25 years later: Earthly worries supplant moon-walk euphoria

By John Tierney
N.Y. Times News Service

Twenty-five years ago, much of humanity listened to Neil Armstrong's first words on the moon and pondered the implications of his "giant leap for mankind."

It was a day for taking stock and looking ahead, for prophesying the technological marvels and perils of the next quarter-century, and as usual it turns out that the prophets erred.

Their two biggest mistakes were failing to foresee two things:

As of 1994, the moon still is not habitable for humans.

As of 1994, the Earth still is.

From today's perspective, the moon landing looks like a spectacular achievement with few immediate practical consequences, but 25 years ago it inspired happy pre-

Clinton yields a bit on health coverage

■ Suggesting he's ready for compromise, president softens call for insurance for all.

Associated Press

BOSTON — President Clinton opened the door Tuesday to a health-care compromise short of his once-firm demand of coverage for all Americans and urged Congress to stay in session until a reform plan is passed.

■ Americans still support universal coverage, poll finds./5A

Taking a conciliatory approach in what had been billed as a showdown with Senate GOP leader Bob Dole, Clinton also said he could abandon his plan's requirement of employer-provided insurance — if another way could be found to cover most Americans.

After Clinton's speech to the National Governors' Association, White House aides hurried to counter any impression that the president was yielding ground on any major goals. But they acknowledged a shift from demanding coverage of all Americans to putting the country on the track "toward universal coverage," as Clinton put it.

"He's inching our way," Dole suggested.

Clinton's remarks were also welcomed by other lawmakers in both parties who have been critical of his call for coverage for all Americans, financed largely by

Haiti invasion? Callers say no way

Staff Report

Cityline Community Pulse

Midlanders are decidedly opposed to American military intervention in Haiti, if this week's non-scientific Community Pulse poll is any indication.

An overwhelming 92.4 percent of the callers said "no" when asked, "Do you favor an invasion (of Haiti) by military troops?" In fact, of the 40 people who voted and then voiced comments on the issue, not one supported such military action.

"I'm very much against sending troops in to Haiti," said Becky O'Neal. "An invasion would have to be followed by a long occupation during which our troops, including my son, Jimmy, would be targets for insurgent attacks."

Two veterans responded negatively to the invasion as well.

"I am very much opposed to military action in the sovereign nation of Haiti," said Hugh G. White, a retired U.S. Air Force colonel. "We should not tolerate such ac-

Midland-based tax authorities break out calculators for 1994

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The six Midland-based taxing authorities are revving up to levy property taxes in 1994.

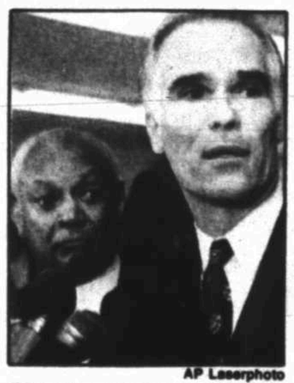

Meanwhile, Chief Appraiser Ron Stegall of the Midland Central Appraisal District is figuring "total assessed (property) values" so that the six entities in Midland County can compute projected tax incomes — based on effective tax rates — for their operating budgets in the upcoming fiscal year.

Stegall said officials governing the city, county, Midland and Greenwood independent school districts, Midland College and Midland County Hospital District are to set the 1994 tax rates by Sept. 1.

Last year's countywide assessed property values totaled more than $3.7 billion.

Despite Simpson's case, city trials seldom offer DNA tests

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

O.J. Simpson's guilt or innocence in his trial in the deaths of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman may be determined not by witnesses and murder weapons, but by obscure concepts such as DNA and blood types.

However, the likelihood of a case being won or lost solely on laboratory evidence is not commonplace as you get closer to home.

"I think maybe one capital murder case here rested on DNA tests, but that's it," said Midland Assistant District Attorney Teresa Clingman. "If there is DNA testing or blood testing in a case, it is usually the last of a lot of evidence presented in a case."

Ms. Clingman said one of the reasons that DNA testing is used only occasionally in Midland

Administration backs off plans to convert nation's highway signs to metric by 1996

■ Law of 1988 sought to move government away from English system, but thousands wrote highway administration to oppose plan.

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Put away those plastic cards converting miles to kilometers. Stop trying to figure out how fast 100 kph really is. The nation's highway signs aren't going metric any time soon.

Not many Americans were trying to adjust in the first place — part of a national metric resistance that now has led the Clinton administration to quietly back off plans to convert the signs by 1996.

It's another setback for the 200-year-old effort to make the decimal measurement system a reality in the United States.

For those suffering metric setback by phrases like 100 kph, it's 62 miles per hour.

As part of a 1988 law to move government away from the English system of gallons, pounds and feet, the Federal Highway Administration had told the states it might withhold their share of $18 billion in road money if the signs weren't changed to metric by Sept. 30, 1996.

But more than 2,200 people wrote the highway administration opposing the plan. Several members of Congress introduced bills to abolish the sign change. Most cited the cost, estimated at some $200 million nationally.

"A majority of the negative responses stated the funds to convert the signs could be better used for repair of roads and bridges or for charitable purposes," Administrator Rodney Slater said in announcing the decision in the Federal Register late last month.

There is now no timetable for converting the highway signs, although Slater said the decision should be considered only a postponement.

Congress earlier this year prohibited use of federal money to help in converting highway signs to metric. Beyond the cost, Slater said it was clear most Americans are unwilling to stop using the familiar English measurements, even as more and more products appear on store shelves in liters and grams.

The United States remains the only industrialized nation that still officially uses the English system of miles, gallons and pounds.

Census: Birthrate for unwed women soars

WASHINGTON (NYT) — With the debate over reducing the country's welfare rolls focusing renewed attention on the rising birthrate among unwed women, the Census Bureau reported Tuesday that such births soared by more than 70 percent from 1983 to 1993.

According to the bureau, 6.3 million children, or 27 percent of all children under the age of 18, lived in 1993 with a single parent who had never married, up from 3.7 million in 1983.

While indicating that the annual increase in the number of children born out of wedlock slowed somewhat in the 1980s, the report also documented the sharp rise in these kinds of births over the last three decades. While there were 243,000 children living with one parent who had never married in 1960, by last year that number had climbed to 6.3 million.

"It's astonishing," said Kristin Moore, director of Child Trends, a Washington-based research organization that studies adolescent pregnancy. "It's really a substantial social change, and it's happened really fast."

The figures are compiled in an annual report by the Census Bureau titled "Marital Status and Living Arrangements." The findings mirror the results of other studies in recent years — including those done by the Census Bureau — that show out-of-wedlock births still on the rise.

The report demonstrated the extent to which blacks are affected by the changes that are roiling the traditional family structure. According to the report, 57 percent of black children are living with one parent who has never married, compared with 21 percent of white children and 32 percent of Hispanic children.

The latest figures are likely to fuel the debate over competing Democratic and Republican proposals on how to cut the country's welfare rolls.

Senate committee unanimously approves Breyer's nomination

WASHINGTON (AP) — Stephen G. Breyer won what he called "a fine vote of confidence" Tuesday as the Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously approved his nomination to the Supreme Court.

The longtime federal judge from Boston appears a sure bet to win confirmation by the full Senate this week or early next week.

Each of the committee's 10 Democrats and eight Republicans voted to recommend approval of Breyer, who was nominated by President Clinton to succeed retiring Justice Harry A. Blackmun.

Breyer could become the nation's 108th Supreme Court justice with most of the summer left to prepare for the recessed court's 1994-95 term. It begins the first Monday in October.

Committee Chairman Joseph Biden, D-Del., said he hoped Tuesday's vote would get Breyer's nomination before the full Senate on Friday. If not, he said, the Senate vote would come early next week.

Breyer, told by telephone about the committee's vote by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said, "I'm very pleased. I'm absolutely delighted. It's a fine vote of confidence."

Breyer was praised by Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., as a "principled moderate," and by Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, as a "moderate pragmatist."

But two senators — Ohio Democrat Howard Metzenbaum and Iowa Republican Charles Grassley — voiced reservations.

Metzenbaum, Breyer's most aggressive questioner during the confirmation hearing, said he was worried about the nominee's dedication to "the little guy ... the ordinary American."

He said he hoped Breyer would see the court as a "protector of the powerless."

Grassley said Breyer's testimony indicated too expansive a view of the individual rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

Breyer's four-day confirmation hearing last week proved to be almost as free of controversy as those for Justice Ginsburg.

Study predicts surplus of medical specialists

BALTIMORE (AP) — Forty percent of all medical specialists in the United States could be unnecessary by the end of the decade, whether the government enacts health-care reform or not, researchers reported.

With the nation moving toward more managed care networks built around primary care doctors, there will be a surplus of as many as 165,000 doctors by the year 2000, according to a Johns Hopkins School of Public Health study.

Of those, 151,000 will be specialists. The country will need only 225,000 specialists but will have 376,000, according to the study, to be published in today's edition of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

By the end of the century there will be 550,000 doctors, it said.

The study underscores the need to push medical students into such areas as family and community medicine rather than the more prestigious and lucrative specialties, said the study's author, Jonathan Weiner, associate professor of health policy and management at Johns Hopkins.

"Many medical students, given the choice of high-paying specialties with salaries two to three times that of primary care, make the obvious choice," Weiner said. Medical schools should "train future generations of physicians to meet society's needs," he said.

The study was commissioned by the federal Bureau of Health Professions. It based its predictions on the assumption that 40 percent to 65 percent of Americans will get their care from health maintenance organizations or other managed care programs by the end of century, up from the current 30 percent.

It also assumed the existence of universal coverage, which means the surplus could be even greater if health-care reform does not result in guaranteed health insurance for everyone, Weiner said.

"People with health insurance make about twice as many visits to doctors as patients without insurance," he said.

At the University of Washington in Seattle, students are already being prodded to take a serious look at general practice.

"Family medicine is respected here," said Dr. Thomas Greer. "We're not trying to put down the subspecialists, we just don't need as many of them as we have produced as a country."

In their third year, all medical students at the university are required to take part in a six-week family medicine program, often working at clinics in rural areas in the Northwest and Alaska. But even then, it remains an uphill battle.

"What we're reduced to is trying to persuade young medical students that primary care is a good area," Greer said.

MOON: Earthly worries supplant euphoria of Apollo 11 landing dictions of nuclear-powered space colonies as well as apocalyptic laments that technology was destroying Spaceship Earth.

Like so much else in the late 1960s, the moon walk was a polarizing event, greeted by street celebrations of Yankee ingenuity and by protest demonstrations against American wastefulness.

The ambivalence was reflected in The New York Times' coverage, which featured its largest headline ever, photographs of enraptured crowds watching television screens in Central Park and Trafalgar Square and an editorial hailing "a new era leading to realms beyond comprehension."

But the paper also quoted some remarkably gloomy intellectuals and warned in the editorial, "As man gains another world — with the prospect of adding another and still another, literally ad infinitum — he stands in imminent danger of losing his own."

The most unusual news judgment of the day was exercised by communist journalists.

The moon landing was the fifth story on the Soviet Union's nightly news program — well behind the lead items saluting Soviet metal workers and Polish Liberation Day. The official Chinese media preferred to ignore it altogether. A headline in Hong Kong's communist newspaper ran "The American People Pray: God, Give Me a Piece of Bread, Don't Give Me the Moon."

But just about everywhere else on Earth people followed the Apollo 11 mission. They listened to transistor radios around fires in Zambian villages and in the courtyards of Buddhist temples in Bangkok. They shouted "formidable" at the Science Museum in Paris and sang a new hymn in Greek churches. Holidays were proclaimed around the world. Babies were named Apollo and Luna.

From the Vatican observatory Pope Paul VI offered greetings to the "conquerors of the moon, pale lamp of our nights and our dreams."

The director of Britain's Jodrell Bank Observatory, Sir Bernard Lovell, said the landing "opens the most enormous opportunities for future exploration of the universe."

President Richard M. Nixon told the astronauts that it was the proudest day of every American's life. Later, upon their return to Earth, he would call it "the greatest week in the history of the world since the Creation."

Former President Lyndon B. Johnson said the landing proved America "can do anything that needs to be done."

A future president, Ronald Reagan, was one of thousands who joined the waiting list that summer for the first commercial flight to the moon. It was scheduled for the year 2000, which today looks a little early technologically and a little late commercially, since the reservations were being taken by the now-defunct Pan American World Airways.

But 2000 seemed a conservative schedule to some experts in July 1969. NASA Administrator Thomas Paine was quoted in Time magazine predicting a $5,000 lunar vacation by 1990: "There is no question that we can reduce the cost of travel to the moon to the cost of traveling through the air today."

The magazine went on to describe the low-gravity appeal of the diving board at a domed lunar resort.

Isaac Asimov wrote that the moon's rocks might contain clues to the evolution of life and thereby lead to a cure for cancer.

Another science writer, D.S. Halacy Jr., predicted that by 1994 there would be teen-agers who had been born and bred in Lunar City. Plans for lunar laboratories, mines, and factories were common.

"By the year 2000," the rocket scientist Dr. Wernher von Braun forecast, "we will undoubtedly have a sizable operation on the moon, we will have achieved a manned Mars landing and it's entirely possible we will have flown with men to the outer planets."

That sense of optimism was shared by some of the prominent figures who contributed statements to The Times the day of the moon landing.

The dalai lama envisioned space travel imbuing human knowledge with "a new dimension of infinite scope, development and dynamism." The architect R. Buckminster Fuller advocated further space exploration and called the moon landing "the dead-center of evolutionary events." The poet Rod McKuen urged people to love the astronauts.

But others were not impressed. "It means nothing to me," Picasso said.

Some were downright hostile. The novelist Arthur Koestler lamented humanity's "unprecedented spiritual vacuum" and declared: "Prometheus is reaching out for the stars with an empty grin on his face."

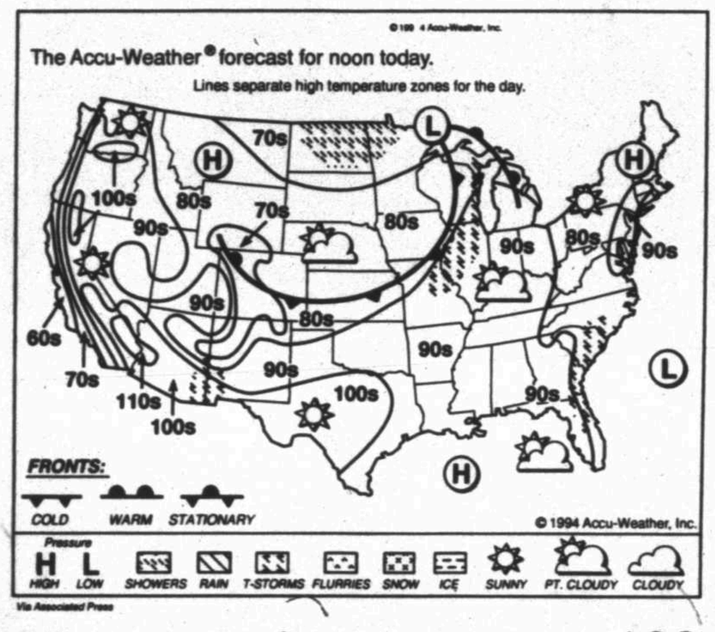

Lewis Mumford, the historian and urbanologist, called the moon landing "a symbolic act of war" by a "megatechnic power system, in the lethal grip of the 'myth of the machine.' " He predicted that the "very triumphs of technology" would soon turn the planet into either a lunatic asylum or a crematorium.

Rene Dubos, the microbiologist, called the "incredibly efficient technology" controlling the astronauts a "dreaded portent of what could happen to our lives," and he hoped the moon missions would lead ecologists to create "a theology of the earth."

The psychiatrist Robert Jay Lifton said the moon landing was a "painful reminder of the terrible gap between technology and imagination."

There was so much angst that the psychologist Kenneth B. Clark, after bemoaning the social needs neglected during the moon mission, added a reminder to everyone: "But our triumph on the moon need not be an occasion for despair."

Mostly sunny skies were reported across the state on Tuesday, with some isolated showers and thunderstorms reported in South Texas.

In North Texas, a high pressure system lingered over the region, which saw clear to partly cloudy skies and temperatures in the 90s.

Today, North Texas skies should be partly cloudy with highs in the 90s and lows in the 70s.

Isolated showers and thunderstorms were reported over extreme eastern sections of South Texas on Tuesday, while skies were sunny over the west and south portions of the region. Temperatures were mostly in the 90s and reached 100 at Cotulla.

The forecast calls for little change in the hot summer weather pattern in South Texas.

NATION

Severe thunderstorms brewed along a line curving from the Rockies to the Plains and across to the mid-Atlantic states on Tuesday, downing trees and power lines in Georgia and Illinois.

The bad weather followed a tumultuous Monday of thunderstorms, hail and destructive winds across a wide area of the United States. In Las Vegas, winds toppled part of a 362-foot marquee billed as the world's tallest free-standing sign.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms developed Tuesday across the eastern half of the country, causing wind damage in Georgia's Cook County and at least four Illinois counties.

A severe thunderstorm watch was posted for parts of Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin. Scattered showers fell across parts of the already rain-soaked Southeast.

Beaufort, S.C., received 1.45 inches of rain in the six-hour period ending at 1 p.m. CDT.

Rain also fell on parts of Arizona. In southern Nevada, a flash flood watch was issued, including the Las Vegas metropolitan area.

POLL: Most are opposed to intervention

tions against the United States, and we should not tolerate any such abuse of the United States government."

Terry Dearing, who served in Vietnam in 1967-68, said, "Why is Haiti any different than Somalia? We would send young men over there to die, and then we would run with our tail between our legs just like we did in Somalia. I don't believe we should stick our nose in it."

Eddie Phelps felt that if there is military strife in the country, it should be fought by Haitians.

"I think we ought to send all the Haitian boat people through a crash military course, and then send them back to fight their own people," Phelps said.

An anonymous caller said, "I think we need to let Haiti work out their own problems. The only way to stop those people from getting on those boats and risking their lives is to let them know they can't have sanctuary in the United States."

The anti-Clinton faction also spoke out, including one anonymous respondent who said, "I do not think the United States should send our men over their to possibly be slaughtered, especially when our commander in chief is a draft dodger. We need to send him over there."

"If we do invade," Felix Wellmaker said, "I would like to see Bill and Hillary lead the initial ground assault and then check on the environmental effect of the attack."

A caller named Helen said the Democratic administration should refrain from trying to tell other governments how to run their countries because "it's doing such a terrible job on its own."

Robert Cowman said there should be no military intervention, "until such time there would be found a compelling United States interest involved in maintaining peace there."

Prosecutor faces specter of race bias in O.J. case

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A coalition of black leaders urged District Attorney Gil Garcetti on Tuesday not to seek the death penalty against O.J. Simpson if he is convicted of murder in the stabbing deaths of his ex-wife and her friend.

"I am categorically opposed to the district attorney seeking the death penalty in this case, or for that matter every case," said Urban League President John Mack, who was host of the meeting. Mack said his opposition to the death penalty in the Simpson case was shared by the 14 other black leaders who attended.

Garcetti is expected to announce sometime before the trial whether he'll ask the jury to recommend a death sentence if Simpson is convicted in the June 12 stabbings of Nicole Brown Simpson, 35, and Ron Goldman, 25.

Simpson, 47, faces a Friday arraignment in Superior Court and must go to trial within 60 days of that date unless the defense requests a delay.

Garcetti, meanwhile, assured the group that Simpson will get a fair trial despite widespread suspicions among blacks that an impartial jury can be found.

"We're interested in fairness for Mr. Simpson and that's my interest also. But we're also interested in fairness to the victims and interested in fairness, frankly, for the community as a whole," Garcetti said.

Simpson has maintained his innocence, and NBC News reported Tuesday that the former football star plans to offer a $250,000 reward for information leading to an arrest and conviction of the killer of his ex-wife and Goldman.

Goldman's family has hired a lawyer to file a wrongful death lawsuit against Simpson, KNBC-TV reported.

In the meantime, a new poll shows that Californians are divided along racial lines on the question of Simpson's guilt or innocence.

Fifty-eight percent of adults of all races questioned by the Field Poll say it is "very likely or somewhat likely" that Simpson committed the slayings.

DNA: City rarely uses blood-type tests courtrooms, is because of the expense.

"For the basic test, it's $1,500," she said. "From there, extra tests go from $3,000 to $4,000, depending on how much evidence is needed."

Testing — done at one of two Dallas laboratories — can take from six to eight weeks.

Another reason for the few cases using DNA testing is that there is usually heavy material evidence against a defendant.

