep the damage to a minimum in the title chase, losing just 10 points to Wallace and still holding a 72-point lead with two races remaining.

The winner, earning $52,850 for his 30th career victory, averaged 114.036 mph on the 1.017-mile oval.

Bill Elliott was third, followed by Harry Gant and, a lap down, Mark Martin.

Driver Greg Sacks (68) spins as Midland's Bobby Hillin (90) hits him and John Andretti passes by during the AC Delco 500 Sunday.

Wallace started 18th and Earnhardt 22nd in the 41-car lineup, but both sliced quickly through traffic to move into contention.

Following the first pit stop by the leaders, during a caution period on lap 45, Wallace was sixth and Earnhardt seventh. Earnhardt eventually moved to the lead, but it was Wallace who earned the five-point bonus for leading the most laps after taking the top spot for the first time on lap 312 of the 492-lap event. He wound up leading twice for 179 laps, including the final 52.

Love III leaves Las Vegas field for 8-stroke win

By Bob Green
AP Golf Writer

LAS VEGAS — It was the sort of problem any golfer would love.

"I got so far in front so fast," said Davis Love III, "I didn't know where to go or what to do or how to play."

■ Las Vegas Invitational

Love played just fine Sunday, shooting a 6-under-par 66 to win the $1.4 million Las Vegas Invitational by eight strokes.

With a six-shot lead starting the day, Love began the final round eagle-par-eagle and found himself out of touch with the rest of the field.

The lead went to 10 strokes at the turn and only a double-bogey from the water on the 17th hole kept the winning margin from reaching double digits.

"I didn't know how to handle it," Love said. "I got nervous. So I decided to try to go for some records, just to have something to shoot at."

The records didn't materialize. But it

Metcalf's heroics upset Pittsburgh

■ Former Longhorn Metcalf returns two punts for touchdowns as Cleveland sneaks by Pittsburgh 28-23.

Associated Press

With Eric Metcalf returning punts, who needs much more offense?

■ NFL Roundup

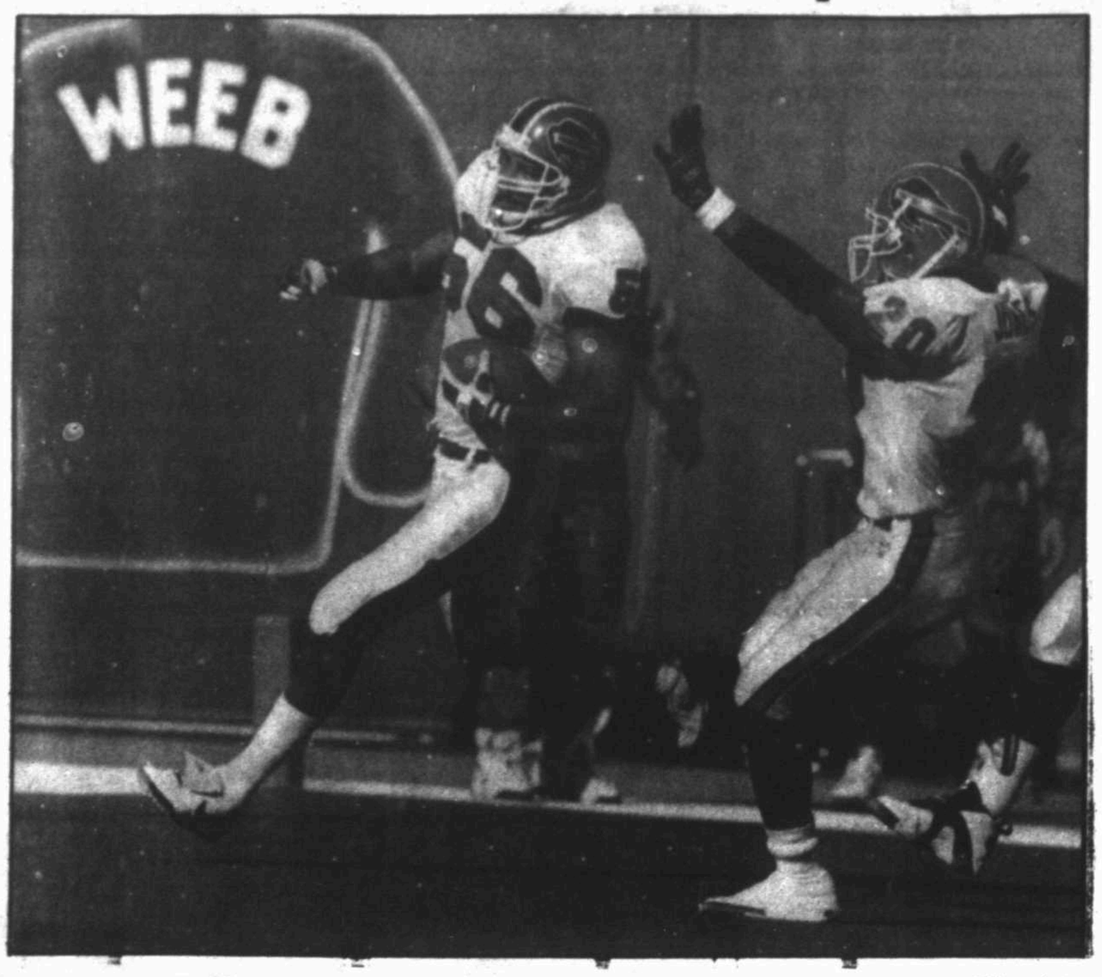

Metcalf capped a day of big plays by both teams with his second punt runback for a touchdown Sunday, going 75 yards with 2:05 remaining to lift the Cleveland Browns over the Pittsburgh Steelers 28-23. That TD tied an NFL record because Metcalf had gone 91 yards with a punt return in the second quarter.

"There was little time on the clock and we were down and I knew that we needed a big play," he said. "It was the blocking that got me down the field. I just had to run it. I wasn't thinking about scoring. I just wanted to get good field position to give our offense a chance to win the game."

Metcalf's heroics were the centerpiece of a wild game in which teammate Michael Jackson took a short pass and went 62 yards for a score; Pittsburgh's Neil O'Donnell passed for a career-high 355 yards, hitting 25 of 39; Eric Green caught six of those for 108 yards; and Pittsburgh had four sacks.

"It was a physical, exciting game, and there were some people tired," O'Donnell said. "We just fell short at the end. It was a frustrating loss."

The Browns (5-2) have beaten the Steelers (4-3) in 11 of the last 12 meetings in Cleveland.

Bills defender Darryl Talley, left, returned a pass interception 61 yards against the New York Jets as his teammate Henry Jones celebrates in Buffalo's 19-10 victory Sunday.

