Texas Gov. George W. Bush signs two bills into law Monday in Waco.

Bush signs bills

AUSTIN — A bill giving Texas landowners the power to sue state and local governments over action that devalues their property was signed into law Monday by Gov. George W. Bush. In remarks prepared for a ceremony at the Texas Farm Bureau in Waco, Bush said the bill recognizes the importance of private property and will discourage governments from taking action that reduces property values. New program's funding to aid in neighborhood revitalization

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Midland has been selected as one of only nine cities nationwide to participate in a pilot program that helps residents of less-affluent areas revitalize their neighborhoods.

Midland Neighborhood Housing Service, which will administer the program locally, is one of hundreds of NeighborWorks organizations across the country that are part of the congressionally chartered, non-profit Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation, said Terri Ramsey of Midland NHS.

The Back to Basics program consists of a $40,000 initial grant that will be used to fund a single NHS position for one year. This person "will be solely dedicated to working with residents in our target neighborhoods," Ms. Ramsey said.

"The Back to Basics initiative is based on the fundamental promise that local residents who get

Justices strike blow to affirmative action

Randy Pech filed a lawsuit over a construction project being awarded to a minority company even though his company submitted a lower bid.

■ Court curtails special help for minorities, also makes it harder for judges to order city school desegregation plans designed to attract white students from suburbs.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court endangered many affirmative-action programs Monday as it curtailed in sweeping terms the federal government's freedom to give special help to racial minorities.

Courts must hold Congress and the president to the same strict standards as state and local governments when determining whether affirmative-action programs result in reverse discrimination. The 5-4 ruling came in a Colorado case.

The application of the new, stricter standard was not just limited to programs involving set-asides or quotas. In announcing the decision, the court appeared to be abandoning the central holdings in its last two major affirmative-action holdings, both of which were victories for civil rights advocates.

Few government programs are found constitutional when the more rigorous "strict scrutiny" standard is applied.

"All racial classifications ... are constitutional only if they are narrowly tailored measures that further compelling government interests," Justice Sandra Day

Pilot draws White House feast, salute at Pentagon

WASHINGTON — After lunch with his commander in chief — no ants on the menu — Air Force Capt. Scott O'Grady was treated to a hero's welcome at the Pentagon on Monday. President Clinton called him "a reminder of what is very best about our country."

O'Grady's fancy meal at the White House, hosted by Clinton and attended by the fighter pilot's parents, grandparents, brother and sister, was a far cry from his diet of insects and plants after being shot down in his F-16 over Bosnia on June 2.

Long-distance 'slamming' prompts FCC crackdown

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Swamped by consumer complaints, federal regulators plan to adopt tougher rules against switching customers' long-distance companies without their knowledge, a practice known as "slamming."

The Federal Communications Commission, possibly as early as Tuesday, plans to act in the area where complaints have been on the rise: long-distance companies' use of contests, prize giveaways, checks and other promotions to lure new customers.

The FCC receives more than 700 complaints a month in this area. "It is the No. 1 complaint cat-

On-line runaways spark fears of teens logging on to trouble

By David Foster
Associated Press

What could be safer for a teen-ager than staying home to peck away at a computer keyboard? Plenty, it would appear from two recent cases of teenage runaways lured from home by computer users they met on line.

A 13-year-old girl missing for two weeks from her home in suburban Louisville, Ky., was picked up Sunday by the FBI in Los Angeles. Before running away, Tara Noble had spent dozens of hours exchanging e-mail with people including a San Francisco man who promised, "We can run around our room naked all day and all night."

Her parents, searching her room after her disappearance, also found sexually explicit images transmitted through the computer.

Last month, a 15-year-old boy from a Seattle suburb ran

Sales-tax rebates increase 16.18 percent in city, drop in county

From Staff Reports

The City of Midland continues to receive good economic news as its latest sales tax rebate check from the state comptroller's office totaled $731,313, which represents a dramatic 16.18 percent increase over the same period last year when the check was for $629,418.

This latest check was for taxes collected on April sales reported to the comptroller in May by businesses filing monthly tax returns.

The city's year-to-date total is now $5,326,774, which again represents a healthy increase — 5.46 percent — over the 1994 total of $5,050,874.

Meanwhile, Midland County's latest check was for $428,031, which was well below last June's check of $529,578. That represented a significant 19.17 percent decrease. However, because the county's earlier figures had been running well ahead of last year's pace, the 1995 year-to-date total for Midland County stands at $3,076,800, or just .44 percent behind the 1994 year-to-date total of $3,090,708.

Sales tax rebates totals are closely monitored by local officials, both at the city and county levels of government, because the figures are considered a clear indication of consumer confidence in the local economy.

Following are the latest figures from area communities:

■ Andrews: $44,208 for this month; $43,846 for June of 1994; up .82 percent; $360,923 for year to date; $365,050 for 1994 to date; down 1.13 percent.

■ Big Spring: $237,337 for this month; $224,439 for June of 1994; up 5.74 percent; $1,754,507 for year to date; $1,684,575 for 1994 to date; up 4.15 percent.

■ Lamesa: $49,942 for this month; $29,420 for June of 1994; up 69.75 percent; $425,333 for year to date; $291,799 for 1994 to date; up 45.76 percent.

■ McCamey: $6,684 for this month; $6,127 for June of 1994; up 9.09 percent; $47,543 for year to date; $45,494 for 1994 to date; up 4.50 percent.

■ Odessa: $618,050 for this month; $562,513 for June of 1994; up 9.87 percent; $4,485,198 for year to date; $4,486,562 for 1994 to date; down .03 percent.

■ Rankin: $2,070 for this month; $1,466 for June of 1994; up 41.19 percent; $14,358 for year to date; $14,256 for 1994 to date; up .71 percent.

■ Seminole: $24,990 for this month; $19,700 for June of 1994; up 26.85 percent; $174,192 for year to date; $160,792 for 1994 to date; up 8.33 percent.

■ Stanton: $6,180 for this month; $4,246 for June of last year; up 45.53 percent; $40,883 for year to date; $39,556 for 1994 to date; up 3.35 percent.

Expect more sunny skies, mid-90s

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high in the mid-90s and south winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be clear with a low in the mid-60s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Wednesday should be mostly sunny with a high between 95-100.

After an overnight low of 57, Monday's high reached 89, compared to the record high for that date of 104 set in 1947. The record low was 55 set in 1979.

STATE

High pressure dominated Texas weather on Monday, causing mostly sunny skies. Temperatures were mild statewide, with highs mostly in the 80s.

However, at 3 p.m., readings ranged from 77 degrees in Abilene to 94 in El Paso.

Winds are generally from the north at 5 to 10 miles an hour, but light and variable in West Texas.

Forecasters said West Texas will have mostly clear nights and mostly sunny days through Wednesday. Highs today and Wednesday generally in the 90s except up to 110 in the Big Bend and Presidio Valleys. Lows from the 50s in the Davis Mountains to the lower 70s in the Big Bend lowlands.

NATION

Thunderstorms poured locally heavy rain on parts of the Appalachians and East Coast on Monday, and temperatures dropped to record lows on the Plains.

A cold front slowly pushing off the Eastern Seaboard spread showers and thunderstorms in a broad line extending from Florida into New England.

Up to 2 inches of rain fell early in the day in West Virginia's Calhoun and Doddridge counties, and flood warnings were posted in parts of the state as small streams rose out of their banks.

Cool air over the central part of the nation produced record low temperatures, including 45 at Sioux City, Iowa.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

RUNAWAY: Teen spent hours exchanging e-mail

(From 1A)

away to San Francisco, using bus tickets mailed to him by another teen-ager he met in an America Online electronic chat room for gays.

Both cases involved teens who suddenly started spending hours on the computer — and parents who discovered too late what their children had been doing on line.

"I would consider myself computer literate, but frankly, I didn't suspect what I found out," said Bill Montgomery of Maple Valley, Wash.

His son, Daniel, was gone for more than two weeks before being found safe June 4 at San Francisco International Airport. Daniel is back home now, grounded from the information highway until he regains his parents' trust.

"You can get into anything you want on line," Montgomery said. "There's pornography in these chat rooms. There are obscenities. It's really wide open."

It's not clear what the teenagers did while they were gone, and the FBI, which is investigating both cases, has not said whether charges will be filed.

But the bureau's Louisville office issued a statement saying Tara Noble's case "demonstrates the need for parents to provide oversight and guidance to their children in the use of computers."

That message is echoed by the big three computer network services — America Online Inc., CompuServe Inc. and Prodigy Service Co.

The companies say they allow subscribers to screen what their children see on line by blocking certain services such as chat rooms or access to the Internet. But the ultimate responsibility rests with parents, they say.

They point out that computer networks offer information from the highly educational to the vulgar — guided tours of the Smithsonian are available on the Internet, but so are sexually explicit essays from pedophiles.

"Two-point-five million use this service," said Pam McGraw, spokeswoman for America Online.

"That's like a city. Parents wouldn't let their kids go wandering in a city of 2.5 million people without them, or without knowing what they're going to be doing."

The on-line services teamed up in November with the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children to produce a brochure called "Child Safety on the Information Highway."

"There are parents out there who don't know where the on-off switch is, and they don't know what their kids are doing," said Ernie Allen, the center's president. "It's important for parents to develop an understanding of what their kids are doing on the computer."

The brochure advises teens not to give out personal information such as their address or phone number, and to tell parents if they're sent messages that make them feel uncomfortable.

Allen also urged parents to set rules on how long their children can spend on line and what services they can use.

"The point, whether you're talking about on-line services or television or anything else, is that it's not inappropriate to set limits," Allen said.

Montgomery said on-line services could do more, such as fine-tuning their blocking capabilities so parents could screen objectionable services more selectively without losing others. The companies also should require a greater burden of proof that a user is 18, he said. They currently require a credit card or checking account number from new subscribers, assuming that that eliminates most minors.

But Montgomery believes the most important lesson his family's crisis offers is personal, not technogical.

"It's not computer-related at all," he said. "I've learned how important it is to spend more time with my son, and to let him know that he's real important to us."

involved at the grassroots level make the decisive difference in creating healthy neighborhoods and that resident participation in their community is the best guarantee for public and private investors," according to NHS information.

Educating members of the public about using NHS funds to improve their neighborhoods and homes is the key to making the program work, Ms. Ramsey said. It is to this end that the new position is being funded, she said.

Since Oct. 1, 1984, Midland NHS has overseen the spending of $158,000 to help less-affluent people buy and repair their housing and to clean up and improve their neighborhoods.

In recent years, community education has faltered somewhat, partly because of the lack of highly educated staff at the community service level, Ms. Ramsey said.

"Nobody wanted to stay at the community service level, because that was the lowest-paying level," she said.

The grant, however, will fund a top salaried person to work directly with community members to make the services more effective. This person will be a liaison between those hoping to improve their neighborhoods and programs provided by NHS, Christmas in April and other community service organizations.

NHS officials hope the position will be funded for an additional year as well, she said.

This Back to Basics staff member will coordinate with interested community leaders and will help rally members of a specific neighborhood to join in improving the area, she explained.

"We can get the trucks there if he (the neighborhood leader) can get the workers there," she said.

These neighborhood refurbishing and cleaning projects have been very successful in the past, she said. "If we can just get one block going on both sides of the street, it will grow — because people will want to be a part of it," she said.

"This is a big opportunity for Midland," she added.

"Without the active participation of the people who live in the impacted communities, there is no way to ensure that the millions of dollars invested to create affordable housing and revitalize neighborhoods can be protected over the long term," according to NHS information from Midland Assistant City Manager Glen Hackler.

Through a collaborative effort between the city of Midland, Midland NHS and the Texas Department of Housing and Community Affairs, the Affordable Housing program is being instituted to assist 23 first-time, low-income home buyers in Midland get into newly constructed homes.

The new Affordable Housing program encourages builders to construct homes in NHS target neighborhoods. Prospective home buyers will be prequalified for financing through NHS.

The program is designed to encourage to promote new housing construction and as an incentive for young people to move back to the target neighborhoods. New housing construction is expected to begin in August.

SLAMMING: FCC gets tough on unauthorized switching egory at the commission," said Kathleen Wallman, chief of the FCC's Common Carrier Bureau.

(From 1A)

In many of these cases, regulators say, people are unaware that by signing a contest form or consenting to a charitable donation they have agreed to switch to another long-distance company.

If the authorization information is included in the form, they say, it is often buried somewhere in tiny print.

The expected changes, designed to better protect consumers, would be added to existing rules adopted in 1992.

The biggest change, according to FCC officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, would require long-distance companies to provide consumers a piece of paper, separate from promotional material, authorizing a change in service.

For checks, the authorization form would not have to be separate, but it would have to be clearly and prominently marked on the front and the back of the check, according to long-distance company attorneys close to the proceeding.

AT&T and MCI already do this, company officials said. Sprint does not routinely offer checks, said spokeswoman Juanada Teas.

AT&T Vice President Gerry Salemme called the proposed rule changes "pro-consumer, pro-competitive and well-balanced. ... They should protect customers from unscrupulous activities by a few companies in the industry."

But a MCI official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the provision separating the service authorization from promotional materials is overly broad and would require MCI to change promotions that have not been the source of consumer complaints.

For instance, MCI, runs a promotion targeting airline customers to switch service. The promotion material and authorization form are in one piece: the folders in which airlines distribute tickets. The new rules would require MCI to change this, the official said.

The MCI official said the rule change should be narrowly tailored to target the practices of companies that have a bad track record.

The authorization language is standard and reads along the lines of: "I understand by signing this, I authorize a change in my primary long-distance carrier ... ."

"We're trying to draw a clear line for long-distance companies and consumers," Wallman explains. "So we don't have to get in the business of looking at every way companies market," she said.

In addition to the Big Three long-distance companies — AT&T, MCI and Sprint — several hundred companies provide long-distance services.

Many of those smaller companies do that by buying service from the big long-distance carriers at a wholesale rate and reselling it at a retail rate.

In another expected change, the FCC would require companies that resell long-distance service to list their own names on the forms authorizing a switch, said telecommunications attorneys.

Right now, many companies don't identify themselves, but simply tell prospective customers that they resell the service of, for example, AT&T.

Another big complaint comes from people who were switched and billed for calls at a rate higher than their preferred carrier.

Currently, consumers have to pay for those long-distance calls carried by the unauthorized phone company. The FCC is considering changing that.

BLOW: Ruling 'alters playing field,' O'Connor says

(From 1A)

O'Connor wrote for the court.

She said "all government action based on race ... should be subjected to detailed judicial inquiry to ensure that the personal right to equal protection of the law has not been infringed."

The court, however, rejected the urgings of some that it outlaw all affirmative action as unconstitutional "reverse discrimination" against whites.

Only Justice Antonin Scalia voted to do away with all forms of race-based affirmative action.

The court even stopped short of striking down the federal affirmative-action program it had studied — one that offers special help to minority-owned businesses in the highway construction industry.

O'Connor acknowledged that the ruling "alters the playing field in some important respects." Therefore, she said, a federal appeals court should be given a chance to apply the new, stricter standard.

In another important ruling on race, the court made it harder Monday for federal judges to order city school desegregation plans designed to attract white students from the suburbs.

The same 5-4 lineup of justices ruled in a Kansas City, Mo., case that such plans may be imposed only if a judge finds that both urban a[illegible] suburban schools still show effects of prior segregation.

The affirmative-action decision signaled a fundamental shift in the way courts are to evaluate such federal programs. They now will be subjected to "strict scrutiny" — a standard that would require affirmative-action programs to be narrowly tailored to remedy past discrimination.

"The ruling undoubtedly will mean more challenges to affirmative-action programs," said a disappointed C. Stephen Ralston of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

William P. Pendley, the Denver lawyer who challenged the plan the court ruled on, said, "Now, those who oppose affirmative action will have the intellectual and constitutional basis for dismantling it."

One opponent, House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., said he expected congressional hearings soon on the future of federal affirmative action.

The ruling comes at a time when Gingrich and other Republican leaders in Congress are trying to eliminate most forms of affirmative action, and President Clinton has asked for a review of those plans now in use.

Three Republicans with presidential aspirations — California Gov. Pete Wilson and Sens. Bob Dole of Kansas and Phil Gramm of Texas — hailed the decision. "It's now our responsibility in Congress to follow the court's lead and put the federal government's own house in order," Dole said.

Patricia Ireland, president of the National Organization for Women, said the decision "does not have to be a legal and political disaster." But she predicted that conservatives in Congress would "have a field day with this."

One strange result is affirmative action aimed at giving special help to women now are to be judged under a more lenient judicial standard.

Justice John Paul Stevens wrote in dissent that now "the government can more easily enact affirmative-action programs to remedy discrimination against women than it can ... to remedy discrimination against African-Americans."

White House press secretary Mike McCurry said it was too early to say what impact the ruling might have on the president's deliberations.

toes and mushrooms, spring greens and asparagus, followed by cherry sherbet and fresh fruits.

Surveying the spread, O'Grady cracked: "You'll understand, Mr. President, if I don't eat the salad."

"He certifies that he got a better meal than he did in those six days in Bosnia," Clinton joked later at a rain-soaked welcoming ceremony on a Pentagon parade ground.

Clinton and the top Pentagon brass paid tribute not only to O'Grady's courage and spirit but also to the skill and training of those who rescued him.

"Last week those of you who brought life to that training and saved one brave man's life said more about what we stand for as a country, what our values are and what our commitments are than any words the rest of us could ever utter," Clinton said.

The president said he felt personally honored to have O'Grady and his family to lunch.

"He gave us something more precious than we can ever give him: a reminder of what is very best about our country."

As if on queue, a driving rain and wind eased and the skies lightened just as O'Grady, in his blue Air Force uniform, accompanied by Clinton, Defense Secretary William Perry and Joint Chiefs Chairman Gen. John Shalikashvili, walked out of the Pentagon to an outdoor platform overlooking the Potomac.

"We're here today to celebrate true grit," Perry said. "They shot down his plane but not his spirit."

Perry recalled the moment, in the early morning hours of last Thursday in Bosnia, when U.S. commanders got the initial confirmation that O'Grady was alive and had been located. They had hoped to be able to attempt their rescue mission in darkness when night-vision equipment would give them the advantage of stealth. But in fact they had to choose whether to go right away in daylight, or wait until the next night and hope O'Grady would not be captured first.

They chose to go in daylight.

"It was a gutsy decision," Perry said. "It turned out to be the right decision."

For his part, O'Grady said little. He thanked God and the men who rescued him.

Sheriff under fire; inmates claim jailer abuse

■ 62-year-old is happy with label of America's meanest Sheriff, plans to run for re-election.

By Walter Berry
Associated Press

PHOENIX — He's made national headlines with his get-tough policy on criminals, but now some people want to get tough with Maricopa County Sheriff Joe Arpaio.

At least six former inmates have filed separate claims — the first step for a lawsuit — against the county in recent months, alleging they were assaulted by Arpaio's detention officers.

He's been at war with the county Board of Supervisors over budget cuts, and he's being called a shameless publicity hound by some civil rights leaders who question whether his policies are working.

Nonetheless, the 62-year-old Arpaio says he's happy with the label of America's meanest sheriff and he plans to run for re-election.

He also has no plans to change any of his policies.

"The public is fed up with crime. They don't want jails to be a resort. My jails are a determent," said Arpaio, a retired Drug Enforcement Administration agent who was elected sheriff in late 1992.

"I want everybody to know that we have a tough sheriff here and it's safe to bring your families and business to Maricopa County. I like the tough-guy image only because if I was a nice guy, I wouldn't be doing my job."

In the past 2 1/2 years, Arpaio has banned coffee, smoking, hot meals, long hair, sexually-explicit magazines and R-rated movies from the county's jail system.

He also has reinstituted chain gangs, set up tent cities to house inmate overflow and revamped a 2,300-member volunteer posse to crack down on prostitutes, graffiti artists and shopping mall thugs and car thieves.

Stories about Arpaio and his policies have appeared in newspapers across the country and in various supermarket tabloids. He also been interviewed by 30 national and international television shows including "PrimeTime Live," "Nightline" and "Good Morning America."

"It's sickening to see the public slurping up his snake oil," said inmates rights activist Donna Hamm, who calls Arpaio "a bombastic buffoon."

Louis Rhodes, head of the American Civil Liberties Union's Phoenix chapter, said Arpaio is "a great showman in the Wild West tradition of Wild Bill Cody but I think he locks up way too many people. If he had his way, he'd put tents up on the moon."

Two Phoenix-area lawyers say they've have been approached by more than 30 former inmates complaining of jailer abuse while in custody the past year.

Eric Johnson, a Phoenix welder jailed on a warrant stemming from two traffic citations, says he suffered a broken left arm when he was yanked from his cell and slammed against a wall after calling a guard a derogatory name.