"In most cases, it is used to bear out a co-defendant's testimony or a victim's testimony," Ms. Clingman said. "There is usually a lot of evidence against the defendant; however, most jurors distrust a co-defendant because they were mostly likely also involved in the offense," she said.

"The test results are used simply to prove the case beyond a reasonable doubt."

DNA tests are usually called for in violent crimes, such as sexual assaults or homicides. Tests for DNA can be done on bodily fluids — such as blood, saliva or semen — hair with the root still intact, skin or fingernails.

Ms. Clingman said what is looked for in DNA test results are specific identifiers that prove the defendant is in a small enough DNA group to have committed the crime.

"It's not as ironclad as fingerprinting, which is, of course, the best evidence you can have against someone, since everyone's prints are unique.

"But, you can get pretty specific," she said. "If you find that this person has the same DNA identifiers as one person in 500,000 or one in a million, you have pretty well eliminated anyone else in Midland."

As for the Simpson case, Ms. Clingman said the burden of guilt or innocence lies squarely on the forensic scientists.

"Without a strong forensics case, the prosecution really doesn't have a case," she said.

"It's going to come down to DNA, shoeprints if they can find any, blood and hair. Now, if that's enough to convict, well that's a good question."

YIELDS: Clinton softens call for coverage employers.

"He's singing our song, and we think that's great," said Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., leader of a bipartisan group in the Senate.

"A change, yeah, sure," said Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. "It means we can get a bill."

Clinton said he agreed with Dole on one point — that Congress should forgo its scheduled August recess if necessary to complete work on a health-care bill.

"All I ask in these closing weeks of the debate is that we take the political air out of the balloon and ask ourselves: What will work for ordinary Americans?" Clinton told the governors.

After more than a year of insisting on guaranteed coverage for everyone, Clinton said he realized no plan could do that. He didn't say what he would settle for but did assert that "you've got to get somewhere in the ballpark of 95 percent" to guarantee cost controls and other components critical to national reform.

Talking with reporters after his speech, Clinton said, "You cannot physically cover 100 percent. It's impossible. Nobody can do that. We don't cover 100 percent of the people in Social Security and it's universal."

Meanwhile, Hillary Rodham Clinton, a main architect of the president's plan, kept up the pressure for universal coverage.

"The only thing that will work is to get everybody into the system," she said in an interview on ABC-TV. "If you leave millions of people out . . . you will always have the costs being increased because they can be shifted onto someone else."

While Clinton said he was open to a financing mechanism other than his proposal that employers be required to provide coverage and pay most of the bill, he attached a daunting condition: that someone prove to him another method would accomplish his goal of covering most people.

"I have never ruled out another option; I have just never seen one I thought would work," Clinton said. "I ask you to look at the evidence."

For his part, Dole also assured the governors he was open to compromise.

Speaking to reporters later, however, Dole was more rigid, saying Republicans were unwilling to yield more ground.

"There's no use kidding anyone; we're not going to go any further," Dole said.

In their back-to-back speeches, neither Dole nor Clinton as much as raised his voice, and each asserted his plan was closest to the health-care framework endorsed by the governors last winter.

That proposal called for reforms that would allow people to take their insurance with them from job to job and would prohibit insurers from denying coverage to those with pre-existing conditions. Also, it called for subsidies to help low-income Americans and small businesses buy coverage.

Trying to rally the governors to his side, Dole said he would try to replace the federal Medicaid spending caps that are a critical financing element of his plan.

TAX: 6 entities must project incomes member Appraisal Review Board recently heard and resolved the last of 500 disputes on appraised valuations, Stegall said.

(From 1A)

The district's appraisers set values on more than 100,000 pieces of property. By law, the values are to reflect fair-market prices.

In October, after the six taxing bodies set their 1994 tax rates, Stegall and Midland County Tax-Assessor Collector Kathy Reeves will mail out about 115,000 tax notices to owners of properties throughout the county.

Stegall collects taxes for the city, MISD, the hospital district and MC; Ms. Reeves collects for the county and GISD.

All together, their efforts are to bring in about $82 million in tax revenues — to operate local governments, the college and school systems and for the hospital's indigent-care costs.

For the current tax year, Stegall said his staff and the district's delinquent-tax attorneys collected about 97 percent of levied taxes.

"This is the best year we have ever done on that," Stegall said. "Usually, we run about 96 percent."

Stegall credits the high collection rate to "the aggressiveness that we have in collecting delinquencies.

"Our attorneys sue a lot of folks (for back taxes). I believe we are doing a better job of keeping up with the names and addresses and that kind of stuff."

Poll: Americans still strongly support universal health coverage

■ Survey shows health care is as big a concern as crime; most say they would pay higher taxes for everyone to be insured.

N.Y. Times News Service

Amid the cacophony of warring health-care plans and partisan jibes, the public remains strongly committed to getting a plan passed and continues to endorse universal coverage.

Americans are now as concerned about health care as they are about crime, and a majority say they are willing to pay higher taxes to get everyone insured, according to the latest New York Times/CBS News poll.

Eight in 10 polled continue to say that it was "very important" that every American receive health insurance coverage.

"The president should not compromise on that," said Roberta Lake, a 21-year-old graduate of Wooster College in Ohio who has moved back to her mother's house in Maryland until she begins an internship with the dean of black students at Wooster. "This is a biggie for me because I was diagnosed last summer with multiple sclerosis, and I'm not insured. The percentage of Americans who would get left out are those who need it most."

Miss Lake was one of the respondents who agreed to follow-up interviews after participating in the nationwide telephone poll of 1,339 adults, taken Thursday through Sunday. The poll has a margin of sampling error plus or minus three percentage points.

President Clinton s still having trouble getting traction on a spectrum of issues. His overall job approval rating slipped slightly to 42 percent, just about the same percentage that elected him in 1992, and public confidence on his foreign affairs performance continues to erode.

While he has succeeded in pushing health care to the top of the national agenda, Clinton has not benefited from it politically because he is mired in growing skepticism about Washington's ability to quickly pass any sort of health care plan.

Most people said they would be disappointed if Congress never passes a health-care plan, and a substantial number — 39 percent — said they would be less likely to re-elect a member of Congress who voted against a health-care plan.

The yearning for overhauling the health-care system and attaining universal coverage clearly has a wistful side, since 78 percent of those polled now say they think Congress will not be able to agree on a plan before the end of the year.

Leonard Smith, a 40-year-old unemployed plumber and part-time farmer from a town in southeastern Iowa called Figourney sees it this way: "Clinton's trying to do something that needs to be done, but he himself doesn't have the power to do diddly squat. If the Democrats are for something, the Republicans automatically think they have to be against it. They won't work for what's right."

If Smith was resigned, Estia Douglas, 68, a grandmother and Democrat from Orlando, Fla., was riled. "The Republicans are coming up with a lot of garbage about how we can't afford to cover everybody," she said. "Well, we couldn't afford to send a man on the moon either, but we did, didn't we?"

Although the public has a clear preference for universal coverage, a slight majority believed that it would be all right if Clinton compromised at 95 percent coverage.

"It'll have to be scaled down, it'll never pass the way it is," Smith said. "Clinton is like the guy who wants $75 for his bicycle so he asks $150 to start with. It's just a selling game."

Roma Templeton, 39, an office supervisor from League City, near Houston, agreed that the president "should compromise on a few things to get it passed and then work on those things later."

Ms. Templeton said she was not averse to higher taxes. "Either you pay more in taxes or you pay more in health care," she said. "It's one or the other."

Doctor recounts his mother's choice to die by starvation in medical journal

CHICAGO (AP) — She was a "little old lady in sneakers" who prized self-sufficiency and simple pleasures. Her son is a doctor who admired her spunk, her love of life and her decision to end it when her health failed.

In April, she committed suicide by refusing food and water.

Dr. David M. Eddy describes his mother's decision and death in a first-person account in a medical journal, saying the right-to-die debate has overlooked the option that gave his mother a painless "happy death."

"Without hoarding pills, without making me a criminal, without putting a bag over her head, and without huddling in a van with a carbon monoxide machine, she had found a way to bring her life gracefully to a close," he wrote in today's issue of The Journal of the American Medical Association.

In a hospital in her hometown of Middlebury, Vt., Virginia Eddy received morphine as needed to relieve any discomfort, said her physician, Dr. Timothy Cope.

"It was less than I thought she'd need," he said in telephone interview.

When the body stops getting fluids, life ends quickly, and dehydration seems to bring physical relief rather than pain, some researchers say. Mrs. Eddy's death took less than a week.

Much of the right-to-die debate has centered on whether it is legal to pull feeding tubes from people unable to make such a decision for themselves, or whether mentally competent people should be able to end their lives with drugs or carbon monoxide, seeking help from others if necessary. One well-known how-to book, "Final Exit," doesn't even mention refusing food and fluids as an option, Eddy said.

Mrs. Eddy begged her son to write about her experience, Eddy said.

"Tell others how well this worked for me," her son quoted her as saying. "I'd like this to be my gift. Whether they are terminally ill, in intractable pain, or like me, just know that the right time has come for them, more people might want to know that this way exists.

"And maybe more physicians will help them find it."

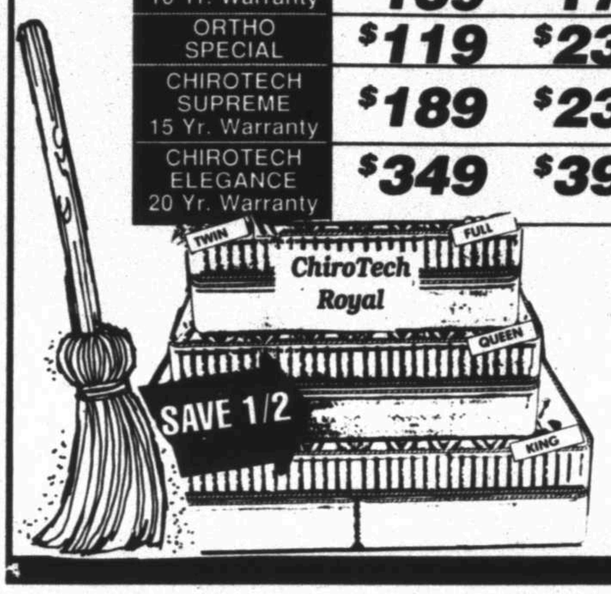

Some groups take a darker view of the choice to starve.

"On general principle: Is suicide moral? The answer is no," said Randall Terry, founder of Operation Rescue, an anti-abortion group that also opposes the right to die. "We cannot put ourselves in the place of God. Murder is against the Sixth Commandment, even self-murder."

Eddy said his mother was fully competent.

French approach offers perspective

When the shoe is on somebody else's foot it can certainly offer a different perspective.

Take, for example, the subject of a national language. English has been the dominant language in the United States for longer than two centuries. Although some Spanish-speaking groups want to see more usage of Spanish, the simple fact is that many more Americans use English as their main language, and the founding fathers of the nation spoke English. That seems to be the real reason for keeping it as the "national language." In other words, why change horses in midstream?

Now comes word that France is also reeling under a barrage of foreign words and, interestingly, many of them are English. In fact, recently the French Parliament banned 3,500 foreign words including "cheeseburger," "chewing gum" and "bulldozer" from use by advertisers, schools, government and corporations.

The law enacted stipulates that French words will be used instead, and fines up to $3,700 have been proposed.

Under the law, ads produced in a foreign language must be accompanied by a French translation. Manufacturers cannot sell goods without instructions in French. Broadcasters must not use English words on TV and radio when French equivalents exist.

Additionally, French must be used in classrooms and exams. Work contracts and corporate regulations must be done in French when they concern French workers.

Conference organizers must provide summations in French of speeches presented in other languages.

It all sounds like a pretty big mess. And how are the French people taking this effort to protect the French language?

Well, the French Academy of Sciences said it would be impossible to provide translations of all scientific work, and said the law risked "gravely compromising the spread of French science throughout the world."

Socialist lawmaker Francois Autin said it would be impossible to purge a language's use, noting that France's 1789 Declaration of Human Rights states "None shall have the power to dictate to others the forms in which they must speak, write or publish."

It's certainly true that a language is one of the most precious commodities a people can possess. It makes communication possible, and limiting or restricting it seems counterproductive.

Perhaps the object should not be to limit the people of one nation to a particular language, but instead to use one language for official documents and to encourage all the residents of that particular nation to be fluent in as many languages as possible.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, July 20, the 201st day of 1994. There are 164 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty-five years ago, on July 20, 1969, Apollo 11 astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin became the first men to walk on the moon. At 10:56 p.m. EDT, Armstrong stepped onto the moon from Apollo's lunar module and declared, "That's one small step for (a) man, one giant leap for mankind."

On this date:

In 1810, Colombia declared independence from Spain.

In 1861, the Congress of the Confederate States began holding sessions in Richmond, Va.

In 1871, British Columbia entered Confederation as a Canadian province.

In 1881, Sioux Indian leader Sitting Bull, a fugitive since the Battle of the Little Big Horn, surrendered to federal troops.

In 1917, the draft lottery in World War I went into operation.

Catholics take stand on health care

The Catholics would — what? Endanger health care, Clinton-style, out of opposition to abortion?

Murchison

It sounds odd to some. Catholics are for universal coverage, just like the president: which should translate into support for the president's health-care initiative, or something closely resembling it. Instead, Catholics — from archbishops all the way to down to humble pew-sitters — are banding together to insist that abortion be excluded from the standard package of benefits. If it isn't, and Catholics are expected to help finance abortions through their taxes or "employer contributions," the Church will oppose the final legislative product.

How about that for fideliity to principle? Clintonites will insist, albeit politely, that the Catholics are cutting off their noses to spite their faces. How can they give up a cherished legislative objective for a religious scruple?

What an extremely modern question! We're not supposed to care these days about religious scruples. Don't we know by now that the only touchstone of value is the electoral return: the sovereign people making it up as they go; every man, every woman, the judge of his/her moral vision?

Clearly, the Cathoics don't know any such thing, which helps to make their witness engaging, not to say inspiring. They argue not just from different but from higher premises. The Clintonites set forth a calculus of political value. We have to have abortion coverage in the health-care bill, they affirm. Women's rights demand it. The demand is easily acceded to by politicians whose own convictions are, as the phrase goes, pro-choice. Come on, abortion is a medical procedure. Moreover, it's constitutional; the U.S. Supreme Court, having said so 21 years ago — a lifetime in politics — refuses to unsay it. There should be no objection to abortion coverage; the Catholics are being old-fashioned. Or something more uplifting — like spiritual, as was common in more old-fashioned times.

Here they stand — to borrow the reformer, Martin Luther's, phrase — refusing to exalt politics and sociology over the historic understanding of unborn life as worthy of protection. Here they stand, moreover, blocking the path to reform.

Abortion is the kind of issue politicians find maddening. They can't wheel and deal on it in committee, can't fashion tidy little compromises that give a little to this side, a little to that one. The fetus/child in the womb either enjoys protection or it doesn't; either it gets born eventually or it doesn't.

How, then, did abortion become a national political issue? The answer is distressingly simple: The U.S. Supreme Court made it one, by coming between the people and their elected lawmakers and cancelling virtually all the abortion statutes then on the books. America has paid the price ever since — in terms of the 1.5 million lives foreclosed every year by abortion and, not least, by the civic and political disruption that Roe vs. Wade has brought about.

There are ample reasons — constitutional, medical, economic — to worry about and ultimately oppose the Clinton health-care plan and its pale imitations. Abortion, at this point, joins the catalog.

Halls of Congress become trigger-happy

Roy Rogers's horse seemed to come thundering down the halls of Congress last month: the word on all lips was trigger, not so famously used in politics since Nelson Rockefeller called Barry Goldwater trigger-happy.

Safire

When you pull a trigger, a gun goes off. From the Middle Dutch trecken, "to pull" (same root as trek, as in "Star Trek"), the English word began in 1621 as tricker, meaning "the lever that springs a trap"; it soon became the name for the small steel catch that releases the hammer or firing pin of a gun when drawn, pressed, pulled or — to use the verb my sergeant preferred — squeezed.

Metaphorically, triggers became heavily involved in Congress with the onset of health-care legislation. What to call a device in the law that would measure future fulfillment of a certain level of coverage — and then, if coverage failed to reach that goal, spring a little legislative lever that would bring new pressure to bear? A time bomb is pejorative; a trigger is not.

But what sort of trigger? From the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, comes this plaintive letter: "Could you access your 'Somewhere a Roscoe . . . ' file? The press just now abounds with references to hard and soft triggers in a health-care bill. To what must surely be the distress of handgun aficionados everywhere, we seem to be getting it wrong.

"A hard trigger goes off automatically," observes Chairman Pat. "Whereas a soft trigger has to be squeezed hard. There is enough confusion about health care. Nor is S.J. Perelman on hand to set us straight."

Dutifully, Moynihan attaches a glossary prepared by the Finance Committee staff. It defines a hard trigger as "a mandate (on employers and/or individuals) automatically imposed if a commission determines that the percentage of persons covered by health insurance has not reached a target specified in statute."

A soft trigger is a kinder, gentler form of coercion: "Under a soft trigger, Congress reviews recommendations of a commission for increasing coverage rates, if the commission determines that the percentage of persons covered by health insurance has not reached a target specified in statute. There is no requirement for Congress to act."

Thus, in current political usage, triggers are means to commit future Congresses to actions that the present Congress is unwilling to take now. When an idea like this becomes popular, the operative word takes on a glow, and policy wonks come up with a series of modifiers. (A few years ago, the hot legislative word was cap, which has since been tossed over the wall.)

"These words hard trigger and soft trigger are both irregular and misnomer terms not used in the gun business," I am informed by John Armand Caudron, president of Firearms Research and Identification Association, in Rowland Heights, Calif. "What you describe as a hard trigger that kicks in automatically may be akin to that of a double-action firearm. It will have a tougher or harder trigger pull because it takes more force to pull than a regular trigger of a cocked firearm. Soft trigger could refer to a hair trigger, which has a reduced force to drop the hammer or drop the sear, discharging the gun."

Thus, Moynihan is metaphorically right: the political hard trigger, which goes off at the slightest touch of failed goals, is really akin to the hair trigger, which fires at the gentlest squeeze, whilst the political soft trigger takes the kind of hard pulling required in double-action firearms. Congress, as the Chairman of Senate Finances vainly insists, has the whole thing backward.

Pope might need some tips for sale of book

Dear Pontiff:

Welcome to the book trade. It needs a touch of class, and you're just the author to provide it.

Baker

I hope you won't think it pushy if I pass along a few tips. Believe me, Your Holiness, I wish somebody had done it for me on my first book.

Right off, you're going to find your publisher wants you to get out and sell your book. It's not enough that a writer has to write his book nowadays, he is also expected to sell it.

A lot of authors deal with this by hiring somebody else to write the book. This frees them to take acting classes so they will know how to do a smasheroo sales job on TV. They figure since practically nobody is going to read their book anyhow, even the few who buy it, why get hung up on pride of authorship?

Ghost prose is not for you, dear pope. The trick is to make your publisher do the selling. You've made a good start on this by getting that big money commitment. Six or seven million dollars up front, if the papers are right.

Sure, you are passing it all through to good causes. But the point is, no matter who's getting the money, the publisher is laying out what for a publisher amounts to a banker's ransom. He has to get that money back, or else, which means he had better get out there and sell your book himself.

If you'd settled for peanuts — an advance of, say, fifteen or twenty thousand simoleons — the publisher could have said, "If you don't want to get out there and sell your own book it's no skin off my nose, J.P."

And let you die in the bookshops after selling the tiny first printing he issued to recover his peanuts.

OK, he's going to lean on you to sell it anyhow. He's going to say, look, he's put up those millions so you owe it to him to be a good guy.

And you are a good guy, right? A man doesn't get where you are without being a good guy. So you're going to tell the publisher, "Well, all right, I'll do a little selling."

Selling means performing on television. The theory is that everybody in America is so busy watching television that they don't have time to read, so the only way to let them know you've got something more for them not to read is to go on the tube.

If you go on the breakfast shows, keep it short: a few lines so thoroughly rehearsed you can remember them no matter how terrified you are. Keep it casual too: call the interviewers Charlie, Harry, Bryant. Try not to look at the technicians when they make slashing hand gestures at their throats.

Now you want to look relaxed, no matter how tense you are. Not looking relaxed on television makes viewers nervous. They start to worry and don't pay attention to your few carefully rehearsed lines so don't get the message that you have something brand new for them not to read.

