HHH gets presidential escort to Washington

By EDWARD WALSH
The Washington Post

MINNEAPOLIS — With the voices of his grandchildren calling out "Goodbye, Grandpa" through the rush of the wind, Hubert H. Humphrey left Minnesota Sunday in the company of the man who now holds the prize Humphrey sought for so long.

President Carter, returning to Washington from Los Angeles, stopped here just long enough to escort Sen. Humphrey and his wife, Muriel, aboard the presidential aircraft that returned them to the nation's capital.

On an overcast, breezy, cool Minnesota afternoon, the two men stood together at the airport as Carter recited a litany of Americans who owe a debt to Humphrey's three decades of public service: "Every elderly person in our nation, every poor person in our nation, every black person in our nation ..."

Pale and thin, his voice at times wavering, Humphrey grinned broadly and told more than 1,000 people who saw him off that he is feeling much better but that "everything, of course, is relative."

The 66-year-old Minnesota Democrat is suffering from inoperable cancer, and Carter's flight to pick him up was a touching gesture of warmth for the Democratic Party's venerable "Happy Warrior."

But in another sense, and not just because of the emotion of the moment, the President's stop here was the highlight of a cross-country trip, giving a lift to Carter's weary traveling party, and perhaps the President himself, after three days in which the high points seemed few.

Carter left Washington on Friday, heading for five states he lost last November before reaching the friendly Democratic confines of Minnesota. He embarked on the journey with his standing in the polls slipping, and with an increasing number of questions being posed about the quality of his leadership.

Whether he accomplished what he wanted to, only he knew for sure.

The purpose of the President's jaunt across the country was never entirely clear, even at the beginning. By journey's end, any sense of focus or central purpose seemed lost in the blur of Carter's public appearances and in the sheer volume of the issues facing his administration that he sought to address, if only in passing.

It was in part to be a mobile pep rally on energy, an appeal to the American people to help him extract an acceptable energy plan from the Congress. But his attacks on the oil companies were muted, and the statistics he cited about oil imports and the cost of deregulating natural gas seemed hardly calculated to inspire.

It was in part a nostalgic trip back to the long campaign trail that brought him to the White House. The President returned to Iowa, to the state's Jefferson-Jackson Day Dinner, where two years ago he won a straw poll among potential Democratic presidential nominees and finally gained the national media attention he so craved.

Carter spoke warmly of Iowa and the people there who helped him early. But he spoke little of agriculture policy or declining farm prices, and most of what he said on those topics was greeted in silence by 3,000 people in the Des Moines Veterans Auditorium.

Finally, Carter's trip came down to politics, and to that necessity of politics, fund-raising. That brought

45.1 percent of required oil to be imported

By MAX B. SKELTON

DALLAS (AP) — Oil imports will account for 45.1 per cent of the nation's petroleum requirements this year, an industry study indicated today.

The Independent Petroleum Association of America study said, by comparison, that foreign oil in 1972, the last full year prior to the Arab oil embargo, accounted for only 29 per cent of domestic supply.

The report added, however, that 1978 imports should drop to 43.1 per cent of total supply.

"The nation's rising dependence on imported oil will be stemmed temporarily due to the combined efforts of increased domestic crude oil production, improved efficiency in energy use and greater utilization of domestic coal and nuclear power."

The supply and demand study was released at the annual meeting of the 5,000-member trade group that represents independent operators from more than 30 states.

The report said the 1978 factors that should permit oil imports to drop a bit will not be sufficient, however, to meet the nation's future energy needs.

"Finding and developing U.S. oil and gas resources are essential," the report said.

"Hopefully, deliberations in Congress will lead to adoption of policies which recognize the best interest of the nation will be served by encouraging activities to find and develop this country's potential oil and gas reserves."

The association's tax committee voted Sunday that there is an urgent need for President Carter's energy proposals to be revised to include specific incentives to enable domestic producers to maximize oil and gas explorations.

The tax committee is expected to recommend Tuesday that the trade group vigorously oppose a Conference Committee report on the energy package if it fails to include such incentives.

The supply and demand report estimated 1977 domestic petroleum demand at 18.5 million barrels a day, a 6.1 per cent increase above the 1976 level. Much of the increase was attributed to extremely cold weather last winter, increased air conditioning requirements this summer, and an extended drought that reduced available hydropower in western states.

"In 1978, domestic demand is forecast to rise to 19.2 million barrels daily, 3.5 per cent or 600,000 barrels per day above 1977," the report said.

"The projected moderation in the rate of increase in U.S. petroleum demand assumes normal weather in 1978, increased contributions by coal and nuclear power, and continued progress is using energy more efficiently."

Panama votes for treaties

By ANNE ZUSY

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — A big turnout of Panamanian voters gave the new Panama Canal treaties overwhelming approval, unofficial returns from the nationwide referendum showed today.

The election tribunal reported 149,178 yes votes to 76,311 noes cast Sunday in 910 of the 3,038 voting districts. This was nearly 30 per cent of the estimated 800,000 eligible voters.

Election officials said most of these votes were cast in Panama province, including Panama City, the seat of much of the opposition to the treaties. Government officials predicted returns from the provinces would raise the total in favor of the pacts to 70 or 75 per cent.

The final official count is to be announced Thursday.

Panama's chief of government, Gen. Omar Torrijos, predicted the U.S. Senate would also ratify the treaties despite the strong opposition in the United States.

Torrijos said the senators must realize the treaties "go beyond their electoral districts. They're playing with the luck of maritime navigation all over the world.

"It's the senators who have to explain to the people, not the people who have to explain to the senators," he added in an interview.

Torrijos voted in the morning and then toured Panama City in a military truck loaded with reporters. Cheering crows welcomed him everywhere, and his shirt collar was red with lipstick by the time he returned home.

There were no reports of opposition activity during the voting Sunday. A number of rallies had been held in the week before, and opponents of the treaties claimed the plebescite was fixed. Torrijos denied the charge, and invited three dozen foreign observers to check on the voting.

Everyone 18 and over was eligible to vote. Those voting were fingerprinted, required to present identification cards which were punched, and their thumbs were inked.

The main treaty, one of two signed in Washington Sept. 7 by Torrijos and President Carter, provides for the United States to surrender the canal and the 500-square-mile canal zone to Panama by the year 2000. The second document declares the waterway a neutral zone and allows U.S. intervention in the event of a threat to its security.

Torrijos and his government waged a strong campaign in favor of the treaties, but opponents were encouraged to speak out. It was the first time since he took over the government in a 1968 coup that a political issue in which there was any opposition to the government was debated publicly.

Conferees okay grants

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — House and Senate energy conferees agreed today to provide federal grants to help low-income families, schools and hospitals purchase insulation and other fuel-saving devices.

The conferees, meeting on the Veterans Day holiday to try to write a compromise national energy bill, agreed to make grants of up to $800 available to families earning up to one-fourth more than the national poverty level.

In approving the program, the conferees adopted a provision contained in the House-passed energy bill, which has the support of the Carter administration.

The Senate has rejected most of the President's energy proposals. The conference committee must reconcile the House and Senate differences and produce a final bill.

The conferees also approved a $965-million, three-year program of energy conservation grants to schools and hospitals.

The House-passed bill would give the federal government the power to decide where the money would go, while the Senate voted to distribute it based on state populations.

Senate conferees agreed, 6 to 5, to go along with the House proposals, but with a provision that no state could receive more than 10 per cent or less than one-half of one per cent of the money.

As the conferees began their fourth session of work on the energy legislation, their chairman, Rep. Harley Staggers, D-W.Va., said bickering among committee members could slow down the panel's work.

"We can disagree without being disagreeable," Staggers said. He threatened to have any conferees who engage in angry attacks on other members of the panel removed from the 43-member negotiating unit.

The panel made scant progress in three long sessions last week, agreeing only on a compromise requiring utilities to help consumers

Pioneer oilman dies

FORT WORTH — Coe S. Mills, 77, formerly of Midland, died Saturday from injuries suffered when he fell from a tree while pruning it at his home here.

Services will be at 4 p.m. Tuesday in the Gause-Ware Funeral Home in Fort Worth, with burial in Rose Hill Cemetery.

Mills was born in 1900 in Slate Hill, N.J. He was graduated from Brown University with a degree in engineering. He received a masters degree in geology from Washington University in 1925.

Mills was employed by Transcontinental Oil Company and did service work in the Yates field area of Pecos County in 1926. He worked as a geologist for Marathon Oil Co. in Wichita Falls, Lafayette, La., Tampa, Fla., Houston and Midland. He moved to Midland in 1947 and retired in 1965 as district manager of the Midland district. He had been an independent geologist since his retirement. From 1931 to 1935 he was employed by M. L. "Mike" Benedum.

In Midland, Mills was a former deacon of the First Presbyterian Church, an active member of the Kiwanis Club, a director of the Midland Community Theatre, a director of the Midland YMCA and a Petroleum Club director.

Mills was also a member of the executive and advisory committees of the New Mexico Oil and Gas Association and of the New Mexico Petroleum Industries Committee.

Accident kills woman

COMMERCE — A Midland woman was killed and her husband seriously injured Sunday in a two-car accident two miles south of this northeast Texas town. Two others were killed and two seriously injured in the accident.

Janice Barber, 63, of 607 W. Estes Ave., died at Medical-Surgical Clinic in Commerce about 35 minutes after the 3:15 p.m. accident, a spokesman for the Department of Public Safety said.

Her husband, Ernest Barber, 57, was listed in serious condition in Greenville Hospital with broken ribs and other internal injuries, according to DPS reports.

Both Midland residents were passengers in a car driven by James Earl Barber, 52, of Dallas. James Barber and his wife, Zeta, died Sunday from injuries received in the accident. The Barbers were returning from a family reunion, the DPS said.

The accident occurred when the car driven by James Barber and one driven by Geraldine Barham of Paris collided on Texas 50 near Commerce. Mrs. Barham was listed in serious condition in McCuistion Hospital in Paris. A passenger in her car, Robin Barham, 18, was listed in fair condition in McCuistion Hospital, the DPS said.

Woman's Club felines act like shy beggars

ROUSTIN' ABOUT with Ed Todd

Every creature needs a place to call home.

Three unnamed felines who hang around the Midland Woman's Club at Hogan Park have found their territory: the club.

They don't wander in with the freedom of a member. They're not allowed.

But these pleasant-enough mendicants make for comely fixtures.

There's the tame "Momma" cat. This gray-and-yellow-haired lady has planted herself at the doorstep for nigh on nine years.

She has been through many a litter.

Momma cat has a couple of young'uns living with her now. One of them wasn't making any public appearances around the time of a luncheon last Friday.

The other, a girl-cat that could do well with the name "Cute Yellar" (she was both), was either half wild or else wisely suspicious of strangers.

Upon the approach of an unfamiliar human, she would quickly raise from the maroon doormat and hobble off into the bushes.

She had three legs.

What happened to her?

No one seems to know.

Delma Jones, who has been the club's cook for almost nine years, said she first noticed the little hobbler this September, when the club reopened. It's normally closed during the summer months.

"She had only three legs (then)," Mrs. Jones said. "I don't know if something bit it off."

The hopping young cat and the rest of her family are well fed from the leftovers. They bunk down each night in the bushes, Mrs. Jones reckoned.

Momma cat is always there when Mrs. Jones comes to work at 8 in the morning.

"I'm the first one here every

Several football jerseys and pants, valued at a total of $275, and $25 in change were taken from the Midland High School field house at Midland Memorial Stadium between 6 p.m. Saturday and 4 p.m. Sunday, according to police.

Police said entry was gained by removing a roof ventilator. A key taken from a desk was used to gain entry to a soft-drink machine police said.

MONEY TAKEN

About $400 in change was taken from a soft-drink machine at J & S Laundry, 3104 N. Big Spring St., about 4:15 a.m. Sunday, police said.

Police officers were notified of the burglary by an alarm, they said. The money was removed by prying open the front door of the machine, police said.

The ever-hospitable Bessye Cowden Ward has loaned out her F-Bar Ranch to benefit the Buffalo Trail Council of the Boy Scouts of America.

Well, what she's really doing is letting Midland's Carol Swain throw her very first Hanging Tree Round-up there to benefit the lads.

Of course, it'll cost to get into "the show" next Saturday afternoon and night at the round-up's site just south of Odessa.

Since Mrs. Swain runs a fine arts gallery called the Hanging Tree, the slant of the round-up will be on art.

Works by more than 20 artists from across the nation will be shown.

The barbecue and "the works," served at the event will be prepared by Odessa'a Chuck Wagon Gang.

And entertainment from 2 p.m. on will be played by area bands and performers from Happy Shahan's Alamo Village at Brackettville.

Depending on what you want to give, the cost per guest starts at 10 bucks.

Mrs. Swain declares that the art, music, food, dancing under the stars, and all that will be worth anybody's while.

It'll certainly be worth something to the Scouts. Any funds they get out of the round-up will help them maintain the council's ranch in the Davis Mountains.

There's another Scout benefit coming up Saturday. This one will be a father-son cake-baking contest at Midkiff. It's cued to Halloween. It'll all start at 7:30 p.m. at the El Paso Natural Gas Co. plant.

him Saturday night to Los Angeles and the glitter of a $1,000 a plate Democratic Party dinner.

It was near the end of a typically brutal day of travel for the President, begun before dawn in the Midwest and ending around midnight in California.

It was a politically important appearance for Carter in a state whose governor, Edmund G. (Jerry) Brown Jr., is considered his most dangerous rival within his own party.

Outside the Century Plaza Hotel hundreds of demonstrators milled about in the service of one cause or another. And a mile away, in another hotel, there was a counter-dinner, its purpose to show displeasure with the President's Middle East policy.

But except for an attempt to reassure his own heavily Jewish audience of his support for Israel, Carter took little notice of any of these or other signs of discontent with his administration. In his soft voice and controversial style, he rambled on about what he seeks for the country, about energy and government reorganization and limiting strategic nuclear weapons and stopping nuclear proliferation.

The audience sat and listened quietly.

There was one moment when they came alive. It was when the President told the Californians he was getting up early Sunday to fly to Minnesota and pick up "the greatest Democrat of all."

He had said much the same thing earlier, in Detroit and Des Moines, and it never failed to move his listeners. He repeated it in Minneapolis Sunday, with Humphrey at his side, calling him "the greatest American that I know, the No. 1 Democrat in our country."

When his turn came, Humphrey told how he was called Friday night by former President Ford and how, after some haggling over the point spread, they had bet $5 on the outcome of the Minnesota-Michigan football game Saturday. Minnesota won the game, and Humphrey won the bet.

"I hope that is legal," the Senator told Carter. "I am not sure. If it isn't, I ask for forgiveness."

"I will pardon you on that one," the President replied.

Then the two men and Mrs. Humphrey turned and walked slowly up the stairs of Air Force One, pausing to wave to the crowd one last time before disappearing inside.

Building named for Humphrey

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Carter Sunday signed legislation that names the headquarters of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare here in honor of Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), the former vice president.

The President signed the bill aboard Air Force One at Andrews Air Force Base after he and the Humphreys returned to Washington from Minneapolis. Humphrey's fellow Minnesotan, Vice President Mondale, joined the signing ceremony.

Light rains dampen area over weekend

The chance of rain has petered out with only slight rainfall recordings made over the weekend, the weatherman said.

The National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Air Terminal recorded .2 inch of rainfall early Sunday. Over the weekend, Texas Electric Service Co. recorded .18 inch of rainfall in east Midland and .17 inch in south Midland. Also, within the last 24 hours, the company noted Odessa had .01 inch of rainfall and Monahans had .43 inch.

Skies should be fair and temperatures should be warmer through Tuesday in Midland. The low temperature tonight should drop to the low 50s. The high should reach the mid 70s. Winds should become northwesterly late tonight.

Sunday's high temperature was 68 degrees, and the overnight low was 50 degrees, the weather service said.

Big Spring, Big Lake, Rankin and Lamesa reported fog this morning. Andrews had crisp weather with a 49-degree temperature.

Judge Culver recommends against fund application

Calling for unity at the city and county levels of government, Midland County Judge Barbara Culver today issued a statement recommending the Commissioners Court decline to apply for $230,000 in federal Community Development funds.

The statement was to be read at the commissioners meeting at 1:30 p.m. today.

"While we can never let the city of Midland make our decisions for us . . . we should continue to cooperate with the city of Midland on all projects which save local tax dollars and benefit our citizens, and avoid whenever possible damaging our good city-county relationships," Judge Culver said.

She said rent subsidy "is not a high priority need in Midland County," and the county "really does not need the $230,000."

Also, she said, the county has no department equipped to handle rental subsidy.

The county is eligible to apply for the $230,000 as a result of the city's decision not to comply with federal guidelines for $946,000 in Community Development funds.

Correction

Midland County Sheriff's deputies reported seizing 36 pounds of a substance they believed to be marijuana at 1604 W. Ohio Ave. Friday night. That address was incorrectly reported by a Sheriff's Department spokesman Saturday as 1604 W. Tennessee Ave.

Otis James Johnson Jr. and Melissa Johnson were arrested at the residence and charged with felony possession of marijuana. They were released on $7,500 bond each on Saturday, sheriff's officials said.

Jewelry, stolen guns recovered

Midland police have recovered almost all of the jewelry and guns taken in a burglary of the Sam Chaney residence, 3200 block of West Wadley Avenue, between Oct. 15 and 17, according to detective Capt. Billy Ray.

A number of guns and jewelry valued at a total of $50,000 were taken in the burglary.

"I feel like we have recovered almost everything in this (burglary)," Ray said today.

Ray said the property was recovered in El Paso by members of the Midland Police Department who worked with Department of Public Safety intelligence officers.

Chaney told police he and his wife returned home Oct. 17 to find their house burglarized.

Police said about 50 guns along with expensive jewelry were taken. The guns included pistols, rifles and shotguns.

Neighbors said they heard noises coming from the Chaney house early Oct. 17, but thought the Chaneys were home.

Conferees okay insulation grants

This week it will look at President Carter's proposal to force most utilities and industries burning oil and natural gas to convert to coal. The House passed the President's program, but the Senate voted to allow all but the biggest plants to continue using oil.

The Carter administration can be expected to lobby hard for the House version and to try to persuade conferees to adopt a compromise bill resembling it. The Senate rejected most of the major proposals in the Carter energy plan.

But the bill sent to the floor by the Senate Finance Committee contains none of House-passed taxes the President has proposed to conserve energy by making scarce fuels more costly.

The committee rejected taxes on crude oil, fuel-inefficient cars and the oil and natural gas used by utilities and factories. Instead, it approved some $40 billion in tax breaks to encourage energy conservation and increased production.

Debate is expected to last all week.

Senate Democratic leaders are hopeful the President's tax program can be salvaged in a conference committee.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Aspirin can help arthritis

Dear Dr. Solomon: The other day, I came across an article that said the government shouldn't permit companies to claim that aspirin helps arthritis. Does this mean it doesn't really do any good?—I've had arthritis for a good 10 or 15 years, and I've been taking aspirin regularly—it is the one thing I have always felt I could count on for relief.—Helen Y.

Dear Helen: I don't think the article you saw was suggesting that aspirin was not any good. Aspirin is a long-established and remarkably safe and effective drug for the relief of the pain and inflammation caused by arthritis.

What has happened, and what I believe the article was referring to, is that an expert Food and Drug Administration panel feels that it should not be stated on the label that aspirin helps arthritis because it may encourage people to treat themselves without consulting a doctor. Also, they might need additional kinds of treatment to avoid irreversible damage to joints and other tissues.

The panel also recommended that aspirin labels include warnings about taking aspirin at the same time as certain prescription drugs or during the last three months of pregnancy except on the advice of a doctor. Certain side effects like ringing in the ears were also mentioned.

The panel of experts put forth some recommendations about the labeling of acetaminophen, the other main non-prescription drug for relief of aches and fever which is often usedby those who cannot take aspirin. The experts found no basis for claims that acetaminophen is safer than aspirin. Further, they want the label to warn against the danger of liver damage in case of acetaminophen overdose.

The concern of this panel of experts was simply with the labeling on the two products—always something of a problem with drugs you do not need a prescription for. There was no quarrel with the drugs themselves. Both were found to be safe and effective by this advisory board.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'd give anything to be able to get some real exercise everyd ay, but I work in an office all day and there is no park or gym nearby I could go to in my lunch hour. And as for my apartment, forget it—I'm squeezed into one and a half rooms like just about everyone else I know.—W.L.

Dear W.L.: Jumping rope is excellent exercise, and it doesn't require a lot of space. If you have too much furniture in your apartment, you can even do it in the hallway outside. Start off with 10 jumps and add 10 more every day until you are up to 300 or 400—whatever is the most comfortable. Just remember that you should check with your doctor before embarking on any kind of exercise program.

Next King of England turns cowboy for a day

By MILLER BONNER

ARMSTRONG, Tex. (AP) — Britain's Prince Charles played the part of a Texas cowboy, participated in a polo match and mingled with Texas politicians Sunday as the man destined to become the next King Of England began a three-day tour of the Lone Star State.

