Fire rages Tuesday in the Santa Monica Mountains just above Camp Kilpatrick, a detention facility for boys near Los Angeles.

Brush fire remains out of control

By JENNIFER KERR

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Moist sea breezes replaced hot, dry desert winds early today as firefighters plotted tactics to beat a raging brush fire stalemated in a canyon only three miles from expensive beachfront homes.

A spokesman for the Los Angeles County Fire Department said that the firefighters would "throw everything we have at it" today.

More than 300 firemen used hand tools Tuesday night to hack a 20-mile fire line out of the dense, tinder-dry brush in the rugged Santa Monica Mountains just 30 miles west of downtown Los Angeles.

But county fire Inspector Dennis Miller cautioned: "The fire's still out of control. There is no estimate of containment."

Six firefighters were injured. Mike Eubanks, 25, of the Los Angeles County Fire Department, was reported in critical condition in Westlake Hospital after a tractor rolled over him.

Four men received minor injuries when they were singed by a wall of fire that swept over their truck. A sixth man collapsed, apparently from exhaustion and smoke inhalation.

The blaze — the second major fire in two days in the same drought-parched hills — began at mid-day Tuesday when searing winds from the desert fanned a fire in an illegal dump, fire officials said. The blowing sparks ignited brush around the dump.

Miller originally said the dump fire had been smoldering for several weeks. But early today, fire information officer Roy Talbot said witnesses saw a man start a fire in the dump Tuesday and that the area was not burning earlier.

The leap-frogging flames, which for a time Tuesday were burning 200 acres an hour, had blackened more than 2,000 acres — about 3½ square miles — of brush by early today, Miller said.

Dense black smoke billowing out of the canyons was visible for more than 20 miles throughout the day, and a heavy pall hung over downtown Los Angeles.

About 200 homes scattered in the sparsely populated, rural canyons above the beaches were evacuated. Several structures had been reported destroyed, but Miller said the fire department had no confirmation of whether these were homes or other buildings.

Firefighters got the best of the fire shortly after sunset, when winds tapered off from the 20-40 mph gusts that had prevailed through the day.

Miller said humidity was 18 percent Tuesday and was expected to drop to that again today, after reaching 40 percent overnight.

"Anything below 30 percent is an extreme fire danger," Miller said.

Buses took 150 boys from Camps Kilpatrick and Miller and 150 men from Camp 13, all county detention homes in the hills near the fire, to a Red Cross evacuation center set up at an elementary school near the ocean.

At one point during the day, worried fire officials predicted, "It's definitely going to the ocean. With the wind behind it, the fire is not only out of control ... it's running wild."

The latest blaze broke out as firefighters encircled a 1,200-acre fire which sprang up Monday in the Topanga Canyon, about 20 miles west of downtown. That fire was declared contained shortly after noon Tuesday, and men and machines were quickly shifted to the new fire.

Police keep rival Shah sides apart

By GEORGE L. GEDDA

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rival demonstrators reassembled at separate locations near the White House today as the Shah of Iran, winding up his violence-scarred state visit, paid a return call on President Carter.

In the aftermath of Tuesday's raucous street protests, which resulted in 124 injuries and 12 arrests when fighting broke out among pro- and anti-shah forces, a heavy police contingent today kept the groups more than a block apart.

The protesting groups were far smaller in numbers and more orderly than on Tuesday, as the police lines were doubled.

About 1,000 chanting Iranian students, many wearing masks to conceal their identity, continued to protest the shah's U.S. visit from Lafayette Park, across Pennsylvania Avenue from the front of the executive mansion.

Some 200 other opponents marched in a circle on the Ellipse, a park area behind the White House where much of Tuesday's violence occurred.

Meanwhile, about 200 pro-shah demonstrators assembled at 17th Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, several hundred feet from the students.

Police had canceled permits for demonstrations closer to the White House in the wake of Tuesday's violence.

Following the White House meeting with Carter, the shah's schedule called for him to attend an Embassy Row luncheon hosted by Vice President Walter F. Mondale and then a meeting on Capitol Hill with the House International Relations Committee.

The shah and his wife, the Empress Farah, are to leave tonight from Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington for Paris.

In a White House meeting Tuesday that was overshadowed by the demonstrations, the shah reportedly pledged to Carter that he would not push for higher oil prices at a meeting of the Organization of Petroleum-Exporting Countries next month.

The monarch, whose nation supplies 7 to 8 per cent of U.S. oil imports, has said in recent interviews that Iran would remain neutral on the pricing issue. The Washington Post said he was understood to have told Carter the same thing.

This has been the most tumultuous of the shah's 12 visits here during his 36-year reign.

George Washington University Hospital officials said at least 45 demonstrators were treated in the emergency room.

Three were admitted, including a 66-year-old pro-shah demonstrator from California. He was listed in serious condition late Tuesday night after undergoing two hours of surgery for a fractured skull.

A 21-year-old demonstrator was in satisfactory condition with a spinal injury. The third, a 20-year-old anti-shah student, was in fair condition

City's Christmas tree just around the corner

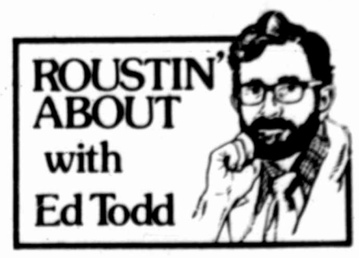

If you think it's too early to shop for Christmas trees, you're probably right. And you're probably wrong, too.

Seven fellows, on behalf of the Midland citizenry, donned their work clothes yesterday morning and headed out in their flatbed trucks and a pickup to do some pine limb cutting at Lincoln National Forest just outside of Cloudcroft, N.M.

They'll be bringing back the makings of a Christmas tree.

The crew, ramrodded by Clyde Reyes, is sawing prime limbs to be affixed to the 60-foot steel pole to be raised next week at Crier Park in the 1500 block of West Wall Avenue.

Early or not, those seven guys sped out to the forest in the name of the city of Midland's Parks and Recreation Department. Their mission is to cut full-bodied limbs, lengths five to 12 feet, from sturdy pines.

They'll pay the feds a fee and will tote the greenery home Friday. And then they will start making the tree, which isn't as tall as it was meant to be.

"It started out at 90 feet," said Bob Thomson, the mostly cheerful director of the parks and recreation department.

But during the night after that limb-ladened pole was hoisted last Christmas season, a high wind came along and bent the heck out of the tall stem.

At that time, it was only partially fitted — from the tiptop to down a bit — with transplanted limbs. The top-heavy pole was mostly bare.

The pole was cut to stand around 60-foot tall. It'll take 300 or more limbs to fill out.

The year before, the city raised a 70-foot wooden pole and decked it with limbs from Lincoln.

As prescribed, Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. lit the tree's lights in early December.

It'll happen that way again this year. Or should.

But something came to pass just after Christmas of 1975 that really shouldn't "happen" again.

Some mischievous soul sawed into that lighted pole one night. It didn't fall until the next day. And when it did crash, fortunately no one was in its way.

Out with Reyes selecting and cutting limbs this week are co-workers Mario Cuellar, Miguel "Mike" Hernandez, Carmen Robledo,

Attorneys general meeting

Two assistant state attorneys general were meeting with District Attorney Rick Hamby of Howard County in Midland this morning to read statements evolving from the Nov. 6 shooting of a Mexican national, Tiburcio Griego Santome.

The assistant district attorney of Howard County, Don Richards, said earlier today Hamby would release a statement concerning the meeting today.

However, spokemen for the district attorney's office in Big Spring said late this morning they had received no word from Hamby.

Richards said the district attorney's office did not invite the two representatives to Midland for the meeting, but the attorney general's office acted on its own.

"It's some kind of political ploy," Richards said. 'he did not elaborate.

According to an investigation directed by Hamby, Santome was shot to death by G. B. Thurwanger, a retired Martin County deputy sheriff, after Santome had been arrested by Glasscock County sheriff Royce Pruitt.

Santome reportedly pulled a small kitchen knife and attacked both Pruitt and Thurwanger after being loaded into the sheriff's car. Thurwanger then picked up a gun from on top of the dashboard and fired at Santome four times, Hamby's report said.

Santome had been arested in St. Lawrence during the annual fall

Industry spreads myths, Schlesinger tells oilmen

By MAX B. SKELTON
AP Oil Writer

HOUSTON (AP)—Secretary of Energy James Schlesinger listened to a plea for compromise and then told nearly 3,000 oil executives their industry was spreading "myths" about President Carter's energy program.

Schlesinger carried the administration's campaign in behalf of the National Energy Plan directly to the industry Tuesday by speaking at the concluding session of the annual meeting of the American Petroleum Institute.

He dismissed industry criticism of the program as petty squabbles and quarrels. He said it is not true the administration believes there is no more oil and gas to be discovered and it is not true the energy plan is "all conservation and no production."

He offered no compromise and later told newsmen, "This is not the moment for a sudden adaptation of the National Energy Plan." He acknowledged, however, that many in the industry had told him some reass[illegible]ce of the government's good intentions was needed.

The oilmen gave Schlesinger only polite applause compared with a standing ovation given the man who introduced him, Maurice F. Granville, the Institute's chairman and the board chairman of Texaco Inc.

Granville had opened the program by saying the Carter energy plan is in trouble because of many significant defects and that many of the defects can be traced to total rejection of advice and counsel from the industry.

"Together we can finish the job, but cooperation must replace condemnation," Granville said. "Compromise must replace confrontation."

Schlesinger said the industry has never failed to respond to a national challenge.

"And I do not expect we are going to have any break in history once we have the energy legislation behind us," he said. "I expect that once those quarrels are over everyone is going to get to work. There will continue to be differences of opinion but the long period of argumentation will be over."

Schlesinger said the oil industry always has had a "can do" attitude.

"And once we get past this period of petty squabbles, I think that 'can do' attitude will help carry this nation through a difficult period," he said.

"We can rise to the challenge if we lay aside our differences which are often quite small in comparison to what is at stake."

Schlesinger said the energy plan is not a blueprint for all time but was designed to provide a stable framework within which the industry could operate.

"It is intended to provide stability," he said. "It was intended to provide certainty. The prices that were established, you know you will never get less as long as that framework remains. You will never get less in terms of real dollars."

Tale of tailored $10, or, how George told a lie

Who says George Washington can't tell a lie?

Approximately three weeks ago, June Sparks at Merle Norman Cosmetics of Midland received a $10 bill across the counter.

Mrs. Sparks said she was the only one in the shop the afternoon she received the $10. She left the bill in the register, and the next morning Roshelle Van, who also works in the shop, greeted her with a question.

"Roshelle asked me if I knew the last customer who had given me a $10 bill. I said no and asked why. She said 'look at this one.' I did and said what about it?"

"George Washington is not on the $10 bill," she pointed out to Mrs. Sparks.

Mrs. Sparks said someone apparently had cut the ends off of $10 bills and taped them to the ends of a $1 bill.

"As I understand it, as long as a bill still has one end on it, it's still good. So, I assume that someone cut an end off of two different $10 bills to tape to the $1. That way, the $10 bills would still be good," she said.

"It's a real good job. They used invisible tape, and you can't see it. I've shown it to other people who have looked at it and said 'so what?,' as George stared at them from between two 10's. I've had about $9 worth of fun out of it," Mrs. Sparks said.

"All I know is that a woman gave it to me, because no men came in the shop that afternoon," she said.

Mrs. Sparks has notified the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which indicated it would contact the Secret Service.

Construction at hospital postponed

Approval of a certificate of need for renovation and addition to Midland Memorial Hospital has been delayed, forcing a postponement of the beginning of construction, hospital officials learned today.

Mickey Cappadonna, president of the hospital's board of trustees, said he learned this morning that the hearing officer for the Texas Health Facilities Commission in Austin has raised several questions concerning the Midland application.

The hospital foundation's legal council in Austin told him that the hearing officer intends to work with hospital officials in resolving the questions before presenting the application to the commission, Cappadonna said.

"Indications at this time are that this may delay the start of construction by at least three weeks," Cappadonna said.

The questions raised by the hearing officer deal primarily with details for the planned addition to the hospital.

Midland County voters on Sept. 17 approved a $10 million bond issue to finance renovation and an addition to the hospital.

U.S. questions practice, but Russians retaliate

The Los Angeles Times

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — The United States charged the Soviet Union Tuesday with failing to live up to the 1975 Helsinki agreements by not delivering an invitation to Soviet physicist and dissident spokesman Andrei D. Sakharov to address the annual AFL-CIO convention in Los Angeles in December.

The Soviet reply, at the 35-nation conference which is reviewing the results of the agreements on European security and cooperation, was to cite a recent American congressional report which disclosed that 270,000 pieces of mail had been opened in the United States during 1976 by customs inspectors and other authorities.

The Soviet speaker, Vadim Loginov, charged that "only the United States seeks to divert these discussions and lead the conference down the road of whipping up mistrust and suspicion in the style of the cold war." But he said nothing about the AFL-CIO invitation to Sakharov, a Nobel Peace Prize laureate.

The matter was raised by one of the public members of the U.S. delegation, Sol Chaikin, who is also president of the International Ladies Garment Worker's Union. Addressing a discussion on the implementation of the Helsinki principles on cooperation among states and fulfillment of international obligations, Chaikin said that the invitation to Sakharov and five other Soviet citizens was sent by ordinary mail from Washington by AFL-CIO President George Meany in early September.

"What has transpired since then is a mystery. Uncertainty continues to cloud the question of whether Mr. Sakharov is permitted to receive his mail from Mr. Meany and to dispatch a reply, and whether visas will be issued," Chaikin said.

He disclosed that Meany had asked President Carter's help in "encouraging the Soviet authorities to issue exit visas for our invited guests and of course to allow them to return home." A formal diplomatic note had gone from the American Embassy in Moscow to the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs supporting the invitation, he added. The embassy was not involved in transmitting the actual invitation to Sakharov, but Chaikin indicated that the embassy has been in touch with Sakharov, who knows about the invitation. But Sakharov confirms that he has not received it.

The Soviet reply followed the usual pattern of such responses to American interventions of this kind over the last six weeks in Belgrade.

Midland gains first new park with OK of playground concept

The Midland Parks and Recreation Commission unanimously approved Tuesday a playground development concept for the city's first new park since 1962.

The new park, to be called the Kiwanis Adventure Playground, or just The Kap, will be located at the intersection of Haynes Avenue and Whitney Drive.

The Midland City Council recently accepted a $10,000 donation from the Midland Downtown Kiwanis Club in exchange for naming the park after that organization. The council also allocated $50,000 for the development of the park.

But to finance the full park-building project, city Parks and Recreation Department officials said they plan to apply for federal funds from the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation.

And to be eligible for those funds, which are administered by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission, city officials must file a completed plan for the park by Jan. 1.

At Tuesday's meeting, Dale Robinson, of Parks and Recreation Planning Associates in Austin, told the commission he would begin detailed plans and cost studies for the park.

Conceptually, the park originated with Scott Price, a summer intern in the planning department. And the Kiwanis Club first approached the city council in March 1976 with a proposal to have a park named after the organization in exchange for a $10,000 contribution.

At the commission meeting was Henry Krusekopf, Jr., who was the Kiwanis Club president when the park project first was proposed to the city.

"It's so exciting to be a part of this," said Commissioner Mrs. James Baulch after Assistant Parks and Recreation Director Wayne Kohout took the commission on a schematic tour of Price's concept for the four-acre facility, which included a three-level sandpit picnic area, water spray and climbing area.

Kohout said the idea of the park is to "expand the motor development of a child" while utilizing a four-acre site with minimum maintenance costs.

School begins reading packet distribution

Crockett Elementary is the first elementary school in Midland to hand out the reading packets for the Partners in Reading program.

Marsha Samponaro, reading teacher at Crockett, held a meeting Tuesday afternoon to explain the reading packets to parents and tutors.

Approximately 69 students at Crockett will participate in the program.

"A lot of parents in this community really want to help their kids," Mrs. Samponaro said. "We have only had one parent say 'I don't want to do this unless you really need me.'"

"But we still need volunteers. There are some parents who work or have a lot of kids and just don't have time to work with their child," she said.

"I think the kids are all excited, and for the teachers, it's 'Gosh, someone to help us.' I don't think those participating in the program feel singled out. I think the rest of the students are jealous that they didn't get the packets," Mrs. Samponaro said.

Response by the parents, both to the program, and to the invitations for conferences to explain the test results mailed last week has been "fabulous," according to Principal Bob L. Watkins.

"For the first time, we have had many of the mothers and fathers sitting down with the youngsters and teachers and going over the tests taken earlier this fall," he said.

Crockett will hold another meeting from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. Thursday at Crockett to explain the reading packets to parents who work and could not attend the session Tuesday afternoon.

The reading packets will be provided for students in Midland's elementary schools in grades four through six, who have reading difficulties. The packets will be at reading levels of second through sixth grades, so that each student can work on his own level, Mrs. Samponaro said.

Man arrested at city laundry

A Midland man was arrested early today in the burglary attempt of Midland Maytag Laundry, 1200 S. Midland Drive.

According to police, a man was arrested inside the building after a police officer answered a burglar alarm at the location.

'Spring-like' days predicted

Spring-like weather with sunny days and warm afternoons through Thursday is predicted by the weatherman for Midland.

It should be cool tonight with the low temperature in the upper 30s. Winds should be light and variable tonight. Thursday's high temperature is expected to be in the upper 70s.

Tuesday high temperature reached 79 degrees. The overnight low temperature was 43 degrees, the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal said.

The record high temperature for Tuesday is 84 degrees set in 1963. The record low temperature for today is 15 degrees set in 1932, the weather service said.

Motorists in Rankin noticed some ground fog early this morning. Otherwise, skies were clear and temperatures were cool in all area towns this morning.

Shower activity was expected to continue over parts of South and East Texas today while West Texas had mostly clear skies.

A weak cold front early today was moving southward along a line from Paris to San Angelo.

Postmaster offers holiday mail tips

By MARLEEN RAY

In order to avoid the Christmas season mailing rush, Postmaster D. E. Holster recommends Midlanders "shop early and mail early."

He said the Midland postal service expects a 15 percent increase in the Christmas mail volume over last year's volume. The largest amount of outgoing and incoming mail usually occurs around Dec. 16 or 17, he said. Last year, 850,000 pieces of mail were handled on the heaviest day.

The postmaster encouraged Midlanders to send all parcels out by Dec. 10 and all greeting cards out by Dec. 15. He said the post office will continue to accept parcels and cards after these dates and handle them as best as it can.

"A person can always write 'Do Not Open Before Christmas' on packages that are mailed early," Holster said, so that the packages' contents are still a surprise.

Although the postal service does not plan to hire more help to handle the extra mail load, Holster said all leaves of absence and days off will be cancelled and overtime will be given, thereby increasing the present work force by 30 percent. He said the service would rather use its own experienced workers than hire new persons.

Other provisions to handle the increased volume are to make additional mail trips by truck from Midland to El Paso, which handles most of the West-going mail, to Dallas-Fort Worth, which handles most of the East-going mail, and to Lubbock, Abilene and area towns.

In addition, more mail collections will be made by postal employees here, and the crews and the letter-sorting machines will be started earlier than usual.

Holster said the post offices probably will be open additional times to take in the extra mail, but dates haven't been set yet.

Dan Buckley, an official for the United Parcel Service in Greenwich, Conn., said there is a "long, slow build-up" in the Christmas package volume, but he wasn't able to estimate how large the increase would be this year.

He said the parcel service is prepared to take parcels at any time, but he suggests that Midlanders ask the U.P.S. office how long their packages would take to mail to avoid having them get there after the holidays.

Normally, next-day delivery is offered for parcels going up to 150 miles minimum; second-day delivery for parcels going up to 450 miles minimum; third-day delivery for packages going up to 900 miles minimum; fourth-day delivery for packages going up to 1,500 miles minimum, and another day for each additional 600 miles.

Mailing costs of packages for both U.P.S. and U.S. Postal Service depend on how far the parcel is to be sent and how much it weighs. Parcels travel by fourth class in the postal service while greeting cards and letters go by first class mail. Usually, Holster said, most cards and letters need only a 13-cent stamp to cover the mailing cost. If a letter or card weighs more than an ounce, an additional 11 cents is needed to pay the cost of the extra ounce.

Before mailing packages and cards, Holster stressed the sender make sure the correct zip code and the return address is on the item. If a zip code is not used, the letter or parcel must be hand-sorted—a delay of at least a day—and if the wrong zip code is used, chances are the mail will go to the wrong place.

The return address on the card or package is needed to return any undeliverable mail to the sender. Otherwise, the item goes to the dead letter office, he said.

"If a package is worth sending, it is worth packaging properly," Holster said. He recommended: (1) All gifts be placed in a strong, corrugated cardboard boxes which are slightly larger than the gifts in order to have sufficient cushioning space around them. (2) The inclusion of a slip of paper with the sender's and receiver's addresses on it in the box just in case something happens to the outside address label. (3) The secure tying of all parcels with strong twine or tape, sealing them completely. Most people use filament tape with a width of three-fourths inch. Outside wrapping is not necessary if a strong box is used. (4) The insuring of packages so that in case of loss or damage to the package, the sender can be reimbursed.

Lastly, don't forget to put stamps on the package. The post office is selling special Christmas stamps for those who like to include some Christmas spirit on the outside of their gifts or cards.

Ricardo Rodriquez, Paul Sanchez and Elias Velarde.

When they get back with the haul, Parks Superintendent Wayne Kohout and Reyes, his right-hand man, will overlook the raising of the pole and the outfitting.

Maybe it won't fall or bend this year.

The city is picking up the bill for the Christmas "tree."

Incidentally, the going rate for evergreen trees at Lincoln National is a dollar per tree 10-foot tall or less and 50 cents more for each foot over 10. You chop or saw the tree yourself.

But since Reyes and his crew are just trimming the high-rise pines, they'll probably get a bargain price.

Sue Crawford of Andrews was the winner last night of the free enterprise slogan contest there. Her entry was "Open Your Eyes To Free Enterprise."

Thirty-seven slogans were entered in the contest, which was sponsored by the Distributive Education Club of America at Andrews High School and by the Andrews County Chamber of Commerce.

The second-place slogan was "Don't Compromise, Go Free Enterprise," according to Guy Wood, the club's sponsor and a free enterprise booster.

A couple of other entries in the contest were "No Free Enterprise, No Andrews, Texas," and "Get Your Butt Busy or Get Out of Here."

"We wanted to make a bumper sticker out of that one," Wood said.

Mrs. Crawford's winning slogan will be printed on 10,000 pin-on buttons to be spread around town.

"I was real tickled," said Mrs. Crawford, who won a $100 U.S. Saving Bond for her one-liner. "I never thought that I would win, though," she said. "I was thrilled to death. I guess that's the first thing I've ever won."

She's a secretary at the Andrews First National Bank, the giver of the prize. Of course, the bank had nothing to do with the judging. That was done by the impartial chamber of commerce folks.

The slogan contest also produced this little tale by Roger Davis of Andrews. Wood liked it, and so did a lot of others. You could call it "Free Enterprise or Bust" or "Busted Charlie." It goes like this:

'BUSTED CHARLIE'

"Charlie had a dollar. Hard work made it two.

"Charlie went in business. Uncle Sam went in too.

"Charlie up got up early. He worked hard every day.

"And every time he turned around, ol' uncle was in his way.

"And in OSHA and labor and congress, we must trust.

"So did Charlie, 'til Charlie went bust."

Masked protestors tell fears

WASHINGTON (AP) — The thousands of Iranians clashing over the shah's visit here leave little doubt about their politics. But the people themselves remain an enigma.

Eight-thousand strong, the demonstrators, mostly young Iranians, swarmed into Washington before the shah arrived Tuesday.

When the monarch stepped from his auto on the South Lawn of the White House to be welcomed by President Carter, demonstrators shouted at each other and waved signs. Fights began and some bled.

The anti-shah demonstrators were easy to spot. They wore masks, as they have in countless earlier demonstrations against the regime.

They said they feared retaliation from the Savak, the shah's secret police. Injured, some refused at first to disclose their identities even to doctors.

The shah's supporters appeared less fearsome without masks. But they were also reluctant — to discuss where they lived, what they did and how they got the time and money to demonstrate. It was the first time that supporters of the shah had demonstrated in Washington.

"I wear a mask because I don't want to get into trouble back home for just a demonstration," said a 20-year-old accounting student living in New York.

As reports circulated that the Iranian government had financed many of the trips and was putting some of the pro-shah Iranians up in Washington hotels, those demonstrators grew more reluctant to talk. Some alluded to "rich Iranian businessmen" or "the Iranian government" as sources of support for their trips, but would not be more specific.

A police officer leans on his riot shield as he waits, wearing a mask as protection from teargas, outside the White House Tuesday evening. Inside, President Carter hosted a state dinner for the visiting Shah of Iran, who earlier in the day was the subject of clash of the White House ellipse. (AP Laserphoto)

Rival sides kept apart in Shah demonstrations

National Park Service police estimated that about 8,000 people took part in Tuesday's protests.

The shah's supporters see him as a hero for bringing prosperity and stability to Iran. His detractors look upon him as a tyrant whose regime would crumble without U.S. economic and military ties.

The most serious of Tuesday's incidents erupted just beyond the White House fence as the shah and his wife arrived for a ceremonial welcome from Carter.

The two leaders, along with their first ladies, went through their paces on the podium on the South Lawn, contending first with the shouts of the demonstrators, then with tear gas wafted by a gentle southern breeze, then with the roar of low-flying helicopters.

On the White House roof, teams of snipers stood by, armed with rifles.

The tear gas, used when police were unable to keep the opposing factions apart, first reached the area as the president was speaking. Almost everyone nearby felt the effects of the fumes, but Carter completed his remarks without pause.

Both leaders dabbed at their eyes but the shah seemed more irritated by the fumes than the president.

Carter tried to make light of the incident. Receiving a tapestry of George Washington from the shah after they entered the White House, Carter remarked, "I apologize for the temporary air pollution in Washington."

Later, following a black-tie state dinner he hosted for his visitor, Carter said in a toast, "There's one thing I have to say about the shah. He sure knows how to draw a crowd."

Tuesday's series of incidents, the largest and most violent since the Vietnam War protest days, overshadowed the substantive talks Carter and the shah held. The two leaders met for 90 minutes Tuesday.

There was no sign of any weakening in U.S.-Iranian friendship despite the allegations of human rights violations in Iran and Carter's interest in reducing arms sales overseas.

Iran has been the No. 1 purchaser of U.S. weaponry in recent years, and a White House statement said Carter pledged continued U.S. arms exports.

Sadat seeks endorsement

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat flew to Damascus today to seek endorsement from skeptical Syrian allies for his dramatic offer to visit Jerusalem on a peace mission.

President Hafez Assad, a persistent critic of unilateral moves in Arab-Israeli relations, embraced the Egyptian president on the tarmac of Damascus international airport as hundreds of armed security guards stood watch.

Sadat's first official visit to the Syrian capital since May 1975 involved unusually tight security because his proposal to go to Israel could increase the risk of attack from extremists, sources said. Damascus has also recently been the target of random bombings, which the official press has blamed on the arch-rival regime in neighboring Iraq.

Before leaving Cairo, Sadat confirmed Israeli President Menahem Begin's formal invitation had arrived but said he had not yet fixed a date for the visit. Asked if he might go next week, he replied, "Let us hope so."

UTPB self-paced classes offer students chance at education

ODESSA — Problem: You live 50 miles from the nearest university, can't afford to commute every day, but desire an advanced degree.

Problem: You are a secondary school teacher who would like to begin a broader study in your second teaching field; however, because of extracurricular school activities are unable to attend university classes.

Answer: an alternative method of study available at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin — self-paced instruction.

"A pure definition of self-paced instruction is when students set the pace for the course, when to complete assignments and when to take tests, instead of the instructor," said Dr. Robert Rothstein, associate professor of pedagogical studies and chairman of mass communications at UTPB.

"Traditional courses are much easier for teachers because it puts the majority of the responsibility on the student, whereas self-pacing methods are one-on-one. The teacher has the responsibility. There are no failing students, only failing methods," he said.

UTPB President V. R. Cardozier said that while the number of self-paced courses are down somewhat because of the cost, the concept is alive and well at the university.

"Many people thought self-pacing would be done here within a year — that it was just a fad," he said.

