Dissenters block OPEC production accord

BRIONI, Yugoslavia (AP) — Most of OPEC's 13 members agreed Saturday to cut the cartel's overall oil production in order to push prices up to at least $17 a barrel, but three dissenters blocked a final accord, officials said.

Oil ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries said they would try again today to reach a unanimous decision. Still to be resolved was the even stickier question of how any overall production ceiling would be divided among members.

"The road is still full of stones and holes," said Mana Saeed Oteiba, the oil minister of the United Arab Emirates.

In a sign of how deeply the factions were divided, Algeria's minister left the conference site Saturday evening and said he was not returning.

Belkacem Nabi, whose country was among the dissenters, predicted the conference would end without agreement. "We've spent enough time going around in circles," he said as he boarded a yacht departing this secluded Adriatic island.

Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, said most ministers agreed OPEC should limit its production to 17.4 million barrels a day this summer and 17.9 million barrels a day during the year's final quarter.

■ Plunging oil prices have had a less crippling effect on North Sea oil production than on on-shore exploration. — 2A

The aim would be to drive prices up to a range of $17 to $19 a barrel and keep them there for about two years, Yamani said.

OPEC's current production rate of about 19 million barrels a day has helped keep prices at the depressed level of $11 to $14 a barrel.

The cartel's president, Rilwanu Lukman of Nigeria, refused to say if the cartel would seek to enforce a majority decision in the event that the dissenting members — Iran, Libya and Algeria — remained outside the fold.

Iran's oil minister, Gholamreza Aghadazeh, told reporters after Saturday's two-hour session that he had no intention of going along with the majority.

"We have not any hope that with this production ceiling we would solve the problem of (depressed) prices," he said through an interpreter.

Aghadazeh, backed by Libya and Algeria, has pressed for bigger production cuts in hopes of driving prices up to the $28 a barrel level that prevailed last November.

The majority favor keeping production closer to current levels in order to preserve for OPEC a "fair share" of the world market, Lukman said.

In the recent past, OPEC had sought to reduce its production as low as necessary to prop up prices. But that strategy failed because most members failed to adhere to the limits and undercut each other in price.

Last December, OPEC decided to abandon production controls, a move that triggered the largest price decline in history.

Strake will remain GOP chairman

Strake

DALLAS (AP) — Religious conservatives' bid to take over leadership of the Texas Republican Party failed Saturday night as moderate George Strake retained his seat as chairman.

Challenger Diana Denman, the state GOP vice chairwoman who was backed by the conservative bloc, said she pulled out of the chairman's race just before voting began because preliminary reports showed her running second to Strake.

■ Black Republicans gaining higher profile — 4A

She went on to win re-election as vice chairman, defeating Kay Danks by a narrow margin of 2,367 votes to 2,300 votes.

Following a boisterous debate over rules and procedures, a role-call vote gave Strake 3,882 votes and Austin minister Sam Hoerster 744 votes.

Strake said "the religious right" had a chance to speak its piece at the Texas GOP's annual convention. Some of them came in "like a roaring lion," he said, adding that he had urged them to work within the party structure.

"I had some of those people (from the religious right) that were backing me, which I think was one of the things that made my election easy," he said.

After the chairmanship vote, all the candidates said they would follow the advice Vice President George Bush gave earlier in the day and unite for the November races.

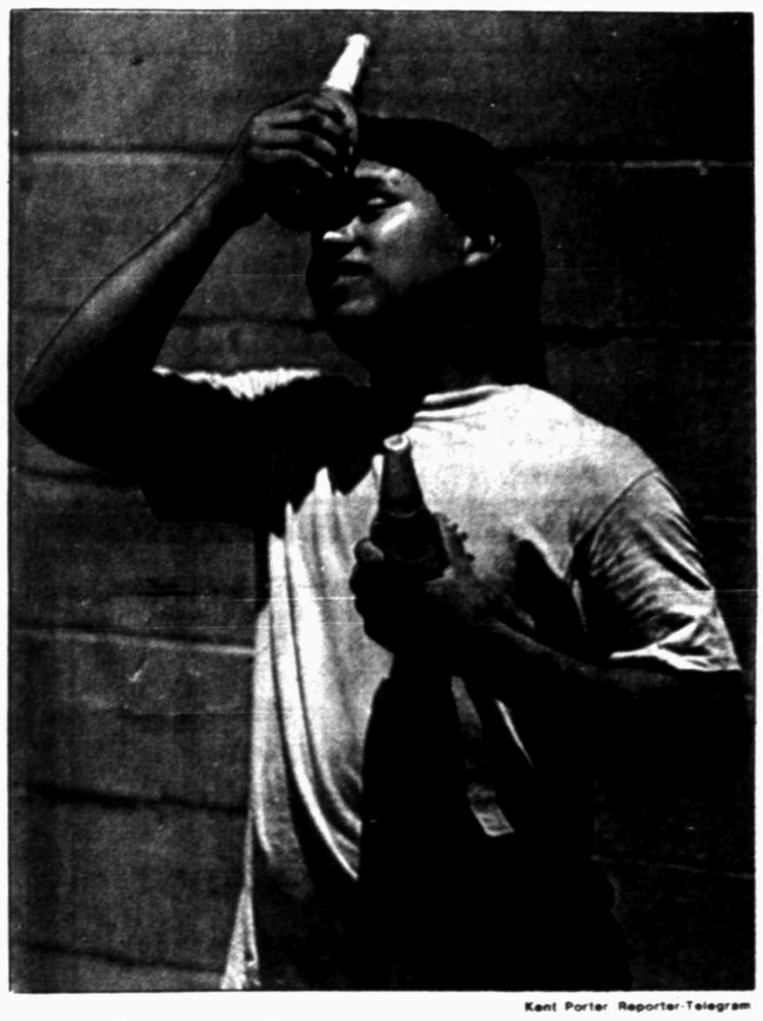

"I don't enjoy fighting Republicans. I enjoy beating Democrats," Strake said.

Bush had told the crowd at the annual state GOP convention that Texas Republicans "can fight like cats and dogs" in the primaries but should present a united front in November.

"We can fight like cats and dogs in our primaries and we can battle in this convention for positions of leadership, but when those battles are over, we must join together and send a signal to all Texans that we are the party of inclusion," Bush said.

Bush leaned on his Texas connections, saying he raised his family in West Texas and has voted in Texas ever since 1948.

White apologizes for teachers' test

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

White

AUSTIN — Gov. Mark White said Saturday he is sorry so many teachers had to agonize over the controversial teacher comptenecy test.

White, speaking to the State Democratic Convention, said teachers had to go further than most professionals by taking the Texas Examanination of Current Administrators and Teachers — TECAT. Making teachers take a test to keep their jobs may have been going too far, he said, and for that, "I sincerely apologize."

The thousands of Democrats packed into the convention arena cheered when White admitted he had not been sensitve enough to teacher anxiety over the test.

Teacher groups have complained about the test and filed lawsuits challenging it. While campaigning across the state this spring, teachers consistently protested White for making them take the TECAT.

Since his victory in the May 3 primary, White has sent his wife, Linda Gale, across the state to meet with teachers and to hear their complaints.

He promised to maintain a better channel of communication with teachers and teacher organizations.

While White mended the fence with teachers, Attorney General Jim Mattox stepped up his campaign against Republican challenger Roy Barrera, a San Antonio district judge.

Friday at the Republican State Convention in Dallas, Barrera slammed Mattox, accusing the incumbent of saying, "Hispanics will not support Barrera because Barrera is not a 'real' Mexican."

Mattox Saturday denied ever making that remark, and said Barrera is making "a blatant racial appeal." Mattox challenged Barrera to produce the time, date and witnesses to the remark.

Barrera also told the Republican convention delagate, "Mr. Mattox, come November, this jalapeno is going to burn your buns!"

Mattox said, "If I'd have called him a jalapeno pepper, or a jalapeno, I'd be gone from office. I think he should be held to the same standards."

Meanwhile, elections for the top two party positions went as expected. Incumbent State Party Chairman Bob Slagle, a Sherman attorney, was re-elected unanimously. He faced token opposition from longtime Dallas party activist John "Preacher" Hays and Colleen Gibson, a follower of political extremist Lyndon LaRouche.

In the race for vice-chair, San Antonio civil rights leader Bambi Cardenas-Ramirez won without opposition. Party rules require the vice-chair to be of the opposite sex than the chairman.

The incumbent vice-chair, Judy Zaffarini of Laredo, is stepping down to run as a Democratic nominee to the state Senate.

City officials to consider budget proposal

By DOUG DRUMMOND
Assistant City Editor

A proposal to carve $3.8 million from the city budget is in the hands of Midland city councilmen, and now they must make some decisions.

The proposal calls for decreases in nearly every city department, including police, street maintenance and the city garage.

A few departments such as data processing and sanitation are requesting increases.

But officials admit the key item in the talks may be possible layoffs or salary reductions.

The decisions begin Monday when councilmen huddle with other city officials in the annual budget hearings.

The hearings begin at 9 a.m. in City Hall.

"There's going to be some hard decisions," said District 4 Councilman Robert Rendall. "We'll just have to go in there and see what needs to be done."

Reason for the concern is a projected $2.6 million shortfall in city revenue for the next fiscal year.

The proposal, prepared by city administrators, calls for a budget of $58,051,946, a 6.2 percent cut from this year.

Although the report does not recommend a property tax hike, it provides revenue estimates for 3 percent and 8 percent increases.

"We're pleased," said Deputy City Manager Fred Poe of his staff's work on the budget.

"These are the maximum reductions we can make unless we start to reduce services," he said.

The proposal recommends cuts in 22 of the 27 general fund departments, and overall reductions in the water and airport funds.

It does not address layoffs or salary reductions.

"Our No. 1 priority is to hold the tax rate," said District 3 City Councilman Kelly Fish. "Beyond that, I think it (layoffs or salary reductions) is a distinct possiblity."

District 2 City Councilwoman Oralia Corrales, Rendall and Poe also said such moves are possible.

If the cuts are needed, Ms. Corrales said she would prefer salary reductions.

Fish agreed.

"That way everyone gets to keep their job. In these hard times, I prefer everyone to be assured of a job with a lesser salary," Fish said.

Rendall said he would prefer layoffs to salary reductions.

"Salary cuts may cause a problem with morale," Rendall said.

If salary reductions are needed, Poe said there has been talk among city officials about decreasing only the administrators' pay.

"A lot of the staff may not have that much to cut," he said.

In addition to the layoff issue, the proposal has a $547,094 reduction for Midland police, which represents a 6.6 percent decline.

Poe said 18 positions are proposed to be deleted, adding such a move will not reduce police services.

"That figure is the expected vacanices we will have next year," Poe said, noting such openings will not be filled.

Also, the city garage's budget shows a $605,239 reduction, most of which will come from buying about 20 fewer police cars.

The reduction in the street maintenance budget, 4.8 percent, stems from lower fuel costs. Since gasoline prices have dropped from a year ago, Poe said the city will save money.

The above chart shows a comparison of the salaries of Midland city officials with eight other Texas cities. The Midland population figure represents the latest estimate by the Chamber of Commerce while other population figures were taken from the 1986-87 Texas Almanac.

City officials' salaries rank high

From Staff Reports

Several Midland city officials are among the top paid in West Texas and are not that far behind larger cities such as Dallas and Austin, a Reporter-Telegram survey shows.

The list, gathered by telephone, included salaries of officials in Dallas, Austin, Odessa, Amarillo, Abilene, San Angelo, Lubbock and El Paso.

Figures were gathered from city personnel departments.

The survey was in response to the upcoming budget hearings. Some city councilmen have indicated a reduction in salaries is a possibility.

James Brown, Midland's city manager and the city's highest paid employee, makes an annual salary of $87,948.

That ranked third in the survey behind his Dallas and Austin counterparts but put him ahead of city managers in larger cities such as El Paso, Lubbock and Amarillo.

El Paso has a population of some 450,000 — about four times the size of Midland. Figures show Lubbock with about 170,000 residents, and Amarillo with some 150,000.

The Dallas city manager makes $106,198 while Austin's top city executive earns $100,006.

Deputy City Manager Fred Poe, the No. 2 man in Midland city government, also fared well. His $75,696 annual salary ranked behind Dallas ($96,450) and Austin ($84,011).

But Poe's salary is ahead of the remaining cities in the survey. He outearns his Odessa counterpart by nearly $25,000.

North Sea production not as hard hit

EDITOR'S NOTE: Scottish journalists estimate that about 5,000 Americans, including oil workers and their families, live in the Aberdeen region and that several hundred have left or are planning to go. But analysts say plunging oil prices have had a less crippling effect on North Sea oil production than on on-shore exploration in the United States and elsewhere.

By LARRY THORSON

ABERDEEN, Scotland (AP) — The Texas twang is heard less often these days in Aberdeen, a center for North Sea oil companies, as plunging oil prices force exploration cutbacks and layoffs. Expensive foreign workers are often the first to go.

"It's very disappointing because we were getting to enjoy Aberdeen, and we were expecting to be overseas 10 years," said a Texan woman whose husband lost a job servicing new oil wells.

"Now we're going back to the United States after just one year. We don't know what we're going back to — no job and no home. It's like starting all over, and it's not easy when you're over 40," said the woman who spoke on condition of anonymity.

She said her family wasn't the only one in the position: "I've been surprised at the number of people going home without jobs."

The U.S. oil industry for which her husband had worked before coming to Scotland is in an even bigger slump than the North Sea field, and job prospects are dim in the United States.

Local journalists estimate that there are about 5,000 Americans, including oil workers and their families, in the region, and that several hundred of them have left or are planning to go. Official figures were not available.

The effects of the layoffs are felt everywhere. The American School had 294 students in kindergarten through 12th grade in June, but expects only 250 to start again in September.

Principal Dee Gilley, a Texan who worked with oil industry schools in Libya and Indonesia before taking charge of the Aberdeen school, said she was saving money by replacing staff hired in the United States with local teachers who didn't need expensive items like home leave payments or trans-Atlantic flights.

"I think we're going to make it. We're digging in our heels," Mrs. Gilley said. "Oil people don't tend to panic much. They have a lot of faith in the business, and they're a pretty tough breed, the kind of people who go into jungles and set up industries."

She said scores of Americans in Aberdeen have suffered severe financial jolts. Two years ago, some people were encouraged to retire at age 50 with pensions at 75 percent of their salaries, while now some were getting just one month's severance pay, she said.

Analysts, however, say plunging oil prices — from $28 a barrel late last year to $15 now — have had a less crippling effect on North Sea oil production than on on-shore exploration in the United States and elsewhere.

"The shock is not as sharp and sudden as it has been in Texas and Oklahoma," said Grant Baird, chief economist of the Royal Bank of Scotland which keeps a close watch on the oil industry.

"There's a long lead-time in the North Sea. You can't just close offshore wells and platforms the way they have done in parts of Texas and Oklahoma," he said.

As a result, production has remained fairly stable. In April, Britain's North Sea production averaged 2.59 million barrels a day, down 5 percent from the previous month. The drop was due to maintenance and the effects of a strike in a contiguous Norwegian field, according to officials at the Royal Bank of Scotland.

Government officials say oil companies spends about $9 million a day — $3.3 billion a year — to supply and maintain offshore operations.

If prices remain low, Scotland could lose from 5,000 to 6,000 of its 60,000 oil industry jobs, Baird said.

North Sea oil, shared by Britain and Norway, started coming ashore in June 1975. Combined with increased production in Mexico and Alaska, North Sea oil helped create the oil glut that broke the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' grip on prices.

It has been a bonanza for Scotland and especially for Aberdeen, an old seafaring town whose fishing industry was faltering when the oil industry took off. The harbors that once were crowded with trawlers now bustle with low-decked North Sea service vessels that carry supplies to offshore platforms 450 miles away.

During the oil boom, the area's average wage has risen from 80 percent of the British average to 120 percent, said John Condliffe, regional director of the Scottish Development Agency.

"Oil is a good thing. It jerked us out of competing on the basis of low wages," he said. Many engineering companies that once made meager livings by servicing the fishing fleet have grown rich and technologically advanced by supplying the offshore industry.

Condliffe said he was confident that Aberdeen had a bright future in oil, but predicted "a rough couple of years," especially for companies specializing in exploration drilling.

He said, however, that even if oil prices were to plummet to $5 a barrel, it would still be profitable to keep the production of North Sea oil at 80 percent of the current level.

Analysts believe North Sea oil will continue to be pumped for 50 years, he said. In addition, local industry has the expertise to make Aberdeen a base for finding and pumping oil out of seabeds all over the world.

Condliffe said that during a recent trip to Texas, he had seen oil executives "panicking to the point of saying they should get out of the business.

"No one is saying that here. This is our first downturn," he said.

However, he added: "We're not suffering the shutdown of land-based production that they are in Houston. If we were suffering the same percentage of downturn that they are in Houston, I don't think grittiness would save us."

OPEC

The resultant loss in income, expected to reach $60 billion for the cartel this year, has persuaded most OPEC members that they should reimpose production controls.

Lukman said the ministers had asked Indonesian Oil Minister Subroto to propose production quotas for the individual OPEC countries at Sunday's meeting.

He said that agreeing on quotas would be difficult, and conference sources said they saw little chance that this key part of the package would be settled during the current series of meetings.

Lukman said OPEC remained hopeful that non-OPEC oil producers, such as Mexico, Britain, Norway and Egypt, would help the cartel restrain production.

"We're in the same boat," he said. "OPEC and non-OPEC must cooperate to stop the ship from sinking."

Blown circuit breaker causes power failure

From Staff Reports

An equipment failure at the Moss substation of the Texas Electric Service Co. in western Odessa caused a 26-minute power failure in Odessa and parts of Midland Saturday evening, according to TESCO Construction Superintendent Roger Marshall.

"In essence, we think that a 138,000 volt power transmission line blew a circuit breaker. We had to reroute the power flow through a different source," Marshall said.

He explained that the high voltage lines carry power from the generator station to different parts of local cities.

A Midland Memorial Hospital engineering department spokesman said the hospital air-conditioning chillers went off for a short time.

The Sheriff's Department switchboard operator said "Things were just blinking on and off for awhile."

Power was interrupted intermittently around parts of Midland, from 6:32 to 6:58 p.m., while parts of Odessa experienced the failure for the full 26 minutes Marshall said.

Man's family upset that strange woman buried on top of his grave

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Rosa DeLeon faithfully visited her husband's grave for the past 24 years, planting trees, watering and trimming the grass.

She was certain that she would be buried in a coffin above her husband. She even put it in her will and had thought of it as "their plot."

But earlier this month something happened that has left Mrs. DeLeon, 71, bewildered and frustrated.

Mrs. DeLeon and her daughter, Rosa Marie Perez, went to Rose Hill Memorial Park on Father's Day to lay a wreath on the grave. But they couldn't find it.

The headstone marking the grave of Marcos DeLeon had disappeared. A marker for Beatrice Rivera had taken its place. A woman Mrs. DeLeon never heard of had been buried on top of her husband.

"My mother almost had a cardiac arrest," said another of Mrs. DeLeon's daughters, Mary Barrientes.

"They removed the stone, they removed our trees...they took our wreath and broke it into little pieces," Mrs. Barrientes said. "My mother keeps having nightmares. She says my father is haunting her."

Mrs. Barrientes said she contacted the cemetery and was told that the funeral home was responsible for the burial.

She called Memorial Funeral Home, which handled the Rivera burial, and was told it was the cemetery's responsibility.

Allen Bassett, a funeral director at Memorial Funeral Home, confirmed that Mrs. Rivera was buried over another grave.

"In that situation, our funeral home has no jurisdiction over the cemeteries as to where a person is buried," Bassett said.

But Mrs. Barrientes is not sure how, or why, Mrs. Rivera was buried atop her father's grave.

"I was 15 when daddy died," Mrs. Barrientes said. "I was very close to him. At three o'clock in the morning, you would find me out at his grave.

"For the last 24 years, I knew daddy was there. Now I don't know anymore. I just don't know," she said.

The funeral home told Mrs. Barrientes that a nephew of Mrs. Rivera requested that they bury the woman atop the DeLeon grave.

According to the nephew, whom the funeral home would not identify, Mrs. Rivera was DeLeon's daughter and had asked to be buried at the plot, Mrs. Barrientes said.

But Mrs. Barrientes said her family has never heard of Mrs. Rivera or her nephew. DeLeon did have children from a previous marriage, Mrs. Barrientes said, but she knows all her half-brothers and sisters.

GOP

Introducing the vice president, U.S. Rep. Jack Field, R-Humble, asked convention-goers to give Bush a Texas homecoming.

Bush said that in a growing party there are bound to be some internal differences but added those feuds are a healthy sign that Republicans aren't afraid to exchange ideas.

The vice president, who has courted the more conservative wing of the party since he announced an interest in the 1988 presidential race, said Republicans are bound together by the fundamental values of family, hard work, education and patriotism.

He used the word "fundamental" several times during his speech.

However, a news release circulated by a group called the Ad Hoc Committee to Elect a Pro-Life President criticized Bush for not taking a strong enough stand against abortion.

Bush spoke of the state's economic hard times but said Texas will bounce back from falling oil and gas prices and the farm crisis.

"We as an administration are working right now to free up the industry from the excesses of federal legislation," he said. He called for the deregulation of natural gas.

Bush and former Gov. Bill Clements traded compliments during their appearance before the convention.

Clements, who followed Bush on the podium, blasted Democratic Gov. Mark White's performance in office and blamed him for the present budgetary problems.

"Mark White is like the captain of the Titanic. He has shipwrecked the Texas economy," said Clements, who faces White in the November gubernatorial contest.

He reaffirmed the need for a special sesssion. White said Friday he would call the Legislature into session sometime this year because of new budget deficit projections.

"I first called for the special session of the Legislature in February," Clements said. "You know what this governor is doing. He is fiddling while Austin burns."

Insiders said the party wanted a Hispanic to serve as vice-chair — Ms. Zaffarini is Mexican-American — and would accept the recommedation of the Mexican American Democrats. MAD unanimously endorsed Ms. Cardenas-Ramirez at its caucus on Friday.

Ms. Cardenas-Ramirez serves on the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights and has had a running feud with the Reagan administration, which has tried to force her off the commission.

Vacancy rate down

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston's office vacancy rate is slightly down during the second quarter of the year, but it is still more than the Dallas rate, according to an analysis by Coldwell Banker, the national real estate concern.

The vacancy rate in Houston's central business district declined, from 19.1 percent during the first three months of the year to 19 percent in the second quarter, said Will Penland, vice president and resident manager of Coldwell Banker's Galleria office in Houston.

BUDGET

One of the departments wanting more money is the Emergency Medical Services, the city's ambulance service.

The $45,518 needed for the ambulance is to help offset $70,000 worth of unpaid bills. Poe said some 40 percent of the people using the service this year did not pay their bills.

The sanitation department also is asking for a $23,415 increase. It needs $102,000 worth of new trash bins.

In the past, such money has came from federal revenue-sharing funds. Those funds were discontinued this year.

Poe said the city has a trash bin, on the average, for every four houses.

"If we did not buy more containers, we would have five houses for each one," he said. "That wouldn't bother me, but some people have a harder time getting around."

Data processing, another department requesting an increase, needs $74,771 to help pay for computer equipment.

The computer equipment is used for billing, utilities and record keeping.

Other departments with a decreased budget proposal are fire, civil defense, municipal court and the airport.

The city also recently disbanded MidTran, the city's mass transit system.

Poe said he and other city officials have been working on the report since April 28.

He said department heads were initially asked to make three separate reports — a budget with no increase, one with a 5 percent hike and another with a 10 percent increase.

"Some of the departments couldn't really make a decrease," Poe said. "But others could cut 5 percent and still some other departments could make a bigger percentage of cuts."

Poe, City Manager James Brown and other city officials will formally present the information in the hearings.

Then the City Council must go to work, hoping they can solve the problems by the end of the hearings.

Said Rendall: "We're just going to have to hammer out a solution."

Correction

In a news article that appeared in Saturday's edition it was reported that two men were arrested for possession of a controlled substance. The article quoted a sheriff's officer as saying four grams of cocaine were found at 922 S. Fort Worth. It should have quoted him as saying the substance was found at 2312 N. Main.

Black Republicans gain higher profile

DALLAS (AP) — Black Republicans, once a political rarity in Texas, are gaining a higher profile in the party, although they haven't made the kind of gains enjoyed by Hispanics, black leaders said Saturday.

At the state GOP convention here this weekend, Hispanics are presenting a united front, riding the momentum of attorney general candidate Roy Barrera's high-profile campaign.

"We have the typical problems. In Dallas there are about 250 black Republicans. You don't see a one here this morning. They didn't have one candidate running (for statewide office). That's part of our problem," said Reby Cary, president of the Black Republicans Council of Texas.

About two dozen blacks attended the morning caucus Saturday to talk about the need for more organization and a better campaigning structure.

Several of them noted the strong showing by Hispanics at the convention.

A Hispanic caucus Friday drew a sizable crowd, and Barrera later gave a fiery speech at the general session.

STATE

"There are some brothers right here at this convention who said, 'I don't want to be part of this caucus.'"
— Reby Cary, president of Black Republicans

Barrera blasted Democrat Attorney General Jim Mattox as a disgrace to the legal profession. "I am going to bring you the political skin of Jim Mattox," he vowed.

Barrera said Mattox has accused him of not being a "real Mexican."

"Well, Mr. Mattox, come November, this jalapeno pepper is going to burn your buns," he said, drawing a hearty bout of applause.

On Saturday, however, Mattox told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that Barrera was "an untruthful individual."

"I challenged him to produce the time and location where Jim Mattox has ever uttered the racist comment that he attributed to me," Mattox said.

"If I were to have taken the platform of the Democratic convention and I had made an open racial appeal, I would be run out of the state by the news media and the political establishment," he added. "That is the standard I would be held to, and I would expect him to be held to the same standard. Neither his ethnicity nor mine should make any difference to this campaign."

At Saturday's black caucus, Cary said one of the council's problems was that it wasn't aware of some blacks campaigning in the May primary, so the council wasn't able to help them.

He said the scant attendance was partly due to the busy convention schedule and also to the fact that some black Republicans choose not to affiliate with the council.

"There are some brothers right here at this convention who said, 'I don't want to be part of this caucus,'" Cary said. They want to be recognized just as Republicans, he said.

But he said black Republicans must recognize they do have special concerns.

"We have to set up the mechanism," said Jim Bowie, an alternate delegate. "I don't worry about them (whites) keeping me out because legally they can't do that. We need as a group to have one objective."

Delta crash blamed on 'misinterpretation'

DALLAS (AP) — The technical staff of the National Transportation Safety Board has blamed last year's crash of a Delta Air Lines jet that killed 137 people on the crew's "misinterpretation" of the dangers of a thunderstorm cell, the Dallas Times Herald reported Saturday.

Although the crew was not explicitly warned about the storm by the airport control tower, the NTSB staff places no blame on the air traffic controllers, saying their main job is the separation of airplanes, not the monitoring of weather.

In a copyright story, the newspaper quoted unnamed sources close to the investigation as saying that the NTSB staff cited as "contributing factors" the crew's failure to abort the landing earlier and inadequate staffing at weather service facilities serving the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

The newspaper said the staff's findings on the Aug. 2 crash at D-FW Airport are outlined in a 200-page report given last week to the safety agency's board members.

NTSB Board spokesman Bill Bush confirmed the report had been submitted, but declined comment on the details, the newspaper said.

The report is the result of almost 11 months of technical scrutiny of the crash of the Delta L-1011 jumbo jet as it approached the airport during a thunderstorm.

In the next few weeks, the four members of the safety board can raise questions or request changes in the report before making a final decision on the accident's probable cause at a public meeting scheduled for July 15.

The staff's report "represents a compilation of all the evidence and an analysis of all the facts. It may become the board's final report, but it is still susceptible to change," Bush said.

Dick Stone, a Delta captain and member of the National Accident Investigation Board of the Air Line Pilots Association, said he was unaware of the NTSB staff's conclusions.

But he said he knew that some NTSB experts have been critical of the crew's actions.

"Many people believe that the pilot always has the last chance of saving the airplane," Stone said.

He said the Delta crew's judgment was hampered by the lack of adequate weather warning.

The staff citing of inadequate weather monitoring was based on the fact that only two of four radar facilities serving D-FW were being monitored continuously, because the observers were on dinner breaks.

Gifford F. "Skip" Ely Jr., meterologist in charge of three of four weather stations, said he hadn't seen a copy of the report and couldn't comment.

He said staffing was the result of budget priorities by the National Weather Service in Washington.

Doug Twinam, a Delta captain and the airline's chief investigator for the accident, said the company is likely to ask for reconsideration of the findings if the Delta crew is blamed.

State presents murderer's 'self-portrait' to jury

FORT WORTH (AP) — A Tarrant County jury considering whether to sentence convicted murderer Juan Soria to life in prison or death got a graphic idea Saturday of how Soria sees himself, prosecutors said.

As the state presented its evidence during the trial's punishment phase, the jury was shown what prosecutors said was a self-portrait seized from Soria's jail cell two months ago.

The portrait, drawn in colored pencils, shows a bare-chested, mean-looking Hispanic male in chains, standing in a jail cell and holding a big knife dripping with blood.

The figure has a tatoo on its left arm with the initials "J.S." It is wearing what looks like a professional wrestler's trophy belt bearing the letters "T.D.C.," an acronym for the Texas Department of Corrections.

Jurors deliberated 87 minutes Friday before finding the Fort Worth teen-ager guilty of fatally stabbing 17-year-old Allen Bolden of nearby Arlington.

Bolden was abducted June 28 from his job as a lifeguard at the Fort Worth Boys Club. His body was found in a ravine July 1.

Prosecutors concluded their case Saturday in the trial's punishment phase, and defense attorneys John Beatty and J.R. Molina, are to begin presenting their case Monday before state District Judge Joe Drago.

Soria confessed to the killing in July, saying he and his friends wanted to steal Bolden's 1985 Chevrolet Camaro and sell it for $5,000. Soria's lawyers portrayed him as a new Fort Worth resident who got in with the wrong crowd.

"He was looking for friends and unfortunately, it was his selection of friends that led to this tragedy," Beatty said, urging jurors to "bear the group dynamics in mind."

But prosecutor Alan Levy countered, "This isn't the 'Little Rascals' or 'Our Gang' or anything like that...You can't say, 'Gee, I've just got bad associates.'"

After the guilty verdict was read, Ed Bolden, the victim's father, said, "I think it was apparent from the start that the guilty verdict was (called for) I'm at this point too stunned to say much more about it."

Soria's confession said Bolden was leaving the boys club when Soria and Mike Lagunas, 18, of Fort Worth asked for a ride. Soria also said he and Lagunas planned Bolden's killing for two weeks.

Woman recovers despite grim prognosis

BEDFORD (AP) — Theresa Moody has done something no one ever expected she would do. She went home from Hurst-Euless-Bedford Hospital.

Mrs. Moody, 31, was preparing to go on a vacation with her family March 16 when her right side suddenly went numb.

"She said, 'We better go to the hospital,' " said John Moody, her husband.

She was rushed to Harris Hospital in Fort Worth where she slipped into unconsciousness. Doctors said she had suffered a cerebral aneurism and probably would not live through the night.

Nurse Glenda Gschnell, a nurse who treated her, said a scan revealed blood leaking into the cranial cavity and that brain matter had shifted to one side.

"I've worked with patients like her before," she recalled. "Knowing her symptoms, the seizures and being unresponsive, it is usually a poor prognosis."

Dora Moody, her mother-in-law, asked doctors what her son should tell Jason, his 10-year-old son.

"They said, 'Tell him his mother is dying and there is nothing we can do,' " she said.

John Moody began making arrangements. He volunteered her body for the organ donor program and began planning the funeral. A priest administered the last rites.

Theresa Moody remained unconscious in the hospital's intensive care unit for 28 days. Then she opened her eyes.

Dora Moody said her daughter-in-law looked around the room, but no one could tell whether she was aware of what was happening around her.

Theresa Moody says the first thing she remembers upon gaining consciousness was seeing her son and husband.

"I knew who they were, but it didn't register," she said.

She was then moved from intensive care to the hospital's physical rehabilitation unit.

"I cried for a month, and then I worried for another month," her husband recalled.

On Friday, nurses, family members and friends held a going home party for Mrs. Moody. She was wheeled in a wheelchair into the dining room that had been decorated with balloons and brightly colored streamers.

It was a heartfelt moment and Theresa Moody began weeping.

"You didn't keep your promise," a nurse said. She had promised not to cry.

"This is the day we've been waiting for," Dora Moody said.

Although Mrs. Moody will have to return to the hospital three times a week for therapy, her departure thrilled family members and nurses.

"They say she's the miracle of Bedford," her husband said. "We're proud of her. She's a pretty special woman."

STATE IN BRIEF

Respected jurist retires

HOUSTON (AP) — U.S. District Judge Carl Bue, one of Houston's most respected jurists who ordered sweeping jail reforms in Harris County and the halt of construction of a large lake on the Trinity River, will retire in September 1987.

Bue, 64, says he wants to retire after nearly 16 years on the bench to pursue a new career, although he has no definite plans yet.

Nominated during President Richard Nixon's law-and-order days, Bue has lived up to a reputation as a conservative by handing out stiff prison sentences.

On Friday, for example, he sentenced to 20 years in prison a 70-year-old, crippled Colombian who told the judge he had transported a suitcase of cocaine to feed his starving grandchildren.

At the same time, he ruled in favor of the American Civil Liberties Union in 1975 with an order for sweeping jail reforms after the ACLU brought suit on behalf of six prisoners three years earlier.

Classics drive into town

AMARILLO (AP) — A wave of classic cars, all older than 1937 models, drove into town on time Saturday night after a 348-mile drive from Albuquerque, N.M.

But the days of blistering heat and late-night auto repairs were beginning to take their toll on Amarillo's six happy but tired drivers and navigators concluding the fourth day of the cross-country Great American Race.

Don Deckard and navigator Tom Deckard, driving a 1932 Ford V-8 Sedan, were the first competitors to pull into the Sheraton Hotel parking lot on West Interstate 40.

Don Deckard, tired after a the long day's drive, said the 92 degree Amarillo heat was a relief after the past two days.

"My glasses got so hot out in that desert it burned the back of my ears," he said.

The Great American Race, a timed endurance test for vintage cars, started from Disneyland Wednesday with 65,000 people cheering the racers and ends in New York.

Parker seeks jury reforms

AUSTIN (AP) — State Sen. Carl Parker, who maintains he has been victimized by the present grand jury system, says he will propose changes in the grand jury system to the 1987 Legislature.

The Port Arthur Democrat testified Friday before a House subcommittee examining grand jury procedures.

Parker was indicted in 1984 and 1985 on charges that included perjury, distribution of cocaine and promotion of obscenity and prostitution. Those indictments eventually were dismissed and a third grand jury refused to indict him again.

Parker told the subcommittee he believes there are areas of grand jury abuse that can be corrected through procedural changes. But many of those proposed changes were killed during the 1985 legislative session.

Sixty-one people put to death since ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sixty men and one woman have been electrocuted, asphyxiated, injected with poison or shot for their crimes since the Supreme Court began a new chapter in the history of capital punishment 10 years ago this week.

More than 1,700 death row residents are awaiting similar fates.

On July 2, 1976, the high court ruled that death can be a constitutional punishment for convicted murderers even though four years earlier it had struck down as "arbitrary and capricious" the death penalty as then administered by the states.

In fact, no prison inmate had been executed in the United States since 1967.

But legislatures in most states went to work in 1972 writing new death penalty laws, and three — those of Florida, Georgia and Texas — were upheld two days before America celebrated its 200th birthday.

Gary Gilmore, the killer of a motel clerk, was the first to die after the court's ruling.

He sat calmly before a Utah firing squad on Jan. 17, 1977, after accelerating his fate by choosing not to carry out what surely would have been a prolonged appeal process.

John Spenkelink, a drifter convicted of killing a traveling companion in Florida, was the first man put to death after exhausting every appeal available to him.

The Supreme Court denied his last futile plea 28 minutes before he was pronounced dead in Florida's electric chair May 25, 1979.

Former Attorney General Ramsey Clark had been one of a team of lawyers who attempted to save Spenkelink's life.

On the day of the execution, Clark grieved for the man he had never met and told reporters, "The imperative need for our time is a reverence for life. I would hope America would soon abandon this barbaric practice."

But with opinion polls consistently showing that most Americans favor capital punishment, more than 250 convicted killers continued to be sentenced to death each year.

In the 37 states with death penalty laws, more than 1,700 people crowd death rows.

No more than five prisoners were executed in any year before 1984, but in that year 21 were put to death. Eighteen were executed last year; 11 in the first half of 1986.

The three states whose death penalty laws were upheld in the 1976 test cases have been most efficient in carrying out death sentences. Florida has executed 16, Texas 15, and Georgia seven.

Executions also were carried out in Alabama, Indiana, Louisiana, Mississippi, Nevada, North Carolina, South Carolina, Utah and Virginia.

Jesse de la Rosa, 23, executed in Texas in 1985, was the youngest. Anthony Antone, electrocuted in Florida in 1984, was the oldest. He was 66.

Charles Rumbaugh was 28 when he was killed by a Texas executioner's lethal injection, but was 17 when he murdered an Amarillo jeweler in 1975. He was one of two people since 1976 to die for a crime committed as a minor.

The other, James Roach was executed Jan. 10 at the age of 25 for his part in the 1977 slayings of two Columbia, S.C., teen-agers. Roach was 17 when he confessed to the killings.

The only woman executed was Velma Barfield, who died by lethal injection in North Carolina in 1984.

Capital punishment in the United States was commonplace from the 1930s through the 1960s. In 1935 alone, 199 inmates were put to death.

In the 1950s, 717 executions occurred.

But the pace since 1976 has been slow — frustrating many state officials and the Supreme Court justice President Reagan has chosen to become the nation's 16th chief justice.

Justice William H. Rehnquist, in a 1981 dissenting opinion, blamed the "constant tinkering" of his high court colleagues for making it "virtually impossible" for states to carry out executions.

"When our systems of administering criminal justice cannot provide security to our people in the streets or in their homes, we are rapidly approaching the state of savagery," Rehnquist said after citing numerous grisly murders.

Since then, the Supreme Court slowly but consistently has been making it easier for states to cut through the years of appeals that most often follow any death sentence.

"Every indication points to a sharply increasing rate of executions in the foreseeable future," says Henry Schwarzchild, director of the American Civil Liberties Union's capital punishment project.

"The Supreme Court tried to make the death penalty work. The effort has failed," he says. "It remains a legal, social, human and moral disaster."

Contra aid vote sends U.S. on uncharted path

By R. GREGORY NOKES

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has started the nation down an uncharted path by convincing the Congress to bankroll the Contra war in Nicaragua in disregard of American public opinion and a World Court ruling.

Never before has the nation openly armed a rebel force waging war on a country with which the nation technically is at peace and with which it has diplomatic relations.

There is widespread agreement that the House approval of $100 million in mostly military aid last week signals a major new commitment to the Contras in their five-year-old struggle to oust the Marxist-led Sandinista government.

No one has been willing to predict the eventual cost of the conflict to the American taxpayer. But few think the $100 million now being processed through Congress, plus an additional $300 million for Nicaragua's democratic neighbors, will be the end of it.

The House voted 221-209 on Wednesday night for President Reagan's request for $70 million in direct military aid and $30 million in other aid. The Senate had approved it earlier.

Most lawmakers believe Reagan when he declares there are no plans to send American troops. But critics have argued that the United States is risking a Vietnam-type quagmire that portends tragedy for this country and Central America.

Supporters of the Contra effort say that is fear-mongering. The Contras can restore democracy in Nicaragua by forcing the Sandinistas to the negotiating table after beating them on the battlefield, they say.

The most optimistic scenario is that the Sandinistas will regard the congressional vote for military aid as the beginning of the end, and will negotiate with the Contras now.

Or, in the event the Sandinistas continue to resist, they will be overwhelmed by an uprising within Nicaragua that will make victory easy. Contra leader Alfonso Robelo made that prediction.

The pessimistic scenario voiced by House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., is that the Contras — saddled with a reputation of corruption and a battle record of defeat — can't win and American troops will eventually have to bail them out.

This scenario, heard during the acrimonious House debate, takes it for granted that the Soviet Union and Cuba will give the Sandinistas whatever arms are necessary to match the American effort, leading to a progressive escalation of the conflict.

But after two years of being refused, Reagan convinced a majority in Congress that the risk is worth the effort. Before the vote, he warned that if Congress turns its back on the Contras, "We will have to confront the reality of a Soviet military beachhead inside our defense perimeters — about 500 miles from Mexico."

The administration justifies its assistance to the Contras on the grounds that it is exercising its right of self-defense to deter Sandinista aggression against the democratic countries of Central America. But Reagan's goals go beyond just getting a peace treaty, which the Sandinistas say they will sign.

Reagan now demands that the Sandinistas be replaced by a "real democracy." The administration has decided it cannot tolerate a Marxist-led government in Central America.

"A communist Nicaragua, allied with the Soviet Union is a threat to us all," Reagan said, citing a long list of Soviet armaments and other help provided by Moscow since the Sandinistas took power in the 1979 revolution.

Daniel Ortega, the Nicaraguan president, asked in a television interview Thursday, "Who has given the right to the United States to go around saying what is right and wrong in Central America?"

"If you are going to attack every country that has Soviet armaments, that's a lot of attacking to do," Ortega said.

One factor in the change of heart in the House was the erosion of virtually all support for the Nicaraguan government among lawmakers. There has been widespread condemnation of the suppression of civil rights and the jailing of political opponents.

O'Neill, who orchestrated a defeat of a similar Reagan proposal in March, said later that, combined with other factors it proved impossible for members of Congress to continue resisting the pressures of a popular president.

Yet, Reagan's popularity has not won him much support for his policy among the American people.

The latest Washington Post-ABC News poll, published the day of the vote, showed 62 percent of respondents opposed to military and other aid for the Contras, and only 29 in favor.

In addition, nearly all of the mainline American churches, including the hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church, are on record in opposition.

Reagan has ignored church opposition, and has dismissed the negative public opinion polls as showing that people aren't getting accurate information about the crisis in Central America.

But the large body of opposition to the Contra effort, even if it now unites behind the president and Congress, holds the potential for major problems for the White House if the policy goes sour.

Once before, the nation became embroiled in an unpopular foreign conflict — in Vietnam.

Tax reform bill threatens zealously guarded provision

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal income tax was only eight years old when, in 1921, Congress saw the need for a special incentive for investment — the capital-gains tax.

That tax break has been guarded zealously by lawmakers over the years in the name of boosting the economy. But now it's in trouble. The Senate wants to repeal the individual capital-gains provision, demonstrating the push behind the effort to overhaul the income-tax system.

Senators have concluded that lower tax rates for all individuals — the assurance that an investor will be able to keep a bigger share of any payoff — are an even better incentive for attracting money to risky ventures.

Without the "venture capital" attracted by capital gains, say dissenters, there would be no Federal Express, Genentech or Apple Computer. Why, they ask, would an investor risk money on a new invention when the tax consequences would be the same if the money were deposited in a bank account?

A capital gain is a profit from the sale of stock, real estate or other property owned for more than six months. For individuals, present law exempts 60 percent of gains from tax; the remaining 40 percent is taxed as ordinary income, meaning that someone in the top bracket — 50 percent — would pay tax on capital gains at a rate of 20 percent.

About 7.5 percent of taxpayers profit from the lower capital-gains rates; half the benefit goes to those with incomes over $100,000 a year.

Senators didn't even try to restore the once-sacred capital-gains provision to the Finance Committee bill. Why the turnabout?

To Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., chief author of the tax-overhaul plan, and his backers, the answer is the same as when someone asks why the deduction for Individual Retirement Accounts was being curtailed or the investment tax credit repealed: The apparent appeal of lower tax rates. Investors will give up special breaks if rates are low enough, Packwood concluded.

The centerpiece of the bill, the broadest tax overhaul in at least 34 years — backers say since 1913 — is lower tax rates for individuals. The price for those rates would be losing all or part of some deductions.

About 80 percent of taxpayers would be taxed at a flat rate of 15 percent. The present 50-percent top rate for individuals would be reduced generally to 27 percent, although many upper-income people would pay up to 32.4 percent.

The plan passed by the House differs from the Senate version by allowing a 42-percent exclusion of capital gains, a maximum individual tax rate of 38 percent and a top capital-gains rate of 22 percent.

House dry-docks Navy's home port request

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending June 27, 1986.

KEY HOUSE VOTES

HOUSE DRY-DOCKS NAVY'S HOME PORT REQUEST.

Striking down the first part of the Navy's plan to develop numerous ports for its expanded fleet, the House adopted an amendment to the $8 billion military construction bill by 241-190 June 25, to eliminate $140 million for new naval facilities at Everett, Wash., and Staten Island, N.Y.

The amendment was a setback for the Navy's desire to construct 13 new "strategic home ports" and refurbish its six existing facilities. It also was an economic blow to the localities that stood to gain from the Navy's spending. The Navy's plan, which has been strenuously challenged by members of both parties in both Houses of Congress, is estimated by the Navy eventually to cost $799 million. The Navy's goal is to disperse its fleet, which the Reagan administration hopes to expand to 600 vessels.

The military construction bill subsequently passed the House, and now will be considered in the Senate.

The Navy's plan was criticized during House floor debate as a porkbarrel maneuver to put ports in more congressional districts, thereby giving the Navy more influence in Congress. Supporters of the amendment to delete the home port money also claimed that the new ports would cost more than the estimated $799 million and that, in light of attempts to cut the federal deficit, no money was available for the port project. Moreover, in an age of nuclear weapons and satellite warning systems, the plan "is not necessary. It does not give us survivability," contended Rep. Ronald Dellums, D-Calif.

Opponents of the amendment recalled the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, when the Navy had its forces concentrated in a small area. Rep. E. "Kika" de la Garza, D-Texas, argued, "In a conventional war, forget it. In Florida they have 20 ships in a one-square-mile turnaround basin." The opponents further contended that the home port plan was essential to national security because it put ships closer to global trouble spots in the North Atlantic, North Pacific and Caribbean.

Voting to delete "home port" money from the military construction bill:
None

Voting against:
Reps. Reps. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt; Larry Combest, R-Lubbock; Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio; Richard Armey, R-Denton; Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo.

HOUSE SWITCHES TO SUPPORT PRESIDENT'S REQUEST FOR CONTRA AID.

Two months of intense lobbying by the Reagan administration — including a June 24 televised presidential appeal for support — helped convince House members June 25 to approve $100 million in military and humanitarian aid for Nicaragua's anti-government rebels, known as Contras. The amendment, approved 221-209, also includes $300 million in economic assistance to Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras.

The $100 million in aid, adopted as an amendment to the fiscal 1987 military construction bill, will be made available in three installments: $40 million beginning Sept. 1, 1986; $20 million, Oct. 15; and a final $40 million, Feb. 15, 1987. "Heavy artillery" would not be sent to the Contras until the final installment.

Since late 1983, Congress has provided $65 million in military and humanitarian assistance to the Contras. The approval of $100 million in aid marks a significant change in congressional support for the Contras since March when the House voted down the president's Contra aid request. The Senate, which already has approved the $100 million in Contra aid, will consider the House's action after returning from the July 4 recess.

In order to attract a sufficient number of Democratic and breakaway Republican votes, Republican supporters of Contra aid wove many proposals — the $300 million in aid to other Central American countries, accountability for aid given to the Contras, the installment provisions, and the delay in delivery of heavy artillery until 1987 — into their amendment. The words of Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, formerly an opponent of Contra aid, demonstrated the success of the Republican strategy: "For the first time we are addressing the root cause of instability — poverty and a lack of economic opportunity."

Most opponents of the amendment divided into two camps. Those who simply oppose aid to the Contras and those who would condition it on very active U.S. support for regional peace efforts. House Majority Whip Thomas Foley, D-Wash., expressed the sentiments of both groups: "Many of us do not believe that embarking on a virtually unprecedented action of a proxy war against a government...is a policy consistent with our national interests...If you believe there is a better way...of diplomacy and common action between all of our allies, if you believe that by supporting democratic values instead of attempting to overthrow this government...by force, then I ask you...to vote against the... amendment."

Voting for Nicaraguan Contra aid:
Loeffler, Combest, Armey, Boulter.
Voting against:
Gonzalez.

HOUSE ENDORSES CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET PLAN FOR FISCAL 1987.

Ending months of House-Senate conflict over whether to raise taxes, whether to cut domestic spending and how much to cut defense, the House voted 333-43 June 26 to approve the fiscal 1987 congressional budget plan.

The Senate passed the budget compromise on a voice vote. The measure does not go to the president for his approval and does not have force of law.

The plan sets the limits for spending and taxes to be included in appropriations and other bills that Congress must now pass and the president sign. The plan anticipates spending of just under $1 trillion, revenues of $852.4 billion, and a deficit of $142.6 billion. Congress cut the president's request for new spending for defense by $28 billion, and provided a $4.8 billion contingency fund for additional defense and domestic spending if President Reagan proposes tax increases or spending cuts equal to that amount.

Congressional budget experts admit that the deficit may increase because of changing economic conditions and the likely event that Congress will be unable to make cuts in federal spending proposed in the plan. If the deficit increases by more than $10 billion above the $144 billion deficit target in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit-cutting law, then automatic spending cuts will be triggered. Although one method of automatic cuts may be struck down by the Supreme Court, a second method remains in effect.

Members supporting the plan indicated they felt it was important to approve the compromise and move on to appropriations and other measures.

Opponents to the budget compromise represented all points on the political spectrum. Members labeled as conservatives were opposed to the severe curtailment of the president's defense buildup.

Voting for the fiscal 1987 congressional budget plan:
Combest, Boulter
Voting against:
Gonzalez, Armey
Not Voting:
Loeffler

University gets $100 million grant

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Washington University has received a $100 million grant from the Danforth Foundation, believed to be the largest such donation ever given to an American university, school and foundation officials announced.

Income from the grant will pay for capital needs, such as construction or new equipment, as determined by the school's trustees, foundation President Gene L. Schwilck said Friday.

The grant was believed to be the largest ever given by a foundation to an American university and among the largest gifts of any kind to a school, said James W. Davis, a university vice chancellor.

Earlier this month, the university announced it had reached a $300 million fund-raising goal that increased its endowment to $800 million, which officials said is the 10th largest among U.S. universities.

The Danforth Foundation, established in 1927, is a national philanthropic organization.

U.S. editors seek release of South African journalist

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American Society of Newspaper Editors has asked the South African government to release a prominent journalist who was taken at gunpoint from his home in Soweto and is under arrest.

"We deplore this action and urge that he be released immediately," ASNE said in a cable to Louis Nel, deputy minister of information.

Reports from South Africa, written under government censorship, described the action against journalist Zwelakhe Sisulu as an abduction. In its crackdown on black activists, the government has threatened to expel foreign reporters unless they confine their stories to officially released information.

The ASNE described the incident Friday not as an abduction but an arrest.

"The American Society of Newspaper Editors has learned that Zwelakhe Sisulu, editor of the New Nation, has been arrested and is being detained," the group said in a cable signed by Michael G. Gartner, ASNE president and general news executive of Gannett Co.

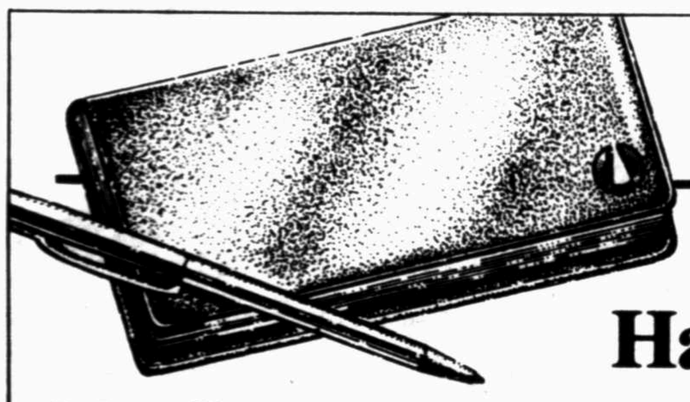

Gartner, reached by telephone in Des Moines, said he received word of the arrest from Howard Simons, curator of the Neiman Foundation, which awards fellowships to American and foreign journalists for study at Harvard University.

An unidentified Columbus, Ohio, man is arrested by Hamilton County law enforcement personnel outside a clinic operated by Planned Parenthood in Cincinnati, Ohio, Saturday.

Anti-abortionists arrested outside Cincinnati clinic

CINCINNATI (AP) — About 100 anti-abortion protesters marched outside an abortion clinic on Saturday, and 21 people were arrested for violating a court order that limited picketing of the center.

Two hours after the demonstration began across the street from the Sanger Center, run by Planned Parenthood of Cincinnati, about two dozen protesters crossed the street, prompting the arrests.

Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Thomas Crush earlier this year limited picketing immediately outside the clinic to no more than five people after Planned Parenthood officials claimed the pickets were harassing patients. Seven people, some of whom were arrested Saturday, were charged with contempt of court earlier in the week for violating Crush's order on June 2.

The clinic was one of two abortion centers firebombed in the city last December. It moved to its current location on the city's north side after the bombing heavily damaged the other building. No arrests have been made.

Activists from Columbus and Dayton were among those demonstrating Saturday.

Clinic officials quietly watched the protest and arrests from their front lawn, videotaping the event. Ann Mitchell, a Planned Parenthood official, said the videotape would be shown to the judge.

NATION in brief

Sheriff denounces suit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The sheriff on Saturday angrily denounced a $2.5 million wrongful-death suit that called the police killing of a Rodeo Drive jewelry store hostage amateurish and illegal.

Los Angeles County Sheriff Sherman Block said he was upset that the claim filed by relatives called the shooting "unjustifiable, unreasonable, unfair, unprofessional and amateurish and illegal."

"I think that this is one of the most disgraceful exhibitions that I have been exposed to by a supposedly legitimate attorney," Block said.

The sheriff said, however, he expected the wrongful-death claim for the mistaken shooting of Hugh Skinner, 64, sales manager of the exclusive Van Cleef & Arpels Inc. jewelry store and one of three hostages who died in the siege.

Skinner was shot by a county sheriff's marksman who mistook him for the gunman attempting to escape using his hostages for a shield. Three others, including the alleged gunman, were injured.

Ex-postmaster files suit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Postmaster General Paul N. Carlin, suing to get his old job back, alleges his successor was recruited by the president of a Dallas area firm that is competing for a $250 million postal contract.

A federal judge on Monday will listen to Carlin's argument that he ought to be reinstated because he was fired by an ill-informed board at an illegal meeting.

In papers filed with the court Friday afternoon, Carlin's lawyers charged that Postmaster General Albert V. Casey was contacted by William Moore, president of Recognition Equipment Inc. of Irving, Texas, to see if he might be interested in becoming postmaster.

"Finding him receptive," the memorandum states, Moore recommended to executive recruiter William A. Spartin that Casey become the next postmaster general. Casey was hired Jan. 6, the day Carlin was fired.

Fiery crash kills eight

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) — Two cars and a van pulling a boat collided in a fiery crash, killing eight people, seven from the same family, officials said Saturday.

Police believe the cars collided and the van crashed into them on a state highway near Hermosa late Friday, about 20 miles south of Rapid City, said David Hodgson, a paramedic acting as Pennington County deputy coroner.

The seven related victims, from Rapid City, were all in one car, while one person from out of state died in the second car, he said.

Nicaragua responds to challenge from U.S.

