Municipal elections

Midlanders will go to the polls Saturday to take part in four contested races.

Everyone will have the opportunity to vote in the mayor's race, which pits incumbent J.D. Faircloth against businessman Bobby Burns. Residents residing in District 3 will vote for a new City Council member, either Ed Vogler or Tom Dollahite. Incumbent Buddy Sipes is not seeking re-election.

Persons living in District 6 of the Midland Independent School District will cast ballots for school trustee. Incumbent Gary Willis is being challenged by Dianne Anderson and Leonard Monroe.

Finally, Midlanders also will vote for Midland College trustee, Place 4. Incumbent Parker Humes is being opposed by Hugh White.

Singapore delivers stinging last words on international debate

By Bob Deans
N.Y. Times News Service

SINGAPORE — In an act destined to energize the debate over crime and punishment in America, Singapore on Thursday lashed U.S. teenager Michael Fay four times on the bare buttocks with a rattan cane.

The flogging prompted a carefully worded rebuke from President Clinton, who called it a mistake, and touched off another round of call-in radio and television exchanges by Americans asking whether such corporal punishment in the United States would violate individual rights or help deter crime.

Polls indicate a significant percentage of Americans, weary of high crime rates and envying Singapore's relatively safe streets, supported the judgment by a Singapore court that Fay should be flogged.

Clinton, who had publicly asked Singapore not to cane Fay, had said many people supporting the sentence did not understand the severity of the punishment. Human rights and doctors organizations likened it to torture.

"I think it was a mistake . . . not only because of the nature of the punishment related to the crime, but be-

Dad accidentally runs over, kills son, 3

By Michael Kashgarian

A 3-year-old Midland boy was killed when his father accidentally backed a truck tractor over the toddler on Thursday.

Peter Clegg was run over about 1:40 p.m. by a 1984 Weststar truck in the family's front yard at 700 Ruby Drive, police at the scene reported.

George Larry Clegg, 35, "was backing out and didn't know his son was behind the vehicle," police Sgt. David Garcia said.

"It's just a real unfortunate accident," Garcia said.

The death was described as instantaneous. The majority of injury was to the toddler's head, officials said. The boy was pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

A neighbor, Ronnie Havard, said he heard screaming and went outside to investigate. He said the boy's body had been badly disfigured.

Jury rules against anti-abortion groups in lawsuit filed by clinics

HOUSTON (AP) — Four anti-abortion groups illegally conspired to try to put 10 women's clinics out of business when they protested outside the facilities during the Republican National Convention in Houston two years ago, a Harris County jury decided Thursday.

After deliberating for seven days, the Harris County jury, in a 10-2 verdict, awarded plaintiffs in the lawsuit $204,585 in actual damages.

"We're very, very happy. We're very pleased for our community that this kind of conduct won't be tolerated," said Neal Manne, attorney for Planned Parenthood of Southeast Texas, the lead plaintiff in the case, which also sought $1 million in punitive damages.

The same jury returns this morning to consider how much, if any, punitive damages to award. Testimony immediately began in

National oil lobby group's chief bemoans loss of industry spirit

By John Paul Pitts

The oil industry may be losing money and jobs, but it is also losing spirit, according to the president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA).

"The loss of spirit is a far bigger loss," George Alcorn told the Permian Basin Petroleum Association Thursday at the final event of Energy Appreciation Week.

Oilmen were losing spirit because of endless battles in Washington and the public's continuing negative attitude toward the industry, said Alcorn, a Houston oilman and head of the national association that represents independent producers.

"It is politically correct to be against the oil industry today. We need to let the government

San Antonio-based H.E.B. supermarket chain eyes city site

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Officials with the H.E.B. supermarket chain have signed contracts for a 90-day option to purchase most of the La Villita Plaza, 3200 block of West Wadley Ave., according to the shopping center's leasing manger.

Linda Russell said H.E.B. has secured an option to purchase the property in the future. The option-to-purchase contracts for the land have been made between H.E.B. — a San Antonio-based chain — and American National Insurance Co. — owners of the La Villita property — she said.

Ms. Russell said she cannot divulge further details of H.E.B.'s plans.

If H.E.B. officials choose to establish a store there, one company that probably will not be moving from the La Villita Plaza is Ski Skeller Sports, according to Ski Skeller employee Scott Ragan.

"We're not planning on moving. We own our building," he said.

Ski Skeller is the only privately owned property in the center, Ragan said. "Forty-thousand cars a month enter our parking lot," he said. "If they (H.E.B.) want to offer us ($2 million or $3 million) to move, maybe we'll think about it," he said.

The plan may be to leave the Ski Skeller building standing as "the only remaining part of the complex," he said.

Merchants at the plaza recently were notified that H.E.B. is studying the possibility of establishing the store. They were told it is only a possibility at present, according to one store manager who asked not to be identified.

H.E.B. officials did not confirm reports that they are studying the possibility of a Midland store and refused to return calls when contacted Thursday.

H.E.B. has close to 200 stores — that employ about 30,000 people — and

Fighting closes airport in Rwandan capital; government signs cease-fire

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — The only regular aid flights to Rwanda were suspended Thursday after a Canadian military cargo plane was fired on at Kigali's airport, the embattled capital's only link with the outside world.

The Rwandan government, meanwhile, signed a cease-fire Thursday with rebels following two days of talks in neighboring Tanzania called by Tanzanian President Ali Hassan Mwinyi, Radio Tanzania reported as monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp.

It wasn't immediately clear whether word of the cease-fire had reached combatants.

Heavy shelling rocked Kigali for the third straight day as rebels and government forces fought for control.

The Canadian plane, a Hercules C-130, had just taxied to a halt and crewmen were beginning to unload its cargo of biscuits and bottled water when shots were fired across the tarmac, said Mark Doyle of the BBC, who was a passenger.

"The loadmaster shouted, 'Let's get out of here,' and the plane raced off with the rear cargo door still down," Doyle said.

There were no injuries.

Abdul Kabia, a U.N. spokesman, said by telephone from Kigali that Gen. Romeo Dallaire, the Canadian U.N. commander, suspended all aid flights until "the situation at the airport is clarified."

Kabia and Capt. Stephane Grenier, a spokesman for the Canadian forces, said it was not clear who shot at the plane. Kabia said Dallaire sent stern protests to both the rebel Rwandan Patriotic Front and the Rwandan army.

The army and the rebels have been trading small-arms fire and mortar shells across the airport for days. But under an agreement worked out by Dallaire, they usually stop shooting long enough to allow U.N. planes to land and take off.

The Canadian plane has been making two flights a day from Nairobi to Kigali with supplies for the 450 U.N. peacekeepers still there.

Autonomy stutters forward

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — Palestinians waited all day in the hot sun Thursday for PLO commanders to take over the new police headquarters. But nobody showed up.

Relatives waited for prisoners to be released, but tensions rose while the release was delayed. Israeli soldiers dismantled a base, but there was no troop withdrawal.

It was a halting start to the promised new reality a day after the autonomy agreement was signed in Cairo, Egypt, by PLO leader Yasser Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

Outside the main Gaza army base that was being dismantled, at the Nahal Oz checkpoint where families waited for released prisoners and in the would-be seat of government in Jericho, reactions were varied.

Some residents shared jokes and other Palestinians held quiet discussions with troops. At another extreme, rock-throwing Palestinian youths clashed with Israeli soldiers who swung riot batons, and Israeli police threw concussion grenades.

At the army's division headquarters, soldiers chatted with Palestinians through the chain-link fence. On one soldier's bulletproof vest was written the message, "No one gets out of here alive."

A Palestinian asked a soldier in Hebrew, "When are you leaving?" and was told, "You have to ask the PLO, but for now it belongs to us."

Inside the compound, Israel shut down the central Gaza Prison. It transferred 500 inmates to other prisons and released 200.

Outside, Palestinian youths hurled stones at a truck removing an Israeli army generator and lobbed rocks inside the fenced compound. Soldiers threw back brick-sized chunks of rock and asphalt.

It was a scene repeated again and again after Palestinians in celebratory moods found little evidence of the changes they had hoped to see after 27 years of Israeli occupation ended.

Pessimism also was high in Jerusalem.

Air, ground battles plunge Yemen into civil war

■ Officials on both sides say it's worst fighting since North, South Yemen united in 1990.

Associated Press

SAN'A, Yemen — Yemen thundered with exploding bombs and artillery shells Thursday after a simmering feud between the north and south of the impoverished nation blew up into civil war.

Fighting blazed near the presidential palace and in other parts of Yemen, while warplanes hit targets in the regional strongholds, San'a in the north and Aden in the south. The southern military command claimed it shot down two northern jets that attacked Aden.

There was no way to estimate casualties.

Officials on both sides said it was the worst fighting in this nation at the southern corner of the Arabian Peninsula since conservative North Yemen and socialist South Yemen united on May 22, 1990.

The nation of 14 million people, the peninsula's first democratic republic since parliamentary elections a year ago, promised to be an island of pluralism in a region of monarchs and other authoritarian rulers.

But differences over power-sharing prevented integration of the armed forces. With army units from each region based in the other in a failed attempt to cement the union, a power struggle between President Ali Abdullah Saleh, a northerner, and Vice President Ali Salem al-Beidh, a southerner, degenerated into escalalting military clashes.

In a statement read Thursday over the government-run San'a Radio, Saleh ordered a 30-day state of emergency across the country. Later, the radio broadcast an edict banning the carrying of arms or shooting in the streets of the capital. There was no sign that the ban had any effect.

The southern military command said that late Wednesday northern warplanes attacked the airport in Aden and other districts of the city, which was capital of former South Yemen. European diplomats in San'a also reported air attacks on Aden.

Residents in San'a, including European diplomats, said southern air force jets struck the international airport and the presidential palace at daybreak Thursday. Bright streaks of anti-aircraft fire laced the sky over thousands of mud-brick villas in San'a.

Authorities closed the airport after the raid, sending stranded passengers back to downtown hotels.

Smoke rose from the vicinity of the presidential palace, in the rim of the San'a basin. One diplomat said southern troops shelled the compound with artillery. It was not clear if Saleh was inside.

Artillery explosions also could be heard to the south of San'a, and small-arms fire echoed in the city's neighborhoods. Fighting also was reported on the main road leading to the Red Sea port of Hodeida and in the area around the presidential palace on the city's southern outskirts.

Fighting tapered off in the afternoon.

Clouds to break; high in 90s

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies, becoming sunny by noon, with a high in the lower 90s and southwest winds at 15-25 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a high in the lower 60s, according to the National Weather Service.

Saturday should be partly cloudy with a high near 90.

After an overnight low of 59, Thursday's high reached 85, compared to the record high for that date of 101 set in 1964. The record low was 37 set in 1935.

STATE

The sun finally made an appearance in North Texas Thursday, drying rain-soaked areas and warming up temperatures.

Skies also were mostly sunny across West Texas, except for in the Concho Valley where skies were cloud-covered. South Texas saw mostly cloudy skies throughout the day.

Forecasts call for partly cloudy skies in North Texas today. Temperatures will range from 84 to 89. Tonight it will be partly cloudy with a slight chance of thunderstorms west and northwest. Lows will range from 64 to 70.

Saturday, it will be mostly cloudy with a chance of thunderstorms. Highs will range from 78 to 87, with lows in the 50s and 60s.

In West Texas, skies will be partly cloudy today with a slight chance of showers and thunderstorms tonight over the panhandles. Highs will range from 80 in the north to near 102 in the Big Bend river valleys. Lows will be in the 50s and 60s.

NATION

Rain and wind buffeted portions of the Northeast and the Great Lakes region Thursday, while a cold front brought light showers to the West.

A low pressure area moving slowly along coastal sections of the northern Atlantic dumped more than 2 inches of rain in Chatham, Mass., and more than an inch elsewhere in the state.

In Maine, 0.67 inches fell in Eastport and 0.53 inches fell in Portland.

Winds reached up to 51 mph at Blue Hill, Mass., 43 mph at Boston and 37 mph in Portland, Maine.

Another cold front produced thunderstorms as it moved into the Great Lakes region. Colder weather, and a few snow showers, moved behind the front.

LASHING: Action energizes U.S. debate

cause of the questions that were raised about whether the young man was in fact guilty and involuntarily confessed," Clinton said after learning Fay had been flogged.

Prison authorities released a statement saying that Fay, 18, was in "satisfactory condition," though, in keeping with standard practice here, neither Fay's parents, lawyers, doctors nor anyone else outside the penal system was allowed to contact him.

Telephone calls to the apartment where Fay's mother, Randy Chan, and stepfather, Marco Chan, live went unanswered following the caning, which was administered with no advance notice to the family or lawyers.

Fay, a native of Dayton, Ohio, was sentenced in March to six strokes of the cane and four months in prison after he pleaded guilty to spraying paint on two cars. He claims police coerced him into making false confessions, a charge Singapore authorities deny.

In response to Clinton's appeals for leniency, Singapore on Wednesday reduced his sentence to four lashes from six.

In addition to Clinton, two dozen U.S. Senators, a host of human rights and professional groups and thousands of concerned parties from around the world asked Singapore to commute the sentence. They argued that the punishment was too harsh for an 18-year-old high school senior with no previous offenses on his record.

The State Department called in Singapore's ambassador in Washington, S.R. Nathan, for what it described as a "frank and candid" warning from Assistant Secretary of State Winston Lord that the caning could color U.S. relations with this prosperous island city-state.

The State Department also plans to caution Americans traveling here that they are subject to equally harsh punishment if they are found guilty of violating Singapore's prickly legal code.

Members of Ohio's congressional delegation supported Clinton's view that the punishment was too severe, The Associated Press reported.

"I regret that the Singapore government did not heed our appeals to eliminate the caning portion of the sentence, especially since there were doubts about Mr. Fay's confession," said Democratic senator John Glenn.

"The punishment doesn't fit the crime. It's his first offense. It's way too harsh. He's a good kid," Democratic Rep. Tony Hall, Fay's hometown congressman, said.

Singapore canes roughly 1,000 men a year — women aren't caned — for a wide variety of offenses ranging from aggravated rape to destroying public property. The punishment normally splits the skin, causes extensive bleeding and leaves permanent scars. Nine others were caned with Fay Thursday.

The flogging marked the first time an American has been caned under Singapore's harsh penal code.

Singapore officials defend caning as an effective, if harsh, deterrent to lawlessness, and they point to their record as one of the world's most crime-free cities as evidence that it works.

In keeping with standard policy here, authorities refused to allow anyone other than prison personnel to witness the caning.

They refused reporters' requests to interview the official witnesses and would not provide information about the caning or Fay's condition beyond a terse three-line statement.

"He was examined by the prison's doctor after the caning and found to be in satisfactory condition," the statement said in part.

The timing of the beating appeared to surprise Fay's lawyers, who emerged from a 90-minute meeting with him at 1:30 p.m. saying they had no idea when Fay would be caned. Four hours later, prison officials announced the sentence had been carried out at the Queenstown Remand Prison, where Fay has entered the sixth week of a four-month prison term.

Fay also pleaded guilty to stealing road signs and flags and to tossing eggs at cars, and for those offenses he was fined about $2,300.

SPIRIT: Battles drain industry, Alcorn says

and the people know that this is a strategic industry."

Alcorn said the Clinton administration has been a big disappointment on energy affairs. Washington is "a mess," he said.

In addition to low prices — which is the main concern of the IPAA — he said overregulation and access to federal lands were other concerns.

"Chevron spent seven years getting permits to build a terminal in California, and ... the permits cost more than the construction of the terminal. It is this type of regulation that is killing the industry."

He said the oil industry was being deliberately excluded from public lands.

"We can go there for 10 or 15 years, take out the oil and leave the land like we found it. It's not like we are going in forever," he said.

Alcorn, who hails from a long line of independent oilmen, said price was still the major concern because continuing low prices could result in the loss of another 50,000 jobs and the plugging of hundreds of thousands of wells.

"Over 50,000 wells will be abandoned in 1994 if low prices prevail."

Sen. David Boren of Oklahoma offered to lead a delegation of 127 members of Congress to a White House meeting to try and convince President Clinton of the plight of the oil industry.

"A prompt and effective response to this crisis is required," Boren wrote Clinton in a letter.

"We were promised a meeting the first week after Easter and it has still not happened," Alcorn said.

He said the Boren delegation — which has the backing of the entire industry — compiled a package of incentives designed to prevent the plugging of wells when prices dropped. The incentives would be removed when oil prices returned to a $20 level.

It is important for producers to get something accomplished because once a well has been plugged, its production is lost forever, Alcorn said.

He said an incentive to keep wells from being plugged could bring capital back into the industry.

He said the United States was spending $50 billion a year to buy foreign oil, but could be spending $140 billion a year if domestic production continues to decline and the price of oil increases.

Environmental overkill is another major concern for the industry because the regulators operate on whim, he said.

Alcorn said that a $35 million bond to operate in the Gulf of Mexico had jumped to $150 million on a whim.

"These regulations are unfair and unneeded, and now the EPA wants to increase its budget and double its staff, so that it can have more bureaucrats out chasing the oil industry."

CLEARS: Assault-weapons ban squeaks by

(From 1A)

In general, Jacobs does not support gun control, but he saw a future opportunity to do something to limit the size of magazines, some of which enable the guns to fire dozens of rounds without reloading, slipping away.

He said there was no last-minute, arm-twisting.

"I spoke to no one," Jacobs said. "And I left the floor immediately because I didn't want to take any accolades from the supporters."

But others felt the pressure from their colleagues. In the final seconds of the vote, Reps. Austin Murphy, D-Pa. and Doug Applegate, D-Ohio, sat as lawmakers from both sides leaned over, furiously trying to persuade them.

Murphy inserted his electronic card into a slot and voted "no." Applegate was too late to vote electronically, and had to fill out a green card, signifying a "yes" vote. Supporters erupted in applause.

Moments before, supporters were ahead by about 30 votes, but opponents tied the vote at 203 and 213 before Jacobs switched.

Clinton said supporters of the ban had "demonstrated extraordinary courage in the face of extraordinary political pressure to walk away." Wayne LaPierre, NRA executive vice president, said those same lawmakers "led Americans down a blind alley of make-believe crime control."

The outcome showed anew that the gun owners' group has lost some of the clout that once brought it certain victory against legislation to ban firearms. Last November, Congress passed the Brady law that requires a five-day wait and background checks for handgun buyers.

Clinton, who lobbied lawmakers in dozens of telephone calls, said the House "rose to the occasion and stood up for the national interest."

"They stood up against the madness that we have come to see when criminals and terrorists have legal access to assault weapons and then find themselves better armed than police, putting more and more people in increasing danger of their lives," Clinton said at the White House.

Both houses now have passed similar weapons bans. The final language must be worked out in a House-Senate conference.

Only last week, backers of the ban were 15-20 votes behind. By the start of this week, the number had dwindled to under a dozen. And as the vote neared, even as lawmakers confronted each other in floor debate, a parade of ban supporters stepped forward to announce their new positions.

The measure would stop future production and sale of the 19 weapons, but would not affect legally owned guns on the list.

Clinton, who lobbied lawmakers until midnight Wednesday and resumed his efforts Thursday, gave convert Rep. Stephen Neal, D-N.C., a starring role in a joint Rose Garden appearance.

The president called Neal's change in position "an act of conviction and courage," as he called for "a dramatic strike against these deadly weapons."

The administration lobbying did not stop with Clinton, as Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen went to the Capitol to buttonhole wavering House members.

On the House floor Rep. Tim Roemer, D-Ind., said he voted against a 1991 attempt to impose a similar ban, which failed 247-177.

"This bill ... is very different," Roemer argued. "It does not take guns away from anybody in this country. It does not retroactively go after the guns owned by legitimate gun owners of this country."

AWARDS: Jury rules against anti-abortionists

(From 1A)

that phase of the trial Thursday.

The jury of seven men and five women had been faced with a complicated 32-page charge with more than 500 questions. The dissenters were a man and a woman.

Planned Parenthood of Southeast Texas and nine other Houston abortion clinics filed the lawsuit against Operation Rescue, Rescue America, Dallas Rescue, The Lambs of Christ and several abortion group leaders, claiming they conspired to interfere with the clinics' business.

The jury specifically decided Dallas-based Operation Rescue-National, Houston-based Rescue America, Rescue America national director Don Treshman and Keith Tucci, former head of Operation Rescue-America, should pay the $204,585 in damages to Planned Parenthood. Nine other defendants were excused from the damages.

It was immediately uncertain how the payment damages would be divided among the defendants.

"We basically won our case," Planned Parenthood Deputy Executive Director Judy Reiner said. "I think it sends a very clear signal to the other side, that they had better think twice."

Treshman, however, termed the verdict "not a valid court order," vowing Planned Parenthood would see "not a cent."

Asked if he feared bigger punitive damage awards, he said, "It'll make no difference whatsoever. The sad thing is to see justice denied."

Planned Parenthood was the only plaintiff seeking damages in the lawsuit, asking the $205,000 in actual damages and the $1 million in punitive damages.

Deliberations began nearly three weeks ago but were suspended for a week because a juror's relative had died.

The case stemmed from confrontational protests at Houston clinics during the 1992 Republican National Convention.

Clinics claimed the defendants conspired to hurt their business, while the protestors said they were exercising constitutionally guaranteed rights to free speech.

The clinics had filed the lawsuit as part of a long legal effort to win a permanent injunction against the protestors. With a ruling in the clinics' favor, state District Judge Eileen O'Neill can hold a hearing to decide if such an injunction will be issued.

That hearing is not expected for several weeks.

Clinton pledges U.S. aid, trade, partnership to new South Africa

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton pledged Thursday to make the United States a full partner with the new South African government, offering additional trade benefits and $600 million in aid for the post-apartheid society.

The U.S. assistance, including education and health aid as well as investment promotion and duty-free exports, will not only benefit South Africa's new multiethnic economy but also U.S. economic and security interests, Clinton said.

"We have important interests at stake in the success of South Africa's journey," he told a ceremony on the White House South Lawn.

"America must be a new and full partner with that new government, so that it can deliver on its promise as quickly as possible."

The president will send Hillary Rodham Clinton and Vice President Al Gore to represent the United States at next Tuesday's presidential inauguration in Pretoria. Also in the delegation will be Tipper Gore, Commerce Secretary Ron Brown and Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy.

As leader of the victorious African National Congress, Nelson Mandela is certain to be selected as president by the newly installed National Assembly.

Clinton telephoned Mandela to congratulate him Thursday.

Forgers flourish in former Soviet Union

Police say counterfeiting has exploded across former Soviet Union thanks to new generation of photocopiers, which are very high quality, new generation of currencies, which are not.

MOSCOW (AP) — Visitors from the West are sometimes shocked when they try to pay for something in a Russian store. A clerk looks disdainfully at the bills, then spits on them.

It's not an insult. It's just a quick way to see whether the colors run.

Police say counterfeiting has exploded across the former Soviet Union thanks to a new generation of photocopiers, which are very high quality, and a new generation of currencies, which are not.

Russian rubles have some of the same security features as Western currencies, including micro-engraving, watermarks, and colored threads embedded in the paper.

Currencies in some other newly independent republics, such as Ukraine's karbovantsy, are cheaply printed and even easier to duplicate, especially with full-color copying machines imported from the United States and Japan.

One office supply store in the Russian capital has been running newspaper advertisements that wink at forgers.

