I walked into a cigar shop here and the guy behind the counter sang me a country song. I had been killing a little time downtown, when I spotted a sign in the window of the G&W Cigar and Tobacco Store: "Visit our 'Walk In' Cedar Humidor. It's Unbelievable!!!" So, I decided to check it out. A mere half-hour later I was swept into a hidden recording studio, listening to country music.

End-of-year weather delights Midlanders

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Can this really be December?

Highs in the 70s? Adults wearing shorts?

It sure is.

And don't expect any immediate changes, either.

January should start off the same way.

Indeed, the new year is expected to come in amid continued mild, dry weather, according to the National Weather Service.

The forecast calls for high temperatures to be in the mid-70s through Friday, averaging 10 to 15 degrees above normal for this time of year, said Wade Earle, meteorologist with the NWS. It has been so unseasonably warm of late, in fact, that the high of 75 reached last Saturday tied the all-time record for that date.

"It appears we'll be seeing this weather through New Year's Day," Earle said.

But then the weather service is predicting a "very mild cold front" will arrive on Friday evening or Saturday that will drop afternoon highs into the 60s, though that will still be above the normal 57-58 degrees the Permian Basin usually sees this time of year.

Earle explained that following a record cold snap in mid-December, temperatures have been in the 60s or 70s due to a "zonal flow pattern" that is keeping Permian Basin weather constant.

"We're not having any extremes of really hot or really cold temperatures," he said, adding that the pattern is keeping Arctic air

Rosenelle Cherry retires after 48 years

"Marvelous."

"The personification of perfection."

"Talented."

"Most efficient public servant."

"An institution."

"Cheerful."

"Humble."

Throughout the years, 45 to be exact, those are among the qualities earned by and attributed to Rosenelle Tom Cherry, who is bowing out of the Midland County Clerk's Office.

"It has been a great joy," Ms. Cherry said of her 45-year service as Midland County Clerk. She and her staff of deputies have recorded thousands upon thousands of births, marriages, deaths, deeds, civil and criminal court records, wills, and real-estate instruments, and, among other duties, recorded cattle brands.

During those years, the 939-square-mile Midland County has grown in population from 25,000 to almost five times that in approaching 125,000.

"Oh, Lord, I don't know," Ms. Cherry said of the numbers of births, marriages, and deaths which she has recorded during her tenure. "Millions of them."

Now midway in her last four-year term, Ms. Cherry has decided to gracefully take her leave and to bid "Good Tidings" to county government and to her successor, Republican Alice Brown.

"I had reached my peak," Ms. Cherry said. "All I wanted to do was one thing: Be the (Midland) county clerk and be the best one."

In 1983, her peers in the County and District Clerks Association of Texas" elected her "outstanding county clerk"

Local company plans relocation into Louisiana

■ Parker Technology to move to New Iberia, La., after closing Midland facility.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Parker Technology officials announced Monday that the rig manufacturing and service facility at 4501 S. County Road 1310 will be closed and relocated to New Iberia, La.

Company officials estimate it will take six months to close the facility, which will be done after completion of current projects and moving of equipment to New Iberia.

The move will affect approximately 50 Partech employees, according to David Holland, administrative manager. He said the company, a subsidiary of Parker Drilling of Tulsa, will transfer 10 or more employees to New Iberia. The remainder will be offered outplacement assistance.

"Some possibly could be placed elsewhere in Parker Drilling, but our people are so different ... our people are mainly mechanics, welders and machinists and Parker doesn't hire those types except overseas. But it's such a tight labor market now that I don't think too many of our people will have a problem finding a new position in this area. We've been looking for machinists, welders and mechanics ourselves," Holland said.

He added that the decision was made following Parker Drilling's acquisition of Mallard Drilling and Quail Tools, both based in New Iberia.

"Parker has been more active overseas than domestically for a number of years," Holland said. "With the acquisition, they'll need the same kind of support services we provide Parker. With this move, we can serve Parker's overseas activities as well as Mallard's activities offshore."

Robert L. Parker Jr., president and chief executive of Parker Drilling, said that Mallard requires a manufacturing facility on the water while Parker's land rig requirements are more flexible. "It came down to a duplication of facilities and we were forced to make the decision," he said in a statement.

Holland said other facilities in the area will be able to provide the same services Partech did.

Police get ready for New Year's Eve

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Area law-enforcement agencies are preparing to keep a watchful eye on Midland streets tonight, and local party goers should be warned against drinking and driving on this New Year's Eve.

All available Department of Public Safety officers will be working the streets tonight, as part of their Motorcide program.

During a Motorcide period, DPS troopers get out en mass to stringently enforce traffic laws on speeding, seat belt usage and driving while intoxicated.

"These are the highest contributing factors to fatal accidents," a DPS spokesman said.

This effort will have a special emphasis on preventing drunken driving.

"Everybody we have will be out working," he said.

The Midland Police Department also will have more than normal units assigned to the streets, according to officer Doug Crabtree.

Many of those extra units will be handling the large number of calls for police assistance that happen every New Year's Eve.

Additional units, however, will be on the streets to specifically target those driving under the influence of alcohol.

So not only will more patrols be on the street — many will be involved in "a concentrated effort" to stop drunken drivers, he said.

Officers with the Midland County Sheriff's Department are not planning a specific effort dedicated solely to DWI offenses, according to Sheriff Gary Painter.

The department will have its officers out in force, however, and all will be on the alert for those driving while intoxicated, he said.

"On New Year's Eve, we are especially watchful for that," Painter said.

Yugoslav army officers start breaking silence

'Some of the troops commanded by younger officers could soon hit the streets, preventing Milosevic's police from beating up and harassing demonstrators.'

— Radovan Petrovic, analyst

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — President Slobodan Milosevic used the Yugoslav army as his loyal strike force in Croatia and Bosnia, and rewarded it afterward by taking away its money and prestige.

Officers are bitter — and they may be ready to fight back.

Signs are emerging that some officers in the traditionally secretive army support the tens of thousands of pro-democracy protesters whose daily demonstrations mark the toughest challenge to Milosevic's nine years in power.

The military has nowhere near the strength it had a few years ago when it was Europe's fourth-largest army. But it remains the only force in Yugoslavia capable of defending the opposition movement. The Serb leader's loyal police force has blocked protests and beaten protesters.

"Some of the troops commanded by younger officers could soon hit the streets, preventing Milosevic's police from beating up and harassing demonstrators," said analyst Radovan Petrovic, who writes for several Belgrade newspapers and is known to be close to the military.

"What we see is the deep split within the army over democratic demands for changes in Serbia," he said. "Younger army officers are with the people, while the older ones are still with Milosevic."

About 60,000 people took to the streets again Monday — the 41st day of protests that started after Milosevic annulled local elections that opposition candidates had won in November. International mediators have told Milosevic to concede defeat, but he has ignored them.

The opposition has been buoyed, however, by a statement Sunday from a group of army officers who declared that "our jets, tanks, cannons and howitzers will aim exclusively at enemies."

"If need be, we will lead the Serb people into the final, victorious truth. We want to live in a dignified, free and democratic country, without anyone's dictatorship," said the statement, signed only with the names of military units.

The officers, some belonging to the elite 63rd Commando Unit based in Serbia's second-largest city of Nis, called on army chief of staff Gen. Momcilo Perisic to declare whether he and the brass stand "with the people, with the young generation, with the future."

Petrovic said the chief of staff and senior officers were part of the old Communist military leadership that prefers stability, even though Milosevic has slashed their budgets and power.

The army issued a statement indicating that it intended to remain neutral.

"The army general staff and the army as a whole are united in the consistent fulfillment of their duties," it said. "Any other interpretation of the army's role does not represent its official stand, regardless of how that is presented to the public."

A meeting Monday between the army chief and Yugoslav President Zoran Lilic, a Milosevic lieutenant, was a likely sign of concern among Milosevic aides about the army's reliability.

As the old Yugoslav federation disintegrated, Milosevic used the Yugoslav People's Army to intervene in the republics of Slovenia, Croatia and Bosnia. He also sent army tanks into Belgrade streets in March 1991 to quell massive protests against him.

He was suspicious, however, of the Communist-trained officer corps. In recent years, he purged its ranks and rechanneled funds into a loyal and already well-equipped police force.

Independent sources say the police number about 100,000, the army numbers about 114,000, and the army reservists, about 400,000.

While the army brass remains loyal, lower-ranking officers are fed up.

Younger officers and field commanders complain about their low status and are believed to be ready to openly joint opposition ranks. Officers' salaries are behind schedule. Recruits complain of hunger because of a lack of money for even regular meals in the barracks.

Negotiators try to conclude Hebron deal by new year

'When I am convinced that the security arrangements (in Hebron) ... are reached, there will be an agreement.'

— Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, after meeting with President Clinton's Mideast envoy

JERUSALEM (AP) — Pressed by a U.S. envoy, Israel and the Palestinians conducted a flurry of top-level meetings Monday, arriving closer to a deal that would put most of Hebron under Palestinian control.

Both sides said differences remained, but that there still was a slim chance of concluding the elusive deal to remove Israeli troops from the West Bank city before New Year's Day.

Palestinian sources said their negotiators were under orders from Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat to complete an agreement Monday, allowing for a Tuesday signing summit between the Palestinian and Israeli leaders.

However, Arafat spokesman Nabil Abourdeneh said it could take longer: "They are still discussing the details of details."

Israeli Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai said he expects a deal to be finished and signed "in a very short time."

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu was vague Monday evening about when an agreement would be reached.

"When I am convinced that the security arrangements (in Hebron) ... are reached, there will be an agreement," Netanyahu said after meeting with President Clinton's Mideast envoy, Dennis Ross.

Earlier Monday, Netanyahu said he would bring any agreement to the Knesset, Israel's parliament, for approval, which could delay the actual troop redeployment for several days after a signing.

"On such an important agreement, it's important that I bring it in front of the Knesset," he told legislators from his ruling coalition. Easy passage is expected.

Ross arrived in the region Monday evening for separate meetings with Netanyahu and Arafat before joining their negotiators.

Israeli officials complained that the Palestinians were trying to win last-minute concessions before the self-imposed New Year's Eve deadline, including Israel's consent to a Palestinian police presence at the Tomb of the Patriarchs, a Hebron shrine holy to both Jews and Muslims.

The tomb is located in downtown Hebron, an area that will remain under Israeli control after Israeli troops pull out of four-fifths of the city of 130,000 Palestinians and 500 Jews.

In the original Hebron agreement signed by Netanyahu's predecessors, Israel retained sole security control over the tomb, where a Jewish settler shot and killed 29 Muslim worshipers in 1994.

Arafat also has insisted on a timetable from Netanyahu for Israel's three-stage troop withdrawal from West Bank rural areas. Originally, that was to have begun in September 1996 and be completed a year later.

The Hebron withdrawal had been scheduled for March, but was postponed after a series of suicide bombings in Israel. After his May election, Netanyahu delayed it further, insisting on new arrangements to improve security for the settlers.

Erakat said the Palestinians also were demanding the release of Palestinians jailed by Israel as security threats.

Netanyahu's top policy adviser, David Bar-Illan, said a Tuesday summit was possible if the Palestinians dropped some last-minute demands.

Earlier Monday, Netanyahu defended himself against right-wing criticism, saying that going ahead with a Hebron withdrawal did not mean the government had changed its views.

His government would never agree to the establishment of a Palestinian state, Netanyahu told legislators from his ruling coalition.

"We are talking about far-reaching autonomy (for the Palestinians), we are talking about letting them run their lives, including their institutions, but we are not talking about granting them sovereignty," he said.

Lawmakers from his ruling coalition threatened to vote against the government in a no-confidence motion unless they were allowed to express their opposition to the deal in a vote on the agreement itself.

At least seven of Netanyahu's 17 Cabinet members have said they would vote against the accord.

The government survived Monday's motion, filed by the far-right opposition Moledet Party, by a 47-2 vote, with 34 abstentions.

Both sides set Dec. 31 as a target deadline for signing the deal on the Hebron troop withdrawal.

New Year's Eve is widely celebrated by young, secular Israelis although New Year's Day is not a formal holiday. Jan. 1 also is Fatah Day, an official Palestinian holiday commemorating the mainstream PLO faction's first guerrilla operation in 1965.

South Korea returns remains of 24 North Korean infiltrators

PANMUNJOM, Korea (AP) — In response to a rare apology from North Korea, South Korea returned the remains of 24 North Korean infiltrators Monday, marking the end of three months of frozen relations.

The repatriation came a day after North Korea expressed regret for the Sept. 18 submarine infiltration that led to a massive manhunt and sent relations between the two Koreas to their lowest level in years.

The dead North Koreans were among 26 believed to have gone ashore after the submarine ran aground off the southern coast. One was captured and another is unaccounted for.

With the return of the remains, North Korea can expect an acceleration in badly needed international aid and negotiations aimed at establishing a lasting peace on the Korean peninsula. North Korea faces extreme food shortages caused by widespread flooding and a severe economic crisis.

In an indication that some tensions remain, a North Korean official vilified South Korea on Monday and repeated his government's assertion that the sub accidentally strayed into South Korean territory.

A North Korean military band played a dirge as the 24 small wooden boxes containing the ashes of the cremated bodies were handed across the border.

North Korea had demanded the return of the remains, threatening retaliation if South Korea failed to comply. South Korea rejected the North's demand, insisting that it first apologize for the intrusion.

North Korea's official news agency reported Monday that aid promised by the United States included food. The North's apology also is expected to lead to resumed aid from South Korea.

Good guys or terrorists? Hostage-holding rebels play public relations game

By Lynn F. Monahan
Associated Press

LIMA, Peru — The leftist rebels holding 83 hostages at the Japanese ambassador's residence are armed with assault rifles, pistols and grenades.

They also are trying to wage a war of public relations.

Few think the Tupac Amaru rebels will convince many people that they are good guys — especially since they've been holding diplomats and businessmen at gunpoint for two weeks. Nonetheless, they have been at pains to cultivate the image of nonterrorists and to distinguish themselves from more violent guerrilla groups.

At the very least, their hostage-taking has gained them name recognition. It also has given some people the idea that the Tupac Amaru, whatever its methods, has the quasi-legitimate goal of speaking for the people and becoming a legal political party.

The guerrillas have even asked their hostages for assessments of their image.

Alfredo Torres, a pollster who was one of the released hostages, said rebel leader Nestor Cerpa asked him how the group was perceived. Torres said the public did not distinguish it from the Shining Path guerrillas, a Maoist guerrilla group that has killed far more people than the Tupac Amaru.

'The message of the MRTA up to now is contradictory. Respect human rights, but they take hostages. Fight for the life of the people, but unleash a guerrilla war.'
— Cesar De Maria, advertising executive in Lima

Cerpa replied that his group had "an image problem," Torres reported.

Demanding that the government release their jailed comrades, the rebels took more than 500 hostages when they raided the embassy compound during a gala cocktail party.

The rebels initially threatened to kill hostages, but have not carried out or repeated that threat. Instead, they have released hostages gradually, and now hold 83.

As some hostages have emerged, they have spoken well of their captors — of their political passion and their courteous manners. One group of released hostages called on the government to help the rebels find an "integral political solution within the peace process."

The Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement even has a newsletter on the Internet.

"Their PR is spectacular," said renowned economist Hernando de Soto. He said Tupac Amaru has always had a "very clever, astute group of marketeers" that has tried to tailor the organization's image.

Not all would agree that the Tupac Amaru has developed a favorable public image. But since the rebels took over the Japanese ambassador's compound on Dec. 17, they have called for dialogue and a "peace accord." They object to being called "terrorists" and strive to distinguish themselves from the Shining Path.

"They've been playing the good terrorist versus the bad terrorist," said pollster Giovanna Penaflor, of the independent polling firm Imasen.

The guerrillas have little support in Peru. Nonetheless, De Soto says the Tupac Amaru wants to use the hostage crisis to protest the government's free-market reforms. He said it wants to broaden its constituency and become a legal political party.

President Alberto Fujimori has confronted the rebels' PR campaign by ignoring it. He has made only one public statement about the hostage situation, in which he refused to consider releasing imprisoned rebels.

That's the wrong way to go about it, says Cesar De Maria, an advertising executive in Lima. De Maria says the president's silence only exaggerates the loudness of the rebels' message.

Unlike Fujimori, the rebels cater to the news media — issuing statements, giving telephone interviews, releasing videotape of themselves and making a spokesman available outside Peru.

Before the hostage crisis, the Tupac Amaru was eclipsed by the Shining Path movement. Now that their name is known outside Peru, the rebels want to project to the world the romantic image of an "idealistic guerrilla group," rather than that of a "killer terrorist group," De Maria said.

Peruvians, however, are not going to buy it, he said.

"The message of the MRTA up to now is contradictory," he said, using the group's Spanish initials. "Respect human rights, but they take hostages. Fight for the life of the people, but unleash a guerrilla war."

He said the rebels have bet everything on the hostage-taking and believe they will come out ahead — whatever the outcome.

In terms of publicity they "have obtained more than they have in their whole life." If it ends in violence, he said, their movement will call them martyrs.

Bomb explodes ripping apart train, dozens feared dead

GUAHATI, India (AP) — A bomb exploded Monday on an express train packed with holiday travelers, blowing the train off the tracks and killing dozens of passengers and crew. Police suspected eastern India's rebel tribesmen were to blame.

Working in darkness with cranes and floodlights, rescuers pulled 26 corpses from the wreckage, said railway spokesman J.D. Goswami, who was in radio contact with the rescue operation. At least 42 people were hospitalized, Goswami said.

The death toll "may go up a little," he said, but not as high as the hundreds initially reported.

The explosion ripped apart the New Delhi-bound Brahmaputra Express that originated in Gauhati, the state capital of Assam in far-eastern India.

The thud of the blast was heard in the railway station at Kokrajhar, from which the train had pulled out seven minutes earlier with 1,200 people aboard.

No one claimed responsibility, but the area is the center of activity for Bodo tribespeople demanding greater autonomy over their lives and natural resources.

The blast derailed the engine and the first of the train's 18 coaches, and blew apart the following three coaches with about 300 passengers, railway officials said.

On Sunday, separatist rebels blew up a vital bridge that links Gauhati with the area, about 35 miles from the site of the train blast. It was not clear if the two bombings were related.

But police in Gauhati said they believed both were carried out by Bodo rebels, who recently split into rival factions and were vying to prove their strength.

Prafulla Kumar Mahanta, the chief executive of Assam, learned of the explosion at a Christmas and New Year's party he was giving for about 1,000 guests.

Five of India's remote seven northeastern states are struggling against separatist uprisings. Rebels often carry out attacks to dramatize their campaigns.

The Bodo tribe has been struggling for a separate homeland for 20 years. Its members claim their culture is threatened by Muslim immigrants who migrate from Bangladesh to the rich farmland on the bank of the Brahmaputra River, which flows through the tea-growing state.

In 1987, Bodo insurgents began attacking police and soldiers who protect the Muslim settlers. At least 1,000 people have been killed since then.

Recently, the Bodos split into groups favoring independence from India and a new group, the Bodoland Liberation Tiger Front, which wants a separate state within the Indian federation for the Bodo tribe.

Another separatist group, the United Liberation Front of Assam, has been fighting for independence since 1979, accusing New Delhi of economic exploitation of the state. The army's operation against the rebels was launched in 1991. Two years later, the government began efforts to reach a political settlement with the guerrillas.

Workers' strike shuts down Israel for second day

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — In a sign of growing dissatisfaction with Benjamin Netanyahu's economic policies, hundreds of thousands of Israelis walked off their jobs Monday to protest the prime minister's plans to raise taxes, slash services and sell state companies.

The strike shut down the stock market, utility companies, day care, postal services, radio broadcasts, banks and seaports, and restricted public transportation and health care.

The strike also reflected rippling anger over Netanyahu's policy of funneling hundreds of millions of dollars to Jewish settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip — a move that primarily harms his own low-income constituency in Israel.

Late Monday, leaders of the Histadrut union decided to end the strike everywhere but at seaports, Israeli media said. That was in reaction to the Knesset rejecting a government proposal to reduce the tax deductions for married women, which the union opposed.

It was the largest popular protest against Netanyahu's government since he was elected in May.

Netanyahu accused his political rivals of organizing the protest to undermine him. The strike was called by the huge Histadrut Trade Union Federation, which is controlled by the opposition Labor Party.

