$1.75 million OK'd for airport projects

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Miles of airstrip lighting will be replaced at Midland International Airport as part of a year-long $1.75 million facelift expected to begin sometime in November.

The contract, which was let Tuesday to Dallas-based Walker Engineering by Midland City Council, is being funded 90 percent in part by the Federal Aviation Administration. The remaining $200,000 will be paid through the airport fund.

Airport Director Vic White said the massive project will entail laying miles of new lighting cable that will parallel the airport's four main runways and 15 taxiways.

"A lot of the work will be done at night between midnight and 6 a.m.," said White. "We put quite a few restrictions on the contractor...it's a very complex project."

While the cablework is by far the most tedious part of the job, White said the company also will refurbish hundreds of lights, regulators and navigation signs that now don the airstrip.

"Some of the fixtures date back 40 years to World War II," said White, who initiated the project when it became clear four years ago that spare parts were just about impossible to locate.

Airport Board Chairman Ed Vogler credited Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, with securing the grant that now will allow the city to make the needed lighting improvements.

"Gramm's taken a personal interest in the airport," said Vogler, adding that it also was the senator who helped Midland obtain its international designation — a designation he says could lead to establishment of a foreign trade zone.

White said engineering design work on the system was completed months ago by Midland-based Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, which will oversee the project. Walker is expected to begin work in November.

Meanwhile, White said the final phase of construction began this week on a new cocktail lounge located near the boarding gate area.

Cost of the $300,000 plus project is being shared by the airport and Dobbs Houses Inc. of Memphis, the contracted concessionaire which is paying for the internal improvements.

White said other improvements related to asbestos removal and roof reconstruction at air terminal has been completed. "The only thing that remains is the window resealing (in the terminal area)," he said.

In two weeks, White is expected to approach Midland City Council on using other available airport funds to renovate the Windecker International Trade Center.

The center — which is located within trade zone boundaries — is a 28,000 square foot office/warehouse building owned by the airport. Two months ago, Midland City Council agreed to lease a section of the building to the U.S. Border Patrol.

"We're hopeful we can rent out the rest of that office space to other government agencies," said White about the renovation plans. "Every one is looking for office space out here...it's a good distribution site," he said.

In other business, council:

- Agreed to hold a rate change hearing for Caprock Electric Co-op, which requested the adjustment to make it competitive with TU Electric. The hearing is scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Oct. 25. Under its plan, rates would decrease in the winter and rise slightly in the summer.
- Voted 5-2 in favor of a new landscaping ordinance which sets certain standards for planting on city right-of-way property. Voting against the 12-page ordinance were Council members Robert Rendall and Katie Heck.
- Awarded a one-year contract to the FAA for construction of a long-range communication system, also called LORAN. The system will be built at Midland International Airport.

Eight candidates to be interviewed for MISD board

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

School board members, "wanting to give everyone a fair shake," opted against paring down the list of eligible candidates for the vacant District 6 position and will interview all eight next week.

The ninth applicant was not eligible because she doesn't live in the district.

"I feel like we wanted to give everybody a fair chance," said District 7 trustee Ken Marks, secretary of the board. "A short list wouldn't have been the thing to do."

The District 6 seat was vacated Sept. 15 with the death of former Midland Independent School Board President Bob Rich. After interviews with the school board are held Oct. 18, trustees will appoint his successor.

The new trustee will be sworn in by 142nd State District Judge Pat Baskin Oct. 25 at the regular board meeting.

The person selected to the position will serve until the May general school board election, Miller said.

At that time, a District 6 trustee will be elected to fulfill the remaining two years of the three-year position, he explained.

Marks urged the community, "especially those in District 6," to contact current trustees concerning their views on the selection of a candidate.

"I feel like we need all the information we can possibly get about the candidates. The important thing is that we make the right decision. We only can with input from commuty," Marks said.

"The schools belong to the community. If people have any kind of information that they would like to share with us, the rest of board would like to sit down and visit with them," the trustee continued.

Marks termed the selection one of the most important decisions the board would make. "If we don't listen to the community," he explained, "then we have no business being on that school board."

Among the eight candidates are three women with extensive experience in local school-related activities, two of whom participated in the school board race last May.

They are Dianne Anderson, Mona Craig and Penny Angelo.

The group of remaining candidates includes a lawyer, a banking executive, a dentist, a computer executive and a printing company owner.

They are Michael H. Atnipp, Jerry King, Larry Z. Rusk, Bill C. Sewell and James O. Slaton.

All the candidates have children in the MISD school system.

Mrs. Anderson, who lost the runoff race to the late Rich last May, is "genuinely interested in the educational system in our community and the direction it is headed," according to her application.

She was an active proponent of changing the district's "cluster system" which directs children in grades four through six to three different elementary schools during those grades to implement integration in the school system.

Shuttle crew says it was anxious during liftoff

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — The five veteran astronauts who flew Discovery into space say the most anxious moments of their nearly flawless flight came during liftoff, a "very long 8½ minutes" as they remembered the fate of the Challenger.

Pilot Richard Covey said Tuesday that although he had flown before, he still was "a bit taken aback" by the power of the rockets that thrust the shuttle into orbit Sept. 29.

"It was a very, very long 8½ minutes" until the main engine cut off, Covey said during the crew's first post-flight news conference at the Johnson Space Center. "I think we all felt that way."

"I'm sure we were all thinking, to some degree, about the fact that the last time this had been attempted, it wasn't successful. You never forget that," he said.

The Challenger explosion, which occurred 73 seconds after liftoff on Jan. 28, 1986, and killed all seven astronauts aboard, was blamed on a faulty booster rocket. The rockets were redesigned and NASA officials have found no damage in the new boosters.

Despite the anxious moments, Discovery's astronauts praised the shuttle's performance and its success in putting Americans back into space.

Minister says protesters 'treated like criminals'

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A Midland minister, whose alleged role in an abortion protest landed him a week-long stay in an Atlanta jail, was expected to return home today ready to resume his crusade to protect the life of the unborn.

"We were treated worse than common criminals," Russ Austin, pastor of Word of Life Church, told the Reporter-Telegram during a telephone interview today from his Fort Worth hotel room.

He was freed about noon Tuesday from the Key Road Prison Facility in Atlanta, a week after being dragged into custody with 360 other abortion protesters.

Austin was arrested Oct. 4 by Atlanta police outside one of several abortion clinics targeted for "clergy day" of the four-day Operation Rescue and was charged with unlawful assembly and disobeying a police officer, both misdemeanor offenses.

An Atlanta judge set bond at $650 and scheduled a pretrial hearing date for Oct. 18.

Austin was one of hundreds of ministers contacted by organizers of "Operation Rescue." After several Midland citizens donated his travel expenses, he agreed to participate in the demonstration.

"We went to Atlanta because it's going to be a spring board for what's happening across the country," he said. "When we crawled in and sat down our primary task was to stop the killing."

Austin described his treatment as "rather cruel," accusing Atlanta police of using get-tough tactics and causing at least one injury.

Soon after his arrest, Austin and about 150 other "rescuers" were taken to a small gymnasium, where some had to wait as long as a day to make a telephone call, he said.

"We got a bologna sandwich for our first meal and there was only one restroom for both men and women," Austin said.

The minister claimed the protesters' actions weren't in violation of the law. He alleged that Mayor Andrew Young ordered the arrests to warn such groups not to hold future protests.

"They knew we were coming and they knew what we were going to do," Austin said.

DOE says 'serious risks' surround weapon production

WASHINGTON (AP) — Safety problems that halted production of U.S. nuclear weapons materials expose a "bad trend" and a "sense of complacency" in the operations of nuclear plants, top Energy Department officials said today.

"The risks we are facing are serious," said Richard Starosteki, deputy assistant energy secretary for safety, health and quality assurance.

Energy Secretary John S. Herrington said Tuesday that the government will not be able to manufacture nuclear weapons materials for 2½ months because of safety problems, but he said that raises no threat to national security.

The department had planned to restart one of its three nuclear weapons reactors at its Savannah River Plant in South Carolina as early as next month, but now does not expect the first of them to reach full operation until January, Herrington said.

Starosteki, interviewed on "CBS This Morning," said the nation's aging nuclear weapons manufacturing plants must remain in operation for another 10 to 15 years while they are replaced. The Savannah River reactors began operations in 1954.

have for our national security," said Starosteki. "We're trying to take measures now before the situation does degrade and we have a serious accident."

Referring to the shutdown last weekend of the main plutonium processing plant at Rocky Flats in Golden, Colo., because of a radioactive contamination incident, he said, "The incident of the workers is indicative of a bad trend and we want to stop it before it does result in any off-site release" of radioactive material.

Election official extends absentee voting two days

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County Republican and Democratic Party officials are making the most of an obscure law that allows the doors to the election office to remain open two extra days this month.

The political rivals hope their actions will produce a record turnout among absentee voters.

Absentee voting for the Nov. 8 general election has been extended beyond the regular hours of 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Oct. 19-Nov. 4.

This year, voters also may cast their absentee ballots on the weekend prior to the election, from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 29, and from 1-5 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 30.

Midland County Election Administrator Bettye Calvert granted the extension because of the obscure law, which allows absentee voting on weekends if voters can produce a petition. The petition for extension requires a minimum of 15 signatures.

"That's what we're here for, to have elections," she said.

Midland County Republican Chairman Charles "Bro" Seltzer said a number of registered voters in Midland County would like to vote absentee, but can't because the election office is only open from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday-Friday.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders can expect fair skies again tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the upper 40s and winds will be out of the south at 5-10 m.p.h.

Thursday will be sunny and warm with the high in the lower 80s. Slightly higher winds will be out of the southwest at 10-20 m.p.h.

Tuesday's high of 81 was 13 degrees cooler than the record high of 94 set for that date in 1979. The overnight low of 43 was six degrees warmer than the record low of 37 set for this date in 1966.

STATE
Pleasant weather was in store for all of Texas as a ridge of high pressure kept skies and clear and temperatures mild statewide.

And there's not going to be any significant change in the immediate future as forecasts called for clear skies and pleasant temperatures across all of Texas through Thursday.

Early today, skies were partly to mostly cloudy over the Hill Country, Edwards Plateau and extreme South Texas and clear over the rest of the state.

NATION
Rain, sleet and even snow fell over the eastern Great Lakes region as a low pressure system over western Quebec combined with high pressure over Manitoba, Canada, to produce a taste of winter weather.

The low pressure system scattered the rainshowers late Tuesday while the high pressure area provided the cold air that caused the rain to become mixed with sleet at times.

Rain and sleet were reported from northeast Ohio into northwest Pennsylvania. Snow flurries fell on Canton and Akron, Ohio, and occasionally at Pittsburgh. Snow was falling over northwest lower Michigan late Tuesday, with accumulations of up to an inch reported in some areas.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered over the Great Basin of Nevada late Tuesday, bringing heavy local rain, including three-quarters of an inch at both Austin, Nevada, and Cedar City in western Utah.

Indianapolis dropped to 28 degrees early today, tying the record low for the date, which was set in 1876 and also tied the same date last year.

For today, scattered rain or snow showers were predicted from Michigan across the eastern Great Lakes and western Pennsylvania into northern New England, while widely scattered showers and thunderstorms were expected over parts of the Southern Plateau. High pressure was expected to provide pleasant weather across the Plains and the Mississippi Valley.

Starosteki said the Rocky Flats facility should be able to restart in about two months.

The top Energy Department spokesman, C. Anson Franklin, said on NBC-TV's "Today" that some contractors and department managers have become so accustomed to the old equipment that "they don't stop long enough to see what was the cause" of minor problems.

"We think there is a sense of complacency in the department," Franklin said.

All three of the Savannah reactors have been closed down for maintenance and safety checks amid a wave of publicity about lax safety precautions.

The department, said Herrington, "will not operate unsafe reactors. We will meet the defense needs of this country in a safe manner and an environmentally sensitive manner."

Herrington's deputy, Joseph F. Salgado, outlined what he called a "phased restart." It will include supervision by a senior manager at Savannah River and a review of safety at various milestones during the four weeks officials say will be needed to take the first reactor to full power.

Salgado said he foresaw no shortage of tritium, one of two nuclear weapons materials produced at Savannah River. The facility, the only nuclear weapons plant on active status, also produces plutonium, which does not decay as quickly as tritium and is said to be in abundant supply.

Mrs. Anderson cited as experience she would bring to the job her activity in the Children Services League and the Parent Education Committee of the City Council PTA. She also serves as president of the Sam Houston Elementary PTA.

"My dream began five years ago to serve on the school board," read Mrs. Craig's application. She also was a candidate in the District 6 trustee race in May.

Among other things, Mrs. Craig pledged to "always listen to concerned teachers, parents and students" and "to improve education for all students whether excelling, average or below average," according to her application.

She cited as her experience in education her volunteer service in the schools and her memberships in the City PTA Executive Board, Lee Freshman PTA Executive Board, Goddard PTA Executive Board and Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program.

Mrs. Angelo, who holds a bachelor's degree in physical education from the University of Texas at Austin, is a former Odessa Bonham Junior High science teacher. She currently serves as Lee High School PTA membership chairman, according to her application.

In the past, Mrs. Angelo has served as chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce Education Committee, PTA officer at Lee Freshman High School and Goddard Junior High School, a Young Life adult

"We are comfortable that Savannah River will operate at a sufficient level to meet the tritium needs of the future," Salgado said.

The news conference was called to defuse criticism of the Energy Department not only over the Savannah River plant in Aiken, S.C., but also over radioactive contamination at the Rocky Flats plant northwest of Denver, Colo., and over allegedly lax security at weapons laboratories in New Mexico and California.

In related developments Tuesday: President Reagan voiced concern about the nuclear plant safety problem during a meeting with top Defense and Energy department officials, chief of staff Kenneth Duberstein said.

Duberstein quoted Reagan as saying the administration is "committed to making sure that all safety precautions are taken and that all rules and regulations be followed."

The chairman of E.I. du Pont Nemours and Co., which operates Savannah River under contract for the Energy Department, reacted angrily to claims that company employees had a lax attitude toward safety. R.E. Heckert said du Pont was "caught in a political cross-fire" between the Energy Department and Capitol Hill.

Officials said the shutdown of the Rocky Flats' main plutonium processing plant on Saturday virtually halted production at the nuclear weapons plant.

Congressional researchers said the Energy Department has admitted hundreds of visitors from communist and nuclear-sensitive nations into its nuclear weapons labs at San-committee member, chairman of the Midland Girl Scouts chapter and as a volunteer in public schools.

Recently, Mrs. Angelo served on the MISD citizens' panel to re-evaluate the "24-hour" policy.

"I wish to serve on the Midland ISD board of trustees because I have the necessary time and the commitment to learn about MISD, to evaluate programs and procedures, and to work with other trustees, the administration, and the faculty to continue MISD's pursuit of excellence throughout our educational system," wrote Mrs. Angelo on her application.

Attnipp, who received his doctor of jurisprudence degree from the University of Houston, graduated from Midland Lee High School in 1968.

The father of three sons has coached baseball and soccer since 1981 and participated in church youth activities, he wrote on his application.

Because of Attnipp's "genuine concern for maintaining the high standards of educational opportunities afforded our school children," he hopes, if selected, to "maintain the quality of education afforded Midland's children and explore the means by which that level of quality can be improved and efficiently administered," he wrote.

King, a senior vice president and manager of the special services division at First City National Bank, wrote on his application that he wishes to "use my abilities to further the success of the Board in providing quality education in Midland dia, Los Alamos and Livermore without required security checks.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, said the cost of cleaning up radioactive and hazardous waste at Energy Department nuclear facilities is estimated at $150 billion to $175 billion. He cited estimates by Energy Department officials and the General Accounting Office.

"It will take 20 years, even if we know how to do the cleanup," Glenn said, adding that "safety and health matters too often took a back seat" to production goals at the department's nuclear facilities. It was not clear how Glenn, the chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, made the estimate.

A report issued at the Savannah River plant estimated that cleaning up the facility could cost as much as $6.5 billion. The estimate, by the GAO, was markedly higher than an earlier Energy Department forecast of $285 million for cleanup of 60 waste sites at the plant.

Herrington and Salgado said most recent criticism of the department had originated within the department itself during a safety and environmental campaign started in early 1985.

"Our facilities are safer today than they were four years ago," said Herrington. But "much more needs to be done."

Salgado told Congress on Sept. 30 that he hoped to restart one of the Savannah River facilities, the P-reactor, within 30 to 45 days.

Though he listed no education-related experience on his list of community service activities, King said, if selected, he would behave as "a businessman, a communicator, a banker and a parent."

Rusk, a Midland dentist, received his medical degree from California's Loma Linda University.

The father of two elementary-aged children also had no education-related activities listed on his application, but wrote "education is the most important method in the improvement and maintenance of our community. I would enjoy being a participant in the process of community development within education."

Among Rusk's goals, if selected, was "to continue the goals for quality education for all." He added that he has a "special interest" in disadvantaged students.

Sewell, who received a masters of science degree in computer science from Texas A&M University, is an executive with the IBM Corporation in Midland.

The past president of the Midland/Lee Youth Centers, Inc., wrote on his application that he is "dedicated to making it possible for the children of Midland to have the highest quality education possible."

To achieve that end, Sewell wrote he would maintain, if selected, "open communication with the citizens of District 6, teachers and administration."

Slaton holds a bachelor of arts degree in economics from California's University of the Redlands and is president of Starline Printing in Midland.

The former University of Albuquerque financial aid officer said he believes "his background and experience can be of service to MISD."

Slaton would assist in federal grant proposals, continue the good educational experience his children were exposed to and better incorporate minority students into a richer educational experience if selected, he wrote.

Cubans seize American ship

MIAMI (AP) — A Cuban gunship seized a U.S. merchant ship with eight people and New Zealand's America's Cup race yacht aboard, saying the vessel was in its waters, a claim the captain flatly denied, the Coast Guard said.

The eight, at least seven Americans, were detained Tuesday in Puntó Cayo Malo, Cuba, said Coast Guard spokesman Dan Vogeley.

The disarmed sloop New Zealand was aboard the 160-foot U.S.-registered merchant ship Tampa Sea Horse, officials said.

The 133-foot yacht was en route from Long Beach, Calif., to New York City for a tour of East Coast cities.

The Cubans seized the vessel off the southeastern tip of Cuba without firing shots or using force, saying it had violated the communist country's 12-mile territorial limit, the Coast Guard said.

Crew killed in crash of military plane

OSCODA, Mich. (AP) — A training exercise for a fire crew at an Air Force base turned into a life-and-death struggle when a tanker plane crashed, killing all six crew members and injuring 10 passengers.

The Air Force said today it hadn't determined the cause of the crash Tuesday afternoon at Wurtsmith Air Force Base. A board of officers will be appointed to investigate the crash.

Wurtsmith, located near Lake Huron, is one of two Michigan bases in the Strategic Air Command. Nineteen B-52 bombers armed with nuclear-tipped cruise missiles and nuclear bombs are based at Wurtsmith.

The KC-135 Stratotanker, a four-engine plane used to refuel other planes, was returning to the base from a mission to K.I. Sawyer Air Force Base in Michigan's Upper Peninsula when it crashed and burned, said Staff Sgt. Donald Lawber, a spokesman at Wurtsmith in the northeastern Lower Peninsula.

The six crew members died at the scene, authorities said. Eight of the 10 injured were treated and released from the 370th Strategic Hospital at the base. Staff Sgt. Albert Fleming said. Two people admitted to the base hospital were in good condition today.

The base's firefighters had just completed a training exercise when the accident occurred, and they quickly doused the flames, said Air Force Sgt. Gene Babbie.

Skid marks stretched from a point one-third of the way down the runway to the plane's final resting place in a grassy area about a quarter mile away.

"Not much of an airplane was left," said state police Sgt. John Pegg at the East Tawas post. "Basically, all that was left was a tail section."

The 10 passengers, all military personnel, were being brought to Wurtsmith from K.I. Sawyer to participate in a base inspection, part of preparation for an inspection by officials from Strategic Air Command headquarters in Omaha, Neb., said Anita Bailey, spokeswoman for K.I. Sawyer.

Fleming said the names of those killed and injured were being withheld pending notification of relatives.

VOTING

Because the Texas Election Code authorizes extended hours for absentee voting on Saturday and Sunday, the Midland County GOP executive committee requested in a petition dated Sept. 19, that absentee voting be extended to 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Oct. 22 and 29, Seltzer said.

The Midland County Democratic Party followed suit in a petition dated Sept. 22, asking that absentee voting be allowed on Sunday.

Although the statute authorizes absentee voting on Sunday, Seltzer said, "it was our opinion that requesting county employees to work on Sunday was contrary to the personal and religious beliefs of many members of the Republican Party."

David Mandell, president of Midland County Young Democrats disagreed.

"This opens up the avenues of voter participation by providing the maximum opportunity for people to express their vote," he said.

Protest underscores desperation over lack of AIDS cure

By JERRY ESTILL

WASHINGTON (AP) — A demonstration that temporarily closed Food and Drug Administration headquarters underscores the desperation of AIDS sufferers hoping for a chemical cure that so far has escaped researchers around the world.

The action Tuesday at FDA's headquarters building in nearby Rockville, Md., also highlighted a fundamental problem facing the agency charged by law with overseeing the safety and effectiveness of its drugs.

In essence, the hundreds of demonstrators — including more than 100 arrested for blocking entrances to the building — are asking the agency to recommend experimental AIDS treatments as soon as it determines they are no more dangerous than AIDS itself.

The agency says that to do that would eliminate a major reason for its existence: to apply a scientific sorting process that tries to cull quackery from treatments proven safe and effective.

The key word is proven. AIDS patients feel they don't have time to wait for proof.

"I would rather take my chances with the side effects of an experimental drug," said Vito Russo, a New York City writer who says he was diagnosed with AIDS in 1985. "The side effect of AIDS is death."

At the same time, Russo complained that officials in the Reagan administration are using the highly vocal call for easier approval of AIDS drugs to bolster its general theme of less government regulation — in this case of pharmaceutical companies.

Russo said he and his fellow demonstrators do not want the FDA to stop testing drugs. They want the agency to test them faster.

Ironically, that argument was heard loudest from pharmaceutical companies until the issue of AIDS drugs attained such a high profile.

But such an argument coming from an individual suffering from an incurable illness casts the issue onto a moral and ethical plane — and, on Tuesday, into the streets.

There is an inherent ethical judgment in almost all FDA decisions on new drugs: whether the beneficial effect warrants potentially harmful side effects. But the issue is seldom drawn sharply enough to provoke protests by the people most directly affected — the patients.

With no easy answers in sight, the private American Foundation for AIDS Research publishes an AIDS experimental treatment directory that is updated quarterly.

The latest edition, issued just over three weeks ago, lists 97 drugs and agents being investigated as possible treatments for AIDS and AIDS-related illnesses with the names and addresses of the researchers conducting trials on each.

The 128-page book — free to AIDS patients — starts with the "strong recommendation" that any person considering experimental treatment "obtain the guidance of a personal physician in making any and all decisions in this area."