The ads proclaim that top-quality photocopiers, costing up to $40,000, are "Worthy of a Queen" — and show seven copies of the portrait of Queen Elizabeth II from a British pound.

Because of galloping inflation, porous borders and a dozen new currencies, police say it is impossible to track the total amount of counterfeiting across the former Soviet Union. But partial figures indicate it is growing fast.

In 1993, Russian police confiscated 9.5 billion counterfeit rubles and 2.5 million fake U.S. dollars. That was more than 10 times what they found in 1992, according to Nikolai S. Ponomarev, chief of the Interior Ministry's department of economic crimes.

Bogus bills "are not yet a key factor in the economy. But the tempo is rising, that's for sure," Ponomarev said in an interview Thursday.

The current edition of the weekly Moscow News reports that counterfeit rubles even turned up last year in one Moscow police officer's pay envelope.

"The production and distribution of false money has taken on the character of a national cottage industry," the newspaper said. While that may be an exaggeration, Russians are very suspicious of both dollars and high-denomination ruble notes.

Machines that detect forgeries are proliferating. But law-abiding consumers often are frustrated when their perfectly legal tender is rejected by shopkeepers because it is worn, torn or just plain dirty.

Banks and exchange offices also refuse U.S. dollars, German marks and other foreign bills that are old or ripped. This can be aggravating for tourists because credit cards are not always accepted either.

Police say the leading counterfeiters are "mafiya" groups with roots in Chechnya, a breakaway region of southern Russia, and the newly independent states of Azerbaijan, Armenia and Georgia.

The largest single hoard of false money discovered was 1 billion rubles — worth about $540,000 — that eight Chechens and Azerbaijanis tried to pass last year in St. Petersburg, Ponomarev said.

Russian law provides stiff penalties for producing or distributing counterfeit money.

Senate moves toward near-total ban on freebies for lawmakers

■ Bill would include exceptions including meals, entertainment offered in home state, no limits on gifts from friends.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An uneasy Senate moved Thursday toward slapping a near-total ban on gifts, meals, trips and other freebies lawmakers receive from lobbyists and constituents.

"There's a perception among the American people that Congress is for sale for a steak dinner or a fruit basket at Christmas," said Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, pinpointing the driving force behind an extraordinary two-day public debate on the issue.

The recommended remedy was a proposal by Cohen and Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., that would bar members of Congress from accepting virtually anything — meals, travel or entertainment — from registered lobbyists, and ban gifts valued at more than $20 from non-lobbyists.

The bill did include a list of exceptions, including higher limits for meals and entertainment offered in a lawmaker's home state, and no limits on gifts motivated by "personal friendship."

The gifts issue was to be sent next to a House-Senate conference committee where it will be meshed with a similar proposal approved by the House as part of a broader bill tightening registration rules for lobbyists.

Backers of the gift ban said it was time to recognize that Americans are angry at a system in which lawmakers can reap financial benefits from those who seek to influence legislation, on top of their substantial salaries. News reports have drawn particular attention to golf, ski and tennis trips and lobbyist-paid retreats for members of Congress.

"I think if you were to ask 99.999 percent of the people ... they would say 'no, it's not appropriate. We don't want you to do that,'" said Sen. Paul Wellstone, D-Minn., a supporter of tighter congressional gift rules.

But others said the battered image of Congress is mostly self-inflicted.

"It seems few jobs are held in lower public esteem than being a member of Congress, and we keep trying to make it lower," said Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan.

As it worked toward final action the Senate rejected, 59-39, a watered-down gift proposal that would have stiffened some penalties for ethics violations and lowered value caps on permissible gifts.

But Levin labeled that alternative, pushed by Sens. Bennett Johnston, D-La., and Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., "business as usual."

Officials want to know what women think

■ Labor Department to survey women about their jobs.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration, trying to learn what working women think of their jobs, launched a survey Thursday that first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton said will seek input from "the experts themselves."

The Labor Department's "Working Women Count" survey will be distributed by businesses, unions, newspapers, the YWCA, the Lifetime cable television network and in Working Woman and Essence magazines. The agency also will conduct a parallel scientific survey. Results are expected this fall.

The questionnaire, unveiled at a news conference featuring Mrs. Clinton and actresses Linda Lavin and Valerie Harper, will ask women their views on job satisfaction, pay, benefits and opportunities for advancement.

"This is not just the run-of-the-mill government survey," Mrs. Clinton said, adding that it will involve "the experts themselves telling us what needs to be done."

Labor Department officials said survey results will be used to determine the direction of some of their activities.

"We want to make sure this administration listens to what working women have to say," Labor Secretary Robert Reich said.

Lavin, who portrayed a single mother working as a waitress in the 1970s television show "Alice," gave Mrs. Clinton a pink and white uniform and apron she wore during the comedy.

"She can't be here today," Lavin said of the character, "because she can't get flex time and Mel won't let her off."

Senate race: 'A big mess of confusion'

WAKEFIELD, Va. (AP) — There are people who are getting paid good money to analyze the U.S. Senate race in Virginia, the strangest, most extraordinary political campaign so far this year.

Cast them aside.

Listen instead to Debra Puckette, an interior designer from the Virginia Beach area who rubbed elbows here one day recently with Oliver North, Charles S. Robb and L. Douglas Wilder, among other potential candidates in the race for Robb's seat in the Senate.

"Sounds like a big mess of confusion to me," Ms. Puckette said with a shrug.

Having summarized the race more deftly than a dozen Ted Koppels and at considerably lower pay, Ms. Puckette went on to voice what must be a universal complaint in Virginia this year:

"How can we get anything done with all this foolishness? It's like we're all in grade school. I have a 9-year-old. I settle her problems with her friends on the street easier than these guys can."

You hear similar comments across the state of Virginia, although, to be fair, many people attribute the foolishness more to the news media's coverage of the candidates than to the candidates themselves. Either way, it's safe to say that few Virginians consider the Senate race so far to be a proud achievement for the state that produced George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe and Woodrow Wilson.

The race includes, as the humorist Calvin Trillin observed, "someone who is technically not a certified liar (Robb) and someone who is technically not a convicted felon (North)."

Those are references to Robb's delicately worded admission, after long denying rumors of an extramarital affair, that he was guilty of "socializing under circumstances not appropriate for a married man," and to North's conviction — later overturned — on felony charges related to the Iran-Contra scandal.

The race also has been distinguished by Wilder's off-again, on-again campaign against his longtime nemesis (and fellow Democrat) Robb; and by attacks on North from members of his own party, in particular Sen. John Warner and former President Reagan.

Perhaps not surprisingly, pollsters say the race is almost unprecedented for the high negative ratings of the two principal candidates, Robb and North.

"This has to be — in polling in the 48 states for the past several years — the most bizarre race I've ever seen," said Del Ali, a vice president with Mason-Dixon Political-Media Research.

"And," he added, "you could almost say the most reprehensible."

Most of the Senate candidates — there are six who have announced, and Wilder who has insinuated — turned out one fine spring day for the Wakefield Ruritan Club's 46th annual Shad Planking.

This regional custom, in which fish are nailed to boards and cooked over smoky trench fires, to be eaten under swaying pines and oaks, has evolved into a political rite of the season.

While more cynical observers see it as little more than a woodsy photo op, it is also a genuine opportunity for the candidates to shoot the shad with regular voters, some of whom drive from as far away as Richmond and Norfolk — each more than an hour away — to drink beer, eat fish and talk politics.

To look at the signs plastered along the highway into Wakefield, one might have assumed that the overwhelming favorite in the race was James Miller, the former Reagan administration budget chief who is North's Republican rival.

Each political party in Virginia chooses each year whether to hold a primary election or nominating convention. The Democrats chose the election this year; the Republicans, the convention.

Wildfire probe focuses on two firefighters

■ In fire-devasted community where firemen are heroes, investigation stuns residents.

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Revelations that two firefighters are under investigation in the devastating Malibu wildfire sent a jolt Thursday through the scorched community where firefighters are regarded as heroes.

"I have a hard time imagining this is true. Firemen have to know that people die in fires," said Ann Brisbin, whose home was destroyed in the firestorm.

"This leaves a feeling of vulnerability," said Gillian Cairns, whose home overlooks scorched lots where houses once stood.

For four days beginning Nov. 2, flames raged across 18,500 acres in the rustic canyons of the Santa Monica Mountains, killing three people and destroying 350 homes. Most of what was lost, valued at $375 million, has yet to be rebuilt.

"It's just like the beating of Rodney King making all policemen look bad," said Tony Lawler, who works at a store in Malibu.

The men under investigation, rookie city Firefighter Steven R. Shelp, 29, and Nicholas A. Durepo, 24, a member of the tiny Manhattan Beach Fire Department's volunteer reserve, have not been arrested or charged.

Both men were at the scene in the early moments of the fire in rustic Topanga Canyon in the Santa Monica Mountains east of the Malibu coastline.

Los Angeles County Sheriff Sherman Block said his investigators have presented a case to the district attorney. The county grand jury has held a preliminary meeting on the matter and will meet again later this month, he said.

Authorities would not discuss any evidence against the men.

"If we did not believe we had a case that was appropriate for a criminal complaint, we would not have submitted it to the district attorney," Block said.

The Malibu blaze was among the worst in a series of wildfires that roared across Southern California as the seasonal Santa Ana winds swept the region.

Block would not confirm reports that his investigators believe the men set the fire so they could quickly put it out and become heroes.

Appeals court deals blow to race-based promotion system

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — A federal appeals court panel sided with white firefighters in a reverse bias claim, dealing a potential blow to hiring and promotion goals based too rigidly on race in the city.

The three-judge panel of the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals unanimously found that the Birmingham Fire Department's promotion system illegally uses harsh racial quotas in the name of eliminating past discrimination.

The city, once a hotbed of racial violence, had no black firefighters until 1968.

With the help of a 1981 consent decree that allowed race-based promotions, about one-third of the department's 680 employees are black. There are more than 50 black supervisors, including one chief.

But the appeals court struck down the formula Wednesday that led to many of those promotions, saying it resulted in promotions being made "woodenly and reflexively in rigid adherence to a quota system."

"It's a signal that the kind of one-for-one quotas that were popular in the '70s . . . don't work anymore," Raymond Fitzpatrick Jr., an attorney for white firefighters, said Thursday.

An attorney for black and women firefighters said the court misunderstood the promotion system, which he denied uses quotas.

"I think the only safe thing you can say about this is that this is not the last chapter," said Robert D. Joffe of New York. The U.S. Supreme Court will be asked to hear the case, he said.

The dispute already has been before the high court.

In 1989, the Supreme Court cleared the way for 14 white firefighters to sue the city. Their lawsuit targeted the 1981 settlement of a racial bias lawsuit filed by blacks and supported by the Justice Department.

In a trial on the white firemen's action, a judge ruled two years ago that the 1981 agreement did not violate the rights of the white firefighters, sending the case to the 11th Circuit.

A PROVEN POSITIVE QUALIFIED CANDIDATE

FOR CITY COUNCIL REPRESENTATIVE DISTRICT 3

"I will be extremely cautious with the expenditure of tax dollars and will work to improve economic development while serving the Citizens of Midland."

"Look around and see the new construction underway in homes and businesses. This is economic development resulting from the efforts of the Midland City Council, Chamber of Commerce, and Forward Midland working together. Bringing new businesses to Midland will create new jobs and establish a broader tax base, which will benefit all taxpayers."

Currently serving on Chamber of Commerce Transportation Committee for Airline Service and Highway Expansion, Visual Aid News Mobile and Project Awaken against crime and drug abuse.

Co-Organizer with Tom Sloan in the Invest in a Vest Program which provided bullet-proof vests to officers of the Midland Police Department.

Commendations by Midland City Council, the Texas Senate and The Texas House of Representatives for Community Service.

Recognized by Midland City Council and U.S. Senator Phil Gramm for saving millions of tax dollars by cutting construction costs of Stacy Dam by proving the Concho River Snake was not an endangered species.

Awarded the Republican Presidential Legion of Merit Medal and Republican Presidential Task Force Medal.

Member of Permian Basin Petroleum Association, Society of Independent Earth Scientists and West Texas Geological Society.

'New Day' brings full responsibility

There is, at last, hope in South Africa for a new future that will not be determined only by the ruling white minority but by all South Africans — black and white working together.

With the end of apartheid and last week's historic election in which black South Africans participated in the voting, that country set a new course by electing Nelson Mandela of the African National Congress (ANC) as its first black president. That course will have an impact not only on the lives of all South Africans, but also on nations such as the United States because of South Africa's vast wealth of minerals some of which are critical to the United States' defense and which are unavailable elsewhere.

So it's imperative that the United States stay involved in South Africa's transition to a democratic form of government. Fortunately, F.W. de Klerk, South Africa's former president, will continue to be involved in that country's government for a period of five years while the transition occurs. That helps insure a degree of stability in that country's government.

While South Africans voted overwhelmingly for Mandela's government, it must be remembered that Mandela in the past espoused communism as a favorable form of government. That does not necessarily mean that Mandela will take South Africa down the primrose path to a communistic society, but it does give observers of the transition cause to watch developments warily. No less an authority on Communists than Russian President Boris Yeltsin noted in his memoirs, published recently, that Communists are still attempting to work behind the scenes in Russia and elsewhere to gain a toehold from which they can regain power. And the implication is that they wouldn't attempt to regain that power through the power of the ballot.

It's wonderful that all South Africans now have a part in deciding that country's future. But with the voting "right" comes the unavoidable "responsibility" for South Africans to use their right judiciously and in the light of full information about what their voting may bring.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The shorter the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis.
- We do not publish 'open' letters or copies of letters sent to others.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702.

Lott is strangely silent about Whitewater

WASHINGTON — Sen. Trent Lott's, R-Miss., silence on the Whitewater scandal is a case of the Republican attack dog that didn't bark.

Anderson

Like the Sherlock Homes story "Silver Blaze," what Lott hasn't said speaks volumes. In this case, Lott is the lone member of the GOP leadership to be tongue-tied on Whitewater. The senator who once served as designated dirt-digger on the Clinton administration told us he "understands" the president's predicament.

Lott's transformation from pit bull to pussycat, at least in terms of Whitewater, seems related to some skeletons rattling around in his own closet.

As we reported recently, in 1984 Lott pressured NASA officials to award a government contract to a company owned by a political friend named Isadore Hyde. Then Hyde put Lott's 71-year-old mother on the company's payroll with a company car and lenient hours. According to grand jury testimony, Hyde said he had put Mrs. Lott on the payroll because "she could open doors that would not be opened otherwise, and that she was his connection to Washington as she could talk to (then) Congressman Lott when (Hyde) could not reach the Congressman."

NASA investigators also uncovered that Hyde and his wife billed NASA for $186,000 worth of unallowable expenses they diverted for personal use. Last year the Hydes were sentenced to prison for conspiracy to defraud the government.

NASA investigator John Batson told our associate Ed Henry that when he started pursuing allegations that the Hydes also used NASA resources to do political work for Lott, NASA Inspector General Bill Colvin abruptly pulled the plug. Whether Colvin protected Lott is one of the questions now under investigation by a special unit of the General Accounting Office.

"It's not by design because of (the Hyde allegations)" that he's been quiet, Lott insisted. "It's just that I haven't had a role to play or a knowledge from which to comment (about Whitewater)."

That has never dissuaded Lott from scandalmongering in the past. He hounded Ron Brown when he was appointed to be Secretary of Commerce, saying that Brown's past lobbying activities "perhaps send the wrong message." After Lott decided that Brown had finally resolved some potential conflicts-of-interest, he declared that Brown had "helped remove a cloud that might have been hovering over" him. And when Janet Reno was nominated to be Attorney General, Lott aides complained that they didn't have enough resources to investigate all of the dirt they had collected on Reno.

During the presidential campaign, Lott lashed away at Clinton over his draft status: "Bill Clinton will not come clean with what's really involved here. Did he try to avoid it? What is this reserve thing?... What was the word he used about the draft in that letter?"

Lott told us he now empathizes with President Clinton's plight — and compared the attacks on the First Family to the aspersions made on his mother, Iona.

Lott's low-key approach to Whitewater, however, may be part facade. GOP sources told us Lott is cheerleading the Whitewater investigation from inside the cloakroom. "Lott's been encouraging us," explains one Republican lawmaker.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Kirk gave conservatives their heritage

"An irritable mental gesture" was what the literary critic Lionel Trilling called conservatism, and there was worse, much worse, from fellow liberals, some of it actually printable. The American liberal establishment, in the high noon of its glory — the '40s and the '50s — was confident in its grasp of the ultimate truths, which were, in no special order, that the past had no claim on us; that man was basically good, as was government; that equality was written in the stars; and God ... well, God was certainly a Congenial Idea.

Murchison

Then came Russell Amos Kirk, of Mecosta, Mich., and the intellectual life began to creak on its hinges, slowly, slowly turning.

Too few Americans know of Russell Kirk, who died last week at age 76 as he sat at his own desk, reading. Yet hardly any American is wholly uninfluenced by what he helped to launch — the conservative intellectual movement, which in turn launched the conservative political movement.

What Kirk gave conservatives was their heritage. It had been missing, stored in dusty library basements. The soft-spoken scholar found it, blew off the dust, committed his labors to paper, and, behold, the conservative intellectual movement was born. At 41, it is going stronger perhaps than ever.

Sensible people today know that the past has a mighty claim on us, that man isn't necessarily good, that equality isn't written in the stars, that God is exactly who He said He was, now and forever, and don't you go forgetting it.

Russell Kirk wrote an immense number of books and scholarly articles , hardly any of them for "mainstream" publishers. The most original, and most influential, was "The Conservative Mind," in 1953. "Mental gesture," indeed! Conservatism had a grand intellectual pedigree, through which Kirk confidently guided his readers.

Kirk's heroes were not the conventional ones — Paine and Jefferson and Lincoln but instead Edmund Burke, John Adams, John Randolph of Roanoke, John Henry Newman, Fenimore Cooper, Alexis de Tocqueville, T.S. Eliot. He assimilated Englishmen and Scotsmen into the American tradition as deftly, and convincingly, as the job market assimilated Lithuanians and Croats. He used them all to teach us "belief in a transcendent order," "affection for the proliferating variety and mystery of human existence," the need for social classes, and dislike for ideologues.

The last point was, with Kirk, a big one. Conservatism wasn't an ideology. It was, as Cardinal Manning had said, "the negation of ideology." Yahoos and badmen — e.g., Hitler and Robespierre — reared their little castles of air and blood: mere figments of the imagination, disconnected from human institutions. True conservatives were the natural enemies of skunks like these.

He was no man of the mainstream, Russell Kirk. He lived amid books in his family's old place, which, with exquisite fitness, he called Piety Hill; his mind, or, rather its habits, he referred to as "Gothic." Yet, the husband of a beautiful wife, he raised four lovely daughters to civilized perfection. Though hardly a golden-mouthed orator — he spoke, often too rapidly, in a soft, high-pitched voice — he loved missionary work. Over the years, he spoke at 500 different American campuses, including, in 1962, the University of Texas, where a Gothic-minded junior (as he was then) recalls the joy and excitement of hearing the master hold forth. Kirk helped Bill Buckley launch National Review, to which he contributed a column on education — whose defects were a pet peeve — for nearly a quarter of a century.

With it all he was a gentle, kind, and civilized man; a devout Roman Catholic who, on learning that fire had gutted his beloved library, fell to his knees, affirming with Job: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

With Russell Kirk, you never doubted who was in charge. It wasn't ideologues, it wasn't despots; it was Someone infinitely higher, infinitely more enduring.

William Murchison's column is distributed by Creators Syndicate.

Press, public should have been at meeting

Shame on the news media. They arrived too late to the town meeting on "Victims of Crime" sponsored by Congressman Bonilla, April 30th, to know about the certificate of merit awarded to one of our own, Olivia R. Wilson. This certificate was issued by the United States Department of Justice for Olivia's unselfish work with victims of crime in the City of Midland and Midland County. Only 40 of these certificates were awarded across the United States.

To the rest of the public who did not show up at this meeting, you missed a very informative, as well as emotional, insight into the pitfalls of our judicial system that leave victims emotionally distraught or terrorized for years. My heart goes out to you victims who dared to discuss your problems and emotions in public. I believe Congressman Bonilla came away better informed of victims' problems. Now our state representative needs to be informed.

Also, shame on the members of the Crisis Intervention Unit, who were present, for not offering support to some of the victims in crisis. I saw only one volunteer commit himself to helping a victim.

Mobile's employees make lifelong difference

In recognition of Midland Volunteer Week we would like to share the values of Mobil's volunteer program at Crockett Elementary.

Mobil and Crockett have been Partners in Education for five years, continually expanding involvement and participation. This year we have over 30 joint projects involving 127 Mobil employees who have given over 1,500 hours to support our children and teachers.

The oldest project is the "Pegasus Awards" in which teachers write proposals for innovative classroom resources. Mobil has funded many of these proposals, strengthening our teaching base and encouraging our teachers.

The "Reader/Listener" program involves 20-plus first graders annually. Mobil volunteers come to our campus every week to read with and listen to their "little buddy." Many volunteers are in their third year with the program. Mobil employees have made a significant impact on the reading skills and self-confidence of these children.

For the second year Mobil employees have joined with our teachers in coaching after-school U.I.L. clubs in math, science, number sense and calculator. And for the second year in a row Crockett has won trophies in the U.I.L. competition, placing second overall (first among Midland schools).

Recently we have started three after-school computer clubs, jointly taught by teachers and Mobil personnel and including over 50 students.

Last Christmas a new and exciting relationship was built between Mobil, our students and their families. Mobil employees "adopted" 16 families and wrapped gifts of clothing, food and toys for every child in "their family" (66 children). One Saturday before Christmas, Santa Claus and Mrs. Claus (and other Mobil helpers in a U-Haul) delivered the abundance of gifts. This most kind gesture has affected many lives, on and off our campus.

The areas of involvement are even more diverse and extensive than mentioned here. The Mobil employees have made a lifelong difference in the lives of Crockett children and their families. In reaching out to make a difference at Crockett Elementary, Mobil employees have also lifted the spirits of the teachers on our campus.

Reporter covers teen pregnancy thoroughly

I would like to commend the Reporter-Telegram and staff, particularly Myra Lee Salcedo, for the recent thorough coverage of the teenage pregnancy issue, "Parents Before Their Time."

Teen-age pregnancy is a community issue, and I'm pleased that the Reporter-Telegram sought to dealth with the topic and to do so in such a frank manner.

Since its inception, Planned Parenthood has worked to reduce sexual ignorance and unplanned pregnancy, especially among teens. Although the White Ribbon Campaign/Teen Pregnancy Prevention Week is not a Planned Parenthood endeavor, we are very pleased to support it.

Thank you for committing the paper's resources to helping raise awareness of teen-age pregnancy.

Doctors fault hospital care of dying patients

WASHINGTON (AP) — Medical schools don't teach physicians how to prepare their patients for death, and hospitals often fail to provide care and comfort for people they cannot cure, doctors told a Senate panel Thursday.

Public awareness has grown that people can refuse extraordinary lifesaving measures, but "it has not changed the culture of dying in many of our hospitals," said Dr. Christine Cassel of the University of Chicago.

People with terminal illnesses "are afraid to die in our hospitals. They're afraid they won't have palliative care and comfort," she said.

"It should not be necessary to transfer to (a) hospice to get this kind of care," she added. Such help should be readily available, even in hospital emergency rooms.