The Nov. 2 incident was videotaped by a security camera inside the jail, but none of the three guards involved were disciplined. Johnson, 37, is seeking $600,000 in damages.

Arpaio said an internal investigation into the claims is ongoing but is confident the officers involved will eventually be cleared.

"We run a tight jail, but we don't condone excessive force," said Arpaio, noting that in April he fired a detention officer accused of striking and kicking a shackled inmate.

"But the inmates don't run the jails," he added. "We run the jails."

By Hamm points out that some of the county's jail inmates are pre-trial detainees who have not been convicted of any crime.

"Sheriff Arpaio should be taking social science classes at a community college to learn how to correct human behavior instead of feathering his public image," she said. "There's also no evidence that any of his policies have worked.

"The prostitutes have just moved from downtown Phoenix to Tempe and parts of the metropolitan area. That's not solving crime. That's displacing it."

Arpaio insists his policies have deterred crime, although he can't produce exact figures.

"If my critics think I'm a publicity hound, so be it. You get publicity only by doing things," Arpaio said. "I intend to run for re-election next year and if the public doesn't like the job I'm doing, they'll vote for somebody else."

Arpaio said he is short 160 detention officers, but hopes to hire them back soon.

He filed a $10 million lawsuit against the county Board of Supervisors last September after it cut his department's $84 million annual budget by about $5 million. The suit was dropped in April after the supervisors freed up money from a contingency fund.

The county jail system, originally built to house 3,924 inmates in five indoor facilities, has doubled in the past decade and reached a record population of 5,803 last month.

Former New York mayor ventures into fiction realm

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — A wedding guest was found stabbed to death in an alcove outside the basement chapel at City Hall, the police report said — at least in the churning imagination of Edward Koch.

Detectives were stumped in their efforts to determine how the killer managed to smuggle the knife past the building's network of weapons detectors — but Edward (Private Eye) Koch wasn't.

In a flight of fantasy that fulfills his longing to be Mayor for Life, Koch has taken time from his jobs as law partner, radio host, college professor, television news analyst, newspaper columnist, movie reviewer, and author of six non-fiction political books, to write a mystery novel, "Murder at City Hall" (Kensington Books, $19.95), scheduled for release in October.

And who, of course, solves the mystery?

"I do!" Koch said in a phone interview on Saturday.

And whodunit?

Koch replied: "What am I, nuts? I'm not going to give it away. It gets solved by the detective, who is me, in my role as permanent mayor."

Permanent mayor?

"Well, it's my book," Koch said.

Indeed, in a letter to readers just inside the 197-page paperback, Koch forthrightly expounds on his fantasy:

"I have a fertile imagination that is still with me, and, occasionally, I like to think about what life would be like if I could be mayor forever, head of the capital of the world, solving the city's problems and becoming more popular with the passage of each year, even more popular than the great Fiorello La Guardia."

WORLD IN BRIEF

■ Police believe cult responsible for slaying

TOKYO — Police believe the cult accused of releasing nerve gas on Tokyo's subways was also responsible for an assassination attempt on Japan's top police officer, reports said Monday.

National Police Agency chief Takaji Kunimatsu was shot four times and seriously wounded outside his apartment building 10 days after the gas attack, which killed 12 people and sickened 5,500.

Police suspect Aum Shinri Kyo was involved in the assassination attempt because witnesses saw two people fleeing the area who resembled cult officials, Japan's public NHK television network reported.

Kunimatsu, who was leading the investigation into the cult, is recovering and is expected to resume his duties later his month.

■ British vets object to prayer for reconciliation

LONDON — Veterans' organizations and former prisoners of war on Monday demanded the removal of a prayer for reconciliation with Japan from a service commemorating the end of World War II.

Survivors of jungle death camps objected to the prayer, saying the Japanese have not apologized for their brutal treatment of Allied prisoners. Some are demanding compensation for their suffering and slave labor.

Organizers of the ecumenical service, to be held at Buckingham Palace on Aug. 19, included the prayer, "Let us give thanks for the reconciliation that has been established between nations."

"To reconcile you need to add to the word reconciliation and bring fellowship or friendship, or something like that, and the Japs haven't done that at all," Harold Payne, president of the National Federation of Far Eastern POW Associations said. "Who wants to be in friendship with the Japanese?"

Archbishop of Canterbury George Carey defended the service.

■ Israel-PLO deal on troop pullback nears

JERUSALEM — Israel and the PLO reported progress Monday in talks on a West Bank troop pullback, and an Israeli official said an accord would likely be reached by the July 1 target date.

The official said the two sides have agreed to a troop withdrawal from all West Bank towns except Hebron in the next few months. Palestinian elections would be held by year's end, he said.

Yasser Arafat's spokesman, Marwan Kanafani, said "some progress" had been achieved. But he called the Israeli assessment too optimistic and said there was no agreement yet on the dimensions of withdrawal.

Speaking in Paris, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin was cautious, saying he hoped the July 1 target would be met.

The Israel-Palestinian peace process has "passed the point of no return," he said, adding: "If it will take two months more or six months more or one year more to solve it ... don't judge us by days or weeks."

Jewish settlers in the West Bank responded by threatening to set up new settlements.

■ Colombian police arrest bombing suspect

MEDELLIN, Colombia — Police went after Colombia's biggest problems Monday, battling violence and drugs by arresting suspects in a lethal public bombing and hunting for the second of two brothers believed to run the notorious Cali cocaine cartel.

Several people were arrested as suspects in the bombing of a street festival that killed 29 people Saturday. Anonymous telephone callers claiming to be drug traffickers said they carried out the attack Saturday night in reprisal for the arrest of a drug kingpin, said Defense Minister Fernando Botero.

The bombing came one day after police arrested Gilberto Rodriguez Orejuela, who with his brother, Miguel, leads the Cali cartel from the southwestern city. It supplies 80 percent of the world's cocaine and helped undo the rival Medellin cartel.

Police carried out more raids in the search for Rodriguez Orejuela's brother. Their counterparts in Bogota did not dismiss a possible cartel role in the Medellin bombing.

■ Vesco pawn in international chess game

MIAMI, Fla. — Fugitive financier Robert Vesco was the Howard Hughes of Communist Cuba until his gilded cage became his jail cell.

Now, he is a pawn in an international chess game, a bit player in a James Bond-style drama in which he has been cast as the fall guy, ensnared in the same Machiavellian web that once gave him refuge.

And Vesco, the zealous guardian of a stolen multimillion-dollar fortune, a connoisseur of yachts and fine dining, has suddenly landed at Villa Marista, a prison in south central Havana that is the headquarters for the East German-trained State Security police.

U.S. State Department spokeswoman Christine Shelley said the Cubans informed the U.S. interest section in Havana of the arrest on June 2.

"In my view, this was a political ploy kicked off by the reversal in U.S. policy regarding the Cuban refugees," said Tom Cash, the Drug Enforcement Administration's special agent in charge of Florida and the Caribbean from 1988 until January this year.

Returned Cuban refugees feel frustrated, alienated

SANTA CLARA, Cuba — They had hoped to be in Miami by now, and with seven friends risked their lives at sea to get there. But in early May, Enrique Enriquez and Julio Roqueta were among the first Cuban refugees forcibly returned to their homeland by the United States.

They say they have suffered harassment and loss of jobs. But Cuba's desire to maintain a rare agreement with the United States meant to halt the flow of refugees also appears to have offered returnees unusual protection.

Enriquez and Roqueta were among five returnees who spoke to an Associated Press reporter who visited them in their homes in and around Santa Clara, about 150 miles southeast of Havana, and in the nearby fishing village of Caibarien.

Though several said they had been picked up by police, they were detained only briefly. And none of the 24 Cubans returned so far under the May 2 agreement are known to have been imprisoned — which would have been a near certainty just a year ago.

All of the returnees had set sail before the pact was announced — although many knew that an American decree last year meant they would probably be sent to a U.S. base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, rather than directly to Florida, if they were picked up.

Roqueta said the nine adrift in his boat learned that they would be returned directly to Cuba only when they were hauled aboard a U.S. Coast Guard cutter May 10 — perhaps only 12 miles off the Florida Keys.

"I was ready to take off my shoes and jump," said Roqueta, 23.

"I said I'd prefer that they killed me here (on the ship)," said Enriquez, 24, speaking outside his home, a whitewashed building with peeling plaster.

The nine set out April 29 on a homemade 16-foot boat with a sail sewn from grain bags, Enriquez said. Their water held out, but the food had all been eaten four days before they were hauled from the leaking vessel.

Antonio Milan, a Free Baptist, had hoped to find religious freedom in the United States. Hector Torna, 63, a retired fisherman, wanted to be reunited with his son who reached the United States a few months ago.

Victoriano Rodriguez, 41, fled after a brush with the law when his motorcycle and TV were seized last year under a controversial new "illegal enrichment" law. Jorge Acevedo had been accused of petty thievery and boarded the small boat with his pregnant wife.

Since being returned to Cuba, at least four of the nine said they were briefly detained by police.

U.S., Japanese end trade talks with no indications of progress

GENEVA (AP) — U.S. and Japanese officials ended a day of talks on their bitter automobile trade dispute Monday with no sign of progress.

Both sides merely reiterated long-standing positions on the dispute, which involves U.S. charges that Japan has failed to open its car market. Japan, in turn, says threatened U.S. sanctions violate international trade rules.

The United States threatened punitive 100 percent tariffs against 13 luxury Japanese automobile imports after talks on opening Japan's car market broke down in May. They are scheduled to come into effect June 28 and would effectively double the price of the affected models.

U.S. delegation member Andrew Stoler said there were no plans to meet today, despite Japanese requests to do so. He said the U.S. negotiators had informed the Japanese delegation of Washington's "regret" over Japan's refusal to open its automobile market.

Japan delegation chief Kazuo Asakai renewed demands for the Clinton administration to drop the threat of sanctions before Tokyo would agree to resume substantive talks on giving U.S. auto and auto parts companies greater access in Japan.

Earlier in Washington, White House spokesman Mike McCurry played down prospects for a breakthrough in talks between President Clinton and Japanese Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama on the sidelines of this week's G-7 summit in Halifax, Novia Scotia.

The Geneva talks were held under the auspices of the World Trade Organization. Japan requested the meeting as a preliminary stage in the new WTO dispute settlement procedures.

It is the first major test for the WTO, established Jan. 1 as a trade policeman. It is widely believed that any WTO ruling would go against the United States for imposing sanctions unilaterally. Washington has indicated it will file a counter-complaint against Japan.

The Geneva meeting concentrated on the legality of the proposed U.S. sanctions rather than American complaints over Japanese restrictive trade practices.

Stoler reiterated Washington's belief that sanctions are legitimate because the Japanese car trade barriers themselves contravene WTO rules.

"My government believes we are in full compliance with the obligations under the WTO and we have stated that today," he told reporters at the WTO's lakeside headquarters.

Asakai said the U.S. action was "inconsistent and contradictory."

The dispute stems from the United States' nearly $66 billion trade deficit with Japan, almost 60 percent of it in automobiles and auto parts.

The Clinton administration blames this on Japan's closed markets and wants Japanese car companies to accept voluntary purchase plans to boost sales of American-made auto parts.

Many countries agree that Japan's trade practices are restrictive, but they have criticized sanctions as a clear violation of WTO rules, which are meant to limit scope for unilateral action.

Brown family files lawsuit against Simpson; media views autopsy photos for first time

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Prosecutors sprang a surprise in O.J. Simpson's trial Monday, announcing they won't call as a witness the pathologist who made dozens of mistakes in the autopsies of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman.

As the victims' families marked the first anniversary of the murders, Ms. Simpson's father filed a lawsuit against Simpson seeking unspecified damages. Louis Brown alleges Simpson planned the attack on his daughter, Simpson's ex-wife, and "left her on the walkway in front of her residence to die."

When court convened for its half-day afternoon session, prosecutor Brian Kelberg said he had decided to rely solely on the testimony of Dr. Lakshmanan Sathyavagiswaran, the county coroner, although Lakshmanan didn't perform the autopsies.

Lakshmanan, who has been testifying for a week, openly admitted that his deputy, Dr. Irwin Golden, committed more than 30 errors but insisted none of the mistakes was crucial to the final conclusions.

Golden's mistakes range from misidentifying a cut on Ms. Simpson's ring finger as a cut on the index finger, to mislabeling urine as bile. He also threw away Ms. Simpson's stomach contents and failed to identify some small cuts and abrasions on the body.

Much of the coroner's testimony last week seemed like a pre-emptive strike against the expected defense attack on Golden, who faced tough cross-examination at Simpson's preliminary hearing last summer.

After Kelberg's announcement, Simpson attorney Robert Shapiro popped to his feet and told the judge that the defense would subpoena Golden to testify in its defense case.

The announcement outside the jury's presence came just after several dozen reporters were shown autopsy and crime scene photos of the butchered bodies for the first time.

Neither Simpson nor his attorneys attended the viewings of the photos, a display that so disturbed one juror last week that the judge recessed court early one day.

The pictures were the stuff of nightmares: bloody faces, gashed necks, close-ups of corpses after they were cleaned at the morgue.

In one color picture, Ms. Simpson's neck was carved open, exposing a crimson expanse of muscle and veins. Her eyes were open and her mouth slightly agape in a grimace exposing her teeth.

Another photo showed a dark hole in Goldman's throat as if a chunk had been sliced out of it. His head was back, his eyes open. There were several puncture wounds near the deepest gash and two long superficial slashes along the throat.

Lakshmanan, who started testifying June 2, described the slashes on Goldman's throat as threat wounds from a killer taunting him before he was slain.

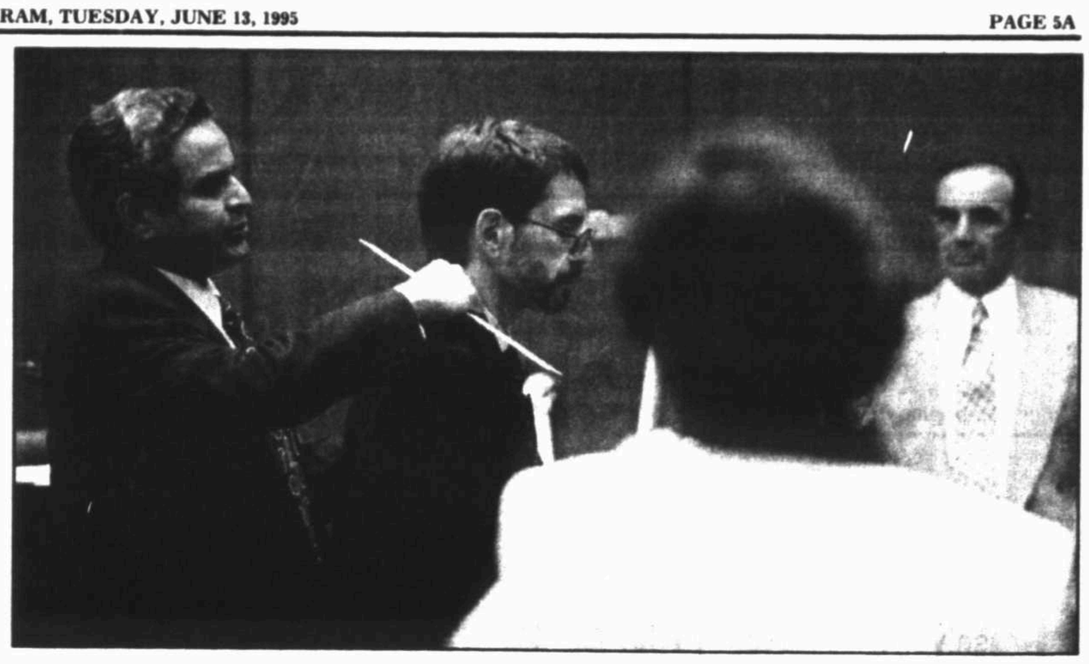
One entire board demonstrated defensive wounds on Goldman — cuts, bruises, scrapes and red, swollen knuckles indicating he and his killer fought fiercely. Another board showed puncture marks on the top of Goldman's head, which was partially shaved; another showed Ms. Simpson's hands smeared with blood.

In his testimony Monday, Lakshmanan explained away a key defense point — Goldman's bruised knuckles — by saying the victim likely hit his hand on something like a tree or gate while trying to evade the knife-wielding killer.

Defense lawyers have said Goldman was punching his assailant, noting the photos of his bruised and swollen hand. In opening statements, the defense juxtaposed that picture with pictures of Simpson's virtually unscathed body taken in the days after the killings.

Neither the families of the victims nor the public have seen the autopsy pictures, and the judge resisted showing them to anyone but the jury. He relented after a media lawyer petitioned under First Amendment rights for access to all evidence seen by jurors.

The defense had argued against showing the pictures to jurors, saying they were inflammatory and that the injuries, particularly the throat slashes, were magnified by the manner in which the victims were photographed. In some pictures, the heads were propped up on supports to spread the wounds.



AP Laserphoto

Deputy District Attorney Brian Kelburg, second from left, stands in as a "victim" while Los Angeles County Coroner Dr. Lakshaman Sathyavagiswaran, left, indicates one of the neck wounds found on Ronald Goldman during testimony in the Simpson double-murder trial Monday in Los Angeles.

Among the most shocking pictures was one of Ms. Simpson lying face-up on a gurney, her black dress pulled up to expose her black bikini underwear. Her face, its celebrated beauty unrecognizable, was covered with blood. Her legs were splattered in red; her blond hair was dark with blood.

Similar photos of Goldman included one of his body, fully clothed, on a gurney, his hands clasped at his stomach, his clothes soaked red and his face covered in blood.

The 58-photo display came one year to the day after the slaughter of Simpson's ex-wife and her friend on June 12, 1994.

"It's sad, as if it just happened yesterday," said Denise Brown, sister of Ms. Simpson, on NBC's "Today" show.

Fred Goldman, father of Ronald Goldman, said on KCBS: "I still occasionally will see someone that looks like Ron and I will do a double take because it doesn't seem that he could be gone."

The two families planned separate candlelight vigils in the evening. By Monday afternoon, Ms. Simpson's grave was covered with flowers and notes, and a TV camera caught her mother and sisters gathering at the site.

Ms. Simpson's father beat the one-year deadline by filing the lawsuit against Simpson on Monday.

Government launches investigation into Chrysler's anti-lock brakes on six models due to complaints

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's highway safety arm has expanded an investigation into the anti-lock brakes on six models of Chrysler vehicles after receiving hundreds of complaints that minivans with the same system took too long to stop.

The Chrysler vehicle models in the expanded investigation are the New Yorker, Fifth Avenue, Imperial, Eagle Premier, Dodge Dynasty and Monaco built from 1990 to 1993 with the Bendix-10 anti-lock brake system.

The move, confirmed by National Highway Traffic Safety Administration spokesman Tim Hurd, widened the probe already underway into the Chrysler Town and Country, Plymouth Voyager and Dodge Caravan minivan models built from 1991 to 1993.

NHTSA files show more than 1,900 consumer complaints about the minivan brake system.

There have been at least 26 minivan accidents and three injuries in accidents reporting the minivan braking problems, NHTSA documents show.

It is NHTSA policy not to comment about an ongoing investigation. However, public documents filed with NHTSA report consumer complaints that the anti-lock brake system has "excessively long stopping distances" and in some cases complete loss of braking ability.

NHTSA said in the documents that many complaints allegedly involve intermittent braking problems. Those servicing the brakes frequently cannot determine the cause.

Chrysler engineering spokesman Lindsay Brooke in Auburn Hills, Mich., said there is no clear pattern of anti-lock brake problems.

However, an internal Chrysler memo written by senior staff supervisor Rick Cortright says the company has seen "an increase in consumer calls" about the Bendix 10 anti-lock brake system. The Sept. 12, 1994, memo said the system often can be rebuilt and asks senior staff and supervisors to contact a Chrysler hotline before installing new assemblies.

The internal document was obtained by the Center for Auto Safety and sent to NHTSA. The consumer watchdog group had asked NHTSA to expand its investigation to the other vehicles.

The Center for Auto Safety said it has received nearly 100 reports of anti-lock brake failure on Chrysler vehicles. Director Clarence Ditlow said consumers are reporting an "astronomical" repair cost of $2,000 to $2,500, with one owner paying $3,500.

Brooke acknowledged "a small number of Chrysler minivan owners paid a lot of money to have their systems replaced when their vehicle was no longer covered by warranty." However, he said a recent company policy limits any owner's cost for the brake system's repair or replacement to $600.

The minutes of a November 10, 1992, meeting attended by Chrysler and Bendix employees said Chrysler's field people were "desperate for a fix" after receiving consumer complaints of excessive force required to depress the brake pedal or so-called brake floating. Brake floating means there is less tension or response when pressure is applied to the brake pedal.