In a note to those infected with HIV — the AIDS-causing virus — the booklet recommends reading established medical journals that report on AIDS research.

"But do not be fooled into thinking you can be your own doctor after reading a selection of articles," it cautions.

The booklet's last advice says that while "there is no such thing as the Official Guide to Coping with Serious Illness...there is something very real that is known as 'the will to live.' It cannot be found in a test-tube or under a microscope. Every person must discover it for himself. If you have it or can find it, it can make a difference."

Vito Russo has been living with AIDS for more than three years, longer than most who contract the disease. He is determined to live. And when all else is said and done, whether their position is right or wrong, that is why Russo and hundreds of fellow demonstrators shut the doors of the FDA for a few hours on a chilly October day.

Bush accuses Dukakis of protectionism

Associated Press

Democrat Michael Dukakis pitched economic nationalism while Republican George Bush accused his rival of adopting a protectionist stance strictly for political gain as the two presidential candidates fine-tuned their strategy for their second and final debate.

The vice president, embarking on a weeklong West Coast swing highlighted by Thursday's debate in Los Angeles, told business students at Seattle University on Tuesday that Dukakis opposed "protectionist demagoguery" during the Democratic primaries. "But now, for political reasons, he sees advantage in stoking fears about foreign influence," Bush said.

Dukakis vowed that the Democratic ticket would be aggressive advocates for U.S. companies and workers.

"Together we can build a future where the best products in the world are designed by American minds, built by American hands and produce good profits and good paychecks here on American soil," the Massachusetts governor told a partisan crowd at Tufts University in Medford, Mass.

Later Tuesday, Dukakis responded to Bush's charges: "I'm for more trade, not less trade. I want to export American products, not American jobs."

Like Bush, Dukakis was in California today, conferring with advisers and doing some last-minute studying of briefing papers for the nationally broadcast, 90-minute debate, set to begin at 8 p.m. CDT at Pauley Pavilion on the UCLA campus.

Neither candidate planned any campaign appearances today in order to devote their time to debate preparation.

Bush was working with former Deputy Treasury Secretary Richard G. Darman, who was Dukakis' stand-in for a mock debate the vice president had Saturday, said press secretary Sheila Tate.

Bush was taking a short break this morning to meet with Los Angeles Police Chief Daryl Gates.

One final detail for the candidates' face-to-face confrontation was decided Tuesday when the Bipartisan Commission on Presidential Debates selected the moderator and three questioners.

Ann Compton of ABC, Andrea Mitchell of NBC and Margaret Warner of Newsweek will quiz the candidates, and Bernard Shaw of Cable News Network will serve as moderator.

CBS anchorman Dan Rather declined an invitation to be a panelist.

Related stories, Page 3B

The first question will go to Dukakis, and Bush will deliver the final closing statement — a reversal of the first debate, said Bob Neuman, a spokesman for the commission.

The latest polls indicated that the race remains close, raising the political stakes for the prime-time debate.

A Gallup Organization survey showed Bush leading Dukakis 49 percent to 43 percent among 1,007 registered voters questioned Friday through Sunday, while a Harris Poll of 1,355 likely voters Thursday through Monday had the lead at only 50 percent to 48 percent. Given the polls' margins of sampling error — four points for Gallup and three for Harris — the race appeared virtually even.

Among 748 likely voters, Gallup found Bush ahead 52-41 percent, but the organization stressed the closer result, saying it was too soon to gauge likelihood of voting.

As in other polls, Democratic vice presidential nominee Lloyd Bentsen was seen as having decisively beaten Republican Dan Quayle in their debate last week.

Quayle returned to Indiana Tuesday to a rousing hometown reception where he delivered some fighting words for his candidacy borrowed from the late President Harry S. Truman and Revolutionary War hero John Paul Jones.

"We plan on taking some heat but staying in the kitchen."

Man gets unusual sentence

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — An organizer of a marijuana-smuggling ring ordered by a judge to open an AIDS hospice rather than serve years in prison says he's pleased with the sentence, but may have had an easier time behind bars.

The sentence issued Tuesday by U.S. District Judge Gene Carter, believed to be the first of its kind in the country, calls for Harvey M. Prager to operate a hospice in Maine that will house at least three AIDS victims.

The 41-year-old Prager, who helped open the first AIDS hospice in South America, and his French-born wife, Sandrine, will act as non-paid resident managers for five years.

"I'm sure two or three weeks down the road, when we're in the grip of the struggle, we'll think it may have been easier to have gone to jail," said Prager, who had requested the sentence.

Prager pleaded guilty in January to conspiracy, possession and importation of marijuana. He could have received up to 15 years in prison and a $125,000 fine.

Tax bill compromise sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negotiators are trying to reach a compromise on sharply differing tax bills passed by the House and Senate, one containing a "taxpayers' bill of rights" and the other offering relief for 20 million owners of mutual funds.

The Senate bill, which was approved Tuesday night on an 87-1 vote, would cut selected taxes by an estimated $3 billion over three years and, to avoid worsening the deficit, boost other taxes by the same amount. The House bill, passed 380-25 on Aug. 4, has a $7.5 billion price tag.

Far more provisions are identical in both bills. Both would correct hundreds of technical errors in the 1986 tax overhaul; extend several expiring tax benefits; relieve farmers from paying the federal diesel tax on fuel for off-road use, and raise some taxes to pay for the benefits.

The tax bill and a comprehensive plan for fighting drug abuse are the only major pieces of legislation standing in the way of adjournment of the 100th Congress, as early as this weekend.

North unaware lying crime

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense lawyers say Oliver L. North cannot be prosecuted for lying to Congress because the former presidential aide was never warned that making misleading statements about covert operations was a crime.

Citing false statements by government officials about other covert operations, North's defense lawyers contended Tuesday that Iran-Contra prosecutors were bringing novel charges against their client.

The defense said that until North's indictment March 16 with three other Iran-Contra defendants, "no executive branch official had ever been prosecuted based on unsworn statements to Congress."

2,000 mourn girls' death

PULASKI, Wis. (AP) — More than 2,000 mourners who filled a school gym to remember five young girls killed by a speeding car heard condolences from President Reagan and a tape of a victim singing "Could've Been."

Many at Tuesday night's community service at Pulaski High School hugged and sobbed as the tape recording of rock star Tiffany's song, sung by 12-year-old Nicole Watia, was played.

Nicole's version of the song was among the personal mementos the victims' families shared.

Plant's radioactive waste could end up in Carlsbad

AIKEN, S.C. (AP) — Highly radioactive waste from the Savannah River Plant will be shipped to New Mexico under a project being reviewed by the U.S. Energy Department, the agency says.

A proposed facility at the nuclear weapons plant would prepare the waste for shipment starting next year to the department's Waste Isolation Pilot Plant near Carlsbad, N.M., according to an environmental assessment by the agency issued Monday.

The New Mexico plant would eventually remove a potential source of groundwater contamination from Savannah River: thousands of cubic feet of stored waste containing elements heavier than uranium, which are called "transuranic."

Plutonium, manufactured at Savannah River for use in nuclear weapons, is a transuranic element. The three nuclear weapons reactors at the plant near Aiken have been closed for maintenance and safety checks amid a wave of publicity about lax safety precautions.

Savannah River is one of 14 sites that generate or store transuranic wastes in nuclear weapons work and that will ship them to New Mexico.

The New Mexico plant is a research facility designed to demonstrate the safe and environmentally acceptable disposal of radioactive defense waste, the report said.

The Savannah River facility would analyze, compact and solidify newly generated waste.

By 1995, when Savannah River is to start retrieving previously stored waste for shipment, a projected 370,000 cubic feet of stored transunic waste will have accumulated there, the Energy Department report says. Waste is stored in containers and trenches at the plant.

Starting in 1995, the report said, Savannah River's facility would ship away 15,000 cubic feet of retrieved waste per year, and export new waste as fast as it accumulates, at a projected rate of 6,200 cubic feet per year.

The New Mexico project, which has itself drawn criticism from environmentalists, will not end the South Carolina plant's environmental woes.

A report issued this week by Congress' General Accounting Office notes that hazardous but non-radioactive wastes also have accumulated at numerous sites around the plant. Some reports estimate the total cost of cleaning up the plant at $6.5 billion.

Federal agents engineer 'hostile takeover' of bank

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Federal agents gave new meaning to "hostile takeover" by smashing a $32 million global money-laundering ring that routed drug profits through a bank to Colombian cocaine cartels, authorities say.

Customs agents infiltrated Colombia money-laundering syndicates and helped smuggle profits from drug sales out of the country, federal authorities charged Tuesday in a series of indictments naming 85 defendants.

The charges resulted from a two-year investigation dubbed "Operation C Chase." The "C" stands for C-note, slang for $100 bills.

Among the defendants were BCCI Holdings, a Luxembourg-based bank holding company with branches in 72 countries, and nine bank officials.

"It is the first time an entire financial institution and its important members have been indicted," said U.S. Customs Service chief William Von Raab. "We have given new meaning to the term 'hostile takeover.'"

Tuesday's announcement came two days after the arrest here of 11 people, including seven en route to a bogus bachelor party, officials said.

The "bride" and "groom" were actually undercover agents.

At least 40 people have been arrested around the world, including this country, England and Argentina, officials said.

Named along with BCCI Holdings were two subsidiaries: Bank of Credit and Commerce International S.A., with operations in the United States and London, and Bank of Credit and Commerce International (Overseas) Ltd., organized in the Cayman Islands and operating in France, Panama, Colombia, the Bahamas and the United States.

Deaths renew debate over gun education

By SANDRA WALEWSKI

MIAMI (AP) — Hunched over slightly, Aaron Miller steadies his .22-caliber pistol and fires, blowing pe-sized holes in a target's black bull's eye. The 10-year-old is probably as good a shot as any at a popular suburban shooting range.

But there's another side of the story about children and firearms, especially in Florida, where the Legislature recently made it easier for residents to buy and carry sidearms.

In Dade County alone, 37 youths 18 years old and under have been fatally shot this year, 13 more than in all of 1987, according to the Medical Examiner's Office.

Just this summer, the body of a 14-year-old boy was hidden for 10 days by three young brothers in St. Petersburg who panicked when a shot-gun they were playing with accidentally discharged; a 14-year-old boy was accidentally shot to death by his older brother in the farming town of Pahokee; an 11-year-old boy shot in the head by a playmate remains hospitalized in Tampa.

And an 11-year-old Miami boy was shot and killed during a so-called game of "courage." Three friends were charged with manslaughter.

Police blame the tragedies on improperly stored weapons, peer pressure, television violence and irresponsible adults. They also cite relaxed state gun laws that have increased the number of firearms in some communities.

"We're too gun-happy," says veteran Metro-Dade homicide Lt. Mike Gonzalez. "There are so many guns lying around in people's homes and cars that naturally kids are going to get into them."

Some children such as Aaron get gun safety instruction at home, but those killed and wounded often have little or no knowledge of firearms.

As part of a national effort, the National Rifle Association has proposed a program in Florida elementary schools focusing on gun safety. Although state Education Commissioner Betty Castor has flatly rejected the idea, some school districts, including Dade County, are looking at some form of gun education.

Schools could help counter the feeling among many youths that guns are "cool," said Steve Morris, an educator at a school where a Miami youth was recently slain with a handgun.

"We need to give more information on handguns — not how to use them but the dangers involved," said Morris, assistant principal of Glades Junior High School, where seventh grader Marcus Mayorga had just started summer school when he was killed.

"Maybe they need to see a picture of someone with their head blown up," he suggested, acknowledging that may be too graphic. "We need to show them the final outcome...the anguish caused to parents and friends."

Marcus and some friends got together July 12, unsupervised at the home of a girl who had found the gun earlier under a dresser, and they devised a Russian Roulette-style game to test each other's courage.

The game involved distracting the "victim" while one of them unloaded the gun, according to Metro-Dade Det. John Butchko.

Tragically, when Marcus was playing the victim the gun remained loaded. He was killed instantly.

Three teens now face manslaughter charges and will be tried in juvenile court, Butchko said.

Deadly games of chance killed three other Miami youths — ages 14, 16 and 18 — this year in separate incidents, according to the Medical Examiner's Office.

"It's amazing there haven't been more cases like that," said detective Gonzalez.

The problem is not unique to Florida, of course. Nationwide, 328 youths 19 years old and under were killed by firearms in 1985, the latest year for which figures are available, according to the Maryland-based National Center for Health Statistics.

Gonzalez, Morris and Florida's NRA spokeswoman Marion Hammer believe that television violence may have a role in encouraging children to glamorize guns and not treat them seriously.

"I think TV to a great extent is responsible because a lot of children know absolutely nothing about guns other than what they see on TV, and those are the wrong things," said Ms. Hammer.

The level of violence consumed by the average child appears to have increased in recent years, with more movies available on videocassette and cable television, said Dr. Thomas Redecki, research director for the private National Coalition on Television Violence. He estimated that the average child in the United States, by age 18, will witness on TV 32,000 murders, 40,000 attempted murders and 225,000 acts of violence.

The NRA is pushing for an elementary-level gun safety program that would focus on the concept of "No. Go. Tell." That is, if a youngster sees a gun, neither to pick it up nor to get near someone handling it but to tell an adult about it.

"Regardless of where you stand philosophically on the issue, the common ground upon which we must all stand is the safety and protection of children," Ms. Hammer insists.

David Voss, spokesman for the state education commissioner, said his boss "simply does not feel it is the school's responsibility to teach about guns. She also is against any sort of state-mandated program regardless of what you think about the issue; schools have all they can handle now."

Voss didn't know of any districts considering firearms education, and Ms. Hammer said she could not identify those which she said had expressed an interest in the NRA proposal or something similar.

DNA 'bar codes' newest crime-fighting tool

Hearst News Service

The hottest crime-fighting tool since fingerprints is too hot for some defense lawyers, even though one expert insists it "enormously enhances the ability of law enforcement to solve unsolved crimes."

A technique that "reads" a person's DNA like a bar code on a cereal box led, in July, to the conviction of a Virginia man in a brutal rape-murder case. He was sentenced to death.

The technique is based on the assumption that every human's DNA or genetic code is as unique as his fingerprints. At a crime scene, the detection of a suspect's DNA — in blood, semen or other bodily residues — links him to the crime.

But the technique needs further study before it's used to convict criminals, some defense attorneys warn.

And, ironically, a recent California rape case suggests a mistaken DNA analysis might allow a guilty person to get off scot free, lawyer Robert Brower charged at an American Chemical Society meeting in Los Angeles.

In the case, Brower claimed San Mateo county officials decided not to prosecute the suspect because DNA samples from the scene of the crime indicated he wasn't guilty. Yet independent evidence indicated that the man was guilty — in other words, that lab analysis of the DNA had failed, Brower said.

"Until the (DNA) error rate is known, it is inappropriate to allow this kind of evidence to go to the jury," said Brower, who has represented defendants in cases involving such "genetic markers" in California, Illinois and Michigan.

But Brower's claim was scorned by senior district attorney Rockne P. Harmon of California's Alameda County, who wasn't connected with the San Mateo case. At a panel discussion on the DNA method, Harmon said that as far as he knew, the suspect had been released properly and that there is no other reason to suspect he's the rapist.

So far DNA evidence hasn't been presented to a single California jury, Harmon said. But, he added, the technique is catching on fast nationwide and "I wouldn't be surprised if by this time next year, (DNA analysis) is overwhelmingly accepted by most counties in California."

The DNA technique could be as revolutionary as fingerprinting, Harmon said.

"Because so many violent cases result in physiological evidence — blood, semen, saliva, hair — these cases will be more easily solved and prosecuted," said Harmon.

The leading technique for DNA analysis involves restriction fragment length polymorphisms or RFLPs. The technique uses enzymes like little "scissors" to snip apart a strand of a person's DNA. Then the DNA fragments are placed in a semi-liquid "gel" and, under electrical attraction, spread out into dark-and-bright bands that resemble the bar code on packages such as cereal boxes.

Canadian squashes competition as gardeners go for the green

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A Nova Scotia gourd grower pounded the competition with a super-heavy-weight pumpkin that tipped the scales at a near-record 633½ pounds — an international victory he says came without steroids.

Keith Chapel, 56, gleefully denied a mischievous suggestion that he may have used anabolic steroids on his entry to win this week's International Pumpkin Association World Weigh-Off.

"Oh, no!" said Chapel, responding to the allegation.

The question came in light of drug scandals that plagued the Summer Olympics at Seoul, including the case of Canadian sprinter Ben Johnson, who was stripped of his gold medal when officials found he'd used the banned drug that bolsters muscle building but has many harmful side effects.

Chapel, a schoolteacher when he's not growing pumpkins, spoke over a loudspeaker during an international conference call from Canada heard on the steps of San Francisco City Hall.

His entry, which competed with States, England and Japan, won him $2,000 and a trip to San Francisco. plump pumpkins from the United England's 317-pound entry, grown by Ron Butcher, was weighed in a pub, where cries of encouragement echoed across the City Hall steps some 5,000 miles away.

But Japan's Shoji Sijrai wasn't so lucky. His 513-pound pumpkin broke into pieces on its way to the scale. The international contest accepted the 313-pound entry from Hiroshi Sawa, instead.

Driving shouldn't depend only on age, study says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Older drivers pose a greater risk of being involved in accidents but driving should not be restricted solely on the basis of age, says a government study released this week.

The study by the National Research Council says roadway signs and markings should be redesigned to better meet the needs of older drivers, and that screening should be improved to identify impaired drivers of all ages.

The report urges states to tighten their screening programs and issue restricted licenses in some cases such as limiting certain applicants to daytime driving only.

It criticized a movement in some states to allow drivers licenses to be renewed by mail without drivers being required to undergo vision tests at least every four years.

But the study concluded that "age alone is a poor predictor of the (driving) performance of any individual," although acknowledging after age 75 a driver is "about twice as likely (per mile driven) to be involved in a crash" as middle-aged drivers.

The National Research Council panel, composed of experts assembled by the National Academy of Sciences, spent two years examining questions about transportation and the elderly.

It said problems of meeting the transportation needs of older citizens will increase in the years ahead as the number of people over 75 increases and more elderly people live in the suburbs where less public transportation is available.

Today about 12 percent of the population is 65 years of age or older and by the year 2020 the number will increase to about 17 percent, or more than 50 million elderly citizens who will be eligible to drive.

"The states are not prepared to handle the growing number of very old drivers or to identify those at high risk of accident involvement," the study concluded.

"Most older persons will probably be quite capable and safe drivers. But current statistics indicate that drivers 75 and over are more at risk of crash involvement than the average driver... These facts must be acknowledged even though there is no justification for restricting driving on the basis of age alone."

Furthermore, the panel said, elderly people are more likely to suffer serious or fatal injuries than other drivers in accidents of similar severity.

The study said elderly people, especially those 75 years or older, often have problems reading traffic signs, seeing clearly at night, gauging traffic flow when merging into traffic or making left turns, and turning their heads when backing their vehicles.

But "when examined in terms of incidents, the problem that older persons represent to overall traffic safety is small relative to that of the (teen-age) driver," the committee wrote.

The panel encouraged older drivers to buy automobiles equipped with air bags, the devices that inflate automatically to protect the head and upper torso in a crash. Air bags have become available in recent years on a variety of automobiles, although generally only for protection of the driver.

Pointing to holes surprising tactic

The most surprising aspect of the presidential campaign has been the emphasis that Michael Dukakis has put on the economy.

The governor may well have to eat the Swiss cheese that he keeps talking about in trying to show that the Reagan administration missed some people in its record of economic progress. Dukakis argues that some segments of the population and certain areas of the country have suffered. It's true, of course, but that is an inherently weak argument. Overall, the nation's economy is prospering.

Even more telling is the fact that Dukakis is vulnerable on his own economic record. Current estimates indicate that, despite a constitutional amendment prohibiting deficit spending, Massachusetts is now running a deficit of between $500 million and $1 billion. Dukakis also failed to fund the program he most boasts about — universal health care.

Even Ronald Reagan's sharpest critics concede he inherited a weak economy from the Carter administration, yet he created millions of new jobs and slashed roaring inflation. Sure there were "costs." The biggest one is the federal deficit. But the country's economy has made progress in the past eight years.

Dukakis' economic progress in Massachusetts is much less evident. He is now in the embarrassing position of having to explain, for example, how the state borrowed money from its own pension fund in an attempt to show its last budget balanced. The governor claimed a $27 billion surplus for the pension plan when it was actually underfunded by $13 billion.

Why does Dukakis believe his best hope for election is to attack a popular president's greatest strength?

Not even the governor's strongest supporters claim that Dukakis has convinced Americans he will do a better economic job than Reagan did. Nor has he convinced them that his Swiss cheese analogy is apt. As Democrat John F. Kennedy echoed time and again: Neither life nor the economy is perfect or fair.

One clear conclusion from all of this is that Dukakis is not as competent as he projects himself.

If the governor loses the election, one major reason will be his attacks on Reagan's economic progress. It simply is not smart to argue with success, especially when one's own record is filled with some Swiss cheese.

Canada's crucial test

A crucial clash between protectionism and free trade will be decided this November in Canada, where the outcome of a national election may have far-reaching consequences for the United States and the global economy.

At issue is the U.S.-Canada free trade agreement, which was signed earlier this year by President Reagan and Prime Minister Brian Mulroney. The pact would eliminate virtually all tariffs and other trade barriers between the two countries.

Although the accord was approved with broad bipartisan support in Congress, the Canadian Senate refused to act on it until Mr. Mulroney called an election that amounts to a referendum on the trade issue. By their decision, Canadian voters will either advance efforts around the globe to liberalize international commerce or spur the protectionist backlash that is evident in nearly every country as well.

On its face, Canada has much more to gain from the agreement than the United States. Canadian businesses would gain freer access to a market that is more than 10 times larger than the one to which American firms would get access. U.S.-Canadian trade already constitutes the world's largest two-way market, totaling $155 billion annually. And this country is Ottawa's biggest customer, buying 75 percent of all Canadian exports.

But, as is the case in many other nations, nationalism in Canada is a formidable obstacle to open trade. Some Canadians fear that increased cross-border commerce will ultimately submerge their political and cultural identity beneath that of the American colossus. Thus, the trade agreement has evoked a highly emotional debate in which opponents argue that Canada will become nothing more than an American colony if the accord takes effect.

Rejection of the pact could have damaging implications around the globe. First, it would almost certainly spark a new wave of bilateral disputes of the kind that have raised fears in recent years of a U.S.-Canadian trade war. At the very least, the accord's defeat would fuel protectionist sentiment in Congress and heighten pressures for Washington to take unilateral action against Canadian competition.

Rejection by Canada would find support in nationalistic Mexico. President Reagan has proposed a North American free-trade alliance to compete better against a unified European Economic Community, which has agreed to abolish most internal trade barriers by 1992. Mexico, however, has consistently opposed such a union.

With the worldwide battle between protectionism and free trade now at a critical juncture, the balloting in Canada on Nov. 21 could tip the balance — with lasting results for the integrated global economy.

