U.S. mulls Iraq oil sales

Policy shift would let Baghdad trade crude

■ Approach reflects concern that economic strangulation hurts Iraqi people rather than weakens Saddam's power, officials say.

By Elaine Sciolino
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration is drawing up a plan to allow the Security Council to remove some sanctions against Iraq to allow Baghdad to sell petroleum for the purchase of food and medicine, the payment of war reparations and the cost of destroying weapons, senior administration officials said Monday.

The plan, which was drafted by the State Department, is being circulated for review within the department and at the Pentagon, the White House and the CIA.

■ Related story/5C

Officials said that Secretary of State James A. Baker III was expected to approve it. It also would need President Bush's approval before it could be presented to the United Nations Security Council as the basis for a resolution.

If the Bush administration puts the plan forward, as many officials expect, it would represent a major shift in policy.

Currently, Iraq is not allowed to sell its oil because of stringent U.N. sanctions imposed after the invasion of Kuwait, and until now the administration has argued that Iraq had hidden assets in its Central Bank as well as gold reserves that should be used to buy food and medicine, which are not covered by sanctions.

Administration officials said the examination of a new approach reflects a growing realization that the postwar economic strangulation was hurting the Iraqi people rather than weakening President Saddam Hussein's grip on power.

The plan is a response to reports by independent

HOUSTON — Houston has overtaken Miami as the nation's main drug distribution center, according to a top U.S. Customs official. District Director Patricia McCauley said Friday at a seminar on drug abuse that Houston's ranking as No. 1 in the wholesale drug trade is based on the volume of drugs and money seized in the jurisdiction, which stretches along the Gulf coast from Corpus Christi to Port Arthur. /1B

JERUSALEM — The United States on Monday urged Israel to seize an "historic opportunity" to enter peace talks with Arab states, and Israeli officials immediately split over the challenge. ### No sweetness

ATLANTA — Victory was sweet Monday night as Cordele kept its title of the "Watermelon Capital of the World," slicing away claims by Texas and Arkansas that they grow better melons. About 60 people traveled the 140 miles from the south Georgia city to Atlanta for "MelonFest," the battle against melons grown in Hempstead, Texas, and Hope, Ark. Four judges tasted mouthfuls of the juicy melons and proclaimed Cordele the winner with 176.5 points out of a possible 200 based on color, taste and texture. Hope came in second with a score of 160 points, and Hempstead was the loser with 151 points.

Once-bitter rivals NCNB, C&S/Sovran to combine

■ $4.3 billion merger to create nation's third-largest bank, NationsBank.

Associated Press

Brown

ATLANTA — C&S/Sovran Corp. and NCNB Corp., bitter enemies just two years ago, put their differences aside Monday and struck a deal on a $4.3 billion merger that would create the nation's third-largest bank.

In the latest deal in a new wave of bank consolidations, the companies said they would combine to create NationsBank, a $118 billion asset giant that would cover the Southeast from Maryland to Texas.

Included in the merger are NCNB branches in Midland and Odessa.

The deal follows last week's announced merger of Chemical Banking Corp. — parent of Texas Commerce Bank — and Manufacturers Hanover Corp. as the bank industry has sought strength in size.

NCNB Chairman Hugh L. McColl Jr. described NationsBank as "a bank with a southern accent and truly a national influence." NationsBank — to be headquartered in Charlotte, N.C., home of NCNB — would be the largest U.S. bank based outside of New York, traditionally

Prosecutor alleges Smith involved in other attacks

Smith

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The prosecutor in the alleged rape at the Kennedy estate claimed Monday that William Kennedy Smith raped a woman in Washington, D.C., three years ago and attempted two other rapes.

Moira Lasch, the assistant Palm Beach County state attorney heading the prosecution of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's 30-year-old nephew, also notified Smith's attorneys she will call as witnesses the three women who allegedly were attacked.

It wasn't clear whether Smith had been charged in any of those cases, nor whether the women reported the alleged attacks to authorities.

In county court papers, Lasch said she intends to call the women to testify under state law allowing use of evidence of similar crimes. A judge would decide whether to allow the testimony.

Neal Sonnett, a prominent Miami criminal defense attorney not involved in the Smith case, said Judge Mary Lupo could exclude the testimony if she decides "it doesn't meet the test of relevance or if it's prejudicial im-

Evidence renews interest in Vietnam-era POWs, MIAs

By Dave Montgomery
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Nearly two decades after the end of the Vietnam War, a growing volume of purported evidence, including photos, has ignited a vigorous re-examination of the possibility that American servicemen are still being held captive in the Southeast Asian jungles.

"We owe it to these men, whoever is still alive, to bring them home," said Dallas computer magnate H. Ross Perot, who conducted a 1986 presidential study that concluded that Americans were left behind in Southeast Asia long after the war ended.

Government intelligence reports and other data obtained by the Fort Worth Star-Telegram tell of sightings of U.S. servicemen as late as last year. Mucht in the intelligence reports is unconfirmed hearsay, though some reports include eyewitness accounts and mention American personnel by name.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a low in the mid-60s.

Although significant, heavy showers were reported around the city, only .01-inch of precipitation officially was recorded at the National Weather Service stattion at Midland International Airport between 6 p.m. Sunday and 6 p.m. Monday.

STATE

A tropical wave moving into South Texas triggered thunderstorms across the state Monday, while temperatures reached the 100s.

Showers and thunderstorms developed in Southeast Texas, along the Texas Gulf coast and in far West Texas. Heavy rain and thunderstorms brought winds of up to 15 mph.

In North Texas, scattered showers developed south of Lufkin.

Winds were from the south at 5 to 10 mph and temperatures reached the upper 90s.

West Texas had scattered showers with winds from the south of up to 20 mph.

The North Texas forecast calls for isolated evening thunderstorms in the southeast. Partly cloudy with a chance of thunderstorms through Wednesday, with highs near the 100s and lows in the 70s.

NATION

Much of the nation remained in the grip of a heat wave Monday, and thunderstorms developed across the Plains, Midwest and Great Lakes.

A cold front from Canada brought relief to New England, and another cold front was expected to make Tuesday a little nicer in the central states.

But the misery continued in many places Monday. Temperatures warmed into the 90s across much of the Mid-Atlantic region, and topped 100 in parts of Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma.

Temperatures dipped to more seasonable levels in New England, where the mercury pushed or surpassed 100 in recent days. A Canadian cold front dropped temperatures in many towns by 20 degrees.

SHIFT: New plan would remove some sanctions

medical teams, U.N. officials and the news media of widespread malnutrition and disease in Iraq, as well as an attempt to counter calls for a more sweeping removal of economic sanctions on humanitarian grounds, the officials said.

"We don't want to see more reports about massive starvation and disease in Iraq," said one senior administration official who is working on the plan.

"We know we will eventually have to go this way. We're not there yet, but we'll have to get there." Another senior official described the plan as "a good way to maintain the bulk of sanctions and not be on the wrong side of a potentially emotional issue."

The sanctions review comes at an uncomfortable time for the administration, which charged again Monday that Iraq has not disclosed all the details of its secret nuclear program.

"We are still very skeptical about their disclosures and believe they have more to tell us," the State Department's deputy spokesman, Richard A. Boucher, said at a State Department briefing on Monday.

Several days ago the five permanent Security Council members — the United States, Britain, France, the Soviet Union and China — gave Iraq until July 25 to declare a final inventory of its nuclear sites.

But one senior administration official Monday described the date as "an artificial deadline, not necessarily a turning point." The United States had threatened to resume bombing if Iraq did not comply.

The move to ease sanctions against Iraq was pressed at the United Nations on Monday by Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, the head of a U.N. commission that is assessing Iraq's humanitarian needs.

The prince told the Security Council's sanctions committee about a worsening crisis for Iraq's civilian population and suggested that the country be allowed to sell oil to import food, medicine, and some agricultural and industrial materials.

Prince Sadruddin later told reporters that it was "absurd and indefensible" for the United Nations to pay for Iraq's humanitarian needs.

the U.S. financial center.

At a news conference with C&S Chairman Bennett Brown, McColl said the bank will have 1,900 offices in one of the nation's fastest growing regions, covering nine states and Washington, D.C.

Locally, Larry Holden, president of NCNB Midland, said the merger will benefit "customers, employees and prospects, because the increased size and geographic diversity will give us greater financial strength and improved operating efficiencies.

"The greater size has already enabled us to invest in the latest technolgy that will allow us to process customers checks faster and provide answers on loan applications more quickly," Holden said.

NationsBank will be the leading consumer bank in Georgia, the Carolinas, Texas and Virginia. The expanded presence and potential cost savings will lead to "spectacular earnings potential," McColl said.

Holden promised that the new bank "will continue to support and invest in communities such as Midland and our associates will continue to volunteer for civic activities. The excellent employees in Midland will continue to provide the friendly personal service our customers want along with the financial stability, competitive interest rates and expanded product line of a large national bank."

Katherine Bissette, a bank analyst at Interstate Johnson Lane, an Atlanta stock brokerage, said the sheer geographic coverage of the merger is unprecedented in the industry.

Under the deal, C&S/Sovran shareholders would get 0.84 share of NCNB stock for each share of C&S/Sovran stock.

SMITH: Prosecutor to call three women to stand

pact outweighs the probative value."

Smith faces an Aug. 5 trial on charges of second-degree sexual battery and misdemeanor battery stemming from charges by a 29-year-old Jupiter, Fla., woman woman that he raped her March 30 at his family's Palm Beach estate.

Smith's Miami attorneys, Roy Black and Mark Schnapp, didn't return telephone messages.

Paul Donovan, spokesman for Sen. Kennedy, said: "Senator Kennedy continues to believe that when this case is decided Willie will be found innocent."

Washington police said Monday they couldn't confirm nor deny Lasch's claims. The U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia, who would prosecute the crimes there, didn't immediately respond to a request for comment.

Palm Beach police early in their investigation reported looking into claims that Smith had been involved in earlier sexual assaults. They said checks with agencies in Washington and other places where Smith has lived showed no record of any such allegations against him.

But Ms. Lasch's filing Monday claimed Smith committed a sexual battery in Washington between May 1 and June 30 of 1988 and attempted sexual battery in Washington between April 1 and June 30 that year and in New York City between June 1 and August 30 of 1983.

Ms. Lasch wasn't immediately available for comment and is under a gag order barring her from commenting about the case.

The state filing gave little detail, but described the alleged Washington rape as using "physical force and violence not likely to cause serious personal injury" — the same description as the second-degree sexual battery count Smith faces in Palm Beach County.

The National Enquirer, a Lantana, Fla.-based weekly tabloid, had reported in April an interview with a woman who claimed Smith had raped her in Washington.

Enquirer executive editor Dan Schwartz said late Monday that Palm Beach police had contacted the Enquirer after the story appeared, but he wouldn't comment further on their investigation.

Schwartz said the newspaper by policy wouldn't identify the woman, but he said the allegations made in the court filing were the same as those made by the woman the newspaper interviewed.

In the Florida case, the woman alleges Smith tackled her near the estate's swimming pool after they met at a Palm Beach nightspot.

MIAs: U.S. officials dismiss most 'live sightings'

viceman believed to be Air Force Lt. Morgan Jefferson Donahue of Alexandria, Va., who was declared missing in action in 1968 after his glider went down on a night patrol over the Ho Chi Minh Trail. The CIA was told of one possible sighting in 1988.

U.S. officials have dismissed most "live-sighting" reports as unsubstantiated or fraudulent. But widely publicized photos that surfaced last week — purportedly showing Americans still in captivity — cast fresh scrutiny on the Pentagon's position and rekindled the national debate over the issue of prisoners of war and MIAs.

"We will take very seriously any report about the possibility that there might still be Americans in Southeast Asia," Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said in an interview with The Associated Press. He said the government will investigate "every single report" about missing Americans.

One photo shows three men purported to be captive U.S. airmen standing behind a sign that appears to be dated 1990. Relatives identified the men as Air Force Maj. Albro Lynn Lundy Jr. and Navy Lt. Larry James Stevens, both of California, and Air Force Col. John Leighton Robertson of Seattle.

Other photos, obtained by retired Air Force Col. Jack Bailey and first reported in the Star-Telegram, depict a man resembling Army Capt. Donald Gene "Butch" Carr of San Antonio, who disappeared on a 1971 aerial surveillance mission.

Preliminary tests identified the photos as those of Carr, but an FBI fingerprint check had negative results. Carr's wife, who has since remarried, initially expressed doubts about the pictures but now says the middle-aged man in the photos may be her former husband.

"My first reaction was absolute shock," said Carol Collins of San Antonio, explaining that the pictures bear a striking resemblance to Carr's father. "I thought I was looking at my father-in-law."

Collins said her son, Donald G. Carr Jr., a student in San Francisco, has refused to believe that his father is dead and considers the pictures genuine. "He wants it to be his father so bad," she said.

The photographs — though still subject to dispute while tests to determine their authenticity go on — expanded public interest in an issue that for years had been left to an isolated group led by former POWs and the families of missing servicemen.

"We all have a common goal — to get the men out," said retired Navy Capt. Eugene "Red" McDaniel, a former POW who heads the American Defense Institute. The organization, which released the photo of the three men, is based in the Washington suburb of Alexandria and is promoting a $2.5 million reward pledged by more than 20 members of Congress.

Activists in the issue say they had largely been written off as members of a fringe group before the latest wave of attention gave them heightened credibility.

"We're not chasing UFOs," said Bailey, a 68-year-old former jet fighter pilot who makes frequent trips to Southeast Asia to track down leads, Ex-Rep. Billy Hendon, a former consultant to the Pentagon on POW-MIA issues, has made 24 trips to Asia in the past 11 years to publicize the reward.

The lure of money has drawn fortune hunters and frauds into the search, raising the potential for false assertions about missing Americans. But most activists involved in the issue appear to be driven by a sincere commitment.

Allegations of a possible government cover-up surfaced in March when Col. Millard A. Peck resigned as head of the Defense Intelligence Agency's Special Office for Prisoners of War and Missing in Action, accusing the government of not responding.

MC: Students find college's new tuition still reasonable

(From 1A)

Midland College worker.

Jane Finch admitted 84 students to the testing room to take placement exams by 11 a.m.

"I'm surprised at the turnout," Ms. Finch said. "Lots and lots of students have been through here this morning. I didn't expect to see a lot of people here before noon."

Some students said they weren't aware the college board of trustees recently had increased tuition from $10 to $15 per semester hour.

Many colleges across the state are raising tuitions in anticipation of a state-mandated tuition increase.

"The increase will hurt people in the lower class," said Sidney Lundy, 18, a freshman from McCamey. "Eventually, some people won't be able to afford to go to college at all. Some people just won't be able to get an education if they keep this up."

Jason Hazlewood, 18, also of McCamey, said that MC still offered a reasonable tuition rate compared to four-year universities or private schools.

John Matthew Walker, 22, who was registering for the college's automotive diesel mechanics program, said the importance of getting an education outweighed any qualms he had about paying more tuition.

"I have an opportunity to get an education here and I have to jump on it even though the cost is higher," Walker said.

A 1987 high school graduate, Walker said his work experience has taught him that he will need an education to further his career. "With a college degree I could even open my own business," he said.

Jessica Hilton, 18, said that tuition was higher than she expected, but she had a scholarship to defray expenses.

"The Abell-Hanger Foundation Scholarship is such a good deal, it makes the tuition increase seem pretty insignificant," said Marcus Johnson, 19.

Returning student Inga Guyett said the tuition increase was "definitely worth the education I'm getting.

"For what an associate's degree in computers will enable me to do, it's a good deal. I have been in the program one semester and it's a great program, she said."

"I saw that tuition doubled," said Terri Waller, 43. "But in the grand scheme of things, it's no big deal. The increase amounts to about $40 for me."

Ms. Waller said she is enrolling in the nursing program. "My kids have left home and I'm going to become a nurse," she said. "If it weren't for Midland College, I wouldn't be able to afford to go back to school. But even if tuition increased more, I would find a way to pay it. You can't put a price on a good education."

JAIL: Commissioners vote to research lawsuit

(From 1A)

in prisons," Dettman said.

