Courts back health cuts

Employers gain powers to reduce coverage

■ Rulings, new medical plans are manifestations of a system of insurance in which the sick increasingly are separated from the well.

By Milt Freudenheim
N.Y. Times News Service

A rapidly growing number of victims of cancer, AIDS and other serious illnesses are discovering that under recent court interpretations of a law that originally was intended to protect employees' benefits, their insurance coverage can evaporate when they need it most.

The recent federal court rulings have given a large majority of employers that now act as their own insurers wide leeway to cut back on existing coverage — or to skimp on coverage in the first place.

These "self-insured" employers, from giant corporations to an increasing number of smaller businesses, have been exempted from state insurance laws governing what ailments insurance companies must cover.

For example, many states require coverage for alcoholism, mental health problems and intensive care for infants with birth defects.

At the same time, a U.S. Supreme Court decision has made it much harder for patients under all kinds of health insurance plans to sue to get benefits they say have been unfairly denied.

Among the most striking cases in which employees found they had insurance in name only were those of Richard Owens in Atlanta and John McGann in Houston.

After Owens began filing thousands of dollars in AIDS claims with his employer, a furniture chain called Storehouse, the company cut its maximum lifetime benefit for AIDS to $25,000 from $1 million.

Libya lashes out

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — Libya went on the offensive at the World Court on Saturday, suggesting it had been a victim of U.S. terrorism and accusing Washington and London of trampling international law. But the United States counterattacked, detailing evidence to link Libya to terror bombings in Western Europe. Britain, for its part, scoffed at the notion that the Tripoli government was fit to judge the guilt or innocence of suspects in the 1988 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland./10A

Brown, Clinton duel

NEW YORK — Democratic front-runner Bill Clinton slashed at Jerry Brown's proposed 13 percent flat tax Saturday, saying it would put money in his pocket — and probably Brown's as well — while hurting the poor. Brown shot back that the Arkansas governor had "invented another big lie" about the flat tax as the Democratic presidential race intensified in advance of the state's critical April 7 primary. "My wife and I have released our tax returns, you can look at them," Clinton said as he campaigned at a Queens diner./11A

Crystal's laughs

LOS ANGELES — Billy Crystal got the most laughs from fellow comedians Saturday, picking up American Comedy Awards for his work on the film "City Slickers" and as host of the Academy Awards. Candice Bergen won as funniest actress in a television series for her portrayal of acerbic journalist "Murphy Brown." Jerry Seinfeld was named funniest TV series actor for "Seinfeld." Lily Tomlin was named funniest actress in a motion picture for "Search for Signs of Intelligent Life . . . " Lifetime achievement awards were given to Johnny Carson and Phyllis Diller. Penny Marshall was honored with a Lifetime Creative Achievement Award. The 6th American Comedy Awards ceremony was taped for broadcast on ABC on May 13.

State's tax reform talk hits Austin

■ Comptroller John Sharp studies value-added plan.

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Former Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, after announcing he would not seek re-election in 1991, came out in favor of a state income tax to reform Texas' outdated revenue system.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, who succeeded Hobby, also called for an income tax as part of a reform package to eliminate property taxes and reduce the state sales tax. He also wanted a corporate income tax to replace the franchise tax, which Bullock said is unequally applied to businesses and is inadequate in raising revenues based on how the state's economy has changed in the past 50 years.

Now Comptroller John Sharp is studying the idea of a value-added tax, known as a VAT, to replace corporate franchise taxes and school property taxes in an effort to solve the school financing dilemma.

Because Texas, unlike most states, does not have an income tax, it relies heavily on sales and property taxes, both of which are among the highest in the nation.

Hazardous-waste dump plans draw heat along border

By Tim Golden
N.Y. Times News Service

MEXICO CITY — After months of U.S. criticism of Mexico's environmental practices and policies, proposals to build three hazardous waste dumps along the Texas border have caused an uproar on both sides of the Rio Grande.

Mexican state and city governments, environmental groups, and political parties have all clamored against the proposal, arguing that the dumps could threaten the groundwater that communities in both countries share. Recently, hundreds of Mexicans joined Texans in protests at different border-crossing points.

Fear, legal maneuvers mark murdered woman's last year

Parents adopt a cause in daughter's memory

EDITOR'S NOTE: On March 22, 1991, 20-year-old Angela Frescaz sought a restraining order against her estranged husband, claiming he had made threats against her. Almost a year later, Ms. Frescaz was dead from gunshot wounds and her estranged husband was charged with the murder. Following is an in-depth look at the woman's fears as told through that restraining order.

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff Writer

Luis and Lydia Frescaz refuse to let their daughter's death be in vain.

"She didn't deserve to go like this. We will never stop mentioning her. We are not ashamed that she was killed because it was not her fault," Lydia Frescaz said.

Indeed, shooting victim Angela Frescaz's parents are determined to keep the memory of their slain daughter alive.

And while they intend to raise her 11-month-old surviving son, Bradley, like one of their own, they also plan to tell him about his real mother.

"She deserves that. She was a beautiful person. She was so full of life. It is so terrible that Bradley will never know what a beautiful person she really was," Mrs. Frescaz said.

"But we're saving everything for when he's old enough to understand. We'll do our best to show him her beauty — both inside and out."

"Isn't she beautiful?" she said, as she gestured to her daughter's photograph on the fireplace mantel of their modest, well-furnished, home.

Bradley, playing quietly on the floor, looked up at his doting grandmother and smiled.

COVERAGE: Courts give employers broad powers to cut insurance

(From 1A)

Similarly, McGann's employer, H & H Music, a Texas retail group, reduced its $1 million maximum to $5,000 for AIDS cases.

A U.S. District Court in Atlanta and a U.S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans ruled last year that the companies had every right to do so. If they had bought their coverage from an insurance company, state laws in both Georgia and Texas would have required that the original AIDS coverage be continued.

Under a string of earlier court rulings, self-insured employers have been exempted from hundreds of state health-care laws.

Massachusetts, for example, requires insurers to provide up to 30 days of hospitalization a year for alcoholism treatment. But AT&T employees are eligible for only five to seven days of detoxification in a hospital and a lifetime limit of two 30-day hospital stays, when approved by company medical experts. AT&T also pays for outpatient alcoholism treatment.

Although six states now require coverage of in-vitro fertilization to help women become pregnant, General Electric, like many self-insured employers, does not pay for that treatment.

In effect, the court rulings and the health plans that take advantage of them are another manifestation of a system of private health insurance in which the sick are increasingly separated from the well. That lowers the insurance costs of the healthy but leaves more of the sick with little or no protection.

"We're very concerned," said John Rother, public policy director for the American Association of Retired Persons, which had supported McGann. "It's not just AIDS. This kind of ruling could be applied to any chronic disease, like Alzheimer's, which strikes some people in their 50s. We seem to just have insurance for those people who don't need it."

The number of Americans affected by the rulings is rising as more employers, concerned about upwardly spiraling medical costs, choose to act as their own insurers.

To be sure, many of these employers continue to offer a comprehensive benefits package that often exceeds what most states require.

They say they act as their own insurer not to cut back on coverage but to economize by paying less to insurance companies and averting the costs of complying with varying state laws.

They also are exempted from state insurance taxes and assessments, and they say they can slow the rise in costs by supervising the quality and duration of care.

But others, desperate to lower medical-cost increases, have cut back. Many self-insured employers are eliminating or reducing coverage for expensive treatments like care for infertility and alcoholism, which insurance companies are required to offer in many states, said Judith Mazo, research director with the Segal Company, a benefits consulting firm.

Nearly two-thirds of the nation's employers are now providing their own coverage, up from fewer than half only four years ago, according to a survey of 2,000 employers last year by the A. Foster Higgins consulting firm.

The proportion of self-insured smaller employers, with 100 or fewer workers, grew even faster, more than doubling to 23 percent last year from only 9 percent in 1988.

Many self-insured employers have been able to reduce their coverage under the courts' interpretations of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act, known as Erisa. Enacted in 1974, the law was intended to guarantee employee pension rights by establishing federal control over benefits.

But the courts have interpreted a broad but little-noticed provision of the law to limit state authority over health benefits as well.

Former government official who helped draft the law said health plans were not even discussed when a sweeping federal preemption of state benefit laws was added. Erisa did not spell out federal rules to replace the state laws.

The American Medical Association, the American Association of Retired Persons, the state attorneys general, and several state insurance commissioners support proposals in Congress to plug the exemptions from state laws.

As James S. Todd, executive vice president of the American Medical Association, put it, "The sad part is that somebody who thinks they are covered by their employer suddenly discovers that they are not."

But the Bush administration and many employers strongly oppose changing Erisa, and the insurance industry even supports extending the federal exemption to all employers.

Without Erisa, they say, insurance costs would rise even faster as insurers would be forced to comply with varying state requirements, and even more employers would give up health coverage.

Even more small businesses would be exempted from state insurance laws under an administration proposal last month, which would reward companies that join new purchasing groups to buy coverage.

Worries about the dependability of health insurance, which Bush cited in his State of the Union speech, were hardly assuaged by the McGann and Owens rulings.

Citing a 1985 appeals court ruling that employer decisions on what benefits to offer should be determined by "forces in the marketplace" unless contradicted by a federal law, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit said in November that under the Erisa law a self-insured employer has "an absolute right to alter the terms of medical coverage available to plan beneficiaries."

Mark A. Huvard, a lawyer for H&H, McGann's employer, said the company had to "limit its exposure on things that are exotic" or else drop basic health coverage for several hundred other employees. Lawyers for the estate of McGann, who died last June, recently petitioned for a Supreme Court review.

Judith O'Brien, a lawyer for Owens's employer, said Storehouse could not find an insurance company willing to provide reinsurance for costs above $25,000 for AIDS cases. Self-insured employers often hedge their risks by buying reinsurance, which covers costs above an agreed level.

A federal appeals court in Atlanta heard arguments in the case in February.

FEAR: Frescaz's premonition wouldn't go away

mother reassured her the dream was silly and would never come true.

But Lydia Frescaz was wrong. Although she, too, was concerned for her daughter's welfare, she did her best to offer comfort in an increasingly volatile situation.

But Angela had a premonition that wouldn't go away.

The threats against her had become more serious, the lies more frequent and the beatings increasingly violent.

Court documents show Ms. Frescaz feared for her safety months before she was shot several times at point-blank range with a 12-gauge shotgun in the parking lot of Furr's Supermarket at Plaza Center in north Midland.

The Feb. 25 shooting occurred seconds after police said she pulled into the parking lot in a desperate attempt to seek refuge from her former husband, who later was charged with her murder.

On March 6, the 20-year-old former Midland College student lost her 10-day battle for life when doctors disconnected her life-support system. They also were unable to save the unborn baby she had carried for about five months.

One of three blasts from the killer's shotgun struck Ms. Frescaz in the upper abdomen, narrowly missing the fetus. And, as doctors amputated her right leg to prevent infection, patched a blown-off thumb and an injured ear, the baby's heart continued to beat. But when Ms. Frescaz's lungs began to fail, the unborn infant's condition deteriorated rapidly.

Her former husband, 27-year-old Gilberto Cuevas Rivera, remains in the Midland County Jail awaiting his murder trial, set for June 1.

But due to the complexity of the case, Rivera's court-appointed attorney, Paul Williams, doubts the June 1 date will be met.

Last Friday, Rivera pleaded not guilty to the murder charge.

Texas law does not allow prosecutors to file an additional charge of murder for the death of the unborn child.

After leaving Rivera in February 1991, Ms. Frescaz set out to accomplish her dream of attending college and making a life for herself and her child. But her desire for success was matched only by her ex-husband's will to stop her, according to her parents.

Ms. Frescaz put her faith in a protective order she obtained last spring to keep her ex-husband away.

One year ago, March 22, 1991 — nearly 11 months before the shooting — Ms. Frescaz sought the aid of the courts, pleading in her written request for a restraining order for someone to help. She was nine months' pregnant at the time with her son, Bradley Frescaz.

On April 24, 1991, with both Ms. Frescaz and Rivera present, the district attorney's office granted the protective order. Rivera was ordered to attend 15 counseling sessions at Batterer's Anonymous and to pay the $216 bill for court costs, according to court documents.

Citing federal confidentiality laws, Batterer's Anonymous coordinator Ron Hanna declined to comment on whether Rivera attended the court-mandated counseling.

Ms. Frescaz had done all she legally could.

The intention of the family violence protective order she sought that day at the Midland County District Attorney's Office was to prevent her estranged husband from "committing family violence," communicating in a threatening way or coming within 200 yards of her home or place of employment.

But there are limits to enforcing a restraining order.

"I feel sorry for her. She pursued all the possible legal remedies she could," said District Attorney Al Schorre. "Unfortunately, in Texas there is no way to arrest someone because you think they are going to commit a crime. And unfortunately, the city doesn't have enough manpower to provide an around-the-clock guard for everyone filing a protective order," he said.

According to Schorre, Ms. Frescaz's only other avenue for help may have been the Battered Women and Children's Center, which offers 24-hour, live-in services.

According to her parents, Ms. Frescaz considered the center several months before the shooting. But she was determined to keep her job at Midland Park Mall, and therefore determined that their protection would do her little good.

Excerpts from Ms. Frescaz's March 22, 1991, affidavit for the restraining order outline the action that led her to seek legal action.

"There have been several times that he has threatened me and hit and abused me. He has threatened to kill us both and to take me to El Paso where I couldn't get away from him," Ms. Frescaz wrote.

Her legal maneuver followed an alleged incident earlier that month in the parking lot of Midland Park Mall. In the affidavit, Ms. Frescaz revealed that on March 1, 1991, she agreed to meet Rivera on a bench in the mall outside of where she worked. The couple had been separated for three weeks at the time. The two talked briefly on the bench. After her shift, Ms. Frescaz left through a back-door exit, hoping to get to her car before Rivera saw her.

But, according to Ms. Frescaz, Rivera was waiting at the car and refused to let her unlock the door.

"We argued a little while and I walked back into the mall. He kept following me around the mall," she wrote.

When she finally went back to her car, Rivera would not let her put the keys in the ignition. When he tried to take her keys, Ms. Frescaz screamed and Rivera retaliated by striking her in the face with a compact disc player he had purchased inside, according to the affidavit.

"I was bleeding and my whole face was full of blood. He pushed me over a little bit and got in and drove off," she stated.

After cleaning off the blood at Rivera's apartment, Ms. Frescaz promised she would lie about the incident if he would take her to the hospital, she said in the affidavit. But when the nurses took her into the radiology department for X-rays, she took a nurse's pen and wrote a note asking the nurse to call her parents and the police.

Her parents and the police arrived simultaneously and Angela's father, Luis, struck Rivera with his fist following heated words.

Police fined Mr. Frescaz $125 and booked Rivera into the Midland County Jail on assault charges, records show.

Less than three months earlier, Ms. Frescaz and Rivera argued about a videotape that Rivera allegedly made of another girl's "legs and chest." According to the affidavit, Ms. Frescaz discovered the tape in the videocassette recorder but Rivera was angry that she had looked through his "things."

She said she asked her husband to leave, as he had promised he would do if he ever made her angry, but he refused.

"I tried to pack my things, but he would push me around and stop me from getting to my clothes. Then he punched me in the eye and threw me on the bed and pulled my hair and, because I was crying, he put his hand over my mouth and I could not breathe," Ms. Frescaz wrote.

"I bit him and my mouth was bleeding so he let me go to the bathroom and wash up. He came into the bathroom and locked us both in and threatened to kill us both if I tried to leave. He acted like he was going to cut his wrist but the knife was dull."

CAUSE: Parents, victim didn't expect a shotgun

(From 1A)

"She wanted the best for Bradley," Mrs. Frescaz said. "He still looks at her picture and says 'mama.' He is the only thing that keeps us hanging on. He is our life now.

"I will really miss her coming through the door, the way she greeted Bradley — it was so precious. And little Bradley's eyes would light up when he saw her," she said.

Angela Frescaz died at dawn on March 6, 10 days after being shot several times in her car in a grocery store parking lot. Her estranged husband, Gilbert Rivera, has been charged with the murder. On Friday, he pleaded not guilty to the charge and a trial date was set for June 1.

Ms. Frescaz's parents, citing fresh paint marks and dents on their daughter's car, which they bought for her a few months before the shooting, believe she had driven to the store in a frantic attempt to seek help from the pursuing gunman.

But Angela Frescaz didn't count on a 12-gauge shotgun.

Lydia and Luis Frescaz didn't either.

"We never thought it would end that way. We never thought he would shoot her," Mrs. Frescaz said.

The couple contacted police numerous times to complain about Rivera. They allege his harrassment included an attempt to burn their house down while they visited the hospital during Bradley's birth.

"We told the officers it was a dangerous situation. He has been harassing her and us for a long time, and it got worse when she tried to leave him," Frescaz said.

Indeed, experts believe battered women are at the greatest risk of being killed when they try to leave the abusive partner.

"Angela tried so hard. But he wouldn't, he just kept messing around on her," Mrs. Frescaz said.

Rivera's court-appointed attorney, Paul Williams, declined to comment on the charges against his client.

But for the Frescaz's — a middle-class couple "happily married" for 25 years — coping with the violent late-February death of their daughter is frightening.

"We're just normal people. We go to work and pay our bills like everyone else," Frescaz said. "We are not used to violence. But it happens, and it happens elsewhere, too. It doesn't discriminate."

Family members held an around-the-clock, 10-day vigil at the hospital following the shooting. They didn't want their daughter and sister to be alone. And, according to Mrs. Frescaz, she knew they were with her.

Now, suddenly, the family is left to sort out the flood of emotions that surround her death.

For several weeks before the shooting, Mrs. Frescaz drove her daughter to her job at the mall while Angela's car was undergoing repairs. But on February 25, Angela picked up her car and drove herself.

"She called after work that night and said 'I'm on my way home.' She gave me the route she would be taking home — just in case," Mrs. Frescaz said.

Lydia Frescaz said Rivera's threats against her daughter had become more severe during the days before the shooting, causing Angela to phone home before leaving work that night.

"Where she was shot is not where she told us she would be driving. There were dents and paint marks on her car like someone had tried to run her off the road. We think she came back toward town to get help," she said.

"I would give anything to have taken her home that night."

Later, while in the hospital, Angela wrote a note to her parents indicating that Rivera had been following her before the shooting.

"We didn't sleep while police were looking for Gilbert," Mrs. Frescaz said. "The fact that he's in jail is the only reason we sleep now."

The Frescaz's believe the system failed their daughter and the protective order she obtained against him was useless.

"Her protective order said he could not come within 200 feet of Angela. But we live on a public road and they said nothing could be done to keep him off of it," Frescaz said. "Police considered the problems 'domestic quarrels' and said they could do little. They said they would have to catch him in the act."

The couple, parents of five other children, said they have lived through a "very bad nightmare."

Rivera has one child from a previous marriage. His first wife now lives in California.

"He had shot his ex-wife with a stun-gun. She may have ended up like Angela except that she moved away. She's a good person. She was horrified when she learned what happened to Angela. She said she will come back to help us if we need it," Mrs. Frescaz said.

"Angela should have moved away, too, but she didn't want to be without us," she said. "We're a very close family"

In memory of their daughter, the Frescaz's have adopted a cause.

"We want to help other women before it's too late for them. We want to make a difference. Angela would have wanted it that way," Frescaz said. "We're not sure what exactly we can do, but we're going to make a trip to Austin if we need to. We'll just keep climbing the ladders."

DUMPS: Proposals create uproar along Rio Grande

has added its voice to the complaints, warning that it will use "all of the diplomatic means available" to block any radioactive or toxic waste sites that it considers dangerous. A commission of the Mexican Congress voted unanimously to ask the administration of President Carlos Salinas de Gortari to increase its efforts to stop the dumps from being built.

For the time being, the Foreign Ministry has only made a formal request to the United States for more information about the proposals. But Mexican diplomats say that unless geologists convince them that leaks from the dumps could not reach the aquifers that run beneath the border area, they will insist that the projects violate a 1983 border environmental treaty.

"There are lots of environmental incidents along the border, but here we are dealing with something different," said Alberto Szekely, an environmental law specialist who is advising the Foreign Ministry in its negotiations with the United States. "This is a case that can be stopped before something happens."

The growing controversy reflects how, even as the momentum has slowed in negotiations over a North American Free Trade Agreement, concerns about economic integration have continued to reshape environmental politics along the border.

According to officials in both countries, Mexican and U.S. border communities that once kept their distance have begun to find themselves frequently allied, or at least in consultation, over their mutual environmental problems. Environmental groups in Mexico and the United States say they now often coordinate their lobbying efforts, and many have found that problems they might once have considered local can be handled more effectively on a broader front.

"We had to make this an international issue," Alfredo Gutierrez Jr., the mayor of Del Rio, Texas, said in a telephone interview explaining his town's strategy to block the large hazardous waste dump that Chemical Waste Management Inc. wants to build near Dryden, Texas, a town about 15 miles north of the Rio Grande and 35 miles west of the Pecos River in southwest Texas. "In terms of defeating the dump site, Mexico's involvement has a tremendous impact."

U.S. and Texas officials have emphasized that none of the three dumps was close to receiving final approval. "And there are mechanisms," the U.S. ambassador, John D. Negroponte, assured Mexican reporters recently, "to take into account any concerns, any point of view not only of the Mexican government but of any community that feels that it might be affected."

The two countries agreed last week to discuss the issue at a high-level meeting in April in Washington. But like their counterparts in Texas, border communities and environmentalists in Mexico have grown more worried since a Texas agency voted last month to buy a 16,000-acre ranch near Sierra Blanca, a small town about 75 miles southeast of El Paso.

TAXES: Reform talk reverberates through Austin

(From 1A)

School property taxes represent about 65 percent of property taxes on homes, businesses and land in Texas, and since 1982 they have increased 146 percent.

The state Supreme Court has ruled the method of financing public schools is unconstitutional because heavy use of local property taxes discriminates against property-poor school districts.

Sharp said a VAT would provide the money to equalize public school financing and eliminate the franchise tax and the need for an income tax.

The switch also would spur home sales by decreasing the cost of home ownership, which would give the Texas economy a quick boost, he said. And with lower monthly payments, home owners also would have more cash to put into the economy by buying other products and services.

Sharp foresees a 3.75 percent VAT that would bring in about $9.5 billion a year. This would replace $7.5 billion from local property taxes and $2 billion from corporate franchise taxes.

School districts with bond debt would have to continue levying a portion of their property taxes until the debt was paid.

Businesses with gross receipts of less than $100,000 would be exempt from the VAT because it would not be cost-effective to collect it.

"Property taxes are a lousy way to fund school systems in the state of Texas," Sharp said. "This tax . . . would probably kill an income tax," he added.

Most industrialized nations use a value-added tax, according to members of Sharp's staff, who are researching the idea, but Michigan is the only state with something resembling a VAT.

The tax would be applied to the value added to goods and services; that is, the state would tax the sales for the product or service, after subtracting the cost of materials and normal business expenses, except for labor and capital.

For example, the state would tax a mining company 3.75 percent on its sales of ore to a steel mill, after the mining company deducted business and operating costs except for capital and labor.

When the mill makes steel from the ore and sells it to a widget manufacturer, the state would tax the mill on the sale of the steel.

When the manufacturer makes widgets from the steel and sells them to a wholesaler, the state would get its cut, and again when the wholesaler sells the widgets to a retailer.

Airline, railroad or trucking companies would pay a tax on their sales each time they transported the product.

The customer at the retail level would not pay a VAT, but rather would pay the state sales tax of 6.25 percent. Voters can approve up to another 2 percent for cities and counties, for a total of 8.25 percent.

In the case of services, including everything from dry cleaning to medical care, the providers would pay a 3.75 percent tax on their gross sales, again after deducting for business expenses such as materials used in providing the service, rent, taxes, advertising, bad debt, utilities.

Likewise, landlords would pay a VAT on their rent sales, utilities would pay on their sales, as would advertising agencies and all other companies providing services.

Sharp said the trade-off in VAT taxes for franchise and school property taxes would be revenue neutral. The state would be replacing one form of taxation with another.

But companies pass along the costs of doing business, including taxes, in the form of the price of the product or service. A VAT would appear to be a series of sales taxes, which are hidden within the cost of the final product.

For that reason, it is a regressive tax that would drive up consumer prices and hurt low-income people the most, critics charged.

The Texas Association of Taxpayers strongly criticized the idea.

Common Cause of Texas, a government watchdog group, said a VAT is nothing more than another regressive sales tax on consumers.

The Texas Association of Business was interested in the concept, but pointed out a VAT would not affect each business equally.

Generally, capital-intensive businesses that own a lot of property in Texas would benefit if a VAT replaced property and franchise taxes, Sharp said.

Trost gets backing from ex-candidate

Staff Report

Mayoral candidate Michael Trost, a restaurateur, has gained the support of Louis Beique, who dropped out of the race on Friday, according to a written statement released by the two men on Saturday.

Beique and Trost share similar views on issues facing the city and after a discussion between the two, Beique said he was comfortable with Trost's stand on the need for single-member districts, the future of Midland International Airport and budgetary concerns, the statement said.

The two men also agreed to support amending the city charter to prevent incumbent council members from seeking another office unless their term is expiring, the statement said.

Trost and Beique also shared the opinion of the need to change the city charter so that when a mid-term vacancy arises on the council, applicants must be interviewed by the council and public forums held, the statement said.

"Backroom deals, where people are appointed without input from either the public or the retiring council member, should be a thing of the past," Beique said in the statement.

The appointment controversy arose over the manner in which the current council filled the last two council vacancies, the statement said. The most recent example was former council member John Castro's resignation and subsequent ttransfer out of the city.

Other mayoral candidates include J.D. Faircloth, an at-large councilman; Robbyne Fuller, founding president of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs; and Don Kyser, a private financial investor, who, although a licenced private pilot, was previously identified as only a pilot.

Hagman leaves museum

Staff Report

After more than five years as director of the Museum of the Southwest, Jean Hagman has handed in her resignation effective May 15.

"As of the middle of May, I will have been there five-and-a-hal years," Miss Hagman said. "During that time, we've accomplished many things, made great strides in lots of directions and done lots of new things. And it just seemed like this was a time for change."

Among the projects which have been accomplished at the museum in recent years is the establishment of a management team.

"One of the reasons for setting up that kind of a management style is to handle change in the transition between directors," Miss Hagman said. "One of the reasons for my leaving now is because we have that structure in place to handle things in the interim."

The management teams consists of Gary Wood, art and exhibitions director; Susan Zellars, finance manager; Enid Davis, administrative assistant; Mark Hartman, planetarium director; Metta Preas, complex manager; and Pam Jenkins, chief of security.

"During the transition, they will run the museum in lieu of an interim director," Miss Hagman said.

She said her resignation comes at a propitious time of the year.

"The timing is really good for the board to look for a new director and to hopefully have someone who will be ready to come in in the fall," she said.

Miss Hagman plans to begin working on her doctorate at the University of Texas, Austin.

She will do her doctoral studies in education, particularly in non-traditional forms of education which relate specifically to the kinds of hands-on, non-lecture types of education that goes on in museums."

Kurdish revolt challenges Turkish plans

DIYARBAKIR, Turkey (AP) — The 8-year-old Kurdish rebellion that has boiled over in southeastern Turkey challenges a government eager to project itself as a Western power in the region.

Internationally, Turkey is maneuvering to profit from its strategic importance after the disintegration of the Soviet Union. Its allies see Turkey as a bulwark against the spread of Muslim fundamentalism and Iranian influence in the former Soviet central Asian republics.

The government says it will crush the insurgency, but even so, dissident Kurds might obtain concessions.

"Turkey will solve the Kurdish issue and will separate it from terrorism," said Sefe Tashan, director of the Foreign Policy Institute, a private think tank in Ankara. "Turkey will deal with terrorism by force and will deal with the Kurdish issue in a democratic matter."

Germany has suspended arms shipments to its NATO ally, contending Turkey has used German weapons to suppress the Kurds. Turkey denies it.

Sympathizers with the Kurds have bombed Turkish banks and offices in several European cities.

The United States urged the government to act with restraint and to avoid killing or wounding innocent civilians. It also described as terrorists the Kurdish Labor Party guerrillas who seek to establish a Marxist state in the southeast.

Western allies hesitate to condemn Turkey's response to the rebellion or take up the Kurdish cause because they see a Muslim nation with a secular government as the best means of checking Iran and Islamic fundamentalism.

"There is nobody else that can play the role," said Bulent Aliriza, an expert on Turkey at the Carnegie Endowment in Washington.

"Pakistan made the case it could play the role, but it has its own problems, especially with India. The beauty is that Turkey sits at the Western table."

At the same time, Aliriza said, Turkey is redefining what it means to be a Turk by stressing its historic links to the Turkic republics of central Asia. He said that could cause repercussions among minorities such as the Kurds, who believe the government shows more concern for Azerbaijanis than for them.

Turkey's problems with its own Kurds stem in part from its support for the Kurds across the border in Iraq who rebelled against Saddam Hussein.

"The Kurds in Turkey have had a much better deal than those in Iraq," Aliriza said. "There, you are talking about the Butcher of Baghdad, who has done truly unspeakable things.

"Baghdad would have leveled Cizre," he said, referring to the town where the latest fighting began March 21. Up to 50 Kurds were killed in four days of battle with the army.

At first, Turkish Kurds were heartened by the government's support for their Iraqi brethren and by statements from Turkish leaders that they recognized the "Kurdish reality" in the southeast.

Dogu Ergil, a political science professor and adviser to the government, said he has recommended the Kurdish region be given greater autonomy.

"We have to separate local populations from fighting groups and deal with them as equal citizens," he said.

Aliriza said the Kurdish issue is getting more attention in official circles as well as the press.

Unlike the guerrillas, Kurdish dissidents and politicians in the southeast say they want self-determination, but not necessarily independence.

FOOD: Officials investigate 100 complaints yearly of cholera, leaving at least one passenger dead and hospitalizing five others.

The flight, which arrived on Valentine's Day, originated in Buenas Aires, Argentina, but stopped in Lima, Peru.

"We have to assume that something on the plane — food or water — caused this exposure," said Dr. Shirley Fannin, director of the county health department's disease control program.

Cholera is spread mainly by drinking feces-contaminated water or by eating food contaminated by dirty water, human waste or soiled hands; and/or consumption of raw or undercooked seafood from polluted waters.

Cholera now is sweeping through South and Central America, where at least 4,000 people have died — 3,000 in Peru.

According to the U.S. Food & Drug Administration, food-borne illnesses sicken tens of millions Americans each year, costing the economy somewhere between $1 billion to $10 billion annually.

Other health agencies estimate that food-borne microorganisms are responsible for as many as 81 million cases of diarrhea each year in the United States.

While the risk of eating contaminated food in the United States is much lower than in other countries, food poisoning here occurs more often than generally reported.

The Texas Restaurant Association estimates that Midlanders will spend $69.8 million eating out in 1992, while their counterparts in Odessa will consume $74.5 million worth of food from area restaurants.

That's a lot of dining out.

It also represents a great deal of trust being placed in others to prepare those meals properly.

So, just who is watching what you eat?

From the U.S. Department of Agriculture to the Midland Health Department, watchful eyes are cast on everything from growers and breeders to manufacturers and restaurants.

It is the ultimate food chain — a chain that experts admit is vastly understaffed. Still, those same experts insist the system does a reasonably good job considering the massive effort involved in producing and preparing food products for a growing American population whose dining habits continue to change.

According to the Texas Department of Health's bureau of food and drugs, of retail establishments doing business in Texas, more than 85 percent come under the jurisdiction of local health inspectors.

Jerry Reyes is one of those inspectors.

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Midland Health Administrator Monette Burke holds a morning staff meeting as Fred Sperry, one of her health inspectors looks on.

"To me, they have the wrong idea about why we're there. Like any other establishment, the kitchen is going to get dirty during normal use," he said. "I don't go in looking for today's dirt. I'm there looking for last week's dirt."

Reyes, whose route in Midland covers 150 food establishments from restaurants to grocery stores, said he is not just concerned with kitchen cleanliness, but also with hygiene practices of employees.

"The thing I like to stress when I'm in these places is hand washing," Reyes said.

Midland employs three full-time health inspectors. Their job involves a host of duties.

In addition to restaurants and grocery chains, inspectors are responsible for overseeing what is being served in nursing homes, schools, convenience stores, hospitals, day-care centers and country clubs.

'Like any other establishment, the kitchen is going to get dirty during normal use. I don't go in looking for today's dirt. I'm there looking for last week's dirt.'

— Jerry Reyes, Midland health inspector

There are 450 establishments in Midland County and 690 in Ector County licensed annually. Each is inspected four to five times each year.

"If it has to do with food being served to the public, we're involved in it," said Monette Burke, administrator for the Midland Health Department. "A lot of time, the violations we find are just out of pure ignorance."

On an average, Midland officials receive about 100 complaints a year from residents — all of which are investigated on a case-by-case basis.

For example, if a resident complains about roaches, the inspector will return to a given restaurant and examine its extermination schedule.

"We just don't take their word for it," Ms. Burke said. "It's a question of an education-type thing. If it looks as though there isn't a regular (extermination) program, we'll suggest they (initiate one). So there is a little investigative work that goes into it."

Ms. Burke said that during the time she has been administrator, only four to five establishments have been closed because of genuine concern for public health.

When a permit is pulled, the administrator calls a hearing. At that time, it is determined what the business needs to do to come into compliance with basic safety guidelines.

"That's a pretty severe situation, but it can happen," Ms. Burke said.

Two years ago, for example, the department closed Dunson's Cafe on North Lamesa Road after the owner failed to correct numerous violations, many of which had to do with roach infestation and general uncleanliness.

Only after the owner agreed to certain stipulations, including a regular extermination schedule, was he re-issued a permit. Since then, the restaurant generally has scored well during inspections, department records indicate.

"We hate to carry it to that point," said Ms. Burke, whose office has never been pushed to the point of taking an owner to court over violations that clearly were ignored.

Such action could result in a $2,000 fine.

Still, some things aren't always in the control of local authorities.

For example, in August 1986, 347 individuals contracted shigellosis in Midland and Odessa after contaminated lettuce was traced to three franchise operations — one of which involved a number of stores.

The outbreak was the largest of its kind reported in the last decade, according to the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Investigators later determined that a food handler at an Ector County shredding plant was the source of the shigella, and that the processing method allowed for cross-contamination to occur.

"It became obvious we had a serious problem on our hands," said Dr. James Humphreys, health authority for the Midland Health Department, who watched the number of cases develop during one weekend.