Soviets poised to enter world market

WASHINGTON — Both presidential candidates have expressed wary optimism over Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's reforms. But the next president will have to do more than be optimistic. He will have to decide if the Cold War is really over and, if it is, what the United States' new relationship with the Soviets will be.

Jack Anderson

The next American president will likely accept the Soviet Union into the world economic community, but neither candidate will commit to that before the election. Many European leaders have already made their judgments. They have begun to treat the Soviet Union as if the Cold War is over. This has led to a sudden increase in trade between the Soviet Union and Western Europe. The Kremlin also has sent signals that it wants to end its economic isolation and take its rightful place in the world market. Western European banks are extending credit to the Soviet Union. The next step will be for the Soviets to add their currency to the international monetary system.

If the United States doesn't act soon, there may be a limited market left in the Soviet Union for American products.

Trade with the United States could play a big role in Gorbachev's reform program. He needs to improve the Soviet standard of living quickly and one way would be to increase trade. Gorbachev is being pulled from two directions — the Soviet bureaucracy, which is resistant to reforms, and the Soviet people who, at the moment, support Gorbachev's efforts at economic reform.

But most Soviet citizens who now back their leader will judge him by the food he puts on their tables and the consumer goods he puts on their shelves. Now, the shelves in state stores are bare and the bureaucrats are confidently waiting for the economic discontent to cause a backlash against Gorbachev.

He is literally leading a revolution against his own party apparatus. He can't afford an open civil war, so he is taking steps to reassure the bureaucrats that there will be a place for them in a reformed Soviet Union.

The bloated Soviet bureaucracy is known around the world as a model of inefficiency. Gorbachev would like to cut it by half.

Gorbachev has enlisted the Soviet press to help him with his war against the bureaucracy. He lifted the corner of the Soviet censorship blanket and unleashed the media, which has had a field day exposing bureaucratic excesses.

Gorbachev has had a strong adversary in the person of Yegor Ligachev, the head of the Kremlin's conservative faction and the champion of the bureaucracy. Last week at a meeting of the Communist Party Central Committee, Ligachev was demoted. Until then, according to intelligence assessments, Gorbachev had deliberately refrained from purging Ligachev from the Politburo, in spite of Ligachev's open attacks against reform. His continued place in the Politburo was a sign of Ligachev's power, and was Gorbachev's way of reassuring the party structure and avoiding a showdown.

Gorbachev has another formidable foe in the KGB, the Soviet secret police, which is threatened by the new openness in the Soviet Union. Gorbachev's reform advocates are finding themselves tailed by the KGB, according to our intelligence sources. KGB agents have done nothing openly to harass the reformers, but their presence in the shadows has an intimidating effect. It is clear that the agents are keeping watch on the reformers and gathering information.

The Soviet Union has produced such a tangle of laws and regulations that anyone could trip over some restriction. That gives the KGB an excuse, if it needs one, to crack down.

As he caters to Ligachev, Gorbachev has also taken steps to mollify the KGB. For example, the new Soviet ambassador to Afghanistan, Nikolai Yegorychev, has the strong backing of the KGB and his appointment may have been a bone that Gorbachev threw to the secret service.

Yegorychev was chief Soviet policymaker on the Middle East and a veteran of the diplomatic corps who fell out of favor and was removed from full membership in the Central Committee during the Brezhnev era.

Kremlinologists believe that Yegorychev's appointment to Afghanistan at this sensitive time means he will be restored to the Central Committee and that would be a gesture of good will toward his friends in the KGB.

Kinder, gentler Bush has plan for California

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — While Republican leaders down south in conservative Orange County brooded that George Bush was neglecting them at the risk of losing California, the presidential nominee was here reasserting his preference for "a kinder, gentler nation."

To prove it, Bush unveiled "YES (Youth Engaged in Service) to America," for promoting volunteerism among young people. Before deciding to deliver that speech before the upscale, non-partisan Comstock Club, Bush's managers considered talking about child care. Clearly, he was not going to talk about lowered capital gains rates, Strategic Defense or arming the Contras.

That explains why Republican insiders doubt that Bush's actual performance here on Nov. 8 will match the 250,000 vote statewide margin reflected by Orange County polls. Steven Merksamer, political adviser to Gov. George Deukmejian and an architect of Bush's campaign here, told us the vice president will fall short of that because his message is not tailored to true Orange County believers. "You don't get them by talking about child care," he added.

In fact, Bush's strategy for winning the nation's most populous state vetoes any more courting of the Right as counterproductive. The target for the final month must be soft voters: Reagan Democrats and moderate Republicans. Here is a model not only for Bush's campaign nationwide but for the way he would govern.

The Republican nominee is in good shape in California, a state where Michael Dukakis led by 16 percentage points in August and which he must carry to be elected. Dukakis has built no momentum since our visit here in early September. While polls show a tossup, there is bipartisan agreement that Bush today would win.

Nevertheless, Orange County Republicans such as State Assemblyman Gil Ferguson are uneasy. Ferguson, a retired Marine who represents the state's most Republican district, has not been called on to mobilize his organization for Bush. He has not talked to Bill Lacy, the former White House political aide sent west six weeks ago to run the faltering California campaign.

Lacy explains that there just wasn't time. With Dukakis way ahead and no Bush organization or strategy in place, "outreach" to Republican politicians had a low priority. It never got down to assemblies.

Furthermore, the Bush team believes it has firmed the hard-GOP vote to 90 percent support and now must turn to the soft-Republican and non-GOP sector. That means Dukakis-bashing to instruct Reagan Democrats in the Central Valley who still believe the governor is a moderate-to-conservative. Bush's main television commercial compares his own support of the death penalty with Dukakis' furloughing murderers.

Even though they yearn for serious, conservative proposals, bashing the Duke goes over with the Orange County faithful who still have not had their fill of the Pledge of Allegiance. Conservative State Sen. Bill Campbell finishes Bush rally warms by leading the pledge to lusty cheers — as he did this week in Redding, north of Sacramento in the heart of Reagan Democrat country.

It is the other Bush spot running now that touches the Gentle George theme. Blaming Dukakis for a polluted Boston Harbor, the commercial was tested in liberal San Francisco and now goes statewide. Bush strategists believe the environment appeals to soft voters without offending the hards.

But Bush's surveys show Californians — particularly upper-income, well-educated moderates — want "substance." That was Bush's goal at the Comstock Club when he launched YES to America to help what he termed the "haunted" children of the inner cities.

The vice president derided liberals for wanting to "buy our way out" of the children's crisis with a $100 billion program (actually a Bush invention). Instead, he proposed $100 million in federal dollars to start YES.

This 1,000-to-1 ratio recalls Barry Goldwater's ridicule of cut-rate Republican imitation of liberal largesse as the Dime Store New Deal. That's not what Orange County's true believers want to hear, but the Bush of a kinder, gentler America has set his sights on other voters to nail down California and clinch the election.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Even in public life, forgiving's best policy

HONOLULU — "Everybody is entitled to make a mistake," said Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, referring to an excess of zeal on the part of one of his staff.

William Safire

What a refreshing statement; in this election year, what a humane idea. The liberal Democrat from Ohio was commenting on an investigation into the actions of Linda Greene, who is his representative on the Judiciary Committee staff. A year ago, during the Senate frenzy to besmirch Judge Robert Bork as a dangerous bigot, Greene overstepped.

One lonely black law professor had come to Washington to testify from personal experience to the nominee's total absence of bias. Greene, also a law professor and also black, called the witness to warn him of the "hardball" he would face if he dared to testify. The witness, persuaded his career would be ruined, caved in, cancelled his appearance and went home to tell an associate "I just couldn't take the heat." Because that smacked of the sort of abuse of power that should be curbed, its exposure caused the Judiciary Committee to investigate itself.

A report was prepared and is sealed, but a covering letter from Chairman Joe Biden and ranking Republican Strom Thurmond became available last week. They believed that Greene had acted "out of friendship" but "admonished" her for "poor judgment" in making an "inappropriate" call.

As Metzenbaum pointed out afterward, the committee inquiry found that his staff aide "broke no laws or rules." But if an ideologically committed committee staffer can scare off a witness, an important safeguard is missing in Senate rules. One year after the episode, the Judiciary Committee asked the Senate Ethics Committee for a written guideline to prevent this from happening again.

Thus will something good come from what we can charitably call a mistake. Greene is a talented lawyer who subsequently worked for Jesse Jackson at the Democratic Convention and now serves at the Los Angeles headquarters of the Dukakis campaign. Metzenbaum reports that she apologized for her error in judgment — which she never admitted was intimidation — and he has forgiven her. So should we all.

No such charitable spirit has been shown toward Fred Malek, a white male former Nixonite. He, too, made a mistake, though evidently with much reluctance.

Eighteen years ago, when President Nixon was irritated at a lack of enthusiasm for the success of his economic policy at the Bureau of Labor Statistics, he asked for a rundown of how many bureaucrats were "liberal Democratic Jews." Malek responded properly only with the number of Democrats — 24 out of 25 at the agency's top, showing that Nixon was not paranoid in his suspicion of partisan disapproval.

But the personnel aide kept getting memos about how many were Jewish. He tried to duck a response to that distasteful and un-American portion of the query, and his mistake was in ever responding; finally, he guessed that a dozen were Jewish from the look of the names (and might have written "about half, but who's counting?") The upshot: nobody lost his job. Two men were switched, at no loss of pay, out of positions to cast gloom on happy statistics.

This sorry story was printed 12 years ago. However, after Malek was appointed to the Republican National Committee staff, The Washington Post freshened it up with a couple of memos and unlabeled "leakers" — a front-page story timed for release on Rosh ha-Shanah that "imputed tolerance of anti-Semitism to the Bush campaign. Democrats eager to conceal the Jackson influence in the Dukakis camp tried to turn the hapless Malek into another Eichmann."

To its credit, the Anti-Defamation League saw the blot at Malek as a purely partisan shot and would not be snookered into joining the browbeating. But the can had been tied to the man's tail, set to rattle noisily whenever he moved in public life.

Malek's recognition of error and apology was not enough; to remove himself as an issue, he had to resign.

Neither Greene nor Malek should be forever denied the chance for public service because of a single judgmental error. The Metzenbaum standard suits me: when people admit their mistakes and learn from them, accept the apologies and move on.

We gain from that process of exposure and forgiveness. White House aides now know they serve their president best by promptly objecting to what will be seen as culturally bigoted whims; Senate staffers will soon be told what the limits are in leaning on a witness; and nobody is made a pariah forever.

U.S. sets record for college degrees

WASHINGTON (AP) — More Americans have high school diplomas and college degrees than ever before, reflecting a continuing emphasis on education in society, a new Census Bureau study shows.

"The entire post-Second World War era has been characterized by an expansion of educational opportunities and structures in the country," Census demographer Robert Kominski commented.

His new study of educational attainment found that, as of March 1987, more than three-quarters of people aged 25 and over have completed high school and nearly one in five has finished at least four years of college.

Both shares have been increasing gradually over the years, said Kominski.

"In the 1960s the civil rights movement added another level of opportunity. And the expansion of college grant and aid programs in the '60s and '70s allowed this to continue," he said.

Kominski added that changes in the age breakdown of the population have also had an impact on education averages, as the less educated elderly are replaced by younger people who have spent more time in school.

For example, people in their teens, with 80 percent to 90 percent completing high school, are replacing older folks who were raised at a time when completion of six to eight years of schooling was a major accomplishment, he explained.

Does this mean that Americans today are smarter than in the past? "Not necessarily," Kominski said. "We all like to think that we were raised in the generation which produced the best and the brightest."

The study found that, overall, 75.6 percent of Americans have completed high school and 19.9 percent had finished four years of college. That was up from 74.7 percent and 19.4 percent a year earlier and 68.6 percent and 17.0 percent in 1980.

By comparison, in 1940 only 24.5 percent of Americans aged 25 and older had completed high school and 4.6 percent were college graduates.

The 1987 report also noted that males were slightly more likely to have finished high school than women, 76.0 percent to 75.3 percent, a change from the early 1970s when women led in this category.

The shift is largely attributed to increasing share of black men pursuing their educations, Kominski said.

In 1971, he pointed out, the last time women led men in overall share of high school graduates, young black women aged 25 to 29 led men 60.7 percent to 54.1 percent in high school graduates. Last year among young blacks 84.8 percent of males and 82.1 percent of women had finished high school.

Victim testifies about uncle's sexual attack

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A television show about a rapist finally jolted a 15-year-old former Midland girl to reveal a series of sexual attacks by her uncle that had begun eight years earlier, she testified here Tuesday.

The girl's testimony was the first in the punishment phase of the aggravated sexual assault trial of Donald Ray Watters, 33, 3208 Thomas. Watters pleaded guilty to the charge and is asking the eight-man, four-woman jury to assess his punishment.

The girl, who was expected to continue her testimony today in Judge Pat Baskin's 142nd State District Court, told prosecutor Ralph Petty the first attack occurred when she was seven years old.

The child said she was sent to Oklahoma one summer to live with Watters and his wife. She said the problems began when Watters began touching her; later, he took her into his bedroom and took off her clothes.

"I was hitting him on the chest trying to push him away from me," she told jurors. After the first attack, she told the jury she was too frightened to tell anyone about it because of Watters' threats.

When the girl's father traveled to Oklahoma at the end of the summer, she concealed the attacks from him "because I didn't think he would believe me."

Later, the defendant, a truck driver, moved to Midland with his wife and family, the girl tearfully told jurors.

In 1983, during a babysitting job for the defendant, the attacks resumed, she said. A year later, when the girl was told by her father to help Watters build a fence, he was driving to the site when he saw a nearby motel.

The girl, who said she was "12 or 13" at the time, said her uncle asked her to stop and have sex in the motel. She refused, she said, but later that day he assaulted her.

The stocky dark-haired defendant, clean-cut and dressed in a gray suit, watched her testimony with his attorney, Chris McCormack, and several times shook his head from side to side when she spoke.

Watters, who pleaded guilty only to a July 2, 1984, assault specified in the indictment against him, threatened her after every assault, she testified.

Three years after the last assault, in 1987, the girl was staying with an aunt in Odessa when she saw a television movie about a man who was raping young girls, she told Petty.

The movie frightened her so she began crying and told the aunt about the attacks. In February 1988, Midland County Sheriff's investigators were finally notified, and on April 22, 1988, Watters was indicted.

In his opening statement, McCormack asked jurors to accept his client's guilty plea but urged them to pay attention to the evidence. He said Watters would testify about the incidents.

"Even though there is a guilty plea, we expect their stories to be different," the attorney said. He said the "time frames" of the alleged attacks would differ.

McCormack also told jurors that although the conviction could carry a maximum sentence of life, his client — with no criminal history — is eligible to apply for probation.

He asked the jury to consider that Watters is married, has a family, a good job, and is a religious man.

Watters has made "life changes" since the 1984 assault, and McCormack said the changes were more than cosmetic, more than "trial day" changes for the benefit of the jury.

18-year-old jailed in father's death

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — An 18-year-old man today remained in the Ector County jail in lieu of $25,000 bond on a charge of murder in connection with the shooting death of his father Tuesday morning.

According to Cpl. John McMahon, officers responding to a 911 report of a shooting about 8:55 a.m. Tuesday found Jody Woods Parra, 46, in a northeast bedroom of his home at 812 N. Golder Ave.

After determining Parra apparently had been shot "one or more times in the head" with a small caliber handgun found in the room, officers notified Peace Justice R.G. Hungerford. Hungerford pronounced Parra dead about 11 a.m. and ordered an autopsy.

McMahon said Municipal Judge J.E. Weatherly issued an arrest warrant for Parra's son, Jude Kelly Parra, also of 812 N. Golder.

The younger Parra was arrested at the police department about 1:35 p.m. on the murder warrant.

Weatherly set bond for Parra at $25,000. He was transferred to the Ector County jail about 6:30 p.m.

McMahon said detectives continue to investigate the incident, but the apparent cause of the shooting was a domestic dispute.

Employee charged in extortion attempt

From Staff Reports

A 33-year-old employee of Ranchland Hills Country Club has been charged in a botched attempt to extort money from the club, police said today.

Wilbert Phillip, 1211 E. Oak Ave., was charged Tuesday with theft by threat and was ordered held in lieu of $50,000 by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine. Investigators said he plotted the scheme alone.

At about 10:50 a.m. Tuesday, Phillip allegedly wrote a short note demanding money and threatening that if the money was not delivered, a bomb would explode at Ranchland Hills, 1600 E. Wadley Ave., at noon. The note was delivered to Norma Irene Cook, 54, who police said was in charge of the club staff at the time.

After police were notified, Ms.

Cook placed some cash in an envelope and followed the instructions in the note allegedly written by Phillip, department spokesman Cpl. Jim White said.

"The idea was to make her think there was a go-between, that the employees were just innocent bystanders," White said. He said the note contained an instruction that the money be delivered to a Hogan Park field.

Investigators declined to say how much money was in the envelope. After the envelope was passed to Phillip, he was arrested as he left the club, White said.

The area was searched completely by noon by police, and no explosive devices were found, according to investigators.

The club was not evacuated and its operations were not affected, White said.

Ex-Midlander confesses to credit-card fraud

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A 28-year-old Durham, N.C., man who formerly lived in the Midland-Odessa area confessed in Midland federal court Tuesday to using his father's Social Security number fraudulently in applying for an American Express credit card in 1985.

The man, Conrad Wilson Byrd, had been indicted on 11 counts of credit-card fraud in 1985, 1986, 1987. But the government agreed to dismiss all but one count in exchange for Byrd's guilty plea.

He is to be sentenced at noon on Nov. 9 by U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

"It will be my job and responsibility to sentence you, sir," Bunton told Byrd, whom Bunton could sentence up to five years in prison and fine up to $5,000.

Under the original 11-count indictment, Byrd was facing up to 74 years in total prison time had he been convicted on the 11 charges.

Suspect in teen's death to be held until review

From Staff Reports

A 15-year-old Midland youth suspected in the stabbing and beating death of a 17-year-old Midland teenager three weeks ago will be held until a grand jury reviews evidence in the case, police said today.

The youth is being held in Culver Youth Home until at least Oct. 19, when a Midland grand jury is expected to hear testimony about the killing of Randy Lara and the shooting of a Lamesa man, 33-year-old Vincente Vasquez, department spokesman Cpl. Jim White said this morning.

County Court at Law Judge Willie DuBose granted a police request for the youth's detention after a Monday hearing, White said.

Midlander on trial for income-tax evasion

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A year ago, Midlander Cal B. Wright pledged to become "a respectable citizen again" after a federal judge sentenced him to 10 years in prison for dealing in the drug cocaine.

This week, the 51-year-old bearded Wright is being tried in federal criminal court in Midland for income-tax evasion back when he allegedly was a "high roller" in Midland's oil-boom economy in the early 1980s.

Wright, who had brokered oil-field pipe and refinined and sold oil-field equipment under his Wright Specialty Co. in Jal, N.M., and Midland, was convicted by a federal jury on the cocaine charge and was sentenced by U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

"I would like to apologize to my family...for this terrible thing," Wright told the judge in 1987, and admitted that his involvement in cocaine was "not right." Wright and his wife, Glenda, since have been divorced, according to court records.

This week, Wright, who has elected not to take the witness stand in his own defense, is being prosecuted by San Antonio-based Assistant U.S. Attorney Jake Snyder, who also prosecuted Wright in the 1987 cocaine trial.

Among the four tax-related counts against Wright is the charge that for the 1981 calendar year he reported $2,209 in joint taxable income and owed zero taxes. However, the Internal Revenue Service and the prosecution claim that Wright's taxable income for 1981 was $429,393 and that he owes $212,046 in federal taxes for that year.

"THIS CASE IS not about income taxes," Snyder told the jury. "It is fraud. Mr. Wright took steps to defraud the United States — to cheat the United States of taxes due and owing."

"If an individual becomes wealthy," Snyder said, "that money has to come from somewhere, because money does not grow on trees."

In Midland, Snyder said, Wright paid $140,000 cash for a house, installed a $20,000 swimming pool, bought a $28,000 airplane, and paid $30,000 in repairs to a cabin in Ruidoso, N.M.

Testimony indicated Wright also bought a Datsun 280ZX turbo sports car for $20,000 in 1981.

Wright had high-dollar certificates of deposit (CDs) and in 1981 had $4 million in gross revenue but "declared a loss" in 1982, Snyder said.

"He spent money as if there were no tomorrow," Snyder said. "For him, there was no tomorrow."

During Tuesday's testimony, in which 13 prosecution witnesses and two defense witnesses were called, Wright took notes on a yellow legal pad but remained silent, while his court-appointed defense attorney, Woody Leverett, cross-examined and examined witnesses. Earlier, Wright had tried to "fire" Leverett because of Leverett's alleged unfamiliarity with federal tax laws.

Bunton did not grant Wright's wish.

In Wright's defense, Leverett cautioned the jurors not to become "mesmerized and numbed" by dollar figures tossed out by the prosecution and the IRS.

"There are going to be figures flying around this (court) room — a blizzard of figures," Leverett said. "The IRS will spout out a bunch of

THE CASE against Wright, said Leverett, is a "net-worth" case.

"At best, we are talking about estimates of an approximation," he said. In Wright's defense, Leverett said Wright had $200,000 in cash at home and in a bank safe-deposit box in the early 1980s and suggested that Wright had "scrimped and saved" in the 22 years in which he had worked for El Paso Natural Gas Co.

"It doesn't matter how much money you have if you owe most of it to the bank," Leverett said.

Midlander Leonard Busby, who said he had oil-pipe dealings with Wright in the early 1980s, said he and Wright would "put up the money" to buy and sell pipe.

Pipe sales in the early 1980s were "very good, sir," said Busby, president of B&R Inspection & Equipment Co., and noted that profits were "very good."

Money-wise, Wright was "pretty loose," Busby said. "We had a lot of money in those days." He agreed that Wright could be described as a "high roller" and responded "yes" to the prosecutor's query if Wright could be described as "gaudy" in his dress and ornamentation.

Wright wore an expensive Rolex watch and diamond and gold jewelry in the boom days, Busby said.

"I bought one (Rolex) watch from him," Busby said. "I paid him $5,900 for it. In fact, I bought three of them from him."

Woodward, Okla., pipe and scrap-iron dealer Louis Solloway testified that he had dealings with Wright and that Wright had given Solloway's wife a $500 watch and had given him a $2,500 watch.

"But it didn't keep good time," Solloway said. "It didn't run. I traded it off." He said the watch Wright gave his wife "went bad."

ANOTHER prosecution witness, Judy Snodgrass, said she had first met Wright in the old Sans Souci private club in 1981 and that Wright had given her a $1,400 brass bed the day after they had met in the club. "He brought me roses and all of that kind of stuff," she said, and bought her a microwave oven and gave her money.

Ms. Snodgrass said Wright wore a Rolex watch and gold jewelry and had a "bunch" of money in a safe-deposit box in the now-defunct Permian Bank & Trust of Odessa.

