All is forgiven: Store owner trades debts for customers

DOVER, N.H. (AP) — A variety store owner who was losing patrons because they owed him money has called off thousand of dollars in debts to get back his customers.

Ernest T.J. Peters, owner of E.J.'s Variety Store, took out an advertisement in Foster's Democrat, a Dover newspaper, canceling debts owed him by about 1,200 customers who charged goods at his store.

"To our charge customers," the small ad began. "Your bill is paid in full. Start fresh with us. We will help you through the tough times. Come back and become a customer again. Thanks, E.J.'s."

"It's a way of saying 'thank you' for their past business and telling them that I want them to come back," Peters said. He explained business has dropped off and he believes people who owe him money are steering clear of his store.

"The whole world is in debt," he said. "The country's deficit is so many billion dollars. So I think, what's a way I can get my little business going again? Just say, OK, you don't owe me anything."

Peters, a stocky cigar smoker, says he doesn't want to spend time and money on collecting bills.

He regularly takes out advertising in the paper, but the debt-clearing ad ran only once, he said,

Besides, he confessed, "I don't know all their addresses. Sometimes I just know a first name and I don't know where they live. I don't need to know those things. I'm not a detail guy."

He also doesn't know the exact amount of the debt. But in the past few years it's grown to between $5,000 and $10,000, he said.

"Customers would tell me how they were out of work. I guess I'm susceptible to that kind of stuff," said Peters, 46, who has lived in Dover, a city of about 22,000 people, all his life.

"I would get to be friends with people. They would say they were broke. They'd tell me about their babies...lots of stories. And people would charge, charge, charge, charge."

About a year and a half ago, Peters hurt his knee while dancing. "When I was hospitalized, that's when things really got out of hand," he said. "Everyone was charging because they had my OK."

He's still letting customers charge, only now he's more careful.

Peters, who has owned the store for six years, said he isn't bitter and has promised not to mention the debt if customers return.

"I wish the whole country would straighten out," he said. "I'm no economist, but I believe business people are overcharging the public.

"I'm not mad or upset at anybody. These are tough times. I really believe that's why they haven't paid me back. I believe in people. I trust them."

Votes shy of approval on budget amendment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate supporters of a proposed constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget remained several votes shy of the two-thirds margin they needed for passage, pointing toward possible defeat of the measure later today.

Reagan administration officials were frantically lobbying for the support of wavering senators in an effort to rescue the proposed amendment — strongly backed by President Reagan — from defeat.

"It might be too late to influence the outcome," said one GOP Senate official who asked that he not be identified.

Officially, both sides said the showdown vote later today was too close to call.

But leaders of the balanced-budget drive conceded privately, just hours before the vote, that the proposed constitutional amendment was in serious trouble on the floor.

They blamed a major modification adopted by the Senate on Tuesday as costing critical support for the amendment among moderate Republicans.

The modification would make it harder for Congress to raise the national debt ceiling once a ban on deficit spending became part of the Constitution.

A split among conservative supporters of the balanced-budget amendment led to the unexpected 51-45 approval Tuesday of the proposal by Sen. William L. Armstrong, R-Colo., to require a three-fifths vote by Congress to raise the debt ceiling. A majority vote is now required.

The Armstrong proposal was a potentially fatal modification to the amendment, many balanced-budget supporters claimed.

"There's no doubt we lost some votes (for the balanced budget) because of the Armstrong amendment. There are some soft votes. There'll be some arm-twisting today," said one Republican leadership source.

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., who confidently predicted passage of the measure just a day ago, told reporters today: "I don't have a hard count."

Baker said the balanced-budget amendment, which requires a two-thirds vote for approval, could go either way "by just a few votes."

Democratic opponents of the overall measure said today they could count only 64 votes for or leaning in favor of the amendment — three short of the 67 needed if all 100 senators vote.

Armstrong's debt provision prevailed after Democratic opponents joined forces with Senate conservatives who are philosophically opposed to any further increases in the $1-trillion-plus national debt.

Even if the measure passes the Senate today, the modification could assure a House defeat by scaring off uncommitted members whose support for the constitutional amendment is needed, sponsors said.

"It will substantially detract (from) prospects that this will become the law of the land," Baker told the Senate on Tuesday.

Baker had fended off other efforts to modify the proposal, warning senators that any changes could be fatal to the proposed amendment.

The vote caught both backers and opponents of the amendment by surprise. Baker immediately sought a second vote to try to overturn the action, but his effort failed, 56-40.

Conservatives who have been fighting for a balanced budget amendment for 25 years "did themselves in" and played into the hands of Senate liberals by agreeing to the debt-ceiling addition, Hatch claimed.

Houston job hunters report disappearing listing services

HOUSTON (AP) — Three job-listing services that disappeared over the weekend had been reported by several clients who found that many of the openings advertised did not exist, a Better Business Bureau official says.

The firms "were the subject of a number of complaints," Ron Holz, director of operations for the Better Business Bureau of Metropolitan Houston Inc., said Tuesday.

Job Connections Services and two other job-listing firms — Career Journal SBS Publishers and SBS and Associates, which shared an address — closed their doors over the weekend. They took with them fees collected from hundreds of applicants.

Many of the listings of the firms' job listings apparently were bogus or no longer good, taken from newspaper help-wanted ads that often were months old, Holz said.

Hannah Walker, 23, said Job Services sent her to interview with a construction firm Saturday after she paid a $40 fee.

"The company didn't have any opening and didn't know what I was talking about," she said. "I knew something was wrong."

Holz said the companies were part of a system that has been luring Northerners to the Sunbelt with the false promise of jobs. He said the companies run ads in severely depressed areas.

"They're going for people who can least afford to lose 25 or 50 bucks, who take it out of the cookie jar," Holz said.

A note on the door at Job Services referred applicants to another company, but workers at that firm said no arrangement had been made with Job Services.

The firm's president said the closing was purely a matter of economics.

"We ran out of funds to continue operating," said Michael Carlton, 26.

Carlton acknowledged that many of his clients were left without refunds.

"I personally can't do a damn thing," he said. "I'm not the owner and I can't speak for the owner."

Carlton refused to identify the owner.

Van Frank said he had worked as a salesman for Job Connections for five weeks but was never paid. He said he was hired by a company official who never saw his resume and did not ask for references.

"He said he'd take me at my word," said Frank, who said he had worked in telephone sales jobs before. "I found that strange, but I was in desperate need of a job. Therefore, I went along with it."

Frank said he was supposed to be working on a 20 percent sales commission, but that the only money he ever saw was $20 a company official gave him out of his pocket.

Black community wins stockade battle

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Last week's news that the Midland County Commissioners' Court had opted to build the county's stockade in far east Midland near the junction of Fairgrounds Road and the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. track was a shocker which bonded the black community and ultimately helped to defeat the proposal.

The thwarted measure was the commissioners' third try at locating a stockade.

The idea of a fenced-in compound replete with armed guards, sentry posts, night floodlights and mounted deputies apparently is kaput. The motion, which was passed 4-0 by the court last Wednesday, was rescinded Tuesday 3-0 after community citizens and developers had bombarded the commissioners with protests in and out of court.

"We're all conscientious," said County Judge Bill Ahders. "We want to do what's best for the people of Midland."

What initially unified and bonded the black community, in whose neighborhood the stockade would have been built, was the surprise announcement in last Thursday's newspaper that the Commissioners' Court had opted for the 17.7-acre site, near schools, churches and homes.

"That was the thing that sort of shocked everybody," said Dr. Viola Coleman, who noted that previously the stockade sites "had been moved from place to place."

THE COURT'S decision to plant the stockade, however temporary, "right in the community...worried everybody," Dr. Coleman, a physician, said.

Over the weekend, she repeatedly telephoned the judge to remind him of what she perceived as an error by the court.

Commissioner Charlie Welch who, due to an ailment, has not been in on the past three votes on stockade locations, has been campaigning against putting the facility in Midland. He advocated building the compound — if it is really needed to relieve what Sheriff Dallas Smith views as illegal overcrowding in the courthouse jail — in a remote area of Midland County. As an alternative, Welch has proposed con-

MISD consistently denies child-care transfer requests

By HALLYE JORDAN

Midland Independent School District trustees were consistent in their denial of child care hardship transfer requests during the second and last hearing of appeals Tuesday.

In other action, trustees heard a report on the Hoffman Reading Program and the Computer Assisted Instruction Program and authorized requests for the lowering of a pipeline and an easement of utilities across an elementary school campus.

Fourteen of the 20 child care transfer cases, including six "no-shows," were denied due to overcrowding in specific elementary schools. Appeals that were granted were from crowded schools to less crowded schools.

THE APPEALS FOR child care hardship transfers have been numerous this year due to a revision of the policy by the board in February. The previous policy had allowed all child care transfers to be administratively approved.

Board members, at the suggestion of school administrators, based their action on the overcrowding of schools, specifically those near or served by popular child care centers.

Some 98 percent of the appeals for child care transfer requests heard at the first hearing June 22 were denied.

According to Dr. Joseph P. Baressi, superintendent, parents appealing denials Tuesday were sent letters following the first hearing in June advising them that almost all of the child care requests were denied, suggesting that they look into alternative child care facilities and scheduling a time slot to present their cases to the school board.

All requests for transfers to Jones and Houston elementary schools were denied at the kindergarten and first grade level Tuesday. Two transfers for fourth grade students into those schools were approved due to less crowding in fourth grade classrooms.

In other transfer requests, seven of the nine appeals heard were denied, including one "no-show."

Harriman hopes Reagan will be beaten

SUN VALLEY, Idaho (AP) — Averell Harriman propped a foot on a long coffee table at the ski resort he founded and declared: "I won't comment about him."

"Him" is Ronald Reagan, and Harriman, a lifelong Democrat who served as governor of New York during the 1950s, explained recently, "He is a Republican and I hope he'll be beaten by a good Democrat. Whoever wins in the Democratic primaries, I'm going to support him and hope he can beat Reagan."

And that was all about the current political scene from a man who loves to talk politics.

Instead "The Governor," as he is called, restricted himself to the past, including his days as ambassador to Britain under President Franklin D. Roosevelt and general presidential troubleshooter.

Harriman, who will turn 90 on Nov. 15, also recalled how he founded the first ski resort in the country, Sawtooth Mountain.

He said he had done some skiing in his youth in Europe and decided to found a resort in the United States. He urged a friend, Count Felix Schaffgotsch of Austria, to find the ideal place for such a resort in this country, and 50 years ago the count "discovered" Sun Valley, then noted for its mining and railroad.

Now, surveying the resort, Harriman said, "It's nice up here. This is lovely. I guess you can say this: This resort, this beautiful place, is what I've come to love."

Javits

STONY BROOK, N.Y. (AP) — Former U.S. Sen. Jacob Javits has been released from Stony Brook University Hospital, where he was admitted for observation July 20. Hospital spokesman Jim Rhatigan said Javits, 78, who suffers from a degenerative nerve ailment, was released Monday evening.

Javits was staying near the Stony Brook campus so he can work on his personal papers, which he is donating to the university's library, Rhatigan said.

The spokesman said the former senator will continue to receive physical therapy for the nerve disease.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — China's ambassador to the United States says this country has a duty to return a Chinese tennis star who disappeared in California during a tennis tournament last month.

Hu Na, 19, failed to appear at a match July 21 during the Federation Cup tennis tournament in Santa Clara and has since sought political asylum, according to the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

The ambassador, Chai Zemin, who was here for China national day ceremonies at the 1982 World's Fair, said Tuesday through an interpreter, "We think the United States should try its best to find her and then return her to us... The U.S. government is obligated to protect the safety of the Chinese team."

In Washington, the State Department said it can do nothing about the request for Miss Hu's immediate return. Spokesman Alan Romberg said, "Under U.S. law, once the person has applied for political asylum we are obligated to apply due process of law."

He said Miss Hu's request for asylum must be reviewed on its merits by the INS with the State Department providing an advisory opinion.

Romberg said it also was hoped that such incidents would not prompt the Peking government to cut off U.S.-Chinese cultural exchanges.

Baldwin

NEW YORK (AP) — Canada's Karen Baldwin, the current Miss Universe, is keeping her ideas about the world to herself because "I don't believe beauty and politics mix."

The 18-year-old beauty queen from London, Ontario, made it clear Tuesday that she was happy to be treated just as a beauty queen.

"I've chosen to do this because it's what I want to do," she said when asked about being viewed as an object of beauty. "It's a dream come true. I'm enjoying myself and that's the most important thing.

"Although I am interested in the current affairs of the world, I don't believe beauty and politics mix," she said.

Miss Baldwin said she believes she "represents the professional world" of women, but isn't a "bra-burning" feminist.

She won the Miss Universe contest in Lima, Peru, on July 26 and was making her first trip to New York, which she said was "just a smidgen bigger" than her hometown, a city of 270,000.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Dynasty" star John Forsythe and another actor in the series were shaken up in a traffic accident that occurred as they returned from location work, a publicist says.

Forsythe, actor John James and five production crew members were in a small van that was struck from the rear by another van on Santa Monica Boulevard on Tuesday afternoon, said Rachel McAllister, a spokeswoman for Aaron-Spelling Productions.

Forsythe and James were treated at a medical clinic for minor injuries, she said.

Forsythe, 64, who portrays Blake Carrington in the popular show, slammed his head against the ceiling of the van and complained of a stiff neck, Ms. McAllister said. He later returned to work.

Tight security surrounds the actual puzzles to be used in the National Jigsaw Puzzle Championships that will take place in the Dairy Barn on Aug. 21 and 22 in Athens, Ohio. Only a handful of people at the Hallmark Cards Springbok jigsaw puzzle plant in Lawrence, Kan., are permitted to see the custom-made die cuts that will be used in the event. Guard Paul Caster sits with the 500-piece puzzles on the way to packaging, to make certain no one gets even a fleeting glance.

Massachusetts city's claim to fame is Lizzie Borden

FALL RIVER, Mass. (AP) — Since the hottest day of the summer of 1892, this mill city never has forgotten Lizzie Borden, immortalized in a ditty as the Victorian spinster who took an ax and gave her parents 40 whacks.

"When I was growing up, if we asked about it, our parents always gave the same answer: She was tried and acquitted and you don't talk about it," said Florence Brigham, curator of the Fall River Historical Society, which houses a small display of grisly artifacts from the slayings.

But city tourism director Kenneth Raymond is itching to capitalize on the mystery that began with the murders 90 years ago today.

"I see her as the best marketing tool we have," Raymond said. "We want to make sure everybody associates Lizzie Borden with Fall River."

He is conducting a survey to see how residents feel about shouting the name that locally has been whispered, or chanted by children skipping rope. Early returns favor shouting, he said.

But against the idea is John R. McGinn, who lives in the three-story gray clapboard house where Yankee businessman Andrew J. Borden and his second wife, the former Abby D. Gray, were bludgeoned to death on the hottest day of 1892.

The 80-year-old McGinn doesn't welcome suggestions that the city buy the Greek revival house for a museum. He has fun with the home he bought in 1948 with adjoining buildings to house his printing business, Leary Press.

He recalled how he spoofed one woman — drawn by the mystery played out in a dozen books, a movie and a ballet — by telling her he was the illegitimate son of Miss Borden.

"She was really shocked," he said.

Towers of aging textile mills and the spires of old churches dominate the city skyline.

"What I think has kept it alive is that little ditty," said Mrs. Brigham.

"Lizzie Borden took an ax,
"And gave her mother 40 whacks.
"When she saw what she had done,
"She gave her father 41."

"People are always telling me they used to skip rope to it," she said.

The Historical Society has the city's only public display on its most famous resident.

A sign warns against photographing the iron hatchet head with a broken handle, introduced at the trial but never proven to be the murder weapon, or the blood-spattered bedspread from the second-floor guest room where Mrs. Borden was found dead.

NAACP to take on studios

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The NAACP, frustrated by fruitless meetings with film executives over minority hiring practices, says it is about to select a major film studio as a possible boycott target and also is preparing to take on the television networks.

"During the past eight months we have been meeting and negotiating with the movie industry with varying results," Benjamin L. Hooks, executive director of the 500,000-member National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said Tuesday in a prepared statement at a Los Angeles Press Club news conference.

"We found that the problems are serious and deeply entrenched. Now that we have the structure set up for dealing with racial problems within the movie industry, and among TV networks, we will act," Hooks said.

The target studio will be selected within the next week and presented with a list of demands. If the studio fails to meet the demands within a specified time period, a boycott or other actions, such as informational picketing at theaters and production facilities, could begin, Hooks said.

He said NAACP chapters could be called on "to use whatever non-violent means" necessary to achieve the NAACP's goals of increased hiring of blacks.

"We don't have any idea at this point of engaging in civil disobedience," Hooks said, but he did not rule out the possibility.

He said any boycott probably would be limited to the film divisions of the studios, many of which are owned by large conglomerates. But he did not rule out boycotts of conglomerate-owned banks or utilities — two industries already targeted as in need of more minority hiring.

Hooks, an attorney and former member of the Federal Communications Commission, said he would be "loath" to call for a boycott on TV watching.

Instead, his group could call for FCC hearings on minority hiring practices in the television industry, he said.

"(There are) several things I would want to think about before I'd call a boycott," Hooks said. So far he has written letters and held informal discussions with network executives.

Beauty pageant nets CBS top ratings

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Miss Universe Pageant, which was broadcast live from Peru, helped CBS win the television ratings race for the week ending Aug. 1, according to figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co.

The Miss Universe win, plus four other shows in the Top 10, gave CBS another first place in the ratings for the week. CBS had a rating of 14.1. ABC had 12.4 and NBC was in distant third place with 10.3.

The networks say this means in an average prime-time minute 14.1 percent of the nation's homes with TV were tuned to CBS.

In second place was "Too Close for Comfort," ABC's popular new comedy, followed by "Three's Company," another ABC series that is a veteran of the ratings wars.

Here are the Top 10 shows: "Miss Universe Pageant," a rating of 24.7 or 19.7 million households, CBS; "Too Close for Comfort," 19.7 or 15.7 million, ABC; "Three's Company," 19.5 or 15.6 million, ABC; "60 Minutes 18.0 or 14.4 million, CBS.

Land Board approves swap

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The School Land Board Tuesday gave final approval for the General Land Office to swap several tracts of state-owned land for property in the Dove Mountain Ranch in Brewster County.

The board authorized the trade of 4,480 acres of public lands contained in several scattered sections of the Dove Mountain Ranch for a block of land located adjacent to other property the state already owns.

The land the state will receive presently is owned by Herman Mayhew and is located in the ranch.

Purpose of the trade is to consolidate the state's holdings into larger tracts.

The ranch is located southeast of Marathon.

Park closed for repairs

Dennis the Menace Park on South Garfield Street is closed to the public through Friday for repairs.

The park will re-open Saturday, according to the Parks and Recreation Department.

Congress says Reagan must fight for tax hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican and Democratic leaders are cautioning President Reagan that Congress will not raise taxes in this election year unless he leads the fight.

"It's got to be abundantly clear that it's his (Reagan's) bill," Rep. Richard Cheney, R-Wyo., chairman of the House Republican Policy Committee, said after he and his colleagues met Tuesday with Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan.

The theme was repeated as a House-Senate conference committee began writing a compromise version of the tax increase, which it hopes will lead to lower interest rates by reducing federal borrowing.

The panel took no votes Tuesday. But Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., head of the House delegation, told reporters the committee hoped to reach agreement today on some of the less-disputed tax provisions in the bill.

That could include provisions limiting the tax deduction for medical expenses and raising federal taxes on cigarettes and telephone service.

"It will be at least the end of next week before we finish the bill," Rostenkowski said.

As the conference began, Rostenkowski and Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., who heads the panel, found agreement on one point: Reagan must give his full support to the bill.

"He's committed to this tax bill," Dole assured the committee, "but it's going to take a great deal more effort on behalf of the president."

There is no chance of passing the bill without Reagan's complete support, Rostenkowski added. "The margin of victory will be determined by the amount of participation from the executive branch."

The president seemed ready to heed the advice as he scheduled an afternoon meeting with House and Senate conferees on the tax bill and a later meeting with the GOP congressional leadership to discuss taxes.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the meetings were being called to "demonstrate the president's interest in holding to the continuing resolution as these bills move forward."

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan told the enate Budget Committee today, "The president certainly intends to get out there and show his concern."

Democrats, who control the House, were so concerned about election-year backlash against a tax increase that they bucked tradition and didn't even try to write their own version. Thus, the conference is relying mainly on the Senate bill, which was written by Republicans.

GOP opposition to raising taxes is mounting daily; more than 80 House Republicans have signed a letter to Reagan protesting a tax increase, especially before Congress redeems its pledge to cut spending.

Administration advocates Medicare competition

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, which advocates competition in the health care field, is backing a congressional proposal that would allow Medicare recipients to leave the federal program and buy private insurance.

Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker, in a letter to House-Senate negotiators working on a tax bill, said Tuesday he endorses a voucher plan drafted by Reps. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., and Willis Gradison, R-Ohio.

The plan could affect most of the 29 million persons now receiving Medicare, the $44.8 billion national health program for the elderly.

Instead of continuing their enrollment in the federal program, Medicare beneficiaries could choose to accept vouchers worth the average amount spent on each recipient in their region.

The beneficiaries could use the vouchers to purchase private health insurance or to enroll in a health maintenance organization.

Schweiker wrote, "The administration supports the (Gephardt-Gradison) bill because it is consistent with administration proposals that are now under consideration to encourage efficiency in the delivery of health care and increase individual freedom of choice."

The administration has long advocated a "pro-competition" strategy in the health area, but has not formally introduced such a plan.

Under the House bill, Medicare beneficiaries would be eligible to get out of the program as long as they were not also participating in Medicaid or a federally funded kidney program. Medicaid provides insurance for the poor.

Health plans that could vouchers would have to provide the same services available under Medicare, as well as offer catastrophic health care coverage for costs exceeding about $3,000.

The program is not expected to save the government a lot of money. Instead, it is being advanced in the belief that private health providers can provide services more cheaply and efficiently than can the federal government.

Slight chance for area rain forecast

However, the chance of rain is less than 20 percent, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. Tonight's low should be in the low 70s with southerly winds at 5-10 mph.

The high Thursday is predicted to climb into the upper 90s with southerly winds 10-15 mph.

Wednesday's high of 96 was 10 degrees shy of the record high of 106 set in 1953. The overnight low of 69 was a little warmer than the record low of 61 set in 1973.

Attacks make diplomacy 'impossible'

By The Associated Press

Israeli tanks and armored troops attacked across Beirut's Green Line today, other units battled toward the PLO stronghold from the north and south and artillery and gunboats hammered Yasser Arafat's guerrilla enclaves from all sides in furious barrages that continued after 14 hours.

President Reagan's top advisers met in Washington to discuss the assault, which Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said "makes virtually impossible the conduct of diplomatic efforts. We have expressed our profound concern to the government of Israel..."

The Israeli military command said it had not launched "an all-out attempt at conquering the city" and the attacks were to show Israel "will not play the game by PLO-set rules."

IT APPEARED THE Israeli thrust was concentrated on the no man's land between the city's Moslem and Christian sectors, the seaport on the northern edge of the Palestine Liberation Organization redoubt in west Beirut, and PLO entrenchments southwest of the city.

The Israeli attack, which began about midnight (5 p.m. CDT) and shattered the ninth cease-fire in two months of fighting, was covered by intense shelling.

"Hundreds of shells burst within yards of each other and within seconds, the entire southern belt of west Beirut was shrouded in smoke and flames," Associated Press correspondent Terry Anderson said of one 10-second Israeli barrage.

Israeli guns were firing heavily into the crowded civilian district around Hamra Street, the commercial heart of the Moslem sector, for the first time since the siege began, correspondents reported.

PLO gunners and rocket teams fired back into Christian neighborhoods in east Beirut and into the hillside suburbs where Israeli forces are concentrated, witnesses said.

An Israeli officer, who was authorized to speak to reporters in east Beirut, said at midday that no air strikes had been called in for fear of hitting Israeli soldiers.

TWENTY ISRAELIS WERE wounded, two of them critically, in the operations, said the officer, who refused use of his name. The PLO gave no casualty figures.

Preceded by bulldozers to clear away PLO earthworks, 20 to 25 Israeli tanks and armored personnel carriers punched into west Beirut at the Museum crossing, midway along the 3-mile north-south Green Line, and witnesses reported battles between Israeli and Palestinian units around the race course area a half-mile past the Museum.

A PLO communique said the Israelis tried to capture the race course, but were driven back by the "stiff resistance" of the Palestinians. The track is on the Corniche Mazraa, an east-west boulevard that separates the Palestinian refugee camps on the south from west Beirut's residential and commercial districts to the north.

The Israeli command said the force at the Museum crossing took control of a tall building from which guerrilla snipers fired at Israeli troops in east Beirut. The command announced that at about 9 a.m. (2 a.m. CDT), guerrillas blew up one of their ammunition dumps under a building in the area, apparently to keep it from the Israelis.

Israeli tanks and armored personnel carriers also moved into the port at the northern end of the Green Line, on the edge of the PLO redoubt. Correspondents there said 40 Israeli tanks and personnel carriers later moved toward Jounieh, a Christian-held port about 12 miles north of Beirut.

The Israeli military command said its forces advanced into the Ouzai area, 3 miles south of the city on the road to the airport, and state and privately owned radio stations reported another push near the golf course adjacent to the airport.

THE COMMAND SAID the force at Ouzai wiped out two PLO positions in the Bourj el-Barajneh refugee camp to the west, from which the guerrillas had been firing on Israeli troops.

The Voice of Lebanon, the Lebanese Christian radio, said the Palestinian barrages started huge fires in the hillside east Beirut suburbs of Baabda, where U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon's residence and the Presidential Palace are located, and Yarze, where many Israeli troops are concentrated.

But Associated Press correspondent Tom Baldwin visited Baabda, found evidence of a few hits but no fires, and was told at the U.S. Embassy compound: "Everyone is fine here. There are no problems."

One shell slammed into the Commodore Hotel, headquarters of about 200 foreign journalists covering the war in west Beirut, but no injuries were reported.

Man serving county sentence may be sent to Massachusetts

A man serving a five-year sentence on a Midland County theft conviction earlier this year is expected to be sent to Springfield, Mass., Aug. 18 to stand trial on more than 50 rape charges involving two daughters of the woman he was living with in 1978, according to the Springfield (Mass.) Union newspaper.

Richard "Doc" Gamache, 26, formerly of Huntington, Mass., was charged with raping the girls during a three-month period from September to December 1978. He dropped from sight shortly afterward, but was arrested on petty larceny charges in Arizona last February.

His Arizona arrest led to his extradition to Texas on a Jan. 27, 1982, Midland County grand jury indictment. He was sentenced July 23 to five years on a felony theft charge.

The mother of the girls, 41-year-old Judith C. Clemons, is also charged in the rape case. She is alleged to have forced her daughters to have sexual relations with Gamache. A Massachusetts state trooper who attempted to serve an arrest warrant on Gamache in 1978 told a judge in the case that the house the couple shared was filled with litter, garbage and dog excrement.

A January 1981 morals conviction against the mother in connection with the rapes was overturned in appeals court on grounds the trial judge erred in not allowing a family counselor to testify on behalf of the woman.

She had begun serving a 15-year sentence on the morals conviction when the verdict was overturned. It has not been determined if she will be tried on the rape charges at the same time as Gamache, authorities said.

Man in critical condition

A rural Midland man was in critical condition at Midland Memorial Hospital today after a Tuesday night motorcycle accident.

Rudolfo Guerrero, about 32, of Route 7, Midland, suffered head injuries in the crash. Police said they investigated the accident but did not make a report because it occurred on private property. No further details were available.

Black community wins fight against stockade plan

On Tuesday afternoon after he learned of the court's unanimous decision to rescind its previous action, Welch said he was "proud" of the governing body's decision and was "proud that the eastside of Midland was spared" the compound. Critics had contended the stockade would demoralize the community, depress land values, discourage commercial development and hinder home improvement efforts.

"The court responded to the people's feelings," observed Welch, who viewed the stockade's defeat as a victory, "and I'm proud of my fellow commissioners."

IN TUESDAY morning's special session to deal with the stockade issue, Commissioner Durward Wright told the predominantly black people in the courtroom that the court was unaware of the planned developments in the southeast side of town and was unaware that the black community felt it was being slighted by the court's previous decision to build the stockade west of Fairgrounds Road and south of the Mo-Pac tracks and U.S. Highway 80.

"We had no intent of jeopardizing the neighborhood or impairing the progressive upward economics of the neighborhood," Wright said. Later, the commissioner said the stockade site "had absolutely nothing to do with one part of town over another."

Dr. Coleman, who was numbered among those protesting the stockade's eastside site, did not address the court. Others had projected her sympathies, she said. Later, though, she said that the blight of a stockade there would tend to demoralize the community, undo progress in home improvements, such as those financed by federal community development funds, and would inhibit home improvement loans in the neighborhood.

"The whole complexion of the community is going to change," she reasoned, as improvements are being made in houses and businesses. "When you have improvements, you're improving the lives of people.

"Suddenly, you're going to put in a stockade," Dr. Coleman said, and that blunt realization awakened the community to action to fight the commissioners' powers.

ANOTHER CRITIC of the court's action, Michael Williams, said the stockade would be "damaging to commercial businesses," would be detrimental to land values and "could jeopardize the future prospects of that particular area."

Williams, a lawyer, was representing developers Fred Estep and Ralph Viney, who envison turning 118.9 acres at Fairgrounds and the tracks into commercial and industrial enterprises worth millions of dollars to the community and thereby serving as a revenue-generating source for the taxing bodies, such as city and county governments.

A minister, the Rev. C.S. Johnson, protested the stockade. The compound's effect would "lower value of property," would jeopardize lives and property and would bite into the "spiritual environment.

Calvin Lee protested the stockade's eastside site. "Why do you want to do that?" he asked.

Wright explained that the court simply had been exploring the best site locations. Whether it was on the eastside or westside "had nothing to do with it."

"We're trying simply to do what's best for the people," Wright said. "I agree with you. It's not a good idea, but it's the best idea up 'til now."

"ALL WE'RE asking," said Midland educator James Bradford, "is for fairness and justice, and we know you'll do that." Not long afterward, the court rescinded its previous action on building the stockade on the city's eastside.

Another minister, the Rev. W. O. Johnson, pleaded with the court to "keep it (Midland's eastside) as peaceful an possible."

A widow, Biddie Linthecome, who said she has been living "in nothing but slums" in her 36 years in Midland, said the stockade further would harm her neighborhood.

Freddie Nelms offered the court a protest petition which, he said, carried the signatures of 247 citizens. "We fear for the safety of our children," he said.

After the court, for now at least, set aside talk of another stockade venture, Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis told the protest gathering that "you might as well get ready for a jail bond issue, because you're going to get it."

