Shamir wants more time

N.Y. Times News Service

JERUSALEM — Jordan on Sunday joined Syria, Lebanon, Egypt and Saudi Arabia in agreeing to attend a regional peace conference proposed by the United States.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, however, told visiting Secretary of State James A. Baker III that he wanted more time to consider the matter.

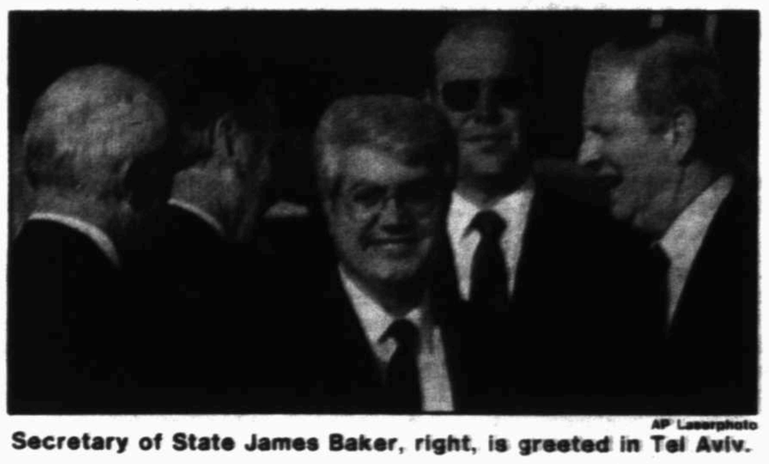

"We are ready to attend a peace conference," King Hussein said, "and we are very happy indeed it is going to be a comprehensive one."

The Jordanian ruler spoke Sunday at a news conference with Baker after their talks in Amman, Jordan's capital.

Until now, Jordan has wavered on accepting the American proposal, waiting to see if Syria would.

Baker, armed with commitments from the five Arab countries to take part in a conference that would open the way for direct negotiations with Israel, flew to Jerusalem from Amman to try to persuade Shamir to drop his

South Africa admits more secret funds given Inkatha

■ Revelations could hurt credibility of President F.W. de Klerk's 2-year-old government.

Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The government admitted Sunday an additional $600,000 in secret funds were channeled to a black political group, broadening a scandal that threatens to disrupt efforts to end apartheid.

The latest disclosures came two days after officials said $100,000 in aid had been given secretly to the Inkatha Freedom Party, the main rival of the African National Congress.

The revelations of the funding operations could hurt the credibility of Inkatha and President F.W. de Klerk's 2-year-old government, which has taken strides to end white-minority rule. Inkatha's leader on Sunday again insisted the organization did not know of the government contributions.

The announcement Sunday also indicated the clandestine funding occurred under the government of President P.W. Botha, who refused to legalize the ANC and opposed drastic reforms in apartheid laws.

Tanker spills 2.9 million gallons of crude off Western Australia

PERTH, Australia (AP) — The bow of a burning oil tanker tore loose off Australia's western coast early Sunday, dumping an estimated 2.9 million gallons of light crude oil into the Indian Ocean, officials said.

Capt. Richard Purkiss, chairman of the Western Australia state Oil Pollution Combat Committee, called the spill "catastrophic."

"It's the worst category you can possibly have — a major, major spill," he said. "I'm not aware of anything this size in Australia before."

The 210-foot-long tanker Kirki was still afloat and officials hoped to be able to remove the remaining oil, Purkiss said. There was no estimate of the amount of oil the Greek ship was carrying, but officials but the spill at 2.9 million.

By comparison, the Exxon Valdez spill of March 24, 1989, dumped 10.9 million gallons of crude oil into Alaska's Prince William Sound.

'It's the worst category you can possible have.'

Capt. Richard Purkiss

The spill from the Kirki occurred about 125 miles north of Perth and 18 miles west of the fishing town of Cervantes. The oil slick was reported to be more than seven miles long and almost a mile wide.

The tanker was sailing from Saudi Arabia to the western Australian port of Fremantle when the fire broke out. Helicopters flew the ship's 37 crew members to safety before the bow tore loose, rupturing the forward storage tanks, officials said.

Behind doors: a puzzle, debate — and answer?

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Perhaps it was only an illusion, but for a moment here it seemed that an end might be in sight to the debate raging among mathematicians, readers of Parade magazine and fans of the television game show "Let's Make a Deal."

They began arguing last September after Marilyn vos Savant published a puzzle in Parade.

As readers of her "Ask Marilyn" column are reminded each week, Ms. vos Savant is listed in the Guinness Book of World Records Hall of Fame for "Highest I.Q.," but that credential did not impress the public when she answered this question from a reader:

"Suppose you're on a game show, and you're given the choice of three doors: Behind one door is a car; behind the others, goats.

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. — A Ferris wheel cab tipped over when youths rocked it, causing a chain-reaction accident that killed a 17-year-old boy and injured two girls, authorities said.

The boy and his sister fell into another cab Saturday night, tipping it over and knocking another girl about 30 feet to the ground with them, said Rick Zeckman, general manager of the Pavilion of Myrtle Beach amusement park.

Ronald Turner of Wilmington, N.C., died Sunday of head injuries, a Grand Strand General Hospital spokeswoman said.

Turner and another youth in the cab apparently ignored warnings from a ride operator not to rock their cab, Zeckman said. The boy's companion climbed down the wheel, Zeckman said.

A girl in the second car became entangled in the ride's superstructure and was rescued by firefighters.

Turner's 12-year-old sister Crystal and a 7-year-old girl were in fair condition, the hospital spokeswoman said.

Demi gives birth

LOS ANGELES — Actress Demi Moore, whose appearance nude and pregnant on the cover of Vanity Fair prompted some stores to pull the magazine from their racks, has given birth to a girl, her publicist said Sunday. Scout LaRue Willis was born at 4:53 a.m. Saturday at an undisclosed hospital and weighed 5 pounds, 15 ounces, publicist Heidi Schaeffer said. Mother and daughter were doing well, Schaeffer said. The girl is the second child for Miss Moore, 28, who starred in the hit film "Ghost," and her husband, actor Bruce Willis. Miss Moore appeared on the cover of Vanity Fair's August issue in a photo taken by celebrity photographer Annie Liebovitz. It showed Miss Moore with one hand across her breasts and the other under her bulging belly.

Showers slip back into area

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high in the mid-90s, southwest winds at 10 to 20 mph and a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a low in the upper 60s.

Tuesday is expected to be mostly sunny with a high in the mid-90s.

After an overnight low of 73, Sunday's high was 92 compared with the record high for that date of 103 set in 1981. The record low for today's date was 58 set in 1988.

STATE

Scattered showers were sprinkled across most of Texas Sunday, as temperatures continued to hover in the 90s.

The afternoon heating and abundant moisture over West Texas caused the rapid development of showers and thunderstorms. The skies across the Panhandle and South Plains were cloudy, while temperatures soared into the 90s.

Winds were generally from the south at 15 to 25 mph and gusty.

In North Texas, scattered showers developed near Wichita Falls and in the southeast in response to afternoon heating. Temperatures reached the mid to upper 90s.

NATION

The Midwest and Northeast baked again Sunday as a high-pressure system continued to push hot, humid air up from the Gulf of Mexico.

Temperatures soared into the upper 90s and occasionally above the 100-degree mark in the Mid-Atlantic states and southern New England, the National Weather Service said.

Providence, R.I., hit 100, tying a record set in 1980, and 102 in Newark, N.J., tied a record set in 1977.

Danbury, Conn., reached 103 — its fifth straight day of 100-degree heat.

Temperatures soared and winds gusted in Kansas. Dodge City, Kan., hit 97 degrees and winds there topped 30 mph.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

JORDAN: Baker, Shamir slated to meet today

opposition to the proposed peace talks.

The Israeli government, though, seems shocked — confronted by Baker after he obtained, over three days, commitments from the Arabs to take part in the conference and in subsequent direct talks. Jordan also joined Saudi Arabia and Egypt in offering to suspend the Arab economic boycott of Israel if it will suspend the building of settlements in the occupied lands.

President Bush, on a visit to Turkey, again suggested that Israel freeze settlements on the West Bank. The Israeli public appears skeptical about the latest round of American diplomacy, tempering hope with caution.

Baker denied he had set a deadline for an Israeli response on peace talks, but American officials say it is possible that when Bush and Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev meet in Moscow on July 30 and 31, they will issue invitations to the conference — as its joint sponsors — whether the Israelis have responded positively or not. Such a move would put Israel under even greater pressure to attend.

"We have always indicated that that would be something we might pursue," said Baker, when asked whether invitations would soon be sent. "Of course, it would be much better, if there is going to be a conference, if everybody could sign on before invitations are issued."

Senior Israeli officials said they had no idea what Shamir was going to do, and the Israeli prime minister was saying nothing. Shamir's dilemma, though, is clear.

If he says yes to Baker, his fragile coalition government is likely to collapse and he will be challenged by members of his own rightist Likud bloc. If he says no, he risks alienating Israel from the United States, and from much of the rest of the world.

Baker met with Shamir alone for 90 minutes, which was taken up almost entirely with a review of the essence of the letter Syrian President Hafez Assad sent to Bush a week ago. In that letter, the Syrian leader is said to have committed his government to take part in the peace conference and subsequent direct talks.

The Israelis have been deeply suspicious that Washington and Damascus struck some sort of deal. American officials said Baker, without actually showing Shamir the Assad letter, had briefed him both on its contents and on the side assurances that the United States had provided the Syrians.

Those side assurances mostly involve restatements of American policy: that the United States does not recognize the Israeli annexation of the Golan Heights; that it believes U.N. Security Council Resolution 242, calling on Israel to exchange land for peace, applies to the Golan Heights as well as to the West Bank; and that the United States is committed to pushing any peace negotiations actively, so as not to allow delays.

Shamir asked Baker for more time to consider the matter, and the two men will be meeting again Monday. "We are not under any pressure to give an answer soon," Shamir's spokesman, Avi Pazner, said. "The problem is content, not deadlines."

Before Baker met with Shamir, he held talks with three West Bank Palestinian leaders, led by Faisal Husseini, and made it clear to them that they, too, had to make some hard decisions.

American officials said it was a tough, and at times emotional encounter, in which the Palestinians were essentially told that as the weakest party in the equation, they would have to accept previously unpalatable political realities.

One of those is that the Palestine Liberation Organization, led by Yasser Arafat, can have no direct involvement with their delegation to the peace conference, since that would immediately prompt the Israelis to walk out.

The other is that no Palestinians from East Jerusalem can take part in the first stage of the negotiations. The Israelis have ruled this out, saying such a role would imply that East Jerusalem, which Israel has annexed, was negotiable.

But it is possible that the second restriction might be finessed if there is a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation and Palestinians born in Jerusalem take part with Jordanian passports.

Despite those restrictions, the Palestinian leaders were told that they would soon have to come up with a list of acceptable representatives, American officials said.

An intriguing thing about the endorsements Baker has won from the Arab countries is that the Arab leaders all say in public that they are ready to accept Bush's proposal to attend "a peace conference" to reach a "comprehensive solution" based on Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338. But none of them ever mentions that this conference is intended as a ceremonial opening event for direct Arab-Israeli talks.

American officials insist the Arab leaders have privately assured them that they understand this, but do not now want to say it publicly for fear of alienating their own hard-liners. Each one, instead, allows Baker to say it for him.

When reporters asked King Hussein on Sunday if he would say that he was committed to direct talks with Israel, he was not at all pleased.

Looking a bit flummoxed, the king replied, "This is about the most ridiculous question I have ever heard."

If it is so simple, the reporters persisted, why not give just a simple answer?

"What do you attend a conference to do?" the king retorted. "To mime? To make faces at each other, or to discuss and try to resolve the problem? I have been calling for this for years and years. I assure you that this is really the intention, and it is very, very clear."

As the journalists continued to press the king to say the words "direct bilateral talks with Israel," he declared the news conference over and walked out with Baker.

FUNDS: Scandal about political aid deepens

(From 1A)

Some of the sharpest criticism has been lodged by ANC leader Nelson Mandela, who said his group could break off relations with the government and call off plans for talks on power sharing between black and whites.

The ANC and Inkatha have waged a power struggle for leadership of the anti-apartheid movement since the mid-1980s, and clashes between supporters in black townships have claimed 6,000 lives. The ANC has often alleged the government secretly aided Inkatha, a charge the government and Inkatha had denied.

There has been no proof that the security forces directly assisted Inkatha in specific attacks against ANC backers.

On Sunday, Law and Order Minister Adriaan Vlok said during a interview on state-run television that the government channeled $600,000 to Inkatha's trade union movement over a six-year period. He did not give any additional details, such as when the funding ended or what Inkatha did with the money.

Earlier Sunday, The Sunday Star newspaper quoted Parliament member Kobus Jordaan claiming he had proof the government paid Inkatha's union movement $2 million. Jordaan said the money flow began Inkatha before De Klerk succeeded Botha as president in August 1989. De Klerk removed the ban on the ANC last year.

Vlok said Friday that the government provided Inkatha with $100,000 in 1989 and 1990 for rallies to protest the international sanctions. At the time, he said the payments have been halted.

Vlok also acknowledged that police had been involved in political activities to enforce apartheid laws. But he said the infiltrations had ceased under de Klerk.

"In the past, the government was embroiled in a battle," Vlok said Sunday. "It now is illegal for any policeman to belong to a political party."

De Klerk is trying to bring together opposition groups for talks on a new constitution that will extend voting rights to the 30 million black majority.

But Mandela said Friday the latest disclosures have put the ANC and the government on a "collision course" that could lead to a breakdown of already strained relations.

Meanwhile, Inkatha leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi claimed Sunday he "was never informed ... that (government) money had been deposited in an Inkatha bank account."

Other top Inkatha officials also denied any knowledge of the money.

Buthelezi said many anonymous payments were made to an Inkatha bank account set up to receive contributions from donors wishing to avoid identification.

Buthelezi, speaking on the final day of the group's national conference, accused the media of being "anti-Inkatha."

Buthelezi was re-elected as Inkatha's leader Sunday and was carried on the shoulders of supporters at the conclusion of the conference in the eastern town of Ulundi, the capital of the Zulu homeland. Buthelezi serves as chief minister of the homeland.

Unlike the ANC, Inkatha has never supported armed resistance to fight apartheid and it has opposed international sanctions. It favors a free-market economy and other policies supported by the government.

Buthelezi meets regularly with government officials and there have been hints of a possible political alliance between Inkatha and de Klerk's National Party.

DOORS: The argument began last September

(From 1A)

You pick a door, say No. 1, and the host, who knows what's behind the other doors, opens another door, say No. 3, which has a goat. He then says to you, 'Do you want to pick door No. 2?' Is it to your advantage to take the switch?"

Since she gave her answer, Ms. vos Savant estimates she has received 10,000 letters, the great majority disagreeing with her.

The most vehement criticism has come from mathematicians and scientists, who have alternated between gloating at her ("You are the goat!") and lamenting the nation's innumeracy.

Her answer — that the contestant should switch doors — has been debated in the halls of the CIA and the barracks of fighter pilots in the Persian Gulf.

It has been analyzed by mathematicians at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and computer programmers at Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico. It has been tested in classes ranging from second grade to graduate level at more than 1,000 schools across the country.

But it was not until Thursday afternoon that a truly realistic simulation of the problem was conducted. The experiment took place at the Beverly Hills home of Monty Hall, the host of 4,500 programs of "Let's Make A Deal" from 1963 to 1990.

In his dining room Hall put three miniature cardboard doors on a table and represented the car with an ignition key. The goats were played by a package of raisins and a roll of Life Savers.

After Hall allowed this contestant 30 independent attempts to win the car, two conclusions seemed clear:

Ms. vos Savant's vitriolic critics, including the mathematics professors, are dead wrong.

But Ms. vos Savant is not entirely correct either, because there is a small flaw in her wording of the problem that was detected not only by Hall but also by some of the experts.

Despite her impressive analysis and 228-point I.Q., she was not as quick as Hall in understanding the full psychological dimensions of the problem.

A few mathematicians were familiar with the puzzle long before Ms. vos Savant's column.

They called it the Monty Hall problem — the title of an analysis in the journal American Statistician in 1976 — or sometimes Monty's Dilemma or the Monty Hall Paradox.

An earlier version, the Three Prisoner Problem, was analyzed in 1959 by Martin Gardner in his column on mathematical games in Scientific American.

He described it as "a wonderfully confusing little problem" and presciently noted that "in no other branch of mathematics is it so easy for experts to blunder as in probability theory."

The experts responded in force to Ms. vos Savant's column. Of the critical letters she received, close to 1,000 carried signatures with Ph.D.'s, and many were on letterheads of mathematics and science departments.

"Our math department had a good, self-righteous laugh at your expense," wrote Mary Jane Still, a professor at Palm Beach Junior College.

Robert Sachs, a professor of mathematics at George Mason University in Fairfax, Va., expressed the prevailing view that there was no reason to switch doors.

"You blew it!" he wrote.

"Let me explain: If one door is shown to be a loser, that information changes the probability of either remaining choice — neither of which has any reason to be more likely — to one half. As a professional mathematician, I'm very concerned with the general public's lack of mathematical skills.

"Please help by confessing your error and, in the future, being more careful."

The criticism has continued despite several more columns by Ms. vos Savant defending her choice.

"You are utterly incorrect," insisted E. Ray Bobo, a professor of mathematics at Georgetown University. He, too, worried about "the national crisis in mathematical education" and asked, "How many irate mathematicians are needed to get you to change your mind?"

"One mathematician spent an hour explaining to me why it paid to switch," Hall said.

ROMANCE: Genre accounts for 40 percent of paperback sales sleep around.

Those who write the 207 million romance novels sold every year say they are nothing like the pink-and-feathers-clad prima donna played by Meryl Streep in the movie "She-Devil" or the adventurer Kathleen Turner portrayed in "Romancing the Stone."

Most of the writers range from "the typical little housewife who's never worked outside the home and loves to read romance novels up to college professors and attorneys," said Pat Kay, alias Trisha Alexander, who is Southwest regional adviser to the Houston-based Romance Writers of America.

Mrs. Kay, as Miss Alexander, has written five novels for Silhouette Books, a subsidiary of the leading romance publishing house, Harlequin Romances.

The authors are overwhelmingly female, Mrs. Kay said. One of the group's 16 board members is a man, Harold Lowery, but he writes under the feminine pseudonym Leigh Greenwood.

"Most women feel men don't know a heck of a lot about romance," Mrs. Kay says.

But maybe they're learning. Leslie Wainger, Silhouette's senior editor for the Intimate Moments line, said workers on offshore oil rigs and male prison inmates are among the first to grab romance novels when they hit the reading rooms.

About 1,200 of the group's 5,000 members are meeting in New Orleans this week to discuss the craft that accounts for 40 percent of all paperback book sales.

A brewing debate expected to come up at the convention is the near-absence of black characters in romance novels.

A handful of books feature black heroes, and Ms. Wainger said she was willing to buy such manuscripts, but never receives them. She adds that the vast majority of romance writers are white, and "write about what they know."

One white writer, Jackie Weger, of St. Augustine, Fla., described in the group's bi-monthly magazine, Romance Writers' Report, about her experience writing a romance novel with a black hero and the letters it generated.

"White readers were appalled to find themselves fantasizing about a black hero," she said. "It made them uncomfortable."

But romance writers say the novel is changing from the Harlequin romances of the 1950s, where heroines slept only with their husbands.

"We learned how to put condoms on our heroes, didn't we? Our heroines can chair a board meeting, change a flat tire and get a breast reduction," Ms. Weger said.

Society may give romance heroines more freedom, but the authors are restricted by narrow guidelines from publishers and suggestions from the Romance Writers of America.

