Marines die

KUWAIT CITY — A U.S. Marine helicopter crashed during joint military exercises with Kuwait on Sunday, killing its two-man crew, the Navy said. The crewmen, both based at Camp Pendleton, Calif., were Capt. John A. Beving, 28, and 1st Lt. David L. Jones, 30, according to a statement from the camp. Beving's parents live in Silver Springs, Md., and Jones's wife lives in Dublin, Ohio, the statement said. Their AH-1W Cobra helicopter crashed at about 6 p.m. CDT Saturday at a training site eight miles south of the Kuwaiti-Iraqi border, according to a statement released by the U.S. Navy's Central Command office here.

U.S. defector

MOSCOW — Boris Yeltsin has granted Russian citizenship to an American cancer researcher who defected to the former Soviet Union in 1986, a news agency reported Sunday. The ITAR-Tass news agency said the citizenship decree applied to Arnold Lockshin, but did not indicate whether the scientist's wife and three children also were naturalized. When Lockshin left his home in Houston he told Soviet media he and his family had been harassed in the United States because of their political activism. The State Department had called the allegations of official persecution absurd. The Houston cancer research center that last employed Lockshin said he was fired because of poor performance, not his political beliefs. Lockshin works in a laboratory at the Oncology Center in Moscow.

Rock fans riot

MONTREAL — Crews worked Sunday to clean up Olympic Stadium following a rampage by heavy metal rock fans enraged when a concert by Guns N' Roses and Metallica was cut short. At least eight police officers suffered minor injuries when they clashed Saturday night with rioters throwing rocks and bottles, police said. Police said 12 people were arrested and one girl was taken to a hospital after being shoved through a glass display case by the charging crowd. About 300 police wielding riot clubs chased rioters through streets around the Olympic Stadium and fired tear gas inside. Metallica had to cut short its performance when a prop exploded near the stage, injuring lead singer James Hetfield. After two hours, Guns N' Roses took the stage and performed a few songs before lead singer Axl Rose halted the performance because of a sore throat.

Security Council pens use-of-force resolution

■ If U.S. agrees to military intervention it would primarily be air power, Scowcroft says.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Bush administration officials said Sunday they're moving closer to an agreement with members of the United Nations Security Council on using force if necessary to aid the strife-torn former Yugoslav republics.

"We're working hard with the British and French," National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft told reporters. "Mind you, we all have common goals. It's the details of how you go about this."

Scowcroft was interviewed in Kennebunkport, Maine, after an appearance on ABC-TV's "This Week with David Brinkley" in which he said that if the United States resorts to force in the region, it "would be primarily air power."

Scowcroft said Britain, France and the United States have "some differences in perspective" but predicted they would agree by today on the wording of a Security Council resolution.

Bush shows foreign policy involvement

■ President schedules session on crisis in Bosnia and meeting with Israel's Rabin.

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine — President Bush, in staging a high-profile strategy session on the crisis in Bosnia and in meeting Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin at his vacation home, is trying to telegraph a message to Americans that he remains engaged in foreign policy.

And while the president and his top aides deny political motivations, they carefully are nurturing the image of a president busy in what is still widely regarded as his strong suit.

Jury tries to place value on lives of Lockerbie victims

By Ronald Powers

Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Once they found Pan Am liable in the terrorist bombing that blasted one of its jets from the sky over Lockerbie, Scotland, jurors took up the hard task of putting a dollar value on the lives of the victims.

"It's crass to reduce it to money terms, but that's all we can do," Lee S. Kreindler, lead lawyer for the plaintiffs, told the U.S. District Court jury. In the first two of what could grow to more than 200 trials, a federal court jury last month awarded $9.25 million to the family of Robert Pagnucco, and $9 million to Harry Bainbridge's survivors.

Ousted pastor leaves with pulpit

HOUSTON (AP) — A pastor who fought to keep his job after congregation leaders voted to oust him finally left the church this weekend, taking an organ, fans, curtains and even the pulpit with him.

State District Judge William Powell gave the Rev. Robert L. White until noon Friday to move himself and his personal belongings out of the First Missionary Baptist Church in north Houston.

But church deacons said White and three friends stayed until 7 p.m. hauling out furniture, an organ, speakers, amplifiers, curtains, a ceiling fan and other church property. The four loaded the items in three cars, a pickup truck and a 14-foot-long U-Haul truck, said Deacon Tony Killings.

"The church isn't his personal belongings," Killings said. "That stuff wasn't given to him. It was given to the church."

Killings and Deacon Joe Hicks had the door locks changed and called the police as White was moving the items.

Timothy Leary creates computerized hallucinations

By John Rogers

Associated Press writer

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Pssst. Timothy Leary is concocting a new psychedelic experience.

"And it's still legal. So don't tell anybody," he whispers conspiratorily.

Then he breaks into an all-knowing grin, one the world has seen for decades now. It's the one that has confounded critics and supporters: Is he serious, is he crazy — or is he just putting us on? But Leary will tell you he's never been more serious than he is about this new psychedelic experience, the one called CD-ROM.

"Those letters are more important than LSD — and even CIA," he continues good-naturedly. "CD-ROM is going to be just as revolutionary as the invention of the pencil and paper for democratizing and empowering the people."

CD-ROM, for those who haven't heard, is the latest computer rage, merging compact disc-created sights and sounds with personal databases.

The result is a computerized audio-visual program so all-encompassing that a person could store on a single computer disc an encyclopedia, dictionaries containing all the words of a dozen languages, an atlas and a film library — and still have room to include a collection of favorite records.

They could pop a disc into a personal computer and — with lights flashing, images dancing and stereophonic sounds cranking — take in the history of the world.

Which got Leary, who over the past 10 years has written and marketed several computer programs, to thinking:

"What if you could put onto a compact disc hallucinations — or right-brain activating programs? You could create your

WEATHER SUMMARY

Today's high to hit 90s

Staff report Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high in the upper 90s and south winds 10-15 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low in the upper 60s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland. Tuesday should be mostly sunny with a high in the mid-90s. After an overnight low of 66, Sunday's high reached 97, compared with a record high of 104 for that date in 1947. The record low for that date was 60 set in 1989.

STATE Showers and thunderstorms developed over Texas on Sunday following a day of temperatures in the 90s. The National Weather Service said an upper-level high pressure ridge influence the conditions. Showers and thunderstorms developed over the extreme southeast due in part to a sea breeze from the Gulf of Mexico. A funnel cloud was reported near Beaumont at mid-afternoon, but no damage was reported. Mid-afternoon temperatures ranged from 86 at Houston to 98 at Cotulla and McAllen. The heat index, which figures humidity into the formula, soared to 106 at Waco. Today's weather situation is expected to be about the same, with readings in the 90s, night-time lows in the 70s, and isolated thunderstorms.

NATION Thundertorms swept across much of the nation Sunday. Hail and high winds pounded parts of Minnesota and heavy rains caused flooding in Rhode Island. Pierce gusts kicked up by electrical storms battered parts of Minnesota. Trees were damaged in Voyageurs National Park and large hail fell around Roseau and Gouville. Rains flooded a portion of Route 1 in southern Rhode Island, between Wakefield and Westerly along the coast. By midday, rainshowers and thunderstorms dotted the lower Great Lakes, the Atlantic states, the Gulf of Mexico states, the Tennessee Valley, the lower Ohio and Missouri valleys, the Mississippi Valley, the central Plains and the Dakotas, northern Minnesota/New Mexico, Colorado and Arizona. Heavier rainfall during the 6 hours ending at 2 p.m. EDT included 1 1/4 inch at Providence, R.I., and Bridgeport, Conn., and a 1 inch at Crossville, Tenn. Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 59 degrees at Auburn and Lewiston, Md., and San Simeon, Calif., to 107 degrees at Palm Springs, Calif. Residents in Rockford, Ill., sweltered in high humidity and 89 degree temperatures at 2 p.m. EDT. Sioux Falls, S.D., reached its first 90 degree temperature since the last day of April. The low temperature for the lower 48 states Sunday was 34 degrees at Truckee, Calif.

LEARY: He claims to still use drugs

(From 1A) own hallucinations." And so you have the latest efforts of Timothy Leary, who in his 71 years has lived perhaps enough lives for five or 10 people: Harvard University professor, psychedelic drug experimenter, free-lance college lecturer, author of more than a dozen books, convicted marijuana user, prison escapee, international fugitive, "stand-up philosopher" and now computerized hallucination designer.

But what is he, really? "I'm a full-time psychologist," he says seriously as he sits in the small work room of his spacious Beverly Hills home. "My whole life has been dedicated to empowering individuals. And now we finally have the technology to do it. I'm just lucky to have remained alive long enough — and to have become only mildly senile — to see the climax of everything I've ever wanted to do for the last 40 years."

He says his computer program, which he hopes to have out this year, could bring young people from all over the world to schools or libraries where they could share their psychedelic experiences. That would be educational and promote human understanding, he says. And it would be safer than the old way of pursuing psychedelic experiences. "The worst problem with LSD and other psychedelics is that they're isolating and alienating," Leary says. "You can get lost in your own mind. That's when you have the example of the pathetic acid head who has gone off and seen Buddha, been introduced to everything in the universe, figured it all out and then — wham — when he gets back he can't remember his own ZIP code."

Not that Leary, who once laid out a program for taking psychedelic drugs once a week, has given them up. "Yes, I still use psychedelics carefully and prudently as part of my continual life growth," he says. But he adds that he doesn't advocate them for children, and although he thinks every adult should have the right to take them, it's a right that he says some would be better off not exercising. "For adults, I say 'just say know,'" he says. "That happens to be the Socratic injunction and it has guided me through my life. Know thyself. Look within."

If Leary has suffered from his years of drug experimentation, it doesn't seem to show. Although his snow-white hair and the lines in his face have begun to betray his 71 years, he seems to have the energy of someone much younger. He rarely sits still during a conversation. As he speaks, softly but rapidly, his piercing blue eyes dart constantly.

"I seem to be feeling fine," he says. "I've got a smoker's cough — from smoking legal cigarettes for 45 years — but otherwise I'm OK." In recent months he has traveled all over the globe, visiting San Francisco, Florida, Brazil, Japan and New York.

He has spoken to groups ranging from college students to pharmaceutical company executives, and debated former Drug Enforcement Administration chief Peter Bensinger. Sometimes he's simply entertained audiences as a "stand-up philosopher," talking about whatever comes into his head.

His goal, Leary says, is to "empower individuals to become smarter." "That's the only hope for the human race," he says earnestly. "To become smarter, to use our brains, to communicate precisely with people from other language groups."

"And that's what the rulers don't want, of course, that's what they fear," he says. "They want to keep us stupid, so they can divide and conquer."

The rulers are just about any rulers. The leaders of China, Cuba, Japan, the United States — Leary scorns them all.

He has been challenging authority for a long time.

In the 1940s, he left the U.S. Military Academy at West Point after he was ordered "silenced" by his fellow cadets for freely admitting that he was the one who supplied the whiskey after an Army-Navy football game. He earned his psychology degree while in the Army during World War II.

He earned a doctorate from the University of California, Berkeley, in 1950, and nine years later was teaching at Harvard University.

Then came his controversial LSD experiments. He was fired in 1963.

By the mid-1960s he was showing up at college campuses as a free-lance lecturer, advising young people to "Tune In, Turn On, Drop Out."

Then in 1970 he was running an independent campaign for governor of California when he was sentenced to 10 years in prison for marijuana possession.

Within a year, he had escaped from prison, and he led U.S. authorities on a merry chase around the world until he was captured in Afghanistan in 1973.

Back in the United States, he was paroled from prison in 1976 and settled into his current life with his wife, Barbara.

Leary's first wife, Marianne, committed suicide in 1955. His daughter, Susan, did the same in 1990. "My only regret," he says, his voice breaking, "is that I wasn't a better husband and father."

But 25 years after he told the world to tune in, turn on and drop out, Leary defends most of what he has done. He needed to take drugs, he says, to learn about the mysteries of the mind that could be gained no other way. He was always first and foremost a researcher of the human brain, not an acid-head, he says.

"Have I made mistakes? Sure. But you're talking to Babe Ruth now," he says. "Babe Ruth struck out more times than any other baseball player. But look how many home runs he hit."

BUSH: President to meet with Rabin

(From 1A) tion and the government of former Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir over construction of settlements in occupied territories.

However, Rabin's pledge to curb settlement building opened the way for approval of the U.S. aid — which now could be politically beneficial to Bush and the new Israeli leader.

An administration official, briefing reporters here late Sunday afternoon on the upcoming Bush-Rabin session, said "there are no obvious obstacles" to going ahead with the loan guarantees. "But there are some important issues for them to engage directly" and "sensitive issues on both sides," the officials said.

White House chief of staff Samuel Skinner, meanwhile, conceded the visit could have domestic political overtones. "Anytime you can be a world leader and show up as a world leader can't hurt you," he said.

Bush's stump-speech question — whom do you trust when the phone rings at the White House in the middle of the night? — has become a theme that the White House and the Bush campaign continually try to reinforce.

With the beginning of the Republican convention just eight days away, Bush awoke on a rainy Sunday to more bad political news: a Boston Globe poll suggesting Clinton had a broad-based lead over Bush.

The poll of 600 likely voters across the country suggested Clinton would beat Bush by 24 points — 56 to 32 percent — if the election were held now. The poll, conducted Monday to Wednesday, has a margin of error of 4 percentage points.

The poll also showed that one in five registered Republicans would like to see him step down. His overall job-approval rating was 31 percent.

There may have been some solace for the GOP ticket. The poll also showed that the president's wife continues to be the most popular public figure in America, with favorable approval ratings of 75 percent.

Bush was asked by a reporter Sunday after church services if he was humbled by the fact that his wife is twice as popular as he is. "Yes," Bush said, then adding: "I'm delighted with it."

The trip to St. Ann's Episcopal Church was one of Bush's few outings on a summer "vacation" that was shrunk from two weeks to four days, days dominated by attention to world events rather than recreation.

There were no images this time of Bush pounding through the ocean waves in his 28-foot powerboat or clowning on the golf course. The boat stayed at the dock unused, the golf course went unvisited, and the only pictures of Bush seen by Americans showed him in a coat and tie.

When Bush held his Saturday news conference on the situation in Bosnia-Herzegovina after meeting with his top national security advisers, he told reporters he hoped they would relay to Americans that he was hard at work rather than relaxing.