Burglary suspect charged with arson

ODESSA — An Odessa man arrested July 31 in connection with one of several burglaries at a southside junior high school is now also charged with arson in the case.

Toney James Rocshell, 21, was arrested for the July 22 burglary and fire at Blackshear Junior High. Bond was set at $7,500. A continuing investigation by police and fire officials resulted in arson charges being filed against him Tuesday.

Fire damage was estimated at $60,000, and it is believed the fire was set to destroy burglary evidence, according to police, who said the school was the target of several burglaries from July 21 through July 27.

Four adults and two juveniles have been arrested in the case. Asked if the burglaries and fire were related, a police spokesman said this morning: "Yes and no." He did not elaborate. No official estimate of the burglary losses has been made.

Angelo plans West Texas meetings

Ernest Angelo Jr., Republican candidate for the 25th senatorial district seat, will meet with local citizens in El Paso, Culberson, Presidio, Brewster and Terrell counties during a three-day campaign swing starting today.

Angelo will begin his campaign swing in El Paso County, where he will spend most of today in Horizon City attending several meetings with local citizens. He was to speak at a noon luncheon, open to the public, at the Horizon Country Club.

On Thursday, the Midland-based petroleum engineer will be campaigning in Van Horn, Marfa, Shafter, Presidio and Alpine.

On Friday, Angelo will be honored with a coffee at 10 a.m. in Alpine at the home of Margie Graham.

Marathon and Sanderson will be two more campaign stops for Angelo before returning to his home in Midland late Friday.

Accident victim in serious condition

A Midland man injured in a one-vehicle traffic accident Tuesday night was listed in serious condition this morning at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Rogelio Gonzalez, 37, no street address available, was northbound on County Road 1275 about 10:45 p.m. when he lost control of his 1980 Ford pickup truck and struck a cement truck parked on the side of the highway, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Odessan reports early-morning rape

The woman, who lives in northwest Odessa, told officers she was threatened by a knife-wielding man who entered her residence through an unlocked window about 3:25 a.m. The man then raped her, forced her into a closet, cut the phone cord and stole a stereo player.

He was described as white, about 25 years old, 6 feet tall, and wearing a T-shirt and blue jeans.

Police told of missing rent money

In theft complaints to police during the past 24 hours, an employee of the Barragan Property Management Co., 702 N. Midkiff Road, told officers $2,023 in rent collections was missing from the office. There was no sign of forced entry.

And Douglas H. Christensen said a gold Rolex watch was taken from a stool at Midland Center Saturday night. The value of the watch was placed at $939.

MISD consistently denies child-care transfer requests

not attend the meeting, the administration's denial was upheld.

TRUSTEES ALSO heard a report on the Hoffman program, a remedial reading program provided at the fourth and fifth grade levels by the enrichment teacher and at the sixth grade level by the Title I instructor.

Pre- and post-testing of the California Achievement Test (CAT), used to evaluate the program, indicated that it had successful results.

"There was a month of growth matched or exceeded at all levels," Dr. Duane H. Moore, assistant superintendent of instruction, reported.

According to the evaluation, the percentage of students in the fourth grade that moved from below the 25th percentile in reading achievement was significant, due to participation in the program. Of the students participating, 93 percent were below the 25th percentile on the September pre-test, while only 84 percent scored below on the March post-test.

SIXTH GRADE results showed 68 percent scoring below on the pre-test and 41 percent on the post-test.

Trustees approved a recommendaton to continue the program at the fourth, fifth and sixth grade levels and to extend it to second and third grades, based on the needs of the individual students.

While trustee Ann Page questioned the potential of "slippage" during the summer months of non-participation in the program, Baressi said that he hopes to strengthen such programs as Partners-in-Reading to avoid that possibility.

"We're going to look very carefully at Partner-in-Reading and things we can provide the parents with to minimize that slippage," he said. "We see a change more to the approach where parents can provide valuable education."

While the Computer Assisted Instruction Program, initiated in January 1981, was deemed as "getting acceptable results," Baressi expressed reservations about the costs, the majority of which have been taken care of.

"We've already purchased most of the equipment," Baressi said, "but as it becomes obsolete, we'll have to decide whether to update or replace it."

CAT SCORES showed a month or more of improvement in math and reading for seventh and eighth grade students using the computers, according to Moore.

"In fact, in some cases it doubled that," he added.

Although Baressi said there was "a lot of healthy use of the equipment at all three junior highs," he expressed doubts about it being used as the total reading program.

"I hope we didn't (use it as the total reading program) this year, but I think we did last year," he said. It should be used as a supplement to the reading instruction, he explained.

Mexican-American and Oriental students seemed to benefit from the audio-visual instruction, he indicated, although he added there was no documented evidence to support that assumption.

"Solid teachers can get the same results without all of the hardware," Baressi said in expressing his reservations.

TRUSTEES ALSO approved a recommendation made by Dr. James H. Mailey, consultant for school planning and construction, to allow West Texas Consultants, Inc., to install water and sanitary sewer lines across the southeast corner of the Travis Elementary School playground due to an expansion of an existing mobile home park.

According to John W. Aldridge, representative of the firm, the trenches would be about three to four feet deep and 18 inches to two feet wide. Total time of the project would be about six months, he said.

Trustees approved the utility easement with the understanding that the trenches would be filled 30 days from the start of construction and that a fence would be placed around them.

Also approved was a request by Mailey authorizing Gulf Pipeline Co. to lower a pipeline crossing at Whitman Drive to allow the water and sewer lines at the Bluebird elementary school site to be installed. The cost was estimated to be $31,259, Mailey said, which would come from construction funds out of bond money.

Forty-eight appointments for elementary and secondary teaching positions were approved by trustees. According to Garland Chapman, assistant superintendent of administration, two-thirds of the appointments are experienced teachers. Only 15 teachers have no experience, but Chapman said he has "been told they were among the top graduates of their graduating classes."

Only four or five vacancies remain in the school system, he added.

The resignation of Manuel Carrasco, director of elementary education, was accepted with "deep regret," according to Baressi. Carrasco, who has served in MISD for 18 years, resigned to enter private business. He served as principal of De Zavala Elementary School and as administrative assistant to superintendent Mailey before becoming director of elementary education.

Trustees also approved the appointment of Leon Hartter to textbook custodian. Hartter will be "technically responsible for millions of dollars of textbooks," Baressi explained.

Board members met in an executive session to discuss matters concerning real estate and personnel. No action was taken.

A crew member of the ship Yeocomico II gives water to one of the Haitian stowaways found on the ship shortly after it docked in Florida. The Yeocomico's captain insists that Immigration and Naturalization Service officials told him to tie the four men, ranging in age from 20 to 40, to the railings of the ship. But a Miami Border Patrol officer says that the captain was simply told to "detain" the men, two of whom had to be hospitalized for dehydration and exhaustion.

No real surprises in alien survey

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A consultant called it a milestone, but an ambitious survey of illegal aliens in Texas, commissioned by the Governor's Task Force on Immigration, has turned up no real surprises.

Frank Newport of V. Lance Tarrance & Associates in Houston, who conducted the survey, told the task force Tuesday that 1,526 illegal aliens, the great majority having just been picked up by immigration authorities, were questioned.

The interviews showed that most illegal aliens want to work in this country legally but not become citizens, and most came here originally to make more money, Newport said.

Newport said the study represents "the largest number of undocumented workers ever interviewed in a face-to-face setting." But he added that the survey relied on a random sample and on truthful answers by sometimes frightened people just apprehended by Immigration and Naturalization Service agents.

The ages of those surveyed ranged from 12 to 69 with a median age of 23, Newport said.

Task force members planned to pass along the information to Gov. Bill Clements without adding any policy recommendations.

Besides the survey "profile" of the illegal aliens, Clements will get a head count released in April that said between 600,000 and 900,000 people are in Texas illegally.

Many of the questioners were former census takers, Newport said, and rode INS buses and interviewed detainees as they were picked up.

A smaller sample was derived through visits to job sites around the state where random selection of Spanish-surnamed employees supplied the sample, so some legal aliens and permanent residents were included.

Newport said the study broke down the sample into categories based on frequency of border crossings and length of time spent in the United States.

Almost half of the illegal aliens were classified as "migrants," who make frequent trips back to Mexico. A small percentage were classified as "commuters," who cross the border almost daily. Most of those were in the El Paso area and worked as domestics, Newport said.

All but 8 percent of those questioned were male, and 37 percent of them were married. Two-thirds of the married illegal aliens had left spouses in Mexico.

The survey showed that even among illegal aliens who have lived in Texas for five years or more, less than half would like to become U.S. citizens. Overall, only 28 percent of the undocumented aliens wanted citizenship.

Newport said 60 percent favored a temporary work permit that would let them go back and forth across the border legally.

More than half of those interviewed said they came into the United States to make more money. The average salary earned by undocumented workers was $4.23 an hour, almost a dollar more than minimum wage in this country.

Only 1 percent said they received welfare assistance and 6 percent said they got food stamps. Most of the illegal aliens said they send money home to Mexico each month, 6 percent sending $600 or more monthly.

Newport said the study did not seek out migrant agricultural workers, who could have been expected to make up a large portion of an accurate sample.

Of those questioned, most said they had worked in agriculture in Mexico, Newport said, but the most highly represented current profession was construction, followed closely by groundskeeping or gardening.

Officials deny ordering stowaways tied

DANIA, Fla. (AP) — Federal immigration authorities have denied a merchant sea captain's claim that they told him to tie up four Haitian stowaways found aboard his vessel.

The four Haitians had been lashed to deck railings of the Yeocomico II after being found aboard the ship Monday. They were sent back to the Bahamas with the vessel Tuesday afternoon, officials said.

Meanwhile, U.S. District Judge Eugene P. Spellman of Miami asked lawyers for the federal government, Haitians and their sponsors to streamline the release of 1,800 Haitian aliens held in U.S. detention camps pending hearings.

Spellman, concerned about reports that some of the freed Haitians already had applied for welfare benefits, said the refugees must comply with his orders or they would be sent back to the camps.

The master of the Yeocomico II, Ceilay Higgs, said he tied the Haitians to the ship's railings on orders from the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service. Two of the Haitians later had to be hospitalized for dehydration and exhaustion.

But Truman Carr, deputy chief of the U.S. Border Patrol's Miami district, said Tuesday the captain was told only to "detain" the stowaways, not to tie them.

"It's up to the captain how he detains them," said Carr. "We don't tell him what to do. We just tell him if he loses one of them he's going to be fined $1,000."

The four men identified themselves as Anslo Desinor, 20; Emanuel Destinor, 40; Mercidie Phillipe, 22; and Lucien Mare Noel, 25.

They were found in an empty interior tank shortly after the ship docked here, officials said. Two were taken to the hospital, but were returned to the ship Monday night. All four were then held in a padlocked, guarded cabin until the vessel's departure from Port Laudania.

Twelve Haitians were released Tuesday from Miami's Krome detention camp, bringing to 105 the number of Haitians released since July 23 under Spellman's order to free them.

INS spokeswoman Beverly McFarland said 17 more releases were scheduled from Krome today, including 14 for humanitarian reasons.

Of those freed so far, 103 were in Miami, and two were in a facility in Lexington, Ky. Nine others were released for humanitarian reasons. It will take 90-120 days to release the rest, detained in New York, Texas, West Virginia, Florida and Louisiana, INS officials said.

At a hearing Tuesday, Spellman said he was concerned about reports that at least 20 Haitians released in the past 10 days promptly applied for welfare in Miami, and others hadn't reported their whereabouts weekly to the Dade County Bar Association. The ones who applied for welfare benefits were referred back to their sponsors.

Trapeze artist hurt following collision

DALLAS (AP) — A circus trapeze artist attempting a 3½ somersault fell head first into a net after he apparently lost his grip on the bar and collided with his father, who was supposed to catch him, witnesses said.

Moments later, the circus brought clowns out "to distract people" because "the show must go on," a circus official said.

Gino Farfan, an 18-year-old member of the "Flying Farfans," was taken by ambulance Tuesday night to Baylor University Medical Center. His exact injuries were not disclosed.

A stunned crowd of about 15,000 people watched Farfan fall about an hour into the three-hour performance by the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus at Reunion Arena.

"He fell head first into the net," said Tim Holst, performance director for the circus. "There was blood. There were some lacerations on the back of his neck."

PARIS (AP) — Bernard Lathiere, president of the European aircraft consortium Airbus Industrie, is getting used to being called a cheat. In fact, he says, he takes a certain pleasure in knowing that his competitors are reduced to name-calling.

When he hears suggestions that Airbus, which he has headed for the past seven years, only manages to sell its wide-bodied commercial jets thanks to its government backing and by offering subsidized loans, his immediate reaction is to keep cool, Lathiere said in an interview.

"We don't react directly to the stories, since there is no truth to them," he said.

AIRBUS' MAIN competitor, giant Boeing Co. of Seattle, charged recently that Airbus had received indirect subsidies worth $5 billion from its participating governments — France, West Germany, Britian and Spain.

Boeing also called on the Reagan administration for help in countering what it considers unfair competition.

Lathiere's response is that cash put up by Airbus' partners for research and development of the wide-bodied A300 and the smaller A310, which it plans to put into service later this year, is not a subsidy.

"It's a loan which we have to repay to our governments for every Airbus we sell," the stocky former civil servant said. "It works out to a bit more than $2 million for every aircraft."

After 360 of the planes have been sold — 180 have been delivered up to now — Airbus will have repaid its debts, said Lathiere as he lit a Havana cigar.

Furthermore, Airbus will continue making payments beyond aircraft number 360, he said, adding with a laugh: "It will be the first time that taxpayers get more than their money back, not like the Concorde."

THE SUPERSONIC Concorde is built by a British-French consortium and is only flown by British and French national airlines. Introduced just as fuel prices began surging in the 1970s, it has failed to attract other buyers because of its high fuel use.

Six years ago Airbus' A300 had only 3 percent of the world market while Boeing and Lockheed Corp. had about one-third shares each and McDonnell Douglas Corp. was slightly behind the two leaders.

But Airbus swept past McDonnell Douglas and Lockheed, which has said it is leaving the commercial airplane business, and now has about 27 percent of the market. Boeing's share, meanwhile, has slipped to about 55 percent from 60 percent.

Airbus expects its share of the world market for wide-bodied, twin-aisle aircraft to rise to at least 65 percent this year from 53 percent in 1981 and about one-third in 1980, Lathiere said.

Boeing is competing with two new jets — the 767, which goes into service with United Airlines next month, and the 757, which begins commercial flights later this year. Boeing also makes the successful 747 jumbo jet.

Boeing has a healthy backlog for its new aircraft, with 173 orders for 767s in mid-June and 123 orders for the 757s.

BUT WHILE Airbus so far has made little gain among U.S. airlines, with most of its planes being sold in Europe, Boeing is concerned because of reduced demand for new planes from the financially ailing U.S. airline industry.

Lathiere, 53, expressed amazement at what he characterizes as some of the "fairytales" dreamed up by the consortium's jealous competitors.

"We were accused of offering cheap export credits to Saudia (Saudi Arabian Airlines), when in fact they paid cash," he said. "I don't see how we could give privileged terms on a cash deal. That's the kind of thing that people say.

"Six years ago, our competitor was going around telling everyone we didn't know how to design, produce or sell aircraft," he continued. "Now they're saying we can only sell our planes with gimmicks and predatory financing."

As far as competitive pricing goes, Lathiere said the A310 is believed to be about $1.5 million to $2 million more expensive than Boeing's 767, its direct competitor.

But Airbus makes up the ground in its strong presence in Europe and Southeast Asia, he said, claiming Boeing has been practically shut out of Europe and has lost of a lot of ground in the Middle East and Asia.

Recommendation expected soon

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A hearing examiner's recommendation is expected within four weeks in Texas-New Mexico Power Co.'s appeal to the Public Utility Commission of municipal rate ordinances passed by several cities.

Texas-New Mexico is seeking PUC approval to charge rates previously approved for its rural customers in the cities of Blum, Glen Rose, Pecos, Barstow, Covington, League City, Fort Stockton, Olney and Dickinson.

The company presently is charging those rates on an interim basis.

In a brief hearing July 28, the hearings examiner adopted the record of the rural rate case as the record in the appeal.

Correlating job, sleep schedules may improve work quality

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

The health and productivity of the 25 million Americans whose work hours change regularly could be improved significantly if employers scheduled shift changes to conform with the body's natural — and adjustable — sleep cycles, a team of scientists from Harvard and Stanford Universities reported Friday.

Human bodies operate on a 25-hour cycle, desiring sleep and waking up in a natural rhythm that shift work often disrupts, numerous studies have shown.

Disrupting this rhythm can have serious long-term health consequences. Fruit flies and hampsters forced to live disrupted sleep-wake cycles have their life expectancies cut as much as 20 percent, other studies have shown.

By understanding the body's sleep-wake cycles, shift changes can be planned to minimize the disruptive effect, the scientists reported in Science magazine after studying workers at a Utah chemical factory. Airline pilots, nurses, police officers, steelworkers and millions of others all must cope with changing work schedules.

Workers adjust best to shift changes that move them to later starting times because this allows them to take advantage of the fact that the body's sleep-wake cycle has one more hour than the day does, Dr. Charles Czeisler, the study's principal author, said.

By adding this extra hour to the two or three hours the body can naturally adjust to, he said, most workers can accommodate themselves within four days to a new shift that begins eight hours later than their old shift.

But if workers must switch to an earlier starting time, he said, the extra hour in the body's natural cycle is effectively deducted from the body's ability to adjust. That means the body is working against the clock to adjust and it could take 16 days to adjust to a new shift that begins eight hours earlier than the old one.

"Our findings have major implications for both industry and labor," Czeisler said. He said the study shows employee turnover, absenteeism, illness, job safety and productivity can all be significantly affected by whether shift changes conform to the body's circadian (daily) sleep-wake cycles.

The study began in 1981 after workers at the Great Salt Lake Chemicals and Minerals Corp. plant in Ogden, Utah, complained to management about insomnia, fatigue, digestive disorders and falling asleep on the job. The company turned to the Center for Design of Industrial Schedules in Boston for help.

The workers had been changing shifts every week, often to ones that began earlier instead of later.

Czeisler, Dr. Richard Coleman of Stanford's Sleep Disorder Clinic and Dr. Richard Moore-Ede of Harvard's physiology department put 52 of the plant's 85 shift workers on a schedule in which they moved to a later shift once every three weeks. They kept 33 other workers on the old schedule.

Another 52 workers did not change shifts.

Coleman said 81 percent of the 52 workers on the new schedule found they could adjust their sleep patterns within four days.

Coleman said workers forced to change shifts at frequent intervals ar often heavy users of sleeping pills, marijuana and alcohol as sleep aids, but dependence on such drugs can be expected to decline if shift changes conform to the body's natural rhythms.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, August 5, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Celebrities sharing your birthday include actor/director John Huston, astronaut Neil Armstrong and LBJ press secretary-turned author/professor George Reedy. Certain delightful changes occur in your affairs in the coming months. Count on receiving money from a variety of sources. Love and marriage are idyllic for those who choose carefully. Take the initiative in strengthening family relationships. Travel not only plays a role in romance but elicits an employment offer that you may not be able to refuse. A long-sought business goal moves closer to becoming reality. You prove that dreams can come true! Share the spotlight with loved ones.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Give a final push to make a dream come true. Just because others have given up is no reason for you to follow suit! Loved ones give you greater freedom. Money pressures diminish.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Develop greater willpower and you will once again emerge on top. Personal appearance counts big. Ignore gossip and follow your intuition in business matters.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Homemakers find ways to do their chores and have a good time too. TV soap operas are more time-consuming than many viewers realize.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You now have a desire to do things you have rejected in the past. The money you spend today will bring you multiple rewards later on.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Someone could try to give you a hard time today. Shore up your defenses and disregard meaningless ultimatums. Put love at the top of your priority list.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You feel unprepared for an opportunity that presents itself now. Seize it anyway! You are more than up to the challenge. Pool your resources with loved one for a wonderful vacation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You need to take the initiative now. Participate more in the decision-making at place of employment. This is not a good time to make or ask for a loan.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Revenge is sweet, but if you carry it too far, you could have the tables turned on you. Unconventional hours are difficult for your loved ones, but reduce your commuting time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Counteract a coworker's disruptive ways by being positive in your response. Efficient money management and intelligent budget decisions enhance your credibility.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Romance is glamorous and exciting. Follow your instincts in business. It is hard work and long hours that count most with higher-up. Reduce domestic confusion.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may feel uncomfortable in the spotlight, but that is where you need to be to get ahead. Encourage other creative people to join you on a special project.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Pay closer attention to your money and how it is being spent by others. A surprising revelation could lead you to make swift changes.

Opening lead: Three of ♡.

To say that every finesse has a 50 percent chance of success is not the same as saying all finesses are equal. Consider this hand.

The auction was routine. South had nearly enough to open one no trump, so his decision to rebid two no trump meets with this department's approval. North's raise to game was one of those easy decisions we all love to make.

West led a heart and declarer won the king. Only someone who looks no further than his own hand and dummy would now try to set up the diamond suit. Declarer must give up the lead twice to accomplish that, and by then the defenders will have collected at least three heart tricks and two diamonds.

With six tricks in high cards, declarer has to develop the club suit to produce the three extra tricks he needs. The percentage play is to take two finesses. If clubs are 3-2 and West has at least one of the honors, that will guarantee four tricks in the suit — and it makes no difference whether declarer first finesses the queen or the ten.

But what if the suit splits 4-1, as will happen almost 30 percent of the time? If East has four cards in the suit with both honors, nothing matters. Similarly, if West has both honors fourth, declarer can always maneuver to score four club tricks. The only problem occurs when East has a singleton honor.

If East's singleton is the king, there is nothing declarer can do about it — except double dummy. Whether he finesses the ten or the queen on the first round, the defenders will always have two stoppers in the suit because of the spot cards. But what if East's singleton is the jack?

If declarer finesses the ten, East wins and West still has a second stopper in the suit. But if declarer finesses the queen, he catches the singleton jack. Now he can return to hand to finesse the ten, and will collect four club tricks together with his contract.

GEORGE B. IRISH, PRESIDENT AND PUBLISHER
JIM SERVATIUS, EDITOR

What's going wrong?

It certainly makes strange bedfellows, this political climate in which we're living. Whew!

Since the heralded 1979 election of Ronald Reagan to the nation's highest office we've seen Democrats who changed their coats and overnight, they would have you believe, became Republicans. We've seen an ironic reversal of roles — politically — for the nation's leaders, with Democrats opposing tax increases and Republicans voting over-whelmingly in favor of them.

And, somewhat surprisingly, we've seen a president commonly recognized for his fiscally conservative leanings end up with a 1983 federal budget that calls for a $100 billion deficit.

But it was the U.S. Senate's vote recently for a $99 billion tax increase over the next three years that really shook our confidence in Reaganomics. At this point we think it's time to ask? "Where is the American economy heading, Mr. Reagan? Can we save it? What can we do to convince you that we are willing to suffer to bring the economy back under control?"

When Reagan was ushered into office his mandate from the American electorate was to bring the economy back under control and thus to bring inflation under control, interest rates down and to redesign federal spending to bring it back into line. Why are we wandering so far from this course?

Americans probably haven't completely given up on Mr. Reagan's plan for economic recovery yet, but in a fiscally conservative city like Midland you can bet more than one Permian Basin businessman is beginning to have second thoughts about where we're going when we see the largest budget in American history approved, containing the largest federal deficit and then come along and see the Senate approve the largest tax increase in history, a move that will not help but definitely will hurt the economic recovery.

No, we haven't given up on the economic recovery program, but our confidence is being shaken pretty bad. We want to let the U.S. House know that we don't go along with tax increases, particularly in an economic situation such as the one we're now in. We hope you'll let them know, too.

No register, no loan

It has long been apparent that the nation's draft registration law is unenforceable.

Despite the fact that failure to register is a federal crime punishable by a five-year federal prison sentence and a $10,000 fine, there are an estimated 700,000 non-registrants — 20 times the population of the federal prisons. To date, only four of them have been indicted. The problem has been that the government presently has no way of identifying those who haven't registered. The only ones who have been arrested have been those who have publicly flaunted their non-registrant status.

So we're glad that the Selective Service will soon begin to compare its files with Social Security files to identify young men who have failed to register for the draft. This measure, coupled with the House of Representatives' decision to allow the government to withold federal education funds from non-registrants, will doubtless reduce the total. The Senate ought to strengthen this to allow all federal aid, including welfare, food stamps and Social Security benefits, to be witheld.

With these policies in effect, young men who have avoided registering because they thought they'd never be caught will high-tail it down to the post office once they realize that their student loans could be cut off.

But a problem will remain. Tens, perhaps hundreds of thousands of young men will continue to avoid registering, daring the government to throw them into prison. And it will be logistically impossible for the government to prosecute and imprison even this reduced total of young men.

We continue to support the idea of draft registration. And we think it is a good idea for the government to withhold federal aid to crack down on those who fail to do their legal duty and register for the draft.

But, as we have said before, the penalty for failing to register is overly harsh compared with those for similar crimes like failing to file income tax. It puts the government in the position of making a threat it can't carry out.

A law that imposed an automatic $10 fine for every day a young man failed to register would be more reasonable and enforceable than the one we have now. Threatening to throw 18-year-olds in federal prison for not signing up at the post office simply makes martyrs of those who choose to break the law.

Another View:

House blinders

The U.S. House of Representatives unfortunately wore blinders when it voted recently to scrap President Reagan's plan to resume American production of chemical weapons after a 13-year lull.

Before the House was a Reagan administration request for $54 million to start production of a new "binary" type of nerve gas weapon, ending a moratorium imposed by former President Nixon in 1969.

(Binary, according to military officials, means weapons that wouldn't become lethal until two separately harmless chemical concoctions were combined — safer in storage and transport than the old generation of chemical weapons.)

The House rejected the president's plan by a wide margin, despite administration arguments that the new weapons are needed to offset the Soviet Union's chemical warfare program and despite the deteriorating, unsafe, and unusable weapons in the aging U.S. stockpile.

Opponents of the plan argued that the United States now has a diplomatic and propaganda advantage in the world by refusing to make or use the weapons. "If we start making nerve gas," said one representative, "we're going to lose that advantage."

The Senate, which approved the nerve gas authorization in May, has heard testimony that the Soviet Union has built a sizeable lead over the United States in chemical warfare capabilities — advantages in ground-based chemical delivery systems and personnel assigned to them as well as in weapons and production facilities.

There is also strong evidence that the Soviet Union has used nerve gas against guerrillas in its war in Afghanistan and that Soviet-supplied gas has been used by Communist forces in Southeast Asia in the "yellow rain" of death against tribesmen in Laos and Cambodia.

To tie this country's hands in chemical warfare could conceivably expose American troops or those of our allies to nerve gas attacks in future conflicts by eliminating a credible deterrent. And it will most certainly give the Soviets even less reason to curb their nerve gas activities or to come to any agreement limiting chemical weapons at the bargaining table, defeating whatever noble purposes the House may have intended.

ART BUCHWALD

Size problem cutting down on 'coverage!'

As everyone is aware many of the clothes that you find in stores are now made in Taiwan, Hong Kong or South Korea. While they are not lacking in quality, there are problems with sizes.

Art Buchwald

For example, I bought a pair of shorts the other day marked LARGE. When I attempted to put them on, I discovered they did not fit. My first fear was that through bracket creep I had become X-LARGE. But before I panicked, I asked my son, who is a MEDIUM, to try them on. They fitted him perfectly. It was obvious the people in Hong Kong had made a mistake. Fortunately, there was a slip included with the shorts which said, 'ANYTHING WRONG WITH GARMENT PLEASE REFER TO INSPECTOR 7.'

I immediately telephoned information, located the factory in Hong Kong and called. Inspector 7 was not there but I got someone in charge who spoke English. I explained the problem of the sizes.

He said Inspector 7 was a very reliable man and had worked in the factory for 15 years. This was the first time they had had a complaint about him. He even admitted it was the first time they had had a telephone call from the U.S. about any of their inspectors.

I told him I didn't want to make trouble for Inspector 7, but I was just curious about how they inspected their shorts that were exported to the United States. I mentioned that many of my friends were also having difficulty with the sizes of Hong Kong shorts.

"What do you want to know about Inspector 7?" he asked.

"Well, for one thing — how tall is he?"

"I believe he is 4 feet 11 inches," the man said.

"And how much does he weigh?" I wanted to know.

"We never weigh our inspectors," the man said. "But I would guess 95 pounds."

"Then that could be your trouble. Are most of your inspectors about that height and weight?"

"Yes, but I don't see what this has to do with your shorts."

"It's quite clear. To them a MEDIUM looks like a LARGE size, a LARGE looks like an X-LARGE and EXTRA-LARGE is too much for them. They are thinking in terms of themselves when they're inspecting your shorts. Do they ever try them on?"

"Once in a while."

"There you are. Inspector 7 puts on the shorts, and on the basis of his height and weight is down-sizing all your garments. He has probably never seen a truly LARGE or an EXTRA LARGE waist in his life."

"There was a pause on the other end of the line followed by some fast chatter in Chinese. Finally the man came back on the phone and said, "We will be happy to make a pair of shorts to your size if you will give us your measurements."

"That's very kind of you," I told him. "But I'm calling not only for myself, but for all the large-sized men in America."

"Would you like us to fire Inspector 7?"

"Of course not. Inspector 7 is probably a very fine man. But I don't believe you should permit him to try on shorts for America."

"All of our employees are small," the man said.

"Then in order to maintain your credibility in the United States I suggest that you invite some portly American tourists to come into the factory and show your inspectors what is a LARGE size in shorts and what is X-LARGE."

"But if we do that, Inspector 7 will lose face."

"He will either have to lose face or put on weight. If you people in Hong Kong want to flood our stores with clothes, you're going to have to start thinking BIG."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Feds cover for congressmen in coke ring

WASHINGTON — Federal authorities are proving reluctant to raise the blinds on congressmen who may have been snorting cocaine while they were piously passing laws governing drug use by everyone else.

Jack Anderson

As has been widely reported, the coke scandal began 16 months ago when I first learned that a dope ring was apparently operating full throttle on Capitol Hill.

Rep. Robert K. Dornan, R-Calif., a member of the House Narcotics Committee, agreed to take part in a covert investigation after my associates Indy Badhwar and Jack Mitchell presented evidence of cocaine sales in the halls of Congress. Undercover narcotics agents used Dornan's office as a cover for their investigation.

As a result of the months-long probe, authorities uncovered a full-fledged dope ring and busted three of the alleged ringleaders, Douglas Marshall, Troy Todd and Robert Finkel. They were arrested after selling undercover cops $15,000 worth of coke, and an additional $250,000 cache was later seized.

The suspected dealers and their contacts began to sing. Briefed by the agents, Dornan sent an eyes-only memo to ranking members of the Narcotics Committee, informing them that seven present and two former members of Congress — "each named by at least three sources" — had been accused of buying cocaine from the ring.

