City council, MidTran agree to contract

By KAY HORD

City council members Tuesday agreed to enter into a contract with MidTran, providing $30,000 of $50,000 necessary for the first year's budget.

Under the contract, the city will provide the funds to enable MidTran to pursue Midland's transportation study and implementation of a transportation plan.

Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. said, "We enter into this contract with the understanding that MidTran will be looking into other means of funding and that further requests may be forthcoming to the city."

John Ingram, president of MidTran Corp., told the council that $45,000 would be the minimum amount of funding acceptable for the first year and that a $50,000 budget was preferable.

"Our intention in forming MidTran is multifold. We hope that performance of a public transportation system will not hamper private enterprise. We feel strongly that we are addressing an area of transportation that is needed in the city and we feel that we have the ridership needed for a public transportation system," Ingram said.

Before entering into the contract, council member Tom Sloan questioned Ingram and Paul Forney, with General Motors, Inc., at length on whether MidTran would be in competition with private cab companies.

"MidTran would be the broker of transportation services throughout Midland," Forney said. "In this area, it would assist other employers in implementing car pools, van pools and coordinating with companies. It is not our intention to compete with private companies, such as the cab companies or The Chauffeur. In some cases, MidTran might even subsidize some cab fares, if transportation is needed immediately and it's unavailable. We might call a cab to pick the person up and then subsidize part of the cost of that ride," Forney said.

Councilmen also approved substituting the word airport for air terminal in Midland Regional Air Terminal. The change will be effective immediately, or as soon as it can be accomplished physically, Angelo said. Also approved was the authorization for architectural graphics, plans and specifications for a marker, complete with new logo, to mark the entrance to the airport. Cost for the graphics would be $1,960, Col. Wilson Banks, aviation director at Midland Airport, said.

Funds were approved under Project AT-72 to furnish a conference room at the airport. Council members agreed to advertise for bids on the furniture and then set the amount to be spent on furniture.

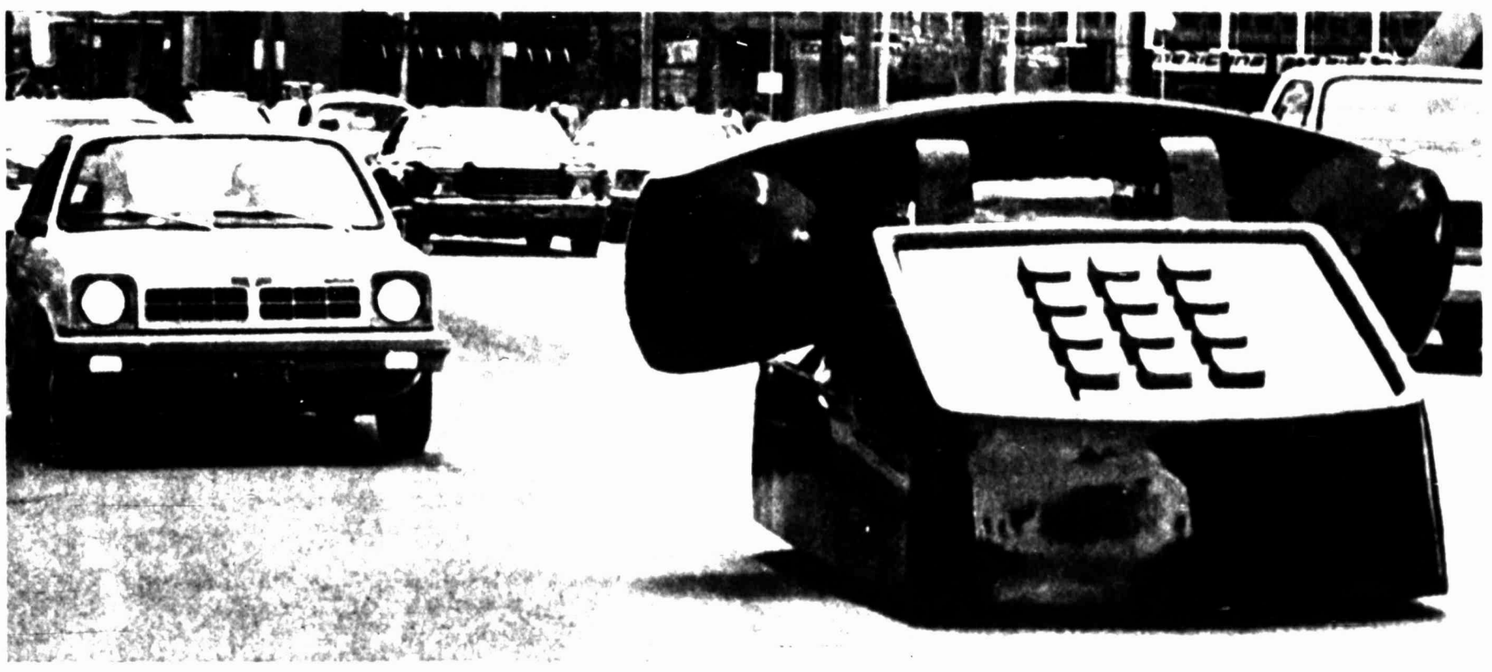

Approximately an hour was spent listening to suggested solutions on improving the utilization of Midland's parks. Approximately 40 residents, most of whom reside near city parks, complained to council members about littering, broken glass, teen-agers drinking alcoholic beverages, loud music and other problems. The Parks and Recreation Commission had requested a study in improving utilization of the parks.

Angelo appointed two council members, Tom Sloan and Gordon Marcum II, to study the situation by discussing it further with residents, Police Chief Wayne Gideon and City Attorney Joe Nuessle.

The water tower and property in the 200 block of East Illinois Avenue will be put up for sale. Council members agreed to advertise for bids, opening those bids at the next council meeting.

Earl Lewis appeared before the board to continue a discussion on leasing the property and converting the tower into office and restaurant facilities. Lewis offered to pay the $1,000 expense fee required earlier of the contractor who bid on dismantling the tower and to post a performance bond which would require Lewis to Support sought for holding line on school taxes

By ED TODD

Taxpayer Ron Britton Tuesday night likened school taxes to a "sacred cow."

Britton and others were meeting to drum up support to put pressure on the Midland public school board to keep the tax rate down. Britton went on to say a "sacred cow" survives on the premise that to be against higher taxes for education's sake is to be "against education for your children."

In lieu of raising taxes, Britton said, "incompetent teachers" should be fired, the budget should be scrutinized and cut, and land values should be "reasonably" appraised for taxing purposes.

"They appraised everything I've got at the top market value as if they (the assessors) could find somebody with money to burn," Britton, an independent consulting engineer, told some 50 people attending the taxpayers' rally in the Parish Hall of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity.

Groups of Midland County taxpayers have held at least two meetings recently to protest taxes determined by this year's re-appraisals.

At the Tuesday night meeting, Britton zeroed in on teachers' demands for pay increases, which he condoned with certain reservations.

"I'm for people making as much as they can in this country," he said.

"The total ($25 million) budget of the independent school district can be cut, and we can have a tax reduction," said Britton, the owner of downtown office buildings as well as some acreage just outside the northern city limits.

"Any janitor in my building would like a $1,000 a week pay raise," Britton said, "but I can't afford him. That's kind of how I feel about the school system."

Britton said enrollment in Midland public schools has dropped from 16,240 to 15,900 in the past five years, while the schools budget has virtually doubled — from $13.8 million to an estimated $25 million in the 1978-79 school year.

Half of that budget goes for salaries for teachers and staffers, he said.

On the average, Britton said, the 630 classroom teachers in Midland public schools work 145 days per year, earn base salaries between approximately $10,000 and $17,000, and have taken 9.7 days of their allotted 10-day sick leave per annum.

"We've got the working class supporting the leisure class," Britton said.

While taxes and the school budget increase, student "grades are esca-

Gas pricing to Senate conferees

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's omnibus energy bill, stalled in Congress since December, seems to be on the move again with apparent acceptance by House-Senate energy conferees of a compromise on natural gas pricing.

The compromise, calling for deregulation of newly discovered gas in 1985, is up for expected approval today by Senate members of the conference committee working on the energy legislation.

Barring the unexpected, they will approve the plan on a 10-7 vote, clearing the way for final action by both houses. Seven Democrats and three Republicans are expected to make up the majority.

The compromise, which took nearly six months of delicate negotiations between key conferees and Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger, was approved Tuesday by House conferees on a 13-12 vote.

That vote was viewed as the critical one by conference leaders, because support for the month-old plan among House conferees had been far more fragile than in the Senate.

A coalition of House Republicans and liberal Democrats almost managed to wreck the compromise on Tuesday but failed by one vote. The GOP members want quicker deregulation and the liberals say any form of deregulation will be a burden on consumers.

Deregulation is intended to provide industry with enough financial incentive to explore for new supplies of gas for interstate shipment.

Gas shipped in interstate pipelines has been under federal price controls since 1954.

Completion of action on natural gas pricing would free four parts of the president's five-section energy program — which he submitted in April 1977 — for final action by both houses.

However, conference leaders say they expect it will take four to six weeks to put the complex legislation into final form, meaning there probably will not be floor votes until some time in July.

And the gas price proposal also faces a likely filibuster on the Senate floor possibly led by a coalition of oil-state conservatives and liberals who are hardcore opponents of deregulation.

The fifth part of Carter's plan — energy taxes — will be handled separately. It includes the president's politically unpopular proposal for a tax on domestic crude oil. Congressional leaders hope to be able to send the tax bill to the White House this year.

The other three parts of the program, on which conferees reached tentative agreement months ago, deal with energy conservation, industrial coal conversion and electricity rates.

James Flug, director of Energy Action, a public interest group which has been lobbying against deregulation, said on Tuesday that the gas pricing compromise would cost the average family of four using gas about $200 a year in added heating bills.

Her land re-appraised 4000 percent

An elderly Midland widow said Tuesday night that a more than 4,000 percent increase in the appraised valuation of a section (640 acres) of her land in northwest Midland for school tax purposes may break her financially.

"I won't have anything to live on," said Louise M. Barron, widow of former Midland County Judge E.H. Barron.

Mrs. Barron, following a meeting of about 50 taxpayers concerned about increased valuations of their property, said that her acreage has been appraised this year at $652,780 for purposes of taxation by the Midland Independent School District. It previously was valued at $14,730, she said.

"I've had that land out there for 40 years," Mrs. Barron, 75, said, "and it's been used for farming and ranching purposes."

The new appraisal figures out at $1,001 per acre.

She said she would appear before the board of equalization to contest

MC trustees OK budget proposal

By MARLEEN RAY

The Midland College Board of Trustees Tuesday approved a $5,342,606 budget proposal and salary increase recommendations for the upcoming fiscal year at its regular meeting.

College President Dr. Al G. Langford said a public hearing will be held June 20 to give Midlanders a chance to express their opinions on the tentative budget. Following the hearing, the board is expected to adopt the final form of the budget and set a property tax rate, he said.

The proposed budget is $440,966 more than the current one. Business Manager Bob Phillips said because property valuations are expected to increase from $960,551,790 to $1,036,789,600 this time, he recommends the trustees keep the present tax rate of 22 cents per $100 valuation. He estimates income generated from this tax rate will amount to $2,280,937 in 1978-79 compared to $2,113,200 in 1977-78.

Before the budget proposal was drawn up, Langford said, each staff level had to justify its fund requests, line by line. Phillips noted that increased costs primarily were due to salary and benefits increases and new staff appointments and programs.

Under the proposal, the college has an educational and general budget of $3,826,838 and an auxiliary budget of $438,407. Auxiliary items include intercollegiate athletics, student activities, the bookstore and food service. Also, it has budgeted $1,077,361 to pay off its bonds of indebtedness.

The tentative budget covers the fiscal year beginning Sept. 1 and ending Aug. 31, 1979.

Concerning salary increases, the trustees agreed to raise incomes of summer school instructors from $650 for a three-hour course to two-thirds of the regular academic year instructors' salaries. Also, they approved increasing part-time summer school teachers salaries to $690.

In addition, the board approved a $1 raise per hour for part-time instructors during the regular academic year. These instructors currently earn $11 an hour. It agreed to raise division chairmen's incomes from $500 above a 12-month teacher's salary to $800 above.

For other college employees, the trustees voted to hike the secretarial clerical salary schedule $40 at each level, amounting to about an 11 percent raise. They agreed to increase the salary schedules of technicians and maintenance and ground personnel by $30 at each level, resulting in an 8 percent raise.

Better-paying work here out-did that in his home country.

"I came here," Bell recalled, "and got work. There weren't no jobs in Calvert."

He didn't hang around too long.

"I stayed and made a few hundred dollars and went back to Calvert. Pretty soon I ran out of money, and just before I ran out, I came back."

Except for his overseas tour during World War II, Bell has been in Midland since his return from East Texas in 1940.

"You could make some money then (in Midland), and back in East Texas, you couldn't," he recalled. "I worked for 75 cents a day in Calvert, and came down here and made $12.50 a day and board." That was in '39, when he took care of kitchen chores, such as dish washing, in the Log Cabin Inn restaurant.

Now, Bell, who's about as amiable, good-natured and headstrong as a fellow could be, has done work most, given the choice, would shun. But he took pride in his task, no matter how menial, and outshone many.

He popped the rag on leather footwear, stocked shelves and swept out the store, did some flat-foot work as city cop on the night-shift beat, worked at the country club and, finally, in 1950, started his 27-year career of hauling intra-city mail for the U.S. Postal Service. His first mail truck was 1½-ton Model A Ford.

"Oh, man, we made more money shining shoes than the barbers made," recalled Bell, who worked for Ray Godfrey's barber shop. "I'd get 15 cents a shine," plus, he said, what he'd get from tipping; that's where the money was. The barber would get about six bits a clip.

He did some stocking, clerking and general clean-up work at Cameron Drug Store. And sometime in the '40s, he was catering to the socially elite at the country club.

"At one time, I was head boy at the country club," he said.

Bell's stint in patrolling the streets

Forensic dentistry slated in effort to identify body

ANDREWS — Forensic dentistry work was scheduled for today in an effort to identify a man's body found Tuesday morning partially covered by a pile of gravel 14 miles east of Andrews.

A spokesman for the Andrews County Sheriff's Office said workers resurfacing Texas Highway 176 found the body behind a pile of gravel next to the road.

The man had been shot in the chest, head and twice, superficially, in the hand, with a .22-caliber weapon, the spokesman said. Evidence indicated the body was unloaded from a vehicle and dragged several feet, he said.

"It's hard to say when he died because we haven't got the pathologist's report, yet. But he (the pathologist) thinks the man had been dead more than 24 hours before he was found," the Sheriff's Office spokesman said.

The only clues to the man's identity, officials said, are a valve stem remover and a plain, gold wedding band, which were found in the man's pockets. All other identification had been removed, the spokesman said.

The dead man was described as a white male in his late 20s or early 30s, approximately 6 feet tall, weighing 150 to 155 pounds with short, brown, curly hair and a brown mustache. He was wearing a short-sleeved, brown western-style shirt with pinstripes forming checks. He also was wearing khaki pants and a belt with a black, leather-covered buckle, such as the type worn by service station attendants to prevent vehicles from being scratched while being serviced, the Sheriff's Office said.

The Sheriff's Office today termed the death a homocide. An autopsy has been ordered by Peace Justice Jay Williams.

A.A. Bradford dies in Dallas

Andrew A. "Jack" Bradford of No. 24 Oaklawn Park in Midland died Tuesday in a Dallas hospital.

Services will be at 11 a.m. Thursday in Memorial Christian Church of Midland with the Rev. John Long, pastor, officiating. Burial will be in Sweetwater Cemetery directed by Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Bradford was born and reared in Sweetwater. He moved to Midland in 1950. For six years he served as director of Midland Savings and Loan Association. He resigned that post in 1959. During the 1950s and 1960s, he served several terms as president of the Board of Trustees of Midland Memorial Hospital.

Bradford was engaged in oil and ranching businesses. He was a mem-

Nuclear protesters claim small victory

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — Anti-nuclear weapon demonstrators who scaled the fence at the Trident submaripe base at Bangor for two straight days are claiming a small victory — a clogged court system.

The coalition of groups participating in the demonstrations Monday and Tuesday wants to draw attention to its opposition to nuclear weapons and to a U.N. special session this week on disarmament.

A lawyer for the protesters, Kirk Jones of Seattle, said 108 of the people arrested Tuesday went before U.S. Magistrate Robert Cooper in Tacoma and 157 went before U.S. Magistrate John L. Weinberg in Seattle.

However, a lack of secreterial staff in Tacoma prevented that group from being arraigned, Jones said. They will have to appear for arraignment Thursday before a Seattle magistrate.

All those arrested Tuesday were released on personal recognizance.

Jones said the charges involved either simple trespass or re-entry, for those who were issued letters barring them from the base after their arrests Monday.

U.S. marshals said 292 people were arrested at the base Monday. All but five were freed without being charged, although they were given letters barring them from the Navy base.

The demonstrators used ladders and pieces of carpet to climb over a 6-foot barbed wire fence at the 7,200-acre base, which is being built on the Kitsap Penisula at a cost of $640 million. Construction began in 1974 and the first of the new generation missile firing Tridents is expected in the spring of 1981.

The 560-foot-long Tridents, which are being built in Connecticut, are the biggest submarines in the world. Each will be armed initially with 24 missiles with a range of 4,000 miles. The range will later be increased to 6,000 miles.

Texas geologist top gold bidder

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Except for some jewelry and a tooth filling or two, Morris Cannan has never owned any gold. But when he decided to buy some, he didn't fool around.

He has apparently bought 50 pounds for $145,800.

Cannan, a San Antonio geologist who usually confines his prospecting to oil and natural gas, was the high bidder Tuesday in the first government gold sale in three years. He was surprised and not especially overjoyed at the news.

"I hate to hear it," Cannan said at his office here. "I didn't know enough about it I guess, because the West Germans and the Swiss bid lower than I did. It looks like my evaluation was poor."

"I never had owned any gold before," said Cannan. "I didn't know that individuals could bid in this sale. I had been curious and inquired around."

He bid $182.35 per ounce for 800 ounces and was the high bidder in the Washington auction. He was the lone individual to submit a bid, with the remainder of the 300,000 ounces auctioned Tuesday apparently going to various West German and Swiss banks for more than $180 per ounce.

The awards will not be officially announced until Thursday.

What will Cannan do with two 25-pound bars of gold?

"I guess I'll put it in a bank box or something. I don't really know," said Cannan, who first learned about his apparent purchase from reporters. "I'll use it as an investment. I'll probably dream up something."

The geologist said experts had told him the gold was more pure than most available to buyers. Cannan said he hoped that would justify the higher price.

Only 59 bidders applied to buy the gold in Tuesday's auction, compared to 700 at the last auction.

The minimum bid was for 400 ounces.

Government officials said the gold will be transferred from a Treasury vault to any location the buyer pleases. After the last auction, one buyer carried a gold bar with him in his briefcase, government officials said.

The highest commercial bid was by a Swiss bank, which bid $181.26 per ounce for 800 ounces.

Peruvian workers urged to return to their jobs

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Labor unions urged workers back to their jobs today after a 48-hour general strike that shut down Peru's largest cities and left eight persons dead.

Scores more were wounded by gunfire, flying glass, rocks and tear gas and hundreds of others were arrested in disorders that erupted in 28 cities.

Some observers feared the protests against government decreed price hikes might be sparked again in the near future, but most Peruvians appeared ready to restore calm.

On Tuesday, rock-throwing and highway-blocking incidents erupted in industrial and slum zones in Lima. Authorities also said power lines in the northern cities of Chimbote and Chiclayo were sabotaged.

Hundreds of protestors were routed by police teargas when they tried to march from the big Lima slum of Villa el Salvador to neighboring areas.

The military government of Gen. Francisco Morales Bermudez clamped curfews on Lima and Huancavelica, 125 miles to the east, and warned violators would be shot.

Convoys of armored personnel carriers rumbled through Lima's streets with machine guns mounted for action. Others circled Lima's slums and industrial areas.

Arequipa, 450 miles to the south, was paralyzed for the eighth straight day by an "indefinite" strike. Housewives stood in their doorways beating pots and pans in protest.

The Socialist Revolutionary Party labeled the walkout the most "unified and important political act in our republic's history."

The strike was against hikes in bus fares from 5.7 cents to 8.5 cents and gasoline from 53 cents to 89 cents a gallon. Most food prices went up 50 percent, while cooking oil went up more than 100 percent to $1.31 for a liter (2.1 pints). Per-capital income in Peru is $700 a year.

Motorcycle accident kills youth

ODESSA — An 18-year-old Odessa man died Tuesday night from injuries received in a motorcycle accident, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Darrell Lee King was riding his motorcyle about 5:35 p.m. Tuesday in a caliche pit on West 20th Street when the vehicle slipped and fell back on to King, according to Trooper Gary Adams of Odessa who investigated the accident.

He died at 7:20 p.m. Tuesday in Medical Center Hospital, according to the DPS.

Zaire refugees face returning hardships of starvation, epidemics

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — Refugees returning to Kolwezi face starvation and epidemics, the commander of French forces in Shaba Province says, while rebels were reported retreating through Zambia carrying off "many European hostages" and loot.

"We are in a dead city," Col. Yves Gras said Tuesday. He told reporters in Kolwezi the city has no water, electricity or food for the flood of returning black refugees, and with the city's vital copper mines closed, no income.

A relief official said there is a serious threat of typhoid and cholera from the hundreds of rotting corpses in the streets of Kolwezi, a city with a normal population of 100,000.

A Red Cross official returning to Kinshasa said all white victims in the town had been identified and their bodies buried, but black corpses remained in the streets. Some foreigners in Kinshasa were angry that the Belgian paratroopers, who also jumped into Kolwezi to aid in the evacuation of an estimated 2,500 foreigners, pulled out before all of the bodies had been buried.

In Paris, President Valery Giscard d'Estaing told reporters Tuesday night that the French troops will be withdrawn from Zaire as soon as they have traced foreigners still missing.

"The unit of French parachutists sent to Kolwezi to guarantee the protection of foreign residents will return to its base as soon as it has completed its task of searching for persons who are missing or who may have been taken away as hostages," he said at the end of a meeting between France and 21 African countries.

"The Zaire government will be informed of the date of this withdrawal, so it can draw the necessary conclusions and reorganize the defense of the territory," he said.

A European relief official said as many as 300 white foreigners remain unaccounted for after the week-long occupation of Kolwezi by invading Katangan exiles from Angola. He said it was believed that some foreigners had been taken prisoner by the rebels who were driven out of the provincial capital over the weekend by about 600 French Foreign Legion paratroopers.

British newspapers reported from Lusaka, capital of neighboring Zambia, that hundreds of rebels were fleeing southern Zaire into northwest Zambia on their way back to bases in Angola.

One rebel leader told correspondents in northern Zambia that the retreating troops had "many European hostages," including women and children.

The newspaper reports in London said many of the fleeing rebels, part of the estimated 4,000 rebels who invaded southern Zaire May 12, were seen marching along jungle roads en route to Angola carrying radios, cameras, clothing, household goods and other loot. They said Zambian villagers reported seeing a 100-vehicle convoy, mostly cars and trucks stolen in Kolwezi, carrying heavily armed soldiers in the direction of Angola early Tuesday.

French soldiers operating in the bush outside Kolwezi, 840 miles southeast of Kinshasa, reported finding 20 French women and children hiding from the rebel gang that had killed male members of their families, the French Defense Ministry said. It also said it had received unofficial information that the legionnaires also had found 20 more victims of the rebel rampage at a new massacre site.

There still has been no precise count of the number of foreigners killed in the Kolwezi area, but the ministry spokesman said it may exceed 200. Earlier counts put the toll at about 170.

remove the tower at his own cost if he did not utilize it. Lewis also offered the city two floors of the completed building as office space in lieu of rental.

Council members decided, instead, to put the property up for sale. They also agreed to contact the contractor who had submitted the bid on dismantling the tower and ask him to extend his bid deadline until the next council meeting.

The contractor had told council members that he must be notified by Tuesday of whether he was awarded the bid to remove the tower. Councilmen decided to ask him to extend that deadline in case the council decided not to accept the bids and to remove the tower anyway.

A consulting firm was hired and aerial photographs approved in a drainage study of portions of north Midland. The council authorized Parkhill, Smith and Cooper of Lubbock, a consulting firm, to subcontract for the aerial photographs of six sections bounded on the east by Texas Highway 349 and on the south by FM 868. The drainage study should be completed in nine or ten months, a spokesman for the firm said.

In other business, the council passed a new ordinance returning closing-out sale fees to businessmen who have gone out of business, waived the franchise tax for The Chauffeur for six more months, passed the second reading of an ordinance establishing a fire lane to Midland Memorial Hospital and agreed to consider during the next budget hearings a request for $100,000 by the Visual Improvements Committee to plant oak trees on Wall Avenue from North A Street to the Federal Building.

Council members also approved advertising for bids to construct a half-court basketball court at Fasken Park. The council agreed to accept, toward that basketball court, $900 raised by 23 families in the park's vicinity. The remainder of the cost will be paid by the city from general and surplus funds.

Re-appraisal at 4000 percent the re-appraisal, which in taxes would cost her about $7,540 a year, according to a tax statement issued by the school, college and hospital districts.

