Possible defense

LOS ANGELES — Lawyers for O.J. Simpson will probably claim that their client was framed by a racist officer who planted key evidence on his estate, The New Yorker magazine reports. Members of Simpson's defense team will claim Detective Mark Fuhrman found two bloody gloves at the scene of the murders of Simpson's ex-wife and her friend and that he took one to Simpson's estate, where he claimed to have found it, the magazine reports in its July 25 issue, released Sunday./4A

No tickets win

No tickets correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, state lottery officials said. The jackpot was worth $10 million. The numbers drawn Saturday night from a field of 50 were: 8, 9, 13, 14, 34, and 42. Lottery officials estimate the jackpot for Wednesday night's game will be $17 million.

Once-in-millennium spectacle: Comet fragments batter Jupiter

Associated Press

GREENBELT, Md. — In a once-in-a-millenium spectacular, comet Shoemaker-Levy 9 is battering Jupiter with mountain-sized chunks of ice and rock, sending up towering fireballs and leaving black scars in the planetary clouds that may last for months.

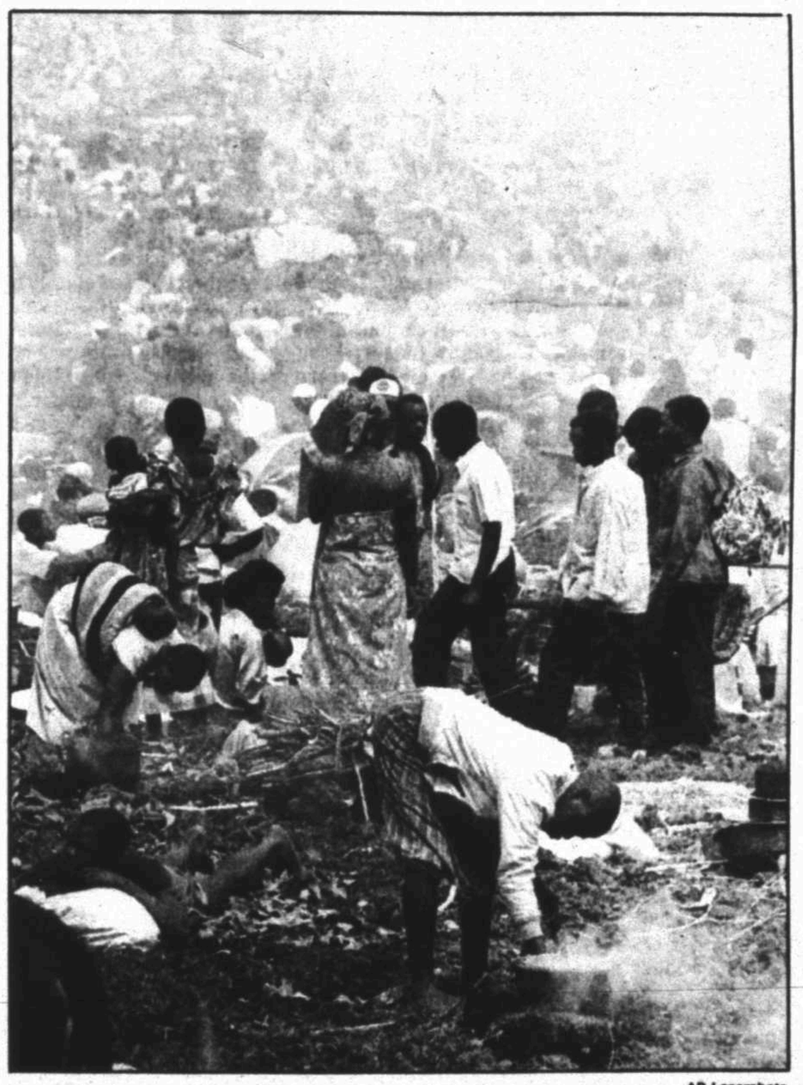

Fragments A, B, C and D of the 21-piece comet slammed into Jupiter Saturday and Sunday, repeatedly exploding into fireballs that extend for 600 miles above the cloud tops.

The impacts are all behind Jupiter as viewed from Earth, but the bubbles of hot gases arising from each hit poke over the horizon and Rwandan refugees cook at a camp outside Goma, Zaire, Sunday. Most of the half-million refugees are Hutus fearing revenge at the hands of the rebels.

■ Day that began in desperation, chaos, becomes one of panic and death.

Associated Press

GOMA, Zaire — Cross-border mortar fire from rebel territory in Rwanda killed about 60 refugees Sunday, French officials said. Up to 50 others, mostly children, were trampled to death when terrified Rwandans stampeded across the frontier.

'Within 48 hours, I am afraid we are going to have hundreds of people dying daily.'

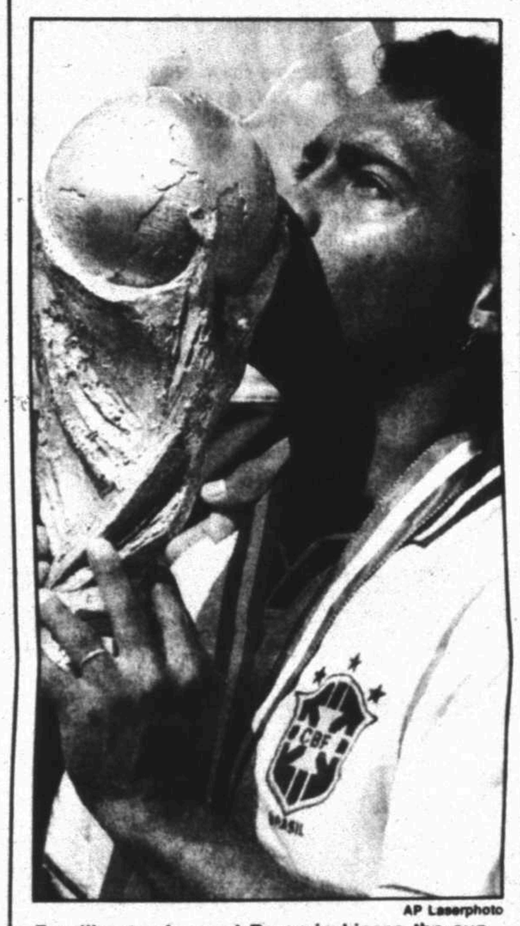

U.N. spokesman

As many as 1 million refugees had crossed into Zaire by the end of the day, ahead of advancing rebels who have captured virtually all of Rwanda. Rwandan government soldiers fleeing their last strongholds joined the exodus.

Mortar shells hit around Goma's airport, cathedral and a market Sunday, killing about 60 people, including children, and wounding many others, the French Foreign Ministry said. The shelling halted desperately needed aid flights to Goma, the ministry said in a statement.

It quoted U.N. commander Gen. Romeo Dallaire as saying the shells "were probably fired by the RPF," or the rebel Rwandan Patriotic Front. It warned that

Nation holds pride, but many question moon walk's value

By B. Drummond Ayres Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Twenty-five years after the United States put a man on the moon, Americans still take great pride in that stirring, epochal achievement. But it is a tempered pride.

Conversations with dozens of Americans find a pensive, even melancholy longing for the heady days of July 1969, when the nation, despite crippling divisions over issues like the Vietnam War and racial equality, somehow still managed to pull together and collectively focus on and attain an awesome goal.

Today, many Americans say, that special measure of togetherness has been lost while the divisions remain.

Children with emotional scars of crime find Houston healing

HOUSTON (AP) — A refuge for children traumatized by drive-by shootings or domestic violence that often ends in death lies behind the walls of the University of Houston.

There, counseling is offered to crime's youngest witnesses as researchers try to document how children are affected by the daily barrage of rape, murder and assault, The Houston Post reported Sunday.

It's called the Juvenile Victim Project, part of the UH Victim's Resource Institute, and is where childhood terrors, more horrific than the average nightmare or adolescent fear, are wrestled.

"They think the world has let them down. They have done everything they were told to do, but then something bad happens. All that (trust) is destroyed. They think it doesn't matter whether you do good or bad or what is right," explains

Chappaquiddick marks a dark 25th

Although bridge is gone, mystery, scandal remain

By Anne Thompson
Associated Press

CHAPPAQUIDDICK, Mass. — It sounded like the ideal spot for a summer vacation: a waterfront island cottage at the end of a dead-end dirt road, near an abandoned bridge.

What Andrea Meaney didn't know was that the bridge was the site of Sen. Edward Kennedy's car accident 25 years ago — and a celebrated tourist attraction ever since.

She soon found out. On the first day of her vacation, Meaney counted more than 50 cars and bicycles trundling down the otherwise remote road, all carrying people who checked out Dike Bridge, turned around and left.

On the second day, she found it necessary to put a sign in the front yard urging motorists to slow down and watch out for her three dogs.

Expect mid-90s rerun today

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high in the mid-90s and south winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low near 70, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be mostly sunny with a high in the upper 90s.

After an overnight low of 68, Sunday's high reached 94, compared to the record high for that date of 108 set in 1989. The record low was 62 set in 1986.

STATE

Clouds were scarce in the Texas sky on Sunday as temperatures approached 100 in many areas.

What few clouds existed clustered over the upper Texas Gulf Coast, where scattered showers were reported. Some high clouds also were seen in Permian Basin and South Plains, the National Weather Service said.

However, widely scattered showers and a few thunderstorms were developing over the West Texas as the afternoon wore on.

Dry winds blew mainly from the south statewide, with some gusts reported along the coast and in parts of West Texas, the weather service said.

NATION

Storms stretched across the central United States on Sunday and thunderstorms and hail pounded parts of the East Coast as a cold front remained stalled over much of the country.

Normally high temperatures in the Southwest desert regions dropped as a front from northern Mexico brought showers and cloudy weather to New Mexico and Arizona.

As the front hovered over the central Plains states, storms along the edges caused showers and thunderstorms. In Virginia, golf-ball sized hail and torrential rain fell, with 4.5 inches of rain pouring down in a two-hour period in Shawsville.

A severe thunderstorm watch was in place along the southern edge of the front in parts of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

PRIDE: Many question moon landing's value

studio, remembers spending July 20, 1969, in front of her television set, filled with pride for mankind and America and transfixed by the scratchy sounds and images coming back from the moon.

"Sadly, it turns out that what everybody thought would be a new epoch after the moon walk didn't last much longer than the moon walk itself," Ms. Birchall now laments. "I have always been shocked by how little that moment carried forward. It's as though it was a big hoax shot on the back lot of a Hollywood studio."

Many people repeated a phrase that has become almost a cliche since the Apollo 11 mission, asking why a nation that put a man on the moon cannot seem to achieve earthly goals like ridding itself of racism, finding food, shelter and jobs for the poor and extending health care to everyone.

"It was this great unifying moment, a kind of new frontier," Barbara George, a bookstore manager in Palo Alto, Calif., recalled of the moon walk. "But we have the same problems today as we had back then — poverty, wars, racism."

Don Oldham, 70, a homeless elevator operator in Seattle, offered a starker reflection. Sitting outside a shelter and watching other homeless people shuffle into line for a hot meal, he said, "Moon walk didn't change my life — and didn't change their life."

But there is still huge national pride in what was achieved when Neil A. Armstrong, the commander of the Apollo 11 mission, first stepped on the moon's dusty surface and proclaimed, "That's one small step for man, one giant leap for mankind."

At that time, said Kevin Fogarty, 56, a Boston bus driver, "The U.S. was supreme."

Yet the random conversations, as well as national polls, indicate that there is no real national yearning for another multibillion-dollar manned thrust into space toward more distant moons, planets and stars.

To the contrary, there are some second thoughts about whether the Apollo project should ever have been attempted, even if it did take man farther than he had ever been before.

Many people now see the project as mainly a costly mano a mano competition with the Soviet Union. They say, a bit uncomfortably, that they cannot cite a single specific example of how the science and technology used to put a man on the moon has benefited man here on Earth.

Suzanne Frank, 47, a human resources executive in Chicago, recalls being "awed" at first by the moon walk. But, upon reflection over a quarter of a century, she has come to the viewpoint that Apollo 11 was "just another part of that race with the enemy instead of being meaningful of its own accord."

"It didn't do much for the world, did it?" she continued. "Space technology in general has had some carry-over effect. But what did walking on the moon do? As far a manned mission to Mars goes, I'd be interested in knowing what they're going to do with the technology that'd be developed. They'd need to convince me after the moon walk boondoggle that it's not just another macho junket."

To Rick Parfitt, 41, a speech researcher from San Francisco, the moon mission produced "great things like the hand-held calculator and the integrated circuit." But he, too, views the mission as a costly product of a Cold War mentality — and also as a bit of colonial imperialism by the United States.

"I thought it should have been the United Nations flag," he said, recalling that the Apollo astronauts left an American flag on the moon's surface.

Mary Flood, 41, is a lawyer who hails from Houston, the site of Mission Control for the space flights and thus, in a sense, Apollo's hometown. But Ms. Flood also has mixed feelings about the moon mission and where the United States should head next with its space program.

"I remember being proud of my country and disappointed with my country," she said, recalling July 20, 1969, when Armstrong and his fellow moon walker, Col. Edwin E. "Buzz" Aldrin of the Air Force, took their first tentative steps on the lunar surface. "We were capable of doing so much out there and incapable of doing that here."

There are many people, of course, who still favor manned space missions. But, in contrast to 25 years ago, they now seem to be a minority.

SCARS: Children find treatment at center

(From 1A)

Dr. Gerald Harris, institute director.

Some of the saddest examples:

An 8-year-old girl says she wants to get to heaven as soon as possible, even if it means killing herself. Why? Two months ago, she saw her father fatally shot in the middle of the street by a teen-age gang member. She thinks if she doesn't get to heaven quickly, before she grows up, her dad won't recognize her when they are reunited.

A 9-year-old girl nervously pulls out her eyebrows and loses weight because the family of a man convicted for raping the girl's older sister sends death threats to her family.

That family is using the 9-year-old as the courier of those messages.

And then there's the case of a 15-year-old girl who was talking with her boyfriend on the telephone when he was shot to death. Both the girl and her father raced to the boyfriend's house only to find him in a growing pool of blood.

The 1-year-old program, funded by a $166,000 grant from the Hogg Foundation for Mental Health, is the only nonprivate psychological service center in Houston for children ages 6 to 17 and their families.

A staff of eight doctoral students are therapists.

Institute officials say there is virtually no scientific research documenting the psychological impact on juvenile crime victims.

So the project works both to heal the children and collect information and document the impact of violent crime on juveniles.

After a traumatic experience, children can suffer from long periods of disbelief and bouts of unresponsiveness, hysteria, anxiety or depression, disrupted sleep and nightmares.

The project has provided therapy or community referrals for about 75 children and family members.

A victim usually goes through 15 to 20 one-hour sessions once a week before significant progress is made toward getting the child back on course for a normal life.

Often, though, parents can prove to be a barrier to progress.

In a case involving a girl who was raped, Harris said "the mother told her 'this is all your fault. If you hadn't been talking to those people, it wouldn't have happened.' "

COMET: Mountain-sized chunks hit Jupiter

(From 1A)

can be detected by large telescopes on Earth and by the Hubble Space Telescope.

"The fireball extends beyond the limb (visible horizon) of the planet," Heidi Hammel of the Space Telescope Science Institute said Sunday. She was speaking of a Hubble image taken of fragment A's explosion. "This is a massive thing."

Fragment C, about the same 0.6 mile diameter as A, smashed Jupiter about 3:45 a.m. CDT, and infrared photos from the Keck Telescope in Hawaii showed two glowing scars, each about the diameter of the Earth.

Fragment B is thought to have been much smaller and less compact. No images were released of that impact. Fragment D views are not expected to be ready until today.

But more are coming.

"This is just the orchestra warming up," said David Levy, an amateur astronomer and a co-discoverer of the comet.

Ahead are the largest four of the comet's train of 21 pieces. Fragments G and H, which astronomers predict will hit today, are both thought to be almost 2 miles across. Fragments K, expected to collide Tuesday, and Q1, which hits on Wednesday, are also about 2 miles in diameter. The last fragment, called W, is forecast to hit on Friday.

Names of the fragments don't neatly follow the alphabet. Some fragments have disappeared, along with their letter designation. Q split apart, giving rise to two pieces with that letter.

Scientists estimated that fragment A released energy equivalent to 10 million megatons of TNT when it slammed Jupiter at more than 130,000 miles per hour. Since the energy release increases geometrically, the larger fragments could have an explosive force of 10 times more.

Fragment A left a black scar in the Jupiter cloud tops that some scientists said could last months, or perhaps as long as a year, despite the extreme currents that stir the planet's stratosphere.

The explosive force of the comets comes from their size and their extreme velocity.

Eugene Shoemaker, U.S. Geological Survey astronomer and a co-discoverer of the comet, along with his wife, Carolyn, and Levy, said temperatures at the collision can reach tens of thousands of degrees.

Jupiter is almost all hydrogen gas, with only a relatively small central core. But as a high-speed comet fragment strikes, it creates powerful shock waves in the upper atmosphere and probably punches through a layer of ammonia clouds.

TRAGIC: Stampede kills scores of Rwandans

(From 1A)

France would tolerate no rebel incursions into the security zone for refugees established by French troops in southwestern Rwanda.

Once across the border with Zaire, many refugees were being robbed at gunpoint by Zairian soldiers.

Relief workers were unable to cope with what one called "the exodus of a nation," with little food and a critical shortage of water raising fears of epidemics and riots.

"Goma is out of control," said Panos Moumtzis, a spokesman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees. "We feel defeated and exhausted. It's a nightmare."

Shelling and gunfire triggered the border stampede. A Sygma photographer, Charles Caratini, who was at the border shortly afterward, said he saw 30 to 50 bodies, most of them children.

Most of the refugees pouring into Zaire were Hutus who feared revenge at the hands of the Tutsi-dominated rebels. Militias led by extremist Hutu politicians have been blamed for most of the estimated 200,000 to 500,000 deaths in the tiny Central African country in the past three months of ethnic slaughter.

No evidence has emerged of widespread reprisals by the rebels, but neither have they halted their advance toward the Zairian border.

More than half a million Rwandans fled earlier into Rwanda's other neighbors: Tanzania, Burundi and Uganda. With the number in Zaire reaching 1 million, it means one in every five Rwandans has fled the country.

Government soldiers were deserting one of their last strongholds, the town of Gisenyi just across the border from Goma. Rebel radio said the insurgents had entered Gisenyi, which had been the temporary seat of the Hutu government until most of its leaders fled last week.

Dallaire, the Canadian U.N. commander, said the rebels were "plowing into it (Gisenyi) right now."

Heavy machine-gun fire and what sounded like the concussions of mortar or artillery shells began Saturday night in the direction of Gisenyi and increased Sunday afternoon to a nearly constant din.

Dallaire said rebels effectively controlled all of Rwanda except for the zone in the southwest carved out by French troops to protect hundreds of thousands of refugees. The zone is less than a fifth of the country.

DARK: Chappaquiddick mystery, scandal remain 25 years later

(From 1A)

"The realtor didn't tell me this was THE bridge. I don't think she thought it was a selling point," said Meaney, 32, of Washington, D.C. "For what's supposed to be a quiet place, this is like a highway."

The night of July 18, 1969, Kennedy's Oldsmobile plunged off Dike Bridge into a tidal pond. He swam to safety, leaving in the car Mary Jo Kopechne, who drowned. He then waited 10 hours to report the accident.