"He was nice to me," the blonde-haired woman said of Wright. "He always respected me. I thought."

Another witness, Wanda Ingram of Odessa, said she had piloted Wright's Cessna aircraft to look over oil-field pipe in Alice in South Texas in 1982 and was ticketed and fined for a traffic violation while she was driving Wright's wife's sports car.

Ms. Ingram said Wright was "very likable," "very generous," "very easy-going," and was a "very nice person."

IRS Special Agent J. Bruce Scott of Midland said Wright's financial records were "virtually devoid of any normal day-to-day living expense."

Defense witness Jimmy Mitchell, a Breckenridge gunsmith who in Jal was involved with Wright in overhauling and racing drag race cars, said "Cal always had money. He didn't seem to be short of financing whenever he needed it."

Drag racing, however, wasn't profitable, he said.

Phillips breaks pledge to limit donations, then returns money

By STEVE LEVINE

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice Tom Phillips has broken his pledge to limit individual campaign contributions to $5,000, but the Republican promised to return the excess money today.

Campaign finance statements filed with the secretary of state's office Tuesday showed Phillips accepted $1,890 from the Texas Medical Association on July 11, when the doctors underwrote the expenses of a fundraiser for his race against Democratic Justice Ted Z. Robertson. Combined with a $4,000 cash donation the TMA gave Phillips on Feb. 1, the doctors' contributions total $5,890 — $890 over the limit he set early in the campaign. "We'll pay it back tomorrow," Phillips said Tuesday, adding that he did not know how he missed the figure.

As the size and impact of campaign contributions to judicial candidates became an issue in Supreme Court races, Phillips said he established the $5,000 limit to protect his and the court's image. Five other candidates have followed suit.

In the Place 5 race, incumbent Justice Barbara Culver, a Midland Republican, overtook her Democratic challenger Jack Hightower by bringing in more than double Hightower's $96,000 over the past three months. Ms. Culver raised $201,000, with just two contributions of $5,000, and six others of more than $2,000. Hightower reported one $5,000 contribution.

Counting from the first of the year, Ms. Culver has collected $435,000 to Hightower's $341,000. Before Tuesday's report, Hightower led Ms. Culver by about $11,000 in the race between two West Texans.

Nine of the 12 major-party candidates running for the Texas Supreme Court in November collected nearly $2 million in campaign contributions over the past three months, according to reports filed Tuesday with the secretary of state. Those donations bring the total raised in high court races since Jan. 1, 1987, to at least $7 million, not counting the three candidates whose reports did not come in before the office closed at 5 p.m. Tuesday.

Phillips and Robertson raised more than $1 million between them from July 1 through Sept. 30. Each has collected more than $1.4 million since the first of 1987. Phillips brought in $565,000 and spent $758,000 in the three-month period, including $411,000 to buy time for television advertisements. Robertson collected $449,000 and spent $645,000, including $500,000 for TV time.

Other than the TMA, Phillips held to his pledge to limit individual contributions to $5,000, bringing in eight donations of that size out of a thick list of contributors. Twelve attorneys or law firms gave Robertson more than $5,000. His largest donation, $25,000, came from the Corpus Christi law firm of Edwards & Terry. The largest single contribution went to Place 6 Democratic challenger Karl Bayer of Austin, who loaned his campaign $53,431 on Aug. 9, one month before he entered the race.

Bayer's Republican incumbent opponent, Eugene Cook of Houston, raised $154,000, including 13 donations of $5,000.

Both Cook and Bayer entered the race in September, when Gov. Bill Clements appointed Cook to replace Justice Jim Wallace, who resigned. Cook will serve until the Nov. 8 elections, when the winner will fill the four years remaining in Wallace's term.

In the race for the open seat in Place 1, Democrat Lloyd Doggett of Austin continued to outpace Republican Paul Murphy of Huntsville. Dog-gett's $173,000 in contributions included $5,000 each from 12 lawyers or law firms. Three law firms and the Texas Bankers' Association political action committee gave Murphy $5,000 each to help him reach $126,000.

Incumbent Democratic Justice Raul Gonzalez reported raising $134,000. His Republican opponent, Charles Ben Howell, did not file by late Tuesday.

The Midland law firm of Stubbeman McRae Sealy Laughlin & Browder, which had donated just $7,000 total since the first of 1987, more than doubled that level in the past three months. Stubbeman McRae gave $5,000 each to Phillips, Gonzalez and Murphy.

Nuessle named to board

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements has appointed former Midland City Attorney Joe M. Nuessle to serve on the State Pension Review Board.

The announcement from the governor's office came Tuesday.

Also appointed was Bernie O. Henderson Jr. of Cameron to a spot on the Texas Veterans Commission.

Henderson, 61, is an official of the San Tyson Chapter 18 of the Disabled American Veterans. His military career included active duty with both the Navy and Air Force.

Voters should decide on income tax, panel member says

Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — Voters should be given the chance to adopt a state income tax to replace the local property tax for education, said a member of the Select Committee on Tax Equity.

Franklin Raines said his income tax proposal would address three major problems Texas faces in financing government: a heavy property tax burden, problems in education finance, and imbalances in the tax system.

"(The proposal) deals with the local problem by substantially reducing local taxes," said Raines. "It deals with the imbalance question and it does so with a tax system that can carry us into the next century."

The Tax Equity Committee has been meeting for 16 months to draft recommendations to the Texas Legislature on the state tax structure. It has adopted a statement declaring that the Texas tax system, which relies on sales taxes, local property taxes and a franchise tax on some businesses, is troubled by an inability to keep pace with a changing Texas economy.

But the committee has not taken a stance on the volatile question of adopting an income tax. Texas is one of seven states without a state income tax.

Raines, who was appointed by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, broached the idea in a working group that is drafting final recommendations to the full committee on the income tax and lottery.

Raines said that increasing state funding of school district operations from its current level of 51 percent would reduce the inequity in the state education system.

A district court has ruled that the system of financing education in Texas is unconstitutional because it provides unequal access to the state's education money. The state has appealed the case, but officials recognize the need to overhaul the education financing system.

New Alamo battle brews over funds' use

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The Alamo may have been at peace since 1836, but descendants of those who fought there have a new battle brewing over control of $1.7 million banked from souvenir sales at the shrine. The Daughters of the Republic of Texas have always had charge of the Alamo and its bank account. But the League of United Latin American Citizens, angered over what it calls a misrepresentation of history by the Daughters, says they should turn any surplus over to the state.

"In my opinion, all they want to do is get their hands on the money," Ella Stumpf, 84, one of the Daughters, said this week.

The Alamo is a self-financing facility. No state tax money is invested and the Daughters must generate funds from the souvenir shop to pay for a staff of 65 and an annual budget in excess of $1 million.

The mission, visited by 3 million people a year, occupies four acres of state land in downtown San Antonio. The Daughters serve at the pleasure of the Legislature, which alone has authority to end their custodial role.

"I don't think too many people knew they had $1.7 million in the bank off sales from their souvenir shop. I don't think anyone had ever asked," said state Rep. Orlando Garcia, whose inquiry into the Alamo ledgers started the current flap.

Garcia said unless the Daughters "have a great purpose for these funds" the money could become available to the state.

When the attorney general ruled that the Alamo finances fell under the Texas Open Records Act, the Daughters sent a copy of their latest audited budget to Garcia.

"We'd never had to face this before...We're happy to do whatever the proper authorities want us to do. We don't have anything to hide," said Peggy Dibrell, a member of the Daughters' Alamo Committee.

Attached to the audit was a note explaining the intended plans for the surplus funds: a new film and activity center, two new educational films and a permanent operating "hedge" against a sudden drop-off in tourism.

Mitchell said Wright, whom he called Cal, "was always pretty big on gold and diamonds. He was always buying chains, rings, watches and what have you. I know he always had money."

Wright's 27-year-old daughter, Stephanie Wright, testified that her father kept "money in the cedar chest at the house" and at the old Permian Bank in Odessa.

She said her father would "bring it (money) out" of the chest when he added money to the coffer.

"They were $100 bills" wrapped in bands, she said.

Miss Wright estimated that her father had $50,000 to $60,000 in cash in Jal and that that sum was double that "or more" after he moved to Midland in the early 1980s. He also kept money in orange Permian Bank bags, she said.

"I always knew," the daughter said, "that he had money like that."

When the car approached an intersection near the party site, rocks and beer bottles were thrown at the car, and Lara, who was riding in the front seat, was grabbed and dragged through the window. HOUSTON (AP) — Patsy Young had carried her whistle for 25 years, but had never had an occasion to use it until a man attempted to pull the Houston attorney from her car in a parking garage.

Mrs. Young, a 51-year-old grandmother, told police her husband gave her the whistle when she was a University of Houston student so she could use it to call for help if she got into trouble.

Mrs. Young said she was getting out of her car in downtown Houston early Tuesday when a man grabbed her right arm.

"He said he needed to borrow my car," she said. "He started pulling me out of the car. I started struggling, screaming and hitting."

"I kept trying to knock his glasses off, and I was screaming at the top of my lungs."

As the man ran away after a brief struggle, Mrs. Young began blowing her whistle.

"It seemed like I was blowing for a really long time," she said. "A woman heard the whistle and found five or six policemen who came running in."

"I pointed out the direction he ran and one of the policemen stayed with me while the others went looking for him," she said. "A few minutes later, they came back with him."

Bentsen's campaign in other 49 states sets sights on Texas voters

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Lloyd Bentsen picked up an AR-15 assault rifle at a police practice range in eastern Pennsylvania and brought the weapon to his shoulder, he was aiming all the same for Texas votes.

The Democratic vice presidential candidate's three shots Tuesday hit just below the silhouette target's heart. Democrats in Texas are hoping that on Nov. 8 he can hit an electoral bull's eye.

After weeks of taking a drubbing, Bentsen's strong showing against Dan Quayle in their debate has sparked new optimism and a new offensive by the Texas Democrats.

"It was viewed as a slam dunk in Texas, and there's obviously a lot of regional pride," said Joe O'Neill, Bentsen's chief of staff. "The mentality of the political guys down in the state has changed dramatically over the past week."

O'Neill, Bentsen's top campaign aide, seems to spend as much time in touch with the senator's Texas organization as he does with the Democratic campaign's Boston headquarters.

After all, winning Texas' 29 electoral votes — third largest prize in the nation — was the main reason Bentsen was picked for the ballot by Michael Dukakis.

And he's turned what was expected to be a GOP blow-out into a horserace.

But so far the polls show he's not winning it. Published surveys put the Democrats behind by five to 12 points. Tom Cosgrove, director of the Dukakis-Bentsen Texas campaign, says the Democrats' post-debate polling showed the gap near the small end of that range, while Republicans privately say their data still show a double-digit lead for George Bush and strong anti-Dukakis sentiment.

"We feel good," says Reggie Bashur, spokesman for Bush's Texas campaign. Not only are the polls in Bush's favor, he says, but the Republicans have a strong organization in the state that Bush also calls home.

The task for Bentsen clearly is to convince Texans that Dukakis would be good for their economy and trustworthy on gut issues such as crime and gun control — issues the Bush campaign has used to clobber the Democrats.

After he picked up that rifle at the police academy in Allentown, Pa., Bentsen spoke on how the Democrats were tough on crime, despite Republican claims to the contrary.

STATE

Dukakis' 'liberalism' cited in Bush lead

AUSTIN (AP) — Former U.S. Sen. John Tower, co-chairman of George Bush's presidential campaign in the South, says the Republican is leading in the region because of his opponent's liberal beliefs.

Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis "is a doctrinaire liberal...He is so far out of the mainstream," Tower said Tuesday.

Citing recent polls showing Bush ahead in the Southern states, Tower said Bush leads by 10 percentage points in the "worst case" in Texas and contended that a major reason for the lead is the two candidates' stand on defense issues.

"As the campaign progresses, Texans are beginning to perceive that the views of Michael Dukakis, the philosophical attitudes of this man and his vision of the future is incompatible with the best interests of our state," Tower said.

"I submit to you that this man is viscerally anti-defense...Should he become president, I feel that he would use defense as a bill-payer for other programs."

Tower noted that Texas is a major beneficiary of defense spending.

Meanwhile, a pair of Democratic state legislators said the Republican record on education this past eight years has been so dismal that it's hypocritical of Bush to promise to be the education president.

"The Reagan-Bush administration has excelled in hypocrisy concerning education. They have appealed to the selfishness and promoted division between the haves and the have-nots of this nation," said Sen. Carl Parker of Beaumont, chairman of the Senate Education Committee.

State Rep. Wilhelmina Delco of Austin, chairman of the House Higher Education Committee, said Bush's campaign has shown more interest in symbols than in substantive issues such as the future of American children.

Texans turn out to honor Jim Wright

FORT WORTH (AP) — At a time when U.S. House Speaker Jim Wright is dodging political barbs and ethics committee investigations, more than 9,500 Texans turned out in his hometown to honor him.

"An event of this kind could go to a man's head," Wright told a packed gathering at Will Rogers Coliseum.

The "Jim Wright Salute," dubbed a bi-partisan, non-campaign event drew nearly twice the number of supporters originally expected by the 400 organizers of the event. The free barbecue for the District 12 Democrat was paid for with donations.

"We started out wanting to have a small party for you to welcome you home," Fort Worth Mayor Bob Bolen told Wright. "Now we've got 9,500 people."

Speeches from Bolen, Texas Gov. Bill Clements, U.S. Rep. Jack Brooks and New York Gov. Mario Cuomo drew cheers, applause and even standing ovations for a man now under congressional investigation on ethics charges.

"Texas has put a strong leader in the speaker's chair — one that may be recorded as among the finest in history," said Brooks, D-Beaumont, who has served alongside Wright since 1982 when the two were in the state Legislature.

In a fiery address usually reserved for church revivals and campaign stumpings, Cuomo brought supporters to their feet with applause and cheers for Wright.

"Traveling to Texas from New York is not too long a trip to pay respect to a person like Jim Wright," Cuomo said.

Cuomo credited Wright with backing an unpopular federal bailout of New York City when the nation's largest city faced bankruptcy in the late 1970s.

"As a New Yorker, I will never forget what Jim Wright did for New York City more than a decade ago," he said. "I will never forget Jim Wright — a Texan — standing in the well of the House, seeking federal aid for our city."

"As speaker of the House, he has been a tough, fair, effective leader committed to the needs of all of the people of this nation," Cuomo said.

Clements credited Wright for being a driving force behind such projects as the homeport naval bases planned for Corpus Christi and Galveston, the Sematech research consortium in Austin and his ongoing support for bringing the superconducting "super collider" project to Waxahachie.

"In Speaker Wright, we have a native Texan, certainly; an outstanding representative for Fort Worth, certainly; but he's a great American," Clements said. He added that Wright followed a Texas tradition in Washington. "There was a Speaker John Nance Gardner, and then Sam Rayburn. Now there's a Speaker Jim Wright. And we Texans have a right to be proud of him."

Supporters watched a film which recounted Wright's 34 years as a U.S. congressman — pictures of him tromping through the site of what became the multimillion-dollar Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, meeting with foreign dignitaries and visiting Bell Helicopter's plant in Arlington.

Included in the presentation were filmed interviews with Republican and Democratic colleagues. One film clip was of former President John F. Kennedy and first lady Jacqueline Kennedy on the morning before the president was killed. Kennedy said he was "proud to be in Jim Wright's city" and that Wright was known as one of the hardest working congressmen in Washington.

Wright, who was named Speaker of the House in January 1987, said his first term leading the House has been a mixed blessing.

"I've had more free advice and more unrelenting criticism this year than in all the rest of my life put together," he said. "But I've also been able to do more this year than in all the rest of my life put together."

Wright pointed to bills passed on conservation, highway construction, plant closing notification, welfare reform, catastrophic illnesses, civil rights and affordable housing as a measure of his claim.

Wright called for more work towards peace in Central America and "a better understanding of Mexico." He said he believed his support of the Arias Peace Plan for Central America prompted numerous attacks and the ethics investigations.

"I think we all need to keep trying for peace," he said.

Fixing nation's school system will take years, Cavazos says

KINGSVILLE (AP) — Fixing the nation's troubled school systems will take years, new U.S. Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos said in his native, dropout-plagued South Texas.

"The kind of changes that we envision where you will have all children in school and educated to their fullest potential will not happen before the turn of the century," Cavazos said.

But concern about education is at an all-time high, and has spurred a massive reform movement, the education secretary said Tuesday.

"The immensity and variety of innovation going on in education today is truly staggering," Cavazos said in the keynote speech for a convocation at Texas A&I University at Kingsville, where he started his college education after World War II.

Cavazos, in his first major university speech since the Senate last month confirmed his appointment by President Ronald Reagan, said Americans must put education at the top of the agenda in order to solve the high dropout rate and illiteracy in the United States.

"The American dream is more like a nightmare for adolescents who don't finish high school," Cavazos said.

The education secretary was born on the vast King Ranch south of Kingsville, where his father was a foreman, and learned to read and write at the Santa Gertrudis School on the ranch.

Cavazos, the first Hispanic member of the Cabinet, greeted a group of students from the Santa Gertrudis School and later visited H.M. King High School, where he was graduated in 1944.

He was president of Texas Tech University in Lubbock before taking the Cabinet post.

Cavazos encouraged the students in the audience Tuesday to pursue a liberal arts education in addition to their areas of specialization, to develop better interpersonal skills and an understanding of the "broader context" of their learning.

Nearly one-half of Hispanic students and one-third of Anglos and blacks in Texas drop out before finishing high school, Cavazos said.

Many schools produce high school graduates who still need remedial instruction, while the nation faces a shortage of engineers and scientists, he added.

"It is a very, very clear message that I really want to give to all of our country, and that is to raise the awareness of the people in this country to the serious deficits we have in school," Cavazos said in an interview Tuesday.

The report "A Nation at Risk" produced by the National Commission on Excellence in Education five years ago started a massive school reform movement, he said.

Cavazos cited last year's education-oriented bestsellers "Cultural Literacy" and "The Closing of the American Mind" as further examples of the public's growing interest in education.

Judge expected to rule on execution

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A Texas death row inmate, convicted in the 1974 slayings of a Port Arthur couple, is asking a federal judge to halt his scheduled execution.

U.S. District Judge Sam Hall in Marshall is expected to rule in the case of Walter Bell today.

The Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin Tuesday refused to halt Bell's execution set for early Friday, court spokesman Rick Wetzel said.

Attorney Eden Harrington with the University of Texas Capital Punishment Clinic in Austin, who is helping represent Bell, is asking Hall for a reprieve, claiming Bell is mentally retarded.

But the state attorney general's office is arguing that Bell, whose 13 years and four months on death row ranks him third in seniority among the approximately 280 condemned inmates in Texas, should have brought up the mentally retarded issue before, according to spokesman Bob Wait.

Bell, as well as other death row inmates, are relying on a case pending before the U.S. Supreme Court involving the legality of executing mentally retarded people.

The nation's high court agreed to review the case of Texas death row inmate Johnny Penry after attorneys contended executing the 32-year-old would be cruel and unusual punishment banned by the Eighth Amendment.

Penry, whose IQ has been estimated at between 50 and 60 and who had the reasoning capacity of a 7-year-old, was sentenced to death for the 1979 rape-slaying of a Livingston woman in her home.

The Supreme Court is not expected to rule on the case until late spring or early next summer.

Bell was first sentenced to die in December 1974 for the rape-slaying of Irene Chisum, a Port Arthur housewife. Mrs. Chisum, 56, and her husband, Ferd, 50, were killed July 19, 1974.

Bell's conviction in Mrs. Chisum's death was vacated in January 1984 and he was given a life sentence in May 1984. The conviction was vacated because he had been interviewed by a state psychiatrist without being warned that the psychiatrist was gathering information that later could be used against him in court.

Woman who left dead infant in Dumpster sought

HOUSTON (AP) — A man who saw a "suspicious" woman put an athletic bag in a convenience store Dumpster later discovered the body of a dead infant inside, authorities said.

Police today were searching for the woman who drove away from the southwest Houston store after placing the infant there Tuesday afternoon.

It appeared the infant had been dead for about 12 hours, but an autopsy will be conducted to determine his cause of death, investigators said. HPD homicide Sgt. George Alderete said no wounds were found on the body.

Houston Fire Department paramedics told police, however, that it appeared the infant may have been born alive and might have suffocated inside a towel, investigators said.

Patrolman G.W. Grymes said the infant's umbilical cord was still attached.

"Maybe she didn't want the baby," Grymes said. "Or maybe the baby died and she was afraid she would be blamed for his death."

Landing 'brightened' day

DALLAS (AP) — A California industrialist says he may make a donation to an exclusive girls' school where the headmistress said his emergency landing on a school playing field "certainly brightened a dull Monday."

Freeman Ford, 47, was en route to Shreveport, La., Monday from Socorro, N.M., when his Beechcraft Bonanza A36 lost power over north Dallas.

Ford, founder and chairman of Fafco, a major manufacturer of solar energy panels based in Menlo Park, Calif., said he had to decide whether to land on the campus of Hockaday School or risk a more difficult glide to Addison Airport in the Dallas suburb of Addison.

An electrical glitch caused the plane to "become a glider," Ford told the Dallas Morning News. "Luckily, I'm a glider pilot."

Idabelle McMurry, the school's headmistress, walked to the field and told Ford, "Whenever you're in trouble, drop in."

Threats prompt warning

SAN MARCOS (AP) — A series of eight telephoned bomb threats, apparently from students, prompted administrators at San Marcos High School to issue a threat of their own.

Superintendent John Fuller said Tuesday officials are considering scheduling classes on Saturdays to make up for lost school time.

In addition to eight bomb threats at the high school, there have been three telephoned bomb threats at Owen Elementary Jr. High School.

"We haven't missed enough time to justify it (Saturday classes) at this point," Fuller said. "If we get continued interruptions, we'll have to look at alternatives."

Vehicle theft rate released

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas has the third-highest vehicle theft rate in the nation, with more than 120,000 vehicles taken last year, an insurance industry official says.

Jerry Johns, spokesman for the Texas Action Council on Theft, said Tuesday that 123,349 vehicles were stolen during 1987, ranking Texas only behind California and New York.

Ex-Marine testifies hijackers beat passengers at random

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — The hijackers of a TWA jetliner raced through the plane beating passengers at random after it was commandeered in 1985, an American witness testified today in the trial of Mohammed Ali Hamadi.

Robert G. Brown, a Marine at the time of the hijacking, who now works for a medical equipment company, also told the court in emotional testimony that he was convinced his family was told he was the U.S. serviceman killed by the hijackers. Hamadi is charged with murder and air piracy in the June 14, 1985 hijacking, which diverted the Athens to Rome flight to Beirut. Thirty-nine Americans were held for 17 days during the ordeal.

U.S. Navy diver Robert Stethem was beaten and shot by the hijackers and his body tossed out on the runway in Beirut. The hijackers screamed "Marine" at Stethem while he was beaten and before he was shot, witnesses have said.

"I was afraid that my wife and children thought I was dead," Brown said, choking back tears.