"You know," she said, "it's not reasonable. This is going to cost me more than one-half of my income to pay this," she said.

Her property is on the outskirts of Midland's northwest section, where, due to commercial and residential development, land prices have been upgraded in recent years.

She said may have to sell some of that property to pay the ad valorum taxes but that she is reluctant to do that.

"The government takes (in taxes) everything you sell," she said.

Tech student wins scholarship

LUBBOCK — Midlander Riley L. Barton, a student at Texas Tech University, has received a $300 scholarship as an outstanding business administration student at the university.

Barton, a junior student, was one of four 1978 recipients of the special award for outstanding students, established by Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Johnson Jr., of Lubbock.

lating upward," and C- and D-level work is getting A and B marks, he said.

"The school system is going down," said Britton, asserting that the achievement level of students is deteriorating.

Britton urged those attending the Tuesday night rally to show up at today's 1:30 p.m. school board meeting to put pressure on the board not to give teachers the "maximum" pay raise they are seeking.

"If we're not at that meeting in mass . . ., that 30 percent increase is going to go through like a railroad train," Britton said.

The 30 percent hike, Britton claimed, would be more than the state schedule for teachers' salaries and would increase base salaries from approximately $11,000 to almost $20,000. Other proposals, Britton quoted school administration proposals as saying, call for 25 percent and 22.5 percent increases. He also cited a Midland public schools' staff committee proposal which, he said, would increase the teachers' salary range to about $12,000 to $20,000.

Britton predicted a 4-2 school board vote in favor of raising teachers' pay to the maximum.

He said the board's two "conservatives," Ed Runyan and Ann Page, would vote against the maximum pay raise.

Supporting the increase, Britton speculated, would be James Ramsoure, who would vote "across the board"; David Grimes, who, too, "has voted rather across the board"; Marshall McCrea, an "unknown" who would vote with the mainstream"; and Joe Dominey, about whom Britton said, "I'll guarantee he'll vote to give them (teachers) anything they want."

In case the votes come to 3-3 tie, Britton said he wasn't sure just how School Board President Johnny Warren would vote in breaking the deadlock.

MCAA allocates $7,250 for relief

About $7,250 of an allotted $8,000 has been spent by the Midland Community Action Agency as relief funds for area families, said MCAA executive director Alexandra Morris on Tuesday.

More than 127 families applied for relief through the agency's Emergency Energy Application Program, but only 47 families have qualified, said Mrs. Morris.

Mrs. Morris said before MCAA can determine whether a family meets the qualifications the organization "has to verify their incomes and their needs.

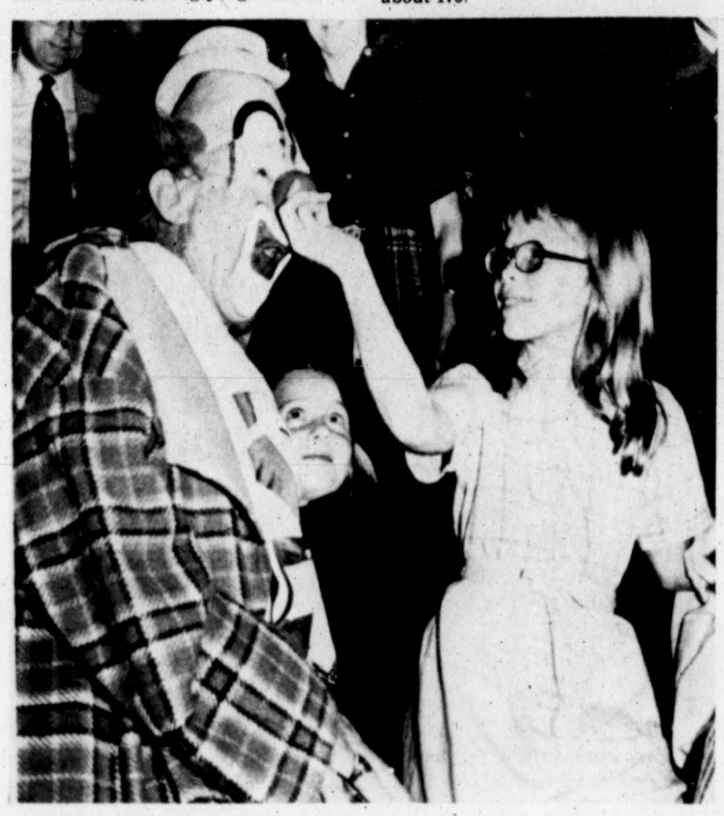

"Some of the files are not closed yet," she said. "We have 60 more families to process who filed before the May 20th deadline.

"The majority of our recipients are elderly people living on Social Security who have been caught by inflation."

in the late 1940s was brief. He, Norris Cornett and Julius Armstrong stalked "over in 'the flats,' you know." But Bell didn't exactly take to arresting his friends and neighbors, and disturbing both his and their lives.

He's a peaceable man, and soon he shed his blue shirt and badge.

" . . . I just quit," Bell said after he had walked the beat three or four months. "I didn't like police work, 'cause that was too tough, man."

In 1948, Bell married a lady named Tenola, who had served stateside as a lieutenant in the Women's Army Corps. (Bell was drafted in '42, served in a truck outfit in the China-Burma-India Theater, and was mustered out a sergeant. He stayed off the frontlines. "I never did want to kill nobody.")

His wife is an English teacher at San Jacinto Junior High School.

The Bells wound up with two children, Nicarrah "Nic" Bell, a draftsman in Midland, and Ida McCoy, a schoolteacher in Odessa, and are grandparents three times over.

The saga that is Bell's life is not heroic. Similar sagas have been repeated many times, and many haven't blossomed as well as his.

Bell, 65, retired from the Postal Service late last year. Since then he, keeps himself occupied by doing this-and-that odd jobs, driving around in his gray 1968 pickup truck, going to lodge meetings, and in working at Macedonia Baptist Church. He's even considering re-organizing a Boy Scout Troop, No. 157, which he helped establish in the early 1960s. He was Scoutmaster.

He enjoys pointing to two southeastside frame houses, which some now may view as shacks, where he and the family lived before settling in a comfortable, three-bedroom brick house in a cozy neighborhood in 1961.

"I'm going to sell it or tear it down," Bell said of the first house in which he and the missus set up homemaking in 1948. "It was pretty nice then."

"You know me and my wife manage pretty well," Bell said. "We're staying together."

In a corner of their house, in the roomy kitchen, hangs a proverb gentle Bell might have scratched out himself:

Lord fill my mouth with worthwhile stuff, and nudge me when I've said enough.

Bell doesn't claim saintliness as his No. 1 character trait; few men would dare suggest they be canonized after they have departed this world.

But he says there are innate differences between people: "Some of us are better by nature than others are by practice."

Maybe more rain — maybe not

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport said there is a chance for thunderstorms tonight, possibly severe. The probability of rain is 30 percent tonight and 20 percent Thursday. Moist air from the Gulf and heat from the area are causing a pattern of instability, the weatherman said.

The high Thursday in the upper 80s should be a little cooler than the 90 degrees reported Tuesday. The mercury tonight should drop to the middle 60s.

Winds tonight should be decreasing to 15 to 20 mph.

Area towns reported the weather early today was "just right" with clear to partly cloudy skies and warm temperatures.

Gunbattle stops daring schoolbus hijacking

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — Czechoslovak border guards shot three gunmen who hijacked a school bus carrying 45 children and attempted to force it across the border into West Germany, officials said today.

Czechoslovak soldiers, using at least one armored vehicle, killed one of the gunmen and wounded the other two in a gunbattle near the Muehlbach border crossing point, said a spokesman for the Bavarian State Interior Ministry. A young girl in the bus was slightly injured.

The spokesman said Czechoslovak authorities told their German colleagues the three men hijacked the bus at gunpoint at a dam near the city of Cheb while its young passengers were picnicking.

The hijackers made everybody get on the bus and forced the driver to take them to the border crossing. On arrival, they demanded the border guards allow them free passage to Schirnding on the West German side.

Guards surrounded the bus and an armored car blocked its path, the spokesman said. A first ultimatum expired without either side taking action.

The children, from a small village outside Prague, apparently were on a school excursion when the hijackers surprised them. Their ordeal began early Tuesday evening and ended early Wednesday.

Bavarian border police watched the disabled bus being towed away at dawn. They said about 25 Czech soldiers and the armored car took part in the battle.

Two weeks ago, a Czechoslovak airliner on a domestic flight with 40 passengers and a crew of six was hijacked to Frankfurt.

Those hijackers, two Czechoslovak taxi drivers and their families, surrendered to airport guards and asked for political asylum. Police served them with arrest warrants for air piracy.

Wright, Jordan and Gonzalez voted "nay."

NEUTRON BOMB. Rejected, 90 for and 306 against, an amendment to knock funding for the neutron bomb out of the fiscal 1979 Department of Energy national security budget. The aftermath of the vote is that President Carter is free to order production of the bomb next year. Neutron bombs are tactical nuclear weapons that inflict most of their damage by enhance radiation. The amendment was proposed to HR 11686, later passed and sent to the Senate.

Eckhardt voted "yea."

Wilson, Teague and Young did not vote.

SENATE

F-15 SALE. Rejected, 44 for and 54 against, a resolution to cancel the $5 billion arms package that includes the sale of 60 F-15 fighter jets to Saudi Arabia. With this vote the Senate approved the transaction. Since no addition congressional consent is required, the sale is scheduled to go through. Although the package also includes planes for Israel and Egypt, controversy centered on the Saudi sale.

Senators voting "nay" favored the arms sale.

Sens. Lloyd Bentsen, D, and John Tower, R, voted "nay."

Pig Lady hog wild over job

"I dig pigs," is printed on the front of her often grimy T-shirt.

"I just love my job," says the brown-haired Miss Hois, 27.

A graduate of Southern Illinois University, where she earned a degree in animal industry, her working attire includes blue jeans tucked into muddy rubber boots.

"I wanted to do something that women don't do," says Miss Hois, 5 feet tall and single. "Raising pigs sounded pretty good."

But she had trouble finding a herdsman's job after graduating in December 1976.

"People wouldn't hire me. Some excuses were that I was too short, or was female, or lacked experience. They'd offer a job as an assistant, or pay only $400 a month. I got propositioned a couple of times.

"North Dakota was the only place to give me the job I wanted."

Don Hartness, who farms near Gwinner, hired Miss Hois at a beginning salary of $10,800 a year. Now she's earning $12,000.

"I told them I'd improve their breeding stock and help them make money. I accomplished everything I said I was going to. But the pay isn't high epough and I can't start my own farm. The money is in sales, so I'm leaving in June to sell hog confinement buildings out of Peoria, Ill."

Miss Hois, whose father is a photographer in Oak Lawn, Ill., puts in a 60-hour week. She is on the job daily and has two male assistants.

"I'm responsible for these pigs. I feel each one is my little pet," she says.

"I've handled about 5,000. The major part of the job is selective breeding. Farmers from Minnesota and North Dakota buy replacement gilts (young females) from us."

Miss Hois is involved in the entire operation, from the farrowing and finishing houses to the nursery. She repairs fences, performs castrations and helps sows give birth.

"I try to wear makeup and keep my weight down," she says. "If you work a hog farm, you can start looking sloppy. I try to take pride in myself."

The worst part of the job, she says, is using a high-pressure sprayer to clean the stalls. "Keep your mouth shut or you get a mouthful."

The most difficult work, she says, is slaughtering pigs that are dying. And the reward comes "when I sell the gilts and the buyers are really happy."

Miss Hois has other pets: four dogs, two cats, two squirrels and a horse. "We're all going to Illinois," she says. "I wouldn't leave them behind."

Bubble blowin' adult pastime

By CHARLES CHAMBERLAIN

NAPERVILLE, Ill. (AP) — They're forever blowin' bubbles at Amurol Products Co., where 42 tons of bubble gum are produced weekly.

Ream's bushy mustache never seems to interfere as he chews, forms bubbles 4 inches in diameter and lets them burst on his face.

The whole office and plant force sometimes get in on testing, chewing instead of whistling while they work.

"When we get some competitors' gum we pass it around for reaction," said Ream, 36. "And if we are working on new formulas or evolving combinations we see how our workers like it. The final test is by a panel of three specialists."

What makes bubble gum bubble?

"Rubber," says Ream. "Well, let's put it this way — highly refined food-grade latex, synthetic rubber. Flavoring helps in the sale of bubble gum, like it does in all gum, but the big difference is plasticizing characteristics. A good piece of bubble gum should provide a comfortable chew for about 1½ hours."

As a gum-chewing, bubble-popping specialist, what does Ream look for?

"In the initial chew, the gum must be soft and cohesive," he said. "The immediate flavor must not be bland. The flavor and sweetness should come out in a consistent manner in the first three to four minutes. When solubles are chewed out, the insoluble cud is left and the final chew begins — that's when it's ready for blowing bubbles. Incidentally, did you know that some baseball players mix chewing tobacco with their bubble gum?"

Ream said more adults are chewing bubble gum today than ever before, "perhaps because of nostalgia."

Paul Rogers, company president, said one-third of bubble gum chewers are adults, a third pre-teens and a third teen-agers.

"A big breakthrough came about five years ago when sugarless gum hit the market," said Rogers. "Bubble gum — now soft with wild flavors — is a greatly improved, quality product today and has become more available, reaching the shelves of the supermarkets. Bubbles can be blown anywhere — it's a youth-oriented part of the society rebellion. Bubble gum will make up about $300 million of the $1 billion gum market this year."

Amurol makes about 21 tons of other kinds of gum per week. One of its newest is a "thirst-quenching" gum with ingredients that stimulate the saliva glands.

Gum is mixed in huge vats and laid out on moveable trays in different flavored chunks resembling big bricks. The chunks are fed into extruding machines and come out in lengths the size of ropes.

These are cut to the required sizes and fed into wrapping machines like cartridge clips into a machine gun.

Simple consumer contracts urged

By CAROL DEEGAN

NEW YORK (AP) — Teri Rosen believes consumers should be able to understand the leases, loan forms, retail credit agreements and other consumer contracts they are asked to sign each day.

"There is a growing awareness on the part of consumers of the right to be able to read what we sign," said Mrs. Rosen, 28, "and an awareness on the part of business that it makes good sense to communicate to people in a language they can understand."

In addition, several states, including the state of New York, are adopting legislation that makes mandatory the simplification of certain consumer contracts.

So, Mrs. Rosen has become founder and president of a consulting firm that helps business and professional people write clearly.

"We help take the mystery out of contracts, leases, insurance policies and other business forms that say 'sign here'," she said. "We help create written materials that are technically correct, legally sound and, at the same time, easy to read."

Mrs. Rosen said more easily readable contracts can help the consumer — and business.

"Consumers are aware of the fact that they have practically a God-given right to sue. I don't like what my landlord does, I'm going to take him to court," she said.

"Well, that's fine, except the courts are backed up with people like this because they do not understand what their responsibilities are and what happens if they don't keep their responsibilities."

The first three pages of a lease agreement may contain a description of the apartment building, with building codes and many other kinds of information.

"Yes, it's important information, but not to you. You want to know which apartment do I have, how much do I have to pay for it and when? And how often do I get a paint job and whose responsibility is it to pay for the electricity? That's what we want to know," she said.

Mrs. Rosen tells her clients to get to the point of their document right away. Tell people in the first sentence and, if possible, in big letters, what they have to do.

Do landlords, insurance companies and others deliberately write their forms so that the consumer will not be able to understand what he is reading?

"You know, I have to admit that when I first started doing this, I expected there would be a kind of conspiracy afoot to deliberately make the language obscure and all that," she said.

But, she added, it has been her experience that businesses are open to suggestions to simplify their documents; that often they don't realize just how obscure their documents are.

"It saves time and money in the long run, it's good public relations, and so the response has been favorable," Mrs. Rosen said.

Staff members of the firm, Wordwright, have rewritten a booklet for Equitable Life, making insurance easy to understand, she says. They also have rewritten the parking violation forms for the New York City Departmetnt of Consumer Affairs, among other projects.

The staff includes writers, lawyers and public health specialists. And they do more than just simplify vocabulary.

The time has come!

The United States and the free world face a challenge of tremendous proportions — for which no meaningful response has been constructed.

The problem has to do with the unchecked intervention of Cuban troops in Africa, sustained and manipulated by the Soviet Union, of course.

How to save newly independent and weak African nations from Communist colonialism has become a top concern of U.S. foreign policy. And well that it should.

President Carter's recent sharp denunciation of Cuba for acting under Soviet direction in sending troops into the Middle East as well as Africa suggests a new realism in Washington. This is a far cry from Mr. Carter's earlier efforts to normalize relations with Cuba and full circle from the balmy time last year when United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young described Cuban troops in Angola as being a "stabilizing influence." We now are paying for some of those foolish comments and actions.

But the next day after the President expressed the hope that Fidel Castro would withdraw his troops from Angola, Mozambique, South Yemen and Ethiopia, there were unconfirmed reports that Cubans were among invaders from Angola and Zambia who had crossed into mineral-rich Africa. American words, no matter how strong, are in themselves no match for such deeds. This is a simple measure of this nation's dilemma of how to keep the African continent, with all of its vast raw materials, from being dragged into the Soviet orbit.

Castro has made it clear on several occasions that he doesn't care how much the United States protests; he is going right ahead in his world "leadership" role.

If Zaire is overrun, it would mean an almost solid Soviet-Cuban bridge across central Africa, stretching from Angola's Atlantic coast to the Red Sea coast of Ethiopia. This huge bloc in turn would overshadow and further isolate Rhodesia, which, it is feared, will be the next target of Cuban troops.

Those troops are estimated to number more than 50,000. They are stationed in 15 African nations, where their influence ranges from outright control to low-profile military assistance. Soviet planes and modern weapons give them mobility and striking power far beyond what their numbers would warrant against poorly organized, ill-equipped native soldiers. Despite mounting casualties, Cubans are reported to be proud of their enlarged and threatening role on the world stage. Castro is said to be delighted at his success as a missionary of communism. He is showing a complete willingness to do Soviet bidding in Africa in return for the $4 million Moscow spends every day to sustain Cuba's ailing economy.

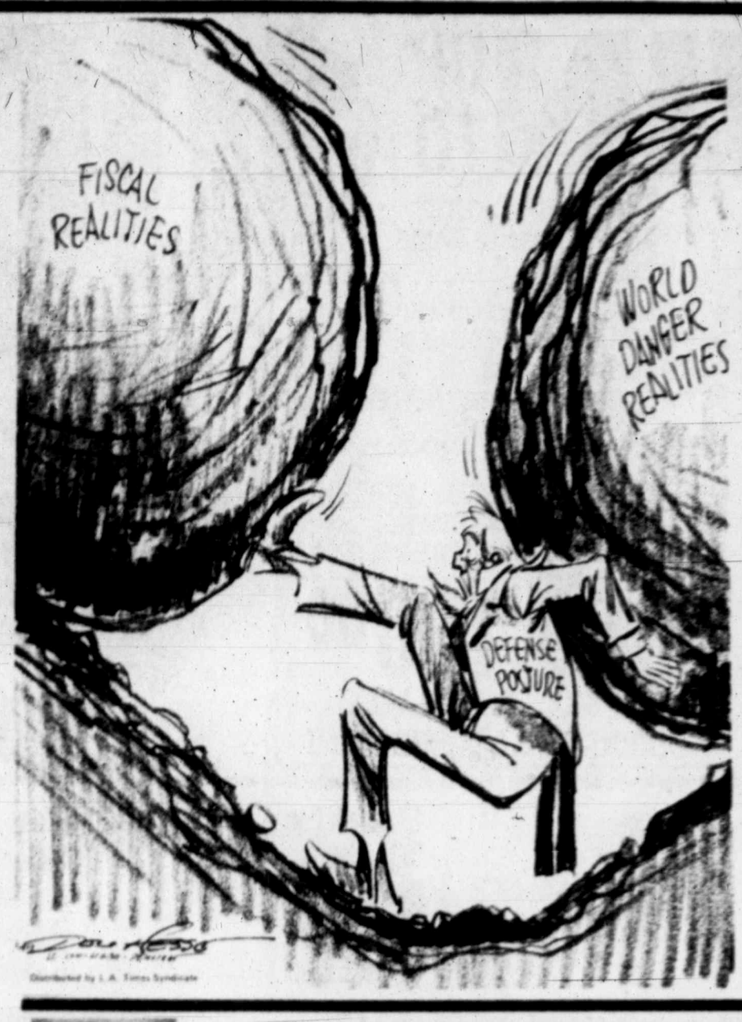

No one can envy President Carter's task in fashioning a defense against further Soviet inroads in Africa. The bitter aftermath of our costly and futile effort to defend Southeast Asia from Communist conquest militates against direct American intervention in Africa, as the Kremlin well knows.

The free world is yet to develop a formula whereby threatened nations are inspired to defend themselves with the same fanatacism as attacking native Communists or, as in the case of Africa, surrogate troops of another Communist nation.

Even so, the free world should not and must not be helpless to act, lest it be nibbled to death. In the end, however, leadership must come from the United States. It is expected that countermeasures, perhaps in the form of military assistance, will not be forthcoming unless the American people perceive the danger they will face when Africa, or most of it, is added to the Eurasian land mass that already has fallen under red domination.

In the absence of forceful leadership in Washington, it is likely the President and Congress will act only in response to public opinion.

We believe that the time has come for the American people to assert themselves. Tomorrow may be too late.

ART BUCHWALD

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — A small news item in the papers a few weeks ago caught my attention. A young man named Tom Hansen, 25 years old, decided to sue his parents for $350,000 damages because he thinks his family failed to rear him right. He claims that, because his father and mother failed to raise him in the correct manner, he may have to have psychiatric tratment for the rest of his life.

Hansen's lawyer in Boulder, Colo., John Taussig Jr., said the suit alleges that the parents were guilty of willful and wanton neglect.

"Basically what we are doing is bringing a suit of malpractice of parenting," Taussig said.

All over America children will be watching the outcome of the suit. If Hansen wins in court, it will open up an entire new legal situation, and may force most parents to take out very expensive malpractice insurance at the moment they produce a son or daughter. This would raise the cost of bringing up a child even higher than it is now, and it may discourage young couples from having children.

Many kids, when they reach puberty, blame their parents for everything that has gone wrong in their lives, but most of them get over it when they grow up. But if the verdict goes in favor of Hansen, they will be encouraged to seek out a lawyer and demand damages for cruel and unusual punishment, which might include making them come home at a certain time, requiring them to clean up their own rooms, do the dishes, and inflicting lifelong traumas by forcing them to do their homework.

Phillip Colburn, who lives in Los Angeles, is terribly concerned about the problem and told me on the phone, "If children are permitted to sue their parents for malpractice in parenting, why can't parents sue their children for mental anguish, misappropriation of family funds, slander and misuse of the family car?"

I told him it sounded fair to me.

He said, "Most parent have aspirations and unfulfilled dreams about their children. During the teen-age years of their offspring, many fathers and mothers are forced into going to a psychiatrist. Others become permanently deaf from their son's or daughter's stereo systems. Many parents suffer ulcers and nervous disorders waiting for their children to come home from a school dance. Still others go into deep depression when they discover pot in their children's pants' pockets. If our kids are going to sue us for what we've done to them, then we should be allowed to seek damages for what they've done to us."

"It could be a class action suit," I suggested. "That way we could all save on legal costs."

"Parents don't ask too much of their children when they grow up ... maybe an occasional telephone call to tell us they're okay, a kind word when they come home for a visit, a few grandchildren to bring us joy in our old age. If they can't do that, then I think we should bring legal action against them."

"You better believe it," I said. "There are a lot more disappointed parents in this country than there are disappointed children."

"I also believe that if we've sent them to college, and paid $40,000 out of our own pockets to educate them, they should be able to read and write or else give us our money back."

Colburn and I both agreed that if the judge ruled in Hansen's favor, and the Supreme Court upheld the decision that children could sue their parents for malpractice, it would make parenthood a whole new ball game.

"The next time my kid asks for $10 to go to a rock concert and I refuse to give it to her and she screams bloody murder," Colburn said, "I'm going to tell her, 'Sue me.'"

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Witches infiltrate Armed Forces

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — The armed forces have been infiltrated, it seems, by witches, demons and those who engage in strange doings in the night. It is whispered that the latter includes believers who worship in the nude when the moon is full.

The presence of these unorthodox types in the military ranks has been acknowledged, quite seriously, by the chaplains who are expected to attend to their spiritual needs.

For $30,000 of the taxpayers' money, a private firm has offered the chaplains solemn instructions on how to minister to military personnel who may belong to such unconventional religions as the Church of Satan, Council of Witches and Native American Church.

The unpublished 261-page study by Kirschner Associates, said a Pentagon spokeman, is intended to keep chaplains end commanders better informed about emerging religions. It may become part of the chaplains' manual.

"Many witches are presently military personnel," the study discloses. They are expected to master "magic," rituals and psychic development, and they worship inside a circle inscribed on the ground or floor.

One faction, called the Gardnerian Wicca, has the chilly habit of worshiping au naturel "at the full and new moon." They require such paraphernalia as a bowl of water, a censer with incense and six candles in candlesticks. A sword and talisman "are optional."