County jails throughout the state, including Midland, are holding state prisoners at their own expense since the state's penitentiaries are overcrowded.

Additionally, County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer and the four commissioners discussed implementing the Parole In Absentia (PIA) program and discussed encouraging more personal-recognizance (PR) bonds to help reduce the inmate population.

An increase in PR bonds, which require no cash or property guarantee, likely would hurt the commercial bail-bond business. At the same time, it would would help to decrease jail overcrowding by allowing the good-faith indigent person, who cannot afford a bondsman's services, out of jail while his trial is pending.

"This court is looking at every possible angle it can to solve this jail overcrowding problem and to save the taxpayers' money," Seltzer said.

In doing so, the Commissioners' Court has asked the county's approximately 30 department chiefs, including Sheriff Gary Painter, who commands the county's largest departmental budget, to trim their budgetary requests to prevent the raising of taxes. The 1991-92 budgetary proposals total about $21 million, and the county's projected revenue is about $2.5 million short of that.

The sheriff is cutting back on his initial $5.25 million request to run the county's two jails and to fund the department's law-enforcement operations.

The state's failure to provide enough bunks for convicted felons is costing the county at least $1 million a year, commissioners said.

Of the more than 300 prisoners in the county's two jails, 89 are convicted felons who, theoretically, are bound for the Institutional Division of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice (formerly the Department of Corrections.)

Each month, the TDC bus stops in Midland to pick up 16 prisoners bound for the penitentiary. But more than that are sentenced from Midland County each month, so the local inmate population grows.

In holding state prisoners, the county is denied that space for holding additional federal prisons at $40 per prisoner per day. At that rate, the county could gross almost $1.5 million a year in providing lodging for federal prisoners.

Part of the statewide increase in crimes is the re-entry of ex-convicts into the criminal-justice system, Dettman said.

"I never thought (the prison system) had a mission of rehabilitation," Dettman said. "There's only one thing that cures the criminal from committing crimes, and that's old age."

Dettman is looking toward "a good fight" should the Commissioners' Court, singly or in concert with other West Texas counties, file suit against the state government, which is bemoaning its own $5 billion budget shortfall.

"We owe it to the citizens of Midland County to try at least" to recoup the county's cost of holding state prisoners, Dettman said.

From the sheriff's point of view, "Rehabilitation is in the mind of the individual. You have to create a deterrent."

And the state is not doing that, Painter said. Because of prison overcrowding, many prisoners serve only a fraction of their sentence — a month for a year.

And Dettman, like the sheriff and the sheriff's Detention Division chief, Capt. Richard Sexton, figures that justice would better be served if the parole system were abolished. The federal government has abolished parole.

"If you get 10 years, you do 10 years," Dettman said.

To further cut down on jail overcrowdeding, the commissioners are considering the PIA program, which would allow a state prisoner to be paroled from the county jail without having to spend one day in prison.

"They need the experience of the penitentiary," Painter argued against the plan. "So they will know whether or not if they want to come back or not."

Because the penitentiary system seems so overly concerned with getting prisoners in and out quickly, "there is no deterrent," Painter said.

"I am philosophically opposed to having people paroled out of county jail," said Judge John Hyde of the 238th State District Court for Midland County. "The responsibility belongs to the state. The state ought to make (prison) arrangements for convicted felons. The tasks should not fall back on the counties."

Hyde fears that once counties start using the PIA system more widely, the "state will become even more reluctant to provide housing and more prison space.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre Jr., too, said he is "philosophically opposed" to the PIA program.

"The state feels it can't afford to build adequate prison space, so they are paroling them (early)," Schorre said. "It throws out the sense of justice from the equation of what we are doing. The sentence, then, become totally meaningless."

Richard Sexton, chief of the sheriff's Detention Division, said that PIA is "another way of getting people through the system."

"The sheriff wants these people, especially the young first-timers, to go down and see what the penitentiary is all about," Sexton said. "Without that trip ... they don't really see what it's like down at the penitentiary. And that's really the bottom line."

County-jail time is considered "a lot harder time" than state penitentiary time because of the severe restriction on freedoms and longer actual time served.

"Building more bed space is a stop-gap measure" for curing the Texas prison problems, Sexton said. "You are not going to stop a criminal by doing that. It starts back in the nursery schools. It starts with the moms and the dads."

Test project ends herbicide danger

REDDING, Calif. (NYT) — An experimental cleanup project reduced a glob of poisonous pesticide in Shasta Lake to traces, all but squelching any threat to public health, officials said.

After a three-day, round-the-clock effort, crews reported that they had dispersed nearly all of about 13,000 gallons of weed killer by agitating it with high-pressure water and allowing it to burn off in the air. The pesticide entered the massive reservoir July 14 after being dumped by a train wreck into a principal tributary, the upper Sacramento River.

"The plume's completely gone," said Herby Bart, chief of hazardous materials for the Southern Pacific Transportation Co., which operated the train. "Public health is no longer an issue."

State officials overseeing the cleanup of one of the state's worst inland environmental disasters were more cautious, but nonetheless shared the optimism.

"It looks as though the threat to human beings is over," Ted Thomas, spokesman for the Fish and Game Department, said Monday. "The cleanup seems to be working very well, and toxicity levels in the lake are dropping rapidly."

Bart said he expects the job of aerating the chemical, using compressors on barges, would end by Wednesday morning. The diminished threat permitted crews working in the lake to shed oxygen masks and other protective gear.

Amid reassuring reports from the lake, the state took a key step toward restoring the fish population in the Sacramento River, a process that could take years.

More than 100,000 trout in the upper Sacramento, a prized fishing destination, were killed when metam-sodium, used by farmers to rid fields of pests before planting, spilled into the river from a punctured tank car. Six other cars and a locomotive derailed while rounding five curves, one of them the sharpest in Southern Pacific's main system.

Toxicity levels in the Sacramento River arm of the lake and in the river dropped sharply yesterday. Tests at numerous points placed the highest readings of metam-sodium at 25 parts per billion — safe enough to drink, according to Bart and state water quality officials. At the height of the spill, parts of the river tested at 97,000 parts per billion.

Witness: Swaggart said Gorman had affairs

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jimmy Swaggart told members of rival evangelist Marvin Gorman's church that Gorman had affairs with 15 or 16 women, a witness in Gorman's $90 million defamation suit against Swaggart testified Monday.

John E. Trammell, business administrator of First Assembly of God in New Orleans, was the latest witness called to bolster Gorman's claims that Swaggart ruined the Gorman ministry with false rumors.

At the time the lawsuit was filed in 1987, Gorman, 58, admitted to a single "immoral act" with a woman. That admission came a few months before Swaggart confessed to an unspecified sin after being photographed outside a New Orleans area motel with a prostitute. A judge has ruled that details of Swaggart's sex life aren't admissible in the trial.

Trammell testified that Swaggart told him and other church board members that he had a list of 15 or 16 women Gorman had been involved with.

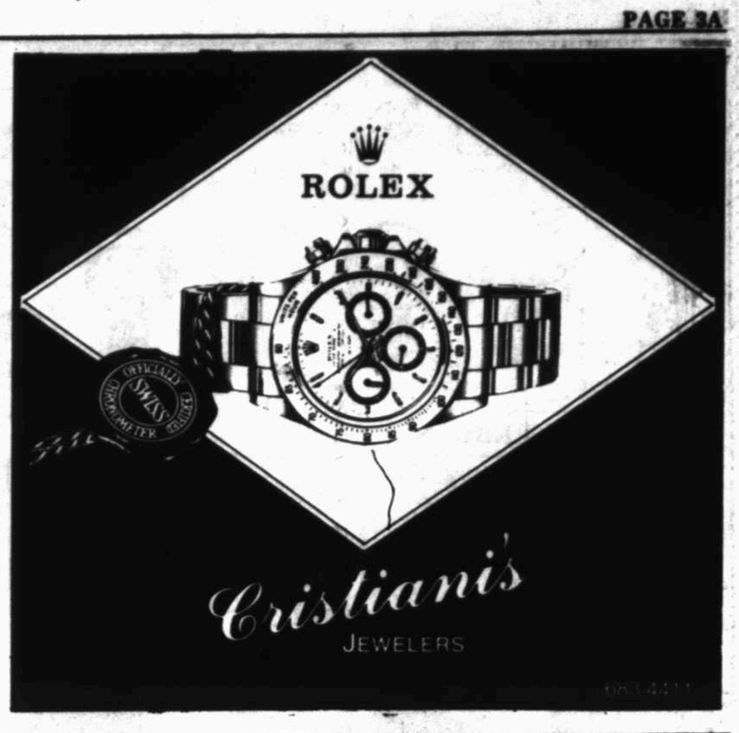

Trammell said he had never seen Gorman with another woman and before the meeting with Swaggart thought he had been involved with only one woman.

LA chief sets retirement date

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police Chief Daryl F. Gates, pressured to step down since the videotaped beating of a motorist by police officers, said Monday he will retire in April.

The tough-talking chief fought back tears and his voice faltered as he told his officers in a videotaped message that he was stepping down for the good of the city and the police department.

Mayor Tom Bradley had urged Gates to resign but was powerless to force him out.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, JULY 23, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Interesting new contacts will have a profound effect on your professional and personal success. Good friends will help you land new clients in late fall. A November business trip could introduce you to someone quite fascinating. Romance beckons. A financial windfall will make the winter holidays fun and carefree. Changing your lifestyle in February of 1992 will bring a deep sense of contentment.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: pitcher Don Drysdale, Justice Anthony Kennedy, author Raymond Chandler, actress Belinda Montgomery.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Avoid making unnecessary disclosures about any personal problems you may have. Your attempts to drum up fun on the social scene will be rewarded by an unexpected invitation. Romance looks very promising.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Think twice before announcing an important decision. Time is on your side. Refuse to cling to memories that could impede your forward progress. Devote yourself to humanitarian causes and a fund-raising drive.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Avoid magnifying a minor problem into a crisis. Your dedication to family and friends will bring a lifetime of joy. Expand your horizons through reading and travel. Unusual experiences lead to fresh insights.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A friend shares a secret that you will savor. Allow mate or partner to set the pace for joint activities. Enthusiasm for a special project could tempt you to make sudden schedule changes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Financial matters come under review. Although it is summer, you still have a case of spring fever! Stick close to home base and entertain those to whom you are indebted for past kindnesses.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You can set the pace in both business and courtship today. A loved one shares a happy secret. Be on the lookout for real bargains. Afternoon favors the solution of a mystery.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Money may be wisely budgeted but still not meet your needs. Look for opportunities to earn extra income. Joint endeavors are favored. Discuss your creative ideas and financial goals with an enterprising friend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You handle a variety of tasks quickly and efficiently now. Considerable progress can be made by the day's end. A love relationship could reach the stage where a proposal is forthcoming. Be sure.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Where money and relatives are involved, use your intuitive knowledge judiciously. Talking over a decision with a close friend gives you fresh insights.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Push ahead with business activities and operations launched last week. Someone who seemed inaccessible may now be approachable. A platonic relationship begins to heat up. Do not make promises you cannot keep.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Business and career affairs may not interest you as much as usual today. On the other hand, socializing will improve your marital prospects. Know what is really important to you in a long-term relationship.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Follow through on any new ideas or instructions. Higher-ups are fair but very firm. Short business trips are unlikely to be worth the time and expense. Use the telephone and fax instead.

TODAY'S CHILDREN will take great pride in their achievements. They work hard and expect to enjoy the fruits of their labors. These Leos' self-assurance is sometimes mistaken for arrogance. Yet their generosity is legendary. They will go out of their way to help anyone in need of a hand. Count on them to succeed at almost anything they undertake. They are born leaders, whose enthusiasm rubs off on their followers.

Opening lead: Jack of ◇ Watching a master technician at work on a bridge hand is like studying an artist applying delicate brush strokes to a canvas. To land this close spade slam, South had to utilize fully the combined assets of the two hands.

With a self-sufficient suit and control in the unbid suit, South started with a jump shift, then pressed on to slam when North's second suit proved to be clubs. Fortunately, South chose to go for 12 tricks in spades rather than clubs.

West led the jack of diamonds, removing any worries declarer might have had about that suit. It might seem that everything hinged on a 2-2 club break, but declarer found a way to improve the odds considerably.

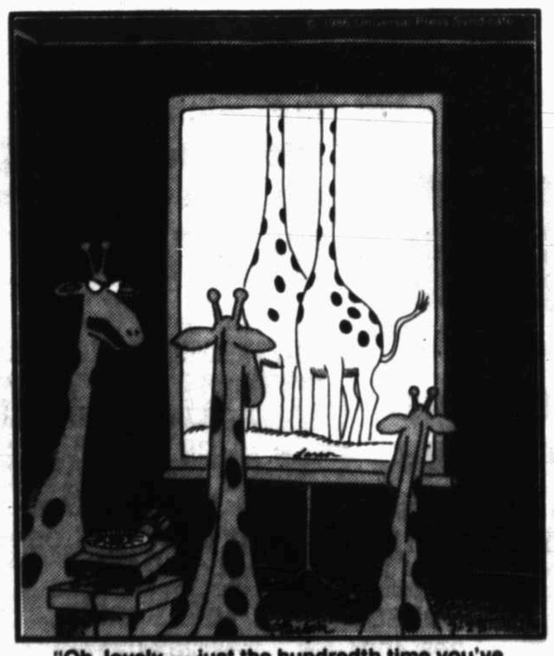

After capturing the king of diamonds with the ace, declarer tested trumps by cashing the ace. When both defenders followed, declarer next went after the heart suit. After playing off the ace and king, discarding a club on the latter, declarer ruffed a heart in hand, and the 4-3 split in that suit meant declarer no longer needed the blessings of Dame Fortune in clubs.

Declarer entered dummy one more time by ruffing the good queen of diamonds, then set up a long heart with a ruff. After drawing trumps, it was a simple matter for declarer to cross to dummy's ace of clubs to cash the long heart. In all, declarer scored six trump tricks in hand and a diamond ruff in dummy, three heart tricks and the minor-suit aces for a total of 12 tricks.

Note that declarer had to draw exactly one round of trumps, to check on the break while leaving a trump on the table as an entry via a diamond ruff. Well played!

Top television stars reveal their first TV appearances

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Dick Van Dyke made his television debut as one of the Merry Mutes. Larry Hagman got to sing on the air only because he was Mary Martin's son. Mary Tyler Moore was the pixie in a Happy Hotpoint commercial.

Their reminiscences of days starting out on the small screen appear in this week's TV Guide, the magazine's 2,000th issue. TV Guide first hit the newsstands on April 3, 1953, with a cover featuring Lucille Ball's baby.

Van Dyke was a member of the Merry Mutes duo in the late 1940s and scored a TV appearance around 1948.

"We pantomimed to popular music, sort of like the Milli Vanillis of our day," he said. "There were only a few 7-inch TV sets in Los Angeles, but we were thrilled. It was a kind of a claim to fame to be asked to appear on television."

In 1955, Miss Moore was Happy Hotpoint. "I was superimposed ice skating on the ice-cube trays or leaping out of the oven," she said.

Hagman said he was asked by a producer he knew to appear on "The Tex and Jinx Show" in New York when another guest canceled.

"I only got on because I was Mary Martin's son," he said. "I had my guitar with me, so I sang a song — pretty badly. I was nervous ... but I saved the day for them.

"But that was my only TV appearance for a while."

SAN FRANCISCO — Joan Baez delivered a somber rendition of "You'll Never Walk Alone" as 13,000 people began a 6.2-mile walk through Golden Gate Park to raise money for AIDS research.

Baez

"Walk on, walk on with love in your heart and you'll never walk alone," the folk singer and political activist sang Sunday at the fifth annual AIDS Walk.

The event raised $2.1 million, said organizer Craig Miller.

"As much as I am proud of this event and all of you for turning out year after year, here's hoping that a 10th anniversary AIDS Walk won't be necessary," Miller said.

Since the first walk in 1987, the program has become the biggest fund-raising event for Northern California AIDS groups.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Home state favorite Sharmell Sullivan, a 20-year-old mathematics and biomedical engineering student, is the new Miss Black America.