"The workers themselves have no idea what the strike is all about," Netanyahu charged.

Union leaders estimated more than 200,000 workers joined the strike.

Critics of the prime minister argue that his election has brought deep economic malaise. Netanyahu's hard-line policies have heightened Israeli-Arab tensions, which economists blame for the apparent end of a five-year economic boom.

Year-end figures released Monday showed that the economy grew in 1996 by no more than 5 percent, down from more than 7 percent the previous year.

WEATHER WATCH

NICE: Warm weather to continue

Staff Report

in Canada. Also helping keep weather patterns constant is a tiny upper-level ridge.

The weather will also remain dry, Earle said. "Since it is a zonal flow, we're not getting any weather systems in to change the weather and so therefore we'll remain dry. It looks like we'll end this year about six inches below normal in rainfall."

"The zonal flow will help us keep the same weather pattern. Fortunately, it's warm temperatures. Unfortunately, it's also a dry weather pattern."

According to the weather service, the high Monday was 69 degrees and the low was 31 degrees. The record high for December 30 was 82 degrees, set in 1951, and the record low was 12 degrees, set in 1983.

STATE

What strange weather to end the year with.

Temperatures climbed well into the 60s and 70s in much of Texas on Monday as mostly cloudy skies with scattered fog shrouded much of the eastern half of the state.

By late afternoon, pockets of fog still restricted visibility to as little as two miles in many areas as a temperature inversion kept the fog from dissipating. The western half was mostly sunny and windier but just as balmy. Winds were southerly to westerly at 10 to 20 mph and gusty.

Midafternoon temperatures in North Texas ranged from 58 in Denton to 75 near Abilene. In South Texas, afternoon readings ranged from 66 at Galveston to 81 in Harlingen and Brownsville. West Texas highs ranged from 59 at Dalhart to 76 at Sanderson.

The North Texas forecast called for a repeat on Tuesday, with sunny skies over the western part of the region but morning clouds and fog elsewhere. Partly cloudy skies Tuesday night. Highs in the 70s, lows in the 50s

In South Texas, gradually clearing skies were expected Tuesday, along with highs in the 70s and 80s and lows in the 50s and 60s.

West Texas expected mostly sunny days and fair nights through Wednesday. Highs in the 60s and 70s, with low 80s in the Big Bend. Lows in the 30s and 40s.

NATION

Rain fell along much of the West Coast on Monday, boosting the flood threat in parts of the storm-weary Northwest, while showers were scattered over the Southeast.

Light to moderate rain fell along the coast during the afternoon from California's Santa Barbara area north to the Canadian border, with as much as 1 to 3 inches possible in some areas.

The rain and rising temperatures melted some of the heavy snow that fell during the weekend in the Northwest, swelling streams in Oregon and Washington and causing mudslides. Flood watches were posted for several waterways.

The highest water was in the Chehalis-Skookumchuck river basin in southwestern Washington's Lewis County, where some fields and roads were flooded.

Flash flood watches also were posted through Tuesday for parts of northern California, where several remote mountain gauges had tallied more than 5 inches of rain in 24 hours. A mudslide closed highway U.S. 199 between coastal Crescent City and southwestern Oregon.

Heavy rain also was possible overnight in southern California.

More rain was forecast along the coast through the rest of the week as three tropical storms were heading northeastward from Hawaii, a storm track called the "Pineapple Express."

Snow fell on inland mountains from northern California into Washington, where avalanches had closed major east-west highways through the Cascades since the weekend.

Snow levels during the afternoon ranged from just 2,000 feet above sea level in Washington to near 7,500 feet in California.

Moist air streaming eastward from the Northwest states produced light snow showers across sections of the Dakotas and Minnesota into Wisconsin.

Warm air moved northward as far as Wyoming, where Sheridan warmed from 7 above zero to 50 in just four hours during the early morning.

In the Southeast, moist air flowing northward from the Gulf of Mexico spread a few scattered showers from eastern Louisiana into eastern Tennessee and the Florida Panhandle.

The rain was expected to spread up the East Coast into the Carolinas, and a few thunderstorms also were possible in the region.

Elsewhere, cold air sliding across the lower Great Lakes produced scattered "lake-effect" snowfall in parts of western New York state.

That cold air also brought a possibility of overnight light rain and snow showers in New England.

Monday's temperatures around the Lower 48 states ranged from a morning low of 25 below zero at Cut Bank, Mont., to an early afternoon reading of 86 at St. Petersburg, Fla. The lowest wind chill was 54 below zero at Glasgow, Mont.

He added that the company plans to sell the 24-acre facility, located between Midland and Odessa.

"We sold a portion of our facility a year ago and we'll be looking to sell the remainder now. It's a good facility."

Parker Drilling purchased the former OIME Inc. in Odessa in 1975, later changing its name to Parker Technology Inc. or Partech. At the height of its activity, the facility employed 581 and manufactured dozens of drilling rigs and associated equipment during the oil boom of the late 1970s and early 1980s.

SAFE: Police ready for holiday

Many Midlanders will be ringing in the new year with alcohol, but those who leave their homes to celebrate are urged to have a designated driver or to make use of taxi cabs.

Local cab companies are having extra units standing by to help handle the added volume on New Year's Eve.

DEA informant sentenced for skimming

McALLEN (AP) — A former federal drug informant was sentenced to three years in federal prison Monday after admitting he skimmed about 1,100 pounds of marijuana.

Ernesto Tijerina, 23, of Edinburg, was sentenced after pleading guilty to one count of conspiring to possess marijuana with intent to distribute. He was credited for 21 months already served in the Hidalgo County Jail.

Tijerina's action represented "a terrible problem for the administration of justice," U.S. District Judge Ricardo Hinojosa told him.

The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration regarded Tijerina as a valuable informant until last year. He was in contact with several drug traffickers in the area and regularly passed information to the DEA.

CLERK: Rosenelle Cherry retires from office of Texas. A year later, the Midland County Young Lawyers Association awarded her the Liberty Bell Award for "outstanding community service." Recently, the Texas Agricultural Extension Service honored her with a certification of appreciation for service to youth, agriculture, and community.

Ms. Cherry, who was raised on a ranch in neighboring Andrews County, was named a "Midland Centennial Citizen" in 1985. She was selected as an "outstanding citizen" by the Uptown Business and Professional Women's Club.

At age 25 in 1951, she was appointed county clerk by the Midland County Commissioners' Court after then-County Clerk Lucille Johnson became district court clerk and then-District Court Clerk Nettye Romer became county auditor under Texas district-judgeship appointments.

The following year, 1952, Ms. Cherry was elected to office on the Democratic Party ticket in her only contested election-year race.

"I am not a figurehead," Ms. Cherry said. "I never have been. I am just shoulder-to-shoulder with the girls (the deputy clerks)."

Throughout the years in her work-a-day routine, "I walked in the office, worked right alongside the girls, and always have and always will" until the end of her tenure.

In her work, "I never varied (from the right) for anybody," Ms. Cherry said. "I have been asked to. It was enough worry (to do the job correctly) not to worry that I did something illegal. I have a clear conscience. I have treated them right," she said of members of the public, the lawyers, and judges.

"And it got to be general knowledge around town that I would do a good job for them and would do it right."

And Ms. Cherry is particularly sensitive to the needs of the many problem-laden people who visit her office on business.

She is prompt and courteous in her work.

"You file an instrument today, even if it is 5 (o'clock) this afternoon," Ms. Cherry said. "And we are going to get it out tomorrow. I have enjoyed just giving . . . service."

In changing her allegiance to the Republican Party from the Democratic Party in the late 1980s, Ms. Cherry recalled that the "highlight" of the event was meeting United States President George H.W. Bush and Vice President Dan Quayle.

Ms. Cherry wished Godspeed to her successor, Ms. Brown.

"I do wish her well. You bet I do," Ms. Cherry said. "And I hope the office has the same kind of continuity" as in the past 45 years. "And if the girls are here, it will."

In hoping for "success" for Ms. Brown's term of office, Ms. Cherry said that she hopes that "she gets as much pleasure out of the position that I got out of it throughout the years. I have had excellent employees," including retired Chief Deputies Ruth Moore and Lavern O'Brien.

However, Ms. Cherry said that she was "terribly concerned" about her employees and the "unrest" associated with the transition of a newly-elected official into office.

Ms. Cherry will remain county clerk until about 9 a.m. on Thursday, Jan. 2, just into 1997, when Ms. Brown and other elected officials are to be sworn into office in the Midland County Courthouse. Thereafter, Ms. Brown will be able to name her deputy-clerk appointments to the County Clerk's Office.

Born in Stanton in Martin County to Ellison Tom and Mattie Zimmerman Tom, Ms. Cherry was raised on the Tom Ranch in Andrews County, was graduated from Andrews High School, and studied business at John Tarleton Agricultural College, now Tarleton State University, from 1943 to 1945.

"I got my fill . . . of the good old days," Ms. Cherry said of her work on the ranch. "I had a lot of chores."

After college, she worked at the old Midland Army Air Field (MAAF), which in World War II was the world's largest bombardier school, until closing in 1948. Briefly, she worked for West Texas Abstract Company before she joined the Midland County Clerk's Office in the 1929-30-built "elegant" courthouse which lost its marble-wainscotting and staircase in remodeling during the early 1970s.

"I miss the marble that was here," Ms. Cherry lamented. "It was more elegant. The courthouse "has never been that elegant since."

Ms. Cherry alluded to the more genteel time of days past, "but times change."

And she noted the computerization of her office procedures and recalled the old ink-on-paper - heyday of the typewriter - decades.

"We would type all one day and proofread the next day," Ms. Cherry recalled. "That was the system. It was slow, but everything else was slow, too."

In retirement, Ms. Cherry plans to expand her community volunteer work and to share more of her life with her daughters, Martha Ann Mayfield, 37, of Bellaire and Lynda Dauley, 42, of Dallas, and her 7-year-old granddaughter, Morgan Mayfield, who is "my pride and joy."

In 1952, when she first campaigned for county clerk, Ms. Cherry fondly recalled the "good advice" of then-Texas District Court Judge Robert "Bob" Hamilton and former Judge Charles Klapproth and former Judge William L. Kerr.

Judge Hamilton, who had suggested that she run for office, "knew I could do it" - effectively and efficiently manage the County Clerk's Office.

Judges Hamilton and Klapproth advised her to " 'stay out of the news media and do a good job.' We just had the radio and the newspaper. They gave me a lot of good advice, but a lot I already knew. And I never forgot it."

Judge Kerr advised Ms. Cherry to " 'be respectful, have dignity, don't put yourself on their level (anyone who would be demeaning), and make sure what you tell somebody, you know it is the truth. That is your authority.' "

And serving the public well and faithfully has been Ms. Cherry's calling and her priority throughout the years.

Price of natural splendor goes up in national parks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Snowmobiling at Grand Teton, touring the Everglades, or visiting Yosemite's majestic valley will be more expensive in 1997 as higher entrance charges kick in at scores of national parks. Some fees will double.

The National Park Service hopes to have all the fee increases at 100 parks, monuments and recreational areas in place by May, but at some of the larger parks that attract winter crowds the increases will come with the new year. At Grand Teton and Yellowstone — where entrance fees hadn't changed for eight decades — the price doubled to $20 a carload just before Christmas.

The Park Service must use the additional revenue for park improvements and 80 percent must be used at the site where it is collected.

"As long as the extra money stays in the park, people really don't mind paying the extra fee," said Marsha Karle, a spokeswoman at Yellowstone. But she acknowledged that because the fees have been increased suddenly "some people are not prepared for it."

Fee hikes at 47 parks were announced in November. Another 53 will be added, probably in February, said David Barna, a Park Service spokesman.

"The intent is not to double fees only at the big parks, but cut across (the park system) to historic sites and urban areas as well," he said.

The Park Service also will double the cost of the annual Golden Eagle pass to $50 beginning Wednesday with the new year. The pass allows unlimited access to any national park or other federal recreation area for a year.

The fee hikes will pay for improvements to the park system which has been under a financial crunch for years, resulting in deterioration of everything from recreation centers to trails. The Interior Department expects the fees to raise $30 million to $50 million over the next three years.

So far, winter park visitors say they don't mind the higher prices.

"Whatever it takes to keep the parks going," said Darren Neukomm of Salem, Ore., during a recent visit to Yellowstone. The cost is still "pretty cheap compared with other tourist attractions."

Cheryle Williams, who brought her family to Yellowstone from Georgia for Christmas, said the park visit was worth the extra money. "You're not going to live but once," she said philosophically.

Increases for entrance prices, recreational and user fees were approved by Congress on a three-year experimental basis, but are likely to become permanent as lawmakers struggle to meet the park system's needs. Last year about 270 million people visited federal parks and recreational areas.

At the most popular parks — Grand Canyon, Yellowstone and Grand Teton — entrance fees will go from $10 to $20 a carload and annual passes from $15 to $40. At Yosemite in California, it jumps from $5 to $20 per car. Entry fees at many of the other parks nationwide will range from $2 to $5 for individuals to $10 for a carload, Barna said.

Visitors also will begin to pay for a variety of services from guided river tours at Redwood National Park in California to nature lectures at Acadia National Park in Maine and wedding receptions at Fort Washington overlooking the Potomac River outside the nation's capital.

Large group picnics or family reunions — a popular activity in the Washington D.C. area parks — will cost $50 to $300 for a site and a wedding at Fort Washington — a 130-year-old historic fort along the Potomac — will cost $150.

Historic words now on display in Washington D.C.

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a capital where apologies are framed to sidestep blame, the National Archives has put on display one man's historic, unambiguous acceptance of responsibility.

It is a slip of paper on which Dwight D. Eisenhower scribbled a statement to be issued if the D-Day invasion of the European mainland in World War II turned out to be a failure.

Ike's statement holding himself solely accountable — carried folded in his wallet and never needed — is one of a smattering of the 4 billion government records held by the National Archives and put on exhibit at its Pennsylvania Avenue headquarters.

Others call up heart-rending or heart-stopping moments in the nation's history: A letter from muckraking author Upton Sinclair educating the country about rats ground into its meat supply. A heart-rending plea from a black man soon to stripped of his freedom by the Supreme Court. A physics student's notes recording the first manmade atomic fission with two triumphant words: "We're cookin'!"

And a fan letter from a 12-year-old Fidel Castro to the occupant of the White House in 1940: "My good friend Roosevelt. I don't know very English, but I know as much as write to you..."

But perhaps none is more pertinent in a city where writing evasive statements of apology is an art form, than Eisenhower's forthright note, written on June 5, 1944, the eve of the allied assault on Nazi-occupied France (but misdated by Eisenhower "July 5"):

"Our landings in the Cherbourg-Havre area have failed to gain a satisfactory foothold, and I have withdrawn the troops."

"My decision to attack at this time and place was based upon the best information available. The troops, the air and navy did all their bravery and devotion to duty could do."

"If any blame or fault attaches to the attempt, it is mine alone."

The papers held by the archives here, in its 13 regional centers around the country and in the nine presidential libraries, said curator Stacey Bredhoff, capture the sweep of history "from the Monroe Doctrine to the Watergate tapes, from Yorktown to Saigon, from heroes to scoundrels, presidents to slaves."

Among those on display:

—Young Fidel's request to President Franklin Roosevelt: "If you like, give me a ten dollars bill green american, in the letter, because never, I have not seen a ten dollars bill green american and I would like to have one of them."

He adds a second reference to his aptitude in English: "I don't know very English but I know very much Spanish and I suppose you don't know very Spanish but you know very English because you are American but I am not American. ... Good by. Your friend. Fidel Castro."

—The Supreme Court's 1857 decision in the case of Dred Scott and his wife, Harriet, slaves who sued for their freedom after living in free territory. The ruling that black people were not citizens and could not expect federal protection is often called the most wrong-headed the high court ever rendered. It made the Civil War less avoidable and was overturned by the 13th and 14th Amendments to the Constitution.

Dred Scott's melancholy plea is quoted: "Will nobody speak for me at Washington, even without hope of other reward than the blessings of a poor black man and his family?"

—A 1906 typewritten letter from Upton Sinclair to President Theodore Roosevelt urging him to send an inspector secretly into the Chicago packing houses: "Let him go to Packingtown as I did, as a working-man, live with the men, get a job in the yards, and use his eyes and ears. ..."

Sinclair's novel, "The Jungle," describing tubercular beef and the grinding up of poisoned rats, caused revulsion over slaughtering methods and led to passage of reform laws.

Sinclair said later his purpose had been to inform the country on the exploitation of immigrant labor and the need for socialism, not about its meat supply. "I aimed at the public's heart and by accident hit it in the stomach," he said.

—A notebook recording the first controlled, self-sustaining nuclear chain reaction during the Manhattan Project, a secret effort to build an atomic bomb before the Germans did. Richard Watts, a physics student, jotted down a series of numbers describing the developing experiment. But when the moment of fission arrived, he wrote two excited words: "We're cookin'!"

House Republican leaders intensify efforts to save Gingrich's job

'In order to make a reasoned judgment, we have to educate ourselves about what's there. That's going to take more than a day or two. I don't foresee one hearing and it's over with.'
— Rep. Jim McDermott, D, Wash.

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republican leaders intensified efforts Monday to save Speaker Newt Gingrich's job, while a GOP congressman — who declared his opposition to Gingrich's re-election — said he was warned that he was aiding the Democrats.

The Republican leadership held a conference call with rank-and-file members, giving them a pep talk. Meanwhile, the chairwoman of the House ethics committee, Rep. Nancy Johnson, R-Conn., struggled to schedule a hearing on penalties for Gingrich, who has acknowledged ethics violations involving tax-exempt funds.

Despite Mrs. Johnson's best efforts, the ethics panel will not meet the Republican goal of completing its work before the Jan. 7 election for speaker as the 105th Congress convenes, the committee's ranking Democrat said.

"It's not going to happen by the 7th," said Rep. Jim McDermott, D-Wash., who is vacationing in Italy. He said the four-member subcommittee that investigated Gingrich "has been working for a year, but the rest of us know nothing about it."

"In order to make a reasoned judgment, we have to educate ourselves about what's there. That's going to take more than a day or two. I don't foresee one hearing and it's over with," McDermott said in a telephone interview.

Rep. Steve Schiff, R-N.M., a member of the subcommittee that handled the Gingrich investigation, also has expressed doubt that the process will be finished by Jan. 7.

"I would like to see that sanctions hearing happen as expeditiously as possible, but I'm not sure that it can be accomplished by Jan. 7," Schiff told the Albuquerque Journal in a story published Saturday. He said ethics committee members not on the subcommittee "need time to get briefed on what this case is all about."

Participants in Monday's conference call told The Associated Press that Republican leaders talked about one House member who made what they called an "unfortunate" decision to publicly oppose Gingrich.

The leaders didn't name anyone, but the reference was to Rep. Michael P. Forbes of New York, who on Sunday became the first Republican to declare his opposition to Gingrich's re-election as speaker.

At least 10 House Republicans have said they're unsure whether they'll support Gingrich, their leader since the stunning GOP takeover of the House two years ago. Republicans will control the new Congress, 227-208.

Forbes, one of the lawmakers who described the conference call, said that he informed Republican leaders of his intention to speak out. He was warned, he told the AP, that he'd be handing the Democrats a victory and allowing the opposition to describe Republicans as a party in disarray.

Forbes said he has spoken to other members who "are sharing my angst" but haven't openly declared their opposition to Gingrich.

Earlier, Forbes said Gingrich should "exercise the ultimate in profiles in courage in stepping aside and in not standing for reelection as speaker."

"As we move into the new Congress we need a strong, dynamic, unencumbered speaker," Forbes said. "I'm troubled by the speaker's own admission that he took his eye off the ball in preparing his own defense before the ethics committee."

Gingrich acknowledged that he violated ethics rules by failing to seek proper legal advice on use of tax-exempt activities for political purposes, and of providing inaccurate statements to the ethics committee about the role of his political organization, GOPAC, in the tax-exempt projects.

Rep. Peter King, R-N.Y., who was on the conference call, said the leaders — including Majority Leader Dick Armey — "re-emphasized the Republican position that Newt did not intentionally violate any rules, Newt didn't lie, he didn't intend to mislead the committee."

