ROCKFORD FLIERS SAFE ON ISLAND

French Air Minister And Four Others Die As Plane Falls

DEATH PLANE CATCHES FIRE IN MID-AIR

TEXAS FLIER KILLED

Austin Pilot Falls to Death; Two Are Injured

LONDON, Sept. 2. (US)—Minister of Commerce and Aviation Bokanowski, of France, and four other persons were killed today when their airplane crashed to the earth, according to an Exchange telegraph dispatch from Metz. The pilot of the machine was among those killed in the crash.

The plane had taken off to fly to the aviation celebration at Clermont-Faraud. Shortly after the start, the machine burst into flames and crashed to the ground. Turning over and over on its fall, the airship was a total loss by the time it reached the earth. It is believed that the five occupants met instant death and it was impossible for onlookers to render assistance.

Minister Bokanowski was an outstanding political figure, and gained international prominence through this commercial dealings with the United States.

Catches Fire

The crash occured about 9:20 this morning, after the party had started from Toul to attend the celebration. Accounts of the disaster differ, some stating that the airplane caught fire 1500 feet in the air and others that it fell from a height of 450 feet and took fire when it struck the ground.

The other occupants of the plane were Pilot Hanin, Monsieur Lafranc secretary of the Compagnie Generale Internationaelle de Navigation, Mechanic Vigal and Wireless Operator Willens.

The plane was a 450 horsepower Spad.

Crash Probe Opens

PARIS, Sept. 2. (UP)—Captain Wackenheim, opening the first official inquiry into the airplane accident at Toul which resulted in the death of Minister of Commerce Bokanowski, said tonight that several witnesses had informed him the "motor acted badly" at the take-off.

"The motors of the plane were losing speed at the start, I have learned," said Captain Wackenheim. "Pilot Hanin had tried to return to the field and succeeded in the first sweep downward. In attempting the second sweep, his motor

Scores Overcome By Smoke As Fuse On Speeding Subway Train Explodes

Fainting Women Trampled in Rush to Exits; Several Injured In Second Recent New York Subway Accident

NEW YORK, Sept. 2. (US)—Thirty five to 40 persons were overcome by smoke or otherwise injured and several women were trampled upon in a panic which followed when a fuse blew out on a subway train on the Flushing line of the I. R. T. subway late this afternoon.

The train, which had just passed under the river from Grand Central station on its way to Flushing, was crowded with more than 200 persons. It was just pulling into the Jackson station when a dense volume of black smoke burst from the floor of the first car of the five-car train.

Remindful of the recent crash of an I. R. T. subway train at Times Square in which nearly a score of persons were killed, the passengers began screaming and making for exits.

The train, however, was moving at full speed, and so the crowd pushed back through the end door into the next car behind.

So great was the stampede that the door was blocked and made impassable before a third of the frightened passengers got through. Meantime, the smoke had filled the car and the mass of humanity left behind began gasping for breath.

Several women fainted and shortly were beneath the feet of the trampling horde. Men were shouting for the train to stop and women were screaming through sheer hysteria.

The train, finally, was brought to a stop, and the gates flung open. Passengers began piling off onto the tracks, while the trainmen shouted warnings, above the din of confusion, against the current laden third rail.

The suffering passengers were taken to the surface through an emergency exit and those requiring medical attention were hurried to nearby hospitals.

POLICE HALT CHURCH DEBATE

Wichita Man Tells Pastor He's Wrong

When a middle aged man insisted that the pastor of the Purities church at 2701 Buchanan was wrong, Sunday night, police were called and the disturbing element was taken to the city hall to think over the question which has been under dispute. He was released on bond of $10.

The man, according to Fred Fountain and Johnny Sewell, police officers who investigated the call, had broken into the pastor's sermon to dispute a religious point with which he did not agree. The point in controversy was not revealed. The man arrested, who gave Wichita Falls as his home, insisted that the preacher was wrong as he made bond.

Hoover's 'High Hat' Attitude Toward Scribes Causes Press Gallery Revolt

By CHARLES S. HAYDEN,
Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Sept. 2—A threatened revolt on the part of Washington newspaper correspondents have forced the Republican national committee to modify it's "high hat" attitude so far as to arrange for periodical press conferences with the presidential candidate, Herbert Hoover.

The first of these has been held, incidentally the first since immediately after the nomination of Mr. Hoover, and while it wasn't productive of much information it did reveal why the presidential candidate was unwilling to meet the hirelings of the press. He resents being cross-questioned and at this first conference referred to it was with difficulty that the candidate could hold his temper when some red-faced scribe inquired if he knew whether Senator LaFollette intended to follow the example of his colleague, Senator Blaine, and bolt the Republican ticket. The answer was evasive but curt to the point of churlishness.