The 28-year-old prince began his one-day stay at the 50,000 acre South Texas ranch of Tobin and Anne Armstrong by joining his hosts in a horseback ride through a herd of Santa Gertrudis cattle.

The dark cherry-red cattle, warily eyeing an equally nervous herd of camera-clicking newsmen, passed the prince's inspection.

"He really knows his cattle," said Mrs. Armstrong, the former U.S. Ambassador to England who invited the prince to visit the sprawling ranch during his 12-city tour of the United States.

"He worked on a ranch in Australia and had seen some Armstrong cattle there. Tobin has been so occupied preparing for the prince's visit that he hadn't had time to have the cattle sprayed and the prince noticed the flys on the cattle's shoulders."

The prince wore a pair of blood-red leather chaps during his dusty cattle tour and rode a Texas pony fitted with an English saddle.

The prince also participate in a polo match Sunday, teaming with a trio of Armstrongs — Tobin, his brother John and John's son, Charles — against four veteran players headed by Bob Beverage of San Antonio, considered one of the better players in Texas.

The polo match, played on the Armstrong's private field, was viewed by a throng of more than 300 invited guests. Included were Texas' two U.S. Senators, Lloyd Bentsen and John Tower, plus U.S. Rep. Kika de la Garza, Texas Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and San Antonio Mayor Lila Cockrell.

Newsmen were not permitted to view the entire polo match. "The understanding was that this was his off day to get off by himself and get out of the public eye," politely explained Mrs. Armstrong.

Thus the score of the match became a secret between the Armstrongs and their guests. "It was a lot of fun and a good game," said Katharine, the oldest Armstrong daughter. "I can't give you the score but I'll tell you the match wasn't fixed so the prince's team would win."

Early Sunday afternoon, the prince's jetliner landed at the Naval Air Station in Kingsville where he was greeted by the Armstrongs and local officials. Kingsville Mayor Gilbert Acuna presented the prince with a leather boot case.

He was driven the 50 miles to the Armstrong ranch where he changed into his riding cloths and chaps.

He rode a bay mare named Hortiga during the staged cattle roundup. "Her name translates as ant," said Mrs. Armstrong. "She's a fiery, peppery animal."

A Texas-styled barbecue was held next to the polo field for the prince and guests. Afterwards, the prince and the Armstrong family were to retire to the Armstrong Ranch house for the night.

Today, the prince is scheduled to visit Houston where he will tour NASA. On Tuesday, he travels to San Antonio and tours the Alamo.

"He said his tour of the United States has been very exciting and a great deal of fun," relayed Mrs. Armstrong. "During the ride from the airport to the ranch, he filled us in on his trip so far and said he wished it were going to last longer."

Both sides in Lebanese civil war rebuilding forces

By GEORGE A. KRIMSKY

TYRE, Lebanon (AP) — Christian and Moslem militias that fought in the Lebanese civil war are rebuilding their forces.

Both the Christian rightists and the Moslem leftists are recruiting and arming new fighters openly and without interference.

The two opposing factions are estimated to have a total of 45,000 trained, armed men, not including the Palestinians.

This is more than 10 times the 4,000 experienced, loyal soldiers claimed for the Lebanese army. But the Christians and Moslems are estimated to keep only about 3,000 men each on active duty.

The Mourabiton (Ambushers), the independent Nasserite Movement's militia, swore in 700 recruits in Tyre Sunday in the name of "Arab Lebanon" and the Palestinian cause. Commandos, teen-age boys, nurses and a unit of frogmen paraded before leftist dignitaries and foreign correspondents in a vacant lot.

The Mourabiton started as a ragtag gang of street fighters who battled alongside Palestinian guerrillas and other leftist factions during the civil war. They have become the second most powerful leftist force, exceeded only by the Palestinians.

More than 600 of the most experienced fighters have been trained in Vietnam, Cuba and friendly Arab countries since the civil war, sources in the militia revealed.

Earlier this month, the Christian Tigers held a similar ceremony in East Beirut. Their leader, former President Camille Chamoun, said his militia would continue to expand as long as the Palestinian guerrillas remained in the country.

Lebanon has been the Palestinians' chief base of operations since King Hussein's army expelled them from Jordan in 1970, and their support was giving the leftists victory in the civil war until the Syrian army intervened to check them. The Christians continue to demand that the Palestinians clear out of the country, but the leftists have made the Palestinian cause their own.

The Lebanese army is slowly rebuilding after disintegrating during the war. But it is not strong enough to enter southern Lebanon to separate the Palestinians and Christians who battled there until a shaky cease-fire in late September.

Acquittal builds tension

AGUA PRIETA, Mexico (AP) — Tensions along the border have continued to build following the acquittal of two southern Arizona brothers in an alien torture case, with the latest development an advertising campaign for a boycott of border shops.

The daily newspaper in this border town adjacent to Douglas, Ariz., has begun printing quarter-page ads urging Mexicans not to shop in American border towns "until justice is done in the Hanigan case."

Patrick and Thomas Hanigan of the Douglas area were acquitted Oct 7 on charges of kidnaping, beating and torturing three Mexican aliens who said they were crossing the Hanigan ranch in search of work in August 1976 when they were assaulted.

Antonio Palomares, editor and publisher of La Verdal de Agua Prieta, said the advertisement also is being reprinted on posters to be distributed throughout the city. He said the ad was placed by the Manzo Area Council of Tucson, a community agency which provides services to Mexicans. The ad urges a boycott every Saturday and a picket line to discourage Mexicans from crossing the border.

The council organized a demonstration along the border to protest the verdict and push for federal intervention in the case a week ago.

The Hanigan verdict has outraged some and pleased others, but it has rarely been ignored.

In Cananea, Mexico, about 43 miles southwest of here, a furniture store owner, Miguel Padres, said residents mostly feel the Mexicans got a bad deal.

"It sounded like, well, the United States is supposed to be a leader in human rights, but if you have enough money, you can get around human rights," he said.

"The trouble is that none of us down here really know the truth of what happened. The only thing we know is what the Mexican newspapers publish. I wouldn't say there is any strong sentiment against Americans here, but I hope things don't flare up."

Doulgas City Councilman Francisco Barraza, who helped promote the boycott, said it could seriously harm border business. So far, there has been no indications Mexicans were participating in te boycott.

Lionel Valenzuela, owner of the Papagayo Club in Naco noted, "As far as I can see, there's no change in my business — it's been bad ever since I can remember. This place is so dead all the time, it's hard to tell the difference if things slow down."

But Jim Sill, owner of a clothing store in Bisbee, said his business has improved recently after he advertised on radio stations in Cananea. He said no customers have mentioned the Hanigan case.

Several residents of southern Arizona expressed sympathy for the Hanigan brothers during the trial because of a rash of burglaries in the area blamed on Mexican aliens.

The Mexicans testified they were looking for work when the Hanigans and their late father, George, abducted and tortured them.

T. J. "Jim" Wilson, a former Cochise County sheriff, said he feels persons in Tucson and Phoenix are more concerned that border-area residents.

"Each side is building more fire, but it's not being fanned by people from around here," he said.

Nevertheless, officials said the advertisement urging the boycott would be placed in other newspapers, including Nogales, next week.

Meanwhile, the FBI has begun an investigation of the case to determine whether the Mexicans are entitled to protection under the U.S. Civil Rights Act and whether their rights were violated. Federal officials have said government intervention in the case is unlikely.

Probers continue to seek clues in rock group crash

McCOMB, Miss. (AP) — Investigators are examining engine equipment as the search continues for clues in the plane crash near here that killed six persons, incuding three members of the Lynyrd Skynyrd rock group.

Rudolph Kapustin, director of the National Transportation Safety Board team which is combing the site along with investigators from the Federal Aviation Administration, said the plane's engines, its fuel gauge and other equipment were removed Sunday for inspection.

The Convair 240 crashed Thursday night in a remote, densely wooded area, minutes after the pilot told a controller in Houston, Tex. he was having fuel problems. The plane was about 10 minutes away from its destination in Baton Rouge, La., where the Southern rock group was to play at Louisiana State University.

Investigators continue to interview the 20 survivors and witnesses who were on the ground, Kapustin said.

He said the NTSB has requested complete records on the plane, described as 30-plus years old, and on the two pilots, both of whom were killed.

Earlier Kapustin said the chance that the plane ran out of gas was a "distinct possibility," although other possibilities remain.

A final report on the crash is expected to take weeks.

Declarer took the ace of hearts and two top trumps, East discarding the deuce of diamonds. South then led the six of diamonds to dummy's king. He eventually gave up a club.

Obviously, the defense slipped. Who was the criminal? Decide for yourself before you read on.

East spoke up first: "Why didn't you take the ace of diamonds?" he demanded. "You heard him bid a tremendous two-uiter. And I discarded the deuce of diamonds to tell you I had an odd number of diamonds."

West replied: "I couldn't tell you had a club trick. From my point of view, the slam was unbeatable unless he had two diamonds and misguessed."

BOTH AT FAULT

Both defenders were right, and both were at fault, but East was the real culprit. Since he knew he had a sure club trick he wanted West to take the ace of diamonds (if he had it).

To prevent what actually happened, East should make the right discard on the second trump: the queen of diamonds! Since this would eliminate all diamond guessing, West would surely take his ace while he could still get it.

DAILY QUESTION

Dealer, at you left, bids one spade, your partner doubles, and the next player passes. You hold: S-98764; H-A; D-KJ54 C-J63. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two diamonds. Your spades are not strong enough to warrant a pass of one spade doubled for penalties.

The MX factor

Details are leaking out about the terms that may form the basis for new strategic arms limitation agreements between the United States and the Soviet Union.

However, a recent announcement by Defense Secretary Harold Brown may tell us more about the drift of the SALT talks than the unofficial reports circulating around Washington and Geneva.

Mr. Brown said the Defense Department has decided to go ahead with full-scale development of a mobile intercontinental missile system — the so-called MX missile.

This would mean a commitment on the scale of the now-suspended B-1 bomber program, with an ultimate cost of $35 billion or more by the time the new missiles are deployed in the 1980s.

The MX decision, because of the cost of the program and because it introduces another factor into the already difficult SALT negotiations, is bound to come under attack. Why embark on a major new missile program when the aim of SALT is to put a limit on nuclear arsenals and if possible start scaling them back?

Some background helps explain the Pentagon's case for the MX. Putting land-based missiles in a channel or tunnel so their launch-point can be selected at random is not a new idea. The Russians already have deployed mobile intermediate range missiles and are presumed ready to deploy mobile intercontinental missiles.

Last February, President Carter urged the Russians to join in a moratorium on mobile missiles so the United States would not have to invest in their development, too.

The decision to go ahead with our MX missile suggests that the Soviets — so far at least — do not want to discard mobile missiles. Obviously, they are aware of the vulnerability of their fixed-base missiles to the accuracy of American missiles. The problem is, Soviet missile technology is not standing still and with increasing accuracy of their missiles the fixed silos of our own Titan and Minuteman missiles become unacceptably vulnerable in the various "first strike" scenarios which concern our deterrent strategists.

In other words, it's the same old story over and over again. The Soviets are in the race to win and it isn't likely they will discard mobile missiles or any other weapons which they deem essential in taking and keeping the lead in the arms race.

The SALT negotiators may be within grasp of an acceptable formula imposing a ceiling on numbers of strategic weapons in various categories. However, Mr. Brown's announcement seems to rule out an agreement by which both sides would forego the option of protecting land-based missiles by introducing mobility into their launch sites.

This brings a certain inevitability to the decision to proceed with the MX program.

The cost of the MX is roughly $100 million per missile — like the price tag of the B-1, a staggering figure.

It would be welcome news if there were an alternative to this follow-on of the Titan-Minuteman generation of missiles.

But the investment the United States already has made in those latter strategic weapons will have brought us no future security if weapons development on the Soviet side undermines their deterrent value.

So, where do we go from here? The answer is we must go right on spending in order to seek the security we desire in the face of continued undermining by the Soviets as mentioned above. There is no alternative.

MIDEAST PERSPECTIVE:

Turks seek lifting of U.S. arms embargo

By L. EDGAR PRINA
Copley News Service

ANKARA — Turkish Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel warns that unless U.S. pressure on Turkey is eased, there cannot be a solution to the Turkish-Greek controversy over the Mediterranean island of Cyprus.

He indicated the pressure was not only coming from the arms embargo the United States imposed on Turkey 2.5 years ago but from public opinion in the United States.

Demirel told a group of visiting U.S. journalists the embargo does not make sense, especially if the United States believes in a strong North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

An embargo is "a good way to paralyze the defense" of Turkey, the prime minister said.

Except for the United States, Turkey has the largest army of the 15 nations in NATO. Its armed forces are almost entirely equipped with U.S. weapons. Accordingly, Turkey is dependent upon the United States for spare parts and improved arms.

Turkey is closely watching Washington where Congress is considering President Carter's proposal of a $1 billion, five-year arms aid program for Turkey.

But even as Demirel spoke there were reports that Turkey might be willing to modify its stand on Cyprus to improve chances for U.S. congressional approval of the aid plan.

Turkey invaded Cyprus in July, 1974, after Greek officers seized the Cypriot government as a step toward unification of Cyprus with Greece. After the invasion, Turkey sought a new Cyprus government with separate zones for Greek and Turkish Cypriots.

In reaction to the Turkish invasion, the United States imposed the embargo.

Turkey has 28,000 troops in Cyprus holding 40 per cent of the island. Demirel and his coalition government might be willing, some observers believe, to withdraw a substantial part of this force if it meant a swing of a few crucial votes in Congress in favor of aid.

Military experts say Turkey could easily make such a withdrawal. Cyprus is only 60 miles from the Turkish mainland and reinforcements could be quickly moved there if needed.

Greece, which has no troops on Cyprus, is 640 miles away.

However, the state of Turkish public opinion is another matter. Such a gesture as withdrawal by Demirel could cause serious trouble for his shaky coalition as he rules by a parliamentary margin of 15 votes. In addition, the country's economy is in trouble and Demirel has had to take unpopular austerity steps, such as doubling the price of gasoline.

In any event, Congress is not expected to act on the arms aid and a companion measure for Greece until early next year.

Meanwhile, Turkish-American relations appear to be continuing the downhill slide that began when Congress imposed the embargo.

The man on the street, as well as government officials and opposition party functionaries here, is bitterly disappointed at what he feels has been a pro-Greek, anti-Turkish stand by Congress.

"If, in every matter, the United States lines up with Greece, then how can we say to our people the United States is our friend?" he asked. "We won't be able to say it.

"As long as Greece feels that it is backed by the United States, it won't agree on it (Cyprus).

"As long as the United States is strangling Turkey from this way and from that way then time is not working against Greece."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

ABA joined FBI in spy effort

By JACK ANDERSON and LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON — At the bottom of most Washington scandals, there invariably seems to be some lawyers in the woodpile.

The Watergate crimes were plotted initially at the Justice Department, with the attorney general presiding and the White House counsel advising. Lawyers participated in the bag-jobs, forgeries, frame-ups, break-ins, cover-ups and perjury that followed.

Now we've learned that the bastion of legal ethics, the American Bar Association, conspired with the FBI to discredit the left-wing National Lawyers Guild. The FBI secretly wiretapped and spied on the guild's national offices and then fed derogatory information to key officials of the bar association.

The guild came under FBI surveillance not just because of its leftist leanings, but because of its opposition to racial discrimination, support of civil liberties and protests against congressional abuses. These stands offended the late FBI chief J. Edgar Hoover's standards for patriotism.

He grew up in Washington when it was still a small Southern town, where segregation was the law as well as the custom. To Hoover, the struggle for equal rights by blacks smacked of rebellion. He was an incurable curmudgeon, conservative in his ways and narrow in his outlook, who saw sedition in dissent.

The American Bar Association should have had a more enlightened view of the nation's founding principles. Yet it not only joined in the red-baiting of the 1950s but sought dirt about the lawyers guild from the FBI. The sordid story has been buried for two decades in FBI files, which have now been made available to us.

The bar association's chief communist hunter, Austin Canfield Sr., telephoned the FBI in January 1952 to ask for information that could be used against the guild. A top FBI official, Louis B. Nichols, reported in a memo that Canfield "was in favor of taking ... on" the guild.

Nichols then supplied Canfield with a report charging that the guild worked closely with communist factions. As one piece of evidence, the report declared that the guild had blasted the FBI's "Gestapo activities," and attacked the ABA. Any criticism of the FBI was considered akin to treason.

One month later, Canfield made another call to the FBI and Nichols again related the conversation in a confidential memo. "Canfield ... stated ... there will be ... an attempt to move the American Bar Association into action against the National Lawyers Guild," reported Nichols. "He feels the ... guild has now gone far enough and that now is the time to act."

The FBI, meanwhile, searched its "security index" for information about guild officers. Four memos were prepared, advised an FBI memo, which "may be of possible assistance to the American Bar Association."

As late as the 1960s, long after the red scare had abated, the president-elect of the American Bar Association, John C. Satterfield, met with Hoover to discuss "matters of mutual interest between the FBI and the ABA," according to a written account of the meeting.

Satterfield lavished praise upon the crusty FBI director and offered to do favors for him. Later, Satterfield asked another FBI official for "background information" on the guild. Apparently, he planned to use the information to discredit guild members. For an FBI memo states:

"(Satterfield) would like to reinstitute this policy of not only barring members of the NLG from becoming members of the ABA but also expel from the ABA any attorney who continues to be associated with the NLG and fosters its aims."

FBI officials, with Hoover's permission noted with a terse "OK H," sent Satterfield a 24-page report on the National Lawyers Guild. This compared the guild's positions with those of the Communist Party. The fact thet both groups adopted the same line on the racial question and civil liberties, of course, didn't prove they were allied. The ABA ultimately balked at officially barring guild members.

Footnote: Satterfield conceded to our associate, Larry Kraftowitz, that he was "not in sympathy" with some of the guild's activities. But he said he couldn't remember discussing the guild with FBI officials. The FBI declined to comment because it is involved in litigation with the guild. The guild is suing the FBI for illegal surveillance and harassment.

BACKROOM BATTLE: Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., the crusty chairman of the Armed Services Committee, is trying to kill a plan for tougher investigations of presidential appointees.

A Senate Office of Nominations that would probe the backgrounds and financial dealings of nominees is being pushed by Sens. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., and Charles Percy, R-Ill., who were greatly embarrassed by the Bert Lance affair.

But Stennis, who prefers to approve nominations in the cloakrooms with a handshake and a wink, objects to "another layer of responsibility," his spokesmen said. "He likes the one-on-one situation of nominee and senator." Stennis also objects to setting fixed standards that would "exclude some people" and "drive others into bankruptcy."

The proposed standards, however, are merely guidelines suggesting that the noninee should be "qualified" and have "personal and professional integrity." His financial data would also be made public.

Senators such as Stennis, one congressional investigator explained, like to have a free rein over these matters, especially if it's an ex-congressman or former staff member that they're approving. "The background checks by some of these committees are non-existent," he said.

Mark Russell says

Panama's General Torrijos arrived in Washington for the Monthly Clarification of the Treaty Meeting, and it is now perfectly clear: we will defend the canal on alternate Tuesdays.

Panama has demanded that we add the following to the agreement: "If at any time you are completely dissatisfied with the Canal, please return it within 30 days with the unused water and we will gladly refund Ronald Reagan."

The treaty states that the United States will join Panama in defending the Canal against any threat. This is like the Dodgers asking Truman Capote to help them beat the Yankees.

After the clarification, Torrijos said to Carter, "Next time, my place."

INSIDE REPORT:

Disillusionment noted among Mesquite, Tex., voters

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

MESQUITE, Tex. — Lower-middle income voters of Dallas County Precinct No. 267, beleaguered by rising food and fuel costs, would still vote for Jimmy Carter today but are losing hope he really will help them or, indeed, is much different from other politicians.

"It seems to me like everything's just the same as it was before he was elected," the 26-year-old wife of a home insulation installer told us. Would she vote for President Carter or for former President Ford if the election were held again today? After an embarrassingly long pause, she replied: "Carter — I guess."

That typifies interviews with 57 registered voters in Mesquite's Precinct 267, conducted with the help of Patrick Caddell's Cambridge Survey Research. A blue-collar neighborhood of young married couples (median voters' age, 34; median income, $13,287), this precinct was carried narrowly by Mr. Carter last year after supporting Republicans in recent presidential elections.

While 40 of our 57 voters said they voted for Mr. Carter last year, only 36 would today. Since this includes two 1976 Ford voters switching to the President, six Carter voters have defected. That is no dramatic reversal but hints of trouble among Southern white workers essential to Jimmy Carter's election.

The Carter disillusionment of 1977, just as the Carter support of 1976, is tied to a deep public longing for a leader who can help them. "I thought he would be a more forceful leader," said the 51-year-old wife of a retired factory foreman who adds she would vote for Ford today. "I don't know of anything he's done that he said he would," a 33-year-old machinist told us. This Carter voter does not know whom he would vote for today.