Two professors, Rothstein and Dr. James Olson, assistant professor of psychology, and a student, Steven Kaufman, published a paper this fall investigating individualized versus traditional course methods.

The main purpose of the study, according to Olson, was to examine the characteristics of the students who withdrew or did not complete self-paced courses and traditional classes.

The report showed that women had a higher percentage rate in completing self-paced courses and a higher grade point average.

"Previous experience in learning how to budget one's time is crucial for success," explained Olson. "In our educational system we do not teach students how to budget time: therefore, they often lack self-initiation."

"A lot hinges on outside obligations," said Chairman of Life Science, Dr. Ed Kurtz. "It takes a mature person to do that (self-paced study), but that's what education is all about. That's what life is all about really."

Dr. Margaret Neussendorfer, left, associate professor of literature at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin, discusses lesson assignments with Marcia Jones of Midland.

Do-it-yourself writers find printing helpful

Undaunted, the author, 79- year-old Paul Luvera, published his book himself.

Grease thieves slippery to catch

HOUSTON (AP) — Representatives of Houston fast-food restaurants and rendering plants say there's a slick racket being conducted by grease thieves.

What they do is steal containers of kitchen drippings from restaurants and sell them to rendering plants.

Local rendering companies said the unlikely-sounding crime has grown to major proportions in Texas' big cities this year.

One Houston renderer said grease thefts cost her company $60,000 a year, and hers is but one of 80 rendering companies in Texas. She guessed statewide losses run "several million dollars."

However, local police and the district attorney's office expressed surprise at the report.

"I had never heard of it," one officer said. "Either we're not having many thefts or the restaurant owners and renderers aren't reporting it," another said.

Law enforcement representatives to a seminar on grease theft problems were told of the racket Tuesday.

They said restaurants, particularly fast-food outlets that do a lot of deep-frying, discard their waste kitchen grease into containers behind their buildings. The drippings are usually collected in 55-gallon drums, and the drums are purchased and picked up on a regular basis by rendering plant route trucks.

The rendering plants, in turn, resell the grease to brokers who forward it to refiners for processing into additives for products ranging from soap to plastics to animal food.

However, restaurant owners say grease thieves, with increasing frequency, are making the grease collection routes after hours and carting away the loaded drums.

They say the grease is sold, sometimes back to the renderer originally scheduled to pick it up, for $30 a barrel. The drums are sometimes sold separately for another $20 apiece.

All this adds up to bigtime crime, said Vernon Stewart, director of the Texas Renderers Association in Austin. He said a big city grease thief can make $200 a night and as much as $50,000 a year.

FBI to probe prisoner's death

HOUSTON (AP) — The Federal Bureau of Investigation says it is conducting an investigation into the death of a Texas prison inmate. The death was ruled a suicide after an autopsy.

Georgia relatives of James Elton Batts, 28, told the Houston Post they have reason to believe Batts was beaten before he died at the Eastham Prison unit.

The FBI confirmed Tuesday it has begun an investigation at the request of Batts' uncle, James "Bud" Batts, who went to the agency in his hometown of Macon, Ga., and asked the help of a federal agent there.

"We got a complaint and we're conducting an investigation right now up in Huntsville," said Robert Franck, FBI agent in charge in Houston.

Texas Department of Corrections officials said Monday they will accept the ruling of "suicide" issued by a Houston medical examiner.

Batts died Sept. 21 but his death became public recently when inquiries were made by his Georgia relatives.

Clara Graham, Batts' foster mother, said she believes Batts was beaten because of cuts above his eyes and "because his face looked like it had plastic surgery."

A prison spokesman said Batts died in the hallway outside a dining area at the Eastham Prison in Houston County. His death occurred at noon after he had returned from work in the cotton fields, the spokesman said.

Four days before he died, prison officials said, Batts tried to take his own life by using a belt to hang himself, but the belt broke. He was hospitalized overnight, prison officials said, and returned to work two days later.

The day before his death Batts tried suicide again, but this time was cut down by a guard, a prison spokesman said.

Batts was sent to pick cotton on the day of his death, officials said, but when he refused to work, he was handcuffed to a ladder attached to a cotton wagon for several hours until the work crew returned to the main unit.

Back at Eastham, the spokesman said, Batts was given water and salt tablets and sent to the dining hall.

Batts' brother, Edward, told the Post the information turned over to the FBI shows Batts was beaten in the field and at the prison.

"James was beaten out in the field, dragged to the ladder where he was beaten and kicked again and was handcuffed," Edward said. "He was beaten back at the prison by a guard and another prisoner and was tied up in the hall where he died."

Dr. Ethel Erickson, a Harris County assistant medical examiner, ruled the death a suicide.

Davis determined to get rid of Priscilla, prosecutor says

By MIKE COCHRAN

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — A prosecutor suggested to the jury in the Cullen Davis murder trial the millionaire defendant invaded his mansion last year to kill the "source of all his problems — Priscilla Davis."

Silver-haired Tolly Wilson led off the state's closing arguments in a spirited attempt to convince the jurors that Davis intended to kill his estranged wife "and everyone else who got in his way."

He said repeatedly that the defendant's "very purpose" that August night was to eliminate the blonde socialite who was suing him for millions in a bitterly contested divorce action.

"He was going to kill anybody and everybody who got in his way and he was going to stop at nothing. Nothing," Wilson said.

The veteran prosecutor traced the events of that night through the eyewitness testimony of Mrs. Davis, 36; Gus Gavrel, 22; and Beverly Bass, 19, the survivors of the bloody midnight rampage. Mrs. Davis and Gavrel were critically wounded and Miss Bass, Gavrel's girlfriend, escaped unharmed.

Wilson said the evidence "fully bears out" the fact that the gunman firing from five to ten feet, also intended to kill his stepdaughter.

It is the slaying of the child for which the Fort Worth industrialist is on trial for his life.

Nine men and three women from the gentle high plains of the Texas Panhandle must make that decision.

Wilson pointed out to the jury that Mrs. Davis and the young woman who had planned to spend the night in the mansion ran in different directions after the shootings and had no chance to concoct a story pinning the murders on Davis.

"This man could have been in the middle of the Petroleum Club dancing at the time if they wanted to make the story up," the prosecutor said.

Mailer says boxer 'little unbalanced'

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Novelist Norman Mailer has told a federal court that boxer Elmo Henderson "seemed a little unbalanced. ..like somebody who had been in a mental hospital" when the fighter was a sparring partner for George Foreman in Zaire.

The writer's testimony came in the trial of a $1 million suit filed by Henderson, 42, against Mailer and Playboy magazine. The suit alleges he had been libeled by a May 1975 story that said Henderson had been in a Nevada mental institution.

The magazine issued a retraction in October 1975 and apologized to Henderson. But the boxer claimed the apology came too late and the story had damaged his career.

Mailer said Tuesday that prior to the 1974 Foreman-Muhammad Ali bout in Zaire he saw Henderson in a hotel lobby shouting, "Foreman, boma ye," which, Mailer said, meant "Foreman will kill him."

Mailer testified he heard Henderson shout the statement at least 50 times before the fight.

"He (Henderson) never looked at anyone and kept his eyes fixed at some point over peoples' heads. It was an emotionally isolated voice," the author said. "He seemed to be living in silence. It gave the oddest feeling."

Mailer also said he had twice heard that Henderson had been in the Nevada State Hospital for the insane.

The writer testified he was not suprised to hear it. "It made perfect sense. Not that he was insane, but a little unbalanced like somebody who had been in a mental hospital," he said.

W. J. Nutto, Henderson's attorney, asked Mailer if he thought Henderson was putting on an act. Mailer testified he "never said it was not a show."

"They were playing the public relations game for high stakes and with powerful emotion. But just because it is a put on, does not mean he is in control altogether," Mailer said.

City finds expensive substitute

CRYSTAL CITY, Texas (AP) — This impoverished South Texas city, without natural gas since its supply was cut off Sept. 23 for unpaid debts, may have found a replacement fuel. Unfortunately it costs twice as much.

Under a proposed deal between Crystal City and Texen Texas Energy Co., of Eagle Pass, the city would pay $3.97 for propane to produce as much heat as generated by $2 of natural gas, according to Texas Railroad Commission figures.

Lo-Vaca cut off the natural gas supply after the town's municipal gas system ran up a bill of about $800,000 when officials refused to pay higher gas prices allowed by the commission and upheld by federal and state courts.

City officials continued paying about 36 cents per thousand cubic feet, the rate called for in long-term supply contracts.

Under the proposal, Texen Texas will ship the propane 44 miles by truck from Eagle Pass to Crystal City at a cost of 35 cents per gallon.

Studies show hair dye chemical causes cancer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration says it appears there is no longer any doubt that a chemical used in permanent hair dyes causes cancer.

An FDA spokesman said Tuesday the National Cancer Institute has informed FDA Commissioner Donald Kennedy that the chemical, 4-methoxym-phenylenediamine, has been identified as a cancer-causing agent in NCI animal studies.

"We're looking at the regulatory questions on the assumption that the institute's final data will be positive," the spokesman said. "We have every assurance from NCI that that is the case."

An industry spokeswoman said the chemical has no substitute and is necessary to facilitate the dyeing process, which involves bleaching out the natural hair color and substituting an artificial one.

Permanent hair dyes can't be washed out by semipermanent dyes or color rinses. A person's hair remains the dyed color until it grows out or is replaced by another permanent dye.

A month ago, Kennedy told reporters he had asked the institute to expedite its testing of the suspect hair dyes. But he said he would wait for the institute's final report before taking regulatory action as demanded by the Environmental Defense Fund.

While some analysis remains to be done, the FDA spokesman said Tuesday, the commissioner has been told that the cancer-causing property of the long-used coal tar dye is no longer in doubt.

The spokesman said FDA is now considering two fundamental questions:

—Is the study, which involved feeding high doses of the chemical to laboratory rats and mice, a reliable indicator that humans who apply it to their hair and scalps run the risk of contracting cancer?

—And if it is determined that a cancer danger does exist for the millions of people who use the dyes, what action can the agency take against products that have enjoyed a special form of congressional immunity for 40 years?

The FDA spokesman said the agency has determined that 3 to 6 percent of the chemical is absorbed by the body through the scalp during normal use of a permanent hair dye, the type generally used to change, rather than enhance, one's natural hair color.

The cosmetics industry, however, rejects the test on 4-methoxym-phenylenediamine as irrelevant and cites numerous other studies, including a 13-year survey of 5,000 beauticians that have failed to produce statistically signficant evidence that the dyes cause cancer in humans.

Even if the FDA concludes the dyes pose a hazard to consumers, it can't ban them as it attempted to do with saccharin before Congress intervened earlier this year.

Under a 1938 law, coal tar hair dyes, as those containing suspect chemical are called, are specifically exempt from FDA's usual regulatory powers, except that the agency retains authority over their labeling.

Hughes jury selection continues

HOUSTON (AP) — Attorneys continued the task today of selecting a jury which will decide the validity of a purported Howard Hughes will and whether the late industrailist was a legal resident of Texas.

Meanwhile, the Texas Supreme Court refused Tuesday to halt the trial here. The request for a court-ordered stay was made by attorneys for proponents of the so-called Morman will and the Mormon Church, a beneficiary of the handwritten document.

Attorneys have estimated the six-person panel to hear the case will be selected by the end of the week.

Attorneys for the will, who have not shown up here, base their claim for a delay on the argument that a fair trial here is impossible while a trial on the "will" is under way in Las Vegas, Nev.

Texas Attorney General John Hill is attempting to prove that Texas was the legal domicile of Hughes. If he is successful, the state could collect at least $100 million in inheritance taxes.

Hughes' relatives are challenging the Mormon will. They claim it is a forgery. They also are trying to prove that the legal domicile of Hughes at the time of his death was Nevada which has no inheritance tax.

The legal battle of the vast estate has spread to three states, Nevada, Texas and California.

California also has claimed Hughes was a legal resident of that state and has asked U.S. Supreme Court Justice Lewis Powell to stop the Houston trial with a temporary injunction.

Hughes died April 5, 1976 while on a flight from Acapulco, Mexico to Houston.

Medical use of 'grass' pondered

By CHRIS CONNELL

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government advisory panel is considering whether doctors should be allowed to prescribe marijuana for persons undergoing chemotherapy or suffering from glaucoma or asthma.

The Food and Drug Administration's Controlled Substances Advisory Committee was meeting today to hear arguments on whether federal restrictions on marijuana should be eased.

Marijuana is now treated like heroin and LSD under federal drug abuse laws. Doctors cannot prescribe it except in federally controlled experiments.

Among the witnesses arguing for medical use of marijuana was Robert Randall, a 29-yearold glaucoma sufferer who gets a weekly supply of pot from the government in a test of its effect on eye pressure.

Also testifying was a representative of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, which first petitioned the government five years ago to allow medical use of marijuana.

NORML also favors decriminalization of marijuana for social use, but the FDA panel has no jurisdiction over that issue.

"This is our shot. This is the ball game for us," said NORML lawyer Peter Meyers, who won a federal court battle last spring to force the government to consider reclassifying marijuana.

The Justice Department's Drug Enforcement Administration opposed any change in the law, but an appeals court said the secretary of health, education and welfare must decide whether marijuana has medical value.

The panel, composed of experts from outside the government, will make a recommendation for HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr.

Federal officials say they doubt the panel will recommend a change now because the scientific evidence on marijuana is inconclusive, despite the personal testimony of advocates like Randall.

Robert C. Petersen, associate director for research in the National Institute on Drug Abuse, said marijuana is no panacea for glaucoma.

Court told of crash

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A New Mexico truck-bus crash on a narrow bridge in 1972 dislodged almost all of the seats on the bus, a federal court heard Tuesday.

The crash killed 19 persons on the Woodlawn Baptist Church bus, and survivors of 10 of the victims are suing the maker of the bus body and interior, Wayne Corp. of Indiana.

Don Konarsky, 21, a passenger on another bus, testified in a deposition entered into evidence that all the seats on the wrecked bus were dislodged except those at the left front.

N.Y. bus station termed 'dump,' 'den of iniquity'

By LEE LESCAZE
The Washington Post

NEW YORK — Continental Trailways says New York City's Port Authority terminal is giving bus stations a bad name.

"It's a stinking place," says Robert Cona, the company's New York manager. "It's a 'dump,' " according to Trailways' complaint to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The complaint is part of the company's effort to win a reduction of what it calls the "extortionate rent" it pays to the New York-New Jersey Port Authority.

Just outside the doors of the terimanl the complaint also calls a "den of iniquity," pimps and prostitutes work Eighth Avenue in front of topless bars, X-rated movies and porno shops. Corner trashbaskets are topped off each morning with the pints and half-pints discarded by drunks for whom a curb is often a serious obstacle.

It is not the gateway any city would choose. But is the terminal for more than 200,000 bus riders daily who see some of New York's worst as soon as they leave it doors. For the Port Authority and its police, part of the problem is to try to keep the streets from overflowing into the terminal. "You walk around this building long enough and you get to know who belongs here and who doesn't," said Capt. George Gaulrapp, who commands the building's police.

Pimps and prostitutes are hustled out when spotted. So are drunks and loiterers who distrub passengers. There are hundreds of crimes each year, most of them what Gaulrapp calls "opportunistic crimes." A traveler puts down his suitcase to make a phone call or buy a newspaper, and when he reaches for it, it's gone. A thief spots someone holding a ticket carelessly and grabs it. Someone pretends to be a porter and disappears into the crowd with a passenger's suitcase. "Most of the people we arrest are not neighborhood people," Gaulrapp said.

But the neighborhood gives the terminal its lonely and derelict.

Old men approach the bus ticket counters and ask for an empty ticket envelope. "They have to pretend they're doing something. With the envelope they look like they're waiting for a bus," said Trailways ticket agent Beverly Stump.

Finish a newspaper and put it down in a trash can and its picked out by a scavenger within minutes.

In the course of a three-minute telephone call, three different men went down the line of pay phones sticking fingers in each coin return slot, hoping to find some change.

"The people around here are bold," said ticket agent Cecil Ford. A woman went down one line of phones Friday interrupting people to ask if they could spare a quarter.

Gaulrapp remembers that the terminal attracted the lonely from its first day 27 years ago. It once had several coffee houses patronized by Greek-Americans. Without their coffee houses, elderly men came to the terminal waiting room to meet and kill time, exercising a kind of squatters' rights.

One day, reacting to complaints that waiting room chairs were always filled, the police rounded up about 25 of the former coffee house patrons. The youngest was 75. "What are you going to do?" Gaulrapp said. He let them go.

Not all the lonely are poor. One elderly woman became a waiting room regular until one day she was questioned by a policeman and became loudly abusive. She was brought to the terminal police headquarters, not under arrest, but to be asked if she needed a place to stay or other help. "Who needs you," she told Gaulrapp, and showed him her shopping bag full of small bills — $18,000 worth.

"The night hours just dragged," she told the police, so she came to the terminal, Now there is a senior citizens' social area off the waiting room, but it doesn't help with the nights. It's open noon to 4 p.m.

For the young who run away from home, the terminal is the usual entry point into New York. Each year boy and girl runaways 12 and 13 years old make headlines when city police find them working as prostitutes under the control of pimps.

"We try to apprehend them before they're swallowed up on the streets," said Port Authority Police Sgt. Jose Elique, who heads the terminal youth squad.

In 21 months, squad members have stopped about 6,000 youths inside the terminal. A quarter of them have been runaways. In 1977, 784 runaways, about half males and half females, have been returned home from the terminal.

As the neighborhood has deterioriated around the bus terminal, its eating places and stores have begun to close earlier, more from a lack of customers than out of fear. There has been only one holdup in the terminal, Gaulrapp said. Several of the terminal's businessmen said they never feel threatened inside its doors.

In one respect, however, Gaulrapp said, "We lost the terminal." Not to criminals, but to an array of touts who line the main concourse soliciting money for causes that include prison reform, the Hare Krishna movement, retarded children and God.

"When you have the Lord in your heart you can resist temptation and sin," a gray-haired woman calls out to the evening riders above the rattle of coins in tin cans. Young men offer black newspapers and, if you take one, request a donation.

Anti-abortion advocates have displayed dead fetuses on card tables. "That sure creates an image," one shop owner said.

In 1968, a Vietnam veteran opposing the Vietnam War who had marched for months outside the terminal won a suit permitting him and others to exercise free speech inside.

Each group that wants to solicit or preach has a permit for a particular spot on the concourse at certain hours, and free speech reigns. So does free silence, in the person of an elderly man who stands next to a small testifying to God's strength clipped to his chest and back. The crowds stack of Bibles offering messages and back.

Bakke, university dispute on lawsuit's grounds

By MORTON MINTZ and CYNTHIA GORNEY
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The University of California will tell the Supreme Court Wednesday that it should not decide the widely publicized Allan Bakke discrimination case on the basis of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which is widely regarded as more favorable to Bakke's cause than the 14th Amendment.

The outlines of the university brief were disclosed in Berkeley, Calif. by Donald L. Reidhaar, general counsel of the University of California Board of Regents, in a telephone interview with The Washington Post.

The university's claim that Bakke lacked legal standing to sue is rejected by the Justice Department, in a friend-of-the-court brief submitted Tuesday night, and by Reynold H. Colvin, Bakke's lawyer, in a telephone interview in San Francisco. Colvin also will file a brief Wednesday.

The university's contention will be that the law did not authorize Bakke to file his private lawsuit. The suit charged that the special admissions program for racial minorities at the medical school at Davis violated Title VI of the act by denying him admission in 1973 and 1974 solely because he is white.

Title VI says, "No person in the United States shall, on the ground of race, color or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving federal financial assistance." The university receives such assistance.

The much more general 14th Amendment bars a state from denying "to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Bakke, in his suit in state court in California, complained that both Title VI and the 14th Amendment were violated by the special admissions program, which reserved 16 of 100 places mainly for blacks, Hispanics and Asian-Americans. In the years at issue, the medical school accepted none of the 245 whites who sought admission under the special program on the grounds that they were disadvantgaged.

The state judge agreed with Bakke. The California Supreme Court also ruled for the 37-year-old engineer — but solely on the constitutional ground.

The Title VI question was submerged for about a year, but surfaced last month in oral argument in the Supreme Court.

Justice Byron R. White told Bakke's lawyer that "it could be that the Civil Rights Act forbids things that the 14th Amendment itself wouldn't."

Justice William J. Brennan Jr. cited the court's policy: " ... ordinarily, we don't decide constitutional questions if we can affirm ... on a federal statutory ground."

Five days later, the court directed the university and Bakke to file supplemental briefs discussing Title VI "as it applies to this case."

University counsel Reidhaar told a reporter that the Supreme Court only once has reached the question of whether a private party — rather than a governmental agency — can sue under Title VI.

He cited a case, decided in January 1974, in which the court ruled for 1,800 San Francisco public school pupils of Chinese ancestry who did not speak English. They sued the school board, saying it violated their Title VI rights by denying them supplemental English courses.

The court ruled unanimously for the students. A concurring opinion signed by three of the nine justices said in a footnote that the defendants "do not contest the standing of the petitioners (the children) to sue as beneficiaries of the ... contract" under which federal funds flow to the school board.

In the government brief filed Tuesday night, Attorney General Griffin B. Bell and Solicitor General Wade H. McCree cited the same case in arguing that Bakke was free to sue — but that the university was free to adopt "any minority-sensitive program that is consistent with the 14th Amendment."

The government not only cited the 1974 case, Lau vs. Nichols, in contending that private persons may sue to enforce Title VI, but argued that the university had abandoned its right to challenge Bakke on this issue by failing to raise or litigate it in the state courts.

In addition to not claiming in the lower courts that Bakke had no right to sue for enforcement under Title VI, the government recalled, the university had asked the trial judge to declare the special admissions program legal — under Title VI.

At another point, the government said that private enforcement suits are consistent with Title VI's "underlying purposes," such suits being "an essential aid in enforcing civil rights statutes," and individual violations being "too numerous to be dealt with effectively by agency enforcement alone."

The government's principal position was the one it first had stated in its main brief to the Supreme Court in September: under the 14th Amendment, a state university can take race into account in admissions programs seeking to remedy past societal discrimination.

The new brief, renewing a plea that the Bakke case be sent back because of a defective record, said that Title VI doesn't change anything because it is consistent with the amendment.

Bakke's lawyer, Colvin, told a reporter that he, too, saw nothing in the 1974 Lau decision to support the university's claim that Bakke lacked standing to sue.

The university's Reidhaar said his brief will argue that even if Bakke had standing, he had not complied with the law's requirement to exhaust administrative remedies before filing a lawsuit.

Firefighting troops plagued with hoaxers

LONDON (AP) — Firebugs, hoaxers and "some idiot with a transmitter" are plaguing the 10,000 troops answering the fire alarms during the two-day-old British firemen's strike, authorities reported today.

"The soldiers are being badly hindered by hoax calls especially," said a Home Office spokesman.

Scotland Yard reported half the 296 alerts in London Tuesday were false alarms, double the normal total.

Authorities in Glasgow, Liverpool and the sprawling Midlands industrial belt around Birmingham made similar reports.

"Chasing after these false alarms is wearing my men out and sapping their morale," said Col. John Drummond, the military fire chief in Glasgow. One of his men was trapped under a firetruck that overturned on an icy road answering a hoax call.

Scotland Yard said police patrols to catch the hoaxers were being increased.

Some 30 of the military firefighters were injured Tuesday, the Home Office said.

Police reported several cases of arson, the worst at a school in Birmingham. The building was badly damaged before troops put out the flames.

The Home Office said a radio channel linking the London control center with mobile senior fire officers who are not on strike was jammed, apparently deliberately.

"The waveband was unusable for some time and caused a lot of problems," a spokesman said. "Some idiot with a transmitter is responsible. He caused a lot of trouble and interfered with crucial communications. We are taking steps to trace the transmitter and resolve the trouble."

Strikers began picketing the army's emergency fire stations Tuesday night to stop the 4,000 fire officers not on strike from aiding the soldiers.

"We won't stop the soldiers answering alarms," said a spokesman for the Fire Brigades' Union, "but we want to stop members of the fire service working with the army."

Some of the strikers abandoned the picket lines temporarily Tuesday to help troops fight fires where lives were in danger. But a strike leader stressed: 'These were exceptional cases. The strike will go on."

The 33,000 striking firemen want a 30 percent hike in their weekly pay which averages $115. Home Secretary Merlyn Rees told the House of Commons Tuesday the government will not lift its counter-inflationary ceiling of 10 percent on wage increases for them.

'Separate settlement' not goal of Sadat's trip

By SAMI RIZKALLAH

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Anwar Sadat is going to Israel to try to remove the roadblocks to a new Geneva conference, not to make a separate peace with Israel, authoritative Egyptian sources report.

Sadat "is not going to Israel to have a separate settlement. That is not in the cards," said the Egyptian ambassador to the United States, Ashraf Ghorbal, after Prime Minister Menahem Begin sent an official invitation to the Egyptian leader Tuesday.

The semiofficial Cairo newspaper Al Ahram said Sadat was trying to break the "vicious circle of debate" over procedural issues blocking a peace conference between Israel and its Arab foes in Geneva.

The main procedural issue is who will represent the Palestinians. Israel refuses to negotiate with the Palestine Liberation Organization, which the Arab world recognizes as the representative of the Palestinian people.

Sadat said Tuesday that the problem of Palestinian recognition by Israel could be solved "around the conference table at Geneva."

There was no indication when Sadat would announce his acceptance of Begin's invitation but it was expected soon. He is expected to make the trip after Begin returns from a visit to London, scheduled for Nov. 20-23.

Simcha Dinitz, Israel's ambassador to the United States, told reporters Israel is prepared to negotiate a peace treaty with Egypt but "not at the exclusion of our readiness to negotiate with each of the Arab countries."

He added, however, that if "Egypt alone is prepared for talks, Israel will move ahead. We are ready to negotiate with anyone who is ready."

U.S. officials in Washington said a meeting between Sadat and Begin would be only one step toward Arab-Israeli peace. State Department spokesman Hodding Carter said a conference between Israel and all its Arab adversaries "will be required and we are continuing to work toward that end."

Sadat's new peace initiative faced its first major test with his Arab colleagues today in Damascus, where he was to confer with President Hafez Assad.

The radical Arab regimes in Iraq and Libya both accused Sadat of breaking the united Arab front against Israel. But their reaction was expected and caused no concern.

Longshoremen's president joins Gulf Coast strikers

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Longshoremen flushed with tentative victory on an Atlantic Coast contract put pressure on New Orleans ship owners today to buy the same deal.

Thomas Gleason, president of the International Longshoremen's Association, AFL-CIO, flew here from New York to take personal charge of the negotiations.

Gleason would not be pinned down on whether a Gulf Coast agreement must come before the ILA will sign the contract outlined Monday covering Atlantic ports.

"This is not the proper place or time to say anything about that," he said.

New talks were scheduled today after a six-hour opening session here wound up Tuesday night with no agreement on anything. Gleason said both sides would prepare revised proposals. Steamship negotiators refused comment.

A contract would cover the 6,000 longshoremen here in the nation's second largest port, and at Baton Rouge, about 90 miles up the Mississippi River.

"We found a lot of differences between us," said Gleason, but he added that the main issue was the union demand for a bigger and better guaranteed annual income, known as the GAI.

"If we can straighten out the GAI, all the rest of it, job security and all the rest, will fall into place," he said.

Roaming wild burros exasperate federal officials

By CHARLES HILLINGER
Los Angeles Times

Jim Walters of the National Park Service peered out the window of the helicopter as it skimmed low over a section of the Grand Canyon.

The ground below and the canyon walls on either side were virtually denuded of vegetation and crisscrossed by an incredible network of burro trails. The devastation stretched for miles.

"Hell, this isn't a national park," Walters declared in disgust. "This is a wild burro pasture."

That scene in the Grand Canyon is offered by park rangers as a good example of why wild burros by the hundreds are being rounded up and removed from national parks and federally controlled rangeland in California, Nevada, Arizona and New Mexico.

Federal officials say the burros are stripping the land of its vegetation, threatening the habitat of many forms of wildlife (from birds whose nests are destroyed to deer, elk and bighorn sheep whose food and water supply is diminished or spoiled) and even damaging sites of historic or archeological importance.