After months of not taking an active role in the crisis, the administration's new tougher stance — announced by Bush on Thursday during a campaign stop in Colorado — came only after Democratic rival Bill Clinton said he would support use of force in what used to be Yugoslavia.

But Bush bristled at the suggestion that his action was motivated by Clinton's comments.

And as to holding repeated foreign-policy news conferences when there's nothing new to announce, Bush said he was just trying to give Americans frequent updates.

STUDY: Team excavates plantation

(From 1A) system we're looking at," she told The Houston Post in its Sunday editions. "We're looking at one piece of property and the way it's been utilized by people over time."

The Abner Jackson Plantation was at the height of its operations in the 1860s. Then it was one of three in Brazoria county owned and operated by Jackson, a Virginia native who settled in Texas in 1838.

The other two plantations are now home to Texas' Darington and Retrieve prison units.

The remaining 3,000-acre plantation site, now owned by the Lake Jackson Historical Association, was cultivated for sugar by convict labor after Jackson's death in 1861.

Jackson left the property to his four legitimate sons, two of whom were killed in the Civil War. John C. Jackson returned from the war to run the plantation, but six years later he was killed by his remaining brother, George W. Jackson, reportedly in a dispute over the land.

"If there are discrepancies and differences between the (22) different slave houses, and different slaves with different economic capabilities, it'll show up in their artifacts."

— Archaeology Prof. Joan Few

land. But Abner Jackson also had children with his mistress, Rosa, who was of Native American and black ancestry. Those descendants now are asking that the plantation have a historical marker noting their ancestors' contribution to the property.

"My true feeling is that we are heirs of this property, and the children should have received something," said Melinda Jackson Kyle, great-granddaughter of Rosa Jackson. "I'm really bitter about that."

George Jackson died of tuberculosis in Galveston in 1873, leaving no heirs. Johnny Pollan, an archaeological steward at the Texas Historical Commission, said he knows of no other living white descendants of the Jackson family.

Although the massive hurricane of 1900 destroyed every building on the plantation, there could still be enough artifacts left on the site to give archaeologists a better understanding of slave life, Ms. Few said.

Ms. Few and a team of amateur archaeologists began excavating the site in January. The project, approved by the Texas Historical Commission, is a joint effort of UH-Clear Lake, the Lake Jackson Historical Association and the Brazosport Archaeological Society.

The first area excavated was a 20-by-20-foot building probably used to store large quantities of sugar, beef, flour and coffee.

"We found chains and pulleys and locks and scales, things that would be used in storage and measuring out and weighing goods," Ms. Few said.

Other ruins at the site include the main house, cotton gin, blacksmith shop, gin mill and jail house — the next area for excavation when work resumes in October.

So far, archaeologists have uncovered ceramics, a brass lock dated to 1878, pieces of pottery and an unusual Native American arrowhead that could date back as far as the 16th century.

"We know what the artifacts were... what was expensive and what wasn't," she said. "If there are discrepancies and differences between the (22) different slave houses, and different slaves with different economic capabilities, it'll show up in their artifacts."

"It's exciting for me because I'm interested in finding out how they lived their daily lives, the impact on slavery and how they managed to make the transition from slavery," said Marie Miller, a UH graduate student who is tracing the slaves' transition to freedom.

VICTIM: Jury places value on love, suffering

sealed in a cassette recorder.

Everyone on the New York-bound Boeing 747 and 11 people on the ground were killed in the Dec. 21, 1988, crash.

Most surviving relatives filed damage suits against Pan Am in federal courts in New York; others filed where they live. The first big issue was the liability limit set by international treaties of $75,000 per victim — unless willful misconduct is proved.

That issue was the subject of a trial in the federal court in Brooklyn last month that combined suits filed around the country. The jury found Pan Am guilty of willful misconduct because lax security allowed the bomb onto the plane.

Pan Am has said it will appeal. In the meantime, the verdict cleared the way for the lawsuits seeking damages. Losses to insurers of the now-defunct airline could exceed $300 million, lawyers in the case estimate.

The London Observer, quoting unidentified sources, has reported that Pan Am's insurance underwriters have begun talks to try settling the damage claims out of court. The plaintiffs lawyers said they hadn't been approached, however.

For the jurors, the lawyers and the victims' survivors, the process of assessing damages is the most trying emotionally.

While experts can estimate what a family has lost in potential income, it's the jury that must place a dollar value on love, affection, suffering and life.

But just how juries arrive at those figures is a mystery, say lawyers, judges and other legal experts.

"It's really up to the jury to value these things based on their own experience. Nobody knows exactly how they do it," said David W. Leeborn, a law professor at Columbia University.

"Partly it's a matter of empathy," said U.S. District Judge Jack B. Weinstein, who has lectured and written widely on federal civil law. "The jury puts itself in the position of the person, I think. Supposing it happened to me ... what would I want?"

While, in theory, sympathy for victims and their survivors shouldn't influence a jury's award, lawyers say it's important that the victims and their survivors appear to be as likeable as possible.

"This man was charming, he was hard working, he knew how to get things done," Kreindler told the jury when he described Pagnucco, a 51-year-old father of four. "If you lived in the Pagnucco house you went to church on Sunday."

Kreindler and other lawyers involved in the lawsuits declined to be interviewed, citing a gag order issued by U.S. District Judge Thomas C. Platt, who is presiding over the trials.

The process isn't only about money, Weinstein noted.

The public airing of a civil trial provides a sense of democratic participation and that justice is satisfied.

"It gives the people who are injured a feeling that a cross section of the community has heard their case," Weinstein said.

He concedes the system is flawed; civil trials are expensive and jurors can be prejudiced for or against victims. While everyone pays about the same price for a plane ticket, jury awards can vary greatly.

"With all its defects I think in general it's a good system," he said.

Nixon optimistic about peace

NEW YORK (AP) — After talks with new Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin on Sunday, former President Nixon said that for the first time there is a "window of opportunity" for peace in the Middle East.

"I believe the chances for a comprehensive peace settlement in the Middle East are better now than they've been at any time in 45 years," Nixon told reporters after a one-hour meeting with Rabin.

"But because of what has happened in what was the Soviet Union, what has happened in the gulf and so forth, (that) creates a window of opportunity," Nixon said, referring to the splintering of the Soviet Union that dissipated its influence in the Mideast, and the division of Arabs during the war to drive Iraq from Kuwait.

Rabin's election in June ended six years of conservative Likud Party rule by Yitzhak Shamir, who vowed never to give up an inch of the occupied West Bank or Gaza Strip.

Rabin's Labor Party government is willing to negotiate a land-for-peace deal with its Arab neighbors.

Nixon's former secretary of state, Henry Kissinger, met later Sunday with Rabin for more than an hour. Afterward he said: "I think there's a good chance of progress" in the peace talks.

"I think Israel has a government now that is willing to go to the limit of what is compatible with security, and I hope that its Arab counterparts understand that this is an unusual opportunity," Kissinger said.

Nixon hailed Rabin as "the right man in the right place at the right time," noting he has been a diplomat, prime minister and defense minister. Rabin led Israel's victory in the 1967 Six-Day War, and previously served as prime minister from 1974-77.

U.N.: Security Council works on resolution peared to be closer to agreement Sunday than they were a day before.

"This is simply a resolution which would authorize the use of all necessary means to assure the delivery of humanitarian supplies," Eagleburger said. "We are getting closer, I think to an agreement on that general concept."

Former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, interviewed from London on the Brinkley program, said she hoped the resolution "includes not only a means of getting humanitarian aid through."

"We need more than that," Thatcher said. "These people need steps which help to stop the fighting."

She advocated arming the Bosnians and making air strikes against bridges, ammunition dumps and military targets in Serbia in order to stop the flow of supplies to Serbian forces. She said the United States would be best equipped to conduct such air strikes.

"I can't understand why there is any further delay in taking much firmer action," she said. "You never say you will not use force. That only encourages the aggressor in his dastardly work."

The former prime minister said she was not, however, proposing the use of ground forces.

Scowcroft, asked about Thatcher's suggestion of air strikes, replied, "The provision of humanitarian relief could require different kinds of force. I think that as Mrs. Thatcher pointed out the United States' role in the application of force can, I think best be applied with the high technology equipment, and that would be primarily air power."

Mrs. Thatcher said failure to act vigorously in Yugoslavia could lead to "a great extension of the conflict" and Scowcroft agreed that the conflict has "broader implications" because it could breed greater instability in other Muslim countries.

CHURCH: Pastor removes property

ter. All we could do is take an inventory of what he's taking, then call a lawyer," Hicks said.

When White left, only the pews, a few potted plants and a piano remained.

"We're still paying for (the piano) so he didn't want it," Hicks said.

White has been unavailable for comment, but his attorney told The Houston Post he was unaware of what happened.

Powell's order followed an Aug. 2 church election to determine if the congregation wanted White ousted. White lost by one vote, 24 to 23.

"He padded the list. Some people (who voted) hadn't been to church in two or three years," Hicks said.

It was the second such election since a feud began in April between White and some of the church members who accused him of having a "lack of leadership." In the first election, White was defeated soundly.

But the pastor continued to show up every Sunday to preach from the pulpit, prompting legal action by Hicks and Killings. Most of the congregation stopped attending.

White said at the time that Hicks' and Killings' terms as deacons were over, making the meeting where the first vote took place illegal.

Powell ordered a new election to be overseen by a court-appointed master. When White lost that election Aug. 2, the judge signed an order telling him to leave.

Budget bills propose deep cuts in census

Census trends and economics statistics make for eye-glazing conversation. Yet they are vitally important to policy makers, scholars, corporate executives and anyone else trying to make sense of the economy.

That's why the House and Senate budget bills are alarming: They propose making deep cuts in the Census Bureau and Bureau of Economic Analysis, agencies in charge of keeping statistical tabs on the U.S.

The cuts would be shortsighted. Collection of data on leading indicators that predict recoveries and recessions, and on foreign investment and other vital topics, would have to be eliminated or curtailed.

The cuts threaten projects to analyze the 1990 census and improve the next census, for example, by overcoming the systematic undercount of minorities.

The U.S. needs better economic barometers, not truncated ones. Current statistics provide misleading snapshots of the economy by overemphasizing the once-dominant manufacturing sector and neglecting newly emerging service sectors.

And the data are out of line with international convention, making comparisons impossible.

Michael Boskin, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, has led a movement to beef up data collection, and the administration has proposed budget increases to do so. But appropriations committees proposed sizable cuts, leaving the budgets too low by $40 to $60 million.

The money would not be hard to find in less important parts of the Commerce budget.

It could be generated, for example, by imposing small fees for subsidized loans from the Small Business Administration or requiring banks to pick up a larger share of losses on such loans.

It makes no sense, after spending more than $2.5 billion to conduct the 1990 census, to now refuse money to make the data usable. Good data are vital to good business decisions and good policy making.

Maine lawmaker puts his convictions first

WASHINGTON — First-term Congressman Tom Andrews recently underwent freshman orientation in hardball pork-barrel politics — and his constituents may pay a price.

It began when the Maine Democrat challenged members of his own party to reject the multibillion-dollar B-2 Stealth Bomber when the 1993 defense bill came to the floor earlier this summer. As a member of the House Armed Services Committee, Andrews broke with the full committee in a failed bid to kill a deal already cut between his fellow Democrats and the White House. The deal called for B-2 production to be capped at 20 planes instead of 15.

The down payment for the additional five planes will run more than $3 billion — another reason why the national debt is rising by $13,000 per second. Andrews wonders why 20 such doomsday bombers are needed in the wake of the collapse of the Soviet Union. The B-2 was designed to penetrate Soviet airspace by evading radar detection, but it flunked a stealth flight test last year. "The only thing out of sight about the B-2 is its price," says Andrews.

Andrews' end-run amendment lost by a vote of 212-162. Several of his colleagues extended their sympathies and support, but explained that they couldn't vote to cap production of the B-2 without jeopardizing defense projects in their own districts.

Andrews' independence rankled Democratic colleagues on the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense. They proceeded to punish Andrews by slashing from next year's budget one of four destroyers built in his district in favor of an amphibious ship built in the district of the full committee chairman, Rep. Jamie Whitten, D-Miss.

It's not like Andrews wasn't warned. When he stepped onto the House floor to introduce his amendment, he explains, a "prominent Democrat told me to back off. He said, 'If you keep this up, all the defense money going to your district will be under further review.'

"This is why the Congress is paralyzed," Andrews told our associate Ed Henry. "This is exactly why the country is bankrupt. I come from a state where Democrats speak passionately about bringing the runaway deficit under control, providing decent health care, better schools, job training and a clean environment. How is any of this compatible with spending billions more for the B-2?"

Andrews is already in some hot water back home because he didn't stop the closure of Loring Air Force base in his district. While Andrews challenged the grounds for closing the Maine Air Force base, he ultimately voted for a package of base closings including Loring. It will probably cost the state more than $5,000 jobs.

SURPRISE PARTY — Clarence Thomas is still a rookie on the Supreme Court, but the controversial justice is already the toast of Washington's conservative establishment. Thomas' appeal to the right wing was never more evident than on his birthday in June, when the head of an arch-conservative interest group managed to surprise Thomas with a party in his honor.

Paul Weyrich, founder and president of the Free Congress Foundation, said it wasn't easy luring one of his favorite judges over to his office for the party. After making arrangements with Thomas' secretary, Weyrich called the justice just before noon on June 23 and told him he wanted to discuss an important matter in private, but Thomas didn't understand why they couldn't talk over the phone. "I said, 'Clarence, I've never misled you — trust me on this,'" Weyrich said.

Once convinced of the seriousness of the situation, Thomas agreed to make the 10-minute trip from his office to Weyrich's. Upon Thomas' arrival, Weyrich solemnly led the justice onto a balcony that overlooks a courtyard. "And here is this place jammed with people, and they applaud and cheer and say happy birthday, and he says, 'you got me, you got me.'"

CHARLEY REESE

Ignorance and greed surround Persian Gulf

I was opposed to the Gulf War and to the sanctions imposed on Iraq after the war, and nothing that has happened since has changed my mind.

The war was unnecessary. At an official cost of $61 billion, about 400 American lives counting the accidents, and 100,000 to 200,000 Iraqi lives, we achieved at best a temporary solution to problem which (1) it increasingly appears we probably created and (2) could have been solved diplomatically.