Also Sunday, it was: Green Bay 37, Tampa Bay 14; San Francisco 28, Phoenix 14; Detroit 16, the Los Angeles Rams 13; Seattle 10, New England 9; Buffalo 19, the New York Jets 10; and Atlanta 26, New Orleans 15.

At night, Miami routed Indianapolis 41-27.

Tonight, Minnesota is at Chicago.

Idle this weekend were Dallas, Washington, the New York Giants, Philadelphia, Kansas City, Denver, San Diego and the Los Angeles Raiders.

Dolphins 41, Colts 27

At Miami, the Dolphins (5-1) didn't need Dan Marino. Rookies Terry Kirby and O.J. McDuffie scored their first NFL touchdowns, Kirby on a 44-yard pass from Scott Mitchell and McDuffie on a 71-yard punt return.

Fullback Keith Byars had an 11-yard touchdown pass to Irving Fryar, Mark Higgs rushed for 114 yards and Miami's defense forced four turnovers. Louis Oliver's 56-yard interception return sealed the victory over Indianapolis (2-4).

Packers 37, Buccaneers 14

The idea was simple: get the ball in Sterling Sharpe's hands. Green Bay (3-3) did just that. Sharpe caught 10 passes for 147 yards and four scores, three in the first half, when Green Bay (3-3) took a 24-0 lead. He also ran for 5 yards and took two snaps at quarterback, throwing a 1-yard completion to Mark Clayton in the second quarter.

"Their whole offense is based on getting him the ball," Bucs cornerback Martin Mayhew said. "... It's hard to shut him down entirely."

Sharpe recorded his 21st 100-yard game and his third against Tampa Bay (1-5). Brett Favre was outstanding, too, with 20 completions in 35 attempts for 268 yards and the four touchdowns.

In addition to the offensive onslaught at Tampa, Terrell Buckley, LeRoy Butler and Johnny Holland each had interceptions and Bryce Paup had two sacks.

49ers 28, Cardinals 14

At San Francisco, Jerry Rice and Ricky Watters spoke as loudly with their play as they did while complaining during the week.

Both said they weren't getting the ball enough. Against Phoenix (2-5), they were the focal points of the attack. Rice, with one touchdown catch in his previous five games, caught nine passes for 155 yards and two TDs. It was his 40th 100-yard receiving game, but the first this season.

Watters, who carried just 17 times for 40 yards in his previous two games, gained 95 yards on 20 carries.

Lions 16, Rams 13

Jason Hanson's third field goal of the game, an 18-yarder with 4 seconds remaining, won it for Detroit (5-2), which is in first place in the NFC Central.

The visiting Lions, who got 91 yards from league rushing leader Barry Sanders and 249 yards passing from Rodney Peete, built a 13-0 lead. But T.J. Rubley, in his NFL debut for the Rams (2-5), replaced the struggling Jim Everett and threw two touchdown passes in the last 4:19. Tony Zendejas missed the extra-point kick after the second score, leaving the game tied.

"Absolutely I'm angry," Everett said. "I'm irate about this. This thing has been brewing for awhile. Without naming names, some people have tried to instigate this and now they've gotten what they've asked for."

Seahawks 10, Patriots 9

At Seattle, rookie Rick Mirer, displaying the poise of a veteran, drove the Seahawks 54 yards in 14 plays and threw a 1-yard touchdown pass to Brian Blades with 25 seconds left. John Kasay's extra point won it.

"Rick showed great character for a young quarterback," Blades said. "With the game on the line, he made the big plays."

Seattle (4-3) beat New England (1-6) for the second time this season. But the Patriots, using a blitzing defense and three field goals by Scott Sisson, made life miserable for Mirer until the winning drive. The Patriots clearly missed their rookie quarterback, Drew Bledsoe, out with a knee injury. Scott Secules was 15-for-30 for 129 yards and two interceptions.

Bills 19, Jets 10

When the Bills stalled on offense time after time, the defense came to the rescue. Darryl Talley's 61-yard interception return gave the Bills their only touchdown. Steve Christie kicked four field goals and Thurman Thomas ran for 117 yards.

Until Talley grabbed Boomer Esiason's pass in the flat one play after New York's James Hasty had an interception, the Bills couldn't get in the end zone. And the Jets (2-4) didn't get there after an 80-yard drive to open the game led to Brad Baxter's 1-yard TD run.

Buffalo (5-1) held the ball for over 37 minutes, gained 413 yards and didn't punt until five minutes were left in the game.

"The good thing about our offense was that it kept moving up and down the field," said Bruce Smith, who pressured Esiason on Talley's TD and later got his first interception at any level.

New York has lost three straight, blowing leads in each game.

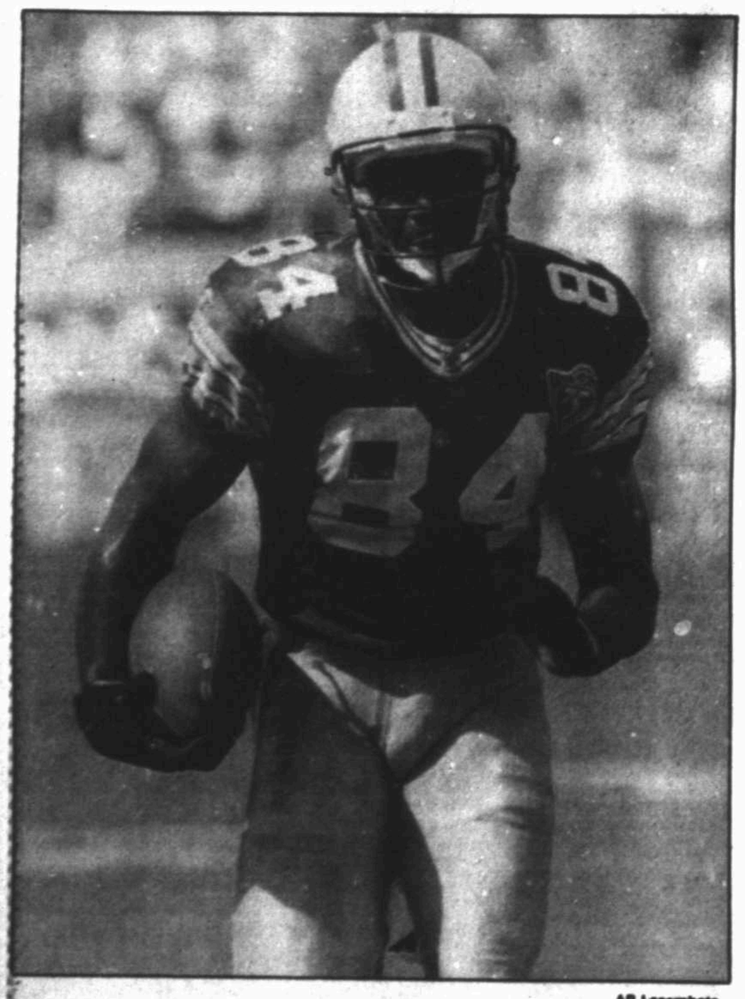

Falcons 26, Saints 15

After opening the season with five straight defeats, Atlanta has won two straight. After beginning with five successive victories, the Saints have dropped their last two.