The leaders also mentioned during the half-hour conference that the National Republican Campaign Committee has established a hotline for members and their staffs to call for information about the case.

"This is touch and go," said King, who opposed Gingrich when the party caucus recommended him but now is prepared to support his re-election. "The odds are still in Newt's favor. But once a few guys start to jump ship, you can see a whole lot of guys jumping. They want to keep this under control."

Rich Galen, communications director for the Republican campaign committee, is in charge of the new hotline.

He said the link was established to tell members and their staffs "what others are saying" and get suggestions on "how do you answer" questions about the speaker.

"A lot of folks have been on vacation," he said.

Gingrich spokesman Tony Blankley said that Forbes "misunderstood the facts" of the ethics case. He said members should "get the facts and the truth, not the disinformation coming out from the Democrats."

Snow gives way to floods and mudslides in Northwest

'Right now, mud is beginning to be a bigger problem around the state.'
— Clarisa Lundeen, spokeswoman at the Washington Transportation Department

SEATTLE (AP) — Rain and rising temperatures Monday began washing away four days of snow and ice across the Northwest, only to cause flooding and mudslides.

Tens of thousands of sandbags were issued to communities along swollen rivers in Washington and Oregon. Some low-lying fields and roads were swamped by water or blocked by mud, and scattered evacuations were reported.

At least nine people have died in Washington and Oregon since Thursday as a result of back-to-back storms that dumped up to 2 feet of snow and freezing rain, stranded travelers and knocked out power to tens of thousands of people.

"Right now, mud is beginning to be a bigger problem around the state," said spokeswoman Clarissa Lundeen at the Washington Transportation Department.

At a shelter at North Thurston High School in Olympia, 50 miles south of Seattle, evacuees were losing patience.

"I broke down yesterday, really started crying," said Sharon Smith, 36, at the shelter with her children, ages 12, 5 and 2. "The worst of it is that the kids can't play without disturbing other people. They're bored out of their minds, and they keep wanting to know, 'When can we go home?'"

Her neighbor Lisa Greene, 34, had also been at the shelter for a fifth day and said: "I've been holding on really good, but now it's like" — she flailed her arms — "today is the day I lose it."

Seattle's morning rush-hour traffic moved at full speed on roads that finally were merely wet, not covered with glare ice and foot-deep snow. Seattle-Tacoma International Airport was operating normally again but was jammed with travelers scrambling to head home at last.

But the rain, expected to continue on and off through Tuesday, and warmer weather unleashed new threats.

The National Weather Service warned people living along seven western Washington rivers — the Cowlitz, Chehalis, Skokomish, Willapa, Skookumchuck, Deschutes and White — to prepare for mostly minor flooding from snowmelt and rain.

The highest water was in the Chehalis-Skookumchuck river basin in Lewis County, where there was lowland flooding of fields and roads.

The Army Corps of Engineers provided 20,000 sandbags to communities in the state's southwest corner.

In Oregon, authorities set up sandbag distribution centers. Warnings were posted on many western Oregon rivers, including the Willamette.

People living along the Nisqually River south of Tacoma were asked to evacuate as the amount of water released from a dam was increased to handle runoff.

"The hair on the back of my neck is standing up a little," said Janet Averill, afraid of a repeat of a flood last February that sent 4 feet of water through her McKenna home, which has since been rebuilt.

Washington Gov. Mike Lowry added four counties to the 11 already declared disaster areas, covering virtually the entire western half of the state. The National Guard was enlisted to help rescue people or deliver supplies.

"I've lived in the state of Washington all my life and that's 57 years now, and I think this is the most snow we've ever gotten and of course in the middle of it we got the ice storm and that's just in western Washington," Lowry said.

The main east-west passes across the Cascade Range remained closed because of avalanches. Nearly all the region's Amtrak runs were canceled, and freight lines through the Cascades were blocked at two tunnels.

Power outages, which affected as many as 250,000 homes and businesses at the height of the crisis, were down to about 60,000 by midday, said Puget Sound Power & Light, the region's biggest utility.

Despite the hardships and hassle, one Seattle resident said she was sorry to see it end.

"I'm so sad it's raining," Dominique Calley said. "I want it to snow — the city looks so pretty and peaceful and clean. Now it looks so dirty."

Drought left us parched in '96

As 1996 slips into memory and 1997 dawns fresh and full of promise, we can't think of any Texan who will be sad to see the old year exchanged for the new.

The departing year, frankly, was tough on Texas and Texans in one particular regard that can be spelled out with a single word — drought!

Consider it statistically. During 1996, the National Weather Service office at Midland International Airport recorded only 8.84 inches of rain, little more than half of the normal amount.

While that statistic alone is enough to tell any reader that rainfall locally was way off this year, it doesn't reveal enough about the tragedy of drought — the days after days on end of cloudless skies and blistering heat that parched lawns, cropland and pastures and rolled up an enormous toll in lost products and extra watering bills.

For Midland County alone the loss reached staggering proportions, but for the entire state the drought is estimated to have cost the farming and ranching sectors $2 billion in lost production and the overall state economy $4.9 billion. That makes it one of the worst natural disasters to strike Texas this century.

In fact, it would be difficult to find any community in the state that has not been adversely affected by this drought — and knowledgeable weather-watchers are quick to point out that this drought cannot be declared over yet.

No, it hasn't been glamorous news, but the drought that is now under way and has been three years in the making is a sobering reminder of how much our fortunes are tied to the weather.

Our hope at the start of the new year is for good, soaking and regular rainfall.

Oakland school move be completely wrong

The Oakland school board has done something that is sending shock waves across the nation: It has voted to recognize the dialect spoken by many urban black students as a distinct, unique language.

The statistics regarding the lot of urban black children are deplorable. These kids are far too often victims of crime, hunger, substandard housing, abuse, drugs, gangs and inferior education.

Taking away from them the academic goal of speaking proper English is tantamount to taking away from them access to a better life. In our culture, communication is a critically vital tool for survival and success. ...

Now the Oakland school district intends to request federal funding for teaching its teachers street slang so they can better educate their students. This is absurd. If anything, the Oakland schools should be seeking federal funding to increase the amount of English reading and writing instruction their students receive.

As one of those students might say, "The board be way off base on this one," and we can only hope someone in the Oakland schools would correct the child's grammar.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Dec. 31, the 366th and final day of 1996.

Today's Highlight in History:

Fifty years ago, on Dec. 31, 1946, President Truman officially proclaimed the end of hostilities in World War II.

On this date:

In 1775, the British repulsed an attack by Continental Army generals Richard Montgomery and Benedict Arnold at Quebec. Montgomery was killed.

In 1857, Britain's Queen Victoria decided to make Ottawa the capital of Canada.

In 1862, President Lincoln signed an act admitting West Virginia to the Union.

In 1877, President and Mrs. Rutherford B. Hayes celebrated their silver anniversary by re-enacting their wedding ceremony in the White House.

In 1879, inventor Thomas Edison first publicly demonstrated his electric incandescent light in Menlo Park, N.J.

In 1961, the Marshall Plan expired after distributing more than $12 billion in foreign aid.

In 1974, private U.S. citizens were allowed to buy and own gold for the first time in more than 40 years.

In 1978, Taiwanese diplomats struck their colors for the final time from the embassy flagpole in Washington, marking the end of diplomatic relations with the U.S.

In 1985, singer Rick Nelson, 45, and six other people were killed when fire broke out aboard a privately owned DC-3 that was taking the group to a New Year's Eve performance in Dallas.

Ten years ago: Ninety-seven people were killed, more than 140 injured, when fire broke out in the Dupont Plaza Hotel in San Juan, Puerto Rico. (Three hotel workers later pleaded guilty to charges in connection with the blaze.)

Five years ago: Representatives of the government of El Salvador and rebels reached agreement at the United Nations on a peace accord aimed at ending 12 years of civil war. President Bush arrived in Australia as part of a 12-day Pacific trip.

One year ago: U.S. tank platoons crossed a just-completed pontoon bridge from Croatia to their peacekeeping mission in Bosnia.

Outlook: Outsmart the pundit, collect nothing

WASHINGTON — Four of my long shots came in last year, including the second mole in the CIA and the upset in the Israeli election. Obdurate contrarianism led me astray on 11 others, however, including the presidency of the U.S. and the stock market. But a New Year is a new day:

1. When Newt Gingrich steps down, the new House speaker will be (a) Henry Hyde; (b) Richard Armey; (c) John Kasich; (d) John Boehner; (e) Tom DeLay; (f) Susan Molinari.

2. Surprise best seller of the year will be (a) "The Names of Things," etymological wonderment by Susan Brind Morrow; (b) "Crazy Rhythm," a revealing memoir by Len Garment; (c) "The Night in Question," stunning stories by Tobias Wolff.

Safire

3. At the secret heart of the Clinton dirty-money scandal is (a) the financial hushing of Webster Hubbell and Craig Livingstone; (b) the Riady conversation in the Presidential limousine; (c) the dealings in Jackson Stephens's Worthen Bank; (d) Paul Redmond's search for the ghost of Larry Wu-Tai Chin.

4. Clinton's major domestic success will be (a) restoring food stamps to legal immigrants by being gentle in use of the line-item veto; (b) holding GOP capital-gains reduction to a measly 5 percent, no indexation; (c) unreforming welfare reform by one-third; (d) getting Trent Lott to join him in passing the buck to commissions on Social Security and Medicare.

5. Clinton's Albright foreign policy will be (a) happily hawkish as NATO expands eastward despite Moscow's grumbling; (b) decidedly dovish as commerce with Castro commences; (c) inept as U.S. pressure on Netanyahu encourages Arafat to demand a divided Jerusalem; (d) impotent as China lays a heavy hand on Hong Kong freedom with no U.S. economic retaliation.

6. The Supreme Court will decide (a) that in doctor-aided suicides, there is no "right to die"; (b) that libertarians are right in their objection to drug testing; (c) to reverse the Eighth Circuit and hold 7-to-2 that Paula Corbin Jones's lawsuit will have to wait until her accused harasser leaves office, Scalia and Ginsburg dissenting.

7. First Whitewater witness to crack and implicate the boss in a cover-up will be (a) hushed Webster Hubbell; (b) sick Jim Guy Tucker; (c) unpardonable Susan McDougal; (d) central Bruce Lindsey; (e) broke Maggie Williams; (f) resentful David Watkins; (g) dumped Harold Ickes.

8. President Clinton will (a) pardon co-conspirators and risk impeachment; (b) refuse pardons and risk co-conspiracy charge; (c) fire Ken Starr as ultra-partisan and risk firestorm; (d) let justice take its course and win in court; (e) laugh heartily when frustrated Starr files a criminal information in lieu of indictment.

9. Al Gore will (a) clash with Tennessee Sen. Fred Thompson in Senate dirty-money hearings; (b) begin subtly to put space between himself and a weakening Clinton; (c) replace command-and-control environmentalism with flexible industry incentives.

10. Winner of the year will be (a) "The English Patient," sweeping the Oscars; (b) dissident Wei Jingsheng, getting the Nobel Prize he needs to save his life in a Chinese prison; (c) Web-TV and the digital video disk that plays movies, as they zoom past cable TV and dish the satellite Whigs.

11. Power is realigned as (a) Daschle and Gephardt form coalition of united Democrats and rebellious moderate Republicans to back Clinton and overwhelm the GOP "majority"; (b) contrariwise, united Republicans join with blue-dog Democrats to overcome presidential vetoes; (c) Aleksandr Lebed makes surprise deal with the Communists, forcing Yeltsin to replace dull Prime Minister Chernomyrdin with lively Moscow Mayor Luzhkov and hated staff chief Chubais with reformer Yavlinsky.

12. President's popularity (a) drops under impact of congressional hearings on Asian connection and revelations of Independent Counsel; (b) rises slightly as new White House counsel employs balance-of-contrition strategy with ethically wounded Speaker Gingrich; (c) holds steady as people grow bored with scandal and economy stagnates, interest rates drop, stock market marches on up; (d) soars as Madonna's sympathetic portrayal of the first lady in Andrew Lloyd Webber's "The Trial of Hillary" smashes Broadway records.

My choices: 1-c, 2-c, 3-d, 4-d, 5-all, 6-c, 7-c, 8-d, 9-c, 10-a (to avoid a shutout), 11-none, 12-a. Remember: There's no fun in playing only favorites.

CHARLEY REESE

Benefits of relocating the capital to Fargo, N.D.

The best present the federal government could give the American people in 1997 is gridlock.

Since the probability that both the legislation Clinton wants and the legislation the Republicans want will be bad legislation — that estimate is based on past performances — the ideal situation for the American people will then be no new legislation at all.

Reese

In the past, I've often suggested that the nation's capital be relocated to Fargo, N.D. That would be an economic boon to the people of Fargo, whom I suspect could always use a boon and probably deserve one.

It would almost surely shorten the time members of the House and Senate would choose to stay in session. That would be a boon to the American people. We could use a boon or two these days.

The move would probably clear out a lot of lobbyists. I suspect fewer people would care to be lobbyists if they had to bundle up and fight their way through a blizzard to get to a congressman's office. Besides, it would be fun to see what a millionaire lawyer looks like attired in a parka, snow boots, mittens and a bomber's hat.

All we have to move to Fargo are the White House and the House and Senate. We can leave the bureaucrats in the District of Columbia. They can fax their budget requests to Congress. Putting some distance between the bureaucrats who actually do the work of government and the politicians would probably be more efficient, because government workers wouldn't have to spend so much time catering to congressional requests.

I know of what I speak because in my tawdry past, I was once a state bureaucrat. The only time we ever heard from legislators was when they wanted a picture for their office wall, or wanted to find a job for a campaign contributor or relative. Otherwise, they ignored us, including during the budget hearings, when they made it quite clear, by absences and inattention, that all the mounds of information they insisted we assemble were boring.

I believe it was the old "Iron Chancellor" of Germany, Bismarck, who said it was just as well people didn't see how their laws and sausages are made. Good advice. The only kind of person who would be favorably impressed by today's legislative process would be a budding young opportunist.

Except for book notes and an occasional conference, I've even given up on C-SPAN, as watching my leaders in action is entirely too depressing, and I can't afford Prozac.

I will say this in their favor, however. If ever there is a great religious revival in the country, politicians will be its instigator. No one watching them in action could possibly believe in man or reason.

Even an atheist would be driven to hope, if not believe, that there is a God by the awful prospect of having to rely on those characters to solve problems and avoid disasters.

Your average professional politician today reads polls instead of history, has ambitions rather than convictions or conscience and has never met a lobbyist or a banality he didn't embrace. Some of them are so dumb they don't even have to be bribed.

It's just as well the year is ending. Bill Clinton, who lives for campaigns, seems to be going into the politician's equivalent of postpartum depression. Bob Dole, who made a fool out of himself on the campaign trail, is now doing it on television, cheapening what's left of his reputation by appearing in commercials and being a foil on sitcoms.

Come back, Harry Truman, we need you.

Moral to story: Good idea to let sleeping ex-wives lie

By writing this story, I am not condoning what Gerald did. His conduct was nasty, cruel and vindictive. But it was also funny, and with most of today's news being about the frantic babbling of politicians, anything with a chuckle is welcome.

Gerald lives in a suburb of St. Paul, Minn. He's divorced, and it is an understatement to say that he doesn't think much of his ex-wife.

Royko

That isn't uncommon, of course. Many divorced people loathe their former spouses. That's one of the reasons I almost never write about divorce disputes.

It's my experience that you ask a divorced person who's fault the breakup was, about 99 percent of the time the man will say "hers," and the woman will say "his." Depending on whom you talk to, in every shattered marriage there was one saint and one fiend.

Or, as an old divorce lawyer once told me: "They all lie. The secret of success is to get your client to tell better lies."

But to get back to Gerald and the nasty thing he did, as reported in the St. Paul Dispatch.

Gerald wasn't violent, as some ex-husbands are. There are countless cases of men beating up boyfriends of their ex-wives. And, although it is more rare, ex-wives have been known to pluck a few tufts of hair from an ex-husband's new flame.

Gerald, to his credit, showed a bit more wit and imagination.

After Gerald was divorced by Sharon, she packed up and moved to another state, while he remained at their old address.

One day a letter came for Sharon. The decent thing would have been for Gerald to send the letter on. But Gerald had bitterness in his heart, as many divorced people do.

So he opened and read the letter.

It turned out to be a questionnaire from someone in Sharon's old high school class of 1958.

This person was putting together a newsletter that was to be sent to the other members of the class, bringing them all up to date on what their old classmates were doing 30 years later.

Those readers with a malicious nature have already guessed what Gerald did.

Yes, Gerald filled in the answers to the questionnaire.

Then he signed Sharon's name and returned it to the person putting together the newsletter.

And a few months later, more than 100 members of the class received the newsletter and read about each other. When they got to Sharon's responses, their jaws dropped.

There could be little doubt that Sharon sounded as if she had had the most interesting 30 years since graduation day.

In answer to "occupation," the answer was: "Retired on third husband's divorce settlement."

There was a question that asked: "Achievement most proud of:"

The answer: "My three divorces and how each time I married into more money to the point where I am now living on the $400,000 settlement and interest from my third divorce."

Another question asked for an "outrageous, unusual or interesting experience."

The response: "Going out to Virginia ... on my job and having an affair with two different guys while my third husband was back in Minnesota, working two jobs."

But Gerald hadn't even hit his stride. For the question about hobbies, he wrote:

"Nightclubbing, partying and looking for new and wealthier husbands."

And for "Secret ambition or fantasy," he wrote:

"Seeing if I can't get married as many times as Liz Taylor and gain my riches through divorces, not work."

When Sharon finally saw the newsletter, she said "eek," or something to that effect. Then she called her lawyer.

And now Gerald has been slapped with a $50,000 lawsuit by Sharon. She says that's what it will cost to soothe her embarrassment and mental anguish.

I supposed that if there is a moral to this story, it is that it's a good idea to let sleeping ex-wives lie.

And Gerald had better hope that when this $50,000 case comes to court, he draws a judge who either has a wicked sense of humor or a nasty ex-wife.

Doctors can't prescribe marijuana for medical uses, officials say

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration warned doctors Monday that new state laws allowing medical uses of marijuana in Arizona and California don't matter: the drug is still illegal to prescribe under federal law.

"We will not turn a blind eye toward our responsibility," Attorney General Janet Reno said in promising to go after doctors who prescribe smoking marijuana, especially in cases where abuse is suspected.

Physicians who counsel patients to use marijuana could be excluded from the Medicare and Medicaid programs and lose the right to prescribe drugs. Doctors also could face criminal charges, but Reno said federal prosecutors will decide such charges on a case by case basis, taking into account whether a true doctor-patient relationship exists — or whether unscrupulous physicians are simply out to sell pot for profit.

Voters in California and Arizona voted in November to ease restrictions on marijuana's use even as Clinton was trying to step up the war on drugs amid reports of increased marijuana use among teen-agers.

Retired Gen. Barry McCaffrey, who leads Clinton's anti-drug campaign, called the ballot measures "hoax initiatives" during a news conference with Reno and Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala.

"These propositions are not about compassion, they are about legalizing dangerous drugs," said McCaffrey, director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

But Dr. Jeffrey Singer, a Phoenix surgeon who was active in the movement to ease the strictures, said he was outraged by what he called the Clinton administration's "threats" to physicians.

Singer said Arizona's law was crafted so it wouldn't contradict the federal law. It merely says that a person arrested for possession should be released if he or she has a doctor's prescription, Singer said.

"If they're going to take away a doctor's license because he rendered his opinion on paper, that's a First Amendment issue," Singer said.

Act Up, an AIDS patient activist group, also protested.

"The president has declared war on people with AIDS and their doctors," said spokesman Steve Michael. "There is a drug war, but it needs to be fought in areas other than the doctor-patient relationship."

In California, Republican Attorney General Dan Lungren praised the Clinton administration for taking what he called a "tough and reasonable" stance.

Some research has suggested marijuana is useful in relieving internal eye pressure in glaucoma; for controlling nausea in cancer patients on chemotherapy; and for combating wasting, a severe weight loss associated with AIDS.

However, several groups of experts say there is no proven medical use for smoked marijuana. And better drugs exist to treat nausea, HIV-related wasting and glaucoma, said Dr. John Glaspy, medical director of the oncology center at University of California, Los Angeles.