Shigellosis occurs when food becomes contaminated by the hands of a human carrier. It usually involves poultry and dairy products. The disease can produce abdominal cramps, diarrhea, fever, vomiting and blood as well as pus or mucus stools.

While the disease is rarely fatal — except in some cases involving newborns — it is a gut-wrenching experience.

Humphreys said the outbreak gave the department the vehicle it needed to re-emphasize sanitation and personal hygiene. "Most of us never had a firsthand experience with this sort of thing until it happened. It was quite fascinating.... We were just glad it wasn't something worse."

But determining a food-borne disease takes detective work — something with which Jeffrey Taylor is all too familiar.

As director of the state's infectious disease program, Taylor said the biggest problem with identifying a food illness is the varying incubation periods different food presents.

"Some take a day to develop — others weeks," he said. "We only hear about the big ones, either in terms of size or the (severity of the) agent that's involved. In many cases, people may complain, live with it and never see a doctor."

"There are a lot of retail establishments in Texas," Taylor said. "Part of me says they do a pretty good job as far as food preparation, but another part of me says there are probably a lot more food-borne problems out there that aren't being reported or at least recognized by public authorities."

School kitchens maintain top-quality sanitation standards

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

Cheryl Harbor tells an interesting story.

When asked where she eats out while on health inspections in outlying counties, Ms. Harbor, a sanitarian with the Texas Department of Health, replied: "School cafeterias . . . because the food care, handling and hygiene is superior."

Ms. Harbor isn't the only professional who shares that view.

During interviews for this series, a number of inspectors, instructors and administrators said the same thing.

They get no argument from Patricia Grillos, director of food services for the Midland Independent School District.

"We always feel we can do more because sanitation is such a critical aspect of a food service operation, particularly when you serve as many students as we do each day," Ms. Grillos said.

She administers 32 kitchens within MISD, including the Carver Learning Center. Each day the district dishes up 3,500 breakfasts and 12,000 lunches, plus a long list of a la carte items.

It's a big responsibility. It is also one that the district gets top scores on as far as health inspections are concerned.

"The schools are kind of like a food chain (store)," said Fred Sperry, an inspector with the Midland City/County Health Department. "They have their own training schedule as far as employees go and a supervisor who visits those schools several times each week."

Ms. Grillos said when she first came to MISD, the district was inspected every month. "Now I've noticed we haven't had an inspection since October, so I guess it's semi-annual. They do one in the fall and one in the spring."

So what makes MISD and other school districts so different from commercial operations?

For one thing, the operation is somewhat autonomous from the district, in that it is an enterprising fund. While it is included in the district's budget, it doesn't receive any financial support from the school.

"So our pay scale is a little higher than minimum wage. Also a lot of our employees are family people, rather than teen-agers, so our pool is a little more mature," Ms. Grillos said.

The district also does something else different.

All of its employees must be certified in food handling, whether they are a full-time worker or just a substitute.

"They receive a three-hour orientation which includes sanitation and safety," Ms. Grillos said. "Each manager uses a little time each day to talk with them about the operation, production and sanitation."

In addition, the district uses three field supervisors who are in the kitchens on a daily basis, as well as conduct weekly inspections of each individual school.

"So not only do we have an in-house training program, we have an in-house weekly inspection, similar to what the health department conducts," she said. "We also require all our managers to be certified by the Texas Food Service Association.

Ms. Grillos is vice president of that association. "I wrote half the courses, so I'm familiar with them."

The program — which is based on a college-level course — is offered on a periodic basis through the continuing education departments at both Midland and Odessa colleges.

Ms. Grillos said her first and primary concern is cleanliness, "especially when you realize the impact it can have here," he said. "One case of food-borne illness can affect 500 kids on a campus."

And what of those students who go home and tell their parents they became ill after eating cafeteria food?

Highly unlikely.

Ms. Grillos said to her knowledge, there has never been a food-borne outbreak caused by school-prepared food here.

"If one child were to get sick, there would be multiple children sick," she said.

As a safeguard, Midland and other school districts keep sample plates of all the food served during a school day.

"We keep these test trays for three days," Ms. Grillos said. "If we have a problem, we'll send it to a lab and have it analyzed to see if there's any type of food-borne bacteria that could have caused (the sickness)."

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Patricia Grillos, director of food services for the Midland Independent School District and Charles Whittle, food service manager for Burnett Elementary, display sample food trays which the district holds for 72 hours. In the event of a disease outbreak, the trays can be tested for food-borne bacteria.

Of course, the cost of safety does not come cheap.

"It takes time and money to conduct ongoing training programs, and it's a luxury, if you will, to have field supervisors on hand who simply go in and inspect these schools. Commercial operations don't have that expertise because labor is the primary cost of their operation," she said.

Like others directly involved in food, Ms. Grillos said she is very conscious about what's goes on around her when she goes out to eat in public.

"But then, any employee who works in food services is probably more critical of the way food is prepared and held."

1986 shigellosis outbreak ranks among decade's largest

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

Dr. James Humphreys recalled the day he accepted the post of Midland's health authority with the Midland Health Department.

"They said there was nothing to it, that all I'd have to do is sign a few papers. Somehow I believed that."

Humphreys

It didn't work out that way.

In September 1986, Humphreys found himself immersed in the largest single outbreak of shigellosis recorded in the U.S. during the past decade. He was bombarded by questions he wasn't prepared to answer.

Now, nearly six years later, Humphreys remains in awe at the speed and explosiveness the disease took during that one-week period when 347 diagnosed.

"Quite frankly, it was an excellent experience as far as epidemiology tracking methods go," he said. "I'm just glad it wasn't something far worse. Up to that point, we didn't realize that it (shigellosis) could thrive on lettuce like it did."

That's because for a long time, experts believed shigella bacteria were an impotent force in vegetables because of their acetic makeup and other internal properties.

But lettuce — particularly shredded lettuce — proved experts wrong.

And that baffled professionals, who for several weeks scrambled for clues that might lead them to the source of the disease.

While shigella bacteria is found primarily in dairy products, poultry and potato salads — all of which can be contaminated by squalid hands coming in contact with moist or undercooked foods — it readily became apparent to Humphreys and others that none of the known culprits was the cause.

"We figured out (later) the actual outbreak began somewhere around Aug. 29. We knew something was going on, but we didn't know what, except the fact that there was an outbreak," said Toby Cross, administrator for the Ector County Health Department.

It was only after an exhaustive investigation that professionals were able to pinpoint, with some certainty, the source of the outbreak — a tiny shredding operation in Ector County.

Facts of a study later revealed that a plant worker, whose job was to feed the lettuce into a shredder, had a history of shigella, and, in fact, reported symptoms of mild shigellosis on Aug. 28.

One day later, the lettuce apparently was delivered to Taco Villa restaurants in Odessa, and to Chili's Grill and Bar and Texas Burger in Midland.

"Although we found they (the customers) had eaten in different restaurants, all of the restaurants had one thing in common, the lettuce," said Jeffrey Taylor, director of the Texas Department of Health's infectious disease program in Austin.

"Closing the restaurants wouldn't have solved the problem," Taylor said. "The key was to identify the agent involved, which was shigellosis."

In addition to problems relating to the chain of events that led to the outbreak, health officials said they were dogged by the news media throughout the ordeal, who demanded the names of the restaurants as well as a list of patrons who had been diagnosed with shigellosis.

The result was a downturn in restaurant business as the publicity mounted.

"Left to their own devices, they (members of the news media) came up with a lot of wrong conclusions," Humphreys said.

Cross agreed. "We had a great deal of trouble explaining to them why we couldn't give out the names and addresses of those affected. Both our departments explained to them that it was against the law."

Both men also agreed they were correct in not making known the names of all restaurants where patrons claimed they had ingested the infected product, when, in fact, only three were actually the source of the food.

"Even though we had our own suspicions, we still didn't have all the facts," Cross said. "We couldn't say what we believed because it was just a hunch. It wasn't backed by any scientific data," Cross said.

Humphreys said the strength of the disease over a period of just one weekend suggested to Midland officials that they had a serious problem at hand.

"When you (normally) get maybe one or two cases a month and then you're suddenly looking at eight or 10, then it's time to consider the possibility that you have a real problem," Humphreys said. "What it suggested to us was that we had an unknown number of people who had been exposed to a source of bacteria."

Humphreys said detective work in both cities found a common pattern among patrons involving what they ate and where they ate, which demonstrated the shigella had been confined.

"It was trial by fire," Cross said. "We put in a lot of long hours, but by the time we were able to determine the source, the outbreak was over. Having gone through something like this has definitely prepared us for the future."

Although several lawsuits eventually were filed by residents living in both cities, Humphreys said the situation could have been a lot worse.

"Americans expect perfect sanitation. They get irate at even the possibility of exposure, but I think there's a better way to look at it. We ought to be grateful that we have the type of environmental surveilance that we do, so we aren't normally exposed to this kind of thing."

Inspectors scour behind the scenes for trouble signs

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

It's 8:30 a.m. at the Midland Health Department and Jerry Reyes has his marching papers for the day.

From local convenience stores to restaurants, Reyes prepares to make his daily rounds, armed with a flashlight, thermometer and checklist.

"I don't go in looking for today's dirt. I guess you could say I'm looking for last week's dirt," said Reyes, a local health inspector who has been on the job six years.

Reyes and others interviewed for this series said they try to get into all food establishments serving the public at least once every two to three months.

"There are a lot of different things we're looking for — like how meat is thawed." Reyes said. "It's not supposed to be just lying out there. It's supposed to be under running water or in refrigeration."

On this particular morning, Reyes will inspect two restaurants and a supermarket with an adjacent warehouse.

Inside the grocery, Reyes begins with the refrigerated storage cases, taking a random check of temperatures, packaging, dates and labels.

As with other inspectors, Reyes' visit is unannounced. No one knows when he is coming or how long he will stay.

As expected, his presence is well noted.

And, like the inspector, employees begin looking for something out of place — something that will catch the eye of Reyes that could cost them points on a long checklist.

That checklist takes into account everything from personal hygiene to basic sanitation.

"The way I see it, if we can go in often enough, we can correct a lot of these (potential) problems before they occur. A lot can happen in six months if you're not there," he said.

Bob Barr, an inspector with the Ector County Health Department, agreed.

"No one's ever going to pat you on the back and say how terrific it is that you do all this, but at least you go home at night with a satisfied feeling," Barr said. "I'm just glad we're out there."

Barr recalled one incident in which a restaurant was preparing to make chili in a galvanized container not intended for cooking.

"It was a brand-new container, but I explained to them that the acid will work off that metal finish. . . . You have zinc and cadium in that metal," Barr said. "When you put an acid base in there, that stuff will come right off into whatever you're cooking. I had them (the restaurant) throw it out. That's the kind of things we see out there."

Reyes said that in one case about a year ago, he ordered $10,000 worth of frozen food thrown out because it had started to thaw.

"These things (refrigerated cases) have a load limit. . . . You have to keep that air flowing so the food is cooled properly," he said.

Reyes said he will take 45 minutes to an hour going through a supermarket, depending on what is occurring at the time. He also will inspect extermination records, particularly if he finds evidence of roaches or other insects and rodents.

"But a lot of times we can tell just by looking around," he said.

In the case of restaurants, both inspectors said that most of the time they are welcomed by workers, many of whom look to them to demonstrate just what is wrong with a particular procedure and why it poses a potential health hazard.

"We generally have good relations with everyone on our routes, and that's critical," Barr said. "Sometimes I'll hear, 'How can we make our score better?' I'm always out there motivating and encouraging them to do a good job."

Reyes agreed.

"We're here to help them," he said. "That's why a lot of these places conform with what we want. . . . They don't want the bad publicity."

On a number of occasions Reyes has been asked specific questions about the inspection process by managers and food handlers.

"A lot of times, they think we're riding them about something they believe is minute," Reyes said. "But it's our job to keep those possibilities to a minimum."

For example, Reyes said he told one owner to fix a small hole in his screen door. The owner wanted to know why it was such a "big deal."

"But if you get one fly that comes in and contaminates the food, then what?" he said. "Yes, we have trouble with some people who don't do what we tell them, but in most cases they take care of it."

If not, departments in both cities will set time limits or deadlines at which time the inspector will return.

And they do return, according to Monette Burke, administrator for the Midland Health Department, and Toby Cross, an administrator for the Ector County Health Department.

"They (restaurants) are mandated to do it," Cross said. "If it's something minor in nature, we expect it to be corrected by the next regular inspection. If it's something more critical, then there's a time limit put on it . . . a very short time limit."

Cheryl Harbor, a state health inspector, knows about time limits.

Ms. Harbor, whose "watch area" includes Reeves, Winkler, Ward, Crane, Martin, Upton and Glasscock counties, said she will remain on the restaurant site if a critical issue such as sewage back up or refrigeration is an issue.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Toby Cross is administator of the Ector County Health Department.

"I sit there until the problem is resolved," she said. "I've never shut down a business, but I've come close. I've found that people are generally eager to correct their violations and do what is right."

Because her route takes her to a number of outlying areas, allowing her few chances to visit during the year, Ms. Harbor said she'll take extra time to explain each violation and suggest methods to correct them.

"So, in a way I'm training them," she said. "That's part of my job."

In making their rounds, state and local inspectors use a weighted evaluation system of 100 points. Each area checked on the list carries a weight from one point — least serious — to five points — most critical.

For example, in the case of a sewage backup, an inspector will close a restaurant on the spot until the problem is corrected.

However, according to Ms. Burke, most cases are more often minor in nature.

"Usually it's just a lack of education or ignorance on the part of the food handler," she said. "Our inspectors spend a good deal of time talking with these people once they're in there. There are those (restaurants) that are better managed and those that need to keep at it."

Two critical areas inspectors keep an eye on are food temperatures and personal hygiene.

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, most food-borne illnesses are caused by bacteria that multiply rapidly at temperatures between 60 and 125 degrees.

Where cooked food is concerned, inspectors are interested in internal temperatures, which must be kept at 140 degree or above, and cold foods, which need to be at 40 degrees or below.

Inspectors interviewed for this series said the types of restaurants that usually present the fewest problems are chains, most of which conduct their own in-house training programs.

"If it's a franchise company and they (the franchise) see a low score, sometimes they take their (store) bonuses away," Barr said. "So, there's some real incentive there to do well."

Reyes said his perspective changes from building to building as he goes through his routes. "You go into a Burger King or some chain like that and everything is stainless steel and looks real pretty. But for others (in older buildings), it's a different situation. They do with what they have."

And that usually requires more work.

While Reyes and others don't discount that food poisoning can occur, they say one complaint usually isn't enough to indict a restaurant, given the fact that different foods have different incubation periods.

Inspectors say those who complain an hour after eating probably are wrong to blame the restaurant.

Said Ms. Burke: "Anyone can come in and ask to see the file on a particular establishment. . . . That's public information. However, I feel that for the amount of times we get in and as close as we work with these people, the public, for the most part, is pretty safe."

Libya claims it is victim of terrorism

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Libya went on the offensive at the World Court on Saturday, suggesting it had been a victim of U.S. terrorism and accusing Washington and London of trampling international law.

But the United States counterattacked, detailing evidence to link Libya to terror bombings in Western Europe. Britain, for its part, scoffed at the notion that the Tripoli government was fit to judge the guilt or innocence of suspects in the 1988 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland.

Libya is seeking an emergency injunction against the United States and Britain to prevent sanctions or the use of force to win the extradition of the two Libyans suspected in the Pan Am bombing.

A World Court ruling is expected in about three weeks, although the 16-judge court, a U.N. body, has no enforcement powers.

Libya has denied involvement in the Pan Am bombing and told the court it is unconvinced of the guilt of the suspects. It claims it has already complied with international law by investigating them.

The United States, Britain and France are promoting a U.N. air and trade embargo against Tripoli to force surrender of the suspects. The sanctions are expected to be imposed by the Security Council this week.

The third and final day of hearings at the U.N. judicial body was given over to rebuttals. Libya led off and the United States and Britain followed.

The State Department's top lawyer, Edwin D. Williamson, claimed Libyan diplomats ordered a 1986 bombing of a Berlin discotheque patronized by American soldiers.

He also said the World Court had no jurisdiction in the dispute over the Lockerbie suspects.

He claimed Libya's effort to seek a World Court ruling "springs from its inability to convince the council that it has ended its support for terrorism," he told the court.

Lawyers for Libya said any conflicting signals from Tripoli on the issue of the suspects were due to Western threats.

"Peace of mind can hardly be expected from a rabbit facing the hunter's rifle," said Jean Salmon, a Belgian lawyer for Libya.

The two Libyan suspects, both identified by the West as intelligence agents, are wanted in the United States and Britain in the December 1988 bombing of Flight 103, which killed 270 people. The West is also seeking four other Libyan suspects in the 1989 bombing of a French airliner over Niger, in which 171 people died.

At Saturday's hearing, Libya equated 1986 U.S. bombing raids on Tripoli and Benghazi — which were in retaliation for Libyan involvement in terrorist acts in Germany and Italy — with the Pan Am bombing.

Libya's chief counsel, Ian Brownlie of Britain, said the raids were "a blatant and obscene violation of international law," echoing the phrase used by Williamson on Friday to describe the Lockerbie bombing.

Libya's Belgian lawyer said that although his son's best friend died in the Lockerbie bombing, it did not change his view that "Libya has the right to judge the suspects exactly as much as the United Kingdom or the United States."

During Britain's rebuttal, Scottish Solicitor-General Alan Rodger derided that claim.

"It is a trite principle of law that no one can be the judge in his own case," he said. "Yet that in effect is what Libya demands."

The United States and Britain have taken pains during the proceedings to trace the Lockerbie bombing links they say extend into the highest levels of the Libyan government.

The sanctions resolution has overwhelming support on the 15-member Security Council. But one permanent member, Chinese Ambassador Li Daoyu, told reporters Friday he did not have guidance from his government and declined to say how he would vote. Diplomats said China was unhappy with the sanctions but unlikely to veto.

The New York Times reported Saturday that the United States, Britain and France had warned China that a veto would put its preferential American trade status at risk.

Conservatives reassess campaign strategy

LONDON (NYT) — While it is too early to say who will win the British general election on April 9, Prime Minister John Major's Conservatives began Saturday to sound like a party increasingly afraid that it could lose.

Several leading Conservatives blamed Major's campaign team, headed by the party chairman, Chris Patten, for a defensive, negative approach that has let the opposition Labor Party and its leader, Neil Kinnock, set much of the agenda so far.

"We have got to change tack," said Sir Marcus Fox, a senior Conservative lawmaker who has run in every parliamentary election since 1966. "We need a more forceful style."

Of Major, who is facing a national election for the first time since he succeeded Margaret Thatcher 16 months ago, Fox said on BBC radio Saturday afternoon: "On the doorstep everybody likes him. They say he is a nice man. I am sure that he has it in him, he has got that strength."

Major was doorstepping Saturday, in the Hertfordshire town of Welwyn Garden City, and he denied he had the jitters.

"No. No. We are going to win and win with a clear majority," he told reporters. "Ask me about the positive things. Ask me questions about the issues and I will deal with questions about the issues."

But David Evans, the Conservative candidate Major had come to help, said: "The campaign itself has not been robust enough. We have not told the people exactly what we have achieved and what we are going to achieve in the 1990s. The failure is the people running the campaign."

Cecil Parkinson, a former party chairman who ran the campaign that won Mrs. Thatcher her second term as prime minister in 1983, said earlier Saturday, "I believe we can win and win well, but we are going to have to improve our campaigning in the next 10 days." Parkinson, like Mrs. Thatcher, is not running in this election.

"I have no doubt at all we have the best leader," Parkinson told the BBC. "It will be a failure on the part of the party if we don't put him over as the person he really is.

Jamaican party meets to choose successor

KINGSTON, Jamaica (NYT) — Over 3,000 delegates from Jamaica's governing People's National Party gathered in a carnival-like atmosphere on Saturday to choose a successor to Prime Minister Michael N. Manley, with his former deputy favored to defeat a rival with grass-roots support.

Percival J. Patterson, a low-key party insider who was forced to resign as deputy prime minister in January, had the backing of at least 34 of the party's 45 Members of Parliament and of most senior government officials.

But supporters of the rival candidate, Portia Simpson, the minister for welfare, labor, and sports, who had strong support from the party's rank-and-file, held out hope she could win an upset victory in the secret balloting in the National Sports Arena.

Patterson, 57, who is known as "P.J.," resigned in January as deputy prime minister because of his involvement in what was perceived to be a conflict of interest in a government decision to provide waivers on import taxes for a senior official in the governing party.

Miss Simpson, 39, is a populist figure who is largely self-educated and represents the tough inner-city constituency of southwest St. Andrew. She is one of the country's few nationally known politicians apart from Manley who can claim strong grass-roots appeal.

Trucking Ahead

Charles R. Pratt
Regional Sales Manager, Merchants Fast Motor Lines

"In today's competetive marketplace, everyone's aware of the fact that you simply must have every single advantage that you can have over your competition. That's why I think that the term "cellular advantage" is so appropriate to the use of cellular telephones and cellular equipment. The question becomes not whether you should use cellular equipment, but which cellular company you want to do business with.

In my opinion, Southwestern Bell Mobile Systems is the epitome of the customer-oriented company. Their sales people are always willing to go to whatever length is necessary to help you learn how to use the equipment, and their service people are the same way - whenever you have any type of question, anything that you need worked on, the people are always happy to solve the problem.

Since ours is a 9-state interstate regional transportation company with extensive intrastate coverage in Texas, communications is extremely important. Southwestern Bell Mobile Systems again has an edge over the competition. Their dependable roaming features make it very easy for our people to reach out and contact us. In addition, our parent organization recently purchased a California trucking company, and we've found that even with our expansion, our cellular system has easily kept pace.

Due to the success that our company has had with Southwestern Bell Mobile Systems, we definitely believe in the cellular advantage."

Clinton, Brown in new clash over 13 percent flat tax

NEW YORK (AP) — Democratic front-runner Bill Clinton slashed at rival Jerry Brown's proposed 13 percent flat tax Saturday, saying it would put money in his pocket — and probably Brown's as well — while hurting the poor.

Brown shot back that the Arkansas governor had "invented another big lie" about the flat tax as the Democratic presidential race intensified in advance of the state's critical April 7 primary.

"My wife and I have released our tax returns, you can look at them," Clinton said as he campaigned at a Queens diner.

"We'd make a lot of money on Jerry Brown's plan, because we don't consume that much of our income and 13 percent is a lot less than we normally pay," Clinton said. "I bet Jerry Brown would make a lot of money on his tax plan. He ought to release his tax returns and we can see."

About 200 lunch time diner patrons gave the Arkansas governor a warm round of applause.

Clinton later flew to Florida for a private fundraiser in the home of Palm Beach businessman Sidney Kohl, brother of Sen. Herbert Kohl, D-Wis.

Clinton picked up a lone delegate Saturday as Democrats caucused in the U.S. Virgin Islands. He received 42 percent support from 300 party members participating while uncommitted got 58 percent and netted two delegates.

Meanwhile, Democrats in Iowa were holding county conventions across the state. With 30 percent of the nearly 3,000 delegates to congressional district conventions selected, 38 percent were uncommitted. Another 33 percent stayed with favorite son Tom Harkin, though he has quit the race.

Of the remaining candidates, Brown was collecting 15.5 percent of the delegates while Clinton was getting 12.8 percent.

In New York, Brown launched a fresh attack on Clinton with a television ad saying that as governor of California he had taken no pay raise, cut taxes, created new jobs and appointed "unprecedented numbers of women and minorities."

"Governor Clinton's Arkansas?" said the ad. "A right-to-work state — ranks dead last in worker safety, its wages among the lowest in the country. ANd while Bill Clinton plays golf at a restricted all-white club, Arkansas remains one of only two states with no civil rights act."

"Now that's slick, but we want real change," said the ad. It omitted mention that Clinton received no pay raise either and sought to put a civil rights bill through the Arkansas legislature.

Brown was 90 minutes late for an outdoor rally in 39-degree weather with a sharp wind blowing across Manhattan's Union Square.

When he arrived, Brown doffed his topcoat and delivered a standard 13-minute stump speech, exhorting New Yorkers to reject Clinton and "take this country back."

"We know we're in a battle in New York. It's a battle that we're going to win, because we're standing with the people," Brown told the cheering crowd of about 2,000.

Brown said Clinton "has invented another big lie" by describing the flat-tax proposal as unfair to lower-income people.

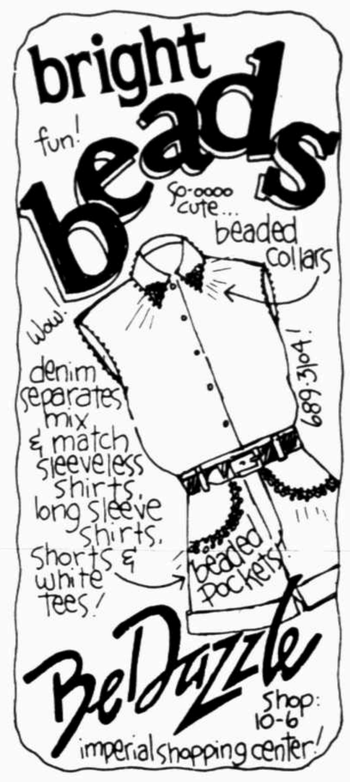
Musicians and a parade of local Brown supporters tried to keep the restive crowd interested while waiting for the candidate. Former U.S. Rep. Bella Abzug, a pillar of New York's liberal political scene, announced that she had "just joined" Brown's campaign.

She said Brown "cares about people fundamentally" and is a strong defender of the environment, abortion rights and other liberal causes, but indicated she was skeptical about the tax plan. "I want to hear him explain it," Abzug said.

Before Brown arrived, officials of the weekend farmer's market complained that the rally had disrupted the area so badly that the farmers were losing anywhere from a quarter to a half of their normal business.

As Brown neared the end of his speech from a flatbed truck, a group held up signs supporting a minor Democratic challenger, former Irvine, Calif., Mayor Larry Agran. Brown backers reached out to try to tear down the signs, touching off several scuffles at the outer edge of the crowd.

Police finally moved in to form a cordon separating the groups.



Jet crash revives debate on future of aging airports

NEW YORK (AP) — The crash of a USAir jet at La Guardia Airport has revived criticism about the safety of airports built a half-century ago with shorter runways for smaller planes and lighter traffic.

Flight 405 skidded off runway 13-31 during a snowstorm the night of March 22, killing 27 of 51 people aboard. On the same runway, two passengers were killed in the aborted takeoff of a USAir flight in 1989.

Officials at older airports said they have kept pace with the times, extending runways and modernizing to meet federal safety standards, but not everyone agreed.

Critics in the aviation industry said La Guardia and other older airports, such as Washington National, have less growing room because they were built along rivers or bays.

"La Guardia Airport was built in a time when we didn't even know there'd be a jet airplane," said John Galipault, president of the independent Aviation Safety Institute in Worthington, Ohio.

"La Guardia did move into the jet age as best it could, and you can't fault the founding fathers for that," he said. "But it's unfortunate that it has only two runways . . . and that it's being used so many hours of the day." Some passengers seem worried, too.

"Of course I'm apprehensive about flying out of here, but I've got non-refundable tickets," said Allison Jones, a college basketball coach waiting for a delayed flight to Los Angeles on Thursday to see the NCAA Final Four.

On Oct. 15, 1939, Mayor Fiorello La Guardia opened the Queens airstrip that would eventually take his name. Large seaplanes known as Pan American Clippers used it on the first transatlantic routes.

With a boom in air travel, the Central Terminal Building opened in the 1960s and the two runways were extended to 7,000 feet to accommodate larger aircraft. Air shuttles brought big business to the airport in the 1980s.

In the '90s, La Guardia's 650 acres began to pale in size to many larger, newer airports, yet it remains the world's 24th busiest airport.

"It's a safe airport that conducts hundreds of thousands of flights a year," said Bill Cahill, spokesman for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey.

New York views John Gotti as hometown hero

NEW YORK (AP) — Prosecutors allege John Gotti authorized more than a dozen murders and protected drug dealers, yet Mickey Rourke and Anthony Quinn dropped by his trial and other spectators waited hours to get in.

The reputed boss of the nation's largest criminal organization is seen by some as New York's hometown hero.

"It's almost like he's a movie star," a prospective juror said when the racketeering trial began. None of the prospective jurors' names were released.

ITEM: The spectators' gallery looked like Spago, the ritzy Manhattan restaurant. Gotti guests included actors Rourke, Quinn, John Amos and "Grandpa" Al Lewis, singer Jay Black and lawyer F. Lee Bailey. Each got a wave or wink from the defendant.

ITEM: The New York Post asked readers to call one of two "900" telephone lines to vote their belief in Gotti or his underboss-turned-prosecution witness, Salvatore "Sammy Bull" Gravano. Gotti won, 51 percent to 49 percent.

ITEM: People lined up at dawn to get a seat at the trial and not, one said, because they wanted a glimpse of evil incarnate. Gotti, said spectator Catherine Ryan, "has a lot of charisma."

Had these people read the transcripts of Gotti's profane, vitriolic harangues?

Robert J. Kelly, an organized crime expert at Brooklyn College, has. He called Gotti "a sociopath, a really scary person, who would kill someone over an insult."

Perhaps some New Yorkers can't bring themselves to despise a gangster accused of killing people he knows when their city is rife with criminals who prey on random strangers. Maybe they hope Gotti even is a bulwark against street crime.

When a "weeping icon" was stolen before Christmas from a Greek Orthodox Church in Queens, Gotti — who was reported to have once visited the church — supposedly ordered it found and returned. The congregation rebuffed the reported offer, going, as the Daily News put it, "with God, not Gotti."

Gotti is also anti-drugs, at least according to Gravano, even though one of Gotti's brothers and an alleged associate are convicted dealers.

The New York Daily News printed a letter from one Angelo Ditria, who claimed to know Gotti as a teen-ager in Brooklyn. When Gotti, who was 20, learned that other youths had turned the 16-year-old Ditria onto drugs, "they got the hell beat out of them," he wrote. "I also had to 'go for a ride.' I'll never forget it. I couldn't walk for weeks afterward."

In this view, Gotti is a sort of Robin Hood who may not deliver the turkey on Thanksgiving, but produces the fireworks on The Fourth.

Thousands of non-criminals attend Gotti's annual Independence Day block party outside his Queens clubhouse, enjoying free food, drink, carnival rides and a fireworks display that's elaborate and illegal.

Officials rearrest AIDS-infected man who allegedly had sex with boys

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A man with AIDS who may have paid hundreds of boys and young men to have sex with him was rearrested Saturday night after two more teen-agers made allegations against him, police said.

Savitz

The man known to many as "Uncle Ed," was back in custody Saturday evening, less than a day after he posted 10 percent of his $3 million bail. He was first arrested Wednesday.

Lt. James Mooney of the Sex Crimes Unit said the two latest accusers were identified Friday. They bring to four the number of teen-agers who have made allegations.

Mooney said police have identified other youths and he expects additional charges will be filed as the investigation continues.

District Attorney Lynne Abraham, who Friday announced the arrest, said her office signed an agreement with the suspect and his lawyer letting officials say he was an AIDS victim so those who had sexual contact with him could take appropriate steps.

Abraham wouldn't release the suspect's name because of a state AIDS confidentiality law, but a court official speaking on condition of anonymity identified him as Edward Savitz, 50, and one of his lawyers, Steve Lacheen, confirmed that Saturday.

AIDS telephone hot lines were inundated after Friday's announcement. A police mug shot of the man was released, and a hot line operator said some callers recognized the man as someone they knew more than a decade ago as "Fast Eddie."

One of the suspect's lawyers on Saturday disputed allegations of dangerous sexual conduct and complained that reports of the arrest were feeding "AIDS hysteria."

Savitz faces a preliminary hearing Wednesday on charges of involuntary deviate sexual intercourse, sexual abuse of children, indecent assault and corrupting the morals of a minor.

Savitz is a vice president of the Savitz Organization Inc., a Philadelphia company specializing in the planning and administration of retirement and group benefit plans.

No one answered the telephone Saturday at Savitz's 23rd-floor condominium in a high-rise near Rittenhouse Square. No one was allowed into the building without a tenant.

Lacheen, Savitz's lawyer, said Saturday that reports of the arrest were feeding "the frenzy of AIDS hysteria."

"This is being pumped up and exaggerated because the headlines say 'AIDS carrier,'" he said. "So far, there have been allegations of a sexual nature, none of which could have created any danger to anyone."

Lacheen said that the charges he knew of consisted of two incidents of touching and one of oral sex, which did not involve Savitz's semen. He said allegations of other kinds of sexual activity were unproven.

He described Savitz as slight, meek and mild-mannered. "The guy sitting next to you," he said.

Abraham said she chose not to charge the suspect with attempted homicide, as prosecutors elsewhere have when individuals who knew they had AIDS failed to inform their sex partners. She said prosecutors couldn't prove the man intended to kill people he had sex with.

"In fact, the information is to the contrary. He wanted to have sexual gratification," Abraham said.

Neighbors gave authorities information that led to his arrest, Abraham said. Afterward, he admitted he has had AIDS for at least one year.

"This defendant may have been engaged for several years in both oral and anal sexual contact with as many as several hundred males," Abraham said.

Local AIDS hot lines were jammed.

"There were 300 to 400 calls packed into a couple of hours," Francis L. Stoffa Jr., executive director of the AIDS Task Force of Philadelphia, said Friday.

Some callers said they knew the man more than a decade ago as "Fast Eddie," said a switchboard operator, Brad Hume.

Abraham said the man invited boys to his apartment and paid them for their underwear and socks and for sexual contact.

Hanks yanks Lee, 3-0

Knights' goalkeeper stymies Rebs in season-ending loss

■ El Paso soccer teams score a sweep in area playoff action in Midland Saturday.

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

Midland Lee's valiant bid to become the first team from District 3 to reach the Region I soccer tournament was rejected Saturday when District 2 runner-up El Paso Hanks claimed a 3-0 area playoff victory over the Rebels at the Lee field.

The District 3 champion Rebels, making their first area-playoff appearance, out-shot the Knights 12-6. But Lee was never able to get the ball past Hanks keeper Jacob Arrambide, whose acrobatic kick-save on Jason Brown's penalty kick in the final minute preserved the shutout.

"We played hard and we had some great shots, but Hanks has a heck of a keeper," Lee coach Eddie Bull said after the Rebels wrapped up their most successful season ever with a 15-2 record. "Their keeper made a difference. And they were a lot quicker than we anticipated."