A quarter of a century may have passed, but the scandal and mystery surrounding Chappaquiddick still mesmerize, thanks to the world's fascination with Kennedys, celebrities, controversy and crime.

Bestselling true crime writer Ann Rule said Chappaquiddick is not unlike the O.J. Simpson case. Such shocking levelings of large personalities are rare and enduring, she said, because people like to see their heroes fail.

"With Ted Kennedy, with O.J. Simpson, we were quite willing to almost deify them," Rule said. "But there's part of us that says, 'They're not so great. Maybe I only make $25,000 but at least I'm not sitting in a courtroom or a jail.' "

Most of the players in the Chappaquiddick drama are quiet now. Mary Jo Kopechne's first cousin Georgetta Potosky said the family remembers her on her birthday, which falls 10 days after the anniversary of her death.

Her parents, who live in Stillwater, Pa., rarely give interviews. However, they recently told The Times-Leader newspaper of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., that they have received letters from Kennedy's mother, Rose, and from Robert Kennedy's widow, Ethel.

"Ethel Kennedy is a very nice, charming woman," Gwendolyn Kopechne said. "I've talked and written to Rose."

The Kopechnes received a $140,923 settlement from Kennedy's insurance company, but say they have never received an apology from Kennedy himself.

Chappaquiddick is reachable by ferry from nearby Martha's Vineyard and guides are sure to mention the infamous accident when Vineyard tour buses pass the ferry landing.

Ferry drivers say at least 10 people a day ask for directions to the bridge, which long has been closed in disrepair and blocked off by a chain link fence. Before, tourists used to tear off pieces of its wood as souvenirs, said Richard Reston, editor and publisher of the Vineyard Gazette newspaper.

To mark the 25th anniversary, the British Broadcasting Corp. came to the island this spring to re-create the incident for a documentary.

On the day of the accident, the 37-year-old Ted Kennedy had sailed in a Vineyard yacht race. Afterward, a Kennedy cousin threw a party at a small house on Chappaquiddick. At the party was Kopechne and the five other so-called "boiler room girls" who had worked on Robert F. Kennedy's 1968 presidential campaign.

Kennedy said he and Kopechne had been trying to catch the ferry to the Vineyard, but took a wrong turn onto the dirt road that led to the Dike Bridge sometime between 11:30 p.m. and 1 a.m.

He has expressed sadness over the incident, calling his actions that night "irrational and indefensible and inexcusable and inexplicable."

"I bear full responsibility for the tragedy, and I always will," he said in a statement issued Friday. "I have expressed my remorse to my family, the Kopechne family, and the people of Massachusetts. I only wish I had the power to do more to ease the continuing pain I feel and that Mr. and Mrs. Kopechne feel for Mary Jo's loss."

In his book "Senatorial Privilege: The Chappaquiddick Cover-Up" — one of at least four written about the accident — Leo Damore asserts that Kennedy failed to notify the authorities immediately because he wanted to concoct a story that Kopechne was alone in the car.

He also called the crime an "equalizer" that brought Kennedy down to the level of the common man. Anyone could imagine driving home from a party, perhaps a little tipsy, and having an accident, Damore said.

What people could not understand, he said, was why Kennedy did not seek help sooner by going to the cottage nearby.

"You could put yourself in his shoes, and any teen-ager would have known what to do. You go to the nearest house and bang on the door," Damore said. "I think this was the first episode that pierced the mythology of the Kennedys as intrepid, fearless and confrontational."

At an inquest, Kennedy said he was in shock after the accident. He said he had planned to report it after he swam across to Martha's Vineyard, but that the tide held him back and wore him out. He spent the night at a hotel on the Vineyard and, in the morning, cleanly shaven and nattily dressed, went to the police station.

Kennedy pleaded guilty to a charge of leaving the scene of an accident, received a two-month suspended sentence and had his license revoked for a year.

The accident was widely thought to guarantee Kennedy would never be president, and some thought it would end his political career altogether.

But the senator, now 62, has continued to win election after election and remain popular with his constituents, despite fresh allegations that have surfaced in connection with the accident over the years.

In 1980, a lawyer for New England Telephone Co. had said that despite a subpoena, not all of Kennedy's telephone calls in the 24 hours after the drowning were put in court records. And in 1989, grand jurors who investigated the accident came forward to say that the district attorney had hindered their probe.

"Everyone knew the truth hadn't been told," Damore said, "so a mystery of this caliber is going to remain in people's minds, particularly when it involves the most famous family in the country."

Armstrong returns to his boyhood home for anniversary of mission

NEW KNOXVILLE, Ohio (AP) — The man who left the first footprints on the moon made a rare public appearance Sunday, returning to his boyhood home to help mark the 25th anniversary of the Apollo 11 mission.

Neil Armstrong shook hands, signed autographs and joked with an air show crowd at the Neil Armstrong Airport in this western Ohio community.

"We in Ohio take pride in the fact that this is the birthplace of aviation," Armstrong told the crowd. "I take pride in the fact that to me, Auglaize County is the birthplace of my aviation, because I learned to fly here."

The former astronaut watched the show from a makeshift reviewing stand, taking the microphone to speak from time to time to the crowd of 8,000 people.

Armstrong, 63, who grew up in nearby Wapakoneta, had been invited to attend the community's 20-day moonwalk celebration, but had not replied.

"It's always great to be back," Armstrong said Sunday, looking tan and relaxed in shirt sleeves, loafers and sunglasses.

Armstrong granted no U.S. interviews on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the lunar landing. Speaking to reporters at the air show, he recalled the first mission to land on the moon and his famous walk on July 20, 1969.

"The earth was sinking away from us at a fairly prodigious rate. That was a special time because you know you're committed," Armstrong said. "We felt we had everybody behind us. We enjoyed the good wishes of people from around the world. I think all the pilots from around the world were vicariously going with us."

Armstrong said he does not dwell on his taking "one small step for a man, one giant leap for mankind."

"Pilots take no special joy in walking," Armstrong added with a smile. "Pilots like flying."

Police find missing woman's frozen body

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — An agonizing three-year search for a former Los Angeles resident ended when police accidentally discovered her frozen body stored in a rented moving truck in the driveway of an upscale neighborhood of Prescott, Ariz.

Officers sent to check on a report of a stolen truck kept in the driveway of 37-year-old John Joseph Famalaro's home stumbled Wednesday upon a freezer hooked to an extension cord running into the house, said Laurie Berra, Yavapai County, Ariz., sheriff's spokeswoman.

Businessman reveals loan in Whitewater probe

■ Former lumber company operator says David Hale told him transaction would help financial problems involving James McDougal.

Associated Press

FORT SMITH, Ark. — A figure in the Whitewater investigation has broken his silence, saying he took out an $825,000 loan after being told the transaction would assist James McDougal, the Clintons' Whitewater partner.

"I signed for the loan but I never saw the checks," Dean Paul said in an interview with The Associated Press.

Paul, a former lumber company operator, said a business associate, David Hale, told him the 1986 loan transaction would help rectify some financial problems involving McDougal.

At the time, McDougal was a partner with the Clintons in the Whitewater Development Co. and owner of the failing Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan, which made the loan to Paul.

Paul said he was aware that Hale knew Clinton, but the then-governor's name never came up during the conversations about the loan.

Paul said Hale assured him that Jim Guy Tucker, now Arkansas' governor, and Hale had business ventures, including a planned shopping center, that would enable the loan from Madison S&L to be paid back. Nearly $600,000 of the loan has never been repaid.

Tucker's lawyer, John Haley, said his client knows nothing about the Paul loan. Haley said Tucker had planned to build a shopping center with Hale but the venture never got off the ground.

Paul's comments add the first substantial public detail to allegations made over the past 10 months by Hale, a former municipal judge convicted recently of defrauding the government through a federally backed lending company he ran.

Under a plea bargain, Hale is now a key witness cooperating with Whitewater special prosecutor Robert Fiske.

Among the allegations Hale has made is that then-Gov. Clinton in 1986 pressured him to make a loan to McDougal's wife, Susan. The $300,000 Small Business Administration-backed loan was never paid back.

Clinton has dismissed Hale's story as "a bunch of bull" and the White House has suggested that Hale made up the allegations.

Paul has declined requests for news interviews for months. He agreed to an interview with the AP at his lawyer's office in Fort Smith.

Paul said Hale told him that McDougal "had some problems he needed to get cleaned up" but was not more specific. At the time, McDougal's S&L was about to be audited by federal regulators.

Paul was assured by Hale that the loan would be paid back.

"David was my lawyer, my business partner, my friend. I trusted him," Paul said. Paul's lawyer, J. Michael Fitzhugh, said that Paul was a victim and was used in a scheme by Hale and others.

The $825,000 loan, made Feb. 28, 1986, has emerged as a key transaction in Fiske's investigation, according to several witnesses who have been questioned by investigators.

The witnesses, speaking only on condition of anonymity, say that Fiske is exploring whether McDougal directed that the loan be made to Hale, who then would use the money to make several new loans, including the one to Susan McDougal.

Quake victims try to heal, wade through red tape 6 months later

By Deborah Hastings
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Minetta Dial cried once, the day her 92-year-old mother burned to death in a gas fire caused by the Northridge earthquake.

In the pre-dawn cataclysm of Jan. 17, Dial rushed from her trailer to her mother's across the street. It was in flames, and she stood outside the door and wailed. There was nothing else she could do.

"I'm sure anybody and everybody heard me," the 69-year-old Dial recalled, matter of factly.

She hasn't shed a tear since. "Don't do no good to dwell on it."

But dwell on it she did, partly because the Los Angeles County coroner's office took five months to issue a death certificate for Evelynn Henson.

Medical examiners couldn't determine if Mrs. Henson, burned to a pile of bones, died of smoke inhalation or of burns, Dial said.

"I'm not kidding," she added. "I said, 'What difference does it make? She's dead. And FEMA won't do a thing to help me without a death certificate.'"

Dial is emblematic of the quake's rebuilding process. Six months after 61 people died, 9,000 were injured and an estimated $20 billion was lost in damages, survivors like her are trying to heal while trying to put up with the bureaucracy.

State and federal aid totals $5.5 billion so far, and billions more have been allocated.

With the help of Federal Emergency Management Agency money, Dial and her husband of 53 years have repaired their mobile home and rebuilt walls surrounding the 118-unit Sunburst trailer park that they manage in Chatsworth, just a few miles from the 6.7-magnitude quake's epicenter.

But they still are waiting for $911 — the amount Dial paid to have her mother's charred remains cremated within a week after she died.

Through a little-known program administered by the state, FEMA contributes grants for funeral and cremation expenses incurred during federally declared disasters. But a death certificate is needed, which Dial finally got two weeks ago.

"There were only six or seven bones left," Dial said of her mother's body. "I kept telling that woman (in the coroner's office), 'I don't care if she died of smoke or fire. If you've got smoke, you've got fire. If you've got fire, you've got smoke. What's the difference?' "

Mrs. Henson's cause of death was listed as smoke inhalation and burns.

"I mailed it off to FEMA," Dial said. "I haven't heard anything yet."

Coroner's spokesman Scott Carrier said the certificate delay appeared to have been caused by human error. "It was misfiled," he said.

Asked about the cause of death dispute, Carrier replied, "There's nothing in the file about that."

The program will pay up to $6,000 for burial and $2,500 for cremation. Acceptable funeral costs include one spray of flowers, body transportation and casket. Clothing and receptions are not covered.

Report: Simpson defense to claim 'racist officer' planted glove

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lawyers for O.J. Simpson will probably claim that their client was framed by a racist officer who planted key evidence on his estate, The New Yorker magazine reports.

Members of Simpson's defense team will claim Detective Mark Fuhrman found two bloody gloves at the scene of the murders of Simpson's ex-wife and her friend and that he took one to Simpson's estate, where he claimed to have found it, the magazine reports in its July 25 issue, released Sunday. The article by Jeffrey Toobin cites a series of interviews with at least two "leading members of Simpson's defense team," who are not identified.

The matching bloody gloves — one found by the slashed bodies of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman and the other discovered on the grounds of Simpson's $5 million Brentwood estate — were among the strongest evidence presented by prosecutors at Simpson's preliminary hearing.

Last Thursday, sources close to the defense had indicated to The Associated Press that it was investigating information about Fuhrman, and that suspicions that he planted the glove might become part of its defense.

The news cooperative didn't report the possible strategy because it was described to the AP on the condition it not be published.

Simpson has pleaded innocent to the June 12 murders of Ms. Simpson, 35, and Goldman, 25. He is jailed without bail and awaits a Superior Court arraignment.

Fuhrman denied the allegations. "Of course it didn't happen," he told The New Yorker, declining to discuss the case further.

One attorney interviewed by the magazine said the defense team still hadn't decided whether to claim in court that Simpson was framed; another said it was a done deal.

Lead defense attorney Robert Shapiro told The Associated Press Sunday night that he was not the source of the article, nor had he seen it. He refused to comment further on the report.

The magazine described a theory the attorneys said they might put forth during trial.

"Suppose (Fuhrman) has actually found two gloves at the murder scene," one of the lawyers said. "He transports one of them over to the house and then 'finds' it back in that little alleyway where no one could see him."

The attorneys claimed Fuhrman had two reasons to plant the evidence. First, he wanted to be in the spotlight, they said.

"Here's a guy who's one of the cops coming on the scene early in the morning. They have the biggest case of their lives. But an hour later you're told you're not in charge of the case," the magazine quoted a lawyer as saying. "How's that going to make that guy feel?"

His second motivation, the lawyers charged in the report, was racism. Simpson is black. Fuhrman and both victims are white.

"This is a bad cop," said one lawyer. "This is a racist cop."

The magazine cited reports from psychiatrists who treated Fuhrman. Fuhrman left the Marines in 1975, later telling psychiatrist Dr. Ronald R. Koegler he stopped enjoying his military service because "there were these Mexicans and niggers, volunteers, and they would tell me they weren't going to do something."

In general, Fuhrman's progress reports from the Los Angeles Police Department were favorable.

U.S. personnel see thousands of Haitian refugees, hear horrors

GUANTANAMO BAY NAVAL BASE, Cuba (AP) — Gunnery Sgt. Earns Rinvil looks, acts and talks tough. As chief translator for the thousands of Haitian refugees housed at Guantanamo, he often works 18-hour days that leave him exhausted, frustrated and hoarse.

But something happened when he began to translate for reporters Janet Civil's story about a field full of burning people. He cracked.

"She said she can't stand to look at people's heads getting chopped off and getting burned," Rinvil said after wiping away the tears.

Rinvil and the 2,271 other U.S. personnel at the base have heard thousands of horror stories from the boat people. They'll hear thousands more before Joint Task Force 160 Mission is over.

"We had a plan for this place," said Brig. Gen. Michael J. Williams, who runs the Haitian operation at Guantanamo. "We knew the problems. What we didn't know were the numbers."

As of Saturday, 16,050 Haitians were here for processing to determine whether they are eligible to stay in one of the "safe havens" being set up around the Caribbean — including at Guantanamo.

Haitians fleeing the military regime that ousted elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide are no longer considered for political asylum in the United States if they take to the seas.

In an attempt to stanch the recent flood of boat people, President Clinton changed U.S. policy to deny them entry into the United States, whether they qualify for asylum or not. Those who want asylum in the United States must apply in Haiti.

Yet some 534 Haitians who were granted asylum before the policy change are on the base, awaiting sponsors in the United States.

The standard of proof for showing one faces politically motivated persecution at home is not as stringent to qualify for safe haven status as it was for political asylum.

So far, 2,200 have qualified for safe haven status.

About 2,400 of those interviewed have decided to go back to Haiti, officials say, though refugee advocates say these Haitians are not going voluntarily.

PLO police, Israeli troops clash in worker riot

■ Forces exchange fire in four hours of rioting that leaves two Palestinians dead, 90 wounded.

Associated Press

EREZ CROSSING, Gaza Strip — In the worst outbreak of violence since Palestinians gained autonomy, Israeli troops and PLO police exchanged fire Sunday during a riot by thousands of Palestinians unable to get to jobs in Israel.

Two Palestinians were killed and 90 wounded, including 25 policemen, in four hours of rioting in which Palestinians set fire to a gas station, torched buses in a parking lot and looted a cement factory.

Three Israeli soldiers and a civilian were also wounded by gunfire and dozens of other troops were hurt by stones in the melee, which strained already fragile Israel-PLO relations.

Israeli and PLO officials blamed each other. But senior PLO and Israeli officers met within hours of the riots to try and restore cooperation, and the rhetoric was surprisingly restrained. The autonomy agreement signed in May is vague on dealing with confrontations between Israeli troops and PLO police.

"Today's battle was the battle for a loaf of bread. It was not premeditated by us or by the Israelis," said Freh Abu Medein, the justice minister in Yasser Arafat's autonomy government.

Arafat, who visited Palestinian shooting victims in a hospital, convened his leading advisers and protested to the United States and the United Nations, saying Israel had violated the agreement by shooting at the Palestinians. Israel radio said he asked for international observers.

"What happened today was a very grave action, fighting the needs, property and hunger of the people with bullets," Arafat said.

Israeli officials termed it a breakdown of arrangements at the crossing caused by the Palestinian police.

"The police failed today," said Oded Ben-Ami, spokesman for Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's government.

He said Palestinian police shot into the rioters and caused most of the casualties. He also blamed police for not adhering to an agreement to screen workers and bar those without permits from reaching the Erez border crossing.

Ben-Ami said that the riot began when several hundred Palestinians without permits arrived at the Israeli-controlled checkpoint. Islamic fundamentalists from the Hamas movement "inflamed" the crowd, he said.

In a statement issued in Jordan, Hamas vowed reprisals against Israeli soldiers, saying "blood can only be answered in blood." It called on Arab negotiators to pull out of peace negotiations with Israel.

The bloodshed reflected the explosive anger in Gaza where nearly 60 percent of workers are without jobs. Those allowed into Israel earn twice as much as in Gaza, but Israel has limited their number to about 25,000 — a fraction of that in the past.

Israel's chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Ehud Barak, said the crossing will remain closed until the Palestinians can make sure riots won't be repeated.

As word of the Erez clash spread, demonstrations broke out in several towns in the West Bank. In Hebron, the army clamped a curfew on the main square and market following stone-throwing clashes. Similar unrest was reported in Ramallah.

Witnesses said the Gaza violence began before dawn when about 300 workers threw stones at Israeli troops who had barred them from crossing the Erez checkpoint into Israel because they have no permits.

Word of the violence reached thousands of other workers who were having their permits checked a half mile south of Erez.

Polls: Many Mexicans expect election fraud by ruling party

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Inocencia Cordero remembers when teachers threatened to bar her children from school if she did not vote for the ruling party's presidential candidate.

Her daughter, Mikaila Romero, still seethes over the fraud she believes robbed her candidate of the presidency six years ago, in an election even many officials hardly bother to defend.

"They don't take us into account," said Ms. Romero, who operates a fruit stand at the huge Jamaica market in central Mexico City.

"They are all corrupt, pigs," her sister, Delfina, said from a neighboring stall.

The family's feelings, echoed by shoppers and vendors, are common as Mexico approaches the Aug. 21 presidential election.

Polls indicate many Mexicans — perhaps most of them — expect a dirty election, despite an expensive program of reforms undertaken by the government.

"No matter what the poll, the figures are more or less the same," said Lorenzo Meyer, a prominent historian and political analyst. "People who doubt the honesty of the election outnumber those who are sure (the election) will be impartial, just, honest."