In years past, thousands of the burros were simply shot (66 were killed by rangers at Bandelier National Monument in New Mexico as recently as last July). But public sentiment on behalf of the burros has largely discouraged federal officials from that tactic.

Although the National Park Service has been trying for nearly a year to proceed with a plan to shoot the Grand Canyon burros, the chief effort now is to capture the animals and give them away — under an "adopt a burro" program that places the burros with families and individuals throughout the Southwest.

There are an estimated 8,000 to 10,000 wild burros now roaming the Southwest. Introduced to this continent in the 1500s by Spaniards who brought them from North Africa, they played an important role in the winning of the West, especially in the mining camps, as pack animals.

When mining activity subsided and motorized vehicles came into common use, many burros were abandoned and left to run free in the mountains and deserts, where they have thrived.

Their place in American folklore — as lovable, long-eared companions of prospectors and miners — has never been in doubt.

But some would argue that such sentiment is misplaced. Said Brant Calkin, Southwest representative of the Sierra Club: "It seems strange to me because a native animal, one of the most majestic examples of wildlife in North American — the bighorn sheep — threatened by the burro in Grand Canyon, deserves the same kind of sentiment and appreciation. But the bighorn sheep is mainly ignored."

Sentiment aside, it was not long before the burros were in trouble with federal officials.

By World War I, damage to native wildlife and flora from burro overgrazing was so extensive in the Grand Canyon that National Park Service rangers organized burro hunts.

In 1922, the park's chief ranger, J.P. Brooks, wrote: "Overgrazed conditions exist in all areas ranged by burros. In many places, herbage growth is cropped to the roots. Some species of shrubbery have been totally destroyed. Soil erosion is greatest in burro-infested areas..."

The complaints from rangers at Grand Canyon and elsewhere are much the same today.

Merle Stitt, park superintendet at Grand Canyon, said recently:

"Overgrazing of park vegetation will continue with increasing environmental damage (if the burros remain). Competition with bighorn sheep will continue, with a continuing decline of this native species in the park."

Terral King of the Bureau of Land Management, which recently rounded up 82 burros in the desert near Bishop, Calif., said the animals had so stripped that area of feed that they were "down to eating the cactus."

The burros, added King, "are eating anything they come across. They're making it tough on bighorn sheep and deer.

"The whole desert ecology system evolved without a large animal the size of a burro. Now, the burro is slowly but surely destroying that ecosystem."

At Bandelier National Monument southeast of Santa Fe, a National Park Service expert said, erosion caused by burro overgrazing is calculated at 70,000 pounds of soil per acre in some areas.

Bandelier is rich with ruins of prehistoric Indian dwellings, some of which have been damaged by burros. The same problem exists at Grand Canyon, where archeologist Robert Euler said pottery and other artifacts at prehistoric Indian sites had been smashed by the hooves of the burros, which had also knocked over walls and disturbed ancient cooking pits by wallowing in them while dusting off.

A different sort of problem has been reported at China Lake Naval Weapons Center in the Mojave Desert: burros eating electrical cables and knocking over expensive and sophisticated equipment on the Navy test range there.

At China Lake, where an estimated 1,200 to 1,500 burros roam the range, the initial solution was to thin the herds by shooting some of the animals. That was also the strategy at Grand Canyon, where about 2,500 burros were shot between 1924 and 1968. And in Death Valley, rangers tried to keep the burro population down by shooting them as recently as 1971.

The shootings tapered off, in part because of adverse public reaction, something the National Park Service was reminded of last November when it published a plan to wipe out all burros in Grand Canyon by shooting them. Park officials were deluged with more than 12,000 letters, most of them pleading that the burros not be shot. They wer also hit with a lawsuit seeking to prevent them from carrying out the shooting and demanding that an environmental impact statement be prepared before anything is done with the burros.

Interior Secretary Cecil D. Andrus responded by ordering that an impact statement be prepared by the end of this year.

Filing the suit were the Committee to Protect the Grand Canyon Burro, the American Horse Protection Association and the Humane Society of the United States.

Wendy Dungan, assistant director of the Committee to Protect the Grand Canyon Burro, headquartered in Tucson, said that although she had never been down in the Grand Canyon, "I don't believe it possible for the burro to cause all the destruction the National Park Service claims it does."

Nancy Dagle of the Sierra Club's conservation committee in San Francisco said the Park Service plan was being supported because the burro "is a non-native species causing a great many problems to plants and animals that have existed in the canyon for centuries."

The National Wildlife Federation at its annual meeting last March voted to support the Park Service proposal.

Phil Hill of Hesperia, Calif., carries newly-adopted burro, Sweetpea. His wife, in the background, holds their son, Luke. Hill says burros, which are becoming a growing problem on open rangeland, make ideal pets.

Zero-base budgeting off to unspectacular start

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Carter's highly touted zero-base budgeting program is getting off to a better than expected — but still decidedly unspectacular — start.

Although key officials concede that ZBB, as the process now is known in bureaucratic jargon, has not quite revolutionized the federal budget making procedure, analysts insist it has produced some surprising results in giving top government managers a little better handle on agency spending habits.

At the same time, insiders admit the program simply has not lived up to the high-blown promises implied in earlier presidential rhetoric. Not only has ZBB failed to yield any significant new savings, as Carter previously had suggested it would, but it has spawned some problems of its own.

Among them: A mountain of paperwork resulting from requirements that agencies make detailed "decision packages" on each of their hundreds of individual programs and then rank them in order of priority. In some departments, the number of annual budget documents has doubled with the onset of ZBB. In others, the increase is smaller, but the trend still is the same.

Noted Robert W. Hartman, a Brookings Institution budget expert: "In a few departments and agencies, where budget analysis has not been too sophisticated, ZBB is bound to result in better discipline and management. But in others, it actually may be making the situation worse."

Alice M. Rivlin, director of the Congressional Budget Office, is equally wary of heady claims: "You just aren't going to get miracles," she said, "out of any new procedure."

To be sure, as defenders point out, it's too early to make any final judgments about the zero-base budgeting program. The ZBB plan was just put into effect early last spring, and the first ZBB budget — due out next January — still is incomplete. The Office of Management and Budget has just finished reviewing initial requests from departments and agencies and putting them together.

The difference between ZBB and traditional budget making theoretically is that ZBB forces policy makers to review every single program and expenditure each time the budget is put together — not simply to focus on new spending requests, as has been the case historically.

To do this, the major departments each prepare a series of "decision packages." For each item they administer, the agencies must show what they would do with their programs under three specific alternatives: (1) if they were given only enough money to accomplish their legally-mandated objectives; (2) If they had only enough to continue current efforts, and (3) If they had more available for new initiatives.

The departments then rank their spending packages according to their own priorities — what they think should be done first, second and so on if only limited funds are available.

In the past, the agencies simply have submitted requests for any increases they want, and attempted to justify them on paper. But any discussion of alternative packages — and ranking, if any — has been done almost solely by OMB.

Policy makers say the administration now is far enough along in its fiscal 1979 budget process for analysts to draw some initial conclusions about the impact of zero-base budgeting, that are likely to stick even after the January budget has been completed. And the verdict is a mixed one: The procedure seems to be a useful budget making tool. But no sweeping changes are in sight.

There are these developments:

—Despite Carter's frequent claims that the program would cut spending, analysts say they are unable to point to a single dollar saved by ZBB. Budget makers argue they might not be able to tell if they did — "how can you say what you would have done otherwise?" But still, the money savings benefits are elusive. "If there'd been any major net savings," an outside budget watcher said, "you would have heard about it."

—Although the President has made a point of hailing ZBB as an effective tool for "reordering priorities," insiders concede there have been no sizeable shifts as a result of the program. Officials predict most major programs and bureaus will remain essentially the same in fiscal 1979, following a year of ZBB — including the Pentagon and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

—Possibly the most visible outgrowth of the ZBB process has been a quantum jump in paperwork — a phenomenon officials expected from earlier state-level experiences. An OMB survey of the government's 23 largest agencies showed significant increases in paperwork — from 1 1-2 to 2 times previous levels in all but one department.

The exception: The Interior Department. Planners there actually were able to reduce the paperwork load because ZBB required them to submit one department-wide budget package, rather than the often-repetitive plans filed by Interior's disparate agencies and bureaus. In the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, however, the problem was the opposite. Budget makers there say they were inundated with paperwork from agencies and divisions.

Moreover, as agency budget chiefs complain, the paperwork means tied-up manpower as well. In one key governmental department, top policy officials were so bogged down in ZBB obligations that they were unable to devote time to hammering out new legislative initiatives the Secretary had wanted to propose next year. "Broad policymaking functions took a back seat," one onlooker explained, "to more attention to details."

—Although officials say ZBB is valuable for making decisions involving daily operating costs, insiders concede it has been virtually useless for socalled "entitlement" programs where spending levels are mandated by law — by far the lion's share of the federal budget. An OMB official points out that ZBB doesn't preclude the administration from proposing legislation to change these program levels, as in welfare payments or veterans' benefits. But it doesn't help cope with bloated benefit levels either.

The main area where ZBB appears to have been most helpful is in giving OMB budget examiners (and central departmental budget chiefs) a better grasp of the details of existing spending — what the programs actually are about in each department and agency, and how significant the effort really is.

"We're really getting a lot better impression of priorities here than we ever did before," said one OMB official. "Before, if a cabinet officer wanted $50 million or so for some new initiative, we never were sure whether it was important or just a throwaway. Now he has to rank it with other programs. If he places it fourth out of 265 programs, it tells us one thing. If he puts it third from last, it tells us something else."

The results of the administration's new experiment essentially parallel the experience of officials in Georgia, where Carter first instituted the ZBB system as governor in 1971.

A study by George S. Minmier, a former Georgia State University researcher who now is an accounting professor at Memphis State University, showed that that program, too, produced no visible savings and increased paperwork "geometrically." (After ZBB was put into effect there, the State Highway Department budget, which previously had taken up only one large volume, grew so large it had to be hauled around on a handtruck.)

Although Carter himself proclaimed that the program saved $54 million out of the state's $1.8 billion budget, the Georgia plan emerged from its maiden year with more detractors than admirers. Pete Hackney, chief budget officer for the Georgia General Assembly, said, "There's not 10 cents worth of difference between what we're doing now and what we did before ZBB began. It hasn't accomplished a thing." Other Georgia officials are somewhat more charitable, but still don't make any great claims for the program.

In this year's federal government experiment, the agencies consolidated about 90,000 separate budgetary decisions into 9,500 packages.

Rather than leaving the decision entirely to top budget makers, ZBB for the first time turns everything upside down by seeking recommendations initially from the lowest-level division personnel, and then "building up" slowly to the head of a broad department. As a result, said one knowledgeable official involved in the new ZBB program, almost all of an agency's program personnel are "involved" in the budget process.

The initial ZBB experiment has gone more smoothly than expected. Officials who had coped with the new process in Georgia had admonished firmly against putting it all into effect the first year here. And old budget hands were skeptical at best. But the career officials, at least, now seem converted.

"We're generally pleased with the results it's produced," said Dale R. McOmber, assistant director of OMB and a key figure in the program. "It's really surprised us that it's all been this helpful."

Carter administration officials boast that by forcing the agencies to rank their spending priorities in detail, the process is bringing on better management.

"Our shining example," one budget maker said, "is the Environmental Protection Agency." Officials say the ranking system there forced agency chiefs to integrate EPA's dealings with water, air and other forms of pollution, which previously had been considered separately.

But others close to the budget making process complain that while the procedure may give technicians a more detailed view of what is going on, it too often diverts policy makers' attention from broader issues, such as overall programs and objectives. In HEW, for example, observers report that policy planners were so preoccupied with how to cope with ZBB requirements that "no really hard decisions were made."

Moreover, departmental budget officers report the effectiveness of ZBB is spotty — visibly more pronounced in some agencies than in others. Even OMB officials concede some bureaucracies have been sloppy in preparing their decision packages, or simply have gone their own way and ignored central directives. As under the old system, a number tried to "pad" their budget requests to allow a cushion for cutbacks at higher levels (although OMZ officials insist it's less than before ZBB appeared).

A special holiday Fun Club is being planned by the Central and Alamo YMCA for Nov. 23 and Nov. 25.

The Fun Club is open to any boy or girl in the first through sixth grade. Activities include arts and crafts, swimming, bowling, games and a trip to the Air Terminal.

Each youngster brings a sack lunch, swimsuit, towel and money for drinks. Members and nonmembers of the YMCA are welcome to attend, but only the first 40 registrations will be accepted. The membership fee is $3 per each day and the nonmembership fee is $5 per day.

Young Humphrey had big steps to follow

By GERRY NELSON
Associated Press Writer

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — When your father is Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, you have to take big steps to follow him into politics.

So far, Hubert H. "Skip" Humphrey III has succeeded. He's been elected to the Minnesota Senate twice and announced this week that he'll bid for Congress in the suburban 3rd District next year.

Young Humphrey, a 35-yearold lawyer, seems only now to be emerging from the giant shadow cast by his father.

He is the oldest of three Humphrey sons but the only one to enter politics. His brother Robert owns an electronics store in Huron, S.D.; Douglas is a partner in a kitchen cabinet firm in Bloomington, Minn., and sister Nancy is married to a Minneapolis businessman.

Skip Humphrey has a stocky build, gray wavy hair, wears glasses, speaks in a gravelly voice and doesn't look at all like the "happy warrior" Humphrey who has become a national figure.

"I'm me," he said after his first election in 1972. "Some people are going to be sadly mistaken if they thought they were voting for me because they thought I was going to be like my old man."

Young Humphrey kept a low profile early in his legislative career, seldom taking part in Senate debates.

He blossomed out this year, heading an important subcommittee which dealt with state agency funding and managing a major bill that allocated $28.5 million to fight Dutch elm disease.

Senate colleagues called him hard-working but not flashy.

"Outgoing and talkative but not as folksy as his father," says one source.

Humphrey's congressional bid next year will come 30 years after the elder Hubert H. Humphrey was first elected to the U.S. Senate.

The senior Humphrey, now suffering from cancer, has been given an unending round of tributes and honors in recent months. His son, Skip, stood in for him at a recent Washington, D.C., event which raised funds for a Hubert H. Humphrey School of Public Affairs at the University of Minnesota.

The second-generation effort by Skip Humphrey has at least one roadblock so far — his opponent will be by another second-generation political name.

Humphrey will be opposed for the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party endorsement by Michael Freeman, 29, son of former Minnesota Gov. Orville Freeman. The elder Freeman also served as secretary of agriculture in the Kennedy administration.

Whichever one wins will seek the seat now held by Republican Bill Frenzel, a fourth-termer who has gained stature in GOP ranks in Washington.

The district encompasses 15 suburbs and a corner of Minneapolis.

Impossible discard sounds alarm bell

Making an "impossible" discard is the best way to sound the alarm bell in the night. If your partner is not just painted on his chair, he should wake up and heed the warning.

Opening lead — ♡ K

West took three top hearts, and East discarded the deuce of clubs. West hoped his partner had a diamond trick but made the "safe" shift to the ten of clubs.

South won with the queen of clubs and led the queen of spades. When West played low, for the best of reasons, declarer put up dummy's ace since West would not have passed originally with the king of spades in addition to his strong hearts. The rest was easy.

COMPLAINT

"Why didn't you lead a fourth heart?" East demanded. "I would make my king of spades and beat the hand."

East had no right to complain. At the third trick he should discard the queen of diamonds. Any moderately high card would be encouraging, and any very low card would be discouraging. The queen of diamonds made no sense at all except as a warning to West: "Do something unusual. No ordinary signal will work."

A thoughtful West would then see that the impossible signal could call only for a heart continuation.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one diamond, and the next player passes. You hold: S-K; H-96; D-Q10843 C-86432. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid four diamonds. Partner probably has four or more diamonds (although opening on a three-card suit is not unheard of), and you can therefore fairly safely rob the enemy of bidding room.

California governor's campaign debt near $150,000

The Los Angeles Times

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., still owes creditors nearly $150,000 from his presidential campaign, and the lingering debts could complicate fund-raising for his expected re-election bid next year.

"That's a problem we have to confront," campaign treasurer Mariana R. Pfaelzer told the Los Angeles Times.

Sixteen months after lopsidedly losing the presidential nomination to Jimmy Carter at the Democratic National Convention, Brown's campaign committee continues to owe 89 creditors $149,539.49.

The Brown for President Committee listed cash assets of only $29,831.99 in its latest report filed Oct. 10 with the Federal Election Commission.

That means the committee is $119,707.47 in the red.

At least one creditor told the Los Angeles Times he is prepared to go to court if necessary to get paid off.

"I'm ticked. I'll sue Jerry Brown if I have to," said the businessman, who asked to remain anonymous.

Asked what he intended to do about the debts, Brown replied: "Try and pay them off. At some point, I'll have to have a fund raiser."

The governor also was asked whether he intended to erase the debts before officially launching his re-election campaign.

"Let's say I'd like to see this matter taken care of as soon as possible, without making any references to any statewide plans I may have," he replied.

Brown has not publicly acknowledged he will run for re-election, although his intimates and supporters assume that he will.

Of the 13 Democrats who ran at various times for the presidential nomination last year, five still list debts with the Federal Election Commission.

Sen. Birch Bayh of Indiana is saddled with the biggest debt — $224,000, with $45,500 in cash assets, according to the latest Federal Election Commission records.

Brown's debt is the second biggest. Then come those of Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama, $88,000 in debts and $6,000 in cash; former Sen. Fred Harris of Oklahoma, $51,000 in debts and $400 in cash; and Sen. Frank Church of Idaho, $9,000 in debts and an equal $9,000 in cash.

In the past, when a losing campaign finished in debt, the candidate often would attempt to settle up with creditors for only a portion of what was owed. But this became more difficult under new federal election laws, which established a system whereby the government would match dollar-for-dollar 0rivately contributed funds, up to $250 per donation.

Now, if a debt is forgiven it is construed to be a contribution, unless it is the creditor's normal business practice to forgive hard-to-collect debts. And since there is a $1,000 limit on individual contributions to presidential campaigns, that means no more than $1,000 ordinarily can be forgiven.

The new law has provided an escape hatch for candidates who find it virtually impossible to raise funds after an election to pay off debts. They can negotiate settlements with creditors. But first they must have "undertaken all reasonable commercial defforts to satisfy the outstanding debt," the law reads.

Brown's dilemma is that if he starts raising funds for a re-election bid before first paying for his presidential campaign, a creditor could argue to the Federal Election Commission that the governor had not "undertaken all reasonable commercial efforts" to satisfy the old debts.

An Federal Election Commission spokesman said it is uncertain how the commission might rule in such a situation.

This is the "problem" Mrs. Pfaelzer, a Los Angeles attorney, said she had not yet decided what to do about.

As Brown's campaign treasurer, she currently is trying to negotiate some settlements of debts.

One of Brown's creditors, ironically, is the state of California.

According to his list of debts, the state government is owed $282 for gubernatorial office telephone calls attributable to political rather than state business.

The biggest debt is owed to the accounting firm of Laventhol and Horwath. Its Los Angeles office still has $75,804 coming — down $45,000 from the $120,804 originally owed.

The firm did the accounting, auditing and bookkeeping for the Brown campaign, using sophisticated computers. A partner, Jerry Gotlieb, insisted the company is not worried about the debt.

Atheist gets quick rebuff

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Atheist Madalyn Murray O'Hair got a quick turndown today from the governor's office in her attempt to ban all religious activities at Christmas time this year in the state capitol.

"We will take some kind of legal action against this thing," Mrs. O'Hair told spokesmen for Gov. Dolph Briscoe. "There will be difficulty at Christmas time."

Mrs. O'Hair, accompanied by her son, John Murray, appeared at the governor's office to ask two things:

—That the traditional nativity scene beneath the large Christmas Tree erected each year in the Capitol rotunda be done away with.

—That a monument on the Capitol grounds depicting the 10 Commandments be removed.

"We consider these things unconstitutional," said Mrs. O'Hair, who once was active in getting court orders against prayer in public schools.

"The Christmas Tree and the celebration in the rotunda has been a tradition for many years and will be there this year," said Dickie Travis.

President still striving for rapport with business

By FRANK CORMIER

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, who has been trying for about a year now to inspire "business confidence," must feel like he's been chasing a will-o'-the-wisp.

Some presidents, history would suggest, achieve Carter's elusive goal without really trying. Dwight D. Eisenhower presided over a series of economic slumps, slowdowns and recessions without ever endangering his warm ties with the business community.

Of course, Ike was the only president who ever named a Cabinet that came to be labeled "nine millionaires and a plumber." The plumber was a union official he named secretary of labor, but the plumber didn't last long.

Like Eisenhower, Carter began extending olive branches to the world of business and finance weeks before he was inaugurated.

The new president's first Cabinet-level nominee was Georgia banker Bert Lance, who quickly assumed the role of ambassador to Wall Street. Other early choices included Wall Street lawyer Cyrus R. Vance to be secretary of state and an industrialist, W. Michael Blumenthal, to be secretary of the Treasury. There wasn't a populist radical in the carload.

Also long before inauguration day, Carter publicly revoked his pre-election endorsement of standby wage and price controls, which were vigorously opposed by business.

So, after all this, Carter took the presidential oath — and the stock market went into a 10 month tailspin Soon it became a bromide to say he was unable to inspire business confidence.

Even his abandonment in late winter of a proposed $50-a-person income tax rebate, opposed as inflationary by many businessmen, did little or nothing for Carter's standing among those who face the regular discipline of "meeting a payroll." The stock market continued to slide.

Just last week, however, tentative evidence emerged that could point toward some improvement in the way business looks at Carter. At a news conference, the president had some kind words to say about Arthur F. Burns, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board and a Wall Street hero. At least partly on that account, the stock market swung into its most spirited rally of the year.

Widely overlooked, however, was another development of perhaps equel significance. The president invited 25 business executives to sit down with him last Thursday afternoon for what was billed as the first of a series of such meetings.

Afterwards, one businessman told reporters, "I saw very little of that so-called lack of confidence around that table." Another predicted that "as time moves on, the president will be comfortable with the business community."

Only one participant who talked to reporters was less than enthusiastic. He termed the session "a good start" but added, "I don't think we are reassured yet."

Perhaps at some future meeting carter could do worse than repeat what President Lyndon B. Johnson told his first group of visiting business leaders, invoking the name of Sam Rayburn, the late former House Speaker and fellow Texan. Said LBJ:

"I remember that Mr. Rayburn told me that in his 50 years here, he believed the most frightened man that he ran into was the average American businessman. ... And if he can't scare himself enough, he will go hire a lawyer or a public relations man to keep him scared.

Death penalty struck down

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The state's highest court Tuesday struck down New York's death penalty statute, removing the threat of execution against the two men on death row.

In a 4-3 ruling, the Court of Appeals held that the death penalty law is unconstitutional because it does not give juries enough discretion in deciding when to require capital punishment.

The law the court struck down mandated execution in virtually all cases involving the killing of a policeman or prison guard, murder during a prison escape, or murder by an inmate under life sentence.

LNG facility is one area's energy answer

By JOANNE OMANG
The Washington Post

COVE POINT, Md. — The thing rises out of the offshore fog like a disconnected piece of a bridge from nowhere to no place. Boatloads of fishermen troll around it, idly watching the workers swarming over the pipes and pilings and huge round columns visible from underneath.

The workers are putting the finishing touches on the half-mile-long offshore loading dock here of the nation's first major import terminal for liquefied natural gas, one of the most controversial fuels there is.

The Cove Point plant has been nine years in the planning, approval process, and construction and has cost the Columbia LNG (Liquified Natural Gas) Corp. $350 million. When it is finished in late December, it will have to sit idle for at least another month with nothing to sell because of construction delays at the supply source in Algeria.

That will cost consumers about $1 million for every month's delay because of interest on the investment, which will eventually be rolled into the price of the gas. But there is no worry about eventual completion of the Algeria facilities to supercool and liquefy the natural methane. An industry is being born with Cove Point's completion: it and the nine $170 million ships that will serve it are only the first of seven major U.S. LNG projects, and most of them involve Algeria. They could provide 22 percent of all U.S. gas needs by 1985, according to the respected Pipeline and Gas Journal.

The billions of dollars involved is one of the targets for environmentalists, who complain that the entire LNG industry is just another big-money, low-labor detour on the inevitable road to the use of renewable energy resources like the sun. They warn that LNG use increases U.S. reliance on foreign energy imports, and worry that the huge doublehulled vessels that carry it are floating bombs. A major spill, they say, could create an immense and devastating fireball.

Industry supporters say that LNG, properly handled, is less dangerous than many things already in everyday commerce, including oil. LNG, they say, is a major fuel available right now that is otherwise being wasted, and they add that it will be an important part of bridging the energy gap until transition from oil to renewable resources is achieved.

The Cove Point plant brought the entire controversy to 1,022 bucolic acres along the Chesapeake Bay, 60 miles southeast of Washington. It provided 900 jobs during peak construction — although only 90 persons will work here when the plant is in full swing. Construction involved 161 federal, state and county permits, including one for the second elevator ever to be installed in Calvert County (the first is in the county courthouse).

The state and local governments stand to gain about $5 million a year in taxes, according to Maryland state personal property supervisor Richard Doolittle, although the bill won't be presented until July, 1979. The Coast Guard has set up a new eight-member marine safety branch office nearby, primarily to watch over the Cove Point operation.

The main Coast Guard worry is that LNG will somehow spill out of the tankers of the pipelines, vaporize into a gas cloud 600 times the volume of LNG, and ignite. Environmentalists worry about the possible effects of such a fire on the Calvert Cliffs nuclear power plant, four miles up the coast.

Industry defenders note that LNG clouds have never exploded in experiments in open air conditions, but only burned. In 15 years of small scale international commerce and use by domestic natural gas companies as a form of storage, LNG has only spilled and burned badly once; in Cleveland in 1944, when two tanks ruptured. The resulting fire killed 128 persons. Technology has improved vastly since then, industry supporters say, and the Cove Point plant incorporates the very latest.

LNG is simply ordinary cooking gas chilled to 260 degrees below zero Fahrenheit so that it becomes a liquid. It looks like water. Tankers that carry it to Cove Point, like the pipelines and tanks onshore, are not refrigerated but only heavily insulated.

Although ships will initially arrive every 16 to 32 days as the Algeria plants gear up, LNG tankers carrying 750,000 barrels each will be coming through Chesapeake Bay every 3 1-2 days by the end of 1978, tying up stern to stern two at a time along the offshore unloading dock.

"We feel that on a scale of comparison with oil tankers, these are somewhat safer," said Lt. Cdr. Randolph DeKroney, spokesman for the Baltimore marine safety office of the Coast Guard. He said a detailed study and operation plan would still allow the tankers to move in normal traffic in the lower Chesapeake since water depth and maneuvering space are ample. LNG tankers entering narrow Boston Harbor channels undergo much stiffer safety precautions.

"Even if we did have a rupture, the area covered would generally not affect population areas," DeKroney said. The Coast Guard will enforce all shipboard safety regulations and monitor unloading, he added. Flexible booms will allow unloading even in winds up to 65 miles an hour.

Insulated pipes will then carry the LNG down 40 feet to the bottom of the bay and 1¼ miles through a tunnel to shore and four huge 375,000-barrel storage tanks. The three-chambered tunnel (one for each of two pipelines and one access chamber) was a $30 million concession to esthetic objections from the Sierra Club, an environmentalist group, to the original plan for an above-water pipeline trestle.

Rubble was placed over the tunnel area for protection, and sea growth on it has attracted fish, making the area newly popular with anglers, according to Columbia LNG Corp. spokesman Max Levy.

The tanks are each surrounded by dikes that could contain the entire contents in the event of a spill. From there the LNG goes to regasifiers where it is headed back into a vapor. At capacity, Cove Point will be pumping 1.1 billion cubic feet of gas a day into the Columbia mains at Loudoun County, Va., 1 percent of the total U.S. natural gas use.

The gas will cost $1.89 per thousand cubic feet to Columbia's 4 million customers, who make up about 10 percent of all U.S. gas users, a company brochure said. Although that rate is well above President Carter's proposed $1.75 limit for domestic interstate gas, it is considered competitive under a complex integrated pricing scheme that is still being debated.