"Many Americans die in a manner that almost none of them would have chosen while they were well," said Dr. Eric J. Cassell of Cornell University Medical College. "Death after unrelieved pain remains too common."

The Senate Finance Committee took up the issue of the American way of death as it considered whether health reform legislation could encourage wider use of living wills and advance directives.

Cassel said former President Nixon taught an important lesson by letting doctors know in advance "that he did not want to be kept alive by heroic measures that would not be likely to return him to meaningful life."

Copter crash leaves 2 dead

NORTH BERGEN, N.J. (AP) — A helicopter snagged power lines, bounced off a highway and crashed Thursday onto a commuter parking lot near the Lincoln Tunnel, killing the two people aboard.

The helicopter crashed around 12:50 p.m., sending up flames and setting fire to at least 12 cars, officials with the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey said. About 70 other cars were damaged.

"I was in the coffee shop making my tea when I saw this huge blow up on the freeway," said Alex Eshfaq, a motel clerk. "There was a big old orange spark across the street and a piece of the helicopter landed about 30 feet away."

The two people killed were on the helicopter, the Port Authority said. No injuries were reported on the ground.

The copter had taken off from Teterboro Airport, 10 miles north of New York City.

It hit the wires, bounced off Interstate 495 and crashed onto a park and ride lot along the interstate, which leads in and out of the tunnel.

The tunnel runs under the Hudson River, connecting New Jersey and New York City.

Police and emergency personnel shut down the tunnel's New Jersey-bound lanes, exit 16E from the New Jersey Turnpike, Routes 3 and parts of Interstate 495.

The helicopter was flying between two transmission towers when the crash occurred, said Neil Brown, a spokesman with Public Service Electric & Gas Co. Power was knocked out for about an hour to customers in parts of North Bergen, Jersey City, Secaucus, Union City and Weehawken, he said.

Man who rode in on 'Indian pony' becomes famous horse trader

■ Son Wright, 73, of Levelland has been trading horses, stories for decades.

By Brian Cofer
Associated Press

LEVELLAND — Blink and you'll miss it.

There's not much to see. Just a small portable structure west of Levelland on Texas 114. The saddles hanging out front are the only clue that Son Wright is inside.

But he's there, and he's ready to deal.

For decades, Wright has been known in these parts for his horse trading. If one's looking for a good horse, Wright, 73, probably can help.

"I had a lady up at Three Way call me the other day," he said. "She was looking for a mare."

Being the equine locater service that he is, Wright soon had the woman fixed up and ready to ride. Not only can he locate a horse, he also can fix it up. For seven years, he has operated a tack shop, selling accessories for the horseman, ranging from bits and bridles to saddles and spurs.

Some items, such as the cavalry bits and antique spurs on his walls, are not for sale. However, Wright concedes, "If you offer me enough . . ."

That's how it is for a man who has been trading since he bought some cows at age 10. He learned these skills from his family, which moved from Anson to Levelland, about 30 miles west of Lubbock, in 1924 when he was 3. A windmill located at Levelland Country Club marks the location of his family's home.

In those days, Hockley County was in its infancy, and settlers still were coming in to break the land for farming.

"I rode on an Indian pony when this county was just grass," he said.

Levelland, then called Hockley City, was a tiny settlement centered on a dusty main street. It wasn't even listed in the 1920 census. A collection of photos Wright keeps in his shop shows a town of wooden, false-fronted stores and a small frame structure housing the courthouse.

"I've seen a lot of changes," he said, noting that he's grown up with the county over the past seven decades.

To be sure, Wright has packed a whole lot of living into those 70-odd years. In addition to trading horses, he farmed cotton and ran cattle, helped build the highway between Brownfield and Littlefield, worked in a refinery and was a partner in a car dealership in Tahoka.

All that living has slowed him down somewhat. A ginning accident mangled his hands, and a heart attack seven years ago in Canada almost killed him. However, he still rides his horses every day, and his friend and neighbor, Gary Mellberg, said Wright continues to maintain a fast pace.

"You can't keep him still," Mellberg said.

To maintain his active lifestyle and obey doctor's orders, Wright opened his tack shop.

"I'm not one to just sit around," he said. "So I bought this building. I didn't know what I was going to do with it. I moved some saddles in here, and pretty soon people were stopping. I have people come in asking the darnedest questions."

It's a relaxed concern, operating without a name, and opening and closing as Wright feels the urge. Nevertheless, word has spread, and ranchers and rodeo cowboys know it as the place to go for quality goods at a fair price.

Official: More foreign tourists now pick Texas

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — More international visitors have been coming to Texas in recent years, in part because of problems in major tourism spots like Florida and California, the state's tourism director says.

Texas also is poised to attract more international tourists as the North American Free Trade Agreement takes effect, said Dianne Mendoza Freeman, tourism division director of the Texas Department of Commerce.

Since 1988, Texas tourism has grown steadily, said Ms. Mendoza Freeman, speaking Wednesday at an annual "Tourism Week" luncheon in San Antonio.

Travel expenditures now total $22 billion statewide, with $3 billion from international travel, she said. The state's tourism industry accounts for 406,000 jobs, she added.

The California earthquake and violence against tourists in Florida have diverted some travelers from those states to Texas, she said. Beach visitation in Texas is up, and much of it is attributable to German visitors bypassing Florida for Texas.

NAFTA is expected to expand the international tourism base, which already includes 3.3 million Mexican visitors to Texas each year, Ms. Mendoza Freeman said.

"Although we have some windows of opportunity, they are brief," she said. "Tourism opportunities are out there for the taking now."

Taylor arrested

PITTSBURG, Calif. — Four police officers struggled to pin down former NFL running back Alfie Taylor after he kept a SWAT team outside his barricaded home for more than eight hours.

Police blasted Taylor with pepper spray, then handcuffed, arrested and ultimately jailed him Tuesday on suspicion of brandishing a firearm and resisting arrest, Sgt. Nick Baker said.

A neighbor said the incident was sparked when Taylor pointed a handgun at him during an argument about the neighbor's boat, which was parked near Taylor's home, Baker said.

Mind change

NEW ORLEANS — Tim Floyd, the University of New Orleans basketball coach who turned down hundreds of thousands of dollars to coach Iowa State, changed his mind Thursday and took the job.

The move comes one day after Floyd rejected Iowa State, saying he preferred "bass fishing to ice fishing" and insisting "money isn't everything."

New Orleans athletic director Ron Maestri said Floyd stood to make between $300,000 to $600,000 a year at Iowa State. At New Orleans, his base salary was about $90,000 with other considerations that brought it to about $150,000.

Byner moves

BEREA, Ohio — Earnest Byner is back with Cleveland after five seasons and a Super Bowl victory with the Washington Redskins. The 10-year running back signed with the Browns on Thursday as an unrestricted free agent.

Byner, who will turn 32 in September, made the Browns as a 10th-round draft choice out of East Carolina in 1984. He teamed with Kevin Mack in 1985 to give the Browns two 1,000-yard rushers.

Wilkinson grabbed up quick by Bengals

By Joe Kay
AP Sports Writer

CINCINNATI — Dan Wilkinson, the No. 1 pick in last month's NFL draft, signed a six-year, $14.4 million contract today, ending one of the quickest negotiations with a top pick in Cincinnati Bengals history.

The signing came just 11 days after the draft and two weeks after the sides appeared to be at a philosophical impasse.

Wilkinson, a defensive lineman from Ohio State, will receive a $5 million signing bonus. The Bengals had been opposed to large signing bonuses.

The contract also contains two "voidable years," one of the main areas of contention between the Bengals and agent Leigh Steinberg. The last two years of the contract will be voided if Wilkinson is on the field for an undisclosed number of plays this season.

"We hope this sends a message as to the sort of commitment we have to bring our team back to the top," Bengals general manager Mike Brown said.

The Bengals wanted to break with their history of trouble signing first-round picks so Wilkinson could be counted upon as a starter. Wilkinson wanted to avoid a holdout.

"Both parties agreed up front we'd try to set an all-time speed record if possible," Steinberg said. "Obviously, you have the history. But it was really important to all the parties to have this done quickly and expeditiously."

Steinberg has been involved in two lengthy holdouts by Bengals first-round picks. Defensive lineman Jason Buck (1987) and quarterback David Klingler (1992) missed training camp and preseason before signing.

It looked like another impasse developing when Brown offered Wilkinson a contract a few days before the April 24 draft. That offer included an average salary that was $500,000 less than Indianapolis gave defensive lineman Steve Emtman two years ago. Brown also rejected "voidable years."

The contract today adds up to $14.4 if Wilkinson plays all six years, an average of $2.4 million a year .

In addition to the $5 million signing bonus, Wilkinson gets base salaries of $965,000 this season; $1,206,000 in 1995; $1,447,000 in 1996; $1,688,000 in 1997; $1,930,000 in 1998; and $2,171,000 in 1999.

MC honors '94 athletes

Midland College sophomore guard Richard Edwards and golfer Lance McCullough were recipients of the school's highest athletic award, the Fighting Chaparral Award, at the 20th Annual Chap Sports Dinner at the Chaparral Center Thursday night.

"I've been so blessed to be a part of this," said an emotional Delnor Poss, who stepped down as the school's athletic director, but will remain as the golf coach, after 17 years at Midland College. "This is always a special night. It gives us a chance to recognize those who have made this program so successful. It's a credit to the college and the community.

"Both teams have had such good seasons. These guys have great chemistry. They genuinely like one another and that is a big key to their success."

Edwards captured the Fighting Chap Award as voted by his teammates. Edwards, who saw limited action this season, was visually stunned by the honor.

McCullough, who will play at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas this fall, was selected for the golfing honor.

Andrews native Chad Campbell won the linksters outstanding player. Campbell, who has been selected to play in the World University Games in Madrid, Spain, this summer, is the most successful player in Midland College histo-

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — It's almost time for trainers to stop shooting the bull and take a shot at beating the Bull.

It's been one big Bull session in the Churchill Downs stable area this week.

"Holy Bull is a runner; you can't take that away from him" said Jack Van Berg, trainer of Blumin Affair, one of 15 3-year-olds entered Thursday for the Kentucky Derby Saturday.

"He still has to go a mile and a quarter," Charlie Whittingham, trainer and co-owner of Strodes Creek, said of Holy Bull, front-running winner of the Florida Derby and Blue Grass Stakes.

"Not many horses win the Derby wire-to-wire," added Whittingham, whose stretch-running Strodes Creek finished third in the Santa Anita Derby.

There have been 21 wire-to-wire Derby winners. The last was the filly Winning Colors in 1988.

Mexican style Futbol exhibition hits Midland

By Mike Butts
Staff Writer

With a high school team reaching the state finals this year, Midland may be more deeply immersed in the youth soccer phenomenon than ever.

Now it's time for some real "futbol."

This weekend Midland will host the first annual Cinco de Mayo Futbol Festival, highlighted by Saturday's exhibition game between a Mexican team of professional hopefuls and a Texas Olympic developement team. With 10 teams from Mexico competing in the tournament itself, the festival will bring a different style of soccer to Midland and could help the Tall City become a soccer center, said tournament director Steve Parnell.

"We're trying to put Midland on the soccer map," said Parnell, area manager for Soccer Etc., which is hosting the festival with the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and the Midland Soccer Association. "If we can get the facilities to what we need, we want to start promoting college soccer (games in Midland)."

The 10 Mexican teams, including four in the under 19-year-old bracket, will play in the 45-team tournament that begins Friday at 6 p.m. at Hogan Park and continues at Hogan and Windlands Parks all day Saturday with the finals on Sunday.

Two Midland teams will compete in the under-19 bracket. Texas teams will come from Plano, Weatherford, Amarillo and Lubbock.

Saturday's exhibition match, at 8 p.m. at Memorial Stadium, pits the North Texas Olympic Developement team against the Juarez Cobras, a reserve squad for a professional team of the same name. The professional Cobras play in Mexico's second division. Two members of the national under-19 team are on the North Texas team.

Parnell said the exhibition match should be competitive. And all the Mexican teams will give spectators a chance to see how soccer is played south of the Rio

Former Chaparral star keeps Hawks on track

Associated Press

■ NBA Playoff Roundup

MIAMI — Former Midland College star Mookie Blaylock got hot, and the Miami Heat turned cold, chilling their chances to win the first playoff series in franchise history.

Blaylock shook a slump and scored a season-high 29 points, helping the Atlanta Hawks beat Miami 103-89 to force a deciding fifth game in their first-round series.

The Heat, bidding to become the first No. 8 seed in NBA history to eliminate a No. 1 seed, shot 37 percent.

Game 5 will be Sunday in Atlanta, with the winner advancing to the best-of-7 Eastern Conference semifinals against Indiana.

On the brink of elimination, the Central Division champion Hawks kept their composure — and led all the way — while playing before a hostile crowd, perhaps the loudest in the history of the Miami Arena.

Blaylock, 9-for-41 in the first three games of the series, went 7-for-13 and hit six 3-pointers. Teammate Danny Manning had 26 points. Reserve guard Bimbo Coles led the Heat with 18.

Miami rallied from a 59-46 deficit in the third quarter by holding Atlanta scoreless for 5:15, closing the margin to 59-57. But the Heat came no closer.

Blaylock ended the Hawks' drought with a 3-pointer, starting a 9-0 run to put them ahead 68-57. The margin was at least seven points the rest of the way.

The Heat made only one of their first 13 shots. Glen Rice and John Salley both started 0-for-5.

Miami's Steve Smith, who led both teams in scoring in each of the first three games, scored 15 points.

Houston closes in on Reds

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Luis Gonzalez singled home the go-ahead run in the 10th inning as the Houston Astros recovered from Brian Dorsett's ninth-inning grand slam and beat the Cincinnati Reds 8-6 Thursday night.

■ NL Roundup

Dorsett tied it at 6 with a two-out grand slam — the first of his career — off Tom Edens in the ninth. Mitch Williams (1-2) got the final out of the inning, and John Hudek pitched the 10th for his first major-league save.

Jeff Bagwell walked in the 10th, stole second and came home on Gonzalez's single off Jeff Brantley (1-1), who had allowed just one run in his previous eight appearances. Andujar Cedeno also had a run-scoring groudout.

Houston led 5-0 after five innings and took a 6-2 lead into the ninth behind Greg Swindell, who was pitching a six-hitter. Swindell got the first two outs before giving up singles to Roberto Kelly and Tony Fernandez. Edens walked Bret Boone and grooved a 2-0 pitch for Dorsett's fifth career homer.

Swindell gave up eight hits, including a two-run homer by Boone, and struck out one in 8⅓ innings.

Houston took its 5-0 lead off Jose Rijo, who is getting hit hard in the early innings by hitters who normally don't bother him. Steve Finley, a career .188 hitter off Rijo, had a pair of singles and a double as the Astros piled up nine hits off the right-hander.

Craig Biggio hit into a run-producing fielder's choice in the first. Finley doubled leading off the third and scored on groundouts by Biggio and Bagwell.

James Mouton doubled and scored on Finley's single in the fifth. Biggio's RBI double and Bagwell's sacrifice fly completed the rally.

Rightfielder Reggie Sanders misplayed Ken Caminiti's sinking liner into a triple in the eighth, and Tony Eusebio followed with a sacrifice fly.

Mets 8, Cardinals 1

ST. LOUIS — Bret Saberhagen pitched a five-hitter and New York continued a long-ball barrage with three home runs in a victory over St. Louis.

The Mets have hit 15 home runs in their last six games and have 41 this season, one behind league-leading Colorado.

David Segui hit a two-run homer, his third, in the fourth inning. Kelly Stinnett hit the first of his career in the sixth and Bobby Bonilla hit his fifth — and third in two games — in the seventh.

Saberhagen (4-1) struck out a season-high seven and didn't walk a batter in recording his second complete game. He also stopped two streaks: the Cardinals' 12-game home run streak that tied a team record set in 1955 and Gregg Jefferies' 17-game hitting streak.

Saberhagen, who has 71 career complete games, won in St. Louis for the first time since the 1985 World Series, when he was 2-0 and was named the series MVP for Kansas City.

The Cardinals have surrendered eight home runs in the last three games. Allen Watson (2-2) gave up the first two and Bryan Eversgerd allowed Bonilla's homer.

Segui added a run-scoring single in the sixth to chase Watson, who allowed five runs — four earned — and seven hits in 5⅓ innings. In his last two starts, Watson has given up eight earned runs in 10⅓ innings.

Marlins 5, Phillies 0

MIAMI — Chris Hammond pitched a seven-hitter and Jerry Browne tripled home three runs in the first inning as Florida beat Philadelphia.

Hammond (2-3) walked one and struck out five in pitching his first nine-inning complete game. Hammond pitched a complete game last Sept. 14, a six-inning, rain-shortened loss to Pittsburgh.

Mariano Duncan had three hits for the Phillies, who have lost six straight road games.

The Marlins chased Ben Rivera (2-2) with three runs in the first, and added two more in the second on Dave Magadan's homer.

Rivera gave up five runs and four hits before being lifted for a pinch hitter in the third.

Mayne's slam rallies Royals

Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

TORONTO — Brent Mayne hit his first career grand slam as the Kansas City Royals rallied from a five-run deficit and beat Toronto 11-9 Thursday, sending the Blue Jays to their eighth loss in 11 games.

Kansas City, which fell behind 5-0 in the first. trailed 7-3 in the third before Felix Jose's RBI single and Mayne's first homer this season gave them and 8-7 lead. Wally Joyner hit a two-run homer in the fourth, his fourth of the year, to make it 10-7.

Joe Carter had five RBIs for Toronto, on a three-run homer in the first and to sacrifice flies, one in the seventh that made it 10-8. That gave Carter a major-league leading RBI total of 39.

Angels 4, Athletics 3

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Former Midland Angel Jim Edmonds, making his first start in more than a week, hit a two-run single in the fourth inning as California beat Oakland and sent the Athletics to their 15th loss in 16 games.

Phil Leftwich (1-4) won his first game after four consecutive defeats. The right-hander gave up solo home runs to Geronimo Berroa and Rickey Henderson and an RBI single to Ruben Sierra.

Leftwich gave up three runs and seven hits in seven innings, struck out four and walked one. Craig Lefferts finished with one-hit relief for his first AL save.

NBA: Nuggets stay alive with OT

(From 1B)

Blaylock hit four 3-pointers to help the Hawks take a 45-31 lead, the largest of the first half. The score was 55-44 at halftime.

Three Heat starters — Salley, Rony Seikaly and Brian Shaw — failed to reach double figures. Rice scored 13 points, but missed 10 of 15 shots. Miami missed 18 of 23 attempts in the first quarter.

Atlanta overcame 18 turnovers and shot 48 percent. The Hawks also went 31-for-36 from the free-throw line, while Miami missed 11 of 37 free-throw tries.

The Hawks won despite another subpar game by forward Kevin Willis, who scored only six points. He was held without a field goal in Game 3.

Nuggets 94, Sonics 85

DENVER — Bryant Stith and LaPhonso Ellis each scored six points in overtime, accounting for all of Denver's scoring in the extra period, and the Nuggets beat Seattle, squaring their playoff series 2-2.

The final game of the best-of-5 series is scheduled for Saturday in Seattle.

Ellis had 27 points and 17 rebounds, Stith finished with 15 points and Dikembe Mutombo added 10 points and 16 rebounds for the Nuggets, who outscored the SuperSonics 12-3 in overtime.

Jazz 95, Spurs 90

SALT LAKE CITY — Karl Malone scored 34 points, including a 20-footer with 42 seconds to play, as the Jazz held off a late San Antonio rally and eliminated the Spurs in NBA first-round playoff action.

San Antonio had just cut Utah's lead to 91-88 on Dennis Rodman's tip-in of a missed Dale Ellis free throw when Malone connected from the left side of the top of the key.

The Spurs had one last chance after David Robinson hit a spinning jumper and got the ball back with 12.7 seconds remaining. But Utah's John Stockton knocked the ball out of Negele Knight's hands to David Benoit.

Probe centers on Baylor's Lambert

HOUSTON (AP) — Baylor basketball star Jerome Lambert has told Southwest Conference investigators an assistant coach helped him buy a car and rent an apartment last summer, according to a published report.

Both actions are apparent violations of NCAA regulations, the Houston Chronicle reported in Thursday's editions.

Lambert, an All-SWC player who led the nation in rebounds last season, provided information to investigators under a grant of immunity that prevents his testimony from causing his ineligibility.

The 6-foot-8 Lambert transferred to Baylor from Westark Community College in Fort Smith, Ark. last year. The alleged infractions occurred during a two-month period during which he lived and worked in Waco before enrolling at Baylor.

He said assistant coach Gary Thomas arranged for him to rent an apartment a few blocks from Baylor for $120 a month, about $100 less than the advertised rate for the apartment at the time.

"When I showed up (in Waco), they already had an apartment for me to live in," he told the Chronicle.

The complex is owned by Paul J. Meyer, a prominent Waco businessman who was a key contributor toward funding of the Baylor basketball facility, the Ferrell Center.

Among Meyer's business holdings is Advertising and Marketing Associates Inc., a Waco printing company where Lambert worked last summer, the Chronicle reported.

Thomas, citing school policy regarding the SWC inquiry, declined comment on any aspect of Lambert's allegations.

Rangers near another sweep

Associated Press

■ NHL Playoffs

LANDOVER, Md. — The New York Rangers continued their inexorable march through the NHL playoffs Thursday night, getting 21 saves from Mike Richter in a 3-0 victory over the Washington Capitals that put them one win away from a second straight series sweep.

It was the third shutout in seven games for Richter, who has been in net for New York throughout the playoffs. Brian Leetch had a goal and an assist for the Rangers, who can wrap up the best-of-7 Eastern Conference semifinal series Saturday night at the USAir Arena.

New York, which disposed of the New York Islanders before facing the Capitals, has not swept two straight series since 1937.

The Rangers, vying for their first Stanley Cup since 1940, have outscored their opponents by a combined 36-8 in setting a club record for consecutive playoff wins. Richter's three shutouts is one short of matching the NHL record for one playoff year.

The shutout was the 11th of the 1994 playoffs, one short of the record set in 1992.

The Capitals had gone 30 straight playoff games without being blanked. Richter was the last goalie to do it, winning 6-0 in April 1991.

Devils 4, Bruins 2

BOSTON — New Jersey switched goalies and turned around the momentum in their playoff battle with Boston, to pull within a game of the Bruins in a series dominated by the road team.

Chris Terreri made 25 saves in his first playoff start this season and Tom Chorske scored twice as the Devils cut the Bruins' lead to 2-1 in the best-of-7 Eastern Conference series. Jim Dowd and Tommy Albelin also scored for New Jersey.

The visiting team has won all three games so far in the series, which continues Saturday night with Game 4 in Boston.

Mariusz Czerkawski and Al Iafrate scored for Boston, which has a 2-3 record at home during the playoffs.

Terreri was not challenged often by the Bruins, who for the third straight game seemed to lack the intensity they displayed in the first round against Montreal.

But Terreri gave an emotional lift to the Devils, and even provided their hardest hits of the night. After being checked hard by Brent Hughes behind his net with 11:30 left in the game, Terreri went after Hughes at the next stoppage of play.

Slumping Braves go on 3-9 skid

By Tom Saladino
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA — There's a perfectly logical reason for the slump that sent the Atlanta Braves on a 3-9 skid after a 13-1 start, says third baseman Terry Pendleton.