Evans Novak

These few switches are the tip of the iceberg. Many loyalist Carterites are less than happy. A young salesman, a self-described conservative Democrat like many voters here, opposes the Panama Canal treaties "because the Communists could take over," resents "amnesty for draft dodgers" and complains "Carter hasn't done that much." Nevertheless, he would vote for the President again.

This loyalty can be explained partly by Mr. Carter's continued personal popularity. These voters give him a 67 per cent favorable rating. In contrast these voters rated Mr. Carter's performance as President at only 52 per cent favorable.

Anemic though this overall rating is, it is healthier than these voters, view of the President's approach to specific problems. While approving the way he handles unemployment, they are evenly split over the Carter approach to the Middle East and the Soviet Union. But they disapprove of his efforts on inflation (by 2 to 1) and energy.

Significantly, these interconnected issues, inflation and energy, most disturb the young wage-earners of Precinct 267. The plush skyscrapers of Dallas to the west, 15 minutes away on the freeway, are a world removed from these modest homes where not even combined salaries of husbands and wives can cover rising food prices and utility costs. Thus, when only 16 voters favored the Carter energy plan, they were giving the President "no confidence" on the issue that bothers them most.

Unlike the Dallas corporate executives, these Mesquite voters are opposed to natural gas price deregulation by 3 to 2. But despite Mr. Carter's prolonged attack against deregulation, 25 voters were unsure of his position, 17 thought he favored deregulation and only 16 believed he opposed it. This astonishingly fuzzy perception can perhaps be explained partly by candidate Carter's support for deregulation.

The President's reduced status here has no apparent connection with Bert Lance. Of 32 voters who had followed the case, an overwhelming majority applauded the President for letting Lance quit gracefully.

Mr. Carter's mistake in Mesquite is not Lance but Panama, with voters opposing the treaties nearly 2-to-1. The canal question was volunteered by seven voters as Mr. Carter's worst act as President; no other issue was mentioned negatively by more than two voters.

Jimmy Carter's status in Precinct 267 emerges clearly in the attitude of one 1976 Ford voter who supports Mr. Carter today. "I guess I've been satisfied with Carter so far for at least trying," the young wife of a customer service operator told us. But she could think of no action by Carter she liked, opposes his energy plan and denounces the Panama Canal treaties in Reaganesque language: "I feel we built it; it's ours after all these years we took care of it." How long such voters will continue to support the President seems highly doubtful.

Rains flood Kansas City

By The Associated Press

Heavy rain fell in Kansas City over the weekend, with some minor destruction reported in low-lying areas as up to three inches fell in some sections.

Rivers and streams in northwest Missouri were expected to crest above flood stage at some points today and Tuesday, but no serious flooding is expected.

The national forecast was for showers scattered over parts of Washington state, most of the Mississippi Valley and the lower Great Lakes region today. Rain showers were also expected over parts of Tennessee and Florida and there was a chance for thunderstorms over the eastern half of Texas into Louisiana.

President leads rites

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter is leading the nation's Veterans Day observance by placing a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery.

Max Cleland, the head of the Veterans Administration, planned to accompany Carter to today's ceremony. Cleland lost both legs and an arm in a 1968 grenade explosion in Vietnam.

This is the last year the holiday will fall on different dates around the country. Next year all 50 states return to the traditional Nov. 11.

Forty-seven states have already gone back to that date.

Only Utah, Hawaii and Washington, D.C., are observing it today, while Rhode Island honors veterans Nov. 7. For most federal employes, the holiday is today.

The confusion began in 1968 when Congress moved several holidays from their traditional dates to Mondays to create more three-day weekends.

Since 1919 Veterans Day had been observed on Nov. 11. Beginning in 1971, the holiday, originally called Armistice Day, was switched to the fourth Monday in October.

Odessa to act on rate boost

ODESSA — The Odessa City Council is expected to approve on second reading an ordinance allowing Texas Electric Service Co. an 8.33 per cent rate increase when the council meets at 9 a.m. Tuesday in council chambers.

TESCO has requested an increase of 23.6 per cent, and the Public Utilities Commission has recommended an increase of approximately 15 per cent.

If the PUC approves a higher rate than the City Council, TESCO could appeal to the PUC.

"Today most of your electricity is made with cheap natural gas. But this gas will be gone soon.

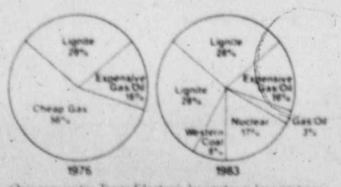
How will we supply the electricity you'll need then?"

"About 70 percent of the electricity you use today is generated in plants that run on natural gas.

Most of it is gas we got at a low price many years ago. But those long-term contracts will expire soon.

At the Monticello plant near Mt. Pleasant, two lignite coal units are in operation now and a third unit is under construction.

This is why our construction budget is nearly a quarter-billion dollars this year — so we can continue building plants that can use other fuels, specifically lignite coal and nuclear.



One reason for Texas Electric's low rates is low cost gas contracted for years ago. As the chart on the left shows, more than half the fuel we use now is cheap natural gas. But our contracts for this gas expire soon. The chart on the right shows how we will replace this gas by 1983 with more abundant fuels.

The first unit of the Comanche Peak nuclear plant is scheduled to go into service in 1981 and the second unit in 1983.

And we have five lignite coal-fired generating units in operation now, with five more under construction. Others are being planned.

By 1983, over 80 percent of your electricity will come from coal and nuclear fueled plants. This is how we intend to continue supplying you with the electricity you'll need."

Electricity. You count on it today. We're working to keep it that way.

Expert testifies on bullet

AMARILLO, Tex. (AP) — A crime lab expert testified today a visual examination of a socalled "judge's bullet" indicated it was not linked to a shooting spree at Cullen Davis' Fort Worth mansion.

But Frank Shiller conceded that was merely a "tentative conclusion" based on "prominent features" he observed on the spent projectile.

He said also he did find similarities between the bullet and those recovered from the body of one the shooting victims.

The bullet got its name because it was received through the mail last month by trial Judge George Dowlen. The identity of the sender is unknown.

Shiller, director of the Fort Worth Crime Lab, took the stand for the 10th day as the state wound down its marathon case against the Fort Worth millionaire.

Davis, 44, is on trial for the 1976 slaying of his stepdaughter Andrea, 12, one of two killed in a shooting spree that left two others gravely wounded.

Defense lawyers concluded seven days of cross-examining Shiller on Saturday but were questioning him today on recross about the bullet and other items of evidence.

Shiller was expected to be the final prosecution witness and the state appeared ready to rest its case when his testimony was ended.

HHH gets presidential escort to Washington

By EDWARD WALSH
The Washington Post

MINNEAPOLIS — With the voices of his grandchildren calling out "Goodbye, Grandpa" through the rush of the wind, Hubert H. Humphrey left Minnesota Sunday in the company of the man who now holds the prize Humphrey sought for so long.

President Carter, returning to Washington from Los Angeles, stopped here just long enough to escort Sen. Humphrey and his wife, Muriel, aboard the presidential aircraft that returned them to the nation's capital.

On an overcast, breezy, cool Minnesota afternoon, the two men stood together at the airport as Carter recited a litany of Americans who owe a debt to Humphrey's three decades of public service: "Every elderly person in our nation, every poor person in our nation, every black person in our nation ..."

Pale and thin, his voice at times wavering, Humphrey grinned broadly and told more than 1,000 people who saw him off that he is feeling much better but that "everything, of course, is relative."

The 66-year-old Minnesota Democrat is suffering from inoperable cancer, and Carter's flight to pick him up was a touching gesture of warmth for the Democratic Party's venerable "Happy Warrior."

But in another sense, and not just because of the emotion of the moment, the President's stop here was the highlight of a cross-country trip, giving a lift to Carter's weary traveling party, and perhaps the President himself, after three days in which the high points seemed few.

Carter left Washington on Friday, heading for five states he lost last November before reaching the friendly Democratic confines of Minnesota. He embarked on the journey with his standing in the polls slipping, and with an increasing number of questions being posed about the quality of his leadership.

Whether he accomplished what he wanted to, only he knew for sure.

The purpose of the President's jaunt across the country was never entirely clear, even at the beginning. By journey's end, any sense of focus or central purpose seemed lost in the blur of Carter's public appearances and in the sheer volume of the issues facing his administration that he sought to address, if only in passing.

It was in part to be a mobile pep rally on energy, an appeal to the American people to help him extract an acceptable energy plan from the Congress. But his attacks on the oil companies were muted, and the statistics he cited about oil imports and the cost of deregulating natural gas seemed hardly calculated to inspire.

It was in part a nostalgic trip back to the long campaign trail that brought him to the White House. The President returned to Iowa, to the state's Jefferson-Jackson Day Dinner, where two years ago he won a straw poll among potential Democratic presidential nominees and finally gained the national media attention he so craved.

Carter spoke warmly of Iowa and the people there who helped him early. But he spoke little of agriculture policy or declining farm prices, and most of what he said on those topics was greeted in silence by 3,000 people in the Des Moines Veterans Auditorium.

Finally, Carter's trip came down to politics, and to that necessity of politics, fund-raising. That brought

45.1 percent of required oil to be imported

By MAX B. SKELTON
AP Oil Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Oil imports will account for 45.1 per cent of the nation's petroleum requirements this year, an industry study indicated today.

The Independent Petroleum Association of America study said, by comparison, that foreign oil in 1972, the last full year prior to the Arab oil embargo, accounted for only 29 per cent of domestic supply.

The report added, however, that 1978 imports should drop to 43.1 per cent of total supply.

"The nation's rising dependence on imported oil will be stemmed temporarily due to the combined efforts of increased domestic crude oil production, improved efficiency in energy use and greater utilization of domestic coal and nuclear power."

The supply and demand study was released at the annual meeting of the 5,000-member trade group that represents independent operators from more than 30 states.

The report said the 1978 factors that should permit oil imports to drop a bit will not be sufficient, however, to meet the nation's future energy needs.

"Finding and developing U.S. oil and gas resources are essential," the report said.

"Hopefully, deliberations in Congress will lead to adoption of policies which recognize the best interest of the nation will be served by encouraging activities to find and develop this country's potential oil and gas reserves."

The association's tax committee voted Sunday that there is an urgent need for President Carter's energy proposals to be revised to include specific incentives to enable domestic producers to maximize oil and gas explorations.

The tax committee is expected to recommend Tuesday that the trade group vigorously oppose a Conference Committee report on the energy package if it fails to include such incentives.

The supply and demand report estimated 1977 domestic petroleum demand at 18.5 million barrels a day, a 6.1 per cent increase above the 1976 level. Much of the increase was attributed to extremely cold weather last winter, increased air conditioning requirements this summer, and an extended drought that reduced available hydropower in western states.

"In 1978, domestic demand is forecast to rise to 19.2 million barrels daily, 3.5 per cent or 600,000 barrels per day above 1977," the report said.

"The projected moderation in the rate of increase in U.S. petroleum demand assumes normal weather in 1978, increased contributions by coal and nuclear power, and continued progress is using energy more efficiently."

Energy tax bill in Senate

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy and taxes dominate congressional action this week as the Senate takes up an energy tax bill, the House debates Social Security taxes and a conference committee works on a national energy policy.

While the rest of Congress planned to take Veterans Day off, the House-Senate energy conference committee was summoned to work on the holiday by its chairman, Rep. Harley Staggers, D-W.Va., who said today's session was "in the national interest."

The panel made scant progress in three long sessions last week, agreeing only on a compromise requiring utilities to help consumers insulate their homes — one of the less controversial issues facing the 43-member committee.

This week it will look at President Carter's proposal to force most utilities and industries burning oil and natural gas to convert to coal. The House passed the President's program, but the Senate voted to allow all but the biggest plants to continue using oil.

The Carter administration can be expected to lobby hard for the House version and to try to persuade conferees to adopt a compromise bill resembling it. The Senate rejected most of the major proposals in the Carter energy plan.

The Senate on Tuesday takes up the final part of that energy legislation — its tax aspects.

But the bill sent to the floor by the Senate Finance Committee contains none of House-passed taxes the President has proposed to conserve energy by making scarce fuels more costly.

The committee rejected taxes on crude oil, fuel-inefficient cars and the oil and natural gas used by utilities and factories. Instead, it approved some $40 billion in tax breaks to encourage energy conservation and increased production.

Debate is expected to last all week.

Senate Democratic leaders are hopeful the President's tax program can be salvaged in a conference committee.

But in the meantime, a group of Senate liberals led by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., have vowed to try to kill off many of the tax breaks in the bill.

And several attempts are expected to be launched on the floor to revive some of the taxes before the bill goes to the conference committee.

The House begins debate Wednesday on a bill to rescue the deficit-plagued Social Security System by tax increases that would fall most heavily on higher-paid workers and their employers.

The Senate Finance Committee will continue work this week on its own version of the Social Security overhaul bill.

Votes are scheduled in the House on Tuesday on a bill to prohibit the use of children in pornography and on treaties that would allow Americans in Mexican jails to be sent to federal prisons in this country — and vice versa.

Woman's Club felines act like shy beggars

Every creature needs a place to call home.

Three unnamed felines who hang around the Midland Woman's Club at Hogan Park have found their territory: the club.

They don't wander in with the freedom of a member. They're not allowed.

But these pleasant-enough mendicants make for comely fixtures.

There's the tame "Momma" cat. This gray-and-yellow-haired lady has planted herself at the doorstep for nigh on nine years.

She has been through many a litter.

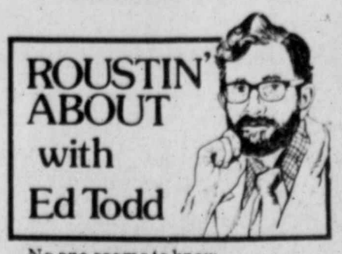
Momma cat has a couple of young'uns living with her now. One of them wasn't making any public appearances around the time of a luncheon last Friday.

The other, a girl-cat that could do well with the name "Cute Yellar" (she was both), was either half wild or else wisely suspicious of strangers.

Upon the approach of an unfamiliar human, she would quickly raise from the maroon doormat and hobble off into the bushes.

She had three legs.

What happened to her?



No one seems to know.

Delma Jones, who has been the club's cook for almost nine years, said she first noticed the little hobbler this September, when the club reopened. It's normally closed during the summer months.

"She had only three legs (then)," Mrs. Jones said. "I don't know if something bit it off."

The hopping young cat and the rest of her family are well fed from the leftovers. They bunk down each night in the bushes, Mrs. Jones reckoned.

Momma cat is always there when Mrs. Jones comes to work at 8 in the morning.

Panama votes for treaties

By ANNE ZUSY

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — A big turnout of Panamanian voters gave the new Panama Canal treaties overwhelming approval, unofficial returns from the nationwide referendum showed today.

The election tribunal reported 149,178 yes votes to 76,311 noes cast Sunday in 910 of the 3,038 voting districts. This was nearly 30 per cent of the estimated 800,000 eligible voters.

Election officials said most of these votes were cast in Panama province, including Panama City, the seat of much of the opposition to the treaties. Government officials predicted returns from the provinces would raise the total in favor of the pacts to 70 or 75 per cent.

The final official count is to be announced Thursday.

Panama's chief of government, Gen. Omar Torrijos, predicted the U.S. Senate would also ratify the treaties despite the strong opposition in the United States.

Torrijos said the senators must realize the treaties "go beyond their electoral districts. They're playing with the luck of maritime navigation all over the world.

"It's the senators who have to explain to the people, not the people who have to explain to the senators," he added in an interview.

Torrijos voted in the morning and then toured Panama City in a military truck loaded with reporters. Cheering crows welcomed him everywhere, and his shirt collar was red with lipstick by the time he returned home.

There were no reports of opposition activity during the voting Sunday. A number of rallies had been held in the week before, and opponents of the treaties claimed the plebescite was fixed. Torrijos denied the charge, and invited three dozen foreign observers to check on the voting.

Everyone 18 and over was eligible to vote. Those voting were fingerprinted, required to present identification cards which were punched, and their thumbs were inked.

The main treaty, one of two signed in Washington Sept. 7 by Torrijos and President Carter, provides for the United States to surrender the canal and the 500-square-mile canal zone to Panama by the year 2000. The second document declares the waterway a neutral zone and allows U.S. intervention in the event of a threat to its security.

Torrijos and his government waged a strong campaign in favor of the treaties, but opponents were encouraged to speak out. It was the first time since he took over the government in a 1968 coup that a political issue in which there was any opposition to the government was debated publicly.

Woman dies in accident

COMMERCE — A Midland woman was killed and her husband seriously injured Sunday in a two-car accident two miles south of this northeast Texas town. Two others were killed and two seriously injured in the accident.

Janice Barber, 63, of 607 W. Estes Ave., died at Medical-Surgical Clinic in Commerce about 35 minutes after the 3:15 p.m. accident, a spokesman for the Department of Public Safety said.

Her husband, Ernest Barber, 57, was listed in serious condition in Greenville Hospital with broken ribs and other internal injuries, according to DPS reports.

Both Midland residents were passengers in a car driven by James Earl Barber, 52, of Dallas. James Barber and his wife, Zeta, died Sunday from injuries received in the accident. The Barbers were returning from a family reunion, the DPS said.

The accident occurred when the car driven by James Barber and one driven by Geraldine Barham of Paris collided on Texas 50 near Commerce. Mrs. Barham was listed in serious condition in McCuistion Hospital in Paris. A passenger in her car, Robin Barham, 18, was listed in fair condition in McCuistion Hospital, the DPS said.

Light rains dampen area over weekend

The chance of rain has petered out with only slight rainfall recordings made over the weekend, the weatherman said.

The National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Air Terminal recorded .2 inch of rainfall early Sunday. Over the weekend, Texas Electric Service Co. recorded .18 inch of rainfall in east Midland and .17 inch in south Midland. Also, within the last 24 hours, the company noted Odessa had .01 inch of rainfall and Monahans had .43 inch.

Stadium field house looted by burglars

Several football jerseys and pants, valued at a total of $275, and $25 in change were taken from the Midland High School field house at Midland Memorial Stadium between 6 p.m. Saturday and 4 p.m. Sunday, according to police.

Police said entry was gained by removing a roof ventilator. A key taken from a desk was used to gain entry to a soft-drink machine police said.

MONEY TAKEN

About $400 in change was taken from a soft-drink machine at J & S Laundry, 3104 N. Big Sprimg St., about 4:15 a.m. Sunday, police said.

Police officers were notified of the burglary by an alarm, they said. The money was removed by prying open the front door of the machine, police said.

morning, and she always meets me here," she said.

Momma cat has been meeting with more than just kindly human types.

She has about three litters each year or "as often as she can have them," noted Inez Kuenstler, the club's manager.

"She ought to be mother of the year," she said.

The ever-hospitable Bessye Cowden Ward has loaned out her F-Bar Ranch to benefit the Buffalo Trail Council of the Boy Scouts of America.

Well, what she's really doing is letting Midland's Carol Swain throw her very first Hanging Tree Round-up there to benefit the lads.

Of course, it'll cost to get into "the show" next Saturday afternoon and night at the round-up's site just south of Odessa.

Since Mrs. Swain runs a fine arts gallery called the Hanging Tree, the slant of the round-up will be on art.

Works by more than 20 artists from across the nation will be shown.

The barbecue and "the works," served at the event will be prepared by Odessa'a Chuck Wagon Gang.

And entertainment from 2 p.m. on will be played by area bands and performers from Happy Shahan's Alamo Village at Brackettville.

Depending on what you wamt to give, the cost per guest starts at 10 bucks.

Mrs. Swain declares that the art, music, food, dancing under the stars, and all that will be worth anybody's while.

It'll certainly be worth something to the Scouts. Any funds they get out of the round-up will help them maintain the council's ranch in the Davis Mountains.

Call her, and Carol Swain will reserve a spot for you.

There's another Scout benefit coming up Saturday. This one will be a father-son cake-baking contest at Midkiff. It's cued to Halloween. It'll all start at 7:30 p.m. at the El Paso Natural Gas Co. plant.

The dough raised at the Halloweem carnival will go toward buying the used school bus to do their traveling in when they're hankering to go on a camping trip.

him Saturday night to Los Angeles and the glitter of a $1,000 a plate Democratic Party dinner.

It was near the end of a typically brutal day of travel for the President, begun before dawn in the Midwest and ending around midnight in California.

It was a politically important appearance for Carter in a state whose governor, Edmund G. (Jerry) Brown Jr., is considered his most dangerous rival within his own party.

Outside the Century Plaza Hotel hundreds of demonstrators milled about in the service of one cause or another. And a mile away, in another hotel, there was a counter-dinner, its purpose to show displeasure with the President's Middle East policy.