Despite the apparent involvement of congressmen, word on the street was that the federal prosecutors were being importuned to drop the whole hot potato. Aware of this, Dornan, a fiery, redheaded maverick who lost out in the GOP Senate primary race in California, sent off a private letter to Daniel Bernstein, the prosecutor in charge of the federal grand jury that is studying the case.

"Alarmingly, some members of Congress may have become implicated... as possible purchasers of cocaine," Dornan wrote. The congressman said he is aware that it is government policy generally not to prosecute drug users, only dealers.

Since the accusations involve members of Congress, he wrote, "I feel it imperative that the public have every confidence in the legislators who write our drug enforcement laws." He added: "My colleagues in Congress must be certain that their own House is free of allegations of narcotics purchase and use if we are to satisfactorily pursue federal hearings around the nation concerning this plague of drug abuse..."

Dornan continued: "By now you have have heard that I have had special access to some of the results of interviews conducted by investigators close to this case. That is true. Therefore, I feel it my duty to ask to meet with you personally about said information."

Dornan told Bernstein that "I cannot personally confirm allegations I have heard as true, nor do I accuse fellow members of Congress of possible violations of the law." Then he added: "I hope these accusations are baseless, but I must insist that they be pursued to their full legal conclusions."

Clearly, the congressman intends to keep the prosecutor's feet to the fire on the Capitol coke caper. But he seems equally determined to keep the investigation from becoming even more of a media circus. In a closed-door session, the House Ethics Committee asked Dornan for a list of the accused legislators. He refused.

Footnote: Prosecutor Bernstein said he could not comment on an active federal investigation.

THE 25 CENT QUESTION: One trouble with government forms is that it's often hard to tell whether they're on the level or just some wisenheimer's idea of a joke. Take the "REFUND QUESTIONAIRE" that I received the other day.

It was accompanied by an indignant note from a woman who tried to get a soft drink out of a vending machine at the Army's Cameron Station supply base in Alexandria, Va. The machine swallowed her quarter, she wrote, and gave forth no soda pop. So she followed instructions on the machine and applied for a refund.

Instead of her two bits, she got a three-page questionnaire containing 20 questions that were to be answered before she could get her money back. There was an affidavitlike "statement" to sign at the end, attesting that "the answers I have given are true to the best of my knowledge."

After demanding the refund applicant's name and exact place of work, the questionnaire got down to cases:

"Do you consider yourself a) a regular vending machine patron, b) an infrequent vending machine user, or c) a first time user?

"How did you insert coins? a) drop, b) snap, c) spin, or d) other (please describe).

"Did the coin make a falling sound? a) behind slot, b) into mechanism, c) into coin box, d) into coin return, or e) other (please describe).

"Following insertion of coins did you a) tap on the coin slot, b) tap the machine below the coin slot, c) kick or shake the machine, d) none of the above, or e) other (please describe)."

Assuming total recall by the thirsty victim, the questionnaire asked if the machine was full, partially full or "other." Were there any signs of machine abuse? Did anyone else manage to use the machine successfully (you klutz)?

Surely the questionnaire was a joke, a parody of bureaucratic officiousness. Not so. Its dead-serious author, Lt. Daniel C. Stanley Jr., said it was designed to give maintenance people precise information.

"If (the form) violates an Army regulation, I won't make it mandatory," he said.

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Mexico blames U.S. for world problems

MEXICO CITY — Mexico seems to be losing respect for the United States.

The tendency is to blame the United States in general and the Reagan administration in particular for whatever goes wrong in Mexico, Latin America and the rest of the world.

William Giandoni

What with the recent torrential rains in the central part of the country, no longer is anyone accusing the United States of waging meteorological warfare against Mexico, as in past years when the region was suffering from drought.

But nevertheless, wild charges are frequent and, by dint of repetition, seem to be influencing the thinking even of responsible persons.

A conversation with a retired Mexican government official on July 18, the twenty-ninth anniversary of the attack Fidel Castro organized in Santiago, which marked the start of the Cuban revolution, evidenced that.

"The United States is responsible for the lack of democracy in Latin America," he insisted. "You have always supported dictatorships in the other Americas."

Asked how long he thought Castro would have remained in power were the United States really able to make or break Latin American governments, he had to concede that "well, perhaps," Cuba was an exception.

What more current history shows, for example, is that when the Reagan administration did publicly take a stand against a Latin American military regime, in the case of the conflict between Argentina and Great Britain, the other Latin American governments were virtually unanimous in their condemnation of the action.

Another accusation voiced with some frequency is that the United States manipulated the international oil market to Mexico's detriment.

Ambassador John Gavin, one of the few U.S. envoys here in recent years who speaks Spanish fluently, has endeavored to counter that charge. In an address to the American Chamber of Commerce in the northen industrial center of Monterrey, Gavin pointed out that the United States bought Mexican oil for its stratigic reserves "at a fair price, and Mexico sold it at a fair price ... in moments when the world demand for petroleum had started to decline markedly."

Actually, the United States is the No. 1 purchaser of Mexican oil and natural gas, and there is talk of increasing gas sales in the future.

Another mutual problem that has given rise to considerable misunderstanding is the matter of illegal migration of Mexican workers to the United States. Mexico has been trying to ease the pressure.

President Jose Lopez Portillo is credited here, if not also in the United States, with having stimulated the creation of some 4 million new jobs since he took office in December 1976, to stem the flow of illegal immigrants. Last year, 1981, was the fourth consecutive year that the economic growth rate exceded 8 percent. More jobs were created than entrants to the labor force, economists say.

But, in endeavoring to keep the economy growing so as to provide job opportunities, at a time when international oil prices were weakening, other factors combined to undermine confidence in the peso, and it was devalued in February.

Some Mexicans say that "you North Americans" or voracious Mexican capitalists were to blame for the devaluation, but that belief is not widespread. The truth of the matter is that Mexico's current economic crisis caught some of the nation's biggest business and industrial organizations, as well as U.S. and other foreign banks, by surprise.

Despite the criticism of the United States in press, on radio and television, relations between the two countries on a government-to-government and person-to-person basis remain firm and friendly.

But critics are persistent.

The fact that Mexico's president-elect, Miguel de la Madrid, who will succeed Lopez Portillo on Dec. 1, as well as some of his advisers, have advanced degrees from U.S. and other foreign universities has drawn some adverse comment.

One editorialist, Miguel Aroche Parra, writing in the newspaper Excelsior, complained that de la Madrid had not included "the people, the workers, the peasants, etc.," on the working groups he set up to elaborate his program of government. Predominant on the groups are "those who have studied in foreign universites," Aroche Parra wrote.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, August 4, the 216th day of 1982. There are 149 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On August 4, 1914, Britain declared war on Germany — and the United States declared its neutrality — at the outset of World War I.

On this date:

In 1892, Lizzie Borden was arrested in Fall River, Mass., and charged with the hatchet murders of her father and stepmother.

In 1916, the United States bought the Danish Virgin Islands for $25 million.

In 1944, the Nazis captured 14-year-old Anne Frank and seven other Jews in hiding places in Amsterdam during World War II.

Thought for today: Peace comes from within. Do not seek it without. — Buddha (about 563 B.C. - 483 B.C.)

Reagan seeks anti-freeze support

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is trying to rally members of Congress to help fight a nuclear freeze proposal he says would perpetuate "dangerous inequalities in the nuclear balance."

The president summoned a group of Republican and Democratic members of Congress to the White House today, anticipating a close vote on the proposal to seek a freeze of nuclear weapons at current levels.

To help make his case, Reagan also invited Secretary of State George P. Shultz, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and Gen. John Vessey, the new chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"The president wanted to demonstrate his continuing interest and the importance of this vote," said deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, aboard Air Force One as the president returned to Washington from a two-day trip to Iowa and Connecticut.

While the president was on his way home, the White House made public a letter he wrote to Rep. Melvin Price, D-Ill., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee.

In the letter, he said that the proposal advanced by Rep. Clement Zablocki, D-Wis., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, "will undermine our negotiating position with the Soviets" during the strategic arms reduction talks under way in Geneva by "placing the United States in a dangerous position of disadvantage and removing the incentive for serious negotiation by the Soviets.

"I hope you will urge your colleagues to reject this proposal," Reagan said to Price, urging support for a competing Republican plan that he said would "show the Soviet Union that the Congress supports our effort to accomplish meaningful arms reductions."

The Democratic bill, which has the backing of House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., is expected to go to the House floor later this week. It calls in effect for an immediate freeze of all nuclear weapons systems as well as for formal approval of the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty negotiated by the Carter administration but never ratified by the Senate.

Reagan has rejected that SALT II treaty but has said he would abide by its terms as long as the Soviets do.

The Republican plan endorses the so-called START talks, rejecting an immediate freeze and setting an initial goal of a freeze after the level of weapons has been reduced substantially. Reagan has proposed a one-third reduction in U.S. and Soviet warheads.

In Hartford, Conn., Reagan told the centennial meeting of the Knights of Columbus that his administration "takes second place to none in the quest for peace through arms control and agreements."

He said many of the proposals being voiced today for a nuclear freeze are "obsolete."

The president said his idea of reducing strategic warheads by one-third goes "far beyond the sterile idea of a freeze," which he said "might be fine after we've had a complete removal of the most threatening intermediate based missiles and deep reductions in strategic weapons."

He said that if the Democratic proposal were passed, it would "send a signal to the Soviet Union that we are willing to accept something less than these reductions that I spoke about.

"Indeed, this resolution would leave in place dangerous inequalities in the nuclear balance and would attempt to return us to the flawed SALT II agreement."

Compromise defense bill hoped for soon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional armed services committees hope to have a compromise defense bill completed in little more than a week, but they have several major differences to surmount first.

Negotiators from the House and Senate met for the first time Tuesday to iron out differences in their respective bills. And the one that got the most attention involved not a major weapon system but whether Congress should call a temporary halt to "contracting out" various support services to private firms.

Other major disputes concern production of the MX missile, which the Senate voted to delay and the House gave the green light; and the type of long-range cargo plane to buy, either the Senate-backed Boeing 747 or the Lockheed C-5B that the House and the Pentagon prefer.

Under a busy meeting schedule suggested by Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, these and dozens of other, more easily resolved differences in the two bills would be resolved in time for a conference report to be ready for a vote on Aug. 12.

Tower said the aim was to have final passage by both houses before Congress begins a three-week recess on Aug. 20.

The bills are similar in total budget authority for procurement, research and operations and maintenance spending during the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

The Senate version amounts to $177.9 billion, while the final House version was $175.3 billion.

The House total represents a 1 percent cut from the amount it had originally considered. Rep. Melvin Price, D-Ill., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, said he hoped that cut could be retained.

EPA worker says new job not based on past politics

WASHINGTON (AP) — A chief architect of the Navy's plans to dispose of radioactive nuclear submarines is now working at the Environmental Protection Agency where he is in charge of reviewing the proposals.

But Glen Sjoblom says he sees no conflict between his old job as an assistant director in the Navy's nuclear propulsion program and his new one as director of the EPA's office of radiation programs.

"I'm a career civil servant, not a political appointee," Sjoblom said. "I was not chosen (for the EPA job) because of my involvement in what to do with decommissioned submarines."

Environmental groups, and at least one key congressman, see it differently.

They say they believe Sjoblom's appointment is connected with the Navy's interest in scuttling the nuclear subs at sea, and the Reagan administration's desire to allow ocean dumping of other radioactive material to resume.

Rep. Norman D'Amours, chairman of House oceanography subcommittee, likened Sjoblom's transfer to "a fox guarding the henhouse." D'Amours, a New Hampshire Democrat, has sponsored a bill to extend for another two years a moratorium on dumping nuclear wastes in the ocean.

"Mr. Sjoblom appears to be neither impartial nor an advocate of the environment," D'Amours said Tuesday. "Such a move seems to be typical of the EPA under the current administration."

John Hinck, a spokesman for the environmental group Greenpeace, called Sjoblom's appointment a "clear conflict of interest," signaling EPA's intention to give a "green light" to resumption of ocean dumping.

Sjoblom left his civilian job with the Navy four months after the Defense Department announced last January that it was looking at scuttling its nuclear subs at sea.

That plan would have to be approved by the EPA, which has jurisdiction over all ocean dumping.

FAA wind shear policy criticized

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly a month after the crash of a Boeing 727 in a driving rainstorm, the government is coming under criticism for not moving quickly enough to close airports when treacherous wind conditions are detected.

The manufacturer of the device that warns of sudden shifts in wind near airports is urging the Federal Aviation Administration to ground aircraft briefly whenever any so-called "wind shears" are detected.

"We suggest...that no aircraft lands or takes off within 15 minutes of an alert," wrote Kent S. Morgan, vice president and general manager of Sangamo-Weston Systems Inc., in a letter to the FAA.

Morgan said in a telephone interview Tuesday that while the length of an airport shutdown may vary, airplanes should be grounded for some period to give time for the severe wind threat to pass.

FAA spokesman Fred Farrar said the agency's policy is to pass wind and other weather information to the pilot and let him make the decision on whether to take off.

Meanwhile, a Ralph Nader sponsored public interest group asked the National Transportation Safety Board to urgently recommend grounding planes whenever a wind shear is detected near an airport by the Sangamo-Weston equipment. The devices are operating at 58 airports around the country.

Federal investigators have yet to determine what caused Pan American World Airways Flight 759 to crash shortly after takeoff July 9 from the New Orleans airport. But they acknowledge two wind shear warnings were sounded minutes for the plane departed.

"The crash of Pan Am Flight 759...would have been prevented if the tower had been required to close the runway after receiving winds shear alerts," said Matthew Finucane, director of the Nader-sponsored Aviation Consumer Action Project.

Although the Air Line Pilots Association has campaigned for installation of airport wind shear detection devices, it says the Sangamo-Weston equipment does not provide enough information specifically on wind shear, is subject to false alarms and should be used as the source of advisory information.

Take Time Now To Make Life Richer With Commercial Bank's Time Deposit Program

Get acquainted with Commercial Bank's Time Deposit Counselors: Jerry Armstrong, Assistant Vice President — Time Deposit Services; Sara Ames, Assistant Cashier and Time Deposit Officer; Carol Ray, Time Deposit Counselor; Vi Evans, Assistant Cashier and Time Deposit Officer; and Lana Cooley, Time Deposit Counselor.

You don't have to have a lot of money to get professional answers to your money management questions at Commercial Bank. Our Time Deposit Counselors will help you untangle the complex options you face in reaching your financial goals.

We know that savings and certificates of deposit are only part of a prudent financial program that includes your insurance, stocks and bonds, real estate, and collectibles. But a cash reserve is a most important part. Helping you build it is our business. Getting started is up to you.

The key to building a sizeable cash reserve is in getting started, and in having a systematic plan. When you've accumulated as little as $500 in a Commercial Bank savings account, you can begin the purchase of Small Saver Certificates. And you can start an Individual Retirement Account with as little as $100.

With $7,500 you can earn a good return on our 91-Day Certificate, tied to the average yield on U.S. Treasury bills.

The 182-Day Money Market Certificate is popular with those having $10,000 or more to invest.

You can also save several hundred federal tax dollars each year by depositing up to $2,000 ($4,000 if both husband and wife work) in an Individual Retirement Account. We offer both a Fixed Rate and a Variable Rate IRA. The All Savers Certificate is also a tax shelter for those in higher tax brackets.

Each depositor is insured up to $100,000 by the F.D.I.C. Joint depositors are insured separately, providing much greater coverage.

Our Time Deposit Counselors will show you how a combination of regular savings, certificates of deposit, automatic transfers from checking to savings, and retirement accounts can get you where you want to go, financially.

At Commercial Bank we're rich in people who care.

Is another 'popping' corn harvest in store?

WASHINGTON (AP) — By most indications, this year's corn harvest may be another whopper, indicating a further build-dup in U.S. grain supplies and more downward pressure on prices paid to farmers.

The Agriculture Department is scheduled to release its first official corn production estimate a week from today. The Aug. 11 report also will include USDA's first season estimates for soybeans, cotton and total wheat.

Procedures call for the department's Crop Reporting Board to issue production figures based on field conditions the first of the month. Thus, the production estimate of 1982 output of corn and the other crops will reflect the situation on Aug. 1.

A weekly report issued Tuesday by the government's Joint Agricultural Weather Facility, operated by the departments of Agriculture and Commerce, provided a rough idea of what to expect. It was for the period July 26 through Aug. 1.

The facility's weekly report, however, does not attempt to forecast actual production or crop yields — only the general condition of the crop.

"Rainfall in eastern areas benefitted crops and pastures, but more is needed," it said. "Soil moisture supplies were mostly adequate even though some shortages appeared in the northern plains, parts of the Corn Belt and Southeast."

One of the characteristics of this year's spring-planted crops — which includes virtually everything except winter wheat planted last fall — is that excess rain delayed planting in many areas, resulting in behind-normal development.

But generally, the report said, corn was in "good to excellent condition in parts of the Corn Belt and Southeast, and fair to good condition" in the rest of the country.

Soybeans were reported in "mostly good" condition as July drew to a close; and sorghum was in "fair to good" shape. Much cotton was lost to bad weather this season in large areas of Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico.

The winter wheat harvest was 84 percent completed in the major states, only one percentage point behind a year ago. Spring wheat was reported headed on 98 percent of the acreage, also one point behind year-ago development.

Corn development "was ahead of average in the eastern Corn Belt, while in the western Corn Belt it was slower than normal," the report said.

For example, corn in Ohio was reported 95 percent silked, compared to 55 percent a year ago and the normal rate of 75 percent for this time of season.

But in Iowa, where farmers struggled for weeks in rain and mud last spring, only 65 percent of the corn was in the silking stage of development, compared to 96 percent a year ago and the normal pace of 88 percent.

Strip miners must restore farmland

WASHINGTON (AP) — After months of internal debate, the Reagan administration late last week resolved a dispute over protecting millions of acres of prime farmland from damage by coal strip miners.

The administration set April 3, 1983, as the deadline by which coal companies must start meeting stringent requirements to insure that farmland they mine is returned to its original productivity.

Environmentalists, who had pushed for an Aug. 3 deadline, said they were not happy with eight months more of delay but were pleased that the administration had finally set a deadline.

But a spokesman for the American Mining Congress said his group was "terribly disappointed" in the decision and would seek to have it overturned in court.

AGRICULTURE

At stake are an estimated 48 million farm acres atop an estimated 22 billion tons of coal, primarily in the Midwest and Great Plains.

The 1977 Surface Mining Control Act requires strip miners to return mined land to its original contours. For land classified as prime farm land, the law also requires coal operators to assure that it will be restored to full productivity.

To obtain mining permits for farm land, coal companies will have to submit additional information on soil conditions, crop requirements and detailed reclamation plans. Because of the technical complexity, Congress provided for a grace period before the farm requirements went into effect.

The Carter administration proposed Aug. 3, 1982, but Watt, after taking office, reversed that decision.

His Office of Surface Mining called for further hearings and said it was considering options ranging from reimposition of the Aug. 3 date to setting no deadline at the federal level.

In announcing the decision to pick April 3, the Office of Surface Mining said more time was needed to implement the special standards governing prime farmlands.

Norman Dean, an attorney for the National Wildlife Federation, called the decision "an enormous victory for the conservation groups and farm groups that had lobbied for a cut-off date."

But Greg Conrad, senior counsel for the American Mining Congress, said his group felt Congress never intended to set a blanket cut-off date.

He said Interior's action will mean that every strip mine operating on prime farmland will have to begin reclaiming land under much tougher and more expensive standards.

He said the technology still does not exist to reclaim farm land to 100 percent of its original productivity.

Glenn says farm situation worsens

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Delivering what was billed as the Democratic rebuttal to President Reagan's speech the day before, Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, told a farm audience the administration's policies have served only to make things worse on the farm.

In an address Tuesday to the National Corn Growers Association, Glenn said Reagan's grain export policy amounts to a "partial embargo" causing importing countries to shop elsewhere, to the detriment of U.S. farmers.

He said the policy has caused the United States to be considered a "global 7-Eleven store" to be used only at odd times when other sources of grain are not available.

Glenn said that as a candidate, Reagan asked voters if they were better off than they were four years before.

"Maybe he ought to be asking whether you're better off now than you were during the Great Depression," Glenn said.

Glenn's address originally was scheduled for Monday, but when Reagan accepted an invitation to speak, Glenn was moved back a day.

Compared to Reagan's reception by the farmers, Glenn's reception was more polite than enthusiastic, although his views were closer than Reagan's to the group's positions.

The president's audience of some 8,000 on Monday was spiked with Republican faithful and a military band, while Glenn's audience was much smaller.

Explaining the less enthusiastic reaction to Glenn, William Mullins, president of the National Corn Growers Association, said many in the audience believe Reagan is right about limiting the federal government and are willing to suffer the short-term pains of his economic policies.

Government reduces 'regulatory burden'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department has adopted several changes in federal regulations aimed at reducing "the regulatory burden for those involved in the marketing of livestock, poultry and meat."

B.H. Jones, administrator of the department's Packers and Stockyards Administration, said Tuesday the changes "will reduce paperwork and other costs of doing business for those in the regulated industries without harming producers and consignors."

The changes, which were proposed last February, will go into effect on Aug. 28.

However, one proposal which would have exempted small-volume livestock dealers and order buyers from having to file a minimum $10,000 bond was not adopted.

"A significant number of those submitting comments said the small-volume operators pose the greatest threat of financial loss to the industry and should not be exempted from the bonding requirement," the agency said.

Skillets most versatile type pan for kitchens

By EVE ZIBART
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

I'm a one-pan woman. I saute, flambe, braise, fry, reduce, stew and simmer — all on top of the stove. I'm skillet labor, hovering somewhere between the blue-collar saucepan and the upper-crust souffle dish.

Hail to thee, bright skillet! Bird thou never burnt.

It's time for the panhandlers to come out of the pantry. The skillet is the most versatile, obliging and decorative form of cookware in the kitchen. Even the wok, which in the past decade has revolutionized the definition of fast food, is really not much more than an inscrutable skillet.

Now, up front, I have to admit that I'm not talking meat loaf here. I'm a single, over-21 professional with a house that needs work and a lawn up to my waist. I practice a flexible sort of self-discipline by refusing to bake bread or dessert (besides, my oven only has one track on it). In the past 10 years, I've probably used the oven only 10 times.

Instead, I have a menagerie of 12 to 15 skillets; most of them are hanging on nails hammered in the kitchen plaster because (a) there's no shelf space and (b) I hate the wallpaper. Three are the old-fashioned, painstaking seasoned, heavy cast-iron type, 6, 10 and 12 inches across. (These act as personal poltegeists, periodically throwing themselves to the floor in the middle of the night.)

The newer, imitation country-style skillets have neither the heft nor the staying power of these rugged heirlooms, and all the cast-iron versions want by way of washing up is a little hot water and a brisk paper-toweling — maybe a little oil rubbed in when they're tired.

I have two "magic" skillets of the Calphalon type — a luxurious 14-incher and a spunky little sixer. A couple of years ago, in a stunning debut performance, the big guy singlehandedly served up a dinner for 40 of marsh-hen breasts and shallots in fennel boats with an herbsinthe sauce, marinated Canada and snow geese with kiwi sauce and two sauces — chestnut-madeira and game-wine — for a venison roast. All it wants is a sponging off and a pat on the bottom.

I have a 12-inch Copco steel-and-bonded aluminum with a wooden handle, dedicated to the production of butter-sauteed pancakes; a correctly upside-down crepe pan; a 2-inch-deep enameled skillet with lid and a similar, plain-lidded steel model; a lidded psuedo-Revereware copper bottom; one old Teflon skillet, in which I occasionally brown ground meat, a small rectangular Japanese skillet for eggs and sesame seeds, and a few odds and ends. I also have two woks, which I might use more often except for their minimal moveability and my rather crowded burners.

Here's what a good skillet will do for you: Deliver unbroken egg yolks. Transform simple shallots and mushrooms into duxelles dressing. Saute soft-shell crabs and filet mignon. Turn the most basic of standard vegetables — cucumbers, celery, carrots — into nouvelle side dishes. Braise white belgian endive and cornish hens. Poach white fish or scallops and reduce the juices into sauce. Crisp grated potatoes or grated zucchini or leftover rice. Simmer minestrone and paella and pasto; coq ou vin and veal ragout and beef stroganoff; allspice lamb and country ham and gumbo and salt roe hering and sukiyaki...

Skillets adapt to technique: You can shake, stir, swirl, sizzle, sear and spatulate. Habitual use of the skillet tends to coincide with one-dish cuisine, too, so it's energy-efficient all around: Save you, saves gas or electricity, saves dishwa hing.

So dump the double boiler and clear out the casseroles. The skillet does it better.

CREOLE GUMBO
(4 to 6 servings)

Bacon drippings to grease pan
6 cloves garlic, minced
2 large onions, chopped
2 28-ounce cans whole tomatoes
2 16-ounce cans okra
3 bay leaves
2 teaspoons crushed red pepper
1 tablespoon worcestershire sauce
Salt to taste
1 teaspoon basil
1 teaspoon parsley
Hot pepper sauce to taste
1 1-2 to 2 pounds cleaned shrimp
16-ounce can picked crab meat (optional)
3 to 4 tablespoons gumbo file powder
4 cups cooked rice

Melt bacon drippings to cover skillet bottom a quarter-inch. Saute garlic and onions until translucent. Add tomatoes, okra, bay leaves, red pepper, worcestershire, salt, basil and parsley. Simmer 1 1-2 hours. Taste and add salt or hot pepper sauce as desired. Add shrimp and crab, simmer another 10 minutes. Just before serving, stir in file. Serve over hot rice.

Note: Okra is a delightfully obstinate vegetable; fresh is ideal and frozen works perfectly well but canned is just generally easier to find.

Note again: This is a good dish to make in extra quantities; it tastes better the second day and freezes well. In such cases, however, stop short of adding the file, a sassafras-based thickener which can turn gummy if overheated or reheated. If you make a lot of gumbo and don't know whether it will all be consumed, spoon file on top of each bowl and tell your guests to stir it all in together.

ALLSPICE LAMB

This is one of those no-recipe dishes, a free-form, improvisational creation which goes something like this (for 4 to 6 people):

Buy the sirloin half of a leg of lamb and have it boned and cut into 1 1-2 inch cubes. At home, trim fat and freeze bones for stock.

Film the bottom of a heavy, lidded skillet with oil and set over medium-high heat. Add a coarsely chopped large onion and stir for a minute. Add lamb, quickly sprinkle with salt and a couple of tablespoons allspice and stir to sear on all sides. Sprinkle with about 3 tablespoons flour, another 2 tablespoons allspice and stir until flour browns. Add a bottle of smoked beer and reduce heat to simmer. Cover. After 10 minutes, add 1 tablespoon each allspice, powdered cinnamon and nutmeg. Simmer at least another 30 minutes, until lamb is tender, stirring occasionally and tasting. (This seems a lot of allspice, so you may want to be conservative the first time. But since commercial allspice fades, both in shipping and in simmering, don't be surprised if you eventually use a lot.) If sauce starts to dry out, add a little more beer. Serve over rice; sprinkle with sauteed almonds and top with a spoonful of plain yogurt.

John Young, counselor at Family Services of Midland and co-leader of a recent step-parent survival group held at the agency, discusses with the participants in the group the advantages and disadvantages of establishing a stepfamily support group in Midland.

Stepfamily support group discussed

Pros and cons of organizing a stepfamily group in Midland are under discussion by participants who have attended a course for step-parents during the past four weeks. The course was given under the auspices of Family Services of Midland, a United Way agency.

To be a mutual self-help group, if organized, it would provide a forum for persons with a common concern or problem who feel they would benefit from sharing information, insights and problems.

A social worker or professional would help start the goup, but would become a consultant or resource person, once the organization was accomplished. Co-leaders of the recent course, John Young and Jan Mann, are proposing the group formation, believing it would be a major benefit to those with similar problems.

Group members learn to act for positive change rather than simply struggling for minimal satisfaction or survival. They learn how others in the group have managed the same difficulties they face by changing what can be changed and by accepting what can't be changed. They also learn that creative acceptance can be a way of change.

If organized, the new Midland group could affiliate with the Stepfamily Association of America, which now has 30 active chapters in 14 states. The national organization publishes a quarterly Stepfamily Bulletin, organization manuals for chapters and a manual for conducting survival workshops.

The next course for stepfamilies will be announced by Family Services at a later date. Interested persons may call Family Services at 683-4241.

'Evie's Fruitcake' delicious, difficult

By MINNIE BERNARDINO
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Q: On Page 334 of the new "Los Angeles Times California Cookbook," there was a recipe for "Evie's Fruitcake" with which I had a problem. I followed the directions to the letter but the cake turned out to be very moist with some liquid in the bottom.

After checking my old files for a similar recipe, I found that your baking temperature of 225 degrees was too low compared to one recipe I found that called for 375 degrees. Could there have been an error?

A: Evie's Fruitcake is more of a confection made with nuts, dates, coconut and candied fruit than a regular fruitcake. The condensed milk binds the ingredients together and the low 225-degree temperature for a long period (1 1-2 hours) dries up the mixture. We have tested and retested the recipe and it worked out beautifully following original instructions. There are two possible causes for failure: Instead of sweetened condensed milk, the evaporated milk product so often confused with the condensed could have been used, making the finished product more moist, if not wet; or, the ingredients were skimped on — the recipe calls for great amounts of each dry ingredient and skimping on these could only result in failure.

Q: I have many recipes for butter cream frosting, but none turn out like a bakery's. How do bakeries make theirs turn out so creamy, fluffy and tasty?

A: Homemade butter cream frosting usually calls for butter, shortening, powdered sugar, milk and flavoring. Most bakeries use pure shortening and omit the butter making the frosting whiter and fluffier. In addition they also use a special institutional hydrogenated shortening that has more air whipped into it, according to Judy McKee, home economist from Wilton Enterprises, manufacturers of cake-decorating products. Special flavorings are also added to the icing that could differ from the retail products. As for being better in taste, I personally prefer the homemade butter cream made with butter.

To duplicate the commercial frosting at home McKee recommends using whipping cream in place of milk or water as well as using all shortening and omitting the butter. Here's a decorator frosting recipe adapted from Wilton:

DECORATOR ICING

1 cup solid vegetable shortening
1 pound (about 4 cups) powdered sugar, sifted
2 tablespoons whipping cream, about
1 teaspoon vanilla

Cream shortening until light and fluffy. Add powdered sugar, cream and vanilla. Beat at medium speed until all ingredients are well mixed. Blend an additional minute or so, until creamy. Do not overbeat. For icing the cake, use thinner consistency icing, beating in additional 2 teaspoons cream per cup of stiff icing. For decorating the cake, use stiff to medium icing. Add 1 teaspoon cream per cup of stiff icing for medium consistency. Makes 3 cups stiff icing.