Glaspy sometimes prescribes a legal drug that contains the active ingredient in marijuana, called THC, but only "once or twice a year."

Shalala, whose agency oversees the National Institutes of Health, contended "all available research has concluded that marijuana is dangerous to our health. Marijuana harms the brain, heart, lungs and immune system."

NIH has investigated claims about the possible benefit of smoked marijuana for a small number of symptoms, and will continue to do so, she said. But any government research must undergo rigorous peer review.

The country's main physicians' group, the American Medical Association, urged "federal funding of research to determine the validity of marijuana as an effective medical treatment."

Commerce Dept. sets new rules on export of encryption software

WASHINGTON (AP) — New federal rules covering the export of computer programs that can convert communications into secret code took effect Monday, but advocates of fewer restraints dismissed them as "a government shell game."

The rules, published in the Federal Register, establish procedures that companies can follow in order to get permission to export encryption products. They also transfer export control of some of these products from the State Department to the Commerce Department.

Encryption products are computer software and hardware that enable a customer to send and receive information that has been translated into a code. Such products allow secure transmission of information via telephone, computer and Internet.

Portions of the earlier rules were ruled unconstitutional recently by a federal judge in San Francisco because they contained no provisions for judicial review for those denied the export permits.

The new rules are almost identical to the old rules under the State Department, said Dave Banisar, an attorney with the Electronic Privacy Information Center, a Washington-based advocacy group that had sued seeking greater freedom to export encryption products.

"There's very little functional difference between the two," Banisar said. "Basically they're playing a shell game. They've just moved the pea under a different shell, but the rules are the same."

It was unclear if the earlier court decision is still in effect under the new rules.

"There may be some procedural problems with (the) decision," Banisar said. "We're waiting to see whether the Justice Department is going to try to have the case dismissed. Because the rules are essentially the same as they were before, the same problems the court found with the State Department rules remain."

U.S. financial and software companies have long argued that without the ability to produce strong encryption products for sale overseas they cannot compete in the global marketplace.

At the same time, law enforcement officials argued that encryption technology needs to be controlled so they can retain the power to unscramble messages that might deal with terrorism or criminal activity.

In effect, the Justice Department and others wanted to be assured that law enforcement wiretaps and other monitoring techniques would not be restricted due to sophisticated encryption.

Under the new rules, companies making encryption products can apply immediately for export permits, said William A. Reinsch of the Commerce Department. The permits will be re-examined every six months by a special team at Commerce to assure that the companies are complying with the encryption product export rules, he said.

However, in order to be allowed to export strong encryption products, companies would be required to give law enforcers access to an electronic "key" to unlock secure communications in the event of a national security or law enforcement emergency.

"This will assure that the encryption products essentially have another way in besides the front door," said Reinsch.

Three or four U.S. companies already have expressed an interest in obtaining the new export permits, he said. Commerce officials estimated that the worldwide market for encryption software and equipment is worth about $1.8 billion annually, with about half of those sales by the American companies.

The new rules formalize a policy that the Clinton administration announced on Oct. 1.

Stop doll before it eats again, federal safety officials say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal safety regulators offer this advice to parents across America — and their long-locked little girls — on how to muzzle their hair-munching dolls: disconnect the insatiable toy's batteries.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission stopped short Monday of issuing a warning about Cabbage Patch Snacktime Kids — the most lenient action it could have taken.

Nor did it issue a recall on the toy, which would be the most severe penalty the agency could impose.

But the CPSC said in a statement that it will continue investigating complaints in which parents have reported that the pie-faced dolls have started chomping on children's hair after gobbling down meals of ersatz carrots and french fries.

The CPSC said it has been made aware of 35 such incidents from around the country, a higher number than previously known. No serious injuries have been reported.

Stopping the doll's relentless chewing can be achieved by pulling on the toy's backpack, which houses the batteries, and disconnecting it from the body, the CPSC said. Doing so deactivates the chewing action.

More than a half-dozen hair-eating episodes have been reported since Christmas in Florida, Indiana, Connecticut and South Carolina, and momentum is building for some sort of official action.

Connecticut's consumer protection agency called on Mattel Inc., the doll's manufacturer, Monday to issue a warning about the hair-eating danger on the toy's box, along with instructions on how to disable the batteries.

Mattel, of El Segundo, Calif., has said its products undergo rigorous safety testing.

Birds that nest in the grasslands find their habitats under siege

by Les Line
N.Y. Times News Service

KENNEBUNK, Me. — There's an "uppie," Dr. Peter Vickery said as a mournful whistle washed over the Kennebunk Plains of southeastern Maine like a tendril of ocean fog. "Uppie" is shorthand for the upland sandpiper, a lanky shorebird with an atypical terrestrial life style for its kind: it usually gets no closer to the shore than this blueberry barren eight miles from the Atlantic coast.

But like the grassy fields and old pastures that the bird needs for feeding and nesting when it returns in May after wintering on the Argentine pampas, the upland sandpiper is vanishing from the Northeast as a result of changes in farming practices, the return of abandoned agricultural land to forest, and residential and industrial development.

Vickery is an ecologist with the Massachusetts Audubon Society, and the region's troubled grassland-nesting birds are his special concern. In New York, for example, the number of upland sandpipers declined by an estimated 84 percent from 1966 to 1995, according to the North American Breeding Bird Survey.

In Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Jersey, the open expanses of a few municipal and military airfields are the only remaining sites that support significant breeding populations of the bird, which is listed as endangered, threatened or as a "species of special concern" in every state from Maine to Virginia.

The upland sandpiper is not alone. The eastern meadowlark, with its bright yellow vest, is no longer a familiar sight in rural Connecticut, where its population plummeted by 97 percent in the 30-year period covered by the survey.

The count of grasshopper sparrows, a species named for its faint, insect-like voice, dropped by 97 percent in New York. The field sparrow, with its sweet and trilling song, has declined by 92 percent in Vermont.

Of the entire suite of grassland-nesting birds in the Northeast, only the bobolink and savanna sparrow appear to be holding their own. Among other species considered to be in jeopardy are the northern harrier, barn owl, short-eared owl, horned lark, sedge wren and Henslow's sparrow.

The loss of grassland birds is not unique to the Northeast. While the mix of species varies among regions, steep population declines are common across the shortgrass prairie of the Great Plains and the tallgrass prairie and farmlands of the Midwest. The difference is that preserving and restoring native prairie has long been a high-profile cause with conservationists. But until recently, the disappearance of open habitat and its birdlife in the Northeast aroused relatively little concern.

Vickery, who recently received a grant from the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation to inventory grasslands in the Northeast, described the situation this way:

"There is a perception that these open areas are an ephemeral artifact of European settlement and that grassland birds invaded the Eastern states from the Western prairies after the forest was cleared, so it doesn't make any difference if the upland sandpiper or grasshopper sparrow disappears from New England. But there is convincing evidence that grasslands were a conspicuous part of the Eastern landscape long before Colonial times."

He pointed to the Kennebunk Plains as a glacial sandplain that was kept open for centuries by wildfires and, in more recent times, has been maintained by mowing and burning for commercial blueberry production. But Vickery said the site, which he called one of the richest grassland bird areas in New England, was nearly lost to developers in the 1980s before the housing market bottomed out and the land was bought by the State of Maine and the Nature Conservancy for a wildlife management area.

His research, published in the journal Conservation Biology, has also shown that open areas need to be at least 500 acres "to support a full array of grassland birds," including upland sandpipers, grasshopper sparrows and birds of prey like the harrier. But Vickery found that only 1 percent of the hayfields and pastures and 8 percent of the blueberry barrens in coastal Maine were more than 160 acres. And he warned that continued heavy use of pesticides by blueberry growers to kill competing plants "will have adverse effects for grassland bird populations."

He cited U.S. Agriculture Department figures showing that grassland acreage in New York and New England has declined by 60 percent since the mid-1930s. In New York, the number of farms has declined 25 percent since 1980, to 36,000 from 48,000, and the amount of land in hayfields or permanent pasture dropped to more than 2.2 million acres, from about 3.2 million acres, in that 16-year period, according to the state Department of Agriculture and Marketing.

In addition, grassland bird experts say that modern hayfields can be death traps because farmers often mow new alfalfa varieties before nesting adults can raise their broods, and that there is not enough time between second and third cuttings for the birds to renest successfully. In a New York study, early hay-cropping activities destroyed 94 percent of the bobolink eggs and nestlings, but 80 percent of the young birds survived in undisturbed fields.

A strong case that "grassland birds are an ancient component of biodiversity on the heavily forested East Coast" is made in a paper by Dr. Robert Askins, a zoology professor at Connecticut College in New London. The paper is to be published in 1997 as part of a symposium volume on grassland bird ecology and conservation, edited by Vickery.

Askins wrote: "Detailed historical accounts and analysis of pollen deposits show that open grasslands existed on the East Coast at the time of European settlement. Extensive grasslands resulted from burning and agricultural clearing by Indians. Natural disturbances, such as wildfire and beaver activity, produced grasslands even before Indians cleared the forest."

One of the largest grasslands in the Northeast, he said, was the Hempstead Plains of Long Island, which supported a rich community of grassland birds until it was subdivided or plowed for truck farms after World War II.

Of the original 50,000 acres, only two parcels totaling about 65 acres survive. In the 1600s, Askins said, "a savanna where occasional large oaks broke an expanse of tall, wiry grass stretched for 15 miles along the Quinnipiac River north of New Haven." The area became almost desert-like after decades of overgrazing and was subsequently developed, he said.

In addition to clearing fields for maize, Indians in the East burned large areas to create open woodlands and grassland for hunting, Askins said. One Connecticut settler, he noted, described plains burned by Indians "to take deer and other small game" where grasses grew four feet high. Askins suggested that many species of grassland birds might have colonized the region after "the patterns of Indian land use observed in the 1600s began to emerge about 5,000 years ago."

A few prairie birds have spread eastward from the Midwest since the 1800s, Askins wrote. But he said, "There is no similar evidence for invasion of the East by the species that are most abundant and widespread in Eastern grasslands."

Upland sandpipers, grasshopper sparrows, bobolinks, eastern meadowlarks and other common grassland birds, he said, were reported by the earliest ornithologists who documented the distribution of birds on the East Coast.

Since blueberry barrens and a few other areas are the only remaining semi-natural open habitat in the Northeast, regional populations of grassland birds will have to be maintained by managing hay meadows, fallow fields and airfields, he said.

Using scarce resources for such habitats "may seem unwise to many conservationists who are accustomed to protecting forests and wilderness areas," he said. "But a large number of species of birds, insects, plants and other organisms depend on these areas," he added, "because people have destroyed most of the native grassland habitat."

University closing

BIG SANDY — Ambassador University, founded by the late televangelist Herbert W. Armstrong, will close its doors after the spring semester, the school's board of regents decided Monday.

Regents also reluctantly decided to place for sale the 50-year-old university, located about 20 miles northeast of Tyler.

"If Ambassador cannot be sold as a going institution during its final semester, it will be closed in May and the physical plant sold," the school said in a news release.

Although the school has enough resources to continue through May, the school said its decision was "based on economic realities and national trends in higher education."

Regents tied the drying up of the school's money base to the end of its affiliation with the Worldwide Church of God. The WCG no longer provides financial subsidies and the decreasing membership of the church has triggered declining enrollment of the school, officials said.

Enrollment went from 950 students in 1994-95 to 650 this year.

The WCG had been known for strict adherence to practices that originated in the Old Testament, including observances of the seventh-day sabbath, the feasts of Israel and dietary laws that prohibited pork, shellfish and other foods considered "unclean."

Hero's son keeps Audie's story alive

■ Audie Murphy's son makes first trip to his father's hometown museum.

Associated Press

GREENVILLE, Texas — The first-time visitor to the Audie Murphy Room at Greenville's Walworth Harrison Library was obviously moved by what he saw as he entered the area.

Terry Murphy, oldest son of World War II's most decorated hero, reminisced earlier this month about the different photographs, stopping to answer questions about himself and his famous father, who was born in Kingston, north of Greenville.

At one point he stopped to sign a petition asking the U.S. Postal Service to honor his father with a stamp. He took a closer look at the medals encased in the center of the room.

Other times, the West Hills, Calif., resident would stop on his own to react to a photograph.

"This is me — me again," Murphy, 44, said.

Can you remember the name of the dog?

"The dog was named Eric ... I am wearing custom cowboy clothes ... this was at a ranch in California. We had 800 acres there ... That was at a corral where dad trained his horses. Les Hilton was one of the trainers. He was the guy who trained Mr. Ed.

"We would go there and do some riding," Murphy said pointing to a photograph of himself and his father.

"I have some other photos from that day with me riding and my hat falling off ... that was quite a day," Murphy added.

Another photo Murphy stopped at showed Audie and his two sons, Terry and James, at a birthday party.

Terry was asked whose birthday it was.

"My birthday is on March 14 and my brother's is March 23. It looks like that is for both of us," Murphy said.

In mid-December, Murphy made his first visit ever to Greenville and his first visit to Texas in 23 years. He is the president of the Audie Murphy Research Foundation and was in Texas doing research along with Larryann C. Willis, secretary/treasurer of the foundation.

On the trip to Texas, Terry Murphy had stopped in Dallas to talk with a few old friends of his father. Ms. Willis said there were so many people in the Greenville area that they could not stop and meet with all of them one at a time, but instead invited them to meet at the library.

Audie L. Murphy, son of a Texas sharecropper, was born in Kingston, just north of Greenville, and enlisted in the Army at the old Greenville Post Office.

After returning from the war, Audie went on to star in movies,

Fire destroys storage unit

Brian Adcock/Reporter-Telegram

Firefighters battled this blaze at a home in the 2500 block of Hicks Avenue Monday afternoon. County Fire Marshall Dale Little said the fire began while the owner, Francisco Javier Morales, was burning trash. A storage facility was completely destroyed and a house under construction in front of the storage facility suffered smoke damage.

Day in the life of Roger Henderson

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Regular customers at the Midland Drive Albertson's Food Store location often engage in friendly dialogue with Roger Henderson, 29, front end co-manager for the store.

Between family, church, work and building a new addition on his home, Henderson's days are as full as they can be — yet he still manages to show a friendly face to the hundreds of people he meets each day, making a lasting impression on many of them.

"That's just me — I don't treat people like strangers," Henderson said. "Pretty much everybody knows me," he joked.

"I just like people ... I can along with anybody," he said. "And ... when you're at work, I've always believed you should give 110 percent," he added.

Henderson's job is to help oversee the front end operations, such as checking, but shoppers often find him, sacking groceries, checking or even cutting meat.

"I do whatever I have to do to make things run smoothly," Henderson said.

Having studied under local seminarians, Henderson is deeply involved with the East Side Church of Christ. He teaches Bible classes and fills other roles at the church. "I do whatever needs to be done, pretty much as needed," he said.

Henderson has gained local notoriety for his volunteer efforts as a radio preacher at station KJBC.

After moving to the 4 p.m. to midnight shift at work, however, Henderson was forced to give up the 7 a.m. radio spot.

Henderson and his wife, Renita, have two children, Jeremy, 6, and Jericka, 4. And another addition to the family is expected in the next

Educators worry about backlog in complaint probes

■ Officials claim that a lack of resources is hampering efforts to clear old cases.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — A backlog of nearly 1,100 complaints against teachers and school administrators being investigated by the state has created a dangerous situation for students and is unfair to school personnel, educators say.

"It's a real concern," said Eddie Orum, former principal of Austin's LBJ High School.

After being accused of mismanagement, Orum settled his case with the school district. But he recently found out that the State Board of Educator Certification still has an open file on him.

"Someone's career could be in jeopardy. You want closure. It's the kind of thing that really pushes good educators into other fields," Orum told the Austin American-Statesman.

Board officials say the backlog is due to limited resources and the need to proceed carefully in cases that could damage reputations.

The board, which can recommend that an individual's certification be revoked or suspended, has only three investigators.

"It's a fine line you have to walk between due process and protecting kids," said Jim Nelson, board chairman.

As of Dec. 11 the board had 350 cases that were two years old and 64 that were at least three years old. The oldest cases date to 1989.

The older cases include numerous accusations of sexual misconduct involving children and an alleged theft valued at more than $20,000.

Maggie Montelongo, the board's director of investigations, said an 11-point priority system promotes the quickest action for the most serious cases.

Allegations that indicate a potential danger for students has the highest priority, while allegations of violence are assigned a priority of two and drug violations get a priority of three.

"The resources are such that we can't do them all at once," Montelongo said.

— I mean, what do these families talk about when they get together each holiday season?

— Just a thought: Jimmy Carter strikes me as one of those increasingly rare Christians who actually lives his life the way the Bible says Christians are supposed to live their lives.

— It was Henry Fielding who said, "Make money your god and it will plague you like the devil."

— My mother also says that a lot.

— The idea of buying Christmas ornaments after Christmas, just because they are on for half price, doesn't seem like much fun to me.

— Speaking of sales, why is it that any time I stroll through a store nothing I like is on sale? Everything else is marked down 40 percent, mind you, but the one thing I come across that I like is the only thing in the store that is still full price.

— When there is a dead fish in an aquarium, do the other fish notice?

— You know you are not exactly a "fix-it" kind of guy when your personal tool box, which has rusted itself shut from inactivity, consists of a hammer, a wrench, a screwdriver and a pair of pliers.

— Still, like all men, when given the opportunity, you love to say, "Hold on a second, let me go get my tools."

— Yeah, right.

— And today's final quote comes from Jack London, who once said, "A bone to the dog is not charity. Charity is the bone shared with the dog, when you are just as hungry as the dog."

including "To Hell and Back," which is based on his life story, and to write country music.

He died in a plane crash on Memorial Day in 1971 and is buried in Arlington National Cemetery.

The Audie Murphy Research Foundation is a non-profit, public benefit corporation established for the purpose of collecting, preserving and making available to the public historical information concerning Audie Murphy.

The foundation is attempting to locate and interview people who knew Audie along with copying photographs, letters, home movies, news reel clips, radio shows and other documents or memorabilia. Much material already has been lost, Ms. Willis said.

"Universal Pictures has given the foundation blanket approval to copy and reproduce any movie stills anywhere," Ms. Willis said. "Universal Studios unfortunately destroyed all of their negatives and there are only about 50 pictures of Audie left out of 2,000 to 3,000 they had."

Other privately-held material has been destroyed in fires, floods and an earthquake.

"We have been making copies of everything we can and then storing the copies in more than one place. The (Greenville) library is one of those places. We also are working with the Texas Collection in Waco, the Hillsboro Library and the Cowboy Hall of Fame has called and wants to help. We do have several locations that are going to be there forever," Ms. Willis said.

She noted the latest technology makes it easy to make copies of pictures without a negative.

"It is very easy now to make a copy. Also, don't assume we have anything. The only way for us to find some of this information is through networking so we are asking for your help," Willis said.

His work in the foundation already has had a side bonus for Terry Murphy who noted the recent resurgence in interest about his father.

"My brother lives about 40 miles away but we had gotten out of touch. This has gotten us back together," Murphy said. "It's nice to have a brother again."

UT scientist hunts remains in Africa

AUSTIN (AP) — Since the 3.18 million-year-old skeleton of "Lucy" was found in Ethiopia, maybe her relatives will be in the neighboring country of Eritrea.

At least that's what one Texas scientist hopes as he heads to the African country this week.

Richard Buffler, a geophysicist at the University of Texas, said there should be early human remains in Eritrea because of its prime location — nestled between Ethiopia and the Red Sea.

A wealth of human fossils have been found in Ethiopia, confirming for many scientists the idea that Eastern Africa was humanity's cradle.

Buffler and co-investigator Robert Walter of the Institute of Human Origins in Berkeley, Calif., will be making one of the country's first systematic geological surveys to establish what the ancient environment was like. They will be working with scientists from Eritrea and Great Britain.

"We'll be walking around looking at rocks to get a feel for what the climate setting was when the fossils were living," Buffler said. "Was it a woodland or a savannah? You can tell from the sediments."

"If I'm lucky, I might get to take in a movie," Henderson joked.

His friendly encounters with strangers are not limited to the store, however. Wherever he goes, Henderson always finds himself engaged in good-natured banter ... making friends out of strangers.

"I guess I've just got that kind of friendly face," he joked.