But except for an attempt to reassure his own heavily Jewish audience of his support for Israel, Carter took little notice of any of these or other signs of discontent with his administration. In his soft voice and controversial style, he rambled on about what he seeks for the country, about energy and government reorganization and limiting strategic nuclear weapons and stopping nuclear proliferation.

The audience sat and listened quietly.

There was one moment when they came alive. It was when the President told the Californians he was getting up early Sunday to fly to Minnesota and pick up "the greatest Democrat of all."

He had said much the same thing earlier, in Detroit and Des Moines, and it never failed to move his listeners. He repeated it in Minneapolis Sunday, with Humphrey at his side, calling him "the greatest American that I know, the No. 1 Democrat in our country."

When his turn came, Humphrey told how he was called Friday night by former President Ford and how, after some haggling over the point spread, they had bet $5 on the outcome of the Minnesota-Michigan football game Saturday. Minnesota won the game, and Humphrey won the bet.

"I hope that is legal," the Senator told Carter, "I am not sure. If it isn't, I ask for forgiveness."

"I will pardon you on that one," the President replied.

Then the two men and Mrs. Humphrey turned and walked slowly up the stairs of Air Force One, pausing to wave to the crowd one last time before disappearing inside.

Building named for Humphrey

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Carter Sunday signed legislation that names the headquarters of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare here in honor of Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), the former vice president.

The President signed the bill aboard Air Force One at Andrews Air Force Base after he and the Humphreys returned to Washington from Minneapolis. Humphrey's fellow Minnesotan, Vice President Mondale, joined the signing ceremony.

Jewelry, stolen guns recovered

Midland police have recovered almost all of the jewelry and guns taken in a burglary of the Sam Chaney residence, 3200 block of West Wadley Avenue, between Oct. 15 and 17, according to detective Capt. Billy Ray.

A number of guns and jewelry valued at a total of $50,000 were taken in the burglary.

"I feel like we have recovered almost everything in this (burglary)," Ray said today.

Ray said the property was recovered in El Paso by members of the Midland Police Department who worked with Department of Public Safety intelligence officers.

Chaney told police he and his wife returned home Oct. 17 to find their house burglarized.

Police said about 50 guns along with expensive jewelry were taken. The guns included pistols, rifles and shotguns.

Neighbors said they heard noises coming from the Chaney house early Oct. 17, but thought the Chaneys were home.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Aspirin can help arthritis

Dear Dr. Solomon: The other day, I came across an article that said the government shouldn't permit companies to claim that aspirin helps arthritis. Does this mean it doesn't really do any good?—Iv'e had arthritis for a good 10 or 15 years, and I've been taking aspirin regularly—it is the one thing I have always felt I could count on for relief.—Helen Y.

Dear Helen: I don't think the article you saw was suggesting that aspirin was not any good. Aspirin is a long-established and remarkably safe and effective drug for the relief of the pain and inflammation caused by arthritis.

What has happened, and what I believe the article was referring to, is that an expert Food and Drug Administration panel feels that it should not be stated on the label that aspirin helps arthritis because it may encourage people to treat themselves without consulting a doctor. Also, they might need additional kinds of treatment to avoid irreversible damage to joints and other tissues.

The panel also recommended that aspirin labels include warnings about taking aspirin at the same time as certain prescription drugs or during the last three months of pregnancy except on the advice of a doctor. Certain side effects like ringing in the ears were also mentioned.

The panel of experts put forth some recommendations about the labeling of acetaminophen, the other main non-prescription drug for relief of aches and fever which is often usedby those who cannot take aspirin. The experts found no basis for claims that acetaminophen is safer than aspirin. Further, they want the label to warn against the danger of liver damage in case of acetaminophen overdose.

The concern of this panel of experts was simply with the labeling of the two products—always something of a problem with drugs you do not need a prescription for. There was no quarrel with the drugs themselves. Both were found to be safe and effective by this advisory board.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'd give anything to be able to get some real exercise everyd ay, but I work in an office all day and there is no park or gym nearby I could go to in my lunch hour. And as for my apartment, forget it—I'm squeezed into one and a half rooms like just about everyone else I know.—W.L.

Dear W.L.: Jumping rope is excellent exercise, and it doesn't require a lot of space. If you have too much furniture in your apartment, you can even do it in the hallway outside. Start off with 10 jumps and add 10 more every day until you are up to 300 or 400—whatever is the most comfortable. Just remember that you should check with your doctor before embarking on any kind of exercise program.

Vorster denies nuclear promise

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — South Africa's Prime Minister John Vorster said in an interview broadcast Sunday he did not promise President Carter that South Africa would not develop nuclear weapons.

"I am not aware of any promise that I gave to President Carter," the prime minister on "Issues and Answers" (ABC-TV). "I repeated a statement which I have made very often that, as far as South Africa is concerned, we are only interested in peaceful development of nuclear facilities," he said.

On Aug. 23 Carter announced that South African officials had given the United States such assurances. "They do not have and do not intend to develop nuclear explosive devices for any purposes, either peaceful or as a weapon ... " the President said, adding, "We appreciate this commitment from South Africa."

Reports early last August that the white-minority government of South Africa was planning to test a nuclear weapon alarmed many nations. South Africa vigorously denied the reports, the first of which was published by the Soviet news agency Tass on Aug. 8.

But suspicious were raised when American and Soviet satellite reconnaissance produced photographs of a potential nuclear test site in the Kalahari Desert region of South Africa, near the Southwest African (Namibian) border.

The Soviet Union, United States, Britain, France, West Germany and other countries worked in concert to try to prevent South Africa from entering the world's nuclear club.

Many of those nations feared that South Africa's detonation of a nuclear weapon would be done as a gesture of defiance against world condemnation of its racial policies and would endanger international peace and security.

Carter called on South Africa to sign a nuclear nonproliferation treaty designed to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons.

But Vorster said in the interview Sunday his country wants "certain guarantees before we sign that treaty, and until such time as we have those guarantees, then the status quo will remain."

The prime minister's comments on the treaty came at the end of the interview, and there was no time for elaboration on his request for "certain guarantees" and his meaning of "status quo."

"Unfortunately, that is always the case. We run out of time," Vorster said in conclusion.

The White House declined comment on Vorster's statements, which were taped last Monday in Pretoria — two days before the cabinet headed by Vorster banned major black organizations, including the largest black newspaper and ordered mass arrests of opponents of the South African system of racial separation.

As if anticipating the heightened criticism those actions would, and did, engender, Vorster said in the interview his countrymen are "prepared to stand alone if we must" in carrying out its racial policies.

The prime minister was especially critical of the "meddling" of the United States and Soviet Union in South Africa's affairs.

"It appears to us at the moment (that) the Soviets want to kill us off by force and the United States wants to strangle us with finesse," Vorster said. He said the United States' attempt to "strangle ... with finesse" began with the Carter administration and ha manifested itself economically in South Africa.

"We have had actual cases where people have told us straight out that they were under terrific pressure" from the American government to withdraw investments from South Africa, Vorster charged.

He added, "You know we can't force people to do business in South Africa, and if their governments made it impossible for them to carry on business in South Africa, then I take it ... they will stop, leave a vacuum, and somebody else will flow into that vacuum."

Rains flood Kansas City

By The Associated Press

Heavy rain fell in Kansas City over the weekend, with some minor destruction reported in low-lying areas as up to three inches fell in some sections.

Rivers and streams in northwest Missouri were expected to crest above flood stage at some points today and Tuesday, but no serious flooding is expected.

The national forecast was for showers scattered over parts of Washington state, most of the Mississippi Valley and the lower Great Lakes region today. Rain showers were also expected over parts of Tennessee and Florida and there was a chance for thunderstorms over the eastern half of Texas into Louisiana.

Mild temperatures were expected over the northern and central plateau and Rocky Mountain regions, as well as across the lower Ohio Valley and the Gulf and South Atlantic Coast areas.

The northern half of the Pacific Coast was expected to be mild to cool, with warmer temperatures to the south.

Odessa to act on rate boost

ODESSA — The Odessa City Council is expected to approve on second reading an ordinance allowing Texas Electric Service Co. an 8.33 per cent rate increase, when the council meets at 9 a.m. Tuesday in council chambers.

If the PUC approves a higher rate than the City Council, TESCO could appeal to the PUC.

Chicago hotel blaze claims seven lives

CHICAGO (AP) — The careless use of a cigarette appeared to be the cause of a fire in a South Side Chicago hotel that took seven lives and injured 12 persons, authorities said.

The damage estimate in Sunday's early morning blaze at the Hotel Toledo was estimated at $35,000, officials said.

The fire apparently started in a first-floor apartment of the Hotel Toledo and quickly engulfed the two-story brick building, driving residents, some of them only partially clothed, out second floor windows in desperate efforts to escape, authorities said.

"That place was a death trap," said a patrolman at the scene who asked not to be identified. Six of the seven who died were trapped during the blaze in a first-floor addition to the hotel.

One of the 30 fire fighters at the scene was knocked unconscious when a woman jumped from the hotel's second floor and landed on him as he was climbing a ladder to rescue her.

"I took one lady down the ladder and was climbing up to get another when she came down, but not by the ladder," the fire fighter, William Olson of the Twelfth Battalion, said later.

The hotel, displaying a sign reading "Transients Welcome. From $5," is in a neighborhood of decaying commercial buildings, pockmarked by boarded windows and scars of earlier fires.

Fire fighters from a station just three blocks away found the hotel engulfed in smoke when they arrived. The first floor already was "blown out," they said. About 30 residents were evacuated.

Jessie Townsend, 27, of Chicago said he was was in the hotel when the fire erupted. He and his girlfriend dropped to the floor, and the woman screamed, "We're going to die, we're going to die," said Townsend, who suffered smoke inhalation, burns and multiple bruises.

In an interview from his bed at Englewood Hospital, Townsend said he remembered nothing more until after he regained consciousness in the hospital.

The dead were identified as Larry Johnson, 36, and Cheryl McKinzie, 23, Sally Watson, 34, Sandra Fisher, 20, Thayle Taylor, 41, Frank Collier, 44, and A.J. Bates, 25, all of Chcago.

President leads rites

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter is leading the nation's Veterans Day observance by placing a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery.

Max Cleland, the head of the Veterans Administration, planned to accompany Carter to today's ceremony. Cleland lost both legs and an arm in a 1968 grenade explosion n Vietnam.

This is the last year the holiday will fall on different dates around the country. Next year all 50 states return to the traditional Nov. 11.

Forty-seven states have already gone back to that date.

Only Utah, Hawaii and Washington, D.C., are observing it today, while Rhode Island honors veterans Nov. 7. For most federal employes, the holiday is today.

The confusion began in 1968 when Congress moved several holidays from their traditional dates to Mondays to create more three-day weekends.

Since 1919 Veterans Day had been observed on Nov. 11. Beginning in 1971, the holiday, originally called Armistice Day, was switched to the fourth Monday in October.

Kirby Sewell, senior electrical engineer for TESCO, checks construction progress at the Comanche Peak nuclear plant site.

"Today most of your electricity is made with cheap natural gas. But this gas will be gone soon.

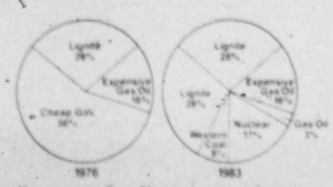
How will we supply the electricity you'll need then?"

"About 70 percent of the electricity you use today is generated in plants that run on natural gas.

Most of it is gas we got at a low price many years ago. But those long-term contracts will expire soon.

At the Monticello plant near Mt. Pleasant, two lignite coal units are in operation now and a third unit is under construction.

This is why our construction budget is nearly a quarter-billion dollars this year — so we can continue building plants that can use other fuels, specifically lignite coal and nuclear.



One reason for Texas Electric's low rates is low cost gas contracted for years ago. As the chart on the left shows, more than half the fuel we use now is cheap natural gas. But our contracts for this gas expire soon. The chart on the right shows how we will replace this gas by 1983 with more abundant fuels.

The first unit of the Comanche Peak nuclear plant is scheduled to go into service in 1981 and the second unit in 1983.

And we have five lignite coal-fired generating units in operation now, with five more under construction. Others are being planned.

By 1983, over 80 percent of your electricity will come from coal and nuclear fueled plants. This is how we intend to continue supplying you with the electricity you'll need."

Electricity. You count on it today. We're working to keep it that way.

Davis defense due soon

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Prosecution attorneys were to resume questioning today of the Fort Worth crime lab director, who may be the last witness the state will call in the capital murder trial of millionaire Cullen Davis.

Frank Shiller, the crime lab chief, has already faced nine days of questions from attorneys for both sides in the Davis trial that now moves into its 10th week.

Shiller was cross-examined for seven of those days by lead defense counsel Richard "Racehorse" Haynes.

As before, there were indications the prosecution might rest its case today, paving the way for opening defense statements.

Shiller provided the single most important testimony in the case.

He told the jury he positively identified four of nine bullets recovered after shootings at the Davis mansion in Fort Worth last summer that left two dead and two wounded.

Davis is charged with capital murder in the death of his 12-year-old stepdaughter, Andrea Wilborn.

The defendant's estranged wife, Priscilla, 36, was wounded and her lover, Stan Farr, 30, was slain in the shooting spree at the mansion.

Three eyewitnesses identified Davis as the gunman and prosecutors sought to corroborate those accounts through mounds of physical evidence and testimony from police and others who came in contact that night with the survivors.

Program continues

DENVER, Colo. — Anderson Petrolum, Inc., of Denver has reported nearing the halfway point int its 40-well, $9 million drilling program in the Ozona gas field 130 miles southeast of Midland, Tex.

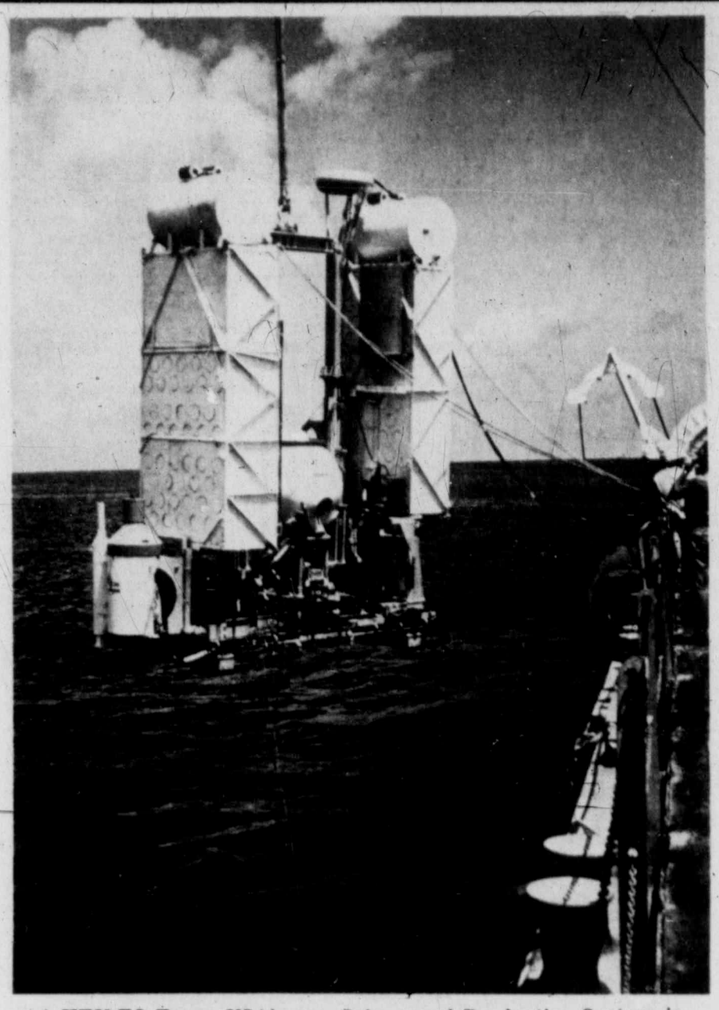
Company president Truman E. Anderson Jr. said the compamy has drilled 16 wells in the program, resulting in 14 gas wells and two dry holes. The gas wells produce from the Canyon sand formation at approximately 6,900 feet.

"This area is an excellent exmaple of what free market prices for natural gas can do," Anderson said.

Hearing announced

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — The Texas Railroad Commission today scheduled a Nov. 10 hearing on a proposal by the City Public Service Board of San Antonio to change its charges and rules and regulations involving gas service to unincorporated areas.

The commission suspended the proposed changes for 120 days, dating from Aug. 1.



A KEY TO Exxon USA's new Submerged Production System is the maintenance manipulator. When needed, the manipulator is taken to the location and performs remotely controlled, routine maintenance operations by replacement of equipment on the system. The manipulator is launched from a workboat and descends to the seafloor structure, where it moves along a track around the Submerged Production System unit. A system of underwater television cameras built into the manipulator allows the operator on the surface to watch and control the movements of the manipulator. Since the SPS was launched offshore, the manipulator has been to the seafloor more than 30 times.

Monument to buy firm

LOVINGTON, N.M. — Monument Energy Corp. announced it has obtained an option to purchase Big Chief Oil Well Service Co. of Denver City, Tex.

The agreement to purchase is subject to an audit of Big Chief's financial records, which Monument Energy is conduct-ing at this time.

Winford Carlile, chairman and chief executive office of Monument Energy, said Big Chief currently has three double-derrick workover rigs and a fourth on order.

The acquisition would bring Monument Energy's oil well serving fleet to 16 rigs, plus the new one due for deliver in the near future.

Big Chief would be the second related acquisition in the area for Monument Energy in the last four months. Bradley Construction Co. of Denver City, another oil well service company, was acquired in July.

Input drops

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Input to crude oil processing units decrease 183,000 barrels per day during the week ended Oct. 14 to 14,903,000 barrels per day compared with 13,633,000 barrels per day during the week ended Oct. 14 in 1976.

Fifty-eight thousand barrels of the decrease were caused by maintenance shutdowns for repairs in Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and in the West Coast area.

Production of motor gasoline in the W. S. increased 294,000 barrels per day during the week ended Oct. 14 to 7,064,000 barrels per day. During the comparable week of 1976, production of motor gasoline was 6,604,000 barrels per day.

Discovery potentials

DALLAS — Maynard Oil Co. has announced completion of a multiple-zone natural gas discovery in Jefferson County.

The strike is 10 miles southwest of Beaumont.

The well had a calculated absolute open flow potential of 22.5 million cubic feet per day.

From perforations in the Nodosaria II sand (Frio) at 10,108-10,112 feet, the well tested 2,438,000 cubic feet of gas and 28 barrels of condensate per day on a ¼-inch choke. On a 14/64-inch choke, the well tested 2,072,000 cubic feet of gas and nine barrels of condensate per day.

A second producing zone, the Nodosaria I sand, was encountered at 9,955 feet. Attempt probably will be made to complete from that zone at a later date.

The well, No. 1 Appelt Properties, was drilled to 10,148 feet.

Official says President's attack on oil dangerous

By BOB GALT

Dallas Times Herald

DALLAS — President Carter's attack on the American petroleum industry is a thoughtless shot at business that could impair the economy and alienate foreign allies, a former high government official said here Saturday.

William P. Clements Jr., who ended four years as deputy defense secretary in January, said that Carter is surrounded by "inexperienced incompetents" in the energy arena — starting with Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger.

Clements identified Schlesinger, his former Defense Department associate, as the orchestrator of the Carter attack and called Schlesinger "a bureaucratic opportunist," and "an intellectually dishonest person."

"In my opinion," Clements said, "Mr. Carter will decide before very long that he has had all of Mr. Schlesinger that he can stand.

"My two and half years with Schlesinger in the Defense Department convinces me that he knows absolutely nothing about the free-enterprise business system and what is required to encourage private capital.

"To the contrary, Mr. Schlesinger is anti-business, (in favor of) more government and more bureaucracy and has, on several occasions, endorsed Sen. Henry Jackson's theory of a national oil company."

Clements, who nine months ago returned to the private sector to resume chairmanship of the world's largest oil and gas drilling firm — Dallas-based Sedco — said, "If Mr. Carter had intentionally sought to recruit the most anti-business, anti-petroleum industry man in the country he couldn't have better succeeded than to bring Schlesinger into his administration."

(A Carter aide said Saturday, "The White House will not dignify Mr. Clements' intemperate attack by a response or a comment." There was no immediate comment from Schlesinger.)

Clements' criticism of Schlesinger came after The Wall Street Journal reported that another former deputy defense secretary who proceded Clements in the Pentagon — David Packard, now chairman of Hewett-Packard Co. — told the Business Council that the Carter energy program is "a disaster," and that Schlesinger "doesn't have the brains God granted a goose about the way the economics system is supposed to work."

Clements said that Carter's recent definition of the petroleum industry as "war profiteers" and potential perpertrators of "the biggest ripoff in history" was thoughtless, vindictive and dangerous.

Clements who drew bipartisan support in his Defense Department and National Security Council service for hard-nosed shepherding of the cruise missile program, accused the Carter administration of building uncertainty in its domestic and foreign stances.