Bobby Hebert, the quarterback the Saints did not want, returned to New Orleans and hit 13 of 16 passes for 132 yards and two touchdowns. Hebert replaced Billy Joe Tolliver early in the game when Tolliver hurt his shoulder and made the Saints regret not re-signing him.

"I faced a lot of emotions coming here," the Louisiana native said. . I'm not so naive that I didn't know they were going to boo me. I'm like the Benedict Arnold of New Orleans, going to Atlanta of all places."

Norm Johnson kicked four field goals for Atlanta, which held New Orleans to 47 yards rushing. Erric Pegram rushed for 132 yards for the Falcons.

Receiver Sterling Sharpe caught 10 passes for 147 yards and grabbed four touchdown passes from Packer quarterback Brett Favre Sunday in Green Bay's 37-14 win over Tampa Bay.

St. Louis expansion group focuses efforts

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A group trying to bring an NFL expansion franchise to St. Louis apparently has focused its efforts on getting a lead investor to shopping-center magnate Stan Kroenke.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch, quoting sources, said in Monday's editions that Houston businessman Robert McNair had dropped out of the running Saturday to be lead investor in the St. Louis NFL Partnership.

The newspaper said partnership chairman Jerry Clinton, James Busch Orthwein and former Chicago Bears great Walter Payton have agreed to either join the Kroenke group or be bought out by Kroenke.

Kroenke, 46, is a Columbia, Mo., real estate developer and avid sports fan who often jogs with Missouri football coach Bob Stull. He is said to have a net worth of more than $500 million. He has grown from co-owner of a single clothing store to developer of more than 50 shopping centers across the nation.

The Post-Dispatch said only Fran Murray, who also heads a group trying to buy the New England Patriots and move them to Hartford, hadn't agreed to terms with the Kroenke group.

Murray is believed to hold between 25 and 29 percent of the expansion team but has little money to back up that share. There were provisions under which Clinton could take Murray out of the group or dilute Murray's share if Clinton brought in new investors to the partnership, but it was uncertain whether those same provisions would apply under a Kroenke-led group.

All of the parties involved either declined to comment or could not be reached.

Clinton has been seeking a new investor since Orthwein reduced his role on Sept. 9.

The ownership group is supposed to make a 15-minute presentation on St. Louis' behalf Tuesday to NFL owners. That is the day the league is scheduled to award two expansion franchises.

Other cities in the competition are Baltimore; Charlotte, N.C.; Memphis, Tenn.; and Jacksonville, Fla.

Rep. Richard Gephardt, the House majority leader, has said he will be part of the presentation group.

matchups, more than any other school. Florida State has played in only one, a 17-16 loss to No. 2 Miami in 1991.

Ohio State remained No. 3 this week after pounding Purdue 45-24, while Miami moved up two spots to No. 4 after trouncing Syracuse 49-0.

Alabama fell one notch to No. 5 after beating Mississippi 19-14, Nebraska dropped one place to No. 6 following a 49-7 win over Missouri, and Arizona stayed No. 7 after edging Washington State 9-6.

No. 8 Tennessee, No. 9 Auburn and No. 10 Florida were idle.

Texas A&M, is 11th, followed by Penn State, West Virginia, Oklahoma, UCLA, Virginia, Louisville, North Carolina, Washington, Colorado, Wisconsin, Michigan State, Indiana, Michigan and Kansas State.

Syracuse and Washington State dropped out of the Top 25, and were replaced by Kansas State and Indiana.

Kansas State (5-1-1) moved up to No. 25 after tying Colorado 16-16. The Wildcats' last AP ranking was No. 20 on Nov. 9, 1970.

Indiana (6-1) rose to No. 23 after beating Northwestern 24-0. It's the Hoosiers' first ranking since 1991.

Michigan's 24-21 loss to Illinois plunged the Wolverines (4-3) 11 spots to No. 24, their lowest ranking since the AP poll expanded to 25 teams in 1989.

OILERS: Still struggle despite win scored on a 25-yard run with 1:54 remaining.

"I felt more like I was preparing for a regular game," Moon said. "I went into my normal progression. That helped me a lot. I'm still not sure mentally where I fit in or what my role is."

Until the late scoring show, the Oilers were struggling.

"Houston knows we had them on the ropes," former Oiler Jeff Query said. "If we could have capitalized on some plays, we could have won the game."

Cincinnati (0-7), winless in the Astrodome since 1984, moved to Houston's 1-yard line on the drive after White's go-ahead touchdown. But Jay Schroeder, subbing for injured David Klingler, was sacked on one play and Ray Childress recovered Schroeder's fumble on the next.

"I was just trying to move around and dropped the ball," Schroeder said. "We did move the ball at times and, once again, we shot ourselves in the foot."

Rookie Doug Pelfrey missed an extra point following Schroeder's 8-yard touchdown pass to Query in the second quarter that kept Houston ahead 7-6.

But Pelfrey made up for it with 3 seconds left in the half when he kicked a career-long 53 yard field goal. That gave Cincinnati a halftime lead for the second time this season. Cincinnati led Kansas City 12-7 at the half.

Derrick Fenner's 26-yard run and Schroeder's 11-yard pass to Query put the Bengals in position for Pelfrey's go-ahead kick.

Schroeder also completed a 21-yard pass to Carl Pickens to the Oilers' 32 to set up Pelfrey's 50-yard kick, his ninth in a row, for a 12-7 edge.

"It (confidence) is at an all-time high," Pelfrey said. 'It felt like I was back at Kentucky."