This question of meeting the newspapermen stationed in Washington face to face has been a disturbing factor for the candidate ever since the Republican national convention. Of course it is the customary thing for presidential candidates to meet the newspapermen assigned to cover their activities. For the last two decades even the presidents have made it the practice of meeting the corps of Washington correspondents at semi-weekly conferences, which meetings have been productive of considerable humorous comment anent the "White House spokesman." This being true it has been difficult to convince the newspapermen that any more divinity hedges about a candidate than the president himself.

The demand that Mr. Hoover hold these conferences at stated intervals

As the first national candidate to speak in Texas he is counted upon to nip in the bud the Texas anti-Smith movement.

Governor Dan Moody, who fought to the end at the national Democratic convention for an endorsement of the 18th amendment, is expected to be here and participate in the welcome to Robinson, Tom Connally, Democratic nominee for U. S. Senator, will attend.

Senator Robinson and his party of seven are scheduled to arrive at 8:30 a. m. There he will meet the central campaign committee that has organized to combat the Texas-for-Hoover forces. A round of golf and a private dinner engagement will take up the time before his appearance at the Texas State fair grounds.

This address, he has notified the committee will deal with the past history of Democracy, on labor measures, the party's platform and the personal labor record of himself and Governor Smith.

The exercises will begin at 2:30 o'clock. Senator Robinson will be introduced by Jed C. Adams, Democratic national committeeman from Texas. George Slater, executive secretary of the Texas federation of labor and Lieut. Gov. Barry Miller are others on the program.

Miller recently was renominated for lieutenant governor over former Democratic national committeeman Tom B. Love, who is making speeches for Hoover.

Many of the party leaders who are gathering here tonight plan to accompany Senator Robinson to Cisco, Texas, where he will speak Tuesday night. He will be welcomed there by Congressman Tom Blanton and be introduced by Judge Eugene Langford, a former schoolmate.

After these addresses, one for East Texas and one for West Texas, Senator Robinson will go to Tennessee for a three-day campaign in that doubtful state, with addresses at Nashville, Chattanooga and Knoxville.

FLYING CIRCUS HERE

Wichitans are ready Monday morning to enjoy one of the most diversified lineups of amusement for Labor day offered in the city in years.

A flying circus, picnics, shows, boating, the zoo, dances, motor boat races and other entertainments too numerous to list are among those which have been announced.

Banks and other financial houses, practically all of the retail houses, oil offices and most of the other offices in the downtown district also have the "closed" sign on the doors in honor of Labor day. The Monday night meeting of the city council has been cancelled.

Labor itself, in whose honor the day is celebrated, is holding its chief celebrations at Lake Wichita.

Three orchestras will play the music for dancing in the afternoon and evening. Races between big boats are planned for the afternoon. Flier at 14

Department of Commerce refuses to waive its 16-year-old age limit and grant him a pilot's license. The lad recently flew from Boston to Washington with his flying instructor. Next to being a pilot, he says, his greatest ambition is to meet Lindbergh.

Hassell - Cramer Uninjured After Forced Landing On Arctic

SMOKE SIGNALS SEEN

U. S. Scientist Rescues Fliers After Seeing Distress Flares

NEW YORK, Sept. 2, (AP)—The New York Times in a copyrighted story tomorrow will say that it has received word from Professor William H. Hobb, who is at the University of Michigan observatory at Mt. Evans, southern Greenland, that Bert Hassell and Parker Cramer, crew of the America to Sweden plane Greater Rockford, are at the observatory, unharmed.

The two aviators, who have been trekking to civilization for the past two weeks after making a forced landing at Point Sukkertoppen, southern Greenland, were uninjured.

Their immediate rescue was accomplished by members of Professor Hobbs' party, who sighted smoke signals sent up by the aviators and went in a boat across a fjord to get them.

Tonight Hassell and Cramer were at Camp Lloyd. They reported their plane undamaged. They said they had lived on reduced rations of pemmican for the two weeks.

Point Sukkertoppen is a noted headland on the west coast of Greenland in latitude 65.22 north longitude 53.05 west.

It is about 50 miles southwest of Mt. Evans for which point the fliers hopped off from Cochrane, Ontario, at 12:12 p. m., eastern standard time on August 18.

The following morning the airmen were sighted flying north, northwest over Fiskenaesset. Point Sukkertoppen is about 200 miles north northwest of Fiskenaesset.