Yes, we restored the sheik to his gold-plated toilet seat. We didn't restore democracy because, of course, there was none before the invasion and none since. And occupancy of the gold toilet seat is temporary.

There are 18 million Iraqis and about 2 million Kuwaitis. Thirty years from now there will be about 25 to 30 million Iraqis and maybe 3 million Kuwaitis. The Iraqis will still believe Kuwait belongs to Iraq and they will still be strong enough to take it. The only way to keep the ruling Kuwaiti family on its throne is to adopt Kuwait as a permanent military ward of the United States, and even that could fail.

Iraq isn't the only problem the British gunboat-created mini-states of the Persian Gulf have. Across the water is Iran. There are now about 55 million Iranians and in 30 years there will be close to 100 million. They don't like us. They don't like the British. They don't like the Israelis. And they don't like the little puppet-states set up by the British and now adopted by us. Moreover, the Iranians are Shi'ites and so are a sizeable portion of the population of the mini-states.

President Bush is making a big deal about Iraq's now destroyed capability of building weapons of mass destruction — bureaucratic jargon for nukes and chemical and biological weapons. You don't have to be a genius to figure out that the Iranians are probably not busy making fortune cookies. They already have chemical weapons — they used them in the Iraq-Iran War. And they are buying missile technology from Mr. Bush's friends in China. They have also developed close ties to the former Moslem republics of the now defunct Soviet Union.

As for the sanctions, they were dumb for the same reason the Versailles Treaty was dumb. A punitive, unjust peace imposed by force only breeds future wars. Bush can say his argument is with Saddam Hussein, not with the Iraqi people, until Clinton is inaugurated, but the bombs fell on the Iraqi people and the equally cruel sanctions fall on the Iraqi people — not on Saddam.

A sensible plan would have been to insist on reasonable disarmament but to have lifted all economic sanctions. That would have focused the pain on the government, not on the people. But Bush apparently listened to some knuckleheads tell him that if the Iraqi people were squeezed hard enough, they'd overthrow Saddam. They were probably the same geniuses who told Jimmy Carter — not to worry, the Shah of Iran is okay.

Saddam may not be a military strategist but he has never slept a single night since he was teenager that he wasn't in imminent danger of death. He's an expert in survival. All Bush's unstatesmanlike public ranting and raving did was help Saddam. Bush's rash words have guaranteed that any Iraqi who shoots Saddam will be torn to pieces as a Bush-Zionist agent. If what Bush wanted is a coup, that isn't a very bright strategy. Saddam's luck could run out at any moment, but if it does it will be no thanks to Bush.

Unfortunately, we have no foreign policy in the area. We act on the basis of short-term corporate financial interests in regard to the Persian Gulf and on the basis of domestic American politics in regard to Israel — beyond that, we have no policy at all.

That is not a wise approach to the 800-million strong world of Islam. It reeks of the same racist arrogance, the same ignorance, the same short-term greed and political expediency that rotted and destroyed the British Empire.

OTHER VIEWS

Some believe McGovern's theory

George Bush, who hasn't been very forceful of late, finally scored a direct hit on Democratic opponent Bill Clinton the other day by quoting, of all people, George McGovern.

The president noted McGovern "called this year's ticket a Trojan Horse and he said, and I quote, 'They are much more liberal underneath and will prove it when they're elected.'"

Indeed, the Clinton-Gore ticket is far more in tune with big-spending and big-government than meets the eye.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, underscores this fact after analyzing Clinton's program. A University of Georgia graduate with a doctorate in economics, Gramm says:

"By any set of assumptions, the Clinton proposal would put into effect the first year Clinton was president — if Congress adopted his program — the largest increase in domestic spending in American history. Second, no matter how you define or set into place the program, the Clinton proposal calls for the largest single one-year tax increase in American history."

"And, finally, after having had the largest increase in discretionary spending, the largest increase in taxes in American history, still, by the way I figure it, the deficit would go up on an annual basis over $25 billion a year."

But raising taxes is what Governor Clinton does best. That's why his decade-long policies in Arkansas left it one of the poorest states in the country.

Clinton's higher 36 percent tax rate would punish anyone who works hard to reach that level, and Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp points out that the taxes are designed to keep the middle class from earning and saving more money.

The big question is this: Will the message get out to enough voters by November that "Clintonomics" is a Trojan Horse which, if let in the gate, could throw the economy into a complete tailspin?

— The Augusta Chronicle
Augusta, Ga.

Democrats abandon partisan stand

Stumping for the Clinton-Gore ticket, Jimmy Carter accused President Bush of "politicizing foreign policy." Carter's statement apparently was prompted by Bush's criticism of Bill Clinton's reckless suggestion that U.S. forces be sent to Yugoslavia.

We find it rather curious that leading Democrats accuse the Bush administration of "politicizing foreign policy." Strange, we recall congressional Democrats recklessly turning the Desert Storm war resolutions into party-line affairs. Bill Clinton sought to straddle the fence on Desert Storm, opposing the Gulf War until it was well under way.

Al Gore made up his mind at the last minute, although he deserves some credit for voting in favor of the war resolutions.

And haven't the Democrats sought to criminalize policy differences between Capitol Hill and the White House?

Why, yes. If indeed the dictum that partisanship should stop at the water's edge has been abandoned, it has been abandoned by liberal Democrats.

Restaurant patron solves a gnawing problem

As I look back on my life, the Waffle House seems to have been one of the most consistent things in it.

The Waffle House is always there at the next exit, always open, always ready to throw on a couple of eggs for me and even an occasional T-bone steak.

It is the Waffle House T-bone that is the subject for today.

You can get a T-bone at Waffle House for about five bucks. It's not the thick, juicy cut one might get at Longhorn's in Atlanta, Manny's in Minneapolis, The Palm in New York or the Plaza III in Kansas City, but for the price it's a pretty good little steak.

It comes with a salad, hash browns, and two hamburger buns sliced and toasted. I know, it's white bread.

"If you eat too much white bread, Lewis, it will kill you," health nuts are saying.

I don't care. I was reared on white bread and I'm going to stay with it. Just get somebody to sing "Precious Memories" at my funeral.

I pulled into a Waffle House the other day off an exit on I-20 between Atlanta and Augusta. It was lunch time and there are always too many screaming small children in McDonald's to suit me.

My Waffle House waitress was named Kay, and she was pleasant — another consistent thing about Waffle House. They have good help.

I ordered the T-bone medium well.

"What kind of dressing do you want on your salad?" Kay asked me.

I knew her name was Kay because she was wearing it on her blouse.

"Ranch," I answered.

"What are you drinking?" Kay went on.

"Iced tea."

Kay wrote all that down and then yelled to the cook: "T-bone, medium well."

The cook, I noticed, never responded, but Waffle House cooks never do.

Waffle House cooks have wonderful memories. They can be frying six eggs, four pieces of bacon and have two waffles in the iron at the same time and listen to three waitresses yelling out orders and it all registers and they rarely get an order wrong.

There ought to be a lot of ex-Waffle House cooks in Congress. Maybe they wouldn't forget what the voters elected them to do.

I ate my salad. Then, my steak and white bread and hash browns came.

My steak was cooked perfectly. I ate all the steak I could cut off the bone with a knife and fork. But did you ever notice how much meat is left on a T-bone steak that you can't get at with a knife and fork?

Right next to the bone there's some really great tasting tender meat. If you are eating at a fancy steak restaurant, you wouldn't dare think of picking up what's left of your steak and gnawing that good meat off the bone. But this is a Waffle House. The jukebox is playing a fine country tune and how I would like to get to the rest of that meat.

I called Kay over.

"What," I asked, "is the Waffle House policy on a customer picking up what's left of his or her T-bone and gnawing the meat that's close to the bone?"

"Do whatever floats your boat," smiled Kay.

I picked up my T-bone and happily gnawed away.

The guy with the Harley-Davidson T-shirt seated at the counter next to me never looked up; nobody in the entire Waffle House seemed offended.

What a nice experience. It was just like home. Which is the only other place I've ever picked up a steak and gnawed away at the bone.

A precious memory at the Waffle House. How it will linger. Pass the white bread and somebody put another quarter in the jukebox.

War prisoners sit, dream of freedom in Bosnian military camps

Julliana Mojsilovic

Associated Press writer

MANJACA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — A barbed-wire fence and minefield divide Muslim prisoners on Manjaca hill from the outside world that they once shared with their Serb guards.

About 3,500 Muslims and Croats are held here, near Banja Luka in western Bosnia. It is a camp that their captors call a military prison for "armed rebels and war criminals," but most inmates deny they took up arms.

Whispering to visiting reporters, brought here by Serb officials, inmates claimed they all were civilians in war zones in Bosnia's bloody fighting — unarmed and without uniforms.

But those claims did not convince their captors.

"All prisoners here were fighters. They were captured on the battlefield," said Lt. Col. Bozidar Popovic, the camp commander. "Some of them threw away their rifles before they were caught, and almost all took off their uniforms."

While prisoners related their stories, Popovic, of the Serbs' army in Bosnia-Herzegovina, told reporters there are at least 40 "real concentration camps" for Serbs on Muslim- and Croat-controlled territory and urged journalists to visit them as well.

Allegations of beatings, rape and murder have come from former inmates of the Serb-run camps who since have been released. As in other camps visited by reporters, the inmates at Manjaca were gaunt and pale, but no clear evidence of mistreatment could be seen.

None of them knew how long they will be here. Their captors say they want to exchange the prisoners for captive Serbs.

Mehmed Deraskodic, a doctor, was accused of treating wounded Muslim and Croat fighters. He sits in prison now and thinks about what it would be like to be free.

"The only thing I dream of is freedom. When, if ever, I cross this line which separates me now from my dream, I'll leave this crazy country forever," he said.

Deraskodic said he never had judged people by nationality — that he had been a "real Yugoslav" rather than identifying with any of the many ethnic groups that the country comprised.

Now, he said, there is "nothing left here for me, and I'll look for my new life somewhere else."

The brutal war on the territory of former Yugoslavia drew some people who already had left back home.

Davor Glasnovic, a Croatian-born Canadian citizen in his 30s who joined the Croatian army, said he was wounded and captured by the Serbs in western Herzegovina.

With his leg and hip in plaster, guards had to bring him into the first-aid room. "The conditions here are good. I have nothing to complain about."

He said he thought he would get a job in the Croatian Ministry of Information as a translator but ended up on the front line.

One of several stables at Majaca sleeps 600 prisoners. There is not enough fresh air, and the inmates sleep on straw beds.

Undernourished and frightened, they ask for cigarettes, which are precious, even for their guards.

"I have been here for three months. Food is bad ... I heard that my house in Kijuc was burned ... and we must not talk," said a Muslim prisoner from a nearby town who was afraid to identify himself.

He said that after Red Cross officials visited the camp, he did have the right to write letters to his family.

Japan looks to Russia for space know-how

TOKYO (AP) — In the past, when Japan needed know-how for its budding space program it turned to the United States. Lured by the promise of bargain-basement deals, it is now casting a furtive glance at the other space superpower — Russia.

Japanese officials recently accepted an invitation to travel to Russia for two weeks of talks and tours of previously off-limits space facilities.

During the trip, they discussed a space cooperation treaty the Russians hope will be signed when President Boris Yeltsin visits Tokyo in September.

Such a pact would be an important development for the two countries, whose relations have long been marked by distrust. It could also open up a myriad of possibilities for Japan's space program.

Increased access to manned spaceflight data for use in medical research and to remote-sensing technology for use on satellites are two areas of interest to the Japanese.

"We've never had any real relations with Russia on space," said Hiroshi Masuko of the Science and Technology Agency's International Space Affairs Division. "But now we see Russia as an important option."

Private interest in the mission, which returned to Tokyo on July 18, was also high, with 20 companies — including Mitsubishi Heavy Industries and Toshiba — sending representatives.

"We were very interested to see just what the Russians have," said Hiroshi Harada, deputy general manager of Mitsubishi Heavy Industries Space Systems Department. "They had a very aggressive sales pitch."

But Masuko stressed that it's too early to draw up a shopping list. "We don't know what they have to offer yet," he said.

Harada added that private companies believe dealing with Russia — which they see as unstable and uneasy with the free-market system — could be risky business.

"It is at times hard to tell who to deal with," he said.

Greater ties with Russia also are hampered by Cold War measures restricting the transfer of technology that could be used for missiles or other weaponry to Communist nations.

And a territorial dispute over several islands has kept Russia and Japan from concluding a treaty formally ending their World War II hostilities.

The best known Japan-Russia link-up so far was a high-profile publicity coup by a Japanese television network, which decided to celebrate its 40th anniversary by putting a reporter in space.

With a ticket reportedly costing $12 million, the Tokyo Broadcasting System's Toyohiro Akiyama boarded a Soviet rocket in 1990 to become the first Japanese in space.

Akiyama's flight drove home the often-overlooked capabilities of the Russians.

U.N. renews inspection plans in Iraq

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — A team of U.N. weapons experts conducted a surprise inspection at an undisclosed site on Sunday and planned several more days of work in Iraq, officials said.

Also Sunday, the Iraqi Foreign Minister Mohammed Saeed Al-Sahhaf was quoted by the Iraqi News Agency as blaming the United States for the U.N. economic sanctions that are to remain in effect until Iraq meets all the terms of the Persian Gulf War cease-fire.

"The United States is using the economic sanctions as a means to interfere in Iraq's internal affairs and to impose its will on it," he said, according to a broadcast monitored in Cyprus. "This is sheer violation of the international law and the rights of the Iraqi people."

The U.N. team — the first to go to Baghdad since a controversial search of the Agriculture Ministry — completed its inspection Sunday and returned to its hotel without incident, said the staff officer of the U.N. Special Commission in Baghdad, reached by satellite telephone.

The officer, who spoke on condition of anonymity, had no more details. Iraq has barred Associated Press reporters from Baghdad.

Russian Nikita Smidovich, who led the team, refused to tell reporters in the Iraqi capital where the inspection team had been, or whether it was a facility inside or outside the city, according to Gulf radio reports from Baghdad.

Another U.N. officer in Baghdad, also reached by satellite, had said the site of Sunday's search remained secret from the Iraqis until the last moment, the usual procedure to prevent the spiriting away of prohibited material.

Iraq's leadership said earlier that the team would be free to conduct inspections as long as its members did not try to enter headquarters of government ministries.