By REID G. MILLER

An Analysis

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — In a now familiar pattern, Nicaragua's leaders are countering new pressure on their leftist government with increasingly repressive measures.

Nicaragua's leaders responded swiftly and harshly to approval by the U.S. House of Representatives last week of President Reagan's request for $100 million in military and other aid to anti-Sandinista rebels known as Contras.

Within 24 hours of the House vote, the leaders announced a new crackdown on internal dissent and closed the country's only opposition newspaper, La Prensa.

"War will be met by war," said President Daniel Ortega.

Some analysts compared the latest events to a poker game with each side raising the stakes.

"If anyone thought the Sandinistas would simply fold their hand in the face of a $100 million bet, they were deluding themselves," said a Western diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Ortega and the eight other commandantes who rule Nicaragua targeted opposition political parties, conservative businessmen and the hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church. Although far from united, those groups form the last remaining vestige of open, organized dissent in this country of about 3.5 million people.

"If President Reagan has so much love for the press and some political groups, or of groups like COSEP, some cardinal or some bishop, he should stop the war," Ortega told a cheering crowd of about 20,000 supporters in Managua Friday night.

COSEP is the Superior Council of Private Enterprise, an organization of business people largely opposed to what they see as the drift to the left of the Sandinista government.

While he didn't mention them by name, Ortega also clearly referred to Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo and Bishop Pablo Antonio Vega, both of whom have been among the Sandinistas' most severe critics.

"Those who are against the people and in favor of Reagan have the option of going to Miami," Ortega said. "There will be no more tolerance."

In announcing the new crackdown on dissent, the Sandinista leadership did not spell out the steps it intends to take.

Opponents, however, feared the worst.

Ortega announced the crackdown Thursday night, a day after the House vote. Friday morning, the government newspaper Barricada elaborated on that announcement in what was described as a "Manifesto of the National Directorate of the FSLN," the initials of the governing Sandinista National Liberation Front.

"This new situation demands the strict and severe application of the state of emergency," the manifesto said, adding that in the past the emergency decree had been "applied at times with excessive flexibility."

The state of emergency was first announced in March 1982, shortly after the Contras staged their first major raids into northern Nicaragua from bases just across the Honduran border.

Although the 1982 emergency decree never was suspended, a new state of emergency was announced last November. At that time, the Sandinistas said the law was aimed at fighting Contra collaborators in the countryside and what the government claimed was an attempt by rebels to form urban terrorist cells.

Although the Sandinistas rounded up and imprisoned dozens of people alleged to be collaborators and urban guerrillas, many observers thought the harsh steps were actually aimed at the Catholic Church hierarchy.

Obando y Bravo was touring the country at the time, drawing large crowds and criticizing the Sandinistas at every stop. The government retaliated by closing the church's broadcasting station, expelling a number of foreign priests and drafting into the army dozens of Catholic seminarians.

Then as now, the emergency law prohibited public assembly, free speech and the right to strike. Under it, an individual can be arrested and held indefinitely without court order.

Analysts are uncertain how the latest crackdown will unfold.

Probe into inmates' deaths may lead to Peru's military

LIMA, Peru (AP) — A government spokesman said Saturday the investigation into the killings of more than 100 inmates after they surrendered during a prison uprising could reach into military ranks.

"Of course there were military commanders in the operation," Victor Tirado, President Alan Garcia's spokesman, said.

He referred to the assault by paramilitary police of the Republican Guard at the Lurigancho prison on June 19, the day after rioting inmates seized control of that prison and two others in the Lima area. Virtually all of the inmates were convicted of belonging to the Maoist Shining Path guerrilla movement.

Officials have said 250 prisoners were killed in the police attacks.

Justice Minister Luis Gonzales Posada said Friday 100 members of the Republican Guard have been jailed on suspicion of killing inmates who had surrendered.

"My conviction is to ensure that Peru, which cannot bring back to life the inmates who surrendered, regardless of how demented or criminal they were, will not let this crime be covered up," Gonzales said.

Garcia, during a tour of the Lurigancho prison Friday, told reporters police had killed at least 100 prisoners by shooting them in the head after ordering them to lie down.

The president said the Republican Guard, one of Peru's three police forces, was operationally responsible for killing the inmates.

But the Joint Military Command was put in charge of retaking the prisons, and communiques from the command during the retaking of the prisons said "security forces" had recaptured Lurigancho and left the impression that army troops also participated.

Garcia said Friday, "Responsibilities will be established where they should be established, according to the investigation."

Tirado said, however, that the overall responsibility for the assaults was in the hands of the military and military officers might also be held responsible for the deaths of the prisoners who surrendered.

He was asked about rumors of a coup and a meeting late Friday of the army's top commanders.

He said he did not know the purpose of the meeting, but added "There is nothing" to the coup rumors. "The government has no reason to be worried."

Garcia, during his visit to Lurigancho, where 124 inmates were killed, said, "All those responsible will go or I will go. Those responsible will not be able to hide inside the barracks of any institution." He added that justice would be done "despite the risks or consequences."

Foreign observers said Garcia's comments raised the possibility of a confrontation with Peru's generals, who ruled this Andean nation from 1968 to 1980.

Garcia, the leader of the Aprista party, took office last July after winning in the April election.

Can Mexico win new loans from international banks?

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico is engaged in a high-stakes gamble: it wants billions of dollars in new loans from the international financial community on its own terms.

Financial officials, holding critical negotiations in Washington on a new financial aid package, are pushing for additional loans to help revive the economy.

But they want foreign bankers to agree to concessions on interest rates and other charges that would enable them to reduce current payments on the $97.6 billion foreign debt, the second highest in the developing world after Brazil.

Bankers have indicated a reluctance to reduce the charges on loans made years ago, especially since some feel Mexico could have worked harder to improve its economic condition.

One U.S. banker, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said there is "no sympathy at all" among bankers for giving better loan terms to Mexico.

But he added, "The banking community feels it's going to be told what to do by the Fed (the Federal Reserve) and the Treasury Department."

Mexico's treasury secretary, Gustavo Petricioli, flew to Washington last week to hold debt discussions with Treasury Secretary James Baker, Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker, and Jacques de Larosiere, managing director of the International Monetary Fund.

No word on the talks has emerged. The government news agency Notimex reported that Petricioli returned to Mexico City Saturday afternoon, but it gave no other details.

On Monday, Mexico is due to pay about $1.5 billion in interest and principal to foreign banks and international lending organizations.

Mexican officials have indicated an unwillingness to draw down their foreign reserves to make the hefty payment, and would like an adjustment in that tab.

Petricioli has refused to disclose the size of Mexico's foreign reserves. But analysts say they have slipped to about $5 billion, largely because the worldwide collapse of oil prices has cost Mexico billions of dollars.

Before he left for Washington, Petricioli said Mexico's choices included temporarily suspending the payments due Monday; making the payments in the Mexican currency, the peso, or setting aside in Mexico the dollars owed bankers instead of sending them outside the country.

South African Parliament ends reformist session

An Analysis

By JAMES F. SMITH

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — At a time when South Africa's image abroad has never been as tarnished, Parliament has just ended its most reformist session ever, adopting changes that improve prospects for millions of blacks.

The repeal of the hated "pass laws," in particular, dramatically eases the restraints on freedom of movement for the black majority.

But the substantial legal changes have been overshadowed by the daily black violence and protests and the harsh state response, culminating in a national state of emergency June 12 and the detention of thousands of activists.

Amid the turmoil, the government of President P.W. Botha also moved ahead on more than a dozen reform initiatives, from minor ones like allowing Indians to live in the Orange Free State to major issues such as citizenship.

The Rev. Beyers Naude, a white Afrikaner cleric who is among the government's most outspoken foes, surprised some people recently by saying, "these reforms should not be seen as purely cosmetic."

Naude, who served a seven-year banning order for anti-apartheid work, said Botha "has displayed, from the point of view of the white constituency, remarkable courage to tackle these issues."

That Naude gave the government such unprecedented praise underlined the scope of the reforms approved in the six-month session of Parliament that recessed last Wednesday. But Naude also acknowledged Botha's dilemma:

"The tragedy of these reforms is that they are seen by the majority of the people, and especially by blacks, as too little, too slow and therefore too late, whereas for many whites they are regarded as too radically revolutionary.

"Thus we find ourselves in a situation where two polarized communities are diametrically opposed in their goals...What hope is there of reconciliation in such a situation?" he asked.

In declaring the state of emergency, Botha said he was well aware that it would provoke a worldwide outcry. In essence, he said South Africa no longer cared. Overseas critics dismissed every major change "as nothing," he said, and South Africa would not try to placate world opinion if it meant surrendering to a "revolutionary onslaught."

But Botha stressed the crackdown did not mean the government was forsaking reform. Rather, he said, restoring law and order was a crucial step toward creating a climate where reform could proceed.

A legion of government foes decries that logic, arguing that mass roundups of activists remove from the stage exactly the people with whom the government must negotiate change. And they emphasize that the changes stop far short of the central demand of black political rights.

Skeptics have stressed that few of the reforms are free of qualifications or accompanying legislation that imposes other restrictions. Bishop Desmond Tutu, the Nobel Peace laureate, warned of "the sting in the tail" in the reform legislation.

On pass laws, for example, the government has said it would ensure "positive urbanization" by banning illegal squatting. But with a shortage of housing, blacks will not be allowed to freely move to cities because of a lack of approved housing.

Such complaints reflect rising expectations among blacks who are less and less satisfied by gradual reform, and showing their strength through general strikes and other protests, even during the emergency.

A conflict in the final days of the session also played into the hands of those who dismiss the three-chamber Parliament, created in 1984, as a ploy to mask white control behind an image of multi-racial rule.

The white chamber approved two tough security bills that would empower the police minister to declare emergency zones, but the bills were rejected by the chambers for Indians and mixed-race people. Then the white-dominated President's Council approved the bills anyway and they became law.

Botha also announced plans for a National Council, to include blacks, to advise on legislation and help plan a new constitution giving blacks a permanent role in central government. But there are doubts whether credible black leaders will take part.

Other apartheid laws remain intact, including the Population Registration Act requiring all South Africans to be registered by race at birth. That determines where they can live, go to school, receive hospital treatment and even where they can be buried.

But Botha has hinted that even some fundamental laws now are negotiable. The governing National Party, which built structures of apartheid since winning power in 1948, plans a special congress in Durban in August to debate more reforms.

Parliament, which normally adjourns for the year in June, will reconvene in late August for more reform debate.

Some speculate the congress may consider changes in the Group Areas Act that segregates residential neighborhoods, long a cornerstone of white privilege. One option would be allowing municipalities to decide on integration, allowing liberal areas to be open for integration and rural districts to stay all-white.

Rejection of divorce undermines Irish accord

By MARCUS ELIASON

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Ireland's massive rejection of legalized divorce has dealt Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald a severe blow at a bad political moment and has undermined the Irish case for union with British-ruled Northern Ireland.

The anti-divorce vote of more than 3-2 in Thursday's referendum dramatized the split between Dublin, where slightly more than 50 percent of voters favored divorce, and the rural remainder of Ireland, where only a few districts mustered more than 30 percent in favor of the constitutional amendment.

It also showed little sympathy in the Irish Republic for the argument by Northern Ireland's Protestant community that it can never feel at home in a republic dominated by Roman Catholic dogma.

The referendum's message was clear: Ireland is Catholic and will not alter its convictions to suit Northern Ireland.

"Ireland has had to choose. The chips were down yesterday and they have chosen," said Alice Glenn, a legislator who opposed divorce. "They have chosen to uphold the traditional values that were handed down to us at great cost."

Values, tradition, the past — these still weigh heavily in Ireland. Eight centuries of British domination and Protestant ascendancy have not been forgotten in a mere 65 years of Gaelic, Catholic independence.

Government officials seemed at a loss to explain what went wrong, but did not hide their dismay. FitzGerald already is in political trouble because of his high-tax, high-unemployment austerity policies. Now he has failed to deliver one of the major reforms for which he was elected by his young, urban and liberal constituency.

Charles Haughey, the opposition leader and former prime minister, said the government had proved itself "totally out of touch."

Two Irish housewives turn thumbs down on divorce in Dublin Friday following a referendum on divorce in Ireland.

Only nine weeks earlier, every poll had indicated a solid majority favored legalizing divorce. Moreover, the welcome given to last November's Anglo-Irish accord, a compromise giving Dublin a limited role in Northern Ireland's affairs, showed the public to be in a conciliatory mood. When Haughey attacked the accord as a sellout, he was the one accused of being "out of touch."

Supporters of legalizing divorce said politicians had failed to campaign vigorously for the amendment because they feared alienating conservative voters. They also accused the anti-divorce campaigners of telling lies to scare voters.

FitzGerald insisted that the constitutional amendment he was offering was extremely restrictive compared with divorce laws in other countries, but the Anti-Divorce Campaign claimed it amounted to no-fault divorce on demand.

The prime minister also argued that women would benefit from the amendment, but the Anti-Divorce Campaign claimed women would lose pension and inheritance rights.

FitzGerald pleaded for compassion toward the estimated 70,000 Irish trapped in broken marriages. The Anti-Divorce Campaign replied that 3.5 million Irish could not be expected to change their value system to accommodate such a tiny minority.

An Analysis

Above all this heated debate towered the Irish Catholic bishops, restrained but leaving no doubt where they stood.

Divorce, they said, simply was not permissible. They welcomed the referendum, promised not to interfere and insisted their only role was to teach. And so they taught from the pulpits, especially on the last Sunday before the referendum, that marriage lasts "until death do us part."

In a country that is 97 percent Catholic with 87 percent Sunday church attendance, Catholic dogma wields much more influence than a paid television commercial by the prime minister.

In the final week before voting, FitzGerald stressed the implications for Northern Ireland.

If Ireland could not accommodate its own minority of unhappily married people, he said, how could it pretend to care about the rights of Northern Ireland's 900,000 Protestants who would become a minority if the province were absorbed into the Republic?

John Cushnahan, a Belfast Catholic who leads the Alliance, a mixed Protestant-Catholic party, says the referendum results have "very serious long-term implications" for Northern Ireland.

"A very big steel wall has been erected on the southern side of the border which will be a fundamental barrier to closer cooperation between both parts of this island," he said on Irish television.

Cushnahan said those most dismayed were the moderate Protestants who were trying to increase ties between the province and the Republic. "They feel they've been very seriously kicked in the teeth."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Art robbers thwarted

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — An armed gang handcuffed the staff of Dublin's modern art gallery Saturday morning but an alarm went off and the crooks fled empty-handed, police said.

The gallery's collection, valued at about $15 million, includes a Renoir and a Monet.

Police said at least five men, armed with two sawed-off shotguns, two hammers and a baseball bat, wore balaclava helmets to hide their faces and communicated through walkie-talkies as they moved through the Municipal Gallery of Modern Art.

The men entered about 9:30 a.m., just after the gallery opened, and seemed to know what paintings they wanted, police said.

When they touched one painting, an alarm went off and the bandits threatened to kill the head attendant unless he turned it off.

"Then the gang panicked and made off empty-handed," the spokesman said.

Cabinet may be shuffled

ROME (AP) — Italian politicians said Saturday that the resignation of Premier Bettino Craxi has created such uncertainty that a major Cabinet shuffle may be the only solution to avoid early elections.

Craxi, a Socialist, led Italy's longest-surviving government since World War II. He resigned on Friday night, one day after his five-party coalition lost a secret vote in Parliament.

A simmering dispute between Craxi's Socialists and the dominant Christian Democrats over which party should hold the premiership led to the resignation.

President Francesco Cossiga asked Craxi to stay on as caretaker until a new government is formed. Cossiga said he will begin consultations with political leaders on Monday.

Towering tilt recorded

PISA, Italy (AP) — The Leaning Tower of Pisa tilted nearly 2 millimeters (.08 inches) in the past year, one of the biggest increases recorded, a professor said Saturday.

"The change was unexpected," said Geri Gero, a professor of engineering at the University of Pisa.

During the past 68 years, the tilt increased an average of a little more than 1 millimeter (.04 inches) a year, but it slowed in recent years, said Gero.

The marble tower started to tilt immediately after it was built in 1173 because the ground shifted underneath. It leans 16.8 feet off the perpendicular.

U.S. base scene of protests

SUBIC NAVAL BASE, Philippines (AP) — About 400 anti-nuclear protesters demonstrated in front of this American military base Saturday, chanting "We want the Americans out, out, out!"

The protesters chanted slogans in English as Filipino and American employees filed past the base's main gate. Demonstrators released hundreds of balloons

TORNADO or THUNDERSTORM

WATCH
(Conditions are right for a tornado or severe thunderstorm to form.)

WARNING
(A tornado or severe thunderstorm already is in existence.)

In West Texas, sunny, hot days and fair nights north, and partly cloudy and hot elsewhere through Monday. Widely scattered late afternoon and nighttime thunderstorms mainly southwest and south. Lows Sunday night ranging from mid- to upper 60s Panhandle and southwest mountains to mid-70s south.

In North Texas, a slight chance of thunderstorms in East Texas Sunday, otherwise fair with hot afternoons through Monday. Overnight lows in the 70s. Afternoon highs low 90s northeast to near 100 northwest.

In South Texas, partly cloudy and quite warm through Monday with widely scattered showers and thunderstorms southeast Texas. Lows Sunday night low 80s immediate coast and mostly mid-70s elsewhere. Highs Sunday and Monday

Hot weather to continue

From Staff and Wire Reports

Hot weather is expected to continue through today and Monday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The high today is expected to reach into the upper 90s with winds from the south at 10-20 mph. There is a less than 20 percent chance of afternoon thundershowers in the forecast.

Tonight's low should be in the mid 70s with a high Monday expected to reach the upper 90s. It will be partly cloudy through Monday with a 20 percent chance of late afternoon and evening thundershowers.

On this day in history, it soared to a record 105 in 1980 and dipped to 57 for a record low in 1965.

STATE

Strong thunderstorms developed over Northeast Texas and along the Red River Saturday, prompting the National Weather Service to issue a severe thunderstorm warning and flash flood watch.

Meanwhile, other showers and thunderstorms hit the Big Bend area. A southerly wind continued to pump hot moist air into the state, which had mostly fair skies elsewhere.

The wind was generally from the south or southwest at 10 miles an hour. Gusty winds blew in the area of thunderstorms and a light and variable wind hit far West Texas.

NATION

Severe thunderstorms developed Saturday over the Midwest, causing scattered wind damage, and the remnants of Hurricane Bonnie poured more heavy rain over Arkansas.

A severe thunderstorm watch was issued for southeastern Iowa, parts of east-central and northeastern Missouri, and sections of central and southern Illinois.

A cluster of strong thunderstorms developed early Saturday over southeastern South Dakota and southwestern Minnesota along a stationary frontal system, and then moved across northern and eastern Iowa.

Iowa got the brunt of the storms with hail as big as golfballs at both Fenton and Chillicothe, and high wind blew over a bread truck near the Red Rock dam, damaged trees in Fenton and downed power lines in Albia. Large hail also was reported at Algona and the Red Rock dam.

Strong thunderstorms also developed over eastern North Carolina and a tornado was reported near Gatesville.

Heavy rain fell over parts of southern Arkansas, and meteorologists warned of the possibility of flooding because the ground already was saturated by rain over the previous 24 hours.

Bonham Elementary School teacher Karen Rogers, the Midland Chamber of Commerce's Teacher of the Month, says consistency is the key to being successful in the classroom.

Teacher of month 'strives to achieve' in her profession

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Bonham Elementary School teacher Karen Rogers will testify that a great misconception on the part of the public is the belief that teachers work only nine months out of the year.

For this fourth grade language arts teacher and many others, teaching is a year-long process that not only includes classroom instruction, but developing additional skills, sharing new techniques with colleagues and evaluating their own performance.

"I believe I'm a competent teacher," said Ms. Rogers, the Midland Chamber of Commerce's Teacher of the Month. "I believe in my profession and I strive to achieve in my profession, but I'm constantly re-evaluating and growing. There's lots of room for improvement."

Ms. Rogers, entering her 13th year with Midland public schools, said the standards she sets in her classroom determine whether she will be successful year after year.

Her students learn to value differences between themselves, learn that "we all don't have to be alike or dress the same. We're individuals and it's important we realize that," she said.

More importantly, her fourth graders accept themselves for who they are and know that making a mistake is OK.

When her students excell, Ms. Rogers rewards them with tokens. Be it for good behavior or academics, she said, the token program she initiated years ago instills in her students an "I can do attitude."

It it for this reason that Shawna Arnold believes Ms. Rogers epitomizes the outstanding educator.

Ms. Rogers motivated Ms. Arnold's son to excell in areas where he failed in the past and has since become a different child where school is concerned, she said.

Ms. Rogers said she likes to take the time to discover how each child needs to learn and tries to teach to the individual. When that's impossible, there are support programs across the district to help those with special needs.

"There's a lot of extra help on the campuses so the students get individual attention," she said, adding that the programs are "fairly uniform" to meet the need of the entire student population regardless of race or economic status.

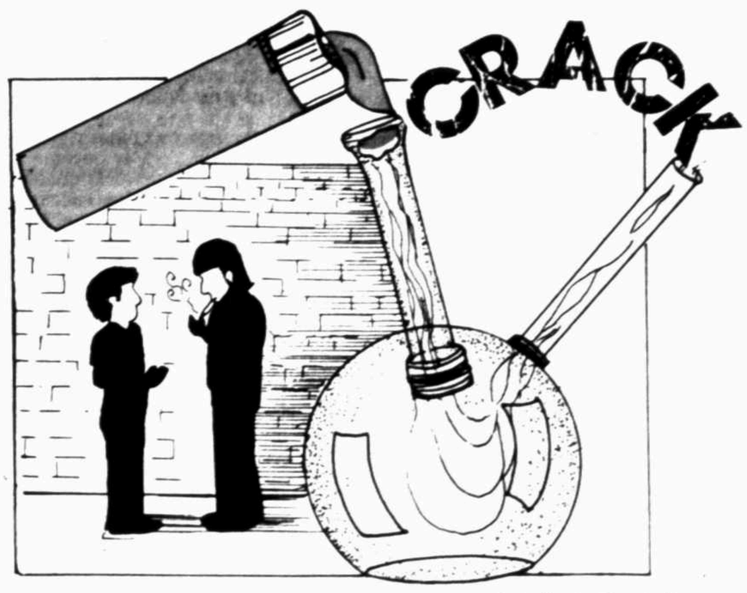

Ms. Rogers equates that consistency with her own succeess in the classroom.

"The goals they (school officials) set for the teachers and the students have always been consistent," she said. "Everybody deserves a pat on the back, not just the teachers."

The Midland Chamber of Commerce is seeking nominations for Teacher of the Month. Interested persons should write the Midland Chamber of Commerce Education Committee, P.O. Box 1890, Midland, Texas, 79702, or call Alison Peeler at 683-3381.

Detective sees 'crack' becoming local problem

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

Suzan Conder/Reporter-Telegram

"The most addictive drug known."

Called "rock" on the west coast and "praque" by the drug elite, crack is a type of "freebase" cocaine, a powdered cocaine chemically converted into a smokeable chunk.

Crack, usually smoked in a water pipe or marijuana cigarette, puts a large dose of cocaine into the blood which sends it directly to the brain less than 10 seconds after inhalation.

It can amplify cocaine's harm to the body. The heart speeds up; blood vessels constrict, limiting flow to the body's organs; blood pressure rises and the electrical impulses controlling the heart may be disrupted, according to research. All can contribute to a heart attack, stroke or seizure.

Narcotics Detective Mike Reed of the Midland Police Department explained why the drug is quickly becoming an epidemic.

Crack enticingly appears cheaper than its relative cocaine. The price of cocaine in Midland is about $120 a gram, he explained, while a quarter gram of crack sells for $15 to $20.

Secondly, the intense feelings of euphoria don't last long so the abuser is forced to smoke more to regain those feelings, he added.

Reed said he sees the problem coming to Midland.

"I've had a couple of different reports already, but not concerning major amounts.

"If a certain drug problem exists in Houston or Dallas, you can bet we'll have one, too. The money is here," Reed said.

Dr. Arnold M. Washton, research director of the 1-800-COCAINE hotline says there are several misconceptions about crack.

The first is that the drug is a teenage problem. Although many users are in their teens, Washton said crack is more of a young adult problem, hitting people in their 20s.

Another is that the drug is primarily used by blacks.

"Crack doesn't discriminate against anyone," Washton said. "It cuts across all social and economic boundaries. It has gotten that image because the dealing of crack is mainly in ghetto areas."

A 21-year-old member of Midland's Palmer Drug Abuse Program (PDAP), reflects on his tortuous six-year addiction to "crack".

"It was better than sex. I lived with my girlfriend for nine months and at any given time, I would have rather talked to my pipe.

"As I would blow the smoke out, I felt like I was taking off on a rocket. It was that intense."

A 22-year-old PDAP member recalls the painful antithesis of that rocket ride referred to as "crashing."

"I remember seeing people in tears crawling around on the floor looking for leftover rocks of crack in between carpet fibers.

"Physically, you feel like you have the flu. Your joints and muscles ache and your nose is runny; your jaws ache from gritting your teeth and your whole body just shakes. I've blacked out, too.

"Sometimes you sit there and you're just so high and paranoid, you begin to feel schizophrenic. One part is saying, 'Smoke more, smoke more!' and the other half is saying, 'I'm too far gone, quit!' "

Lynda Herbold, drug abuse specialist at Clearview, says there haven't been any crack-related patients, yet.

She said this was due to two reasons.

"For one thing, there is more money in our community than others; people here can still afford to do cocaine.

"The teen-agers are out of school for the summer and unsupervised, so teachers aren't available to notice a change in behavior.

"This is sad to say, but it will probably take more time for the users to get addicted. I suspect we'll see some cases by September."

Ms. Herbold said there are certain symptoms indicating possible crack abuse.

There is, for example, sudden mood changes — swings from a docile to hostile attitude. Is the person continuously awake nights until the wee hours of the morning? Has a peer group changed drastically to a "wilder" set of friends? Are valuables or money missing from the house or family members' wallets?

"It is almost impossible to stop people from experimenting with drugs if they are so inclined," Ms. Herbold said.

She added, "We are a chemically dependent society. We take a pill to go to sleep, lose weight or whatever. The commercials say we need to drink beer on occasions when we're having fun.

"And cocaine has been glamorized so much; we see jet setters, athletes and movie stars using it recreationally. It's supposed to look 'cool.' Of course this is subconsciously telling our children 'you can get by with a little.' "

Reed and Ms. Herbold agreed the only way a dent will ever be made in the war against drug abuse is through education beginning at an early age.

Ms. Herbold added that parents should be able to say "no" if they expect their children to. "Education begins at home."

Midland lawyer receives Trimble Service Award

From Staff Reports

Harper Estes has been named the June recipient of the Trimble Service Award.

The award, co-sponsored by Leadership Midland Alumni Association and the Reporter-Telegram, was established in order to recognize citizens who best represent the spirit of volunteerism in Midland.

Estes, who moved to Midland in March of 1980, was nominated by Big Brothers-Big Sisters of Midland.

Because he was raised in a single-parent family following the death of his father when he was 9 years old, Estes had a very personal interest in becoming involved in the Big Brothers program. He was matched with a "little brother" in August 1983.

Their relationship has been important to the youngster, who is now 12 years old, according to the award's judges.

In addition to doing "fun" things like playing football and attending Lee High School football games, Estes has taken a serious interest in his little brother's school work and personal development.

He has helped him with his homework as well as meeting with teachers and counselors.

Because Estes' wife, Dee, has a "Little Sister," their involvement is often a "family affair."

When they moved to Midland following Estes' graduation from Baylor Law School, it took a while to get settled in the community and on the job. The young couple felt that volunteering with BB/BS would be a way for them to meet personal goals for helping others, as well as providing them with something to do.

Estes' dedication and commitment once he became involved led to his selection as a board member.

Linda Macias, executive director of the Midland chapter, said, "There are very few volunteers who continue working with a child as closely as Harper Estes has. He has definitely gone beyond the call of duty of a volunteer."

He currently serves as vice-president of Finance and Fundraising.

Big Brothers/Big Sisters is the only national youth-serving organization based on one-on-one friendships between an adult volunteer and a child from a one-parent home.

More than 100 children in Midland County are still on a waiting list for a Big Brother or Sister. Many have been waiting for more than a year.

Those interested in sharing three to six hours per week with a child can contact the local, 686-0033, for more information.

Estes also serves as secretary-treasurer for the Midland County Young Lawyers' Association, and is a member of the Texas Tech College of Education Development Council and the State Bar District 16 Admissions Committee.

He holds memberships in the State Bar Association, Midland County Bar Association and Texas Young Lawyers.

A Trimble Service Award winner is chosen monthly. At the end of the year, the name of one of the 12 winners will be drawn for a free trip for two, provided by American Airlines.

Texans will always be Texans no matter where they wander

By KATHRYN BAKER
Associated Press Writer

"Texas is a state of mind. Texas is an obsession. Above all, Texas is a nation, in every sense of the word."
— John Steinbeck, "Travels with Charley."

No matter how far from home they wander, Texans feel special. They are Americans, only more so — or perhaps not quite so much.

Writer Pete Gent described them as "a republic of outlaws, loosely allied with the United States."

Centennial Edition wins first place

From Staff Reports

The Midland Reporter-Telegram Centennial Edition, published July 4, 1985, has been awarded first place in the special sections category of the 1986 Texas Press Association Contests. Winners were announced this weekend during the annual TPA summer convention in Kerrville.

Of the edition, the out-of-state judges said, "Excellent use of photos, both color and black and white and good nostalgia pieces and marvelous background information on Midland. This is certainly a preservation piece for Midlanders and interesting information for those who are not. This was a very ambitious and well done project and won in a very competitive category against excellent competition."

The newspaper, as a whole, won second place in the general excellence category with judges commenting, "Quality and breadth of coverage is outstanding. Section fronts excellent with good use of process color photography."

The Beaumont Enterprise, also published by the Hearst Corporation, won first place in general excellence as well as first place in the photography and news writing divisions.

Other awards to the Reporter-Telegram included first place in features, second place in column writing, second place in advertising quality and fourth place in photography.

In the column writing division, in which City Editor Gary Ott's Sunday columns were entered, the judges remarked, "City editors must teach at times by example. Gary Ott's staff can learn from his column. Very nice. The entry about prejudice could be a primer for human relations counselors."

The Reporter-Telegram competed against newspapers with circulations up to 150,000.

GARY OTT

Today's rednecks different from '60s counterparts

It has come to my attention, via a magazine article mailed to me by a reader, that rednecks are being becoming fashionable in America again.

A redneck — as I recall from my childhood days — is a person who:

— wears white socks;

— wears T-shirts that are too small, thus, exposing an unsightly naval;

— drives a dented pickup truck with a "Goatropers need love, too" bumper sticker on the back window;

— can't resist making crude comments when spotting a sissy man sashaying down the street;

— gets misty-eyed when "Okie from Muskogee" plays on the radio;

— and, has political views that rests somewhere to the right of Attila the Hun.

Early on, rednecks were closely identified with the southern region of the United States. South Georgia, in particular, was known for its unusually large population.

Indeed, south Georgia was to rednecks what San Francisco was to the early gay movement — a home, an identity, so to speak.

When a redneck said he was from south Georgia he said so with pride. And, if you didn't like it, well, it figures because you probably didn't vote for George Wallace, either. You likely drink beer out of glass, too.

You are a wimp, in other words.

My earliest memory of rednecks is that they had short hair. Very short. Burrs and flat-tops. They also did not take kindly to men who wore their hair long.

If two or more rednecks were leaning against a pickup truck drinking longneck beer and saw a hippie approaching, they would become playful.

"Hey, Bobby Ray," the first one would say, rubbing his cool beer bottle against his exposed bellybotton. "What do you think it is — a boy or a girl?"

"I don't know," Bobby Ray would reply, spitting tobacco juice. "It sure is friendly, though. It's even giving us one of them peace signs."

"Ain't that nice," the second redneck would say. "I think we ought to give him half of one back."

Then they would slap each other on the back and laugh so hard that Bobby Ray's tobacco juice would start crawling out of the corner of his mouth.

But the point of the magazine article was that while rednecks are making a comeback, they don't necessarily resemble their counterparts from the '60s and '70s.

Some have longish hair, in fact, and while jeans and T-shirts are still popular, they are not mandatory. Indeed, some rednecks today can be seen wearing three-piece suits and Gucci shoes.

Likewise, pickups are optional for the modern-day redneck. Some drive sporty little racing cars and still others opt for the family station wagon.

Merle Haggard remains a hero, but country music is no longer a must. Many of today's rednecks listen to acid rock or even middle-of-the-road pop music.

And, finally, beer is not necessarily the drink of rednecks any longer. Scotch and bourbon are now acceptable alternatives, although a strawberry daiquiri is still frowned upon.

According to the article, about the only thing that has remain constant over the years is politics. Today's redneck is every bit as conservative as his predecessor.

Still, the redneck is a changing breed and, frankly, I miss the old version. I liked it better when a redneck was a redneck and proud of it. You knew what you were getting.

I never considered myself one of them, but in a peculiar sort of way I admired their rather crude form of honesty.

I liked their clothes, their music and even their lifetyle. We were at odds politically, but so what? We still had "Okie from Muskogee" to keep us together.

As Bobby Ray used to say, "I'd rather drink beer with Merle Haggard than Richard Nixon any day."

And, Bobby Ray still swears Nixon was innocent.

TEXANS

When Texans celebrate the Fourth of July, they do it with an air of superiority. After all, they still celebrate their own Independence Day.

Ask Texans what's so different about being from Texas and they'll usually come up with some kind of analogy having to do with being from a foreign land.

Horton Foote, the Oscar-winning screenwriter, says being called a "Texas writer" is like being an "Irish writer." The term is too vague. Being from Southeast Texas, he feels more at home in Mississippi than in West Texas, so vast are the cultural differences across the state.

Actor Randy Quaid said he was expected to ride into Hollywood on a horse, shooting his six-guns. "It's like coming from a different country," he said.

"I have always thought Texans were kind of their own ethnic group," said CBS newsman Bob Schieffer, noting the state basically has its own foreign policy, what with the effect of the peso on the border and OPEC on the oil industry.

"Texans are America's Americans," said Sen. Phil Gramm, who adopted Texas at age 24.

"When you look at our history, you can see people from all over who came to Texas to put down roots in an uninhabitable land," said former Miss Texas and Miss America Phyllis George Brown of Denton. "Whenever someone said, 'You can't do that,' the Texans just smiled and did it anyway."

When President Dwight Eisenhower was asked by reporters why he didn't consider himself a Texan even though he was born in Denison, he replied, "Just because a cat has kittens in the oven, that doesn't make 'em biscuits."

Eisenhower might not have claimed Denison, but another well-known native is happy to, from atop a luxury high-rise overlooking Waikiki Beach in Hawaii.

"Texans do have a special state of mind," said actor John Hillerman, who grew up in Denison and now portrays the proper British gentleman Jonathan Higgins on the CBS television series "Magnum, P.I."

"Texans seem to be raised with a great deal of self-confidence and self-reliance, which holds one in good stead, no matter where you go or what you do," he said.

Hillerman does such a convincing English accent, he receives fan mail from Great Britain praising him for the smashing job he does representing the British Empire on Yank TV.

"They all think I'm English, so obviously, I'm a complete fraud," he said.

When Hillerman left the Air Force and went to New York to become a professional actor, he took diction lessons to get rid of his Texas accent.

"Now, ah kin slip into it jus' lak that," he said in a perfect straight-back-chair-leaned-against-the-feed-store drawl, and in fact has resurrected the accent for roles in westerns, such as the comedy "Blazing Saddles."

When he was stationed at Carswell Air Force Base in Fort Worth, Hillerman did some local theater and Bob Schieffer thinks they might have been in a play together. Schieffer was born in Austin and grew up in Fort Worth.

Now he lives in Washington but travels to New York periodically to do the CBS Evening News.

Like Hillerman, Schieffer wrestled with the Texas accent, but gave up and accepted it.

"I guess that the best thing that happened to me. Maybe that's when I started thinking, well maybe what matters is what you say rather than how you sound saying it. That's something all people in broadcasting have to learn. Some never do," Schieffer said.

"You know, when you're from Texas, people always associate that as part of you. They always talk about, oh, he's from Texas or Texas-born or something. You never hear of anybody being Illinois-born or something like that. It's just one of those parts of the country that has such a strong, identifiable personality, and there are so few places like that left."

"It's almost difficult for me to use the word Texas," said Horton Foote, who won his first Academy Award for the screenplay of "To Kill a Mockingbird" and his second for "Tender Mercies." He was nominated last year for "The Trip to Bountiful."

"I don't know that Texas has affected me so much as this particular area has affected me," said Foote, 70.

He left Wharton 53 years ago, but has come back. He is a third of the way through a nine-picture chronicle of the four generations who lived in Wharton before him.

Willie Lewis Brown, speaker of the California State Assembly, grew up about 250 miles north of Wharton in Mineola. But his world might as well have been a million miles from Foote's.

When a staffer recently loaned him her dog-eared, marked-up copy of a speech, Brown sniffed that it looked like one of the schoolbooks they gave him back in Mineola.

Brown left 35 years ago, but, like Foote, his Texas is still with him.

"Growing up black and poor in Texas gave me one thing — a burning desire to get out of there and to make something of myself," Brown said. "My family deserves credit for instilling values in me that have led to whatever success I have had. Texas simply motivated me to get away."

He wrote an article for Texas Monthly called "Good-Bye to Mineola."

"It is true that whatever training I had in high school, and whatever discipline was instilled in me in Texas, stood me in good stead in my post-Texas world. The one thing I know now about my experience in Mineola was that every black youngster in that town was required to graduate from high school," he wrote.

"You learned that it was really awful to drop out. Period. We didn't have any dropouts in Mineola. It was ingrained in us that there was no such thing as people who were so totally stupid that they could not perform. That quality came from the heart and soul of the black community, and it's still there."

Brown went west. So did Phil Gramm. He was born in Georgia and came to Texas A&M University when he was 24. He said only a handful of the senators who preceded him were born in Texas. Like him, they adopted the state.

"I think the thing I immediately loved about Texas was that Texas was future oriented," Gramm said. "It wasn't who your parents were or who your grandparents were or what they had achieved, it was what you had achieved. Texas is the only place in America where people play down the achievements of their ancestors to make themselves look good.

"Everyone who comes to Texas becomes a Texan and everyone who leaves Texas to go and live somewhere else stays a Texan."

Randy Quaid, a regular last season on "Saturday Night Live," agrees. In Hollywood, they didn't understand he was an urban kid from Houston. His father is an electrician and his mother sells real estate.

"I didn't learn to ride a horse until I came out and started doing westerns," he said.

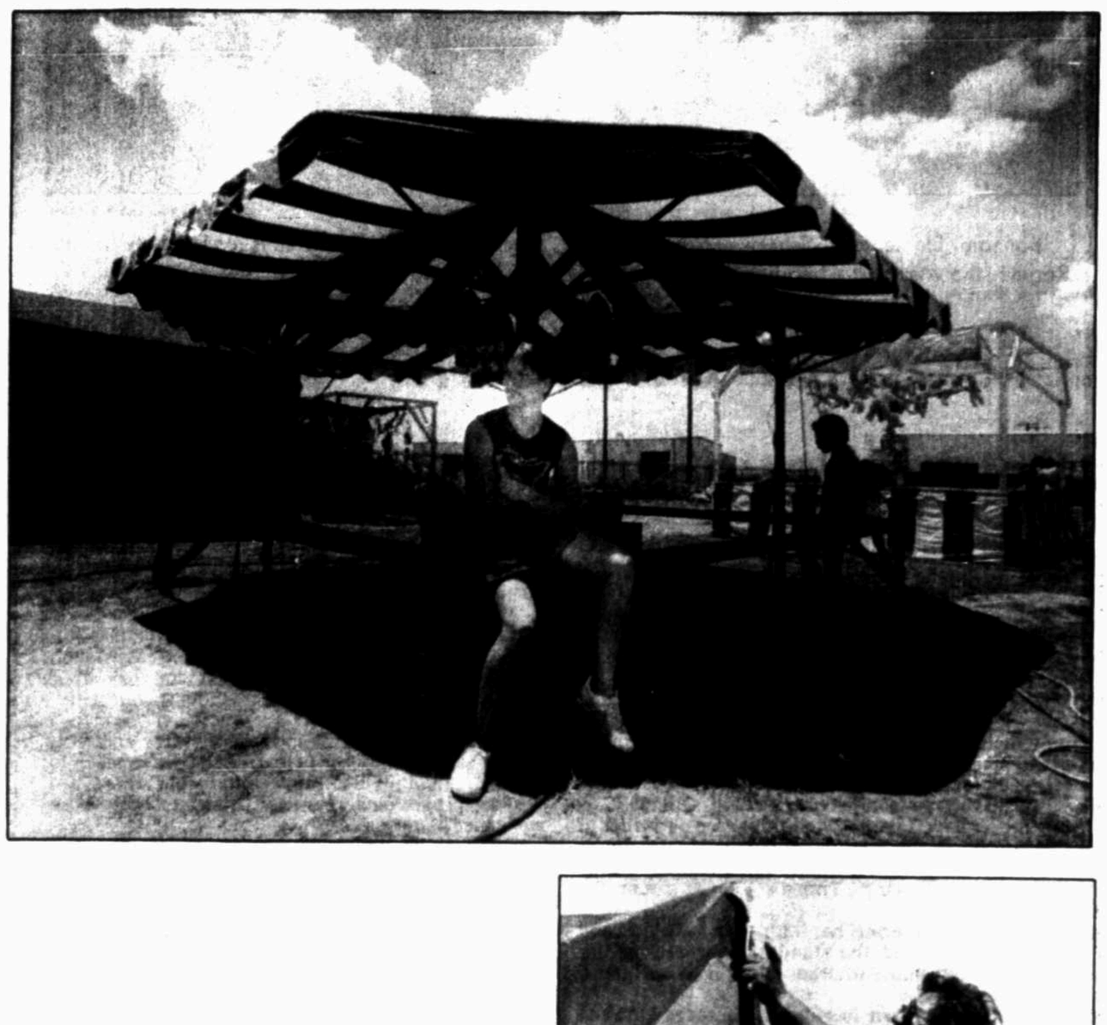

"With Texas, you know, there's so many cliches. It seems like you spend your whole life fighting these cliches," he said.

"I love being from Texas. I don't think I'd want to be from anywhere else. But people do expect certain things of you when you're from Texas. If you don't possess those qualities they feel like you've let 'em down or something."

Quaid got in touch with his Texas roots recently studying up for his latest role, playing Lyndon Johnson in a made-for-television movie that leads up to the assassination of President John F. Kennedy in Dallas and Johnson's swearing-in as the chief executive aboard Air Force One.

Jack Valenti, now president of the Motion Picture Association, was there in real life. He had been in the motorcade when Kennedy was shot. He boarded the plane with Johnson and has lived in Washington ever since.

"The thing is, I still consider myself a Texan. That's my home," Valenti said. "Living here (in Washington) is kind of an interlude. It's a long interlude. It's been 23 years but at some point when I leave, I'm going back home. Going back home to Texas. When I die that's where I want them to put me."

Jesuit priest named bishop of Galveston-Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — A Jesuit priest who was born in Cuba and speaks seven languages, including Vietnamese, becomes the first Hispanic bishop in the Roman Catholic Diocese of Galveston-Houston on Sunday.

"My plans are very simple — to serve the diocese," the Rev. Enrique San Pedro said Saturday.

About 7,000 Catholics are expected to attend his ordination service today. The Most Rev. Joseph A. Fiorenza, bishop of the Houston-based diocese, will ordain the 60-year-old Jesuit as the diocese's new auxiliary bishop.

San Pedro is only the third Jesuit to be named a bishop in the United States. One is an auxiliary in Washington and the other is diocesan bishop in Fairbanks, Alaska.

All 13 Catholic bishops from Texas will take part in the ordination, including Archbishop Patrick Flores of San Antonio, who will give the homily.

An estimated 45 percent of the 600,000 members of the Galveston-Houston diocese are Hispanic.

The selection of San Pedro, who lived in Cuba until 1946, is also a boost for the growing Vietnamese Catholic community in the Houston area.

San Pedro was a professor in South Vietnam from 1965 to 1975 when he was forced to leave that country because of the Communist takeover.

Eleven dispatchers hired for Houston police department

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Police Department has hired 11 more dispatchers to avoid missing emergency calls after The Houston Post reported last month that the department was not answering more than 100 calls a day, the police chief said.

"We are addressing the issue," Police Chief Lee Brown said.

Brown said he has filled 11 of the 27 vacancies on the dispatchers' staff and is paying dispatchers overtime to fill in during peak hours.

Houston police officials also will have installed by January a computer-aided dispatch system designed to speed the handling of calls, he said.

Donald Hollingsworth, a civilian official who oversees the dispatch division, said Friday that the department is losing only about nine calls a day.

He disputed The Houston Post's investigation of police records that showed more than 100 police calls were not answered a day because of understaffing. At worst, the department lost 67 calls a day, he said.

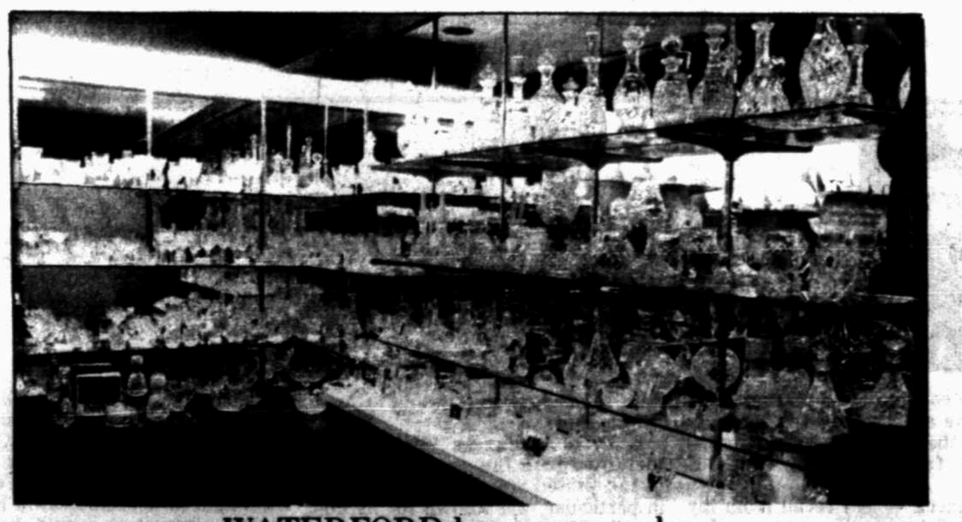

Brown also said that the calls were not "lost."

"What really happens is someone will hang up and call again," he said.

Water complaint

The rain in Spain may fall mainly on the plain, but in Midland too much water has been falling on city pavement because of some residents' wasteful watering practices.

In the future, it will cost flagrant waterers — to the tune of a fine up to $200, if the City Council gives final approval to an ordinance passed on first reading this week.

The purpose of the penalty is twofold. First, wasting water in Midland borders on the ridiculous. Any city that normally receives only 13-plus inches of rain a year (a typical year, that is) doesn't have water to spare and its residents should take a leading role in promoting conservation of the precious commodity rather than encouraging its depletion.

Unfortunately that hasn't been the trend in Midland. Countless letter writers have complained in recent months about the annoying practice of some city residents to water not only their lawns but city thoroughfares to the point of creating veritable streams of affluent in the gutters and streets. Those residents point out, accurately and appropriately, that not only is the waste annoying and a potential traffic hazard (cars avoiding water splashes) but also completely avoidable.

Which leads to the purpose behind the penalty. City officials have contended for years that excess watering which causes water to stand on streets erodes the road base and leads to breakup of the asphalt surface. That, of course, means added expense for residents because of necessary road repairs. The only question remaining, in fact, is why didn't city officials adopt such an ordinance years ago?

Some officials have speculated the ordinance may be difficult to enforce, but what law doesn't require a degree of public support and governmental diligence? The point is Midland city officials should not condone waste of a precious natural resource.

When the city first began considering a penalty against "nuisance waterers" officials looked at the possibility of a general increase in water rates as a means of attacking the culprits. A number of residents complained that such a move would unfairly penalize everyone for the wastefulness of a few. That's telling it like it would be. The ordinance passed by the City Council is much fairer in that it allows for penalties to be levied against only those guilty of wastefulness.

The ordinance should be adopted on final reading so Midland can go on record as opposing this waste.

Another View: Reforming the IRC

By the remarkable margin of 97 to 3, the Senate has passed its remarkable bill to transform the Internal Revenue Code.

The vote is a tribute to the power of a good idea — the sense that, morally as well as economically, a combination of lower tax rates and fewer curlicues will serve the country far better than the opposite combination existing now.

But good ideas need help to pass. Without Bob Packwood, chairman of Senate Finance, Bill Bradley, the senator who more than any other pressed for reform of the kind to which both houses have now agreed, and President Reagan, there would be no bill.

The next step is conference, where the central issue will be rates. The Senate bill has two — 15 and 27 percent. There will be two sources of pressure to move toward something more like the House alternative of four — 15, 25, 35 and 38 percent.

Democrats will argue that the structure in the Senate bill is not progressive enough. They point out that the rate for millionaires would be the same as for much of the middle class, and say that 27 percent is too great a departure from tradition. The top rate, now 50 percent, was 70 percent when Reagan took office.

Members will also want to restore preferences struck down in either bill. They will likely need higher rates to finance them. Because preferences tend to benefit the rich, they will also need higher top rates to preserve the way the bill spreads the burden across income classes.

There may be particular pressure to preserve some preferential treatment for long-term capital gains, in part on grounds that these gains are often illusory and reflect only inflation.

Sixty percent of such gains are now exempt from tax, a benefit that accrues mainly to upper-income taxpayers; the Senate bill would end the exemption. There may be a good bargain to be struck along these lines: a top rate somewhat higher than 27 percent in return for a recognition that not all long-term gains are "real."

There are at least two other such broad issues. The House bill involves a larger transfer of the tax burden from individuals to corporations. Partly because of the way certain industries — oil, timber, defense — are treated, business as a whole would have a bigger tax increase, individuals a bigger tax cut.

The Senate bill also uses a somewhat different method to achieve its business tax increase; it relies more heavily on a minimum tax.

The good news is that, at one level, it doesn't matter how the conferees resolve these and the lesser issues.

The country will be better off whichever way they choose. The competing bills would both enormously benefit the poor, lifting the tax threshold back above the poverty line.

Both would preserve the essential contours of the present income tax, in that the rich would continue to pay about the same share. Both would tear away at tax shelters (the Senate bill more so); both would make it harder for individuals or corporations to avoid taxation entirely; both would serve to extract the tax code from investment decisions, which it now so unhealthily affects.

The way they're tearing down the tax code that is a symbol of the system — well, it's almost enough to make you believe in that system.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On June 29, 1949, the government of South Africa began to implement its policy of racial segregation known as "apartheid" with a ban on racially-mixed marriages.

On this date:

In 1776, the Virginia state constitution was adopted, and Patrick Henry made governor.

In 1941, the famous Polish statesman, pianist and composer Ignace Paderewski died in New York at the age of 80. He received a state burial at Arlington National Cemetery.

In 1946, British authorities arrested more than 2,700 Jews in Palestine in an attempt to stamp out alleged terrorism.

In 1954, the Atomic Energy Commission voted against reinstating Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer's access to classified information.

In 1966, the United States bombed fuel storage facilities near the North Vietnamese cities of Hanoi and Haiphong.

In 1972, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the way the death penalty was usually enforced constituted "cruel and unusual punishment."

Ten years ago: Hijackers holding 256 hostages at Uganda's Entebbe airport demanded that Israel and four other nations release 53 imprisoned Palestinians and pro-Palestinians.

Five years ago: Hu Yaobang, a protege of Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping, was elected Communist Party chairman, replacing Mao Tse-tung's hand-picked successor, Hua Guofeng.

Trying to appease Khomeini 'futile'

WASHINGTON — Syrian involvement in anti-American terrorism, which we have been calling attention to for months in the face of the Reagan administration's apparent obsession with Libya, is at last getting some of the press attention it deserves. But there has been a strange silence about the other major source of terror that we identified: Iran.

Jack Anderson

Stranger still is the willingness of two powerful victims of Iranian terrorism — the United States and France — to seek accommodation with Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini in the hope of appeasing his fanatical hatred of the West. Kowtowing to Khomeini has become the new diplomatic game in Washington and Paris.

This is irony of truly staggering proportions. If any victims of Khomeini should realize the futility of trying to do business with him, it's France and the United States. It was terrorists inspired and directed by Khomeini who slaughtered 59 French paratroopers and 241 U.S. Marines on a single day in 1983 at the Beirut airport. And it is Khomeini's terrorist chieftains who kidnapped French and American hostages and were still holding them last week despite appeasement gestures by the French and U.S. governments.

We've reported on the secret Reagan administration tilt toward Iran in the Persian Gulf war, which has included active consideration of clandestine arms shipments to Khomeini. Now we can reveal that the secret negotiations over arms supply and release of American hostages have involved members of the National Security Council and a former official of the CIA.

Meanwhile, the French have gone a step further. While still continuing to sell arms to Iraq, they have quietly begun to sell to Iran as well.

In a shameless act of appeasement, the French government also forced out of their country the Iranian exile with the best chance of overthrowing Khomeini: Massoud Rajavi, head of the People's Mojahedin.

Given our druthers, Rajavi would not be the first choice to replace Khomeini. He has been shrilly anti-Western in the past, and advocates a suspiciously extremist philosophy that might be called "Islamic Socialism."

But Rajavi has pledged to hold free elections within six months after he ousts Khomeini, and a Mojahedin official told us the Iranians who support Rajavi would insist that he keep his promise, even if he tried not to. "Democracy is all that is left for them," the official explained, noting moderate Iranians' cruel disappointment when the corrupt dictatorship of the shah was succeeded by the fanatic fundamentalism of Khomeini.

Whatever the true nature of Rajavi's ideology, one thing is clear: He seems to be the only one who can mobilize significant opposition to Khomeini inside Iran. The Mojahedin claim to have mounted more than 200 anti-government demonstrations within Iran in the last year. They have a videotape showing the "commencement exercise" of 2,000 guerrillas in Iranian Kurdistan last October.

While such claims are difficult to check out in Khomeini's Iran, the ayatollah's wrathful response to the Mojahedin's opposition has indirectly confirmed Rajavi's claims that he is a serious threat to the regime. Many of the tens of thousands of Iranians Khomeini has had executed were Mojahedin members.

And while Khomeini showed little concern about other opponents who are in exile in France, he has been adamant in his demands that the French turn Rajavi over to him.

"The (Mojahedin) are a criminal group whose hands are stained with the blood of our people's dearest children," an official message fulminated last April 15. "If the French wish to change their attitude towards Iran, they must uproot the (Mojahedin) bases. ... Throw the (Mojahedin) out of your country! ... It is only then that our people will believe that France is a friendly country."

With the French hostages in Lebanon in mind, France capitulated and forced Rajavi to leave "voluntarily" several weeks ago. He found refuge in Iraq, much to the chagrin of Iranian officials. They had something entirely different planned: Rajavi's arrest by Interpol during a brief layover in Switzerland, followed by his extradition to Iran.

Evidence of the Iranians' intentions was obtained in an intercepted telephone conversation just before Rajavi's departure from Paris.

