AARP faces inquiries by Senate panel, IRS

WASHINGTON (AP) — After years of tiptoeing around the powerful American Association of Retired Persons, Congress has begun to peer into the 33 million-member lobby's lucrative business ventures and nonprofit tax status.

■ Congress stops tiptoeing, peers into ventures of seniors' lobby group.

"This is a vast business empire that has figured out how to gimmick the nonprofit laws," Sen. Alan K. Simpson said in announcing the first congressional hearing into AARP's finances and tax status, slated for June 13 before his Finance subcommittee.

Salutatorian silent as principal objects to speech on her rape

Associated Press

OAK BLUFFS, Mass. — Once, women were expected to stay silent about rape. Today, if they are able, they talk: in support groups, in the home, in court.

Salutatorian Megan Cryer wanted to talk about it at graduation. Her principal objected.

So Cryer sat silent at commencement Sunday.

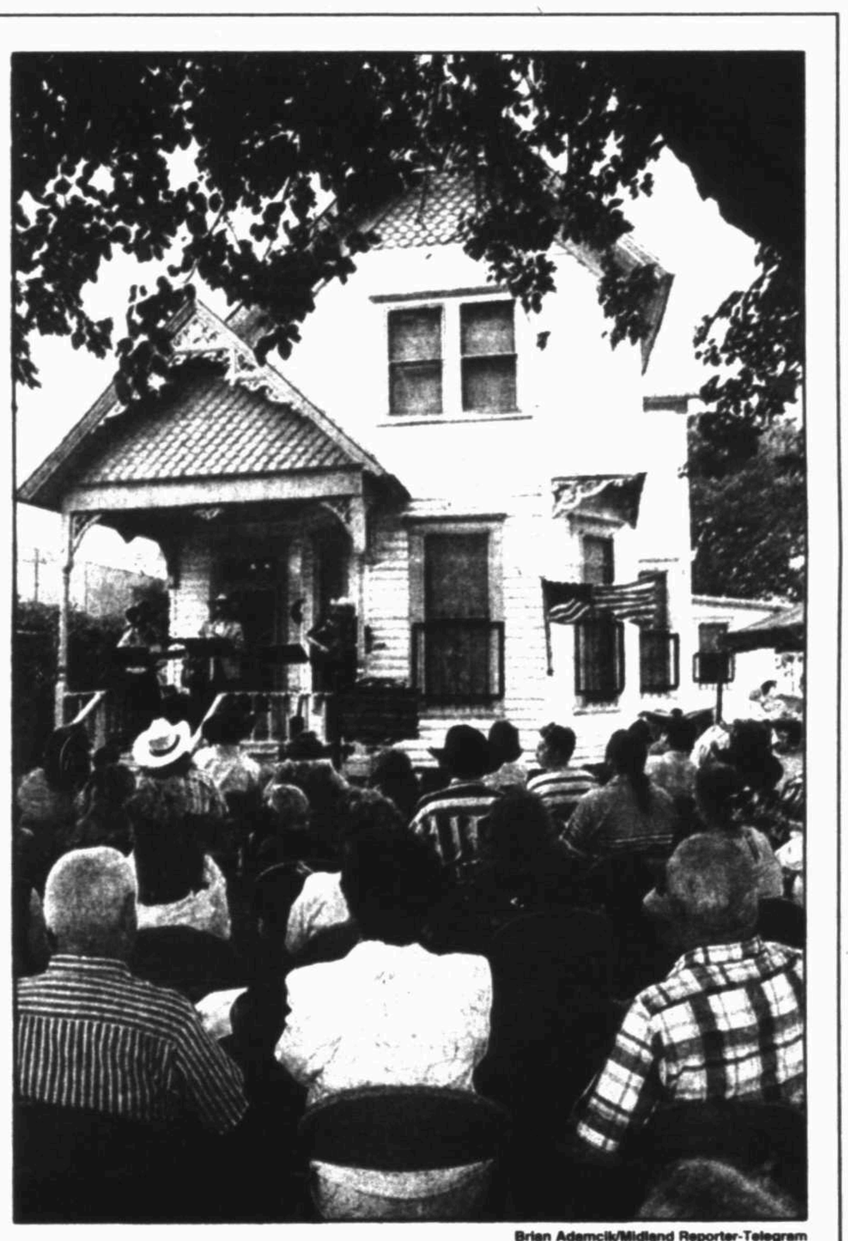

An 18-year-old star football player at Martha's Vineyard Regional High School raped Cryer when she was a 14-year-old sophomore at the school three years ago.

Cryer wanted to talk about it and thank those who helped her — family, friends and some teachers.

"Terrible things can happen, even something as terrible as rape. But you can overcome it, and I wanted people to know that," she said.

But Principal Gregory Scotten edited the word "rape" out of her speech and changed her language to refer to a "terrible thing."

Links with history, old-time religion open weeklong heritage festivities

By Ed Todd

Midland's weeklong Western Heritage Celebration in leading up to Saturday's Ranch Rodeo got its sendoff Sunday with old-time country preaching from the porch of a Victorian-style landmark: the 1899 Brown-Dorsey Medallion Home in Midland.

Cowboy-minister Leonard Cotten preached a message of compassion and salvation to a crowd of 265 people, who had joined in the singing of old-standard gospel hymns.

"We all need to be more gracious, understanding and compassionate ... (and) to provide for those in need" in the manner of the early church, Cotten told his outdoor congregation. Many hearers included those who sat under the generous shade of a 99-year-old mulberry tree, which predates the two-story house that Midland cattleman-lawyer Z. Taylor Brown had contracted to build in the late 1890s.

The house formed the backdrop for the Old-Time Church Service and fried-chicken box lunch.

Serbs refuse U.N. hostage release talks

■ Day 3 brings no firm word about fate of U.S. pilot whose F-16 fighter jet was shot down.

Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The Bosnian Serb military chief refuses to free more U.N. hostages unless NATO promises to rule out further airstrikes, the United Nations said Sunday.

The demand by hardline Gen. Ratko Mladic has created an impasse with the international community over more than 250 peacekeepers detained since NATO jets bombed rebel weapons depots on May 25-26.

Britain, whose forces will participate in a new international rapid reaction force, warned the Serbs' strategy of trying to bargain for further concessions from the West was a big mistake.

There was no firm word for a third day about the fate of a U.S. pilot whose F-16 fighter jet was shot down Friday over Bosnian Serb-held territory near Banja Luka.

Defense Secretary William Perry said Sunday that the Pentagon has found no evidence that the pilot managed to eject before his plane crashed. Perry said a search-and-rescue effort was continuing amid a claim from Mladic that the rebels had captured the pilot.

Former youth minister found with 15-year-old posts bond

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

A former youth minister who reportedly fled the state with a local teen-age girl in May was returned to Midland Friday night and has posted bond and remains free.

Chuck Adair, 35, was arraigned before a justice of the peace on Saturday and bond was set at $5,000 on a state charge of sexual assault of a child, according to Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre.

Adair and 15 year-old Kristen Berryhill were found May 25 by officials in a Las Vegas, Nev., hotel after a resident recognized them from a segment on missing children that aired on the Oprah Winfrey show the day before, a police spokesman said.

The resident said the two were selling products door-to-door in Las Vegas.

The pair disappeared from Midland on May 13 after last being spotted together that afternoon.

Wretched miracle

■ American dream turns nightmarish in border's colonias

By Deborah Bajer
Associated Press

EL MILAGRO, N.M. — The American dream lives on a trash-strewn hillside at the end of a rutted road in a cluster of trailers and shacks called El Milagro — "The Miracle."

There, two families share three rooms: a two-room trailer, and a dirt-floored addition with walls that stop several feet short of the ceiling.

Cooking is done on a grate balanced between cinderblocks over an open fire on the dirt floor. Water comes from a pipe, run from a neighbor's house, that sticks up from the ground behind the trailer. There is no bathroom — not even an outhouse. No electricity. No heat.

The four adults and three toddlers are among the most recent arrivals in one of the newest — and rawest — of the communities called colonias.

Colonia — "neighborhood" in Spanish — generally means a rural, unincorporated subdivision near the U.S.-Mexico border lacking adequate housing, roads, drainage and water and sewer systems. The word has become synonymous with rural poverty along the border in New Mexico and Texas.

El Milagro's new arrivals left their homes near Guanajuato, Mexico, in February. They came looking for a better life in this southern New Mexico farming area along the Rio Grande, some 80 miles north of the border.

RODEO: 265 turn out for old-fashioned service

was built in 1899, was moved into in 1900, served Brown and his family and that of his daughter, Sarah Brown Dorsey, and was purchased by the Midland County Historical Society in 1969. The old house was restored, outfitted with antique furniture and fixtures, and dedicated on Independence Day 1976.

Cotten's message took on the urgency of repentance and accepting Jesus Christ as savior and Lord. "We have no guarantees of what tomorrow will bring," he said. "Today is the day of salvation."

The cowboy church service, which started with the songs "I Saw the Light" and the "Old Country Church," concluded with "Just a Closer Walk with Thee."

Nancy McKinley, president of the Midland County Historical Society, said she was overwhelmed by the turnout to the preaching, box-lunch dining, and tour of the historic house — Midland's oldest.

"It just fills your heart," Mrs. McKinley said, to witness the ardent support of the old-fashioned church service and the "recognition of (Western ranch) heritage. "The historical thread runs through everybody whether they know it or not. It is up to each of us to keep that thread from breaking."

Other Western Heritage Celebration events will be held at 11:30 a.m. today through Friday in Midland Centennial Plaza.

On Friday night, the Ranch Rodeo Dance, featuring Craig Carter and The Spur of the Moment Band, will be held in the Midland County Exhibit Building.

Saturday's events on the Midland County Exhibit Building grounds include the daylong Bit, Spur, Saddle and Collectibles Show, stagecoach rides and hayrides; the noon chuck-wagon cookoff; the afternoon Western singing, cowboy poetry reading and storytelling; the 6 p.m. Ranch Rodeo featuring nine ranch teams in the Midland County Arena, and the late-night campfire sessions of cowboy music and poetry reading.

Ranch Rodeo week will conclude on Sunday with the 9 a.m. 4-H Club omelette rodeo breakfast, the 10:30 a.m. Cowboy Church Service featuring Cotten and Western singer Jeff Gore, and the 11:45 a.m. registration for the afternoon playday in the arena.

BOND: Former youth minister's wife retains attorney

(From 1A)

Ms. Berryhill at the church where the Berryhills also were members, according to family members.

The two were last seen together about 3 p.m. May 13 and Ms. Berryhill's parents contacted police about four hours later.

Officials had reason to believe Adair might show up in Tennessee after local officials who spoke with Adair's father in Nashville said Adair told his father he was en route to Nashville.

The weekend after the pair was found, "America's Most Wanted" was scheduled to air a segment about the disappearance of the pair.

Originally, officials said Ms. Berryhill would be charged in Las Vegas with obstruction of justice for lying to Las Vegas authorities about her name and age. She was listed with the Midland Police Department as a runaway.

Schorre said it was unlikely any charges would be filed against Ms. Berryhill here or in Las Vegas since she is considered the victim in the sexual assault.

He said state law mandates anyone under 17 cannot give consent to sexual conduct unless the perpetrator is three years older than the victim.

Police said Ms. Berryhill's parents traveled to Las Vegas the day she was located and picked up their daughter.

Adair faces a federal charge of flight to avoid prosecution.

However, Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery said he anticipates the charges being dropped.

He said the flight charges are usually added to get federal authorities involved in the search because they have more resources to help locate the individual and help get them back.

"Normally, charges are dropped in lieu of state prosecution," he said.

Schorre said Adair will be arraigned in district court on either Thursday or Friday, unless Adair waives the hearing. He said Adair has retained Jeff Hinkley as his legal counsel.

Hinkley said Adair probably will not appear in court this week because it is a pre-indictment hearing and can be handled verbally or by a written statement.

Adair arrived in Midland late Friday night after waiving extradition.

Police reports show officers were informed of Adair's release after he posted bond and indicate a temporary restraining order filed against him by his wife, Donna Adair.

The report said Mrs. Adair has changed the locks on her home in the 1700 block of Castleford Roads, but she is concerned he "may attempt to break in and obtain evidence against him."

Hinkley declined to comment on Adair's whereabouts, but indicated he is "out of Midland."

"The issues in this care are so sensitive for both the individuals and their families, that it would be best for me not to say anything," Hinkley said.

He indicated he was aware that Mrs. Adair had retained an attorney and said he would be surprised if any affidavits she may have given would indicate she was in fear of her safety.

Schorre said the case will be presented to a grand jury on June 21

AARP: Changing of guard contributes to its woes

(From 1A)

Simpson accused the lobby of "reckless and irresponsible statements" and "frightening senior citizens" to influence policy.

AARP's frequent skirmishes with Congress and the changing of the guard on Capitol Hill contributed to its woes: It is viewed by conservatives as a protector of the welfare state and opposes Medicare and Social Security reforms backed by Simpson, of Wyoming, and other Republicans.

AARP is also engaged in a dispute with the Internal Revenue Service over some tax-exempt claims. Plus, some charge that its leaders don't have members' interests at heart.

Horace B. Deets, AARP's executive director, said the test of a nonprofit is whether it meets its mission.

"The key is what do you do with the revenue," he said.

AARP was founded in 1958 to support older Americans through education, advocacy, research and social services. It also contracts with corporations to sell its members insurance, rent them cars and provide them with other goods and services.

AARP collected $382 million in 1994, including $173 million from such commercial ventures. Advertising in its publications raised $47 million. Other income totalled $16 million, including $4 million from its mail-order pharmacy. Dues raised nearly $146 million.

In addition, it received $86 million in federal grants for services it provided the elderly.

"AARP, like all nonprofits, is trying to accomplish a growing workload of activity with shrinking resource availability," Deets said. "All of us have had to look to sources other than dues to find the revenue to do the work."

Expenses totaled about $359 million, including $100 million spent on publications, and $35 million on lobbying, research and voter education. AARP netted about $23 million and had $43 million saved in 1994.

Simpson points to AARP's 22 million-circulation magazine, Modern Maturity, as an example of how the group takes advantage of its nonprofit status.

He said the magazine is mailed at lower nonprofit postal rates, but it refuses advertising for products or services that compete with those in which AARP has a financial interest.

That gives AARP a subsidized forum for its business interests, according to Simpson. AARP points out that it pays commercial mailing rates for those pages that carry advertising.

AARP's arrangement to provide insurance to its members drew attention from the IRS, which has been investigating how nonprofit groups raise money.

The association paid $135 million last year to the IRS in lieu of taxes on revenue from insurers. It plans to pay another $15 million this year to keep negotiating.

At the heart of the dispute is whether providing insurance to members is part of AARP's mission, or whether it should be considered taxable income.

When AARP was founded, Medicare did not exist, so the group sought to provide insurance to senior citizens who couldn't find coverage elsewhere.

"It has been a part of our activity from the beginning," Deets said.

The group also paid the postal service $2.8 million last year to settle accusations that it improperly used nonprofit mailing privileges in 1991 and 1992.

Some allege that the AARP's business ties cloud its judgment about what's best for its members, a charge AARP officials strongly deny.

Spokesman Peter Ashkenaz said the association constantly polls its members and frequently holds public hearings. During last year's health care reform debate, AARP coordinated about 3,000 public forums nationwide.

Dr. Sidney M. Wolfe of Public Citizen's Research Health Group charged that AARP's relationship with the insurance industry prevented it from backing a single-payer model, which he said would save money by reducing paperwork.

Ashkenaz said fewer than a third of AARP members back single-payer insurance, and that the group endorsed the major Democratic reform proposal because it was the only one to cover both prescription drugs and long-term care costs.

COLONIAS: 'One motivating factor in this is greed'

(From 1A)

Rosa Balcazar explained through an interpreter that she, her husband and their two children came with her cousin, Guadalupe Martinez, and her husband and child.

Balcazar tells her story while watching her two children, ages 3 and 4, and their 2-year-old cousin play on spare tires in the dusty yard. Martinez is hard at work scrubbing clothes on a nearby rock.

"There was nothing to eat there," the 34-year-old woman says. "Right now there's nothing to eat (here) either, but there's talk there's going to be some jobs."

Their hopes are pinned on the nearby fields, where bright green onion plants are already tall enough to wave in the brisk spring winds.

Meanwhile, they're trying to scrape together the $100 rent they pay to a relative. Neighbors have brought them some food.

"You have people living in Third World conditions, which to me is really appalling in this day and age in America," said New Mexico Attorney General Tom Udall.

Udall is suing subdividers he says used illegal lot-splitting to create El Milagro and four other New Mexico colonias in Dona Ana County.

In some cases they also used "straw buyers," buyers in name only who fronted for them in purchases and sales, Udall contends.

"Clearly one of the motivating factors in this is greed. You have people trying to make a fast buck," Udall said.

One developer named in the lawsuit, Ysidro Lopez, said he provided land for people who couldn't afford it otherwise.

"A lot of them were very poor people," said Lopez, who sold property in two colonias about 55 miles south of El Milagro. "They were real happy to go ahead and have a piece of land so they could start their dream."

Udall contends other subdividers have taken advantage of a loophole in state law: Splitting a lot four or fewer ways is not considered subdividing, exempting the developer from rules about roads, drainage, water and wastewater. And the same lots can be split again and again.

The Legislature this year tightened the law to close the loophole. Over objections from some real estate and construction interests, the new law was signed by Gov. Gary Johnson — a millionaire construction company owner and political newcomer who during last year's campaign said, "What is a colonia?"

Colonias are eligible for federal funds; 92 in New Mexico have the designation. Some are long-settled mining towns, or historic communities of picturesque adobe houses, lacking adequate infrastructure.

But the colonias with the worst conditions — such as at El Milagro — have sprouted in the last 10 to 15 years.

They are concentrated in Dona Ana County, which borders Mexico and Texas and is the fastest-growing county in the state. Jobs at U.S. wages, schools, social services, and relatively inexpensive land — at least four times cheaper in the United States than in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, according to one study — attract immigrants. Thousands of Dona Ana County farm workers from Mexico became U.S. citizens during a federal amnesty program in the late 1980s.

Most residents in Dona Ana County's 35 colonias are Mexican-American and poor. They are seasonal farm workers or dairy workers or construction workers or manufacturing plant employees.

Most are buying their lots, sometimes on installment contracts that don't give them title until the payments are finished, and sometimes at interest rates of 18 percent.

Judy Price, the county's community development director, said a woman seeking a mobile home permit produced as proof of land ownership a signed agreement handwritten in Spanish on a half-sheet of paper. The location of the lot: "near the water tank in Hatch."

Old mobile homes, trailers and travel trailers, shacks made of scrap wood or cardboard or other materials dot the colonias.

RAPE: Salutatorian stays silent

(From 1A)

"I am not going to change my words," Cryer said. "I feel like I would be letting myself down if I didn't deal with the experience head on."

Scotten said he was simply suggesting ways to make the speech more appropriate.

"I used her words to see if I could shift it into a welcoming address. I was trying to see if we could be helpful," Scotten said. "I think there was a misinterpretation of our intentions."

Cryer's friend, Emily MacRae, who graduated third in the class of about 500, delivered the welcoming speech in Cryer's place, focusing on friendship.

To Cryer and her family, it's another example of how administrators put the school's reputation and football team ahead of Cryer's feelings.

One night in the fall of 1992, when Keith Devine was a wide receiver helping the team on its way to the division Super Bowl, he raped Cryer.

Afterward, Cryer had to pass him in the halls each day, despite a court order keeping him away from her, and endure pushing, name calling and cold stares from some other students.

Scotten said Devine could not be expelled until he was convicted. That was nearly a year after he graduated. He pleaded guilty in 1994, received a five-year suspended sentence and is on probation.

"Every place we turned we were boxed in," Scotten said. "We had to protect the rights of both students."

SERBS: General refuses to free hostages

(From 1A)

playing some kind of cruel game," Perry said of Mladic as he returned to Washington from weekend talks with Allies in Paris.

U.N. spokeswoman Maj. Myriam Sochacki said Mladic told U.N. officials in a late-night phone conversation Saturday that "he wanted a positive answer saying that there would be no further use of NATO airpower."

"Otherwise, he said he would not discuss whether the Red Cross can visit those detained, or any other related issue," she said from Sarajevo.

In Montrouis, Haiti, Secretary of State Warren Christopher said he had no new information on the pilot's fate. He said U.S. diplomat Robert Frasure met Sunday morning with Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic, who said he had no knowledge about the pilot's location but promised to continue pressing Bosnian Serbs for information.

Bosnian Serbs took several hundred peacekeepers hostage after NATO jets attacked Bosnian Serb ammunition dumps in reaction to repeated rebel bombings in Sarajevo.

Sarajevo has been the city most under siege in the three-year war, which has left about 200,000 people dead or missing since Bosnia-Herzegovina seceded from Yugoslavia.

Under intense pressure, the Bosnian Serbs finally released 121 people Friday.

Until Mladic's statement, there had been mixed signals about whether more would be released soon. Some officials had demanded promises of no airstrikes and an end to the Bosnian Serbs' diplomatic isolation. Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic's office had said more hostages could be released soon.

Instead, the Bosnian Serbs increased their harassment of peacekeepers around Sarajevo. Three Canadians, who the United Nations already considered detained because their movement was restricted, were seized by the Bosnian Serbs and taken to a police station, Sochacki said.

Two Frenchmen were involved in an altercation with 20 Serbs, said another U.N. spokesman, Maj. Guy Vinet. He said the Serbs surrounded the Frenchmen. Fearing they would be captured, the Frenchmen destroyed some military code books and radios.

One French peacekeeper was briefly grabbed but freed himself in a fistfight. Both returned to their bunker after the incident, Vinet said.

On Saturday, two soldiers were seriously wounded.