Nation in brief

Wreck briefly sidetracks Clinton's motorcade

NEW YORK — Four vehicles in Bill Clinton's motorcade skidded into each other on rain-slickened roads Sunday, but no one was seriously injured.

The Democratic candidate's entourage was traveling into Manhattan from the airport when a staff vehicle toward the end of the motorcade hit its brakes, prompting a chain accident that involved four cars.

A staff car carrying spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers was hit from the rear by a mini-bus carrying reporters. Myers' cellular phone went flying out a broken back window, but she wasn't hurt.

The bus was unable to accompany Clinton to his meeting with Cyprus President George Vassiliou.

U.S. expects to grant Israel loan guarantees

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine — President Bush is preparing to give Israel a "generous, large amount" of loan guarantees that will be close to the $10 billion sought by the Israeli government, a senior administration official said Sunday.

On the eve of an unprecedented 24-hour informal visit by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, the official told reporters that there are "no obvious obstacles" to the loan guarantee agreement.

The agreement would require the United States to set up a trust fund, containing as much as $500 million, as a standby account for defaulted loans.

The guarantees would enable Israel to obtain private loans to help house an estimated 400,000 new immigrants flowing into Israel. The U.S. backing has been delayed for more than a year by a dispute over whether the money would be used to settle Israeli-occupied land on the West Bank and in Gaza. Such settlements have blocked the way to peace in the Mideast, according to the Bush administration.

Veterans blame ailments on oil well fires in Gulf

RALEIGH, N.C. — Fumes from the Kuwaiti oil well fires set by Iraq are blamed by Marine Capt. Dave Fournier and other war veterans for mysterious and lingering ailments.

When Indiana reservists complained of such symptoms, an Army study of 79 war veterans resulted in a military finding that stress may be the cause of their post-war fatigue, aches and breathing problems.

But last week, doctors found high levels of hydrocarbons in the blood of a Navy veteran in Texas.

Also last week, military officials acknowledged more study is needed of the effects of inhaling fumes from burning oil wells.

"This is a significant issue," said Terry Jemison, a spokesman for the Department of Veterans Affairs in Washington. The VA and the Pentagon are working to "flush out the state of scientific knowledge" on such health problems, he said.

The VA says 17,000 Gulf veterans have visited its hospitals since the war ended Feb. 29, 1991, but few have filed smoke-related disability claims.

Bush trails in California, could mean trouble

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Bush faces the prospect of breaking a California tradition as he struggles against becoming the first Republican presidential candidate to lose the grand-prize electoral state since 1964.

Bush is at a historic low in the polls in recession-battered California, where Democrats and former Ross Perot supporters are supporting Bill Clinton and conservatives are left without a candidate to call their own.

Even GOP Senate candidate John Seymour is distancing himself from the incumbent candidate as a strategy to win. Last week, Seymour began an aggressive challenge to the Bush-supported anti-abortion plank in the party platform.

"Across the board, whether they're Republicans or Democrats, voters are looking at this juncture for leadership and a sense of confidence in their presidential candidate," said Seymour spokesman Jeff Weir. "George Bush has not been exhibiting confidence or great leadership."

Top strategists dismissed as premature rumors that the Bush campaign was writing off California. Plans call for Bush and Vice President Dan Quayle to make frequent visits here; Quayle was scheduled to be in California on Monday and Tuesday.

Bush is suffering even in the Republican strongholds south of Los Angeles.

Polls taken after the Democratic convention and Perot's withdrawal showed Bush trailing Democrat Bill Clinton in Orange and San Diego counties. The Orange County Register urged Bush to leave the ticket. Baseball fans at the All-Star Game in San Diego booed Bush when he stepped on the field.

For the president to win California, he must take Orange and San Diego counties by overwhelming margins to make up for expected losses in Democratic Los Angeles and San Francisco, observers say.

California has 54 electoral votes, one-fifth of those needed to win the presidency.

Clinton takes credit for Bush's stand on Bosnia

NEW YORK (AP) — Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton, trying to cast himself as a potential commander in chief, took credit Sunday for President Bush's tougher stand on the crisis in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Now "that the administration has moved to a position that I have advocated," Clinton said, the White House should develop military options if diplomatic pressure doesn't work to open detention camps and relief efforts in the former Yugoslavia.

Earlier in the week, Bush had asked the United Nations to adopt a resolution permitting the use of force if necessary to deliver humanitarian aid to Bosnia.

Clinton and running mate Al Gore Jr. talked defense cuts and foreign policy with the two chairmen of the congressional armed services committees: Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis.

At a news conference later, both Nunn and Aspin said Bush's new and harder line on the situation in the former Yugoslav republics was prompted by Clinton's remarks calling for potential air strikes against the Serbs.

Bush has bristled at such suggestions.

At first, they noted, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater criticized Clinton as "reckless."

"The administration jumped on his remarks ... then four or five days later, came right back and has essentially adopted the Clinton policy," Nunn said.

Aspin added that "it's a real irony that the policy that Governor Clinton was advocating has now been adopted by the Bush administration."

ONE STEP AT A TIME

Former MHS student Cody Myers returns as new 1993 band director

The dog days of summer came to a halt on a recent sunny morning as 100-plus Bulldogs marched onto the Midland High School field.

Enthusiasm was high as MHS band students performed some fancy footwork under the watchful eye of MHS graduate and new band director Cody Myers.

"All squads! Ten-hut! ten-hut! Fall in quickly. You have a matter of seconds to get into perfect formation," Myers directed, as his voice boomed powerfully over the field with the aid of a microphone.

"Heels together. Toes slightly apart. Shoulders back. Chin up. Hut. Hut. Left knee pop!"

Following Myers command, a sea of left knees rise on cue. Students walk five yards and at the shout of "Odessa," they pivot to face west.

Advocates call for probe of child welfare agency

DALLAS (AP) — Child advocates plan to send Gov. Ann Richards a 5,000-signature petition this week demanding public accountability by the Texas child welfare system.

The petition follows weeks of study of Child Protective Services by a Garland group formed after the death of 2-year-old Donny Martin.

Robert Rose Jr., the common-law husband of Donny's mother, is scheduled to go on trial today on a charge of injury to a child in the May 16 death. The state agency had declared the Garland toddler "not at risk."

"What we want is for the governor to take a personal look at Children's Protective Services, to go in there and find out what's not working because something's not working right," said Jan Hurley of Child Abuse Prevention.

State officials have cited confidentiality rules in repeatedly declining to discuss details of Donny's case.

But the new group wants an investigation into what members see as a lack of accountability by the welfare agency. Members also want a probe into qualifications for caseworkers.

"We know that child privacy laws dictate that many specifics of cases can't be reported publicly," says a letter accompanying the petitions. "However, when a child dies after repeated reports of child abuse, CPS must face some type of public accountability."

"But we believe that when a child dies after repeatedly being reported to CPS, something needs to change," they said. "Simply put, the welfare of children is more important than the reputation of a state agency."

In their letter to Richards, Child Abuse Prevention members said they had no vendetta against the welfare agency or any of its employees.

Cabbies worry about fare share

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston cabbies are worried they won't get their fare share when the Republicans come to town.

Some of the city's 3,000 taxi drivers say limousines, private cars, chartered buses and Metro buses are planned to whisk Republicans around town and away from the economic boon drivers were expecting.

"We are looking for positive results out of the convention, but we don't expect it to be astronomical," said Ellis Houston, vice president of United Cab.

Cabdrivers are independent contractors and pay a set amount to cab companies — some as much as $78 a day — for a permit, insurance and the use of company dispatchers and other services. This means some drivers must collect $78 in fares to break even — and that's before they buy gas.

"It's so bad out here, some of the drivers are so hard up, they're not going to strike," said Bill Taylor, who has been driving a cab for 16 years. "I'd like to strike if I could, if it would do any good, if it was a union. But you can't."

But Republican planners say the taxi drivers won't be forgotten. "Cabdrivers need to know this is going to be a very financially rewarding time for them," said Paul Klepper, executive director of transportation for the Republican National Committee.

"We've gone to inordinate lengths to get them on the (Astrodome) property. They're a vital part of the plan."

Police seek robbery culprit

Staff report

Police are still searching for the man suspected in a robbery that occurred at Wal-Mart, 4715 Billingsly, Saturday night.

According to police reports, a white male took a telephone and ran outside the store without paying. Wal-Mart employees chased the man to his car. Employee Victor Mitchell, 25, of Midland suffered a minor knee injury as the suspect drove away, police said. Mitchell was not hospitalized.

The man is described as about 40-45 years of age, 5 feet, 10 inches tall, weighing 170 pounds, with blond hair. He was driving a black Chevrolet Z-28, according to reports.

DOGS: Former student returns to lead band

(From 1B)

The students stand at attention even as Myers offers them a 30-minute break and admonishes his charges to drive carefully to get snacks and drinks.

"Be careful at the break. You have plenty of time. I don't want any accidents. And I want everybody back in this block (formation) at 11, and I don't mean 11:05. What time are we going back to be back in the block?" Myers asks as he struts across the field, checking rows of students.

When excused, some students take off running, others gather around the new "leader of the band" to chat excitedly about upcoming events, and the no-nonsense band director breaks into a grin.

Things are going well, ahead of schedule in fact. It's the first day of marching rehearsal and students have mastered some moves in a matter of hours.

"They learned more than I thought they would," Myers said beaming. "Our summer goal is to learn our contest music and master marching fundamentals."

The band director is also expressing pleasure that 120 students

'E'Everyone must work together in a cooperative way, and everyone can participate. It's a great tool for teaching self discipline and where everyone can feel good about themselves. We just need to have some successes to catch on fire.'

— Cody Myers

have turned out for practice — an impressive number for a band which dwindled in numbers in recent years.

"I hit the phone calling people to get them back," Myers said.

A Tournament of Roses Parade flag graces the band hall, a token of victories past. A 1975 graduate, Myers fondly remembers playing a trumpet in the MHS band. "The band director then, Clive Russell really inspired me to become a band director," he said.

Following high school graduation, Myers earned a bachelor's degree in music education and a master's degree in education from West Texas State University. He then directed band for 12 years — including directing band at Toyah and Dumas High Schools — before returning to his alma mater this summer.

"My wife, Starla is a former twirler, so she is supportive of the band," Myers said. His wife will also teach first grade at Lamar Elementary School. The couple has two children, daughter, Kaci, 9, and son, Holt, 7.

"It's funny. Since I left Midland, all my friends have gone. So, I know my way around town, but don't know anybody," Myers said, commenting on the transient nature of the Tall City.

However, with Myers directing band and his wife teaching, they will have no end of school events to attend.

And with the director and students providing a new infusion of enthusiasm, and the prospect of Midland public schools moving to a direct feeder system, hopes are high for the band program to become a strong contender in the 5AAA district.

"Competing in this district is such a challenge," Myers said. "When I think of the performances of the other groups at half-times ... I know we have a real challenge to meet."

Myers surmises that the coming school year "will be a lot of fun for band students. But we will also have to work hard to succeed."

He describes life in the band as "a microcosm of society. Everyone must work together in a cooperative way, and everyone can participate. It's a great tool for teaching self discipline and where everyone can feel good about themselves."

"We just need to have some successes to catch on fire."

Notice of Public Hearing on Tax Increase

The ANDREWS/MIDLAND COUNTY EDUCATION DISTRICT will hold a public hearing on a proposal to increase total tax revenues from properties on the tax roll in 1991 by 15.26 percent. Your individual taxes may increase at a greater or lesser rate, or even decrease, depending on the change in the taxable value of your property in relation to the change in taxable value of all other property.

The public hearing will be held on August 17, 1992 at 7:00 p.m. at 615 West Missouri, Midland, Texas 79701.

FOR the proposal: George Staley, Pete Francis and Brooks Smith
AGAINST the proposal: None
PRESENT and not voting: None
ABSENT: None

The statement above shows the percentage increase the proposed rate represents over the effective tax rate that the unit published on July 31, 1992. The following table compares taxes on an average home in this taxing unit last year to taxes proposed on the average home this year. Again, your individual taxes may be higher or lower, depending on the taxable value of your property.

	Last Year	This Year
Average home value	$ 53,660	$ 54,160
General exemptions available (amount available on the average home, not including senior citizen's or disabled person's exemptions)	$ 15,730	$ 15,830
Average taxable value	$ 37,930	$ 38,330 (proposed)
Tax rate	0.7750 / $100	0.9073 / $100 (proposed)
Tax	$ 293.96	$ 347.77

Under this proposal taxes on the average home would increase by $ 53.81 or 18.31 percent compared with last year's taxes. Comparing tax rates without adjusting for changes in property value the tax rate would increase by $0.1323 per $100 of taxable value or 17.07

DEAR ABBY

Mom's discipline technique of fear victimizes man, child

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I was sitting in the terminal area of the Atlanta airport recently, waiting to board my flight. Across from me there was a woman telling a little girl to be quiet. The woman pointed at me and said, "Do you see that man over there? If you don't sit down and be quiet, he's going to grab you and throw you into the river!"

Van Buren

I didn't appreciate that comment at all, so I stood up to look for another place to sit. The little girl then started to scream bloody murder and tried to hide behind her mother. She was screaming, "Mommy, Mommy, don't let that bad man hurt me!"

That made me furious, so I said, "Lady, you should be ashamed of yourself. Don't say things like that to your child — that's child abuse!"

A security officer came over to us and asked the woman if she wanted to have me arrested. All the people in that area, not knowing what had taken place, thought I was some kind of pervert or child molester. The child was so upset, I actually took a later flight so I would not cause her further apprehension.

With so much about child abuse these days, a statement like the one the mother used to quiet her daughter is very believable to a small child. While kids need to be aware of strangers, they shouldn't be senselessly terrified of "boogie men" that parents use to keep them in line. That child was a victim, and so was I. Please print this, Abby. — NO BOOGIE MAN

DEAR NO BOOGIE MAN: I agree. The mother, in her ignorance, did victimize both you and the child. And it was very likely a technique she uses often to scare the child into line.

How much more effective it would have been if she had told her daughter that her behavior was not acceptable, and that if she did not settle down immediately, she would not get to do some activity she enjoyed — and then, as a responsible parent, followed through.

Once a child realizes that the mother's word is not good, the child will disregard any lesson the parent tries to impart. A parent's word should be gospel. The parent who cries "wolf" will lose credibility (and control) as soon as the child learns to reason.