The Bengals could have had a touchdown moments earlier when Wesley Carroll broke completely free in the secondary, but was overthrown by Schroeder.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: The possibilities for career advancement are greater than ever. Stick close to home base in December. While others frolic, you land a sweet deal or special bargain. Family-run businesses should do especially well early in 1994. Children will fill a void in certain homes. Those who are teetering on the edge of matrimony are likely to take the plunge by midsummer.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Julia Roberts, singer Helen Reddy, violinist Midori Ito, basketball coach Bobby Knight.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A timely trip or letter helps you obtain the funds or favors you need. Once others are convinced that your plan is good for everyone, support quickly grows.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your sharp eye could spot stylish career attire on a bargain table. You may be able to turn casual chats with VIPs into big prospects. A new locale proves fun tonight. Nurture romance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are in an enterprising mood now, eager to upgrade your residence and add to your possessions. Your powers of persuasion prove hard to resist. Invest more time and effort in a literary project.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your creativity makes new procedures click. You finish a work or home project in record time. Discuss any financial concerns with a trusted family member.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Social plans made just for fun could yield hidden benefits. A long-desired goal moves within reach. Without support from loved ones, your career plans could nosedive. Seek their advice.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The financial outlook brightens. Change is difficult but necessary. A compliment may leave you wondering. Take a loved one's words at face value. Focus your energies.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You now experience greater balance in your life. Refuse to be rushed into making far-reaching decisions. An unconventional person aids an important personal quest.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An imaginative approach helps you find the best solution to a recurring problem. Tonight is a good time to run, walk or stretch. What you visualize can come to pass.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The clock is ticking on unfinished work. Do not let rumors or faulty information throw you off track. Going that extra mile is important for success. Comfort a loved one whose romance is on the rocks.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your enthusiasm for a creative venture returns, thanks to someone's encouragement. The outside resources or talents you need become available.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Today's events may show you have only seen the tip of the iceberg where a domestic situation is concerned. Thinking big will help you find success. Put romance on hold.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The action is all backstage today. You see a hard-to-spot opportunity to enhance a relationship. Take the wraps off a secret plan. Create strong foundations in your home and family life.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are strong, stable and persistent — exhibiting a will of iron in most matters. They love the color red and thrive on activity. Their many admirers will be like putty in their hands. Wise parents will let these active youngsters spend plenty of time outdoors.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A106 ♡J10 ◇AQJ872 ♣83
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♡	?

What action do you take?
A.—Despite possession of a six-card suit, the vulnerability is against you and you have the worst distribution possible. Nevertheless, we would still interpose three diamonds. Chances are that, should two hearts get passed around to partner, North won't have enough to act.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠984 ♡Q72 ◇9 ♣AQ10532
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What action do you take?
A.—Unless you have some agreement for inviting partner to bid game with a club fit, you will just have to bid three no trump yourself. Chances are too good that your hand will produce five or six tricks for partner.

Q.3—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠7 ♡953 ◇AK10932 ♣A102
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?
A.—If you play forcing jump raises, a leap to three diamonds describes the hand well and places you perfectly for further investigation. If you play limit raises, you have a problem. We suggest you start with two clubs and follow with a jump in diamonds.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ2 ♡K104 ◇K9 ♣A8653
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond. What action do you take?
A.—If you are going to bid with this hand, and we would, it should be safer to do so now rather than later. Our choice is a takeout double, despite the fact that we are a card short in at least one of the majors.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A852 ♡A94 ◇J53 ♣J75
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Even if your no-trump range is 16-18, partner's auction shows a maximum of 15 points. Therefore, game would be doubtful, and if partner has any less, unlikely. Don't endanger a sound partscore by venturing into risky territory. Pass.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠4 ♡1095 ◇10752 ♣AK762
The biddding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	Dbl	3 ♡	?

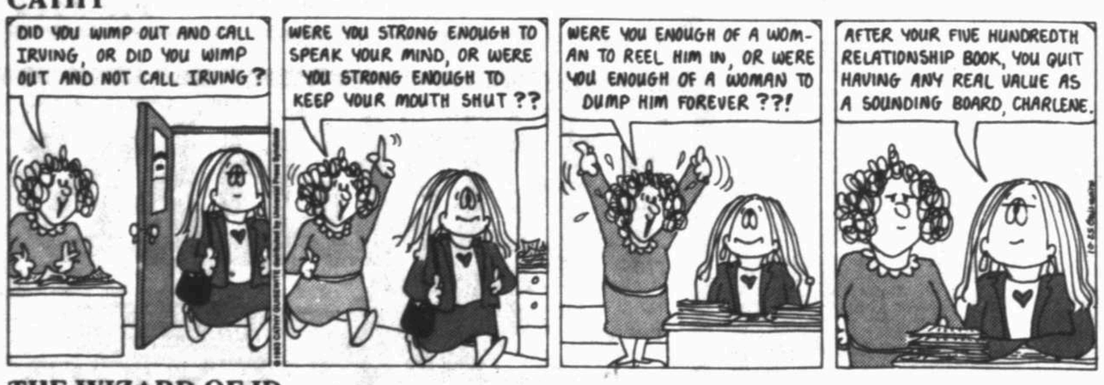

What action do you take?
A.—To bid or not to bid, that's the question over East's preemptive heart raise. It looks as if partner has a singleton heart, which means the hands are fitting well, so bid four clubs. That also has lead-directing advantages if either opponent continues on to four hearts.

Jackson recovers; over 120 fans require medical attention

SANTIAGO, Chile — Michael Jackson has recovered from his latest concert-canceling malady, but his fans aren't holding up too well.

Scores of people, both male and female, fainted and had to be carried away by guards and Red Cross volunteers as some 65,000 people jammed a stadium for his concert Saturday night.

More than 120 people required medical attention, said Alicia Garcia, head of the Red Cross team at the stadium.

"It was especially bad in front of the stage. They were falling like flies there," she told the Santiago daily La Epoca.

Jackson, however, appeared fully recovered from what his doctor described as a pulled back muscle that forced cancellation of a concert Thursday.

Chile was the third Latin American stop in Jackson's current world tour, following Argentina and Brazil. Peru is his next scheduled stop.

COLUMBUS, Ohio — He could have gone to Disney World, but instead a 13-year-old boy with muscular dystrophy chose a visit with Bob Vila.

Jason Packard is fascinated with construction and Vila's syndicated "Home Again" show on home renovation is the only television show he watches, said his foster mother, Lauretta White.

Jason journeyed with his foster parents from Peterborough, Ontario, on Wednesday to meet Vila, former host of PBS' "This Old House," who was in Columbus to videotape construction of a recreation center playground.

Repeating the signature opening from his TV show, Vila greeted Jason by saying: "Hi, I'm Bob Vila. Welcome . . ."

" . . . home again," Jason finished for him.

"I was very touched," Vila said later.

The trip was made possible by the Children's Wish Foundation of Canada, a nonprofit group that raises money to send ill children on the trips of their dreams.

"A lot of our friends were disappointed he didn't (choose) Disney World," Ms. White said.

LOS ANGELES — Is Christian Slater ready to settle down?

The star of the lovers-on-the-run flick "True Romance" has bought a Spanish-style hacienda in the Hollywood Hills for $2 million, the Los Angeles Times repported Sunday.

For that much money, he gets a gated, three-bedroom home that sits on slightly more than an acre and has a guest house.

Slater, 24, has starred in "Untamed Heart," "Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves" and "Heathers." He co-stars with Joe Pesci in an as-yet-untitled Barry Levinson film spoof on Hollywood, expected to be released next spring. Earlier this year, he was host of the MTV Video Music Awards.