Ownership of Golan Heights is source of anxiety for many residents

EL ROM, Golan Heights (AP) — At a scenic overlook on the Golan Heights, Israelis in jeans and Druse Arabs in knitted white prayer caps take turns dropping shekels into a coin-operated telescope to gaze at the hazy mountains of Syria in the distance.

For the Druse, the view is of a land they have not set foot in for 28 years. For the Israelis, it is of a powerful foe they have faced on the battlefield three times in the past half-century.

Israelis have prized the Golan Heights as a guard tower that has defended them against Syria's armed might for nearly three decades. Rusted tanks and fenced-off fields of unexploded mines punctuate the roads in mute testimony to their battles.

Israel captured the Golan in the 1967 Mideast war, fought furiously to hold onto it in the 1973 war and annexed it in 1981. Successive Israeli governments pledged never to give up the heights, a 42-mile by 16-mile plateau that rises above the Sea of Galilee in northern Israel.

But Foreign Minister Shimon Peres now tells his countrymen that if they want peace with Syria, they must give back the heights. The prospect appalls many Israelis who remember the days before 1967 when Syrian artillery on the Golan rained shells on the Galilee below.

"I'm afraid that we're going to get a piece of paper and they're going to get my home, and I'm going to have to come back here with my son to fight," said Dennis Van Meter, who grows avocadoes at Kibbutz Afik, a communal farming settlement in the southern Golan.

About 12,000 Israelis live in settlements scattered across the Golan, along with 15,000 Druse in four villages at its northern tip.

The volcanic plateau draws thousands of Israelis each year to hike and camp in forested national parks, kayak and raft among caves and waterfalls, and take in breathtaking views of the valley below. Trees drooping with apples and cherries crowd kibbutz orchards, and grape vines supply the Golan Winery.

Israel's only ski resort is here on the slopes of Mount Hermon, which towers over the region at 9,000 feet.

Israel makes no biblical claim on the Golan as it does on the West Bank, which it also captured in 1967. Its main interests here are security and water. The principal sources of the Jordan River and the Sea of Galilee, which provide a third of Israel's water, are in the Golan.

Polls indicate a majority of Israelis oppose giving up the heights. Red, black and white stickers declaring "The People are with the Golan" are plastered on bumpers and windows nationwide.

Golan settlers have escalated protests against withdrawal. On Thursday night, some burned tires and held a prayer vigil.

But Golan residents, most of whom voted for Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's Labor Party in 1992, are uncomfortable being lumped together with Jewish settlers in the West Bank and Gaza who oppose any land-for-peace deal with the Arabs.

If the Golan settlers were convinced Syria wanted peace, they would leave, said Carol Krugel, a high school English teacher who lives in El Rom, a kibbutz 2 1/2 miles from the border.

Krugel came to the Golan in 1976 from New York state. Like most Golan residents, she says she will leave if the government tells her to, though with a sense of betrayal.

"We were sent as government emissaries," she said. "This was not controversial. We could more easily imagine losing our homes in war than in peace."

Today, uncertainty permeates the lives of Golan residents.

"You think, 'Why should I invest money in putting up cabinets that might not fit in the new place?' It's always in the back of your mind: 'How long are you going to be here?'" said Beth Kuzy, another El Rom resident.

Kuzy's daughter Shani, a dark-eyed 6-year-old with a shiny braid down her back, asks about the impending move all the time, her mother said.

"She wants to know whether she'll be with her friends, and can we come back," Kuzy said. "She asks, 'Why can't we share our house with the Syrians?'"

Just 10 miles from El Rom live the Golan residents with the most interest in returning to Syria — the Druse. They are followers of an offshoot of Islam and live scattered across Syria, Lebanon and Israel.

With the crossings to Syria closed since 1967, many Golan Druse have not seen their relatives in Syria for 28 years.

Each day, Druse armed with megaphones and binoculars make their way down a rocky road to a spot a few hundred yards from the border and call across to tiny figures on the opposite hillside — the closest they get to face-to-face contact.

Bshara Hassan, 33, a Druse who teaches Hebrew in the high school in Majdal Shams, said the village is divided between those who want to be part of Syria again and those who fear the change.

For him, there is no question.

"This is not Israeli land," he said. "The people here, they are Syrian. It's inside our hearts."

Dissident calls for prisoners' freedom on Tiananmen anniversary

BEIJING (NYT) — On the sixth anniversary of the deadly military assault at Tiananmen Square, a leader of the 1989 democracy movement issued an open letter on Sunday demanding the release of political prisoners and the rehabilitation of the former Communist Party chief Zhao Ziyang.

For the dissident, Chen Ziming, it was his first personal statement since being paroled for medical treatment under pressure from President Clinton in May 1994. The letter also punctured a campaign of intimidation that the authorities have waged in recent days to silence the most prolific outpouring of petitions from intellectuals and dissidents since 1989.

The police have arrested more than 20 of the 60 or so intellectuals and dissidents who signed petitions this spring, including Wang Dan, a former student leader, and Liu Xiaobo, a former university lecturer.

In a show of force, thousands of police officers lined the streets of the capital on Sunday, surrounding both Tiananmen Square and the sprawling university district in the northwest of the city.

"They have flooded the grassy areas at Beijing University so no students could gather there today," a 19-year-old physics student said.

The police have shut down restaurants and discos and banned gatherings of any size this weekend. "There will be no chaos," Public Security Minister Tao Siju said.

Inexplicably, the police also sealed off the well-known artist colony at Yuan Ming Yuan, detaining reporters who visited there and telling about 100 artists that they were being permanently evicted.

While the anniversary passed without any visible sign of demonstration in the well-policed streets, this year's petition movement has created the outlines of a substantive political reform agenda that is attracting support among a greater number of Chinese intellectuals.

A Communist Party official said the State Security Ministry had warned that there was a new effort emanating from U.S. intelligence agencies to foment dissent and urged all party organs to be "vigilant" against attempted "infiltrations" and "subversion."

Despite the high level of security, commemorations by students who took part in the confrontation six years ago flooded into China on Sunday by the Internet, fax, and shortwave radio.

While the anniversary passed without any visible sign of demonstration in the well-policed streets, this year's petition movement has created the outlines of a substantive political reform agenda that is attracting support among a greater number of Chinese intellectuals.

The most striking evidence of greater internal pressure for political reform was the May 15 petition of 45 scientists and scholars led by Wang Ganchang, a designer of China's first atomic bomb. For the first time, this petition attracted establishment figures who joined leading dissidents in calling for "the supervision of democracy" and tolerance for "independent public opinion."

For Chen and a group of his colleagues, the approaching death of Deng Xiaoping, the paramount leader, has become the milestone at which intellectuals should once again press for political reforms. They are believed to be preparing a platform of "constructive opposition" based on constitutional law and parliamentary democracy. The Public Security Ministry has interrogated Chen and a number of his associates in seeking to block the presentation of such an agenda after Deng's death.

Chen's four-paragraph letter also called for the release of China's best-known political prisoner, Wei Jingsheng, "who has been illegally detained for over one year," as well as the release of those who have been detained in the last two weeks for taking part in the petitions.

The letter was faxed to foreign news agencies in Beijing by Human Rights in China, a group based in New York, and demanded "the protection of all rights and freedoms of citizens as granted by the Constitution." Chen also announced a 24-hour hunger strike to commemorate the hundreds of people who were killed by the military on June 3 and 4, 1989.

By calling for the "recovery of the personal freedom and other civil rights of Mr. Zhao Ziyang," he has made the bold suggestion that there is a need for alternative voices to President Jiang Zemin in the post-Deng era.

Zhao was stripped of office but retained his party membership after refusing to support the use of military force against the student demonstrations in 1989. He has lived under various forms of house arrest and close control ever since. At least one senior leader, former President Yang Shangkun, has pressed for Zhao's rehabilitation, but Jiang has pointedly refused.

In a brief telephone interview, Chen's wife, Wang Zhihong, confirmed the authenticity of the letter and said he was at home on Sunday, under continued house arrest and guarded by Public Security agents outside his small apartment in western Beijing. Chen, 43, has undergone surgery and radiation therapy for testicular cancer since being released a year ago, and Ms. Wang said his health was "not bad."

S. Africans have voice in country's new constitution

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Politicians scribbled notes Sunday as South African women called for abortion rights, affirmative action and equal pay for equal work.

The hearing, punctuated by warm applause for each speaker, was part of an effort to bring ordinary people into an extraordinary process: remaking South Africa with a new constitution.

Lawmakers have been spending their weekends in conference rooms and auditoriums across the country in recent months, collecting proposals for a permanent charter to replace the interim constitution that led to the country's first all-race election last year.

"Being able to write one's own constitution is a privilege not many people in the world have ever had. In spite of our history of oppression and conflict, we will enjoy that privilege," Cyril Ramaphosa, chairman of the Constitutional Assembly, said as he began the public hearings early in the year.

Newspaper and television ads also have encouraged South Africans to submit written proposals, resulting in a flood of letters and faxes.

The women who attended Sunday's hearing were eager to have their say. But, as they sat through rambling, often repetitive presentations, some wondered whether their words would have an effect.

Pinkie Mbowane, who spoke on behalf of the powerful Congress of South African Trade Unions, said she also had represented the trade union federation at a constitutional hearing on labor issues. At the labor meeting, she said, a few strong voices clearly summed up a range of ideas.

"Those submissions, they are going to be considered," Mbowane said. "But here, most of our submissions are going to be left out because we are too scattered. It looks like we are brainstorming."

Bombing, terror alters Americans' tomorrow

When the bodies of the last three victims of the Oklahoma City federal building bombing were recovered by workers last week, it was a grim final note to the most horrific incident in this nation in recent years.

Yes, the families of the victims have now been able to put the remains of their loved ones to rest, and with that solemn step behind them, begin the long road of recovery from the nightmare that began April 19.

Yet in another way, this nation will never recover from the effects of that insane act. Its evil altered how the people of this nation perceive terrorism — particularly since the man implicated in the bombing, Timothy McVeigh, is an American. Now Americans realize that the greatest danger they face may not come from terrorists in other lands, but from those who live among us.

And the repercussions of the bombing are already changing the American landscape. You can no longer drive past the White House on Pennsylvania Avenue and you may be subject to more stringent security checks when inside federal buildings.

So the lives lost in the bombing itself were not the only casualties of that incident, although they were one of the most precious losses.

America is changing; that's a fact we all must recognize. The America our children will live in tomorrow and call home will not be the same one we knew. Our real task as Americans is to keep the freedoms and safety that we have enjoyed as intact for them as possible.

Sexual harassment charges merit serious Pentagon action

There was time when no one ever heard of sexual harassment in the military. Women knew that the best way to ruin a military career was to tell all. Then came Desert Storm (the 1991 Persian Gulf War) and Tailhook (a 1991 Naval pilots' convention in Las Vegas). And even though women complainants were not always vindicated, at least they were heard — loud and clear.

Now researchers are getting into the act. One survey indicates a marked increase of sexual harassment of female personnel. A 1993 report from the Minneapolis VA Medical Center and the University of Minnesota School of Medicine says nine of 10 female vets under 50 report some sort of harassment — from on-the-job advances to actual assaults.

The Pentagon, on the other hand, says its statistics show something very different. But its assumptions are based on a 1988 survey that showed only a 5 percent harassment rate in the four services and the Coast Guard (the latter having a high 67 percent harassment rate).

It's time to find the truth. If women are being sexually threatened and molested, as the Minnesota groups report, then whatever steps the military has taken in recent years have not been very effective. If they're not being harassed, as the Pentagon maintains, then the U.S. armed forces are getting a bad rap.

We suspect the truth lies somewhere in between. If so, the Pentagon still needs to take corrective action.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, June 5, the 156th day of 1995. There are 209 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 5, 1968, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy was shot and mortally wounded just after claiming victory in California's Democratic presidential primary. Gunman Sirhan Bishara Sirhan was immediately arrested.

On this date:

In 1723, economist Adam Smith was born in Kirkcaldy, Scotland.

In 1783, Joseph and Jacques Montgolfier publicly demonstrated their hot-air balloon in a 10-minute flight over Annonay, France.

In 1794, Congress passed the Neutrality Act, which prohibited Americans from enlisting in the service of a foreign power.

In 1883, economist John Maynard Keynes was born in Cambridge, England.

In 1884, Civil War hero Gen. William T. Sherman refused the Republican presidential nomination, saying, "I will not accept if nominated and will not serve if elected."

In 1888, the Democratic National Convention in St. Louis nominated President Cleveland for a second term. (He lost to Benjamin Harrison, but was elected president again in 1892.)

In 1917, about 10 million American men began registering for the draft in World War I.

In 1947, Secretary of State George C. Marshall gave a speech at Harvard University in which he outlined an aid program for Europe that came to be known as "The Marshall Plan."

In 1967, war erupted in the Middle East as Israel, convinced an Arab attack was imminent, raided Egyptian military targets. Syria, Jordan and Iraq entered the conflict.

Cheats take easy advantage of DOE program

WASHINGTON — Two words appear to have been left out of the Department of Energy's "small disadvantaged business" program: Common sense. A review of the program provides an embarrassing reminder of why the Clinton administration's review of affirmative action is long overdue.

Anderson

While this program was launched with the best intentions, it has evolved into a system where cheating not only goes unpunished — it can often bring multimillion-dollar windfalls from the federal government.

The "small disadvantaged business" program was designed to give minority-owned firms a leg up in winning subcontracting work from the government. As a result, large private firms like Westinghouse, Boeing and Martin Marietta, which operate entire DOE facilities, are required to set aside a certain part of their subcontracting work for minority-owned firms. Unfortunately, neither the DOE nor the contracting firms were required to check if the subcontractors really were as disadvantaged as they claimed.

Take for example the case of 12 small companies that applied for the program a few years ago claiming to be owned by Native Americans, and therefore socially disadvantaged. Without verifying if these firms were minority owned, the primary contracting companies awarded them a combined $14.5 million in subcontracts.

When DOE auditors began snooping around after the fact, the subcontractors were unable to provide any "documented proof" of their ancestry. Instead, the owners said they relied "mainly on what they had been told by relatives or information recorded in a family bible."

Sadly, this was not an isolated incident. By failing to police its own policies, the DOE has created a system where subcontractors who apply are essentially on the honor system when it comes to reporting their minority status. According to the audit, the DOE's "management and operating contractors awarded $26.3 million — or 20 percent of the money reviewed in a random audit — to 33 subcontractors whose eligibility was questionable because they were not owned and managed by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals." The majority of these false self-certifications were made by "subcontractors who claimed to be socially disadvantaged" but were not.

One business owner who pleaded hardship was found to have a net worth in excess of $750,000. Four subcontractors who claimed to be "small disadvantaged businesses" actually had annual sales ranging from $46 million to $76 million, even though the program is designed for companies with annual sales of less than $4.5 million.

In this program, however, it may not pay to be honest. Before the report came out, DOE not only failed to check up on its subcontractors, it also failed to penalize those who broke the rules. DOE officials now say that violators will be punished, yet there are no plans to aggressively beef up compliance enforcement.

Jewish males have corner on depression

A recent medical study has shown what many fans of Woody Allen movies have long taken for granted: Jewish men tend to be more depressed than the rest of us. The question is why.

The researchers at Brown University say it might be because Jewish men are less inclined toward the use of booze. Thus, they don't drown their depression and replace it with a hangover.

Royko

But there are other theories. We put the question of Jewish male depression to three Jewish men and three Jewish women. Here's what they said:

Evelyn, 50: "One theory I have is their expectations of being taken care of are high because of the Jewish Mother Syndrome.

"They expect to be pampered. Their mothers have treated men in a princely fashion. They're cushioned from life. And if they wind up marrying Jewish women, they continue getting this treatment.

"But then come the children or the wife finds a career. So he's left out. The man is depressed because he feels this is not the woman he married. Meanwhile, he hasn't learned to take care of himself, and that is depressing. He has lost his mother-wife."

Jeff, 23: "Everybody gets depressed, but other guys have ways to combat it. Alcohol is not a viable alternative because we have weak stomachs. It's been proven scientifically.

"But you want to know why we're depressed? Jewish women. They are demanding. Clearly they're smarter than us, they're more together, they know what they want, and it is YOU.

"Do you know what it's like to have a smart, ambitious Jewish woman coming at you? Give me a repressed Catholic girl any time.

"You also don't appreciate the incredible pressures one is under as a man to provide the lifestyle for your princess. Even though chances are that she has a cooler job than you do.

"And another thing, you'd be depressed, too, if you had to spend the eighth day of your life at a party thrown specifically for the purpose of hacking off ... you know what. Now that is depressing."

Sarah, 57: "What is it about me that would depress a Jewish man? It's not me, honey, it's his mother. Whatever's wrong with them, blame it on the mother. Everybody does.

"These guys have to live up to their mother's wildly high expectations. I know because I have a son. Of course, he's perfect, mind you, but he knows every success comes from my encouragement. In business, in life, Jewish men are always under a lot of pressure. Everyone expects them to succeed. Socially, sexually, they're under a lot of pressure. Who wouldn't be depressed?"

Tom, 39: "Depression? We learn it early. It's taught right in the home. When did I first become depressed? Before my bar mitzvah, before Hebrew school. When I was potty-trained — that's when I learned I was depressed. My reaction to my Jewish mother? I married a (ital) shiksa (end ital), that's what.

"I can't tell you why Jewish men are sad because I avoid most of my Jewish male friends. They're so depressing to be around."

Fran, 30: "I don't think of it as depression. It's a poet's tortured soul. These guys are deep, they care, they're sensitive.

"I won't speak for all Jewish women, but we tend to be very critical, even a bit controlling. We give out a lot of mixed messages. We want independence, but they had better make enough money so we can stay home with the kids. We love their kindness, but we talk about how sexy cold-hearted men are.

"Then there is the whole Woody Allen thing. That's the guy everyone looks at and says: 'Oh, that's what Jewish guys are like.' What about Paul Newman or Hank Greenberg or Sid Luckman? Nobody ever brings them up, and that's got to be depressing."

Jack, 47: "Oh, no. Don't write about this. Don't tell the (ital) goyim (end ital) about this. They'll use it against us, and that's more depression.

"I've always resented being happy or the pressure to be happy. I like a dark, cloudy day. Dostoevski didn't write musicals, did he?

"My first memory of being depressed? I was about 8 days old and we had a party. There was some drinking. We had a big platter of corned beef and potato salad.

"And out of nowhere this guy comes at me with a knife. I remember thinking: 'What'd I do?'"

Then there is the theory I have developed as an outside observer.

It's the Jewish soul food served in the typical deli. The chicken soup, potato pancakes and pastrami sandwiches are delicious but greasy. The pickles and lox have too much salt.

You can't go through life suffering from heartburn and thinking about a future triple bypass and not be depressed.

That's where WASPs have an edge. You don't get heartburn from skim milk and oatmeal.

Real life happens outside of Washington, D.C.

It will be a long summer. Congress will busy itself picking at the knots it created with reams of previously passed bad legislation. Skirmishers from various political camps will be sniping at each other, in preparation for the war of '96. News folks, restless as ants, will be looking under every rock for a scandal or a quarrel, half-hoping for some new disaster to rescue the ratings and give temporary relief to their own ennui.

Reese

At the same time, the planet will continue in its orbit, the sun will rise and set, the moon will wax and wane, the tides will rise and fall and 260 million Americans will continue their pursuit of happiness.

Down here on the 29th parallel, I personally plan to put a dent in my reading list, do a little fishing perhaps and contemplate the leaves of a Chinese tallow tree that happens to hang over the hammock my ex-wife gave me for Christmas.

As always the dear ex had ulterior motives: She hoped I would smoke outside instead of in and spend more time with the killer dog, Wags, which she insisted was lonesome. Wags is not lonesome, but she is eccentric, if not crazy. Sometimes she likes my company, and sometimes she doesn't -- not unlike a human or two I could mention.

And now for the point. The world is not the world you see on television and in the newspapers. That is only a sliver. The main business of the United States take places daily in thousands of communities and on farms in the 50 states and territories -- not in Washington.

The destiny of the country is not decided in Washington. The most important people in the country are not in Washington. The wealth of the country is not created in Washington. The best minds are not in Washington.

And though the news media seem inordinately fascinated by government and the entertainment industry, neither is important enough to warrant the attention they both get. Both cost a lot of money and give very little return on the investment. Both deal in fantasy. Both are full of bounders and hypocrites. Both are money driven.

The rainfall in the Midwest, the level of the aquifers on the high plains, the state of the fishing grounds off New England, the fruit or lack thereof of research in hundreds of laboratories are all more important to America's welfare than the current movie blockbuster or the latest speech from some office-clinger.

What happens in a classroom is more important than what happens at the Department of Education. What is said or not said around the family table, in the church, mosque or synagogue and in the business offices, are all more important than what is said in Congress.

Government is extraneous to the main currents of the life of the country. It can facilitate or it can hinder the flow of life -- and most often it does both -- but nevertheless, it is not the life of the country.

The people support the government, not the other way around. It was not, for example, the government which won World War II. It was the 12 million people in uniform and the millions of others whose brains and sweat gave them the means with which to fight. It is not the government's money that's being wasted -- it's ours, taxed and borrowed.

We, as individuals, need to find that midpoint between indifference and frenzy. We have a part to play, a duty to perform, an obligation to fulfill, but in the end we too shall pass away as will all the issues which concern us.

It is unseemly, therefore, for people to act as if the fate of the universe rests on their performance. It does not. But thinking it does can make a person a fanatic. There are already too many of those. They are as bad as rabid dogs.

If you don't care for books or don't have a Chinese tallow tree, by all means find your own ways to calm down and cool off. Enjoy life as best you can.

The sun will provide all the heat we need from now until October. We certainly need not add to our discomfort by letting the hot air of Washington blow into our homes every day. Take a holiday from politics.

■ Lightning kills 17 during soccer match

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — Lightning struck a crowd of soccer fans seeking shelter from a downpour, killing at least 17 people and injuring 35 others, authorities said Sunday.