I hear you say, "You're talking to a fellow who can stay cool as a cucumber while talking to 100,000 souls in St. Peter's Square." But believe me, Your Holiness, TV is not St. Peter's Square. Cool as a cucumber doesn't work on TV. On TV it's tight as a drum that does the trick.

To look relaxed, get tense. Sit up on the edge of the chair. Arch your back until it screams. Whatever you do, Holiness, do not sit back and relax in the chair. Do that on TV, and you'll look like a man being swallowed by a chair.

If the publisher wheedles you into doing call-in shows, radio or TV, be prepared to discuss the Cleveland Browns' chances of getting to the Super Bowl, explain why you haven't printed the truth about Hillary Clinton, or be abused for your last novel, which of course was written by Tom Clancy.

All right, once the publisher discovers you really are a good guy and, what's better, also a good sport he's going to wheedle you into bookstore appearances. Here's what will happen:

You go to a vast mall, find the bookshop between a shoe store and Victoria's Secret and introduce yourself to a clerk who's never heard of you but knows where to find the manager, who puts a table out in mall traffic, dumps books on it and puts up a sign saying you will sign books for the next hour. While you sit there not selling a single book thousands of people walk by wondering silently if you're somebody famous.

This, Your Holiness, is the book trade with the bark off.

Parliament of Bosnian Serbs gives conditional response to peace plan

■ Failure to fully accept plan defies mediators' demand for clearcut approval.

PALE, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnian Serbs hedged on fully accepting an international peace plan Tuesday, defying the United States and other mediators who had demanded clearcut approval.

In a closed session, the Serbs' self-styled parliament set conditions for full acceptance that would amount to a renegotiation of the entire plan, sources said on condition of anonymity.

Mediators had threatened international reprisals if the plan was rejected.

The international resolve to end the 27-month war could come unglued if the Russians, traditional Serb allies, insist that the Serb response not be rejected out of hand. The mediators are to meet in Geneva today.

The parliament of the Muslim-led government and Bosnian Croats accepted the plan Monday.

Sources close to the Bosnian Serb leadership said the conditions included modification of maps to allow Serb access to the sea, and control of part of Sarajevo, the capital.

The Serbs apparently also want a constitutional arrangement that would give them virtual autonomy in Bosnia and firm guarantees that U.N. sanctions against the Serbs' patron, Yugoslavia, will be lifted.

The result of the secret vote by the Serb assembly in Pale, 10 miles east of Sarajevo, was kept strictly confidential so international negotiators could be informed first, Serb officials said.

Lack of agreement on the peace plan could make the war flare with new fury and force NATO and the United States to become more deeply involved in the region.

To push the plan through, its authors — the United States, Russia, Britain, France and Germany — threatened to tighten sanctions on Yugoslavia and exempt the Bosnian government from an arms embargo on past and present Yugoslav republics.

Moreover, U.N. peacekeepers may be pulled out of Bosnia if a settlement isn't reached.

Under the plan, Bosnia would be divided, and Serbs, who now hold 70 percent of the country, would be left with 49 percent.

N. Korea says goodbye to Kim Il Sung

SEOUL, South Korea (NYT) — With cannons firing, mourners wailing and an elaborate motorized funeral procession passing through the streets of its capital, North Korea bid final farewell Tuesday to Kim Il Sung, one of the world's last Stalinist dictators and a giant figure of the Cold War.

Television excerpts released by the North Korean government showed the leader's coffin, draped not in the red, blue and white national flag but in the red banner of the ruling Communist Party, resting on a bed of flowers, being borne through the broad boulevards of Pyongyang on top of an American limousine.

Hundreds of thousands of people lined the streets, some weeping and sobbing hysterically, in what a North Korean television announcer called the "greatest sorrow" in the 5,000-year history of the nation.

The funeral procession capped a frenzy of mourning that has lasted since the "Great Leader," as Kim was called, died at age 82 on July 8 from what the government described as a heart attack.

Kim's son and chosen successor, Kim Jong Il, is expected to assume power in what would be the first dynastic succession in a Communist country, and North Korea-watchers combed the television report for clues to the political situation. North Korea remained closed to Westerners except for a few diplomats.

In the television coverage provided by North Korea, the 52-year-old heir apparent was seen wearing a dark Mao jacket flanked by other high officials, bowing before his father's coffin and later standing outside as the motorcade began.

The broadcasts referred to the younger Kim as head of the military, but not as president or head of the ruling Communist Party. That seemed to indicate that he had not yet taken charge.

But one South Korean government official close to the intelligence services said that the younger Kim had been shown five times on the edited videotape, and that the number of appearances had to be counted as an indication for the son's succession.

Rescue crews free victim of Argentine blast, report more bodies under rubble

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Rescue crews saved a man trapped for 31 hours in the wreckage of a building Tuesday, a day after a deadly explosion destroyed the offices of Argentina's two main Jewish groups.

Jacobo Echemanuel, 56, opened his eyes and smiled as he was carried out on a stretcher, drawing cheers from doctors and rescue workers.

The same rescuers told Noticias Argentinas news agency, however, that they saw six or seven more bodies under the rubble. The government had reported 26 people dead and 127 injured in the Monday blast that leveled the seven-story building.

Officials from Jewish groups released a list of 74 people who were presumably in the building when it exploded and remained missing. The list was based on information from relatives and friends.

Israel blamed Muslim fundamentalists backed by Iran for the attack. Iran denied it.

An Iraqi and a Moroccan were being held for questioning by Argentine authorities.

Echemanuel's legs had been pinned under a steel beam and masonry and federal police rescuers said they first thought a leg would have to be amputated to free him. That did not prove necessary.

Rescue physician Alberto Crescenti said Echemanuel was given intravenous fluids, painkillers and oxygen while rescuers applied liquid vaseline to slip his legs loose.

Three other people were rescued from the rubble overnight, bringing to at least nine the number of survivors removed since the building crumbled Monday morning. It was headquarters for the Delegation of Argentine Israeli Associations, an umbrella group for Jewish organizations, and the Argentine Israelite Mutual Association, a social aid group.

The explosion transformed the building into a heap of mangled steel and masonry, destroyed nearby cars and heavily damaged businesses as far as a block away. Hospitals said several of the injured were in critical condition.

As many as 200 people were believed to have been in the building at the time.

Police refused to go into specifics, but some officials said they presumed the explosion was caused by a bomb. Both President Carlos Menem and Beraja said it might have been planned by foreigners who were helped by people in Argentina.

Menem said an Iraqi man carrying an expired Brazilian passport was detained Monday night while trying to cross the border to Brazil in Paso de los Libres, about 620 miles north of Buenos Aires. He was identified in news reports as Mohammed Yousif, 31.

Tutsi-led rebels install new Rwandan government, promise peace

■ Almost half nation's population has fled as new president, ethnic Hutu, takes power.

Associated Press

KIGALI, Rwanda — Victorious Tutsi-led rebels installed a new government Tuesday, then immediately promised peace and urged a halt to the desperate flight of millions of terrorized refugees.

Nearly half of Rwanda's population has either fled abroad or is on the move toward the border with Zaire.

The new government has an ethnic Hutu as president and the rebel military commander as his vice president and defense minister.

The rebels, who blazed from exile to victory in the 14-week civil war, routed the Hutu government. Its army and many of its leaders have fled in disarray into Zaire along with other refugees.

During the war, about 200,000 to 500,000 people, mostly minority Tutsis, were slaughtered by government-trained extremist Hutu militias.

Fearing the rebels will retaliate, 1.7 million Hutus have poured across the border into Zaire in the past week, and refugee officials say 1.5 million more are on their way in an exodus of epic proportions.

Relief officials predict widespread famine unless massive aid arrives.

Little evidence has emerged of reprisals by Tutsi rebels against Hutu civilians.

"Today is a day of joy and sorrow," said rebel leader Maj. Gen. Paul Kagame, 37, as he was sworn in as vice president and defense minister.

"The (rebel) army has removed a system of oppression and dictatorship but only at the cost of many lives."

Faustin Twagiramungu was sworn in as prime minister, and Pasteur Bizimungu was inaugurated as president. Both are moderate Hutus.

The makeup of the new government generally follows a power-sharing plan worked out in a peace agreement that was signed last August to end a three-year civil war.

The agreement was never implemented and the war restarted after the Hutu president was killed in an unexplained plane crash. His allies began a systematic slaughter of Tutsis and moderate Hutus.

The two new deputy prime ministers are officials of the rebel Rwandan Patriotic Front. Twenty other Cabinet members also were sworn in, five of them rebel leaders.

About 3,000 people watched the inauguration from the lawn of the parliament building, shattered by shells in fighting for the capital, Kigali.

But in the far southwestern corner of the tiny central African country, the refugee flight continued. If all those moving through the southwest cross into Zaire, it would bring the number of Rwandans living in refugee camps in neighboring countries to about 3.5 million. Rwanda's prewar population was about 8 million.

Aid groups already are stretched to the limit in struggling to stave off starvation and disease.

Rebel leader Alexis Kanyarengwe asked the refugees to come home.

"There is peace," he said. "No Rwandan should ever be a refugee again. There has been a lot of suffering in this country and now the RPF has decided to work democratically to end Rwanda's pain."

Haitian police, gunmen raid offices of opposition

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Police raided an opposition coalition's offices and roughed up activists Tuesday while the United States belittled diplomatic efforts by military rulers to end their international isolation.

Firing into the air, police and gunmen in civilian clothes raided the downtown headquarters of K-16, roughed up several people and arrested at least one person, said Sen. Turneb Delpe, a coalition spokesman. The man later was released.

The coalition, formed in June, supports exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide and has called for the resignation of army chief Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras. One of its leaders is Port-au-Prince Mayor Evans Paul, who has kept a low profile since the army toppled Aristide's government in September 1991.

Asked about the raid, police officials said they were unaware of it and sent three officers to investigate. They arrived more than an hour later, when the opposition headquarters building was deserted.

Delpe called the raid "a serious violation of the right of assembly." He wasn't present during the raid, but witnesses confirmed his account.

Diplomats fear human rights abuses will increase after Haiti last week expelled rights observers from the United Nations and the Organization of American States.

Police also used belts and switches to control a crowd of about 1,000 people who stormed a Roman Catholic food distribution center that was distributing rice.

Already the Western Hemisphere's poorest nation, Haiti is suffering acute shortages of basic foods in part because of an international embargo designed to pressure the military to step down and allow Aristide to return.

The United States has threatened an invasion to restore democracy. U.S. warships carrying more than 2,000 Marines are standing by off Haiti.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Stanley Schrager said Haiti's military was "trying to buy time" by raising the possibility of a negotiated solution to the crisis.

Authorities: Leftist guerrillas assassinate Colombian army general with car bomb

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Leftist guerrillas assassinated an army general Tuesday after ambushing his car. He was the highest-ranking army officer to be slain in Colombia in 20 years.

The attack was apparently part of a nationwide offensive by a coalition of rebel groups known as the Simon Bolivar Guerrilla Coordinator.

The rebels set off a remote control bomb as Gen. Carlos Julio Gil Colorado's car passed in Villavicencio, 45 miles southeast of the capital of Bogota, authorities said.

Gil Colorado, the commander of the army's 4th division, survived the explosion, but died from two gunshots to the head, the Ministry of Defense said. His driver was seriously wounded.

Leftist guerrillas have been fighting the state for more than 30 years. Some rebel groups have signed peace accords with the government in recent years, but about 8,000 have refused to lay down their weapons.

In telephone calls to radio stations, the Guerrilla Coordinator said it was launching an offensive as a farewell gesture to President Cesar Gaviria, who failed to make peace with the group.

Farmers, ranchers look skyward

■ Recent rains certainly help, but prevailing drought worries those engaged in agribusiness.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

A week after the last rain, the land is getting dry again and is begging for more life-sustaining water.

Drought conditions prevail in West Texas, said Earnest Kiker, Midland County agricultural agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

"The rainfall that came was sure needed," Kiker said. "But we need a general rainfall — not a spotted rainfall like we had — that reaches over a large number of acres."

The rain, which varied in intensity and duration, "helped us and gave us some relief. But we sure need follow-up rains" to improve ranch and farm conditions.

The dearth of rainfall and the extremely high temperatures that often exceed 100 have stressed both cotton and livestock.

"If (the recent rain) didn't help the cotton any, it sure made the farmers feel better for a little while," said Delton Stone, manager of the Midland Farmers Cooperative.

Last week, between 1½ to 2½ inches of rain fell over a two-day period.

"It sure didn't make us a crop, but it sure made things look a lot better," Stone said. "It's so dry. It helped the cotton. Everything looks a lot brighter. It doesn't burn down so during the day. But we are going to need some more."

Stone said that where there was spotted rainfall, the grass has "greened-up quite a bit.

"It looks awful good," he said. "The old cows are pretty happy right now."

Deputy sues law officers over alleged wiretap

Staff Report

A Midland County Sheriff's deputy has filed a lawsuit in federal court that seeks $5 million in damages from a number of city and federal law-enforcement officers.

Gerald Hall filed a discrimination lawsuit in U.S. District Court. Among the defendants named in the lawsuit are: Ron Benton, Charlie Blankenship, the city of Midland, Jess Thompson, Peggy Thompson, Bobby Welborn, Ron Sartor, the U.S. Secret Service, the FBI and the Fraternal Order of Police Lodge No. 11.

According to the lawsuit, Hall was employed at the Bingo Barn, owned by the Thompsons, on June 5, when the couple allegedly intercepted and recorded a cellular phone call made by Hall to Leonard Hendon.

Hall said he was talking about possible corrupt acts by the Thompsons or others and said neither he nor Hendon consented to the call being recorded.

On June 22, Hall said he, Hendon, Benton, Welborn and Blankenship were in the Midland Police Department classroom and the tape was played for him, the lawsuit claims.

Hall said the officers told him the tape was made legally through a wire tap and if he didn't "shut up about the possible inconsistencies" of the Thompsons that certain threats would be car-

City Hall plans reorganization

By Michael Kashgarian

Some offices on the fourth floor of City Hall will be moved down to the first floor while others on the second floor will be relocated to the fourth floor. And some third- and first-floor offices will be transferred to the second floor, and offices from the second floor will move upstairs to the third floor.

That's a generalization of some renovations and rearrangements planned at City Hall.

Sound like a mess?

Despite some confusion, when the project is all done, it will be for the better, according to Mark Phillips, director of facilities and fleet management.

For one, the public and city employees visiting City Hall will be better received.

"We really wanted to get high-traffic areas like personnel and the credit union on the first floor," Phillips said. Those two offices — currently on the fourth floor — will join the water billing department on the first.

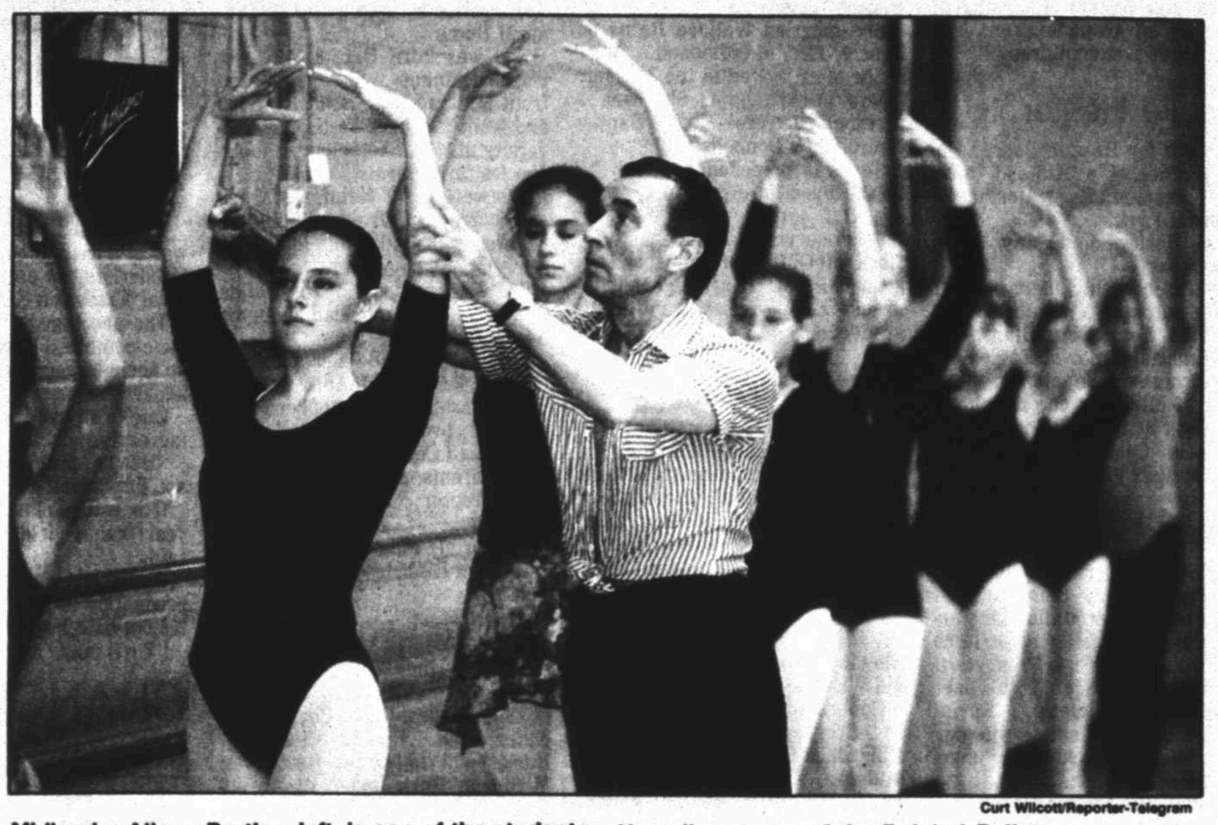

Those moves will utilize space made available on the first floor from when the city's communication and information systems department moved to the Police Department building.

The one-stop concept was also considered in the decision to relocate the planning and development department to the fourth floor where code administration is located.

And purchasing and accounting personnel will both be on the second floor.

"The original concept was to get like groups together that have to work to-

Bolshoi master teaches ballet classes

Shamil Yagudin watches each dancer intently. When he sees something that displeases him, he demonstrates again what he means. His professional manner elicits a serious attitude from the more than 20 teen-age girls trying to do as he directs.

"He's so very Russian — he just makes you turn out," said dancer Julie Swift.

"I took his class (Monday) and I loved it. It's totally different. I've never taken from a Russian, not even in New York. It's nice to be exposed to Russian technique. . . . He said to me, 'In a week, you be good.' "

Yagudin, ballet master and principal coach of the Bolshoi Ballet in Moscow, is here this week teaching intermediate and advanced classes for Ballet Midland.

He agrees that technique is different in Russia compared to the United States.

"Different school, different style, but students understand very quickly and change," Yagudin said.

In the United States, funding has been cut for many arts activities. In Russia, the arts are only one of the facets of life that is suffering.

"Change everything. The whole country change. Culture, too. Now, very difficult times in Russia. We hope it will be better," he said.

The Russian people are scared, Yagudin said. "Very bad time. Good people, good country, rich country. Now, we hope it will be better. We wait."

Billy Joe, an entertainer from the Philippines, is to perform at Thursday's "Summer in the City."

Child star from Philippines to perform in Tall City concert

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

An actor, singer, dancer and model, Billy Joe has been in show business for almost a decade. On May 16, he turned 12.

The hardest work he's done so far is making movies.

"You have to memorize a whole bunch of scripts. You sleep about four o'clock in the morning, and you'll wake up about six or seven o'clock in the morning. In show business, that's the No. 1 thing. You can't sleep too early and you can't sleep too late cause you have a lot of things to do. And you can't wake up about 12 in the afternoon. You have to wake up in the morning."

He's philosophical about the inconvenience.

"That's show business," he said.

He thinks the work is fun.

"It's fun, when you get along with it. I was in show business for eight years. I know a lot of friends in show business. I enjoyed it a lot. It's fun when you like acting and singing."

He was 3 when he made his first commercial, which was for Magnolia Chocolate. Since then, he has been in nearly 14 commercials.

He's also been in a number of movies and is a sought-after talent in his native country — the Philippines.

When he was 8, Billy Joe was the youngest performer on "That's Entertainment," an afternoon variety show. That year, the press voted him Outstanding Child Actor and Most Popular Child Performer.

In 1992 at age 10, he was invited to sing when President Ramos was elected.

And for years, he was the person invited to light the country's national Christmas tree. His idol is Michael Jackson. His favorite song is Jackson's

Brevity of life becomes instantly clear at 40 feet

Patterson

From the moment we first learn to string together a few words into meaningful sentiments, we are taught that life is precious. Stop and smell the roses, we are constantly reminded. Learn to appreciate that which is taken for granted.