MANDEVILLE, La. — What could be better to show off at show-and-tell than a famous great-grandfather like Orville Redenbacher?

The 86-year-old popcorn king accompanied his 7-year-old great-grandson, Anthony Bertoli, to the first-grade class at Woodlake Elementary School on Friday.

"I like to talk to children. It was fun," Redenbacher said. "I signed autographs, tried to answer all their questions, gave the teachers some pictures of me for the school and gave them all stickers that say 'I met Orville Redenbacher.'"

Well, maybe it wasn't really that big a deal for the youngsters, said Redenbacher's granddaughter, Pam Bertoli.

She said Redenbacher's fame hasn't fully dawned on the younger generation like Anthony and her 4-year-old son Ben.

"I think my children were more excited last week when my mother was in town," Bertoli said.

BOSSIER CITY, La. — Virginia Kelley doesn't talk politics. She leaves that to her son, President Clinton.

President Clinton and mother Virginia Kelley.

"I spent many years educating Bill how to speak about Washington," said Kelley.

Kelley takes criticism of her son in stride: "It'd be nice to have everyone like you, but that's not the way life is, is it?"

Between races Friday at Louisiana Downs — she placed $2 bets — she passed around a school photo of 13-year-old granddaughter Chelsea to about a dozen friends.

"I know I sound just like a grandmother, but she's not spoiled at all," Kelley said. "She's adjusted really well."

Wild Thing not alone in history

■ Williams is not the only pitcher to give up a Series-winning home run.

Associated Press

TORONTO (AP) — Mitch Williams' place in baseball history is secure, right there with Ralph Branca and Ralph Terry.

Branca and Terry, of course, are the poor souls who will be forever remembered for giving up two of the most dramatic home runs in the history of postseason play in baseball.

Williams joined the club Saturday night when Joe Carter hit a ninth-inning, three-run homer in Game 6 of the World Series that gave the Toronto Blue Jays an 8-6 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies and their second straight title.

The Phillies were just three outs away from forcing Game 7 after trailing three games to one.

Then Williams, the "Wild Thing," entered with a 6-5 lead. Curt Schilling, who forced Game 6 with a five-hit shutout in Game 5, knew it wouldn't be tension-free with Williams on the mound. He put a white towel over his head.

Williams responded immediately by walking Rickey Henderson on four pitches. He got Devon White on a fly before Paul Molitor, the World Series MVP, singled. Then Carter followed with his shot to left.

"We knew something good would happen when Mitch came into the game," Molitor said.

This was just Wild Thing's latest misadventure. In Game 4, Williams blew a 14-9 lead that allowed the Blue Jays to win 15-14, turning the Series in Toronto's favor.

Phillies third baseman Dave Hollins said Williams received death threats following Game 4 and had a gun to protect himself.

On Saturday night, Williams stood on the mound as the Blue Jays ran onto the field and celebrated. He put his head down and walked into the Phillies' dugout, his 43-save, two win-two save playoff mark against Atlanta forgotten.

Pittsburgh's Bill Mazeroski is mobbed at home plate after hitting the first ever World Series-winning homer against New York in 1960. Toronto's Joe Carter hit the second Series-winning homer Saturday night against Philadelphia reliever Mitch Williams.

"In this game, you can't take it back," said Williams, who fielded every question fired his way. "It's over and it's history now. I can't do anything about it."

If it's any consolation, Williams, isn't alone in his misery.

In 1951, Branca gave up Bobby Thomson's three-run homer in the bottom of the ninth to give the Giants a 5-4 playoff victory against Brooklyn and a spot in the Series.

In 1960, it was Terry who served up Bill Mazeroski's ninth-inning, Game 7 homer that gave Pittsburgh its Series victory over the New York Yankees.

As Branca and Terry found out, Williams won't be allowed to forget his blunder.

"I can't change what happened no matter how much I want to," Williams said. "I'm disappointed for my teammates because they busted their butts all season. But I'm not going to commit suicide. I'll be back next season and we'll have a good team."

Len Dykstra, who hit four homers and knocked in eight runs during the World Series, spoke of Williams' contributions.

"Mitch is one of the reasons we got this far," he said. "Mitch is a fighter. I'm not going to say anything bad about Mitch."

Carter's homer, like those of Thomson and Mazeroski, will be replayed hundreds of times through the years. And Williams no doubt will see it a few times, too.

But he also will pitch again. There are still games to play, and maybe even pennants and World Series to save.

Hakeem Olajuwon led the Rockets with 17 points and eight rebounds, Carl Herrera had 13 points and Mario Elie added 12.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Kevin Edwards scored 20 points, including 10 during a decisive third-quarter run, leading New Jersey to an exhibition victory over Charlotte.

onship, you run your rear end off," Wallace said after taking another backward victory lap around the track in honor of the late Davey Allison and Alan Kulwicki.

"We've got nine wins and three poles and a world class pit crew," the 1989 Winston Cup champion added. "We've really done everything we can do this year. We've got two races to win the championship if we can. Dale's run so strong, unless he has a problem he's going to go ahead and win it, but even if he does I can say we've had a wonderful year."

"I was catching Rusty and I was going real hard," he said. "I don't know if I could have caught him, but the tire started going down with about 10 (laps) to go. I could tell because it just wouldn't turn too good.

"Rusty just beat us today, but we had a good run and we're happy about today."

Early in the race, it appeared that Ernie Irvan was going to be as dominant as he was in the previous race, where he led all but six of 334 laps in winning at Charlotte Motor Speedway. But, after leading 86 of the first 92 laps, Irvan lost ground with handling problems and wound up a lap down in sixth place.

A rash of caution flags slowed the race early, with a "mystery car" dumping oil on the track. The yellow flag was displayed three times for oil on the track, but NASCAR officials were never able to determine which car was leaking, although they even went so far as the run the field slowly through the pit lane so officials could scan the cars during one of the early cautions.

The worst of several crashes in the race came on lap 124 when T.W. Taylor spun coming off turn two and was hit by both Kenny Wallace and John Andretti. Only Wallace was able to continue, although none of the drivers was injured.

Douglass defeats Dent in playoff

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dale Douglass birdied the first hole of a playoff with Jim Dent on Sunday to win the Ralphs Senior Classic.

■ Ralph's Senior Classic

Douglass and Dent closed with 7-under-par 64s to finish the three-day tournament at 17-under 196 over the Rancho Park course. Jim Albus, George Archer and Isao Aoki tied for third at 14-under.

Douglass, 57, earned $97,500 for his first Senior Tour victory of the year and 10th of his career.

"This was a thrill for me," he said.

Douglass and Dent began the day in a three-way tie for fourth, trailing Aoki, Archer and Larry Ziegler by a stroke.

Dent led Douglass by two strokes going into the final two holes of regulation, but he bogeyed the 17th and Douglass birdied to tie. Douglass had a chance to win on the 18th but missed a 9-foot birdie putt.