Pilot's rescue credits not only man's work

It was particularly refreshing to hear Air Force Capt. Scott O'Grady give thanks to both God and an elite U.S. Marine rescue team for his retrieval from Bosnia recently. After the harrowing experience O'Grady endured, it's obvious that the expression of gratitude was appropriate although it is too frequently offered in these secular times.

The 29-year-old pilot's F-16C fighter jet was ripped apart by a Bosnian Serb missile June 2 from which the pilot ejected to safety and to hostile Serb territory. He was rescued by the rescue team of elite Marines who flew into the crash site to bring him back to safety.

During a ceremony at Aviano Air Base in Italy on Friday, O'Grady appropriately thanked the Marines who rescued him, his family friends and others who were rooting for him. Then, admitted O'Grady, "If it wasn't for God's love for me and my love for God, I wouldn't have gotten through it, and he's the one that delivered me here and I know that in my heart."

Of course, O'Grady had a hand in his own rescue. As Lt. Gen. Michael E. Ryan noted, "He knew what had to be done once he hit the ground and he did it marvelously." There is a lesson in that, too. God, the adage says, helps those who help themselves. O'Grady obviously did.

The story of O'Grady's rescue was uplifting and inspiring. It reaffirms that human beings do not merely walk through this world alone or get through dangerous events in their lives by only their own wiles and luck. We also need God's Grace to survive — and when we recognize that we have received it we should give thanks, as did Capt. O'Grady.

France should not break nuclear test ban treaty

Last month, the Clinton administration used every diplomatic weapon at its command to secure permanent extension of the treaty limiting the spread of nuclear weapons.

The treaty not only commits nonnuclear countries to refrain from developing weapons. It also commits countries that have the bomb to move toward a comprehensive test ban and eventual nuclear disarmament.

At the time, some nonnuclear states worried that the five declared nuclear powers — the United States, Britain, France, Russia and China — would not keep their end of the bargain. Decisions now pending in Washington and Paris will demonstrate whether those worries were justified.

To gain extension of the nonproliferation treaty, the five declared powers pledged to finish negotiations on a test ban treaty by next year. The Clinton administration defined a comprehensive test ban as permitting only extremely low-yield underground tests. But Pentagon officials are pressing the White House to revise its negotiating position to permit more powerful explosions.

They argue that higher-yield tests produce information that is needed to assure the safety and reliability of America's nuclear weapons. Experts at the Energy Department, which has primary responsibility for nuclear testing and manages the nuclear weapons labs, do not agree.

Higher thresholds would be easier for nuclear powers like France to accept. But nonnuclear countries taking part in the negotiations would rightly see them as undermining the comprehensive test ban principle and might well refuse to go along. Advocates of the higher threshold hope to persuade President Clinton before he meets France's new president, Jacques Chirac, in Halifax this week. Clinton should reject their recommendations.

Meanwhile, Chirac faces a critical nuclear decision of his own. Last week his defense advisers recommended that France resume underwater nuclear tests in the South Pacific, which have been suspended since 1992.

Chirac has been noncommittal on the testing issue. The United States, Britain and Russia, though not China, have voluntarily suspended their testing programs as they negotiate toward a comprehensive test ban.

For France to resume testing now would be a sign of contempt toward the nonnuclear countries and would further set back the test ban talks.

Washington and Paris ought to reread the commitments their representatives made only a month ago when more than 170 countries approved extension of the nonproliferation agreement. To turn around now and seek more and bigger nuclear weapons tests would be a betrayal of the treaty.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 13, the 164th day of 1995. There are 201 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 13, 1966, the U.S. Supreme Court issued its landmark "Miranda vs. Arizona" decision, ruling that criminal suspects have to be informed of their constitutional rights prior to questioning by police.

On this date:

In 1886, King Ludwig II of Bavaria drowned in Lake Starnberg.

In 1888, Congress created the Department of Labor.

In 1898, the Yukon Territory of Canada was organized.

In 1900, China's Boxer Rebellion against foreigners and Chinese Christians erupted into violence.

In 1927, aviation hero Charles Lindbergh was honored with a ticker-tape parade in New York City.

In 1942, President Roosevelt created the Office of War Information, and appointed radio news commentator Elmer Davis to be its head.

In 1944, Germany began launching flying-bomb attacks against Britain during World War II.

In 1967, President Johnson nominated Solicitor General Thurgood Marshall to become the first black justice on the U.S. Supreme Court.

In 1971, The New York Times began publishing the "Pentagon Papers," a secret study of America's involvement in Vietnam.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

It is time to restore stigma of illegitimacy

Illegitimate births are up 54 percent since 1980, according to a government report. The reason, according to the report's author, is "a tremendous decline in the stigma" that was formerly attached to illegitimacy. In other words, modern society greets occurrences of bastardy with a great big yawn. Who cares anymore? And how's the O.J. trial going?

Murchison

If anything, a sort of stigma attaches to the use of the word "bastardy," which has become, well, impolite. We don't want to tar people in that condition, do we?

Of course we don't. What we want, I would hope, is to prevent the spread of that condition. The routine acceptance of illegitimacy, as if it were a hair style or musical trend, is a social menace of the first magnitude. We need that stigma back. We need to start saying once more that illegitimacy is wrong.

We certainly used to. Remember "shotgun weddings"? They were the informal answer to situations wherein ardor had outrun morality, not to mention common sense. "Doing the right thing" by the girl one had impregnated didn't mean paying for her abortion or registering her for welfare benefits. It meant marrying her so that the offspring of the union, however prematurely conceived, might have a legal name and the prospects of a normal upbringing in a household with two parents.

A different moral understanding governed that society. The understanding was that single parenthood, as we have come to euphemize it, is inferior to traditional family life, with mother and father legally pledged to each other. A couple careless enough to conceive a child "out of wedlock" is apt to be careless in other respects — if indeed the two endure as a couple. Where's the incentive nowadays to regularize a relationship they probably never assumed would last more than a few months anyway?

If Mom doesn't object, and Aunt Flo couldn't care less, and the minister doesn't make a big deal out of it, and newspaper feature stories and TV talk shows encourage the view that illegitimacy is no more than a "lifestyle" choice — hey! Illegitimacy, more and more of it, is what you will have. According to the National Center for Health Statistics, a third of all U.S. births are illegitimate, with blacks and Hispanics leading the way but white women rapidly closing the gap.

These aren't Murphy Browns for the most part; they are women with less income and education than other mothers. Their children accordingly have a rougher go than the children of traditional two-parent households. With only one adult under the roof to provide counsel, direction and discipline, the children are likelier to raise themselves — and likewise to get into trouble with the law. The number of criminals from single-parent homes is disproportionately large.

The illegitimacy rate, once very low, has been skyrocketing since the mid-'60s, thanks to the boost it got from the liberalization of welfare and the suffocatingly permissive moral climate. It is time to restore the stigma — even if that means pointing fingers and hurting feelings. The unkindest cut of all is assenting to habits and viewpoints, sometimes called "lifestyles," that degrade and undermine.

Vice President Dan Quayle felt the scorn of the fashionably permissive when, in his famous "Murphy Brown" speech, he chided those who would destigmatize illegitimacy. A few months later, Atlantic Monthly ran a devastatingly detailed report on single-motherhood. The headline: "Dan Quayle Was Right."

Illegitimacy isn't a morally or ethically neutral phenomenon. It's wrong, it's harmful, it's destructive. The trick is getting society to say so.

Chinese intellectuals speak up for democracy

In China over the last month a number of high-ranking establishment intellectuals have joined activists for democracy in petitions to the government. They called for a more open society — for "a spirit of tolerance," as one petition put it.

The Communist authorities responded by detaining some of the signers and keeping others under house arrest. In the days around June 4, the sixth anniversary of the Tiananmen Square massacre, there were stern warnings against dissent.

The pattern of protest and crackdowns seems familiar. But there are important differences this time, ones that raise questions about where things are going in Beijing.

One change is the participation of the intellectuals, members of the Chinese Academy of Sciences. The most significant of the petitions was drafted by Xu Liangying, a 75-year-old physicist who translated Einstein's work into Chinese, and signed by, among others, Wang Ganchang, 88, a key figure in the design of China's first nuclear weapon.

"It is the first time these establishment intellectuals have joined the democratic activists," Prof. Merle Goldman of Harvard said. "Until now they have kept them at a distance. The party leadership may find the change disturbing."

The question is why people in a privileged position as academicians decided to speak out for democracy with the activists. And why now?

Some China scholars in this country say the reason is that the Communist regime faces a time of transition from the leadership of Deng Xiaoping, who is 90 years old and has not been seen in public since last October. The intellectuals see a chance to influence the direction of the leadership that will succeed Deng — to push it toward more tolerance and independent thinking. One way for a new leader to establish his identity is to differ from his predecessor's policies, as Deng did with Mao Zedong.

The official view of the student democracy movement that was crushed in Tiananmen Square is one key to change. The petition drafted by Xu Liangying called on the authorities to "re-evaluate the June 4, 1989, incident according to the spirit of 'seeking truth from facts,' and release those people who remain in jail."

The Xu petition is in many respects a remarkable document. It says the government should "never again regard individuals of independent thought as 'hostile elements' and submit them to repressive attacks." It asks the authorities to "boldly end the ignominious tradition of literary inquisitions that has persisted in our country since ancient times."

That petition and the others ought to end any lingering tendency among Americans and Europeans to think that Chinese intellectuals are any less eager for freedom of thought than, say, Russians were in the Soviet years. They are an answer, too, to the contention of Singapore's Lee Kuan Yew that Asians value freedom less than order and economic progress.

The Communist Party secretary at Xu's research institute called him in and asked him not to disturb "social stability." Xu said later, "I told him what we're doing is good for social stability."

The petitions for freedom are also a comment on the difficulty of framing American policy on human rights in China. A year ago President Clinton stopped tying renewal of China's trade status under U.S. law to its human-rights record. Since then repression and torture have increased. It is not clear how the United States can bring effective pressure for decency on a totalitarian regime that evidently fears for its survival.

The most powerful symbol of the Chinese regime's use of extreme, lawless methods to repress nonviolent demands for democracy is the case of Wei Jingsheng. He was arrested in 1979 for his part in the Democracy Wall movement, was tried in secret and served nearly 15 years in solitary confinement.

In September 1993, when Beijing was trying to win the Year 2000 Olympics, Wei was suddenly released. He spoke out for freedom, undaunted. On April 1, 1994, he was detained again. Not a word has been heard since from him or about his condition or whereabouts.

If a new Chinese leadership wants to win the world's respect when it comes to power, its first act should be to free Wei Jingsheng.

Mean streets are found in cities across America

America's streets are in terrible shape. And I'm not talking about potholes, busted curbs or blinky street lights.

No, the problem is that so many of our streets are really mean. This meanness is sweeping the country and spreading to foreign lands.

Royko

I made this discovery recently after hearing a TV war correspondent refer to snipers shooting people on "the mean streets of Sarajevo."

It seemed to me that I had read or heard the phrase "mean streets" before.

Using a computer service, I searched for the words "mean streets" in dozens of newspapers.

The search covered only the first five months of this year. But the results were frightening. Here are just a few of the mean streets that were found.

Seattle Post-Intelligencer: "Michael Hurtado grew up on the mean streets of Los Angeles."

Cox News Service: "Purvis Young grew up on the mean streets of Miami's Liberty City."

New York Newsday: "He grew up on the mean streets of Brooklyn."

Knight-Ridder Newspapers: "Affirmative action got this child of a one-time welfare mom off the mean streets of Chicago."

Los Angeles Daily News: "He had learned to fight while growing up defending against bullies on the mean streets of Rochester, N.Y."

San Francisco Examiner: "What Floyd didn't know that night on the mean streets of St. Petersburg. ..."

Knoxville News-Sentinel: "Sheba is a skinny-legged teen, just getting by on the mean streets of New York City."

Reuter News Report: "Experience dictated that Michael Ndurumo would end up destitute on the mean streets of Kenya."

Edmonton Journal: "The slightly built boy wanders the mean streets of Grozny."

Boston Herald: "Four years ago, Hall joined the ABC counseling program to escape the mean streets of Los Angeles."

Kansas City Star: "The mean streets of Cincinnati scared San Francisco 49ers defensive tackle Dana Stubblefield."

Reading (Pa.) Eagle: "On the mean streets of Atlantic City, the boys in the 'hood thought Lou Roe was crazy."

New York Newsday: "A Brooklyn jury acquitted Johnson yesterday of slaying a man in a case which had been called an example of life on the city's mean streets."

New York Newsday: "The Gantz brothers were at it again — hunkered down in the back of a surveillance van, cruising the mean streets of Manhattan."

Washington Times: "Washington is acquiring an undeserved reputation as a city of mean streets."

Portland Oregonian: "Although 550 taxicab drivers zip around the mean streets of Portland. ..."

Ft. Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel: "The South Broward community leader views athletics as a viable way off the mean streets of Liberia."

The Times of London: "A belief in collective wickedness allows Eamon to be a Belfast hard man in the mean streets that are his kingdom."

Christian Science Monitor: "On the mean streets of cities such as New York, Boston and Philadelphia. ..."

Windsor (Ontario) Star: "Right from the start, it was obvious Constable Benton Fraser did not know much about the mean streets of Chicago."

Los Angeles Times: "'The Pope of Greenwich Village' is a pungent, low-life odyssey through the mean streets around New York's Little Italy."

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette: "Tom Murphy, it seems, is always ready with a fresh anecdote about the mean streets of his North Side neighborhood."

San Francisco Chronicle: "There must be an acceptable way for a cop to let off steam after a hard week on the mean streets of Manhattan."

Orlando Sentinel: "Any good cop will tell you that winning back the mean streets is as much about prevention as it is about punishment."

Houston Chronicle: "Sometimes a policeman's toughest challenge is not the city's mean streets."

Ft. Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel: "Parents of students at Royal Palm Elementary have organized a Parent Patrol to beat the sometimes mean streets of Lauderhill."

The Times of London: "This first novel, which is set in the mean streets of Philadelphia. ..."

Tulsa World: "Ray Presley returned to Tulsa to help keep young children from being found dead on the mean streets of Tulsa."

Journalists also found mean streets in New Orleans, Buffalo, Sacramento, Baton Rouge and dozens of other communities.

So the mean-streets alarm has been thoroughly sounded. Now maybe journalism schools can start teaching about the Awful Avenues, the Bad Boulevards, the Putrid Places, the Wicked Ways and the Cursed Courts.

Succession of AFL-CIO leadership likely to become power struggle

WASHINGTON (AP) — The longtime leadership of the AFL-CIO isn't giving up without a fight. President Lane Kirkland's deputy says he will run to succeed his retiring boss, setting up a power struggle with rebel union leaders who want control of the 13.3 million-member labor federation.

The embattled Kirkland, 73, issued a statement saying he would step down Aug. 1 and recommend the federation's executive council appoint Thomas Donahue, his executive secretary, to the top post.

Donahue told reporters Monday he would be the consensus candidate and said he would "pull together the broadest and most diverse" coalition behind his candidacy.

But the opposition maintained that Donahue's earlier decision to leave the labor movement rather than challenge Kirkland or join him in his abortive run for re-election should disqualify him from consideration.

The dissidents planned to unveil a slate of candidates today, with John J. Sweeney, president of the Service Employees International Union and a longtime friend and associate of Donahue, at the top of the ticket.

Sweeney spokesman Ray Abernathy confirmed Sweeney will head the slate.

"We don't consider it opposition any longer. It's the primary slate," said Bob Harman, spokesman for Gerald McEntee, a dissident leader who heads the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

"Now that Mr. Kirkland has announced his retirement, we don't consider it opposition to anybody," Harman said.

Donahue had the votes to win the executive council's approval as Kirkland's interim successor and several labor leaders lined up to support him.

But election to a two-year term would depend on the outcome of the AFL-CIO's October convention in New York, where union leaders will cast votes weighted to the size of their membership.

If the opposition coalition holds, Donahue faces an uphill battle. Donahue suggested that there was plenty of time to build support.

"This election is going to take place in October, not in June," he said.

Donahue dismissed critics who said he missed his chance to lead, noting that even Sweeney, a friend for 30 years, suggested he was the best candidate for the post just one month ago.

Donahue conceded that continued infighting and a tough convention battle could fracture the labor movement, but he held out hope that the dissidents would work for solidarity now that Kirkland had agreed to retire.

"In times of arguments people take positions and harsh words get said and harsh lines drawn," Donahue said. "I'm hopeful that time can change that."

Critics said Kirkland couldn't offer the creative leadership needed to re-energize organized labor, which represents just 15 percent of workers today.

When he launched a defiant reelection bid earlier this year, Donahue announced he would retire rather than join Kirkland or his opponents.

The number of dissident unions grew to 21 in recent weeks, representing enough votes to oust Kirkland, and sources speaking on condition of anonymity said at least four more would join today.

Many observers still had trouble fathoming a contest between Sweeney and Donahue.

Donahue insisted that the battle wasn't personal and that his 30-year-friendship with Sweeney, who replaced him at the head of the service employees union, would endure the organization's internal struggle. Sweeney couldn't be reached for comment.

"John is my good friend and remains my good friend," Donahue said. "This is not about friendship at all."

Donahue, who served as deputy throughout Kirkland's 16-year reign, said trade unions need to do a better job of communicating with the public, recruiting new members, and embracing women and minority members.

"Our role is to facilitate the work the unions can do," he said.

Clinton, Gingrich may have delayed lobbying reform

WASHINGTON (AP) — Far from giving a boost to reform of lobbying and campaign finance laws, President Clinton and House Speaker Newt Gingrich may have created a delay by agreeing to kick the issues to a study commission.

Congress came close to enacting lobby and gift reform last year, and there have been encouraging signs that a bill could be enacted in this session. It was Gingrich who took the lead in killing last year's version.

Just two days before the two leaders made a spur-of-the-moment decision based on an audience question Sunday, the Senate had agreed to take up a lobby reform bill before the end of July. At the same time, a House subcommittee is aiming to produce a bipartisan lobbying bill before Congress' summer break.

"There's no need for a commission," said Sen. Paul Wellstone, D-Minn., sponsor of a lobbying bill. "The lobby reform and gift ban have been debated into the ground. They don't need to be studied more."

Work is proceeding; the issue "is not on the back burner," added a Republican House aide who was confounded by the impromptu decision to turn the matter over to a commission.

At least on the lobbying reform issue, creating a blue-ribbon commission would probably delay action well into next year's election season, said congressional aides of both parties. All expressed surprise at Sunday's agreement during a Clinton-Gingrich forum in New Hampshire.

Campaign finance reform has been a far more intractable issue for Congress. For more than a decade, lawmakers have deadlocked over issues such as stricter limits on giving by political action committees and public financing of congressional campaigns. Republicans had signaled that they had no interest in grappling with the issue this year after they won control of Capitol Hill.

Even so, Wellstone said, a commission would make little difference. "Everybody's perfectly well aware of what's wrong with the current system. I don't think it moves the ball forward."

White House spokesman Mike McCurry said Monday that Clinton had instructed his staff to begin exploring with congressional aides "how we could put together this commission, what would the mandate of the commission be, what type of participants should there be."

"It's hard to get people who are currently members of an institution to think through all the issues that surround reform of a system by which they are elected," McCurry added. "So an outside commission of experts in this particular case makes some sense."

Speaking with reporters on Monday, Gingrich acknowledged a commission would stall pending reform efforts.

Superintendent calls attention to racial tracking

By Joan Kirchner
Associated Press

EDISON, Ga. — Deborah Lewis' school days are long behind her, but she still remembers bitterly the pain of being labeled a slow learner despite her B average.

"The whites want to keep the system because they want to keep blacks down. They're going to die and go to hell for what they've done," said Ms. Lewis, a black, 38-year-old clerical worker.

Two decades after Ms. Lewis left school, it took an "outsider" — school Superintendent Corkin Cherubini, who moved here 25 years ago from Virginia as a teacher — to get rural Calhoun County to change its ways.

After an investigation prompted by Cherubini, the U.S. Education Department concluded that the county has been illegally steering black students into lower-level classes for years, regardless of ability. The county has to begin fixing the problem immediately or lose federal funding.

Ms. Lewis' anger over the school segregation is matched only by the intense hostility of white residents over efforts to erase it.

"There won't be a school system here in 10 years because the white community won't support it. The black people don't pay the bills, the whites do," said Richard West, a white businessman whose effort to recall Cherubini fizzled because he couldn't prove that Cherubini had violated his oath of office.

In Calhoun County, where peanut farming is the main source of income for its 5,000 residents, people often identify their neighbors by race, not by name. The southwestern Georgia county, about 60 miles north of the Florida line, is 59 percent black. More than 47 percent of the residents don't finish high school.

Cherubini, a white former teacher who was elected school chief in 1992, blew the whistle last fall on the 1,200-student school district. He had kept quiet for years when he was a teacher for fear he would lose his job.