Cigar store cowboy belts out tunes from Idaho

Chuck Woodbury
NY Times News Service

LEWISTON, Idaho — I walked into a cigar shop here and the guy behind the counter sang me a country song.

I had been killing a little time downtown, when I spotted a sign in the window of the G&W Cigar and Tobacco Store: "Visit our 'Walk In' Cedar Humidor. It's Unbelievable!!!" So, I decided to check it out.

A mere half-hour later I was swept into a hidden, state-of-the-art digital TV and audio recording studio, listening to a country music artist sing me his newest song. In out-of-the-way Lewiston, Idaho, for Pete's sake!

The performer was CD McCloud, the "singing cigar store cowboy."

He's a personable, talkative, 6-ft.,7-inch fellow in cowboy boots and a baseball cap who sells cigars half the year with his mother in the old J.C. Penney store in downtown Lewiston — next door to Conway Rent to Own, where the motto is: "Want to deal? See Uncle Sidley."

He sells cigars, that is, when he's not on the road as the opening act for guys like Ricky Van Shelton, Hank Thompson, Billy Joe Royal and Clinton Gregory.

His first three single releases reached the top five in the National Independent Top 40 country charts.

Unknown to most of his cigar customers — most of whom don't even know he's a celebrity — is his basement record and TV studio. Where J.C. Penney customers once shopped for shirts and socks, CD now records songs and tapes television programs.

For a while, he syndicated a TV show called Nashville Northwest, and the stages are still in place, hay bales and all.

CD gave me a tour, and when we got to the control room, he sat me down, handed me headphones, and then cranked up his recording equipment and let the music fly.

The cigar salesman of a few minutes ago, along with the taped accompaniment of his Nashville band, performed his latest tune, "Hollywood Squares." It has a Texas swing beat that set my foot a tappin.'

"It's going out to 2,600 stations this week," he said later. His other hits include "Silver Stallion," "Cowboy In The Saddle," "She's Livin' It Up," and "Don't Get Behind in Your Lovin'."

This Christmas he released a remake of Bing Crosby's classic, "It's Beginning To Look A Lot Like Christmas." "I bet I'll top the country charts on that one," he said.

CD and I relaxed in a backstage area and he told me about cigars and country music. He opened the cigar shop 23 years ago after graduating from Lewiston's Lewis-Clark State College.

There was no tobacco shop in town, and somebody suggested he open one. So he plunked down $400 to convince the owner of a Main Street building that he was serious. Within a year, his mother, Bessie McCloud-Smith, got involved. Today she owns the business, although CD and the rest of the family — brothers, nieces and nephews — help out.

CD's the expert cigar buyer, taking occasional trips to Central America to make deals.

Right in the center of G&W Cigar & Tobacco is the huge humidor that drew me into the store in the first place. It's the largest one in Idaho. "I'd guess we have about 15,000 cigars in there," CD said.

Cigars sell from a buck to about $25 each, and they come from the Dominican Republic, Honduras, Puerto Rico, Costa Rica and Nicaragua. But not Cuba, of course, because of the embargo enacted by President Kennedy during the Cuban missile crisis.

CD thinks cigars imported from other countries today are as good as those from Cuba.

"There's a mystique to Havanas," he said. "But what happened is that a lot of the cigar families moved out of Cuba, and they took their seeds and their manufacturing ways with them, and now they're producing the same quality of cigar."

Although CD has been a musician since he was a child, it wasn't until ten years ago when he won $50,000 on the European version of TV's Star Search that it became his primary profession.

Oddly, though, with all his hits, CD doesn't have a recording contract or even one album to his name. He told me it has to do with the right deal coming along that will help him reach the big time, yet allow him to keep the independence he treasures.

DEAR ABBY

Gentlemen of U.S. Navy do treat female students with respect

By Abigail VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: In light of all the negative publicity given to some of the American servicemen with regard to their ungentlemanly behavior where women are concerned, I would like to share an experience I had recently.

VanBuren

I am a female American college student studying abroad at a program in Spain. Recently, three girlfriends and I went down south to the British colony of Gibraltar to sightsee. There, in a lively bar, we encountered about 40 U.S. Navy submarine men who were temporarily stationed there.

We four girls started a conversation with these Navy men centered around the men's families — they all carried pictures of their girlfriends or wives back home; some even had snapshots of their babies.

While my father may have been leery about his daughter sitting with 40 men, I felt entirely at ease. Not once in the course of the evening was there a lewd remark or an inappropriate gesture directed at us girls. After spending a few hours at this bar, we all went dancing. Again, not a disrespectful hand was laid on my friends or me. To top off the night, when we girls were ready to go back to our hotel, the entire group walked us through the dimly lit streets and saw us safely to our doorstep.

Abby, without a doubt that was one of the most remarkable nights I had in my four-month stay in Europe. The U.S. Navy is to be commended for grooming its men to be respectable, honorable and chivalrous gentlemen. Thank you to the submarine crew of the James K. Polk. — LORA WILSON, GRANTS PASS, ORE.

DEAR LORA: All too often the rotten apples in the barrel get the headlines while the good apples go unnoticed. Thank you for writing to relate your positive experience.

DEAR ABBY: First, I want to thank you for a column that benefits all ages, sexes and races.

Last year you printed Edgar Guest's poem titled "It Couldn't Be Done." Being an optimistic person, I want to share a poem I ran across. (The author is unknown.) I hope you enjoy it. — LINDA SCHRADER, TAMPA, FLA.

IT CAN BE DONE

The man who misses all the fun,
Is he who says, "It can't be done."
In solemn pride he stands aloof,
And greets each venture with reproof.
Had he the power he'd efface,
The history of the human race.
We'd have no radio or motor cars,
No street lit by electric stars;
No telegraph nor telephone,
We'd linger in the age of stone.
The world would sleep if things were run,
By men who say, "It can't be done."

DEAR READERS: Have a happy, healthy and prosperous 1997. And remember, if you're driving, don't drink; and if you're drinking, don't drive.

For an excellent guide to becoming a better conversationalist and a more attractive person, order "How to Be Popular." Big Bend residents need crossings

BOQUILLAS, Mexico (AP) — Jose Falcon gazes across the Rio Grande from the shaded patio of his restaurant and considers what would happen if his tiny, 100-year-old village and its 40 families were cut off from the trickle of tourists who arrive in rowboats every day.

"If they close the border, that's it," Falcon says. "Boquillas is closed. Finished."

Citing its efforts to catch drug smugglers along the Texas border, the U.S. Customs Service has voiced the intent to stop casual border crossings crucial to such Mexican towns as Boquillas, nearby Santa Elena and, further upriver, Paso Lajitas.

While the U.S. Border Patrol recognizes crossings at so-called Class B ports, Customs officials say anyone crossing the border must do so at the nearest Customs checkpoint or risk a year in federal prison and up to $10,000 in fines.

The policy, which apparently conflicts with Border Patrol policy, has been in effect since 1986 but has never been enforced in this region.

Roger Maier, Customs spokesman in El Paso, said the recent initiative stemmed from several drug seizures near an unguarded mining bridge at La Linda, east of Boquillas. The bridge has since been shut down, but Customs' interest was piqued.

"For a time there was an implied belief that these crossings were legal," Maier said. "We needed to let people know that entering the United States there is illegal, so we've taken efforts to do that."

"We understand the concerns of the people living there, but the law is very clear."

Since the nearest official port, Presidio, is some 50 miles away, the Customs policy means a quick trip across the river for groceries or to visit a relative could become a journey at least 100 miles long, half of that on unpaved roads.

It's uncertain if Customs will act on the policy — the agency has no agents assigned to the region aside from Presidio.

But longtime Big Bend residents say any such action would erode the cross-border interdependence and trust that people have developed over many years of living together in the harsh Chihuahuan Desert.

"The Mexicans down there are closer to Alpine than they are to Chihuahua City. The same goes for the people in Alpine and Marathon, who are removed from Austin," said Kirby Warnock, a Dallas resident and part-time West Texas rancher whose family has been in the Big Bend since the late 1800s.

"There may be a river there that says it's a boundary, but there have been crossings there for centuries."

The economies of Boquillas and Santa Elena are almost entirely dependent on tourism dollars that flow from Big Bend National Park. About 10 percent of park visitors pay a $3 fee to Mexican boatmen who row them across the Rio Grande.

Once across, tourists may wander around town, buy a plate of tacos or a colorful yarn bracelet for $1, and head back to the park.

Miguel Ureste, who makes a living driving tourists between Boquillas and the river bank in his old Ford Bronco, said there would be no work in the town if not for tourism. Mines in the nearby Sierra del Carmen that once kept the town going went bust more than 50 years ago.

"I'd have to move somewhere else," said the 32-year-old, who once went to Dallas looking for work but returned to Boquillas because of the tourist trade. "Nothing to do here."

Villagers, at least 150 miles removed from the nearest Mexican cities, also rely on the national park for such necessities as mail, telephones, milk and medicine. Many in Paso Lajitas also have family members living just across the river in Lajitas, Texas.

Residents on the U.S. side, if not quite so dependent on Mexico, also benefit from cross-river trade. Rafting and tour companies in Lajitas, Terlingua and Study Butte for years have taken visitors on brief visits to Mexico, and other businesses have long made a living off trading with neighbors across the river.

Bill Ivey, who operates a wax refinery in Alpine, was one of two business owners to receive written warnings from Customs that he was breaking the law.

Ivey used to buy raw wax from Mexicans who harvest the candelilla plant that grows only in this desert. For years he brought truckloads of wax across the river at Lajitas and drove it on paved Texas highways to declare it at the Customs office in Presidio.

But because of the Customs threat a few months ago, Ivey now purchases more expensive materials in Presidio or El Paso rather than risk getting caught by federal agents.

Ivey said the initiative has cost him profits, but the effect has been harsher for those who used to sell him wax.

"It's a very widespread area of very poor folks," he said. "For many people that was the only means of support they have. They have only really one alternative and — here's the irony of it all — it's the drug business."

Residents here also contend that the Customs policy has no effect on drug traffic. Smugglers who disregard drug laws aren't likely to pick official checkpoints for their border crossings, the rationale goes.

"This kind of stuff comes and goes," Warnock said. "What it mainly does is inconvenience a way of life for people who have been doing this 200 years. I would say it's pure P.R. ... It's all a sound-bite."

Valerie Naylor, chief of public interpretation at Big Bend, said the region is likely no different than any other part of the Texas border when it comes to drugs.

"We would be naive to say that drugs never cross into the park," Ms. Naylor said. "But it's not an area of major activity. This is a very remote area.

"The majority of people who are crossing from both directions are law-abiding citizens who are going across the border for personal reasons."

She said park rangers continue to distribute maps and brochures of Boquillas and Santa Elena, along with a new warning regarding the Customs policy.

StockQuote HotLine

WHAT IS STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE?

Stockquote Hotline gives you the latest stock prices direct from the wires of the Associated Press. Over 9,000 stocks are listed from NYSE, AmEx, and OTC sources; all are available 24 hours a day. You can receive up to 10 quotes with one easy call.

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE:

1) Call the Stockquote Hotline at 560-2400; enter the category number which is 9988

2) You will be asked to enter your stock ticker number. These are based in industry standard symbols, which can be found in a Standard & Poor's Ticker guide, or by calling your local stock broker.

3) Once you've entered the numerical code for the ticker symbol, press the Star Key (*) and you will hear the current price and net change from the last Associated Press update, which is a few minutes behind market activity.

4) After the stock is quoted, you will be asked to enter another ticker symbol. You now have 2 options.
- You may request a quote for another stock by repeating steps 2 & 3
- You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more pressing the Star Key (*).

Now the volume, high and low will be given, and then you will be asked to enter another ticker code.
- You may enter up to 10 ticker symbols per call.

5) To exit Stockquote Hotline, simply hang up the phone

Gas prices fall

NEW YORK — Natural gas futures prices fell on the New York Mercantile Exchange Monday, pressured by continuing mild weather across the United States.

February crude reached a contract high in thin preholiday trading.

Natural gas prices were lower, with contracts for delivery in February settling at $2.677 per 1,000 cubic feet, down 30.7 cents.

Crude oil for delivery in February was 15 cents higher at $25.37 per barrel.

AT&T jobs

NEW YORK — Despite cutting thousands of jobs, AT&T Corp. will end the year with roughly the same number of employees it had at the start because of strong hiring in growth areas such as the Internet.

AT&T had 128,200 workers last year, about the same number it had at the end of its third quarter in late September.

The company cut about 7,700 jobs this year, but hiring in its wireless, Internet, customer-care and local phone operations offset the losses, spokesman Jim Byrnes said.

AT&T still plans to cut an additional 9,300 jobs over the next two years.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — The dollar hit another 45-month high against the yen Monday, reflecting more pessimism about Japan's economy and a move by Japanese investors out of their currency before a weeklong market holiday.

The dollar ended little changed in other foreign-exchange dealings.

The dollar traded as high as 116.18 yen, the strongest level since March 1993, before easing slightly to 116.15 yen in New York, up from 115.50 Friday.

The dollar initially strengthened against the mark but ended slightly weaker at 1.5555 marks, down from 1.5558. The pound cost $1.6915, down marginally from its four-year high of $1.6929 Friday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Friday: 1.3499 Swiss francs, up from 1.3495; 5.2415 French francs, down from 5.2470; 1,529.00 Italian lire, unchanged. 1.3702 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3688.

Stocks retreat

NEW YORK — A late wave of year-end profit-taking pulled most stock measures lower Monday, denying several indexes new record highs on the next-to-last trading day of 1996.

The Dow Jones industrial average spent most of the session with a modest gain, but was down 11.54 at 6,549.37 by the closing bell, having held a gain of about 20 points just 15 minutes earlier. On Friday, the barometer of 30 big U.S. companies finished at a record high for the first time in a month, bringing the year's advance to about 28 percent.

Broader-market indexes also slid into Monday's close, erasing gains that would have given some measures their first record highs in a month.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by more than a 5-to-4 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume was light at 339.01 million shares.

The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index fell 2.94 to 753.85, and the NYSE's composite index fell 0.68 to 397.42. The American Stock Exchange's market value index rose 1.53 to 583.46.

The Nasdaq composite index fell 3.63 to 1,287.75.

Economic indicators rise in November

■ Sales of existing homes are headed for new record in 1996.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Sales of existing homes appear headed for a new record in 1996, according to reports Monday that also suggest moderate economic growth in the new year.

"All in all, it's the way to end the year," said Robert G. Dederick, economic consultant for Northern Trust Co. in Chicago. "The economy's on an uptrend, but not too steep a one. It keeps employment full, but inflation at bay."

The National Association of Realtors reported sales of previously owned single-family homes rose 1.8 percent to 4.04 million at a seasonally adjusted annual rate.

The increase reversed a five-month string of declines, including a dip to a 3.97 million rate in October. Analysts had expected little change.

Still, except for October, sales have remained above the 4 million rate for eight straight months. The Realtors forecast 1996 sales will total 4.09 million, breaking the 3.99 million record set in 1978.

Meanwhile, the Conference Board reported separately in New York that the Index of Leading Indicators edged up 0.1 percent in November after remaining unchanged a month earlier. The index is designed to forecast economic activity six to nine months in advance.

November marked the 10th straight month without a decline and analysts said the advance was new evidence of moderate growth with little inflation.

"It's the same old story," Dederick contended. "The economy continues to plod along ... but that's what we want to see."

Russell K. Booth, the Realtors president, said "the housing market is in fine shape" compared to the 3.72 million sales rate last January.

"Consumer confidence is strong once again and this is resulting in heavy activity in markets coast to coast," he added. Indeed, sales were up in every region except for a 4.8 percent dip in the Northeast.

The government reports on November sales of new homes on Tuesday and many analysts expect a 3.6 percent increase to a 740,000 annual rate. If so, sales will have remained above the 700,000 rate for 10 months for the first time since the period ending September 1979.

The median price of an existing home in November was $117,400, up from $116,600 in October and $114,300 a year earlier. The median is the midpoint, meaning half of the homes cost more and half cost less.

The Realtors are projecting a $117,600 median price for 1996, a 4.2 percent increase over $112,900 in 1995.

Regionally, in addition to the Northeast, sales jumped 4.9 percent in the Midwest to a 1.07 million rate. They were up 4.5 percent in the West to 920,000 and 0.7 percent in the South to 1.46 million.

The November leading index included revisions that replaced two components — sensitive materials prices and unfilled durable goods orders — with one measuring the difference between 10-year Treasury bond interest rates and the short-term federal funds rate.

Higher stock prices were the biggest contributor to the November gain, followed by increased money supply, growing consumer expectations and an increase in building permits. The new interest-rate component was the biggest drain on the index.

The index's November reading of 102.6 compares with revised October and September levels of 102.5. The index operates from a base of 100, set in 1992.

Two sister indexes, the coincident and lagging indexes, also rose. The index of coincident indicators, which looks at the economy's current condition, rose 0.3 percent in November and the lagging indicators index, which looks backwards, rose 0.1 percent for the month.

AT&T finals spinoff of NCR Corp.

N.Y. Times News Service

DAYTON, Ohio — Dayton regains a Fortune 500 company Tuesday as AT&T Corp. completes the long-awaited spinoff of NCR Corp., a legendary company that seemed headed for oblivion only 18 months ago.

AT&T Tuesday will complete the spinoff, first announced in September 1995, by distributing 101 million shares of new NCR stock to 3.3 million AT&T shareholders. Each shareholder, including many former NCR employees, will receive one share of NCR stock for each 16 shares of AT&T owned.

Then, on Thursday, NCR stock will begin regular trading on the New York Stock Exchange after a five year absence. The stock will trade under the ticker symbol NCR.

NCR Chairman and Chief Executive Lars Nyberg, a transplanted Swede many credit with rescuing the 112-year-old computer maker, will mark the occasion by ringing the trading session's closing bell. Local NCR employees will watch the event via satellite during an afternoon rally at recently renovated NCR world headquarters, a company spokesman said.

NCR stock has been trading on a preliminary, or when-issued, basis since Dec. 11. It has traded as high as $40.75. It closed Monday at $35.12, down 25 cents.

NCR's return to regular trading on the Big Board closes one tumultuous period for the company and presages another.

AT&T acquired NCR for $7.4 billion in September 1991 after a lengthy takeover battle. During the next five years, the once-proud and patriarchal company lost a stunning $3.85 billion and shed thousands of workers as it adopted AT&T's management style and strayed from its core markets in the banking and retail industries.

But after Nyberg became NCR's fifth chairman and chief executive in five years in June 1995, he worked quickly to right the foundering company. He initiated a painful restructuring that eliminated 8,500 jobs but also cut annual costs by $600 million and refocused the company and its remaining 38,900 employees.

Nyberg's plan stemmed the huge losses, boosted profit margins and let the company post a slim $3 million operating profit for the first nine months of this year on revenue of $4.9 billion.

NCR plans to release year-end results in mid to late January.

With independence comes vulnerability. The new NCR will face increasing competition and rapidly changing market conditions without AT&T's deep pockets to back it up.

A resurgent IBM Corp., for example, is nibbling away at NCR's lead in data warehousing, while Interbold, a joint venture between IBM and Canton-based Diebold Inc., is gaining strength in the automatic teller machine market. NCR, the world's largest supplier of ATMs, lost market share last year, according to industry observers.

Patrons enter Tandy Corp.'s Incredible Universe store in Dallas Monday afternoon. Tandy announced Monday that it is selling off or closing all 17 of its Incredible Universe consumer electronics stores. Weak Christmas sales and and the company's desire to take an estimated $170 million charge against fourth-quarter earnings spurred the announcement.

Tandy to sell, close Incredible Universe

■ Company cites competition, weak Christmas sales for decision.

Associated Press

DALLAS — Conceding defeat for the splashy, large-format concept it launched four years ago, Tandy Corp. is selling off or closing all 17 of its Incredible Universe consumer electronics stores.

Tandy, which announced the move Monday, said retailing has become more competitive since the first two stores opened in 1992 offering electronics, music and appliances. Other chains have advertised more heavily and cut profit margins, making the 184,000-square-foot stores too expensive.

"Our customers liked us but we needed more of them," said Tandy spokesman Martin Moad. "Incredible Universe has a lot of positives to it, but when you really get down to it, it's really not making any money."