Chaplain are advised that witches have no dietary taboos and that, in case of death, it would be permissible for any chaplain to offer spiritual comfort."

The disciples of Satan, the study notes, may appear decidedly nonsatanic. They tend to worship success, and "one's level of membership within the church is commensurate with his or her position outside the church. Hence, a respected career soldier or commissioned officer in the Army" might be a secret Satanist.

Worship consists of "three basic kinds" of rituals: "sexual rituals, to fulfill a desire; compassionate rituals, to help another; and destructive rituals, used for anger, annoyance or hate." Rituals are likely to include the use of such mysterious items as a black robe, altar, chalice, elixer, sword and "model phallus."

Since the Satanists "believe in what the Christian Church opposes," it might be awkward for chaplains to minister to them. The chaplains are merely advised that "the Central Grotto (satanic headquarters in San Francisco) should be contacted in case of death."

Members of the Native American Church, the study reports, used to dance the ghost dance on festive occasions. Now they merely hold all-night services and ingest peyote. The drug "is considered a sacrament and is venerated." Therefore, this church is the only religious group that has received court permission to use an illegal substance in its ceremonies.

HIDE-AND-SEEK: Day after day, a deadly game of hide-and-seek is played between the drug smugglers and the federal lawmen who are supposed to stop them. It's a game the feds are losing, because the mobsters can afford faster boats and planes.

The fascinating story is told in secret government files that chronicle the federal agents' occasional triumphs. But 80 percent to 90 percent of the drugs slip through their fingers, according to their own estimates. Here are excerpts from the classified reports:

—Agents got suspicious the other day when they noticed on a bill of lading that a candy company in Bogota, Colombia, had paid $1,912 to fly $1,612 worth of chocolate bars to New York City. They discovered 85 pounds of cocaine concealed in hollowed-out chocolate bars.

—Alert agents recently zeroed in on a 1971 Ford rolling along a highway through New Mexico and Arizona towards San Diego. They found more than 12 pounds of heroin concealed in a secret compartment. "The taillight had to be removed to gain access to the drugs," a secret summary of the incident said.

—A sophisticated cocaine press, which looked like an automobile jack, was discovered in Boston. "The press was capable," according to a secret document, "of compressing cocaine to the shape of a standard bar of soap." It was probably "the first time that a hydraulic cocaine press has ever been seized ... in the United States."

—The fishing vessel Lady Ellen off the North Carolina coast sent a code message to confederates on the shore. The Coast Guard responded and seized 20 tons of marijuana "in plain view on deck."

Most of the profits from the illicit drug trade are funneled into organized crime. The mobsters use the money to finance criminal activities, corrupt public officials and invest in legitimate businesses. But it will take more than law enforcement, according to concerned officials, to curtail organized crime. It will take the cooperation of the people themselves who support the mob by purchasing drugs, placing bets and otherwise patronizing organized crime.

NICK THIMMESCH

The Cuban revolution: Timing made big difference

Nick Thimmesch

HAVANA, Cuba — One feels a twinge of regret that Fidel Castro's revolution, if it had to happen, didn't begin now — 18 years after it actually did — for it wouldn't have been caught up in Cold War dramatics, the understandable urge to invade, assassination plots and a tough embargo, justified at the time.

If this Cuban revolution, thorough as it is, began now, perhaps Fidel would have been shrewd enough to avoid the strictures of state socialism and the religious urge to crusade for other revolutions and become the charismatic hero of the Third World.

Perhaps Castro's 1978 revolution would have allowed a helpful mingling of the U.S. economy with Cuba's economic aspirations. Maybe a Havana baseball team would be in our major leagues. Surely, there would have been a lot of back and forth traffic with tourists and safe and sane conventioneers.

Alas, this is all pipe-dreaming. But what a shame to see Cuba in the Marxist-Leninist strait jacket. True, the Castro regime has nearly wiped out illiteracy, but the citizenry's reading choices amount to virtual censorship. True, education has become universal for the first time in Cuba's history, but it is oriented toward duty in a totalitarian state.

No Cuban is forced to wear rags, and nobody goes hungry, but the overall standard of living has declined under Fidel. And while religious groups are not persecuted, atheist indoctrination is so fervent that it perversely reminds one of Born Again Christianity.

The work ethic is preached and practiced. Teen-age children live and work at the Lenin Vocational School, spend afternoons in a pleasant factory where they work on assembly lines, turning out radios and baseballs. They live and work at the school, in custody of the state, and are allowed to go home weekends.

Some 130,000 Cubans attend a network of 28 higher education centers, and are reminded that college training must ultimately serve the state and the revolution. Students are given everything — board, room, tuition, laundry, barber or beauty parlor services, and even 30 pesos (about $36) a month spending money.

The exodus of professionals, especially doctors, crippled Cuba for years, but now there are plenty of physicians, para-medics, engineers and teachers — enough to send them off to Africa to help revolutions there. Students can vote at age 16, have rarely showed any signs of rebellion, and worship Che Guevara, the revolution's heroic martyr figure.

"Che was close to being the perfect man," says Dr. Wilfredo Cordoba, 38, the charming and enthusiastic Director for International Relations at the Ministry of Higher Education. For Dr. Cordoba, the revolution is everything, and he is unashamedly secular in his philosophy, believing that society can be transformed to goodness by earnest application of Marxist-Leninist principles.

Moreover, he believes it is scientifically impossible for, say, an economist, to ever conclude that a free-market economy is superior to one planned by the state. Similarly, he says confidently, a philosophy professor would be scoffed at and finished as a teacher if he suddenly announced a belief in God.

Christmas is no longer a holiday, and several young adults I talked with affected no knowledge of Easter. One young woman said she was glad that she had been taught atheism, and proud that she converted her mother — once a Christian believer — to disbelief.

The Catholic church never was strong in Cuba, and now it is greatly reduced (211 priests remain of the 800 here in 1959). Its hospitals and colleges were closed and nuns assigned to work in leprosariums and institutions for the mentally ill and retarded. Protestant churches have survived in weakened condition. There are only remnants of the once strong Jewish community, though five synagogues still hang on.

"It is not easy," says Father Carlos Manuel de Cespedes, namesake great-grandson of Cuba's admired "George Washington." "I am still optimistic about the future of Cuba and its people. The revolution does not mean the end of the faith and the church.

"There was tension at the beginning of the revolution, but we are not persecuted now. What we need is dialogue with the government and an opportunity to proclaim the faith through the people. We have no such opportunity now.

And yet Father de Cespedes, a cultivated, respected man, who sees old-friends-turned-Communist-officials in social situations and at cultural events, says that the health and education of the people are greatly improved, especially in the countryside. He favors normalization of relations between the U.S. and Cuba.

Religion is circumscribed, but moralism is not. "We encourage tourism," declares Antonio Villaverde, vice-minister of foreign trade, "but we are not interested in pre-revolutionary tourism with its gambling, prostitution and drugs. We now offer sunshine, landscape and friendliness."

The American-style hotels where footloose tourists gambled and found other sinful fun are now chaste. The names "Meyer Lansky" and "Lucky Luciano," are held in equal contempt with the C.I.A. But there is gusto feeling for the American pastimes of baseball, basketball and boxing, and some souls claim that they enjoy rock music. Tips are forbidden, but more often accepted than not. Cab drivers gripe, American fashion, over bureaucratic paperwork.

Though most Cubans seem to be the kind of people who could easily live in Florida or Texas or California, the totalitarian structure of the revolution is everywhere. Monuments in downtown Havana are relics of revolutionary violence — old planes, tanks, a historic delivery truck — and are relief to the pervasive gray drabness.

Americans weary of traffic will appreciate the scarcity of cars here. Cubans stuff themselves into overworked ancient buses, and hope that bright new ones will soon appear.

Whatever goes wrong in Cuba, the people do not hold Fidel responsible, and explain it is "conditions" which make life difficult. He has kept a little distance between himself and the bureaucracy, and a good deal more between Cuba and the nearby imperialist world. Castro is popular and so is his revolution.

Anyone who thinks it will soon come apart must be taking hallucinogenic drugs — which are strictly forbidden here.

Cabinet department celebrating its 25th birthday

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Department of Health, Education and Welfare began its two-day 25th birthday celebration Tuesday in an appropriately tumultuous style. If you stood at the right spot in front of the Hubert H. Humphrey building, sometimes you could hear the combined noise of a jazz group on your right and a rock group on your left above the muted murmur of midday traffic on Independence Avenue.

Schizophrenic stereo — an apt sound for the massive bureaucracy that consumes 36 percent of the federal budget (asking for $185 billion in President Carter's January budget message) and benignly oversees most of the serious problems in our national life, from remedial reading to Social Security.

There was wall-to-wall music outside the Humphrey building all day Tuesday, as well as a sort of 12-ring circus in the building's lobby and a birthday party at midday with Big Bird leading the crowd (estimated at 600) in "Happy birthday, HEW-Happy birthday to you."

A banner over the building's main entrance proclaimed that the Department of Health, Education and Welfare was celebrating "25 Years of People Helping People," and a more flamboyant one inside (a Corita original) announced the goal of "Expanding beyond what we know we can be," which is certainly one of the things HEW has done in its 25 years of existence.

In the opening ceremonies, HEW Secretary Joseph Califano observed that the organization's annual budget "has increased 26-fold in 25 years," and cited corresponding though less spectacular figures on the increase of life expectancy, the decline of infant mortality, and the growth of equal opportunity for black college students. The next step, he said, will be a "historic effort to increase efficiency...we must be as wise and effective as we are caring."

He suggested that his agency was really "the department of the people" and that the that the closeness of its work to our most human concerns may be the reason why it has been so controversial.

"This department was born in controversy, has lived amid controversy, and it will probably celebrate its 50th anniversary in the midst of controvesy," he said, not sounding the least bit unhappy about the prospect.

Current controversies range from the tempest in an ashtray over Califano's anti-smoking campaign to a serious effort to take the E (for Education) out of HEW.

HEW celebrated its 25th anniversary amid a carnival atmosphere, with folksingers and dancers, all kinds of popular music and refreshment stands scattered around the outside of the building selling hot dogs, hamburgers, soft drinks and popcorn as well as fresh fruit and more substantial sandwiches. These stands were the object of the only controversy visible during the entire festive day.

A demonstrator who identified himself only as "Sidney Cigarette" paraded up and down during the outdoor opening ceremonies in a cigarette costume — a white cardboard cylinder that came down to his waist and extended five or six feet above his head, with openings cut into it for eyes, nose and mouth.

Slogans were inscribed on the giant cigarette, including one about Lucky Strikes that might be libelous if reprinted and another that merely maligns a public servant: "Califano Piddles while America Smokes," with a skull and crossbones to illustrate the message.

Accompanying the cigarette man was "Tony the Tiger," a man in a tiger suit protesting the tolerance of junk food by HEW. "There's some good food here," said Sidney Cigarette, but they're also selling hot dogs and soda pop. For an agency supposedly devoted to health, that's absurd." Tony didn't say anything; he just growled, but both demonstrators were handing out a leaflet charging HEW with "mendacious incompetence" because it allows Americans to eat, drink and smoke what they want.

In the building's lobby, a circus atmosphere was maintained with bright orange-and-white squares of canvas spread tent-style near the ceiling, an abundance of gas balloons and a lot of bustling activity, but the content of the various booths was more like what you would expect at a doctors' or teachers' convention.

Carter against tax credits for college tuition

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration insists that Congress will be making a mistake if it moves to provide tax credits for college tuition instead of expanding existing federal scholarship and loan programs.

"Tuition tax credits would be a wholly inappropriate approach to assisting students and families in meeting educational costs," Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal and HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. said Tuesday in a joint letter to all 435 members of the House.

"They would impose an inflationary and uncontrollable drain on the treasury, yet fail to provide real relief to families feeling the strains of rising educational costs," they said.

The House was to begin work today on a tax credit bill, but other business may prompt the lawmakers to postpone action until they return next Wednesday from a long Memorial Day weekend.

The bill approved by the House Ways and Means Committee would allow taxpayers to deduct 25 percept of tuition costs at colleges and post-secondary vocational schools after Aug. 1, but only up to a maximum of $100 per student. The maximum credit would rise to $150 next year and $250 in 1980.

The House Rules Committee previously agreed thatt only three amendments could be offered on the floor. One would provide elementary and secondary school tuition credits of $50 this year and $100 in the next two years.

A second amendment would raise the credit from 25 percent to 50 percent of tuition, but leave the dollar amounts the same. The third amendment would substitute for the tax credits a plan to defer taxes on the amount paid for college tuition until after a student graduates.

Similar legislation has cleared the Senate Finance Committee, which approved an eventual $500 tuition tax credit, not only for college but for elementary and secondary schools which charge tuition.

Blumenthal and Califano, reiterating the administration's arguments against tax credits in any form, attacked them as "both bad education policy and bad tax policy."

They said as much as 60 percent of the benefits would go to families with incomes of more than $20,000 a year, and 20 percent to 30 percent would go to families making more than $30,000.

Royal divorce shrouds crown in cloudy gloom

LONDON (AP) — Princess Margaret and Lord Snowdon, married in the pomp and circumstance of a Westminster Abbey ceremony 18 years ago, were divorced in cloud and gloom today in a musty courtroom in London's gothic-style Law Courts.

The whole case lasted less than two minutes and was only one of a batch of 27, which also included an office cleaner and a former guardsman.

The divorce between the 47-year-old Princess and her photographer husband,the former Antony Armstrong-Jones, 48, was a mere formality and neither was required to appear in court.

Under updated divorce laws brought in seven years ago, divorce is automatic if both parties have been parted for two years and both agree the marriage has "irretrievably broken down."

The divorce did not even required to be rubber-stamped by one of the Queen's top judges.

The decree was granted by Judge John Willis, a circuit judge who normally sits in lower civil courts and who is empowered to act as a divorce judge in non-controversial cases.

Willis, 71, arrived at his court promptly at 10:30 a.m.—and by 10:32 a.m. it was all over and the judge continued with his other routine court business.

Only a handful of spectators, outnumbered by journalists, were in court to hear the decree nisi handed down.

A decree nisi is the first step in Britain's two-tier divorce system. It means the decree is granted—unless something turns up to overturn it. After six weeks the decree is automatically made "absolute" and both partners are then free to re-marry.

The princess announced May 10 that she would divorce Lord Snowdon.

Although brewery heir Roddy Llewellyn, 30, has been Margaret's constant companion since she and Snowdon separated in March 1976, a household spokesman said at the time of the announcement that Margaret does not plan to remarry.

The royal divorce was listed 20th in the batch of 27 as "H.R.H (Her Royal Highness) the Princess Margaret Rose, countess of Snowdon v Armstrong-Jones A.C.R.,Earl of Snowdon."

As soon as the judge took his seat on the bench his assistant read out the names on the list.

The judge then said: "Is there any party or any person present to show cause why a decree should not be pronounced?"

There was no reply, and the judge asked whether there was "anybody to say anything on costs."

Again there was no reply, and the judge announced:

"Very well. I pronounce decrees nisi in accordance with the respective registrars' certificates."

There was silence in court and immediately the judge began talking about the next cases in his list. One, in private, related to an agreement about the future of the two royal children.

In divorce cases, no details are ever announced about provisions for any children. In this case, there is little doubt that both the princess and Snowdon have already amicably agreed about financial provisions and access to their two children, Viscount Linley, 16, and Lady Sarah Armstrong-Jones,14.

Midlander graduates with honors

ABILENE — Lee High School graduate Diana Gay Robertson was among 31 Hardin-Simmons University students to graduate with honors in recent graduation exercises.

Miss Robertson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Robertson of Midland, received a bachelor of science degree summa cum laude.

Midlander graduates from Duke with honors

DURHAM, N.C. — Jeffrey Alan Kozak, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Kozak of 3205 Apperson Drive in Midland, recently was graduated cum laude with a bachelor of science degree in bio-medical and electrical engineering during Duke University's 126th graduation exercises.

Kozak has been accepted into the Baylor College of Medicine, Texas Medical Center, in Houston and will begin his studies there in June. While at Duke, he has been named to the School of Engineering Dean's List in his freshman and sophomore years and was awarded class honors as a junior and senior. He served as president of the Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity.

Kozak is a 1974 honor graduate of Midland Lee High School and Trinity School of Midland.

Gay rights law losses

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Residents of this university city voted by a 2-1 margin to repeal an ordinance banning discrimination against homosexuals, joining voters in three other U.S. cities who earlier repealed gay rights measures.

In what many had expected would be a close election, final unofficial returns late Tuesday showed 22,898 votes in favor of repeal and 13,427 opposed.

Carter plans one-day Chicago stopover

CHICAGO (AP) — President Carter will stay overnight Thursday at the white, stucco home of the Rev. James and Mary Wall, where he began his Illinois presidential primary run three years ago.

"We are preparing the house just as we would for any very special house guest. But we don't usually have anyone this special," said Wall, editor of Christian Century magazine and chairman of Carter's primary and general election campaigns in Illinois.

Carter's visit at the two-story, suburban Elmhurst home will be his only private time during a political stopover intended to raise money and soothe the feelings of some Democrats who say he has ignored them.

He is to speak Thursday afternoon at a Chicago reception for Democratic Senate candidate Alex Seith, who is opposing Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., and be the main attraction at a $100-a-plate dinner for some 7,000 Cook County Democrats that evening.

Friday morning, the president will fly to Springfield for a joint session of the Illinois Legislature, followed by a reception for Democratic gubernatorial candidate Michael Bakalis. Bakalis' opponent Gov. James R. Thompson, is to greet Carter at the airport.

Wall, a Methodist minister, said his wife will cook breakfast for the president at their 60-year-old home.

"I think he has to be in Springfield for the state Legislature at 9 a.m.," Wall said. "So I think he'll be up at 6 or 6:15. That's a little earlier than I usually get up, but I'm happy to get up for this."

Mrs. Wall is one of the few Democrats on the DuPage County Board of Commissioners and was a member of the presidential commission that searched for a new FBI director.

"We're pleased that he accepted our invitation to stay with us because he's a friend," he said.

Wall, a Democratic national committeeman, was a delegate to the 1972 Democratic National Convention.

"I met him when he began his primary effort in May of '75. He had a meeting in our home with some of the (DuPage County) Democratic figures when he was investigating runnning.

"We were pulling together people who had worked in (Sen. George) McGovern's '72 campaign," Wall said. "He came to me and asked me to help. I was really impressed with him."

Wall said one of the couple's three sons, York High School senior Richard, 18, will be home. Another son, a student at Guilford College in Greensboro, N.C., went back to sumer classes that began Monday. A third son is a paramedic in Decatur, Ga., and will be working.

Carter lost Illinois in 1976, but won Cook County by 400,000 votes and took Chicago by more than one million votes.

Water commission denies request of environmentalists

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Water Commission Tuesday denied a motion by the Lake Travis Improvement Association seeking to interview a member of the Texas Department of Water Resources staff on his impressions of an environmental report filed in connection with the pending application to construct Stacy Reservoir.

The sponsor of the Stacy project, the Colorado River Municipal Water District, is proposing to build the reservoir on that portion of the Colorado River which passes through Coleman, Runnels and Concho counties.

The Lake Travis group is opposing the project, maintaining its construction would adversely impact on downstream reservoirs such as Lake Travis.

Attorney for the Lake Travis association, Thomas Goerge, told the commission that during his review of DWR records, he came across a memo which indicates that Dr. Al D'Arezzo of the DWR planning staff had been asked to look over the environmental assessment submitted by the water district's engineers.

That memo, George indicated, asked D'Arezzo to consider the socio-economic impact of the reservoir.

"It is important to the association and the commission to know what the highly-paid experts of the Department of Water Resources have to say about these documents," George argued.

Tim Brown, attorney for the DWR staff, asked the commission to overrule George's motion, saying D'Arezzo has not read nor commented on the Stacy report "in the official scope of his duties."

"I noticed that you qualified that," TWC chairman Joe Carter said.

"The man is a voracious reader," said Brown, adding that what D'Arezzo may have read on his own time is not subject to deposition by the Lake Travis Group.

Senior citizens learn English

The cooperative effort of several service agencies has made possible the enrichment of lives in the Tall City.

A group of senior citizens began meeting at Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church in December for a free nutritious lunch provided by a federal nutrition program. Ages of the group range from 51 to 85, with seven persons being in their 80s.

These people, according to Wanda Phillips, Adult Basic Education director at Midland College, expressed a desire to learn English and Spanish as they came from mixed ethnic backgrounds. Most, said Mrs. Phillips, are Spanish speaking people who have very little command of the English language.

The ABE program began providing instruction in April in the areas of basic reading, writing and speaking, both in English and Spanish.

"The desire of many is to be able to learn English, so they can communicate with their grandchildren who are being taught to speak only English," said Mrs. Phillips.

Last week, a cultural exchange took place when Mexican-American women of the program demonstrated the making of flour tortillas for the instructors and those who have never done so.

Transportation has been provided for those who need it by the senior citizen vans owned by Midland College and Casa de Amigos, Inc. Space has been donated by Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church.

Instructors for the ABE courses are Isabel Rey, Cheri Roper, Isabel Gonzales and Jodie Gressett.

The program will continue through the summer months, with the lunch being provided at noon Monday through Friday.

Transportation can be provided by calling Casa de Amigos, 697-9701. Additional information on the ABE classes can be obtained by dialing Mrs. Phillips at Midland College, 684-7851, extension 159.

Sara St.Clair, senior customer representative of Texas Electric Service Co., was the guest speaker. She presented a film, "Wild Flowers and Glen Rose, Texas," which was followed with a question and answer period.

Mrs. Butler gave a review of the coming year's activities, beginning with a summer social July 13, with Altamarzie McCoy as hostess.

DEAR ABBY

Superhuman restraint not asked

DEAR ABBY: A few months ago I discovered that my husband of 16 years was having a torrid affair with a young divorced woman in his office. We agreed to make a serious effort to restore our marriage for the sake of our children.

The young woman agreed to quit her job, but so far she is still working for my husband. He isn't even looking for a replacement, and I will not feel secure as long as they are in daily contact. Human nature being what it is, it would be so easy for them to reestablish the old relationship.

What do you think, Abby? I'm trying to be mature and trusting, but I still feel. . .—THREATENED IN CHICAGO

DEAR THREATENED: No matter how pure your husband's intentions, as long as his current heartthrob remains in his office, the embers are still smoldering.

Tell him that you do not expect superhuman restraint from mere mortals, and if he is sincere in his efforts to restore your marriage, he will send her on her way immediately, with helpful references.

DEAR ABBY: I have been going steady for a year with a girl I'll call "Joan," but there is another girl I like better. I don't want to hurt Joan's feelings, but I would like to drop her so I can openly date this other girl that I'm seeing secretly on the side.

Joan is a very nervous girl, and whenever I've even hinted about cooling our relationship, she gets sick. I would appreciate any help you can give me. I am 23 and Joan is 21.—STUCK IN BEVERLY HILLS

DEAR STUCK: I feel sorry for Joan, but I feel sorrier for you if you continue the relationship only because you lack the courage to cool it.

Level with her, gently, but honestly. She may get sick, but she'll survive. And don't stall, or you may find yourself permanently stuck with a woman who "gets sick" whenever she doesn't get her own way. (P.S. Joan needs counseling, and I hope she realizes it.)

DEAR ABBY: Isn't it true that if two people dance well together it means they are "in tune" and "meant for each other"?

I heard somewhere that if a boy and girl dance well together, they will probably have other things in common and will most likely have a successful marriage. Please confirm this.—LILA IN GAINESVILLE

DEAR LILA: When two people dance well together, it means only one thing. They dance well together. Believe me, it means nothing else. If you are using dancing as a basis for compatibility in marriage, forget it.

CONFIDENTIAL TO BOB B.: No one said it better than Benjamin Franklin: "If a man empties his purse into his head, no man can take it away from him. An investment in knowledge always pays the best interest." Please, hang in there and get your degree.

Parents using trial-and-error

By DR. WILLARD ABRAHAM
Copley News Service

Q. Isn't there some quick, painless way to become a good parent? Does a person have to learn through either bitter experience or the long books that say they have the answers?

We have used a kind of trial-and-error method with our 3-year-old, and he doesn't seem any the worse for it. I'm sure that our new baby will be better off because of all we've learned about feeding, toilet training, discipline and all the rest from our firstborn.

But there ought to be some kind of shortcut. Can you lead us to it?

A. Let's be direct for a moment: there is no fast, easy method toward sound parenthood. Materials of Spock, Gesell, Ginott and many other past and present experts have been used for years, helping parents over rough spots, but it takes work to become a good parent.

Just because we are biologically prepared to have children doesn't mean we're ready emotionally and intellectually.

"Parenthood remains the greatest single preserve of the amateur," wrote Alvin Toffler in his book, "Future Shock."

To help meet the needs of parents of young children (2- to 5-year-olds), I've worked hard for several years to provide "how to" answers that are practical and readible. They are now available on a monthly basis in a publication called "Parent Talk."

Just send a stamped, addressed envelope to me at P.O. Box 572, Scottsdale, Ariz. 85252, and you'll get full information about it.