He documented a system of racial tracking in which most white students were assigned to classes for high achievers, labeled section A or section B, while most black students were put in classes for slow learners, sections C and D.

He looked at several years of classes and found that some whites in sections A and B had low test scores and some blacks in C and D had high scores. White teachers were assigned mostly to the high-achieving classes, black teachers to the others.

"When I was teaching, I would get black kids who were potentially knockout students but fundamentally they couldn't do anything," said Cherubini, 51. "Then when I got into office and started looking at the breakdowns, it looked awfully questionable and racial."

Cherubini's action prompted bomb scares, warnings of riots, hate fliers and threats against him and his family.

He sent his only child, a fourth-grader, to live with relatives out of state for four weeks. He sought out reporters in the hope that if anything happened to him, the media would take notice and thwart a possible coverup.

"The mortal sin here is letting anybody outside the county know what's going on," Cherubini said.

Officials give ranch rodeo results

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The 1995 Midland Ranch Rodeo was a "total success" in winding up and climaxing the annual Western Heritage Celebration, said J.P. "Pat" McDaniel, Ranch Rodeo president. "And we will do it again."

The medley of cowboy singing, poetry reading, storytelling, chuckwagon cooking, ranch rodeoing, cowboy preaching and hymn singing, and showing of bits, spurs, saddles and Western collectibles last weekend attracted ranch-hands and aficionados of the cowboy way of life, art and folklore from the Southwest.

Winning first place in the chuckwagon and best-campsite competition was the Cunningham Chuckwagon out of the Texas Panhandle.

"Chuckwagons were the backbone of working ranches," said Billy Roush, who coordinated the chuckwagon competition. "There was no way to get out and work cattle and feed them cowboys without the camp cook. The chuckwagon was their camp house."

Winning the five-event ranch-rodeo competition for the second consecutive year was The Long X Cattle Company out of Kent in far West Texas.

The Long X Ranch team, headed by Doug Fox, won first place in team roping and calf branding, took third place in wild-cow milking, tied for fourth place and fifth place with J&K Munsell Ranch, and placed fifth in double mugging. Cowboys on the Long X team included Juan Navarrette and Norberto Navarrette.

Only one-half point separated first and second places: Long X's team racked up 30.5 points, and J&K Munsell Ranch's team garnered 30 points. The J&K Munsell team placed second in wild-cow milking and double mugging, tied for second and third places in team roping, tied for fourth and fifth places in team sorting, and placed fourth in calf branding.

J&K Munsell Ranch team members included Kenneth Munsell, Mickey Munsell, Mike Harmon, Jim Munsell, and Button Moore.

The order of ranking from first place to eighth place and the points accumulated by each team are: Long X Ranch team, 30.5 points; J&K Munsell Ranch team, 30 points; Powell Ranch team , 28 points; Triple Seven Ranch team, 23 points; Yarborough Ranches team, 21.5 points; Scharbauer Ranches team, 18.5; Lazy Z Ranch team, 15.5 points, and the Texas Ten Ranch team, 13 points.

The Powell Ranch team out of Midland and Alpine took first place in wild-cow milking, tied for first place and second place with the Yarborough Ranches team in team sorting, and placed second in calf branding. Yarborough Ranches team won first place in double mugging.

Cowhands on the Powell team were Shirley Newcomb, Bo Douthitt, Eric Wash and Bill Weston.

Yarborough's team members were Jason Latimer, Steve Beach, Gary Baker, Will Latimer and Sean

Paramedic's job includes gamut of emergencies

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

As a paramedic, Stuart Sherman attends to medical emergencies that range from car wrecks to cardiac arrests to women in labor. He also drives an ambulance — and a fire truck. And he's a firefighter.

"They say the job is 90 percent boredom, 10 percent terror," the 32-year-old said.

Despite the demands — and the tragedies and danger — Sherman can't think of anything he'd rather be doing.

The nine-year veteran of the Midland Fire Department was lured into the field after an acquaintance from the oil field talked about an EMT (emergency medical technician) class he was attending.

Later, while working for a horticulture service, the owners — brothers Len and Neil Newsome — learned of Sherman's aspirations and put up the money for his paramedic training. Sherman worked Saturdays to pay back the Newsomes.

Sherman received EMT training in the spring of 1985.

"I smooth fell in love with the job. I got to go with them to some fire scenes and EMS (emergency medical services) calls," Sherman said. "I knew right then that's what I wanted to do."

Paramedic training followed.

Since joining the Fire Department, Sherman has attained the official rank of driver. He works 10 days a month, 24-hour shifts from 8 a.m. to 8 a.m.

Sherman's station — No. 8 at Midkiff Road and Haynes Avenue — makes an average of three to four runs a day.

"You never know what the call is going to be," he said.

Emergency medical service calls run the gamut: from electrocutions to drownings to bleeding ulcers to fall victims to belly-aches.

Sometimes a routine sick call turns out to be someone in full cardiac arrest. "The ER (emergency room) staff always tells me they know by my tone of voice if it's a true emergency,"

Shooting is case of wrong identity, teen-agers say

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

Midland police Monday released the names of two local teen-agers reportedly involved in a weekend shooting, which one of the teen-agers told police was a case of mistaken identity.

Sgt. David Garcia said Juan Natividad, 15, was in a vehicle with two other teen-agers as the vehicle approached the residence at 423 E. Pecan Ave. at about 1:20 a.m. Sunday.

Natividad told police that he and the others in the vehicle knew the three teen-agers standing in front of the residence, including 17-year-old Johnny Alvarez who lives at the residence, Garcia said.

As the vehicle approached the residence, Alvarez reportedly began firing on the vehicle with an automatic .22 caliber pistol, Garcia said. The weapon was fired at least four times. Two bullets struck the vehicle, one bullet hitting the right, front tire and a second bullet hitting the back passenger door, Garcia said.

The second bullet deflected off of the Woman admits hoax to police

Staff Report

A Midland woman turned herself in to officials last week after claiming last month that men forced their way into her apartment, looking for a child she babysits, according to officials.

Kerri Marcom, 29, turned herself in after admitting the claims were false, officials said.

Ms. Marcom reported that on May 24, two men forced their way into her apartment looking for a boy who she babysits. She said the child they wanted was not there at the time. She took a girl she was looking after at the time and ran upstairs to the bathroom.

She claimed the men forced their way into the bathroom, placed the child in a closet and tied up Ms. Marcom.

Police said she claimed she was able to slip a note to a neighbor that came by and, when police arrived, the two men were gone.

Children learn how to make 'veggie block prints' in course

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Vegetables are for eating and painting at Museum of the Southwest. Youngsters dipped sections of zucchini, yellow squash, green bell pepper and potatoes into paint before stamping them onto paper during Monday morning's "Veggie Block Prints" course. The two-hour course kicked off the museum's "Summer Diversions" program.

"I remember doing things like this at school," said 13-year-old Bobbye Bogart, a museum volunteer. Bobbye volunteered to assist 3--5 years in the "short takes" course.

Midland Christian preschool teacher Stephanie Fender said she recalled making vegetable block prints as a youngster. "And I really remember making sand candles at a church camp. We are going to do that later," Ms. Fender said.

Even stronger than the memory of making sand candles, Ms. Fender said, is the memory of packing her sand candle into her suitcase of fresh-

JOB: Paramedic's job is personal, demanding

(From 1B)

Sherman said.

"Basically you're the eyes and ears of the doctor. That emergency room doctor is taking for gospel what you are telling him," he said.

Sherman admits to the physical and mental demands of the job. "I like that part that's demanding because that challenges me and what I know," he said.

As a new paramedic Sherman would take the deaths personally, he said. But now, Sherman said, he recognizes the triumphs and knows emergency crews are doing their best to save people.

That doesn't mean the job isn't still personal. Sherman recalled situations where no more could be done for someone who's died but the family insists on help. "You get out of that paramedic role and get in a personal role and comfort that family," he said.

Not all ambulance calls are as trying — as one recent sick call proves.

"We went on a call just the other day for a lady because her cat quit purring," the paramedic said. Sherman's partner picked up the cat and rubbed its belly until purring resumed.

Sherman said he explained nicely to the elderly woman about emergency use of paramedics.

That incident just exemplifies the unexpected nature of the work, Sherman said.

The drama of being a paramedic/firefighter begins when a call comes in — especially for the drivers.

"I've had people stop in front of me and put on their brakes," he said. "I've had them flip me off. I had one guy change lanes in front of me every time I did."

Many times motorists are caught off-guard by an approaching ambulance. "You know what you're fixing to do, where you're turning, but nobody else does," Sherman said.

And "I don't know what they're going to do when they do see me," he said. "If everybody would remember to pull to the right, everything would be OK."

As a result, ambulance drivers need to be cautious of others on the road. "If I have a wreck and can't get to you, I haven't helped either one of us," said Sherman, who wrecked an ambulance a few years back.

Asked the difference driving an ambulance from a fire truck, Sherman replied with a smile. "They'll move for that fire truck."

Responding to a fire especially gets Sherman worked up because fires are much fewer than medical emergencies.

"My heart rate probably increases twice as fast knowing I'm going to a working fire than a heart attack," he said.

"It's a lot of fun," he said. "There's a little warped mentality because we enjoy what we do."

When not dousing fires or trying to save a life or maneuvering in traffic, Sherman — and fellow firefighters — keep busy at their home away from home.

"We don't play dominoes," he said.

At the fire station, firefighters must cook their own meals (and must buy and pay for their food), mow the yard, clean toilets, wash trucks ...

On top of that, paramedics/firefighters are involved in on-going training.

And if working for the Fire Department wasn't enough, Sherman is on staff at Midland Memorial Hospital's emergency department, and teaches advanced cardiac life support and pediatric advanced life support for the hospital.

In addition, Sherman is a clinical instructor for EMT and paramedic training at Midland College.

While not working, Sherman said he enjoys time with his family — wife Shannon and children, Jason, 10, Nathan, 7, and Drew, 5 — and coaching little league in the spring.

Sherman said he also looks forward to officiating high school football in the fall — something he starts thinking about in February.

"That's my relaxation — getting yelled at by coaches. I live for that," he said.

He was born Feb. 26, 1928, in Goree. He married Charlene Wooster in August 1975.

He was preceded in death by two sons, a grandson, a brother and five sisters.

Survivors include his wife, Charlene Trimble of San Angelo; five daughters, Deborah Wilson of Bridgeport, Pamela Dillon of Kernersville, N.C., Diana Smith of Quanah, Schuyler Crutcher of Slaton and Paige Cleveland of Lubbock; a stepson, Ray B. Wooster III of Magnolia; three stepdaughters, Debra K. Robinson of Montgomery, Cynthia A. Wooster of Dallas and Jacqui G. Gilmore of Austin; six sisters, Ruby Wickham of Irving, Willie Lemons of Estanola, N.M., Trudie Gray of Hereford, Joy Lester of Amarillo, and Loy Mercer and Jo Ann Smith, both of Slaton; four brothers, Delmer Trimble of Carmel, Calif., Bill Trimble and Bobby Trimble, both of Midland, and J.H. Trimble of Lubbock; nine grandchildren; and 10 stepgrandchildren.

Charles Weichert

SAN ANTONIO — Memorial services for Charles E. Weicher, 52, of San Antonio were Saturday at Christ Episcopal Church in San Antonio. Arrangements were under the direction of Porter Loring Mortuary in San Antonio.

Weichert died Wednesday.

He taught at San Antonio College for 28 years in the Psychology Department and served as department chairman for eight years. He founded the Psych Club at the college. He was vice president of Wheelman Bicycle Club and editor of its newsletter for several years.

Survivors include his wife, Nancy Weichert of San Antonio; two sons, Jeff Weichert of Austin and Blake Weichert of San Antonio; and his mother, Lorna Weichert of Midland.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to the Charles Weichert Scholarship Fund, 811 W. Houston, Suite 209, San Antonio 78207.

ly laundered clothes, and her mother's resulting dismay.

Making memories and having fun while learning were the orders of the day during the "veggie block printing" activity.

"We will be raiding the refrigerator quite a bit for our activities," noted Melanie Mathewes, museum curator of education, and coordinator of Summer Diversions. She said food will play a major role in making eggshell jewels, bean and seed art, and an edible sculpture "which children can make and eat" in the "Mommy, I Can Make it Myself," snack preparation course.

Windsocks, flower pot windchimes, stained glass from nature, masks and friendship bracelets are a few of the other projects awaiting youngsters who participate in the museum's program.

"The courses are two hours, then the children can take a break and investigate the museum, under supervision," Ms. Mathewes said. "On Mondays the museum is closed to the general public, so they have free run of it."

Another diversion is the new "Under Starry Skies" computer program offered in the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum. The history program, enhanced by sounds of crickets and featuring the people, lifestyle and "critters" of Texas, is designed with text on the fifth grade level.

Nonetheless, four-year-old Scott Chroback managed to work through much of the program. "I have a computer at home, but not like this," he said, noting that he favored the pictures and sounds of the critters section, especially an image of a rattlesnake. Designed by Artemedia, the computer program opens with the silhouette of a saguaro framed against a starry purple sky, and is accompanied by a rousing rendition of "Don't Fence Me In." The program allows viewers to zone in on details in pictures and enlarge them. It includes images of items which are in the museum.

Also enjoying the children's museum was youngster Nancy McGee. She piled plastic vegetables — including carrots and cabbage — into a pot "to make stew" in the rustic "Nix Trading Post." Other youngsters played on the armadillo slide, climbed aboard a covered wagon or rode a wooden rocking horse.

Then it was back to class to take small squares of tissue paper and cup them into "flowers" to form a frame for the vegetable prints. After raiding the refrigerator for vegetables, it seemed fitting that the artwork would come full circle. "I know right where my picture is going when I get home," piped up one budding artist, "on my refrigerator."

The "short takes" veggie block printing course was designed for youngsters 3-5 years old. The next short takes course is "Windchime Flower Pots" on Wednesday, and "Egg Shell Jewels" on Monday.

"Kids' Kourses," for children age 6 to 9, and "Art Ventures" for youth 10 and older, are also offered in June and July. For more information call 682-2882.

SHOOTING: Weekend incident is case of mistaken identity door, went through the window, through the front passenger's head rest and struck Natividad in the upper right arm, Garcia said.

Natividad was treated and released at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center Sunday. No one else in the vehicle was injured.

Garcia said Alvarez told police in preliminary reports that he did not recognize Natividad and the two other teen-agers in the vehicle and began firing the weapon when he thought it was someone else.

No charges have been filed against Alvarez, but Garcia said police are continuing an investigation into the incident.

New law gives landowners power to sue for devaluation of property

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill giving Texas landowners the power to sue state and local governments over action that devalues their property was signed into law Monday by Gov. George W. Bush.

In remarks prepared for a ceremony at the Texas Farm Bureau headquarters in Waco, Bush said the bill recognizes the importance of private property and will discourage governments from taking action that reduces property values.

Saying more than 97 percent of land in the state is privately owned, Bush said, "These new laws say if you own land in Texas, you have certain rights and your government must respect those rights.

"These new laws will require government to consider the impact of its rules and regulations on private property before enacting those rules or regulations," the governor added.

The law will create legal grounds for lawsuits against state or local government for actions that restrict a person's use of private property and reduce the market value of the property by at least 25 percent.

It will require state agencies and local governments to assess whether potential action would reduce property values.

The measure came under fire from environmentalists and some lawmakers, who said the legislation was vague and that new lawsuits would cost the state and cities millions of dollars.

But the measure's sponsors — Rep. Susan Combs, R-Austin, and Sen. Teel Bivins, R-Amarillo — said such concerns were addressed by an amendment to the bill to disallow lawsuits for monetary awards. Also included was a provision to require property owners to pay the legal costs of all the parties if they sue and lose.

Under the law, landowners only can sue for relief from government regulations.

Also Monday, Bush signed two bills sponsored by Sen. David Sibley, R-Waco, which the lawmaker said should help improve the availability of doctors in rural and medically underserved areas.

One measure will provide financial grants to communities so they may offer incentives to attract primary care physicians to their areas. The second will create an additional 150 community-based primary care residency positions over the next five years.

"Plenty of primary care doctors are graduating from medical school," Sibley said. "The problem is that they are not practicing where they are most needed, in the inner city and in rural areas where some residents travel hours for a routine doctor visit."

Sheriff's deputy's program helps feed hungry

By Mark Smith
Houston Chronicle

BASTROP — When Deputy Eddie Matthews found that area farmers were continually mending fences and guarding their crops against wild hogs that tear up ranch and farmland, he saw a way to help them and feed the hungry at the same time.

So now, on his days off from the Bastrop County Sheriff's Department, Matthews is busy setting traps for the marauding packs of feral hogs. He's got a butchery willing to process hundreds of pounds of pork for distribution to four area food banks.

"If you are able to help other people, you should extend your hand," said Matthews, 30. "Every problem has a solution, and I thought this would be a good way to make sure needy people received food while also helping the farmers."

Jewell Hodges, who runs the food pantry in this Central Texas town, says the extra food will come in handy as workers try to feed about 45 needy families each month.

"It certainly will be welcome, as long as it passes inspection," she said. "If it's edible food, especially meat, we can well use it. Right now, we have to squeeze out of our budget money sufficient to buy hamburger at times to support the needs of hungry families."

Bastrop County Sheriff Fred Hoskins said he believes Matthews' program represents a proactive, innovative approach for law enforcement officers.

"It's an extracurricular activity he has taken part in because he has a heart for people," Hoskins said. "It changes the public's perception of a public servant." The program is known as "Hogs for the Hungry." Matthews said he hopes it will spread throughout Texas and possibly the nation. Recent agricultural studies have found that more than 2 million feral hogs scavenge across 23 states. The hogs can be found in 185 of Texas' 254 counties.

AP Laserphoto

Eddie Matthews, a Bastrop County sheriff's deputy, poses with wild hogs June 7 in Bastrop.

Feral hogs can destroy or damage thousands of acres of crops, authorities said. The agricultural damage is greatest among crops of hay, small grains, corn and peanuts. Damage also is reported in crops of watermelon, soybean and cotton, along with orchards and seedling trees.

The swine also damage fences and water tanks, while transmitting diseases such as swine brucellosis and pseudorabies to livestock, especially sheep and goats.

"They can plow up an area better than a plow," Matthews said. "They can do some real damage."

Matthews said he first began trapping wild swine two years ago after droves of hogs "pigged out" on 800 pounds of his corn in three nights.

He stayed out all night trying to catch the animals but was unsuccessful. But with his landlord's help, Matthews built wire and steel traps and began to place them throughout his leased 160 acres.

Using berry-flavored Jell-O and corn as bait, Matthews said he has captured some 200 hogs.

"They really like cherry, strawberry and raspberry Jell-O," Matthews said. "It gives them the smell of wild berries. When they can't find roots and grub worms they enter the traps. I think the smell of berries gives them the feeling of being safe."

The wild hogs, Matthews said, are very intelligent and wary of being trapped. In an effort to fool the swine, he allows the critters a few evening feasts of corn and Jell-O before springing the trap. At night, Matthews said the hogs will run in packs of 50 to 100.

"When they are running to their favorite feeding places they race to get there first," Matthews said.

Due to their active jaunts, Matthews said the hogs are devoid of the fat found in domestic swine.

"It's better than the pork you buy at the store," he said. "It's a whole lot leaner meat. I've barbecued the meat and it just fell of the bone."

The feral swine are believed to have been brought to the continental United States by Hernando DeSoto, a Spanish explorer in the early 16th century, according to a recent Texas Agricultural Extension Service report.

DeSoto brought 13 hogs from Cuba to Florida in 1549. The Cuban pigs are thought to be descendants of pigs brought to the New World by Columbus in his second voyage in 1493.

The wild swine are powerful and fierce. With tusks up to three inches long and full-grown boars weighing up to 400 pounds, the animals can be dangerous to trap and transport.

Although he has avoided injury, Matthews said he had a few "close calls" with the beasts known to charge dogs, even humans.

"I've seen them jump from ground level over a five-foot-high fence," Matthews said. "One did a broad jump over the trailer."

This week, Matthews said, the program hopes to distribute 600 to 800 pounds of pork to food banks in Bastrop, Elgin and Smithville.

"I'm trying to do something to help others and the solution is right in front of you," Matthews said. "If I can help one person it will be a success."

RESULTS: Ranch rodeo yields many winners from contests

Moore.

On the Triple Seven team were Tommy Salmon Jr., Kyle Hooper, Shawn Hooper, Mark Hicks and Richard Hicks.

Cowboys on the Scharbauer team were Ken Albus, Eric McCullough, Lex Crawford, David Schrader and Marvin Silva.

Lazy Z cowboys were Bobby Matthews, David Matthews, Holt Johnson, Braxton Glass and Mike Duncan.