"President Carter and his entourage don't give confidence to the business community," Clements said. "Everything is uncertain. There is this constant lack of continuity, commitment and continuance in our domestic and foreign policies.

"As our business community is currently concerned, so are our allies. The reason? Uncertainty surrounding our position. If we are concerned, domestically, about the fragile structure of the Carter energy plan, so are our allies."

Clements said that it took "eight to 10 years to build a foreign policy that our allies and others could understand. It takes times to mature — but now is it being reversed."

Recently returned from a world-wide inspection of drilling operations, Clements cited the Carter nuclear policy announced in April as a policy switch that collides with nuclear planning of other nations, including some of the closest U.S. allies.

He said the Carter proposal, which among other things deferred indefinitely the reprocessing and recycling of plutonium, had "greatly disturbed" U.S. allies and had brought relations with West Germany to "the worst in years."

Clements said West Germany, the NATO alignment, Japan and Brazil "don't understand the uncertainties" and can't accept the Carter plan because of their belief that nuclear power is the primary means of reducing dependence upon foreign oil.

Clements, in flailing Carter and Schlesinger for their "continuing assault" on the oil and gas industry and business, said neither apparently understands that the United States is firmly locked into a "petro culture."

"Right or wrong, our entire society is based upon petroleum and its products. Our life-style, our industry, our culture is built around energy. As we have grown, our energy requirements have grown. The availability of cheap petroleum has dictated our growth.

"But the day of abundance of cheap energy has passed. Now we must adjust, and it could be painful. Fundamentally, our government has not come to grips with the problem."

He said the Carter concept of solving energy problems through pure conservation will not work.

"The constrictions of conservation, without proper incentives to seek and discover new sources of energy, would eventually produce the evils of more unemployment, more massive welfare, etc."

Clements joined other critics of the Carter energy program in calling it a tax program that does little to stimulate new exploration and recovery of oil and gas. The constant search for energy sources costs enormouse sums because of the complexity and sophistication of today's industry, Clements said.

"If American industry doesn't develop a sense of confidence, it will hold back. We must have sound continuity in our programs. It takes three to five years to make capital work. We just don't turn it off and on like a light switch."

West Texas regions gain wildcat projects

Exploration has been planned for Mitchell, Martin and Pecos counties, and outpost sites have been staked in Pecos and Reeves fields. Also, a Ward pool gained a confirmation well.

Supron Energy Corp., operating from Midland, filed permit application for a 7,800-foot venture in Mitchell, four miles southwest of Colorado City. It is No. 1 Thompson.

Drillsite is 990 feet from south and east lines of section 62, block 27, T&P survey, five miles northwest of the Champion Lake (Yates) gas field.

Supron also will drill No. 2 Thompson, 450 feet from north and 890 feet from east lines of section 75, 5½ miles northwest of the Champion Lake field. It also has a projected bottom depth of 7,800 feet.

MARTIN SEARCHER

BTA Oil Producers of Midland has rescheduled to wildcat depth of 13,500 feet, No. 7-C 7422 JV-S Mustang, previously slated 12,200-foot Dean test in the Lacaff field of Northwest Martin. It is slated to test the Ellenburger zone.

Location is 2,173 feet from south and 900 feet from east lines of section 2, bloc, 7, ULS, 20 miles northwest of Lenorah.

The project, bottomed at 12,284 feet, tested unsuccessfully from Devonian open hole at 12,219-12,222 feet, and from 12,217-12,240 feet. Operator was waiting on rotary rig to deepen.

PECOS PROSPECTOR

Union Texas Petroleum Corp., Midland, will reenter No. 1 Clayton Lowe-University, Pecos County deep failure, eight miles south of Fort Stockton, and test as a wildcat at around 11,900 feet.

Originally drilled by American Trading & Production Corp., it was plugged and abandoned in February 1976 at 24,888 feet.

Located, two miles northeast of the depleted Sheepherder (Leonard) field, it is 1,650 feet from south and 1,980 feet from east lines of section 9, block 27, ULS.

WARD CONFIRMER

Shell Oil Co. No. 10 Sealy-Smith Foundation, second current Fusselman oil well and ½-mile north and slightly east extension to that pay in the Monahans field, finaled for a daily pumping potential of 36 barrels of 42.5-gravity oil, with gas-oil ratio of 306-1.

It finaled through perforations at 8,138-8,295 feet, following 6,800 gallons of acid, and 45,000 gallons, plus 66,000 pounds of fracture.

A former deep oiler, total depth is 10,634 feet, and the plugged-back depth is 10,025 feet.

Location is 650 feet from south and west lines of section 23, block A, G&MMB&A survey, nine miles north of Monahans.

REEVES OUTPOST

Texas Pacific Oil Co., Inc., has scheduled No. 4 ARCO-State, a one-mile east outpost to the Reeves, North (3,200) gas field of Southwest Reeves County.

Location for the 4,250-foot test is 1,980 feet from north and 660 feet from east lines of section 14, block 56, T-3, T&P survey, eight miles south of Orla.

Nation faces blizzard of paper every year

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Last Tuesday the Federal Register and Congressional Record required 35 tons of paper, and the federal government used 175 more tons for memos, copying, letters, envelopes, notebooks and sundry red tape. The government also gobbled up 10,000 new heavy cardboard boxes.

People also used tons of paper towels, disposable diapers, breakfast food from paper cartons, toilet paper, paper plates and cups and TV dinners packaged in paper.

Finally, there were milk cartons, tens of thousands of them. This country is to milk cartons what Saudi Arabia is to oil. It produces 400,000 tons of them a year for use at home, and ships abroad another 400,000 tons from which they are made.

Most Americans seldom give more than a passing thought to this blizzard of paper, perhaps because it is such an everyday convenience. Paper is as pervasive as plastic and steel. It touches our lives every waking hour. Without it, society would quickly break down, so totally do we depend on it to communicate.

Yet the system that brings it to us affects the environment, the labor force, the transportation system, the national economy and the politics of states and regions.

Production of paper and pulp products is a $50 billion-a-year industry, one of the 10 largest in the country. It is such a factor in the economy that the government watches the price of the paper used in heavy cardboard boxes to chart changes in the cost of living.

At the center of this system are the giant international pulp and paper companies — the "multipulps." By almost any measure, these companies are rich, powerful and important.

The sales of 11 paper producing companies exceeded $1 billion apiece last year, and those of 34 others were more than $100 million each. These companies run on enormous amounts of capital, energy and natural resources.

It costs about $220 million today to construct the simplest kinds of mill, one that turns out ordinary brown paper for bags and wrapping. A plant to make the specially treated stiff paper for milk cartons costs more than $400 million and takes up to five years to build.

The plants consume prodigious amounts of electricity. It takes twice as much energy to produce a ton of paper as a ton of steel.

The mills are also chemical plants, which use millions of tons of chemicals to strengthen and bleach wood fiber, and which extract vats of liquid hydrocarbons from the incoming trees. The tree chemicals are then burned like oil to cook the wood and dry the paper.

Despite the high costs of building mills, profits of the companies have increased sharply since paper prices took a sharp upturn starting in 1973.

In the last three years, industry profits have ranged from $1.8 billion to $2 billion.

Profits of any industry are always difficult to evaluate, because each one has special requirement and accounting methods. The paper giants say they need their earnings and tax advantages in part because of the stringent and costly environmental requirements imposed on them in the last 10 years — especially laws governing sulfur emissions from coal buring and purification of the chemical wastes that mills once poured into the nation's waterways.

Yet paper prices rose "more than sufficiently to cover cost changes" in 1974 and 1975, according to a study published last December by the President's Council on Wage and Price Stability. This study noted that the industry's rate of return on equity and its profit margin are "considerably above those achieved in the 1960s."

A substantial amount of the surpluses have been spent in acquisition or expansion. International Paper Co., the world's largest, paid about half a billion dollars in 1975 to acquire an oil company, General Crude. The company hopes to find oil or other minerals on some of International Paper's 8 million acres of timberland.

The vast forests owned or leased by the timber and paper companies constitute a major source of the companies' wealth. The industry owns 67.3 million acres of commercial timberland, primarily in the South, upper New England and Pacific Northwest.

Crises confront Ohio, Pennsylvania schools

By The Associated Press

A federal court in Ohio has issued an order allowing Cleveland's schools to remain open, and the Pennsylvania Supreme Court has been asked to do the same for Philadelphia schools.

Both cities face financial problems that have threatened closing of the schools.

In Cleveland, school Supt. Paul W. Briggs said last week the schools will operate normally despite $15 million in outstanding bank loans.

Meanwhile, bankers in Philadelphia have turned down requests from that city's school system for $45 million in short-term loans unless the district's budget is balanced.

The budget is not balanced, school officials say, because Philadelphia Common Pleas Court Judge Eugene Gelfand ruled that the district, with 250,000 students, could not obtain $50 million in long-term loans from the banks.

School officials said that without the loans, the district will run out of money next Friday.

Without the funds, classes will have to close. The Philadelphia system's next state subsidy is not due until January.

Officials have said they will not be able to pay teachers in November or December unless financing is found.

In a hastily called hearing, lawyers for the district asked the state Supreme Court to overturn the lower court's ruling. The attorneys said Gelfand erred when he ruled the long-term loan would violate state law.

Under Pennsylvania law, a school district must receive court approval for an emergency loan. Also, the district must prove it has legally incurred a deficit that necessitates the loan, in addition to satisfying several other requirements.

Meanwhile, Briggs said Cleveland's 5,400 teachers will be paid on time, but it is not known how the 112,000-pupil school system will make up its debt.

U.S. District Court Judge Frank Battisti issued a ruling relieving Cleveland school officials of liability for keeping the system open. His order also directs the school board to continue operations, "and maintain such minimum standards as maybe required," regardless of the auditor's certification that the schools were broke.

Under Ohio law, school officials could be subject to penalties for spending money when the state auditor has certified that there is not enough cash to pay the system's debts.

Blacksmithing growing hobby

WASHINGTON (AP) — There's renewed interest in the old craft of blacksmithing, according to the National Geographic Society.

It points out, however, that the emphasis nowadays is on fine craftwork and not on horseshoes.

Pilots, business people, doctors and scientists are among those taking up the challenge of turning a chunk of iron into a thing of beauty, it says. In addition, more universities and art schools are offering courses in blacksmithing, and wrought iron objects are turning up in art galleries.

Wife wants husband fired for his affair

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am an executive in a company that has a large sales department. A few days ago, the wife of one of our top salesmen came and asked me to fire her husband!

She said she had it on good authority that her husband is having an affair with a young secretary in the office.

The wife said if I thought her husband was too valuable to the company to let go, I should fire the girl. She said she was sure her husband could easily get another job if he were forced to, and the affair would probably cool off if they weren't working together.

Should I get involved in the domestic problems of one of my salesmen? Or do you think if a man does his job well, what he does on his own time is his own business?—NO-IDENTITIES, PLEASE

DEAR NO: Call the salesman in, and tell him that word of his alleged hanky-panky with a secretary has reached the front office. And let him take it from there.

Dear Abby: I am one of 20 draftsmen working in a large engineering office with a lot of female secretaries. Abby, do you think a woman feels complimented when she enters a room and a man whistles at her?

One guy here insists that the girls love it. I say no woman wants to be treated as a sex object, and whistling at a woman is an insult.

I'd like a woman's point of view.—T.C. IN HOUSTON

DEAR T.C.: THIS woman's point of view is the same as yours. (P.S. Whistling at women also indicates a juvenile mentality.)

DEAR ABBY: My young grandson has a very peculiar way of eating—he will eat only one thing at a time. For example, if there is meat, potatoes, carrots and peas on his plate, he will finish eating all the meat before he even touches his carrots. Then, once he starts eating his carrots, he will taste nothing else until he's finished them. He positively refuses to mix his food. Now isn't that ridiculous?

When I try to tell him to eat a bit of one thing and then another, he says he doesn't want to. He refuses to even try.

I don't know whether this comes under the heading of etiquette, idiosyncrasies, health or habits, but it just looks peculiar to me, Abby.

Please classify this quirk and set me straight.—GRAMPS

DEAR GRAMPS: I would classify this as nitpicking. Children come in for enough criticism during their childhood without having something as inconsequential as this being called to their attention. Skip it. What's the difference? Be glad he's healthy and can eat everything.

Mrs. William L. Barnes, Dr. Thomas Hohstadt and Mrs. Verne E. Griffith Jr., left to right, enjoy coffee at a meeting of Elcor Wives Club, at which Dr. Hohstadt was the guest speaker.

Paper discussed

Dr. Thomas Hohstadt, music director of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale, reviewed a paper he wrote on the physics of relativity, field and quantum theory, and the impact it will have, when the Elcor Wives Club met for coffee in the home of Mrs. Verne E. Griffith Jr.

Dr. Hohstadt said, "The three dimensions of nature are easy for us to understand. But Einstein's establishment of time as a fourth dimension has implications beyond our understanding. Nevertheless, he has given us new permission to validate the reality of powerful experiences of time and movement in our lives.

"Artists, as a matter of routine, have expected to find the unheard of, the unseen, and relate these insights to their total perspecti. Art has long dealt with non-rational meaning. Today, scientists are exposing, more and more frequently, the reality of that dimension."

New members attending were Mrs. Jack Mikel, Mrs. Ernie Hart and Mrs. Kenneth Simpson.

List tells how to put people at ease

COLLEGE STATION — Putting people at ease is an art, says Dorthy Taylor, family life education specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University Aystem. Some people appear warmer and more responsive, but it's no accident, the specialist says.

We all can learn to put people at ease. Miss Taylor offers these suggestions:

—Use your voice to respond to people. A mere nod seems to withhold messages.

—Don't talk too much or too little. If quiet, shy people talk more, others will respond. Talkative persons may want to just summarize and not tell the whole tale

—Use "I" in your conversations. If you open up, you invite others to share themselves.

—Think (and talk) positive. Anybody can gossip or recall tragedies.

—Laugh at yourself. When you share a "put-down," others recognize their own shortcoming and warm to you.

Adults swelling ranks of country's 'tin-grins'

By CARYLE MURPHY
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — On his monthly trips to the orthodontist five years ago, 50-year-old Harry Heintzen was an oddity in the waiting room.

"It was mainly all kids, some 3 to 5 years old," he recalls. "Here I was in a business suit, six-foot-one sitting on a low stool wearing horn-rimmed glasses and braces," said the Voice of America division chief. "I was used as an example of someone who was cheerfully being straightened."

Today Heintzen would find a lot more middle-aged company in the waiting room. Adults have swollen the ranks of America's estimated 4 million "tin-grins" just as a declining birth rate was depleting the traditional orthodontic market of young children and teenagers.

Adults now make up between 10 and 15 per cent of all orthodontic patients, a jump of 6 per cent in the last five years, according to the 6,800-member American Association of Orthodontics, which itself has grown from 4,000 members 10 years ago.

More and more adults are requesting a mouthful of metal for several reasons — greater affluence, dental insurance programs that now pay for orthodontic treatment, increased awareness of dental health on the part of the public and dentists, a realization of what can be done to straighten adult teeth and improved techniques for doing so.

Orthodontists say many of their patients are referred to them by dentists who now realize that premature tooth loss, unhealthy gums and decay are accelerated by crooked, crowded teeth that catch food particles and bacteria that cannot be easily flossed away.

More concerned than ever about keeping their teeth longer, Americans are learning from their dentists that straight teeth and a "harmonious bite" are two of the basics — along with regular oral hygiene — in preventing the major cause of tooth loss today, periodontal (gum) disease.

Some adults are bracing their teeth in order to correct bad bites and ailments like earaches that are related to poorly aligned jaws.

For others, like 38-year-old Gail Ferguson, "Cosmetics are reason enough" to wear braces. Orchin agrees, "I think esthetics are just as important as health in today's society."

Refusal to sell advertiser time, space increasingly challenged

By A. KENT MACDOUGALL
The Los Angeles Times

Boys' Life magazine accepts advertisements for rifles and shotguns; but turns down ads for boomerangs.

The New York Times takes ads for abortion referral services, but not for abortion clinics or contraceptives.

The CBS television station in New York recently aired a commercial that shows an Irish Catholic priest being converted to kosher hot dogs, but the CBS television network won't touch it.

Magazines, newspapers and television broadcasters routinely find themselves in inconsistencies such as these in the course of deciding which ads to accept and which to reject. Sometimes they explain their decisions. Boys' Life says its Boy Scout readers can learn firearms safety in summer camp, while instruction in boomerang throwing is unavailable. "A kid could kill himself with a boomerang," says ad director Frank Rowe. Often, however, an advertiser is turned away with no explanation other than his ad "doesn't meet our standards" or is unacceptable because of "taste" considerations.

With or without explanation, refusals to sell space and time increasingly are being challenged as arbitrary censorship, an abridgment of the right to advertise implicit in the First Amendment guarantee of freedom of speech. The critics include advertisers, public interest groups, lawyers and academics.

Sex film producers and exhibitors are angry because of a spreading blackout of newspaper ads for pornographic movies. Mobil Oil Corp. is angry because it cannot buy television time to air its views on energy and other issues. Public interest groups are angry at the media's power to consign unpopular products and services, ideas and lifestyles, to obscurity or underground status by refusing ads for them.

No one is disputing the media's right to reject ads that are misleading or fraudulent — ads for miracle cures, home improvement gyps, worthless desert real estate and the like. But a growing number of advertisers and their legal and academic allies are contending that the media have a moral, even a legal obligation to accept ads for any product, service or cause that isn't expressly forbidden by law.

The right-to-advertise forces have been winning considerable support — though not specifically against privately owned publications. Departing from a long tradition of depriving advertising, or commercial speech as it is known in legal circles, of First Amendment protection, courts in recent years have:

—Upheld the right of political candidates, antiwar activists and others to advertise in such public places as buses, subway platforms, train terminals and shopping centers.

—Struck down state bans on the advertising of prescription drug prices, abortion referral services, contraceptives and lawyers' services.

—Ruled that public high school and college newspapers and state bar association journals cannot reject advertising for causes they dislike.

—Recognized that the public has a right to receive the often valuable information and views that ads contain.

"Advertising, however tasteless and excessive it sometimes may seem, is nonetheless dissemination of information as to who is producing and selling what product, for what reason, and at what price," the Supreme Court declared last year in voiding Virginia's ban on drug price advertising.

One thing no court has yet done is force a privately owned periodical to accept an ad — or anything else, for that matter. Newspaper and magazine publishers insist that their First Amendment right to decide what goes in and what stays out of their publications is absolute. The Supreme Court has agreed, most notably three years ago when it struck down a Florida law that had given candidates for public office the right to reply to criticism in newspapers.

Hence, the press continues to control the flow of information on many products and services. Take information about automobile buying. There is an outfit in Brooklyn named Car-Puter International Corp. which for $10 will provide any person contemplating buying a new car with a computer printout of the list price and dealer's cost for that car and the accessories and options available with it. For another $10, Car-Puter will order the car from one of 900 participating dealers at $125 above dealer's cost, far below the usual markup.

Millions of Americans have had access to information about this unusual service through newspaper and magazine articles. But many of the same periodicals that have reported favorably on Car-Puter in their editorial columns have denied it access to their advertising columns. At last count 42 newspapers and magazines had rejected Car-Puter ads, nearly always without explanation. One, though, was remarkably candid.

In a letter to Car-Puter, sales executive of Reader's Digest explained that the problem with Car-Puter advertising was "its direct competitiveness with automotive dealers. I know you will understand that manufacturers do not like to advertise in media which dealers do not heartily endorse...In our judgment it would be foolish to deliberately accept advertising which might tend to destroy (the dealer support) it has taken years to build."

Using the letter as evidence, Car-Puter filed a $6 million antitrust suit alleging a conspiracy among Reader's Digest and the Big Four domestic auto manufacturers. The suit was soon dropped, however, when Car-Puter president Arnold Wonsever learned it would cost $50,000 to $100,000 to carry it through.

"I am tired of paying legal fees to defend what I consider is 100 percent right," he says. "We have survived since 1964 largely on the favorable notices of reporters and columnists, but I have given up trying to buy space. We would have done a lot more business if we had been able to advertise regularly."

Another innovative enterprise that claims rejection of its advertising is hurting its business is Teleprompter Corp. Teleprompter is the nation's largest community antenna cable television operator. Its hookups allow television viewers to tune in distant stations they could not otherwise receive. For an additional monthly fee, Teleprompter supplies some original entertainment programs and motion pictures.

The best way to make TV viewers aware of Teleprompter's cable and pay TV services is to advertise them on TV. But TV stations aren't eager to sell time to a competitor. Five of 21 stations, including two of three in El Paso, Tex., have rejected Teleprompter's ads. Teleprompter has filed a complaint with the Federal Trade Commission, asserting that denial of access to TV places the company "at a distinct competitive disadvantage," and asking the FTC to investigate for possible antitrust violations.