DEAR ABBY: "Nick" and I have been married for six years and we have two beautiful children, but I have a problem. We don't make love in a passionate way anymore. Nick thinks I don't love him, and has even accused me of having an affair, which is not true.

The problem: I just can't stand the way his mouth tastes when he kisses me — that's why when we make love, I want to get it over with as soon as possible.

Abby, I hate what this is doing to our relationship, but I just can't bring myself to tell Nick about his breath. He hasn't been to a dentist since we've been married, and I know he has many cavities. It's not the money — we can afford it. I'm afraid if I tell him about his breath, I will hurt him — or maybe make him angry. I love him very much. If you think I should tell him, what would be the best way? — KEEPING QUIET IN MISSISSIPPI must be completely honest with Nick. Decayed teeth affect one's general health. Tell him — just as you told me — that you love him, but because of his bad breath you find it very difficult to kiss him passionately as you once did. Insist that he see a dentist.

DEAR KEEPING QUIET: You

He may be avoiding the dentist because of the possible pain. Tell him that dentistry has advanced a great deal in recent years, and there are new techniques that reduce the discomfort.

You say you don't want to "hurt" your husband. By withholding the truth, you are hurting him far more. Trust me.

Abortion issue promises to be source of friction at GOP convention

Jill Lawrence

Associated Press writer

HOUSTON — An unusual array of Republicans is determined this week to end the party's official opposition to abortion rights. But GOP officials are equally determined to thwart them.

The abortion issue promises to be the primary source of noise and friction this week as a 107-member committee drafts the 1992 Republican platform and sends it to the floor Aug. 17, the first day of the convention.

The 1988 platform supports a constitutional amendment to outlaw abortion. Those who want to excise the plank — and they range from the National Organization for Women to former Arizona Sen. Barry Goldwater — are virtually certain to lose out to anti-abortion defenders.

"I believe the president deserves to have a platform with which he is comfortable," said Missouri Gov. John Ashcroft, co-chairman of the platform committee and, like President Bush, an opponent of abortion rights.

Committees at the last three conventions have rejected abortion-rights proposals by 2-1 margins and this panel is expected to do likewise. Nor is there much chance the dissidents will get their say on the convention floor.

That would require support from a majority of delegates in each of six states and the Bush campaign is signalling it won't let that happen.

"We're not planning to debate the platform on the floor," senior strategist Charles Black said last week.

Several prominent convention speakers favor abortion rights and at least one of them — Rep. Nancy Johnson of Connecticut — plans to mention that in her remarks. But by the time she and other abortion-rights sympathizers address the convention, the platform will be completed and adopted.

Most of the contention will be in evidence outside official forums.

Operation Rescue is planning protests at Houston-area abortion clinics and Phyllis Schlafly — head of the Republican National Coalition for Life — will present 100,000 "pledges of support for Republican pro-life candidates" to the platform committee.

On the other side, more than a dozen organizations are planning "clinic defense" efforts, a panel discussion and an address to the Houston Rotary Club as well as the more customary rallies, demonstrations, receptions, fund-raisers and news conferences.

The National Women's Political Caucus will showcase 15 Republican women running for congressional and statewide office who favor abortion rights. "They deserve visibility," caucus president Harriett Woods said.

The Republican platform has become progressively more hard-line on abortion since 1980, reflecting the evolution of both the party and President Bush.

This year's insurgency has been led by Mary Dent Crisp, a former party co-chairman and chairman of the National Republican Coalition for Choice; and Ann Stone, a direct-mail fund-raiser who formed a political action committee called Republicans For Choice.

The two maintain the platform's anti-abortion plank is antithetical to the GOP tenet that government should stay out of people's lives. They cite polls suggesting most Republicans believe abortion should stay legal. And they contend crossover votes to Democrat Bill Clinton, who favors abortion rights, could cost Bush a close election.

Bush reiterated his stringent anti-abortion views last week in New York and said he would stand by them "no matter the political price, and they tell me in this year that it's enormous."

He has already changed his position on abortion — in 1980 he opposed a so-called human life amendment — and many believe neither he nor the party can afford to look like they're giving ground.

Some of those seeking platform changes, including Crisp and Stone, want the party document to express explicit support for abortion rights.

Voters OK water plans, Houston bonds, defeat Fair Park tax

Associated Press

Voters in Houston have narrowly approved a $25 million bond issue to settle the city's lawsuits, but Dallas voters have given thumbs down to a sales tax hike that would have helped renovate Fair Park.

In other cities, water protection dominated Saturday's elections.

The approval of the Houston bond issue gives the city a way to pay for legal claims for the next two years. Mayor Bob Lanier had advocated the debt-financing plan.

The referendum squeaked by with 53-percent support.

"We've had the election and a long-running debate, so now we need to get on to other things," Lanier said.

Money from the bond, which city officials will repay over five years, has three uses:

■ Roughly $8.3 million would pay to settle three pending lawsuits.

■ About $10 million would pay for legal claims that come due before the end of the fiscal year.

■ The remaining $6.7 million would provide a cushion Lanier can use for claims against the city next year, or for an emergency claim this year.

Dallas voters weren't so generous.

In the lowest turnout ever for an August election, voters turned down a proposal for a one-year sales tax boost to fix up the home of the State Fair and Cotton Bowl.

The measure was defeated 36,019 to 23,959 — about a 60-40 percent margin.

Economy ranks as main issue in focus groups

DALLAS (AP) — Three dozen Hispanics from Dallas and San Antonio, most of whom say their personal finances are worsening, list jobs and the economy as their biggest worries.

Participants in four focus groups also said crime, drugs and gangs are the country's top problems.

Robert Brischetto, executive director of the Southwest Voter Research Institute, said the findings mirror the results of recent polls of Hispanic voters.

The non-partisan San Antonio institute conducted the focus groups for The Dallas Morning News and the San Antonio Light. Three sessions were conducted with registered voters, and one with non-registered voters.

Many of the 36 Texans said they were giving their support — albeit reluctantly — to Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton.

"What has (President) Bush done for us?" asked Clyde Serna, a mechanic from Dallas. Serna said he was not too impressed by Clinton, either, but wanted to "at least give the guy a try."

Hispanics are expected to account for 12 percent of the state's electorate in the general election. Democrat Michael Dukakis received 83 percent of the Hispanic vote in Texas against Bush in 1988.

When the participants were asked the most pressing problem in their neighborhoods, crime headed the list.

And on other issues they suggested:

■ Reduce the federal deficit, but without raising taxes.

■ Protect Social Security and welfare from budget cuts.

■ Treat AIDS as a public health hazard.

After crime, Texas Hispanics say the greatest problems are education, health care and poverty. Another concern was government accountability.

Participants rarely mentioned foreign policy and race relations.

Clinton expresses support for V-22, super collider

DALLAS (AP) — Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton says he supports development of the V-22 Osprey and the super collider, two Texas projects recently on the Congressional chopping block.

In an interview with The Dallas Morning News, Clinton expressed his strongest support yet for the collider, at a time of mounting congressional criticism of the giant particle accelerator.

Proponents say it'll answer fundamental questions about matter, while opponents say it's prohibitively costly.

"It is important to me," Clinton said. "Unless someone can persuade me that I am dead wrong about the underlying merits of it, I intend to continue to support it."

One of the leaders in the fight against the $8.25 billion atom smasher, the biggest science project in history, has been a fellow Arkansas Democrat, U.S. Sen. Dale Bumpers. Clinton's running mate, Sen. Al Gore, D-Tenn., also has opposed the super collider.

Clinton declined to make a specific annual funding commitment to the project, but said it should be considered a matter of U.S. competitiveness.

This nation doesn't develop as many new things as quickly as other countries, he said. "So I am prepared to take some risks to invest in high-tech areas that can produce high-wage jobs for the future."

Clinton was interviewed on the campaign trail Friday as his bus caravan motored through Wisconsin.

Although he supports far deeper defense cuts than President Bush and wants to decrease funds for the Star Wars anti-missile program, the Arkansas governor endorsed the V-22 tilt-rotor aircraft.

The Osprey is built in part by Bell Helicopter Textron of Fort Worth.

Clinton said he will back the V-22 "unless somebody who is an expert in the area tells me that the strategic argument or the potential commercial applications of it are not what we had once thought."

Texas once was considered an easy victory for President Bush, who once represented the state in Congress and maintains his official residence in Houston.

But a poll conducted for the Houston Chronicle and published Sunday showed that Texans support Clinton over Bush by 43 to 29 percent.

Clinton said Ross Perot's aborted independent presidential bid leveled the playing field somewhat.

First Union drops bid for First City

■ Charlotte, N.C., corporation isn't buying Houston-based bank company because of possible loan losses.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — First Union Corp. has dropped plans to buy First City Bancorporation of Texas after a detailed review of the struggling bank and its finances, a published report said Friday.

Houston-based First City, the largest Texas-owned bank, is under intense scrutiny from bank regulators because of its huge levels of problem loans and thin layer of capital to absorb losses.

Since April, First City has been hunting for an investor to inject new capital into the bank, which has about $10 billion in assets. At the end of March 31, First City reported $600 million in problem assets and loans.

First City is one of the largest banking companies in the nation that's publicly chasing major new investment to repair its balance sheet.

The American Banker newspaper, in Friday's editions, reported that First Union Corp. of Charlotte, N.C., isn't going to bid for First City because federal regulators are offering only thin protection against possible loan losses.

Previously, bank industry trade press reported the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. was willing to make $350 million in guarantees against problem loans to make First City more enticing to private investors.

Other First Union concerns included high costs due to lawsuits and expensive leases and vendor contracts, said the trade industry newspaper, which cited unidentified sources.

First Union, the nation's 11th largest bank holding company with $47.7 billion in assets, declined comment on the report. Published reports in June said First Union examiners "swarmed" over First City offices to research a possible takeover.

First City would only say its search for an investor continues.

The remaining active bidder for First City is Ronald Perelman, chairman of Revlon Inc. in New York, the newspaper said. Telephone calls to Perelman and his spokesman seeking comment were not immediately returned.

This would be the second major bailout of First City. In 1988, the bank underwent a massive restructuring in which $1.5 billion of new capital was put into the company, including $870 million from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. At the time, it was the biggest investor-led bank bailout in U.S. history.

Oil prices fall

NEW YORK — Oil prices fell Friday in quiet trading as tensions over U.N. inspections of Iraqi weapons facilities appeared to dampen.

Light sweet crude oil for delivery in September settled at $21.22 per barrel, down 20 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Oil prices rose 24 cents Thursday on concern that Iraq's opposition to inspection of its government ministries could renew hostilities.

Prices for refined products also fell Friday. Unleaded gasoline for delivery in September settled at 60.07 cents a gallon, down 0.24 cent. Home heating oil for delivery in September settled at 58.72 cents a gallon, down 0.87 cent.

Natural gas prices were higher, with contracts for delivery in September settling at $18.89 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 1.2 cents. In London, North Sea Brent Blend crude oil for delivery in September settled at $19.86, down 17 cents per barrel at the International Petroleum Exchange.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar fell Friday despite repeated intervention in the market by the Federal Reserve, as traders grew concerned that the government's July employment data meant lower interest rates were on the way.

Gold prices rose. On the New York Commodity Exchange, gold bullion for current delivery settled at $350.30 a troy ounce, up $1.30 from late Thursday. Republic National Bank of New York quoted a late bid for gold of $351 an ounce, up $1.65.

Stocks down

NEW YORK — The stock market turned downward in late trading Friday, capping off a day of uncertain reaction on Wall Street to the latest data on employment.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up about 30 points at its midsession high, closed with an 8.38-point loss at 3,332.18. That left the average with a net drop of 61.60 points for the week.

More motorists discover leasing

DETROIT (AP) — Bob Matthews says he's known for six years what many car buyers only now are discovering: Leasing can save money and hassles.

The retired government worker and his wife have a three-year lease on a new Oldsmobile 88 Royale at $300 a month. Buying the $19,050 car over the same period would have cost around $435 a month at prevailing interest rates.

And when the Matthews' contract is up in May 1995, they have the option of returning the Royale or keeping the car after paying what it's still worth.

"Any time you have a car three years old or so, the tires or the battery or something goes out on you," said Matthews, of Troy, Mich., who's been leasing cars since 1986. "Before that happens, I have a new car."

More and more motorists are doing the same thing. Once used almost exclusively by governments and big companies in amassing car fleets, leasing has caught on among individuals in recent years.

In fact, retail leasing is expected to account for nearly a quarter of individual new car sales this year, up from around 12 percent in 1987, said Art Spinella, director of automotive research at CNW Marketing Research in Bandon, Ore. Some experts predict that by the middle of the decade half of new car sales will be leases, largely because cars will keep getting more expensive.

"What happened was that in the last seven or eight years, the average income for John Doe went up 2- or 3- or 7 percent, while the average price of a car went up 35- or 40- or 50 percent," said Rudy DeGroot, co-owner of an independent leasing company in Scottsdale, Ariz.

But leasing isn't for everyone. A person who drives a car as long as it will run isn't a good candidate, nor is someone who drives more than 15,000 miles a year. A lease with higher mileage allowance costs more, and going over the limit is fined.

Obtaining a lease also requires a better credit rating than a car loan because the automaker risks getting back a car worth less than the value projected at the time the lease is signed.

owned by Bob Saks, right. Experts say that by the mid-1990s, half of new sales will be leases.

And terms, such as capitalized cost reduction, closed-end, open-end and residual value, can be confusing.

Still, enough sticker-shocked buyers have walked out of showrooms during the recession that many dealers have trained their salespeople in leasing options. Some provide perks like VIP cards for lease customers to speed shop service.

Ramsay Gillman, who owns 13 car dealerships in southern Texas, said he hired an agent for each of his stores to explain the specifics of leasing.

"They function the same as a finance and insurance person," he said. "There are a lot of specific disclosures. To do it legally and properly, we decided to use a lease agent."

Rebates, a part of the car-buying equation since the mid-1980s, drove up automakers' costs. Leasing subsidies are helping them regain control of pricing.

A lease is entered in automakers' books as a sale even though they get the cars back at the end of the lease term.

Dealers learned a hard lesson from the '80s when they signed customers to long installment contracts — the customers didn't come back as often.

For the consumer, leasing can offer several advantages over buying: It frees up cash that would go into a traditional down payment, typically 20 percent of a car's sticker price; sales tax is pro-rated for the length of the lease; monthly payments are often low because dealers inflate the projected value of the car at the end of the lease.