Weak Christmas sales helped trigger the decision, which came as little surprise to Wall Street analysts. Tandy shares were up 75 cents to $46.25 in Monday trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Nearly 5,000 employees work at the affected stores and some will lose their jobs over a six-month phase-out period, said Ron Trumbla, another Tandy spokesman. The company offered no specific number.

Analysts praised the move and said the generally weak consumer electronics market proved fatal to a retailer that couldn't generate enough sales to cover high overhead.

"We don't think they were getting the high-end customer they needed," said George Sutton, analyst with Rauscher Pierce Refsnes in Dallas. "They weren't selling the $5,000 televisions. The appliance segment was never really successful. People weren't going in and buying refrigerators, washers and dryers."

Sutton blamed insufficient sales partly on the chain's no-commission policy for salespeople as well as merchandise and inventory problems.

"In a difficult environment, you add all those problems up, you can't survive," he said.

When Tandy unveiled its first two Incredible Universe stores in Arlington, Texas, and Portland, Ore., it promised to wow customers with size, selection, ambience and low prices.

Each location stocks more than 85,000 items in more than five times the space of a typical Circuit City Stores Inc. superstore, which has about 33,000 square feet.

A stage called the Rotunda at the center of each neon-lighted, music-piped store features shows and product demonstrations with big-screen television sets. Customers are encouraged to play with virtual reality games and create music videos in the karaoke studio.

Customer traffic and sales were strong at first. But in May, Tandy announced that it would close two stores and eliminate about 320 jobs at the remaining 17 stores. The company made a $25.5 million provision for the cost of that restructuring.

Tandy will take a fourth-quarter charge of $170 million to help pay for the closures. That charge also includes the cost of closing 19 of Tandy's Computer City stores and relocating two others. Computer City is being repositioned to focus on the experienced user and home-office markets.

Of the 17 Incredible Universe stores, Tandy will sell six to Fry's Electronics, a privately held company based in Palo Alto, Calif. Those stores are in Arlington, Texas; Dallas; Sacramento, Calif.; San Diego; Portland, Ore.; and Phoenix.

Of the estimated 1,500 workers at the stores to be sold to Fry's, some will likely be kept on, Trumbla said. Workers at the Incredible Universe and Computer City stores to be closed may be offered jobs at other Tandy stores or at its corporate headquarters.

The company said it will honor all service contracts and warranties through Computer City and Radio Shack.

The news follows an announcement in early December, when Tandy said it planned to close its 53 McDuff consumer electronics stores by March, saying the outlets were unprofitable and no longer fit the company's strategy of running stores capable of a high level of service after a sale.

Tandy said it will continue to expand its core Radio Shack business. That chain consists of about 6,800 stores worldwide.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

IRA investments sold at a loss aren't tax-deductible

By Eric Tyson

Q: Several years ago I left a state job and rolled over the money I had in the state's retirement system into an individual retirement account. I now have the money invested in stocks. If I sell one of the stocks I own in my IRA at a loss, is that loss tax-deductible?

Tyson

A: Until money is actually withdrawn from it, an IRA, like other types of retirement savings plans, is a tax-sheltered account. Your profits are shielded from taxes, but so are your losses.

So if you sell a retirement-account investment at a loss, that loss is not ever tax-deductible.

However, if you think through the situation, you shouldn't be too depressed about it.

Suppose that you contribute $5,000 to your employer's retirement savings plan. In the year in which you earned and contributed the $5,000, none of that money is taxed.

Now suppose that your $5,000 investment drops in value to $4,000. If you sell the investment at a $1,000 loss, that $1,000 loss won't be tax-deductible.

However, if you withdraw the $4,000 from your employer's plan, you would owe income tax only on the $4,000 withdrawn, not the original $5,000 contributed. Thus, you effectively would have saved yourself the tax on the $1,000 lost.

Q: I have a running balance of $5,400 on a well-known credit card. Just meeting the minimum monthly payment puts me in somewhat of a bind, since I am on a fixed income.

I have $10,000 in mutual funds. Would you suggest that I sell the mutual fund share with perhaps a penalty charge and pay down the credit card balance?

A: Unless you have an extraordinarily low interest rate on your credit card debt, you probably would be better off selling some of your mutual fund investments in order to pay off that debt.

If your credit card is typical, you're likely paying 15 percent or more interest on that debt. In order for you to come out ahead continuing to carry that debt and holding onto your mutual funds, you would need to be earning a return on the mutual funds in excess of the interest rate being charged on the credit card.

And don't forget that you'll owe income tax on your investment profits, so you'll actually need to earn an even greater return on your funds to net 15 percent after paying taxes.

While the stock markets around the world have been extraordinarily generous in their returns in recent years — averaging about 15 percent per year — a more realistic long-term expectation is about 10 percent per year, not high enough to beat the interest rate on your credit card.

Think of paying off your high-interest credit card as an investment with a guaranteed, risk-free, tax-free annual return of 15 percent — or whatever interest rate you're actually paying on it. If you can find another such investment out there that is equally safe and equally profitable, let me know about it.

If your mutual fund is one of those that charges a back-end or deferred sales charge, that exit fee should not deter you from selling the fund and paying off your credit card debt. Back-end-loaded funds charge much higher ongoing operating expenses than good no-load funds without such charges.

Hull retires

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — Buffalo Bills center Kent Hull retired Monday after an 11-year career that included four straight Super Bowls.

Hull, considered the best center in Bills history, became the first to retire of the eight remaining Bills players who appeared in all four Super Bowls. He leaves the game without winning one.

"I've decided to close this chapter in my life," Hull said during an emotional news conference. "It's been a great ride for me. I've had an opportunity to play with Hall of Fame players, a Hall of Fame coach and, without a doubt, the greatest fans in the world."

Hull arrived in Buffalo in 1986, the same year as quarterback Jim Kelly, after two seasons in the USFL. He missed only five games in his 11-year career and was named to the Pro Bowl three times.

Hull's announcement came two days after Buffalo was eliminated.

Favre wins second straight MVP award

By Barry Wilner
AP Football Writer

NEW YORK — All the questions about how Brett Favre would respond from a troubled offseason were answered simply — with another MVP year.

The Green Bay Packers quarterback became the first repeat winner since 1990 and only the second player to win the award in consecutive years. Favre received 52 of the 93 ballots by a nationwide panel of sports writers in voting announced Monday by The Associated Press.

Favre joined Joe Montana (1989-90) as the only winner of two straight MVPs. Other two-time winners were Steve Young (1992, '94), John Unitas (1964 and '67), and Jim Brown (1957 and '65).

"It was more of a surprise this year than it was last year," said Favre, who joined Paul Hornung, Jim Taylor and Bart Starr as Packers who've won the award

"And believe it or not, it felt much better this year than it did last year. I was really honored last year and couldn't believe it. But this year it was like a big weight was lifted off my shoulders. It was like, 'Whew, man, this is great.' This is another huge award for a lot of bad things

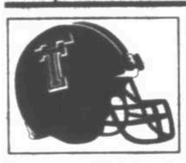
Bye, Bye Byron

Hanspard to take game, faith to professional ranks

By Kelley Shannon
AP Sports Writer



SAN ANTONIO — Byron Hanspard, an All-America running back at Texas Tech and a Pentecostal minister, is forgoing his senior year because the NFL offers a bigger platform to spread his faith.

Hanspard's 2,084 rushing yards this season was the fifth-best total in NCAA history. He won the Doak Walker Award presented annually to the nation's best running back.

Hanspard, who often cites Bible passages when discussing football, said playing on Sundays in the NFL won't clash with his religion.

"If the Lord felt that it would hurt me a lot, he wouldn't have told me to go to the NFL," he said. "I don't have to go to church on Sunday to worship."

Hanspard is the third underclassman so far to declare his pro eligibility, joining Iowa State running back Troy Davis and Indiana tailback Alex Smith.

Hanspard and Davis, college football's first two-time 2,000-yard rusher, are likely to be among the top running backs chosen.

Hanspard announced his decision to turn pro one day after rushing for a season-low 64 yards in the Red Raiders' 27-0 loss to Iowa in the Alamo Bowl.

That was only the second time this season Hanspard was held below 100 yards. The other game was the last of the regular season, when Hanspard rushed for 84 yards against Oklahoma.

Hanspard has been preaching part-time at Community Baptist Church on Lubbock's lower-income east side. After each home game, he has delivered a brief sermon to his teammates and coaches.

He is a member of Lay Ministers for Christ International, a nationwide evangelical organization that counts the Green Bay Packers' Reggie White among its membership.

Hanspard said he decided about two weeks ago he would enter the NFL draft but wanted to wait until after Sunday's game to make his plans public.

After his news conference, Hanspard hugged Texas coach Spike Dykes. He talked with his coach for a while then left the downtown hotel wearing a sweatshirt, sunglasses and a smile.

"We've had a lot of fun together, and we're going to miss him," Dykes said. "He's given us more than we could ever give him."

Hanspard said he has been told by draft analysts he'll be taken in the first round or early second round.

Davis beat Hanspard for the first Big 12 rushing title (2,185 yards to 2,084), but Hanspard won the Doak Walker Award. Hanspard finished fifth in Heisman Trophy voting; Davis was second.

Back wants bigger pulpit for preaching

By The Associated Press

Byron Hanspard's life revolves around his devotion to God, and he demonstrated it again when he announced his decision to forego his senior year of college football and enter the NFL draft.

"The Father, the Lord Jesus Christ, directed me," Hanspard said Monday.

A licensed Pentecostal minister, the 20-year-old Hanspard said pro football offers him a larger arena to spread the word of God.

"The Lord is on his way back," he said. "And there's a lot of people out there that really don't know who Jesus is."

When it was time to decide whether to enter the NFL draft, Hanspard said he consulted both his parents, but mainly God.

Michael Johnson named AP Male Athlete of the Year

By Rob Gloster
AP Sports Writer

Michael Johnson, the man with the golden shoes and the Olympic medals to match, dominated track and field in 1996 by sprinting to an unprecedented double at the Atlanta Games and obliterating the sport's oldest record.

That dominance earned Johnson honors as Male Athlete of the Year in an Associated Press poll released Monday. Last week, Johnson's sweep of the 200 and 400 was voted the AP top sports story of the year.

Johnson received 300 points in the annual balloting by AP print and broadcast members. Golfer Tiger Woods was second with 200 points, though he received 11 more first-place votes than Johnson.

Boxer Evander Holyfield (116 points) was third, followed by basketball's Michael Jordan (111) and football's Brett Favre (41).

Johnson became the first man to win the 200 and 400 meters in an Olympics. He broke the 27-year-old record in the 200 at the Olympic trials, then shattered his own mark with an astonishing run of 19.32 seconds at the Summer Games.

And he stretched his victory streak in the 400 to 57 straight races, remaining unbeaten at that distance since 1989.

But perhaps even more remarkable than Johnson's medals and records and streaks was the aura of invincibility that surrounded him. His command in the long sprints left competitors in awe.

Best Texas-Penn State game was never played

By John Maher
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN — Texas and Penn State have hooked up for some pretty big games over the years, including a Cotton Bowl in 1972 and a nailbiter in 1990 that started Texas' "Shock the Nation Tour."

Yet, the biggest game in the rivalry remains the one that got away. In 1969, the both teams were undefeated and untied — and untested against each other. Penn State players and fans believe to this day that the national title would have been theirs had that game been played.

Ted Koy, then a running back for the Longhorns, said, "Oddly enough, I realized how hot and bothered Penn State was after the Dec. 6 game with Arkansas."

Koy was on a podium with the other Texas captains, quarterback James Street and All-America linebacker Glen Halsell. President Richard Nixon had been on hand for the 15-14 Big Shootout victory over Arkansas and was presenting a plaque proclaiming the Longhorns the country's No. 1 team.

Nixon turned to the Longhorn captains and said, only half-joking, "I want you to appreciate this because it has cost me a lot of votes in Pennsylvania."

Texas had the President's plaque, but Penn State had a 30-game unbeaten streak going in 1969. Joe Paterno's squad was stocked with players such as Pro Football Hall of Famers Jack Ham and Franco Harris, Outland Trophy winner Mike Reid, All-American halfback Charlie Pittman, Lydell Mitchell and two-time All- America linebacker Dennis Onkontz.

"If we would have played, I think there would have been a new No. 2," said Onkontz, now a financial adviser in Boalsburg, Pa., near State College.

In State College, getting ready for this year's bowl game against Texas, Joe Paterno said, "One of

Plenty of experience heads to frozen tundra

By Scott Ostler
San Francisco Chronicle

SAN FRANCISCO — The 49ers beat the Philadelphia Eagles 14-0 Sunday and won an all-expense-paid Saturday afternoon in Green Bay, Wis., where if you're not careful, you can freeze your tundra off.

Second prize was two days in Green Bay.

That's an old joke, but the 49ers are an old team.

The 49ers are so old, they've forgotten they are old.

Sunday, for instance, Steve Young and Jerry Rice, who are as old as the Gabor sisters, frisked through the green goo and gusty rain at Candlestick Park to keep the 49ers' Super Bowl dreams alive.

Rice said it was the worst weather and field conditions he can remember in his home stadium during his 12-year career. And yet:

Young, 35, scored a touchdown on a nine-yard slog up the middle, running through Eagles with the elegance of a mule pulling stumps.

Rice, 34, scored the game's other touchdown on a short pass from Young, one play after making a stretching one-handed catch, his impression of a frog tongue-snatching a fly.

For sustained excellence, it was hardly the 49ers' offense of the good old days of 1981-94.

But those three plays, those two players, are the reasons the 49ers are still the 49ers, and still in the running for a trip to New Orleans on Super Sunday.

Yes, the 49ers' defense pitched a shutout Sunday, with the help of Philadelphia's quarterback. And two guys alone, no matter how great, do not make a Super Bowl quality football team.

But Young and Rice define this team. The toughness, the big-play capability, the heart.

Young, on his TD run, took a battering-ram shot to the ribs from a Philly defender and needed several pain-killing injections to finish the game.

Rice took a hard shot to the side of the head in the first quarter, was momentarily dazed, and had a lump the size of a walnut behind his right ear.

Yet Rice — his left hand, at least — was right there when the 49ers needed it.

You might think the other 49ers would get sick of Young and Rice getting so much credit, when 53 men suit up for every game. You would be wrong.

"Steve is the difference out there," said 49ers linebacker Gary Plummer, who helped keep Eagles superstar Ricky Watters out of the end zone all afternoon. "To take the pounding he does. . . . He's just showing more and more toughness. I just think Steve Young is on a mission. A lot of people tried to write him off earlier in the year and he feels he's got something to prove. . . . It's inspirational."

Earlier in the season the old Young was sidelined with a severe groin pull and two concussions. Forget about this season — his career was in jeopardy.

As Young's agent, Leigh Steinberg, said Sunday, "The minute Steve's groin came back, he started feeling better and playing great."

No question, Young's groin has earned the award as NFL Comeback Groin of the Year.

And Young himself, though he probably won't finish in the top five in league MVP voting, might really be the MVP.

Green Bay quarterback Brett Favre, Denver quarterback John Elway and Denver running back Terrell Davis, for three, will get more votes. Young might not finish in the top 10. Maybe the voters didn't realize Young and his groin had been reunited.

Young has played the last six games in a blaze of greatness. He led the league in passing efficiency, and for the last month he has been his team's primary ground threat.

Forget about the 49ers achieving some kind of run-pass balance. It's too late for that. Their ground threat is their quarterback.

Sunday, Young ran for 65 yards, while the rest of his team ran for 53. On the nine-yard TD, he was supposed to plunge into the line for a one-yard first down, but he decided not to fall down until someone tackled him.

No quarterback in the league at this moment is as scary to a defense as Young.

AP Laserphoto

San Francisco quarterback Steve Young is helped up by Jerry Rice after Young got banged up scoring a touchdown. Young is said to be feeling much better on Monday.

"I cannot stand to play against a running quarterback in these (sloppy field) conditions," Plummer said. "It's very, very difficult on a defense."

The 49ers have certainly stopped worrying about Young getting hurt on his out-of-pocket experiences. Sunday, with two minutes left and a 14-0 lead, some genius sent in a naked bootleg for Young, a sprint around right end with no blocking. Young shouldn't have even been in the game at that time, let alone sent on a kamikaze run.

But the 49ers figure that Young, after all he's been through this year, is now immune to serious injury. Young certainly feels that way.

As for Rice, he has struggled all year, feeling underutilized and under wraps. Is he finally slowing down? Yet, he led the league in pass receptions (108) and Sunday made his catch of the year.

"Desperation," that's how Rice described his balletic left-handed snag which went for a 36-yard gain.

BOYS: Dallas respects Carolina

point.

"Carolina has talent," he continued. "Without a doubt they will be the most balanced team we have played this year in all three phases."

Switzer said besides a veteran defense, the Panthers have special teams that can more than hold their own with the Cowboys.

"Their special teams are the best statistically in football and that matchup itself will have a dramatic impact on the game," he said.

Switzer raved about the Panthers veteran defense which includes players like linebackers Kevin Greene, Sam Mills and Lamar Lathon.

"They are fourth in takeaways in the NFL and the leader in sacks with 60," Switzer said. "Football is a game of third downs and they are No. 1 (in the NFL) by allowing just 32 per cent of third down tries against them."

Even though the Cowboys are a field goal favorite in the NFC divisional pllayoff game at Charlotte Sunday, Switzer calls the Panthers a huge challenge.

"Some of the guys on their defense have Super Bowl rings," he said. "We don't expect the success we had against Minnesota."

The Cowboys offense got untracked in a 40-15 wild-card win over the Vikings on Saturday.

Dallas has never played Carolina so assistant coaches have been burning up the telephone lines trying to get any scrap of information they can on the Panthers.

"Our coaches are calling some friends in the league on other staffs who will share something with us and that's about as much as I'll say about that," Switzer said.

Dallas players were off Monday and will begin fullscale work on Tuesday before leaving for Carolina at noon on Saturday.

Owner Jerry Jones joined in on the "we respect Carolina" theme.

"I don't understand why we are favorites," Jones said. "We know Carolina offers a big challenge."

Offensive tackle Nate Newton said Carolina is no cakewalk.

"Sam Mills, that golden-haired guy (Greene), I can't think of his name, Lamar Lathon, (Eric) Davis...they got some veterans," Newton said. "They've been in big games, Super Bowls and championship games. They're obviously looking to explode, too."

Newton added "it's time for the ring now, baby. Now, everything is a bonus, baby. I've got to finish furnishing my house."

Jones denies Holtz rumor

IRVING — Another day at Valley Ranch, another rumor for Jerry Jones to put to rest.

The Dallas Cowboys' owner denied Monday that former Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz is in the team's future.

"It amuses me that somebody has put Lou Holtz on the scene with us just having won a Super Bowl and in the playoffs trying to win another," Jones said.

Jones has said several times this year that head coach Barry Switzer will be his coach next year and in the future.

"My goal with Barry Switzer is in the long term," Jones said. "Barry and I work so good together. We are on the same page. I like what we are doing."

Jones added, "some media and some fans just won't give it up."

Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback Kordell Stewart runs the ball in for a fourth quarter touchdown in the Steelers' 42-14 win over the Indianapolis Colts.

Two quarterbacks better than one for Pittsburgh

By Alan Robinson
AP Sports Writer

PITTSBURGH — Mike Tomczak once did the Super Bowl Shuffle for fun in Chicago. He's doing it for real in Pittsburgh.

Trying to revive a slumping team that had lost three of its previous four games, Steelers coach Bill Cowher took advantage of a 42-14 playoff win Sunday over Indianapolis to experiment with a rarely seen two-QB platoon.

Kordell Stewart took over after Tomczak overcame two critical interceptions and put Pittsburgh ahead 28-14, scoring two touchdowns as the Steelers advanced to Sunday's divisional playoff game at New England.

A platoon system is virtually unheard of in the postseason, when coaches usually have long since settled on a starter. But Cowher is convinced defenses are at a disadvantage preparing for two quarterbacks with such contrasting styles.

Tomczak is a stay-in-the-pocket quarterback and the Steelers' best mid-range passer, but is prone to throwing key interceptions at inopportune times, as he did twice Sunday after Pittsburgh opened a 13-0 lead.