So many unfortunate souls fail to heed this advice before it is too late.

Life, we are also told, is short. It can be snatched from us in the blink of an eye.

All fine and pretty words, right? One other thing: They are also true.

Fortunately, my family and I are getting another chance.

Monday morning started innocently enough. We were taking the kids to the sitter's. We turned north onto Ward Street from eastbound Wadley Avenue. Somewhere in the middle of the turn we all spotted the car coming west on Wadley at a high rate of speed. The person behind the wheel of the other car should've stopped, but no. Like hundreds of others in this town, the driver felt it necessary to his success that day to run the light that was so red by now that it was forever burned in our memories.

The guy almost took out my entire family. Another 40 feet and these words wouldn't be here today. But as the old saying goes, someone bigger than you or me was watching over us — and everyone else who happened to be in that intersection Monday morning.

Life is short.

Another 40 feet and my wife and I would be resting in some cemetery right now.

Life is precious.

Another 40 feet and our 8-year-old daughter wouldn't have the chance to continue her incredible string of straight A's she started last year. No chance for her to continue her burgeoning soccer career. No chance for her to lead her third-grade class in the Pledge of Allegiance. No chance for her to finish

DROUGHT: Farmers hope for more rain

(From 1B)

West Texas cotton country — dryland cotton is suffering from a lack of rain.

Though last week's rain "wasn't enough because it was a one-time event, we'll take it," said Tommy Doederlein, an entomologist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

The shortage of moisture and high temperatures have combined to put dryland cotton — which makes up about 80 percent of the Lamesa-area cotton crop — under stress.

Due to stress, much of the dryland cotton is blooming early.

"But the problem is, it's blooming at the top" and not throughout the branches of the plant, he said.

If a cotton plant produces 10 bolls in an average year, it may yield only two bolls in this dry season, he said.

Doederlein estimated that Dawson County cotton production in 1994 might be about half of last year's 226,000-bale bumper crop.

"We'll make less than half of what we did last year in our dryland area," he said. "We don't have anything (moisture) underground.

"We had good rains ... in May when we were planting."

He said that before then, the only rains that amounted to anything countywide were in September.

"Since May, we've had a few isolated locations that got hit (by rain) but nothing really general until about a week ago or so."

Even so, that measure of rainfall wasn't enough to place moisture into the topsoil to ensure a bumper crop.

The dry conditions are "pretty serious," Doederlein said. "We can kind of pull out of it if we can get some good rains. If we go another 10 days without a rain, our dryland stuff is basically (going to) shut down."

Perhaps if the cotton country has a long fall and a late freeze, then the cotton may produce more lint.

"It's not a good year," Doederlein said. "But, if things work out, we've still got an opportunity to do a little bit better. We'll never catch up to what we did last year by no means. That was one of the best years."

CHANGES: Offices to move inside building

gether," Phillips said.

Other changes include:

■ moving facilities and fleet management offices from the third floor to the second floor to accommodate more storage area and additional duties added to the office over the years,

■ creating another office on the third floor for the city attorney,

■ and relocating Community and Development Block Grant offices from the second floor to the third.

In addition, the project will include repair work in City Council chambers, such as refinishing woodwork, painting, new carpet and some upholstery work.

Phillips said the renovations should accommodate the needs of city offices for at least seven years.

Cost of the project is estimated at roughly $100,000 with $150,000 already allocated.

Bids are out and work is expected to begin in August. The project should be completed about two months later.

"We're trying to make it with a minimum amount of disruptions," Phillips said.

SINGER: Billy Joe also acts in movies, TV

(From 1B)

"Never Can Say Goodbye."

He is in Midland with his parents, Jack Crawford, originally from Ranger, and Marietta Crawford, originally from the Philippines. The family is staying with his aunt and uncle, Midlanders Jay and Glenda Dover.

Billy Joe will perform as part of the free "Summer in the City" concert series' "International Night," which begins at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at Centennial Plaza.

He's been in action movies, comedies, dramas and science-fiction films. And, he's made some he hasn't been able to see.

"Sometimes I'd like to, but I can't because in Manila it's PG-15 or PG-18," Billy Joe said, specifically referring to some of the action movies he's made.

"It's kind of difficult. I want to see how I act. Come on, 'Let me see.' But they won't let me see because I'm underage."

When he does see himself in a film, he finds it amusing.

"It's kind of fun. You see yourself, and you laugh at yourself."

He also finds it very difficult to change character when he goes from making, for example, a drama to a comedy.

Of all his talents, he most enjoys singing.

"I like (it) better than movies ..."

His family is in transition. His father, who is involved in offshore drilling, may move the family to the United States.

Although he's managed to catch up on his sleep since he's been here, he's sad to leave his career behind.

"It's kind of hard for me to stop because I've been singing and dancing for eight years. It's hard to think about. It's kind of sad."

He hopes to return to the Philippines in three years.

"But it's up to my parents. My parents want this. They are my parents. I have to follow them."

In the meantime, he likes Texas, and hopes to perform in the United States when the opportunity presents itself.

"I want to. I'm willing. It's fun for me."

DANCE: Master begins his career in sports

(From 1B)

School in Moscow when he was 17½ years old.

Before studying dance, he was involved in sports.

"I never thought about dance, I don't know why," Yagudin said. "But I saw ballet and liked it. And I saw a chance to be a star."

In 1952, after 2½ years of study, he was invited to join the Bolshoi Ballet Company.

During his dance career, he danced as a soloist with the Bolshoi Ballet and traveled often. He first performed in the United States in 1959.

A dancer "must like to dance. If don't like, must stop," he said.

Yagudin spent four years at the Moscow Institute for Teachers where he studied teaching dance. He spent an additional four years learning to be a choreographer.

He has been with the Bolshoi Ballet for 42 years. He teaches two classes — one for advanced dancers and one for principal dancers.

"I like teaching," said Yagudin, who also has spent the past six summers teaching in the United States.

In October, he will return to the United States with a small company of 10 dancers, who will perform in select cities — such as Atlanta — with students he has taught in this country.

He won't be dancing with the company.

"I danced 28 years. It's normal for a dancer to dance 20 years. After 20 years, everybody retire. I stop myself. Ballet is for young people. It's sad of course, but I have another — I teach. And when I teach, I dance nonstop."

Jury convicts teens in death of 4-year-old

SAN ANTONIO (NYT) — Two San Antonio boys — one 14, the other 15 — are the first defendants to be convicted under a new Texas law that makes it a capital crime to murder a child under age 6.

While the law forbids executing juvenile killers, the pair could be sent to a reformatory until they are 17 and then spend the remainder of 40 years in an adult penitentiary.

The jury that convicted the teenagers returned to the 285th District Court Tuesday morning to begin hearing evidence in the punishment phase of the trial.

Michael Rodriguez Rubio Jr., 14, and Larry Arevalo, 15, both wiped their eyes after the jury of four women and eight men decided Monday that the pair committed capital murder in a drive-by shooting that killed 4-year-old Raymundo Manuel Diaz on Super Bowl Sunday.

Rubio, the confessed gunman, appeared to cry. Muffled sobs could be heard in the courtroom from the families of both defendants and as the family of the slain child.

Diaz was visiting his grandmother's house in San Antonio on Jan. 30. As the tot arranged a menagerie of small plastic toys on an end table, a shot fired from a car shattered the home's sliding glass door and pierced the boy's skull.

Witnesses said boy's last words were, "Mommy, it hurts."

Rubio and Arevalo had confessed to the killing — Arevalo as the driver of the car and Rubio the shooter. Rubio and Arevalo were gunning for a rival gang member — Diaz's 14-year-old uncle — because he had been talking to Rubio's girlfriend. The intended victim was not at home at the time of the shooting.

Defense attorneys Richard Acevedo and Ed Bartolomei tried to convince jurors that the teens were mistaken and only thought their drive-by shooting resulted in Dias' death.

ried out, according to the lawsuit.

Hall said he asked for the tape but was refused. He said he thought the FBI may have the tape.

The lawsuit also alleges that Benton and Welborn work for the Midland Police Department and Blankenship works for the Secret Service. He indicated the three men were on duty when the alleged threats were made so "evidently they were acting on behalf of the city of Midland and/or the U.S. government."

He claimed his rights were violated by the threats, the wire tap, as well as emotional distress.

Efforts to reach the defendants were unsuccessful.

Texas fines N.Y. company for dirty 'Big Apple' sewage sludge

EL PASO (AP) — The state's environmental agency has fined a New York partnership $12,800 for spreading 180 tons of inadequately treated sewage sludge on a West Texas ranch.

The Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission last week officially approved the fine for MERCO Joint Venture.

MERCO has a six-year, $168 million contract to haul treated sludge from New York City and apply it on a partnership-owned ranch in Sierra Blanca, about 90 miles southeast of El Paso.

Some researchers say the sludge, if properly treated, can make arid rangeland more productive when used as a fertilizer.

But the 180 tons of sludge that caused the fine didn't undergo the full treatment required to reduce bacteria to a level considered safe for spreading on land, said Merrilee Roberts, an enforcement coordinator for the Austin-based commission.

MERCO notified the state agency of the problem in September and environmental regulators proposed the fine earlier this year.

A test of the soil where the sludge was spread showed the waste did not pose a health hazard, said Roberts.

Alleged abuse brings tougher foster-care laws

■ Ten children in West Texas were among 16 victims of child-molesting satanic cult, social workers said.

Associated Press

DALLAS — The alleged beating of a child by his foster parents has prompted the state's child protection agency to toughen policies regarding foster care.

The Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services announced the changes Monday, following a six-month internal review.

The review was prompted by the case of a 7-year-old boy who was beaten into a coma in November after social workers placed him with nine other children in a foster home in West Texas.

Social workers later said the 10 children were among 16 victims of a child-molesting satanic cult headed by a Gilmer family.

Under the new rules, no more than two children can be placed in a home licensed as a "therapeutic foster home."

In addition, when foster families move to a new region, social workers in that region will assume responsibility for the case.

The policy changes are "designed to shore up checks and balances that didn't work" in Gilmer, said David Reilly, chief of field operations for the Department of Protective and Regulatory Services.

"As much as we have racked our brains about how to prevent something like this from ever happening again, somebody has to recognize that they need help," Reilly was quoted as saying in Tuesday's editions of The Dallas Morning News.

Authorities in the West Texas town of Colorado City believe James Lappe, the foster father of 7-year-old Danny Kerr Jr., beat the child into a coma Nov. 7, 1993.

The following day, Lappe killed himself. Two days after that, his wife, Marie Anna Lappe, overdosed on prescription drugs.

Danny remains in a coma in an East Texas nursing home. The nine other children have been placed in foster homes while the state pursues civil cases to terminate parental rights and put them up for adoption.

The 10 children were placed in the Lappes' custody following the May 1993 arrest of 10 members of the Kerr family on charges of sexual assault and indecency with a child.

Among those arrested were Danny's parents, paternal grandparents, an uncle and two aunts.

The suspects' children told investigators they were forced to have sex and watch ceremonies in the woods where people dressed as devils, according to one affidavit.

The case grew more bizarre in January when a Gilmer police officer and seven of the people charged with molestation were indicted for the murder of Gilmer teen-ager Kelly Wilson.

However, the murder indictments were dismissed in March after the state attorney general's office found the charges were unsubstantiated. State lawyers said prior investigators and social workers were "overzealous" in their work.

Dallas Zoo announces rare black rhino's birth

DALLAS (AP) — He has his mother's nose.

Dallas Zoo officials Tuesday announced the recent birth of a male Southern black rhino, the third to be born at the zoo.

Zookeepers have named the baby rhino "Indy," in honor of Independence Day. He was born July 3.

Black rhinos are endangered due to poaching for their horns. Zoo officials say their population in the African wild has dwindled from about 60,000 in 1970 to 2,000 today.

Ex-mission control astronaut recalls touchy 1st lunar touchdown

By Jim Hutton
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Former astronaut Charles Duke Jr. wanted to be the first American to walk on the moon.

He came close: His voice linked the moon lander to Earth.

Now a New Braunfels businessman, Duke served as one of three capsule communicators (CAPCOMs) at Mission Control in Houston during Apollo 11's heroic lunar landing 25 years ago.

Requested by Mission Commander Neil Armstrong, the first man to walk on the moon, to be a CAPCOM, Duke also had worked in that role on Apollo 10.

"I was very excited and honored to be selected because we all knew it was the first landing on the moon," said Duke, a driver of the second Moon Rover vehicle across the lunar surface on Apollo 16 in April 1972.

"I was the most qualified of the astronauts not in training for a mission at that time. I think the (Apollo 11) crew looked at me as an experienced person not in training," added Duke, who owns Charlie Duke Enterprises, an investment company, and works in a Christian lay ministry.

He had been among 19 men chosen by NASA as astronauts in April 1966.

"It was a rigorous process from September 1965 to April 1966. I was told 3,500 people applied and out of them, 350 probably were contenders," Duke recalled.

"When we reported in, we were objective. We were rookies and qualified folks were above us," the 58-year-old former astronaut added.

Leading into the Apollo 11 mission, three teams, each with a CAPCOM, worked eight-hour shifts "in the trench," as Duke called the front row of consoles in the Mission Control Room.

"I was on the team for the landing and that's the way we trained," Duke said. "While the crew was training in Florida, we committed the Gold Team to training for the landing."

'Eagle, (this is) Houston. If you read, you're 'go' for powered descent (to the lunar surface). Over.'

— Charles Duke Jr., 1969 CAPCOM

However, the landing turned into a nail-biting, suspense-packed ordeal for Duke at the CAPCOM console and other personnel monitoring Apollo 11 from Houston.

Duke remembered saying: "Eagle, (this is) Houston. If you read, you're 'go' for powered descent (to the lunar surface). Over."

But suddenly, during the descent, a program alarm on the Lunar Module Eagle's computer signaled a "Twelve-oh-two" (1202).

A 1202 was an "executive overflow on a fixed computer cycle that prioritized each job" on the lunar module, Duke said.

"The first job perhaps was the control of the vehicle (lunar module), then navigation and so on," he added.

"I was shocked when I heard a 1202," Duke admitted. "We had not seen it (1202) in simulation. We had trained on many computer overloads. We also ran all the tests of the software.

"Normally, a computer alarm was significant. In simulation, it always required abort or fly manually."

Duke said he was looking in a book for information on a 1202 when finally, officials agreed "it (1202) meant the vehicle still was in control and all systems were go," he remembered.

"Then the alarm went off again a 1201 this time just as I was listening to the debate about what to do," Duke said.

A 1201 was another type of "executive overflow."

Finally, Duke said: "Eagle, you're go for landing."

"Whether they responded to the call I gave was up to the crew (Armstrong and Lunar Module Pilot Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin Jr.), which could obey or disobey and abort," Duke added.

"They (Armstrong and Aldrin) had more display (information) on board and knew more about the workings of the spacecraft. It would be a lot easier being there seeing dust come up (from the lunar surface) than at Mission Control where we'd see numbers 1 seconds delayed."

Another problem was that the Eagle had little descent fuel remaining as the astronauts tried to find a suitable landing spot amid decreasing altitude and the possibility of crashing because the ascent engine couldn't be engaged in time, Duke recalled.

"I made a 30-second call (meaning only 30 seconds of fuel remained) and Neil still was flying over the surface.

"I've never experienced such suspense in my life," Duke said.

Immediately after the landing, a fresh team took over in the Mission Control Room.

Gonzalez cites War Powers Resolution

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressman Henry B. Gonzalez reminded President Clinton in a letter Tuesday that any military intervention in Haiti must receive congressional approval under the War Powers Resolution.

The maverick San Antonio Democrat has penned similar cautionary notes to administrations both Democratic and Republican over the years, during tensions in Somalia, Bosnia and the Middle East.

This time, the United States is threatening an invasion if Haiti's military rulers don't reinstate elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, whom they ousted in a 1991 coup.

Clinton said Monday that he had made no decision with regard to an invasion. "We don't rule anything out," he told reporters as he boarded Air Force One in Florida.

Gonzalez takes Congress' oversight role and the Constitution so seriously that he sought to impeach President Bush over actions during the Persian Gulf War. He similarly sought impeachment against President Reagan after U.S. troops were ordered into Grenada in 1983.

In his letter, the House Banking Committee chairman demanded that Clinton comply with the Constitution and the War Powers Resolution if military intervention in Haiti is contemplated.

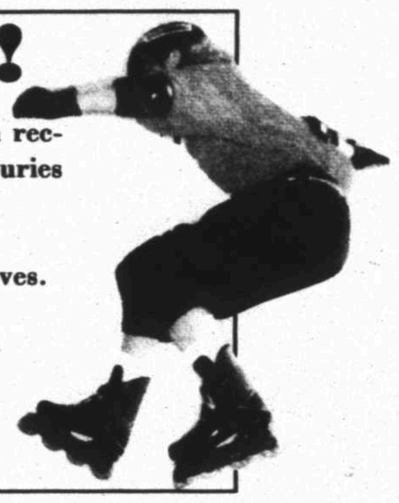

The War Powers Resolution, enacted in 1973, requires Congress to authorize all deployments of American troops in hostile situations abroad.

"While Congress has debated U.S. policy toward Haiti to some extent . . . this is no substitute for a declaration of war against Haiti by Congress under the Constitution or for compliance with the War Powers Resolution," he wrote.

Senate Republicans tried unsuccessfully last year to require that Clinton obtain advance congressional clearance before any military action in Haiti. The president responded that Congress shouldn't unduly infringe on his presidential power to use U.S. forces when American interests are threatened.

Gonzalez also urged the White House to develop a clearly defined mission with regards to Haiti. "As preparations for a U.S. invasion are clearly being made, our soldiers deserve to know from the outset what is expected of them," he wrote, noting that the last U.S. invasion of Haiti resulted in a 19-year occupation.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

WEDNESDAY, JULY 20, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: New responsibilities bring wonderful opportunities. Seek a scholarship or coveted title. Success comes when you stop procrastinating. The winter months find you working hard to establish more fulfilling relationships. Marriage is possible early in 1995. A recently-formed business alliance will reach a turning point in the spring. June is a money month; expect a bonus or raise! An old flame could re-enter your life by this time next year.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: basketball coach Chuck Daly, actress Donna Dixon, guitarist Carlos Santana, artist Judy Chicago.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Personally follow through on an interesting suggestion; your co-workers have their own agendas. Say exactly what you mean when writing memos. Your hunches about romance or work are uncanny.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The business climate is about to change; be ready to leap into action. You will do well on a test. A child's naughty behavior may be a bid for attention. Be a good listener.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Seize a chance to recoup your losses. Avoid lecturing to teen-agers; your words will fall on deaf ears. Instead, set a good example. Self-improvement projects produce quick results. Romantic partner keeps you guessing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Use your authority judiciously and others will respect you more. A cash flow problem can be solved if you apply your resources wisely. Spice up your love life with an occasional surprise. Dine out tonight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be certain a plan is cost-effective before presenting it to higher-ups. Take an associate along if you travel today. Dressing with understated elegance will impress those who know fashion. Write to friends.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Peace of mind returns when you find a way to discuss your concerns. Friends are willing to help out. A new partnership is favored. Lay your cards on the table. Guard against making impulsive decisions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be patient when trying to arouse family members' interest in a new project. They may not see its benefits right away. Be certain to make your views known to those in public office. Vote your conscience.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You will soon get the money you need to move forward. Longtime benefactors and business colleagues show their loyalty again and again. Your creative and artistic energies are extremely strong. Mate is unusually supportive.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You will feel both comfortable and bold when beginning a new job or assignment. Heed the words of a good friend; you have little to fear. Confirm evening plans with your spouse or romantic partner.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): When challenged, you rise to the occasion. Do not allow an envious associate's criticism to slow your progress. Forgo momentary pleasures for future benefits.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid those who would like to unload their burdens upon you — say "no" and mean it. The pressure of a deadline will enhance your creativity! Good luck comes through business meetings; former clients return.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your kindness is well-known. Do not allow others to take advantage of your generosity. A loved one may be testing you. Be prepared for office foes trying to play politics. Keep your head down.

The bidding:

Opening lead: King of ♠

The crime was simple enough. Seven bridge experts had been invited to the home of Cyrus Vane, millionaire industrialist, for a weekend of bridge. One of them was an impostor, a notorious jewel thief who had stolen four priceless emeralds from Vane's collection during the course of the weekend. Everything pointed to young Gary Mohan, who was arrested for the crime. Hired to defend him was the famous Counsellor Merry Payson.