Sullivan, of Gary, beat out 22 other contestants Sunday night in the 23rd annual pageant. She succeeds Rosie Jones, 22, of Hartford, Conn.

Tonya Traylor, 29, of Miami, was named first runner-up, followed by Parquita Nassau, 22, of Atlanta, and Tasha Jarrett, 19, of Chicago.

Sullivan, who is entering her senior year at Spelman College in Atlanta, also was named Miss Photogenic by the media. Her prizes include $3,000 in cash and two vacations. She will spend the next year making personal appearances, said pageant spokesman Norman Hayes.

The judging was based on swimsuit appearance, talent and projection, Hayes said. The pageant is conducted here each year as part of Indiana Black Expo.

HYANNIS, Mass. (AP) — Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy, matriarch of the political clan, got an early present for her 101st birthday Monday: a rose-filled park.

Kennedy

The small park, less than a quarter-mile from the Kennedy compound, is named Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy Centenary Gardens.

It holds 44 rose bushes and a plaque reading, "Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy, a woman of valor whose effervescent spirit, compassion, and vision helped shape American history."

The park is a gift from Barnstable, a town near the Kennedy home.

Mrs. Kennedy didn't attend the dedication Sunday but plans to visit when the weather cools, said her son, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Chris Burke of the TV series "Life Goes On" spoke from experience when he praised the 1991 International Special Olympics.

"Special Olympics has been an important part of my life," said Burke, who has Down's syndrome. "Before I started acting, I competed in these games, too."

A crowd of more than 50,000 attended Saturday's opening ceremony. More than 6,000 people from more than 90 nations will compete in the games, which run through Saturday.

During the parade of athletes, rocker Bob Seger walked with the team from Nepal. Seger, known for his song "Katmandu," visited the Nepalese capital for this year. Other celebrities included Prince, Arnold Schwarzenegger and Kirstie Alley.

Temple Mount ruling important

An Israeli magistrate's report on last October's Temple Mount riot won't restore the lives of the 17 Palestinians killed by jumpy Israeli border police. Nor will Judge Ezra Kama's inquiry result in charges against those guilty of lethal recklessness. But his ruling affirms the self-critical vigor of a democratic society — and shames leaders who tried to blame the victims for a tragedy in Jerusalem that need not have happened.

When the clash occurred on Oct. 7, Israeli officials instantly accused Palestinians of deliberately provoking a bloodletting on a site sacred to Muslims and Jews. The extraordinary symbolism assured an international uproar.

Solomon's Temple once rose on the same promontory on which Al Aksa Mosque is now situated, marking the place where Mohammed is said to have ascended to Heaven. And the incident was the deadliest since Israel took control of the Old City and its holy places in 1967.

Israeli officials claimed that violence erupted when a Palestinian mob at the top of Temple Mount hurled stones at Jewish worshipers gathered below at the Western Wall. Two weeks later, a government-appointed commission exonerated the police, claiming they had fired at the crowd because their lives were at risk.

Kama's more exhaustive inquiry, which was mandated by Israeli law, contradicts every point in the earlier version. He finds that the violence was not planned by either side, that the rioting began after a tear-gas grenade, mistakenly dropped by rattled police, rolled toward demonstrators. Then the stones began flying at retreating police and at a dispersing throng of worshipers in the Western Wall plaza, few of whom were injured. When the police returned in force, most of the killings occurred as some police fired at random without reasonable cause.

Because of difficulty in identifying culprits, no misconduct charges will be brought against the police. This scarcely constitutes the vindication government defenders claim. What has been vindicated is the rigor of Israel's independent judiciary.

How much better if the nation's elected rulers had been as willing to search first for the truth, before instantly faulting the world for justly questioning a tragic police blunder on Temple Mount.

Senators continue to receive gifts

WASHINGTON — It doesn't matter if they have been naughty or nice. It doesn't even matter if it's Christmas. U.S. senators are showered with gifts year-round. And even under strict new Senate ethics rules, they can usually find a way to keep them.

Anderson

Since January of last year, the Senate rules have prohibited senators from taking any gift worth more than $100 from someone with a direct interest in legislation — such as a lobbyist who wouldn't mind dropping $100 on lunch. If the gift comes from someone with no interest in legislation — a rare person to find bearing gifts on Capitol Hill — then it must be worth less than $300, or the senator can't keep it.

There are exceptions. Any senator can ask the Senate Ethics Committee for a waiver to be allowed to keep a gift worth more than the limit. The waivers that are granted are a matter of public record. But don't go snooping around Capitol Hill looking for a list of waivers that were denied — the list of gifts that senators coveted but that the Ethics Committee nixed. No such list is available to the public and committee staffers won't even talk about it from memory, nor will they say what percentage of the waiver requests are denied. As far as the Ethics Committee is concerned, a returned gift is not a conflict of interest, and therefore not the public's business, no matter how desperately the senator wanted to keep it.

Here are some gifts that were deemed to be keepers during 1990, the first year under the new rules:

■ General Motors and PBS handed out copies of the PBS "Civil War" series on videotape to all senators and members of their staffs. Each set of tapes was worth about $180 retail, but they were granted a blanket waiver because there were so many of them being scattered around on Capitol Hill.

■ Sen. John Warner, R-Va., got what may be the most coveted gift — four season tickets to sit in the director's box at Washington Redskins games. It amounts to an open invitation from the team for him and any three friends. With this chit in his pocket, Warner could be a political force to be reckoned with this fall.

■ Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, opposed the seven-day waiting period for gun purchases in the latest anti-crime bill, but Gramm didn't have to wait for his own gun. A law enforcement group gave him a commemorative Smith and Wesson pistol worth $285. With that and his $250 cowboy boots, another gift, all Gramm needs is a sheriff's badge to complete his ensemble.

■ Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., was given a bust of himself valued at $2,000 from an Armenian sculptor who wanted to thank Dole for his work during the Armenian earthquake of 1988. The Ethics Committee gave him a waiver on that, and on a $395 raincoat that was a birthday gift from Warner.

■ Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., and his family received free contact lenses and glasses worth more than $900 from an optical shop in Columbia, S.C. Thurmond didn't need a waiver from the Ethics Committee because each of the items was worth less than $300, and because they went to several members of his family. An employee of the optical shop told our reporter Larry Mastbaum that Thurmond gets free merchandise there every year within the Senate gift limits, and that he pays for anything that goes above the limits.

■ Sen. Daniel Coats, R-Ind., and his family received seven passes to the Indianapolis 500 auto race worth $110 each, but because the passes were divided among the family, they didn't violate the Senate rules.

■ Sen. William Roth, R-Del., could have golfed at any one of three Delaware country clubs that gave him free "honorary" memberships last year. A spokesman for one of the clubs, the Wilmington Country Club, said that none of its members who hold elective office have to pay membership dues. The club figures that public officials don't make enough money anyway, and they don't have time to use the facilities very often.

CHARLEY REESE

Graying of America may be temporary

I wouldn't worry too much about the long-range future of Medicare and Social Security. My guess is that the greying of America will be a temporary phenomenon and that the bulk of the baby boomers will die in their 50s and 60s.

Reese

What originally sparked this train of thought was a photograph of about 200 Boy Scouts in an old book printed in the 1920s. In the article on Scouting, there was this one photo of about 200 Scouts running down the beach into a lake for a swim.

Now what has that got to do with the future of the baby boomers? Just this: that picture could not be duplicated today. Oh, you could take a picture of 200 Boy Scouts but there would be a striking difference in the picture. In the old picture, not one of the 200 or so Scouts shows so much as one ounce of fat. Without a single exception, they are all lean and hard-muscled. You could not find 200 Boy Scouts at random in the postwar era that would not include excess pounds and if not that, lack of muscle definition.

Years ago a friend of mine who was a middle school principal, and had been a physical education instructor for 30 years, confided that he had kept records, having given the same physical fitness test to generations of kids of the same age. By the 1950s, the general fitness of the student population had declined so much he had to change the test. Hardly a one could pass the old one.

People today who are 71 and older were born in 1920 or before, and the world in which they spent the first 20 years of their lives — probably the most important physiologically — was vastly different from the postwar world.

For one thing, it was a much more physical world involving a lot of walking and running and manual labor, just to maintain a household, go to school, or to work. In short, there were virtually no couch potatoes in that era. Secondly, a great deal more fresh foods, but in a lot less volume, were eaten because transportation and preservation techniques were not advanced. It was common in those days for cities to be surrounded by a large number of farms whose produce went directly into the city.

When he was a public official in New York City, Teddy Roosevelt routinely walked to work — seven miles one way. A seven-mile walk today is considered an event, a walkathon. Just 2.1 miles is officially considered too far to walk even for a high school student in most school districts. They ride buses.

So most of those who grew up with television, cars, and the wonders of modern food preservation and transportation will likely not reach, much less linger beyond the traditional three score and 10, and those who do will witness the "ungreying" of America.

There is an irony here, for with improved nutrition in the prenatal and early stages, children today are generally taller. Furthermore, we can see from those relatively few who undertake a strenuous fitness program, today's children have good physical potential. A world-class athlete today is stronger and faster and better trained than a world-class athlete of 50 years ago.

But, alas, despite the lip service, the majority of us, both adults and children, are physically too inactive for our own long-range good, as a random glance at any crowd of Americans will reveal.

Therefore, it would be wise if the baby boomers would quit worrying about the future insolvency of Social Security and Medicare or, for that matter, lack of nursing homes and concentrate instead on providing life insurance for their survivors.

One of the most common fallacies is to suppose that what is, is permanent. Just because one or two generations lived longer than expected doesn't mean that all generations will continue to live longer than expected. To check my hypothesis, run an average of the age of people in the obituaries. If my guess is right, the average age people die will start declining within the next five years.

OTHER VIEWS

Government should reinstate IRA benefits

If the government is seriously interested in restoring the nation's economic vitality, it should begin by reinstating the full benefits of individual retirement accounts.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, has introduced legislation restoring the availability of fully tax deductible IRAs to all workers and making improvements in the traditional IRA.

First, it would provide all Americans with the option to choose between a $2,000 tax deductible contribution to a traditional IRA or contributions to a new type of IRA.

Contributions to the new savings plan would not be deductible, but principal and earnings would not be taxed when they are withdrawn. Bentsen's bill also would allow penalty-free withdrawals from all IRAs for higher education expenses, first-time home purchases and financially devastating medical expenses.

Boosting the U.S. savings rate will help lower interest rates, increase investment, increase productivity and reduce trade deficits. Those long-term benefits outweigh any short-term loss of revenue that might result from reinstatement of IRAs.

HIV testing is essential for medical practitioners

Anyone smart enough to become a doctor or dentist is smart enough to know that "invasive" surgical procedures should not be performed by a person infected with the human immunodeficiency virus, HIV.

With that in mind, the federal Centers for Disease Control's statement supporting voluntary HIV testing for such medical practitioners is well taken.

Without constituting an invasion of privacy, voluntary testing would be at once professional and prudent. If — possibly a big if — every doctor or dentist involved with invasive procedures would see it as a professional duty to be tested, and, if testing positive, to stop performing such procedures, the public and the healing professions both would be well served.

No medical professional can practice without insurance these days. Certainly no surgeon can afford to operate and no hospital can afford to provide surgical privileges to a doctor without insurance coverage.

Yet it will take only the threat of large malpractice settlements involving a lack of HIV testing of a surgeon or dentist, or a hospital's failure to know a physician's HIV status, for insurers to say, "No test, no insurance."

AIDS is 100 percent deadly. It is not something that the public, the politicians, the medical profession or insurance companies can fool around with. The issue may not be who is to be tested, or how, but rather who will require the testing, and how soon.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Most congressmen aren't worth their keep

Sen. Robert W. Byrd, the Democratic floor leader, finds it "demeaning" to be treated like a member of a "second-class body." First-class, to Byrd, would mean drawing the same pay as a congressman — $124,000 year.

Murchison

Byrd and his downtrodden colleagues decided late Wednesday night to upgrade their lot in life. They sneaked through a $23,200 pay raise. Whoopee! Soon a senator will earn as much as a congressman. We will have, once more, a first-rate Senate.

Pardon me while I double up with laughter. The Senate is now going to balance the budget? Show the door to special interest? Behave with solicitude for the interests of ordinary Americans? Some of us will believe all this when we see it.

The Byrd salary grab is in keeping with Congress' whole attitude toward itself — an attitude that compels the American people finally to rethink the way their tribunes move and operate. Mostly operate.

Congress is a representative body only in the most formal sense; it is more a profession than anything else, something Sen. X and Rep. Y do, well, because they like doing it; because it fulfills them; and, of course, because the pay and perks are good. Not as good maybe as they'd like, but Byrd is working on that.

Applied to the whole legislative branch the foregoing is of course a calumny. There are decent, honorable members of both houses. They aren't the problem. The system is the problem.

The system exists for the sake of the system. Congress just is. The ends of governance include mostly the care and maintenance of the governing apparatus. What a congressman does to earn his keep is beside the principal point.

The life of a congressman is hard? Maybe so. Alaska Sen. Ted Stevens cites the cost of college education, and of mortgages on two homes: one in D.C., one in the home state. "It's not a pay raise," Stevens says of the $23,200 pay raise, "it's a pay equalization." He fears (fears?) higher-paid House members will resist running for the Senate.

Since $100,000-plus a year, in addition to subsidized air travel, food, parking, staff support and the like, would be considered ample by most Americans, not many citizens shed tears over the privations of their lawmakers.

Their eyes are all the drier when they think of how little Congress actually accomplishes these days. Congressmen own two homes because they think they have to live all year long in Washington. What good does this do? Congress meets interminably, yet can't even balance the national equivalent of a household budget.

The pleas and plaints of our lawmakers grow more and more absurd. If they can't stand the heat, why don't they get out of the kitchen? Who is holding a cocked gun to their heads, making them serve year after year in a body whose occupational conditions depress and wear them down?

Increasingly, the sense of the American people is that most congressmen aren't worth their keep; that we could enhance the quality of legislation, not by increasing, but by cutting their compensation.

If the more Congress earns, the worse it performs, the less it earns the better it may perform. There would seem a pressing need for zero compensation, the same compensation that true, civic-minded volunteers receive.

George Washington and the other national founders, steeped as they were in the Roman tradition of public service, would have understood. Of course they're even deader, if possible, than Zachary Taylor as is the public service ethic in the America of the 1990s.

Shamir: Israel may attend peace talks

JERUSALEM (NYT) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir told Secretary of State James A. Baker III on Monday that because of Syria's agreement to attend a peace conference and negotiate with Israel, his government would reconsider its opposition to the meeting and give Washington an answer soon.

After a second round of talks with Baker, Shamir told his Cabinet that judging from what the secretary of state brought from Damascus, there appeared to be a "revolutionary change" in Syria's position, even if it was for only tactical reasons, Yossi Ahimeir, an important adviser, said.

Later Monday night, when asked if he believed that a peace conference could start within the next few months, Shamir told a reporter for Israeli television that "it's very possible that talks could be held in the framework of peace negotiations between us and the Arab world."

As a result of the recent Syrian, Lebanese and Jordanian commitments to attend talks with Israel, Baker said that Shamir, who only six weeks ago wrote President Bush rejecting U.S. terms for the conference, was now rethinking that position.

"The prime minister indicated that he would respond shortly to our proposals," Baker said, adding:

"I think that this is a moment of historic opportunity. For 43 years, Israel has sought direct negotiations with its neighbors, and it has been right to do so.

"Direct negotiations are the only way to solve problems and the only way to secure peace, and now there is a real opportunity to get to these face-to-face negotiations."

A senior Israeli official said it was quite possible that Shamir would find a way to drop his earlier procedural objections to the conference.

These were his opposition both to the attendance of a United Nations observer and to the provision that the conference could occasionally reconvene after Israel and the Arab countries had begun direct negotiations.

The Israelis have opposed reconvening the full peace conference because they prefer direct talks with individual Arab countries, the kind of forum in which they think it less likely that the superpowers or Arab nations would be able to press them to accept unwanted compromises.