Stewart is one of the few NFL quarterbacks adept at running the option, and he also effectively operates the Steelers' goal-line and third-and-short offenses. He has failed to produce a first down on third-and-1 or third-and-2 only once all season.

"We're going to continue to use him," Cowher said. "It's more of a 'feel' thing, based on where you're at and how things are going. They're both going to play in the upcoming weeks, but how much, I can't say."

No matter how much he plays, the Colts certainly have seen enough of Stewart in the last two postseasons. He made a pivotal TD catch in the Steelers' 20-16 victory in the AFC championship game in January, then accounted for two more scores Sunday, one in each half.

"There were a few plays I knew I was going to have an opportunity to run," said Stewart, who played the entire fourth quarter. "But to sit here and say I'd have as many plays as I did, no, I didn't know at all."

Cowher first tried out the platoon in what to the Steelers was a meaningless 18-14 loss at Carolina last week. Until then, Tomczak took virtually all of the snaps from center for 14 weeks.

Most quarterbacks would balk at splitting time, but Tomczak, a backup for most of his 12 NFL seasons, can't complain after slumping badly from midseason on. He has thrown 11 interceptions — three for touchdowns — and been dropped twice for safeties over the last two months.

"When Slash comes in, it allows me to relax, collect my thoughts, watch the defense and pick up some things," Tomczak said. "If I had a problem with it, I'd say so. It was pretty effective. We're off to a damn good start."

In fact, Tomczak insists he hasn't had so much fun in a season since he sang in the Chicago Bears' Super Bowl Shuffle rap video as a rookie in 1985.

NFL teams have alternated quarterbacks before; the Broncos once changed them on alternating plays, and Sonny Jurgensen and Billy Kilmer divided time in Washington in the early 1970s.

MALE: Johnson chose over Woods

(From 1C)

Ato Boldon joked that Johnson only was "vulnerable in the 200 if he loses a shoe."

"What epitomizes the year is accomplishing the one goal that I set for myself — to be a double gold medalist," Johnson said. "The 19.32 is the glaring moment that stands out, and it will probably define to a large part my career."

Johnson began dreaming about a 200-400 Olympic sweep in 1991, when he won his first world championship in the 200.

In the 1992 Barcelona Olympics, he skipped the 400 to concentrate on the 200, in which he was favored. But he was hit by food poisoning, failing to even make the 200 final.

Then his plans started falling into place. In 1995, he became the first man this century to win the 200-400 double at the U.S. Championships and the first man ever to do the same at the world championships.

That convinced world track officials to change the Olympic schedule for Johnson.

The pressure on Johnson was staggering. Similar to the Dream Team of U.S. basketball pros, any loss by Johnson would have been considered a shocking failure.

But he won both events at the U.S. Olympic trials while wearing purple shoes, smashing the 200 world record by six-hundredths of a second, and entered the Summer Games as the overwhelming favorite at both distances.

At the Atlanta Games, he wore his golden shoes while winning the 400 in an Olympic record 43.49 seconds. And then he broke his own record in the 200 by 34-hundredths of a second while winning his second gold medal.

Johnson looked to his left at a scoreboard clock as soon as he crossed the finish line in the 200, briefly glimpsed the record time, then leaped in elation. Boldon bowed to Johnson.

It was the largest margin by which the 200 record had ever been broken. Johnson's first 100 meters was timed in 10.12 seconds, the second 100 a remarkable 9.20 seconds.

Johnson did lose twice in the 200 in 1996, both times to Frank Fredericks in Grand Prix races. He was undefeated in the 400, though, extending a streak he said gives him confidence and awes his opponents.

"The streak is a very big part of what I'm out there doing," he said. "It helps me as far as going against my competitors. They know there's not a guy out there who can say he's ever beaten me."

Though it will be nearly impossible to top 1996, the 29-year-old Johnson faces many challenges in 1997.

There will be a 150-meter match race in late May against Donovan Bailey, the Olympic champion and world-record holder at 100 meters. There's still the world record of 43.29 seconds in the 400, set by Butch Reynolds in 1988.

Johnson said he will decide within weeks whether to attempt another 200-400 double at this summer's world championships in Greece.

Such as needing to undergo rehabilitation for an addiction to pain-killers. Such as family problems — his sister Brandi, 19, was arrested in connection with a drive-by shooting at a motel in Slidell, La. And during the summer, their brother, Scott, 29, was arrested on felony DUI charges after an accident that killed a family friend.

"With everything that happened and the chances of winning the MVP twice, back-to-back, it's only been done twice before," Favre said.

Despite losing several of his receivers for part of the season, Favre led the Packers to a 13-3 record, tops in the NFC. He surpassed his 38 touchdown passes of 1995 — an NFC record — with 39 this year. He also threw for 3,899 yards and had a 95.8 rating, second in the league to San Francisco's Steve Young.

"Winning it is hard, but it's been proven that winning it back-to-back is harder," Favre said. "Not to mention everything, the bad luck that I've come across, the pressure of all the things — can he live up to what he's done? Is he going to put up the numbers that he put up last year?

"I heard all that stuff. I thought it is going to be tough. To throw 33, 38, 39 touchdowns back-to-back-to-back, I mean, that's hard. And the race being as tight as it was."

Denver's John Elway was second with 33 1/2 votes. Favre also beat out Elway for the All-Pro quarterback slot.

"If he would have won it, I wouldn't have been disappointed," Favre said. "It's like a couple of years ago, I went to the Pro Bowl after throwing 24 interceptions, and the following year I threw 33 touchdowns and had a great year and didn't go. That's the way I would have felt this year."

Broncos running back Terrell Davis, selected the Offensive Player of the Year last week, was third with 5 1/2 votes. Pittsburgh running back Jerome Bettis received the other two votes.

Since the award first was given in 1957, 21 quarterbacks have been named MVP.

GAME: This contest not the best matchup

my regrets is that I don't think the 1969 or 1968 teams got quite the credit they should because some of those guys went on to become great, great pro players. ... It was my fault."

In 1966, Paterno had succeeded his mentor of 16 years at Penn State, Rip Engle. In only his second season, 1967, he was 8-2-1 with a one-point loss to Navy and a two-point loss to UCLA and Heisman Trophy winner Gary Beban. In 1968, Paterno's squad posted a perfect season, going 11-0 and beating Big Eight champion Kansas and John Riggins in the Orange Bowl.

The only problem that year for Penn State was a team it couldn't play, an Ohio State team loaded with sophomores such as Rex Kern and Jack Tatum. When the Buckeyes beat O.J. Simpson and Southern California in the Rose Bowl, OSU claimed the national championship.

Penn State finished second in The Associated Press poll, ahead of third-place Texas.

In 1969, the Buckeyes were again crushing all their opponents, but because of Big Ten rules couldn't go to the Rose Bowl in back-to-back years, or to any other bowl. One win against a lightly regarded Michigan team with a rookie coach and the Buckeyes were a lock for their second straight national championship.

"What people don't realize is that Ohio State was way ahead of the whole thing," Paterno said. "They hadn't lost, and Michigan didn't look like they were going to beat them."

Darrell Royal, then the Texas coach, said, "I always said that to win a national championship, Notre Dame has to lose, the Big Ten team has to lose and probably Southern Cal. They had more people. They'd outvote you."

Although he'd spent most of the years in the polls in the shadow of Ohio State, Royal had a juggernaut of his own, rolling over people with a radical offensive formation, the Wishbone.

"It was a combination of outstanding personnel and the fact that we had something that was new," Royal said. "The defensive coordinators hadn't gathered up and figured out how to stop it."

Proof of the power of the Wishbone came in the Cotton Bowl after the 1968 season.

"I think Tennessee was just as good as we were," Royal said. His Longhorns crushed the Vols 36-13 and kept right on rolling in 1969.

Royal had the nifty Street at quarterback, Koy and Jim Bertelsen at the halfbacks and bruising Steve Worster at fullback. All-Americans Bob McKay and Bob Wuensch at tackle provided some of the blocking. Cotton Speyrer was the All-American wide receiver and tight end Randy Peschel was a hero of the Arkansas game.

The Arkansas game and a 27-17 win over No. 8 Oklahoma were Texas' only close calls that year.

Penn State had a 15-14 squeaker at Syracuse. A 17-14 win at Kansas State was the Nittany Lions' only other real struggle.

When Bo Schembechler's first Michigan team stunned Ohio State, a showdown seemed possible between Texas' prolific offense and Penn State's stingy defense.

"As I recall, they were quite a bit bigger than we were," Koy said.

By that time, however, forces were taking the two teams in opposite directions.

"Darrell had called me," Paterno said. "He said a guy by the name of Field Scovell was going to call. I said, 'Field Scovell? You kidding me Darrell? That's a real name?' "

Scovell, the Cotton Bowl's head honcho, courted Paterno, but before the Ohio State loss there was no national championship game to pitch, just another good bowl game like the Orange Bowl figured to be.

Paterno said, "My guys — it was another era. That Kennedy thing was still fresh in their minds. Some of my kids were married and their wives really liked Miami Beach. The squad finally decided they wanted to go to the Orange Bowl, never thinking they would have been playing for a national championship."

"I voted for Texas," Onkontz said. "But I think some of our black players had reservations. They weren't sure how they'd be treated there."

Most of the SWC teams, including Texas, were all-white in 1969.

In the Orange Bowl, Penn State actually played a higher-ranked team, Missouri, than Texas faced in Notre Dame.

But the 8-1-1 and ninth-ranked Irish were breaking their self-imposed ban on bowls, making their first appearance since the Four Horsemen rode over Stanford in 1925.

"I had a full plate with Notre Dame," Royal said. Most what-ifs about Penn State were quickly forgotten with that glamor matchup. Royal's Longhorns pulled out a dramatic 21-17 win. The Irish, ever impressive in defeat, actually jumped four spots in the AP poll to finish fifth.

In the Orange Bowl, Paterno's squad picked off seven passed and throttled a high-scoring Missouri team 10-3.

Penn State remained second in the AP poll.

"People might think it's a lie, but I've never really sweated that stuff," Royal said. "You can't control it."

Jeff Sagarin, an MIT graduate whose computer rankings are used by a number of newspapers, has gone back and figured that Texas would be No. 1 with a rating of 101.92. He has Ohio State second with a 101.42 rating and Penn State fourth with 99.17. Missouri finished seventh with his computer and Notre Dame, 12th.

"Then, like now, it was impossible to have a complete playoff," Koy said. "We'd beaten Arkansas and played Notre Dame. We felt we had proven our claim. At the same time, I can understand how they'd feel."

Royal said he didn't think revenge was a factor when the two teams hooked up in the Cotton Bowl two years later.

"Most of those guys weren't around," Royal said.

Mitchell and Harris were and led a rushing attack that helped spark a 30-6 Penn State win.

Onkontz wasn't around for that game.

"I never looked back, but I kind of still cheer for whoever is playing Texas," he chuckled. "I've got a nephew that plays for Virginia Tech. They took care of you guys pretty good in the Sugar Bowl (last year)."

"I can understand their frustration," Royal said. "In college (at Oklahoma), we won our last 21 games and had a big win in the Sugar Bowl. And Notre Dame outpolled us. It's like a beauty contest. All of them are beautiful, but somebody picks one winner."

Hanspard, a junior who turns 21 next month, said he hopes to one day get his college degree.

Hanspard ran for 761 yards as a freshman. The Red Raiders were co-Southwest Conference champions that year and played in their first Cotton Bowl in 56 years.

Hanspard followed that by rushing for 1,374 yards as a sophomore. He went over 100 yards in each of his last five games that season and kept the streak going until the Oklahoma game this year.

Hanspard had 115 yards in the season opener against Kansas State, then a school-record 272 against Oklahoma State. He would rush for more than 200 yards four more times while setting school records for single-season and career yards (4,219).

Jordan produces; Miller doesn't as Pacers blow another final period lead

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan scored 28 points and held Reggie Miller to 5-of-18 shooting as Chicago rallied to beat Indiana 81-79 Monday.

The Pacers led by as many as 14 points in the first half and by eight early in the fourth quarter but scored only two points during a 7 1/2-minute stretch of the final period to lose their third consecutive game.

The Bulls won for the 10th time in 11 games and improved to an NBA-best 27-4 despite shooting a season-low 34 percent. Jordan was 12-of-29 from the floor and Scottie Pippen, who scored 18 points, was 6-of-17.

Rockets 99, SuperSonics 91

HOUSTON — Charles Barkley had 25 points and 14 rebounds, and led a fourth-quarter rally that enabled Houston to end a six-game home losing streak against Seattle.

The Sonics hit 14 of their first 19 shots (73.6 percent) and led 34-21, but the Rockets led 57-53 at the half and 79-73 after three quarters. Seattle scored the first 11 points of the fourth quarter to take an 84-79 lead with 8:58 to play.

Hornets 101, Bullets 92

LANDOVER, Md. — Glen Rice scored a season-high 38 points, and had a crucial three-point play down the stretch as the Charlotte Hornets extended their domination of the Washington Bullets.

The Hornets have won eight of 10 and 15 of 19 against the Bullets.

Rice was 10-for-23 from the floor, but he made all 13 of his free throws and hit five 3-pointers.

Pistons 97, Magic 85

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Otis Thorpe had a season-high 22 points to go with nine rebounds, and Detroit continued its dominance at home by beating usually troublesome Orlando.

The win was just Detroit's second in its last eight meetings with the Magic — playing the Pistons for the first time without Shaquille O'Neal.

NBA Roundup

Knicks 98, Nets 86

NEW YORK — The Knicks became the fourth NBA team to reach 2,000 victories, getting strong play from guards Allan Houston, John Starks and Chris Childs.

The Knicks, one of the league's original franchises, joined the Celtics, Lakers and 76ers as the only teams with 2,000 victories.

New York went 12-3 in December, its winningest month since the 1968 team went 15-3.

Cavs 108, Timberwolves 96

CLEVELAND — The Cavaliers bombarded Minnesota with 14 3-pointers, then survived a late shooting barrage by James Robinson that ended the Timberwolves' bid for a franchise-best five-game winning streak.

The Cavs made 14-of-23 from beyond the arc and led by as many as 33 points in the fourth quarter.

Celtics 104, Nuggets 102

DENVER — Rick Fox hit a 15-foot jumper with less than a second remaining, and Boston won its first road game with David Wesley getting 25 points.

The loss snapped a seven-game losing streak. Boston, the last NBA team to win a road win, avoided matching a franchise-worst 13th-straight road loss. The Celtics had lost 13 in a row on the road in 1978-79.

Suns 100, Kings 88

PHOENIX — Kevin Johnson scored 12 of his 28 points in the first quarter, and added 10 assists as Phoenix continued it mastery over Sacramento.

Danny Manning added 23 points off the bench for the Suns, who have now beaten the Kings 21 straight times in Phoenix.

Kidd to miss four to six weeks

PHOENIX (AP) — Phoenix Suns guard Jason Kidd, acquired last week from Dallas in a six-player deal, was placed on the injured list Monday after tests revealed a hairline fracture to his right collar bone.

Kidd, is expected to miss four to six weeks, also reaggravated a previous injury to the sterno-clavicular joint in the first half of Saturday's 103-98 win over the Vancouver Grizzlies. The match was his first game in a Phoenix uniform. Kidd had six points, nine assists and seven rebounds in 20 minutes before being hurt on the final play of the first half.

Kidd, guard Tony Dumas and forward center Loren Meyer were shipped to the Suns on Dec. 26 in exchange for Michael Finely, A.C. Green and Sam Cassell.

With Kidd on the shelf, the Suns activated forward Wayman Tisdale, who had missed the last 17 games with tendinitis in his left shoulder.

Lee Thompson's Air Care offers simple preventive measures

Protect your family from carbon monoxide danger

In the cold winter months, when furnaces run to capacity and buildings are closed up tight, the possible presence of poisonous carbon monoxide (CO) gas becomes an issue, says Lee Thompson of Lee Thompson's Air Care. CO is a tasteless, colorless, odorless and highly poisonous gas. It forms from the incomplete combustion of any hydrocarbon fuel, including natural gas. When it is inhaled, CO is readily absorbed into the bloodstream, causing victims to suffer from lack of oxygen.

Symptoms of CO poisoning begin with slight headaches, dizziness or nausea after two to three hours of mild exposure, Thompson explains. Higher concentrations lead to a severe onset of these symptoms, then death within a few minutes. Since these symptoms are similar to those of the flu, many victims stay home, thinking they have the flu, therefore making the problem even worse.

This dangerous gas is most often produced by gasoline-powered engines such as automobiles and lawnmowers. However, it can also be produced by some old or poorly adjusted appliances, especially a gas furnace.

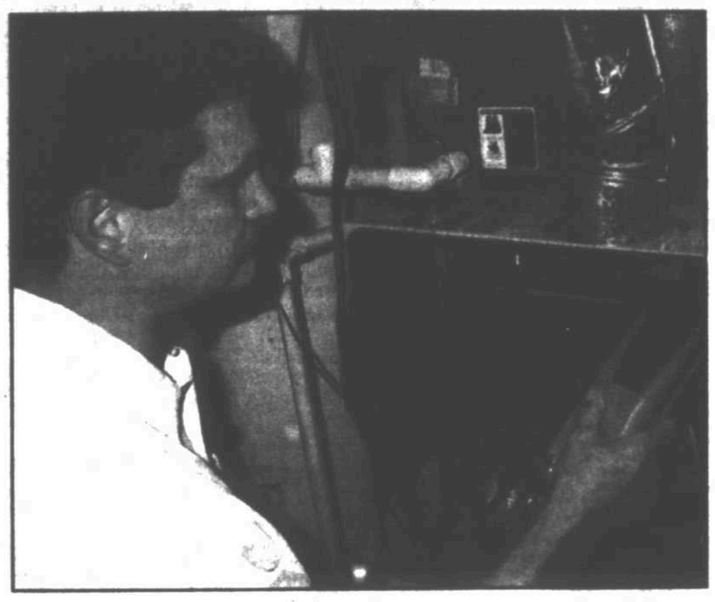
There are two things homeowners can do to protect themselves from CO, says Thompson. With an annual furnace inspection, a qualified technician such as one from Air Care will inspect the heat exchanger, looking for cracks, holes or rusty places that could allow CO to leak into the home. The Air Care technician will also test the air quality with a special instrument designed to detect the presence of CO in even slight quantities.

Second, install one or more CO detectors in your home. Many models and price ranges are available. Thompson warns, however, that the less expensive types often are guilty of detecting other substances such as hair spray or aerosol deodorants, meaning false alarms are likely. Your Air Care technician can install a proven, reliable CO detector for your home.

When this alarm does sound, it should not be ignored. Get all occupants of the house outside and call the fire department immediately. Do not allow anyone back inside until the CO's source has been identified and dealt with.

The professionals at Lee Thompson's Air Care can help you make sure your home is safe from CO problems.

Air Care is locally owned and operated by Lee Thompson. The company sells Carrier and other units and offers complete service on all brands. The phone number is 570-5265.



Bill Svoboda of Air Care checks a furnace for carbon monoxide. This odorless, colorless and deadly gas kills approximately 1500 people every year.

of carbon monoxide poisoning

Seek help immediately if you experience these:

2. Moderate level exposure: Dizziness, nausea, convulsions within 45 minutes, unconsciousness within two hours.

Get it checked out if you notice these:

1. Stuffy, stale smelling air
2. Moisture on windows
3. Soot and dirt buildup seeping out of chimney or other exhaust vents
4. A mostly yellow, rather than clear blue, burner flame or pilot flame in gas appliances.

MONEY MATTERS

Q. Why should I have exposure to international investments?
A. Geographic boundaries mean less and less as international trade increases and has an impact on all of our lives. Just think of all of the products made outside the U.S. that you come into contact with every day. Perhaps you, or people you know, drive an imported car or watch a TV manufactured in Korea or use a camera made in Japan. Today we all shop and compete in a world market. You can capitalize on these trades by adding international investments to your investment portfolio.

If you've had bad luck "Timing the Market"... How about spending more "Time in the Market?"

By Daniel Watts

As a Financial Consultant, some of the best advice I can offer is to keep your eyes focused on a long-term investing horizon. Equally important is to develop a "disciplined approach," using an investment strategy that is well within your individual tolerance for risk. As an example, here's a time-tested approach to investing in stocks that can be both simple and effective for investors seeking growth and income.