So great is the skepticism that President Carlos Salinas de Gortari promised publicly in June to "transfer the power of the federal executive to whoever triumphs in the elections."

That was front-page news in a country whose last peaceful electoral change from one party to another occurred early in the last century. The Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, has controlled the government since its founding in 1929 and a change is almost unthinkable to many Mexicans.

Even Salinas' chosen successor, Ernesto Zedillo, has avoided vouching for the quality of his sponsor's victory in 1988 over Cuauhtemoc Cardenas, who is running again this year.

"I do not have direct evidence to make a judgment about the cleanliness or lack of cleanliness of the earlier elections," was the way he put it.

The director of the Federal Electoral Institute, Arturo Nunez, has admitted that officials chose to "crash the system" in 1988 when early computerized returns showed Cardenas ahead.

The final results reported by the PRI-dominated election commission showed Salinas squeaking by with just over 50 percent of the vote. Cardenas, then running as candidate of the leftist National Democratic Front, came in second with 31 percent.

PRI legislators used their congressional majority this month to kill a proposal to investigate the computer failure.

Zedillo now holds a narrow lead in most polls over Diego Fernandez de Cevallos of the conservative National Action Party. Cardenas — this time running as candidate of the new, left-leaning Democratic Revolution Party — is in third.

Salinas has overseen three major reforms of voting laws. His government says it has spent the equivalent of $730 million to create more accurate voter lists, issue identity cards with photographs and train tens of thousands of citizens — chosen at random — to oversee the balloting.

This will be the first election run by independent citizens rather than PRI functionaries, and a prosecutor has been named to investigate possible fraud.

Nunez of the election institute predicts "the cleanest elections in the history of Mexico," and many analysts think he's right.

"The electorate for the first time views other political parties . . . as having a real chance," said Francisco Valdez, a political scientist at the National Autonomous University.

Serbs conduct more 'ethnic cleansing,' aid workers report

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (NYT) — Armed Serbian nationalists have rousted hundreds of Muslims from their homes in the northeastern Bosnian district of Bijeljina in recent days and have begun driving them across a battlefront to Bosnian government territory, residents and aid workers said over the weekend.

A Serb from Bijeljina who asked not to be identified for fear of reprisal said that, starting Thursday and possibly even earlier, Muslims had been picked up from Bijeljina's streets and detained outside the town by members of a local Serbian militia known as the Panthers.

The militia is notorious for operations to clear villages and towns in northeastern Bosnia of Muslims.

A spokeswoman for the International Committee of the Red Cross in Belgrade said the organization had heard of "problems" in Bijeljina on Friday morning, had complained on Saturday to nationalist Serb leaders, and had asked for permission to visit detainees. She refused to comment on details of the roundup.

The incident comes on the eve of a meeting by the Bosnian Serbs' self-styled parliament in Pale on a proposed peace settlement that would divide Bosnia among the warring factions. The Serbs have signaled that they will reject the proposal, which would require them to give up a third of the land they hold. The Serbs now control about 70 percent of Bosnia.

The authors of the plan — the United States, Russia, Britain, France and Germany — have given the Serbs and a federation of Croats and the Muslim-led government until Tuesday to accept or reject the settlement. Bosnian government officials have said they will accept the peace proposal.

In April 1992, just as the war in Bosnia was beginning, Serbian militiamen, in an organized campaign, emptied the Bijeljina district of most of its Muslims. Only a few thousand Muslims — mostly women, children and elderly people — had remained.

Before the war, about a third of the district's 97,000 people were Muslims, while the town of Bijeljina had a Muslim majority.

Under the peace proposal to be considered today, the Bijeljina district would go to the Serbs. Townspeople speculated this weekend that the latest "ethnic cleansing" operation was aimed not only at terrorizing Muslims but also using them as a means of exchange for Serbian fighters captured by the Bosnian government.

Family violence demands attention

An evening in Anywhere, U.S.A. John and Jane Doe are in their bedroom. Above them, and clearly audible, a man is beating a woman. He is shouting, she is weeping. The Does look at one another; Doe then looks toward the phone. Should he call the police? A none-of-our-business shrug, and he turns off the light instead.

The scene is fiction — a television spot that is part of a new public education campaign from the Family Violence Prevention Fund. But it is also a fact. Millions of Americans have known for a long time what it is to hear the neighbors battling or see a wife take a punch from her husband. Those that didn't know do now. The story of O.J. and Nicole Simpson has become a national teach-in.

Last year the fund released a poll showing that the great majority of Americans realized domestic violence was a serious problem. More than a third said they had witnessed it. And they had finally lost patience with the two great excuses: "He was drunk" and "She asked for it." But when it came to doing something about the problem, most admitted to feeling helpless.

The figures are staggering. Four million American women admitted to being beaten by their husbands or boyfriends in 1993 alone. At least 25 percent of them were pregnant.

Even so, close to half the incidents of domestic violence against women discovered in the National Crime Survey were not reported to police. Furthermore, violence breeds violence: violent youths are four times more likely than nonviolent youths to come from homes where mothers were beaten by fathers.

During the last decade, new services have been created for victims of battering, new laws and police protocols developed to deter the batterers.

But America can't build enough shelters, nor can it build enough jails. Wisdom lies, quite simply, in prevention. Domestic violence is not an intractable problem. But solving it requires a good hard look at America's definition — even in this presumably enlightened age — of what a grown-up, male or female, should be.

Yes, there are women who batter — but the gender most frequently in jeopardy is female. And yes, the guy who smashes his wife is the same guy who's a boon companion to his friends. And yes, he can be found on the golf course and in the fancy suburb — as well as in the inner city and the crack house.

The Family Violence Prevention Fund's public education campaign is extraordinarily timely. But it is also too late for too many women.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, July 18, the 199th day of 1994. There are 166 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty-five years ago, on July 18, 1969, a car driven by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., plunged off a bridge on Chappaquiddick Island near Martha's Vineyard. His passenger, Mary Jo Kopechne, 28, died.

On this date:

In A.D. 64, the Great Fire of Rome began.

In 1536, the authority of the pope was declared void in England.

In 1792, American naval hero John Paul Jones died in Paris at age 45.

In 1872, Britain introduced the concept of voting by secret ballot.

In 1927, Ty Cobb hit safely for the 4,000th time in his career.

In 1932, the United States and Canada signed a treaty to develop the St. Lawrence Seaway.

In 1936, the Spanish Civil War began when Gen. Francisco Franco led an uprising of army troops based in Spanish North Africa.

In 1944, 50 years ago, Hideki Tojo was removed as Japanese premier and war minister because of setbacks suffered by his country in World War II.

In 1944, American forces in France captured the Normandy town of St. Lo.

In 1947, President Truman signed the Presidential Succession Act.

Real-estate lobbies back housing bill

WASHINGTON — An administration-backed housing bill working its way through Congress is being touted by at least one lobbyist as a way to bring homeownership to "those who need it most." Others might call it Clinton's answer to trickle-down economics.

Anderson

In a suspect example of bipartisanship, the House and Senate banking committees have slipped home builders and realtors what some consider a multi-million dollar gift: A law that greatly increases the size of mortgages the Federal Housing Administration is allowed to insure. If approved, the plan would expose American taxpayers to billions of dollars of financial risk, while the benefits would fall mainly to high-income home buyers in wealthy areas, particularly California and New England.

The plan — hatched by the Clinton administration and approved overwhelmingly by the two congressional committees — would raise the limit on FHA-insured property from the current level of $151,750 to $172,625. In practical terms, this means that buyers who make as much as $71,000 per year — the minimum income required by most creditors to make payments on a $172,000 home — will soon be able to insure their homes with almost no money down, courtesy of the federal government.

When the FHA was created at the height of the Depression, credit was nearly non-existent and default rates were high. The agency was designed to give banks incentive to lend to low- and moderate-income buyers by insuring mortgages that wouldn't otherwise be approved in the private market. Now it seems FHA is ready to redefine what it means by moderate: An income of $71,000 puts one in the top 13 percent of wage earners in the United States.

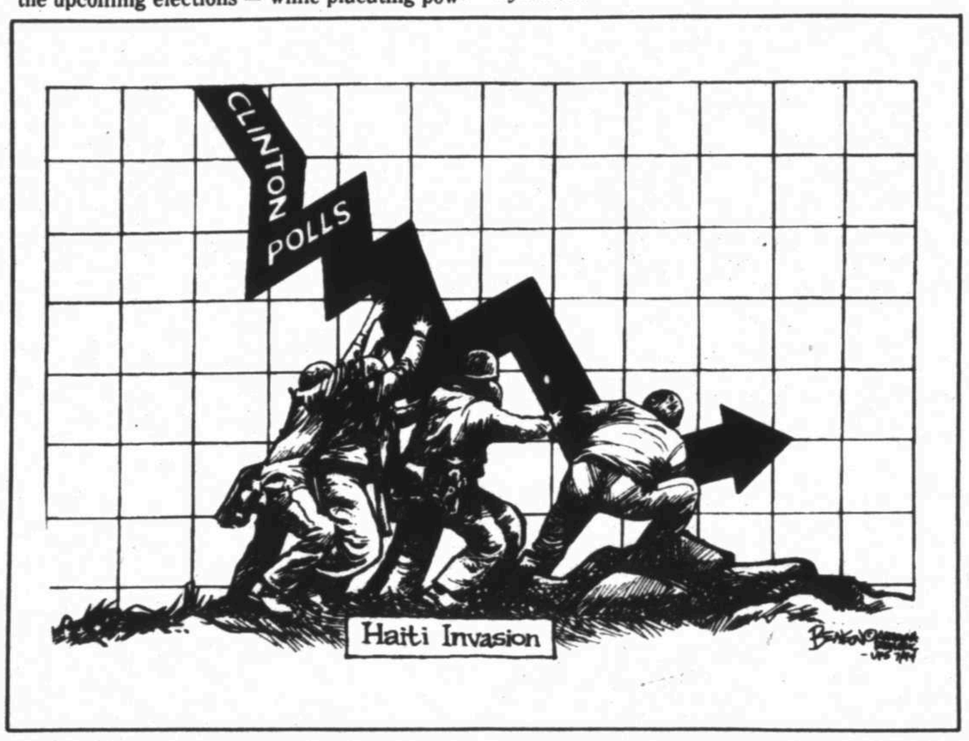

With the government's guarantee, high-income borrowers will no longer have to meet the stringent downpayment standards required in the private market. Home buyers can put as little as 5 percent down if they are buying in a wealthy area, and can even finance their closing cost and first-year mortgage insurance premium. And if they default, the original lender is reimbursed by the government.

The plan is attractive to Clinton for two major reasons. First, it allows him to fulfill his campaign promise to generate more housing starts. Second, it will help kick-start the recession-plagued real estate markets of California and the Northeast — which will be crucial in the upcoming elections — while placating powerful Washington lobbies.

Not surprisingly, this plan has the full support of a triad of powerful real-estate interests — the National Association of Relators, the Mortgage Bankers Association and the National Association of Home Builders — which stand to gain millions of dollars.

These groups are getting their money's worth from members of Congress. So far this election cycle, the three groups have given a collective $316,000 in campaign donations to members of the House and Senate Banking Committees.

CHARLEY REESE

They don't make cops like they used to

Hamp Gandy, who was chief of detectives in the county sheriff's office where I began my career as a reporter, would not fit the image of the L.A. cops with their suits and college degrees and neat haircuts.

Reese

Hamp had an overhang around his belt line, favored sports jackets and slacks off the discount rack and invariably wore a soggy, 3-inch cigar in the corner of his mouth. Still, he was a fine old cop, without fear and quite shrewd in his investigations.

Our first meeting, though, was somewhat stormy. The old cop-beat reporter had taken me out to the county jail to introduce me, and there had been a murder the night before. We got all the information about it that we needed from the uniform guys who were already back from the scene.

As we were leaving, however, Gandy arrived. The body had been found in a swamp, and Gandy was wet and mosquito-bit. He'd been up most of the night and was not in the best of moods. The old reporter introduced me as the new kid who would be covering the beat and Gandy said, "Well, come on into my office, and I'll tell you about this murder."

At that point, I made a big mistake. I was only 19, but still I should have known better.

"Well, thanks a lot," I said, "but we already have all the information we need."

Maybe you have seen the space shuttle go off. You know how it sort of sits there, trembling and rumbling for a moment before taking off. Well, old Hamp did the same thing and then exploded. He snatched the cigar out of his mouth, slammed it on the floor and commenced to shout in a voice that could be heard five blocks away, while pacing up and down, waving his arms, jamming his finger at my direction and looking much put upon.

"Well, don't this beat all. Don't this just beat all. I spend the whole (expletive, expletive) night wading around in a (expletive, expletive) swamp and I come in here and some (expletive, expletive) snot-nosed kid knows more about the (expletive, expletive) case than I do. . . ." Etc. and so forth for about five minutes.

Well, I never made that mistake again. I never told anybody what I knew if they wanted to tell me something. No reporter ever should, because no matter how many different people tell you something, they will often add some tidbit of information you don't already have.

Both policing and reporting were a lot more informal in those days. I made a lot of good friends and used to ride with officers on the midnight shift on my own time. In fact, I liked it so much I seriously considered giving up journalism to become a full-time cop. My best friend, a deputy, talked me out of it, though.

He was right, too, because I don't have the temperament to make a good law enforcement officer. I would never, for example, be able to get a child abuser to jail alive. I've seen a lot of people shot, cut, stabbed, beat to death, burnt, drowned, mangled and mashed in accidents, and in various states of decomposition, and none of it bothered me too much as long as they weren't children. But I can't abide a child harmer.

It's just as well, because policing wouldn't be as much fun today, just as newspapering isn't as much fun today. Both of our trades have been more or less bureaucratized, no doubt due to the excessive numbers of lawyers and accountants who have sprung up in the country in the postwar years.

But it used to be a lot of fun, and I know how men who do it get hooked on the excitement. Even on a slow night, with a few calls, there is always the anticipation that at any moment you'll be right in the middle of an adrenalin-pumping action.

Old Hamp lost his job when the sheriff got defeated, and ended his days as a private detective. He had outlived his times. His style and methods and way of life were no longer fashionable. We all outlive our times eventually, if we don't get killed soon enough.

MIKE ROYKO

Polls about O.J. don't really tell us anything

We're now getting all sorts of polling results on the guilt or innocence of O.J. Simpson and whether he can get a fair trial.

Royko

Many of these polls are broken down by race and age groups, to show us that blacks and young people are more sympathetic to Simpson than are whites and older people.

But what is the significance of these polls? What do they tell us about ourselves, society in general and the deep meaning of it all?

There is no significance or meaning. At least none that we don't already know. Their only purpose is to permit TV news shows and some newspapers to cause their viewers and readers to say, "Wow" when there is really nothing to wow about.

Of course, blacks think more kindly of Simpson. They would be more sympathetic to any black accused of a crime. To this day, many still believe the incredibly phony rape story of New York's Tawana Brawley and will always believe it.

But the fact of the matter is that the vast majority of Americans — black, white or otherwise — don't understand the criminal-justice system; can't spell forensic, much less explain it; get their news in broadcast snippets and bites or talk-show babble; and base their opinions on emotion or prejudice.

If pollsters wanted to, they could focus on all sorts of specific groups and get amazingly different results on Simpson's guilt or innocence, potential for a fair trial, etc.

For example, what would a poll of cops throughout the country show? I'll tell you the results of my own mini-poll of Chicago police who are friends and sources: Every one of them already thinks Simpson is guilty.

But then, cops tend to have more suspicious natures than most of us. As one old-timer once put it: "If you didn't do anything wrong, how come I'm asking you questions?"

At the same time, a poll could be limited to young black men who have been arrested at least once and believe they were mistreated by white cops. They'd probably be unanimous in their belief in Simpson's innocence.

On the other hand, a poll of whites who have been victims of black criminals would likely show just the opposite.

If you polled lawyers, the results would depend on the kind of law they practice. Defense lawyers don't think anyone is guilty. Most of them would probably tell you that Jeffrey Dahmer merely had an eating disorder.

But professional prosecutors would show as much compassion for Simpson as a pit bull does to a hunk of steak.

Or there could be a poll of blond white women who have been abused by their husbands. They might be inclined to identify with the late Nicole Simpson. Or Jewish bodybuilders, who might feel a kinship to the almost-ignored Ronald Goldman.

You could probably poll football fans in Buffalo, where Simpson had his greatest days, and get more favorable results than from the football fans in Chicago or Green Bay.

For that matter, a poll of avid male football fans might have entirely different answers than a poll of football-hating females.

And if you polled former running backs and former defensive tackles, they might have opposite opinions.

We might poll people with IQ's of 80 and those with 150 to see how they feel. Or those who read the National Enquirer regularly and those who read the Christian Science Monitor or The New York Times. The MTV audience and the C-SPAN viewers. University presidents and high school dropouts, convicts and prison guards.

The people who stand outside the courtroom with signs that say, "Guilty or Innocent, OJ We Love You," are expressing public opinion. Are they to be taken seriously?

Put it all together and what would you have? Public opinion? If so, which public? We have all kinds of opinions in this country, from the ignorant to the well-informed, from the wacky to the thoughtful, from the bigoted to the open-minded. You could take a poll on the question of whether the Earth is round or flat, and round wouldn't be unanimous.

Put it all together or take it separately and what do you have? Nothing, because this case isn't about public opinion. It is about evidence, both physical and circumstantial.

When it finally ends, the only opinions that matter will be those of the members of a jury and a judge.

And if and when that happens, there will be another meaningless poll on whether the public thinks the judge and jury were right.

What we really need is a poll on whether there should be polls. Or maybe we need a poll on whether such a poll is needed.

Allegations of age, sex discrimination plague state fire agency

■ Employees accuse director of favoritism in hiring, promotions.

Associated Press

DALLAS — For Texas Commission on Fire Protection Executive Director Michael Hines, 1994 has been a year under siege from employee allegations of "good-ol'-boy" favoritism in hiring and promotions.

The accusations were bolstered last spring, when a Travis County jury awarded former commission administrator Robert Frost $186,000 in damages and attorney fees.

Then late last month, the commission agreed to a cash settlement with administrator Helen Campbell, whom Hines edged out for the executive director's job.

The 148-employee agency, which has a $6.5 million annual budget, has been hit with other accusations of age and sex discrimination.

However, those are still pending at the Texas Commission on Human Rights, Ms. Campbell's attorneys said. The human rights panel declined comment.

Hines declined comment on the cases. Speaking generally, Hines said his agency "has an outstanding record on hiring and promotion" and complies with all state and federal equal employment requirements.

However, a juror in the Frost case told The Dallas Morning News for a story in Sunday's editions that the jury found the agency's hiring and promotion practices under Hines questionable.

"It looked like a good-ol'-boy network," said Roberto Rodriguez of Austin.

The 12 commission members were appointed by Gov. Ann Richards. The agency certifies firefighters and licenses companies that sell fire alarms, sprinklers and extinguishers. It also conducts arson investigations at the request of local fire officials.

When he was hired in April 1992, Hines was a lobbyist for the Texas State Association of Fire Fighters who had helped draft the bill creating the agency. Before that, he was an Amarillo firefighter for several years.

In his resume, he listed his management experience as head of a local firefighters association in Amarillo and executive director of the state association of firefighters.

Rodriguez noted that Hines filled some administrative positions with friends from his church and neighborhood in Round Rock, an Austin suburb.

Frost, 55, had applied for a higher position but was turned down in favor of a younger man with lesser credentials. He then was demoted to a lower-paying job.