It is probably the cheapest LNG will ever be anywhere, however, since it reflects a 20-year contract negotiated with Algeria in 1971, when the price there was 34 cents per thousand cubic feet. All contracts since then have been for $1.25 or more per thousand cubic feet. That means that the six other pending LNG projects will be selling — if they can — at $3.50 to $5.50 per thousand cubic feet, according to Frazier King, staff counsel concerned with Cove Point at the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Congress and the LNG industry are awaiting a General Accounting Office study of the safety of LNG due out by the end of the year. A draft copy, Max Levy of Columbia said, is "the most irresponsible thing I've ever seen published by the government." He said it "has a fixation with sabotage and doesn't really discuss regular operating safety ... it tells you how to blow up an LNG terminal, complete with a bibliography on how to make the bomb."

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Midlander Lee Campbell has been elected president of the American Hereford Association.

Campbell was elected at the recent annual membership meeting of the world's largest beef breed registry in Kansas City.

The Camphell family has been in the Hereford business some 50 years, and Lee Campbell started his own ranch 32 years ago. He presently operates ranches at Dublin and Kermit. The operation includes about 300 head of registered Hereford cows.

Campbell served as president of the Texas Hereford Association in 1968.

Senators get warning to heed use of funds

By WALTER PINCUS
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — In the wake of House embarassement over members' use of official expense accounts to buy liquor, flowers and spot television announcements, senators have been warned to limit use of their funds "strictly to official business" and "avoid any expenditures which could be characterized as 'personal promotion.'"

In an unusual "Dear Colleague" letter, Chairman Walter (Dee) Huddleston, D-Ky., of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on the Legislative Branch and the ranking minority member, Sen. Richard S. Schweiker, R-Pa., cautioned members "to monitor closely" their spending under the new expense provisions "to assure that there is no abuse ..."

Huddleston wrote that his subcommittee staff along with the Rules Committee and the Senate leadership are working on guidelines "as to what constitutes 'official business.'"

It was learned that one of those urging caution in use of the new allowance is Sen. Howard Cannon, D-Nev., chairman of the Senate Rules Committee. Cannon's committee has responsibility for approving the vouchers on all expense accounts.

According to one source, that committee has yet to find anything "unusual" but Cannon wants written guidelines to be certain "nothing improper" comes to his committee for reimbursement.

In a little-noticed action last summer the Senate voted to increase the expense allowances by 10 percent, and to liberalize the rules to permit the money to be used for "expenses as the senator determines are necessary."

The overall increase in the Senate expense allowances could come to $500,000 for a full year, depending on how many members use the entire amount available to them. Last year, according to testimony before a Senate committee, 21 members used up their full allowance.

Since each senator's allowance varies depending on his own state's population and its distance from Washington, the yearly amount available for a member in the newly created open expense account ranges from $3,000 for Senators from Delaware to $13,000 for senators from Hawaii, according to figures supplied the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The new open allowance was developed to replace unofficial office accounts which many senators had maintained with funds contributed from individuals and organizations. Those accounts were effectively eliminated by ethics reform rules adopted by the Senate earlier this year.

Now senators may maintain surplus campaign fund accounts, but they must be used for political expenditures — not items considered official expenses.

In establishing the new fund, six senators petitioned Huddleston's subcommittee requesting an acount which would give members "the right ... to determine their necessary business expenses ..."

Initially, according to the Senate Appropriations Committee report, the money could be used for expenses in running a senator's Washington office, including transportation around the city.

A member was prohibited, according to a recent letter from the Senate Disbursing Office, from using the allowance for "entertainment or meals in Washington.

The legislation that established the new open allowance required that each voucher from that account be published in a separate sectin of the printed report of the Secretary of the Senate.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Husband should avoid coffee

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband keeps getting acid indigestion after dinner. I'm positive it is the two cups of coffee he insists on having—he says a meal isn't complete without it. Wouldn't it be better for him if he could try to learn to drink decaffeinated coffee? I do, and after a while, I hardly noticed the difference in taste.—Margaret J.

Dear Margaret: Drinking decaffeinated coffee might be better for your husband, but it would not necessarily solve the indigestion problem. Decaffeinated coffee, like regular coffee, stimulates the production of acid in the stomach, although not to the same extent. People like your husband are best off when they go easy on decaffeinated as well as regular coffee.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is it true that you are more likely to get cancer when you are older if you are an awful lot heavier than you ought to be?—Rosalie W.

Dear Rosalie: The one kind of cancer with a definite link to obesity is cancer of the endometrium, the lining of the uterus. This may be due to excessive production of a hormone called estrone, brought about by taking in too many calories. Statistics indicate that women who are greatly overweight have a two to four times greater risk of endometrial cancer than women of normal weight.

This is one of many reasons, certainly, why you should avoid getting overweight. If, indeed, you already have a weight problem, check with your doctor about solving it.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Our boy had a patch of rash in the middle of his stomach, and it took us the longest time to figure out what must be doing it. We think it probably was the buckle on the belt he's been wearing lately. Some kind of allergy perhaps? Or is it just a weird fluke? It would be helpful to know if it really could have been caused by an allergy, because then he could guard against that.—Blanch D.

Dear Blanche: The buckle probably contained nickel, which frequently does cause an allergic reaction. Dr. Carolyn Coker Huntly, an expert on children's allergies at the Bowman-Gray School of Medicine in Winston-Salem, N.C., notes that decorative studs in blue jeans and pajama snaps and some kinds of jewelry can cause the same problem.

Of course, there are lots and lots of other allergens. Some of the most common sources of trouble in children are poison ivy, deodorant soaps, dyes in clothing and toys, plastics, paints, varnishes, household cleansers, furniture polish and rubber, leather or chemicals used in shoes. The location and pattern of the rash—as you discovered—is usually a good clue.

Handicapped man fends for many

By JOSEPH D. WHITAKER
The Washington Post

The odds were against James R. Jeffreys of Lincoln Park, N.J., 45 years ago when he was born with a rare bone disease. Doctors predicted that he would not live more than a year. They said he would eventually be totally disabled and would never be able to lead a productive life.

However, Jeffreys, a victim of osteogenesis imperfecta (some times called "brittle bone disease"), did not succumb.

He rolled his wheelchair two miles a day to and from high school to get an education when education for the handicapped was considered a waste. By the age of 21, Jeffreys — a promising artisan since childhood — owned his own shop and was a successful cabinetmaker.

For three years, Jeffreys — whose disease is marked by repeated fractures of the victim's brittle bones — was a prize-winning driver in regional drag races. Using a car equipped with hand-held controls, Jeffreys — who stands only 4-foot-3 and has had 100 factures in his lifetime — won 14 racing awards.

Jeffreys recently received a national award for accomplishments of another sort. He was named "Outstanding O. I. Adult of the Year" by the American Brittle Bone Society for overcoming his own disabilities and adopting seven children.

The governor of New Jersey, Brendan Byrne, proclaimed it "James R. Jeffreys Day" stating in his decree that, "The life and career of James R. Jeffreys serves as an inspiration and a source of strength to all persons afflicted with physical handicaps."

Of the children adopted since 1970 by Jeffreys and his wife, Harriet, 50, one is blind; one was crippled by polio; one has a spinal disorder; one was born with no legs and one suffers with diabetes. Four of the children are bi-racial and two are Korean.

"We decided to adopt some children after we found out that the chances of our natural children inheriting O. I. was much greater than we had thought," said Jeffreys, who is the natural father of a daughter, Alleen, 13, and a son, Mark, 5, a victim of O. I.

"Before we were married, doctors told us the chances of our kids having O. I. was 800 to 1," he said. "After we were married and had two children, the doctors told us that the new research showed that there was a 50-50 chance that additional children born to us would have the disease."

In 1970, the Jeffreys adopted their first child, Kimberly, 11, from the Holt Adoption Agency in Eugene, Ore., which specializes in Korean and Vietnamese orphans. Kimberly, who was 3 at the time of the adoption, was born in Korea.

A year later, the Jeffreys — who had planned to have 12 children before they found that the natural offspring might be born with brittle bone disease — adopted a second child. His name was Jimmy. He was born without legs.

"We had applied for another normal child, but the agency asked if we would be interested in taking a handicapped child born without any legs," Jeffreys said during a recent interview at his home in a suburb of Newark.

"I said, 'Sure, why not,' " Jeffreys said. "I figured I could help him adjust far better than a normal person could. I figured all we had to do is get him artificial legs and things would work out."

Eventually, things did work out for Jimmy. The A.I. DuPont Institute in Wilmington, Del., agreed to pay for the child's artificial legs at a cost of about $2,000. The leg must be refitted periodically and replaced every 18 months to two years, Jeffreys said.

"When Jimmy first came to live with us, he had never walked on artificial legs before," Jeffreys said. 'I can remember him lying on the kitchen floor with his legs, screaming, I can't do it; I can't walk.' But I would be screaming back to him, 'You can do it, Jimmy. Come on and try.' "

Jeffreys said Jimmy eventually learned to use his artificial legs, aided by crutches, and now straps them on each morning before he leaves for school. In the afternoons, Jimmy removes the legs as soon as he returns home and "walks" around the house on his hands.

In the summer of 1972, the Jeffreys became the foster parents of Richard, a blind boy of 12. Richard, now 17, is a student at the Perkins School for the Blind, where he is learning skills that will prepare him to earn a living.

Later that year, the Jeffreys adopted Clark, now 15 and Korean, who was stricken with polio as a young child. The disease destroyed major muscles in his left leg, leaving him without complete control over the limb.

"When Clark first came to live with us, he couldn't walk the length of the driveway without stopping to rest," Jeffreys said. "Now he thinks nothing of walking three miles.

"We just kept after him: We did exercises and lifted weights until his leg was completely rebuilt," said Jeffreys.

Alice, who is bi-racial, was only 12 days old in 1974 when she was adopted by the Jeffreys. She now enjoys special status as the "baby" of the Jeffreys' household.

"We heard about (Alice) through an organization in New Jersey called "Concerned Parents for Children," Jeffreys said. "They said they had a little black girl that was in the hospital and they needed a home for her. We decided to give her a home."

Peter, also bi-racial, but of no blood relation to Alice, was adopted in December 1974. He was born with a spinal defect called spina bifida, which has caused the deadening of nerves which activate his bladder. Peter has had surgery and can now enjoy normal activities, Mrs. Jeffreys said.

Two months ago, the Jeffreys added John, 11, to their adopted family. John, a diabetic who must take daily injections of insulin, inherited the disease from his father, according to Jeffreys.

The Jeffreys' natural daughter, Aleen, is a freshman and top student at the Parsippany Christian School, a church-operated school attended by all of the Jeffreys' children.

Mark is an honor student at the prestigious Stony Brook School, a private high school on Long Island, N.Y. He has scholarships that amount to about two-thirds of his annual $4,000 tuition, Jeffreys said.

At school, Mark, who walks with a cane, is active in such non-contact sports as swimming, diving and pingpong. In an effort to help his limbs grow straight, doctors have surgically inserted steel rods inside the bones of his legs.

The rodding procedures did not exist during the developmental years of Jeffreys, whose limbs have grown more crooked with each of his 100 bone fractures.

Birth rate's growth studied

WASHINGTON (AP) — The birth rate in America increased during the first eight months of this year compared with the rate a year ago, but scientists say the change does not necessarily indicate a trend.

Robert Heuser of the National Center for Health Statistics said there was an average of 15.3 births per 1,000 population for the first eight months of 1977 compared with 14.5 per 1,000 for the same time period in 1976.

But Heuser said the reason for the change is unknown. And, other statisticians cautioned against drawing sweeping conclusions.

Meanwhile, the latest Vital Statistics Report published by the center showed there were 3 percent more marriages during the first seven months of the year than during the same period a year ago, while divorces increased only 1 percent.

Big Jim still links CIA with assassination

Jim Garrison

By PATRICK DILLON
Copley News Service

Time was when Jim Garrison was just about a hero.

His name swept across college campuses during the late 1960s.

Big Jim — the name brought the same rush to young people as did the names Nader and McCarthy.

Like them, Garrison appealed to the iconoclasts.

He was a daredevil district attorney from New Orleans armed with a conspiracy theory that made him hero to some — heretic to others.

Certain segments of the Central Intelligence Agency were responsible for the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, Garrison said.

He would prove it. He would rattle governmental cages. He would shake the trees. The truth would fall upon the world.

He would avenge the death of a president.

Garrison is no longer district attorney of Orleans Parish. He was defeated in 1973, when he ran for reelection for a fourth term.

The same year, he was charged with accepting bribes to protect illegal gambling in New Orleans. He was acquitted.

Garrison believes his troubles may have been stirred by a governmental conspiracy to discredit him.

"I was the guy who took on the CIA," he recalled during an interview. "I took it for granted I wasn't going to live. You learn not to think about it and that's what I did. It reminded me of my war years as a fighter pilot in Europe."

The intelligence network, Garrison said, has various ways of dealing with targets.

"They could have taken it upon themselves to discredit me," he offered. "As it turned out, it night have been the best thing to ever happen to me."

Now he practices law as a private attorney in New Orleans, spends more time at home with his wife of less than a year.

He was married 14 years to his first wife before their divorce, which also came, ironically, in 1973.

Garrison also has turned to writing as a way to verbalize his belief that intelligence operations have shaped much of the tragedy that is part of U.S. history during the last two decades.

His latest work is a fictional espionage novel, "The Star Spangled Contract."

His first book, "Heritage of Stone," was published in 1970.

"It still holds as the truthful statement of what happened to Kennedy," he said. "Everything else, including the Warren Commission report, is pure fraud."

It is Garrison's contention that the government produced "false sponsors" of the assassination of Kennedy to cover up the killing.

"These have been the neon arrows to catch the proper attention," Garrison says.

"The first sponsor was Lee Harvey Oswald, a patsy of the perfect sort. But, he shot no one that day."

Garrison ticked off a litany of reasons — all feasible — all previously scrutinized by congressional committees and rejected.

After 13 years and half-a-dozen probes, the conclusion comes up the same — Oswald acted alone in shooting Kennedy.

U.S. treats students easily, Africans say

By LAWRENCE FEINBERG
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — "I don't know why you Americans treat your pupils the way you do," said Ruth Wikedzi, the principal of a high school in Tanzania. "Why do you think they are such delicate things? After lunch, they don't clean up after they eat. At night they don't seem to have much homework ... Sometimes you let them graduate whether they do the work or not or whether they are capable or not. It's not like that in my country."

For the past two months, Wikedzi, along with nine other educators from African countries, has been visiting schools across the United States.

In interviews at the end of their trip, most of the visitors were impressed with the large school buildings they went through, the small-sized classes and the books and scientific equipment that were far more plentiful than what they have at home.

But not everything they say and heard impressed them. Most said there are things about schools in their own countires that they prefer to what schools are doing in the United States.

For example, in all 10 African countries represented, ranging from Cameroon to South Africa and Zaire, high school students have to pass national examinations to get their diplomas, in contrast to the system in American schools where graduation depends on teachers' grades.

"How do you know whether the A that a student gets from one school isn't worth the same as the C that a student gets from another school?" said Lydia Lantum, a ministry of education official in Cameroon.

"There ought to be some system so you can know which students are achieving and which ones aren't. If they all take one examination then you know what it means," she said.

"In my country," she added, "we publish the results and tell what percentage pass in different schools ... If the standards drop, people tend to move their children to other schools."

"If all people (take) the same examination, then they can be accepted everywhere," said Grace Khuzwayo, a vice principal of Menzi High School in Durban, South Africa.

Nursing homes give 'best buy' in care

By BOB CORBETT
Copley News Service

America's nursing homes aren't perfect, but "we're trying," according to the president of the American Health Care Association.

In fact, in the long run, "nursing home care may be America's best buy today," Theodore Carcich Jr. said in an interview.

Despite the criticism nursing homes have received in recent years, Carcich said most of them are providing excellent care, not only for the elderly, but for the young as well.

"We've nothing to be ashamed of," he said.

He admitted that there are some nursing homes that are doing a bad job of care. "We don't condone such operations," he said. "The states should act to get them out of business."

In fact, Carcich said, the AHCA has established its own "peer review" program, which is now operating in 36 states, helping state regulatory bodies to double-check suspect operations.

By and large, however, nursing homes throughout the country are doing an excellent job, and at reasonable cost.

He noted, for example, that California hospitals are now charging about $175 a day. By contrast, he said, the state's nursing homes are getting about $23 a day.

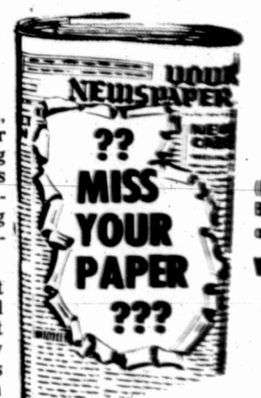

More and more, because of this price differential, he said, nursing homes are getting younger and younger patients, like 16-year-olds with broken legs.

Some of the nursing home problems, he said, are caused by government regulations. For example, one federal regulation requires a person to go to a hospital for three days before he can become eligible for Medicare benefits at a nursing home.

In California, that amounts to about $450 in unnecessary costs, Carcich said. Considering the number of Medicare patients in nursing homes, that would amount to about $16 million a year.

Nonetheless, he said, there is much room for improvement in nursing home care. What really is needed is more involvement in nursing care and more volunteerism.

"The situation won't improve," he said, "until the public realizes that it costs to give quality care." Nursing homes shouldn't be cut off from the mainstream of community affairs.

Exercise needed to lose weight

By ROBERT WALLACE, Ed.D.
Copley News Service

Dear Doctor: I am overweight but plan to lose weight through exercise. Every morning I am going to jog a mile and every evening I am going to play tennis for an hour. I want to lose 10 pounds and I wonder how long it will take to lose these very unwanted pounds. — Fatty, Michigan City, Ind.

Dear Fatty: Exercise helps in losing weight but does it very slowly. The mile you jog will use up about 100 calories, playing tennis for an hour perhaps only 350 calories.

There are 3,500 calories in a pound of body fat, and an average piece of chocolate cake contains about 400 calories. To lose weight you should continue your exercise but also you must eat three well-balanced, low-calorie meals per day.

Contact your physician and he will provide you with the proper diet.

Dear Doctor: Recently my family went out for dinner and we were not served water before we ate. I asked the waitress why and she said she would bring water if we asked for it, but that the restaurant was helping America save water and energy.

It sounds stupid to me because a glass of water is not really that much. Aren't there better ways of conserving water and energy? — Liz, San Francisco

Dear Liz: There are many ways of conserving water and energy and this is one way. Why waste the water if no one is going to drink it? One glass of water times many is a lot.

Each day, about 70 million restaurant meals are served in America. By not automatically serving a glass of water for each meal, more than seven million gallons of water could be saved each day. That is over 2.5 billion gallons saved each year.

So that glass of water that is wasted is, indeed, important.

Dear Doctor: Last week was mother's birthday and a local store advertised what mother wanted; a vacuum cleaner. The price was attractive and daddy gave me money to buy it.

When I went to the store, the salesman talked down the advertised cleaner and tried to sell me a more deluxe model. When I asked to see the one on sale he wouldn't even let me see it, saying it wasn't worth buying.

I didn't buy anything and I told daddy what happened. He got mad and went to the store and had an argument with the salesman, but he would not let daddy see the advertised model. Can we demand to see the vacuum cleaner we wanted to buy? — Ora, West Covina, Calif.

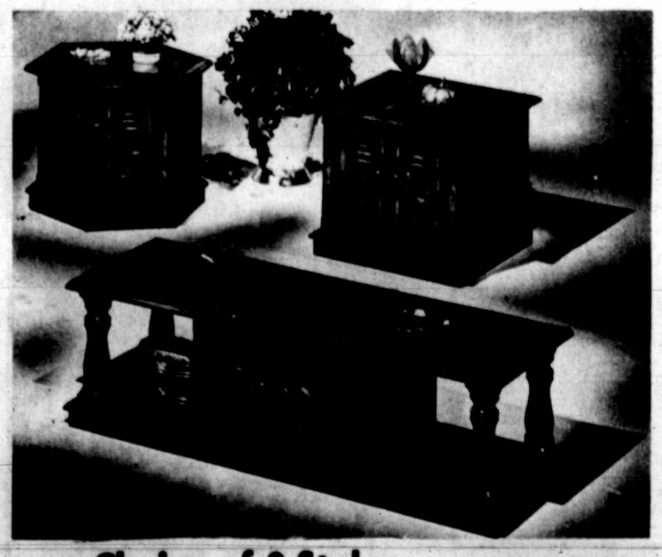

Dear Ora: You were a victim of what is known as the "bait-switch" method of selling. The fact is, this method is not legal in 48 states. Only Alabama and Tennessee have not legislated rules regarding this.

Since you are from California, your Business and Professions Code bans anyone from advertising any product if the ad is intended to entice a buyer into a sale different from that originally represented.

Contact your local Better Business Bureau and share your experience with them.

Scribe picks Baylor, SMU, Air Force in big upsets

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

NEW YORK (AP) — Baylor over Texas ...Air Force over Notre Dame ...Southern Methodist over Arkansas ...Colorado State over Arizona State ...San Diego State over Florida State ...Texas Christian over Texas A&M ...South Carolina over Clemson ...Houston over Texas Tech ...Duke over North Carolina ...and Washington State over Washington.

Had enough upsets for one week?

Well, this corner has decided that all those stunners will actually come about this weekend as well-deserved punishment for the bowl committees, which have been playing a little hanky-panky in advance of Saturday's official invitation date.

More about that later. First, let's turn to the Ohio State-Michigan shootout. The only upset here would be if any other team won the Big Ten title.

These bitter rivals have wound up the regular season against each other every year since 1935 and their annual showdown has decided the Big Ten crown in nine of the past 10 years.

"It's pretty close to the elbow," says Ohio State's Woody Hayes. "Both teams usually have good defenses. This year is no exception. It could be a very tight game, whether or not it's low-scoring."

Last year turned into a rare rout, Michigan romping 22-0 ...embarrassing the Buckeyes in Columbus, no less. Someone asked Woody the other day whether the memory has his adrenalin flowing.

"I believe it is," he said softly. "I believe it is."

Nevertheless ...Michigan 21, Ohio State 17.

Last week's record was 53 right, 16 wrong and two ties for a .768 percentage, including the Upset Special, Washington over Southern California, and the exact score of Ohio State's 35-7 triumph over Indiana. For the season, it's 507-201-15 — .716.

Now for the upsets:

Baylor at Texas: The Cotton Bowl is counting on getting Notre Dame to face No. 1-ranked Texas, but what happens if the Longhorns get bumped off? Wait and see ...Baylor 20-16.

Air Force at Notre Dame: Notre Dame wanted the Cotton and Sugar Bowls to wait until Nov. 26. They wouldn't. The Sugar told Notre Dame it had to have an answer by Tuesday. Notre Dame said no thanks. So we say ...Air Force 27-24.

Southern Methodist at Arkansas: Arkansas wanted the Orange Bowl. The Orange Bowl wanted Penn State. The Fiesta Bowl jumped at Arkansas. Southern Methodist jumps ON Arkansas ...SMU 26-20.

Arizona State at Colorado State: After Arizona State beat Brigham Young last week, the Fiesta Bowl office was besieged Monday by ticket-seeking Sun Devil fans who snapped up the 2,500 worst seats in the house. This week they'll get a good view of ...Colorado State 28-20.

Florida State at San Diego State: The Gator Bowl overlooked Florida State because they were afraid the Seminoles would lose to Florida on Dec. 3. Did anyone realize that FSU's 8-1 record is the same as ...San Diego State 34-28.

Texas A&M at Texas Christian: The Texas-Texas A&M loser is going to the Bluebonnet Bowl. That loser might also be this loser ...Texas Christian 22-17.

Clemson at South Carolina: If you haven't taken these picks seriously until now, consider the fact that Clemson is coming off two rugged, emotional games — a tie with North Carolina and a loss to Notre Dame. And this is the Gator Bowlbound Tigers' traditional windup ...South Carolina 19-12.

Texas Tech at Houston: First, Tech was going to the Hall of Fame Classic. Now, it's the Tangerine Bowl. Houston, last year's Cotton Bowl champ, will be staying home for the holidays but this could help make it a Merry Christmas ...Houston 30-24.

North Carolina at Duke: Another traditional wind-up. Carolina hasn't lost in its last six games but Duke, led by quarterback Mike Dunn, can put plenty of points on the scoreboard and leave opponents wondering who-Dunn-it ...Duke 33-24.

Washington State at Washington: If Washington beats Washington State and Southern Cal beats UCLA and Cal beats Stanford, Washington winds up in the Rose Bowl. Let's dispel that notion right away ...Washington State 35-31.

Tennessee at Kentucky: With a 3-6 record, this could easily — very easily, in fact — be the first Tennessee team ever to lose seven games in one season. Oh, well, it's about time the Majors kids found out how the holidays were really meant to be spent ...Kentucky 27-13.

Colgate at Delaware: Since Colgate reportedly has a shot at the Independence Bowl, this game probably should be grouped with all those other upsets. Unfortunately, we don't think this is going to be an upset ...Colgate 35-24.

Illinois at Northwestern: It would be a shame for John Pont to end his Northwestern coaching career with an 0-11 record ...Northwestern 28-24.

Coached by Joe Fusco, the Wilmington, Pa., school collected all seven first-place votes for 70 points. Westminster, with six previous unbeaten records, goes to the NAIA playoffs.

Millersville College, 8-1, was runnerup with 56 points, two more than third-place Widener, 8-1.

Cowboys' Harris looks to Steelers

BY TED BATTLES
R-T Sports Editor

DALLAS — Remember back in the early days of pro football, not the swaddling years, but those when folks were just beginning to become aware that there was football beyond college and it could be entertaining.

That, of course, preceded TV, the jet propellant that skyrocketed the game's popularity into the upper stratosphere.

In those days a Harlan Hill from Troy State with the Chicago Bears or a Tuffy Leemans from George Washington U. with the New York Giants always brought a chuckle, despite their obvious gifts.

"You mean they play football at those places? Ha, Ha."

BUT THOSE days have gone forever. Scouting methods are so complex, so thorough, so complete that nobody gets by the great grasping hand of the NFL even if he played at Amherst, North Dakota State or Occidental.

If there is still a place that might produce a deep chuckle, it's where Cliff Harris, the Dallas Cowboys' safety went to college.

Most people can't even pronounce it. And if they could pronounce, chances are they'd start out spelling it

W-H-A... How else would you spell Washitah even though it looks like Ouachita.

Only thing is no one laughs when Harris or his college come up. Moan a little, maybe, no it's no laughing matter.

CLIFF'S PHILOSOPHY is that if "you blast a receiver and turn his helmet around, then he'll be looking for you."

That's something teammates who have been caught between a Harris victim and a Harris assist will mutter a bruised "Amen" to.

After Monday's 24-17 loss to St. Louis, Cliff, reacting like the pro he is, was chagrined at the muffed opportunities, but wasn't wasting any tears over it.

Slipping a T-shirt over his thinning locks, he said, "We've got a tough one coming up (at Pittsburgh Sunday) and we'll see what we are made of. The philosophy around here is that you don't think about where you are, even if it is 8-1, but where you need to be."

BUT THE season's first loss isn't something you dismiss lightly, not when you appear to have it won only to let it get away.

"We had the momentum. There was Randy's (Hughes) interception, getting down close and gettinq only three points and then we just stunk defensively in the second half."

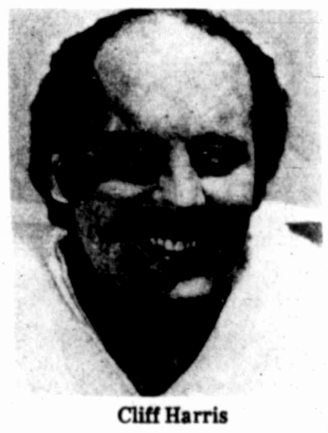

Harris went on, "I'm not a ref, but the face guarding call against Bennie Barnes on Terry Metcalf...if I'd been watching on TV, I wouldn't have called it," he said refering to the play that kept alive the St. Louis' first touchdown drive in the third quarter, that 95-yard trek.

"But that wasn't what beat us. We just didn't play well. We didn't maintain our intensity and momentum.

"STILL, YOU can't take anything away from Hart or the Cardinals. Hart is a great quarterback and St. Louis is a great offensive team. I guess they had more at stake and played with greater intensity," Harris said.