All the hands played over the weekend had been reconstructed by the players. Payson had pored over them for hours and was in the process of cross-examining some of the bridge stars. On the stand was Carlton Jones, the great player from the Cape Verde Islands.

The defending attorney fixed a piercing gaze on Jones "Were you sitting East for this deal?" he asked.

"I was," replied Jones.

"Did you win the opening spade lead with the ace and return the suit?" Payson demanded.

"Of course. Declarer ruffed, forced out the ace of trumps, won the return, drew the last trump discarded a club on the hearts to make his contract. What's the problem?"

Payson rose to his full six feet. "Then you're the impostor," he roared "Any bridge expert would realize from the bidding that declarer could have only a singleton spade, and to return the suit would be pointless. Since whatever tricks declarer had to lose in the red suits would inevitably be lost, the only danger for the defense was that a club would go away. Therefore, a club shift at trick two would be mandatory. I don't know what happened to the real Carlton Jones. No doubt his body will turn up somewhere!"

Case dismissed.

It's rock 'n' ratatouille as 'Dead' eat lunch in Senate dining room

WASHINGTON — It was a power lunch in the hallowed halls of the Senate. Amid the senators and staff sat ... the Grateful Dead?

It was rock 'n roll and ratatouille as the band ate lunch Monday in the Senate dining room.

Even Strom Thurmond, the 92-year-old Republican senator from South Carolina, came over to say hello to Grateful Dead lead guitarist Jerry Garcia.

Jerry Garcia, Grateful Dead have power lunch.

Garcia and fellow band members Bob Weir, Phil Lesh and Mickey Hart were there as the guests of Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., a big fan who's known to play Dead music while he works.

Leahy sat on stage for the band's concert in Washington's RFK Stadium over the weekend and wanted to return the favor, said Joe Jamele, Leahy's spokesman.

Also doing the Dead lunch: Sens. David Pryor, D-Ark., and Barbara Boxer, D-Calif.

TULSA, Okla. — Fans of the full-throated found themselves aghast at the foul-mouthed when a transmission of the Three Tenors opera concert abruptly switched to "The Howard Stern Show."

A power failure Saturday night broke the transmission for viewers of public television's KOED, and the signal automatically switched to cable's E! Entertainment channel.

The shock jock's interlude aired for about six minutes, interrupting the concert in Los Angeles by Placido Domingo, Luciano Pavarotti and Jose Carreras.

"Evidently, some very distasteful material aired ... maybe even vulgar from the phone calls we received," said Bob Allen, the head of KOED. "It had something to do with Howard Stern and people taking their pants off."

NEW YORK — A tree no longer grows in Brooklyn — thanks to Spike Lee, the city says.

The 15-foot pear tree was chopped down last week to make way for the filming of the director's latest movie, "Clockers," city spokesman Parke Spencer said Tuesday.

Lee's production crew had asked about removing the tree to shoot a scene, and the city refused, noting that it was planted last year by a civic group. But somebody chopped it down anyway.

City officials discovered the tree was gone on Friday and cut a deal with Spike's people for a replacement and two additional pear trees.

Lee's production company, 40 Acres and a Mule, did not return a call for comment.

"Clockers," based on the best-selling Richard Price novel, is about drug dealers in New Jersey.

PONTIAC, Mich. — Kiss may have put away the face paint, but they're not ready to let go of the studded jock strap and knee-high leather boots.

Kiss' Paul Stanley went to court to reclaim costumes.

Gene Simmons and Paul Stanley, founding members of the once-flamboyant rock group, went to court Monday to reclaim costumes that had been stolen from a New York warehouse.

The band members and Troy police found them during a surprise visit to a Kiss convention on Sunday. The costumes — including a cape, belt, boots and jump suits — were not for sale.

The group has abandoned its trademark look of the 1970s with painted faces and outlandish costumes.

"But the outfits are ours," Simmons said. "They are part of our history, our personal memorabilia. It's very important to us."

LOS ANGELES — Rick James was ordered to begin serving a five-year, four-month prison sentence for attacking two women.

A judge Monday rejected the funk star's last-ditch appeal to re-enter drug rehab.

The Grammy-winning James, known for his 1981 hit "Superfreak," was convicted of assault last year in attacks on women at his home and a hotel.

James had entered a rehabilitation clinic but was expelled when the warden determined that he didn't qualify because of the violent nature of his crimes.

LOS ANGELES — DNA tests prove that Sylvester Stallone is not the father of model-photographer Janice Dickinson's daughter, the actor's spokesman says.

Miss Dickinson recently gave birth to the child.

Miss Dickinson is not suing for paternity; Stallone underwent the tests because the couple wanted to know if he was the father, the spokesman, Paul Bloch, said Tuesday.

Television ads to focus on care of disabled children

AUSTIN (AP) — The Arc of Texas, a group that favors placing developmentally disabled children in family and community-based homes rather than institutions, said Tuesday it will launch an advertising campaign seeking to graphically make its point.

A new public service TV commercial, narrated by actor James Garner, shows a bleak institution where disheveled children with mental retardation are sprayed with water, subjected to large needles and shackled to beds.

"In the past, society used to lock up children with mental retardation and let them rot, let them die," Garner says. "If you thought this kind of thing happened only in the past, think again. It's happening now."

The 30-second ad will begin airing on Texas television stations this week. Print ads also are planned.

"We want the PSA to stop people in their tracks so they will realize that children are hurting and they need to join the Arc's efforts to find a solution," said Libby Doggett, Arc executive director.

The group is seeking more government money for community-based programs.

Its ad follows an Austin American-Statesman investigation last year that found more than 300 disabled children living in Texas nursing homes. A few children had no beds, some were kept in cagelike beds, and a few were tied down. The report prompted a state Senate investigation.

Even before the public service announcement aired, its shock value was proving controversial within the Arc itself. Two of the 45 local Arc chapters in Texas — San Antonio and Midland — have refused to run the spot in their areas.

A preview of the commercial for state officials and private providers of homes for people with disabilities prompted a heated discussion.

Providers said the commercial will do more harm than good by frightening the public and leaving the impression that people with retardation are less than human.

"It's just too much hype," said Suzanne Miller, president of Bethphage Mission South, which serves 186 disabled people in group homes and other community programs.

"I just think it's a real scary thing to put out to the public," she said. "There are people, in our neighborhoods, who are scared to death of people with mental retardation anyway, and this is going to scare them some more.

"You've painted people as vegetables or as objects or as dull, little uninterested people, and that is the kind of image we've been trying to dissuade for all these years," Ms. Miller said.

State agency officials said the shocking images are necessary to make the public aware.

PATTERSON: Red light runner forgets safety

(From 1B)

reading that great book she keeps telling me about.

Life is full of pleasant surprises.

Another 40 feet and our 5-year-old little girl would no longer be cute, rambunctious, angellic and ornery all at the same time. No more freckles. No more of that long, brown hair that magically transforms into bouncing pony tails with a little help from mom. No more gleam in those blue eyes of hers. No looking to daddy for comfort when spring's first clap of thunder sounds. No more crawling into bed with us in the middle of the night after a bad dream about a bug. No first day of kindergarten.

Life should be appreciated before it can no longer be appreciated.

Another 40-feet and our 4-month-old boy would no longer be able to smile. No first teeth. No first words (and at this point, who cares if it's "mama" or "daddy" that comes first?). No father-son sessions on male bathroom etiquette. No father-son chats about girls. No playing catch in the backyard.

Forty feet. Not a lot of room where a few lives are concerned.

So to whoever was behind the wheel of that other car Monday: Thanks for helping us all take the time to stop and love each other a little more.

Midland has a serious problem with people who find it necessary to run red lights. So to the decision makers who deal with such traffic concerns, isn't it time something is done before an entire family is killed?

And to everyone else: Take a few extra minutes. Stop and smell those roses. And, at the very least, count to three when your light turns green. Just to be on the safe side. Because, all too often, the other guy couldn't care less about your safety.

Life is short. Enjoy it, and remember how it can end all too abruptly.

Fort Worth 'Cowtown' has horse laugh over new cattle drive sculpture in Dallas

■ 'I've seen pictures of them. . .I just always figured they were passing through on their way to Fort Worth,' FW historian says.

By Terry Wallace
Associated Press

DALLAS — Cattle rarely held much appeal for Dallas before appearing on a sizzling platter.

The city has always been more interested in oil, money, cotton and fashion. To Dallasites, stock was something bought on paper, not on the hoof.

So imagine the surprise of some when a new downtown park featured a bronze cattle drive to celebrate Dallas' pioneer heritage.

Many of the eyebrow-raisers live in nearby Fort Worth, a city built on cattle and a rival to Dallas for most of its 145-year history.

The self-styled "Cowtown" was everything Dallas wasn't: a stop on the fabled Chisholm Trail and one-time home to a cattle processing and packing complex that was among the nation's biggest.

Nevertheless, 20 bronze steers, herded by a bronze cowpoke on a bronze cow pony, fill the expanses of Pioneer Plaza, across from Dallas City Hall. There will be 70 steers in the park when it is completed next year.

"I've seen pictures of them," said Sue McCafferty, president of the North Fort Worth Historical Society. "I just always figured they were passing through on their way to Fort Worth."

The bronzes are the work of sculptor Robert Summers of Glen Rose, about 65 miles southwest of Dallas.

Cattle drives were part of the first big business to flourish in Texas during the mid-19th century, Summers said. Although Dallas was never a "cowtown," it was a Texas city and shared in the state's heritage, he said.

Cattle were herded north through Dallas to the railheads of Texas along the Shawnee Trial in 1866-67, Summers said.

"That was the earliest big business in Texas," he said.

Dallas-based developer Trammell Crow proposed the park, and private contributions are paying for its development on city-donated land.

Some of Dallas' own art officials have criticized the cattle drive array, saying it better depicts the history of Fort Worth, 36 miles to the west.

But Nancy Nelson, interim executive director of the Dallas Historical Society, insists that cattle are part of the city's 152-year heritage.

Dallas sat at the end of a Chisholm Trail spur, and an early settler operated a stockyard during the city's early years.

A meatpacking plant operated near downtown at the turn of the century. Swift & Co., which owned an immense meatpacking operation in Fort Worth, bought the Dallas plant out and shut it down in 1928.

Accounts also record the 19th century existence of a buffalo-hide pit near what is now downtown, Ms. Nelson said.

Yes, emphatically yes, cattle were part of Dallas' history, if not its culture, Ms. Nelson said.

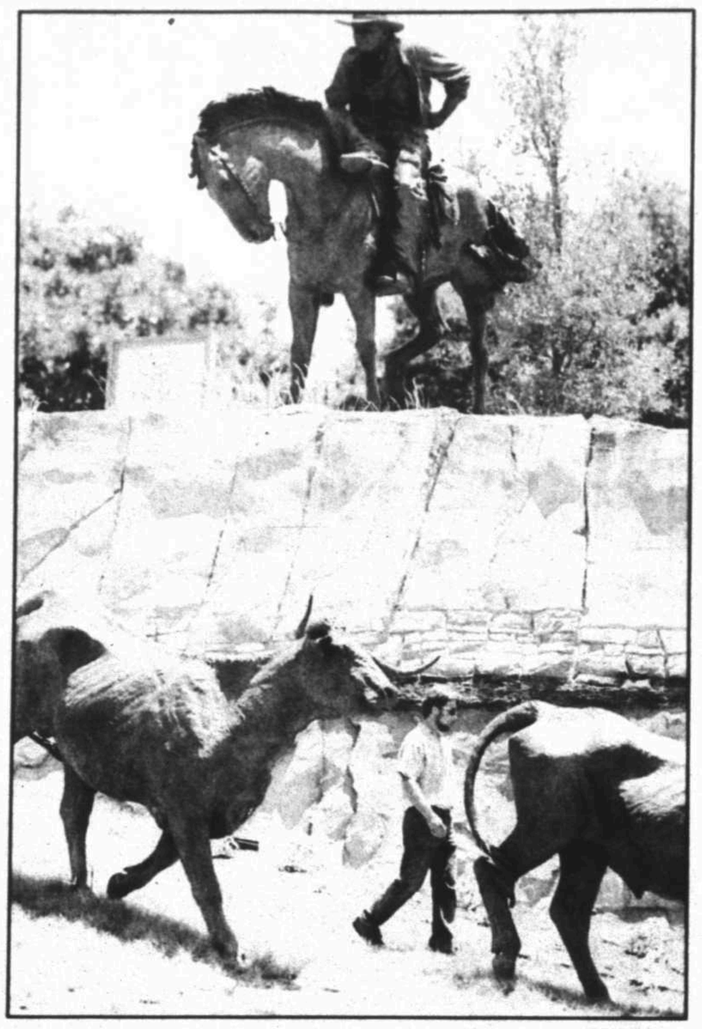

"It is ridiculous to say they didn't come through here," she said.

Besides, she added, the statues look nice.

"I always thought it was a marvelous thing. It gave focus to the open spaces," Ms. Nelson said.

Ms. McCafferty doesn't deny that some cattle might have passed through Dallas.

"Cattle did come through from East Texas on their way to the Chisholm Trail. They had to go somewhere," she said. "But I don't think Dallas was known for its cattle drives."

A visitor walks past the new bronze cattle drive sculpture in downtown Dallas Tuesday. In addition to historians, some of Dallas' own art officials have criticized the giant herd saying it better depicts neighboring 'Cowtown,' Fort Worth. They claim the only stock ever traded in Dallas was made of paper.

Comeback unreal for Astros

■ Houston manager Terry Collins happy to be on winning end of comeback after losing one the same way earlier.

By Laura Tolley
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Houston manager Terry Collins knew just how bad St. Louis manager Joe Torre felt after the Astros matched the National League record for biggest comebacks.

The Astros amazingly turned an 11-0 deficit into a 15-12 victory Monday night over the St. Louis Cardinals, but it recently was a much different story for Houston.

"We were on the other end of a game like this the other night," Collins said, referring to last Friday when the Astros blew an 8-0 second-inning lead and lost 11-8 to the Pittsburgh Pirates. "And it's no fun."

But on Monday, before a crowd of 24,012 at the Astrodome, they had an 11-run sixth inning and turned the tables on the Cardinals in a big way.

The mega-rally was one short of the major-league record of 12 set by several AL teams. It tied the NL record last set in April 1976 when the Philadelphia Phillies turned a 12-l deficit to the Chicago Cubs into an 18-16 victory in 10 innings.

And the Astros had never overcome a deficit larger than seven runs.

"I still can't believe it, and I was there," Astros second baseman Craig Biggio said.

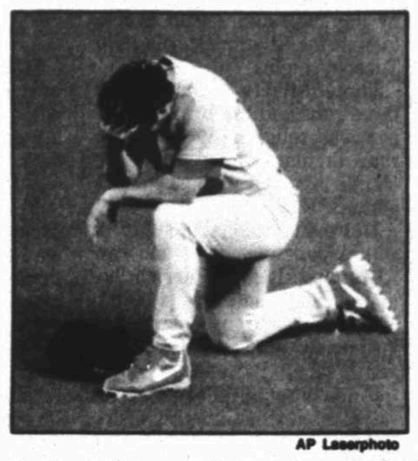

Things looked pretty bleak at first for Houston when the Cardinals took an 11-0 lead in the first three innings and an 11-4 lead into the sixth.

But the sixth inning was all Astros as Biggio opened with a walk and scored on a double by Kevin Bass. One out later, Ken Caminiti walked and Luis Gonzalez hit an RBI single.

James Mouton was hit by a pitch to load the bases and Tony Eusebio walked to bring home a run. Andujar Cedeno hit a two-run single and Mike Felder added a two-run triple to make it 11-all.

Biggio hit an infield single and Felder remained at third until Bass drove him in with an RBI single, giving the Astros a 12-11 lead.

SEATTLE — Tuesday night's game between Baltimore and Seattle was postponed after an insulating tile fell from the ceiling of the Kingdome and today's makeup doubleheader will remain in doubt until the roof can be closely checked. No one was injured when the 2½-by-5-foot, 3-inch-thick tile fell nearly 180 feet into the empty stands behind home plate. Players continued batting practice until the postponement was announced less than an hour before the scheduled 7:05 p.m. PDT start.

The gates had not been opened, and no fans were admitted to the 18-year-old stadium. About 15,000 to 17,000 had been expected to attend the game, Mariners spokesman Dave Aust said. Wednesday's doubleheader is the last scheduled meeting of the teams this season, but Aust said no decision will be made on those games until the roof is checked closely.

Redskins 'Hog'-less

ASHBURN, Va. — Joe Jacoby battered away at defensive linemen for more than a decade as a member of the Washington Redskins' notorious Hogs, perhaps the most famous offensive line ever assembled. On Tuesday, he announced his retirement, signaling the end of another legacy of the Joe Gibbs Redskins. For 13 years, Jacoby anchored a front line that dominated the scrimmage line, opening big, game-winning holes for runners such as John Riggins and Earnest Bynar.

But back pain and other injuries, age and the salary cap have ended Jacoby's long ride. He hadn't played since Nov. 7 last year against the Indianapolis Colts. "It's time to move on," the 35-year-old Jacoby said at a farewell news conference at Redskin Park with his wife, Irene, and two daughters, ages 6 and 4.

World Cup pays off

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — Tony Meola, the No. 1 goalkeeper on the U.S. national team since 1989, was signed by the New York Jets as a kicking prospect after a workout that lasted all of an hour. "This is not something that just came up two weeks ago," Meola said Tuesday, dismissing any talk his signing is a public-relations gimmick. "It's something I've wanted to do since I left the eighth grade." When he left eighth grade, though, Meola also left football. He was a Parade All-America goalkeeper in high school at Kearney, N.J., and turned down a contract from the New York Yankees, where he played center field.

He led the University of Virginia to a share of the 1989 NCAA soccer title and won the Hermann Trophy as the country's best college player. He ranks second on the U.S. soccer team with 89 international appearances.

Cleveland's Albert Belle ...caught with corked bat.

Players cork bats for speed, batmaker says

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

So why would Albert Belle want to cork his bat, anyway?

A bat filled with cork can hit a baseball farther than a completely wooden model, although it won't turn a benchwarmer into Babe Ruth.

"If you hollow out the barrel and lighten the bat, you can swing it faster and that means you can hit it better," says Rex Bradley, vice president of the company that makes Louisville Sluggers. "Players do it for bat speed, but many of them believe it just makes the bat more lively."

Belle was suspended Monday for 10 days for using a corked bat. He is appealing the penalty, meaning he can continue playing for the Cleveland Indians until a hearing is held July 29.

"Corked bats don't make the balls go 500 feet," said Chicago White Sox manager Gene Lamont, who asked Friday night that Belle's bat be checked. "But it makes a ball go 380, not 370."

"I don't think players cork their bats to hit tape-measure home runs. I think they do it to hit more home runs," Lamont said.

In most cases of corking, players

AUSTIN — They call him "Mr. July."

It's been in Julys past that Chad Hennings has looked like a certain Pro Bowl defensive tackle.

Then the heroics of St. Edward's training camp fade away and Hennings becomes a reserve and special teams player.

No more.

Hennings is expected to give the Dallas Cowboys the kind of tackle play they need to replace Tony Casillas, who took the free agent road for bigger bucks to Kansas City.