Hanks, which scored on two if its first three shots on goal to take a 2-0 halftime lead, advances to the regional tournament on Friday and Saturday in Fort Worth with an 18-2 record.

And El Paso Del Valle made it an area sweep for the Ysleta School District Saturday with a 2-1 sudden-death victory over Wichita Falls Rider at the Midland High soccer field. Del Valle will join Hanks at the regional tournament.

The Knights got the job done despite missing three key players — two because they received red cards in their bi-district win over El Paso High and one because of the chicken pox.

"Soccer is a funny game," Hanks coach Sergio Santillano said. "We were missing some key starters, but the players that filled in turned it up a notch and matured in this game.

"Midland Lee is tough."

So is Hanks, which moved out to a 3-0 lead with 15:48 gone in the second half as Chris Rivera finished off an indirect-kick opportunity with an 18-yard shot into the upper right corner of the Lee net.

Galvan-ized Rebs split pair

■ Midland Lee wins doubleheader opener in non-conference pair with Frenship.

Midland Lee sophomore centerfielder David Galvan's batting stance adjustments paid off in the Rebels' non-district doubleheader split with Class 4A Frenship Saturday at Johnson Field.

Stanton's Stallings 'in shape'

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

SAN ANGELO — One of the major events in the 34th annual San Angelo Relays Saturday was in the Division IV 800 meters where two state champions came together to go head-to-head.

But the results weren't even close as Stanton's Jeremy Stallings defeated Plains' Michael Sainz by 15 yards. Stallings is the defending Class 2A champion while Sainz won the Class A title last year.

After two straight weeks in the 1:58 range, Stallings began his scorched-earth policy with a 1:55.95, beating his own division record of 1:57.76 set last year.

"I must be getting in shape," Stallings, a junior, said. "I was hoping for a 1:56 here since basketball set me back about three weeks. I'm shooting for a 1:52.5, the state record, this year, but I still have a ways to go."

On the easy win against Sainz, Stallings said, "I knew he (Sainz) won state last year and I expected him to go out and set the pace, but he didn't, so I just went out to the lead early."

Stallings, who is also the defending 1600-meter state champion, won that event easily with a last lap sprint to win going away after falling into second place on the third lap. He had a 4:38.12.

He also anchored Stanton's 1600 relay team to a second place finish.

"I enjoy running all the events, but if I had to drop one of them it would be the 1600," Stallings said.

Midland Lee failed to qualify any individuals for Saturday's running finals, but made the most of the shot put when junior Scott McLeod, a Region I qualifier last year, won the event with a season best 53-9½. It was a toss that beat his previous season best by two-feet, but he did have a toss of over 54-feet last year.

"I had an ankle injury from playing basketball and I've been throwing bad the last two weeks, so I'm really pleased

Duke saved by Christian

Associated Press

Christian Laettner played the perfect game, and so did Indiana.

Laettner hit a turnaround jumper from the foul line as the buzzer sounded Saturday, giving top-ranked and defending champion Duke a 104-103 overtime victory over No. 6 Kentucky and a fifth consecutive trip to the Final Four.

The East Regional champion now goes to Minneapolis to face fifth-ranked Indiana, which used a textbook display to rout No. 4 UCLA 106-79 in the West Regional final.

The other Final Four pairing will match the winners of Sunday's regional finals — Michigan vs. Ohio State in the Southeast and Cincinnati vs. Memphis State in the Midwest.

Laettner grabbed a length-of-the-court pass from Grant Hill with 2.1 seconds left, dribbled once while pivoting away from Kentucky's Deron Feldhaus and launched a shot that swished through as the buzzer sounded in Philadelphia.

BASEBALL: Lee pitching falters in nightcap as Rebels move to 7-7

ning, 9-8, and dropped the finale 10-6.

In other games Saturday involving District 4-5A baseball teams, district co-leaders Abilene Cooper and Odessa Permian both won while Midland High's scheduled game at San Angelo was postponed because of rain.

Cooper 10-run ruled Odessa High 11-1 in five innings at OHS, while Permian defeated Abilene High 9-3 in Abilene. The MHS-San Angelo game has been rescheduled for 4 p.m. Monday in San Angelo.

Cooper and Permian are now 3-0 in league play, while AHS is 2-2, San Angelo 1-1, Lee and MHS 1-2 and OHS 0-4.

On Saturday, Galvan popped up to shortstop in his first at-bat, but the plate appearance did prove to be fruitful for the speedy underclassman, who also stole a base in each game and beat out a grounder to short for a base hit.

"On the first home run the pitch was an inside fastball and it was a low fastball on the second," said Galvan, who smacked both homers to left field off Frenship starter Storm Murry in Game 1. "I was kind of ready for the inside pitch because in my first at-bat I popped up on it."

Galvan also seems to have broken out of the dip his batting average has taken, as he went 1-for-5 in the previous two Lee games.

"I just put my foot in and made sure my shoulder was not coming out too quick. I also tried to keep from turning my head," he said.

While Galvan snapped out if his downturn, the Rebels as a team still performed spottily and moved their season record to 7-7, as Lee pitching walked 12 batters and the offense stranded 11 runners in Game 2.

"It always seems we suffer from the fourth inning on; our inexperience and youth is showing," said Lee coach Jesse Benavidez, whose starting lineup in the first game featured three seniors, four juniors and three sophomores.

"We scored quite a few runs, even without Allen Chase (a senior shortstop who missed Saturday's play because of five stitches in his right kneecap that were needed after taking a base runner's spikes at Permian Tuesday). Frenship is a good team, though. They've beaten Lubbock Monterey, Lubbock Coronado and Midland High this year.

"But I feel like we've got more talent than what we are showing. We've got to pick it up a little bit."

While Lee jumped out to a 6-1 lead after four innings in the first game, the Tigers (11-6-1) fought back with three runs in the fifth and four more in the top of the seventh to tie the score at 8-8. But three passed ball in the bottom of the seventh by catcher Buddy Drake allowed Paul Fuentes to score the game-winning run.

Brian Cordova threw 6⅔ no-decision innings for Lee, while Mark Dworsky (1-1) picked up the win on one pitch by getting the only batter he faced, Storm Murry, to pop up to first base.

In Game 2, Rebel pitchers Jason Baker and Alex Hale walked six batter apiece, as the Tigers scored three runs on a wild pitch and a pair of bases-loaded walks.

"I was real pleased with the way we came back in the first game, though we came up short there at the end," said Frenship coach Steve Coleman. "In the second game, B.J. Krier (who went the distance to go 4-1 for the year) pitched well and swung the bat, though when they started having trouble throwing strikes we went to the taking game."

Lee returns to 4-5A play Tuesday, when the Rebs host Odessa High at Johnson Field. Frenship opens District 2-4A play at Snyder Friday.

Schramm serious but stable

Associated Press

DALLAS — Former Dallas Cowboys president and general manager Tex Schramm was hospitalized with heart trouble, according to a television report Saturday night.

Schramm, 71, was listed in serious but stable condition at Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas, a hospital spokesman said. He was admitted Friday.

WFAA-TV in Dallas reported that Schramm suffered cardiac distress, but that doctors were unsure whether he had a heart attack.

Schramm was undergoing further tests and doctors were monitoring his heart rhythm, the station reported.

Hospital officials said they would issue a news release Sunday morning regarding Schramm's condition.

Schramm was elected to the Pro Football Hall of Fame last year.

Although he never played or coached in the National Football League, Schramm was elected as a contributor. He was general manager and president of the Cowboys from the team's inception in 1960 until 1988, when Jerry Jones bought the team.

During that span, Dallas played in five Super Bowls, winning twice.

Schramm had been active on the NFL rules committee, and among his many innovations was the officials' use of instant replay, which was recently killed by NFL owners.

Schramm began his career in football when he joined the Los Angeles Rams as publicity director in 1947. He became general manager and assistant to the president and during his tenure hired future NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle as the Rams' publicity director.

In 1957, Schramm joined CBS Television as assistant director of sports, organizing the first network telecast of the Olympics in 1960. He then joined the fledgling Cowboys franchise.

RELAYS: Lee jumper, MHS relay team place fifth in respective events with this meet," McLeod said. "I really want to be at the 56-foot mark this year and go to the state meet."

Lee also got a fourth place from Bernard Oldham, who had a 49-9½. Oldham may be a threat by the time the district meet rolls around if his form improves enough to allow more height on this throws. James Ward took sixth with a 49-3¾, giving Lee depth in this event.

Lee's Mike Nunn was a surprise fifth in the triple jump with a season best 43-7½, and that was a best among 4-5A entrants in the meet.

Midland High took fifth place in both the 3200 relay (8:43.63) and the sprint relay (43.94). Watu Todd tied for sixth in the high jump with a 6-0.

Converse Judson remained undefeated this year by ending Odessa Permian's unbeaten reign in Division I by a 165-80 margin. It is the only time this year Permian has scored fewer than 100 points. Permian was competing, however, without the services of sprinter Gerrod Bergen and shot put and high jumper Tony Daniels.

Permian's only victory in the meet came from sophomore John Williams with a 10.72 in a rather slow 100-meter race.

Estacado won Division II honors with an 84-72 margin over Sweetwater. Breckenridge won Division III honors with an 88-54 margin over Slaton while Stamford took Division IV with a narrow 64-62 margin over Hamlin. Winters had 60 points.

Saturday's medal winners, District 4-5A and area results from the San Angelo Relays.

NHL owners lay cards on table

TORONTO (AP) — NHL owners made what they called their "last proposal" to players Saturday night in an effort to head off the first strike in league history.

"We summarized the week's activities, and we're waiting to hear from them," Chicago Blackhawks owner William Wirtz said following 12 hours of off-and-on negotiations at a midtown Toronto hotel.

"This was our last proposal. They said they'd be back."

Quebec Nordiques owner Marcel Aubut called it an important offer.

"It was an offer from our hearts," Aubut said. "Hopefully we'll have some sort of a solution.

"We're expecting a response from the players later tonight."

Aubut reported some progress.

The players met separately and were considering the latest owners' proposal.

Bob Goodenow, executive director of the NHL Players Association, held a terse news conference after the session broke up about 9:15 p.m. EST.

"The committee's looking at it (the owners' proposal) right now," he said. "I can't say how long it will take."

Goodenow said that more than one proposal was exchanged during Saturday's session.

"There were a number of issues discussed," he said, but would not specify what they were.

Asked if he felt that this was the owners' final offer, he said:

"I did not hear the word 'final.'"

Saturday's talks followed a 16-hour session on Friday.

The stakes were big ... the future of the game.

The players are set to strike Monday unless they can reach a new collective bargaining agreement with the owners.

Bob Goodenow, executive director of the NHLPA, held a conference call Friday with player representatives reaffirming their decision to strike.

"We had a conference call and the (strike) mandate is in place with the committee," Goodenow said, adding: "We're still trying to reach a resolution."

As both sides headed toward an ominous strike deadline that threatened the Stanley Cup playoffs, NHL president John Ziegler imposed another deadline.

He said that Saturday would be the final day of the latest session, since the owners were scheduled to hold a board of governors meeting at Chicago Sunday.

Ziegler emphasized that the board of governors would not change the time or place of their meeting.

"If we're going to have a strike, it's a very serious event," Ziegler said. "The owners have a lot of responsibilities. They have a lot of other employees other than the players.

"There's a lot of questions to be answered, so the day before a strike you have to have a meeting."

REBELS: A win 'just one of those things that wasn't to be today'

(From 1B)

The Rebels, whose only previous loss of the season was a one-point decision against district runner-up Abilene High, did not abandon ship, however, and Arrambide was forced to make four saves between the 24th and 28th minutes of the second half.

Arrambide stymied shots by Tim Tucker, Pablo Rodriguez and a pair by Matt Perkins in the span, and Lee did not get another scoring chance until Todd Meade worked his way through the Hanks defense for a shot in the 35th minute.

That, too, was stopped.

"We played pretty good. We just couldn't get the ball to go in the hole," said Meade, who tested Arrambide twice in the game. "I guess that's just the way things go.

"But we've had a good season. Hopefully it'll start a tradition here for the teams that follow us," Meade said.

Dennis Ehler placed five shots on goal to lead Lee in that category — three of them in the first half — but the Rebels failed to score in a game for the first time since their 1-0 bi-district loss to Rider in 1991.

Hanks did not exactly score at will, but the Knights slashed through a Lee defense that had registered 10 shutouts on the season to take a 1-0 lead in the 10th minute of play. Jerrry Ceniceros pushed a pass ahead to Brian Forrester, who took control of the sphere while slipping between a pair of Lee defenders. His 16th goal of the year got by unprotected Lee keeper Freddie Silva easily.

The Knights made it 2-0 on Ceniceros' head-in of a Brian Gambee corner kick with under three minutes left in the first half.

"We weren't taking anything for granted at the half," Santillano said. "It's never over 'til it's over. That's a quote from Yogi Berra."

But Hanks pretty much iced the game away when Rivera took a short pass from Danny Mendoza on the indirect-kick opportunity and fired it past Silva in the 16th minute of the second half.

Lee was awarded a penalty kick in the waning seconds, but Brown's line drive was rejected by Arrambide, who punctuated his perfect day with a dazzling perpendicular kick save from midair.

Still, it was a remarkable campaign for the Lee kickers, who captured their first-ever playoff victory last Monday, 2-0 over Burkburnett.

"It's been a great time," Bull said. "The kids have made it that way. They've stepped up and played as a unit all year.

"It was just one of those things that wasn't to be today."

NOTES: Rider's sudden-death loss to Del Valle was much the same as its bi-district victory over Abilene High. Rider defeated AHS three shooters into a sudden-death shootout last Tuesday. Saturday against Del Valle, Rider was defeated by a single shooter.

The last District 3 team to win a bi-district playoff game and later fall in the area round of the playoffs was AHS. Hanks was the team that knocked the Eagles out in a 1989 match.

Joining Del Valle and Hanks at the Region I tourney are Grapevine and Denton. That tournament will be played a Pennington Field.

Faldo, Couples two to watch

Associated Press

TPC

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. — Before he teed off Saturday in the third round of the $1.8 million Players Championship, Nick Faldo took a look at the leaderboard.

It showed Fred Couples with a course-record, 9-under-par 63 on the TPC at Sawgrass and cozily positioned among the leaders in the tournament billed as the annual championship of golf's touring pros.

"The man's so hot he must be wearing asbestos shorts," the laconic Englishman said of Couples, whose recent run has taken him to the top of world golf.

Undismayed, Faldo said he thought I'd try to go forward as well," and responded to Couples' heroics with a bogey-free 67 that gave him a one-shot lead going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $324,000 first prize.

Faldo, who won consecutive Masters titles in 1989-90, completed 54 holes in 203, 13 under par, and said he is "more in control now than I've been in a long time."

Couples, who came from the cut figure, par 144, with his spectacular performance, is in a group of four at 207, four strokes back but within striking distance.

"I know that I'm going to be close enough that with a 66 or 67 I can win," said Couples, who was in the second group off the tee at 9:05 a.m., and finished play long before the other leaders even started.

"I'm in great shape now," he said. "I know I'll be playing late tomorrow, and I'll just come out and try to play another good round."

Three other players are between Faldo and Couples, however, and another good effort will be required to extend his 9-month streak that has produced five victories and 19 finishes of sixth or better in 23 worldwide starts.

Phil Blackmar, who blew this title a year ago with a ball in the water on the 71st hole, was second alone at 204.

The 6-foot-7 Blackmar, the biggest man on the pro tour, had a share of the lead until he bogeyed the final hole and shot 68.

British Open champ Ian Baker-Finch of Australia was another stroke back at 205 after a 68, and Davis Love followed at 206. He birdied the 18th hole for a 71.

Couples was in a group with Mike Smith, Nick Price and Mark Brooks at 9 under par. Smith shot 66, Price 69 and Brooks 70.

Jose Maria Olazabal of Spain took himself out of contention with a wild 75 that included a triple bogey from the trees — and this despite a very favorable ruling — on the 10th hole and a double bogey on the 18th.

Billy Ray Brown, who led or shared the lead through the first two days' play, also was out of it after a fat 78.

While Faldo held the top spot, it was Couples who caught the attention of the gallery with the best round ever played on the course that once terrorized the world's finest players.

Inkster, Sheehan take Shore lead

Associated Press

LPGA

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. — Juli Inkster and Patty Sheehan, friends since their college days at San Jose State, set the stage for a friendly showdown in the Dinah Shore tournament.

Inkster shot her second consecutive 68 Saturday to take a one-shot lead over Sheehan after three rounds of the tournament, one of the LPGA's four majors.

Both Inkster and Sheehan scrambled for most of the round, with Sheehan rolling in a 20-foot birdie putt on No. 18 for her second consecutive 69.

Inkster, the Dinah Shore champion in 1984 and 1989, was at 8-under-par 208 through 54 holes at Mission Hills Country Club.

Although the former college teammates are first and second heading into the last day, there are many other players within striking distance.

Dottie Mochrie, runnerup to Amy Alcott in the Dinah Shore a year ago, shot a third-round 70 to stay within two shots of the lead this time.

Jan Stephenson, playing some of her best golf of recent times, shot a 68 to move to 4-under, four shots behind Inkster.

A group at 213 included Pat Bradley, Michelle McGann, Brandie Burton and Muffin Spencer-Devlin.

Inkster and Sheehan, playing in different threesomes Saturday, hugged and congratulated each other after the third round.

"It's going to be tough (Sunday) because I know Patty really wants badly to win this one and I badly want to win it, too," Inkster said. "Golf's an individual game, no partners.

"We can't be concentrating on beating each other; there are other players close behind us. It's going to be a shootout."

Sheehan, whose 26 career victories do not include a Dinah Shore title, said: "I don't think the fact that Juli and I are good friends will affect our play. I'm sure we'll go out there and have fun; it's not often you get to play with your friend on the final day.

"And I'm sure we'll both be playing as hard as we can. It's not going to be pat-a-cake out there."

"Come Sunday, that's what the Dinah Shore and the other majors are all about," Inkster said.

Stephenson, who has won each of the other three LPGA majors, would like to complete a sweep.

"It's great to be back in contention," said Stephenson, whose play in recent years has been hampered by various injuries. "This is the one I need. Maybe it is my turn for something good to happen."

Beth Daniel, the second-round leader at 6-under, struggled to a third-round 76 that dropped her six shots off the pace.

Dawn Coe, one shot behind beginning the third day, had an even more disasterous round. Near the lead at the turn Saturday, Coe went on to bogey five holes on the back nine and then triple-bogeyed the final hole for a 79.

The Dinah Shore, sponsored by Nabisco, has a $700,000 purse and a $105,000 winner's prize.

NCAA: Hoosiers bash Kentucky in West final

(From 1B)

It capped an amazing performance by Laettner, who made all 10 of his shots from the field and all 10 of his free throws. He finished with 31 points and became the tournament's career scoring leader.

It also was the second time Laettner has sent Duke to the Final Four with a buzzer-beater. In 1990, his leaning, 15-foot jumper beat Connecticut 79-78 in overtime at the East Regional final.

"I can't believe it happened to me twice in a career," Laettner said as he was mobbed by teammates and fans.

The Blue Devils (32-2), seeking to become the first repeat champion since UCLA in 1973, blew a 10-point lead with 7:40 remaining in regulation and blew a chance for victory when Bobby Hurley missed a jumper with four seconds left.

Kentucky (29-7) took the lead in the overtime on a 3-pointer by John Pelphrey, but Hurley countered with a long-range shot to tie it at 96.

Following another basket by Pelphrey and a pair of free throws by Laettner, Duke took a 100-98 lead on Laettner's jumper with 32 seconds left. However, Kentucky moved ahead 101-100 on a three-point play by Jamal Mashburn with 19 seconds remaining.

Duke regained the lead on two free throws by Laettner, but Kentucky came back and took a 103-102 lead with 2.5 seconds left when Sean Woods hit a one-handed bank shot over Laettner in the lane. Duke called timeout instantly, setting the stage for Laettner's miracle shot.

"We beat a very determined and great basketball team," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "It was an unbelieveable game where kids made great plays."

Indiana (27-6) was nearly flawless in its demolition of UCLA (28-5) in Albuquerque, N.M.

"They beat us in every way, shape and form," UCLA coach Jim Harrick said. "They played great."

Bob Knight, who has won three national championships at Indiana, agreed.

"We played about as well as we're capable of playing," he said.

Indiana, which lost its season opener to UCLA by 15 points, avenged that by dominating the Bruins on the boards, stifling them on defense and hitting shots from everywhere on the court.

At a news conference earlier in the week, Knight jokingly brandished a bullwhip that he described as a motivational tool for his players. But the Hoosiers didn't need any prodding to reach the Final Four for the fifth time under Knight's reign.

Calbert Cheaney led Indiana with 23 points on 9-for-15 shooting, but he had plenty of help. Damon Bailey added 22 for the Hoosiers, while Eric Anderson had 17 and Matt Nover 16.

The Hoosiers also outrebounded the bigger Bruins 42-33, with freshman Alan Henderson leading the way with 12 points.

Don MacLean, UCLA's all-time leading scorer, was held to 12 points on 4-of-13 shooting. The Bruins' other main man, Tracy Murray, got only four points in the first half and finished with 15.

Indiana raced to a 44-29 halftime lead, but Murray sparked an early second-half rally that cut it to 51-39. However, Indiana quickly responded with another burst, opened up a 58-41 advantage on a 3-pointer by Anderson and cruised the rest of the way.

The Hoosiers have shown great improvement since losing to Purdue 61-59 in their regular-season finale, a defeat that cost Indiana a share of the Big Ten title.

"We weren't a very good team two weeks ago," Knight said. "We went out to Boise (for the first two rounds of the tournament) and our underclassmen showed some leadership. I wasn't exactly easy on them since the Purdue game. Then the two seniors (Anderson and guard Jamal Meeks) came to another level and in these four games have played really well."

Pitino tries to soften blow after Duke loss

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — After two years of probation, Kentucky's dream season ended with two seconds of heroics by Duke's Christian Laettner.

Laettner hit a turnaround jumper from the foul line at the buzzer Saturday, giving top-ranked Duke a 104-103 overtime victory and a fifth consecutive trip to the Final Four. It was a sad ending for the four Kentucky seniors who endured some troubled times in Lexington.

"We are not losers," Kentucky coach Rick Pitino said. "I told the guys, 'Don't let two seconds determine your basketball life because it's worth a lot more than that.'

"And I took out an article, a front-page story from Sports Illustrated three years ago that said, 'Kentucky Shame.' From three years ago to now, I couldn't be any more proud of a basketball team."

John Pelphrey, the pale, skinny guard from Paintsville, Ky., held his head in his hands after Laettner sank his miracle jumper. He was still holding his head as the team walked trance-like into the locker room.

Later, he was barely able to talk to reporters.

"It's a shame somebody had to lose a game like this," said Pelphrey, who scored 16 points despite playing most of the second half with four fouls. "We had a lot of fun. We wanted to be here. We've soaked it up as much as we could. We didn't want to take it for granted."

Asked how he felt about the end of his college career, Pelphrey said: "You try to put it in perspective, but it's hard to do that sometimes. When you like to play as much as we do, it makes it tough."

Richie Farmer, a senior guard from Manchester, Ky., tried to look on the bright side.

"We want to keep our heads up and think about the things we've done good in the three years since coach (Pitino) has been here," he said.

Pitino took over a team that was losing scholarship players right and left because of the NCAA penalties.

"He told us not to think about the loss, but about the last three years," said Deron Feldhaus, a senior forward from Maysville, Ky. "We started from nothing — eight scholarship players and a new coach — and turned it around as quick as it could have been."

Despite the painful loss to Duke, Kentucky's three tournament victories have put the program "back on top," according to Feldhaus.

"It was turned around quicker than anyone thought it could have been," he said.

Fab Five say their brash style is in fun

Associated Press

■ More Sports/ 10B

LEXINGTON, Ky. — The Fab Five don't want to be pictured as a bunch of brash, trash-talking, sky-walking kids from Michigan. They resent it.

Webber

Sure, you'll see Chris Webber scowling on defense, shouting and pumping a fist in the air after an acrobatic dunk. You'll see Jalen Rose jabbering at opponents on the court.

All in good fun.

"We got that label of talking from TV commentators, who saw the way we play and our intensity," Webber said Saturday. "People say that about us because of our flashy style of play, and because we hate to lose. But most junk that we talk is to our own players.

"In every game that was ever played, there's talking going on. It's not to hurt someone. It's not done personally. It's just to get a mental edge. It's a war out there. If someone talking to me makes me try to do things I wouldn't normally do — foul instead of block a shot, or take a shot I wouldn't normally take — then they've done their job."

The 15th-ranked Wolverines (23-8) beat Oklahoma State 75-72 Friday night to advance to Sunday's Southeast Regionl final against third-ranked Ohio State (26-5).

The Buckeyes, who advanced by beating North Carolina 80-73, won both Big Ten meetings against Michigan this season, by 10 points at Ann Arbor and by 11 at Columbus. So they're anything but awed by what Michigan's five freshmen starters have accomplished so far, and not likely to be intimidated by mere words.

"They're fresh out of high school," senior guard Jamaal Brown said. "They're still little kids. Last two times we played 'em, they didn't have any reason to talk. It's true. We had respectable leads on them. I'm sure if they get a chance, they'll talk."

The Wolverines led Ohio State late in their March 3 game at Columbus until a rash of turnovers doomed them. Michigan has not lost a game since, and its players are very much aware of the place reserved for them in NCAA history if five freshmen can win the national championship.

"No one's taking us seriously enough," Webber said. "People say we lucked out because we didn't have to play Arizona (which was upset by East Tennessee State). If we make it to the Final Four, people will have to take us seriously."

Brown, though, has seen enough of the Fab Five to take them seriously, no matter how young they are.

"I heard Bill Walton say they were going to the Final Four, and I said no way," Brown said.

Cincinnati, Memphis St. meet once more

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Cincinnati has proven three times this season that it can beat Memphis State. To prove the Bearcats belong in the NCAA's Final Four, they must do it a fourth time.

No. 12 Cincinnati (28-4) and Memphis State (23-10) meet Sunday in the Midwest Regional final. The Bearcats won both meetings during the Great Midwest Conference season and won again in the conference tournament.

"Regardless of who it is, you've got to prepare yourself to win," Memphis State coach Larry Finch said Saturday. "We're in a situation where we've lost three ball games, but by the same token the pressure is the other way. They're the ones who have beaten us three times."

Cincinnati coach Bob Huggins could only laugh at that remark.

"There's not any more pressure on us than there is on them," he said. "What's he saying, that they don't want to go to Minneapolis?"

The Bearcats, seeded fourth, have won nine straight games. Two of them were against Memphis State, 69-59 on the road and 75-63 in the final of the conference tournament. The score of the first game was 75-66.

"You've got to go out and play and not worry about what happened in the other three ball games," Finch said. "What we're going to try to do is address the things that have hurt us and hopefully overcome those things."

The biggest problem has been putting the ball in the basket. Memphis State, the No. 6 seed, has yet to shoot better than 43 percent against the Bearcats. Anfernee Hardaway, the Tigers' leading scorer at 17 points per game, has hit only 13 of 39 shots.

"It's just constant movement," Hardaway said of Cincinnati's defense. "They don't let you get set. They keep moving and trapping. They don't let you set up your offense. We just need to try and get the ball in the middle and attack."

Hardaway said that in the previous meetings, the Tigers often were able to break Cincinnati's press but then tried to set up their offense instead of going to the basket.

"It hasn't been so much their pressure, it's what we've done," he said.

Finch said it will be important for his team to relax and get good shots.

"They're a rugged group of young men," he said. "They play extremely physical. If they're allowed to hand-check and move you around with their hands, then you've got a big problem.

"I thought the first two games they were allowed to do that. The last game, we just didn't have the legs to hang in there."

Huggins has said often during this tournament that his team does not need to press to win. He repeated that message Saturday.

"There are other people who have attacked our pressure," he said. "We don't have to steal the ball every time to win. We're not a bad halfcourt defensive team.

"We throw it on and if it works, that's great. If it doesn't work, we just get back in the halfcourt and guard them."

Iraq foot-dragging a future concern

Iraq's foot-dragging over compliance with the terms of the agreement that ended the Persian Gulf War is a strong indicator that the war region will continue to be a global "hot spot" in coming years.

Last week inspectors for the United Nations examined Iraqi missile debris and destroyed missile production and repair equipment, part of which was ordered by the U.N. Security Council at the end of the war as a result of Iraq's buildup of arms and perceived nuclear threat. That threat was not only against Iraq's neighbors in the Middle East but also the United States and other foreign nations.

The terms had not been met, and President Bush and others became alarmed that Iraq would not abide by the resolutions but would attempt to produce more weapons and create more unrest in that region.

Although President Bush specifically mentioned a "new world order" he said existed at the end of the war and perceived as a result of the democratic revolution in Eastern Europe, it appeared in recent weeks that it was the concern exhibited by Bush and other Western leaders over Iraq's non-compliance with the terms of the agreement rather than any newfound respect for the United Nations that pressured Iraq into action to avoid another confrontation. The United States and its awesome military might exhibited during the war — bolstered by the alliance drawn together by President Bush — is what forced Iraq's hand once again.

Ever since the war ended, Iraq has repeatedly shown that it would resist complying with the terms of the agreement as far as possible, short of forcing a new confrontation. From all indications, the pattern will continue.

Meanwhile, Bush has carefully avoided being drawn into launching a military strike against Iraq again. That's commendable. He should continue to avoid that course in the future if possible. But the pressure will no doubt continue.

Iraq's leaders are not acting cowed by their loss in the Persian Gulf War or their compliance with the United Nations resolutions. That means Iraq will have to be watched closely in the future.

Spreading cholera risk demands close watch

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez of San Antonio recently called up on the federal government to take any and all necessary measures to prevent the spread of cholera from northern Mexico across the border into South Texas. Though short on specifics, Mr. Gonzalez's concern is more than justified by the recent confirmation of 11 cholera cases in Monterrey, Mexico, just 150 miles from the Texas border.

In Texas, it will be especially important to monitor the poor, unincorporated subdivisions along the Rio Grande known as colonias, which lack potable water and sewage treatment services. Elsewhere, the Texas Health Department has already started monitoring wastewater plants for signs of the cholera bacteria.

Without being alarmist, Congress should follow Mr. Gonzalez's advice and conduct hearings on the problem, either in South Texas or in Washington; Texas health officials should monitor the epidemic and issue periodic updates that stress specific measures to fight it; and federal authorities at the border should be trained to identify it. In addition to extending medical treatment as soon as cases are identified, Texas now has one more reason to demand the rigorous enforcement of existing laws geared toward restricting the growth of the colonias.

Cost 'cure' worse than disease?

Medical costs in this country are growing faster than our capacity to make money. And with 34.7 million people uninsured, there's little doubt that we desperately need fundamental change.

Presidential candidates already have jumped on the health-care reform bandwagon, with each offering a plan guaranteed to cure every ill.

All suggest some form of national health insurance. But can a national program solve our woes? If so, what type of a plan should be adopted, and who is going to operate it? Then, there's the question of financing. How much will it cost and how will taxpayers pay for it?

But as the debate intensifies for or against national health care, let's not cloud the issue with emotional rhetoric. Medical care in the United States is the best in the world. It's the cost of providing it that's in critical condition. A national health-care system may be the answer to bringing those uninsured millions into the system. Let's just hope the cure is not worse than the disease.

North Korea hides nuclear development

WASHINGTON — The man running North Korea's fast-track nuclear weapons project might as well be another Saddam Hussein. He is a paranoid hermit, bent on amassing a nuclear arsenal, skilled at hiding his progress and capable of tragic miscalculation. And there are signs that on April 15 he may graduate from understudy to top dog.

Anderson

He is Kim Chong Il, the 50-year-old son of aging North Korean President Kim Il Sung. The father turns 80 on April 15 and the big publicity buildup for the son in recent months has stirred up some speculation in intelligence circles that Kim Il Sung will pass the baton to his son that day.

The news about Kim Chong Il is all bad. He has lived a life of isolation and ignorance, has never met a foreign diplomat and has never granted an interview to a journalist. The only known trips he has made out of North Korea were two brief visits to China.

Alarm is growing in the U.S. intelligence community that, under Kim Chong Il's direction, North Korea is on the verge of producing a nuclear weapon. He is so close to achieving his goal, that if he succeeds in stalling international disarmament inspectors, the weapon could be a fait accompli within months. At the very least, Kim Chong Il is buying time to hide the key components so deep that inspectors will never find them.

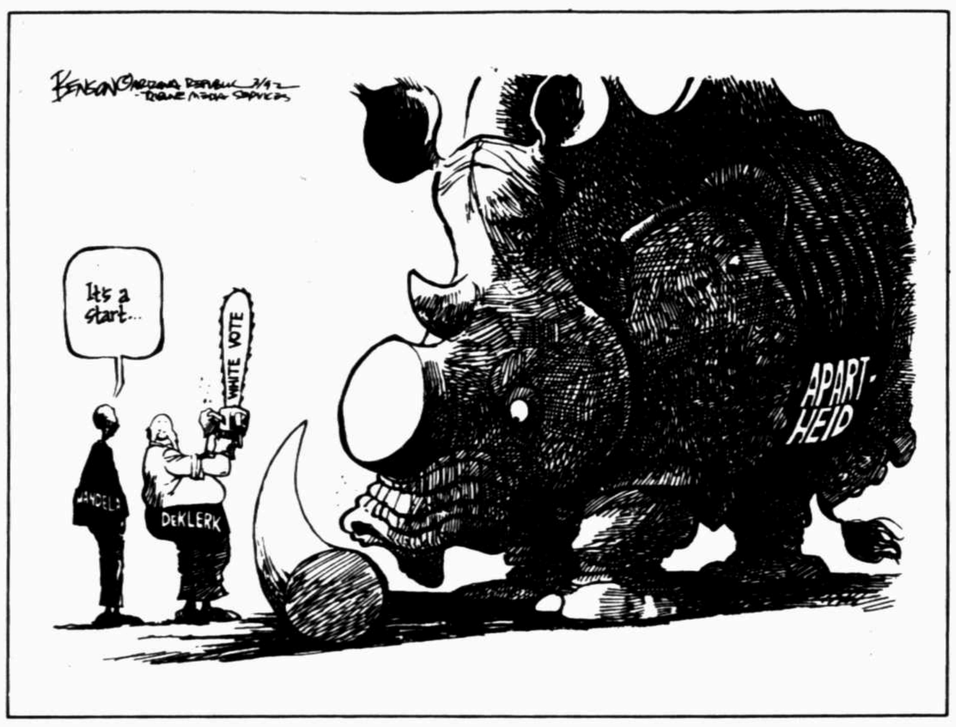
Two other factors make North Korea the loose canon to watch this year — increased missile sales to its clients in the Middle East and the ominous movement of more Scud missiles to the border with South Korea. The picture laid out by intelligence sources for our associate Dale Van Atta is of a country throwing up a defensive wall to buy time and hide its nuclear secrets.