Baker did not appear to achieve progress with Shamir on another issue — a proposal endorsed by Egypt and Saudi Arabia to exchange an end to the Arab economic boycott of Israel for suspension of the building of Jewish settlements in the West Bank.

Two skiers die in avalanche

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — An avalanche roared down a ski slope in northern New Zealand on Monday, trapping eight skiers and killing two of them, police said.

Three of the survivors managed to free themselves from the snow and rocks and helped pull out the others, police said.

The victims were being carried on stretchers down Mount Ruapehu because weather conditions prevented an airlift, said Steve Mastrovich, a police spokesman. The mountain is on New Zealand's North Island.

The avalanche took place on the Tukino ski slope, one of the smallest on the mountain.

DEAR ABBY

Pied piper needs to speak up if she expects to be paid

DEAR ABBY: I am a church organist and have played for many weddings. After being underpaid, paid with knick-knacks from the local gift shop, or not being paid at all because the couple assumed the music "came with the church," I decided to be more direct about my fees.

Van Buren

Now when a couple ask me to play for their wedding, I tell them up front what the cost will be, and what it covers (my travel time, the wedding rehearsal, providing music prior to the ceremony, etc.). I even ask them to please pay me at the rehearsal — because it has been my experience that the best man, or the bride's father, or whoever had my check often forgot to give it to me in the excitement of the wedding day.

My "policy" as helped me avoid much confusion and hard feelings.

Pastors should be compensated for performing the service, and they need to speak up in this regard. I know it's often difficult to ask church members (or non-members) for money, but most folks are relieved not to have to guess at what might be an appropriate fee for weddings, funerals, etc.

As an aside, I was appalled when my own pastor told my fiance and me prior to our wedding that he had been paid anywhere from $10 to $500, and we should set our own payment. He and I were close enough friends that I could say, "My dentist doesn't let me decide how much I should pay him — and you shouldn't either!" (He got the message.) — PAID IN FULL IN KNOXVILLE, TENN.

DEAR PAID IN FULL: Thanks for clearing up a great many doubts in the minds of many. Some pastors and church organists are somewhat timid about mentioning "fees," so I'm printing your very helpful letter.

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to comment about the letter signed "Brokenhearted Mother," who didn't want Grandma, who lives 1,000 miles away, to know that her favorite grandson (age 19) was in jail.

Abby, your advice was the best ever. "Tell the truth, and tell it now," you said. "If you don't, it will be found out." I know. It happened to me.

"Joey," our youngest (age 16) got mixed up with the wrong crowd and had to spend seven months in a detention center. I, too, made up excuses for his always being "away" when Grandma phoned.

I've been reading your column for years, and this is the first time I've seen this problem mentioned. "Brokenhearted Mother" is not alone. — BROKENHEARTED IN TORONTO

Testimony opens Vanover arson trial

■ Midland man faces charge he intentionally set blaze that claimed life of 6-year-old boy.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Testimony began Monday in the trial of a Midland man charged with arson and injury to a child that stemmed from a December 1989, fire that claimed the life of a 6-year-old boy.

If found guilty, Jimmy George Vanover Jr., 28, could receive up to 99 years or life in prison on the charge of arson with bodily injury or death and two to 10 years for injury to a child.

Vanover pleaded not guilty in his jury trial before 238th District Court Judge John Hyde.

The defendant was indicted in May 1990 on the charges after a fire inquest a month earlier determined the blaze had been intentionally set by him.

The residence of Vanover and his then-common-law wife, Vicky Milholland, her son, Derryle Glen Milholland Jr., and their 3-year-old daughter was destroyed in the Dec. 28, 1989 fire. The home, located at S. Midkiff Road and County Road 116, caught fire about 1 a.m.

A 12-person jury heard testimony Monday from a woman who lived across the street from the residence, a passerby who stopped to render help and a firefighter/paramedic with the Midland Fire Department.

Much of their testimony focused on Vanover's behavior on the night of the blaze. The three recounted how Vanover yelled repeatedly for help and attempted to enter the fiery house.

Prosecutor Wayne Frost questioned whether Vanover told rescuers that the boy — who subsequently died — was inside the home. Testimony of the three witnesses revealed that the burned Vanover was sporadic in his mention of the boy's whereabouts.

The girl was outside the flaming house and the mother was not home at the time.

Similar testimony was heard at the fire inquest presided over by Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe, in which a six-person jury decided Vanover set the fire.

A key witness at the inquest, Rick Womack, a fire origin investigator for the State Fire Marshal's Office, said he believed Vanover lit the fire because he was angry at his wife and was then unsuccessful in attempting to quell the blaze.

The couple had been at a bar when Ms. Milholland left because of jealousy sparked by Vanover dancing with another woman, testimony at the inquest revealed.

Ms. Milholland went to a friend's home, and Vanover picked up the children from a babysitter.

During the inquiry, Vanover claimed that after arriving home with the children, he left his stepson home asleep and

Houston corners narcotics market

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Houston has overtaken Miami as the nation's main drug distribution center, according to a top U.S. Customs official.

District Director Patricia McCauley said Friday at a seminar on drug abuse that Houston's ranking as No. 1 in the wholesale drug trade is based on the volume of drugs and money seized in the jurisdiction, which stretches along the Gulf coast from Corpus Christi to Port Arthur, Texas.

Last year, customs officers in the Houston district seized 7,000 pounds of cocaine and $18 million in drug money, she said.

Seizures this year have already reached 9,000 pounds of cocaine, $11 million in cash "and more coming in every day," McCauley said.

The customs figures do not include other busts, such as the Friday seizure of $7 million worth of cocaine and $126,400 in marijuana by Drug Enforcement Administration agents and the Harris County Organized Crime Drug Task Force.

DEA agent Thomas Lentini said 759 pounds of cocaine and 316 pounds of marijuana were found at a "stash house" in southeast Houston.

Rigorous enforcement pushed drug distributors out of their direct routes to Miami, McCauley said.

Now smugglers are moving drugs through Central America and Mexico to the Texas border and on to Houston, she said.

Houston has become the new distribution center for cocaine because the city is close to the Mexican border and because the city is a transportation hub, offering ship, rail, truck and air connections to the rest of the country, McCauley said.

Once in Houston, the cocaine is stored in warehouses, homes and apartments, often under the guise of legitimate businesses, she said.

Besides smuggling drugs in, she said, changes in the banking laws, which require the reporting of large transactions, have forced drug dealers to smuggle large amounts of cash out of the United States.

"Where there are drugs, there is cash," she said. "They have inbound drugs and outbound cash.

"Every day for the last two weeks there has been a major seizure of laundered money and coke," she said.

While large volumes of drugs come in through the Port of Houston, she said, even more move across the Mexican border in cars, trucks and even backpacks.

Sue Snelson, owner of Midland Travel Agency, believes in two things: Community service, and a united world.

"I think we have to prepare for one world. The luxury of isolationism is gone," she said, sitting back in a chair in her office at Midland Travel Agency, which she has owned since 1979.

Her philosophy is rooted in years of public service, both on her own and with her ex-husband, former State Sen. Pete Snelson. Now she'll get to combine both philosophies with her expertise in tourism by spending a year in Warsaw, Poland, helping develop that nation's emerging tourism industry.

"I'll be going with the Peace Corps," she explained, noting that she will be going this November with a group of 40 in what is believed to be Peace Corps' first economic development team. She anticipates working directly with Poland's minister of tourism.

The invitation was one of her own making, she proudly notes. "When Eastern Europe began opening up and took off the cloak of communism

Grease-trap ordinance to go before council

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

The city hopes a new ordinance will put teeth into recent efforts to unclog a sticky problem caused by some Midland restaurants.

City councilmen are scheduled today to review a proposed amendment to an ordinance regulating grease disposal.

The proposal would require restaurants to regularly clean their grease traps and allow health inspectors to close an establishment if violations occur. The proposal, if approved, would go into effect Jan. 1, 1992.

The proposal would have been more stringent if restaurants had not cooperated with the city during a recent campaign to prevent clogged sewers, said Dorothy Palumbo, assistant city attorney.

The problem came to light in January when a group of residents living on Peach Street complained that grease dumped by nearby restaurants was clogging sewer lines.

Raw sewage sometimes backed up in their bathtubs and toilets, soiling carpets and leaving a lingering stench in their homes.

Health officials said the culprits were restaurants along Midkiff Road that either had inadequate grease traps or were dumping grease illegally in sewer lines.

In addition to solving the Peach Street problem by replacing the 6-inch sewer line with an 8-inch pipe, the city embarked on a city-wide awareness campaign.

Inspectors visited restaurants to make sure grease traps were cleaned regularly and grease was not being dumped into sewers.

City officials met with representatives from 12 restaurants to encourage them to use grease-eating enzymes and clean their grease

Judge orders sheriff to release records

■ Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter must provide Dallas newspaper with certain documents under Texas Open Records Act.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

A judge ordered Sheriff Gary Painter on Monday to make available information requested by the Dallas Morning News Co. last October under the Texas Open Records Act.

Visiting Judge Bill Thomas of Abilene heard arguments in 238th District Court and gave Painter 45 days to comply.

Painter, who originally denied the Morning News access to certain information and claimed exemption from the Open Records Act, said Midland County officials are investigating whether to appeal the judge's decision.

Painter, who has already made available more than 250 pieces of information requested by the newspaper, still maintains the withheld material to be exempt. In addition, release of such information could jeopardize operations of undercover work by the Sheriff's Office, he said.

But Judge Thomas ruled that the withheld information was presumed to be public because Painter failed to obtain an Attorney General's opinion as to whether or not it fell under one of the exemptions provided by law.

After the request last October by Morning News reporters Dan Malone and Lorraine Adams, Painter responded with a Nov. 8, 1990, letter offering to "show you what files I am legally permitted to."

The subsequent lawsuit filed by the newspaper contended that "only a portion of the requested documents were provided" to reporters who traveled to Midland last November.

Requested were records related to drug and currency confiscations and investigations by the Midland County Sheriff's Department and

Gov. Richards assails use of 'wedge issues'

■ In a Washington address, Texas' governor challenges Democrats to spurn politics of divisiveness.

By James R. Owen
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Texas Gov. Ann Richards, taking a break Monday from the state's fiscal woes, urged Jewish Democrats meeting here to help rekindle traditional party themes and eschew the tactics of "cynical political practitioners."

In her keynote address to the inaugural conference of the National Jewish Democratic Council, Richards assailed the use of "wedge issues" in modern politics, devices she said divide Americans rather than uniting them.

For example, Richards claimed that Republican candidates have sown racial divisiveness by denouncing "racial quotas" in the Democratic-sponsored civil rights bill pending in Congress despite the fact the bill's language forbids the use of racial quotas in hiring.

Richards, who last year endured a mudslinging Democratic primary and then prevailed in one of Texas' most bruising gubernatorial contests ever, warned that government itself has become a permanent political campaign.

"Instead of using campaigns to define our goals for government, we have seen a trend of using the debate on issues within government to shape the next campaign," she said.

Richards blamed "cynical political practitioners who, because they have no genuine solutions to offer, create division and polarize issues that are intended to drive us apart."

But the Texas governor, speaking to a clearly partisan group, said, "There's plenty of blame to go around. . . . Both parties, the political commentators" all contribute to a trend of "political opportunity."

Taking an apparent potshot at Democratic conservatives and moderates who have focused more on fiscal matters, Richards said the party needs to recapture its meat-and-potatoes agenda, including health care, job training and the environment.

But, she added acidly, "God forbid that we should take on issues that have real meaning in real people's lives, like affordable health care."

At times during her 20-minute talk, Richards sounded like a candidate for national office herself, reminiscent of her keynote address at the 1988 Democratic National Convention in Atlanta.

"Until the Democrats get about the business of talking fundamentally what the problems are in this country — and that is health care, and that is crime, and the problems of the homeless, and fiscal responsibility of the government that is supposed to address it — we will all be whistling in the wind," she said.

House scales back prison-building bill

■ Bill approved late Monday provides only about one-third the beds authorized in a Senate plan.

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas House voted 125-20 Monday to build prison space for 11,300 more inmates, rejecting a Senate plan for 30,000 more prison beds.

The House plan would cost $440 million; the Senate measure, $1.1 billion.

Each calls for financing new prisons through a bond sale, with a constitutional amendment that would require voter approval. Besides prison construction, bond proceeds would be authorized for youth correction and mental health facilities.

If senators do not accept the House's lower figure, a conference committee may be appointed to work out differences between the plans.

The House initially rejected a separate bill needed for the bond program and prison construction to go forward, if the constitutional amendment is approved by voters.

But in a meeting that lasted into the night, the House reconsidered its 79-66 vote against the bill and tentatively approved it, 88-52.

Another House vote is needed on that bill.

"I think the leadership of the House wanted this bill to go to conference so we could move along," Rep. Allen Hightower, House Corrections Committee chairman, said of the vote switch.

The House bill to implement the constitutional amendment contains provisions not directly related to the bonds.

Among them are proposals to allow many nonviolent felonies to be punishable by community service rather than prison time, and to make eligible for early parole certain inmates who are elderly, significantly ill, physically handicapped, mentally ill or mentally retarded.

Hightower, D-Huntsville, said some lawmakers initially voted against the bill because they want more prisons to be built, and others were concerned about being perceived as "soft on crime."

Rep. Sam Russell, chairman of the Criminal Jurisprudence Committee, made the motion to reconsider the vote against the bill.

Russell, D-Mount Pleasant, said he would offer a proposal Tuesday to specify that the nonviolent felonies eligible for community service could be punished instead by time in county jail.

A number of counties already have sued the state because their jails are holding inmates awaiting transfer to state prison.

"I heard that the county people were already breaking their necks trying to say that Russell's out here trying to stick it to the counties again," Russell said.

But he emphasized that community service — with a $5,000 fine — would be an alternative to jail time. The counties would keep the fine proceeds, he said.

"I don't think we're sticking it to the counties at all," he said.

traps regularly. Some restaurants were asked to install larger grease traps.

"A majority of the restaurant owners corrected their problems," Ms. Palumbo said. "There are a few we're still contacting to make sure they keep their grease from clogging the sewer lines. There are a few that are still doing things like dumping the grease into the Dumpster."

Although checking grease traps sometimes is part of restaurant inspections, city codes do not include fines or other penalties. A restaurant could be closed for the problem, but that has not occurred that reason in recent memory, city officials have said.

The proposed ordinance, if approved, would require restaurants to have a portal from which samples could be taken. Health officers would have the authority to inspect a restaurant's grease disposal methods and take samples.

The charge for a laboratory analysis of a grease sample would be tacked onto an establishment's monthly sewer bill. The cost would be between $20 and $50, Ms. Palumbo said.

Grease traps, which the city would refer to as "interceptors," would have to be cleaned prior to 75 percent capacity. Also, restaurants could not use hot water, chemicals or other agents to clean interceptors unless approved by the city.

Restaurant owners also would be required to notify the city of any change in food service operations.

If a sewer line is clogged or damaged because of an illegal discharge, the restaurant could be held liable and taken to municipal court. An establishment could be closed until the problem is corrected.

Health officials have said restaurants here now are inspected four or five times a year.

However, grease traps are not checked that often because the traps must be broken down, a time-consuming task, they said. In addition, it's difficult to pinpoint the source of illegal grease dumping unless an inspector witnesses it as it occurs, they said.

Bill Henkel, owner of Cattleman's Steak House, 3300 N. Big Spring St., said the city needed to put some muscle behind its grease-trap regulations.

"I think you need the ordinance," Henkel said. "You've got to have it or every line in the city of Midland will be stopped up at one time or another."

Jack Burns, assistant public works director, said restaurants citywide already have made improvements in their grease disposal methods.

"We haven't had any major occurrences (of clogging) brought to our attention," Burns said.

He said the problem, until recently, had become so bad that he was considering hiring another employee and buying more equipment to flush out sewers.

Ms. Palumbo said efforts to clean up Midland's sewer lines probably will not end with restaurants and their grease.

The city needs tougher regulations regarding how gas stations and car washes dispose of certain fluids, she said. "Right now the ordinance is not specific enough," she said.

in 1989, I was excited," she recalls. "I immediately began preparing papers on world tourism."