"Everybody quit talking to me. Hines avoided me. As far as he was concerned, I wasn't even around," Frost said.

Finally, Frost was fired. He blamed his dismissal on age discrimination.

Rodriguez said it was "very obvious what they were doing" to Frost.

"They tried to make it look like his firing was justified, but nobody believed it," he said.

An attorney general's office spokesman said there will be no appeal. Frost now works for the Texas Department of Health.

Hines' appointment to the $69,959-a-year executive director's job was, itself, the subject of a discrimination lawsuit.

The lawsuit filed by Ms. Campbell, then 52, alleged Hines did not meet the qualifications listed in the job description. He had no state agency experience, no management or administrative background, and no college degree, according to Ms. Campbell's attorneys.

The attorney general's office said Hines was well qualified.

UT researchers take part in study of violence on TV

AUSTIN (AP) — Turn off the lights and pass the popcorn to researchers at the University of Texas who must sit through 2,700 hours of television programming each season for three years.

Their prolonged viewing is part of one of the most extensive studies ever undertaken on television violence. It's being run by the National Cable Television Association.

"Our job at this site is to code reality programs, except bona fide news shows," said Ellen Wartella, dean of UT's College of Communications and a nationally known expert on the effects of television on children.

Ms. Wartella, who heads the UT team, says her task will be difficult.

"I hate watching violence. This is not going to be pleasant," she said.

Her group includes journalism professors Wayne Danielson and Dominic Lasorsa, as well as Charles Whitney, a professor of journalism and radio-television-film.

Among the shows they will watch are "America's Funniest Home Videos," "Frontline" and "Rescue 911."

Graduate and undergraduate students will be hired to do much of the television viewing and violence coding, Ms. Wartella said.

Also taking part in the study is a group of researchers at the University of California-Santa Barbara. Their load includes analyzing weekly fictional shows, soap operas, movies, specials, children's shows and music videos.

A group at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill will examine educational materials such as public service announcements against violence. University of Wisconsin at Madison researchers will study ratings and advisories placed on violent programs.

The research is being coordinated by Mediascope, a nonprofit organization founded to promote constructive depictions of social issues in the media.

Results of the study will be presented to a monitoring council comprised of industry and public interest groups. The council will make the results public.

"We want the research to be reliable and independent of industry influence," Ms. Wartella said.

The project is one of many being conducted nationwide to see what can be done about making television programs less violent. Researchers plan to meet in Austin in September to develop a detailed code for cataloging both physical and verbal violence.

A public hearing on the issue of television violence is expected to be part of the conference.

Houston distributor touts device as hail buster

HOUSTON (AP) — Let's consider a hailstorm as a farmer's equivalent of a Scud missile attack.

He can see it coming. He's not exactly sure where it's going to hit, but he knows it's going to cause damage.

A Houston firm believes it has something akin to a Patriot missile system to intercept and destroy those potentially dangerous and costly balls of ice that fall from the sky.

Pro-Shield Inc. is touting its Anti-Hail Cannon as "100 percent effective" in protecting crops and even promises to buy back the $130,000 system plus 16.5 percent if it fails to prevent damage.

The first American installation of the Canadian-manufactured device is set for today at a Clovis, N.M., farm, where it will protect some 200 acres of onions.

"Hail is always a major problem for us," says Terry Lusk, who with his father and brother run Lusk Onion Inc. and are awaiting delivery of the machine. "We lost nearly all of our crop in a hailstorm in April and it was worth $500,000. So this really is not much of a gamble."

About 350 similar cannons have been used for up to 15 years around the world, protecting such things as French vineyards and Mexican apple orchards, says Robert McVicker, whose Houston-based Pro-Shield has the U.S. rights to the Anti-Hail Cannon.

"It's been a tough sell," McVicker acknowledges. "But when I sit down and start to explain, I notice people scoot up and get to the edge of their seats. They can see how it works."

The "cannon" resembles a 4-foot-long metal chimney coming from the roof of a 12-foot-by-14-foot quonset hut. Inside the metal hut, gas from a dozen acetylene tanks propels through the cannon low-frequency elliptical shock waves at the speed of sound into a cumulonimbus cloud — a thunderhead and potential hail producer. A solar-powered computer regulates the device.

A farmer or grower carrying a handheld radio can start the device by remote control when he sees a thunderstorm approaching. It also can be attached to a radar system that automatically will start it when a storm is detected.

Sound waves fired six seconds apart into the air for 30 minutes before it is directly overhead destroy the delicate microphysical balance and block the formation of hail, according to the company. In addition, the accumulation of shock waves and vibrations created by the cannon is supposed to accelerate the thawing of stones.

Dallas cashes in on World Cup, but not as much as hoped for DALLAS (AP) — While city officials continue counting revenue from the World Cup's three-week stay in Dallas, early indications are that the soccer spectacle brought about $50 million to the local economy, officials say.

As nice as it sounds, that number would be less than one-fifth the $266 million originally projected by World Cup officials and about half the December 1991 estimation of Dallas city officials.

Still, the tournament's first visit to the United States is being hailed as a success in Texas, especially considering intangible benefits such as the exposure and positive image Dallas projected to a global audience.

"The World Cup was a major success for us," Mayor Steve Bartlett said. "Now the challenge is to use what we learned from the World Cup and move on."

But not all found the event to be prosperous.

Businesses, restaurants and hotels, which were told to expect much higher profits, viewed the final tally as slightly disappointing.

Hotels were among the hardest hit as projections of 300,000 room nights shrunk to between 50,000 and 65,000.

Also taking jabs were several of the shops and restaurants that set up spots in the International Broadcast Center, a Fair Park facility that housed offices for television and radio reporters from more than 120 countries.

"I think we were, in the old Texas saying, given a line of bull," said Greg Thomas, co-owner of the Victory Pub at the broadcast center.

The IBC, however, played a large role in making the event a success for Dallas because radio listeners and TV viewers across the world repeatedly heard the city's name as much as any of the other eight U.S. venues.

Dallas hosted six World Cup games from June 17 to July 9, with crowds averaging 58,775. That included three sellouts at the newly refurbished, 63,998-seat Cotton Bowl.

Early estimates of profits from the games and related events show that about $50 million was pumped into the local economy, said Dave Whitney, president of the Dallas Convention & Visitors Bureau.

His office commissioned a private economic impact study to be completed in about a month.

Being a host for the Cup cost Dallas at least $18.2 million, including a $705,000 tournament operations budget and a $2.9 million police security budget, some of which will be reimbursed by World Cup.

Haitian voodoo pilgrimage

A woman offers a candle to the waters at the Saut d' Eau and the voodoo god Erzulie in northern Haiti during a Catholic and voodoo pilgrimage to the area over the weekend. The Saut d' Eau waterfall has been a site for pilgrimages since a virgin was seen in the mid-19th century atop a palm tree where the church of Ville Bonheur now stands. They bathe themselves and offer candles for spiritual purification.

Intelligence community wonders about N. Korea's apparent chief

By Elaine Sciolino
N.Y. Times News Service

SEOUL, SOUTH KOREA — Depending on who is doing the talking, Kim Jong Il is a depraved movie fan who abuses women and alcohol, a terrorist who masterminded the 1983 bombing of the South Korean Cabinet and the 1987 midair bombing of a South Korean airliner, a shy, awkward misunderstood technocrat who longs to be a statesman, or all, some or none of the above.

The sharply divergent views underscore the scarcity of reliable information about the the portly 52-year-old who has begun to emerge as North Korea's new leader, a man American intelligence officials still refer to as "junior" or "the kid."

President Clinton sounded as baffled as everyone else when he was asked about Mr. Kim last Monday, three days after the death of his father, Kim Il Sung, the world's longest-ruling dictator.

"I don't know the younger Kim," Clinton said. "And I think you have to be careful in judging people by what others say about them one way or the other."

Kim-watchers spun themselves into an analytical frenzy overnight when the funeral of the father, set for Sunday, was suddenly postponed Friday. But by this morning, officials in Seoul suggested that the succession was on track.

Kim's prospects, character and personal habits would hardly matter if the stakes were not so high for both Asia and the world. For he appears to be taking over what the Clinton administration says is a rogue regime that may already have one or two nuclear bombs.

Few outsiders have ever met him, and he has rarely traveled outside the country. Much of what is said to be known about him is suspect because it comes from defectors whose views have been filtered through South Korean intelligence. When foreign visitors ask to meet him, as former President Jimmy Carter did during his recent trip, they are told he is out among the people in the countryside.

Both American and South Korean intelligence officials are so in the dark about Kim that they are reduced to analyzing frames from North Korean television of such seemingly minor details as changes in his weight, his elevator shoes, his pompadour hairdo and a sometimes drooping lower lip.

The information void has triggered a ferocious debate within the administration — both between the State Department and the Central Intelligence Agency and within the CIA itself — over who he is, what his intentions are and whether he will be able to fill his father's shoes.

The more benign view, shared by the State Department and some analysts in the CIA, is that while Kim may be eccentric, he has run the day-to-day operations of the country for some time, is now clearly in charge and may emerge eventually as a responsible leader.

The other view, shared by much of the CIA and the Pentagon establishment, is that Kim is a Stalinist killer like his father. But because, unlike his father, he is not a national hero and does not have the respect of officials of the older generation or much of the military, he will be unable to make concessions on his country's nuclear program and lacks the charisma and standing to survive politically.

The backbiting has become so intense that different bureaus and agencies have inundated policymakers with hundreds of pages of often-contradictory analyses. "The situation we've gotten ourselves into can only be described as nutty," a longtime Korea watcher said. From Rare Glimpses,

A few close-up, if isolated, snapshots of Kim exist.

An Italian businessman, Carlo Baeli, describes Kim as a gentle soul, solicitous of his guests, curious about business and politics, and eager to have good relations with the United States.

"The thing that struck me most about him was his simplicity," Baeli said of a five-hour encounter on the Korean's yacht in September 1992.

"He was very simple in how he met me, simple through the meal we had, simple when he said goodbye. He's very versatile and has a good sense of humor. Once the world meets the man, they'll realize that he's not the man described up to now."

Baeli, 61, the president of a Rome-based exporting company, Compagnia Internationale Scambi con l'Estero, has a $120 million contract to sell finishing machinery for marble and gold to North Korea. He may not be the most objective witness, but he is one of the only ones.

Dining on fish antipasto and grilled shrimp, drinking Hennessy brandy and French wine aboard the yacht, the two men toasted their friendship and mused about the world as military and political aides stood by, Mr. Baeli said.

"He asked first about the Italian economy, how things were going in Italy," Baeli said this week in a telephone interview from Rome.

"Since we also have a Moscow office, he asked of my impressions of Russia. His sentiments toward the United States seemed to be very good. He wanted to have direct ties to the United States and not ties through other countries.

"He said they, the North Koreans, were ready and open to collaborate with the United States, and that they were already collaborating on research into Americans who died during the Korean War. He said: 'We are men and sooner or later we should come to an understanding. There is no reason for us to be enemies of the United States.'"

Gaza women enjoy new freedom after occupation

By Joel Greenberg
N.Y. Times News Service

GAZA CITY, GAZA STRIP — Sitting on the beach in pants and sunglasses, her hair uncovered, the Muslim woman broke into a smile as she described how the simple act of choosing for herself what to wear had given her a new sense of freedom.

Since Israel's withdrawal from Gaza in May and the arrival of the Palestinian police, the woman, Zahira Abu Kweik, has taken off the head scarf once imposed on local women by Islamic fundamentalists.

"They used to come and tell me, 'You're a Muslim, cover your hair,' but now nobody says anything," Mrs. Abu Kweik said. "There's a feeling of security."

Part of an austere social code enforced during the uprising against Israeli occupation, the head scarf is now being left at home by some women in Gaza.

For sure, they are still a small minority in this religiously conservative city, but their numbers on the streets are growing, part of a general easing of tensions since Israeli forces left in May.

Still, while the mood may be more relaxed and women are enjoying greater leeway in what they wear, many Gazans question whether this augurs genuine gains in rights and social status.

With the formal establishment this month of a Palestinian self-governing authority in Gaza and the town of Jericho on the West Bank, women's groups have begun pressing the case for equality more insistently. Meet With Arafat

Women from the various political groups have joined forces to press their issues before the nascent Palestinian authority, taking their case to Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization. At a meeting with him in Gaza this month, they won a commitment to form a committee on women's affairs, answerable to Arafat himself.

They have also circulated a proposed bill of rights for women, which they want included in a planned Palestinian constitution.

The head scarf, and the readiness of some women to discard it, is perhaps the most visible symbol of the changes afoot. During the uprising, it was promoted as a symbol of religious defiance of the Israeli authorities, a sign of mourning for Palestinians killed in street clashes and protection against any harassment by Israeli soldiers.

Now, with the Israelis gone from towns and refugee areas and with Palestinian police officers on the streets, women who have taken off the scarf say they no longer fear attacks by Islamic militants, who sometimes used to throw stones, eggs and even paint at those they considered immodestly dressed.

The relatively relaxed atmosphere is evident in clothing shops, which now display brightly colored dresses, some well above ankle length, as an alternative to the somber Islamic gowns that used to predominate. Beauty parlors are back in business.

For years, many were closed and some set on fire by militant Islamic groups, which called them dens of promiscuity, where women were blackmailed into becoming informers for the Israeli security service.

Hair styling, makeup and evening dresses, considered frivolities during the uprising, are again acceptable.

But are these changes enough? Leaders of women's groups here are not so sure as they tote up their gains and losses from the period resistance against Israel. At first, they say, the revolt helped women by bringing them out of the houses and into the streets to join the protests. It put them in charge of families and political groups when men were arrested or killed, and gave them a new political awareness.

But rigid social attitudes were imposed as the revolt wore on, and these tended to hurt women, the leaders say.

Don't leave home

For more legroom during a flight, ask for a seat by the exits. To get a newer, safer rental car, ask for the car with the lowest mileage. When making a series of credit card calls from a hotel phone, avoid the $1 or $2 charges by pressing the "pound" sign between calls. Those tips, along with 199 others, can be found in Christopher McGinnis' new book "202 Tips Even the Best Business Travelers May Not Know." Some of his suggestions will please even the non-traveler — to keep in touch while on the road, McGinness suggests hiding notes or gifts in your houme and giving family members clues on where to find them when you call.

A hard bargain

A HARD BARGAIN: With the economy improving and demand for workers growing, job candidates are in a stronger position to negotiate with prospective employers — but probably not in the two critical areas of salary and benefits, says Drake Beam Morin Inc., a consulting firm. Still, the company says, there are quality of life issues that may be up for discussion, such as working hours, vacations, office size and location, and the type of computer an employee will use. "If the company likes you enough to offer you the job and what you want really doesn't cost them more in cash, you may very well get everything," says Bill Morin, Drake Beam's chairman.

EXCAVATORS FOR DUMMIES: Research reports by securities analysts typically are filled with a jumble of terminology that leaves anyone unfamiliar with a particular industry in the dark. So J. Blair Brumley, who tracks the heavy equipment industry for Dain Bosworth Inc. in Minneapolis, has written a five-page primer complete with pictures and describing equipment from air compressors to wheel loaders. Among the interesting tidbits in the report: The machines we call steam rollers are known as compactors in the trade, and backhoes are the most popular construction equipment in the United States.

The name game

During the first half of 1994, eighty-six publicly traded U.S. corporations changed their names, up 34 percent from a year earlier, according to the Schecter Group., a firm that advises companies seeking new identities. Alvin Schecter, the firm's chairman, says this is good news: "Management must be very optimistic regarding the economy if they are willing to invest in positioning their companies for the future." The bad news, according to Schecter, is too many companies are switching to initials for their new names. That works for AT&T, which adopted its well-known initials as its corporate name during the first half after being called American Telephone & Telegraph. But Schecter's firm said less recognizable initials may not work for other companies.

Rising interest rates become frightening

By Corrie M. Anders
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — It was nice while it lasted. Low interest rates meant smaller mortgage payments for real estate investors, many of them recession-weary owners who needed the extra cash simply to keep afloat during the past few years.

But rising interest rates — especially for adjustable rate mortgages (ARMs) — may portend harder financial times down the road, according to rental property owners and property managers. Here's why.

Apartment rents have been flat for the last three to five years across most of California, New England and other parts of the country still hurting from the recession. Expenses, however, have been rising. The bottom line was kept more or less in check because of the lower mortgage payments.

"That's what kept a lot of owners going," said Sherman Zell, president of Zell Associates, a large property management firm based in San Jose, Calif. "But they may be shocked as rates go up and those savings evaporate."

For example, assume there is a $1.5 million adjustable-rate loan on a 35-unit building. An increase of one percentage point in the interest rate will cost the property owner an extra $15,000 annually or $1,250 a month.

Rents would have to rise $35 a month to recover the increased loan payments and "that's more than you can pick up," said Jerome L. Storm, principal of Yale Investment Co. in Palo Alto. "That gets to be onerous."

After dropping to 25-year lows late last year, interest rates started climbing in February, with a 30-year fixed-rate loan jumping from about 7 percent to the mid-8 percent range. The increase in ARMs may not be felt immediately. That's because changes in ARMs generally are reflected in new loan payments on an annual or semiannual basis.

While most rental industry specialist don't expect rates to skyrocket, some fret that the increases could be significant. Real estate broker-investor James Forbes, who publishes the San Francisco Property Report newsletter, warned that "that God-awful term of the late '80s will re-enter our real estate vocabulary: negative amortization." That's a scenario where the monthly payment is inadequate to pay the full amount of the interest due and the shortage is added to the principal of the loan.

On the other side of the coin, when interest rates rise, fewer tenants move out to buy their own home; that helps keep rental cash flow stable.

Still, a systematic review of operations is paramount at a time of change, and Zell and Strom both are industry professionals skilled at controlling costs. Zell owns or manages more than 1,500 units, from single-family houses to garden-style apartments. Strom owns or manages another 1,000 rentals.

How to protect yourself

So whether you're in recession-ravished parts of the country, such as California or the Northeast, or in Texas, Denver, Salt Lake City or other areas with vibrant economies, here are some steps professional managers suggest you take now to protect yourself from the cash drain of higher interest rates.

Property tax: This usually takes the biggest bite out of the expenses of operating rental property. But there is an opportunity for owners in California who have purchased since the late 1980s to save significant amounts of money.

That's because property values have plunged 20 to 30 percent in many California neighborhoods — and state law permits downward revisions if there is a decline in property values.

File a Proposition 8 appeal with your county assessor. A 15 percent reduction on a $1 million property will save nearly $2,000 and just over $7,380 for a $4 million property.

"Fifteen percent isn't real hard to get if you've got your facts lined up," said Strom. Appeals must be filed annually between July 2 and Sept. 15.

Capital improvements: Many of the nation's rentals were built during the 1958-1966 apartment boom and are starting to show their age. It makes sense to han-

Companies increase hiring of temporary workers

AP/Bob Bianchini

By Lisa Genasci
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Hiring temporary workers is part of the business strategy at Silicon Graphics. At any time, between 10 percent and 12 percent of the computer company's work force is employed on a short-term basis.

"It makes good business sense," said Leilani Gayles, vice president of employee relations. "It allows us to be responsive, access people with specific skills and saves us money."