While the power to keep a commercial off the air can be the power to destroy a little-known product or service struggling for recognition, it seems to have little effect on overall demand for such a well-established, sought-after product as cigarettes. The evidence: Americans are puffing more cigarettes (205 packs for the average adult last year) than they did before cigarette commercials were banned from television and radio in 1971.

The loss of cigarette ads has not prevented broadcasters from increasing their total advertising revenues faster than other media. And other media have found the ban a boon. Magazines took in three times more revenue from cigarette advertising last year than in 1970. Newspapers carried 12 times more and outdoor billboards 15 times more. Total cigarette ad spending rose to $435 million from $288 million.

The Tobacco Institute attributes the increase to higher ad rates, a proliferation of aggressively promoted low-tar brands, and the lower impact of less obtrusive print and outdoor ads. "It takes more dollars to reach the same number of people with the same impact as a TV commercial," a spokesman for the trade group explains. "One must consciously avoid a TV commercial, whereas one must consciously look at a print ad."

Cigarette advertisers' free-spending ways have proved too much of a temptation for some newspapers and magazines that once rejected cigarette ads. Better Homes and Gardens cut out cigarette ads in 1971, but reinstated them four years later. Last year it carried $4.4 million worth and expects at least $6 million worth this year.

Magazines that continue to hold the line include Reader's Digest, National Geographic, Good Housekeeping and the New Yorker. Somewhat self-righteously, the New Yorker devoted a recent The Talk of the Town comment to cigarette advertising, drawing a connection between the print media's growing dependence on cigarette ads and the fact that "the press has been paying very little attention to the issue of cigarettes and public health." It singled out the Columbia Journalism Review for specific criticism, suggesting that its acceptance of cigarette ads was incompatible with its "purpose of subjecting the reporting standards of the American press to critical examination."

In a rejoinder in its own pages, the Columbia Journalism Review pointed to "the solid research indicating that cigarette advertising rarely influences decisions to smoke or not to smoke but that its effect, and purpose, is to influence the choice of brands." It also cited "substantial medical opinion that use and misuse of alcoholic beverages damage Americans' health at least as much as do use and misuse of cigarettes," and chided the New Yorker for taking liquor ads.

If some Americans had their way, there would be no advertising for either cigarettes or liquor — in any medium. Bills to disallow cigarette and liquor advertising as deductible business expenses are perennially introduced in Congress.

Forty-four years after the repeal of Prohibition, drinking is still such a sensitive issue in the U.S. that more than 200 of the nation's 1,760 daily newspapers refuse ads for beer, wine or liquor — or all three. Of 21 dailies in Mississippi, only two accept liquor ads.

Though beer and wine commonly are advertised on radio and television around the country, hard liquor isn't. Distillers and broadcasters fear on-air commercials would offend many people and strengthen the hand of those who want to outlaw all alcoholic beverage advertising.

To avoid offending viewers and to head off government restrictions, the broadcast industry has adopted comprehensive guidelines on what is acceptable advertising and what, including liquor, is not. These do's and don't's are codified and administered by the National Association of Broadcasters. There is one code for radio and another for television. Compliance with the codes is voluntary. Compliance is easiest for the highly profitable national networks and the stations they own or are affiliated with. Small, non-affiliated stations are financially less able to be choosy and many don't subscribe to the codes. Of the nation's 7,300 radio stations, only 35 percent are code subscribers, while two-thirds of the 700 television stations subscribe.

In recent years, some code restrictions have been tightened and others loosened. Restrictions on commercials aimed at children have been tightened in response to complaints from parents and activist groups and prodding by the Federal Communications Commission. Hosts on children's programs no longer can make product pitches. Toys no longer can be shown performing feats they are incapable of. Viewers no longer can be exhorted to "ask your mom to buy this doll."

The restrictions go too far to suit some advertisers and their agencies. "Children are far sharper about what's going on than adults," and many of the NAB code restrictions are "simply ridiculous," asserts John Bergin, father of five children and executive vice president of SSC and B Inc., a large ad agency.

But the restrictions don't go far enough to suit Action for Children's Television. This citizens group would like all commercials aimed at preschool children taken off the air, along with children's commercials for candies and highly sugared cereals and snack foods. It has filed formal complaints with the Federal Trade Commission against four candy manufacturers and the makers of two brands of presweetened cereals, charging commercials for them mislead children about their nutritional value.

NAB code bans on "personal products" have been relaxed in recent years. At one time commercials for toilet paper were unacceptable. Since 1969, however, the TV code in several steps has approved advertising of genital deodorants, hemorrhoid remedies, enema products, douches, tampons and sanitary napkins. Jock-itch and bed-wetting remedies are still barred from TV, though allowed on radio.

Contraceptives are about the only significant personal product still taboo. This strike against birth control advocates as hypocritical, inasmuch as advertisers are allowed to use sexy commercials to sell shaving cream, cologne and other products. They also think the ban is against the national interest, considering the high rate of unwanted pregnancies, especially among unwed teenagers.

Harriet F. Pilpel, counsel to Planned Parenthood Federation of America, questions the legality of the code ban on contracaeptives. "For a group of media people to get together and decide collectively that they will carry certain types of advertising but not other types seems to me to raise serious antitrust questions, and possibly First Amendment questions as well," she says.

NAB code officials stress that code compliance is strictly voluntary and that they have not forever closed the door to contraceptive advertising. Instead, they have agreed to discuss testing contraceptive commercials to gauge audience reaction. That precaution is understandable in light of the vituperative phone calls and letters that cut short soft-sell commercials for Trojan condoms on TV stations in Canton, Ohio, and San Jose, Calif., two years ago.

Youngs Drug Products Corp., which makes Trojans, says it has encountered no comparable hostility with radio commercials and magazine ads, and fortunately doesn't need TV commercials to keep its "plant running full tilt."

Catalonia welcomes back long-exiled leader

By STANLEY MEISLER
The Los Angeles Times

BARCELONA, Spain — The Catalans of Spain welcomed home their long-exiled leader Sunday with massive, emotional pageantry that symbolized their hopes for a new era for an autonomous Catalonia within a democratic Spain.

The leader, 78-year-old Joseph Tarradellas, returned after 38 years of exile to become president of the Generalitat, the name used by governments of Catalonia since the Middle Ages.

He will be inaugurated today in a ceremony attended by Premier Adolfo Suarez of Spain. Then, the Generalitat, suppressed by the late dictator Francisco Franco after the Spanish Civil War, will function again.

The Catalans, waving their red and yellow striped flag, singing their national hymn again and again, massed at various plazas in this grand and sophisticated city to demonstrate their joy and enthusiasm over the arrival of their old leader. Placards said "Benvingut," Catalan for welcome. But an uncertainty hung over the festivities.

The Spanish government has granted Catalonia what it calls "provisional autonomy," pending the writing of a new constitution by the Cortes, or Spanish parliament. But it is unclear what powers Tarradellas and his Generalitat will have during this provisional period. Suarez may not give Catalonia much.

This uncertainty was shown when Tarradellas stood on the balcony of the 15th century palace of the Generalitat in the plaza of San Jaime in the old quarter of Barcelona. The tens of thousands below him chanted, "We want the statute. We want the statute."

They were referring to the statute of autonomy in 1931. This statute, revoked by Franco, probably gave Catalonia less home rule than a U.S. State. But, at least, it made clear that the Catalans had some powers of their own.

In response to the chants, Tarradellas said, "I am here to work for you for a prosperous Catalonia in freedom. I, too, want the statute."

Tarradellas, a tall, bald, strong-looking man, rocked back and forth as he declaimed in old-fashioned, bombastic bursts. He has the kind of style that seems to be used in Spain today only by politicians who date, like him, from the Spanish Civil War.

In his speeches Sunday, however, he tried to reassure Francoists and other conservatives that autonomy for Catalonia would not lead to a breakup of the Spanish nation. That had been one of the fears stressed, year after year by Franco, whose vision of a strong national state left no room for regional chauvinism.

Tarradellas, like many other regionalists, believes that Spain will be strengthened if its various peoples doo not feel oppressed. "The reestablishment of the Generalitat," Tarradellas told the crowds, "is a victory for Spain and for Catalonia."

There is a fear, especially within the Spanish Army, a bastion of conservatism and Francoism within Spain, that Tarradellas and the other regionalists are wrong and that the granting of autonomy to them betrays the Franco victory in the civil war. Probably for this reason, the army general responsible for Catalonia could not be persuaded to join other government officials in welcoming Tarradellas at the airport.

At least for Sunday, Tarradellas appeared to have resolved another problem. All leaders of the political parties of Catalonia stood next to him on the balcony of the palace. This show of support covered up the resentment of some of them over the fact that Tarradellas and not they had negotiated provisional autonomy with Suarez.

Tarradellas, elected president of the Generalitat in exile in 1954, came to Madrid from France in late June to meet Suarez and King Juan Carlos and start the negotiations that led to reestablishing the Generalitat in Catalonia. Furthermore, King Juan Carlos named Tarradellas the president by royal decree.

There is little doubt that the political leaders, for historical and emotional reasons, would have chosen Tarradellas as president if they had been allowed to do so. But his appointment by decree set the troubling precedent for Catalans that Madrid and not Barcelona legally chose the leader of Catalonia.

Two sides to dispute between Fed, President

NEW YORK (AP) — Those who watch relations between the Federal Reserve and the White House aren't surprised by the latter's barely veiled warning not to raise interest rates. It's happened before.

Early in his administration the magnanimous promise of President Lyndon Johnson was "guns and butter." One or the other, said the Fed in effect.

The Fed meant this: You simply cannot pay for a war with deficits and conduct domestic business as usual. Something must give. It did. Up went interest rates.

Arthur Burns, Fed chairman, probably has been thinking something of the same sort of late. Eyeing the federal deficit as an engine of inflation, and fearful that inflation will bring the economy down, he has been eyeing the money supply.

The cagey chairman doesn't often speak his mind in the rhetoric of politicians. His way of expressing fear of inflation is to tighten the money flow. That raises interest rates, and high interest slows activity.

In seeking to cool down what he considers overly ambitious spending, however, the chairman inevitably raised the temperature of White House-Federal Reserve relations. White House occupants usually prefer inflation to recession.

Quite predictably, and with considerable support from economists, the White House argues that the prospect of a serious new surge of prices is not the most pressing danger. Recession is, the Carter people seem to say.

With high unemployment, unused production facilities and generally weakening economy, they say, the country is hardly in danger of overextending itself.

To slow the economic machinery now, it is argued by the White House and economists who support its position, is to risk bringing movement to an almost total halt. In other words, to invite recession, and even to run ahead to meet it.

Recession would mean an end to the President's promises of full employment and a balanced budget, even though many private economists maintain those goals are unrealistic. It could even deny him re-election.

But all cannot be blamed on the Fed, although it often is, and although many other Fed critics say it repeatedly and prematurely puts an end to economic advance. The Fed is watching some interesting figures.

In the first half of the year, for example, net borrowing by business, households and federal, state and local governments surged, rising to an annual rate of $290 billion, or 12.4 per cent higher than in 1976.

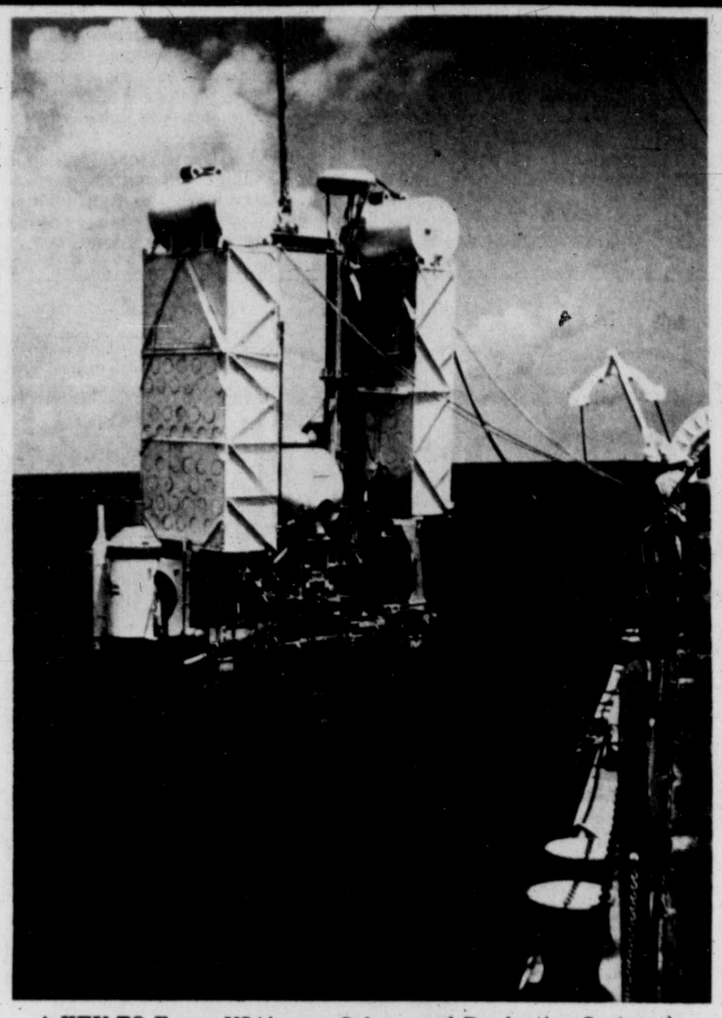
Union Texas Petroleum Corp. No. 1-51 Amacker, Upton County scheduled prospector, seven miles northwest of Rankin and ½ mile north of the depleted Amacker-Tippett, Southeast (Strawn) field, was drilling below 10,558 feet in lime and shale, after recovering oil on a drillstem test.

Tool was open 2½ hours on the test taken from 10,444-10,483 feet. Recovery was 45 feet of free 39-gravity oil and 360 feet of heavily gas- and oil-cut mud. The sampler contained 1,500 cubic centimeters of oil and .324 cubic foot of gas.

Location is 467 feet from south and 660 feet from west lines of section 51, C. C. Phillips survey.



A KEY TO Exxon USA's new Submerged Production System is the maintenance manipulator. When needed, the manipulator is taken to the location and performs remotely controlled, routine maintenance operations by replacement of equipment on the system. The manipulator is launched from a workboat and descends to the seafloor structure, where it moves along a track around the Submerged Production System unit. A system of underwater television cameras built into the manipulator allows the operator on the surface to watch and control the movements of the manipulator. Since the SPS was launched offshore, the manipulator has been to the seafloor more than 30 times.

Official says President's attack on oil dangerous

By BOB GALT
Dallas Times Herald

DALLAS — President Carter's attack on the American petroleum industry is a thoughtless shot at business that could impair the economy and alienate foreign allies, a former high government official said here Saturday.

William P. Clements Jr., who ended four years as deputy defense secretary in January, said that Carter is surrounded by "inexperienced incompetents" in the energy arena — starting with Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger.

Clements identified Schlesinger, his former Defense Department associate, as the orchestrator of the Carter attack and called Schlesinger "a bureaucratic opportunist," and "an intellectually dishonest person."

"In my opinion," Clements said, "Mr. Carter will decide before very long that he has had all of Mr. Schlesinger that he can stand.

"My two and half years with Schlesinger in the Defense Department convinces me that he knows absolutely nothing about the free-enterprise business system and what is required to encourage private capital.

"To the contrary, Mr. Schlesinger is anti-business, (in favor of) more government and more bureaucracy and has, on several occasions, endorsed Sen. Henry Jackson's theory of a national oil company."

Clements, who nine months ago returned to the private sector to resume chairmanship of the world's largest oil and gas drilling firm — Dallas-based Sedco — said, "If Mr. Carter had intentionally sought to recruit the most anti-business, anti-petroleum industry man in the country he couldn't have better succeeded than to bring Schlesinger into his administration."

(A Carter aide said Saturday, "The White House will not dignify Mr. Clements' intemperate attack by a response or a comment." There was no immediate comment from Schlesinger.)

Clements' criticism of Schlesinger came after The Wall Street Journal reported that another former deputy defense secretary who proceded Clements in the Pentagon — David Packard, now chairman of Hewett-Packard Co. — told the Business Council that the Carter energy program is "a disaster," and that Schlesinger "doesn't have the brains God granted a goose about the way the economics system is supposed to work."

Clements said that Carter's recent definition of the petroleum industry as "war profiteers" and potential perpertrators of "the biggest ripoff in history" was thoughtless, vindictive and dangerous.

Clements who drew bipartisan support in his Defense Department and National Security Council service for hard-nosed shepherding of the cruise missile program, accused the Carter administration of building uncertainty in its domestic and foreign stances.

"President Carter and his entourage don't give confidence to the business community," Clements said. "Everything is uncertain. There is this constant lack of continuity, commitment and continuance in our domestic and foreign policies.

"As our business community is currently concerned, so are our allies. The reason? Uncertainty surrounding our position. If we are concerned, domestically, about the fragile structure of the Carter energy plan, so are our allies."

Clements said that it took "eight to 10 years to build a foreign policy that our allies and others could understand. It takes times to mature — but now is it being reversed."

Recently returned from a worldwide inspection of drilling operations, Clements cited the Carter nuclear policy announced in April as a policy switch that collides with nuclear planning of other nations, including some of the closest U.S. allies.

He said the Carter proposal, which among other things deferred indefinitely the reprocessing and recycling of plutonium, had "greatly disturbed" U.S. allies and had brought relations with West Germany to "the worst in years."

Clements said West Germany, the NATO alignment, Japan and Brazil "don't understand the uncertainties" and can't accept the Carter plan because of their belief that nuclear power is the primary means of reducing dependence upon foreign oil.

Clements, in flailing Carter and Schlesinger for their "continuing assault" on the oil and gas industry and business, said neither apparently understands that the United States is firmly locked into a "petro culture."

"Right or wrong, our entire society is based upon petroleum and its products. Our life-style, our industry, our culture is built around energy. As we have grown, our energy requirements have grown. The availability of cheap petroleum has dictated our growth.

"But the day of abundance of cheap energy has passed. Now we must adjust, and it could be painful. Fundamentally, our government has not come to grips with the problem."

He said the Carter concept of solving energy problems through pure conservation will not work.

"The constrictions of conservation, without proper incentives to seek and discover new sources of energy, would eventually produce the evils of more unemployment, more massive welfare, etc."

Clements joined other critics of the Carter energy program in calling it a tax program that does little to stimulate new exploration and recovery of oil and gas. The constant search for energy sources costs enormous sums because of the complexity and sophistication of today's industry, Clements said.

"If American industry doesn't develop a sense of confidence, it will hold back. We must have sound continuity in our programs. It takes three to five years to make capital work. We just don't turn it off and on like a light switch."

West Texas regions gain wildcat projects

Exploration has been planned for Mitchell, Martin and Pecos counties, and outpost sites have been staked in Pecos and Reeves fields. Also, a Ward pool gained a confirmation well.

Supron Energy Corp., operating from Midland, filed permit application for a 7,800-foot venture in Mitchell, four miles southwest of Colorado City. It is No. 1 Thompson.

Drillsite is 990 feet from south and east lines of section 62, block 27, T&P survey, five miles northwest of the Champion Lake (Yates) gas field.

Supron also will drill No. 2 Thompson, 450 feet from north and 890 feet from east lines of section 75, 5½ miles northwest of the Champion Lake field. It also has a projected bottom depth of 7,800 feet.

MARTIN SEARCHER

BTA Oil Producers of Midland has rescheduled to wildcat depth of 13,500 feet, No. 7-C 7422 JV-S Mustang, previously slated 12,200-foot Dean test in the Lacaff field of Northwest Martin. It is slated to test the Ellenburger zone.

Location is 2,173 feet from south and 900 feet from east lines of section 2, bloc, 7, ULS, 20 miles northwest of Lenorah.

The project, bottomed at 12,284 feet, tested unsuccessfully from Devonian open hole at 12,219-12,222 feet, and from 12,217-12,240 feet. Operator was waiting on rotary rig to deepen.

PECOS PROSPECTOR

Union Texas Petroleum Corp., Midland, will reenter No. 1 Clayton Lowe-University, Pecos County deep failure, eight miles south of Fort Stockton, and test as a wildcat at around 11,900 feet.

Originally drilled by American Trading & Production Corp., it was plugged and abandoned in February 1976 at 24,888 feet.

Located, two miles northeast of the depleted Sheepherder (Leonard) field, it is 1,650 feet from south and 1,980 feet from east lines of section 9, block 27, ULS.

WARD CONFIRMER

Shell Oil Co. No. 10 Sealy-Smith Foundation, second current Fusselman oil well and ½-mile north and slightly east extension to that pay in the Monahans field, finaled for a daily pumping potential of 36 barrels of 42.5-gravity oil, with gas-oil ratio of 306-1.

It finaled through perforations at 8,138-8,295 feet, following 6,800 gallons of acid, and 45,000 gallons, plus 66,000 pounds of fracture.

A former deep oiler, total depth is 10,334 feet, and the plugged-back depth is 10,025 feet.

Location is 650 feet from south and west lines of section 23, block A, G&MMB&A survey, nine miles north of Monahans.