Note: Frosting can be stored for a week in anairtight container in the refrigerator. Just before using whip it up again until fluffy.

Q: Do you have a recipe for whipped cream frosting that is more stable than just plain sweetened whipped cream? I heard that gelatin is usually added to this. But don't you have to dissolve the gelatin first in water? Please find the recipe.

WHIPPED CREAM FROSTING

1 teaspoon unflavored gelatin
4 teaspoons cold water
1 cup whipping cream
1-4 cup powdered sugar
1-2 teaspoon vanilla, optional

Sprinkle gelatin over cold water to soften. Place over low heat until gelatin dissolves, stirring occasionally. Remove from heat and cool slightly. Whip cream until soft peaks form. Add powdered sugar and vanilla, beating until thickened. Slowly beat in gelatin. Whip at high speed until stiff. Makes about 2 cups.

Young man keeps using old traditions in making of wine

By NATHAN CHROMAN
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

ALPA, Italy — Pio Boffa may be the youngest wine executive in all of Italy. At 27 he heads an established 25,000 case boutique-type winery Pio Cesare, founded in 1881 by his great-grandfather. It is rare in Italy to find such youth at the helm of a major wine-making institution.

What is interesting is that his wine-making philosophies belie his youth. He finds himself in the center of a Barolo controversy in which he steadfastly supports the notion that this classic Piedmont red wine should be produced strictly in accordance with age-old wine-making tradition.

Boffa's contention is that a true Barolo requires the contribution and blend of many vineyards, each with its own individual set of characteristics. This is the tradition whereby each wine producer is known for his own Barolo.

Generally described as a big, robust, long-keeping and high in extract wine, Barolo is required by Denominazione di Origine Controllata (D.O.C.) rules to be produced from the Nebbiolo grape (and-or its sub varieties the Michet, Lampia, or Rose) in a specified area of about 25,000 acres southwest of here.

D.O.C. is a series of regulations that approves the defining of areas and names for Italian wines. Moreover, types of soil and grapes are defined, which of course tends to improve the wine, although taste quality is not necessarily regulated. If more wine is produced than otherwise authorized by the D.O.C., status is not obtained, resulting in a less prestigious status, Vina da Tavola.

Barolo has achieved a higher status yet, known as the D.O.C.G. standard in which there must be D.O.C. compliance along with a guarantee (guarantita) whereby the Italian government assures that all the requirements have been met including regional taste tests that are regularly conducted here to insure Barolo taste character.

Other Barolo requirements are that there be a minimum alcohol content of 13 percent and at least three years bottle and barrel aging. Four years qualifies it as a Riserva and five as a Riserva Speciale.

Regarding the aging issue Pio will not compromise. He is traditional down to the letter.

For Boffa, producing lighter-style wines from specifically isolated vineyards is too much to bear. I suggested to him that perhaps he is too young to be so uncompromising on the question of new styles. Emphasizing his youth, he felt that he did not want to change one iota of Barolo character, and he allowed as how several decades of future wine leadership is likely to reinforce his traditional concepts.

Bake bread with almond goodness

Bread baking is a delicious way to make a fast and easy treat that's bound to be an instant success. Great for snacks, quick breads are also a perfect accompaniment to any meal.

Depending on the ingredients used, quick breads can be a nutritious as well as a delicious treat. For example, bake a bread full of garden vegetables and crunchy California almonds. Vegetables are well known for their bounty of nutrients. Almonds should be too.

In fact, when it comes to nutrition, these delicious nuts are tops. A good source of vegetable protein, almonds also contain impressive amounts of vitamins and minerals. According to the Almond Board of California, one ounce of almonds contains only 170 calories with the bonus of being a good source of riboflavin, vitamin E and key minerals such as phosphorous, magnesium and copper. That same single ounce serving provides 10 percent of the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowance of protein and absolutely no cholesterol. Quite a healthy bargain from a nut that tastes good too.

Almonds are so versatile, their uses are virtually endless. Right out of the package they are a crunchy, convenient snack — great for lunch boxes. It's easy to include almonds in any meal because they are available in more ready-to-use forms than any other nut. Be creative. From whole to sliced and blanched to roasted, almonds add nutty crunch, tempting eye appeal and good nutrition to the simplest of meals.

ALMOND GARDEN SANDWICH LOAF

½ cup vegetable oil
1½ tablespoons sugar
2 eggs
½ cup milk
1¾ cups flour
¾ cup chopped toasted almonds*
½ cup toasted wheat germ
1 tablespoon baking powder
1½ teaspoons salt
1 cup shredded Cheddar cheese
½ cup sliced green onions
¼ cup chopped parsley
¼ cup chopped green pepper

In large bowl beat oil, sugar and eggs until creamy. Mix in milk. In another bowl, combine flour, almonds, wheat germ, baking powder and salt; stir to blend thoroughly. Add almond mixture to oil mixture; stir just to blend thoroughly. Fold in cheese, onions, parsley and pepper. Grease and flour an 8½x4½x2½-inch pan. Spoon batter into pan; level top. Bake in 350-degree oven about 50 minutes until top is lightly browned and pick inserted into center comes out clean. Cool in pan on rack 10 minutes; turn out of pan onto rack. Wrap in foil or plastic wrap while still slightly warm. Store 24 hours before slicing. Makes one loaf.

Geothermal sites promising

The U.S. Geological Survey estimates that as much as 95 million acres of land, mostly in the western portions of the United States, including Hawaii and Alaska, may be potentially attractive for geothermal development.

Many of the promising sites are on federal or public lands, including about 3.8 million acres designated as known geothermal resource areas.

DEAR ABBY

Romance loses its bloom

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I'm 26, but when I was 16, I fell in love with a married man twice my age. (I'll call him Norman.) For nine years there was never anybody else in my life but Norman.

Last year his wife divorced him so he moved in with me. The problem is I don't love him anymore. He is old and boring, and I am more mature now and want to go with men my own age.

Norman still loves me, and says he gave up his family for me and now I have to marry him. I know it was wrong for me to get involved with him in the first place, but must I pay for that mistake the rest of my life? He has done a lot for me, but I could support myself if I had to.

Oh, yes, I have a 6-year-old daughter by him, which could complicate things.

What can I do? My life is miserable. I hate to see nighttime come because I have to sleep with him, and I can't stand for him to touch me.

I don't want a lecture, I just want to know what to do. — DEAD END

DEAR DEAD: You're lucky you are able to support yourself, because that is exactly what you should do. Talk to a lawyer about your rights and Norman's. But don't continue to live with a man whose touch you can't stand.

DEAR ABBY: I don't have a problem, but Hollywood does. I want to complain about the trash they call movies today.

I am 50 years old and can still remember the wonderful movies I used to see. I am a housewife, nurse and Christian woman, and I enjoy a good movie, but I refuse to pay $4 to see a movie with four-letter words in it.

I hear the movie industry is going broke. Good! It deserves to go broke. Don't tell me the public likes to pay to get insulted.

Also, please tell your readers where to write to let the movie big shots know that filthy language is keeping a lot of decent people away from the box office. — ONE OF THEM IN ROCKY MOUNT, N.C.

DEAR ONE: Write to: The Motion Picture Association of America, Inc., 1600 I Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

DEAR ABBY: The reader with the problem of shooing out late-staying guests should use my grandmother's method. She would look at her husband and say, "Willie, let's go to bed so these nice people can go home." — J.R.C., NEWPORT BEACH, CALIF.

DEAR J.R.C.: "Grandpa" suggested this one: "When folks stay too long, I say, 'I wish I were someplace else so I could go home.'"

(Problems? You'll feel better if you get them off your chest. Write to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

Hamburger takes on new flavor, shape

Lest you think that hamburgers and meat loaf are the only ways to serve ground beef...here's a new suggestion — beef cups with pizza rice feature individual hamburgers baked into "bowl" shapes and filled with pizza-seasoned rice.

Kids will like it...and so will the family budget. For in spite of the fact that it is a generous serving, each "cup" contains only four ounces of ground beef. That's as much meat protein as one needs at a meal and the rice cereal mixed in with the meat and the rice filling add whole grain complex carbohydrates.

A half-cup serving of rice contains only 82 calories and costs as little as four cents...two additional assets in today's diet and budget conscious society.

BEEF CUPS WITH PIZZA RICE

1½ pounds lean ground beef
1 cup rice cereal, crushed
2 eggs
1 envelope onion soup mix
3 cups cooked rice
1 cup spaghetti or pizza sauce
¼ teaspoon salt
¾ cup grated mozzarella cheese
¼ cup sliced green onions

Combine beef, cereal, eggs and soup mix. Divide mixture into 6 portions. Cover the outside of six 5-ounce custard cups with aluminum foil. Shape each portion of meat over foil to form cups. Place in a 13x9-inch baking pan. Bake at 375 degrees for 20 to 25 minutes, or until brown. Invert and loosen meat from foil. As meat bakes, combine rice, sauce and salt in saucepan. Heat through. Fill each meat cup with ½ cup rice mixture. Top with cheese and green onions. Makes 6 servings. Each serving provides: 406 calories, 4 meat exchanges, 1½ bread exchanges, ⅔ fat exchange, 1½ vegetable exchanges.

LIVING TODAY

Make homes safe for elderly

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Older adults say that remaining in their own home contributes the most to well-being and satisfaction, next to good health — especially if it permits independent living.

You can easily "build in" many independent living features to most homes, making them more suitable for an older adult.

Also, windows, lighting and electrical outlets should be easy to reach and easy to operate. Other areas that need special attention are floors, bathrooms, kitchens and bedrooms.

ENTRANCES

Front and back entrances that are at least 36 inches wide will permit easy passage of furniture and people confined to wheelchairs. To reduce the chance of falls at entrances and to aid the person using a wheelchair or walker, you can replace steps with a ramp or incline with a rise of only one inch for each 12 inches of distance. Be sure the ramp is at least three feet wide.

If steps cannot be replaced, place handrails on both sides — at a height of 30 to 38 inches upward from the steps. Be sure steps are uniform in height and tread depth. A riser height of seven inches and a tread depth of 11 inches are most desireable. Mark the edge of the step with white paint to help older adults see the steps.

DOORS

Equip interior doors with locks that have a safety release so they will open from either side. Also, add handle or lever type opening devices instead of conventional round knobs.

LIGHTING

Be sure lighting has easy-to-locate switches so the older adult can turn on a light when entering a room and turn it off when leaving. Groping for a switch in a dark room is hazardous.

ELECTRICAL OUTLETS

WINDOWS

Provide easy ways for the older adult to control uncomfortable glare from windows, such as with venetian or louvered blinds. Also, make sure windows are easy to open, close and lock.

FLOORS

Non-skid floors are a must. Floors are a threat when they have a high-gloss or shine. It is important to make sure they are not slippery. Use minimum-care flooring that does not need scrubbing, waxing or frequent cleaning.

Wall-to-wall carpeting, with short or medium-length pile, is recommended. Avoid long stringy yarns and throw rugs or area rugs. Tack curling edges down using tacks or double-faced tape.

BATHROOMS

Because the older person may need assistance, be sure bathrooms are large enough to accommodate two people without crowding. Grab bars installed by toilets and bathtubs are safety musts. Be sure they are properly secured to framing members, such as wall studs.

Provide a seat in the bathtub or shower if possible. Also, removing the sliding doors may allow an older person to sit on the edge of the tub and to pivot into the tub. Make sure water faucet handles are easy to regulate to prevent burns. A hand-held shower offers real advantages.

KITCHEN

A chair for resting between tasks and a safe range are two musts for kitchens. Electric ranges avoid accidentally escaping gas, and front or side-panel controls prevent accidental burns. Replace conventional cabinet door closings with more easily opened magnetic ones.

BEDROOMS

For easy bedmaking, make sure there are at least 22 inches of space at the sides and foot of each bed. Dresser drawers should be easy to open and close. For safety, a firm chair-height bed with stable, easy-to-grab headboard and footboard is best.

Use season's last cherries

CHERRY COBBLER

Make the most of the season's last cherries.

1½ pounds sweet red cherries, stemmed and pitted (4 cups)
Sugar
1 cup fork-stirred all-purpose flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder
Pinch of salt
½ of a ¼-pound stick butter (¼ cup)
1 large egg
Grated rind of 1 medium orange (about 2 teaspoons)
¼ cup orange juice

In a 10 by 6 by 2-inch baking dish mix together cherries and ½ cup sugar. Stir together flour, baking powder and salt. Cream butter and 1-3rd cup sugar; beat in egg until blended; add flour mixture, orange rind and orange juice; stir only until flour mixture is moistened. Spread over cherries. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean of batter — 45 minutes. Good served warm with vanilla ice cram. Makes 6 servings.

DRAMA IN REAL LIFE

Two passersby risk own lives to save life of trucker

By SHELDON KELLY
Special from Reader's Digest

Tractor-trailer driver Ronald W. Nunley's powerful 65-foot rig rolled easily along South Carolina's four-lane U.S. 17. It was a sparkling clear day in Feb. 1979, and Nunley's destination, the coastal city of Georgetown, was just minutes ahead. After unloading his cargo of highly combustible lantern fluid, he would return to Mt. Juliet, Tenn., where his pregnant wife and three small daughters were waiting to celebrate his 28th birthday.

At high noon, Nunley drove over the South Santee River bridge. Shifting gears, he swung around a passenger car, then pulled back into the right lane. He never saw the logging rig parked along the shoulder, its trailer heavily loaded, three feet out onto the highway.

Seconds later, traveling at 55 miles per hour, Nunley's rig slammed into the logging trailer, crushing his cab into twisted metal. Regaining consciousness, he found himself trapped, his chest and legs wedged into a dark pocket of wreckage that was starting to burn. He remembered the explosive cargo inside his trailer and yelled for help.

Andrew Collins, 56, a Georgetown logger, was driving his truck down U.S. 17 when, from a quarter-mile away, he saw logs hurtling through the air; seconds later, flames were shooting skyward. Collins, blinded in one eye as the result of a boyhood accident, the father of nine children and a church steward for 25 years, sped toward the fiery wreck.

Douglas Keltz, 26, a salesman from Atlanta, was driving his custom van in the opposite lane. He had witnessed the same incredible scene of hurtling logs and flames.

KELTZ SWERVED his van onto the median, jumped out and ran toward the wreckage. Andrew Collins was already there, tugging at what remained of the driver's door.

Barely speaking, they attacked the jammed door. "Help me! Please help me!" Nunley's pleas were breathless whispers; yet they were the sounds of life Collins and Keltz had hoped to hear. "Don't you worry," Collins yelled. "We'll get you out!"

What they saw shocked them. Nunley's body was pinned beneath the dashboard, the steering-wheel shaft bent across his upper torso. His face was bloodied beyond recognition.

It was obvious to Collins and Keltz that both 50-gallon fuel tanks could explode at any time, if the trailer cargo didn't go first. But, without hesitation, Keltz crawled inside the cab and began prying at the dashboard as Collins leaned in and pulled at Nunley's shoulders.

Nunley, blinded by the steady flow of blood, feared the men would abandon him to save themselves. "Oh, dear God!" he moaned. "Please help me!"

Collins swiftly retrieved an axe from his truck and began swinging powerful blows against the dashboard. As he chopped, flames licked around the fuel tank on the driver's side. Keltz, leaning into the cab as he cradled Nunley's bleeding head in his arms, could hear the hissing sound of steam venting from the tank. Smoke and perspiration blurred the already impaired vision in Collins' one good eye.

HE CUT away large sections of the dashboard and steering shaft — repeatedly striking blows within inches of Nunley's body. Then he maneuvered past Keltz into the ovenlike cab and tore furiously at the encumbering wreckage. Flames scorched his arms and shoulders; the air was thick with choking smoke. Nunley, now obviously in shock, was on the verge of being roasted alive.

Suddenly the fire erupted with a horrible roar. The leaking fuel tanks, enveloped by flames, hissed loudly; metal creaked; springs tore loose from cushioned seats with sharp, snapping sounds.

"This is it!" Nunley screamed. Collins, barely able to see, yanked away the remaining sections of the dashboard and steering shaft and seized Nunley's legs. Keltz began pulling the trapped man's upper body.

In moments Nunley's bloodied head appeared through the haze of smoke. He had been pulled free!

Seconds later, as the two men carried Nunley to safety, the cab exploded in a ball of flame. Next, the shipment inside the trailer blew sky-high, followed by secondary explosions that sent funnels of black smoke hundreds of feet into the air, forcing the onlookers to flee.

In moments everything within 25 feet was consumed in a devastating inferno that melted the pavement. Exhausted and tearful, Collins and Keltz watched the rig incinerate.

IT WASN'T until the ambulance arrived minutes later that Collins and Keltz began to relax. Then, clasping hands — the one weatherbeaten and black, the other still young and white — they introduced themselves.

In a special ceremony held July 28, 1980, in Charleston, S.C., Collins and Keltz each received the Presidential Medal of Honor — the civilian equivalent of the military Congressional Medal of Honor — for extraordinary heroism. Expressing his gratitude, a grateful Nunley said, "Every birthday I have from now on will be because of (these two men). They came within 30 seconds of death just so I could live."

Collins swiftly retrieved an axe from his truck and began swinging powerful blows against the dashboard. Keltz, leaning into the cab as he cradled Nunley's bleeding head in his arms, could hear the hissing sound of steam venting from the tank.

Collector: Old newspapers magic carpet ride

GREENWICH, Conn. (AP) — Old newspapers help bring history to life, says Alton Ketchum, whose hobby — and now profession — is collecting old newspapers and who is recognized as an expert in the field.

"A newspaper collection is a way to live in all times at once," the former advertising executive said recently. And as he showed his treasured newspapers, he often read portions of historic news accounts, lectured, and laughed.

"If you collect newspapers, it allows you to zoom in on history. It's a magic carpet ride," he said. "It takes you anywhere you want to go. It presents the history in all its atmosphere and detail."

Ketchum has about 200,000 newspapers in his collection and sells many through his own business, called Harrington's, which is his middle name.

Many of the newspapers are piled in the cluttered library of his 18th-century home, but the majority are stacked neatly in bound editions in the basement. Among his collection are newspapers containing ads from attorney Abraham Lincoln, and headlines blaring news about such disasters as the San Francisco earthquake, the bombing of Pearl Harbor and the assassination of John Kennedy.

Some of the newspapers are very valuable, but others, such as the Kennedy assassination newspapers, are not worth much, Ketchum said, explaining that too many people have saved copies from the day the president was shot.

Most old newspapers are valued from $5 to $35, although there are some worth hundreds and even thousands of dollars. One newspaper, the Sept. 19, 1787, edition of the Pennsylvania Packet and Daily Advertiser, is valued at about $150,000 because it contains the first public printing of the U.S. Constitution.

It is historic events that give the newspapers their value. Ones from the Civil War, especially those printed in the South, are very popular among collectors, Ketchum said. Newspapers dealing with American colonial times are also valuable.

Despite their age, Ketchum's old newspapers are easily read and in good condition. "The older the paper is, the better it lasts," Ketchum said, explaining the high rag content of older newspapers enhances their longevity.

In fact, it's the early signs of aging that enable collectors to identify reproductions.

Two of the best-known phony reproductions are of the April 15, 1865, New York Herald and the Jan. 4, 1800, Ulster County, N.Y., Gazette, Ketchum said.

The Ulster County paper tells the story of the death of George Washington. Only two known originals exist, but imitations of the paper first began being reprinted in 1825.

The New York Herald carries the account of the assassination of Lincoln. Reproductions are easily identified by their brown color and by the picture of a clean-shaven Lincoln. The original, one of which is owned by Ketchum, has no picture of Lincoln.

"The phonies are fairly easy to detect," Ketchum said. "There must be thousands and thousands who have copies (of the Ulster and New York papers) they think are priceless."

He offers other advice to those wishing to start collections, saying, "Final editions are not worth too much. I would say first editions are worth more."

Ketchum's interest in collecting began when he was 17 and working for the now-defunct Cleveland Times, writing about deaths and building permits.

"When I used to climb those iron stairs (at the newspaper)...the smell of the ink...to hear those presses running, it was sheer magic," he said.

But when the newspaper offered him a full-time job, he turned it down and went to college, completing his degree at Case Western University. Upon graduation, he traveled the world and wrote a book about his experiences in 1930, "Follow the Sun." He later joined a New York advertising agency and worked his way to vice president.

During that time, he continued to build his newspaper collection, but not until he retired in 1969 did he begin collecting full time. In recent years, he also has started writing a history of U.S. journalism and has completed it through the Civil War.

Argentine financier, family remain imprisoned

By DOUGLAS GRANT MINE

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Financier Juan Graiver, four members of his family and two associates remain in the jail where they have spent the last five years, even though an Argentine federal judge has ruled they should be let out.

The case illustrates the Argentine judiciary's loss of balancing power to the nation's executive branch — the military government.

Graiver, 69, who was penniless when he came here from Poland in 1931, and the others remain behind bars because the military ordered them to jail in the first place under the Argentina's state of siege regulations and only executive action can free them.

On July 19, Federal Judge Fernando Zavalia acquitted Juan Graiver, his wife Eva and his daughter-in-law Lidia Haydee Graiver along with two former employees of the family banking concern of charges that they were linked to leftist Montonero guerrillas who convulsed Argentina in the early 1970s.

Judge Zavalia also ordered the release of two other Graivers — son Isidoro and daughter-in-law Lidia Elba Graiver — while the case against them proceeds.

Zavalia said the fact that charges were ever brought against the acquitted five "in no way affects their good name and honor."

Juan Graiver began his new life in Argentina as a door-to-door salesman of pots and pans and through good investment and business acumen became wealthy. He is the father of David Graiver, the central figure in an international potboiler of multi-million dollar finance and intrigue.

David Graiver, who was part owner of La Opinion, the Buenos Aires newspaper published by exiled journalist Jacobo Timerman, supposedly died in a flaming plane crash in Mexico in 1976. The body recovered was so badly burned that it could not be identified with any certainty as that of David Graiver.

Thus, he was indicted in absentia two years later in New York City by a grand jury investigating the collapse of the American Bank and Trust Co., which Graiver bought into, allegedly with the guerrillas' money.

The bank collapsed weeks after the plane crash in Mexico.

Four others charged in the American Bank and Trust case were found guilty in 1979, but a Manhattan Supreme Court judge ruled there was no evidence that David Graiver was alive, hence he could not be tried.

Unconfirmed sightings of the pudgy, goateed young financier have been reported here and rumors abound that he has a new identity and is living somewhere with nearly $20 million in Montonero guerrilla cash.

When the military took over Argentina in 1976, his father, mother, wife, brother and sister-in-law were arrested, along with two Graiver associates who reportedly made "interest" payments of $130,000 a month to the Montoneros.

An armed forces tribunal sentenced Juan Graiver, his son Isodoro and Lidia Elba Graiver, David's wife, to 12 years in prison. The two employees were sentenced to 5 years, while Juan's wife and daughter-in-law Lidia Haydee got 3 years.

But last year the Supreme Court voided the tribunal's ruling, saying the panel had no jurisdiction in the case. The high court sent the matter to the federal judicial system.

During the peak of the Vietnam buildup, the commander of Hickam Air Force Base, Hawaii, announced a policy of personal exercise to improve the physical condition of men on the base. The next day, in the base exchange, an obviously overweight administrative officer was seen purchasing a set of barbells — and sheepishly asking the clerk to assist him in carrying them to his car.

My first day on the job as the general's driver, I overslept and was 15 minutes late picking him up for an important meeting. When I arrived at his quarters, he scowled and jumped into the back seat of the sedan. I tromped on the accelerator, causing the general to be thrown back in his seat, and I drove through town at breakneck speed, narrowly avoiding two collisions. Finally, the general broke the silence. "Private," he asked, "do you know the penalties for making a general late for a meeting?"

"No, sir," I gulped. Visions of firing squads danced in my head.

"Neither do I," he replied. "But I'll bet they're a helluva lot milder than for killing or maiming one!"

Wally was known around our Air Force base for his quick wit and brash clowning, but he gave the greatest performance of his enlistment the morning he failed to notice a passing second lieutenant. Obviously a newcomer to both the service and our base, the shavetail stopped and angrily demanded to know why he hadn't been saluted.

"Because — uh, it's Tuesday, sir," Wally replied, thinking fast. "Saluting isn't required on Tuesdays anymore." Sensing gullibility, he plunged recklessly onward. "There was a new base regulation last week. No. 847-5, I think. It's an attempt to promote greater understanding between the ranks."

Embarrassed by his apparent ignorance of base customs, the lieutenant mumbled a brief thanks and hurried on his way. Wally sighed in relief and left the scene even faster — wondering if the next man the lieutenant passed would be a captain or a colonel.

My husband retired after 20 years in the Air Force. After the retirement ceremonies at the base, we planned a reception at home for fellow pilots and their wives. To accommodate so many, we went to the officers club to borrow punch bowls and glasses.

With all the gleaming pieces stacked in the back of our jeep, we stopped at the base service station. As we pulled up to the pump, the attendant asked, "Gee, sir, someone getting married?"

A friend of mine had a frightening experience while going through paratrooper training. He collided in mid-air with another trooper, whose chute collapsed as a result. He grabbed the other fellow in a bear hug, and they rode the one good chute to safety. Commended for his quick thinking, my friend modestly admitted that he deserved no praise. "We had only one chute," he said, "and I wasn't about to let go to see if it was mine."

My girlfriends and I had just finished entertaining in a veterans hospital near Louisville, Ky., when I noticed a young soldier having great difficulty maneuvering his wheelchair. Afraid of offending him, I hesitated, then offered assistance.

"Oh, yes, thank you," he gasped. "Would you please take me to my ward?"

After traveling through what seemed miles of confusing corridors, we approached the double doors of a large room. He suddenly took control of the wheelchair, burst through the doors and, to the cheers of his bedridden buddies, shouted, "Hey, fellows, I brought you another one!"

Agency lobbying for civil defense

By The Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Two months ago, with the debate on nuclear war heating up across the country, the White House quietly directed the Federal Emergency Management Agency to cool its public affairs effort to sell civil defense.

Instead, FEMA, with cooperation from the executive branch, would undertake a low-key lobbying effort on Capitol Hill.

Experts, armed with charts, computer printouts and figures on the massive Soviet Union civil defense program, were to be dispatched to brief key legislators, particularly the undecided and those known to oppose any significant increase in expenditures for the protection of the American people in the event of nuclear war.

The new approach has been under way for a number of weeks and, together with an assist in the last several days from top White House aides, it appears to have paid off with a victory in the House vote on the fiscal 1983 defense authorization bill.

Late in the day on June 29, the House rejected by 240-163 an attempt to cut $108 million out of the $252 million President Reagan requested for civil defense in the year beginning next Oct. 1.

A White House official, who appeared not to want to exaggerate the impact of the new strategy for putting across the president's civil defense program, said only that "it may have helped".

He disclosed that William Clark, assistant to Reagan for national security affairs, had written a letter to congressional leaders urging support for the full program and that Edwin Meese, counselor to the president, made a number of telephone calls to Capitol Hill for the same end.

The battle over the president's seven-year, $4.2 billion civil defense program, which features plans to evacuate citizens from areas considered likely to be targets of an enemy missile attack, is far from over.

Appropriation of the $252 million now authorized will doubtless provoke another heated skirmish. Meanwhile, the low-key lobbying effort will proceed.

Tax plan elicits protest

WASHINGTON (AP) — A proposal in Congress that would require banks to withhold income taxes on interest earned in savings accounts would cost consumers billions of dollars, opponents of the plan say.

"Consumers are going to get hurt (by the proposal)," said Mal Nestlerode, executive vice president of the National Association of Federal Credit Unions. "Consumers are getting the short end of the stick."

Nestlerode and other industry spokesmen argue that the withholding plan — part of the tax package being considered by a Senate-House negotiating committee — would mean less money in savers' accounts on which to build interest.

But administration officials argue the proposal will increase revenue, without actually raising taxes.

Under the plan, all but small financial institutions would be required to withhold 10 percent of the interest most investors have accrued, starting Jan. 1. Corporations would have to withhold the same amount on dividends.

Although details have not been ironed out, the proposal would exempt low-income and elderly investors, and no withholding would be required on interest earnings under $100 a year.

Robert McCormick, an Oklahoma bank president who is head of the Independent Bankers Association of America, said, "We agree they ought to collect the taxes but there's got to be a better way than to withhold on every human being in the country."

An analysis done by New York's Citibank said, "The withheld interest would not be available, as it now is, for compounding in future quarters."

The loss to savers would run roughly $1.5 billion to $2 billion, according to Citibank estimates. The American Bankers Association released the Citibank report.

Moreover, opponents argue the withholding scheme will be expensive for institutions to put into effect and added costs will be passed on to consumers. "We're not going to make less," McCormick said.

Citibank puts the compliance costs at some $1.5 billion. "These costs would be passed right on to the depositor and the investor in the form of lower interest payments, extra service charges, special fees, etc.," said Citibank.

Willis Alexander of the ABA said the Treasury would miss out on taxes that investors would owe on the additional earnings from their money. He placed the amount of lost taxes on those potential earnings at up to $1 billion.

Egyptians want chin of Sphinx

MEXICO CITY (AFP) — The Egyptian delegation to a U.N. conference on cultural policies demanded earlier this week that Britain return the chin of the great Sphinx.

The Egyptian officials said at the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) meeting here that the return of the artifact, housed in London's British Museum, would help to stop the loss of Egyptian archeological treasures to other parts of the world.

The British delegation recently denied a similar request by Greece, whose culture minister, actress Melina Mercouri, had asked the British Museum to return large portions of the Parthenon's frieze, and a caryatid, a clothed female figure, from the Erechtheum on the Acropolis. The treasures are world-renowned as a part of the Elgin marbles.

In denying the request, a British official said large museums were a part of international heritage, and warned against excessive nationalism in cultural matters.

Business lunch in danger

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Thanks to Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., Washington's most savored tradition, the so-called "three-martini lunch," is in danger of being swallowed up. Dole obtained Senate passage of a surprise amendment that would slice in half the allowable tax deduction for business meals munched in one's own city.

Washington may not be able to stomach it.

Lunch is so important in Washington that one could walk half a block from the White House into the elegant Maison Blanche, and see, just for starters, an assistant to the president sharing a luscious business lunch with CBS correspondent Leslie Stahl.

The assistant was Elizabeth Dole, Robert Dole's wife.

"I very, very rarely have a business lunch," Elizabeth Dole said gamely, resting her fork on her avocado, hearts of palm, lettuce and tomato salad.

"Usually I eat off a tray at my desk."

Stahl added that they were "just gossiping."

Elizabeth Dole said that the effect of her husband's law will be that the three-martini lunch "will become a one-and-a-half-martini lunch." But she added that specifics of the bill "are not resolved yet."