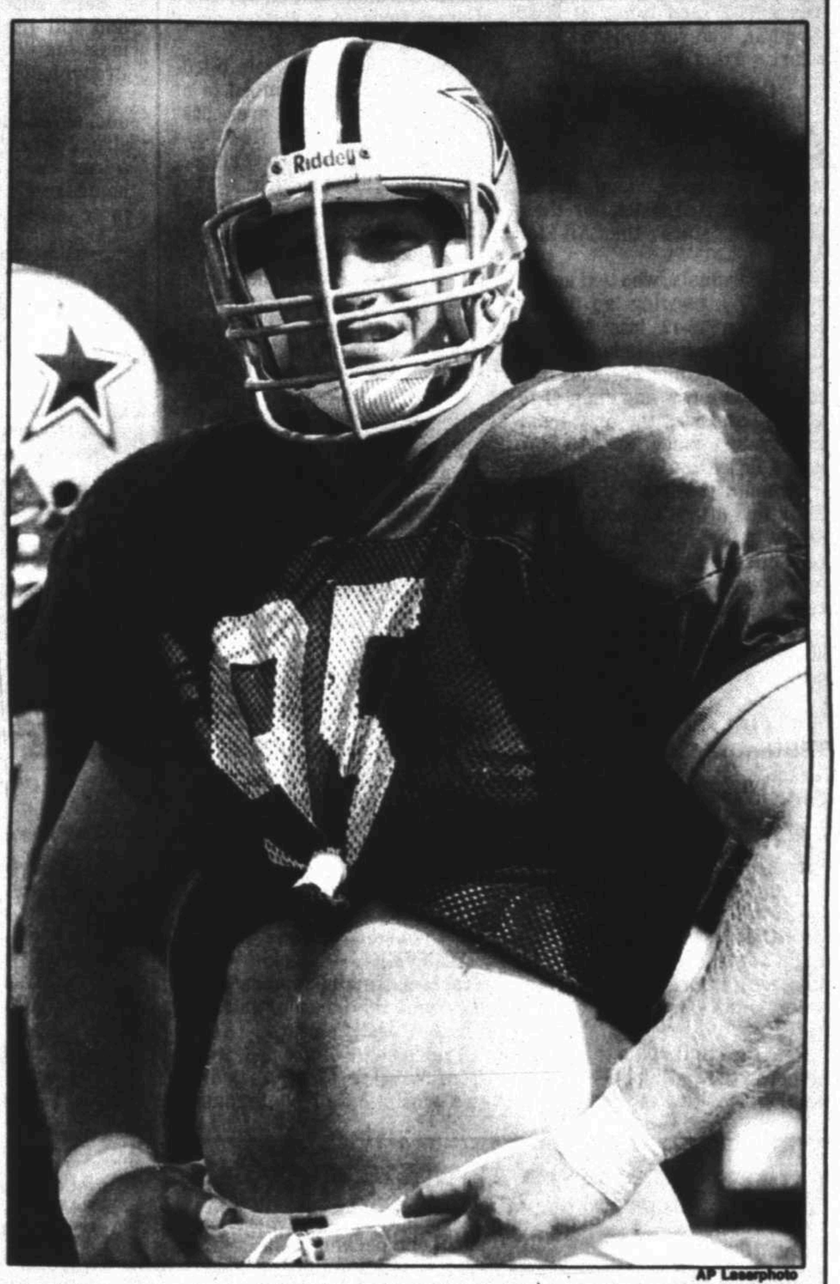

"It's time to prove I'm legit," said the 6-foot-6, 286-pound Hennings. "I'm on the last year of my contract. It's time to produce and show what I can do."

Hennings has two Super Bowl rings, but he still has a hollow feeling for his three seasons in the NFL.

"Those Super Bowl rings are because I've got some great teammates, some great players, not because I was a starter and made a big contribution," Hennings said. "With Tony gone, it's time for me to make a mark. It's time to step up."

World Cup excitement turns sour

I have to admit that I watched more of the World Cup than I intended only to find out that I was naturally among the masses of uninitiated Americans when it comes to soccer.

Williamson

The most thrilling moments for me were the two shootouts between Sweden and Mexico and between Italy and Brazil in the championshp game. Now that was exciting soccer. Face-to-face. Winner-take-all. Kicker vs. goalie.

In fact, I was ready to suggest that soccer do away with the game itself and go straight to the shootout. Just forget all that play with the ball bouncing across midfield like a ping-pong ball. Just get to the excitement, which soccer only saves for tie games.

Then came the wake-up call. After Brazil's 0-0 win over Italy with a 3-2 shootout where the pronounced best soccer player in the world — and injured — Roberto Baggio of Italy failed to find the goal, the stories started pouring in on how terrible it was for a championship match to be decided in an exciting fashion. I was devastated. I liked something that the soccer-initiated saw as a horror of the sport.

The soccer purists ranted, "How would you like the end of a basketball game decided on free throws?" or "How would you like a tie baseball game decided on a home run contest?"

Detestable, I thought. So, why did I find it so exciting. Well, for one thing, people scored in the shootout, something they rarely did during the games I saw. There just isn't enough scoring. Playing until someone does score might make sense, but the Brazilian and Italian players, for instance, were already at the point of exhaustion after 90-plus minutes of regulation and 30 minutes of overtime. It was brutal in that heat.

But a game decided by a shootout appears to be unacceptable soccer excitement. Well, here's another suggestion. Drop the off sides rule in soccer. That would increase scoring two or three fold. What's wrong if you elect to sacrifice defense for some guy waiting for a soccer "turnover." After all, there are goalies back at the net at all times. Make them work for a living.

It seemed that every time something exciting was about to happen in the World Cup, there was an off sides call. Those of us in the uninitiated masses notice those kinds of things. The uninitiated can pick up on the rules, but we don't always understand the need for them.

I always thought the same thing about hockey. Drop the blue lines and let players go where they want. It would change both games, increase scoring. In fact, hockey could even become a tamer game. Bullies couldn't last in hockey without the blue line. You would need the speed and finesse skaters on the ice to defend mistakes. Intimidation wouldn't work if the puck was always sailing down to open players down the ice. But then again, I always suspected that hockey fans like the violence they cry over.

Now that it's over, has the World Cup made America safe for soccer as a spectator sport?

Well, it has taken a big step. There is no denying that. But, at the same time, that step may be smaller than you think.

Take a look at these two numbers and you'll see why. The World Cup people were absolutely thrilled that the television rating for the U.S.-Brazil game was a wonderfully high 9.3. Yet baseball is down in the dumps because the All-Star Game drew a simply wretched rating of 15.7. And we aren't even talking about a world championship here. Soccer is climbing, but still has a way to go.

Pirates blow lead then rally over Braves, 13-10

Associated Press

■ NL Roundup

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Pirates blew a five-run lead, then rallied for a five-run seventh inning keyed by Jay Bell's three-run double to beat the Atlanta Braves 13-10 Tuesday night.

Three Atlanta errors led to three runs and the Braves' bullpen was roughed up for seven runs in four innings for their eighth loss to Pittsburgh in 11 games.

Midre Cummings was 3-for-5 with a pair of doubles and two RBIs and Lance Parrish homered and doubled as Pittsburgh stopped a three-game losing streak and Atlanta's four-game winning streak.

Pinch-hitter Bill Pecota's two-run pinch-double finished off Atlanta's six-run sixth inning against Pirates starter Jon Lieber and three relievers, but the Braves' bullpen couldn't hold the 9-8 lead.

The Pirates loaded the bases in the seventh on two walks and Parrish's double to chase Gregg Olson (0-2) and bring on Mike Stanton, who surrendered Dave Clark's tying sacrifice fly.

Cardinals 10, Astros 0

HOUSTON — Vicente Palacios pitched a one-hitter, allowing only a single in the third inning by Andujar Cedeno, and St. Louis routed Houston for their first win since the All-Star break.

The Cardinals, who tied an NL record by blowing an 11-run lead in a 15-12 loss Monday night, had no trouble holding off Houston this time. St. Louis had lost five in a row and eight of 10 games, and was the only team not to win since the All-Star game last Tuesday.

Palacios (2-7) retired the final 21 batters after Cedeno's leadoff single in the third. He tied a career-high with eight strikeouts and walked one in his second career shutout.

Palacios, pitching on his 31st birthday, allowed only two runners. He won for the first time in nine starts.

Phillies 5, Giants 2

PHILADELPHIA — Danny Jackson pitched eight strong innings and Philadelphia stopped a nine-game winning streak by Darryl Strawberry and San Francisco.

The Giants had been 9-0 since Strawberry joined them. But Strawberry, who left Monday night's game in the second inning with a sore left hamstring, went 0-for-4 and struck out twice.

Pete Incaviglia hit a three-run homer in the sixth for a 4-2 lead, pinning the loss on Bud Black (3-1). Incaviglia also hit a three-run homer Monday night.

Jackson (12-4) gave up four hits, struck out five and walked three. He trailed 2-0 after facing only three batters, but allowed just one hit after the first inning.

Expos 4, Padres 3

MONTREAL — Montreal beat San Diego for the 11th time without a loss this season, taking advantage of four errors to beat the sloppy Padres.

Shortstop Luis Lopez made a wild throw that set up two unearned runs. The Padres, who lead the majors with 90 errors, made three errors Monday night in a 9-2 loss at Montreal.

The Expos scored three unearned runs off Andy Ashby (4-9) to win their 11th straight at home against San Diego. The last time the Padres won at Olympic Stadium was July 19, 1992 — exactly two years ago.

Reds 13, Marlins 5

CINCINNATI — Eddie Taubensee's bases-loaded single keyed a six-run first inning off Mark Gardner that swept Cincinnati Reds to a victory over slumping Florida.

The NL Central leaders piled up 18 hits as they climbed to a season-best 19 games over .500 (56-37). John Smiley (10-9) allowed seven hits in 6 1-3 innings, including Gary Sheffield's 20th homer, to send the Marlins to their fifth straight loss.

Gardner (3-3) has beaten every NL team except the Reds, who batted around in the first to extend their mastery. The right-hander is 0-4 in eight career starts against Cincinnati.

Mets 7, Dodgers 4

NEW YORK — Ryan Thompson's three-run double capped a five-run rally in the eighth inning, and New York beat up Los Angeles' beleaguered bullpen for a victory.

The Dodgers took a 4-2 lead into the eighth, but Jim Gott (5-3), Omar Daal and Roger McDowell couldn't hold the edge. Los Angeles relievers have blown 19 of 36 save chances this season.

Tim Wallach went 4-for-5 and drove in one run for the Dodgers, a day after he homered and drove in six runs. Delino DeShields hit his first home run for Los Angeles.

Cubs 6, Rockies 1

DENVER — Rookie Steve Trachsel remained unbeaten on the road this season, pitching Chicago past Colorado.

Trachsel (9-6) is 8-0 away from Wrigley Field, including two wins at Mile High Stadium.

Cork or no cork, Belle rings Texas

Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

CLEVELAND — Albert Belle, facing a 10-day suspension for using a corked bat, hit one of Cleveland's five home runs and also tripled Tuesday night as the Indians beat the Texas Rangers 12-3.

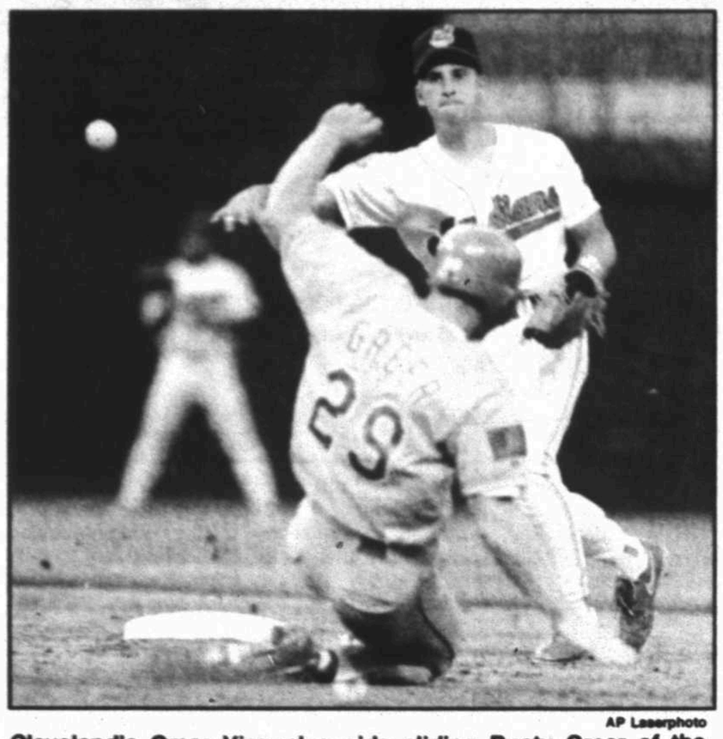

Paul Sorrento homered twice and drove in a career-high five runs, and Jim Thome and Wayne Kirby also homered for Cleveland, which is 25-5 over its last 30 games at Jacobs Field.

The Indians received a couple of scares in the game. Second baseman Carlos Baerga twisted his right ankle on a pickoff attempt in the third inning, and starter Charles Nagy fell to the ground in pain after Rusty Greer lined a ball off his left knee in the eighth. Nagy finished out the eighth before leaving; Baerga left in the fifth.

Belle's fifth-inning home run, his 27th, was his first homer and only his fourth hit in 19 at-bats since his bat was seized Friday night in Chicago. The confiscated bat was stolen from the umpires' locked dressing room at Comiskey Park during Friday's game, but later turned over by the Indians to the American League, which determined it had been corked.

Belle appealed the suspension and will remain in the lineup at least until AL president Bobby Brown hears his case July 29.

Nagy (8-6) allowed three runs and seven hits, walked one and struck out six. The Rangers scored a run on Ivan Rodriguez's 13th home run in the third and two more in the eighth on an RBI double by Doug Strange and a single by Rodriguez.

Cleveland's Omar Vizquel avoids sliding Rusty Greer of the Rangers to complete a fifth-inning double play at Jacobs Field.

Rookie Hector Fajardo (5-6) gave up seven runs and seven hits in five innings.

Cleveland took control with a four-run first inning capped by Thome's three-run home run, his 14th. Baerga drove in the first run with an infield single that extended his hitting streak to 16 games.

Sorrento's eighth home run, a two-run shot in the fourth, made it 6-1, and Belle hit a solo homer with two outs in the fifth. Kirby then led off the seventh with his fourth homer of the season.

Belle's triple started a four-run eighth highlighted by Sorrento's three-run home run, his ninth.

Blue Jays 4, Twins 2

TORONTO — Paul Molitor tripled in the go-ahead run in the eighth inning as Toronto handed Minnesota its ninth straight road loss with a 4-2 victory.

Roberto Alomar reached on a one-out walk and Molitor chased Kevin Tapani with a liner to right-center that scored Alomar and helped the Blue Jays to their third straight win.

Joe Carter, who drove in four runs Monday night, followed with a run-scoring single to right off Carl Willis for his second RBI of the game and a 4-2 Blue Jays lead. The two RBIs allowed Carter to tie Minnesota's Kirby Puckett for the American League lead with 87.

Tony Castillo (5-1) got the win in relief of starter Todd Stottlemyre. Castillo gave up one hit and a walk in two scoreless innings and Darren Hall pitched the ninth for his 11th save of the season.

Tapani (9-6) gave up four runs on five hits over 7⅓ innings as the Twins lost for the 13th time in 16 games.

Matt Walbeck hit his fourth home run of the season leading off the third. Two outs later, Jeff Reboulet tripled past a diving Darnell Coles in left field and Puckett singled for his 87th RBI and a 2-0 Twins lead.

White Sox 10, Tigers 5

CHICAGO — Julio Franco went 4-for-5 and drove in three runs, and Alex Fernandez struck out 11 in seven innings as Chicago defeated Detroit.

The White Sox, who won for the 21st time in their last 26 games, pounded out 17 hits.

Fernandez (9-7) walked four and scattered five hits for his fourth straight victory. The 11 strikeouts were one shy of his career high, established last Thursday against the Cleveland Indians.

ASTROS: Cards stunned

(From 1C)

A walk to Jeff Bagwell re-loaded the bases, Caminiti hit a two-run single and Mouton drove in the final run of the inning with a sacrifice fly.

"Watson just got erratic and we kept chipping away at him," said Bass, one of four Astros with two RBIs in the sixth. "Then we used up everybody else they had and they just couldn't get us out."

"I just pitched the wrong pitchers," Torre said of starter Allen Watson, who faced two batters in the sixth and was followed by Frank Cimorelli, Bryan Eversgerd and Steve Dixon. "It's my fault that we lost."

Collins was awestruck by what happened.

"We just kept getting base hits and kept pecking away," Collins said. "That was unbelievable. I've never been behind 11-0 and come back to win, not even in the Pacific Coast League, where the ball flies around and you get crazy scores."

St. Louis has now lost eight of its last 11 games, but Pagnozzi said this was the hardest to take. The Astros won their third straight.

"At this stage of the season, it's tough," he said. "They say you're supposed to get over it, but how can you do it when you blow an 11-run lead. I don't think anyone in the ballpark could have dreamed this.

"We couldn't get anybody out. I was involved in a game like this when I was eight years old, but not in the big leagues. I don't even want to think about tomorrow's game."

BELLE: Cork lightens bat

(From 1C)

have a hole — ranging in diameter from the size of a pencil to a dime — drilled about 12 inches down into the barrel. The wood is hollowed out and cork is stuffed inside, which might lighten the bat from, say, from an average of 33 ounces to 31½.

It may not sound like much, but to a major leaguer, that might be all it takes to turn a long fly out into a cheap home run.

The cork may also expand, putting additional pressure on the surrounding wood.

"That makes it a better piece of timber," Bradley said Monday night. "You've made the wood harder and increased its density, and that lets you hit it farther."

All that without sacrificing the size of the barrel, which provides more power.

Belle receives bats from Louisville Slugger, although it was not certain whether his guilty bat was one of those models. Louisville Slugger supplies about two-thirds of all bats used by major leaguers.

Bradley stressed that Hillerich & Bradsby, which makes Louisville Sluggers, does not cork bats for big leaguers. He said the company has corked bats in the past for test purposes, not for playing.

Where ballplayers get their bats corked is usually a big secret. It takes skill to cork a bat without leaving a trace — if done poorly, a bat can split and reveal the tampering.

In 1987, a bat used by Houston's Billy Hatcher shattered, showing that it was corked. He was suspended for 10 days, just like Belle. In 1974, a bat used by Graig Nettles split, showing that it was stuffed with superballs, and he was ejected.

"Most of it is just in the players' heads, though," said Bradley, the bat maker. "They think it automatically makes them better. But they still have to hit the ball."

Midland Reds win UGSA titles

Midland turned "Red" in scorching heat Tuesday as the Division I & II portion of the United Girls Softball Association's All-Star Tournament came to a close at the MUGS Complex at Ulmer Park.

Midland teams dominated the Class AAA division, winning both I (ages 7-9) and II (ages 10-12) titles, and both teams wore the All-Star Red jerseys.

Division II saw an upset in the finals Tuesday. Midland Black went into the finals with a perfect 9-0 mark, but was beaten by Midland Red, who finished the tournament at 8-2. Red had to carry Black to extra innings to turn the trick.

Red again was the color of the day in Division I where Midland Red defeated Midland Black in the finals for the title. Red had a 7-1 record and Black a 5-3 mark at the conclusion.

Midland had all four of its teams in the finals.

Big Spring also won two titles in Class AA. Big Spring Teal won the Division II crown with a perfect 6-0 mark, beating 4-2 Andrews in the finals. Big Spring also took the Division I title with a perfect 8-0 mark, beating 5-4 Fort Stockton in the finals.

In Class A, Breckenridge won the Division I crown while Coahoma won in Division II. Coahoma was a perfect 8-0 in the tournament and beat 6-2 Jal, N.M., in the finals. Breckenridge finished at 6-1, beating 5-2 Mitchell County in the finals.

The tournament jumps right back into action today with the beginning of Division III (ages 13-15) and Division IV (ages 16-19) at Ulmer Park. This portion of the tournament ends with championship games at 1 p.m. Saturday and awards presentations at 3 p.m.

Midland will have two Division III teams entered and one Division IV team in the Class AAA. Again there will be action in three classes, based on size of cities in the competition.

Over 80 teams will compete in the tournament that will eventually run eight days.

Wayland signs Greenwood ace

PLAINVIEW — Greenwood's Dan Stafford has signed a letter of intent to play baseball at Wayland Baptist University, according to Pioneer baseball coach Jeff Livin.

Stafford was first team all-district in Class 3A as a junior and senior.

"Dan is a promising young pitcher with a good fastball and tons of potential," Livin said. "He has a chance to develop into a solid starting pitcher as a freshman with added command of three pitches. We expect Dan to make significant strides early in the fall and be a big contributor for the 1995 season."

The Pioneers were 32-26 last season and reached the final four of the NAIA District 8 playoff competition.

CHAD: Hennings a key to season, Switzer says practice bombing run in an A10 Intruder.

(From 1C)

"The only plane I've been on since then has been commercial," Hennings said. "I've found out what I want to do and know it's time to do it. There are no excuses now."

Hennings has been singled out by coach Barry Switzer as a key to the 1995 season.

"It's time for Chad Hennings to be a premier player," Switzer said. "He's got great talent and has been looking tremendous. He needs to step in there where Tony was and help beef up our defensive line."

Hennings has worked hard. He was voted one of the top players in training camp workouts. He can power lift 515 pounds and run the 40 in 4.65.

"I could never run a 4.6 even when I was in the Air Force," said the former Outland Trophy winner (1987).

"I'm in the best shape of my life. And I'm ready for the pressure. It's what I've worked hard for."

Hennings was even named the captain of the kickoff return special teams.