REEVES OUTPOST

Texas Pacific Oil Co., Inc., has scheduled No. 4 ARCO-State, a one-mile east outpost to the Reeves, North (3,200) gas field of Southwest Reeves County.

Location for the 4,250-foot test is 1,980 feet from north and 660 feet from east lines of section 14, block 56, T-3, T&P survey, eight miles south of Orla.

Monument to buy firm

LOVINGTON, N.M. — Monument Energy Corp. announced it has obtained an option to purchase Big Chief Oil Well Service Co. of Denver City, Tex.

The agreement to purchase is subject to an audit of Big Chief's financial records, which Monument Energy is conducting at this time.

Winford Carlile, chairman and chief executive office of Monument Energy, said Big Chief currently has three double-derrick workover rigs and a fourth on order.

The acquisition would brign Monument Energy's oil well servind fleet to 16 rigs, plus the new one due for deliver in the near future.

Big Chief would be the second related acquisition in the area for Monument Energy in the last four months. Bradley Construction Co. of Denver City, another oil well service company, was acquired in July.

Input drops

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Input to crude oil processing units decrease 183,000 barrels per day during the week ended Oct. 14 to 14,903,000 barrels per day compared with 13,633,000 barrels per day during the week ended Oct. 14 in 1976.

Fifty-eight thousand barrels of the decrease were caused by maintenance shutdowns for repairs in Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and in the West Coast area.

Production of motor gasoline in the W. S. increased 294,000 barrels per day during the week ended Oct. 14 to 7,064,000 barrels per day. During the comparable week of 1976, production of motor gasoline was 6,604,000 barrels per day.

Gulf well completes

Gulf Oil Corp. has completed No. 2-A O. Deal, a 214-mile northwest extension to Strawn production and a confirmation well to that pay in the Velrex, Southwest field of Schleicher County.

It gauged a calculated, absolute open flow potential of 625,000 cubic feet of gas per day, through perforations at 7,398-7,400 feet. The pay section had been acidized with 1,000 gallons and fractured with 28,500 gallons and 26,050 pounds of sand.

It is located 2,173 feet from north and 467 feet from east lines of section 33, block TT, TCRR survey, 14 miles northwest of Eldorado.

Crises confront Ohio, Pennsylvania schools

By The Associated Press

A federal court in Ohio has issued an order allowing Cleveland's schools to remain open, and the Pennsylvania Supreme Court has been asked to do the same for Philadelphia schools.

Both cities face financial problems that have threatened closing of the schools.

In Cleveland, school Supt. Paul W. Briggs said last week the schools will operate normally despite $15 million in outstanding bank loans.

Meanwhile, bankers in Philadelphia have turned down requests from that city's school system for $45 million in short-term loans unless the district's budget is balanced.

The budget is not balanced, school officials say, because Philadelphia Common Pleas Court Judge Eugene Gelfand ruled that the district, with 250,000 students, could not obtain $50 million in long-term loans from the banks.

School officials said that without the loans, the district will run out of money next Friday.

Without the funds, classes will have to close. The Philadelphia system's next state subsidy is not due until January.

Officials have said they will not be able to pay teachers in November or December unless financing is found.

In a hastily called hearing, lawyers for the district asked the state Supreme Court to overturn the lower court's ruling. The attorneys said Gelfand erred when he ruled the long-term loan would violate state law.

Under Pennsylvania law, a school district must receive court approval for an emergency loan. Also, the district must prove it has legally incurred a deficit that necessitates the loan, in addition to satisfying several other requirements.

Meanwhile, Briggs said Cleveland's 5,400 teachers will be paid on time, but it is not known how the 112,000-pupil school system will make up its debt.

U.S. District Court Judge Frank Battisti issued a ruling relieving Cleveland school officials of liability for keeping the system open. His order also directs the school board to continue operations, "and maintain such minimum standards as maybe required," regardless of the auditor's certification that the schools were broke.

Under Ohio law, school officials could be subject to penalties for spending money when the state auditor has certified that there is not enough cash to pay the system's debts.

Blacksmithing growing hobby

WASHINGTON, (AP) — There's renewed interest in the old craft of blacksmithing, according to the National Geographic Society.

It points out, however, that the emphasis nowadays is on fine craftwork and not on horseshoes.

Pilots, business people, doctors and scientists are among those taking up the challenge of turning a chunk of iron into a thing of beauty, it says. In addition, more universities and art schools are offering courses in blacksmithing, and wrought iron objects are turning up in art galleries.

Begin's new Israeli coalition presenting appearance of unity

JERUSALEM (AP) — With a new look of political stability, Prime Minister Menahem Begin's expanded coalition in parliament presents a more united front in Israel's dealings with the Arabs.

Though few changes are foreseen in basic Israeli policy, political analysts say Begin is likely to take a more determined stance as President Carter presses U.S. efforts to resume the Geneva peace conference on the Middle East.

Begin's coalition — his own Likud group, two religious parties and two independents — held a shaky 66-seat majority in the 120-member Knesset until Thursday, when the centrist Democratic Movement for Change (DMC) decided to end a five-month holdout and add its 15 seats to the ruling alliance.

The move gives Begin the elbow room on domestic and foreign affairs that he sorely lacked since winning the May national elections.

"We are now facing the toughest test we've faced since 1948" when Israel became a state, said DMC leader Yigael Yadin. "Therefore we must help the government ... or else we won't survive."

After Begin's right-wing Likud bloc defeated the entrenched Labor party in May, Israelis looked to the DMC to join the government as a moderating influence on Begin's tough approach to peace and his reluctance to relinquish captured Arab territory.

The Likud-DMC coalition talks broke down, but suddenly on Thursday the DMC, with Yadin citing an "approaching crisis" with the Carter administration, accepted a union.

The DMC move was an astonishing victory for Begin, a newcomer to power, and virtually ensures a long life for his government.

"Begin now has what gamblers call a split," said a source close to the prime minister. "He can manipulate the odds so he can't lose. If any party drops out he still has a majority."

Political and international circumstances have changed since May, and Yadin will have less influence on foreign policy than he might have had if the DMC had entered the government at the start.

Begin and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan have formed a strong team that dominates foreign policy, and it is unlikely Yadin can break into this two-man circle.

Crises confront Ohio, Pennsylvania schools

By The Associated Press

A federal court in Ohio has issued an order allowing Cleveland's schools to remain open, and the Pennsylvania Supreme Court has been asked to do the same for Philadelphia schools.

Both cities face financial problems that have threatened closing of the schools.

In Cleveland, school Supt. Paul W. Briggs said last week the schools will operate normally despite $15 million in outstanding bank loans.

Meanwhile, bankers in Philadelphia have turned down requests from that city's school system for $45 million in short-term loans unless the district's budget is balanced.

The budget is not balanced, school officials say, because Philadelphia Common Pleas Court Judge Eugene Gelfand ruled that the district, with 250,000 students, could not obtain $59 million in long-term loans from the banks.

School officials said that without the loans, the district will run out of money next Friday.

Without the funds, classes will have to close. The Philadelphia system's next state subsidy is not due until January.

Officials have said they will not be able to pay teachers in November or December unless financing is found.

In a hastily called hearing, lawyers for the district asked the state Supreme Court to overturn the lower court's ruling. The attorneys said Gelfand erred when he ruled the long-term loan would violate state law.

Under Pennsylvania law, a school district must receive court approval for an emergency loan. Also, the district must prove it has legally incurred a deficit that necessitates the loan, in addition to satisfying several other requirements.

Meanwhile, Briggs said Cleveland's 5,400 teachers will be paid on time, but it is not known how the 112,000-pupil school system will make up its debt.

U.S. District Court Judge Frank Battisti issued a ruling relieving Cleveland school officials of liability for keeping the system open. His order also directs the school board to continue operations, "and maintain such minimum standards as maybe required," regardless of the auditor's certification that the schools were broke.

Under Ohio law, school officials could be subject to penalties for spending money when the state auditor has certified that there is not enough cash to pay the system's debts.

Blacksmithing growing hobby

WASHINGTON (AP) — There's renewed interest in the old craft of blacksmithing, according to the National Geographic Society.

It points out, however, that the emphasis nowadays is on fine craftwork and not on horseshoes.

Pilots, business people, doctors and scientists are among those taking up the challenge of turning a chunk of iron into a thing of beauty, it says. In addition, more universities and art schools are offering courses in blacksmithing, and wrought iron objects are turning up in art galleries.

Begin's new Israeli coalition presenting appearance of unity

JERUSALEM (AP) — With a new look of political stability, Prime Minister Menahem Begin's expanded coalition in parliament presents a more united front in Israel's dealings with the Arabs.

Though few changes are foreseen in basic Israeli policy, political analysts say Begin is likely to take a more determined stance as President Carter presses U.S. efforts to resume the Geneva peace conference on the Middle East.

Begin's coalition — his own Likud group, two religious parties and two independents — held a shaky 63-seat majority in the 120-member Knesset until Thursday, when the centrist Democratic Movement for Change (DMC) decided to end a five-month holdout and add its 15 seats to the ruling alliance.

The move gives Begin the elbow room on domestic and foreign affairs that he sorely lacked since winning the May national elections.

"We are now facing the toughest test we've faced since 1948" when Israel became a state, said DMC leader Yigael Yadin. "Therefore we must help the government ... or else we won't survive."

After Begin's right-wing Likud bloc defeated the entrenched Labor party in May, Israelis looked to the DMC to join the government as a moderating influence on Begin's tough approach to peace and his reluctance to relinquish captured Arab territory.

The Likud-DMC coalition talks broke down, but suddenly on Thursday the DMC, with Yadin citing an "approaching crisis" with the Carter administration, accepted a union.

The DMC move was an astonishing victory for Begin, a newcomer to power, and virtually ensures a long life for his government.

"Begin now has what gamblers call a split," said a source close to the prime minister. "He can manipulate the odds so he can't lose. If any party drops out he still has a majority."

Political and international circumstances have changed since May, and Yadin will have less influence on foreign policy than he might have had if the DMC had entered the government at the start.

Begin and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan have formed a strong team that dominates foreign policy, and it is unlikely Yadin can break into this two-man circle.

Wife wants husband fired for his affair

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am an executive in a company that has a large sales department. A few days ago, the wife of one of our top salesmen came and asked me to fire her husband!

She said she had it on good authority that her husband is having an affair with a young secretary in the office.

The wife said if I thought her husband was too valuable to the company to let go, I should fire the girl. She said she was sure her husband could easily get another job if he were forced to, and the affair would probably cool off if they weren't working together.

Should I get involved in the domestic problems of one of my salesmen? Or do you think if a man does his job well, what he does on his own time is his own business?—NO IDENTITIES, PLEASE

DEAR NO: Call the salesman in, and tell him that word of his alleged hanky-panky with a secretary has reached the front office. And let him take it from there.

Dear Abby: I am one of 20 draftsmen working in a large engineering office with a lot of female secretaries. Abby, do you think a woman feels complimented when she enters a room and a man whistles at her?

One guy here insists that the girls love it. I say no woman wants to be treated as a sex object, and whistling at a woman is an insult.

I'd like a woman's point of view.—T.C. IN HOUSTON

DEAR T.C.: THIS woman's point of view is the same as yours. (P.S. Whistling at women also indicates a juvenile mentality.)

DEAR ABBY: My young grandson has a very peculiar way of eating—he will eat only one thing at a time. For example, if there is meat, potatoes, carrots and peas on his plate, he will finish eating all the meat before he even touches his carrots. Then, once he starts eating his carrots, he will taste nothing else until he's finished them. He positively refuses to mix his food. Now isn't that ridiculous?

When I try to tell him to eat a bit of one thing and then another, he says he doesn't want to. He refuses to even try.

I don't know whether this comes under the heading of etiquette, idiosyncrasies, health or habits, but it just looks peculiar to me, Abby.

Please classify this quirk and set me straight.—GRAMPS

DEAR GRAMPS: I would classify this as nitpicking. Children come in for enough criticism during their childhood without having something as inconsequential as this being called to their attention. Skip it. What's the difference? Be glad he's healthy and can eat everything.

Mrs. William L. Barnes, Dr. Thomas Hohstadt and Mrs. Verne E. Griffith Jr., left to right, enjoy coffee at a meeting of Elcor Wives Club, at which Dr. Hohstadt was the guest speaker.

Paper discussed

Dr. Thomas Hohstadt, music director of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale, reviewed a paper he wrote on the physics of relativity, field and quantum theory, and the impact it will have, when the Elcor Wives Club met for coffee in the home of Mrs. Verne E. Griffith Jr.

Dr. Hohstadt said, "The three dimensions of nature are easy for us to understand. But Einstein's establishment of time as a fourth dimension has implications beyond our understanding. Nevertheless, he has given us new permission to validate the reality of powerful experiences of time and movement in our lives.

"Artists, as a matter of routine, have expected to find the unheard of, the unseen, and relate these insights to their total perspecti. Art has long dealt with non-rational meaning. Today, scientists are exposing, more and more frequently, the reality of that dimension."

New members attending were Mrs. Jack Mikel, Mrs. Ernie Hart and Mrs. Kenneth Simpson.

List tells how to put people at ease

COLLEGE STATION — Putting people at ease is an art, says Dorthy Taylor, family life education specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University Aystem. Some people appear warmer and more responsive, but it's no accident, the specialist says.

We all can learn to put people at ease. Miss Taylor offers these suggestions:

—Use your voice to respond to people. A mere nod seems to withhold messages.

—Don't talk too much or too little. If quiet, shy people talk more, others will respond. Talkative persons may want to just summarize and not tell the whole tale

—Use "I" in your conversations. If you open up, you invite others to share themselves.

—Think (and talk) positive. Anybody can gossip or recall tragedies.

—Laugh at yourself. When you share a "put-down," others recognize their own shortcoming and warm to you.

Adults swelling ranks of country's 'tin-grins'

By CARYLE MURPHY
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — On his monthly trips to the orthodontist five years ago, 50-year-old Harry Heintzen was an oddity in the waiting room.

"It was mainly all kids, some 3 to 5 years old," he recalls. "Here I was in a business suit, six-foot-one sitting on a low stool wearing horn-rimmed glasses and braces," said the Voice of America division chief. "I was used as an example of someone who was cheerfully being straightened."

Today Heintzen would find a lot more middle-aged company in the waiting room. Adults have swollen the ranks of America's estimated 4 million "tin-grins" just as a declining birth rate was depleting the traditional orthodontic market of young children and teenagers.

Adults now make up between 10 and 15 per cent of all orthodontic patients, a jump of 6 per cent in the last five years, according to the 6,800-member American Association of Orthodontics, which itself has grown from 4,000 members 10 years ago.

More and more adults are requesting a mouthful of metal for several reasons — greater affluence, dental insurance programs that now pay for orthodontic treatment, increased awareness of dental health on the part of the public and dentists, a realization of what can be done to straighten adult teeth and improved techniques for doing so.

Orthodontists say many of their patients are referred to them by dentists who now realize that premature tooth loss, unhealthy gums and decay are accelerated by crooked, crowded teeth that catch food particles and bacteria that cannot be easily flossed away.

More concerned than ever about keeping their teeth longer, Americans are learning from their dentists that straight teeth and a "harmonious bite" are two of the basics — along with regular oral hygiene — in preventing the major cause of tooth loss today, periodontal (gum) disease.

Some adults are bracing their teeth in order to correct bad bites and ailments like earaches that are related to poorly aligned jaws.

For others, like 38-year-old Gail Ferguson, "Cosmetics are reason enough" to wear braces. Orchin agrees, "I think esthetics are just as important as health in today's society."

Suns trip LA Lakers, 104-101

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers are going to have a difficult time playing better than they did in the first half of Sunday night's game against Phoenix. And it's doubtful they'll be ever be much worse than they were in the second half.

The Suns overcame a 62-38 deficit at halftime to score a 104-101 National Basketball Association victory in the Lakers' home opener before 10,481 at The Forum.

In the only other NBA game Sunday, the San Anto io Spurs crushed the Seattle SuperSonics 112-94.

Los Angeles raced to a 30-12 advantage after one quarter and led by 29 points late in the second period. But the second half was a different story.

"We put on a clinic in the first half and couldn't do anything right in the second half," said Los Angeles Coach Jerry West. "This pretty much indicates the way we have been playing this season — that is getting an early lead and not holding it."

"I told my team at halftime that we couldn't get it all back at once and to be patient," said Phoenix Coach John McLeod.

McLeod was right. The Suns needed 15:33 to deadlock the game, tying it at 81 on a jump shot by rookie Walter Davis with 8:27 remaining.

Saldi, Waters save Cowboys

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The most surprised guy on the field after the Dallas Cowboys blocked a fourth-quarter punt that resulted in the winning touchdown against the Philadelphia Eagles Sunday was the guy who did the blocking.

"I was surprised to get through," said Jay Saldi, a second-year Cowboys special team player.

"I'm usually the guy who tries to open the way for someone else to get through and block the kick," Saldi explained.

Dallas' Charley Waters picked up the bouncing ball and ran 17 yards for the key touchdown that gave the unbeaten Cowboys their 16-10 triumph over Philadelphia.

SALDI SAID he broke through to get his right arm on the attempted punt by Eagle kicker Spike Jones because of a busted assignment by the offensive guard and a blocking back.

"The guard realized he made a mistake and came back at me, but I was already through," Saldi said.

Saldi said the Cowboys felt all afternoon they were going to block one of Jones' punts. It was only a matter of time.

"They (the Eagles) seem to be having a problem," Saldi observed. "The center was snapping the ball low. You can't do that and not get hurt eventually."

Dallas coach Tom Landry breathed a sigh of relief in the Cowboys' dressing room.

"We're glad to be 6-0 after that one," Landry said. "We were flat after St. Louis and Washington back to back. That takes a lot out of a team."

LANDRY SAID the blocked punt was the big play. He also cited a good job by defensive back Mark Washington on a late fourth-quarter Eagles pass that wide receiver Harold Carmichael appeared to drop in the end zone.

"Mark did a helluva job on that one," Landry said. "If they scored then, it would have been a hectic finish."

Dick Vermeil, the disappointed Eagles coach, also zeroed in on the blocked punt on the critical play of the game.

Eagles' Bill Bergey grits teeth after suffering a hand injury.

"But I was proud of my team," Vermeil said. "I know a lot of people didn't think we could beat them, but I thought we could. And we almost did."

The Eagles had led from the second quarter when Ron Jaworski threw a 12-yard touchdown pass to Charlie Smith in the end zone and Horst Muhlmann converted.

Dallas struck back in the second period to score on a fiveyard run by rookie Tony Dorsett, but place-kicker Efren Herrera missed his first conversion since joining the Cowboys in the middle of the 1974 season. The attempt was

Pollsters to give Bo his wish

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

This week, Coach Bo Schembechler won't have to ask the media to drop his Michigan Wolverines from the No. 1 position in The Associated Press college football ratings.

Early in the season, despite an unbeaten record, Schembechler said he wished the voters would do him a favor and vote someone else No. 1. They heeded his request when Michigan struggled past Navy 14-7 but a 41-3 rout of highly regarded Texas A&M put the Wolverines back on top and they've been there ever since.

Until last Saturday.

In a stunning upset, Michigan not only was beaten by Minnesota 16-0 but failed to score for the first time in 114 games. That opened the door for second-ranked Texas and the Longhorns fully expect to be No. 1 this week following a 30- 14 triumph over Southern Methodist.

"NOW THAT we're No. 1, we're going to have to work to stay there," said kick returner Johnnie Johnson, anticipating this week's AP poll.

Even Notre Dame Coach Dan Devine inquired how the voting might go after the 11th-ranked Irish shocked No. 5 Southern California 49-19, handing the Trojans' their worst pounding since a 51-0 rout at the hands of Notre Dame 11 years ago.

And Alabama's Bear Bryant, whose third-ranked Crimson Tide walloped Louisville 55-6, had No. 1 on his mind.

"If we just win our games I think we'll win the national championship," he said.

Elsewhere, fourth-ranked Ohio State trimmed Northwestern 35-15, No. 6 Oklahoma flattened No. 16 Iowa State 35- 16, No. 18 Nebraska whipped No. 7 Colorado 33-15, No. 8 Kentucky buried Georgia 33-0, No. 9 Arkansas trounced Houston 34-0 and No. 10 Penn State downed West Virginia 49-28.

In the Second Ten, No. 12 Texas A&M beat Rice 28-14, No. 14 Pitt held off Syracuse 28- 21, UCLA edged No. 15 California 21-19, No. 17 Brigham Young shaded Wyoming 10-7, No. 19 Florida scored 10 points in the final 1:32 to defeat Tennessee 27-17 and No. 20 Clemson nipped North Carolina State 7-3.

TEXAS TECH, the No. 13 team, was the only member of the Top Twenty to have the weekend off. The Red Raiders face Texas next Saturday.