'Friendly fire': Incidents go unreported

EDITOR'S NOTE: In a four-part series, Stewart M. Powell, who covers national security affairs for the Hearst Newspapers, and Charles J. Lewis, Washington bureau chief of Hearst Newspapers, examine the phenomenon of "friendly fire" in the Persian Gulf war. In Part Two, the battlefield casualty reporting system does not put a priority on determing friendly fire or enemy fire, military officials admit.

By Stewart Powell
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — It's chaotic, dark and terrifying — an ideal night to kill or be killed.

American tanks and Bradley fighting vehicles are moving across open desert in staggered formation toward a distant Iraqi-held position that is being pummeled by American howitzers, rockets and helicopter gunships.

An American tank crew suddenly spies a "hot spot" through the thermal sights. The image resembles an Iraqi combat vehicle.

The American crew, trained to detect and identify targets and pull the trigger in a matter of seconds, fires the M1A1 Abrams' powerful 120 mm cannon. The distant vehicle explodes. The tank crew continues to feverishly scan the darkness for new threats to their lives as their armored force moves on across the desert, crossing miles before it halts.

Almost simultaneously, the crew of a Bradley armored vehicle radios to a rear headquarters that a nearby American armored vehicle is out of action, hit by what appears to be enemy fire. The damaged vehicle's wounded are evacuated to a battalion aid station. The remains of the dead are collected at day break.

When the commander of the far-flung armored unit finally has time the next morning to radio back to battalion headquarters, there's only one thing on his mind.

"All he's interested in doing is reporting his killed, wounded and lost vehicles so he can get what he needs to maintain the momentum of attack," says Col. David R. Kiernan, an Army official. "It's not cold hearted. It's the nature of war."

The casualties are merely listed as killed or wounded in action. Relatives may receive word back home within as little as four days. Soldiers' remains are usually returned to the United States for burial within a week, according to Kiernan.

But the outlines of the engagement that claimed their lives are not committed to paper until the combat unit's daily situation report is radioed back to battalion headquarters where enlisted personnel write down details of the clash, the map coordinates and U.S. losses in the battalion log.

"The battlefield casualty reporting system does not put a priority on commanders making the determination between enemy fire and friendly fire," says James A. Blackwell, Jr., a former Army officer who is now deputy director of political-military studies at the Center for Strategic and International Studies. "It's very hard to make that determination on the spot. The system reflects a judgment that it is not worth that effort."

In some cases, the evidence of friendly fire is so overwhelming that investigators in the field reach preliminary conclusions almost immediately.

Four days after a U.S. Maverick missile killed seven Marines in their armored vehicle during an engagement with Iraqi armored vehicles in Kuwait on Jan. 29, Marine Maj. Gen. Robert B. Johnston, chief of staff for U.S. Central Command, said authorities had "enough evidence right now" to conclude with "some great certainty" that the Marines died from friendly fire.

In some other cases, however, it may be weeks or even months before rumors of war begin circulating to suggest that the Iraqis never fired back during a certain engagement at a certain location, raising the possibility that damaged American vehicles were probably hit by friendly fire.

At least 42 American troops were killed and wounded, as were 11 Britons, in 11 incidents of friendly fire involving American forces that have identified so far during the Persian Gulf war. Pentagon officials told Hearst Newspapers that investigations continue into as many as a dozen other incidents, most of them engagements involving Army combat vehicles firing on one another.

The Army Materiel Command had a field team in southern Iraq and Kuwait to inspect damaged American vehicles. A post-war report issued by the Pentagon last week said "some number" of additional American tanks "may have been damaged or destroyed" by friendly fire.

Back-tracking to identify friendly fire casualties often proves difficult, according to Army Lt. Col. Charles R. Shrader, who reviewed reports on 269 incidents dating back to World War II in a study for the Army's Combat Studies Institute at the Army Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

"No casualty reporting system used by the U.S. Army has made adequate provision for the clear, separate identification of casualties due to friendly fire," Shrader said.

Combat commanders "may be reluctant to report" friendly fire incidents for fear of damaging reputations, eroding troops' morale or to "avoid unprofitable conflicts" with commanders of the U.S. units that inflicted the casualties, Shrader said.

"I don't think the military is prepared to be candid about the friendly fire problem," says a senior military officer who was involved in U.S. operations. "You come forward on the things you do well on."

Charles Hawkins, an executive with the Historical Evaluation and Research Organization that does work for the Pentagon, said his review of battalion field reports from the Vietnam war showed the number of friendly fire incidents is "usually much higher than reported."

For every friendly fire incident recorded in battalion logs, Hawkins said his review found as many as three incidents were unreported during Vietnam.

"The company commander keeps reports on gaining and losing soldiers," Hawkins said. "But out in the field he doesn't detail the cause."

WEDNESDAY: The widow of an American soldier killed during Desert Storm suspects her husband was killed by U.S. fire. The Pentagon will only say he was "killed in action."

Victorian mansion is haunted, court rules

NEW YORK (AP) — A big Victorian house on the Hudson, where the ghosts leave gifts and where The Amazing Kreskin wanted to hold a seance, has been declared haunted — "as a matter of law" — by an appeals court.

That was good news for Jeffrey and Patrice Stambovsky, who had decided in 1989 to buy the old 18-room mansion in Nyack for $650,000 — but changed their mind after a local architect told them, "Oh, you're buying the haunted house."

It seems they hadn't been told before they put down a $32,500 binder that the owner, Helen Ackley, had claimed for years that she'd been seeing poltergeists. In a 1977 article in Reader's Digest, she said one of the men was a "cheerful apple-cheeked man" who looked like Santa Claus.

In a local newspaper in 1982, she described the spirits as "dressed in Revolutionary period clothing, perhaps frozen in a time warp, waiting for someone or some reason to move on."

In a 1989 article about a house tour in suburban Nyack, the house was described as "riverfront Victorian — with ghost."

Stambovsky, a 38-year-old bond trader, said he didn't believe in such things. He said his wife, who was pregnant at the time, was bothered by the idea.

"Would you want to bump into George Washington in the middle of the night?" their lawyer asked.

And since Mrs. Ackley hadn't said boo to them about it, they wanted their money back.

"My feeling is that Mrs. Ackley is a very neat old lady who likes to spin tales," Stambovsky said. "But if my wife is influenced enough by that stuff to feel uncomfortable, that's a good enough reason not to sink our life savings into the place."

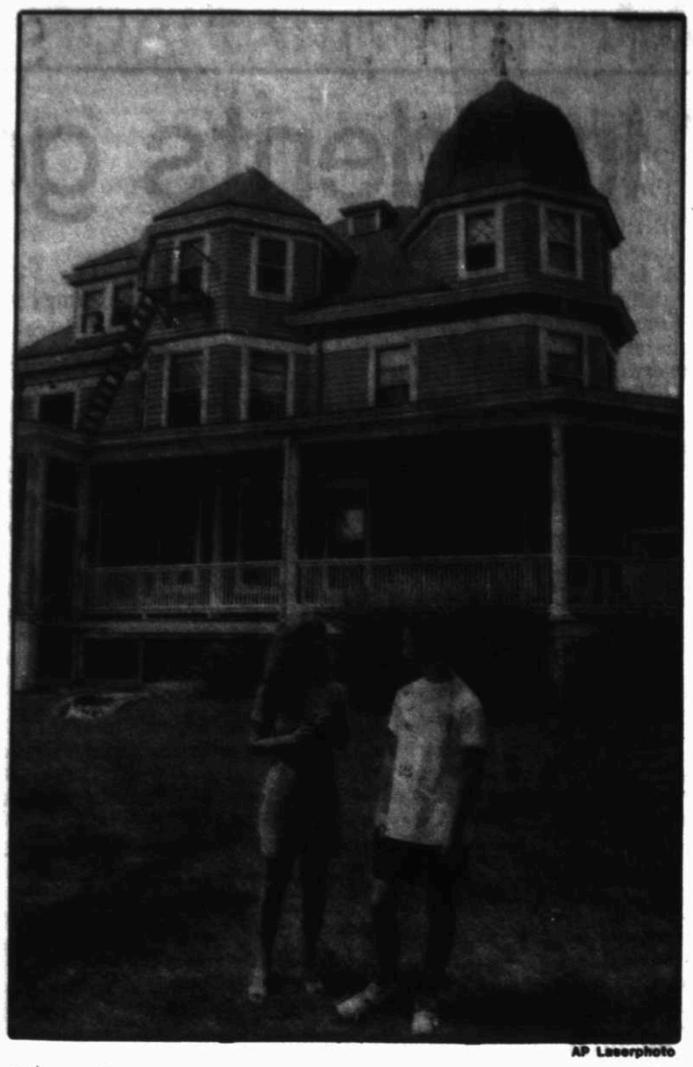

"We were the victims of ectoplasmic fraud," he added.

The Stambovskys sued for the binder they had put down, but it looked like they didn't have a ghost of a chance when the judge said the rule of "caveat emptor" — let the buyer beware — governs real estate transactions.

Late last week, the Appellate Division of State Supreme Court disagreed in a 3-2 decision and had some fun doing so.

Justice Israel Rubin, writing for the majority, said he was "moved by the spirit of equity" to allow the Stambovskys to sue to break the contract.

Rubin said that since Ackley "had deliberately fostered the belief that her home was possessed by ghosts," she should have told the Stambovskys.

The milkman's back in New York towns

SCARSDALE, N.Y. (NYT) — An unlikely suspect has emerged as an antidote to an age of fax machines, frozen dinners, automated tellers and non-dairy creamers. Meet the milkman.

With the self-consciousness of someone who knows he is one of a dying breed — indeed, some people would have sworn he was extinct — Bob O'Byrne plys the winding roads of Scarsdale, dropping glistening glass bottles into aluminum milk boxes.

His clients, particularly busy parents and professionals, seem to like the convenience of home-delivered milk, the environmental benefits of glass bottles and the reassuring, wholesome feeling of having a milkman.

Over the last 28 years, the amount of milk delivered by milkmen nationwide fell from 30 percent to 1 percent, according to the Department of Agriculture.

That's not a surprise, since milk in supermarkets is almost half the price of milk delivered to the door.

But here, in the land of Tudors and Colonials, the milkman still has a calling.

"The milk is fresher and colder, and my children can tell the difference in taste between the cartons and the glass bottles," said Mary Lou Barile, a 48-year-old mother of two. "I grew up with home deliveries in the 1950s, and it's just nice having that down-on-the-farm, personalized service."

Although the thin plastic film inside cardboard cartons has no taste, many people say that milk from a glass bottle tastes better. One obvious reason for the fresher taste is that home-delivered milk is taken directly from the producer to the consumer, unlike milk sold in supermarkets, where a carton may have spent a few days getting to and then sitting on a shelf before it is bought. Glass is also a better conductor of cold than cardboard or plastic.

O'Byrne, a boyish looking 37-year- old, drives a truck with "MILKMAN" painted across the hood and wears a shirt bearing the logo of a holstein. "When I tell people what I do for a living, they're in disbelief," said O'Byrne, who has been a milkman for the last 12 years.

He said he fell into the job after working as a clerk at the Dellwood Foods depot in White Plains during college summers and later as assistant plant manager. Now he is one of 15 milkmen who pick up their milk from the plant and deliver to some 4,000 homes in Westchester County. Ninety percent of O'Byrne's 190 customers live in Scarsdale; the rest are in nearby Eastchester and White Plains.

The dairy finds its greatest concentration of customers in the town of Greenwich, one of Connecticut's wealthiest suburb. "As people begin to place a value on their time, services like this come back in style," said Michael L. Marcus, whose grandfather founded Marcus Dairy in 1922.

Memorial to honor Nova Scotia refugees

ST. MARTINVILLE, La. (AP) — An Acadian memorial has been proposed to honor all the refugees who came to Louisiana from Nova Scotia in the 1700s.

Plans include:

—Marble slabs with the names of all Acadians who came to Louisiana.

—An eternal flame.

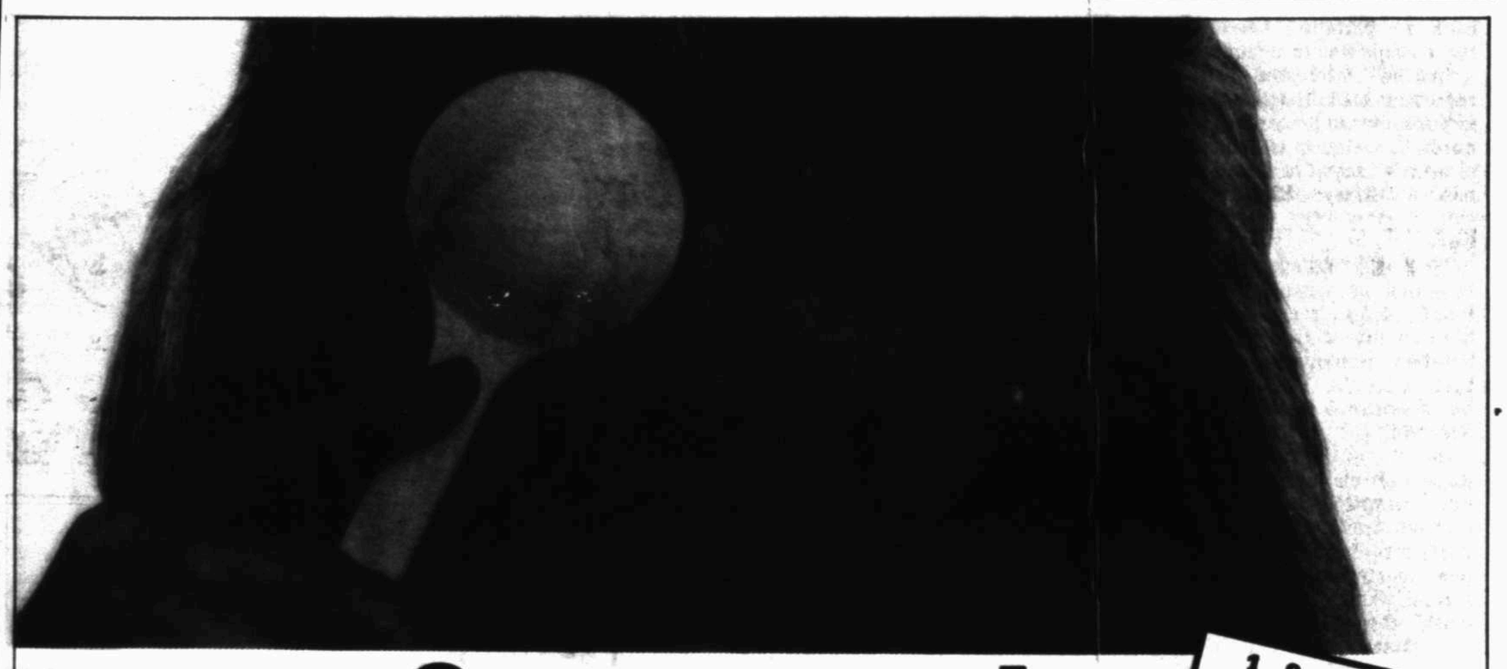

—A video of the movie "Evangeline" starring Delores Del Rio.

Displays would include maps showing where the refuges came from and where they settled when they fled Canada to escape religious persecution.

President and Mrs. Bush watch a traditional Turkish dance as they conclude their European trip in Istanbul Sunday.

Bush wraps up trip with tour of Istanbul

ISTANBUL, Turkey (NYT) — A weary George Bush heads home on Monday after a week abroad that ended with a whirlwind tour Sunday of this historic metropolis that serves as a gateway between Europe and Asia.

At a final state dinner with Turkish President Turgut Ozal at a waterside palace built by the Ottoman sultan, Bush strongly endorsed the idea of Turkey becoming the 13th member of the European Community.

Said Bush: "Politically and economically, Turkey today is a nation transformed. There should be no question that Turkey deserves entry into the European Community (EC) ...and Turkey can count on America's strong support."

Earlier, speaking in Turkish, Ozal, who had spent the day as Bush's tour guide, said, "Some people maintain that the EC should be a Christian club. I believe that such tendencies do not contribute to universal tolerance and open-mindedness."

Turkey's 55 million people are nearly all Moslems. But Kemal Ataturk, who overthrew the decadent Ottomans after World War I, secularized the society. Turkey, for example, observes Sunday as its day of rest, unlike nearly all of the rest of the Islamic world, which marks the sabbath on Friday.

Bush was the first U.S. president to visit Turkey in 32 years and the first ever to set foot in Istanbul.

As thousands of citizens strolled along the boulevards that line the Bosporus waterway, Ozal took Bush for a two-hour boat ride on the strategic body of water that separates Europe and Asia.

Several Coast Guard-style cutters, spewing huge clouds of acrid black fumes onto Bush and his party, escorted the tour boat while at least five smaller security vessels tagged along in the rear. Except for this armada and a press boat, kept well way from the Bush-Ozal group, the usually busy Bosporus was cleared of all waterborne traffic for the duration of the cruise.

Together with their wives, the presidents shed their shoes, as required, to enter the Blue Mosque, which was begun in 1606 by 16-year-old Sultan Ahmet I and finished in 1616. The presidential wives wore head scarves as they walked on a series of oriental rugs and gazed upwards at the huge dome. (It has 260 windows that let light filter in on its tiles, giving the structure its Western name.)

Their next stop was the nearby Haghia Sophia, a rust-colored domed architectural delight. Dedicated by the Emperor Justinian in 537, it served as Constantinople cathedral for nine more centuries. With the Turkish victory over Byzantium in 1453, it became a mosque and stayed that way until 1935, when it became a museum.

Afghan guerrillas claim second win

■ If Afghan guerrillas have captured Ishkashim as they claim, it marks the second time this past week they have overrun government-held towns.

PESHAWAR, Pakistan (AP) — Muslim guerrillas said they captured a strategic town on the Afghan-Soviet border Sunday in their second major battlefield victory in less than a week.

The town of Ishkashim in northeastern Badakshan Province fell after five days of fighting, said a spokesman for the guerrilla commanders' Supervisory Council.

Like most rebel claims, this could not be verified. The Soviet-backed government in Kabul made no mention of the battle, but rarely acknowledges guerrilla victories.

The rebel spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said government soldiers and militia offered little resistance and fled across the Amu Darya River to the Soviet Union. He did not know the number of casualties.

Tuesday, the mujahedeen, or Islamic holy warriors, captured the town of Zebak in Badakshan, opening a critical supply route from Pakistan and setting the stage for a planned attack on the provincial capital of Faizabad.

The mujahedeen have been fighting since April 1978 to topple successive Communist governments in Kabul.

Separately Sunday, diplomatic sources said radical Muslim guerrillas may have persuaded a rival pro-Iranian group to kidnap two American relief workers in the southern province of Ghazni.

The two Americans, a veterinarian and a translator, were abducted July 7 while working on an animal husbandry project.

The group, Nahazat Islami (Islamic Movement), has been blamed by diplomats and more moderate resistance groups for the kidnapping. It has denied responsibility.

Diplomats say they suspect the fundamentalist Hezb-e-Islami, or Party of Islam, arranged the kidnapping. A spokesman for Hezb-e-Islami denied the allegation.

The U.S. Embassy in Islamabad has refused to release the Americans' names, and said there have been no demands for their release.

Shiite Afghans "friendly to America" left Peshawar for Ghazni Province over the weekend to negotiate the hostages' release, said one diplomatic source, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Hezb-e-Islami is the most anti-American of the seven major resistance groups operating out of Pakistan, and is considered to have the most potent military force.

The groups loyal to Iran represent the minority Shiites in Afghanistan, while those based in Pakistan are aligned with the majority Sunni sect.

Kurds take control of northern Iraqi city

SULAIMANIYA, Iraq — Heavily armed Kurdish guerrillas appeared Sunday to be in full control of this northern Iraqi city, apparently with the approval of the local authorities.