"That's kind of like being named the captain of the troops who is going to lead invading troops on shore," Hennings said. "I'm not sure I needed that honor.

"But I guess it's fun hitting 300-pound guys going as fast as you can. Clears your head out."

Hennings said he's learned a lot playing behind Casillas.

"I've had to be patient, and I've never given up. I just got hungrier and hungrier watching him play.

"Now Switzer is going to throw me in the fire. He says he is counting on me. I accept the challenge."

Indurain holds Tour lead

L'ALPE D'HUEZ, France (AP) — Miquel Indurain reacted quickly when his lead in the Tour de France was challenged Tuesday, even though it was more than seven mintues.

Frenchman Richard Virenque, second in the overall standings, took off alone on the final mountain as the race entered the Alps, and tried to build up time against Indurain. When he had a 90-second lead on the three-time defending champion from Spain, Indurain went after him.

With less than two miles left, Indurain increased the pace and finished only 35 seconds behind Virenque, in 11th place.

Virenque now trails Indurain in the overall standings by 7:21.

Roberto Conti of Italy, no threat to Indurain's lead, won the 144-mile stage.

French cyclists Luc Leblanc and Armand De Las Cuevas were third and fourth in the overall standings.

Conti captured Tuesday's stage which ended with the climb to l'Alpe d'Huez. He took the lead in a small group that broke away from the main pack at the bottom of the final 6,100-foot ascent. He went out on his own with 6 miles left and won by more than two minutes over Hernan Buenahora of Colombia.

Starting Tuesday's stage, Conti was almost 18 minutes behind Indurain in the overall standings and moved up to sixth in the overall standings, still almost 10 minutes behind Indurain.

It was the first time Conti won an important stage of a race.

The Tour bypassed l'Alpe d'Huez last year and returned this year without Andy Hampsten, who in 1992 became the first American to win the stage. He fell in training, injuring his knee and shoulder a week before the start of the Tour on July 2.

Spurs re-acquire Elliott

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The San Antonio Spurs re-acquired forward Sean Elliott on Tuesday when they sent the rights to first-round draft pick Bill Curley and a 1997 second-round draft pick to the Detroit Pistons.

The Spurs dealt Elliott to the Pistons last year for fiery forward Dennis Rodman, who led the NBA in rebounding at 17.3 per game. The Pistons later tried to trade Elliott to the Houston Rockets for Robert Horry, but the deal was called off when Elliott failed a physical because of a kidney injury.

Elliott, a restricted free agent, was expected to sign a multiyear deal with the Spurs beginning at about $1.35 million and allowing him to become an unrestricted free agent next season, according to Tuesday's San Antonio Express-News.

Elliott played in 73 games last season and averaged 12.1 points. He has a 14.3 scoring average for his five seasons in the NBA.

The 6-foot-9 Curley was the 22nd overall pick in the June draft after finishing second on Boston College's career scoring list with 2,102 points and second in rebounding with 996. He averaged 20 points and nine rebounds as a senior as the Eagles reached the NCAA East Regional finals, losing to Florida.

San Antonio has also indicated it is trying to sign former point guard Avery Johnson, who most recently played for Golden State.

Johnson, a fan favorite in San Antonio as both a starter and backup, was expected to sign a multiyear deal that reportedly would pay him $545,000 a year at first, the Express-News reported.

It was unclear when the Johnson deal would be announced.

Spurs executives repeatedly have said they plan to make several personnel changes this offseason. The Spurs, 55-27 last season, were eliminated from the Western Conference playoffs in the first round by the Utah Jazz.

The Spurs have yet to hire a coach. John Lucas resigned earlier this summer and then took the coach and general manager positions with the Philadelphia 76ers.

BROWN: Campbell praises Oiler running back

(From 1C)

gue's most effective runners.

What can he do with a full season?

"Everybody was talking about 2,000 yards, but if that happens, it happens," Brown said. "Last year, when I got close to 1,000 yards everybody thought that was incredible.

"If I got near 2,000 this year, that's something I'd want to exploit then," he said, adding that 1,200 or 1,300 yards is a more reasonable goal.

Brown has received praise from former Oilers running back Earl Campbell, a Hall of Famer, and his coaches. Assistant head coach Kevin Gilbride says Brown will be a key to any offensive scheme the Oilers run.

"I think (Brown) is unbelievable," Campbell said. "I think he's got a great shot — if everything works out — to work right in there with being mentioned with some of the great guys."

But Brown, who is starting his fourth pro season, is keeping a steady grip on his sudden fame.

"I haven't changed my approach," Brown said. "I intend to just keep working hard. I'm not a marked man. After the first two games last year I was marked so I'm not worried about anyone knowing who I am."

Brown got his first career start in the ninth game last season against Cincinnati and rushed 26 times for 166 yards, including a four-yard touchdown run.

That was the first of five 100-yard performances, the most for Houston since Mike Rozier's five 100-yard games in 1987. Brown had three straight 100-yard games for the first time since Campbell in 1980.

Brown was an efficient runner last season, getting his 1,002 yards on only 195 carries, an average of 5.14 yards per carry. Only eight backs in NFL history have gained 1,000 yards on fewer carries.

"When Earl Campbell has nice things to say about you that's impressive," offensive coordinator Dick Coury said. "But the thing that impresses me the most about Gary is his work ethic. For a guy who had the kind of year he did, he still wants to run better."

Coury likes Browns' quickness. Gilbride likes his demeanor.

"The beautiful part about him is he's very humble," Gilbride said. "His success has not affected his opinion of himself. He'll continue to grow as his experience grows.

"You'll have to remember he didn't play all that much in college (at Penn State). As a running back, every game, every practice adds to his background."

Brown will admit to one change he made in the offseason. He worked harder with weights and he ran more.

"Yes, I did because there's more responsibility being the starting running back," Brown said. "Last year, I figured I'd be playing on special teams all year and I didn't really take a starter's approach.

"This year, I've taken a starter's approach."

■ Deficit jumps to 6½-year high, but currency markets shrug off report.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. trade deficit jumped to $9.17 billion in May as higher oil prices and a big drop in sales of commercial airliners contributed to the worst merchandise trade performance in 6½ years.

The Commerce Department said the U.S. deficit in goods and services widened by 7.6 percent after an even bigger 24.6 percent deterioration in April.

While the big widening of the April trade gap sent the dollar skidding to new lows last month, currency markets shrugged off Tuesday's report. The dollar actually strengthened slightly against the Japanese yen and the German mark. Analysts said the latest figure, while bad, had been anticipated.

The dollar's weakness this year, particularly against the yen, where it has fallen to a 50-year low, is already beginning to adversely affect the monthly trade figures. That factor helped to push imports to a third straight monthly high as the foreign goods Americans love to purchase have grown more expensive.

Eventually, the weaker dollar should help shrink the deficit as it makes American exports more competitive on overseas markets and foreign goods more expensive in the United States. But such switches in buying patterns normally lag behind the currency changes.

For this year, analysts predicted that the deficit will continue to worsen as the lingering effects of recessions in Europe and Japan continue to dampen demand for American exports. And this will mean that the U.S. currency could be pushed lower from future bad trade reports, economists said.

"America's trade shortfall is huge and growing larger. That means the dollar will still be vulnerable to setbacks," said Robert Dederick, chief economist at Northern Trust Co. in Chicago.

Bruce Steinberg, an economist at Merrill Lynch in New York, noted that about half of the trade deterioration this year has been with Europe, "almost entirely due to near-recessionary conditions which have restrained U.S. exports."

For May, rising energy prices pushed America's foreign oil bill up by $339 million last month. Imports of clothing, iron and steel and telecommunications equipment also posted big gains. Goods imports were up 1.5 percent to $54.52 billion, the third straight monthly record.

U.S. exports, which had fallen sharply the previous month, managed a slight 0.2 percent rise in May to $56.27 billion although exports of commercial airliners fell by $609 million.

There was some good news. American exports to Mexico jumped to a record $4.38 billion in May as Mexico surpassed Japan as America's second biggest export market after Canada.

The Clinton administration hailed this development as vindication of its effort last year to pass the North American Free Trade Agreement with Commerce Secretary Ron Brown saying Congress should quickly pass this year's big market-opening agreement, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

America's deficit with Japan was still the largest of any country, but the $4.39 billion was the smallest imbalance with Japan in nearly a year. The second biggest deficit was recorded with China, a gap of $2.22 billion in May.

So far this year, the United States has been running an annual deficit in merchandise of $137.3 billion, the worst showing since an all-time record of $152.1 billion set in 1987. The May goods deficit was the worst since October 1987.

For May, the overall deficit of $9.17 billion was the worst since a February imbalance of $9.61 billion.

Prices slip

NEW YORK — Oil prices finished mixed on Tuesday following developments in Nigeria and price swings influenced by Wednesday's deadline to trade August crude contracts.

West Texas Intermediate for August delivery settled 5 cents per barrel lower at $19.46 on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Crude had fallen as low as $19.16 during the session. The September delivery contract rose 14 cents per barrel to $19.23.

Prices were helped lower earlier in the session on reports that the Nigerian government said it would release the apparent winner of last year's presidential election and other political prisoners.

Prices recovered later when Chevron said the two-week strike had forced it to close an oil field.

The market also had expectations for an increase in weekly U.S. crude inventories to help the selling pressure.

After the market closed on Tuesday, the American Petroleum Institute reported that oil supplies rose 2.75 million barrels last week to 329.97 million.

Gasoline stockpiles fell 1.53 million barrels to 212.99 million and supplies of distillates, which include heating oil, jet fuel and diesel, rose 2.12 million barrels to 124.86 million.

Refineries increased operations to 95.7 percent of capacity from 94.9 percent a week earlier.

Natural gas prices were higher with August contracts rising 1.4 cents per 1,000 cubic feet to $1.959.

CompuAdd deal

AUSTIN (AP) — CompuAdd Computer Corp. says it has reached an agreement in principle to be acquired by a private investment partnership.

Austin-based CompuAdd said Tuesday that its agreement with Dimeling, Schrieber & Park, of Philadelphia, "brings both parties close to a definitive deal, pending final negotiations."

CompuAdd said the agreement includes continuity of management, employees and customer support programs. It also would keep the company's operations in Austin.

Financial terms weren't disclosed.

Stocks fall

NEW YORK — The stock market ended lower in lethargic trading on Tuesday amid a flood of quarterly corporate earnings reports.

Banking and technology shares were hard-hit amid concern about profit reports in those industries.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 7.12 to 3,748.31.

Declining issues outnumbered advances 9 to 8 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 251.54 million shares, up from 227.45 million in the previous session.

American to cut jetliner service to Lubbock, ax one Paris route

■ Airline to serve Texas city mostly through American Eagle fleet of prop-driven aircraft, carrier tells officials.

Associated Press

LUBBOCK — American Airlines plans to cut jet service to Lubbock International Airport, the carrier has notified city officials.

Mayor David Langston said Monday that American informed him of its plans to serve the city mostly through its American Eagle fleet of smaller, propeller-driven aircraft.

"They gave me a call as a matter of courtesy that this is what they decided," Langston told the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal.

American Airlines issued a statement Tuesday saying it would discontinue jet service Dec. 15. "Despite our best efforts, our operations at Lubbock continue to be unprofitable," the airline said.

Separately, American said Tuesday it also would cancel service between Raleigh-Durham and Paris on Sept. 7. The company said the route has lost some $10 million in the past year. The carrier wants to focus instead on its service to London from Raleigh-Durham, which it said is doing well.

American notified its Lubbock employees Monday that they will be laid off or transferred, said Rod Paine, Lubbock's deputy aviation director. The carrier said the service elimination affects 38 employees, who may transfer or stay in Lubbock and seek jobs with American Eagle.

The regional carrier will still have eight daily flights from Lubbock to American's Dallas-Fort Worth hub.

Langston said the city will try to schedule meetings with business leaders and American Airline officials within the next two weeks to explore ways to keep its jet service.

Earlier this year, American announced plans to cut jet service to Amarillo.

Global bank president: Private money flows to Third World

WASHINGTON (AP) — A huge flow of private money to Asia and Latin America is cutting the need for loans from the World Bank, the bank's president said Tuesday. But the picture could change, he cautioned.

"We're living in a period where the interest rates of the industrial world are about as low as they've been since World War II, and greed being what it is, the investors are going abroad," Lewis Preston said.

"They may come back to the industrial world."

The head of the world's biggest lender to the Third World spoke at a briefing to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the bank. It was formed after an international conference at Bretton Woods, N.H., in July 1944. Owned by 177 governments, its mandate is to help reconstruct and develop the economies of member countries.

The bank issued an anniversary report that said it will try to be more selective in its projects, join in more partnerships and cut costs while maintaining its high standing in financial markets.

Preston said he is not concerned by the prospect that the bank's loan portfolio may shrink.

"If we're successful, it will go down," he said. The bank's lending for the year ending June 30 was $20.8 billion, the lowest since 1990. Bank economists cited the greater availability of money from private banks and investors.

Preston said the bank's main concern is the world's 1 billion people who live on less than a dollar a day.

Critics quickly attacked the report and Preston's banker's-eye view of the world.

"In this new global economy the gap between rich and poor is widening and the destruction of our natural environment is accelerating," said Doug Hellinger of the Fifty Years is Enough Campaign.

"The bank has been a major contributor to this process. . . . The bank is unwilling and unable to develop new approaches and strategies to reverse these trends and reform its own lending practices."

Hastings plans store in former Gibsons building

By Mella McEwen

HASTINGS BOOKS, MUSIC AND VIDEO has leased approximately 47,000 square feet of the former Gibsons building, 3111 W. Cuthbert Ave.

McEwen

The lease will bring the building, empty since the discount store closed in January 1985, to full occupation. A portion of the building is now occupied by Lack's Furniture and by the 50-Off Store.

"We're really happy the building is leased out and we're anxious for Hastings to get construction underway and to get open," said Mike Lewis, a part owner of the building.

Floor space for the new Hastings will be in excess of 35,000 square feet, said Casey Hamill, merchandise manager for Hastings, adding that the new store would be the second-largest in the company.

Hastings' present Midland location, in Midland Plaza, is approximately 10,000 square feet. It will be closed soon after the new location opens.

The new location will allow Hastings to essentially triple its inventory, expanding its book section to over 50,000 titles, music to over 30,000 titles and sale videos to 10,000 titles and rental videos to 12,000 titles, Hamill said.

In addition, the store's staff size will increase. Hastings now employs between 30 and 35 people who will be transferred to the new store, and staffing will be boosted to between 50 and 75 associates, Hamill said.

"The market there is a combination of Midland and Odessa," said Hamill. "We've always felt it was underdeveloped for us, and we needed a new location. The new site was chosen because of its size."

Target opening date of the new location is Sept. 22.

WOODS BOOTS in North Park shopping center, 4612 Billingsley Blvd., is vacating its 12,000-square-foot Midland location when the lease expires, most likely the end of August or early September.

Owner Paul Woods said he is looking for another location, but has made no definite decisions yet. He said if the retailer does relocate in Midland, it will be to a smaller store.

In the meantime, he said, response to his moving out promotion — merchandise is 20 to 50 percent off and new goods are coming in regularly — has been excellent.

Watercress vs. cancer

Here's a new addition to the roster of vegetables that may help save you from cancer: watercress, a green leafy vegetable often used in salads or as a garnish.

Researchers at the American Health Foundation in Valhalla, N.Y., found watercress especially potent against lung cancer.

Lead researcher Stephen Hecht, Ph.D., said he believes he has identified the active anti-cancer chemical — one of a group called isothiocyanates — which is released when you chew watercress. When given to primates, the watercress chemical appeared to block activation of NNK, a potent cancer-causing agent in tobacco, Hecht told the Medical Tribune, a newspaper for physicians.

Hecht said he hopes to isolate the chemical so that in the future it might be given as a cancer preventive to smokers who cannot quit.

Wonder drug?

Licorice is not just a flavoring for candy. It's a root with a formidable ancient reputation as a medicine. And new studies suggest licorice is a more powerful drug than previously suspected, according to Herbert Pierson, Ph.D., former National Cancer Institute scientist and now a nutrition consultant.

At a recent scientific conference in Washington, Pierson proclaimed licorice anti-cavity ("a natural to consider for kids as a sweet"), anti-cancer, anti-inflammatory, immune-stimulating and anti-ulcer.

But most important, he suggested that one licorice chemical is an anti-viral agent that may suppress the development of AIDS. He cited a recent Japanese study in which 16 hemophiliacs infected with the human immunodeficiency virus were given oral doses of the licorice chemical for three to seven years.

"There was no progression to AIDS," Pierson said. Further, there were no side effects, he said.

He called the findings "phenomenal," and urged further testing of licorice compounds in combatting AIDS as well as other diseases.

The benefits come from "real" licorice root, not from anise, which often is used as a licorice substitute in U.S. products.

Niacin alert

Don't use high doses of niacin to lower cholesterol on your own. It could be hazardous to your health — especially to your liver.

That's a warning from Dr. James M. McKenney and colleagues at the Medical College of Virginia. They tested high doses of niacin — ranging from 500 to 3,000 milligrams per day for six weeks — on 56 subjects with high cholesterol. Both types of niacin — sustained-release and immediate-release — were used in the double-blind study.

The results were alarming. Half the patients taking sustained-release nicotinic acid developed liver toxicity. Most were withdrawn from the study because of abnormal liver function tests and other side effects. Nearly one-third of those on immediate-release niacin also were withdrawn from the study — not because of liver problems but because of side effects from dilation of blood vessels.

The researchers say they think sustained-release niacin should be banned. They also say high-doses of over-the-counter immediate-release niacin should be used only with strict medical supervision and careful monitoring.

Niacin should not be used to "self-treat" high cholesterol, they warn.

Multiple growth

Before 1980, there were, worldwide, only some 200 reported cases of multiple personality disorder. By 1984, there were 1,000; by 1989, 4,000. Believers in the disorder have recently used a figure of 25,000, reports the July issue of Reader's Digest. This explosion in diagnoses is often attributed to "Sybil" — a best-selling book and popular movie about a woman possessed by 16 different personalities. Now, some experts fear, naive therapists influenced by "Sybil" are diagnosing multiple personality disorder in patients. Also, interesting, the multiple personality disorder epidemic comes at a time when spiraling costs have forced some hospitals to reduce long-term care, cutting into revenues and forcing layoffs. The elaborated, expensive treatment of multiple personality disorder has produced a new source of revenue.

Eating disorders can threaten teens' lives

By Dr. Ilisse Perlmutter
Associated Press

Anorexia nervosa and bulimia nervosa, eating disorders most often seen in adolescent girls, can threaten the health or life of a child. But knowing the signs of these disorders can help speed the process of obtaining treatment.

Anorexia nervosa is defined as a refusal to eat enough to keep body weight over a minimal average for age and height. Bulimia nervosa is typified by binge eating — rapidly eating a large amount of food in a short amount of time —followed by purging, induced vomiting, fasting, use of laxatives, rigorous dieting or exercise.

The vast majority of cases of anorexia and bulimia occur in teen-age girls, and the reasons for this are as yet unclear.

Teen-age boys tend to be keyed in to their natural hunger and satiety. But young women are thought to be guided more by body perception and consciousness and are more apt to deny hunger to lose weight.

Anorexia and bulimia do not stem from a single underlying cause, but may be the result of several factors occurring over time and which seem to surface during adolescence.

Teens with anorexia or bulimia often avoid dealing with the emotional conflicts that crop up around puberty. Instead they displace their emotions, making weight loss or weight control the central issue. This can result in the distorted perception that being thin is admirable and that no one can ever be thin enough.

Other contributing factors include internal and parental pressure to be perfect, a disturbance in family interactions and a cultural perception that thinness is desirable.

Red flags that may indicate anorexia include skipping sweets, desserts or meals; a compulsive need for exercise and guilt if that is not accomplished; and complaints about weight, followed by rigorous dieting and weight loss in an already slender youngster.

Parents may also be concerned if a youngster who has lost weight continues to wear baggy clothing. This is a common tactic used by those with anorexia or bulimia to hide what they consider an "undesirable" body.

A teen who is bulimic may have all of these symptoms — and in addition may have a ravenous appetite.

Eating disorders can lead to serious medical complications. Anorexia, for example, can result in osteoporosis or loss in bone density through lack of sufficient calcium intake; an absence of menstrual periods; and disorders of the cardiovascular, gastrointestinal and metabolic systems.

Complications from bulimia can lead to an imbalance of salts, known as electrolytes, that are critical to the metabolic functions of the body; trauma to the esophagus; and carotid gland enlargement more commonly known as chipmunk cheeks.