Search Party Formed

When word of the sighting of the fliers on August 19 reached Professor Hobbs he immediately organized land searching parties for the airmen. The United States coast guard cutter Marion and the Danish costal vessel Islandfalk also took up the search.

Professor Hobbs established a base at Holstenborg, Greenland, on July 4. He is accompanied by seven American assistants and several natives of Greenland. The purpose of his expedition is to continue experimental work by which it is hoped to establish a system for forecasting Atlantic weather.

The expedition cooperated with

15,000 Watch Elimination Races in Ponca City Annual Terrapin Derby

PONCA CITY, Okla., Sept. 2. (UP)—Out of 4,500 terrapins which had aspirations of winning the title of fastest turtle in the United States at the fifth annual national terrapin derby at the 101 ranch here Monday, only 50 survived the elimination events held today.

The derby Monday afternoon will be the main event of the ranch rodeo.

A crowd of 15,000 persons this afternoon watched the 4,550 entries crawl steadily and stealthily over the 75-foot course in the ten elimination races. Four hundred and fifty turtles paced the distance in each of the 10 races.

A turtle entered by T. J. Dean, of Medford, Okla., covered the course in the fastest time today. He "ate up" the 75 feet in 1 minute and 55 seconds, setting the exhaustive pace by a wild breast stroke.

This time wasn't as good as the time of the winner of the 1927 derby, "Billy B," a sleek hard shell owned by D. Dale Beaver, mayor of Fairfax, Okla. clawed over the course in 1 minute, 29½ seconds. He won his owner $3,780 by performing the feat.

The winner of the derby Monday will receive a prize of $4,500. An entry fee of $2 is charged each turtle and this money goes to the winners. Half the fee money makes up the first prize.

To the town of Fairfax, Okla., belongs the honor of being supreme in turtledom. For of the 4,550 turtles entered, approximately 1,000 came from this town of 1,342 inhabitants. And their entries weren't mere turtles either for 12 of the 50 qualifiers are from Fairfax. The desire of the people of Fairfax to retain the honor won by their mayor, whose entry last year captured the derby, prompted so many turtles competing under the colors of Fairfax.

Thousands of dollars changed hands at the derby on wagers on just how fast a turtle can run, if at all. Hundreds of bettors, from grocery clerks to oil millionaires, from fashionable Florida to staid St. Louis, await with bated breath the results of the race.

Egotism is Cause of Loneliness In Old Age, Says Dorothy Dix

The Tendency to 'Let Go' and Indulge in an Orgy of Egotism and Reminiscence Is the Curse of Advancing Years and Is the Cause of Much Bitter Loneliness in Old Age

"I devote a great deal of time and study, to the art of growing old gracefully," said a woman to me the other day, "because when I reach the sere 70s and the hateful 80s I do not wish to be like so many of the disagreeable, forlorn old creatures I see about me.

"I don't want to be one of the tyrannical, selfish, tight-fisted old women whose children sit around waiting for them to die, nor do I wish to be one of the meddling mothers who stir up trouble wherever they go. I could not bear to be like the garrulous old ladies who bore everybody to tears, and from whom people flee as they would from the plague, or the lonely old souls who fasten themselves like the old woman of the sea on the necks of their family and friends.

"Therefore, I watch my step a hundred times more carefully than I did when I was young, for I am determined to avoid as many of the pitfalls into which age tumbles as I possibly can. I am not going to follow the example of so many old people I know who make age a blanket excuse for being a pest.

"To begin with, I have maintained my own independence and individuality, which not only insures the respect of everyone, including my own children, but promotes their affection. For it is a lot easier to love those we see occasionally than it is those with whom we live and with whom we are brought in daily and hourly conflict.

"When my husband died, my children dutifully invited me to come and live with them, but I declined with thanks. I didn't want to be 'poor mother,' who would always be a little in the way, and who would drag around on the back seat of the automobile, and make an awkward seat at the table.

"So, as I did not want to be on my children's conscience and minds, and have them worry about mother's being alone, I broke up my home and went to live in a pleasant family hotel. Now when I visit my children they get out the brass band and celebrate the event, for I do not go too often nor stay too long, and consequently even my in-laws are glad to see me.

"Loneliness is the curse of age. I forestalled that by beginning, while I was still a young woman, to cultivate friends and interests outside my home. So many women concentrate every thought and desire on their little family circle, and then when it is broken up, as it is bound to be by death, or by the children marrying and going about their own business, the mothers' lives are left absolutely empty. That is why so many women have to go and live with their children, even when they know that their presence in the household is a menace to their children's welfare. They have narrowed their world down to Johnny and Susie, and they have to be with Johnny or Susie, or else perish of loneliness.