The Iraqi armed forces seemed to have withdrawn completely from the town after reports of heavy fighting last week, the most serious battles reported since the unsuccessful Kurdish uprising against the government of President Saddam Hussein in March.

Details of what happened in the city remained unclear to Western reporters who were brought to this city on Sunday by the government in the wake of reports from residents and United Nations officials of fierce fighting.

But it seemed certain that the Kurdish guerrillas had established a commanding presence in the town with the apparent consent of the local governor. While the army has withdrawn, it remains in a state of readiness.

If there is in fact a security agreement between the guerrillas and government forces, it would be the first such arrangement since the March uprising, which followed the government's defeat in the Persian Gulf war at the hands of American-led forces.

The reporters, who were allowed to spend about 45 minutes in the city, found it orderly and calm, patrolled by significant numbers of Kurdish guerrillas in baggy brown trousers, with their Kalashnikovs, rocket-propelled grenade launchers and bandoleers of bright brass cartridges.

The guerrillas mounted a heavy guard around the office of the Baghdad-nominated provincial governor, Mohammed Nagimuddi Naquishbandi, a Kurd who was once a major general in the Iraqi army.

Search ends for Navy pilot

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — Navy rescuers have abandoned the search for a fighter pilot who bailed out before his aircraft crashed into the sea, a U.S. 6th Fleet spokesman said Sunday.

The A-6E attack jet went down in international waters north of Crete on Friday while President Bush was visiting the Greek island.

The navigator aboard the jet also bailed out and was rescued about 45 minutes later. The Navy said the jet was on a training mission unrelated to Bush's visit.

Low-tech opens new nuke threat

Perhaps at no time since the explosion of the atomic bomb nearly a half century ago has the issue of war weapons been so threatening yet hopeful. Washington and Moscow now stand on the threshold of a historic agreement to reduce long-range nuclear weapons by about 30 percent. But Iraq has produced enriched uranium for atomic weapons using a low-tech, much less costly and technical method than current means.

This method of enrichment makes obsolete the international program to curb nuclear weapons proliferation. Virtually any nation can now produce such weapons. That is an extremely significant and highly dangerous development.

Marathon U.S.-Soviet bargaining sessions have produced an accord, except for one technical question, that would reduce Soviet long-range nuclear warheads from 11,000 to 7,000 and American warheads from 12,000 to 9,000. A safer world is on the horizon.

Meanwhile, international experts say that Iraq — or any country — can now build an atomic bomb on relatively short notice using antiquated, relatively cheap methods without necessarily being detected. Scientific literature has long explained how to use calutrons — large electromagnets — to produce enriched uranium. Iraq, admitting it made a pound of such uranium, may already have produced a bomb. No one is certain because Baghdad so far has lied about every aspect of its nuclear weapons programs. But its admitted 30 enrichment machines could produce sufficient fuel to make one warhead a year.

All of Iraq's work was done without any nation in the world knowing about it. That raises an obvious question. Why did not U.S. and other intelligence agencies discover this? That is a very critical question which must be answered.

As the superpowers provide a safer world, any small nation — from Cuba to Libya or Syria — can now become a giant international killer. Unfortunately, despite valiant efforts by Washington and Moscow, the world is not a less dangerous place today. We are faced with new, critical nuclear weapons issues.

ANOTHER VIEW

Greenspan decision good for economy

President Bush took his own sweet time, but he has at last nominated Alan Greenspan for another term as chairman of the Federal Reserve. It's the right decision. We hope it was made for the right reasons.

The president's delay raises some concern. Bush renominated Joint Chiefs Chairman Colin Powell to his post more than a month ago, even though his term isn't up for months. The president was happy to jump the gun in announcing the reappointment of a national hero.

By contrast, Mr. Greenspan's term expires Aug. 11, but the president felt no urge to reassure the financial markets, to whom the Fed chairman is another hero, by hastening his renomination.

Playing politics at the Federal Reserve, which controls the money supply and thus strongly influences interest rates and the rates of inflation and growth, is nothing new, particularly with a presidential campaign coming.

The Bush administration has been slyly critical of Mr. Greenspan's performance, which it sees as dampening economic growth.

But Mr. Greenspan finds himself in a difficult position. Alone among economic policy makers, he has handled his duties wisely. The monumental ineptitude displayed by Congress and the White House has essentially frozen the government's fiscal policy.

The disastrous budget deal of last fall raised taxes three months into a recession, contrary to every school of economic thought. At the same time it made no appreciable dent in federal spending, which is the cause of the deficit the budget deal was supposed to solve.

It has thus been left to Mr. Greenspan to manage the economy. Some economists believe — and the White House would dearly love us to believe — that Mr. Greenspan was responsible for the recession by refusing to accelerate the decline in interest rates. But consider the alternative if Mr. Greenspan had done the "political" thing: a wildly expanding money supply fueling inflation, with Washington raising taxes and spending.

That's what happened in the 1970s, a debacle from which our economy has still not completely recovered. We have Mr. Greenspan to thank for averting a repeat performance.

He has saved the politicians from themselves, and they should be grateful.

Today is Monday, July 22, the 203rd day of 1991. There are 162 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 22, 1934, a man identified as bank robber John Dillinger was shot to death by federal agents outside Chicago's Biograph Theater.

On this date:

In 1587, a second English colony — also fated to vanish under mysterious circumstances — was established on Roanoke Island off North Carolina.

In 1796, Cleveland, Ohio, was founded by General Moses Cleaveland.

In 1812, English troops under the Duke of Wellington defeated the French at the Battle of Salamanca in Spain.

In 1844, Anglican clergyman William Archibald Spooner — whose habit of transposing words or parts of words while speaking resulted in the term "spoonerisms" — was born in London.

Amarillo split over Pantex expansion

WASHINGTON — Some residents of the Texas panhandle city of Amarillo believe they have been victims of "high stakes blackmail" conducted by the Energy Department, which is searching for new places to build nuclear bombs.

Anderson

By 1993, the Energy Department must decide how to consolidate a current nuclear weapons complex, which is made up of 13 plants in 12 states. The fragmentation was once deemed necessary to prevent a crippling strike at any given plant. Now several are slated to close while others will expand their current functions. The Pantex plant at Amarillo, where weapons are sent for final assembly, was counted as an odds-on favorite to expand. It is a favor that some in Amarillo wish the federal government would bestow on someone else.

Most nuclear power plants spawn opposition across the country, but up until now Amarillo has been better known for high-grade corn and cattle than environmental activism. Now the town is divided, with the Chamber of Commerce and city officials welcoming the expansion and a strange-bedfellows coalition of ranchers, farmers and peaceniks saying no.

Amarillo activists say that the Energy Department is promising the town a carrot of prosperity if the town agrees to accept a bigger plant. But the agency is also swinging the stick of retribution by threatening to close the existing operations in Amarillo if the town decides against expansion.

For years, the government's bomb-building business has remained under classified wraps, leaving a $100 billion legacy of environmental damage. Still, when the opportunity to expand Pantex first arose last winter, Amarillo was anxious to fight for, not against, the plant, believing it would be a financial godsend. But second thoughts seeped in after local residents began sifting through the potential dangers and the Energy Department's shoddy safety record.

Pantex was one of five existing weapons facilities that were asked to submit bids for expansion. The Energy Department also invited cities without existing plants to submit proposals, but nobody bit. Since the department didn't want any messy opposition, community support was one of the chief criteria in the selection process.

Bowing to the Energy Department's desires, Pantex proponents lobbied with the Amarillo Chamber of Commerce and others to produce a bid that showed local residents backing the expansion by a 4-to-1 margin. Many residents were slow to realize that plutonium wasn't the typical pork-barrel project — that the fertile lands of northwest Texas were at stake.

"I thought surely someone would come forward and say that this (endorsement) is ridiculous," Bill O'Brien, a local businessman, told our reporter Jan Moller. O'Brien started a watchdog group called Operation Common Sense when he became worried about the lack of information provided to residents concerning safety and health.

Some in Amarillo think they are being asked to bid blindly on the expansion. The Energy Department won't say exactly what the new and expanded Pantex plant will do. But there is a strong possibility that Pantex will have to take over the potentially dangerous plutonium handling and storage formerly done at the Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant in Colorado — an operation that was shut down in 1989 for safety reasons.

Congress should to look at home needs

I was reading Tom Jefferson's "Notes on Virginia" the other day and a couple of things caught my attention.

Jefferson could boast in that work, a lengthy description of Virginia in particular but of America in general in the late 1700s, that no one visiting America would find an American beggar.

Reese

First of all there was plenty of economic opportunity for almost anyone willing to work. Secondly, there were strong families to care for those who suffered misfortune. Thirdly, if a person were really unfortunate and lacked a family to care for him or her, there was a system of public charity.

This system was county-based and to qualify for it, you must be a resident of the county. Each resident was assessed and this money was distributed by a volunteer board of people (not professional alms-dispensers). A person in need of care, if truly unfortunate through no fault of his or her own, would be placed with a family which would care for that individual. A true vagabond, like a drunk, would be placed in a work house where he would eat and sleep but also labor.

It ought to be our goal to so reconstruct our society in 1990s that sometime in the not too distant future, we, too, could say to Europe — come to America and you won't see any beggars on our streets. Today, of course, you see millions.

It's not true that the good society Jefferson wrote about could not be replicated today. The ingredients are the same: plenty of economic opportunity, strong families, and a community-rooted, non-professional system of charity.

What we most lack today is what President Bush sneeringly refers to as "the vision thing." The vision thing is nothing more than having a concept of an ideal society, articulated and broadcast, so that we all enlisted in the cooperative effort to realize it. It is sometimes called inspiration. That's inspiration as opposed to manipulation. It's asking people to work for something besides personal consumption and ego gratification. That's called leadership, as opposed to vote-buying.

Whatever the new world order Bush occasionally spoke about but never defined is, we don't need it. What we need is a country where there are no beggars. What we need is a country where our youth are not bored and afflicted with ennui at the onset of adolescence. What we need is a country where young males do not have to mistakenly try to salvage their lost dignity with a gun or by brutalizing a woman. What we need is a country where people wake up in the morning excited about the opportunities to lead a meaningful life and optimistic that their honest efforts will earn honest rewards.

Bombing Iraq didn't bring us one inch toward that goal. Meddling in the Balkans or playing what Rudyard Kipling called the Great Game with the Russians will not bring us an inch to that goal.

Jefferson once mused that circumstances had given the Americans a unique opportunity to prove that a nation could live in peace so its citizens could devote their resources to their own pursuits rather than see them ground to pieces in endless wars.

Well, in this century, we erred and involved ourselves in other people's quarrels. That does not mean that we cannot reverse that policy and concentrate on our own neglected affairs. To do so, however, we the people will have to educate our representatives and replace those who are ineducable. Just recently a Congress, which is continuously poor-mouthing to its constituents, voted overwhelmingly for a foreign aid bill of nearly $16 billion with little or no debate. Out of 435 members of the House, only 44 voted against shipping these billions of tax dollars taken from the pockets of America's men and women and shipping them overseas.

Assad's letter to Bush must be made public

WASHINGTON — What's really in that letter from Syria's dictator, Hafez al-Assad, to George Bush?

News accounts say that Syria has unconditionally accepted our proposal to convene a Middle East conference. Only a silent U.N. observer would be permitted, goes the Bush compromise; and if face-to-face negotiations stall, no running to a plenary session of outside powers can happen without both parties' consent.

Safire

"Very positive," said President Bush of the letter; "a breakthrough." Secretary Baker called it "a positive response and it is not — if you read the letter — it is not conditioned." He repeated "not conditioned."

Maybe we all ought to read that letter. Assad, in return for Saudi billions to buy hundreds of tanks and Scud-Cs, has transformed his image overnight from rejectionist and terrorist to the soul of sweet reason.

However, only a vague summary has been released, lest the world and the Israelis get to look at the fine print.

In that rambling letter, I am informed, Assad spelled out his understanding of assurances given to him over the past six weeks from the United States.

The central assurance, according to the Syrian strongman's letter, is that the U.S. is in complete agreement with the Syrian view that the Golan Heights must be returned to Syria.

Of course, that is not the U.S. position, unless it has been secretly changed. Although we have never recognized Israel's assertion of its law over the strategic high ground (so often used as the launching site of attacks on Israel, and won from Syria after its 1967 aggression), the U.S. has traditionally left the Golan to negotiations between the parties.

But here is Assad, in agreeing to come to a meeting, trying to compromise Bush by laying out his understanding of its U.S.-assured conclusion: return of the land he lost in a war he started.

Nor is that the only trouble in this unreleased "breakthrough." Bush has publicly told Israel, which seeks direct dealings with Arab states, that such talks would not be subverted by outside intervention without Israel's consent.

Direct negotiations would mean nothing if decisions were to be imposed from a higher level.

But Assad's written view of this "consensus" envisions outside powers as active participants in the negotiations — and he notes U.S. assurances to him on this.

No wonder Baker does not want the text of the fuzzy Assad letter in the newspapers. If the Syrian is lying about what he says the U.S. assures him, that would have to come out; in the unlikely event Assad is truthful, Bush and Baker would have to admit duplicity.

Secretary Baker is apparently uncomfortable about rushing to interpret the Assad understandings of the conference method and outcome as mere "preferences" and not "conditions."

The tipoff was this: After repeatedly hailing the letter as "not conditioned," our diplomat added — in a line lost in most coverage — "there are some suggestions made in there that we want to discuss with him to make certain that they are not in any way interpreted as conditions."

In other words, Baker will go to Damascus this week to plead with President Assad to stop writing down his understanding of the deal. If the Syrian stands pat on his letter, the Israelis will naturally want to see the document.

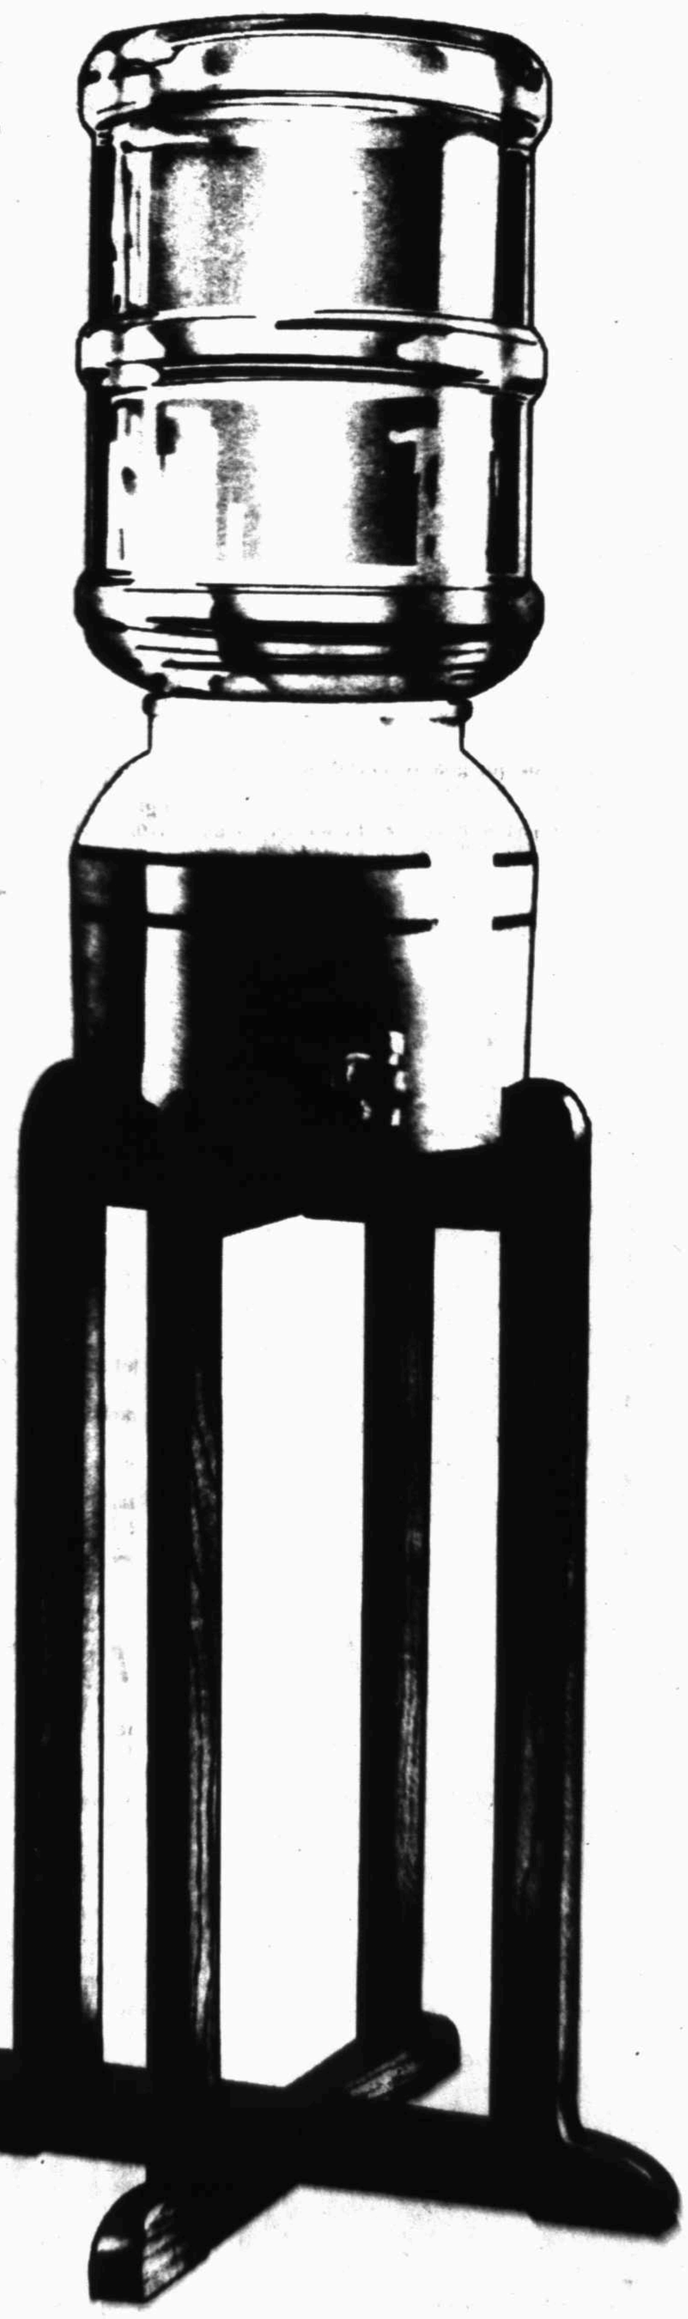

Because undisputed Syrian understanding of a U.S. tilt would send Shamir through the roof of the Knesset, Baker will probably have to put a Bush reply in writing that corrects the record, removing the Syrian not-conditions-but-preferences, and show that to the Israelis instead.

In Israel Sunday, perhaps Baker will not threaten Soviet Jews with homelessness or demand that Israel in effect turn over the West Bank and Jerusalem's east side to Arabs by forbidding Jews to settle there. Perhaps Shamir will ignore the Assad letter and agree to the face-to-faces meeting.

In that event, Arik Sharon — who sees this as the slippery slope to the PLO state — will try to bring down the Likud government. Labor may propose another coalition, but a good chance exists for new elections at year's end. By that time we may all get to read Assad's "breakthrough" letter.

Hearings question officials' withdrawals

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (NYT) — Six months after the collapse of a private bank insurance fund left 300,000 Rhode Island depositors locked out of their accounts, televised hearings have transfixed the state and focused attention on one question: Why were public officials and financial leaders able to withdraw their own money on the eve of the crisis?

The hearings, the first of several phases of public testimony in coming months, will resume on Monday and continue through Thursday.