Brown said that fear came when he and other hostages were allowed to read magazines after they were removed from the plane and held in Beirut.

"At this time I realized that my wife had been told I was killed because I had been a Marine and it was published that a Marine had been killed," he said.

Hamadi is being tried in a heavily guarded courtroom in a Frankfurt's Preungesheim prison. Police patrolled the area with submachine guns.

Brown, 45, described the first minutes after the jetliner was seized.

"One man had a pistol in one hand and a grenade in the other," Brown said referring to alleged kidnapper Hassan Ezzeddine, who is still at large.

"The other man (Hamadi) had a hand grenade in his hand. I saw a (grenade) pin on the floor of the plane, which to be honest with you, frightened the hell out of me," he said.

He said he saw the hijackers running through the plane striking passengers.

"I was able to see numerous times the brutality that both of the hijackers inflicted on the passengers. They were hitting them right and left."

He said they sometimes leaned on seat backs and kicked passengers.

Brown said that he was later taken off the plane in Beirut and held by other captors as the hostage ordeal continued.

He said he was first taken to a "slum house where we were interrogated."

"We were taken later to an underground prison. For the first seven days we did not brush our teeth, or wash or change our clothes. There were no newspapers and no news," Brown said.

The hostages were moved again to a third location where they were finally allowed to wash and read magazines, he said.

He said the hijackers appeared well-trained for their mission.

"The initial movements to take over the plane were done with such professionalism; it was done with such force that without a doubt they controlled that plane," Brown said.

But he added: "If they hadn't had the hand grenades they probably would have failed."

"My initial feeling was surprise and fright. And it turned into frustration because I didn't know how to overcome the situation. It was the most frustrating experience I have ever gone through."

Hamadi sat quietly throughout the testimony, listening attentively to his court-appointed interpreter.

On Tuesday, American Leo Byron tearfully recounted how hijackers hit and kicked crouching passengers, including himself and his teenage daughter.

He also provided more description of how Stethem was severely beaten before he was fatally shot.

"His face was puffy. He was very raw or bloody in the neck area. He appeared to be dazed," said Byron, 52.

Byron said he did not see who fired the shot that killed Stethem. Hamadi admits he was one of the hijackers but denies killing Stethem.

Stethem's parents, Richard and Patricia Stethem, have attended each session of the trial, which began July 5.

Hamadi was arrested Jan. 13, 1987, at Frankfurt airport after customs officials found liquid explosives in his luggage.

Changes in Czech regime likely will slow down pace of reforms

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The Communist leadership has undergone a major shake-up that will most probably slow down the pace of reform in Czechoslovakia, speeches by senior officials indicate.

During the reshuffle, which occurred Monday and Tuesday, the country lost its key advocate of speedy economic and social reform, longtime Premier Lubomir Strougal.

Warning of the potential for high inflation and unemployment under rapid reform, the leadership backed personnel changes aimed at pursuing a slower road to "restructuring" than that of the Soviets.

Speeches published after the two-day session of the Communist Party's Central Committee made clear that leaders favor reforms but resist radical changes in the economy, such as tampering with the socialist linchpin — central planning.

Strougal, with over 18 years in office, resigned Monday as federal premier and also vacated his seat in the Communist Party's ruling Politburo. He will be replaced by Czech premier Ladislav Adamec, 62, a moderate expected to be less insistent on reform.

A caretaker government headed by Deputy Premier Rudolf Rohlíček will be in power until the changes are approved by the Federal Assembly, or parliament, early next month. Parliamentary endorsement is expected.

Strougal, 63, was known to have championed thorough economic reform similar to those being carried out in the Soviet Union under Mikhail S. Gorbachev. But Strougal's plans for innovative changes were watered down by party conservatives.

Adamec's main advantage appears to be that in the eyes of many Czechs he is not associated with the brutal suppression that occurred during the so-called "crisis years" of 1968-69 when then-party chief Alexander Dubcek was purged in the wake of a Soviet-led invasion.

Party chief Milos Jakes, the party's chief ideologist, Jan Fojtik, and a resolution published Tuesday made it clear that political change like those ongoing in the Soviet Union has been ruled out for some time to come.

Fojtik denounced the "radicalism" of unidentified people in Czechoslovakia, who are "calling for a drastic reform with bankruptcies and unemployment, rapid growth of prices of foodstuffs, rents and of inflation."

Fojtik, who announced the personnel changes, told reporters, "We put emphasis on the leading role of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia in carrying out the restructuring process."

As he met reporters, Fojtik claimed Strougal does not feel healthy, is tired and "is not really able to master the many difficult task" of premiership.

Fojtik indicated that Strougal left the political scene in anger, saying he will not even head the caretaker government.

Fojtik and Jakes also stressed that despite some cautious opening up in the arts, the party remains firmly opposed to political liberalization, let alone the recognition of dissident and nonconformist political and ecological groups.

Without naming countries, the ideologist, who took over the party portfolio from hard-line Politburo member Vasil Bilak, now in charge of foreign policy, said Prague leaders are discouraged and in fact appealed by reform setbacks in Hungary and Poland.

In other government changes, Jaromir Johanes, first deputy foreign minister and a former ambassador to Canada and the United States, was nominated to be the new foreign minister, replacing Bohuslav Choupek.

Serbia party chief says rallies threat to socialism

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — The Communist Party chief today said ethnic rallies that ignited nationwide unrest are an example of counterrevolutionary tendencies running rampant in Yugoslavia, state-run media reported.

"What the counterrevolution in Kosovo has been trying to do (constitute)...the most brutal threat to socialism in Yugoslavia," Stipe Suvar told the ruling Politburo of Yugoslavia and Kosovo, an autonomous province in the republic of Serbia. But he added, "Anti-socialist, and if you want, counterrevolutionary tendencies, have grown in all of Yugoslavia so that the Kosovo reality, in comparison, is not a particularly isolated phenomenon."

His comments at the meeting in Pristina, the capital of Kosovo, were reported by the state-run Tanjug news agency.

At a meeting Tuesday, Serbia's Communist Party chief, Slobodan Milosevic, defended the Kosovo rallies and vowed he would assign blame for the national crisis during a meeting of national leaders next week.

But Milosevic was criticized for failing to condemn calls for violent solutions to tensions in Kosovo, where Serbs claim discrimination by the Albanian majority.

During the Belgrade meeting of the Central Committee of the Serbian Communist Party, members demanded three Kosovo communists be ousted from the national Central Committee for failing to resolve tensions. The Belgrade and the Pristina gatherings were key preludes to the crucial national Central Committee gathering Monday.

The growing friction between ethnic groups and general dissatisfaction with the nation's economy has led to widespread public protests, strikes and political maneuvering that add up to Yugoslavia's most serious social unrest since World War II.

Milosevic, hailed by Serbs as the heir apparent to the late President Josip Broz Tito, is expected to have a major showdown with national party leaders over the Kosovo dispute and the broader protests over Yugoslavia's economy.

Milosevic on Tuesday defended the nationalist rallies but said they should not become a regular practice. The meeting was broadcast on state radio and television in a break with usual practice.

He said Monday's meeting should be "a confrontation with the responsibility for the crisis."

The Serbian Central Committee, which has more than 100 members, decided with only six negative votes to demand dismissals of two ethnic Albanians and one Slav from their Kosovo party posts and their expulsion from the national Central Committee.

One of the three is Azem Vlashi, an ethnic Albanian and former party chief in Kosovo, where predominantly Moslem Albanians make up 90 percent of the population. Most Slavs who live in the province — Serbs and Montenegrins — are Christian. Yugoslavia consists of six republics and two autonomous provinces, each with its own government and party structure. The autonomous provinces, Kosovo and Vojvodina, are part of Serbia but not fully subject to its control.

The decentralized system of government and collective federal presidency were devised in Tito's 1974 constitution to prevent one republic from gaining sway over the others, but has resulted in an ineffective government.

Suvar has said broad personnel changes would be made during Monday's national party meeting.

Ethnic tension in Kosovo has increased sharply in recent weeks because of rallies by hundreds of thousands of Serbian nationalists. Albanians deny discrimination against Slavs and say the problems are economic.

Mustafa Sefcet, an ethnic Albanian member of the Serbian Central Committee, on Tuesday sharply criticized such rally chants as "We want arms" and the calls for Vlashi's death. "These are anti-socialist slogans which do not meet with sharp condemnation, except for sharp condemnation by all nations and nationalities" in regions outside Serbia, he said.

"One should, on the spot, unmask all forces standing behind" the slogans, he said in apparent criticism of Milosevic.

Belgrade radio reported three more rallies Tuesday.

Palestinians hurl grenade at Israeli's car

JERUSALEM (AP) — Palestinians hurled a hand grenade at a civilian Israeli car in the occupied Gaza Strip today, and in the West Bank town of Nablus Israeli soldiers blew up or sealed nine houses of suspected activists, the army said.

Nablus, a city of 120,000, was under army-imposed curfew for the sixth straight day today following a bloody clash last week in which troops shot and killed four people and wounded 21. Residents said they were running short of food.

No injuries were reported in the grenade attack on Nasir Street in the center of Gaza City, the second such assault in two days.

On Tuesday, a Palestinian tossed a hand grenade at an Israeli patrol in Gaza City and wounded two soldiers, the army said.

The two Arab attacks were among only a few involving firearms in the 10-month-old uprising against Israeli rule in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The army said the grenade today missed its target. Israeli army radio and an Arab reporter in Gaza said troops closed the area and started searching house to house for suspects after the morning incident.

In Tuesday's attack, a Soviet-made grenade was thrown at the first vehicle in a military patrol from the grounds of Nasir Eye Hospital in a residential section of Gaza. Soldiers found the grenade pin and handle in the courtyard of the hospital, an army spokesman said on condition of anonymity.

Two army sergeants were lightly wounded in their legs.

Also in Gaza City, the army today detained Ibrahim Al Yazouri, an Arab pharmacist and the secretary-general of the Mujama Al-Islami, or Islamic Grouping, a radical religious group. Al Yazouri is believed to be the operational leader of Moslem fundamentalists in the Gaza Strip.

Israel radio quoted Arab reports as saying other fundamentalist leaders were detained in the last few days.

The arrests followed a rapprochement between radical Moslems and pro-PLO activists, declared in the latest leaflets of the underground Moslem Hamas movement and the PLO-linked Unified National Leadership of the Uprising.

In the West Bank's largest city, Nablus, soldiers blew up four houses and sealed off five others in the Old City and the Ras El-Ein neighborhood, the army said.

It said the houses belonged to Arabs suspected of being members in a nine-man squad of "strike forces" that enforced orders by underground uprising leaders. It said several members of the squad were arrested.

They were accused of hacking and stabbing to death three Arabs suspected of collaborating with Israel in Nablus in September of beating other Palestinians and of inciting riots.

The squad's members belonged to Fatah, the mainstream faction of the PLO, the army said.

Nablus residents, under an army-imposed curfew, told The Associated Press telephone lines in the Old City were cut off for the last four days.

Nablus residents complained of food shortages caused by the curfew.

"People are starving. This is the sixth day of curfew. We need help. The babies are without milk. I called all the foreign embassies and we hope they will help us," said prominent Nablus businessman Said Kanan.

The army denied the charges. An army spokeswoman said Red Cross and hospital officials were permitted to move freely in the city. The curfew was lifted for two hours Tuesday to allow residents to buy food, she said.

11th case of polio reported in Israel

JERUSALEM (AP) — A 12-year-old boy is the 11th Israeli to contract polio since an outbreak began last month, and health officials said an inadequate sewer system was contributing to the spread of the disease.

The Health Ministry last week ordered a nationwide vaccination campaign after the polio virus was found in sewage in at least a dozen Israeli cities.

On Tuesday, the third day of the campaign, the government began vaccinating about 1 million school children against the disease.

"We wouldn't be vaccinating the whole population if we didn't think the whole population could be at risk. But this absolutely is not an epidemic," said Paul Slater, chief epidemiologist for the Health Ministry.

Doctors believe the boy, from a town 30 miles north of Tel Aviv, contracted the disease from an infected person, not from contaminated sewage, Slater said.

Candidates would boost natural gas

AUSTIN (SWN) — Gov. Michael Dukakis Tuesday said he would make natural gas the "centerpiece" of his national energy policy.

Writing to John E. Watson, president of the Texas Independent Producers & Royalty Owners Association, the Democratic presidential nominee said in response to TIPRO energy policy proposals, "Natural gas ought to be playing a growing — not a declining — role in the nation's energy mix."

"I will make expanded natural gas production and use a centerpiece of my national energy policy," wrote Dukakis, who added that "we must break the logjam" at the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission "to insure that we have the interstate pipeline capacity we need, and to remove the barriers that prevent large industrial and utility customers from bargaining directly with producers.

Bush

"Finally, I have the confidence that we can now complete the process of deregulating natural gas prices in a way that balances the interests of both consumers and producers."

Development of natural gas as the nation's primary energy is a key point in TIPRO's proposal for a national energy policy. In a Sept. 23 letter to Watson, Vice President George Bush agreed natural gas "can play a much larger role in meeting U.S. energy needs," and he further endorsed many of the other TIPRO suggestions — including the need to preserve a "core supply" of domestic petroleum.

A "core supply" of domestic petroleum is defined by TIPRO as the natural gas, natural gas liquids and crude oil production equivalent to 20 million barrels per day. This was the domestic industry average daily production during 1980 - 1985, a period of relative stability with manageable levels of imported petroleum.

Dukakis wrote, "The development of government policies that provide sufficient incentives for the preservation of a core supply of domestic production is something that we need to explore further. It is one of the primary areas that I would have Lloyd Bentsen look into as head of the bipartisan energy summit that will be summoned early in a Dukakis Administration to design a truly comprehensive energy policy."

Investors withdraw Kroger takeover bid

By PHILIP E. ROSS

New York Times News Service

DETROIT — Ending speculation that it might pursue a hostile takeover bid, Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co. on Tuesday withdrew its unsolicited $5.03 billion bid for the Kroger Co.

The giant supermarket company had rejected the bid from the leveraged buyout firm as inadequate five days ago.

A Kohlberg spokesman said the firm was "surprised and disappointed" that Kroger had rejected its $5.03-a-share offer without even responding to Kohlberg's offer to negotiate.

But though it did not rule out future trading in Kroger's shares, Kohlberg, Kravis said it would respect the company's decision to go it alone in a restructuring that involves the payment of a special dividend of $48 a share.

Kroger's shares traded Tuesday at $55, down $2.625, on the New York Stock Exchange.

Kroger has valued its restructuring at $57 to $61 a share, given a residual share value which it estimates at $9 to $13. But current trading suggests a residual value of only $8, according to John B. Koseoff, an analyst for First Manhattan.

"There was an offer for the company of $64, and one would think it's the burden of management to prove its plan has equal long-term value," he said.

Besides the extra dividend, Kroger has said it will seek higher profitability in part by shedding off poor performing units, worth $333 million, and by laying off about 300 employees in its Cincinnati headquarters. In any event, shareholders are ahead since as recently as six weeks ago, the stock was trading at $38 a share.

Wall Street has closely followed the pursuit of the second-largest supermarket company in part for what it might portend for Kohlberg, Kravis. There was much speculation on Wall Street that the firm, which has never made a hostile tender offer, might now be considering a more forcible approach.

Kroger was not the first company for which Kohlberg, Kravis had made an unsolicited offer. It began with the Bestrice Cos., in an even larger deal, and repeated the tactic with Fred Meyer, both ended in amicable acquisitions.

MHCC debates how to develop shopping center

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

As the city proceeds with its planned realignment and development of Lamesa Road project, the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce — the instigators of the project — are wondering what to do next.

At Tuesday's meeting, board members discussed a recently completed survey conducted by the Eastside Economic Development Task Force regarding a proposed shopping center on the east side, possibly at the intersection of Lamesa and Highway 80.

The survey, sponsored by the task force — an entity of the MHCC — and compiled by P.K. Skipper of Desert Analytic, showed that eastside residents very much want a shopping center, and that among the most desired stores would be ladies, mens and childrens clothing, a shoe store, a pharmacy and a carry-out restaurant.

Task Force director Roger Robles reminded the directors that the report was a very rough draft, and asked for their suggestions and comments on the report before the final version was printed and distributed.

Members then debated whether the chamber should develop a shopping center itself or act as a catalyst, attracting investors to the area. MHCC president John Castro urged directors to attend next Thursday's meeting of the task force, saying they needed to provide input so a decision could be made on how to proceed.

Chamber members are scheduled to meet next Wednesday with a representative of Melvin Simon & Associates, the shopping center developer that built and owns Midland Park Mall, according to Elvia Hernandez, executive director of the MHCC.

Also discussed was the possibility of sponsoring a bingo night at the Senate repeals diesel tax requirement

From Staff and Wire Reports

The Senate has repealed a controversial law that required farmers and other off-road diesel users to pay a per-gallon tax at the pump and then apply for a refund at the end of the year, creating what Sen. Phil Gramm called a "bureaucratic nightmare."

The law was included in the final budget bill passed by Congress last year, but Gramm spokesman Larry Neal says the origin of the provision is "very, very shadowy" and no one has owned up to being its sponsor. "Whoever cooked up this bureaucratic nightmare inadvertently targeted some of the most hard-pressed people in Texas to impose it on: farmers, oil operators and fishermen," said Gramm, R-Texas. "I'm glad, however, that a measure of common sense has now prevailed."

The repeal was included in a bill making technical corrections to the tax code, and passed the Senate Tuesday night by a vote of 87-1. The House has approved a similar technical tax corrections bill, and now the measures go to a conference committee where differences will be worked out before final congressional passage.

The bill being rolled back required farmers, commercial fishermen, oil

Treasury waives WPT reporting

From Staff Reports

The Treasury Department announced Tuesday that it would administratively waive the reporting requirements for the Windfall Profits Tax for this year.

The tax was repealed in August as a part of the Omnibus Trade Bill. However, no provision was made to lift reporting requirements for the first eight months of the year, despite the fact that low oil prices have made the tax non-operational since 1986.

U.S. Rep. Bill Archer, R-Houston, who had spoken repeatedly with Treasury and Internal Revenue Service officials to push for the waiver, applauded the action.

"Treasury's action will save both the oil industry and the government millions of dollars in pointless expense," Archer said in a prepared statement on Tuesday.

"Waiver of the filing requirements will allow the industry to direct these funds toward productive uses and saves the federal government money in the process," the ranking Republican on the House Ways & Means Committee said.

The administrative move removes the need for Congressional action which had been introduced last week by Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla. Archer spearheaded both the executive and legislative remedies.

Said Archer: "I'm delighted that Treasury has taken this step adjusting its policy to be more in line with current economic conditions, and to enact the spirit as well as the letter of the repeal of this onerous tax."

producers and other off-road diesel users to pay a 15.14-cent per gallon tax at the pump and then apply for a refund at the end of the year.

The repeal calls for the government to reimburse off-road diesel users for the taxes already paid since April, when it took effect, and add

MARKETS

Oil prices bounce back again

Crude oil prices, buffeted by rumors about OPEC production, continue to seersaw in nervous trading.

Near-month futures contracts opened 11 cents lower this morning but in little more than an hour's trading had they had gained back the loss plus another 11 cents on the up side.

Tuesday, November delivery contracts finished slightly lower on the New York Mercantile Exchange. The price for West Texas Intermediate changed course several times during the session, trading as high as $13.74 and as low as $13.30 a barrel. The contract finally settled at $13.55, down 5 cents from Monday's close.

Like Monday's session — when November WTI climbed 66 cents — Tuesday's trading was dominated by rumors and speculation about production by the 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, analysts said.

Prices rose Monday as Saudi Arabia, the world's largest oil exporter, reaffirmed it would stick to its production quota if other members of OPEC did.

On Tuesday, prices again moved higher, said Richard Redoglia, a trader with Merrill Lynch Energy Futures. But the market turned lower when Saudi King Fahd failed to discuss OPEC member's inability to stay within their output quotas during an address, Redoglia said.

Rumors that the United Arab Emirates was willing to cut its production then hit the market, and prices advanced again before finally slipping lower at the end of the day, he said.

Redoglia, who described trading as volatile, attributed Tuesday's brief upturn to short covering, in which investors buy contracts to offset those sold earlier.

He said the market's underlying fundamentals remained negative.

"The bearishness about OPEC overproduction is still there," he said, predicting, "the market is going to continue trading like this" until OPEC can resolve its problems.

Dollar drops below 130-yen level

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was lower in early European trading today after falling in earlier Asian trading, foreign currency dealers said. Gold prices also drifted lower.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 129.65 yen, down 1.50 yen. It was the first time the dollar closed below the 130-yen level since June 24. Later, in London, it was quoted at 129.45 yen.

Dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Tuesday:

—1.8452 West German marks, down from 1.8512
—1.5625 Swiss francs, down from 1.5690
—6.2915 French francs, down from 6.3070

—1.3757 Italian lire, down from 1.379.00
—1.2140 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2075

In London, one British pound cost $1.7255, more expensive for buyers than late Tuesday's $1.7175.

London's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price for gold of $404.70 a troy ounce at midmorning today, down from an opening bid of $406.50.

In Zurich, the bid price was $404.75, down from $406.00 bid late Tuesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $3.06 to close at a bid $408.53.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid $6.25 a troy ounce, down from Tuesday's $6.31.

Afternoon stock rally falls short

NEW YORK (AP) — A midafternoon recovery fell short and the stock market finished lower Tuesday, a day after one key index reached its highest level since last October's crash.

Analysts blamed profit-taking, lingering worries about the economy and interest rates, and general investor wariness for the pullback.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial, which rose 8.71 points to a post-crash high on Monday, fell back 2.49 to close at 2,156.47.

But that was an improvement from midday when the market's best-known index was down more than 16 points as the lunch hour ended. Declining issues outnumbered gainers by about 3-to-2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 593 issues up, 823 down and 535 unchanged. The NYSE composite index slipped 0.19 to 158.77.

Volume on the floor of the NYSE came to 140.90 million shares, up from 124.66 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trading at regional exchanges and on the over-the-counter market, totaled 167.35 million shares.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market fell $2.64 billion, or 0.10 percent, in value.

ed menu featuring 1/2-pound or 3/4-pound fajita burritos. Owner Gili Lopez explained that the drive-through menu is designed for quick service and convenience. He added that customers can get any menu item at the window, but may be asked to pull over and wait a few minutes.

Just opened at 307 Dodson is GERI'S ANTIQUES, owned and operated by Midlander Geri Griffin.

Among the items she carries are American Country furniture, copper pieces, quilts, and decorative items such as oriental lamps.

Griffin, who has been in the antiques business for approximately 12 years, says she's trying to carry a general array of antiques, trying to satisfy the general public."

Jumping into the furniture market is W.R. NEW AND USED FURNITURE, located at 4404 W. Illinois.