Texas had problems with SMU for a while. The Longhorns fell behind on Mike Ford's 11-yard touchdown pass to Emanuel Tolbert in the second period but scored 20 points in the last six minutes before halftime and were never headed.

Leading the way was Earl Campbell, who rambled through the rain for a career high 213 yards, including a 58- yard touchdown run.

"It took us a quarter to figure out who we were playing," said first-year Texas Coach Fred Akers, who is doing his best to make his legendary

Cotton foes lined up?

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

One bowl game match up was set up over the weekend; Texas A&M had to move over to make room for red-faced company and who's going to stop rampaging TCU?

It all happened over a college football weekend that saw three of the nation's top 10 teams bite the dust in ignomonious fashion.

It should make for an interesting shakeup in the polls this week, but there's no mystery about who will be No. 1, barring an unexpected flood of sentiment for Colgate, still unbeaten after demolishing Columbia.

Texas, last week's No. 2, will be this week's automatic No. 1. The Longhorns, amazingly, are the only legitimate major still unbeaten.

A GUY could have made a bundle before the season betting there would be only one unbeaten after the season's seventh week. And he could retire his next three generations if he had the foresight to pick Texas, not even rated as a prime contender in its own conference.

Should the Longhorns continue that way and land in the Cotton Bowl, there isn't much doubt that the Steers will be playing Notre Dame, barring any Irish missteps down the stretch.

After what the Irish did to Southern Cal, Texas A&M can make room for prestigious company in the They-laughed-when-I-sat-down-to-play-the-piano-on-TV department.

The Aggies were thoroughly embarrassed when Michigan lathered the Ags 41-3 in a showdown of national powers a few weeks back and Coach Emory Bellard has been catching flack ever since.

ONE HOUSTON writer described the defeat at Ann Arbor as the worst humiliation for a Southwest Conference team since Texas went to Harvard in 1931 and lost to the Crimson, 35-7. That seems a bit heavy and surely there has been something equally as bad since then.

USC looked every bit as bad as the Aggies in a 49-19 loss to the Irish, but fans of this longtime rivalry have come to expect such embarrassments, both ways, in games that are billed as "pick 'em."

The surprising Notre Dame victory should give Dallas the No. 1 bowl attraction of the holidays.

What makes us so sure Notre Dame would be interested in Dallas over New Orleans or Miami? You've got to be kidding. If there's a No. 1 at stake, the Irish will be there.

AND IT should prove a natural.

As you'll remember Notre Dame accepted its first bowl game invitation in half a century in 1970 to play Texas, a game in which the Longhorns solidified their claim to No. 1 with a hair-raising 21-17 victory, perhaps the greatest Cotton Bowl game of them all.

A year later, the Irish knocked Texas out of a second straight title with a 24-11 upset, ending a 30-game UT win streak in the process.

And while momentous decisions were being made in football's upper strata, TCU quietly negotiated the weekend's most refreshing victory by notching its second straight win and, what's more, didn't have to play Rice twice in a row to achieve the rate rare feat.

The Frogs upset Miami, 21-17. This doesn't compare in stature to some of the upsets that once were the trade mark of Dutch Meyer teams, but it was a beginning and the first sign that F.A. Dry's program might be making some progress.

The win enabled the Frogs to equal their victory output of three previous seasons. To make it three in a row, TCU must beat Houston this week, unlikely, maybe, but not quite as impossible as it seemed a few weeks ago.

Pate posts biggest victory margin of '77

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — It was no secret, but Jerry Pate confirmed it anyway after waltzing to the $125,000 Southern Open golf tournament championship by seven strokes, the largest winning margin of the season.

"I knew nobody was going to catch me after the sixth hole," said the grinning 24-year-old from Pensacola, Fla.

What the 1976 U.S. Open champion, in only his second year on the tour, did Sunday was birdie four of those six holes to take a five-shot lead over Johnny Miller, who was second entering the final round only three shots back.

"I was two under through six holes and still found myself five shots behind," said Miller, winner of 17 tournaments but winless in nearly 20 months.

"That sorta knocked the wind out of my sails," said the 30-year-old Miller.

It knocked it out of the rest of the field, too.

Pate, winning his fourth tournament in his brief pro career, led from wire to wire, shooting rounds 64, 67, 69 and 66 to finish 14-under-par over the hilly par 70, 6,791-yard Green Island Country Club course.

Broncos beat Bengals, keep mark unblemished

By The Associated Press

"I don't believe in letdowns," Denver Coach Coach Red Miller shrugged.

Coach Tom Landry and his Dallas Cowboys might do well to listen to the man from the mile-high city.

Miller's Marvels, sky-high after their 30-7 romp over the Oakland Raiders a week ago, might have been forgiven if they'd turned in a lackluster performance in Cincinnati. But on the contrary, they were as tough as ever, with first and second-stringers kicking in to kick the Bengals 24-13.

THAT LEFT them the only unbeaten team in the National Football League's American Conference. The Cowboys hold that distinction in the National Conference — but it wasn't easy staying that way. After emotional victories over division-rivals St. Louis and Washington the past two weekends, Dallas looked flat against Philadelphia and only a blocked punt, converted into a touchdown, enabled the Cowboys to nose out the Eagles 16-10.

"The mark of a good team is when reserves have to come in," Miller said — and he knew what he was talking about. Craig Morton, who had teamed with Jack Dolbin on an 81-yard go-ahead TD play late in the first half, went out with an injury. The Broncos could have collapsed — but second-year quarterback Craig Penrose kept them moving, directing a 63-yard touchdown drive in the fourth period to lock matters up.

"He showed a lot of poise," said Miller. Penrose looked at it matter-of-factly. "A backup quarterback has to be ready to do what I did today," said the former record-breaker from San Diego State.

Patriots 17, Colts 3

"It wasn't the whole season but it was darn close to it," quarterback Steve Grogan said after he completed 11 of 16 passes for 214 yards and a touchdown against the Colts. "I played a smarter game than I have in a long time."

While Grogan had plenty of time to pass, Bert Jones was kept busy by the Patriots' swarming offense and never got Baltimore moving.

49ers 28, Lions 7

Jim Plunkett, calling his own signals for the first time this season, connected with Gene Washington on first-half touchdown passes of 32 and 35-yards to beat the Lions for San Francisco's first victory of the season.

Chiefs 21, Chargers 16

With barely 2½ minutes to play, San Diego led 16-7. But Tony Reed bulled in from one yard out to cut the margin to two points and, a scant 31 seconds later, safety Tim Gray dashed 16 yards with Rickey Young's fumble for the TD that sent the Chiefs home happy.

Cardinals 49, Saints 31

Mel Gray caught passes from quarterback Jim Hart and running back Terry Metcalf for touchdowns and Wayne Morris scored four times on shortyardage runs in St. Louis' wideopen victory. Bobby Scott passed for two touchdowns for the Saints, who wiped out the Cardinals' 21-0 lead, then fell back again.

Raiders 28, Jets 27

Oakland wiped out the Jets' 27-14 lead as Ken Stabler fired his second and third touchdown passes of the game, fourthquarter strikes to Fred Biletnikoff and Mike Siani. Stabler was virtually overshadowed by New York's young Richard Todd, who threw four TD strikes.

Steelers 27, Oilers 10

Falcons 16, Bears 10

With about two minutes to go, Chicago appeared to have a one-point victory over Atlanta. But the Bears' Steve Schubert fumbled a punt deep in his own territory, Atlanta recovered and Haskel Stanback plowed in moments from the two-yard line for the Falcon victory.

Dolphins 31, Seahawks 13

Browns 27, Bills 16

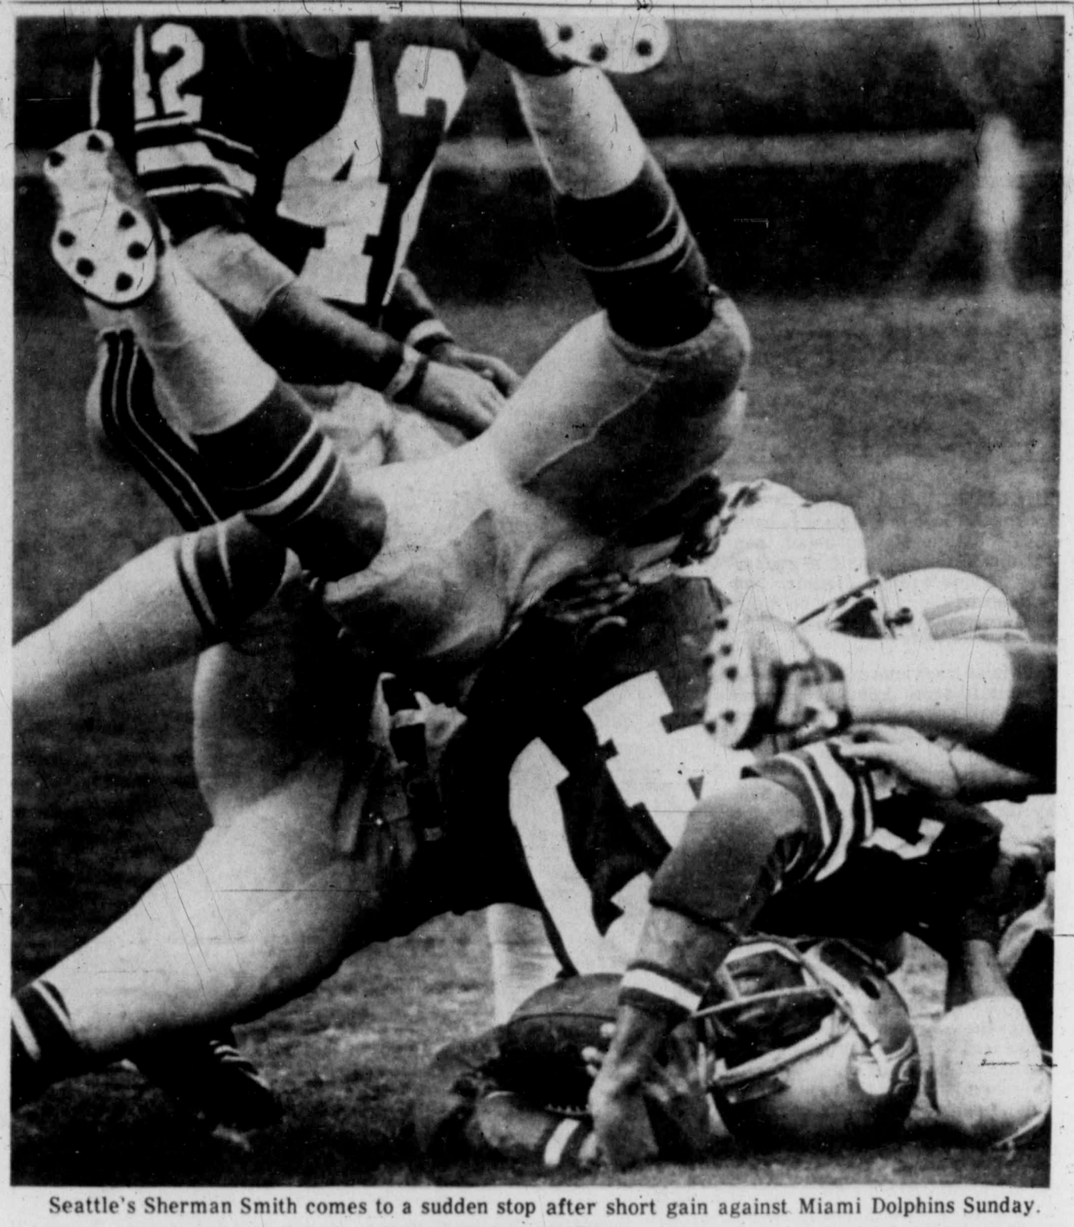
Brian Sipe passed for two touchdowns, one of them a deflected 52-yarder to Paul Warfield, in Cleveland's victory over Buffalo. The Bills got 99 yards from O.J. Simpson.

Packers 13, Bucs 0

Tampa Bay, in an instant replay of 1976, remains the only winless team in the NFL. The Packers did them in on Chester Marcol's second-period field goals of 40 and 44 yards and Eric Torkelson's five-yard TD run following a third-quarter blocked kick.

Giants 17, Redskins 6

The Giants, who rallied to beat Washington in their opening game of the season, did it again. They wiped out the Redskins' 6-0 halftime lead as Doug Kotar sprinted 17 yards for one TD and Joe Pisarcik passed 23 yards to Jimmy Robinson for another.



Seattle's Sherman Smith comes to a sudden stop after short gain against Miami Dolphins Sunday.

Cowboys triumph

blocked by the Eagles' Art Thoms.

HERRERA, WHO also missed two field goal attempts, had kicked 82 straight extra points.

Later in the fourth quarter, Dallas drove from its 41, mostly on a 33-yard bootleg run by quarterback Roger Staubach to the Eagles' 18.

A five-yard gain by Dorsett with a roughing penalty tagged on moved the ball to the seven. But the Eagles stiffened and with a fourth and one for a TD, the Cowboys elected to go for a field goal and Herrera booted an 18-yarder to make it 16-7.

The Eagles threatened in the final four minutes on a drive from their 37 that carried to a first down at the Dallas 20. Pass completions by Jaworski of 18, 5, 6 and 18 yards ate up most of the ground. Jaworski hit Harold Carmichael in the end zone but the big wide receiver dropped the ball.

They finally settled for a 32-yard field goal by Muhlmann.

It was the sixth consecutive victory for Dallas and left the Eagles with a 2-4 mark.

Buffs' Perry remains critical

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Colorado linebacker Tom Perry is expected to remain on the critical list until at least Monday night because of a head injury he suffered in Saturday's game against Nebraska, a hospital spokesman said Sunday.

Perry collapsed in the locker room after Colorado's 33-15 loss to the Cornhuskers. He was given emergency treatment at a Lincoln hospital, then transferred to Omaha for further surgery.

Dr. Bradley Berman completed "four to five hours" of surgery on Perry early Sunday. He said Sunday afternoon that Perry suffered "a significant injury. There's not much we can say right now, but he appears to be getting along fairly well. The next 24 hours will tell the story."

Perry, 6-3 and 228 pounds, was helped from the field in the fourth quarter.

Colorado Coach Bill Mallory, who accompanied Perry to Omaha instead of returning to Boulder with the team, said the senior linebacker was knocked groggy late in the third quarter or early in the fourth, but appeared to be all right and returned to the game.

GRIMSLEY'S WORLD

Thirst for more blood remains unsatisfied

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

The Wonderful World of Sports:

It was a basketball game between the Los Angeles Lakers and the Milwaukee Bucks. As is sometimes the case, physical contact intensified between the rival centers, 7-foot-2½ Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Lakers and rookie Kent Benson of the Bucks.

Benson stuck an elbow in Jabbar's mid-section, so says Jabbar, who proceeded to lay a round-house right on Benson's left eye. Result: small wound and concussion for Benson, fractured right hand and unprecedented $5,000 fine for Jabbar.

ANOTHER SITE, another game: the Pittsburgh Steelers and the Cincinnati Bengals are involved in a nationally-televised Monday night football game in the NFL. Mel Morgan of the Bengals throws a forearm into the face of John Stallworth, a Pittsburgh receiver, who has just caught a pass. Result: penalty for unsportsmanlike conduct against Morgan, a mild concussion for Stallworth.

Moments later Mel Blount of the Steelers knocks tight end Bob Trumpy to the ground on a pass play and, seeing it on TV, Commissioner Pete Rozelle interpreted it as unnecessary roughness.

He called both Morgan and Blount onto the carpet.

Excessive, unnecessary violence has become the concern of all administrators of contact sports. Hockey players have all their teeth knocked out before they are old enough to vote. The games often turn into highstick wars that leave heads bashed and limbs battered. Stretcher bearers wait on the sidelines at football games to haul the wounded away.

WITHIN THE past two weeks newspaper readers have been appalled by tales of how this thirst for blood is enchanced at the lowest grade school and high school level. One coach, seeking to inure his young pupils to violence, had them paint live chickens the colors of the rival team an kick them around in practice. Another coach sought to steel his minions by biting off the heads of live frogs.

As the late Vince Lombardi once said. "Winning isn't the only thing — it's everything."

During the World Series last week, this conversation was overheard between two ladies queuing up at a cash register in a big department store.

"What's a Bucky Dent?" one of them said.

"Bucky Dent is the name of the Yankee shortstop," the companion replied.

"Is he a grown man?"

"Sure, he must be 27 or 28 years old."

"That's what I don't understand about the World Series," the confused woman said. "All these silly little boy names ... Bucky ... Willie ... Reggie ... Catfish. Why don't they have grown-up names?"

"I dont know," the other lady said. "Even the managers. One is called Billy and the other Tommy."

"Seems silly to me."

ONE OF the fascinations of our great national pastime — it's still a little boy's game.

It is so simple that the tiniest of tykes not only can play it but can understand it.

No intricate formations. Few subleties.

Grown men, some of them making more money than the chairman of the board of AT&T, play it in short pants and foolish-looking caps. The game itslf seems to reduce them to their childhood.

MC sweeps WT meet

SAN ANGELO — Midland College swept all four titles in the huge West Texas Open Tennis Tournament here Sunday.

Reg Luttrell won the men's singles title with a 7-6, 7-6 victory over teammate Steve Wyett while Joanne Hall won the women's singles title with a 6-3, 6-3 win over Myers of South Plains College.

Ann Layman and Blanca Barriga took the women's crown with a 4-6, 6-3, 6-2 win over Barbara Starnes and Cindy Menna of Odessa.

MC was assured of the doubles championship as the teams of Reg Luttrell-Jose Rivera and Tony Luttrell-Ron Cetrone reached the finals. That match will be played today.

Other Midlanders to win championships were Karen Broe, 18 singles; Lance Armstrong, 16 singles; Bitsey Hopper, 12 singles; and Jeff Bramlett and Kirk Farquhar, 18 doubles.

Bramlett finished second in the 18 singles as did Broe and Joni Russell of Andrews in the 18 doubles.

2 killed, 10 hurt in track accident

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese police began an investigation today into an accident that killed two people and injured 10 during the running of the Japan Grand Prix, the final Formula 1 event of the season.

The race, held at the Fuji International Speedway circuit 90 miles southwest of Tokyo, was won by Britain's James Hunt in a McLaren. Hunt averaged 124.70 miles per hour, touring the 73-lap course in one hour, 31 minutes, 51.68 seconds.

Police were questioning officials and witnesses in an effort to find out why a number of spectators had entered an area between a track guard rail and a spectator barrier. The investigators also sought details of the crash itself in which Gilles Villeneuve of Canada, driving a Ferrari, ran into the Tyrrell driven by Ronnie Peterson of Sweden.

The crash sent Villeneuve's Ferrari spinning into the air, then plunging into the crowd.

The two drivers escaped injury. They were not available for comment today, but Peterson, in the pits after the seventh-lap crash, said: "Villeneuve hit me in the back and went over me."

The Canadian driver's mecha ics said he was badly shaken by the accident and left the course immediately.

One of those killed was a 21-year-old track guard who had gone into the area to order the spectators to move.

'Dump Devine' sales hit slump

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — The last coach to savor a victory margin of 30 points or more over the University of Southern California was Ara Parseghian, who did it 51-0 in 1966.

And therein lies Dan Devine's major problem — he's not Ara Parseghian.

But Devine did something Saturday that even the most fanatic Notre Dame zealot will find hard to dismiss. With "Dump Devine" bumper stickers the latest rage in South Bend, 11th-ranked Notre Dame trampled fifth-rated Southern Cal 49-19, the Trojans' worst defeat since Ara lowered the boom on them 11 years ago.

In this his third season at Notre Dame, Devine has a 22-7 record and a .759 winning percentage. Not good enough, say those who want Ara back — forget it — or someone more colorful and inspirational than Devine for a school where it sometimes becomes difficult to separate inspiration and legend from fact.

ROCKNE, they say, did better. Leahy did better. Ara did better. Even Jess Harper and Elmer Layden did better.

Devine hasn't beaten his critics; he has beaten — routed — Southern Cal, which had won three consecutive meetings and six of the last seven in the ancient series between thu-tersectional rivals.

"Last year against Alabama was a great victory," he said. "The fourth-quarter comeback from a 30-10 deficit against Air Force in my first year here was a great victory. I've had some very satisfying moments here. But this was my most satisfying victory ever."

It took some urging for Devine to admit that fact.

"Believe it or not," he said, "I don't relate to things that personally. A great number of Notre Dame people told me, 'This is a great victory for you.' They didn't understand when I said it was a victory for Notre Dame, the team and the coaches.

"I don't think anybody worth giving 10 seconds to who knows anything about football has been on my back. What those people don't realize is that the constant interference destroys the concentration of your team, your staff and yourself. By trying to hurt an individual coach, they hurt the university, the recruiting and the players."

The bumper stickers — "I've found out they were promoted largely by two former players who were in the line-up in 1974 when Southern Cal rallied to rout Notre Dame," Devine says — came on the heels of newspaper reports of racial strife on a team approximately one-third black.