He also revealed that, "In the second half we changed our defense to adjust to some of the things they were doing."

Asked why the change, since the Cowboys had shut down the Cardinals in the first half, Harris explained, "We kept them off balance in the first half. We knew they'd make adjustments and burn us in the defense we'd been using if we stayed in it. That's the strength of our defense, the ability to adjust. It worked in every other game, but this one. Hart burned us anyway."

Cliff Harris

HARRIS WENT on, "Every defense has its strengths and weaknesses and we tried to change up with double coverage while disguising what we were doing. But you've got to hand it to Hart, he hit the weak spot. On the touchdown pass to Mel Gray, we tried to make him think I was over there. I wasn't and he picked us clean."

On his frequent verbal exchanges with Gray, Cliff said there wasn't anything more than usual. "I'll say something and he'll say something. It

Churchill won't be in playoffs

By The Associated Press

Seven teams, including defending state Class 4A champion San Antonio Churchill, were toppled in the final week of voting in The Associated Press Schoolboy Football Poll.

Churchill, ranked No. 8 last week, will sit home during the playoffs this year after a 6-0 loss to San Antonio Lee, which edged into a 10th-place tie with another newcomer, LaPorte, in the final tabulation.

Longview, ranked fifth last week, also can pack away the footbal gear after a season-ending 28-20 loss to Lufkin.

All the top-ranked teams, Port Neches-Groves in 4A, Gregory-Portland in 3A, Bellville in 2A, Seagraves in A and Wheeler in B, survived the final week of the season and retained their No. 1 ranks.

Temple and Odessa Permian completed unbeaten seasons and finished Nos. 2 and 3 behind Port Neches-Groves.

In a battle of state-ranked 3A teams, Humble, ranked No. 2 last week, was beaten by Huntsville, which moved up one space to fifth in this week's poll following its 31-14 victory. Ninth ranked Mount Pleasant dropped from the 3A list after a loss to Daingerfield.

Humble hung on in the final poll in the 10th spot but will stay home with its 10-1 record.

The other three losses came in Class A where No.2 Shelbyville, No. 3 Celina and No. 7 Charlotte all were losers. Shelbyvile dipped to ninth this week while Celina and Charlotte fell from the top 10.

Their replacements are No. 9 Farmersville, 10-0, which just completed the first unbeaten season in the school's history, and No. 10 Franklin.

All ranked B teams held their positions but Evadale, 9-0-1, wedged into a 10th place tie with Axtell.

Restless Ansley grabs SWC honor

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A restless Sam Ansley, facing his first start as a freshman at Texas, apparently was looking for comfort when he sought out teammates Earl Campbell and Johnny "Ham" Jones the night before the Texas Christian game.

"We told him, 'Hey, it'll be OK.' And it was," said Jones.

After a sleepless night, Ansley, a frail teen-ager from Cypress-Fairbanks, had a wideawake performance.

Filling in for the injured Randy McEachern, who had been playing because of injuries to two other Texas quarterbacks, fourth-teamer Ansley guided Texas to a 44-14 victory over Texas Christian last Saturday.

The victory was Texas' ninth without a loss this season and kept the Longhorns atop the college football polls.

Ansley was so impressive that The Associated Press chose him as the offensive player of the week in the Southwest Conference.

Texas was flagged for too much time on Ansley's first play from scrimmage, and he lost six yards on second down.

He struck on the seventh play of the game, however, hitting Johnny "Lam" Jones with a 56-yard touchdown heave for a 7-0 lead, and Texas never trailed.

"I was a little nervous," said Ansley. "I think the pass to Johnny Lam broke the ice a little bit."

"Little nervous?" Coach Fred Akers said, smiling. "If you touched him, he jumped."

Collecting his nerves, Ansley guided Texas to five touchdowns, including his own two-yard run and another scoring toss to Lam Jones for 10 yards.

He finished with 181 yards total offense, 48 running and 133 passing.

In addition, Lam dropped a 32-yard strike in the end zone, Alfred Jackson muffed an apparent 34-yard touchdown throw and a clipping penalty rubbed out Ansley's 29-yard broken field scamper into the end zone.

The Texas firepower offset Anley's two pass intereeptions and two fumbles, which Akers attributed to Ansley's "not taking care of the ball."

He said, however, he was proud of his rookie quarterback.

"He's a good runner and throws the ball well," said Akers, "He's exciting. He's got some quickness and a knack for making you miss him."

That's a good knack to have when you weigh 162 pounds.

Sam Ansley (7), freshman University of Texas quarterback, threw two touchdown passes and ran for a third last week to pace the No. 1-ranked Longhorns past TCU, 44-14. For his performance, he was named SWC offensive player of the week. He also had a 34-yard TD run called back on a clipping penalty. (AP Laserphoto).

Schoolboy football playoffs beginning

Well folks, the regular high school football season ended last weekend with the Robert E. Lee Rebels downing the Midland Bulldogs, 10-3, in Memorial Stadium to wrap up a very frustrating season for both Tall City elevens.

It's time to look at this week's action which features the schoolboy state playoffs with some great games on tap.

By the way, last week this corner hit 44 of 50 games on the Class AAAA front and did manage to get all four of the District 5-4A correctly.

On the year, the record is 429 correct and 91 incorrect for a percentage of .803. The misses were Eastwood-Bel Air; Arlington Sam Houston-Arlington; Longview-Lufkin and the San Antonio Churchill-SA Lee game which Lee won, 6-0, thus eliminating the defending state champions.

It doesn't get any easier with 16 gamea in Class AAAA circles as 32 teams shoot for a possible state championship.

ODESSA PERMIAN takes a perfect 10-0 record into its bi-district playoff game with the Denton Broncos in P.E. Shotwell Stadium in Abilene. Mojo has not looked too sharp offensively in the past three or four games, but the defense is still rugged and very quick. Denton has rolled up some impressive wins including a 34-7 win over John Reddell's Trinity Euless team during District 6-4A play. The Broncs shipped Wichita Falls High, 48-18 and Rider to the tune of 37-0. Going with Permian's defense to be the difference with a 20-14 victory in Abilene Saturday.

LUBBOCK MONTEREY with a 9-0-1 record, has come on strongly and has added a sophomore whiz — tailback Gary Smith to the attack. Smith played on the undefeated Monterey JVs and in his first varsity start last week against Hereford, scored three touchdowns and rushed for more than 100 yards. His performance qives the Plainsmen more offense to go with quarterback Ron Reeves, a gifted 210-pound senior who has tallied 111 points in 10 games.

Going with Monterey to down Amarillo Tascosa, 20-16 in Dick Bivins Stadium in Amarillo Friday night.

IN OTHER GAMES, El Paso Bel Air and Andress, a pair of surprise teams in the Border City clash in the Sun Bowl Friday night. Andress tied Coronado and El Paso Burges for the District 1-4A crown and then won the coin toss to represent the league in the playoffs. Andress has a 4-6 mark while Bel Air is 5-5 with a 10-point loss to Odessa Ector. Andress to post a 20-17 victory; Arlington Lamar will down Arlington Heights, 27-20; Highland Park to win 11th in a row over Carrollton-Turner, say by 27-17; Dallas Bryan Adams 28, Dallas Roosevelt 21; Lufkin, which knocked off powerful Longview last week, 28-20, to dispose of Plano 26-22; Temple has another strong outfit and would love to gain the finals for the second straight year. Rod Carew, American League's MVP

Rod Carew grabs MVP award in AL

NEW YORK (AP) — Sweet-swinging Rod Carew of the Minnesota Twins, whose .388 batting average was the best in the major leagues in 20 years, today was named the American League's Most Valuable Player for the 1977 season.

The 32-year-old Carew, winner of his sixth AL batting championship and his fifth in six years, received 12 first place votes and a total of 273 points in balloting by a 28-man committee of the Baseball Writers Association of America.

Ten other players collected first-place votes in the most diversified voting in the 47-year history of the award. First place was worth 14 points, second place 9 points, third place 8, etc.

Outfielder Al Cowens of the Kansas City Royals was named No. 1 on four ballots and finished a distant second with 217 points. Another outfielder, Ken Singleton of the Baltimore Orioles, garnered three first-place votes and was third with 200 points.

Designated hitter Jim Rice of the Boston Red Sox finished fourth and was followed by four members of the world champion New York Yankees — third baseman Graig Nettles, relief ace and Cy Young Award winner Sparky Lyle, catcher Thurman Munson, last year's MVP, and outfielder Reggie Jackson. Nettles received two first-place votes, while Rice, Lyle, Munson and Jackson had one apiece, along with catcher Carlton Fisk of Boston, and outfielders Larry Hisle of Minnesota and Carl Yastrzemski of the Red Sox.

Never in the history of the award had so many players received first-place votes.

"I'm thrilled, it's just great," the usually low-key Carew said by telephone from his Minnesota home, where his wife, Marilynn, is expecting their third child Friday. "I'm just happy to have gotten it.

"I didn't have myself geared to winning it, because so many other players had such good years and I didn't want to be too disappointed if I lost," added the 32-year-old first baseman.

Although Carew's average was the highest in the majors since Boston's Ted Williams batted .388 in 1957 and he led the big leagues with 239 hits and 128 runs scored, one voter — Doug Bradford of the Detroit News — ignored him in the MVP balloting.

Carew is the 16th player from a non-pennant winning team to capture the league's MVP Award. The Twins finished fourth in the AL West, 17½ games behind champion Kansas City.

The left-handed hitting Carew is the third Minnesota player to win the league's most prestigious award. Shortstop Zoilo Versalles was the first, in 1965, and slugger Harmon Killebrew won it in 1969.

Carew's six batting titles put him in a tie with Williams for fifth place on the all-time list, behind Ty Cobb (12), Honus Wagner (8), Rogers Hornsby (7) and Stan Musial (7).

"He is just amazing," said Minnesota Manager Gene Mauch. "He has a long swing, yet hits the ball all the time. His hand-eye coordination is simply fantastic.

"I believe he would hit .400 if he played in the National League with all its artificial turfs. Heck, he may even hit .400 in this league."

Odessa Permian faces high-scoring opponent

By BOB DILLON

Odessa Permian's Panthers will be facing a high-scoring outfit in the Denton Broncos Saturday when they tangle in a Class AAAA bi-district football playoff game in P.E. Shotwell Stadium in Abilene.

Denton is no newcomer with Mojo in the schoolboy playoffs, having met Permian in 1972 in the very same stadium. The Black Cats won that confrontation, 24-14 and went on to take the state crown that year.

The Broncos, coached by former Abilene High mentor, Bill Shipman, holds wins over Haltom City, Irving, Hirschi, Trinity Euless, Wichita Falls, L.D. Bell, Rider and Lewisville while the 8-1-1 6-4A kings, lost to powerful Sherman, 32-21 and were tied by Tyler Lee, 6-6.

L.D. Bell gave Denton it's toughest game in district play in a 7-3 decision. Last weekend, Denton pounded Lewisville, 55-25 in the finale and holds a 38-7 victory over Irving.

SHIPMAN USES the wing-T, the same as Permian, but when the two line up on Saturday afternoon, the Broncos will have a big weight advantage. This is nothing new to Mojo which is not large, but very quick.

In last week's games in District 5-4A finales, Robert E. Lee's Rebels beat cross-town rival, Midland High, 10-8 while Permian won a game of field goals against Odessa High with a tough 6-3 win before more than 19,000 fans in W.T. Barrett Stadium.

Abilene Cooper, which finished strongly, beat Abilene, 28-15 and San Angelo Central struggled to a 22-7 victory over hapless Big Spring.

Permian gave up only 57 points in 10 games while scoring 278 with its quick-reacting defense the key to success.

San Angelo Central's Carl Brainard won the season scoring title with 83 points on the year, followed by Cooper's sophomore sensation, Terry Orr, who finished with 11 touchdowns and 66 points in seven loop games. Orr is a 6-3, 218-pounder who has a great future in high school and college.

REGGIE FIELDS, Abilene's quick-breaking tailback, wound up with 54 points in league play followed by Brainard with 48 points.

Fields, a 165-pound junior, tallied 74 points on the year and Orr 66 along with Odessa Permian tailback Barry Babcock.

Permian's offense could perk up some in the playoffs with the return of junior tailback Greg Lambert. Lambert suffered a knee injury in the second league game against Abilene and has been sidelined for five weeks. He had rushed for 505 yards and scored 48 points in the Panthers' first five games before the injury.

Midland High's Brently Jackson, a 195-pound senior, wound up scoring 34 points on the year to lead the Bulldogs. Those 34 points also came in the seven league games.

JERRY MOORE was Lee's top scorer on the season with 37 points followed by fullback Jeff McCowan's 32 points. John Marks added 24 more to the Rebel cause.

Odessa's leading scorer was wide receiver Cal Adams with 52 points on the year and 32 in 5-4A competition.

Loser to Sugar

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Sugar Bowl has decided to invite the loser of Saturday's Michigan-Ohio State football game to play Alabama on Jan. 2, newspapers here have reported.

If the proposed offer was to be accepted, it would mark the first time a Big Ten Conference team had played in the Sugar Bowl.

Sugar Bowl officials would not discuss the reports by the New Orleans States-Item and Times-Picayune, which said sixth-ranked Notre Dame wanted to play No. 1 Texas.

Grant undecided on who to start

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — The Minnesota Vikings may not know who will start at quarterback in a crucial game with the Chicago Bears until just before game time.

Minnesota coach Bud Grant normally announces any lineup changes on Friday, but says he might wait until the day of the game to decide.

Regular quarterback Fran Tarkenton is hospitalized with a broken bone in his lower right leg and is lost for the team's final five regular-season games.

Tarkenton, 37, after earlier talking of a possible retirement from pro football, now insists that he may be back in action for the National Football League playoffs.

The Vikings, 6-3, have a two-game lead over the runnerup Bears and Detroit Lions in the Central Division of the National Football Conference.

A victory by Minnesota Sunday would just about eliminate the Bears from playoff contention.

Grant will choose between rookie Tommy Kramer, the club's No. 1 draft choice last spring, and veteran Bob Lee, who is coming off the injured list. The 32-year-old Lee suffered a broken bone in his right hand against the Los Angeles Rams three weeks ago.

Grant said he may decide on a quarterback Friday when starting lineups are announced or he may wait until Sunday. He said Lee has recovered from his injury and called his physical condition "100 per cent."

"He could do anything we could ask him," said Grant. "The swelling and discomfort was incidental to the deal."

"We're fortunate in having two quarterbacks who I think can play," he said. "The plays will be the same — it won't matter who the quarterback is."

"Bob Lee is available; he's a veteran and he's played well before. Kramer came to us with good credentials and I thought he performed flawlessly in the field Sunday against the Bengals."

The 22-year-old youngster from Rice completed four of six passes for 59 yards and one touchdown, while directing the Vikings to their final three touchdowns in a 42-10 rout of the Cincinnati Bengals Sunday.

"I think I could have played Sunday," said Lee, who started four games for the Vikings in 1971 before being traded to Atlanta. "My hand is coming along. I don't think it's 100 per cent yet ...maybe 80 per cent, but this is the best it's felt."

Lee returned to the Vikings last season and started one game, a 17-6 victory over Pittsburgh, when Tarkenton had bruised ribs.

Atlanta will open with LA

ATLANTA (AP) — The Atlanta Braves will open their 1978 regular season April 7 at home against the National League champion Los Angeles Dodgers.

It is the first time since 1973 that the Braves, who finished the 1977 season with 101 losses, have opened the regular season at home.

The game with Loe Angeles is the first of a three-game series.

New game time

SAN JOSE (AP) — The football game scheduled here Nov. 26 between San Jose State and San Diego State has been rescheduled for the afternoon of Dec. 3 so that it can be televised regionally by ABC, San Jose State officials said Tuesday.

U.S. runner tops field

TOKYO (AP) — American Bill Rodgers, winner of this year's New York Marathon, heads a field of 11 foreign runners from eight countries in the Fukuoka International Marathon Race Dec. 4, the Japan Amateur Athletic Federation announced Wednesday.

The 30-year-old Rodgers has the world's fourth fastest marathon time of 2 hours, 9 minutes, 55 seconds, which he set in winning the 1975 Boston ace.

Texas, Notre Dame set for Cotton Bowl date?

NEW YORK (AP) — College football bowl invitations can't be formally extended until Saturday, but The Associated Press has learned that Notre Dame will go to the Cotton Bowl, Penn State to the Orange Bowl and either Ohio State or Michigan to the Sugar Bowl.

Of course, many of the bowl pairings will depend on key games this weekend, but, as usual, the major post-season classics will attract the nation's top teams.

THE OPPONENT for sixth-ranked Notre Dame, 8-1, in the Jan. 2 Cotton Bowl game at Dallas could be top-ranked Texas, 9-0. The Longhorns, leading the Southwest Conference, still have to face two league opponents, unranked Baylor, 4-5, and No. 14 Texas A&M, 6-2. The SWC champion automatically is the host team for the Cotton Bowl.

No. 9 Penn State, 9-1, will face the Big Eight conference champion, either third-ranked Oklahoma, 9-1, or 11th-rated Nebraska, 8-2, in the Orange Bowl at night Jan. 2. Oklahoma and Nebraska will decide the league title when they meet Nov. 25. The Big Eight loser will go to the Sun Bowl at El Paso, Texas, Dec. 31 against unranked Louisiana State, 6-3.

FOURTH-RANKED Ohio State and No. 5 Michigan, each 9-1, clash Saturday for the Big Ten Conference title and a berth in the Rose Bowl Jan. 2 at Pasadena, Calif., against the Pacific-8 Conference representative, either No. 19 Washington, 6-4; 20th-ranked UCLA, 7-3, or unranked Stanford, 7-3.

The Ohio State-Michigan loser will meet No. 2 Alabama, 9-1, in the Sugar Bowl at New Orleans Jan. 2. If it's Ohio State, that would set up an interesting confrontation between the Buckeyes' Woody Hayes and Alabama's Bear Bryant, two of the game's master coaches.

Other major bowl games are shaping up this way:

Gator Bowl, Dec. 30, at Jacksonville, Fla. — No. 15 Clemson, 7-2-1, against an undetermined opponent.

Liberty Bowl, Dec. 19, at Memphis, Tenn. — No. 18 North Carolina, 7-2-1, against an undetermined opponent.

Fiesta Bowl, Dec. 25, at Tempe, Ariz. — The Western Athletic Conference champion, most likely No. 12 Arizona State, 8-1, against eighth-ranked Arkansas, 8-1.

ASTRO-BLUEBONNET BOWL, Dec. 31, at Houston — The Texas-Texas A&M loser against possibly unranked Iowa State, 7-3, UCLA, unranked Southern California, 6-4, or Washington.

Tangerine Bowl, Dec. 23, at Orlando, Fla. — No. 16 Texas Tech, 7-2, against 13th-ranked Florida State, 8-1.

Peach Bowl, Dec. 31, at Atlanta — Unranked North Carolina State, 7-4, against an undetermined opponent.

Independence Bowl, Dec. 17, at Shreveport, La. — Unranked Louisiana Tech, 6-0-2, the Southland Conference champion, against one of three unranked independent teams — Colgate, 10-0, East Carolina, 8- 3, or Louisville, 6-3.

HALL OF FAME Classic, Dec. 22, at Birmingham, Ala. — Undetermined.

Landry may start Tony on Sunday

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Dallas Cowboy Coach Tom Landry has given the first public clue that he's thinking of starting Tony Dorsett, and the milliondollar rookie says he's ready for his chance.

"I've wanted to play from day one," said Dorsett by telephpone Sunday after Landry admitted the possibility of the lineup change for Sunday's game with the 5-4 Pittsburgh Steelers.

"I can't tell you how Landry is thinking. I hope he'll start me. I'm capable of playing a whole game."

Dorsett, a Heisman Trophy winner with the University of Pittsburgh in 1977, shares the Cowboy's halfback position with former Steeler Preston Pearson.

Although he leads the Cowboys in rushing with 522 yards in 112 carries, Coach Tom Landry has never put Dorsett in the starting lineup.

"I thought I'd be starting by now but things haven't worked out that way. It's hard sometimes to come off the bench," said Dorsett, a native of Aliquippa, a town about 25 miles from Pittsburgh.

Landry, who may be looking for a way to put back some zip in a struggling offense, hinted Tuesday that his prized rookie may be the necessary catalyst.

"I haven't made any definite decision," Landry said. "Tony will continue to play more and more because he's a tremendous runner. The more he plays, the better he gets."

Early in the season Dorsett had difficulty getting accustomed to the complex Dallas offense. He says it's second nature to him now.

"I worked on it before and after practice for weeks. I just concentrated more on catching the ball with my hands instead of against my pants and shirt.

"I have it down now. I can go out there and run with the authority I had in college."

Doing that in Pittsburgh in front of his family and friends would be something special to him.

"I can't wait to get home," said Dorsett. "I hope I play well. Of course, I always hope I play well. But there's something different about it when you're going home."

The Cowboys, 8-1, lost their first game of the season Monday night against the St. Louis Cardinals, 24-17. The last time a team Dorsett played for lost a game was when Penn State defeated Pitt, 7-6, in his junior year.

"We've been bogged down for the last three or four weeks," said Dorsett. "We can't afford to be losing any more ball games and of course Pittsburgh can't either.

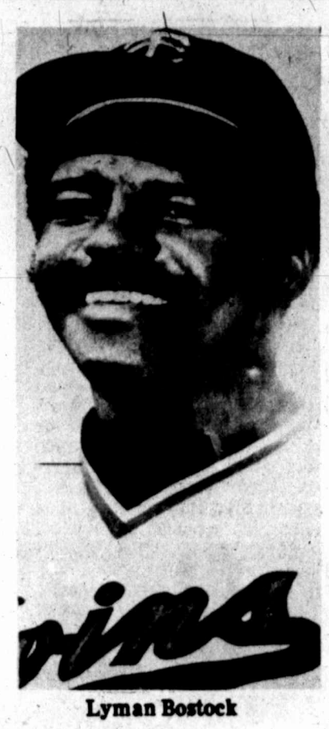

Every game we play from this day on is going to be very important."

Marinaro inks with Seahawks

SEATTLE (AP) — Free agent running back Ed Marinaro has signed with the Seattle Seahawks, John Thompson, the team's general manager, announced Tuesday night.

Marinaro, a 6-foot-2, 207-pound sixth-year pro from Cornell, was released earlier this year by the New York Jets. Before he suffered a foot injury in the sixth game of last year's season, he was the Jets' leading rusher and receiver.

Marinaro visited the Seahawk camp for a tryout last week.

Lyman Bostock

Larry Hisle

Bostock is seeking $3 million contract from highest bidder

NEW YORK (AP) — What price glory?

Would you believe more than $3 million?

That's what outfielder Lyman Bostock is seeking for a multi-year contract.

Should Bostock achieve his lofty goal, he would surpass the highest baseball free agent contract signed last year — $2.9 by outfielder Reggie Jackson of the New York Yankees.

Bostock, the most popular player in the recent re-entry free agent draft, is basing a great deal of his argument for the huge contract on his strong 1977 season — a .336 batting average, second best in the American League behind Minnesota teammate Rod Carew's .388; 14 home runs and 90 runs batted in.

Bostock, picked by the maximum 13 teams in the draft, is expected to narrow the bidding to six clubs later this week, according to his agent, Abdul Jalil.

Jalil said Tuesday that Pittsburgh and Kansas City already have been eliminated from the Bostock sweepstakes because their financial offers were not comparable to those of other clubs.

"You can't ask a player to consider signing for $1 million less with one club than he can get from another," said Jalil. "Right now, we have five offers of over $2 million and three offers that are better than what Reggie Jackson signed for."

Surprisingly, the Yankees and California Angels, two of the biggest winners in last year's free agent market, opened their offers for Bostock with low bids, Jalil said. However, since then, both teams apparently have raised their antes and still are in the financial battle for the popular outfielder, the agent indicated.

Other clubs which could be among the finalists for Bostock are Toronto, San Diego and Milwauke.

Among the other teams who drafted Bostock — the New York Mets, Oakland, Chicago White Sox, San Francisco, Baltimore and his old club, Minnesota — all have sidestepped the big money stakes that the bidding has reached.

And the Texas Rangers already have spent more than $3 million in signing two free agents, outfielder Richie Zisk and pitcher Doc Medich.

"A lot of clubs eliminated themselves by not being competitive," said Jalil. "There's no sense negotiating with someone who's not really interested."

One interested party could be Milwaukee.

Outfielder Larry Hisle, another free agent who played for Minnesota last season, said he was leaning toward signing with the Brewers snd would like Bostock to join him.

"I can't see anything but great things happening in Milwaukee if the Brewers get both of us," said Hisle, the American League RBI leader in 1977.

Hisle said Bostock told him he also would love to go to Milwaukee, although the Yankees "are after him extremely hard."

Hisle said only "a few small details" remained to be ironed out with his agent and the Brewers.

One free agent came to terms Tuesday, relief pitcher Oscar Zamora signing with the Houston Astros.

NHL rookie stars again

By The Associated Press

Mike Bossy's pro debut has been a dazzling one, with 12 goals and 21 points accumulated, making him the leading rookie scorer and tied for fifth overall in the National Hockey League points race.

And Bossy, who scored the New York Islanders' only goal in their tie with Chicago Tuesday night, admits to being one of those who's dazzled.

"Frankly, I'm in a daze," said the 20-year-old, obtained by the Islanders in this year's amateur draft. "I don't try to think about it too much.

"My biggest fault in the amateurs was easing up when things were going good. I've learned here that you can't do that. So now I play hard all the time."

Helping to drum that lesson in has been Bryan Trottier, the center on Bossy's line. After two scoreless periods Tuesday night, Bossy took a pass from Trottier at the right faceoff circle to score on the stick side of Black Hawks goalie Tony Esposito at :37 of the period.

"Bryan has been a big help to me," Bossy said. "and Al Arbour (the Islanders coach) has done a great job with me. I have a great center in Bryan and all I look for is open space.

"Tonight I was where I was supposed to be on the power play and so was Trottier. He put the puck on my stick and I just shot it."

But Ivan Boldirev succeeded in breaking through a scramble at the Islanders net at 12:43 of the final period to tie the game.

"It was just a frustrating thing," said New York goalie Billy Smith. "I didn't even know where the puck was. I turned around and didn't know where the puck was. I sort of blame myself. I just got caught out of position. Things were going easy and I thought I had a shutout for myself."

Chicago Coach Bob Pulford was nearly as pleased as he might have been with a Black Hawks victory. "Anytime you get a tie in this building, I'm happy. We got a good effort from the whole team and Tony Esposito played really well in goal, especially in the second period."

There was indecision elsewhere in the NHL as the St. Louis Blues tied the Washington Capitals 2-2 on Brian Sutter's first goal of the season, a power play score with 8:04 remaining in the game, and Vancouver edged Cleveland 5-4.

Capitals 2, Blues 2, tie

Sutter deflected a shot by rookie Jack Brownschilde high into the net over the shoulder of Washington goalie Gary Smith.

Garry Unger scored the other St. Louis goal on a breakaway, while Bob Sirois and rookie Mark Lofthouse, who got his first NHL goal, scored for Washington.

The tie extended Washington's winless string to 10 games, 0-7-3. Canucks 5, Barons 4.

Mike Walton scored three goals and broke a 4-4 tie with less than two minutes to play, rifling a quick wrist shot from 35 feet out, beating Cleveland goalie Gilles Meloche.

The three scores gave Walton 11 goals in 15 games this season after scoring just seven in an injury-riddled campaign last year.

Cliff Harris

goes on all the time. I guess you'd call it the art of communication."

What worries Harris is Pittsburgh this week. They are coming on strong and the Cowboys are coming off the short week.

"THE LOST day hurts," says Harris, "because so much of this game is mental. You've got to project yourself into the next-game situation mentally during the week and it's hard to do when you are still hurting from a Monday night game, so that extra day of recuperation from game bruises can be significant."

Monday's loss also means the Cowboys go in to the Pittsburgh game with a two-game lead over the Cardinals and not the four a victory Monday would have established.

As Coach Tom Landry put it, "We got whipped. Now we've go to bounce back. We've got to get tough and hungry like some of these other teams."

Chuck Tanner breezes by Laver in Challenge Cup

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Rod Laver, once known as "The Rocket", found himself on the other end of some fast-traveling guided missiles Tuesday when he faced the booming serve of Roscoe Tanner in the $320,000 WCT Challenge Cup.