"We've all stunk," he said after Wednesday night's 3-0 win over the Florida Marlins that ended a four-game losing streak.

It was Atlanta's third win in 12 games, the Braves' worst slide since April 13-24, 1992, when they were 2-9.

Despite the skid, the 16-10 Braves remain atop the National League East heading into Friday's opener of a three-game series with the Montreal Expos, who trail by half a game with a 16-11 record.

And the players aren't panicking.

"You don't do this by yourself," said Pendleton. "It's not just one or two guys. It's all of us. It concerns us because we know we can do better, but on the other hand, there's no concern because there's still 140 games left.

"We started out good, then fizzled. Maybe we got our fizzle over with," he said. "Hopefully, we'll start playing a little better baseball. A little better would be a plus for us at this time."

The Braves, who won the NL West the last three years before shifting to the East this season, started slowly each of those years. Atlanta was 12-14 after 26 games last year, 13-13 in 1992 and 14-12 in 1991.

"It's distasteful, but not worrisome," said general manager John Schuerholz. "When you have a bad team, it would be a worry. This is a good team."

He said there is no reason to make any changes, since baseball is not like professional football, where there are only 16 games in a season.

"We do not have to make massive, knee-jerk reactions to every loss," said Schuerholz.

"You don't want to downplay it, but you have to realize that we're not playing our best right now," said outfielder David Justice.

"We're probably lacking a little confidence and maybe a little bit of enthusiasm right now, but that's something you can control. I don't think it's because we haven't worked hard," he said.

"Anytime you get in a streak like this, there's some reason for concern. But not for the reasons I think the fan has," said pitcher Tom Glavine.

"The talent we have here is going to more than make up for this little slump we're going through. So that's the reason you won't see us panic."

ry, winning more tournaments than any other player, according to Poss.

Sophomore Shawn Savage was named the team's most valuable player. Savage, who has signed on with the University of Houston for the fall, finished second in the Region V Tournament and was second in the Western Junior College Athletic Association two weeks ago.

The Chap basketball program recognized freshman center John Brown as the outstanding offensive player after being named to the National Junior College Men's Basketball All-Tournament team and the most valuable player at the Region V Tournament in Waco.

Kirk Ford, who signed to play with the University of Houston recently, received the outstanding player award.

Sophomore Calvin Morris, who announced that he had signed with Tennessee-State University in Nashville, Tenn., was named the most improved player and point guard Andre Owens received the team's most valuable player award.

Luis Cambraia received recognition for the highest grade point average on the basketball team while Campbell, McCullough and Savage were noted for their academic achievement this season. All three recorded grade point averages above a 3.4 on a 4.0 scale.

"Can you believe it," said a smiling Cambraia. "The award represents a goal that I have reached, but it also makes me sad. Right now I am trying to decide on whether I am going to go back home and play professionally or stay here and get my degree. I am leaning towards staying here and getting my degree and then going back."

Retiring communications director H.A. Tuck, who served as the dinner's master of ceremonies, received a special award for outstanding service to the department.

Here is a list of the athletes, cheerleaders and supporters who were recognized at the 20th Annual Chap Sports Dinner at the Chaparral Center Thursday night (Listed alphabetically).

Basketball: John Brown, Luis Cambraia, Richard Edwards, Kirk Ford, Tellas Lampley, Calvin Morris, Andre Owens, Ben Radford, Kevin Rice, Earl Tyson, Steve Walston and David Wilson.

Student Trainers: Adrian Carrasco and A.J. Ashe.

Cheerleaders: Lordes Castresana, Bishop Green, Jay Haney, Misty Harvick, Twala Medeares, Susanne Martin, Todd Tucker, Jessica Wiggins and Susan Williams.

Golf: Jason Brooks, Judd Burkett, Chad Campbell, Graham Davidson, Jason Garduno, Lance McCullough, Brian McKinley, Luke Mongrain, Ronald Murray, David Savage and Shawn Savage.

Academic Awards: Golf (3.4-3.5 grade point average)-Cahd Campbell, Lance McCullough, Shawn Savage. Basketball (3.2 GPA)-Luis Cambraia.

Special Awards: Reta Mason, campus spirit award; Dr. Donald Floyd; James "Doc" Dotson; H.A. Tuck; Paul Stueckler and Mike Daniels.

Special Recognition: Patsy and Phillip Campbell, Bobby Garduno and Dub Warden.

Grande.

"I think it's going to be a contrast of styles but I look for it to be even," Parnell said of the exhibition.

Mexico has a national style of play, unlike the United States where styles differ from region to region, Parnell said. The Mexicans play the middle more and attack from straight in front of the goal. Therefore their center midfielders are more often their leading scorers.

The exhibition game includes pre-game entertainment beginning at 6 p.m. and an appearance by Ballet Folkorico Azteca at halftime. The Cobras will bring their "entourage" Parnell said, "with drums and flags and their (international soccer) atmosphere." The tournament director said he expects 2,000 to 3,000 people at the exhibition game.

Midland Lee forward Luke Snyder will be on the roster of the exhibition Texas team.

Parnell got the idea for the tournament as a club coach when he began taking his teams to play in Mexico in 1986. He says with the right playing facilities in Midland the tournament could grow to 150 teams.

"It's going to grow," he said. "We've already had about 30 (more) teams wanting to be in it next year."

The tournament will have seven brackets: boys under 12, 13, 14, 15/16 and 17/19 and girls under 12 and under 14.

(From 1B)

however, think it will be anything but a one-horse show.

"I think this is one of the tougher Derbys we've had," said the 81-year-old Whittingham, who won the race in 1986 with Ferdinand and in 1989 with Sunday Silence.

"It's one of the toughest Derbys I've seen in a long time," said Ron McAnally, trainer of Valiant Nature, who beat Brocco in the Hollywood Futurity and finished second to Holy Bull in the Blue Grass.

The only two Derby entrants not to have won a stakes are Blumin Affair and Strodes Creek. Blumin Affair finished second in the Grade I Breeders' Cup Juvenile and in the Grade II Arkansas Derby.

The other 13 Derby colts have won a total of 26 stakes.

"Out of 15, I can go down eight or nine deep and I wouldn't be shocked if anyone of them won," said Randy Winick, trainer of Brocco, the Breeders' Cup Juvenile and Santa Anita Derby winner.

"It's a good bunch, especially at the top," said D. Wayne Lukas, trainer of Tabasco Cat, winner of two stakes in California before finishing second in the Santa Anita Derby.

"There's Brocco, Holy Bull, Tabasco Cat and Strodes Creek. Then there are five more who are about alike."

Lukas did not name them, but they could be Valiant Nature; Blumin Affair; Go For Gin, second in the Wood Memorial; Southern Rhythm, winner of the Lexington, and Soul of the Matter, the San Felipe winner.

Completing the field are Kandaly, Powis Castle and the mutuel field of Mahogany Hall, Meadow Flight, Smilin Singin Sam and Ulises.

Holy Bull was made the 8-5 early favorite, followed by Brocco, 3-1; Tabasco Cat, 6-1, and Strodes Creek, 8-1.

"He's all set to fire, I've just got to pull the trigger," said Jimmy Croll, the 74-year-old owner-trainer of Holy Bull. "Everything he does he does handily."

"If he runs his race, it's going to take a great effort to beat him," Winick said of Brocco.

"I've had a great spring with Tabasco Cat," Lukas said.

Lewis, Jackson just want to fight

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Some people want to turn the Lennox Lewis-Phil Jackson WBC heavyweight title fight into another "Rocky IV." The fighters just want to get it on.

While the managers and trainers of Lewis, the defending champion, and Jackson proclaim Friday night's bout a Britain vs. United States grudge match, the boxers try to ignore the blarney. Fighting for a championship is enough for them.

"Words can't hurt you," Jackson said by telephone from the decaying Overtown section of Miami. "It's like sticks and stones. It all will happen in the ring, throwing punches."

Lewis, who feels slighted in this country, where Evander Holyfield and, now, Michael Moorer generally have been considered the true heavyweight champion, also leaves the mud-slinging to others.

"A lot of people are talking about Michael Moorer and other pretenders," said the 28-year-old Londoner who was given the WBC belt when Riddick Bowe, then the undisputed champion, dumped it into a garbage can in a dispute over a mandatory defense against Lewis. "My focus is Phil Jackson. This is a man to be taken seriously; he has more knockouts than I have fights. It's up to me to prove myself as the true champion."

On Thursday, Lewis weighed in at 235 pounds for the bout that will be refereed by Arthur Mercante of New York. Jackson, who at 6-foot is five inches shorter than Lewis, weighed 217.

While Lewis is trying to prove himself a champion, manager Frank Maloney is trying to fan the fires of patriotism. He got some help from Jackson's handlers in developing a scenario similar to the fourth "Rocky" film, in which Sylvester Stallone beats a drug-bolstered Russian super fighter.

"Phil comes in with his whole country's pride on his shoulders," Maloney said. "The others are cowards. Michael Moorer got his title by beating a guy with a heart condition (Holyfield). Now he's got a condition: a yellow streak down his back.

"The era of the horizontal heavyweights has shifted. Your heavyweights aren't horizontal. They're just cowards.

"Lennox Lewis wants to unify the title and bring that back to Britain. For the last four years, you have been writing in America whatever you thought, but not the truth about Lennox Lewis. He won't avoid anyone. He never has. You could bring on the U.S. Marines and he'll take 'em on."

He won't have to go that far. Only Jackson (30-1, 27 knockouts) will be in the Convention Center ring with him.

Not that Jackson's trainer, Patrick Burns, is beyond invoking the name of the Marines: he was one, in Vietnam.

Missions win in ninth

Staff Report

SAN ANTONIO — Midland came back to tie the San Antonio Missions here Thursday in the top of the ninth inning only to lose in the bottom of the ninth, 4-3.

The loss was the Angels sixth out of eight games on their current road trip. It was also Midland's third one-run loss in the last four games. The team has two more games against the Missions before a day off Sunday and the start of a 10-game homestand Monday versus Jackson.

Mission newcomer Noe Munoz hit a chopper up the middle with runners at first and second in the ninth inning with the game tied at 3-3. Angel shortstop Tim Harkrider fielded the ball and tagged out Juan Castro but could not get the ball out of his glove to make the double play. The run turned out to be the only RBI the Missions would get on the night when Henry Blanco scored from third.

The Angels (13-15) fought back to tie the game when they trailed 3-2 going into their last at bat. Fausto Tejero hit a leadoff double to center and Marcus Riley pinch ran for him. J.D. Ramirez then moved his hit streak to 17 games with a single up the middle to score Ramirez.

San Antonio (10-18) scored their three other runs in the sixth with only one base hit. Midland contributed to the Missions' offense in that frame with a wild pitch, two walks and two throwing errors. One run scored on the wild pitch and two on the errors.

Sutton, Kite tied at 66

■ BellSouth Classic

MARIETTA, Ga. (AP) — A two-shot swing on the final hole Thursday left Tom Kite and Hal Sutton tied for the lead at 6-under-par 66 in the first round of the $1.2 million BellSouth Classic.

Kite, the 1992 U.S. Open champion and winner of this event the same year, rolled in a five-foot birdie putt and Sutton, winless since the 1986 Memorial, had his only bogey of the day when he missed the ninth green.

Both Kite and Sutton began play on the hilly, 7,018-yard Atlanta Country Club course on No. 10.

They held their one-shot lead over Craig Parry, whose bogey-free round featured birdie putts of 30 feet on No. 4 and 20 feet on No. 13.

"Everything went my way today," Parry said.

Seven others were at 68 — Lennie Clements, Paul Goydos, Corey Pavin, Brian Henninger, Mark Wurtz, Esteban Toledo and Wayne Levi, a two-time Atlanta winner who bogeyed his final hole.

Kite and Sutton tied for second last week in Houston, finishing three shots behind the winner, Mike Heinen, who struggled to a 76 Thursday.

"I feel very comfortable on this course," Kite said. "I have a lot of good past memories. I expect to play well. All in all, it was a good, solid round."

Rockets have mild case of NBA playoff anxiety

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Clifford Robinson had heartburn, James Robinson had a headache and the Houston Rockets have a mild case of anxiety.

The two Robinsons missed the Portland Trail Blazers' practice Thursday and were sent to see a doctor. Both are listed as probable for Friday night's fourth game of the opening-round series.

The Rockets lead the best-of-5 series 2-1 and have no desire to return to Houston for a deciding Game 5 on Sunday.

"We just want to finish it," Hakeem Olajuwon said. "We really don't want to go to Game 5. If we go to five games, then it's more high risk."

Although he isn't taking the Blazers for granted, Houston coach Rudy Tomjanovich wants to get on to the next round as quickly as possible because Phoenix is waiting. The Suns completed a first-round sweep of Golden State on Wednesday night.

"It gives them more and more of an advantage," Tomjanovich said. "They could be watching us very closely."

There is plenty of pressure to go around Friday night, he said, but the Blazers still have more to lose.

"Nobody wants to go to a fifth game. Anything can happen in a one-game series," Tomjanovich said. "But you've always got to say the pressure's on the team where, when you lose, it's over."

There is a perception that the Blazers can't play much better than they did Tuesday night, when they shot 54 percent from the field and committed just six turnovers. Still, Portland barely won, 118-115.

"They played a heck of a game, too," Blazers coach Rick Adelman said of the Rockets.

Olajuwon has averaged 36 points and shot 53 percent in the series.

Southwestern U. grabs Lawson

Midland High first baseman Gabe Lawson will play college baseball with Southwestern University in Georgetown next fall.

Lawson hit .333 with one homer and seven RBI for the Bulldogs in District 4-5A play this season. He was a two-year starter for MHS and made the all-tournament team in the Tournament of Champions last year.

Lawson is joining good company with Southwestern coach Jim Mallon, who coached both MHS grads Mike Timlin, now with the Toronto Blue Jays, and Mike Stanton, now with the Atlanta Braves.

Southwestern is a Division III school.

Fowler's 63 takes GTCC handicap

Nancy Fowler shot a 63 Thursday for a three-round total of 202 to win Green Tree Country Club's Ladies Handicap Championship golf tournament by 10 strokes.

Pat Kirby had a 67-212 for second place. Kirby was followed by Doris Schultz, 74-215; Shirley Stallings, 69-215; and Jo Ann Teasley, 70-216.

Compiled from Reporter-Telegram staff reports.

WAC considers tourney move

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — The Western Athletic Conference is considering a proposal to move its post-season basketball tournament to University Arena in Albuquerque from the Delta Center in Salt Lake City.

The WAC has not yet exercised its 1995 option for the Delta Center, and Associate WAC Commissioner Jeff Hurd confirmed Wednesday it may move the tournament to the Pit, as the arena is known.

Rudy Davalos, New Mexico athletic director, said Wednesday all 10 WAC athletic directors will meet May 25 in Las Vegas, Nev., to determine if they should move the tournament to Albuquerque.

The 1995 WAC tournament is scheduled March 9-11, but the Pit already is booked on those dates.

King urges caution for net phenoms

NEW YORK (AP) — Billie Jean King urges caution in the rush to stop teen-age tennis phenoms from turning professional.

"There might be some legalities we haven't looked at," King said Thursday. "Who are we to say someone can't make money?"

The Hall of Fame tennis star believes some players have turned pro too young, but she is hesitant when it comes to legislating the age of a professional player.

"We're really not talking age, we're talking maturity," King said. "We need to do a much better job of educating the players and especially their parents — parents in capital letters and underlined."

King, who with a small band of cohorts began the women's professional tour, said she was totally against Jennifer Capriati leaving the amateur ranks in 1990 shortly before her 14th birthday. And she told Capriati's parents exactly that when they asked.

"But Jennifer only wanted to be a professional player," King said.

Now, after winning about $1.5 million, the 18-year-old Capriati has taken a sabbatical from the sport.

Under current rules, girls can turn pro at the age of 13 years, 11 months, and play 15 tournaments in their first year. Boys can play eight professional events at age 14 and 12 when they are 15.

Martina Navratilova, currently playing in the Italian Open at Rome, said Wednesday she favored banning players under the age of 16 from tour events.

"Have you seen what has happened to (Andrea) Jaeger, (Tracy) Austin and Capriati?" Navratilova said. "If you start playing so young, you either get injured or burn out. If you are that good at 14, you will be just as good at 16."

FRIDAY, MAY 6, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Those who pursue new goals will make the most career progress. What once seemed satisfactory may now strike you as insufficient. Intellectual and hard-working, you would be wise to sharpen your research and writing skills. Do not be shy about bringing your more scholarly interests to the attention of higher-ups. Romance reaches a new plateau early in 1995. Make certain partner shares your thirst for knowledge and love for animals.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: baseball legend Willie Mays, father of psychiatry Dr. Sigmund Freud, filmmaker Orson Welles, opera singer Marguerite Piazza.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A long-awaited meeting lives up to your expectations. Use tact to resolve a difficult personal problem. Do not be afraid to mix business with pleasure. Call home if you are traveling.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The emphasis is on being creative, independent and direct. Have confidence in yourself and others will follow your lead. What you need is available. Reach for it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Keep your priorities in mind when planning a work schedule. You need to play it safe where an unusual financial venture is concerned. Activity behind the scenes could affect you in a positive way.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your first priority today is obtaining reliable information and completing a special project. Past efforts produce new rewards. Maintain a steady pace at work.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not become unapproachable just because you have a disagreement with someone. Tact and charm will let you obtain your goals. You may want to make some big changes in your lifestyle. Go slow.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Someone could make you an exciting offer. Be certain you know the whole story before saying "yes." Extra money may not be worth the stress a change will cause.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You could encounter the unknown when trying to sort out a personal dilemma. Maintain your sense of humor. Your efforts to obtain a better position or more money may not bring immediate results. Persevere!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Develop better relations with customs officials if dealing in imported merchandise. Friends lend a helping hand. A community project would benefit greatly from your involvement.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Deal with any financial questions honestly or your plans could backfire. Romance could be a source of great delight this evening. Complete your work early so that you can leave the office on time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be self-reliant, but do not automatically dismiss offers of assistance. Keeping your wits in a crisis will impress those in charge. Accept compliments gracefully.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A good day to contact people in positions of influence. You need to act promptly on new opportunities. Financial considerations may be less important than emotional factors when making a career choice. Know thyself!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): There is greater emphasis on teamwork and cooperation today. New business will result from a group effort. Seek investment advice from experts only.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are straightforward and well-meaning, eager to be of service to others. Although somewhat stingy as youngsters, once these Taureans grow up and have enough money, they will be reasonably generous with it. Their homes will reflect their love of comfort and style. Usually strong and vigorous, these Taureans tend to overeat when feeling stressed.

Opening lead: Ace of ♡

Nowhere is it written that you must submit to the fate that your enemies are plotting for you. Since your welfare is at stake, that would be downright foolhardy, especially if you have an effective countermeasure available.

With East and West both unlimited, South's jump to three spades at this vulnerability must show a powerful playing hand with a suit not good enough for a jump to four spades. Under those circumstances North was full value for the raise to game.

West led the ace of hearts, on which East dropped the two, then shifted to a low club. West's intent was obvious. The ace of hearts had to be a singleton and East was signalling a possible entry in the lower-ranking side suit to negotiate the heart ruff.

A complacent declarer would win the ace of clubs and run the queen of spades, staking everything on the finesse, or lead ace and another trump in the hope of finding an even split. Both would lead to defeat when West takes the king of spades, gets to East with a club and scores a heart ruff.

A thoughtful declarer would refuse to be led like a lamb to the slaughter. After winning the ace of clubs at trick two, South should lead dummy's king of diamonds. When East does not produce the ace, declarer discards the club from hand and West has no way to get to partner's hand for a heart ruff. South will lose only one trump trick, one heart and one diamond!

"While they are fussing at you, you'll have to live with it and keep your eye on your work."

Lady Bird Johnson offers first lady Hillary Clinton advice.

Mrs. Johnson, 81, said she met Mrs. Clinton during the 1992 campaign. The former first lady also watched her woo a crowd of 1,000 at a recent health care symposium in Texas.

"I don't know her well but I applaud her dedication to what she feels is one of the most necessary things in public life these days, which is health care," Mrs. Johnson said in an interview being published in Sunday's Parade magazine.

Mrs. Johnson will return to the White House on Wednesday with Barbara Bush, Nancy Reagan, Betty Ford and Rosalynn Carter for a tribute to America's first ladies. Mrs. Clinton is the host.

AUSTIN — Forget the beer and smokes for the Rolling Stones concert here in October.

The show is scheduled for the University of Texas' Memorial Stadium.

"There will not be beer sales," consistent with university policy, said Ed Sharpe, the school's vice president for administration and public affairs. The university also has a no-smoking policy at the stadium.

About 80,000 fans are expected at the Oct. 16 show, part of a world tour the Stones announced Tuesday.

NEW YORK — Jane Pauley will trade her television studio for a screechy public address system when she becomes principal for a day.

The NBC newswoman will be one of 700 principals-for-a-day in city schools today as part of a program aimed at giving government and business executives a hands-on view of what goes on in the schools.

"I think the idea of this is for people to get out of their skyscraper offices and into the schools," said Pauley, who will make her guest appearance at Roberto Clemente Junior High in the Bronx.

Other celebrity principals include Gov. Mario Cuomo, who will go back to his elementary school alma mater P.S. 50 in Queens, gossip maven Liz Smith, New York Knicks President Dave Checketts and New York Mets co-owner Fred Wilpon.

And now, your Personals quiz: Pictures of Miles Davis and John Wayne that have appeared recently in GAP "so-and-so wore khakis" ads were the only two in the series in which the images were altered. What was the change?

The GAP won't say exactly how much khaki sales have gone up since the ads appeared last fall, but Vice President Richard Crisman said that the company's decision to make more of the ads speaks for itself: "We're pleased."

A series of 12 pictures began running in September, 12 more were added this spring, and 12 more will be added in the fall. The pictures are unearthed by excavators with a "wish list" of celebrities — the list is altered if the researchers encounter other khaki-clad stars in their searches — in photo archives, bookstores and stores that sell LPs.

Quiz answer: Both Miles Davis and John Wayne had lighted cigarettes between the fingers of their right hands when the original photos were taken. The cigarettes were removed by GAP artists.

Pizza Hut driver Vandiver Boyles of Alabama writes to the editor of Pizza & Pasta magazine about the need for pizza deliverers to pack heat.

Boyles says Pizza Hut's official policy is to ban drivers from carrying guns: "No guns anywhere, any time while you're on the clock. Yet I know of two recent instances where delivery drivers would definitely be dead today had they not violated that policy. . . . Why should American citizens have to take knives to a gunfight? . . .

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

WHAT IS STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE?
Stockquote Hotline gives you the latest stock prices direct from the wires of the Associated Press. Over 9,000 stocks are listed from NYSE, AmEx, and OTC sources; all available 24 hours a day. You can receive up to 10 quotes with one easy phone call.

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE:
1) Call the Stockquote Hotline at 560-2400; enter the category number which is 9988.
2) You will be asked to enter your stock ticker symbol. These are based on industry-standard symbols, which can be found in a Standard & Poor's Ticker guide, or by calling your local stock broker.
3) Once you've entered the numerical code for the ticker symbol, press the Star Key (*) and you will hear the current price and net change from the last Associated Press update; which is a few minutes behind market activity.
4) After the stock is quoted, you will be asked to enter another ticker symbol. You now have 2 options:
- You may request a quote, you will be asked to enter another ticker symbol. You now have 2 options.
- You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more pressing the Star Key (*).