The French ameliorated the shame of their expulsion of Rajavi by telling him of Tehran's plan, and allowing him to get a direct flight to Iraq. Weeks later, kowtowing to Khomeini had brought the release of only two of nine French hostages.

GEORGE F. WILL

Image of conventional forces died at Somme

WASHINGTON — Seventy years ago, a world went smash. In a sense, we are still waist-deep in debris from (the 20th century is largely debris from) the battle that began at the Somme, July 1, 1916.

George F. Will

A.J.P. Taylor writes that no man in the prime of life in 1914 knew what war between the great powers — there had not been such a war since 1871 — would be like. On July 1, it was like this:

Sixty-thousand British soldiers were casualties; 20,000 were killed that day. (Twenty thousand is 40 percent of the eight-year U.S. fatality toll in Vietnam.) By mid-November, when the battle oozed away into the churned mud, the British had suffered 420,000 casualties, the French 200,000 and the Germans about 450,000. The Somme front was 12 miles long. Never was more than eight miles gained.

The war was a calamitous case of new technology overwhelming old tactics. The machine gun suddenly gave decisive advantage to the defense. The old tactic of offense — slow advances by massed formations — amounted to trying to wear out machine guns with young men's chests.

On Sept. 15, 1916, a new weapon, born in the fertile brain of Britain's First Lord of the Admiralty, Winston Churchill, clanked into action: the tank. Twenty-four years later, a German regime made possible by the immobile slaughter of the First World War would send tanks racing across France to Paris.

In 1984 and 1985, we had many observances of 40th anniversaries associated with the winning of the Second World War. Wars are fought by young men, many of whom, 40 years on, linger and remember. Not so 70th anniversaries of wars. However, First World War anniversaries also should be noted because that war was worse and greater. It was worse because fought for no purpose as defensible as cleansing Europe of fascism; greater, in that the war's resonances were — still are — louder. A consequence of the Second World War was the drawing of the Soviet empire into the middle of Europe. The creation of the Soviet regime was but one evil consequence of the First World War.

The generation that marched to war on both sides in 1914 believed, more serenely than any subsequent generation has, in the inevitability of progress, the beneficence of technology, the wisdom of established authority. That generation went over the top of the trenches, and off a kind of spiritual cliff, at 7:30 a.m., July 1, 1916.

In 1919, the reading public was shocked by the title of a book: "The First World War." Surely, there would not be a second. After the second, the world understood the ruin wrought by the first. The ruin included generalized disrespect for all authority — political, moral, spiritual — because so many authorities had sustained the four-year war of attrition. Democratic publics became hospitable to a semi-pacifism that encouraged the dictators that rose from the rubble of the First World War. In 1922, a British writer said:

"The most bloody defeat in the history of Britain might occur on July 1, 1916, and our press come out bland, with nothing to show that we had not had quite a good day — a victory, really. Men who lived through the massacre read the stuff open-mouthed. So it comes that each of several million ex-soldiers now reads with that maxim on guard in his mind — 'You can't believe a word you read.'"

"Idealism perished at the Somme," says Taylor. And what produced this scorched social earth? Artillery, bayonets, bullets. No nuclear weapons were required, a fact worth pondering.

President Carter spoke in his Inaugural Address of "the elimination of all nuclear weapons." President Reagan says his deepest desire is elimination of nuclear weapons.

To deter with conventional forces the conventional forces of the totally militarized Soviet Union would require permanent conscription of wealth (nuclear weapons are relatively inexpensive) and young men on a scale that no democracy has been willing to suffer other than in wartime. Recently a U.S. senator was musing on the difficulty of explaining to college audiences why nuclear weapons, although now too numerous, are not dispensable. The senator should say: If nuclear weapons were abolished tomorrow, male undergraduates would find themselves headed not for Salomon Brothers and the delights of investment banking, but to Army barracks on Europe's central front for the low-paying trade of deterring Soviet conventional forces.

RUSSELL BAKER

There are other intellectuals, George Will!

When the intellectual giants of journalism are being praised, whose name always heads the list? George Will's name, that's whose. And whose name is never even mentioned despite the fact that he is the only journalist in any hemisphere whose hobby is Marcel Proust?

Russell Baker

No, no, of course I'm not bitter about it. If a tawdry culture chooses to withhold its awe from its foremost journalistic admirer of Marcel Proust and bestow it instead on a fellow ... on a mere whippersnapper really ....

Yes, whippersnapper: I said it and will not retract. Where was George Will, the intellectual giant of journalism, in 1963 when yours sincerely was filling newspaper columns with the intellectual and spiritual news of Marcel Proust?

All right, I don't know where he was either. Probably telling somebody who had just read him "The Cat in the Hat" at bedtime that Dr. Seuss' work would profit from being rewritten by James Madison.

Don't mistake me. I have nothing against youth. George Will couldn't help it if he was just a little nipper being tucked in and kissed nighty-night when the pioneers of intellectual journalism were already daring to challenge America to consider Marcel Proust.

Yes, daring, by golly! It took plenty of daring even to mention Marcel Proust in a newspaper in those days.

"Nobody wants to read about a French gasbag," a famous editor once told me. "Start writing about Mae West or Dave Garroway or you're through, kid."

George Will never had to endure treatment like that. A youngster like him wouldn't even have known who Mae West was. He probably still doesn't. If he came across Mae West in a game of "Trivial Pursuit," he'd probably guess she was the bookbinder of "The Federalist Papers."

Fortunately, pioneer intellectuals of journalism knew who Mae West was and, when told to write about Mae West or else, I could write about Mae West without lowering my brow to the depth of the editor's.

Sometime I'd like to see George Will lay aside Macaulay's "History of England" long enough to read my column on Mae West's debt to Marcel Proust.

In it I pointed out for the first time in the annals of Mae West scholarship that while her famous role as vulgar temptress of the upper classes was based upon Proust's harlot Odette de Crecy, her invitation to "Come up and see me sometime" was lifted directly from Proust's social-climbing hostess to the middle class, Madame Verdurin.

This pioneering effort to get American newspaper readers interested in something deeper than the pool of blood in which the corpse of the statuesque-blonde-of-the-day reclined was utterly ignored by those who should have been applauding it.

I refer to such journals as The New York Review of Books, the unabashed champion of pure intellect, which, as chance would have it, has just published an almost endless article celebrating ... guess who. His initials are G.W., and he is not George Washington.

And you tell me there is such a thing as justice? When was the last time this hotsy-totsy journal for intellectuals saw fit to publish a single paragraph celebrating the man who took Marcel Proust out of the cobwebs in the library stacks and made him a vital presence at the center of American consciousness? Never.

Intending to help its editors correct the oversight several years ago, I approached Francine du Plessix Gray, a splendid person much respected at The New York Review of Books, to notify her that I had read Proust's "Remembrance of Things Past" in its utterly staggering entirety.

She did not issue cries of delight, among them a cry to the effect that this called for a practically endless article celebrating the fascinating American who had introduced culture and intellect to the desert of journalism. Instead:

"Did you read it in French?" she asked.

"Of course," I murmured, lying only whitely.

"In that case," she said, "you're ready for the Russian and Swedish translations, which are extremely interesting."

Apologists for George Will assure me that he is a celebrated cerebrator only because he calls himself a conservative. Because a conservative capable of intellectual exercise has traditionally been as rare as a pig who can do a passable polka, Mr. Will, they say, deserves more attention than journalism's true intellectual pioneers.

How do you feel about that, William F. Buckley Jr.? When you were already writing both intellectual and conservative what was George doing? Crying like a bleeding-heart liberal, I'll bet, because Peter Rabbit's father got cooked by Mrs. McGregor. Yes, he would have been still too young to realise that Father Rabbit got only what he deserved for raiding the vegetable patch, thereby violating the principle that there is no free lunch.

There are other giants out here, too, folks.

BILL MODISETT

We should recall why we're celebrating this Fourth

Bill Modisett

The fact that this Friday will mark the celebration of this nation's 210th year of independence from rule by Great Britain lends even more credence to the vote in the House of Representatives this week to send $100 million in aid to Nicaragua's Contra rebels.

As we're celebrating, we need to keep in mind what we actually are celebrating and why. What we're celebrating, of course, is freedom from domination. The reason why is because we've shown the willingness to get involved in the fight against communism as often as necessary in every out of the way location possible down through the years.

Don't look on the vote in the House as this nation's proud support for God-fearing communist rebels glad to die in the name of freedom. They're not and it wasn't. The simple fact is this: The war in Nicaragua and all of Central America, for that matter, is another of those lovely proxy wars between Communist forces and those in this country who understand that there really is a plot out there to overthrow the Free World.

Voting support for Nicaragua's Contras simply gives us a hedge in fighting the communists on their home turf, which happens to be our backyard.

As Americans, we're obliged to hold forth the principles that all free people cherish and all oppressed people seek — freedom to live our lives the way we choose unshackled by the whims of government's masters.

Opinion polls have shown the American people are overwhelmingly opposed to American troop involvement in Central America or even to military aid for the Contra rebels. But that fact doesn't diminish the reality that if the rebel effort isn't successful, United States forces are likely to end up fighting in Central America in the next couple of years.

What's that you say? After Nicaragua is subjugated the communists will stop trying to spread their influence in this hemisphere. Isn't that what was said about Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, even Cuba?

Come on!

Enjoy the Fourth of July. America isn't involved in a declared war. That's something to cheer about. Isn't it?

Lately it seems that all it does in this part of the country anymore is rain, rain, rain.

I'm not complaining. It seems that when it stops raining, nothing mankind can do will make it start again. Maybe the same thing applies when the "rain cycle" begins.

For area farmers, gardeners and anyone else who works with the soil, the moisture in the ground now really makes a big difference. It will for months to come, too, for earthmovers and shapers, dirtworkers and others whose work is directly tied to soil conditions.

Water truly does make the difference in this part of the country. The next time you're out driving around, enjoy the countryside. There'll be no blowing dust and the landscape is bright green.

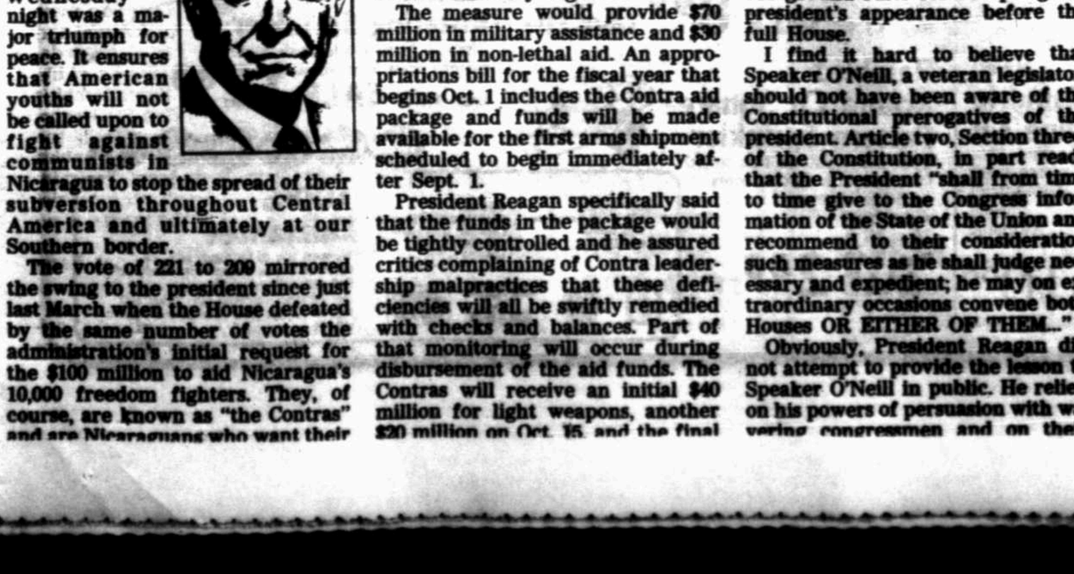

It's nice — for a change.

'City limits' signs don't really mark city's limits

The city fireworks code states that you have to be approximately one mile from city limits for a fireworks stand. My daughter, Darletta, applied months before for a license. She checked with the City Fire Marshal, Jerry Petree. All Mr. Petree said was that you have to be one mile from the city limits.

She had two places on West Highway 80 that were over a mile from the city limits signs, but did not qualify as being a mile from the city limits.

I think that he should have told her that parts of the city had been annexed, and city limit signs were not the city limits — that they extended approximately two miles past the city limit sign east, and west to Air Terminal.

I think city officials should be held accountable for wrong information or lack of information furnished to people who inquire and are not given the right information that results in loss of a business.

I think they should have election for fire marshals by the public.

U.S., Europe should focus on positives

Charley Reese's article 'Don't visit European deadbeats- uh allies' of Friday, June 20, could possibly be called anti-European. I regret that this chapter of the gospel according to Reese is read throughout the United States, because it is so one-sided and unbalanced. It contains elements of truth certainly, but by no means the whole truth.

If the object of the column is to see how many people can be infuriated by one journalist, this one may set a record. In my view, it reaches a level of absurdity remarkable even for Mr. Reese.

We are living at the most dangerous moment in history of man, and instead of everyone working overtime to foster good relations with friends and enemies alike, some journalists, who are opinion molders, are taking every opportunity to drive wedges between countries, always seeing the negative rather than looking for the positive and building on that. Journalists on both sides of the Atlantic, I should say. In Britain, for instance, instead of moaning about one to one and one half million Americans who, for reasons of their own, are not coming, we should be rejoicing for the two million who are coming. Instead of insulting the so-called stay-aways for being afraid to come in 1986, we should be concentrating on the major public relations job of making Americans welcome in 1987.

Is it not curious that when both superpowers are encouraging cultural and academic exchanges between Russia and America, and when we all get excited when a concert comes live from Moscow, some people are actively encouraging divisions between America and Western Europe? What do they say about a house divided against itself?

Some of the things Mr. Reese said, "America has everything we need...,We do not need the depressing shabby carnival of Europe for a vacation...,Europe is history now...,etc."

Americans may not need Europe, that is true, but millions of Americans do, in fact, want to visit Europe. I have escorted tour parties around Europe for over 15 years. For most Americans it proves to be a happy and enriching experience, as indeed is a visit to America for most Europeans. If most travelers return saying 'there's no place like home,' that's as it should be, and you hear that said the world over. You travel to see the richness and variety of the world, not to see if the plumbing is as good as your plumbing at home, or to compare every "hostelry" with "our Holiday Inns." Those who travel to Europe, or to anywhere else, with an open mind rarely regret it, in my experience.

Finally, I was disappointed, but not totally surprised when Mr. Reese brought out all his tired old anti-British comments (which does not make them any less valid of course) shedding blood for the Brits, Britain created a majority of the problems that still plague the world from the Middle East to Africa, etc.

I wonder if he will be covering the royal wedding in July?

Government has taken away our sovereignty

In England during the 1770s, the king and his consorts, with their control of the press, had all of England believing that the American colonies were a nutty mix of cranks, crackpots and foaming hatemongers.

Now, a little over 200 years later, the government established by the American colonies, composed of those same cranks and crackpots, has insidiously taken away the established sovereignty of that nutty mixture of sovereign citizens and established itself (the government) as the sovereign.

They (established government) have established their bureaucracies to offer privileges in place of established rights (guaranteed by the Constitution) by telling the nutty citizens that the government will control everything for the protection of the people.

Thereby, the poor, dumb, nutty citizens will have the protection of government and it will control all activity of the people for the welfare and safety of all the poor, dumb, nutty citizens.

The king of England, in the 1770s, sent his elite army of Redcoats to crush that nutty mix of cranks and crackpots.

Could this be happening again today?

The crime of this "nutty mix" was rebellion to the king's taxes and his desire to control their lives and actions.

The king called these nuts tax protesters.

They called themselves patriots.

The king saw to it that the printing presses of England influenced the people of England to hate these people of the American colonies sufficiently to enlist enough new Redcoats to defeat them, break them up, shut them up, and gain absolute sovereign control over them.

Citizens, if you think the present day press (media) is not controlled then you are naive.

Most newspapers in the U.S. are corporations, and as such are creatures of the state.

If you think you are not controlled, try writing an article concerning all the things that you can think of that the government is doing that is unconstitutional.

Then present it to your editor and see if you can get it printed. Good luck!

The other side of the coin is your rights.

If you claim that your constitutional rights have been violated by government then that would make you a constitutional advocate and place you in the category of the nutty mix of cranks and crackpots.

The government of the United State receives 35 percent of its income from income taxes and pays 42 percent in welfare. This means none of income tax collection is used for the purpose of running the government.

Nowhere in the constitution can it be found that the government is supposed to take from the producers to give to the non-producers. If you have a cause that you believe to be right, then get people to write about it. Only the ignorant believe everything writers write.

Writing must be judged on morals and intent. As you read these written words, you are using your intelligence to judge my words. Therefore, if your mind is made up, then I do not want to confuse you with any facts.

Psychics failed to live up to article's claims

As one of the few who attended the Psychic Awareness and Life After Death lecture given recently by representatives of the Inner Peace Movement, I feel compelled to point out certain discrepancies between what was claimed in the June 19 article and what actually transpired.

First of all, anyone who attended the lecture and workshop expecting to learn to read auras, project thoughts, or witness any kind of ESP phenomenon whatsoever must have been sorely disappointed. Speaker Kenda Wheat asked us to rub our hands together and note the tingling sensation which followed, claiming that we are feeling our own auras. A simple demonstration of thought projection between members of the audience was performed, the results of which were varied and inconclusive.

When asked if they would demonstrate the same kind of thought transference between each other, the speakers, Bob Masters and Kenda Wheat, politely declined. Guests were also invited to spend more money in order to learn about their specific psychic gifts. At the end of the workshop however, no one expressed any interest in any further involvement with the Inner Peace Movement.

Approval of aid to Contras major triumph for peace

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — President Reagan's victory in the House of Representatives Wednesday night was a major triumph for peace. It ensures that American youths will not be called upon to fight against communists in Nicaragua to stop the spread of their subversion throughout Central America and ultimately at our Southern border.

The vote of 221 to 209 mirrored the swing to the president since just last March when the House defeated by the same number of votes the administration's initial request for the $100 million to aid Nicaragua's 10,000 freedom fighters. They, of course, are known as "the Contras" and are Nicaraguans who want their country to remain free of Russian and Cuban communist domination.

The president personally took charge of persuading congressmen who were on the fence, and even some of those who were against his proposal, to vote in favor of the bill. Eleven members — six Democrats and five Republicans — who voted against aid in March voted in favor of it Wednesday night.

The measure would provide $70 million in military assistance and $30 million in non-lethal aid. An appropriations bill for the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1 includes the Contra aid package and funds will be made available for the first arms shipment scheduled to begin immediately after Sept. 1.

President Reagan specifically said that the funds in the package would be tightly controlled and he assured critics complaining of Contra leadership malpractices that these deficiencies will all be swiftly remedied with checks and balances. Part of that monitoring will occur during disbursement of the aid funds. The Contras will receive an initial $40 million for light weapons, another $20 million on Oct. 15 and the final $40 milion next Feb. 15.

The vote of approval marked the first time overt military aid for the Contras was approved by the House, which has resisted this kind of funding for the last three years.

The president spoke on national television last Tuesday after being rebuffed by House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, who laid down various ground rules for accepting the president's appearance before the full House.

I find it hard to believe that Speaker O'Neill, a veteran legislator, should not have been aware of the Constitutional prerogatives of the president. Article two, Section three, of the Constitution, in part reads that the President "shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the State of the Union and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may on extraordinary occasions convene both Houses OR EITHER OF THEM..."

Obviously, President Reagan did not attempt to provide the lesson to Speaker O'Neill in public. He relied on his powers of persuasion with wavering congressmen and on their good judgment about the security of the United States and the entire Western Hemisphere.

So he went before the TV audience which only Cable News Network gave him. The other major networks demurred on the grounds that his presentation — intended originally as a message to the House — was a political address. Interestingly, after they had rejected Mr. Reagan's request for air time, all three major networks led their news broadcasts with the House approval of his aid package.

Right up until the last minute before the vote Sandinista communist leaders, headed by President Daniel Ortega, warned that passage of the aid program requested by President Reagan would bring disaster to the U.S. Some of the officials in Managua, the dusty Nicaraguan capital, were still chiming this propaganda line after the House approval of the package.

Less than 24 hours after the House vote to aid the Contras, the Sandinistas closed "La Prensa," the opposition paper in Nicaragua, indefinitely. The paper had frequently appeared with white space because of censorship and was in constant trouble with the regime.

Needless to say, the Soviet Union was full of rancor and denunciation in its propaganda against President Reagan and presidential supporters. The Soviets have never bothered to answer the president's charges that they have resumed shipping by freighter gun-ship helicopters and huge quantities of arms to the Sandinista comrades.

As the President asserted in his TV speech, the U.S.S.R. wants to establish a beachhead in North America and is doing its utmost best through its puppet client of the Sandinista regime.

I do not believe there is any realistic comparison between our role in Vietnam and what critics complain could lead us to send our boys to fight in Nicaragua. First, Vietnam was unfortunately fought by too many desk tacticians who hamstrung the efforts of our field forces. When these young men returned home, they were for years rejected and only recently have been accorded proper credit for serving their country well.

Nicaragua, on the other hand, is an area pretty close to home in which the Soviet Union has managed to establish a base of operations. Indeed, left-wing guerrillas operate from a safe haven in Nicaragua by slipping into El Salvador, where democracy is flourishing despite communist efforts to unseat the existing government.

The Sandinistas also have several thousand Cubans, courtesy of Fidel Castro, East Germans to help with "security" issues, Bulgarians to do some engineering work, North Koreans, and even militant factions of the Palestinian Liberation Organization. That's quite a witches' brew of terrorism smack in the heart of Central America. The difference with Vietnam is clear.

It was a banner week for the president who also saw passage by the Senate, by 97-to-3, of the Tax Reform plan, which will now go to conference with House Congressional specialists.

Following his dual victories in Washington, the president is concluding a well deserved brief vacation at his ranch near Santa

Photography class offered in summer session

From Staff Reports

For the first time, Midland College is offering a summer session photography course. That's just one of the many courses listed for MC's second summer session.

Pre-registration for credit courses being offered during the second summer term is underway, with only four days remaining. Persons wishing to enroll should pre-register in the Student Services office, Administration Building, between 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. Monday through Wednesday or Monday, July 7. All college offices will be closed Thursday as part of the Independence Day holiday.

Registration for the second summer term is Wednesday, July 9, with classes beginning on July 10. Students who pre-register receive permits that assign them specific times to come for registration. Those who don't pre-register have to be processed after those with time permits and take a chance that courses they want or need might be filled.

"Students can take the second semester of many courses that are being taught during the first summer session, as well as some first semester classes in both academic and vocational programs," said Dee Windsor, associate dean of students and registrar.

Classes are offered both daytime and evening. In addition to the first-time summer photo classes, there will be a list of evening dance and ballet classes, traditional classes as English, science, computer science, geology, accounting, government, history, economics, voice, typing, word processing, petroleum technology, physical education, physics, psychology, real estate, Spanish, and speech communication.

Course bulletins are available in the Student Services office. For information, call 685-4501.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Instructor published in science magazine

By H. A. TUCK

A lengthy article by Midland College geology and archaeology instructor Dr. Carl Frailey has been published in Contributions to Science, issued by the Natural History Museum of Los Angeles County. Its title, also lengthy, is "Late Miocene and Holocene Mammals, Exclusive of the Notoungulata, of the Rio Acre Region, Western Amazonia."

It deals with explorations Frailey and others have been doing for several years on fossils found along a tributary of the Amazon River. Frailey serves as a Research Associate for the Section of Vertebrate Paleontology, Natural History Museum of Los Angeles County.

Three days of pre-registration this week and one next week are all that remain for students wishing to take credit courses during the second summer term.

The college will be closed Thursday in observance of Independence Day. Pre-registration is slated from 7 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Thursday in the Office of Student Services, Administration Building.

Final pre-registration day is Monday, July 7. Registration is slated on Wednesday, July 9, with classes beginning the following day.

Pre-registration eliminates the waiting that's necessary for those who just show up on registration day, since time permits are issued for those who pre-register. The permits assign them a specific time to come for processing.

We've gotten some interesting educational facts from the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges we'd like to share with you.

Educational levels for American adults have jumped from 10.6 to 12.6 median school years completed between 1960 and 1983. Thirty-three percent of the adult population has completed at least one year of college.

In the fall of 1984, 41 percent of all undergraduate students were enrolled in two-year colleges...and 55 percent of all freshmen students were attending two-year colleges.

But the most significant statistic was the cost of college education. Just for tuition and fees in 1984, private four-year colleges averaged $6,140; private two-year colleges averaged $3,300; public four-year colleges averaged $1,274; while public two-year colleges had an average cost of just $510.

When you consider the cost of room, board, and other incidentals, the bargain afforded by staying at home and attending a two-year college for the freshman and sophomore year becomes even more apparent.

This is the final week for boys to enroll in the Midland College Champions Basketball Camp, which begins July 7. MC head coach Jerry Stone is directing the one-week camp for boys from fifth grade through high school junior varsity. He'll be assisted by assistant coach Reggie Franklin...and Spud Webb, the former MC All-American and a sensation with the Atlanta Hawks this year, also will be on hand.

Boys have a choice of living in the college athletic dorms or being day students at the camp. Along with basketball, there are many other activities to keep everyone busy.

Persons interested should call Karen in the athletic office, 685-4575.

Computers can be as obstinate and ornery as humans. And for some reason our college computer has it in for one of our very nice students. Marjolaine Lewis took 14 hours this spring and made an A in every course.

That entitles her to be on the President's List. For some reason, the computer failed to list her name this spring. Now that's bad enough...but the computer did the same thing to her last fall, when she earned a spot on the Dean's List and wasn't listed.

The Registrar's office and the President's office apologize to super student Marjolaine Lewis.

Author to conduct writing classes

From Staff Reports

Jheri Fleet, published author, will teach two eight-week courses, Magazine Writing and Fiction Writing at Pages and Prints Bookstore in Plaza Center.

Magazine Writing begins July 8, the fiction class begins July 9. The weekly classes meet from 6-9 p.m.

Ms. Fleet has published over 200 articles and four books. Many of her former students throughout the Permian Basin have gone on to become writers.

"When someone really wants to write and they are simply told over and over 'just keep trying' they get frustrated. Like any business, writing has keys. And, that's what I teach," Ms. Fleet explained.

Ms. Fleet tells her students that the part-time hobby can lead into a profitable second career.

She said an average book is about 220-240 pages and if a person writes one page a day they would have 365 pages a year. Disciplined, dedicated writers write three or four books a year, she said.

Ms. Fleet's eight week courses are divided into specific areas to be mastered: information that is vital to the working writer and the how-to-sell-it information. Enrollment is limited and registration is now underway.

For more information call Patteann Daniel at Pages and Prints, 687-5172.

Teachers get second chance to pass TECAT

AUSTIN (AP) — More than 6,500 Texas teachers who flunked their first competency test got a second chance Saturday.

Almost 97 percent of the 202,000 teachers who took the first test in March passed.

The 6,579 who failed must pass the second exam or they will not be allowed to teach in the next school year, said Terri Anderson, spokeswoman for the Texas Education Agency.

"If they fail, they won't lose their certificates but they can't teach until they pass the test. They can take the test again any time in the future," she said.

Results of Saturday's exams, given at 144 sites around the state, won't be known for three or four weeks, education officials said.

A total of 25,000 educators took Saturday's Texas Examination of Current Administrators and Teachers. That includes college personnel and private school teachers who want to retain their state-issued teacher certificates and who didn't take the test when it was given in March.

The test of basic skills was required by the sweeping 1984 school reform law.

The TECAT stirred considerable protest from teacher groups, particularly the Texas State Teachers Association, which has gone to court to overturn the exam. The outcome is still pending before the Texas Supreme Court.

The TSTA also filed suit on behalf of those who failed the test the first time, claiming it was racially discriminatory since a higher percentage of minorities than whites failed.

City rallying to save Laredo State University

LAREDO (AP) — Not since the TWA hostage crisis, which involved two Laredo families, have people in this border community rallied so to a common cause.

The fight to save Laredo State University is in full swing, with petitions circulating and arguments earmarked for the Select Committee on Higher Education.

Following an ominous announcement that LSU might be transformed into a branch of another university, dozens of civic leaders received copies of a petition stating: "We the undersigned strongly object to any effort to downgrade Laredo State University to a branch study center."

"It's a fairly substantial effort," said Rex Ball, LSU vice president for administration and university relations.

Abraham "Chick" Kazen, former U.S. Congressman and chairman of the Committee to Save LSU, said businesses and organizations were obtaining signatures.

In campaigns slated for this weekend, volunteers would be circulating petitions, soliciting signatures at shopping centers, bank lobbies, churches and temples.

Kazen would like the petitions returned by Tuesday. A meeting will be called for the 20-member steering committee following appraisal of the response to the petitions.

Visible community support just about matches concerted efforts put forth on the university campus itself.

University graduates, undergraduates and even high school students were inquiring about the future of LSU and circulating petitions all over the LSU campus.

Ball said most students were unaware of the situation despite the wide publicity for the past five or six months.

"It kind of caught them by surprise," he said.

Ball said a five-page argument supporting the existence of LSU would be sent to the select committee, the group that made recommendations to the state on termination and downgrading certain institutions of higher learning.

Recently, the select committee notified several upper level universities being considered for downgrading to study centers, merging with other universities or closing.

Governors unveil Bowie statue

NEW BOSTON (AP) — A bronzed James Bowie brought the governors of Arkansas and Texas together Saturday in the only joint appearance during their states' concurrent sesquicentennial celebrations.

Texas Gov. Mark White and Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton attended a ceremony for the unveiling of a bronze statue of Bowie, which now stands in front of the new Bowie County Curthouse.

The ceremony drew several hundred people who took time off from Pioneer Days festivities in downtown New Boston to attend the ceremony honoring Bowie, a Texas pioneer who died at the Alamo.

Before they pulled the cover off the statue, White and Clinton exchanged gifts and jokes.

Clinton gave White an authentic "Arkansas Bowie knife."

White then gave Clinton a two-volume set of James Michner's novel "Texas."

Couple gets married on wagon train

IRVING (AP) — Rudy Nelson and Jana Miranti, who met while riding on the Texas Sesquicentennial Wagon Train through dust storms and broiling heat, went and got hitched Saturday.

Several hundred people attended the 10-minute, western-style wedding, which was part of the Wagon Train's only ceremonial stop in Dallas County.

The bride rode a stagecoach, along with her mother and a bridesmaid, onto the wedding scene — a gazebo nestled in the middle of the wagon train circle.

"When I came down here all I had was a red pickup," said Nelson, 37, of Flagstaff, Ariz. "Now I've got two wagons, six red mules and Jana."

The couple chose antique costumes for their wedding garb — a lace dress with ribbons for the bride and a stovepipe hat and tails for the groom.

They'll now rejoin the wagon train on the final leg of its 3,000-mile trek across the state. The train, which began rolling Jan. 2 from Sulphur Springs, finishes in Fort Worth on July 3.

The two met at a wagon train stop in Amarillo and became engaged in a leaky camper on a rainy night in Windthorst.

Nelson — hunting guide and driver of the only stagecoach in the wagon train — spotted Ms. Miranti on May 19 in a crowd of wagon train spectators in the Pahnhandle city. He took Ms. Miranti and her 6-year-old son, John, in the stagecoach as the wagon train rolled to Claude, then drove them home in his pickup.

"I just couldn't get him out of my mind," Ms. Miranti said.

The next week when Ms. Miranti heard her friends were going to meet the wagon train in Turkey, she jumped at the chance to join Nelson. Since then, she has spent most of her time on the wagon train.

Equipment worth $10,000 reportedly taken

From Staff Reports

The Midland County Sheriff's Office Friday reported the theft of drilling equipment valued at $10,000 from a local business. Barry Bryant of 3309 Dentcrest told authorities coring equipment was taken from Norton Christensen, Inc., 2105 Market. Reports said the equipment was last seen April 29 in the bed of a pickup truck.

Ten blank Western Union money orders were reportedly stolen from the Warfield Truck Terminal on West Interstate 20. According to reports, Dohnie Hemme told authorities the money orders were taken by a person believed at the time to have authorization for the act. He said it was later learned the person had no such authorization.

The Midland Police Department reported over $1,200 items were burglarized from a residence Thursday. Valerie Prucka, 3801 Crestline, told police a Sony videocassettee recorder valued at $524, a Sears videocassette recorder valued at $300, diamond stud earrings valued at $700, a General Electric microwave oven valued at $400, and a Sears 19-inch color television valued at $300 were stolen from her residence. The burglary apparently happened between 7:30 a.m. and 5 p.m.

In other reports, Wayne Pearson, 2400 Whitmire, told police a car stereo and a stereo equalizer, each valued at $100, were stolen from his vehicle, and a black and white television valued at $85 was stolen from his residence.

Animal Control stresses importance of vaccinating pets

By JIM BROWN

In the "dog days" of summer, Animal Control, the community services area of city government, handles special problems.

Its job is to enforce rabies vaccination laws, handle animal bite cases and animal cruelty violations, and inform and educate the public.

Animal Control stresses the importance of vaccinating pets against contagious diseases. Even though rabies is the only vaccination required by law, other vaccinations are necessary for a pet's health, particularly during the summer.

A total of 227 animal bite cases were recorded this year involving roaming animals. Free, roaming animals present a threat to public health because more than 30 diseases common to dogs and 35 diseases common to cats can be transmitted to humans.

Animal bites not only affect the victim, but also the owner. According to state law, the animal in question must be quarantined for 10 days at the Animal Control facility, and the impoundments have cost pet owners a total of $7,500 so far this year.

Also, stray animals put themselves in danger. In 1985 a total of 1,204 dead animals were picked up off streets, and this year's figures show 1,254 animals as of May.

Unleashed animals are taken to the animal shelter; however, most have no license as required by city ordinance. If an animal wears a license, then the owner can be contacted.

Animal Control tries to inform the public about the advantages of spaying and neutering family pets. Midland has an expanding pet population, with over 4,152 animals handled this year (an increase of 1 percent over last year).

This surgery not only helps control the pet population but also reduces the chances of mammary tumors and uterine infections in females and prostate cancer in male animals.

Surgery is required for all animals adopted from the animal shelter.

Investigation of animal cruelty cases falls under the scope of Animal Control. There has been a marked increase in animal cruelty with more than 40 cases this year.

State cruelty laws specify that an owner must provide food, water and shelter for pets as well as medical attention. During the summer months, sufficient water and shelter from the hot sun are imperative for an animal's well-being.

Many owners take their animals shopping and then leave them in cars, subjecting them to temperatures reaching 135 degrees.

Finally, educating the public about pet ownership is one of Animal Control's major responsibilities. Animal Control personnel try to give pet owners a clear understanding of their legal and moral obligations both to their pets and to the community.

They give more than 50 presentations a year to civic organizations, schools and youth clubs.

Jim Brown is Midland city manager.

PROUD TO BE HOMEGROWN!

Defending champions crush opposition

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Defending champions Boris Becker and Martina Navratilova, their games as hot as the weather, charged into the fourth round as the Wimbledon tennis championships ended their first week Saturday.

But the upsets that have haunted the tournament continued on this sweltering day when the temperature soared to 100 degrees on Center Court.

Sweden's Stefan Edberg, the reigning Australian Open champion and No. 5 seed at the 100th Wimbledon, lost his third-round match to Miloslav Mecir of Czechoslovakia.

And, Raffaella Reggi shocked No. 4 Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany 6-4, 6-1 to become the first Italian woman to reach the fourth round at the All England Club since 1965 and only the second since World War II.

Only seven seeds remained in men's play and nine in the women's singles. And an unseeded player is guaranteed to reach the men's semifinals for the 10th consecutive year, a string that began in 1977 when John McEnroe stormed out of the qualifying with his brilliant play and brash manner.

WITH McENROE on a self-imposed hiatus from tennis, there was no overwhelming favorite for the men's singles this year, even though the field included last year's winner, Becker, and Czechoslovakia's Ivan Lendl, the world's top-ranked player who was coming off a victory in the French Open.

Wimbledon

Edberg, one of the few Swedes who seemed to be comfortable on the fast grass surface, was one of those given a chance at winning. That chance was dashed Saturday by Mecir, 6-4, 6-4, 6-4. The Czechoslovak has beaten Edberg in all three of their career meetings.

"He played very well, unfortunately," Edberg said. "He played out of his mind and there wasn't too much I could do today. He was too good.

"I knew I had a good shot for the tournament if I played very well. Unfortunately, I played Mecir."

Becker, seeded fourth, dropped a set for the first time in this year's tournament as he defeated Australia's Paul McNamee 6-4, 6-4, 4-6, 6-4.

SECOND-SEEDED Mats Wilander of Sweden downed Australian Mark Kratzmann 6-4, 6-4, 2-6, 6-1. No. 7 Henri Leconte of France stopped American Greg Holmes 6-4, 6-2, 7-6. No. 12 Brad Gilbert of the United States eliminated Czechoslovakia's Milan Srejber 7-5, 6-7, 6-3, 6-3; and No. 13 Mikael Pernfors of Sweden ousted American Sammy Giammalva 2-6, 6-4, 6-3, 6-1.

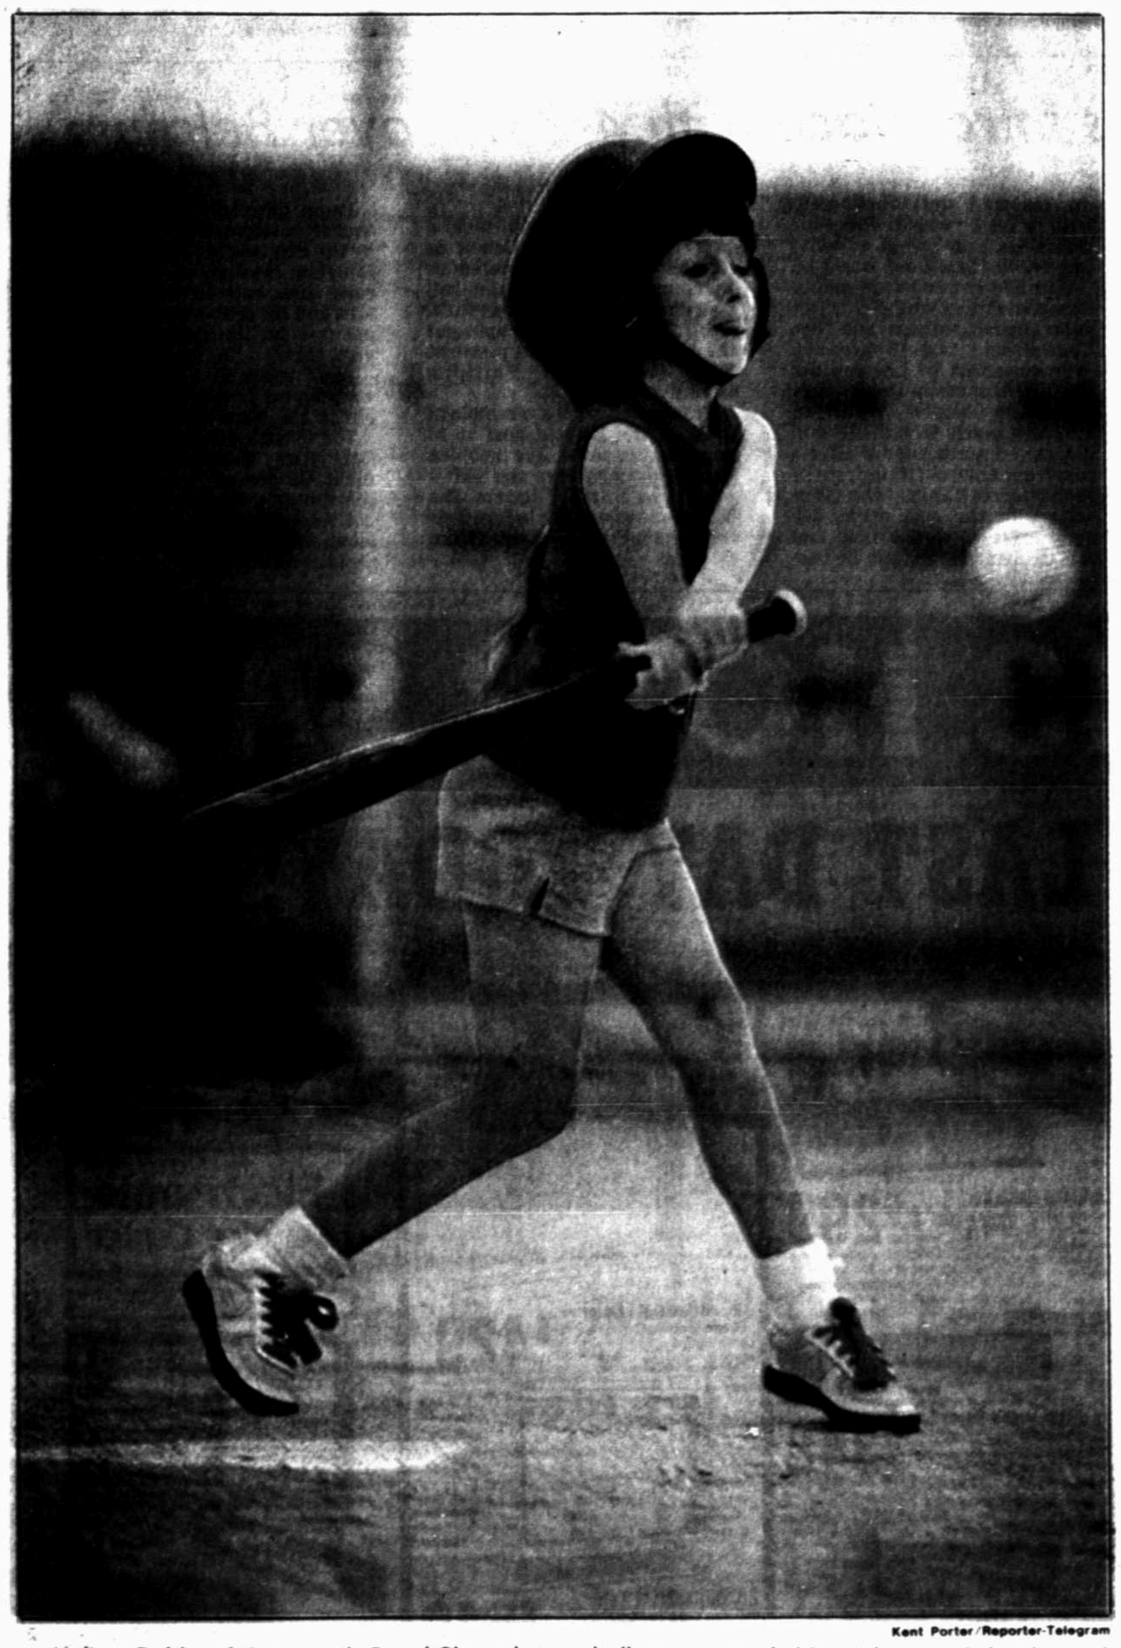

In the women's singles, Navratilova, the No. 1 seed, was joined in the fourth round by No. 2 Chris Evert Lloyd, No. 3 Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia, No. 7 Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia, No. 8 Manuela Maleeva of Bulgaria, No. 10 Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina, No. 11 Carling Bassett of Canada, No. 15 Catarina Lindqvist of Sweden and No. 16 Kathy Jordan of the United States.

Navratilova crushed Kristin Kinney 6-0, 6-2 and Lloyd stopped Kathleen Horvath 6-4, 6-1 in all American matches.

It was Mandlikova over Czechoslovakia's Iva Budarova 6-2, 6-0; Sukova over Australian Anne Minter 6-1, 6-4; Maleeva over Australian Elizabeth Smylie 7-6, 6-1; Sabatini over American Barbara Gerken 6-2, 6-1; Bassett over Marie Calleja of France 6-4, 6-2; Lindqvist over Australian Elizabeth Minter, Anne's sister, 3-6, 7-6, 6-3; and Jordan over American Melissa Gurney 6-4, 6-1.

THE FOURTH round will finally see seeded players facing each other, although with the number of upsets during the first week, only one men's match will pair seed vs. seed.

Melissa Dobbs of Division II's Royal Blue takes a swing during this week's city championship softball tournament held at Ulmer Park by the Midland United Girls Softball Association.

Blues have good day in MUGS

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The Midland United Girls Softball Association completed its season at Ulmer Park Saturday, concluding its week long city championship tournament.

At the conclusion of the tournament Saturday night, a final ceremony was held, announcing the tournament champions in all four divisions of play and naming its 1986 All-Star teams, which will vie in tournaments aimed at winning a national championship.

Navy Blue won the Division I (ages 7-9) city title with a victory over Green in the finals. Navy Blue went through the tournament undefeated this week to gain the title. Columbia Blue placed third, losing to Green for its second loss in the double elimination format.

Navy Blue was also the big color in Division II (10-12). Divison II's Navy Blue also went undefeated in the tournament and defeated Purple in the championship finals. Purple was playing its fourth game of the day in the finals before bowing out. Royal Blue placed third, losing to Purple for its second loss.

In Division III (13-15), the Royal Blue played the Gray in the championship finals, but that division went the route as both teams had lost one game going into Saturday night's finals. Maroon placed third.

The Division IV (16-19) finals was also pushed to the limit Saturday with Maroon downing Green for the championship. Both of those teams had one loss going into the finals. Royal Blue placed third.

The highlight of the night's activities was the naming of the seven All-Star teams that will represent Midland in the National playoffs. Division IV named one All-Star squad while all the lower divisions will have two All-Star teams in the national competition.

Angels boot one; fall 9-4 to Gators

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Midland's hopes of a five-game winning skid came to a crashing halt Saturday night as the Beaumont Gators pounded a 9-4 stake into the Angels' heart in a Texas League game at Angels Stadium.

Fifth starter Vinicio Cedeno, 1-4, couldn't make it through three innings as the Gators touched the righthander for five runs, four earned, before Midland manager Joe Maddon signaled for Doug Banning to come to the rescue.

The whole affair was an atypical Angels' performance of late, as the "Haloed Ones" committed four errors and several other thick-headed fielding plays.

"It was a bad game. We were dead. Flat. And we were in trouble early," summarized Maddon. "It was perhaps our worst game of the season."

The loss ended a four-game winning streak and dropped Midland to 6-3 in the second half. On the year, the Angels are eight games over .500 at 41-33.

Beaumont catcher Frank Castro incurred much of the damage on the Angels, scoring three times on a pair of extra base hits, including a two-run homer in the third that sent Cedeno packing.

"It looked like (Cedeno) was trying to save himself for later in the game. He wasn't popping his fastball like he usually does — and I don't have any idea why," Maddon said.

AN ERROR by first baseman James Randall to the first batter of the game set the tone for the game and led the way to Beaumont's first run. In the second, a hard smash by Castro that smacked off the glove of third baseman Pat Keedy led to another Gator run and a 2-0 lead.

The third frame saw the Gators score three times, with Castro's seventh homer of the year keying the rally.

"When a pitcher doesn't go out there and take control from the beginning, the team gets kind of flat behind him. There gets to be kind of an impending doom, that seemed to happen tonight," Maddon said.

North Central regains title; Rounding blanks Eastern

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Twelve-year old Brian Rounding has a way of taking the drama out of the Joe Mowles Memorial American Little League city championship tournament.

Rounding hurled a two-hit shutout over the Eastern Optimist Saturday morning at Richard Knox Field to lead his North Central Cubs to a 9-0 victory and the city title.

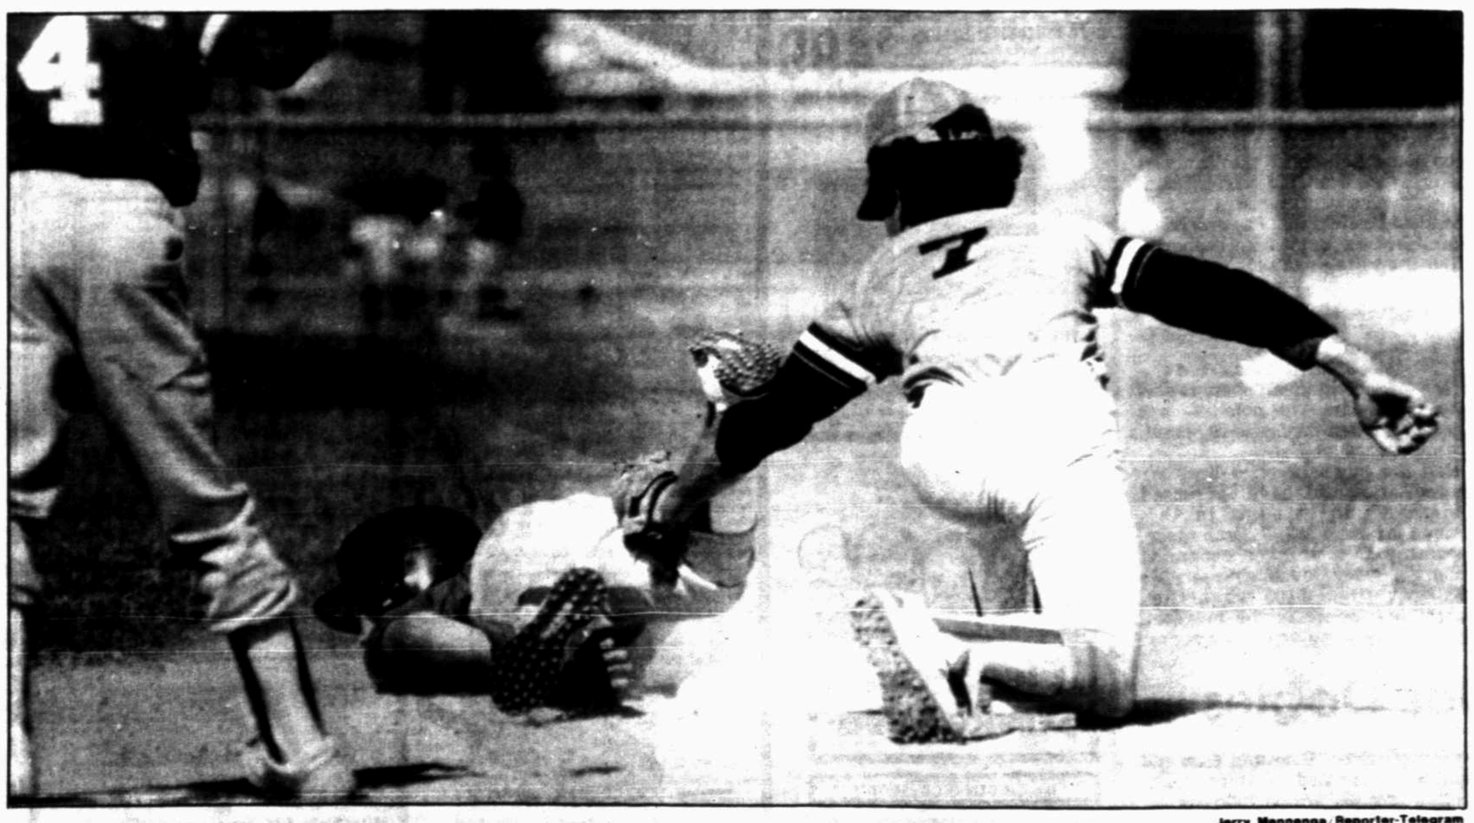

North Central went through the tournament undefeated and unseated Eastern as the city champion. North Central now returns to the city throne room after only a year's absence.

And it was Rounding who had the rounding effect. He struckout 12 Eastern Optimists, facing only 20 batters, two over the minimum. To say he was effective is almost an understatement.

Rounding gave up his lone walk in the first inning when Eastern stranded one base runner. Eastern's Oscar Molinar got the first hit off of Rounding in the fourth inning, a squibber in front of the plate he beat out, but Molinar was erased from the base paths when Cub catcher Robbie Price nailed him on a steal attempt.

Rounding gave up his only other hit of the game in the fifth when Nino Almergar singled to center, the only legitimate rap of the day off the North Central hurler. Rounding struckout the side in the second and sixth and had at least one strikeout in every inning. And his teammates played errorless ball behind him.

Meanwhile, the Cubs lashed out eight hits, including a two-run homer by Ritchie Greth in the first and a solo fence clearer by Allen Chase in the third. This is what you might call an undisputed championship.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Eastern second baseman Jeremy Burton (7) tags out North Central runner Allen Chase on a steal attempt during Saturday morning's city Little League championship game at Richard Knox Field.

Cubs' manager Jon Chase summed up the day pretty well. "We hit it, fielded it and threw it. And we had zero errors. You can't do much better than that, but I'm still glad this thing is over.

"We had our best starting pitcher ready to go and I thought we had a good chance at winning since they had to beat us twice, but it's always nice when it's over with."

The Cubs put the game away early when they touched Eastern's starting pitcher Jermey Burton for four runs in the first. Rounding knocked in two runs with a single and Greth followed later with his second homer of the tournament, a blast to deep center.

Chase homered with one out in the third, a line drive shot to center, and the Cubs added another run in the inning when Eastern reliever Molinar hit Jimmy Patton with the bases loaded.

North Central finished off the scoring with a three-run fourth as Greth walked with the bases loaded to force home one run and Jimmy Stanton had an RBI single. Another run came home on an error.

In addition to pitching a two-hit shutout, Rounding singled in one official time at bat and scored three runs. Greth was the only player to have two hits in the game. Other North Central hits came from Dewayne Culpepper and Mike Melzer.

Eastern was fighting with a bad case of the shorts. The Optimist team lost a first round game Tuesday to Western and had to win three straight games just to get to the championship finals. It was a climb that finally ran out of gas.

Eastern manager Andy Madrid, who saw his team win the city title a year ago, was not disappointed with the final result.

"I'm still very proud of these kids," said Madrid. "They fought their way through the loser's bracket, but quite frankly, we were short on pitching. I had to use up my best two pitchers just to get here. We couldn't save them in hopes of making the finals.

"But North Central has a very fine team and deserved the win. But we're going to be back. We've got seven kids on this team who will play for us next year."

But for this year, it's the Cubs of North Central who will wear the city title and no one seems to be disputing the fact that they deserve it.

Argentina, West Germany promises contrast in styles

By ALEX YANNIS
N.Y. Times News Service

MEXICO CITY — A complete contrast in styles and approaches to the game will characterize the World Cup final between Argentina and West Germany when they play Sunday at majestic Aztec Stadium.

Argentina is expected to display the open and explosive offense that centers around Diego Armando Maradona, who has been the main attraction in this World Cup; West Germany will most likely emphasize defensive tactics and rely on sporadic counterattacks, which have been its trademarks in this tournament.

West Germany, coached by Franz Beckenbauer, will be appearing in the final of the World Cup for a record fifth time. West Germany defeated Hungary in 1954 and the Netherlands 20 years later, and lost to England in 1966 and to Italy four years ago.

The West Germans reached their previous four fials under established coaches like Sepp Herberger and Helmut Shoen, and with a number of brilliant individual players like Beckenbauer, Fritz Walter and Uwe Seller. This time, they have done it with a coach who was severely criticized before the tournament and a squad of overachievers, 10 of whom are over the age of 30.

"We have no young players developing," Beckenbauer said, "so we have to rely on our veterans. We did well against France and Platini when no one gave us a ghost of a chance, and I hope we do well against Argentina and Maradona."

Beckenbauer's assignment of Wolfgang Rolff to mark Michel Platini, the French captain, worked to perfection in the elimination of France in the semifinals. The 26-year-old Rolff may get the same assignment against Maradona, but if he does, he is expected to have a tough time because Maradona is quicker and faster than Platini and has more power. The Argentine is also a lethal finisher as he proved with his two goals against England in the quarterfinals and two more against Belgium in the semifinals.