Texas Ten cowboys were Tommy Greenwood, Button Greenwood, Russell Braly and Lonnie Williamson.

In the chuckwagon competition, the Cunningham chuckwagon team out of Hartley County in the Texas Panhandle won the high-point wagon competition and $350. The Cunningham chuckwagon came off of the old Matador Ranch.

Taking the first runnerup slot on the chuckwagon competition was the Powell Ranch chuckwagon out of Midland and Alpine. Second place paid $150.

The Cunningham chuckwagon team won the blue ribbon and $350 for staging the most-authentic campsite. Second place and $150 went to Slaton Ranch.

In the food competition, the Cunningham chuckwagon team placed first in meat cooking — chicken-fried steaks — to win $250. Camp cook was Sue Cunningham. Coming up in second place in cooking chicken-fried steaks was the Bird Ranch team, headed up by camp cook Nancy Lee. The prize was $125.

McDaniel said the food judging was by "blind competition" and was unbiased.

"Those cooks like that," McDaniel said. "There's no favoritism. These are not rookies. They are veterans."

Ralph Powell's Powell Ranch team cooked up the winning pot of beans and won $250. Camp cook was Skip Roads of Alpine. Nancy Lee of the Bird Ranch placed second in bean cooking to win $125.

The Bird Ranch and Nancy Lee took first place and $250 in camp-bread making. Placing second and taking home $125 was the Whitfield Cow Camp team out of Fort Davis.

In the peach-cobbler dessert competition, the Snyder-based Long Track Chuckwagon camp team, headed up by J.D. Barham, won first place and $250. Placing second was Slaton Ranch, which took home $125. Camp cook was Jerry Slaton.

"It was exceptional," Roush said of the chuckwagon competition. "It was as tight a competition that we have ever had" since the first Midland Ranch Rodeo was organized in 1988. There was no shoo-in."

Educators express concern over Internet monitoring

AUSTIN (AP) — How can a school ensure that the student who is so busy at the computer is working on a term paper, not reading messages in a discussion group called alt.erotica?

That's the question officials are grappling with in the age of Internet, the unregulated cooperative nonprofit network linking thousands of computers and computer users worldwide.

"That telecommunications superhighway is a wonderful resource," said Darla Allcorn, assistant superintendent for instruction in the Del Valle district. "The question is, how do you monitor a student's use of telecommunications?"

The diverse information available ranges from the text of historical documents and bills pending in Congress to photos shot by satellites zooming past Jupiter.

But once on the network, going from the Library of Congress to the Playboy magazine homepage might be might be as easy as a few keystrokes or clicks of the mouse.

Most school districts in the Austin area don't have a formal policy on Internet use by students.

Some say they can't offer enough access yet for it to be an issue. Others have limited on-line access, usually computers on which students can dial into the Internet under the supervision of staff members.

None of the districts has a written policy governing use, but officials say they realize the potential for trouble and are thinking about ways to avoid it.

In the Eanes school district, where all schools have computers that can be used to access the Internet, officials are discussing a proposed contract to be signed by students and employees who will have computer access.

In the Pflugerville school district, which has only limited Internet access, students have been allowed to use local computer networks under supervision of teachers and librarians.

In addition, a training session is designed to be attended by students and parents, with an eye to helping students make good choices when they have access to wider electronic resources.

Other school districts are thinking about what policies might be needed as access to the Internet is extended to more students.

But the restrictions raise questions of enforceability. One computer screen full of text loos pretty much the same as another from across the room, and moving from one area to another on the Internet can be accomplished in a matter of moments.

"There's no way you can hire a teacher to look over each student's shoulder," said Jeff Prescott, spokesman for the Austin school district.

"It's kind of like having a policy that says you can't wear polka-dot underwear. What's going to keep them from doing it?"

Ex-husband of lottery winner files lawsuit for part of money

HENDERSON (AP) — An East Texas man was stunned to learn that he had been married to a millionaire.

He only found out she was worth $4.3 million after their marriage was annulled.

Gifford Riney, who lives in Bullard, a town about 10 miles south of Tyler, has accused Hilda Stanley in a Rusk County lawsuit of fraud for concealing her winning Lotto Texas ticket.

The winning ticket was sold Oct. 8, but it went unclaimed for 137 days. There was speculation that whoever bought the ticket lost it, forgot about it or perhaps even threw it away, never realizing the good news.

Lottery officials in Austin made efforts to find the winner. No Texas lottery jackpot had gone unclaimed for 4 1/2 months.

It wasn't until late February that Ms. Stanley came forward to claim her prize under her maiden name and refused to allow lottery officials to use her picture for publicity.

Riney claims in his lawsuit that she did it in an attempt to hide her identity and her winnings from him.

He says he had a heart transplant and, in late October, went to Dallas for a checkup. When he returned, he said, she had left, taking the furniture with her. He said he didn't hear from her until three months later, when he was served with papers annuling their marriage.

It was 34 days after the annulment, the court papers say, that Ms. Stanley claimed the lottery jackpot in Austin.

Attorney pleads guilty to charges

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas defense attorney has pleaded guilty to income tax evasion and wire fraud and agreed to surrender his law license on the day he is sentenced.

Robert M. Rose, 45, entered his guilty plea on Jan. 25, but the plea was sealed. It was unsealed on Monday.

He faces up to 10 years in prison and a fine of up to $500,000. Rose said sentencing was set for August.

Rose pleaded guilty to one count of wire fraud in connection with a scheme to defraud American Airlines. According to papers filed in federal court, Rose bought and used an American Airlines ticket through the redemption of someone else's frequent flyer certificate.

He pleaded guilty to one count of income tax evasion in connection with earnings of Robert M. Rose Inc., of which he is president, director and sole shareholder. He was accused of underreporting the gross income of both himself and his corporation from 1989 through 1993.

Rose said he has provided "unbelievable representation" to the clients he has served between the time he pleaded guilty and Monday.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Turning your back on the past will help you achieve greater independence and recognition. Others admire your verbal skills. Speak up when you know a better way to do things. A promotion or special perk is featured in late November. As 1996 gets underway, focus on building a stronger financial base. Next spring brings fantastic family news or a second marriage. Someone you meet on vacation could help you land new business.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Richard Thomas, TV star Tim Allen, tennis player Bettina Bunge, Bulgarian artist Christo.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A former romantic partner could show up on your doorstep. Handsome returns from a wise investment could secure your financial future. Children are a source of special joy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Talks may bring certain hopes to fruition or convince you that you are on the wrong track. New information comes to light. A friend or business ally urges you to forge ahead. Act confident.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An excellent day for negotiations. You are able to reach a valuable understanding regarding a romance or investment. Avoid reacting emotionally.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Let go of the past in order to seek something better. Take care of any debts, legal fines or insurance premiums as they come due. Limit everyday spending while saving for a special purchase.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Instead of harking back to old grievances, learn to move on. Emphasize a graceful approach to life's inevitable disappointments. Avoid saying, "I told you so," even if you get the chance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do not believe everything you hear today. Financial matters will require special care as others may not follow through on their commitments. Do not despair!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You are lucky to have time to think things through. Although your love life is not falling apart, you should look for ways to promote better understanding. A small gift could do the trick!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You have a knack for catching the attention of influential people. Experimental ideas can work if they are grounded in reality. Lasting romance could depend on your financial independence.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): To make a gathering a success, stress quality over quantity when drawing up the guest list. Invite some people who like to listen as well as talk! Discuss new tax deductions with an accountant.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): All of your energies are moving you into a more active and dynamic period. Show greater initiative on the job. Self-starters will be rewarded. Zoom forward on all fronts. Great adventures lie ahead!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You will need to settle your differences with an independent partner in the days ahead. Also slated for your attention -- legal and financial issues. You may have to put romance on hold for now.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Yesterday's tide has turned; everything seems to be going your way! If asked for advice or an opinion, resist the urge to deliver a lecture. Embrace a diet that is rich in fruits and vegetables.

Some falsecards have an obvious objective. Others are designed solely to confuse the issue, without knowing exactly how they will affect the play.

On this deal from a team match, both North-South pairs were pushed to five hearts on similar sequences. East tried to steal the hand with a preempt of four clubs, but South was too strong distributionally to be shut out of the auction.

At both tables West led the king of clubs and continued the suit for declarer to ruff. A low spade was led toward the jack.

At one table West put up the queen of spades to win the trick, then shifted to the king of diamonds, taken by the ace. Declarer came to hand with the queen of trumps, cashed the king and led the king of spades, running it when West followed with the four. When that won, declarer drew the remaining trump then continued with ruffing finesses in spades to pick up the ace. Declarer still had a trump left with which to come to hand to cash the good spades.

At the other table West realized that playing the queen of spades on the first lead of the suit would expose the ace to a ruffing finesse, so the defender elected to falsecard by winning with the ace! The king of diamonds was taken by the ace, declarer entered the closed hand with a high trump, cashed the king of spades and led the ten. When West followed low, declarer ruffed, expecting to fetch East's queen.

Unruffled by East's surprising discard of a club, declarer returned to hand with the king of hearts as East again showed out, then ruffed out the queen of spades. Now dummy had nothing left but diamonds, and when declarer tried to cross to hand to draw the last trump by ruffing a diamond, West overruffed for down one.

Rumors fly about Lisa Marie being pregnant with Gloved One's baby

LOS ANGELES — Is the Gloved One about to become a father? Is there a grandchild on the way for The King?

Until now, spokesmen for Michael Jackson have repeatedly denied rumors that Lisa Marie Presley-Jackson, Elvis Presley's daughter, is pregnant with Jackson's child.

Is Michael Jackson about to become a father?

But all of a sudden, publicist Lee Solters is offering a different response.

"I won't say yes, I won't say no. Time will tell," he said Monday when asked about a report in the Daily Mirror of London.

Solters said he doesn't know if the Jacksons, married in May 1994 in the Dominican Republic, are planning a baby announcement during an interview Wednesday on "PrimeTime Live."

LAS VEGAS — Mama made them do it, casino executive Steve Wynn says of his new venture with movie moguls Steven Spielberg and Jeffrey Katzenberg.

The three are partners in a new $15 million submarine-shaped sandwich shop called the Dive. Screens flash old movie clips, and cartoon-like submarines travel a track above the restaurant floor.

"Our mothers told us we should have something to fall back on in case the movie industry or gaming went bust," Wynn joked before Sunday's gala opening.

The more than 500 guests at the $200-a-head benefit included Goldie Hawn, Kurt Russell, Janet Jackson and Tony Danza.The opening benefited the RP Foundation Fighting Blindness; Wynn suffers from RP, or retinitis pigmentosa.

NEW YORK — Paul Reiser doesn't think he'd learn much if God were to let him be a woman for 48 hours.

"See, here's how self-absorbed I am," the star of TV's "Mad About You" said in an interview in the July issue of Elle magazine. "I think if I were a woman, I'd go out with myself. I'd go out with me as a guy, so that I could just really defend my case and go: 'I don't know — he seems like a pretty good guy to me.'"

JERUSALEM — Nothing is sacred to photographers pursuing Diana Ross.

She cut short her visit Monday to the Western Wall, the only remnant of the Jewish Temple destroyed in 70 A.D., because of the crush of male photographers and fans who followed her to a section reserved for women.

She had written a note to place in the wall, where visitors traditionally leave prayers and wishes, but said she decided against leaving it because "someone will take it out of there."

The singer visited Israel to perform at the opening of the Hapoel Games, an international sporting event held every four years.

She is accompanied by her ex-husband, Robert Silberstein, and their 22-year-old daughter Tracy. Ms. Ross said she wants her daughter to explore her Jewish roots.

NEW YORK — Do only the little people perform community service?

Former hotel queen Leona Helmsley, who allegedly once said that "only the little people pay taxes," is accused of ordering her employees to handle the community service that was part of her tax evasion sentence.

Helmsley, 74, instructed domestic workers at her home in Paradise Valley, Ariz., to do chores such as wrapping gifts for patients at a hospital and stuffing thousands of envelopes for a charity drive, the Daily News reported Monday, quoting unidentified sources.

One employee told the News that the hired help would "sit around our staff dining table like field hands shucking peas. But instead of shucking, we were wrapping presents in between our regular duties."

Helmsley, who previously denied making the "little people" comment, was not in her office Monday, said a woman who answered the phone and would not give her name.

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — Whoopi Goldberg paid more than $1 million for a sprawling ranch near this coastal town.

That's about an eighth of what she earned for starring in "Sister Act 2: Back in the Habit," the movie that her the highest-paid female star of 1993.

The ranch has a four-bedroom adobe house, a two-bedroom guest house and a caretaker's cottage, the Los Angeles Times reported Sunday.

Goldberg stars with Gerard Depardieu in the comedy "Bogus," due out in the fall. She won an Academy Award for best supporting actress for her 1990 performance in "Ghost."

Benefit's second year more successful than first

By Elizabeth Edwin Lifestyle Editor

A light breeze blew a "Beach Ball Blast" to Midland Racquet Club Friday evening as Permian Basin residents made their way to the second annual benefit for Hillcrest School.

The event was estimated to have grossed over $30,000 this year, which is up from the proceeds collected the first year of the benefit, according to Betty Starnes, executive director of Hillcrest School.

The casual affair, themed "A Night at the Beach," featured the standard dinner, cocktails and dancing, but went a little further with the fun by offering a horseshoe throwing contest complete with trophies for the winners, water volleyball following dinner for those who wanted to participate, "Beach Ball Blast" T-shirts for sale and an occasional impromptu beach ball toss between guest as the beach balls which decorated Racquet Club blew past.

The evening started at 7:30 p.m. with guests greeted at the entrance with plastic leis. Mingling, perusing the over 50 Silent Auction items and enjoying Pina Coladas, pineapple drinks (actually served in cut pineapples), and open bar began the evening. Many guests stopped by the pool to watch to inflatable dolphins "dance" in the water as the breeze moved them around.

Music was performed by the well-known Midland band, the Pulsations, and soon guests were dancing.

A "beach style" dinner of hamburgers with all the fixings, barbecue beans, potato salad, cole slaw, potato chips and assorted desserts was served on disposable plates with plastic silverware, just like a picnic.

The tables, set under the trees of Racquet Club, were decorated in keeping with the beach theme. "Big Kahuna" sponsor tables were adorned with treasure chests spilling treasures, a gesture to show sponsors how much their support is treasured by Hillcrest School. Other tables featured inner tubes, buckets filled with sand, sun glasses, visors, wine bottles with candles and plastics leis. Some tables also featured live gold fish in large fish bowls. All tables had sand sprinkled about, causing several guests to announce their wishes to be on a real beach.

Approximately 250 people made paid reservations for the $75 a couple event, according to Julie LeMond, publicity chairman for the event.

"This second year has been fabulous. The retail merchants were so generous. Like Best Buy hasn't even been in Midland for a year and they gave us a color TV for the silent auction. Of course all our old, standard merchants who have helped every other benefit in town as well, still were big supporters too," Ms. LeMond said. "All of their support is so appreciated."

While the economy is still tight, Ms. LeMond said the volunteers who solicited items for the silent auction, as well as sponsorships for the event, didn't feel the pinch.

"Everyone was so generous and supportive," she said. "I have a child in the school (Hillcrest) and it has helped so much. Going to Hillcrest has brought life back into my child. I just can't say enough about how wonderful Betty and her staff are."

All the proceeds from the evening will benefit the Hillcrest School, which is a non-profit private school serving dyslexic and attention deficit disordered children in kindergarten through ninth grade. The school serves students from Andrews, Greenwood, Monahans, Odessa and Midland.

Following dinner, guests danced on the lawn of Racquet Club on a make-shift dance floor outlined by beach balls. The Pulsations kept the music coming and even joined in the theme of the evening playing the Beach Boys tune "Surfin' U.S.A."

The Silent Auction closed about 10:30 p.m. and winning bidders claimed their items, but the party was far from over. Horseshoe toss winners were awarded their trophies and dancing continued.

Although the total amount earned wasn't in, Ms. Starnes said she knew the benefit made more proceeds this year than last and she was excited about the support from the community.

Hillcrest School students and staff just completed their first year at their new facility located at 2110 W. Wall. Anyone wanting more information about the school can call 570-7444.

Co-chairmen for Beach Ball Blast were Lyn Dulaney and Melinda Lea. Other committee members were Beverly Conine, treasurer; Courtney Renaud, invitations; Lisa and Steve Sell, sponsors; Ms. LeMond, silent auction and publicity; Kathy Robbins and Connie Glasscock, T-shirts; Kathy Wurster, decorations; Kelly Cunningham, entertainment; and Melinda Williamson, food and facilities.

Ms. Starnes is executive director of Hillcrest School. Lyn White-Giesler is development director.

Board of directors are Wayne Kinsey, Rubilee Noble, Scott Sheffield, Ms. Starnes and Ms. White-Giesler. Honorary board of directors are John Mabee, Dr. Gary Madden, Paul Lerwick and Jim Reese.

CWS Madness

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — While many major league teams struggle at the box office office following the 7 1/2-mont strike, the College World Series set another attendance record this year.

The tournament drew 182,759 fans to 10 sessions at Rosenblatt Stadium, an average of 18,276. Saturday's championship game drew a single-game record of 22,027.

"I suspect it will be a while before we have to think about expanding the stadium," said Jack Diesing Jr., president of the College World Series of Omaha

Stadium capacity is listed as 21,430 and 85 percent of the seats for the tournament were sold.

Mission impossible

HOUSTON (AP) — NASA has rejected the Houston Rockets' request to unveil new uniforms from aboard shuttle Atlantis during its upcoming docking with the Russian space station, officials said Monday.

Johnson Space Center spokeswoman Billie Deason said the club asked about the possibility last Friday.

The Rockets will announce their new colors and logo during the June 28 NBA draft. Atlantis, set to be launched in less than two weeks, should be docked with space station Mir by then if all goes as planned.

Deason said the team came up with the idea much too late to be considered, but the Rockets would have been rejected even if they had asked sooner.

"We can't participate in the way they want," she said Monday. "It's not appropriate, and as federal employees we cannot endorse a product or service."

Upset Crowd

ROME (AP) — Fans of the Lazio soccer club smashed windows, overturned trash cans and hurled smoke bombs Monday after reports of plans to sell World Cup forward Giuseppe Signori to rival Parma.

About 1,000 Lazio supporters earlier gathered outside the team's Rome headquarters, chanting slogans against the club's major shareholder and throwing coins and tomatoes toward the building.

The club president, Dino Zoff, finally announced Signori would remain with the club.

U.S. Open Odds

LONDON (AP) — Ladbrokes, the British bookmaker, can't find a strong American contender to win the U.S. Open golf title this week. Mark Calcavecchia, a 20-1 shot, was the highest rated American and he was behind five others when the betting list was announced Monday.

Australia's Greg Norman, who has never won the event, is the 9-1 favorite ahead of Britain's Nick Faldo and Nick Price of Zimbabwe, the current U.S. PGA and British Open titlist, who are 11-1.

Then come defending titlist Ernie Els of South Africa and Bernard Langer of Germany, both 12-1 shots in the tournament that begins at win at Shinnecock Hills, in Southampton, N.Y. on Thursday.

NBA FINALS

Orlando Magic point guard Anfernee Hardaway scratches his head during Game 3 of the NBA Finals. The Magic are down 3-0 in its series with the Houston Rockets going into Wednesday's Game 4 to be played at the Summit in Houston.

Where is Orlando's Magic?

■ Orlando finding it can do nothing right in series with Houston after relatively flawless Eastern Conference swing.

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Until the NBA Finals, the exuberant Orlando Magic stared pressure in the face and laughed. They were young and in the NBA playoffs and having a wonderful time.

The gaping grin and hulking presence of Shaquille O'Neal was everywhere. Nick Anderson and Anfernee Hardaway were slinging in big shots and saying "why not now?"

Now they're one game from elimination and asking themselves "what happened?" Suddenly, they're the guys who can't shoot straight.

"It's very hard on us and frustrating because you know you're better than you've played so far," Hardaway said. "You want to go out and win a game and show that you deserve to be here.

"It's almost like all the games that we've won to get here are going down the drain if we don't come back and win."

The Magic is down to its final chance to get back in the series on Wednesday night in The Summit, and the tone in O'Neal's voice prior to Monday's practice didn't carry much confidence.

"They've just been playing big and shooting the ball well," O'Neal said, his voice low and barely audible. "I think we'll come out fired up."

The Magic has been marketed as the team of the future, expected to become a fixture in the NBA Finals.

John Gabriel, Magic vice president of basketball operations, wants the Magic to understand it may not be that easy.

"There are no guarantees on making it to the NBA Finals," he said. "We have to treat it as a special event. Do they understand? I don't know. It's something we've tried to make them understand, how special it is."

Blame it on their youth or a Rockets team that has improved throughout the playoffs. It doesn't matter to the Magic. They're still down 3-0 and not playing well and can't figure out why.