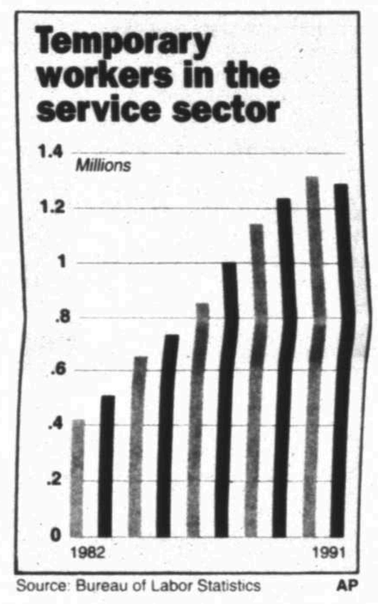

Nationwide, it's estimated that employees who work part time, on a temporary basis or as freelancers or consultants, now make up about a quarter of the work force. And the category growing faster than any other is that of temporary workers.

"There is nothing short of another industrial revolution going on out there in terms of how work is being structured and people are being paid," said David A. Hofrichter, managing director of The Hay Group, a consulting firm.

Hofrichter estimates that in the not-too-distant-future, three out of every seven workers hired will be on a short-term basis. A company's work force will consist of a small core of highly skilled permanent workers aided by temporary employees brought in during peak periods or for special projects, he said.

Companies have found that hiring temporary workers saves them a lot of money. Temporary employees usually work without health care or pension benefits and save companies on payroll expenses and administrative costs, as well as office and plant space.

"There is now an incentive for employers to hire temps and part-timers as a permanent solution," said Ellen Bravo, executive director of 9 to 5, National Association of Working Women.

Source: Bureau of Labor Statistics AP

But, she said, "That's often at the expense of workers and their families."

The bulk of people taking short-term jobs do so because they have no choice — they can't find full-time work, analysts say. And many find themselves having to take both night and daytime jobs to earn the salaries they need.

"It's the best I can do at the moment," said a systems engineer who has worked a series of short-term as-

Merge 401(k) money into a pension

By Mary Rowland
N.Y. Times News Service

Albany International Corp., a supplier to the paper industry based in Albany, N.Y., has come up with an unusual solution to a growing problem for retirees: how to make the most of 401(k) money.

These retirement plans, which allow employees to set aside a portion of their salary before taxes, are more than a decade old, and many people are now retiring with substantial accounts. And that's a good thing because employers have been reducing the benefits in their traditional pension plans.

To help retirees manage their money, Albany International added an unusual payout option on April 1. Retirees can put all or part of their 401(k) balance into the company pension plan and receive it in monthly payouts as a supplement to regular pension income. In this way, employees get professional money management by a pension expert and a steady stream of income.

No-load directories

Q: Is there a directory of no-load stock mutual funds that shows the minimum initial investment required by each and whether an automatic regular investment plan is available?
— William Niles, Boynton Beach, Fla.

A: The 100% No-Load Mutual Fund Council, (212) 768-2477, publishes an annual "Investment Guide and Member Fund Directory." Not all no-load funds are members of this group, however. Other sources of information about no-loads include "The Individual Investor's Guide to Low-Load Mutual Funds," published by the American Association of Individual Investors, (312) 280-0170; "The Mutual Fund Encyclopedia" by Gerald Perritt (312) 649-6940, and "The Handbook for No-Load Fund Investors" by Sheldon Jacobs (914) 693-7420).

"The mutual fund stock tables which appear in the daily press list no-load funds with the symbol N.L.," said Irving Straus, president of the council. "Identifying those mutual funds that are, in fact, pure no-load has gotten far more difficult since the SEC has allowed funds that charge a 0.25 percent 12(b) (1) fee to call themselves no-load."

IRA withdrawals

Q: I plan to take my first distribution from my individual retirement account at institution A, leaving an IRA at institution B untouched. How can I keep institution B from withholding the tax imposed for not taking the necessary distributions?
— J.C. Wang, Flushing, N.Y.

A: As you suggest, a distribution is not required from each account. You can calculate the minimum based on your combined balances and then take that amount from any account.

"The IRA custodian is not required to withhold the 50 percent excise tax, so the owner does not have to be concerned that the custodian will do so," said Martin Nissenbaum, a tax partner of Ernst & Young.

Stock transfers

Q: Can stock be transferred from an individual retirement account to a regular account at the same brokerage house, with the value of the stock commensurate to the required withdrawal amount? If so, would the cost basis be the value on the date of transfer?
— Carl C. Raisig, Glen Cove, N.Y.

A: You can choose to take a distribution from your retirement account in securities, rather than cash, and have those securities transferred directly to another account at the same firm. The value of these securities must be calculated to satisfy any minimum withdrawal amounts.

Interest grows in savings bonds

By Bill Doyle

Q: I am now in my 70s. I have many Series E and EE U.S. Savings Bonds dating from March 1957 into the 1980s. When do I have to cash in the 1957 bonds?

Doyle

A: You won't "have to" redeem any of your savings bonds until you are strapped for cash or until a bond reaches "final maturity." The good news is that even your March 1957 your bonds will not arrive at final maturity until March 1997.

That's because, although issued with shorter original maturities ranging from five to 18 years, all E and EE Savings Bonds, have been granted "extended maturity periods," during which they continue to accrue interest.

E bonds issued before December 1965 reach final maturity in 40 years; Es issued after that finally mature in 30 years, as do all EEs.

Also, you don't have to redeem your Es and EEs at their final maturities. Instead of doing that – and incurring a federal income tax obligation on the interest that has built up on them – you can exchange your Es and EEs for Series HH U.S. Savings Bonds in amounts of $500 or more.

By making that exchange, you will postpone paying income tax on the accumulated E bond interest until you redeem the HH bonds received in the exchange. You can put that off for another 20 years.

The HHs you will receive in the exchange are current interest bonds. The HHs now being issued pay 4 percent annually, which is subject to federal – but not state or local – income tax.

Q: About 10 years ago, I exchanged EE bonds for HH bonds. I have no record of the amount of interest accumulated on the EE bonds, on which I will be required to pay federal income when I redeem the HHs. I assume the government has this information on file someplace. Where should I write to get it?

A: There is no need to write away for that information. You already have it. It's typed on the HHs you received in the exchange, within a paragraph reading: "Accrued interest of $ on Savings Bonds/Savings Notes exchanged for this Bond and included in its issue price is reportable for federal income tax purposes, for the year of redemption, disposition of final maturity of this bond, whichever is earlier."

If you received only one HH bond when you made the exchange, all your deferred interest will appear after the dollar sign. If you received two or more HHs, a proportionate amount of the deferred interest will be recorded on each HH.

Q: Many of the E and EE bonds I have are registered in my wife's name, "P.O.D." to my name. Of course, P.O.D. means "payable on death." My wife passed away recently, so those bonds now belong to me.

At the bank, I was told, in order to cash the P.O.D. bonds, I will need my wife's original death certificate – not a duplicate. I have only one death certificate for her. Can I use that certificate to cash all the P.O.D. bonds?

A: Certainly! Simply present that death certificate, along with the E and EE bonds you want to cash, to your local bank or other U.S. Savings Bond paying agent. Assuming you are known at the bank or can establish your identity, the bonds will be redeemed on the spot.

You will be required to furnish your Social Security number as a "taxpayer identification number," so that the Internal Revenue Service can use its "matching" program to make sure you report and pay tax on all your taxable income.

dle maintenance chores now so properties will be in good shape when cash is tighter because of higher interest rates.

Pays good dividends

An owner with a building circa 1950-1960 can replace the yellow, pink or purple tile countertops in the kitchen with a new color-coordinated Formica top for $600, suggested Strom. Replacing that green or gold shag carpet or an old refrigerator "pay good dividends," he said.

Improvements such as replacing the roof, painting the building's exterior or installing new carpeting or kitchen appliance have a cumulative effect: fewer tenants move out, there's less turnover cost and vacant units rerent easier.

Smart owners "put a few dollars aside for improvements to their properties during the years while loan payments were going down," Storm said.

Utilities: These are difficult expenses to shave. Property managers say garbage, water, electric and gas expenses normally account for 5 percent of a building's gross scheduled rental income, but have risen to the 7 percent range over the last few years.

Try switching from incandescent lighting to energy-efficient fluorescent or sodium vapor lighting. Zell and Strom each own or manage more than 1,000 units — from single-family houses to garden-style apartment complexes — and have converted most of their properties with savings up to 25 percent.

PG&E, as well as many utility companies across the country offer cash rebates for converting to energy-efficient lighting, refrigerators or ranges. Ask your local utility if they provide rebates.

Good for environment

Ask tenants to recycle their trash. It's good for the environment and an owner conceivably would need smaller or fewer garbage receptacles. Low flush toilets and low flow shower heads can reduce water usage.

Replacement Reserves: Take the extra cash from lower mortgage payments and place it in a true replacement reserve account. Depending on the age, type and location of the property, replacement reserves should total between $200 and $400 per unit, according to Robert Sheehan, economist for the National Apartment Association.

Proper tenant screening: It's something owners sometimes wink at during tough rental periods. They shouldn't says, Theresa Hite, principal of Summit Properties, a property management firm in Vacaville and vice president of the California Apartment Association.

"You don't rent a unit until you have a qualified tenant," Hite said. "it will save you heavy tenant turnover, the potential they (a bad tenant) will run out other tenants" or eviction expenses.

TEMPS: Workers often don't feel sense of loyalty

signments at IBM. She asked not to be named for fear of jeopardizing future employment with the company.

The systems engineer was offered incentives by International Business Machines Corp. to quit her job of 13 years, then took a temporary assignment at the company after 10 months of unemployment. The job ended after a year, but she has since taken shorter assignments at the company.

But some workers do seek part-time or temporary jobs that give them more time to spend with family. At Uniforce Services, an employment agency, 30 percent of temporary employees aren't looking for a permanent job, said Rosemary Maniscalco, the company's chief operating officer.

The hiring of temporary workers has grown with the pace of corporate restructurings, even expanding as the economy has recovered, said John Challenger of Challenger, Gray & Christmas, Inc., an employment consultancy.

With more people left unemployed by layoffs, more workers are available for short-term assignments. Increasingly, they include highly skilled and professional employees whose jobs were eliminated in restructurings.

At the same time, after companies have laid off permanent workers, they often have turned to temporary employees to meet their needs during the ebb and flow of the work cycle and to reduce employment costs, Hofrichter said.

"Companies want to have a work force that can flex with demand," he said.

IBM found the need for temporary workers after having eliminated 150,000 permanent jobs since 1986. However, the company says it does not know how many of its former employees are working there on a temporary basis.

With the economy changing rapidly, companies often aren't sure what their staffing needs will be and, by contracting for shorter periods, they can hire workers to fill gaps.

Because of the circumstances of their employment, many temporary workers have qualities and work habits that companies want. They can be more productive, for example, because they don't have the social relationships at the office that permanent employees enjoy, Maniscalco said.

"They are paid by the hour. There's no chatting around the watercooler, they don't spend time on personal calls," Maniscalco said. "They are only paid for the time they work, not for lunches or other breaks."

Temporary work can have some positive results for employees. Hiring someone for a specific period allows companies to take a look at a prospective full-timer. Recent college graduates are now frequently hired on a short-term basis, business consultants say.

"Companies are skittish about taking on new full-time employees," Challenger said. "This is a way to select the cream of the crop."

The increase in temporary hiring also has been a plus for employment agencies, whose business has grown to meet the demand for short-term employees.

'There is new management, new people and a new set of rules and that's what the marketplace is all about.'

— David Chu, research director

Workers hired through temporary help firms make up 1.4 percent of employees, up from 0.5 percent in 1983. Meanwhile, annual payroll for temporary agencies last year was $19.6 billion, up from $4 billion a decade ago, according to the National Association of Temporary Services, a trade group.

Although maintaining a just-in-time labor force offers advantages to business, it isn't necessarily good for workers or for the economy, said David Chu, research director of the Service Employees International Union.

"I don't think companies have given adequate thought to the issue," Chu said. "There will be grave long-term consequences of working people into the economy in a more narrow sense."

Chu said companies risk ending up with a large portion of the labor force that makes less money and lacks basic benefits. If people have less money, they spend less and that hurts economic growth.

"That's a problem for an economy built partly on consumer spending," Chu said.

The growth of the temporary work force, Challenger said, also has helped weaken bonds between employer and employee. While employees in past decades started with a company they might reasonably expect to work with for their entire working life, now the average tenure is about seven years, he said.

That means temporary workers may not have the loyalty to a firm that permanent employees have. And there may be friction between the short-term worker and the permanent staff — often, in higher skilled professions, the contract workers who receive no benefits are paid higher hourly wages than their permanent colleagues.

Challenger says the old structure of the workplace has changed completely in today's business world.

"You can have nostalgia for the past but it doesn't exist anymore," he said. "There is new management and new people, a new set of rules and that's what the marketplace is about."

But at Dell Computer Corp., executives found after relying heavily on temporary workers that a permanent staff often made more sense, according to Kevin O'Conner, director of human resources.

Permanent employees, Dell found, had a higher commitment to the company, produced higher quality work and improved morale. The company is in the process of converting about 150 temporary jobs into permanent positions.

LOANS: Extended payback plans could cause havoc with finances

(From 1B)

The change is part of the Clinton administration's effort to make education more accessible and to reduce loan default rates. In one shift, the government is to begin making some student loans directly, cutting out banks and other private lenders and their fees.

The direct-lending program will be available through 104 schools this fall. Initially, borrowers in this program will be able to choose the 30-year term and other extended payment options, but all student borrowers may have such choices in the near future.

Under guidelines for the program issued by the Department of Education last week, a borrower can choose to make a fixed monthly payment for 10 years or another fixed period of 12 to 30 years.

Another option allows the loan to be paid for 12 to 30 years at a monthly rate that varies with the loan balance. Finally, monthly payments can be based on a percentage of income for up to 25 years.

The standard repayment term has been 10 years with a $50 minimum monthly installment, although loan consolidation programs and extended paybacks have sometimes been arranged through a private lender.

Financial advisers and education consultants consider the new guidelines an improvement because they enable more people to go to school, give borrowers more debt options and allow graduates more freedom in choosing a job. But they temper that assessment with some reservations.

Although more people may be able to repay tens of thousands of dollars if they are given three decades, many may not realize they will be returning the money several times over.

Furthermore, extended payback periods could cause havoc with long-term financial planning, as student loans overlap with car and home loans. In fact, people could end up with payments remaining on their own student loans when their children are ready for college.

"Loans used to be one size fits all," said Terry Hartle of the American Council on Education. "Now borrowers need much more sophisticated advice and need to think about loans in a much more comprehensive way. Essentially, they raise the opportunities as well as the risks for people."

PENSION: Some retirees roll funds into IRAs

(From 1B)

"The company looked at the 401(k) plans and saw that the balance may exceed the value of an employee's home and all other investments," said Darrel J. Croot, a principal in the Stamford, Conn., office of William M. Mercer Inc., a benefits consulting firm.

Ronal P. Hall, director of human resources at the company, said Albany International was concerned about what would happen to these large balances. While the company guides employees and screens the investment products carefully in its 401(k) plan, after employees retire, they may make poor choices or fall victim to unscrupulous financial professionals.

The monthly payout plan resembles an annuity purchased from an insurance company — with a couple of important differences. Unlike an insurer, Albany International offers the plan at no cost to employees. Buying an annuity with similar features would be expensive, said Hanora Sarro, a Mercer consultant.

When the company was designing the plan, Hall had Mercer survey the annuity market to see how the company's payout stacked up. "Our return was about 18 percent better than the best annuity they could find because we have no sales commission and no fees," he said.

Retirees often roll over their 401(k) money into an individual retirement account, in which case a portion goes to a professional money manager, or they manage it themselves.

Annuities are another popular option, providing steady payments and assuring people they won't outlive their money. But, as noted, the expenses are high.

For Albany International, the annuity-style payout option was part of a larger change in its pension program. Like many companies, Albany is reducing benefits in its traditional pension plan, called a defined benefit plan because the payout is set at retirement. Defined benefit plans are financed entirely by the employer, and benefits arebased on final pay and years of service.

"We now have a new generation of employees who appreciate a 401(k) plan," Hall said. "They like the portability, and they like the control." Participants in the plans decide how to invest their pretax contributions and can take their funds with them when they switch employers.

Ms. Sarro expects other companies to copy Albany International's program, but notes one stumbling block. "Many companies are dropping defined benefit plans," she said. "This option requires a commitment to stick with a defined benefit plan of some sort."

Albany International introduced its 401(k) plan for salaried employees in 1983 and has since allowed hourly employees and union employees to join. The company employs 6,000 people worldwide, and the 2,250 in the United States are all included.

Overweight
It's not your fault

Research sites chemical or metabolism disorders as the leading cause of weight problems. The fact is most overweight people eat less and more healthy than most people who are able to maintain their weight.

The abuse of fat and calories did not create the problem and restrictive calorie dieting offers only temporary success. Low calorie/fat dieting can further deteriorate our Metabolism and Sugar System, therefore we often gain back more weight than we lose.

The M Balance weight management system is a one-on-one diagnostic diet program designed to analyze the rate our body uses energies and all those things that may influence weight control.

No pills, formulas or pre-packaged foods. Losing weight is not the same as solving a weight problem.

Boy battles odds to play baseball, live

DALLAS (AP) — Eight-year-old right fielder Chantz Cottrell doesn't seem too upset by the pounding his team is taking.

In fact, he seems happy out there in the field, his glove perched on his left shoulder as his Grapevine All-Stars No. 2 let by seemingly countless runs. At times, he appears to be singing.

Chantz seems perfectly healthy, but he's not. He has cystic fibrosis and is the victim of a potentially deadly fungus that is spreading through his lungs.

His coach, Charles Arthur, calls Chantz a "miracle."

"The world can never have enough heroes," Arthur said, explaining Chantz's selection as the Grapevine Baseball-Softball Association Player of the Year.

"To our team of players, coaches and parents, Chantz Cottrell is a hero who longs just to be a normal little boy," Arthur said.

But Chantz is far from normal.

In 10 days he'll have to return to the hospital, where doctors will use physical therapy, antibiotics and other treatments to try to stop the fungus spreading in his lungs.

The aspergillus fungus shortens his breath and makes him ineligible for a liver transplant. A biopsy in the spring showed the cystic fibrosis, diagnosed when he was six months old, is destroying his liver. He needs a new one.

Summer camp beefs up academic skills

By Guy H. Lawrence
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal

Then the nervous boy, clad in red and black, reels off manta ray facts he learned at "Camp Papillion."

"We do lots of neat stuff," he said, explaining why he likes the camp.

Mendez and about 55 other students — third-, fourth- and fifth-graders — are in the midst of a six-week program at Austin Elementary to strengthen academic skills they learned during the long school year.

But the program seems more like summer camp than summer school.

"Hopefully we are changing some of their thoughts about school being drudgery," said Maybelle Kern, principal of Austin Elementary.

Kern also hopes Camp Papillion will help the school improve poor scores on the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills test.

This year, the Legislature set aside about $1.5 million for innovative education programs. The Texas Education Agency awarded Austin Elementary $142,000 to cover the costs of its program for two years.

'Hopefully we are changing some of their thoughts about school being drudgery.'

— Maybelle Kern, Austin Elementary, principal

Camp Papillion started June 9 and ends Tuesday with a family cookout. During the regular school session, students will participate in after-school tutorials.

Later the district will track the students' performance on the TAAS test.

"The point is not to teach new things but to explore and expand what they already know," Kern said.

The word papillion, she explains, is French for butterfly. It symbolizes a butterfly's emergence from a cocoon to explore the world.