Beckenbauer may switch the assignment to Lothar Matthaeus, or ask both men to contain the short and stocky Argentine, who is considered by many to be the best player in the world today.

If Maradon receives double coverage, the key for Argentina may turn out to be Jorge Valdano, Maradona's partner on attack. For even if the Germans manage to stop Maradona from scoring, they will be hard-pressed to keep him from creating a goal by setting up Valdano or another teammate.

The Argentines hope that the Brazilian referee, Romualdo Arppi Filho, will not tolerate illegal tackles against the most precious legs in the tournament, and that his two linesmen, Erik Fredericksson of Sweden and Berny Morera of Costa Rica, will also point out any infractions committed against Maradona.

World Cup

The strengths of the West Germans are good organization on defense, power, aggression and their relentlessness even when things are going poorly. Harald (Toni) Schumacher is superb in goal, Hans-Peter Briegel is capable of making strong rushes down the left sideline (that is the main reason he will likely not be the one sacrificed to mark Maradona) and Felix Magath shows good intuition in midfield. The West Germans have allowed four goals in six games, but in their last three have allowed none.

Their weakness is lack of scoring punch that has led to only six goals in six games, and a rather stereotyped and unimaginative midfield. The 32-year-old Magath played his best game in the tournament against France and may be more inspired in the final because, he said, it would be his last international appearance.

Magath said he wanted to do in the final what "every soccer player in the world dreams: score the winning goal."

Argentina has an excellent group of defenders who have rarely allowed gaps in the penalty area in front of the goalkeeper, Nery Pumpido. They have been so well organized by Coach Carlos Bilardo that they have allowed only three goals in six games, and the goal they allowed against England came when Pumpido slipped and lost his footing as he backtracked to gather the ball.

With Daniel Passarella, the captain of the 1978 winning side, absent because of illness, the Argentina defenders have been a group of unknowns thus far. Perhaps after this game the names of Jose Luis Brown, Ricardo Giusti, Luis Cuciuffo and Daniel Batista will be better known.

According to several experts, the Argentine midfield of Luis Burruchaga, Hector Enrique, Ricardo Bochini and Julio Olarticoechea is the reason the defense has been so effective. Argentina's midfielders have been impressive in pushing forward en masse when in possession and defending en masse when possession is lost.

There have been times in games when even Maradona and Voldano basically the two attackers, have been seen defending in their penalty area.

The game marks only the fifth time in the 13 World Cup tournaments that countries from South America and Europe will meet in the grand finale, with the South Americans winning all four previous encounters. Brazil has three of the victories, over Sweden in 1958, Czechoslovakia in 1962 and Italy in 1970, and Argentina was the winner over the Netherlands when it was the World Cup host in 1978.

Unlike the previous four finals between the two continents, this one will be watched on television in 162 countries, more than ever before, and bring the players the most money. The Argentina Football Association has promised the players $50,000 each for a victory, and the West German Association has promised $40,000 to each player. The total financial reward a World Cup triumph brings to the players, however, comes much more from commercial and other endorsements.

Mahan finds sport to replace rodeo

AMARILLO (AP) — Larry Mahan, six-time world all-around cowboy, has added a couple more minutes of excitement to his life since riding out of the rodeo arena.

Leaving the life of broncs and bulls and the eight-second count, Mahan has slowed the pace only slightly to the 2½-minute count on the back of a cutting horse.

He was in Amarillo recently to participate in the 1986 Non-Pro cutting horse competition at the Tri-State Fairgrounds.

"It's really exciting for me to have competed in rodeos and then find another sport I can compete in that's as exciting," Mahan said. "That's one of the toughest things in sports ... to realize there's a time you can no longer compete."

Mahan, 42, competes now in an event that allows 12-year-olds and 70-year-olds and all ages in between to perform and have a chance at winning big money.

Mahan made his claim to fame in the late 1960s and early 1970s, riding barebacks, broncs and bulls on the rodeo circuit and winning about $500,000. He went into semi-retirement, promoting his line of western clothing and hitting some weekend rodeos.

IN 1981, the rodeoing came to an end, but Mahan found he still craved the thrill and excitement, he said. So in 1983, he went to the Tom Lyons and Leon Harrell cutter school.

Promoting his clothing took more time than expected that year, so he dropped the horses until the spring of 1984, when he went back to the school.

It wasn't until he made a move from Colorado to Camp Verde near Kerrville in late 1984, though, that he entered his first cutting event.

"It's extremely exciting to me. These horses are the most all around athletic horses in the equine industry," he said.

"I get the same thrills cutting as I did in rodeo. The element of danger isn't there like in rodeoing, but for someone who likes to compete, like I do, it's exciting."

Mahan speaks to many of the competitors as he watches each horse perform.

"There're a lot of good people in this business," he said. "It's extremely competitive but there's sportsmanship there, there's a lot of comradery."

A person can learn something new every day in the cutting world if he wants to, Mahan said, adding that he's still in the learning stage.

HE HAS started to win some of the smaller events, but continues to set goals of attending and competing in the major events, such as the Futurity and Super Stakes cuttings.

"I'm trying to learn how to train my own horses now," he said. "Until recently, I had to travel four or five days a week with the clothing company, but if I can go to a cutting somewhere, we usually go and I can check on accounts in that city."

His life won't let him get as active in cutting as rodeoing, but he still considers it a business. And if he starts winning, he said, he will probably become more active.

Rats, nobody has sense of humor

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Rats.

Nobody, it seems, has a sense of humor anymore. Baseball players once were known for their lighthearted approach as they sashayed through life earning major league money for playing a little kids' game. Pitcher Moe Drabowsky, remember, was king of the clubhouse hotfoot, a juvenile stunt that he maintained right through his advancing years. Now, though, everybody is so serious.

Occasionally, however, we're treated to a good oldtime guffaw, provided by a comedian in double knits. Take Dave Kingman. Or, as Henny Youngman might put it, "Take Dave Kingman, please."

Oakland's designated hitter and well-known humorist played this swell practical joke on a woman sports writer the other day but instead of applauding his efforts at comedy, the A's wound up fining him $3,500 for his trouble.

C'mon, guys, lighten up.

Kingman, whose DH role leaves him plenty of spare time to dream up new and exciting ways to entertain his followers, found himself in Kansas City this week. With the A's in the clutches of a 15-game road losing streak, it clearly was time for a little levity. Don't worry boys. Just leave it to Kong, the clown.

Well-paid for his occasional contribution to Oakland's tour of the American League — he is batting .213 and earning $600,000 — Kingman invested $2 to purchase a small rodent.

It may have been a mouse. More likely it was a rat. Anyway, Kingman carefully placed the little creature in a pretty pink package and shipped it up to the press box, addressed to the attention of Susan Fornoff of the Sacramento Bee. He attached a note which said, "My name is Sue."

Now that's a real thigh-slapper, isn't it?

And when Fornoff, who covers the A's without benefit of approval from Kingman, entered the clubhouse after the game, the designated hitter tossed a box of tissues at her, saying, "Go ahead, cry."

Charming, isn't he?

Predictably, Fornoff did not cry. To their credit, the A's did. Management was not amused and Sandy Alderson, the club's vice president for baseball operations, announced that the stunt would cost Kong $3,500. What's more, Alderson said, if he pulled anything else like that again, he would be "released immediately, without further compensation."

While they waited for Kingman's next gag, the proprieters of the Oakland funhouse practiced releasing people by firing Manager Jackie Moore on Thursday.

He wasn't laughing, either.

Meanwhile, we are pleased to report that Kingman's rat has found a good home. Reporter Fornoff turned the creature over to a Royals Stadium employee who passed it on to a friend's 5-year-old son. Boy and beast established an immediate rapport.

But then Kingman sent word that he would pay $75 for the return of the rat. Why he wanted it, nobody knows. There are rather limited uses for a used rat.

The owner's father considered the offer — "Seventy-five dollars is seventy-five dollars," he noted — but rejected it when the 5-year-old cried.

Ahhh, tears, at last.

Had the buy-back offer been accepted, it would have increased Kingman's investment in this strange affair to $3,577. Drabowsky, operating in a simpler economic time, got away much cheaper. He was only fined $100 when they caught him applying the hot foot. And the matches didn't cost a penny.

France claims third place with 4-2 win over Belgium

PUEBLA, Mexico (AP) — Bernhard Genghini scored from close range 13 minutes into the first overtime period and France took third place in the World Cup with a 4-2 victory Saturday.

Genghini hooked a kick into the short side of the net past goalkeeper Jean-Marie Pfaff after a setup pass by Jean-Marc Ferreri.

Early in the second overtime, Manuel Amoros was upended in the penalty area by defender Eric Gerets. Amoros was awarded a penalty kick, which he converted to make it 4-2.

France, the European champion, finished the tournament with a 5-1-1 record. Belgium, which got this far in a World Cup for the first time, was 3-3-1.

With 18 minutes left in regulation and France ahead 2-1, Belgium applied pressure and Nico Claesen tied it from 15 yards out. A crossing pass by Leo van der Elst was tapped by Daniel Veyt directly to Claesen.

France nearly took the lead in the game's ninth minute after a pass from Amoros fell in front of Jean-Pierre Papin, who shot wide with the goal open. Belgium came down the field and Jan Ceulemans made it 1-0 moments later.

The Belgian captain took a pass from Stephane Demol in midfield and, with a defender bumping him, kicked the ball past charging goalie Albert Rust.

Just a minute later, Papin put the ball in, but a hand pass had been called on Philippe Vercruysse.

France tied it off a scramble in front of the Belgian goal at 26 minutes. Bruno Bellone dribbled into the penalty area and sent a pass into a group of players. The ball bounced around before Ferreri slammed it into the net from 15 yards.

Papin gave the French a 2-1 lead after sloppy defensive work by the Belgians in front of Pfaff. Genghini was given too much room just outside the penalty area and his crisp pass found Papin free on the right for a 15-yard shot.

Pfaff received a yellow-card warning for a wild tackle on Papin in the 62nd minute.

The French did not dress midfield stars Michel Platini and Alain Giresse and used mostly substitutes and players who had not seen action in this tournament. Belgium used most of its regular lineup.

Mom helps Jan move into tie for Mayflower lead

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A lengthy putting session with her mother paid off for Jan Stephenson as she shot herself into a share of the lead with a 3-under par 69 Saturday to catch Sandra Palmer after three rounds of the $350,000 LPGA Mayflower Classic golf tournament.

Stephenson's parents flew from her homeland of Australia to be with her this week. Her mother, Barbara, went to the putting green with her Friday.

"I spent two hours working with her. It gave me confidence," said Stephenson, who had complained about putting woes after shooting a 68 in the opening round and a 71 Friday.

"We were there until 8 p.m. and I only missed three," said Stephenson, who began the round by making a pair of five-footers for birdie on her first four holes. "I feel encouraged with my putter. I slept better. I couldn't wait to get up. I really wanted to play and you could tell."

The leaders had an 8-under-par 208 for 54 holes and were three strokes ahead of Carolyn Hill and Rosie Jones.

"I missed only three putts," Stephenson said, who made a 14-footer for her final birdie of the day.

"I was struggling," said Palmer, who had 68s in the first two rounds. "I was either way long or way short ... I need to work on my long putts. It was not an easy 72."

Stephenson, three strokes behind Palmer when the round began, started quickly with birdies on four of her first seven holes and made the turn with a 3-under 33.

Palmer played steady golf early and then had to overcome a shaky back nine that began with two consecutive bogies, finishing the round with a par 72 that included three birdies and three bogies.

Palmer, seeking a 21st career victory that has eluded her since 1982, was one stroke up on Stephenson with three holes to go and lost that advantage with a bogey on the 158-yard, par 3 No. 15 hole. The leaders then gained a stroke on the field with a birdie on the 17th hole and finished with a par.

Hill, who hasn't had a Top 10 finish since 1984, moved into a tie for third with Jones at 211 after shooting a 5-under 67 in the third round. Hill had six birdies on her first 12 holes. Jones had her second consecutive 70.

The tournament on the 6,186-yard, par 72 Country Club of Indianapolis course ends Sunday with the winner picking up $52,500.

Palmer shot a 1-under-par 35 on the front nine with eight pars before running into trouble, bogeying the 10th and 11th holes. The 45-year-old nearly had a third consecutive bogey when she hit a lengthy downhill putt on No. 12 about 10 feet past the cup, but saved par to remain 7-under.

Stephenson started her back nine with a bogey and followed with six consecutive pars before the birdie on the 486-yard, par 5 No. 17.

Douglass expands advantage; Midland's Clark still swinging

Senior Open

From Staff and Wire Reports

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Dale Douglass shot a 68 Saturday to take a four-stroke lead after three rounds of the $275,000 U.S. Senior Open at Scioto Country Club.

Douglass, participating in his first Senior Open after reaching the senior golfers' minimim age of 50, continued his domination over Scioto's 6,709-yard, par-71 layout.

He led after each of the first two rounds, shooting an Open first-round record 66 and a second-round 72 to take a three-stroke advantage into Saturday's third round.

Douglass' third-round 68 included five birdies and two bogeys and established a 54-hole tournament record of 7-under-par 206. The previous low three-round score in the seven years of the Senior Open was 214.

Gary Player shot a 66 and missed matching the course record when he failed to make a 6-foot putt to bogey the 430-yard, par-4 finishing hole. He was alone at 3-under-par 210, four shots off Douglass' pace.

Jim Ferree, with an even-par 71, and Harold Henning, with a third-round 70, were the only other players under par at 1-under 212.

Five-time British Open champion Peter Thomson shot a 1-under-par 70 to move to 1-over-par 214, while Bruce Crampton and Chuck Workman were 2-over, at 215.

Playing well off the pace of the leaders but still making the cut is Midland's George Clark.

Clark opened the tournament Thursday with a 75 and followed with scores of 77 Friday and 76 Saturday for a 54-hole 228.

Norman's 62 cuts into lead

Canadian Open

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP) — Greg Norman flirted with the 50's and finished with a spectacular 10-under-par 62 Saturday, moving within one shot of the third-round leader Bob Murphy in the Canadian Open Golf Championship.

"With two par-5s still to play, I was definitely thinking 59 when I made the eagle on 13," said the Australian known as the "Great White Shark."

That figure — the all-time PGA Tour scoring record — was beyond him, however, and he had to settle for simply the best round of his career — a round that included 10 birdies, an eagle and two bogeys.

"I've had a 62 before, but considering the course, and considering I made two bogeys, this was a better round," said Norman, who completed three trips over the Glen Abbey Golf Club course in 210, six shots under par and one back the veteran Murphy.

Murphy, 43, whose last victory came 11 years ago, played almost four hours behind Norman and birdied the final hole for a 68 and a 209 total.

Mac O'Grady, the controversial figure who is appealing a $5,000 fine and a six-week suspension for conduct unbecoming a professional golfer, and rookie Davis Love III tied Norman for second at 210.

O'Grady came on with a third-round 69 in the warm, sunny weather, and Love shot 70.

Dave Barr, seeking to become the first Canadian in 32 years to win this national championship, and Mike Donald were another shot back at 211. Donald had a 69, Barr 70.

Second-round leader Andy Bean struggled to a 74 and was tied with five others at 212, leaving a dozen players locked within three strokes of the lead going into Sunday's final round.

Also at 212 were three-time Canadian Open champion Lee Trevino, South African Bobby Cole, Canadian Dan Halldorson, Pat McGowan and lefty Ernie Gonzalez. Trevino, Halldorson and Cole all had 69s. McGowan shot 70 and Gonzalez matched par 72.

Jack Nicklaus, not yet a winner of this title but a 7-time runner-up, had to work hard for a 70 that left him at 213, four off the pace.

Murphy matched par over the front side and made his move when his putter came to life on the back.

The chunky veteran dropped a pair of 20-footers on the 11th and 12th, then got a share of the lead with a 4-iron shot to within four feet on the 14th.

He preserved a piece of the lead with a scrambling par from a bunker on the 17th then took sole control of the top spot when got up and down from a bunker for a birdie-4 on the final hole.

But he, like everyone else, was talking about Norman's remarkable effort that lifted him over 62 players.

"I'm standing on the first tee and somebody tells me, 'Norman just shot 62.' I say, 'Oh, that's nice.' I haven't even started and he's gone past me like a train," Murphy said.

It marked the second consecutive tournament that Norman had come from the cut figure — in this case 4-over-par 148 — to move into title contention. He had to birdie the 36th hole at Atlanta to qualify for the final two rounds, then played the last 36 holes in 130 and finished third.

This time, he was convinced he'd missed the qualifying score, cleaned out his locker "and packed my bags to get a flight home," said Norman, who has finished third or better in five of his last seven starts.

And he wasn't expecting anything spectacular after he'd bogeyed the second hole from a buried lie in a bunker.

"I was five over (par for the tournament) and I thought, 'What the heck, let's just go out and have fun and see what happens,' " he said.

He birdied the next four holes.

Inquiry on Bias to examine Maryland athletic program

By MICHAEL GOODWIN
N.Y. Times News Service

The University of Maryland, already rocked by the death of its all-America basketball player Len Bias from cocaine intoxication, appears headed for a different kind of trouble this week as a grand jury begins hearing testimony on the case.

While the testimony that begins Tuesday will focus on the events that led to Bias' death on June 19, the Prince George's County prosecutor has said he also wants to investigate the overall issue of narcotics use among Maryland athletes. The prosecutor, Arthur A. Marshall Jr., said he is concerned about "permissiveness" in the athletic department and that he would probably subpoena many coaches and athletes, including Charles G. (Lefty) Driesell, the basketball coach.

"Where this case ends up is anybody's guess right now," said Lou Lorscheider, Marshall's administrative assistant. "It depends a lot on what happens in the grand jury the first week."

Dr. John B. Slaughter, the chancellor of the university, has promised to cooperate in the investigation and expressed concern about damage to the school's reputation.

"Unquestionably, this is publicity we would not prefer," he said at a news conference last Thursday. "But for the long term this gives us the opportunity to really create a model educational institution."

The university regents have scheduled a special meeting for Monday to discuss the situation.

The case has put Slaughter in a doubly uncomfortable position because he is chairman of the President's Commission, a group of 44 university presidents who have promised to push for reform of academic and other regulations in the National Collegiate Athletic Association. Slaughter's credibility is not helped by the fact that Bias failed to earn a single credit last semester and was among five basketball players who flunked out of the university — there are 12 players on the team — after the season ended in March. A 22-year-old senior, Bias was 21 credits short of earning a degree.

Bias died less than two days after being chosen by the Boston Celtics as the second college player selected in the National Basketball Association draft. He was celebrating with several teammates and at least one other friend in his dormitory suite at Washington Hall on the Maryland campus when he suffered a seizure at about 6:30 a.m.

A 911 call to the county emergency center at 6:32 a.m. requested help for a "male not breathing," according to the police. After efforts by teammates and paramedics failed to revive Bias, he was rushed to a local hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

"I woke up when I heard my roommates starting to get dressed," said John Johnson, a member of the basketball team who lived in a nearby dormitory. "I remember looking at my clock — it was 7:13."

Johnson said that one of his roommates told him "Len's had a seizure." When they got to the hospital about 15 minutes later, Bias was already dead.

"When I heard that, I just lost it," said Johnson. "Me and Len were like brothers."

Johnson's grief was shared by many of the nearly 11,000 students attending summer school on the 1,500-acre College Park campus, a postcard-pretty setting of grassy rolling hills freckled with buildings and trees. Thousands of people, including the Rev. Jesse Jackson, turned out to mourn the popular Bias at a memorial service, the wake and funeral.

"When you think of the University of Maryland, you think of Lenny Bias," said Stacey Garett, a student who attended all the services. "I feel lucky to have known him."

But the mourning was interrupted somewhat by confirmation of initial reports that the celebration had included cocaine. The state medical examiner, Dr. John E. Smialek, said an autopsy showed that Bias had died when cocaine "interrupted the normal electrical controls of his heartbeat, resulting in the sudden onset of seizures and cardiac arrest."

Drugs probable cause in Rogers' death

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Cleveland Browns' defensive back Don Rogers probably died of a drug overdose, according to the pathologist who conducted the autopsy on Saturday, a few hours before the football star was to have been married.

Dr. Joseph Pawlowski said thatin the absence of any evidence of natural disease or injury, Rogers' death Friday was likely caused by drugs.

"The leading consideration with a person with no apparent underlying natural disease or trauma is that we are dealing with a probable drug overdose, which has to be verified toxicologically," Pawlowski said. "A leading contender is cocaine."

Should Pawlowski's opinion be confirmed, it would mark the second time in little more than a week that a young athlete died after using cocaine. University of Maryland basketball All-American Len Bias died June 19 of cocaine intoxication.

Rogers' lungs were severely congested with blood, a further indication that drugs were involved in the death, Pawlowski said.

"The presumption is that there was some interference in the respiratory area of the brain," he said. "Any excess intoxication by a drug, even a legitimate drug, might have caused it but I would say that cocaine is most suspect."

Rogers' arms had several needle marks, but Pawlowski said those probably were caused by treatment Rogers received at the hospital.

Rogers, a standout second-year safety for the Browns, lapsed into a coma and died Friday, the day after a bachelor's party at Sacramento hotel.

His mother, Loretha, on Saturday suffered a possible heart attack and was listed in critical condition in the same hospital where her son was first taken, said nursing supervisor Cathy Faringer.

Earlier, police had said autopsy results showed no evidence of drugs, disease or injury that would explain the mysterious death.

"To my knowledge, there were no drugs determined this morning that were identified as cause of death," Sgt. Bob Burns said following the autopsy.

Burns said that police involvement in the investigation was ending since the autopsy found "absolutely no trauma to the body nor ... any evidence of foul play."

He said preliminary results showed "no chronic or acute disease process that could identify cause of death."

Results of tests on Rogers' body fluids and brain might be announced Monday, Burns said.

"We have heard rumors of drug use," Loren Willeford, senior investigator for the Sacramento County coroner's office, said before the autopsy. "We are not ruling out any reason for the cause of death, but we do not now have a cause of death."

Paul Warfield, former Browns star and player relations director, said he spoke by telephone with Rogers about two hours before he collapsed. Warfield said he called to tell Rogers that another former player, Ricky Feacher, would represent the team at Rogers' wedding to his UCLA sweetheart, Leslie Nelson.

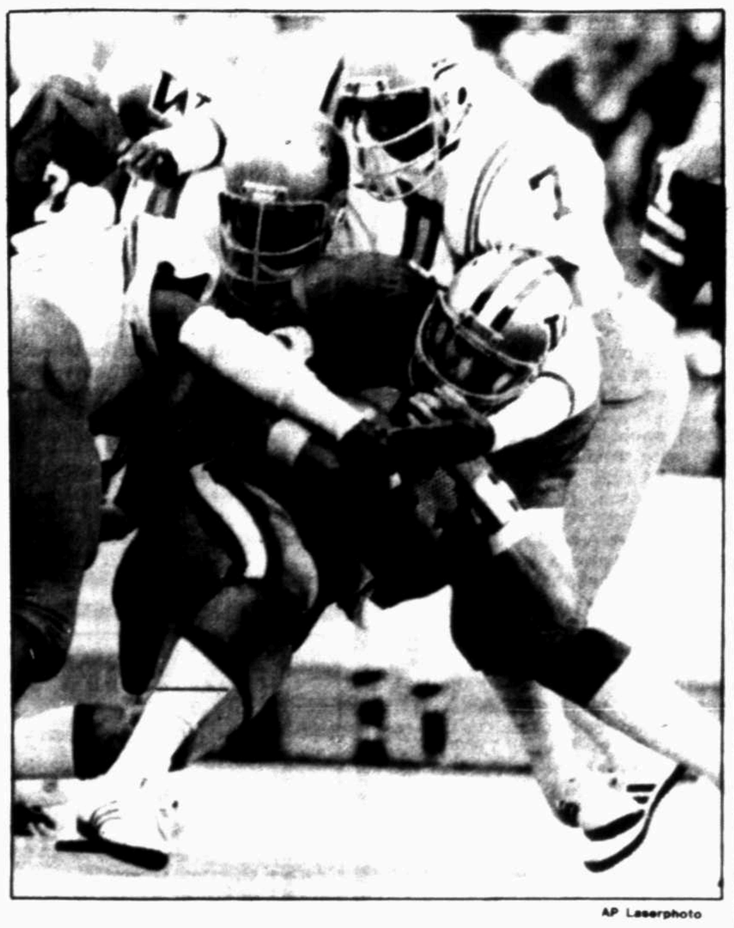

"Paul said Don sounded fine," said Kevin Byrne, a team spokesman. "He said he seemed excited about getting married."

Byrne, vice president for public relations, said the team "will not issue a statement or say anything until we receive an official word on the cause of death. We will have no further comment until then."

Rogers, Cleveland's No. 1 draft pick in 1984 and selected by the Players Association as the AFC Defensive Rookie of the Year that season, collapsed after suffering possible seizures about 10:30 a.m. PDT Friday at the home he bought for his mother.

None of the six to eight people at the house mentioned the possibility of drug use as two ambulance medics started to perform life-support services, said Mike Meighan, supervisor for the ambulance crew.

"At the time we picked him up, he was in a coma," Meighan said. "He was in a life-threatening state. He was unconscious."

UCLA's Don Rogers (7) is in on a tackle in a 1982 game against Washington. Rogers, who went on to play free safety for the Cleveland Browns, died Friday.

Robert Fagan, who lives across the street, said he heard someone crying out for help Friday morning.

"I was in my kitchen and I heard what sounded like pounding on the walls," he said. "I heard someone yelling, 'Help me,' and they kept yelling for a few minutes. I was getting ready to call 911 (the police emergency phone) when the fire trucks and an ambulance came."

Clad in a sweatsuit, Rogers was rushed to a northern Sacramento hospital, then transferred unconscious to Mercy San Juan Hospital, where he died at 4:31 p.m.

Met teammates together atop Ranger management

ARLINGTON (AP) — Tom Grieve wasn't sure what he would do after his baseball playing days ended. He thought of completing his math degree, and maybe going into coaching or business.

Bobby Valentine knew what he wanted all along — to manage a major league team.

Now, Valentine is managing the Texas Rangers, the surprise club of the American League West, while Grieve, as vice president-general manager, is overseeing the team's youth movement and its rebound into competitiveness.

On a comparative scale, the two mesh perfectly with their young roster of players. Valentine, 36, and Grieve, 38, are the youngest men currently holding such top-level major league posts.

The two became teammates during the 1978 season with the New York Mets when Grieve, a right-handed hitting outfielder, was playing his last full major league season.

Valentine, who played every position except pitcher in the majors, was in his next-to-last season, thanks partially to a 1973 collision with an outfield fence at Anaheim Stadium that left him with a multiple leg fracture.

Grieve was traded to St. Louis that winter, then released in May. He finished his playing career with Class AAA Tucson. Valentine played one more year with Seattle before retiring at age 29.

"No, I didn't," said Grieve when asked if he thought there would be a place for him in baseball after his retirement as a player.

BUT THE Rangers, for whom Grieve had toiled from 1972 through 1977, offered him a job as director of group ticket sales after the 1979 season. He had started with the Washington Senators' organization — the Rangers' predecessor — in 1966.

He accepted the job.

"It gave my family the opportunity to settle down," Grieve said.

In 1981, he was promoted to assistant director of player development and, the following year, was boosted to director of player development, where he directed the Rangers' minor league operations.

He was named vice president and general manager late in the 1984 season after Joe Klein was fired during a time of turmoil.

The Rangers were suffering through a truly forgettable season, starting with a local brouhaha that erupted after stadium attendants were seen eating fried chicken confiscated from some fans. Texas finished the season on a historic note — on the losing end of a perfect game hurled by California's Mike Witt.

Doug Rader, who was wrapping up his second year as Texas manager, was given a three-year contract extension by majority owner Eddie Chiles even before the 1984 season ended. Some observers compared the move to the Dallas Cowboys' decision during the mid-1960s to give Coach Tom Landry a 10-year contract extension, despite demands by many fans for his head.

Unlike his football counterpart, Rader made it 32 games into the 1985 season — 23 of them losses — before he was out the door.

VALENTINE MOVED from a third-base coaching job with the Mets to the distinction of being the youngest manager in the majors. In Texas, he inherited a disorganized, disheartened team featuring more than a few players who wanted to be somewhere else. In just over a year later, most of them, including Buddy Bell, Frank Tanana and Wayne Tolleson, had their wishes granted.

Valentine's team is youthful — much like himself and his boss, Grieve, who says the club made the right decision bringing his ex-teammate to Texas.

"If the 26 managers were free agents and we had first choice, he'd be our choice," Grieve said. "No doubt about it."

The Rangers came out of spring training this year with a roster full of young players — such as Pete Incaviglia, who spent 1985 with Oklahoma State, where he hit an NCAA-record 48 home runs; Oddibe McDowell, two years removed from the U.S. Olympic baseball team; and starting pitcher Bobby Witt, who failed to win a single game in Class AA the previous year.

"We won't be taking shortcuts," Grieve said in reference to the discarded idea of trading for veteran help.

He said the club had only one idea coming out of spring training: being the most improved team in the American League.

THE RANGERS, 62-99 in 1985, have spent most of the season either atop the West or near the top, while playing around injuries to such key players as pitchers Charlie Hough and Mike Mason, catchers Don Slaught and Darrell Porter, and designated hitter Larry Parrish.

Depending upon youth to build a winning team actually became the Rangers' philosophy several years ago, although it took Valentine and his staff to make it work, Grieve said.

"When Bobby got here with his coaching staff, the potential was here for it to take place," Grieve said. "The decision I know was the successful one since I've been here was the hiring of Bobby Valentine."

Valentine doesn't mince words about his profession.

"I love the game. I love being in uniform. I think it's the greatest thing," he said.

He was the first to admit in 1985 that he was learning to manage the hard way — during the regular season. Now that some degree of success has come to the Rangers, he's quick to place the credit with his players.

"I don't think it's anything I've done," he said. "I'm just lucky."

Tom House, the Rangers' bespectacled, 38-year-old pitching coach working on a doctorate in psychology, points to the signs inside the team's clubhouse at Arlington Stadium: "Winning is an attitude," "You can — If you believe you can" and "Stay agressive."

"It sounds corny, but it works on a day-to-day basis," House said. "The kids believe them."

House, who emphasizes the mental, as well as the physical, aspect of the game, said his record as a major league pitcher — 29-23 in eight seasons — didn't get him the pitching coach's job.

"The only reason I got a job here was that they (Grieve and Valentine) were willing to sit down and listen to me," he said.

"I can do anything as long as I let him know what I'm doing," House said of Valentine. "You could put him in any major corporation and he'd be your No. 1 human resources person."

TIM FOLI, 35, in his first season as the Rangers' third-base coach following a 14-year major league playing career, said the philosophy of Grieve and Valentine won him over quickly.

"They're two young, aggressive baseball people, maybe years ahead of their age," he said. "They seem to sense the whole picture, what needs to be done."

Foli also is committed to the idea of today's youth becoming tomorrow's World Series participants.

"There won't be any short-term gains for long-term losses," he said.

Are the young Texas Rangers ahead of schedule? Grieve won't make a guess.

"Realistically, you need a crystal ball to determine that," he said.

Maturity, and the winning that can come with it, can't be rushed, Grieve said.

"If we provide the right environment, that maturity will come," he said.

The Rangers — and their fans — will need one key ingredient if the youth movement is to succeed, Grieve said.

"You have to show patience," he said.

Rams' Dickerson has same killer instinct of record season

CARLSBAD, Calif. (AP) — Eric Dickerson, his contract dispute with the Los Angeles Rams behind him, says he's rekindled the killer instinct that drove him to record-setting heights two years ago.

Last season, Dickerson held out until the third week demanding a guaranteed contract extension.

On the field, he rushed for 1,234 yards. Off the field, he was in limbo most of the year with his financial future uncertain.

Dickerson thinks the unsettled contract negotiations kept him from regaining the form that saw him set the National Football League's single-season rushing record in 1984.

"It got to the point where I didn't even like what I did," Dickerson said. "We'd go out to play and it's like, 'I hope we win,' and 'I think we can win' and 'I feel confident about what I do,' but you really don't have that killer instinct, which you have to have when you play pro football."

Dickerson wound up playing most of last season with a multimillion-dollar insurance policy that protected him against injury. Eventually, though, he got a three-year extension from the Rams, and eventually, the killer instinct returned.

"I know it has because I cannot wait until football starts," he said. "I couldn't say that last year.

"Well, before the holdout, I couldn't wait. I was really excited about coming back and playing. But when I got into the holdout ... it didn't seem like I'd ever get back to playing. After a while, you just get discouraged."

Dickerson had to put a few months between himself and last season before he could settle the episode.

"It gave me a bad taste about football for a long time," he said. "I play football. That's what I do best. You don't want to take that away from a person."

This season, he's happy to have nothing on his mind but football.

"This season when I go into training camp, providing nothing physical happens, I think I'll be more mentally and physically ready to play.

"If I don't have any injuries or any of my offensive linemen don't have any injuries, I don't have any doubt that I would have a good start and our team would get off to a good start," he said.

Last season, Dickerson was the eighth-leading rusher in the NFL. But after two record-setting seasons, it almost seemed a disappointment.

"People expect me to always rush for 2,000 yards or 1,800 yards," he said. "If I had run for 1,500 yards (last season), they would have figured it was an off-season. People don't understand — this is the NFL and I'm not playing against kids."

Dickerson set a rookie rushing record in 1983 by gaining 1,808 yards, tops in the NFL. He outdid that the next year, gaining an NFL record 2,105 yards.

"I didn't get the carries I got the first two years," said Dickerson, who had 292 carries in 1985 compared with 390 in 1983 and 379 in 1984.

"I can look back at about six games and I only carried the ball 13 times or less. You can't have big games like that."

Dickerson said his job will be easier this year only if the Rams' passing game improves.

"One thing about it, we have to improve our passing attack," Dickerson said. "If that's improved, then the running game will come a lot easier.

"If we can pass for 230 to 240 yards a game, that would make it a lot easier on the running game. ... The defense wouldn't know what to look for."

Dickerson knows what he's looking for this year — a trip to the Super Bowl.

"Getting to the playoffs is nice," he said. "I've been to the playoffs every year I've been here. I want to go to the Super Bowl. That would mean a lot more to me than 2,000 yards. ... I want to go all the way. I don't want to get there and get cut short. We have the team to do it."

The Rams plan to alter their running attack this season by going to a two-back offensive set, rather than the one-back scheme used during Dickerson's first three years.

It it makes no difference to Dickerson.

"Once you get the ball you do what you do best with it," he said. "If you can run the football, even if you line up in a three-back set and they hand you the ball, you know what to do with it."

Speed gun conks out against Clemens

BALTIMORE (AP) — Trying to keep up with Boston pitcher Roger Clemens may have been too much for the speed gun used by the Baltimore Orioles.

It conked out in the ninth inning of Friday night's game after clocking Clemens through 11 strikeouts enroute to his 14th victory of the season.

But the Orioles didn't need the device to know that the 95 mile-an-hour fastball of the still unbeaten Red Sox ace was difficult to hit. Even when they know what's coming, the task of hitting the pitch is somewhat overwhelming.

"You know the guy's not going to finesse you," Larry Sheets said after Boston won 5-3 and Clemens moved to within one of the all-time American League best start.

"What's the saying, 'Good old country hardball?' " Sheets said.

For Piniella, managing proves trying

By MURRAY CHASS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — As the Yankees close in on the halfway point of the season, two traits seem to stand out in the rookie managing of Lou Piniella: He has lost none of the temper for which he became notorious as a player and he has gained an inconsistency between his words and his actions.

He has also lost much of the candor that marked him as an unusual player when the Yankees were at their turbulent best.

When the Yankees were in Boston this week, Piniella said during a pregame interview with an office full of reporters that he was learning to handle losing in a less intense manner, in contrast to certain times earlier in this season of ups and downs when he seemed ready to self-destruct after each loss.

Yet, it was only the week before, after a loss to the Red Sox at Yankee Stadium, that an angry and frustrated Piniella walked into his office and swatted a bookshelf off its hinges. The outburst seemed to calm him, but the temper had bared its familiar fangs.

Two weeks earlier, in Anaheim, Piniella walked into a storage room adjoining the Yankee clubhouse and tossed some furniture around after a loss. After a defeat at Yankee Stadium a month before, he kicked a wastebasket around his office.

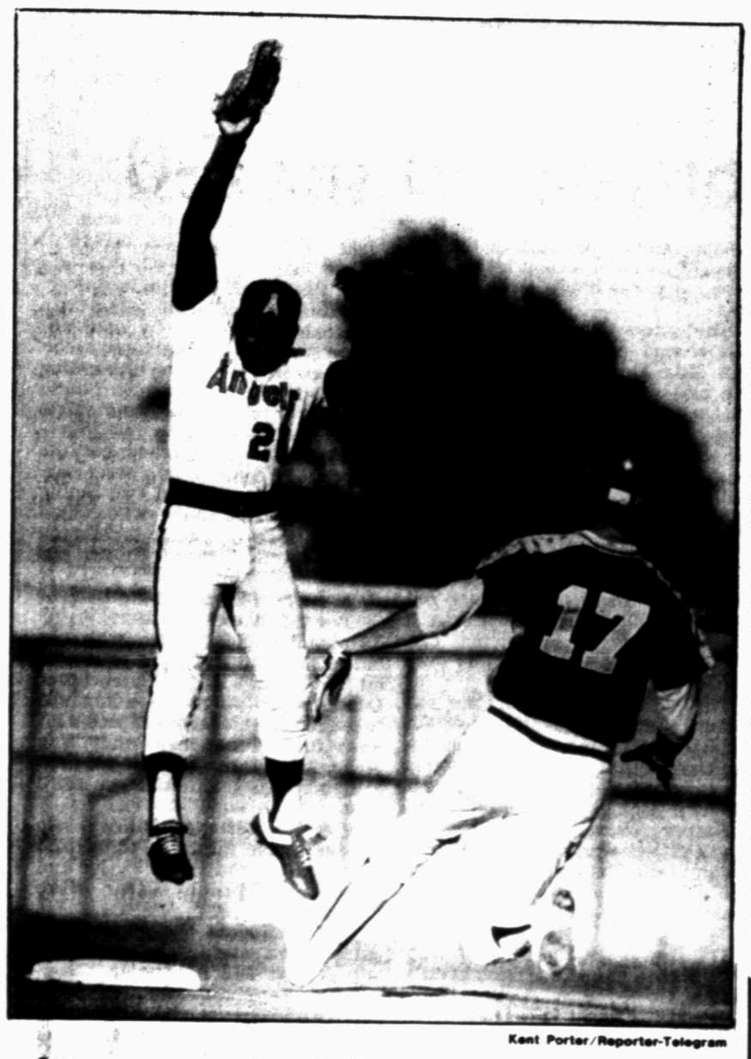

When other managers were asked before the season what Piniella would have to do to master the job as a rookie, some included in their suggestions that he would have to learn to deal with the news media. That element would have seemed to be a snap for Piniella because in his playing days he was noted, respected and appreciated for his honesty and his candor. When turmoil was an integral part of Yankee life, most players would comment on some happening only if they were assured they would remain anonymous. Piniella would comment only if he was assured that he would be quoted by name.

"If I can't put my name to it," he would say, "I won't say it."

As a manager, however, Piniella has often departed from that kind of candor.

When the Yankees sent Tommy John home from Detroit to have his Achilles' tendon examined earlier this month, they needed a pitcher to start in his place the next night in Baltimore. Asked after the game who that pitcher would be, Piniella said: "I don't know. We'll decide tomorrow."

In fact, the Yankees had already summoned Alfonso Pulido from Columbus.

ANGELS

Midland's bats, which are topping the Texas League with a .292 average, took the early part of the game off as Beaumont's Rich Doyle, 2-4, held Midland to four hits and one run through six innings.

The Angels totaled 11 hits on the night, but seven of the Angels hits and three runs came off a trio of relievers in the final three innings. Midland trailed 6-1 at that point.

Kevin King supplied most of the Angels' punch with his 11th home run, a solo shot, in the sixth, and an rbi single in the seventh.

AFTER ENTERING in the third, Banning was able to hold the Gators to just one run in his 4⅔ inning stint, but the Gators scored three more runs in the eighth off Vance Lovelace to make the score 9-2. Lovelace contributed to his downfall by misplaying a come-backer hit by Randy Byers with runners on first and third.

The six-foot-three lefthander leaped high to catch the bouncing ball, then bobbled it, ruining his chance to cut down Bill Wrona trying to score. But that wasn't the worst of it.

Lovelace then hurried his throw to first and sailed it 10 feet over the head of Randall. Eric Varoz wheeled around to score all the way from first and Byers scooted into third. Shane Mack scored Byers with the final run with a single.

Midland rallied late in the game, leaving runners stranded on the bases in each of the last six innings. In the sixth, they had Doyle on the ropes with two men on and one out. But the righthander, making just his third start, retired Raul Tovar and Pat Keedy on pop outs to end the threat.

Then in the seventh, with Gator ace Todd Simmons on the mound, Midland again rallied, this time with two out. With Dante Bichette already on first, Peter Coachman and King singled for a run. But this time, Randall grounded sharply to second to end the threat.

In the ninth, Coachman collected his third hit, a double to right, and scored on an rbi single by Randall, but reliever Rusty Ford retired Al Romero and Tovar to end the rally and the game.

ANGEL DUST: The loss was costly in another way for the Angels, as third baseman Keedy left the game in the sixth after taking a sharp grounder off his finger. Catcher David Heath also came out early after a wild pitch popped a blood vessel on his glove hand in the eighth...

Sherman Corbett, 4-4, 3.57 era, will start in tonight's 7 p.m. game. The ususal 6 p.m Sunday start was pushed back to accommodate the fireworks that will follow the game. It will be the fifth in a six-game set between the two teams. Midland holds a 3-1 edge...

Becker will meet Pernfors, the surprising French Open finalist whose game was honed at the University of Georgia.

"I'm at the point now where I put a little more pressure on myself, knowing that I can play on this surface," Pernfors said. "Otherwise, it feels just as well as it did in the French Open."

Asked about his dropping the first set against Giammalva, Pernfors said:

"I had problems concentrating at the beginning, which I haven't had in the other matches. I definitely won't lose the first set against Becker."

In the women's singles, Bassett will face Mandlikova and Jordan will meet Lloyd in the only fourth-round matchups between seeded players. Jordan upset Lloyd at Wimbledon in the third round in 1985.

Boston's Boyd hurls 10th win as Orioles tumble, 7-3

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Ed Romero drove in three runs and Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd won his 10th game as the first-place Boston Red Sox defeated the fading Baltimore Orioles 7-3 Saturday.

Boston's 14th victory in its last 19 road games, coupled with New York's loss to Toronto, gave the Red Sox a seven-game lead in the AL East, where all seven teams are above the .500 mark. The Orioles have lost 14 of their last 19.

Boyd, 10-5, won for the eighth time in 10 starts with relief help from Bob Stanley, who pitched the final 1 2-3 innings for his 13th save.

Boyd took a five-hit shutout into the eighth, when the Orioles scored their three runs. Eddie Murray doubled in the first run, chasing Boyd, and Stanley ended the rally despite giving up an RBI groundout to Cal Ripken and committing an error that allowed another run to score.

Romero, who had 10 RBI before the game, singled home a run in the fourth, hit a sacrifice fly in the sixth and added another RBI single in the eighth. Dwight Evans hit a two-run homer in the ninth, giving the Red Sox 15 hits for the second consecutive game.

The Red Sox scored the first of their two unearned runs in the second when Jim Rice singled, advanced on a groundout and scored when Ripken let a two-out grounder by Tony Armas go through his legs.

The second of Rice's three singles made it 2-0 in the third, and another Boston run in the fourth finished Storm Davis, 6-8. An error by second baseman Juan Bonilla opened the way for another unearned run in the sixth.

When Davis departed after Romero's RBI single in the fourth, the Red Sox had accumulated 22 hits in their last 7 1-3 innings off Baltimore pitchers.

Blue Jays 7, Yankees 4

NEW YORK — The New York Yankees suffered a club-record ninth consecutive defeat at Yankee Stadium on, losing to Toronto as Lloyd Moseby homered twice and Jimmy Key pitched a seven-hitter.

The last time the Yankees lost nine consecutive home games was in 1915 when they played in the old Polo Grounds. This is the team's 62nd season in Yankee Stadium and only in 1940 had they lost as many as eight straight.

Joe Niekro, 7-5, was knocked out in the second inning, the fifth time in the last six home games that the starting pitcher failed to last three innings.

American League

Moseby hit his 10th homer in the first, after Rance Mulliniks singled, marking the eighth straight home game in which the opposition has scored on the Yankees in the first inning. New York opponents have 18 runs on 23 hits in 46 at-bats over that span.

The Blue Jays, who have won four straight, scored again in the second on singles by Rick Leach and Ernie Whitt, a walk and a wild pitch by Niekro. Mulliniks walked to reload the bases and a third consecutive walk, to Moseby, forced Whitt home.

Alfonso Pulido relieved Niekro and allowed two runs in the fifth on Moseby's second homer and an RBI single by Jesse Barfield. The Blue Jays scored their final run in the ninth on a fielding error by relief pitcher Al Holland.

In his last three starts, Niekro has pitched just nine innings, allowing 18 runs — 16 earned — on 18 hits while walking 10.

The Yankees nicked Key, 6-5, for a run in the fourth on Mike Easler's sacrifice fly. Gary Roenicke hit a two-run homer in the sixth and added an RBI single in the eighth.

In the nine-game home losing streak, Yankee pitchers have been tagged for 81 runs and 124 hits. They also have gone 12 games at home without holding the opposition to fewer than five runs.

It was the third consecutive victory for Key, who has won six of his last eight decisions and has a 2.37 ERA over that period. He was 0-3 with a 13.27 ERA in his first six starts.

Tigers 8, Brewers 5

DETROIT — Darrell Evans hit a two-run homer and Kirk Gibson homered and scored three runs as Detroit defeated Milwaukee for its fourth consecutive victory.

Detroit, 36-35, is over .500 for the first time since May 31.

Lance Parrish singled home Gibson to break a 5-5 tie with two outs in the bottom of the seventh inning after Gibson had reached second on an error by Milwaukee second baseman Jim Gantner. Evans followed Parrish's single with his 12th homer, giving Detroit an 8-5 lead.

The Tigers started the game-winning rally off losing pitcher Bob Gibson, 1-1. Bill Campbell, 2-2, pitched the final 3 2-3 innings for the victory.

Milwaukee had tied the game 5-5 on Rob Deer's two-run homer off reliever Dave LaPoint in the fifth inning.

The Tigers took a 5-3 lead with four runs off Milwaukee starter Bill Wegman in the fourth. Chet Lemon and Pat Sheridan hit RBI singles to knock out Wegman, and Tom Brookens greeted Bob Gibson with a two-run double.

Kirk Gibson homered in the bottom of the first for Detroit, giving him four in the last four games and nine this season.

Milwaukee followed with two runs in the bottom of the first, when Detroit starter Randy O'Neal left the game after being hit by a Cecil Cooper line drive.

O'Neal failed to retire a batter, giving up a single to Ernie Riles and walking Robin Yount before facing Cooper, whose hit loaded the bases.

O'Neal, who suffered a bruised collarbone, was replaced by LaPoint before Riles and Yount scored on groundouts by Ben Oglivie and Billy Jo Robidoux.

White Sox 4, A's 1

OAKLAND, Calif. — Joel Skinner and Ron Kittle knocked in two runs apiece in the fifth inning, leading Chicago to a victory over Oakland.

Benefitting from four double plays, Chicago right-hander Richard Dotson, 6-7, allowed seven hits in eight-plus innings for the victory. Dotson gave up a double to Bruce Bochte to start the ninth and was relieved by Bob James, who earned his 11th save.

Left-hander Curt Young, 5-5, was the loser.

Skinner and Kittle have struggled at the plate this season, coming into Saturday's game with batting averages of .198 and .201, respectively. But both delivered key hits in the fourth.

Young had allowed only one hit and two baserunners going into the top of the fifth and had a 1-0 lead on Mark Davis' sacrifice fly in the second.

Twins 7, Royals 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Kirby Puckett's triple ignited a five-run fifth inning that was aided by two Kansas City errors and led the Minnesota Twins to a victory over the Royals.

Trailing 2-1, the Twins got only two hits in the fifth but were assisted by a wild pitch, two walks, and two errors.

Bert Blyleven and Neal Heaton held the Royals to eight hits. Blyleven, 6-7, worked six innings for his first victory since June 7, when he beat the Royals 4-1. Heaton, acquired in a trade with Cleveland on June 20, finished up with his first save.

Kansas City starter Danny Jackson, 4-5, gave up all seven Twins runs.

Ron Washington led off the fifth with a walk and was forced at second by Mark Davidson. With two outs, Puckett hit a sinking liner to left for a triple.

Mickey Hatcher then grounded to shortstop Buddy Biancalana, whose throw to first went into the dugout. Puckett scored and the Twins led 3-2. After Gary Gaetti walked, Tom Brunansky singled Hatcher home and Gaetti stopped at second.

Angels 9, Indians 3

ANAHEIM — Wally Joyner's eighth-inning single snapped a tie and Jerry Narron's three-run double capped a six-run inning as the California Angels beat the Cleveland Indians 9-3 Saturday night.

Neither California's Don Sutton nor Phil Niekro of the Indians, the starters in the first meeting of 300-game winners in 94 years, figured in the decision.

Cleveland's Cory Snyder hit two homers off Sutton.

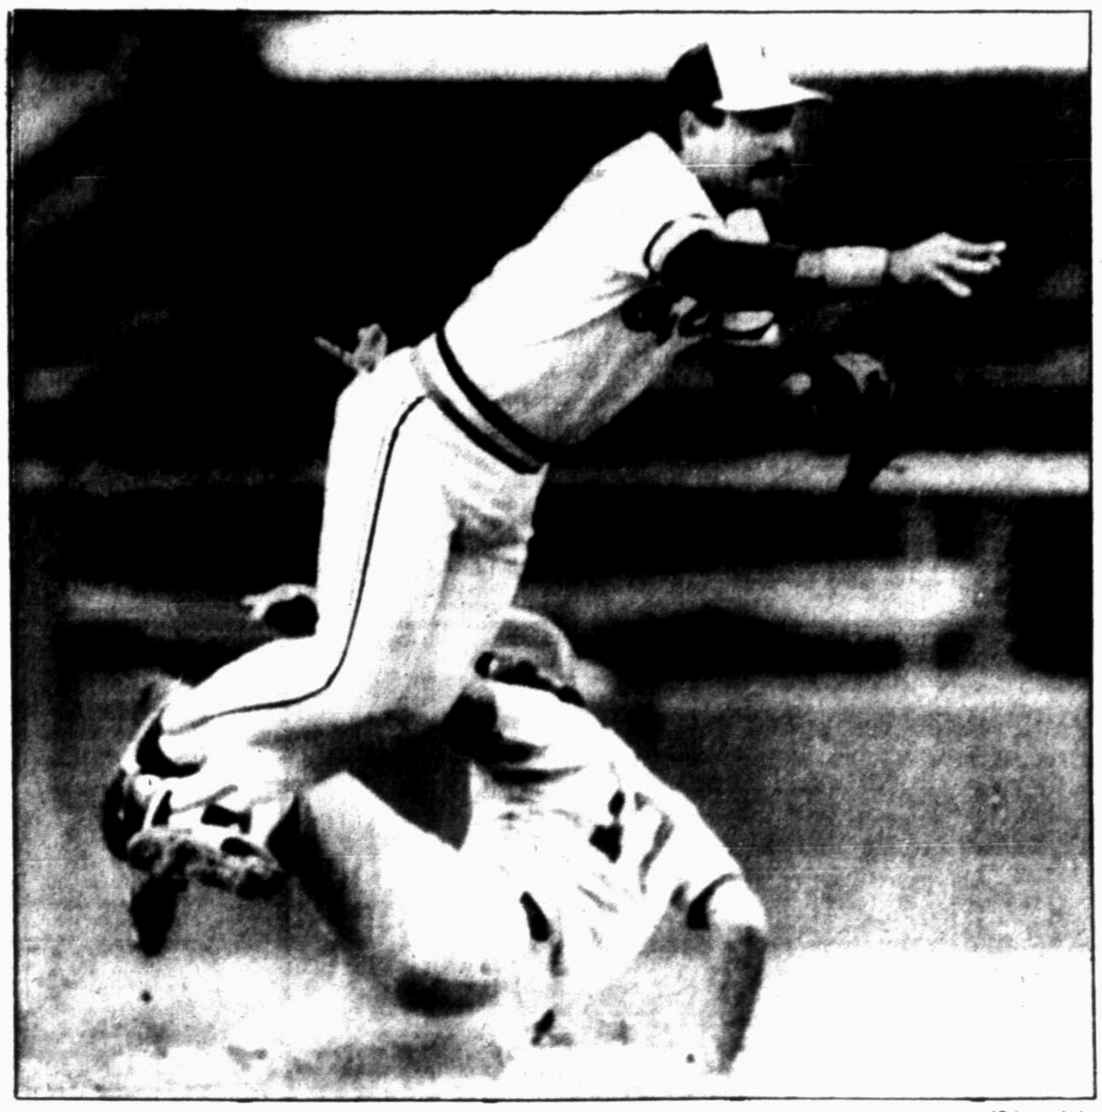

Ruppert Jones led off the eighth with a walk off John Butcher, 0-5. Butcher fumbled Gary Pettis' bunt for an error.

Joyner greeted reliever Tom Candiotti with his third hit of the game, bringing home Jones from second. With one out, Doug DeCinces singled Pettis home. Brian Downing and Rob Wilfong walked, forcing in a run. One out later, Narron doubled to center.

Doug Corbett, 2-1, went the final two innings for the win.

Sutton departed after seven innings, allowing three runs. Niekro went 6 1-3 innings.

Sutton went into the game with a record of 301-233. Niekro stood 304-256.

Andretti takes attention from father

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Michael Andretti grabbed the attention away from his famous father, Mario, by breaking the track qualifying record Saturday and earning the pole position for the $700,000 Chase Meadowlands Grand Prix Indy-car race.

The two, involved two weeks ago in one of the closest finishes in Indy-car history, will start side-by-side Sunday in the front row of the 25-car field for the 100-lap event.

Michael, a 23-year-old speedster, took the second pole of his budding career as he became the only driver to break the 100 mph barrier on the narrow, 11-turn, 1.682-mile circuit twisting over the parking lots and access roads of the Meadowlands sports complex.

Michael averaged 100.028 mph, breaking the course record of 99.412, set in Friday's time trials by Roberto Guerrero of Colombia.

The elder Andretti, who won the pole position in both previous Meadowlands events, last year setting a then-record of 98.452, also leaped over Guerrero Saturday with a fast lap averaging 99.474.

"The track might even have been a little more slippery (than on Friday)," said the younger Andretti, who added one point to his lead in the CART-PPG Indy-car series standings by winning the pole. "But the car improved, too, so it probably balanced out."

As for his fast lap, Michael said, "I was all the way. I don't think it would have gotten any quicker than that."

This is the second time the father and son have shared the front row. Mario won the pole and Michael was second at Phoenix in April in the season opener.

Two weeks ago at Portland, Ore., Michael ran out of fuel while leading and his father passed his coasting car on the final straightaway to win the race by a bare .07 of a second.