"The shots I've been missing in the Finals, I've been making all season," Anderson said. "I have to ask myself, 'why now?' To think of all the work I did to get to this level. I was doing so well. Now nothing is working."

The Magic hasn't shown the flash of earlier playoff series.

Although they eventually lost, the Magic coolly dueled Indiana over an incredible 13.3 second span in which the lead changed four times before Rik Smits hit a basket at the buzzer for a 94-93 victory in Game 4 of the Eastern Conference finals.

When the Eastern Conference series was on the line in Game 7, the Magic refused to show their inexperience and bombed the Pacers 105-81, advancing to the NBA Finals for the first time,

But now their 3-point shooting is down. Anderson hit 41.5 percent of his 3-pointers in the regular season but only

Gonzalez, West-leading Rangers still smoking

■ Juan Gonzalez' third home run in as many days and another solid performance by Roger Pavlik keep Texas rolling.

By Arnie Stapleton
AP Sports Writer

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Juan Gonzalez hit his third homer in three games and Roger Pavlik won his fourth straight decision as the Texas Rangers beat Milwaukee 4-2 Monday night for their sixth consecutive victory.

Gonzalez, who missed the Rangers' first 35 games with a bad back, sent a pitch from knuckleballer Steve Sparks 407 feet down the left-field line for his third homer of the year and a 1-0 lead in the second inning.

It was Gonzalez's second consecutive home run. He hit a two-run shot in the eighth inning off Jose DeLeon on Sunday night in Arlington, sending the Rangers past the Chicago White Sox 3-2.

Big 12 to decide on big issues

■ Revenue-sharing tops the list of concerns that schools' presidents will discuss today in Austin.

AUSTIN (AP) — Big 12 presidents are set to meet here Tuesday to decide a variety of transition issues, the most significant being a revenue-sharing plan that includes a football playoff.

The presidents, who have final approval on all major issues, will consider proposals approved last month by the league's athletic directors and faculty representatives.

Besides the revenue-sharing plan, other topics to be discussed include academic eligibility requirements and where the new league will locate its offices.

The Big 12, comprised of the Big Eight plus Southwest Conference holdovers Texas, Texas A&M, Texas Tech and Baylor, plans to begin competition in August 1996.

However, before play begins, the issue of money must be tackled.

The revenue-sharing proposal would let football powers to keep their gate receipts and reward schools for first-year NCAA basketball tournament appearances.

As much as $40 million in gross revenue is anticipated for the conference annually, including about $6 million from a football playoff between the Big 12 North and South division champions.

Preliminary reports by Steve Hatchell, who becomes commissioner of the league July 1, show a playoff could generate $500,000 to $550,000 per school.

Athletic directors and league presidents like those numbers.

But all 12 football coaches oppose a playoff and believe it could knock a team out of a major bowl or a national championship game. They contend that as much or more money could be raised getting a second team into the major bowls each year.

On academic eligibility, the presidents must decide whether the conference shall accept partial qualifiers.

Partial qualifiers are student athletes who do not meet grade-point average requirements but have a high enough standardized test score, or vice versa.

Currently, Big Eight schools can make their own decision on accepting partial qualifiers. The four Texas schools do not accept partial qualifiers.

Big 12 presidents also are expected to discuss the location of the conference headquarters. The Big Eight offices are located in Kansas City, while the Southwest Conference is based in Dallas.

Devils remember past, hope not to repeat it

New Jersey goaltender Martin Brodeur smiles as he skates off the ice in the Devils 3-2 victory over the Flyers Sunday.

■ Last year's series with the New York Rangers haunting reminder of what can happen with 3-2 lead.

By Tom Canavan
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Being a game away from the Stanley Cup final — and having to win one of two games to get there — isn't anything new for the New Jersey Devils.

They were in the same spot a year ago and fell victim when Mark Messier delivered in rallying the New York Rangers.

In case you've forgotten, Messier guaranteed a win in Game 6 at the Meadowlands Arena last year and scored three times to lead the Rangers to a 4-2 victory. New York went on to win Game 7 in double overtime en route to capturing its first Cup in 54 years.

Now, it's the Philadelphia Flyers who need to win Game 6 on the road Tuesday or else it will be the Devils and Detroit Red Wings meeting in the Stanley Cup final, starting on Saturday.

"Maybe (Eric) Lindros will," Devils goaltender Martin Brodeur quipped Monday when asked if he expected anyone on the Flyers to guarantee a win this year.

Flyers goalie Ron Hextall didn't deliver a guarantee, but said the team will be confident heading up the New Jersey Turnpike.

"There isn't anyone in here who thinks we're not going to win tomorrow," Hextall said after the Flyers practiced at their facility in Voorhees. "We have to go up and play an intelligent game. We have to be patient which I don't think will be a problem up there, and we all have to play better."

To a man, the Devils want to play a full 60 minutes in Game 6 this year. Last year, they played a little less than 40. They took a 2-0 lead and then watched in awe as Messier skated circles around them in the third period.

Mantle begins recovery process

■ Mantle's doctor hopes baseball star will spread word about donor necessity.

By Mark Babineck
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — Since he was a rookie with the New York Yankees, countless fans have asked Mickey Mantle for his autograph. His doctor wanted a different kind of endorsement.

"He (Mantle) said that when this all over and done, he told me I could ask him for anything I wanted. He would do anything I wanted to do," said Dr. Goran Klintmalm. "I did not ask him for an autograph.

"I asked him to help us spread the word about the awareness of donor necessity and he said he would be very committed to help," he said.

Mantle celebrated his first day out of intensive care Sunday by walking for the first time — from the bed in his Baylor University Medical Center room to a chair.

The steps, along with treatments to keep fluid from building in his lungs, are the initial part of an extensive physical therapy program Mantle will undertake after receiving a transplanted liver Thursday.

Mantle's condition has been improving, Klintmalm said today, adding that Mantle should be well enough to start eating solid foods this week. He has already ingested liquids.

"What people like Mickey can do is cut across age groups, gender and race," Klintmalm said. "The public and the media aren't interested in what I have to say and I don't blame you. When people like him make a public statement, people listen."

Klintmalm, the medical director of the Baylor Transplantation Institute, said "anything can happen," but Mantle's ear-

Red Wings resilient all the way to finals

■ Detroit's win over Chicago will put the Red Wings into the finals for the first time in 29 years.

DETROIT (AP) — It seems to be the nature of playoff hockey that the best team doesn't always win. Just ask the Detroit Red Wings, who took a number of pratfalls before this year.

The reason is goaltending. A hot goalie can dominate a best-of-7 series, perhaps more than any other athlete in any other sport.

Remember the 1994 playoffs? A virtual unknown named Arturs Irbe had a goals-against average of 3.81. Yet he was able to tie the Red Wings in knots when it counted and the upstart San Jose Sharks eliminated Detroit 4-3 in the first round.

The spectacular play of Chicago goaltender Ed Belfour in Game 5 of the Western Conference finals Sunday night must have given the Red Wings flashbacks.

Detroit won the game and the series on Vyacheslav Kozlov's goal at 2:25 of the second overtime. But it took a superb play to finally end the excitement.

"That was the best goaltending we have seen all year, and we knew it was going to have to be a special kind of shot to beat him," Detroit coach Scotty Bowman said. "Both goaltenders were excellent."

The Red Wings were head and shoulders above the rest of the NHL during the abbreviated season. They finished 33-11-4, then breezed through the first two rounds of the playoffs against Dallas and San Jose.

Chicago, at least on paper, didn't appear to pose much of a threat, either. After all, the Red Wings were 4-1 against the Blackhawks during the season.

But the playoffs are different, and Belfour made a difference.

"Eddie played well," Chicago coach Darryl Sutter said. "I mean, the whole team did. What more can you ask? He gave us the chance to go to the Stanley Cup finals. We couldn't get by the Detroit Red Wings."

Every time the Red Wings thought they had Belfour down, he got back up. Every time they tried to break his heart, Belfour proved he was tougher than they thought. There were three overtimes games in the series, and one that was decided on a goal with 1:45 remaining.

Although they won the series in five games, the Red Wings led for only about 16 minutes.

"It's amazing," Bowman said. "I can't ever remember a series where we won after being in the lead for such a small amount of time."

The final goal count was Detroit 13, Chicago 12, despite the fact that Detroit outshot the Blackhawks 183-113. In Game 5, Detroit had a 47-26 shot advantage, 20-2 in the second period alone. That is clearly how important a goalie can be in the playoffs.

It took a remarkable play by two of Detroit's best players to finally end it. Kozlov took a pass from Seregi Fedorov, flew past Chicago defenseman Chris Chelios, then zoomed in on Belfour.

It was a memorable scene. The superb Belfour was crouched and ready. The smooth-skating Russian slammed on the breaks, tried to get Belfour to bite on a fake, then wristed the puck between the goalie's pads.

"I don't know what it looked like from the stands, but that was a war," Detroit defenseman Paul Coffey said. "There was a lot of belting and welting going on."

Jubilation filled Joe Louis Arena as years of frustration began to wash away. The Red Wings haven't won the Stanley Cup championship in 40 years, the longest dry spell in the NHL. Detroit last appeared in the finals in 1966 when the Red Wings were defeated by the Montreal Canadiens.

To their credit, the Detroit players seem to know the job isn't over. While they await the outcome of the Eastern Conference finals, where the New Jersey Devils have a 3-2 lead over the Philadelphia Flyers, the Red Wings keep reminding themselves that there is work to be done.

The Red Wings' Stu Grimson swings an octopus after Detroit's 2-1 win over Chicago.

In the Detroit dressing room, there is a photo of the 1955 team, the last Red Wings club to win the Stanley Cup championship. It serves as a reminder.

"We aren't getting too happy, because we've only gotten to the final stage," forward Shawn Burr said. "We put that picture up on the wall at the beginning of the season, and that's been our goal the whole time. We aren't done yet."

There's one more goalie to go.

ods in the playoffs in Game 6 (last year) but just didn't come through," said Claude Lemieux, whose long shot from the right point in the final minute gave New Jersey a 3-2 win Sunday and a 3-2 lead in the best-of-7 series. "We might have lost focus for a while and started to think too far ahead. We made a few mistakes and paid a big price for it."

Brodeur said last year's failure was a learning experience

"I think we gained a lot of experience," he said. "We were really in control of Game 6 last year and blew it. That's what happened. I hope we'll be able to deal with the emotion a little better if we get the lead."

Devils coach Jacques Lemaire didn't even bring up Game 6 of last year in meeting with his troops on Monday.

"To me it's past, it's over," he said. "We're in the playoffs. We're in the conference final, we're leading. We've got to keep going."

The only message Lemaire gave his team was it still had to win one more game to play for the Cup.

The only problem is winning at home has been impossible this series. The home team has lost each of the five games.

"At home, the players have all the people telling them how good they are and that they'll win and go to the final. They're talking about the next series, which is wrong," Lemaire said. "The thing is you have to focus on one game. We've been doing that on the road a lot more than in New Jersey."

Center Bobby Holik seemed the most confident among the Devils players heading home.

"I'm very confident because there is no way we're going to lose three home games in a row," he said. "I feel that way because this team has enough character that we're not going to lose three home games in a row."

When asked if that was a guarantee, Holik backed off.

"I'm not guaranteeing anything," he said. "My feeling is this team has enough character to win tomorrow."

If they don't, the Devils will be in familiar water.

MAGIC: Orlando down 3-0 to Rockets

(From 1C)

33.3 percent in three games against the Rockets.

Dennis Scott was the Magic's best 3-point shooter in the regular season, hitting 42.6 percent but he's managed only a 21.6 average against the Rockets.

If the Magic's shooting eye doesn't return in Game 4, coach Brian Hill may consider matching Houston's small lineup with Anthony Bowie and Donald Royal to get more penetration.

But Hill doesn't know how to draw it up on the chalk board other than the way the game unfolded.

"Penetration is something we'd like more of but when I broke down the tapes we got some great looks at the basket last night," Hill said. "I told the team, 'we got all the shots we wanted, exactly what we were looking for.

"We just have to hope that when they don't go down then you have to get some type of penetration.

"We may have to see more of Bowie and Royal to get us out and running and slashing to basket if we're ineffective shooting the ball."

Hill is looking for anything to light a spark in the Magic offense. Running and slashing could be the answer.

"It helps everybody," Hill said. "It gets Penny aggressive and pushing the ball and looking for opportunities to get to the basket in transition. It gets Nick out on the wings and Anthony Bowie as a runner on the wings."

his team-leading sixth, gave the Brewers a 2-1 lead in the bottom of the second inning.

But Mark McLemore and Rusty Greer had consecutive sacrifice flies in the third to put Texas on top 3-2. The Rangers, who have won 10 of 12 games, scored their final run in the ninth on Dave Valle's RBI single.

Pavlik (4-1) scattered five hits, walked two and struck out six in 6 1-3 innings. Matt Whiteside pitched the eighth and Jeff Russell got the last three outs for his eighth save.

Wells four-hitter paces Tigers over Yankees

DETROIT (AP) — David Wells held New York hitless for 5 2-3 innings before finishing with a four-hitter in 8 2-3 innings in Detroit's 6-1 victory Monday night, the Yankees' 16th loss in 20 games.

Wells (3-3), the subject of trade rumors between the Tigers and Yankees, walked five and struck out seven in throwing 157 pitches. Juan Samuel homered for the third time in as many games.

Danny Tartabull's two-out single to right field in the sixth ended Wells' no-hit bid. The Yankees have lost 11 of 12 road games.

New York starter Andy Pettitte (1-3) gave up 10 hits and four earned runs in 4 2-3 innings.

Indians 4, Orioles 3

CLEVELAND — Wayne Kirby filled in for slumping Manny Ramirez with a triple, single and the go-ahead RBI as Cleveland improved the best record in baseball to 31-11 — also representing the best start in team history.

Eddie Murray doubled twice and drove in a run, and Kenny Lofton had three hits for the Indians, who have won nine of 10 games.

Murray's hits left him 14 away from 3,000 in his career, a milestone achieved by 19 other players.

Charles Nagy (4-2) gave up three runs, two of them unearned, and five hits in seven innings, and Jose Mesa earned his 15th save in 15 tries.

Kevin Brown (5-4) lost for the third time in four starts.

Blue Jays 4, Red Sox 3, 12 innings

TORONTO — Alex Gonzalez's bases-loaded single with two outs in the bottom of the 12th inning moved Toronto out of last place in the AL East.

Joe Carter led off with a double before Ken Ryan (0-2) intentionally walked John Olerud. Ed Sprague sacrificed the runners to second and third, and Shawn Green was intentionally walked, loading the bases.

Mike Timlin (3-0) pitched three innings of one-hit ball for the win.

Angels 9, Twins 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Tim Salmon, Chili Davis and Gary DiSarcina drove in two runs apiece as the California beat Minnesota Monday night, plunging the Twins 20 games off the pace in the AL Central.

Chuck Finley, the only player remaining from the Angels' last division championship team in 1986, recorded his 103rd career victory and passed Frank Tanana as the winningest left-hander in club history. Finley (4-5) pitched his first two seasons in relief before he was converted into a full-time starter in 1988.

Athletics 1, White Sox 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Steve Ontiveros, who needed a massage on the mound for neck spasms in the first inning, allowed five hits in seven innings as the Oakland Athletics blanked Chicago Monday night.

Rickey Henderson's RBI single in the third brought home the only run as the A's won their third straight and sent the White Sox to their fourth consecutive loss.

Reds thump Rockies 11-6

DENVER (AP) — Ron Gant hit two home runs and drove in four runs as the Cincinnati Reds beat the Colorado Rockies 11-6 Monday night for their fifth straight win and ninth in 10 games.

Gant hit his 13th and 14th home runs to tie Colorado's Larry Walker, who also homered, for the National League lead.

The Reds jumped on Marvin Freeman (2-3) for two runs in the second and two more in the third, and Gant's three-run shot in the fifth off reliever Lance Painter made it 7-2.

Gant added a solo home run in the ninth off Omar Olivares.

Reggie Sanders added four hits for the Reds, including a pair of doubles, and Kevin Jarvis (3-3) went six innings, allowing six hits and three runs.

Colorado's Dante Bichette extended his hitting streak to a club-record 18 games, matching the streak by Oakland's Mark McGwire as the longest in the majors this season.

ly recovery is going to plan.

The next phase of Mantle's recovery is fighting off a "60 to 65 percent risk" that his body will attempt to reject the new organ. Only 1.7 percent of liver transplant patients must get another liver because of rejection complications, he added.

Rejection will become more of a concern in the middle of the week, and the chance of Mantle's system rejecting his liver will remain a concern for seven weeks afterward.

Klintmalm added that rejection can be combated by drugs, antibiotics and steroids.

Mantle was spending the weekend watching baseball games on television, said Klintmalm.

Current therapy is designed to ensure that Mantle's lungs expel fluid to prevent pneumonia.

"His liver is still recovering. It was taken from a nice, warm environment and placed in 4-degree centigrade ice. Neither you nor I would like that, either," Klintmalm said.

Decades of alcohol abuse had taken a devastating toll on Mantle's liver. Cirrhosis was followed by a malignant tumor that blocked his bile duct, which forced the transplant.

A dormant case of hepatitis C, possibly a result of a blood transfusion during one of the operations on his injury-tattered legs during his playing career, was also found.

NBA lockout could be eminent

■ Lockout would start during offseason and would have no effect on expansion and collegiate drafts.

HOUSTON (AP) — The NBA's threat of a lockout sent the league and its players union back to the bargaining table Monday to discuss a long-delayed labor deal.

Simon Gourdine, executive director of the players association, said Monday evening that he and union president Buck Williams were meeting with NBA commissioner David Stern and his deputy, Russ Granik.

The first meaningful talks in more than three weeks followed published reports that the league would lock out its players immediately following the NBA Finals if a new collective bargaining agreement wasn't reached by then. The Houston Rockets lead the best-of-7 series 3-0 and can complete a sweep of the Orlando Magic on Wednesday night.

This season the league has been operating under a no-strike, no-lockout agreement with the union, but that pact expires at the end of the playoffs. The NBA and its players have been without a labor deal since the end of the 1994 playoffs.

As his team was preparing for Wednesday's Game 4, in which the Rockets can wrap up their second consecutive title, Hakeem Olajuwon greeted the news of a possible lockout with disappointment.

"In that situation, everybody loses," he said. "The way the NBA is today, it would not be a benefitting factor for the owners or the players. That's not a solution. Locking out players, everyone loses that way. It doesn't make any practical sense."

Kenny Smith, the players' representative for the Rockets, on Monday said a lockout threat would be meaningful only if games were in jeopardy.

"No one gets paid in June, no one plays in June. So if we're locked out in June, it doesn't do anything. Everyone's in the Bahamas or Acapulco or wherever, playing golf," he said. "If you want to make a point, lock us out tonight."

The no-strike, no-lockout agreement was intended to give both sides time to negotiate a new collective bargaining agreement. However, more than seven months have passed during which sporadic negotiations have been held but no deal reached.

The players are seeking revenues from a greater number of sources, such as international licensing and arena revenue, and a larger share of total revenues. Under the current system, players get 53 percent, and owners say any increase would cut too deeply into their profits.

The increase in revenue share the players are seeking would effectively raise the salary cap from the current $15.9 million to more than $20 million.

The owners want to close loopholes in the cap, including one that allows teams to re-sign their own free agents without cap limitations. The players, however, are staunchly opposed.

No big names on Celtics' vacant coaching list

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP) — On the Boston Celtics 28th day without a coach, the question is obvious: Doesn't anybody want the job with the most successful franchise in NBA history?

M.L. Carr, charged with rebuilding the now crumbling club, insists there are eager candidates. But there are no marquee names among them and no one who has turned around a sinking pro team.

"When you have (players) who have been a part of championship teams and they're still a part of it, everyone would tell you, 'gee, I'd like to coach a team at that point,' " Carr, the Celtics director of basketball operations, said Monday.

"This is a rebuilding process. But you know something? There are people that would like to have this job."

Don Chaney, Dave Cowens and Mike Jarvis are among those interested in leading a team that holds league records of 16 titles and a .628 winning percentage.

Cowens, San Antonio's assistant coach, met with Carr for a second time Monday. In the afternoon, Carr placed phone calls to Chaney, the former Detroit Pistons coach, and Jarvis, the current George Washington coach. He had extensive interviews with both earlier.

One other name has cropped up: M.L. Carr.

"I have never declared myself as a candidate for this position," he said, "and I've never said I'm not a candidate. ... I'm just saying we're going to find the right person to coach this team."

The job opened when Chris Ford was fired May 17 after Boston was eliminated in the opening playoff round. He had the job for five seasons.

Whoever gets it will need good young players as a foundation for a team with very few of them.