"They looked like golf balls," Laver said after Tanner had aced him five times en route to a 6-3, 6-1 victory. "I was really embarrassed at the way I returned his serve."

Tanner found the "Supreme Surface" court at Caesars Palace to his liking.

"This is a very fast court and the ball was moving fast because of the altitude, "said Tanner. "That really helps my serve."

In Tuesday's other match of the eight-man, round-robin tournament, Ken Rosewall edged fellow Australian John Alexander 5-6, 6-4, 6-4.

Both Rosewall and Tanner are 1-0 in the play that wraps up Sunday, as are Jimmy Connors and Ilie Nastase, who won their openers the first night.

In tonight's action, Connors battles Dick Stockton, Vitas Gerulaitis plays Tanner, and defending champion Nastase meets Laver.

Tanner needed just 45 minutes to whip Laver. He broke the Australian's serve in the fifth game of the first set for a 3-2 lead, and controlled the match from there.

Rosewall had two key service breaks of Alexander in the seventh game of both the second and third sets to take 4-3 leads en route to his victory.

Rosewall said he was pleased with the way he has been playing recently, but the crafty 43-year-old was already thinking about Thursday's match with Connors.

Raider mascot dies

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Happy V, a black quarterhorse that has served as Texas Tech's mascot for the past four years, died Tuesday after suffering a ruptured intestine, school officials said.

The 17-year-old horse, which carries the masked Red Raider around the football field after each Texas Tech score, had been ill and was going to be retired at the end of the 1977 football season, officials said.

A replacement has already been donated, although it was not known if it would be ready for the Red Raiders' final two games of the season.

Walton's 32 points paces Portland to NBA win

By The Associated Press

Bill Walton stopped passing and started shooting and Portland won. Pete Maravich kept on passing and New Orleans lost.

"I made a lot of stupid plays passing the ball," said Walton. "At one stretch I made four straight passes to the other team."

So Walton decided he'd better start taking his shots and wound up scoring 32 points as the Trail Blazers beat the Milwaukee Bucks 109-106 Tuesday night to become the first National Basketball Association team with 10 victories. The defending champions lead the Pacific Division with a 10-2 mark.

"He was forced to score more than he likes because we were sagging in the passing lanes," observed Milwaukee Coach Don Nelson. "But when he got the ball he still had good position."

Walton, who scored his season high, hit from the top of the key to give the defending National Basketball Association champions a 107-104 lead with 1:07 to go. After Dave Meyers cut the lead to a basket with a tip-in, Walton responded with a hook shot with 36 seconds left for the final margin.

Maravich, meanwhile, was guarded extra closely by New York's Jim Cleamons all night long and went 4-for-20, scoring just 11 points as the Jazz was beaten by the Knicks 108-105. Maravich, the NBA's reigning scoring king, had only 2 points in the second half and did not attempt a shot in the fourth quarter, when the game was up for grabs.

"There were other guys open in better position than me, so I passed the ball — that's fundamental basketball," said Maravich, looking tired and frustrated after New Orleans' sixth straight loss, including all five games on a coast-to-coast road swing.

"I get paid the same whether I score 100 or 1," he added. "The object is to win."

But can the Jazz win without Maravich putting the ball in the hole?

76ers 114, Hawks 93

Atlanta disappointed a sellout crowd at the Omni by suffering its third loss in a row after jumping off to an 8-1 start. "We can't cancel the next 70 games," reasoned Hawks Coach Hubie Brown, "so we have to regroup."

Philadelphia, 5-1 since Billy Cunningham became coach, got 23 points from Julius Erving and 22 from Doug Collins. The Sixers clinched the victory with a run of 11 points in the third period.

Pacers 100, Braves 94

Ricky Sobers scored 23 points, including a key threepoint play in the last two minutes, as Indiana snapped a sixgame losing streak with its first road victory of the season.

Teammate Adrian Dantley, last year's NBA Rookie of the Year with Buffalo, led all rebounders with 12 and had 14 points. Billy Knight, who went to Buffalo in exchange for Dantley, scored 14, well off his 22.4 average.

Spurs 113, Kings 107

Larry Kenon scored 11 of his game-high 23 points in a 32-point third period that enabled San Antonio to pull away to its fourth straight victory. George Gervin, the NBA's third leading scorer, added 19 for the Spurs, eight below his average.

Bullets 111, Sonics 109

Elvin Hayes scored 22 points and reserve guard Kevin Grevey added 20 for Washington, which handed Seattle its 11th loss in 15 games. The Bullets led 109-101 before committing a series of turnovers which helped the Sonics come close to pulling it out.

Cavaliers 102, Lakers 95, OT

Cleveland erased an eight-point deficit and sent the game into overtime on John Lambert's basket with 33 seconds left, then Campy Russell snapped an 89-89 tie as the Cavs went on to raise their record to 9-3. Injured Lakers center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar suited up but did not play.

Nuggets 123, Pistons 113

Denver raised its home-court record to 7-0 behind David Thompson's 33 points and Dan Issel's 24, including 10 in the final period. The game was marred by a bench-clearing brawl in the third period, with Mack Calvin of the Nuggets and Chris Ford of the Pistons the chief combatants.

A tray of false teeth, fired at 2,600 degrees, is pulled from a kiln at Ivoclar AG in Lichtenstein. Paul Quinololin in one of the many Lichtenstein natives employed in Europe's biggest false teeth factory.

After false teeth are fired, technicians like Astrid Ebenberger paint the individual teeth in any of 19 shades designed to match the shades of natural teeth. Some 114 million teeth were painted last year, and white was not among the most popular colors.

Small nation big on false teeth

By CHARLES HILLINGER
The Los Angeles Times

SCHAAN, Liechtenstein — Every day 500 women come here in a caravan of buses on a winding road through the Alps from their homes in Austria — to make false teeth.

Ivoclar AG, Europe's biggest false teeth factory, is in this 16-mile-long, 4-mile-wide principality sandwiched between Switzerland and Austria.

The firm produced 114 million plastic and porcelain teeth last year with gross sales totaling $42 million. The factory price per tooth to distributors varies from 32 to 75 cents.

"The price per tooth is inexpensive. It's making up the plates in labs and the dental work involved in impressions and fittings that bring the cost of dentures way up," explains Dr Rudolf J. Michl, head of research and development for Ivoclar.

Teeth come off the assembly line in 19 different colors and 14 different sizes.

"In Europe, the far north people live the lighter the shades and colors for their false teeth," Michl says. "Swedish people, for example, use much lighter shades than Italians.

"Teeth are fashioned every way possible to re-create natural appearance," he adds. "Some are produced with fine hairline cracks for partial plates to match other teeth in a person's mouth and some are painted with brownish shadings for people who smoke."

Some 80 percent of Ivoclar's sales are teeth with five colors — reddish, yellowish and gray shades — but none is white.

"It's easy to spot an older person wearing dentures if his teeth are sparkling white," Michl says. Older people naturally do not have sparkling white teeth. "With correct colors and shadings no one need know if someone is wearing dentures."

The colors are painted on individual teeth one at a time by the women bused here from Feldkirch, Austria, 12 miles from the Ivoclar factory.

Liechtenstein citizens have all the top and middle management jobs in the plant, as they do in the 44 other factories in the tiny country. Adolf Schneider, 78, president and sole owner of the firm, is a Liechtensteiner.

Women come from Austria to make the false teeth because there are not enough people living in Liechtenstein to fill the jobs.

False teeth have been made of porcelain since the 18th century. It has only been since the end of World War II that plastics have been used.

Today, 80 percent of the false teeth manufactured in Europe are plastic. In the United States it's 65 percent porcelain, 35 percent plastic. Porcelain teeth are more expensive, last much longer and are harder than natural teeth.

"False teeth sales are booming," according to Dr. Michl. "Socialized medicine is a big help for us. For the first time in history people living in undeveloped areas of the world are beginning to wear teeth."

Kearney case repeats 'official crime' struggle

By CHARLES R. BABCOCK
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Official crime. Lawmen accused of breaking the law. It is a phenomenon with which the nation is unfamiliar and uncomfortable.

But in recent months it has happened. America's long-revered protective agencies, the CIA and the FBI, have been the targets themselves of criminal investigations.

Those accused have warned that they might be compelled to disclose at trial the very national secrets they were charged with protecting.

Attorney General Griffin B. Bell, the former judge who inherited the cases from his predecessor, has struggled with the conflicting issues:

His duty to uphold the law; the concern for guarding national secrets; the morale of an intelligence community already tarnished in recent years by congressional revelations about its abuses of the rights of American citizens.

The Central Intelligence Agency case, which focused on former Director Richard M. Helms, was resolved recently when Helms accepted a government plea-bargain offer designed to head off the risks of a trial where national security and secrets were sure to be raised as a defense.

The continuing probe of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which has resulted so far only in the indictment of former New York supervisor John J. Kearney — for directing a mail-opening and wiretap operation against radical fugitives — is now the focus of attention.

The arguments in the FBI investigation are all too familiar to Bell and his prosecutors. For though the Helms case was settled first, the key elements that decided it — national security and plea-bargaining — were presented first with Kearney, and seem to have affected the Helms outcome in important ways.

For instance, federal prosecutors offered to let Kearney plead to misdemeanor civil-rights violation charges for his part in the campaign against the Weather Underground.

He refused and was indicted in April on five felony counts in connection with directing a mail-opening and wiretapping operation.

High Justice Department officials involved in the case said in recent interviews that they felt Kearney rejected the plea-bargain offer because he didn't believe the Justice Department would seek an indictment.

"After all, we'd never indicted an FBI official before," one of the officials said.

They also believe that the precedent set by the Kearney indictment was a message to Helms that he too would be indicted if he rejected a plea-bargain offer.

The same officials also acknowledge that the sweeping pre-trial discovery allowed in preparation for Kearney's defense weighed on their consideration of the Helms case.

Edward Bennet Williams, the defense lawyer for Helms and Kearney, clearly intends to use "national security" as a key part of the defense strategy in the Kearney trial, court records filed so far indicate.

Using pre-trial discovery as a sort of legal terror weapon, Williams has been granted access to documents bearing on similar conduct as far back as World War II.

One goal seems to be to find documents that would link the Weather Underground to foreign countries and thus set up a national security justification for the wiretaps and break-ins.

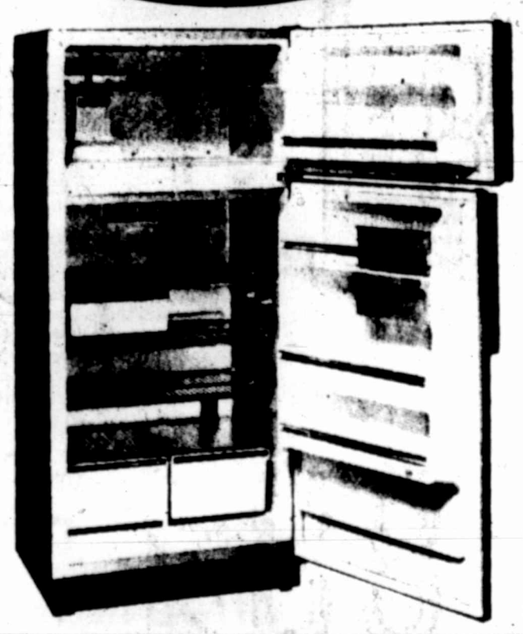

The FBI went so far last year as to prepare an after-the-fact "top-secret" report outlining ties between the Weather Underground and Cuba, as a way to shwo the American radicals were agents of a foreign power.

The report was compiled after the Justice Department began its investigation of Kearney and other FBI officials involved in authorizing or carrying out the campaign against the Weather Underground.

Federal wildcatters?

If there is any doubt in your mind concerning the serious, determined effort of the federal government to undermine private enterprise in the interest perhaps of eventual nationalization, maybe this will convince you.

Texaco Inc. has been charged by Cecil Andrus, secretary of the Interior, with failure to develop a natural gas field off the Louisiana coast. He has ordered the company to submit plans by Dec. 1 which would propose the drilling of more wells and thus the production of more natural gas. How's that for openers?

We must agree that this is one way to promote domestic energy production and, actually, it is nice for a change to see the Carter administration engaged on the supply side of the energy situation.

But it very definitely is the wrong way — this business of telling Texaco or any other company, for that matter, how much it should be producing.

The Carter administration, which should know better, somehow forgets or conveniently overlooks the free market.

If it would reflect long enough, it might just realize that the price-controlled natural gas market has been reacting like price-controlled markets always do: keeping production down.

It is understood that Texaco has said it will proceed to give the Interior Department "prompt review."

It is doubtful, however, unless the administration decides to lift price controls, whether Texaco will show any prompt increase in production. And one certainly cannot blame the company.

And business generally certainly must not overlook the fact that if the federal government can tell Texaco how much to produce, under a price-controlled market, there is no reason why it can't do likewise to other companies and other industries.

This isn't the American way! If the government presses the issue, exponents of private enterprise should rise up in protest.

New 'Prayer' version

It is noteworthy when the Church of England approves a new version of the Lord's Prayer.

But this is just what it has done, putting the Lord's Prayer in the modern vernacular.

Approved by the church's General Synod, the new version follows closely a modernized version proposed by the International Consultation on English Texts (ICET), an interdenominational commission which is updating prayers and texts used in common by English-language churches.

The changes are reported to be part of a general process of revising the Book of Common Prayer, the service book used by the Church of England. It has remained essentially unchanged since 1662. Realizing this, one readily can see why the change is so noteworthy.

The Episcopal Church, the U.S. member of the worldwide Anglican community, is using a revised Book of Common Prayer on a three-year trial basis. The revised Episcopalian version of the Lord's Prayer is said to be almost identical to the new Church of England version.

In both the Episcopalian and Anglican churches, according to The Associated Press, the new versions of the Book of Common Prayer are optional and church members still may use the traditional forms.

The new Church of England version of the Lord's Prayer is:

"Our Father in Heaven, hallowed be your name, your will be done on earth as in heaven. Give us today our daily bread. Forgive us our sins, as we forgive those who sin against us. Do not bring us to the time of trial, but deliver us from evil. For the kingdom, the power and the glory are yours now and forever. Amen."

CHARLEY REESE:

Anita penalized for speaking her beliefs

By CHARLEY REESE
Sun Belt Syndicate

ORLANDO, Fla. — Hey, you liberals who are such lovers of free speech that you cringe every time a porno peddler gets busted, where are you when Anita Bryant needs you?

Don't answer. I know where you are. You're hiding in your hypocritical closet behind your double standards.

Here is a lady who says she is being blacklisted by the entertainment industry, who's been hit in the face with a pie, who's been threatened with death and bodily harm, who's been subjected to abuse and bomb threats, and for what? For speaking out for her religious beliefs.

What irony that the homosexuals who are arguing for their so-called rights are engaged in a systematic and premeditated campaign to deny her the right to free speech and a decent job.

The militant homosexuals are only proving her case by acting like storm troopers. You're darn right I don't want someone in the public school system who thinks trying to get a woman fired is an argument for civil liberty. That's not only queer but stupid.

Plain Americans had better wake up, too, because what you are seeing in the case of Anita Bryant is the totalitarian bully-boy tactics that were spawned during the Vietnam war.

Disrupting meetings, violence, bomb threats, and secondary boycotts have no place in a free society. These are the tactics of Communists and Nazis. They raise the most fundamental of issues.

That issue is this: There are two ways to decide a political question; by debate and ballot or by force. The bully-boy tactics are a form of force. A society which decides its questions by force is not a democratic society, it is an anarchic society on the verge of dictatorship.

If America has become a nation where Anita Bryant cannot travel about and speak freely her opinions without being subjected to force and violence or threats of force and violence, then we have indeed come a long way — in the wrong direction.

Where are all the politicians who swear an oath to defend the Constitution. I'll tell you where they are. They're hiding from controversy.

The solution is simple. You tell militant-anythings that we do not tolerate an attempt to substitute force for persuasion in our political process. Put down the club or go to jail. There is only one logical reply to force and that is counterforce. We do not talk to thugs.

Too often in the past too many Americans condoned criminal behaviour because they agreed with the cause the criminals claimed to support. We have to stop this or our freedom will go up in flames.

Either we discuss and debate our differences and if we lose an argument, accept the results or we turn this country into the world's largest banana republic where force and violence are the campaign techniques and results are contested with gunfire.

You who call yourselves liberals had better choose and let us know what your decision is. The rest of us have no intention of being passive victims. We want a society of peace and a rule by law. We're willing to stand up for those concepts, but we're not going to continue to accept double standards much longer.

When I see people who bemoan the blacklisting of Communists in the 1950s but who are silent when Anita Bryant is being blacklisted, I conclude they are either hypocrits or Communists themselves for whom the double-standard is an acceptable tactic.

Where are you college professors who scream academic freedom everytime a legislator frowns in your direction? Do you think that the fact that you disagree with Anita Bryant's religion automatically excludes her from the protection of the Constitution?

And where are you preachers who are so concerned about the rights of farm workers? You can't escape it, brethren. The issue is clear. The woman is speaking out for her religious beliefs and people are trying to silence her with threats and force. Do you believe in religious freedom or not?

Choose folks, or stay silent and reap the storm you sow.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Update on Shippingport, Pa.

By JACK ANDERSON and LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON — In the continuing saga of the CAPCO power works versus Shippingport, Pa., the great electrical combine has just demonstrated its awesome power.

The townsfolk besieged us last summer with pleas to tell their story. Their beloved Beaver Valley was slowly being poisoned, they complained, by the fallout from the energy compounds that the CAPCO consortium has erected on the nearby banks of the Ohio River.

We sent our associate, Howard Rosenberg,to Shippingport to investigate. He made repeated trips to the area. At a clandestine meeting, the townspeople presented their complaints. They told him of the deadly white dust that sometimes covered their roofs and filled their cisterns. They charged that their water wells and backyard gardens had occasionally been contaminated. They showed him chunks of calcium sulfate that had fallen on their property. He brought one plate-sized chunk of pollution back as a souvenir.

Not all the populace, of course, was vocal. Those who benefit from the CAPCO payroll remained silent. But a secret tryst was arranged for Rosenberg to talk with one CAPCO employee who worked at the Beaver Valley I nuclear plant. The nervous CAPCO men chain-smoked with trembling hands as he confirmed reports that a 25,000-gallon tank of drinking water had been contaminated with radioactivity at his plant.

Rosenberg also spoke to Dr. Yeun C. Wu, an environmental consultant, who has tested the fallout particles from the twin, coal-fired Bruce Mansfield electrical generating plants at Shippingport. He found a variety of deadly particles, both powder and crystal, which clearly had come from the coal-fired plants.

As recently as last week, Dr. Wu's findings were reconfirmed after tests of 12 water wells around town showed high concentrations of cadmium and chromium — the former a cause of hypertension and heart disease, the latter a potent carcinogen. The Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Resources is now testing 24 wells around the borough.

Rosenberg was also given a quick radiological physics course by Dr. Ernest J. Sternglass, University of Pittsburgh professor, who has analyzed radiation in the Shippingport area. He found levels far higher than the company had reported in public releases, with an accompanying rise in the number of cancer and infant mortality cases in the valley.

Four years ago, Pennsylvania Gov. Milton Shapp appointed a blue ribbon panel of scientists to investigate Sternglass' charges. The scientists concluded that "it was impossible to rule out the fact that there may have been a relationship between environmental radiation exposure from the Shippingport operation and an increased death rate in the population."

The governor's commission released their report in 1974, noting that they still could not account for the fact that the diets of Pittsburgh residents 30 miles away contained abnormally high levels of radiation.

We examined Duquesne Light's radiation monitoring reports on several dairy farms in the Shippingport vicinty. At one farm in 1975 Strontium 90 radiation was found in the milk at levels much higher than federal limits allow. In 1976, the company stopped monitoring at that dairy farm.

The world's first commercial nuclear pressurized water reactor went into operation at Shippingport 20 years ago. Last month, that reactor was replaced by the world's first commercial thorium light water breeder reactor, jointly owned by the Department of Energy and Duquesne Light Company.

Upriver a few hundred yards is the 850-megawatt nuclear pressurized water reactor, Beaver Valley I. Duquesne Light has been operating it for a year now. If all goes as planned, Beaver Valley II, a mirror image of Beaver Valley I, will be operating by 1982. Upriver another few hundred yards are the coal-fired electrical generating plants named for Brice Mansfield. Together they burn 16,000 tons of coal a day. The combination of the health hazards of the coal and nuclear plants together are known to be much nore serious than either one alone.

Rosenberg also examined the records of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. Over a 16-month period, he found 16 "events" — a euphemism for accidents — at Beaver Valley I. During the month of July, 1977, alone, the reactor there was forced to shut down nine times when things went wrong. Finally, our associate has repeated discussions with CAPCO spokesmen to get their comments.

Yet, in some Pennsylvania papers, our Shippingport column was suppressed. Duquesne Light issued a press release denying and belittling our report. The power company declared that our column was "inaccurate and irresponsible reporting." The press release charged that Rosenberg had declined to take a tour of the coal-fired facilities at Shippingport.

Rosenberg did not ask to see the coal-fired plants. He requested a tour of Beaver Valley I nuclear plant. Permission was denied, presumably to prevent him from getting an accurate view of the conditions.

The press release denied that "deadly vapors" emanated from the facilities, claiming the emissions were "no nore sinister" than the water vapor "which comes from a tea kettle."

Duquesne Light also denied that Shippingport was a "dying town," and quoted a Beaver Valley newspaper statement that the community was "rich."

INSIDE REPORT:

SALT and Sen. Scoop Jackson and subcommittee leaks

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — Cheered on by the White House, brash and beefy Sen. John Culver of Iowa charged into a Senate Armed Services subcommittee hearing Nov. 7 to lead a SALT counter-offensive aimed against the biggest threat to Senate approval of a new U.S.-Soviet arms control agreement: subcommittee chairman Henry M. Jackson.

Culver delivered a tirade charging that leaks from the subcommittee were undermining the strategic arms limitation talks (SALT), strongly implying the leaks came from Jackson and his staff. Jackson, bending perceptibly under Culver's verbal barrage, expressed regret about the disclosures. That heightened concern by Republicans that Jackson ultimately will prove more Democrat than hawk and put party over principle.

If so, the SALT II treaty nearing agreement will win the two-thirds Senate approval needed for ratification. If Jackson opposes it, however, chances are poor. Thus, at age 65, Scoop Jackson holds the course of history in his hands.

There is no doubt about Jackson's expertise on arms control or his conviction that the new treaty dangerously widens the Soviet strategic advantage. The doubt has been whether he would treat Cyrus Vance as harshly as he did Henry Kissinger, risking the end of invitations to the Jacksons for family dinners at the White House with the Carters.

Those doubts faded recently when Jackson conducted tough hearings with an uncomfortable, ill-prepared

Evans Novak

Secretary of State Vance as witness. To counteract these hearings, all 100 Senators were invited to top secret SALT briefings from some eight administration officials on Nov. 3; only seven Senators showed up.

With Senate prospects fading, the counter-offensive began. The theme: SALT critics are undermining U.S.-Soviet negotiations. Former Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Nitze came under special attack from his scholarly analysis of the adverse impact on U.S. security of the SALT II agreements.

Actually, tentative SALT II agreements have been leaked mainly by administration officials. But this did not stop Sen. George McGovern from taking the Senate floor Nov. 2 to accuse Ditze of "inexcusable conduct." On the same day, arms control activist Jeremy Stone (secretary of the Federation of American Scientists) wrote a letter suggesting Nitze's analysis is "subversive" and constitutes "sabotage" of SALT.

The counter-offensive accelerated Nov. 4 when our column reported Vance's inability to defend the SALT II agreements to the Jackson subcommittee. The normally placid Vance was incensed. Backing down as he never had against Kissinger, Jackson apologized and agreed to long-standing State Department requests to inspect transcripts of Vance's testimony.

When Vance reappeared before the Jackson subcommittee in closed session Nov. 7, Culver — a member of the full committee but not the subcommittee — made his presence felt. Finishing his third year in the Senate, Culver has become a force to contend with and the most effective instrument of the Arms Control lobby. A former Harvard football player, his bulk and stentorian voice prove physically intimidating to some colleagues.

Glaring at Jackson aide Richard Perle, Culver shouted about a "hemorrage" of secrets in our columns (though they actually contain no classified information). Jackson replied quietly that most SALT II details were being dribbled out by the administration, but Culver brushed that aside. He demanded an investigation of Jackson subcommittee leakage. The aim is obvious: get Sen. John Stennis, 76, chairman of the full Armed Services Committee who lives in horror of leaks, to shut down Jackson.

Culver's line that leaks threaten SALT not only duplicates McGovern's and Jeremy Stone's but echoes what is said inside the Carter administration. Culver issued a statement to us denying his move was inspired by the administration, but that may be academic. "Thank goodness for John Culver," a senior White House aide told us. "It's about time somebody stopped Jackson from running wild."

Jackson's reaction was not reassuring to his Republican allies on the committee. Although neither he nor his staff had given us the information about Vance's appearance, he felt he must express "regret" about our column. At a joint press conference with Vance, he felt constrainced to call our report "inaccurate and misleading" though he knew its accuracy had caused all the furor.

To some old hands, this recalled 1963 when Jackson first criticized the U.S.-Soviet test ban treaty, then backed it following pressure from the Kennedy White House. But far more is at stake for U.S. security 13 years later, and Jackson is an older man with few political ambitions. How he reacts to the counterattack, clearly blessed by the White House, will probably determine the fate of SALT II.

Umbrella companies find joy with rain

The Washington Post

TAIPEI, Taiwan — So you've left your umbrella on the bus again on a wet day. Duck into the nearest drugstore and buy a cheap one, courtesy of this small island, now the umbrella capital of the world.

Thousands of young men and women here have become so adept at rapidly fitting delicate steel ribs into waterproof fabric, and for such little pay, that Taiwan has overtaken Japan as the leading umbrealla maker — and captured more than 60 percent of the U.S. market in the process.

In the office of umbrella tycoon T. F. Chen — who is rarely without the black collapsible model he makes for Totes Inc. of Ohio — a framed Chinese saying proclaims: "The heavens bestow great happiness." Chen won't deny it.

"Business is up 35 per cent over last year," he said. Even if there's drought in San Francisco and Hong Kong, it's pouring in Washington and Paris, and Chen's five-company Fu Tai umbrella group sells umbrellas all over the world.

"There are so many umbrella factories in this country," he said, "and that much competition is good for quality and fashions. Before, many countries bought from Japan and West Germany, but now they don't make so many any more. Making umbrellas depends on manual labor. Taiwan's labor costs have risen some, but they are still lower than other countries."

In the same way, Taiwan has surged in the U.S. markets for shoes and tennis rackets. Chen raised salaries 25 per cent for his 1,000 workers last year, but they still average no more than $30 a week. They turn out about 3.6 million umbrellas a year, about 1 million of which Chen sells in the United States.

About 850,000 of those are the basic black, collapsible model — what the industry calls "topless." The Totes company of Loveland, Ohio, pioneered the popular model that folds into a foot-long tube businessmen can stuff in a briefcase. Totes found, however, that it could not make a profit paying U.S. wage rates for the delicate handwork. So its factories now concentrate on making overshoes while Chen and other overseas suppliers make the umbrellas.

Taiwan produced about 60 million umbrellas in 1976, and expects to do better this year. The demand in the United States and Europe hasn't increased sharply, but there's an umbrella boom in the Third World.

"African countries like Nigeria didn't want umbrellas before, now they do," Chen said. "They sued to go barefoot, but now they're wearing shoes. They're wearing better clothing now that they don't want to get wet."

Tastes in style and color vary all over the world. Americans seem to prefer conservative patterns and colors now — the bell-shaped clear plastic models have died out.

Museum displays Romanians' roots

By DAVID MINTHORN

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Without leaving town, Romanians can go back to their roots at a remarkable exhibit of centuries-old peasant cottages, chapels, windmills and other relics brought here from the Balkan countryside.

Thatched-roof huts with arching gates, steepled churches adorned with icons and wooden crucifixes plucked from roadsides are displayed outdoors on 24 acres at the Village Museum in Bucharest.