Now the volume, high and low will be given, and then you will be asked to enter another ticker code.
- You may enter up to 10 ticker symbols per call.

5) To exit Stockquote Hotline, simply hang up the phone.

Oil prices rise

NEW YORK — The outbreak of civil war in Yemen and forecasts of higher oil demand pushed crude prices back over the $17 per barrel level on Thursday.

Light sweet crude oil for delivery in June settled at $17.29 per barrel, up 43 cents at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Saudi Arabia neighbor Yemen, which pumps about 350,000 barrels per day, was plunged into civil war Thursday between historically conservative northern Yemen and the socialist southern part of the country.

Yemen's output pales in comparison to Saudi Arabia's eight million barrel daily production; but the unrest in the vital region upset the oil market.

Dow mostly down

NEW YORK — Stocks finished Thursday's session mostly lower, as a flurry of selling near the close pushed the Dow Jones industrial average barely into negative territory, erasing modest gains.

Trading was very quiet ahead of Friday's release of April employment data.

"The smartest thing anybody could say about this market is that it's looking for something to push it one way or another," said Richard Meyer, head equity trader atLadenburg, Thalmann & Co.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 1.78 to 3,695.97. Declining issues outnumbered advancers by 1,091 to 1,017 on the New York Stock Exchange. Big Board volume totaled 255.69 million shares, down from 268 million on Wednesday.

Most small-capitalization stocks finished lower. The NYSE's composite index fell 0.26 to 250.49. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index fell 2.09 to 441.70. Bucking the trend, the Nasdaq composite index rose 0.25 to 740.55. The Russell 2,000 index of small-cap stocks closed at 254.10, down 0.36 point.

Dollar gains go on

NEW YORK — The dollar extended its gains against most major currencies Thursday. Analysts said the advance showed the effectiveness, at least for now, of Wednesday's central bank intervention to support the dollar.

Gold prices fell. On New York's Commodity Exchange, gold for current delivery closed at $373.60 per troy ounce, off $3.00. At 4 p.m. EST, Republic National Bank quoted gold at a late bid of $373.60, down $2.80.

The dollar closed in New York at 102.85 Japanese yen, up from 101.85 on Wednesday, and at 1.6670 German marks, up from 1.6535. The dollar also strengthened in Europe Thursday, a day after it surged worldwide on the U.S.-led support move.

The Federal Reserve and 15 other central banks bought dollars, selling marks and yen, in the largest coordinated intervention by the leading industrialized nations since August 1992.

Elcor plans $30 million Ennis plant

Staff Report

DALLAS — Elcor Corp., with facilities in Midland, announced that its board of directors has authorized plans to construct a new $30 million plant to manufacture fiberglass mat roofing substrate materials and industrial facer products for the construction industry.

The new plant will have the capacity to produce about 5 billion square feet per year of fiberglass mat materials with significantly improved physical properties and lower production costs. The plant is scheduled to be operational by the spring of 1996. The new plant will be funded from cash flow with temporary borrowings, if needed, from the company's unsecured credit line.

The new plant will be located at Elk's Ennis, Texas facility next to its existing fiberglass mat manufacturing plant, which began operations in 1978. The new plant will supply Elk's growing needs at its roofing plants in Ennis, Texas and Tuscaloosa, Alabama and at its major new roofing plant currently under construction in Shafter, California. In addition, Elk will be in a position to sell fiberglass mat roofing substrate to other roofing manufacturers.

Harold K. Work, executive vice-president of Elcor and president and chief executive officer of its Elk subsidiary, said, "We are nearing a point where growth in demand for fiberglass mat substrates will exceed the industry's capacity to supply these needs. The plant we are announcing today will be the first new fiberglass mat plant built since 1985.

"Since 1985, industry shipments of single-ply fiberglass asphalt shingles have increased by 33 percent from 59.6 to 79.2 million squares, and shipments of the double-layered premium laminated fiberglass asphalt shingles have almost quintupled from from 5.6 to 25.5 million squares per year. The significant growth in demand for fiberglass mat has pushed many of the existing manufacturing facilities to their capacity limits. Elk's new fiberglass mat plant will have sufficient capacity to supply Elk's growing needs as well as the growing needs of the industry. The new plant will be capable of manufacturing fiberglass mats with superior physical properties at significantly lower conversation costs.

"The existing fiberglass mat plant at our Ennis facility will be positioned to expand our successful specialty nonwoven materials business serving other industries.

"The superior physical properties of the fiberglass mat roofing substrates to be manufactured by the new plant will further enhance our competitive position in the rapidly growing premium laminated fiberglass asphalt shingle segment of the asphalt shingle market. Elk's needs alone should put the new fiberglass mat plant well past its break-even point," he said.

To sway 'fence-sitters'

Apple Computer has launched a new ad campaign aimed at winning over new users with the company's new PowerPC processor-based computers. In addition to the traditional Macintosh community, Apple hopes to sway "fence-sitters" — that is, users who are attracted to the Macintosh but have, in the past, chosed MS-DOS or Windows systems.

Economists call wage inflation 1st-quarter surge 'aberration'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A gauge of wage inflation shot up at the fastest pace in three years during the first quarter, but private economists and the Clinton administration insisted the sharp increase was an aberration and not a hint of spiraling prices.

The Labor Department said Thursday that unit labor costs in the January-March quarter jumped 5 percent, at an annual rate, from the last quarter of 1993, the steepest increase since a 6.1 percent surge in the final three months of 1990.

The report also suggested a dramatic slowing in non-farm productivity growth, up just 0.5 percent in the first quarter compared to a 6.4 percent gain from October through December.

But economists said both figures overstated the actual situation.

The jump in labor costs — two-thirds of the cost of a product — is "an aberration," contended Mark Zandi, an economist with Regional Financial Associates in West Chester, Pa.

"It's not consistent with all the other information we have available to us," he added. "Labor is still receiving relatively tame and modest increases in wages, salaries and benefits."

Indeed, unit labor costs were up just 0.8 percent over the first quarter of 1993, suggesting inflation should remain around current levels, said economist Bruce Steinberg of Merrill Lynch & Co. Consumer prices were rising at an annual rate of 2.5 percent in March, down from 2.7 percent in 1993.

Robert Wescott, an economist with the president's Council of Economic Advisers, also said the report was misleading, noting that a separate measurement of labor costs was well-behaved during the last quarter.

In a report last week, the Labor Department said its Employment Cost Index edged up just 0.7 percent in the first quarter, down from 0.8 percent in the fourth quarter and the smallest increase in 7½ years.

"You have to put (unit labor costs) in context with the other data," Wescott contended. "This is one piece of information on the quarter that is not corroborated by other important indicators."

Many analysts consider the index the more reliable of the two inflation gauges. They differ somewhat in the factors that are measured.

Elsewhere Thursday:

— The nation's major retailers reported weak sales in April, but analysts said the softness resulted from an early Easter, which caused consumers to shift into March purchases they normally would have made in April. If the two months are combined, they maintained, retailers were posting good gains over the period.

— The Labor Department also reported the number of Americans filing first-time claims for state unemployment benefits rose by 17,000 last week, to 350,000. Analysts said the report suggested job growth slowed during April — to about 170,000 from 456,000 in March, which was the biggest jump in more than six years. The department releases the April employment report today.

— A survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. found 30-year, fixed-rate mortgages averaged 8.53 .

Mortgage rates rise to 8.53 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — The average interest rate on 30-year, fixed-rate mortgages rose to 8.53 percent this week, the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. said Thursday.

It was the first time since June 12, 1992 — when the average was 8.54 percent — that the rate has been above 8.5 percent.

This week's average was up from 8.32 percent the previous week. The average hit a 25-year low of 6.74 percent in October and in recent weeks has been between 1½ and 1¾ percentage points above that low.

On one-year adjustable rate mortgages, lenders were asking an average initial rate of 5.25 percent, up from 5.15 percent last week.

Fifteen-year mortgages, a popular option for those refinancing mortgages, averaged 8.03 percent this week, up from 7.85 percent a week earlier.

The rates do not include add-on fees.

State's local telephone industry proposes a partial deregulation

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' local telephone industry has proposed a plan to partially free its rates and services from state Public Utility Commission regulation.

Under the plan presented to a legislative committee Wednesday by the Texas Telephone Association, telephone services would be divided into three tiers of decreasing regulation.

Basic telephone service — including voice access to local and long-distance calls, Touchtone dialing and 911 service — would continue to be regulated by the state.

Telephone companies would be given some flexibility in a category called discretionary services, including call waiting, call forwarding and Caller ID, which allows customers to see the number of an incoming call before picking up the phone.

In the discretionary services category, a local telephone company would be limited to a certain total for overall charges collected, but it could decide on its own how to price each individual service.

For a third category of services that face unrestricted competition, no limit would be set on telephone company charges. These services include pay phones, paging, mobile services and 1-800 services.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Tax worries shouldn't cloud investment moves

By Bill Doyle

Q: The net asset value of my no-load mutual fund recently set a new high at $10.40 per share. The fund invests primarily in bonds. If interest rates rise and bring the fund's NAV down to, say, $10.22, I would lose $427.50.

Doyle

On the other hand, if I redeem my fund shares now and put the money in a secure bank account, I would have a $1,639 profit. At 28 percent, the long-term capital-gains tax on that would be nearly $459. So, I decided to wait and see if the fund's NAV declines to a level at which I'd pay less tax.

Is this a proper way to make investment decisions?

A: Absolutely not!

Time was when standard advice went as follows: "Never make an investment decision based on taxes." However, as taxes increased and became increasingly complex, that statement was amended to warn against basing investment decisions on "taxes alone."

Anyone who completely ignores tax implications simply cannot make wise investment decisions. That's one end of the spectrum. You are at the other extreme.

You almost seem to be praying for that mutual fund's share value to fall, so you can redeem your shares at a lower price and pay less capital gains tax. That is perverse reasoning.

A decline in per-share NAV means you will get less money when you redeem your shares. It would be far better to cash in at a higher share value and pay tax on your profit. That way, you would walk away with more money.

Q: I own shares in a tax-free mutual fund. My dividends are automatically reinvested to buy more fund shares. Do these dividends increase my "basis" — cost for tax purposes?

A: Of course they do. Let's say you originally invested $5,000 in that fund. Your basis was $5,000. Now, let's say you reinvest $6,000 of dividends over the years. That would make your basis $11,000 — the $5,000 you paid in plus the $6,000 you reinvested.

When you redeem shares, the difference between your basis and the proceeds from the redemption is either a capital gain or a capital loss.

By increasing your basis through reinvestments, you are reducing the capital gain you will realize when you finally redeem fund shares.

Q: I am a college freshman, paying my own way through school. Lately, my political science professor has been encouraging everyone to invest in mutual funds.

I have exactly $2,500 in the bank that I will not need for at least nine months. This is all I have to fall back on, however. What mutual fund would you suggest for me?

A: None!

It's clear you are not in financial shape to invest and risk the $2,500 you have tucked away, for which you will have good use in reasonably short order. Nine months is not a long time.

Although most mutual funds have been excellent investments over the long haul, they do carry the risk of declining in value. If you invest in a mutual fund and bail out at a time when the fund's share value is down, you might not be able to pay the costs of your education.

Let's hope you are overstating the case and that your political science prof is not encouraging "everyone" to invest in mutual fund shares or anything else.

Some people should never invest, because they don't have the wherewithal or are temperamentally unfit to take on the risk. No one should invest money he or she might need in the near future. If that professor is ignoring those points, the college administration should crack down on him.

Officials: Bush has key to better jails

■ Some Midland, Ector officials praise candidate Bush's ideas on jails, blast governor for poor management of prison system.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Officials from Midland and Ector counties touted Republican gubernatorial candidate George W. Bush on Thursday as a man with ideas for relieving county jail overcrowding.

They also criticized Democratic Gov. Ann Richards for what they called poor management of the state prison system.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre and Sheriff Gary Painter met with Ector County District Attorney John Smith and Sheriff Orvil "Bob" Brookshire to support Bush and his idea for using tents in prison facilities to ease county jail overcrowding.

"We are alarmed with the jail overcrowding situation," Schorre said. "I commend Bush for trying to address the situation."

The county officials cited the Ruiz prison settlement as the root of the problem. The lawsuit was filed by David Ruiz in 1972 and was finalized in 1992.

The U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that state prisons could not operate above 95 percent capacity and that tents cannot be used to house prisoners.

However, Bush contends there is a strong legal argument for using tents to increase capacity of prisons based on the Fifth Circuit's decision in another case. In that case, the court stated that tent cities would be "far superior" to the conditions in the county jails. It also stated that the state cannot "turn away from the use of common sense solutions by pointing to the Ruiz decree."

Smith said the Ruiz decision has "frozen state officials from doing anything on the jail overcrowding."

He said with Bush's intention of challenging the Ruiz decision by getting it back in the court system, there will be "the immediate relief we need . . . on the front burner."

"This problem is not going to go away until someone does something about it," Smith said.

Painter said 33,000 state prisoners are being held in county jails with 299 of them in the Midland County Detention Center. This has caused the jail to operate with 194 people over the legal capacity.

Gun-ban vote brings mixed Texas reaction

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — In this state where guns are cherished but fear of violent crime is growing, Texans watched Thursday with relief and dismay as the U.S. House voted to ban 19 types of assault-style weapons.

Emotions ran high in San Antonio, where gang violence has proliferated, where gun shows are banned in city buildings and where the city's daily newspaper no longer accepts ads for assault-type rifles.

Mayor Nelson Wolff and a City Council majority sent a resolution to federal lawmakers urging passage of the measure, which stops future production and sale of the 19 weapons but does not affect guns on the list already legally owned.

Among the banned weapons are AK-47s, AR-15s and Uzis.

"These guns are made for killing people, not for hunting," said Wolff, adding that he supports the right to own firearms and has a gun himself.

But he said: "I cannot think of any conceivable reason why any citizen would need weapons of this type."

Leslie Farington, owner of Don's Gun Sales Inc. in San Antonio, thought of a few reasons.

"I would say that the person that is a law-abiding citizen is conscious about the firearms, that they are strictly for defense of the home or for hunting or for target practice," said Ms. Farington.

Her shop sells some of the guns that will be banned, and sales of the weap-

Conservative group gets input on issues

State Rep. Tom Craddick was among members of the Texas Conservative Coalition who held a hearing Thursday at Midland College.

■ Texas Conservative Coalition listens to residents who are concerned about crime, education during public hearing.

By Michael Kashgarian

Crime and education issues highlighted a public hearing held Thursday by the Texas Conservation Coalition, a bipartisan group of state legislators.

About 40 constituents attended the forum at Midland College. Ten legislators were on hand including Rep. Tom Craddick, who acted as host.

Some of the issues presented to the representatives included:

■ Juvenile crime.

Mayor J.D. Faircloth, speaking on behalf of the city and the Public Safety Committee of the Texas Municipal League, expressed a need to change the laws that dictate the way juvenile criminals are handled.

"We believe there should be some significant revision in the family code," he said.

Faircloth said the first step would be to lower the age at which a person is legally viewed as an adult from 17 to 15.

The mayor also advocated boot camps, more parental accountability, making juvenile records public, and creating rehabilitation services for delinquents.

■ Loopholes for criminals in the justice system.

District Attorney Al Schorre discussed inequities in punishments that favor those convicted

Visitors bureau honors winners

Staff Report

The Midland Chamber of Commerce's Convention and Visitors Bureau honored local students Thursday for their efforts to promote tourism.

The students designed the 10 winning posters in a contest that depicted what the students like to do in Midland. The posters were on display at Midland Park Mall.

Convention and Visitors Bureau Director Suzy McElmurry said the winning posters would be displayed at the chamber office. The other posters will be sent to the different places around the city that are depicted on the posters.

Third-grade winners were Jennifer Soto from Lamar Elementary School and Patricia Ware from Milam Elementary School. Fourth-grade winners were Cory Jenson from Lamar and Courtney Odom from Sam Houston Elementary School. Winners from the fifth grade were Jeff Johnson, Ashley Loyd and Mary Maddox, all from Emerson Elementary School, and Patrick Messersmith of Greathouse Elementary School. Milam sixth-grader Eric Loftis also won.

The winners received gifts from local merchants.

For students, Cinco de Mayo equals fun, learning

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel

Visitors were greeted by the aroma of freshly made corn tortillas and two low-rider vehicles, all in keeping with the Cinco de Mayo celebration at DeZavala Elementary School.

Students at Ben Milam Elementary School got a hands-on feel for Mexican history by using construction paper to create sombreros, Mexican flags and cascarones — hollow eggs filled with confetti.

DeZavala teacher Estelita Davila said there several reasons for celebrating Cinco de Mayo, which is a holiday to honor Mexico's independence from France. Mexicans celebrate their independence from Spain on Sept. 16.

"We live in a predominantly Hispanic community and for the Hispanic children this builds self-esteem. It teaches them to value their culture and have a sense of pride," Ms. Davila said.

"They need to know they have something important to contribute.

"For the Anglo children, it makes them aware of other cultures and be more tolerant as well . . . They also learn that the two cultures are more alike than different," she said.

Day focuses on mysterious chronic fatigue syndrome

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

A day has been set aside to heighten awareness of chronic fatigue and immune dysfunction syndrome (CFIDS), a mystery illness that is characterized by "overwhelming exhaustion, disabling pain, and neurological problems."

May 12 has been designated as International Chronic Fatigue and Immune Dysfunction Syndrome/Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Awareness Day.

In Midland, the CFIDS/ME Awareness Day will include a meeting of the group West Texans Living with Chronic Fatigue and Immune Dysfunction Syndrome-/Fibromyalgia Syndrome.

The meeting is to be at noon Thursday at the Family Center of Golf Course Road Church of Christ.

Illness involves "persistent," "intolerable" fatigue and inability of body to recover from ordinary exercise, physical work.

May 12 coincides with the birthday in 1820 of British war nurse Florence Nightingale, who may have suffered from the debilitating disease, according to Betty Cerf, a Midlander wo suffers from CFIDS.

Miss Nightingale, who contracted an exhausting illness during the Crimean War of the 1850s, spent the last 50 years of her life — which spanned 90 years — virtually bed-ridden.

CFISD — also known as chronic fatigue syndrome, chronic Epstein-Barr virus (CEBV), "yuppie flu," and myalgic encephalomyelitis (ME) — often follows a physical or emotional trauma in a person's life.

In Ms. Cerf's case, it was the flu and major surgery.

Ms. Cerf was an active mother of three children in 1987 when she came down with "a flu that never went away and progressively became worse."

"I loved to dance, ride bikes, swim, hike; and I found great joy in being a healthy mother of three children," she recalled.

Today at age 44, she is functioning at about 20 percent of her former stamina.

"The losses that I have experienced are overwhelming at times," she said. "Many simple activities are impossible for me. Daily care becomes an effort, but I have found that if I pace myself, I am able to reduce the amount of time that I am bedridden."

POLICE REPORTS

Multiple charges

Adam Garcia Galindo was formally charged on Thursday in connection with a robbery that occurred Saturday night. He was charged with aggravated robbery and aggravated kidnapping. His bond was set at $100,000 for each charge.

Galindo is also being held in the Midland County Detention Center for Immigration and Naturalization Services without bond because he is an illegal alien from Guatemala, jail officials said.

Galindo was arrested by sheriff's officials Wednesday night in connection with a robbery and kidnapping that occurred at the Kent Kwik convenience store on Highway 158, west of Midland, on Saturday.

He allegedly entered the store about 11:20 p.m., robbed the two female clerks at gunpoint, then took one of the clerks as hostage and fled the store, according to a report.

He then drove about two or three miles into Martin County, where he allegedly physically and sexually assaulted the clerk and left her on the side of the road, officials said.

Robbery

A Pizza Hut delivery man lost his wallet during a robbery late Saturday at Wildflower Apartments, 4301 Raleigh Court.

Robert Douglas, 33, was making a delivery at the apartments about 11 p.m., when he was assaulted by three males who took his wallet, according to a report.

All three subjects were described as white males, 18-20 years old. One subject was described as 5 feet 11 inches tall and 170 pounds, wearing a white T-shirt and blue jeans, according to the report.

Teen-ager in jail

UPTON COUNTY — A Pecos teen-ager remained in jail Thursday after being arrested in connection with the death of an 18-month-old boy on Monday.

Gilberto Morales Arevalo, 19 — who is charged with capital murder of a child — was arrested after autopsy results on 18-month-old Alvaro M. Carrasco revealed that he died from blunt adominal trauma due to a beating the child had received, according to a report.

He was pronounced dead at 12:25 p.m. Monday at the Reeves County Hospital in Pecos.

An investigation into the death by the Upton County Sheriff's office, district attorney's office investigators, the Pecos Police Department and the Texas Rangers led to the arrest of Arevalo. The suspect was living with the boy's mother, Sandra Madrid, according to the report.

Drug arrests

ODESSA — Permian Basin Drug Task Force officials took five Odessa residents into custody Wednsday during separate narcotics arrests.

Officials seized about 25 pounds of marijuana, worth about $30,000, and arrested Ralph Dominguez Granado, 17, at about 4:45 p.m. in a west Odessa parking lot, according to a report. Granado was charged with aggravated delivery of marijuana within 1,000 feet of a school and Tax Stamp Act violation. Officials also seized a 1982 Mercury Zepher.

At about 11 p.m., officials arrested 36-year-old Wesley Anderson Bradshaw, who was charged with possession of cocaine, public intoxication and possession of drug paraphernalia, according to the report.

Officials stopped a vehicle in the 300 block of South Fitch Street in Odessa about 11:30 p.m. and arrested Robert Vascal Gray, 35, and Bobbie Sue Meyer, 34, according to the report. Both were charged with possession of drug paraphernalia.

Sequoyah Dale Cochran, 22, was arrested by officials at about 11:40 p.m. in the same block of South Fitch Street. Cochran was charged with possession of marijuana under two ounces, according to the report.

Thursday

Burglary of a residence: Rosemary Gonzales reported at 12:04 a.m. that there was a burglary at 801 S. Jefferson. Entry was gained through a window that had previously been broken.

Theft: Ronnie Pate reported at 6:47 a.m. that all four tires, rims and hubcaps, were taken from a Chevrolet S-10 pickup at 3600 W. Loop 250, No. 1077. Total value of the stolen items was more than $900.

Burglary of a residence: Larry Sims reported at 9:46 a.m. that there was a burglary at 4700 Boulder Drive, No. 903.

Theft: $300 in cash was taken from the console of a vehicle while it was being washed at the car wash at Big Spring Street and Scharbauer Drive. It was reported at 11:56 a.m.

WEAPONS: House passes gun ban

(From 1C)

ons increased as the vote neared, Ms. Farington said.

"It's taking the liberty away from the people of the United States," she said. "According to the Constitution, we have the right to keep and bear arms."

Gov. Ann Richards, herself an avid hunter, praised the House action.

"It's one more step toward making our streets safer," she said. "This bill makes it harder for drug dealers and other bad people to get guns that kill our peace officers and innocent people. It makes it easier to keep Uzis and other automatic weapons out of the hands of children."

Deputy Police Chief Gilbert Sandoval in San Antonio said his police department applauds the vote.

"We have been fighting this problem of assault weapons for quite some time now and recognize it is the weapon of choice for gang members," Sandoval said.