The fans were huddled under a shelter beside a soccer field in the northeast town of Puerto Lempira when the bolt struck them Saturday.

Eleven people, including two children, were killed immediately, Red Cross officials said. Another six died later at a local clinic.

Puerto Lempira, about 185 miles northeast of Tegucigalpa, is an Atlantic coast fishing town with few basic services. The only access is by boat or plane.

■ Burundi resident reports gunfire in capital

NAIROBI, Kenya — Sporadic gunfire was reported Sunday in a suburb of Burundi's capital, Bujumbura, on the fifth day of a standoff between the army and Hutus militants.

A resident of the predominantly Hutu northern neighborhood of Kamenge, speaking on condition of anonymity by telephone, said there were intensive exchanges of gunfire and explosions overnight but only occasional shots during the day.

The government said one soldier and two civilians have been killed since units of the Tutsi-dominated military and Hutu militants started fighting Wednesday.

Armored vehicles still blocked most streets leading out of Kamenge, and soldiers were preventing people from leaving or entering the neighborhood, the resident said.

Officials say the extremists are resisting government attempts to disarm them. The government began trying to disarm militants after the October 1993 slaying of the country's Hutu leader, President Melchior Ndadaye, in a failed military coup.

An estimated 100,000 people have been killed in ethnic violence between the majority Hutus and the Tutsi minority since Ndadaye's death and fears persist of a genocide like the one in which 500,000 people were slain in neighboring Rwanda last year.

■ Red Cross ship sinks off northern Sri Lanka

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — A ship chartered by the international Red Cross exploded and sank off northern Sri Lanka on Sunday and the military said it may have hit a floating mine planted by Tamil rebels.

The navy rescued a Red Cross worker, a U.N. official and nine Indonesian crew. It was searching for one missing sailor.

The ship exploded just outside the military port of Kankesanthurai on Jaffna Peninsula, 195 miles north of Colombo, said military spokesman Brig. Sarath Munasinghe.

"The 'Sea Dancer' is believed to have been blown up by a floating mine planted by Tamil rebels, which could have been intended for naval vessels," Munasinghe said.

The ship, which can carry 100 tons of cargo, was in Kankesanthurai for a routine security inspection. It was empty, having unloaded medical supplies in the rebel-held port of Point Pedro.

■ Haiti's new civilian police force graduates

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — The nucleus of Haiti's new internationally trained police force graduated Sunday, bringing new hope to a country subjugated by decades of dictatorship and rule by force.

"We are on the road to a state of law, which cannot be built without a police force, to a new land, which cannot be reached without respect for human rights," President Jean-Bertrand Aristide said before a swearing-in ceremony at the National Palace Hall.

U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher's presence underscored the deep involvement of the United States in the rehabilitation of Haitian institutions.

"This ceremony is concrete proof of the dramatic progress in overcoming the bitter legacy of the past," Christopher said.

Christopher said Aristide wanted training accelerated so 6,000 cadets could be in the field by the time the U.N. military mission pulls out in February 1996, after Aristide's successor is inaugurated.

President Clinton suggested in April raising the number of permanent police force members from 4,000 to 7,000 and conducting some training in the United States. U.N. military officials said the Haitian government had agreed in principle.

Aristide, once a strong critic of U.S. manipulation of Haitian politics, has publicly had nothing but praise since U.S. intervention returned him to his homeland and his office in October.

Small audience attends beatification ceremony

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Trying to invigorate an increasingly indifferent flock, Pope John Paul II honored a Belgian missionary folk hero Sunday before a less-than-full house.

Thirty thousand places had been set aside outside Koelkelberg Basilica for the beatification of Damien De Vuester, a 19th century priest who died caring for Hawaiian lepers.

About two-thirds turned out. Ten years ago, when the pope first came to this predominantly Roman Catholic country, Mass outside the same church drew 100,000.

"Dear brothers and sisters of Belgium: It's your turn to take up the flame of Father Damien," the pope said.

The missionary contracted leprosy, becoming disfigured like many of the disease's sufferers in an age before it could be cured. He died in 1889 at age 49 on the island of Molokai — then a leper colony and now a pricey Hawaiian retreat.

Newspaper surveys on the eve of the pope's visit found Belgians alienated by John Paul's refusal to lift Vatican bans on premarital sex, contraceptive use and female or married priests.

Sunday Mass attendance in Belgium has been steadily dropping over the past few decades, to 17.9 percent of the country's Roman Catholics in 1990, the last year for which the statistic is available.

With the demise of East Bloc communism, which John Paul set out to battle when he became pope in 1978, he has shifted his attention to another foe — Western moral "relativism," especially in the sexual sphere, where many faithful choose to follow only the tenets of Catholicism that suit them.

The pope said the faithful should work for the glory of God "despite our sins and our sometimes rebellious temperament."

VTM private television said police stopped protesters from handing out condoms near the basilica grounds. The protesters were carrying leaflets saying, "AIDS sufferers are the lepers of this age."

The protesters were far from the raised altar, where downpours later in the day drenched those in attendance. There was no indication the pope was aware of the detentions.

It was unclear, too, whether the lack of a full house affected the pope.

"The enthusiasm (for the pope) has certainly waned," said Martine De Pesseneer, who came 35 miles from Ghent for the Mass. "He has said things that hit us hard, even for the faithful. I'm here for Damien."

John Paul was determined to come for Damien's beatification, a ceremony that marks the last formal degree before possible sainthood.

Last year, he had to cancel his trip to Belgium after he broke his leg in a fall at the Vatican.

Among those attending was a delegation from Hawaii, including Honolulu Bishop Francis DiLorenzo and about 250 islanders.

"It's important for us that someone who did so much for the Hawaiians is given honor," said Brother Franklin Pao of the Roman Catholic Marianist Society of Honolulu, waving a traditionally knotted tea leaf.

The pope blessed a special wooden chest with a relic of Damien, a piece of his right hand, which will be taken to Hawaii, said a Hawaiian priest, the Rev. Joseph Bukoski.

"Just to bring a little bit of him back is important," said Coline Ferranti, head of a group of traditional dancers. The islanders have always been unhappy his body was taken to Belgium. "In our culture, the physical body is only one portion. The great Mana, the power in the spirit, has never left us."

Maestro conducts opera from piano during orchestra strike

ROME (AP) — The management of the La Scala opera house in Milan had just delivered the bad news: An orchestra strike meant no "La Traviata" that night.

As the well-heeled crowd booed with rage and the leading soprano wept backstage, conductor Riccardo Muti stepped forward to save the day.

The maestro announced he would play the score himself at the piano.

With Muti conducting from the keyboard, soprano Tiziana Fabbricini and the other singers performed the arias and ensemble pieces of the Verdi masterpiece. The audience's shouts of "Buffoons" and "Shame," directed at the striking musicians, turned to wild ovations.

It was an unprecedented event at Italy's temple of opera, and perhaps anywhere in the country. The story became front-page news and another occasion for Italians to remind themselves of the decline of the musical art in the country that invented it.

In Italian newspaper interviews, Muti took pains to say he was no hero and to disassociate himself from the labor dispute at La Scala, where he is music director.

"It was an evening to ascribe to the saddest pages of Italian musical life," the Rome newspaper La Repubblica quoted him Sunday as saying.

He condemned the state of music in Italy: little music education in schools, entire regions without orchestras, state-run orchestras and choruses dissolved, inattention by the national government.

Muti, who said he had never before conducted from the piano, said he went ahead with Friday night's performance out of duty to art and the audience.

"I felt that the evening could not finish like that, with the shouts of the audience, the curtain falling into darkness and silence," he said.

Labor disputes, political influence, underfunding and turmoil are as much fixtures in Italian opera houses as temperamental tenors. Few top-flight foreign conductors direct in Italy and big-name singers, who must be signed years in advance, do not come because of the uncertainties.

Just last month, a strike threat at the Rome opera forced the cancellation of a ballet and the transfer of a Muti-directed La Scala performance of Verdi's "Requiem" to another hall.

Rome's mayor, Francesco Rutelli, stood up to the unions by canceling the summer season. He reinstated it a week later after extracting a promise of labor peace.

The La Scala musicians say that despite eternal promises of better treatment, many still make less than taxi drivers or plumbers while working longer hours than most other first-rate pit orchestras.

They also insist that the theater manager, Carlo Fontana, knew two days ahead of time of their strike without warning the public.

Ceremony honors Polish officers massacred in WWII by Russians

KATYN FOREST, Russia (AP) — A somber trumpet echoed through Katyn forest Sunday as Polish President Lech Walesa and weeping mourners honored thousands of officers massacred in secret by the Soviets in World War II.

"We want to promise all victims that, in the name of human solidarity, we will remember them," Walesa said at the solemn memorial service by a flower-covered mass grave.

Soviet dictator Josef Stalin's secret police shot 4,400 Polish officers in 1940 and dumped them into common graves in the woods of western Russia near Smolensk and present-day Belarus.

The officers were shot in the back of the head and their bodies buried in large pits.

Another 10,600 officers, the cream of Poland's intelligentsia, were shot to death in April and May of 1940 and buried elsewhere in the former Soviet republic.

The Polish president laid a metal plaque paying tribute to those killed in the forest, praising them as sons of Poland. The slab, decorated with a simple cross, will be part of a major new memorial erected by Poland.

Walesa said telling the truth about the Soviet massacre of Polish officers in this forest was a step toward reconciling Russia and Poland.

The officers were captured by the Soviet Union when it invaded eastern Poland in 1939, shortly after Hitler sent his soldiers across Poland's western border to start the war.

The Nazis, who invaded the Soviet Union in 1941, discovered the bodies in April 1943.

Moscow did not officially admit the massacre until 1990. During the postwar decades of Soviet-imposed Communist rule in Poland, the Kremlin insisted the Nazis were to blame, despite overwhelming evidence to the contrary.

Walesa denounced the Stalinist system that carried out, then covered up the massacre.

"They were supposed to die and to leave behind only the dark silence," he said of the fallen officers. Instead, "the systems pass away. But the truth stays, the truth prevails."

Russian President Boris Yeltsin, who declined to attend the memorial, sent a message to Walesa saying the truth would lead to better relations between Warsaw and Moscow. Yeltsin said he did not attend because some Polish groups might make unreasonable demands for compensation or apologies.

"It is necessary to turn this tragic page of our joint history," Yeltsin said.

He also noted that Stalin's henchmen had buried more than 10,000 other victims of various nationalities in the forest.

"We consider this forest a memorial for the victims of totalitarianism, (a place) where a monument to all the innocent victims should be created," he said.

Federal rangers are caught in crossfire triggered by bombing

By Richard Keil
Associated Press

'My guys use extraordinary judgment and discretion. We have had no complaints of firearms abuse in the last 11 years.'
— Walter Johnson, a Bureau of Land Management supervisor in Boise, Idaho

WASHINGTON — They're armed, and their critics say they're intimidating to ordinary citizens. But the 7,500 federal rangers who carry guns have fired them just 19 times since 1991, government records show.

In an increasingly volatile environment, the rangers who patrol America's 650 million acres of government-owned forests, parklands and ranges have discharged their weapons an average of five times a year.

In most cases, the rangers fired in self-defense after confronting criminal suspects on public lands, according to Interior Department and Forest Service records reviewed by The Associated Press.

In the aftermath of the Oklahoma City bombing, federal rangers have been caught in the political crossfire over excessive federal powers. Their critics say they should be disarmed.

"The fact is, when an agent of the Forest Service or Fish and Wildlife Service or the Bureau of Land Management is wearing a sidearm, it makes a statement to people that they expect confrontation," Rep. Helen Chenoweth, R-Idaho, said in an interview last week. "That is not a way for reasonable people to reason together."

She's not alone in her criticism.

Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, proposed disarming many rangers, while Rep. Don Young, R-Alaska, called for stripping the BLM of its law enforcement budget.

Chenoweth has drafted a bill that would require federal agents to coordinate their activities with local law enforcement.

She said she believes Forest Service rangers were never authorized to carry guns, and that when they discover marijuana plantations or drug manufacturing labs on federal property, "they are obligated to contact the proper law enforcement authorities — just like any other citizen."

Actually, Forest Service rangers were authorized to carry guns — and make arrests — in a 1986 anti-drug law. Before then, a limited number had carried weapons since the agency was given the power to protect the nation's forests in 1897.

Citing a growing number of crimes on public land, rangers are taking the offensive.

"I would ask the question: Would you care to patrol an area almost the size of Rhode Island, by yourself, in often-hostile situations or where you were faced with some life-threatening circumstances, without a gun?" said Walter Johnson, a Bureau of Land Management supervisor in Boise, Idaho.

"My guys use extraordinary judgment and discretion. We have had no complaints of firearms abuse in the last 11 years," he said.

Armed rangers now work for several agencies responsible for managing and protecting America's public lands, from the National Park Service to the Fish and Wildlife Service.

Among the 19 weapons incidents detailed in the reports reviewed by AP:

■ In February 1994, a Fish and Wildlife Service employee arrived at a San Francisco-area bank during a robbery. The employee wounded the fleeing robber, who was arrested.

■ BLM rangers, on an auto-theft stakeout in a New Mexico recreation area last August, witnessed a car break-in and robbery. The suspects tried to run over a shotgun-wielding ranger who ordered them to stop. The ranger shot out a tire, and the suspects were apprehended.

■ A Bureau of Indian Affairs officer, responding to a domestic disturbance at an Arizona reservation, shot and killed a man who charged at him with a knife.

Rangers were reprimanded in two cases, both for firing warning shots to scare poachers. No one was injured in either case, but agency policy discourages the firing of warning shots.

The BIA continues to investigate a third incident, in which a suspect in custody was shot by an officer during a struggle.

The 19 times that federal rangers have used their guns in the last four years pales in comparison to gun use by city police departments.

For example, the city of Miami and the police force in surrounding Dade County had a combined total of 3,840 officers in 1994 — or about half the number of federal rangers who carry guns. In 1994 alone, those officers discharged their weapons 51 times — 10 times as often as rangers.

In the meantime, patrolling the nation's parklands has become more dangerous.

The Interior Department reports there were 422,173 criminal cases on federal parkland in 1994, from public drunkenness to robbery and assault. That's an 83 percent increase over 1990's figures.

Last year, 20 Park Service employees were assaulted, and 36 of them were injured by guns, knives or other weapons, the agency said.

Nonetheless, the rangers say, the sentiment that rangers have too much power and should be disarmed continues to grow.

"The local residents, I hate to say this, but a lot of them are infected with this rhetoric — that they're being overwhelmed by the federal bureaucracy," said Ted Angle, a BLM manager in Tonopah, Nev.

Residents flee flood-prone, coastal areas of Florida

MIAMI (AP) — Residents in a flood-prone area of the Florida Panhandle fled their homes Sunday night as Hurricane Allison moved toward the state with torrential rain and winds of at least 75 mph.

The first hurricane of the 1995 season was expected to move ashore from the Gulf of Mexico sometime between 3 a.m. and 7 a.m. today, forecasters said.

About 5,000 people were evacuated from coastal regions in the flood-prone Big Bend area, said Carl Petteway, emergency management coordinator in Franklin County. Roads away from the coast had heavy traffic; many vehicles towed boats.

Residents were told to evacuate coastline areas in Franklin, Liberty, Wakulla, Taylor and Jefferson counties, which were expected to get the brunt of the hurricane. However, they were not forced to leave.

"The best our fire department can do is to ask them to wear a body tag so we can identify their body when it's all over," said Morris Smith, emergency management director for Jefferson County, referring to people who refuse to leave.

With Allison forming only four days into the Atlantic hurricane season, state officials were concerned that people may not be properly prepared.

Gov. Lawton Chiles urged residents to get hurricane supplies in case of power outages and other disruptions. He declared a state of emergency for the state's northwest and central Gulf Coast regions.

At 8 p.m. Sunday, Allison's center was at 27.6 north latitude and 86.2 west longitude, about 160 miles south-southwest of Apalachicola, a Franklin County town about 50 miles southwest of Tallahassee in the Panhandle.

Allison grew into the season's first hurricane Sunday as it blew across the Gulf of Mexico with heavy rain and headed for Florida.

Hurricane warnings were posted from Anclote Key, 18 miles north of Clearwater, to Pensacola.

Tides could reach as high as 10 feet and up to 10 inches of rain could fall, said Ed Rappaport, a forecaster with the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

State officials also considered evacuating Panama City Beach, a popular Bay County vacation spot. David Miller, Bay County's public safety director, estimated 50,000 people were vacationing along the area's sugar-sand beaches.

At Shell Point, 25 miles south of Tallahassee, cars lined up with boat trailers.

"There's a lot of folks pulling their boats out," said George Taff, whose family owns Shell Point Marina. Owners of larger power and sailboats lashed them to docks and stowed away movable objects.

Allison became a tropical storm Saturday off Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula and slid across the western tip of Cuba with heavy rain and wind gusting to 50 mph. No damage was reported in Cuba.

It strengthened to a hurricane Sunday morning when its sustained winds hit 74 mph.

Its maximum sustained wind speed made it a Category 1 storm, a rating that covers speeds up to 95 mph, but that's enough to cause damage, Rappaport said.

"Typically with a Category 1 hurricane, folks in mobile homes are advised to leave. And it can produce a significant storm surge," he said.

Mike Rucker, meteorologist for the state Division of Emergency Management, said the Big Bend area is the worst in the country for storm surges.

The offshore area and coastline are flatter than the rest of the nation's shore areas and water rises rapidly during storms, he explained.

"We are preparing as if this storm could become a Category 2 hurricane" with winds of 96 to 110 mph, Rucker said.

Perry promises intelligence support for allies in Bosnia

This extra support is for a new "rapid reaction force" of as many as 10,000 French, British and Dutch troops. The allies agreed Saturday in Paris to create the force as a way of providing protection for U.N. peacekeepers who have been attacked, harassed and taken hostage in recent weeks by Bosnian Serb forces.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is widening the sweep of its intelligence network in Bosnia and will share the information with commanders of a planned new European combat force there, Defense Secretary William Perry said Sunday.

On his return from Paris, where he pledged more U.S. support — but no troops — to reinforce the U.N. peacekeepers in Bosnia, Perry told reporters one of the most important new U.S. contributions will be an "intelligence coordination cell."

"Our allies saw that as a very significant move," Perry said.

The Pentagon also is offering to support the Europeans by providing attack helicopters, AC-130 gunships, communications and navigation gear and night vision equipment. U.S. crews would man the AC-130 gunships, but the helicopters and other equipment based in Bosnia would not be operated by U.S. personnel.

This extra support is for a new "rapid reaction force" of as many as 10,000 French, British and Dutch troops. The allies agreed Saturday in Paris to create the force as a way of providing protection for U.N. peacekeepers who have been attacked, harassed and taken hostage in recent weeks by Bosnian Serb forces.

U.N. Ambassador Madeleine Albright said Sunday that the administration wants the United Nations to remain in Bosnia. Demands by presidential candidate Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., that the United Nations withdraw and the arms embargo on the Bosnian government be lifted would be a disaster, she said.

"It is an option that actually will lead to Americanizing the war," she said on NBC's "Meet the Press." "A unilateral lifting of the arms embargo is a feel-good option and it does not really look at the feel-bad prospects that come with it" — the need for the United States to supply a large portion of the arms and train the Bosnians.

Dole, appearing later on the same program, denied that the United States would be in danger of supporting a losing cause. "If you provide the equipment and they are properly trained, and they lose, they've given it their best shot," he said. "It's not our problem."

Albright also reasserted the administration's claim that it is highly unlikely, particularly with Britain and France now committing more forces to Bosnia, that an emergency could arise that would force President Clinton to keep his promise to send U.S. troops to the aid of U.N. forces.

The United States, which has the most technically advanced and extensive intelligence-gathering capability in the world, will give allied military commanders an extra advantage in Bosnia, Perry said.

"This is going to be a very, very significant development," he said.

Unmanned U.S. reconnaissance planes will be added to the mix of intelligence-gathering systems already trained on Bosnia, Perry said. He said it was possible that an unmanned spy plane called the Predator might be used there; if so, it would be the first use of the new plane other than in training.

The Predator is an aerial reconnaissance system that can take sharper pictures, stay airborne longer and more easily evade detection than most previous unmanned spy planes. Perry said it has been a high-priority project and eventually will have widespread use in the U.S. military.

Drones — which can take pictures from the sky and transmit images instantly to ground stations for use by field commanders — are especially important in areas where frequent cloud cover limits the usefulness of spy satellites.

Perry said no decisions had been made yet on the specific extra intelligence-gathering systems that would be used for the benefit of the new rapid reaction force. But he said detailed planning had already begun.

In addition to aircraft and other means of intelligence collection, such as satellites and eavesdropping systems, the Pentagon will put together a means of synthesizing the intelligence data and distributing it to the European military commanders, Perry said.

He said the intelligence coordination and distribution system would not necessarily have to be situated in Bosnia since it is largely computer-based.

The total U.S. intelligence package will be modeled after a system set up experimentally during the 1991 Gulf War to get information to allied field commanders, Perry said.

Perry said he will be discussing the U.S. intelligence coordination plan with his allied counterparts at a NATO meeting Thursday in Brussels, Belgium.

■ Woodpecker problem generates advice

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA is getting some unsolicited advice on chasing away woodpeckers that damaged the thick layer of insulation on the shuttle Discovery's external fuel tank.

"From all over the country. It's been kind of interesting," said NASA Test Director Steve Altemus.

One suggestion was to place rubber snakes on the tank. That brought laughter from astronaut Bonnie Dunbar at the Johnson Space Center, trying to picture a rubber snake lying on the curved top of the 154-foot-tall tank.

Other suggestions are to spray the tank with bitter apple or pepper juice, or to use bright lights or ultrasonic blasters.

One trapper offered his services, but the woodpeckers haven't been seen since the holes in the tank's insulation were discovered a week ago, Altemus said.