Dent, meanwhile, put his second shot into the left rough about 15 feet short of the green. His chip shot bounced through the rough to within 7 feet of the hole, and Dent sank the putt to force the playoff.

Douglass and Dent returned to the 18th for the playoff. Douglass put his drive into the middle of the fairway. Dent, using a 2-iron off the tee, hit the cart path down the right side of the fairway. His ball rolled down the fairway nearly 100 yards, leaving him with a 7-iron to the green but with a poor lie.

"First I hit the 2-iron too hard and then I hit the 7-iron too hard," Dent said. "Dale made some crucial birdies when he had to. I needed one good swing at 18 but I just didn't have it."

Douglass hit his approach within 5 feet of the flag. Dent pulled his 7-iron to the left of the green and then missed a 12-foot birdie putt. Douglass two-putted for the victory.

"I felt I was in contention when I eagled the par-5, 9th hole. Jim and I played well all day," Douglass said.

SERIES: 3 great years

scored once and had the tying run on third before Nixon was thrown out on a bunt try to end the game, 4-3.

Carter caught the last ball in that last game, taking the throw at first base after pitcher Mike Timlin fielded Nixon's bunt.

"I said before tonight's game that I thought I would catch the last out again," Carter said late Saturday night. "I didn't, but I'll take what happened instead."

Have three years ever ended with three such great games?

Even some research in the record books leaves it in doubt. Possibly it happened in the mid-1920s.

In 1924, with the great Walter Johnson on the mound, the Washington Senators won their only World Series title by beating John McGraw's New York Giants 4-3 in Game 7 on a bad-hop single in the bottom of the 12th.

In 1925, Pittsburgh came back from a three games-to-one deficit and won when it rallied late in Game 7 against Johnson to beat Washington 9-7.

In 1926, Grover Cleveland Alexander struck out Tony Lazzeri late in Game 7 — the part of Alexander is played by Ronald Reagan in the movie version — and St. Louis held off Babe Ruth and the Yankees 3-2.

Since then, though, probably nothing has come that close to matching the last three fantastic finishes.

More great moments, however, may be in store. Starting next year, baseball splits the leagues into three divisions and adds an extra round of playoffs.

Traditionalists complain that the changes will water down the game, and it might. There wasn't a whole lot of great pitching this expansion season, and there wasn't much in the World Series, either.

Still, a wild-card round means a few more playoff games. And on any October night — and yes, maybe one in November soon — there's always that chance of another memory waiting to happen.

LOVE: Runs away from Las Vegas tourney field

(From 1C)

really didn't matter.

"It was just something to think about, something to keep me going. Winning was the only important thing."

He finished the five-day, 90-hole tournament at 29-under 331. The victory was the eighth of his PGA Tour career and second of the season. It was worth $252,000 and increased his season's earnings to $727,259.

After Love holed an 85-yard sand wedge shot for eagle-2 on the first, he converted a wide-breaking 20-foot eagle putt on the third.

From that point, attention centered on second place and the race for the last few positions in the 30-man field for the Tour Championship, which begins Thursday in San Francisco.

Only the top 30 money-winners through the Las Vegas tournament are eligible for the $3.5 million season-ending event.

Craig Stadler made it, dropping a double-breaking 25-foot putt on the final hole for a 65 that put him second at 339. That was worth $151,200, increasing his earnings to 505,023 and vaulting him from 42nd to 26th on the money list.

Howard Twitty, who came into the week in 31st place, was squeezed out. That's the last qualifying position since Masters champion Bernhard Langer of Germany, the No. 13 money-winner is not a member of the tour and thus is not eligible.

Bob Estes just missed overtaking Rick Fehr for the last spot, leaving a 15-foot birdie putt short on the final hole. He finished with a 69 and was tied for third at 340 with Paul Azinger and David Edwards, both closing with 67s.

Azinger, who will defend his title in San Francisco and who is in a three-way battle for the money-winning title, lost a chance to take over the top spot in the money race when he hit into the water on the 17th and made a bogey.

John Huston (67), Bob Tway (68) and Canada's Richard Zokol (70) were another two shots back, tied for sixth at 242.

Love played the front side in 30, then birdied Nos. 10 and 13 to go 10 ahead.

Toward the end, he proved he was not flawless. He had to get up and down from a bunker to save par on the 14th and drove into a fairway bunker on the par-5 16th. On the par-3 17th, he pulled his tee shot into the water. It cost him a double-bogey that was of no consequence whatsoever.

NOW IS THE WINTER OF OUR DISC-CONTENT

Photos by Brian Adamcik Story by Myra Lee Salcedo

Alba aims between the ribbons circling a light pole.

Midland College student Adam Alba flings toward a Pole Hole target during a game of disc golf, a budding collegiate pastime.

It's all in the disc — and the wrist.

"You have to flip your wrist real fast," said Matt Jones, a Midland College sophomore who practiced snapping plastic discs into the air on a recent afternoon.

Neon-colored flying discs soared through the sky into a metal basket or glanced off various other targets on the MC campus.

Jones and a dozen of his peers are developing their skills in the sport of disc golf, a trend sweeping college campuses across the country.

"Texas Tech has a course and Big Spring has two courses," said Greg Brooks, a Big Spring resident and state champion in the sport.

Brooks recently took first place in distance throwing in the masters division (age 35 and over) and fourth place overall at the state championship in Austin.

Throwing the disc is like "throwing a Frisbee," Brooks said, noting that the discs for driving have beveled edges making them more aerodynamic. The clean cut of the disc and Brook's skill landed him the winning drive in Austin that measured 458 feet.

The disc golfer said MC's open spaces are ideal for the game.

"And the trees also help. They are like sand traps, obstacles for disc golf," he said, noting that lakes and ponds are hazards West Texans don't have to worry about.

Gazing skyward, MC government teacher Lee Almaguer, turned his wrist inward and demonstrated the throwing stance for a student.

The student took aim and threw a fast pitch that scuttled the flying disc along the ground.

"Hey, this isn't shuffleboard," Brooks cried, laughing and shaking his head.

"It's kind of fun and kind of frustrating," Jones said. "I haven't thrown a Frisbee in a long time, but I like it."

"My younger brother and Greg got me hooked on this," Almaguer said. "I heard Big Spring had a course. I called the Big Spring chamber and a television station before I found Greg."

Almaguer's effort paid off in getting Brooks to set up a course at MC.

"I hope the community gets involved," Almaguer said. "It's for all ages and would give something for kids to do, and keep them off of the streets."