Col. A.E. Dieterman, assistant police chief in Amarillo, said he doubts the ban will put much of a dent in crime because assault weapons account for a low percentage of the weapons used in crimes and they still will be available on the black market.

"I don't oppose the ban on certain assault weapons, but I don't see where it's really going to do that much to curtail some of the crime we're seeing," said Dieterman.

Dallas Police Chief Ben Click supported the ban.

"I don't see it as being the complete answer to guns and violence, and yet it's a piece of it," he said. "These are the types of weapons that have no hunting or sporting value. These weapons were designed for one thing, and that is to kill people."

The majority of the 30-member Texas congressional delegation opposed the ban. The only two surprises came from Democrats Ron Coleman of El Paso, who voted for it, and Martin Frost of Dallas, who voted against it.

Frost had voted in 1991 for a much less restrictive assault weapons ban.

INMATES: Painter blasts Ruiz ruling

(From 1C)

Painter criticized the Ruiz ruling for allowing 5,500 state prison beds to remain empty in order to meet the 95 percent cap. He said the overcrowding has caused more violent situations in the jail and criticized the governor for "doing nothing to solve the problem."

Brookshire agreed with Painter. He said that because of the county's already overcrowded jail, Ector County has 97 prisoners housed in other jails at an average cost to the county of $35 a day for each.

"With the rate of criminal acts increasing, the jail situation has got to improve and improve in a hurry for us to curtail or control crime in Texas," Brookshire said.

Painter said the Ruiz decision is violating the constitutional rights of prisoners. He said it is one cause for the multitude of federal lawsuits filed almost daily on behalf of county jail inmates who are awaiting transfer to the Texas Department of Criminal Justice's institions.

He said the inmates can't be transferred because the state has limited Midland County to sending only 12 inmates per month.

Schorre called the situation a crisis that needs an immediate remedy.

Painter agreed, indicating the state prison system could operate a tent city within prisons, but counties would need additional funding, land and staffing to create tent cities.

In response to the county officials' statements, Cindy Rugely, a spokeswoman for Gov. Richards, discounted their arguments.

She credited Ms. Richards with "doing more for prisons than any other governor."

She said the governor has doubled the number of prison beds during her four years. She said another 39,000 beds will be available by the year's end.

Ms. Richards allocated $25 million to counties that have the worst overcrowding, she said. Ms. Rugely said this money could be used for temporary facilities, including tents and other kinds of inexpensive structures such as warehouses.

Although Midland County received none of this money, Ector County received $571,428.

"(Ector County) could put up tents tomorrow if they wanted to," Ms. Rugely said.

"The reason overcrowding exists is because Gov. Richards stopped paroling violent offenders. She told the parole board to stop releasing these criminals unless they wanted them in their neighborhoods.

"When she took office there were 150 prisoners being paroled a day and that number has been reduced to 50 a day," Ms. Rugeley said.

Ms. Rugeley said the governor's focus is to keep "the bad guys behind bars and off our streets."

"We are still dealing today with the criminal/prison problems that are not going to stop . . . We don't care where the prisoners are kept as long as they're off the streets," Ms. Rugeley said.

HERITAGE: Acosta sings Mexican songs

owner Rosa Enriquez taught them how to make tamales and Odessan Memo Acosta entertained them with his guitar.

Acosta told the children about his transition from starting school in Mexico and then going to school in the United States. He sang traditional Mexican folk songs that spoke of ranch life in Mexico.

He delighted the children with renditions of "hillbilly" tunes, as well as contemporary country and Mexican music.

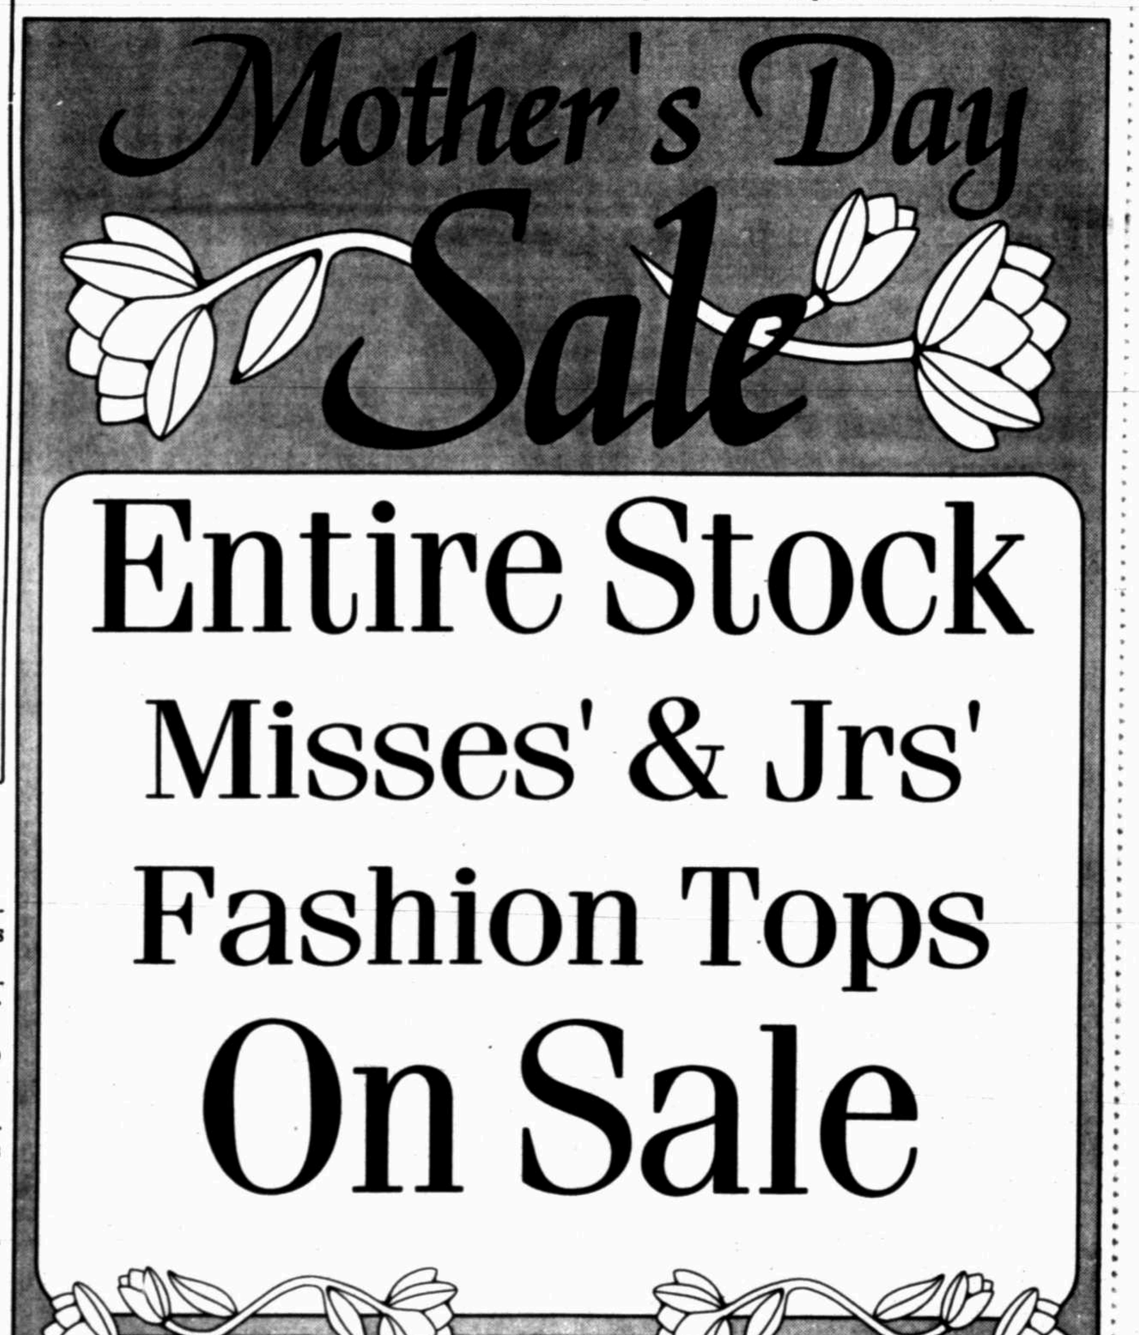
At Ben Milam Elementary, laughter and Mexican music could be heard by anyone approaching the campus.

"Look, look!" one student yelled as he tied the construction-paper sombrero on his head. "I made a real-life sombrero!"

The students spent the afternoon outside strolling among dozens of different activities to commemorate Cinco de Mayo.

Tortillas were handed out as traditional Mexican music played on a jambox. Students looked as if they were trick-or-treating. They had bags full of things that they created — from cascarones to tissue-paper flowers.

Students used construction paper to make sombreros and flags and experienced a number of other traditional Mexican activities.



Report: Iran publicly flogs American woman convicted of prostitution

Associated Press

An American woman convicted of prostitution in Iran was flogged in public and ordered deported to the United States, a Tehran newspaper reported Thursday.

The Farsi-language newspaper Kayhan identified the woman as 35-year-old Mary Jones of Texas. It did not give her hometown.

The report did not describe the flogging. But traditionally it is administered with a whip, and not a cane like that used in Singapore on Thursday on an American teenager convicted of vandalism.

In addition, the whipping probably was done with restraint to avoid violating "hejab" — modesty in women's dress.

The paper said Jones, who it said had been living in Iran illegally for 11 years, was picked up while drunk in a Tehran park about two weeks ago along with her pet dog.

Alcohol consumption and prostitution are illegal under Iran's Islamic laws.

The paper said Jones confessed to engaging in prostitution and was sentenced to 80 lashes in public and a fine equivalent to $6. The paper said the lashing was publicly carried out about two weeks ago. It did not say when she would be deported.

The report, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press in Cyprus, said Jones regularly prowled parks and other public places looking for young men "to corrupt."

The lashings come amid a government campaign against Western influences.

Iranian leaders blame drug abuse, prostitution and a host of other social vices on the West. The crusade against Western influences is centered around the government's contention that the West has failed to defeat Islamic Iran in the international arena and is now trying to corrupt the nation's youth.

Texas may execute woman on Monday

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge in Houston was considering Thursday whether to halt the scheduled execution early next week of one of four women on death row in Texas.

Pamela Perillo, 38, faced lethal injection early Monday for the February 1980 robbery and slaying of a Louisiana man in Houston.

Since 1982, when the state resumed carrying out capital punishment, 76 men on death row have been put to death, making Texas the nation's leader in executions.

No woman, however, has been executed in Texas since Chipita Rodriquez was hanged in 1863 for the murder of a horse trader.

Velma Barfield, executed in North Carolina in November 1984, is the only woman put to death in the United States since the Supreme Court in 1976 allowed the death penalty to resume.

Prosecutors expected Perillo would receive a reprieve from a federal court and anticipated her execution would not occur before dawn Monday.

FORUM: Conservative legislators listen to residents' views of fourth-degree felonies.

For example, he said, if someone steals less than $1,500 — a Class A misdemeanor theft — he would likely be sent to county jail. But if someone steals more than that amount and up to $20,000, he will likely get a lesser sentence.

"Most of these people in that fourth-degree felony category are going to get probation the first time," Schorre said.

"We're going to have to do something," Schorre said. "We've got to look at some way to increase the deterrence."

Schorre also supported revision of the family code and lowering the legal age of adults.

"These kids are very sophisticated and know that until they reach that age, they are not accountable," he said.

Another measure to combat juvenile crime, Schorre said, would be to expand offenses allowed under the determinate sentence — a trial that's essentially a cross between a juvenile and an adult hearing for certain serious crimes.

■ School choice and the voucher system.

Andrea Catania, a representative of the Children's Education Opportunity, presented an outline of an upcoming three-year pilot program in Midland that will use private funds to pay for vouchers to allow indigent children to attend private schools.

She said the purpose of the program is to equalize education opportunities in Midland County and support free choice of school attendance.

Ms. Catania said she expects the program to be unveiled to the public in about two weeks.

She said such a system has been discussed in past legislative sessions.

■ State mandates without funding.

Jackie Hamilton, Midland Independent School District board member, told the legislators that laws passed by the Legislature affecting school districts are "unbearable."

"Please do not state-mandate us without state funding," she asked. That's because school districts such as Midland, many times have difficulty finding necessary funding.

Ms. Hamilton also mentioned support for rewriting the family code to curb juvenile crime and tort reform to control frivolous lawsuits against school districts.

"Every time we have a cheerleader tryout, someone brings their attorney," she said.

■ Texas history and the Daughters of the Republic of Texas.

An Odessa representative of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas defended the group's Alamo custodianship, which has come under fire recently.

The spokeswoman also advocated the need for more emphasis in Texas history in the elementary schools.

The hearing was one of five being held across the state in April and May.

The TCC — which promotes limited government, free enterprise, individual liberties and traditional family values — seeks public input on all issues, Craddick said.

The information gathered at the hearings will help coalition members who serve on task forces draft legislation for the 74th Legislature, which convenes in January.

"It has been a real eye-opener for us. It gives people the opportunity (to speak out) who don't have the chance to go to Austin," Craddick said.

The TCC was formed in 1985 and currently has 72 legislators — six from the Senate and 66 from the House.

Other legislators who attended Thursday's hearing were: Rep. Warren Chisum, D-Pampa; Rep. Frank Corte, R-San Antonio; Rep. David Counts, D-Knox City; Rep. Mary Denny, R-Aubrey; Rep. Joe Driver, R-Garland; Rep. Steve Ogden, R-College Station; Rep. John Shields, R-San Antonio; Rep. Bob Turner, D-Coleman; Rep. Buddy West, R-Odessa.

Other members of the coalition will receive a detailed report of the proceedings.

TIRED: Illness zaps people's energy

(From 1C)

For months at a time, she went without sleep.

"It was like being in a concentration camp, prison camp, where they won't let you sleep."

Ms. Cerf, a former fitness director at the Midland YMCA, had returned to nurse's training in 1987 when she became ill with flu symptoms.

"Due to the complexities of diagnosing this disease, I was misdiagnosed for five years," she said.

She consulted "up to 20 doctors," including internists, gastrologists, ophthalmologists, neurologists, and rheumatologists.

"I knew something was wrong."

Finally, a physician diagnosed her malady as chronic fatigue. She also was diagnosed as having fibromyalgia, or severe muscular pain and weakness.

The malady, she cautioned, is not psychosomatic — a disorder having physical symptoms but originating from mental or emotional causes.

Ms. Cerf encourages fatigue-prone people to "get an early diagnosis. Just getting the diagnosis can relieve you from the frustration" of not identifying an illness.

Midland physician Dr. B.K. Khandelwal, who operates the Arthritis & Osteoporosis Center of Midland, said chronic fatigue is "difficult to diagnosis."

However, the main feature of the syndrome is a "persistent" and "intolerable" fatigue and the inability of the body to recover from ordinary exercise and physical work.

"There is no uniformity about any particular kind of infection," Khandelwal said. And that phenomenon makes the disease even more difficult to diagnosis.

"Nobody knows what is the main cause," he said, even though research suggests that chronic fatigue results from a dysfunction of the immune system.

Chronic fatigue syndrome is linked to the depletion of "certain neurohormones, which are important for having deep sleep and to feel refreshed," Khandelwal said.

"You feel tired in the morning, because you have not gone into the deep sleep."

Deep sleep is essential for producing growth hormones for the muscles.

"The lack of growth hormones and lack of physical fitness or lack of exercise leads to deconditioning of the muscles," he said.

Though the root cause of chronic fatigue syndrome and its cure have not yet been determined, Khandelwal and Ms. Cerf cited the importance of adequate rest, moderate exercise, wholesome diets and peace of mind in treating the disease.

Ms. Cerf said that her spiritual-prayer life and working with support groups have helped her.

"If I did not have the depth of spiritual life that I have, I wouldn't make it," Ms. Cerf said.

"The spiritual input in my life and beliefs and positive attitude saved me from going down into depressions that I can't get out of."

FAMILY MATTERS

Brother-in-law's manners upsetting to mom

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: This may seem like a little problem to you, but it's a big problem for me! My husband's youngest brother is an ill-mannered slob. When he comes to visit he leaves his clothes and drink cans all over the house. He never picks anything up, he just leaves towels on the bathroom floor, food in his room — I could go on and on. He eats with his elbows on the table, but the worse thing he does is that he talks with his mouth full.

May

I just don't know what to do. My boys just think he's wonderful and he's very good with them. He wrestles with them and does "guy things" with them. Another thing he does that's awful is that he's always passing gas loudly and they all laugh! As a man you may not think this is so bad, but as a woman I can tell you it just grosses me out. How can I teach my boys proper manners when their uncle acts like this?

My husband is absolutely no help at all. He says that's just the way his brother is and to leave him alone. He gets mad now and won't talk to me whenever I try to bring the subject up. Now his brother is college educated and a successful salesman. Why would a man like that act like this, and what can I do to stop it? He comes through here about once a month and makes sales calls for several days. He's due next week. Help me quick. OVERWHELMED

DEAR OVERWHELMED: Consider watching at least five episodes of "Home Improvement" and "Coach" to answer the questions of how some men can act like that. As a conscientious mother, you are challenged to have to deal with his influence; however, as you note, your boys love him and he gives the gift of himself to them.

Consider speaking to your sons, both before and after their uncle's visit, about his behavior. Distinguish between his manners and what is expected of the members of your family — "In our family we do not talk with our mouths full of food." Don't say anything about right and wrong, just that these are the rules in the family. Tell them the "why" if they ask. For example, "It creates a lot of work for me to have to come behind and pick up after everyone. Each of us must be responsible for putting away or own things."

I don't want you to think I don't believe that this is a troublesome problem for you — it is. However, in life sometimes we just have to pick our battles. If you choose this one, you probably will have your entire family to contend with. Perhaps you can see the humor in having a real character come visit. While he is there, perhaps you can imagine him with a little "pig nose" on, rooting around your home and entertaining your boys.

DEAR CONFIDENTIAL: I strongly encourage you and your husband to speak to your minister about all of this at once. Your husband's affair is very painful for you, but the answer is not for you to pay him back by having an affair too. He may say that is all right with him, but I strongly believe it is not all right for you.

Affairs usually involve more than just a sexual encounter. If he refuses to seek counseling, go by yourself. Should you continue to feel too ashamed to discuss this with your minister, ask him for a professional referral. My experience is that in most cases the issues associated with affairs can be effectively addressed by marital therapy. God bless, and write to let me know how you are doing.

THE FOLLOWING PARENTING TIPS ARE OFFERED BY THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES:

- Make certain your child sees the relationship between his or her behavior and the consequences that logically follow — for example, failing to follow the rules at the skating rink may result in being kicked out of the rink for one week.
- Allow natural consequences to occur due to your child's inability to follow the rules if it is safe — for example, refusing to get dressed in time for soccer results in him or her arriving at the game late. Let your child deal with the coach and his or her teammates.
- Do not reinforce your child's inappropriate behavior by laughing when you child is acting silly, rude, etc.
- Do not encourage your child to be silly and to entertain others and then scold your child when he or she begins to act too silly.
- Always expect your child to behave at home and in public.
- Have your child tell you the rules of the swimming pool, skating rink, etc., before going into a public place.

Many find peace on their journey with AIDS

By Lynnell Burkett
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Dean Paquette pulls from his belongings a worn birthday card that has become his metaphor for life and death.

The first panel, in black and white, shows friends waving goodbye to a person going "over the hill." The final panel, a full-color picture of a lush paradise on the other side of the hill, says, "Congratulations."

Paquette's lover gave him the card two years ago, just before he died of AIDS.

During those two years, Paquette, himself an AIDS patient in Ward 5A of San Francisco General Hospital, has traveled from despair to peace.

Although all his friends have died, much of his family has rejected him and his health has declined, he is composed.

"I see every day as a gift now," he says. "I'm not too worried or preoccupied about what will hap pen. I think it will be all right."

PAQUETTE'S PERSONAL journey has included talking to Shanti counselors. Shanti is a support program for people with acquired immune deficiency syndrome. Within the last decade, thousands of people have responded to the AIDS crisis by becoming volunteers or full-time counselors. More than 7,000 Shanti volunteers have been trained to help nearly 9,000 people with AIDS. They have become bridges from life to death.

Many counselors and volunteers say the experience has changed their lives. They have confronted their own mortality, often discovering within themselves a belief that life transcends death and a new appreciation for living.

Mesha Irizarry, one of the counselors at San Francisco General, was an atheist until her work in the AIDS ward.

"I've developed a spirituality in working with the dying. I've seen so much at the moment of death," she says. "They need distance so they can let go. They need to be told it's OK to let go."

Irizarry says a lot of her work is helping people "clean house" — write a letter, make a tape for children or a former lover. Irizarry says the experience has been "tremendously liberating."

"I can truly look at my life and I like what I see," she says. "I experience life every day and enjoy it. It's like peeling an onion and finding new layers of yourself."

WHILE IRIZARRY has made counseling her career, many others give their spare time. Alex Martinez, a marketing manager for a major corporation, estimates he has worked with 300 people with AIDS over the past decade.

"During the early '80s, I started losing my friends," Martinez says. "We really didn't know why, except people were dying. Finally, I decided I had to do something."

One of his most striking memories is of encountering a former lover, who was dying, and helping him. "That experience moved me in so many ways. It changed me, made me less fearful of death," he says.

As he sat by the bedside of his dying friend, "I couldn't help thinking there was something else. He was going somewhere else. He was taking me nearer there than I had ever been or ever will be until it is my time to go."

Volunteering with Shanti also profoundly affected Jerry Bowes, a buyer for an electronics manufacturer.

"You meet a person for the sole purpose of escorting them to their death," Bowes says. "You go through their death with them."

Most people with AIDS have given up the hope that if they just hang on long enough, a cure will be found, he says. "You try to help them live their lives in the time they have left without being overwhelmed by the fact they will die."

'You meet a person for the sole purpose of escorting them to their death. You go through their death with them. You try to help them live their lives in the time they have left without being overwhelmed by the fact they will die.'

— Jerry Bowes
Shanti volunteer

BOWES HAS worked with his client for four years. "He's needed a sounding board," he says. "A person with AIDS has to be careful how much to share with friends and family. You can dump any thing on us without worrying about how it affects you and your relationships."

Jack Pantaleo, who has worked with AIDS patients for many years through the AIDS Interfaith Network, describes himself as "a spiritual midwife." The network is one of several organizations that help people come to terms with their spirituality.

"I don't know of anyone who didn't leave in peace if they addressed the spiritual issues," he says.

Brenda Laribee, a development manager and volunteer for Shanti, hasn't yet faced a death experience. But, she says, she has overcome a fear of hospitals. "That was a little freaky for me," she says. "I'm learning to accept that as a part of life."

Other historic speaker nearly forgotten

Childcare DIRECTORY

As a childcare provider, you are well aware of the vital concern for today's children by their parents and loved ones. For this reason we will be publishing our semi-annual Childcare Directory in the Midland Reporter-Telegram on Sunday, May 15, 1994.

Midland area parents have come to rely on this directory as a guide to good, safe, quality childcare. This section focuses on just that and gives the basic "who, what, where and when" of the quality providers in our area. As a provider you can reach parents with more information about the services that you provide by placing an ad in this Childcare Directory on Sunday, May 15th.