The nine-member investigating panel was created by the Legislature to look into the collapse of the Rhode Island Share and Deposit Indemnity Corp., a private company that insured the deposits of 45 credit unions and banks.

After the company failed on New Year's Eve, the banks and credit unions it insured were ordered closed by the new governor, Bruce G. Sundlun.

The closings directly affected one out of three Rhode Islanders, creating the state's worst banking crisis since the Depression and shaking the political establishment.

More than $1 billion in assets, representing the accounts of 160,00 depositors, are still frozen in the 13 credit unions and banks that remain closed.

The other financial institutions were allowed to reopen after obtaining federal deposit insurance. Accounts in federally insured banks and credit unions throughout the state were not affected by the crisis.

Last week, Rhode Island residents watched the televised hearings with fascination as public officials and former officials of financial institutions answered questions about whether they used inside information to make last-minute withdrawals, aggravating the crisis at the expense of ordinary depositors.

While not a root cause of the crisis, the issue has given Rhode Islanders a focus for their frustration.

The crisis is widely perceived to be an outgrowth of an inbred political culture that produced a tangle of conflicting interests among public officials and financial institutions.

One witness last week was state Rep. Robert V. Bianchini, who until this year was the vice chairman of the House Finance Committee and also headed the trade association of state's credit unions.

Bianchini has been criticized for his role in the failure of a 1986 bill that would have required all credit unions to obtain federal insurance, putting Rhode Island Share and Desposit out of business.

NTSB: Risky tanker was carrying herbicide

N.Y. Times News Service

The rail car that spewed a load of toxic pesticide into the Sacramento River was of an older design so notorious for rupturing that federal investigators have repeatedly urged that it not be filled with hazardous cargoes.

In dozens of accidents in recent years, the National Transportation Safety Board has found that the DOT-111A — the most common tank car on the nation's rails — punctures twice as easily as newer cars with stronger shells and special safety features.

Yet the federal Department of Transportation has been slow to upgrade its design standards or require that dangerous loads be put in sturdier cars, and the DOT-111A's still account for roughly 60,000 of the 107,000 tank cars used to haul hazardous loads all over the country.

"They're perfectly satisfactory for carrying many materials out there," said Bernard Loeb, director of research and engineering at the safety board, the leading federal agency in accident investigations. "But there are still a number of products being transported in these 111As that we believe should not be."

With more and more of the nation's chemical cargoes being moved by train, the disastrous spill last week near Dunsmuir is focusing new attention on a haphazard regulatory system that allows rail lines to handle many toxic materials no differently than they handle wine or corn syrup.

Despite the potency of the spilled pesticide, which left 45 miles of the upper Sacramento River virtually lifeless, it is not considered "hazardous" by the U.S. Department of Transportation, so it traveled unlabeled in an ordinary tank car.

It now appears that the Southern Pacific train derailed because too much weight was concentrated at the end of the train. But some experts contend that a sturdier tank car may not have punctured so easily in the 20-foot fall and that, at the very least, placards identifying its cargo as hazardous would have allowed a speedier response.

Nebraska told treat heat like a blizzard

Associated Press

An Indianapolis radio station cooled listeners by playing "Frosty the Snowman" and Nebraskans were advised to do what they would during a blizzard — stay inside — as withering heat gripped much of the nation again Sunday.

"That song, it chilled it so much my furnace just kicked on," said a caller to station WIBC. Disc jockey Bruce Stevens asked listeners to phone if they noticed a drop in the city's 93-degree heat after he played the Ronettes' song.

"That 'Frosty the Snowman' was a great hit," the caller said. "There are reports of snow flurries in the area."

Hot and sticky weather continued throughout the central Plains states and on the Eastern seaboard, where highs Sunday nudged over 100.

It has hit 100 somewhere in Nebraska every day since Monday.

"Stay in. Keep cool," said nursing supervisor Kathy Peregrine at Lincoln General Hospital in Lincoln, Neb. "People should almost treat the weather, the way it is, the same as they would a blizzard."

Only New England appeared in line for relief, with six days of blistering heat expected to break a bit Monday, especially over the north and coast. The temperature hit 98 in Boston on Sunday.

"The back of the heat wave is broken," said Walt Drag, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Boston. He said a cool front from Canada would drop highs to the low 80s in northern New England on Monday, then work its way south, cooling Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut by Wednesday.

Patrons flocked to Cinema City in Westbrook, Maine, to enjoy the cool air.

"We've had a lot of calls from people asking if we're air-conditioned," said Nicole Young, a concessionaire at the five-theater complex.

Officials send experts to SE Asia on MIA mission

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Department officials comfirmed Sunday that another team of U.S. military experts is in Southeast Asia in a continuing effort to resolve questions about American servicemen missing in action.

Navy Lt. Cmd. Ken Satterfield said the presence of the 14-member team "is nothing new," pointing out that the group was dispatched to Hanoi about a week ago under a previously arranged schedule.

At least a dozen similar missions have been carried out by Defense Department groups since September 1988 when Vietnam began a policy of more cooperation in MIA matters.

Rep. Lane Evans, D-Ill., who headed a delegation of representatives from the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Vietnam Veterans of America, returned from Vietnam on July 10 and told reporters the new Hanoi regime had invited the veterans' groups to set up their own office in Hanoi to coordinate private efforts to resolve MIA and prisoner of war matters.

Vietnam agreed in April to allow the U.S. military to maintain an office in Hanoi to coordinate missions like the one now underway.

Satterfield said it was coincidental, from the Defese Department standpoint, that the latest military trip came at a time the public release of a controversial photograph of three men purported to be prisoners of war focused new attention in the MIA issue.

But he said the photo "is one of the things they will talk about" since it has generated so much attention. Other military officials have noted that the Defense Department has had the photo for some time, has been unable to validate its authenticity and is skeptical that the three fliers it purports to show were held prisoner when they were shot down.

Latimer poses with a completed miniature room. Some rooms can take as long as two months to complete depending on how much detail you want to add, says Latimer.

BELOW: Latimer holds a tiny hand-painted oil painting. A friend paints the pictures, and Latimer frames them. According to Latimer, they add a touch a realism to a room.

Bigger isn't always better.

Just ask miniature collector Lyn Latimer.

Latimer's passion is building and collecting intricately crafted miniature house settings. A passion that started during her childhood when she became interested in miniature doll houses.

According to Latimer, small things interest people.

"Humans in general are fascinated by anything that is miniature in size," Latimer said.

Latimer has been crafting miniature house interiors for about 10 years, and she normally works in one-inch scale.

This is one inch to each linear foot.

According to Latimer, one inch scale is popular with most miniature collectors, but some collectors preferto work in one-half inch and one-quarter inch scale.

Latimer also builds many of the items she uses to detail her miniature rooms. Most of the rooms begin as kits, which she puts together per the instructions.

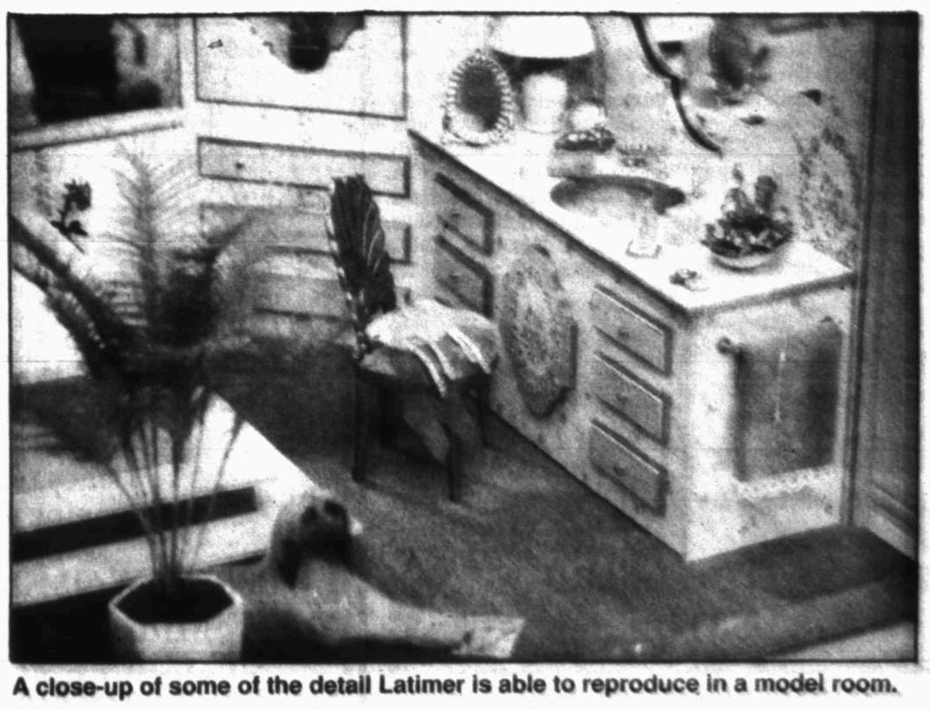

Then Latimer adds the personal touch by including detailed items such as a wine and cheese tray and fruit basket, which she builds herself. She makes the cheese and fruit out of modeling clay and then paints them.

Latimer gets assistance from her husband who does wood working. He builds many of the wood items such as tables, chairs, and book shelves.

Latimer makes miniature playing card sets by photographing a life-size set of cards, and then having a small color print made to scale. She then cuts out the cards individually. Using this method she says she can replicate just about any printed matter.

Latimer belongs to the Midland Miniature Makers, a local miniature collectors club. They meet once a month during the school year. Anyone interested in more information on miniatures can call 682-3012.

Grand jury to probe Matagorda meeting

PORT LAVACA, Texas (AP) — A Calhoun County grand jury this week is considering whether Democratic legislative leaders violated parts of the Texas Open Meetings Act when they met privately last month on remote Matagorda Island.

The 12-person grand jury is acting on a complaint from the public watchdog group Common Cause, which says Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, House Speaker Gib Lewis, Sens. John Montford and Bob Glasgow and Reps. James Hury and Jim Rudd improperly met to talk about the state budget.

Calhoun County District Attorney Jack Whitlow said one interpretation of the law allows the Legislative Budget Board to hold such discussions while another interpretation indicates the closed-door meeting was improper. Attorney General Dan Morales has said the board is covered by the Open Meetings Act.

Gov. Ann Richards also attended the session to talk about the budget but she is not a member of the Legislative Budget Board.

The lawmakers present constituted a quorum of the panel.

Whitlow said he did not expect any action on the matter from the grand jury until later in the week.

'There appears to have been an unposted, closed meeting in violation of the act, and we would respectfully ask that you investigate the matter and release your findings.'

— Common Cause chairwoman Darlene Clements

Conviction on the misdemeanor offense carries a fine of up to $500 and up to five months in jail, Whitlow said.

"This is just very preliminary," he said of the grand jury session, which was beginning Monday. "There seems to be some conflicts in the statute. It deserves looking into."

In its complaint, Common Cause said it didn't know if there was any intent by the legislators to violate the act.

"However, the act clearly prohibits a quorum of any governmental body from holding a meeting at which there is a deliberation concerning any public business or policy over which the governmental body has supervision or control," Common Cause of Texas chairwoman Darlene Clements wrote.

"There appears to have been an unposted, closed meeting in violation of the act, and we would respectfully ask that you investigate the matter and release your findings."

Richards has said she met with the lawmakers as individuals rather than budget board members. Spokesmen for the lawmakers have said the session was exempt from the Open Meetings Act because they only received briefings from aides.

If the grand jury, which is not open to the public, chooses not to pursue the complaint, Whitlow said he would suggest to Richards that she ask the legislature to clarify the act during its current special session.

The original complaint about the meeting was filed in Travis County by the Associated Republicans of Texas.

Group pushing Williams for state Republican chief

HOUSTON (AP) — A group of Texas Republicans wants Clayton Williams, who lost to Ann Richards in last year's gubernatorial race, to take over the state GOP next year.

But Williams, whose frequent verbal gaffes cost him a 21-point lead in the 1990 governor's campaign, says he's not interested in replacing current party chairman Fred Meyer and will serve only as occasional spokesman.

Some board members of the newly created Republicans in Majority Political Action Committee are pooling resources and encouraging Williams to challenge Meyer at next year's state party convention.

"I have no interest in that position," Williams told The Houston Post at Meyer's request. "I know I'm not supposed to say never, but I'm saying I'll never run for chairman."

But RIMPAC board members criticized Meyer's "shoot-from-the-lip" style and said it's time for a new chairman.

"I'd like to see (Williams) as chairman," said an unidentified board member. "He has a lot to contribute and he would do a good job."

While some of Williams' supporters — none of whom would have their names published — said they preferred him to head the party, they said his election defeat was a concern.

"I'd be delighted to see Williams in that position," a RIMPAC board member said. "We don't need help in Dallas and Houston, we need it in east, west, and south Texas and those are Williams' strong areas.

"But for someone with a 21-point lead at the start of the campaign to lose to someone like Richards, that would be a difficult proposition."

Meyer, 63, has held the post since 1988.

He discounted a possible challenge from Williams or others as idle talk by people unwilling to confront him.

"Until I hear it from Clayton, I'm not certain that (his candidacy for party chief) is right," Meyer said. "I believe I have broad grassroots support across the state."

Meyer said he intends to seek reelection next year and wouldn't speculate on who might challenge him.

RIMPAC's goal is to raise about a $1 million to win a majority of state House seats next year. Board members include Rob Mosbacher Jr., former Texas Secretary of State Jack Rains, party activists John Butler, Brenda Arnett, Richard Collins, Jim Lightner, Jim Huffines, and Norman Newton, the Post said.

Food pantries try to tide children over summer months

HOUSTON — The closing of schools and their cafeterias for the summer has left thousands of poor Houston children hungry, directors of food pantries say.

The largest food program sponsored by the city Parks and Recreation Department serves 8,500 meals a day. However, those meals are barely half of the 15,000-plus approved for the program by the Texas Department of Human Services.

"There probably are more out there who are hungry and don't get food than those who do," said Anais Watsky, director of ministries for Northwest Assistance Ministries.

That's because some children can't get to the 170 parks distribution sites and other locations. In crime-ridden neighborhoods, some children are told not to leave the house while their parents are at work. In other cases, parents can't drive their small children to the sites.

Before Kid Care came to the neighborhood, children from the complex were eating from the garbage cans of nearby fast-food restaurants, Ms. Porter said.

Although programs such at Target Hunger and Kid Care are set up to fill the gaps, many of the most needy children are still falling through the cracks, officials say.

"If a summer program is not accessible to a child, if a park is too far to access by walking, it's catch as catch can," said Carol Porter, vice president of Kid Care.

Ms. Porter and others involved in food distribution programs say they rely on generosity and innovation while hoping for more money.

Target Hunger, which has operated for two years, has been distributing leftover convenience store sandwiches, said director Susan Bailey. The food is provided on request by area youth services, but the organization is hoping to acquire vans that would distribute 600 sandwiches per day.

Ms. Porter said she would like to develop a "Meals on Wheels for kids," but she doesn't have enough money to finance it.

Until then, Kid Care will continue its program that provides food and services for children in a poverty-stricken apartment complex.

Before Kid Care came to the neighborhood, children from the complex were eating from the garbage cans of nearby fast-food restaurants, Ms. Porter said.

Ms. Porter said her program won't be cut back after school begins, but will continue to provide children with "Kiddie Packs" each day to tide the children over until school the next day.

"You want to minimize the number of kids who fall through the cracks," Ms. Porter said. "You have to work at children not getting lost in the shuffle."

■ Men face charge of using dog as weapon

KERRVILLE — The Kerrville district attorney plans to prosecute two men for allegedly assaulting two law enforcement officers with a 60-pound pit bull dog.

James Roberts, 25, and Michael Wilson, 28, both of San Antonio, were arrested after a June 14 incident at an Interstate 10 rest stop near Kerrville. The men were indicted July 4 on two counts of attempted capital murder and remained in the Kerr County Jail Sunday.

The charges against the men were expected to be changed to assault on a peace officer with a deadly weapon — a first-degree felony punishable by up to life in prison, the San Antonio Express-News reported.

Roberts was being held on $107,500 bond, while Wilson was held on $100,000 bond, officials said. A pre-trial hearing in the case is scheduled for Aug. 5.

The indictments allege the two ordered a 60-pound pit bull to attack Sgt. Charles Seale and Trooper Travis Hall of the Texas Department of Public Safety. Seale and Hall suffered cuts and bruises during the attack and were forced to shoot the dog to death.

"As far as I have been able to determine, this is the first time where a dog is alleged to be a deadly weapon in an attack on a peace officer," said District Attorney Ron Sutton.

Sutton's efforts to have the animal declared a deadly weapon will be bolstered by the fact the attack was captured on video tape. He said a video camera mounted in the DPS patrol car recorded the entire episode.

■ Returning soldier drowns in ship channel

HOUSTON — A Fort Hood soldier returning from the Persian Gulf aboard a Saudi cargo ship carrying Desert Storm equipment fell over the side of the ship and drowned, U.S. Coast Guard officials said Sunday.

The soldier was escorting U.S. military equipment back to the United States aboard the Saudi Arabian ship, the Saudi Hail, Coast Guard Ensign John Francic said. The soldier's name was not released pending notification of his family.

He was reported missing at about 4 p.m. Saturday.

"We think he fell over the side," Francic said, but a search conducted by the Coast Guard and Harris County authorities was unsuccessful and was called off at noon Sunday.

A tugboat bringing another ship into the Port of Houston apparently dredged up the bottom of the channel Sunday afternoon and the soldier's body floated to the surface.

■ Would-be burglar gets stuck in chimney

DALLAS — Marcus Hall is lucky that the authorities found him before Bernice Moore did.

Hall, 26, who stands 5 feet, 4 inches tall and weighs 130 pounds, apparently thought he could slide down Ms. Moore's chimney early Saturday, avoid her burglar alarm and make off with the 78-year-old woman's valuables.

But he got stuck in the chimney. So stuck, in fact, that it took a team of Dallas firefighters to get him out. They turned him over to Dallas police.

Hall should count his blessings.

"I wish I would have known," said Ms. Moore. "I would have lighted a fire under his butt."

Ms. Moore's alarm foiled another burglary attempt a week ago.

Man dies, two hurt in Odessa shooting; Midland man in jail

Staff Report

ODESSA — A 27-year-old Midland man remained jailed in Odessa Sunday night in connection with a shooting in Odessa that killed one person and injured two others earlier that morning, police said.

Randy Earl Green was arrested about 8:55 a.m. Sunday in Midland following the shooting in the 300 block of Tom Green Avenue about 2:45 a.m. that sent three people to Odessa Medical Center.

Killed was Elvin Dwayne Cornish, 22, of Odessa, who suffered gunshots to the left arm, left leg and mid-torso. An autopsy for Green was ordered.

Injured were Travette Lashon McBride, 20, of Odessa, who was treated and released, and Andronicus Briggs, 17, also of Odessa, who remained hospitalized in good condition Sunday night.

A .38-caliber handgun was confiscated during Green's arrest, police said.

Green was arraigned before Midland Justice of the Peace Robert Pine before being taken to the Odessa jail. Green is expected to appear before an Ector County magistrate this morning.

A motive for the shooting had not been determined, police said.

Pauline Hurlbut

Services for Pauline Hurlbut, 73, are set for 9:30 a.m. Monday in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints Gateway Chapel with Bishop Jay Bowden officiating. Week 2 of special session: Talk will center on tax bills, lottery

AUSTIN (AP) — Last week, lawmakers started a special session talking about budget cuts. But as they adjourned for the weekend many of them were talking about taxes.

The reason for that is an attack by legislative committees on a massive state government reorganization plan by State Comptroller John Sharp.

Gov. Ann Richards spent much of the session's first week defending the Sharp recommendations.