Q. A famous Houston heart physician said not long ago that all the talk about cholesterol is really overdone.

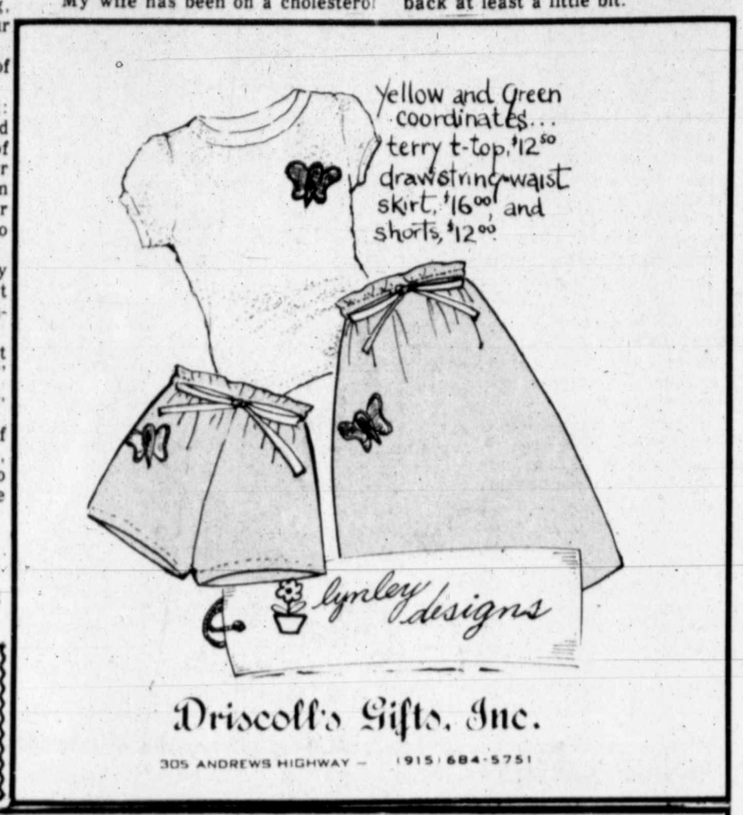

He said that he eats two eggs for breakfast every morning and plans to continue doing so.

My wife has been on a cholesterol binge for our entire family for years. Skimmed milk, only occasional meat, and no bacon, eggs or butter — it's been a pretty sparse diet.

Which side are you on?

A. One good question deserves another: what does your own doctor say about the health of your family?

Although many people have been anti-cholesterol for several years, the pendulum does seem to be swinging back at least a little bit.

Let Pat Walker help create a new you.
S. Nelson is perhaps one of the more spectacular examples of the stunning results that may be attained through Pat Walker's Figure Perfection Salons International. Read what she has to say about the program that has benefited millions throughout the world over the past 26 years:

"I hated myself fat, and every new year I promised to really get with it and lose; however, it never happened. Finally my doctor advised me, tactfully, to stay out of his office until I decided to lose weight. He just couldn't help me. Out of desperation, not believing, I called for a courtesy treatment at Pat Walker's.
This was the turning point in my life. With a loss of 51 pounds and several inches, I began to enjoy my life with my friends and family, especially my three grandchildren. The Pat Walker program gave me a positive approach to everyday living."
How's your approach to life?
Now the national director for Pat Walker, Ms. Nelson firmly believes the program can upgrade the life outlook of the overweight as surely as it makes them slimmer, trimmer, more confident of their appearance—and themselves.
In the elegant atmosphere of a Pat Walker salon (where there's none of the noise and confusion you may have encountered at gyms and spas), you can reduce IN ABSOLUTE PRIVACY. Moreover, you have assistance from interested professional counselors (who also conduct their counseling, by the way, in complete privacy).
Another difference: SYMMETRICON
Symmetricon is the equipment, exclusive to Pat Walker's, providing passive exercise that gently shapes and firms your figure while it also improves your circulation and helps correct posture. You wear your regular street clothes during treatments. At Pat Walker's you can lose weight (and keep it off) ON YOUR OWN INDIVIDUALIZED PROGRAM—without strenuous physical exercise or stringent diets.

Keep air conditioner coils free, clear

By AL CARRELL

If you have air conditioning, whether it's a central unit or a room unit, the condenser coils must be kept free and clear so air can be circulated across them. Otherwise, you can lose your efficiency and maybe even your compressor. Folks with central units know to keep vines and weeds and grass away from this area. However, there may be another step to take. The coils are covered with fins made of very lightweight material. On a room unit, this will be exposed to the outside at the back. These should be cleaned with a vacuum cleaner so there's no foreign matter in the tiny spaces between these fins.

Then the fins should be examined. They're of such soft metal they can easily be crimped so they restrict air flow. If so, invest in a special inexpensive tool called a fin comb. Get one that will match the proper spacing (teeth per inch), and then gently run it along to respace the fins. Do it before you get your next electrical bill because it can make a difference.

CRIMP IN AC FINS

Dear Al:

I have an old painter's magic formula for reclaiming an old paint brush that wasn't properly cleaned after use. It involves a tablespoon of TSP in a pint of boiling water. Then you just start working the brush against the bottom of the container, and it will release all the old paint. It does require some real work, but beats throwing away an expensive brush. — W.K.

TSP is trisodium phosphate and has been taken off the market in some areas. However, it's available at paint and hardware stores in most areas.

Dear Al:

The insides of the windows in my car developed a sort of film that wouldn't come off. It wasn't bad, but did cut the visibility and did look crummy. A chemist friend told me that sometimes the plasticizers used in some upholstery would cause such a film over a period of time. He began to experiment with solvents and wasn't doing all that much good when my wife tried white vinegar which she uses for lots of cleaning chores. The film is gone. Maybe this "scientific" trick will help others who have such a car problem. — T.G.

A SUPER HINT — Since you're never supposed to stand on the top step of your step ladder, you might like what one reader did. He didn't sign his name, but sent me a picture of his ladder. He'd attached his metal lunch box to the top. This meant he had a handy tool chest on the ladder. When he needed to move the ladder, the lunch box snapped shut so the tools and parts couldn't fall as he tilted the ladder for toting. (And maybe he carried a thermos of martinis along to help the work go quicker, too.)

Dear Al:

Let me warn others about carpet cleaning. I know you always say to test in an obscure place before trying any solvent to remove spots. I did this and found the recommended cleaner wouldn't hurt the carpet, so I removed the spots. Then I noticed the same type spot in another part of the house and, of course, used the same treatment. It took color out of the carpet. I failed to think that all carpet isn't the same. Even though these were very similar in color, they were of a different synthetic, and what was good for one was bad for another. Different fabrics and different colors may require different treatments. — Mrs. H.A.

SHOP TALK — There's a new hammer-in type toggle bolt. This means that instead of having to drill, you can just tap the hanger in place. Once the wallboard is penetrated, the hinged point that pierced the wall swigs out to form a "T," and the hook is turned to bring this member tight against the back of the wall. Some of those holes for old-style toggle bolts were so large that when you decided to move the hanger, you had a major patch up job on your hands.

NEEDLEPLAY

Stitches sometimes conjure up another era

By ERICA WILSON

Sometimes stitches can transport us back to another era. A Victorian cabbage rose, a cross-stitch sampler— —charming designs with stories behind them, inspiring all kinds of visions as we think of the people who stitched them.

Since needlework itself is often nostalgic, try combining contemporary stitching with designs from other generations—you may have an irresistible combination!

You may be familiar with the little Chessie kitten, mascot of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, which I have translated into crewel and needlepoint. When the company adopted the drawing in the '30s, they first published Chessie on a calendar. Everyone wanted to know if it was her paw or her tail coming out from under the sheet.

Since so many people had obviously taken Chessie to heart and seemed eager to know everything about her, the following year the company published Chessie and her kittens on their calendar. Well, more letters—where was the father? So the year after, along came Peake (ChesaPEAKE—get it?), Chessie's "old man." He looks marvelous in needlepoint with a textured twill stitch background.

When it comes to animals, we're really all tall children, and Peter Rabbit has been a favorite of all ages since he was born 75 years ago. Yes, although he may not look it, he recently celebrated his 75th birthday.

Just like Alice in Wonderland, he was originally thought up for one child. Beatrix Potter, in England, created him in a letter to her nephew. Over the years, he has enchanted millions of children around the world. In fact, the miniature book about this furry rabbit and his friends has been translated into 15 different languages.

I've translated the Beatrix Potter crew into just about as many needlework mediums—crewel, needlepoint and cross-stitch were just the beginning. Leafing through the little books, looking at all the characters, offers up a fascinating springboard of ideas.

The first needlework versions of Peter were inspired U by a student of mine who asked me to help her work a pair of bed headboards with Peter, Mrs. Tittlemouse, Hunca Munca and Jemima Puddle-duck interpreted in bold crewel stitches. The headboards were to be for her grandchildren's beds, but as she got more and more intrigued with working the whimsical animals, she decided to keep them in HER house for when the grandchildren came to stay. By the end of the project, she was so enamoured with them that she used them for her own and her husband's beds!

So next time a blank canvas or piece of embroidery linen confronts you, summon up one of these famous characters to inspire you. From Archy and Mehitabel to Winnie the Pooh, there's always some intriguing story behind the design that makes it doubly interesting to stitch.

War for control gives insights into beer industry

The Washington Post

On April 26, 1976, William Pflaumer acquired 100 percent of C. Schmidt & Sons Inc., a 115-year-old Philadelphia-based brewery, for a price of $15,900,000. What was unusual about the sale was the fact that Pflaumer used only $150,000 of his own money.

It seems that Pflaumer, a convicted felon who started his climb in 1959 as a Philadelphia beer distributor with nothing more than one truck and $7,000 in capital, financed the purchase using Schmidt's own assets as collateral.

And now, it's happening again. Although Schmidt is in dire financial straights, Pflaumer is wheeling and dealing his way into still another takeover — this time targeting an even bigger fish, F&M Schaefer Brewing Co. of New York. Now, he is trying to finance a $6 million deal with $250,000 up front. But Schaefer, which is also experiencing serious financial problems, is fighting the action in federal court in New York.

According to one courtroom observer, "It comes down to two punch-drunk brewers trying to survive on a sea of suds."

Testimony in the case has highlighted the inner workings of the two companies, bringing to light the severe problems they face as regional breweries and providing rare insights into the present and future of the beer industry.

The war for control of Schaefer began on April 3, 1978, when Pflaumer signed an agreement with Citibank to acquire 29 percent of Schaefer's stock. Under the terms of the agreement, Schmidt would pay $6 million for $20 million worth of notes held by the bank that would be convertible into 792,232 shares of Schaefer common stock. Pflaumer would pay the bank $250,000 right away, another $500,000 at the time of closing, and the rest in yearly installments. The deal was supposed to close on April 24.

But on April 11, Schaefer filed suit in U.S. District Court in Manhattan charging Schmidt with violation of the Sherman and Clayton antitrust laws, and also charging that Schmidt really was attempting to gain ultimate control of Schaefer because it also was trying to acquire additional stock from another source.

That "other source" was investment bankers R.W. Pressprich & Co. Inc. Pflaumer was offering $3 a share for Pressprich's 160,000 shares in Schaefer — an additional 8 percent. Just where Pflaumer is planning to get the cash for these acquisitions remains a question mark. In a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, Schmidt says it will finance the purchases from "working capital or borrowings (which have not been arranged)."

In the same filing, Schmidt admits that "the transactions are intended to serve as a first step in the acquisition of control of the operations of (Schaefer)."

On that day, Schaefer President William Schoen wrote an angry letter to Citibank chairman Walter Wriston, charging that the sale "puts our company in serious jeopardy." Schoen was particularly irritated because the sale was being made by the trust department of the bank, while at the same time the commercial side of the bank is "a large lender to our company, and has been for some time . . . (and) they have been very supportive over some difficult periods."

In any event, a federal judge issued a temporary restraining order on April 13 that prevents the closing of the deal pending court hearings which are still going on.

In early testimony during the trial, it was revealed that Schmidt may be on the brink of bankruptcy. Pflaumer admitted in court that liabilities currently exceed assets at Schmidt by $6 million or $7 million, and his company is in a negtive working capital position — raising serious, and still unanswered, questions as to how he hoped to finance further acquisitions.

Pflaumer also said that, unless he is able to acquire Schaefer or some other volume brand, Schmidt will be out of business in two yers. In detailing the financial woes of Schmidt, Pflaumer said Maryland National Industrial Finance Corp. of Baltimore could effectively "pull the plug" at any time on Schmidt, which owes the finance company "many millions of dollars."

In questions to Schmidt president William Elliot, Schaefer attorneys tried to establish that one of the main atrractions of Schaefer was its new ultra-modern Lehigh Valley plant in Pennsylvania.

The testimony of Schaefer executives also has provided several items of interest. Though he denied that Schaefer was on the selling block, Shoen said mergers had been discussed with other companies.

Olympia Brewing Co. had offered to purchase substantially all of Schaefer for $65 million in September 1977, Shoen said. He added that Miller Brewing Co. and Z. Heilman Brewing Co. also discussed the possbility of buying the new Lehigh Valley plant, and Schaefer was actively pursuing "the possibility of a merger with Pabst brewing."

In an ominous note, it was revealed that Schaefer is planning to shut down its Balitmore brewery and shift that production to Lehigh Valley. That is bad news for Baltimore, which only recently learned that Carling is closing its brewery there.

It also was revealed that Schaefer is planning to test market a new product in June, but the details of venture were deemed "confidential."

Self-employed total shrinks

NEW YORK (AP) — The number of self-employed workers in the United States has dropped from 19 percent in 1948 to approximately 8 percent this year, according to the American Council of Life Insurance.

The 1948 figure included 8 percent who were employed in agriculture and the current figure takes in the 2 percent of the work force engaged in farm work.

"How I make the most of every Long Distance day."

"I have a plan. I do something few businessmen think they have time for. I schedule a period of time every day just for calling Long Distance.

"Here's why it makes sense. Anyone can make Long Distance calls when absolutely necessary. My plan forces me to keep in touch, ask questions, handle problems, or just say hello—on a regular basis.

"It pays three ways. By taking time to learn my clients' needs early, I'm able to spot business opportunities. Also, I can straighten out problems or answer questions right there on the spot.

And of course the regular contact by Long Distance strengthens my relationship, personally, with every client.

"It's easy to do. I use an appointment calendar in conjunction with a card file. The calendar reminds me who to call when. And the file refreshes my memory about previous calls, follow-up action, as well as personal details like birthdays, anniversaries, and such.

"Try a plan of your own. Any period of time each day—even if it's just a few minutes—is time well invested.

Because in the long run, it will pay handsome dividends."

Adams orders employment rules on rail safety inspectors

WASHINGTON (AP) — Transportation Secretary Brock Adams ordered a halt Tuesday to government railroad safety officials holding federal jobs while on official leave from the railroads whose facilities they inspect.

Adams said the employees, including the nation's chief railroad safety inspector, would either have to give up their federal jobs or their leave status with various railroads.

At Adams' request, John M. Sullivan, head of the Federal Railroad Administration, drafted a memo to that effect and sent it to all FRA employees Tuesday.

The announcement came a few hours after the Washington Star published a story about the job practices.

The secretary said he had first learned of the practice Monday from Raymond K. James, the FRA's chief counsel.

The exact number of persons involved was not immediately known, but department officials said there were at least 11 who are on employee leave from the Consolidated Rail Corporation, created by Congress in 1976 to take over six bankrupt eastern railroads.

Included is Robert H. Wright, deputy FRA associate administrator for safety, who has been a federal employee since 1969 — all the while on leave from first the former Penn Central Railroad and later Conrail.

Nearly all those involved are railroad inspectors. Some have been on leave for as long as 12 years.

Officials said that granting a leave of absence means that an employee's salary and benefits are suspended and he has no assurance the railroad will rehire him.

Wright told the Washington Star he had routinely renewed his leave because he believes "there were certain considerations with reference to railroad pensions." He said that despite his leave status, he had been tough on Conrail.

Both Wright and James said it was almost impossible to find qualified railroad inspectors except from within the railroad industry.

James said it might be proper for such an inspector in a training category to retain leave status for the year during which he is on probation as a beginning federal employee. After that period, he said the individual should discontinue the leave if he decides to remain on the federal payroll.

Historic art works restored

NEW YORK (AP) — Paintings, sculpture, furniture and folk art are among 75 works of art from the New York Historical Society's collection which were recently restored and now are on exhibit at the society through Dec. 31.

The display, called "New Life for Old Objects," includes documentation and photographs which illustrate the process of revitalizing works such as Thomas Cole's "Course of Empire," the "Peale Family Portrait" and an 18th-century silk parade banner.

Taxidermy vanishing art

By RICHARD LOWE

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Like woodcarving, taxidermy requires a steady hand, long hours and years of practice. It's Jim Sharber's hobby and he says that it, like whittling, is a backwoods art on the wane.

"Growing up on a farm, there weren't a lot of social things to do," said Sharber, a state environmental planner. "I started reading library books and began with pigeons. It's been a satisfying hobby ever since."

It only costs about $10 to get started, Sharber said, adding that the real investment is in patience and time.

"I think it was a more popular hobby at one time," he said. "But it appears we live in a faster-paced life and there's not a long stretch of time between things we have to do and things we want to do. And, there aren't many stopping places once you get started."

Mounting a wood duck takes Sharber about eight hours, nonstop.

The skin is removed intact. Feathers are washed with a light detergent for separation. Legs and tail are cut and wings clipped, remaining with the skin, which is worked down the body. The skull is detached.

"What you have is the body of the bird with the appendages detached. You can still cook the meat and corn meal absorbs the blood and juices," Sharber said. "But if you want the mount to last, you have to remove all the fatty tissue from the skin."

Muscles are cut from the legs and tail, and skin is washed in borax to protect it from bugs.

Then, from drawings or study of the carcass, Sharber molds an artificial body with a fiberglass material. Muscles are replaced with wax and clays, the head is cleaned out and glass eyes are inserted. Wires are run along the wing bones in the skin, through the legs and in the neck. The neck wire is wrapped in cotton and the body incision is sewn up.

"What you have looks like a big mess," he said.

"You have to preen the feathers with forceps and shape the bird until you get it in a natural pose. That's what takes all the time."

Sharber has been mounting small game and waterfowl for more than 20 years, but success came with time.

"I thought I had really done something the first time. But it was probably three or four years till I was totally satisfied with something," he said. "I'll stay up till 4 a.m. just to try to get something right. I'm pretty critical of my work."

But Sharber says the long hours are worth it because, "you get a little sense of accomplishment when you complete something that takes time."

"It was a rural boy's pastime years ago, but the popularity of taxidermy has been cut down by other forms of recreation and hobbies, like watching color television."

15,000 people die yearly from hospital-contracted infections

By ROBERT C. TOTH
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — In an Oklahoma hospital last year, 33 patients developed pneumonia or severe bronchitis from a particular bacteria, called pseudomonas, within a three-month period.

Most of the patients had used inhalation devices that were filled with distilled water from plastic containers that could not be sterilized. The culprit bacteria was found in a handle recess of one container but not before 11 patients had died.

In a Pennsylvania hospital, also within the last year, at least seven persons developed severe stomach and intestinal illness within five days of being examined with an endoscope, a glass-fiber device for viewing internal organs. The bacteria, salmonella, was transmitted on the instruments because the soap used to clean them did not kill the germs.

The two episodes illustrate an old but still troubling fact of medical life. Every year, it happens to 5 percent of all U.S. hospital patientsDaccording to the Center for Disease Control, an agency of the U.S. Public Health Service.

The cost of these additional problems — called "nocosomial" infections after the Greek word for hospital — is estimated by the CDC at more than $1 billion a year. Because of the infections, 5 percent of 32 million patients stay in the hospital an extra seven days on the average at a typical cost of more than $100 a day.

Another "cost" is that, of the 1.5 million patients who get such infections, 15,000 die.

Special houses for sick people go back to the earliest civilization, and undoubtedly some patients always have gotten additional illnesses in such places. In fact, before man knew about germs, hospitals were sometimes called "houses of despair" because of the high patient death rate.

Just a century ago, limb amputations and childbirth were safer at home — or, some said, even on a street — than in a hospital, where unclean sheets, unsterilized instruments, and unwashed doctors' hands all seem in retrospect to have been designed to spread disease rather than treat it.

And yet even now, despite new knowledge of how germs spread and strict sanitary standards required in hospitals, nocosomial infections still remain a problem that is "one of greatest public health importance," according to former CDC director Dr. David J. Spencer.

To be sure, Dr. Richard Dixon, chief of CDC's hospital infections branch, emphasizes that "...the risk of infections should not deter anyone from entering a hospital for needed medical care. Usually the reason for going into a hospital in the first place is an illness far more serious than a nocosomial infection."

On the other hand, one nonphysician specialist in the field says: "When any of my friends want to go into a hospital to get their medical insurance to pay for tests (which would not be covered if the person were not hospitalized), I tell them they're plain nuts. The risk isn't worth the bucks you save."

At the heart of the problem is the apparent failure of some hospitals to maintain sufficiently high standards of cleanliness. Germs inevitably will slip past the most stringent safeguards, but human error also is often at fault when bacteria come in contact with susceptible patients.

Standard rules for cleanliness are often forgotten by hurried doctors and nurses.

At Massachusetts General Hospital, which is associated with Harvard Medical School, there is a long list of rules, including dress codes for places such as operating rooms ("Female personnel will wear panty hose"). But repeatedly emphasized is a very basic theme: "Wash your hands, wash your hands, wash your hands."

So important is this rule that some infection control experts believe a patient can reasonably ask a doctor or nurse if they have washed before giving "hands-on care." The "helping hands," they note, can do more harm than good if not clean.

The cases of hospital infections in Oklahoma and Pennsylvania were reported last month by CDC's hospital investigation staff. As Dixon noted in a telephone interview, both cases involved germs already contaminating the hospital environment.

Other sources of infection, he said, are commercially distributed products, such as intravenous fluids and devices for surgical implant into the body that are contaminated when they arrive at the hospital, and patients who enter with infections that are spread before they are recognized as contagious or as resistant to the usual antibiotics.

However, most typical are infections in patients into whom catheters or some other instruments are inserted. In 40 percent of the cases, the urinary tract is the site of nocosomial infections, Dixon said.

Next in frequency come infections of surgical wounds, then lungs and the respiratory tract and the blood, he said.

"But recognize," Dixon added, "that in most cases the instruments are clean and only provide the portal — the opening — for bugs from the outside to get in."

Dr. Cyrus Hopkins, epidemiologist and chief of the infection control unit at Massachusetts General Hospital, said that before 1960, urinary catheters were allowed to drain into bottles and infection followed in every case. "The simple act of closing the bottles prevented more than 30,000 deaths per year," he said.

While nocosomial infections have received increased attention since the 1950's — when antibiotic-resistant germs were first identified in hospital epidemics — only in the last few years has the field attracted the personnel and a fraction of the money required to deal with it effectively.

Corpus Christi makes bid for deep port

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — The Port of Corpus Christi is making a bid to become a major world port by deepening its channel to handle large crude oil tankers.

By expanding the depth from 45 to 72 feet, the port hopes to become the United States' first deepwater harbor facility.

The project, named "DEEPORT," also entails construction of a turning and docking basin to accomodate the world's most modern ocean-going vessels.

The facility is planned to later provide for multi-purpose use. Thus it would be able to handle ore, minerals and agricultural products as well as oil.

The Nueces County Navigation District, which is sponsoring the project, has applied for the necessary permits from the U.S. Corps of Engineers. Once the Corps has public hearings this summer and if approval is granted, it would take two to three years to finish it, a spokesman said.

DEEPORT, also known as the Harbor Island Project, is opposed by local and state environmental groups, who object to further dredging.

Ned Fritz of Dallas, spokesman for the Texas Committee on Natural Resources, said it objects to heavy dredging of any kind along the coast because it wipes out the habitat for water fowl.

Fritz said Tuesday that heavy dredging is the worst kind because it takes away land for wildlife and also ruins the area where the dredging spoils are dumped.

Fritz said his committee did not object to offshore terminals because no coastline was damaged.

Five companies with operations in the Corpus Christi area are participating in plans to guarantee the revenue bonds necessary to build DEEPORT in the vicinity of Harbor Island. They are Coastal States Gas Corp., Champlin Petroleum Co., American Petrofina Pipe Line Co., Southwestern Refining Co. and Suntide Refining Co.

Companies which supported an offshore unloading dock in the Houston area, formally known as SEADOCK, have expressed interest in the DEEPORT project, a spokesman said.

Chaveroo test slated

El Ran, Inc., of Lubbock, has spotted location to drill a 4,450-foot project in the Chaveroo (San Andres) field of Roosevelt County, N. M., 15 miles west of Milnesand.

Wellsite for the No. 2 Byron is 660 feet from south and 1,980 feet from east lines of section 34-7s-32e.

The well will be drilled one location west of nearest production.

Gear bolts cause spill

LONDON (AP) — The chief engineer of the ill-fated U.S.-owned supertanker Amoco Cadiz said Monday five bolts in the steering gear broke during a storm that hurled the disabled vessel onto the French coast and set off the world's worst oil spill.

The four-year-old 263,000-ton tanker, owned by Amoco International and registered in Liberia, spewed its 65-million-gallon cargo last March, blanketing the scenic Brittany coast in a residue that's still being cleaned two months after the accident.