In the papers, she pointed out that tourism is the second largest business in the world, after oil, and in Western countries tourism comprises 10 percent of the gross national product but only 3 percent of the GNP in eastern-block countries.

"Western nations with developed tourism see an average $150 to $200 added to the economy per day by tourists, as opposed to $16 per day in Eastern bloc countries," she said.

These countries may be talking free trade and joint ventures, she says, but carry them out, they need hard currency, "and tourism is the quickest way for them to get hard currency."

Earlier this year — in May — she was one of nine Americans who traveled to Hungary to participate in a free-enterprise seminar through the Rotary's Citizens Democracy Corps. According to Ms. Snelson, the group was already full when she applied, but when she discussed the subject of tourism with them and she was immediately invited along. As part of the trip, Snelson visited Warsaw and met with the minister of tourism, who, enthused over her ideas, invited her back.

Snelson plans to help teach the Poles what tourists want. She said she hopes to help establish training schools, a system to rate their hotels, ways to establish new properties, and a variety of tourism programs such as hiking, biking and camping. And she plans to investigate the country's spas, which she says could be a booming business for the country.

The Poles, she said, have a lot to offer the rest of the world, and are being very progressive and aggressive in their economic development. And, she says, "Since the Poles like people — and they love Americans — service skills will be easy for them to pick up."

While in Warsaw, she said she will have her own apartment. "I'll have my own television. No telephone, but I'll have a television. I'm determined I'm going to live on $400 a month like they do. Some of my friends don't think I can," she says with a laugh, "but I'm determined I will."

In preparation, she is taking Polish lessons and computer lessons. She is raising money to take two computers with her to Warsaw so she can develop a tourism program and put it on computer, one of which she will leave there so they will have a base to build on.

Another problem, she acknowledges, is that Poland is going to have to put itself in the U.S. consciousness as a tourist destination, much like Australia did with its Paul Hogan advertisements. This, she says, will be a challenge since Poland lacks the funding for such campaigns.

She has had a variety of experiences in her world travels, noting that she was leading a tour in Afghanistan when the Soviets invaded in 1979. "The plane was full of soldiers, so I knew what was going on," she recalled. She was with the first group to enter Mongolia when its borders were opened, and she was in Pakistan when Gen. Zia imprisoned and later executed Bhutto.

She is the mother of four grown children, two of whom are lawyers, a third a University of Texas student planning to enter the Peace Corp and the fourth receiving her master's degree in nursing and planning to do missionary work. "Every Snelson child is at least tri-lingual," she says, noting that the four are carrying on their parents' tradition of public service.

As she prepares to hand over the reins of Midland Travel to her long-time staff, Snelson paused a moment to reflect on the task ahead. "There aren't many places I can make a difference," she says. "I can make a difference there."

Judge Lewis reduces bond for man charged with murder

ODESSA — Bond was reduced Monday for a 27-year-old Midland man charged with murder.

Justice of the Peace R.G. Hungerford initially set bond for Randy Earl Green at $100,000. However, 161st District Court Judge Tryon Lewis later reduced the bond to $35,000.

Green was arrested about 8:55 a.m. Sunday in Midland at a residence in the 5200 block of Loop 250. He was arrested in connection with a shooting which occurred in the 300 block of South Tom Green Ave. in Odessa.

One man was killed and two were injured in the Sunday morning shooting which occurred about 2:45 a.m. All victims were transported to Medical Center Hospital in Odessa.

Prior to the shooting a fight broke out between the three men. A black male displayed a large caliber weapon, began shooting and left on foot, police reports said.

Odessan Alvin Dwayne Cornish, 22, — who sustained gunshot wounds to the left arm, leg and mid-torso — was pronounced dead at Medical Center Hospital by Justice of the Peace Manuel Valles.

An autopsy for Cornish was ordered.

Travette Lashon McBride, 20, of Odessa, was treated and released. Andronicus Briggs, 17, also of Odessa, remains in good condition.

A .38-caliber handgun was confiscated during Green's arrest, police said.

records of personnel involved in such operations, according to the lawsuit filed.

In response, County Attorney Mark Dettman wrote to the newspaper that information in personnel files and certain internal department documents are exempt from the Open Records Act.

The Morning News filed the suit as part of an investigation into abuses of power by Texas law enforcement agencies, according to a March interview with Howard Swindle, the newspaper's assistant managing editor for projects.

Some of the information denied by Painter included personnel information on Capt. Clayton McKinney and former deputies Ronald Ray Tucker and Gary Howard, the suit states.

Tucker and Howard reportedly assisted the Sheriff's Office in undercover operations in 1987 as non-paid deputies.

In addition, a letter sent by Morning News attorney Paul C. Watler to Dettman last November maintains that Midland sheriff's officials denied involvement in forfeiture operations in Navarro County, which contradicted documents the newspaper obtained from Navarro County.

Measure the difference at Chaparral Wash and Lube Center, located in the center of the downtown—Claydesta business zone. It is owned by Leon Jeffcoat, a Texas Tech graduate and Midland businessman.

You'll see the difference right away.

The Chaparral Lube Center carries major brands of oil, including Pennzoil, Quaker State and Havoline. Prices for the oil change and lube range from $18.50 to $23.50. For those who prefer using Mobil One, the price is $36.50.

A free car wash is included with each oil change. If you are in a rush or if the clouds are threatening, you'll receive a car wash rain check voucher.

Also included with the oil change is a thorough examination under the hood. Your technician will check your battery, tires, belts and hoses. Your vehicle is also checked for important proper fluid levels, including brake, power steering, transmission and windshield washer fluids.

As a part of this service, these fluids are replenished, if needed. For an additional charge, your technician will install transmission oil, freon, light bulbs and windshield wiper refills.

Checking your car on a regular maintenance schedule at Chaparral Wash and Lube Center is good insurance against expensive trouble in the future. Owner Jeffcoat recommends a minimum maintenance schedule of every 3,000 miles or every three months. A reminder sticker will be placed on the inside of your windshield.

When you visit Chaparral Wash and Lube Center, not only do you get professional service, but you get personal service from people who care about you and your car.

Among them are manager Steve Thompson, lube center technician C.C. Banks, car wash detail supervisor Guillermo Portillo and detail specialist Gilbert Guiterrez. These men, who take pride in their work, have a combination of more than 26 years of experience with Chaparral Wash and Lube Center.

A full service car wash, which includes a wash by gentle cleansers, chamois brushes and soft water is just $7.95. Add wax for just $2.00. Washes for standard vans and Suburbans are $2.00 extra. Vacuuming, hand drying and window cleaning are included in the low price.

Save time while getting your car washed and have your car filled with Texaco gasoline and receive a discount toward the wash. Fill up with more than 18 gallons and your wash is free.

Discover the advantages of a professionally administered detail job from Chaparral Wash and Lube Center. A detail job includes spraying the engine to remove oil and grime, a thorough cleaning under the hood, hand waxing, carpet and upholstery shampooing, interior dash and door treatment and tire treatment. Prices for this service start at $59.00.

For your convenience, Chaparral Wash and Lube Center welcomes Texaco, Visa, MasterCard, American Express and Discover credit cards. Hours are 8 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturdays. Call 682-8013 for more information.

Tsongas woos Texans with economic ideas

The State

AUSTIN (AP) — Democratic presidential candidate Paul Tsongas said Monday that his platform of returning the country to economic prominence could win him Texas in the 1992 election, despite it being President Bush's adopted home.

Tsongas, the only Democrat who so far has declared for president, blamed Bush for the fiscal woes plaguing Texas and other states. The Texas Legislature is meeting in special session to write a budget around a projected $4.8 billion deficit.

"If George Bush is not defeatable, I don't know politics," said Tsongas, a two-term congressman and former U.S. senator from Massachusetts. The lawyer and businessman returned to politics this year after leaving the Senate in 1984 to fight cancer.

Tsongas blamed Texas' economic woes on national fiscal problems, including the growing trade deficit and foreign investment.

'If George Bush is not defeatable, I don't know politics.'

— Paul Tsongas, presidential candidate

"Nobody here talks about a relationship between the budget problems in Texas and the fact that there's a precedent," he said.

"The one person who does have some control is totally removed, and nobody talks about George Bush having a relationship to the economic problems of the country."

Tsongas said he intends to expand the traditional Democratic plank to include a pro-business stance and get the message out that America must restore its manufacturing base to boost a slipping standard of living.

"It seems to me ... that the loss of the manufacturing capability is really the ultimate problem that the country faces, and Texas obviously is a state that is increasingly dependent upon manufacturing and export for its economic livelihood," he said.

During his Austin stop, Tsongas toured the semiconductor consortium Sematech, attended a fundraiser and pledged to participate in a presidential forum planned here in January by the Public Broadcasting Service.

He said he hoped the forum, which is intended to give 600 delegates and TV viewers nationwide an in-depth look at candidates and issues, could help bring the presidential race to a higher plane than the 1988 campaign.

Tsongas cited Bush's Willie Horton ad during that campaign as one way the president has driven a wedge between Americans on racial lines.

"That is reprehensible," he said. "That's the real George Bush. Get past the rhetoric and the 'kinder, gentler' — that's George Bush: 'I will divide this country by race to serve my political ends.'"

The candidate said he supports free trade in North and South America, a capital gains tax targeted at securities and a 3-cent to 5-cent gasoline tax increase dedicated to improving the nation's infrastructure.

"Part of what my candidacy's about is getting people to understand what was given to us by our ancestors is a treasure, and giving that to our children intact is our responsibility. And obviously the Reagan-Bush years is the contrary of that, spending, borrowing, taxation and enormous debt. And I don't think that's generationally moral," he said.

Down Under ruling golf

SOUTHPORT, England (AP) — Half a world away, they struggled together through the junior ranks, traveled together on the Sunshine Circuit and dreamed together of making the big time.

Today, thanks to Ian Baker-Finch's victory in the British Open, the boys from Down Under are celebrating together at the top of the world of golf.

Baker-Finch led an Australian contingent which took five of the top 12 places in the Open. Mike Harwood finished second, Craig Parry was eighth and Greg Norman tied for ninth and Rodger Davis for 12th.

Australians have now won two of golf's last four majors. Wayne Grady won the PGA last year and will be defending his title next month in Carmel, Ind.

"I think the Australians have been playing very well for a long time," Baker-Finch said. "There is great rivarly among all the Australians. We feel we are a force to be reckoned with."

Fittingly, Baker-Finch won his first major title on the same Royal Birkdale course where the most prolific Australian of them all — Peter Thomson — captured his fifth and last Open title in 1965.

Only two other Australians have won the British Open's silver claret jug: Kel Nagle in 1960 and Norman in 1986.

For an Australian, winning the oldest tournament in golf represents the ultimate achievement.

"To us it's THE Open," Baker-Finch said Sunday after shooting a 66 for 8-

■ John Andretti places fifth in Midland-based car, but qualifying act wasn't totally together in the Molson Indy race.

By Deke Houlgate

TORONTO, Canada — John Andretti believes he knows how to race. Now he'd like to get his qualifying act together.

That was one of his post-race comments after the Molson Indy after driving the Midland-based Pennzoil Special from a 13th place start to a fifth place finish Sunday behind his cousin, Michael Andretti, the winner.

"I wish we would have had more time with the car so we could qualify up near the front. That way, maybe I wouldn't have to work so hard," a soaking wet Andretti said after climbing out of the car which is co-owned by Midland's Jim Hall, Jim Hall Jr., Franz Weis and Count Rudy van der Stratten.

Andretti survived two contacts on the 1.78-mile, 11-turn course during the 103-lap race. Either one could have put him out of the race.

Early in the race the Indianapolis driver let Eddie Cheever know he wanted Cheever to move over, accidentally bumping him. Later in the race Andretti was passing Tony Bettenhausen when Bettenhausen moved over into Andretti's lane, spinning him out. Neither incident changed the outcome.

The Hall/VDS crew played a key role in the performance, making an engine change just before the race that may have been executed in record time (1 hour, nine minutes). The car was rolled out onto the grid with scant minutes to spare, and Andretti started it without benefit of running the car to check it out. There was no time left to do it.

The 13th place qualifying position may have resulted from the new team's lack of information about the Toronto circuit, a problem the Midland gang has had to cope with all season.

The Hall/VDS team is competing against teams that have kept "books" on how to set up their cars at each track. The local team has had to start with a blank piece of paper at each venue.

The Molson Indy is a street circuit where no testing is possible until race weekend, a couple of chassis setup ideas

Clay Johnston of Midland slides into second with a stolen base Monday against Farmers Branch second baseman Chris Derrick during Junior League tournament action.

Midland Juniors win tourney opener

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

The boys from Midland American did not know whether to walk or run into their first-round meeting with Farmers Branch in the Section I Junior League tournament Monday at Angels Stadium so they did a little of both.

Three Farmers Branch pitchers doled out 20 walks, and the Americans used the free passes to steal 13 bases in a 19-11 romp that sent Farmers Branch reeling into the loser's bracket of the double-elimination tourney.

The victory sets up a meeting between Midland American and Abilene, which drew a first-round bye, at 7 p.m. today in the winner's bracket.

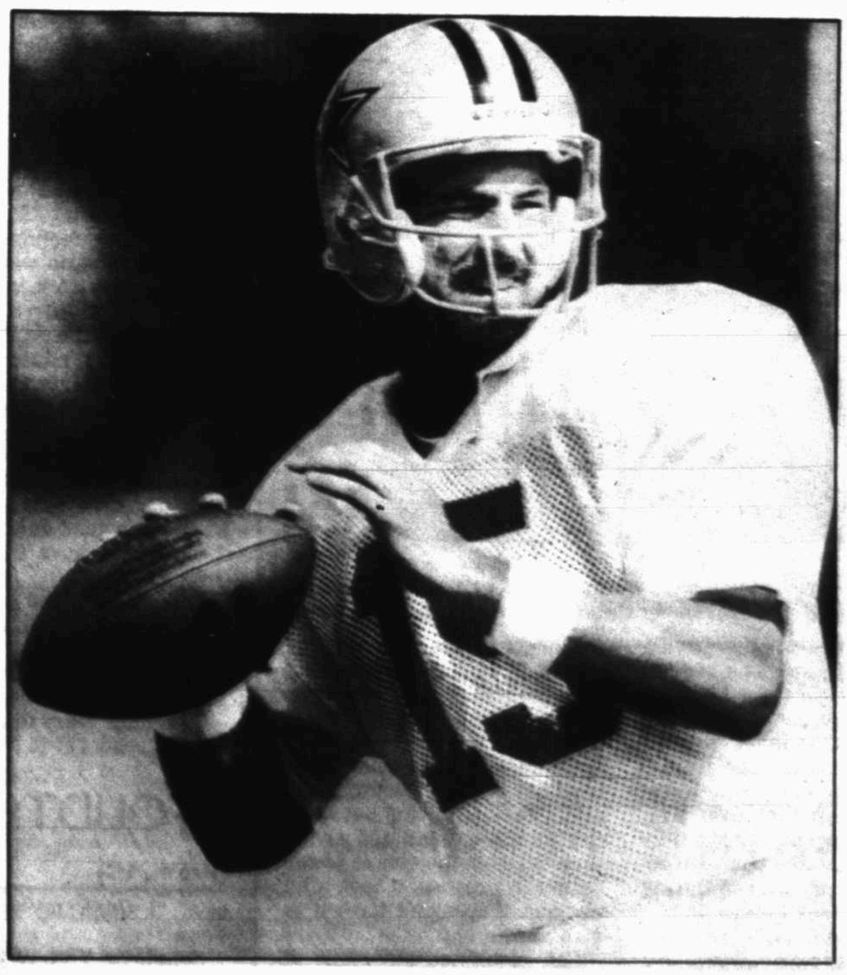

Iowa Park downed Fritch 6-1 Monday and will meet Pecos, an 8-0 winner over Weatherford, in today's other winner's bracket game at 4 p.m.

"I don't wish any bad luck on Farmers Branch, but if you go into the loser's bracket right off then you have to come back and win seven games," said Midland American coach Joe Harper. "I don't know about Farmers Branch, but we certainly don't have the pitching to play seven games in four days."