On Monday, the Celtics continued workouts for players who might be available for their pick (14th) in the June 28 draft. Kurt Thomas of Texas Christian, Michael Finley of Wisconsin and Brent Barry of Oregon State brought the number attending auditions to 10. More are scheduled for next week.

"We can't afford to make a mistake," Carr said.

Chaney, fired after two non-playoff seasons with the Pistons, was Boston's first-round draft pick in 1968. Cowens held that spot two years later. They were teammates for eight seasons. In 1978-79, Chaney played under Cowens, who became player-coach after the Celtics started with a 2-12 record under Tom Sanders. The Celtics were 27-41 in Cowens' only season as their coach.

Paul Silas' name emerged early in the process, but the former New Jersey assistant took a similar job at Phoenix.

Carr said he hoped to have a new coach by the end of the week, although his hard deadline is draft day.

He wouldn't rule out additional candidates but said, "I'm obviously not out actively shopping at this point."

He characterized Cowens as "a fiery person" and Chaney as "an excellent communicator." Both know the organization because of their experience as players, he said.

Jarvis has local ties. He coached Patrick Ewing at Cambridge Rindge & Latin High School before taking over as coach at Boston University.

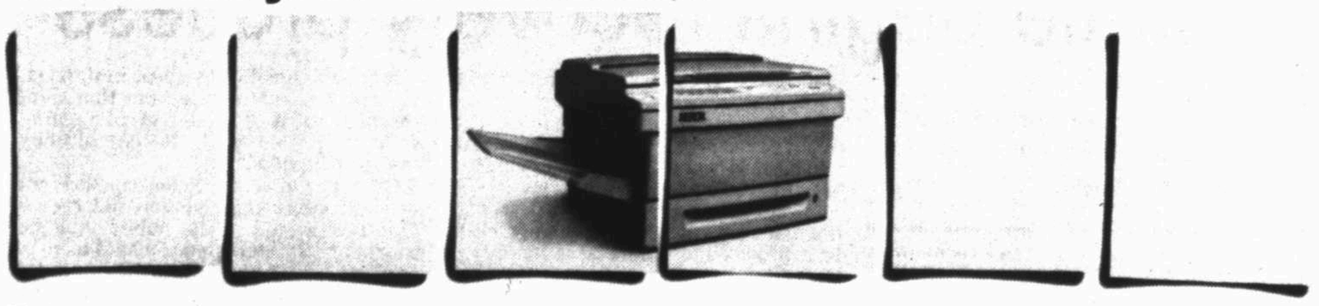
"Mike has made it very clear that he'd like to coach the Boston Celtics," Carr said. "He said it's like a dream for him. I think he has the qualities necessary to coach at this level."

Carr was asked what he would do if team owner Paul Gaston asked him to take the job.

"He's not going to do that," Carr said. "When we finally make the decision about who the coach of the Celtics will be that will be my decision.

"There are people that really would like to be in this position. It's still the Boston Celtics."

Now you can get something smaller, faster and better for just $99 a month.



Take another look. It's Xerox.

Great news. Today's Xerox copier for $99 a month is even better than ever. It's faster. Smaller. And holds 500 sheets of paper. It's everything you want in a small copier.

Braziel inks with South Plains

LEVELLAND — Odessa Permian's Angie Braziel put to rest months of questions about the future of her basketball career when she signed Monday to play for Western Junior College Athletic Association member South Plains College.

Braziel, a 6-foot-3 post who averaged 22 points, 11 rebounds and four blocks per game as a senior, was a two-time all-District 4-5A selection in basketball and was the district's most valuable player after leading the Permian volleyball team to a district championship.

She had visited several schools, including the one-year old Midland College program, before finally deciding on coach Lyndon Hardin's Lady Texans. Other schools included Southwest Conference members Texas, Houston, Baylor and Rice, Southland Conference members Sam Houston State and Southwest Texas State as well as other WJCAA members Howard College, Odessa College, New Mexico Junior College and MC.

"She may be the most athletic post player that we've ever signed," Hardin said. "She's an impact player. She will immediately give us help on both ends of the floor. She's an excellent athlete. She is a big signee for us...She will be a tremendous asset to our program."

Red Raider Day set for June 29

The annual Permian Basin Red Raider Day, which includes the Red Raider Golf Classic, a dinner and auction, is set for June 29 at the Club at Mission Dorado.

Texas Tech alumni, students and supporters will be able to get together and celebrate the school's unprecedented four Southwest Conference championships — men's and women's basketball, baseball and the Cotton Bowl football team.

The golf tournament will start with a sign-in at 8 a.m. and will begin with a shotgun tee off at 9 a.m. The Jock-Hock Dinner will be held at the Mission Dorado Clubhouse with the reception at 6 p.m. followed by the dinner and the auction.

Officials from the Texas Athletic Department Red Raider Club and Ex-Students Association will be in attendance. Proceeds go to support athletic and academic endeavors at Texas Tech.

For more information, call Dal Watson at 570-6644, Mike Marshall at 688-6305 or the Red Raider Club office at 806-762-2000.

Kotsay receives Smith Award

HOUSTON (AP) — Mark Kotsay, a sophomore outfielder-reliever who led Cal State-Fullerton to the national championship, received the R.E. "Bob" Smith Award as college baseball's player of the year on Monday night.

Kotsay set career College World Series records this season with his two grand slams and .529 batting average (15 for 29).

In Cal State-Fullerton's 11-5 championship victory over Southern California on Saturday, Kotsay hit two home runs, had five RBIs, and pitched the final two innings.

The award was presented at the annual Smith Award dinner at the Hyatt Regency in Houston. Todd Helton, a first baseman-pitcher from Tennessee, and Clint Bryant, a third baseman from Texas Tech, were the other finalists.

Kotsay set a school record with a .422 batting average with 20 doubles, five triples and 21 homers. He struck out just 15 times while scoring 85 runs for the Titans (57-9).

As a left-handed reliever, he allowed one earned run in 29 innings for a 0.31 ERA and 11 saves.

Past winners of the Smith Award are Jason Varitek, 1994; Darren Dreifort, 1993; Mike Smith, 1992; Bobby Jones, 1991; Mike Kelly, 1990; Ben McDonald, 1989; and Andy Benes, 1988.

Voting was by more than 300 members of the National Collegiate Baseball Writers Association, 33 members of the Smith Award Institutional Board and fan balloting on a 1-900 line.

Former Kansas City Chief Tim Barnett convicted of second-degree assault of child

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Former Kansas City Chiefs wide receiver Tim Barnett has been convicted of second-degree sexual assault of a child for an incident last year in a Milwaukee hotel.

Barnett was convicted Monday by a Milwaukee County jury. He was accused of grabbing a 14-year-old hotel maid and exposing himself on June 14.

Sentencing was set for July 5. Barnett faces a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine, said Donald S. Jackson, a Milwaukee County assistant district attorney.

A probation revocation hearing also has been set for Thursday in Johnson County (Kan.) District Court.

Barnett was released by the Chiefs last summer after the Milwaukee charges were filed. He had been convicted twice in the Kansas City area within the last several years on domestic assault charges and is still on two years probation in Johnson County for misdemeanor battery and assault.

Barnett was a third-round draft choice of the Chiefs in 1991.

Krueger logs years, changes at Luby's

One afternoon Luby's management called Jerry Krueger at the McAllen Luby's where he was assistant manager. They asked if he wanted to move to Midland to manage the Luby's there. He said, "Sure, when?" "They said, "Tomorrow."

It's a looooong drive from McAllen to Midland.

That was 14 years ago and Krueger is still here.

He started his Luby's career almost 20 years ago at the original Luby's, founded in 1947 in San Antonio by Bob Luby. "We had a tiny, tiny storage area. We had to get deliveries of food twice a day because there was no place to store stuff. The manager made his own lye soap," Krueger recalled.

He then moved around through Texas and New Mexico before his path led him to Midland from McAllen.

His many years with Luby's have given Krueger a good feel for what food to select for each day's menu.

Color, shape and availability of product play a part in each day's menu choices. If Krueger or one of his assistant managers, John Houser or Mike Barton, selects corn and peas, items that are small and round, they also try to add potatoes, squash or something with a different consistency and color.

They also consider the mode of cooking and select some baked, some boiled and some fried foods. There are always two vegetables that have only been steamed with no butter or other seasoning added.

Krueger and his staff also vary the menu with higher and lower priced items.

"On the entree counter, fish is a daily item. We always have fried fish, as well as either baked or boiled," Krueger said.

Other entrees are varied based on the previously listed criteria. Customer requests also play a part in menu choices.

Krueger recently added a light noontime special consisting of soup, salad and drink for $2.99. The special is available from 10:45 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The recipes, while they may not all be family secrets, do get a thorough testing. In a converted bank building in Luby's hometown of San Antonio, there is a working cafeteria with a test kitchen in the basement.

In this huge Luby's, with six assistant managers (most Luby's have only three), managers experiment with new or revamped recipes. The survivors of this rigorous testing (recipes, not managers) are used in other locations.

Luby's makes all their offerings in-house from scratch. Pastry cooks, breadmakers (humans, not those little countertop machines), butchers and other cooks labor in the kitchen working with food bought locally whenever possible.

Two months ago contractors finished a six-month-long remodeling task. Working only at night so the store wouldn't have to be closed, they updated the carpet, wall coverings, chairs, tables and light fixtures. Krueger said the new, lighter look gives the cafeteria a more open and airy feel.

The remodel also brought Luby's into full compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

Luby's is located at 2510 W. Louisiana at Andrews Highway. Hours are 10:45 a.m.-2 p.m. and 4 p.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Friday and 10:45 a.m. to 8 p.m. with continuous serving on Saturday and Sunday. Carryout is available from the entrance on the northwest corner of the building. Orders may be faxed in at 682-6267.

Luby's New Light Noontime Special Soup, Salad & Drink $2.99

Available 10:45 a.m.-2 p.m.

FASTSIGNS celebrates local success, national anniversary

In the summer of 1985, FASTSIGNS founder Gary Salomon and his late partner, Bob Schanbaum, opened the first ever FASTSIGNS store in north Dallas. In the spring of 1995, Mike Hogue and his wife, Lana, opened Texas' 80th FASTSIGNS franchise in Midland. In those ten years, the company has grown to 256 stores in eight countries covering four continents. Mike Hogue is excited to count his franchise as part of the growth success of the company.

"Our acceptance in Midland has been wonderful," Hogue said. "We're running 20 percent above our projected goal right now. The local retail growth is contributing to our own growth." Hogue added that he does business with people in Odessa, Big Spring and other surrounding cities.

Hogue attributes a large measure of the success of his FASTSIGNS franchise to the attitude of the company as a whole. This was summed up in a statement made by founder Salomon at this year's FASTSIGNS national meeting in January. Salomon said, "A critical area of distinction between us and our competitors (in the overnight signs category) is our commitment to the quality and service that build long-term client relationships."

Hogue believes FASTSIGNS centers like his in Midland are revolutionizing the sign industry much like "fast copy" businesses have changed the photocopy industry. In an industry where even basic professional signage can take weeks to produce, FASTSIGNS uses a computerized system to produce a quality sign in about 24 hours.

That system allows FASTSIGNS to design and custom cut vinyl graphic signage from company logos, artwork and stock lettering styles.

Once cut, these designs and letters can be applied to almost any clean smooth surface including Plexiglas, aluminum, wood, glass, plaster, metal, banner material, plastic or coroplast, which looks like plastic cardboard.

"We're running 20 percent above our projected goal right now. The local retail growth is contributing to our own growth."
Mike Hogue, franchisee
FastSigns

The first step for Hogue when a customer walks or calls in is to determine the size of the sign, whether it's for indoors or outdoors and the type of use planned to best determine how to design the sign.

When the customer has chosen the type of material, color, size and type style of lettering, the FASTSIGNS staff takes over. The goal is to have a quality sign in the hands of the customer within 24 hours, Hogue said.

The signs will last for several years (they come with a five-yearguarantee against fading, even in the West Texas sun). With care, vinyl graphics can last indefinitely.

FASTSIGNS can make signs for in-store displays including menu boards, window signs, point-of-purchase displays, office directories and name plates.

Outdoor sign types include banners, real estate signs, vehicle graphics, oilfield location signs, site signs (that say "Coming Soon), sandwich boards and street signs.

"Anyone who needs a sign, business or otherwise, is a potential customer. Most everyone at some point will need a sign. That's where we come in," said Hogue.

FASTSIGNS, the one day sign and lettering experts, is located in the Courtyard at Midland Park on Loop 250. The Midland franchise is locally owned by Mike and Lana Hogue. Store hours are 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday, and Saturday by appointment. Call them at 520-0491. "For a quality sign that's right. On time."

FASTSIGNS makes signs for in-store displays and for outdoor applications. They take their customers' need for speed seriously, offering fast turnaround on many signs, because "A business with no sign is a sign of no business."

Lifetime Siding contractor proud of repeat business

It isn't often a siding company gets repeat business, especially a company named "Lifetime Siding." But owner Neil Letkeman said that happened recently.

"We did the siding job for these folks three or four years ago. Then they decided to have us put up a steel patio cover a few weeks ago," Letkeman said.

The homeowner himself was very pleased with both jobs. He had called on Lifetime for his siding work after observing work they did for neighbors. "We saw them work on neighbors' houses and noticed they did a really good job. And their price was very reasonable," the customer related.

Last May's big hailstorm didn't faze the vinyl siding at all. "Our insurance adjuster couldn't find any damage at all," the customer reported.

This success led the man to use Lifetime to replace his patio cover. "We had an aluminum cover that leaked. No matter how we tried to fix it, nothing seemed to work. I finally decided a steel cover would be better," he said.

Nobody but Lifetime Siding would do for this job. "You couldn't ask for a better guy to do business with than Neil Letkeman. Some people think they're doing you a favor to do your job. Neil actually works for your benefit," the man declared. "And their cleanup was impeccable. After they left, you couldn't tell they'd been here, the area was so clean."

Letkeman said Lifetime can install a patio cover or carport that will be maintenance free, can include gutters and drains, and will withstand hail and high West Texas winds as well as hot sun. Patios can be screened in or enclosed later as well. Most jobs only take about one day.

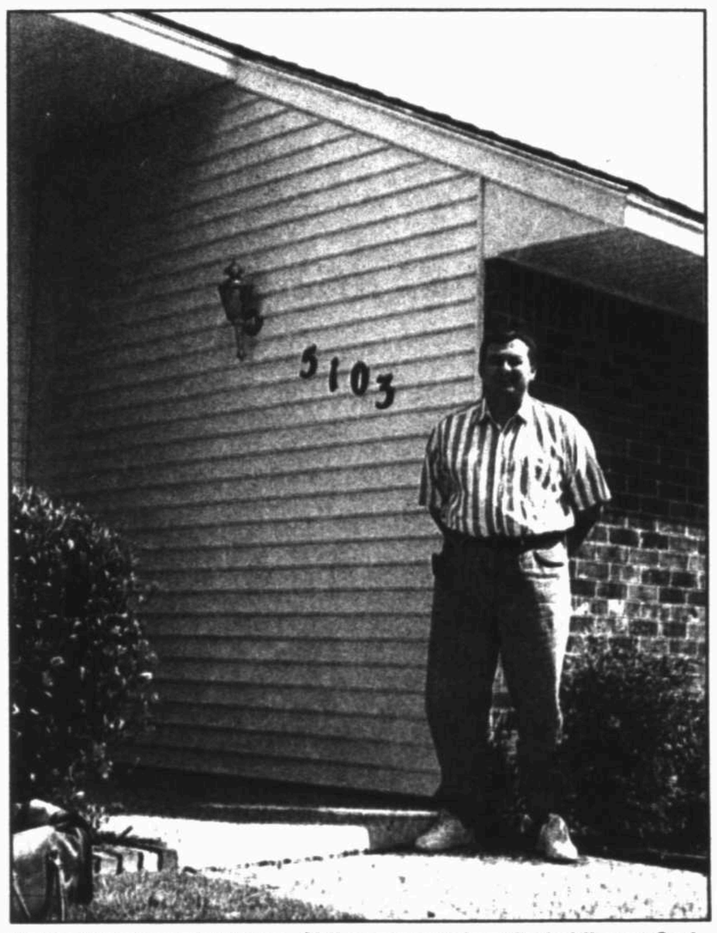
Lifetime's crews are all family members, closely supervised by Letkeman himself. "We do every job the same way, by standard installation methods," Letkeman said.

Carl Petty recently took a close up view of this crew's approach. Petty, who lives in Northeast Midland, said he knew several people for whom Lifetime had installed siding. "After realizing I knew several of Neil's references personally, I didn't even check anyone else to do the job," Petty said.

"I knew the old masonite siding needed to go. It was pretty beat up after 10 years," he continued.

Through June and July, Lifetime offers 15% off on everything they install: siding, windows, storm windows, carports and patio covers.

Neil Letkeman will answer siding questions personally at his booth in Midland Park Mall during the Home Show June 22-25. Lifetime Siding offers siding, storm windows, windows, patio covers and carports. Call 689-0307 for a free estimate.



Neil Letkeman and Lifetime Siding recently installed siding at Carl Petty's home in northeast Midland.

Dallas' Michael Johnson heads list of those with same surname at USA track championships

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — There's Allen Johnson and Dave Johnson and Lawrence Johnson and Michael Johnson.

There are so many Johnsons on the U.S. team for the World Outdoor Track and Field Championships they could have their own relay.

The four will be vying for positions on the team at the USA-Mobil Championships, which begin Wednesday at Hughes Stadium. The first three finishers in each event will qualify for the team, and all four have an excellent shot at making it.

If the four earn a trip to Goteborg, Sweden, for the World Championships in August, Michael Johnson is the only one likely to actually run a relay.

He is the favorite to win not one but two sprints — the 200 and 400 meters.

He is ranked No. 1 in the world in both events, the 200 for the third time, the 400 for the fourth time.

He has won both at the World Championships, but not in the same year, and that is his goal this season. He took the 200 world title in 1991, the 400 in 1993. No athlete — male or female — has won both at the same World Championships.

If the schedule permits, Johnson also is planning to try for a sweep at the 1996 Olympics. Only one athlete — Valerie Brisco-Hooks in 1984 at Los Angeles — has won the 200 and 400 at the same Games.

At this week's nationals, Johnson will be attempting to win both long sprints for the first time since 1899, when Maxey Long did it. The distances then were 220 and 440 yards and the meet was called the Amateur Athletic Union National Championships.

The world 200 record of 19.72 seconds by Italy's Pietro Mennea is the oldest in the books. The 400 world record of 43.29 was set by Butch Reynolds in 1988.

Johnson's bests are 19.79 for the 200 and 43.65 for the 400.

"I feel going into Sacramento my 400 is definitely where I want it to be," Johnson said. "My 200 needs some work. I need to work on my start and my speed. I just need to sharpen up."

Allen Johnson, this year's U.S. and world indoor champion in the 60-meter hurdles, is among the favorites in the 110-meter hurdles. He has an outdoor best of 13.30, but has been bothered recently by a calf injury.

Last year, he was ranked third in the U.S. and sixth in the world outdoors. Dave Johnson is the second half of the renowned "Dan and Dave" television commercials from 1992. He won a bronze medal at the Barcelona Games after Dan O'Brien no-heighted in the pole vault at the Olympic trials.

A four-time U.S. champion, the last time in 1992, Johnson comes into the championships with the best score by a U.S. decathlete this year and his best legal mark in four years, 8,322 points.

Lawrence Johnson, considered the most promising young American pole vaulter, is coming off a win at the NCAA Championships at Knoxville, Tenn., where he is a junior at the University of Tennessee.

After Johnson won with a leap of 18 feet, 8 1-4 inches, his best of the season, Tennessee coach Doug Brown boldly predicted that "he'll break the American record at the national championships."

Lalas world tour proves successful

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — After playing on consecutive days in Italy and the United States, Alexi Lalas looked a little bit lost.

"Some kind of state trooper drove 150 miles an hour to get me here," Lalas said. "Scared the crap out of me."

With his mop of red hair and goatee, Lalas may be the most recognizable soccer player in the United States. After spending a season with Padova in the Italian first division, he's probably the most known American soccer player in the world.

"I don't want to come back and be this prima donna," he said after the Americans beat Nigeria 3-2 Sunday in the opener of the U.S. Cup '95 tournament. "I'm still the same player, obviously."

Lalas, who started nearly every game for Padova this season, nearly scored the winning goal in Saturday's game but the goal was nullified when the referee called him for a push. Padova beat Genoa 5-4 on penalty kicks following a 1-1 to to remain in the first division next season.

Lalas then went by car to Milan, flew to London on Sunday morning and caught a plane to Boston, where he was met by the state trooper.