"The Capitol is swarming with people who want to derail the agreement, all in the name of protecting their treasured piece of turf," she said.

Some lawmakers say that each time a Sharp proposal falls, chances are boosted for a tax bill to help cover a $4.8 billion revenue shortfall.

Sharp said his measures would make government better deliver services at a reduced cost.

But heavy-hitting lobbyists for everything from higher education to alcohol don't see it that way, and major portions of the Sharp proposal are being whittled away.

State Rep. James Hury, D-Galveston, chairman of the House tax-writing committee, said he believed the largest tax increase would be in the $3 billion range.

"That's the outer limits," Hury said.

Hury has filed legislation that incorporates increased fees and taxes recommended by Sharp, and a bill that would revise the state's business franchise tax.

Combined, the two measures would raise about $2.1 billion in the 1992-93 budget period.

The wild card in trying to balance the budget is how many of Sharp's cuts are offset by new legislative programs, some lawmakers said.

"We still don't have a good clue as to what additional expenses this House will vote for in the appropriations bill," Hury said.

This week, Hury's Ways and Means Committee will consider measures that would increase tuition at public colleges and universities, and place before voters the question of whether to have lottery.

The tuition increase proposals by Sharp have been hammered by college officials and lawmakers. Failure to adopt these measures also would mean more money would have to be cut or raised in other areas to balance the spending plan.

Motorist killed when rock thrown off overpass

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — An Austin woman was killed when a rock dropped from an overpass crashed through her windshield, just minutes before another driver was seriously wounded by a sniper's bullet.

Linda Robbins, 46, was killed instantly when the rock thrown from an Interstate 20 overpass in southwest Fort Worth struck her in the head, police said.

Minutes later, shots were fired at a car driven by Henry Cruz Jr., 38, of Fort Worth. He pulled over after being struck in the abdomen. He was taken to the hospital in a third car that had pulled over after also being hit by rocks, said Fort Worth police Sgt. Paul Kratz.

Cruz, a supervisor for Bechtel Corp. at the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant, was listed in serious but stable condition Sunday at All Saints Hospital-Cityview in Fort Worth, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Kratz said he believes the same person or persons who shot Cruz Friday night also dropped the rock on Ms. Robbins' car. The rock was about 16 inches wide and 4 inches thick.

"It's a senseless, an absolutely senseless murder we've got here," Kratz said.

He said police have no suspects, but are looking for high school-age youths who might have been attending a party in the area.

Several other cars traveling westbound on the freeway also were pelted with rocks at the same location, police said.

Ms. Robbins' passenger, a Dunbury man who asked not to be identified, grabbed the steering wheel and, after struggling to get the woman's foot off the accelerator, guided the car to a stop two miles down the highway.

The incident marks the second time in a week that police have been called to investigate rock-throwing from the overpass.

DEAR ABBY

Grandparent's sloppy grammar pains new mother's ears

DEAR ABBY: As a first-time mother, I want to give our child the best. Since Nicholas is now 19 months old, he will soon be spending more time with his paternal grandparents. They crave all the time they can get with him, and he loves them dearly. It would also give my husband and me a much-needed break if Nicky could spend weekends and vacations with his grandparents.

Van Buren

The problem is their grammar. It is atrocious! The double negatives, the "ain'ts," the sloppy way they speak ("It's gonna rain Sa-er-dee"), etc., just drive me batty! I don't want Nicky to speak that way. And suppose he picks up incorrect grammar from his grandparents — am I to say, "Your grandparents are ignorant"?

Compounding the problem is the fact that I'm raising Nicky to be bilingual. I speak to him in Greek, and thus far that's the only language he speaks. He is sure to pick up English from playmates and other sources.

In spite of the rubbish that exists around most children today, I am determined that Nicky will speak properly, so I am at painful odds what to do about his grandparents' speech. Can you help me? — NICKY'S MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Developing a close and loving relationship with his grandparents will be of greater value to Nicky than any protection you can give him against exposure to sloppy grammar.

As the daughter of Russian immigrants who came to America as young adults with virtually no knowledge of the English language, I somehow managed to learn how to speak properly. And so did they. And so will Nicky. Trust me.

DEAR ABBY: My neighbor lives a few short steps from my back door; we have adjoining yards, yet she calls me on the phone intermittently all day long — just to chat. I wouldn't mind if she called once for a brief conversation, but she often calls three to four and even five times a day, just to ask me what I'm doing. She has invited me over for coffee, and I have invited her here — but once she's here, she stays too long.

She's 35 years old, no children, and doesn't want any. I work for my husband's business in my home, and this neighbor is getting to be too much for me. I got an answering machine, and she leaves messages for me to call her. Should I call her back or ignore her messages? I hate to hurt her feelings, but I don't know what else to do. I've even considered moving, but why should I move when I love this house? — STIFLED

DEAR STIFLED: You must tell your neighbor that just because you are home all day does not mean that you are not working; explain that you work for your husband during the day.

Suggest that she do volunteer work — there are numerous good causes in every community. And if she continues to leave messages, do not return her calls.

CONFIDENTIAL: To those readers who have tried without success to locate the Exchange Club Center for the Prevention of Child Abuse of Southern Minnesota, the address is: 285 18th St. S.E., Owatonna, Minn. 55060. NENIX network gives environmentalists way to communicate

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Like most conservationists, John "Jack" Kenney was concerned about what he would leave behind for future generations.

When the Santa Fe man died last year, he left only an idea — but it's one that may carry on for years to come.

The longtime advocate who worked with several environmental groups had spoken with his colleagues about the importance of constant communication between groups, since much of their work is overlapping.

People who knew Kenney, who died eight months ago at the age of 72, said he would be pleased with David Knauer's creation of the Northern New Mexico Environmental Exchange — NENIX.

NENIX is an information network aimed at helping the more than 50 environmental organizations in the northern part of the state communicate and work together on issues confronting them.

Knauer said NENIX's first two attempts to bring the area's environmentalists closer together will be a computer bulletin board and a newsletter.

The bulletin board will cost $7 a month for environmental groups and will be accessible through a computer and modem. Services also will be available to individuals, but that price has not yet been determined.

The board will provide a calendar of events, discussions among users, profiles of area groups and their projects, alerts to emergency situations, listings of conferences and legislative information.

Knauer said NENIX, which is based in Santa Fe, should be in full swing by August with the hope of one day expanding services all over the state.

"Initially we will focus on the northern part of New Mexico just because we have to start somewhere. Once we get going, we want to provide services all over the state," he said.

Although Knauer didn't get the idea directly from Kenney, he said he hopes NENIX will help Kenney's many friends remember the retired Army brigadier general who was a general in the conservation movement as well.

Knauer's interest in a network came when he attended Earth Day 1990 festivities in Santa Fe.

"I wanted to do something for the environment, but there were so many groups," he said. "I began to wonder how they kept in touch with each other."

He said it was then that he decided a network would be a good project for him.

Since then Knauer has been working with Margaret Gray, executive director of the Santa Fe Community Foundation. Kenney served on the foundation board and had exchanged ideas with Gray on the possibility of a network.

"Jack was going to be working with us in structuring the concept," Gray said.

Gray said she was pleased when Knauer contacted her a short time after Kenney's death, saying he was interested in heading the network idea.

The foundation has taken the project under its wing and has provided Knauer with enough money for the first four months of the network's operation.

"It's really happening," Knauer said. "Right now we have enough to get this thing off the ground and to buy all the equipment we need."

Environmental organizations in the area are equally excited.

Jim Norton, Southwest regional director of the Wilderness Society, said his group will definitely subscribe.

"It's such a tremendous resource," he said. "Right now there are so many issues and it's hard for people to keep on top of all of them."

Richard Miller, associate director of Concerned Citizens for Nuclear Safety, said his group has been working for more than two years with a national network, EnviroNet, sponsored by Greenpeace, and that it has proved invaluable.

"Networking and exchanging information is power," he said. "It's encouraging to see it happen locally."

Miller said another advantage of networking is the support groups can provide for one another.

"What we do can sometimes be lonely," he said. "It's great to know that there are other organizations that share the same passions."

Family Reading Challenge 1991

Boys and Girls

Rex and Rita Saurus™ challenge you and your family to sign on for the Family Reading Challenge 1991.

The rules are simple: Read at least two books, two magazine articles and two newspaper articles between June 9 and Aug. 18 and discuss what you have read with a parent or guardian.

If you are between the ages of 5-12 and successfully complete the reading challenge, you will qualify for a nationwide drawing Sept. 6 for thousands of neat prizes. You could win an IBM Writing to Read Laboratory for your school and an IBM PC for your family, Rex and Rita Saurus hand puppets, bicycles, World Book encyclopedias and much more! Look for an official entry form in this newspaper throughout the summer.

Also watch this newspaper each week for enjoyable summer reading activities that will help you and your family read and use the newspaper together.

Rex and Rita Saurus, the "world's leading reading dinosaurs," hope that you will read MORE than just two books, two newspaper articles and two magazine articles this summer. Because Rex and Rita know that "Winners Read and Readers Win."

Don't forget to complete the entry form below as soon as you have met the requirements of the challenge.

Family Reading Challenge 1991

What's So Funny?

Find a funny or unusual photo in today's newspaper and clip it. Cut off the caption and ask everyone in your family to write a new funny caption. Have family members vote on the funniest.

You can do the same thing with comics. Black out the words with a felt tip pen, and have each family member write new words for the characters.

We hope you enjoyed this. Don't forget to complete the entry form below as soon as you have met the requirements of the challenge.

Texas 'oils' up

MONTREAL (AP) — The Texas Rangers traded for Montreal pitcher Oil Can Boyd on Sunday, hoping to bolster their rotation for a possible run at the American League West title.

Boyd, 31, was 6-8 with a 3.52 for the Expos. Texas sent minor league pitchers Jonathan Hurst and Joey Eischen, plus a player to be named later, to Montreal.

The Rangers were six games behind Minnesota when the trade was made. Boyd returned to the league where he made his debut with Boston in 1982.

Boyd's best season was 1986, when he went 16-10 with the Red Sox. But a rainout cost the emotional Boyd a chance to pitch Game 7 of the World Series, which Boston lost to the New York Mets.

Last Monday, the Expos acquired starting pitcher Ron Darling from the Mets for reliever Tim Burke. That move allowed Montreal to trade Boyd.

Seles loses

MAHWAH, N.J. (AP) — Monica Seles took five weeks off from work and paid the price for it Sunday in the final of the Pathmark Tennis Classic.

Seles, the new problem child in women's tennis, was beaten by Jennifer Capriati 6-3, 7-5 in a 70-minute match that clearly showed the No. 1 player is far from being in top form.

Seles was broken five times in 10 service games. Her shots lacked crispness and she said she didn't seem to have her usual court quickness.

The 15-year-old Capriati had a lot to do with Seles' problems. She played almost flawless tennis in handing the 17-year-old Seles her first defeat since she dropped the final of the Italian Open to Gabriela Sabatini.

But Seles simply played like a player who had missed the last 5½ weeks with a stress fracture in her left leg, the same injury that caused her to withdraw from Wimbledon unexpectedly.

Third time a British charm

■ From past experience, Ian Baker-Finch knew how to lose a major, but Sunday he found out how to win the British Open.

Associated Press

SOUTHPORT, England — After learning how to lose a major, Ian Baker-Finch finally found out how to win one.

Baker-Finch seized his third chance to win the British Open and, with five birdies in the first seven holes, turned it into a front-running victory Sunday in the 120th British championship.

The Australian blew last-round opportunities in the 1984 and 1990 Opens, but turned his third chance into a charmed victory.

"It was painful, but I learned," Baker-Finch said of his near misses. "I gained experience. Experience is playing the way you know how. That's what I did today. I knew what I had to do, and I did it.

"I proved myself a champion today."

And he did it early.

"His first nine holes just blew the whole tournament open," said runnerup Mike Harwood, who spent a sunny afternoon at Royal Birkdale in futile pursuit of his fellow Australian.

Here's how convincing his victory was:

From a share of the lead with Mark O'Meara beginning the final round, Baker-Finch completed the front nine in 29 and led by four shots despite some of the lowest scores in British Open history.

After his birdie barrage, Baker-Finch was never in trouble in his 4-under 66 as he missed just two greens. He finished with an 8-under 272 and a two-shot victory over Harwood. On Saturday, Baker-Finch shot a course-record 64, which was broken Sunday by Jodie Mudd, who had a 63 that also tied the Open record.

Baker-Finch, who lost a seven-hole playoff to Bruce Fleisher in last week's New England Classic, won $150,000.

Tears welled in Baker-Finch's eyes during the awards presentation.

"That's the kind of person I am," he said. "It's kind of hard to talk when you're crying."

Once composed, Baker-Finch recalled his near-misses.

"The pain I felt the first two times I had a chance gave me the strength to go on and do it today," said Baker-Finch.

Harwood, who plays the European Tour on a regular basis, closed with a 67 to earn $115,500 for second place.

Four of the top 11 finishers were Australians — Craig Parry was eighth and Greg Norman tied for ninth.

There were several players who made late runs at Baker-Finch, including Fred Couples, who closed with a 64 and tied for third at 275 with Mark O'Meara.

O'Meara, suffering from a bad back, was knocked down by a surging crowd at the 18th fairway.

"The 18th was the only bad thing about this day," Baker-Finch said.

Mudd, Eamonn Darcy of Ireland and Bob Tway were tied for fifth at 277. Darcy, the leading European finisher, shot a final-round 70 and Tway closed with 66.

Craig Parry was next at 278, while Norman, Bernhard Langer of Germany and Seve Ballesteros of Spain were at 279.

Norman made a run with a 66, but saw his last chance disappear when he failed to birdie the par-5 17th. Langer shot 67.

And Ballesteros, a three-time champion and a crowd favorite, shot 71.

British Highlights

SOUTHPORT, England (AP) — Highlights of Sunday's final round of the 120th British Open:

Weather

Mostly sunny and warm, with clear skies after morning cloudiness. The high temperature was 66 with winds from the northwest at 5 to 10 mph.

Attendance

36,500 on Sunday, with a four-day total of 154,487. In 1983, the last time the British Open was played at Royal Birkdale, the final day attendance was 26,614, and the four-day total was 118,408.

Recap

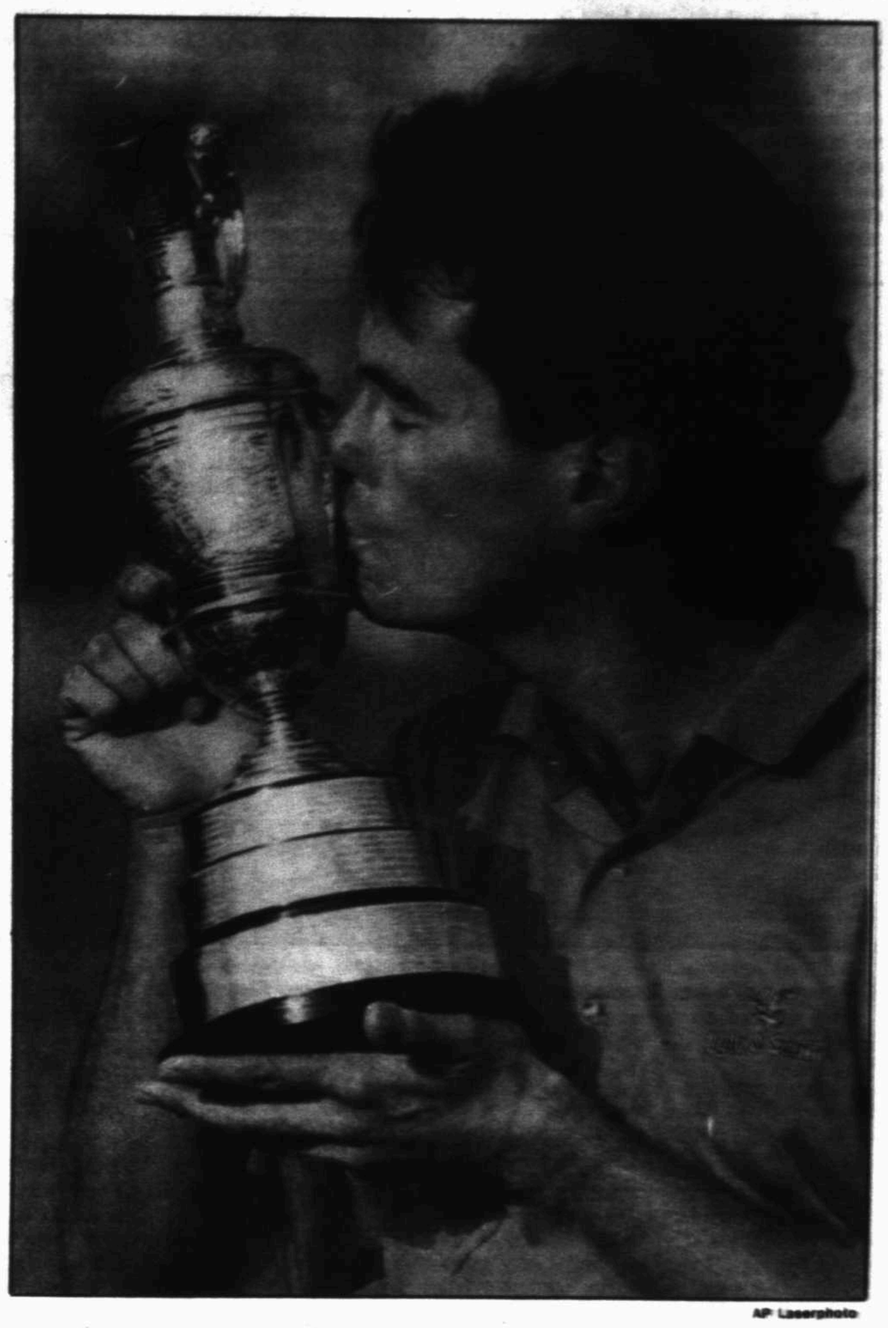

Ian Baker-Finch shot a 4-under-par 66 to finish at 272 and win the title by two strokes over fellow Australian Mike Harwood. Jodie Mudd broke Baker-Finch's day-old Royal Birkdale course record with a 63, but finished tied for fifth.

Stat of the Day

Baker-Finch birdied five of the first seven holes to give him the margin he needed for victory.

Quote of the Day

"There have been a lot of Saturday afternoons when I have gone into Sunday with a chance to win and have not made it. Today erases those memories. The memories of times I didn't win have made me stronger and made me want to achieve it." — Ian Baker-Finch, winning his first British championship after coming close in 1984 and 1990.

Spaniard leads Tour

ALES, France (AP) — Miguel Indurain of Spain retained the overall lead Sunday in the Tour de France as three-time champion Greg LeMond failed to make up ground.

Moreno Argentin of Italy won the 15th stage, a 146-mile trip from Albi to Ales, by more than a minute.

Indurain finished 43rd for the day, along with most of the other leaders, leaving the overall standings unchanged at the top.

LeMond finished 134th, bunched among some 100 riders who came in at the same time as Indurain, and stayed fifth overall, 5:08 back.

When LeMond was wearing the leader's yellow jersey for four days earlier in the Tour, he was usually near the head of the pack, hoping to avoid trouble.

Since his tough mountain stage on Friday, when he fell far back, he has not shown signs of moving up.

He had a blood test taken after the Hall opens doors for five

■ Jenkins, Carew, Perry, Lazzeri and Veeck given entry into baseball immortality.

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — The pause in Ferguson Jenkins' speech was brief, long enough for him to regain the control he was famous for as a pitcher. Compusure regained, he continued to tell of his mother's influence on his Hall of Fame career.

"My mother knew before I did which sport I should play," Jenkins said Sunday at the Baseball Hall of Fame ceremony Sunday. "She always knew this was the game I wanted to do wholeheartedly."