The White House, Pentagon and State Department have been scrambling to find some way to lean on North Korea, but to no avail. Sanctions will not work against a country with the historical nickname, "The Hermit Kingdom." George Bush has twice proved his willingness to use military force to solve international problems — in Panama and Iraq — but a strike against North Korea would be no cakewalk. The million-man North Korean army is prepared and dug in. North Korea has been flaunting its disregard for what the rest of the world thinks by selling Scuds to the Middle East. Spy satellites have photographed at least 20 Scud canisters from North Korean freighters making their way to Iran where they are loaded on planes bound for Syria and other Arab nations. The North Koreans are fulfilling what one classified CIA report identifies as a $250 million contract with Syria to provide Scuds and Scud-production equipment and expertise.

Syrian President Haffez Assad, whose thuggery rivals that of Saddam Hussein, is frantically building up his military using oil money and more than $2 billion sent his way by Saudi Arabia in gratitude for Syria's help in the Persian Gulf War.

Syria may be first in line for North Korea's Scud-D missile now in production. It will have a range of more than 625 miles. With a Scud-D, North Korea could strike anywhere in South Korea and most of Japan. In the hands of Arab countries in the Middle East, the Scud-D missiles could easily hit Israel. And from Libya, a frequent buyer of North Korean weapons, a Scud-D could hit many cities in Europe.

Meanwhile, the North Koreans deny they are up to nuclear dirty work. Kim Il Sung personally swore to Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., in December that he was adhering strictly to a policy of nuclear non-proliferation. Either he was lying, or his son has cut dad out of the loop.



Jack Anderson's and Michael Binstein's column is distributed by United Feature Syndicate.

The Choice Program gives teens more time

BALTIMORE — South of the Patapsco River, across from the glistening Inner Harbor, sprawls Cherry Hill, a neighborhood where, 50 years ago, public housing was built for white steelworkers who came to the city during the Second World War. Today the housing, much the worse for wear, is inhabited mostly by fragments of families that are poor and black.

Will

It is an ocean of distress for adults and anger for children. Mark Shriver and his colleagues in The Choice Program are determined, with youth's noble disregard for daunting evidence, to bail the ocean.

Choice is a low-budget, high-energy, labor-intensive, cost-effective program run by young adults willing to spend a year or more supervising troubled youths in this city's most troubled neighborhoods. The staff, divided into teams, is on call 24 hours a day, logging 200 miles a week on the wheezing cars they use to track and contact — three to five times a day, 365 days a year — the children assigned to them by public agencies.

Early each morning the staff gathers to pool information on the barely-on-the-rails lives of the young people Choice adheres to like a bandage. Choice's aims and methods are simple. The aim is to keep the children, ages 10 to 17, swaddled in attention. The method is, in basketball parlance, a full-court press.

The information is swapped briskly. One staff member is away, accompanying a child to court. One was "DR'ed" (disciplinary removal) from school yesterday and will spend a day at Choice headquarters receiving tutoring rather than spend the day on the streets or watching television. One Choice staffer, a slight, young white woman from Texas, wearing a tailored suit, black pumps and glasses, reports that the previous night night one of her young people did not check in so she went out after him. Choice workers make it a point to know girlfriends, boyfriends and hang-outs. She found her young man loitering in a park. She required him to be home in 15 minutes. He is 17 and weighs 235 pounds. He did as required.

"Required"? Choice workers have almost no sanction except their moral authority, but they have lots of that because they are lavish with life's most precious commodity: time. "They respect you," says one of Shriver's recruits, "from seeing you so much."

When Shriver makes recruiting visits to campuses, he loses about half the interested people in the first interview when he explains the hours (60 to 70 a week, with 8 days off a year) and pay ($17,500). About half of the remaining half are lost when they take their first drive with a Choice worker "tracking" kids.

Today parents who would rather do something other than parent, assuage their guilt and disguise their neglect by saying they give their children "quality time." I have never heard a child ask for quality rather than quantity. Choice's indefatigable young adults are supplemental and sometimes surrogate parents for "their" children. These children are fortunate only — but this is a lot — in getting from Choice both quantity and quality. This is a truth of parenting: Quality is apt to be a function of, not an alternative to, quantity.

Unless shoe drops, political pundits' perks at risk

At the Political Press Club it's so quiet you could hear a shoe drop if somebody would only drop one.

"Unless somebody drops one pretty soon, preferably on Clinton," Buck Ballots told this veteran political analyst, "we'll all end up back in the newsroom grinding out weather stories and rewriting press releases about Moose meetings."

Baker

"Buck," I said, "that prospect makes this veteran political analyst's hair stand on end."

"When hair stands on end, which end does it stand on?" was Buck's reply. That's how bad things are. Buck Ballots is thinking about careful writing. When an ace political correspondent like Buck starts turning his nose up at a well-worn cliche you know the political scene is grim.

Here it is, not even April and, unless shoes drop, preferably on Clinton, the campaign is all over except for October's dueling TV commercials. It started as such a promising campaign, too. Then suddenly — pouf! — all over. Clinton and Bush, Bush and Clinton. All over, no matter how you shake it, not an ounce of life in it.

I've warned the club repeatedly that we're getting things over with too fast for our own good. "If you get a campaign over with before it gets started," I tell them, "eventually you'll only need ace political correspondents and veteran political analysts for one or two days every election year, and we'll all be back on the police beat."

Thanks to exit polling we are already reporting election-day results before the polls close. Or to put it another way, thanks to exit polling we are now losing enough overtime pay to finance next summer's vacation.

Worse, now that primaries make national party conventions obsolete we're in danger of losing those glorious expense accounts that gave us all sweet memories of political showdowns and riots in Chicago, San Francisco, Miami Beach, New York ...

"Buck," I said, "I told you it was playing with dynamite when you made Clinton the front-runner three weeks before vote one was cast in New Hampshire."

"I had to," said Buck, "after somebody slipped me that poll of barbers in Manchester and Concord showing Clinton was favored by an impressive 36 percent of male hair stylists."

"I never thought I'd see the great Buck Ballots rush into print with a barber poll," I said.

"Keep your voice down," said Buck. "If you're heard telling a Polish joke, daily demonstrations will be held outside the club and your veteran political analyses will be intensely monitored by ears so finely tuned they can not only detect a grievous unorthodoxy but also hear a shoe drop."

"Shoe drop! Shoe drop!" cried several aging club members, waking from glorious dreams of presidential campaigns that had lasted for months and of elections when exit-poll-less ace correspondents sat up all night waiting to learn who had won. "Has the Clinton shoe drop taken place?"

"See how it is," said Buck. "The club grows sourer by the hour."

"Is it possible," I cried, "that the flower of political journalism ... ?"

"Yes," said Buck, "sourer by the hour grows the flower. All this superb ace-political-corresponding and veteran-political-analyzing talent is going to waste for lack of a campaign."

This, I observed, scarcely bodes well for Clinton. Needing some way to justify its absence from the office, surely the souring flower of journalism will soon stir from its torpor and go looking for a Clinton shoe to drop. If it fails to find any, it will then start dropping its own shoes.

Buck Ballots agreed that such might be his own solution to the problem. Of course Clinton has shown ability to survive the kind of dropped shoes that would normally finish off presidential candidates. As we say in the veteran-political-analysis trade, he "has legs that can run on bare feet."

And yet one must do something to uphold the honor of our club. What Buck Ballots may do I shall not try to guess. Nor will I divulge all of my own plans for handling the Clinton problem, though I offer a hint: Is it not curious that he calls himself boyishly "Bill"? Why this childish preference for a nickname? Is Clinton hiding something about his real name? Just what is his real name, anyhow?

Clinton needs solutions for Hillary problem

WASHINGTON — Lyndon Johnson had "the Bobby problem"; Bill Clinton now has "the Hillary problem."

The problem is not that Hillary Clinton, successful lawyer and feminist, is coming across as a cunning political animal, threatening to insecure male voters.

Safire

On the contrary, she is coming across as a political bumbler by appearing to show contempt for women who work at home.

Her first gaffe, derogating the Tammy Wynette stand-by-your-man pose, can be excused as an unfortunate choice of words under incredible pressure.

But Mrs. Clinton's second outbreak of foot-in-mouth disease — "I suppose I could have stayed home and baked cookies and had teas" — betrayed ignorance of the fundamentals of campaigning: You do not defend yourself from a conflict-of-interest charge by insulting a large segment of the voting public.

The cookies-and-tea stereotype is elitism in action.

Even columnist Ellen Goodman, a grass-roots feminist, was moved to comment: "Ouch."

There is still time for both Clintons to solve the Hillary Problem. The six-step solution:

1. Hillary: Stop defining yourself by what you're not. Self-definition by exclusion is needlessly defensive, as is claiming to be quoted out of context when you were not.

2. Bill: Make your own victory statements or concession speeches.

After the Illinois primary, in which Hillary was so effective, the networks switched to your headquarters to hear from the candidate. What they got was an interminable introduction from your wife, with reaction shots of you looking like a hanger-on hungering for home-baked cookies. The body language of both Tom Brokaw and Peter Jennings registered amazement and amusement at this usurpation of the candidate's moment.

3. Hillary: Press your strength, which is not articulation but realism.

I ran into Mike Mansfield, the wisest living Democrat, and asked him if you were an asset or liability. He counted you as an asset because he was struck by what you said on "60 Minutes" — that if people didn't like your explanations, then don't vote for you. That was straightforward. Honest people like such realism.

4. Bill: Stop trying to have it both ways; you cannot be gallant about a feminist.

When Jerry Brown, in his $1,500 suit, accused you of steering state business to your wife's firm, you lit into him like an outraged husband for "jumping on my wife."

That may have been an effective riposte in debate, especially against a lifelong bachelor, but it dodged the issue.

His target was not your wife (to slip past your inelegant phrase), requiring the sort of how-dare-you response of Ronald Reagan at any criticism of Nancy's high-style income tax evasion. On the contrary, Brown was charging you with corruption. Get mad; get even; but don't suddenly get chivalrous.

5. Hillary: You don't need "face time"; fish where the fish are.

When the paramount fear was Gennifer-with-a-G, it was necessary to stick close to your husband on tour. Now you should spend your time going after George Bush's strength: Republican women.

Read Roger Rosenblatt's new book, "Life Itself," which takes the permit-but-discourage middleground on abortion. Many Republican women, especially youngish executives, are ready to desert Bush on this issue. You should be working professional fences in key states — Illinois, Ohio, California — but never knocking women who work at home.

6. Both of you: Get more specific about what role Hillary would play in your administration.

A pre-appointment would be presumptuous, but voters should know beforehand what sort of first ladyship is in store.

Would she work on the outside as a public-interest lawyer (children's rights, animal rights, mineral rights)? Or inside, as White House counsel with no conflict of interest, or as a Cabinet member accountable to Congress?

If we are to have a new kind of partnership at the top, reflecting generational change and the trend toward two-career couples, the candidate team should disclose more about its plans before the vote.

Only if they handle it right can the Hillary Problem become the Clinton Solution.

Couple appreciates sheriff's deputies

Now that the elections are over and this letter won't be considered politically motivated, I have a few words to say about the Midland County Sheriff's Department that I feel need to be said. I don't think I have ever really met Sheriff Painter, but like most folks, I do recognize him when I see him around town. Likewise, I don't know any of the sheriff's employees well enough for anyone to feel I'm trying to give out any unwarranted "attaboys."

My wife and I live about eight miles south of town and have a business that she oversees during the week, and I help out on weekends. The business office is adjacent to our home. A few weeks ago, our office was broken into at about 10:30 p.m. I was able to surprise the thieves just as they were driving away from the office. To make a long story short, my wife called the sheriff's department while I proceeded to head off the culprits.

Unable to stop them I followed them toward town flashing my lights trying to get them to pull over, thus giving the sheriff's department more time to respond. Less than eight minutes from the time of the call, the sheriff's deputy had the two "suspects" standing spread-eagle up against their vehicle. The quick response was most impressive, but I was even more impressed to find out as other units arrived that the department had sent units south on all three roads, Rankin Highway, Cottonflat Road, and Midkiff Road to assure that the suspects would be met.

All of the officers were extremely professional and efficient in their duties. The same professionalism was exhibited by the staff as the required questioning and paperwork were completed at the sheriff's office.

These officers and their boss have had a lot of bad press lately. I know the department has other duties, but the job I think most of us feel that they are paid for is the protection of the citizens and their property. This job I can testify was done extremely well when I needed them.

My wife and I wish to express our sincere thanks to the Midland County Sheriff's Department for a job well done.

Country is sliding into overgoverned society

In reference to Dorothy Kurtz's letter regarding the banning of BB and pellet guns in Midland, I admire her concern for children and pets. However, in a free society the evildoer is punished, not everyone.

I use my pellet guns to improve my sight picture and shooting technique in my home and yard. I do this responsibly and at no risk to my neighbors. Why should I, a free man at liberty in this "free society," have to restrict my activities on my own property because someone else was not taught or did not learn self control, safety and respect for another's property? An unsupervised child with any kind of weapon is dangerous, but to restrict all adult behavior to curtail possible harm from irresponsible persons does not deter the irresponsible person while harming the rights and freedom of those who act responsibly. That is morally wrong and should not be countenanced.

In 1776 Thomas Paine said, "... a long habit of not thinking a thing WRONG, gives it a superficial appearance of being right, and raises at first a formidable outcry in defense of custom." Had Ms. Kurtz taken the time to come to the hearings on the ordinance in question she would know that, according to the new ordinance, what happened to her animal is prohibited. As a matter of fact, anyone firing a projectile that is not on their own property or leaves their property after firing is liable to a fine of $500 as well as the usual civil criminal penalties. This law therefore punishes those who deserve punishment, while leaving the rest of us free to enjoy ourselves, our property and our hobbies in peace and with safety. Until this attitude of totalitarian answers to simple problems is defeated, this country will continue its slide into an overrestricted, overgoverned, overtaxed Orwellian society.

"Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? I know not what course other men take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death." — Patrick Henry, 1775.

Father thanks God for Y, United Way

Usually when I write, I'm raising hell about something; this time, it is in praise of something — the Alamo YMCA and the United Way!

Most of us think of the YMCA as a fun place to go, and that is correct. However, there is a serious side to this operation as well. In my own case, the "Y" came through in a lifesaving way. While United Way had no direct involvement, were they not assisting the Alamo YMCA's Child Care Program my daughter could not have gotten the help she so desperately needed at the time she came down with an extreme reoccurrence of rheumatoid arthritis.

We had the help of Allega Travel in telling us about American Airlines' compassion flights, AA getting her on a flight and getting her home to Midland from New York City. When she came down the ramp in that wheelchair, she still had a smile for us, but we did not have any ideas of how to help her. She could not even feed herself because of the pain.

When I told Don McCartney, executive director of the Alamo YMCA, about her problem he immediately said, "Bring her on out to our warm water pool Monday morning." We did and with that chair lowered into the pool, we saw her indicate the first relief from pain.

Since that day back in April, we have seen her gradually work her way back to where she can now get around without a cane. Sure we've prayed, as have others, and she's had treatments in the whirlpool with massages (at the Central Y), a special vegetarian diet, and chiropractic as well as special attention from her rheumatologist and the Odessa Rehabilitation Center.

However, without those daily swims in the Alamo warm water pool at first and now every other day, I just don't think she would have made it. I say "thank you God" for the YMCA and the United Way. If you don't belong to a YMCA and haven't contributed to the United Way you are missing two great opportunities!

People can save nation's freedom

Who and what is to be believed in this year of intense political wrangling? Perhaps if we turn to the ancients we can better understand what is going on in the present world of politics.

Specifically let us refer to Plato and to what Will Durant reminds us of in his "The Story of Philosophy." Plato said, "Every form of government tends to perish by excess of its basic principle. Even democracy ruins itself by excess — of democracy. Its basic principle is the equal right of all to hold office and determine public policy. This at first glance is a delightful arrangement; it becomes disastrous because the people are not properly equipped by education to select the best rulers and the wisest courses." Still quoting Plato, "As to the people they have no understanding, and only repeat what their rulers are pleased to tell them."

It would be reasonable to believe that this is what elder statesman Benjamin Franklin had in mind when he said on the final day of the U.S. Constitutional Convention on Sept. 17, 1787, that "the government the men were creating would be well administered for a number of years, but could only end in despotism when the people shall become so corrupted as to need despotic government, being incapable of any other."

Let us pray for our country, but equally important every farsighted person must do something to save America and the freedom we hold so dear for ourselves and our posterity.

Please, don't just read and do nothing. Do something for your country. It's urgent.

Thomas not given credit for service

In the current and continuing critique of Carroll Thomas, voters are failing to give Thomas credit for his years of service to Midland in the elected positions of councilman and mayor where his salary as a city employee has been only $100 per month.

The people of Midland elected Thomas to the city council in 1975 and he served through May of 1983. He was elected mayor in May of 1986 and will serve through May 1992.

Carroll Thomas has given Midland much of his time and talents for 14 years. He could have spent this time pursuing his personal and business interests. Perhaps his critics could better serve our community by offering their time and talent to improve the quality of life in Midland.

Officer welcome on street anytime

The people on Pueblo Street would like to thank the police officer who came out and checked out the speeders. The officer issued some tickets and maybe after that some of the people who use Pueblo like an interstate will slow down.

We have lots of children on this street and we are all concerned with their safety. After one phone call, the officer was out here. We appreciate the officer, who is welcome to visit our street anytime.

Readers' views on: Judicial race

Choice is clear for judicial race

George D. "Jody" Gilles used "THOSE WHO KNOW SAY" as a lead into his latest campaign brochure. What the brochure did not say is "WHAT DOES JODY KNOW?" Is it true that during this campaign, before the Midland Bar Association, he said, "I have NEVER tried a criminal jury trial?" Again, during this campaign and before a gathering of Leadership Midland graduates, is it true that when asked how many full jury trials in which he had participated, he said, "I do not keep those type of records," and instead of venturing a guess, said "I shall decline to answer the question?"

Voters of Midland County have the obligation to ask, "Who is best qualified to be district judge?"

"Jody" Gilles is a general practice lawyer. The majority of his practice has been in bankruptcy, collections and family law, none of which are practiced in the 142nd District Court. Also important to Midland voters are the questions concerning actual trial experience. Has George D. "Jody" Gilles participated as lead counsel in one jury trial? Has "Jody," as an attorney, argued one appeal before an appellate court? The evidence, as presented, proves beyond all reasonable doubt that Gilles is no civil trial attorney and the 142nd District Court is a trial court!

Robin Malone Sams is a criminal trial attorney with very significant courtroom experience. Robin has participated as lead counsel in over 50 jury trials and as co-counsel in countless other jury trials. Robin Malone Sams has presented 18 cases to appellate courts and NEVER LOST A CASE. As assistant district attorney, Robin has served as chief narcotics prosecutor and trial chief for the 142nd District Court, recording a 98 percent prosecution success record. She seeks the office of judge of the 142nd District Court after 10 years private and public practice, knowing and understanding jury selection, docket scheduling and the rights of both plaintiff and defendant. Robin Malone Sams is a skilled and experienced jurist!

The choice for district court is clear and the voters of Midland County need to know. Vote Robin Malone Sams on April 14th!

Thomas M. Beall
Midland

Experience must be considered

Things happen. The contested district judge's race between Robin Malone Sams and "Jody" Gilles is a perfect example. It seems to me this race has progressed into a popularity contest, which should have very little to do with who is qualified for the job and who is not.

The fact that someone has practiced law is no criteria or standard for excellence that we should accept.

Before we decide on our candidate, we need to stop and thine young man whose majority practice is divorce law, bankruptcy, and bill collections, and who on occasion has represented drug dealers. With the exception of the drug dealers, to my knowledge very little of his practice has anything to do with the 142nd District Court.

Robin Sams, on the other hand, has spent seven years working tirelessly to stamp out crime and drugs. She has been instrumental in protecting our children and families from this unwanted segment of our society. She has been involved in over 1,000 such cases and trials before the court.

I like Robin Sams and I like "Jody" Gilles. Both of the candidates are fine people, but we must base our decision upon the experience of the candidates in the court in which they will preside.

Bush gets bum rap for his dealings with China

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — President Bush is getting a bum rap for his efforts to retain China's support for our vitally important strategic interests.

Hearst

Without China's help, we would not have secured United Nations support for the Persian Gulf War that liberated Kuwait from Saddam Hussein's barbaric conquest. We could not have imposed international sanctions against Iraq aimed at stopping Saddam from producing nuclear, chemical and biological weapons of mass destruction.

I believe that without China's support in the Security Council, we would not be able, unless we went to war virtually alone, to stop the Iraqi tyrant from eventually creating a fanatically anti-western Islamic empire that could control at least 65 percent of the world's oil resources. That could lead to an increase in oil prices that would plunge us into a worse economic disaster than the Great Depression of the 1930s.

What I find incredible is that a conservative with high-ranking diplomatic experience is assailing President Bush for not pursuing a tougher policy toward the Chinese communist regime. The following report comes to me from Joe Kingsbury-Smith, our Washington national editor:

In a recent article in the Washington Post, Jeane Kirkpatrick, who served as President Reagan's ambassador to the United Nations, accused President Bush of "failing to articulate" the goals of his foreign policy, particularly with regard to China. She called on Bush to explain how his policy toward China "serves the common good."

The former ambassador, who reportedly had hopes of becoming secretary of state in the Bush administration, conceded there might be "compelling reasons" to maintain a "cooperative relationship" with the Chinese government during the "Cold War tensions," but she contended that "such strategic imperatives died with the Cold War."

It is inconceivable that a person with her knowledge of foreign affairs did not realize the strategic importance of China's support of President Bush's wise Mideast and Asian politics. As one of the five permanent members of the Security Council, China had the power to veto United Nations support of Desert Storm, sanctions against Iraq and action to eliminate Saddam's weapons of mass destruction. Instead, China supported the Security Council resolutions sponsored mostly by President Bush. It also joined other Security Council members in more than half a dozen warnings to Saddam to stop violating the cease-fire agreement, including one this month saying Baghdad will face "serious consequences" if the Iraq government continues to defy U.N. demands.

Although a supporter of the Khmer Rouge, China joined the United States and other western powers in bringing an end to the civil war in Cambodia.

At the urging of President Bush, the Beijing government stopped the flow of Chinese-made Silkworm missiles to Iran and joined with other Security Council members in favoring a freeze on Iraq's $5 billion assets abroad.

If ex-envoy Kirkpatrick paid more attention to what President Bush has achieved with the Chinese government and less to her dislike of the president's moderate approach, she would not need any explanation of how the president's policy toward China serves the common good.

Stanford, Virginia advance

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — After winning the Atlantic Coast Conference title, the Virginia Cavaliers left their trophies in Rock Hill, S.C.

NCAA Women

over third-seeded Vanderbilt, the top-seeded Cavaliers forgot to cut down the nets at University Hall.

Virginia coach Debbie Ryan says that isn't for lack of appreciation, but a bigger message.

"I think that is a sign that this team is focused on one thing. This team knows there are bigger things out there," Ryan said.

The Cavaliers (32-1) moved into their third straight Final Four appearance with their 19th consecutive victory — setting a school record for single-season victories with 32. They will face the winner of the West Region, either Stanford or USC, in Los Angeles next Saturday.

Heather Burge and Dawn Staley, who was the East Region tournament MVP, combined to score all but one of Virginia's second-half field goals.

After Vanderbilt took a 56-54 lead, Virginia's defense stepped up and helped ignite the offense. The Cavaliers built a 68-58 lead behind Burge with less than two minutes to play. Tammi Reiss hit both ends of a one-and-one to account for the final margin.

Stanford 82, Southern Cal 62

SEATTLE — Molly Goodenbour scored 22 points and Christy Hedgpeth added 21 as No. 3 Stanford defeated No. 23 Southern Cal in the NCAA West Regional championship game Saturday night.

Stanford, which beat Southern Cal in the teams' two meetings during the regular season, was in control almost from the opening tipoff. The Cardinal led by no fewer than 11 points in the second half.

Goodenbour, who averages 11.9 points and 5.5 assists per game and was named the tournament's outstanding player, was six of nine from 3-point range. Hedgpeth made five of 10 trey attempts.

Goodenbour's constant full-court pressure on Southern Cal point guard Tammy Story disrupted the flow of the Trojans' offense got Story into foul trouble. She fouled out with 5:55 left.

Freshman forward Rachel Hemmer, who led all scorers with 21 points in Stanford's 75-63 victory over Texas Tech Thursday night, finished with 15 points.

Dawson says Cubs refusal to extend contract a 'slap in the face'

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — The Chicago Cubs don't plan to offer Andre Dawson a contract extension this week, a decision the right fielder called "a slap in the face."

Dawson said Friday that because of the Tribune Co.'s decision, he is all but convinced this season will be his last with the Cubs. Dawson, who can become a free agent after the World Series, said he will not negotiate with the Cubs during the season.

Dawson said his agent, Richard Moss, was informed of the Cubs' decision by Dennis Homerin, lawyer for the Tribune Co., the team's owner.

"It's actually a slap in the face," Dawson said.

Dawson was the National League's Most Valuable Player in 1987.

Bridgeport pummeled by Virginia Union

Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — Size and strength swept aside sentiment as Virginia Union ended Bridgeport's dreams of an NCAA Division II basketball championship.

"It was like playing six Charles Barkleys," Bridgeport center Steve Wills said Saturday after a 100-75 defeat. Barkley is a Virginia Union alumnus.

NCAA Division II

Led by 6-foot-7 swingman Reggie Jones with 19 points and 11 rebounds and 6-10 Derrick Johnson with 17 points and nine rebounds, Virginia Union shut off Bridgeport's inside game and outrebounded the Purple Knights 58-40.

"Our game was to get their big guys away from the basket. That worked for about 10 minutes. Then they started hitting from outside," Bridgeport Coach Bruce Webster said. "They definitely intimidated us."

The game was the last ever for Bridgeport. The cash-strapped Connecticut school is dropping varsity sports.

Robinson out for 6 weeks

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — David Robinson, the San Antonio Spurs' All-Star center, underwent surgery on his left thumb Saturday, and is expected to be sidelined six weeks.

Robinson was recovering at home, said a spokeswoman for his agent, Advantage International, in Washington, D.C.

The NBA playoffs begin the week of April 20, and Robinson will miss the early games, if the Spurs qualify.

Dr. David Green, a San Antonio hand surgeon, repaired about a quarter of an inch of the tendon in Robinson's thumb.

Robinson was examined by team doctors for the Miami Heat, Charlotte Hornets and the Spurs before it was decided to operate, Advantage International said in a statement.

"After diagnosing the torn tendon, all three physicians concurred that the left-handed Robinson could sustain irreparable damage to the tendon without surgery," the statement said.

Robinson returned to San Antonio from Miami, where the Spurs lost 118-101 Friday night, to be examined by Green.

Neither Robinson nor Green immediately returned phone calls Saturday from The Associated Press.

Earlier, Green said it was difficult to assess the damage to Robinson's injury, which he called "unusual." The thumb is not broken, but ligaments are damaged.

"It's a pure dislocation of the basal joint of the thumb, the carpo-metacarpal joint," Green said. "It's analogous to a recurring shoulder dislocation.

"This is a hard injury to fix because the ligament is only a quarter of an inch long. The ligament is torn completely in two."

Robinson expressed doubt about playing on the U.S. Olympic team this summer.

"That's not even a consideration any more," Robinson said. "I have to worry about playing for the people that sign my paychecks."

Robinson was injured last week when he collided with another player in a loss to the Hornets at San Antonio. He sat out Wednesday's game at Charlotte because of soreness and swelling. It was the first time he had missed a game because of an injury during his pro career.

After suffering the injury, Robinson played against Sacramento, Seattle and Philadelphia. However, a blow to the hand in the game against the 76ers aggravated the injury.

Rockets lose fifth straight Hakeem-less game

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Clyde Drexler scored 19 of his 26 points in the second half as the Portland Trail Blazers beat Houston 115-95 Saturday night, the Rockets' fifth straight loss without Hakeem Olajuwon.

Drexler, who helped the Trail Blazers win their seventh consecutive game at home, played only 14 minutes in the first half, collecting his third foul with 3:35 left in the first quarter.

Otis Thorpe scored 19 points for the Rockets, who suspended Olajuwon last week after doctors said he was fit to play. Olajuwon filed a grievance against the Rockets, saying he has a hamstring injury.

Bullets 113, Hornets 97

LANDOVER, Md. — Ledell Eackles scored 21 of his 34 points in the first half, and the Washington Bullets snapped a seven-game losing streak with a 113-97 victory Saturday night over the Charlotte Hornets.

Harvey Grant added 24 points for the Bullets, who had lost their previous four home games.

The defeat was the second in as many nights for Charlotte, its longest losing streak since it dropped three straight games Jan. 28-Feb. 2.

Larry Johnson led Charlotte with 19 points, but missed his first eight shots and did not score until his three-point play with 8:26 left in the opening half cut Washington's lead to 41-30.

Heat 109, Magic 100

ORLANDO, Fla. — Glen Rice recovered from a slow start to score 15 of his 29 points in the fourth quarter, leading the Miami Heat over the Orlando Magic.

Rice, coming off a 35-point performance on 12-for-18 shooting the night before, made only six of 17 shots in the first three quarters against Orlando. He was 6-for-7 in the last period, however, and his two free throws gave the Heat a 101-91 lead with 49 seconds left.

The triumph was the fourth straight for Miami and enabled the Heat to hold on to eighth place in the Eastern Conference playoff race.

Miami closed the third quarter with a 22-8 run to take a 74-68 lead and was never threatened.

Warriors 153, Nets 148, OT

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Mario Elie hit a three-point play with 1:58 left in overtime to put Golden State ahead and Billy Owens added five points down the stretch as the Warriors beat the New Jersey Nets.

The win was the Warriors' ninth straight at New Jersey, a run that dates to 1983. However, this one may have been the most improbable as Golden State came back from a nine-point deficit in the final 1:02 of regulation, forcing overtime on a 3-pointer by Tim Hardaway with 2.3 seconds left.

Sarunas Marciulionus scored a career-high 35 points for Golden State, one more than Hardaway. Elie had 23 and Chris Mullin and Owens 21 each.

Bulls 126, Cavaliers 102

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan scored 44 points, 13 of them in the decisive third quarter when the Chicago Bulls made 72 percent of their shots and went on to rout the Cleveland Cavaliers.

It was the 11th time this season that Jordan, the NBA's top scorer with a 30-point average, scored at least 40 points.

The Bulls won for the 10th time in 11 games and improved their home record to 30-5 with their third victory in four tries this season over the Cavaliers, whose five-game winning streak ended. It was only the second setback in their last 12 outings.

Suns 121, Nuggets 101

DENVER — Jeff Hornacek scored 25 points while Tom Chambers, Kevin Johnson and Dan Majerele scored 23 apiece, leading the Phoenix Suns over Denver.

The Suns, who won their fourth consecutive game, made 63.1 percent of their shots and 88 percent from the free-throw line against the Nuggets, who were led by Marcus Liberty with 18 points and Dikembe Mutombo with 17.

There were five ties and four lead changes in the first quarter before the Suns outscored Denver 26-19 for a 32-27 advantage at the end of the period, during which Johnson and Hornacek scored 10 points apiece.

Phoenix extended the margin to 62-45 at halftime, outscoring the Nuggets 30-18 in the second period while making 12 of 17 field-goal attempts.

Knicks 92, SuperSonics 87

SEATTLE — The New York Knicks blew a 21-point lead Saturday night, then rallied behind Patrick Ewing's 28 points for a 92-87 victory over the Seattle SuperSonics.

The Knicks, who matched their longest winning streak of the season with their sixth straight victory, trailed 79-78 with 5:32 left before baskets by Gerald Wilkins, Ewing and Mark Jackson gave them an 84-79 lead that the Sonics couldn't overcome.

New York led 86-84 before Jackson's steal and layup gave the Knicks a four-point lead with 29 seconds left. Ricky Pierce's three-point closed Seattle to 88-87 five seconds later, but the Knicks clinched it with two free throws each by John Starks and Anthony Mason in the last 22 seconds.

Clippers 103, Bucks 95

LOS ANGELES — Ron Harper scored 28 points and Danny Manning had 19 points and 10 rebounds as the Los Angeles Clippers dealt the Milwaukee Bucks their 20th straight road defeat.

Charles Smith had three free throws and two rebounds in the final 65 seconds, helping the Clippers extend their lead in the Western Conference playoff race to a full game over the idle Lakers and 2½ games over the ninth-place Houston Rockets. The Clippers' fourth straight triumph and 12th in 16 games also brought them within a half-game of sixth-place Seattle.

Frank Brickowski scored 22 points for the Bucks, who fell 3½ games behind Miami for the eighth and final Eastern Conference playoff slot with their fourth loss in a row and 15th in 20 games.

Breaking the cycle can halt domestic abuse

EDITOR'S NOTE: Domestic violence has long been a subject of fascination for movie and television producers. But the agony the violence can cause is very real, indeed. It touches the lives of millions of Americans each year, including many in Midland. Today, the Reporter-Telegram examines this once taboo subject.

By Darren J. Waggoner

Breaking the generational-cycle of domestic violence is the first step toward stopping the abuse, says a counselor at the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

Once considered an off-limits topic among many social circles, family violence has recently gained increased public awareness, due in part to the popular movie, "Sleeping with the Enemy" and the attention the subject has received on several prime-time television shows.

Typically, the storylines have focused heavily on the problem and briefly on the social stigma that has long discouraged abused women from seeking help.

Experts believe that violence in families passes from generation to generation by children who were witnesses to abuse or who were themselves victims of domestic violence.

Marlene Bruce, social services coordinator at the center, said educating abused children is crucial.

"Violence is a learned behavior. People will often do what they see done. And seeing such acts at an early age can leave a lasting impression," she said. "We let the kids know that the abuse is not their fault and the earlier we reach them, the better."

The local center has an extensive children's program primarily designed to teach children to look out for their own safety above everything else.

"It's a terrible thing, but many kids as young as six years old are worrying about their mothers' well-being," she said. "That's just not a healthy emotion for children."