"I have not made this mistake. I have kept up with my old friends and cultivated agreeable new acquaintances. I belong to clubs and take an active interest in all sorts of movements, and so I have no lack of companionship, or of keen and vital interests. Also, I bear in mind that when we are old and not so personally attractive as we were when we were young and beautiful and gay, we have to throw in some sort of a chromo with ourselves to make people seek our society, and so I entertain a lot and am not niggardly about food and drink.

"Most old people are bores and given to reminiscing about the past. I put a strict guard upon my tongue, and no matter how much I long to do so, I refrain from telling perfect strangers all the details of my first baby's first tooth, and what I did when I visited my dear grandpapa when I was a small girl. I keep a hawklike watch on the face of every person with whom I talk and when I see his or her attention begin to wander, I drop the subject as if it were a hot cake that was burning my fingers.

"I have never permitted myself the luxury of acquiring 'ways' that have to be catered to, and that make so many old people a nuisance. I can sit in any sort of chair, sleep in any kind of bed, and eat any school of cooking. Nor have I let myself annex any set prejudices that every one has to gumshoe around. I can change my mind as easily as I can my hat, and I devote a lot more attention to keeping my opinion flexible than to keepings my arteries from hardening.

"It takes a bit of doing, as the English say, but I have suppressed the set vice of age—the egotism that makes one believe, because one has lived 60, or 70, or 80 years that one automatically becomes a Solomon. I give myself, at least, the benefit of the doubt in this matter, and accord to other people the right to manage their own affairs without interference from me.

"I do not harass my children with unsolicited advice and suggestions. I do not tell my daughters that they should make their husbands do this or that, or refrain from doing something else. I do not tell my daughters-in-law that they should not use their best china every day, or how thick they should make the potato peelings, or how they should raise their babies.

"I do not nag them about their little personal habits and tell them that they gad too much, or spend too much on cars, or play too much bridge, or how bad the things they like to eat are for their stomachs. And because mother is neither a lecture bureau nor like the still, small voice of conscience reminding them of their sins of ommission and commission, they like to have her around.

"Nor do I sit in judgment on the young and condemn anything or everything they do because it wasn't done when I was young. Suppose girls didn't wear their dresses up to their knees and smoke cigarets and go out without chaperons and dance the Charleston when I was sweet and 20. They didn't ride in automobiles then, either, nor listen-in at the radio, and they had never seen a motion picture, or heard of an airplane.

"Other times, other manners, other customs, and what the youngsters are doing today is probably just as right as the things they did in my day. I am not going to drive my grandchildren away from me by knocking the way they dress and talk and amuse themselves.

"Of course, my theory all boils down to this—that if we wish to be liked we must keep ourselves likable; if we wish to be popular we must make ourselves agreeable to our fellow creatures, and this goes double for age. Which is a fact that most old people ignore."

London Chatter About Americans

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Even some of the prominent American tourists are getting a lot of misinformation about points of interest in London from some of the unofficial guides who hang around the west end hotels and conduct their own little sightseeing tours about town.

The other day a party of Americans were being shown the statue of Captain Cook, circumnavigator of the globe. The statue faces the admiralty and as the party drove by the guide explained in Sohocockney accents that the monument was erected to the memory of Dr. Cook, "the American who discovered the north pole."

"Gee whiz," said one American. "That's more than we have done."

It has been fashionable for many years for rich Americans to take grouse moors in Scotland for the shooting season. Many of the shooting lodges are leased from owners who can no longer afford to make use of them themselves.

This year has seen the greatest invasion of any season thus far. The demand for the best places has been so great that rentals have jumped to figures even higher than some of the swellest Park avenue apartments in New York. More than $35,000 was paid this year for moors which might have been had for $5,000 a few seasons ago.

A Mr. Wilson of Baltimore is the American tenant this season of Ardverlich on Lochearnside. H. Payne Bingham and Charles Steele of New York preside at Blair Atholl and Fetteresse respectively. Blair Athol is one of the duke of Atholl's well stocked preserves and Fetteresse is in Kincardineshire. Lady Seafield's Castle Grant moors, which provide some of the best bags in the northern highlands, were leased by H. S. Shonnaid.

Several American sportsmen were also entertained on the Moy Hall moors by Baron Edouard de Rothschild. King George and his father, King Edward, before him enjoyed some fine shooting on these moors.

The Duke of York shot forty brace of grouse at Cortachy on one of the first days of the season.