NASA already is using six plastic owls to scare away the woodpeckers, along with noisy air horns and recordings of owl calls.

The damage forced NASA to postpone Discovery's launch for at least a month.

■ Panel recommends policy change

NEW YORK — A federal advisory panel will recommend reducing legal immigration by a third over the next few years and changing visa priorities to grant preference to spouses and young children of legal aliens, The New York Times reported.

The nine-member commission, headed by former Texas Rep. Barbara Jordan, will emphasize the importance of the nuclear family as the basic unit of immigration, the Times said in today's editions.

Members of the Commission on Immigration Reform told the newspaper that at a closed meeting last month they affirmed the value of legal immigration but also voted to recommend Congress reduce it by one-third of its average over the last three years, which has been 830,000 a year.

"In the aggregate, on balance, immigrants have contributed to strengthening the United States," said Lawrence Fuchs, a professor at Brandeis University and vice chairman of the panel.

But he added, "We have to have limits because of the disproportionate impact of immigration in some places."

■ Professor dies in attempt to climb peak

BAXTER STATE PARK, Maine — A mountain-climbing professor was found dead Sunday a day after he set out on the final climb of his quest to scale New England's 100 highest peaks.

Jeff Rubin, 53, was found face-down in a stream on the slope of 3,861-foot Fort Mountain.

Rubin, badly bruised, apparently fell to his death, said V. Paul Reynolds, spokesman for the state Department of Inland Fisheries and Wildlife.

The psychology professor at Tufts University and a friend had planned to climb North Brother Mountain and then go to nearby Fort Mountain. They reached the 4,143-foot summit of North Brother on Saturday in high wind and heavy rain.

Rubin kept going, his friend turned back.

"Rubin wanted to conquer the Fort. This would have been his 100th peak," Reynolds said.

It was not clear whether Rubin reached the top of Fort Mountain, about 100 miles north of Bangor in Baxter State Park.

Searchers in a helicopter spotted a red slicker hanging from a tree, then found Rubin's body about a mile away.

Reaching New England's 100 highest peaks is not an unusual goal among a fraternity of dedicated climbers, known as "peak baggers," according to the Appalachian Mountain Club.

■ Reeve to undergo spinal surgery

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Surgery for Christopher Reeve should go ahead as planned today because the paralyzed actor appears to be recovering from pneumonia, a hospital spokeswoman said Sunday.

Reeve, 42, is scheduled to undergo spinal fusion surgery on two upper vertebrae fractured when he was thrown from a horse Memorial Day weekend.

After the operation, Reeve should be able to sit up in his bed, his doctor said Friday. Dr. John Jane said that sitting upright should improve Reeve's respiration, which would help prevent any recurrence of pneumonia. The infection is typical in such cases.

Marguerite Beck, a spokeswoman for the University of Virginia Medical Center, said Sunday that the "Superman" star remained in serious but stable condition. She said the surgery will proceed this morning, "but we won't absolutely know if they'll cancel it until then."

The operation has a high success rate but likely could be performed again if doctors are unable to stabilize the spine the first time, Jane said.

Dole threatens demise of anti-terrorism legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Questioning President Clinton's leadership, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole threatened Sunday to shelve anti-terrorism legislation unless Democrats begin cooperating.

"I'm not going to spend two weeks on this bill to satisfy every Democrat who wants to make some political point," Dole said.

His remarks on NBC's "Meet the Press" escalated a bipartisan war of words that threatens to jeopardize a legislative response to the Oklahoma City bombing.

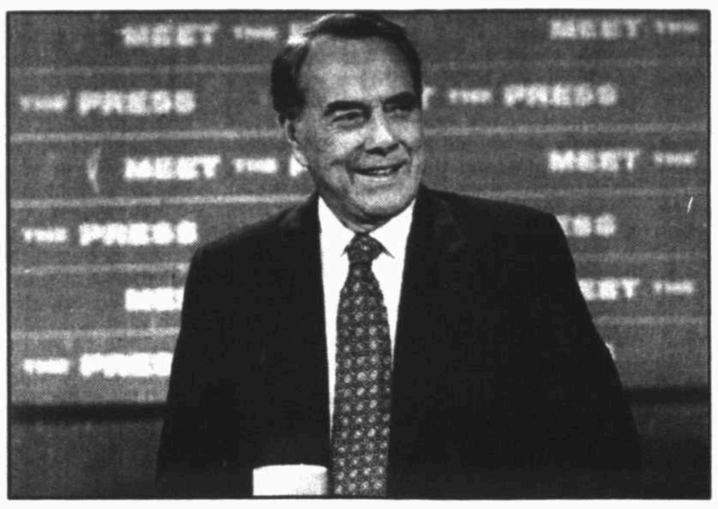

Last week, Clinton accused Republicans of dallying. "There is no further excuse for delay," the president said Wednesday.

The majority leader said Clinton's package, scheduled for Senate debate this week, is bogged down by 67 Democratic amendments.

Dole said he wrote the president last week and urged him to press Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., to work out disagreements with Republicans, paving the way for a vote as early as Tuesday.

"It's time, Mr. President, to step up to the plate and provide some leadership," Dole said.

Trying to lay the blame on Clinton, Dole said, "The president is in a position to be helpful, but so far we've had very little help." Republicans have offered 30 amendments of their own, but Dole said they can be dispatched quickly.

AP Laserphoto

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole smiles prior to appearing on NBC TV's "Meet the Press" in Washington, D.C., Sunday.

Presidential aides said Sunday that the White House will continue to consult with lawmakers when Congress returns this week from its recess. "The president has put his shoulder to the wheel on this issue and Sen. Dole knows it," presidential spokesman Calvin Mitchell said.

Clinton's package has drawn criticism from Republicans and civil libertarians who fear it could erode constitutional protections.

Dole said he didn't want to pass a bill "in the heat of the moment" and discover months later that "we have trampled on constitutional rights."

A major sticking point is a provision to expand wiretap authority. Clinton wants police to be able to move their wiretaps without getting a new court order each time terrorists move to evade surveillance.

The Senate voted 52-28 last month to block a Democratic attempt to expand wiretap authority.

Clinton also wants to be able to involve the military when terrorists are contemplating the use of biological or chemical weapons. Currently, the military can assist criminal investigations only when they involve nuclear weapons.

Critics are wary of giving the military a greater role in domestic law enforcement, warning of potential government abuse of individual rights.

Dole said he does not oppose a Clinton proposal to place traceable materials in chemicals that can be used to make bombs. The National Rifle Association opposes the provision.

"'This bill should take two or three days, but it has become a Christmas tree for everybody with some agenda," Dole complained.

He said Clinton has spoke often about the bill but failed to forge compromises when necessary. "All we've had is public statements from the White House," Dole said.

Insurance companies favor 'drive-through delivery' to cut costs

By Daniel Q. Haney
Associated Press

Remember when having a baby meant a leisurely week in the hospital? Motherhood isn't what it used to be. New moms these days hardly stay long enough to wrinkle the sheets.

What some disparagingly call "drive-through delivery" or the "OB Express" began in the 1970s as a consumer movement to shorten hospital stays. The idea was to make having a baby seem less medical and more natural. But in the last five years, it has evolved into a push by insurers to save money.

Typically these days, HMOs and other managed care plans pay for just one day in the hospital after a routine vaginal birth. Some plans require women to leave within 12 hours. There's even talk of reducing that to six.

Insurers say early discharge substantially cuts the cost of delivery. They claim there is no proof of lasting harm to either mother or child. But many doctors and nurses argue that the trend has drastically changed maternity care without adequate study of its safety.

Women have lost time to catch their breath and get some hands-on training in child care. Nurses have lost the opportunity to make sure babies are thriving during the first two or three days after birth, when they traditionally stayed in the hospital.

When problems occur at home, they usually are not life-threatening, but they can be frightening.

Last week, Melinda McGreal of Macedonia, Ohio, checked out of University Hospitals of Cleveland 28 hours after giving birth to Jonathan, her first child. A day later, Jonathan became dehydrated and ran a fever of 102. It turned out he was not breast feeding properly.

"If I had been in the hospital, I think I would have avoided that or caught it sooner," McGreal said.

Doctors and nurses say such stories are hardly unique.

"We can't mother our patients anymore and help them in this transition in their lives. Now it's all dollars and cents and seeing how fast we can get them out of the hospital," said Dr. Kenneth Moise of Baylor College of Medicine.

Last month, Maryland enacted a law requiring insurers to give mothers at least 48 hours in the hospital after childbirth. A similar bill is before the New Jersey Legislature.

Insurance plans are under pressure, especially from employers, to hold down costs. Maternity care is an obvious target. The 4 million births annually account for about 20 percent of all private insurance claims. A simple vaginal birth in 1993 cost about $6,500.

"The bottom line is that insurers are looking at the medical necessity of stays beyond 24 or 48 hours," said Kylanne Green, executive vice president of the Health Insurance Association of America. "If there is normal pregnancy and delivery of a healthy newborn, you can discharge early and save $700 to $1,000 for an extra day, and you are better off doing that."

She noted that unnecessary time in the hospital exposes mother and child to the risk of hospital-spread infections.

Furthermore, insurance plans often offer some sort of follow-up care. For instance, at Harvard Community Health Plan, New England's biggest HMO, mothers get a two-hour visit from a nurse within three days of discharge.

Instead of a home visit, though, some plans offer only a phone call or a visit to the pediatrician's office.

The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists said the trend is "a large, uncontrolled, uninformed experiment that may potentially affect the health of American women and their babies."

When mother and child stayed in the hospital for a few days, nurses taught them how to bathe, change and breast-feed the child, among other things. Now the mother is often too groggy and sore to pay attention to a child-care lesson, even if there was enough time to teach her.

"What you get now is a videotape on channel 4" on the hospital TV. "Person-to-person teaching is not there anymore," said Laurel Garzon, who teaches nursing at Old Dominion University.

Several nurses said they have seen mothers bring babies back to the hospital dehydrated and malnourished. For example, nurse Wendy Deflorville at University Hospitals said some women — exhausted themselves — don't remember being told to wake their babies to feed.

"They think just because the baby is sleeping, they can, too," she said.

Two or three days after birth, many babies develop jaundice, a buildup of bilirubin, a byproduct of red blood cells. While simple to treat if noticed early, it may cause brain damage if left too long.

For many years, that sort of brain injury was virtually unheard of. Dr. Augusto Sola of the University of California, San Francisco, surveyed 23 U.S. and Latin American hospitals from 1972 to 1991 and found just one case.

From 1992 to 1994, his hospital alone treated five babies with the disorder. Scattered cases like those don't necessarily mean early discharge is the cause, but some experts are worried.

"The fact is that infants are home where they don't get seen," said Dr. Sumner Yaffe of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development. "There is reason for concern. You have to pay attention to the anecdotal stories."

Perot encourages creation of national energy policy in speech to producers

IRVING (AP) — Former presidential candidate Ross Perot told a group of independent oil producers Sunday that a domestic energy industry is crucial to the nation's security.

"We have got to keep ourselves in a very, very good position to defend our country. Fundamental to that is some strong oil and gas reserves — got to have it," he said in a keynote address to the 49th annual convention of the Texas Independent Producers & Royalty Owners Association.

Perot said the industry should form a task force to help create a national energy policy and suggested setting a minimum oil price to encourage domestic exploration.

"We could find out ... what the price would have to be in this country to cause people to go out and prospect for oil and gas aggressively again," he said. "I feel strongly we should have the number at that number and the Arabs would just have to pay a tariff to get their oil in."

Last year, for the first time, more than half the United States' total petroleum consumption came from abroad, while domestic oil production hit a 40-year low. In February, President Clinton accepted a Commerce Department finding that petroleum imports threaten U.S. national security.

Perot devoted little of his speech Sunday to oil, focusing instead on financial problems facing the nation, including the national debt, the Social Security deficit, the trade deficit and the weak dollar, as well as a lack of trust in government.

"If you ever want to understand our country's problems, just follow the money," Perot said.

He also once again blasted the North American Free Trade Agreement and the bailout of the Mexican peso. "NAFTA was completely misrepresented to the American people," Perot said.

Despite the political emphasis, Perot said after the meeting that he has no plans to run for president in 1996 — at least, not unless the two major parties fail to address the issues he discussed.

"No, I'm not thinking about it because the constructive thing to do is have the two parties do it. If they don't do it, then I'd have to think about it," Perot said.

"I'm not interested. I'd rather have brain surgery without anesthetic than do what I'm doing right here and now, OK?" he told reporters.

The Dallas billionaire won 19 percent of the popular vote running for president as an independent in the 1992 election.

Perot also previewed the three-day conference his United We Stand America organization is holding in Dallas this August. House Speaker Newt Gingrich, the Republican presidential candidates and several other congressmen are scheduled to attend. Clinton has been invited, but has not yet accepted, Perot said.

"We want this to be three days of intense issues discussion," he said.

Perot indicated the group isn't likely to decide to form a third party at the meeting.

"Our goal is to get the two parties to do the job. It takes a while to build a third party. We don't have time," he said.

Authorities make arrest in 1984 illegal immigration case

HARLINGEN (AP) — Inez Sanchez remembers each gunshot of a 1984 shootout that left him wounded in remote brush country during his second week as an agent for the U.S. Border Patrol.

Bleeding from his left hand, Sanchez watched the suspect run away. For 11 years, the gunman has remained at large.

Now, federal agents say they've cracked the case through sheer patience, the long memory of computers and a little luck.

Flashback to Aug. 13, 1984, about 12 miles north of the patrol's Sarita checkpoint on U.S. 77. Sanchez was on lookout for two vehicles believed to be transporting undocumented immigrants.

Sanchez, 38, a senior patrol agent in Kingsville, gave this account to The Associated Press:

Sanchez and his training officer stopped a man allegedly carrying three illegal immigrants in a pickup.

The training officer handcuffed the driver's left hand to the steering column of the pickup, telling Sanchez to stand guard while he chased other illegal immigrants occupying the second car.

The pickup driver told his passengers to flee when Sanchez tried to take the keys from the ignition. Before the two front-seat passengers could escape, Sanchez leaped in the passenger's door. The driver accelerated.

Sanchez and the driver struggled for the keys as the car moved into the highway median and stopped.

"I was ready to cuff his right hand when he just jerked his hand out and started reaching under the seat," Sanchez said. "And then there was a flash and a bang."

The driver fired two other shots from the 9mm semiautomatic handgun that had been under his seat before Sanchez could escape the truck. From outside, Sanchez saw the driver fire six times at the handcuffs before finally freeing himself.

The driver got out and fired five more shots at Sanchez, all missing. Sanchez, who didn't immediately feel the wound to his left hand, missed with his six shots.

"I was lucky and he was lucky," the agent said.

In the abandoned truck, agents found legal U.S. residency papers for Roberto Sanchez Garcia, no relation to the agent. The patrol station in Kingsville pulled the INS file on Sanchez Garcia — and waited.

"We have had this file in our records for that long, anticipating that someday somebody would need it," said David Peter, assistant agent in charge of the Kingsville station.

Several leads into the man's whereabouts turned up empty, Agent Sanchez said.

Flash forward to May 5, 1995.

The INS office in Harlingen received a letter from a 37-year-old greenhouse worker named Roberto Sanchez Garcia, who asked for copies of all documents in his INS file. The letter gave a return address in Naranja, Fla.

An INS worker checked computer records and found that the file had been transferred to Kingsville.

After matching records, agents become confident they had the right person, Peter said. The FBI arrested Sanchez Garcia on May 26 at a nursery in Homestead, Fla., on a charge of attempted murder of a federal officer.

"It was like: 'Here's all the information that you asked for. Oh, and by the way, you are under arrest,'" Peter said.

Sanchez Garcia's attorney, Chris Mancini of Miami, said it was too early to discuss how his client will answer the charge. However, he called it "weird" that the Border Patrol — a division of the INS — would consider his client elusive.

"There's nothing at all suggesting that he was hiding his identity. He was living under his own name," Mancini said.

Sanchez Garcia has resident alien papers, a Florida driver's license, an INS work permit and a Social Security number all in his own name, Mancini said.

"It's simply a matter of querying their own records," Mancini said of the INS.

"Can anyone tell me what the book was about that we read on Tuesday?" said teacher Lucille Vaughan.

"Then what happened?" Ms. Vaughan asked.

"They didn't have enough cakes," said youngster Pete Cowan.

"So, they called the cake maker to make 200 cakes and they called the pizza maker to make 200 pizzas," piped up Olivia.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram
Lucille Vaughan shows children the book she's reading as part of Project Bluebirds at Crockett Elementary School.

Soon other youngsters, all sporting bright blue laminated name tags, filed in the door of the Crockett Elementary School library to join in the discussion about the book. And moments later, they were off on a storytelling frenzy, young authors writing their own books about personal past birthdays.

About 20 elementary school pupils — ranging in age from those who have just completed kindergarten to those who had just completed the fifth grade — were participants in Project Bluebirds at Crockett.

"Bluebirds" resulted from an effort to give fledgling young readers and writers their literary wings, as well as to keep them reading through the summer. Another benefit of the program is that it serves the needs of the community by offering access to a neighborhood library.

The project took flight last week for the fourth summer in a row. It will be offered over two summer sessions in eight elementary school libraries across Midland Independent School District.

Thank You Notes ...

My wife and I just returned to our home after spending a week in Midland visiting my cousins, Bill Moler, Lois Carter and Francis Atwater.

We were also there to visit my Aunt Loleta Guffey, who has lived in Midland since 1934.

While in Midland we stayed at the Lexington Hotel Suites, used a rental car and attended two different Lions Club meetings.

I want to state that our visit to Midland was not only special because of the persons we were able to visit but also because of the hospitality extended to us by everyone that we met. We enjoyed the visit so much that we even looked at a home in Green Tree with realtor Karen Foster. Midland competes favorably with other places that we have looked at for the possibility of permanent relocation.

We thank all of those who made our visit to Midland so enjoyable.

Perception: The big and small of it all

So here's the story: The family was sitting around the house enjoying a nice, peaceful, rainy Memorial Day. Someone suddenly pipes in and says, "Ya know, this being Memorial Day, we need to have us one of those All-American dinners. Brisket, potato salad, baked beans, rolls and some chocolate pie."

Patterson

As luck would have it, we had most all the makings for the patriotic — yet fattening — dinner right in the cupboard and refrigerator.

The only thing we lacked were the pork 'n beans, an essential ingredient if your goal is to have baked beans.

So I get sent to the store for a large can of beans. I bring home ... a large can of beans. Says right there on the side of the can: 12 ounces.

I sit the can on the kitchen counter and Mrs. Patterson says, "Is this the largest can they had?"

"Well," I said, "it looked big enough to me, so I didn't bother looking for anything bigger." (Besides, it's bad for your reputation if you're spotted by anyone carrying a gallon-sized can of beans out of a store.)

All this goes to prove one thing: Perceptions held by men and women often differ. What is large to a man is often small to a woman.

There are other examples of differing perceptions between the sexes:

■ When a woman asks her husband to clean the kitchen, the husband washes the dishes and wipes off the counter. Job done in 10 minutes. No problem. This is not an appropriate clean job to the females among us. The female scrubs the covering off the counters, wipes the stove off, cleans the oven and the refrigerator, scours the sinks, and, if the dog happens to be walking through, then she'll wash him, too. And don't forget sweeping and mopping, a vital part of kitchen cleaning to the woman. To the man, none of this is necessary. Wipe down the counters with a Handiwipe, and he is happy he has done such an outstanding job.

■ When a man is given the responsibility of making sure the children are dressed in the morning due to the absence of the wife on a business trip, the husband's perception of what clothes match and what clothes don't match differs from a woman's point of view on the subject. As far as I'm concerned, if the child is up and dressed, then their clothes automatically match. Leave the process to a woman and the tedious routine of matching colors and patterns can take hours and eat up a sizable chunk of the morning.

■ A woman's perception of unconditional love is this: Flowers, romantic, candlelight dinners, followed by putting the children to bed early. A man's perception of unconditional love is having his wife enjoy the last 13 seconds of a basketball game just as much as he does.

■ A woman's perception of a good backrub is very different than a man's perception. A woman is satisfied with a backrub only if every muscle is massaged, the TV is off, the wine is chilled and, again, the kids are in bed. Preferably the backrub is carried out with the aid of exotic oils and lotions bought from a backrub store

DAVE BARRY

When I was a kid, we had mimeograph machines

COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS TO THE HIGH SCHOOL CLASS OF 1995:

Barry

I am especially pleased to be addressing you, the Class of 1995, because it just so happens that I graduated from Pleasantville (N.Y.) High School in 1965, which is exactly 30 million years ago.

A lot has changed since 1965, young people. For example, in those days, most schools did not have modern technology such as the Xerox brand copier machine. When teachers wanted to give us a test, they'd run it off on a "mimeograph" machine, which was a device originally developed by spies for the purpose of smearing ink so thoroughly that enemy codebreakers would never figure out what the original words were. The teachers would hand us students a piece of paper with questions that consisted mostly of purple smears, with the occasional word sprinkled in, like this:

"1. Assuming that (smear) and (smear) (smear) Renaissance (smear), helium (smear) Treaty of (smear) (smear) (smear) cosine. Cite three examples."

We'd ponder the question, then generally we'd write down: "The Tigris and Euphrates rivers." Surprisingly often this turned out to be the correct answer, even in algebra.

Also, back in those days some schools still had real desks. You young people today have always had to write on those pathetic little kidney-shaped slabs, but we in the Class of '65 grew up with solid wooden structures roomy enough to house Third World families and covered with the initials of students dating back to the original 12 disciples. Students traditionally carved these initials with a device called a "compass," which every student was required, for some mysterious scholastic reason, to buy (along with a "protractor"), and which seemed to have no practical purpose other than to carve initials into desks. One of the highlights of starting a new school year was when you and your friends conducted archaeological-style examinations of your desks to see who the previous occupants were. ("Hey! I got Nathan Horsewinkle's old desk! I recognize his gum!")