The local battered women's shelter is hailed by employees as one of the best facilities in the nation. A staff of 24 works to help abuse victims from 15 area counties.

And despite hundreds of volunteers logging nearly 6,000 hours at the center in 1991, incidents of domestic violence continue to be reported regularly at law enforcement agencies in the Permian Basin.

Last year, for example, the center served 488 resident women, 842 resident children, 519 non-resident women and 93 non-resident children. Also, 399 clients received legal service.

Those numbers reveal that the problem of domestic violence remains strong and, in some cases, can end with tragic results.

"Family violence today is so pervasive that rarely does someone not know someone else who is abused," Ms. Bruce

Violence begets vicious answers in family setting

By Darren J. Waggoner

Today, she believes she subconsciously searched for an adult life that would mirror her childhood. Her alcoholic father abused her mother for 28 years.

She waited until he was in a compromising position — sitting in a rocking chair, holding the baby — and then she whacked him across the shins with a baseball bat.

"After a while I became just as violent as him. At the start I wasn't scared, I would fight back. But the abuse grew and grew. There were plenty of times I feared for my life," said 31-year-old Marissa, who requested that her real name remain confidential.

"Once he pointed a 45-caliber right in my face and I said 'shoot me!' and I thought he would too," she said. "I was never afraid during the heat of the moment, but afterwards, I was terrified."

During three years of marriage, Marissa escaped her abusive husband three times before returning — each time with dreams of creating a model family for herself and her infant son.

"Each time I came back there was loads of sunshine and a promise. He would say he had changed and, for a short time, things would be nice again. But he didn't want to change. He never sought counseling and he desperately needed it," she said.

She finally divorced him in 1988.

Today, she believes she subconsciously searched for an adult life that would mirror her childhood. Her alcoholic father abused her mother for 28 years, and he also abused Marissa and her two siblings throughout their childhood years.

"I didn't realize I was being set up for an abusive situation. But that's what was comfortable for me, I guess. I'm lucky though. Mom faced it for 28 years. I got out after three," she said. "My ex-husband was an alcoholic and I think there is a certain attraction to a lot of alcoholics. They're charmers."

"On our first date he was polite and kind and gentle. On the second date he said he was going to marry me," she added. "I laughed at the time, but I found him so persuasive."

But shortly after they were married in 1985, Marissa began to realize she had made a mistake.

"My husband didn't want responsibilities. He wasn't responsible for his actions and he wouldn't take the responsibility of being a father. When I would confront him about this, it would set him off," she said. "It started with pushings and shovings but then when he was really mad he would

Project ADAM provides men with an alternative

By Darren J. Waggoner

The need to control a relationship can be a powerful desire. The methods used to gain that control can be devastating.

But a local program, provided at no charge to interested citizens in 15 Permian Basin counties, offers an alternative for abusive men who wish to make a change.

"Men who abuse do it because it works. It helps them achieve their objective of being the dominant partner — but only for the short term, though," said Ron Hanna, social services coordinator for Project ADAM (Alternatives to Domestic Assault for Men).

Hanna leads Project ADAM, an offshoot of the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

Project ADAM is an intensive 15-week program aimed at curbing the frequency of domestic violence. Some men attend willingly, while others have been mandated to attend by the court.

"Twenty-five to 30 percent of the men who come here have been ordered by the court. The balance are self-referrals," Hanna said. "Typically, in their cases, the wife has left or is about to leave. Only then do they realize the gravity of their situation.

"Unfortunately, it's often too late to save their marriages at that point. But we're not marriage counselors, we work on helping the individual," Hanna added.

In 1984, workers at the battered women's center noticed they were fielding a large number of calls from men seeking help to stop their abusive tendencies. Three years later Batterer's Anonymous opened its

GARY OTT

British accent makes televised sports a bearable event

It was mid-afternoon on a Saturday, as I recall, when I took the TV remote control and began a grand tour of my 35 cable channels. Of that number, a sporting event — and I use the term loosely — was appearing, or was about to be aired, on 12 of the stations.

Ott

That's right. Twelve. As in a cool even dozen.

You think I'm kidding? Try this list on for size. There was college basketball, spring training baseball, men's golf, women's golf, senior golf, bowling, tennis, fishing, stock car racing, professional wrestling, amateur boxing and a tractor pull.

On CNN, they were showing highlights from the previous night's activity and on still another channel, the USA Network, there was a promo for the World League of American Football, featuring an upcoming game between the New York-/New Jersey Knights and the London Monarchs.

Hot dang, grab a bag of chips and a six-pack of beer. The action is about to begin. Sports junkies everywhere are in hog heaven. They can't flick their flicker without coming across a game of some sort.

What can I say? It's that time of the year.

Now, some of you might be thinking, "But, Gary, I don't really like sports all that much. In fact, I'd rather watch a 'Frances, the Talking Mule' movie than a bunch of grown men playing a silly kid's game."

So would I, but unfortunately there are very few 'Frances, the Talking Mule' movies being shown on TV these days, so we must learn to play the hand we are dealt. And in this case, that means sports. And lots of it.

If you are going to exist in today's world, you simply must learn to love a variety of games.

We all have our personal favorites. Just about everyone, for example, even the most jaded non-sports fan, enjoys being part of a big Super Bowl bash. Likewise, with college bowl games, the World Series, college basketball's Final Four, the Olympics, Wimbledon and even the Kentucky Derby.

They are your so-called glamour events, the kind where rich folks shell out huge amounts of money just so they can be seen mingling with other rich folks. There is a certain mystique that goes with them. And while most of us will never be able to attend those events in person, we happily park ourselves in front of the TV when the appropriate time arrives. We cheer and jeer to our heart's content. It is the American way.

But what has happened along the way is that we have taken a good thing and carried it to the extreme. Instead of televising an occasional game — one that has huge ramifications — the networks have decided that the typical sports fan is stupid enough to watch anything that involves a moving ball and/or grown men wearing short pants.

And they are right.

Which is why you have a perfectly healthy individual, like myself, spending a beautiful Saturday afternoon sitting on the sofa watching other people participate in various forms of physical activity.

When a person spends an inordinant amount of time watching games on TV he quite naturally develops a variety of opinions on the pros and cons of the various sports in question.

Golf, for example, always brings a heated reaction. Many people, when noticing a tournament is on my TV, will remark, "Good Lord, why are you watching that nonsense? The most interesting thing about a golf tournament is hearing some tipsy guy with a British accent say, 'Now, let's go to Gary McCord at 16.' "

Perhaps. But, I rather enjoy hearing tipsy people talk, especially when they possess a British accent.

Likewise, televised bowling will generally draw a tacky comment or two. "Oh, this should be a stimulating two hours of television," some smart-aleck friend will say as I settle back to enjoy something called the Akron Invitational. "At what point do they quote Shakespeare?"

Mild giggling follows.

"We could always watch fishing," I reply with an eyebrow arched.

"Only if it's a celebrity competition," the friend responds.

"How about stock car racing?" I ask.

"Great," he says. "We can count mangled bodies before voting on the tackiest car."

"How about baseball?"

"Sure. I love watching grown men spit and scratch themselves."

"There's a tennis match on NBC."

"That should be fun," he says. "We can watch 16-year-old millionaires pout when a ruling goes against them."

OK, Mr. Big Shot. You call it. We've been through all the channels.

"Hmm," he replies. "Let's go to Gary McCord at 16."

Can you say that with a British accent?

CYCLE: Intervention can end domestic abuse

said.

And indeed, national statistics released last year by the American Medical Association (AMA) support her statement:

■ In the United States alone, a woman is beaten by a spouse or live-in male every 18 seconds, and four women die every day as victims of domestic violence.

■ More emergency room visits are a result of family violence situations than rapes, muggings and car accidents combined.

■ Eighty to 85 percent of all prison inmates and 100 percent of San Quentin inmates come from backgrounds of domestic violence. Also, 60 percent of men who batter come from violent homes.

■ More than 60 percent of males from 11 to 20 years of age who commit murder kill the man who they caught beating their mother.

In 1990, the last year for which the FBI has figures, 30 percent of the 4,399 women identified as murder victims in the United States were slain by their boyfriends and husbands.

Eleanor Josting, community relations/volunteer coordinator at the local battered women and children's center, said that educating people about domestic violence helps topple the perceived disgrace that many battered women feel and is, therefore, a top priority at the local center.

There can never be enough awareness, Ms. Bruce said.

"There is a great deal of shame for the woman. The abusive partner is often a nice person in the outside world, which makes the woman think the problem is her fault, that she is the cause and perhaps she even deserves the abuse," she said.

"In addition, there is often a great deal of denial for the abuser. He does not see that he has a problem. 'I never hurt her very seriously' he will say, or he will tell his wife that he is going to change," Ms. Bruce added.

Such statements, in turn, kindle false hopes for the abused spouse, causing her to minimize the danger involved.

"A woman can have a gun held to her head by her husband and go back to him. If it was a strange man doing the same, she would never think of going back," Ms. Bruce said. "The wife is often kept there because the husband will become apologetic, give gifts and make plans for the future, all tactics that raise the woman's hopes."

Consequently, women remain in the abusive situation without ever seeking options.

And according to Ms. Bruce, the options are plentiful. She mentioned four of the most common:

■ She can make the decision to separate and seek a support system to deal with her actions.

■ She can just pick up and leave the situation and go to the shelter.

■ She can try to get a protective order.

■ She can relocate to another city.

"Often times, packing up and moving is the only thing that works. If that's what a woman chooses to do, then the shelter will try to help. But whatever option she chooses, the most important thing for her is to seek a support system," she said.

And while, local shelter employees try to offer helpful advice, they also try to refrain from making the victim's decisions.

"The decision to make a change is usually up to the victim. And rarely does the abuser say 'All right, we have to do something about this abuse.' But sadly, the victim is often not in the proper frame of mind to make the decision and indeed the least capable of doing so."

doors.

Project ADAM, an extension of Batterer's Anonymous, began operating in February 1990.

"We attempt to provide them with alternative behaviors to help control the abuse and the violence," Hanna said. "We teach them to take out the destructive behavior and install a constructive behavior."

According to Hanna, domestic violence has no racial or social barriers.

"We get a comparative racial and ethnic mix as to that of the general population mix," Hanna said.

The average abusive mate who seeks help in the Permian Basin is a 31-year-old male on his second or third marriage. He has two kids and has completed 12 or 13 years of school, Hanna said.

"He may be the pillar of the community in the outside world, with no problems with the law or anything," Hanna added. "He'll excuse what's going on, downplay it and blame it on others. Basically, he'll deny everything."

Project ADAM stresses responsibility and accountability.

"We want those men to realize they can't change her, the children or the external world. The only thing that can be changed is themselves," he added. "Not many people know about what the abusive, violent male is thinking."

Hanna believes there are many families facing domestic violence that remain silent or ignore the problem.

"It's likely that most of the batterings and abuse in the Permian Basin remain unaccounted for. Many women may not realize they are living in an abusive situation," he said.

"Physical violence is not always the problem. Whenever someone feels they can't act on their own needs, they are being abused. Our operating definition is this: If you are living in a relationship where you are afraid, feel controlled and are unable to make healthy decisions for yourself and your needs, you are in an abusive relationship," Hanna said.

"Maturity and experience in diverse areas of the law are prerequisites for a competent jurist. Jody has practiced law for fifteen years now -- more than twice as long as his opponent -- and has gained a wealth of experience in many areas of the law. His integrity and sense of fairness complement his experience, and make him an excellent candidate for judge."

H.W. "Woody" Leverett, Jr.,
Attorney at Law

"I have tried cases against (Jody Gilles) and have been on the same side of the docket on occasion...I know that each and every time I have to prepare for a trial against (him) that I will have to be ready in every respect on matters of law, on matters of preparation of the case, and on matters of understanding the personalities of the parties before the Court."

J. Brian Martin,
Attorney at Law

"As a practicing attorney, I am aware of the sort of training which makes a good judge -- and that is broad-based experience in every aspect of the business of the Court. The 142nd Court administers justice in a broad range of cases, and its judge should have a broad range of experience."

STORY: Circle of domestic violence pervades family generations

hurt me."

"He wanted total control of me and he got worse as I allowed it to go on," she added.

And now, she fears the cycle of abuse. Experts say it is often passed through families where domestic violence occurs.

And Marissa has a five-year-old son.

"I don't let him watch anything violent on TV. I don't even allow him to point his finger at someone like a gun," she said. "He's a good kid, but he likes to hit too much. It worries me."

In 1988, Marissa followed her mother's advice and sought help from the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children in Midland. It was a path her mother had taken a few years before.

Shortly thereafter, she left her husband in East Texas for the last time.

But the fear continued much longer.

"It's over now. I'm no longer afraid he will stalk us. I guess he still could but I think he's moved on to other things now," she said. "I don't think it's his objective."

Following a year of counseling after leaving her husband, Marissa still pays an occassional visit to the center. She also has attended different anger-related workshops to help.

"My life is healthier now than ever before," she said. "I look at things differently. For the first time ever I view myself as an adult, not an adult child of an alcoholic. I guess I'm a survivor . . . but you have to be. When it's (abuse) going on, you deal with it."

Marissa urges women in abusive situations to take "a long look at themselves and their family."

"They've got to see what the dysfunction is and they need to come to the battered women's center," she said. "But when a girl is in that situation, she has to make the decision alone. And often you become so dominated that you aren't thinking straight. You don't admit that there is a serious problem."

"When you learn to focus on yourself and your own needs you can make the decision," she said. "Then you have to learn to forgive."

THE ALLIANCE

The battle against drugs moves forward as the Community for Substance Abuse Prevention Alliance meets at Glenwood Hospital every last Tuesday of the month at noon.

The Permian Basin Regional Council on Alcohol and Drug Abuse initiated the Alliance to network counselors, probation officers and other concerned participants to create better communication with each other.

Pamela Bowerman, the newly elected coordinator for the Alliance said, "I think this will help in preventing those people who might be served from falling through the cracks. Those who are interested should attend each month and communicate with other members to help place people in programs or counseling."

The Alliance is designed to encourage active participation in efforts to address addictions, identify issues and the related effects of addictions on individuals in the Permian Basin area.

Anyone who is interested is invited to attend the next meeting:

Midland college cheerleader recruiting season gets underway

By H.A. TUCK

This is recruiting season, not just for the athletic teams but also for the cheerleaders who perform at the basketball games. There's an orientation session Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Physical Education Building for any prospective cheerleader.

Any high school senior or college freshman is eligible to tryout.

Thursday's session, however, is mostly to explain the selection process, the help clinics prior to the try-outs, the judging, and the benefits. MC cheerleaders receive the equivalent of a $400 scholarship, payable at $50 per month for eight months. Candidates to become the college mascot, Pepe Paisano, also have tryouts. Final tryout for cheerleaders is scheduled on April 29, with mascot tryout on April 30.

Anyone interested should be at the orientation Thursday. More information is available in advance by calling sponsor Tommy Ramos at 685-4701.

WE HELP MAKE LIFE BEAUTIFUL AGAIN.

Let our trained fitters show you what makes Amoena breast forms and bras the most natural and comfortable post-surgery products you can buy. You'll discover the real measure of a breast form has nothing to do with its size.

Amoena confidently backs them with the industry's strongest guarantee.

The newest breast prosthesis "Amoena Affinity" attaches safely to your body and is ideal for active women and bare summer fashions.

Amoena Representative Barbara Dennett will be in our store from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on March 30 and 31 to show you this new breast form from our complete collection of post-mastectomy forms, bras, swimwear and sleepwear.

MIDLAND LAWYERS ARE BEHIND ROBIN MALONE SAMS.

" I try civil lawsuits throughout the Permian Basin before various judges. I know Robin Sams will be an effective judge in both civil and criminal cases."
JAD DAVIS, PARTNER - KEMP, SMITH, DUNCAN & HAMMOND

" In my opinion, Robin's extensive experience in the actual trial of cases merits her election as Judge of the 142nd District Court. I have full confidence she will be able to handle the legal issues that come before this court."
W.B. BROWDER, JR., PARTNER - STUBBEMAN, MCRAE, SEALY, LAUGHLIN & BROWDER, INC.

" The criminal caseload of Midland District Court is growing and takes up roughly half of a District Judge's time. With that in mind, my choice for District Judge is Robin Malone Sams; her expertise in criminal law and her record on jury trials will be the key to efficient docket management."
GREGG OWENS, PARTNER - BULLOCK, SCOTT, NEISIG & OWENS

"I believe Robin Sams is the best candidate for District Court Judge."
RUSSELL MALM, PRESIDENT - MIDLAND COUNTY YOUNG LAWYERS ASSOCIATION

"While I was President of Midland County Young Lawyers Association, Robin Sams was instrumental in creating Midland's Teen Court. Robin understands the public's need for justice."

Country roads lead to a luxurious home, one nestled on two acres of land, filled with contemporary luxury and convenience while graced with the exquisite touch of tradition. The front door opens to a polished tile entry. Straight ahead there's a sumptuous step-down formal living area. Pan ceilings extend the height of the already lofty 10-foot ceilings. To the right, a stately fireplace is set in the center of wall decorated with beautifully executed picture-frame paneling.

Behind the living room, French doors and windows open to an informal sitting area. The pitched roof boasts two skylights, sunlight reflects on the highly polished Mexican tile floor.

A left from the entryway leads to a gracious formal dining area. A wall full of windows and pan ceiling create the sense of light and height. Make another left and find a glorious kitchen. Rich blue and taupe floral paper, tile splashbacks and plant shelves lend it a touch of old-fashioned country warmth. The center island, office desk, Jennaire grill, built-in range, dishwasher, disposal all speak of efficiency and ease.

To the left again, find a large laundry area and door to the two-car garage.

A right from the entry leads first to a delightful sewing room. Dramatically decorated in black and white, with L-shaped built-in table, this sunny spot could easily serve as a computer room, hobby area, home office or study.

Next, find a three-quarter bath delightfully papered in a splendid shell motif, and, after that, a large bedroom with a dramatically pitched ceiling. Continuing down the hall, there's another bath. It boasts mirrored walls, built-ins and lots of storage space.

The hallway then turns to the left, and opens to the informal living area. On the other side of that lies a grand master bedroom, an enormous master bath complete with oval tub and access to the swimming pool.

Outdoor amenities include a spacious cabana, gazebo, mature landscaping, indoor grill, dog run, parking pad and sprinkler system. Inside there are ceiling fans throughout, insulated windows and indoor grill.

The home is being offered by Century 21/MidTex Real Estate for $149,000.

General Norman Schwarzkopf congratulates Ruth Young

General Norman Schwarzkopf congratulates Midland Realtor Ruth Young on winning the coveted Top of the Rock Award.

General Schwarzkopf congratulates Ruth Young of PRUDENTIAL Ruth Young, Realtors for winning three national awards from Prudential Real Estate Affiliates. The awards were presented at Prudential's fourth annual National Convention held in San Francisco.

Ms. Young received the distinctive, engraved "Top of the Rock" award, the top ten plaque award, the Chairman's Circle Award plaque, special lapel pins and 1,000 personalized marketing brochures and business card designations. In addition, her transportation to and lodgings in San Francisco were complementary, as was her registration at the convention.

"This was a very special honor because Prudential has over 24,000 sales associates nationwide and 1991 was a very good year for us," Ms. Young said. Prudential's network increased 7.6 percent over the previous year. This contrasts with a 7 percent decrease for the real estate industry.

Speakers at the four-day event included keynote speaker General Norman Schwarzkopf, gymnast Peter Vidmar and Rosita Perez, a top motivational and educational trainer in the housing industry. Entertainment was provided by Roberta Flack.

Prudential had a banner year in 1991. By the end of the year, the company had signed a total of 76 "new" corporate clients.

Prudential Relocation Management supplies domestic and international relocation services to nearly 400 companies and 30,000 transferring employees and their families each year. The average cost to relocate a home-owning family is $44,804 — down slightly from 1990.

Keeping abreast of changes in the real estate market is a goal of Ms. Young's. "I always spend a portion of my income on education and improving myself and my services," she said. "The real estate industry has changed more in the last two years than in the previous 10 years. Our image is determined by how the public perceives us as realtors and I always will be concerned, informed and honest."

"Nationally, we forecast a significant upswing in the national housing market in 1992. Figures just reported for February show a 9.3 percent increase, the highest in six years. This is because of lower interest rates, housing prices stabilizing, an election year and possibly positive tax changes," Ms. Young said.

Ms. Young also won top volume, top listing and top sales associate recognition from the Midland Association of Realtors for 1991.

"These are exciting times for people wanting to buy homes. Housing is now significantly more affordable that it's been in recent years," Ms. Young said. "Homes you might never have been able to afford in more pricey times are now yours for the asking. Relatively low interest rates and tax advantages of home ownership have encouraged move-up buyers and first-time buyer to purchase homes. There's never been a better time to buy and may never be one as great again. So call me. Dare to dream big."

Home buyers have option of individual legal representation

Paxton

Are you in the market to buy a new home? If so, you should be aware that you do have the choice of having someone legally represent you in the property transaction.

"Traditionally, most agents represents the seller, " says Pat Paxton, president of the Midland Association of Realtors. "In most cases the agent who works with a buyer to show a home also is legally representing the seller."

"In most property transactions this is a satisfactory arrangement for the buyer as well as the seller, and, in most cases, all parties are satisfied," Ms. Paxton said. "Also, these services are rendered free for the buyer."

As a buyer, however, you do have another option. There is growing popularity for a relationship called "buyer's brokerage" in which the buyer's agent agrees to solely represent the buyer. Generally this is in exchange for a commission, an hourly rate, or a fixed fee.

"This agreement can give peace of mind to some buyers," Ms. Paxton said. "Particularly first-time buyers who are unfamiliar with the process. Some of the services buyers can expect to receive include advice as to the offering price, negotiation for compensation for defects found during inspections and other related matters that are in the best interest of the buyer."

Keep in mind that entering into a traditional seller-represented relationship doesn't necessarily mean that you won't receive fair treatment and superior service. "Members of the Midland Association are bound to a code of ethics that requires they provide fair treatment to both the buyer and the seller, regardless of who their client is," Ms. Paxton said.

"Whether you choose to hire a buyer's agent or not, it is most important to be aware of the agency relationship," Ms. Paxton said. "Informed buyers are in a position to confidently make sound decisions regarding representation and that's in everybody's best interest."

The Midland Association of Realtors is one of more than 1,800 boards nationwide that comprise the National Association of Realtors, the nation's largest trade association and the voice for real estate.

Langston realtors Talk About. . . .

Defining 'normal' real estate market

Langston

We are sure that every Realtor in every conversation is asked, as we are, "What's happening in the real estate market?" Homes, after all, hold everyone's very high interest! Fortunately, we can generally say that the market is "good, busy, active, etc." We are encouraged by strong new construction activity, by some measure of appreciation in values, especially in newer areas, by multiple offers being tendered on some properties, and by the many contracts being written every week by our associates.

We would also describe today's market as one that is finally "in balance" after the "corrections" of the mid to late 1980s. A comparison of 1985's very abnormal market and today's more normal one show that.

- In 1985 — approximately 5,000 homes were offered for sale through MLS, but only a little over 1,200 sold.
- In 1991 — about half that number, or 2,450 homes, were offered for sale, but approximately the same number, 1,250 or so, sold! This 1,200 to 1,250 is, to us, a "normal" number of sales for Midland and when inventories are no more than double that amount, we've a market with a good balance of supply and demand.
- In 1985, an MLS book contained 92 new homes for sale, 20 of which had already gone into foreclosure and were being offered by the companies that financed the construction. Approximately one half of those remaining would eventually also go into foreclosure, leaving only about 35 that would eventually be sold by the builder.
- Today, our MLS book only contains approximately 35 new homes. This is, to us, again a figure that is "in balance" for sales of new construction in our market.

In summary — we do believe that today's residential market is good, balanced, normal because we have:

1. good ratios of buyer to sellers
2. lower interest rates, recently the lowest since 1973
3. strong building activity and good sales in new construction
4. steady growth in the city
5. a residential market that "bottomed out" more than two year ago and has remained steady and stable since that time.

And several recent sales in commercial indicate a strenghtening in that section, too. So, "What's happening in the real estate market" is good news for us all!

Rig Count

Above ZIADRILL making hole near Hobbs was one of only 89 rigs working in the Permian Basin last week. The rig count in the Permian Basin dropped six for the week of March 20, as the U.S. rig count set another record low falling from 649 to 643. Industry leaders say the low rig counts are indicative of a national disaster. Last week the national rig count dropped 11 rigs to 649 to hit a previous all time low, according to Baker-Hughes.

"It's another new low and it could be lower next week," says Ike Kerrige, who tracks the rig count.

IADC event

Barry Williamson, candidate for the Texas Railroad Commission, will be the featured speaker at the monthly chapter meeting of the International Association of Drilling Contractors, Tuesday April 7, at the Petroleum Club. Williamson, a former Midlander, will be discussing the state of the petroleum industry. The social hour begins at 5:30 p.m. with dinner to follow at 6:30 p.m.

Prices up

Oil prices this week went above the $19 mark. Oil prices were led largely by advances in natural gas prices, as May contracts opened at $1.37 boosted by cold weather and production cut backs. The perk in gas prices was the result of a cold snap in the midwest and is expected to be only temporary.

In the Permian Basin, postings continued to vary, as local crude buyers eliminate discounts.

There is uncertainty among producers, speculators and crude buyers as to what the move will mean.

WELL SERVICE TECHNOLOGY

Technical marriage results in new rig

■ Computerized engines and disc brakes make for state-of-the-art well service rig.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

Well servicing units are fairly simple and unsophisticated devices. There's a engine for power and a draw works for pulling and that's about it.

The concept and the basic technology has changed little over the years. When innovative change has come to the well service industry it has been usually been in the area of new power tools.

But when IRI International debuted its 300 series to the Permian Basin last week it married new innovations to the rig engine and the draw works, and marked the first significant change to rigs since the assist brake.

The new rig, built for R&H Well Service of Crane, brings together for the first time, IRI's 1287 disc brake system and Detroit Diesel's integrated electronic control system. The disc brake system is said to operate so easy that an operator can drop the blocks and crack an egg without crushing it, and the computerized engine system is said to save fuel, virtually eliminates the need for tune ups, and save on maintenance costs.

"This is without a doubt, the state of the art rig for the well servicing industry," said David Tonne, branch manager for Steward & Stevenson Power Inc. which married the innovations at its Odessa yard. "It marries disc brakes with computerized engine contol. It's a peanut butter and chocolate marriage in which each innovation in which each of the new technology packages highly compliments the other."

Steve Holifield Sr., president and C.E.O. of R&H Well Service calls it the rig of the 21st century, and the beginning of a new trend in well servicing. David Tonne agrees: "There is is a great deal of interest and a number of orders that are pending funding from other well service firms. This is state of the industry technology."

Cleon Shelton, senior engineer for IRI International in Pampa said disc brakes have been around for a long time, but this was the first time they had been applied to a draw works system.

In addition to increased control, Shelton said the disc brakes increased safety and reduced operator fatigue, rig weight and maintenance cost. "The brakes are easy to repair," he said. "We expect them to become the standard for the industry." Because they do not use asbestos bands, he says they are also environmentally friendly.

The disc brakes are the result of a joint venture between IRI International and Rexroth Pneumatics, in Lexington Kentucky.

Shelton said technology for the brake system, which does require some electronic assist, was not available until five years ago, and after that it took a great deal of research to make it adaptable to well service rigs. To date only three other rigs in the U.S. have the disc brake system, but the R&H rig built at the Odessa facility is the first in the nation to have both disc brakes and Detroit's electronic engine system.

Detroit Diesel's DDEC Control System, introduced in 1985, has been around for a number of years in the heavy truck market, but is relatively new to the well service industry. David Tonne says there are only about 35 rigs in the entire country using the new system which is reported to reduce fuel consumption by 25

Industry must act to curb oil exodus

■ Flight overseas will only make industry problems worse.

Staff Report

HOUSTON — "The energy industry's troubles will only get worse unless the United States acts quickly to stem the exodus of exploration and finds ways to reduce the nation's growing dependence on foreign sources of oil," says William A. Johnson, principal of Houston-based Jofree Corp.

"There has been a massive exodus from the U.S. by oil companies engaged in drilling and other exploration activity to other countries," Johnson said. "These companies are leaving the U.S. because American oil is relatively expensive to find and to produce and because the government has adopted policies that se-

D-Jax seeks better pump-off control

■ D-Jax Corp. of Midland hopes that building a better pump-off control box will bring the world to its door.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

A Midland firm is looking to export its technology overseas. Build a better mousetrap, the saying goes, and the world will beat a path to your door, but D-Jax Corp. is not waiting for the world to come to Midland.

Dee Mills founder of D-Jax is in the process of unveiling a new generation of pump-off control (Well Tender II) that he hopes will find acceptance in the overseas market. It is the fourth generation of the pump-off control which formed the basis of the company, which was founded in 1972.

Mills says the new controller, designed by himself and engineer Alton Teague will extend the life of the sucker rods and downhole pump. But until development and copyright actions are completed, he declined to go into further detail.

Presently, there are four prototypes of the Well Tender II in use, and the first production model went into service Friday. The control boxes are manufactured — assembled and burned with equipment provided by D-Jax — by KES Systems of Midland. D-Jax then post-burns, tests and programs the boxes for their customers.

The main upgrade on the control box is the liquid crystal display, which indicates varying speeds and changes as they occur, in seconds per stroke. The LCD display, software and keypad lets the operating parameters be changed and displayed as they're changed. The box also has diagnostic capabilities that tell the field man if the pump is gas-locked, the hand-off automatic (HOA) switch is in the wrong position or if there's a sensor problem. It also features D-Jax's patented start alert, a beeper that sounds for 10 seconds before the well starts back up.

Mills has designed his control boxes with the capability to detect both pump-off or fluid pound, a technique that utilizes the fact that all wells with sucker rods have two pumping speeds: One speed when the pump has a full barrel and a second, faster speed when it begins to pound fluid. The difference between the two speeds is used to calculate the delta factor that is stored in the computer memory.

Roughnecks facing a new world order

Pitts

Like many teenagers growing up in the oilpatch in the fifties, I roughnecked weekends and summers to buy school clothes.

The pay was $1.75 an hour, you drove your own car, on your own time, and bought your own gas to get to work. Sometimes work was 100 miles away, and 20 miles of it might be down caliche roads. The roads were rough, the work hard, the drillers tough and the weather unbearable. But it was a job — an honorable job.

For me it was also motivational. Roughnecking was all the incentive I ever needed for going to college. The thought of spending the rest of my life driving to a rig in the middle of nowhere, going to work at midnight, putting on greasy clothes, and spending the night on a monkey board with a cold north wind blowing up a greasy pant leg was pretty strong motivation for me to get an education so I could get an "inside" job. After roughnecking, my mom and dad never had to plead with me to go to college.

Now, with my office job, roughnecking seems a world away. No more oily gloves. No more looking down the road for the next crew. No more baloney sandwiches and cherry Kool Aid lunches for me. Still, I look back on those days with fondness. As much as I disliked roughnecking, I enjoyed the camaraderie and the satisfaction of putting in a hard day's work.

Today, most of my interaction as editor of the Oil Report is at the corporate level with presidents and owners of producing and operating companies. I know well their concerns about rig counts and drilling problems.

But, when I sat down to a one-on-one chat with a roughneck recently, I realized I knew little about the concerns, fears, gripes and delights of the roughneck of the 1990s. Somehow, I had assumed it was still, like it used to be. It is not.

In our candid discussion, Jack (that's not his real name) revealed to me a picture of a changing oilpatch. I promised not to reveal his name or his company to keep him out of trouble.

"The work is still hard and dangerous and the money is pretty good, but its not the oilpatch that I hear about from the old timers. It's not the oilpatch I thought I would find when I decided to break out," said Jack, who has not yet turned 30.

He continued: "I had heard that there was a strong work ethic, that those who work hard were appreciated and those who didn't were shown the road. You have to do something pretty bad to get run off a rig these days, and that has created a new breed of roughneck."

A humorous poster found on the walls of dog houses throughout the Basin tells "How to Spot the New Breed of Roughneck." They are the ones that ask such questions as: "When's the next break? Will we eat before we lay down pipe? What will we do tomorrow?"

Jack, who has been roughnecking for about four years, says roughnecking can be enjoyable if you can find a driller and crew with the oldtime work ethic. "There's still a few of the oldtimers around with that ethic, but not many."

Phillips head hits environmental regs

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Government regulations on domestic oil drilling are causing U.S. companies to spend more money overseas and could result in more oil imports, the head of Phillips Petroleum Co. said Monday.

"Government regulation, especially environmental regulation, hangs over this industry like Godzilla over Tokyo," C.J. Silas said at the National Petroleum Refiners Association's annual meeting in New Orleans.

His remarks were released by Phillips' headquarters in Bartlesville.

Silas, chairman and chief executive officer of the nation's 11th largest oil company, said environmental regulations will cost nearly $200 billion by the end of the decade.

"Unless something very different starts happening in Washington, the prospects are that the U.S. refining industry will grow even smaller in the '90s," Silas said.

EXODUS: Hurting industry

verely limit the amount of new exploration. Most important has been its refusal to allow further drilling on the North Slope of Alaska and in much of the Atlantic and Pacific. Outer Continental Shelves. The result is that the United States is becoming increasingly dependent on imported oil, and unless current U.S. policy is changed, this dependency will grow. We are now purchasing over 50 percent of our oil from abroad," Johnson said.

Johnson also pointed out that the U.S. natural gas industry is experiencing difficulty, but for entirely different reasons. "Instead of having too little natural gas, we have too much," he said. "There are major proven gas reserves in North America that are not being fully developed because producers are becoming discouraged by the continuing surplus of deliverability. Producers are finding other forms of investments that are more profitable that U.S. exploration and production."

Johnson said that natural gas is considered the premium fuel from an environmental, but not an economic standpoint. "Natural gas cannot be widely used as a transportation fuel at the present time," he noted. "Currently there are limited applications for compressed natural gas as a motor fuel."

Johnson said expanding the uses for natural gas would serve a dual purpose. "It would help strengthen natural gas markets, and if we could utilize natural gas as a transportation fuel, it would help alleviate our dependence on foreign oil."

One potentially rewarding policy for the U.S., according to Johnson, would be greater research and development to uncover more uses of natural gas that would help make natural gas a truly premium fuel.