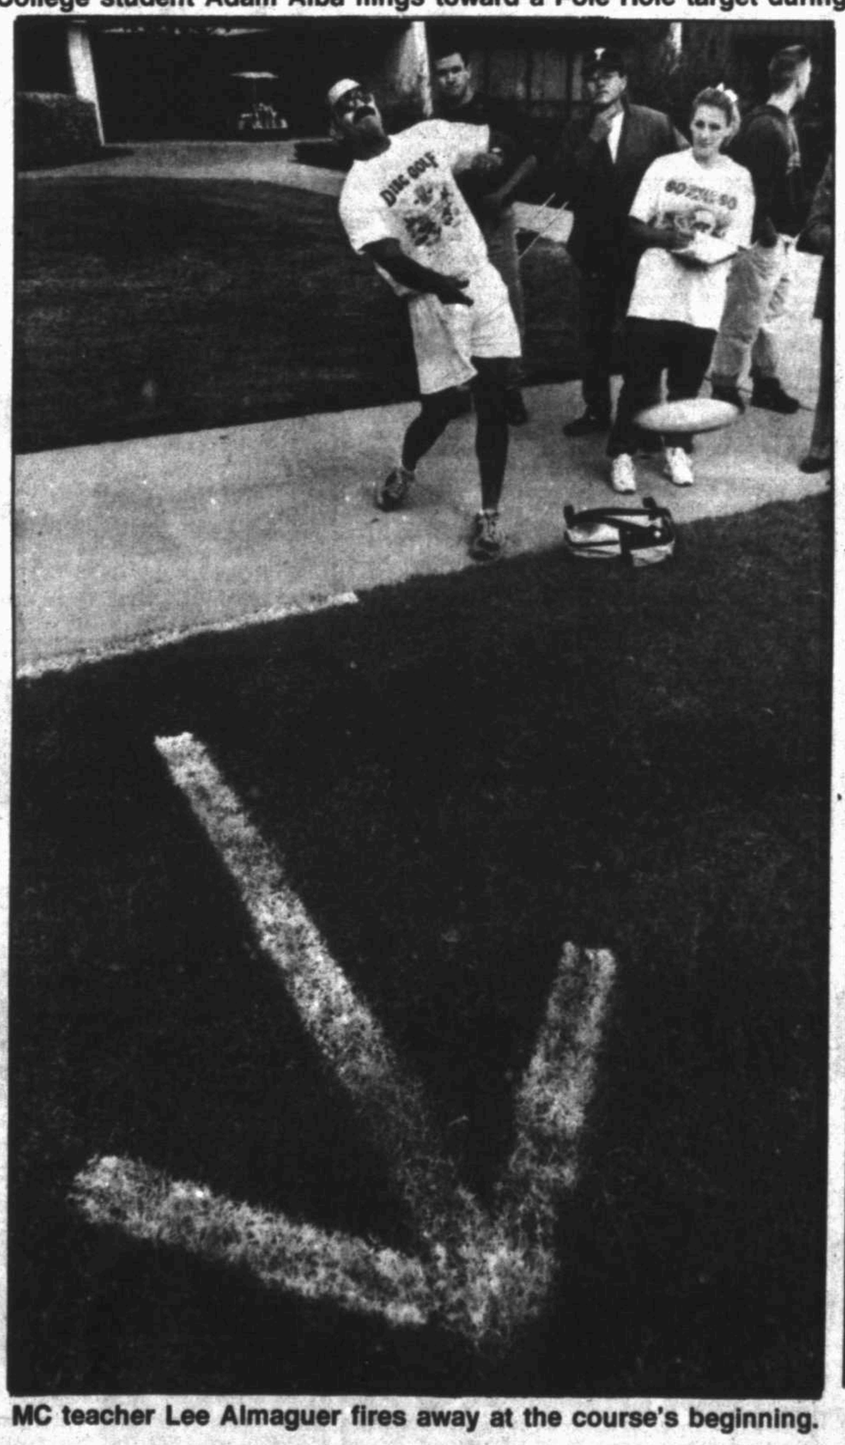

Proving the sport appeals to the younger generation, Brooks' son, Chrisopher, 2, tried his hand at throwing discs several times during the afternoon, tossing them a few feet.

Adult golfers throw the discs at ranges of 180 feet to 1,073 feet. Many courses feature Pole Hole (or metal basket) targets that cost about $300 each.

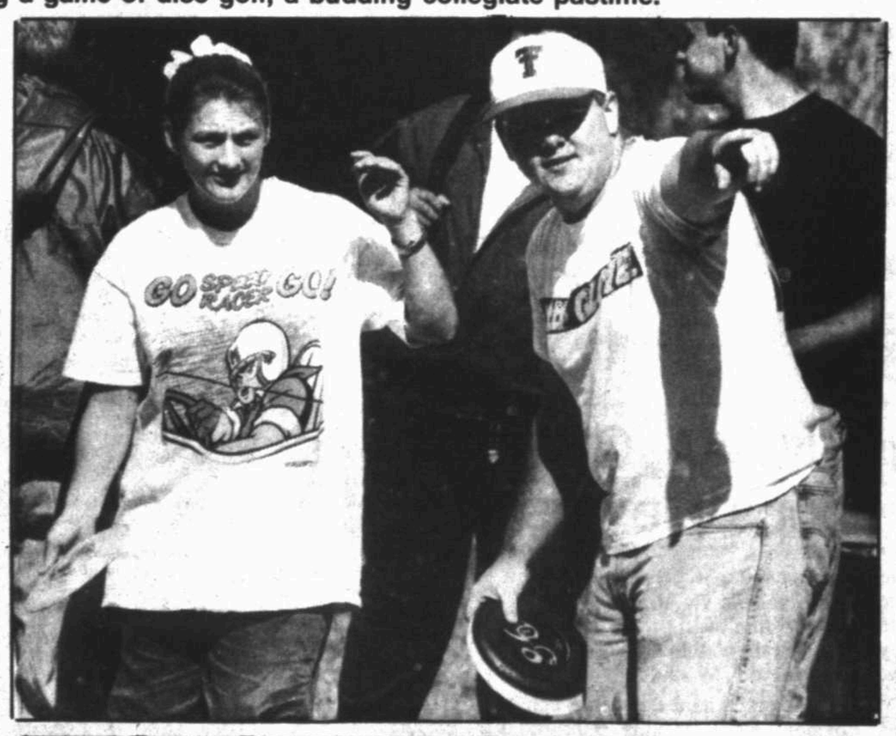

But as far as playing the game, it's relatively inexpensive. "All you need are three discs each (at a cost of $8) to play the game. There are no green fees, special equipment or clothing needed," Brooks said.