"We're keeping it in the family," said Michael, who got a kiss from his mother. "So far, it's been kind of a dream year for both of us."

"I almost have to pinch myself to believe it's really happening," said Mario, who won here in 1984. "The odds of this happening are not very good. We've got to cherish this."

Rangers spill Seattle, 5-2

SEATTLE (AP) — Jose Guzman threw a six-hitter and Tom Paciorek drove in two runs with a homer and a single Saturday night to lead the Texas Rangers to a 5-2 victory over the Seattle Mariners.

Guzman, 7-8, allowed just two walks and struck out five batters in his second complete game of the season.

Paciorek hit his second homer in the fifth inning and then singled in a run in the seventh. He had three of Texas' 15 hits. Steve Buechele also had three hits, extending his hitting streak to 12 games.

The Rangers took a 1-0 lead in the third when Pete O'Brien tripled and scored on Pete Incaviglia's sacrifice fly.

Seattle tied it in the bottom of the inning when Dave Valle led off with his first homer of the season.

In the fourth, Curtis Wilkerson singled, stole second, took third on a ground out and scored on a wild pitch by Seattle starter Jim Beattie, 0-3. Beattie, making his third start in his comeback from shoulder surgery, allowed 10 hits and three runs in five innings.

Paciorek's fifth-inning homer extended the Texas lead to 3-1.

Incaviglia singled with one out in the seventh chasing reliever Lee Guetterman. Steve Fireovid relieved and misplayed Larry Parrish's grounder, advancing Incaviglia to third. Paciorek singled Incaviglia home.

After Buechele singled to load the bases, Orlando Mercado drove the fifth run home with a sacrifice fly.

Road to luxury ends at #66 Chandelle

By GIGI MCKINNEY
Advertising Feature Writer

In the search for a new home, many factors must be considered. Basic features are expected among most homeowners, such as ample space and privacy.

One such home in this category goes several steps further. Number 66 Chandelle, quietly nestled within the Chandelle Condominiums at 2100 Wadley, has a most versatile decor exuding luxury and convenience.

As a part of a condiminium association, the residents of this unit will enjoy the full benefits of a low-maintenance lifestyle. A common area where Chandelle's residents delight in summer evenings around the pool (top left photo on the cover) with decking, and a garden patio. A maintenance cost of $210 is included in the fees/assessment for building insurance, grounds upkeep, water, pool and pool maintenance.

Approaching the front entry, lush foliage lines the walkway. Within, a modest foyer with ceramic tile directly opens into the spacious family room (top right photo on the cover). A lovely marble fireplace is the focal point of the area, with a two-sided glass cabinet acting as a transparent wall to the formal dining area. The look is elegant; the design simple.

Throughout the home, plush beige carpeting and off-white, full-length custom draperies, many with mini blind appointments, provide a more spacious look. Hardwood floors beneath can be utilized for a more "earthy" tone; and, window treatments and ceiling fans in almost every room increase its energy efficiency.

Also, secluded by a convenient cottage door from the formal dining area is a small den/study with a wet bar and refrigerator, several built-in shelves with cabinets and a powder room.

For more informal dining occasions, a breakfast area stands just beyond the kitchen with parquet tile floor and all of the conveniences a real home has to offer: refrigerator-/freezer, cooktop/oven, microwave, disposal, dishwasher, trash compactor, a water purifier and smoke alarm. Convenient to the two-car carport with two storage areas, this cooking area is a chef's haven.

The sequestered master bedroom suite (bottom right photo on the cover) is not only spacious; it's quite liveable. A Hollywood-style bath and separate dressing areas with immense walk-in closets easily accommodates the needs for today's family's busy lifestyle.

A second bedroom with a private bath and separate vanity area provides ample space for off-season garment storage, with two large closets.

Throughout this home, luxury is the order of the day. Currently listed by Don Harvey Realtors, this lovely domain is priced at $120,000.

Broken walls add to fire hazard

By H. RAY KING

The breaching of non-masonry walls, particularly in multi-family dwellings, is becoming a critical problem for fire-fighters to overcome when they are called to the scene of an apartment or condominium fire. The all-too-common problem adds fuel to a fire and keeps the fire-fighters struggling to control a blaze.

According to research by the Building Advisory Council of Texas (BAC), non-masonry walls, which are usually made up of layers of three-quarter-inch thick gypsum board, in a large number of new complexes are being perforated after construction and inspection by the fire department. Potentially dangerous situations are being created as holes are drilled and sections of the walls are knocked out for general maintenance work, the installation of cable television lines and even fire-alarm systems.

"We're seeing these non-masonry walls in apartment buildings perforated routinely," states Randy Corbin, fire chief in Lewisville. "In just about every apartment building it's becoming basic procedure for workmen to pretend the walls aren't even there."

Corbin speaks from experience. A company in his department responded to a blaze in a new apartment complex and found smoke billowing through a four-foot square hole which had been knocked out of a on-masonry wall for the installation of a one-quarter-inch thick TV cable. Due to their quick response time the fire was controlled before it had a chance to spread through the adjoining attic and cause further damage.

Due to the rapid increase in number of multi-family residences across the state, fire officials agree it is difficult to keep a watchful eye on the walls in such structures after the initial fire inspection.

A possible recourse against the destruction of non-masonry walls would be to construct the wall of masonry or concrete. This type of wall would not only help deter unwanted penetration, but would also give a complex further protections by serving as a fire wall.

The BAC feels there should be a two-hour fire wall between each living unit, best provided by a masonry or concrete construction.

The BAC is working to educate builders, developers, architects, city officials and the general pubic on the dangers of using combustible building materials in low-rise, multi-family construction. It is the BAC's belief that the predominant use of such materials in Texas' growing multi-family housing market is creating even greater fire risks.

NAR expects modest economic rebound in second half of 1986

WASHINGTON—Lower interest rates, a depreciating dollar and lower oil prices likely will stimulate consumer spending as well as residential and business investment during the second half of this year, Dr. Richard W. Peach, vice president of forecasting and policy analysis for the National Association of Realtors predicts.

The decline in interest rates already has boosted housing construction, which should provide strong stimulus to the economy over the remainder of this year, Peach said in his latest "Outlook for the Economy and Real Estate."

However, the expected rebound will be modest as restraint in government spending associated with the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction act, expected cut backs in auto production and weakness in business fixed investment put downward pressure on overall economic activity, according to Peach.

"During 1987, growth of consumer spending and residential investment should taper off but should be more than offset by more rapid growth of business investment and exports," Peach said.

The economist said the sharp and sustained decline of the dollar since the end of last year should put U.S. producers on a much more competitive footing and should help improve the balance of trade.

Following are highlights from Peach's June "Outlook for the Economy and Real Estate."

Real (inflation-adjusted) gross national product is expected to increase nearly two percent this quarter before jumping to nearly 3.5 percent in the third quarter. A gradual downward trend is likely beginning in the fourth quarter and lasting through next year.

Real GNP growth for all of 1986 should be about 2.5 percent, and for all of 1987 it should be about three percent.

Interest rates, despite recent fluctuations, are expected to turn gradually downward. Thirty-year, fixed-rate mortgage rates (not including points are expected to decline from an average of 9.9 percent this quarter to 9.3 percent by the second quarter of next year.

The average initial interest rate for one-year, adjustable-rate mortgages is expected to fluctuate in the eight percent range for the next year.

Due to lower energy and food prices, inflation is expected to slow to two percent this year from a 3.5 percent rate in 1985. While inflation may accelerate modestly next year, it is expected to remain in the three to four percent range through 1988.

With slow growth in employment expected for the foreseeable future, the national unemployment rate should hover around seven percent through 1987.

Rising home prices will be offset by declining mortgage interest rates and improvements in family income, keeping housing in the affordable range for the typical family. The expected result is continued strength in housing starts activity and further improvements in existing-home sales.

Add-on interest is easily figured often misleading

COLLEGE STATION——Those who lend money to consumers on installment plans–car loans, second mortgages on homes, other durable goods or signature loans–often state the interest rate as an "add-on" percentage rate.

Dr. Jack P. Friedman, the Julio S. Laguarta Professor of Real estate and a CPA at the Texas Real Estate Research Center (TRERC) at Texas A&M University, explained that "add-on" is an easy method of computing interest, but it fails to disclose the true interest rate on borrowed money. I often misleads the buyer-borrower into thinking the loan is a good deal.

Ultimately, the borrower is instructed to sign a statement that discloses the APR (annual percentage rate), which is the true cost of money. By then, however, the transaction is cinched and few can explain the APR, even if the consumer were bold enough to ask about it.

"Add-on interest means that interest is added to the principal at the inception of the loan. For example, a $10,000 principal, four-year loan with eight percent add-on interest requires $3,200 of interest," Friedman said, "or $800 of interest is charged for each year. This computation doesn't provide for less interest as the loan is amortized or paid down, so the stated rate is too low, often misleadingly so."

By contrast, the APR is an effective interest rate which considers the actual amounts of cash advanced and repaid, and the timing of cash payments transferred from a borrower to a lender and vice versa.

'On the Road Again?' for kids only...

By PAT PAXTON

So you're "On the Road Again?" Take heart, Young America, you are not alone! It's estimated that each year over 34.5 million children under 12 say goodbye to friends and come to terms with being the new kid on the block. If you find yourself in this predicament, here are some helpful hints that may make this move your best ever. Many of these ideas will be helpful to parents, so sit down with your folks and share this article with them.

Pat Paxton

It's hoepful that you'll be included early in the announcement of the move. This will give you time to adjust rather than time to worry. It's normal to be sad about leaving your old life behind but helpful parents will point out some advantages of where you'll be moving.

Be sure to let your teachers know as soon as possible about your move. Some teachers are amenable to having a going away party in the classroom with your parents supplying the snacks and drinks. A farewell party could be held at your house too. Take pictures of your friends and have an address book on hand for friends to sign. You may want to hand out pre-stamped postcards with your name and new address. That way you can get some mail your first weeks at the new home.

Participate in the "Weeding Out" process. Sometimes parents aren't as attached to a particular toy as you are. On moving day perhaps your furniture and belongings can be the last on the van so that they can be the first to be taken out on arrival. Getting your room set up first will give you lots to do while your folks oversee the rest of the unpacking.

Do you have a pet that will be making the move with you? Discuss with your parents how the pet will be cared for during the move. On moving day you may want to be responsible for keeping the dog or cat out of the mover's way. If your pet will not be making the move, begin right away to find it a happy new home.

An early visit to your new school will prove helpful. Sit down with the principal and get answers to questions you may have about the school: How large is the school? What is the curriculum? Will any foreign languages be taught? Are there special supplies required such as a gym uniform?

Be sure your parent has those special documents that are necessary for enrollment: your birth certificate and doctor's record of immunizations. Arrange with your old school to have school records forwarded to your new school. See if you can get a pen pal from the new school before you arrive. You will get a good insight on your new school from your pen pal plus have a built-in friend when you get there. When you arrive at your new school, try not to brag about your old school or home. Be a good "listener" in the first few days.

Remember, people have lots of different feelings about moving. Sometimes they're excited and happy. Sometimes they're sad and upset. But no matter how your favorite grownups are feeling, they're still the same people who love and care for you very much. Tell them how you feel because sharing feelings is an important way of growing.

Moving is a big job for every person in the family. There will be lots of ways you can help to make the move a happy one and to feel good about yourself in the process.

Texas housing less affordable than the national average

COLLEGE STATION— Housing was less affordable in Texas than the United States as a whole in 1985 following a trend beginning in 1982, according to the Texas Real Estate Research Center (TRERC) at Texas A&M University.

Dr. Arthur Wright, a TRERC research economist, said the index for Texas for 1985 was .95, slightly less than the threshold of affordable housing represented by an index number of 1.0, compared to the United States index of 1.03.

The Texas Housing Affordability Index (THAI) is based on typical monthly principal and interest payments for the average price of homes sold in a given area. If the payment is equal to 33.33 percent of the monthly median disposable household income for that area, then the affordability index equals one.

"Until 1982, housing had been less affordable nation wide than in Texas, but the strong national economic recovery reversed this relationship," Wright said.

The TRERC economist has calculated the index back to 1973, and although the Texas and United States figures were similar in that year, by 1978 the affordability index for Texas was 20 percentage points higher than the nation-wide index of 1.15.

"The entire nation has experienced substantially higher interest rates since 1973; however, rapidly rising prices of housing in Texas caused mortgage payments to rise 402 percent to $757 while nation-wide payments rose only 256 percent to $757 while nation-wide payments rose only 256 percent to $688," the TRERC economist explained.

The average priced home sold in Texas in 1985 was $92,000, compared to $90,500 for the United States. The effective mortgage interest rate in Texas was 11.54 and in the United States was 11.07. Median monthly disposable household income was $2,167 for Texas and $2,125 for the nation as a whole.

More than 9 percent employed Texans work in real estate industry

COLLEGE STATION—The Texas real estate industry directly employed 477,800 people in 1983, or 9.3 percent of state-wide employment, according to research conducted by the Texas Real Estate Research Center (TRERC) at Texas A&M University.

Dr. Charles Gilliland, a TRERC assistant research economist, examined the real estate industry's impact on the Texas economy using statistics compiled by government agencies.

"Both as a store of wealth and as the basis for business activities, real estate plays a significant role in the Texas economy. Property development alone employed two thirds of the Texans in the real estate industry in 1983, or about six percent of the state's work force, providing more jobs and income than all other segments of the industry combined," the TRERC economist said.

Property valued at more than $703.1 billion paid 88 percent of all Texas school taxes in 1984. The estimated market value of all properties was $47,943 per capita with a tax level of $257 for each Texan. Single-family home investment alone was $16,586 per capita and comprised nearly one third of the total estimated market value.

"The real estate industry traditionally has been defined to include financial services, brokerage services, property development services and specialized services," Gilliland explained.

In 1983, real estate offices comprised approximately 13 percent of all business establishments in Texas and provided $8.6 billion in income for their employees and sales associates. These figures do not include independent contractors and, because almost all real estate brokers and fee appraisers operate as independent contractors, much of the employment in brokerage and appraisal is omitted from the official statistics.

The real estate industry income amounted to approximately 10 percent of 1983 state-wide income providing industry employees and sales associates with an $18,097 average income, exceeding the state-wide average by three percent.

Rents and royalties totaled $4.8 billion in 1983 and comprised three percent of personal income in Texas. Adding those wages and salaries paid to employees directly involved in the real estate industry in 1982, and personal income attributable to real estate totaled $12.7 billion. All personal income in Texas amounted to $174.2 billion in 1982, with real estate contributing about seven percent.

The indirect effects of real estate are difficult to measure. Suppliers and manufacturers of lumber, sheetrock, large appliances, carpets and other materials depend largely on real estate construction. Governmental activities involve real estate through recording transfers and providing public services. Income and employment effects of these related industries are not calculated because they cannot be estimated from available data.

Buy now at lower interest rates... or buy later at possibly lower prices?

Joanne Langston

This is a dilemna currently facing many home purchasers, whether first-time, transfer or move-up buyers. It appears that, as predicted, interest rates have bottomed out and are beginning to creep up. Mortgages readily available 8 weeks ago at 9½%. are now costing borrowers 10½%. As a partial offset, however, local home prices have been moderating, and may possibly continue to do so.

How high will interest rates rise and how low will prices fall? It is anyone's guess, but let me point out that to offset even a modest 2% interest rate increase the value of a $100,000 property must depreciate 14.5% to $85,000 if a buyer is going to maintain equal monthly payments. As an example:

10½% todays' interest rate
$731.80 monthly PI payment will amortize
$80,000 loan amount (80% loan to value)
$100,000 purchase price

12½% interest rates (2% rise)
$731.80 monthly PI payment will amortize
$68,500 loan amount (80% loan to value)
$85,500 purchase price

We know interest rates are rising; the question for most would be home buyers is not only will property values depreciate, but will they depreciate enough to offset this rise?

Pictured are three of the winners of the recent 4-H District VI Fashion Show. Each contestant constructed and modeled their clothing entry for judges. Winners of the event included, from left, Kelley Bulman, first place in evening and specialty wear in the 12- to 13-year-old division; Robbie Kleck, first place in active sports and specialty wear, 14- to 19-year-old division; and Jolynn Vannoy, third place winner in the third grade to 11-year-old division.

The talented young models swirled across the stage, displaying the latest in stylish and colorful fashions to an enthusiastic audience of about 275.

This fashion scene was in Midland, not New York, as the District VI 4-H Fashion Show was presented Tuesday at the Holiday Inn Holidome. The 107 young entrants, representing 23 West Texas counties, modeled clothing they had made themselves.

To qualify for the district fashion show, contestants had to be named winners in their own counties. District VI, stretching from Howard County to El Paso County, and from Terrell County to Reeves and Loving Counties, "probably takes up more area than any other district," said Marion Farr, Midland County extension agent for home economics.

Contestants were separated into three divisions by age: third-graders to 11 years old, 12 to 13 years old and 14 to 19 years old, Mrs. Farr said.

The youngest contestants made clothing in three categories: daytime wear, active sportswear or specialty wear. Entrants in the second division fashioned tailored daywear, non-tailored daywear, active sportswear or evening and specialty wear; and clothing categories for contestants in the senior division were non-tailored daywear, tailored daywear, active sports and specialty wear or evening wear.

Each contestant constructed and modeled only one outfit, Mrs. Farr said. "They make the garment and it fits into one of the categories."

Winners in the senior division — 14-19 years old — qualify for the state competition in Austin in July, she said.

Because sewing is no longer considered "just for girls," several boys participated in Tuesday's show. "We've got one from Midland in the sewing division," said Mrs. Farr. "This is his first year in clothing (division)."

The fashion show "rotates throughout the district," she said. "If it's a big success it may be here again — we've had more district functions since we got the new facility and are better equipped to handle everything."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Last weekend's overcast skies and rainy weather did not dampen the spirits of the bridal party nor the guests at the Saturday morning wedding of Holly Hartwell and Phillip Huffines. Following the elegant and very sentimental ceremony in the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity, the assemblage moved downtown to the Petroleum Club for a festive champagne reception in the Atrium, followed by a seated luncheon in the upstairs ballroom.

The newlyweds departed in the reception in a 1957 (the year of the groom's birth) restored Chevrolet. They are now on a honeymoon to Hawaii, Thailand, Hong Kong and Japan. Upon their return, they will reside in Dallas, where Phillips is self-employed in real estate. Holly, daughter of Barbara and Charles Hartwell, was employed with the Department of Energy in Washington, D.C., prior to her marriage. She also has worked in Vice President Bush's White House office.

The couple were feted at numerous pre-nuptial parties. Among the wedding week festivities was a cocktail party at the Pinnacle Club. Host couples were Becky and Steven Marsh of Dallas, Sandra and Reg Hyer, Judith and James Devenport and Hazel and Keith Somerville. A bridesmaids' luncheon was held at Midland Country Club, with Holly's sister, Milby Hartwell; Betty (Mrs. W.D.) Barnes, Anne (Mrs. Ralph) Lea, Katrena (Mrs. William R. "Bob") Cain and Ruth (Mrs. Richard) Story as the hostesses.

A bridal tea was given in the home of Jody (Mrs. Jack) Blake. Jody's co-hostesses were her daughter, Carolyn (Mrs. David) Johnston of Houston, and her daughters-in-law, Tia (Mrs. Bruce) Blake and Mary (Mrs. Jack, Jr.) Blake, along with Nancy (Mrs. H.L.) Sloan and daughter, Robin.

The groom' father, J.L. Huffines of Lewisville, hosted the black tie rehearsal dinner at the Plaza Club.

Phillip's mother, author and consultant Launa Huffines of Mill Valley, Calif., came in for the wedding from a promotional tour for her new book, "Connecting ... With All the People in Your Life," which has recently been published by Harper & Row. Her second book, "Joyful Mothers Have Joyful Children," is to be published soon.

MINUET CLUB DEB Patsy Elaine Hinchey was honored at a brunch last weekend in the home of Donna (Mrs. John) Yuronka. Co-hostesses with Donna were her daughter, Sarah, and Susan Huff and her daughter, Dede.

Among the guests were two and three generations of Midland families. Special guests were the honoree's mother, Patsy Yeager Hinchey; her grandmother, Patsy (Mrs. W. Arthur) Yeager Sr., and the Yuronkas' houseguest, Margot Elder from Sydney, Australia. She and Sarah became friends while they were exchange students in Germany.

As one of this year's debs, Patsy Elaine is following in her mother's footsteps. Patsy was in the first group of debutantes to be presented by the Minuet Club in 1956.

The guest of honor is a 1985 graduate of Miss Porter's in Farmington, Conn. She attended Pomona College in California this past year and plans to enter Texas A&M University in the fall.

A TENNIS AND SWIMMING PARTY recently honored Carol Drickey, bride-elect of Gus Eckert.

Following a round of tennis at Midland College, the women (all tennis friends of Carol) met at the home of Doris (Mrs. Donald) Brotherton for swimming and a salad luncheon. The group presented Carol with a microwave oven and microwave accessories.

The festive decor included multi-colored balloons, red and white checked table cloths and yellow tableware. Co-hostesses were Aida Dunlap and Neva (Mrs. Dick) Rousselot.

The couple are planning a July 26 wedding. Carol is the daughter of Ramona and Paul Drickey, and Gus is the son of Opal Eckert.

SIX MIDLAND GIRLS are currently attending the first session of Camp Waldemar at Kerrville. They are Christine Cowden, daughter of Nancy and Price Cowden; Jenny Hyde, daughter of Nancy and Woody Woodman; Kelly Boldrick, daughter of Suzy and Jim Boldrick, Bridget Burleson, daughter of Cindy Burleson; Alyson Aldridge, daughter of Roberta and Charles Fraser, and Kendall Collins, daughter of Susan Askins.

Longtime Waldemar campers Kathy Boles and Julie Crain are serving as first-time counselors this year. Both students at UT-Austin, they are the daughters of Norma Jean and Bud Boles and Carol and Pete Crain.

SUZANNE SMITH, who became the bride of John David Marks Saturday, was honored at a recent miscellaneous shower in the Fellowship Hall of Alamo Heights Baptist Church.

The honoree's chosen colors of peach and white were featured in the decorations.

The hostesses were Ann (Mrs. Dean) Constable, Sherry (Mrs. W.B.) Franklin, Lou Ann (Mrs. Loie) Badgett, Tammy (Mrs. Clint) Yonts, Nadine (Mrs. Eddie) McHugh, Janice (Mrs. Bill) Strickland, Virginia (Mrs. Carroll) Nail and Ruby (Mrs. Len) Killough.

Special guests were the couple's mothers, Jo (Mrs. John) Smith and Mary Lea (Mrs. Kenneth) Marks.

Marilyn McKnight Harrison is social columnist for the Reporter-Telegram.

Company designs new Hug-A-lines

NEW YORK (AP) — Say goodbye to the boring backpack. Hug-A-World, a division of Dover Handbags, helps chase schoolday blahs with its collection of acrylic plush animals whose arms and feet literally wrap around the child.

The line comes in a pig, koala bear, dog, lamb, monkey and cat and straps to the child's back. It has a colorful nylon sack attached to hold books.

Since the success of the Hug-A-Pet line, the company has added Hug-A-Kids backpacks, which feature a football player, cheerleader, baseball player and girl in overalls, among others.

For fall the company will add Hug-A-Trons, loveable robot backpacks and Pet Sets, which consist of knitted pet hats and matching mittens or earmuffs with matching digital watches.

Fashion play clothes designed for children

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — The days of tossing your tykes a T-shirt and jeans and considering them well-dressed are gone. This summer, play clothes pack the punch of adult-styled fare.

Frolicking prints. Bold, look-at-me hues. Natural fibers. Carefree mix-and-matches.

Like their parents, children drop their guard once summer rolls around. Practicality gives way to wit, whimsy and comfort. The knee-grazing jams making a splash in menswear create waves with little boys. Knit dressing so important for Mom shows up in the little girls department as color-splashed cotton knit dresses with trendy dropped waistlines.

"We modify what's happening in the junior and missy markets to make the children's collection more whimsical," says Jennifer Falconer of LizKids, a subsidiary of Liz Claiborne. "For summer, we did a lot of cropped and knit tops, loose shorts, cropped pants and the all-important jam. Colors are upbeat and fun."

Although labels from powerhouses such as Liz Claiborne, Guess? and Merona dress the whole family, the designers realize creating for kids involves more than scaling down adult sizes. "We have a separate design team working just on Esprit Kids," says Bonnie Pyle of Esprit, the San Francisco-based company noted for its kicky, fun-loving clothes. Esprit launched its children's line four years ago.

Esprit's punch lies in its selection of peppy prints and vibrant tints. Cherry-red firecrackers snap and pop across pink cotton jeans. Juicy pink and green peaches dot a royal camp shirt. Electric-bright cartoon characters scamper across elastic waist shorts and coordinating big shirts.

The designs seem to work. Esprit Kids is so successful that this spring, the company debuted a companion collection for younger children ages 3 to 6.

"The line was launched to meet customer demand," Pyle says. "We found the smaller sizes in Esprit Kids sold out of the stores so quickly because mothers were buying them for their 4- to 6-year-olds. They just rolled up the pants or sleeves and let the kids grow into them."

Experts attribute the blast of fashion awareness blowing through children's wear to baby boomers who have started families. The latest boom has pushed industry sales from $10 billion in 1979 to $14.7 billion in 1984, the most recent year for which statistics are available. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, designers and retailers can expect this peak to continue for the next five years.

"Women are having children later in life," says Margaret Marten, a Dallas free-lance children's wear designer. "They see their children as an extension of their ego."

According to Marten, the 32-year-old woman with her first baby has developed her own fashion savvy and calls upon it when choosing children's wear.

Growth data used to update sketches

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

If a 3- or 4-year-old child is abducted, what are the chances of recognizing the child years later from an old snapshot on a milk carton?

Not very good, says a Texas biomedical illustration expert who is using statistical growth data to bring old snapshots up to date. Of 30 missing children sketched by Lewis Sadler of the University of Texas Health Science Center at Dallas and his associates, eight have been found. All had been abducted by one of their parents in a custody dispute.

In two tests of the process on children who are not missing, the actual measurements match the predictions 70 to 80 percent of the time, Sadler said — close enough for a good visual match.

ASK DR. RUTH

Broken hearts have way of mending

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Q. I am 18 and I was a virgin until a month ago when I went to bed with a man 20 years older because I loved him and he seemed to be crazy about me. Also, we were a little stoned. He never called me, so two weeks later I called him. He was glad to hear from me, but didn't call after that. I know you'll say to wash that man right out of my hair, but I can't. I'll never get over him — never.

A. OK, I see that you are in no condition to hear that advice. So, instead suppose you try something else: Tell your story to someone you can trust — a favorite aunt or a close friend, someone who will listen and keep an eye on you for a while. Because even if you soak your pillow with tears at night, you still need someone a little more responsive.

Now, think about this. You will never forget him. Your heart is permanently broken, I agree. But you will go on like that for a while and then one day the sun will shine and you will notice it, a bird will chirp and you'll hear it. You'll have a moment of human happiness. And another one, and another. Your heart will still be broken, but you will find life still has something in it.

And let me tell you something: Everywhere you see people smiling and laughing, and 93.2 percent of them have broken hearts. Think about that. And please, if you do something for love, be sure the other person isn't just stoned or looking for sexual release.

Q. She seems to go for me, but I'm wary of her. I think she may expect too much. I'm inexperienced with women and she seems confident and with it. That scares me off, I must admit. I don't want to be compared with more experienced guys.

A. We all have self-protective feelings, which are not always wrong. By no means. But sometimes a guy is sure the girl is experienced and has had at least a dozen great lovers in her past, when the fact is her experience is limited.

Her air of knowing life's secrets is half show biz and half youthful assurance based on nothing. This girl you describe may have been closer to someone than you have ever been, but the chances are you compare favorably or she wouldn't be noticing you.

And, if she is free to date now, her great loves of the past have cooled, right? You will get a much more reassuring impression of her, very likely, by spending time with her and listening to her. I'll bet that if you go with her for a while and then split up, it won't be because of all those heroes who preceded you.

Q. My wife left me four years ago and I am still without a female companion. A young guy whose life is messed up lives with me in my house. He pays no rent, but that's OK. We are company for each other. Not gay, but people think we are. I have the feeling I'm drifting into a pattern I don't want. I'm not really looking for a new woman.

A. Don't worry about being tagged as gay. That's the least of your problems. You say it's OK that your friend pays no rent; I say it's not OK, it's all wrong for him and for you. You can help a friend over a rough spot, but if the spot goes on and on, it isn't a spot but a lifestyle.

If you accept him as a dependent, you make one of him, and he has a right to expect your continued support unless you tell him he has to take charge of his life, pay his way, get some kind of job if he has none and go for professional help if he needs it.

Rehabilitating him is too big a project for you to handle. Get out and meet other people, men and women, who can give companionship without being paid for it.

DEAR ABBY

Mother regrets decision against adoption

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am the mother of a teen-aged unwed mother. "Lucy" is 16. Her baby's father left town when he found out Lucy was pregnant. Lucy begged her father and me to let her keep her son. I felt he should have been placed for adoption, but I allowed my love for Lucy to overrule my good sense, so I let her keep the baby, stood by her and paid for everything.

As soon as the baby was born, Lucy reverted to being an irresponsible teen-ager, and guess who is raising her child? We are!

Abby, we love our grandson, but we are 50 years old, and if we had wanted another child we would have had one 15 years ago. I know there is nothing you can do about our situation, but I need to say this: I was right in the first place. The child should have been placed for adoption, but it's too late now. — TRAPPED GRANDMA

DEAR TRAPPED: It is not too late to sit down with your daughter and let her know firmly that if she does not accept the responsibility for her child, he could still be put up for adoption or placed in a foster home. If you and your husband feel that you are too old to raise a child, then you are. Better the boy should be in a home that considers him a blessing and not a burden.

DEAR ABBY: I have a friend I see very often. She's a nice person, but she has a very irritating habit that drives me crazy. No matter what I start talking about, she always turns the conversation back to herself or someone in her family. If I start to tell her about my daughter, she doesn't even let me finish; she starts in about her daughter.

Most of the time she goes on and on just talking about herself and her family and her experiences and her this and her that, and she doesn't seem one bit interested in anything I have to say.

Maybe if you print this, she will recognize herself, and give someone else a chance. — IRRITATED AND HURT

DEAR IRRITATED: There are a lot of people like your friend, but they are too insensitive and egocentric to recognize themselves in this column. You say this friend is a "nice" person whom you see often, so why not be frank with her? Tell her you are hurt, and find it irritating when she always turns the conversation back to herself. You will be doing her a favor. And if your frankness damages your friendship, what have you lost? The company of a person whose insensitivity you find irritating to the point of driving you crazy.

DEAR ABBY: Will you kindly do an old man of 95 a favor and print the enclosed prayer? Everyone who has ever loved an animal will bless you, as I do. — PATRICK FITZGIBBONS, KALAMAZOO, MICH.

DEAR PATRICK FITZGIBBONS: Yes!

A PRAYER FOR ANIMALS

Hear our humble prayer, O God, for our friends, the animals. Especially for animals who are suffering; for any that are hunted or lost or deserted or frightened or hungry; for all that must be put to death. We entreat for them all thy mercy and pity. And for those who deal with them, we ask a heart of compassion, gentle and kindly words. Make us true friends of the animals and so to share the blessings of the merciful. — Albert Schweitzer

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to tell you how I got my children to write their thank-you notes: It was a running battle with my three sons while they were growing up. I finally told them they could write their thank-you notes whenever they felt like it, but the rule in our house was: You can't eat it, wear it, spend it, play with it or use it until the thank-you note was written.

As for the spelling and grammar — they were on their own. All I did was give them the postage stamp.

You'd be surprised at how fast they get their notes written. — KAY C., OAKHURST, CALIF.

AT WIT'S END

Some things seem to go on forever...

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

Dorothy Parker once described "eternity" as a ham and two people.

A close second would be a Thanksgiving turkey and two people or split pea soup and a family of six. But eternity is not all nibbles and leftovers. There are other ways to die slowly.

Did you ever have a child tell you about the movie he has just seen? It's the best argument I know for having children while you still think sleep is a fad, like the Hula Hoop and mood rings. They will start the story with the action, cut to the ending and finish with the beginning. In between, they will stuff their mouth with food, answer the phone, go to the bathroom and at the end of two hours accuse you of not paying attention.

Eternity can also be an ugly sale carpet that will outlive George Burns. It's never the pretty ones that match everything, never show stain or dirt. Oh no. It's the carpet that when the light hits it looks like a blob of mustard gone bad.

Eternity can be a line. We've all been in lines that threaten to keep us shuffling our feet for the rest of our lives, but there is none like the lines of governmental departments. There's the post office lines at Christmas, the lines to pay traffic tickets, the voter registration office, the passport office, not to mention the line for your driver's license. I once stood in that line so long my vision deteriorated.

A friend of mine said eternity was attending her husband's college reunion. While her own reunion had been full of bright, stimulating people, who were changing the course of life as we know it in the Western world, she found her husband a product of a class of wrinkled dullards who stood around eating bait off crackers and talking about their cats' hysterectomies.

As her eyes were glazing over, she made a signal for her husband to leave when she realized it was only 7:30.

Time is strange. A single minute can leap and bound recklessly, making you want to squeeze it for a few extra seconds to extract everything you can from it. Or it can stop dead, turn on you, and torture you.

Everyone has endured "eternity" from the woman who swears her pregnancy lasted 13 months, to the anxious moment when they punch your credit card numbers into a computer and wait until approval is given before they give you your purchase.

Whatever it is, we rarely learn from it. I'm still buying hams ... for the two of us.

Survey researches shoe-buying habits

NEW YORK (AP) — Shoe shopping is a lonely business for American women, according to a Better Homes and Gardens survey.

The majority of women respondents, nearly 65 percent, said they usually shop for shoes alone. Those who don't go it alone shop with their husbands or a female friend most often.

Comfort is more important than styling and quality in determing these shoppers' shoes selections. Over 85 percent said comfort was a prime consideration in choosing shoes.

The respondents said they buy an average of four pairs of street shoes annually, at an average cost of $33.28 a pair.

Authors: 'Prince Charming' myth still clung to by many women

Copley News Service

Even if she wears size 10B, many a smart, single, successful career woman still thinks Prince Charming is going to turn up.

Forget the glass slipper, as long as he's handsome, dynamic, charming, articulate, self-assured, sensitive, successful, perfect.

Dr. Melvyn Kinder has talked to a lot of women who still cling to the Prince Charming myth. That's the first chapter of "Smart Women — Foolish Choices," the book he wrote with another clinical psychologist, Dr. Connell Cowan.

Published a year ago, it stayed on The New York Times best-seller list for nine months. Having already logged about 180 interviews, Kinder is back promoting the newly released paperback about otherwise smart women who make foolish choices when it comes to men.

As attitudes and expectations about contemporary love relationships changed, the two doctors, who set up their clinic in Beverly Hills, Calif., saw a lot of confused patients. The same questions kept popping up about the "wrong men." So they wrote their own book, crediting part of its success to the male perspective and an optimistic approach.

Kinder and Cowan have now organized the Center for Relationship Studies in Los Angeles. Hoping to reach more people than they could through individual practice alone, they give many workshops and lectures and have produced an audiotape called "Smart Women, Smart Choices."

But now about those foolish choices. First, here are some common mistakes Kinder sees smart women make:

■ Seeking Prince Charming: "There's no one out there who's perfect."

■ Changing the clam: Emotionally guarded, he's not likely to open up, or be a very loving guy.

"Some wounded quality, some vulnerability in him gives the impression that there's some love behind all of that. So women will take this kind of man on as a rehabilitation project. Part of the motivation to do that again goes back to an old notion, 'If I can get this man to change, to blossom, that will be a validation of me and my femininity.'"

■ Going after married men: "Married men look better because they have a nest, they're more self-assured, they have someone to go home to, they're not dealing with the fear of being rejected. They're dealing with stolen moments so they have the time to be warm and sensitive, yet in the same manner home with his wife, he'll say, 'Don't bother me, I don't want to hear about the kids' problems.'"

CNS Graphic

■ Communicating desperation: No matter how desperate, a woman should look at a date as an experience unto itself and not project into the future.

"What happens when you start looking beyond, you communicate a little of that edge, that hunger, and men get a little frightened by that."

■ Sitting around, waiting: To meet men, women must mount a campaign. Go out there, join organizations, get involved in political, business and church groups. Go to classes, anywhere that people congregate. There are many ways to begin a social network. Don't forget your married friends and women friends might know someone.

Here's some of Kinder's advice for getting smart:

■ Let go of expectations: Don't walk into dating situations loaded with preconceptions; don't be overly critical. The other person feels it and starts feeling guarded, defensive.

■ Broaden expectations: Men can be fascinating, tough, courageous, risk-taking in their own way, whereas the kind of flashy, slick kind of guy could be a marshmallow underneath and not have any real character, real moral fiber and doesn't really take ethical positions. Give men time, don't make any quick judgments. Eighty percent of the women are chasing 20 percent of the men because they are too particular. They're using the old criteria of seeking men with more education, more money, etc.

■ Learn to like men: Find out who they really are. Some women don't like men the same way they like their friends. When they learn to like men, men are drawn to them

Book written for teens

NEW YORK (AP) — There's a new beauty book on the market that is specifically aimed at teen-age girls.

"The Make-Over: A Teen's Guide to Looking and Feeling Beautiful" was written by Jane Parks-McKay, an image consultant and modeling instructor.

The book stresses a person's inner beauty as opposed to superficial looks, Ms. Parks-Mckay said.

"I tell people to like themselves. There will be good points and bad points. You have to decide what you can do about them," said the author, who runs her own pre-modeling school in Capitola, Calif.

Written conversationally, she asks her readers to ask themselves, "Who I am?" and then list 20 things she loves to do to make sure she knows what she wants out of life.

After that, deciding your individual style and the best clothing for your figure becomes easier, she says.

Midland Memorial Hospital:

Questions and answers addressing changes in Medicare

Editors Note: Along with the many changes that have occurred at Midland Memorial Hospital over the last year, the facility also has made an administrative change — the creation of a new position, that of a liaison between physicians and the hospital. The following interview, conducted by MMH spokeswoman Lisa Ball, is an excerpt from the Midland Memorial Hospital "Headliner" and addresses changes in Medicare affecting both MMH and area residents.

James Humphreys Jr., M.D., was recently selected to serve on the Quality Assurance Committee of the Texas Medical Foundation as one of seven physicians in the state of Texas. Following is an interview with him concerning the Committee and various aspects of the Prospective Payment System.

Q:What is the role of the Quality Assurance Committee of the Texas Medical Foundation?

A:When the Health Care Finance Administration (Medicare) started the Prospective Pay System, they said they were interested in the quality of care. To monitor cost and quality of care, they contracted with agencies in each of the states to ensure that the care rendered was appropriate and that it was rendered in an appropriate setting. In Texas, the Texas Medical Foundation (TMF) is contracting agency.

As part of the guidelines with the contracting agency, TMF is required to have a quality assurance system to see that the care rendered is appropriate, that is rendered in an appropriate setting and that the quality meets the standards for that region. The TMF appointed a state-level Quality Assurance committee to meet this guideline.

Q: How were you selected for the committee?

A: The committee is composed of seven people from across the state — two osteopaths and five M.D.'s — each with a different specialty. It essentially came down to needing an OB/GYN from West Texas. So, they called and asked me if I would consider it.

Yes. To set a standard and a means of certifying individuals, the American College of Utilization Review Physicians (ACURP) came up with a test to ensure that participating physicians had achieved a certain level of competence. The American Board of Quality Assurance and Utilization Review Physicians, a sister organization to the ACURP, designed the test and began administering it in 1977. The test actually measures your knowledge of the Peer Review Organization function, DRGs, medicare regulations and others. This certification was optional. The requirements for the committee are a committment are a committment to quality medical care and sound clinical judgement.

Q: What does certification mean?

A: It means that the physician is deemed capable of meeting a national standard for peer review and quality assurance. There are only about 1,000 physicians in the United States with this certification. Being certified enables one to work for an organization such as a hospital or insurance company in a position that is in considerable demand. A physician could choose to make a second career out of it.

Q: Describe the committee as a whole.

A:Our primary concern on the committee is quality. Cost is secondary to the Quality Assurance Committee except in cases where we find an attempt to defraud Medicare. Where instances of potential fraud are encountered, these are referred to HCFA for further investigation. Also, we meet once a month to review case referrals and update revisions in the book of standards.

Q: How are the medical charts or records reviewed?

A:In Medicare audits of hospitals, employees of TMF screen the charts by using a book that contains a set of criteria. These criteria were written to be used by non-medical personnel. In fact, these criteria are not for doctors. They are set in a general enough nature so that probably 100 percent of a group of physicians would agree that an admission was justified. The criteria are parameters for admission, continued stay or treatment and for discharge.

Also, these criteria are in contract form with HCFA so that any changes in the criteria must be approved with HCFA.

Q: What steps are taken if a problem is found?

A:The local review coordinator is the first step as he identifies what might be a possible problem. The chart is then referred to the physician advisor who audits all of the charts not meeting the book of standards. If the physician sees a problem, then it is sent to the Regional Quality Control Committee. After they review it, they may: 1) make a recommendation to the hospital Utilization Review committee; 2) request a more complete audit of the physician or hospital or 3) they may refer the case to the state Quality Assurance committee.

The state committee, after reviewing the case, can then recommend to HCFA that a sanction be placed against the physician and/or the hospital. Such a sanction could involve temporary or permanent suspension of that physician from the Medicare program.

We take a positive approach when we find a problem. We try to give the hospital or physician guidelines on how to improve. We've gotten to the point now that physicians understand enough to see potential problems and will call and ask someone what to do.

Q: What is the relationship between the TMF Quality Assurance committee and MMH's Utilization Review committee headed Dr. Walter Hewell?

A:As a requirement for participating in Medicare, the hospital must have an agreement of understanding with TMF. Under this agreement of understanding with the responsibilities of the hospital is to have a utilization review committee that is given specific directions as to in-house audits. The hospital is obligated to perform audits in addition to those by TMF.

Q:How effective do you think the Quality Assurance committee has been so far?

A:It would appear that is has been very effective.

Q: Who does the Prospective Payment System benefit? Hospitals, physicians — who?

A:It's hard to say because it's really all so new that we haven't seen all of the economic ramifications. You have to remember that this was a major departure from the way things were financed prior to this.

So far in Texas, the number of Medicare admissions in 1984 went from 700,000 to 400,000. Now whether all all that was due to the DRGs coming in or not, I don't know.

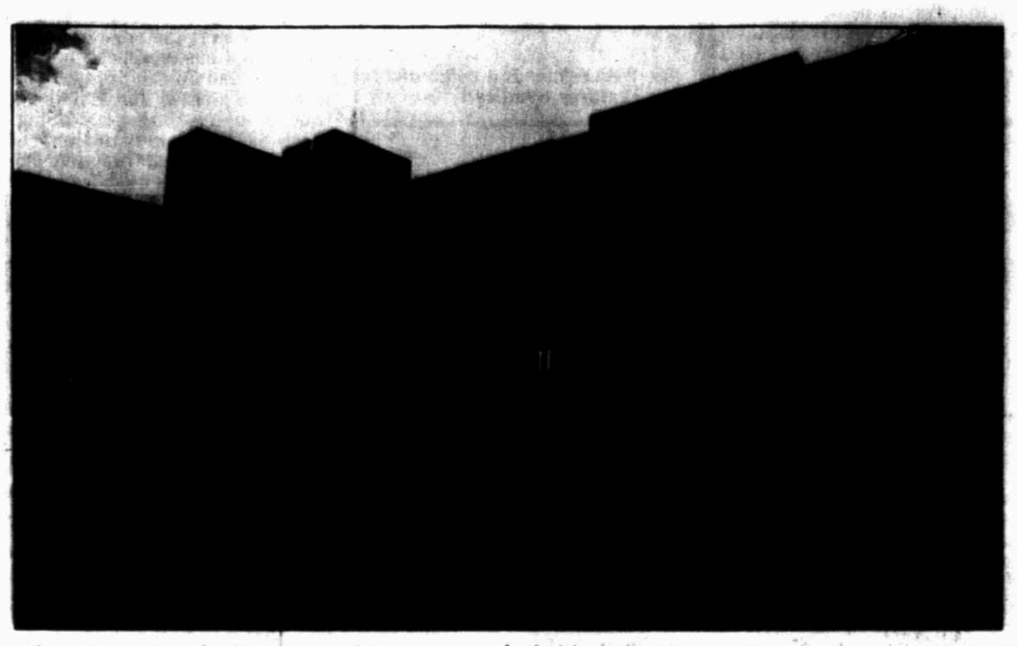

There were some good things to come out of this. Number one is more economical care by hospitals and physicians. It should be a rare situation where quality has to be sacrificed on the altar of economy.

It has also brought to light the need to better document the treatment that was given, why it was given and the condition of patients on admission. If this system causes an improvement in the documentation of the chart, that alone would almost make it worthwhile.

Q: What do you foresee in the future?

A:There are some problems with the DRG payment system as it is. One is that there is little margin for the hospital's capital improvement. Another is that the system does not allow for the severity of the treated ailment. It encourages hospitals to restrict their number of really sick patients. It's possible though that the payment system may be restructured in the future.

Besides possible changes in the way medical care is purchased, I think we will see changes in the priority given to utilization review, quality assurance and risk management, with the goal of more efficient management of patients. Efficient management also would do much to contain cost.

After six years of planning and two years of construction, Midland Memorial Hospital recently held dedication ceremonies for their 15 million, 77,000 square-foot addition.

Sowing the seeds of caring...

Renovations completed at MMH

Renovation efforts by Midland Memorial Hospital in recent months were not limited to areas within the facility walls.

Both an upgrading of the parking area and the installation of 25-foot oxygen tank have changed the outside appearances of MMH.

Curious visitors to MMH may have wondered about the recent installation of a strange spectacle planted firmly in the middle of the facility's parking lot.

MMH, after giving visitors more breathing space by expanding and renovating its parking area, has decided to give its patients more breathing capability by installing a larger oxygen tank, three times the size of its former outdated container.

"We were using the smaller, sphere-like tank for years and were having to refill it every other day," said Larry Wylie, director of engineering. "It only held 500 gallons of liquid oxygen. The new one holds 6,000 gallons."

According to Wylie, the new tank will only have to be filled every 45 days and also will save the hospital moneh.

"We'll be saving $994 a month. We get quite a savings on our oxygen savings by purchasing larger amounts," he said.

The 25-foot tall, white tank, emblazoned with the colorful, "Big 3" logo of the Odessa servicing company (Big 3 Industries) which maintains it, contains the oxygen necessary for departments throughout MMH including patient rooms, surgery, the emergency room, post-partum and the hospital's new hyperbaric oxygen therapy unit.

The tank weighs 30,000 pounds.

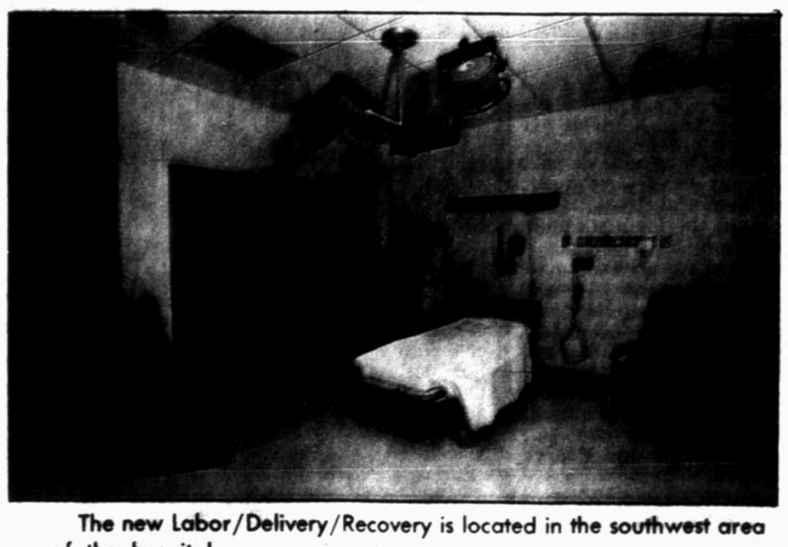

"It would cost us about $66,000 if we were to buy it," said Wylie. "At this time, we're leasing it for $725 a month and deciding whether we want to buy it or not. According to Big 3 spokesman Steve Holloway, that price also includes the smaller tank.

Wylie said the hospital needed another tank "about 10 to 12 months ago" when a $15 million expansion project was approaching completion.

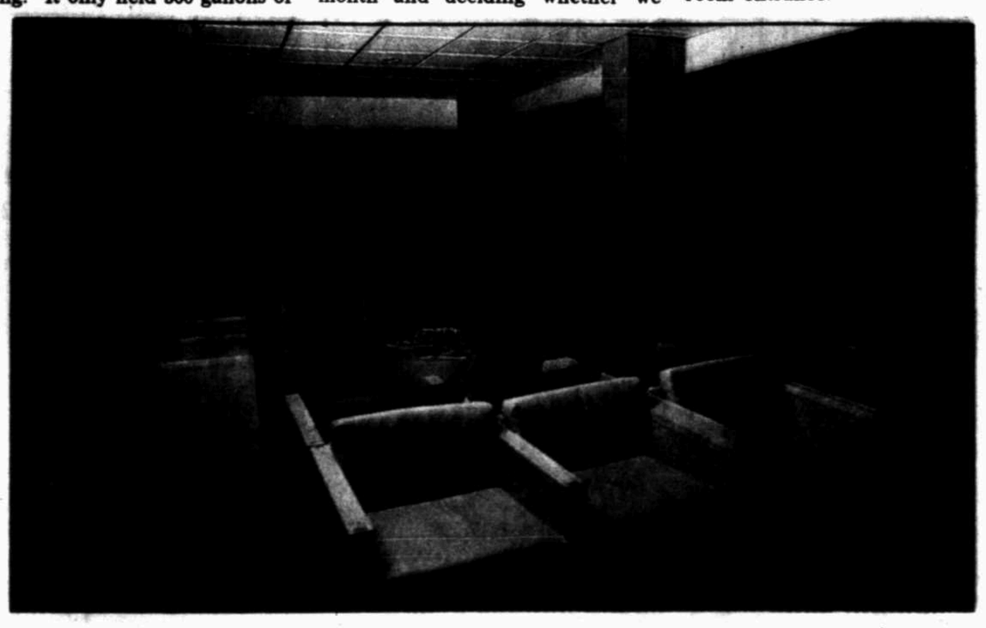

"We knew that we would need another tank with the new areas opening up," he said. Plans call for the older tank to be used as an emergency back-up supply source.

Also renovated in recent months was the parking lot area which was shut down for two weeks during March.

MMH, which used the parking lot of First Baptist Church with the aid of a shuttle service during the renovation, completed the area on time, adding 92 additional parking spots and a special physician's parking area located near the emergency room entrance.

The new Labor/Delivery/Recovery is located in the southwest area of the hospital.

Remarriages shouldn't be rushed

Copley News Service

Just divorced and thinking of remarrying soon? You may be more successful if you put off the wedding bells for a while, suggests a study reported in the magazine, Medical Aspects of Human Sexuality.

Researchers Frank Fustenberg, who teaches sociology at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia, says about half of quick remarriages after divorce fail. He says people rewed too soon because they feel lonely, think they can't make it alone and resort to marriage as a refuge.

He suggests that a divorced person often picks a second partner who's the extreme opposite of the first, and this leads to unhappiness.

Wooden spoons become symbolic of love

Copley News Service

In many European countries' rural areas, a popular love token was a carved wooden spoon. One of the men in Pieter's Brueghee's famous 16th-century painting, "Peasant Dance," wears a carved love spoon in his bonnet. In many places "spooning" means courtship even today.

Diamond can be 'fancy,' 'melee'

Copley News Service

Diamonds, "a girl's best friend," have their own names. They're known in the gem trade as "fancies" if they are colored stones. Diamonds of less than a karat are called "melees."

Inventive invitations set wedding mood

Copley News Service

The strict rules of etiquette have eased just a bit over the matter of wedding invitations.

Couples can invite guests almost any way they please and still be considered kosher.

There are the traditional, conservative brides who would send nothing less than engraved invitations, black on white or cream. Then there are the couples who issue invitations of their own design on recycled paper.

Wedding invitations don't just invite people to a wedding — they "say" something about the couple. The style you select can set your wedding mood and leave relatives and friends with a memento of the event.

What invitations are best for you? Between the extremes of traditional and avant-garde, there are dozens of options.

Take a look at the type of wedding you're planning. If it's a small ceremony with fewer than 50 guests, handwritten invitations are appropriate.

But for larger ceremonies and receptions, you'll probably want to depend on a stationer, according to Bride's magazine.

Whatever look you have in mind for your invitations and announcements, you can order them from a printer, a jeweler, a stationery or department store or bridal salon. Do so at least three months before the ceremony. That way, there will be plenty of time for printing, addressing and mailing.

When consulting with your stationer, you'll find you have a cornucopia of options to help personalize your invitations:

AP Graphic

■ Invitations: Paper styles, from translucent and shiny to colored, along with borders and artwork make each invitation unique. Creative couples can even design their own.

For a personal touch, couples can have their pictures included on their invitations. This will increase the overall cost a bit, but pictures can enhance the invitation and are especially nice for faraway relatives and friends who probably won't attend.

Most stationers require the couple to submit a 35 mm or larger color negative along with a sample photo to match color. For black and white pictures, a 5 X 7 glossy is required.

Many couples employ professional photographers to take a studio shot or photograph them in a more informal setting. Photos can also be taken by a talented friend. If time is a factor, couples may utilize instant print shops where film can be processed quickly.

■ Typefaces: There are many typefaces to choose from — bold letters to classy cursives. Once you choose a typeface, decide on the method of printing you want.

Used for formal invitations, engraving is the most traditional and expensive way to go. The results are rich-looking. The lettering on the invitation is raised, created from hand-engraved plates. Tissues protect the engraved lines.

Thermography is another option. The letters are printed but look engraved because they're embossed.

For casual affairs or non-traditional weddings, offset printing or photocopying can be used. Offset printing works on paper, cards and postcards; photocopying is best reserved for maps, transportation schedules or other diagrams included in formal invitations, according to "The New Woman's Guide to Getting Married" (Bantam; $3.95).

Depending on the type of printing you choose, you may be able to select from different colors of ink: gold, silver, brown, blue, red, gray, purple, green or burgundy.

■ Wording: Once you've picked your invitations, you'll have to decide how to put the message in print.

On formal invitations, spell out all names, numbers, dates and times. Etiquette books can help you decide how to word the message in special circumstances — say both sets of parents are divorced and remarried or it's a second marriage for the bride.

Couples can also create their own message. It's best to use simplified language and style, according to "The New Woman's Guide to Getting Married." Experiment with line spacing and centering for the best effect for non-traditional messages.

■ Enclosures: Decide what messages, if any, will need to be enclosed with your wedding invitations. There are enclosures to fit almost any circumstance.

"At-home" cards are small cards that let everyone know your new address and the date you will be ready to receive mail and visitors there.

Ceremony cards are presented at the door for admittance, while pew cards match guests to reserved seats.

Reception response cards let guests RSVP, while rain cards list a second address in case weather changes the location. Maps can also be enclosed.

Some couples send announcements to everyone and wedding and reception enclosures to only those they want to invite.

After ordering your invitations, have the envelopes sent to you in advance, including some extras in case of mistakes.