CONTROL: D-Jax sets sights internationally

(From 1E)

Texaco, Chevron, Phillip, Union Oil Co. of California and Tom Brown Inc. There are now nearly 1,100 controllers in use, primarily in the Permian Basin.

Mills says the new Well Tender is ideally suited for wells in Mexico and South America, and will fly to Trinidad in April to look into a business deal.

Before starting D-Jax 20 years ago, Mills put in 20 years at Amerada Petroleum Co., now Amerada Hess Corp., beginning as a pumper and ending as a technician supervisor. He left, he said, because he wanted to run his own business.

"I joined the oil patch to get out of the cotton patch," he said. "The oil patch has given me the opportunity to make a decent living for my family and to do something with my ideas. All I've got going for me is my experience and I know from experience there's a better way."

At the back of his office is a Tandy computer hooked up by radio to a well operated by Prime Energy. He also has 35 Unocal wells in the Moss Unit hooked up to the computer and is about to add four more. There was also new Well Tender II hooked up to demonstrate its various capabilities. It was his nearly 47 years experience that made him smile at the remark that it was difficult to imagine wells being controlled by those two machines.

"I look at those readouts and I can just picture those pumpjacks working," he replied.

While he works to expand the customer base at the family-operated business — a son, son-in-law and brother-in-law work at D-Jax along with him and wife Billie — Mills' main goal is continue finding that better way with his products.

"I enjoy the end result," he said. "And if I do it well enough, the rewards will take care of themselves."

PITTS: The new roughneck

(From 1E)

He says the problem of keeping a full crew is the reason for the "new breed" of roughneck, and that on some rigs half the crew is having to carry the other half.

Jack says the situation spoils the incentive to work harder, and lowers productivity. "What's the incentive when you have lazy people making the same wage as you."

But he does not speak ill of the wages: "I can't fault the wage, where else could a guy with my education make $1,200 every two weeks. And, I don't fault the hard work. I like to work hard, but I don't like to see lazy people paid the same wage." He says he generally works 50 to 60 hours per week to make that $1,200 check in two weeks.

Neither does he like the prospects of being laid off eight to 10 weeks per year. Back when the patch was booming roughnecks would sometimes have to quit just to get a week off. Today they can count on two or three unwanted vacations a year.

"My wife works, and with unemployment, we are usually able to make it until the rig starts up again, but I just hate going to the unemployment office, and being lumped in with those who only work long enough to draw unemployment." Sometimes, he notes, he will find a part-time job to hold him over until the rig goes back to work.

"Our lifestyle is up and down. When I am working we are comfortable, when I am not roughnecking it is not so comfortable."

What, in his opinion, is the biggest problem with roughnecking today?

"I can't speak for anyone else, but with our company its letting the paper pushers run the rigs. The paper pushers have turned tool pushers into glorified radio operators and drillers into equipment operators. Few decisions are made by the people on the rig."

He said it created a dangerous political climate. "Nobody brings up problems, because nobody wants to hear about it. If you do point out a problem or a need, you are looked down upon. If the rig is not rigged up level and the blocks hit the monkey board, you just learn to keep your mouth shut. Everyone has become so cost conscious that it is becoming dangerous."

A roughneck, not Jack, wrote me a letter some time back. "To make a good hand today you have to be the first to blame someone else when something goes wrong," he said.

What is the best thing to happen to roughnecks in recent year? "Getting the dopers out of the oilpatch," said Jack. "It's a lot better place to work because of it."

One thing I learned from my chat with Jack: Good morale is as critical at the rig level as it is at the executive level — perhaps more so.

For all its danger and hard work, roughnecking was and is an honorable profession. It should never be forgotten that the noble roughneck is the primary link for making it all happen in the oilpatch.

Executives can plot, plan and deal, geologists can scheme and dream, landmen can hustle leases, but the oilpatch is not the oilpatch until hard-working roughnecks put on dirty clothes and wrestle iron to make an oil well. It is the only way anyone has ever found to make oil in the ground an asset, and the reason we still count rigs.

John Paul Pitts is business/oil editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

A mighty mound of round

Nearly 60,000 sections of 80-foot pipe were required to construct the 904-mile Kern River Gas Transmission Co. pipeline, which was the largest built in the U.S. in the past 10 years. With a capacity of 700 million cubic feet per day of natural gas, the $984 million pipeline becomes fully operational this month, linking Wyoming to Southern California. The project is a 50-50 joint venture of Houston-based Tenneco Inc. and The Williams Companies Inc. of Tulsa, Oklahoma.

Canada eases oil investment rules

N.Y. Times News Service

TORONTO — Canada's energy minister Wednesday announced rule changes that would make it easier for foreign investors to buy into Canada's oil and gas industry — a move that may be linked to the troubles of Olympia & York, the Toronto-based real estate giant.

Existing oil regulations, which hark back to nationalistic economic policies of the 1970s and early 1980s, prohibit foreigners from acquiring healthy oil and gas companies with assets of $5 million or more.

Because few companies are that small, the restrictions have effectively kept foreign money out of the industry.

The energy minister, Jake Epp, said the government was abolishing the outright prohibition and instead was setting thresholds at which foreign investment in oil would be reviewed. This is similar to the procedure that applies in other industrial sectors.

For investors from the United States, the level of asset value at which such examinations will be conducted is $150 million, the level that already applies to other industrial sectors under the three-year-old Canada-U.S. free trade agreement. Other foreign investors will be subject to review when the assets they seek are worth more than $5 million.

The liberalization, which has been sought for years by officials in the Alberta oil industry, would permit a company like Gulf Canada Ltd. to be bought by foreigners for the first time.

The Reichmann brothers, the owners of Olympia & York, the world's biggest real estate company, paid more than $3 billion for a 74 percent stake in Gulf in a diversification move in 1985.

If Olympia & York were able to sell Gulf today, the proceeds might go far toward relieving the cash squeeze in which the brothers — Albert, Paul and Ralph — have found themselves as a result of the recession in commercial real estate in London, New York and Toronto, the sites of most of their holdings.

Epp did not tie the policy change to the problems of Olympia & York. He made the announcement in a speech to a group of oil executives in Calgary, who enthusiastically welcomed the change.

He noted that other countries, including various republics of the former Soviet Union, Argentina and Venezuela had been liberalizing their investment policies to attract more foreign investment.

He also pointed out that by allowing foreign investors to become potential buyers of Canadian assets, "we will be directly increasing the prices which Canadian producers can obtain for their assets." This would improve the "fairness of our policies towards Canadian producers," he said, and also help in financing future oil and gas investments.

New threat posed for natural gas

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON – Even as U.S. natural gas producers are battling their worst slump ever, a blue-chip Washington consulting firm has come up with a new threat that could throw the business into another funk.

Washington Policy and Analysis, founded by two former top Department of Energy officials, is warning in a new report that the surge in natural gas demand predicted for the turn of the century could fizzle out.

The reason: a stingy federal budget for gas research and technology.

Scott Campbell, a partner in the consulting firm, said that unless government spending on natural gas research is doubled, the United States could lose its position as the world leader in the gas technology game.

"Natural gas has long been the stepchild of the federal bureaucracy," said Campbell, formerly the Energy Department's policy director. "As a result, it may be that all this gas we thought we were going to be using may not materialize."

Campbell said the department's current budget request for gas research is $108 million, compared to $2.5 billion for clean-coal technology.

The consultant said the government needs to begin spending at least $250 million a year for the gas industry to develop the technologies that will be needed to drive the predicted surge in consumption.

percent, increase engine life by 30 percent and reduce trip time by 20 percent.

"If you burn all the fuel you put in, you get more horsepower and better performance," says Tonne. Because the power load is balanced on all the cylinders, he says this results in a quieter engine and less vibration.

Tonne says the disc brake, computerized engine marriage will add about 10 percent to a $450,000 rig, but should help contractors to their work better, while saving time and money.

Now every one of our products— corrosion inhibitors, paraffin controllers, scale inhibitors, demulsifiers, biocides, water clarifiers and all the rest— comes labeled with a new product number* that reveals its function, solubility and potential hazard— important safety information.

Our safety in numbers program is widely useful. Include it in your training, for example, and it will help your employees understand proper chemical handling procedures of our products. This emphasis will reinforce the importance of alertness and awareness when applying production chemicals.

These informative numbers will also help you and your staff act quickly to protect people and the environment in case of a mishap. And, because the new product identification numbers are built around our original codes, they're easy to learn.

A brochure explaining the details and many benefits of this new system is available from your local Tretolite representative, or from the office below. Putting safety in numbers is one more example of the lengths we're going to at the Tretolite Division to help protect you, your employees and the environment.

Environmental regulations hit refining hard

HOUSTON – For more than 50 years, Farmland Industries churned out asphalt, diesel and gasoline at a small refinery snuggled in the rolling wheat fields and pastures of northern Kansas.

But last December, the plant near Phillipsburg, Kan., swallowed its last barrel of crude.

Slumping asphalt profits had squeezed the little refinery for more than a year, Farmland officials admit, but the plant had survived those cycles before. The coup de grace was a tangle of new clean air regulations that would have cost tens of millions of dollars to meet. Farmland decided to spend its money instead on its larger plant in southeast Kansas.

Farmland isn't alone. Those same regulations threaten perhaps dozens of other U.S. refiners, not just small ones like Farmland, but giants like Chevron, Amoco and Shell.

Industry experts estimate the clean air mandates passed by Congress more than a year ago will force the industry during the 1990s to shut down facilities that account for 10 percent to 15 percent of its crude-processing capacity – 1.5 million to 2 million barrels a day. Some facilities simply are too old or too inefficient to justify the cost of fixing them up.

"We've made it clear to lawmakers in Washington and elsewhere that without some relief, there could be some fairly vast casualties," said James Lopeman, president of the American Independent Refiners Association and president of Fletcher Oil & Refining Co., which owns a 30,000-barrel-a-day refinery in Carson, Calif.

Fletcher Oil may be one of those casualties if Lopeman can't line up $15 million fairly quickly to make the first round of required environmental improvements and restart the temporarily shuttered plant.

Various industry estimates peg the cost of unfolding clean air regulations for refiners at $20 billion to $50 billion industrywide over the next 10 years. Because the Environmental Protection Agency is still fleshing out guidelines set by Congress, the price tag is a moving target.

A gallon of "reformulated" gasoline brewed under the government's new, cleaner recipe is expected to cost refiners anywhere from 6 cents to 22 cents more to produce.

Consumers will pay for most of the increase, because there's no way refiners can swallow such costs by themselves. But refiners still may end up eating part of the increase.

The clean air bill will take its biggest toll on small, independent refiners, who typically have shallow pockets, leaner profit margins than the big refiners, and older plants that haven't gotten much environmental fix-up in the last 10 years, industry experts say.

According to the Department of Energy, about 14 percent of the 15.7 million barrels of daily refining capacity in the United States is housed at small refineries, or those that process 50,000 barrels a day or less.

But the deep-pocketed major oil companies also are feeling the pinch.

Chevron plans to shut down at least part of its biggest plant, located in Port Arthur, Texas. The company says it can't justify the more than $500 million it would take to keep the plant within compliance.

Amoco already shut down its Casper, Wyo., plant rather than spend $150 million – about five times the value of the plant – on clean air measures.

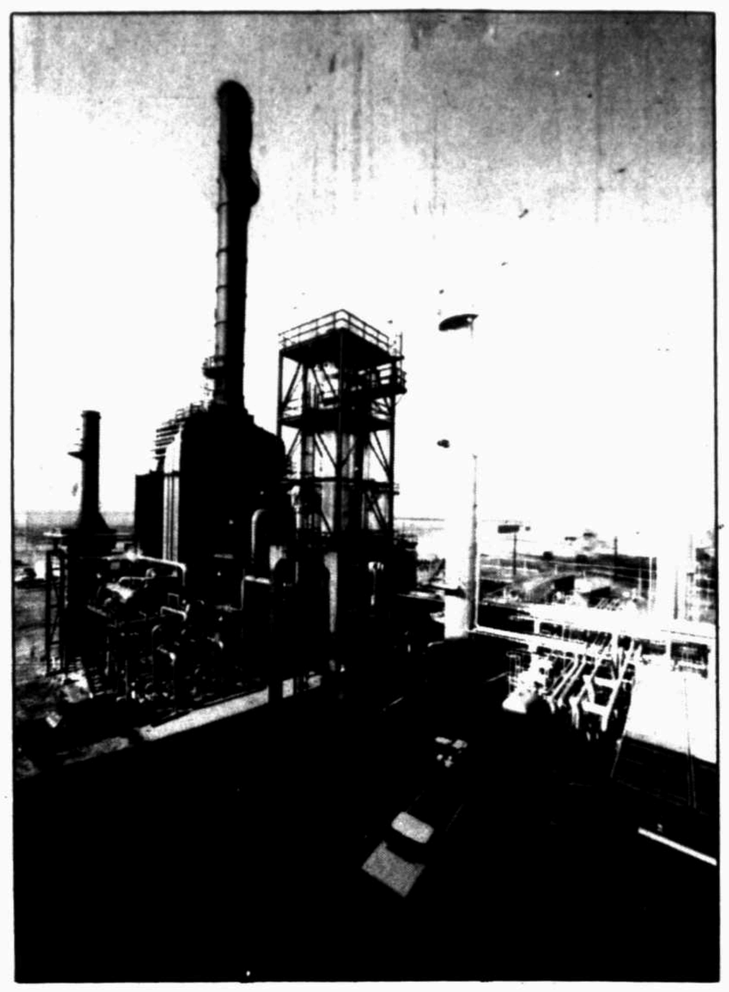
Shell sold the best units from its Los Angeles refinery to Unocal to avoid hundreds of millions of dollars in environmental outlays. Unocal plans to shut down about 110,000 barrels of its own capacity that needs some upgrading and integrate the choicest Shell units into its system.

By the end of 1993 alone, some 600,000 barrels a day of crude-processing capacity is expected to dry up under pressure from clean air regulations, said Guillermo Guariguata, vice president of Bonner & Moore Management Science, a Houston energy consulting firm.

Experts say the physical condition of refineries isn't the only thing that will determine whether the plants survive this new era of regulation. The supply of suitable crude, as well as the distance between the plant and its primary market, also are crucial.

If you're a refiner on the Gulf Coast, you can solve at least part of your environmental problem by switching to cleaner crude that arrives from other countries by tanker. But if you're in some inland rural outpost, you're stuck with what's produced locally, Guariguata said.

Amoco's 28,000-barrel-a-day Wyoming refinery is a good example. The plant already had several marks against it before the clean air requirements hit. Its supply of sweet crude – which is considered cleaner because it has less sulfur – was dwindling. In addition, the surplus of refining capacity in the Rockies and the Casper plant's location at the far end of the supply chain going into Denver already were sapping its competitiveness, said Dick Evans, Amoco's vice president for refining and engineering.



Environmental regulations are pushing more and more refineries to the breaking point.

In order to process sour, higher-sulfur crude from Wyoming, the company would have had to spend $50 million to $60 million on plant improvements to comply with clean air requirements. That was the death blow, Evans said.

Amoco also is trying to sell a slightly larger Salt Lake City refinery that is profitable but too far away from Amoco's retail market strongholds in the Midwest, East and South, Evans said. It would cost $150 million to fix up that plant, he said. The company would rather sell it and deploy the money elsewhere.

Every refiner/marketer in the country is scrutinizing the fitness of its refineries and crude supplies and the appetite of its marketing system to see if there are plants it could do without. Industry consultants believe more announcements are in the offing.

"Many of these refineries were only marginally competitive before," said Blake Eskew of Purvin & Gertz in Houston, an energy consulting firm. "It doesn't make much sense to invest a bunch of money in a plant that will continue to be only marginally competitive afterward."

Experts and industry executives disagree on the impact of the inevitable downsizing.

Charles J. DiBona, president of the American Petroleum Institute, claims strangling federal regulations will halt any construction here and will drive American plants and thousands of American jobs overseas, where regulations aren't as tough.

Others believe that's a bit dramatic.

California is the only place where expansion is forbidden, Purvin & Gertz's Eskew said. The Gulf Coast and inland refining centers remain open, and refiners eventually will expand more in those areas.

Several consultants doubt the shutdowns will lead to a big shortage of gasoline anytime soon, since just last month refiners were operating at less than 80 percent of their capacity, a reflection of weak demand and a weak U.S. economy.

But analysts expect the shutdowns to take up most of the slack in the industry within five years, driving up prices at the pump several cents a gallon.

Bonner & Moore's Guariguata predicts the shutdowns probably will put the industry back over the 90 percent utilization mark by 1995. Refining profit margins should improve enough by then to encourage plant expansions, he believes.

Eskew said the industry already is expanding, a point that often gets lost in some of the rhetoric. Koch Industries, for example, is doubling its Corpus Christi, Texas, plant capacity from 125,000 barrels a day to 250,000, he said.

While experts believe some little refiners will have a tough time making it in the 1990s, only a handful are conceding defeat.

Those with understanding bankers and gasoline customers are making the big outlays.

The National Cooperative Refinery Association, which runs a 75,000-barrel-a-day refinery in McPherson, Kan., borrowed most of the $130 million in environmentally related equipment it is installing.

"We and our bankers have to hope that the price of products in the future will allow us to recover these costs," said President Larry E. Williams.

You're lucky if you can get bank financing, Fletcher's Lopeman said.

Fletcher needs about $100 million to meet new standards that kick in between now and 1995. If Lopeman can't get the first $15 million he needs to meet an October 1993 dead line for cleaner diesel fuel, Fletcher will be out of business for good.

"We're borrowing at a time when the banks are hobbled by their own problems," he said. Bankers are hesitant to finance these projects be cause they're not convinced refiners can recoup all the extra costs from consumers. Bankers are worried about getting stuck with a messy pollution liability at an old plant if it goes under and they have to foreclose.

Louisiana-based Canal Refining, which processes 10,000 barrels a day at Church Point west of Lafayette and sells gasoline through its 50 retail stations, already has spent a bundle on environmental upgrades.

Executive Vice President Michael E. Mockley said he believes the company can meet the new EPA requirements without much more expense, because instead of using crude for its feedstock, Canal uses cleaner, sweet condensate from nearby gas fields. That takes care of the sulfur problem other refiners will face in making diesel, he said.

The only possible hitch Mockley sees is if Louisiana decides to require all gasoline sold in the state to be reformulated gasoline. Federal law is forcing only the nation's most polluted cities to switch to a gasoline formula concocted by the government, but Louisiana has the option of applying the reformulated gasoline rule to the entire state.

But for now gas stations in the rural Louisiana markets Canal serves don't have to sell the more costly reformulated gasoline that Canal does not produce.

"If Louisiana decides to opt in, we may have a problem. But we don't think it will," Mockley said.

Other refiners are improvising.

"We don't have the horsepower to play the gasoline and ultra-low-sulfur diesel game," said E.G. Schroeder, vice president and general manager of Laketon Refining Corp., which runs a 10,000-barrel-a-day refinery surrounded by corn fields and dairy pastures in Indiana. Asphalt is the plant's largest single product.

Laketon doesn't make finished gasoline, the product that will cost refiners the most in capital outlays to make by the mid-1990s. But Laketon does make diesel, one of the fuels targeted for cleanup under the air bill.

Schroeder said that rather than investing millions of dollars in equipment to make cleaner diesel, Laketon plans to switch to an even-more-sour crude feedstock that will produce more asphalt. Laketon hopes to sell its diesel in the "off-road" market, made up of farming and mining equipment users, where the fuel doesn't have to meet the tighter government specifications.

He admits the plan is a bit of a gamble. That market could get a little crowded, Schroeder concedes, if most of his competitors choose a similar strategy.

Oilfield finance conference set

WASHINGTON — David Rockefeller, retired chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank, and Allen E. Murray, chairman of the board, president and chief executive officer, Mobil Corporation, will be among the speakers at the American Petroleum Institute's annual Finance, Accounting and Information Systems Conference.

The conference will be held at The Williamsburg Inn and Lodge in Williamsburg, Va., from Sunday, June 7 to Tuesday, June 9.

Also scheduled to address the conference are Gail Fosler, chief economist of the Conference Board; Deryck Maugahan, chief operating officer of Salomon Brothers, Inc.; and Matthew Sagers, research economist for PlanEcon.

Additional speakers will be announced later.

Among the activities to be held are receptions on Sunday evening, June 7 and Monday evening, June 8; and general sessions on Monday morning, June 8 and Tuesday morning, June 9.

Some 400 oil company financial executives, representatives of the financial executives, representatives of the financial industry, academicians and government officials are expected to attend the conference.

The registration fee for API members is $350. For non-members it is $395. The fee for spouses is $135.

Reflecting the continuing sluggishness of the U.S. economy, the nation's oil refineries in February operated at their lowest level in almost five years, the American Petroleum Institute reported today.

According to API's Monthly Statistical Report, U.S. refineries operated at only 79.9 percent of reported capacity last month. By contrast, they operated at 84.4 percent of capacity in February 1991.

The API also reported that the level of total petroleum imports (crude oil plus petroleum products) – 6,888,000 b/d. However, API estimated that the trend in import requirements has been running substantially higher than that, at 7.7-7.8 million b/d.

Oklahoma sets oil and gas fine schedule

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The state Corporation Commission has approved a schedule of fines for oil and gas operations that violate environmental protection requirements.

Robert Fair, acting director of the commission's oil and gas conservation division, says the new rules set out how oil and gas operators should notify government agencies when violations occur in the field.

The proposed rules also allow such operations to be shut down for violating the rules.

Fines for violators would range from $1,000 to $5,000.

BLM plans new rules on appeals

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — The Bureau of Land Management is proposing new regulations that would allow oil and gas producers to drill on federal land while challenges to their drilling permits are considered.

The new regulations, effective immediately, say drilling that has been challenged in an administrative appeal does not have to stop while the appeal is pending unless the appellant can justify stopping it.

The agency says the rules are aimed at "unnecessary interruptions of legitimate oil and gas operations" and will put the situation back the way it was before an Interior Department Board of Land Appeals decision last October.

In that case, the Sierra Club and the Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance had appealed the BLM's approval of six drilling permits in Utah.

Before then, drilling had been allowed to continue while an appeal was considered. But in the Utah case, said Chun C. Wong of BLM's Billings office, the board overturned that policy.

Bartlesville braces for Phillips layoffs

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — When Phillips Petroleum Co. decided late last year it needed to become more lean, anxiety spread among the 5,200 employees in Bartlesville who wondered if their jobs were in jeopardy.

The company is cutting 950 jobs from its headquarters, and now the anxiety falls to Bartlesville, a city of about 35,000 where nearly everyone has some connection to Phillips and will feel the sting of layoffs.

"A lot of people eat, drink, sleep and have a good time here because of Phillips' payroll," said Bill Creel, president of the chamber of commerce and whose father worked for Phillips 70 years ago. "It's going to hurt. Absolutely, no question. It hurts."

Terrel Taylor, who owns a home construction company, said he last sold a house in July, about the time rumors began circulating that layoffs were in the works at Phillips.

"We've had lots of interest in these houses, but people won't make a decision," said Taylor, whose sister-in-law works for Phillips. "First of all they want to know if they have a job. And if they're not connected with Phillips, they want to see if the market collapses."

The manager of a car dealership says business has remained sound, but "I can't help but wonder if we've missed 20 or 100 potential customers."

Bartlesville is a Phillips town, a moniker to which some residents object but few complain.

Brothers L.E. and Frank Phillips set up a barber shop here before they hit pay dirt in the oil fields and founded the company in 1917 about an hour's drive north of Tulsa.

Now Phillips has revenues of nearly $14 billion and is the nation's 11th-largest oil company. More importantly to Bartlesville, it has an annual payroll of $214 million, making it the top revenue provider for city government.

So when Phillips announced in November it had hired a consulting company to help identify unnecessary jobs and eliminate the people who do them, Bartlesville braced for the worst.

Speculative home building virtually stopped, big-ticket item sales slowed and some business decisions were postponed.

Churches held 24-hour prayer vigils for Phillips workers whose jobs were threatened and others sure to feel the impact. Psychologists donated time at night for workers struggling with stress.

The final number announced Feb. 18 was 1,100 layoffs — 850 at headquarters in Bartlesville, 100 contract workers and 150 employees in Houston and at some field locations. The 850 employees began getting their pink slips March 2 and the task will be over by the end of the month.

Then the ripple effect begins.

City Manager Bob Metzinger is working on next year's budget, which he said undoubtedly will be very conservative.

Chamber president Creel said 950 layoffs will hurt the periphery people, the retail merchants, plumbers, "all sorts of people that keep a production worker going."

"They'll actually suffer more," Creel said. "Generally they're not making as much money. They won't have the severance pay, they won't have any medical coverage and nobody helps them find a job or write a resume."

How bad the town will suffer depends on how many Phillips workers leave town. Company spokesman Jere Smith doesn't expect to know for at least another month how many of the 850 will take early retirement, in which case they could stay in Bartlesville and continue to spend money there.

He also doesn't know the profile of the 850 workers, whether they can find work nearby or will have to leave Bartlesville, or if they have a spouse at Phillips who survived the layoffs.

These are things that leave the community in limbo.

"People between the ages of 35 and 54 consume the most goods," said Ken Byers, owner of Ken's Color TV Center. "If we lose them, it hurts."

"It does depend on the profile of people losing their jobs," said Mike Jackson, president of the Bartlesville Association of Realtors. "If they don't have a number of years with the company, they are faced with the more immediate need of moving than those with 15 or 18 years with the severance package."

Jackson estimates as many as 50 percent of the layoff victims will put their homes up for sale, which would double the inventory of homes on the market.

Phillips and Bartlesville have been through this routine before, only worse. The company laid off 1,111 workers from headquarters in 1986 following takeover attempts by Carl Icahn and T. Boone Pickens.

Byers, whose daughter is among the 850 to be laid off this time, once had five employees at his TV store in downtown Bartlesville. Since the 1986 layoffs, he and his wife have run the store by themselves.

"This is not the first time this has happened to Bartlesville," said Taylor, the construction worker. "It's not good, especially for the ones affected, but we have always survived."

Jackson said it took three years for the real estate industry to absorb the shock of the 1986 layoffs, and most agents were confident the market again would recover.

"We know it will be short term and then level back out," Jackson said. "The anticipation is maybe shortly there will be some minimal hiring."

Still, the country wasn't in the throes of a recession in 1986. And when discussing layoffs, Phillips officials emphasize the functions that are eliminated, not just the workers who are laid off.

"We said publicly that the company will not allow itself to get to the point where we were in the last few years," Smith said. "We are going to stay lean once we get there because the functions are going away.

"In the past we were laying off people and not functions. We're trying to prevent that."

Most businesses remain optimistic about the future. As one hardware store owner put it, they have no choice.

"I've got better things to do than worry about this," said Phil Sontag, who took over John's True Value Hardware Store after the 1986 layoffs. "We're busy now. In the summer months when things slow down, I'm sure we can attribute some of that to the layoffs, but you've just got to conform your business to the changes."

To soften the blow, Creel said the chamber has been recruiting new industries, such as plastics, which would be able to take advantage of a specialized workforce and be able to rub elbows with research and development people at Phillips.

Smith said company Chairman C.J. Silas would not comment on the layoffs until the workers were notified.

Creel said Silas, whom he described as a good friend, was taking it hard.

"It's never easy to lay somebody off. To look at the man, it's taking a toll," Creel said.

Despite the layoffs, he said Bartlesville will not dry up and blow away. And while he said it may take some time to absorb the loss of 950 jobs, "We'll eat 'em up. We'll be back. It's a lot better to see 80 percent stay than none of it stay."

"People come in and say this is a Phillips town," he said. "I say so what? Good. We're lucky."

Support offered to cope with layoffs

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — When soldiers were leaving home last year to fight in the Persian Gulf War, workbooks were made available to help children understand the sudden changes in their lives.

Connie Lavoie, director of the Washington County Association of Mental Health, saw the same need for children whose parents would be losing their jobs at Phillips Petroleum Co.

Before Phillips announced last month that it would eliminate 950 jobs from its payroll at headquarters in Bartlesville, Ms. Lavoie used a grant to buy 500 copies of a workbook called, "When a Parent Loses a Job."

"Some of it involves drawing, writing how they feel," Ms. Lavoie said. "It opens up the communication about the topic and allows the child to process his feelings. The parents have a way to get in there."

Other professionals in Bartlesville also offered support to Phillips employees, many of whom were unsure if their jobs would be eliminated.

Accountants offered free one-hour consultations to show employees how to deal with creditors, adjust spending habits and stretch a dollar if they have a severance package but no steady paycheck.

Psychologists offered free sessions with people who were struggling with the stress of possibly losing their jobs and dealing with subsequent pressures.

A community response team was formed in January and met every two weeks to discuss ways it could help soothe the hurt of 950 layoffs in a city of 35,000.

"There were people who needed help dealing with stress," said Bill Creel, president of the Bartlesville Chamber of Commerce.

He said Phillips set up a "stress relief" room at the Jane Phillips Episcopal Memorial Hospital, where employees could meet privately each night.

"There was a feeling some people would be afraid to go to a psychiatrist or a psychologist because somebody would laugh or something," Creel said. "This is on a very confidential basis. No records are kept, there's no charge. You call a number and they assign you a time."

The workbooks are designed for elementary school children and are available only upon parental request.

Roger Moyer, a psychologist for the school district, said there have been few noticeable changes in the behavior among students, which is what he expected.

"It's a little premature, even though the layoffs are going on now," he said. "If someone is laid off today, they're not going to panic because they will have the incentive package Phillips is offering. But I think we may get some delayed type of problems."

He has noticed a difference among grade levels. Juniors and seniors are concerned about whether they will be able to go to college, or if they will be eligible for loans, he said. Some juniors worry they will graduate at a high school in another city or another state.

Company gives Phillips workers new chance

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Bill Ruggles gave 38 years as an engineer to Phillips Petroleum Co. But when the company announced plans for massive layoffs six years ago, he knew he had to go.

Ruggles was one of hundreds who opted for early retirement in 1986, when Phillips cut its worldwide workforce by more than 2,000 to cope with slumping oil prices and a pair of devastating takeover attempts.

Now, as Phillips prepares to lay off 1,100 workers, Ruggles looks on with uncommon perspective. He is director at Service & Technology Corp., where dozens work who retired early or were laid off from Phillips.

His boss, K. Vasudevan — associates and employees call him "Vasu" — acquired Service & Technology in 1986 and headed a skeleton staff of 16. As Phillips' laid off workers in this city of 35,000, he quickly hired them.

Within months, former Phillips employees accounted for a third of the workers at the consulting company.

"I don't believe technology is anything exclusive to the United States," says Vasudevan, who emigrated from India in the 60s. "But experience is something that no other country had.

"With this early retirement, we were taking that experience and just pushing it down. I sent out letters through Phillips management saying anyone who would like to continue working, I would appreciate hearing from them.

"I heard from a lot."

Ruggles, 67, remembers his reaction when Phillips announced it would cut its workforce by 1,100, 850 at headquarters in Bartlesville, 100 contractors and 150 in Houston.

"It was a combination of sadness and concern," Ruggles says. "We have lots of friends there — personal friends, business friends. You just hate to see it happen to them and to the community.

"You regret it, but I recognize it's one of those necessary things. Unpleasant, but necessary."

Service & Technology operates from the former Lincoln Elementary school, where basketball nets still hang in what is now the drafting room. Vasudevan's office is carved from the old gymnasium; engineers work in classrooms.

Vasudevan concedes he benefited from Phillips' fiscal woes but says he wanted most to help workers left suddenly unemployed.

"It's a very painful and distasteful thing for me. We are eagles," Vasudevan says, alluding to the company's mascot. "I'm not a vulture. Our prosperity based on their demise is not even a thought that crossed my mind.

"It was totally the other way around — How can we help?"

Indeed, he offers a glimpse from his personal journal dated July 1986.

"On the day I signed the paychecks of 50 or more people, I look back on what is happening to me," he wrote. "The most important and the only thing that came up is that I, in some humble way, had something to do with helping these people maintain their jobs and families."

"Nothing else, including making money, even came to my mind," he says.

Phillips' current round of layoffs likely won't spark a hiring run at Service & Technology, Vasudevan says. The company will wait out the recession with its current staff.

A third-generation petroleum engineer, Ruggles accepted Vasudevan's offer to work six years ago almost immediately.

"One fellow put it, 'There's only so much golf you can play and so much TV you can watch. I found myself not even getting dressed until after lunch some days. I need to get back to work.' That was his response."

Tapping the experience of Phillips' engineers — especially unemployed ones — proved a boon to everyone, Vasudevan says.

"We're doing quite well. Let me put it this way: For a town of this size, we're a unique organization. We have at least a dozen people who would easily qualify as at least the best in the world at what they do."

Oxy faces $690 million in fines judge upholds

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Occidental Petroleum Corp. could face up to $690 million in penalties under provisions of a 1988 federal order upheld in Washington by an administrative law judge, the company said.

The order charges that Cities Service Co., an Occidental subsidiary now known as Oxy USA Inc., violated federal Department of Energy crude oil price controls in 1979 and 1980. Occidental bought Cities Service for $4 billion in 1982.

Occidental will contest the judge's recommendation when it is reviewed by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, probably in about nine months, Gerald Stern, the company's senior general counsel, said Tuesday.

If the commission accepts the recommendation, the company will pursue the matter in federal court, he said. The appeals process could last for several years, and there is the possibility the total penalty could grow because of accrued interest.

"We are convinced that we will be vindicated through the next steps in these proceedings," Stern said.

In 1988, the Energy Department ordered Oxy USA to pay $245 million in principal damages plus interest, claiming it overcharged customers for oil produced by older wells.

Phil Keif, a Department of Energy spokesman, said that the company charged $32 per barrel for oil that should have been $12 under price controls implemented in 1974. Those controls were in response to an oil embargo by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and lifted by President Reagan one week after he took office in January 1981.

Fight erupts over Colombian oil rights

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — The sons of a late military hero and a handful of aristocrats are battling the Colombian government for the rights to what may be the largest oil deposit found in the Americas since 1968.

Initial tests are revealing a veritable sea of petroleum beneath the rocky plains of the eastern Colombian state of Casanare. Industry executives estimate the reserve contains between 3 billion and 7 billion barrels of oil — which would make it the largest discovery since Alaska's 8 billion-barrel Prudhoe Bay.

"It is world class," said Andres Restrepo, president of the state-run oil company, Ecopetrol.

But a legal battle for the rights and a six-year rebel war against the oil industry are calming the euphoria.

Twelve families holding titles to the Cusiana field stand to earn about $1 billion in the coming decade if Colombia's highest court, the Council of State, decides in their favor.