Jenkins entered the Hall along with pitcher Gaylord Perry, hitting wizard Rod Carew, New York Yankees second baseman Tony Lazzeri and owner Bill Veeck, before a crowd of more than 5,000 people, gathered in sweltering 90-degree weather.

As the punishing sun gave way to storm clouds, Jenkins thanked another major influence in his life, Ferguson Jenkins Sr., 82, who was in the audience. "This day also belongs to my father. It was my father who instilled the love of baseball in me," he said.

Jenkins, the first Canadian ever voted into the Hall, and Carew, born in Panama, were greeted by cheering fans waving flags from their native countries.

"I never even dared dream a day like this would arrive," said Carew, who hit .328 in 19 seasons with Minnesota and California. "This is the greatest honor, the ultimate measure of reaching the top of one's profession."

As Carew thanked the late Billy Martin for his development as a major league player, thunder rolled across the gathering outside the Hall of Fame.

"And that rumble you just heard was Billy's message, saying he approved of what's happening here today."

Carew, turning to the 31 Hall of Famers who returned for the event, said, "Thanks to all of you for moving over a little and making space for me in your shrine."

Perry remembered playing ball on his father's North Carolina farm, along with brother Jim, who also became a major league pitcher.

"I remember a neighbor saying 'all those Perrys do is play baseball and their dad is worse,'" he said.

Jenkins began his career in Philadelphia in 1965. He was traded to Chicago the following season and in 1967 he began a streak of six consecutive 20-win seasons, winning the Cy Young Award in 1971 when he went 24-13.

He was dealt to the Texas Rangers in 1973 and went 25-12 in 1974. After two seasons with Boston, he was traded back to Texas in 1977, going 46-34 in three more seasons with the Rangers. Jenkins returned to the Cubs to finish his career, going 14-15 in 1982 and 6-9 in 1983.

Carew, born in Panama and raised in New York City, played 19 seasons with Minnesota and California, winning seven batting titles with the Twins.

In 1977, he was named American League MVP, flirting with .400 for much of the season before finishing at .388. He had 239 hits, 16 triples and 100 RBIs.

Perry, who won Cy Young awards in both leagues, broke into the majors in 1962 with San Francisco.

Wallace wins wreck-torn 500

AP Laserphoto

Darrell Waltrip (30) crashes his car into the wall and catches fire at the Pocono International Raceway Sunday. Waltrip was uninjured, however.

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Rusty Wallace won the wreck-marred, rain-shortened NASCAR Miller Genuine Draft 500 on Sunday for his second victory of the year and his first in three months.

Wallace, who earned $34,100, had the lead after 176 of 200 laps when the race was stopped. Two hours later, the race resumed under caution for three laps before rain came again, ending the race.

"We're back; we're looking good," Wallace said.

Wallace's Pontiac — which would have needed a pit stop for fuel — got a push during the final caution laps from Dale Earnhardt's Chevrolet, which was out of contention.

Irvan led 25 laps up to lap 169, when with rain threatening he made a scheduled pit stop, giving Wallace the lead. Wallace held it until the caution flag for rain on lap 174 — the 11th of the day — and the red flag after 176.

Wallace won for the first time ever on Pocono's 2½-mile tri-oval. His last victory was April 14 at Bristol, Tenn.

Forty-two of the first 107 laps Sunday were run under 10

Baseball expansion has minor leaguers drooling

By MIKE WAGNER

LAREDO (AP) — Itchy feet are waiting for shoes to drop in that hungry part of baseball they call the minor leagues.

Just mention the word "expansion" to a minor leaguer in Texas, or anywhere, and watch the werewolf-style transformation from everyday athlete to intensely eager animal.

Expansion.

Muscles ripple, eyes bulge, hot breath flies out of nostrils like steam while teeth clench together as though raw liver had just been delivered on a silver platter. No spices needed to enhance taste. Imagination adds the flavor.

The Florida Marlins and Colorado Rockies are new gold mines for those hooked on the diamond sport who languish about in small and middle sized cities and towns. Miami and Denver are the focal point of those who see the obvious: "Somebody is going to be getting a major league check in the near future and I sure would like it to be me." And some actually thinking those same words right now will really live the dream. They just need to know who the general manager will be so they can properly address the cover letter with their resumes.

Baseball-minded city governments are also feeling the rush as the Marlins and Rockies will also have their sets of minor league teams that have to be located somewhere.

"There is a lot of speculation going on," Burl Yarbrough, San Antonio Missions general manager said. "In Colorado, they say that Colorado Springs (of the AAA Pacific Coast League), with the Indians now, will go with Denver which makes a lot of sense.

"The (AA) Texas League is certainly interested in acquiring more teams. That is one of the big questions. In the next few months, I feel the Texas League could be looking to expand. There are currently 10 teams in the (AA) Eastern League, eight in the (AA) Southern League and eight in the Texas League.

"One reason for the interest is that a team brings in money and there will be fights over who gets the minor league teams."

Recent interest in joining the Texas League has come from Round Rock, Baton Rouge, La. and Springfield, Mo. Interest in individually joining "The Show," however, comes from every corner.

Expansion.

"I'm anxious to see how they are going to do it," said Missions first baseman Brian Traxler who spent a month with the parent club Dodgers last season. "It's going to be something. I'm anxious to see who they might take.

"I'm going to go back to winter ball and show what I can do. I was in Venezuela and it was OK but I'm going to the Dominican Republic. I expect everybody from AA on up to be getting a look."

Midland Angels right-handed pitcher Don Vidmar of Fruita, Colo., is a good 8-3 in the Texas League right now with a 3.11 earned run average and hearing plenty from home, too. And Denver is four hours away over the Rocky Mountains.

"They are real excited," he said. "The closest big league team is at Kansas City. We have the (AAA) Zephyrs in Denver and Colorado Springs but the only baseball we get in (nearby) Grand Junction is the Junior College World Series and they sell out every night.

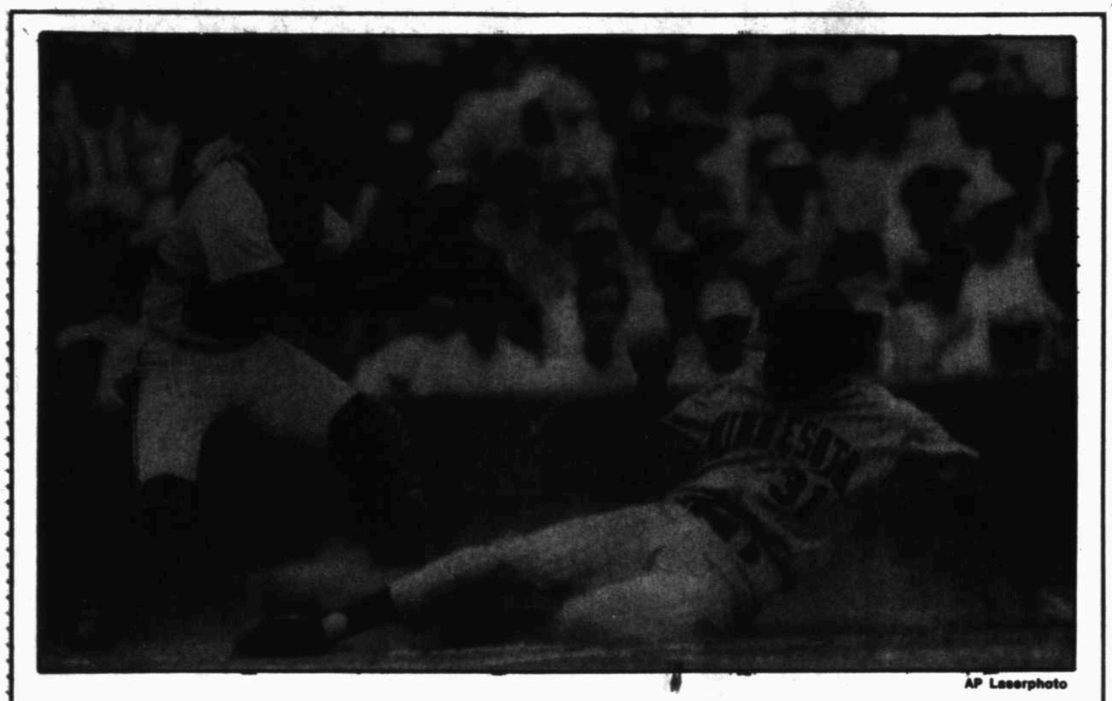

"For expansion going through it is going to open a lot of opportunities for a lot of people. It gives you a better chance to get to that final step."

Expansion team owners have received some resumes while tons of others are already being readied for mailing the instant general managers are named.

"A friend is busy getting us to write letters of recommendation," said Midland manager Don Long in a meeting with his three-man staff. "He's a groundskeeper."

"It's wide open," added Midland batting coach Gene Richards with a smile.

It may be more open, however, to those who will find themselves blessed by knowing someone who takes a high position in Miami or Denver. Who you know counts in the baseball employment game as well.

Minnesota's Scott Leius slides home safely with one of 14 runs against the Boston Red Sox Sunday at Fenway Park. The Twins swept Boston in the weekend series.

Twins sweep at Fenway

Associated Press

BOSTON — Chili Davis and Shane Mack each got three of Minnesota's 18 hits and the Twins routed the Boston Red Sox 14-1 Sunday for their first four-game sweep at Fenway Park since 1981.

The American League West-leading Twins outscored Boston 33-6 in the series, and won for the eighth time in 10 games since the All-Star break.

The Red Sox have lost eight of 11 since the break, including seven of eight games against Minnesota. They fell to 45-46, the first time they've been below .500 since April 17.

Kirby Puckett drove in three runs with a pair of singles in Minnesota's highest-scoring game of the season. Every Twins starter had a hit by the fifth inning, when it became 12-1.

The Red Sox became so desperate for pitchers that they used utilityman Steve Lyons in the ninth. Lyons moved from center field and allowed two harmless hits and struck out one in his second major league pitching appearance. While with the Chicago White Sox last season, he pitched two innings and gave up one earned run.

Rangers 6, Blue Jays 5

ARLINGTON — Kevin Reimer's two-run pinch homer rallied Texas over Toronto, slowing the Blue Jays' roll toward an insurmountable lead in the American League East.

Toronto, which got a three-run homer from Joe Carter, led 5-4 when Midland's Mike Timlin (9-5) relieved Juan Guzman to start the seventh inning. With one out, Jeff Huson beat out a dribbler when third baseman Kelly Gruber's throw hit him on the wrist near the first-base bag.

Reimer, batting for designated hitter Brian Downing, hit the next pitch over the right-field wall for his fifth homer. The victory gave Texas a split of the four-game series and prevented the Blue Jays from adding to their seven-game lead in the division.

AL Roundup

Brewers 2, White Sox 1

CHICAGO — Greg Vaughn homered, singled and scored the go-ahead run in the seventh inning.

Milwaukee won for the first time in five games at the new Comiskey Park. The Brewers have won just three of their last 17 in Chicago.

Chris Bosio (7-7) pitched a six-hitter in his second start since coming off the disabled list with a strained left hamstring. He struck out five, walked four and won his third straight start.

Charlie Hough (5-6) gave up only three hits in seven innings, but lost his third consecutive start. Scott Radinsky and Ken Patterson finished with hitless relief.

Athletics 4, Yankees 2

OAKLAND — Dave Stewart pitched seven strong innings and Oakland ended a four-game losing streak.

The Yankees went 6-4 on their West Coast trip. They won the first three games of the series in Oakland.

Stewart (8-5) gave up five hits and one run, a homer by Alvaro Espinoza in the sixth inning. He struck out eight and walked three.

Stewart lowered his ERA to 4.80, the first time since June 5 it has been under 5.00. He improved to 7-1 at home this season.

Indians 5, Angels 2

ANAHEIM — Glenallen Hill and Albert Belle hit two-run homers as Cleveland won its third straight, beating Mark Langston and beleagured California.

Charles Nagy (5-10) pitched 6⅔ innings for Cleveland, allowing two runs, one earned, on nine hits. Steve Olin worked the final two innings to earn his third save and also his third save in as many days.

Belle's homer, his third in as many games and his 15th of the season, gave the Indians a 5-1 lead in the sixth as they won three straight for the first time since they swept a four-game series against Detroit ending on June 3.

Hill's two-run shot, his sixth homer, made it 2-1 in the third inning.

The Angels, who led the American League West for one day — July 3 — before beginning a rapid slide, slipped to seven games behind the division-leading Minnesota Twins, their biggest deficit of the season. California has lost 11 of its last 14 games to drop seven games in the standings.

Mariners 6, Orioles 4

BALTIMORE — Ken Griffey Jr. and Alvin Davis homered in Seattle's five-run fifth inning.

Down 4-1, the Mariners bounced back to record their 20th come-from-behind victory of the season. Griffey, who had three hits, tied the game with a three-run homer and Davis gave Seattle the lead with a two-run drive.

Russ Swan (4-2) pitched 3⅓ innings of one-hit relief and Mike Schooler got two outs in the eighth. Bill Swift finished for his eighth save, retiring Cal Ripken on a popup with two runners on base to end the game.

Royals 8, Tigers 4

KANSAS CITY — George Brett hit two home runs and Kurt Stillwell atoned for a costly error with a tie-breaking, two-run shot that rallied Kansas City past Detroit.

Brett hit solo homers in the fourth and sixth innings, marking the 14th career time he has connected twice in a game. He also got his 996th extra base hit, passing Al Simmons for 19th place all-time.

Bucs 10-2 against Reds

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Randy Tomlin pitched his second consecutive shutout — and second of his career — as the surging Pittsburgh Pirates completed their domination of the stumbling Cincinnati Reds with a 6-0 victory Sunday night.

Gary Redus was 3-for-4 with a triple and double, scored twice and drove in a run as Pittsburgh won won the season series 10-2 over the defending World Series champions.

The two teams split 6-6 last year before the Reds beat the Pirates in the NL playoffs 4-2.

The Reds lost for the 11th time in 12 games and fell to 1-9 on their current 18-game swing against National League East teams. Pittsburgh's ninth victory in 11 games maintained the Pirates' four-game lead in the East.

Braves 5, Cardinals 1

ST. LOUIS — Steve Avery became the youngest player in Atlanta history to win 10 games in a season and Ron Gant hit a two-run homer as Atlanta beat St. Louis its ninth victory in 11 games.

The 21-year-old Avery (10-5) allowed two hits in 7⅔ innings, struck out five and walked two in 97-degree heat. Juan Berenguer finished with one-hit relief as Atlanta beat St. Louis for the ninth time in 12 games this season.

Omar Olivares (3-2) gave up four runs and four hits in six innings, struck out seven and walked three. The Cardinals made four errors, including three by third baseman Todd Zeile, that led to two unearned runs.

Mets 9, Dodgers 4

NEW YORK — Dwight Gooden, on the verge of being ejected for arguing in the second inning, settled down and New York beat ex-teammate Bob Ojeda.

Ojeda (7-8) failed to hold a 3-0 lead in his first start against his former club and got pounded for eight runs and six hits in 2⅔ innings.

New York had five doubles in the six-run third inning. Four of them were consecutive, tying the National League record, last accomplished by St. Louis against Pittsburgh on Aug. 30, 1952.

National League

Gooden (10-6) won his third consecutive decision, allowing all four runs and seven hits in seven innings. He struck out five and walked three.

Gooden nearly was ejected in the second for arguing a 3-2 pitch to Alfredo Griffin that was called a ball by umpire Eric Gregg. Mets manager Bud Harrelson came on the field and did get ejected.

Tim Burke pitched two innings of one-hit relief for the Mets, who gained a split of the four-game series.

Cubs 4, Astros 2

HOUSTON — George Bell hit a three-run homer the eighth inning as Chicago beat Houston, sending the Astros to their seventh loss in nine games.

Frank Castillo (3-0) allowed nine hits, struck out four and walked one in his second complete game of the season, tying him with Greg Maddux for the club lead. Maddux pitched an eight-hitter Saturday in a 6-0 victory.

With the score tied 1-1, Jim Clancy (0-3) walked Mark Grace, who went to second a wild pitch. Ryne Sandberg singled and Bell hit his 18th home run of the season.

Giants 3, Expos 2

MONTREAL — Trevor Wilson and two relievers combined on a five-hitter.

Wilson (5-9) ended a three-game losing streak and won for the first time since June 29 against San Diego. He allowed four hits in six innings, struck out six and walked one.

Francisco Oliveras pitched two hitless innings and Jeff Brantley finished for his eighth save, allowing pinch-hitter Larry Walker's eighth home run.

Mark Gardner (5-6) gave up three hits in six innings, struck out four and walked four.

Padres 5, Phillies 2

SAN DIEGO — Bruce Hurst pitched a five-hitter and Scott Coolbaugh hit a go-ahead, two-run double in the seventh inning as San Diego stopped Philadelphia's five-game winning streak.

Pokes acquire Tony Casillas

AUSTIN (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys acquired noseguard Tony Casillas, a former Oklahoma All American, from the Atlanta Falcons Sunday for a second-round draft pick and an undisclosed late round selection in 1992.

Casillas, 27, was the Falcons' No. 1 pick in the 1986 draft, the second overall pick after top draftee Bo Jackson. An All-American out of Oklahoma, he is a previous winner of the Lombardi Trophy.

The 280-pound Casillas was scheduled to make $550,000 dollars this year with a $50,000 reporting bonus.

Andretti wins wire-to-wire

TORONTO (AP) — Michael Andretti got rolling again Sunday, racing off to a record-setting victory in the Toronto Molson-Indy.

It was the 28-year-old Andretti's fourth victory of the season — all in the last six races — and his second on the 1.78-mile, 11-turn temporary circuit at Toronto's downtown Exhibition Place.

A week earlier at the New Jersey Meadowlands, an engine problem knocked him out while he was challenging for the lead early in the race. This time, Andretti was in charge virtually the entire distance without a hitch.

With only one early full-course caution flag slowing the race for four laps, Andretti averaged 99.143 for the 103 laps, easily breaking the mark of 95.991 set by Emerson Fittipaldi in 1987.

Mario Andretti, Michael's father and teammate, was 15.85 seconds back in second and Bobby Rahal took third.

Scott Pruett wound up fourth in the race, a lap down, for his best finish of 1991. He was followed by John Andretti, Mario's nephew and driver of Midland's Hall/VDS entry, Scott Brayton, Canadian driver Scott Goodyear and Mike Groff, in his first drive for A.J. Foyt.

King rallies to victory

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. (AP) — Betsy King lost all of a five-shot lead, then rallied for a 73 and a one-stroke victory over Ayako Okamoto in the LPGA Big Apple Classic on Sunday.

The defending champion needed all of her guile and power to hold off Okamoto. The Japanese star, followed by a huge gallery at the tournament — which is sponsored by Japan Air Lines — shot a 4-under-par 67 on the Wykagyl Country Club course, Sunday's lowest score.

LPGA

But King made only her second birdie of the day on No. 15 and parred in for a 5-under 279 total. It was her 25th career win and second this season — she also won at Corning, N.Y., in May — marking the eighth straight year King has won twice.

By the third hole of the final round, King had built a five-stroke lead. Okamoto had not yet begun her move and was nine back.

But King, who leads the tour in birdies and rounds in the 60s, bogeyed four times and did not birdie again until 15. At that 430-yard uphill par-5, she was on in two and 2-putted.

While King was backing up with bogeys at Nos. 4, 7, 10 and 12, Okamoto was surging. She had bogeyed No. 1, but then made par until the ninth. There, she began a birdie binge, also clipping a stroke from par at Nos. 10, 12, 14 and 15.

Cindy Figg-Currier, a non-winner in eight year on tour, began the day alone in second, but she bogeyed four holes on the front side and stumbled to a 74 to finish four back.