Relocating is CITY WIDE BLUE-PRINT AND OFFICE SUPPLIES, now found at 3209 N. Big Spring. City Wide didn't move very far — from 3201 N. Big Spring to the former Yamaha Motorcycle Shop. The reason for the move, according to general manager John Carter, was "We feel like the corner of Wadley and Big Spring is one of the busiest intersections in Midland. Though the building is a little smaller, we were looking at the location and exposure."

Locally owned and operated, City Wide does all types of reproduction, offset printing and film work as well as sells office and surveying supplies. City-wide delivery service is available.

Poultry processors hatch billion-dollar deal

SPRINGDALE, Ark. (AP) — Tyson Foods Inc., the nation's largest poultry processor, has made a $1 billion buyout offer for Holly Farms Corp., hours after Holly Farms announced it had received unsolicited buyout proposals and had activated a takeover defense.

Tyson offered $45 cash and a quarter share of its Class A common stock for each of Holly Farms 18.1 million outstanding shares, the company said late Tuesday.

Based on Tyson's closing stock price of $17.62 a share, the deal would have an indicated value of about $1 billion.

Toyota plans truck plant to boost sales

DETROIT (AP) — Japanese automaking giant Toyota plans to increase U.S. sales to about 1.5 million cars and trucks annually by the mid-1990s — a twofold sales boost fueled by a new truck plant.

At the introduction of the automaker's 1989 models, Bob McCurry, executive vice president for sales and operations for the U.S. arm of the company, said Tuesday it would take about 2 1/2 years from site selection to production at a new truck plant.

Greenspan: Capital buffer against instability

HONOLULU (AP) — Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan says broad new guidelines for increasing banks' capital are the key to maintaining stability in the financial world.

"Capital acts as a buffer against unexpected shocks to a firm, and thereby helps to insulate both individual firms and the system from risk," Greenspan said Tuesday at the annual convention of the American Bankers Association.

Greenspan also assured bankers that the repeal of the Depression-era Glass-Steagall Act, which separates commercial and investment banking, remains one of the Fed's highest priorities.

AFTER-SCHOOL Microwave SNACKS

Many parents worry about the after-school snacks their kids eat, as well as how kids spend their after-school time. To solve this dilemma, instruct children on the proper use of the microwave oven and encourage them to prepare their own snacks. Providing children with nutritious recipes to prepare will allow them to make good use of after-school time while adding to their daily nutritional intake. And they won't balk about eating these "good-for-you" recipes because they're so much fun to eat!

With the microwave oven, kids won't risk burning themselves on hot burners. And cooking time is so quick—it's almost as fast as opening a bag of potato chips or other favorite snack!

These recipes were developed with kids' tastes in mind—using their favorite foods in combination with mild seasonings. All these recipes are quick-to-fix with minimal chopping and cutting. The instant soup mix provides the seasoning in most of the recipes and requires no premeasuring. It's easy for kids to use, whether it's to make a mug of soup or to add flavor to a recipe. Wax paper is an important tool for kids' microwaving, because it prevents spatters when heating sauces and catches messy spills to make clean-up a snap.

Older children can prepare these recipes. Younger children can participate with guidance from parents or an older brother or sister. And the step-by-step instructions make the recipes easy to follow from start to finish.

The benefits of getting children involved in food preparation at an early age are tremendous. They'll take more interest in the foods they eat. And learning basic food preparation techniques early on will enable them to develop good cooking skills and encourage creativity. With these fun-to-eat finger foods kids can prepare on their own, they'll learn skills that will last a lifetime!

TIPS FOR USING THE MICROWAVE OVEN

- Always use pot holders when turning or removing dishes from the microwave. Hot food causes dishes to become hot during microwaving.
- To prevent overcooking, microwave foods for the cooking time listed in the recipe. Check for doneness. If the food requires more cooking, microwave for 30 seconds more at a time until desired doneness is reached.
- Before you start microwaving, have an adult show you how to use your microwave oven. Remember — NEVER operate the microwave oven when it is empty.
- All recipes were tested in 600- to 700-watt microwave ovens. Lower wattage ovens may need additional microwave cooking time.

Man wants girlfriend to 'measure up' on top

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a 33-year-old petite blonde, and after knowing a lot of jerks who have done me wrong, I finally found a wonderful man who is kind, fun, intelligent and caring.

The problem? He insists that I have surgery to increase the size of my bust. I feel happy with myself the way I am and wish he could love me this way. He says he wouldn't spend the rest of his life looking at other women's breasts if the perfect body was at his side.

I really don't want to do this, but I don't want to lose him. And I'm a little hurt knowing he feels this way. Should I have this surgery done to please him? Or try to find someone who will love me the way I am? — BLONDIE

DEAR BLONDIE: Your "kind, intelligent and caring" man is another jerk. If you are happy with yourself the way you are, leave yourself alone. I am not opposed to breast augmentation surgery — it has done wonders for many women — but a man who would threaten you by saying he would spend the rest of his life looking at other women if you didn't "shape up" is no prize. Trust me.

DEAR ABBY: In the past, you have often run letters from single, wealthy people who have no heirs and want to know what to do with their money when they pass away. Well, how about giving it to the local library? Our public libraries are one of the most important, yet one of the most neglected, of all municipal facilities.

In view of the miserable state of our public educational system and the rampant illiteracy in our society, supporting the public libraries with gifts and endowments is one of the most worthwhile things anyone can do with his or her wealth. — L. DA-

Old-fashioned tuna casserole made in microwave

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Mom's tuna casserole was one of the first dishes I learned to cook. It also was one of the first family recipes I adapted for microwave cooking. Now it takes me about one-third the time it took Mom.

TUNA-MAC CASSEROLE
1 cup corkscrew or shell macaroni (4 ounces)

1 10%-ounce can condensed cream of celery soup
1/2 cup shredded American cheese (3 ounces)
1/2 cup milk
2 teaspoons dried minced onion
1 6-ounce can tuna, drained and flaked
2 hard-cooked eggs, chopped
1/2 cup coarsely crushed shredded wheat wafers

Cook macaroni according to package directions. Drain and set aside. In a microwave-safe 1 1/2-quart casserole combine soup, cheese, milk and dried onion. Fold in tuna, hard-cooked eggs and macaroni. Cook, uncovered, on 100 percent power (high) for 7 to 10 minutes or until hot, stirring once after 4 minutes. When done, stir again and sprinkle with crushed wheat wafers. Makes 4 or 5 servings.

WHAT'S COOKING

Cooking expert 'fires up' locals

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

You can almost smell the blue corn smoking and savor the taste of fiery salsa on your tongue when Jane Butel, a former New Mexican turned New York chef and cookbook author, begins unraveling the mysteries of Mexican chiles and Indian blue corn.

Eleven Midlanders who attended Ms. Butel's cooking school Tuesday were enthralled with her extensive knowledge of Southwestern cooking ingredients, gleaned from many years as a consumer public service person.

Ms. Butel's Midland appearance was initiated by Mrs. Charles Dean of Midland, who hosted the school in her home. Mrs. Dean had attended Ms. Butel's Santa Fe Cooking School in Santa Fe and ask her to conduct off in the Tall City.

Participants invited to take part in the three-day cooking seminar looked forward to getting hands-on experience in preparing southwestern foods including corn and wheat tortillas, sopaipillas, quesadillas, posole, fish in pecan sauce, Spanish pork with Clam-mussel stew and rice, and traditional beef tamales with red chile sauce. But cooking demonstrations were only one aspect of Jane Butel's Santa Fe Cooking School, which included discussions about ingredients, technique and food lore.

Ms. Butel, who has published nine cookbooks, appeared in a cooking video and educational television, also teaches cooking schools nationwide.

She said, "Cooking has always come natural to me. I grew up on a farm in the Southwest where Western hospitality was taken very seriously and food was the focus of most all social gatherings."

The cooking instructor said she learned about ingredients at a young age. "We processed our own meats, produce and dairy products, rendered our own fat and even ground our own grain," she said.

Her father honed his farming skills while living on his father's farm in Kansas. "Probably one of the only chile-growing enterprises for miles around," according to Ms. Butel.

Ms. Butel moved to New Mexico after graduating from college with a degree in home economics and journalism. She was hired as a home economist for the Public Service Company of New Mexico.

Her corporate career in consumer affairs spanned 20 years and included stints with Con Edison and General Electric, and she served as corporate vice president of consumer affairs for American Express.

With all her years of testing, researching and developing recipes, Ms. Butel became a storehouse of knowledge, a situation she took advantage of by publishing "Jane Butel's Tex-Mex Cookbook" with Crown Publishers in 1980.

However, Ms. Butel soon realized that her recipes called for ingredients not readily available, such as blue corn masa and Mexican oregano. This prompted her to establish her own line of spices, Pecos Valley Spice Company, which manufactures pure, all-natural chiles, seasonings and ingredients for Tex-Mex cooking.

Ms. Butel's spice company sells four varieties of 100 percent pure ground and crushed chiles from New Mexico and California.

"Do not buy commercial chile powder," Ms. Butel advised her Midland cooking school attendees. "It contains as much as 40 percent salt and 20 percent additives and confuse the rich, natural flavor of chile."

Ms. Butel said two of the staples in Tex-Mex cooking, chiles and corn, are highly regarded by Indian cultures. "Chile adds the zest to Southwestern cooking and corn adds substance," she said.

"Ancient Indians worshiped the God of Corn and believed that man was created from corn dough or masa," she said.

"The Indians believed that corn was a gift from the gods and all of it should be utilized. If any were left to rot in the fields, the gods would be offended," she said. Therefore, the Indians developed drying and storage methods for corn.

According to Ms. Butel, Aztecs, who lacked modern refrigeration, learned that dried corn could be stored without spoiling almost indefinitely. They sprinkled the dried corn with lime and stored it in limestone caverns honeycombing the mountains of New Mexico. "The hint of lime flavoring is what gives traditional Mexican food its distinctive flavor," she said.

"Dried corn is traditionally white," she said. "Blue corn, with a deep indigo pigment, popular in New Mexico, has a richer flavor as a result of its curing."

Ms. Butel said Pueblo Indians traditionally smoke blue corn in adobe ovens with pinon. Then the corn is lava-wheel ground to a fine powder or flour, which is used in favorite dishes like blue cornbread, rellenos batter and tortillas.

The cooking expert said she was one of the first persons to introduce blue corn and blue corn products into her cooking schools, which she began in 1980, an offshoot of her public service duties. "I observed the Indians using blue corn in the late 50s," she said. "But I didn't get national attention with it until 1983 when a story about my cooking with blue corn appeared in the 'Phoenix Gazette' and was syndicated."

Butel is a stickler for using only the freshest ingredients in her cooking. She makes food from scratch and is no stranger to using a metate (a Mexican version of a mortar and pestle) or a tortilla press.

She passed around samples of chile spices and explained which dishes each suited. "The Santa Fe Chile has only 15,000 heat units and is fairly mild," she said. "The Pequín Quebado Chile is the hottest with 40,000 heat units, which reaches the floor for your taste buds. After 40,000 heat units you can't taste the chile and their is no pleasure with your pain."

Ms. Butel said the secret of a "good bowl of red" or Texas chili, is to use Mexican oregano, "a member of the mint family, which doesn't overwhelm the chili."

She also offered hints on cooking methods, such as adding oatmeal to taco filling, "so that it will absorb the juices and they won't drip out of the taco."

1 medium cucumber, thinly sliced (2 cups)
1 medium green pepper, coarsely chopped (1 cup)
2 tablespoons snipped parsley
3 tablespoons salad oil

2 tablespoons snipped fresh basil or 2 teaspoons dried basil, crushed
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon white wine vinegar
¼ teaspoon salt
3 small tomatoes, cut into thin wedges
Lettuce leaves (optional)

In a large kettle cook pasta in a large amount of boiling salted water about 15 minutes or until tender. Drain. Rinse with cold water; drain well.

In a 2-quart moisture- and vaporproof serving container combine pasta, cucumber, green pepper and parsley. For dressing, in a screw-top jar combine oil, basil, lemon juice, vinegar and salt. Cover; shake well. Pour dressing over pasta mixture. Toss lightly until well coated. Cover; chill several hours or overnight, stirring occasionally.

To transport, place tomatoes and lettuce, if desired, in separate plastic bags. Pack along with salad on ice or with several frozen ice packs in a well insulated cooler. Serve within 3 hours. Just before serving, add tomatoes to salad and toss lightly. Place lettuce around top edge of bowl. Makes 16 servings.

EXPERT

Ms. Butel said that traditional Mexican dishes utilize the colors of red, green and white, the colors of the Mexican flag. "Those colors are also prevalent throughout the southwest," she said.

The Santa Fe cooking school in Midland, which includes three four-hour sessions will end with a dinner Thursday. "Husbands of the cooking school participants will join us for this meal," Ms. Butel said. "We will also have a graduation dinner tonight and I will hand out diplomas."

Ms. Butel, whose career as a Southwestern cooking expert began with a paperback version of her "Jane Butel's Tex-Mex Cookbook," has several ideas for future books in the works now. "I would like to publish a book which includes my family recipes and entertaining ideas. I also would like to publish a book about starting your own business and my own experiences with my business, since I do travel around to colleges and lecture on that now."

Ms. Butel also has another idea "on the burner," but is keeping it under wraps until it is "fully baked." In the meantime she will continue to teach ancient cooking methods around the country and from her home base in New York (which she dubs Santa Fe East). She said she will continue to share the "terrific tastes and cooking secrets passed on by native Indian, Mexican and Spanish cooks in the Southwest states."

Ms. Butel's book "Tex-Mex Cookbook," published by Harmony Books division of Crown Publishers, is available for $14.95 from Pecos Valley Spice, 500 East 77th Street, New York, N.Y., 10162, (212) 628-5375.

Some of Ms. Butel's favorite recipes follow.

This soft fluffy custard is served after a hot spicy meal.

1 quart milk
¾ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
4 eggs, separated
¼ cup flour
1½ teaspoons freshly grated nutmeg

Pour the milk into a heavy saucepan and add the sugar and salt. Scald over medium-low heat. Make a paste with the egg yolks, flour and one cup of the scalded milk. Add this thickening to the rest of the scalded milk and continue to cook until mixture reaches the consistency of soft custard. Beat the egg whites until stiff but not dry, and fold them into the custard. Spoon custard into individual dishes. Top with nutmeg and refrigerate until ready to serve.

POSOLE

(Dried corn with pork and red chiles)
1 pound frozen posole, or 2 cups or 12 ounces dried posole
1 quart water, or more
2 pounds pork steak or roast, cut into small cubes
1 tablespoon salt
2 garlic cloves, minced
Pinch of Mexican oregano
Pinch of comino
6 red chile pods, dried, rinsed and deseeded
Caribe to taste

Cook the posole in the unseasoned water over a medium-low heat until it becomes soft; it usually requires 1½-2 hours. An electric deep-fryer set at simmer works very well for this. Brown the pork in a frying pan, then add one cup of water.

Combine the posole with pork. Add remaining ingredients and cook the stew for 6-8 hours, or more. Ideally, this dish should be started the morning before it is to be served, to allow the flavors to develop.

PICO DE GALLO

3 fresh jalapenos, finely chopped (to equal one cup)
1 large red, ripe unpeeled tomato, coarsely chopped (to equal ½ cup)
1 medium white Spanish onion, coarsely chopped (to equal ½ cup)
2 garlic cloves, minced
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pequin or Caribe (or to taste)
3 tablespoons coarsely chopped fresh cilantro

Combine all the ingredients and allow to marinate and develop natural juices for at least one hour before serving.
Yield: 6-8 servings.

Cook argues for authenticity in Mexican cuisine

Hearst News Service

It matters not one whit to Diana Kennedy that she's swimming against the tide of quick and easy microwave diet cookery that engulfs this country.

"I am not going to shorten things," said the author and teacher who is widely recognized as the foremost authority on Mexican regional cooking. "I am most keen on preserving and presenting good Mexican food. There will always be people who will want to do the other things," she said, waving her hands in dismissal of such shortcuts.

Kennedy's new cookbook, "Traditional Foods of Mexico," is due out from Bantam next year. Her first cookbook, "The Cuisines of Mexico" (Harper & Row, 1972), stated her case to the world and her argument for authenticity has not changed.

"The term 'Mexican cuisine' is a misnomer. There is no one Mexican cuisine, there are many," she said. All this forceful British-born perfectionist cares about is accuracy and authenticity. She'd no more cook from an ethnic cookbook whose author hadn't lived half a lifetime in a country than take tea at a Taco Bell.

Her own journey toward expertise began in the Caribbean in 1963. She met her future husband, the late Paul Kennedy, who was based in Mexico as a correspondent for The New York Times. While her husband reported, Kennedy researched. The result 15 years later was "The Cuisines of Mexico," for which she was lionized by the culinary world.

Now she presides over a remote hacienda at Zitacuaro in the state of Michoacan, farming, teaching classes and issuing another meticulously researched work every five years or so.

Her books demand of the reader the same commitment to learning and hard work that she herself has made. But she's not convinced she's out of step with busy American cooks. She said Americans have more kitchen space, more equipment, more exotic ingredients, more money and more leisure time than ever.

"Leisure is how you spend it and many people, on the weekends, want to spend their time cooking something good," she said.

Kennedy's aim, she said, is not just to dole out recipes.

"It's to teach them about ingredients and to educate them about flavors. It's always a surprise to students from the U.S., the complexity of the preparation and the subtlety of the flavors," she said.

Mexican cooking in U.S. restaurants is not likely to improve if people can't recognize authenticity, she said. Most people here have been used to food she calls Mexican-style but not Mexican. Her only wish is that restaurants would label their cooking styles properly: Tex-Mex or Cal-Mex or Ameri-Mex.

She said it doesn't resemble true Mexican cooking.

"Except in names, perhaps, and some basic ingredients, it does not add up to the textures and the play of flavors and colors that you get in Mexico."

Self-serve tacos appealing to vegetarians

Copley News Service

Interested in an easy-to-make vegetarian meal that is as tasty as it is nutritious? Try tacos.

Most Mexican restaurants sell tacos with beef or chicken fillings, but you can feature anything you like: sliced avocados, refried beans, seasoned tempeh, even tiny balls of falafel (these are surprisingly good taco stuffers — try them!).

Tortillas are available at most large grocery stores. Made of either corn or flour, they have lately become available in a number of sizes: regular, "fajitas" size, snack size, even tiny little "hors d'oeuvres" size for mini-tacos.

For a taco party, have all filling ingredients prepared ahead of time. Refrigerate in bowls covered with plastic wrap. Then at serving time, you will be all ready to go.

Set out your main filling or fillings (try the Tofu Egg Filling below for a deliciously different taco), and assorted garnishes. Then each individual can assemble his or her own "personalized" taco.

TOFU-EGG TACO FILLING

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
¼ cup chopped onion
1 (10-ounce) package firm tofu, drained
2 eggs
Dash pepper
1 cup shredded mild cheddar or Monterey Jack cheese
1 (4-ounce) can chopped mild green Ortega chilies
¼ cup sliced black olives, drained

Melt butter in large skillet. Add onion and saute until limp. Meanwhile, combine tofu, eggs and pepper in mixing bowl; beat with wire whisk until well blended. Fold in all remaining ingredients.

Turn mixture into skillet and cook over medium-low heat until set, turning several times with spatula.

Fresh corn bread, turnip greens brighten rainy day

By NATHALIE DUPREE
New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — Outside my window this morning was a squirrel hanging on a tiny branch of the oak tree, in an outrageous position. Little paws clasped in front and tail in the air, he stuffed himself with acorns from the tree.

He would dart up a thick limb, down to another tiny one, rejecting all but the best acorns, disgust registering on his face like a choosy French chef in a market filled with old produce.

I'd hoped to have a friend home for lunch after church, but my friend's plans changed. Not a big deal, but a good meal and long conversation had been a beacon on a rainy day, and I was disappointed.

I was faced with a question that is hard for the single person — what did I want to eat today, and did I want it enough to fix it for myself? Surely I loved myself enough to fix what I wanted to eat, as much as that little squirrel did.

I peered in the refrigerator. There were some fresh turnip greens and a wonderful slab of bacon. It is my opinion that fall turnip greens are not as flavorful as spring turnip greens; still, they were a welcome sight, as they've provided solace in my life many times.

Slicing off some of the bacon to cook in a pot with water while washing and stemming the greens, I thought about the turnip greens in my college dormitory. They were much derided. In fact, we even had a revolution at Texas Western over the food.

I was desperately lonely, away from loved ones, caught in stormy times. I was always glad to see those greens and the corn bread that went with them.

I thought of that long-ago college time as I put the greens in, and I let the whole mess simmer while I was getting ready for church. I turned off the pot as I walked out the door and thought about them intermittently the next hour, through hymns, and even caught my stomach growling during the lesson.

An invitation to go out for dinner wasn't the least bit appealing to me, as I remembered the greens in their pot. Once home, I whisked up a half recipe of corn bread and put it in a little frying pan, just for me.

While it was cooking, I thought of cousin Weida. She's not really a cousin; she was my favorite former husband's cousin's wife. But we consider ourselves cousins. We were in Atlanta for my husband-to-be to meet my father, and for me to meet his family. Weida had us over for supper one night.

She fixed corn bread and turnip greens. How I remember the warmth and the affection of that meal. Her bright face full of laughter, her feeling that I didn't need to be impressed, but made part of the family, and that turnip greens was the way to do it.

Those greens broke through all the anxiety of new relations and gave us a new bond, our common Southern heritage of turnip greens and corn bread.

Continuing to muse, I pulled the bacon out of the turnip pot and fried it. A pox on everyone who says a few pieces of bacon on occasion are bad for your health. I love a crisp piece of slab bacon and can't believe it would harm me more than being depressed.

The corn bread was ready, and it turned out of the pan easily, brown and crisp on the outside. I set the table with my finest mat, poured myself some iced tea, pulled out a pretty cereal bowl, put out an ironed napkin and prepared to eat.

First, the wedge of corn bread was split and placed in the bottom of the bowl. Next came greens and their juices. A dash of hot sauce followed. The bacon was set on the side of the dish. I ate. A meal for a king.

I was satisfied. Happy to be alone — and happy when a friend rang up to see if she could come by for a minute. I had enough to share. It felt good. She finished the greens and the corn bread.

TURNIP GREENS

4 pounds turnip greens
¼ pound bacon or fatback (salt pork)
Salt, Pepper, Sugar (optional)

Wash the greens thoroughly. Stem if desired. Place the meat in 4 cups of water, and simmer briefly. Add the greens and push down with a wooden spoon. Add more water as needed to cover the greens. Cover the pan. Cook until done, depending on your preference, one to three hours. Season as desired. Serve, with the liquid in the pot (called pot-likker) and hot corn bread.

Microwave oven ideal for preparing polenta

By BARBARA KAFKA
New York Times News Service

One of the nicest attributes of a microwave oven is the way it can make everyday fare of the grains and cereals that normally take a long time to cook and that must usually be stirred with jealous attention.

Polenta, or cornmeal mush, is just such a cereal. The only differences between polenta and mush are status, price, the coarseness of the grind and, as a consequence, the amount of water needed in the cooking. Polenta is coarser and takes more water.