If anorexia or bulimia is suspected, it is important that the child undergoes a complete medical evaluation, followed by treatment for the condition. Treatment may vary, depending on the type of eating disorder and its severity of medical and psychological symptoms.

Treatment focuses initially on stabilizing health, followed by nutritional rehabilitation and therapy. Family involvement is crucial in the goal of helping the teen-ager.

Robot may do surgery — from inside

By Jon Marcus

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Researchers at MIT want to put a bug in your ear. Actually, it's a tiny robot that looks like a bug. Someday it may be able to perform surgery from inside the human body.

"My view is that every hole in the body eventually will have something like this crawling in it, maybe in short areas like the ear canal," said Dr. Richard Satava, manager of the biomedical technology program at the U.S. Advanced Research Projects Agency, which is funding the work. "When you look in the stomach, it may be (a robot) you would swallow."

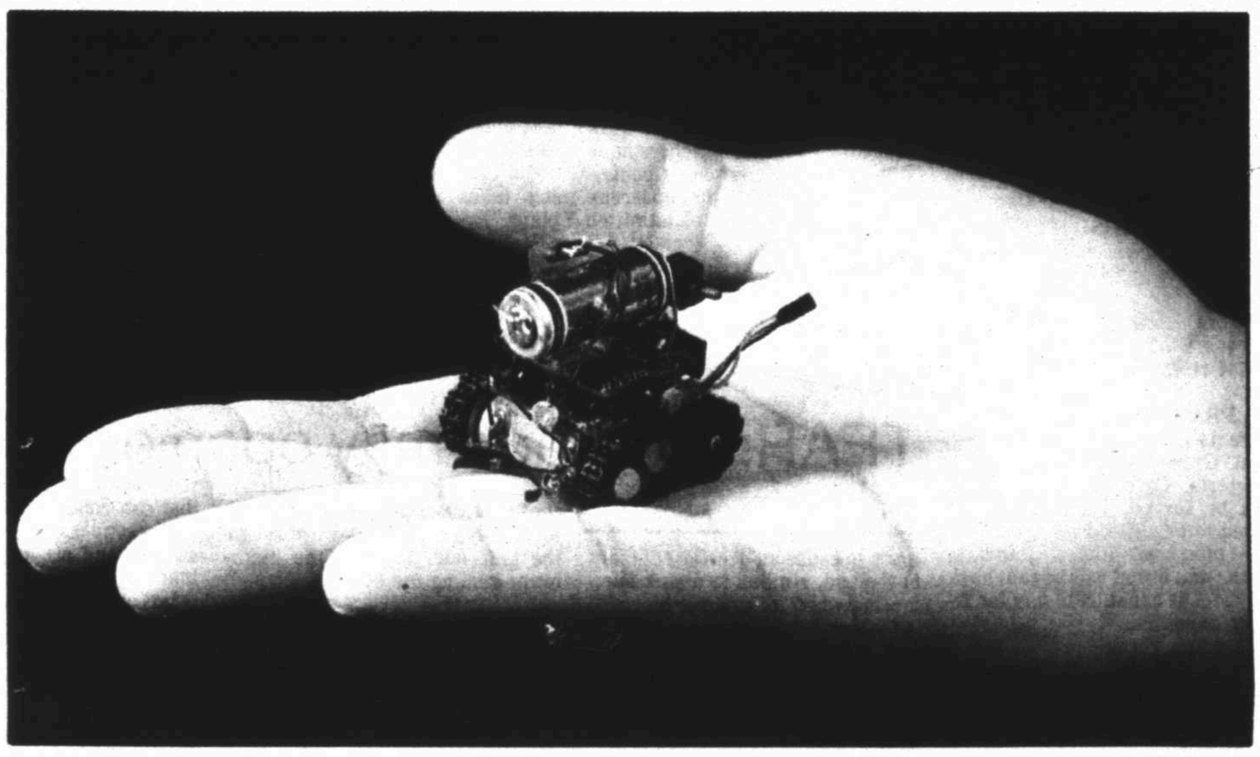

The advance evokes images of the 1966 film "Fantastic Voyage," in which Raquel Welch and a team of scientists were shrunk to microscopic size so they could travel through a human body.

But the idea has moved from science fiction into fact.

"The possibility that it's going to be done is 100 percent," Satava said. "In my view, five years is not an unreasonable period where we will see it used in animals, based on the research I've seen."

A precursor of the tiny robot already has been built in a Massachusetts Institute of Technology laboratory. About an inch and a half square, it has a simple computer, sensors to detect light, "antennae" to steer it safely away from obstacles and a claw that grasps and lifts small objects.

The gears were scrounged from toy stores. The motors, each slightly bigger than a pencil eraser, have been scavenged from vibrating personal pagers. The little claw works on a pulley system using a thin black thread.

AP Laserphoto

A robotic probe shown that fits in the palm of a hand is what researchers at MIT hope will someday be able to perform surgery from inside the body. This "endobot" model measures an inch and a half square. The endobots intended for surgery need to measure one millimeter square which scientists think will take another eight to 10 years too create.

"Having a mother who sews helped a lot," said James McLurkin, a 22-year-old electrical engineering major who spent two years developing the prototype, which he named Cleo for his grandmother.

For surgery inside the body, planners hope to build a microrobot one millimeter square — roughly equal to the thickness of a paper clip. That will take another eight to 10 years, they say. The first crude microrobot was developed at MIT just seven years ago.

"Endobots" may be used for operations inside the large intestine even sooner, according to designers. The device could make its way to blocks and

Infant tearing may cure itself

By Dr. Richard Palu
Associated Press

Constant weeping or tearing — a condition that occurs in about 2 percent of newborns — can appear unsightly and cause parents great concern.

But parents can be reassured by knowing that most cases resolve themselves over the first year of an infant's life. And those that do not generally can be treated successfully through a treatment known as probing.

Tear ducts are the passages from each eye to the front of the nose that serve as a drain for tears. Tearing usually occurs when one of the tear ducts is blocked, often by a thin membrane in the area of the nose. This blockage

Nutrition hot line available

Staff Report

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Through the end of July, consumers can call the American Dietetic Association's (ADA) Consumer Nutrition Hot Line for information on the role of fates and oils in a healthful diet.

As part of ADA's National Center for Nutrition and Dietetics, the Hot Line is a public service receiving more than 15,000 consumer calls each month. Registered Dietitians are available on line to answer a variety of questions on food and nutrition topics.

A recorded message from a Registered Dietitian discusses the role of fat in the diet and various sources of dietary fat. Trans fatty acids are discussed as well. According to nutrition experts, the bottom line is to reduce total fat and saturated fat intake for a more healthy lifestyle.

At the end of the recorded message, callers are given the opportunity to request a free fact sheet with more information on fats and oils in the diet, to speak with a Registered Dietitian, or be referred to a dietitian in their area for individual or group counseling.

Callers may listen to the message by calling 1-800-366-1655 between 8 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Friday. Registered Dietitians are available from 9

Strategies help reduce stress

Deadlines, dangerous drivers, public speaking, chronic pain — what causes stress for you? Your response may differ from other people because stress is a personal response to something in your environment.

The key to reducing stress is to recognize the stress, identify your reaction to it and look for a solution that fits your style, says Mature Outlook magazine.

"Stress is created by an imbalance between demands on you and your resources to meet them," says Sandra Allen, Ph.D., a psychologist and the co-director of the Emotional Health Center at the University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center. "You get into trouble when there's no relaxation time be-

Balanced diet can lead to oral health

By Dr. Edward G. Kaufman
Associated Press

Most people are aware that maintaining a well-balanced diet is a key to overall health, but few are aware that eating right can have a major impact on their oral health.

There are five major food groups: animal proteins, such as meat, fish, and poultry; proteins from dairy sources, such as milk, cheese and yogurt, and from alternate protein sources; fruits; vegetables; and grain products, such as breads and cereals.

The optimum well-balanced daily diet includes two to three servings of protein and dairy products; two to four servings of fruit; three to five servings of vegetables; and six to 11 servings of grain products. Adhering to these serving guidelines should supply the vitamins and minerals required for good general and oral health.

Eating a balanced diet can offer a measure of defense against periodontal disease — a disease of the soft and hard tissues supporting the teeth. There is evidence that lack of vitamin C can lead to gingivitis and early loss of teeth.

There are several other measures that can be taken to promote general health and prevent tooth decay.

A healthy mouth often begins before a child is born. A pregnant woman's diet can be crucial to her unborn baby's oral health because the baby's teeth begin to develop between the third and sixth week of pregnancy.

A pregnant woman's diet should include nutrients such as vitamins A, C and D, protein, calcium and phosphorus. It is important that the mother-to-be consult her doctor about specific dietary requirements and vitamins needed during pregnancy and early childhood.

After the baby is born, parents can give their child a healthy start by giving it a bottle of water at bedtime instead of fruit juices or milk, and by ensuring that the infant does not use the nursing bottle as a pacifier. The sugars in milk or juices, when mixed with oral bacteria, turn into an acid that can cause tooth decay.

Adding fluoride to water supplies is the single most effective measure to prevent tooth decay and promote oral health. Fluoride is one of the earth's natural elements and a component of tooth enamel. The American Association for World Health estimates that for every dollar spent on fluoridating water, $50 worth of dental treatment is prevented.

Fluoridated water is available in most communities across the United States. But there still are a number of communities where the water supplies are not fluoridated, and people in those areas should consult their dentists or physicians about providing fluoride supplements to their children.

It is also important that children snack in moderation — no more than three or four times a day — and brush regularly with a fluoride toothpaste. Both sugars and starches promote the growth of bacterial plaque, a principal cause of tooth decay and gum infections.

Dr. Edward G. Kaufman is the dean of the New York University College of Dentistry.

Positive HIV tests may prove positively false

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: A few weeks ago, I published a letter from a reader who said he had received a positive result from an HIV test, and was advised to be retested in six months. The writer was so frightened that he decided he couldn't wait, so he sought a second opinion immediately.

Van Buren

The specialist he consulted told him that because he had no real risk factors, the HIV-positive result was probably a false positive — and repeated the tests. This time, the results were negative. His purpose in writing was to alert others to the fact that false positives on AIDS tests can be due to several factors, including flu shots and pregnancy.

His letter generated more responses — two of which I would like to share:

DEAR ABBY: Regarding the letter in which a reader urged you to alert people to the possibility of false positives on HIV tests:

The large number of false positives from the ELISA HIV screening test (the most commonly used test) caused the Florida Legislature in 1988 to specify that a positive result may not be disclosed until the more accurate Western Blot test has also been done.

You should be aware, however, that the ELISA screening test also generates a number of false negatives, some of which are a result of the so-called "window period" — the time shortly after infection when a person is capable of transmitting HIV, although tests cannot detect the antibodies.

The public needs to understand that a positive test result is not an immediate death sentence, nor is a negative result a license for reckless behavior. — ALAN H. TERL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: From 1985 to 1987, I was director of the world's first and largest licensed laboratory for confirming HIV blood tests. We confirmed the ELISA tests by using the more accurate Western Blot test.

Those who are told that they have been tested positive for HIV should immediately ask if the Western Blot test was done, and if it wasn't, they should request it. If the Western Blot test is also positive, the patient should not panic because even this test can be in error. The patient should request that the test be repeated and interpreted at a different laboratory.

Abby, because our laboratory recognized the limitations of both tests, we coined the term "Western Blot Indeterminate" to indicate that some tests could not be interpreted as either positive or negative. Thus, healthy blood donors with initially positive ELISA tests are spared being confirmed HIV-positive until the results are definitely positive. — DONALD E. SENN, PH.D., LAGUNA NIGUEL, CALIF.

DEAR MR. TERL AND DR. SENN: Your letters underscore the fact that no laboratory test is 100 percent perfect, and that patients should not panic on initially learning that a test was interpreted as positive for HIV. By the same token, those whose test results are negative should not behave recklessly, because their tests could also be in error. In addition, as an extra precaution, those with negative tests who are in high-risk groups should be retested after the window period has elapsed.

ROBOT: Work continues

polyps and remove them, with only a wire tether to carry television pictures to a supervising surgeon. It would replace a flexible but uncomfortable tube called an endoscope inserted in the large intestine.

It was when a group of surgeons toured the laboratory that researchers were encouraged to develop microrobots that could work inside the body. Researchers have attended gastroenterology conferences and sat in on an endoscopy operation, with admitted squeamishness.

"If this technology does come to fruition, it's something that could make many kinds of procedures simpler for the patient," said Dr. Peter Banks, a spokesman for the American College of Gastroenterologists.

But prototypes like Cleo cannot yet move efficiently inside the human body, with its twists and turns, rough surfaces and slippery organs.

So engineers are considering how else to use their microrobots.

"It's hard to think of anything they couldn't do," said McLurkin. "Just having them hide under your fridge and come out and collect dust — if they cost $5 or $6, everyone can have some. They could climb through pipes or cooling tubes in a nuclear power plant."

McLurkin hopes to create communities of tiny robots. His models are ants; he keeps a plastic ant farm in his laboratory, and took a course in entomology at Harvard. He was the only engineer in the class.

"Ants are some of the most successful insects in the world, and they don't do anything by themselves," he said. "Nature is the ultimate engineer."

McLurkin refers to Cleo as "she" because all worker ants are female. His work area is called the "gnat robot lab," and a box of spare parts is labeled "ant parts."

Built with $300 worth of parts, the microrobot runs on 180 milliwatts, or about a fifth of a watt, of electricity. It can function independently, following a flashlight beam around the floor and steering clear of walls and objects.

McLurkin showed his microrobot to a class of students at the Baldwin, N.Y., elementary school where his mother teaches.

"Kids always love this stuff," he said. "It is a little like having a toy."

TEAR: Blockage may open on its own tends to cause an overflow of tears in the eye, similar to a sink overflowing when its drain is blocked.

(From 1D)

Tearing can be messy. But in itself, it is generally not a threat to health. So if tearing is the only problem associated with the blockage, doctors often delay treatment until a child is 8 to 12 months old.

In most cases of blockage, the duct will open on its own by the time the child is 12 months old. But if, at that point, the duct is still sealed, a treatment known as probing is usually undertaken to open the blockage.

Probing is done on an outpatient basis, usually with inhaled anesthesia. Doctors pass a small metal tube called a probe down through the tear duct to open the membrane sealing the duct.

Probing before the age of 13 months is generally successful with the first treatment. But the success rate decreases slightly as a child matures. And about 25 percent of those probed at 18 months or older need the procedure repeated.

In some cases tearing can result in eye infections. The surface of the eyes and face contains bacteria that can build up and cause infection if the bacteria cannot drain from the eye.

The pus, discharge and mucus that can collect on the eyelid during infections can make them red, swollen and crusty. And because that infection can cause scarring to lids and other areas of the visual system and create more serious problems, the child will need to be treated earlier than usual.

In these cases, the infection must be eliminated before the blockage can be treated. This is usually done through antibiotic drops. In severe infections, intravenous antibiotics can be given in the hospital.

STRESS: Physical, emotional ailments linked to stress

tween meeting the demands. A chronic state of stress leads to burnout — physical and emotional."

Stress has been linked to physical ailments such as backaches, headaches, high blood pressure and ulcers, as well as psychosocial problems such as depression, substance abuse, and eating and sleeping disorders, Allen explains. "There are a lot of ways to build up your resources so that when you run into a demand, you can meet it more easily," says Allen. To help you get started, try these strategies for becoming more stress resistant:

■ Eliminate the negative. Start with a common sense strategy: Simply change those things in your environment that make life miserable. Whether it's improving the lighting in your work spot, getting a new prescription for your eyeglasses or replacing a lumpy mattress, says Allen.

■ Build mental muscle. Meditation, prayer, visualization, imagery and biofeedback are just some of the coping strategies that can help you slow down, stand back and gain perspective.

■ Work it out. When David Holmes, Ph.D., feels stressed out, he goes jogging. Holmes, a University of Kansas psychology professor, says exercise reduces muscle activity. This reduction makes you feel more relaxed, lessens the likelihood of depression and most importantly, reduces your cardiovascular response to stress.

■ Find your funny bone. "Humor is a whole-body experience," with positive effects on your physiological systems, says W.F. Fry, M.D., a psychiatrist and emeritus associate clinical professor at Stanford University Medical School. Humor is a "direct antagonist to the three major negative emotions — anger, fear and depression," he says.

■ Shed a tear. Allen also touts the value of humor, advising her clients to laugh at least once before breakfast. "But it's OK to cry, too. It's a good tension reliever," she explains.

■ Take a mini-vacation. Vacations are super stress reducers, and on a daily basis, taking a five-minute, 10-minute, one-hour or one-day break from the daily grind is like "putting money in the bank," says Allen. "You're building up a little reserve, so when you come up against a stress, you have some resources."

■ Soothe the savage beast. Music has power to affect your moods and behaviors, and if used correctly, has been shown to be an effective stress reducer, says Suzanne Hanser, Ed.D., a registered music therapist and president of the National Association for Music Therapy.

■ Stop being perfect. Some folks are their own worst enemy, so ease up on yourself. "It's acceptable not to be right all the time, not to be perfect," says Allen. "No one is."

Fresh baked aroma best part of bread

By Linda Anderson

My kids and I love breadsticks (in fact, since I don't do Italian food very much, I have been known to make a whole meal out of breadsticks when we go to Italian restaurants.), so when I found something called Bread du Jour in the supermarket, I couldn't wait to take some home so we could try it.

Anderson

The product turned out to be breadsticks in heat-and-serve form, kind of like those rolls we've all been eating for years — you know, the kind you just take out of the package and warm in the oven. The bread is almost completely baked when you buy it; all you have to do is brown it a little bit in the oven.

Bread du Jour original flavor breadsticks comes in packages of eight single-serving breadsticks, and each package costs $1.89 (or not quite 25 cents apiece). The product also comes in other flavors, but we bought just plain breadsticks.

Nutrition label claims that each breadstick has 130 calories, with 10 of those calories from fat.

Label advertising on the back of the wrapper claims the product is "Good nutrition — Hot and Crusty in Minutes!

"Imagine the aroma of fresh bread baking in your oven. Imagine biting into a just-baked piece of hot, buttered bread. Everyone knows how wonderful home-baked bread tastes, and for years, the bakers of Bread du Jour have known how good it is for you.

"Now, nutrition experts agree that you should have six to 11 servings each day from the Bread, Cereal, Rice and Pasta group. That's great news for bread lovers! What a better way to provide good nutrition for your family that hot, crusty Bread du Jour — right from your own oven — in minutes!"

Well, after all that we couldn't wait to try the product for ourselves. Unfortunately for us, Bread du Jour is "Not recommended for microwave ovens," so we had to wait while it browned.

We decided we could wait that long, especially if the kitchen was going to smell like bread baking.

Then we decided that perhaps the aroma of warm, fresh-out-of-the-oven bread was the best part of the deal. The breadsticks, while tasty enough, were a little dry and maybe too crusty for our taste.

Maybe we'll give Bread du Jour another try, only this time check out one of the flavored kinds. We never did finish the package we already bought, though...

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

Overweight
It's not your fault

Research sites chemical or metabolism disorders as the leading cause of weight problems. The fact is most overweight people eat less and more healthy than most people who are able to maintain their weight.

The abuse of fat and calories did not create the problem and restrictive calorie dieting offers only temporary success. Low calorie/fat dieting can further deteriorate our Metabolism and Sugar System, therefore we often gain back more weight than we lose.

The M Balance weight management system is a one-on-one diagnostic diet program designed to analyze the rate our body uses energies and all those things that may influence weight control.

No pills, formulas or pre-packaged foods. Losing weight is not the same as solving a weight problem.

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:

- ★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
- ★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
- ★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- ★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?

Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?

A small deposit is required.

Take Note Of This

Summer's end is just around the corner and it's time to start making arrangements for education and care of Midland's children. To assist you with information on where education and care is available, the Midland Reporter-Telegram is publishing it's annual Children's Education and Child Care Directory on Sunday, August 7th.

This Directory is a vehicle used to reach parents with information about the services that are available in the Midland area and who provides them. The parents of children in the Midland area have come to rely on this directory as a guide to quality education and care. This section focuses on the basic "who, what, where and when" of quality education and care in our area.

As a provider of these services in the Midland area, you will want your facility represented in this special Directory with an ad, as well as a story, photo and a dot on the map showing where you are located.

Special ad packages ranging from 8" to 65" are available, as well as rates for ads running without a story, photo, etc.

Deadline for Children's Education and Child Care Directory is Thursday, July 28th. To reserve your ad space, please call