They want 4 percent of the oil that's expected to gush from the Cusiana wells, although Ecopetrol says the Casanare families have no legitimate claim.

"They should never have been given titles to the land in the first place," Restrepo said.

Meanwhile, the National Liberation Army, a leftist insurgent group known by its Spanish acronym ELN, has threatened the industry in general for years, bombing oil targets and kidnapping employees since 1986.

Attacks on Colombia's oil pipeline have spilled about 35 million gallons of crude into rivers and jungle forests, roughly three times the amount lost in the 1989 Exxon Valdez disaster in Alaska.

Restrepo said the outcome of the court case would not affect the profits of the three foreign partners in the Cusiana field because the case only involves Ecopetrol's share.

The foreign partners, which together hold a 40 percent interest, are Triton Energy Corp. of Dallas, the French-based Total and British Petroleum PLC.

Several foreign investors revealed privately that they consider Cusiana to be the largest discovery in the Americas since Prudhoe Bay in 1968.

Five exploration wells have penetrated about 17,000 feet of solid rock, much deeper than in most fields. British Petroleum announced in January it would drill 10 more wells this year. It said it would drill its fifth well at the end of March.

The late Gen. Jorge Martinez was awarded much of Cusiana in 1920 for helping reclaim the region from squatters. The award also recognized his bravery in opposing a U.S.-supported uprising in Panama, once a Colombian province.

Martinez's sons and several other families, some of whom hold titles dating back to the colonial Spanish crown, say they were given "subsoil" rights to Cusiana in a long series of court and presidential decrees.

The Casanare families would earn $124 million a year at current prices if Colombia exported 500,000 barrels of Cusiana oil a day.

But the administration of President Cesar Gaviria cites legislation that declares Colombian subsoil belongs to the entire nation.

The Council of State is expected to rule on the claims this year.

Ironically, rebels who have been battling the state for three decades support Gaviria's claim. In a written communique, ELN commanders threatened armed action to prevent the families from taking a share of Cusiana, even if they win the court case.

But the rebels' tactics make them unwanted allies. Ecopetrol estimates their attacks over the years have cost the Colombian economy an estimated $700 million.

ELN commanders say they want to force the government to completely nationalize the oil industry and expel foreign investors.

The intensified rebel violence, along with a 27 percent decline in industry earnings, could have made 1991 a disastrous year for the oil industry.

Instead, the Cusiana find will make the year go down in oil history.

Board for Lease schedules sealed bid sale

The Board for Lease will hold a SEALED BID SALE of oil and gas leases on May 6, 1992, at 10:00 a.m. in Midland, at the Midland Hilton Hotel. The lease sale will be for the previously distributed list of tracts which are located on University Lands in Andrews, Gaines, Crane, Upton, Reagan, Crockett, Irion, Ward, Winkler and Pecos counties.

The applicable royalty rate for tracts in this sale is 25 percent; however, the Board for Lease has provided an opportunity to earn a reduction in the royalty rate. The 25 percent royalty will be reduced to 20 percent if production in the oil or gas in paying quantities is established within the first eighteen (18) months of the lease term. The 25 percent royalty will be reduced to 22.5% if production of oil or gas in paying quantities is established within the second eighteen months (1th-36th month) of the lease term. Texaco Chemical to acquire Hart Chemical

HOUSTON (AP) — Texaco Chemical Co. will acquire the business and assets of Hart Chemical Co. in Guelph, Ontario, Canada from National Starch Chemical Co., the companies announced.

Terms of the agreement were not disclosed.

Hart is a producer of specialty surfactants that sells its products to detergent, personal care, de-inking, mining, oil and gas and textiles markets.

The acquisition will help Texaco develop commodity and specialty surfactants into a broad market, said Turner Lewis, Texaco's vice president of specialty chemicals.

"The addition of Hart complements our surfactant strategy," Lewis said.

Oklahoma restricts natural gas production

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Gov. David Walters, describing it as a conservation measure, signed a bill Tuesday putting limits on the amount of natural gas that can be taken from Oklahoma wells.

Senate Bill 663 had been opposed by some major energy companies, which said it was an infringement on the free market process.

Sponsors of the plan said it was needed because one of the state's most precious resources was being drained because the market had been flooded with cheap gas. Oklahoma has a 12 percent share of the nation's natural gas

"The natural gas industry in Oklahoma is in an economic meltdown," Walters said. He said SB 663 was an effort to "bring some stability to an industry reeling from a lack of a coherent national energy policy."

The measure establishes a pro rata formula for production of natural gas. "This proration bill will help control the waste of a commodity against a seller's will," Walters said.

The governor said he spent several days considering whether to sign the bill and came to the conclusion that it was in the long-term interest of both producers and consumers.

"Both producers and consumers are best served by proration because it tends to stabilize the market and thereby restimulates exploration which is at an all-time low," Walters said.

He said a drain of resources would eventually lead to higher prices.

Sen. Kevin Easley, D-Tulsa, Senate author, said the number of oil and gas rigs producing in Oklahoma is down to 87, compared with a high of 870 a decade ago.

Easley and Rep. Larry Rice, D-Pryor, House author, contended the bill can be successful even if other energy states do not join Oklahoma in limiting the amount of natural gas that can be taken from any one well.

Walters said he decided to sign the bill despite an inclination against government interference in the energy market. He said federal regulations several years ago had done much damage to the gas industry.

IPAA picks Orlando for annual Midyear meeting

Staff Report

The Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA) will hold its 1992 Midyear Meeting May 6-9 at the Buena Vista Palace, in Orlando, Fla.

IPAA is the national trade association which represents the 8,000 plus independent oil and natural gas producers, most of whom are small businesses and family-owned, who produce 60 percent of the natural gas and 40 percent of the crude oil in this country.

The independent producers will convene in Orlando at a time when its industry is in crisis. The drilling rig count has hit an all-time low, natural gas prices have completely collapsed, oil imports cost the U.S. $65 billion last year, and the oil and gas industry has lost 317,000 jobs in the last decade.

At the Orlando meeting, industry leaders will plan a course of future direction, helping to insure, as IPAA maintains, that a healthy domestic oil and natural gas industry is essential to a healthy America.

Some of the confirmed speakers include: U.S. Senator Ted Stevens (R-Alaska), assistant Republican Leader in the Senate, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Chairman Marvin Allday, and Dr. Dixy Lee Ray, former Governor of Washington, ex-chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, and author of a current best seller, "Trashing the Planet."

Other invited speakers include President George Bush, Senator Lloyd Bentsen (D-Tx), Senator J. Bennett Johnson (D-La), Senator Connie Mack (R-Fla), Senator George J. Mitchell (D-Maine), the Senate Majority Leader, Senator Malcom Wallop (R-Montana), Rep. Bill Archer (R-Tx), Rep. Richard A. Gephardt (D-Mo), the House Majority Leader, Secretary of Energy James Watkins, and U.S. Trade Representative Carla A. Hills.

Once make is applied, the scar on Ruth Ann Rounsaville's cheek is not a noticable.

CAMOUFLAGE

TEXT BY ELIZABETH EDWIN PHOTOS BY JOE D. WILLIAMS

It's probably happened to you. In fact, just about everyone has at least one experience like it.

You know — that important day when you need everything to be just perfect and then out of nowhere a blemish appears on your face like a beacon in the night and it simply refuses to be toned down. Without a doubt, you know that everyone else is as aware of the blemish as you are, and you spend the rest of the day — or sometimes the week — knowing that your blemish is all anyone else can see when they look at you.

This can prove to be a somewhat traumatic time in a world where so much emphasis is placed on how a person looks. Magazine pages and television commercial are filled with "perfect" people, images to emulate. And of course — unless they are hawking a blemish removing product — not one pimple do they have.

While having a minor skin imperfection on occasion can be irritating, there are those who daily must deal with this problem on a much larger and more permanent scale: those who have skin imperfections such as a scar, a birth mark, vitiligo (a loss of pigmentation in the skin), a port wine stain or spider veins. These will not go away in a day, a week or even a year on their own, and only through expensive medical treatments can some of these imperfections be improved.

For Ruth Ann Rounsaville, a 17-year-old junior at Midland High School, a automobile accident that happened when she was 6 left her with a scar on her cheek that she says people still ask her about today.

"I remember everything about that day. I was in the back seat of our family car. I remember turning my head and seeing lights coming at me. The next thing I remember is my mom trying to get me out of the car,"

HAVE YOU HEARD?

Provisional class, actives introduced

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

The Junior League of Midland, Inc., introduced the resident 1992-93 provisional class and the new actives during a meeting Tuesday evening at Theatre Midland.

McKnight-Harrison

With "Tuesday Night at the Movies" as the theme, the members, who were joined by the sustainers for the special occasion, also had the opportunity to preview two new league videos.

One, entitled, "The Junior League — Making A Difference for Midland," was produced by the league's public relations committee, chaired by Vicki (Mrs. Mark) Leaverton. The second features the 1991-92 provisional class's project of installing a library at the Goode Beginning Child Care Center in South Midland.

DeLayne (Mrs. Mark) Wellen, admissions chairman, introduced the new provisionals: Mrs. Kurt (Vicki Roberts) Boley, Mrs. Barr (Christa Garlitz) Bolger, Mrs. Randy (Teresa Harris) Brown, Mrs. Steve (Elizabeth Gibson) Burleson, Mrs. Robert (Denise Timian) Burns, Ms. Christy Weber Cartwright, Mrs. Craig (Kendall Happy) Clark, Mrs. Roger (Judi Salas) Crawford, Heather Fairchild, Mrs. Patrick (Michelle Arbuckle) Gerald.

Also, Mrs. Phillip (Patricia Raine) Grice, Mrs. Murray (Sandra Russell) Hambrick, Mrs. Jim Craig (Dianne Godfrey) Hess, Mrs. Hal (Jill Ann Edwards) Hickey, Pamela Humes, Mrs. Jacque (Kristi Franklin) Hyatt, Mrs. H.W. (Susan Martin) Johnson III, Mrs. Ted (Julie Rickels) Jones, Mrs. Richard (Siri Duecker) Langston, Mrs. Michael (Candice Tull) McPherren, Mrs. Robert (Lyn Quarles) Oehsner.

In addition, Mrs. Scott (Monica Blair) Parkison, Mrs. Kevin (Cathy Lawson) Pearce, Mrs. Jim (Sheila Foy) Perryman, Mrs. Miles (Julia Collins) Prillaman, Mrs. William (Ellen King) Ramsey, Mrs. Christopher (Liz Malone) Rutter, Mrs. Jeff (Deann McAlpine) Salehi, Mrs. Grant (Tamara Smith) Schulz, Mrs. Mark (Susan Chalfant) Scott, Mrs. Eric (Nancy Pliszka) Sirgo, Mrs. Joe (Liz McNeel) Sloan, Mrs. Chip (Shelley Jowell) Smith.

And Mrs. Larry (Kathy Bradshaw) Smith, Mrs. Billy (Kim Estilette) Sneed, Mrs. Paul (Janice Hines) Speight, Mrs. Eric (Ann Alston) Spencer, Mrs. William (Pam Boudreaux) Steward, Mrs. Robert (Lisa Jolly) Sykes, Mrs. David (Carole Hillman) Wayland and Mrs. Steve (Karen Krueger) Wentworth.

Non-resident provisionals and their leagues are Mrs. Carlos (Jennifer Jackson) Balido, Dallas; Mrs. Larry (Andrea Neisig) Bates, Washington, D.C.; Mrs. Brent (Jill Leifeste) Bays, Oklahoma City; Katherine Boles, Dallas; Mrs. William (Laurie Tolbert) Borror, Greater Princeton, N.J.; Mrs. Robert (Margaret Anguish) Cobb, Dallas.

Also, Mrs. Leo (Paige Black) Grumulaitis, Houston; Mrs. Tom (Jane Sheffer) Harwell, North Harris County; Mrs. Greg (Allison Wisener) Haugland, North Harris County; Mrs. Lane (Patti Ford) Laning, San Antonio; Kathy Scott, Houston, and Tandee Thomas, New York City.

Leading the local young women through their year of training will be Paula (Mrs. Gary) Douglas, provisional chairman, and Nancy (Mrs. Alan) Meyers, assistant chairman.

"WITHOUT MUSIC, life would be a mistake," a quotation from the German philosopher, Friedrich Nietzche, was the thought for the day at the Midland Symphony Guild's recent luncheon meeting honoring patron members at the Plaza Club.

The quote also set the tone for the meeting, at which Nancy Jones, guild president, reported on the success of the "Save the Symphony" campaign. "The community response has been tremendous," she said. "It has not only raised money, but also awareness of the importance of the symphony in our lives and that of our children. We are able to finish the season and in addition, have already raised half the money needed to produce a season next year equal in quality to this year's."

Following the luncheon, which featured Chicken and Seafood Pasta, members enjoyed a fashion show by Robbie Casey's. "It's going to be a colorful spring," remarked one observer as models strolled among the tables in paintbox bright fashions.

From sportswear, styled for fun and comfort, to flattering and feminine eveningwear, the fashion show signaled a wide choice of styles and colors for a spring and summer wardrobe.

In visiting with Don Jaeger, conductor of the Midland-Odessa Symphony, we learned that he first visited Midland in 1962, coincidentally the same year the guild was founded. Playing first oboe in the Amarillo Symphony at the time, he never dreamed he would return here in 1989 to take over the conductor's baton.

In addition to Mr. Jaeger, special guests included Philip West, the symphony's general manager; Mary Harrington of Odessa, a board member of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale Association, and Billie (Mrs. J. Wilmont) Hunt and Harriet (Mrs. Harvey) Herd, founding members of the Midland guild. Additional charter members recognized were Margaret Cerf, Leona Bryant Smith and Dorothy (Mrs. Todd) Aaron.

MAKEUP: Cosmetic hides imperfections

(From 1F)

Miss Rounsaville said.

The car had been broadsided by a pickup truck. Upon impact, the back door window where Miss Rounsaville was sitting broke and the glass sliced her cheek from close to her ear down to the corner of her mouth.

"They said it was just hanging open, that the only thing holding my face together was the skin on the inside of my cheek," she said. "I remember tasting blood. I wasn't really scared, I was just really confused. When I saw the blood on my shirt, I got scared. There was this guy who had on a red shirt, and he took it off and put it on me.

"The ambulance was the best part. I thought that was really neat, but the blood was scary," Miss Rounsaville said.

When Dr. Terry Tubb, a Midland plastic surgeon, finished treating the 6 year old, she had 1,000 stitches in her face.

"Dr. Tubb was just wonderful," Miss Rounsaville said. "The scar used to have a deep ridge, so he sanded it. But considering how bad it was, it really looks great."

During her recovery, Miss Rounsaville said she encountered everything from people inquiring what had happened to those who would tease her and make jokes about her scar.

"When I was little, it really used to bother me," she said. "I'm only human; there were times I wanted to deck some of those people.

"My mom and dad would always tell me I was pretty, but I always thought, 'I am not, either.' But my parents were very supportive and they helped me keep a good self image. Now it doesn't really bother me so much," Miss Rounsaville said, adding that she doesn't even wear much makeup to school. "I just wear makeup when I'm getting dressed up. If people are going to like me, they're just going to have to like me the way I am," she said, almost as a testimonial to the healthy self image her family has helped her maintain.

BUT FOR THOSE days when she does want to dress up, or for others whose imperfections are more severe, a cosmetic designed specifically to camouflage skin imperfections offers advantages over regular types of makeup.

"Dermablend is the result of consulting and research with dermatologists and plastic surgeons to develop a makeup that is suitable for all skin tones and skin types. It is considered a breakthrough in the medical community," said Jean Stewart, a cosmetic consultant at Dunlap's, one of the two places in Midland where the product is available. "It is not really a makeup, but rather a cover for skin disfigurations. It will cover serious imperfections such as burns, scars, port wine birthmarks, vitiligo, just about anything."

Flori Roberts, CEO of Dermablend Corrective Cosmetics, said she discovered a need for this product after she had undergone surgery for skin cancer. She had severe scarring and wanted something to help hide the scars.

"When I went looking for a cosmetic product to conceal the scars, I found there was nothing on the market. This prompted me to research a niche in cosmetics that was missing," Ms. Roberts said in a written statement.

Dermablend is not the only cosmetic product offered to help conceal skin imperfections. However, there are many advantages with the Dermablend products. The first corrective makeups on the market offered coverage, but the result was a matted, cake finish. Dermablend products are formulated to offer a more natural-looking finished result.

CONCEALING MAKEUPS also were very difficult to find, very difficult to apply and expensive. The advantages of Dermablend are that the products are more widely distributed than most other cosmetic concealing products, are not any more expensive than other name brand cosmetics and can be applied in about the same time frame as normal cosmetics.

In Midland, Dermablend is available at Dunlap's in Dellwood Mall and Dillard's in Midland Park Mall.

An example of the products' cost, according to company suggestion, is $17 for a 1 ounce bottle of cover creme and $12 for a 1 ounce container of loose powder. Prices may vary at different stores. Dermablend Corrective Cosmetics are dermatologist tested and fragrance free, as well as waterproof and smudge-resistant. The art of concealing skin defects completely and naturally is called "camouflaging," a process that is said to be easy enough for anyone to learn.

"Camouflaging is a revolutionary new idea in cosmetics that conceals flaws with such precision that virtually every minor and major skin imperfection is hidden," Ms. Roberts said.

"Camouflaging is the technique I use most in my work with makeup," said Christina Smith, a Hollywood makeup pro and an Academy Award contender for her work in "Hook." "What most consumers don't understand is that you don't have to have a professional makeup artist to learn this skill. Dermablend is easy to use and with a little bit of experimentation — it can camouflage most skin imperfections, while making the wearers look and feel better about themselves."

WHILE ORDINARY lines of makeup are sufficient to cover small freckles and blemishes and even out skins tones, Dermablend is designed to cover imperfections of many types.

"The skin of a person with vitiligo is slick, like the skin of a scar, and it is very hard to get regular makeup to stay on the skin. This makeup is patted on, not rub on, and will stay on this type of skin," Ms. Stewart said.

While camouflage makeup is effective, the application process is easy to learn. The most important aspect of camouflaging makeup is to select the proper shade that most closely matches your skin tone. The match test should be done on the area to be covered because the skin tone of your hand may differ from that of your face. If the perfect shade is not among those cover cremes available, two shades can be blended to create the perfect shade.

Using a small spatula, you simply put a small amount of makeup in the palm of your hand and rub it with your fingers to warm the product. The makeup is then applied with a dab and pat motion.

"You pat it on, never rub, always pat," Ms. Stewart said.

Then blend the edges with a wedge-shaped sponge to achieve a natural, smooth finish. "You can use the makeup just for area coverage as long as it is blended well, or it can be used as if it were your base," Ms. Stewart said. "You want it to look as natural as possible."

The makeup is then set with a powder, available in loose and compact form.

This woman's port wine birthmark is camouflaged by a corrective makeup designed for skin imperfections.

Even vitiligo, as seen on this woman's face and hands, can be camouflaged by Dermablend Corrective Cosmetics.

Then you apply your regular makeup as normal.

"You should use powdered makeups for best results, such as powder blushes and eye shadows," Ms. Stewart said. "This product doesn't really take any longer to apply once you learn how, it's just a little harder to use than a normal base. There are cosmetic consultants available in the store (Dunlap's) to teach you how to use this product."

ONE PRODUCT Ms. Stewart said is very popular is the Chromatone Plus Fade Creme with sunscreen. "It is a really good fade creme. It gradually lightens dark spots and it has a sunscreen in it. It doesn't leave a greasy feeling."

For scarred areas, Dermablend information advises using one shade darker than the skin tone, as scar tissue usually has a loss of pigment. Scar tissue also has no pores, therefore, the makeup has a consistency to help it adhere to the skin.

To level slightly indented scars, the company says to apply camouflage makeup with a stiff brush, dabbing and patting the area — as opposed to smoothing, which will cause streaking. Repeat these steps until an even surface is created. Finish with a setting powder to keep the look all day.

If your problem is less serious than a scar, such as under-eye circles or bags under the eyes, camouflaging can work to help conceal them as well.

For under-eye circles, choose a cover creme that is one or two shades lighter than your actual skin tone. Never use a white color as it will give you a raccoon look. Try applying a cover creme to the skin on the inside corners of the eye area near the bridge of the nose to aid in lightening dark eye circles.

If eye bags are your problem, the worst thing to do is apply a light colored concealment creme to these puffy areas. Light colors highlight flaws rather than hide them. Instead, use a shade darker than your skin tone just below the sagging area and use a dash of highlight to bring eye area outward, not downward.

DEMABLEND PROFESSIONALS also offered the following tricks of the trade:

- For the most natural makeup application, use white lights, halogen lighting or daylight. Makeup mirrors and fluorescent lighting can distort skin tone coloring.
- Blending is the key to successful camouflaging on large areas. For a nice smooth finish, apply cover creme and use a dry, wedge-shaped makeup sponge to evenly blend makeup on face and neck. Use fingertips to lightly dab area and then pat to set in place.
- To camouflage very dark areas on light skin such as age spots, use a lighter color cover creme as a primer, then conceal the imperfection with the correct skin tone shade to achieve a natural finish.
- Use a light, non-greasy moisturizer before applying camouflage products. A moisturizer will help prepare and smooth the skin so that products apply easily.
- Camouflage products are much more than ordinary concealers. They can be used daily as a foundation — for uneven or blotchy skin tones and even to soften freckles.
- Don't overdo camouflage makeup; camouflaging is only effective if you can't see the camouflage makeup.
- Camouflage makeup can be used to cover tan lives, strap marks and sun spots.

Other products such as moisturizer, leg and body cover creme (for any area of the body except the face), cleanser, Quick-Fix for eyes, fade creme and brush-on bronzer are available in the Dermablend brand.

Some cosmetics can irritate skin

N.Y. Times News Service

Bad reactions to cosmetics, like redness, itching and irritation, are relatively rare. Still, for every million sales of such products, there are about 210 reactions requiring a doctor's care. A study by the Food and Drug Administration and the North American Contact Dermatitis Group found that the worst offenders are skin bleaches, creams, lotions, hair dyes, permanents and makeup. If you have a bad reaction:

- Discontinue use of all cosmetics in the affected area. A 0.5 percent hydrocortisone cream can be used several times a day to relieve itching. If the reaction doesn't clear up in 7 to 10 days, see a dermatologist.
- Call or write the manufacturer. In most cases, purchase price will be refunded. Write to the nearest district office of the FDA and send a duplicate of the complaint to the agency's Division of Colors and Cosmetics, 200 C St. SW, Washington, D.C. 20204.
- If you don't know which product or products caused the problem, test the ones you use, first singly and then, if you don't get the reaction, together. To test, put a small amount of cosmetic on a forearm and wait 24 hours. Test products together if you normally use them together.

The Freeman home, located at 2308 Boyd, has been transformed from its original state to a designers' showcase. The designers — as well as owners — are Rusty and Andrea Freeman, owners of Russell L. Freeman and Associates, Interior Design.

The remodeling of the home started in 1988. "We left the main portion of the house intact and built around the original architecture," Mrs. Freeman said. The carport was transformed into a den and playroom area, the master bedroom was converted into a hallway and a portion of the master bath, a new master bedroom was added on, and the original master bath was converted into a bath for the couple's sons. "We ripped out the entire kitchen and started over," she added.

Attention is paid to every detail in the Freeman home.

The completed transformation created a home that allows easy flow from one area to another.

Hues of rose, teal and blue are used throughout the home's decor. Brick floors grace the entry way, breakfast room and kitchen.

Upon entering the Freeman home, visitors see the open dining and living area. Large windows that flank the brick fireplace and skylights in the living room offer beautiful natural lighting during the day, while indirect lighting spotlights the room after dark. Rose-colored carpeting and teal painted walls complement the shades in the upholstered furniture. The dining room, directly to the left of the entry, is beautifully decorated in matching shades to the living area.

Attention to detail, such as the same fabric being used for the dining room curtains as is used to upholster the dining chairs, can be seen in every room of this home. Some other decorated touches to look for include the covered light switches, finishes on table tops throughout the house and the variety of curtain ties used.

From this open living area, the kitchen, laundry room, breakfast room and den/playroom are to the left, while the bedrooms and baths are to the right.

The kitchen features blanched wood cabinets accented by black and white checked wallpaper with matching curtains. The laundry room is neatly tucked behind the kitchen.

From the kitchen, the breakfast area leads the way to the den/playroom, which is where the Freemans spend much of their family time. This room forms a cozy setting with custom built-in shelving filled with books and knickknacks, a fireplace and overstuffed furniture. A wall of paned windows gives a feeling of the outdoors and offers a view of the patio and backyard.

Computer virus takes its toll

By Erma Bombeck

Being a hypochondriac of some stature, I called my big-shot computer son in Los Angeles to tell him my computer gave new meaning to the word "terminal."

Bombeck

"What are you saying, Mom?" he asked.

"I am saying that the Michelangelo virus that struck a few weeks ago has taken its toll, and it's only a matter of time."

"What's a matter of time? You've never used your computer," he said tiredly. "How could it possibly have a virus?"

"So, do you have to play basketball to get a torn hamstring? I'm telling you the computer is dead."

"Have you been practicing safe softwear?" he asked.

"Speak English!" I demanded.

"Have you shared a floppy disk with anyone whose softwear could have been infected?"

"I don't think so."

"When was the last time you used your computer?" he asked.

"It's been a while."

"How long?"

"I've only had it four years. I'm still setting it up."

"You're worrying over nothing."

"You call my almost losing Grandma's family recipe for cabbage rolls almost nothing? Lucky I didn't enter it in the computer. Actually, I called to say I don't feel so good myself."

"What's the matter?"

"I don't know. I can't seem to store anything in my memory, and the other day I started to work and everything went to black. I think I've caught something."

"Mom, you can't catch a computer virus."

"You told me I couldn't die from jet lag, but you almost lost me five years ago coming home from Japan."

I hung up before he told me to "get a life" as he usually does.

People born in the computer age can't fully appreciate what it's like to live in a foreign world of technology that buzzes and beeps when you make a mistake, blinks at you when you don't know what for, and talks to you in a language you cannot begin to understand. They have no compassion.

Here I am sick as a dog from a virus and can't get well until I can explain what I've got and where it hurts. I left a message on his answering machine if he should call and I don't answer: I'm resting uncomfortably.

Old, new technologies combined

SEVILLE, Spain (AP) — Modern computer technology will combine with ancient Arab techniques to keep visitors comfortable at the site of Expo '92 in Seville, where summer temperatures sometimes hit 110 degrees Fahrenheit.

Controlling the heat has tested the ingenuity of Spaniards for centuries, and the Arab conquerors of Spain in the 8th century were particularly adept at engineering climate relief through strategically placed fountains, shade and vegetation.

Such traditional Arab principles have been adopted for Expo '92, officials say, in the planting of 25,000 trees and 300,000 plants at the site, along with thoroughfares shaded by plant-covered pergolas and surrounded by streams, fountains and cascading "water walls."

These steps have been supplemented by micronizers in the pergolas and trees that create an ultra-fine mist to cool the surrounding air, with cooling towers along some avenues doing the same on a larger scale.

bedroom wing. A variation of blue, teal and rose hues continues the interior designers' scheme throughout this area as well. The home features a guest bedroom, a girl's bedroom with bath across the hall for their daughter Caroline, 7, the boy's bedroom and their own bath for their sons Jordan, 6, and Caroline's twin brother Kevin, 7.

Caroline's room is pretty in pink, accented with touches of purple, blue and green in a floral pattern. Where built-in shelving once filled a nook in the room, now isthe perfect space for her day bed, situated between two closets. Her bath features padded, fabric-covered walls with accented cording borders.

The boys' room — decorated mostly in shades of blue — features couch-style twin beds with a custom corner table and bolsters, with matching border wall paper and sponge-painted walls. The boys' bath originally was in the master bedroom. What is now recessed shelving in the bath was a window, before the Freemans began their remodeling.

In the wide hall area leading to the master bedroom, visitors can view the Freeman family at many stages through the family pictures and portraits that hang on the walls.

The four-poster Oriental canopy bed dominates the master bedroom. Separate his-and-hers bath areas flank the bed, with individual closets for each within the bath area. The sponge-painted walls and fabric-corded borders add the finishing touches. The desk in the master bedroom is one of the few antiques in this home. Be sure to notice the collections of rabbits in the hutch of the desk and elsewhere throughout the house.

Mrs. Freeman described her family's home as "a combination of two homes put together and added to," which has resulted in a home that creates a feeling of comfort with elegance.

DEAR ABBY

Commitment to sharing is legacy of Jay Phillips

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: If he had lived just a few weeks longer, on March 22, Mr. Jay Phillips would have celebrated his 94th birthday. Jay Phillips was my beloved father-in-law. What follows is an edited version of his obituary, published in the Minneapolis Star-Tribune:

Van Buren

"Jay Phillips, 93, patriarch of the Phillips family and founder of the Ed Phillips and Sons Liquor distributing firm in Minneapolis, who began his business career selling newspapers for a penny apiece and ended up a legend in philanthropy, died Wednesday at Desert Hospital in Palm Springs, Calif.

"Phillips and his wife of 74 years, Rose, left Minneapolis for Palm Springs and planned to return April 1. He fell ill in early February and died shortly after noon on Feb. 26, apparently of congestive heart failure, said his son, Morton, husband of advice columnist Abigail Van Buren.

"Jay Phillips was president of the Phillips Foundation, which donated many millions of dollars to cultural, civic, medical and educational causes.

"Phillips laid the financial foundation for Mount Sinai Hospital, the first hospital in the Twin Cities with Jewish doctors on its staff. He set up the John Najarian chair in surgery at the University of Minnesota, and helped finance one of its main medical buildings, the Phillips-Wangensteen Building, to honor his friend, Dr. Owen Wangensteen. He was instrumental in starting the Albert Einstein College of Medicine at Yeshiva University in New York.

"He helped establish the Jewish-Christian Learning Center at the University of St. Thomas in St. Paul, and endowed a chair of Jewish Studies at St. John's University in Collegeville, Minn.

"Phillips was honored last May for a million-dollar gift to the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum being built in Washington, D.C. That gift culminated Phillips' lifelong dedication to sharing his wealth.

"Phillips was 2½ years old when he came to the United States with his family from Russia. By the time he was 7, he was selling newspapers, making 50 to 80 cents a day to take home to his family. But he never went home without stopping at a bakery to buy day-old bread for the poor and hungry men he saw on the street.

"Thomas P. Cook, a longtime friend, said, 'The amount of charity in his heart was unbelievable.'

"He was a major contributor in establishing Courage Center in Golden Valley, Minn., rehabilitation centers for persons with physical disabilities — as well as the Westside Center for Independent Living in Los Angeles, Calif. His philanthropic emphasis on the handicapped was prompted by his daughter, the late Helen Levin, who was a quadriplegic as a result of polio.

"A few years ago, a reporter asked Phillips why he chose a career that earned him millions of dollars and then turned around and give it away. Jay Phillips replied, 'I don't like the word "give," — I say, "share." A hairline separates people who make good and people who don't — and those who make it should help the ones who don't, because they are the custodians of worldly goods, not the owners.' "

So, Dear Readers, whatever fame and glory I have achieved as "Dear Abby" must take a backseat to the pride I have in being a Phillips. Thank you, Morton, for marrying me in 1939.

Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy. It's all in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." Alamo second in popularity

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The Alamo has been bumped from its ranking as the top tourist spot in Texas for short-term American visitors, a survey says.

For the first time in recent memory, the Alamo finished second to Big Bend National Park in the annual Texas Department of Transportation Auto Visitor Survey. The survey covered December 1991 through February 1992 and was based on 10,000 questionnaires completed by short-term visitors, or people who visit the state for less than a month.

Big Bend National Park received 23.8 percent of the survey vote, and the Alamo 23.2 percent, said Milton Meharg, the transportation department's director of travel services.

"We can't remember when the Alamo wasn't No. 1. The staff's been scratching its head trying to figure this out and finally came up with a theory," Meharg said.

"There was heavy rain in San Antonio during the survey period and many people didn't get to visit the Alamo, while better weather allowed slightly more people to visit Big Bend in West Texas and push it into first place," he said.

The Daughters of the Republic of Texas, who manage the Alamo, acknowledged bad weather cut attendance, but said visitors are returning and the Alamo should regain the top position.

The Alamo retained its No. 1 ranking among international short-term visitors with 43.2 percent. Big Bend was second with 20.5 percent, and NASA's Johnson Space Center was third.

Hoe still useful tool for home gardeners

By Deborah A. Benge

Weeds can be just as big a problem for the home gardener as they are for the commercial farmer or rancher. They cause exactly the same problems by competing with desirable plants for water, soil nutrients, light and air. They can also harbor many different insects and diseases.

Benge

In spite of the tremendous advances that have been made in weed control, hand hoeing is still the best answer. It is inexpensive, selective, extremely accurate, effective and for some, even enjoyable. To many gardeners, a great deal of emotional satisfaction can come from leaning on a hoe handle while viewing a clean, freshly-hoed row where weeds stood only moments before. A fair amount of hand pulling is usually necessary close to the base of garden plants. Some damage may occur to garden vegetables if weeds are allowed to get too big before they are pulled. Other alternatives to hand hoeing the garden are the use of mulches and herbicides.

Mulching controls weeds and grasses by keeping light away from the seedlings and providing a physical barrier to their emergence. Mulching works best against weeds that come up from seed each year. Weeds that are able to come through the mulch are easily spotted and can be removed by pulling.

What can be used as a mulching material in home gardens? Good mulching materials include compost, straw, leaves, hay, sawdust, wood shavings, bark, newspapers and plastic sheeting. Black polyethylene film (1½ mil) has been used in gardens for many years and is still one of the most popular synthetic materials available.

Care should be taken with all mulches, particularly with plastic sheeting, to have the soil moist before applying. While straw, leaves or other organic materials can be raked back in order to feed and water the plants, plastic sheeting is more or less permanent once applied. It is usually best to apply most of the fertilizer required by the plant before the plastic is applied. Some gardeners roll the plastic back from the edge of the beds toward the center of the row in order to supply additional fertilizer and water.

When organic mulches are used, they should be applied after the soil temperature has warmed up in spring. If an organic mulch is applied to cool, moist soil, the soil temperature will rise more slowly, resulting in slower growth of most vegetables. When organic material is used, it often has a tendency to cause nitrogen deficiency in plants growing through it. Microorganisms, such as soil fungi and bacteria involved in the process of decaying the organic material, utilize the soil nitrogen, thus reducing the amount available to nearby plants. This is specially true when materials such as sawdust or rice hulls are used. Applications of additional nitrogen fertilizer can help overcome the problem.