Trousseau treasures: Getting ready elegantly

Copley News Service

Wedding preparations — they're enough to make a bride forget about shopping for herself.

Who has time to browse through a mall for an afternoon or stroll by a downtown department store during lunch when there's a caterer to call, a wedding gown to be fitted and a shower to attend?

Well, tradition says even the most harried bride should take a breather once in awhile and go shopping for her trousseau. Friends and relatives can pitch in by giving gifts for the bride herself and her new home.

Originally, the trousseau was everything a bride took with her to her new house. That meant clothing, kitchen equipment and household linens needed for the couple's new life together.

Just a generation or two ago, mothers started sewing delicate lingerie and teaching their daughters to quilt in preparation for their upcoming marriage.

These trousseau items were handmade treasures that were placed among delicate scented sachets in a hope chest that a young woman kept near her bed.

The would-be bride finished the hand-embroidered pillow slips, quilts in the double-wedding ring pattern and the hand-embroidered nightclothes and then carefully folded them for the time when she would be engaged and married.

In these more pressured times, most brides and their mothers are part of the working world. So, it is somewhat difficult to imagine those quieter times of long-term preparation. Some of the traditions of the trousseau still exist, however.

The "linen shower" provides the bride with beautiful handmade and contemporary items for her new home. Antique stores, linen and specialty shops feature exquisite handmade and hand-embroidered linen. Many of them are stitched white-on-white, some in delicate Italian cutwork. These linens will become heirlooms for the new family.

With quilts back in fashion and available through auctions, antique shops, specialty shops and quilting societies, it is still possible for the bride to have the double wedding-ring quilt, or any other pattern, among her prized possessions ... even if she doesn't quilt herself. Quilts can hang above a bed or cover toes while the couple is watching a late-night movie on the VCR.

While things for the home are necessary, lingerie is the main focus of most modern brides' trousseaus. Wonderful modern fabrics as well as traditional silks and crepe de chines are stitched into the loveliest of nightgowns, teddies, tap pants and slips for the bride-to-be.

The traditional negligee and peignor ensemble, so much a part of the "Hollywood" elegance that's popular today, is just the thing to establish a sense of beauty and luxuriousness for the bride on her wedding night.

In fact, what better time to splurge on feminine beauty than for a wedding or honeymoon? All tradition is on the side of the bride. Forgetting to be practical just this once, she should feel free to tour the wonderful lingerie boutiques and specialty departments of the larger department stores. She should abandon the flannel nightgowns or football jerseys of high school and college. Elegant sleepwear is a bride's gift to herself, and of course, to her new husband.

The thought that goes into a bride's trousseau creates anticipation before the wedding and happy memories afterward.

Lifespan in marriage increases sharply

NEW YORK (AP) — Although today's typical bride and groom are older than their counterparts at the turn of the century, their chance of living the next 50 years together is more than twice as great, provided they don't divorce, says a recent report.

The probability of golden wedding anniversaries for brides and grooms who stay married has increased by 26 percent during the last decade alone, according to the "Statistical Bulletin," published by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.

"The increase in the joint survival of married people is largely a result of the increase in life expectancy of the general population," statistician Stanley Kranczer said in a news release. The more stable lifestyle of married people may also be a factor, he said.

The likelihood that a typical newly married couple would live another half-century in 1900-02 was 108 per 1,000, while today's average bride and groom have a 350 per 1,000 chance of living that long, according to the report. The median age of 23 for today's first-time brides is a record high, while the median age of today's groom is 25 and fast approaching the high of 26 recorded in 1900, the report says.

'Shrink' helps pets un-whine

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The rabbit thinks he's Rambo, baring his tiny buck teeth during ambush attacks on his increasingly terrified owners. Scolding doesn't help. Neither do bunny treats from the pet store.

What this rabbit needs is a good psychologist.

Like Mike, the neurotic dog in the hit film "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," scores of pets are being dragged by their collars to the psychologist's couch.

"Just a few hours of treatment can produce dramatic results," says Randall Lockwood, director of higher education for the Humane Society of the United States.

"It's a growing field," said Pete Borchelt, a New York-area dog psychologist. "I think it's a reflection that people no longer regard their pets as just a piece of furniture."

There was a time when owners of problem pets had only three choices: Live with the situation, find someone willing to take the pet or send it to the Humane Society, where it likely would be destroyed.

But the 1980s have seen the controversial beginnings of a fourth choice — the use of animal psychologists and counselors to change a pet's behavior.

The Humane Society estimates there are about 30 "responsible and reputable" psychologists specializing in animal disorders and hundreds more people selling their services as animal counselors or "animal behaviorists."

Such counselors seek to treat "extremely neurotic or psychotic behavior," said Jean Burke, assistant chairman of the Mercy College Department of Veterinary Technology in New York, which offers animal behavior courses.

At an average price of $50 per session it's not cheap, but with experts such as Burke estimating that up to 75 percent of the cases are treatable, you will probably get results. Some, such as Borchelt, even make house calls.

A dog that occasionally barks too much or soils the living room rug probably needs obedience school more than therapy, she said. Therapy is for the dog that repeatedly tries to bite children or other dogs or constantly hides under the table.

Owner and pet attend counseling together. Some therapy can be completed in a few hours. Some can take 15 or more daily sessions. Each session concentrates on behavior modification for both pet and owner.

A counselor treating a dog that becomes destructive upon hearing thunder would play a recording of thunder at gradually louder volume until the dog reacts.

Once the dog reacts, the session would stop. It is repeated daily until the pet becomes accustomed, or desensitized, to the sound, said Stephen Daniel, a psychologist who teaches animal behavior classes at Mercy College.

"We have borrowed a lot from human therapy," he said.

Pets that end up in therapy often have a combination of genetic and emotional problems. Highly bred dogs are often high strung as well. If owners don't recognize that right away, they may spend months or longer accidentally reinforcing errant behavior.

A pet therapist will treat most animals. The toughest patients can be treated with drugs, if necessary. Valium is commonly used for anxiety. A female hormone used for birth control sometimes is used to control aggressive behavior, although it can produce serious side effects, such as spontaneous abortion.

Daniel attributes the growing popularity of animal therapy to increased awareness of the rights of animals. He also believes more pets suffer emotional neglect because they are in households alone or trapped in apartments with little or no yard space.

But reaction to the trend has been mixed.

"There are a lot of veternarians who think the field is full of quacks," said Burke, adding, "I have mixed emotions."

So does Lockwood. He is supportive of the trend, noting that pet misbehavior is the major reason some 11.5 million animals, most of them dogs and cats, end up in animal shelters each year.

More than 7.6 million of those are destroyed, according to a Humane Society survey.

"In so many cases, with a little intervention, that could have been averted," he said. "Lives could have been saved."

Runners vs. dogs: Road wars

NEW YORK (UPI) — Even the best runners have problems with dogs. Olympic marathon champion Frank Shorter climbs trees to avoid Dobermans. Marathoner Bill Rodgers jumps on roofs of cars.

If you come across a mean dog on your next jog, "don't run," says a recent article in The Runner magazine — there's a better way to handle dog encounters.

The most effective way to repel a dog attack is direct confrontation with the threatening animal. According to United Kennel Club's Andy Johnson, a moving target (i.e., a runner) will trigger a dog's prey-chasing instincts and the problem is compounded when the prey tries to outrun the animal.

If confronted by an angry dog, feign indifference, because fear will stimulate the animal. If the dog comes within biting distance, stop and face it. Never turn your back on a dog and never run between a dog and its owner.

Dogs follow noses to save lives

United Press International

When the Mexico City earthquake struck last September, Hatch Graham was in Nashville, Tenn., attending a search and rescue seminar with his two dogs, Sardy and Pepper.

Within 48 hours, Graham and his German shepherds were in the rubble-filled streets, joining other dog teams from around the world engaged in the massive job of locating survivors of the major tremor.

The quake occurred on a Thursday and by Sunday 11 more trained dogs and their handlers from California joined the effort, forming a United States team that worked alongside other dog units from Switzerland, West Germany, Italy and Israel.

"This marked the first time volunteers with search dogs have gone out of the U.S. on a rescue mission," said Graham. "It was a breakthrough, a real step forward. Nobody got hurt, none of the dogs got hurt and we found 18 people alive."

Fido can have own 'passport'

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (UPI) — So there you are, just you and Flip, your checkered chihuahua who goes everywhere with you, and you're trying to grab the next flight out for a hectic week of shopping in Paris.

Your passport checks out fine. Off you go. No problem. But poor Flip. No passport. What to do.

A ludicrous scenario, of course. Pets need a lot of things, but passports are not one of them. Until now, anyway.

Now the pet passport has arrived. And to hear Bonnie Schachter speak of her six-month-old invention, you'd think it rivals the rabies shot.

"People are into organizing every facet of their lives," the savvy entrepreneur began recently over a cup of espresso at the swank Rose Cafe in Santa Monica.

"And the pet passport is part of that — getting everything in order.

"See, this makes traveling easy, because let's say you're in a hurry and you have to drop your pet off before your trip, all you have to do is leave them the passport and it tells them everything."

Or as Schachter inscribed on her brochure: "It's a pet saver whether your pet is a jet setter or a yard sitter."

What Schachter, president of Innovative Amenities, failed to mention is the pet passport really does much more to organize your cat or dog's life than your own.

The pet passport, a near replica of the royal blue human variety — except, of course, the last page provides a large square for a paw print — offers the space for detailed scribblings about Flip's vaccination history, how many litters he's sired, and his family tree in case Flip ever wants to return to his roots.

Retailing for $4.95 and available in more than 500 stores nationwide, the passport also tips the pet sitter about critical data pertaining to those dietary and bathroom habits while donating room for his registration and a photo ID.

In the name of humanity, one supposes, the pet passport also supplies vital space for a personality profile, documenting your creature's pet pastimes, his friends and foes, his fears, and favorite tricks and meals.

And worry not, there's plenty of room left over to enumerate those petty annoyances like small children, ticks and other pet peeves.

"It works great," Schachter gushes. "If Fido is used to getting his milkbone every day at 2, just put that down in the pet passport."

Apparently, the gimmick is working. About 20,000 of them have been sold. Even America's First Dog, President Reagan's golden retriever, "Rex," has his own pet passport. Comes in handy in case of a last minute Asian summit conference.

Bill Sawelson, purchasing manager at the Pet Department in Los Angeles, recalls a woman coming into his store a few months ago who proudly displayed to him her dog's pet passport.

"It was stamped in three countries," Sawelson marvels. "She had the actual passport picture of the dog on it and everything."

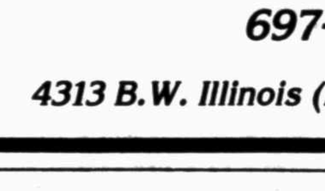

The pet passport is only one small step for man in "validating people's feelings for their pets," Schachter says. A couple of months ago, Schachter introduced greeting cards for pets.

Some samples: A dog in a cap and gown holds a diploma and wags his tail. "Congratulations," the card reads, "on graduating from obedience school." A very bored cat sits on a throne surrounded by gifts and mice-at-arms. "Happy Birthday Your Majesty!" says the card inside.

Texas Tuesdays ...

FLOWERS and FLAGS

What is a more natural combination than children and birthday parties? A children's class at the Museum of the Southwest is celebrating the 150th birthday of Texas with art.

"Texas Tuesdays," one of the museum's summer programs, is devoted to things Texan. Children ages 3-5 meet from 10-11:30 a.m. four consecutive Tuesdays and use construction paper, paste, crayons and their imaginations to create Texas crafts.

Bandanas and Texas flags were featured the first Tuesday. "We made up brands from their names, put them in the middle of the bandanas and they all wore them home," said Amy Haughton, leader of the class.

Bluebonnets made from construction paper and popcorn were made in the second class. To produce blue popcorn, use "powdered tempra paint," Ms. Haughton said. "Put it in a bag and shake it."

Texas mobiles with the state of Texas cut out and horse heads, cowboy hats and boots tied on with string; stick horses made from tube socks and cut-off broom handles; and "buckskin" vests made with paper sacks are also planned, she said.

Children, like the rest of the population, are caught up in the Sesquicentennial. "It's amazing how many of them know (Texas traditions). They already knew what a bluebonnet was.

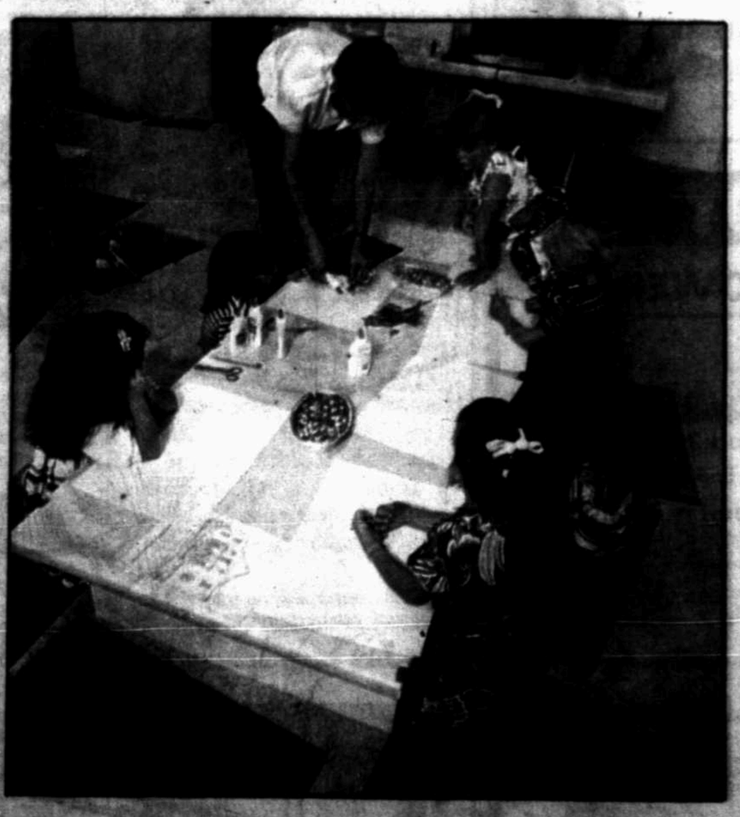

"A lot of the kids have had Texas-type projects in school classes, so they have already been exposed to a lot."

Later this summer the second series of children's programs at the museum will get underway, including:

- Session II of "Texas Tuesdays." Designed for children ages 9-12, this program will also feature different aspects of Texas. Storytelling and art projects will help the students learn about their home state. Classes will be presented July 8, 15, 22 and 29.
- "Olio" for children ages 9-12. Students will experiment with artistic media, such as painting, drawing, sculpture and more. Classes will be July 10, 17, 24 and 31.
- "Masks of Many Cultures" for children ages 5-8. Students will study and make masks from other world cultures, including those of native Americans, Mexico and Africa. Classes will be July 7, 14, 21, and 28.
- "Clay Sculpture," for ages 3-5. Young students will learn to use clay as they explore shape, form and idea through sculpture projects. Classes will be offered July 9, 16, 23 and 30.
- "Museum Portfolio," for ages 5-8. Students will learn about the museum and its collections. Each class will feature a different aspect of the permanent collection, such as archaeology, 18th century fans, paintings from Taos and Santa Fe, N.M. and American Indian art. Related art projects will be made. Classes will be presented July 11, 18, 25 and Aug. 1.

Classes are presented in the museum's Stables Workshop and are limited to 20 students per class. Fees are $20 for museum members and $25 for non-members. Scholarships for qualifying children are available to cover enrollment fees.

For more information call 683-2882.

Teddy bear fanatics stuff their collection into home

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Milt and Lily Andrews admit they are obsessed. More than 3,000 teddy bears are stuffed into every corner of their home, spilling off every chair, stacked on every shelf.

The bears are part of the family, referred to by name and included in conversation.

If they were for sale, the bears might be worth a quarter of a million dollars, says Milt Andrews, 49. But although the family needs a new car, Andrews is not selling.

"We don't own these bears, they own us," he says. "We're their humans."

"It's like an obsession with us," says his 38-year-old wife.

The Andrews have been accumulating teddy bears for the past four years, rescuing them from garbage cans, snapping them up at flea markets and buying them at shops.

It's a passion that grew out of their Pittsburgh doll repair hospital and toy shop.

Although collecting teddy bears is nothing new — the first stuffed bear appeared on the market in 1903 — it's only recently that it's turned into such a potentially lucrative pastime.

Numerous teddy bear clubs have sprung up around the country during the past few years. They hold conventions, publish newsletters and honor Theodore Roosevelt, who supposedly lent his name to the toy.

AMONG THE more notable collectors are actress Jane Withers, singer Ringo Starr and the late Elvis Presley. British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and the Queen Mother Elizabeth still have their first teddies.

Everywhere in the Andrews' house there are bears — new bears and old bears, boy bears and girl bears, big bears and little bears.

There are brown bears, black bears, panda bears, koala bears, bears in jogging shoes, bears in dresses, bears with bow ties, Yogi Bear, Smokey the Bear, Paddington Bear, Care Bears.

There are also music boxes, cookie jars, candles, perfume bottles and soaps made out of bears, blankets, books, calendars, postcards and puzzles with pictures of bears, bears holding balloons, bears driving toy cars, bears drinking soda, even bears teaching bears.

About a dozen of the family's favorites fill the living room couch and are carried upstairs each night and tucked into cribs in the Andrews' bedroom. Two of them, Boris Bear and Baxter, sleep in the couple's bed.

Boris Bear and Lilly Bear, also one of the chosen, accompany the couple just about everywhere and rate their own chairs at the dinner table.

SUCH A lifestyle does have its disadvantages.

"There's no room to lay down on the couch," says their 7-year-old daughter, Julie.

Despite her complaints, Julie and her sister, Wendy, 13, shower the bears with Easter baskets and other holiday gifts.

"There's a genuine magic with bears. You have to feel it," Milt Andrews says, clutching Boris Bear. "If I told you, you wouldn't believe me. You'd label me a kook. But every little child who's laying in bed with his teddy bear knows exactly what I'm talking about."

Many other bear lovers say they do, too.

"It may sound sort of kinky, but unless you're a collector, you can't appreciate it," says Chris Revi, editor of The Teddy Bear and Friends, a bimonthly magazine with a worldwide circulation of 65,000.

Because of the growing demand, toy makers such as West Germany's Steiff are turning out more teddies than ever.

"It's been going up and up and up all the time," says Gerald Fisher, vice president of Reeves International Inc. of New York, which distributes Steiff products in the United States.

Prices also are on the rise. A 1905 Steiff bear, for instance, fetched a record $5,342 last October at a London auction.

Such hefty figures don't impress the Andrews. They estimate their collection is worth about $250,000, although they can't be sure. They've never bothered to add it all up.

"We don't buy for investment, we don't buy for resale," Andrews says. "This collection is ours. We wouldn't sell a single one. We've spent $500 on a bear and 25 cents on a bear and love them equally well."

ONE OF the Andrews' most valuable teddies, a long-limbed, jointed brown bear with shoe-button eyes, is believed to have been made around 1890. Another, a Steiff, dates back to 1909.

"There's lots of time we needed the money. But we put the time and money into bears," Mrs. Andrews says. "We need a car. I tell my husband, 'We've got all this, take and sell something.' He forbids it."

None of the Andrews' bears is insured, although the family takes great pains to protect them. Bars cover the lower windows of their small, bungalow-style home, which also holds numerous dolls and antiques. A sitter watches over the house when no one is there.

"We've discussed fire," Mrs. Andrews says, holding Lilly Bear in her lap. "Financially, it would be a loss. But emotionally, it would be worse."

The family's dream is to some day open a museum in which the bears are exhibited in a homelike environment "where they're out in the open and can breathe."

"I used to worry what's going to happen to this stuff when I'm gone," Mrs. Andrews says. "But I console myself — there are already so many people who have passed on but their bears have come to me to take care of. I feel that somebody else will come along and cherish them like I have."

Game endorsed by safety group

NEW YORK (AP) — The game looks like many other board games. Players follow a colorful path through an imaginative neighborhood and choose cards at spots along the way.

But the 300 cards, and the questions they ask, are more serious than those of typical games:

"What are private body parts?"

"What does a bad person look like?"

"If you are home alone, should you play in the yard?"

It is called the Child Awareness Game, the latest of many child protection aids to hit the market. The game was endorsed by the Adam Walsh Child Resource Center, a safety organization founded by the parents of a 6-year-old Florida boy who was abducted and killed in 1981. A TV movie about the Adam Walsh case helped create interest in the nation's missing youngsters.

Children play the game with an adult and get a letter for each question they answer as they wind their way to the bus stop, shopping center, movie theater and other spots in the mythical neighborhood. The first child to collect all the letters to spell "Child Awareness" wins the game.

When asked, "what are private body parts," the correct answer is, "parts of the body that are usually covered by a bathing suit." Parents who want to be more specific can name the private parts if they desire, the card says.

PARENTS WHO ask "what does a bad person look like" should get this answer: "You can't tell if a person is bad or good by the person's looks."

Another card instructs children to stay inside with doors locked if they are home alone. They should not play in the yard, the card says.

But since a yard in Maine is safer than one in New York City, the instructions also say, "if a parent or teacher strongly disagrees with the given answer, please substitute an answer."

In recent months, several companies have introduced books, games, flashcards, coloring books and other child-oriented products to help teach safety. Games include "Strangers and Dangers," "Don't Talk to Strangers," "Safely Home" and "Safe City, U.S.A."

While some child psychologists say toys and games make it easier to teach a difficult subject, others warn that parents must take steps not to frighten their children needlessly.

Gary Hewitt, a psychologist who specializes in counseling families of abducted children, had not seen the Child Awareness Game but expressed concern that such games could be misused by well-meaning but untrained adults.

"If children play with an adult who is super-paranoid about the issue, then that's reflected in the game," he said.

HEWITT RECOMMENDS that parents educate themselves about safety issues. And they should choose games carefully.

"Some are educational, some at least address the issue, and others are just overkill," he said.

Dr. Alvin Poussaint, a child psychologist at the Harvard Medical School, said games played by children and adults together work well because "the parents have control over how much they want to dose the child." But he warned against games that were overly scary.

The Child Awareness Game, for ages 4-12, is the creation of Becky Butler Nickol and Patrick Hart, stockbrokers in Orlando, Fla., who were looking for a way to teach their children safety without scaring them.

Mrs. Nickol said parents can tailor the game to suit their view of what safety information is necessary. Children should learn "what risks they can safely take," she said.

"I think we're doing children an injustice if we don't give them the tools to deal with it," she said. "You can't stifle them, but you have to teach them."

The game is the first product to be endorsed by the Adam Walsh Child Resource Center. The center will get $1 from each sale of the $12.95 game.

"Children need to role play situations in order to learn," said Sharon McMorris, assistant director of the center. "This board game operates under that idea. It gives children the opportunity to act out situations."

'Surgeon' doctors dolls

Associated Press

Irving Chais is a plastic surgeon — for dolls.

Chais is the best plastic surgeon in the business for dolls and toy animals, according to an article in the June issue of Connoisseur — a "third generation doll doctor" and the proprietor of the 86-year-old New York Doll Hospital.

The hospital repairs, restores, buys and sells dolls and animals, antique and new.

"I've worked on every doll ever made," Chais said. "I average 50 to 100 clients in the hospital at any given time, and yet I've never lost a patient. The only thing I can't do is bring a doll to life."

The doll doctor's clients leave their "children" in his care — perhaps a threadbare Raggedy Andy or speechless Chatty Cathy — often the last remaining vestige of a long ago childhood.

"A few years ago an old Polish woman brought in a doll with half its face missing and no body," Chais said. "She asked if I could fix it."

It took Chais months to finish the complicated job, and when the woman returned to claim her "child," she began to cry.

"She told me she'd been in a concentration camp," Chais said, "and that when the Allies freed her all she had left was her doll — she had lost her parents and brothers and sisters.

"Her 'Poopski' was the only thing she had managed to hold onto. Having her doll restored was like a reunion with a friend unseen for 40 years."

Chais said a doll is brought in for restoration "because the doll is of either tremendous financial or emotional value." Most dolls, he said, are cherished for their emotional associations.

Some of the dolls Chais repairs are 30 or more years old, but his paramount idea is to refurbish them so the replacement parts don't betray their newness.

In most cases, cloth or fur used to replace a worn or missing leg or shoulder must be tinted and "distressed" to match the aged and yellowed original in color and texture. Turn-of-the-century chipped wooden heads require not only perfect color match but also an identical finish. A cleaned-up teddy bear does not get a touched up face unless it is specifically requested.

"Clients have been horrified by a teddy whose long-lost little pink tongue or button eye has been replaced," Chais said, "and some customers even want their bear restuffed with its original stuffing."

Chais derives most of his income from repair work, but he also is a broker of antique and one-of-a-kind dolls.

'Hal's Pals' aimed at handicapped

NEW YORK (AP) — Mattel Inc. says it hopes a new line of disabled dolls called Hal's Pals will promote self-respect among handicapped children and encourage sensitivity by others, but at least one toy analyst disagrees.

"I'm sure the idea is well-intentioned and it will be tastefully executed, but I doubt that this product is going to be a hit with children, who tend to be very cruel when it comes to disabilities," said Paul Valentine, a toy-industry analyst with Standard & Poor's Corp.

In addition, Valentine said he believes, "Handicapped children already feel different. I doubt that they would want to feel even more different, to have a doll specially geared to them that is not part of the mass culture."

He added: "They could serve as a useful emotional development tool for handicapped children but as a toy, I would think the response would be fairly limited, even among those children."

MATTEL DECLINED to project sales on the dolls, which it called an effort to help disabled children develop a positive self-image and teach able-bodied ones not to be prejudiced toward handicaps.

Susan Smith, a marketing director for the company said: "Our initial approach is to focus our marketing efforts on the special audiences to whom this kind of product is particularly meaningful.

"Our long-term goal is to reach the broadest possible audience. We believe Hal's Pals are really mainstream toys and not just for kids with disabilities."

Any profits from the line — a ski instructor and amputee called "Hal" and his variously impaired but active "Pals" — will be donated to organizations that help disabled children, according to the nation's second-largest toy maker.

The line consits of seven 19-inch, soft-sculptured dolls.

BESIDES HAL, who lacks a left leg, there is a ballerina wearing hearing aids, a boy in a gray warmup suit in a wheelchair, and a dressed-up girl with leg braces and canes.

The fifth disabled doll, a black girl, is visually impaired and comes with a red-tipped cane and guide puppy.

The two other dolls, a preppy boy and a Madonna lookalike, do not feature specific disabilities. However, they can be bought with the various accessories, such as the wheelchair, so that they can be customized for a particular child.

Hal's Pals look a bit like Coleco Industries Inc.'s well-known Cabbage Patch dolls.

The disabled ones will sell for $44.95, the plain ones for $39.95, Mattel said.

Susan Anderson, the dolls' creator, named them after her friend Hal O'Leary, director and founder of the Winter Park Handicapped Sports and Recreation Program west of Denver.

Mattel has formed a separate not-for profit company called For Challenged Kids By Mattel Inc. to produce and market the dolls and donate the profits.

FOR CHALLENGED Kids plans to sell the dolls through mail-order. It will be mailing order forms soon to people such as pediatricians, physical therapists and educators, and to a general audience.

For Challenged Kids has set up a toll-free number, 1-800-227-3800. The address is 5959 Triumph Street, Commerce, Calif., 90040.

Butterflies not aimless

United Press International

While a fluttering butterfly may look aimless, an ecologist says it actually is zeroing in on familiar flowers it knows will contain nectar.

Alcinda Lewis, an environmental researcher at the University of Colorado in Boulder, said butterflies will pass over a myriad of flowers to get to blossoms it knows will provide food.

STEP helps parents

Associated Press

JOLIET, Ill. — Judy Carlson doesn't have a degree in psychology or in teaching. She doesn't have a degree in anything.

But she sounds savvy when she's standing in front of a class and talking about why children misbehave.

"Four reasons: attention, power, revenge or display of inadequacy," she says.

And how parents can keep from reinforcing misbehavior?

'It's hard for a parent to keep silent, but (you should) refrain from discussing at the point the child is misbehaving," she says. "Express your feeling and pick up the conversation later on when you're both calm."

And how to listen and communicate?

"Effective listening is reflective listening," she says. "Acknowledge the feeling, show the child his message is understood and the child will open up. Too often we respond in roles like commander-in-chief, moralist, know-it-all, judge, critic, consoler or psychologist."

And how to discipline?

"Not punishment and reward, but natural and logical consequences," she says. "Don't nag at the kid to wear his hat and gloves. Let him go out without them. He'll feel cold."

Carlson knows what it is to be a parent.

"A lot of parents will listen to me better than they would to a person who has — how should I put it? — higher status," says the mother of three teen-agers.

Twice a year, Carlson has led the Parent Teacher Association's nine-session STEP (systematic training for effective parenting) course in Joliet.

The rules of child-rearing have changed, Carlson said. Today's children won't accept, "Do it because I said so." They believe in democracy and social equality.

How does she know she's effective? She hears from parents.

She says she remembers the frustration on the faces of one couple at a first class.

"During that first class the husband was looking at the wall. I thought, 'Oh, boy, I've lost this guy.' But they came back, and by the fourth class they came in arm in arm, smiling. The man told me the program worked not just with his kids, but with the people at work."

Carlson first learned about the STEP program at an Illinois PTA convention six years ago.

She told the PTA council at Union School, which her children were attending, that she wanted to teach it.

After two years, the Joliet PTA council asked her to give the program for the whole district.

She's been the only STEP teacher in Joliet for six years.

Carlson would like to train other STEP teachers so every local school could offer the program.

"It's hard to find people to take the time. Or they're afraid they're not qualified. Or they fear they'll be evaluated on how their kids behave," she said.

"I point out that STEP teaches the courage to be imperfect. I've been in the program six years, and I make mistakes with my kids. I have the courage to admit and correct them."

Without STEP, she says, "I probably would have made it through all right with my kids, but not as easily."

She offers an example of how she used the "I message" to communicate with her son the first time he kept the family car out later than expected.

When he returned, "I talked about my feelings, how I'd been pacing the floor," she says. "Now he calls every time to let me know when he'll be home."

Test results show first-borns are brighter

United Press International

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — First-born and only children are brighter than others because they spend more time around adults, says a University of Michigan psychologist.

Dr. Robert Zajonc cites Scholastic Aptitude Test scores as evidence that first-born and only children are measurably brighter.

He believes that a decline in SAT scores between 1963 and 1980 correlates with an increase in family size during the 1950s and a rise in scores after 1980 matches a decline in family size during the 1960s.

Zajonc says that the results from the Iowa Basic Skills Test, given yearly to all Iowa school children, further supports his premise. The pattern remained the same: a decline in performance for those born between 1950 and 1963 and a rise thereafter.

"The trend of continued decline in family size suggests a rise in SATs until the year 2000," he reports. "A leveling off and decline is expected thereafter."

Zajonc has developed what he calls a "confluence" theory to explain the first-born phenomenon.

Parents dominate the "intellectual environment" of a first-born's formative years, he says, but in a family with many siblings, "the intellectual environment is diluted" and children have fewer opportunities to learn from adults.

For parents who want more than one child, Zajonc recommends spacing children at least two years apart to provide a "smarter" environment.

Planned Parenthood makes plans

United Press International

Buoyed by unexpectedly high public support, Planned Parenthood has announced an "all-out war" on teenage pregnancy that will include the first national poll to query teenagers about their sexual practices.

The campaign, which ultimately aims to establish sex education programs and health clinics in every U.S. school district, drew more than $256,000 in contributions during a two-month period this spring.

According to organization president Faye Wattleton, the impetus for the campaign came from a Harris poll showing that "84 percent of the American public recognizes that teenage pregnancy is a serious problem."

THE SURVEY also produced "an interesting finding we didn't anticipate," she added: 67 percent of the respondents favored school-based health clinics that offer family planning services.

"The American public is ready to change how it deals with teenage pregnancy," Wattleton said. "Planned Parenthood is now declaring all-out war on unintended teenage pregnancy ... (to offset) the over-moralistic, anti-birth control rhetoric of the New Right."

Over the next two years, Planned Parenthood's 187 local affiliates will press for new legislation to provide free family-planning services for teens by the end of the decade. At the national level, ads on network television, radio and MTV will encourage teens to practice birth control.

"There's a myth that sex education encourages sexual activity," said Wattleton. "We have to acknowledge that teen sexuality exists."

For its media ads, Planned Parenthood hopes to enlist other organizations, such as YWCA and the Children's Defense Fund, and celebrities like Ann Landers and Abigail Van Buren who have collaborated on other projects.

THE CAMPAIGN also will focus on helping "silent parents" learn to communicate with teenagers, Wattleton reports. A Planned Parenthood guide, "How to Talk With Your Child About Sexuality," will be published by Doubleday in the fall.

"Parents would like to be more involved," said Wattleton. "Eighty-five percent feel that schools should offer sex education. Many parents aren't equipped to deal with teen sexuality."

The epidemic of teenage pregnancy — an estimated 3,000 U.S. adolescents become pregnant each day — shows that "we need to put aside some of the conventions" that young people should not engage in sex, said Wattleton. "Most people with common sense can figure out that it hasn't worked and it doesn't work. It does no one any good, least of all the young person."

MISTER ROGERS

Imperfections make growing up perfect hard

By FRED ROGERS
with BARRY HEAD

If you went to visit some friends to see their new baby girl, and you saw she had a large birthmark on the side of her face, what would be your first words? Suppose the baby were your baby. What would be your first thoughts? And if you were that child, how do you suppose you'd feel about yourself as you grew?

We'll each find our own answers to those hard questions (if we can find answers at all), but the chances are that wrestling with them will bring us thoughts about disappointment, grief and the hopes most of us harbor for perfection of many kinds.

Feeling imperfect can hurt. I remember hearing a made-up story of a little boy who was crying his heart out because, as he wailed, "I'm put together all wrong!" His mother asked him what he meant. "I can tell I'm all wrong, Mom," he said, "because my nose runs and my feet smell."

But there's often truth in the ridiculous. There was a real little girl sitting in a real day-care center one afternoon, and her tears weren't made-up at all. "I hate myself! I hate myself!" she was sobbing. "Why on earth do you say that?" asked a concerned caregiver. "Because my little fingers are crooked," the child explained.

The longing for perfection can be a double-edged incentive for children — and the adults they grow up to be. While it can push some people into grasping more than they thought they could reach, it is bound to bring others a sense of disappointment and failure when their expectations of reaching perfection fall short — as they are bound to do.

Whether that desire for perfection works for us or against us may well depend on our earliest experiences. Already in infancy, babies find ways to bring pleasure to their caregivers — by their smiles, their attempts to imitate and to learn.

Babies sense expressions of approval and disapproval. Through these exchanges, babies gain their first sense of self-worth — or worthlessness. They catch the important message of how the most important people in their life feel about them.

For many parents, the birth of a child with an obvious blemish or disability can come as a grievous disappointment, as can even the birth of a child of the "wrong" sex. Whenever our fondest hopes are dashed, it's natural to grieve the loss of what might have been. And allowing ourselves to feel that grief may be one of the best ways to come to accept our disappointments and then begin finding new hopes

No child is "perfectly" whole in mind, body, spirit, ability... nor can any child meet all of a parent's hopes and expectations. Yet, there is a wholeness of each and every child, a wholeness that is unique and that brings with it a unique set of possibilities and limitations, a unique set of opportunities for fulfillment.

We all are born and grow with our own kinds of "crooked little fingers." Being perfectly human means having imperfections. All the same, most of us strive mightily to be perfect (lovable) in the eyes of those we love. What those eyes tell us as infants are the most important messages we get about the value of being who we are.

Parents send mixed messages

Associated Press

Imagine slaving over a report for a week, and having your boss say, "If you did work this good all the time, you'd have no trouble getting a raise at the end of the year."

How do you suppose you'd feel? Like punching your boss in the nose, perhaps? That's the sort of feeling a mixed message can create, according to Better Homes and Gardens.

Hazy communication provokes anger, frustration, and confusion. Adults can recognize a mixed message and fight back. Kids can't.

Here are some of the mixed messages parents send, and their remedies:

■ "The Zap": The Zap is praise followed immediately by criticism: "This is a great report card! Why can't you do this well all the time?" A mixed message of this sort sets children up and then pulls the rug out from under them.

The remedy: Let the praise stand on its own. Resolve problem areas later by offering help instead of scorn.

■ "The Tease": When parents say "We'll see" or "I'll think about it" when they really mean "No," they are practicing the Tease. Teasers try to avoid confrontation, but raise the child's hopes, making the inevitable confrontation much worse.

The remedy: If "No" is the answer, say it. It's a matter of trust.

■ "The Wheedle": Asking your children to do something instead of putting your wishes into a clear statement is how you do the Wheedle. For example: "I sure would appreciate some help bringing in the groceries. You think you could tear yourself away from the TV and lend me a hand?"

The remedy: Avoid the Wheedle with simple, direct instructions: "I need help with the groceries. Now!"

■ "The Shuttle": When neither parent wants to take responsibility for a decision involving a child, they'll often bounce the youngster back and forth between them. For example, Nancy asks her mother if she can ride her bike to the shopping center and gets trapped in the twilight zone of the Shuttle. Mom says, "Go ask Dad." Dad says, "What did your mother say?"

The remedy: It's better and clearer to say "Yes" or "No" or "I'll talk to your mother (father), and we'll let you know."

■ "The Switch": The Switch is nothing more than the old-fashioned double standard. "Always tell the truth," says Mom, but then she turns around and doesn't keep her promise to her child. "It's wrong to cheat," Dad lectures, then brags to his friends, in front of his kids, about how he falsified his income tax return.

The remedy: Clean up your own act.

Survey shows dad closed-mouthed

Hearst News Service

Dad, it's time you talked to your children about sex.

According to Alfred Moran, executive director of Planned Parenthood of New York City, a survey in that city showed fathers are least likely to give sex information to their kids.

Young people are more likely to get their knowledge from other kids and, secondarily, from mothers.

Also, Dad:

■ Teen-age childbearing costs a staggering $16.6 billion a year.

■ About 5 million young women 18 or younger are sexually active and 1.1 million of them will get pregnant this year. Of those, about half will continue the pregnancy to childbirth.

■ About 385,000 children who were the firstborn of adolescents in 1985 will receive $6 billion in welfare benefits over the next 20 years.

Teen pregnancy is a lively topic of debate these days because "people tend to be stunned" by the number of births to young people and the rising abortion rate, says Moran, 59.

He says parents need to do a better job of informing their children about the consequences of sex and to encourage them to use contraceptives if they engage in sex.

He says the survey showing fathers are least likely to provide their children with information about sex "speaks clearly about where the fathers are. They need to exercise some leadership on this issue."

He disputes the idea that frank discussions and making contraceptives more readily available will encourage sexual activity among teens and discounts criticism that the Planned Parenthood Federation of America has not been effective in curbing teen pregnancy through its education and counseling programs.

"Planned Parenthood has done a remarkable job in helping youngsters cope more effectively," he says.

Parents' divorce causes child's guilt

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Every year the parents of more than a million children get divorced. Often, the children mistakenly blame themselves and struggle to solve what are really their parents' problems.

JoAnne Pedro-Carroll, a psychologist at the University of Rochester, has found that teaching children to distinguish between "grown-up" problems and "kid" problems helps alleviate their sense of guilt, so they can cope better in school and at home.

To help them learn this distinction, she has devised several games, appropriate for children of different ages.

Oil decline faster than expected

Indicators confirm rapid deterioration

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

If the intent of Saudi Arabia was to flood the market with oil, and lower oil prices in order to curtail exploration and development activity, the plan is probably working better than anyone had expected.

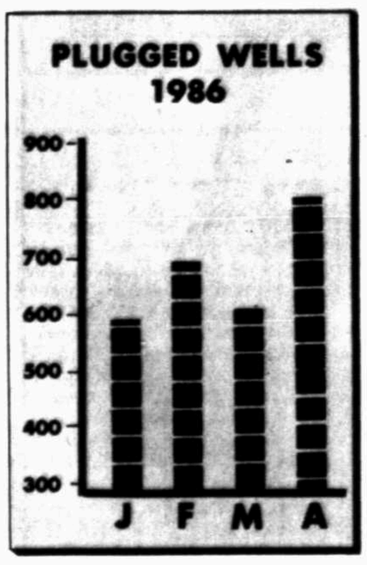

According to J.M. Gahr, executive vice president V-F Petroleum Inc. and a member of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association executive committee, crude oil imports have jumped 30 percent in the first quarter of 1986 and will hit 50 percent by 1988, years ahead of when energy experts expected U.S. dependency to near 50 percent. In the meantime, Saudi Arabia has climbed from our 15th largest supplier of crude oil to number two.

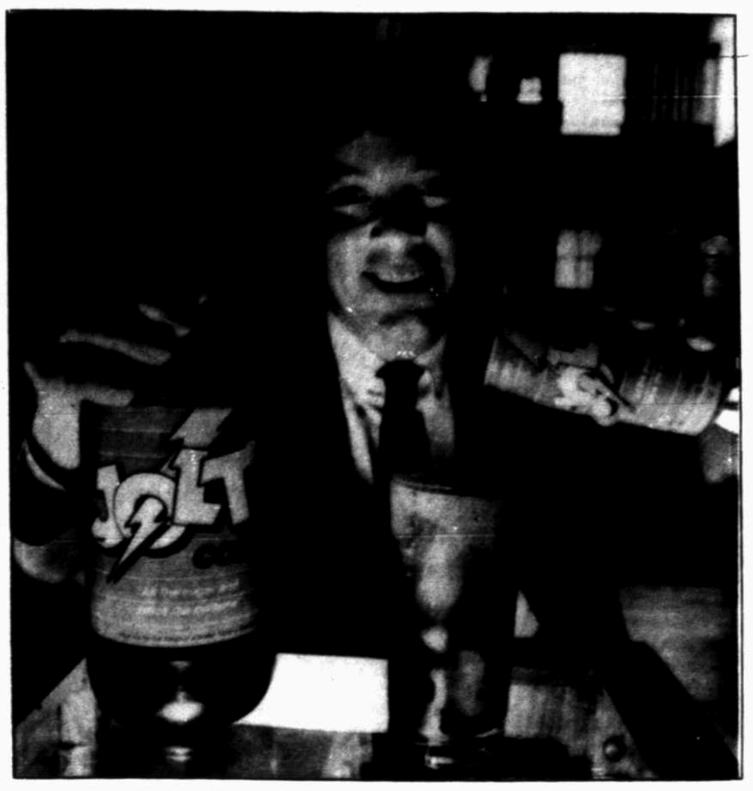

"The condition of the domestic industry is deteriorating faster than we expected," said Harry Spannaus, executive vice president Permian Basin Petroleum Association. "In the last 90 days, Saudi imports have gone from 27,000 barrels per day to 800,000 barrels per day."

Texas Railroad Commission data confirms the rapid deterioration. Recently released numbers for oil and gas completions, drilling applications and plugged wells indicate that the rig count is not the only indicator in a rapid state of decline, and that the state of the industry is going downward faster than expected.

With four months of records compiled the Commission, in its publication Indicators, shows all indicators since the first of the year in sharp decline. Applications for the drilling of new wells along with4 the completion of new oil and gas wells are at Jolt Cola co-creator pours a glass of the potent brew, which is expected to be on the market in 20 states by late summer.

'All the sugar and twice the caffeine'

Jolt Cola is classic 'junk coke'

BRIGHTON, N.Y. (AP) — The makers of Jolt Cola are seeking an unusual niche in the highly fragmented American soft drink market.

Promoting Jolt as more "classic" than Coca-Cola, they proclaim that Jolt offers "all the sugar and twice the caffeine" of mainstream colas.

"We're definitely going to have a lot of fun," said C.J. Rapp., who developed Jolt Cola with his father. "Our product is naughty and bold and we don't mind that image."

With a yellow lightning bolt slashing through its red and white logo, Jolt's label looks like it was taken from a Batman and Robin comic book.

Jolt has 98.3 percent of the caffeine — 5.9 milligrams out of 6.0 — allowed by the federal Food and Drug Administration per fluid ounce of soft drink. That is about twice the amount in leading brands, but one-fifth coffee's wallop.

Jolt also is made with 100 percent sugar, spurning Coke and Pepsi's preferred sweetener, the less expensive corn syrup, Rapp said.

"Who said soft drinks are supposed to be a health product?" he said. "I'm not saying it's an unhealthy one, but it's supposed to be a

Youth may be resource to replace oil industry

From Staff Reports

ECONOMY

As the petroleum industry becomes less and less of a factor in the Texas economy, it will be replaced by one of the state's most significant resources - the young, growing population.

This factor will help insulate the state from the negative side effects of the aging population.

According to the U.S. Bureau of the Census, the number of Texans between the ages of 15 and 35 will continue to increase, and the state will sport a larger population in these ages than the nation. And, projected age distributions for the U.S. and Texas in 1990 suggest there will be relatively more Texans under the age of 45.

Economist Edward McClelland, regional economist for RepublicBank Corp., pointed out that the greater number of younger Texans will mean a growing labor force, and that the state will escape the shortages of available labor, particularly entry-level workers, beginning to be felt in other parts of the country. "That will boost the state's employment and income levels, as well as encourage further corporate relocations and expansions to tap a ready pool of workers," he noted.

The aging of the baby boom generation has been likened to a "pig in a python," altering every phase it goes through. The current aging of America has begun to put a drag on the national economy. One sign is the slowdown in auto purchases. McClelland pegged age 18 as the age for first-time car buyers, and predicted that the slowdown in first-time auto purchases will not reverse until the 1990s.

Another area is construction. McClelland said that since it is usually another ten years before those first-time car buyers buy their first home and major household goods, it will be the next century before the residential construction industry sees an uptick in consumption.

The good news here, McClelland pointed out, is that there is still a market for residential construction, mostly in upgrading the current stock of housing. And as the baby boomers continue to get older, multi-residential housing will undergo a change, concentrating more on retirement centers than before.

The national trend toward older Americans shows signs of reversing as the younger baby boomers and the other baby boomers who waited, have children. The number of children in nursery schools and kindergartens is rising. However, it will be some time before this number affects the demand for durable consumer goods.

Advertising is key in survival strategy

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

What role should advertising play in business strategy in a 'down market', such as the current local economy? Marketing experts agree that times of economic instability and business turmoil offer opportunities for new and existing companies to reposition themselves in the eyes of the public.

Advertising is traditionally one of the first areas to feel the axe when cost-cutting fiscal surgeons go to work on a company's budget. The reason is "too many people view advertising costs only as an expense, not an investment," explains J.C. Kelly, publisher of Adweek Southwest in Dallas.

As publisher of the region's only local trade magazine covering the advertising and marketing industry, Kelly is in a prime position to examine trends in advertising in the Southwest. "Although every major ad market in the region is suffering from the oil slump, Dallas has fared better because its ad community is involved with more national consumer accounts, such as Frito-Lay and American Airlines."

In a word, diversification.

Houston agencies and media, like Midland's, have historically been energy dependent, and so they have been most severely affected by hard times in the oil business.

Although many local advertisers have "pulled in their horns" since the oil price slide; a down market provides opportunities for aggressive marketers committed to the value of advertising, explains Gary Bain, president of the Permian Basin Advertising Federation and co-owner of Bain-O'Reilly Advertising in Odessa.

"TOP-OF-MIND awareness and high visibility are easier to accomplish when there are fewer competing messages," Bain notes. In addition, ad budgets can be stretched further, because rates, particularly in radio and television, are coming down slightly.

Local clients cover the full spectrum, with some increasing budgets while others are cutting back to virtually zero, Bain observes. "Those who are spending ad dollars, are positioning themselves well for improving market share as business improves in the future."

Kelly sees the business as very soft this year, with major consumer companies' ad spending well below year-ago levels.

"Regardless of how much is being spent, or the overall market condition, the key issue is to have a well-defined plan of advertising objectives. The 'shotgun' approach of marketing to anyone who will listen is too expensive and ineffective," Bain explains.

Kelly predicts that identifying and reaching specific segments of the overall market through

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Through busts and dust West Texas is best

I listened, recently, to a oil company executive tell about his wife's initial reaction to West Texas: "She thought she had died and gone to hell," he laughed. Then dead serious, he explained how she had wept barrels of tears for the green pines, lakes and rivers of East Texas, bemoaning the fact that she and her children would probably have to live out their lives on this flat, God-forsaken, beige terrain.

The wife's reaction is not an infrequent first reaction to the Permian Basin, but as the story was told, I thought how strangely different it was to that of the Pitts family when we first arrived in West Texas. It was 1945 and I was seven years old, but I remember well getting off the train at Pyote, driving the 15 miles to Wink and the miracle and years that followed immediately.

The first impression to West Texas was quite opposite that of the disappointed oil wife. Even though we had come from the green woods and cotton fields of Northeast Arkansas, with its many rivers and creeks, when we arrived in this flat, parched part of the world we thought we had died and gone to heaven.

Hang the green woods and rivers: There was running water, indoor toilets and electric lights. No more bathing in a wash tub and heating water on the wood stove. We had a shower, hot water heater, and gas stove for cooking and heating. We were strictly "uptown" in our view. I remember my daddy saying something about our application for membership in the human race finally being approved. Almost overnight, via one a two day train trip, our standard of living had increased tenfold.

WE COULD EAT store bought light bread everyday of the week, and occasionally even afford to eat a hamburger or a bowl of chili at a cafe or drive-in — something we had never be able to do in Arkansas. I had always thought that only rich people ate in cafes. (We didn't have restaurants in West Texas then.)

I still find it strange that I eat most of my meals in restaurants, and my mother — bless her heart — has never quite adapted to cafe society. If she had her way she would go in the kitchen of a restaurant and prepare it herself. "So's not to be a bother to no one."

Best of all for us kids, there was a cement swimming pool in Wink and anybody could swim there for 15 cents. I had never seen a swimming pool except in the picture show. And speaking of the picture show, I seldom missed one at the Rig Theater, because there was always an extra dime for admission. If momma didn't have a dime, my grandmother or grandfather did.

Eventually things were going so well for us, in fact, that my daddy talked about buying a car. It was daring for an Arkansas cotton chopper to dream about owning a car, but this was Texas. It was not out of order for poor people to dream about being somebody in Texas. Unfortunately my granddad never fully adjusted to the Texas dream; he died in the sixties without ever owning or learning how to drive a car.

WHAT MADE THE Texas dream was not green grass and trees, nor rivers and lakes. But the fact that here was a place where a man could work hard, be paid a decent wage, and feel good about himself. Arkansas had billed itself as "The land of opportunity," but it would have took some doing to convince my family that Texas was not the true "land of opportunity."

When I was born six years earlier in Caraway, Arkansas, my daddy was making $1.75 a day in a sawmill. In Wink, Texas, he was making $1 an hour building pipelines. That working people could be so fortunate and make such good wages was unheard of. We thought it was a dream, that it would not possibly last, but we knew one thing for certain — from this time forth we were Texans. Never again would we turn our heads toward Arkansas.

Many other Arkies would come to feel the same way. The word spread about this new land of opportunity and West Texas was eventually flooded with sharecroppers and cotton choppers pouring down Highway 67, looking for work in the oilpatch. They came to drill wells, haul steel, lay pipe, set tank batteries, pull rods and tubing and whatever else needed to be done in the oilpatch. Some say it was the Arkies who created the name "oilpatch," by substituting oil for cotton. Nevertheless, Arkansas became to the oilpatch, what Tennessee was to the Alamo.

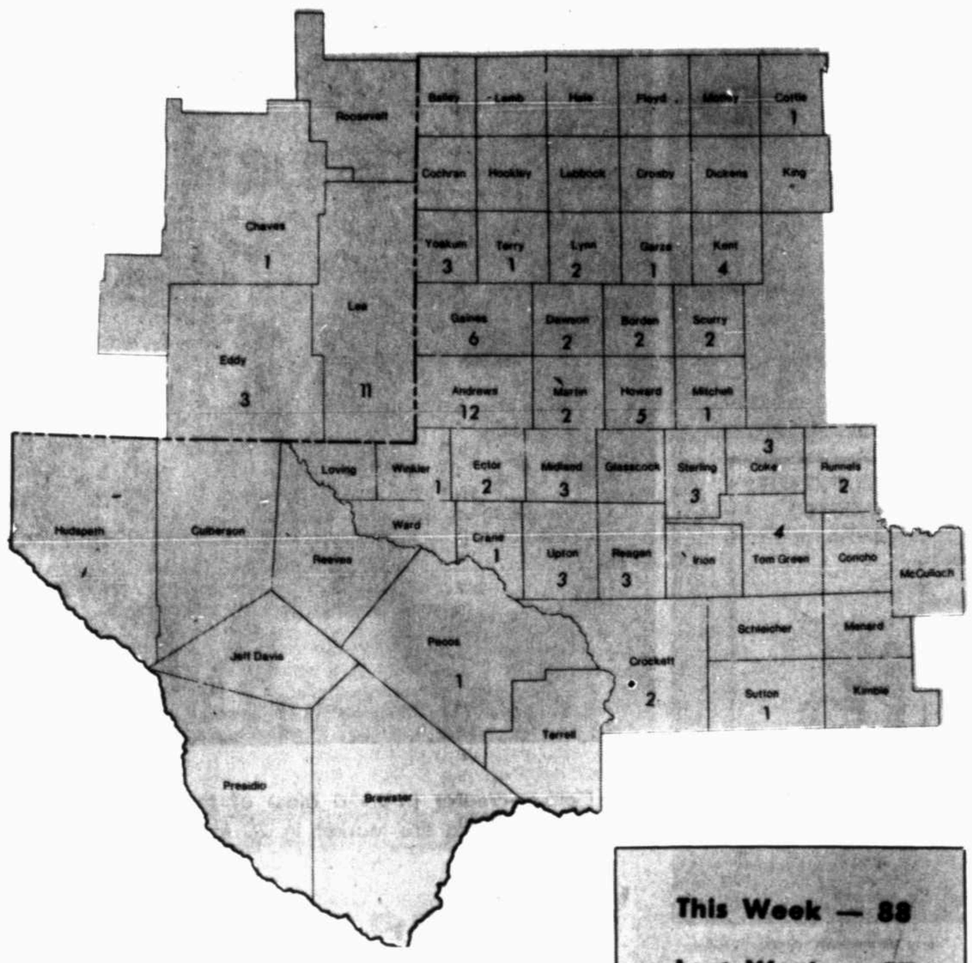

Each time the Cowboys score in Texas Stadium the crowd sings: "When I die I don't want to go to heaven — Texas is good enough for me." I can relate to that.

As I said, I thought I had died and gone to heaven when I first came to West Texas 41 years ago. Today, through booms and busts, dust storms and droughts; good and lean times, nothing much has happened to make me feel any different. Sometimes there's more to a woman than just a pretty face, and sometimes there's more to a land than just trees.

Rig count advances for third straight week

The rig count in both the Permian Basin and the nation advanced this week, posting a gain for the third consecutive week, giving industry-related businesses hope for a comeback.

In the Basin, one more rig was put to work this week for a total of 88; although that number is just a drop in the bucket compared to the 272 working in the Basin for the same week a year ago.