And it looked as if the Americans would not even have the pitching to win their first encounter as Farmers Branch sent 11 batters to the plate in the first inning and touched

Cowboys' quarterback Babe Laufenberg ...not insurance Dallas is looking for

■ Babe Laufenberg couldn't get the Cowboys in the playoffs when Troy Aikman was hurt, so eyes are now on veteran Cliff Stoudt as the backup quarterback.

AUSTIN (AP) — Cliff Stoudt hopes to become Jimmy Johnson's 1991 insurance policy.

When Troy Aikman was driven into the turf by Philadelphia's Clyde Simmons in the 15th game of last season, the Dallas Cowboys' playoff chances also went south.

The Eagles beat the Cowboys that day, and with Babe Laufenberg at the helm, the Atlanta Falcons destroyed Dallas in the season finale.

Although Laufenberg is in camp, Johnson is running him at the fourth position. Stoudt, picked up as a free agent, was on the bench for the Atlanta game.

Johnson shook the NFL bushes for help and found Stoudt, who has been around for 11 years and spent some of his career backing up the NFL's greatest quarterbacks. Stoudt last threw a pass in the NFL in 1988 at Phoenix.

"He's a pro, a poised guy," Johnson said. "He's been in NFL battles and he's smart. He's also healthy. It's like buying a car that's been in the garage a long time. There aren't many scratches on it, and the mileage is good.

"He throws well, and he's a cool customer. I'm impressed."

Stoudt is relatively unmarked in his NFL career.

As he puts it, "I'm 36, but I'm built like I'm 18."

The Miami Dolphins cut Stoudt last year.

"I was very disappointed, because I didn't get a chance to compete. I'm happy here because it's a great organization. It's made me feel younger being around these guys," Stoudt said.

Stoudt has played behind star quarterbacks like Terry Bradshaw at Pittsburgh and Dan Marino at Miami.

"It was good and bad playing behind Terry, because I never got a chance to get into a game," he said. "Of course, it was great to get two championship rings and watch the rivalry between Bradshaw and Roger Staubach. There hasn't been one like it since."

Stoudt has played for Pittsburgh, the Birmingham Stallions of the United States Football League, the St. Louis and Phoenix Cardinals, and Miami, where he never threw a pass.

His career passing totals are 478 of 810 for 6,479 yards and 60 touchdowns. He's had 26 interceptions and a 59 per cent completion percentage.

Stoudt said he doesn't worry when he hears Johnson say that he might only keep two quarterbacks. Aikman is the starter unless he gets hurt, and the Cowboys drafted Bill Musgrave of Oregon, who has been impressive.

Laufenberg, the nine-year veteran, also figures into the mix but as a 1,000-to-1 shot.

"I've always been a competitor, and I feel great about my chances," Stoudt

NBA leads way for minorities

By Fred Bayles
AP National Writer

With blacks in key management roles, pro basketball gets highest marks for minority opportunities. The NFL's priority for training black coaches earns a B+ for improvement. But major league baseball only musters a C.

Those are the grades major sports leagues get for minority advances detailed in a report by Northeastern University's Center for the Study of Sport in Society.

The report, drawn from league rosters, newspaper articles and other studies, concludes that minorities have made progress on the field, both in pay and in play. But front office advancement, particularly in baseball, has remained slow.

The grades: the NBA gets A's in overall performance and improvement; the NFL gets a B+ in improvement and C+ overall; baseball gets straight C's.

"It is very disheartening to see how little progress has been made in major league baseball," said Richard Lapchick, the center's director. "There are very few blacks holding those positions."

A league spokesman called the report "flawed."

"We have minorities in a variety of positions, from the National League president to secretaries to marketing and public relations people," said Richard Levin, director of public relations for major league baseball.

This is the second year the center issued its "Racial Report Card." Last year it found doors were opening for minorities in the major sports leagues. The latest report was gloomier.

"The 1991 version is less optimistic due to either stagnation or decline in key indicators aside from on-the-field play," it said.

While Lapchick acknowledged minorities do much better in pro sports than general society, he said league officials still have a responsibility to further improve minority opportunities.

"The spotlight is held up to sports because everyone realizes it has the potential to lead the country in terms of racial equality," he said. "It hasn't held that promise after a player's days on the field is over."

The NBA led in nearly all categories of minority opportunities. Seventy-two percent of its players are black, a slight decrease over last year's figure of 75 percent. The league had six black head coaches in 1990-91, in Cleveland, Seattle, Houston, New York, Charlotte and Washington.

Baseball has two black managers, in Kansas City and Toronto. Frank Robinson started the season as Baltimore's manager but was fired and became the Orioles' assistant general manager. Football has one black head coach, in Los Angeles.

Black players in the NFL increased to 61 percent last season from 60 percent the previous year. Major league baseball reversed a 10-year decline in black players with a 1 percent increase over the past year to 18 percent.

In the early 1980s, 24 percent of major league players were black.

The study gave added weight to the hiring of minorities in the front office. The NBA was a leader, with black general managers in Los Angeles, Cleveland, New Jersey, Minneapolis and Denver — a 40 percent increase from the 1989-90 season. Blacks also held top management positions with Washington and Golden State.

Bill Lucas was baseball's only black general manager, working for the Atlanta Braves until a fatal heart attack in 1979. Football has never had a black general manager.

Additionally, the Washington Bullets hired Susan O'Malley as club president, the first woman to hold the job in any sport.

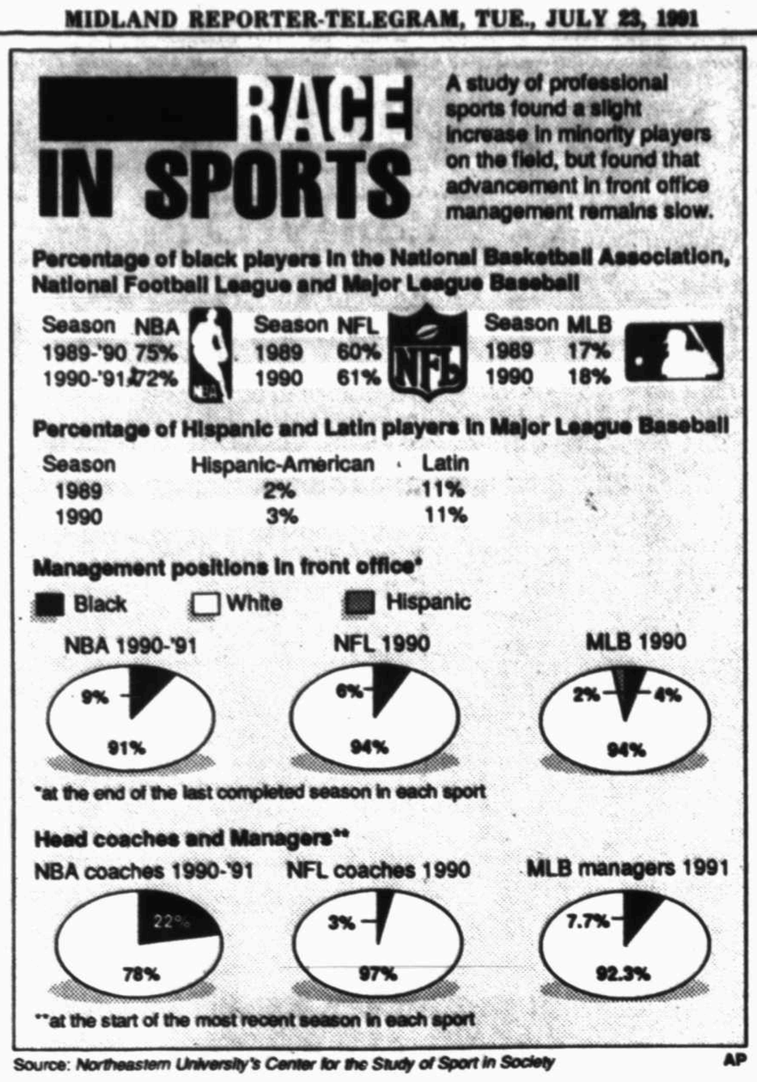

While the number of black NFL assistant coaches dropped a percentage point last year to 16 percent, commissioner Paul Tagliabue got high marks for appointing blacks to key league jobs, including Dr. Lawrence Brown, the league's drug advisor, Reggie Roberts, director of information for the NFC, and Harold Henderson, executive vice president.

Tagliabue was lauded for his decision to take the Super Bowl from Phoenix after Arizona voters rejected a bid to make Martin Luther King's birthday an official state holiday. The report noted programs to counsel players on careers once they retire and the league's priority of minority hiring for the World League of American Football as training ground for leadership roles in the NFL.

While there are no black head coaches in the WLAF, 30 percent of the assistant coaches are black.

And while overall minority management jobs in the NFL dropped a percentage point to 6 percent, blacks moved into key roles with Chicago, New England, San Diego and Philadelphia.

Blacks held 10 percent of the jobs in the baseball commissioner's office last year, the same as 1988 and down from 13 percent in 1989. Total minority employment was 21 percent.

Roof caves in on Astros, 9-1

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Jose DeLeon pitched his first complete game in almost two season and Felix Jose and Milt Thompson each drove in three runs Monday night, leading the St. Louis Cardinals past the sagging Houston Astros 9-1.

Ryan Bowen, making his major-league debut, held the Cardinals hitless for five innings, but still trailed 2-1. Milt Thompson led off the sixth with an infield single, keying a seven-run burst that he capped with a three-run triple off Mike Capel.

DeLeon (4-8) disposed of a number of slumps, giving up seven hits, striking out two and walking three. He pitched his first complete game since beating Atlanta on Aug. 15, 1989, and won in July for the first time since July 31, 1989.

It was also his first victory in six starts and fifth in 38 starts going back to last season. DeLeon pitched the third complete game of the year for the Cardinals, and first since May 18.

Bowen (0-1) gave up six runs, five earned, in five-plus innings. The Astros lost for the eighth time in 10 games.

It was 97 degrees at gametime and Bowen walked two, had a wild pitch and balked home a run in the first to give the Cardinals the lead.

The Astros tied it in the third when Casey Candaele tripled with one out and scored when shortstop Ozzie Smith dropped the ball on Steve Finley's hard one-hopper for an error.

The Cardinals made it 2-1 in the fourth, again without the benefit of a hit, when Ray Lankford walked, stole second, went to third on a fly out and scored on Jose's sacrifice fly.

No pitcher this century has thrown a no-hitter in his big-league debut, and Thompson made sure Bowen, a 23-year-old right-hander, did not when he singled in the sixth. Jose added a two-run double and Gerald Perry had a run-scoring single before Thompson's bases-loaded triple.

Five pitchers have thrown a one-hitter in their first game, with Jimmy Jones the last to do it on Sept. 21, 1966, while with Houston. The closest any pitcher has come to a no-hitter in his debut was Boston's Billy Rohr, who held New York hitless until Elston Howard singled with two outs in the ninth on April 14, 1967.

NL Roundup

Braves 7, Pirates 3

PITTSBURGH — Greg Olson's two-run double and two Pittsburgh errors helped Atlanta score seven runs in the fourth inning, stopping the Pirates pitching staff's 20-inning scoreless streak.

The Braves' ninth decision in 11 games — and their fifth in six games against NL East-leading Pittsburgh — pushed Atlanta to within 2½ games of West Division-leading Los Angeles. Atlanta has gained seven games on the Dodgers since the All-Star break.

Pittsburgh, which shut out Cincinnati in the final 17 innings of their weekend series, lost for the third time in 12 games and now leads New York by 3½ games in the East.

Jeff Blauser, Ron Gant, Otis Nixon and winning pitcher John Smoltz also had run-scoring hits in the fourth off Zane Smith (10-7), who has a 9.82 ERA in two starts against his former teammates this season. Smith allowed six hits and all seven runs, three of them earned.

Guzman beats Clemens, Bosox

Associated Press

ARLINGTON (AP) — Jose Guzman outpitched Roger Clemens and the Texas Rangers beat Boston 2-1 Monday night, the fifth straight loss for the Red Sox.

Steve Buechele, whose wife Nancy went into labor earlier in the day with the couple's second child, homered and scored both Texas runs. The Rangers won their third straight game.

Guzman (5-4) scattered five hits in 7⅔ innings. He walked four and struck out eight in the first victory by a Texas starter in eight games.

Kenny Rogers relieved with two on and two outs in the eighth and retired Mike Greenwell on a grounder. Jeff Russell pitched a perfect ninth for his 20th save.

Clemens (11-7) has won just two of his last seven starts. He lost with a seven-hitter, striking out four and walking four.

Buechele broke a 1-all with his team-high 15th home run in the fifth inning. He hit a waist-high curve 395 feet to left field.

Buechele singled in the first, went to second on Ruben Sierra's groundout and scored on Julio Franco's single.

Boston tied it in the second on Steve Lyons' third homer of the season. It came with the bases empty, just after catcher Ivan Rodriguez picked off Greenwell at first base.

AL Roundup

White Sox 5, Brewers 4

CHICAGO — Dan Pasqua hit a solo home run and Ozzie Guillen had an RBI single in the sixth inning, rallying Chicago over Milwaukee.

The White Sox won for the 15th time in their last 18 home games against the Brewers. The start of the game was held up 18 minutes by rain, and there was a 31-minute delay in the fourth inning.

Greg Hibbard (7-8) gave up all four runs in six-plus innings. Melido Perez and Scott Radinsky combined for two scoreless innings and Bobby Thigpen pitched the ninth for his 20th save.

Bill Wegman (6-4) gave up nine hits in eight innings, and saw his four-game winning streak snapped. He has pitched three consecutive complete games.

Pasqua hit his 11th home run of the season on the first pitch of the sixth inning, tying the game at 4.

Oilers crying for less work

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Did the Houston Oilers exit the NFL playoffs in the first round last season because they were tired? Or were they tired because they lost?

Coach Jack Pardee, a survivor of former Texas A&M coach Bear Bryant's water-less, death-march workouts in Junction, Texas, has an answer for such riddles.

"Everybody gets tired after so many games," Pardee said. "The teams that are winning and having a good time, they don't get nearly as tired as the teams that are struggling."

The Oilers fought to gain consistency last season, working overtime to install the run-and-shoot offense and the 4-3 defense under a new coaching staff headed by Pardee.

The Oilers reached the playoffs for a fourth straight time. Quarterback Warren Moon had his best season, the run-and-shoot led the league in many categories, and the defense showed marked improvement.

But they still bowed out of the playoffs in the first round and some players say the players extended themselves so much in training camp and in lengthy regular season workouts that they were fatigued at the end.

Moon heard as much in the club's first team meeting of training camp at Trinity University.

"There are certain players who felt they were pretty tired at the end of the season, and we want to make sure that doesn't happen again," Moon said. "Camp is where it's going to be at for us this year.

"We want to come out of camp fresh, not leave it all on the football field here in San Antonio."

Wide receiver Drew Hill says there is a feeling among players that less will be better in preparing for the 1991 season.

"One thing is trying to keep the practices down and not leaving it out there on the field," Hill said. "This is Jack's second year, and hopefully he'll take that into consideration. I think if we're fresher, we'll be ready at the end of the season."

The mental work of learning the system is behind them now, Moon said, hopefully leading to less time on the field.

"We know the offense and we had the mini-camp to put in the wrinkles that we wanted so coming in now, you know everything," Moon said. "You just go get you're timing down. It's not a matter of knowing this will work or that will work."

The Oilers may be talking to the wrong coach about shorter workouts.

Pardee remembers Bryant taking the Aggies to dusty Junction for grueling workouts in the 1950s. Pardee remembers stout-hearted players wilting and quitting the team.

He doesn't seem moved by the complaints.

"Training camp is hard," Pardee said. "We do all we can to use the players the best way and keep them out of the hottest part of the day. There's no easy way around training camp. That's one of the hardest work times."

Asked if the workouts would be shortened, Pardee said: "I think they want to have a good team. There's a lot of competition for jobs and I think that's the foremost thing in their minds, to have a good team and to make the team."