Salvatore Melito, the chief engineer for six months before the disaster, testified at an inquiry in London. He said the first indication of a steering problem came from the helmsman who found that when he steered the wheel to starboard the rudder went to port. Melito said the steering gear failed in high seas, and most of the 211 gallons of oil leaked from the steering system.

Lea sector gains tests

Phillips Petroleum Co. has filed application to drill a trio of wells in Lea County, N. M., 10 miles east of Maljamar in an undesignated area.

Phillips No. 31-E Phillips-State located 1,650 feet from north line and 2,310 feet from west lines of section 13-17s-33e.

The well is two miles northeast of Pennsylvanian discovery in the Lamex field.

Phillips-No. 32-E Phillips-State, 660 feet from south line and 2,310 feet from west lines of section 13-17s-33e, and 1½ miles northeast of the Pennsylvanian discovery.

Phillips No. 33-E Phillips-State, spotted 660 feet from south line and 1,980 feet from west lines of section 14-17s-33e. It is ¾-mile north of the Pennsylvanian discovery.

Each of the wells will be drilled to a total depth of 4,725 feet.

World oil reserve estimate skyrockets

By R. GREGORY NOKES

WASHINGTON (AP) — Estimates of the world's oil reserves have skyrocketed in recent years, raising the likelihood of sufficient oil for the future but at high prices, an official of the World Bank said Tuesday.

"The new numbers take us into hundreds of years of oil supplies," said Efrain Friedmann, assistant director of energy and fuels of the 130-nation institution.

He said some experts estimate that reserves of oil could total five trillion barrels, including both proven reserves and oil that has not yet been discovered but is considered likely to exist. That is a big increase over recent estimates that total reserves were about two trillion barrels, he said.

Friedmann said proven reserves are estimated at 600 billion to 1 trillion barrels, which would last at least 30 years at current consumption levels. But he said there is little reason to be conservative in estimating reserves.

"Usually, everybody who has been conservative (in their estimates) has been wrong," said Friedmann. In part, he said, the increase in the price of oil has increased the potential for new supplies, since it has made development of costly oil more economical.

"The cost of new oil will be much higher than pre-1973 prices," he said, noting that oil from the North Sea and Alaska could not have been profitably developed if the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) had not increased the world price of oil to its current price of over $12 a barrel.

Some estimates claim the sedimentary basins, or river bed areas, of Argentina and Brazil could contain oil fields that are the equal of the fields in the Middle East, he said, although conceding that those projections are "highly speculative."

He said estimates of the proven reserves in Mexico have been increased from 3 billion to 17 billion barrels in the past few years, equal to about one-half of the United States' proven reserves, and some estimates put the Mexican total at 80 billion barrels, about half the reserves of Saudi Arabia, the world's largest oil exporter.

Friedmann said his estimates are based on analysis by the World Bank of projections by governments, oil companies and individual experts. They are based on current levels of consumption.

Tax proposal studied to ease burden on wealthy investor

By ART PINE
1978, The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Imagine trying to get Congress to pass a tax break in an election year that would benefit almost exclusively taxpayers in the $100,000-a-year-and-higher income brackets.

That would roll back one of the major provisions of the landmark 1969 Tax Reform Act — the toughening of tax treatment on Capital gains, accrued primarily by wealthy investors.

That would fly in the face of Jimmy Carter's 1976 campaign pledge to make the "disgraceful" federal income tax system simpler and more populist.

Well, the proposal is here, and — surprisingly, even to its major backers — almost overnight it has become the hottest tax measure on Capitol Hill.

By last count, the amendment, sponsored initially by Rep. William A. Steiger, R-Wis., has attracted enough support to sail right through the House Ways and Means Committee.

And, in just a matter of days, the Senate version, sponsored by Sen. Clifford P. Hansen, R-Wyo., has accumulated an astonishing 60 cosponsors — with 10 or 15 other senators reported ready to join in.

To top it off, the proposal now has become the major stumbling block to prompt enactment of President Carter's newly trimmed-back $20 billion general income tax cut proposal.

Liberals on the Ways and Means Committee have threatened to scuttle the Carter tax plan if the Steiger amendment passes, and the administration is worried enough to be fighting it with all guns.

Secretary of the Treasury W. Michael Blumenthal has been blasting the amendment regularly as "a fat-cat provision," and tax experts all over town are dismissing it as unsound.

As of now, however, the opponents seem destined to lose.

Why has such an unlikely proposal become an overnight sensation?

The answer isn't obvious. With its benefits going so heavily to high-income investors, the proposal doesn't seem a likely one to capture the public fancy. There isn't the broad appeal of a tuition tax credit.

But analysts offer these explanations.

First, with incomes and prices rising so rapidly, more and more middle-income taxpayers are becoming interested in tax levels on investment income, even if they aren't big investors yet themselves.

An increasing number of middle-income Americans already have encountered the capital gains problem in instances where they sell their homes and don't reinvest the money in new ones.

More important, the Steiger amendment may have become the rallying-point for what some observers perceive as a new wave of public sentiment for spurring new investment, particularly in high-risk ventures.

"It's the old Horatio Alger vision," says one analyst who has kept track of the measure's progress. "People want to keep taxes on investments low in case they strike it rich themselves some day. Attitudes are changing."

What the Steiger amendment would do is to roll back two key provisions in the 1969 Tax Reform Act that tightened the tax treatment of capital gains — profits from the sale of stocks or other assets.

The measure would accomplish this in two ways:

—Reduce the tax rate on capital gains to a maximum of 25 percent, down from the present effective tax rates of almost 50 percent. (Actually, capital gains are taxed at regular rates, but only half are subject to taxation).

—Remove capital gains from the income that is subject to the "minimum tax" — a special tax enacted in 1969 to prevent high-income taxpayers who invest in tax shelters from escaping payment of taxes.

Both measures were hard-won in the 1969 law. Reform advocates had been pushing for years to toughen taxation of capital gains, on grounds that it wasn't fair to tax investment income at lower rates than wages and salaries.

Indeed, one of Carter's major campaign planks was to end the disparity between taxation of capital gains and so-called "ordinary" income. Carter considered proposing such a change, but scrapped it as too controversial.

Understandably, the Steiger provision has sparked a good deal of controversy. There are two debates — over its cost, and its impact on the economy.

All sides agree that, strictly in technical terms, the provision would drain between $2.2 billion and $2.4 billion from the Treasury, and presumably bloat the federal budget deficit by that amount.

Moreover, the Treasury estimates 81 percent of the benefits from the rollback would go to the $100,000-and-up brackets. About 66 percent would go to those with incomes of $200,000 or more. It's clearly a rich person's bill.

But supporters of the Steiger provision say those estimates are misleading because they don't take into account the impact of the measure in spurring new investment — a shift they contend would boost the economy sharply.

Backers cite a study by Chase Econometrics Associates Inc., which predicts that passage of the proposal would stimulate so much new growth it would make the federal deficit $16 billion lower by 1985 than it would be under present law — without reducing tax revenues.

Small wonder some senators and House members seem to be swayed. Even Steiger has been surprised at the outpouring of support. "I thought," he admits, "it would be a measure whose time hadn't come."

But economists say the Chase study is open to question, in part because it is based on the presumption that passing the bill would boost stock prices 40 percent higher by 1982 than they otherwise would be — a result most analysts regard as unrealistic.

Chase developed its estimate by noting that the 1969 law led to a stock market slump, so, reversing Congress' action that year ought to bring on more growth.

But Treasury officials point out that while the tightening was enacted in 1969, it didn't actually take effect until 1970. The market slump stemmed from other factors. If anything, investors should have sold that year.

The fact is, analysts don't really know how vigorously the stock market would react to a reduction in capital gains taxes. Economists say it may be that a boom would follow, but the measure also could have little impact for years.

Indeed, the whole question of capital gains taxation is a complex one. While there's evidence the present tax rate is inhibiting some turnover of stocks and other assets, it isn't clear how much the bill would accomplish.

What policymakers face now, however, is how to deal with the political problems posed by the amendment. Officials concede that unless the stumbling block is cleared, the president's big tax-cut bill could be in trouble.

Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, has been trying to work out a compromise, but the Steiger forces — flushed with success — aren't buying. Meanwhile, the panel's liberals are growing angry.

Complicating the picture is a lobbying blitz by the securities industry and small business, and the prospect of even broader support for the proposal in the Senate.

Sen. Russel B. Long, D-La., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, is said to be "sympathetic" to the Steiger provision. And onlookers say there's little doubt that the proposal would pass.

Meanwhile, Washington is being treated to the irony of a presidential tax cut being jeopardized in an election year by a proposal to cut taxes primarily for high-income taxpayers.

Three months ago, it was just another Republican amendment that wasn't likely to go very far.

Mormon will defended in trial

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — The lonely death of Howard Hughes — emaciated, dehydrated and negelected by his doctors — was vividly described to jurors Tuesday by a lawyer who contends the dying millionaire wrote the disputed Mormon will.

"Look at the autopsy report," said Harold Rhoden. "Cause of death: Chronic renal failure. Height, 6-foot-2, weight, 92½ pounds. Emaciated, dehydrated."

Rhoden, delivering his final argument in the six-month trial, said the autopsy proves Hughes was afflicted with kidney disease for many years — a condition which would explain strange errors in the three-page handwritten will.

"There were changes in the brain cells consistent with a kidney disorder," Rhoden said. "But, above all, the kidney had scar tissue. Scar tissue accumulates because of a disease occurring years before," he told jurors.

Rhoden claims Hughes had the disease in 1968 — the year the Mormon will is dated and eight years before Hughes died while airborne en route to a hospital.

He said a person suffering kidney disease would write in a wavering hand and make mistakes in spelling.

No medical records were kept on Hughes during the nearly two decades he lived as a recluse in darkened hotel rooms. Rhoden suggested to jurors that Hughes' doctors had violated professional ethics by failing to keep records.

"The man was dying and nobody wrote anything down," Rhoden said, shaking his head.

The three women and five men of the jury were attentive as Rhoden spoke. They are expected to begin deliberations next week after arguments are concluded.

Only six of the eight must agree on a verdict.

Rhoden began Tuesday's session by ridiculing the theory that the will was forged by gas station attendant Melvin Dummar, who is named as an inheritor in the disputed document.

No ruling made in Big Bend case

AUSTIN — At a Tuesday hearing here, the Texas Aeronautics Commission did not reach a decision on whether to allow Big Bend Airways Inc. to provide service between Alpine Municipal Airport and Midland Regional Airport, and between Midland and Lubbock International Airport, according to Gwendolyn Webb, examiner.

Ms. Webb said the commission is expected to make a ruling about two months from now.

During the two-hour and 15-minute hearing, the commission heard testimoney from the airways and from the mayor of Alpine, Paul E. Pierce, she said.

The airways is seeking an operating permit to provide round-trip flight service from Midland to Lubbock twice every weekday, and from Alpine to Midland once each weekday, according to Ms. Webb. In addition, on Sundays, the firm wants permission to operate one round-trip flight from Alpine to Midland, and one from Midland to Lubbock.

Big Bend has been providing three round-trip flights weekly from Alpine to Midland without certification by the TAC, said Ms. Webb, but the agency now wants to assure that the airlines' application is properly heard before expanding scheduled service.

Claiming growing ridership, Big Bend president Patric Perez and Pierce testified an increasing number of Sul Ross University students and tourists would ride the flights. In addition, Big Bend has predicted Texas Instruments employees in Lubbock and Midland would use the flights regularly.

The line's application calls for the use of two twin-engine Beechcrafts, each with a seating capacity of nine.

City pioneering program for troubled workers

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

Employees of the city of Midland who are having family problems, finanacial troubles or a problem with alcoholism now have a way to get help without having to consider being fired and without having to continue to be absent from work while being treated for the problem.

Midland has become the first municipal government in West Texas to sign a policy statement with the Texas Commission on Alcoholism for an Employee Assistance Program, said Robbie Scott, director of occupational programing for the Commission in Austin.

W. Ray Plumlee of the regional office in Odessa will be responsible for training supervisors to recognize problems in employees, Scott said today in Midland.

Scott, director of occupational programing, explained the program is designed to identify troubled employees based on their increased absences or decreasing work performance.

"The problem is not just with alcohol, but could be financial or personal problems," Scott said.

If the trained supervisor recognizes the employee is having a problem, the employee will be referred to the program. Or, if the employee recognizes the problem, he can refer himself. Either way, the background and treatment will be kept confidential, both Scott and Plumlee emphasized.

Alcoholism is a drain on the American economy in the area of loss of work time and loss of production, Scott said. Today, alcoholism is considered to cost the country $42.5 billion and at least 6 percent of the population can be classified as being alcoholics, with that figure including 500,000 Texans, according to Scott. These employees alone are costing Texas $600 million in work production, he said.

While the number of alcoholics appears high, Scott said only 5 percent of this number is considered to be on "skid row. The other 95 percent of the alcohol abusers already are employed or are employable. This division also is including more and more high job level, or white collar, people."

The recent public announcement by Betty Ford, wife of former President Gerald Ford, will be a big benefit to heavy alcohol users in that they will recognize other people are having to fight the same problem and are finding ways to combat it, said Scott.

Employees locally will be referred to the Permian Basin Community Center for Mental Health and Mental Retardation for treatment, Plumlee said. "This program is cost effective," the Odessa man said. "It is the humane thing to do and is sort of like an employee benefit." He said that the firm gains better work production and the employee overcomes the problem.

An Odessa office is headquarters for Area 3 which covers as far west as El Paso, south to Sonora and east to Abilene.

MC trustees trying to cut tennis center costs

With bids for construction of the proposed Tennis Center Building far exceeding the budgeted amount, the Midland College Board of Trustees Tuesday voted to negotiate with the low bidder to try to decrease the costs.

College President Dr. Al G. Langford and Preston Geren of Geren Associates of Fort Worth, who designed the proposed facility, agreed to meet with the low bidder, Allan Hair, to work out a lower price with the specification that the college is not commited to accept the bid as it now stands if negotiations fail.

Allan Hair submitted a bid of $110,430, while Rose & Sons submitted one for $125,200 and R.B. Snead, for $121,720. The board earlier had allocated $40,000 for construction of the building with the city of Midland agreeing to contribute an additional $25,000.

"It looks like (my firm) gave you an expensive set of plans for the building," Geren told the trustees. He said it appeared his firm had underestimated the cost of the proposed center. In addition, he said, since this is a relatively small construction job, it seems builders are not interested in it. Fourteen companies were invited to submit bids, but only three did so.

In other action, the trustees adopted budget amendments in income and expenditures, leaving the college with a $13,760 surplus. Added to the current unrestricted fund balance, the total surplus amounts to $404,140.

"This is the first year, Midland College has approached having a 10 percent of its budget in a normal fund balance," Langford said.

However, the board approved transferring $210,000 of the fund balance to cover the construction fund deficit. This deficit now amounts to approximately $204,488, according to administration figures.

Langford said this leaves the fund balance "lower than I like it to be, but we've been there before." In fact, he said, the balace sometimes has been lower than that.

Board members looked over proposed policies and procedures for use of the new Chaparral Center, expected to be completed sometime in July. Larry Campbell, director, told them the schedule of rental rates guarantees minimum compensation to the college for allowing outsiders to use the facility.

For example, he said, if a commercial group wanted to use the seats and floor area for a concert or similar event, they would have to pay $700 or 10 percent of the money earned from ticket sales, whichever is greater.

If the concert is a success, he said, Midland College can make more money than the $700 minimum rental rate. On the other hand, if the show flops, the college still receives $700 to cover its operating expenses.

According to the proposed policy, first priority for the use of the center is given to the college; second priority is given to Midland public schools, and third priority, to the Tall City Tournament, a basketball event involving Midland and Lee High Schools.

Approval of the final form of the policies and procedures is expected to be given at the June 20 board meeting.

Investigator asked for in Big Spring

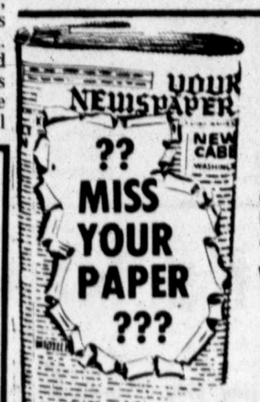

BIG SPRING — District Attorney Rick Hamby appeared before the Big Spring City Council Tuesday to ask that the city pay 35 percent of the salary and car allowance for a special investigator for his office. The Council acknowledged a need for help in the district attorney's office, but turned down a request to aid in funding.

"There is a definite need for a special investigator in our office," said Hamby. "We'll get the job done whether we get the help or not, but the city would benifit from this proposal."

City manager Harry Nagel said it had never been a function of the city to support the district attorney's office. The city council did offer to support Hamby in any way to find an alternate source of funding for more help.

Lee's Gibson gets nod in 2nd game

Mark Denny
...scores winning run

By BOB DILLON

The 6-3, 225-pound senior lefthander, will toe the rubber for Ernie Johnson's Robert E. Lee Rebels in the second game of the best-of-three Class AAAA state baseball regional baseball series at the Lee diamond.

First pitch is set for 1:30 p.m. with a third game to follow if necessary after a 20-minute break.

Sam Houston Coach Tommy Cantrell will counter with a southpaw of his own in Jimmy Sullivan who is 8-2 on the season compared to Gibson's 2-4 reading which includes a tough 5-0 loss to Lubbock Monterey in the Tournament of Champions at Cubs Stadium back in March. Gibson was only trailing 1-0 after six innings to Monterey before the Rebels began booting the ball behind him.

The pressure is on the Texans to win both games to advance into the quarterfianls against either Monterey or El Paso Andress next week since Lee won the opener Monday night at Clark Field in Forth Worth, 1-0, on a no-hitter by junior righthander Terry Willis.

LEE TAKES a 24-8 record into Thursday's game with the Texans while Sam Houston stands 22-11 on the year after winning the District 8-4A crown.

Gibson has worked 44 and one-third innings on the mound this season while walking 18 and striking out 57 opposing batters. Since coming to Midland in thespring of his junior year from Houston Bellaire, the senior has played football and baseball for the Rebels.

Monterey and Andress open its big regional best-of-three series tonight in El Paso with the second and third games set for Lowery Field in Lubbock on Friday and Saturday. The Plainsmen are currently on an 18-game winning streak after taking two games from Amarillo in bi-district play last week.

Joining Gibson in the Lee lineup today will be Doug Schmidt (.325) at first base; Don Rasure (.280) at second; Steve Pitts (.267) at shortstop and Craig Van Horn (.375) at third. In the outfield, it will be Todd Clements (.330) in left; Pat Moore (.388) in center and John White (.306) in right with Clay Calhoun (.366), doing the catching chores and Richard Josefy (.417) as the designated hitter.

Willis, Pitts, Calhoun and Mark Denny, all juniors, were the heroes in Monday's 1-0 victory over the Texans. Pitts singled in Denny with the only run of the game and Calhoun had two of Lee's hits and Denny stole second.

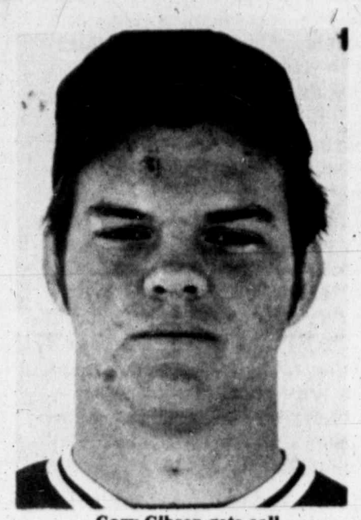

SAM HOUSTON will go with Sullivan on the mound with Eddie Urquibi behind the plate. In the infield it will be Glen Gibson at first base; Buck Sheffield at second; Darrell Brewster at short and Mike Marlow at the hot corner at third with Steve Dearman in left; Jerry Dunn in center and Ronnie Mabra in right.

The Texans, too, have some gifted athletes in their lineup in Dearman, Dunn, Marlow, Urquibi, Sheffield and Brewer. Sheffield took away three hits from Rebel batters and Brewer one and Urquibi threw out two Lee runners trying to steal second in the well-played game in Fort Worth.

In other regional playoffs across the state, in Region II, Duncanville, with a team batting average of .339, took on Dallas Jefferson in Dallas last night with the series moving to Loos Field tonight and again on Friday at 2:30 p.m. Duncanville stood 30-2 going into last night's game compared to Jeff's 15-12 reading.

Albert's knuckler keeps Jackson off balance, 5-1

JACKSON, Miss.—Jeff Albert baffled 'em with his knuckleball, going the distance to give the Midland Cubs their fifth straight road triumph, a 5-1 victory over the Jackson Mets in the opener of the Texas League series Tuesday night.

Albert, the C.W. Post College product, notched his second win with an 11-hit route going effort, surrendering a fourth inning run on a double by Keith Bodie and single by Bud Cardwell for the Mets lone run.

It was the first time this season the New York Mets' farmhands had seen a knuckleball pitcher and, if they had their druthers, it will be the last time.

OUTFIELDER JIMMY Buckner stretched his consecutive game hitting streak to 20 games with two hits, one an infield hit that knocked in a first-inning run for Midland.

The Cubs gave Albert enough to win on in the first when Kevin Drury worked Mets' starter Louis Lunar for a walk, lone of 40 he has given up in 46 innings, Steve Macko singled and after a passed ball, Buckner plated the run with his infield single. Aaron Randall then grounded into a double play as another run scored.

Drury and Macko each had two hits for the Cubs while Buckner raised his league-leading stolen base total to 24 with two thefts.

Second baseman Kurt Seibert, hit on the arm and taken to the hospital for observation in Monday's game at Little Rock, was still out of the lineup. Kurt suffered a bruise, but no break.

Former New York-San Francisco Giants great, Willie Mays, is here looking for Jackson talent...Starters in tonight's game will be Ron Davis (3-2) for Midland and Larry Prewitt (1-2) for Jackson. Davis has won his last two, starting the current win string on Little Rock.

The Cubs and Mets play four more games here with the series winding up Saturday night. After an off day Sunday, the Cubs open a 10-game homestand against Arkansas and Jackson at Cubs Stadium Monday.

Midland is three games behind league leading San Antonio in the West Division standings. That's not bad for a team that got off to an 0-6 start against the Dodgers. ..Jackson opened the season 8-2 at home, but is now 11-8 at home and 18-18 for the season. The Cubs' five-game streak raised Midland's record to 23-18.

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — The chess game that is playoff basketball is in full swing, with the next move up to Washington Coach Dick Motta.

His Seattle counterpart, Lenny Wilkens, made the first move on Sunday, bringing 34-year-old Paul Silas off the bench in the second half to play against Washington's Elvin Hayes after the Big E had outplayed Seattle rookie Jack Sikma in the early going.

The move paid off as Silas effectively neutralized the Bullets' high scorer, limiting Hayes to just two baskets in the second half. Meanwhile, Silas grabbed 12 rebounds as Seattle dominated the boards, enabling the Sonics to rally from a 19-point third quarter deficit to a 106-102 victory in the opening game of the National Basketball Association championship series.

WITH THE second game of the best-of-seven playoff finals to be played here Thursday night, it is now up to Motta to counter Wilkens' move.

"Silas was a big factor in the opener, no question about it," said Motta. "We were worried about him, and I guess it was with good reason."

Motta does not expect Hayes to fade from view on Thursday.

"We can correct the things we did wrong," he said, without delving into specifics. "We have adjustments we can make."

One would be to make sure Washington's playmakers are more conscious of getting the ball into Hayes, something that rarely happened when the Sonics were making their comeback on Sunday.

Hayes complained about that on Tuesday.

"Some people are saying I didn't work hard enough to get the basketball, but that is wrong," he said. "I was open and if I get the ball, I'm going to score. The guards can't take all the shots."

But Motta defended his guards, who took his team's final eight shots on Sunday and 16 of the last 22.

"I think we got it inside enough. When you get it inside, you have to put up the shots," he said. As for Hayes' comments, Motta warned, "We can't start bickering and having words."

THE SONICS preferred not to blame Hayes for his ineffectiveness, but to credit Silas, who fronted the 6-foot-9 forward and discouraged the Washington players from passing him the ball.

"I've played Elvin many times," said Silas, "and I know you can't play behind him and be successful. I was fronting him, and he wasn't getting the ball. That's the only way to stop him."

Silas' success against Hayes kept Wilkens from having to make a nother move, one which he has been trying very hard to avoid. That would be switching his 7-foot-1 shot-blocking center, Marvin Webster, onto Hayes man-to-man.

One of the keys to Seattle's success has been its team defense, where Webster clogs the middle and keeps opponents from driving to the basket. If Wilkens has to put him on Hayes, Webster won't be able to help out as much as he did Sunday while guarding Wes Unseld, who is not as offensive minded.

"I kinda like having Marvin inside," conceded Wilkens. "He helps us the most when he's closer to the boards and helping close down the middle."

In any case, Motta knows that for his team to win it must get more production from forwards Hayes and Bobby Dandridge, who scored just 6 points in the series opener.

Before the series, Motta said that pair "would be remembered as the greatest forward combingtion in NBA history."

They looked far from the greatest on Sunday, and Motta knows the danger.

"If they are taken out of it like that again," he said, "it's going to be a short series."