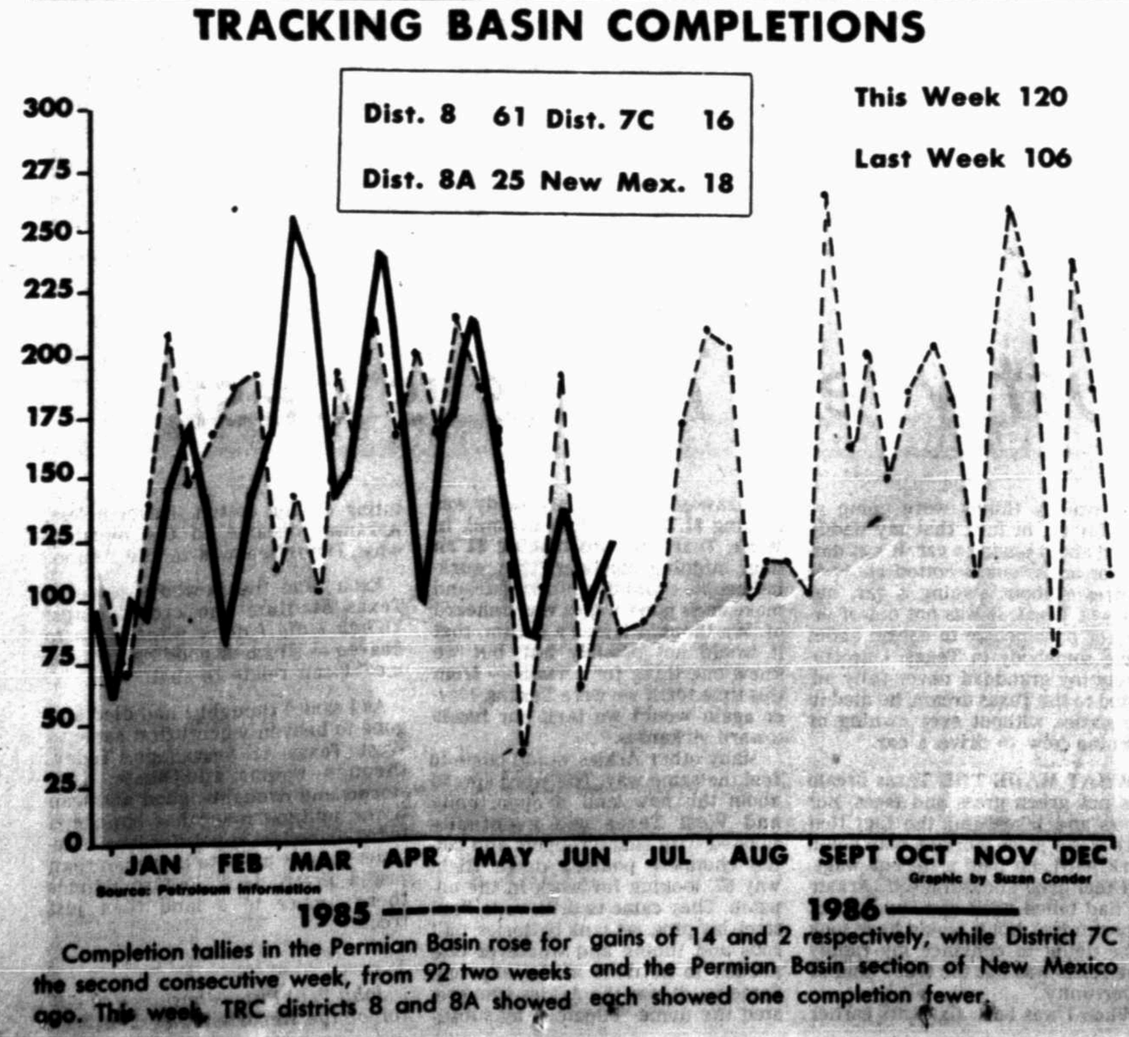

Leading the area is Andrews County with 12 rigs making hole there and Lea County, NM with 11. Midland County posted a three rig total, while Ector County had a two rig total.

In the U.S., the count rose by 22 to 720. Texas added 13 rigs, while Kansas had ten additional rigs and Oklahoma gained five.

New Mexico continues to suffer downturn, losing two rigs. California also failed to contribute to the national gain, falling off by three.

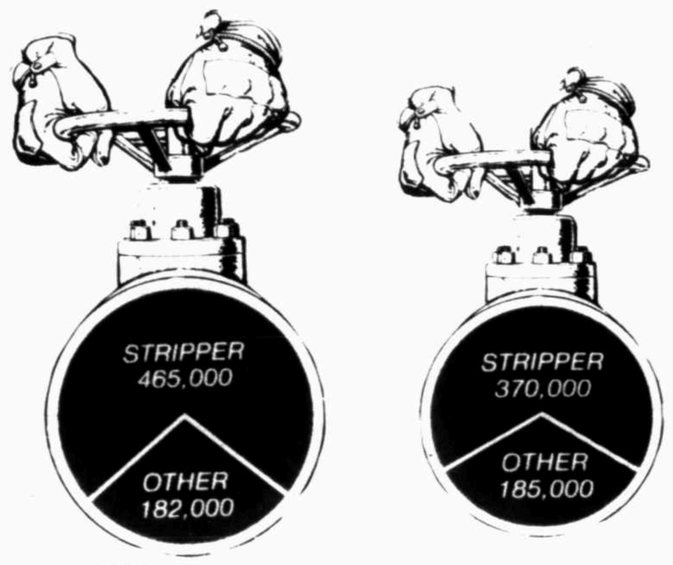

A year ago there were 2,232 rigs at work in the U.S.

TRACKING BASIN COMPLETIONS

Completion tallies in the Permian Basin rose for the second consecutive week, from 92 two weeks ago. This week, TRC districts 8 and 8A showed gains of 14 and 2 respectively, while District 7C and the Permian Basin section of New Mexico each showed one completion fewer.

Producing Oil Wells

92,000 oil wells to bite the dust

There will be approximately 92,000 fewer producing oil wells in the U.S. in 1986 than last year, according to a recent study by the IPAA.

Wells producing small quantities of crude oil, called "stripper" wells, will be the big losers. IPAA estimates that there will be a net decrease of 95,000 stripper wells next year.

Stripper wells produce 10 barrels or less of oil each day.

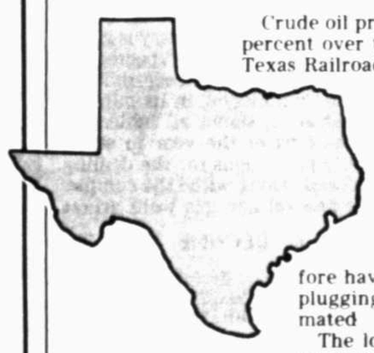

"If we expect to maintain current U.S. production levels, we should be increasing the number of wells producing oil in the U.S. instead of having a net decline," Raymond H. Hefner, chairman of the board of IPAA, says.

"The rapid decline in crude oil prices and the threat of punitive tax legislation has caused many independents to plug thousands of oil wells," he says.

"The U.S. Congress must recognize that drilling for oil is a very risky business, especially in today's environment."

OIL UPDATE

Texas

Crude oil production in TEXAS in March declined 2 percent over the same period last year. According to Texas Railroad Commission figures, 69,577,162 barrels of oil were produced in March 1986 compared to 69,744,690 barrels for the same month last year.

The Commission has amended a rule that will allow inactive wells to remain unplugged for one year, rather than the 90-day grace period previously authorized will now have up to one year to ride out the current price decline before having to go through the additional cost of plugging the well. A sizeable portion of the estimated

The local tax men in hundreds of taxing districts in Texas have been appraising mineral properties in the mid-$20 per barrel equivalent range while oil is selling for less than $15 per barrel. Tax appraisal firms claim their hands are tied, because state law says they have to use the market price of oil on Jan. 1. Meanwhile, the Speaker of the House Gib Lewis has appointed a Select Committee on Central Appraisal Districts to look into the issue. State Comptroller Bob Bullock estimates that taxable values of property could fall by $26 billion next year if prices remain in the present range.

New Mexico

In the mid and late 1970s, NEW MEXICO produced between 1.1 and 1.3 trillion cubic feet of natural gas per year. New Mexico's 1985 natural gas production fell to 896 billion cubic feet.

The Independent Petroleum Association of New Mexico reports that natural gas well completions have fallen from more than 1,500 in 1981 to slightly over 700 in 1985. Activity in 1986 appears to be even less than 1985.

The ability of New Mexico to supply substantially higher amounts of natural gas in the near future has been significantly impaired because a large number of skilled workers have left the petroleum exploration industry. About 24,200 New Mexicans were employed in jobs directly related to oil and gas production, refining, processing marketing, transportation or field services in 1985.

Study says U.S. oil production will decline

If crude oil prices stay in the $15 per barrel range for the remainder of 1986, the U.S. will lose 11 percent (or 974,000) barrels of its current daily production, according to a study by Robert B. Spears & Associates.

If prices stay in the range throughout 1987, America will lose 21 percent (or 1,900,000) of its daily oil production.

RIG FALL

Source: Hughes Tool Co.

Historic rig decline

While the free-falling rig count has shown signs of bottoming out and coming back with modest increases, the historical plunge from [illegible] rigs in December 1981 at the height of the boom to a low of 640 three weeks ago is not likely to be repeated any time soon. The five year erosion of the rig count has resulted in an 86 percent plunge, a drop of dimensions that the industry has never experienced before nor is likely to experience again. The plunge is the result of wide swings in oil prices from almost $40 to $10 per barrel.

DECLINE

all time lows, while the number of plugged wells has soared.

In April applications for drilling permits were less than half (down 56 percent) what they were for the same period in April 1985. For the month in 1986 only 1,358 applications were filed, while 3,139 were filed in April 1985. Year-to-date drilling applications total 7,832 compared with 11,794 for the same time last year, for a 33.6 percent decline.

While applications are an immediate, measurable factor that can be tallied every day. Well completions can be totally deceiving because of a 30 to 60 day lag in reporting times. According to Indicators the number of oil well completions in Texas for the month of April was 1,214, down from 1,419 in April 1985, for a 14.4 percent decline. However year to date figuers for the two periods show only a 3.9 percent decline, down to 5,514 compared to 5,739 in 1985.

Gas well completions for April were down 19.2 percent, from 401 in April 1985 to 322 this year. To date, gas well completions showed a 17.4 percent decline, from 1,724 last year to 1,424 this year.

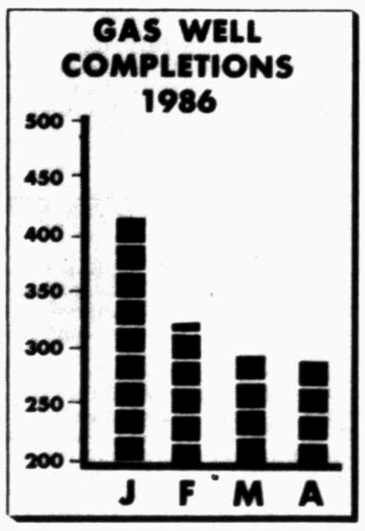

Totaled oil and gas completions show a decline of over 20 percent in completion activity is reflected, a mark which almost parallels that of the Permian Basin.

To determine exactly how completion activity in the Permian Basin compared to the same period last year, the Reporter-Telegram ran an actual count of filed completion reports for the January through May period of 1985 and 1986. The completion report count for all newly drilled oil and gas wells, injection wells, plug backs and deepenings showed an actual 20 percent shrinkage of completion activity for the five month period in 1986 from 1985.

While these declines are severe, they may not be as severe as the situation calls for. As the Reporter-Telegram business-oil staff tracked 1985 and 1986 completions, it became apparent that completion declines of 20 percent were inconsistent with a rig utilization rate of 20 percent for the Basin. It is expected that completion activity will shrink even more in furture months as reports from wells already planned and drilling in the early part of the year cease to be filed.

One of the most horrifying indicators is the increase of plugged oil and gas wells, which is probably more severe than most expected, and reflects a rapid deterioration in the economic viability of certain stripper and marginal production. In April of 1986 the number of plugged oil wells in the state increased 62.9 percent, to 821 this year from 504 in April 1985. For the year to date, the state showed a 52.8 percent increase, up from 1,809 last year to 2,764 this year.

Gas wells fared slightly better with a 1.8 percent decrease in the number of plugged gas wells in April and a 12.5 percent increase over 1985.

treat — when Mom grabbed your arm and took you into the soda fountain for a treat — that's what we wanted."

Rapp contends the combination of high caffeine and sugar tastes better.

Jolt was introduced in upstate New York markets in mid-April, and the Rapps have hopes of expanding. They signed franchise agreements in early June covering 14 Midwestern and the six New England states.

But in this day of Perrier, healthy eating and hard bodies, there are skeptics.

"I think they're nuts. I think they're going to have to buck a trend and I doubt Coke or Pepsi will take them seriously," said Sally L. Schadt, a beverage industry analyst with Fourteen Research Corp. in New York. "How much of that stuff can any one person drink?"

Gary Hemphill, editor of Beverage Industry magazine in Cleveland, adds: "It does sort of fly in the face of everything that's been happening in the industry — the more healthier trend, less sugar, less caffeine, 10 percent fruit juice — this bucks the trend."

But Jesse Meyers, editor and publisher of Beverage Digest, a newsletter based in Stamford, Conn., is more encouraging.

"The hallmark of the soft-drink industry from word one has been innovation," he said. "Word two has been filling a market niche. The industry has been fragmenting over the last few years ... so they certainly have a shot at a market."

Americans consumed an average of nearly 500 12-ounce units of soft drinks per person in 1985, according to the National Soft Drink Association, with consumption growing about 7 percent annually.

In 1984, the latest available reporting year, the industry sold 4.61 billion cases wholesale for $22.2 billion, spokeswoman Julie McCahill said.

In a business where Coke has 39 percent and Pepsi 29 percent of the market, one percentage point means between $150 million and $350 million, McCahill said.

Rapp says he thinks Jolt can win a 4 percent share of the market.

Rapp, 27, says running counter to trends suits him and his father, Joseph F. Rapp Jr., 59, who retired last year after 40 years in the soft drink business.

"What's happened is that Coke and Pepsi were really altering people's palate preferences," the younger Rapp said. "They're the ones who determine what a soft drink should taste like, and they did it so gradually, they were actually changing people's expectations of what the taste should be."

"Soft drinks were never really created for people who wanted to lose weight," said Rapp. "What the big companies did was try to gain soft drink consumers that otherwise were not. In our opinion, what they did was they abandoned those that had been drinking soft drinks for years."

Stuart Ross, a spokesman at Pepsico Inc.'s headquarters in Purchase, N.Y., said today's Pepsi tastes the same as it did 15 or 20 years ago. "Soft drinks today are so popular there's a niche for everyone," he said.

Ronald Coleman, a spokesman for Coca-Cola Co. in Atlanta, said, "We've been in the business for 100 years, we're the world's most popular drink and I think that speaks for itself."

Rapp said they spent $100,000 developing Jolt, and he characterized initial sales — which he would not divulge — as strong. Testing 114 formulas took six years, he said.

Keeping overhead to a minimum, Jolt is currently bottled under a verbal agreement by Rochester food processor Curtice Burns Inc., whose soft drink division the elder Rapp headed until he founded Jolt.

A beer distributor is supplying Jolt to a supermarket chain with stores in Rochester and Buffalo, with the Rapps hoping eventually to attract 250 distributors nationwide.

But there is no Jolt bottling plant, no Jolt trucks, no Jolt advertising campaign, and few Jolt workers, just an accountant, clerical help and the Rapps, who say they will retain their irreverence to the soda business.

"When you're dying in a hospital, the first thing they put into you is sugar and water. Well, that's what Jolt is," the younger Rapp said. "When they start putting Nutrasweet into those IVs, then maybe we'll take another look at sugar."

ADS

"To stand out from the cluttered proliferation of messages, creative teams will be hard-pressed to find simple, unique ways to present their clients' products and services," Kelly says.

Bain estimates that the local ad community has shrunk by nearly half since 1981, but says the surviving agencies are still under pressure to generate quality advertising.

DESPITE REGIONAL softness in ad spending, the dean of ad prognosticators predicts that nationally nearly $102 billion will be spent this year to sell products to American consumers. Robert J. Coen, senior vice president and forecasting director at McCann-Erickson USA, says ad expenditures in the U.S. will rise 7.6 percent over 1985, from $94.8 billion to $101.9 billion — the first time total expenditures have exceeded the billion-dollar mark.

The major media in the nation have shown indifferent results for the first four months of the year, Coen says. Magazine ad revenues were up 3 percent but the number of ad pages declined 2 percent. Newspaper's national ad revenues were up 1.3 percent and network television ad revenues grew 2 percent.

Newspaper ad expenditures, led by record classified spending, totaled $2.22 billion during March of this year, a 5.9 percent jump over 1985, according to preliminary estimates by the Newspaper Advertising Bureau.

Spending for national newspaper advertising rose 4 percent in March to $291 million, retail advertising jumped 5.7 percent to $1.147 billion, and spending for classified totaled $781 million, a 6.8 percent jump over the same period of last year, the bureau said.

For the first quarter of 1986, total spending for newspaper ad revenues were up 3.7 percent over the year-ago quarter, to $5.983 billion.

NATIONAL ADVERTISING for the three months was up 1.3 percent to $812 million, retail increased 1.4 percent to $3.041 billion and classified gained 8.1 percent to $2.130 billion.

Peeking ahead to 1987, Coen says he expects domestic ad spending to continue to grow at about 8 percent, to $110 billion, while worldwide spending approaches $200 billion, a gain of about 11 percent. The market should heat up then as the networks tune up for the 1988 presidential elections and the Olympics, he says.

One development which gives credence to Kelly's prediction of double the number of ad messages by 1995 is the growing acceptance of the 15-second television commerical.

"By September, all three networks will be broadcasting 15-second ads. That will mean more ads, more MTV-style visuals, more celebrity pitchmen, more simple messages and more money for the networks."

Viewers already have seen some pairs of 15-second spots, advertising two products made by one company. But in October, CBS began running independent 15-second spots, known as 'stand-alone 15s.' Last month, the other national networks announced that they also will begin broadcasting a limited number of stand-alone 15s.

As network television's share of American viewing time slips, which is predicted to fall by half — from 78 percent to 39 percent by the end of the century — Kelly expects to see a larger proportion of national advertising placed on a market-by-market spot basis, rather than a single national buy.

This means that local media will be forced to become more sophisticated in dealing with national advertisers bargaining for local deals.

In addition, gross audience or circulation numbers will become less important as a criteria for ad placements and ad plans will be more closely tied to programming and editorial content. 'Info-mercials', which give consumers lots of needed product information will grow in importance in developing brand loyalty.

ELEVEN TRUTHS ABOUT SELLING IN A RECESSION

- Orders may drop but they don't disappear: The drop in the number of orders for goods in the last three recessions averaged 21 percent. For some, orders disappear with breathtaking speed; for others the process takes longer. After all, 79 percent of the business is still there.
- As orders become harder to get, total selling efforts must increase.
- In a recession, the pressure is on to cut costs, while costs — including the cost of selling — are rising. On average, an industrial sales call today costs $98.79 and the cost is climbing.
- Getting orders and holding or increasing share of market in a shrinking market means taking it away from competition.
- In a buyers' market, buyers opt for what they prefer — so consumer preference determines business volume and market share.
- Preference can be built with advertising: research shows that brand preference can be doubled through as few as 20 exposures to advertising, without any sales calls.
- Sales calls alone build preference as well, tripling consumers' preference with sales contacts.
- By far, the best way to build preference is through salespeople and advertising working together: the synergism of the two can generate a five-fold increase in preference.
- Market share goes up as consumer preference goes up.
- Total selling costs go down — even including the cost of advertising — as advertising increases, because fewer sales calls are needed to have an equal impact.
- Advertising is crucial in recession times to boost sales and cut selling costs.

Hallmark turns from poems to jabs for improved profit

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

It's hardly the vintage rose that once characterized traditional Hallmark cards and there's no seven-line poem inside.

But take a look at some of new offerings from Hallmark Cards. One declares, "I'm thinking of going in for a sex change." Inside: "I'd like to start having some."

And there's a card for a person's business anniversary. "The fact you worked here so long only proves one thing." Open the card: "The lobotomy worked. Happy Anniversary."

The cards are part of Hallmark's newly launched Shoebox Greetings line of cards. A direct assault on the so-called alternative card market, Hallmark introduced Shoebox in April with an unprecedented lineup of 800 cards.

But not everybody thinks they're so funny. Small card makers across the country are accusing Hallmark of ripping off their ideas, restraining the sale of their cards and resorting to other tactics that they claim are unethical.

The largest of the alternative card companies, Recycled Paper Products in Chicago, has placed advertisements in trade publications with a headline blasting "The Hallmark Hall of Shame."

Flavia Weedn, a Santa Barbara, Calif.-based card designer, and Roserich Designs Limited of Carpinteria, Calif., recently filed an antitrust lawsuit in federal court in Los Angeles against Hallmark.

For its part, Hallmark declines to comment on the lawsuits but rejected other complaints from the smaller rivals in the alternative card market. "These are all original Hallmark designs and sentiments," said Nancy Matheny, a Hallmark representative, denying that the company had copied any other company's cards.

Alternative cards are estimated to account for about one-tenth of the $3.2 billion greeting card market which is dominated by Hallmark, American Greetings and Gibson.

Shoebox is Hallmark's big move into the alternative cards, which with their offbeat, funny and sometime raunchy messages, have been the fastest growing segment of the card market, growing at annual rate estimated at 25 percent, compared to 5 percent for the industry as a whole. Alternative cards have been dominated by small operators like Recycles, Roserich and California Dreamers.

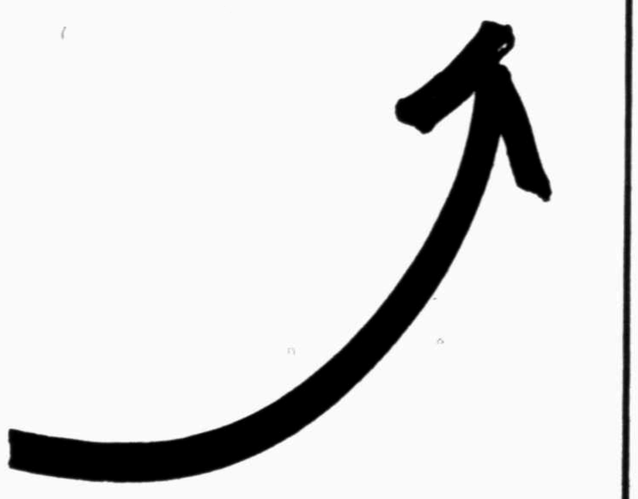

The small card makers are accusing Hallmark of copying many of their original card concepts and creative styles with its Shoebox lines.

For example, some Shoebox characters look like the familiar characters of artist Sandra Boynton of Recycled Paper Products and even the artist's signature on these Hallmark cards begins with a "B" and looks very much like Boynton's, some card makers say.

Flavia in her lawsuit alleges Hallmark is distributing "products deceptively and confusingly similar to" hers, and which infringe on her trademark and trade dress rights. In addition, the suit claims that Hallmark is attempting to unfairly monopolize the greeting card market by offering to buy back other card lines from retailers and replacing them with its new Shoebox offerings.

Boom in feedlot business eases farm crisis

GARDEN CITY, Kan. (AP) — People are used to the feedlot odor that frequently settles over this once somnolent town like a damp, musty blanket.

They call it the "smell of money" — a reminder of the economic boom that has dulled the sting of the farm crisis for southwestern Kansas.

In 1970, Finney County had 18,947 residents. Its occupation was farming, and Garden City, the biggest town in the county, had a Main Street business district much like many Kansas communities. Traffic was light unless you made the mistake of going downtown on a Friday or Saturday night when the teenagers were "dragging Main."

"I can remember you knew everybody when you walked down the street," said businessman Mark Mayo, 34, a lifelong resident. "Even when you were 15 years old, you knew everybody."

Today there are more than 10,000 additional residents.

The friendly clerk at the drugstore doesn't just add whatever you buy to your account. If you want credit, you fill out an application.

Traffic isn't light on Main or at the new shopping center on the edge of town. A new by-pass has been built to move traffic around the community.

The boom started slowly. There were a few cattle feedlots in the area in the 1950 and '60s, but they were little more than small corrals with feed bunks and a couple of cowboys. Cattle were fattened and sold for shipment to packinghouses out of state.

BUT AVAILABLE feed grains, wheat pasture, cattle and the climate made the area attractive to feedyard operators, said Del Allen, an animal sciences professor at Kansas State University.

Now the sand hills around Garden City teem with feedlots. They are sophisticated, computerized operations that cover hundreds of acres and fatten thousands of head of cattle.

The feedyards made it possible for the next growth spurt.

As the beef packing industry in the United States began decentralizing, it looked for areas with slaughter-ready cattle and a non-union workforce that would accept lower wages than were paid in urban centers. Building new packing plants also allowed the companies to adopt modern technology.

Slaughterhouses and processing plants had operated in Dodge City, Garden City and Liberal since the 1960s, but a new era dawned in 1980. The big boys came to town.

Excel Corp., a subsidiary of the agribusiness giant Cargill, built a large beef slaughter plant in Dodge City in 1980. Three years later, it constructed a beef fabrication facility on an adjacent site. Employing about 1,000 workers, the plants can kill and process 3,800 cattle a day.

IBP Corp., the industry leader, broke ground west of Garden City near Holcomb in 1981 and built the largest beef packing and processing plant in the world. It employs 2,100 people and can handle 5,000 cattle a day.

ALLEN SAID THE giants chose southwestern Kansas because they saw the growth and strength of the feedlot business and realized there was not yet enough of a local market for the fattened cattle.

Kansas finished 1985 as the top beef packing state in the nation after processing 4.2 billion pounds of beef, more than double the 1980 production of 1.9 billion pounds. Allen said it is a ranking that likely will be retained for some time to come.

Allied industries also have flourished. There is a new manufacturing plant supplying boxes used to ship cuts of beef that have been chilled or frozen by a new cold services business. Livestock and feedlot equipment manufacturers and companies that build feedlots have had steady business. Truck drivers and trucking companies have had more than enough work hauling cattle to the plants and processed beef away.

The demand for workers drew thousands of new residents. In 1980, Finney County counted only 625 jobs in non-durable goods manufacturing. Last year, there were 3,850.

Many of the new residents were what resettlement workers call "secondary migrants," people who already had migrated to the United States and moved again to find work. Garden City acquired a Southeast Asian population estimated at 1,800 people.

"After arriving in Texas, or California, or Alabama or Colorado, they heard from a family member there is a job that would pay $7-plus an hour and you don't have to speak much English. That can present a rather attractive alternative to doing nothing," said Ken Erickson of the state Social and Rehabilitation Services office.

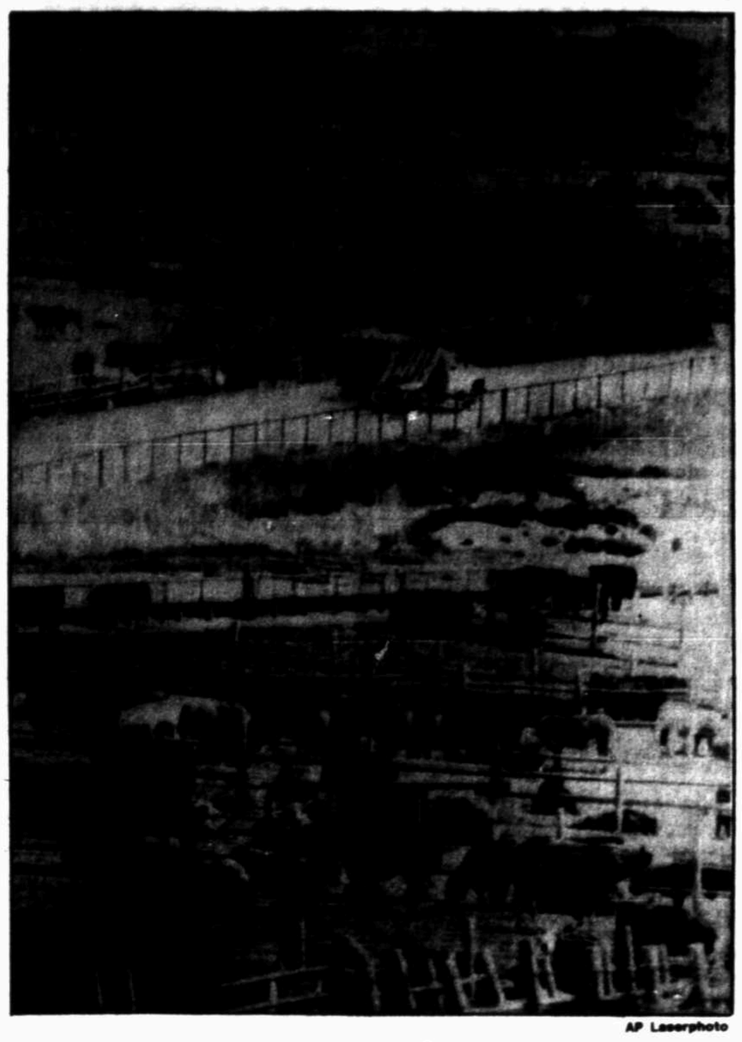

HE SAID THE refugees have established about two dozen businesses of their own, catering to their ethnic communities.

School officials found the swift increase in the number of students a challenge.

On Sept. 15, 1979, the year the decision was made to build the IBP plant, Garden City schools had 4,540 pupils. By the start of this school year, 5,775 students were enrolled. About 19 percent of those students have a parent employed in the beef packing industry, said Charles Stones, assistant superintendent.

With about 25 portable classrooms in use, the district has plans for building two new grade schools. One will open in August for 400 students and another in 1987 for 500 students.

By 1991, another middle school and either a new high school or an addition to the present high school will be needed, Stones said.

Legendary El Paso hotel reopens its doors

EL PASO, Texas (UPI) — A turn-of-the-century hotel, where ranchers once bought and sold fortunes over a hand shake in the lobby, has reopened its doors after a $50 million facelift.

A 26-foot stained glass dome from Tiffany's in New York which graced the lobby of the Hotel Paso del Norte when it opened its doors in 1912, was dismantled and sent to a studio in Massachusetts for restoration.

The dome is the focal point for the new Westin Paso del Norte, enlarged from 200 to 375 rooms.

The renovation of the hotel was financed by Franklin Land and Resources Co., a wholly-owned subsidiary of El Paso Electric Co. The hotel is being operated under a contract with the Westin Hotels and Resorts, the oldest hotel management firm in the United States.

Hotel spokesman Charles W. "Lucky" Leverett said Franklin Land was formed to take advantage of the corporate tax laws by providing the utility with a means to invest in capital improvements.

Paul Himmelman, general manager of the hotel, said the Westin Paso del Norte has five sales representatives actively soliciting conventions and corporate meetings.

"El Paso is in a unique location," he said. "There are many corporate headquarters in El Paso and the hotel is located only a few blocks from Mexico. We hope to attract new business to the city."

Steve Shalit, executive assistant manager of the hotel, said the Westin Paso del Norte will do well "because it is El Paso's newest hotel, and there is a great deal of nostalgia connected with the old hotel."

"The renovation of the old hotel and the restoration of the Tiffany dome has created a great deal of interest," he said. "There's a lot of history in this hotel. In addition, we're next to the convention center and we're in a good location, right downtown and next to Mexico."

Shalit called the new hotel "an absolutely gorgeous property." He said the hotel features:

— The Tiffany dome bar, once the lobby of the old hotel, with light piano music daily.

— Two restaurants, the Cafe Rio, open from 6:30 a.m. until 11 p.m., seven days a week, featuring an outdoor patio, and the Dome Bar and Grill, to open by mid-June, dinner only.

— Well-lighted, secure underground garage.

— Largest ballroom in El Paso and a total of 27,000 square feet of meeting space.

— Single or double rooms starting at $75, with a weekend rate ranging from $44 to $69.

The new hotel wing has 17 stories, seven more than the old hotel. The new Westin Paso del Norte, combining the new with the old, boasts 25-foot ceilings with original friezes, golden scagiola, black serpentine marble, cherrystone walls, original mahogany carvings, European chandeliers and the restored dome, Shalit said.

Leverett, a long-time El Pasoan, said the old Hotel Paso del Norte housed such distinguished visitors as John "Black Jack" Pershing, Clark Gable, Pancho Villa, Charles Lindbergh, Amelia Earhart, Gloria Swanson, Eleanor Roosevelt, Will Rogers and Enrico Caruso.

"If that dome could talk, what stories we would hear," Leverett said.

Leverett said ranchers from throughout the Southwest and northern Mexico used the domed lobby of the old hotel as their unofficial headquarters, often clinching deals with a simple handshake.

"There are all kinds of stories about those days in El Paso," he said "My favorite is about the rancher who ordered the hotel desk clerk to pay for a Cadillac that was being delivered to him at the hotel and put it on his bill. The hotel paid for the Cadillac and the rancher paid the hotel in cash when he checked out."

Part of the new hotel's strategy, he said, was the hiring of an award-winning chef from the Westin Copley Place Hotel in Boston.

Matthew Rogala, 33, born in Connecticut and a graduate of the prestigious Culinary Institute of New York City, said Boston clam chowder will be featured daily in the hotel's restaurants, made with "quahogs," special Atlantic coast clams flown in from Massachusetts.

Democrat supported by Republican primary loser

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — John Thomas Henderson, who lost to Milton Fox in the Republican Party primary runoff for the Texas Railroad Commission, has endorsed Democratic nominee John Sharp in the Nov. 4 general election.

Henderson called Fox a "political junkie" who will hamper the rest of the statewide GOP ticket.

"Mr. Fox will be the only Republican on the ballot who believes more government is the best government," he said. "He has been feeding at the trough of the taxpayers for 14 years."

Henderson said Sharp has a "record of fiscal conservatism" and is "without question the best candidate for Texas."

But Fox told a news conference he was not worried about Henderson's support of Sharp.

"Of course, Mr. Henderson comes from a Democratic background," he said. "I don't think he's ever been comfortable in the Republican Party."

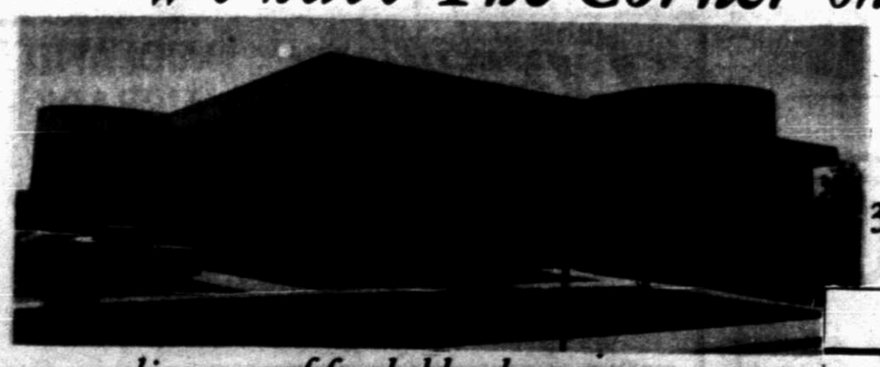

Fox noted that Henderson was endorsed in the June 7 GOP primary runoff by the liberal journal, The Texas Observer.

"I don't really think it (Henderson endorsement) it's going to cost me very many votes," he said.

Henderson collected 56,016 votes or 44 percent of the votes cast in the runoff.

Seltzer water enjoying sparkling resurgence

Fitness craze brings back seltzer

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — For years the seltzer business was kind of, well, flat. The odd customers were dying, and the companies themselves seemed moribund.

But that was before aerobics, Perrier and wine coolers. Sparkling water of every kind is "in" nowadays, and seltzer is enjoying a resurgence that big companies, such as Canada Dry and Schweppes, hope to exploit.

So do Julian Diamond and Morton Shechtman. Julie and Mort, as they are known, are the last remaining providers of old-fashioned, home-delivered, spritz-bottle seltzer in Southern California.

They do business a short hop from one another deep in the heart of industrial North Hollywood. The two companies monopolize the business locally, but Julie and Mort nurse a healthy dislike for one another — and maintain an even healtheir competition.

Diamond, 59, whose family started A-1 Seltzer in the 1920s and 1930s — he is not sure of an exact date — runs the company out of a kind of industrial barn filled with bottles and equipment that would not look out of place in the Smithsonian.

Shechtman, 40, a relative novice with just 24 years in seltzer, used to own an A-1 delivery route until he and Diamond had a falling-out in 1976. Now, he and his father, Sidney, have their own little plant, Fremor Seltzer, jammed with their own antique bottles and ancient equipment.

BOTH BUSINESS owners hope to benefit from America's current love affait with light-colored, low-calorie, salt-free and caffeine-free beverages, of which seltzer is probably the most extreme example this side of tap water. Authentic seltzer is just purified water that has been carbonated.

Neither Julie's company nor Mort's will have an easy time exploiting the trend.

For one thing, the big beverage companies are not about to leave the booming seltzer business to Julie and mort. The beverage giants already have put bottles of plain and flavored seltzer in supermarkets, and Canada Dry is claiming to be the No.1 seltzer seller with 41 percent of the market.

But A-1 and Fremor also have each other to contend with. Both claim more volume and better seltzer than the other, and each is planning to expand. A-1 wants to branch out into San Diego, while Fremor hopes to add a cash-and-carry business to its home delivery service.

Nevertheless, both men say their firms are thriving, partly because their delivery people will drive extraordinary distances to serve established customers and partly because their old-fashioned products "are in keeping with modern life styles," in the words of Gary Hemphill, editor of Beverage Industry, a trade magazine.

No one knows exactly how much seltzer Americans crink, but industry analysts estimate that supermarkets and grocery stores alone sold 26 million gallons last year, a small share of the 10.6 billion gallons of soft drinks consumed nationwide in 1985.

AND ALL AGREE that seltzer consumption is on the upswing. Albert Armitage, marketing vice president for Schweppes, said sales are growing 20 percent a year versus just 4 percent for soft drinks overall.

"It's a very good business," said Diamond, a former bantamweight boxer. "Everybody is very health conscious."

Unlike most club soda and mineral waters, seltzer is salt-free. Seltzer makers claim that it is purer than tap water and has more bounce than spring water. Diamond and Shechtman contend that their stuff is even better than store-bought seltzer.

Both say their product is bubblier and stays that way because the siphon top retains carbonation down to the last drop. Their prices are reasonably competitive with those of retailers. Charges vary with distance, and sometimes by delivery driver, but Fremor generally charges $4, and A-1, $4.50 a case.

But A-1 and Fremor don't just offer fizz. They offer nostalgia.

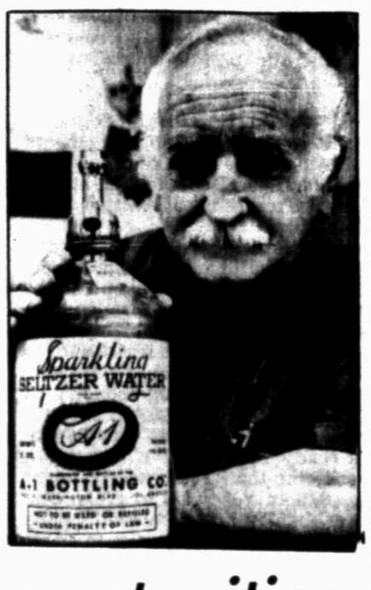

Morton Shechtman, right, and his father Sidney are proprietors of Fremor Seltzer in Los Angeles, above, and Julian Diamond, below, is owner of A-1 Seltzer, also of Los Angeles.

Besides the familiar clank of home delivery and the powerful spray of ancient metal valves, the two companies sell their products in tens of thousands of evocative old bottles purchased from defunct seltzer companies all over the country.

The bottles, some dating to the turn of the century, weigh three or four pounds each and bear the names of long-departed selter companies from Cincinnati to San Francisco. Some have Art Deco designs, and most carry chrome-plated pewter siphons that can knock a glass right out of your hand with a jolting burst of sparkling water. They squirt so hard that selzer bottles used to be sold as fire extinguishers, and Diamond still has one labeled that way.

DIAMOND AND SCHECTMAN say such bottles aren't made anymore in an age of plastics and disposables, and, although some occasionally break, the glass is extraodrinarily tough.

Supermarkets rearrange cut-flower business

By HOLLY ORNSTEIN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Although it is Sunday and the local florist is closed, the Floral Shoppe at the Food Emporium, in New York's Greenwich Village, is bustling. After considering a blue iris for 90 cents, long-stem red roses at $1.50 apiece, lavender or white freesia for 90 cents and an array of bouquets, Judy Karlov finally purchased a $3.99 bunch of daisies. "I've been keeping fresh flowers in my house continuously for the last six months," she says.

Karlov, an interior designer, is hardly alone in her newly cultivated taste for fresh flowers. Increasingly, Americans are adding cut flowers to their shopping lists — and buying them in supermarkets, along with their groceries. The trend is moving the country closer to the European custom, which considers flowers in the home a necessity rather than a luxury reserved for special occasions and holidays, such as Father's Day. "The Yuppie movement, impulse buying, entertaining in the home and self-indulgent consumerism" all are forcing the change, says Pamela J. Pernot, director of marketing for Conroy's Inc., a chain of 72 flower stores.

As a result, Americans are spending more than ever on flowers. The figure came to $20.29 per capita last year, 10.3 percent more than in 1984, says Harriet L. Malinas, research analyst for the Florist's Transworld Delivery Association. And with increasing frequency, the flowers are being bought at supermarkets. About 80 percent of the nation's major supermarkets now stock flowers, more than twice as many as in 1974.

"FLOWERS REFLECT a changing supermarket strategy; the more you can get under one roof the better," said David Litwak, research director of Supermarket Business, an industry trade publication. "The concept of one-stop shopping means luring customers with nonfood items like hardware, beauty aids, VCR rentals, film processing, clothing and flowers. These products also carry a higher gross profit margin. You make more selling a rose than a banana."

While supermarkets are emerging as the major new force in the expanding cut-flower business, others are cashing in as well, among them department and discount stores such as Macy's and K Mart, and franchise chains. Their entry into the market has been eased by the huge, relatively new supply of low-cost flowers from abroad, and the ability of supermarkets and major retailers to use their own distribution networks to quickly move large quantities of perishable flowers.

Increasingly, the supermarkets and big retailers are buying in bulk directly from flower producers and storing them temporarily in their own warehouses, thus bypassing the flower wholesalers on whom the small, independent florists must rely. "It's no sweat for big chains to buy a whole planeload of flowers and ship them to all their outlets," said Stephen J. Daigler, director of the wholesale division of the Society of American Florists. Kroger, the Cincinnati-based supermarket chain, for example, buys more than 80 percent of its flowers directly from growers, making possible a cost savings beyond the reach of the traditional mom-and-pop florist.

THESE TRADITIONAL florists, however, still account for 63 percent of domestic retail sales, says Bridget K. Behe, a doctoral candidate in horticultural marketing at Pennsylvania State University who recently surveyed flower retailers. And they should hang on to a good part of that, experts say. "Florists are going to be hurt, but not endangered," says George J. Kress, a professor of marketing at Colorado State University. "Location and delivery will keep them alive."

Still, supermarkets, discount stores and department stores have gained an 18.3 percent share of the retail cut-flower market — up from 6 percent in 1980 — with supermarkets alone accounting for 8.6 percent. Most of the gain has come at the expense of the traditional florist, Behe says.

The transformation of the cut-flower business from a sleepy world of domestic growers, wholesalers and small retailers to mass marketing began with changes in the international flower market in the mid-1970s. Growers in such countries as the Netherlands and Colombia increased production dramatically in response to new American demand that began with house plants and spread to cut flowers.

With low prices, based primarily on cheap labor, and greatly improved transportation that allowed for quick delivery, foreign growers rapidly penetrated the market. And the lower prices reinforced Americans' emerging taste for fresh flowers.

BETWEEN 1975 and 1985, the value of imports exploded from $19.8 million to $220.9 million, or 37 percent of total wholesale domestic cut-flower sales of $594.87 million, according to figures compiled by the Commerce Department and the International Trade Commission.

"As production has increased over the years, prices have fallen steadily, making imported flowers, especially tulips, a mass market product," said Richard O. Belanger, manager of the North American office of the Flower Council of Holland. The average wholesale price of tulips in Holland dropped from 30 cents a stem in 1975 to 25 cents recently, Belanger says, a decline that is all the more striking given the rising growing costs in Europe in this period.

Imports have also lent stability to what was traditionally a boom-and-bust business. "Imports have made it possible to sell products for the same price throughout the year," said Donald E. Bonebrake, an executive with Ralph's Supermarkets Inc., based in Grayson, Ky. "In the past, growers ran on supply and demand.

More interest in security spurs job opportunities

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Corporations and government entities are taking more interest in security precautions and are spending more money in the quest for safety. This offers job opportunities, and has already resulted in a number of new courses and programs in security at universities and community colleges across the country.

John McCrie, editor of Security Letter, a trade journal, and a teacher at the John Jay College of Criminal Justice in New York, said in an interview that "there has been a dearth of management talent" in the security industry.

"There are excellent opportunities for managers handling electronic devices and programs, and good opportunities in the industry as a whole," he said.

John Jay College is planning a four-year course in security training for a bachelor of science degree. The course will start in the fall.

Dr. Robert Overman, vice president of human resources at Guardsmark Inc. in Memphis, a large security concern, agrees that there is heightened awareness of the need for security. "The outlook for the industry is good," he said in an interview. For management jobs the company mainly recruits holders of bachelor of science degrees in the security area at salaries of $18,000 to $20,000 a year. It also recruits at graduate schools of business like Harvard's, offering salaries of $35,000 or so.

"We have 6,500 employees and 70 offices around the country, and do business in 400 cities." he said. Much recruiting is done through the offices and then trainees spend time at Memphis headquarters.

Among many colleges with security programs are Macomb County College in Michigan, Ohio University, St. John's University and Northeastern University.

In fact, the security industry appears to be a steady growth field, with more and more emphasis on highly educated, well-paid managers.

The big-name companies that supply security help, such as Pinkerton and Guardsmark, generally train their young managers for two-track operations. One is heading local offices and supervising guards, and the other is marketing services to corporations.

While many people think of security in terms of combating terrorism, the industry has many aspects.

For example, a manager in charge of plant security would have the duty of determining how to protect the premises, do risk analysis and supervise the hiring and training of guards and the operation of electronic devices.

Companies are taking more and more interest in internal control because of losses due to untrustworthy employees and dishonest officers. In a small number of instances companies might hire outside firms to help detect fraud, theft and other crimes.

McCrie of the trade journal points out that more than 2,000 organizations now have data security managers, which he calls "an extraordinarily important job." This would involve making sure that computers containing business orders booked but not shipped are kept from competitors, and that computerized lists of clients do not fall into the wrong hands.

In this computer age more and more companies are assigning personnel to work at home and return the material to the company's central computer. Protecting such data from misuse has become increasingly important.

Many companies now have a risk analysis manager who analyzes where the company might be at risk from floods, fire, theft of software and other problems. His job includes recommending whether the company should try to obtain outside insurance coverage or self-insure.

For such analyses there is growing use of CAD, or computer aided design, and McCrie notes that several major architectural firms have set up security design units, utilizing the experience obtained by their own CAD programs for corporate clients wanting improved security.

Texan jailed in fraud case

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — A Texas man accused of participating in a $30 million fraudulent stock scheme was ordered to serve six months in jail for falsely filing papers that alleged he owned $950,000 in rare jewels.

In September 1985, a federal court judge ordered Vernon Hulme, 39, to freeze any assets he had equalling $950,000, the amount of money he allegedly earned from a fradulent stock scam. Hulme filed papers saying he owned that amount worth of rare gems.

However, District Judge G. Kendall Sharp determined that Hulme, of Fort Worth, Texas, did not own the jewels and found him in contempt for falsely filing the papers.

Hulme, in custody in Orlando, is also awaiting trial for his involvement in a $30 million fraud scheme in which he acted as transfer agent for Securities Transfer Inc., of Orlando.

According to Steve Rosenberg, an attorney for the Securities and Exchange Commission in Orlando, the transfer company issued at least $30 million in forged stock certificates that were used as collateral for loans.

Rosenberg said Hulme used the fraudulent documents to obtain a $950,000 loan from a mortgage lender, First San Antonio Financial in Texas.

Golf profits moving closer to the green

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Meet the new American golfer and the new American golf course: Sporty Van Heusen shirts and trousers or Lacoste skirts. (No more predictable plaid or green pants.) A set of $1,500 clubs. (Gone are moldy sticks and battered putters.) Orange or yellow balls. Motorized carts. (No more caddies.) Courses that abut condos or luxury resorts instead of sitting in out-of-the-way country clubs. Links designed to blend into the environment.

Golf, once considered a slow-paced game for the older set, is fighting to modernize its image to keep up with a generation of young people that fancies deep-sea diving and hang-gliding.

Executives of major golf equipment companies say they that believe they had little choice but to change. After all, they said, the game struggled in the rough in the 1970s and early '80s as the tennis and racketball crazes gripped the country. Most of the privately held golf equipment companies do not release profit figures, but executives agreed that in recent years the industry has fallen short on the financial fairways.

Now, they claim, it is bouncing toward the green.

The slow climb back is related to the growing number of Americans, such as aging Baby Boomers, looking for a less hectic but still challenging game. And, industry executives say, there are signs that young professional people see playing golf as a way up the corporate ladder.

But the most pronounced sign of the swing toward rejuvenation is apparel sales, the golf industry's fastest-growing sector. Don McDougall, the pro at Shinnecock Hills golf course in Southampton, New York, where the U.S. Open was recently played, said 50 percent of his business is selling designer golf clothes. "The people who come here now mostly buy the software," McDougall said.

Bob Crocco, president of the Pickwick Co. in Manhattan, a division of the Van Heusen Group, said that between $8 million and $10 million of Van Heusen's $250 million-a-year clothing business involves golf-wear sales.

"It's (golf) got much more of a popular aura to it," Crocco said. "It's allied with business and corporate life and all the other things yuppies aspire to. A lot of apparel manufacturers have looked at this and said, we can sell to this affluent customer."

But much of the rest of the industry lags behind. Sales of woods, irons and putters, for example, have remained static for the last few years, rising only about 3 percent to 4 percent a year, according to industry estimates.

On the other hand, golf ball sales have soared. In 1982, the industry introduced orange and yellow balls to supplement the traditional white ones, which are sometimes difficult to see. Chuck Yash, managing director of golf products for Spaulding Sports Worldwide Inc. in Chicopee, Mass., said that ball sales at Spaulding rose 11 percent or 12 percent the year the colored balls were lutroduced, compared with traditional sales increases of 4 percent to 5 percent each year.

While the number of American golf players has remained at about 17.5 million for the last decade, David Hueber, chief executive officer of the National Golf Foundation, an industry trade association based in North Palm Beach, Fla., is predicting that 30 million people will play the game by the year 2000.

Course designers hope Heuber is right. In 1985 there were 12,346 golf facilities, down from 13,181 in 1984. In some years during the boom decade of the '60s, between 300 and 400 new courses were built each year, according to Paul Fullmer, executive director of the American Society of Golf Course Architects in Chicago. Now, he said, perhaps 150 to 200 open annually, as some old ones fold.

Ron Patterson, president of the E-Z-Go division of Textron Inc. in Augusta, Ga., one of the major motorized cart makers, said that in the last five years that sector of the industry has been setting sales records even though it was not a segment that had ever been expected to do well.

After all, the golf cart business got its start in 1954, when someone built one with an unpromising name: the Arthritis Special.

Latin America forced to sell state-run businesses

National protection policy suffering

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Throughout Latin America, state-run businesses, once off-limits to private capital, are now for sale as debt-ridden governments try to relieve unprecedented financial pressures.

The divestitures go against a 50-year policy of nationalistic protection in the region which owes $350 billion to foreign creditors and is suffering from falling world prices for its principal exports.

Still, proponents of divestiture face several obstacles. Many key state firms are overstaffed as a result of years of nepotism and remain untouchable, or entrenched local interests block their sale. Other companies, although available, are so deep in debt or mismanaged that no private entrepreneur wants them. In some cases, the constitution bars the sale of certain companies, and in others, the list of prospective buyers is restricted.

The most energetic seller is Chile under the right-wing rule of President Gen. Augusto Pinochet.

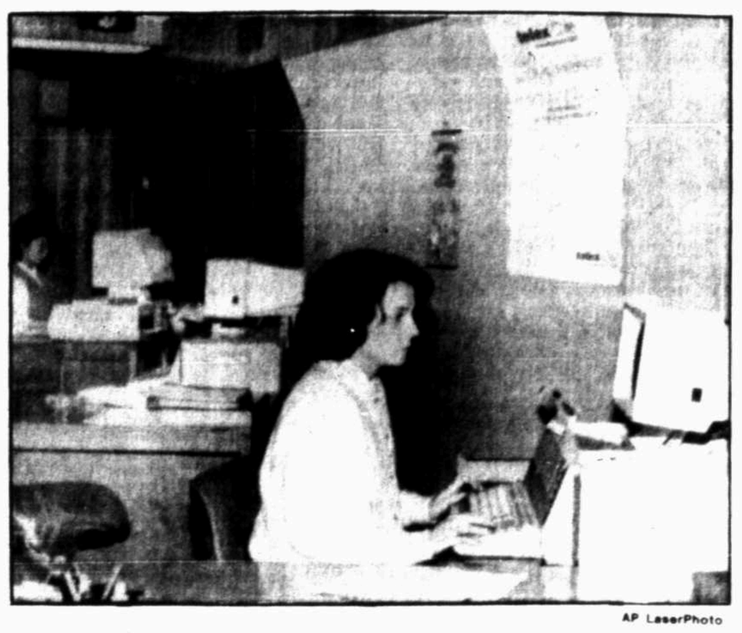

When Pinochet in 1973 overthrew the late President Salvador Allende, a Marxist, the govenment controlled 550 companies. Today, only 37 Chilean firms are in state hands and the Pinochet regime has launched a new program to reduce its role in the economy even further.

"We looked at what was happening in the United States and later Britain and France, and we came to the conclusion that state ownership doesn't work," Maj. Jose Martinez, the official in charge of the current sell-off, said in an interview.

He works for CORFO, a state holding company that wants to sell $500 million in state properties by 1988. Since last year, CORFO has sold $40 million worth in companies.

With the exception of the large state mines that produce most of Chile's copper, the No. 1 export, and the government oil company, "the rest of the economy is open to partial or total private ownership, including by foreigners," Martinez said. "Our policy probably would be considered sacreligious in other places in Latin America."

The sell-off also has political motives, observers say. Pinochet now has absolute power, but most people assume that one day the country will return to civilian rule. In state company stock sales, the regime gives preference to workers' pension funds, thus spreading ownership of key companies among tens of thousands of Chileans. The idea is to protect against takeovers by what Martinez termed "a possible future left-leaning administration."

This Chilean government-owned telex and telegraph company is up for sale, 100 percent, to private interests, including foreign. Governments throughout Latin America, burdened by foreign debt and internal deficit, are trying to get rid of state-run firms that were off-limits to private capital for decades.

Brazil, the world's most indebted nation, has since 1981 sold 25 state companies to private interests. Fifty-one more are for sale.

Excluded are strategic state-controlled areas, such as oil, telecommunications and electric power, and foreigners cannot buy former state enterprises.

Paulo Lustosa, the Brazilian official until recently in charge of the program, told The Associated Press that under state control the companies had become "bureaucratic and money-losing" and, using a popular Portuguese slang expression, "coat-hangers for jobs."

In Mexico, a system of "state capitalism" was introduced years ago to guarantee hundreds of thousands of jobs and loyalty to the ruling Revolutionary Institutional Party. But the government, strapped for cash because of a record foreign debt and plunging oil prices, in 1984 began to unload some of its 1,300 mostly unprofitable enterprises.