Pardee has early-bird workouts beginning at 6:30 a.m. They are designed to avoid temperatures that approach 100 degrees by late afternoon. During two-a-days, they return in the late afternoon.

"We want to give everyone a chance to make the team, and our workouts are designed on plays, not time," Pardee said. "We want every player to get five or six reps to show what he can do."

Moon still hopes for some mercy when the roster is trimmed.

"These are guys that work hard day in and day out," Moon said. "They felt going out there day in and day out and giving their all over the course of the season in practice, it took a lot out and they didn't have it to give at the end."

Can Moon see any signs of Pardee slacking off?

"Well, he gave us Saturday night off, that something we've never had," Moon said.

AUSSIES: Baker-Finch has British Open jug in his hands

under-par 272, two strokes ahead of Harwood. "And to me, the British Open is the world championship."

Several of the current crop of Australian stars began their golfing careers together as youngsters in Queensland, playing against each other in the juniors and then on the local Sunshine tour.

"Most of us in the system grew up together and it was difficult," Baker-Finch, 30, recalled before the Open. "We were all from simple beginnings. We played wherever we could, whenever we could. We started with nothing and we made it.

"It's a nice feeling. When you see one person do well, you think that if he can do it, so can I. You feed off each other's success."

The first of the group to make it big on the international stage was Norman, the glamorous Great White Shark who has won more than $4 million in prize money and millions more in endorsements.

"Greg was the leader of the pack," Baker-Finch said. "There were other good ones, but he was the best. We have a lot to thank Greg for."

Baker-Finch, who grew up on a farm north of Brisbane, quit school at the age of 15 to do a three-year apprenticeship in the Australian golf pro system.

"It sounds crazy to an American to leave school at 15," he said. "But unless you're going to be a teacher or a rocket scientist, everybody in Australia leaves school at 17. Fifteen years ago when I left school, 70 percent of the population left at 15 to have an apprenticeship."

After turning pro in 1979, Baker-Finch hopscotched around the world for nearly a decade to play in Japan, Europe, Scandinavia and the United States.

He joined the U.S. tour full-time in 1988 and settled in Orlando, Fla., with his wife Jennie and daughter Hayley.

Baker-Finch won the Colonial tournament in 1990 and finished second in the Heritage Classic and New England Classic this year.

"At one stage a few years ago he was seriously thinking about getting a club job, he wasn't having much fun," Harwood said. "Obviously he made the right decision to stay with it.

"He's probably been the best player in the world over the last year."

Baker-Finch credits part of his success to David Leadbetter, the man who helped shape 1990 Open champion Nick Faldo's game.

"I felt I had reached a level where I had done as much as I could on just 'feel' alone," he said. "To go forward I had to learn everything I could about my swing."

Baker-Finch also turned to a sports psychologist, Bob Rotella, three months ago.

"He just simplified things about what I was trying to do," he said.

said. "I think my size (6-4, 220) helps."

Stoudt hit 7 of 10 passes for 43 yards in the Cowboys' first intrasquad scrimmage.

He said he believes Johnson is going to need to keep some physical specimens around now that the NFL has relaxed its in-the-grasp rule on quarterbacks.

"It's a little bit more risky this year with the rule changes," Stoudt said. "We're (quarterbacks) football players again this year because the tacklers are allowed to hit us now. I think more teams will be keeping three quarterbacks."

LeMond climbs back into Tour de France hunt

GAP, France (AP) — Greg LeMond shook off a fall, 104-degree heat and aching feet to climb back into contention in the Tour de France.

LeMond on Monday led a breakaway at the end of the 134-mile 16th stage from Ales to Gap. The 30-year-old American picked up the pace in the final three miles to leave behind all but one rider in the scorching heat.

Marco Lietti of Italy won the stage but LeMond was just two seconds behind, letting up at the finish.

"It wasn't a bluff," said LeMond, a three-time tour champion who appeared to be out of the running following several weak performances. "You never know in cycling — you can be bad one day and two or three days later feel very good."

The main pack, which included overall leader Miguel Indurain of Spain, came in about 28 seconds behind LeMond.

Indurain still holds a three-minute lead over France's Charly Mottet. LeMond is still fifth overall, just 4:42 behind, with six stages remaining.

Tuesday's stage is the rugged climb to l'Alpe d'Huez, where LeMond has done well in past races.

LeMond was second in the Alpe d'Huez stage last year but gained considerable time over Claudio Chiappucci, who was leading at the time.

"I felt better, but I don't know if I'm well enough to ride with the best tomorrow," LeMond said. "It will be a very intense race. My favorite is Chiappucci."

LeMond, who beat Indurain by almost 12 minutes in the same stage in 1990, spent the weekend avoiding reporters curious about a blood test that revealed a high white blood cell count.

"I wasn't alarmed," he said. "I told one person about it, then everybody started talking about it."

But he was clearly exhausted during the tough stages in the Pyrenees mountains.

"If things would have gone on like yesterday, I'm not sure I would have finished," LeMond said. "If there had been a mountain stage the day after or even yesterday I would have easily lost 10 or 15 minutes."

"I'm back in the race in my head," he said. "If I have good legs, psychologically I am ready to race to death."

Before the start of Monday's stage, team director Roger Legeay confirmed published reports that LeMond was feeling feverish and had swollen feet.

Prices retreat

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices on Monday retreated from last week's post-Gulf War record as an upcoming U.N. decision on whether Iraq can export oil again convinced traders to take profits.

The August contract for West Texas Intermediate settled at $21.72 a barrel on New York's Mercantile Exchange, down 44 cents from Friday when it reached the highest level since the Gulf War's final days.

The market expected the Security Council, in a vote set for Wednesday, to decide to let Iraq resume limited selling of oil, which has been barred from export following Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait.

Iraq regains oil export capability

■ Iraq could export about 1 million barrels of oil a day and U.N. officials think it should be allowed so the Iraqis can buy food and medicine.

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq's ability to pump oil has risen to about 40 percent of its pre-war level and it now has the capacity to export 1 million barrels a day, the Middle East Economic Survey reported Monday.

U.N. officials recently suggested Iraq be allowed to export some oil so it could raise money for medicine and food and for the U.N. effort to destroy its weapons of mass destruction. But the United States previouslty opposed lifting economic sanctions as long as Saddam Hussein remains in power.

The oil industry newsletter quoted a U.N. report as saying repairs to Iraq's war-ravaged oil installations had raised production capacity to 1.45 million barrels a day. Iraq was capable of pumping 3.5 million barrels a day before the Gulf War, although it was actually producing just over 3 million.

Oil is Iraq's primary export, and it could earn an estimated $5.5 billion in a year at current prices by exporting 1 million barrels of oil a day.

The newsletter said that even if Iraq was allowed to sell oil, "which is far from certain, it would be some time before actual exports could begin."

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said July 15 that Iraq should be allowed to export oil for a limited period so the United Nations could be paid for destroying Iraq's weapons of mass destruction under the terms of the U.N. cease-fire resolution that ended the Persian Gulf War.

On the same day, a U.N. enovy, Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, urged that the ban on oil exports be partially lifted so Baghdad could earn revenue to buy urgently needed medicine and food. Sadruddin led a U.N. team that studied the economic needs of Iraqis.

Iraq has oil reserves of some 100 billion barrels, second only to Saudi Arabia.

The Middle East Economic Survey quoted Sadruddin's report as saying the Iraqi Oil Ministry believes it can increase production capacity to 1.6 million barrels a day by the end of the year and restore full production by mid-1992 if it can obtain the equipment needed.

Stock scandal

Top Nomura officials resign from firm

TOKYO (NYT) — Eager to contain a scandal over Japanese financial market practices, both the chairman and vice chairman of Nomura Securities Co. resigned Monday, trying to check the growing damage to the world's largest brokerage house.

With tears in his eyes, Setsuya Tabuchi, Nomura's chairman, provided no details of what Nomura had done wrong, gave only a vague confirmation that it had breached securities laws and said little about helping investigate the scandal.

"The role of the financial markets in Japan has changed, but our top management has not been able to handle the changes sufficiently," said Tabuchi, a powerful man known for his high-level political connections.

The surprise announcement was another example of the Japanese preference for symbols and rituals over investigations and rooting out the kind of wrongdoing exposed in the scandal.

Nomura, which has a large operation on Wall Street and is the major shareholder in Wasserstein, Perella & Co., the New York merger advisory firm, has confirmed that it improperly compensated some big clients for stock market losses.

It has also said that it provided more than $100 million in financing to a well-known organized-crime figure and then helped him execute an apparent share-manipulation scheme.

Although Nomura intended the action as one of penance, there was an edge to the late-afternoon announcement. The vice chairman, Yoshihisa Tabuchi, had resigned from the firm's presidency one month ago in an earlier attempt to quell the storm of controversy. He thus became the first Japanese executive known to have resigned from his company twice.

The two Tabuchis are not related.

Both executives will remain advisers to Nomura, a position of honor.

Nomura was joined in the compensation scheme by nearly three dozen other top Japanese brokerage houses, a sign that the practice, although improper because it is fundamentally unfair to smaller investors and foreigners, was generally accepted here.

"People are realizing that this was a systematic, well-understood business practice in Japan," said an American working at the New York office of a big Japanese brokerage house.

Bidding war erupts for Pan Am assets

NEW YORK (AP) — TWA and American Airlines on Monday upped the ante for Pan Am, offering $310 million for key assets and routes that would leave Pan Am a substantial Latin American presence but little else.

The proposal seemed likely to accelerate a bidding war for Pan Am, once the world's leading commercial aviator but now bankrupt. The company has been trying to sell itself in pieces to satisfy creditors.

The offer could disrupt Atlanta-based Delta Airlines' ambition to land in the "super-carrier" category now dominated by American Airlines and United Airlines.

In addition, United Airlines has proposed buying Pan Am's valuable Latin American routes. Northwest Airlines wants to buy some routes as well.

Delta spokesman Neil Monroe wouldn't say if Delta, which has offered $260 million for the same package sought in the TWA-American proposal, would try to beat it.

But some doubted the seriousness of the offer, formally offered by Carl Icahn, Trans World Airlines Inc. chairman. Icahn's airline has been flirting with bankruptcy after defaulting on debt payments and money owed to aircraft lessors.

The airline hopes to repurchase a big chunk of debt at a discount. TWA said Monday that "substantial progress" has been made with creditors and it anticipates completing negotiations with them by the end of the month.

"You have to figure creditors and aircraft lessors are not going to figure kindly to buying another sick airline, even with half the money coming back from American," said Paul Turk, an airline analyst with Avmark Inc.

Pan Am and Delta previously said they had all but finished an agreement that they were prepared to file in bankruptcy court. But Monday Pan Am confirmed receiving the TWA proposal with a statement that said it would give equal consideration to all offers.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Treasury 'zeros' relatively safe investment

By Bill Doyle

Q. A couple of my certificates of deposit are coming due and I am considering buying U.S. Treasury zeros. But I don't know much about them. Are they safe? Is their interest rate fixed? And are they liquid?

Doyle

A. "Zero" is the nickname for zero-coupon bond. That type of bond is originally issued and sold to investors at a "deep discount" way below face value. It is redeemed at face value on its maturity date. Unlike most bonds, which pay interest semiannually, a zero does not distribute interest until it matures. The difference between the issue price and the higher redemption price is interest.

Zero Treasuries first appeared on the scene when brokerage houses separated interest payments from principal of U.S. Treasury bonds and notes, then sold the interest and the principal individually as zero-coupon bonds.

Those brokerage-created zeros have monikers such as CATS, for "Certificates of Accrual on Treasury Securities," and TIGRs, for "Treasury Investment Growth Receipt." The Treasury securities behind those feline-sounding investments are held by a bank trustee.

Since 1985, the U.S. Treasury Department has been selling its own version of zeros called STRIPS, for "Separate Trading of Interest and Principal of Securities."

As for safety, there is a slight difference between the two types.

STRIPS are directly backed by the full faith and credit of the U.S. government. Brokerage-created Treasury zeros have indirect government backing. However, assuming the zero is held until maturity, the only risk involves the bank trustee going bust.

Interest on Treasury zeros is set at the time each is issued and never changes. That's a big attraction. Even though the owner of a zero does not collect interest periodically, interest builds up on the bond — always at the original rate. The bond owner needn't worry about reinvesting interest.

Treasury zeros are very liquid and can easily be sold in the marketplace at prices primarily determined by interest rates at the time of the sale — up when rates fall and down when rates rise. But market prices of zeros swing much more wildly than prices of bonds paying periodic interest.

Q. Because I have a "Treasury Direct" account, I purchase newly issued U.S. Treasury bonds, notes and bills from the Federal Reserve Bank. Can I buy zero-coupon Treasury bonds the same way?

A. No. You must make those purchases through a brokerage firm or a bank.

The Treasury Department regularly auctions off bonds, notes and bills to all buyers — financial institutions, such as brokerages and banks, and to individual investors. But STRIPS are a different story. They are marketed to investors only though brokerages and banks.

Q. I was seriously considering buying zero-coupon bonds until being informed I would have to pay income tax on the interest that supposedly "accretes" on the bonds. Exactly what does that mean?

A. It's another way of saying interest accumulates on the bonds. The Internal Revenue Service also refers to it as "imputed interest." That's interest you have not collected yet but eventually will — if you hold the zero-coupon bond until it matures and the bond's issuer does not default.

Indeed, you are required to pay income tax annually on accreted interest unless your zeros are municipal bonds, the interest from which is not subject to income tax, or if you hold zeros in a tax-deferred arrangement such as an individual retirement account.