The best feature of these desks was that they had hinged tops, so that in critical classroom situations you could hide your head inside. We'd be sitting in class, and the teacher would be writing on the blackboard, imparting some fascinating and vital piece of information such as how many acute angles there are in an isosceles triangle (Correct answer: the Tigris and Euphrates rivers), and in the back of the room a student such as Walter Gorski would stick his hand under his shirt and make a noise by forming an acute angle with his armpit, and the rest of us, rendered helpless by the almost unbearable humor of the situation, would quickly raise our desktops and duck our heads inside, ostrich-like, and the teacher would whirl around to face a roomful of vibrating bodies with desks for heads, emitting the kind of wet snorting sounds normally associated with severely congested horses.

Yes, we members of the Class of '65 sometimes "acted up," but in the end we "toed the line," because back in those days, American society was different. It had a quality that you simply do not see today — a quality that I would define, for lack of a better term, as "Anthony Sabella." Mr. Sabella was the assistant principal at Pleasantville High. He was a stocky, stern-faced individual, approximately the width of Kansas, who had more authority than the U.S. Supreme Court, in the sense that if you were a male student who came to school wearing really tight pants, the U.S. Supreme Court was not empowered to explain the Pleasantville High Dress Code to you while holding you completely off the ground by your neck, whereas Mr. Sabella was. Many times over the years I have wondered what the news headlines would have been like if this nation, instead of using other means to handle international problems, had used Mr. Sabella.

SADDAM SURRENDERS, IS WHACKED WITH RULER

At this juncture I'm sure the question that is on the minds of you young people is: "You wore tight pants?"

Yes, we did. We were not like you young males today, walking around in giant pants that are structurally identical to a Sears brand four-person mountain tent with pockets. Back in 1965 we preferred extremely tight pants, the kind that you never put your hands in the pockets of, because you'd never get them back out. We did not wear those pants because of some trivial passing "fad": We wore them because the Beatles wore them.

We idolized the Beatles, except for those of us who idolized the Rolling Stones, who in those days still had many of their original teeth. We argued passionately about which band was better, Beatles vs. Stones, because WE CARED ABOUT THE ISSUES. It's not like you young people today, listening passively, in your giant pants, to bands such as — I understand that this is an actual band — "Big Head Todd." What kind of name is THAT, young people? Back in our day, bands had names that STOOD for something, such as "Sam the Sham and the Pharaohs." You heard that name, and you knew instantly that this was a band with more than one dimension: A Sam the Sham dimension, and a Pharaohs dimension. When this band sang, the Class of '65 sang right along, with genuine feeling: "Wooly BULLLLY, Wooly Bully; Wooly Bully, Wooly Bully, Wooly Bully." Call us idealistic, but those words MEANT something to us back in 1965, and I can still hear them ringing in my head today, even when I double my sedative dosage. Young people, these are words that speak across the generations from my class to yours, the Class of 1995, and that is why, as you prepare to remove your rental gowns and go out into the world, I want to end my speech by asking you to remember one very, very, very important thing, but I forget what. Thank you; good luck; and somebody should wipe up this drool.

Hey, is that a hummingbird in your hair?

CONCORD, Calif. (AP) — A bird in the hair is worth two in the bush?

Just ask Asaad Liebig.

A young hummingbird who considered the 11-year-old a likely nesting spot clung to his curly hair for three hours before teachers were able to pluck it free.

Asaad found the dazed young bird on the ground at recess on Wednesday.

"It was sitting there, and it looked lonely, so I picked it up," he said.

When he brought it to class, his teacher asked him to take it outside, but the bird the size of Asaad's thumb hopped onto his head, nestled into his hair and refused to budge.

Teachers eventually pried the tiny creature free and took it to an expert: Sandy Fender, the Alexander Lindsay Museum's wildlife supervisor, who said the bird probably tried to fly too soon and tumbled from its nest, then settled on Asaad's head as the tallest thing around.

Riders get feel for Kansas on cattle drive

Associated Press

DODGE CITY, Kan. — J.W. Beeson got a case of the chills as he helped drive a herd of 250 Texas Longhorns through the streets of Dodge City.

"Do you have any idea how many ghosts are riding with us?" Beeson asked another of the 17 cowboys, who were guiding the Great American Cattle Drive '95 through the historic cattle town.

"It's like you're riding through a time warp," said Beeson, a cowboy from Shattuck, Okla.

The cattle drive is an 1,800 mile trek from Fort Worth, Texas, to Miles City, Mont., that retraces a route used by drovers between 1866 and 1886.

Traveling between 10 and 16 miles a day, the outfit is expected to end its journey in Miles City on Labor Day, after starting on March 5.

Wednesday night, campsite was the Warner Ranch near Cimarron. By Friday night the herd was expected to stop two miles west of Garden City, then head north on Saturday and Sunday.

The link with the past has its limits. Motorists pull their cars to the side of the road and watch the herd go by. Some bystanders creep close, video cameras in hand.

And the chuckwagon, where food is prepared for the cowboys, has some modern conveniences not available to the original riders.

But for the most part, the cowboys try to be faithful to history.

One cowboy who admits missing his couch is Jeff Christiansen, a 23-year-old Kansas State student from Durham, a town along the Sante Fe Trail in east central Kansas.

He has shunned most modern temptations, though.

"I've only used the porta potty twice," he said.

And some things don't change no matter how many years go by.

"Those cattle are the same as they were 100 years ago," Beeson said. "They've got 500 miles on them, and they're tough. When they stampede, they're dangerous."

There have been four stampedes so far, the most recent last week near Dodge City, where the cowboys spent three days. One cowboy had a bad "wreck" on his horse in that stampede, but neither man nor horse was seriously hurt.

Hereford and Aberdeen-Angus cattle eclipsed Texas Longhorns by the 1920s as ranchers came to realize the Longhorns grew slower and produced little beef in proportion to their bulk.

The breed enjoyed a resurgence starting in the 1970s as ranchers sought to cross Texas Longhorns with other breeds.

Wagons leave every morning at 8:15; the herd follows and arrives at the next stop by 2 or 3 p.m. Cowboys see to their cattle and a herd of horses that follow the herd.

PATTERSON: Baby humor often differs

somewhere in India. For a man, his idea of the perfect backrub for his wife takes no longer than two minutes. He has the remote control in one hand and a choice of a no-hitter on one channel and an Andy Griffith re-run on another. What makes his wife's backrub even more perfect is when he can crack his own knuckles during the backrub.

■ A woman's perception of humor is when your 1-year-old baby does something new like waving good-bye. This is cute to guys. What's really funny to dads is when your 1-year-old baby does something new like taking a banana and shoving it into his forehead. This shows the baby is developing a knack for classic, intelligent, Steve Martin-style humor.

■ A woman perceives that someone is a bad driver when that person speeds through a residential area. For a man, the qualifications for a bad driver are present when that driver cuts him off, and therefore threatens his manhood. Often times, the offending driver may be as far as a block ahead, but if he changes lanes without benefit of a signal, then that driver is severely lacking in intelligence, according to guys, who possess far less patience on the road than women.

BLUEBIRD: Project receives support

(From 1B)

"This offers children a library close to home, when the public library is too far and mommy and daddy are working," Ms. Vaughan said.

"Children who participate may read and check out books; they may write stories and make them into books to share with their families; and they may take part in special reading-writing activities that the librarians and writing specialists have planned for the day," said Lucinda Windsor, MISD language arts coordinator.

Community organizations, in an effort to support literacy, have also donated funds to Project Bluebirds in order to see that every participant takes home a new book — other than those that they make themselves.

At a recent school board meeting it was announced that Parker & Parsley donated $500 to the project and Epsilon Eta Chapter of Delta Kappa Gamma donated $100.

"Last year one of the librarians said that two children, who had been relegated to their grandmother's house for the summer, registered for Project Bluebirds because their grandmother didn't know just how she was going to keep the children occupied during the visit," Ms. Windsor said. "The children were so taken by the library experience that they were waiting at the library door each day for the afternoon's activities ... The grandmother said that Bluebirds was a godsend for her."

On a recent Thursday afternoon at Crockett it was announced that a nearby day-care center wanted to enroll its grade-school children in the program.

"That's fine," Ms. Vaughan said, noting the young participants had decided they wanted to study water and ocean animals next week.

"This is fun because we get to draw pictures and write about them," said Olivia, a second-grader. "It's better than being at home."

The program — which stresses reading and writing skills — is offered 12:30-2:30 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays through June 22 at Crockett, Milam, Pease and Washington elementary schools. It will be offered in an additional session Tuesday through June 29 at Burnet, DeZavala, Houston and South elementary schools.

The Midland Independent School District project also has garnered community support from Parker & Parsley, and Delta Kappa Gamma.

Animals sometimes out-forecast weathermen

From Sports Afield
A Hearst Magazine

Animals sometimes can out-forecast your favorite weatherman.

Even with computer technology and satellites, George Harrison wrote in an article in the current issue of Sports Afield, the National Weather Service's 90-day weather forecasts are accurate only 55 percent to 60 percent of the time.

Dependable long-range forecasting is so elusive, people have for ages turned to nature to help them decide when to plant corn and when to harvest it. When to set sail and went to stay in port. When to store food and fuel, and when to head North or South.

Although no one has proven that the animal indicators of weather are factual, they are at least as accurate as those from human forecasters. Some wild animals seem to have a sensitivity to impending weather changes, particularly the approach of weather that might pose a threat to them.

For example, when weather forecasters predict an approaching winter storm, a good piece of corroborating evidence is if the birds are stocking up on seed and suet from the feeders in your yard.

"It seems logical that songbirds would have a sensitivity to the approach of severe weather," said wildlife biologist Richard DeGraaf. "They have to eat every day or die, and if a storm is going to restrict their intake of food, they may need to anticipate it in order to survive."

Wildlife biologist Margaret Brittingham agreed, saying:

"Though I studied black-capped chickadees' eating behavior in winter, I was not looking at their ability to anticipate winter storms. But I believe that they can and do detect changes in barometric pressure."

It is known that migrating waterfowl sense changes in barometric pressure and will adjust their altitudes in order to fly more easily through air of lower density.

It also is known that pigeons can detect lower frequencies better than people can — perhaps they can hear a storm approaching hours before it arrives.

In the Shetland Islands, off the north coast of Scotland, where the red-throated diver loon lives, there is the belief that this so-called "rain goose" is especially noisy before bad weather, according to ornithologist John Terres.

In North America, Indians believe that the frequent calling of the common loon not only predicts rain, but brings it.

Dallas-based airline cites regulatory problems as reason for closure

DALLAS (AP) — Express One International, a passenger charter and commercial freight carrier, is ceasing operations at midnight because of regulatory problems, the airline's president said Sunday.

"This is a terribly sad day. ... But there seems to be no economically viable alternative," president Kevin H. Good said.

Company officials haven't determined whether the closure is permanent, Good said, adding that the events have occurred so suddenly that he and other company officials are "numb."

Good blames the "situation with FAA administrators" for the closing of Dallas-based Express One, which he said employs 1,200.

"Regional FAA administrators have told us that they have some concerns about our compliance with some record-keeping regulations," he said, adding that officials refused to be specific about their demands.

The deputy director of FAA flight standards in Washington, D.C., said he empathizes with customers, but says the government is concerned with safety first.

"While we recognize this action is an inconvenience to some passengers, the safety of the public is paramount," said William J. White in a prepared statement.

Good said there should be no question about Express One's safety or reliability.

"We've operated for 12 years and never had an accident," he said. "We serve the military worldwide and are inspected by the Department of Defense every six months."

The announcement coincides with an emergency landing made by an Express One 727 Saturday night. The flight, en route to Boston from San Juan, Puerto Rico, touched down at Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood International Airport after the pilot reported a problem with the jet's hydraulic system.

The incident was unrelated to the rift between the FAA and Express One. But when it occurred, the carrier was meeting with FAA officials, Good said, adding that the meeting resulted in the company's decision to shut down.

FAA spokesman John Clabes said the agency found "systemic problems" with the control of day-to-day airworthiness of Express One's 39-plane fleet of 727s and DC-9s.

It is not the first time the FAA has looked into Express One. In November 1992, the carrier paid the FAA $120,000 to settle numerous enforcement actions on similar issues such as improper maintenance, he said. A year later, the U.S. Department of Transportation cited Express One for violations of public charter regulations, Clabes said.

Tom Stuckey, the manager of the southwest region of the FAA's flight standards division, said that the airline was on the verge of losing its certification to operate.

However, Good accused the FAA of selective enforcement.

"If the same standards are applied to all airlines that were applied to us, the air transportation system of this country will be severely impacted," he said.

Clabes said the airline grounded 10 of its planes during the current investigation, including nine 727s.

"We found problems with their parts program and maintenance program," he said, adding that two teams of inspectors looked at Express One's procedures. "We consider this to be major. We asked them to consider grounding their planes until we could check all of them."

The closure affects employees based in Dallas-Fort Worth; Indianapolis; Terre Haute, Ind.; Las Vegas; Atlantic City, N.J.; and the Gulf Coast casino areas in Mississippi, Good said. The company also operates four European cargo planes in Europe as well, he said.

The hasty decision to close was made because company officials felt the FAA was about shut down the operation, Good said.

POLICE REPORTS

Accident

SONORA - A San Antonio man died in a one-vehicle accident Saturday after car problems resulted in his losing control of the station wagon he was driving, according to a Department of Public Safety spokeswoman.

Roberto Guzman, 51, was pronounced dead a little over an hour following the accident, which occurred at 2:35 p.m. Saturday eight miles east of Sonora on I-10.

Guzman was driving a station wagon eastbound on I-10 when the left axle detached from the rear sending the vehicle skidding about 350 yards on the housing, police reports stated. Guzman lost control of the vehicle, entered the median then rolled one and one-half times.

Guzman was ejected from the car, being thrown 15 feet.

No one in the vehicle was wearing a seatbelt, the trooper said.

Injured in the accident were 40-year-old Maria Guzman, 16-year-old Monica Guzman, 10-year-old Amalie Guzman, 16-year-old Alejandra Guzman and 11-year-old Mark Aceves. They all suffered lacerations and contusions and are in stable condition at a Sonora hospital.

Dora Guzman, 12, and Elvira Guzman, 6, are both in critical condition in a San Angelo hospital with head injuries.

Burn therapy changes many victims' lives

By Claudia Coats
Associated Press

Dr. Jeffrey Saffle of Salt Lake City, who directs the American Burn Association's national registry, said that in the 1960s, 20 percent of the patients admitted to burn units had burns over at least 60 percent of their body. Figures from the 1990s, to be published this month, show a decrease from 20 percent to 4 percent.

PITTSBURGH — After an explosion seared his flesh, Thomas Tiernan thought his abdomen and left hand would bear the type of scar he had once seen on a burn victim.

"It was all stretched out and ugly looking," Tiernan said.

Instead, where he was burned, Tiernan has skin. It's splotchy and purple, but it's flexible and even has little hairs.

The doctoring of massive, severe burns has come a long way in the past 10 years, debunking accepted ideas and helping more burn patients survive with better health.

Two main factors account for the progress. In the worst cases, feeding tubes ensure that patients receive the extra calories and protein they need. And surgeons remove damaged skin quickly to start skin grafts, reducing deaths, disability, pain and the hospital bill.

Dr. Steven J. Gerndt, a surgeon at University of Michigan Hospitals, said that in the 1960s, a patient aged 10 to 40 with severe burns over half the body had a 40 percent to 50 percent chance of living. In the 1980s, the victim's chances were 70 percent. Today, they are 90 percent, although some sufferers are surviving only to endure severe disabilities.

In the "old days," doctors waited for a burn victim's skin to slough off — actually rot away — before they stapled skin grafts on, said Dr. Harvey Slater, director of the Burn Trauma Center at West Penn Hospital in Pittsburgh.

"Nurses and doctors would come and pick at the dead skin every day," Slater said. The excruciatingly painful process could last up to three weeks — a long, expensive hospital stay.

"The burn unit smelled terrible because all this skin was infected, and many of these people died," Slater said.

Now, a day or two after a severely burned patient arrives, surgeons shave away damaged skin and start the grafts. The new skin comes from elsewhere on the body, either transplanted directly or grown into larger pieces at a private laboratory in Boston. While the lab works, cadaver skin may protect the patient temporarily.

The quick grafts protect against infection — the victim's worst enemy — and reduce scarring. Many victims who would have been disfigured and disabled in 1980 look better and feel better in 1995.

Nevertheless, two major problems remain in burn therapy. Doctors still can do little to treat lungs damaged by smoke. And infection is a constant danger, causing 72 percent of all deaths among burn victims, according to Harry Gaynor, president of the National Burn Victim Foundation in Orange, N.J.

Whether 3-year-old Chelsea McCartney will be one of them isn't clear. Chelsea has had seven skin operations since March 13, when flames from a neighbor's burning house came through her bedroom window in her home in Ambridge, a Pittsburgh suburb.

Third-degree burns covered two-thirds of her body, and an anesthesiologist kept her in a coma for weeks to immobilize her.

When she woke up, she could not speak around the feeding tube in her throat, but after prompting, she gave her half-brother a special greeting.

"She stuck her tongue out, and she gave him raspberries, so she's there," said her mother, Pamela Camp.

Camp teases Chelsea that the feeding tube is giving her steak and potatoes. Nutritionally, that's an apt description. High-protein, high-calorie diets have become part of treating a burn victim, who needs the nutrients to fight infection and grow new tissue.

Ten years ago, sufferers with massive burns could starve to death in the hospital because the burns cause stomach troubles. Now, a feeding tube may deliver nutrients directly to the small intestine.

A healthy adult needs 1,500 to 2,000 calories per day. A burn victim uses about 2,500 to 3,000 calories.

"These patients may not be out of bed much. It's hard for them to believe their energy needs are actually higher," West Penn dietician Pamela Yurick said. To whet the appetites of patients who don't need feeding tubes, she stocks a refrigerator with ice cream and pudding.

Because smoke detectors are more popular and workplaces have been made safer, massive burns are less common these days.

Dr. Jeffrey Saffle of Salt Lake City, who directs the American Burn Association's national registry, said that in the 1960s, 20 percent of the patients admitted to burn units had burns over at least 60 percent of their body. Figures from the 1990s, to be published this month, show a decrease from 20 percent to 4 percent.

The nation maintains 1,809 beds at 138 burn units, Saffle said.

Peter Brigham, president of the Burn Foundation in Philadelphia, said the percentage of industrial workers among those massive-burn patients has fallen greatly, although apparently no statistics are kept.

"The massive industrial burn has largely vanished," Brigham said, probably because of safer workplaces and fewer industrial jobs.

Tiernan, whose burns from an explosion set off by a trashcan fire did not threaten his life, cleans his high-protein plate and keeps his elastic glove on so his skin heals smoothly. The pressure garment fools a body mechanism that makes collagen — a protein — and contributes to thick, stiff scarring. For reasons not yet understood, the body signals to burn wounds to keep making collagen long after it is needed.

Burned April 1, Tiernan already can touch his thumb to various points on his palm and probably will recover full use of his hand. His age, 32, is an advantage. Burns are riskier for the very young and the very old because their skin is thinner.

Of the two million people injured or killed by burns last year, one-third were 17 or younger, according to Shriners Burn Institute in Cincinnati.

The typical burned child comes from a single-parent home in the inner city or a rural area.

"It's a disease of poverty," Slater said.

DEAR ABBY

Marriage's bitter ending finds sweet beginning

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I just read your column and must respond to "Dying Inside in Missouri." I am in my late 40s and have lived through the same experience.

Van Buren

In 1988, after nine years of what I thought was a good marriage, my husband announced that he was "unfulfilled" and wanted a divorce. He swore there was no one else. We had just bought a beautiful home, he had given me a mink coat for Christmas, and after several miscarriages, we were in the process of adopting a baby.

I gave him a divorce. A year later, he impregnated his secretary and married her (in that order). I later learned they had been having an affair for several years.

I thought I was going to die. I became anorexic, lost 25 pounds in two months, and almost ruined my health. Finally, after four months of living in the same town with him, I moved back to California to be with my parents.

I got into counseling, joined a gym, and spent my time with girlfriends, going to plays and movies, dinners, etc.

Sometimes it was hell coming home to an empty house, but I want to tell "Dying Inside" this: Quit feeling sorry for yourself. Get counseling, go to church and take good care of yourself.

That's what I did, and last year I met the most wonderful man in the world — at a Trivial Pursuit tournament! He is honest, kind, loving, and the sexiest man I've ever known. We are being married next Saturday. Abby, please tell your readers that there is life after divorce. — BETTER THAN EVER IN PIEDMONT, CALIF.

DEAR BETTER THAN EVER: Even the bitterest divorce provides an opportunity for growth. Your letter is an excellent road map for anyone who needs to move on after a traumatic divorce. I hope "Dying Inside" reads this and takes comfort from it.

I wish you much happiness in your new marriage.

DEAR ABBY: You have recently published some letters from mothers of twins — and the incessant (and sometimes "dumb") questions people ask. We had twins, and we also grew tired of people asking, "Are they twins?" So we made a sign that read, "Yes, they are!" and placed it on their double stroller. Everyone knew what it meant, and that question was never asked again. — GUS AND MONELL ORMBREK, PORT ANGELES, WASH.

P.S. We loved every minute of parenting our twins.

DEAR GUS AND MONELL: That's what my mother used to say, but how she could "love" every minute of washing twice as many diapers and preparing twice as many bottles is beyond me.

It couldn't have been easy raising twins who talked non-stop and collaborated in mischief-making. We really were cute, but she always called us "monkeys" because she didn't want us to grow up to be conceited. What memories!

DEAR ABBY: I wrote to Sgt. David Scott Gardonio in 1992 because of your Operation Dear Abby column. We corresponded and even spoke on the telephone while he was stationed in Kuwait.