Near the door, owner Tony Greco had stacked a pile of papers entitled "Maison Blanche Official Policy on Three Martini Lunch." Greco is against three martinis at lunch. ("I have never in 30 years in the business seen three martinis consumed at lunch.") But he is also against Robert Dole's legislation.

"All business allows you to deduct the tools of your trade. In Washington that's your brains and your mouth," he said.

"The restaurant provides an arena where you can exchange ideas on neutral ground. I think it civilizes people when you share a meal. More problems have been solved over lunch than in the halls of Congress or in the courts and at much less cost to the public."

Two attorneys from the Los Angeles law firm of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher (former employer of Attorney General William French Smith) were doing business at Maison Blanche last week with Luther H. Hodges Jr., chairman of the board of the National Bank of Washington.

Old Settlers Reunion to be held

Registration will begin at 9 a.m., followed by an official introduction and welcome. Morning music will be provided by the Sweet Ol' Boys and activities will include tobacco spitting, horseshoe pitching and quilting.

A barbecue lunch at $4.50 for persons under 70 years of age will be served from 11:50 a.m. to 1 p.m., after which a short business meeting will convene.

Afternoon events include a husband calling contest, lawn dart, three-leg race, washer pitching, and recognition of the eldest man and woman, persons with the most children and grandchildren, most authentic dress, person who traveled the greatest distance and couple married the longest.

A fiddlers' contest begins at 1:30 p.m. with cash awards. There will be no age or sex divisions.

A dance will be held from 8:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. in Dora Roberts Community Center with music provided by Ben Nix and the Boys. Given away during the dance will be a quilt and a nativity scene.

By GEORGE ZUCKER
Associated Press Writer

Unless you're in show business or writing bad checks, chances are your real name will serve you just fine.

Most of us get along without a nom de plume, alias or AKA. But in the 1950s, it seemed you could not work in radio if your full name exceeded three syllables.

In my first radio news job, the news director who hired me was Fred Heckman. I was introduced to him by a reporter named Rick Diamond.

The station's top disc jockey was Dick Summer. Another popular DJ was Jim Shelton. So was Bill Baker.

And Joan Evans.

Sometimes the three syllables are turned around.

The station's afternoon DJ was Easy Gwenn.

Of course, Dick Summer's real name was Richard Schwende. Jim Shelton really was James Undercoffer. And Joan Evans was born Beverly Potts.

I never could pronounce Rick Diamond's real name, which had at least twice the allowable syllables.

There were exceptions. Fred Heckman really was Fred Heckman.

Another was a talented broadcaster named Cameron Cornell, a veteran of the early days of television news. Remember the old DuMont Network?

Yep. His real name was Cameron Cornell.

When I went to work in radio news, my name qualified on the syllabic count. But it was woefully low on the recognition scale. "George who?" the program director asked.

That would never do. I would need, as it were, a pen name.

So I figured "Bill" would do as well as any for the one-syllable first-name. It was easy to say and hard to forget.

For the obligatory two-syllable surname, I took my mother's maiden name — Crandall. I became Bill Crandall.

At first, it tugged the ego to see Bill Crandall getting all the credit for George Zucker's work.

It was even worse cashing a check. Or explaining to a traffic cop why the name on my driver's license was different from all those press credentials I carried.

This dual identity would persist for three years until I went into wire service reporting in 1961 and Bill Crandall ceased to exist. The problem was I didn't leave town to change jobs.

For the next few months, my phone calls to people I had known for years would be burdened by explanations on why I was no longer Bill Crandall. This curious problem was noted in print one day by Lowell Nussbaum, the popular columnist for The Indianapolis Star.

The next day, I got a call from Frank Edwards, host of a nightly talk show on a local TV station. Would I be a guest? He thought the name-change problem was hilarious.

As on the Johnny Carson Show, the top-named guests are saved for later and something offbeat is used for openers. The VIP guest this evening would be singer Rosemary Clooney, at the height of her "Jambalaya" fame.

Since I was the offbeat serving, I went on first. Rosemary Clooney sat in the darkened studio and watched me make a fool of myself.

"How did you come up with the name, 'Bill Crandall'" Frank Edwards asked.

"It was my mother's maiden name," I answered.

The announcer sitting next to Edwards poked him in the arm and ad-libbed with a chuckle about people calling my mother "Bill."

I didn't get the joke until I watched the taped show at home that evening.

I hoped everyone would blame Bill Crandall.

Increasing defections plaguing Afghanistan army

PESHAWAR, Pakistan (AP) — Afghan army regulars are defecting in growing numbers now that a Soviet-led offensive against anti-government Moslem guerrillas has stalled in Afghanistan's strategic Panjsher Valley, according to a guerrilla spokesman here.

Mohammed es-Haq, spokesman for the Jamiat Islami Afghan guerrilla group in Peshawar, says about 300 Afghan army regulars have defected in the past two weeks. His claim could not be independently verified.

The Soviet-Aghan government offensive began in mid-May in an effort to wrest away guerrilla control of the valley, 70 miles north of Kabul, the Afghan capital. But the guerrillas held out, reportedly inflicting heavy losses on their enemy, and the fighting since has subsided.

Two men identified as Afghan army defectors turned up here recently, saying they had fled with 19 other privates of the 81st Division.

One of the two, identifying himself as Abdul Rahman, told in an interview of spending two weeks in the Panjsher Valley during the offensive.

"The food was poor but we had plenty of ammunition," he said. "We had so much ammo we were burying crates of it...

"The food was so bad that we subsisted on just a small piece of bread each day."

His comments were translated from Dari, an Afghan dialect, by an interpreter of the Jamiat Islami group, which said it is giving him shelter.

"We couldn't even brew tea because smoke from the fires would have given our positions away," Rahman continued. He added that he was under attack from the Mujahideen (Islamic holy warriors), as the Moslem rebels call themselves, for the entire two weeks he was in the valley.

Rahman said his unit decided it was better to risk being executed by the guerrillas than to stay where they were.

"We were told we would be mutilated and then killed if we were caught," he said.

Rahman, who gave his age as 39, said he was drafted into the regular army in mid-June, rounded up at dawn with 43 others from his village at Adraskan in northwestern Afghanistan and flown to Jalalabad, in Nangarhar Province near Pakistan. He added that about 1,000 Soviet troops were garrisoned there.

He said he received rudimentary military training which included instruction in firing a rifle and throwing hand grenades.

"We were not badly treated. It was just military life," he added.

Right-wing digest attacks Reagan's party lists

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's best friends are turning into his best enemies.

For the second time in half a year, the Conservative Digest has devoted a monthly issue to telling the president what he's doing wrong.

The criticism ranges from broad-based attacks on his economic and defense policies to a peek at the White House guest lists, and includes a list of artists and New York bankers who have been invited to White House parties.

"It seems that in its partying as well as its policy-making, the Reagan administration has become more and more like a pale imitation of past establishment regimes," the magazine editors wrote.

Larry Speakes, Reagan's chief spokesman, said the president has not read the current issue of the magazine. As for the entire thrust of its criticism, Speakes had this comment: "It ain't so."

The magazine immediately raised the ire of Peter Teeley, Vice President George Bush's press secretary. Bush has never been a darling of the conservatives.

"Some of those people have very little right to criticize the president," said Teeley, looking at the list of candidates they supported in 1980. "First, they were for Phil Crane (the Republican congressman from Illinois), they were for John Connally second, and they were for Ronald Reagan third. It's not as though they were lined up at the gates in 1980."

"They've got very short memories," he said.

In an introductory story, the Conservative Digest, published by direct-mail fund-raising wizard Richard A. Viguerie, said that "only 18 months into the Reagan presidency, there is a keen and growing feeling of disappointment among conservatives of all kinds all over America. The alarm bells are going off, but the question is, will Ronald Reagan listen?"

"The establishment Republicans on the White House staff are trying to muffle the alarm bells and are misreading the signals... The sad truth is that disenchantment with the Reagan presidency is now real and widespread. It is felt by conservatives of every stripe, from every element of the broad conservative coalition that put Reagan in the White House."

There is something of an echo quality about this.

It seems that there is a rule in presidential politics that goes like this: sometime in the second or third year of a president's term, he is fair game for his supporters, and they can begin their lament that he has not remained true to their ideals.

An optimistic Tom Brown gives stockholders positive report

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy—Business Writer

Officers of Tom Brown Inc. gave stockholders attending the company's annual meeting here Tuesday a positive outlook, fueled by the optimism of Brown himself, who jokingly admitted "there's no telling what we'd be doing now," if it were not for the "sobering influence" of some of his key people.

"I'm absolutely positive we're going to come out of this (economic slump) a stronger, healthier, better company, and we picked July 29, in-house, as the turning point. I assure you, if the sequence of events of the last three days will happen for another three months, we might have to have another special meeting," Brown told the group.

"There are many, many opportunities out there today for companies that have access to money. We have access to the funds and we are definitely not afraid to use them."

Four weeks ago, the company secured an additional $150 million in credit from the First National Bank of Midland for what TBI President Donald L. Evans termed a "special project." He would not go into details, however.

Evans told stockholders the company's fiscal year ended March 31, 1982, was "another banner year. From 1980 to 1982, the company's revenues were up from $74 million to $217 million, almost a triple." This represents a 55 percent jump over fiscal 1981.

In the same two year period, operating income almost quadrupled, cash flow increased by 3.5 times, and net earnings quadrupled.

After the meeting, Evans said for the current quarter ending Aug. 31, he foresees positive cash flow, while earnings are "tough to call." In the last half of calendar 1982, he sees an upturn, based on the fact that inquiries, requests for drilling bids and permits have picked up recently.

While the domestic drilling industry has experienced the most precipitous drop in history, the country is still in the midst of its most serious non-military crisis ever, Evans said, implying there is still much to be done to assure America's energy independence.

He still stands by his prediction that within the next three years, more than 100,000 wells will be drilled a year. "How fast the industry gets to that level is a function of how much money costs, what the price of oil does, and what the economics look like, but it's going to happen," he said after the meeting.

Tom Brown Inc. is structuring itself to take full advantage of the current downturn, which presents unique opportunites, Brown and Evans said. The company's strong balance sheet and availability of cash give it the tools necessary to do so.

The company is not going to acquire lots of supposedly inexpensive equipment and stockpile it for the future, however, Brown said.

For the last two years, the company's rig utilization rate has been above 90 percent, but by May of this year it had fallen to 45.5 percent, he said. Tom Brown Inc. anticipated the downturn and stopped all capital expenditures in late 1981.

"Quite frankly, in 1980 and '81 the industry grew too fast," Evans said. "Efficiency went through the floor and costs went through the roof. For example, we found that 40 percent of our field hands had averaged 12 months or less with the company."

The company has been moving its employees down to levels where the job and the person are more closely matched, Evans said.

In addition, Tom Brown Inc. has returned almost exclusively to drilling contracts on a footage basis. "This is where we shine. We have lead the industry in this for 27 years," he said.

Tom Brown management has decided when drilling activity goes up, "we're going to crank it up to 20 or 22 rigs and leave it right there. That's the amount we think we can run efficiently with the number of people we've got," Evans said.

The company has 30 land-based rigs; only about one third of them are working at the present. Evans said rigs not in use would be left in the company's yard in anticipation of drilling activity picking up significantly in mid-to-late 1983.

Another major step taken to combat the crunch was to sell the Giddings, Texas, yard, and consolidate the East Texas and Permian Basin areas of activity, he said.

The fiscal '83 exploration program will probably exceed last year's all-time high for the company, Brown said, because he feels this time period is one where wells can be drilled more cheaply than usual.

William Chunn, president of the company's Houston-based drilling tool subsidiary, Oncor, told the stockholders belt tightening was taking place, following a record year when sales and profits exceeded all expectations. Oncor's revenues more than doubled, from $42 million to $100 million.

Since Oncor's products are sold to drilling rigs, the current downturn will affect the company's fiscal 1983 results, Chunn said. He remained optimistic about the company's market position for the long term, however. Oncor is the second largest manufacturer of drill collars in the free world.

Tom Brown's board of directors has initiated moves to spin off Oncor as a separate company, so "the full potential of both companies might be best achieved," according to Tom Brown's annual report. The proposed divestiture has been put on the back burner until market conditions improve.

Fraser departs from policy

When First National Bank President Charles Fraser addressed the annual meeting of Tom Brown Inc. stockholders Tuesday, it was a departure from the bank's longstanding policy. Fraser spoke at Tom Brown's request, however, in order to give an analysis of the energy economy and Tom Brown's role in it, and to dispel some rumors about the company and the bank.

While he said he didn't want to appear as a "cheerleader," Fraser was very positive about the company and the bank.

FNB recently invited some engineers and officers of the company's key creditors to review reservoir data at Tom Brown, Fraser said. As a result of that meeting, rumors were apparently started that either Tom Brown or the bank was in danger of going bankrupt, he said.

"As a matter of fact, as a result of that meeting, we issued a $150 million line of credit to Tom Brown Inc., exclusive of Oncor, for a special project of the company."

With regard to the bank, Fraser mentioned its recent equity offering of $30 million. "I don't know of any better way to express to you the condition of our bank. The stock will be sold, and it will give the First National Bank the capital it needs to continue to grow with the energy business.

"I remember back in 1956 when we loaned the first loan to Tom Brown, for $15,000. Our bank has been there during the slowdown in the 1960s, during the oil embargo in 1973...the decade of the '80s offers tremendous opportunity to anyone who handles their energy business right.

"We are gearing ourselves to go forward."

Because of the oil boom two years ago, a false economy developed with artificially high prices and demand.

"It should not have occurred," he said. "As a result, the auto industry, the Reagan administration, and banks are primary targets of rumors."

Fraser said the first impulse of bank personnel upon hearing negative rumors is to be angry, but in the final analysis, rumors don't matter because they are not true.

Steel negotiations begun

By LORRAINE CICHOWSKI
AP Business Writer

American and European officials have begun a new round of talks aimed at resolving a steel dispute between the two continents. Meanwhile, International Harvester Co. faced a tough challenge in getting creditors to accept a new debt restructuring plan.

U.S. government sources, asking not to be identified, said Tuesday there was a general feeling of optimism that a steel agreement was possible.

The U.S. government ruled in June that seven European nations had unfairly subsidized steel exports to the United States. Under that ruling, special import duties will be levied against steel imports unless agreement settling the dispute can be reached by Aug. 24.

Etienne Davignon, vice chairman of the European Economic Community, is leading the Common Market delegation in the talks with Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige and other U.S. officials.

Published reports have said the Europeans apparently are willing to reduce their share of the U.S. steel market from the current 6.4 percent to about 5.8 percent but that American officials are seeking a bigger concession.

In other steel news, the United Steelworkers union said it would delay issuing a feasability study on employee stock ownership of McLouth Steel Corp., the nation's 11th-largest steelmaker. The report was delayed until Cyrus Tang, head of Tang Industries, decides whether he wants to acquire the firm.

Meanwhile, International Harvester's latest proposal to lighten the burden of its $4.2 billion debt faced tough going before the farm-machinery maker's creditors. Harvester, which expects to lose $1 billion this year, already has restructured its debt twice.

Analysts said the new restructuring plan likely will undergo significant changes before it meets the approval of the company's 200 creditors.

Also Tuesday, as experts pondered how long recent declines in short-term interest rates would last, some rates began to inch back up, largely because of fears over enormous borrowing needs of the federal government.

The rate on one-year Treasury bills rose one-third of a percentage point in secondary trading to 11.05 percent. Long-term bond prices, which move inversely to interest rates, lost $12.50 for every $1,000 face value.

Bank of New York officials issued a report saying growth in the size of Treasury Department financings over the next year could be more than the markets can handle. It said weekly Treasury bill auctions could top $12.5 billion by March.

On Tuesday, the Treasury auctioned $6 billion in three-year notes at an average annual yield of 13.17 percent. That compared with an average yield of 14.17 percent at the previous auction, May 4.

Treasury borrowing in the last six months of the year is expected to near $100 billion.

"Prospective growth of such magnitude in Treasury financing operations runs the risk of producing severe congestion in all but the most favorable of market situations," the report said.

AFL-CIO heads knock budget admendment

NEW YORK (AP) — AFL-CIO leaders, calling President Reagan's balanced budget amendment "an attempt to debase the Constitution," say they expect Democratic allies in Congress to thwart the proposal.

Members of the federation's executive council, who assailed congressional Democrats last year for failing to stop Reagan's budget and tax-cutting initiatives, said Tuesday "the only way to balance the budget is to balance the economy."

The amendment, scheduled for a vote in the Senate today, occupied much of the labor leaders' attention and dominated a news conference by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland during the first session of a three-day policy-making meeting.

The amendment would have to be approved by two-thirds of the House and Senate and then ratified by 38 states to become part of the Constitution.

The AFL-CIO leader said that if enacted, the amendment would "saddle the political, legislative and economic life of this country with a burden that will plague and haunt us for years to come."

Reagan, he said, "like the Wizard of Oz, has chosen to raise smokescreen of the balanced budget amendment" to obscure historically high federal deficits from last year's tax cut.

"The walls and accouterments of the Senate are streaked with yellow," Kirkland said. "There are senators and congressmen who know the enormity of what they're about to perpetrate ... but out of sheer fear and political opportunism, are about to do it anyway."

The AFL-CIO chief called the amendment "the greatest act of political cowardice and chicanery in modern history."

Noting that the federal budget would not be brought into balance for several years after passage of the amendment, Kirkland challenged Reagan to veto any fiscal 1983 deficit budget and resubmit a balanced budget to Congress.

Robert F. Bonitati, a presidential labor adviser attending the meeting as Reagan's emissary, said "many leaders of organized labor don't like it that their agenda is not our agenda. I think you have to understand there's a lot of politics involved here."

Under the proposed amendment, a balanced budget wouldn't be required until two fiscal years after the amendment's ratification. It has been projected that even if Congress approved the amendment this session, the earliest it would take effect would be for fiscal 1986.

Kirkland called the proposal the "second most irresponsible legislative act of modern times, the first being "the great raid on the Treasury" resulting from last year's tax cut, which will cost the government about $750 billion in revenue in the next five years.

In its midyear economic review last week, the administration projected a $115 billion budget deficit in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, but various officials later acknowledged it will probably be higher. The Congressional Budget Office has forecast a fiscal 1983 red-ink figure ranging between $140 and $150 billion.

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 200 members of the steel and auto worker unions picketed the White House at 4 a.m. today to "wake up the president" to the impact his economic program is having on unemployment.

Marching on the sidewalk under light provided by television news crews and White House lawn floodlights, the demonstrators chanted slogans that called for more jobs and reversals in administration economic policies.

"I don't think we expect the President of the United States to come out to the fence and say good morning, but what we're trying to say is that both the president and country ought to wake up to what's going on," said Kenny Kovack, a steel lobbyist and organizer of the noisy but orderly demonstration.

"The president should extend unemployment compensation funds, restore spending for government programs and turn around that unbelievable tax cut that deepened the budget deficit," Kovack said.

The demonstrators, most of whom came by bus from nearby Baltimore, tried to raise a ruckus mostly for the benefit of dozens of reporters who turned out for the event.

Interest rate declines are cuase for optimism

By TOM REDBURN
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Spreading declines in short-term interest rates, spurred by recent actions of the Federal Reserve Board, have sparked growing optimism that such rates will fall further and faster than earlier expected, analysts said Tuesday.

But there is little evidence, they warned, that the erosion of short-term borrowing costs will produce anytime soon the substantial drop in long-term corporate bond rates and home mortgage costs that would help start the economy on a vigorous recovery from the current recession.

"I think the underlying trend for the bank prime rate is pointing down," said A. Gary Shilling, who heads his own economic consulting concern in New York. "But if you look deeper, I think you will find that the real rate on long-term bonds is likely to remain stubbornly high for years to come."

Because it substantially reduces their borrowing costs, the reduction in short-term rates is a welcome relief for companies struggling for cash to pay their bills and hard-pressed savings institutions searching for lower-cost deposits.

But, as long as bond rates and mortgage rates remain stuck at their high levels, corporations will be reluctant to make long-range investments and the construction industry will remain mired in its worst slump since the Depression, economists say.

After the Fed last Friday cut the discount rate, the fee it charges on loans to banks and savings institutions, the banking industry moved swiftly to establish a new, lower prime rate at 15 percent. The prime, the rate on which banks peg their loans to business borrowers of short-term money, was stuck stubbornly between 16 percent and 16.5 percent from February through the middle of July. Now, however, several analysts believe that the prime will drop as low as 14 percent by the end of the month and to 13 percent by fall.

Meanwhile in the fifth consecutive weekly decline, rates plummeted at Monday's auction of short-term Treasury bills to their lowest levels in almost two years.

But lenders are still wary of a possible resurgence of inflation, continuing volatility in the supply of and demand for credit, and the looming prospect of years of huge federal budget deficits, analysts said. All these factors, they said, contribute to maintaining high interests rates on long-term loans.

Corporate borrowing costs on long-term bonds, for example, have fallen slightly in the last few weeks, but they still remain above 14 percent for highly rated issues, about the same as such loans were yielding at the beginning of the year.

Home mortgage rates also remain at levels far out of reach of most pot3ntial borrowers. The average rate nationally for a conventional loan on a new single-family home, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board reported Tuesday, was 17.22 percent at the end of June, up slightly from the previous month.

Although mortgage rates have fallen a bit since then, they have not fallen anywhere near as much as short-term rates have dropped.

Saxon doesn't make payment

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Saxon Oil Co. said it did not meet its July 31 deadline for making a $16.8 million loan payment at its principal lending bank, InterFirst Bank Dallas, The Daily Oklahoman reported in its Wednesday editions.

InterFirst has said its Saxon loan is fully secured by virtually all of the firm's assets, listed at $113 million in financial statements.

Much of the assets are natural gas in the ground in the Fletcher area, where producers have had major problems completing wells, the newspaper said.

The price of deep gas has dropped from a high of $9 per thousand cubic feet a few months ago to $5 per mcf in recent weeks, the paper reported.

The bank was not commenting Tuesday on Saxon's failure to meet the pay schedule worked out under its latest credit arrangement. The defaulted payment included principal and interest toward its outstanding $58 million loan.

Granted on June 30, the latest postponement was at least the third extension InterFirst had ceded to Saxon since January.

The oil company said negotiations continue with InterFirst Corp., the bank holding company, for possibly more time and restructuring of the debt.

The total Saxon debt is $13.6 million more than the bank's second quarter earnings of $44.4 million, the Oklahoman quoted a recent financial statement from the bank.

Little harm at Wyoming spill

BYRON, Wyo. (AP) — A preliminary inspection indicates a massive crude oil spill in northern Wyoming has caused little damage to waterfowl in the area, although it may be too soon to tell.

"We've seen a few birds that had oil on them, but we don't have a number because we couldn't catch them," said Wyoming Game and Fish Department spokesman Bob Gurney.

The spill occurred early Monday morning or late Sunday night when a 12-inch Platte Pipe Line Co. southwest of Byron broke, spewing about 6,000 barrels of oil — 225,000 gallons — into a private irrigation ditch that drains into Whistle Creek, the Shoshone River and Yellowtail Reservoir.

Gurney manages the 19,000-acre Yellowtail Habitat Unit that straddles the contaminated Shoshone River above Lovell. The unit consists of state and federal land reserved for wildlife habitat.

He said four Game and Fish workers surveyed the river from Whistle Creek to Yellowtail Reservoir by air boat Tuesday. They saw some waterfowl with oil on them but found no individual birds that had been killed or badly hurt by the oil slick, he said.

The equipment used to treat oil-soaked birds after a massive oil spill in the North Platte River in April 1980 has been brought to the site of the new spill, he said.

"All the stuff they had down at the Glenrock spill arrived this afternoon," Gurney said. "We would have used it today but we didn't find any sick birds — at least none we could catch."

Game and Fish workers were to search the river for oil-soaked birds again today, he said, and treat any they find.

For the moment, however, Gurney was mildly optimistic.

"We're really at a good time of year for this to happen, if it had to happen," he said. "We're not in any migration period and there just aren't that many waterfowl in here."

The situation may also have been helped because the Shoshone was running high and fast, dispersing the spilled oil.

Jake Strohman, of the State Department of Environmental Quality, called it one of the largest inland oil spills in U.S. history, and officials said they still don't know why the line ruptured.

The oil made its way into Whistle Creek, then down the creek about 15 miles to the Shoshone. The river carried the oil about 20 miles to the reservoir and about a quarter of a mile into the man-made lake, officials said.

Marathon Oil Co. spokesman Bill Ryder said the break was repaired about 9 a.m. Monday, about the same time it was reported to the state Department of Environmental Quality. He refused to confirm a state water quality official's estimate that 6,000 barrels of oil spilled.

Shelby may soon design Chryslers

By PAUL RICHTER
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

GARDENA, Calif. — Carroll Shelby, the one-time race car driver who designed high-performance Ford Cobras and Mustangs during the 1960s, may soon be designing high-performance cars for Chrysler Corp.

Chrysler engineers have been talking to Shelby, 59, for two years about designing high-performance front-wheel drive cars, it was disclosed Tuesday. A decision on whether he will be hired as a consultant should come within the month, said Moon Mullins, spokesman for Chrysler.

If he works for Chrysler, it would mean a reunion for Shelby and Chrysler Chairman Lee A. Iacocca, a former president of Ford Motor Co. who is generally credited as the "father" of the successful first Mustangs of the 1960s.

Shelby, a native Texan who operates a number of businesses from offices in this Los Angeles suburb, was unavailable for immediate comment. An aide said Shelby has stated that he will not work for Chrysler if he is limited to designing only the exterior of automobiles.

"I want to build cars that are driving machines that I conceive," Shelby said in an interview in this week's Automotive News. "If I have to work with stripes or mirrors, I'm not interested."

High-performance cars such as the Cobra and Shelby Mustang saw their heyday in the 1960s, but fell from public favor due to sharply increased insurance premiums and gas prices. The powerful high-performance cars of the 1960s averaged about 10 miles to the gallon. The Cobra was the fastest car ever mass-produced, reaching speeds of more than 140 miles per hour.

Stockman testifies administration to seek additional cuts

By JOHN H. AVERILL
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Budget Director David A. Stockman testified Tuesday that the Reagan administration would seek additional cuts in social programs next year in an effort to reduce budget deficits.

Under sometimes stormy questioning by the Senate Budget Committee, Stockman said the administration would ask Congress to curb "excessive growth" in benefit programs. He mentioned no specific program but Social Security appeared certain to be a major target.

Stockman's testimony came as Department of Defense officials said the administration would propose a Pentagon budget of about $247 billion for the 1984 fiscal year. Excluding the effects of inflation, that would be 11 percent more than the $209 billion in defense spending proposed in the fiscal 1983 military budget now before Congress.

If approved by Congress, the $247 billion budget would restore military spending to the level the administration announced last January. President Reagan's subsequent budget compromises with Congress raised the prospect that military spending would drop below the 7 percent annual increase the president has aid is vital to rebuild U.S. defenses.

During Stockman's testimony, both Democrats and Republicans on the Senate committee took issue with the president's statement at his news conference last week that he did not feel bound to hold defense spending to levels he had previously agreed to for fiscal 1984 and 1985.

Defending the president's position, Stockman said that Reagan reserved the right to shift money away from domestic to defense programs while staying within overall congressional budget ceilings.

That prompted Sen. Mark Andrews, R-N.D., to accuse Stockman of coming "down neatly on both sides of the fence." He said that the administration was taking a "slip, slide and duck" approach to defense spending.

Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., said that a question of trust was involved when the president moves away from defense spending ceilings he had previously accepted.

Chiles said that it appeared that "the president will make a deal and say he is going to approve something to get Congress to pass it and once the deal is made he's not bound" by it.

Stockman's assertion that further domestic spending cuts will be sought in 1983, coupled with the disclosure of plans for increased defense outlays, appeared likely to trigger a new "guns-vs.-butter" battle next year.

Gorton asked what the administration intended to do about automatic cost-of-living allowances that are built into federal entitlement programs, of which Social Security is a major component.

"Are we assured," Gorton inquired, "that after the election is safely past the administration will come up with measures which ... will very very significantly reduce the growth rate in entitlement programs?"

"I certainly know the administration will be proposing measures to deal with the problem," Stockman replied. "As a practical matter, it will be necessary in the 1984 budget ... to substantially reduce non-defense spending beyond what we have done already to close the budget deficits gap."

Stockman appeared before the committee to discuss the administration's midyear economic review made public last Friday, which forecast a fiscal 1983 budget deficit of $115 billion. That compares with the deficit of $141 billion to $151 billion predicted by the bipartisan Congressional Budget Office.

Sen. Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., called Stockman's forecasts "phony, dishonest and false figures." He said even some of the president's Cabinet officers, including Secretary of the Treasury Donald T. Regan, "wouldn't be associated with the projections."

Stockman, citing "economic uncertainties" and doubts about what Congress will do about spending cuts and proposed tax increases, said that "anybody would be within their rights to say the deficit will be $20 billion higher."

Beneficial agrees to sell subsidiary

DALLAS (AP) — Beneficial Finance Corp. says it has reached an agreement in principle to sell its $2.1 billion subsidiary, First Texas Savings Association, to a group of private investors primarily from Texas.

Beneficial said it would not disclose the amount the investment group has agreed to pay for the Dallas-based thrift institution, which reported losses of $19.1 million in the first half of 1982 after 1981 losses of $28 million.

Beneficial termed the shortfall "absolutely awful" in its 1981 annual report.

The investment group is headed by Houston businessman J. Livingston Kosberg, who said the investors "have a great deal of confidence in the company and its management team."

Beneficial said Monday that sale of the loss-plagued thrift institution, when final, would result in a one-time write-off of $3 per share. Industry analysts said that disclosure means that Beneficial sold First Texas at a substantial loss.

Kosberg noted that First Texas has been suffering a negative cash flow like many thrifts because of a loss of simple savings accounts.

"We see this as a long-term investment," he said. "We essentially approve of the direction that First Texas is going and we have a great deal of confidence in the Texas economy."

The investment group will purchase available First Texas stock as indivjduals, Kosberg said.

Wage-price spiral slows

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

The wage-price spiral has definitely been slowed down this year — but it's too early to conclude that the "capital" has been put back in "capitalism."

Wage gains have moderated in the recession — at great cost to the economy — and some economists are optimistic that, at last, the inflationary wage structure of the last 15 years has been smashed. If the trend continues, entrepreneurship will once again be remunerative, and the U.S. economy can start on the road to price stability.

Among the optimists is Allen Sinai economist of Data Resources, Inc., Lexington, Mass. "The 'back' of the price-wage-price spiral of 1965-1980 has been broken," said Sinai. "Inflation is permanently in single digits, with the key to sustained improvement the performance on wages in 1982 and 1983."

Growth in compensation per hour, which normally rose between 9 and 10 percent each year from 1974 through 1981, will grow at only 7.5 percent this year, 7.3 next year and 7.8 in 1984, predicted Sinai.