The third alternative available is the use of chemical herbicides. At present, herbicides have limited value in home vegetable gardening. While such chemicals work well in single crop situations, it is difficult to employ them where a wide assortment of vegetables occupies a rather limited space. There is also the problem of evenly applying relatively small amounts of the chemical to the garden surface. Miscalculation or miscalibration of garden equipment can result in overtreatment and problems in the future. Being selective, herbicides may work well with some crops but may damage more sensitive crops.

Herbicides are generally applied at the time of planting or after vegetables have emerged. Application methods must be followed carefully and only the correct amount should be used. Dacthal is a herbicide currently available under various names which, when properly used, can result in satisfactory weed control under most conditions. Dacthal is generally applied to the surface of the garden soil after planting and acts as a pre-emergence herbicide. Gardeners should make certain that the chemical is labelled and recommended for use on the garden crops that they intend to plant. Other herbicides might be utilized in the garden by grouping the vegetable according to tolerance to the chemical and diligently following all label precautions.

The use of chemical weed control in Texas home gardens can best be described as risky. Chemical weed control is still perhaps too sophisticated for the average gardener to use safely. Perhaps in the future chemicals will be developed which will have safe tolerance and broad corp usage. Until that time, the long-handled hoe is still the best method.

Pecan Grafting Clinic will be presented 4:30 p.m. April 16 at the Charles Green home orchard in Midland.

Deborah Benge is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

TRAVEL

Vacations in Europe can be very affordable

By Jennifer Merin
Associated Press

NEW YORK — If you think a European vacation will bust your travel budget, think again. You can maximize your travel dollars so you can afford to go abroad.

Your choice of destinations is one factor in determining costs. Portugal and Greece, for example, are somewhat less expensive than France and Switzerland. But if your heart is set on Paris or Zurich, you can stretch your greenbacks to cover expenses.

In fact, if you economize effectively on trans-Atlantic tickets, inter-European travel between cities and/or countries, sightseeing, lodging and meals, you'll discover that European vacations need be no more expensive than those in the United States.

FOR BEST trans-Atlantic air fares, comparison shop airline special sale prices and ask trustworthy travel agents about discount ticket availability.

"You have to pay attention to Sunday travel sections and should work with travel agents who keep on top of these things," says Marva Nelson of Main Line Travel in Minneapolis (800-950-1952). "We buy from consolidators who purchase blocks of airline seats at discounted prices, and we pass along lower fares to our clients. But sometimes airlines offer specials that beat consolidator prices."

Currently, Swissair's (800-221-4750) roundtrip tickets between New York, Chicago or Boston and Geneva or Zurich for $584 (tickets must be purchased by April 30; are valid May 1 to Sept. 30) are excellent value. Icelandair's (800-223-5500) roundtrip from New York to Luxembourg for $508 (travel from April 1 to June 10) is hard to beat, especially because that fare includes free shuttle service to Stuttgart, Cologne, Dusseldorf and three other cities. Or two people travelling together can opt for free use of a car with unlimited miles for one week. Or Icelandair passengers can purchase discounted train tickets to Paris ($62 round trip) or Zurich ($88 round trip). Additionally, Reykjavik stopover packages covering ground transfer, hotel with breakfast and a half-day city tour can be purchased for $52 for one night or $83 for two nights.

Meanwhile, consolidators are offering roundtrip tickets on American Airlines from Minneapolis to London for $857 (regular price is $996) and Minneapolis to Frankfurt for $980 (regular price is $1,060), for travel after June 14. Be on the lookout for new offers made constantly.

FOR GROUND transportation in Europe, Icelandair's free car deal is terrific, and other airlines and tour companies offer affordable fly/drive plans.

But if you don't want to drive overseas, try Europe's efficient, reliable and clean trains for getting around. Eurailpass (800-722-7151) offers a wide variety of Europe-wide programs ranging from a $280 pass good for five days of travel within a 15-day period to a $1,150 pass good for daily travel during a three-month period. There are also individual country passes, Eastern Europe passes and a pass that combines four days of rail travel with three days of car use within a 21-day period ($269 per person for two, $439 for one person). Eurailpass provides you with train schedules and a booklet listing regular ticket prices so you can calculate savings.

Cut local transportation and sightseeing costs with passes ranging from daily or weekly bus, trolley or underground tickets to comprehensive sightseeing cards.

For example, for $15, Holland's Leisure Card assures 10 to 45 percent discounts on various tourist amenities, including specified hotels, ground transportation and air fares within the Netherlands, sightseeing tours, shopping, entertainment and restaurants. For $39, Holland Leisure Card Plus also gives free admission to 375 museums throughout the Netherlands.

Day or week-long transit passes for bus, trolley and underground are also cost-cutters.

Note that most comprehensive tourist passes, local transit and Eurailpasses and fly/drive plans must be purchased before you leave the U.S.

FOR AFFORDABLE accommodations, bed and breakfast establishments are less expensive than large hotels, and they allow you to get to know locals and see how they live. Get listings from national tourist offices before leaving the U.S. When you arrive at your destination, visit several to see which most appeals to you.

It's difficult to book bed and breakfasts in advance (unless you've stayed there before and know the owners), but listings of numerous additional establishments posted at city and regional tourists offices assure you places to stay, even during peak season.

Britain's bed and breakfast network is especially accommodating. British Tourist Authority spokesman Bedford Pace says "There's rarely a shortage of rooms and local tourist offices will even phone ahead to your next stop to find you a place." Nightly rates start at about $30 per person, breakfasts are substantial enough to last all day and English-speaking hosts offer information on local sites and insight into local lore.

If you can't bear the uncertainty of last minute arrangements, make reservations at a small hotel. Also listed with national tourist offices, these are less expensive, often more personable than larger establishments and usually include breakfast in the room rate.

FOR AFFORDABLE meals, eat a hearty breakfast, then ask hosts or concierge about restaurants where locals eat. Most restaurants offer daily menus with several courses covered by one price, usually $8 to $12 for lunch or $16 to $20 for dinner. Or shop at a grocery for fresh bread, cold cuts cheese and fruit for a picnic.

HARDIN COUNTY — In Hardin County, the 1992 tourist season will open with Flash Days, when tourists can "flash" identification, proving they are from out of the county, and receive discounts or free gifts from participating businesses and attractions. Flash Days will be Saturdays from April 11-June 6.

Hardin County, land of the dancing cypress and center of the Big Thicket, is home of Village Creek State Park and Big Thicket National Preserve.

In the cypress swamps of the Neches River, according to legend, high water causes the great cypress trees, anchored in the soft swamp by shallow roots and knees, to float in a stately dance.

In addition to dancing trees, other memorable sights of the Big Thicket include mysterious swamplights, plants that eat insects and tales of hidden treasure.

Visitors can take tour boat rides down the river, go on guided wilderness tours, canoe trek in the creeks or go camping, fishing, backroad biking, birdwatching and hiking. Amateur theater productions, rodeo and auto racing also will be included.

For more information write Hardin County Tourist Bureau, P.O. Box 8801, Lumberton, Texas 77711 or call 1-800-835-0343.

Del Rio plans 'Fool's Fling'

Staff Report

DEL RIO — The Del Rio Host Lion's Club will present its annual April Fool's Fling beginning 8 a.m. April 4, on Highway 90 west between Eagle Lumber and Plaza Apartments.

Co-sponsored by Southwest Texas Coors, the fling will be a family event, complete with games for adults and children. T-ball hitting and baseball throwing events, egg and spoon races and, especially for children, the greased pig scramble will be part of the free children's games presented.

For adults, events will include goat milking contest, tug-o-war, orange bump, obstacle course and dunking booth.

Champion goat cookers from Texas and Mexico will compete for "Best in the West."

Barbecue goat dinners will be available to the public, so attendees will be able to taste the same delicacy that the judges do.

Proceeds will benefit several charities, including scholarships for Del Rio High School students, funds to help children go to Texas Crippled Children's Camp, eyeglasses for the needy and seeing-eye dogs for the blind.

Booklet gives tips on growing healthy lawn

Staff Report

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Fertilizer Institute has released a 12-page booklet on lawn care entitled "Healthy Turf, Healthy Earth."

The booklet examines the important contributions a healthy lawn makes to a clean environment, including air purification, erosion control, oxygen generation and nutrient absorption. It also explains the role of fertilizer in feeding a healthy lawn and the different types of fertilizer from whcih a homeowner can choose.

"Each spring there is a great deal of public attention given to the role of lawn care products and the environment," said TFI president Gary D. Myeres. "This booklet explains the many environmental benefits of using fertilizer to maintain a healthy lawn. A beautiful lawn is not only enjoyable, it is also good for the earth."

Copies of "Healthy Turf, Healthy Earth" are available for $1.25 plus shipping charges from the Fertilizer Institute, 501 Second St. N.E., Washington, D.C., 20002. A 10 percent discount will apply to orders of over 100 brochures.

"BANDAID"
HYSTERECTOMY
"In practice for life"
Hysterectomy remains one of the most common surgical procedures in the United States. Approximately two-thirds of these procedures are performed through an abdominal incision, increasing the pain after surgery and delaying a woman's return to normal activity. The most common reasons for the abdominal over the vaginal approach are a large uterus, a need to visualize or remove the ovaries, or suspected pelvic scar tissue.
A new procedure called laparoscopically assisted vaginal hysterectomy (LAVH) combines the principles of "bandaid surgery" and vaginal hysterectomy to eliminate the need for a large abdominal scar and shorten the recovery period and hospital stay. Two or three one-half inch incisions are made on the abdomen and special staples or sutures are used to disconnect the ovaries and main blood vessels to the uterus. The rest of the procedure is done through the vagina. LAVH will not entirely replace the need for abdominal surgery but represents an important advance in modern women's health care.
If you or someone you love are considering surgery, contact our office without obligation for more information on LAVH.

Helpful thoughts on preplanning

Make it easier for those you love...

- Preplanned information is more accurate.
- Preplanning can reflect your expressed wishes.
- Your loved ones can be relieved of a burden at a stressful time.
- It eliminates the financial burden of a funeral for your family.
- It can protect the cost of the funeral from inflation.
- Preplanning offers flexibility - so if you move, you can easiliy transfer your arrangements.

Many individuals and families are making the decision to prearrange their funerals. The advantages make sense. Because of the number and types of programs available today to provide prearranged funerals, it is wise to make an appointment with a good funeral planning professional who can provide the answers you need. Below are a few general guidelines to keep in mind.

If you are going to make a good choice when you prearrange your funeral you need to: know what you want; how much you can afford to pay; if guarantees are provided on merchandise and services; what happens if you move and want to change funeral homes; the tax consequences of fund-ing arrangements, if any and if you are protected against inflation.

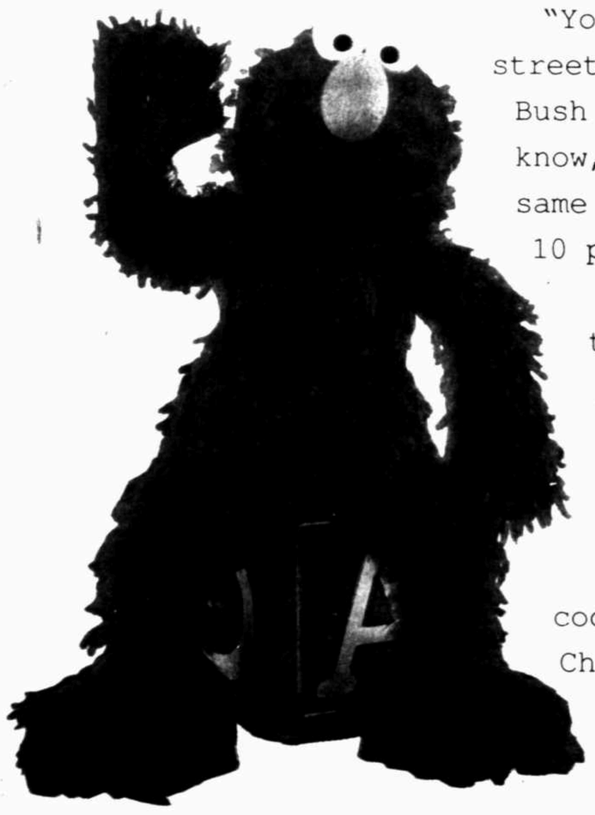
More Canadians can identify Sesame Street's Big Bird than President George Bush.

At least that's what actor Paul Holly, who plays Big Bird in Sesame Street Live, discovered in 1990 when he was on the Canadian tour with the live stage production.



"You could walk up to 10 people on the streets in Canada and ask them who George Bush was, and seven of the 10 would know," Holly said. "You could ask the same 10 people who Big Bird was, and all 10 people would know."

"Big Bird and the ABC's" comes to Midland's Chaparral Center for performances Tuesday and Wednesday.

Now in its 12th season, Sesame Street Live is presented by the VEE Corp. in cooperation with Children's Television Workshop.

"It's a very entertaining show," Holly said. "It's the best fun for all of us onstage because not only are the children up singing and dancing along with us, the adults are having as much fun. The smiles are just as big on their faces as they are on the children.

"When you see them and talk with them after the show, they are going, 'Well, my child loved this' and 'My child loved that.' You know that they are talking about the parts of the show that they really enjoyed."

Paula Babb Cox, right, and Martha Rae's work is on display at Gallery 1114 through April 2.

Retracing her Art

The childhood gift former Odessan Paula Babb Cox had for drawing became the greatest obstacle she had to overcome to become an artist.

"I was the kid in elementary school that could draw well," Ms. Babb Cox said. "I got to do lots of special projects and it gave me lots of self-esteem. It also ended up hurting me later on because, in my particular case, I always was representational in my work. I had to look at something to draw it. I could copy other artists' work out of magazines and out of books.

"When I went off to college and got involved in my first real art classes, I didn't know anything about composition or color, really your basic art, because I had relied so heavily on other people's work. All I did was transfer it to another sheet. I wasn't making any decisions. I had to relearn all of that."

During her undergraduate days at the University of Arkansas, Ms. Babb Cox, who is the daughter of Odessans Gene and Jackson Babb, was forced to develop an ability to make artistic decisions.

"It was very difficult because it affected the end result of my work. Since I was having to make the composition decisions and all the decisions myself, my work was really weak. It took years plus good teachers."

One teacher was Pam Price at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin — the university Ms. Babb Cox went to after she and her husband moved back to Odessa.

"I credit UTPB and specifically Pam Price, the instructor there, with bringing me full fold into the art world."

Her purpose at UTPB was she said, "To get the things I needed to get a job in art —

BIRD: Playing character is like being rock star

(From 1G)

Holly, an actor from New York City, is originally from Lewisburg, Tenn. What encouraged him to audition for the live Sesame Street production two years ago was, he said, "I had known people who had worked for Vee Corp. before, and they had told me what a wonderful job this was and how much they enjoyed touring."

The 6-foot, 2-inch tall Holly said he knew at the auditions he was being considered for Big Bird. But, being considered does not mean being hired.

"I was thrilled," he said, speaking of his reaction to being offered the job of Big Bird.

"It's an honor in one respect, and it's also a challenge because I have to be exactly like the Big Bird on television. This is a character that's been 20 years developing and my talent is to be as close to what he has created as I can."

Holly compares playing Big Bird to being a well-known rock star.

"I play to 7,000, 8,000, 9,000 children, and the first thing they all do when I walk out on stage is scream. It's like being a rock star for children in a rock concert for children. It's fun."

Playing Big Bird has its advantages that most rock stars miss.

"The anonymity is nice," Holly said."We can take our costumes off and go out the stage door and no one knows who we are. They may say, 'Oh, you're with the show' because we have our Sesame Street jackets on, but it's not like wearing a Big Bird costume out in public."

Since Holly plays Big Bird, he is in the areana most of the times he wears the costume. The other characters, who Holly said,"can get through doors a little better," do public appearances outside the arena or stage area. Holly does have the opportunity to meet kids one-on-one backstage.

"I meet a lot of Make-a-Wish Foundation kids," Holly said. "This experience is 'almost indescribable.' "

"They are meeting someone they have watched on television. Someone they know. I get to experience it as the character. I'm sometimes glad I have the costume on so they don't see the tears in my eyes."

Being a part of the Sesame Street Live cast can have its drawbacks. Holly laughed as he recalled an experience that happened to his cousin, former Midlander Thomas Green. His cousin, who recently moved to Houston, went to see the show when it was there.

"We have a number in the show with Cookie Monster where he pulls someone up on stage and he embarrasses them by teaching them how to dance. If we know someone in the audience, we usually tell Cookie Monster.

"He choose my cousin. I didn't tell him my cousin was there. I'm looking through the wing, and I'm seeing my cousin getting embarrassed. Of course, I heard about it afterwards."

Although the Sesame Street Live production is a 48-week tour, he calls playing Big Bird " a dream job."

"I wish everyone could experience a job in their lifetimes that fulfilled all of their artistic needs and all of their basic needs. I don't think everyone gets a chance in their career to have a job like that. I know how lucky I am."

Holly, who took piano and dance lessons when he was young, has been performing since he was a child. Throughout his school years, he was involved in drama.

Then, when he was a junior in high school, he began contemplating his career choices. He was certain he wanted a career in the performing arts.

"So I began driving to Nashville and studying with a professional coach," Holly said. These lessons helped him make up his mind. He began looking for a state college with a good reputation in theater.

"I went to Florida State University," Holly said."It had the reputation as one of the best state school theater departments in the country. I made the choice to go there, and grew up over four years learning what I needed to learn."

When he graduated, he headed for New York City. While there, he landed work in films, commercials, live theater and television.

Then, disenchantment set in. Holly returned to Tennessee.

"I thought about a career change," Holly said, adding that he spent the next two years as a social worker assigned to job training mentally retarded adults.

"It's a very fulfilling type of work," Holly said,"It was such a wonderful growing experience."

He only had one problem.

"The performing bug just didn't leave, and over those two years I learned so much about me working as a social worker, I decided to try it again."

Within eight months of returning to New York City, he landed the job of Big Bird.

One of two sons, he is the only actor in his family. In fact, his older brother is a doctor.

"My mother loves to laugh," Holly said."Her big joke is, she says, 'have one son to heal me and another to entertain me.' "

ART: Work reflects artist's changing progressions

(From 1G)

teaching or commercial art."

When Ms. Babb Cox taught high school art, she saw students who had the same problem she was forced to overcome to be an artist.

"Some of our gifted kids will give up and that's it. That's the end of art for them. They'll go back and they'll rely on their copying, and they'll never venture out and do original work because they don't think they're any good at it. They've reached such a level of skill by copying, but they have a hard time duplicating that skill in their original work, and it's difficult for them to understand."

Ms. Babb Cox has learned that patience and perseverance are required to make the leap from copying others work to creating original works. She tried to instill that in her students. She also knows now in hindsight that her own personal life experience with art caused her to hold back when it came to encouraging her students.

Now the mother of a 14-year-old son and a 10-year-old daughter, Ms. Babb Cox said, "I can't imagine sending them off without more instruction, more information" about how to survive in life than she received.

She tells young people today, "Only be an artist if you have to. That's really the only reason I'm an artist. I have to be. I've always got an urge, something to say, always dealing with a way to get it out."

Ms. Babb Cox no longer is a public school teacher. Since moving to Leakey around seven years ago, she has been a full time artist. She does few commissions. Most of her work is the result of what she wants to paint, not what someone wants her to paint.

A showing of Ms. Babb Cox's current work is hanging at Gallery 1114, 1114 N. Big Spring St., through April 2 along with ceramics by Marsha Rae. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 to 5 Sunday.

The two artists met through a class at the Hill County Arts Foundation in Ingram.

"She's got a spiritual, mystical sense that comes through her work," Ms. Babb Cox said of Ms. Raye's work.

Ms. Babb Cox has acquired an interest in folk art and in Mexican religious art.

"I like mysticism," said the 38-year old artist. "Some of these new paintings are cemetery paintings. The reason I think I'm interested in them is because of their religious symbolism, like the cross and the madonna."

Her interest in having an outlet for her work in the Midland-Odessa area has encouraged her to remain her membership in Gallery 1114, a co-operative artists gallery.

"They're not afraid to show different kinds of art. They show an alternative, an alternative to what's considered mainstream. A good quality contemporary gallery in your area is an outlet for individuality. It can be a launching pad for emerging artists. It's like a stepping stone."

Ms. Babb Cox added, "There's nothing wrong with mainstream as long as you're allowed to go beyond it. Not everybody's pushed to go beyond it; not everybody wants to go beyond mainstream.

"I like to go beyond it somewhat. I like to push myself. I like to experiment."

Billy Dean plays his country music from the heart

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

People, mostly women, began leaving their seats to come and stand in front of the stage. Many were waving handkerchiefs. "This is a good town. They like us here," Billy Dean said he thought to himself while he sang the words to his No. 1 hit, "Somewhere in my Broken Heart." Then, as he turned around, he saw his reflection.

"My face was covered in blood," he said. "I was in a medical town, Rochester, Minn. All the people down front were nurses. My band members began throwing me towels. I had hundreds of bandages thrown up on stage. I just did my best to get through the show. I just made a comment for the people. I said, 'I like to bleed for my audience.' Boy, they really liked that."

When Dean saw the blood, he knew what had happened. "I knew I hit my head; I wasn't really aware that I was bleeding. I had just finished 'Only the Wind' and I was changing my guitar, when I hit my forehead on the edge of the guitar," he said recalling the accident as the most embarrassing thing that's ever happened to him.

"I don't embarrass too easily. All of a sudden, I was no longer Billy Dean the singer. I was just an embarrassed little boy."

When Dean brings his country charm to Midland's Chaparral Center Thursday as the opening act for Wyonna Judd, he hopes for a less eventful evening. The night is a special one for Miss Judd as well as for Dean. For her, the concert will mark her first as a single act. For him, it's his birthday.

"I will be 30 years old," he said. adding, "That's a secret. I guess that's my biggest secret that night."

Dean, who is originally from Quincy, Fla., learned to play a guitar while still in grade school. By the time he was 15, he was writing his own songs. When it came to selecting a career, Dean felt he had two choices."There's no way on earth that I could be a pencil pusher or a nine to five job worker. My choices were either to farm which I did for about four years each summer or perform."

As for farming Dean said, "It was a rewarding job and I enjoyed it. It's real hard physical work so I thought, 'Man, I'm not going to do that the rest of my life.' I thought, 'I've either got to make a lot of money so I can just kick back and play, or I'm going to have to just kick back and play anyway without the money.' I would have gone down to the beach and been a sailor or something adventurous, but I decided I could do one thing really well and that was play music. And it just so happened it paid pretty good. It wasn't a steady job. It came here and there."

Dean made the decision to pursue a career in the music business before he was a senior in high school. He got his professional start playing weekends in his father's band. He also spent time working as a solo act in the clubs around the panhandle of Florida and along the beach.

"I just decided that I was going to give it a shot and I was never going to quit," Dean said. "I figured I would never need anything to fall back on. I wouldn't need anything like a business degree or anything like that because I just wouldn't give up until I became successful. Then 10 years after I moved to Nashville, everything started happening for me. Last year, of course, we had a really wonderful year touring with The Judds and having hit records," Dean said adding that his 1992 began with several music award nominations including a Grammy. Recently he accepted an award that he described as "close to me."

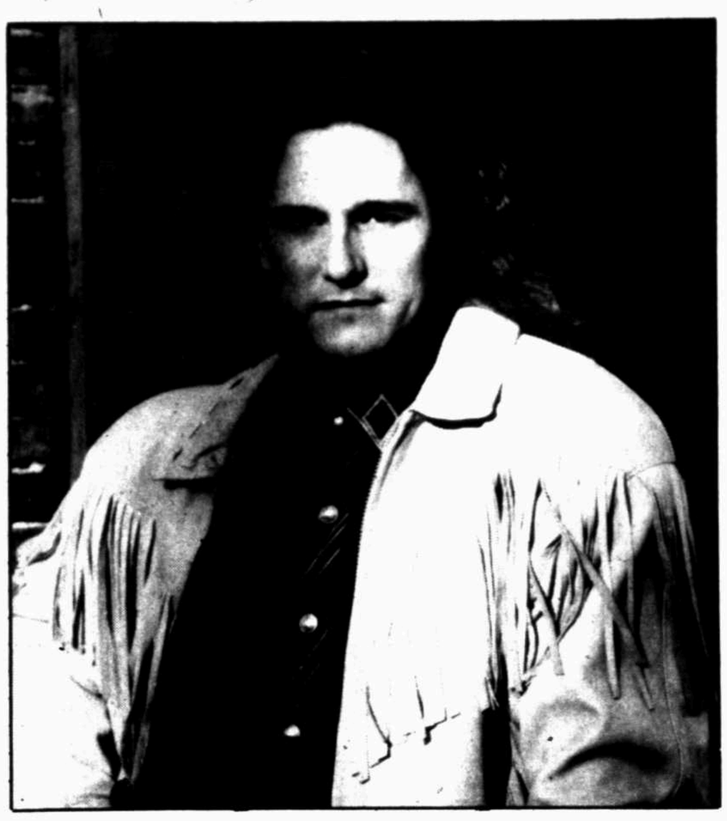
The award Dean described was the National Songwriters Association — an achievement award by songwriters for songs "that they wish they'd have written." Dean's hit "Somewhere In My Broken Heart" won three awards including Song of the Year.

"That song I cowrote with a buddy of mine, Richard Lee. Being voted something like that by your peers is, I guess, to me is the ultimate award.'

Dean attributes his success to three specific things. "I had learned all I could learn from the people around where I grew up. I learned from the best guitar player there. And I sang with some of the best singers there. It was time to move on and try to further my education in the music business, or in the writing industry. Just moving to Nashville was a big thing. From that point on I think what advanced me was the willingness to listen and learn and being patient. And that you have a good personality is important. Talent is just a portion of it."

Dean, who signed his record contract with Capitol Nashville also stressed patience. "I could have had a record deal two or three times a few years ago and for some reason or another it wasn't right. The right people weren't involved; it wasn't the right time. I kind of held out until the end."

Above all, Dean said he follows his intuition. He credits this quality to his father "My dad who is, well he's passed away now, but he was a musician. Also, he was a mechanic. Playing guitar was a hobby for him. But he told me, 'Always listen to that inner voice inside you because it will never steer you wrong.' It hasn't yet."



Billy Dean opens Wyonna Judd's first concert as a solo artist April 2 at Chaparral Center. Tickets, priced at $18.50 and $15.50 for senior citizens, may be purchased at Chaparral Center Box Office and at Endless Horizons.

Television activists take arms against cartoon cat

BOSTON (AP) — Chester Cheetah, a cool cat who hawks cheese snacks, is getting some television activists hot under the collar.

Seven organizations, including the Cambridge-based Action for Children's Television, filed a petition March 5 with the Federal Communications Commission to ward off any attempt to create a children's cartoon show featuring the feline, who is spokescat for Frito-Lay Cheetos.

A spokesman for Frito-Lay says plans for "Yo! It's the Chester Cheetah Show" have been scotched. But TV activist Peggy Charren cites Chester as an example of how commercials are crossing the line into masquerading as children's TV entertainment.

Instead of say, turning E.B. White stories into quality cartoons, Charren contends companies are looking to base cartoon shows on characters created to promote products. And while adults may be able to make a distinction between promotion and programming, kids will not, she said.

"Think of the CBS eye. If CBS put legs on it and turned it into an adult program, we'd say, 'What a promotion.'

"I'm not making this into a quality debate. Any cartoon is OK, is legal, as long as it isn't an ad," she said.

FCC rules call for a separation between commercial and programming material. The petition, supported by the Center for Science in the Public Interest, Black Citizens for Fair Media and four other organizations, asks for a declaratory ruling that a Chester Cheetah show would violate the public interest.

But Frito-Lay may never launch such a show. Tod MacKenzie, a spokesman for Frito-Lay in Dallas, said the idea show has been discussed since 1986, most recently with the Fox Network, but now "it's as cold as ice."

"Since Chester came out in 1986, he's been wildly popular," MacKenzie said. So popular, in fact, that the company doesn't want to risk losing its Cheetos cheetah: "We don't want to jeopardize the job he's doing there."

MacKenzie said the company was not bowing to pressure and he said it had not yet been contacted by either the FCC or any of the groups which filed the petition.

Still, MacKenzie says that preventing commercial characters from becoming children's cartoon characters would be a great loss.

TV romance keeps nation in suspense

N.Y. Times News Service

You know you're in trouble when you find yourself following the romantic adventures of two characters on a coffee commercial.

And you know everyone's in trouble when it's one of the best series on television.

Last week, the fourth episode in the Taster's Choice ad saga was all over prime time on ABC and CBS. And let me tell you, more is heating up than just the freeze-dried instant coffee.

For the culturally deprived, here's a quick recap:

Our couple, new neighbors in a tastefully upscale big-city apartment house, met in the first ad, which premiered in November 1990.

The 30-ish, sophisticated pair is played by English stage actors Anthony Head of London and Sharon Maughan of Liverpool.

In the ads, no names are ever used, but to keep the pronoun count under control, and prevent confusion (mainly mine,) we'll call them Tony and Sharon.

In the first installment, Sharon — all dressed up — knocks on Tony's door and asks to borrow some coffee. She's right in the middle of a dinner party, you see. Tony lends her a jar of Taster's Choice.

In the second episode, first aired in March 1991, Sharon appears at Tony's door again, on her way back from the market, to replace his jar of instant coffee. Tony's glad to see her, but he's — er, um — busy. Sharon's hip; she knows he's got a date in there.

And in Chapter 3, which made its anxiously awaited debut Sept. 15, 1991, Tony shows up very late for his sister's dinner party. They're already having coffee — you guessed what brand. There is only one guest Tony hasn't met, sis says, but you know who that turns out to be.

This one ends with a cliff-hanger. Tony sits down next to Sharon and casually invites her out to dinner. She sips her Taster's Choice, smiles that quirky, flirty smile of hers and says, "What makes you think I'll accept?"

Oh, the suspense.

The fourth installment, airing since March 1, ends the suspense. They're coming home after their dinner date. She invites him in for coffee. He keeps staying for "one more cup of coffee." (I should think that after three cups, he'd have to leave, at least for a minute.)

Then we get a new ending that teases us even more. Sharon coyly suggests Tony leave, and offers to let him take the Taster's Choice with him, if he likes it so much. Then they stand close, their eyes meet and ...

Fade out.

Will the next episode begin with Tony and Sharon at her breakfast table, wearing each other's bathrobes and sharing a morning cup of Taster's Choice?

The commercials have all been four or five months apart so far, which means it may be early next winter before we find out.

Personally, I don't think we have to worry about them sleeping together. These people can't sleep. They drink entirely too much coffee.

The point is that in four 45-second commercials — that's three minutes total — we come to recognize and like these intelligent, sophisticated, articulate characters.

I mean, I care about these two people. I'm particularly concerned about their diet.

OK, it's a coffee commercial, but in three minutes, the writers at New York's McCann-Erickson ad agency have done a better job of characterization than most screenwriters do in two hours.

Sharon follows Tony through his softly lit kitchen, chamber music playing in the background, and we know we're not dealing with a couple of slobs here. We already can see that Tony is unlike most bachelors, because he knows where the coffee is.

These two banter delicately, flirt tastefully but outrageously and enjoy each other deliciously, and the most graphic physical activity we ever see is coffee drinking.

It's a miniseries in miniature, and somehow it manages to say more than some of the full-sized editions.

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, MARCH 29, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will have much to celebrate, including romance, new friends and a creative triumph. June brings exciting career opportunities! A midsummer vacation puts you in touch with someone who could change your whole life. Keep especially close tabs on expenses next November. Singles could tie the knot in December. A windfall or legacy early in 1993 adds to your financial portfolio. Avoid high-risk investments.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: tennis star Jennifer Capriati, football's Earl Campbell, actor Bud Cort, comedian Eric Idle.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get the low-down on what is happening behind the scenes. Finding out how things stand should boost your hopes. Even if you have to travel for professional reasons, your heart remains at home.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Concentrate on your social life today. Talking business with a relative could precipitate an argument. Set aside some time for reading and writing later today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take into consideration such matters as your health and your mate's wishes before committing yourself to a new venture. The question of financing could very well alter your whole attitude.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your intuition is right on target. Ignore it at your own risk! Loved ones urge you to stop and smell the flowers. Relaxation is in; serious business is out.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may now be more aware of the benefits of working hand-in-glove with a conscientious partner. Show your appreciation by not worrying about things that may never happen.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Once you adopt a philosophy that suits you, never waver in living up to it. Your idealism wins you loyal friends and enthusiastic allies. Make sure you are on solid ground in romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A surprising development lifts you to dizzying new heights. Now is the moment to use your social connections! You cannot achieve your objectives without strong family support.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A good day to sit down and think out your next career or financial move. Friends may be able to help you. Maintain an "open door" policy where a child's pals are concerned.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be looking forward to taking a trip or pursuing a new friendship. Your hopes for the future are high. Be careful about accepting strangers at face value.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A loved one's compulsive urges cannot be checked by a show of authority alone. You will have to be much more subtle. Group gatherings hold special appeal later today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): As long as you remain true to yourself and your ideals, things will go swimmingly. Someone's love remains unshakable. Avoid criticizing a family member.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Although you have something special in mind, today does not seem to be the right moment to do anything about it. Quietly seek the information and materials you need for a special project.

The virtue of a 4-3 fit in a major suit, known as a Moysian fit after its staunchest advocate, the late Sonny Moyse, is not for the weak at heart. If you declare a Moysian fit, you'll find that much of the struggle often centers around control of the trump suit. Here's what we mean.

South knew that there were only seven spades between the two hands, yet felt the chances for 10 tricks in that suit were at least as good as 11 at clubs. How right declarer was—five clubs had no play as the cards lie.

West led a diamond. East took the king and shifted to the queen of hearts. Declarer won in hand and cashed three top trumps, to learn that spades had followed the percentages and split 4-2. Declarer quickly shifted to clubs. Unfortunately, West was able to ruff the third round of clubs, and the defenders took two more diamond tricks for a one-trick set.

The hand was laydown as long as trumps were no worse than 4-2. After winning the king of hearts, declarer should simply have led a low trump from hand and ducked in dummy.

By surrendering a trick early, declarer would remain in complete control. The best the defense can do is take their diamond winner. Declarer can win any continuation, draw trumps and claim the rest of the tricks.