We met in August 1993 and were married on New Year's Day in 1995. We read our final pen pal letter as part of our wedding ceremony. We are deeply in your debt. — MR. AND MRS. DAVID SCOTT GARDONIO

DEAR MR. AND MRS. GARDONIO: It's letters such as yours that make being Dear Abby worthwhile. Congratulations and best wishes for a lifetime of happiness together.

Tribe seeks return to whaling tradition

By Timothy Egan
N.Y. Times News Service

NEAH BAY, Wash. — The children of this American Indian village at the far western edge of the continent struggle with the usual demons of modern life — drugs, alcohol and violent videos among them. And like parents elsewhere, Makah tribal members say that a return to old-fashioned values might be just the thing to bring their youth around.

But in this case, tradition means going out in fierce Pacific Ocean swells to chase and kill gray whales, which have not been hunted legally in American waters for more than 40 years.

Citing an 1855 treaty that makes them the only Indian nation with whale-hunting rights guaranteed by the federal government, the Makah have announced plans to kill up to five whales every spring, beginning next year.

A whale hunt, they say, would provide focus for a tribe where unemployment is running at 50 percent and the fishing fleet has been hit hard by declining salmon runs.

"Right now, there's a real frustration among the kids with what's happened to fishing," said Andrea Alexander, general manager of the 1,700-member tribe. "They thought they could grow up and be fishermen, like their parents. With whaling, they would get to participate in something that has real cultural and spiritual value, and they could put food on the table as well."

The Makah plan has caused an international stir, and it poses an acute problem for the State Department.

For more than a decade, the American government has led the campaign to outlaw commercial whaling around the globe. But this week, at the International Whaling Commission's annual meeting in Dublin, the Americans have been on the spot from an Indian nation within its borders.

The Makah say there is a big distinction between their proposal and commercial whaling. The Indians want to take whales for subsistence and ceremonial purposes, not as part of a commercial operation. But opponents say that it smacks of hypocrisy to allow one group of people to hunt whales as an indigenous right, but to condemn others claiming the same right — as do those in Iceland and Norway, for example.

All of this comes at time when the campaign to save whales is proving to be one of the major success stories of wildlife conservation. Playful, big-eyed leviathans that weigh up to 40 tons, gray whales, which are found only in the Pacific, are flourishing and have prompted a boom in tourist and recreational services.

There are about 21,000 gray whales — the highest number in nearly a century — according to the National Marine Fisheries Service. Last year, they were taken off the federal list of endangered species.

Taking a mere five whales, the Makah argue, would not dent the population. The government agrees, but has yet to sanction the hunt. Among other things, State Department officials are worried about setting a precedent. In Western Canada, for example, more than a dozen tribes can show a tradition of whaling. If the Makah are allowed to kill gray whales, why can't natives in Canada, the argument goes.

The federal government is also worried about black-market trading in whale meat, which can fetch high prices in Japan.

The Makah, who have held to this rugged corner of the Olympic Peninsula for nearly 2,000 years, would prefer that they not get enmeshed in environmental politics or international disputes. A return to whaling is simply a way to bring back a sense of cultural cohesion for the young, they say.

Twice a year, thousands of migrating gray whales pass this coast of wind-savaged cliffs and storm-sculpted rocks called seastacks.

"Re-establishing a ceremonial and subsistence whale hunt would be a catalyst which would allow us to instill in our young people the traditional values which have held our people together over the centuries," wrote Hubert Markishtum, the tribal chairman, in a recent letter to the State Department.

CFA still intact

DALLAS — The membership of the College Football Association voted Sunday to keep the organization intact despite the loss of some of its television contracting powers.

The CFA's viability had been questioned since many of the association's affiliated conferences had negotiated their own television agreements beginning in 1996.

The 19th annual meetings, which ended Sunday, had focused largely on gender equity issues and football coaches' need to help develop practical tests for compliance to the Title IX law.

Among the propositions the CFA membership will make to the NCAA at its 1996 convention is the concept of one vote per Division I-A member. The CFA also supported the creation of an allied membership category for I-AA schools.

Other proposals the CFA will make to the NCAA are:

— To abolish the restricted earnings coach category in all sports in favor of use of graduate assistant coaches.

— Allow one football victory against a Division I-AA opponent to be considered applicable to the six-win requirement for bowl games.

— Allow students to receive athletically-related financial aid the summer prior to their first term of enrollment.

— Encourage opportunities for minorities as graduate assistants in football.

The CFA was formed in 1977 to serve as a forum for athletic administrators and coaches to discuss matters unique to major college football. It was not until 1984 that the association became involved with the negotiation of television.

Miami unbeaten

OMAHA, Neb. — Danny Buxbaum's three-run homer in the first inning gave J.D. Arteaga all the lead he needed and Miami went on to beat Florida State 4-2 Sunday in a winners' bracket game at the College World Series.

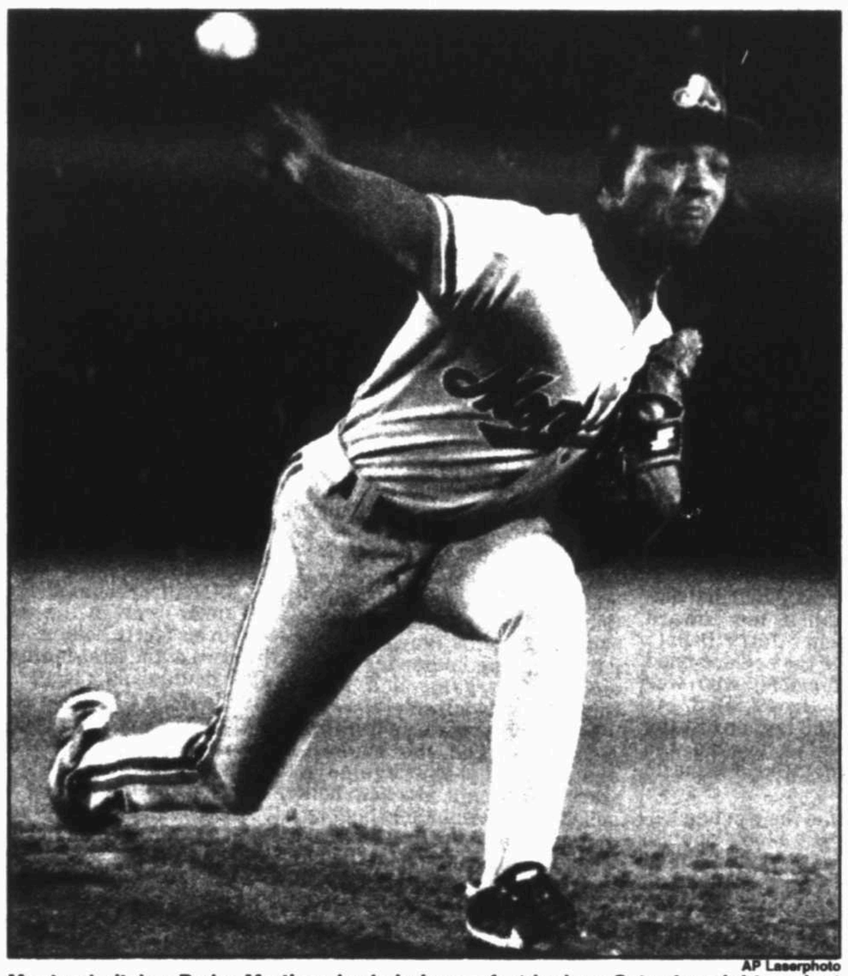

Florida State had won four of six games between the teams this season, but the second-seeded Seminoles (53-14) couldn't get past Arteaga (11-2) this time. Arteaga, who had been involved in two no-decisions against Florida State earlier this year, scattered seven hits with three strikeouts and no walks.

The win gives third-seeded Miami (48-15) off until Wednesday as the last unbeaten team in its bracket. Florida State drops to the elimination round and will play the Sunday night's Oklahoma-Southern Cal winner on Tuesday.

Bruce Thompson and Rudy Gomez singled off Florida State starter David Yocum (12-3) before Buxbaum hit his 14th homer deep down the left-field line. It was Buxbaum's third homer this year off Yocum, the left-handed All-America who was selected No. 20 by the Los Angeles Dodgers in last week's draft.

Florida State's five double plays tied a CWS record set by Southern Cal against Wake Forest in 1949.

Montreal pitcher Pedro Martinez hurled nine perfect innings Saturday night against San Diego before giving up a double in the 10th inning. He still got the victory.

Perfecto falls shy of historic gem

By Bernie Wilson
AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO — Now, when Pedro Martinez pitches inside, people will figure he knows what he's doing. Coming as close to a perfect game as Montreal's Martinez did Saturday night does wonders for a reputation.

Until now the center of a number of beanball controversies, Martinez joined Harvey Haddix as the only pitcher to take a perfect game into extra innings. He retired 27 straight batters, but it was the 28th who spoiled history.

Martinez allowed a leadoff double to Bip Roberts in the 10th inning and was relieved by Mel Rojas who completed the Expos' 1-0 victory over the San Diego Padres.

Under amended no-hitter rules adopted by an eight-man committee on statistical accuracy in 1991, Martinez receives credit for neither a perfect game nor a no-hitter.

Until Saturday night, Martinez's reputation was based more on his sometimes faulty control. He has touched off a number of bench-clearing brawls by pitching inside and last year his first bid at a perfect game was marred when he hit Cincinnati's Reggie Sanders, who charged the mound.

He hit an NL-high 11 batters in 23 starts last year. Three batters rushed him, touching off bench-clearing brawls, and the incidents led to a total of 12 ejections.

"This shouldn't be my first reputation as a pitcher, because I have been here not very long, but long enough to show what I can do," the 23-year-old Martinez said of his short, controversial big-league career. "When I'm fine, I can do a lot of stuff. I don't want to fight anybody. I'm here to play the game like I did tonight."

Martinez's control on Saturday was flawless until Roberts hit a line-drive double that landed about 10 feet inside the right-field line opening the 10th. The hit came on a 1-1 changeup, Martinez's 96th pitch of the game.

Right fielder Tony Tarasco, who made a leaping catch of pinch-hitter Scott ivingstone's liner to deep right to keep the perfect game going in the ninth, had no chance to catch Roberts' double.

"It was a lucky hit to a lucky spot," Roberts said. "I was just able to hit it this time to get it where they weren't standing."

Martinez (4-1) got Roberts to fly out in his previous three at-bats.

"I don't regret throwing that pitch because I got him out on that pitch before," Martinez said.

The bit of bad luck linked Martinez with Haddix, who pitched 12 perfect innings against the Milwaukee Braves in 1959, only to lose the no-hitter.

Canada's Paul Tracy
...taking the checkered flag

Tracy stops Penske rally

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

MILWAUKEE — Paul Tracy foiled Team Penske's solid comeback effort Sunday, outdueling Al Unser Jr. to win the Miller Genuine Draft 200 at the Milwaukee Mile.

Tracy, coming off a disappointing Indianapolis 500, and Unser, coming back from missing the Indy race entirely, battled nearly from the start of the 200-lap race, with Tracy taking the lead for good with 22 laps remaining.

■ Miller 200

"Al's car was loose and he couldn't drive hard into the turns," Tracy said. "He got boxed in up high by some slower cars. I stayed low and I was able to get past him in traffic. After that, I knew I had enough to beat him."

The 26-year-old Canadian driver earned his second win of the season and the 10th of his Indy-car career, building a lead of more than 5 seconds and holding on to win by 0.846-seconds — about four car lengths on the one-mile oval.

"I was being conservative at the end," said Tracy, who left Team Penske at the end of the 1994 season to join Newman-Haas Racing. "I knew Al was far enough behind me that it was going to take a lot for him to catch me. It doesn't matter how much you win by, as long as you win."

Unser, who cut short his post-race interview to visit a doctor about pain from tendinitis and a calcium deposit in his left shoulder, said he was hampered by an electrical problem that left him

FRENCH OPEN TENNIS

No. 3 proves unlucky in Paris

■ Third-seeded Boris Becker and Mary Pierce take a tumble in the French Open.

By Stephen Wilson
AP Sports Writer

PARIS — Boris Becker was fighting the conditions, the officials and a player of whom he'd never heard. When it was over Sunday, Becker had lost the match, his opponent's respect and maybe his last legitimate shot at a French Open title.

In the completion of a suspended match, the third-seeded German was eliminated in four sets by Adrian Voinea, a 20-year-old Romanian with a world ranking of 128.

In the day's other big surprise, women's No. 3 Mary Pierce was knocked out in straight sets by No. 12 Iva Majoli. And in the first major men's matchup of the tournament, Thomas Muster overwhelmed Andrei Medvedev 6-3, 6-3, 6-0 to extend his clay-court winning streak to 32 matches.

Among the other name players advancing were top seeds Andre Agassi and Arantxa Sanchez Vicario.

The Becker-Voinea match had been halted Saturday night with the Italian-based Romanian leading two sets to love. No matter how much Becker tried to pressure or intimidate him, Voinea held his nerve Sunday and prevailed 6-3, 6-4, 3-6, 7-5.

Becker was furious that the match had started at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in dark and wet conditions after a four-hour wait.

"They said it's good weather," he said. "We look out and we say, 'Are they talking about Paris or some place in Africa?' I can't believe they made me play. Then it's 9:30, and I'm home, and down two sets to love against somebody I never heard of before."

"You couldn't call that a tennis contest," Becker said. "They just don't care about the players."

Voinea, too, had reason to complain. He had the momentum and was ready to start the third set when the match was stopped. He said the supervisor told him play was being suspended on all courts — when, in fact, matches continued elsewhere for another half hour.

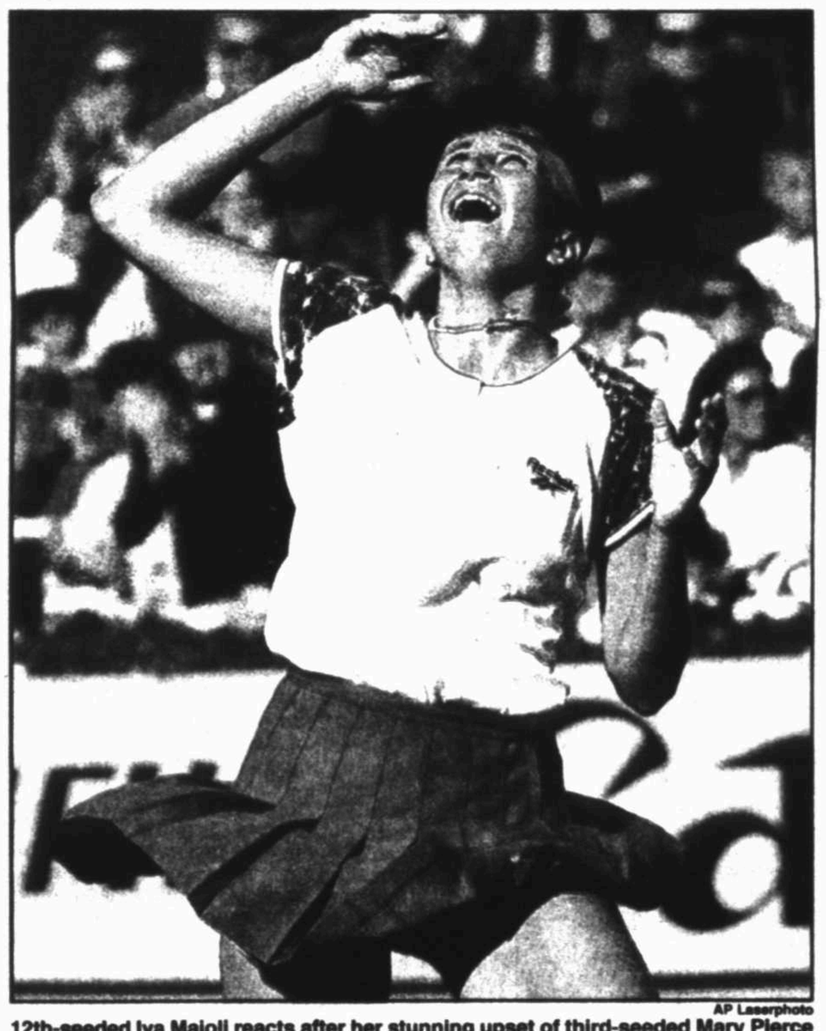

"He lied to me," Voinea said.

The conditions were dry and fast Sunday, favoring Becker. But even after the German took the third set, Voinea wouldn't buckle as he counter-attacked with a sharp forehand and two-handed backhand.

With Becker serving at 5-6 in the fourth set, the Romanian hit some good returns and broke for the match. After Becker plopped a forehand into the net, he offered a perfunctory handshake at the net without even glancing at Voinea.

It was typical of the disdain Becker

Magic rules!

Orlando looks to Houston

By Wendy E. Lane
AP Basketball Writer

ORLANDO, Fla. — In the Magic's noisy kingdom, nothing bad ever seems to happen to the home team.

And now Shaquille O'Neal and Anfernee Hardaway, the Orlando Magic's two 23-year-old stars, are taking their talent and youthful exuberance to the NBA Finals.

O'Neal scored 25 points Sunday night to lead the Magic to a 105-81 rout of the Indiana Pacers in Game 7 of the Eastern Conference finals.

Orlando's considerable talent and poise will be tested by the Houston Rockets, a team that rode its experience and toughness to the finals for the second straight year. The Rockets will defend their title beginning Wednesday in Orlando.

Just as they promised they would, the Magic shrugged off Friday night's 27-point disaster in Indianapolis and used a hot-shooting third quarter to bury the Pacers and take a 19-point lead into the final period.

The fourth quarter was never close, thanks to a shower of 3-pointers, three by Dennis Scott and one by Hardaway. Scott's trey with 4:34 left made it 96-72.

Scott finished with 19 points on 7-of-11 shooting. Hardaway added 17 and Horace Grant 16.

Reggie Miller, whose 36 points in Game 6 was the reason the Pacers were here in the first place, had only 12 and missed 8-of-13 shots. He left the game for good with 3:53 to play.

Dale Davis led Indiana with 15 points and 14 rebounds.

Petty avoids crash, wins

By Dick Brinster

DOVER, Del. — Kyle Petty was far enough behind to avoid an early-race accident involving 20 cars, then beat a field resembling a pile of junk to win the Miller Genuine Draft 500 and end a two-year victory drought.

The triumph was the eighth of Petty's Winston Cup career, but first since June 1993. It ended a winless streak of 59 races, and was the first for a Pontiac Grand Prix since Rusty Wallace prevailed at Atlanta in November 1993.

■ Miller 500

As unusual as the race was, almost as surprising was the lack of tire trouble just a day after cars in a Busch Grand National race had blistering problems because heat build-up in thick treads. But Goodyear shipped in 1,100 thin-tread tires overnight, and they wore well on the smooth new concrete track at Dover Downs International Speedway.

Petty started 37th in a field of 42 and took the lead on the 459th of 500 laps.

Astros sweep fading Braves

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — The Houston Astros got homers from Luis Gonzalez and Craig Biggio and completed their first three-game sweep in Atlanta since 1989 with a 6-2 victory over the Braves on Sunday.

Right-hander Shane Reynolds (2-4) halted a personal three-game losing streak and got his first victory since May 9, allowing two runs and eight hits in six innings. He struck out six and walked one in helping Houston complete its road trip with a 4-1 record.

Derek Bell singled in two runs in the third, Gonzalez hit a two-run homer in the fifth and Biggio had a solo homer in the fifth.

Atlanta, hitting only .201 in the last eight games, lost its season-high fifth in a row. The Braves have scored only 16 runs in the last eight games.

■ NL Roundup

Rockies 4, Pirates 1

DENVER — Vinny Castilla hit solo homers in consecutive at-bats, helping former Midland Angel Joe Grahe post his first National League victory as Colorado beat Pittsburgh.

Larry Walker also had a solo homer, his 12th, as the Rockies swept the three-game series and ran their winning streak to four games. It was Colorado's fourth series sweep of the season.

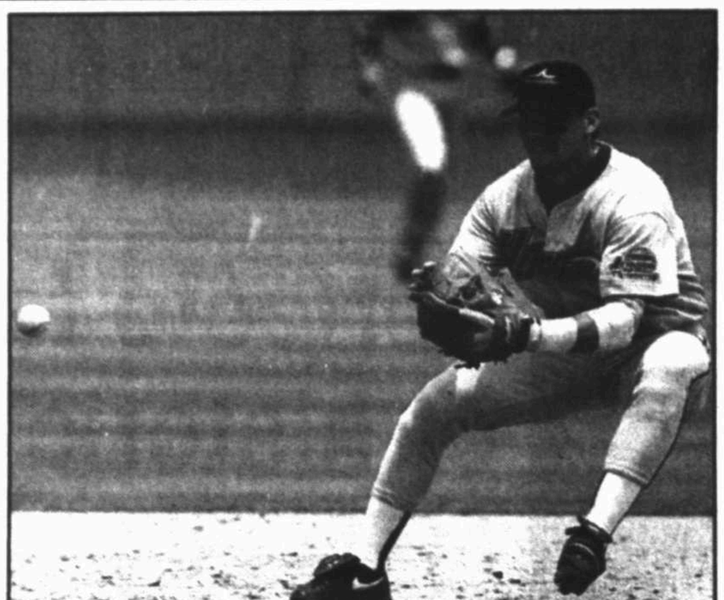

Grahe (1-1), in his first starting assignment since having off-season shoulder surgery, went six innings and allowed six hits and one unearned run. Grahe signed with the Rockies last December after compiling a 17-23 record in five seasons with the California Angels.

Reds 4, Cardinals 0

CINCINNATI — Pete Schourek allowed only one hit over 7 2-3 innings for his career-high fourth straight win, leading Cincinnati over St. Louis.

Bret Boone and Eddie Taubensee homered off Ken Hill (4-1) and Reggie Sanders extended his hitting streak to a career-high 12 games with an RBI double to give the Reds their 11th victory in 13 games.