The mornings at the camp are filled with academic activities. Students study the ocean and turn their knowledge into paper-mache animals and stories for their book publishing project. Students also plan trips across the state, calculating the miles, the driving time and the cost of fuel.

"I think the best part of the program has been the excitement of the teachers," Kern said. "They are excited about doing things they don't normally do during the year."

"I love it," teacher Kathy Fergeson said. "I have really enjoyed it more than I thought I would."

Fergeson, a teacher for 27 years, oversees the camp's publishing project. The students map out stories and adhere to deadline schedules tucked in folders that serve as briefcases for each student. The students write and illustrate their work, sometimes with a little help from the teacher.

"They have pride in it," Fergeson said.

One boy was working on a book about a trip to heaven because his brother died recently.

Another student, Adrian Fisher, 10, worked diligently and quietly on a book about a deep-sea search for sunken treasure. He used an orange pencil to outline the rays of the sun. "I wish they did this during regular school," he said.

DEAR ABBY

Mom shouldn't be concerned about son who likes to play with dolls

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Concerned Mom," whose 2-year-old son, "Ricky," liked to play with dolls. We, too, have a son who, at that age, requested a special Cabbage Patch doll for Christmas. He played with the doll for years, and now, at the age of 12, he still keeps that doll in his room.

Van Buren

Has it made him "funny"? Only if you consider a young man who never leaves for school, hangs up the phone, or goes to sleep without telling us he loves us "funny"; who never allows me to open a door, who always compliments his aunts and sister, who cringes when he hears other children talk back to their parents, who absolutely loves to baby-sit young children, who can carry on an intelligent conversation with adults, who plays baseball and basketball with a vengeance, and is not afraid to clean up the kitchen or show affection in front of his friends — "funny."

His sister, who is in college, says, "We all want to meet someone like Michael."

So, relax, "Concerned," and let his nurturing tendencies bear fruit. — GINNY FROM OREGON

DEAR GINNY: The letters for "Concerned Mom" are still coming in. A few samples to further reassure the mother whose son preferred dolls to more masculine toys that she has nothing to worry about:

DEAR ABBY: When my son was 2 1/2, I gave him a doll. He slapped it under his arm as he rode his tricycle up and down in front of the house, where I could easily monitor him through the kitchen window.

One day I saw a rather disagreeable elderly neighbor woman bend over and say something to him, which caused him to run to our front door. When I opened it, he asked, "Mommy, am I a little boy or a little girl?" Of course, I told him that he was a little boy, and since (even at 2 1/2) he spoke very clearly, I told him what to say if this neighbor — or anyone else — questioned him about his doll.

This same neighbor asked my son why he had a doll. I saw her startled face when he looked up at her with his big blue eyes and said clearly, "I'm developing my paternal instincts!"

Incidentally, Abby, both my sons have become wonderful fathers. I might add, my daughter played with trucks as well as dolls.

Yours for better parents ... BETSY MOSS, PHOENIX

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Concerned Mom," I have two sons, Bret, who is 2 years old, and Nicolas, 8 months.

When I was pregnant with my second, I gave Bret a doll from my childhood. Every day, we bathed, fed and dressed the "baby," so that when Nicolas was born, Bret knew what to expect.

Everyone is amazed at how loving Bret is toward his little brother and how much he enjoys helping me with him. Bret also loves to help me cook and clean.

No one would think twice about a girl shooting baskets or playing with cars, but boys are still supposed to remain "boyish." If we give our sons the freedom to express their feelings when they are young, maybe they will feel freer to express their emotions when they become adults. — ROBIN GIDDINGS, ELKART, IND.

DEAR ROBIN: Your sons are fortunate to have a mother with your wisdom.

A look at life away from the diamond for the Midland Angels

The upright bat and shadow of player/coach Jeff Barns form a still life at a batting practice of the Midland Angels, the double A affiliate of the California Angels.

Rangers hire Morett

Greenwood has a new boys' basketball coach, but his name is by no means new to Midland.

Justin Morett, a Midland High graduate and a member of Midland College's 1982 national championship basketball team, signed a contract this month to coach at Greenwood.

Morett played on two MHS hoop teams that won district titles in '80 and '81. He's been an assistant at Port Arthur Lincoln for the past four seasons.

"He was at Midland High when they won district and Midland College when they won the national championship and Port Arthur when they won state," said Greenwood athletic director and football coach Bob Purser. "We hope he can continue that success here."

In Morett's tenure at Jefferson the Bumblebees made the playoffs all four years and went to the state tournament three times. They won the Class 4A state title in '91, lost to Dallas Lincoln by one point in the title game in '93 and lost a semifinal this year.

"I've had the experience of being in the playoffs and know what kind of work you have to do to get there," Morett said. "I already know (Greenwood) has a good basketball tradition being from that area."

Morett graduated from Texas Tech. He worked as head basketball coach at Spade, Texas, for two seasons before going to Port Arthur.

"Were pretty excited about him," Purser said. "He's got a pretty good personality and he seems really sincere about kids."

Morett replaces Robert Chaney who took a basketball head coaching job in Ennis after seven years at Greenwood.

WORLD CUP FINAL

Finally, it's Brazil

■ Brazil wins the first shootout in World Cup final history to take the title back to South America.

By Barry Wilner
AP Sports Writer

PASADENA, Calif. — It would have been so easy for Brazil to fold.

When the World Cup final went to a shootout Sunday, any edge the brilliant Brazilians held over Italy seemed gone. The breathtaking ball movement and vise-like defense no longer mattered. The game had come down to penalty kicks.

That's how close Brazil's unprecedented fourth title came to not happening.

It took the first shootout in the tournament final, which the Brazilians won 3-2 after 120 minutes of scoreless soccer.

"Penalty kicks are a lottery and nobody likes to arrive at a penalty-kick decision," said goalkeeper Claudio Taffarel.

The victory brought redemption for Brazil, which was ridiculed for two decades when it failed to bring home the trophy.

"Not many people believed in us, but we the players believed we could win the fourth title for our people," Bebeto sad.

The defeat brought respect for the Italians, who struggled early, barely advancing, then rode the great Roberto Baggio's scoring into the final.

But when Baggio sailed a penalty kick over the net, Italy's third miss in the shootout, Brazil fnally had its championship.

"Brazil is a very great team and I think they were luckier than us," Italy captain Franco Baresi said. "I think when you reach the finals and lose, it is horrible, whether on the field or in penalties."

It was a nerve-racking and perhaps unfair way to decide a world title, not unlike settling an NBA Finals with a foul shooting contest. It left both teams drained. It did not, however, leave the Italians complaining.

"We did our best, but we faltered in the penalty kicks," Italy coach Arrigo Sacchi said. "We are the second best in the world and we played our best today.

"There has to be a world champion. ... We have to accept the rules with great serenity."

Price is right with long putt

■ Nick Price's eagle putt on 17 gives him a come-from-behind British Open win.

By Ron Sirak
AP Sports Writer

TURNBERRY, Scotland — For Nick Price, it was a British Open won after years of working, waiting and wanting.

For Jesper Parnevik, it was a British Open lost because of a silly mistake, likely because he had never before been in such a pressure situation.

The 29-year-old Swede seemingly had the 123rd edition of golf's oldest tournament wrapped up after he birdied the 17th hole, giving him a three-stroke lead.

But Price closed with a birdie-eagle-par finish, the most dramatic stroke being a 50-to-60 foot eagle putt at 17 that took nearly 10 seconds to reach the hole.

That came after Parnevik bogeyed 18 when he mistakenly thought he needed a birdie to win. He gambled with his driver off the tee, hit the rough, and made bogey.

Price played a 3-iron safely off the 18th tee in making his par.

It all added up to a one-stroke victory for Price over Parnevik, 12-under-par

McGee-Lovett win title

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

It turned into a duel to the finish for the championship flight of the Green Tree Country Club Jamboree Sunday afternoon.

■ GTCC Jamboree

Ron and Dub Huckabee had lead from the start Friday until the back nine holes of the final round where the duo of Mac McGee and Scott Lovett birdied four consecutive holes and then held off a late rally to claim their first Jamboree championship by one stroke.

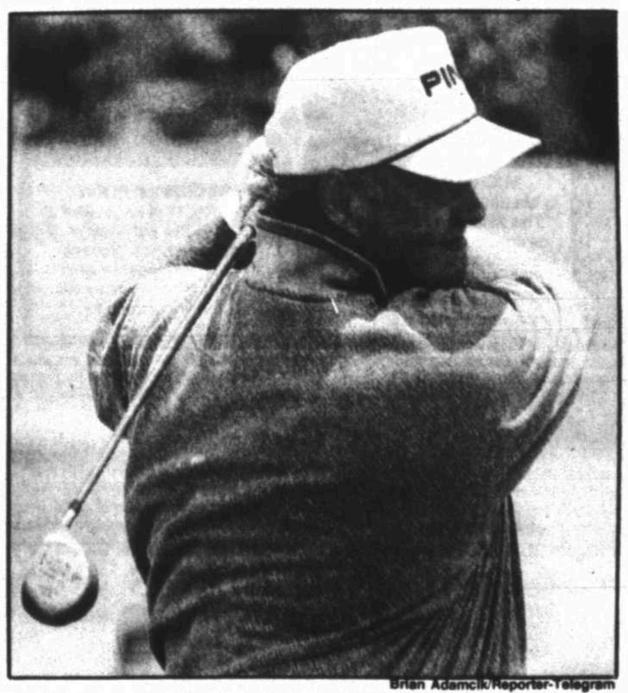

The McGee-Stovall team fired a final round five-under-par 66 for the victory.

The Huckabees shot a 68 for the second consecutive day, but the putter failed them on more than one occasion, including the final hole when Ron missed a four-foot putt that would have forced a playoff.

"On the front nine we hit the ball pretty good, but we didn't make any putts," said McGee. "(Dub and Ron) played very good, they had some putts that rolled right by the hole and just didn't go in and we were fortunate that some of ours dropped."

For McGee and Stovall the first of four consecutive birdies came on the par-4, 509-yard 13th hole. They built a three-shot lead on the back nine and then parred out the final holes for the win.

Bumpy homestand continues

■ Midland falls six games back of El Paso with their sixth loss in the last nine home games.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

There is every indication that the ship of the Midland Angels is in the midst of troubled waters.

Following an 11-4 blowout at the hands of the Shreveport Captains at Christensen Stadium Sunday night, Midland manager Mario Mendoza, who is usually available after a win or loss, refused to talk with members of the media.

And he had good cause after this one which saw the Angels play bad in the field as well as leaving big numbers on the base paths for the third consecutive night. The Angels left 11 runners on base Sunday and have now stranded 29 runners in three games, all losses to the resurgent Caps, who came to town after losing four of five games to the El Paso Diablos.

"I don't think he (Mendoza) is very happy with us right now and he has a right to be mad. That was a lousy exhibition of baseball out there tonight," said one Angel, who asked not to be identified.

This was actually a come-from-behind win for Shreveport, who saw the Angels score two runs in what looked to be a promising first inning when Chris Pritchell delivered a bases loaded single for one run and another scored on a groundout by Bo Ortiz, his first RBI as an Angel in his second game.

But then came the third inning when Shreveport took a one-run lead on one hit as Jason McFarlin scored from third on a wild pitch and both Calvin Murray and Joel Chimelis scored on a

Finley slams Bucs

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Steve Finley's grand slam featured an eight-run second inning and Shane Reynolds pitched seven scoreless relief innings after Doug Drabek was injured, leading the Houston Astros to an 9-0 victory Sunday over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The Astros couldn't win Friday despite a seven-run first inning, but there was no Pirates' comeback this time as Drabek and Reynolds (7-4) combined on a five-hit shutout.

■ NL Roundup

The Astros split the four-game series despite losing the first two games, including the 11-8 loss on Friday that saw them blow an eight-run edge.

Drabek, a former Pirate, had pitched two scoreless innings before being hit by Paul Wagner's fastball just above the right elbow while squaring to bunt with Orlando Miller on first in the third.

Drabek, lifted by manager Terry Collins for precautionary reasons, sustained a bruised forearm, but X-rays were not required and he will be examined Monday in Houston.

Giants 6, Expos 4

MONTREAL — Rookie William VanLandingham no-hit Montreal for 7 1-3 innings and Matt Williams hit his 34th homer to lead surging San Francisco to their eighth straight win.

VanLandingham (5-1), took his no-hit bid into the eighth before giving up a one-out double to Lenny Webster. He walked Rondell White leading off the first before retiring the next 22. After giving up Webster's double, VanLandingham walked Mike Lansing and was relieved by Pat Gomez.

Williams hit a two-run homer in the first inning off Jeff Fassero (7-6).

Barry Bonds went 3-for-5 and Darryl Strawberry had two hits and drove in a run for the Giants, who are 8-0 since Strawberry joined the club on July 7.

Padres 10, Mets 1

NEW YORK — Eddie Williams hit two home runs to lead a 19-hit attack and Phil Plantier drove in three runs, sending San Diego to a victory over New York.

Williams went 3-for-4 and drove in four runs and Plantier scored three times for the Padres, who scored four runs in the first inning off Pete Smith (4-9) and three in the fifth after two were out.

Joey Hamilton (6-4) gave up four hits in eight innings. He walked one, struck out four and drove in his first career run with a sacrifice fly.

Smith lost his four straight start, allowing 12 hits in 4 2-3 innings.

Tony Gwynn went 3-for-4 to raise his NL-leading average to .391 and scored twice.

Braves 2, Marlins 1

ATLANTA — Greg Maddux won his 12th game with his league-leading seventh complete game, and rookie Jose Oliva drove in two runs for the third consecutive game as Atlanta beat Florida.

The Braves have won three in a row after dropping 10 of their previous 16.

Maddux (12-5), who had lost three of his previous four decisions, gave up nine hits and didn't walk a batter. He struck out seven.

Phillies 9, Dodgers 7

PHILADELPHIA — Fernando Valenzuela shut out his former team for eight innings, and Philadelphia withstood a remarkable rally by Los Angeles.

The Dodgers scored seven runs in the ninth against Valenzuela and three relievers. Los Angeles had two runners on base when Carlos Hernandez, who homered earlier in the inning, grounded out to end the game.

Reds 3, Cubs 2, 10 innings

CINCINNATI — Reggie Sanders hit a bases-loaded single in the 10th inning Sunday to give Cincinnati a victory over Chicago.

Jacob Brumfield singled to opene the 10th off Jose Bautista (3-4), his third hit, and advanced to second on Barry Larkin's sacrifice. After an intentional walk to Hal Morris and a walk to Kevin Mitchell that loaded the bases, Sanders lined the second pitch off the left field wall for his game-winning single.

Johnny Ruffin (5-0) pitched the 10th to pick up the victory.

Rockies 10, Cardinals 6

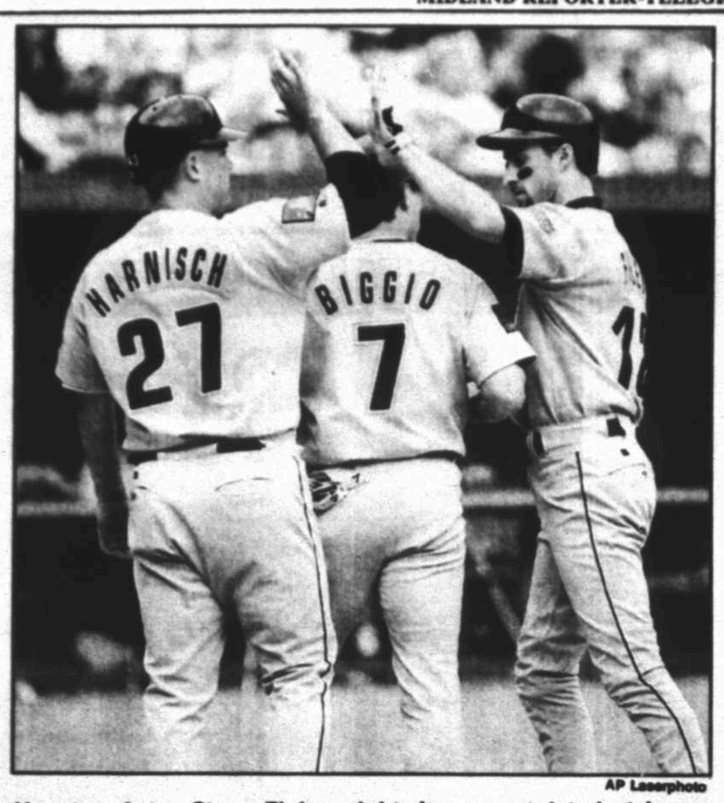

DENVER — Dante Bichette hit a grand slam and drove in a club-record six runs, and Colorado hammered St. Louis for the fourth straight game to sweep the four-game set.

Marvin Freeman (8-2) handcuffed the Cardinals through seven innings, allowing just one run and five hits, to help Colorado draw within two games of NL West-leading Los Angeles.

The Rockies drew 61,972 to establish another major-league attendance record. The four-game total of 259,113 eclipsed their own record for a four-game series of 251,521 set against St. Louis on July 22-25, 1993.

Colorado, posting its sixth straight win over the Cardinals dating back to a series on St. Louis earlier this month, outscored the Cards 43-17 in this series.

Freeman yielded a leadoff homer to Gerald Perry in the second inning, but the Rockies then erupted off Rick Sutcliffe (5-4). Two walks and a single loaded the bases in the third, and Bichette followed with his 23rd homer.

Yankees collect first-ever four-game Seattle sweep

Associated Press

SEATTLE — Jim Leyritz homered twice and drove in five runs and Danny Tartabull hit a grand slam as the New York Yankees beat Seattle 14-4 Sunday for their first-ever four-game sweep of the Mariners.

Tartabull's 16th homer capped a six-run seventh inning that made it 9-2. Leyritz had a bases-loaded walk before Tartabull connected off Jeff Nelson.

Leyritz hit a two-run homer during a three-run first inning. He hit another two-run drive, his 15th, in a five-run ninth.

Wade Boggs went 4-for-4 and Bernie Williams had three hits for the Yankees, who scored 46 runs in the four-game set.

Scott Kamieniecki (6-5) won his fifth game in six career decisions against the Mariners. He allowed six hits, struck out six and walked four in 6 2-3 innings.

White Sox 5, Indians 2

CHICAGO — Frank Thomas and Joey Cora homered and Chicago earned a split of their intriguing AL Central showdown series with Cleveland.

The four-game series, made more interesting by the mysterious disapperance of Albert Belle's confiscated bat, left the first-place Indians two percentage points ahead of the White Sox.

The White Sox play four times next weekend in Cleveland. The teams do not meet after that in regular season.

Belle went 1-for-4. His bat was taken Friday night after White Sox manager Gene Lamont wanted to see if it was corked, then switched during a break-in into the umpires' dressing room. A bat — apparently the original one — was returned Sunday, although no one said who was responsible.

■ AL Roundup

Orioles 10, Angels 5

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Rafael Palmeiro and Dwight Smith each homered and drove in three runs, leading Baltimore over California.

Palmeiro hit a three-run shot in the first inning. His 18th homer, and third in four games, came off Russ Springer (2-2).

Smith hit a two-run homer, his seventh, in the third for a 5-1 lead. He added an RBI single in the sixth off Andrew Lorraine, who gave up nine hits and five runs in three-plus innings of his major-league debut.

Red Sox 4, Athletics 3

OAKLAND, Calif. — Tom Brunansky hit a foul sacrifice fly in the ninth inning, lifting Boston over Oakland.