Kingdome ducats sold out quickly

SEATTLE (AP) — Available tickets for next Tuesday's National Basketball Association championship series game in the Kingdome were sold out within two hours Tuesday, and the Seattle SuperSonics announced an additional 15,000 would go on sale sometime next weekend.

The quick sellout meant at least 28,893 spectators, an NBA playoff record, for Game 4 here against the Washington Bullets.

Janet Guthrie...no heroics planned

Janet to play it safe in first 500

By HANK LOWENKRON

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Janet Guthrie has confidence in her car and crew, but the first woman to drive in the Indianapolis 500 isn't thinking about making a mad dash for the lead Sunday when she starts in the race for the second time.

"Starting in the middle of the pack, you're not going to see any first lap heroics from me," the 40-year-old Guthrie said Tuesday.

"I'll have exactly one thought, say for the first 50 miles and that is to stay out of any problems that may develop. A lot of my stock car races have been based on an easy start and a strong finish."

Guthrie, who qualified with a speed of 190.325 miles per hour, will be starting the 33-car race on the outside of the fifth row, once Mario Andretti is placed in the car Mike Hiss qualified for him.

ALTHOUGH GUTHRIE won't admit it, the race may be critical to the woman who failed to qualify in 1976 and finished 29th last year.

"I was surprised I had so much trouble getting a sponsor," she said. "A lot of people listened to my proposals, but most said they had planned their budget and to come back some other time. I'd been working on getting a sponsor since December. And Texaco came through at the 12th hour on March 31.

Guthrie's deal with her sponsor is for this race only. She said the company would own the car after the race.

"That was part of our deal, which was my idea. However, if we remain happy with each other we could work something out," she said.

THE UNIVERSITY of Michigan physics graduate, who started competitive racing in 1963 and has been involved in it at many levels since, also is looking for a sponsor in the NASCAR circuit.

"My stock sponsor said it is cutting its budget," she said. "But unless I win this race here, I don't feel I have anything to prove. My record speaks for itself."

Sunday, Guthrie will be driving a Wildcat-SGD, built by George Bignotti, who has built four cars that have won the Indy 500.

"The car is a good predictable one. I believe it will be easy to drive fast for 500 miles. I believe it will be much easier to drive fast for 500 miles than some of the Lightnings in the race," she said.

"The car really talks to you. It tells you what it is going to do. It gives you plenty of time to take appropriate steps if it is going to do something you don't like."

THIS MONTH has been much quieter than were the previous two Mays for Guthrie, who spent most of her time in the pits last year while completing only 29 laps.

"I'm much happier with the pace this year," she said. "I've been able to concentrate on preparing the car. In the past, there have been an awful lot of interviews that have taken up a lot of my time."

She praised Bignotti for his help.

"He did a lot more than sell me the car," she said. "He helped me sort it out and then he gave me one of his garages to get it ready.

"I look for his cars to do well. I look for a lot of the eight-cylinder Cosworths to break down and wouldn't be surprised if a four-cylinder like mine or the ones he has Gordon Johncock and Steve Krisiloff driving wins the race."

Like the other drivers, Guthrie is spending most of this week relaxing.

"I'm just having a good time," she said.

Trigger-happy Brown ready to fire on Bullets

SEATTLE (AP) — Fred Brown, the Seattle SuperSonics' trigger-happy reserve guard who ambushed Washington in the opening game of the National Basketball Association championship series, says he'll open fire on the Bullets again — if he has to.

"I just go in and see what the situation is," explained Brown, whose 16 fourth-quarter points Sunday highlighted a spectacular rally in Seattle's

Herzog not exactly happy

SEATTLE (AP) — Splitting a-doubleheader with the Seattle Mariners isn't enough to satisfy Manager Whitey Herzog of the Kansas City Royals.

"We've got to start hitting better," Herzog said. "At least we played the way we should play (in the second game). We manufactured some runs."

After losing to the Mariners 4-3 in the opener as Seattle pitchers Dick Pole and Jim Todd combined for a six-hitter, the Royals came back to win 5-3 in the nightcap.

Twice the Royals opened innings with doubles. The next batter hit the ball to the right side of the infield, permitting the runner to advance to third and later score on a sacrifice fly.

Portland's Walton named NBA's MVP

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Bill Walton's selection as the Most Valuable Player in the National Basketball Association was "well-deserved," said Portland Trail Blazer Coach Jack Ramsay.

Ramsay said it was "an added distinction that the award was made by a vote of the players. The people you work with are the ones who know you best."

In a vote of NBA players, Walton received 96 votes to 80½ for scoring champion George Gervin of the San Antonio Spurs. David Thompson of the Denver Nuggets was third with 28½ followed by Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Los Angeles Lakers with 14. Abdul-Jabbar had won the award for each of the last two seasons.

Walton was unavailable for comment. Ramsay said he wasn't sure where Walton was. "I think he's in San Diego," said the club's public relataions director, John White.

Also receiving votes were Walter Davis of Phoenix, 4; Paul Westphal of Phoenix and Maurice Lucas of Portland, 3 each; Truck Robinson of New Orleans and Artis Gilmore of Chicago, 2 each; and 1 each for Marques Johnson of Milwaukee, Marvin Webster of Seattle, Julius Erving of Philadelphia, Bob Lanier of Detroit and Bob McAdoo of New York.

For 58 games, Walton averaged 18.9 points and 13.2 rebounds per game.

Bill Walton

Ramsay, asked how valuable Walton was to the Trail Blazers, said, "Well, we were 50 and 10 when he was playing. That was by far the best."

Ramsay declined to compare Walton with past winners Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Dave Cowens, Wilt Chamberlain and Bill Russell, but he said, "He certainly deserves to be in that company."

The Trail Blazers lost their first series in the playoff, 4-2 to Seattle. "But remember we were without (Bob) Gross and (Lloyd) Neal as well as Walton," Ramsay said.

Walton played in the first game of that series and left the second early, in pain from his foot.

The man who played behind Walton, reserve center Tom Owens, said Walton was so good it's "ridiculous. I knew he was very good. But this good? He's the best. There isn't a thing he can't do. I just can't believe him."

Montreal knocks off Bruins, 4-1

MONTREAL (AP) — Defenseman Serge Savard thought for a moment in assessing the game his Montreal Canadiens had played against the Boston Bruins. Referee Dave Newell called 106 minutes in penalties and ejected one Boston player from the contest, prompting Savard to admit, "That's not the type of hockey I like."

The type of hockey Savard likes is skating, playing strong defense and starting the plays that power Montreal's lethal offense. But while Newell was assessing all those penalties, Savard had time to play his brand of game — setting up three goals and bringing the Canadiens within a victory of their 20th National Hockey League title with a 4-1 triumph over the Bruins Tuesday night.

The losers were furious over Newell's work, though Montreal left wing Steve Shutt observed, "I really haven't seen a losing coach not complain about the refereeing. We lost in Boston Sunday night and we complained, too. They have a tough job. They're always a scapegoat."

Newell was one Tuesday night — especially in the minds of Boston Coach Don Cherry and defenseman Brad Park. What appeared to irk them most was that 10 times Newell penalized both teams simultaneously for minor infractions, leaving four skaters per side on the ice.

"Those 4-on-4's kill our whole style of play," said Bruins left wing Don Marcotte. "We like to send two men deep into their zone, and when it's 4-on-4, we can only send one in on the puck."

"Everything was double," insisted Park. "We might as well turn our sticks around and play with the handles. I thought the only thing fixed was the horse races."

"If we can play 5-on-5 for a couple of minutes, we'll do all right, but if Scotty (Montreal Coach Bowman) gets the power plays he wants Thursday, the series is over," Cherry bellowed. "You can write anything you like, 'Cherry is a sorehead,' anything you like. I don't give a darn. An easy way out would be for me to accept it gracefully, but I'm not. I'm fighting this right to the end."

The Bruins fought right to the end, with three separate skirmishes breaking out with just 21 seconds to play. But the game had been decided long before, with Savard setting up a rink-length dash by Robinson and 20-foot goals by Pierre Mondou and Pierre Larouche.

Larouche and Jacques Lemaire scored in the second period, and Marcotte ruined Ken Dryden's shutout bid with 8:38 to play.

To that point, the Canadiens completely shut down the Bruins' attack, forcing Boston to shoot from the outer perimeter most of the contest until Marcotte tapped in the rebound of a Bobby Schmautz shot for the first Bruins power-play goal after 14 straight failures.

Mondou's goal ended a string of 12 fruitless power plays for the Canadiens, who need a victory in Game Six in Boston Thursday to annex their third consecutive league title.

"We're ticked off," said Park, "and we'll be coming out strong Thursday night. You better believe it."

By the way, Brad, the referee will beVAndy Van Hellemond.

NCAA orders Maroons to forfeit 19 games

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — The NCAA has ordered Mississippi State to forfeit 19 football games, but withheld a decision on a similar case involving Minnesota and all-American basketball player Mychal Thompson.

Citing the seldom-used "Restitution Provision," the National Collegiate Athletic Association Council decreed Mississippi State, for playing defensive lineman Larry Gillard, must forfeit all but the first two games of its 1975 season, and every game in 1976 and 1977.

Mississippi State was placed on probation and Gillard declared ineligible for the 1975 season by the NCAA Infractions Committee, which found he had been provided clothing at a discount not available to other students.

But Mississippi State joined Gillard in a court battle against the NCAA and Gillard continued to play. The school won in a state court but lost on appeal in the Mississippi Supreme Court.

In the Minnesota case, Thompson, David Viney and Phil Saunders were declared ineligible for parts of the 1976-77 season. The Infractions Committee found the Big Ten school guilty of more than 100 violations, including Thompson's admitted selling of complimentary tickets.

Minnesota also allowed the ineligible players to compete while it pursued the matter through the courts, winning on the state level but losing on appeal in the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court in St. Paul, Minn.

William B. Hunt, director of enforcement, said the 18-member Council voted to take the action against Mississippi State during its spring meeting here last month.

"Minnesota raised some questions and the council needed some additional information," Hunt said, "and voted to postpone consideration until additional information was developed."

Hunt said the Minnesota case will be decided at the Council's next meeting, scheduled for August in Dallas.

The Restitution Provision was voted by the NCAA membership at its January 1975 convention and invoked once before, against Oregon State.

The provision holds that when an ineligible player competes under a court order that is subsequently overturned by the courts, the school is subject to further penalties.

"The provision was adopted ... in the interest of fairness to institutions forced by court order to compete against teams including an ineligible student-athlete," J. Neils Thompson, NCAA president, said in an NCAA news release Tuesday. "The provisions are designed to eliminate any competitive advantage or profit an institution might gain while permitting an ineligible student-athlete to participate under a court order which is eventually overturned."

Had Mississippi State accepted the NCAA ruling, Gillard would have been eligible his junior and senior seasons. Minnesota's Thompson would have missed only seven games during

And in Region IV, Austin Anderson (26-3), will battle Corpus Christi Moody (25-4) while South San Antonio (17-7-2) tries San Antonio Roosevelt(30-2).

Sam Houston had trouble with Willis' curve ball Monday night and will be facing more of the same off the slants of Gibson Thursday. "Terry moved the ball around well and kept them (Sam Houston) off balance most of the game," said Johnson.

Brown ready to fire again

106-102 victory that left the Bullets wondering what hit them.

"I'll be shooting if it's needed because I do it very well," continued Brown, who unloaded the ball 30 times in Game 1 and wound up with 30 points to lead all scorers.

"If it's defense, I'll do that. I give game leadership. It just depends on what the situation permits."

The loss was a disheartening blow to Washington, which dominated Seattle through the first 2½ quarters but saw a seemingly insurmountable 19-point third-quarter lead slip away in the final 14½ minutes, when they fell victim to complacency, Brown's shooting and a tough Seattle defense.

"We had some games like that, too, this year," admitted Brown. "Even though you're playing so well and you get such a big lead, when a team makes a run at you, sometimes you relax your senses so much that you can't respond.

"When it gets close and you have to make baskets, that hoop can look a lot smaller. You begin pressing and making fouls and turnovers. It happened to them (Bullets)."

When the teams square off in Game 2 at Landover, Md., on Thursday night, Brown says he doesn't expect a repeat performance from either side.

"The main thing is that we don't wait until the fourth quarter (to get untracked)," Brown said. "We've got to get going right away, get on the boards right away. Then we'll be all right."

One of the league's premier backcourt players who has been at his best in the playoffs, Brown doesn't put much stock in the opinion Sunday's loss may have a lingering psychological effect on the Bullets. It was Washington's ninth consecutive setback in three championship series over the past eight years.

"They're pros. Every one of these guys are pros. They've come a long way, regardless of what anyone says," said Brown. "Each game is played differently. You're making new adjustments and seeing how things are developing on the court. Sunday's game is history."

Depsite holding the homecourt advantage in the best-of-seven title series, Seattle had only one game at home instead of the customary two before moving to Washington. That isn't a big factor, Brown said.

"We don't get excited when we're in the hole," the Sonics' captain said. "(Coach) Lenny (Wilkens) gets us settled down and out of it in a hurry.

"The way I see it there are six games left in the season," Brown said. "We know we have to win three; they have to win four. So we have to win three as fast as we can.

"Heck, we're almost in June. The Fourth of July is coming up. We've been going since September. We want this over as soon as we can."

Streaking Twins tame Rangers once more, 5-2

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — The unlikely combination of a rookie pitcher and a reserve catcher added up to another victory for the Minnesota Twins Tuesday night.

Roger Erickson stopped Texas on six hits and Glenn Borgmann drove in two runs with a home run and a single to help Minnesota to a 5-2 triumph over the Rangers, giving the Twins their seventh victory in their past eight games.

"I've been getting a lot of advice from everywhere," said the 21-year old Erickson, who raised his record to 4-3. "But Camilo (Pascual, the Twins pitching coach) told me just to go out there and throw my own game.

"That's what I did."

Solo home runs off Texas starter Jim Umbarger (2-3) by Dan Ford, his fifth, and No. 1 by Borgmann staked Erickson to a 2-0 lead.

Texas, which hadn't scored in 15 innings, nicked Erickson for two runs on two-out single by Al Oliver in the seventh to tie the game.

But Minnesota went back ahead in its half of the inning on a run-scoring single by Borgmann.

"That home run was the first hit I've had since April 16," said Borgmann, who gave Butch Wynegar a rest. "I was wondering if I was ever going to get another one."

A pinch-hit triple by Mike Cubbage added Minnesota's final two runs and gave Erickson some breathing room. He set down the Rangers in order in the ninth to earn his first victory before the hometown fans.

"I relaxed a little out there after I got two outs in the seventh," explained Erickson, who spent just one season in minor league ball. "I got lazy for a while, but this was the best my arm has felt all year."

The Rangers, who now stand 19-19, had little to cheer about.

In the first inning they loaded the bases against Erickson but couldn't score.

In the second, Bump Wills singled but was caught leaning and nailed in a rundown. The next batter, Juan Beniquez, walked, but was picked off by Erickson.

"We're not playing up to our potential," said Billy Hunter, the Rangers' skipper. "I keep saying we'll start to hit, but we don't."

One Ranger who didn't was catcher Jim Sundberg, who went hitless in four trips and saw his 22-game hitting streak, the longest in the majors, come to a halt.

"I don't feel like the heat's off because I never really put any pressure on myself to begin with," said Sundberg.

"Actually, the only night I felt any pressure was when I was going for No. 17 to tie the Ranger record. I guess I'll just have to start another one."

Land offered for pin Hall

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — The city of Fairlawn and Marathon Oil Co. are offering six acres of park land as a site for the proposed National Bowling Hall of Fame.

The Fairlawn site is the second in the Akron area to be proposed for the hall. A site in the suburb of Cuyahoga Falls was offered earlier. Thirty-one other cities around the country also are bidding for the hall of fame.

Oakland's Bobby Winkles quits while he's ahead

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

The Oakland A's lost their manager Tuesday night.

Not so unusual. Happens all the time out there in Charlie Finley Land.

What was unusual was that Bobby Winkles left voluntarily — and with the A's in first place, no less.

Winkles, perhaps unwilling to wait for the A's to plummet from first place in the American League West — or unwilling to wait for Finley to hand out yet another sheaf of walking papers, pulled the old "You can't fire me; I quit" routine.

Last June 10 he replaced Jack McKeon. And when Winkles bade the A's goodbye a few hours before Tuesday night's game, McKeon, the third base coach, assumed the managerial reins once more.

And he came in the way he went out — a loser. The A's literally kicked away their game against Milwaukee, falling 3-2 and slipping within a game of second-place California.

In other AL games, Minnesota trimmed Texas 5-2, New York shelled Cleveland 10-1, Baltimore blanked Detroit 2-0, Toronto beat Boston 2-1 in 12 innings, California shaded Chicago 5-4 and, in a twinbill in Seattle, the Mariners won the opener 4-3 and Kansas City came back to win the nightcap 5-3.

"I'M SORRY to see him go," Finley said of Winkles. "I think he made a mistake. It is obviously something that doesn't meet the eye. It came as a surprise to me.

"My speculation on why he quit is that the team is on top and he wanted to get out while he was looking good," said Finley, who has had 16 managers.

THE A'S drew a typically tiny crowd to Tuesday night's game, 2,534 paying fans. They didn't get their money's worth — unless they came to see the A's give the game away to the Brewers.

In the fifth inning, Matt Keough walked Don Money. Buck Martinez bunted him to second and, with two away, Money raced home when first baseman Dave Revering let Cecil Cooper's grounder bounce past him into right field.

Yankees 10, Indians 1

Ron Guidry's 11-strikeout, five-hit pitching, home runs by Graig Nettles and Chris Chambliss and a seven-run seventh inning carried the Yanks to their 18th victory in the last 24 games. Chambliss singled for two runs and Nettles doubled for two in the seventh.

Orioles 2, Tigers 0

Mike Flanagan pitched a two-hitter and Rick Dempsey broke up a scoreless tie with a fifth-inning home run in the Orioles' victory.

But the big play was center fielder Larry Harlow's leaping catch that robbed John Wockenfuss of a second-inning home run.

Blue Jays 2, Red Sox 1

Angels 5, White Sox 4

Rick Miller of California doubled with two away in the sixth inning and came home on Ken Landreaux's pinch single to center field with the run that beat the White Sox.

Mariners 4-3, Royals 3-5

Successive run-scoring doubles by Lee Stanton and Ruppert Jones in the sixth inning vaulted Seattle to victory in the opener, but the Royals rebounded in the nightcap on rookie Clint Hurdle's three runs batted in.

Big 8 votes on cage tourney

AFTON, Okla. (AP) — A vote by Big Eight Conference faculty representatives was expected today on a proposal to eliminate the Big Eight Christmas basketball tournament.

Sources said Big Eight athletic directors voted 6-2 Tuesday to recommend elimination of the tournament, The Daily Oklahoman reported in today's editions.

The vote reported by the Oklahoma City newspaper was not publicly announced.

"I can't confirm or deny it," Steve Hatchell, director of the Big Eight service bureau, said of the vote reported by the newspaper.

However, the action won't become final unless faculty representatives also approve it in their vote expected today.

Faculty representatives may want to retain the tournament, whichhas been held every year since 1946, from a financial standpoint. The per team payoff last year was about $28,000.

In other action Tuesday, football coaches approved several recommendations to pass along to athletic directors and faculty representatives for their votes, the Oklahoman reported.

Among the recommendations were those that would raise to 60 the travel squad for non-conference games and renew the conference contract with the Orange Bowl.

Big Sky eyes Reno as member

POCATELLO, Idaho (AP) — Presidents of Big Sky Conference schools have voted to invite the University of Nevada-Reno to join the athletic conference after June 30, 1979.

Richard Bowers, University of Montana president and chairman of the presidents' council, said in a statement following a three-hour closed-door meeting Tuesday that the membership of Nevada-Reno would be "contingent upon their acceptance and their meeting of the conference's rules and regulations" before July 1, 1979.

"We're just tickled to death to receive an invitation," said Tom Reed, assistant athletic director at Nevada-Reno. "I think it's a positive move for the University of Nevada and I think we can contribute to the Big Sky Conference."

Bowers said the council had considered several schools before settling on Nevada-Reno.

Representatives from Nevada-Reno, North Dakota State and the University of North Dakota attended the three-day conference at Idaho State University and made presentations to the presidents' council.

In making the decision on which school to invite, the council considered proximity to other conference schools and similarity in athletic and academic programs, said Steve Belko, conference commissioner.

The decision had to be unanimous to be accepted.

"We feel football-wise we have a football-playing conference and Reno has a very good football program and other non-revenue sports. I think the University of Nevada will benefit and so will our conference," Belko said.

Miss. State catches full NCAA wrath

If the council rules against Minnesota the same way it did against Mississippi State, the Gophers would forfeit all 1977-78 basketball games.

With the forfeits, Kentucky, a 14-7 loser to Mississippi State, in 1976, presumably ties Georgia for the 1976 Southeastern Conference championship.

For last season, Rose Bowl champion Washington goes to 9-3 and North Texas State advances to 10-1, since the ruling wipes out their losses to Mississippi State.

In addition, Mississippi State forfeits 1976 victories over North Texas, Louisville, Cal Poly-Pomona, Memphis State, Southern Mississippi, Auburn, LSU and Mississippi.

Mississippi State also forfeits 1977 victories over Kansas State, Auburn and Mississippi.

"We are naturally delighted our case with the NCAA is closed," Mississippi State Coach Bob Tyler, who appeared before the Council in April, said through a spokesman. "I am positive our players and all our people are determined to work harder than ever to maintain a winning program."

Celotto never doubted

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Mario Celotto, a potentially awesome rookie linebacker, says he never doubted his chances to play professional football despite four knee operations during his career at the University of Southern California.

Celotto, the No. 7 draft choice of the Buffalo Bills of the National Football League, has moved into the area armed with a program of stretching and strengthening exercises. He believes these exercises will rebuild the speed and leg power that made him a starter for the powerful Trojans as a freshman.

The baby-faced recruit, who carries 234 pounds on a gladiator's frame, said the potential of a show business career

McKeon returns as Oakland pilot

OAKLAND (AP) — Charlie Finley has another recycled manager, Jack McKeon, who says, "At least I know what's expected of me."

Bobby Winkles walked out as manager Tuesday night with his team in first place, and third baseman Wayne Gross later called it, "Just another day in the life of the Oakland A's."

He added, using a line that's been said before by members of baseball's most unpredictable team, "As the clubhouse turns."

McKeon is back as manager, moving into the dugout from the third base coaching spot less than a year after Finley fired him as manager and named Winkles to the job. He's the third manager — along with Hank Bauer and Alvin Dark — who has been fired and rehired by the A's owner.

Winkles called Finley, who was home in Chicago, about three hours before Tuesday night's game against the Milwaukee Brewers and told him he was resigning. McKeon and the other coaches, at Finley's request, tried to change his mind but Winkles stood firm and left Oakland Coliseum more than hour before gametime.

"He didn't give us any concrete reasons why he was leaving, but he had his mind made up and we couldn't change it," said McKeon.

"He just pulled out and that was that," said rookie pitcher John Johnson who, like the rest of the players, learned of the managerial change through a printed statement of Finley's handed out 20 minutes before the game, which Oakland lost 3-2.

Brewers Manager George Bamberger, who met McKeon instead of Winkles in the pregame meeting at home plate, said, "Sure, I was surprised. It's a shame. Bobby was doing a good job, a real good job."

"It is obviously something that doesn't meet the eye," Finley said in sizing up one of the strangest of the 15 managerial changes in his 18 years of operating the A's.

But he added, "My speculation on why he quit is that the team is on top and he wanted to get out while he was looking good. If the team took a nosedive, then he'd look bad."

Milwaukee's Sal Bando, the former A's captain who has had many verbal bouts with Finley, said with a snort, "That sounds like something Charlie would say.

"I know Bobby well and if he quit, he quit for a good reason. He's no quitter. He's basically his own man and I don't think he could take all of Finley's prying."

Amaya surprises Barazzutti, 6-3, 7-6

ROME (AP) — Tennis' latest giant-killer is a giant himself, taller and sturdier than some basketball centers.

Victor Amaya of Holland, Mich., 6-foot-7 and 220 pounds, stunned the $230,000 Italian Open tennis tournament Tuesday by ousting national hero Corrado Barazzutti 6-3, 7-6, overcoming the seventh-seeded player as well as a screaming crowd of 7,000 at the Foro Italico clay compound.

The victory — his first over a seeded player in his three years on the international circuit — shocked even Amaya.

Inexperienced and embarassed, he reluctantly lunged to the winner's circle after the upset and heard questions that no tennis pro would have relished.

"Who are you?" he was asked. "We only know your name. And we see you play left-handedly. We know nothing more."

Amaya, grandson of a Mexican and a political science graduate from the University of Michigan, has been in the Italian Open for the past three years, mostly enjoying his Roman holiday after losing in the early rounds.

This time, the towering figure of Amaya has been put in the spotlight for a second-round match against Ivan Molina of Colombia and, if he wins again, he might face another tennis giant, Australian veteran John Newcombe.

Newcombe, the Italian Open champion in 1969 and 10th-seeded this year, swept past American Tom Gullikson 7-6, 6-1 Tuesday.