The number is now 900, but there have been no significant sales. Some of the firms existed only on paper, while others were absorbed in intra-government mergers. Those actually transferred to private hands were small outfits, such as a bicycle factory and two milk-processing plants. The government says it hopes to sell Aeromexico and Mexicana Airlines.

The constitution requires that the giant state oil company, Pemex, and the state phone company, Telmex, remain under government ownership. And under Mexican law, no more than 49 percent of any other company can belong to foreigners.

"We must trim the size of the public sector. But until recently, to talk of selling government companies in Mexico was tantamount to treason," Jesus Herzog Silva, until recently the treasury secretary, told the AP.

Venezuela, another country in trouble because of low oil prices, in 1984 planned to sell $2 billion worth of largely inefficient state companies. But so far, only liquidation of the $50 million Venezuelan Development Corp., a government holding company plagued by accusations of corruption, has begun.

The corporation has sold a $3 million coffee-processing plant, a $1.5 million milk-processing complex, a $200,000 phosphorous mine and a mango-processing factory.

Basic Venezuelan industries such as oil, mining and steel remain off limits to private capital.

In debt-burdened Peru, president Alan Garcia announced when he took office last year that he would sell 234 of his country's 261 state firms, most of which have deficits. But the ones excluded account for 90 percent of state production and are in key fields, such as mining, steel and banking.

Foreigners may bid under certain conditions. However, when Peru recently tried to sell an onion and garlic powder factory, there were no takers.

Argentina's President Raul Alfonsin is trying to sell his country's 353 state-controlled companies which, coupled with minority government holdings in 168 others, account for 71 percent of the federal deficit.

On the list are major concerns such as Austral Airlines, the Somisa steel plant and four petrochemical factories. But entrenched local bureaucrats and leaders of powerful labor unions, fearing mass firings, have been blocking the program.

So far, Argentina has managed to sell only a tile and glass factory, a medical services group, a pipe-making company and a travel agency.

Manuel Tanoira, the official appointed to supervise the program, recently quit. "If all Argentines could see the state from within, as I did, they would be convinced of its inherent and incorrigible inefficiency," he said.

In Colombia, the government is trying to sell some two-thirds of the country's commercial banks, which it took over in 1982. The state said it was forced to absorb the scandal-ridden banks to prevent small savers from losing more than $1 billion. Many private bankers fled the country and now are wanted on fraud charges.

Colombia also has attempted — unsuccessfully — to sell some money-losing state-run industrial plants. In the case of a heavily staffed alkali factory, labor unions defeated the effort.

Chrysler, UAW to rewrite labor contracts to compete with Japan

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp., which specializes in small and mid-size cars and trucks in direct competition with the Japanese, has begun a major push toward Japanese-style work agreements at its U.S. plants.

Chrysler and the United Auto Workers announced recently they intend to rewrite most local labor contracts covering 70,000 U.S. blue-collar workers in an attempt to compete with Japanese productivity, starting with the aging Jefferson Avenue car assembly plant in Detroit.

UAW Vice President Marc Stepp, the head of the union's Chrysler department, told a news conference that the union will agree to cut job classifications and rewrite work rules — a largely unfulfilled Chrysler goal during last fall's national labor negotiations.

Stepp said the union wouldn't give Chrysler any wage or benefit concessions and, if Chrysler wants Japanese-style labor rules, it also would have to give its workers a say in management like some Japanese companies do.

"If Japanese managers can come to this country and work with American workers and America's unions and be very successful, then why can't American managers who are here do the same thing?" Stepp said.

Chrysler's chief labor bargainer, Anthony St. John, told a separate news conference that if an agreement is reached by July 30, Chrysler will renovate the Jefferson Avenue plant to make pickup trucks and begin work on a new truckmaking complex on the same site to open in 1991.

The No. 3 U.S. carmaker and the union signed a new three-year master contract just eight months ago after a 12-week nationwide strike. But the new talks here may break precedent by changing wages and benefits — once the sole responsibility of the national bargaining teams, Stepp said.

Some cost-cutting UAW contract provisions have been agreed to since fall at several Chrysler plants, most notably in Sterling Heights, Mich., St. Louis, and Belvidere, Ill., but the union said the agreement here would become the company model.

Chrysler operates six other U.S. assembly plants and more than two dozen parts plants.

With a new contract, Chrysler plans to invest $1 billion to $1.2 billion to replace Jefferson Avenue with a sprawling pickup truck-assembly complex, if the city of Detroit provides economic concessions as expected, St. John said.

Five key suppliers would operate satellite plants on the riverfront site, the company and union said. The companies weren't identified. Stepp said the union might pursue a novel role for the suppliers: employing the unknown number of Jefferson Avenue's 4,400 workers who may be displaced by increased automation and Japanese-style practices.

Instead of concessions, the Jefferson Avenue workers may get pay increases, in the form of "profit sharing-like" payments in return for productivity increases, Stepp said. Such a move would be expected to ease membership ratification of new contracts at Chrysler plants.

Bargaining on major issues between master contracts has grown more common in the U.S. auto industry as the foreign threat moves apace.

Brokerage accused of conspiracy

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — One of the nation's largest brokerage houses conspired to launder money from a $1 million-a-week bookmaking ring that operated in five states, according to a federal grand jury indictment of the firm and seven men.

A former sales manager of the firm — Shearson Lehman Bros. Inc. — and a son-in-law of former Mayor Frank Rizzo were among those indicted in the operation, which U.S. Attorney Edward Dennis Jr. said netted a total of about $1.2 million for the seven from September 1982 to July 1985.

The 63-count indictment alleges Shearson Lehman and former sales manager Herbert L. Cantley conspired to launder the gambling proceeds through accounts at the brokerage house.

"The corporation ... is responsible for Mr. Cantley's actions," Dennis said. No charges are expected against other employees, he said.

The company was charged with two counts of conspiracy, 36 of failure to file currency transaction reports and three of concealing material facts from authorities. Convictions would carry a $16.5 million fine.

John McCann, an executive vice president for Shearson Lehman in Philadelphia, called the U.S. attorney's actions unfair.

"Their decision to attempt to hold the company liable for the alleged unauthorized criminal actions of a single former employee is not only legally unjustified, but an unfortunate abuse of prosecutorial discretion," he said.

Any crimes Cantley committed before he was fired a year ago were "clearly committed outside the scope of employment, off company premises and in violation of Shearson Lehman company policies," McCann said.

Dennis called this case the core of a wide-ranging investigation into Philadelphia financial institutions that violate the federal Bank Secrecy Act, which requires financial institutions to report to the IRS currency transactions of more than $10,000.

Rizzo's son-in-law, Joseph Vito Mastronardo Jr., and the six other defendants supervised a bookmaking ring that processed bets worth more than $1 million a week in Pennsylvania, Florida, New Jersey, Alabama and New York, according to the indictment.

Dennis said the profits were turned over to Cantley, who converted the cash into easily negotiable instruments, such as cashier's checks, treasurer's checks and money orders, through the brokerage house.

Cantley, 46, of Huntingdon Valley, is charged with two counts of conspiracy, 36 counts of failure to file currency transaction reports, one count of conducting an illegal gambling business and three counts of concealment of material facts.

Cantley was fired from Shearson following a April 3, 1985, raid at the Philadelphia offices, where evidence for the indictments was gathered, said company spokeswoman Mary McDermott.

Mastronardo, 36, of Huntingdon Valley, faces 43 counts on charges ranging from conspiracy to conducting an illegal gambling business.

May Co. outgrows boom town beginnings, dowdy image

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

If German immigrant David May had been a better silver prospector, May Department Stores might not now be digging for gold by offering to buy its tonier competitor, Associated Dry Goods.

When May and a partner did not strike it rich in the 1877 silver boom at Leadville, Colo., May started selling supplies to miners. His subsequent success led to a department store in Denver called the May Co., the first of what was to become 144 department stores in 10 different divisions.

May Department Stores has never been accused of being flashy. In fact, one generally admiring analyst characterized the stores as "blah."

Although May has blazed few fashion trails and most of its store names are not widely known outside of their regions, the St. Louis-based retailer is regarded by observers as an extremely well-managed company that has maintained sales and earnings growth far above industry averages.

Much of that success is attributed to the single-minded dedication of Chairman and Chief Executive David C. Farrell, described as a "classic workaholic" and a "Type A, all the way" who has never worked for another company.

May has been trying to shake a dowdy image in recent years, analysts say, noting that one of the major attractions of Associated Dry Goods is its upscale and nationally known department stores — particularly Lord & Taylor. In addition, May would be buying some well-run discount operations and would eliminate itself as a possible takeover candidate.

May Department Stores "is the best-run middle-income department store chain in America, period," said Monroe H. Greenstein, a retail analyst with Bear, Stearns & Co. in New York. "Their operating margins are very high."

The company "is not terribly sexy or flashy, but it's terribly solid," said Olha Holoyda, an analyst with the Stifel Nicolaus & Co. brokerage in St. Louis.

In addition to its department stores, May has substantial real estate holdings with a net book value of $776 million. The company owns or has a partnership interest in 27 shopping centers anchored by May Co. stores, owns 60 percent of its department and Venture discount stores and owns the 178-acre Park LaBrea residential and commercial complex on Los Angeles' Westside.

May also owns Eagle Stamp Co., a trading-stamp company that operates in eight states.

May Department Stores has not recorded a decline in earnings or sales in at least 11 years. For the fiscal year ended Feb. 1, May reported net earnings of $235.4 million on sales and rental income of $5.08 billion, compared to earnings of $214.1 million on sales and rental income of $4.7 billion.

Return on equity, which was 18 percent at end of the fiscal year, has been among the highest in the industry for the last three years, a company spokesman said.

The strong performance of recent years is the result of a new direction taken in 1982 that was christened "the May Mission: Excellence in Retailing."

Under the program, goals were set for sales and earnings growth, among other things. The company began extensively remodeling its department stores, in some cases reducing the sales area to create "more focused and exciting shopping environments." The remodeling program improved productivity as measured by sales per square foot, which was $123 in 1985, up 35 percent in three years.

May also has begun stressing higher-margined fashion merchandise "that will appeal to more style-conscious customers."

Behind the performance of May Department Stores is the 53-year-old Farrell, who started working for the Kaufmann's division in Pittsburgh under a work-study program while he was attending Antioch College in Ohio. Farrell became an assistant buyer after his 1956 graduation, rising through the ranks to become president of Kaufmann's in 1966.

Farrell was named president and chief operating officer of May Department Stores in 1975 and took on the chief executive's title in 1979. Farrell recently became chairman and Vice Chairman Thomas A. Hays was named president.

Farrell has been criticized for a failure to delegate tasks and for his penchant for making all decisions, big and small.

Flag-Redfern production sets annual record

Flag-Redfern Oil Co. produced a record oil production of 2,740 bopd in 1985. Natural gas sales for the year were lower at 13,254 Mcfd, primarily due to market curtailments. Net remaining reserves at January 1, 1986, were 5,144,000 barrels oil and natural gas liquids and 38,754 MMcf natural gas.

Total 1985 sales revenues were $38,094,000, resulting in net earnings of $3,757,000 after an extraordinary write-down of oil and gas reserves book value to reflect the current wellhead price outlook.

Glenn S. Brant, president and CEO, reported at the company's annual meeting, held on June 14, that the full impact of the sharply declining oil prices was not felt in the first quarter of 1986. During the quarter, oil and natural gas production averaged 2,768 bopd and 13,316 Mcfd. Total sales revenues were $8,060,000 compared to $9,863,000 received in the first quarter 1985. Net earnings for the current quarter were $1,428,000.

He also advised that the company's capital expenditure budget has been reduced to approximately one-half of the 1985 level. Although drilling projects are being pursued, the major emphasis this year will be on producing property acquisitions.

The board of directors of Flag-Redfern, comprising John J. Redfern, Jr., Glenn S. Brant, J.W. Bullion, John J. Christmann, A.F. Cox, Thomas A. Dugan, Rosalind R. Grover, Arden R. Grover, W.M. Osborn and John J. Redfern III, were reelected at the annual meeting.

Geology course scheduled at graduate center

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer Porosity Predictions in Carbonate Rocks, July 10, from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Porosity prediction is difficult because it is affected by numerous factors. These can be grouped as "global" events, depositional influences, and diagenesis. Porosity is affected by the interrelationship of these factors as well as by each one individually. Sorting out these complex factors as well as by each one individually.

Sorting out these complex factors allows "custom-tailoring" porosity models to rocks of specific age. The combination of global, depositional, and diagenetic models that best stimulate the conditions of the Permian Basin will be the focus of this seminar. Dr. Peter A. Scholle, Southern Methodist University, will instruct. Fee is $130; $15 for those unemployed since January.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Strait

Brownsville, Texas

A first in the second of three children of a highschool math teacher and his wife and was raised in Pearsall, Texas. He tried college briefly, eloped with his highschool sweetheart, Norma, and eventually joined the Army. He was stationed in Hawaii and while there, in 1972, he auditioned to be lead singer with a country and western band he had formed to perform at Army functions.

After his discharge in 1978 and return to Texas, he took up residence again at Texas State University, but he was still interested in music, and he began to perform at night in local honky tonks, eventually going to Nashville in pursuit of a record contract.

After a couple of tries with no results, he began to doubt that he would ever get anywhere in music, so he buckled down to his studies, graduated with a degree in agriculture and education and applied for a job with a company that manufactured farm posts.

He still couldn't get music out of his mind, so he gave very short shot at trying to get a record contract. This time he made it: he signed with MCA. Within a year, he had a hit single, "Down and Wound," with many more to follow and a schedule that left a following of 250 dates a year on the road.

That means he stays away from home most Harrod, Texas, wife Norma and their children, Jennifer, 15, who was killed in a traffic accident last Wednesday night, and George Jr., 8, wants that he wants at, but he admits that the way his career is going, he has to do it. He lives in Texas, Illinois, Louisiana, Nashville, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Niagara Falls, N.Y., and Iowa.) He's also been considering and as we go to press, has a new album due out at the end of May and an album of Christmas songs to be released in December.

Hamilton

Q. I would really like to know about George Hamilton's background.

Peggy Isitt,
A.W. Anderson,
Calif.

A. It's an interesting one. The 48-year-old Hamilton was born in Memphis, one of three sons of Southern belle Ann "Tenny" Stevens Potter Hamilton. Ann Hamilton married and divorced George "Spike" Hamilton, who divorced when Tenny found Spike in bed with the girl singer in his band.

Due to his mother's subsequent marriages, George moved around a lot, went to 26 prep schools and military academies and was intermittently poor, in between marriages. His first job, at the age of 9, was setting up pins at a bowling alley.

He obviously realized that he was destined for greater things, and in 1957, just shy of graduation from West Palm Beach (Fla.) High School, he left for Hollywood. Family friend Mae Murray, a silent-screen star, introduced him to the brass at MGM, who saw a marketable playboy type in him and immediately put him into films such as "Where the Boys Are," "Crimson Pirate," "Home From the Hill," "The Light in the Piazza" and "All the Fine Young Cannibals."

He did approximately 50 films typecast, and also did a few unusual turns, such as "Act One," portraying playwright Moss Hart, and "Your Cheatin' Heart," the singer Hank Williams biopic. After "The Happy Hooker Goes to Washington" he began to feel that his career needed a new direction.

He hit the dinner theater circuit, working onstage to perfect his comic timing, and re-emerged onscreen in "Love at First Bite" in 1979. The film was a hit, forcing Hollywood to adjust its image of him, but his follow-up comedy, "Zorro the Gay Blade," didn't measure up. Nevertheless, he's now at work on "Love at Second Bite."

His most recent outing, as the woodenly evil Joel Allrigan in "Dynasty," really bombed, as did the storyline in which his character was involved, as all were dropped. He's been more successful of late, it seems, selling houses — he netted a couple of million in the sale of his Beverly Hills house, a mansion in which his friend Imelda Marcos is thought to have invested.

Regarding women: Hamilton has cultivated the image of confirmed bachelor but has been married once, to the former Alexis Collins, who flew west to marry and divorce Earl Blackwell. He and Alexis have a son, Ashley, 11. Of the ladies of glitz, only he knows for sure, but he's been seen around with Elizabeth Taylor.

Q. Please tell me about Judith Light from "Who's the Boss?" I think she's fantastic.

A. She's 38, from Trenton, N.J., the only child of an accountant and a model-turned-women's wear executive, decided at the age of 8 to become an actress. Ms. Light was driven throughout her teens and is very bright — graduating from school at the age of 15 and graduating Cum Laude from college. Considering

John James, who plays Jeff Colby on the ABC series "The Colbys," dreams of being on Broadway or in a feature film someday. During the series' hiatus he and brother Herb Anderson are renovating James' house in Hollywood Hills.

John James

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features

To the audience watching the twists and turns of plot on "Dynasty" and now on "Dynasty II: The Colbys," John James is good-guy Jeff Colby, he of the laid-back persona and dreamy eyes to whom they write fan letters by the carload. What might not be guessed from his romantic demeanor on screen is this man's sense of reality off screen.

"To me, acting is a business," he says with a slow smile. "You have to be a jack of all trades: a salesman, because you're not pitching yourself as the product; a marketing manager. See, I love business, the challenge of it. I've investigated and tried to start companies. Someday I'll do that. But I like what I'm doing right now and look at it as a business. Maybe that's what's helped me through the dry periods. It was never for me some off-the-wall caper.

"You have tools to use — your voice, your body. There's a certain discipline involved. The working hours are ridiculous, you have to train like an athlete. And to last, you must have knowledge of the whole aspect of production. The simple task of reading a play or a script, you must read as if you were a carpenter reading a blueprint. Great friendships can develop within the profession, but the bottom line is that it's a business."

And this year, in its first season, "Dynasty II: The Colbys" managed to stagger up from a slow start to 17th place. "For a new program, we are doing almost 40 percent better than 'Dynasty' did the first year," James explains. "A show like this develops slowly; you have to develop compelling characters as well as exciting action so people who start tuning in become addicted.

"When I was in New York recently to appear on 'Good Morning America,' I had a chance to see how addicted. I stopped in a small store for a six-pack and from the fellow who was putting away cans of peas to a lady in elegant couture, they all knew me and wished me luck on my wedding scheduled for that evening's episode."

That being one of the plot developments which has helped boost the ratings — his remarriage to his thought-to-be-dead wife Fallon (played by Emma Samms) who had disappeared, suffering from amnesia, and stumbled into marriage with — of all people — Jeff's cousin Miles Colby.

"With my help she's beginning to remember the past she'd forgotten," again the slow smile, "and heaven knows where we'll be going next season. Right now, of course, we're on hiatus and I'd love to know where our writers go on that hiatus from which they return with the bizarre, intriguing twists of plot."

He continues, "We have the Shapiros, Esther and Richard, who created and produce the show. They spend the summer brainstorming with the Pollacks, Robert and Eileen, our supervising producers, and with writer/producers Bill Bast and Paul Huson and then come up with a concept for the whole year, which is called 'The Bible.' We live by that. But we only get it one script at a time, usually two weeks before the shoot."

He leans back in his chair, hands behind his handsome head, and gets that dreamy look. "While they're toying with all our incredible involvements with power, sex, love and greed, I'm up like this morning at 7 a.m. working on, and getting in the way of all the construction workers who are rebuilding my first house — right out there," and he waves an arm in the direction of the Hollywood hills, silhouetted against today's clear blue sky.

"It's kind of significant about my house. For a while I felt that the show might not or I might not last very long in this business, so why put down roots? Then one day I realized that we'd lasted five years. Now it's six. So I started looking and finally found this property, about three acres, with a house and a pool house and a stable already on it, but not the kind of house I wanted.

"But it would be impossible to find the house I had in mind — a Mediterranean sort of house of smooth white plaster stucco, a sort of cross between architecture I've seen at Capri — not Spanish, not Italian, not Greek, but a combination of all three, very smooth, with the interior pastel."

Could it be the fact that he just turned 30 which has influenced him? Or is he thinking of getting married — he and Marcia Wolfe, the blond Espirt model have grown close in the last year and a half.

"Of course someday I'll be getting married, but right now the house represents something I do. I have all this energy to burn off and I thought it would be a fun project. My brother is working with me on it. Right now while we're talking, he's stuccoing."

Lucille Ball coming back to TV

By FRED ROTHENBERG
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It's been 12 years since her last sitcom, but Lucille Ball is coming back to series television this fall because family comedies are in vogue again and she's ready for more pratfalls.

Miss Ball, 74, recently held a press conference, and as if to minimize concerns about her age and the rigors of series work, she spent the full 45-minute session standing up.

The red-haired Miss Ball was trim, feisty and funny. Photographers were not allowed at the news conference.

Miss Ball was asked if she would play the kind of physical comedy she virtually invented on TV in the classic "I Love Lucy" series that CBS [illegible] in the 1950s.

"You [illegible] doing, honey," she said. "[illegible] right away."

To underscore the point, Aaron Spelling, co-executive producer of ABC's new "Life With Lucy" series, complained that [illegible] sures beautiful bodies while England reveres its older stars.

"This dumb thing about age bugs me," he said. "Lucy loves physical comedy. She wants to do more of it."

One setting for "Life With Lucy" is a hardware store Miss Ball's character of Lucy Barker co-owns, allowing her to run lawn mowers through walls, Spelling said.

The other setting for the series, which begins production July 14, is the house the recently widowed Lucy Barker shares platonically with her business partner, Curtis McGibbon, played by Gale Gordon, her co-star from "The Lucy Show" that was on CBS from 1962 to '74. Living under the same roof are Lucy Barker's daughter and son-in-law, who is McGibbon's [illegible] and the couple's two children.

"I like the idea that families (on TV) are beginning to make an impression again," Miss Ball said, listing "The Cosby Show" as one of her favorite programs.

Miss Ball had received several other offers to return to TV, including, Spelling said, at least one from her old network, CBS.

After the announcement of her new ABC series earlier this year, Miss Ball met former CBS owner William S. Paley at a function in New York.

"I turned to him with tears in my eyes and he was crying," Miss Ball said. "I said, 'Bill, it's unbelievable that I'm going back to work and I won't have you to kick around anymore.' I guess if Bill weren't retired, we'd have a different story to tell."

Miss Ball is committed only for this season's 22 episodes. If the audience likes them, she could do more, the comedian said.

Miss Ball said she was lured back to series TV by Spelling, executive producer of several ABC drama series, including "Dynasty," "The Love Boat" and "Hotel." Miss Ball's husband, Gary Morton, is co-executive producer.

Spelling, who has never done a successful sitcom, said the deal was clinched when he told Miss Ball he would showcase the 1986 Lucy and not "just the schtick comedy.

"We're going to say some things about today."

In his 18 years producing television programs for ABC, Spelling has done pilots for every one of his series, except this one. "Life With Lucy" was bought by ABC sight unseen.

"To ask Lucy to do a pilot would be demeaning," Spelling said. "She probably wouldn't have come back if she had to do a pilot."

"Life With Lucy" will be shot before a live audience, another reason for the Queen of Comedy's return to prime time.

"If someone said I had to do it without a live audience, I wouldn't want to do it," Miss Ball said. "The ham always rises."

Last season, Miss Ball played a homeless woman in the CBS drama "Stone Pillow," the 10th-highest rated movie for 1985-86. Filming was grueling, and Miss Ball was hospitalized for dehydration and exhaustion following production.

"I lived through 'Stone Pillow,'" is how she described the experience.

"I got a lot of letters (after 'Stone Pillow') from my fans, saying I was fine, they enjoyed it, but 'please stick with comedy,'" Miss Ball said.

JOHN

He continues, "My brother is an actor too. He worked on 'Ryan's Hope' for a year, but he's taking a sabbatical at the moment and having more fun outdoors working than he was having on a sound stage. He'll be back. He really got interested in theater before I did. In high school, he was in the film club making student films and good at it too. He's (Herb Anderson) always enjoyed the producing and directorial aspects of the business.

"Our real name is Anderson." And their father is Herb Oscar Anderson, a noted disc jockey. "He and my mom were just here for my 30th birthday. They're very supportive parents. They just didn't have any idea this was going to happen to me.

"I didn't either. In high school, back in New Canaan, Conn., I was one of those floundering kids like Dustin Hoffman in 'The Graduate,' really floating through academia. They had to keep me away from any desk near a window because I'd have a crooked neck from gazing out, just daydreaming.

"I owe a lot to the drama teacher, Miss Russell. I was in her husband's class where we produced little things for television. I was meticulous about details in that class; everything had to be exact. She was the one who noticed and asked me if I would like to try out for the heavy, Judd, in the upcoming production of 'Oklahoma.' One of my friends bet me I didn't have the guts to do it. So I did it. They put a wig on me and a beard and I had a great time. Nobody even recognized me.

"That was my senior year. Everybody was sort of thinking about going to college, but I suddenly began thinking if I wanted to be an actor, I didn't need a four-year college and I couldn't think of what I'd take anyhow, so why not take a year off and think about it? My parents felt, what the heck, he might as well get it out of his system while he's young. My dad wasn't anti-show business, he just wondered, 'Does this kid know what he's getting into?'

"For a while I didn't get into anything. I just sat on a lawn chair and watched the planes go by. When I finally enrolled in an acting class, my parents were relieved. Anything was better than just sitting in that chair. I found it very easy, something I could do.

"I got into techniques later at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York; but in the beginning, what I got along with was truth in acting, something I've never forgotten.

"What this means to me is complete believability in what I'm doing. Not acting, but doing. I think that's the trick of it. You always have what I call the third eye. Both your eyes are on the character, but the third eye is on the audience. It's an awareness that you are performing.

"I had an acting coach tell me once that life is actually rather boring, that if you try to portray life on stage, you'll be boring. 'Make it a little interesting,' he said. That's why I feel there's a fine line between knowing that you're performing and being as real as you can be. It's an energized form of reality."

James didn't commit to acting until he'd completed the first year at the American Academy and they'd asked him to come back for a second year. That first year, he'd commuted and kept thinking, "This is fun, but I'm going to have to go get a real job." After he was asked to come back, he sat on the steps of the library on 42nd Street, thought about it and decided to follow his instinct. He has never regretted it.

Not that there weren't some slow times. He worked on the soap "Search for Tomorrow" for two years, was out of work, got a play in stock, "Butterflies Are Free," came back; sat around. "I was waiting for a Broadway show, but Barry Bostwick seemed to be doing everything I wanted to do. I thought about trying a different field, advertising. And then my agent called to say that Joyce Selznick had been hired by ABC to look for some talent for the network.

" 'This sounds like a real winner,' I said. 'This means they're seeing every actor in town?' 'Yes,' my agent said. 'Forget it,' I said. 'How would you like to go to California next week?' 'You paying?' She was paying. 'Book me a seat,' I said.

"He came out, met the ABC people, signed a contract. Within 10 days he tested for the role of Steve Carrington. After viewing the test, they created the role of Jeff Colby for him.

"All so ironic! I went to see Joyce Selznick only because I was out of a job. She died within the next year that we met. I have no idea what she saw in me. When I was in high school, I'd seen 'The Graduate' and thought Katharine Ross the ideal woman in this world. When I walked onto the set the first day, I discovered she was my 'mother.'

"Someday I must tell her. One of the pros about this business has to do with the people. What a cast we have, Barbara Stanwyck, Charlton Heston, Ricardo Montalban — what a savvy cast, and of course Maxwell Caulfield, Emma, Tracy Scoggins, Stephanie Beacham, Claire Yarlett, Michael Nader. We're all sort of locked in together. We seldom see daylight.

"The problem with California as I see it — I think it was Errol Flynn who said, 'You can fall asleep under a palm tree, wake up and it's 20 years later.' I've been through what seems like the blink of an eye and it is six years later. I wonder what the days look like. We go to work and it's still dark. There are no windows on a sound stage. There is little time to meet people other than those with whom you work. I'm not a party boy. Maybe that's why I enjoy them when I do go. But I'd found it hard to meet a girl I really wanted to be with.

"I met Marcia at an ice-skating party. I don't know why I was there. I don't ice skate. Neither does she. Isn't that funny? She's a sweet girl. Very ambitious and talented. She's taking workshops. She wants to act and has done guest appearances on a number of programs.

"It's a tough business. People set up their goals and there are pros and cons. The pros would be that everyone should do what they want to do. The cons are that we are all chasing careers rather than making commitments toward others as far as relationships are concerned. One thing for Marcia and me, we really get along well and try to be there for each other."

He loves to travel; so does she. He took her with him to Africa where they drove all over Kenya and camped among "15 million wildebeests. I'm not kidding, that's the size of the herd. Anywhere you look, you can probably see 50,000 animals. When a hippopotamus brushed the side of your tent at 2 in the morning, it wakes you up pretty good.

"Sleeping with one eye open is a new experience. You have tribesmen watching the place at night but elephants walk right through the camp. The hippo clipping the grass around our tents didn't scare Marcia, but it sure scared me. I loved Africa and am crazy about the movie 'Out of Africa.' That was shot right where we were. Marcia wants to go back. So do I."

Since then his travels have taken James to Austria, Germany and Italy, in all of which countries "Dynasty" is popular and so, he found, was he. "In Salzburg, it was like being the Pied Piper, a lot of fun for about 10 minutes. Then you want to get on with your shopping. It always seemed that as soon as you'd sign autographs and start moving on, there's another little group of 20 people waiting. It becomes difficult. Especially when you're with someone and want to look around and enjoy. It's difficult even to buy underwear at Bullock's today. You feel like somebody is watching you.

"One of these hiatuses, I want to go to Ecuador, Galapagos and London. Also probably to Germany again. But right now, I'm going to be right up there in those Hollywood Hills working on my house. It's really nice up there, kind of an undiscovered area, great for walking or hiking or riding. I have an Arabian horse I keep over in the valley, but when everything is finished, I'm going to get trail horses or quarter horses, something like that.

"My priorities are a little screwed up. First of all, I had the pool done. Then I had the cabana done, then the stables and garage, and then I got around to the house. I'm living at the pool house, my brother and I. It's quite nice, like a mini house, with a little kitchenette. I'm a good cook. And I really enjoy getting out there and trying to do construction work. That's my form of exercise. I never did care about running or jogging or lifting weights, so I thought why not create something to expel that energy?"

And while he's clearing rubble from what's being torn down and hammering and carrying beams for what's going up, he's thinking about this business he's in and where he's going in it.

"I'd like to...one of these days, damn it, if Broadway is still there, I'd love to do a Broadway show. And I'd love to do a real classy film. I won't do film just for the sake of doing it, there's too much junk out there already. But I think there is light at the end of the tunnel when they do films like 'Out of Africa,' 'Murphy's Romance,' 'The Color Purple.' There's light out there.

"I don't have to work in this business, I've always had that attitude. I do it because I enjoy it, love it and respect the industry. It's strictly a business. Rather than involve yourself in something you can't respect, I'd prefer doing what I was doing this morning — digging a ditch for an electrical conduit."

Vehicles heading for 'Great Race'

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Ninety-seven antique cars, pickups, fire engines, delivery vans and motorcycles are headed for New York.

There were also 97 waves of a green flag to mark the start Wednesday at Disneyland of the 1986 Great American Race, an 11-day, 3,500-mile, coast-to-coast marathon for vintage pre-1937 vehicles.

While confetti flew, fans cheered, bands played and a barbershop quartet sang "Come Away With Me Lucille in My Merry Oldsmobile."

The winner of the endurance contest will receive $100,000 after it ends in New York City during the Harbor Festival, which is part of the Statue of Liberty centennial celebration.

The second car across the starting line, a 1907 Thomas Flyer driven by Ginni Withers, won the original Great Race in 1908.

In that contest, the Thomas Flyer started in New York City, headed west across the United States, continued by ship to Asia and finally ended 169 days later in Paris, France, a distance of 13,341 miles.

Houston real estate devolper gets car for $6.5 million at auction

RENO, Nev. (AP) — A Texas real estate developer established a $40 million line of credit with Harrah's Automobile Collection but needed only $6.5 million of it to capture the prize of its auction Friday night, a 1931 Bugatti Royale.

Jerry J. Moore, of Houston, said he already had 270 classic cars in his private collection, "but I'll be the only kid on the block who had this."

He and William Lyon of Newport Beach, Calif., were the lone bidders once the price surpassed $5.5 million. The price then rose slowly in increments of $50,000 to $150,000 until Lyon dropped out after Moore surpassed his bid of $6.45 million.

"Everything has its limits and we hit the limit with that one," Lyon said. "I think he really wanted it and we wish him well with it."

Auctioneer Dean Kruse was quoted earlier as saying he thought the black and gold car, created by Ettore Bugatti for himself and one of six such autos in the world, would bring $7 million to $14 million. On Friday, he said those figures were the hopes of his auctioneer son, Mitchell, who had expected somebody who had not bid on cars before to join the auction.

Each of the 31 bidders had established a credit line of at least $1 million with Harrah's before the Bugatti went on sale. Friday night's auction also included a 1964 Ferrari that went for $40,000 and a 1965 Maserati Pavarotti that sold for $59,000.

They are among 237 items being liquidated by the collection in the three-day sale that ends today.

Other items in the sale catalogue include a 1915 narrow-gauge steam locomotive, complete with boxcars, passenger cars, flatcars and three miles of track and ties.

'Karate Kid II' plot unrealistic

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

A "Karate Kid" chronology:

1976: John G. Avildsen wins an Academy Award and makes a lot of money for his direction of the original "Rocky," starring Sylvester Stallone as an underdog boxer struggling to beat the odds and hang onto the woman he loves. The film, featuring cinematography by James Crabe and music by Bill Conti, climaxed with a violent fight scene that made audiences cheer.

Avildsen subsequently refused to direct a planned sequel to that blockbuster, apparently because he believed — correctly — that it could never be as good as the original.

1979: Stallone went ahead and made a blatantly manipulative sequel to "Rocky," cleverly titled "Rocky II," directing it himself without Avildsen's help. It made a ton of money.

1982: Stallone makes "Rocky III," featuring Rocky battling a vicious black man with a Mohawk hairdo. It made a ton more money.

1984: While Stallone has been making massive amounts of money off of "Rocky" sequels, Avildsen hasn't had a single hit since the original "Rocky." In fact, Avildsen is responsible for a string of such flops as "The President's Women," "Neighbors" and "A Night In Heaven."

Finally, Avildsen came up with another winner, "The Karate Kid," which received an Academy Award nomination. It starred Ralph Macchio as an underdog kid struggling to beat the odds and hang onto the girl he loves. The film, featuring cinematography by James Crabe and music by Bill Conti, climaxed with a violent fight scene that made audiences cheer.

1985: Stallone raked in still bigger piles of cash with "Rocky IV," yet another sequel to Avildsen's biggest hit. In this one, Rocky upheld the honor of the free world by defeating the Soviet Union's boxing champion in Moscow on Christmas Day.

1986: Avildsen, having apparently decided from Stallone's example (and bank account) that sequels aren't so bad after all, has made a blatantly manipulative sequel to "The Karate Kid," cleverly titled "The Karate Kid Part II." It will probably make a ton of money.

"Part II" opens with a series of scenes from the first film, re-introducing Macchio and his wise yet wisecracking mentor, Noriyuki "Pat" Morita.

In the original, Macchio was the proverbial 97-pound-weakling high school kid, who, after moving to Southern California with his mother, immediately got on the wrong side of a gang of karate surfers. Morita played a Japanese handyman who helped the fatherless teen by teaching him a set of values along with some handy karate techniques.

At the end of the first movie, Macchio neatly defeated his chief rival in a karate tournament and won the ever-lasting admiration of his girlfriend.

At the start of this new sequel, though, Macchio's girlfriend has dumped him for a UCLA football player and Morita has been called back to his ancestral home on Okinawa to care for his dying father. Even though Macchio accompanies Morita on this trip, the focus of "Part II" remains on Morita instead of Macchio.

Once back on Okinawa (the film was actually shot on Hawaii), Morita finds that an old rival, played by Danny Kamekona, wants a karate duel to the death with him.

This plot, around which the entire movie revolves, is terribly unrealistic compared to the down-to-earth story of the first film. Kamekona is almost humorously unbelievable as he wheels around Okinawan villages in a black Caddy that looks like it drove off from "The Godfather." His evilly leering chief sidekick, played by Yuji Okumoto, looks like one of the minor villains from an old Bruce Lee flick.

When they're not too tangled up in this contrived storyline, though, Morita and Macchio interact nicely and manage to recapture some of the magic of the original movie.

Actually, "The Karate Kid Part II" is not all that bad; what is bad is what it will become if Avildsen keeps heading in the direction this sequel has started toward.

1988 (Projection): Avildsen makes "The Karate Kid Part IV" featuring the kid battling a vicious Asian man with a Mohawk hairdo. It makes a ton more money.

1989 (Projection): Avildsen rakes in still bigger piles of cash with "The Karate Kid Part IV," yet another sequel to his big hit. In this one, the kid upholds the honor of the free world by defeating the Communist Chinese karate champion in Peking on Easter morning.

1990 (Projection): Stallone makes "Rocky V," in which Rocky travels to Mars and beats the heck out of the Martians' best boxers, thus causing the aliens to give up on their planned invasion of Earth.

1991 (Projection): Avildsen makes "The Karate Kid Part V," in which the kid travels to Neptune and kicks the heck out of the Neptunians' best karate masters, thus causing the aliens to give up on their planned invasion of Earth.

"The Karate Kid Part II," rated PG for violence and a little strong language, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

Redford displays comic flair in 'Legal'

"Legal Eagles" stars Robert Redford, Debra Winger and Daryl Hannah, which virtually guarantees it will be a financial success regardless of how good a film it actually is.

Redford plays an up-and-coming assistant district attorney who gets entangled with defense attorney Debra Winger in an odd case involving one of Ms. Winger's clients, played by Daryl Hannah.

Ms. Hannah, cast as an avant garde New York City performance artist (sort of a non-thinking man's Laurie Anderson), is first charged with trying to steal a painting made by her artist father just before his mysterious death in 1968. Then she is charged with — and looks quite likely guilty of — the murder of the man who owned the painting.

Ms. Winger — a classic underdog lawyer — rushes to the woman's defense and manages, with some difficulty, to get Redford's skeptical prosecutor to help her.

Redford's character is — once again — a clean-cut, all-American golden boy. In "Legal Eagles," though, he also demonstrates the most comic flair he's shown since 1979's "The Electric Horseman." He has some funny moments, including one great little bit in which he dances to "Singing In The Rain" in his bathrobe and another cute running gag about tapdancing in his bathroom.

Ms. Winger's character is a yuppified lawyer who's not above offbeat shenanigans to win a case. At one point in her career, her character is supposed to have actually put a dog on the witness stand to testify. Ms. Winger shows much the same spunk she brought to "Terms of Endearment," but none of the sexiness she had in "Urban Cowboy" or "An Officer and a Gentleman," which is very strange since she is playing opposite a male sex symbol.

For some reason, virtually all of "Legal Eagle's" female sex appeal is allocated to Ms. Hannah. In fact, almost the only thing Ms. Hannah gets to do in this film is stand around looking either emotionally disturbed or sexy — and sometimes both simultaneously.

There's very little real romantic heat in the movie. Redford and Ms. Winger simply never develop any volatile chemistry between them. They seem vaguely fond of each other more than anything else. Redford and Ms. Hannah do have their own little interlude together, but it's accidental instead of romantic.

For a film billed "as the new comedy from the director of 'Ghostbusters,'" there's also not as much really hilarious humor in "Legal Eagles" as one might expect. The movie is certainly amusing, but lacks the kind of manic comic energy that producer-director Ivan Reitman gave to 1984's "Ghostbusters" or his 1981 hit "Stripes." This new comedy is simply more of a gentle chuckle than a hearty guffaw.

The comedy is certainly stronger than the crime, however. The mystery plot looks very promising at first, but the screenplay never fully develops it. In the end, the big legal battle just sputters out.

Anyone expecting a contemporary version of the 1949 courtroom comedy classic "Adam's Rib" will be sorely disappointed.

Despite "Legal Eagle's" flaws, the actors make it an entertaining — if immediately forgettable — film.

"Legal Eagles," rated PG for strong language, some very mild violence and sexual innuendo, is now showing at the Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

David Lee Forrest is film critic of the Reporter-Telegram.

Ex-propeller maker spends retirement carving furniture

EPHRATA, Pa. (AP) — What started as a hobby and later became a business is now a hobby again as Ephrata's Kern G. Weinhold continues his art of cabinet making in his retirement years.

The comfortable Weinhold home is a showcase of his talent — the rooms filled with fine pieces of his handmade Chippendale furniture, along with many of the antiques he's gathered over the years.

The 72-year-old Weinhold proudly shows off the pieces one by one: the beautifully finished cherry Chippendale bureaus, a slant-top Chippendale desk, an open pewter cupboard, a Pembroke drop-leaf table, miniature Chippendale chests and cherry bedroom suites with canopy beds.

For his children and grandchildren, he's made chests and bedroom suites. Then, there are the grandfather clocks. Over the years, he's made 10 of them, the first, 30 years ago, for daughter Linda. He also bought old grandfather clocks, repaired them and sold them.

Other artifacts include old family pieces from the Weinhold and Kern families.

Weinhold went to work in 1940 for the Sensenich Corp. as a carver, making airplane propellers.

He began cabinet making as a hobby while employed at Sensenich, but turned it into a business 12 years later, when he opened a shop in Ephrata. At the same time, he went into the business of buying and selling antiques.

He returned to Sensenich in 1959, remaining there until his retirement in 1979.

Why his passion for Chippendale style furniture?

"It's my favorite. I like the lines and style," Weinhold said, explaining that he does all the hand dovetailing in his cabinet making, an important part of the construction. "It's neater, and it gives it the old look. It's authentic."

There's no wasted lumber when Weinhold works. He uses the smaller leftover pieces to make cutting boards or miniature chests. He uses cherry wood and curly maple wood in his reproductions.

"Both are hardwoods and give a beautiful finish," he explained.

Weinhold's wife, Betty, shows pride too, as her husband displays the many pieces of furniture.

Time may be money, but there is not enough of either

By SARAH OVERSTREET
King Features

It came to my attention recently that I have become an impatient person. I was standing at the toaster with the butter and jelly at my elbow, waiting for the bread to toast. I'll concede that I was ravenous, but as I stood there daydreaming, I noticed my right hand had to keep restraining my left hand from flipping up the little lever that pops up when the toast is done. I wanted the toast to be ready when I wanted it, not when it was actually brown.

As I watched this foolish interplay between my hands, I wondered what kind of person can't spare an extra minute to allow a machine to do what she had purchased it to do. I thought back to lunch and realized it was the same kind of person who was furious at having to wait five minutes in a fast-food line.

I had run in to get a sandwich to eat in the car on the way to work. The women at the counter were racing around like gerbils on a wheel, and two male managers were just standing around. One of the men was listlessly swiping at the clean counter with a towel and the other was standing over the shoulder of a young man frying french fries. I wanted to jump over the counter, snatch them up by their neckties and force them to sell me a fish sandwich.

Fast-food buying may be where my lack of patience asserts itself the most. Why do they call it fast, if you have to five or 10 minutes to get it? Last weekend a friend and I were on our way out of town and stopped for some breakfast-in-a-box. When we drove our car over the mechanism that activates the buzzer inside, we were told to "hold on a minute, please."

After a couple minutes had passed, my friend ran around to the window and waved her arms, and I backed over the buzzer mechanism again. A total of three minutes had elapsed, there were no cars in front of us and we were in a lather.

And that's just the tip of the iceberg. I've started to rush into the shower before the water is hot, trying to hurry it up.

I go out and call the dog before he's ready to come in from doing his business.

I start scooting the iron up and down my skirt before it's hot enough, thinking maybe the friction will speed things up.

I kill the lawnmower by trying to push it faster than it will go through tall grass.

In supermarkets, I switch lines to whichever line I think is moving the fastest, and then move again when I think I see another line take the lead. The only thing I have gained through this activity is the absolute knowledge that any given line I choose, under any given set of circumstances, will have at least one shopper with a handful of out-of-date coupons.

On my worst days, I stop the spin cycle on the washing machine before it finishes spinning and push the dial ahead to "rinse."

My driving is a study in sheer agitated intolerance. I don't yell out the window at other drivers because I am afraid I will be assaulted, but I do have conversations with them under my breath. "What can you be doing up there in that car, changing your pantyhose? Sit up there and put that thing in gear so I can get to work before my retirement party. Turn that thing left in this traffic and it'll be the last move you ever make..."

I wasn't always like this. I used to stand in lines happily, with my mind on nothing in particular. Extra time sitting in a doctor's office was just that much more time to kick back and read a magazine. I didn't think I needed a hamburger in six seconds, and I even sat inside to eat it.

My friend, an attorney who's always racing around late for something, says it's because we don't have enough time to do everything we have to do. I see her point, but I've noticed that even after I've saved 10 or 15 minutes by racing around all day, I'll turn right around and stare off into space at my desk and waste it.

Having finally recognized my alarming lack of patience, I still don't know what I'm going to do about it. I could resolve to take deep breaths and think of an island paradise the next time I'm waiting in a line somewhere, but I don't have much hope I'll do it.

Back when I was waiting happily in fast-food lines and doctor's offices, I didn't realize these people were making an extra dollar a minute off of me by scheduling too tight and refusing to hire more help.

I suppose that if time is money, and if ignorance is still bliss, I've reached the age where I have too little time, not enough money, and I'm not ignorant enough to be blissful about it anymore.

Guests fun until it's time to go to bed

By RACHEL COPE GOLDFARB
King Features

It matters not the season, nor even the reason, out-of-town guests are a blessing as mixed as winning a $500 shopping spree in a candy store after fighting to lose 45 pounds. Of course I love to welcome Uncle Elmer from the West Coast (even though he still pinches my cheeks and remarks on how much I've grown since he last saw me).

And I love to see Aunt Tillie from Ohio (even though she won't eat a thing I've cooked until I show her the wrappings of the meat, the labels from the packages and the recipes I used for guidance in my endeavor).

Problems only arise when nightfall comes, and each of our idiosyncrasies become magnified under the artificial light.

When the reality hits that we will all be sleeping (except for my mother who claims she doesn't) under the same roof, each of us stakes out personal turf.

Cousin Harry chooses to bed down with pillows and comforter on the family-room floor so he can watch the late night news and early morning aerobics. He reacts loudly to the reports that hog futures are up, and jogs along with Joni at 5:15 a.m.

Marcia and Will are early-to-bedders who can only sleep on a posture-firm mattress (which happens to be what my husband and I renew our energies upon each night in our own bedroom).

They take over our space during visits, leaving us to lie awake for seven hours on the foldout-hide-a-granite-slab couch in the guest room.

They also prefer to wear their nighties anytime after 4 p.m. That habit makes dinner parties tough unless the guests are close personal friends or are particularly tolerant of bizarre behaviors. I don't really mind except that Will's plaid flannels don't match my sofa.

Then there's Aunt Veronica who doesn't want to trouble anybody on her account. But in the process, she finds our daughter's bed too soft, our son's too hard, and the guest room much too isolated from the rest of the family.

Auntie can't sleep with morning sun, wild birds chirping or the ticking of a clock in the room. She requires three pillows (two for under her knees) but is allergic to feathers and foam. She awakens thirsty several times a night but drinks only chilled bottled spring water from a cooler next to her bed.

My brother and his extensive family join us each year for a cultural expedition. He insists upon mapping out the next day's route and activities and leaves our eyes glazed and drooping from examining snapshots, slides and tapes of last year's trip.

Each possible route to the attraction must be considered and weighed in comparison to alternates. Finally, when I no longer care if they travel by car or camel, the route is determined and we can go to bed — but never our own.

Bodies lay strewn on every clear surface during the dark hours of the family's visit, since my magnanimous brother travels with not only his four children, two dogs, three hamsters and wife (who is perpetually pregnant and so must sleep in our bed), but often brings along his grandmother-in-law. What a guy!

No one complains about the accommodations, and the fact that my home transforms into a class A campsite under a roof only seems to bother me.

But none of the inconvenience can take away the bonds our kids make with their cousins, the stories we share with our aunts and uncles or the high-school memories we recall with old pals when they stay overnight.

And in the still blackness I hear contented quiet snores of people we love as they say goodbye to busy, fun-filled days. I cherish those moments more than any photographs sent at holiday time.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

©1986 Tribune Media Services, Inc

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—Some while back, I read in one of your columns that the modern tendency is to treat an overcall just like an opening bid and respond accordingly. That led to a debacle after this auction:

West	North	East	South
1 ♢	1 ♡	Pass	1 NT
Pass	3 NT	Dble	Pass
Pass	Pass

Sitting South, I held:
♠J854 ♡7 ♢A1032 ♣J765

Partner said he expected a much better hand from me, and when I cited you, he suggested you were losing your marbles if indeed you made such a statement. Should you be locked up?
—J.M., San Diego, Calif.

A.—If I made such a blanket statement, perhaps I should be! What I should have said is that you treat partner's overcall as an opening bid on hands where you have a fit. Thus you would raise his suit to the two-level on 6-10 points and make a limit raise with 11-12. On stronger hands with a fit, either bid game or start with a cue-bid of the enemy suit, depending on how good your support is for partner's suit.

When it comes to responding with one no trump, you are looking at a different situation. Where partner has opened the bidding, you respond one no trump with no fit and a weak hand for two reasons.

1. You might have a fit in another suit and you must give partner a chance to show a second suit if he has one.

2. Partner might have a very strong hand for his one-level opening bid, and you must give him the opportunity to describe it.

Neither of these reasons holds good when partner has overcalled. The chances for a second suit are reduced, since he is likely to have five or six cards in the suit he bid. And his hand is of limited strength since he failed to make a takeout double.

With a misfit, it is particularly dangerous to bid one no trump after his overcall. If you have a weak hand, where do you expect to produce tricks if you can't make them in partner's long suit? And if his suit is a source of tricks, the hand is unlikely to play any better in no trump than in his suit.

Send any questions for this column to Charles H. Goren and Omar Sharif, in care of this newspaper.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

Library has many resources that can be of help in job hunting

By TERRY STERLING

The library has a wide variety of information sources which can help make your job hunt successful, from the planning stages to the interview which results in a job offer.

If you are currently considering a career change but don't know where to turn, two books which can help are "DISCOVER WHAT YOU'RE BEST AT" by Barry and Linda Gale and "WHAT COLOR IS YOUR PARACHUTE" by Richard Nelson Bogles.

"Discover What You're Best At" consists of the National Career Aptitude Tests with answers and a discussion of the tests. By using the tests and the career directory, you can determine "your own true career abilities...to put you on the right job track.";

"What Color is Your Parachute" is an old favorite which is updated annually, and the exercises included will help you decide what criteria are important to you in your job, where you live, and where your career may be going.

After you determine if you want to change your field, the "OCCUPATIONAL OUTLOOK HANDBOOK" contains a general description of occupations, necessary training, qualifications and earnings. In addition, the "DICTIONARY OF OCCUPATIONAL TITLES" provides descriptions for the majority of occupations of our society, and will point you in the right direction for more information on training and financial rewards.

Books which will help you in the next step of your job search are "THE JOB SEARCH COMPANION: THE ORGANIZER FOR JOB SEEKERS," by Elen Waldach, "JOBS FOR ENGLISH MAJORS AND OTHER SMART PEOPLE," by John Munschaver, "HOW TO GET THE JOB THAT'S RIGHT FOR YOU: A CAREER GUIDE FOR THE 80's," by Benedetto Greco, "FINDING THE RIGHT JOB AT MIDLIFE," by Jeffrey Allan and "HOW TO FIND A JOB WHEN JOBS ARE HARD TO FIND," by Donald R. German. You will find other titles of interest by looking under job hunting in the card catalog.

For help in preparing your resume and letters of application consider these titles and other found in the card catalog under resume (employment): "THE PERFECT RESUME," by Tom Jackson, "HOW TO WRITE BETTER RESUMES," by Adele Lewis, "RESUMES FOR SUCCESSFUL WOMEN," by Laurie Lico, "RESUME, POWER," by Tom Washington, and "WRITING MADE EASY," by Lola Coxford.

While looking for job openings be sure to check the professional journal of your field. Several of the journals in the library's petroleum and business departments list positions, including "ABA BANKING JOURNAL," "JOURNAL OF ACCOUNTING," "GEOTIMES," "JOURNAL OF PETROLEUM TECHNOLOGY," and "ENGINEERING AND MINING JOURNAL." "THE NATIONAL JOB MARKET" is a bi-weekly publication which includes job openings across the country in several fields.

Reference material which wil help you research the companies to which you are applying are annual reports, for background information, and "MILLION DOLLAR DIRECTORY," which lists officers and directors, approximate sales and number of employees and other information for business with a net worth of over $500,000. "MOODY'S ANNUAL" includes corporate histories, subsidiaries, officers and financial statistics in five major industries: Banking and Finance, Industrial, Over-The-Counter Industrial, Public Utitilities, and Transporation. "STANDARD AND POOR'S REGISTER OF CORPORATIONS, DIRECTORS AND EXECUTIVES" is an alphabetical listing of U.S. and Canadian Companies which gives officers, products, sales range and number of employees. The second volume is a list of executives and directors witn brief biographical data. "THE DIRECTORY OF CORPORATE AFFILIATIONS" is a "who owns whom" tool, listing American parent companies with their divisions, subsidiaries and affiliates. For information about regiona companies, the "ROTAN MOSLE GUIDE" lists major publicly held corporations adn financial institutions headquartered in Texas and Oklahoma. "THE TEXAS JOB BANK" lists employers in the geographic areas of Dallas, Houston and West Texas; it also includes samples of resumes and cover letters, information on federal jobs and using employment services.

As uou approach the all important job interview, you may want to consider looking at Jeffrey Allen's "HOW TO TURN AN INTERVIEW INTO A JOB," J.I. Biegeleisen's "MAKE YOUR JOB INTERVIEW A SUCCESS," or Theodore T. Pettus' "ONE ON ONE: WIN THE INTERVIEW, WIN THE JOB." Other books can be found in the card catalog under inteview.

The library staff has compiled bibliographies on job searching, resumes and interviewing which may be helpful to you.

Terry Sterling is reference librarian at Midland County Library.

Lace on display at Museum of Southwest

"Lace from the Collection of Carol Sayles" is on display through Aug. 29 at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

This exhibition features exquisite examples of antique European lace fating from the late 16th through 19th centuries. The major pieces of lace which will be on exhibit are ladies' shawls, altar cloths, cuffs, collars, handkerchiefs, borders, trims and other decorative pieces.

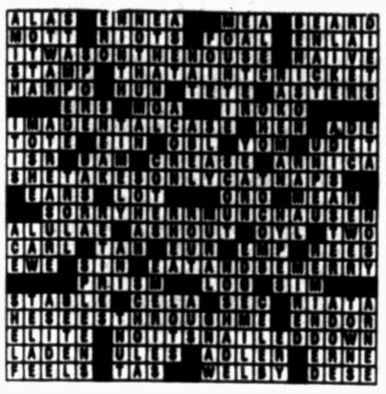

Ms. Sayles is accomplished in the art of needlework and has been an avid collector of textiles most of her life. She began collecting lace during her career as a fight attendant with Pan American World Airways.

"During layovers in Europe, I was able to see examples of lace that are not easily found in the United States, Ms. Sayles says.

In connection with this exhibition, Ms. Sayles will conduct a lace and lacemaking workshop July 21 from 9 a.m. to noon. Charge is $10. The workshop will include a gallery walk and a talk accompanied by a slide demonstration. There will also be a demonstration of lacemaking and a lace identification period.

For more information on the workshop call Dianna Koeninger at 683-2882.