After playing 120 minutes Saturday, Lalas sat on the bench during the first half of Sunday's game. He played the second half, saving a goal with 17 minutes left by clearing two shots off the goal line.

U.S. women's team cautious about Japan

GAVLE, Sweden (AP) — In five previous meetings, the U.S. women's team has outscored Japan 19-3. That doesn't comfort American coach Tony DiCicco going into Tuesday's quarterfinal in the Women's World Cup.

"I think Japan may have been the country since 1991 that has put more effort into women's football than any other country in the world," DiCicco said Monday.

"The level of their play has gone up tremendously. It will be a difficult game. The American style is to attack and that's what we're going to do, but I've seen that they have great technical skills and they seem to handle pressure very well."

The United States was 2-0-1 in the first round, edging China on goal difference to win its group. The winner of Tuesday's game plays Norway or Denmark in the semifinals.

"Japan has given teams some headaches in this tournament," U.S. forward Mia Hamm said. "They beat Brazil. The Brazilians were playing some of the best soccer in the tournament. It's going to be tough game. The Japanese are very technical and fast on the ball."

Japan made it to the quarterfinals despite only one first-round win: 2-1 over Brazil. Japan lost 1-0 to European champion Germany and 2-0 to 1991 World Cup bronze medalist Sweden.

Forward Michelle Akers, who sustained a mild concussion and a banged up right knee just six minutes into the U.S. opener against China, has been cleared to play by the doctors.

Akers, considered the world's top female soccer player, practiced Monday for the first time since she was injured. She didn't go at 100 percent, but looked OK.

Prices rebound

NEW YORK — Oil prices rallied late in Monday's session on news that Brazilian oil workers were considering a second strike after talks yielded little progress.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in July finished 6 cents per barrel higher at $18.86 after reaching a low earlier in the day at $18.64.

Local crude purchasers raised their posted price 25 cents to $17.25 a barrel.

Gasoline and heating oil prices were also lifted by the news.

Geraldo Pinto of the Oil Workers Federation said the union would recommend a second national strike. Pinto said the workers went back to their jobs June 2 because the state-run oil monopoly Petrobras had offered talks on pay and working conditions.

But after Monday's meeting with Petrobras, Pinto said the company had offered nothing.

Natural gas prices were mostly higher with July contracts finishing 0.8 cent per 1,000 cubic feet higher at $1.712.

Bank bought

Norwest Corp. and Alice Bancshares have announced the signing of a definitive agreement for Norwest to acquire the two-bank holding company.

Alice Bancshares owns Alice Bank of Texas, with $171 million in assets and one location in Alice, and the First State Bank, with $23 million in assets and one location in Fremont, Texas.

Pending approval by federal regulatory agencies and shareholders of Alice Bancshares, the transaction is expected to close in the fourth quarter of 1995.

Dollar retreats

NEW YORK — The dollar fell against the yen and most other major currencies Monday, hurt by growing nervousness over the U.S.-Japanese automotive trade feud and a drop in Japan's stock market.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 84.04 Japanese yen, down from 84.53 late Friday. It was also was changing hands in New York at 1.4023 German marks, down from 1.4065.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Friday: 1.1545 Swiss francs, down from 1.1620; 4.9300 French francs, down from 4.9445; 1,664 Italian lire, up from 1,639; and 1.3786 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3779.

The British pound was quoted at $1.5944, down from $1.5945.

Stocks climb

NEW YORK — Stocks sprinted higher on Monday on renewed hopes for lower interest rates.

The Dow Jones industrial average gained 22.47 close at 4,446.46, more than reversing last week's 20-point loss.

The Nasdaq composite rose 3.60 to set a new closing high of 887.98. The NYSE's composite index rose 1.51 to 285.56. The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index advanced 2.94 to 530.88. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index added 0.73 to 489.32.

Big Board volume was light at 287.83 million shares, down from 327.58 million in the previous session. Advancers led decliners by about 4 to 3.

Court sets precedent in Texas oil dispute

■ Winkler County case gives Supreme Court more power to ignore some cases being simultaneously heard in state courts.

By Laurie Asseo
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — A ruling in a Texas oil-and-gas dispute has resulted in the Supreme Court acquiring more power to ignore some cases that are simultaneously being considered in state courts.

Justices set the precedent in an 8-0 ruling that a federal court need not make a judgment in a dispute involving one of the world's most powerful insurance companies.

Several companies were ordered to pay $110 million in October 1992 in a lawsuit over the ownership and operation of oil and gas properties in Winkler County.

Lloyds of London underwriters asked a federal judge for a declaratory judgment saying they were not required to provide coverage for the judgment.

A declaratory judgment is a ruling that outlines someone's rights and responsibilities under the law.

Shortly thereafter, the oil and gas companies sued the Lloyds underwriters in Texas state court, seeking to force them to cover the $110 million. The companies asked a federal judge to delay or dismiss the federal case filed by the underwriters.

Federal judges can decline to hear such cases when the same issues are involved in a lawsuit filed in state court, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote for the court.

O'Connor noted that a 1942 Supreme Court ruling said federal judges "might be indulging in gratuitous interference" when they rule in some cases when the same issues are pending before a state court.

The federal judge delayed the federal case to let the state lawsuit go forward. The underwriters appealed, but the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed.

The appeals court said a ruling on the federal case would result in "piecemeal" judgments and would reward an attempt to forum-shop by the underwriters.

The Supreme Court agreed. The federal law allowing courts to issue declaratory judgments "created an opportunity, rather than a duty" to issue such rulings, O'Connor said.

Justice Stephen G. Breyer did not participate in the case. Breyer's investments in Lloyds of London reinsurance contracts were an issue during his 1994 confirmation hearing, and he later bought insurance intended to free him from those investments.

The case is Wilton vs. Seven Falls Co., 94-562.

Moorco accepts FMC takeover bid

By Michelle Koidin
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON — Moorco International Inc. said Monday it has accepted a $312 million takeover bid from industrial conglomerate FMC Corp. after rejecting an earlier $223 million hostile offer.

FMC, a Chicago-based maker of chemicals, agricultural machinery and military vehicles, said its wholly-owned subsidiary, MII Acquisition Corp., will buy Moorco's outstanding common stock for $28 per share.

In reaction to the news, Houston-based Moorco's stock jumped $4.25, or 18 percent, to $27.75 on the New York Stock Exchange. FMC went up 25 cents to $62.25.

Industry analyst Paul Raman of S.G. Warburg & Co. said Moorco held out as long as it could to get the best price possible.

FMC said it would extend the expiration date on the offer to June 26. About 48,789 shares of Moorco stock were tendered as of June 1.

Moorco's board recommended last month that shareholders reject a tender offer of $20 cash per share. The maker of control devices for oil companies, power plants and factories said the bid was inadequate and not in the best interest of the company and its stockholders.

Industry analyst Paul Raman of S.G. Warburg & Co. said Moorco held out as long as it could to get the best price possible.

FMC took its offer directly to shareholders May 5, a move that led the two companies to sue each other. FMC complained that Moorco refused to negotiate actively while Moorco accused FMC of sending representatives into Moorco plants posing as prospective customers to get company sections.

"We look forward to building on Moorco's strong business base," said Robert N. Burt, FMC chairman and CEO.

"This transaction is the result of a process to maximize shareholder value," said Michael L. Tiner, Moorco president and CEO. "The acquisition of Moorco by FMC will complete the story of a successful leveraged buyout that began in 1984."

Tiner said Moorco's two operating subsidiaries, Smith Meter and Crosby Valve & Gage, will continue as part of FMC.

Furr's Supermarkets announces deal to market Certified Hereford Beef

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Furr's Supermarkets hosted an old-fashion steak cookout Monday to introduce its new line line of high quality beef, and to announce that it would be the American Hereford Association exclusive distributor for Certified Hereford Beef in the Southwest.

The American Hereford Association, founded in 1881 is one of the oldest agriculture organizations in the U.S. and the only one to implement standards for taste, and backs the standards by research.

The beef which goes on sale in Furr's Supermarkets Wednesday is locally grown Certified Hereford Beef of the same quality that is normally found only in restaurants.

"What makes this beef different is the consistency of quality," said Kevin McBride, manager of Furr's store at Big Spring and Scharbauer. "Much of the meat sold today is about 60 percent consistent in quality, but this is over 80 percent."

The characteristics that signal the high quality are marbeling, tenderness and palatibility. Approximately 80-90 percent of the Herefords and Hereford-crosses score in the narrow range of upper Select and Choice. Study ratings conducted by the Colorado State University Hereford Study in 1991, indicate that animals fitting those narrow marbeling requirements are superior in tenderness. Studies also indicate that in consistency of eating quality 87.5 percent of the Hereford beef was rated desirable for restaurant quality, as compared to 79.3 percent for USDA Choice and 60.5 percent for USDA Select.

'You will not find a bad piece of meat in this Certified Hereford.'

— Bill Weckworth, manager, Furr's store

The meat earns its certification by being subject to random checks of processing plants by the USDA Meat Grading and Certification Branch.

The cuts of meat that will be available as Certified Hereford include: tenderloin steak, top round steak, flank steak, top sirloin, and eye of round roast, which all meet the dietary guidelines of the American Heart Association.

"You will not find a bad piece of meat in this Certified Hereford," said Bill Weckworth, manager of the Furr's store at 4340 W. Illinois.

A Furr's press statement noted that much of the beef would be fresher because most of it would be raised on Hereford ranches in the Permian Basin including the Scharbauer Cattle Co. of Midland and the Knox Hereford Ranch in Tarzan. Other area Hereford ranches listed include: the Lee Campbell Hereford Ranch and the Marrs & Smith ranch near Kermit.

Furr's says it will not charge premium prices for the Certified Hereford, but will sell it at everyday prices.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Brokers use 'Trades' to buy treasuries for clients

BY BILL DOYLE

Q: You wrote that U.S. Treasury bills, notes and bonds purchased through a bank are held in the bank's Treasury Direct account and would not be lost if the bank fails. As you explained it, Treasury securities the bank purchased for customers are not part of the bank's assets and cannot be touched by the bank's creditors.

Doyle

I have Treasury securities in an individual retirement account at a brokerage firm. Do brokerages utilize Treasury Direct so that Treasury securities would not be lost in the event the brokerage firm or SIPC goes under?

A: Every buyer of new Treasury bills, notes and bonds makes the purchase through the Treasury Direct system. No engraved certificates have been printed for Treasury securities since 1986. Ownership is recorded on computers, and owners get printouts.

Treasury Direct makes it possible for individual investors to buy Treasury securities without going through a brokerage or bank. But, because your Treasuries are in an IRA, they must be in the custody of an IRA trustee, such as that brokerage.

Each brokerage firm and bank that purchases and holds Treasury securities for customers does so through its own commercial Treasury Direct account, technically known as the Treasury-Reserve Automated Debt-Entry System — "Trades," for short.

Treasury securities are debt obligations of the U.S. Treasury and are backed by the full faith and credit of our federal government. There is absolutely no worry about those securities paying interest on schedule and being redeemed at face value on their maturity dates.

However, it's not Treasury Direct that protects the Treasuries and other securities you have left in custody of a brokerage firm.

It's the Securities Investor Protection Corp. When a brokerage goes belly up, the SIPC sees to it that every one of its customers receives what was left with the firm — up to $500,000 per customer, including $100,000 in cash.

Although it is not a government agency, the SIPC was created by an act of Congress. Every brokerage firm doing business with the public is required to be a member of the SIPC, which is funded by assessments on those firms.

The SIPC currently has approximately $500 million on hand and a $1 billion line of credit with the Treasury. Don't fret; the SIPC won't go under.

Q: I recently purchased a Treasury note through a local bank, but I must admit I am not really up to date on the deal.

Does this note pay interest or dividends? When does it pay? Are the earnings taxable?

A: Because the note is a debt security, it pays interest. The debtor (Uncle Sam, in this case) is obligated to pay that interest to the creditor (you) at a fixed rate until the note matures.

Treasury notes, as well as Treasury bonds, pay interest semiannually, commencing six months from the issue date. You get interest payments every and May 31 and Nov. 30 until the note's maturity.

Interest from Treasury securities, including your note, is subject to federal income tax but is exempt from state and local income tax. Every January, both you and the Internal Revenue Service should get a Form 1099-INT, listing the interest you received the previous year.

Q: Your columns explaining that an individual investor can buy Treasury securities through a personal Treasury Direct account with no commission, service charge or other fee have been informative.

Now, can you set forth the details of opening a Treasury Direct account?

A: You can open a Treasury Direct account either by filling out and submitting a new account request — Form PD F 5182 — or by making a tender to buy a Treasury security at a regularly scheduled Treasury Department auction.

You do it through the Federal Reserve Bank or branch serving your area of the country. Your local bank can give you the correct Fed address, to which you can write for detailed literature and the necessary forms.

Airborne telescope gives view of Mercury to curious scientists

By Malcolm W. Browne
N.Y. Times News Service

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. — As the world's only flying astronomical telescope nears the end of its long and productive life, it has begun targeting the most dangerous prey it has ever hunted: the mysterious little planet Mercury.

The stakes will be high during the series of observations by the telescope, the Kuiper Airborne Observatory, which began on May 8. Success could yield a wealth of information about the surface mineralogy of Mercury, potentially shedding light on the origin and evolution of the solar system.

But a misstep by the men and women controlling the National Aeronautic and Space Administration telescope and the C-141 military transport plane that carries it could leak a beam of direct sunlight into the telescope. Even a brief burst of sunlight would destroy the telescope's delicate infrared sensors and perhaps even set fire to the plane.

"Up to now," said Dr. Ann L. Sprague of the University of Arizona, the principal scientist for the Mercury project, "no one would have risked the solar damage the Kuiper Observatory could sustain while looking at Mercury. But with only a year left for the observatory, the time has finally come to take a few chances."

Mercury, only 40 percent larger than Earth's Moon, is the closest planet to the Sun, and it is most easily observed by suitable telescopes during daylight hours.

But observation of Mercury is notoriously difficult. To shield any large telescope from devastating sunlight while focusing on a planet only 21 degrees away from the Sun is extremely difficult; a human being attempting to look at Mercury in the daylight sky would be blinded by the solar glare. Observation of Mercury becomes far more difficult when the telescope is mounted on an airplane bumping and swerving through turbulent air.

Because observation of Mercury presents peculiarly daunting problems, the planet remains the least understood of the four terrestrial planets, Earth, Mars, Venus and Mercury. Although its face displays moon-like craters, Dr. Sprague said, "Mercury does not have a surface like the Moon but instead has intriguing and unique qualities begging for more detailed study."

The Kuiper's unique telescope system is the only one currently capable of meeting the challenge, Dr. Sprague believes. The telescope, whose glass light-focusing mirror alone weighs 455 pounds, is mounted on an "air bearing." Compressed air forced through this spherical bearing keeps the telescope from coming into contact with its support, thereby virtually eliminating friction.

Since it does not touch any gears or solid bearings while it is tracking a target, the telescope must be aimed magnetically rather than mechanically. A complex and very rapid computerized feedback system instantly compensates for the airplane's movements, holding the telescope precisely on target.

During a five-hour flight recently over the Northwestern United States and the Pacific Ocean, only a short alarm interrupted an otherwise fairly smooth observing run.

At an altitude of 41,000 feet, Dr. Frederick C. Witteborn of NASA's Ames Research Center in Mountain View, designer of the infrared measurement apparatus used during this experiment with the plane's 36-inch-diameter telescope, thought he smelled smoke. Hands reached toward fire extinguishers, but after a few anxious minutes, the smoke proved to be no more than the aroma of a cup of chicken soup brewed by the mission director, Carl M. Gillespie.

For a half hour the telescope's tracking mechanism remained locked on Mercury while the C-141 cruised westward over the Pacific. Its telescope "cavity," a large bay between the pilot's flight deck and the main cabin, remained open to the thin, frigid air, and the three-foot-wide telescope mirror was chilled to minus 28 degrees Fahrenheit.

A fuzzy white dot representing the planet Mercury was centered on computer monitors in the control room while a tense and very busy scientific team snapped remarks and orders to each other through the head phones that must be worn to dampen the roar of the plane's jet engines.

Elaborate preparations for the mission had included the careful positioning of a half-moon-shaped plastic panel over the telescope's muzzle. The arrangement was designed to block direct sunlight without obscuring the view of Mercury.

Once aloft, computers inside the plane's windowless control room helped astronomers keep an image of the planet centered on their video monitors. Meanwhile, the telescope's guidance controls simultaneously fed instructions to the plane's autopilot, automatically correcting the plane's heading as needed.

DEAR ABBY

Husband's weight problem threatens marriage

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have grown apart, literally. "Frank" has gained about 100 pounds since we married 15 years ago. He no longer participates in the activities that our two sons and I enjoy, such as hiking, biking, tennis, baseball and swimming. He won't even go to the beach.

Van Buren

He gets winded just walking up a flight of stairs. Frank will find any excuse just to get out of doing the most routine chores around the house. Consequently, I do all the work while he sits in his chair with the "remote" in his hand.

He has a good job, which he considers his contribution to our marriage.

He usually falls asleep right after dinner. We no longer sleep together because he snores and kicks. No amount of subtle hints or nagging has been successful in effecting any change. Frank and I separated once two years ago, but I took him back because I felt sorry for him.

I am not sure if I want a divorce, but I want my children to be raised in a healthy atmosphere with positive role models, and I have lost my respect for him. He smokes (at work) and has a history of heart disease. He has no health insurance or life insurance.

I should probably leave him, but I have neither the guts nor the money. I need your objective reply. — UNHAPPY AND INDECISIVE

DEAR UNHAPPY AND INDECISIVE: You must make your husband understand how his weight and self-destructive behavior are affecting you and his sons. You will need the cooperation of his physician, whom he probably hasn't seen in years. Arrange an appointment for a complete physical. Alert his doctor beforehand to stress the danger of continuing his present lifestyle.

If Frank doesn't shape up, waste no time in preparing to support yourself and the boys should the need arise. It may be sooner than you think.

DEAR ABBY: I have a suggestion for a baby shower for a second or third baby.

For my second baby, each guest brought a home-cooked meal, which I promptly put in my freezer. Abby, these meals provided me and my family with dinners for four weeks following the birth of my baby.

I cannot tell you how handy it was to be free from worry about what to have for dinner during that first month.

Every new mom and dad would be thrilled with such a gift. Pass this along to your readers. — NICOLE ANDREWS, SACRAMENTO, CALIF.

DEAR NICOLE: Thanks for a great idea. It's food for thought. (Sorry, I couldn't resist.)

DEAR ABBY: Regarding baldness:

Some people say that a man who is bald in front is a lover. If he's bald in back, he's a thinker. If he's bald all over, he THINKS he's a lover. — NOT BALD IN GULFPORT, FLA.

Abby shares more of her favorite, easy-to-prepare recipes. To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, More Favorite Recipes, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Traveler's nightmare becomes way of life for man in Paris

By Erma Bombeck

It's every traveler's nightmare — getting stuck in an airport.

Alfred Nasseri has been detained in the Charles de Gaulle airport in Paris for more than six years. Bad travel agent? Special low-fare ticket? No, but he has had some problems.

Bombeck

On his release as an Iranian prisoner, he went to Brussels and was given papers for political asylum. The papers were locked in a suitcase that was stolen in 1988 at a train station in Paris. France will not let him in the country without a passport, and he is not acceptable to other areas. He can't get out of the airport.

Until something happens, his address is Charles de Gaulle Airport, Terminal One, Boutique Level.

How do you spend your time in an airport? Overdosing on candy bars used to be one of my solutions. I figured with all the inconvenience, I deserved them — and besides, I could tell everyone when I finally landed that I was bloated and retained water from the flight.

Alfred has chosen to keep a daily diary (recording what?) from loose-leaf paper provided him by workers for Lufthansa, the German airline. He sleeps on a plastic bench in the airport basement lounge — when he isn't writing or watching passengers. He glimpses TV in the airport doctor's office. Flight attendants provide him with shaving kits and toothbrushes.

Now that the plight of Alfred has become public, I can predict the ending to his story with some accuracy. A reporter will write his experience in book form. A movie studio will option it and cast Nick Nolte as Alfred and throw in a couple of flight attendants who are sexually involved with him. (Melanie Griffith and Drew Barrymore.) Mel Gibson will portray the American reporter who uncovers the story; the French diplomat will be played by Anthony Hopkins.

Alfred will become an international celebrity. He will appear on Letterman and host "Saturday Night Live." Look for him in People magazine with his shirt off.

There will be Alfred T-shirts with his picture and a quote emblazoned under it: "DID THEY CALL MY FLIGHT?"

Unable to adjust to all this attention, Alfred tries desperately to return to his plastic bench in the Paris airport, but authorities will not grant him entrance. He does what he has to do. He catches a plane to the newly opened Denver airport. It leaks and a lot of things don't work — but it can be home.