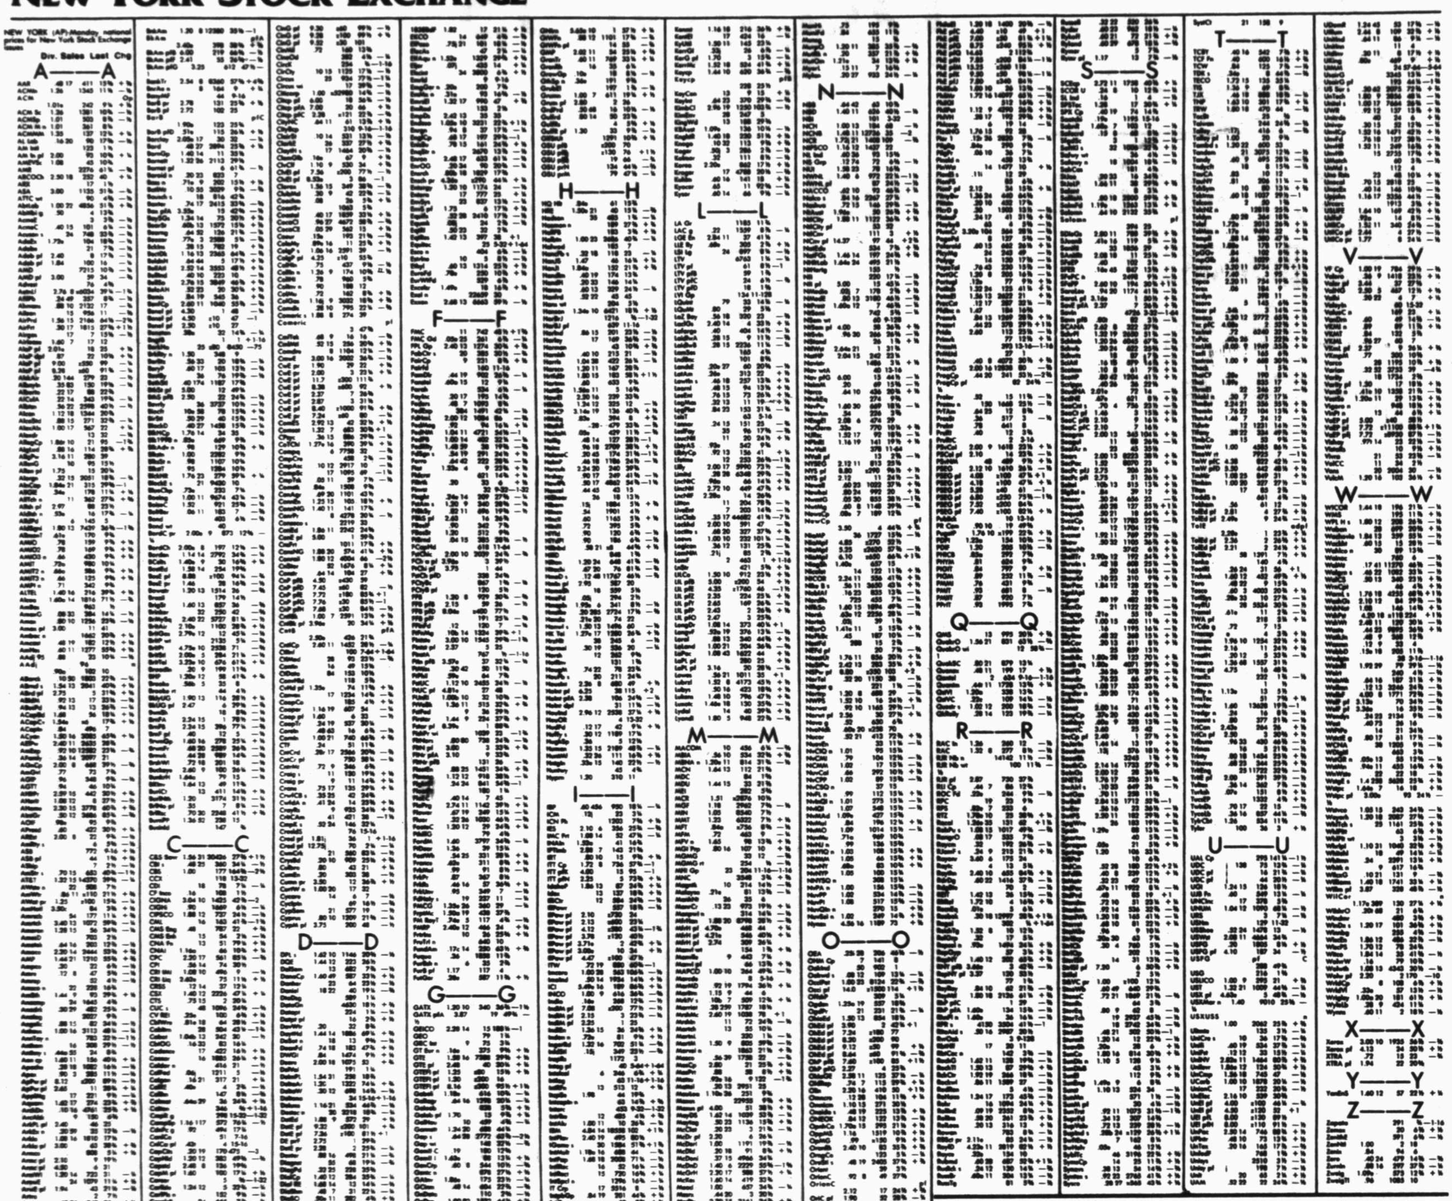

In the latter case, the tax bite is put off until withdrawals are made from your tax-deferred account.

New Fed rules allow companies to reject disabled

WASHINGTON (NYT) — In a setback for the disabled and their advocates, the Bush administration says it will allow employers to reject job applicants with disabilities if the companies believe that the applicants' conditions might pose a threat to their own safety.

But under the federal regulations, which are scheduled to be published Friday in The Federal Register, the employers must show there is a "high probability" that the applicants' physical or mental conditions would place them in jeopardy.

"It has to be a direct threat to the worker, not a hypothetical threat or the chance of a threat" said an administration official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified.

For example, if the job involved work near power saws, the regulations would permit a sawmill or a carpentry business to reject a worker who has narcolepsy, the sudden and uncontrollable desire for sleep.

But a law firm would not be permitted to reject an applicant with a history of mental illness by arguing that the job stress would cause a recurrence of the condition.

Advocates for the disabled denounced the plan, saying that under the regulations it would be easier for businesses to avoid hiring the physically or emotionally impaired.

"It's voodoo civil rights," said Charles D. Goldman, a Washington lawyer who has written extensively on the rights of the disabled. "The only determination an employer needs to make is whether the person is qualified to do the job. The employer gets into real murky ground when he starts playing big brother."

The guidelines, written by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, are intended to spell out how employers must comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act, a far-reaching civil rights measure passed by Congress last year.

The law bars discrimination on the basis of physical and mental impairment in employment, public accommodations, telecommunications services and transportation. The rules will begin to take effect in January of 1992.

While the regulations are intended to clarify the law, questions remain on the extent of a disabled worker's rights and on the limits of an employer's responsibilities under the act. Many of those questions will be answered on a case-by-case basis as the federal courts hear job discrimination suits under the law, signed a year ago Friday by President Bush.

A 1973 law that banned job bias on the basis of disability for employers that receive federal money resulted in a number of lawsuits addressing the question of whether an employer could take the safety of a worker with a disability into consideration in personnel decisions.

In 1989, for example, a federal appeals court ruled that the FBI did not have to hire an applicant with diabetes as an agent, declaring that the possibility of insulin shock while on duty made him dangerous to himself and to the public.

When the administration published its preliminary regulations in March, employers would have been permitted to reject applicants or dismiss workers whose disabilities posed a threat to the health and safety of their co-workers.

At the time, advocates for the disabled said they could accept that principle, but they protested another provision in the guidelines that permitted the rejection or firing of the disabled who are qualified, but whose disabilities are believed to pose a danger to themselves.

These advocates said such a provision would allow employers to reject disabled people on the basis of stereotypes and prejudices — in particular people with speech impediments, cerebral palsy, AIDS, mental retardation, mental illness and other conditions that are not well understood by the public. Despite protests from advocates, the new provision was retained in the final regulations.

"It's the reason that has historically been given for excluding persons with disabilities," said Arlene Mayerson, directing lawyer with the Disability Rights Education and Defense Fund. The Berkeley, Calif.-based group acts as a lobby and litigator on behalf of disabled people.

Evan J. Kemp Jr., chairman of the commission, acknowledged that the provision was "offensive."

Breeder pursues odd gene

Tom Ferrier, founder of Ark Exotics, keeps a tight rein on one of the tigers he using to try to breed a rare white tiger. Ferrier has 16 tigers on his breeding ranch at Seymour.

SEYMOUR — Horse breeders dream of the Kentucky Derby, but Tom Ferrier of Seymour is after even bigger game.

Ferrier is hunting the white Bengal tiger, although the only weapon he carries in the "hunting grounds" next to his home is a small tranquilizer pistol.

In 14-foot-tall cages, the seeds of his prey pace restlessly — 16 tigers, several of which carry the elusive white gene that Ferrier hopes to breed pure.

"At one point, it was thought that the true white Bengal tiger was extinct, but they started showing up again about 20 years ago in India. Now, there are about 200 whites in the world, and four that run pure white," Ferrier said as he watched the big cats in their rapid, often violent breedings.

Productive mating may take hundreds of attempts, and even then success is not assured. In rare cases, the dominant male may attack the less-than-submissive female, killing what might have been the breeder's prime choice of matings.

Cubs, if born, may not inherit the recessive white trait, which can be as unpredictable as the tiger's own actions.

For Ferrier, the hunt is a challenge and a labor of love, although success can bring sizable profits. A white tiger cub is worth at least $50,000, an adult about twice that much, he said.

"I didn't have any idea about white tigers when I started this, five years ago in September," he said.

After closing his bridge-building business, Ferrier had been working as a farm laborer and was looking for a source of extra income that wouldn't conflict with sporadic jobs.

"I thought I'd get into preaching — I entered the ministry in the '70s, after a motorcycle left me dead on the highway ... and the Lord brought me back. But that was about the time when the Bakers and Swaggarts fell. People weren't too much on trusting new ministers," he said.

A spot job moving dirt for a woman in Dallas led to a trade for a Rottweiler dog, and his thoughts turned to becoming a dog breeder. "I'd had little dogs before, but I learned real quick that these were different," he said, joking.

Ferrier and a nephew, Jay Riggs, headed to a course on dog handling. "My nephew had always wanted a lion, and when we got there, the instructor had a bear and needed some help; so we pitched in. On the way, we stopped in Conroe to see a lady we'd heard about raising lions and tigers. We asked about cubs, but she didn't have any," he said.

When she called a month later, Ferrier's nephew was adamant. "I prayed hard about it, because I thought, no way I want to raise lions. I thought it was crazy. But every time I prayed, (God) said 'yes.' I gave every excuse I could think of, and no matter what, he said 'yes.'

In between jobs, Ferrier makes the monthly trip to northern Oklahoma in an old milk truck to pick up tons of chicken and beef that, for one reason or another, will not pass inspection for human consumption.

While few of Farrier's tigers are considered "tame," some can be led on a leash, provided the handler is wary and understands the animal's body language.

Hawaii health plan shows U.S. a way to cover nearly all

HONOLULU (NYT) — Residents of the Hawaiian Islands, more than 2,400 miles from the American mainland, have long complained that they are left out of major debates that ripple across the nation.

But on at least one big issue — how to provide adequate medical care to all citizens — health policy analysts say Hawaiians are well ahead of the rest of the country, and their state is being studied in Congress and by other state governments as a potential national model.

The 50th state is the only one that can boast of near-universal health care. Under a 17-year-old program that requires employers to pick up the cost of insurance premiums for any person working more than 20 hours a week, all but about 5 percent of Hawaii's 1.1 million people have some kind of medical insurance.

Under a 17-year-old program that requires employers to pick up the cost of insurance premiums for any person working more than 20 hours a week, all but about 5 percent of Hawaii's 1.1 million people have some kind of medical insurance.

And most of the others — the unemployed, seasonal workers and those whose job does not include insurance — are taken care of by state medical subsidies.

In all, 98 percent of Hawaiians have some kind of medical insurance. By contrast, in the country as a whole, 14 percent of the population, or 34 million people, lack medical insurance and get no government subsidy. Most are wage earners who work for small or low-paying businesses.

Perhaps most surprising to many experts, the near-universal access to health care here has not led to soaring costs. While Hawaii ranks near the top of the states in cost of living, its average health insurance premium is near the bottom. For example, a family in Hawaii pays a premium of $263 a month, nearly half that of other states.

To be sure, Hawaii differs from the other 49 states in many important ways. The population is small, the climate is healthful, and the state has a long tradition of providing generous benefits to workers, most of whom belong to unions.

Even during the current recession in tourism, Hawaii has the lowest unemployment rate of any state, 2.8 percent; its insurance companies have to pay little compared to other states for hospital care for the unemployed.

Its insurance industry is dominated by a few big companies, which can exercise strong bargaining power to keep doctors' and hospitals' fees down. It is in the middle of an ocean, so businesses that might object to paying health care costs — up to $1,000 a year per employee — cannot simply move across a state line.

But while these oddities help explain Hawaii's success in keeping rates low while providing care to nearly everyone, advocates here and experts on the mainland say the state has much to contribute to the current national debate.

"One criticism I hear is that we are different, as if we're all sipping mai tais on the beach and dancing in coconut shell bras," said Dr. John Lewin, Hawaii's director of health. "We have a lot of poor people in Hawaii. We have all the health problems of the rest of the states. But what makes us different is that we decided to do something about it."

Lewin, energetic and outspoken, has become a sort of evangelist for universal health care, which he calls a basic human right. He has spoken to numerous congressional officials and to leaders in states like California and Washington, where similar plans are under discussion.

The thrust of his argument is that the states can provide health insurance for all citizens and keep costs down if preventive care is emphasized, and if there is competition among the major insurance companies to go after the uninsured.

Dr. Karen Davis, a professor of health policy at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, agrees. "What Hawaii has demonstrated, to a lot of people's astonishment," she said, "is that they have covered all their people while minimizing economic disruption."

By contrast, Massachusetts's plan for universal health insurance, also considered a pioneer of sorts, has stalled amid concern over the state's soured economy. Small-business owners, who starting in January would be required to offer employees insurance or pay the state to do it, are lobbying for a delay or outright repeal of the plan.

The Hawaii plan took effect in 1974, when much of the country was in a severe recession. The world of health care was much different then. For one thing, mandatory insurance coverage by employers was not considered particularly radical.

Kuwait economy remains a question mark despite some activity

KUWAIT CITY — At the Shamlan docks on the edge of Kuwait's business district, the traditional wooden dhows that Persian Gulf fishermen and merchants have sailed for centuries cram the piers every day, bringing fresh fruit, vegetables and fish to a market thronged with eager customers.

But across town, at the immense, modern commercial port of Shuwaik, the piers are empty, the cranes are still, and the harbor is desolate, awaiting the completion of dredging work to reopen the port. It was shut when the Iraqis sank vessels in the channel and wrecked the port's heavy machinery during the Persian Gulf war.

The striking contrast between the two ports is a telling one, for there are two views to be taken of the Kuwaiti economy five months after the end of the gulf war and nearly a year after the Iraqi invasion.

In ways the country is a beehive of activity, humming with the entrepreneurial opportunism of the street markets and witnessing a substantial boom in construction work as the government tries to rebuild Kuwait's shattered physical structure.

But in other ways Kuwait is still in economic hibernation, its workforce depleted, its smaller enterprises looted and shuttered, and its commercial life in a state of suspended animation.

A Western ambassador, asked what the country's biggest problem now is, answered: "The one that bothers me the most is the economy. If you have a stumbling, bumbling approach to the economy, I worry that you could have a lack of confidence."

A Kuwaiti businessman whose factory was destroyed by allied bombing but who now has products back on the market, said aimless government policies were the biggest obstacle he faced.

"It's a lack of decision making," said the businessman, who asked not to be identified. "You are on your own. You have to take risks and work without any shoulder to lean on. There is nobody to reassure us."

To revive consumer confidence, there is talk of the government's making payments of up to $75,000 to each household, although no final decision on the size of the handout has been made.

In ways the country is a beehive of activity, humming with the entrepreneurial opportunism of the street markets and witnessing a substantial boom in construction work as the government tries to rebuild Kuwait's shattered physical structure.

The government has already declared that it will forgive outstanding consumer loans worth a total of more than $4.5 billion, including money borrowed to buy homes, a boon to those who were deep in debt at the start of the war.

But that did nothing for people who had paid cash for their property or paid back their mortgages, and it is still uncertain how much compensation will be paid for physical losses suffered by individuals and small businesses.

There are signs that commercial life is rebounding. For every shop that is still shuttered or looted on the main streets, another offers consumer goods like cameras, perfumes and clothing.

And the big hotels are full of foreign business executives seeking deals to sell computers to schools or environmental expertise to the oil industry.

But much of the boom in the economy seems to be a temporary phenomenon made of two simple ingredients: the quick infusion of money and manpower dedicated to turning on the power and water, repairing damaged buildings and stopping the oil fires; and the rush of spending to replace goods stolen by the Iraqis, like automobiles for consumers and computers for businesses, schools and government.

Maj. Gen. Patrick J. Kelly, the U.S. officer who has been leading the Defense Reconstruction Assistance Organization, a U.S. project that organized the initial restoration of basic services like power and water to the city, said this work would be completed by the end of the year, by which time $400 million will have been spent.

Kelly's office, which is part of U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, has been hired by the Kuwaiti Government to manage several large reconstruction projects temporarily.

U.S. engineering companies like Brown & Root International and Blount Inc. are playing a big role in this effort, as are large Saudi and Kuwaiti construction companies. All of them rely heavily on Filipino and other Third World laborers.

But Kelly added that turning the utilities back on and repairing the damage to public buildings like schools and government offices is only the first step in a task that the Kuwaitis will have to carry on for themselves.

"Small industry has not begun to rebuild," the general said. "Large industry has not begun to rebuild. Private homes are not being rebuilt."

"That effort has not clicked. Because they are waiting for the fiscal and monetary policy," he said. "There is no borrowing going on, no investment going on."

In the small commercial sector, much of the resurgence of business seems to be a result of the efforts of opportunistic merchants who are putting little investment into the economy.

Some of them work in the huge open-air markets where peddlers are turning quick profits providing basic goods like carpets and furniture to Kuwaitis returning to their homes.