The Cardinals have lost 9 of 13, a slump that includes five losses in six games against the Reds.

Giants 4, Phillies 0

SAN FRANCISCO — Mark Leiter pitched a four-hitter for his first career shutout and San Francisco completed a series sweep by beating Philadelphia, giving the Phillies their first three-game losing streak of the season.

Leiter (3-1) struck out three, walked two, made a sensational catch of Charlie Hayes' attempted bunt in the seventh inning and singled and scored in the bottom of the seventh.

After giving up a one-out double to Tyler Green in the fifth, Leiter retired the final 14 batters.

It was San Francisco's first game without Matt Williams, who broke a bone in his foot Saturday and is out for six weeks.

Padres 8, Expos 4

SAN DIEGO — Tony Gwynn went 4-for-4 with two RBIs and San Diego broke out of an offensive slump with 13 hits to beat Montreal.

San Diego had been held to one run and four hits in losing the first two games of the series, but broke out Sunday to snap Montreal's nine-game winning streak at Jack Murphy Stadium dating back to the 1993 season.

Eddie Williams, Ken Caminiti and Andujar Cedeno hit home runs and Gwynn had his 26th career four-hit game.

Dodgers 5, Mets 3

LOS ANGELES — Two runs scored on Rick Parker's infield dribbler with two outs in the bottom of the eighth inning to break a tie and give Los Angeles a victory over New York.

Parker hit a ground ball that didn't go more than 15 feet toward third base. Pitcher Jerry DiPoto (0-2) barehanded the ball and tried to tag Raul Mondesi, who was charging home from third. As DiPoto missed the tag, he lost the ball and it rolled toward the dugout, allowing Mike Piazza to score.

Mondesi started the winning rally with a one-out bloop double. After Piazza was walked intentionally, Eric Karros walked to load the bases. Tim Wallach struck out before Parker got his infield hit.

Cubs 5, Marlins 3

MIAMI — Sammy Sosa hit a home run and drove in the go-ahead run with a sixth-inning double to lead the Chicago Cubs to a 5-3 victory over the Florida Marlins on Sunday night.

The Cubs, who won two of three during the weekend set, have won all nine of their three-game series this season. Florida has yet to win a series in 13 attempts.

Frank Castillo (4-2) allowed only six hits in eight-plus innings, striking out three and walking two. Randy Myers got the last three outs for his 13th save.

Tettleton roars out of slump

The Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Mickey Tettleton homered twice and drove in six runs, breaking out of a 1-for-25 slump to back Darren Oliver's three-hit pitching over six innings and send the Texas Rangers past the Minnesota Twins, 7-2 on Sunday.

Tettleton, a DH in 35 of the Rangers first 36 games, played in right field for the first time since July 19, 1994 and it seemed to agree with him. His 4-for-4 game and six RBIs both matched career highs.

Tettleton, batting .150 in his previous 17 games, drove in two runs with a first-inning double and added a run-scoring single in the third. Then he homered in the fifth and again in the seventh. The homers gave him nine for the season.

Meanwhile, Oliver (2-1), a converted reliever, established a career-high with seven strikeouts and walked three in his longest major league outing, helping the Rangers to their eighth victory in 11 games.

Royals 4, Brewers 3

KANSAS CITY — Jon Nunnally hit a pinch-hit home run leading off the seventh inning as Milwaukee reliever Graeme Lloyd gave up a game-winning homer for the second straight game and Kansas City beat Milwaukee.

Nunnally, a rookie up from Class A ball, worked the count full against Lloyd (0-4) who came on to start the seventh. His fifth homer sailed into the right field bullpen as the Royals beat the Brewers a sixth straight time and won for the ninth time in 10 games.

Lloyd had given up a two-out, ninth-inning home run to Gary Gaetti in the Royals' 2-1 victory Saturday night.

■ American League

Tigers 8, White Sox 5

CHICAGO — Lou Whitaker's bases-loaded double sparked a five-run ninth inning as Detroit overtook Chicago.

The Sox had rallied for four in the bottom of the eighth to take a 5-3 lead, but their bullpen couldn't hold it.

Kirk Gibson drew a leadoff walk in the ninth off Tim Fortugno. Roberto Hernandez (1-3) gave up singles to Juan Samuel, Franklin Stubbs, and Chris Gomez which tied the game at 5-5. After a sacrifice, Scott Radinsky replaced Hernandez. Chad Curtis walked intentionally to walk the bases. Whitaker followed with a two-run double and Travis Fryman hit a sacrifice fly to make it 8-5.

Yankees 11, Angels 3

NEW YORK — Paul O'Neill ignited an eight-run first inning with an RBI-double and later homered, helping New York to a rout of California that snapped a five-game losing streak.

O'Neill accounted for the final Yankees run in the third inning with his fourth homer, after driving in two of the first-inning runs with his double and a single.

New York had lost 10 of its previous 11 games and 14 of 17, including all five this season against the Angels.

Indians 9, Blue Jays 8

CLEVELAND — Paul Sorrento hit a two-run home run with two out in the ninth inning, capping a three-run rally that gave Cleveland a victory over Toronto.

The Indians, who had trailed 8-0 in the third inning, won for the seventh time in eight games and improved the American League's best record to 24-10. They have matched the best start in team history.

The Blue Jays had matched a team record with a seven-run first inning, highlighted by rookie Shawn Green's first home run, but couldn't hold on. David Cone squandered most of it, allowing six runs and 13 hits in 5 2-3 innings, his shortest start of the season.

Red Sox 2, Mariners 1

BOSTON — The startling Boston Red Sox pulled out another 10-inning win when Troy O'Leary's two-run homer gave knuckleballer Tim Wakefield his third win in nine days.

O'Leary's second homer of the year came off Bobby Ayala, who had been successful in all 13 of his save opportunities before the Boston series. Ayala (1-1) blew his first save opportunity in Friday night's 6-5 Red Sox win in 10 innings.

Athletics 14, Orioles 6

BALTIMORE — Craig Paquette had seven RBIs and hit two homers, including a grand slam, powering Oakland past Baltimore, ending the Athletics' six-game losing streak.

In addition to his grand slam, Paquette hit a two-run homer and drove in a run on a fielder's choice to top his previous career high of three RBIs, which he accomplished eight times. It was his first two-homer game.

Dave Stewart (3-4) won his first game in 28 days, allowing seven hits and four runs in six innings. He had a season-high 10 strikeouts.

Mike Bordick homered and drove in a career-best four runs.

Red Wings take 2-0 series lead

DETROIT (AP) — With their goaltender leaving the crease early thinking the game already won, the Detroit Red Wings survived the last-second blunder to take a 2-0 lead over the Chicago Blackhawks in the Western Conference finals Sunday.

The Red Wings scored two late goals, including Kris Draper's with 1:45 remaining, for a 3-2 victory.

But the blunder by Detroit goaltender Mike Vernon almost forced an overtime. Vernon, thinking the game was over, began skating toward the bench. The clock, however, still showed fractions of a second left and Tony Amonte's shot from behind the Chicago blue line carromed off the post with one-tenth of a second showing.

It marked the first time all season the Blackhawks had failed to hold a lead going into the third period. Chicago was 19-0-0 during the abbreviated season when leading after two and 5-0-0 in the playoffs.

But the Blackhawks, who dominated the second period, gave up two third-period goals. Detroit outshot Chicago 13-3 in the final period and 38-20 for the game.

Draper's third goal of the playoffs came on the rebound of a shot by Nicklas Lidstrom. The puck bounced off goalie Ed Belfour's glove, right to the stick of Draper.

■ NHL Playoffs

Belfour was pulled for an extra attacker with 54 seconds remaining.

Chris Chelios and Amonte both had unassisted goals for Chicago. Dino Ciccarelli and Doug Brown scored for the Red Wings.

Games 3 and 4 of the best-of-7 series will be played in Chicago on Tuesday and Thursday.

In Game 1, Detroit outshot Chicago 23-14, holding the Blackhawks to just four shots in the second period, one in the third and none in overtime. It looked like Game 2 would be more of the same as Detroit outshot Chicago 16-4 in the first period.

Chelios scored his fourth playoff goal at 7:59.

Shark attack back on PGA Tour

The Associated Press

DUBLIN, Ohio - Greg Norman won for the first time on the tour in more than a year, shooting a 6-under-par 66 Sunday and capturing the Memorial by four strokes on a water-logged course.

In winning this tournament for a second time, Norman made a critical save of par on the 12th hole and finished with a total of 19-under 269.

"Today," tournament host and founder Jack Nicklaus said, "I saw a man who wanted to win a golf tournament. Two guys threw 67s at him and another 68, and he just played better."

Norman is recovering from back spasms and this was his first tournament in six weeks.

The Muirfield Village Golf Club course was a soggy mess Sunday, with players allowed to lift, clean and place balls in the fairway.

For the long day, Norman scored seven birdies and no bogeys in 22 holes. He was among the 22 players stranded on the course by darkness Saturday night and had to return early in the morning to complete his round.

He birdied the first hole he played, finished that round with a 67 and had a one-shot lead.

And he never relinquished it. But the margin of victory does not indicate how close the race became, nor how important his deft, delicate shot from deep, wet rough on the 12th may have been.

■ Golf Roundup

LPGA Oldsmobile

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Dale Eggeling shot a 1-under-par 71 to win the Oldsmobile Classic, earning more from this one tournament than she has in 15 of her 19 years on the LPGA Tour.

Eggeling, who led all three rounds after opening with a 63 Thursday, won for the first time in 15 years and took home $90,000.

She finished at 14-under 274 at Walnut Hills Country Club, two strokes ahead of Meg Mallon, Elaine Crosby and Annika Sorenstam of Sweden.

This was Eggeling's first victory since the Boston Five Classic in 1980 when she collected just over $45,000 for the year.

"Up until the last couple of years it hadn't been that much of a struggle because I hadn't put my heart into it," said Eggeling, 41. "In the last few months I really rededicated myself to it.

"It has been really, really tough the last four months. I have been hitting it well and coming up empty."

Bruno's Senior

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Graham Marsh had a 2-under-par 70 Sunday in an overpowering five-shot victory in the Bruno's Memorial Classic for his first victory on the Senior PGA Tour and his second win ever in the United States.

The native of Australia finished with a 15-under 201 total, the lowest for 54 holes on tour this year, and matched the largest margin of victory in taking the $157,500 first prize.

J.C. Snead finished strong, grabbing second with a 68 for a 206.

Marsh won his only other American tournament in 1977, choosing to spend most of his time closer to home for family considerations. He had 24 triumphs in Japan, 16 in his native country and 15 on the European tour.

Tom Weiskopf, one of four golfers who tied for third at 207, played in Marsh's group Sunday and was usually 50 to 60 yards longer off the tee. But Marsh never seemed fazed, putting himself in birdie position all day with pinpoint approach shots.

"He's a real technical, methodical player," Weiskopf said.

MONEY WATCH

Congratulations, give me a job

The Five O'Clock News, a newsletter that dispenses career advice, has a novel idea for job seekers: Read the wedding announcements in your local newspaper. The newsletter says information about the brides and grooms may actually provide leads about job openings — particularly if one of the new spouses recently left a position. Moreover, the brides and grooms and their relatives might be useful for networking.

Where work is

Nearly 16 percent of the jobs created in the United States from 1990 to 1994 — or more than one in six — came from the 4,000 or so companies listed on the Nasdaq Stock Market, finds Cognetics Inc., a consultant to Nasdaq. David Birch, an economist for Cognetics, said Nasdaq companies, many of which tend to be smaller than those listed on the New York Stock Exchange, are "the gazelles of the corporate world, quick on their feet, innovative and able to change direction as market conditions shift." Birch says the Nasdaq firms' track record is particularly remarkable "when you consider that 80 percent of U.S. companies either were not creating jobs in those years or were eliminating jobs."

The dotted line

Employment contracts, the agreements we tend to associate with basketball players and movie stars, are becoming more common for workers in many fields, finds Robert Half International, an employment concern. In a survey of chief financial officers, 30 percent said the use of employment contracts is growing, Robert Half said. Forty-four percent said the number of employees offered contracts is staying the same, while 17 percent said the number is falling. Max Messmer, the chairman of Robert Half, said that while contracts in the past were used mainly for top management, "applicants at less senior levels are seeking ways to counter job volatility that is still fresh in their minds from the recession."

Ups and downs

Roller coasters are among the biggest draws in amusement parks, according to Amusement Business, a trade magazine. Park operators quoted by the magazine say they've had some of their biggest years in terms of attendance when new coasters are installed. The rides are such money makers that even when an amusement park shuts down, chances are its coaster or coasters will be dismantled, sold and set up somewhere else. Amusement Business says even the old wooden roller coasters find new fans in new parks.

A close look at closed-end funds

By Reed Abelson
N.Y. Times News Service

Sometimes opportunity knocks twice. When rising interest rates felled the bond market last year, investors were able to snap up some municipal bond funds at bargain prices.

Now, uncertainty in the municipal market — induced by talk of a flat tax, debate about where rates are headed and Orange County's failure so far to make good on its debt — has conspired to push the prices down again.

The best deals can be found in closed-end funds, which issue a set number of shares and trade on stock exchanges. Unlike their more plentiful open-end cousins, these funds sell at prices that don't always reflect the value of their underlying assets.

When the market is most pessimistic about municipal bonds, as it was toward the end of 1994, the shares of these closed-end funds can trade at sizable discounts to their net asset values.

Steep discounts reported once again in market

Last year, the median discount on the funds approached 10 percent, according to Lipper Analytical Services, the New York research firm. Investors could therefore buy a dollar's worth of assets for only 90 cents. If the underlying portfolio increased in value or the fund gained in popularity, those investors could sell at a profit.

Despite the astonishing rebound in the municipal bond market as long-term rates fell this year, the closed-end funds are once again trading at steep discounts. After shrinking to 6 percent earlier this year, the discount is now hovering at 9 percent. Dozens of funds sport tantalizing discounts of 15 percent to 20 percent.

George Foot, a partner in Newgate Management Associates, a New York investment firm, is convinced now is the time to "jump in with both feet and grab everything you can get your hands on."

Why aren't there more eager buyers, willing to pay full freight for these funds?

Municipal bond funds are a tough sell on Wall Street right now. For one thing, there's a lot of discussion on the flat tax proposal by Rep. Dick Armey, R-Texas. The proposal would exempt individuals from paying tax on any dividends or capital gains. If the measure should become law, municipal bonds, now prized for their tax exemption, would lose their edge over other types of bonds. The possibility that Orange County, Calif., will not make its debtors whole has also sent shudders through the market.

Some investors, who saw bond funds plummet in val-

GET A JOB

1995 college graduates are finding new job opportunities, improved outlook

By Lisa Genasci
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Like other prospective business school graduates, Pilar Joyce needed a job. From October to February she went through about 40 interviews and eventually got three offers.

Joyce will soon start a management training job with Rubbermaid Inc. in Knoxville, Tenn., a position she hopes will allow her to make a difference and to use her four languages.

"I felt I had the potential to shine" at Rubbermaid, said Joyce, a 1995 graduate of the Fuqua School of Business at Duke University in Durham, N.C.

Joyce's experience is similar to that of many other members of this year's graduating class, who find more choices in an improved job market.

The climate has changed from the early 1990s, when recession meant many companies stopped recruiting new graduates, and employees in general felt less secure in their jobs.

This year's offers don't necessarily include the years of security graduates could previously take for granted. But many of the new positions will mean more of an immediate hands-on role at a company, a chance to acquire new skills and often better working conditions, career development personnel say.

"Students want to be in an interesting, challenging environment and they want to make a difference," said Elizabeth Katsivelos, assistant dean and director of MBA (masters of business administration) career services at Columbia University's business school.

"And the more attractive opportunities provide international experience early on."

Among Fuqua students, according to career services director Dan Nagy, "there has been a strong interest over the last couple of years to go into business and have a significant impact."

Companies are responding to that desire by breaking mammoth enterprises into smaller units where individuals have more control, management consultants say.

"Employees have heard the message from employers that they are now responsible for their own careers," said Maury Hanigan of Hanigan Consulting Group. "Any company that comes in with the old attitude of 'come in and pay your dues and it will pay off down the line' are losing out. The students are saying that isn't soon enough. There might not be a 'down the line' and future employers might think all they are capable of is low-level work."

For the second consecutive year, recruiting by major companies on college campuses has increased, up over the last 12 months by 9 percent, Hanigan said.

According to the National Association of Colleges and Employers in Bethlehem, Pa., 53 percent of colleges reported an increase in on-campus recruiting this year, while 29 percent said the level remained the same.

"The companies that cut their recruiting during the early 1990s are seeing they don't have the management pipeline they need and are trying to bring in new skills, capabilities and talents," Hanigan said.

Companies, she said, are looking for all kinds of graduates. She has seen a 38 percent increase in recruiting for students with doctorates and masters degrees in science.

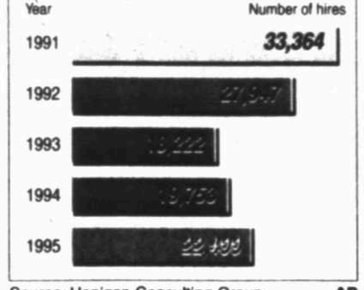

"Companies are feeling confident about their business results," Hanigan said. "They are willing once again to make investments in research and development."

Another change Hanigan and others have seen this year is that consulting firms are taking large numbers of business school graduates, competing head-to-head with the financial institutions that in previous years dominated campus recruiting.

At some business schools, consulting firms have taken as many as 30 percent of the graduating class, she said. At the same time, because of last year's losses among Wall Street firms, there have been significant declines in hiring by investment banks.

At Columbia, Citibank historically employed the largest number of graduates, but this year that top spot was occupied by the management consulting

Waiting hard for disgruntled retirees

Yields for retirees, IDS Equity Value B funds discussed

By Kenneth Hooker
N.Y. Times News Service

Q. In July 1989 I bought 4,545 shares of Colonial Municipal Income Trust, paying $45,693. At the time, the tax-exempt feature and the annual dividends of $3,270 were very attractive. As these were municipal bonds, only a little volatility was envisioned. Today my broker has somehow labeled this position as common stock. I am now retired, the yield on my initial investment has fallen to 5.25 percent, and the value of my shares is down to $32,951, which is somewhat frightening. It makes CDs paying 6.5 percent to 7.5 percent look much better.

Each year my statement shows the dollar amount of my dividends, but no mention is made of the principal loss. The bottom line is that I feel misled. The broker knew I was not interested in stocks. My feelings are that this should be taken up with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Fortunately, I have other sound assets and can absorb this loss. What do you suggest? J.M., Lake San Marcos, Calif.

A. While Colonial Municipal Income Trust is technically a stock, with shares trading on the New York Stock Exchange, the shares represent ownership of a closed-end mutual fund, which is entirely invested in municipal bonds. When you bought in, things were going well for this fund, and you paid a double-digit premium over net asset value (not to mention the broker's commission). The shares now trade at a 4.37 percent discount. Those factors explain a good percentage of your principal loss.

The rest of the principal loss is a function of shrinkage in net asset value. The reason the payout on this fund has been so handsome (relative to its peers) is that it invests most of its assets in nonrated bond issues, which is to say, junk municipal bonds. As of the last report from Morningstar Closed-End funds, bonds comprising 7.7 percent of the fund's portfolio were not making interest payments. Such risks have caused the shrinkage of net asset value from $8.55 at the end of 1989 to the current $7.32 per share.

Despite these woes, the fund shows a five-year record of 5.87 percent average annual total returns, and since the dividends have been tax-free, this translates into the equivalent of much higher gains on a taxable basis. Since you apparently can afford the risk, My suggestion would be to wait for a more favorable market climate before selling.

As far as going to the SEC with this, I think it would be bootless.

Q. On March 7, 1994, I invested $20,000 in the IDS Strategy Equity fund, since renamed IDS Equity Value B fund. As of May 18, the value had grown to $21,186. What gives? What do you think of this fund? J.N., San Diego, Calif.

A. Although this fund's recent performance hasn't been all that bad, there is no set of statistics I can find to justify your representative's claims. While this fund has a solid above-average long-term record, it wasn't among the pacesetters for its peer group either in 1994 or in the early running this year. For 1994, this growth and income fund lost 3.33 percent, compared to a loss of .72 percent for the average growth and income fund tracked by Lipper Analytical Services Inc. Through May 25 of this year, Lipper reports an 11.65 percent gain, which compares to an average of 13.61 percent for its peers. Over 12 months, the fund has gained 9.10 percent, compared to a peer group average of 13.83 percent. Since the results of growth and income funds tend to bunch together, these numbers, indeed, put your holding in the bottom 20 percent of its peer group for 12-month performance, and quite close to it on a year-to-date basis.

But all of that doesn't mean you should sell. Presumably you bought into this fund for its conservative val-

The nasty word on all investors' minds

By David Pauly
Bloomberg Business News

NEW YORK — Recession. The nasty word was on everybody's mind today — with reason.

The government reported that the U.S. economy lost jobs in May for the second month in a row. It also said its list of "leading" economic indicators fell for the third straight month.

"The odds of a recession are 40 percent," said Robert Dederick, an economics consultant at Northern Trust Co. in Chicago.

A recession would bring lower interest rates, and the bond market today continued to lead in that direction. The benchmark 30-year Treasury bond gained about $13 for each $1,000 in face value. That reduced the bond's yield to 6.52 percent, compared with 8.16 percent

Business best-sellers reflect mood of country

N.Y. Times News Service

THE business best-seller list has settled into summer somnolence, with few changes since last month. The naughty American public continues to spend no small portion of its ever-flattening wages seeking wisdom between the covers. The hard covers, that is, of "The Seven Spiritual Laws of Success," which remains at No.1.