Productivity growth, which was negative for three of the four years from 1978 through 1981, will drop again this year (minus 0.6 percent), then rise 2.2 percent next year and 1.9 in 1984, predicted Sinai.

All this means that, according to his optimistic scenario, growth in unit labor costs will be only 5 percent next year and 5.8 in 1984 — versus 12.2 in 1974, 10.4 in 1979 and 10.3 in 1980.

Joining in the enthusiasm is George Cruikshank of New York's Morgan Guaranty Trust: "The case for more than just a cyclical easing in inflation is bolstered by changes in wage patterns. In the past year, flexibility in wage-rate setting has increased notably," said Cruikshank.

"U.S. price and wage behavior in earlier years characteristically had been unresponsive to economic conditions. This made inflation difficult to reduce once it became embedded in the system. Although evident also in prices, unresponsiveness was particularly noticeable in wage rates. A sharp break in wage patterns in a number of industries, however, suggests that this rigidity is decreasing. Behind the new flexibility, evident in both union and non-union areas, is an increase in the importance of competition in the wage-setting process. During the past year, the increase in wage rates has fallen to its lowest point since 1976 — and given the tendency of wage rates to lag the economic cycle, it is likely that some further slowing will occur."

Labor contracts negotiated during the first half of 1982 provide for an all-industries first-year median wage increase of 7.6 percent — down from 9.8 percent for the same period of 1981, according to the Washington, D.C.-based Bureau of National Affairs (BNA).

In cents per hour, this year's first-half median wage rise was 60 cents, down from 73 cents in the same period of 1981 (not including cost-of-living adjustments). The figures are bassd on the BNA's survey of 689 contracts covering 50 or more workers.

For management, the brightest picture was in construction: The first-half wage gain was 75.6 cents an hour, less than half the $1.565 for the first half of 1981.

However, the median wages in health care (historically unresponsive to market pressures) went up 9.7 percent — the biggest gain. In cents per hour, the highest median was $1.21 in airline industry contracts. Cost-of-living (COLA) provisions were included in 18 percent of all contracts in the first half of 1982 — down from 24 percent over the same period of 1981.

"In the unionized sector, recent pacts have substantially curtailed wage and benefit growth in the auto, meatpacking, and trucking industries at least through 1983. Contracts negotiated in the rubber and petroleum industries provide for wage increases in 7 percent range, which is lower than the increases provided for the last time parties negotiated," said Jack W. Lavery of Wall Street's Merrill Lynch Economics.

However, Lavery isn't doing handsprings: "With the possible exception of the steel industry, it is unlikely that there will continue to be 'givebacks' of the magnitude seen over the past 10 months," he said.

"We project that compensation increases will remain roundly 7 percent into 1983. Combined with a slight cyclical improvement in productivity, this implies restraint in labor cost growth. However, the long unwinding of the wage price spiral may be subsiding," said Lavery.

Thus, the gains for capital may be shortlived. According to Mary J. Wilson of Boston's David L. Babson & Co., Inc., labor (wages, salaries, fringes) constituted 66 percent of national income from 1947 through 1951. Capital (profits, dividends, proprietorship income, rents and interest) got 34 percent.

But as capitalism has declined, labor's piece of the pie has soared. During the first quarter of this year, labor was getting 77 percent and capital 23 percent of national income — and, worse, interest is getting more and more of capital's share. (In 1947-1951, interest got 1 percent and equity 33 percent. Now interest is getting 10 percent and equity 13 percent.)

Said Wilson, "For the system as a whole, there is nowhere to hide. Short of sending capital out of the country in search of better prospects, investors can only boost their returns by seeking ways to penetrate the labor share of income."

And not all are optimistic. Said Michael K. Evans of Washington, D.C.'s Evans Economics, "Wage rates are expected to increase 6 percent next year, about the same as this year, but we no longer expect the further decline which would be part and parcel of a gradual reduction in the long-term underlying rate of inflation.

Cubs may have Pryce(d) Midland out of TL race

San Antonio's Lemmie Miller, right, is safe on a play at third base Tuesday night at Cubs Stadium as Midland Cubs third baseman Fritz Connally waits for the throw. Miller went on to score in the fourth inning on Sid Bream's single in an 8-7 Texas League win over the Cubs.

Dodgers drop Midland to third place

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

It was bound to happen sooner or later.

When Ken Pryce arrived at Cubs Stadium for pre-game workouts before the Midland-San Antonio game Tuesday, he found out two things he wasn't expecting.

The first surprise was a promotion. On Friday, with bags packed, Pryce will be leaving for the Chicago Cubs' AAA farm team in Des Moines, Iowa, where he will be placed in the starting rotation with the Iowa Cubs.

And, so he would be ready for a start on Sunday for Iowa, he was informed that he would open the series against the Dodgers instead of scheduled starter Mike King.

"I found out about it (going to Iowa) when I got to the field today," said Pryce, "I was having a good year all year and was wondering if they were going to make the move. Since we're in the pennant race here, I wanted to help this team do it. I'm glad they picked me though."

UNFORTUNATELY, Pryce's farewell performance for Midland wasn't what he would have liked it to be as the Dodgers exploded in the fourth and fifth innings for five runs and eventually went on to post an 8-7 Texas League victory.

Pryce wasn't exactly prepared for the Tuesday night start and the result was the six earned runs he gave up in four innings of duty.

"I wasn't scheduled to pitch today," he said. "It was a spur of the moment thing. They shuffled the lineup around so I would be ready to pitch on Sunday. It's been five or six days since I've pitched and I haven't been throwing, not even playing catch.

"Mike King was scheduled to pitch but I was sent in. It's happened to me before and I've done well. No excuses though. The team spotted ma a four-run lead and I couldn't hold it. We played good baseball tonight but my pitching wasn't up to par and they got to Carlos (Gil) a bit."

Though he'll no longer be a part of the Midland organization, Pryce's best wishes will remain. "We've got a good team here," he said, "they're a bunch of great guys. I hope they can put it together and get to the playoffs."

Losing Pryce "is definitely going to hurt," said Cubs Manager Brian Murphy who also named his replacement. "We have Ed Moore coming in. He was with us in spring training when he injured his knee and has been rehabilitating since. He's pitched some AAA and he was here for awhile last year. I don't think we'll start him right away. We'll check the knee out for awhile."

AFTER GIVING up singles to the first two batters he faced and then working his way out of the inning, Pryce was handed a 2-0 lead when Henry Cotto led off the bottom of the first inning with an infield single and moved to third when Dodger starter Tom Klawitter made a wild pickoff throw to first base. Mike Kelley brough Cotto home with a deep infield shot of his own to shortstop Alex Tavaras whose throw to first was a little late. A double by Joe Carter into left field brought Kelley home before Klawitter settled down to get the next three batters.

Tom Beyers cut Midland's lead to 2-1 in the top of the second when he connected for his seventh home run of the year but the Cubs came up with three more runs in the third for a 5-1 lead.

Kelley opened the third inning attack with a triple into deep right-center and scored on Carter's ground out to short. One out later Fritz Connally walked and was brought home on Mike Diaz' double to center. Carlos Lezcano followed with an RBI single to center to end the scoring in the frame.

Three consecutvie extra-base hits by the Dodgers in the fourth inning, which produced two runs, and three straight singles for one run in the fifth with no outs ended Pryce's final tour of duty in Midland. Carlos Gil came in to relieve, and gave up a sacrifice fly and an RBI single before getting the Dodgers out.

The runs gave San Antonio a 6-5 lead which Midland was never able to overcome. Pryce, who was credited with all six runs, ended up as the pitcher of record and lost, dropping his record to 6-5.

Gil gave up two runs, Bilardello scored in the sixth and then hit a solo home run in the eighth, his 15th of the year, to give the Dodgers an 8-5 lead. Carter closed the gap in the bottom of the eighth with his 19th homer of the year, a two-run shot, but the Cubs' attack faltered in the final frame giving San Antonio the 8-7 win.

The loss dropped the Cubs into third place in the Texas League's Western Division with a 17-21 record, 2½ games behind the Dodgers and ½-game behind El Paso, a 10-3 winner of Amarillo.

Tonight, the Cubs will host the Dodgers in Game 2 of the five-game stand with Mike King, 6-10, facing John Franco, 9-4.

CUB NOTES: The Cubs played, except for one miscue, a sound game. In the second inning, Diaz took a pitch from Pryce and immediately fired it to first baseman Carmelo Martinez to catch Bilardello off the bag to end the inning...Connally made a diving stab to his right on a hard shot down the third base line in the seventh, came up with it and threw it to Martinez who mishandled the throw allowing Tony Brewer to reach first. Brewer didn't stay there long as Ed Amalung hit a second shot back at Connally who fielded the ball to start the Cubs second double play of the game...The first double play came in the third inning, Dave Owen to Javier Fierro to Martinez...The third came in the eighth when Martinez reached out to his left and hauled in a Tavaras line drive. German Rivera, who was on first, broke for second on the hit and had no chance of getting back to first. Martinez thought about throwing the ball to Gil who was covering the bag but opted to take it himself. He walked back to first to complete the play...The Cubs had a new coach Tuesday night, Max Patkin, known as the Crown Prince of Baseball. Patkin coached first base two innings and third once and, before leaving, gave the Cubs a hitting clinic, which was enjoyed by the 1,549 fans in the park.

Steinbrenner strikes again

Clyde King replaces Gene Michael as Yankee boss

NEW YORK (AP) — The managerial merry-go-round in the three-ring circus which passes for the New York Yankees shows no sign of slowing down.

George Steinbrenner, the impatient owner who discards managers the way Elizabeth Taylor goes through husbands, struck again following Tuesday night's embarrassing 1-0, 14-2 doubleheader loss to the Chicago White Sox which dropped the Yankees into a fifth-place tie with Detroit in the American League East, eight games from the top with a 50-50 record.

Gene Michael's second term as manager came to a sudden end, the ninth managerial change — involving six people, three of them two-time losers — since Steinbrenner purchased the club in 1973.

THE NEW man on the hot seat — the Yankees' third manager this season — is Clyde King, former pilot of the San Francisco Giants and Atlanta Braves and one of five pitching coaches Steinbrenner has gone through this year in his madcap efforts to right what appears to be a sinking ship.

According to Steinbrenner, the 57-year-old King is taking over "reluctantly, but willingly" on an interim basis as a favor to the owner.

King will be at the helm for tonight's twi-nighter against the White Sox. If it follows the same script as Tuesday night's debacle, he may not last long, even though Steinbrenner said King would be the "interim manager for the balance of the season."

Since he put together the group which purchased the Yankees from CBS in 1973 — and inherited Ralph Houk as manager — Steinbrenner has gone through Bill Virdon, Billy Martin (twice), Bob Lemon (twice), Dick Howser, Michael (twice) and now King. Houk was the only one who left more or less voluntarily.

In the game of musical chairs, Virdon replaced Houk, Martin replaced Virdon, Lemon replaced Martin, Martin replaced Lemon, Howser replaced Martin, Michael replaced Howser, Lemon replaced Michael and Michael replaced Lemon. Now it's King's turn.

HOW LONG he will last is anybody's guess. After all, Steinbrenner promised Lemon a full season following last year's World Series loss to the Los Angeles Dodgers, only to fire him April 25, just 14 games into the 1982 campaign. He brought back Michael, who had been announced as the manager for 1983.

The 44-year-old Michael lasted 86 games, leaving with a 44-42 record after Lemon's 6-8 mark.

Besides the managerial change, Steinbrenner also unleashed another blast at some of his high-priced players. Without naming names, he hinted that some of them had better produce ... or else.

The owner's surprise sacking of Michael came on the heels of an announcement over the public address system during Tuesday night's second game that fans could exchange their tickets for any of six selected games later in the season.

"During the game," Steinbrenner explained, "the fans sitting under me were chanting, 'Refund! Refund!' and it occurred to me it might be a good idea from a public relations standpoint. It wasn't meant to embarrass the team. That had already been done. But the scoreboard wasn't working, and with thousands of people leaving (the Yankees were losing 9-1 at the time), we had to announce it."

But catcher Rick Cerone, one of Steinbrenner's most vocal sparring partners, called it "bad timing right in the middle of a ballgame when we're on the field."

AND RELIEF ace Rich Gossage added: "You're asking me what goes on in that man's head? I can't tell you that. But that's not the embarrassing part; what's embarrassing is the way we played. Maybe it doesn't show, but we've got a lot of proud guys on this club."

Houston wants Reeves' arm, not his scrambling

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Quarterback Ron Reeves is a little faster afoot now than when he had to be pushed down the aisle in a wheelchair to get married.

But if he makes it as a longshot with the Houston Oilers, who picked him in the 10th round of the National Football League draft, it will be because of his rifle-arm and not his scrambling ability.

"They aren't that worried about speed here," said Reeves, who suffered through a series of frustrating injuries that hampered his collegiate career at Texas Tech. "If you are mobile enough to get out of the way of the rush, you'll be all right."

Reeves will be joining a youth movement at quarterback where five-year veteran Gifford Nielsen is the starter and second round draft choice Oliver Luck and Reeves are the backups.

Reeves unquestionably has the strongest arm in camp.

"I was a pitcher in high school (posting a 15-1 record his senior year) and that helped me with a quick release," he said. "I guess you're born with a strong arm. You either have it or you don't."

Reeves' chances of making the Oilers team increased when Coach Ed Biles waived veteran quarterback Ken Stabler. It also eliminated Reeves' chances of learning from a master.

"I know I have a better chance with him gone, but I wish I could have worked with Stabler," Reeves said. "From what I could tell, he could still throw and he was the type that would take a young quarterback under his wing and teach him a few tricks. I missed that chance."

Reeves had to conform to the veer offense alignment at Texas Tech and did not get to fully display his passing skills.

"I don't regret going to Texas Tech, I just wish we'd had a more wide open offense," Reeves said.

Reeves actually didn't think about the Raider offense when he agreed to move across town from Lubbock Monterey High School to the Tech campus.

"I didn't think about if I was going to a passing offense or not," Reeves said. "I thought I was a good runer. I rushed over 1,000 yards two years in high school."

Reeves suffered a shoulder separation his sophomore season and underwent knee surgery following an injury suffered in his final collegiate game. But he recovered to get a chance to play pro football — and to get married.

Midland Trott(s) to win, but slam shakes Elcor

Midland's Trott & Company is still on a roll in San Angelo's version of the Texas Teenage State Sophomore tournament, but Midland's Elcor Chemcical fell into the loser's bracket in the Senior State tournament in Waco Tuesday.

Trott & Company took a 7-4 victory over host San Angelo to remain in the winner's bracket for the second straight day and will meet the Houston Phillies at 8:30 p.m. today in a key winner's bracket contest.

Elcor dropped an 8-6 decision to tournament co-favorite Waco and will face Snyder in a 2 p.m. loser's bracket game today. If Elcor wins the first game today, they will meet the winner of the Freeport-Baird contest at 8 p.m. If Elcor loses either of those games, they will fall from the state tournament.

George Matta pitched a five-hitter, struckout 13 and hit a two-run homer in the third inning to pace Trott to its easy win over San Angelo. Midland got only five hits off Larry Montelongo, but Matta's blast and doubles by Paul Colwell and Raul Pena also helped. San Angelo's Charles Good also homered in the game. Pena also had a single as did Gil Brassard.

Matta had a no-hitter working through the first four innings of play, despite giving up a run in the second inning. He was touched for two runs in the fifth and a single run in the seventh.

Trott defeated Conroe, 6-4, in the first round Monday. Houston's Phillies, the team Trott faces tonight, owns a 10-2 win over Waco and a 9-4 victory over Denton.

In Waco, Elcor lost its bid to remain in the winner's bracket when Waco's Scooter Moore connected on a grand slam home run off reliever John Denton, who had replaced loser Robbie Goetz with the bases loaded. That blast highlighted a five-run seventh inning for Waco.

Elcor erupted for five runs in the first inning, but didn't score again until the seventh. In that first frame, Jose Carrasco knocked in one run with a single and Monty Chastain knocked in two with a single. Mike Mercurio and Joe Williams both walked with the bases loaded. Patterson, the winning pitcher, KOed seven Elcor batters, but walked 10. Goetz walked nine. Elcor had only four hits and Waco only three, but the grand slam was a big one.

Elcor led 5-3 heading into the final seventh inning of play, but Moore erased that lead with his homer to left field.

Six differ in preseason poll

NEW YORK (AP) — Everyone, it seems, has a college football poll ... except the players. So here, courtesy of the players on this year's NCAA-ABC college football promotion tour, is a six-man preseason poll.

Dan Marino, quarterback, Pitt: "I'll pick us. I really feel that way. We have the type of team that's always looking for that. We've experienced a No.1 ranking, and after you get a taste of it, you really want it."

Kelvin Bryant, running back, North Carolina (Pitt's opening-game opponent): "I'll pick Carolina. Clemson's winning the national championship last year will help us a lot because we know an Atlantic Coast Conference team can win it. That's what we're going for this year. I'm not saying we were a better team than Clemson last year, but we had a lot of players out when we played them."

Herschel Walker, running back, Georgia: "I've heard people pick Alabama to win the Southeastern Conference, with us second. It's sort of a tossup. Nationally, I'll go with the best team, and Pitt has the best team right now." (Pitt beat Georgia 24-20 in the Sugar Bowl).

Billy Ray Smith, defensive end, Arkansas: "I don't want to sound biased, but we're going to win the Southwest Conference this year, and I think this is the year for Arkansas nationally, too. We have 25 seniors, a great offensive line and two great quarterbacks."

Dave Rimington, center, Nebraska: "Nebraska should be the preseason favorite in the Big Eight. We return a lot of people and we won it last year. I'll pick Nebraska nationally, too. It doesn't make any difference right now; I can pick anyone I want. Everyone's got to go out and play, anyway."

John Elway, quarterback, Stanford: "I'd like to pick Stanford to win the Pac-10, but Washington is the team to beat. Nationally, Pitt looks good. Pitt or Georgia, I'd say."

IT WON'T make nine Southeastern Conference coaches cry their eyes out, but Walker says he has been feeling poorly for the last two months, although a trip to a New York disco perked him up a little.

"My head's been bothering me a great deal and my stomach, too," he said. "Before I came up here, my head's been pounding like it was killing me. I've been moving around a great deal and I haven't been eating properly. I think I've lost a lot of weight."

Would-be tacklers, however, should beware — Walker is into karate.

Walker also disclosed how he chose Georgia over Clemson and Southern Cal.

"I didn't want to go to Georgia, but there was pressure from my family," said the native of Wrightsville, Ga. "On Easter Sunday (1980), my mother finally told me I had to make a decision. I decided to flip a coin, best of five. Georgia beat Clemson 3-0, then Georgia beat USC 3-1. I wanted to give Georgia every chance I could to lose, so I put the names in a hat, but Georgia was the one I pulled out.

"I told my mother it was Georgia and I think she must have called them because a few hours later some of their coaches showed up to sign me."

EVERYWHERE HE goes, of course, the first question Walker, a junior, hears is whether he will challenge the NFL's rule against underclassmen next year. He still feels the rule is unconstitutional, but decided last spring he didn't want to be the one to cause a possible flurry of player defections from the college ranks.

"Football isn't my whole life," he said. "I can run track and I think I can be a successful businessman. I'm the type who if I'm told I can't do something, I'll just forget it."

Marino says the Pitt coaching change from Jackie Sherrill to Foge Fazio hasn't brought about any sweeping changes "because almost everybody on thelstaff stayed. Spring practice was a little more relaxed, though. Jackie is a great coach, but he goes about it a little differently than Foge does, a little more business-like. Foge is a little more relaxed and tells a joke now and then."

As far as Rimington is concerned, Nebraska's Orange Bowl loss to Clemson in the national championship showdown is a thing of the past.

"It's over with," he said. "We've got to start out fresh this season. I think about it sometimes, although I try not to. You always have to feel you could have won, but that's the way it goes."

The Midland Cubs, Taco Villa, Southwest Airlines and the American Businessmen's Club have joined forces to raise money for the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens. Half the proceeds from tickets sold to Saturday night's Midland Cubs-San Antonio Dodgers game will go to MARC and one couple will win a baseball weekend in San Diego. From left are Bob Stevens, MARC president; Dee Carter, MARC board member; Bill Schammel, general manager of the Midland Cubs; and Don Balmer, a representative of Ambucks.

See the Cubs play and help MARC

The Midland Cubs are going to bat for retarded citizens Saturday at Cubs Stadium in a game against the San Antonio Dodgers, and one lucky couple will win a baseball weekend in San Diego.

Bill Schammel, general manager of the Cubs, has announced that Taco Villa restaurants have pitched in with the Cubs to create one of the most exciting evenings in team history, all to the benefit of the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens (MARC).

Tickets for the Saturday game are being sold at all nine Taco Villa restaurants in Midland and Odessa, and at the MARC office. Members of the Midland American Businessmen's Club also have tickets available.

Genral admission tickets cost $2.50. Half that amount will go to the Cubs as usual while the other half will go to MARC.

Marion Fisher, MARC executive director, said, "MARC will use the funds to help build its Opoortunity Complex, a unique training and living facility for retarded citizens, which will be built adjacent to the present MARC office at 2701 North A Street. The new complex will offer services on a regional basis, and will be second to none in the nation."

At the Saturday game, a drawing will be held with the winner recieving a trip for two to San Diego on Labor Day weekend. They'll fly to San Diego via Southwest Arilines, stay for two days and nights as guests of Taco Villa, see the San Diego Padres play a three-game series with the Chicago Cubs and receive $100 spending money. Southwest Airlines has donated the travel in support of the charity.

"We wanted to do something to support the MARC and Taco Villa has joined in to make it a really big night at the ball park."

Watson ready for PGA challenge

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Larry Nelson, the quiet little man who will defend his title this week, is confident and, quite possibly, nearing a peak of his very considerable talents going into the 64th PGA national championship.

But then, so is Tom Watson.

"I'm relaxed and happy with the way I'm playing," said Watson, whose latest victory made him only the fifth man in history to win both the U.S. and British Opens in the same year.

"I feel like I can go ahead and shoot some good scores and win the golf tournament," Watson said after a practice round Tuesday in sweltering heat at the 6,862-yard Southern Hills Country Club course.

Watson, the outstanding player in the game and winner of four titles this season, will be attempting to pass another golfing milestone in the last of the year's Big Four events, which begins Thursday.

He's now won four British Opens, two Masters and a U.S. Open crown. He needs only the PGA to join golf's most elite club, the four men who have made a career sweep of all four of the big ones.

Watson named the men he considered the biggest stumbling blocks in his path.

"You have to go with the men who are playing well now," he said, and ticked off some names: "Cal Peete, Bruce Lietzke, Tom Kite, Craig Stadler."

THE HOTLINE

It's (817) 335-1373. The number to dial for superior advertising and public relations. It connects you with one of the Southwest's oldest marketing/communications firms. Also one of the hottest.

Witherspoon does everything — from sophisticated financial/investor relations programs to nuts-and-bolts retail advertising to fresh corporate identification systems.

We've felt like a hot shop ever since we opened in 1946. Recently ADWEEK/Southwest magazine agreed, honoring Witherspoon as one of only six "hot shops" in a five-state area. Isn't it time you gave us a call?

Cycles run wild in American League

Frank White hits for one; Gene Michael completes one

By The Associated Press

Frank White celebrated one of baseball's rarities, hitting for the cycle. Gene Michael on the other completed another of baseball's cycles that is neither rare nor something to celebrate — the end of a ride on the New York Yankees managerial merry-go-round.

White tripled home the winning run in the ninth inning Tuesday night, giving Kansas City a 6-5 victory over the Detroit Tigers and becoming the first Royal player to perform the feat more than once.

"I didn't think about it (hitting for the cycle) at all," said White after hitting for a single, double, triple and home run and knocking in four runs as the Royals won their sixth straight game. He last accomplished the feat on Sept. 26, 1979.

White's two-out triple scored Onix Concepcion from first base and finished off a 4-for-5 night that saw his batting average jump from .318 to .325, fourth highest in the league.

"I'd say that I'm a little more selective," said White, a .258 career hitter, in explaining his average. "I'm trying real hard not to swing at the pitch that's killed me in the past, the bad slider away from me when I get behind the pitcher."

Michael joined Billy Martin and Bob Lemon as two-time losers on owner George Steinbrenner's list of former managers when he was fired after the Yankees dropped a doubleheader to Chicago 1-0 and 14-2.

"Sometimes you wish you could let go a lot of your players, but instead you have to let go your manager," said Steinbrenner, who named Clyde King interim manager for the rest of the season. "But that's not the way this game is structured. Some players on this team think they're a lot better than they are, and it's hurt us."

Royals 6, Tigers 5

White hit a two-run homer in the first inning and singled home a run in the seventh. Hal McRae also homered for Kansas City, his 19th.

White Sox 1-14, Yankees 0-2

Home runs by Harold Baines, Tony Bernazard and Jerry Hairston paced Chicago's 19-hit attack in the second game, while the White Sox took the opener 1-0 behind the seven-hit pitching of Steve Trout and three relievers and an RBI single by Aurelio Rodriguez.

Every Chicago starter collected at least one hit and one RBI in the nightcap as the White Sox batted around while scoring five runs in both the fifth and sixth innings. The victory was Chicago's fifth straight, while the Yankees lost their fourth in a row.

Brewers 7, Blue Jays 4

Cecil Cooper slammed a two-run homer and Ted Simmons and Paul Molitor added solo shots as Milwaukee moved back into first place in the AL East by a half game over Boston.

Pete Vuckovich, 12-4, pitched six innings, before Rollie Fingers recorded his 24th save with three innings of one-hit relief.

The Blue Jays got RBI singles by Hoskin Powell, Glenn Adams and Ernie Whitt, who went 4-for-4, including his 10th homer of the year.

Orioles 7-6, Red Sox 2-7

Carney Lansford blasted a solo homer and Dave Stapleton added a two-run blast during a three-run, eighth-inning uprising as Boston rallied to gain a split of its twi-night doubleheader with Baltimore.

The Orioles scored six runs in the fourth inning of the nightcap as Eddie Murray hit a solo homer, Lenn Sakata added two-run shot and Jim Dwyer hit a three-run blast, giving Baltimore a 6-4 lead.

Twins 5, Angels 4

Gary Ward blasted his third homer in as many games, a game-winning two-run shot in the eighth inning, as Minnesota posted its third straight victory despite a three homers on consecutive pitches by California's Doug DeCinces.

DeCinces barrage came against Brad Havens, 8-7, and gave the third baseman seven homers in his last six games and 19 for the season. His first homer came on a 1-0 pitch in the first. He hit Havens' first pitch after Brian Downing's walk in the third and picked on the first serve with two outs and nobody on in the fifth.

Mariners 3, A's 2

Richie Zisk stretched his hitting streak to 21 games with a solo homer and Bruce Bochte added a two-run shot as Mike Moore and two relievers combined on a five-hitter to defeat Oakland.

Indians 2-4, Rangers 0-5

Larry Parrish cracked a three-run homer in the 10th inning to give Texas a split of their twi-night doubleheader.

John Grubb and Lee Mazzilli hit two-out singles off Dan Spillner, 8-6, and Parrish followed with his seventh homer of the year. Cleveland tied the game on Larry Milbourne's two-out, ninth-inning single.

Len Barker and Dan Spillner combined on a four-hitter and Ron Hassey homered as Cleveland won the opener. Barker gave up three hits in 7⅓ innings, striking out five and walking five. Spillner pitched the final 12-3 innings, striking out four to record his 15th save.

Simonsson upsets Vilas

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Sweden's most famous tennis player may be taking time off from the tour but Bjorn Borg's countrymen are keeping their nation's program in the spotlight.

Hans Simonsson, buried in the depths of the pro tennis computer ratings, played himself right into that spotlight Tuesday with a major upset of top-seeded Guillermo Vilas in the second round of the 73rd U.S. Open Clay Court Championships.

Simonsson, 20, kept Vilas from playing his usual overpowering game en route to a 6-4, 6-1 victory.

"I think he was very confused. He didn't know what to do," said Simonsson of Vilas, No. 3 in the latest Association of Tennis Professionals computer ratings — about 240 positions ahead of his conqueror.

Simonsson confessed surprise over defeating Vilas, who has won seven Grand Prix events this year and finished second twice while earning more than $345,000 on the tour.

"It surprised me very much. Hans hasn't been playing very well," said Wilander after losing his serve only once against Jose-Luis Damiani of Uruguay en route to a 6-1, 6-4 victory. "I watched the second set. And in the second set, Vilas didn't have a chance."

Herzog calls for suicide

Squeeze play sends Cardinals over Pirates

By The Associated Press

St. Louis Cardinal Manager Whitey Herzog admits that when the suicide-squeeze backfires, "it looks like the dumbest play in the world."

But Tuesday night, it made him look like a genius.

Herzog ordered Ozzie Smith to lay down a bunt with the bases loaded in the fifth inning and the play worked perfectly to help the Cardinals beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 4-2.

"I'd rather have had that one last night," Herzog said, referring to the previous night's 4-2 loss in 17 innings in which the Cardinals left 24 runners stranded.

Smith's key play scored Dane Iorg from third base and capped a three-run rally.

"I just wanted to get another run at the time," said Herzog with respect to Smith's bunt. "If Ozzie hit into a double play, we don't get anything."

The successful bunt represented the 10th time this year that the Cardinals have squeezed a runner home from third base.

"If we were hitting the cover off the ball, we wouldn't do that," said Herzog. "We should have done it last night in the seventh inning when we were leading 1-0."

Pittsburgh Manager Chuck Tanner could only throw his hands up.

"If you get it down as it's supposed to be put down, it's very difficult to stop," said Tanner of the squeeze play. "You can't pitch out four times with the bases loaded."

The victory was only the second in six games for the Cardinals, who remained two games back in the National League East.

"Any time we win now is a big game," said Smith. "Things are winding down. The last four or five games have been frustrating, to say the least. You find out the character of your ballclub by what happens. You just have to keep your head up."

Keith Hernandez's sacrifice fly, Willie McGee's RBI double and Smith's suicide squeeze in the fifth were the Cardinals' key blows off Don Robinson, 11-6.

Astros 7, Padres 6

Terry Puhl led off the 11th with a double off reliever Luis DeLeon, 4-4. Art Howe was walked intentionally and Luis Pujols bunted the runners along before DeLeon gave an intentional pass to pinch-hitter Alan Ashby. One out later, Scott ended the game with a line drive single, his third of the game.

Randy Moffitt, 2-3, pitched 2 2-3 innings of tough relief for the win.

Dodgers 4, Reds 0

Bob Welch and Steve Howe stopped Cincinnati on six hits and Ken Landreaux belted a two-run homer, leading Los Angeles over the Reds.