Northwest cuts European ticket prices

NEW YORK (AP) — Northwest Airlines Inc. escalated the war over air fares Sunday, announcing new ticket price cuts for European flights that deepen reductions adopted by the industry last week.

The discounts come two days after St. Paul, Minn.-based NWA Inc., Northwest's parent, reported second-quarter losses widened to $146 million due to recent fare battles and economic weakness.

Since Northwest only serves five cities in Europe, the cuts are not expected to have as big an impact as those initiated last week by Delta Air Lines, which sliced Europe fares between 10 percent and 40 percent.

But the price-paring threatens to further aggravate losses suffered by the industry when profits during the spring and summer — the year's peak travel season — were destroyed by discounting.

In last week's round, Northwest and other major carriers cut fares to Europe for travel between Oct. 1 and March 31.

But on Sunday, Northwest said it would cut prices in at least 70 markets by up to 45 percent for travel between Nov. 1 and March 31.

Union suspends talks with Bell Atlantic

WASHINGTON (AP) — Union negotiators suspended bargaining with Bell Atlantic Sunday and local union leaders representing 52,000 of the company's workers met here to discuss a possible strike.

Talks resumed at two other regional telephone companies — Ameritech, Michigan Bell and Pacific Telesis. And negotiators early Sunday reached tentative agreement on new contracts at two other Baby Bells, Southwestern Bell and BellSouth.

"The clock is running and we can pull the plug any time," Vince Maisano, district vice president of the Communications Workers of America, said of the Bell Atlantic talks.

Maisano said the union has authorization from its members to call a strike. He said that in two bargaining sessions Sunday, the company "blocked progress by placing demands on the table" for union concessions in various areas.

Company spokesman Jay Grossman, however, said, "We think what we have put on the table is a very good, very competitive package, and we look forward to resuming negotiations."

The company was willing to meet today, but Maisano said union negotiators said they would not meet again until Tuesday.

Members of the union negotiating team wore buttons that read, "I do not want to strike, but I will."

INVESTORS' GUIDE

'DJ 65' one of many stock market averages

By Bill Doyle

Q: Please discuss the Dow Jones 65 Composite Average. How is it compiled and why is it important?

A: The Dow Jones Composite is a measurement of stock market performance. A change in the average indicates if overall stock prices are up or down.

It is compiled by adding up the market prices of the common stocks of 30 industrial companies, 20 transportation companies and 15 utility companies then dividing by its "divisor," which now is 241616.

The divisor is adjusted downward every time there is a stock split or major stock dividend in any of the 65 stocks used in the average. It's called a "composite" because it comprises the stocks in the other three Dow Jones averages.

The DJ 65 isn't considered nearly as important as the Dow Jones Industrial Average, which is the most watched and frequently mentioned stock market measurement. When you hear a radio or television commentator mention "the Dow Jones," it's a cinch he or she means the DJIA, a measurement of 30 actively traded blue chip stocks.

The other Dow Jones divisors now are 0.46269499 for the industrial average, 0.65239633 for the transportation average and 1.997 for the utility average.

There is a passel of other stock market averages. An argument can be made that some measure the stock market's performance better than the Dow Jones averages. But the Dow averages, especially the DJIA, get most of the attention, basically because they have been around longer.

Remember that all are "averages" — not exact measurements. The DJIA might show a day-to-day or hour-to-hour increase, while the prices of some industrial stocks you own remain unchanged or fall.

Q: My cousin always wanted to have his wife's name put on stocks he owns as joint owner. Because of illness, time went by and nothing was done about it. Now, he has given her power of attorney over his affairs and I want to help them.

Can she get her name put on the stocks, without his signature?

A: The assignment form on the back of each stock certificate, or a "stock power," which serves the same purpose, must be filled out to transfer stock ownership or to change ownership from individual to joint.

That requires the signature of the stock's owner or authorized representative. The signature must be "guaranteed" by a brokerage firm or bank. Assuming the power of attorney is properly drawn up, your cousin-in-law's signature should be accepted.

Play it safe and check with each stock's transfer agent, whose name, address and telephone number are in the annual stockholder report. The transfer agent will give you all the details.

Q: What is the safest way to transport stock certificates from my present home to my new residence 1,200 miles away? The certificates now are in a bank safe deposit box and I plan to put them in a safe deposit box in the state to which I am moving.

A: You could ask your present bank or a brokerage firm to arrange for the delivery. Banks and brokerages frequently handle things such as you have in mind and charge fees for the service. You could send the certificates by registered mail, return receipt requested, or by one of the many delivery services now in operation.

In any case, make sure the delivery is insured for 4 percent of the stocks' current value. That will cover the cost of the surety bond you will be required to post to obtain replacement certificates in the unlikely event your certificates get lost or are stolen.

Of course, it would be less expensive to simply take the certificates with you when you move to your new home.

NHL veteran dies

QUEBEC — John Kordic, an NHL enforcer who battled alcohol problems during his career, died late Saturday night after being subdued by at least eight police officers in a Quebec City motel room.

Kordic, a tough-guy veteran of four NHL teams who had a history of alcohol and other problems, confronted police after motel staff were subjected to abusive behavior and a loud disturbance in his room.

Police from the suburban L'Ancrene-Lorette force accompanied by reinforcements from the Quebec City force scuffled with an agitated and intoxicated Kordic and finally managed to handcuff him, provincial police spokesman Camille Gagnon said. "They had all the trouble in the world controlling him," Gagnon said of Kordic.

1992 SUMMER OLYMPICS

Olympic flame doused

■ The closing ceremonies signal an end to the last cold war Olympics.

By John Nelson
AP Sports Writer

BARCELONA, Spain — The closing ceremonies rang down the curtain Sunday on the Barcelona Games, and the Olympics as we know them are gone forever.

In Atlanta in 1996, there will be no vestige of the Soviet sports juggernaut that kept Americans riveted to their TV's since the USSR first topped the medals chart in 1956 at Melbourne.

The world is changing, and so will the Games. Professionalism already has inveigled its way into the Olympics in basketball, tennis, track and field, and other sports.

In Atlanta? How about the Braves vs. Cuba for baseball gold?

What's left of the old Soviet Union competed here as the Unified Team. In Atlanta, they'll be Russia, Ukraine, Georgia, Uzbekistan, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tadzhikistan, and so on. Americans have never heard of many of the names.

After Hwang Young-cho of South Korea crossed the line as the winner of the men's marathon, the celebration started, ending the last of the Cold War Games.

It was a festival of dragons and devils, samurais and skaters, with a little bit of Atlanta's "Gone With The Wind" thrown in. Atlanta organizers put together a video presentation, complete with the flames that consumed much of the town during the Civil War.

In four years, they'll be caretakers of the Olympic flame.

As the Barcelona organizers had done in opening the Games, the closing ceremonies were a festival of music, from Manuel de Falla's musical backdrop to "Ritual Fire Dance," to Placido Domingo's emotional interpretation of the Olympic anthem.

As the final notes of a Catalan folk song trilled from the throat of soprano Victoria de los Angeles, the Olympic flame that burned here for 16 days was doused.

And then came the fireworks, an erupting volcano surrounded by demons of the underworld in demented motion, burning idols, surrealistic dragons, more singing and more fireworks, deafening explosions of green and red, building to a crescendo of blinding white.

Barcelonans, amassed far down the mountain from Estadi Olympic, stopped on the streets to watch, then cheered wildly when the pyrotechnics ended.

Finally, many of the more than 10,000 athletes who competed here came onto the playing field, doing the rumba to various songs that included a Latin version of the Beatles' "All My Lovin'." When they were joined by the Olympic volunteers, they filled the stadium floor and turned it into a giant, outdoor discotheque.

The words "See You In Atlanta" were flashed on the scoreboard, and the ceremonies were over.

With the Unified Team already partially dismantled, this was America's last, great chance for vengeance. Not since the 1968 Mexico City Games had the United States beaten the Soviets in the medals race, 107-91. The Soviets won at Munich, at Montreal, and, of course, at Moscow. America didn't go.

The United States won the most medals at Los Angeles in 1984 — a record 174 — but half the world wasn't there. In Seoul four years ago,

Batbusters capture national title

■ The girls from Orange County, Calif., zip through the U-14 ASA tournament without a loss.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant sports editor

The group of 14 California girls that now call themselves national champions had a good laugh the first time they heard someone suggest they nickname themselves "The Dream Team."

They may have laughed, but it was a nickname that fit. The Orange County Batbusters, based in Anaheim, California, defeated the San Diego Lightning 6-0 Sunday afternoon to win the National 14-and-under Amateur Softball Association Fast Pitch Softball tournament, hosted by Midland at the Bill Williams Softball Complex.

The Batbusters finished the tournament as the only team with an unblemished record, at 7-0.

Some 9,000 teams competed nationally in ASA at the outset of the 1992 season and when Sunday afternoon rolled around, only two remained. One was rested, the other was fatigued.

The Batbusters had to come from behind to defeat the Lightning in an 8 o'clock game Sunday morning. With that 5-3 win, the Batbusters had the luxury of resting while it was determined who would work themselves back up through the losers' bracket to face the Busters for the title.

By the time the championship game rolled around, the Lightning had played two games and the Batbusters were relaxed.

"We ran out of gas," Lightning head coach Bob Castellanos said. "If we would've beaten them this morning, they would've been the ones that were tired."

"But we were just happy to be here. Our goal was to finish in the Top 10 and play the Batbusters because we knew they would be in the winners bracket at the end."

The Batbusters scored two runs in the first and three in the second and looked for awhile like they may put the game away early because of the 8-run rule. A single Buster run in the third, though, was the last of the tournament for the Los Angeles-area team.

TL race heats up

By Terry Williamson
Sports editor

In the heat of the Texas League West pennant chase, El Paso newcomer Ed Smith and Midland veteran Jeff Kipila went to war at Angels Stadium Sunday night.

The bad news was that El Paso's 8-7 victory cut Midland's lead in the TL West to 2½ games over San Antonio, 3 games over El Paso and 3½ games over Wichita, a loser to San Antonio Sunday.

But the power show displayed by Smith and Kipila served notice that this championship race will go to the wire. Pitchers beware.

Smith, playing in only his second game with the Diablos since being called up from Class A Stockton, Calif., ripped off four hits, including a two-run home run in the fourth inning. He had four RBI on the night.

Kipila, on the other hand, also cashed in four hits and five RBI, including a three-run blast in the ninth that left Midland wishing for a run that got away in the eighth. Kipila's homer was his 21st of the season, giving

Improving the Games in time for Atlanta

Now that the Olympics are finally over (and didn't it seem like they lasted, oh, about two months this year?), it's time to kick back and reflect on the good and the bad.

Although I have nothing at all against him as a sports personality, it is a welcome relief that Bob Costas is finally out of my living room. Everywhere I looked the last two weeks, there he was. Little Bob has been such a fixture around the house, I'm going to bill him for half of this month's rent.

I was happy to have made it through the entire Olympics without giving into that dreaded Triplecast temptation. The 170-plus hours I got for free were plenty, thank you. What amazed me was how NBC continued to promote this service up until the waning hours of the Olympics. It apparently never once occurred to the brass at Rockefeller Center that the American people just didn't care about paying to watch the Olympics 24 hours a day.

It was a great feeling to make it through the entire two weeks without watching one ridiculous second of the "Dream Team." Nor did I get the least bit excited for that brief instant when (so I heard) Puerto Rico or one of those countries closed to within 26 points of Team USA.

Highlight of the Olympics? Easy. Jerry Seinfeld's promos.

What with the Atlanta Games now less than four years away, it seems some improvements on assorted individual sports should be instituted in order to make the overall Olympic package more appealing.

My suggestions, take 'em or leave 'em:

■ Archery. This sport would be far more entertaining if the archers would aim at an apple strategically positioned on the very top of Charles Barkley's bald little head. Hitting the apple would take skill. Missing the apple — perish the thought — would not result in an over-abundance of damage.

■ The 4x100 relays. Instead of having the sprinters pass just one baton, how about loading them up with, say, an even dozen batons. They'd have to cradle these batons in their arms, and passing them to the next runner would be made more difficult.

■ The long jump. Fill the first 26 feet of the pit with quicksand. The jumpers would then have more incentive to try even harder.

Or we could create a new sport called the "long jump-slide." Put ice skates on the jumpers and have them jump onto a sheet of ice. Falling would mean automatic disqualification.

■ The gymnastics floor exercise. While this event is the most artistic of the Games, it needs to be spiced up a bit. Simply grease the floor with vegetable oil before every gymnast.

■ Synchronized swimming. Just don't have this sport. That's the only way to improve it.

■ Diving. Compulsory dives should include the belly flop and cannonball.

Or we could create yet another new sport: Bungee diving. Tie a giant rubber band onto the diver's ankle and around the platform, which would pull the diver from the water at the very moment of impact.

■ Water polo. Goose the server at the moment he lets the ball fly. This would add to the uncertainty of this already overwhelmingly exciting sport.

And, of course ...

■ Basketball. Kick the pros out and return to the Games a spirit of true competition.

There were seven separate division winners at the conclusion of the 1992 Parent-Youth Golf Tournament at The Club at Mission Dorado, Saturday and Sunday.

In the two nine-hole divisions, using the alternate-shot format, Brandon and Rick Seaton used an 88 to win first-place honors in the 10-11 age group, and Brett and Gary Felker used a 93 to top the 9-under group.

The other divisions were settled according to a point system and Candy McCarthy and Jim Reeves were tops in the college division with 268 points.

OLYMPICS: U.S. finishes second in medal count

(From 1C)

the USSR had 132 medals, USA 102.

The final tally this time: Unies 112, USA 108. It was the closest medals race since America won by 90-86 in 1964 at Tokyo.

For the home team from Spain, these were glorious Games. They won 22 medals, 13 gold, compared with 26 medals, four gold, in all previous Games.

"This is proof we're not an inferior race," said Miguel Angel Millan, coach of silver-medal decathlete Antonio Penalver. "All we needed was money and support."

The two-time defending Olympic men's volleyball champions from the United States settled for bronze. Beaten by Brazil in the semifinals, the U.S. men defeated Cuba 12-15, 15-13, 15-7, 15-11 on Sunday for third place.