While Gullikson was losing, other Americans fared well, avenging the inglorious exit of second-seeded Vitas Gerulaitis, a victim to Italy's Adriano Panatta 7-6, 7-5, in Monday's opening round.

FORMER WIMBLEDON champion Arthur Ashe, sidelined last year after foot surgery and now setting his sights on Wimbledon again, rallied from a first-set deficit and beat unheralded Italian Vincenzo Franchitti 3-6, 6-1, 6-3.

The 32-year-old Ashe is confident that the Rome and Paris tournaments before Wimbledon, will aid his slow but steady comeback. So far this year, he has played in only one semifinal and two quarter-finals.

Other Americans winners Tuesday included Brian Gottfried and Harold Solomon. The third-seeded Gottfried outlasted Chile's Belus Prajoux 6-2, 5-7, 6-2, and Solomon, seeded eighth, ousted veteran Jan Kodes of Czechoslovakia 6-3, 6-1.

Two other seeded players were eliminated. Fifth-seeded Manuel Orantes of Spain withdrew because of an ailing back and sixth-seeded Raul Ramirez of Mexico was upset by Dick Crealy of Australia 0-6, 7-6, 6-3.

In the women's division, the top two seeds, Mima Jausovec of Yugoslavia and Virginia Ruzici of Romania, advanced with easy victories. Jausovec, the No.1 seed, whipped Ann Casabianca of Argentina 6-3, 6-2, and Ruzici downed Sharon Walsh of the United States 6-3, 7-5.

Switzer longs for SWC spot for OU

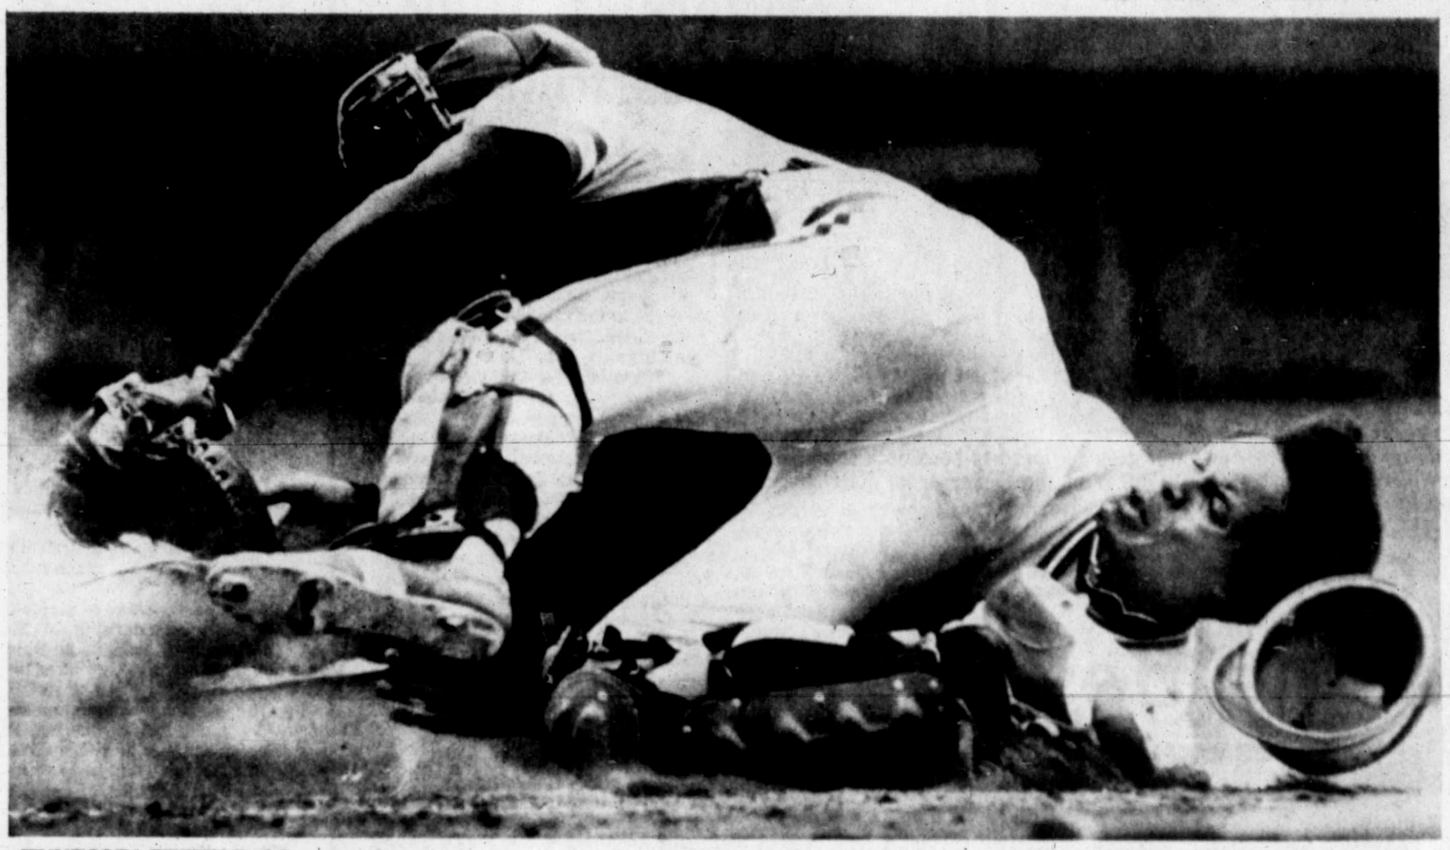

RUSSELLVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Barry Switzer, head football coach at the Oklahoma University, said Tuesday he wishes the University of Arkansas would drop out of the Southwest Conference so Oklahoma could join it.

Switzer added, however, that he doubts Arkansas will leave the SWC.

He said membership in the SWC would give Oklahoma a shot in the arm in recruiting Texas high school players.

"We've built a great tradition at Oklahoma with Texas players, though," Switzer said. "We can recruit Texas better than Arkansas can."

French trainer escapes kidnap attempt

BORDEAUX, France (AP) — Michel Hidalgo, trainer of the French team which will play in the World Cup soccer tournament in Argentina, struggled with three apparent would-be kidnappers Tuesday and escaped without injury.

Hidalgo reportedly disarmed the only one of his attackers who was armed.

An anonymous caller telephoned the French news agency, AFP, later in the day to claim the Hidalgo incident was an attempted kidnapping.

The caller said that an unidentified group wanted to kidnap the trainer to draw attention to the "hypocritical complicity of France," which it claimed was Argentina's "principal supplier of military material."

The group also demanded the release of all prisoners in Argentina.

Cards rolling, but wrong way

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

The St. Louis Cardinals continue to roll — only they're rolling in the wrong direction.

"Things have a way of snowballing, I guess," says Manager Ken Boyer, bemoaning the major league's longest losing streak this year, and the longest for the Cardinals since 1929.

The negative streak reached 11 Tuesday night with a 4-1 loss at home to the Montreal Expos.

"I'm trying to figure out some way to get us hitting, primarily," said Boyer. "We played real well defensively the last time we were home."

The manager shook his head.

"You've got to keep putting your best people out there," he said. "But maybe it's got to the point psychologically where I'll have to stick a couple of new people in the lineup. (Montreal Manager) Dick Williams told me tonight when he handed in his lineup card that he'd been through it himself. He said, 'I don't have any answer other than just going through it.'"

Cardinal catcher Ted Simmons didn't have an answer, either.

"We could use a big inning, for sure, to take the pressure off everybody," he said. "We haven't had one for so long I can't remember when it was."

Giants 3, Astros 2

Bill Madlock's two-out, run-scoring single in the bottom of the ninth capped a three-run rally as San Francisco beat Houston. The Astros entered the ninth with a 2-0 lead behind the pitching of rookie Tom Dixon and reliever Joe Sambito.

But Jack Clark and Larry Herndon got San Francisco started with one-out walks. Marc Hill belted a run-scoring single and was replaced by pinch-runner Mike Sadek.

Padres 3, Dodgers 2

Tucker Ashford's two-run single in the eighth inning sparked San Diego over Los Angeles. After Dave Winfield singled and Gene Tenace walked, Rick Sweet grounded out to first base before Ashford drilled his single to right field off loser Tommy John. Rollie Fingers was the winner in relief of Randy Jones.

Braves 6, Reds 4

Mets 7, Pirates 3

Doug Flynn and John Stearns drove in two runs apiece to lead New York over Pittsburgh in a game marked by three rain delays. Nino Espinosa earned his third straight victory for New York with two innings of relief help from Skip Lockwood, who got his seventh save.

Ex-catcher, trainer get get OK to buy Red Sox

CHICAGO (AP) — Haywood Sullivan, a former catcher, and Buddy Leroux, a former trainer, were instrumental in purchasing the Boston Red Sox for $20.5 million, the largest sum ever paid for a major league baseball franchise.

Helping swing the deal Tuesday was the money of Jean Yawkey, widow of Thomas Yawkey, who owned the club from 1933 until his death in 1976.

American League owners, who last December had turned down another group headed by Sullivan and Leroux, needed only five minutes to approve the sale, and, according to one owner, "four minutes more than were needed."

The deal includes $15 million for the team and $5.5 million for Fenway Park and related real estate.

Sullivan, executive vice president and general manager of the team, and Leroux, vice president in charge of administration, will join Mrs. Yawkey as general partners in ownership of the club. There also are nine limited partners.

When the owners turned down Sullivan and Leroux in the Hawaii winter meetings, they were not satisfied with the financial structure of the deal which included bank backing. This time, the deal was for straight cash and missing from possible owners were the names of Ernest Dade, a retired manufacturer, and Pat Groper, a former furniture executive whose partner was murdered.

"We are pleased to have the ownership well accredited," said Lee MacPhail, president of the American League. "I do feel now the new ownership is in a stronger position than the previous application which was rejected because of its financial structure."

Sullivan, a former catcher with the Red Sox, said, "I'm happy to announce our presentation was approved unanimously. Only one vote was taken and it's needless to say how elated we are."

Leroux, once a trainer for the Red Sox, called the difficulties of acquiring the team "a great education. There have been a few heartaches but the ultimate result speaks for itself."

Leroux and Mrs. Yawkey also are listed among nine limited partners.

The owners also discussed the situation of Gabe Paul, president and chief executive officer of the Cleveland Indians, who still owns stock in the New York Yankees, a team with which he was formerly connected.

"My stock is close to being sold," said Paul, "There are legal and technical details which require time."

LA looks to outside to save Olympic Games

LOS ANGELES (AP) — New hope for the city to salvage the 1984 Olympic Games has been placed on the possibility of outside aid and a new round of negotiations with the International Olympic Committee.

Kenneth Hahn, a member of the county's Board of Supervisors, proposed Tuesday that the federal government and television share in the financial responsibility for the Games, primarily for security costs.

"They (the federal government) are paying $60 million to $70 million for security at the Winter Games in Lake Placid, N.Y., in 1980," Hahn said, "so we ought to be able to get at least $50 million."

However, Rep. Matthew McHugh, D-N.Y., who represents the Lake Placid area, said Tuesday no money has been appropriated by Congress to pay for security at the Winter Games.

He said the 1977 federal budget includes only $58 million for the construction of housing for the athletes and a fence around the Lake Placid sports complex.

Hahn, who attended recent negotiations with the IOC in Athens, Greece, said federal money, along with ticket revenues and $100 million in television rights, "should make it certain that the Games wouldn't cost taxpayers a dime".

Two, maybe three, title fights eyed for Superdome

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — At least two and perhaps three boxing title fights, including a possible defense by powerful light heavyweight champion Victor Galindez, will precede the Muhammad Ali-Leon Spinks heavyweight battle Sept. 15, promoter Bob Arum said Tuesday.

If the four title matches come off, Arum said it will be the first time since 1937 that four championships will be contested on the same night in the same city.

"We are spending in excess of $8 million on talent alone for either three title fights and two 10-rounders or four title fights," Arum said at a news conference. "Of course, most of the money is going to Ali and Spinks, but we'll spend $250,000 on the other title bouts and $25,000 each on the others."

Galindez, of Argentina, who has had 12 successful title defenses, is set to fight Orleans Parish prison inmate Jerry Celestine, provided the unranked local fighter becomes ranked by the World Boxing Association before the bout.

If Celestine does not btecome ranked, Arum said that the convicted armed robber, who fights under the auspicies of the parish sheriff, will meet a top-ranked light heavyweight contender instead of Galindez.

In that event, a middleweight title defense by Argentina's Hugo Corro against either third-ranked Vito Anduofermo of New York, eighth-ranked Marvin Hagler of Boston or unranked Dave Love of California would replace Galindez-Celestine.

IN OTHER championship defense set for the Superdome is World Boxing Council featherweight champ Danny Lopez of Los Angeles against either Juan Malvarez of Argentina or Roberto Castagnon of Spain.

Arum said he also is working on a fourth title bout involving World Boxing Association titleholder Yoko Gushiken, but that depends on Gushiken's contract with a Japanese television network which is not showing the Ali-Spinks fight.

If the Gushiken fight is not held, Arum said that a 10-round fight between two heavyweight contenders will start the long night's program of between 65 and 70 scheduled rounds.

THE ONLY other time four championships were contested on the same card was Sept. 23, 1937, in what was billed as the "Carnival of Champions" at the Polo Grounds in New York.

A crowd of 32,600 attended those fights, which grossed $232,643.35. If the Arum-promoted card sells out the Superdome, more than 80,000 will be there, with a live gate in excess of $5 million.

Mike Tully certain he set record

By ELIZABETH WHEELER
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Others are debating it but UCLA's Mike Tully has no doubt. He says he set a world record in the pole vault last Friday at the Pacific 8 in track championships in Corvallis, Ore.

"It's mine," he said of his mark of 18-8 3-4. "I watched them measure it and then I jumped it."

The bar was measured at 18-8 3-4, Tully grazed the bar but it didn't fall. Before it could be remeasured, the bar was knocked down, either by the wind or an official. When it was replaced, it was measured at 18-8, 1-4-inch short nof the world mark.

Tully said the bar was not replaced in the same position.

UCLA coach Jim Bush and other track and field experts disagreed about whether a measurement must be made after the vault for the result to be official. Tully takes no stand on that question.

"I don't study the rules," he said Monday at the weekly track writes luncheon. "I just jump."

"I've never seen so man confused people in my life," Bush said. "If we do not support Mike Tully in this world record application, it is one of the worst things I've ever seen. What more does the man have to do? He cleared the bar. He didn't knock it down. He can't get up there and measure it too.

"A lot of people say, 'Well, he can make it again.' That's not fair. You can't say he's goping to do it again, for sure. And he shouldn't have to. He is the world record-holder."

Karen Young signs with MC net team

Karen Young, the No. 1 tennis player from Wichita Falls Rider, has signed an athletic scholarship agreement with Midland College.

Miss Young, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Newman Young, lettered four years and was a state semifinalist in 1977, district semifinalist in 1975 and 1976 and district champion and regional quarterfinalist in 1978. She was the recipient of the Bill Stevens athletic award this spring.

"We are pleased to have Karen Young join us at Midland College, not just for her tennis ability, but for her all-around scholastic and extracurricular achievements," MC coach Brian Gilley said.

Miss Young plans to major in fashion merchandising at MC and intends to transfer to Oklahoma State University after two years at MC.

Among her accomplishments, Miss Young was a cheerleader, vice president of the student council, class beauty two years, runnerup for the DAR Good Citizenship award, vice-president of the Biology Club, named to Who's Who in American High School students, a member of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes and a junior Forum debutante.

She joins a community college tennis team which has carved out an impressive reputation during its brief history. The MC women's team has won two National Junior College Athletic Association titles and two runnerup spots during its four years of competition.

This year, the MC women were conference and regional co-champions and NJCAA runnersup. Three members of the team were named NJCAA all-Americas.

'Athlete of the decade', Ali agrees he deserves it

By WILL GRIMSLEY

NEW YORK (AP) — The magic of Ma Bell's long distance lines caught up with Muhammad Ali in Montreal just he was preparing to catch the next flight for his home in Chicago.

"Hello, Muhammad," bellowed the speaker at this end. "Guess what. You have just been chosen as the 'Athlete of the Decade.'"

"What's a decade?" asked the former heavyweight champion.

"Ten years," the caller replied, while a room of blue ribbon luncheon guests hung on every word. "A special panel of sports writers and broadcasters has voted you the world's outstanding athlete for the period 1968 to 1978.

"Tell us, what is your reaction?"

"Well," Muhammad replied, pausing to collect his thoughts. "You were smart. I deserve it."

So, in a twist of ironic justice, the wheel turns full cycle for the one-time round-cheeked, wide-eyed kid from Louisville, Ky. who reached boxing's highest pinnacle — first an Olympic gold medal, then the heavyweight championship of the world — only to be stripped of his crown and dignity by the ugly mood of the 1960s.

ALI STILL must remember with bitterness that day, April 29, 1967, when a cordon of officers led him into the Court House on San Jacinto Street in Houston.

The crowd outside was surly. "Slacker," spat some. "Traitor," said others. "If you don't want to fight, go to another country," came other taunts.

Muhammad Ali

He refused.

"It's against my religious beliefs," he argued. "I am 90 per cent preacher, 10 per cent fighter."

The authorities were not so easily convinced. Subsequently, he was fined $10,000 and sentenced to five years in prison — a verdict he fought through the courts and ultimately won.

What followed turned out to be the toughest battle of his remarkable career. He was stripped of his title. He was jailed for an hour in Miami on a traffic charge. His sources of income dried up. He couldn't get a license to fight. His good-time friends deserted him.

BY JANUARY 1968, he was almost broke. He and his pregnant wife holed up in a modest brick bungalow in Chicago, making ends meet on speaking fees that the ex-champion picked up on college campuses.

The doorbell rarely rang.

Then came the dramatic turnaround of public sentiment on the Vietnamese War. Ali's conviction was reversed in the higher courts. After 3½ years of rusting idleness, Ali donned gloves again. The tarnished decade turned golden.

The rest is history. Ali launched his comeback Oct. 26, 1970 in Atlanta, knocking out Jerry Quarry. He waged three titanic struggles with Smokin' Joe Frazier, winning two. In a bizarre, pre-dawn fight in Africa's Congo, he wrested the title from George Foreman. He became sport's most magnetic personality.

He was almost a landslide winner of the newly-founded "Athlete of the Decade Award," to be presented at a $150-per-plate dinner in New York June 8 for the benefit of the American Cancer Society.

Once-segregated Alabama model of integration

The Washington Post

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. —r-In the bad old days of segregation, the good old boys of Alabama used to tell a favorite joke about their favorite legend, Bear Bryant, and his all-white football team.

It seems that one day this black boy shows up at Alabama's football practice and asks for a tryout. Bear Bryant sort of winks at the team and says, sure enough.

The Crimson Tide defense lines up' the black youth is given the ball to run. He bursts through the burly linemen, stomps a linebacker, eludes the safety and races across the goaline.

"Hey boys," says Bear Bryant, "look at that goddam Indian run."

WELL, THE years passed and people changed and, after a fashion, that joke has come true. Today, when Alabama scores on the football field or the basketball court, the crowds are cheering, more often than not, for dark-skinned athletes named Ozzie Newsome or Rah Rah Scott or Johnny Davis. Nobody pretends these Bama stars are Indians.

Organized sports have long served as a visible upward ladder for blacks, even when star status seemed to promise much more progress than it delivered. In the last decade, particularly in the South, sports played another important role during the turbulent years of desegregation. Games re unifying social events with essential values — winning, following the rules, rewarding talent — that challenge the long-established mores of white supremacy and racial segregation.

Football, by itself, did not change people in Alabama or anywhere else. But it surely made change easier for them.

This year's All-America, Ozzie Newsome, a wide receiver drafted in the first round by the NFL's Cleveland Brown, describe the new reality in Alabama sports:

"BRYANT DOESN'T give a damn what color you are or anything like that. He just wants a winner. You go into the cafeteria and the cooks want you to win. If we don't win, it's not the blacks didn't win or the whites didn't win. It's Alabama didn't win and we're all n trouble."

This past year, Bryant had 19 blacks on his squad of 79. Eight of the 22 starters on offense and defense were black. Basketball coach C.M. Newton, who brought class basketball to Alabama by recruiting homegrown black athletes, starts three or sometimes four blacks. His squad of 15 has 10 black players.

What happened here over the last decade is not unique, of course. Across the south, sports at the college and high school levels are now thoroughly integrated — an important socializing element in the reduction of racial prejudices, from small-town gymnasiums to the major championships.

The university at Tuscaloosa is special, however. This is the place where George Wallace made his stand in the "schoolhouse door" 15 years ago and said: "Never." Everyone smiled in 1976 when Gov. Wallace kissed the Homecoming Queen. She was a black named Billie Faye Scott.

IN THE last 10 years, the University of Alabama has changed from the convenient symbol of white defiance to a genuine model of racial equity, at least in the sports programs under athletic director Paul (Bear) Bryant. Alabama has scrupulously avoided the exploititive outrages that are so common in big-time collegiate sports, in which black youths are recruited with glossy promises, used as university gladiators, for four years, discarded — without diplomas or career prospects.

Since 1970, some of Alabama's black stars have gone on to pro careers — Wilbur Jackson of football's San Francisco 49ers, Leon Douglas of basketball's Detroit Pistons, Willie Shelby of the NFL's Cincinnati Bengals, Newsome to Cleveland, fullback Johnny Davis to Tampa. Some are coaching — Sylvester Croom and Wendell Hudson at their alma mater, John Mitchell at Arkansas.

But this may be more meaningful: nearly all of the blacks on Alabama athletic scholarships, whether they were stars or subs, earned their college degrees and are pursuing careers outside of sports — 23 of 27 so far. And these black athletes get plugged into that valuable network of Bama alumni — the business contacts white athletes have always enjoyed — that can lead, if not to fame and fortune, to solid middle-class careers.

Alabama has changed, so has Bear Bryant, but not his lockerroom magnetism. Bryant has mesmerized a generation of white athletes over his long, winning career and he has the same approximate impact on his black players.

BYRON BRAGGS, a 262-pound freshman lineman from Montgomery, shook his head at the stern-faced legend, his coach. "When Coach Bryant comes into the meeting room," Bragg said reverently, "you could hear a cockroach dying, it's that quiet."

Wilbur Jackson the first black player signed for Bryant's football team in 1970, remembers the Bryant spiel:

"He'd give the same pregame speech for three years. It never varied except for maybe 15 words, but it worked. He could have had a tape recorder and justmoved his lips, for all we knew. Poise and confidence were the two things he talks about...but it always worked."

Chumminess has never been part of Bryant's routine. The coach says of Wilbur Jackson: "I remember him walking in here and he hadn't said two words. He played here four years and he hasn't said two more."

But the black players respect Bryant's fairness with them, his toughness, his total domination of the team.

"Bryant has total control," Newsome said. "He put Joe Namath on the bench before a big game and, if he'll do that, Ozzie Newsome isn't going to come down here and raise no hell and Ozzie Newsome knows it."

NOT MANY years ago, black youths growing up in Alabama like Newsome and Jackson could not imagine playing for the legend. They might be recruited by the big-name schools from the West or the Middle West like UCLA or Michigan. They were wooed by the black colleges of the South, Grambling or Jackson State or Alabama State. But none of

Memorial may never fulfill Nicklaus' fondest dream

By JIM MURRAY
The Los Angeles Times

Jack Nicklaus may never get his wish. His Memorial Tournament may never become a "major" golf tournament. Gary Player has a good point when he says that the first duty of a "major" is that it be a yardstick, that it afford comparison with the past. The British Open is 118 years old. The U.S. Open is 83. The PGA is 60. The Masters is the Johnny-come-lately, only 44. Walter Hagen, for instance, never had a real shot at it.

But, basically, all the good players of this century have had a chance at the "majors." The Memorial Tournament would effectively exclude players like Hogan, Snead, Sarazen et al from sitting in on this deal.

But one thing the Memorial already is, it's the all-time "big numbers" tournament of golf history. You can go for a bundle on its hell holes.

IT'S MURDERER'S Row," like the old New York Yankees. It can throw the big inning at you like the old Yankees did. You will recall how a team leading the Yankees 4-0 in the middle innings had the feeling it was playing with its back to the wall. Because the Yanks could, and did, come up with double-digit bat-arounds.

Jack Nicklaus' course at Muirfield is like that. You can go tiptoeing past it at four or five-under par and think you are home free and, suddenly, wham! You put up a 9 on a hole. And are lucky to get that.

Take John Schroeder. John is one of the top 40 golfers in the world today, and he was sailing serenely along three under par Saturday afternoon until the 13th hole. As he said afterward, he hit "a perfect drive and had only one putt on the hole." It was in between that was a miasma of unplayable lies, lateral water hazards, tree wells, penalty traps and balls in the poison ivy. Total: 11. The course batted around on him.

THAT SAME day, on No. 6, a 437-yard Dracula with water in front, a tree hanging over the water and rough not even a snake would go through, Tom Kite pulled his drive and hit his second short of the water. His third was not short of the water. It was right in it. Result: 7.

While all this was going on, his playing partner, Dr. Gil Morgan, was making a birdie 3. Eight holes later, though, it was the good doctor's turn. When he finally tumbled it in the cup on 14, he had made a scrambling 9.