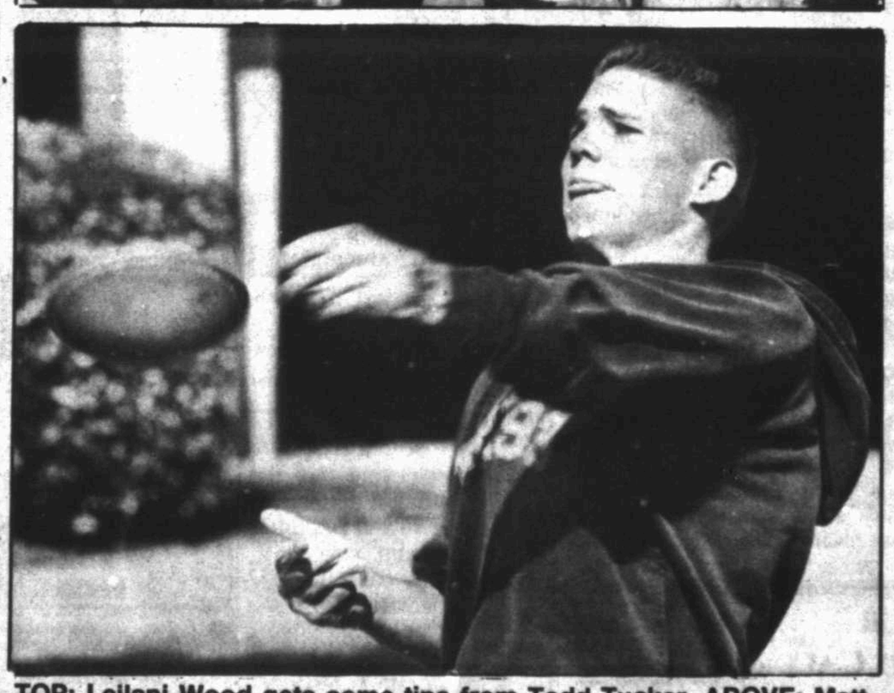

The MC disc enthusiasts said a disc golf club or tournament could be in the offing.

"But for now, we have to get better," one student said before chasing down an errant disc. "I keep missing the target and it tees me off," he said, grinning at his pun.

MC teacher Lee Almaguer fires away at the course's beginning.

Houston Davis ends loss streak

■ High school football team ends national-record losing streak with a win Saturday over Houston Wheatley.

Associated Press

It would have been easy for the players at Davis High School in Houston — losers of a national-record 80 straight games — to think "here we go again."

Wheatley High School in Houston had taken a five-point lead in the fourth quarter. But Davis coach Chuck Arnold convinced his team that good things could happen.

And they did. Finally.

A long scoring drive ended with a touchdown and the defense recovered a game-saving fumble, allowing Davis to win 19-18 Saturday night and putting the streak to rest.

"At times, it felt like we had beat our heads against the wall," said Arnold, his voice hoarse and his eyes moist from tears. "I've asked myself what keeps these kids coming back.

"But now, those who've stuck it out see it has been all worth it. We've had to learn patience as a virtue, but the thing for people to remember is that there's always hope as long as you keep trying."

The Davis Panthers inherited the dubious record in their final game last season, replacing Iberia (Mo.) High's 72-game streak from 1965-74. Iberia gave up football in 1989.

More than 1,000 Davis fans at Delmar Stadium rushed the field to celebrate Davis' first victory since a 7-0 triumph over Austin High School in Houston on Oct. 11, 1985.

Players carried Arnold on their shoulders before letting him enjoy the victory from ground level.

"This win is just now starting to sink in as I look around at this," said Arnold, pointing to players who were crying and hugging each other, cheerleaders and fans. "We finally got there. It may be just one, but it's something."

Arnold is 1-26 at Davis. Everyone wanted to congratulate the coach, from the quarterback of the 1962 Davis team to Wheatley coach Tom Hendricks.

"My hat's off to coach Arnold," Hendricks said. "I know he's been through a lot. His kids played real hard. I hate that it happened against us, but we'll be back."

Davis star Coleman Bates rushed for 214 yards and a touchdown on 27 carries.

"It's a good feeling and a big relief," he said. "We've worked hard for this."

The Panthers were close to winning three of their previous four games but lost 12-10, 21-15 and 14-10. Arnold feared another loss would make his players wonder whether they'd ever win again.

What's more, Davis was actually favored to beat winless Wheatley, a playoff team last season that's played so badly this season they lost to the junior varsity team at a school that opened this fall.

For most of the first half, Davis was on its way. Bates took the first play from scrimmage 78 yards for a touchdown. The last play of the first quarter was a 48-yard TD pass from Derrick Lane to Albert King.

Then came the mistakes: a pass with 14 seconds left in the first half was intercepted and returned 16 yards for a TD; an early fourth-quarter fumble set up Wheatley's go-ahead score with 10:54 to play.

But every time the Wildcats scored, they missed extra points. A kick failed, a two-point run attempt was stopped and a two-point pass went incomplete.

Down 18-13, the Panthers responded with a 14-play, 80-yard drive that lasted more than seven minutes and put them ahead 19-18. The two-point conversion attempt failed, naturally.

Wheatley looked like it might pull out a victory, driving to Davis' 26 with about four minutes to play. Then Jose Becera forced Wheatley quarterback Dwayne Steele to fumble. Sergio Villereal recovered and Davis stared head-first at a victory.

Finally.

Car dealer says NCAA, OSU investigating hoops players

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The NCAA and an attorney for Ohio State have investigated attempts by four basketball players to buy cars, an auto dealer said Sunday.

On Friday, the NCAA and the university looked at dealer records involving players Greg Simpson and Charles Macon. Each bought cars at Dennis Isuzu in early in July, said Aaron Masterson, vice president at the dealership.

Both were able to buy cars after relatives co-signed their loans, Masterson said.

Employees at the dealership became suspicious when Jamie Skelton and Derek Anderson wanted to have people who were not related to the them co-sign car loans, Masterson said.

He would not identify whom Skelton and Anderson wanted to have as co-signers.

"The deal didn't look good and feel good," he said.

Materson said he was told by an Ohio State official that because the transactions with Skelton and Anderson did not take place, there were no rule violations.

"We didn't want to be the reason Ohio State couldn't field a basketball team," he said.

Masterson said the dealership's owner, Keith Dennis, contacted Ohio State athletic director Jim Jones about the attempted deals.

Jones said Sunday that no one from the dealership contacted the athletic department and he could not comment on anything ongoing with the NCAA.

Calls to NCAA headquarters in Overland Park, Kan., were not answered Sunday night. No one answered calls to Ohio State coach Randy Ayers and a message was not immediately returned.

In May, the NCAA ruled that recruit Damon Flint would be ineligible to play basketball for the Buckeyes. The NCAA cited 17 alleged violations stemming from eight Ohio State contacts with Flint. Flint since has enrolled at Cincinnati.

310 General Help Wanted

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?
YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just wa t to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?
Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?
Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?
An initial $100 refundable deposit is required.