"Unless you win a tournament, you lose. But the bronze is a nice consolation," Steve Timmons of Newport Beach, Calif., said.

Brazil won the gold medal with a 12-15, 15-13, 15-7, 15-11 victory over the Netherlands.

The U.S. water polo team, heavily favored, lost 6-4 to Spain in the semifinals and lost 8-4 to the Unified Team in Sunday's bronze medal game.

Italy won the gold, 9-8 over Spain in three overtimes. As the teams changed sides after one overtime, there was a brief shoving match at poolside. Freeze the pool, and it would have looked like hockey.

Sunday also was the final day for boxing, and there was no one left to carry the flag for America. The United States won just one gold medal — by Oscar De La Hoya of Los Angeles — one silver and one bronze, its worst performance since winning just one silver in 1948.

In Seoul, American boxers won three gold, three silver and two bronze.

Cuba, attending its first Olympics since 1980, won seven of the 12 boxing gold medals and also had two silvers.

"The Cubans have a machine down there," said Jim Fox, executive director of USA Boxing. "They just keep putting pieces in. Our expectations were higher than this."

It seems like Ben Johnson of Canada can't leave an Olympics without being stripped of something.

In 1988, he was stripped of the 100-meter medal after testing positive for steroids. Sunday, he was stripped of his credentials after pushing a security guard at the Olympic Village, apparently because he tried to enter without his accreditation.

Already this year, the Games had a decidedly different tone to them. Germany was one team for the first time since 1936, and South-Africa was back for the first time since 1960.

Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia competed as nations for the first time since before World War II, when they were annexed by the Soviet Union, and Yugoslavia was shattered by civil war into separate states such as Croatia, Slovenia and Bosnia.

By the time the Olympic flame is touched off in Atlanta, there are bound to be even more new countries.

Italian water polo player Massimiliano Ferretti, right, grabs Spain's Jose Pico during a brawl between the two teams Sunday in Barcelona. Italian coach Ratko Rudic tries to break it up.

On Saturday, Lithuania beat the Unified Team for the bronze medal in basketball in one of the most emotional moments of the Games. On each team were four members of the Olympic champion Soviets from 1988.

"Today was our last game together," Unified coach Yuri Selikov said. "After today, each player will play for his respective state. It will be hard for anyone to ever be as strong as the Soviet team once was."

Of course, this was not the only new look in basketball. The United States ended an international losing streak that included one Olympics, one world championship, one Goodwill Games and two Pan American Games, with a team of 11 NBA all-stars and one college All-American. Professionalism had come full force to the Games. The Corinthians are history.

Was this in the Olympic spirit? Judge for yourself.

The U.S. team, which refused to stay at the Olympic village, left Spain immediately after winning the gold medal game Saturday night, skipping the closing ceremonies.

"This has been a long season for the other guys, but not for me because I didn't play," Magic Johnson said. "But we're going back and we're going as a team."

What comes next for Larry Bird and Magic Johnson?

N.Y. Times News Service

BADALONA, Spain — Magic Johnson said to give him two or three weeks. Larry Bird requested a month. The fate of the planet, or the championship of the National Basketball Association, is not exactly hanging in the balance, but inquiring minds do want to know what comes next for Johnson and Bird.

Now that the Dream Team has reclaimed the basketball Olympic gold medal that America rightfully owns, and Michael Jordan solved the dilemma of how to pledge allegiance to his corporate sponsor on the medal stand, there remains the question of whether the United States' 117-85 victory over Croatia on Saturday night is the last we will see of Johnson, or Bird, or both.

Neither seems to want to walk away right now, which is understandable, especially for Johnson, given the reception they received during their three weeks in Europe from fans, the news media and opposing players. It was a just reward, given the groundwork these two began to lay when their schools met in the 1979 national collegiate championship game.

Johnson, according to two people who know him well, has confided that he is determined to return to the Los Angeles Lakers, to whom he remains under contract, for approximately 60 of their 82 regular-season games. Bird's decision on playing another season for the Boston Celtics likely depends on how pain-free his chronically sore back stays for the remainder of the summer.

"I'm going to want to get back with my wife and doctors, sit down and talk about it," Johnson said Saturday night at the post-game news conference, his gold medal dangling around his neck, before the Dream Team's charter flight departed for Newark International Airport. "I'll take a physical, then we'll see."

Johnson's current intentions aside, others who know him, like his agent, Lon Rosen, say they will believe he is going to play when they see him in uniform at the Lakers' training camp the first week of October.

For one thing, his conviction about unretiring from the National Basketball Association has wavered throughout the 10 months since the announcement that he had contracted the virus that causes AIDS.

For another, as recently as late last month in Monte Carlo, he said he would meet with the NBA commissioner, David Stern, upon his return to the United States, hoping to arrange the purchase of an existing league franchise by a group of investors he would control.

Ownership, he said, was his first priority, though during the Olympics, he at times alluded to the magnetic appeal of being on the floor.

"This is what I do," he said.

Johnson has said that doctors have told him there is no evidence that playing in the NBA would threaten his condition, provided he is careful about getting rest and maintaining a proper diet. He said the doctors' advice that he retire last November was precautionary.

"They never had dealt with a big, strong athlete like me before," he said.

There has been some concern on the part of Johnson's closest friends that, because he wants to play so much, he is hearing from the doctors what he wants to hear. What ultimately might also weigh on Johnson is the realization that even a 60-game NBA schedule would be far more strenuous than what he experienced preparing for and playing in the Olympics.

Grueling late-night and early morning travel, eating on the run, longer, more physical, fiercely contested games and having to chase the likes of Tim Hardaway and Kevin Johnson had Johnson raising the possibility of retirement during the spring of 1991, months before his shocking announcement. He has also said that if he did return, he wanted to contend for the championship, and it is doubtful that even his presence could elevate the aging Lakers to that level.

Bird, meanwhile, has said several times that he does not want to put himself through another season like the last two, when his back made every sudden movement an act that could land him on the injured list for weeks of inactivity.

Asked about his retirement before the start of the Games, Bird snapped, "I've been retired for four years, only nobody knows it yet."

With two years left on his contract, which will pay him an estimated $4 million per season, Bird has financial motivation to continue. Most long-term Bird watchers believed Bird was so frustrated by the end of last season that he was likely to quit, rather than suffer the discomfort from flying, even with a specially equipped plane that allows him to lie in his own airborne bed.

When he was asked Saturday about the experience of playing in the Olympics, Bird said: "As a young kid, you always dream it. It's a great way to end a career."

The bait had been set. When, by logical extension, the question was raised about retirement, Bird said, "This was my last game tonight," paused, and added, "Tomorrow, we don't know."

ASA: Batbusters finish 7-0

(From 1C)

Batbuster shortstop Crystal Bustos was 4-for-4 with two RBIs and two runs scored to lead the Orange County offense.

Equally as impressive as the Batbusters' offense was the sparkling defensive play of Orange County second baseman Autumn Gwinner. Gwinner turned an unassisted double play in the third inning, and started another that would bring the tournament to an end with the second and third outs in the seventh. Gwinner also recorded two more assists and chalked up two more unassisted put outs.

Batbuster starting pitcher Lisa Pitt struck out just two San Diego batters but, with the help of her defense, was able to work her way out of numerous jams. San Diego left the bases loaded once and runners at first and second twice more.

"All along, I knew we could do it," Pitt said of the Batbusters' success. "So it's really not a surprise.

"If we stick together, we can win a lot more (national titles)."

The group of girls that won Sunday's title were also together to claim the last two national 12-and-under titles.

After going through their first four games outscoring their competition 35-0, Orange County finally ran into trouble Saturday night and Sunday morning when they not only allowed opposing runners to score, but also had to come from behind for a win.

"The longer you're in a tournament, the tougher the competition gets," head coach Dale Moore said. "It's just hard to hold some of these teams down."

The Classics-Black team from Montclair, Calif., finished third in the tournament while the St. Louis Foxes finished fourth. The Classics-Red, also of Montclair, Calif., finished fifth nationally.

Ben Johnson kicked out of village

(From 1C)

BARCELONA, Spain (AP) — Canadian sprinter Ben Johnson was expelled from the athletes village and his Olympic accreditation revoked Sunday following an altercation at a security checkpoint.

However, precisely what transpired around noon at the village was not clear.

The head of the security checkpoint, Manuel Gomez, said Sunday night the incident was far from minor.

"It was Johnson's fault," he said.

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, AUGUST 10, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your tireless energy and penchant for hard work will make this an outstanding year! Innovative business projects look prime in late fall. Your love life will really take off in December. The year 1993 should be one of your most productive and profitable ever. Travel brings great pleasure next March and April, especially if you take along the right person! An early summer wedding could be part of the picture.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Rejoice! Brighter days are just ahead. An employment offer comes from out of the blue. Let go of pent-up anger; forgive both yourself and other people. Give investments time to grow.

Have you ever considered natural methods of healing, such as proper diet and exercise? Stop worrying about things you cannot change and come to terms with your mate. Speak from the heart.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Rosanna Arquette, singers Jimmy Dean and Eddie Fisher, fashion designer Betsy Johnson.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): It may be necessary to massage a difficult supervisor's ego today. Maintain your dignity. Back up any assertions with facts and figures. Be willing to work overtime to boost profits.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Stop acting like a martyr. Needless sacrifices will only make you feel resentful. Take pleasure from being in the company of a delightful child.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Keep an eye on self-indulgence, especially drugs and alcohol. Your personal magnetism has as much effect on influential people as your industriousness.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An unpredictable partner keeps you up in the air. Be honest about your expectations. Conditions are right for a windfall. Spending some time alone will help you gain a fresh perspective.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Let your relationship with loved one run its course. Analyze spending patterns before making a budget revision. Personal decisions will be easier to make once you develop greater self-confidence.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You have a perfect right to protect yourself against someone who attacks your beliefs. High energy helps you bounce back from a disappointment. Get plenty of rest and watch what you eat.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stop hiding. Come out from behind your protective shell. Be open to new ideas and people. Invitations come in threes! Choose the one that appeals most to your sense of humor.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Consider your resources carefully before buying non-essentials. Make certain other people know exactly where you stand. Putting your thoughts in writing will prevent quarrels in the future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your world could turn topsy-turvy due to events beyond your control. Collect yourself. A sudden outburst could tear down what you have spent so long building up. Escape into good music or a book.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ1075 ♥865 ♦9 ♣KQ63
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump and your right-hand opponent passes. What do you respond?

A.—Not an ideal hand for immediate action. However, if you do pass now, later competition could be even more hazardous. To avoid the possibility of losing the spade suit, we would double, intending to pass and take our chances should partner respond in clubs.

tend that one of our diamonds is a heart and rebid one no trump.

A.—If you use transfer bids, transfer to two spades and then follow up with three clubs—a game force with slam interest. If you use more standard methods, start with a jump to three spades.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ2 ♥K ♦KQ1093 ♣8762
The bidding has proceeded:

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q762 ♥A3 ♦A ♣876432
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?

A.—Three no trump should be an excellent contract—if your side has a heart stopper! (You are certainly not overly blessed in that department.) If not, five diamonds should have good play. The way to find out is to bid three spades. With a high heart honor, partner will bid three no trump unless interested in bigger things.

A.—Neither two clubs nor two diamonds is particularly appealing to us. If there is a game here, it is likely to be in no trump, so we'll just pre-

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Void ♥63 ♦AKJ983 ♣Q9843
Your right-hand opponent passes. What action do you take?

A.—In our opinion, the hand is worth an opening bid. You have two defensive tricks and easy rebids no matter what partner does. By simply bidding clubs twice next, you will get across to partner a very accurate picture of your hand.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q1063 ♥K6 ♦AJ1065 ♣K6
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one heart. What action do you take?

A.—Obviously, it's a matter of whether you deem this hand good enough for a two-over-one response. If you play that as a game force, you aren't. Even if you don't, with most of your high cards in the short suits your hand isn't as good as it looks. We would choose one spade in either case.

A.—Neither two clubs nor two diamonds is particularly appealing to us. If there is a game here, it is likely to be in no trump, so we'll just pre-

Thurgood Marshall is first recipient of ABA award

SAN FRANCISCO — Thurgood Marshall is the first recipient — and the namesake — of an American Bar Association award honoring pioneers in law who have fought for personal liberty and civil rights.

The 84-year-old former Supreme Court Justice accepted the award Saturday at the ABA's annual convention.

"Change came because everyday citizens put themselves on the line because they understood that no one — white, Afro, or blue — gets anywhere unless somebody pushes open the door, even if only a crack, for those coming behind," he told an audience of about 300 people.

Over his 24-year career on the court, Marshall championed the rights of criminal suspects, fought the death penalty and took an expansive view of the right to privacy and freedom of speech.

He was appointed to the court in 1967 by President Johnson after serving as a federal appeals court judge and the Johnson administration's solicitor general.

Before that he was legal director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. In that post he argued the Brown vs. Board of Education case that resulted in the 1954 Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

LOS ANGELES — Rapper Ice-T has bought a home in the Sunset Strip area after a now former neighbor in the Hollywood Hills complained about his noisy work, a real estate agent said.

The rapper "likes to work at home, and one of his neighbors asked him to turn down the volume," said real estate agent Janet Factor. "He wanted a place with soundproofed rooms."

Ice-T paid $1.2 million for his new 4,500-square-foot digs, Factor said. The 3-year-old, three-level home has a 180-degree view from the ocean to downtown Los Angeles.

The 32-year-old rapper hung his gold records and replaced the wood floors with black marble to match his black leather sofas before leaving over the weekend for a concert tour in Australia, she said.

Ice-T recently pulled the song "Cop Killer" off his "Body Count" album after law enforcement groups called for a boycott of Time Warner, which owns the Warner Bros.-Sire label. He said the battle with the song's critics was his, not Time Warner's.

BUCHAREST, Romania — Former King Michael of Romania, who rejected a request that he run for president of his homeland, has accepted an invitation to visit.

Michael, 71, who has lived in Switzerland for the past 30 years, accepted an invitation from the Archbishop of Timisoara and the mayor of Brasov, his press bureau said in a statement Saturday.

A week earlier, Michael turned down a request by a political party to run for president in Romania's general elections on Sept. 27.

He said he wanted to return to Romania as king and hoped the election victors would change the constitution so he can.

Michael ruled Romania twice for short periods. He first succeeded his grandfather Ferdinand in 1927 as Michael I, after his father, Carol II, was excluded from the succession.