It went on like this for four days. Nicklaus himself made a triple bogey and several doubles. It's that kind of a course. It got so bad, one player came into the clubhouse and announced "I shot a 67" and a reporter looked up at him and said, "On what hole?"

Usually, great courses nibble you to death. Miss a shot, make bogey. They add up slowly. Not at Muirfield. Miss a shot, you make 11. It's a park mugger. It beats you over the head, kicks you in the teeth, takes your watch, and goes off counting your money, advising you not to call the cops unless you want more of the same. It is armed and dangerous. If it were human, it would be arraigned. It is the kind of course where a player can say, "Well, I was four under par for 17 holes. And I made 81." You don't attack it, you just try to beat it in its sleep.

It is what makes it unique. In the same way Jack the Ripper or John Dillinger was unique. It is a course where you can say, "I made only one bogey out there today — but it was a quintuple." It is a great course. Any course where you either make a 3 or an 11 has got to be. In that sense, it already is a major. And weekend players just have to love it — a course where the best players in the world can barely get it in the leather in 11 like the rest of us.

Celotto

based on his past experience holds no lure compared with his desire to play.

While at USC, he was an extra in episodes of "Kojak," "Delveccio," "Police Woman" and "The Other Side of the Mountain, Part II."

"Starting as an actor is more timing than anything," he said. "It's not something I'd want to go after right now."

Celotto started for the Trojans as a freshman, sophomore and senior, but was felled each time with knee injuries.

Otherwise, he would have gone high in the NFL draft, said Norm Pollom, the Bills' chief scout.

He said Celotto is the physical equal of USC defensive star Clay Matthews, who was the 12th player chosen nationally when Cleveland claimed him as its first-round draft choice.

"Some people say he was better," Pollom said.

Flagler heads NAIA net field

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Defending champion Flagler College of St. Augustine, Fla., heads a list of 48 colleges and universities expected to compete starting May 30 in the NAIA Tennis Championships in Kansas City.

A field of 209 singles players — including 1977 singles semifinalists Roberto Partarrieu of George Mason University and Tom Morris of Atlantic Christian — and 102 doubles teams are scheduled to take part in the five-day tournament.

Thirteen foreign countries will also be represented by 29 players, including six from Canada and four each from Mexico and Columbia.

JOHN "JERSEY" Jermier, athletic director at Kansas State University since March 1976, has resigned effective June 30. The resignation came at the request of K-State president Duane Acker. (AP Laserphoto).

Player decides to play

ATLANTA (AP) — Gary Player is the little man who almost wasn't here.

"As you know, I really hadn't planned on playing here," the tough little South African said. "But, since I am, I'll do my very best to win the golf tournament. That, of course, is the object."

The globetrotting Player, who has played in 10 consecutive American tournaments — and won three of them — had planned to compete this week in the British PGA. As a member of the American tour, however, he needed a release from both Tour Commissioner Deane Beman and the Atlanta sponsors. Beman gave his approval. But Atlanta didn't.

That meant Player was prohibited from competing in any other event this week. He didn't have to play here, but he couldn't play anywhere else. And, since he had promised to play in Memphis, Tenn. two weeks from now, he decided to stay in this country.

And, instead of taking a break, he decided to play.

"I'd like to take some time off," he said, "but, unlike American players, I don't have a home to go to. Since I'm going to be in this country anyway, I thought I might as well compete."

And he would be less than human if he didn't place a particular emphasis on winning the $200,000 Atlanta Classic that begins Thursday on the hilly, 6,883-yard, par-72 Atlanta Country Club course.

HIS CHIEF rivals in the strong, 150-man field are Jack Nicklaus and Hale Irwin, who have won the last four tour events on this difficult course.

Irwin won the Atlanta Classic in 1975 and 1977. (The event was not held in 1976). Nicklaus won in 1973 and took the Tournament Players Championship on the same layout in 1974.

Both have their credentials in order. Nicklaus has won twice, been second twice and is second on the year's money winning list. He was challenging for the title in his own Memorial event last weekend until falling victim to a double bogey on the 17th hole.

them thought about going to Auburn or Alabama, the principal shrines where Alabamians worship sports. They watched the Crimson Tide on TV. They heard Bear Bryant say that he was not interested in having any black athletes play for time.

Today, Bryant does not attempt to fudge over that history. Indeed, he tells stories on himself, describing the segregationist past.

"Everybody knows the state of Alabama used to have a terrible name and deserved it," the coach said.

In 1965, he was hoping for No. 1 ranking in the nation, but he knew that theracial factor was hurting Alabama's stature. They would not schedule home-and-home games with any of the Big 10 or West Coast schools which had blacks. Sports writers said they played a soft schedule; sentiment was against them.

The final game against Auburn was televised nationally, so Bryant told a black follower to put on an Alabama robe and stand close to him throughout the game.

"Normally when I get on that field," Bryant said, "I don't want anybody around me. But I knew that TV camera going to be on me."

His ploy didn't work. Undefeated Alabama was ranked No. 3.

IN THAT same period, a high school coach from Mobile approached with a hot prospect, a promising black player who might qualify as the first for Bama. "I told him, officially, I want him up here, I'll treat him fairly," Bryant recalled. "I'll handle it as best I can. Unofficially I think it's too soon."

Bryant was worried about heckling and abuse from the stands a black player might have to endure in Mississippi or Georgia or, for that matter, in Alabama. "I was concerned about what might happen right here, when the first black player ran out on the field," he said. "He was my guy. He was my player. But segregation was still in the saddle."

Yet, in a few short years, the longheld white resistance receded and virtually evaporated at the university level, a social change that many in Alabama attribute to two powerful forces — the federal courts and the universal desire to win ball games.

Federal judges were forcing the integration of high schools, including their sports programs, a transition that produced a lot of early turbulence, even some minor violence in Alabama. Attendance declined sharply in some cities like Montgomery and Mobile. Scores of black coaches lost their jobs when black schools merged with whites.

But something else happened: when the separate black and white state basketball tournaments were merged into one in 1969, the first state champion was an all-black Birmingham school, Parker High, a long-established powerhouse in segregated competition, but never recognized by the white citizenry.

Parker's venerable coach, "Cap" Brown, remembers that tournament: "We were told not to give the first power sign. This was the first time and they didn't want any incidents."

Since then, in nine years of integrated competition, Parker has won the state title three times, was runner-up twice and third once. This year, its star, Eddie Phillips, who is 16 and 6-foot-6 and still growing, was sought by Stanford, UCLA, Vanderbilt and Drake, among many others, but he signed with Alabama.

THANKS TO the federal courts, the quality of Alabama's basketball soared: so did attendance. As white fans learned to cheer for black stars at their localhigh school or the state tournament, it seemed natural that Newton, the new basketball coach at Tuscaloosa, should begin trying to sign these same ball players — instead of losing their talent to out-of-state competition.

Newton is a winner. He turned Alabama into a national contender, a National Invitational entry twice and he did it mainly with Alabama youth. "That's the significant thing, not so much the black-white thing," Newton said. "We have not gone to big cities and raided. That's the most important things.

Meanwhile, Alabama's first love, football, was teaching similar lessons. Football at the black high schools was not impressive, partly because of poor financing, but Bear Bryant's followers were beginning to see black stars from other places.

In the 1970 opening game, the University of Southern California buried Bama with a black fullback named Sam Cunningham. As Jerry Claiborne, University of Maryland coach who was a Bryant protege put it, Cunningham did more to integrate Alabama in 60 minutes that night than Martin Luther King had accomplished in 20 years.

"I think it opened a few people's eyes," Bryant says.

But, if Alabama's whites were ready for integrated teams, it was not clear that the state's black talent was ready to take a chance on them. Both coaches, Bryant and Newton, encountered considerable skepticism on their recruiting forays.

People remembered the past. Ozzie Newsome cried when his friend, Leon Douglas, signed with Bama, convinced that Douglas was ruining his future.

Many of the black athletes, who were bombarded by high pressure recruiting from large and small schools, recall with special awe the same scene — the time when Mama stared down Bear Bryant and asked the hard questons about Alabama.

Ralph Stokes, a high-school all-American from Montgomery's Robert E. Lee High, now an insurance agent with Provident Life, remembers it well:

"When Coach Bryant came to recruit me, the first thing my mother addressed hm with was this question. She said, 'I recall vividly seeing you on television saying you don't want any black boys on your teams and now you say you do. Whey are you here now? Why do you want my son?'"

Stokes was deeply impessed by Bryant's answer. So was his mother. As Stokes recalls:

"Bryant told her, 'At that time, that was the way I felt. But times have nnanged and I've matured and changed. I've grown too. My thinking has changed completely and now I don't see any white players or black players anymore — it's just ball players. People are people and they can't be treated by the color of their skin."

BRYANT HAS used variations of that statement, over and over, convincing black parents that their sons would be treated fairly at Alabama. Bryant kept his word, according to the young men who played under him.

Stokes, for instance, never realized the stardom which was expected of him. He suffered injuries, lost valuable playing time and never earned a starting position. He still regards Bear Bryant as a "great man" who gave him a fair shot.

"I was apprehensive about going," Stokes said, "but also the legend of Bear Bryant looms so large over Alabama and you've heard this so many years. Theprospect of playing for a legend was a challenge so you figure, what the heck, I'll go see can I fight this road."

Wilbur Jackson, growing up in Ozark, in Southeast Alabama, wanted to go to a black school, but his father, Buster Jackson, a retired railroader, decided otherwise. "They wanted Wilbur," Jackson's father explained.

The black athletes checked things out with a black minister in Tuscaloosa, the Rev. Sylvester Croom, who assured them that Bryant could be trusted. Croom sent his own two sons to the university and one of them is now assistant football coach.

Stingers dig in for last ditch fight to stay alive in WHA

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Cincinnati Stingers are digging in for a last-ditch effort to sell enough season tickets to stay in business.

"We have left no stone unturned," Bill DeWitt Jr., executive vice president of the World Hockey Association franchise, said Tuesday. "It's getting tougher and tougher and we're running out of good leads."

The Stingers had sold 3,897 season tickets by Tuesday and needs at least 5,000 by June 1 to continue in business.

Over the past four days, the club averaged only about 71 sales per day and now must average 168 per day to meet the goal, DeWitt said.

DeWitt said that 5,000 was the rock-bottom figure that would insure the club's continued operation, and that a guarantee to that effect must be made to the league by June 2.

"If we do not reach our goal, we're going to look to have to other alternatives," said DeWitt, who added that there had been little interest in the club's efforts to attract new financial backers.

Blacks leaving Carter's staff

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter is losing some highly placed blacks from his executive office staff even as he continues his effort to recruit a prominent member of the race for his personal senior staff.

Against this backdrop, it seemed a bit strange last week that the White House passed up a chance to do some tub-thumping to promote a new presidential initiative on behalf of women and minorities.

On May 15, at an hour when relatively few reporters were at the White House, the office of press secretary Jody Powell handed out, without explanation or elaboration, the text of an executive order dealing with panels Carter created to recommend nominees for vacant federal circuit court judgeships.

Only a line-by-line comparison of this document with a similar order Carter issued a month after taking office revealed that the only difference between them was the addition of the following sentence in the 1978 version:

"Each panel is encouraged to make special efforts to seek out and identify well qualified women and members of minority groups as potential nominees."

As president, Carter has nominated 10 circuit judges. None was a woman but three were members of minorities — two blacks, one of Asian descent.

Inquiries revealed that the president wanted to emphasize his quest for more women and minority judges because Congress is expected to pass legislation to create 35 additional circuit judgeships as part of a broader expansion of the federal judiciary.

In response to a question, Carter's deputy press secretary, Rex Granum, suggested no special effort was made to call attention to the executive order because the president had made a one-sentence reference to it in his much-publicized May 4 Law Day address in Los Angeles.

But few headlines on that occasion dealt with the planned order. The big news was Carter's scolding lecture to the legal profession.

Meanwhile, White House aides say the president remains hopeful that Richard G. Hatcher, the black mayor of Gary, Ind., will agree to join the White House senior staff. There now are two women on the senior staff but no blacks.

Coincidentally, five blacks holding staff positions within the Executive Office of the President have quit or are about the leave. At least two of them are known to be unhappy about life in the Carter administration, but some others are getting better jobs.

Lawrence A. Bailey, a deputy assistant to Carter who worked with Cabinet Secretary Jack Watson, quit to go with the First African-Arabian Corp. He was displeased about limited opportunity to influence policy.

Dennis O. Green, a former aide to Detroit Mayor Coleman Young, will leave his post as an associate driector of the Office of Management and Budget next month. Reportedly unhappy over the amounts Carter budgeted for urban spending, Green will become a Ford Motor Co. executive.

Whenever Hatcher or some other black joins the senior staff, he will not be billed as a spokesman for black interests within Carter's inner councils.

The president rather snappishly emphasized the point last week during a meeting with representatives of the Hispanic media.

"I don't intend to set up an administrative staff in the White House for any particular group," the president declared.

Why, he was asked, might Hatcher join the staff "to take care or black concerns?"

Repulsive opponent must win no tricks

We are spending the week discovering that some opponents are more repulsive than others. If you hate one opponent more than the other, don't give him any tricks. We see this charming principle in operation today.

You win the third trick with the ace of spade and should know that West will defeat your contract with the rest of the spades if the manages to gain the lead. Since that's enough to make you hate him, you must develop your tricks without giving the lead up to West.

Since you must develop the clubs by leading from the dummy, you lead a diamond to dummy. If West foolishly plays the three of diamonds you will play low from dummy. East must win the trick, and then if the six missing diamonds break 3-3 dummy's five of diamonds will be good for your ninth trick.

DEVELOP CLUBS

If West plays the ten of diamonds when you first lead that suit, you win in dummy and return a club. East plays low, and you win with the king.

Since it is dangerous to lead another diamond, you get to dummy with a heart and return another club. East must play the queen, and you let him hold the trick.

Now West cannot gain the lead, and you win your ninth trick in clubs.

Handicapped felons given medical care

By BRUCE ADAMS

VACAVILLE, Calif. (AP) — Like the other cell blocks branching off the mainline cutting through the state prison here, GW1 houses murderers, rapists and thieves behind a thick, metal door.

But unlike the denim-clad, caged men who solemnly walk the mainline, the 35 inmates in GW1 make their way about in wheelchairs, with crutches or behind white canes.

Handicapped criminals and those requiring long-term medical care are housed here.

Some were crippled as they were arrested — from wounds in shoot-outs with police or injuries in crashes after high-speed chases.

But many of the men — roughly half — committed serious crimes despite their handicaps.

One man killed his parents from his wheelchair. A quadraplegic was convicted of running a narcotics ring from his wheelchair. Another man, confined to a wheelchair and legally blind, was sent to prison for shooting a man he claimed was going to rob him.

One inmate, Luis Montoya, 26, of San Francisco, says handicapped prisoners are deprived of the few amenities — such as job training — offered most other convicts.

"There's nothing for the disabled," says Montoya, who suffered from polio as a child and is confined to a wheelchair. "When a man leaves here he has to bear the stigma of being an ex-convict as well as the stigma of being disabled."

Even though the staff is small — two doctors make rounds and a couple of nurses are available — few complain about the medical care.

"They're doing all they can for me, but my health just ain't no good," says John Miller, 58, of Modesto, a convicted murderer who hangs his artificial arm and cowboy hat on the same hook.

Miller's room, like most of the others on the north side of the wing, is just large enough to accommodate a narrow cot, a shelf or two, a wash basin and an exposed toilet. Rooms on the south side of the wing are larger, housing four or five inmates each in small dormitories. Some inmates have their own television sets.

The walls are a dull cream color and the windows are barred. Doctors, aides and guards lock doors behind them as they move about the wing.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Aspirin still not out-of-date

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have had arthritis for almost 15 years and have been taking aspirin for it. But a friend of mine is using a new drug called Tolectin which she says is safer and better. Is aspirin out-of-date? Should I change to a new drug like this Tolectin?—Carolyn H.

Dear Carolyn: Tolectin is one of several new drugs that are effective against rheumatoid arthritis and may have fewer side effects than aspirin, which taken in large doses may cause slight bleeding, stomach upset and ringing in the ears. But this does not mean that aspirin is out-of-date. It has been going strong as an anti-arthritic drug for almost a century and is still the one most widely used. Dr. Charles L. Christian of New York's Hospital for Special Surgery and president of the American Rheumatism Assn. said recently that the complications of aspirin compared to its benefits are lower than for any other medication used to treat arthritis.

So no one should ever feel shortchanged if the doctor only prescribes aspirin. Also, remember that different people react in different ways to a given drug. Aspirin may be just the thing for you whereas someone else may not be able to tolerate it. Of course, if you feel you are not doing as well as you should on your present regimen, talk this over with your doctor. He will advise you about whether or not you should change drugs. But do not change from a well-tested drug like aspirin merely for the sake of change.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know everybody and his cousin has asked you about ways to kick the smoking habit. But if one really is hooked, isn't there a chance that just plain nicotine—provided there was some way of taking it—could give you the same effect without wrecking your lungs?—Darcy N.

Dear Darcy: Research is going on right now in the search for the very thing you suggest. One of the most recent progress reports comes from England—chewing gum with nicotine in it. This was given to 21 heavy smokers who, as a result, were able to give up smoking. The gum produced about the same level of nicotine concentration in the blood as smoking their usual quota of cigarettes would have for the patients—and it provided satisfaction to all the patients.

However, all but four of the test volunteers had unpleasant side effects—and in eight patients, these were severe. The most noticeable were an unpleasant taste, irritation of the mouth, throat, and stomach, nausea, hiccups, faintness or dizziness. The British researchers, who reported their study in the British Medical Journal, say the dosage requirement of the nicotine gum varied widely from patient to patient and that flexible dosage would probably lower the risk of side effects.

(If you have a medical problem, see your doctor. If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Can MERIT taste hold its own against leading high tar brands?

Does MERIT satisfy smokers over a long period—or are MERIT smokers slipping back to old high tar favorites?

Research Confirms Breakthrough

Confirmed: Majority of high tar smokers rate MERIT taste equal to—or better than—leading high tar cigarettes tested! Cigarettes having up to twice the tar.

Confirmed: Majority of high tar smokers confirm taste satisfaction of low tar MERIT.

And in detailed interviews conducted among current MERIT smokers?

Confirmed: 9 out of 10 MERIT smokers not considering other brands.

First Major Alternative For High Tar Smokers

MERIT has proven conclusively that it not only delivers the flavor of high tar brands—but continues to satisfy.

This ability to satisfy over long periods of time could be the most important evidence to date that MERIT is what it claims to be: The first major alternative to high tar smoking.

Small California town fears 'Possie' invasion

By WILLIAM C. REMPEL
The Los Angeles Times

MARKLEEVILLE, Calif. — In tiny Alpine County where eight years ago residents feared a takeover by homosexuals, there is concern today that ultraconservatives are planning to move in and takeover their idyllic corner of the High Sierra.

A candidate for sheriff who is backed by the vigilante-styled Possee Comitatus is on the June 6 ballot and the county grand jury is looking into allegations his supporters may have padded voter registration rolls with nonresidents.

The controversy has focused critical attention on a proposal to build a political sanctuary for ultraconservatives on 600 acres of hillside across the highway from this county seat of 171.

Sheriff's candidate John E. Buras, 56, recently of Los Angeles, has a financial interest in that project known around Markleeville as "Constitution City."

Buras predicted change "is going to descend upon this town so fast they won't know what happened" once the projected 175 to 200 ultraconservative families start moving into the project area.

Advertisements in a national right-wing publication recently sought loans for road construction on the project "in a county where only patriots will be in charge." A companion ad solicited contributions for Buras "to help us elect a tax fighting sheriff...and a district attorney."

Documents obtained by The Los Angeles Times disclosed that a meeting was held in Southern California last May in which plans to take over Alpine County were discussed by the mastermind of Constitution City — Francis Gillings, leader of the Posse Comitatus in Stockton.

Gillings told a gathering of right-wing activists that a new sheriff and district attorney would be participants in the Constitution City project.

He said the purpose of the project was to "reestablish freedom with our own bank and law enforcement system," according to the document.

Gillings envisioned the project housing more than 200 families with its own bank, business district and private school where no taxes would be levied. All improvements would be financed by private contributions.

The $35 million project would, in effect, be the ideological hometown of ultraconservatives everywhere.

There had been little activity associated with the project for the past year, however, since Gillings was busy with legal prolems stemming from separate convictions for tax evasion and a 1975 assault on a sheriff's deputy.

The latter charge came after he led a Posse Comitatus unit into a Stockton, Calif., area tomato field to block union organizers' access to farm workers. Gillings' shotgun discharged during a scuffle with a deputy. No one was seriously hurt.

Despite that incident with the San Joaquin County sheriff, the Possee Comitatus recognizes the county sheriff as the only legitement law enforcement agent in America. (Comitatus is Latin for "power to the county.")

The posse also believes in God, guns and tax resistance. Gillings said he "hates government."

Alpine County did not greet Gillings, the possee, Constitution City or sheriff's candidate Buras with open arms.

"This place is full of the unfriendliest people I ever saw," said Buras. "It's full of hate."

He announced earlier this month that he was ceasing to campaign against Undersheriff Archie Wood Jr., a native of the area, out of fear for his safety and the safety of his supporters.

Buras left only a "Yes on 13" sign in his home campaign office window. He blamed his decision on Alpine District Attorney Chris Smith, 55, a retired Los Angeles Police sergeant and former public defender in Los Angeles, whose aggressive prosecution of election code violations has stunned Buras' supporters.

Texas cattlemen gain victory over red tape

WASHINGTON (AP) — Drought-stricken Texas cattlemen claimed a victory over bureaucratic red tape Tuesday when the Agriculture Stabilization Conservation Service agreed to permit ranchers to plant hay on set-aside acreage.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, announced the change in ASCS policy and then attacked the agency's regulations concerning ranchers forced to feed cactus to their catttle.

Prior to Tuesday's announcement, cattlemen could not harvest hay on set-aside acres.

"Cattle feed is at a premium in Texas," said Bentsen. "We have experienced a severe and prolonged drought in parts of the state, particularly in South Texas, and it has been relieved only somewhat by recent rains. This new ruling, which I had requestted, will help to ease the crisis.

"But the drought and the bureaucratic reaction to it are causing a serious problem for cattlemen who are so hard-pressed they have been burning the thorns off cactus to use as feed."

Bentsen noted that a number of Texas counties have been declared disaster areas and are eligible for assistance under the Emergency Livestock Feed Act. ACSC officials, however, have ruled that the cost of burning cactus is not eligible for such aid.

"This argument is absurd since cactus grows wild thoughout much of South Texas," began Bentsen in a letter to Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland. "Cactus is certainly not planted by these ranchers, nor is it cultivated. In fact, they cannot use it unless it is burned."

Peveto vows continuation of lawsuit

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN—State Rep. Wayne Peveto of Orange, says he has every intention of continuing his lawsuit against a property tax used to finance construction programs on 17 college campuses, despite attempts by Attorney General John Hill to have a court delay the challenge.

Earlier, Hill filed a petition with Travis County district court, asking that the lawsuit, filed by Peveto, be set aside until the 1979 Legislature convenes in January and has a chance to correct any inequities.

Peveto filed the suit, seeking to have the statewide property tax declared unconstitional alleging it is not collected or applied uniformly.

He said efforts would continue towards obtaining deposition and evidence to present at the trial.

Quake jolts Salonica

SALONICA, Greece (AP) — An earthquake jolted Salonica early today, sending thousands of persons fleeing from their homes in panic and damaging scores of farmhouses in surrounding villages.

The quake measured 5.7 on the Richter Scale.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. A quake of 5 can cause considerable damage, and 6 severe damage.

COME AWAY WITH ME LUCILLE

And, we'll make beautiful music together in the Country. Oh! the breeze, the trees and the quietness. Look! Lucille, a workshop and a tack barn. "Look at the corrals, Lucille!" We could have a pony for the children and Look! A separate fenced area for saddling and a snubbing post.
Let's look inside the house, OK? Just what you wanted! A nice formal living room with planter; and a large den/family room with corner fireplace. Lucille, you asked for a large kitchen with breakfast bar and a separate utility and pantry. THIS IS IT!
How about the bedrooms? One is average, one is large (great for Suzy). She'll love it. The main bath is so convenient and large. And the master bedroom is super with His & Her closets, a full bath and black out shades on the windows.
Lucille, call HASHA REALTORS to sell us this house.

Deer Turkey White Bass M Rams
You select the amount of acreage that you want (minimum 5 acers). This 8200 acre ranch was owned by the same family nearly 80 years. It's the Smith Ranch, located in some of the most beautiful hill country in Texas. The ranch has over 5 miles of Colorado River frontage and lies across from LEMONS CAMP and GORMAN FALLS Ranches.
Some of the finest fly and spin fishing for white bass and catfish. The deer and turkey hunting is excellent (spring turkey hunt on this ranch); some 16 miles of spring fed creeks on this ranch. One spring pumps approximately 1,000 gallons per minute. You've got country here that can produce big bucks.
Lots of liveoaks and buck brush with deep canyons combined with all this water is something to see.
We recommend you make an appointment so that we will know when you're coming in and we'll devote the time to you. We offer good terms. By owner.