Adding more water to polenta or mush will make a looser mixture. Traditionally, the basic polenta is allowed to cool and then is sliced, brushed with olive oil and grilled or fried.

A more complicated preparation — but not much — turns it into a vegetarian main course, a sort of lasagna, with a full and satisfying taste. This dish can be made ahead through step 3 and then cooked when needed, or it can be assembled ahead, cooked and reheated, one or two portions at a time. But if you are going to use the entire recipe, leave the cooking to the last minute; the dish will taste better.

If you are reheating one or two portions, they can be covered tightly with plastic wrap and reheated for two minutes in a 650- to 700-watt oven; for three minutes in a 450- to 500-watt oven, or until hot.

BASIC POLENTA
4 cups water (add ¼ cup if using a coarse polenta grind)

1½ cups yellow or white cornmeal (American or coarse polenta grind)
2 teaspoons kosher salt
3 tablespoons unsalted butter (add 1 tablespoon if chilling for polenta lasagna)
Pinch freshly ground black pepper

Remove from oven. Stir in 3 tablespoons of the butter and the pepper. Serve; if making the polenta lasagna, proceed to step 3.

Use 1½ teaspoons of the butter to grease a 14x11x2-inch dish or a baking sheet. Pour the polenta mixture into the dish or spread it ½ inch thick in an even rectangle on the baking sheet. Smooth the top with a spatula, and spread the remaining 1½ teaspoons of butter on top. Let stand until cool. Refrigerate overnight or until thoroughly chilled. With a sharp knife, cut the polenta crosswise into 10 equal rectangles. Leave the slices in the dish or on the baking sheet until ready to use.

Low-wattage variation: Reduce the water to 3½ cups. Combine with the cornmeal and salt in the souffle dish, as described above. In a 450- to 500-watt oven cook, uncovered, at 100 percent power for 20 minutes, stirring once. Complete the recipe as described above.

Yield: 4 cups; 10 rectangular slices of polenta, enough to serve 5 as a main course.

POLENTA LASAGNA

2 ounces onion, peeled and cut into 1-inch pieces
1 clove garlic, smashed and peeled
2 teaspoons olive oil
2 ounces eggplant, cut into 1-inch pieces
4 ounces zucchini, cut into 1-inch pieces
¼ cup tomato puree
Pinch dried oregano
Pinch dried thyme
1 teaspoon kosher salt
Pinch freshly ground black pepper
1 tablespoon chopped fresh basil
The lasagna:
Basic polenta (see recipe), chilled and cut into rectangles
5 ounces mozzarella (whole-milk or part-skim), cut into 5 slices

Place onion and garlic in the bowl of a food processor. Process until finely chopped. Scrape into a 10-inch quiche dish, and add the oil. Stir to coat the onion and garlic. In a 650- to 700-watt oven cook, uncovered, at 100 percent power for 2 minutes.

While onion and garlic are cooking, finely chop the eggplant and zucchini in the food processor. Stir into the onion mixture. Cook, uncovered, at 100 percent power for 4 minutes.

Leaving the dish in oven, add the tomato puree, oregano, thyme and salt. Cook, uncovered, at 100 percent power for 3 minutes. Remove from the oven, stir in the pepper and basil, and set aside.

Place half the polenta slices spoke-fashion in a 14x11x2-inch dish. Top each slice with a fifth of the vegetable mixture. Then top each with a piece of mozzarella and another slice of polenta. Cook uncovered at 100 percent power for 5 minutes.

Low-wattage variation: To make the filling, combine the onion, garlic and oil in a quiche dish, as described above. In a 450- to 500-watt oven cook, uncovered, at 100 percent power for 3 minutes. Add the chopped eggplant and zucchini, as above, and cook uncovered at 100 percent power for 6 minutes. Stir in the tomato puree, herbs and salt, and cook uncovered at 100 percent power for 6 minutes.

Top each polenta slice with a fifth of the vegetable mixture, and then top each with a piece of mozzarella and another slice of polenta. Place 3 of the prepared slices in a 10-inch quiche dish, and cover with a sheet of paper toweling that can be microwaved. Cook at 100 percent power for 11 to 12 minutes or until hot and the cheese is melted. Remove to a plate, and cover with foil to keep warm. Place the remaining 2 slices in the dish, and cook, uncovered, at 100 percent power for 8 minutes.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: An area of confusion will be cleared up, making you happier and more productive. Financial gains will be slow but steady. Handle relationships with honesty and you will have nothing to worry about. The business outlook is promising. Expand your social sphere. You will enjoy spending time with a greater variety of people. Relationships within the family come full circle.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Yves Montand, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, singers Art Garfunkel and Marie Osmond, cartoonist Herblock, comedian Nipsey Russell, puppeteer Burr Tillstrom, Revolutionary heroine Molly Pitcher.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your ability to juggle figures will be in your favor at promotion time. Work to get on better terms with your co-workers. Travel will not produce ideal results now. Go later!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You reach into the past to open doors for a child or your mate. A professional tie may be getting too personal for your own good. Travel is favored. Money is on the way.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Joint financial matters look complicated. Better arrange a meeting to sort things out. Look forward to a fun-filled evening when you get together with old friends. Take a trip down Memory Lane.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Entrepreneurial skills put you in a position to make large sums of money. You are ready for almost any challenge. The competition had better look out! Love is once again a many-splendored thing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be careful when putting your thoughts into words. Certain people already think you are too outspoken. Count on old friends when the chips are down. Socializing holds special appeal this evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Tend to important correspondence early in the day. Seek variety, growth and change. If you have mixed feelings about a real estate venture, get experts' advice. An unusual rapport leads to romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be careful not to act too pleased with yourself. Financial affairs remain confusing. Pursue both job leads and romance more aggressively. Plans you outline now can be of great value in the years ahead.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not allow friendship to influence business decisions. Review your financial affairs. A trusted ally has the answer to a recurring problem. Listen to the concerns of your offspring. Suggest various options.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Keep in touch with someone who is in a position of power. Good luck comes your way when least expected. Romance has its ups and downs. Do not get discouraged. Be patient.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Someone's attitude or beliefs may be in direct conflict with your own. Talk things out calmly. Be more open and affectionate with mate. Loved ones have their problems, too. Offer a sympathetic ear.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Flattery can work wonders if it is sincere. Good luck comes when you do the unexpected. Follow current trends; do not fight progress. An obstacle to romance disappears. Count your blessings!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Read the want ads and send out resumes. A romantic transition is easier than you thought possible. Do not be afraid to politely challenge those in authority; they will respect you more.

Opening lead: ?

In bridge, nothing is sacrosanct. An opening lead which would be considered insane in some circumstances could be completely safe in others. Here's a case.

North-South used a simple Stayman sequence to reach an excellent, though second-best, contract of four spades—we would prefer three no trump. Looking at his own hand, West was sure he would find little of use in his partner's hand. He was tempted to lead a heart, but he was afraid that that might cost a trick. At the same time, he wanted to retain the lead in case a heart shift was necessary.

He found a simple, yet logical solution—he led the ace of trumps! Now anyone who, as a regular diet, leads the ace from an ace-queen combination will be looked on askance by the rest of the bridge world, but think about it here.

If South has the king of spades, the lead won't cost a thing—West will still come to two spade tricks. And should the king happen to be in the North hand, declarer is unlikely to play West for the queen, so her majesty is still a heavy favorite to win a trick.

West considered shifting to a low heart at trick two, in case his partner held a doubleton queen. But he decided that it was doubtful whether South would have opened one no trump with only a jack in the major suits. His best chance, therefore, was to hope that East held a singleton heart, so he cashed the ace of hearts and continued the suit. East ruffed and exited with a diamond. Declarer won and elected to try to drop the queen of trumps—down one.

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — Bruce Springsteen says he would like to see more U.S. support for national liberation movements.

Springsteen, in South America's largest city for the Human Rights Now Concert, made his remarks at a news conference Tuesday with other international rock stars, including Sting, Peter Gabriel and Tracy Chapman.

Springsteen said U.S. foreign policy "does not reflect the basic decency of the American people nor does it participate enough in the struggle for democracy in the world."

"I would like to see the next American president visit Africa and South and Central America and learn to respect and value the different cultures of the world. I would like to see the next president offer more support to national liberation movements," he said.

The 15-nation music tour was organized to support Amnesty International's campaign to promote the 40th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The last two concerts will be Friday and Saturday in Argentina.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lisa Marie Presley, the only heir of Elvis Presley, was married last week and is expected to deliver the late king of rock 'n' roll's grandchild next spring, her publicist says.

Miss Presley, 20, and aspiring musician Danny Keough, 23, were married Oct. 3 in a private service at the Church of Scientology headquarters in Hollywood. They are now on a Caribbean honeymoon.

"Lisa and Danny have been talking for the past year about getting married and starting a family," actress Priscilla Beaulieu Presley, Lisa Marie's mother, said Tuesday through publicist Paul Bloch.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Movie producer Sherry Lansing, the first woman to run a major movie studio, says she's just "a nice Jewish girl" and is surprised when young women tell her she's their idol.

"I have insecurities, concerns, worries and fears, just like anyone else," she said recently. "When I lecture on college campuses, women come up and tell me they've idolized me for years. I say, 'I have trouble just making it through a day.'"

Miss Lansing, 44, a former American singers Bruce Springsteen, left, and Tracy Chapman, held a news conference Tuesday along with other musicians who are performing at the Amnesty International's Human Rights Now Concert. Springsteen said the United States violates economic and social rights mentioned in Article 23 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

model and actress, was named head of 20th Century Fox at age 35 after rising through the ranks. She quit after three years and became an independent producer, who, along with partner Stanley Jaffe, produced last year's hit "Fatal Attraction." They also produced "The Accused," which opens Friday and stars Jodie Foster as the victim of a bar gang-rape seeking justice.

"To me, I'm just a nice Jewish girl from Chicago who wanted to make movies," she said. "That's all."

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Actress, businesswoman and philanthropist Bonita Granville Wrather, widow of oilman-entrepreneur Jack Wrather, died Tuesday of cancer. She was 65.

Mrs. Wrather, a longtime friend of President Reagan and first lady Nancy Reagan, died at St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica, said family spokesman Mickey Freeman.

A statement from the Reagans called Mrs. Wrather "a figure of beauty and grace in the motion picture business."

"But more than that, she was a warm and caring friend. For so many years, she enriched our lives with her sparkling personality, her wonderful sense of humor, her loyalty and her love," the Reagans said.

One of her last public appearances was in June when she retired as chairwoman of the American Film Institute.

"We grieve with the family that this vital woman, whose life spanned so many accomplishments as an actress, wife, mother, corporate executive, philanthropist, inspirational leader and friend, will no longer be at our side," said Jean Firstenberg, director of AFI.

Mrs. Wrather was born in New York City on Feb. 12, 1923.

By the time she was 7, she had starred in her first film, "Westward Passage."

She earned an Academy Award nomination for her role as a young school girl in the 1936 movie "These Three," and by the time she was 23 she had been in 50 films, including "Cavalcade," "Ah, Wilderness," "Now Voyager," "The Plough and the Stars," and "Hitler's Children."

Mrs. Wrather was active in several Los Angeles philanthropic organizations.

Funeral services were pending.

Mrs. Wrather is survived by son Christopher and daughters Linda-Wrather Finocchiaro and Molly Wrather-Dolle.

Grilled vegetable sandwiches 'new' taste treat

By MELANIE BARNARD and BROOKE DOJNY
Copley News Service

We know the cavemen invented the backyard barbecue — and although we tend to picture them squatting in front of their smoky fires cooking sides of mastodon or wild pig, the cave people also, no doubt, grilled vegetables — at least after they had advanced enough to have figured out how to cultivate them.

When the stove was invented, grilling went into eclipse for several millennia, and when cooking over an open fire was resurrected in the middle of this century, it was mostly to cook steaks and burgers and hot dogs.

Later, in the '70s, grilling began to encompass other meats and poultry and fish. But it has only been in the past few years that young chefs have been experimenting with grilling vegetables. The results can be wonderful. The charred vegetables develop a smoky-sweet quality that just can't be achieved on a conventional stove or in an oven.

Because they lack any natural fat, vegetables need to be lubricated with oil before they are placed directly on the grill. The cooking heat should be moderate, at most. If cooking over a charcoal fire, the coals should burn down to the point where they are covered with gray ash. A gas grill should be heated to the medium or medium-low setting lest the delicate vegetables burn or dry out.

In the Grilled Eggplant Sandwich, the meaty eggplant is layered on a crusty roll with the classic combinations of fresh tomato, basil and mozzarella to make a hearty supper.

Greek-style flavors (mint, garlic, thyme) season the oil that is brushed on summer squash and peppers to form the basis of the stuffed pocket sandwiches.

Serve either of these sandwiches with a cold or hot soup such as vichyssoise or cream of tomato, and finish with ice cream served with sliced fresh fruit or berries of the season.

GRILLED EGGPLANT AND MOZZARELLA SANDWICHES

1 large or 2 small eggplant, total weight of about 1½ pounds
Salt
½ cup olive oil
2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
Black pepper to taste
4 Portuguese rolls, split (or crusty rolls of any type)
6 ounces mozzarella cheese, sliced
1 large tomato, thinly sliced
Several sprigs or leaves of fresh basil

Yields 4 servings.

Preparation and cooking time: 30 minutes, excluding building the barbecue fire.

Build medium fire in charcoal grill or preheat gas grill to medium. Slice eggplant ½-inch thick. Sprinkle liberally with salt and set in colander to drain for 15 minutes.

Combine oil and garlic in small bowl and set aside to steep for at least 15 minutes.

Rinse eggplant and pat dry with paper towels. Place on baking sheet and brush liberally with garlic oil.

Cook eggplant over medium grill, turning several times and brushing with more oil for about 15 minutes, until flesh is charred on outside and is soft and tender within. Remove eggplant from grill and sprinkle lightly with pepper.

Brush rolls slightly with flavored oil and place cut sides down on grill. Toast until pale golden and warmed through. Lay eggplant slices on rolls, divide cheese equally among sandwiches and top with sliced tomato and sprigs of basil. Sprinkle with additional salt and pepper to taste.

GRILLED VEGETABLE POCKETS, GREEK STYLE

1 clove garlic, minced
2 teaspoons chopped fresh mint, or 1 teaspoon dried
1 teaspoon chopped fresh thyme, or ½ teaspoon dried
1½ pounds summer squash — either all zucchini or combination of zucchini, yellow crookneck or pattypan squash (use medium or large squash)
2 red peppers
Black pepper to taste
2 large pita breads or 4 medium
6 ounces feta cheese, crumbled
Salt to taste, if necessary

Yields 4 servings.

Preparation and cooking time: 30 minutes, excluding building barbecue fire.

Build medium fire in charcoal grill or preheat gas grill to medium.

Combine oil, garlic, mint and thyme in small bowl. Set aside to steep for at least 15 minutes.

Trim squash and cut into diagonal slices that are a little less than ½-inch thick and about 3 inches long. Seed red peppers and cut into 1½-inch-wide strips.

Put vegetables on plate and brush liberally with flavored oil.

Cook squash and pepper over medium grill, turning several times and brushing with more oil for about 15 minutes until lightly charred and quite tender.

Wrap pita breads in foil and place near edge of grill to warm for about 5 minutes.

Remove vegetables from grill, brush with any remaining oil and sprinkle with black pepper.

To serve, cut pita breads in half crosswise. Fill with vegetables and divide crumbled cheese equally among sandwiches. Taste before adding salt. Feta can be quite salty, so you may not need any.

Halloween cookie cutter available

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

We had a special cookie cutter designed just for this recipe for Halloween. To order our 8-inch pumpkin-shaped copper Spooky Cookie Cutter, send check or money order for $22 (includes shipping) to: Better Homes and Gardens, Department 23N, Box 374, Des Moines, Iowa 50336. Specify 31251.

SPOOKY COOKIES

1½ cups whole wheat flour
1 cup all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon pumpkin pie spice
½ teaspoon baking soda
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup margarine or butter
1 cup packed brown sugar
1 egg
½ teaspoon vanilla
¾ cup dairy sour cream
3 ounces yellow or red clear hard candy, finely crushed
Combine whole wheat and all-purpose flours, spice, baking soda and salt. In mixer bowl beat margarine on medium speed 30 seconds or until softened. Add sugar; beat until fluffy. Add egg and vanilla; beat well. Add flour mixture and sour cream alternately, beating well after each addition. Halve dough. Cover; chill 2 hours or until easy to handle.

On lightly floured surface roll half the dough ¼-inch thick. Cut out cookies with a 6-inch pumpkin cutter or use a cardboard pattern and knife to cut out 6-inch pumpkin shapes. Place on foil-lined cookie sheets. Using hors d'oeuvre cutters or sharp knife, cut out eyes, mouths or noses. Use dough scraps to make marks in cookies. Spoon enough candy into each cutout to fill hole. Repeat with remaining dough; roll again as necessary.

Bake in 350-degree oven for 6 to 8 minutes or until very light brown around edges. Cool on baking sheet 10 minutes. Peel off foil; cool. Store in airtight container.

Cone rewrites story as Mets even NL series at 3-3

LOS ANGELES (AP) — David Cone rewrote his story and Davey Johnson rewrote his lineup card. As a result, the end is yet to be written to this year's National League playoffs.

Cone, who was awful in Game 2 in the wake of a controversial column under his byline in the New York Daily News, was brilliant in Game 6 Tuesday night, pitching the New York Mets to a 5-1 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers to deadlock the series at three games apiece.

So it's on to Game 7 tonight, with probable NL Cy Young Award winner Orel Hershiser pitching for the Dodgers against Ron Darling of the Mets. A berth in the World Series opposite Oakland goes to the winning team.

CONE, 20-3 with a 2.22 earned run average during the season, overcame a shaky start to stifle the Dodgers on five singles, two with two outs and nobody on in the ninth inning. Cone then retired pinch hitter Mike Davis on a fly to left to end the game.

The heretofore quiet Kevin McReynolds, 3-for-20 in the first five games, sparked the Mets, becoming the eighth player in the history of the league playoffs to get four hits in a game.

McReynolds, batting in front of a hot hitter, Gregg Jefferies, instead of a cold one, Howard Johnson, drove in three runs, two on a fifth-inning homer off losing pitcher Tim Lary which gave New York a 4-0 lead.

In his shortest performance of the year as a starter, Cone allowed five runs in two innings of Game 2 last Wednesday night, and the Dodgers won 6-3. In the celebrated column which appeared earlier that day, he wrote that Hershiser was "lucky" to shut out the Mets for eight innings in the opener a night earlier and that ace Dodgers reliever Jay Howell "reminded us of a high school pitcher" because of all the curveballs he threw.

When asked how he would write Tuesday night's performance, Cone said, "I don't think I should probably answer that. I've tried to put it all behind me, but it just won't go away."

"I wanted to do so well tonight, but I was a little jittery at the start. Fortunately, I made some big pitches to get out of it and that is the way I would write it."

Cone appeared to be a lot jittery. After the Mets scored a run in the top of the first, marking the first time they had scored first in the playoffs, Cone's first seven pitches in the bottom of the inning to Steve Sax and Mickey Hatcher were balls.

AFTER throwing a strike to Hatcher, Cone threw another ball, putting runners at first and second with nobody out.

With the Dodger Stadium crowd of 55,885 going nuts, up stepped Kirk Gibson, whose home runs in the fourth and fifth games helped the Dodgers to a pair of wins which gave them a 3-2 lead in the series.

Gibson, playing despite a hamstring injury he suffered a day earlier, took a strike before popping up a bunt which Cone caught. Mike Marshall then fled to left and Cone struck out John

New York Met first baseman Keith Hernandez falls to the ground after a brush back pitch by Los Angeles Dodger pitcher

Shelby to end the threat. "Kirk Gibson bunting probably turned the game around,"

Cone said. "I really wasn't thinking situation baseball at the time. I was just trying to throw strikes." He did so the rest of the way, walking only one more batter and finishing with six strikeouts. Gibson said it was his decision to bunt.

"Cone has walked the first two guys, I decided I was going to give myself a strike to drive the ball and unfortunately, the first pitch was a strike which wasn't what I was looking for," he said. "It was in on me too much. Then after that, I made the decision to try to get the guys over."

"I looked at (Mets' third baseman) Jeffries and after the first pitch I don't think he thought I would bunt. I had the feeling that if I got a good bunt down I could beat it out or at least get the runners over. It was my decision. I'm accountable for it and I don't second-guess myself for it."

"I can see what he (Gibson) is trying to do there," Mets first baseman Keith Hernandez said. "It's early in the game. He's a team player. He's trying to move the runners."

It didn't work, and the Dodgers got a runner past first base only twice after that and there were two outs each time.

The changes Johnson made in his lineup got results right away. After Lenny Dykstra reached base on Dodger first baseman Hatcher's error to start the game, Wally Backman, elevated from the eighth spot to second in the order, delivered a hit-and-run single, sending Dykstra to third, from where he scored on a sacrifice fly by McReynolds.

In the top of the third, Darrell Strawberry and McReynolds singled, and Strawberry later scored on a two-out double by Kevin Elster, who replaced Howard Johnson at short and batted eighth.

Lee spikers eliminated; MHS in hunt

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

The Midland Lee volleyball program is in one of those no-win situations.

The Rebels were mathematically eliminated from the District 4-5A playoff hunt after losing to Odessa High 15-12, 15-8. The LHS spikers fell to 1-7 in district play, 4½ games behind second-place tenants San Angelo Central and Abilene High with four games to play.

Midland High hung onto its faint playoff hopes with a lopsided 15-2, 15-8 win over winless Odessa Permian, while Abilene Cooper took sole possession of first place with a 9-15, 15-11, 15-11 win over San Angelo.

The Cougars, 7-1, are 1½ games ahead of both Central and Abilene High, which was idle Tuesday night. Midland High, 5-3, is only one-half game behind second place.

But the Bulldogs must play all three of the frontrunners in their remaining four games.

As for Lee, Rebel coach Janice Baulch hopes her Rebels can go beyond just playing out the string. But she's hopeful that things won't degenerate that far despite the obvious on-court dissension that manifested itself against OHS.

"They know as well as I do that we're out of it," Baulch said. "But most of them are competitors enough that they won't roll over and play dead."

"We had too many people getting angry with other people (against Odessa) instead of concentrating on the way they were playing," Baulch said.

The Rebels hung tough in the first set, overcoming a 7-3 Broncho lead for a 10-all tie on fine net play by

Midland Lee's Sheila McHugh ...digging against Odessa High

Marnie Sage. Lee also tied the game at 11- and 12-all, but Odessa High took the lead for good on some sloppy defense by Lee. The Bronchos wrapped up the match on kills by Amy Moore and Sjanna Swinney.

OHS continued its steady play in the second set, jumping out to an 11-

Rockets land Otis Thorpe in trade

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Rockets got the power forward they wanted in Otis Thorpe in a trade that nearly completes the dismantling of the Rockets team that fought to the NBA championship round in 1986.