Carol acceded to the throne in 1930 and ruled for 10 years, after which Michael was crowned again. He was forced to abdicate and was exiled by the Communists in 1947.

WEST BRANCH, Iowa — Ronald Reagan visited Herbert Hoover's hometown to help kick off the latest effort to refurbish the image of the much-maligned Depression-era president.

The former president praised Hoover as one of history's great humanitarians at a ceremony Saturday for the refurbished Hoover library and museum, which underwent a $6.5 million expansion and renovation.

About 5,000 people cheered Reagan; supporters held aloft "Reagan '92" signs.

Reagan said Hoover should be remembered for his compassion.

"For years, his dreams were haunted by the image of hungry children," Reagan said. "Soon after assuming the presidency in 1929, he saw most of his ambitious plans for reform engulfed in an economic firestorm."

Reagan, whose broadcasting career began at WOC radio in Davenport when Hoover was seeking re-election in 1932, acknowledged that he didn't support Hoover at the time.

"My father, Jack Reagan, was one of the few Democrats to be found in Dixon, Ill.," Reagan said. "Franklin D. Roosevelt was his hero, and he soon became mine as well."

"But time passes, nations evolve," the Republican ex-president said.

Lasorda may go with Giants, report says

Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Tommy Lasorda may end his 43-year association with the Los Angeles Dodgers and become manager of the Giants when they move to St. Petersburg, Fla., a published report says.

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram citing two sources close to the situation, reported Sunday that Lasorda could join the Giants before the 1993 season and manage at least one season before becoming general manager. There have also been reports Lasorda may take over as manager of the Florida Marlins.

Under the scenario, former Texas Rangers manager Bobby Valentine, who was fired on July 9, would accompany Lasorda to St. Petersburg as third base coach, then take over as manager when Lasorda moves into the front office.

Lasorda

Lasorda, 64, has a close relationship with Vincent Piazza, one of the main investors in the group that has reached an agreement in principle to buy the Giants from Bob Lurie. Lasorda is the godfather of Piazza's son, Mike, a promising catching prospect in the Dodgers' system.

"There's nothing to that," Lasorda said Sunday in Atlanta. "I don't even know who they are except for one guy (Piazza). I'm manager of the Dodgers. I have a contract for 1993. I don't want anyone getting in touch with me."

Lasorda, known for his fierce loyalty to the Dodgers, has said he expects to honor his contract with the Dodgers, which runs through the 1993 season.

But the Star-Telegram reported that its sources confirmed Lasorda has talked of the Giants scenario in the past with family and close friends.

Despite a growing rift between Lasorda and members of the Dodgers' front office, the club in March extended his contract through the 1993 season, which would be his 18th as Dodgers manager.

Valentine, who is eager to get back into managing, told the newspaper his involvement with the Giants isn't a certainty.

"I would like to do something with Tommy. That's something we've talked about for 25 years," he said. "But I still want to do it on my own, too."

Valentine said Lasorda would have to have the blessing of Dodgers owner Peter O'Malley before he would leave.

"That would be very traumatic, Tommy leaving. The Dodgers have been his life," Valentine said.

Asked the chances of O'Malley giving his blessing to a move by Lasorda, one Dodgers official said it would be "80-20," the Star-Telegram reported.

Lasorda has resisted efforts to inject new players into the Dodgers' lineup, preferring to go with veterans. He is losing that war, however, and coupled with injuries to outfielders Eric Davis and Darryl Strawberry, the team is last in the NL West and struggling through one of its worst seasons ever.

Bill Russell would probably take over as manager of the Dodgers.

Mayor launches all-out effort to keep Giants

N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — In a "bottom of the ninth" effort to keep the Giants, San Francisco Mayor Frank Jordan has realigned his staff to get top aides working full time on a deal to buy the team before major league baseball owners consider the Tampa Bay move.

Jordan said Sunday that Chief of Staff Jim Lazarus and economic development Director Ron Blatman will head the effort. Jordan added that he will rearrange his schedule to make retaining the Giants his top priority.

The Giants announced Friday that owner Bob Lurie is selling the team to a group of Tampa Bay-area investors who would move the team to the Florida Suncoast Dome for the 1993 season. Sources said the offer was $113 million. Baseball owners are expected to vote on the deal at their September meeting in St. Louis.

"There are those who know there is no tomorrow, that everything is on the table, and here is our one, last chance," said Jordan, who spent the weekend speaking with his staff, members of the corporate community and Walter Shorenstein and Warren Hellman, the principals involved in putting together a coalition of investors to make an offer for the Giants.

While an investment offer is being pursued, Jordan said he also will put together a coalition of statewide support to demonstrate to the baseball owners and the baseball commissioner how important the Giants are to Northern California. He wants to create a regional citizens' Committee to Save the Giants and enlist the help of Governor Wilson and the state Assembly.

In an interview Sunday, influential sports agent Leigh Steinberg said he and other sports figures will pressure Baseball Commissioner Fay Vincent to delay or reject the sale. Civic and business leaders must do the same, he said, if San Francisco is to have any hope of keeping the team.

"When Seattle faced the prospect of losing their ball team, civic leaders visited Fay Vincent and said this cannot happen," Steinberg said.

M's drop Rangers in 14th

Associated Press

SEATTLE — Tino Martinez singled with the bases loaded in the 14th inning as the Seattle Mariners beat the Texas Rangers 6-5 Sunday and stopped a seven-game losing streak.

Edgar Martinez reached second on third baseman Dean Palmer's fielding error and took third when Matt Whiteside (0-1) threw a wild pitch over the head of catcher Ivan Rodriguez during an intentional walk to Ken Griffey Jr. Lance Parrish lined out, Griffey took second on defensive indifference and Whiteside walked Jay Buhner, loading the bases. Tino Martinez followed with his hit.

Orioles 3, Indians 2
BALTIMORE — Cal Ripken singled home the winning run in the 10th inning, closing the Orioles within two games of first-place Toronto in the AL East.

Mark McLemore opened the 10th with a single off Ted Power (1-3). Jeff Tackett sacrificed and Brady Anderson reached on an infield single off Derek Lilliquist as McLemore held. Eric Plunk walked Mike Devereaux, loading the bases, and Ripken bounced a single to left past a drawn-in infield.

Yankees 6, Red Sox 0
NEW YORK — Sam Miltello made an impressive major league debut, pitching one-hit ball for seven innings as New York beat Boston.

Miltello, a 22-year-old right-hander, gave up his only hit in the second, a single to Tony Pena. He retired 15 consecutive batters after that and wound up with five strikeouts, three walks and one hit batter. Steve Farr finished with a hitless relief for his 16th save.

Miltello's first hitter, five-time AL batting champion Wade Boggs, reached on an error by second baseman Pat Kelly.

Tigers 9, Blue Jays 2
DETROIT — David Haas won his first career start and Travis Fryman drove in four runs, sending Toronto to its fifth loss in seven games.

Haas (1-0), whose previous 12 big league appearances were in relief, allowed two runs and eight hits in 6 1/3 innings. He struck out five and walked three as Detroit won its third straight. John Kiehl finished with one-hit relief.

David Wells (6-6) was tagged for seven runs and eight hits in 5 1/3 innings. In his last two games, he has given up 15 runs and 15 hits in 10 1/3 innings.

Brewers 4, Twins 2
MILWAUKEE — Chris Bosio won his fourth consecutive start since the All-Star break as Milwaukee sent the Twins to their fifth loss in six games.

Bosio (10-5) allowed six hits in seven innings, struck out three and walked two. Doug Henry, Milwaukee's third pitcher, threw a hitless ninth for his 23rd save in 26 chances.

David West (0-1) gave up four runs and seven hits in 5 1/3 innings in his first start since last Oct. 1.

Royals 5, Athletics 2
OAKLAND, Calif. — George Brett hit a two-run double to reach 1,500 in career RBIs as Kansas City beat Oakland and stopped the Athletics' seven-game winning streak.

Brett's two-out hit in the third left him in 34th place on the career list, nine behind Mickey Mantle.

Kevin Appier (13-4) beat Oakland for the first time in three starts this season, allowing two runs and three hits in 6 1/3 innings with a season-high six walks and four strikeouts. Jeff Montgomery got two outs for his 28th save in 32 chances.

White Sox 12, Angels 8
ANAHEIM, Calif. — Ron Karkovice singled to break a 14th-inning tie as the Chicago White Sox rapped out a season-high 20 hits and beat California.

Chicago won for the 10th time in 12 games despite a season-high five errors that led to six unearned runs. Lance Johnson extended his hitting streak to 23, the longest in the majors this season, and Frank Thomas extended his to 19 with a three-run homer.

The White Sox went ahead off Scott Bailes (3-1) on consecutive singles by Shawn Abner, Johnson and Karkovice. Esteban Beltré followed with a two-run single and scored when right fielder Chad Curtis dropped Tim Lincecum's two-out fly ball for an error.

Padres trip Astros, 4-3

Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — Gary Sheffield got two hits for the sixth straight game before sustaining a concussion in a collision, and Jerald Clark hit a tie-breaking, two-run homer in the eighth inning as the San Diego Padres beat the Houston Astros 4-3 Sunday for their fifth straight victory.

Sheffield reached base to open the eighth inning on the second error of the game by shortstop Casey Candaele. On a force-play grounder by Fred McGriff, Sheffield was hit by Candaele's knee at second base and stayed on the ground for several minutes.

Pirates 7, Cardinals 5
ST. LOUIS — The Pittsburgh Pirates won their season-high 10th straight game as Orlando Merced drove in four runs.

The Pirates' winning streak is their longest since they won 11 in a row in 1978. The club record is 16 set in 1909.

The NL East leaders also have beaten the Cardinals 10 consecutive times and 12 of 14 this season. The Pirates completed their second four-game sweep in as many weekends against St. Louis, beating the Cardinals four in a row at Busch Stadium for the first time since 1983.

Braves 10, Dodgers 3
ATLANTA — Striking Tom Glavine won his 11th straight decision and pitched the surging Braves to their ninth consecutive victory. Glavine (17-3), leading the majors in victories, moved within one victory of matching the longest winning streak in Braves' franchise history, set by Boston's Dik Rudolph in 1914. The last Braves pitcher to win 11 in a row was Milwaukee's Warren Spahn in 1954.

Glavine, the reigning NL Cy Young winner, allowed one run on five hits in six innings.

Giants 7, Reds 1
CINCINNATI — Matt Williams homered and drove in four runs and Trevor Wilson combined on a three-hitter against the Reds.

Jose Uribe also homered as the Giants dropped the Reds 4 1/2 games behind Atlanta in the NL West. The Braves beat Los Angeles.

Wilson (7-11) got two hits and scored twice as the Giants broke a three-game losing streak. He gave up three hits and one run before leaving after 6 1/3 innings with leg cramps. Hickerson finished with hitless relief.

Expos 6, Phillies 2
PHILADELPHIA — Gary Carter hit his 26th home run at Veterans Stadium, the most there by any visiting player, and Montreal beat Philadelphia.

Mark Gardner (11-8) and Mel Rojas combined on a three-hitter as the Expos won for the sixth time in eight games. Philadelphia has lost seven of eight.

Carter connected for a two-run shot in the fifth inning against Greg Mathews (0-2), putting the Expos ahead 3-2. Carter's fourth home run of the season put him seven ahead of Andre Dawson for most career home runs at the ballpark.

Cubs 6, Mets 2
CHICAGO — Mike Harkey scattered six hits in six innings and Chicago went on an extra base-hit binge to sweep New York.

The loss was a season-high sixth straight for the Mets — all on the road. New York is 1-10 in its 11 night games lifetime at Wrigley Field.

Eight of the Cubs' 12 hits were for extra bases starting with Joe Girardi's fly to right in the second inning that Daryl Boston misjudged for a triple.

Rey Sanchez's first of two doubles scored Girardi and Sanchez scored on a single by Doug Dascenzo.

15 Month Notice to Depositors

FIRST BANKERS TRUST AND SAVINGS ASSOCIATION, F.A. MIDLAND, TEXAS

On May 10, 1991, First Bankers Trust and Savings Association F.A. Midland, Texas was closed by the Office of Thrift Supervision and the Resolution Trust Corporation ("RTC") was appointed as Receiver. Insurance on your deposit (s) of First Bankers Trust and Savings Association, F.A. was paid by the RTC by mailing you a check for the insured amount in your deposit account. Our records indicate that your RTC insurance check was never negotiated or was returned to the RTC as undeliverable.

This letter is to serve you with notice that you must negotiate the insurance check issued to you by November 10, 1992. If you do not possess an insurance check, you have until November 10, 1992 to contact the RTC at the address below to claim and negotiate your insurance check.

RTC Claims Processing Center
P.O. Box 790567
San Antonio, Texas 78279
(512) 828-2717
Linda Bassett, Claims/Settlement Specialist

This notice is also intended for depositors who hold official checks. An official check is defined as a cashier's check, money order, interest check, or accounts payable check issued by First Bankers Trust and Savings Association, F.A. If you possess an official check, you must present the original check to the RTC at the address above by November 10, 1992.

At the time of First Bankers Trust and Savings Association, F.A. closing on May 10, 1991, notice was published requesting you to claim your insured deposit or present your official check within 18 months. If you do not claim your deposit (s) or present your official check within the specified time period, your insurance coverage will expire under 12 U.S.C. Section 1822 (a) and you will be prevented from claiming the full amount of your insured deposit (or official check).

This is the second and final notice requesting you to claim your deposit insurance proceeds. Under 12 U.S.C. Section 1822 (a), your right to insurance shall be barred in three (3) months and your rights against the receivership estate of First Bankers Trust and Savings Association, F.A. shall thereupon revert to you. As a result of this reversion, you may be able to recover some portion of your deposit (s) through the filing of a creditor's claim against the receivership estate. To file a creditor's claim, you must contact the RTC as Receiver for First Bankers Trust and Savings Association, F.A. at P.O. Box 790567, San Antonio, Texas 78279.

If you fail to claim your insured deposit (s) within the remaining three-month period, you should contact the RTC as Receiver immediately thereafter because the possibility of recovering any portion of your deposit (s) through a creditor's claim will terminate upon the termination of the receivership.

Again, you must claim your insured deposit (s) with three (3) months. Please contact the Resolution Trust Corporation at the above address, or call (512) 828-2717 if you have questions regarding this notice.