We offer advertising packages that range from 8" to 65" and include not only your advertisement but a photo about/of your facility, a story about your facility and a dot on the area map that indicates where you are located. We also offer rates for an advertisement only without the package plan. Plan to advertise you childcare facility on May 15th. To reserve space please call:

DEAR ABBY

Let's look ahead to harmony, says member of DAR

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Can we please put the Marian Anderson-Daughters of the American Revolution episode in its final resting place?

Van Buren

Quite some time before Ms. Anderson passed on, a group of ladies from the White Alloe Chapter of the DAR in the little town of Parkville, Mo., were helping 79-year-old Lucille Douglass and her friends raise money to restore a one-room brick schoolhouse built in 1885 for black children.

The DAR ladies spent many hours at the local historical archives searching out information to get the little school listed on the National Historic Register. A publication in 1885 stated that students at the all-white Park College were making bricks for the school building.

The school grounds were cleared of brush by men who were Veterans of Foreign Wars. An Italian construction company owner, experienced in historic renovation, offered free labor to help with the restoration once the funds are raised. Union plumbers and plasterers also have volunteered their services.

Since Parkville is a suburb, we feel this project exemplifies the Kansas City motto of "Harmony in a World of Difference."

Please, Abby, no more brickbats for the DAR. Just give this tiny point of light a chance to flourish and burn brightly for others to see and emulate. — VIRGINIA L. RAU, REGENT, WHITE ALLOE CHAPTER OF THE D.A.R., KANSAS CITY, MO.

DEAR VIRGINIA L. RAU: Consider it done.

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend and I have been together for the better part of three years. We met and lived together in Las Vegas.

Our financial matters were always kept separate, on his insistence. We split all the bills 50-50. If I was a day late with my half, he'd throw a fit. However, I always paid my share, no matter what.

We recently moved to Oregon and are living with my parents. We pay no rent, but are expected to pay for our own long-distance calls and one-third of the water bill. It doesn't amount to very much, but I've paid it myself; my boyfriend hasn't kicked in with one dime. Meanwhile, he has run up more than half the telephone bill.

He gets angry when I remind him (nicely) that he has to come up with some money. What should I do? — OUT OF PATIENCE

DEAR OUT OF PATIENCE: You don't say whether you or your boyfriend are employed. From your description, he appears to be a slow-starter with minimal ambition. Perhaps you should be grateful that you are discovering the "real" man — warts and all. Tell him that the 50-50 split he insisted upon in Las Vegas still applies. And demand that he carry his share of the load, or you will be saddled with him and his bills forever.

DEAR ABBY: In a recent letter from Jackie Riley in regards to a 1948 hospital bill for the birth of a baby, you neglected to include wages earned during the time.

In 1948, my father's wages were $50 for a 60-hour week. I picked strawberries and was paid 2 cents a quart. My mother worked for J.C. Penney Co. at 65 cents an hour. A hospital bill of $64.25 was difficult for the average family — and had to be paid in installments. Very few people had health-care insurance.

So much for the "good old days"! — SHIRLEY DILLARD, FELTON, DEL.

DEAR ABBY: I am another person who never thought I would be writing to Dear Abby, but I am a bit perplexed and a bit hurt over a situation concerning my daughter, who is 25 and soon to be married. I was just told that the parents' names will not be on the wedding invitations because the bride and groom are paying for the wedding. I've never heard of this, have you?

I have been a single parent since "Beth" was in her early teens. I am still self-supporting and cannot afford to pay for a wedding, but I will help as much as possible.

I have helped her through college and have been very generous through the years. She lived away from home for a year, but came back because it was cheaper, and easier to save.

I am sure that the groom's parents have also been very kind and generous to their son, and I think we deserve the respect and recognition on our children's invitation — or do you think I am being too sensitive on the subject? I do not want to start off on the wrong foot, but I am still hurting. — UNHAPPY MOM

DEAR UNHAPPY MOM: Do not be hurt. Custom dictates that the person hosting the wedding issues the invitation, and requests the "honor of your presence." It has nothing to do with the state of the relationships between the people being married and their parents.

To receive a collection of Abby's most memorable — and most frequently requested — poems and essays, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's "Keepers," P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Roommates moving up in importance

By Laura Grae Kilborn
N.Y. Times News Service

Sharing a house or apartment is becoming an increasingly popular option for young adults, many of whom can't afford to live alone in the kind of place they'd like to have, experts say. Most turn to having roommates initially as a way to help pay the bills, but frequently they find friendship they never expected.

FORT WORTH — You've asserted your independence. You have your own place.

But after surveying your apartment and realizing that you're sick of living where the shower stall seems like the biggest room, the idea of sharing a larger home with someone else — even, gasp, A STRANGER — isn't nearly as scary as it once was.

Sharing a house or apartment is becoming an increasingly popular option for young adults, many of whom can't afford to live alone in the kind of place they'd like to have, experts say. Most turn to having roommates initially as a way to help pay the bills, but frequently they find friendship they never expected.

"You can't say we were best friends when he moved in. It was scary for me," said Laura Schram, who began sharing her home in nearby Grapevine in May with co-worker Kevin Wilkins. "(But) it's changed 100 percent. I can tell Kevin anything now. I know he's going to laugh."

She shot him a look that elicited just that response from her roommate, seated beside her on their couch.

"But if it's a serious thing, he's going to listen," she said. "I consider myself very, very lucky. I have four best friends, and Kevin's one of them."

WILKINS SAID he has grown to depend on Schram.

"It's a different type of friendship. I've got other friends, but my friends aren't at home," he said. "You really learn a lot about a person if you live with them. A couple of my friends, if I lived with them, we'd be enemies. This has turned into a real good friendship."

However, sometimes a roommate relationship can turn into something else.

After meeting at their jobs at a local hospital, Wendy McCoy, 24, and Greg Nolan, 27, decided to share McCoy's home in Grand Prairie, which is between Fort Worth and Dallas. Over several months, a passion for playing darts, going out for a beer or just hanging around the house watching TV became the basis for friendship, then romance.

As they realized what direction their relationship was taking, the pair agreed that they could no longer live together, McCoy said, because it would interfere with their desire to date each other. Nolan has since moved to Garland.

Carol Darwin, a Fort Worth social worker and psychotherapist, said that once someone turns to sharing, he or she frequently learns that the option has unexpected benefits.

"Once we do that — realize we can have a nicer place and someone to talk to and bounce ideas off of — that becomes more appealing," she said. "You have someone to talk to; you're not as isolated."

Darwin, who for 12 years has been on the board of the Texas Tenants Union, a renters' rights organization, said that house- and apartment-sharing is becoming more common.

"Socially, it's a lot more acceptable these days than, say, 15 years ago," she said.

LIKE MANY people who share a home, Schram, 35, and Wilkins, 33, met at work. But when they decided recently they wanted a third roommate for their three-bedroom, two-bath home, they opted to place a classified ad.

"We're pretty laid back, and we wanted to get a good fit," said Wilkins, who works with Schram at a moving company.

Ann Nguyen talked to a lot of prospective roommates before welcoming Sheila Merrill into her two-bedroom, two-bath Arlington apartment.

Nguyen, 27, placed classified ads, but all she got were a lot of calls from less-than-promising people before meeting Merrill, 25, who works at a dry cleaners.

"I put an ad that said 'female only,' but I had men calling, some of them in the middle of the night," said Nguyen, who works in an Arlington convenience store. "There's a lot of people out there that have too much time on their hands."

While they checked each other out, Nguyen and Merrill talked about what they expect in terms of household cleanliness, whether to share food (they don't), and how best to split the bills. They learned that neither smokes and both hate having dirty dishes in the sink.

Merrill said she was surprised at how well they have dealt with each other in the nine months that they have shared the apartment. Having been stuck with bills by previous roommates, Merrill insisted on having a written agreement stipulating that everything be split down the middle, except for long-distance calls.

"It works out pretty well," said Merrill, adding that Nguyen is the best roommate of the half-dozen she has had. "She's really fair about everything — and she doesn't eat my food."

SWIPING THE last of your roommate's milk may seem like a minor infraction to some, but to others it's a hanging offense. Failing to respect a roommate's wishes or preferences, however insubstantial they may seem, is dangerous to household harmony, said Mike Lawrence, director of housing and residence life at Southern Methodist University in Dallas.

Problems between roommates tend to occur over "the pettiest things, like not having the window open at night," Lawrence, 40, said.

Lawrence oversees college roommates, but he said that what he has learned applies to people outside of school, too.

"You need to open up lines of communication. You ask, 'If there's things I do that bother you, let's talk about it,'" said Lawrence, who recently began sharing his home with another male faculty member, 57. "The same thing's true for us. If there's a problem, don't tell other people; tell him. We tend to want to avoid confrontation. But you can't expect him, or any other roommate, to change if you don't talk to him about it."

In Fort Worth, four young men have forged an entertaining household by talking over their differences before they become problems.

ON THE surface, their living arrangement in a quiet neighborhood sounds like a recipe for potential disaster: four guys in their 20s, four dogs and a four-bedroom house.

But the quartet, who met through their jobs at a restaurant, have found the formula for nearly perfect harmony in their eclectic home.

"We all got together and played poker — we were talking, drinking, raising hell — I think I was losing," said Brian Naehritz, laughing at the memory. "We needed a place to live, and we decided to go in on it."

So the four shook hands and agreed to live together for a year. Over six months later, they've found that roommates are more than people who just share space, air and bills.

"I really enjoy it. The roommate thing adds spice," said Jon Castleberry, "though it takes a certain level of maturity for it to work out."

The guys said they have been casual about taking care of the house, but it has gotten done. Unlike some households, this one has thrived on a certain degree of randomness. Organization could lead to chaos.

"It's whoever sees it, but he cleans all the time," said Castleberry, looking at Naehritz.

Naehritz, a waiter, said, "Something like a (chore) list would kill us."

EVERYBODY AGREED that consideration and a willingness to discuss, or leave notes about, potential problems have been keys at getting along.

"You've got to respect everyone else's stuff, and get them to respect yours," Castleberry, 25, said.

Steve Riddle, nicknamed "The Riddler," has had to adjust to life with four dogs, two of them Castleberry's and two of them Naehritz's.

"He used to not like dogs, but now he does," Naehritz said.

Riddle said, "I do like dogs now ... normal dogs."

He is the group's "expense guy," who handles splitting up the bills. They determine the rent based on who has which room; the better the room, the more the roommate pays. The utilities are split equally.

About the only disagreement the guys have had was at the outset, on who would get which room. One has a Jacuzzi; another doesn't even have a door.

"We wrestled over it. It was pretty good," said Naehritz, who ended up doorless. "It doesn't bother me. I have a good time."

Riddle, 29, who works at the restaurant on the weekends, said sharing expenses helps all of them.

"Independently, none of us could have anything that nice," he said.

WITH THE number of single people in Tarrant County, be they never-married, divorced or widowed, at over 351,000, it's not surprising that many are choosing to band together.

Fort Worth leasing agent Ella Dowd said many of her clients want their own apartments, but a growing number are coming in with a friend or two and looking for a place to share.

As an agent for Apartment Selector, which has branches in six Texas cities and five other states, Dowd said the increase she has seen is caused in part by finances. Security also is a factor.

"Three mature women could come in, and for safety reasons, they're wanting that situation," she said. "It's kind of like 'The Golden Girls.'"

After Marilyn Niehaus was widowed in 1991, she searched for a way to keep the suburban Edgecliff Village home she loves. A year ago, she made her first venture into having roommates. Her experience brought her more than money; she shut out the loneliness with newfound friends.

"It's more fun with two," Niehaus, 58, said. "I love to cook, and I stay home more if I have someone to cook for, to watch movies with, or TV."

Niehaus shared her home and its amenities with another woman and the woman's two children, 17 and 18, who have since found their own place.

Niehaus, a nurse's aide, is screening new roommate candidates.

"It's kind of scary having someone you don't know," she said. "(But) I really loved having someone in my house."

Seniors re-enter tough job market

By Karen Malkowski and Elizabeth Fernandez
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Vello Grant never thought she'd be part of the 9 to 5 grind — not at the age of 72. She retired from a job at a dry cleaners seven years ago. After decades in the working world, she thought it was time to rest her feet.

But Social Security payments and her late husband's pension brought in only $800 a month. And Grant, to her surprise, discovered that too much idle time could be monotonous. Since September, the Oakland resident has worked as a dispatcher for a child care agency, earning $140 a week.

"I had hoped I wouldn't have to work, but it didn't turn out that way," Grant says. "And besides, I don't like sitting at home all day."

There are millions more like Grant who are returning to the rat race in their golden years.

In an age of longer and healthier living, legions of senior citizens — in the grip of economic costs — are rejoining the work force. They're emerging from retirement because they need the money, because they're simply bored, or sometimes both.

Some were forced into early retirement, caught in a wave of layoffs and corporate downsizing. Others chose retirement, then discovered they couldn't stretch their savings and Social Security as far as expected.

Many, particularly women, have joined the work force for the first time, on the heels of divorce or their spouse's death.

"It's a growing phenomenon," says Ted Bobrow, of the American Association of Retired Persons in Washington, D.C. "The money they make, even if it's not that much, can make the difference between getting by (or) having to cut back on important things such as food and medication."

Seniors are working in a host of different occupations, from manufacturing to sales. Some shuttle cars for Avis and Hertz car rental agencies. Some work in "foster grandparent" organizations or other subsidized programs. Many are acquiring computer skills and venturing into the world of high tech.

Altogether, 3.6 million Americans age 65 and older are in the labor force, comprising nearly 3 percent of the total work force, according to 1990 census data.

A former music teacher, Mary Dunn, 65, found a job two years ago as a concierge at a condominium development for seniors in San Francisco. Her husband was ill, and his Social Security payment brought in only $300 a month. Now Dunn earns $17,500 — the bulk of the couple's $24,000 annual income.

"Some of my dearest friends are in the same boat," says the San Francisco resident. "The problem is that there is a definite prejudice against seniors in the job market. Age discrimination is illegal, but there are ways employers can get around it, by saying you're overqualified or underqualified."

Indeed, many senior citizens find themselves confronted by the eternal problem of ageism. One woman, who asked that her name not be used, says she contacted 193 employers in a futile job hunt. Employment agencies told her their clients "don't want us to send them anyone over 40," says the 67-year-old woman.

"Employment agencies won't tell you directly why they can't find a job for you, but you know," says Dorothy Franzblau, of the Older Women's League, a support services group.

Doors close to seniors because of the scarcity of jobs in the overall market and because they may lack computer skills, says Joan Springer, manager of Bentley Personnel Services Inc. in San Francisco.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Monitor tracks blood sugar levels

By Steve Edwards and Judy Wilemon

Q: What is a blood glucose monitor?

Edwards

A: It's a portable device that diabetics at home can use to get accurate readings on their blood sugar levels.

For diabetics, in order to plan meals, physical activity and medication effectively, keeping track of blood glucose levels is essential. As an illustration, diabetic Elayne Bressler must take blood sugar readings four times daily.

Wilemon

Use of a blood glucose monitor in her home was taught to her by a home care diabetic educator. This education about diabetes increases both her independence and her ability to care for herself.

Blood glucose testing begins with a prick of the skin to draw blood. A drop of blood is placed on the monitor's insert strip. The blood sugar result is provided within a few seconds.

Blood sugar tests allow diabetics to know what's happening with their diabetes, enabling them to adjust the dosage of insulin, make changes in diet and adjust activity levels.

The diabetic educator comes to Ms. Bressler's home three days a week to assess her diabetes and to review the results of her daily testing.

Anyone diagnosed with diabetes is encouraged to use a blood glucose monitor, even if not on insulin.

For a severe diabetic like Ms. Bressler, the daily results mean peace of mind and less possible visits to the hospital emergency room.

Q: Is diabetes a growing health problem among the elderly?

A: Diabetes is a growing health problem among the elderly, affecting more than 8 percent of the senior population. Compounding the problem is that many elderly diabetics already have health complications brought on by their diabetes before it's discovered. To prevent their condition from getting worse, the emphasis on diabetic teaching is increasing.

Belen Guerrero is one of a growing percentage of elderly Hispanics suffering from diabetes. Because of her poor vision, a registered nurse comes to her home weekly to monitor her blood sugar levels and prepare her insulin shots for the next seven days.

The nurse also teaches Ms. Guerrero key points about her diabetes care.

"The teaching is essential," said Lillie Long, registered nurse. "All diabetics should know the signs of high and low blood sugar, how to draw insulin and what kind of foods to eat."

Since Ms. Guerrero gives herself an insulin injection twice daily, part of the nurse's teaching is on drawing insulin.

Ms. Guerrero also checks her blood sugar level at least once a day. Each week the nurse reviews the record of her readings for the seven-day period.

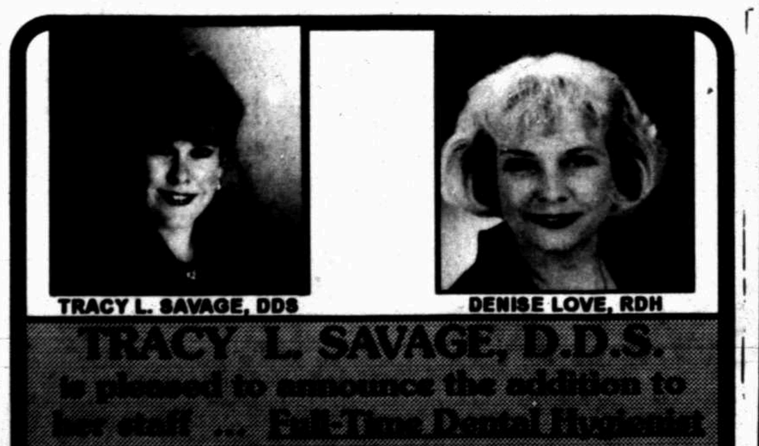
Diabetics often lose sensation in their feet and may not be aware of any problems. Daily foot care is essential. Diabetics like Ms. Guerrero are taught to look and feel for sores or signs of infection.

Physical activity improves a diabetic's overall condition and helps lower blood sugar levels. Range of motion exercises are taught to elderly diabetics.

Diet also plays a key role in diabetes care. Teaching is ongoing and focuses on such points as the differences between fruit juice and fruit drink. Fruit juice contains no sugar, but fruit drink or fruit punch does contain sugar and should be avoided.

Diabetes can be controlled. Learning how to manage her diabetes and respond to warning signs in enabling Ms. Guerrero to remain in the familiar surroundings of home and with family.

Steve Edwards is an aging consultant. Judy Wilemon, RN, is branch manager of the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.



Conservatives may win election in bastion of Texas liberalism

By Roy Bragg
N.Y. Times News Service

Fight centers on whether city should spend $100,000 a year on medical insurance for unmarried companions of city employees. Most gays, conservatives oppose each other on issue.

AUSTIN — The once-unthinkable may happen here on Saturday: Conservatives may win an election in Texas' most liberal city when voters consider abolishing a policy that provides insurance to the live-in lovers of municipal workers.

On paper, it's a fight over whether the city should spend $100,000 a year to provide medical insurance for the unmarried companions of 100 city employees who have applied for it.

Those favoring the domestic-partner insurance say marriage shouldn't determine domestic partners' eligibility to be covered as dependents of city workers. Detractors, who are leading the repeal effort, say public funds can be put to better use.

But the real issues run deeper.

Although the new policy would cover both homosexual and heterosexual partners of city workers, gay activists equate the fight to retain the policy with the battle against homophobia — and more important to them — their battle against the religious right.

"That's the crux of this election," said Mac McKaskel of the gay-rights group Act Up. "No matter what your views are on domestic partnership or civil rights, I don't think the average person wants the government to tell them who their family is. That's what it's all about."

To the conservatives, the battle may be more glorious than any victory. To them, it represents the symbolic awakening of a political force thought to be dormant in the capital city.

Michael Brandes, the attorney heading Concerned Texans, the group which got Proposition 22 — the repeal measure — on the ballot, said: "A lot of people didn't think we could pull it off. But we did."

Brandes said his first clue about the depth of conservative concern over the city's domestic partners insurance plan came at an early morning organizational meeting on Saturday, Oct. 30. He expected 100 people to stop by and pick up petition forms, but 700 people showed up to help, he said.

That interest continues today. Although 21 other initiatives, three contested City Council races and a mayor's race are on the ballot, it is Proposition 22 signs that are plastered on walls and stuck in lawns all over town.

City election officials predict that 70,000 voters will cast ballots Saturday, based on the number of absentee ballots in so far. Typical city elections draw 60,000 voters.

Unaware of the furor it would cause, the City Council, on a 5-2 vote Sept. 2, approved a domestic partners insurance plan for city employees after studying how it worked in other cities, including San Antonio, New York, Seattle and Laguna Beach, Calif.

At the time, proponents said it would save the city money in the long run by curbing indigent health care at city-owned Brackenridge Hospital.

More than 125 people showed up at the council meeting that night to speak on the issue. Opponents of the change threatened to take their fight to voters, but few thought they could do it.

But the seeds of discontent already had been planted.

One of the company insurance programs cited by supporters of a domestic partners insurance plan in Austin was that of Apple Computer, which had planned to build a service center in neighboring Williamson County.

Williamson County commissioners, who had lured the company with its 1,700-employee payroll and its estimated $300 million economic impact, suddenly backed out of their agreement to offer a $700,000 tax break to Apple.

Three commissioners who opposed the deal said Apple's domestic partners insurance policy would attract an "immoral element" — unmarried couples of either sexual orientation — to Austin's conservative suburbs.

County commissioners, stung by bad international publicity and the loss of the money the service center would bring, eventually gave in and again offered Apple economic incentives.

Texas recognizes great guitarist

By Charles McClure
Bonham Daily Favorite

BONHAM — Buried in an unmarked grave, guitarist Charlie Christian helped break the color barrier in the music industry during the 1930s and 40s, along with the likes of Lionel Hampton and Teddy Wilson, as a member of the Benny Goodman Sextet.

Yet despite his ability to cross the forbidden barrier in the recording business, he could not do in death what he had done in life.

Prejudice is blind — even to greatness.

Fifty years too late, Christian's Gates Hill Cemetery grave was finally recognized recently by no less than the state of Texas in a ceremony — thanks in no small part to efforts on his behalf by Tom Scott, curator of the Fannin County Historical Museum.

"Solo Flight," a PBS documentary made about Christian's life, ended with a clear and pointed message that this legend remained buried in an unmarked grave in Bonham, Texas.

Finally, this has been rectified.

A Texas historical marker and gravestone were dedicated, as Christian's lone daughter, Billie Jean Johnson, looked on with friends and admirers.

Christian was no mere guitar player, but the man who historians consider the ultimate pioneer of the electrified instrument. He was the first electric guitar player who ever won any sense of recognition.

Perhaps author Ralph Ellison said it best. With Christian, "the guitar found its jazz voice."

"Charlie Christian, the first major exponent of the electric guitar, was an innovator in single-stringed solos," said Garydon Rhodes, the filmmaker responsible for "Solo Flight."

"He was the one of the great sculptors of jazz music. In his short life, Christian elevated the electric guitar to an amplified front-line instrument, charting a course from which modern music is still flowing.

"If you play the guitar the way it should be played, you'll make the rest of the world like it.'

— Charlie Christian guitarist

"He arose phoenix-like out of the ashes of trite guitar styles to change music forever. Much of Christian's career was spent playing in mixed-groups of blacks and whites, at a time of great racial oppression," Rhodes said.