Welch, 12-7, gave up all five Reds' hits over seven innings, striking out seven to earn his third straight victory. Howe came in after Larry Biittner led off the Reds' eighth with a double and finished up to earn his 12th save.

Ron Cey had a pair of hits for Los Angeles, including an RBI single in the fifth for the Dodgers' first run off Frank Pastore, 5-8.

"Tonight, I would have been in big trouble without the breaking ball," said Welch. "Instead of trying to throw the ball by somebody, I'm learning how to pitch with the breaking ball. I've gotten to the point where I'll throw it anytime, with a 3-and-2 count or 2-and-1."

Giants 6, Braves 3

Tom O'Malley's two-run homer in the ninth inning ignited a four-run rally to carry San Francisco over Atlanta. Milt May opened the inning off reliever Gene Garber, 6-5, with a single and was lifted for pinch runner Max Venable. O'Malley then drilled a 2-2 pitch off Terry Harper's glove and over the right-field fence at Atlanta Stadium for his second homer of the season.

Dave Bergman, Darrell Evans and Chili Davis hit consecutive singles for another San Francisco run and later in the inning, pitcher Greg Minton, 8-4, had a sacrifice fly.

Phillies 3, Expos 2

An error by newly acquired second baseman Doug Flynn and Bo Diaz's two-RBI high bouncer to third triggered a three-run sixth inning that carried Philadelphia over Montreal. The three unearned runs against the frustrated David Palmer, 3-4, dropped the defending NL East champion Expos six games behind the first-place Phillies.

Cubs 5, Mets 0

Leon Durham's two-run homer and the three-hit pitching of Doug Bird carried Chicago over New York. Durham's 15th homer came in the first inning after Ryne Sandberg had singled. The Cubs added two more runs in the fourth on a squeeze bunt by Larry Bowa and a run-scoring single by Bird.

Bird, 7-10, hurled his second complete game of the season and his first shutout despite near 90-degree weather and a 14-mph wind blowing out at Wrigley Field. He walked two and struck out five.

"The slider was my best pitch," said Bird. "I've been working on it with (coach) Billy Connors and it keeps getting better with every game. Basically, I'm a six or seven-inning pitcher, but I'll complete a few games if I get any defense."

James' return boosts Diablos

By The Associated Press

The rest may have been good for him, but whatever it was the El Paso Diablos were glad to welcome back centerfielder Dion James, who had missed a month because of wrist injury.

James had two hits, two stolen bases, drove in a run and scored three runs as the Diablos took a 10-3 Texas League victory over the Amarillo Gold Sox Tuesday night to move El Paso into second place. At 19, James is the youngest player in the Texas League, team officials say.

In other Texas League action, Jackson whipped Tulsa, 6-2, and Arkansas edged Shreveport, 3-1.

In addition to the offensive outburst by James, the Diablos got a solo homer from Kurt Kingsolver, his 11th of the season, and three doubles by Steve Michael.

Randy Kaczmarski had three singles for Amarillo.

Jamie Cocanower, 1-0, was the winning pitcher. The loser was Bill Long, 9-8.

Tony Hill wants ball

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — To give an example of what Tony Hill means to the Dallas Cowboys' passing attack, he played the first six games last year with injuries and still tied for the club lead in receptions.

Hill is hale and hearty in 1982 and has shown his amazing knack for catching the ball in a crowd during training camp.

But he's still frustrated.

"I'd really like to get more action this year," said Hill, who caught 46 passes last season.

Hill could become the first Dallas receiver with three 1,000-yard seasons, a feat he missed last year by just 47 yards.

"Coach Tom Landry has somewhat of a conservative attitude so that means we just don't throw the ball as much as teams like San Diego and Green Bay and Pittsburgh," said Hill.

"Tony Hill is our big play man," said Landry. "He threatens the defense more than the other receivers we have because he has the excellent burst of speed to get under a ball that's deep. He's a very explosive player."

Hill said defensive backs started to "cheat" on him in 1981.

"They kept playing me for the short patterns," said Hill. "We just didn't go deep enough to keep them honest."

Hill said early training camp showed that Landry planned to go deeper more often in 1982.

"We've changed some of the routes ... we've made some adjustments in our deep patterns," Hill said.

Hill caught only four touchdown passes last year, the fewest in his career. The most he has even caught in one season was 10 in 1979 with the longest 75 yards.

Hill had a 75-yarder last season.

"I'm paid to catch the ball and score touchdowns," said Hill. "It should only be logical that I get the ball more."

Hill, and veterans Drew Pearson and Butch Johnson are being pushed in camp by second-year receiver Doug Donley, who has looked excellent in the first week of a two-a-days.

Junior net tournament deadline is Thursday

There will be a Midland Junior Tennis Association tournament this weekend for two age groups, boys and girls 16 and under and 13 and under.

Registration deadline for the tournament is Thursday. To register call Yvonne Garton at 683-1529. All trophies and tennis balls are provided by Midland Junior Tennis from proceeds raised from the annual Mixed Doubles Benefit, which is sponsored by the Midland National Bank.

Fiesta set for RHCC

All 64 spots in the Fiesta Del Ranchero couples golf tournament have been taken and play is ready to get underway this weekend at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

The tournament, with teams flighted by handicap, will kickoff activities Friday night with a cocktail party and play will begin Saturday at 1 p.m. The final round will be played on Sunday at 9:30 a.m. On both days, play will begin with a shotgun start.

The teams in the tournament will be seeking the title won last year by Midland's Sue and Craig Campbell.

Diepraam wins title

DENVER — Keith Diepraam, former tennis pro at Midland Country Club, won both the Men's 40 singles and doubles title here over the weekend in the U.S. National Hardcourt tournament.

Diepraam, the No. 1 seed who is now pro at Sugar Creek CC in Houston, defeated Gus Suominen of Salt Lake City, Utah, by a 5-7, 6-2, 6-0 count. He lost only one set in the entire tournament. He teamed with Adrian Bey of Houston in the doubles to defeat Suominen and Charles Robinson of Salt Lake in the doubles finals, 6-3, 6-3.

Umpire's net clinic set

Leon Lipp, chairman of the Texas Tennis Association Umpires Committee, will be giving an umpires clinic Aug. 21-22 at a site to be arranged.

It's a two-day clinic with anyone taking it becoming a certified umpire. The fee for the clinic is $7. For futher information call Yvonne Garton at 683-1529.

Snyder to host tourney

The tournament is sponsored by Snyder's Flame No. 2, and entry fee is $85 per team. To enter call Leo Jackson in Snyder at 573-9976 or 573-1391.

SFOA seeks officials

The Permian Basin Chapter of the Southwest Officials Association (SFOA) is currently seeking individuals who are interested in becoming football officials.

The Association's first meeting is scheduled for Aug. 17 at 7 p.m. at the Midland Center. If you would like to become a football referee, attend the meeting.

For further information contact Bruce Brenneman (683-5281 or 697-7659), Mike Laborde (563-2610 or 699-7547) or C.E. Boyd (684-0910 or 697-2728).

Hasek, Morse to compete in state meet

Two City of Midland swimmers, Laura Morse and Michaela Hasek, will be competing against the rest of the state this weekend in the 12 and under Texas State Championships swim meet in Houston at the Woodlands.

Going into the meet, COM swim coach Hank O'Neill has already conceeded the team title because of a lack of numbers. Team points are totaled from this weekend's meet in Houston and next weekend's meet for swimmers 13 and over in San Antonio. In all, COM has only nine swimmers.

"We don't have enough swimmers going to the state meet to have a shot at the team championship," said O'Neill, "but most of the swimmers have a good chance of making the finals in one or more events."

According to O'Neill, Hasek, 11, has her best chances of making the finals in the speed races, 50 and 100-backstrokes and the 100 and 200-freestyles. For Morse, 12, it's distance as well as speed. Her best bets are in the 200 and 400-freestyles and the 50 and 100-breaststrokes.

Competing for COM next weekend will be: James Shuppe, 18; Mike Seay, 16; Pat Rhamey, 17; David Hartman, 14; Suzi Simpson, 16; Becky Simpson, 13 and Tracey Delany, 13.

Three more pull retirement

By The Associated Press

On a hot August day, three National Football League veterans found they no longer wanted to play the game.

Wide receive Wallace Francis, guard Henry Sheppard and linebacker Mike Hunt retired Tuesday as NFL teams continued preparations for the exhibition season, which begins Saturday.

Those retirements followed by one day the announcement that All-Pro defensive tackle Louie Kelcher of the San Diego Chargers had called it quits. Kelcher said he'd lost his desire to play football.

FRANCIS, A nine-year veteran acquired last week on waivers by the New England Patriots, has decided to enter the ministry, Patriots Coach Ron Meyer said.

"He just felt that he has more important things" than football, Meyer said. "He felt that he was touched religiously."

Francis was a star with Atlanta and is the third leading receiver in Falcons history. He had hoped moving to New England would rekindle his desire to play football.

"I've been playing this game since 1965 and I never had to worry about changing my surroundings to enjoy playing," said Francis, 30. "My desire is to play for the Lord."

Francis caught 244 passes for the Falcons. He returned kickoffs in his first two NFL seasons with the Buffalo Bills.

Sheppard, who missed half of last season with a neck injury, cited business reasons for leaving the Cleveland Browns. Sheppard runs a ranch in Cuero, Texas, and also operates a computer service.

HE HAD walked out of the Browns' mini-camp in May and asked to be traded. When told by Browns owner Art Modell that "we don't accomodate a player attempting to put a gun to our heads," Sheppard, a six-year veteran, opted for retirement.

"He stated himself that he should have done it in January," said Browns Coach Sam Rutigliano. "It is something that should have been brought to the fore earlier. I'm very confused by it. He's played good football for us."

"We will miss him," said Rutigliano, "but we have people right now who could fill the void."

Green Bay's Hunt retired for the second time in three years because of recurring headaches. He also quit before last season and was attempting a comeback with the Packers after doctors cleared him to play. But the headaches returned after he was hit hard in a scrimmage Monday.h

"It wasn't an extra-hard hit, just an ordinary hit," said the three-year veteran. "But I felt light-headed afterward and had headaches. I was very confident the condition was going to go away. It was always in the back of my mind that I was going to come back. It's something I had to find out for myself."

Elsewhere, the New Orleans Saints traded defensive lineman Elois Grooms to the St. Louis Cardinals for an undisclosed 1983 draft choice, the New York Jets acquired defensive tackle Charles Cook from New England on waivers and defensive lineman Archie Reese was returned to the San Francisco 49ers after failing a Kansas City Chiefs physical.

San Antonio man buys Denver team

DENVER (AP) — The Denver Nuggets of the National Basketball Association have been officially sold to businessman B.J. "Red" McCombs of San Antonio.

After three earlier attempts to officially close the sale, the papers were signed Tuesday morning.

McCombs was in Denver on Monday to sign the papers, and his attorney, Gary Woods, did so on Tuesday.

He perhaps is the most expressive of the Dallas Cowboys, either howling against his lack of first string status or making one of his patented "California Quake" dances after scoring a touchdown.

This year Johnson has added "the eye of the tiger," which is what the mercurial wide receiver calls a television camera. He's going to be on TV locally in Dallas doing sports spots during the season for KDFW.

He was hired after another Dallas receiver, Drew Pearson, was fired from the same job.

"There's no hard feelings between me and Drew," said Johnson. "The decision was made and that was it ... it was just like one of Coach (Tom) Landry's decisions to start Drew instead of me."

As might be expected, Johnson has some bizarre ideas of what he is going to do.

"I thought I'd start off by interviewing myself on a split screen," said Johnson. "Then I thought I'd do a long piece on what we go through in camp.

"Most people don't realize the torture out here ... what happens on a day to day basis ... I'd like to start with the first knock on the door at 7 o'clock in the morning and close with the final meeting at 10 p.m."

"I imagine it will happen ... I'll probably come up with something and it will make them restrict me one way or the other," Johnson said.

"The crowd enjoys it," said Johnson. "We're not clones out there. We're not computers. We're not like Tron running around inside some computer."

He said he knows the coaching staff doesn't particularly like his quake.

"They don't want me to get too vaudeville out there," he said.

Johnson caught 25 passes in the 1981 season, including five for touchdowns, the longest being 55 yards.

"Butch makes the tough plays in tough situations," said quarterback Danny White. "He always has and he always will."

But Johnson will be doing it his way both on-and-off the field.

NEW YORK (AP) — With six weeks of professional baseball behind him, John Elway now is looking forward to his senior year as Stanford University's football quarterback.

What he's not looking forward to is next spring when he has to make a decision between the two sports.

"I've been asked a hundred million times which way I'm going to go; everyone thinks they know except me," Elway said Tuesday during the annual NCAA-ABC cross-country football tour.

If Elway doesn't know which sport he will choose, how can anyone else be sure? All Elway says the summer proved is that "I can hit .300 in Class A baseball."

Actually, the 6-foot-4, 202-pounder hit .318 in a 1½-month stint as an outfielder with the New York Yankees' Oneonta, N.Y., farm club in the New York-Penn League. In 42 games, he had 48 hits — two doubles, a triple, four homers — and drove in 24 runs, batting .377 in July.

Elway pocketed $100,000 from the Yankees for his pro debut. His dilemma is that he has been projected as a sure first-round pick in the National Football League draft next spring. The money — which he says won't be the deciding factor — is a cinch to be good. Elway has to decide whether he wants to spend more time riding the buses in the bushes or going straight to the NFL as a record-breaking passer (he is closing in on every Pac-10 mark).

Elway says he doesn't intend to play baseball's offer against football's, but he will wait until the NFL draft around May 1 before making his decision, even though the baseball season will have started by then.

"I haven't spent much time thinking about it," he said. "It could get pretty heavy if I let it. It will be easier for me to weigh things out after the NFL draft. I'll still be going to school until the first week in June and I'll deal with it when I have to. I just want to enjoy my last season at Stanford.

"It will be a tough decision, but the type of decision you really like to have. I can't make the wrong decision, because I like both sports so much."

Increased peanut stores don't mean better profits

ATLANTA (AP) — There is more peanut butter on supermarket shelves now, but farmers who struggled through last year's shortage say they're having no easier time making a profit from this year's surplus.

Peanuts became expensive last year as a shortage from the drought-stricken 1980 crop drove 1981 prices sky high. The United States imported 150,000 tons to satisfy domestic demand.

But the 1981 crop, being marketed this year, was so plentiful that prices are falling and industry spokesmen say 432,000 tons of peanuts probably will be left in storage when farmers begin the fall harvest.

"The sad part about it is that if we make a good peanut crop this time, it's going to hurt us for two or three years," said Bruce Daniels of Ocilla, Ga., a peanut farmer for about 18 years.

In May, the average 18-ounce jar of peanut butter sold in supermarkets in 10 major cities was $1.49, down from $1.89 in March 1981, according to the Peanut Advisory Board, which represents farmers from Georgia, Alabama and Florida, who grow about 60 percent of U.S. peanuts.

Prices have not reached predrought levels, when an 18-ounce jar of peanut butter sold for $1.29, but the downward trend should continue this year, said board spokesman Mitch Head.

While consumers reap the benefits of declining prices, farmers are faring no better than last year when a shortage in the market inflated prices and domestic consumption fell to 1.647 billion pounds from 2.028 billion pounds in 1980, said Emory Murphy, assistant coordinator of the Georgia Peanut Commission.

"They're not making a lot of money," Murphy said. "They've got to be in a situation where they don't have more supply than demand, and it will take care of itself."

This year, peanut farmers were offered $300 to $350 per ton on contracts by peanut shellers, but the cost of production, excluding cost of farmland, averaged $500 to $550 nationwide, Murphy said. Last year, farmers were offered an average of $500 to $700 per ton, he said.

Federal price supports rose about 15 percent from 1981 to 1982, but that was not enough, Murphy said.

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Texas agricultural officials, lawmakers and others have been raising the alert about the state's spreading infestation of imported fire ants for years, but now those officials apparently are getting very serious about eradicating the pests.

Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown has requested some $34 million be earmaked in his agency's 1984-85 budget to control the fire ant and to research ways to rid the state of the insect.

A special legislative committee studying the fire ant problem also is expected to make a formal request in October for at least $10 million to combat it.

Brown's budget request, presented this week to the Legislative Budget Board and the Governor's Office of Budget and Planning, calls for $16 million each year to provide a cooperative program to help farmers and other landowners purchase pesticides to fight the ants.

An additional $1 million per year would be earmarked for research by Texas A & M University and Texas Tech University scientists to find biological controls or other solutions to the problem.

"We've simply got to control them (the ants)," Brown says, adding that eradication of the pest has been designated as the top priority for southern states by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Over 40 million acres of land in 115 Texas counties have been infested by the fire ant, with as many as 1,100 fire ant mounds per acre in some areas, Brown says. The insect is spreading toward West Texas and the Rio Grande Valley at the rate of 35 miles per year.

Brown says his request, which amounts to nearly one-half of his proposed 1984-85 budget of $86.4 million, simply is an attempt to respond to the wishes of people in the infested areas.

The Texas Department of Agriculture spent $3.7 million this year to provide landowners in some 81 counties with fire ant bait, Brown says, adding that "we couldn't begin to supply all the requests we had for bait this year.

"Our initial requests from counties this year amounted to four million pounds and, at current costs of bait and storage, $16 million would have enabled us to fill all the orders," he said.

However, each of the counties that participated in the fire ant program — under which the state paid $3 and landowners $1 for each pound of bait — received only about 12,000 pounds of pesticides.

The funds Brown is requesting from the Legislature would be spent in the same manner, but Brown is hoping the state can find a cheaper chemical to use.

"Right now, Amdro is the best we have," Brown said. But he is hoping the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency will soon approve feramicide — a cheaper, and hopefully, more effective chemical — for use against the ants.

"We are never going to control them with the bait we now have," said Brown, who will be leaving office before his budget request is acted upon by the Legislature.

"We're not going to control him ever with bait," he said, "but we may be able to contain him."

Brown said the best hope for stopping the fire ant — which has been blamed for the loss of livestock, damage to land and nearly 50 human deaths in 11 southern states — is research into biological controls.

Researchers are now working on methods to disrupt the trail of scent worker ants use to find their way back to the mounds and on disrupting the mating habits of queen ants.

State Rep. Dan Kubiak of Rockdale, who chairs the Select Committee on Fire Ants, also agrees that research is the answer, but said the solution probably will be found in Brazil, from which the ant came to the United States 64 years ago.

Kubiak's committee also is expected to request funds for research at A & M and other universities, but the Rockdale Democrat said he wants to send researchers to South America to find out what natural enemies the fire ant has in its native land.

Kubiak said, however, that $34 million is an "unrealistic" figure to expect from the Legislature in 1983, particularly since lawmakers will have to cope with federal budget cuts and other problems that will place increasing demands on state funds. His committee's $10 million recommendation is more reasonable, he said.

Delaware creature caught

LAUREL, Del. (AP) — It might have looked like a scene from a grade-B horror movie, "The Creature from The Black Lagoon," but the participants were all business when they embarked in search of an alligator-like creature that had eluded the authorities.

In the end, it was a part-time watermelon farmer who succeeded at corralling the critter — a five-foot, 70-pound caiman that had been thrashing around Trussman Pond for more than a week.

Officials said the caiman was dumped by an unidentified man who said it had grown too big to be a pet, and the wily lizard foiled all attempts to recapture it until 20-year-old Wayne Hudson came along.

Hudson and nine others — eight relatives and a family friend — launched a tiny armada late Saturday, determined not to come back without the caiman.

The group piled into three rowboats — each was equipped with a high-powered searchlight — to spot their prey, which moved about the pond only at night.

"We just kept closing in on him," Hudson said. "With three lights, we could see him everywhere he went."

Pac-Man book legal

CHICAGO (AP) — Video-game fans who like to gobble up the latest Pac-Man literature have won a round out of the arcade and in the courtroom.

In a ruling signed Friday, U.S. District Judge John F. Grady said the book was "clearly superior" to books licensed by the game's maker, Midway Manufacturing Co.

Midway had sought to enjoin the sale and recall the book. But its maker, Publications International, filed suit here seeking a declaration that the book was a fair use of the Pac-Man game and did not violate copyright laws.

'Law' will be basis for decision

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Gov. Charles S. Robb says his decision whether to spare the life of convicted killer Frank J. Coppola "will be based on the law," not any emotional pleas to spare his life.

Waste dump threatening New Jersey's anachronistic forest

By JOHN J. GOLDMAN
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BATSTO, N.J. — It is a near-primal wilderness in the nation's busiest industrial corridor — an area so vast that only satellite photos can do it justice.

From space, photos of the New Jersey Pine Barrens show the largest stretch of empty land without major cities or towns along the Eastern seaboard between Richmond, Va., and Portland, Me.

The photos fail, however, to reveal the natural bounty that lies beneath the Pine Barrens' sandy, porous soil: a huge reservoir of pure water, enough to fill a lake 37 feet deep, 2,000 miles square, so much that it could, if tapped, supply all of New York City's needs indefinitely.

BUT THE MASSIVE water supply is being threatened. One of the nation's most toxic chemical dump sites lies on the edge of the Pinelands, endangering the quality of Atlantic City's drinking water.

Officials at the seaside gambling resort have taken steps to protect water during this summer's tourist season, when millions of travelers and conventioneers flock to casinos. Some wells have been pulled out of service and special filters have been installed on them should they be needed. Atlantic City has improved its treatment plant, so that additional reservoir water can be processed. City lines have been connected to the New Jersey Water Co. in order to tap wells out of the contamination area.

"I think we have taken reasonable steps and have reasonably protected the city from the problem," said Neil Goldfine, executive director of Atlantic City's Municipal Utilities Authority.

But a long-term solution must be found. "Right now we are prepared for the potential of contamination," Goldfine said. "Once the plume (of contamination) is here, it will be a different ballgame."

When the Environmental Protection Agency filed suit last year against the operators of the chemical dump, Price's Pit, federal lawyers called the seepage from 900 million gallons of toxic waste there "the most serious environmental problem in the country." Court papers alleged that toxic chemicals at the landfill were present in huge concentrations.

Officials fear that the chemical seepage will reach not only Atlantic City's wells, but also parts of the Pinelands.

"We don't know how far these contaminants can go," said David F. Moore, executive director of the New Jersey Conservation Foundation. "I don't think we know that much about flow patterns beneath the soil."

"The reason the Pinelands is such a good water supply are the types of sands that are available," Goldfine said. "It also means if you have liquid hazardous waste spilled on the ground, it disappears. It doesn't go away, it just sinks in."

IN INDUSTRIAL NEW Jersey, the Pinelands is a million-acre anachronism — the Garden State's great surprise. It is a wilderness of dense pines, pure streams, moss-covered swamps and rare pygmy forests.

At the heart of the Pinelands is a 368,000-acre, near-primitive preservation area, a naturalist's delight. Thirty-five species of mammals ranging from muskrats to the rare short-tailed shrew; 299 kinds of birds, including peregrine falcons and great blue herons; 91 types of butterflies, and 59 kinds of reptiles and amphibians make the Pine Barrens their home.

"I often describe the Pine Barrens as a place for the graduate, the man who has been all over the world and has seen the magnificent splendor of the South Pacific," said Ted Gordon, a naturalist, who has been a Pinelands resident for 20 years. "The man who has had everything stare him boldly in the face comes down here and has to search to find. It's a subtle place, a deep place, a very emotional place. It's a place you have to know before you can really love it."

Said Gordon: "The Pine Barrens is sort of like Scotch. It gets used to, it is an acquired taste. You have to appreciate parts of it on your hands and knees because everything is little. There are broad expanses of forests that you still could get lost in if you chose. The cedar swamps are really beautiful. They are dense and mysterious and reminiscent of Southern swamps."

Many northern and southern species meet in the Pinelands. At least 14 kinds of northern plants reach their southern limits, including the rare curly grass fern. There are 109 southern plants, including pixie moss, turkey beard and the Southern yellow orchid. The Pinelands contains 20 kinds of orchids.

Identifying many species takes subtlety.

"You see the little micro-communities. You look down in a cedar swamp and see a little community," Gordon said. "Inside your footprints are 15 to 20 plants. You go two paces to your right and the slope goes up a little bit, and the entire system changes to an upland complex."

DURING THE PLEISTOCENE Ice Age, which ended about 10,000 years ago, the Wisconsin glacier stopped about 40 miles from the Pine Barrens. In warmer weather, between the glacier's advances, the ice retreated. Scientists believe climate changes caused northern and southern movements of plants and animals.

In the pygmy forest, the largest trees stand only 11 feet tall. Some have been blackened by a recent fire. About 400 fires — mostly man-made — burn in the Pinelands each year. But the pitch pine, the hardiest species, has unique, fire-resistant qualities. Some of the pitch pines have closed cones that open only after fires, saving the seeds. The contrast between new green shoots growing from blackened bark can be startling.

Conservationists estimate that each acre in the Pinelands is burned once every 20 years. In the pygmy forest, the rate is much higher — every seven years.

Hundreds of miles of unpaved stage routes still criss-cross the Pine Barrens, leading to towns that have disappeared in the underbrush of time. Batsto, one such town, has been restored with its furnace that once manufactured munitions for the Continental Army. Wood from the Pinelands made the desk upon which Thomas Jefferson drafted the Declaration of Independence.

In 1978, the Pinelands became the nation's first national reserve, serving as a model for other areas to follow in guarding their resources. The aim was to allow carefully regulated development along the fringes while maintaining the region's wild and historic core.

The Pinelands Comprehensive Management Plan has restricted development and has thus far guarded the area's water quality. But the threat to the pines and to nearby Atlantic City from Price's Pit alarms conservationists. Some municipal officials contend that the Environmental Protection Agency is moving too slowly in cleaning up the chemical dump site.

"The long run is very much in jeopardy," Goldfine said. "I feel the EPA has been moving slowly and it has to make a decision on what will happen in the summer of 1983, when things get more critical. We are only 11 months away now."

Wyoming records oil spill

BYRON, Wyo. (AP) — About 250,000 gallons of crude oil has spilled from a broken pipeline and contaminated more than 35 miles of northern Wyoming waterways, officials say.

Jake Strohman, spokesman for the state Department of Environmental Quality, said the oil poured from a broken pipeline near here Sunday night in one of the nation's largest inland spills ever recorded.

He said the spill affected parts of Yellowtail Reservoir, the Shoshone River and a tributary.

Move indicated

BALTIMORE (AP) — A law enforcement official says organized crime is steering away from narcotics to stealing cars and parts to make "fast money in the fast lane."

Kentucky state police officer Lt. Richard McQuown told the International Association of Auto Theft Investigators on Monday that auto theft is attractive because of "a low detection rate, a low apprehension rate and extremely low conviction rate."

The association is a 1,000-member group from law enforcement agencies, insurance companies and automakers from the United States, Portugal, Australia, England and Canada.

Deadline maintained

ATLANTA (AP) — Two U.S. Supreme Court justices have refused to lift an Aug. 11 deadline for redrawing two congressional districts in the Atlanta area, so the Legislature must hold an emergency session.

Justice John Paul Stevens concurred Monday with Justice William J. Brennan, who had refused to grant a stay. And a three-judge district court panel in Washington said Monday separate primary elections could not be held in the state's eight other congressional districts.

Horace Rumpole returns for retrials

OXFORD, England (AP) — The rumpled dress, rotund body, bright nose and arched eyebrows of Horace Rumpole, defense lawyer at the Old Bailey and specialist in blood clues and murder, are all in evidence as Leo McKern considers his long past and busy future as an actor.

"Rumpole of the Bailey" is no more, for now, anyway — the last episode, "Rumpole Returns," was completed some time ago, and may be broadcast on public television in this country sometime next year. In the meantime, the Public Broadcasting Service is repeating six episodes from the series (the first episode was shown last night, on channel 13.)

The series' producers are considering a third season of "Rumpole of the Bailey," though McKern insists the fun is over, and he's glad.

"It's always salutary to give the public less than what they want, because what they want is always too much," McKern says. Becoming too readily identified with one character, no matter how popular, is "something to be avoided for an actor," he says. "To go on with it is a mistake."

He compares the series to his early days in the English theater, just after World War II. At first he could get no acting work because he had, at the time, a broad Australian accent. So he went into stage management — "everything from selecting props to making tea."

In the 1950s and 1960s, McKern worked on the stage and in movies, playing everything from Iago in Shakespeare's "Othello" to the head of an evil religious cult in the Beatles' "Help." Then, after 14 frustrating months in Ireland shooting "Ryan's Daughter," he says he tried to quit.

"I decided to give the whole game away. If I couldn't get a job I could earn my living in other ways," McKern says. "I've always been a potterer."

Sitting in the comfortable kitchen of his house a mile from the golden towers of Oxford University, McKern, who is 61, displays his current project — a hand-built doll's house complete with stained glass windows.

In the garden, where his wife works at saving bushes recovering from a harsh winter while a daughter mows the lawn, are other projects — a goldfish pond and a contraption to capture rainwater on a potting shed.

But like Rumpole lolling uselessly in a loud Hawaiian shirt on a Florida beach in "Rumpole Returns," McKern says he found himself unable to retire. After a year he went back to work, in 1971, and returned to England, "the only country for English-speaking actors."

"People have got to work," he says, "not just to get money. Man's not complete without work."

Rumpole came to him a few years later, as a "one-off play."

"But it was so well-written, and I felt so attracted to the character...down to the judges that pretend to be impartial, the home life with that terrifying, middle-class wife (played by Peggy Thorpe-Bates), that I said to (John) Mortimer, 'Why don't you write a short series, say six?'"

London's Thames Television snapped it up, and 11 shows were made. Based partly on Mortimer's own experiences as a lawyer, the series takes advantage of the English legal system, in which different lawyers from the same firm [illegible]

The series creates what McKern feels is a true picture of life in an English law chambers — weaving legal matters with the constant bickering over office space, the clerk who embezzles from petty cash, the chic young lawyers who end up learning from old Rumpole, the jockeying for power, the intra-office affairs, the bitterness of losing, and the joy of a "good win."

"Rumpole is a man of extraordinary principles," McKern says. "He makes cracks about the law and is seriously cynical, but beneath it all he believes in the way, with all its faults, it works. He believes in a lot of old-fashioned things, discipline, obedience, loyalty — things that are going out of style, as he can see in his office."

McKern, who has been battling to lose weight, is now working on "Riley," a new series for British television set during and after World War I.

And he is looking ahead to another television production in which he will play Gloucester opposite Lord Laurence Olivier's King Lear.

Knights' 'Maltese Falcon' rare bird in Malta

By JOHN WINN MILLER

That started a week-long search for the inspiration of Dashiell Hammett's "The Maltese Falcon," and for the classic movie of the same name starring Humphrey Bogart.

And the stylized black-enamel statue of the falcon that drove Sydney Greenstreet to murder and mayhem across two continents seemed a natural trinket for selling to tourists.