Sixty-five dwellings, churches and workships with 21,500 pieces of original furnishings blend into the serene landscape of a lakeside park. It's one of the world's best ethnographic collections and a model for a growing number of open-air folk museums around Europe, director Gheorghe Focsa said.

Stockholm's Skansen Museum, depicting Swedish peasant life in the 1890s, and the Spanish Village in Barcelona are two other open-air museums, but neither has the historical breadth of the Bucharest collection, he asserted.

A quarter of a million visitors come to the Village Museum each year, and most are charmed or deeply moved as they stroll along shady paths to the cottages and churches built between the 17th and 20th centuries.

The most famous American visitor was former President Richard Nixon, who stopped at the museum during his 1969 trip to Bucharest.

Thousands of other Americans visit every year, said Focsa, who wore in his lapel a Texas longhorn badge, handed to him recently by a touring U.S. student group.

Focsa, 67, has spent three decades refining and adding to the collection which was started in 1909, when the first peasant home was purchased in the countryside and reassembled in Bucharest by master craftsmen.

Organized as a temporary exhibit in 1936, the collection became a permanent museum under his supervision in 1948 after surviving the war with minor damages only to furnishings.

"The museum has become a synthesis of Romanian folk architecture and the rural way of life. Typical buildings from the hill, plain and delta districts are represented," Focsa said in an interview.

Under his direction, the collection has been greatly expanded. He now has a staff of 50 researchers who scour the Romanian countryside looking for new objects.

"Owners have to be paid for their dwellings and provided with new materials so they can rebuild," Focsa said.

When a building is selected from a village, Focsa said, the peasants are so proud they often travel hundreds of miles to Bucharest to visit the museum and view their representative.

The cottages are mostly built t t of heavy oak beams and whitewashed plaster walls. Roofs are tile, shingle or thatched.

Each house is a mini-museum filled with authentic rugs, furniture, draperies, pottery, utensils and other handmade objects from the village. "Only the original families are missing," Focsa said.

In one musty-smelling cottage, he translated the Cyrillic lettering carved in a ceiling beam in the living room: "Master Pasko of Salaj asks you to include him in your prayers. This house was built by Gheorghe Pop in God's year 1775."

The oldest of the museum's three log churches was built in 1722, and has a graceful steeple 50 feet high. Inside are roughhewn wooden walls decorated with beautifully painted icons.

Prize-winning cartoonist draws, simplifies issues

Tony Auth

By KENNETH TURAN
The Washington Post

Tony Auth was watching TV one day last year, minding his own business, when on came the Democratic National Convention.

"It was the night of Carter's acceptance speech," Auth remembers, "and as he was making his entrance from the floor, with the band playing 'Why Not the Best' and everything, I said to myself, 'This guy has thought of every little detail — he's as much a simple farm boy as I'm going to fly to the moon,'"

And that experience, which resulted in a sketch of Jimmy Carter with a cross-section of a computer for a brain, is the answer to the thing that Tony Auth, Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist for The Philadelphia Inquirer and 70 other papers, hears the most: where do you get your ideas? In fact, just hearing that again makes Auth, a lively, jumpy man, plop his head right on the table with a woeful shrug.

Of course that's not the only thing that Auth hears. "I get a lot of hate mail, but it's predictable," he says, nonchalant. "A lot of it is people saying 'screw you' to me the way they think I said 'screw you' to them. Not a serious dialogue at all. Or else they claim I'm sort of taking advantage of free speech, that I ought to go to Russia, where I'd be shot, and that if America was any good, I'd be shot here, too."

One of the biggest outpourings of mail came when Auth took sick and The Inquirer ran a little box saying "Tony Auth is ill."

"The paper got all kinds of letters saying, 'We knew it, it's been obvious for years.'" Auth says happily. "I told my editor the next time that happened he should run a box saying 'Tony Auth is sick, sick, sick.'"

> "The ideal is to make people see something in a new light, to say 'Oh, yeah, that's right.' The criticism of a cartoonist simplifying an issue is a criticism I hear from people who think I haven't simplified it correctly."
> Tony Auth

It's not so much that Auth has developed a professional impermeability, though he has, as his feeling that specific reactions to his cartoons, either positive or negative, are not as important as people just reacting, period, and not going "Eh."

"The ideal is to make people see something in a new light, to say 'Oh, yeah, that's right,'" he explains. "What we call information is really a glut of some facts, some public relations, some nonsense, some propaganda. I try and cut through it, illustrate what's really going on. The criticism of a cartoonist simplifying an issue is a criticism I hear from people who think I haven't simplified it correctly. Otherwise they say, 'Wow, you really cut through all the crap and got right to the point!'"

Which is not to say that absolutely nothing upsets Tony Auth. Working from inaccurate information is his worst fear, illustrated by the time immediately after Allende's overthrow in Chile when he did a cartoon depicting it as a middle-class people's revolution. Even at this juncture, thinking of that makes him groan audibly.

Almost as bad is the problem of being misunderstood, of being too subtle. A cartoon on nuclear proliferation fizzled because many people either weren't familiar with the symbol for nuclear energy or hadn't seen the sorcerer's apprentice scene from "Fantasia" on which it was based.

And when Auth drew Henry Kissinger as a bovine sort of animal being worshiped on Capitol Hill, everyone got confused. Was it a golden calf or a sacred cow? One cautious newspaper called to ask if it could excise the udders, and another, Auth swears, "wanted to know what I was trying to imply by drawing Henry Kissinger with four penises."

Besides expressing curiosity about the source of his ideas, most people meeting Auth seem surprised that he's as young as he is, namely 35. "The age that seems right is 56," he says, smiling. "And every once in a while when I use a credit card people say, 'Oh, is your father the cartoonist?'"

Though he's drawn for as long as he can remember, it took Vietnam to turn Auth political. "I was a medical illustrator, apolitical, and if it wasn't for the war, chances are I'd be at Johns Hopkins or someplace right now, being very happy. But there was a chance I'd be drafted so I checked things out and I got gradually convinced that the war was stupid, obscene, wrong."

So Auth began doing one political cartoon a week for a Los Angeles underground paper called Open City, moved on to the UCLA Bruin and, in 1971, to The Inquirer, where he says his biggest problem is "figuring out something to say five days a week, 50 weeks a year, functioning on days when you'd really rather not, when you're not inspired and there's no news."

Auth feels a kinship with other political cartoonists, both past and present. He talks of how they are "caused by periods of great social upheaval" and speaks admiringly of English cartoonist David Low:

"You've got to respect this guy incredibly. He knew what was happening, he was right, and if people had acted on his work, maybe World War II could have been prevented."

The one essential factor in all this, Auth feels, is a sense of outrage. "That's the thing you gotta have," he says. "You have to be capable of reading something and saying, 'I don't believe that!' and then translate that into a drawing. Those are the most satisfying cartoons."

And though Auth is admittedly "free of the necessity to be objective, I'm allowed to reach conclusions, I get to be irreverent,"—that doesn't mean he does without any standards at all.

Understanding needed for child's 'problem'

By ELAINE SMYTH
Copley News Service

"It's not your fault."

Just four words. But Dr. Charles Silverstein of New York City, sex therapist and author, says these are the most important words in the world parents must accept when they learn their son or daughter is a homosexual.

"The worst thing that modern psychiatry has done is to make the parents the heavies, particularly the mother," Silverstein said in an interview.

"When a son or daughter says 'I am gay,' the mother particularly feels guilty. She feels there must have been something wrong that she did in the past in raising that child and that thing caused the homosexuality."

This is just one of the myths surrounding homosexuality, he added, myths that cause pain and anguish on the part of the homosexual as well as his family.

Silverstein is an authority on the subject.

He is author of "A Family Matter: A Parents' Guide to Homosexuality." After receiving his doctorate in psychology from Rutgers University, he was trained as a sex therapist at the Payne-Whitney Clinic at New York Hospital. He also is founder and director of The Institute for Human Identity in New York City, a counseling center for gay and bisexual persons.

And, yes, adds Silverstein, he is gay.

"In the course of doing psychotherapy with gay people and in working at the institute, I frequently came across parents who had learned of their own child's homosexuality.

"And frequently in situations like this, parents are most often confused, they feel guilty and they need to talk with someone. And, through all of these interviews, I started to learn of these concerns of parents. If parents could read some of these things, it certainly would be a lot cheaper than seeing a therapist over a long period of time."

When a son or daughter "comes out" and tells the parents of his or her homosexuality, Silverstein's initial advice to the parents is "first hold your breath and then sit down and talk and talk."

"Don't assume you know what he or she means. Find out. Find out — ask — what your son or daughter's life is like."

Silverstein said that in his experiences in counseling, parents rarely ask about intimate details in their child's life.

"Most parents are more interested in whether their son or daughter is going to be happy or successful. One of the worst things when a son or daughter comes out is that the parents think they suddenly don't know their child."

Silverstein discourages parents from seeking a professional therapist on first learning the news. He also discourages parents from sending their homosexual child to one.

"When a son or daughter comes to their parents the kids are saying, 'I love you and I want to talk to you.'

"If you then say go see Dr. Smith or go and see Dr. Smith yourself — it's a statement to the kid that 'I don't want to talk to you' and it is taken as a rejection.

"I suggest a lot of talk first. No professional can help at that stage. Later on, when the dust settles, if a professional is required, then by all means, get one, but not in the early stage."

Silverstein estimates that between 6 and 8 percent of the U.S. population is gay. While research suggests it is less among women, Silverstein says he and the institute's staff feel it is equally divided.

Small town gets 'first' with satellite hospital

By JUDY BOCKLAGE
Associated Press Writer

PARIS, Ark. (AP) — The city of Paris and the St. Edward Medical Center at Fort Smith are undertaking what they believe is an innovative project — providing health care by long distance.

The Paris community has been without a hospital since the late 1960s, when a privately owned doctors' hospital closed.

Leaders in the community wanted a health facility closer than 20 or 40 miles away, but officials at St. Edward and their consultants advised them a rural community such as Paris could not economically support a full-fledged hospital. They suggested instead that Paris build a satellite.

Paris Mayor Bill Elsken said the new satellite could be smaller than a totally self-sufficient hospital need be, with the result that it would be chaper for the patient.

"It is a major effort at cost containment, not only in the building, but also in the operation," said Sister Judith Marie-Keith, administrator of St. Edward.

The Paris satellite will have 22 beds, X-ray equipment, laboratories, an operating room, an obstetrics unit and a nursery, just like any other hospital.

The savings result from the fact that the facility will not have to have a kitchen, laundry, or areas for supplies and accounting, Sister Judith said. It will use the facilities at the 341-bed medical center for those functions.

Assembly line tedium target of projects

The Washington Post

DETROIT — When auto pioneer Henry Ford introduced the assembly line, he described it as a "haven for those who haven't got the brains to do anything else," a mind-numbing notion that has dominated the American workplace for most of the 20th century.

Now the auto industry, which gave the world the robot-theory of mass production, is pioneering in the dismantling of the system it did so much to create — largely by inviting workers to put their brains as well as muscles to work.

Surprisingly enough, a leader — perhaps the leader — is none other than the biggest assembly line operator of them all: The General Motors Corp., the nation's largest auto manufacturer and its biggest industrial employer, with 560,000 employees at 112 plants in 35 divisions spread over 18 states.

In cooperation with the United Auto Workers, GM is encouraging scores of so-called "quality of worklife" projects aimed at making work more satisfying by giving workers a voice in determining what they do and how they do it.

The projects vary in size, scope and practical application, ranging from small offices to entire assembly plants, from flexible scheduling of work hours to redesign of jobs, production areas and whole patterns of decision-making.

Many plants are still operating largely under old rules, the number of workers who can claim that their work is substantially different is still modest, and corporate and union gurus of the movement are careful not to proclaim the arrival of a new industrial millennium.

But the very fact that GM is involved at all — considering its size, corporate complexity and historical identity with the development of mass production techniques — gives a powerful new impetus to a movement that has more often been associated with ivory towers than corporate board rooms and union halls.

"It's slow and evolutionary, but it's become the norm at GM," says Delmar L. Landen, GM's director of organizational research and development.

In terms of scale, I don't know of any other corporation that has as much going as GM," says Irving Bluestone, international vice president of the United Auto Workers in charge of its GM division.

Sidney Harman, who championed the work improvement concept as chief executive of Harman International Industries before becoming Under Secretary of Commerce earlier this year, shares the view that something important is happening at GM.

Free education not owed aliens

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The state does not owe a free education to children who are in the United States illegally, the 3rd Court of Civil Appeals ruled today.

The court's decision came in a case filed on behalf of 10 illegal alien children from Mexico, who were barred from entering Houston public schools unless they paid tuition.

It is directly contrary to a finding by U.S. Dist. Judge William Wayne Justice in a similar case from Tyler.

Lawyers for the Houston children claimed it was not their fault that they were in Texas illegally, and that illegal alien children would grow up to be an uneducated "slave class" if denied a free education.

But the appeals court said, "The child should have no greater rights to a free education, due to his unlawful presence than those rights he would have had if he had not come to this country."

Alien children who are in the Unites States legally do have a right to a free public education under Texas law.

The court said that to grant a free education to illegals would burden taxpayers and those who are attending school by virtue of the fact that they are citizens or legally-admitted foreigners.

"There are perhaps as many as 5,000 illegal alien children residing in the Houston school district. The testimony was that it is more expensive to educate such children than other children. In that connection, the evidence was that if the illegal alien children were permitted to attend school tuition free, the added cost to the Houston school system could be as much as $8.35 million each year," the court said.

Panel agrees to fund repairs

BIG SPRING — The Howard County Commissioner's Court has agreed to finance recommended repairs on the Howard County Jail.

The repairs were begun at the recommendation of Sheriff A. N. Standard, who had been in contact with the Texas Jail Commission in regard to Howard County Jail conditions.

Standard presented a list of completed repairs, along with seven additional items required by the state. The commissioners agreed to pursue some of the items while seeking exceptions on others.

Accepted improvements were putting a lock on each door, securing a catwalk with heavy gauge wire, installing a fire-proof door on the catwalk between the female and juvenile sections and installing doorstops on each main cell block door.

Variances or exceptions to the other recommendations will be sought by Standard at the request of the commissioners, including construction of a recreation area, increasing the jail staff to provide 24-hour supervision and installing intercom communication with inmates.

Trial delay refused

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court today refused to delay a Houston probate court trial on the purported March 19, 1968, will of Howard Hughes.

The trial began Monday, and another Hughes trial is underway in Las Vegas, Nev.

Noah Dietrich, executor under the purported will, and the Corporation of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints asked for the delay.

The petition for a delay said "Dietrich is now faced with a situation requiring him to proceed to trial in two states simultaneously. This course of action will greatly prejudice the rights of Dietrich as executor and the beneficiaries he represents..."

One problem with having two trials going on at once, the plea for a writ of andamus said, is that the original will cannot be available in the Houston court until the Nevada trial concludes.

Youth faces tragedy in death of mother

By VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures Writer

"There wasn't time enough to say "goodbyes."

Stephen Mashler

His family—father and relatives—didn't share the secret they were harboring, that she was terminally ill, until two weeks before his mother died.

It has been five years since 16-year-old Stephen Mashler lost his mother, but somehow the memories are still there because "there wasn't time enough to say goodbyes," says the handsome 6-foot-3 youth.

His family — father and relatives — didn't share the secret they were harboring, that she was terminally ill, until two weeks before his mother died, he said. His grief made such an impression on author Peggy Mann, who knew his mother, that she decided to write a book about such situations to help other young people.

"I interviewed a number of young people who had experienced similar tragedies to get perspective on a book, which had to be fictionalized because there was so much to say and I wanted to provide a strong message," she said. "Stephen helped me a great deal."

The book, "There Are Two Kinds of Terrible," was recently published.

"I had no one to relate to when I finally found out about my mother," Stephen commented. "I didn't have a girl friend or an older friend. I talked to my aunt a little bit, but I could not communicate with my father. I just did not feel open with him."

Like many suburban youths — he had lived in Mamaroneck, N.Y. — Stephen had little contact with his hard working father, who holds a U.N. post and travels a good deal.

"I played baseball with my mother and sometimes we went to the movies. We did a lot of things together. She liked every kind of animal and birds. I guess I inherited a love of nature from her," he says.

Stephen is living with some "good family friends" in Leonia, N.J., where he is a junior in high school, but he wishes he could settle down in one spot for a while.

"It is just not the feeling that you really belong exactly where you are at the time. You look on it more as an experience, though, than a bad time in your life." He gets together with his father whenever they can, but it is not often.

"My father really tried to do what he considered best for me. In trying to be considerate, maybe he was over-considerate," Stephen said. "The book is a good idea because it may make people think."

Miss Mann's fictionalized version comes down a little hard on father-son relationships because "it is a lot of fathers rolled into one." She was writing a book about Ralph Bunche when she met Stephen's mother, Doreen, who had worked with Bunche at the U.N.

"Actually, the mother is a combination, too. The main idea was to show the effect such a plight can have on a youngster," she explained.

Literacy important issue, says Culver

Midland County Judge Barbara Culver was guest speaker when Altrusa Club of Midland, Inc. met in the Midland Hilton.

Since Altrusa's goal for this biennium, from International down through the local clubs, is to combat illiteracy, and the major project of the local club, currently, is crime prevention, Judge Culver, an Altrusan, discussed juvenile crime in connection with illiteracy.

With school attendance compulsory through age 17, the question is asked, "How is it possible for a person to reach adulthood and not learn to read and write?" Yet, there are over 800 million people, over age 15, who cannot. These people cannot read street signs, grocery ads, nothing of what is contained in their daily newspaper, nor are they able to fill out an employmet application. And, should they secure employment, other than simple manual labor, they are unable to read instructions or directives.

Using the recent two-year study of scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT), taken by more than one million high school juniors and seniors, on which a perfect score would be 800, "the verbal exam has dropped 49 points and the mathematical score 32 points," said Judge Culver.

"Educators seem to agree that flunking or "detaining" a student who has not met grade requirements is not a good practice, and "social" promotion is the trend, even if the student is not capable of meeting the requirements of the next grade.

"Some years ago a high school diploma was a sign of achievement and both child and parent were proud. Giving diplomas to persons that have not earned them is cheating that person.

"However, there are problems in holding back a student two or three years. A 15 or 16 year-old student in the sixth grade would pose a problem, and educators feel that it is better to move the 'slower learner' on into junior high school where he can be put in a remedial class, later on getting into a trade-oriented program. Then, of course, he can get out of high school, with a diploma, never having learned to read proficiently, and hardly being able to sign his name."

Judge Culver noted that the slow learner who is promoted to a higher grade each year never stands a chance to catch up, but gets further behind each year. And also if the student is not able to read and thereby understand, except in a lower grade level, there is no understanding of the subject; therefore it becomes dull, a bore and he hates it.

"So he begins to skip school and truancy is the early-warning that things are not going to get better, in most cases. In many instances, fortunately, help is available and the student does respond. But far too often he does not respond and eventually ends up in juvenile court.

"While it is hard to place all the blame on reading, most authorities agree it is a major factor. The student is too young to get a job and money is, naturally a necessity, secured in whatever way available.

"Some people feel that a revised evaluation program might help both the schools, who can do only so much, and the students. If, at the end of eight years' schooling, a student can not meet the required standards to enter junior high school, he or she should be relieved of the compulsory requirement to stay in school until his 17th birthday, because if he hasn't learned the three 'R's' in eight years, it is not likely that he will achieve much within the next four.

"Fortunately, concluded Mrs. Culver, many students who get out of high school academically handicapped come to realize later they are not going to be able to do anything beyond manual labor and turn to the GED program, learn the basic fundamentals, and earn the high school diploma they shunned while in school.

"Perhaps we will never achieve the great American dream of a completely literate society, but we must try, and each of us must stress the importance of literacy and encourage those of all ages who are illiterate to do all they can to overcome this handicap."

Mrs. F. E. Cunningham, chairman of Altrusa information, reported on the recent orientation program at which Susan Fdwards and Gladys Penn were welcomed as new members.

Pam Johnson, a member of vocational services, reported on that committee's project, and noted that regular committee meetings will be held at noon on each third Thursday. The next session will be in the Reddy Room of Texas Electric Service Co.

Mrs. J. P. H. McMullan, community service chairman, spoke on the club's crime check program, urging members to host block parties. She noted it is not necessary to be a member of Altrusa Club to host one of these parties and anyone interested in doing so can call any Altrusan and arrangements will be made.

Mary Alice Tidwell, club president, announced that the annual Lucy Mashburn Woman of the Year award dinner will be held Feb. 10.

Prosthesis not used for vanity, says woman who had mastectomy

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I've just had the biggest slapdown in my life. My insurance company has disallowed the prosthesis I bought for the mastectomy I had four years ago.

It's not a case of vanity or replacing a piece of female equipment. It's a case of restoring equilibrium. Without proper balance, a woman cannot walk straight. Also, her neck and shoulders ache from the lopsidedness.

Those little pads and "falsies" from the department store don't work. At my son's wedding, I was dancing and having a marvelous time, when my sister caught my eye and whispered urgently in my ear, "Please go to the ladies' room and check you falsie!" (It had worked its way up to my shoulder!)

After that, I phoned my local American Cancer Society to find out where to get a properly fitting prosthesis. Just two days after I had it, my neck and shoulder pain disappeared. And it feels so good and looks so natural.

Abby, if you print this, maybe some bright insurance executive will see it and realize that such a prosthesis is not simply cosmetic. It's vital to the health of a woman who has had a mastectomy.—ST. LOUIS WOMAN

DEAR WOMAN: Here's your letter. Insurance Executives?

DEAR ABBY: I've been married less than a month and my husband has already given me an ultimatum. If I go on any overnight business trips with the professional group I belong to, we are finished! Abby, this is my third marriage, and I want it to be my last.

I am a professional woman and I've gone to these meetings for years. I am not going to give them up just because my husband feels threatened.

I made the mistake of telling him about a couple of flings I had on these trips, but that was long before I knew him. I swear I have no interest in any other man!

He won't believe me. He is an absolute nut on the subject! I'm 38, and don't need any extracurricular flings.

How can I convince this nut I'm married to that he can trust me out of town?—NOT GIVING IN

DEAR NOT: You should have settled this with your "nut" before you tied the knot. If you invite him to go along on the trips, he may feel less threatened. If that doesn't work, you will have to choose between your nut and your business trips.

DEAR ABBY: My husband's boss wants to transfer us to a bigger city about 500 miles from here. It has more advantages for our children and would mean a big promotion for my husband, but every time I think of moving, I burst into tears. I've even put off going there to look for a place to live because I hate the thought of leaving this town.

I've lived here all my life. My family lives here. Our children's friends are here. And we have just built a lovely home. I know I sound selfish, but I can't help it. My husband wants to move. If I need a good lecture, let me have it.—HATES TO MOVE

DEAR HATES: You rattled the right cage. If a man is to succeed in business, his greatest asset is a wife who is always in his corner. Let him accept the promotion. You and your children will make new friends. Help your husband climb the ladder of success by being supportive and you will have another lovely home that his "Jack" built.

Feminist magazines in Japan

By KATHRYN TOLBERT

TOKYO (AP) — When the first issue of Feminist, a new women's magazine, arrived at one Tokyo bookstore, the unknowing clerk stacked it in the men's magazine section.

The word "feminist" in Japanese is usually taken to mean a ladies' man.

But the magazine Feminist is one of several new publications that have appeared in recent months, each aimed at catching the changing trends and lifestyles of the Japanese.

With Yoko Ono on the cover, the first issue includes articles on why Buddhism subjugates women and the mass media promotes the male image of ideal women.

The first run of 22,000 copies sold out in Tokyo's bookstores, although it didn't do as well in outlying areas.

"One of the purposes of Feminist is to introduce women's studies and cultivate Japanese cultures of the past," said founder and editor Ikuko Atsumi, who is also a poet and lecturer at Aoyama Gakuin University.

"A book like De Beauvoir's 'Second Sex' should have been written in Japan. We should learn what elements we have that made this kind of maledominated society.

"The more women students study, the more they strengthen male society. I was a student of English literature, studied Shakespeare, Tennyson and wrote my thesis on Dylan Thomas. But I learned nothing about how to live as a woman. The female element in culture is important," she said.

"I Am Woman," another publication subtitled "Magazine for New Women," is now in its fifth issue, with a circulation of 70,000 and a staff of six. A mildly feminist magazine, it brings out some of the complaints and dilemmas of women in articles such as "New Meaning of Female Friends," "How To Be Independent" and "New Women's Universities."

"Magazines up to now have not treated women seriously," said editor Shinji Ishii. "Now they are facing the consequences as the fashion magazines pick up more readers and the televisions take over the scandals."

He said women's liberation is weak in Japan, making it impossible to have a straight lib magazine.

Ms. Atsumi said the women's movement in Japan is now at a more serious stage, more scholarly and intellectual.

"Still, we are five years behind American feminists. In 1972 Ms. began and other traditional magazines changed in the United States. Such changes are just starting in Japan."

Most magazines in Japan are edited by men and according to Ms. Atsumi, don't try to deal with women's fundamental problems.

Mamie now 81

ABILENE, Kan. (AP) — Mamie Eisenhower planned to observe her 81st birthday by visiting the Eisenhower Center and the grave of her late husband, former President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Mrs. Eisenhower's birthday is today.

Last year, Mrs. Eisenhower began visiting the grave on her birthday, rather than on the former president's birthday. On that day, Oct. 14, the Army lays wreaths at the president's grave inside a chapel at the center.

Author prefers happy endings

PRINCETON, Minn. (AP) — Savage passion, blazing kisses and tender caresses are part of everyday life, sandwiched between washing clothes and cleaning house, for a rural Princeton woman.

Kathleen Woodiwiss, author of three can't-put-'em-down historical romances which have earned her more than $1 million, is currently working on her fourth novel.

"I think I fill a need for a romantic novel with a happy ending," Mrs. Woodiwiss said. "A lot of books don't leave you with that feeling. They leave you depressed. I don't like to feel depressed. I try to give a little bit of joy."

A common thread — faithfulness — runs through her novels, Mrs. Woodiwiss said.

The main characters in "The Flame and the Flower," "The Wolf and the Dove," and "Shanna" may be passionate or passive, domineering or headstrong. But they're always faithful to each other.

"I feel part of love is making a commitment," Mrs. Woodiwiss said. "A lot of other people think like that too. It's no different today than it was way back when.

"If there isn't a basic love story in a book, one that has faithfulness, I just don't enjoy it as well."

The attractive 38-year-old brunette, who speaks with a slight Southern accent, says she does not like stories that rely on sex to keep up a reader's interest.

"I try to treat it as part of the love story, since it's natural between two people who are in love. It's not just for sensation's sake," she said.

The historical settings vary, but the hero is always incredibly handsome, the heroine ravishingly beautiful, they're always true to each other and the scenes between them never get really explicit. Mrs. Woodiwiss, who lives on a 55-acre spread with her husband, Ross, and their three sons, says it takes her about a year and a half to complete a novel, including time spent on historical research, but she doesn't work at it constantly.

HOROSCOPE

By CARROLL RIGHTER

(Thurs., Nov. 17)

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Follow conservative and proven modes of expression for if you do get involved in anything that is dramatic or drastic you lose out where it counts the most. Don't give in to temptation to make sudden changes. Consider all angles first.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Don't contact allies whose ideas are radical since they could not help you at all. Group affairs could also be unfruitful. Keep busy at whatever is of a practical and constructive nature.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Study plans you have concerning civic or career matters with utmost care before putting them in motion. Credit affairs are important, so be accurate.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Making new arrangements is fine, but don't put them in operation just yet. Any new contacts you make must be screened well. Don't get caught in any hair-brained schemes. Be practical.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Get into the obligations that are yours and handle them efficiently and quickly. Don't argue with mate, loved one and spoid the harmony now enjoyed.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Take it easy where trying to come to a better understanding with others is concerned. Don't lose temper. Study the situation well first.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Use orthodox methods in handling responsibilities and get right results. Forget about using impractical gadgets. Avoid that co-worker who is in poor humor, and don't let this person bother you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Although having fun is on your mind, be sure you stick to important duties instead and don't incur further expense.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Handle home affairs wisely and improving conditions there. Remove tensions wherever you can. Take no chances with credit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Doublecheck data you get that is important to your interests, or you could get into trouble. Drive with utmost care.