RACE: Crash spins Hillin

(From 1C)

caution flags. The worst wreck came on lap 72, when Stricklin, battling Irvan for the lead, spun coming out of turn 3.

"I don't think he meant to hit me but he did," Stricklin said.

Irvan had come up on Stricklin from the inside but denied making contact.

"I think it got him loose when I run up on him so fast," Irvan said.

Several cars bunched near them started colliding. Richard Petty's Pontiac went over the hood of Ricky Rudd's Chevrolet, and Midland's Bobby Hillin's spinning Pontiac sent Darrell Waltrip's Chevrolet head-on into the infield wall along the front straightaway.

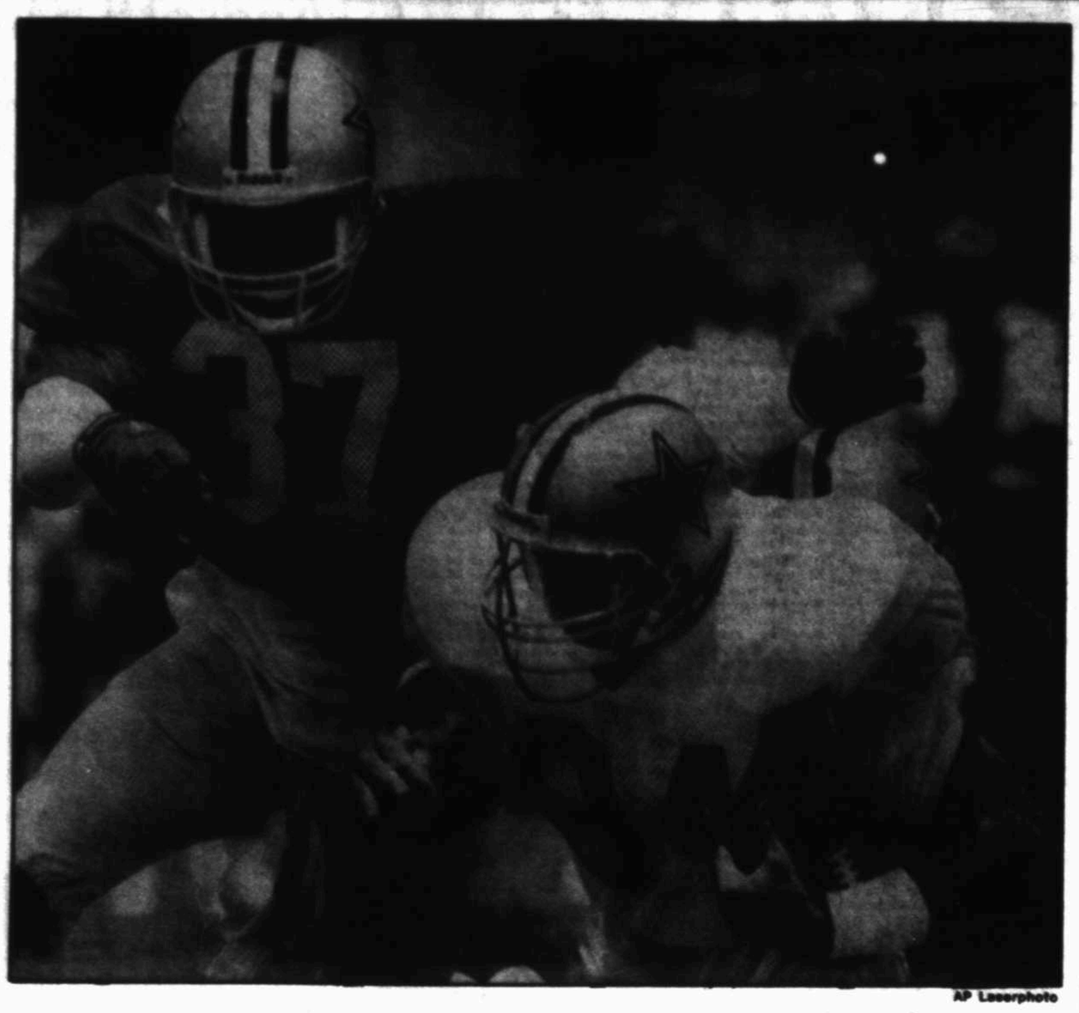

At least 10 drivers were involved, but Wallace emerged unscathed.

"There's a bunch of guys out there driving like their jobs depended on it," said Waltrip, who was put out of the July 6 race at Daytona by an accident. "People are so far over their heads. Nobody will give anybody a break. This is just incredible."

Waltrip and Hillin wound up in the garage because of the accident, both able to race later, but out of contention. Hillin said the track was slick since two support races were run Saturday.

"Everybody started spinning," Hillin said. "I felt like a pinball in there."

Rain also delayed the June race here, won by Waltrip after a 1 hour, 42-minute delay.

Safety James Washington (37) bears down on tight end Jay Novacek during the Dallas Cowboys' intrasquad Blue-White scrimmage Sunday in Austin.

Cowboy rookies just rookies

AUSTIN (AP) — The heralded crop of Dallas Cowboys rookies learned Sunday the difference between college and the NFL.

Veterans dominated a 73-play, Blue-White scrimmage at St. Edward's University before a crowd estimated by the Cowboys at 7,500.

"I was not totally pleased," said Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson after the 90-minute workout in near 100-degree temperatures.

"A lot of rookies proved why they are rookies," Johnson said. "The first offensive unit was sharp and that was about it."

Troy Aikman hit tight end Jay Novacek on a 10-yard scoring pass on a fourth and one situation for the only touchdown of the scrimmage. It came on the first offensive possession.

Johnson had been hoping for big plays from the rookie contingent, which has been signed and practicing since the first day of camp.

Instead, he got six turnovers as the new offense under offensive coordinator Norval Turner sputtered.

Aikman completed 7 of 9 passes for 60 yards and had one interception. Cliff Stoudt was 7 of 10 for 43 yards.

Johnson hoped to showcase rookie quarterback Bill Musgrave of Oregon, a fourth-round pick, and first-round pick Alvin Harper of Tennessee.

They did connect on a 17-yard reception but Harper dropped two passes and Musgrave suffered an interception by Larry Brown, a 12th-round pick out of Texas Christian.

"I wasn't too good today," Musgrave said. "I didn't throw it like I wanted to. I'm going to have to crank it up Thursday night against the Oilers."

Musgrave hit 3 of 9 passes for 24 yards.

The fourth quarterback, Babe Laufenberg, was 1 of 6 for 17 yards.

Dallas hosts Houston Thursday night at Burger Stadium in a 7:30 p.m. scrimmage.

Brown, a longshot to make the team, drew the notice of Johnson.

"He's hard to get deep on and showed some good things out there," Johnson said.

"There are a lot of great receivers here and it's making me a better player," Brown said.

Johnson said Musgrave "made a couple of rookie throws and decisions. That's why he needs work."

Running back Emmitt Smith, the NFL rookie of the year, and wide receiver Michael Irvin were held out of the scrimmage with minor injuries.

Smith has a tight hamstring and Johnson didn't want to take any chances. Curvin Richards, a fourth-round pick out of Pittsburgh, and Ricky Blake, an all-World Football League running back, made some good gains but also lost fumbles.

"You can't make the Dallas Cowboys if you fumble," Johnson said. "Both of them had some nice runs."

stage, and it showed he had a higher than normal white blood cell count, although he refused to talk about it.

Sunday, he rushed past the finish line and was swept away by his Z team's car, refusing to talk to the media.

For the second straight day, LeMond refused to sign in at the beginning of the race and was fined $67 by the organizers.

LeMond was quoted in a published report as saying he had the blood test done a few days ago, but avoided saying it was to blame for his weakened position.

"I don't want to make an excuse," he said. "(But) I felt much too tired given the hardness of (Thursday's) stage."

Before Sunday's stage, LeMond said, "I was fatigued and extremely dehydrated. I need to recuperate. It was a nightmare stage and that has never happened to me before."

Thursday's stage was the toughest of this year's tour, over four steep climbs.

Charles' charge can't catch Hill

Seniors Golf

AURORA, Ill. (AP) — Mike Hill would have liked an easy victory but when it was all over Sunday, he was thankful that Bob Charles put on the pressure.

"As it turned out, I hung in there tough and it helps you in the eyes of your peers," said Hill, after winning the $500,000 Ameritech Senior Open by two shots over Charles.

Hill shot a bogey-free 67 for a 16-under 200, while Charles fired a 64, including eight birdies, to finish at 202. Al Geiberger shot a 68 for 204 to finish third.

Charles' charge ended on the final hole, when he missed a 6-foot birdie putt that would have forged a tie. Hill birdied the par-5 hole for good measure.

"It was a good putting day for me," Charles said. "I wasn't giving any thought to winning the tournament until I birdied the seventh and eighth holes. I hit every green and had 18 birdie chances but I made eight nice birdies. You can't make them all."

Hill felt the turning point came two holes earlier, where he missed the green and had to make a 5-foot putt to save par.

"I felt I played good and I didn't miss a green until the 16th," Hill said. "I was playing good and I wanted to shoot in the 60s but I didn't feel I had to shoot a 67, but Bob played very well."

It was Hill's seventh senior tour title and second this year. The $75,000 first prize boosted his 1991 earnings to $447,543, second behind Chi Chi Rodriguez.

Rodriguez, the defending champion here and a four-time winner this year, turned out to be quite a prophet. Earlier this week he said Hill should be the favorite and that a 15-under total would win the tournament.

Hill looked like he would run away from the field until Charles made his run. Hill started the day at 11-under with a three-stroke lead over Geiberger.

Dillard Pruitt wins first PGA title

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Dillard Pruitt, a six-year pro who had never finished higher than ninth on the PGA Tour, fired a final-round 64 Sunday for a 2-stroke victory in the $700,000 Chattanooga Classic.

Pruitt birdied his first three holes to wipe out Lance Ten Broeck's 1-stroke lead. He finished at 20-under 260, tying the tournament record set last year by Peter Persons on the 6,641-yard Valleybrook Golf and Country Club course. He earned $126,000.

Ten Broeck, who also came into the Chattanooga tournament without a PGA Tour victory, had three birdies on the front nine and stayed close until the 11th hole, when a bogey dropped him two strokes back at 17-under.

He made up a stroke with a birdie on No. 15 and kept pace with another on No. 17 before fading with a bogey on the final hole, which Pruitt two-putted for par.

Dave Rummells shot the low round Sunday in the humid 90-degree heat, a 9-under 61 that left him tied for third with John Daly, Steve Lowery and Jim Gallagher Jr. at 16-under.

Emyln Aubrey had a hole-in-one on the 162-yard 16th hole, using a 7-iron for the tournament's second ace. Denis Watson had one Saturday on the 181-yard fifth hole. Aubrey finished at 10-under after a 62 Sunday, including a record 28 on the back nine.

NEW YORK — Oil prices on Friday hit the highest level since the final days of the Persian Gulf war, stoked by a Kurdish report of casualties in Iraq and rumors, later denied, of an explosion on a North Sea oil platform. The August contract for West Texas Intermediate rose as high as $22.25 before settling at $22.16 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange, up 22 cents from Thursday's close. The settlement eclipsed Wednesday's close of $22.14 to become the highest closing price for a near-term contract since Feb. 14, when it settled at $22.32 per barrel. Prices were mixed in the thinly traded natural gas futures market. The August contract slipped .3 cent to close at $1.247 per 1,000 cubic feet on the Mercantile Exchange.

MCA eyes merger

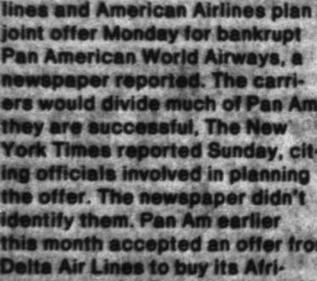

LOS ANGELES — Hanna-Barbera Productions and MCA Inc. are said to be in the early stages of negotiations for MCA to buy the maker of television cartoons. Hanna-Barbera, which created the Jetsons and Flintstones among other characters, is owned by Great American Communications Co. of Cincinnati, a troubled radio and television organization controlled by the financier Carl H. Lindner. Executives close to the deal said that at least one meeting has been held between Great American and MCA, the Hollywood film-studio company owned by Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. of Japan.

Offer in offing

NEW YORK — Trans World Airlines and American Airlines plan a joint offer Monday for bankrupt Pan American World Airways, a newspaper reported. The carriers would divide much of Pan Am if they are successful, The New York Times reported Sunday, citing officials involved in planning the offer. The newspaper didn't identify them. Pan Am earlier this month accepted an offer from Delta Air Lines to buy its African, Asian and European routes, the Boston-New York-Washington shuttle and 45 planes for $260 million. TWA and American were expected to offer $310 million for those assets, and TWA was expected to offer to invest another $140 million in Pan Am's remaining operations.

Fox Photo sold

SAN ANTONIO — Fox Photo Inc. has agreed to sell photofinishing company to CPI Corp. of St. Louis for $62 million in cash, the businesses announced. CPI will acquire more than 250 Fox photofinishing stores and about 50 photo minilabs located in supermarkets. The transaction, announced Thursday, is likely to be final in 60 days.

Terrorist groups used BCCI branches

LONDON (NYT) — Abu Nidal, the Palestinian terrorist, and 10 other terrorists and arms dealers had 42 accounts at London branches of Bank of Credit and Commerce International, The Sunday Times of London reported.

Quoting "secret BCCI documents" it said it had obtained, the newspaper said one of the 10 was Ben Banerjee, an Indian-born arms dealer named in the Iranian arms-for-hostages scandal, and another was Samir Najmeddin, whom the paper described as an Iraqi businessman who supplied arms to Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and to Argentina during the Falklands war.

The paper said British intelligence services had informed the Bank of England, Britain's central bank and banking regulator, that Islamic Jihad, part of the group responsible for kidnapping Westerners in Beirut, had almost certainly also used the bank.

The article is the latest charge that British officials knew something was seriously amiss at the bank long before regulators around the world seized most of its global operations July 5. The seizure followed an investigation by Price Waterhouse, the bank's auditor, which the Bank of England ordered in March.

The Sunday Times said Ghassam Ahmed Qassem, manager of the bank's Sloane Street branch in London until January 1990, was informing British intelligence services about some accounts held by terrorists and arms dealers. It also reported that he said the terrorist accounts had been set up with the knowledge of senior bank officials.

"BCCI first acknowledged the existence of Nidal's secret accounts in December 1989," the paper said, "when Qassem told Basheer Chowdry, BCCI's United Kingdom general manager, that he had passed information about the accounts to MI5," the British intelligence unit. "Mr. Chowdry notified the Bank of England."

The Sunday Times quoted an internal bank report as saying: "Qassem told Chowdry that the accounts were being maintained by BCCI for terrorists, or others associated with the terrorist operating under the nom de guerre Abu Nidal.

Hewlett-Packard runs over obstacles

■ While other computer makers stumble, Hewlett-Packard is racking up record sales with a innovative new products.

PALO ALTO, Calif. (AP) — While IBM founders, Apple Computer Inc. shrinks and Unisys Corp. bleeds, Hewlett-Packard Co. is on a roll this year.

First, it unveiled computer workstations that provide the highest performance for their price in the industry.

It followed with a calculator-sized computer that packs the power of an early IBM personal computer and contains a built-in version of the popular 1-2-3 spreadsheet program.

Last month, HP announced a series of minicomputers that boast the same industry-leading performance as the smaller-sized workstations.

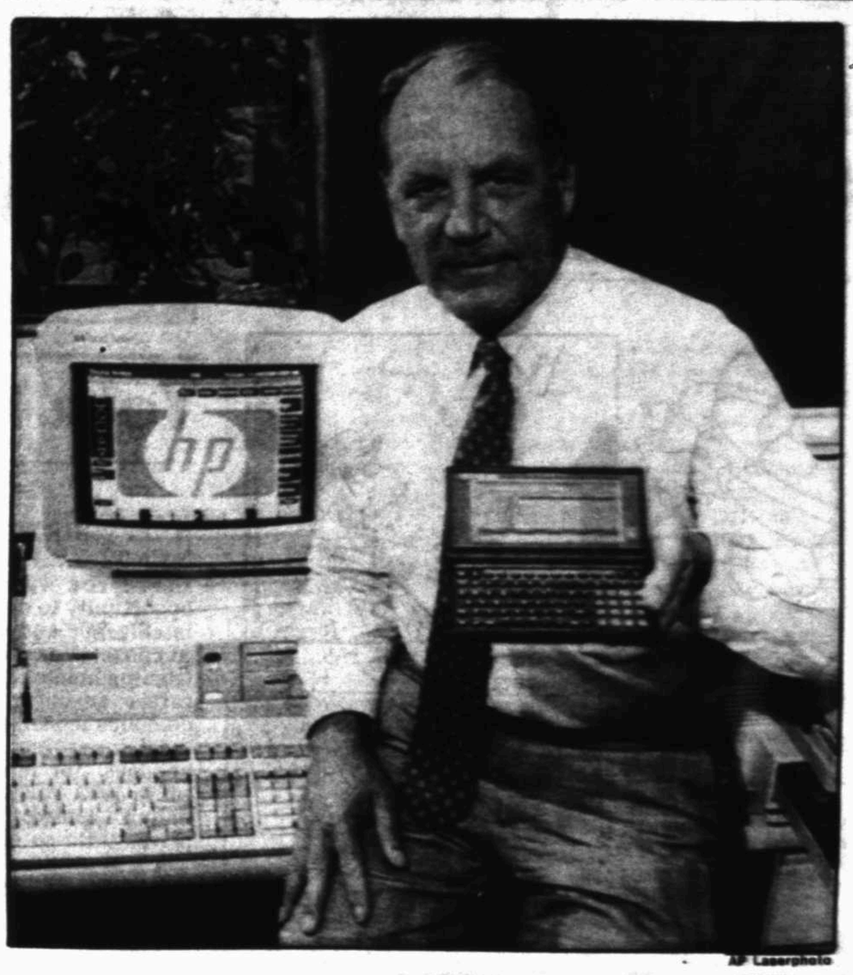

All along, the company's financial results have remained strong — in sharp contrast with many other computer makers, which are resorting to layoffs, plant closings or other cutbacks to contend with sickly sales and profits.

Not bad for a company that analysts were criticizing a year ago for sluggishness.

Back then, HP seemed to be losing its touch. It was behind in the fiercly competitive market for workstations, the desktop machines that resemble extremely powerful personal computers. Its earnings had faltered, its stock price had slipped. It also seemed in danger of losing a distinctive corporate culture, which promotes individuality and creativity, under the weight of a bloated bureaucracy.

Things were so troubling that septuagenarian company founders William Hewlett and David Packard, who remains HP's chairman, stepped in from semiretirement to help plan a reorganization.

Under the October restructuring, executive layers were reduced, management committees slashed and the sales force moved closer to the people who design and build the computers. Four computer divisions were folded into two.

Weak M2 may cause rate cuts

NEW YORK (NYT) — Credit market analysts say the slowdown in the growth of an important monetary aggregate, if it continues, may force the Federal Reserve Board to lower short-term interest rates.

For the most part, in the last month most market participants may not have been worrying much about that aggregate — the M-2 money supply indicator — as they have been preoccupied by a string of reports suggesting that an economic recovery is at hand, and by the prospect of a flood of new Treasury securities.

And in the report on monetary policy and the economy he delivered to Congress last week, the Fed's chairman, Alan Greenspan, spent considerable time explaining why money growth has been so sluggish, and implied that the recovery might be sustainable without vigorous growth in money and debt.

But despite Greenspan's disclaimers, analysts said they believed that last week's money supply data concerned the Fed.

Analysts said the Fed chairman almost certainly knew the contents of the money-supply report when he went to Capitol Hill.

The figures showed that M-2 declined by $6.9 billion during the week ended July 8 — the third straight weekly drop.