Otis Nixon drew a leadoff walk in the ninth from Mark Acre (4-1) and stole second. After Tim Naerhing walked, John Valentin sacrificed.

Brewers 5, Twins 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Matt Mieske hit a three-run homer and Bob Scanlan pitched eight strong innings to send Milwaukee to a victory over Minnesota.

Scanlan (2-5) won his second straight start after not winning since last September. He struck out four and walked two before Mike Fetters pitched the ninth for his 12th save.

Rick Wrona hit a solo homer in the seventh to put the Brewers ahead 5-3. His homer off Mike Trombley was his first since Oct. 1, 1989, when he was with the Chicago Cubs.

Royals 4, Tigers 1

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Greg Gagne had a two-run double and Brian McRae made a great catch in center field to rob Alan Trammell of a probable two-run double, leading David Cone and Kansas City over Detroit.

Wally Joyner, 11-for-17 since returning from the disabled list, singled and scored twice and reached base for a 10th consecutive plate appearance, one short of the Royals' record. Joyner singled and scored in the first inning and walked in the third and fourth before Buddy Groom, the third Tigers pitcher, retired him on a ground ball in the sixth.

Blue Jays 3, Rangers 1

ARLINGTON — Dave Stewart, struggling with a 9.42 ERA over his previous three starts, shut down Texas on four hits over seven innings to send Toronto to victory.

Stewart (6-8) snapped a personal three-game losing streak, retiring the first 13 Rangers before Juan Gonzalez hit his 14th homer into the upper deck in left.

Stewart struck out eight and didn't yield a walk, helping the Blue Jays to their first victory ever against Rangers starter Kenny Rogers (10-5). Rogers entered the game 6-0 in 32 career appearances against Toronto.

Returned stolen bat to be X-rayed

CHICAGO (AP) — A bat confiscated from Cleveland's Albert Belle that had been switched during a break-in at an umpire's dressing room has been returned and will be X-rayed to see if it was corked.

No one would say Sunday who was responsible for slipping through a ceiling into the umpires' dressing room at Comiskey Park during Friday's game and making the bat switch.

Indians general manager John Hart would not reveal the name of the person involved in the break-in nor would he say if it was an Indians player. But he left little doubt that the person was affiliated with the team.

"Obviously, it was someone internally with the Indians," Hart said Sunday.

"There will be disciplinary action taken at some point, I'm sure, and that will be determined with the Indians, the commissioner's office and the league office."

General manager Ron Schueler of the Chicago White Sox said he would wait until the investigation was completed to determine the next course of action. He said the break-in, in his opinion, shows that Belle's bat was indeed corked.

"By switching it, it almost shows me guilt," Schueler said. "Maybe I'm presuming too much. Why would somebody bother to go in there if they didn't think anything was tampered with?

ANGELS: Mirabelli with three RBIs throwing error by Midland starter Kyle Sebach (3-2). Sebach apparently had Chimelis caught off first base, but threw over the head of Pritchett and Murray scored from second and Chimelis scored all the way from first base.

Gone was the lead, but not the trouble. The Shreveport hits begin to come as the Caps erupted for eight more runs in the next three innings. Designated hitter Doug Mirabelli knocked in three runs with a double and two-run homer. He now has six RBIs against the Angels in two nights. Also, Barry Miller got to Sebach for a two-run dinger in the fifth, his second of the series and seventh of the year.

Sebach, who came into the game with a 4.09 ERA and two complete games to his credit, was charged with 11 runs, nine earned. His revised ERA was a lofty 5.14 reading. With the Angels' bullpen in short supply, Mendoza had to use Dom Johnson, who pitched 7⅓ innings in a winning starting role just last Thursday.

Midland's Mike Wolff homered for the second night in a row in the seventh inning for his ninth homer of the year and drove in another run in the ninth with a bases loaded, one-out grounder to third. But by that time it was more a matter of getting out of Dodge rather than thinking of a comeback.

ANGEL DUST: The Angels end their 10-game homestand at 7 p.m. today when Midland's Korey Keling (7-7, 4.72) faces Shreveport's Shad Smith (5-5, 3.76) ... The Angels are now 3-6 on the homestand and have fallen six games off the league-leading pace of El Paso in the second half... Shreveport's Calvin Murray may be the fleetest of all Texas League center fielders. He ran down another unbelievable catch in center Sunday to follow a Saturday night gem ... It wasn't all bad news for the Angels. Leadoff hitter Marquis Riley had four hits in five trips, giving him 10 hits in 19 at-bats (.526) against Shreveport. He has now hit safely in 18 of his last 22 games, hitting .375 over that span ...

Take Note Of This

Summer's end is just around the corner and it's time to start making arrangements for education and care of Midland's children. To assist you with information on where education and care is available, the Midland Reporter-Telegram is publishing it's annual Children's Education and Child Care Directory on Sunday, August 7th.

This Directory is a vehicle used to reach parents with information about the services that are available in the Midland area and who provides them. The parents of children in the Midland area have come to rely on this directory as a guide to quality education and care. This section focuses on the basic "who, what, where and when" of quality education and care in our area.

As a provider of these services in the Midland area, you will want your facility represented in this special Directory with an ad, as well as a story, photo and a dot on the map showing where you are located.

Special ad packages ranging from 8" to 65" are available, as well as rates for ads running without a story, photo, etc.

Deadline for Children's Education and Child Care Directory is Thursday, July 28th. To reserve your ad space, please call

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, JULY 18, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Career progress accelerates nicely. Although work demands are heavier than in the past, you win new perks and financial rewards. A romantic decision you make in late fall will bring great joy. Secrets will be revealed early in 1995. Keep a few of them to yourself! A change of residence leads to a more comfortable lifestyle. Business or personal travel is favored throughout next spring.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Elizabeth McGovern, baseball player Joe Torre, South African political leader Nelson Mandela, journalist Hunter Thompson.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Loyalty is not to be taken lightly. Stand by your friends. An independent business project needs more time to develop. Focus on high technology; it can create new jobs. Enroll in a special course.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Adopt an "off with the old, on with the new" attitude toward your social life. Hanging around with negative people will only bring you down. Join a group that is trying to improve your community.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You know how to turn on the charm and get your viewpoint across. Be careful, however, not to oversell a friend. Check with the experts before making long-term financial arrangements. Protect your savings.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Protect yourself. Pursuing romance in your business milieu would be a big mistake. A compromising situation could jeopardize all your good work! Your sunny demeanor attracts many admirers. Invite a new neighbor to dinner.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take a setback in stride but curb any behavior that could harm your reputation. A joke or casual comment could be misinterpreted. Smarten up! Use your head when making personnel decisions. Favoritism causes big problems.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): People may wonder where you are keeping yourself. Perhaps you have been busy untangling the aftereffects of yesterday's events. A business tiff could erupt this afternoon. Continue working alone until everyone cools down.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You will enjoy working at a brisk pace this morning. Productivity soars! Take care of important business and financial agreements before lunch. Family members think you are the Rock of Gibraltar. Guard your health.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your timing is first-class! A surprise you spring today will put you way ahead of your business or career rivals. Leave romance until another day. Make sure a financial backer is firmly committed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You seem to be going around in circles where a community project or other outside activity is concerned. A trip you make today could be good for business. Take along someone who shares your interests.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A good day for bargain-hunting. Hard-to-find items turn up in unexpected places. You could strike it rich! Say "no" to a truly unreasonable request. Romance could provide some surprises. Be prepared.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Domestic matters could intrude on the work scene. You may wish that you could turn the clock back to yesterday! A stroke of good luck brightens your afternoon. Welcome a helpful suggestion from a colleague.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Some behind-the-scenes string-pulling could suddenly put your career in high gear. Show your gratitude by doing a great job. A real estate purchase is possible. Be wary of romance on the rebound.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠73 ♡AQ873 ◇AQ1092 ♣K
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	3 ◇	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Since two diamonds was not forcing (a rebid by opener in a lower-ranking suit can be passed), partner must have extra values for the raise. Since you, too, are better than minimum, you should take another bid and four diamonds is the only one that makes any sense.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠762 ♡K5 ◇A10972 ♣J63
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	1 NT	Pass	Pass
Dbl	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Hearing a passed partner balance against one no trump with a double is a rarity. However, partner must have close to an opening bid and we have fair values and an easy lead from a decent five-card suit. We would pass.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ52 ♡K92 ◇AKQ63 ♣8
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	Dbl	Pass	1 ♡
Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Bear in mind you have forced partner to act, so it's possible North has little of value. Therefore, you don't have enough to jump and you don't want to raise partner's suit with a three-card fragment. Bid two diamonds. That describes the hand nicely.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQJ6 ♡AJ97 ◇AK8 ♣7
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
2 ♠	Pass	2 NT	3 ♣

What action do you take?
A.—You do not have quite enough to insist on game and you have no idea of your best spot, so pass and leave the decision to partner. Since you opened with a demand bid, partner may not drop the bidding until your side reaches game or doubles the enemy and three clubs doubled could be your best result.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J1065 ♡8 ◇QJ74 ♣K1082
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Dbl	?

What action do you take?
A.—While we would not quibble with a pass, we prefer one no trump. That makes it more difficult for the opponents to enter the auction and, if we buy the hand and make it, a 40 partscore is a far more useful than the 50 or 100 points we might collect for defeating an opposing contract.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K432 ♡K ◇AKJ109 ♣K106
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	2 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—The obvious bids that come to mind are two spades and three clubs. Since our spades are so shoddy, we prefer agreeing a suit immediately by raising to three clubs. That sets the table for an orderly investigation of slam possibilities.

Model Anna Nicole Smith faces ex-housekeeper's sticky lawsuit

HOUSTON — A Honduran woman's lawsuit against Guess? jeans model Anna Nicole Smith is nothing more than a plot to get $2 million from the newlywed celebrity, Ms. Smith's lawyer says.

T. Patrick Freydl told the Houston Chronicle in Sunday editions a May 27 lawsuit filed in Houston was one phase of a monthlong string of accusations and demands by Maria Antonia Cerrato, a former household worker.

Martha E. Garza, Ms. Cerrato's attorney, said she began negotiating with Ms. Smith's attorneys in February. However, Ms. Smith filed a slander lawsuit May 19 against Ms. Cerrato that also asked for repayment of a $25,000 loan.

In May 1992, Ms. Cerrato was hired as a baby sitter for Ms. Smith's son, Danny, and to perform housekeeping chores.

Freydl said the former housekeeper's claims, which range from sexual harassment, sexual assault and false imprisonment to claims that the model had sex with other women, are completely false.

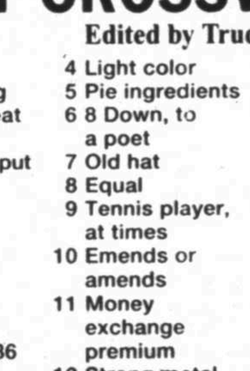

"She (Cerrato) never could point me to any substantive evidence," Freydl said. "I determined it was a complete celebrity shakedown and I decided we should stop the slander."

On Thursday, Freydl filed a petition to move Ms. Cerrato's lawsuit from state to federal court because it is between parties who are residents of different states.

Ms. Cerrato, 23, now resides in Houston. Ms. Smith lives in Los Angeles.

The Boss showed up unannounced Saturday night during the bar's 20th anniversary celebration. He also brought Jon Bon Jovi, former E Street Band drummer Max Weinberg and wife Patti Scialfa with him. They helped sing several tunes, including Tom Waits' "Jersey Girl."

In 1974, the Jukes became the first house band — and Springsteen was a mainstay — at the Stone Pony, which closed for a time nearly three years ago while under protection from its creditors under Chapter 11 of federal bankruptcy law.

"Johnny's kind of timeless," Springsteen said afterward. "There is a great feeling about coming back home and playing this kind of stuff with him."

INDIANAPOLIS — At 47, David Letterman enjoys his top-rated show on late-night television, but wonders if he'll still be popular at 50.

David Letterman, 47, wonders if he'll be popular at 50.

"I look at stuff like Jon Stewart's talk show on MTV, and the kind of television that kids are growing up on now, and I might as well be living on Neptune. I don't get it," Letterman told The Indianapolis Star in a story published Sunday.

"If this had been my first show, I would want it to stay on the air forever," he said.

"But the truth of it is, we've been doing a version of this for a long time in terms of television. So it wouldn't be the end of the world for me if we just said, 'OK, three more years, two more years, one more year, that's it.'"

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. — Former President Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, are spending the week on a reservation with 1,200 other volunteers to build 30 homes for people without shelter.

"We'll either be sleeping in a pup tent or tepees," Carter said Saturday night at the Cheyenne River Sioux Indian Reservation. Carter has helped Habitat for Humanity build homes for low-income people for 11 years.

Families will be able to move in Friday, he said.

The new homeowners have to put in about 500 hours of "sweat equity" and pay full price for the home, though no profit is made and no interest charged.

RADNOR, Pa. — Director Steven Spielberg isn't crazy about wife Kate Capshaw's return to the movies. Maybe that's because she'll be acting with Warren Beatty, Sean Connery and James Woods.

After taking a few years off to raise their children, Capshaw is working on the screen as her Academy Award-winning director husband takes a hiatus from filmmaking.

"Steven knows I'm completely mesmerized by Warren and Sean," Capshaw says in the July 23 issue of TV Guide. "They're as charismatic and electric in their 50s and 60s as they were in their 20s. And Jimmy is just hysterical."

Andretti hoping for turnaround

TORONTO (AP) — Michael Andretti hopes a turnaround for his season came along with a dominating victory Sunday in the Toronto Molson-Indy.

If it did, though, Andretti says the reason is probably off the track, where Chip Ganassi Racing recently signed veteran Indy-car engineer Mo Nunn to help get things sorted out.

Whatever made the difference, though, the 31-year-old Andretti was able to outrace a variety of troubles Sunday to end Team Penske's seven-race winning streak and earn his fourth Toronto victory.

Andretti, whose best finish since an opening-day victory in Australia was fourth place last month at Milwaukee, took control after bumping and passing Nigel Mansell for the lead on lap 26 as the defending series champion's right-rear tire deflated.

"I was staying right on Nigel," Andretti explained."I tried to get past him once and almost wound up in a tire barrier. Then I tapped him a little and just got by him a few turns later. I didn't know he was having any problem with his tire. I didn't see that."

■ Molson-Indy

Andretti was virtually unchallenged the rest of the 98-lap, 174.44-mile race, beating Bobby Rahal to the finish by 6.8 seconds in earning his 29th career Indy-car victory.

"This is a big win for us," Andretti said. "We started out on a real high with the win in Australia, then everything went downhill. It seemed the harder we worked, the slower the car would go.

"We needed a change and we were fortunate that Mo Nunn left Simon Racing (last month). We went out and got Mo to work with Julian Robertson, my engineer all year long. They make a super team. Hopefully, we're on the way."

Nunn was the chief engineer for Emerson Fittipadli in his championship season of 1989.

Fittipaldi, the only one of the powerful Penske trio to get through the race without finding trouble, wound up third Sunday, the last driver on the lead lap. He was followed by Mario Andretti, making his 400th Indy start; defending race winner and Penske driver Paul Tracy, and pole-winner Robby Gordon.

Moments after Michael Andretti's Reynard-Ford got by, Mansell's car skidded into a runoff area. The Englishman lost a lap by the time he drove slowly around to the pits for a tire change. Mansell, who has yet to win this season after winning five times in 1993, never got back into contention and wound up stopping with handling problems after 66 laps.

Andretti, who missed this event a year ago while driving on the Formula One circuit, previously won at Toronto in 1989, 1990 and 1992. This victory moved him from sixth to third in the standings.

Penske star Al Unser Jr., who went out of the race on the second lap with a broken engine, leads with 127 points, Fittipaldi has 100 and Andretti 80 after nine of 16 races.

Other than getting through traffic on the tight and slippery Exhibition Place track, Andretti was trouble-free until his second and final pit stop, at the end of lap 74.

By that time, Andretti's lead over Rahal was just over 40 seconds.

Bodine helps Hoosier tire reputation with win

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Geoff Bodine kept insisting that Hoosier tires would withstand the rigors of a long race, and proved it with what amounted to a Sunday drive in the Miller Genuine Draft 500.

The victory at Pocono International Raceway was the first this year for the Indiana-based race tire manufacturer. Cars running on the well-entrenched Goodyear brand had won the first 16 races on the NASCAR Winston Cup circuit.

"You're going to see a lot more Hoosier cars in Victory Lane this year," Bodine said. "We're proud of what (Hoosier president) Bob Newton and his people have done."

Bodine, who won the pole in a Ford Thunderbird with a speed of 163.689 mph, led 156 of 200 laps and beat Ward Burton by 1.26 seconds for his first victory this season. It was the 14th win of Bodine's career, his third at the 2.5-mile track and first as a car owner in a points race.

"We're going to be running up front more and we're going to win some more races," Bodine said. "It never sputtered, and the car didn't miss a beat all day."

He averaged 136.075 mph in a race slowed five times by caution flags for 23 laps, and collected $103,270. That included a $30,400 bonus for winning from the pole.

After winning five races in 1988, Hoosier withdrew from the Winston Cup circuit. It had made inroads this year with five poles, swept the first four positions in qualifying for the 42-car field and duplicated that feat in the race.

"Bob has taken a lot of heat, but he's hung in there," Bodine said of Newton. "They've worked hard, just like we have, and we've both overcome a lot of things."

But Bodine didn't tie the victory to the tires alone.

"It wasn't any one thing," he said. "It was a team effort all around."

■ Miller GD 500

Still, Bodine's continuing support of Hoosier, drew at least one barb — from his brother, Brett, who finished 35th.

"If he can't win with those tires, he might as well go home," the younger Bodine, who rode on Goodyears, said of his 45-year-old brother.

Harry Gant, driving a Chevrolet Lumina in his final appearance at Pocono before retiring at the end of the season, ran well on Goodyears until a broken oil cooler stopped him on lap 109.

Gant, smoking throughout much of the first half of the race, spun on the third turn. But he saved the car, making contact with neither the wall nor any other drivers and got a huge ovation from a sellout crowd. He took the lead for brief periods during the $926,933 event, but was removed from contention by the oil problem.

They conducted a match race of sorts for the first 100 laps before Bodine began pulling away at the halfway mark. Aside from Burton, none of the other cars posed a serious threat after Gant's departure. Only seven cars finished on the lead lap.

When the green flag fell ending the caution brought out by Gant's spin, Bodine drove away from the field. But a caution caused when Ernie Irvan broke a timing change dropped Bodine to third on an exchange of pit stops on lap 137.

But Bodine passed Mark Martin and Rusty Wallace to take the lead with 53 laps remaining.

Carlson era begins as Oilers open camp

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The Cody Carlson era started Sunday as the Houston Oilers arrived for their first preseason workouts without Warren Moon in 10 years.

"It's nice just to go out there and know that I'll be able to help the team more this year than I have in the past," Carlson said. "This is never the most enjoyable time of year, but I'm looking forward to getting started."

Carlson, Moon's understudy the past seven years, finally got the starting job when the Oilers traded Moon to the Minnesota Vikings during the offseason.

Last season, Carlson completed 51 of 90 passes for 605 yards with two touchdowns and four interceptions. He started two games, against the New England Patriots when Moon was benched and against the New York Jets when Moon was injured.

Carlson said he expects to be compared to Moon, and that he'll take the blame if the Oilers miss the playoffs.