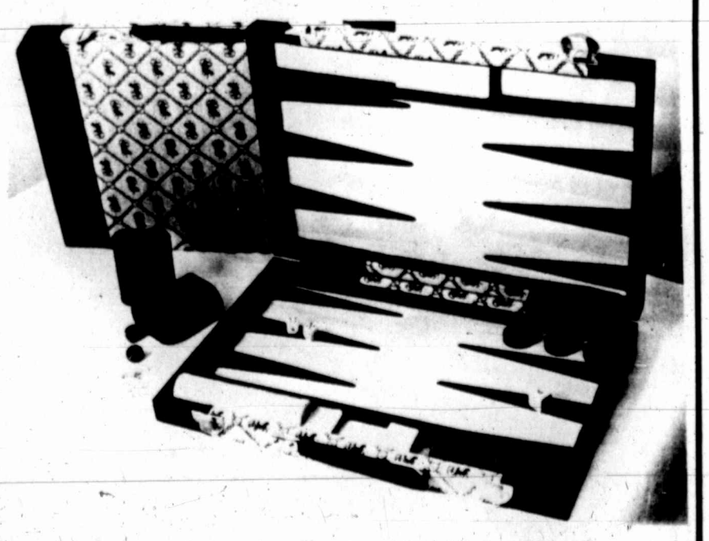

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) You think you can buy your way out of some difficulty now, but use more orthodox methods for best results. Be sure you get right prices if planning to improve property.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Take care of personal affairs but don't lose your temper or you lose out. Forget that social affair that could prove to be a big fizzle. Concentrate on something more worthwhile.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Don't permit tensions to floor you and be more objective for best results. Get rid of whatever brings you trouble.

Pasta, cheese and herbs are molded in a ring and crowned with a robust filling rich in turkey and vegetables and simmered in spaghetti sauce. And the Turkey Loaf is a delicate counterpoint of texture and taste with Italian cooking sauce baked inside and served on top as well. Two beautiful ways to let the Thanksgiving feast go on.

An Italian renaissance for Thanksgiving bird

Let the feast go on...the Thanksgiving feast, of course. To give turkey leftovers an inspired renaissance, combine them with the succulent tastes of Italian cuisine.

This lovely idea for fixing favored spaghetti is likely to become a tradition after its first serving. The cooked pasta is combined with cheese and herbs and places in a ring mold to set for a few moments to then be turned out and generously crowned with a robust filling rich in turkey and vegetables which have been simmered in a jar of spaghetti sauce.

TURKEY SPAGHETTI RING

2 cups cooked turkey, cut in small cubes
½ cup minced onion
¼ lb. fresh mushrooms, finely chopped
2 tablespoons salad oil
1 jar (15½ oz.) spaghetti sauce
2 tablespoons parsley flakes
1 cup processed Swiss cheese, grated
½ lb. spaghetti (or spaghettini)
⅓ cup bottled Italian dressing

Brown onion and mushrooms in oil in large skillet. Drain. Add spaghetti sauce and 1 tablespoon parsley flakes. Add turkey. Simmer 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Mix cheese, salad dressing, remaining parsley flakes in hot, cooked spaghetti. Turn into greased 4-6 cup ring mold. Let stand for a few minutes. Unmold onto large platter. Pour turkey sauce into center of spaghetti ring. Yield: 5 servings.

And for a delicate counterpoint of texture and taste, the Turkey Loaf is beautiful. A jar of Italian cooking sauce is the success factor. Half the jar is added to ground, cooked turkey and sauteed vegetables, and, after baking, the loaf is bestowed with a final lacing of the sauce.

TURKEY LOAF

2 tablespoons minced onion
½ lb. fresh mushrooms, sliced
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
2 cups ground cooked turkey
2 eggs
1 jar Italian cooking sauce
½ cup seasoned bread crumbs
½ cup chopped parsley
Saute' onion and mushrooms in butter. Mix together turkey, eggs, and 1 cup of the spaghetti sauce, blending well. Add the bread crumbs and parsley, blending well. Turn into buttered loaf pan, and bake in a preheated 350 degrees oven for 40 minutes. Do not overcook. Heat remaining sauce and pour over turkey loaf before serving. Yield: 5 servings.

Try these superb dishes and discover why the Italian cuisine has enraptured the world. Use some Italian talent on your turkey leftovers and...let the feast go on.

America's popular carrot cake — you probably have a recipe for it — may just slip into the ranks as a traditional Thanksgiving dessert. For the holiday we like to garland the cake with mini-carrots made from carrot fudge. The candy is creamy, the color is appropriate and the carrot flavor comes through. The fudge recipe:

CARROT FUDGE
(For Mini-carrots)

1-pound bag carrots, trimmed and pared
3½ cups sugar
¼ cup light corn syrup
1 and 1-3rd cups light cream
¼ cup butter or margarine
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
Butter an 8 by 8 by 2-inch cake pan.

Using a grater with ¼-inch slots, grate enough carrot (1 large or about ¼ pound) to make about 1 cup loosely packed; reserve. Slice the remaining carrots and steam (in a pan with a solid bottom) or boil until tender; drain well; puree and measure about 1 cup. (It's a good idea to have someone on hand to help with the long stirring that the next step requires.) In a heavy 3- quart saucepan, over medium heat and stirring constantly, bring the grated carrot, the 1 cup carrot puree and the remaining ingredients to a boil. Still stirring constantly over medium heat, continue boiling until mixture reaches 234 degrees on a candy thermometer (soft ball stage) — about 1 hour. Cool without stirring until temperature drops to 110 degrees (mixture will feel warm to the touch) on the candy themometer. With a wooden spoon beat until mixture begins to stiffen — about 2 minutes. Turn into the prepared pan. Let stand until firm; cut into squares. Shape some of the fudge into mini-carrots by rolling small amounts of it into carrot shapes; press a parsley spring into the top of each; use as a garnish for a frosted carrot cake. Store tightly covered in the refrigerator. Makes about 2 pounds.

Style moves into kitchen, focal point in many homes

Even short order cooks will agree, the kitchen is becoming the focal point in many homes. Cooking enjoyment is growing and a mislaid garlic bulb can create a crisis.

Some are large and rambling kitchens that recall the baronial cookery from the days of yore about which the household revolved. Others are elegant users of space with chic, modern equipment, tools, collections and dining areas. No matter, kitchens are "in" and all of the facets are explored by Terence Conran in what might be the ultimate book of its type, "The Kitchen."

A functional handsome kitchen can by accomplished even by "doing it on the cheap," he explains in the book. These can include the shelf kitchen — a whole kitchen wall hung with shelves; a cupboard kitchen — one that might be screened from visitors' view by sliding doors; and an island kitchen which is possible if there is enough space to move about in even though the area is small.

Kitchens of professionals with their great assemblage of equipment can provide many ideas that might be copied on a lesser scale. A spectacular kitchen, 20 feet by 40 feet, belonging to George Lang, restaurateur, calligrapher, concert violinist, is an example. Certain luxuries — a huge refrigerator that holds a full case of champagne might not be important to the average householder — but they might be intrigued by electric units built into counters, a well in a counter that dispenses hot plates or a combined floor idea, white ceramic tile and dark parquet.

Choosing a style is another consideration. Streamlined and glossy? Farmhouse style? Equipped with comfortable upholstered pieces? A family center that is child-oriented?

There are handsome minimal kitchens and sculptural contemporary kitchens. Relating the kitchen to the house is an important point with emphasis on view, style, light, sun, car parking accessibility, the integration of floors and ceilings to the rest of the house, Conran points out.

Advice on planning your kitchen from the standpoint of color, maintenance (including a list of cleaning aids, finishes and their care, utensils and their care) laundries and work rooms is another good feature of the book. One chapter is devoted to problem kitchens.

Interesting innovations include baskets placed on shelves beneath work counters and used like drawers. An arrangement of narrow shelves is set up like a maze on a wall and has a sculptural look even as its narrow shelves accommodate jars, glasses and canisters. If there is enough space one can consider using pan cupboards, service cupboards and washing-up space for stacking clean crockery.

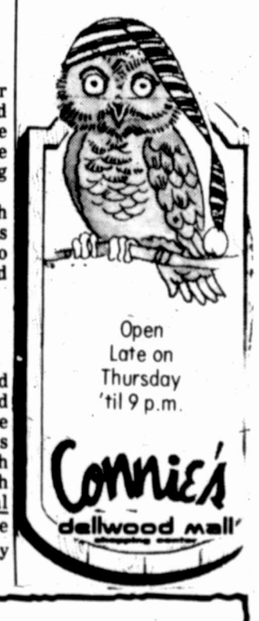

In addition to illustrating kitchens with collectibles — plates on walls, ceramic toasters on shelves, and the like, there are all the wonderful tools from butter curlers to egg wedgers, all the mixing and measuring things, salad baskets, whisks and coffee mills. Baking utensils, roasters and casseroles are illustrated along with hundreds of gadgets including the electrically powered kinds.

It is an elegant book, handsomely illustrated with hundreds of color pictures, and hardly anything has escaped the author's culinary eye. The book also contains a list of manufacturers, distributors and stores where many of the items are available.

Businesswoman, 87, operates shop

TECUMSEH, Mich. (AP) — Margaret Kidman may be 87, but she's not ready for a rocking chair yet.

This pert little Tecumseh woman still operates her own business, the Needlecraft Shop, in her home just as she has for the past 36 years.

Her daily schedule is a demanding one. She's up by 6:30 a.m. every day except Sunday, because she opens her shop at 7. All day long she greets an intermittent stream of customers, catering to their needs for yarn and other fancywork supplies.

Whenever she can grab a few moments she knits bootees or does other needlecraft, because she sells the finished products as well as the raw materials.

She waits on customers until 9 p.m., six days a week, except in the winter, when she closes at 8 o'clock.

Although she has always worked on needlecraft, she had never made a business out of it until her husband was killed. After his death, she moved from a farm to her present home, unpacked a suitbox of her handmade embroidered things, and began to sell them in her home. Originally, she kept everything in a cupboard in her dining room.

As the demand grew, she began to stock more and more kinds of supplies. Today her home has been taken over almost entirely by the yarn shop.

In some rooms, one has to inch through sideways to keep from knocking over the merchandise. Towering mountains of yarn dominate the house, dwarfing those who walk between them.

The kitchen is full, the dining room is full, the upstairs is crammed to the ceiling. Only a small place is left on the kitchen table for her to eat, and a big chair in the living room precariously clings to the last bit of space there that is still non-yarn shop.

Baby quilts are kept in a big box under Mrs. Kidman's bed, and the bed itself becomes a display table when someone wants to look at the merchandise.

House-Senate panel making no progress

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — House-Senate conferees have given up hope of reaching a greement on an energy bill by Thanksgiving and now have set their sights on mid-December.

This was to have been a week of real progress in resolving the vast differences between the two Houses. Congress is not in session and the conferees would not be interrupted by bells summoning them to their chambers to vote.

In two uninterrupted days, neither the conferees on tax sections nor the separate group of conferees meeting on non-tax provisions ahve made any visible progress in settling the major issues.

Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., chairing the tax conference, announced tuesday that his group will spend this week going through the bill, on a first tentative round, making decisions where it can. The tax conferees will not meet next week because of the holiday but will reconvene Nov. 28 in what Ullman said he hoped would be a mood to do business.

The tax conferees reached the controversial crude oil tax Tuesday and spent much of the day in philosophical discussion on whether President Carter's bill gives oil men enough incentive to go look for oil or whether they need a higher price. Carter requested, and the House approved, taxing up the price of domestic crude oil to world levels to reduce consumption and rebate the revenue to the public. The Senate rejected the tax but may approve it if proceeds are used to produce more energy.

The other group of conferees spent their second day discussing electric utility rate structure revision, on which they also are 180 degrees apart. They cleared away some differences but remain in disagreement on the basic point — whether to impose mandatory federal standards to help conserve energy.

Carter's program, which the House approved, would require power companies to change their rate structures in various ways. One would be to end the practice of charging lower rates to their biggest customers, a practice which presumably encourages wastes of energy. Another would be to require utilities to give cheaper rates to customers using power at off-peak hours.

The Senate refused to permit the federal government to enter this area which traditionally has been a state function.

The conferees took a couple of short steps toward compromise, but were still far apart when they quit for the night.

The non-tax conferees probably also will take off next week if they can settle the electric utility rate structure issue. Then the two sets of conferees will meet together to act on natural gas pricing and take final action on the tax provisions.

Two republican conferees, Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., and Rep. John B. Anderson, R-Ill., went on national television Tuesday night to respond to President Carter's address last week calling for approval of his energy bill, to reduce dependence on foreign oil.

The Republican speakers said Carter's program would not meet his goals of saving 4.5 million barrels of oil a day by 1985 and said it would do too little to increase production of energy. Several government agencies which reviewed the president's program estimated it would fall about one million barrels short of its goal.

Pecos wells final; stepout test slated

A Pecos field gained extenders and site was staked for a stepout in another.

R. W. Blair of Fort Stockton has taken over operations at two former Oil & Gas Producers, Inc., El Paso, operations, and completed the projects as extenders in the Beverly (Queen) oil pool, eight miles southwest of Imperial.

No. 3-A Sadie Reed (originally staked as No.1-C), finaled for a daily pumping potential of four barrels of 25-gravity oil, plus eight barrels of water, with gas-oil ratio of 12,500-1. It finaled through pertorations at 1,742-1,764 feet, after 500 gallons of acid, and fracturing with 10,500 gallons and 10,000 pounds of sand.

It is 990 feet from northeast and 2,338 feet from northwest lines of section 20, block 10, H&GN survey.

No. 2-A Sadie Reed, 330 feet from northeast and 1,670 feet from northwest lines of section 20, block 10, H&GN, gauged a 24-hour pumping potential of five barrels of 25-gravity oil and 75 barrels of water, with gas-oil ratio of 1,200-1.

It finaled through perforations at 1,722-1,855 feet. The pay section had been acidized with 5,000 gallons and fractured with 18,186 gallons and 32,000 pounds.

It originally was Oil & Gas Producers No. 1-B Sadie Reed.

Gulf Oil Corp. No. 1 Nora Boatman, et al, has been scheduled as a ½-mile south stepout to the four-well USM (Queen) field of Pecos, 3½ miles north of Fort Stockton.

Prospector shows oil

Brock, Highland & Equity, Midland, No. 1 Kermit Townsite, Winkler County deep prospector, ½ mile south of Kermit, recovered shows on a drillstem test in an unidentified formation from, 12,090-12,165 feet.

Tool was open 2¼ hours on the test which surfaced gas in 10 minutes, with volume too small to measure. Recovery was 2,047 feet of water blanket and 184 feet of oil- and gas-cut mud.

The sample chamber recovery was 600 cubic centimeters of oil and 300 cubic centimeters of very heavily oil- and gas-cut mud and 2.9 cubic feet of gas. Flowing pressure was 937-992 pounds and one-hour initial and four-hour final shut-in pressures were 2,087 and 2,033 pounds, respectively.

Operator was taking another drillstem test from 12,170-12,250 feet, in the Ellenburger.

It is 1,980 feet from south and 1,830 feet from west lines of section 4, block B-5, PSL survey.

Proposed Sadat Israel visit stirs up Middle East

By JIM HOAGLAND
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's declared readiness to visit a land that does not even exist on Arab maps or in Arab textbooks is a bold break with some major taboos in Middle-East mythology.

Arab cartographers and school teachers still deal with Israel as "Occupied Palestine." Arabs since 1948 have been conditioned psychologically to view the Jewish state as an outlaw creation doomed to disappear.

But the Egyptian leader has given the Middle East a new jolt of his own brand of psychological "shock treatment" by publicly soliciting an invitation to go to Jerusalem to put his case for a negotiated peace to the Israeli Knesset (parliament).

Jerusalem is one of Islam's three holiest cities and Sadat is pledged to regain the Arab sector in any peace agreement.

In American terms, his decision is even more dramatic than President Nixon's 1972 trip to mainland China. The more exact equivalent would be a decision by an American President in the comming years to visit Communist-ruled Saigon.

"Shock treatment" is the phrase Sadat used to describe his decisions to expel Russian military advisers from Egypt in 1972 and then to go to war with Israel in 1973.

Sadat explained that each of those decisions, which initially stunned his own populace as well as the world, were intended to break diplomatic and psychological stalemates.

An analysis

They eventually emerged, however, as meticulqously prepared moves in a larger strategy that Sadat has doggedly followed, and which he says will eventually lead to a peace with honor between the Arabs and Israel.

Despite the impromptu appearance of Sadat's remarks to traveling American congressmen about visiting Israel and the subsequent television pairing of Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin, diplomatic analysts said Tuesday that Sadat again appears to be acting according to a carefully laid game plan.

The quick, precedent-shattering exchange by media also indicated that Sadat has found in Begin an Israeli leader who shares the Egyptian's decisiveness and appreciation of the drama of politics and diplomacy.

The two leaders were clearly aiming their words at American public opinion and were intent on showing that they do not want to be held responsible if the Carter administration's Middle East peace effort breaks down.

But they were just as clearly aware of the inevitable dramatic impact in their own region of their words, which add significantly to a new vocabulary that has been developing in the Middle East since the beginning of the decade.

For two decades after Israel was founded, Arab Leaders, broadcasters and many average citizens refused to pronounce the word "Israel" in public.

Even after the crushing defeat of Arab Armies in the 1967 war made many Arabs begin verbally to accept the reality of the Jewish state, all Arab leaders formally bound themselves to reject negotiations, recornition and trade with Israel.

Sadat has significantly changed the Arab vocabulary since, coming to power in 1970, and evidently sees a gradual but steady change of basic psychology as an integral part of ending the state of intermittent war between the Arabs and Israelis.

He first surprised other Arabs in 1971 by speaking of his willingness to make "peace" with Israel. His remarks, however, were derided as insincere by Israel's Labor government, which did not think they were worth testing.

In the middle of the 1973 war, Sadat called a press conference to disclose that he had gone to war to make peace. His call for serious peace negotiations opened the way for Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's "step-by-step" diplomacy and the two interim Sinai agreements.

Sadat's expressed willingness to meet personally with Israeli leaders — even if it is not carried out — is perhaps an even greater turnaround.

Sadat has previously said personal contacts, trade and formal recognition of Israel were matters that would have to be worked out by "another generation" of Arabs and Israelis.

Since Jordan's King Abdullah was assassinated in Jerusalem in 1951 after it was rumored that he had entered into secret contacts with Israeli leaders, Arab heads of state have refused personal contacts through a mixture of prudence, political theology and bargaining tactics.

In going to Israeli Jerusalem, Sadat would be giving away a major Arab bargaining chip. In the past, he has taken such steps as part of a "paying in advance" strategy and forcing the hand of his negotiating adversary.

But he is also evidently depending on one of the strongest cultural traits in Arab society to give him a firebreak if he goes to Israel and does not achieve immediate visible success.

Arab leaders are well known for quarreling bitterly, even gong to war with each other, and then suddenly coming together publicly to embrace and pledge undying brotherhood and fidelity. Sadat himself has engaged in such exercises with Libya's Muammar Qaddafi and Jordan's King Hussein.

Navy trying to combat problems

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Navy leaders have decided to start three major programs to combat personnel problems, including record-high desertions.

"Changing times outran us," Vice Adm. James D. Watkins, Navy personnel chief, said in an interview in describing how the Navy sailed into such troubled waters and how it plans to get out of them.

The Navy, he said, "simply did not recognize the new breed" of sailor entering the service and thus failed to make enough changes in personnel matters.

But today, said Watkins, the top leadership of the Navy agrees that enlistment bonuses, remedial education and broad-scale leadership training must be implemented as quickly as possible.

Part of the get-well plan approved by Navy Secretary W. Graham Claytor and Adm. Jaoes L. Holloway, chief of naval operations, calls for paying a bonus of about $2,000 for sailors who sign up for four years to tend the ship boilers below decks, Watkins said.

The job of boiler technician, he said, is such an unpopular one that sailors assigned to it are high on the list of those who go AWOL (absent without leave), creating further unhappiness and turbulence when new men must be trained for the job.

Watkins said enlistment bonuses for boiler technicians, which will be started within six months if no problems crop up, may be followed by other cash incentives to fill the more unpopular jobs below decks.

Staffing boiler rooms with men who chose to serve there rather than sailors who signed up for different jobs is one of several management changes the Navy expects to lower its record-high rate of 31.7 desertions for every 1,000 sailors — the figure registered for fiscal 1977.

Another step Navy leaders have decided to take, said Watkins, is the broadest remedial reading program ever tried by their service. The details, he said, currently are being worked out in high-level meetings with the U.S. Office of Education.

The idea is to raise the reading level of today's sailors by two grade levels. Thirty-one per cent of the young men coming into the Navy today read at the ninth grade level or below, often causing them to be frustrated as they try to follow the simplest service manuals.

Watkins said the plan is to establish reading clinics at Navy boot camps in San Diego, Great Lakes, Ill., and Orlando in hopes of bringing sailors up to at least the 10th grade reading level and, it is hoped, higher.

Currently, he said, the Navy's remedial reading program is limited largely to volunteer instructors working with sailors whose reading level is sixth grade or below. When the expanded reading program will start and how much it will cost is still uncertain, although the blueprint has been drawn.

While Watkins predicted the enlistment bonuses and reading clinics plus tougher rules for deserters, such as sending sailors who desert back to the same ship they left rather than transfering them to shore duty, will help, the Navy personnel chief said better leadership is the long-term answer.

The Navy was not prepared for "the more qualified, more competent, more mature, more inquisitive and more demanding" young people who started coming in the service in large numbers in 1972, Watkins said.

Somalia bowed to expansion, Soviets say

By DAN FISHER
The Los Angeles Times

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union Tuesday accused Somalia of bowing to "chauvinist expansionist moods" in its first public reaction to Mogadishu's renunciation Sunday of its freindship treaty with Moscow and the expulsion of Soviet and Cuban advisers.

The reaction came in a brief statement by Tass, the official Soviet news agency. It was described by Western diplomatic sources here as "a little tougher" than anticipated.

The 150-word Tass statement said the Somali government acted "unilaterally and in conditions of factual war it had unleased against neighboring Ethiopia. Essentially," it added, "behind this action lies dissatisfaction because the Soviet Union did not support Somalia's territorial claims on a neighboring state and refused to facilitate the stirring of fratricidal war in the African Horn."

The big question now is where the Soviets might turn to replace the facilities they have lost in Somalia, are considered possible candidates.

The primary strategic loss to the Soviets is the naval support complex at Berbera at the mouth of the Red Sea. In addition to a deep-water port, and housing for about 1,500 personnel, Western intelligence estimates say the complex contains one of only two Soviet communications facilities outside the country, major fuel storage facilities, an airfield with a 13,000-foot aircraft runway, capable of handling theTU-95 Bear reconnaisance aircraft of the Soviet naval air force, and a tactical missile handling and storage facility.

Other facilities involved in the break include a fuel depot for the Soviet navy at Kismayu on the Indian Ocean.

The facilites were not considered vital to the Soviet Union, but they have been an important part of its efforts to keep an eye on U.S. military activities in the Indian Ocean. They also have given the Soviet Union a strong outpost along U.S. oil shipping lanes. "They'll want to replace those facilities," one source commented here.

According to Pentagon officials, the Russian navy will have trouble resupplying its Indian Ocean squadron with missiles after being forced out of Somalia, the Associated Press reported.

"There is no easy way they can replace that kind of a facility," one official said in describing the loss of the missile-handling complex at Berbera as a major Soviet setback.

U.S. intelligence sources said the Russians apparently had advanced indications of their ouster because they had scaled down their civilian and military presence to about 1,200 personnel, fewer than half the number reported in the past, AP reported.

The two most likely candidates for Soviet bases are Ethiopia and South Yemen. However, the political climate in Ethiopia is unstable. The government's No. 2 man was believed executed last Saturday, and Addis Ababa is fighting a secessionist war in the northern province of Eritrea, where Ethiopia's only outlets to the Indian Ocean, the ports of Assab and Massawa on the Red Sea, are located.

Because of those conditions, some diplomats here think the Soviet Union would prefer, for the short term at least, to seek facilities in South Yemen, possibly at the capital of Aden.

Whether South Yemen would risk alienating its Arab Neighbors to the north in order to satisfy Soviet military needs remains an open question.

The Soviet statement on Somalia's action went slightly further than past pronouncements regarding responsibility for the fighting over the Ogaden region of Ethiopia. However, the Soviet Union has been gradually increasing its support of Ethiopia for several months. It was the MIG jets, tanks and guns that Russia was sending to Addis Ababa rather than any Soviet refusal to support Somalia that is seen here as the cause of Sunday's open break with Moscow by what had been the Russians' oldest and staunchest supporter in Africa.

Somalia President Mohamed Siad Barre has accused Cuba and the Soviet Union of planning a joint attack on his country from Ethiopia. Mogadishu also has claimed that between 7,000 and 15,000 Cubans are fighting alongside Ethiopian troops in the Ogaden. The U.S. State Department estimates the Cuban presence in Ethiopia at 550.

Somalia also broke diplomatic ties with Cuba on Sunday.

(All Cuban diplomats, military advisers and their dependents left Somalia Tuesday, four hours before the deadline for a government expulsion order, according to reports from the area.

(The Cubans — 32 men, 10 women and two children — flew from Mogadishu's oceanside airport to Aden.)

The Tass statement made no mention of Cuba. "It is common knowledge that the Soviet specialists are in Somalia at the request of the Somali government itself, which more than once expressed gratitude for their assitance," it said. "The Somali side has also more than once highly assessed the significance of the treaty of friendship and cooperation for Somalia. Judging from the present steps, chauvinist expansionist moods prevailed over common sense inside the Somali government."

Western experts here judged the Somali actions as a "tremendous prestige blow" to the Soviet Union and a serious strategic setback as well. "It throws the Soviet position in the Red Sea region into a cocked hat," one knowledgeable source said.

The experts also say the loss of Soviet prestige in the Third World resulting from the break may be considerable. It was the second broken friendship treaty for the Soviet Union in Africa — Egypt being the first.

Unhappy farmers call for strike

By MARGY McCAY
Associated Press Writer

A call to unite and strike has gone out to the traditionally independent American farmer — and there is evidence he is listening.

The appeal comes from American Agriculture, a group of disgruntled farmers in Colorado who say they are tired of selling their milo, wheat and corn for less than it costs to produce.

"We're working for one common goal — 100 percent of parity for all products that we produce," said Dale Schroder, a spokesman for the fledgling group.

"We ask for no subsidies; we're willing to take our chances with the elements. But we want a contract from the government as to how much any individual farmer is expected to produce," he said.

The movement to unite farmers appears to be spreading. Farmers in Washington, Nebraska, Kansas and Georgia have staged marches and "tractorcades" to call attention to their plight.

"We're getting really strong in about 30 states," said Schroder. "And I think we'll have a really good turnout on this thing. I feel we're going to come out of this with support like you wouldn't believe."

American Agriculture has named Dec. 14 as strike day. Farmers have been asked to withhold all produce from the market and to boycott all but essential goods after that date.

"We're not going to buy a damned thing," Schroder said. "We consume 40 percent of the steel made in the United States. If it goes to the 14th, this thing is going to shake this nation to the core."

Parity, the issue on which the strikers have focused, is a term to describe a "fair" price for farm products in relation to the farmer's cost of living. Farm prices in mid-October were just under 65 percent of parity for most products.

"We want a reasonable profit," said Tommy Carter of Alma, Ga. "How many common workers and laborers would be willing to get 64 percent of the salary they should be receiving? Well, that's what we get for our crops."

Georgia is a stronghold for strike supporters. Larry Lee, spokesman for the National Pork Producers Council and a former Georgian, said everything bad that can happen in farming happened in Georgia this year.

"From drought to army worms to aflatoxin (a fungus which attacks corn and soybeans) — all but about 30 counties have been declared disaster areas," said Lee.

Few observers give the strike much chance of success.

Lee said the most that farmers can do is call attention to their problems.

"I personally think that they will focus a lot of attention on the situation — and that's all they can hope to do. To excite the consumer is all for naught. They need to convince the Congressional people; they are the ones with the power," Lee said.

"What possible impact could it have on a market that has 1.3 billion bushels of wheat and two 6-billion-bushel corn crops back-to-back?" asked Tony Dechant, president of the National Farmers Union.