"It seems like only yesterday we were out there running up and down the court fighting for the championship," said Rockets forward Rodney McCray, traded with Jim Petersen to Sacramento for Thorpe.

The Rockets battled to the NBA finals in 1986 led by twin towers Olajuwon and Ralph Sampson, along with McCray and Petersen.

Now only Olajuwon and guard Allen Leavell remain from that team.

"It's sad to have been on top and been right there only to have it all come down on us," Petersen said. "We didn't turn out to be the dynasty we thought we would be."

Therefore, new Coach Don Chaney and the Rockets decided to start over and filled Chaney's plea for a power forward.

"I think we are nearing a championship contender but we're not talking about it immediately," Chaney said. "You don't win a championship overnight."

But Chaney thinks Thorpe, 6-11, 236, is a good start.

Thorpe is starting his fifth NBA

Otis Thorpe
...Rockets bound

season.

He averaged 20.8 points per game last season and 10.2 rebounds and was runner-up the previous year as the league's most improved player.

"When I arrived, I felt the team needed a shooting guard and a power forward," Chaney said. "Otis Thorpe fills the forward spot. He has the potential to become an All-Star."

Thorpe fits the "new" Rockets, Chaney said.

"I look forward to a guy like Otis Thorpe coming here because I'd love to see him and Akeem on each side of the lane," Chaney said. "That gives us an awesome front court."

Patterson said obtaining Thorpe would give the Rockets more help than the NBA draft.

"I can't see anyone on the horizon as far as the draft is concerned or with other trades," Patterson said.

"Your talking about players like (Roy) Tarpley (Dallas) and Karl Malone (Utah)," Patterson said in comparing Thorpe. "These are players who come along once in a lifetime."

Thorpe was among five players to average 20 points and 10 rebounds last season. He was 16th in the league in scoring and ninth in rebounding. Thorpe scored in double figures in 80 of 82 regular season games.

Patterson expects the new-look Rockets also to include 1988 first round draft pick Derrick Chievous of Missouri, currently a contract holdout.

"We've got Chievous in the wings but I wouldn't say that's too close right now," Patterson said.

Bluebonnet Bowl cancels 1988 contest

HOUSTON (AP) — The financially struggling Bluebonnet Bowl has elected to punt this season, canceling the 1988 New Year's Eve game and trying to resume play in 1989 with a corporate sponsor.

"Suppose we take some time, really do our homework, put together a series of events surrounding the ball game, and come up with a first class bowl game," Bowl President Al Warrington said Tuesday night.

The bowl's board of directors voted to skip the 1988 game unless they quickly find a sponsor who insists on playing in December.

"The feeling of the board is that it would not be practical to play the game this year," Warrington said. "If a title sponsor appeared and insisted we go on this year, we'd try to do it."

Warrington said, however, it would be difficult to get a bowl game organized by December.

He said the bowl still had not heard from the NCAA, which is considering decertifying the game because it still owes $400,000 to participating teams from the last two years.

Warrington said there were no negative feedback from the board of directors.

"There was not one negative vote to hang it up," he said. "I think the people went away with the determination to make this thing work. The NCAA is working with us to try to help."

Warrington said the bowl is seeking $500,000 from prospective sponsors to pay off its debts and to revive the game, which was played in the Astrodome last year.

The bowl actually had landed a sponsor last year, but the deal fell through at the last minute.

TERRY WILLIAMSON

Following Midland High's 27-24 blood pressure test against Wichita Falls Rider Saturday afternoon in a non-conference game at Memorial Stadium, MHS coach Doug McCutchen had the nerve to say, "Life is going to get interesting in a hurry in (District) 4-5A."

That's not exactly the encouraging news Midland fans want to hear after that rare double-dip exercise we witnessed at the Old Lady on Cuthbert over the weekend. Just how much more interesting does life have to get to be interesting?

After all, San Angelo scared the wits out of Midland Lee Friday night, with the Bobcats perched at the Lee 25-yard line with just over a minute to play. It took two key sacks by Charles Ellis and Farris Strambler to save a 28-22 Lee verdict.

Then Saturday, the old Bulldogs held on for a 27-24 win over Rider when Jason Reed missed a 25-yard field goal with just 42 seconds left. Reed had earlier kicked a 30-yard field goal that looked like a chip shot for him.

Lee's plight began while holding a two-touchdown lead when San Angelo quarterback Michael Emmons dialed Eric Springer with a 12-yard TD pass, a play on which Lee was called for interference. Lee drew another five-yard penalty on the extra point play with 1:19 left in the game.

Rules state that any penalty/penalties resulting in a score be tacked on to the following kickoff, allowing San Angelo to kick off from Lee 40-yard line, which in effect is a 20-yard penalty.

Naturally, an onside kick followed. That old trick rarely works, but this one did as San Angelo's Jeff Grays was waiting for the perfect bounce at the perfect time.

Fortunately, for Lee, Ellis and Strambler were thinking about all the hard work they had gone through during the past off-season and spring drills. They buttoned down the helmet at just the right time.

And the MHS defense, too, had to find the helmet straps against Rider less than 24 hours later. Kevin Rychel and Mark Guajardo came up with big plays to stall Rider's winning bid inside the MHS 10-yard line, forcing the errant field goal try by Reed. It was the difference between an victory and a tie and some new momentum for the Bulldogs, who were coming off a 42-0 blasting by Odessa Permian. The 5-1 'Dogs were back on track.

In a way, San Angelo's stirring revival against Lee almost negated the biggest story of the week as the Rebels unveiled its new I formation attack, replacing the wishbone that has carried them through a five-year glory era.

The plan was simple enough. The Rebels had to get the ball more to halfback Farris Strambler, who went into the game averaging over 10 yards per carry. He responded with 203 yards rushing, a career high, and three touchdowns.

But is Lee now an I formation team?

"I don't know what we are now," comments Lee coach Earl Miller. "We ran some out of the wishbone and will continue to use it, but I know one thing, we'll take 425 yards of offense in just about any game. This is a change we felt we had to make with the personnel we have."

McCutchen, back in March, could have opted for an open date instead of putting his team on the line against Rider, but he, too, feels he made a good decision.

"First of all, I've never liked open dates, but I sure didn't want one following the Lee and Permian games," said McCutchen. "And as it turned out, I think this has worked perfectly for us. It would have been a long two weeks to sit after getting beat 42-0 by Permian. This game helped us get back on track and I was pleased that our kids came back and played hard. That was important for us even if we had lost a close game to Rider."

And things need to get more interesting? That's about like saying the price of oil is going to drop another $5 per barrel. The heart can't stand it.

After victory, Columbia raises its sights for title try

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE
New York Times News Service

"We'll play them one at a time" was all that Larry McElreavy, Columbia's football coach, would say last Sunday about the rest of the Lions' season.

What he left unmentioned was that Columbia has a chance to win the Ivy League football championship this season.

A championship may be a heady goal for a team that has just ended a 44-game, five-year losing streak by defeating Princeton, 16-13.

The Ivy collage this fall is average: Princeton, Harvard, Yale and even undefeated Penn are all vulnerable teams.

The Tigers could not stop the Lions' rushing attack led by Greg Abbruzzese's 182 yards on 37 carries, and Princeton's best talents, Jason and Judd Garrett, failed to make big plays near the end. That was a message.

Harvard, which at first appeared to be the best in the Ivy League, lost its third consecutive game, this one to Cornell, 19-17.

This happened when two center snaps went over the head of the Crimson punter into the end zone resulting in two fourth-quarter safeties for the Big Red.

Yale, Columbia's next opponent, lost its three nonleague games by a combined score of 105-25, the last to Army, 33-18.

When Carm Cozza, the Yale coach, heard that Columbia had ended its losing streak, he said, "Thank God, the monkey's off our back." It would not be the Elis who helped end the Lions' woes.

Penn, unbeaten after four games, is the Ivy leader with a 3-0 league record after its 10-0 triumph over Brown.

Next in the standing come Princeton, 2-1; Cornell and Harvard, 1-1; Yale, 0-0-1; Columbia, 1-2; Dartmouth, 0-1, and Brown, 0-2-1.

Before Princeton, Columbia had given Penn a battle in losing, 24-10. "We've told our players we're capable of beating anyone on our schedule if we prepare properly," McElreavy said.

"We have to get off cloud nine to get ready for Yale."

After Yale, the Lions have Ivy games in November against Dartmouth, Cornell and Brown.

To reach for a share of the Ivy title they must win them all and Penn must lose twice against Yale, Princeton, Harvard or Cornell.

The Crimson had a 10-point lead over Cornell late in the fourth quarter in wind and rain at Harvard Stadium.

John O'Hare, himself a former punter, centered the ball beyond the reach of Alan Hall, who retrieved it in his end zone for the first safety.

Cornell took Hall's subsequent free kick and went 42 yards for a touchdown behind a new quarterback, Chris Cochrane, who then passed to Sam Brickley for two conversion points to tie the score, 17-17.

Harvard had to punt once more and O'Hare's snap again went high and the frustrated Hall kicked the loose ball out of the end zone for another safety and a 19-17 final score.

In the Colonial League, unbeaten Lafayette pounded Bucknell, 52-35, and Lehigh beat Colgate, 24-19. The two victors are 3-0 and 2-0 in league standings.

The Leopards, with their impressive quarterback, Frank Baur, next visit West Point to take on Army (4-1) and to go for fame and glory.

There have been 11 Army-Lafayette games and the Leopards won once, 19-0 in 1940.

Bowl bids will be in mind when Syracuse meets Penn State on Saturday and Rutgers and Boston College, just behind them among the Division I-A eastern independents, also play.

IRVING (AP) — Tom Landry figures the Dallas Cowboys have already blown one avenue into the NFL playoffs with their poorest start since 1974.

The stumbling 2-4 beginning out of the gate means the Cowboys can't play a wild card into their first playoff appearance in three years, says the Cowboys' coach.

"Anybody can still win our division in the (NFC) east," Landry said on Tuesday. "But with the other divisions going like they are no wild card will be there. We've still got a good shot. I don't think about being out of it. But we just have to get competitive. It's still early. We can do it."

The Cowboys, coming off a 35-17 loss to Washington, are in the NFC East cellar with rough road games on the schedule against Chicago and Philadelphia.

Dallas isn't home until Oct. 30 against the Phoenix Cardinals.

Chicago rated a seven-point favorite over the Cowboys in Sunday's game at noon against one of Landry's former pupils, Mike Ditka, who is 2-1 over his old mentor.

"I think we will come back, I hope so," Landry said. "We played well for five games then went flat against the Redskins. It's a team I don't like to lose to. I'm just now getting over it."

"We just beat ourselves with five turnovers," Landry said. "Every time we started to get back into the game we self-destructed."

Landry absolved quarterback Steve Pelluer for some of the blame although admitting "it was his worst game."

"I have a lot of confidence in him and I still believe he can do the job," Landry said. "He made some bad decisions but I feel he's coming along."

Asked if Danny White could see so more action, Landry said "I don't know when I'll go to somebody."

Injuries have hurt the Cowboys. At wide receiver Michael Irvin and Kelvin Edwards have leg injuries. Irvin underwent another series of X-rays on his ankle Tuesday but they were negative.

Landry could bring back Mike Renfro, Cornell Burbage or Gordon Banks if he needs a wide receiver. All are free agents without a team.

At safety, Victor Scott is out for the season with a shoulder injury and Michael Downs has a groin pull. Landry said he could move either Bill Bates or Everson Walls to safety if he decides not to start rookie Billy Owens. Landry said the Cowboys' secondary needs to awaken.

"(Cornerback) Ron Francis is sort of shell-shocked right now," Landry said. "He has great closing speed but he isn't doing the job. We have to get him back to playing like he did last year. Right now they are just bombing our right corner spot."

Houston places Moon back on practice field

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oilers Coach Jerry Glanville hoped to answer some quarterback questions today.

Starter Warren Moon, out since the second game of the season with a broken scapula in his right shoulder, was scheduled to participate in workouts to see if he can play Sunday against the Pittsburgh Steelers.

"The doctors say Warren physically can play," Glanville said. "Now we have to see what he can do in practice. The doctors talk body. I need to find out if he can play a football game."

Cody Carlson replaced Moon and led the Oilers to a 2-2 record in the next four games, broke the thumb on his right hand in Sunday's 7-6 victory over Kansas City and No. 3 quarterback Brent Pease had to finish the game.

Carlson is sidelined two to three weeks.

Pease got off to a rugged start in relief of Carlson but eventually scored the winning touchdown against the Chiefs and would start Sunday's game if Moon isn't available.

"I prepare every week to be a starter but my concentration will be really up this week," Pease said. "I'm going to have to get my consistency and work on timing with the receivers."

Moon listed himself as 50-50 for Sunday's game. Moon said he'd definitely play the following game at Cincinnati.

Moon started throwing passes last week and under ideal conditions wanted to work out this week and play next week against the unbeaten Bengals.

Glanville said he'd have confidence in Pease, who led the Oilers replacement team to a 2-1 record during the NFL players strike last season.

"I have confidence in what's inside Brent Pease," Glanville said. "If we start Brent Pease at quarterback, we'll be okay."

Pease missed his first seven passes against the Chiefs and two of those were intercepted.

The Oilers moved 63 yards in the third quarter and Pease scored the winning touchdown on a naked reverse after twice calling time outs.

"I was just mixed up from the offensive set we had," Pease said. "I thought we had different personnel in there and when we got to the line I saw we didn't."

Pease expects to have the kinks worked out this week.

"Coming into a week where you know you're going to start, you become more focused and I know I have to perform better than I did," Pease said.

Rich purchases Wichita Pilots

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Businessman Bob Rich of Buffalo, N.Y., is the new owner of the Texas League Wichita Pilots baseball franchise. Rich refused Monday to disclose how much he paid. He also is owner of the Buffalo Bisons, an American Association Triple-A club that set a minor league attendance record of 1.2 million during 1986. Rich is co-owner of the National Baseball Congress, an organization that stages a non-professional World Series in Wichita each summer.

Larry Schmittou of Nashville, Tenn., and a group of investors sold the franchise to Rich.

The deal turned on whether the City Council would agree to make improvements at the municipal baseball park, Lawrence-Dumont Stadium. Nearly $1.8 million will be spent on renovations before the season home opener April 17. Nearly $3.2 million in further work will be done in 1990 and 1991.

Juggernaut Phoenix flies

PHOENIX (AP) — Coach Gene Stallings doesn't consider his first-place Phoenix Cardinals an NFL juggernaut yet, but says fans shouldn't be overly surprised about the club's early-season success.

The transplanted Cardinals, expected by some to be 0-6 at this stage, instead are 4-2 and alone atop the NFC East standings for the first time since 1974.

A reporter told Stallings that a cable television commentator has started referring to the Cardinals as a "juggernaut" or irresistible force.

"What is a juggernaut?" Stallings said. "I don't think we're that."

Still, Sunday's 31-14 victory over Pittsburgh was the Cardinals' fourth straight triumph — their longest winning streak since 1964.

"You're talking about a team that was picked to finish last in the NFC East this year. That's what people are going to say — that we are a surprising team. We're surprising to them," Stallings said Tuesday.

"The thing is, I thought we were a pretty good ballclub last year. We played some close ballgames and lost. This year, the guys are still playing hard and good things are happening to us."

The Cardinals, who last reached the playoffs in 1982, haven't had a winning season since they went 9-7 in 1984.

After the club moved from St. Louis to Phoenix last March and lost three of four preseason games and the first two regular-season games, fans figured it would be another long season.

Then came consecutive victories over Tampa Bay (30-24), defending Super Bowl champion Washington (30-21), the previously undefeated Los Angeles Rams (41-27) and Pittsburgh.

"Who would have thought four weeks ago we were going to go 4-0 and be 4-2?" offensive tackle Luis Sharpe said. "It's a credit to the coaching staff and the players."

We're in a great position now. We're excited about the things we can do."

"We're contenders," wide receiver J.T. Smith said. "Some people might still think of us as underdogs. Let them. We think we're contenders."

"We believe in ourselves," wide receiver Roy Green said. "We're as good or better than anyone else."

"We're studs," said Ron Wolfley, a Pro Bowl special teams player and the club's resident quipster. "It's nice not to get food thrown at you in restaurants anymore. I'd just love to stay on this wagon and ride it for as long as we can."

Stallings is cautiously optimistic, especially considering his teams finished 4-11-1 and 7-8 in his first two seasons, 1986 and 1987.

NFL reinstates Gibson after drug violation

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Antonio Gibson, the strong safety who was suspended for 30 days on Sept. 13 for a second violation of the NFL's substance abuse policy, was reinstated by the league Tuesday, the New Orleans Saints announced.

"Gibson will continue to receive appropriate counseling and treatment," said a statement released by team spokesman Rusty Kasmiersky.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Nobel Prize for literature to be announced Thursday

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The Swedish Academy will announce the winner of the Nobel Prize for literature on Thursday.

The exclusive 18-member academy of Sweden's leading writers and critics said nothing about the candidates, although it is known to have focused in recent years on authors from Third World countries.

The tradition-bound academy, whose members are elected for life, keeps secret the date of its announcement until a few days before it happens. It always is made on a Thursday at precisely 1 p.m. (8 a.m. EDT) at the 18th century stock market building where the academy occupies an upper story.

Last year the prize went to exiled Soviet poet Joseph Brodsky.

Other Nobel prizes awarded by the Royal Academy of Sciences will be announced next week: the medicine prize on Monday, the economic sciences prize on Tuesday, and the prizes for chemistry and physics on Wednesday.

The Nobel Peace Prize went to the United Nations peacekeeping forces and was announced in the Norwegian capital of Oslo on Sept. 29.

The Nobel laureates will receive their prizes in ceremonies in Stockholm and Oslo on Dec. 10, the anniversary of the 1896 death of Alfred Nobel.

Plutonium contaminates lab

LONDON (AP) — A laboratory inside a nuclear complex in northwestern England has been contaminated with plutonium, the plant's operator said Tuesday.

Above-normal traces of radioactivity were detected Monday on the floor of an analytical laboratory handling plutonium at the Sellafield nuclear plant and in a small area of the corridor outside, said a spokesman for British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. who requested anonymity.

No workers at the plant, about 280 miles northwest of London in Cumbria, have been exposed to dangerous levels of radioactivity nor has there been a release into the environment, the spokesman said.

The Sellafield complex is the world's largest nuclear reprocessing center, extracting uranium and plutonium from spent nuclear fuel used by reactors in Britain and other countries.

The Irish government and environmental groups have repeatedly criticized the plant's discharge of radioactive waste into the Irish Sea as a health hazard and have demanded the plant's closure.

The company says its discharges and leaks have been within safe limits.

Ex-president's statue moved

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — City workers Tuesday removed the statue of former President for Life Habib Bourguiba from its prominent place in central Tunis as astonished passersby looked on.

Bourguiba, 85 and living under surveillance in a villa south of the capital, was ousted from power in 1987 by Premier Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali, who said Bourguiba had become senile.

"The present regime is not trying to hide history," said Tunis Mayor Ahmed Belkhouja. "The statue is not in the right place. It will be transferred to La Goulette."

La Goulette is a port three miles outside Tunis where Bourguiba landed in June 1955. The equestrian statue is supposed to symbolize "the triumphal return" of the young nationalist from France.

France granted Tunisia independence in March 1956. Tuesday's statue removal follows several similar actions in other regions of the country governed for 32 years by Bourguiba.

Ben Ali has said Bourguiba would be transferred to another villa in his native city of Monastir.

Arabs to help preserve Toledo

TOLEDO, Spain (AP) — Arab ambassadors have agreed to help save this city which served for centuries as the meeting ground for Moslem, Jewish and Christian cultures, Mayor Jose Manuel Molina said.

Molina said Tuesday the ambassadors from Syria,

Saudi Arabia, Egypt, Morocco, Lebanon, Mauritania, the United Arab Emirates, Jordan, Libya and the Arab League agreed to discuss their assistance next month in Madrid.

The Toledo Foundation seeks restoration of the medieval heart of the city 40 miles southwest of Madrid in time for 1992, when Toledo will be the site of a yearlong commemoration of Spain's tri-cultural past.

World Jewish organizations also will take part in the restoration as well as the 1992 commemoration, which coincides with the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus's first voyage to the New World — and with the royal edict expelling Moslems and Jews from Spain.

Crime boss shot at barber shop

REGGIO CALABRIA, Italy (AP) — A gunman killed a local crime boss in a barber shop Tuesday, pumping seven bullets into him as he sat for a shave, police said.

The gunman and a lookout, both wearing helmets that covered their faces, sped away on a high-powered motorcycle, witnesses said.

Killed was Demetrio Serraino, 48, described as a boss of the 'ndrangheta, the Mafia-like crime syndicate in Calabria, the region in the toe of the Italian boot.

Serraino, who had an arrest record for criminal association and extortion, died en route to a hospital, police said.

The Italian news agency ANSA said the killing was the 42nd homicide in the city of Reggio Calabria this year, many of them linked to a war between rival criminal gangs.

A cousin of Serraino was killed in 1986 in his hospital room by gunmen.

ABERDEEN, Scotland (AP) — A floating crane on Tuesday raised the living quarters of a North Sea oil rig destroyed in the world's worst oilfield disaster.

The 180-ton structure provided accommodations for 33 workers on the Piper Alpha, which was torn apart by gas explosions July 6 and sank in 150-foot-deep waters, killing 167 men.

The bodies of the 112 men still missing are believed to be trapped inside a second 1,100-ton module still lying on the sea floor, said the rig's American owner, Occidental Petroleum Corp.

The larger living module is expected to be raised later this week, said spokesman Alex Blake-Milton. Salvage workers are still trying to recover the wreckage of the rig 120 miles off Scotland's east coast.

Eiffel Tower workers end strike

PARIS (AP) — Tourists could once again get a bird's eye view of Paris today after workers at the Eiffel Tower ended a four-day strike.

The 100-year-old steel tower, France's top tourist attraction, had been closed to visitors since Saturday morning because of the strike by the 130 employees.

Early today, a union strike committee announced that all the strikers' key demands had been met, including an increase of about 30 cents in the $4.60 hourly wage.

The Eiffel Tower stands 984 feet high, with three observation levels, and is one of the few tall structures looking out over the rooftops of a city of five- and six-story buildings. When it opened in 1888, it was the world's tallest structure.

Party claims 'election rigging'

MOSCOW (NYT) — The Communist Party of Armenia has proclaimed "election rigging" in the case of a biophysicist who ran a write-in candidacy for public office and won more votes than the party's hand-picked nominee.

One senior official of the Armenian Legislature was expelled from the Communist Party and another disciplined for validating the unorthodox election, the press agency Tass reported Tuesday.

The scandal was the latest twist in the struggle between Armenian authorities and nationalist protesters, who have waged a kind of guerrilla warfare for control of the republic. The defeated candidate was Interior Minister Usik S. Arutunyan, head of the law enforcement agency. The biophysicist is Kharchik Stambolt-syan. Officials said he received 78 percent of the votes and the interior minister received 14 percent.