"I'm not going to compare what happens this year to what happened last year, but I know everyone else will," Carlson said. "I can't change the fact that I'm a different person than Warren."

Assistant head coach Kevin Gilbride, last year's offensive coordinator, has been one of Carlson's biggest supporters.

"Now I get a chance to see if my view is accurate," Gilbride said. "The loss (of Moon) was significant but in my mind I always felt Cody had the ability to be a starter and more importantly I felt he had the ability to be a winner."

Carlson also will have to adapt to the team's revised run-and-shoot offense, which will feature a tight end.

The Oilers veterans and rookies were due in camp Sunday night, and were to begin two-a-day workouts Monday.

Sorensen takes 14th stage of Tour de France

MONTPELLIER, France (AP) — Miguel Indurain of Spain maintained his commanding lead in the Tour de France Sunday, as Rolf Sorensen of Denmark won the 14th stage.

Sorensen's triumph was the second Danish victory in a row. Bjarne Riis won Saturday.

In winning the 126-mile stage from Castres to Montpellier, Sorensen beat Neil Stephens of Australia in the final sprint as the two broke away from a small group in the final six miles.

Indurain, seeking his fourth consecutive title, was in the main pack, less than six minutes behind. He was not concerned about losing much time, as Sorensen was more than 35 minutes behind at the start and Stephens was 55 minutes back in the overall standings.

American Lance Armstrong, the 1993 world champion, plans to drop out Monday.

He and his Motorola team directors decided not to let him start another stage to save Armstrong for this year's one-day world championship next month in Sicily.

Armstrong was more than 26 minutes behind and had little chance to overtake Indurain.

Last year, Armstrong was the youngest to win an individual stage in the Tour but later dropped out to avoid getting burned out.

Another noted rider, Gianni Bugno of Italy, dropped out Sunday, failing to start the stage. He was among more than 20 riders who stopped competing, as the heat wave in southern France continued, with the temperature above 100 degrees.

Currently 67th and more than 48 minutes behind, Bugno decided not to continue in the Tour, which still has more than a week to go.

"I am not sick, but I am incapable to play a role in this Tour," Bugno said.

Bugno was second in 1991 and third in 1992 before fading to 20th last year. He won the one-day world championship in 1991 and 1992.

BRAZIL: First championship since 1970

(From 1C)

Brazil's title, its first since 1970, came after a conservative, even dull regulation 90 minutes. It came following an exciting overtime. It came over another soccer powerhouse seeking its fourth title.

And it culminated the most successful and one of the most entertaining World Cups, staged in a land where the sport is a grassroots giant and a professional pipsqueak.

Maybe this tournament will change that. On Sunday, with a crowd of 94,194 at the Rose Bowl and an estimated global audience of 2 billion watching on television, that didn't matter. For this day, soccer owned the spotlight, and that spotlight shined into extra time for the first time since 1978 and the fourth time overall.

And then it went into the shootout, where Italy's poor marksmanship ended its dreams.

"Maybe Italy is a bit frustrated right now," Taffarel said, "because they were so near the title and they did not get it."

The Rose Bowl was nearly silent as the shootout began. Baresi, a source of strength on defense all game and possibly the man most responsible for Italy shutting down Brazil, went first. His shot wasn't even close, going far over the net.

But goalkeeper Gianluca Pagliuca made up for it with a diving save against Marcio Santos.

Italy's Demetrio Albertini and Alberigo Evani connected, as did Brazil's Romario and Branco. Then came the critical misses for Italy.

Taffarel, the backbone of an unheralded defense that allowed only three goals all tournament, dived left for a hand save on Daniele Massaro. After Dunga put Brazil ahead 3-2, the great Baggio missed, setting off wild celebrations among the green-and-yellow clad supporters in the stands and the players on the field.

"The team that was predestined to win has won," Taffarel said.

With Pele, Brazil's greatest hero, waving from the press box, the Brazilian players saluted the crowd, held up their medals, and then raised the World Cup trophy high, to an ovation that reverberated off the surrounding San Gabriel Mountains.

The team dedicated the championship to Ayrton Senna, the world champion race car driver who died in a crash earlier this year.

"Our mission is accomplished," coach Carlos Alberto Parreira said.

In the 76th minute, Pagliuca made what could have been a grievous error, bobbling a shot by Mauro Silva that bounced toward the net. But it rolled softly off the goalpost, Pagliuca grabbed the ball and then kissed his hand and patted the helpful post.

He got even more help from captain Baresi, returning to the Italian defense three weeks after arthroscopic knee surgery. The veteran of three World Cups was everywhere, stymying nearly every Brazilian opportunity.

Even he couldn't last in the heat, cramping badly in the final minutes of overtime, then missing in the shootout.

"Of course, it is only natural after not playing for a month that I would cramp," he said.

Brazil won the World Cup in 1958, 1962 and 1970. Its failure in the next five tournaments increased the pressure on the team and the criticism at home.

The Brazilians rarely were challenged in this event. They say they must win while playing beautiful soccer. In general, they did exactly that.

"It was a well-deserved title, because Brazil was the best team throughout the competition," Bebeto said. "Every team that played against us changed its way of playing."

Including Italy, which is going home without the trophy, but with the respect of the entire soccer world after a valiant if vain effort.

"We are the world champions without the Cup," said Antonio Mattarese, president of the Italian Soccer Federation.

"I think that watching the Azzurri play, I'm sure you appreciate how well they played," Sacchi said. "This team proved that they were worthy."

The only other major championship decided by a shootout was in 1976, when Czechoslovakia beat West Germany for the European title. U.S. organizers suggested having a replay if this year's final ended in a tie, but FIFA, the world governing body for soccer, declined.

In Brazil, millions of soccer fans from the Amazon to the Atlantic turned the country into a giant Carnival. People of all ages, draped in the national colors, started a victory party in Rio de Janeiro that will last at least until Tuesday, when the Brazilian team arrives home for ticker-tape parades.

The shootout was the climax of 24 hours of festivities in Pasadena. On Saturday night, several downtown streets were closed while fans from both teams paraded, waving their flags, ringing bells and pounding the samba drums.

The party continued Sunday morning with ceremonies that included performances by Whitney Houston and Kenny G., fireworks and a flyover by the U.S. Air Force.

It was a typically American extravaganza in a stadium that has decided national champions in college football and NFL titlists in Super Bowls.

Now, it will be remembered as the home of the first World Cup determined by shootout.

Brazilian goalkeeper Taffarel blocks a shot by Italy in the overtime period of Sunday's World Cup final in the Rose Bowl.

First World Cup final shootout could be last

By Steve Wilstein
AP Sports Writer

PASADENA, Calif. — Imagine ending the World Series with a home run derby, a Super Bowl with a passing contest through a tire, an NBA championship with a game of H-O-R-S-E.

That's what they did at the World Cup on Sunday with the penalty-kick shootout gimmick, and it left a sour aftertaste to a tournament that deserved better.

It was the first time a shootout decided the World Cup championship game, and in all likelihood it will be the last time.

Brazil is celebrating its fourth World Cup, but it is not happy about the way it won, 3-2 on penalty kicks against Italy after 90 minutes of wandering scorelessly in regulation and 30 more minutes of the same in overtime.

"I came here to be a world champion. I didn't want to go to penalty kicks," Brazilian goalkeeper Claudio Taffarel said. "Penalty kicks are a lottery and nobody likes to arrive at a penalty-kick decision."

Brazilians hold soccer to a higher level than merely winning or losing. They have an ideal called "jugo bonito," the beautiful game. And this one was as ugly as they come.

Maybe it had to do with the fatigue and injuries that set in after playing seven games in a month of sweltering heat. Maybe it had to do with the respect they gave each other or the type of defenses they played. Whatever, this one was a dud for two hours.

It fizzled out like bad fireworks on the Fourth of July, like too many Super Bowls that were hyped and hyped until they choked on all the hyperbole.

This was supposed to be one of the greatest World Cup championship games in history, a matchup of soccer's two most creative, exciting teams, countries that boasted three titles each coming in.

More than 94,000 fans came to the Rose Bowl expecting flashy, splashy play, goals galore. Instead they got zip, nought, nada for two hours. Even the first two kicks in the shootout from 12 yards out failed, as if the goal had a protective barrier around it.

At last, Italy's Demetrio Albertini buried a shot in the corner, and Brazil's Romario responded with a shot that ticked the inside of the left post.

It was late afternoon, the sun had baked everyone and players were massaging cramps all over the place. But at least the scoreboard finally got some use.

When Italy's Alberigo Evani and Brazil's Branco scored to make it 2-2, it seemed as if something exciting might really be happening. That lasted about a minute. Taffarel dove to his left to block a shot by Italy's Daniele Massaro, then Brazil's Dunga made it 3-2 by poking in an easy goal.

It all came down now to Italy's Roberto Baggio, considered the greatest player in the world. On this day, though, he limped around the field from the start, saving himself for sudden bursts and scoring opportunities that rarely came. He wore a thermal wrap on his strained right hamstring through the first half, abandoned it for a bandage briefly in the second half, then put it on again.

His shirt hung out and so did his tongue. He spent much of the game walking, his ponytail flat against his neck instead of flying, and he wasted his two good chances.

When he had one final chance to save Italy, at least briefly, he put too much foot into it, trying too hard, driving it way over the top of the goal. He might as well have tried to kick it out of the stadium.

Just like that, it was over. No great runs. No marvelous dribbles past defenders. No cross-passes setting up headers. Nothing that had the slightest resemblance to artistry. Just nine quick kicks from 12 yards and the Brazilians danced. The rules of the shootout allow each team five kicks, so with a 3-2 lead after nine kicks Brazil had no need to kick again.

Pierce ready to play again

LONDON (AP) — French Open finalist Mary Pierce is ready to play tennis again after she pulled out of Wimbledon last month for reasons she said were beyond her control.

Pierce came out of her self-imposed exile last week to prepare with the French team for the Federation Cup, which starts Monday in Frankfurt, Germany.

The 19-year-old told a London newspaper, the Mail on Sunday, that her enthusiasm is back and she no longer feared "troubles." This "trouble," which led to her tearful Wimbledon withdrawal, was assumed to be the irrational behaviour of her estranged father, Jim Pierce.

"Yes, I am confident my troubles are behind me and I like to think I have a bright future," she said at the team's training center in Dinnard, France. "I have my energy again. I'm ready to play."

Pierce was seeded seventh at Wimbledon before she went into hiding on the eve of the tournament amid rumors she received death threats and claims from her father that he was going to defy bans and come to Wimbledon.

She had her father thrown out of the 1993 French Open for verbally abusing her and her opponents and has not seen him since. He was banned from attending any tournaments and is widely known for his violent behavior and the harsh training program he subjected Mary to when she was as young as 12.

French team captain Francoise Durr said there would be no need for extra security for Pierce in Frankfurt.

Pierce was considered a strong challenger at Wimbledon after her aggressive surge to the French final a fortnight before. She became the darling of the British press, but disappointed it when she left so abruptly.

"I felt after the French Open I needed a little break. So I took a 10-day vacation," she said.

When asked where and why, she replied "I cannot say."

(From 1C)

268 to 269, and a final round 4-under 66 for Price to Parnevik's 67.

"It is like a fairy tale to finish birdie-eagle-par to win a major championship," said Price, who was runner-up in the British Open in 1982 and 1988.

"I really needed to make that putt at 17," said Price, who measured it at 17 paces. "I could not believe it when it went in."

Parnevik, whose only victory as a pro was the 1993 Scottish Open, sat in the scorer's tent and buried his head in his left hand when he heard that Price had eagled 17.

"I realized I screwed up then," Parnevik said. "I thought I needed a birdie on 18 to win."

It all happened because Parnevik failed to look at the scoreboard.

"It was a costly mistake," Parnevik said. "I thought I was one or two behind. The first time I looked (at the scoreboard) was at the 18th (green). I thought I was chasing someone else. It was just a bad mistake."

It was not a mistake a veteran like Price would make.

"I was looking at the leaderboard regularly," he said. "You have to base your tactics and strategy on what the other guys are doing."

What Parnevik was doing this day was playing brilliant golf.

With the bill of his cap turned up and a fringe of curly, dirty blonde hair sticking wildly out beneath the brim, a golf tee stuck behind his right ear, he plodded stoicallly along, making pars on the first 10 holes.

Then he surged into the lead with birdies at 11, 12 and 13. He bogeyed 14, but came back with birdies at 16 and 17, appearing on his way to victory.

If only he had looked at the scoreboard.

"Sometimes I look at the leaderboard and sometimes I don't," Parnevik said. "The way it turned out I should have taken a glimpse at the 18th."

Price's winning score of 268 was the same as that posted by Tom Watson when he won the British Open on this Ailsa Course at Turnberry in 1977. His closing 54 holes of 199 broke Watson's record of 200 for the final three rounds 17 years ago.

Watson's determined drive for a record-tying sixth British Open championship ended with consecutive double-bogeys at 8 and 9.

He shot a 4-over 74 and finished at 4-under 276, eight strokes behind Price.

Fuzzy Zoeller did best among the Americans, finishing third at 271 after a closing-round 70.

Anders Fosbrand of Sweden, Mark James of England and David Feherty of Northern Ireland tied for fourth at 273. Brad Faxon shot a 73 and finished at 274.

Three-time British Open champion Nick Faldo had a final-round 64 and was at 275, along with Tom Kite and Colin Montgomerie of Scotland.

Defending champion Greg Norman of Australia shot a 69 and was in a group of nine at 276, along with Watson, Mark Calcavecchia and Larry Mize.

Ernie Els' streak of seven consecutive British Open rounds below 70 ended with a 71. He finished at 278, 10 strokes behind Price.

The victory was sweet revenge for Price, who twice had a chance to win the British Open only to finish behind Watson in 1982 and Seve Ballesteros in 1988.

"I waited a long time for this," said the 37-year-old Price, who has four victories this year. "I guess 12 years now.

"I've been patient. In the back of my mind I always thought I would have a chance."

His chance came on 17 with the mammoth eagle putt.

"It was dying right at the end and dived in the right corner of the hole," he said.

Price clenched his fist as the ball was about halfway to the hole, sensing that it would be close. As the ball got nearer to the hole, he starting pumping his arm in a back and forth motion. When it dropped, he jumped high and waved his putter in the air.

"My heart rate went up to about 250 when I made that putt on 17 and I didn't slow down until I made that putt on 18," he said.

Parnevik will replay the 18th in his mind a million times, perhaps forever.

It was the second consecutive major championship that a golfer played the final hole incorrectly because he failed to look at the scoreboard.

Last month, Els bogeyed the final regulation hole of the U.S. Open, playing it thinking he needed a birdie, not seeing that Loren Roberts already had made a bogey.

But the South African got a second chance and won the championship in a three-way playoff the next day.

Price's victory meant that all three major championships played this year were won by non-Americans. In addition to Price, a native of Zimbabwe, and Els, Jose Maria Olazabal of Spain won the Masters.

Americans never have been shut out in all four majors since the inception of the Masters — the youngest of the four — in 1934.

Lifetime best putt puts Cain in Ameritech Senior winner's circle

Associated Press

AURORA, ILL. (AP) — John Paul Cain pulled out all the superlatives to decribe his one-stroke victory Sunday in the Ameritech Senior Open.

There was "the best putt of my life." And "the purest shot of my life."

Those two shots, combined with a pair of bogeys on the final two holes by Jim Colbert, gave Cain the victory — his first on the Senior Tour since 1989 — and a first place check for $112,500.

"I have to tell you, winning is more important than the bucks. Winning was more important because it gave me an exemption for one year on the senior tour," Cain said.

Cain shot a 3-under-par 69 to beat Colbert and Simon Hobday by a stroke.

The second-round leader by one stroke over Colbert and Mike Hill, Cain finished with a 54-hole total of 14-under 202 over the 6,840-yard Stonebridge Country Club course.

Colbert lost a chance at a playoff when he bogeyed the par-5 18th, landing his second shot in the water and then missing a 12-foot putt for par.

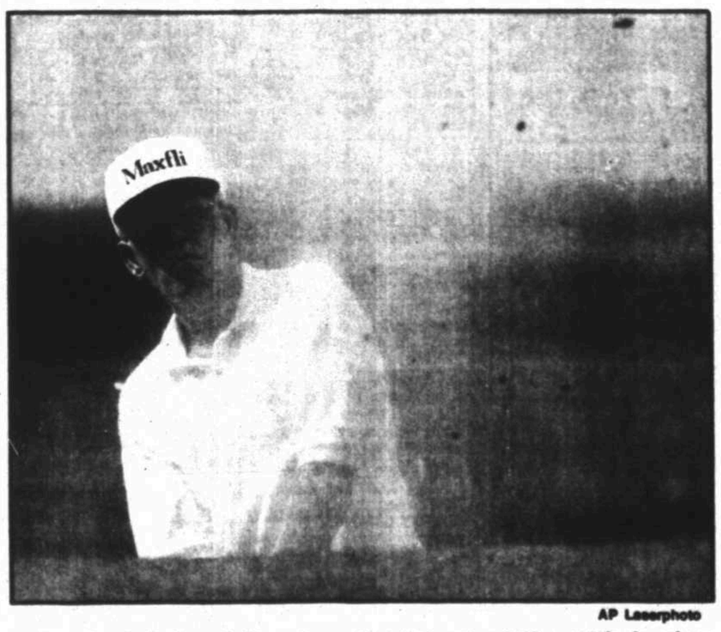

"On 18, the putt for par just went past the pin. I meant to aim it a little right. I'm real disappointed about that shot on 18 that went into the water. I tried to crush it," Colbert said.

Hobday, who started the final round two strokes behind Cain, had a 68. He never recovered from a three-putt bogey on 16.

Chi Chi Rodriguez, who started the final round tied with Hobday and J.C. Snead, made a run with birdies at 9, 10, 14 and 15, but he never got below 12 under and finished with a 69, two strokes behind Cain.

Jay Sigel had a final-round 66 and Harry Toscano a 68 to finish another stroke back.

LPGA-Big Apple

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. — Beth Daniel made a 5-foot birdie putt on the first hole of a sudden death playoff and Laura Davies left her 3-footer short, giving Daniel the LPGA Tour's $650,000 JAL Big Apple Classic.

Daniel made another 5-foot putt for birdie on the final hole of regulation to force the playoff. Davies, who started the day five strokes behind Daniel, shot a 5-under-par 66 to take the lead until Daniel's putt on the 72nd hole.

Daniel and Davies finished with 8-under 276 totals for four trips over the 6,095-yard Wykagyl Country Club course.

Davies is now 0-3 in playoffs in her career.

Daniel, who shot an even-par 71, won $97,500 for her 30th career victory. She is still one major victory short of automatic qualification for the Hall of Fame, because her only major victory came in the 1990 LPGA Championship.

Deposit Guaranty Classic

MADISON, Miss. — Brian Henninger needed only one hole to register his first PGA tournament victory. It didn't completely satisfy him.

Henninger sank an 18-foot birdie putt on the only hole played Sunday to win the water-logged Deposit Guaranty Golf Classic, shortened to 36 holes and a playoff after three straight days of rain.

"I'm proud to be the champion of the Deposit Guaranty, but I won't feel like a true champion on the PGA Tour until I've won a 72-hole event," said Henninger, who beat tour veteran Mike Sullivan in the playoff.

"It's a funny experience. It's not the elation I've had when I've won other tournaments not as significant as this, when I've done something on the last few holes where the emotions are there."

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?
Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?
Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?
A small deposit is required.