- Buy the ten stocks of the Dow Jones Industrial Average ("DJIA")* with the highest dividend yield. (For the purpose of this column, let's refer to them as "The Strategy Stocks.")
- Then, about a year later, identify an updated list of Strategy Stocks, and reposition your portfolio accordingly to include the ten-stock portfolio for the next year.

Daniel Watts

You may find that this Strategy produces better results if it's followed over a number of years. To illustrate, let's say that you began following it in 1976, adjusting the portfolio each year to include an updated list of the ten highest dividend yielding stocks. If you had continued to use the Strategy through September 1996, the Strategy Stocks would have generally produced a higher total return (including price changes plus dividends distributed) than the broader DJIA average, as shown below:

Year	Strategy	DJIA
1972	23.26%	18.21%
1973	-1.02%	-13.12%
1974	-0.31%	-23.14%
1975	57.02%	44.40%
1976	34.81%	22.72%
1977	-0.83%	-12.71%
1978	0.16%	2.69%
1979	12.35%	10.52%
1980	26.37%	21.41%
1981	7.47%	-3.40%
1982	25.46%	25.79%

Of course, past performance cannot guarantee future results and there can be no assurance that this Strategy will outperform the DJIA over any 12-month period going forward. Also, these figures do not reflect transaction costs or taxes. But, I would like to point out a few interesting statistics about the Strategy.

- The Strategy's average annual return of 17.72% has exceeded the 14.00% total return of the broader DJA.
- The Strategy Stocks have achieved a positive total return in every three-year and five-year period since 1974.

Why has the Strategy worked in the past?

To some extent, I would attribute its record to my earlier advice: Stay focused on the long-term investment horizon and stick to a disciplined investment Strategy. And, there are a number of other factors. For one, the Strategy focuses on stocks in the DJIA with the highest dividends, which may identify companies when their stock prices are depressed and potentially undervalued. Also, dividends are a key component of total return, and can provide a "cushion" in a difficult stock market environment.

There are a number of ways you can participate in this strategy. You could buy each stock individually, collect quarterly dividends, and update your portfolio each year. Or, you could use the convenience of a unit trust series, called the Select Ten Portfolios, to do all of this for you. To date, the three established series of Select Ten listed below have been offered. The average annual total returns shown below are through 9/30/96, and assume an annual "rollover" into the next portfolio. Also listed are returns for the most recently completed Portfolio within each series:

Series From Inception through 9/30/96
Most Recently Completed Portfolio
Series	Inception	Return	Period	Return
A Series	1/03/92	14.03%	1/09/95-2/23/95	34.72%
B Series	5/17/91	14.48%	5/10/95-6/28/96	25.32%
C Series	9/1/92	16.90%	9/7/94-9/30/95	22.41%

(Average annual total return represents price changes plus dividends reinvested at year-end divided by Initial Public Offering Price, and reflects minimum sales charges and expenses. Past performance is no guarantee of future results).

To find out more about Select Ten, you are invited to request a brochure and prospectus that contains more complete information, including fees and expenses. Be sure to read it carefully before you invest.

Colorado wins Holiday shootout

By Bernie Wilson
AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO — The Detmer family finally has a Holiday Bowl victory.

On a night of big plays, senior Koy Detmer threw for 371 yards and three touchdowns — including a Holiday Bowl record 76-yarder — and No. 8 Colorado won its fourth straight bowl, 33-21 over No. 13 Washington on Monday night.

Koy did what big brother Ty couldn't do in three tries. Ty Detmer was 0-2-1 in the Holiday Bowl with Brigham Young from 1989-91, including a 65-14 loss to Texas A&M in 1990. Detmer had both of his shoulders separated in that loss, a sour end to his Heisman Trophy season.

Koy Detmer had better luck in his one and only bowl start. He was hit often by the Husky defense and had three passes almost intercepted, but his 241 first-half passing yards broke the school bowl record of 217 by Kordell Stewart in the 1993 Fiesta Bowl. Overall Detmer completed 25 of 45 passes, with no interceptions, and was selected offensive MVP for the game. Ty, incidentally, was twice a Holiday Bowl offensive MVP.

Colorado (10-2) has three straight 10-win seasons for the first time in school history, and its fourth straight bowl win extends a school record.

Washington (9-3), in its second straight bowl following a two-year probation, matched its best record since going 12-0 in 1991. The Huskies are 0-3 in bowls since then.

Detmer started the Buffs on the way back from a 14-0 deficit with his 76-yard pass to Rae Carruth, who finished with seven catches for 162 yards and two touchdowns.

Carruth hauled in a pass at the 40 along the left sideline, broke a tackle by cornerback Jermaine Smith, cut inside and outran safety Tony Parish into the end zone. The old Holiday Bowl TD pass record was 65 yards from Bob Leszczynski to Phil McConkey in Navy's 23-16 win over BYU in the inaugural game in 1978.

Detmer threw a 7-yarder to Darrin Chiaverini for a 21-21 tie midway through the second quarter, and put the game away with a 4-yarder to Carruth in the back of the end zone that made it 33-21 midway through the fourth quarter. That capped a 15-play, 85-yard drive that consumed 6 minutes, 26 seconds. The 2-point conversion failed.

It looked like Washington would run away behind tailback Corey Dillon, who scored on runs of 2 and 12 yards to give Washington a 14-0 lead. Dillon, the Pac-10 rushing leader with a school-record 1,555 yards and 22 TDs, had 83 yards in the first quarter, but fell off and finished with 140.

Washington's Corey Dillon appears to step out-of-bounds as he dives for the endzone during the Holiday Bowl game against Colorado Monday in San Diego. The referees awarded Washington a touchdown on the play.

Osborne says 'Huskers getting too much respect

Associated Press

MIAMI — Tom Osborne swears he's not just being polite when he says Nebraska will have to play very well to beat Virginia Tech in the Orange Bowl. And he says the point spread is baffling, as it has been all season.

The sixth-ranked Cornhuskers are 17-point favorites Tuesday night, the widest spread of any of the bowls. And the Hokies are just four spots behind in the polls, and come in having won 20 of their last 21 games.

"I continue to be amazed at the perception that we're two or three touchdowns better than people like Texas or Virginia Tech," he said. "I have to believe it's a bit of a residual from last year's Fiesta Bowl."

The top-ranked Cornhuskers won that one 62-24 against No. 2 Florida, wrapping up their second straight national championship and fourth overall.

This season, a 37-27 loss to Texas in the Big 12 championship knocked the Cornhuskers from the title game for the first time in four seasons. And while the reduced stakes have given Osborne cause for concern about his team's motivation for the game, he seems to have enjoyed the relaxed atmosphere.

"I don't have any pearls of wisdom or controversy for you," he told the media Monday, his fifth consecutive day meeting with reporters. "I don't think anyone's going to hit our quarterback late or anything like that."

The reference was to the feud between Sugar Bowl coaches Steve Spurrier of Florida and Bobby Bowden of Florida State. Osborne said he likes both coaches, then added "Bobby Bowden has something like 10 straight bowl wins? Most of them were against Nebraska, I think."

The Seminoles have beaten Nebraska in four consecutive bowl matchups.

Independence Bowl

SHREVEPORT, La. — Terry Bowden has a better record in his first four years than any coach ever at Auburn, including Pat Dye or the legendary Ralph "Shug" Jordan.

And the Tigers, 7-4 this season and 35-9-1 overall since Bowden replaced Dye, have a two-game losing streak only after two last-minute losses.

Yet some insist that Bowden faces a "must-win" situation when the Tigers play No. 24 Army (10-1) in the Independence Bowl.

"I'm not convinced of that," Bowden said Monday during his last media briefing before Tuesday's game. "I can't buy the fact that players see Army-Auburn as a must-win game. We've had two very, very tough losses.

"Am I going to save my job by winning this game? Am I going to lose it by losing this game? Am I going to make us win against Virginia to open up next year by being 8-4 instead of 7-5?"

The answer to all of those questions is, of course, no. But there is still room for criticism from a small faction of Auburn fans seemingly not pleased with Bowden.

Bowden's five-year contract was rolled earlier this month by athletic director David Housel, who, in making the announcement, voiced displeasure with the team's recent performance.

Bowden led Auburn to its first 11-win season his first year, even with the team serving NCAA probation. The Tigers then won their first nine games in 1994, before slipping to 8-4 last season.

Sun Bowl

EL PASO — Both Stanford and Michigan State have come to the Sun Bowl looking for a happy ending that also could be read as a good beginning.

Having suffered through topsy-turvy seasons, the Cardinal (6-5) and the Spartans (6-5) see Tuesday's game as a good way to prove, if only to themselves, that their programs are indeed making progress.

"Winning bowl games is most important," Michigan State coach Nick Saban said Monday. "Hopefully, we'll be able to make a breakthrough and do that this year."

The game is a matchup between two teams with many similarities, including balanced offensive schemes and aggressive defenses.

They also boast identical records and are playing in their second straight bowl. Michigan State lost 45-26 to Louisiana State in the 1995 Independence Bowl, while Stanford fell 19-13 to East Carolina in the Liberty Bowl.

Stanford struggled early, posting a 2-5 record, then swept through the last four games, including a 42-21 victory over California to earn a postseason invitation.

■ Tuesday Bowl Preview

Heritage Bowl

ATLANTA — Steve Wilson has been waiting for this chance, a shot for Howard to come all the way back from its troubles of two years ago.

On Tuesday, Howard plays Southern University in the Heritage Bowl. A victory would go a long way toward putting the 1994 season aside for good. That year the Bison fell to last place in the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference after winning the league in 1993.

In 1995, Howard finished 6-5 after losing quarterback Ted "Sweet Flight" White for half the season with a lacerated kidney.

This has been Howard's best season since defeating Marshall for the MEAC title in 1993. Howard (9-2) earned the trip to the Georgia Dome after giving up losses to only Marshall and Florida A&M.

Southern (7-4), of the Southwestern Athletic Conference, has won the Heritage Bowl twice and is 5-0 at the Georgia Dome. The Jaguars beat Florida A&M 30-25 in last year's bowl game and routed South Carolina State 11-0 in 1993.

Gators greasing shotgun for heavy-hitting Seminoles

By Doug Ferguson
AP Sports Writer

NEW ORLEANS — Steve Spurrier has drawn up some innovative formations over the years, but it didn't take a genius to figure out how Florida's ailing offensive line could best cope with Florida State's pass rush.

"The shotgun has become very important the last couple of games," Spurrier said. "Obviously, we're going to use it."

Danny Wuerffel never needed the shotgun much during his record-setting career at Florida. Then again, the third-ranked Gators have never had this many injuries on the line. Nor have they seen the kind of pass rush that Florida State brings.

In the Seminoles' 24-21 victory a month ago, Wuerffel was sacked six times and had to get rid of the ball earlier than he wanted to avoid others. The Gators used the shotgun for the first time in four years with mixed results.

"I don't know if it gives you more time, but it gives you the ability to get some balls off you might not be able to get off, or to see some things," Wuerffel said.

"I really haven't used it but for the last couple of weeks, so I don't have a whole lot of experience with it."

He's learning quickly.

Wuerffel was 7-of-17 for 94 yards and was sacked twice out of the shotgun against Florida State. A week later in the Southeastern Conference championship game against Alabama, he was nearly flawless.

Wuerffel threw out of the shotgun 11 times, completing nine of them for 196 yards and four of his league-record six touchdown passes.

"It's just one of those things that coach Spurrier pulls out when he thinks he needs it," Wuerffel said. "We've got a lot of things in the book that we don't ever use, that we have just in case we need it. The way this season unfolded with injuries, it was a good thing to bring out."

How much Florida uses it Thursday night in the Sugar Bowl rematch against No. 1 Florida State is not yet clear.

But the Gators also are in the best shape up front than they have been since the middle of the season, which is not to say all is well.

The Seminoles got four of their six sacks from the inside rush of Andre Wadsworth and Connell Spain, plus one by free safety Dexter Jackson.

Cancer overcomes Boise State coach

MISSOULA, Mont. (AP) — Pokey Allen, the exuberant coach who rebuilt the Boise State University football program and resigned this month as cancer overtook him, died Monday at 53.

Allen died at 4:30 a.m. at St. Patrick Hospital, 24 hours after he went into a coma. A funeral will take place Wednesday in Missoula.

A Montana native, Allen had returned to Missoula to spend the holidays with his mother, sister and daughter when he collapsed the day after Christmas and broke his nose.

The tumor in his chest had grown quickly and involved more than 90 percent of his lungs, said Dr. Carolyn Collins, his oncologist in Boise, Idaho.

Allen was diagnosed with the rare and aggressive form of muscle cancer called rhabdomyosarcoma in 1994, only two days after leading the Broncos to the NCAA Division I-AA championship game.

After months of treatment, including a stem cell transplant in June 1995, Allen returned to coach the Broncos to a 7-4 season in 1995. But he again took a medical leave last August after finding new tumors forming in his chest and lungs.

Allen underwent alternative treatment in Vancouver, British Columbia, for much of that medical leave before returning to coach the final two Boise State games this fall.

He resigned Dec. 11 after tests revealed the cancer cells were again active.

Allen, who was born in Superior, Mont., attended the former Missoula County High School, where he was a standout in football, basketball and track.

Montana State University football coach Cliff Hysell knew Allen for nearly 40 years. The two met in 1958 as school athletes, Hysell for Montana's Helena High.

"He basically remained the same guy I met in 1958," Hysell said Monday from Bozeman. "That's what was neat about him. He was a friendly guy, not that impressed with himself, even with all the success he had."

Allen had some assistant coaches who stayed with him for six and seven years.

TCU whips Big 10 champ Purdue

Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Malcolm Johnson scored 21 points and Anthony Burks added 20 and triggered a 22-2 first-half run that launched Texas Christian's 97-69 victory over Purdue on Monday night.

The Boilermakers (5-5) had pulled within 26-24 on a Gary McQuay jumper with 7:25 remaining in the first half when Burks fed James Penny on a breakaway to start the Horned Frogs' run.

Back-to-back baskets by Burks made it 48-26 with 1:06 to go in the half. Purdue's Alan Eldridge hit a 3-pointer in the final minute to make it 48-29 at halftime.

The Horned Frogs (10-2) never allowed Purdue back into the game. Brad Miller's dunk with 13:49 remaining pulled the Boilermakers within 61-47, but that was as close as they would get.

Rice 69, Navy 52

HOUSTON — Shaun Igo scored 17 points and Bobby Crawford added 13, leading the Rice Owls in a victory over Navy.

The Owls (5-4) raced to an 18-2 lead to start the game and led 39-21 at halftime.

SMU 100, Prairie View 65

DALLAS — Jemeil Rich scored 24 points and Stephen Woods added 20 Monday night, leading SMU in a victory over Prairie View A&M.

Jay Poerner scored 17 points for the Mustangs (7-2), who are off to their best start since the 1987-88 season.

Thompson leads Lady Raiders

Associated Press

LUBBOCK — Former Big Lake star Alicia Thompson scored 27 points and Kene Hanebutt added 20 Monday night, leading No. 10 Texas Tech in a 76-62 victory over Rice.

Thompson had 10 points and Hanebutt 8 in a 28-7 run over the final 8:11 in the first half that gave the Red Raiders (8-2) a 46-23 halftime lead.

Rice (5-4) began the second half with an 11-2 run, pulling to within 48-34 at the 15:52 mark, but the Owls never got closer.

Cara Gibbs came off the bench for 9 points in the second half for Texas Tech. Thompson was 10-of-13 from the field, while Hanebutt converted seven-of-10 field goals. Overall, Tech shot nearly 63 percent.

Since this is the last time this year we will have the opportunity to pass on some advice, here's an ounce of wisdom that will save you tons of points over the next year: "When you have a choice of cards to play, choose the one you are known to have." Here's a simple example how that can benefit.

South's bidding showed a balanced hand of 23-24 points — the four aces and good intermediates easily compensated for the missing high-card point. North had as little as the law allows for advancing to game and, with flat distribution, there was no point looking for a heart fit.

Declarer won the opening spade lead in hand and successfully finessed the jack of clubs, then cashed the king. Suppose West woodenly followed with the ten. Declarer would continue with a club to the ace and, when the queen dropped, nine tricks would be there for the taking — two spades, one heart, two diamonds and four clubs.

Now let's suppose that, instead of playing the ten of clubs, West dropped the card that was marked to be in the defender's hand — the queen. This simple play presents declarer with a new option. Instead of a 3-3 break, there is the opportunity of taking a finesse for the ten of clubs!

If West's queen is an honest card, the finesse is a guaranteed winner. It is odds-on that declarer will continue with a club to the nine, and when the ten wins nine tricks have suddenly been reduced to eight!

Queen Elizabeth II works her way through the New Year's honors list

LONDON — Rise, Sir Paul.

The former Beatle was knighted Tuesday as Sir Paul McCartney, when Queen Elizabeth II bestowed New Year's honors on Britons famous and obscure.

"It's a fantastic honor," McCartney told the British news agency Press Association. "I am very gratefully receiving it on behalf of all the people of Liverpool and the other Beatles, without whom it wouldn't have been possible."

McCartney and the other Beatles were honored with Member of the Order of the British Empire awards in 1965. In a long and successful career as a singer and songwriter, McCartney was knighted "for services to music."

"I hope I can be worthy of it," McCartney said.

Musical extravaganza composer Sir Andrew Lloyd Webber ("Phantom of the Opera," "Sunset Boulevard") became a baron, and "Dynasty" star Joan Collins, was honored as an Officer of the Order of the British Empire.

Paul McCartney was knighted by Queen Elizabeth II.

Sir Andrew Lloyd Webber was made an Officer of the Order of the British Empire.

Author Frederick Forsyth, whose best-sellers include "The Day of the Jackal," became a Commander of the British Empire.

The Honors List is compiled by the government although the queen presents the awards personally. Many of the 1,035 awards went to lesser-known Britons, including royal gamekeepers, police, social workers and waiters.

LOS ANGELES — Entertainment mogul Merv Griffin says a blood test detected his prostate cancer at an early stage and seven weeks of radiation treatments weren't a big deal.

"I survived that little brush I had with cancer only because I caught it in time," Griffin told TV's "Entertainment Tonight" in an interview for broadcast Monday.

Griffin, 71, said the cancer was found during a routine blood test. "Disbelief," he said, was his first reaction. "You deny it right away."

He opted for radiation and began the series of treatments in September as an outpatient at a Los Angeles-area hospital.

"I went five days a week. I got the weekends off. It's very casual stuff. Seven-thirty in the morning and it takes five minutes. You're in and you're out," Griffin said.

Griffin had a biopsy in April after a prostate blood-screening test came back higher than normal. A tumor was found but it had not spread.

RENO, Nev. — While Las Vegas marks the end of 1996 by blowing up another casino, Jay Leno and Wayne Newton will cut the ribbon to open an $80 million, 802-room addition at the Nugget resort in Sparks.

The casino-resorts of northern Nevada don't pretend to be Las Vegas, where Hootie & The Blowfish, Liza Minnelli and Kenny Rogers will pack them in on New Year's Eve, but they still feature top casino headliners.

"We definitely realize we're not in the concert business. We're in the entertainment and casino business," said Nugget owner John Ascuaga. "Here, we feel if we can break even, it's worth doing."

In addition to Newton, the Nugget also offers a New Year's Eve dinner dance with Sha Na Na. In Reno, Frank Sinatra Jr. is at Harrah's. At Lake Tahoe, Donna Summer takes the stage at Caesars, and Paula Poundstone is at the Horizon and the Four Tops are at Harrah's.

And, yes, the feelers are out for next year's headliners. With the top names drawing $100,000-$200,000 and more for two shows, Ascuaga concedes that getting the right performer means taking risks.

"We're doing concerts to bring in a big name, the image of it," he said. "We really feel there's a lot of value to that."

NEW YORK — An animal rights group wasn't laughing when Denny's poked fun at "Babe" with an advertisement featuring sizzling bacon.

The restaurant chain joined Bill Cosby, Michael J. Fox and animal television specials as recipients of "Foe-Paw" awards Monday from a group claiming to monitor insensitivity to animals in the media.

Members of The Ark Trust also grumbled about a "Cosby" episode where the title character accidentally burns his daughter's turtle and a "Spin City" show about the death of a police dog.