A Bonham native born in "Tank Town" in 1916, Christian moved to Oklahoma City in early childhood. There his blind father would earn money for the family playing guitar on street corners. Meanwhile, Christian constructed his first guitars out of cigar boxes. He first learned the "Jellyroll Blues" from his uncle. Before long, his uncle couldn't keep up.

His father died while he was in high school. Christian was forced to quit his education and seek work with the only trade he knew — music. He first broke onto the music scene in Oklahoma City's 2nd Street section, a hotbed of early swing influence which has never received its historical due.

"There were other guys who we used to play with, but none of them could touch Charlie," said an early Oklahoma City collaborator. "He had a lot of originality."

Playing in dives like Slaughter's Hall and Ruby's Grill, Christian honed his craft in nightly jam sessions that sent the driving sound of swing well into the early morning hours.

Band leader Jay McShann recalled an early encounter with Christian.

"I just happened to work with Charlie way back in 1936 when he came down to Dallas to play at the Texas Centennial," said McShann. "He was playing at that time the bass fiddle. And he could play that bass fiddle and whip it as well as Sam "Slam" Stewart and some of those other guys who were known for their bass fiddle playing."

Jamming with the likes of Alfonso Trent, Christian caught the ear of John Hammond in 1939, the booking agent for Benny Goodman. An audition transpired. Goodman was put off by Christian's flashy dress. But Christian's amp was placed on the stage without the King of Swing's knowledge. One tune and Christian became swing's hottest combo.

"Charlie, I really think is one of the most terrific musicians that has been produced in years," Goodman said of him during their short-lived days together.

Before long, Christian was famous in his own right, playing in such hallowed places as Carnegie Hall with Goodman, and revolutionizing the guitar as a jazz instrument along the way.

But Christian would never see BeBop come to fruition. Tragically, after only 19 months, Christian, struck down by tuberculosis, was forced to leave Goodman. He passed away in 1942.

As Ellison said, Christian "burned out like a guitar in a tenement fire."

His body eventually came home to Bonham, where he was buried and forgotten — until now.

New president of Texas A&M needs his famous sense of humor

By Todd Ackerman
N.Y. Times News Service

STILLWATER, Okla. — When Ray Bowen took over as the interim president of Oklahoma State University seven months ago, one of the first things he did was to don a red rubber clown nose at a meeting of administrators.

The frivolity helped loosen up a school mired in controversy that had led to the resignation of Bowen's predecessor. A few weeks later, OSU regents surprised everyone at a regular board meeting by putting on clown noses and turning toward Bowen.

"Since his act made everyone feel at ease, we decided to return the favor," said Regents Chairman Bruce Benbrook. "At a difficult time for OSU, it set the tone for an interim presidency marked by an atmosphere of trust and a sentiment that while educating young people is hard work, it also ought to be fun."

Bowen, who on April 14 was named Texas A&M University's 21st president, will need his sense of humor — and more — at the beleaguered school in College Station, Texas.

A seasoned administrator and troubleshooter, he faces his most daunting task yet: making A&M's public image problems go away.

The problems — ranging from an athletic scandal to alleged improper faculty research to an alcohol billing policy that led to the indictment of two secretaries — threaten to stand in the way of A&M's bid to be recognized among the nation's better state research universities.

The problems overwhelmed A&M's interim president, Dean Gage, considered at one point the favorite to get the permanent post.

Bowen certainly has the credentials for the job: a Texas native; A&M alumnus; professor of mechanical engineering, and head of OSU, a school considered a "junior A&M." OSU has 25,000 students and an annual budget of $350 million. A&M has 43,000 students and an annual budget of nearly $600 million.

But Bowen is no mere Aggie. He spent the formative years of his career at Rice University in Houston. He has worked or studied in Germany, New Zealand, Louisiana, California and Kentucky. He also served as a top administrator of the National Science Foundation.

"I know and appreciate the A&M culture from my student days, but people shouldn't forget I left it when I was 25," Bowen said.

Today, at 58, Bowen is a decision-maker whose 6-foot, 3-inch frame, white hair and dignified looks belie his prankish sense of humor. He is most comfortable, he says, working on cars, attending plays or operas, and playing with technology.

Bowen grew up in Fort Worth, Texas, in the 1940s, more athletic than bookish. He played high school football with Frank Ryan, who went on to play quarterback for Rice and the Cleveland Browns. Bowen's ambition was to be a semi-pro softball player.

He went to A&M — neither parent went to college and his father never finished high school — because his two older brothers did.

Son of activist prompts Marvel comics to nix puffing cards

HOUSTON (AP) — Comic book giant Marvel Entertainment Group is rubbing out cigarette-smoking superheroes on its trading cards after a complaint from the second-grade son of a fervent anti-smoking activist.

A hand-scrawled note from 7-year-old Sammy Blum of Houston appears as a letter to the editor in The New England Journal of Medicine's May 5 edition.

"I collect Marvel Masterpieces," Sammy wrote. "So do some of my friends and my brothers. I found 5 out of 100 cards that were smoking!!"

Sammy listed the offending characters, both heroes and villains: Blaze, Gambit, Kingpin, Nick Fury and Red Skull. One character holds a cigar and others puff on cigarettes while blazing away with guns.

"Why do they make cards for kids that show people smoking?" Sammy asked the journal.

The boy's father, family physician Alan Blum, is chairman of a Houston anti-smoking group called Doctors Ought to Care. He travels around the country railing against smoking ads and protesting cigarette company-sponsored sporting events.

In a reply printed below a photocopy of Sammy's letter, Marvel Entertainment Group President Terry Stewart, whose company owns such characters as X-Men, Captain America and Spider-Man, announced a decision "to omit smoking materials from all future Marvel trading cards."

"Although we make this decision voluntarily and are convinced of its soundness, we also want to emphasize that no Marvel trading card was ever intended to suggest approbation of smoking," Stewart wrote.

Marvel spokeswoman Pamela Rutt said the letter was the first complaint she had heard about the cards, which are sold nationally in packs and are about the same size as baseball cards. They feature glossy, full-color depictions of characters on the front and their biographies on the back.

Vast land, hunters who won't play fair bedevil wildlife protectors

By Timothy Egan
N.Y. Times News Service

FAIRBANKS, Alaska — Flying low over the still-frozen rivers that drain the Alaskan interior, Alan Crane sometimes thinks about the odds. He is one guy in a tiny airplane trying to patrol almost everything that snorts, honks or flaps in an area the size of Texas.

As the senior agent for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in a land often called the American Serengeti, Crane says it is a rare day when somebody on the ground is glad to see him. People point guns at his airplane and sometimes sabotage it by putting sugar in the fuel tank.

He is supposed to be a referee between human predators and their hoofed, winged and finned prey. But more often, people talk to him as if he is the enemy, a bird lover with a badge.

'... What really bothers me are people who don't play fair, who think it's OK to chase an animal from an airplane until it collapses from exhaustion, then get out and shoot it.'

— Alan Crane, senior agent
U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

What Crane and Mark Webb, the only other federal enforcement officer in the vast region north of the Alaska Range that includes the state's interior, are up against is a range of international conspiracies, civil violations and felonies that are virtually unheard of anywhere outside of Alaska.

There are people who shoot bald eagles for target practice and poachers who kill bears by the dozen to sell the bladders in Asian markets, where they fetch up to $5,000 a piece. There are platoons of smugglers, camouflaged and armed with automatic rifles, mowing down walruses for their tusks. There are ex-New Yorkers trying to live as homesteaders, claiming the right to take 2,000 salmon a week from a run of scarce fish. There are doctors from Anchorage and oil executives from Dallas who hunt Dall sheep from aircraft.

And, more recently, there have been people working for the State of Alaska, trying to trap wolves in snares, who have instead caught at least four golden eagles, a number of snow geese and other federally protected migratory birds. The wolf-trappers say the birds were snared by accident. But federal wildlife officials say that the Alaska game department is technically committing felonies and that the deaths could be avoided by better trapping techniques.

"People sometimes think, 'We're just killing a bunch of birds, how big of a crime can that be?'" said Crane, a 30-year-veteran of the wildlife wars. "But what really bothers me are people who don't play fair, who think it's OK to chase an animal from an airplane until it collapses from exhaustion, then get out and shoot it."

In Alaska, where hunters killed 12,391 caribou, 6,225 moose and 1,083 brown bears last year, according to the legal, reported harvest, the person who stands between the shooter and the target is still viewed with some incredulity.

"I've had people come up to me and say: 'You're willing to risk your life for a duck? Are you crazy?'" Webb said.

The agents may catch no more than 2 percent of the violators, according to a recent federal study. But sometimes they are lucky. Recently, Crane's office in Fairbanks placed an undercover agent, brought in from outside the state, with a hunting guide who had been assuring his clients that they would go home with a big game trophy. The agent gained the guide's confidence to such a degree that she ended up in a picture in his brochure — another happy customer.

But the guide was soon arrested and convicted of numerous violations of the Federal Airborne Hunting Act, which prohibits hunting from aircraft.

Some small colleges offer new alternatives to tenure

By William H. Honan
N.Y. Times News Service

For his last nine years at the University of Missouri, Prof. Nicholas DiMarco had tenure — career-long job security. But recently, after having moved to Webster University, a small liberal arts institution in St. Louis, he traded tenure consideration for an unusually generous sabbatical allowance — one semester with full pay every five years.

"I wanted to be able to do something outside of the academic setting, and more frequent sabbaticals meant more time to write," said DiMarco, who teaches management.

Webster began offering alternatives to tenure in 1970, to maintain flexibility in staff size and to provide opportunities for faculty members to study and remain up to date in their fields. Today, only 17 of Webster's 116 faculty members have chosen tenure.

To be sure, a system as deeply entrenched as tenure — awarded after a probationary period that is usually five to seven years — is not about to be uprooted.

But college administrators do expect that the percentage of tenured faculty members — 63.7 percent nationally and unchanged for the last decade — will drop slightly as the result of inducements such as those offered at Webster and other smaller colleges and universities.

Many major colleges and universities are reducing the number of tenured faculty members by replacing them when they retire with staff members who take jobs on the condition that they not be considered for tenure and by part-time teachers.

"Given the rapidity of change in the disciplines and in institutional missions, administrators are nervous about having a large tenured faculty," said Judith Gappa, a professor of education at Purdue University who has made a study of the tenure system.

There are about 300,000 part-time instructors in higher education in the United States today, up about 70,000 from 10 years ago, according to the National Center for Education Statistics, a research arm of the Department of Education.

The interest in alternatives to tenure has been heightened by a federal law, which took effect Jan. 1, that prohibits the mandatory retirement of college professors, thus virtually guaranteeing lifetime employment for tenured professors.

The practice of tenure comes from the great German universities of the 19th century and first took hold in the United States in the 1920s. It quickly became a shield for academic freedom, protecting professors from dismissal for the expression of unpopular ideas.

The hiring boom of the early 1960s, combined with the effects of tenure, has led to aging faculties. In 1988 (the latest year for which figures are available), 25 percent of all faculty members were 55 or older.

Questioning the tenure concept used to be taboo, but today it is not unusual to find people like David S. Kidwell, dean of the School of Management at the University of Minnesota, predicting that in the future universities will have fewer tenured faculty members and will lengthen the probationary period.

Generally, tenure is determined by a faculty member's department, although final determination usually rests with the college trustees.

Even some faculty members have publicly expressed dissatisfaction with the system. Last spring, Dr. Lyall Crawford, an associate professor of communication at Weber State University in Ogden, Utah, reacted to the news that he had been granted tenure by shaving his head in protest.

He said he believes the system "prevents people from openly voicing their opinions before they get tenure."

Still bald in protest, Crawford is teaching under a three-year renewable contract that he worked out with the university administration.

Dr. Gappa, who is co-author of "The Invisible Faculty" (Jossey-Bass 1993), a study of the growth of part-time nontenured faculty members, said she had interviewed a number of women in academia who oppose the tenure system.

They contend the system forces them to prove themselves professionally during their most important child-bearing and child-rearing years, Dr. Gappa said.

Still, the majority of professors support the system. The American Association of University Professors, with 41,000 members, considers tenure "a de facto right" after a reasonable period of probation, according to Iris Molotsky.

New fossils suggest evolution of whales from land to sea

By John Noble Wilford
N.Y. Times News Service

Ages after some adventurous (or misadventurous) fish left the sea and planted the flag of vertebrate animal life on land, their descendants had it both ways as amphibians and then completed the epic transition, evolving into terrestrial reptiles, mammals and birds. But something about the water must have kept beckoning, until a few irredentists among the mammals did eventually reclaim a place in the sea.

Most prominent of these mammals are the whales. Although they may swim the oceans with power and grace, these leviathans are more closely related to the camel and cow than any fish in their wake. Their anatomies retain vestiges of the four-legged land animals in their ancestry, the ones that began the bold return to the sea more than 50 million years ago.

As early as Aristotle, people recognized that more than size set whales apart from other marine life. Aristotle noted that whales as well as dolphins, the other members of the cetacean group, bear their young live, unlike fish. This made them, by definition, mammals. But even Darwin much later could not fathom the evolutionary steps by which some land mammals had become whales.

"It was a big evolutionary plunge, one that has eluded documentation for many decades," said Dr. Michael J. Novacek, a paleontologist who is dean of science at the American Museum of Natural History in New York City.

New fossil discoveries have now revealed several of the critical evolutionary steps in the earliest history of whales. Scientists have identified some intermediate species as land mammals steadily changed physical form while adapting to swimming, diving, feeding and otherwise thriving in their new habitat.

One surprise is that the transformation of four-legged land mammals into an animal completely adapted to marine life took only 10 million years — hardly any time at all in evolutionary terms.

"I am absolutely delighted to report that our usually recalcitrant fossil record has come through in exemplary fashion," Dr. Stephen Jay Gould, a Harvard University paleontologist and essayist, wrote in this month's issue of Natural History magazine. "The embarrassment of past absence has been replaced by a bounty of new evidence — and by the sweetest series of transitional fossils an evolutionist could ever hope to find."

One discovery, which Gould called "a remarkable smoking gun," introduced scientists to an animal that lived 50 million years ago. It was about the size of a modern sea lion, weighing 600 to 700 pounds and measuring about 10 feet from snout to tail.

Paleontologists excavate fossil whale ancestor, named Ambulocetus natans, which means swimming walking-whale, from sediments of ancient seabed in Pakistan.

Judging by fossil remains, the animal was an amphibious species clearly intermediate between a terrestrial ancestor of whales and aquatic modern whales.

This fossil animal, named Ambulocetus natans, which means swimming walking-whale, was excavated from sediments of an ancient seabed in Pakistan. Dr. J.G.M. Thewissen, an anatomist and paleobiologist at Northeastern Ohio Universities College of Medicine in Rootstown, Ohio, reported the discovery in January.

Ambulocetus was just what scientists would have expected to find. The animal still had four limbs for walking on land, though probably with diminished agility. It could also hunt in the sea, probably swimming by kicking its big feet.

Another discovery in Pakistan has now advanced the transition story three or four million years and out into deeper waters. Scientists reported last week that they had found fossils of an animal that had obviously made a more resolute commitment to a life at sea.

Writing in the current issue of the journal Nature, Dr. Philip D. Gingerich, a paleontologist at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, said the new species, Rodhocetus kasrani, was the earliest known transitional whale with an anatomy adapted for swimming like a whale.

It had a more streamlined body and a fully flexible rear spinal column, which could have produced the motions for the powerful beat of a horizontal tail fluke that propels modern whales.

Whether Rodhocetus had indeed made this important advance cannot be determined until more complete tail fossils are uncovered. But the evidence, Gingerich and colleagues concluded, "shows that tail swimming evolved early in the history of cetaceans."

In a commentary accompanying the Nature report, Novacek said the Ambulocetus and Rhodocetus findings provided a "fascinating mosaic of early adaptive experiments in the transition from land to water."

Besides whales and dolphins, two other major types of mammals have made this dramatic transition: Sirenia, which includes dugongs and manatees, and the group composed of seals, sea lions and walruses.

The migration of whales to the sea is a classic example of transcendental evolutionary change, along with the first fishlike animals establishing their beachhead 370 million years ago, birds becoming flying animals and early human ancestors developing upright walking.

But why would animals like whales, with all the apparatus for successful living on the land and ages of experience doing it, seek such a different habitat?

"The motive for any such transition is always opportunity," Gingerich said. "Look at what changed first, the teeth. What was initially important in the transition was food. These land animals were exploiting an opportunity to feed on fish in the sea."

Other change over time involved improvements in the animals' maneuverability in their new environment. These included hearing systems evolved for underwater communications and navigation and completely new ways of locomotion, first as amphibians and then as fully developed marine animals.

Scientists conclude that whales were distantly related to ungulate mammals, a group whose modern members include camels, cows, pigs and deer.

For a long time, scientist had almost no direct evidence about the nature of the whale transition. The best they could do was make inferences based on a comparison of modern whales and fossils of archaic whales with the remains of their putative terrestrial relatives.

From this scientists concluded that whales were distantly related to ungulate mammals, a group whose modern members include camels, cows, pigs and deer. The link between other ungulates and whales is thought to be mesonychids, extinct four-legged mammals that sometimes feasted on fish at river edges.

Beginning in 1983, paleontologists have collected more revealing evidence of the transition. In that year, Gingerich reported the discovery of the oldest whale, which lived about 52 million years ago. A fossil skull was found in Pakistan in river sediments near an ancient sea. The animal was given the name Pakicetus.

Although they had nothing to ponder but this skull, scientists could see that Pakicetus had teeth resembling those of mesonychids, but it was well adapted to feeding on fish in surface waters of shallow seas.

Other parts of the skull were becoming whalelike, but it lacked the auditory equipment for a fully marine existence. Another fossil specimen from about the same time, Indocetus ramani, probably led the same kind of life, entering the sea to feed on fish, but returning to land to rest and raise its young.

As Gould noted in his review of recent whale research, the next important discovery was the first complete hind limbs of a fossil whale, Basilosaurus isis, which lived 5 million to 10 million years after Pakicetus. The skeleton, found in Egypt, was described in 1990 by Gingerich and a team of Michigan and Duke University scientists.

Since the hind limbs were a mere 2 feet long and the whole body was 50 feet long, the discoverers concluded that the legs could not have supported the body.

Cheap moon mission may offer glimpse into NASA's past, future

By John Noble Wilford
N.Y. Times News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Outside the nondescript brick building on a street like many others, life was elementally terrestrial. People hurried in and out of a post office around the corner. A yellow school bus brought children home. Two little boys played in a yard, where a wash dried on the line.

Inside, in a small, darkened room, a few men and women sat at computer consoles and watched scenes from another world. One after another in rapid succession, pictures of the Moon, gray vistas of lifeless plains and yawning craters, appeared on the wall screen.

The spacecraft Clementine was reporting home last week, as it has since it went into lunar orbit in February, sending the first close-up pictures of the Moon in more than two decades.

It is entirely in character for this modest mission of space exploration to be conducted in such ordinary circumstances, only a few red bricks away from the mundane. It is reminiscent, too, of the scrambling, makeshift early days of space flight before elaborate control rooms surrounded by acres of office buildings and design laboratories came into being to run billion-dollar missions sometimes taking a decade to get off the ground.

In many ways, in concept and execution, in its swaggering assault on business as usual, the $80 million Clementine mission, a joint military-civilian venture, is a glimpse of the past and, perhaps, into the future.

Its success is forcing space officials and scientists to temper their ardor for the big and expensive and think seriously about how to maintain a vigorous program of exploration with smaller, simpler and less expensive spacecraft.

From a glass booth off the control room, Lt. Col. Pedro Rustan of the Air Force, the program manager, looked at the latest lunar pictures with satisfaction. "It's working like a charm, and we were on time, on schedule and on budget," he said.

The 500-pound spacecraft, less than four feet wide and slightly more than six feet long, was launched without fanfare on Jan. 25 and went into lunar orbit on Feb. 19.

The last time an American craft orbited the Moon was in December 1972, when the Apollo 17 astronauts took the last walk on the lunar surface. The last Russian mission was in August 1976, when the unmanned Luna 24 landed on the Moon, scooped up rock samples and returned them to Earth.

Officials, scientists may be forced to accomplish same tasks with smaller budgets, spacecraft.

Last Friday, Clementine's miniaturized cameras finished taking mapping pictures of the entire Moon. Traveling around the Moon at its poles, coming as close as 250 miles to the surface, the spacecraft was able to photograph many regions seldom surveyed, and never in such detail. The spacecraft took, recorded and then transmitted more than 5,000 pictures on each five-hour orbit.

In one of the more esthetically appealing pictures, the planets Mercury, Venus and Saturn can be seen as tiny globes in a line across the darkness of space, with the brooding Moon in the foreground.

Upstairs from the control room, Dr. Eugene M. Shoemaker, Clementine's chief scientist and a planetary geologist assigned to the project by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, pored over the mosaics of pictures of such striking lunar craters as Tycho and Orientale Basin.

The cameras, operating in different wavelengths and with an assortment of filters, were revealing sedimentary layers in the crater walls, he said, showing that the crust is not nearly as vertically homogenous as had been thought.

"It's beautiful stuff," said Shoemaker, who had spent much of his career analyzing earlier photography from the Surveyor and Lunar Orbiter flights, unmanned scouting expeditions that preceded the Apollo landings. "We will be able to identify rock types. Basically, we will re-do the geology of the Moon."

Because one of the mission's scientific objectives is to prospect the mineral content of the Moon, the spacecraft was given the name Clementine, after the miner's darling daughter in the old Gold Rush ballad.

Details of dark, deep craters at the polar regions were photographed for the first time. Several times the spacecraft transmitted special radio signals into the polar crater depths.

The signals were deflected and received by antennas on Earth. Analysis of the modified signals is under way to see if they reveal the presence of any ice at the lunar poles, presumably deposited there by comet impacts and sheltered from sunlight.

Dr. Paul Spudis, deputy leader of the science team who is from the Lunar and Planetary Institute in Houston, said that ground-based observations had provided some tantalizing clues of possible polar ice.

"If we do confirm the presence of ice," he said earlier in the mission, "it will be a very interesting — if not major — discovery."

Next Tuesday, Clementine's rocket is to be fired to depart lunar orbit and head for a rendezvous at the end of August with a small asteroid, 1620 Geographos.

On the way, the craft should be able to observe Jupiter as it is being struck by a cluster of cometary fragments in July.

310 General Help Wanted

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?
YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?
Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?
Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?
A small deposit is required.

Childcare DIRECTORY

As a childcare provider, you are well aware of the vital concern for today's children by their parents and loved ones. For this reason we will be publishing our semi-annual Childcare Directory in the Midland Reporter-Telegram on Sunday, May 15, 1994.

Midland area parents have come to rely on this directory as a guide to good, safe, quality childcare. This section focuses on just that and gives the basic "who, what, where and when" of the quality providers in our area. As a provider you can reach parents with more information about the services that you provide by placing an ad in this Childcare Directory on Sunday, May 15th.

We offer advertising packages that range from 8" to 65" and include not only your advertisement but a photo about/of your facility, a story about your facility and a dot on the area map that indicates where you are located. We also offer rates for an advertisement only without the package plan. Plan to advertise you childcare facility on May 15th. To reserve space please call:

687-8813

Deadline for this section is May 9, 1994