That led to Republic Street, the clogged thoroughfare of downtown Valletta. The street is lined with shops of all descriptions, mainly catering to tourists. Nowhere was there a statue of the falcon, and the proprietors met questions about the absence of such an obvious tourist attraction with a blank stare.

One owner, however, did offer to sell a book on the birds of Malta. It listed four types of falcons that are seen on Malta — none of them native and none of them called Maltese.

The shop owner then pointed down the street to the first real clue.

It was in the Biblioteca — this island nation's main library, where all the important historical documents of Malta's much-conquered existence are kept.

The librarian said there indeed is a legend of the Maltese falcon, and then shuffled off into a backroom. He emerged 10 minutes later carrying a crumbling book.

In it was this story: The Knights of St. John came from the medieval Order of John the Baptist, established in Jerusalem by Italian merchants as a hospital order to care for pilgrims to the Holy Land. The order eventually developed into a military organization, whose knights took vows of chastity, poverty and obedience.

In 1291, the knights were forced to retreat to Cyprus and then 18 years later to the island of Rhodes, which they held for 200 years.

Finally, in 1530, Emperor Charles V of the Holy Roman Empire offered the knights the 122-square-mile island of Malta, 60 miles south of Sicily.

There were only two conditions. First they had to protect Tripoli 220 miles to the south, and second, they had to pay rent — one falcon a year.

That was the Maltese falcon — the kind with feathers. Even without any jewels, it turned out to be an expensive rent.

Several of Malta's European patrons took a fancy to the idea of receiving the same homage yearly from the knights. Those birds eventually cost more than $3,000 to maintain and ship — a huge amount of money for its time and a treasure that might interest any Sam Spade.

The rent, by the way, stopped in 1718 when Napoleon invaded MaLta and kicked out the knights, who later settled in Rome and returned to being a hospital order.

Keenan Wynn paying for misspent youth with hearing loss

By STEVE GORMAN
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — If you had told actor Keenan Wynn years ago that all that noise was damaging his hearing, he probably wouldn't have listened to you. Now, he may have trouble hearing you — or any noise.

Keenan, now 66, admits that he grew up a wild, undisciplined boy who lived strictly for kicks. His father, clown Ed Wynn, and his mother, actress Hilda Wynn, were divorced and Keenan played one against the other to buy him expensive gifts.

He raced speedboats, motorcycles and dirtbikes and piled up trophies by the dozen. Barely old enough to shave, he hired himself and his boat out to bootleggers during Prohibition, ferrying supplies into New York's Long Island. But the noise from all those engines took its toll, and he now suffers a serious loss of hearing.

An actor for the past 48 years and rarely out of work, Keenan manages to find the time to help make people aware of the dangers to hearing that surround us — from loud music, loud machines and vehicles.

"I talk to high school kids a lot about discos. I say to them, 'I had a ball losing my hearing, I was doing what I wanted to do, but we didn't know back then that excessive noise did that to you. I didn't know I was losing my hearing any more than you know it now. All I can do is tell you' — he takes out his two hearing aids and holds them up — 'do you want to be fitted for them now or or do you want to wait till you're over 40? You'll have them, I'll guarantee you, if you don't take care of your hearing now.'"

About 15 years ago, when Wynn started noticing that his hearing was going, he consulted Dr. Howard P. House, a hearing specialist who, when he found out what Wynn's hobbies were, told him to "take up canoeing."

But Wynn ignored the advice, continued racing bikes and speedboats and thought it wasn't "macho" to protect his ears. Five years ago, the situation was clearly worse and he could barely hear other actors onstage. He learned that his hearing loss was permanent and he would have to wear hearing aids.

A difficult period of adjustment followed.

"For six months, I couldn't go to a restaurant because the hearing aids would magnify every tiny sound and if a waiter dropped a plate, it sounded like an airplane crash," Wynn said.

Wynn considers himself lucky to have retained any hearing at all and it has become his personal cause to help others who have lost or are in danger of losing their hearing. He now acts as the (unpaid) national chairman of the Better Hearing Institute in Washington and is also involved with the Kansas City-based organization, Sertoma (Service to Mankind).

Charles Kuralt's road leads to modern Mecca

Tonight's "After the Dream Comes True," anchored by Kuralt, is CBS News' left-handed tribute to shopping malls. Are they a collection of convenience stores coming to the rescue of busy-beaver Americans? Or are they coffins of our culture, burying what was real and genuine about this country?

With a wistful glance backwards and a hard look sideways, this wonderfully subtle and sentimental documentary reports that, in the name of progress, future generations will never know the Ma and Pa Marketplace. They'll never know the art of friendly conversation. They'll never know diversity. They'll never know America.

Twenty-five years ago shopping malls didn't exist. But 20th-century pioneers, the developers and real estate salesmen, rediscovered America. To see how far they traveled, CBS went to Overland Park, Kan., where the Oak Park Mall does nearly twice the retail business of downtown Kansas City.

Oak Park doesn't proudly call itself the "Very Best of the Heart of America" for nothing. Its 134 stores, attracting 80,000 customers on a typical Saturday.

Democratic incumbent loses nomination

ST. LOUIS (AP) — State Sen. Harriett Woods, seeking to unseat Republican U.S. Sen. John Danforth, won the nomination Tuesday over 10 opponents in the Democratic primary while Rep. William Clay won renomination despite redistricting.

Missourians passed a constitutional amendment intended to keep the property taxes of homeowners and farmers from going up drastically after statewide property reassessment is implemented in 1984. Unofficial results showed 293,000 votes for approval to 168,362 against. Another constitutional amendment to make it easier to increase school operating levies was rejected 302,792 to 170,555.

In the Democratic senatorial primary, only Mrs. Woods of University City, St. Louis consumer advocate Thomas Ryan, Jefferson City banker Burleigh Arnold and Thomas Zych, president of the St. Louis Board of Aldermen, had waged statewide campaigns.

WITH 3,053 OF the state's 4,014 precincts reporting, Mrs. Woods had 191,737 votes followed by Arnold, 102,726; Ryan, 55,808 and Zych, 29,548.

Danforth had 157,717 to 45,750 for Hancock. Gregory Hansman and Vernon Riehl were far behind.

In the congressional races, Clay, a black and seven-term incumbent Democrat, faced six challengers for his St. Louis seat with his main opposition coming from state Sen. Allan Mueller. Mueller was expected to be helped by redistricting that added 200,000 mostly white voters to the district.

With 318 of the 369 precincts reporting, Clay had 64,429 to 34,671 for Mueller.

In the eight-candidate Democratic 5th District primary to replace veteran incumbent Richard Bolling of Kansas City, with 326 of 374 precincts reporting, John Carnes led with 18,155 votes. He was followed by state Rep. Jack Campbell with 14,965 and state Rep. Alan Wheat with 11,138.

Among the seven Republicans on the 5th District primary ballot, with 330 of the 374 precincts reporting, state Rep. John Sharp led with 6,278 votes to 5,202 for Kansas City businessman Jim Lyddon and 3,641 for state Rep. Mike Ethington.

PRIOR TO THE election, Mrs. Woods, 55, had emerged as the frontrunner in the Democratic primary, according to independent opinion polls which showed her with more than 30 percent support.

She had won the backing of many of the party's traditional rank and file groups, such as the Missouri State Labor Council, AFL-CIO, the United Auto Workers, several women's groups and others.

In addition, Mrs. Woods throughout the campaign had counted heavily on support from groups who she helped during her time in the Senate. She has been the main sponsor of new laws to help improve nursing homes and mental health care.

Arnold, 51, a long-time fund-raiser and behind-the-scenes strategist for the Democrats, won the backing of most of the party's power brokers, such as four former state chairmen, former Gov. Joseph Teasdale and former Treasurer James Spainhower.

But Arnold started the campaign with little name recognition among voters compared to Mrs. Woods — a disadvantage he hoped to counter with an advertising campaign financed by the $300,000 he collected.

ARNOLD ALSO said Mrs. Woods was too liberal to unite the party in the general election campaign against Danforth.

Ryan, 31, a former head of the Missouri Public Information Research Group, a consumer lobby group, had formally started his campaign months ahead of Mrs. Woods and Arnold, but was able to raise only about $10,000.

Zych, 42, had counted on his name recognition as head of the St. Louis Board of Aldermen and his six years in the Missouri House to give him a long-shot primary victory.

Danforth, 45, had repeatedly said he expected to easily defeat Hancock and the other two challengers, and was gearing his campaign toward the November general election.

Record number of voters eligible

WASHINGTON (AP) — A record 169 million Americans will be old enough to vote in November, with women making up more than half the eligible voters, the Census Bureau says.

The voting age population, which skyrocketed over the last two decades as the postwar baby boom generation came of age, has increased by five million since 1980, the bureau reported Tuesday.

OVER THE LAST 10 years, the number of potential voters has grown by 28.5 million, the bureau noted. But this rate of growth is likely to slow in coming years, reflecting a decline in the birthrate that began in the 1960s.

Although there will be more Americans than ever over the age of 18 in the fall, the bureau said election turnout usually declines in non-presidential election years.

In 1978, for example, only 34.5 percent of those eligible went to the polls, the lowest voting percentage since 1942. By contrast, the 1980 presidential election drew 47.5 percent of eligible voters.

According to the new bureau study, the rapid growth in the number of young voters has lowered the median age of the voting age population from 42 to 40, with 20 percent under 25 years of age.

Of the total, women comprise 52.4 percent of potential voters in the United States, outnumbering men by eight million. Five percent of the women are 65 and over.

Blacks make up 10.5 percent of the electorate, with the highest percentage in the District of Columbia, where they make up two-thirds of those old enough to vote.

Other states with large percentages of voting age blacks are Mississippi, 31 percent; South Carolina and Louisiana, 27 percent; Georgia, 24 percent; Alabama, 23 percent; Maryland, 21 percent; and North Carolina, 20 percent.

NEW YORK STATE has the most blacks, with 1.6 million. California, Texas and Illinois also have more than one million black voters.

Hispanics make up 5.5 percent of the electorate, with nearly 70 percent of them residing in California, New York, Texas and Florida. Even so, New Mexico has the highest percentage of Hispanics in its voting age population, 33.1 percent.

Asian and Pacific Islanders are concentrated in California and Hawaii, the bureau reported. American Indians, Eskimos and Eleuts live mainly in Alaska, New Mexico, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Arizona and Montana.

Here, state-by-state, is the bureau's projection of the number of residents who will be of voting age this November.

Second woman wins senatorial nomination

By The Associated Press

Harriett Woods, a state senator from suburban St. Louis, is the second woman to be nominated to the U.S. Senate this year, while a Wichita businessman won the Republican gubernatorial nomination in Kansas.

"I was told I couldn't win and I was told I couldn't raise money, but I did," said Mrs. Woods, a Democrat who defeated 10 candidates Tuesday to face Republican U.S. Sen. John Danforth. She said the central issue of the campaign would be Danforth's support for the economic policies of President Reagan.

"The fundamental issue in the campaign is whether I should be retained in office on the basis of the six years I served in the Senate and my eight years as attorney general," Danforth said.

Mrs. Woods' nomination follows Rep. Millicent Fenwick's victory in the New Jersey Republican primary earlier this year. If elected, they would join two other women senators, Paula Hawkins of Florida and Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas, both Republicans.

With 93 percent of the precincts reporting, Mrs. Woods had 249,755 votes or 44 percent. She defeated 10 candidates, including Burleigh Arnold, a Jefferson City banker, who garnered 121,395 or 23 percent; and Tom Ryan, a consumer advocate, who got 70,553 or 12 percent.

Incumbent Kansas governor renominated

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Sam Hardage, a real estate developer, won the Republican nomination for governor and will face incumbent Gov. John Carlin, who received the nod from the state's Democrats by defeating a tavern disc jockey known for wearing a black hat.

In other primary balloting Tuesday, voters selected former state GOP chairman Morris Kay as the Republican nominee to Congress from the state's 2nd District in northeastern Kansas.

With all the precincts counted, Carlin defeated disc jockey Jimmy D. "Jim Bob" Montgomery, pulling 103,408 votes, or 79 percent, to Montgomery's 27,770 votes, or 21 percent.

Montgomery, 33, began his candidacy as a joke, donning a black felt Stetson hat that quickly became his trademark. But later he took the campaign seriously, and, after his loss Tuesday night, described his only regret:

"I've become a politician out of the deal and I really didn't want to," he said, but added he might run again.

Divers raise king's ship from underwater coffin

By ANDREW WARSHAW

PORTSMOUTH, England (AP) — Henry VIII's 16th-century flagship, the Mary Rose, a time capsule of Tudor life lying under 40 feet of murky water off Portsmouth Harbor, comes home from battle this fall — 437 years late.

Seventeen years after the wreck of the Mary Rose was located, Prince Charles last month launched the final stage of what is one of the most ambitious underwater archaeological projects ever undertaken.

After more than 25,000 dives that have produced 14,000 artifacts, preliminary work has begun on raising the hull of the 130-foot warship.

"This is a moment of history," Margaret Rule, archaeological director of the Mary Rose Trust, said at a recent briefing. "We have taken out all the contents and what we shall be bringing ashore is the empty hull.'

Financial problems remain, but Mrs. Rule said if all goes according to plan the wreck will be towed into Portsmouth Harbor this fall, possibly as early as mid-October.

In the most surgical aspect of the mission, divers are attaching a giant heavy-lifting frame to the delicate, waterlogged wood.

Taking care not to cause unnecessary damage, the divers are drilling holes in the hull for the 80 cables, which will lift the ship underwater onto a steel cradle. It will be transferred to shore by tug.

"She will be thoroughly corseted internally and externally," said Mrs. Rule.

Once raised, the hull will lie in a specially constructed drydock alongside another great warship, Lord Nelson's HMS Victory, for conservation and reconstruction.

The Mary Rose, 91-gun pride of King Henry's fleet, sank in 1545 during a battle with the French off Portsmouth Harbor. Historians still don't know whether the ship was hit by enemy cannon-fire or sank because of overcrowding.

Fewer than 40 of the 700 crewmen are believed to have survived, and Henry is said to have heard the cries of his drowning men as he watched the disaster from behind the harbor walls.

The same year, the Mary Rose Trust was set up with Prince Charles as its president. The prince has himself made nine dives to the wreckage.

Twelve professional divers, assisted over the years by some 500 volunteers, lifted artifacts from the Mary Rose, sometimes working in poor visibility of no more than two yards on the silt-filled seabed. One diver has been killed during the 12-year operation.

Some of the artifacts have been put on exhibit, but most are kept in an old warehouse in suburban Portsmouth. Each item is washed, waxed or freeze-dried, numbered, labeled and placed in a clear, waterproof plastic bag.

Among the 16th-century artifacts are bows and arrows, guns, pocket sundials, spoons, razor handles, game boards, cooking pots, books, clothing and an ominous-looking 15-inch syringe used in the treatment of venereal disease.

"The Mary Rose represents a day in the life of Tudor England," said site founder Alexander McKee. "You cannot get that sort of information from libraries."

It's the 'Pipsi' generation

GRANDVILLE, Mich. (AP) — If police suspect you of being tipsy, they may think twice if you're drinking "Pipsi."

Police in this Grand Rapids suburb say some beer drinkers are wrapping their cans of brew in phony plastic labels to make their beverages look like soft drinks.

The labels, sold at party stores under the name Hide-A-Brew, bear take-off names such as "Pipsi" for Pepsi, "Seven-Op" instead of Seven-Up and "Mountain Dow," an adaptation of the soft drink trade name Mountain Dew.

Madejczyk said his officers have not caught anybody using the wrappers, but he speculated they would appeal to minors who want to conceal illegal drinking and to people who want to drink in parks where alcohol is prohibited.

U.S. farmers very much on administration's mind

By EVANS WITT

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Ronald Reagan says farmers are very much on his mind, it could explain something about why he thinks it's all right for Americants.

American grain farmers will be voting in this fall's elections. French and Italian turbine mechanics won't, no matter what happens in Poland.

Farmers are crts.

American grain farmers will be voting in this fall's elections. French and Italian turbine mechanics won't, no matter what happens in Poland.

Farmers are critical to the Republican Party this year, for the party is stumbling in the Midwest, even as it seems to be doing pretty well in the rest of the country. If farmers blame Republcan candidates for the high interest rates and poor commodity prices that are squeezing profits, the GOP could be in deep trouble in the American heartland.

Huge grain sales to the Soviets would help ease some of the pressure on farmers. And that's just what Reagan paved the way for with his decision last week to

To make certain farmers get the connection between grain sales and the elections, Reagan flew to Iowa to talk to farm groups.

"The granary door is open and the exchange will be cash on the barrelhead," Reagan told corn growers in Des Moines, adding that "the farmers of America are very much on my mind."

But martial law in Poland makes Reagan's courting of Farm Belt votes a very dangerous game. Indeed, charges of hypocrisy are being hurled at Reagan from America's allies in Europe, for Reagan has strongly condemned the situation in Poland and the Soviet role in that repression.

To punish the Soviets for their support of repression in Poland, Reagan has pressured Europeans not to sell the Soviets the turbines and other equipment they need to complete a 3,500-mile natural gas pipeline. The pipeline, which could be operational in 1984, would allow the Soviets to sell huge quantities of fuel to the Europeans.

Companies in France, Italy, Germany and Great Britain — backed by their governments — have given every sign they will ignore Reagan's sanctions, pointing to the grain sales as they make their defiance clear.

Prince William christened into Church of England

By EDITH M. LEDERER

LONDON (AP) — With champagne toasts and cake saved from his parents' wedding, the 44-day-old son of Prince Charles and Princess Diana was christened today into the Church of England.

In an exclusive family affair at Buckingham Palace, Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie held the infant Prince William of Wales and baptized him with water from the silver-gilt Lily Font, used for all royal christenings since 1840.

As his parents, grandmother Queen Elizabeth II and about 60 other guests looked on, the blue-eyed prince was officially named William Arthur Philip Louis. He is second in line to the throne after his 33-year-old father and will head the Church of England if he becomes king.

The simple 20-minute christening was attended by most of the royal family, the prince's six godparents and the four doctors who attended his birth on June 21 at St. Mary's Hospital.

There were two notable royal absences — Prince Andrew, 22, the baby's uncle, who was a helicopter pilot in the 74-day Falklands conflict with Argentina and is still on duty in the frigid South Atlantic, and his great-aunt, Princess Margaret who is vacationing in Tuscany, Italy.

"She went to Venice on a longstanding official engagement on behalf of the Royal Ballet Company," a spokesman for Princess Margaret said. "She had made plans to go on vacation long before she knew of any date for the christening."

Buckingham Palace strongly denied a report in the Daily Express that Prince Andrew asked for emergency leave to attend the christening and was turned down by military authorities.

"The prince had no intention of coming home in advance of the rest of the crew" of the aircraft carrier Invincible, to which he is attached, said the queen's press secretary, Michael Shea.

William's christening gown, of fine Honiton lace lined with white satin, was made for Queen Victoria for the baptism of the future King Edward VII. It has been worn by all royal babies since, including the queen and Prince Charles.

Prince Andrew, who dropped to third in line to the throne after Prince William's birth, was best man at the wedding of Charles and Diana a year and six days ago.

For the christening, Prince Charles and Princess Diana chose the Church of England's modern language baptism service rather than the traditional 1662 Book and Common Prayer version.

As the young prince's parents and godparents stood around the fluted font, Archbishop Runcie reminded them of their duty "to bring up this child to fight against evil and follow Christ."

The archbishop, spiritual head of the Church of England, poured water on the baby's head, made the sign of a cross on his forehead and said:

"I give you this sign to show that you have passed from darkness to light, that henceforth you may shine as a light in the world to the glory of God the father."

A palace spokesman said the little prince has spent his time in the nurseries at his parents' London apartment in Kensington Palace and at their country home, Highgrove House, 113 miles west of London.

The public got a second-hand look at him, wide-eyed and contented with his mother and father, in photographs taken by Lord Snowdon, the ex-husband of Princess Margaret.

Prince Charles, who has spoken of his sometimes lonely childhood, was the first royal father in centuries to be present at the birth of an heir to the 1,000-year-old British monarchy. He has said he plans to take an active part in his son's upbringing.

Charles and Diana chose six godparents: ex-King Constantine of Greece, Sir Laurens Van Der Post, the South African writer and a mentor of Charles; Lord Romsey, grandson of Charles' beloved great-uncle, Earl Mountbatten of Burma, who was killed by the Irish Republican Army in 1979; Princess Alexandra, a first cousin of the queen; the Duchess of Westminster, wife of one of England's wealthiest aristocrats, and Lady Susan Hussey, a lady-in-waiting to the queen who helped prepare Diana for royal life.

William's christening gown, of fine Honiton lace lined with white satin, was made for Queen Victoria for the baptism of the future King Edward VII. It has been worn by all royal babies since, including the queen and Prince Charles.

New eligibility rule may help low-income elderly

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress and the bureaucracy are moving to help people like Mattie Dudley, a 67-year-old newspaper peddler who faces having her federal medical benefits cut off because she bought a $1,000 burial policy.

Richard S. Schweiker, secretary of Health and Human Services, announced late Tuesday that he was striking the rule that counts burial plots among a person's assets.

But Schweiker said the change will not automatically allow Miss Dudley of Charlottsville, Va., to keep her Medicaid benefits.

The revisions in eligibility rules for Supplemental Security Income will affect Medicaid beneficiaries in the 34 states that automatically extend Medicaid coverage to recipients of SSI. But Virginia does not automatically give health benefits to all those aged, blind or disabled people on the SSI rolls.

"We certainly hope they will (let her keep Medicaid), but it's their decision," Schweiker said in an interview. "By the same token, we're making this national policy with the hope that states see the equity and the fairness and the logic of helping people like Mattie."

"I believe it's basically unfair to penalize our low-income elderly and disabled people who are looking ahead and trying to be helpful to themselves in terms of their own funeral expenses," he said. "I believe it's contrary to our basic philosophy."

Meanwhile, the tax increase bill now being considered in Congress by House-Senate negotiators also includes a provision to spare people such as Miss Dudley, whose case has attracted widespread publicity.

Crippled since infancy by a congenital condition that caused her legs to atrophy, Miss Dudley was scheduled to lose her Medicaid benefits for two years starting last Sunday. But the cutoff was delayed for a month while she appealed.

Welfare officials in Virginia found that she had exceeded the $1,500 asset limit allowed SSI recipients because a $1,000 burial policy she purchased in 1979 had earned $226 in interest.

But the giant tax bill states that, in determining eligiblity for SSI, the federal government must not count as assets any amount "that is separately identifiable and has been set aside to meet the burial or cremation expenses, and related expenses, of...(the) individual or spouse" if that would push total assets above the limit.

The amendment was added to the tax bill by Sen. Howard W. Cannon, D-Nev., who said, "For many elderly Americans, they are being faced with the macabre choice between lifesaving welfare assistance and giving up their plans for disposition of their bodily remains."

Schweiker said his department would push out its new rule within two weeks and "we're going to make it effective as soon as possible."

Miss Dudley, whose plight first came to light after a story published in the Charlottsville Daily Progress, draws $280 a month in SSI benefits and makes about $5 a week selling the newspaper from her wheelchair.

In an effort to hold on to her SSI benefits, Miss Dudley transferred her burial policy to a friend, who promised to carry out her final wishes. But government authorities said that was not good enough unless the cash from the policy were used for essentials, such as food.

SSI rules do not count essential resources such as a home, car, property used for self-support and a reasonable amount of life insurance in computing a welfare recipient's assets.

Percy to seek new investigation into women's killings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Charles H. Percy, recalling his "tortuous, hard path" after his daughter was murdered, says he will help the brothers of two American churchwomen slain in El Salvador try to get a new investigation into the killings.

Percy, the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, made his comments Tuesday after Michael Donovan and William Ford charged that the State Department is attempting to cover up possible involvement of high-ranking Salvadoran officers in the slayings.

The testimony of the two men came at a hearing on military assistance to El Salvador, which was to resume today.

Donovan's sister, Jean Donovan, a lay missionary, and Ford's sister, Ita Ford, a Maryknoll nun, were among four American churchwomen shot to-death in El Salvador on Dec. 3, 1980.

Thomas O. Enders, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, denied any cover-up. The department has no evidence implicating any military officials ranking higher than the five Salvadoran National Guard enlisted men awaiting trial, he said.

But Donovan and Ford claimed that at a June 28 meeting at the State Department, a Salvadoran lawyer employed by the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador to investigate the slayings suggested that orders to kill the women may have come from senior military officers and officials of the Salvadoran government.

"This testimony personally shocks me," said Percy, an Illinois Republican. "I will do everything I personally can."

"I can walk in the shoes that you are walking in now," he told the slain women's brothers. "It's a long, tortuous, hard path and you just don't want to not have justice done."

Percy referred to the unsolved murder in 1966 of his daughter Valerie, who was killed at the family's home in a Chicago suburb. Percy seldom mentions the tragedy publicly.

Percy said he intended to press both U.S. and Salvadoran governments for a full investigation. During the hearing, he tried to telephone Salvadoran president Alvaro Magana, but couldn't reach him because it was a holiday in El Salvador.

He also said he would talk to FBI Director William Webster and Secretary of State George P. Shultz this week about the matter.

Donovan, a Connecticut accountant, called the U.S. and Salvadoran investigations "a travesty" and told the committee: "While El Salvador continues to receive U.S. aid, the Congress must insist that a way be found to conduct a real investigation and prosecute those responsible."

Ford said, "I am sorry to say that our government is looking for just a trial of the five men and then to forget the issue."

According to Enders, a trial date for the guardsmen is expected to be set in the fall. He said the Salvadoran government has proposed calling 14 additional witnesses, including the head of the National Guard.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., a supporter of U.S. military aid to El Salvador, then asked Enders, "Are we covering up anything in El Salvador?"

"No, sir, we are not," Enders replied.

Enders was testifying in support of the administration's recent certification that the Salvadoran government is making significant progress in land reform and in reducing the murder and torture of civilians by its security forces.

Attention!

Capt. Saturnelli, bedecked with medals, gives a military salute in her formal dress uniform. The New York Military Academy is the only co-ed military school at the high school level in the United States.

Rank: Captain.

Number: 317

She was one of the top performers militarily and scholastically at the New York Military Academy; winner of the Superior Cadet Medal in her senior year.

The academy was established in 1889, but only began admitting young women in 1976. Karen Saturnelli arrived in the seventh grade at age 10.

Six years later, there were 12 female cadets among 82 graduates. Karen, 17, is a captain on Brigade staff. She placed second in a class competition for the honors.

"I beat out all those guys, and that's what probably made me happy," she says.

AP Laserphoto

As part of her weekly physical training at the New York Military Academy, Capt. Karen Saturnelli jogs daily with Capt. Andrew Teller, 17, across the field of the school. Saturnelli often wonders "what it would be like to wear my own clothes and got to a public school. There are times you want to beat the system and 'cheat' like wearing a civilian shirt with our sweatshirt instead of our issued T-shirt."

AP Laserphoto

Up daily at 6 a.m., honor student Saturnelli, stifles a yawn during physics class in which she is one of two girls. She graduated from the military high school this year with top miltary and scholastic honors. "I enjoyed the challenge," she says.

OS Programmer

What can you contribute to our Computer Center in Midland?

ARCO Oil and Gas Company can benefit from your technical resourcefulness in installing and maintaining a large-scale IBM system at our Permian District's Computer Center. You'll be highly visible...and essential -- and we'll offer career growth prospects to match--as your significant contributions help provide vital DP support to our domestic oil and gas exploration/production.

Specifically, you'll maintain an IBM 4341, as well as coordinate the installation of all computer hardware in the district. You will also provide support and consultation to a large user community, and will be responsible for performance measurement and planning, and operator training.

Your excellent oral and written communication skills will serve you well when working closely with several of our Plano, Texas DP groups. On occasion, you'll perform special studies and write up applications.

You must have a degree in Computer Science or the equivalent. Experience with VM and MVS operating systems, CMS, TSO, JCL, keymaster, CICS, and VTAM software, as well as 4300 configurations, highly desired. Two years experience as an operating system. programmer preferred.

We offer very competitive salary and outstanding benefits. To arrange an interview, please send your resume and salary history in confidence to: Mr. Bill Fenton, ARCO Oil and Gas Company, Room 134, 300 North Pecos, Midland, Texas 79702.

When you've arrived... Meadowpark

Meadowpark residents will enjoy a great deal of room and privacy because of the very low density of the development. The cluster arrangement of Meadowpark restricts traffic flow on residential streets. On-Street parking is prohibited, so that streets become areas for family activities.

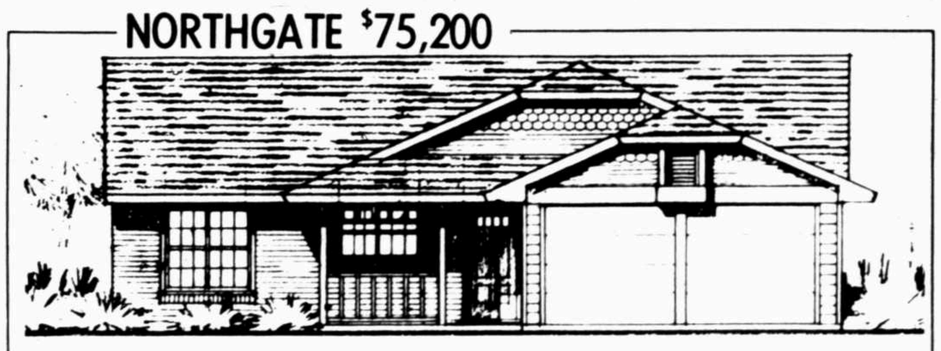
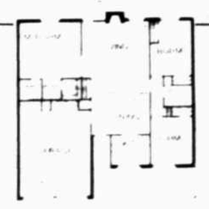
$1450 Limited Closing Costs in Northgate only

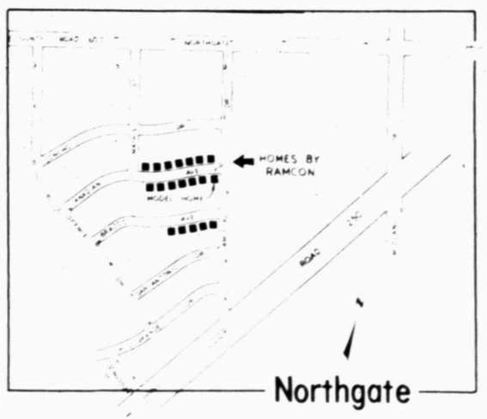
NORTHGATE $75,200



4909 Canadian



$673.30 Per Month



You can't afford NOT to buy any longer!

Total move in costs of $5250 is based on 5% down or $3800 plus $1450 limited closing costs based on 15 days prepaid interest. The first year's payment of $673.30 (principal and interest only) is based on a loan amount of $71,400. The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 10 7/8% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 15 7/8% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be changed at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage bases upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. Annual percentage rate approximately 16.575%.