M-2 is a measurement that includes cash in circulation, deposits in checking accounts and nonbank traveler's checks, plus accounts like savings deposits and money market funds.

"We are at one of those phases in the business cycle where growth in monetary aggregates and credit are not giving us a true reading on monetary policy or the economy," said Jay N. Woodworth, senior domestic economist at the Bankers Trust Company. "Most of the credit this time is being booked in the open financial markets, not at banks. Therefore, we should expect that money growth should be quite slow for some time."

The latest decline puts M-2 growth since the fourth quarter at just over 3 percent, below the midpoint in the 2.5 percent to 6.5 percent range that the Fed last week reaffirmed was its target for the year.

In assessing Greenspan's remarks, analysts said the Fed seemed to believe that the economy can expand even if money growth fails to the low end of the band.

But over the past 13 weeks M-2 has grown at an annualized rate of just 2 percent.

Newspapers see ad spending drop

N.Y. Times News Service

Six months into 1991, the prospects that newspaper advertising will show an improvement over 1990 are dim at best. A decline in newspaper advertising spending this year would be the first back-to-back annual drop since World War II.

But like the first balmy whiff of spring in early March, the fleeting and elusive scent of better times has been detected by some newspaper exectives.

"Before, there was an ill wind blowing, but now there's a still in the air and a sense that the next wind is going to be a good one," said Jerome S. Tilis, vice president of marketing for Knight-Ridder Inc. and chairman of the executive committee of Newspapers First, which sells advertising collectively for 39 newspapers.

Tilis, like every other newspaper executive contacted for a spot-check of the advertising climate, added that he did not know just when that fair wind might begin to blow.

The Persian Gulf war paralyzed consumer spending and sent newspaper advertising plummeting well below the depressed levels already caused by the recession.

At mid-year, the advertising trough remains widespread, but with quirks.

For instance, newspapers in the Northeast continue to suffer and some of New England's papers are in an economic rout. The pain is also sharp, if not so cumulatively deep, at newspapers in California, which had been spared until late last year.

In some markets, real estate advertising is starting to make a comeback and retail advertising has stopped going down after a long slide.

The brief euphoria after the gulf war slowed the advertising decline in May; alas, the trend slowed or sputtered out in June at many papers.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Stay alert for early calls on bond issues

By Bill Doyle

Q. Tax-free municipal bonds sometimes are called in to be redeemed prior to maturity. How can the owner of these bonds know when this occurs? I am referring to both registered bonds, from which I receive interest checks through the mail, and bearer bonds, from which I must cut and present interest coupons.

Doyle

A. You are correct about the majority of municipal bonds, those issued by states and their political subdivisions, and also about many corporate bonds, those issued by companies. Most U.S. Treasury bonds cannot be called early.

When a bond has a "call provision," its issuer has the right to call it in and pay it off before its maturity date — either at face value or at a premium higher than face value. This is spelled out in the indenture drawn up when the bond is issued.

Your name and address is printed on the certificate of any registered bond you own and also on the record books of the issuer and its agents. So, you certainly should be notified by mail if the bond is called. There's one case on record in which owners of registered municipal bonds were not notified of an early call. That foul-up could be traced to the legal eagles who wrote the indenture and to the bond's trustee — a sizable bank.

In theory, there is no record of bearer bond ownership. Your name in not on the bond certificate. Technically, the issuer and its agents have no record you own the bond. They are not obligated to give you individual notification of a call.

In that case, you have to stay alert for a call, which normally is advertised in national financial publications and a newspaper published in or near the city where the bond was issued.

You can have your broker or banker watch for a call of your bond. And you can check Standard & Poor's Corp.'s "Call Bond Record," at many public libraries.

All too often, however, the owner of a bearer bond does not learn about an early call until after turning in an interest coupon, only to have the coupon returned because the bond had been called. He or she then is out the amount of the coupon and loses the use of the bond's redemption price for more than six months.

Q. I recently received a solicitation from a state housing agency whose bond I own. It asked me to sell the bond to the agency at market price, which is below face value. It seems the agency is required to redeem some of the bonds early and wants to reduce the price that would have to be paid by calling in bonds at face value.

This is a bearer bond, on which it supposedly is impossible to identify owners. The solicitation states, "According to our records, you own a portion of the bond issue described above." I assume they noted my name and address when my interest coupons were presented for redemption.

If it is possible for them to identify me as the owner, how come so many people get burned when their bearer bonds are called?

A. Because bond issuers and their agents seldom, if ever, make an extra effort to notify bearer bond owners of early calls. They are not required to. So they don't.

Cynics contend this is a racket on the part of bond trustees. A bond issuer turns over to the trustee money to pay off a bond issue on the call date or maturity date.

If some of the bonds are not presented for redemption on time, the trustee has the use of all that bond redemption money — often for a fairly long time. During that span, the money can be put to work earning more money — for the trustee, not the bond owners.

Q. I have a recollection of bearer bonds being outlawed. If that's the case, why are some bearers still around?

A. Your memory is correct. Back in 1982, Congress passed legislation banning the issuance of bearer bonds, effective July 1, 1983. Since that date, all new bonds have come in registered or book-entry form. No certificates are printed for the latter; ownership and other records are kept on computers.

But some old bonds with long maturities are still outstanding and will be available in the marketplace until the year 2013 or later.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, JULY 22, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will have plenty of opportunity to display your keen intelligence and strong sense of purpose. Valuable on-the-job training in late fall leads to rapid career advancement. Financial demands lessen, allowing you to build up savings by the winter holidays. For romance to flourish in 1992, you may have to relinquish some of your treasured privacy. Do so cheerfully!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Actor Albert Brooks, fashion designer Oscar de la Renta, matriarch Rose Kennedy, actor Willem Defoe.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Collaborative efforts will be richly rewarded now. Your spirits will rise steadily as the day progresses. Try to set aside more time for both quiet meditation and personal pursuits.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your mate or partner tries to please you. Do not disguise your feelings of affection. Financial problems ease, thanks to systematic saving. Curb your temper if someone challenges your authority.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Tackle yesterday's problems with new confidence. Solutions will be easier to find in the wake of this morning's developments. A platonic relationship turns romantic. Go slow.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Keep your own counsel at work. Coworkers may be in an argumenative mood. Focus on family matters. Someone who shares your goals disagrees with you on the best way to achieve them.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Family members expenses deserve special attention. You may discover new talent that will help you increase your income. Enrolling in high-tech classes is just one option. Widen your social horizons.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your suspicions may be justified. Avoid discussing financial affairs with friend and relatives. You can drive a tough bargain today, finalizing a profitable business agreement. Put romance on the back burner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Travel can be used as a tool for improving business prospects. An enlightening conversation takes place over lunch. Be more discerning when it comes to your romantic partner's wishes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The spotlight is on transition and communication. You may attend a social event with reluctance, only to find that you have a wonderful time. Resist an urge to play games with your romantic partner.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Romantic considerations could influence almost every decision you make today. The business outlook shows signs of improvement. Get in touch with those who have funds to invest.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Better rapport with your colleagues will mean swifter career advancement. Your financial prospects brighten. A loved one's generosity deserves your appreciation. Avoid making additional requests for a while.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18): Hospitality continues to be a rewarding theme in your life. A family gathering is fun for old and young alike. Your special charm helps romance develop in the direction you hoped.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Extra tact must be shown in situations involving family responsibilities, conflicting loyalties. A dinner guest could give you new insights regarding a career choice.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ762 ♡A107 ◇Q98 ♣5
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A.—You have a powerful hand with great trick-taking potential despite the fact that you have a singleton in partner's suit. With a self-sufficient suit, you can get this message across to partner by jumping to two spades.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ762 ♡A107 ◇Q98 ♣5
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Your jump shift could have been based on one of two types of hands: the one that you have, or a powerful hand with a good fit for opener's suit. Clarify which you have by rebidding three spades.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQ107 ♡954 ◇K102 ♣J52
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Since partner's jump shift is forcing to game, there's no need for you to do anything dramatic just yet. For the moment, content yourself with a preference to three diamonds. It's partner's next bid that will reveal the potential of the hand.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A108763 ♡65 ◇7 ♣J754
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	3 ♡	?

What action do you take?
A.—We dislike being shut out of the bidding when we have a reasonable six-card spade suit, but as we grow older we have come to treasure assets more and more. Any bid courts disaster. If your side can make four spades, partner should have enough to reopen the bidding. Pass.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ96 ♡AJ94 ◇AQ1065 ♣Void
Partner opens the bidding with three clubs. What action do you take?

A.—If your side were not vulnerable, the decision would be easy—pass. At this vulnerability, however, how you should proceed is not quite so clear—partner could easily have just the right cards for game. There is no real way to find out, though, so we would still pass and settle for the sure plus.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠83 ♡AJ8 ◇KJ5 ♣AK1052
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A.—We can think of all sorts of scientific ways to approach this hand, most of which could easily get us into trouble. If you play that a jump to three clubs is forcing, that's as good a way as any to start. If not, respond one diamond, then make a forcing raise in clubs at your next turn.

Smothers Brothers take Burns' advice, acknowledge their ages

INDIANAPOLIS — The Smothers Brothers can still get a laugh with their sibling silliness, but they've modified their act to acknowledge their ages.

D. Smothers

"For some lucky reason, that personality, that style, is being maintained when we're 52 and 54," said Dick Smothers, the "smart" half of the duo. They're scheduled to perform at a dinner theater here tonight.

"We can't do some of the material we did in the '60s because it's too young for us," he said. "Our relationship is that we've grown up. But we're still silly. And we still fight. And people like us."

T. Smothers

It was George Burns who advised Smothers and his brother, Tom, in a roundabout way to grow up, or be outgrown.

Burns told Smothers that he and his partner Gracie Allen began losing their radio audience because they were still doing dating jokes when audiences knew they were married. When they began to act their age, the ratings picked up.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — The owner of a multi-million dollar mansion leased by comedian Roseanne Barr Arnold and husband Tom Arnold has sued the couple, alleging they trashed the place. Owner Spencer Proffer, a CBS Records executive, sued the couple for $171,000 to cover broken windows, damaged floors, torn and stained wall coverings and upholstery, broken furniture, a scuffed tennis court and a dented gate. The Arnolds deny damaging the property, said David Brokaw, spokesman for the couple. 'They left the home in perfect order," Brokaw said. "Any damage that was done was done by a third party after they relinquished possession of the property." But Proffer insists the Arnolds caused $205,296 in damage to the $3.5 million home, which they rented for 10 months beginning in June 1989. The $32,000 security deposit the couple paid doesn't cover the damage, the lawsuit claims.

HORTON, Kan. — In a ceremony bright with Kickapoo Indian pageantry, Gov. Joan Finney was named "Wah na ko qua," or White Morning Star Woman.

"The United States made treaties with the Kickapoo Nation over a century ago," Mrs. Finney said Saturday after tribal officials gave her a plaque inscribed with her new Indian name. "I will try to live up to them and to truly be a morning star for all of the Kickapoo people."

Tribal Chairman Steve Cadue said Mrs. Finney was selected because she was the first governor to recognize Indian sovereignty by proclamation.

Kickapoo elders chose the name because the morning star is the first and brightest star to be seen at the beginning of the day, Cadue said.

CANTON, Ohio — Paul MacCready, who designed a human-powered aircraft that flew from England to France, was inducted into the Aviation Hall of Fame.

He designed the 70-pound Gossamer Albatross, which made the flight in 1979. Several years earlier, MacCready designed and built the Gossamer Condor, which stayed aloft for seven minutes while flying a figure-eight course.

Also inducted into the hall Saturday were Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, who was Air Force chief of staff from 1948 to 1953; Edward Wells, who was an executive with Boeing Co.; and Vincent Bendix, who as head of Bendix Aviation Corp. helped to develop new airplane parts.

The 65-year-old MacCready of Monrovia, Calif., is the only living inductee among the four. He's chairman and chief executive officer of AeroVironment, which develops energy-efficient vehicles, including aircraft.

LOS ANGELES — Axl Rose, lead singer of Guns N' Roses, said he's getting therapy to deal with lingering anger from a miserable childhood.

Rose

He began intensive therapy just before the rock band began its national tour in East Troy, Wis., in May.

"I was told that my mental circuitry was all twisted ... in terms of how I would deal with stress because of what happened to me back in Indiana," he told the Los Angeles Times in an interview published Sunday.

"Basically I would overload with the stress of a situation ... by smashing whatever was around me," he said. "I used to think I was actually dealing with my problems, and now I know that's not dealing with it at all."

He said his parents in Lafayette, Ind., were oppressively strict.

"Sex was bad, music was bad," the 29-year-old Rose said. "I eventually left, but so many kids stay."

Jack Weinberg, the 1960's activist who coined the phrase, 'Never trust anybody over 30,' is 51 now a still active in causes. Here he addresses a group of volunteers at Greenpeace's headquarters in Chicago, where he coordinates efforts to clean up the Great Lakes.

Once an activist . . .

Jack Weinberg continues life as rebel with a cause

CHICAGO (AP) — As an activist during the 1960s, Jack Weinberg helped popularize the anti-establishment phrase, "Don't trust anyone over 30." Now, at 51, he's still a rebel with a cause.

"The issues I'm dealing with today are more critical than anything I've dealt with before," said Weinberg, who coordinates Greenpeace's effort to clean up the Great Lakes.

"I think the future of humanity depends on what we do about the environment in the next decade," he said in a recent interview.

Weinberg looks younger than his age, an impression furthered by the slightly-graying, medium-length hair pulled into a ponytail.

The '60s radical at the University of California at Berkeley said the rebellious youth cry, "Don't trust anyone over 30" was an offhand comment to a San Francisco journalist, whose newspaper column was picked up by newspapers across the country.

In 1964, Weinberg was trapped in a police car for 32 hours. He had been arrested for violating Berkeley's ban on political activities involving "off-campus" issues, but hundreds of protesters surrounded the car and prevented police from leaving the campus.

After negotiations, administrators dropped the charges. Soon afterward, the ban on political activities was dropped at Berkeley. Within two years, most major U.S. colleges had abandoned similar policies.

Weinberg became a leader in a youth organization called the Free Speech Movement at Berkeley until 1969, when he left.

He worked at an auto plant in Detroit and later a steel mill in Gary, Ind. He was a union organizer at both places.

"A movement limited to elite campuses couldn't succeed," Weinberg said. "Blue-collar workers had been among the strongest opponents of the anti-war movement. We believed that they had to become socially involved before you could have meaningful change."

An economic downturn in 1984 cost him the steel mill job. He learned computer programming and worked in a typesetting house. But Weinberg felt something was missing and kept his eye open for a job where he could be an activist again.

"I was trying to figure out how little time I could put in on the job every week," he said. "Now, I'm working seven-day weeks, 12 hours a day.

"I can't honestly say, 'Boy I'm having fun,' but it's what I do, and at least I feel that if I can maintain the pace and handle the stress I'll be doing what I want to do."

Tsongas proposes changes for Social Security system

■ The lone Democratic presidential candidate, Paul Tsongas foresees an economic storm ahead for the United State.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Sen. Paul Tsongas of Massachusetts, the only declared candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, said Sunday that if elected president he would consider a means test for Social Security recipients.

Appearing on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," Tsongas was asked how he would achieve his goal of cutting the increase in spending on government entitlement programs to a level 1 percent below the inflation rate.

Such proposals could succeed only "if the country understands, my gosh, there really is an economic storm coming," he said.

Asked if he would favor a means test for entitlement programs such as Social Security, he said, "I think you have to look at all of that. I would look at a means test."

The same issue came up in the 1988 campaign for the Democratic nomination, when former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt proposed that the Social Security benefits of wealthy retirees be subject to taxation.

Babbitt proposed what he described as a "needs test," a threshold of $100,000 or $75,000 a year above which benefits would be taxable.

Babbitt withdrew from the presidential race in 1988 after trailing in several primaries.

Tsongas gave no details on what kinds of means test he would consider.

Tsongas also was asked whether the United States should attack Iraq if Saddam Hussein is found to be hiding nuclear weapons materials.

"In the last analysis, you have to take out his nuclear capability," the former senator said. "I think the United Nations should be the first recourse, but in the last analysis, that nuclear capability has to be taken out."

Tsongas said he has "great respect for Clarence Thomas's personal history" but would not have nominated him for the Supreme Court. He said he did not know, at this point, whether he would vote for him if he were still in the Senate.

He said he favors mandatory AIDS testing for doctors and other health care givers. Referring to legislation passed by the Senate, however, he said that "the idea of a 10-year jail term for a doctor who did not do it is extraordinary, and I think takes it to the point of being ridiculous."

On the testing, he said, "You have to do it. AIDS is such a compelling issue that I think we have to attack it on the broad front, and I would mandate testing."

Thursday, the Senate passed an amendment sponsored by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., providing penalties of up to years in prison and a $10,000 fine for health care workers with AIDS who keep the information from their patients.

An alternative, worked out by Senate Democratic and Republican leaders, would require states to adopt the federal Centers for Disease Control's voluntary guidelines for protecting patients from surgeons and dentists infected with AIDS.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., chairman of a House subcommittee on health, predicted on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation" that the House would reject the Helms amendment but said he considered the compromise "a reasonable proposition."

Anthony Fauci, head of the office of AIDS Research at the National Institutes of Health, said voluntary guidelines should be given a chance.

'Private prosecutors' known as hired guns, help for justice system

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Steven Bennett stood trial on murder charges in Blount County, Tenn., in 1988 he faced three prosecutors. One represented the state and two worked for the victim's family.

"Private prosecutors" — lawyers hired by crime victims or victims' relatives to help the state's attorneys — have been a part of the criminal justice systems in about half the states for years.

Though used rarely, these hired guns have proved controversial.

"It's a weapon that has existed for a long time but many people are unaware of it," said Charles Fels, the Knoxville, Tenn., lawyer who earlier this year asked the nation's highest court to reverse Bennett's conviction because two private prosecutors participated.

"It's something that lies around until someone dusts it off and uses it," Fels said. "I think we shouldn't let someone use the power of public prosecutors to seek private revenge."

But David Beatty of the National Victims Center in Arlington, Va., disagreed with Fels' premise. "If the ultimate goal is justice, and a private prosecutor can help serve that purpose, where's the harm?" Beatty said.

"The entire criminal justice system is full of inconsistencies," he said. "Not every prosecutor has the same resources available to him. Not every victim will have the resources to hire a private prosecutor."

Bennett was convicted and sentenced to 17 years in prison for killing a teen-age boy who had frightened Bennett's wife and children in a Halloween prank. The state, at the request of the two private prosecutors, had sought the death penalty.

"It shouldn't have been a capital punishment case but that's the way it was prosecuted," Fels said. "This was a matter of a victim's wealthy family trying to buy its own brand of justice through the hired-gun law."

State courts upheld a 1978 Tennessee law, based on a longstanding legal tradition in the state, that recognizes a victim's right to hire a private lawyer to assist a public prosecutor.

The Supreme Court rejected, without comment, Fels' due-process arguments in May.

C. Anthony Daughtrey, as assistant attorney general for Tennessee, said the use of private prosecutors has not been controversial in the state because it occurs infrequently. "It hasn't been litigated much on appeal," he said.

In some states, however, litigation has led courts to strike down the use of private prosecutors. State courts in Missouri, Nebraska and Wisconsin have prohibited the practice.

WEEKLY & MONTHLY INCOME

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has an opening on one of its few "special allowance" routes. This larger route receives a $50 check each Friday, in addition to the regular monthly route profits. The route is in the Washington Park area.

As with all newspaper distributorships, this opportunity requires a 7 day a week commitment (when you go out of town, you must arrange a substitute for your self) and it is early morning work.

Newspaper distributorships provide great supplemental income for housewives/ mothers, senior citizens, college students, or any other adult wanting to "moonlight".