Sneaking into the fray, at No.14, is John Allen Paulos's latest contribution to his innumeracy oeuvre, "A Mathematician Looks at the Newspaper" (Basic Books, $18), in which the author continues to encourage readers to beat up on themselves for having skipped out on higher math. It is a rich, but as the current book shows, exhaustible topic.

Apparently inexhaustible is anxiety over the moral decline and fall of the American people. This concern comes from an unusual source in "Silent Sabotage: Rescuing Our Careers, Our Companies and Our Lives From the Creeping Paralysis of Anger and Bitterness" (Amacom, $19.95). The author, William J. Morin, runs Drake Beam Morin, a "leading organizational and individual transition consulting firm," it says on the book jacket. This means Mr. Morin most likely meets people who are most likely quite fearful about the future — "organization and individual transition" often being a euphemism for dismissals. He observes rudderless, untrusting and untrustworthy institutions and individuals.

On the plus side, he talks about values without once mentioning Newt Gingrich, the Christian Coalition or the nefarious influence of rap music. On the minus side, he thinks business is the only major institution in a position to salve the nation's soul, curiously underestimating the role the companies have played the last few years in undermining middle-class faith in the social contract. In one way he may be right, however; Americans feel best about themselves when they're fighting a just war or when the economy is booming. In this country, only business can drive that boom.

While we're on a decline-and-fall theme, isn't it enough of an insult to the English language that buzzwords exist? Do we really need a guide likely to encourage their dispersal? Actually, Charles B. Wendel and Elaine Svensson, the authors of "Business Buzzwords: Everything You Need to Know to Speak the Lingo of the 90's" (Amacom, $16.95), do perform a valuable service. They synopsize the work of the leading management gurus, thus sparing readers the cost of going to the sources.

Readers may romp through Drucker, Senge, Handy, Peters and everyone else lickety-split, much as undergraduates once did when they read Bertrand Russell's great "History of Western Philosophy" in lieu of the draggy, impenetrable originals. The book gives instruction on how to recognize a meaningful buzzword as well as how to create one. And you thought great buzzwords were pure inspiration.

The entry on "downsizing" is instructive: related words include "de-massing, denominator management, early retirement, reductions-in-force, re-engineering, restructuring, retrenchment" and, a personal favorite, "right-sizing." George Orwell, phone home.

Employees who feel they have been unfairly right-sized may want to consult "Your Rights in the Workplace: An Employee Guide to Legal Protection," by Richard Strohm (Career Press, $8.95). The book includes a good basic introduction to employment law and includes a survey of workplace regulations. The pep talk at the beginning about hiring a lawyer is probably focused too heavily on potential litigation; most people seeking justice from their former employers would be better off pursuing an equitable settlement rather than litigation. A good negotiator's price is far above rubies.

Clearly, a great deal of energy went into "Cracking the Corporate Closet" (Harper Business, $23), possibly most of it into constructing a subtitle so long that the authors — all three, count 'em — must have thought that if they just kept writing, a focus for the book would emerge.

Daniel Baker, Sean Strub, Bill Henning and the gang at the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force surveyed some 200 companies on lesbian and gay issues on whether they provided things like domestic-partner benefits and AIDS education and had gay and lesbian employee groups. The result is typical of "best companies" books: old news, lists, no interpretation and no context. Hearsay is a lot more useful.

Also not very satisfying is Kevin Maney's "Megamedia Shakeout: The Inside Story of the Leaders and the Losers in the Exploding Communications Industry" (John Wiley, $24.95). But it has the virtue of being unsatisfying largely because the story is unfinished.

NASTY: Fed may restore optimism

(From 4C)

last November.

Stock investors couldn't quite decide what the future would bring. They beat up on industrial stocks that ride up and down with the economy but pushed up computer-related stocks with better prospects for long-term growth.

Recessions are a fact of economic life. Businesses and consumers always get cocky when the economy is expanding. They buy a lot and demand a lot of credit. That raises prices and interest rates and cools things off.

For the past 16 months, the Federal Reserve has been trying to avoid this. It raised short-term interest rates seven times hoping to contain inflation while keeping the economy growing, though at a slower rate.

Bond and stock investors in recent months have bet the Fed would succeed. Stock prices have risen about 16 percent so far this year as bond prices increases and yields fell.

People lost some of that confidence today. The Labor Department reported that the economy lost 101,000 jobs in May. A Bloomberg Business News poll of economists predicted a gain of 166,000. U.S. jobs increased at a pace of just 114,000 in the first five months of the year, less than half of the average monthly gain of 294,000 in 1994.

It could be that the Fed will restore some optimism by starting to cut interest rates. Former Treasury Secretary William Simon said the country's banks may beat the policymakers to the punch by cutting their lending rates. "The Fed is a follower," Simon said.

The Fed continues to fix the interest on overnight loans among banks at 6 percent. This shortest of short-term rates should be one of the lowest. Yet the yield on every U.S. government security except the 30-year bond is less than 6 percent.

Mortgage rates already have declined; that could boost home sales later this year. Lower interest rates also might put some pep in car sales, which have declined in recent weeks.

If there is a recession around the corner, it will not have been caused by inflation. In the first quarter, consumer prices rose at an annual rate of 3.2 percent — not really enough to stop consumers from buying and companies from expanding.

FUNDS: No guarantees discounts will shrink

ue last year, continue to be wary of putting money in the market, while others have decided to cash out after this year's rally. No one, it seems, wants to bet too heavily on the direction of interest rates, which could always defy conventional wisdom and head higher again.

People who share some or all of these fears will be rightfully wary of the market. But Foot peers through the dark clouds and sees dollar signs. He points to much improved net asset values on the closed-end funds and argues that the share prices will catch up sooner or later. Many of the funds' yields are close to those on 30-year taxable bonds, which throw off taxable income.

Even Joe Mysak, the not-so-optimistic editor of Grant's Municipal Bond Observer, concedes the wide difference between net asset values and share prices could be attractive. "Whenever they widen out, you've got to take a look," he said.

But before you rush out to buy, remember that there is no guarantee the discounts will shrink or disappear. While closed-end municipal bond funds have tended toward small discounts or slight premiums over the last few years, investors could see even deeper discounts than now if the talk about a flat tax grows louder or if the overall bond market turns south.

'The younger the portfolio, the more volatile the fund, the deeper the discount.'

— Tricia Rothschild, fund analyst

"You may get to buy them cheaper," warned Ron Olin, the president of Deep Discount Advisors, an Asheville, N.C., investment firm. He predicts more discounts of 20 percent in the months to come.

"There's no point in buying anything not in the double digits," Foot said. But investors should make sure the fund's discount is abnormally large and likely to narrow. The best way to do that is to compare the current discount with the fund's average discount for the last year or so. Plenty of funds trade at a consistent discount. The Municipal Advantage Fund, for example, has traded at an average discount of 13 percent for the last year.

Some funds trade at steep discounts because they are very sensitive to moves in interest rates, meaning significant losses if rates climb. Such funds generally went public within the last few years and have portfolios filled with low-yielding bonds.

"The younger the portfolio, the more volatile the fund, the deeper the discount," said Tricia Oehme Rothschild, an analyst with Morningstar Inc., the Chicago research firm. The net asset value of the Paine Webber Premier Tax-Free Income Fund, begun in late 1992, had an 18 percent gain in 1993 when interest rates fell. But the fund lost nearly 12 percent of its value last year. It now trades at a 19 percent discount.

Among the funds trading at an unusually high discount and worth considering, according to Foot, is Intercapital Quality Municipal Securities. The fund, with a yield of nearly 7 percent, is trading at a discount of 17 percent, while its average was 11 percent last year. Ms. Rothschild likes the Muniyield Fund, which has among the best three-year returns of the group. It is selling at a discount of roughly 13 percent, compared with 10 percent last year.

Anyone who decides to buy should check out the prospective fund's borrowing habits. Unlike their open-end cousins, closed-end funds can borrow heavily to add to the cash supplied by investors. "That can really boost returns in a rallying market," Ms. Rothschild said. "But the downs are greater in a falling market."

Most closed-end funds leverage their assets by borrowing and thus are much riskier investments than open-end funds. In the drubbing of the municipal market last year, leveraged closed-end funds fell in net asset value by 10 percent on average — twice the loss of their open-end counterparts.

Investors who can withstand volatility, though, can make more money with leveraged municipal funds. The average leveraged closed-end fund gained 9 percent annually over the last three years, which included a serious bear market, compared with just 7 percent for the average open-end fund, according to Morningstar.

A leveraged fund may have trouble, though, maintaining its dividend. If the difference becomes too narrow between what the fund pays to borrow and what it makes investing in municipal bonds, the manager may see no choice but to cut the dividend.

JOBS: Uncertain grads seek consultants

(From 4C)

firm Booz Allen & Hamilton, Inc., which hired 25 graduates Katsivelos said.

Still, unlike other business schools, Columbia hasn't seen a decline this year in the percentage of graduates moving into financial services. About 35 percent have accepted jobs in investment banking and 22 percent chose jobs in consulting, up from 16 percent last year, she said.

Overall, preliminary figures show about 85 percent of the 600 graduates in this year's class already have jobs.

At Fuqua, company recruiting has risen about 60 percent over the past two years, Nagy said. Although hires by financial institutions are down from 22 percent to 12 percent, consulting and manufacturing firms have picked up the slack, he said.

And pay is getting better. With the market more competitive for graduates, he said, many companies are offering signing bonuses of anywhere from $2,000 to $50,000, bringing some salary packages into six figures. The average base salary for a graduate this year is $63,500, he said.

At the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School, about 86 percent of the graduating class has at least one job offer, according to preliminary results from a placement survey, said Alysa Polkes, assistant director of career development.

"Things look rosy this year," she said. "It looks like we have hit a record for placement at this time of year."

Once again, consulting jobs were leading the way, with one-third of Wharton students accepting jobs in that field. Besides high salaries, consulting firms offer the attraction of not having to specialize right away, Polkes said.

"Students will be dealing with a wide variety of problems so it's good preparation for other jobs" Polkes said. "It's the industry de jour, the hot thing to do, especially given fact Wall Street is not as profitable."

Hanigan said business school graduates who aren't certain about the industry they want to pursue often choose consulting.

"MBAs understand that once they accept a job, for example, in the telecommunications industry, they are pegged to that industry," she said. "Consulting will let them learn more about a specific industry and they can make a career choice later on."

Companies recruiting on campuses, however, are increasingly looking for specific skills, technical knowledge and prior work experience, recruiters said.

After cutting thousands of employees over the past two years and staying away from most college campuses, International Business Machines Corp. is looking this year to hire between 2,000 and 3,000 graduates, said a company spokesman, Tom Wesdorp.

The company has been recruiting on 58 campuses nationwide, many of them technology schools, he said. IBM particularly wants graduates proficient in new software.

General Motors Corp. has also returned to the college campuses this year, said Betty Anderson, the company's director of education relations.

Like IBM, the company's needs are primarily for skilled and experienced professionals from the top technology schools, Anderson said.

"Because there was a period of time during which we were not hiring, we now need professionals for certain projects," she said.

And because team work has become an important part of the business, GM is looking for employees who communicate well both orally and in writing, she said.

But despite the new focus on technology, Hanigan said her research has shown most business school students are not prepared. A survey of 250 business school students showed that between 70 percent and 75 percent did not use the Internet at all — or used it only for sending e-mail to their friends.

RETIREES: Slowness attributed to heavy financial commitment

(From 4C)

ue-oriented approach to investing and its modest turnover rate. The latter signifies the fund manager's willingness to stick with his bets whatever the market shenanigans may be. Morningstar Mutual Funds attributes the recent underperformance to a heavy commitment to financials and unfortunate selections in the international segment of the portfolio, but says that it presents "a good balance of risk and reward" and should "stand up well as a core holding." Morningstar's figures show above-average or top performance in five of the last 10 full years, and no year in which the fund ended up among the bottom performers.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, JUNE 5, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You can wield much more influence by remaining in the background. If others find out what you are up to, they could organize considerable opposition. Play your cards close to your vest! Those who have worked long and hard for success will see their dreams come true. A desire to build something — perhaps your own home—requires careful reflection. Know the true costs involved. Romance blossoms between good friends.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: TV producer Bill Moyers, actress Nancy Stafford, hockey player Andre Lacroix, rapper Marky Mark.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Luck comes to those who are as daring as they are ingenious. Act promptly. A trend could end sooner than expected. Dining with that special person will make this evening a night to remember.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Play along with someone who acts as if there is nothing going on. But see to it that you rake in the profits coming to you. Recent family developments have reinforced your determination.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Plan every move with the greatest care, making certain that no one but your closest allies knows what is going on. Your creative or artistic talents are a valuable asset.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The personal side of life is emphasized. Avoid revealing the details of your family's affairs or finances to your co-workers. Seek experts' advice before changing your investment strategy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Guard against fuzzy thinking. Having specific goals will guide you straight to prominence. A tender approach will convince loved one that your heart is in the right place.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A confidential agreement will benefit everyone involved. Remain tight-lipped about what has been discussed behind closed doors. Those in the market for home furnishings can find excellent bargains.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your quick reactions put you ahead of the competition. Once again, you beat them to the punch. A party or special meeting introduces you to fascinating new people. Love at first sight is possible.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Heed your instincts; appearances can be deceiving. Cultivate a frugal mindset. Small economies can add up to big savings. Catch up on your rest tonight. A very busy week lies ahead.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The heavier the pressure to buy, lend or underwrite a risky venture, the more it should be resisted. Your keen judgment is very much in evidence this afternoon.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take nothing for granted. In a rapidly-changing world, new demands could suddenly be made on your resources. Pay more attention to the worthy people around you, discussing complex problems only with close friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The spotlight is on your hopes and dreams. Make a special effort to broaden your social horizons. You may be able to play a more important role in community affairs. Costs continue to rise.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Moving ahead in business or romance is linked to your being more sociable. Extend yourself; make others feel at ease. Better money management will improve the financial picture.

WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ ANSWERS

Q. 1 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠A 8 ♡A K Q J 7 ◇A J 8 5 ♣A 10

The bidding has proceeded:

| SOUTH | WEST | NORTH | EAST |
|---|---|---|---|
| 2♡ | Pass | 2NT | Pass |
| 3◇ | Pass | 3♡ | Pass |
| ? | | | |

What do you bid now?

A - Partner's correction does not promise anything of value, nor does it guarantee three hearts. Under the circumstances we would rule out four hearts as a final contract. Our choice would be three no trump, where as little as the queen of diamonds with partner might be enough and our 150 honors will soften the blow should the contract fail.

Q. 2 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠A K J 7 6 5 ♡J 3 2 ◇K 6 ♣8 4

The bidding has proceeded:

| NORTH | EAST | SOUTH | WEST |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1♡ | Pass | 1♠ | Pass |
| 3♡ | Pass | 3♠ | Pass |
| 4◇ | Pass | ? | |

What do you bid now?

A - Partner can hardly have less than six almost solid hearts and the ace of diamonds for this auction, which leaves room for a high club honor as well. You have a superb hand for partner, and slam should be laydown as long as you don't have two fast club losers. Jump to five hearts, asking partner to bid on with control of the unbid suit.

Q. 3 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠K 9 5 ♡5 ◇K J 9 8 4 3 ♣A Q 8

The bidding has proceeded:

| NORTH | EAST | SOUTH | WEST |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1♠ | Pass | 1◇ | Pass |
| 1NT | Pass | ? | |

What do you bid now?

A - If partner has only one heart stopper and no ace of diamonds, three no trump could be a terrible contract. You can stress the unbalanced nature of your hand by making a forcing jump to three diamonds. Should partner persevere with three no trump, you will have arrived at your final goal, but you can accept that with a greater degree of comfort. (If three diamonds is only invitational in your methods, we suggest you make a slightly fancy rebid of two spades to set up a game force.)

Q. 4 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠K Q J 5 ♡K 9 8 ◇10 6 5 4 2 ♣6

The bidding has proceeded:

| NORTH | EAST | SOUTH | WEST |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1♠ | Pass | 1◇ | Pass |
| 1NT | Pass | ? | |

What do you bid now?

A - With only nine points in high cards and no fit opposite a partner who has announced a balanced minimum, where would you like to go? Pass, and let partner play in what should be a comfortable contract.

Q. 5 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠9 5 ♡Q 10 9 3 ◇Q 7 ♣A K 10 6 5

The bidding has proceeded:

| NORTH | EAST | SOUTH | WEST |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1◇ | 1♠ | 2♣ | Pass |
| 2◇ | Pass | ? | |

What action do you take?

A - Partner is expecting another bid from you, so don't pass in this awkward situation. The only action that makes any sense is to raise partner with your doubleton honor. Bid three diamonds. That does not preclude you from finding a heart fit if it exists.

Q. 6 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠9 5 ♡7 6 ◇10 6 3 ♣A K 9 8 7 4

Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What action do you take?

A - Throw away the point-count book. You are bringing partner five or six tricks, so he should have play for three no trump. Bid it.

Filmmaker tries to hold foul language, violence to minimum in 'Glass Shield'

LOS ANGELES — Independent filmmaker Charles Burnett tried to keep violence and foul language to a minimum in "The Glass Shield."

The drama released Friday co-stars Michael Boatman, of "China Beach," as a rookie sheriff's deputy who blows the whistle on corruption.

Graphic films have caused "a backlash in the black community," said Burnett, whose films include "To Sleep With Anger" and "Killer of Sheep."

"There are a lot of people who don't go to the show anymore because of the very fact that there's something denigrating and embarrassing about it, image-wise," he said.

Being an independent filmmaker has proven a good moral lesson for his two children.

"If it's a struggle, they see that things don't come easy," Burnett said. "They — and I — appreciate that it isn't always comfortable."

LONDON — The Duchess of York may be going Hollywood.

The former Sarah Ferguson talked to studio chiefs in Los Angeles last week about co-producing a film covering the early life of Queen Victoria, said Michael Hirst, the scriptwriter.

Former Sarah Ferguson may be going Hollywood.

The Sunday Times quoted Hirst as saying she had "agreed in principle" during a meeting Thursday. She was offered a day-to-day role and would get a share of the profits and a fixed fee, the newspaper said.

"The duchess has had discussions, but there is no deal on the table and no specific role has been agreed," a spokesman told Press Association, the British news agency.

The duchess, who separated from Prince Andrew in 1992, said last week she will have to cut back on her charity work and concentrate on improving her finances.

RADNOR, Pa. — Paul Reiser's hopping mad about the new time slot for "Mad About You."

Angela Lansbury and Roseanne aren't too pleased about the fall shuffle, either.

Reiser was so angry over NBC's decision to move "Mad About You" for a fourth time — from Thursdays at 8 p.m. to Sundays at 8 p.m. — that he didn't show up for the network's presentation to advertisers, said the show's executive producer, Danny Jacobson.

"He was really upset," Jacobson said in the June 10 issue of TV Guide.

NBC programming executive Preston Beckman said the show should be able to beat the competition — ABC's "Lois & Clark" and CBS's "Cybill." If not, he said, NBC will move it.

"Cybill" moves into the slot for Lansbury's "Murder, She Wrote," which CBS is transferring to Thursdays at 8 p.m. "We're very disappointed and in shock," said David Shaw, Lansbury's son and executive producer.

Roseanne's ABC show of the same name moves from 9 p.m. to 8 p.m. on Thursdays. She said she won't soften the content because of the earlier hour.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Fresh out of the hospital, Travis Tritt is skipping Fan Fair this week.

The country star collapsed Friday night after an eight-hour recording session. He was treated for severe exhaustion and dehydration and released from a hospital Saturday, said his publicist, Nancy Russell.

Besides the marathon studio session, Tritt had been continuing with appearances despite an acute lung infection he got in May, Russell said.

Tritt had to cancel appearances at the International Country Music Fan Fair, a weeklong festival that begins Monday in Nashville, Russell said.

His 1991 album "It's All About to Change" sold two million copies. He has two other platinum albums.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Charlie Pride, Marty Stuart and Martina McBride will take the fan-voted TNN Music City News Country Awards to the air.

They'll serve as co-hosts for the show Monday night on cable's The Nashville Network.

Alan Jackson is the leading nominee with seven. He goes against Vince Gill, Reba McEntire, Ricky Van Shelton and George Strait for entertainer of the year.

Performers at the show plan to answer questions on Prodigy's music bulletin board during the broadcast from the Grand Ole Opry House.

ATLANTA — Mother Teresa is Atlanta-bound.

The Nobel laureate will attend a blessing June 12 of an AIDS hospice her charity set up here last year for poor women, a spokesman for the Roman Catholic archdiocese said Saturday.

Rate & Credit Policies

Rate charges are determined at the time of placement. All ads accepted are subject to credit approval. Some classified categories require payment in advance. Credit applications are also required for business accounts. Yearly contract agreements are available. The Midland Reporter-Telegram reserves the right to correctly classify and edit all copy or to reject or cancel any advertisement at any time.

Cancellations

The price of your ad will be based on the number of days published according to our rate structure. Call (915) 682-6222 - ask for your cancellation number. This is your record of cancellation and it is important that you have it in the event of any misunderstanding or adjustment. "Super Seller" and "Real Wheel Deal" ads may be cancelled, but are non-adjustable and non-refundable.

Errors and Adjustments

Please check your ad the first day that it appears to be sure that all of the information is correct. This will ensure that your ad is exactly what you want readers to see. Call us the first day if you find an error at 915-682-6222. To report an error in Saturday's edition call Saturday morning between 8a.m. and 10a.m. Errors in Sunday's edition should be reported on Monday morning after 8:00 a.m. We must limit our financial responsiblity, if any, to the charge for the word or space, and cannot be held responsible for incorrect ads after the first day of publication.

Omissions of Ads

The Midland Reporter-Telegram assumes no financial responsiblity in an ad beyond the cost of the ad itself, and no responsiblity for the omission of an ad.

FREE BEE
FREE CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING
If your are a private individual selling one item for $50 or less you can place a 3 line classified advertisement for 4 days absolutely FREE in the Midland Reporter-Telegram.