Madeline Gibson, eighteen-year-old chorus girl, playing in Noel Coward's Review, "This Year of Grace," at the London Pavilion, will be taken to New York next month by C. B. Cochran. Cochran announced that although lacking in long stage experience, Miss Gibson has "all the qualities which are required, and she will gain experience." She is said to be very beautiful.

London society is interested in reports from Le Touquet, where Gordon Selfridge's famous yacht recently anchored to permit his guests to visit the resort. The party aboard included Miss Jenny Dolly, of the Dolly sisters, and Prince and Princess Serge Wiasensky. The princess is a daughter of Mr. Selfridge.

Shortly before midnight the other evening Miss Dolly entered the Casino, where she took a seat at the big table. The news spread and in less than two minutes the table was surrounded six deep by a throng of spectators. Dressed in a white crepe de chine frock and wearing the wonderful seven string pearl necklace and with two enormous diamond rings on her fingers as well as large bracelets of brilliants, she attracted everybody's attention.

She paid five visits to the bank during the evening and must have lost well over $25,000.

University Reserve Books in Demand

AUSTIN, Texas, Sept. 2. (AP)—More than 286,000 books, an average of almost 800 a day, are given out annually from the reserve library at the University of Texas.

The reserve library consists of source books which are in such demand for study purposes that they can be checked out for only two hours at a time and issues cannot be renewed by a student.

Started seevral years ago as a small five foot shelf in the reading room of the main library, the reserve section has grown until it occupies an office of its own and has 10,000 volumes. The reserve room can accommodate 120 students, which often is inadequate.

CHIC CHERIE

(Copyr't. 1928 King Features Syn., Inc.)

Latest Fashions

We have mentioned satin. We've mentioned it frequently. It's not because we have nothing else to talk about for we can talk almost indefinitely on almost nothing. It's because satin is so smart for be tween-season and early autumn frocks that it isn't news, but it must be told. Dina's satin dress shows what can be done with even so old a fashion idea as the bolero—only one side, you see, with the belt giving a balancing line on the other side. Kitty's satin dress has dropped its kerchief from shoulder to waist and that's about the only way it differs from last year's frock—try that on your made-over dresses. Cherie's frock is draped and scalloped and is satin, too.

The subject of the conference in the preceding sketch was Ambrose, the gilded turtle, who was sent all the way from Paris to be a fashionable mascot for Cherie. They all agreed that he was holding his gilding wonderfully, but Kitty (her dress is organdie) had an idea all her own of what might be done with his jewels. A pin ought to work!

The last outrage was too much. Not that Ambrose valued his jewels—life has taught him the vanity of such baubles. For some reason it was too much and as Cherie passed by (in a satin frock with the smart hipline, coat effect, new collar and cuffs) she doesn't even see him—his gilding covered with mud and himself completely free!

Old Ireland Proud of Al's Forebears And Smith Is Proud of Ireland

By MARTHA DALRYMPLE

ALBANY, N. Y., Sept. 2. (AP)—New York and Ireland comprise the two ancestral locales of Gov. Alfred E. Smith.

The Democratic presidential nominee proclaimed this in commenting on reports from Ireland of the popularity into which his grandparents' birthplaces are said to have leaped.

"My mother was born in West Meath county in Ireland, and came over here as a very young girl," he said.

"But my father was born right in New York City, on Oliver street."

And the candidate went into an earnest and elaborate description of the exact location of the little low building in which his father was born.

"You know where the pumping station is between Oliver street and South Water where I was born: well, just opposite are two low buildings, and in one of them my father was born. I never have known which one."

The governor does not recall during his boyhood hearing his father discuss his forebears except to say that his parents also were born in New York.

Shy Bystander at 1896 Convention Now Heads G.O.P. Speakers' Bureau

By LORENA A. HICKOCK

NEW YORK, Sept. 2. (AP)—In 1896, the year William Jennings Bryan made his "cross of gold" speech in Chicago, there attended the Republican national convention in St. Louis a diminutive young woman—she weighed only 104—with shining brown eyes and close cropped curly auburn hair.

She was not a delegate, of course, and she was conscious of many interested masculine stares as she took her seat day after day in a secluded corner of the gallery. Always she was accompanied by a chaperone.

Today at Republican headquarters in New York that woman—greyhaired now and no longer young, as years go—was establishing the Eastern speakers' bureau for women in the Hoover-Curtis campaign.

She is Helen Varick Boswell—who, "has seen more politics than any other woman in the Republican party."

She started right in that summer of 1896 getting her political experience, and she has been getting it ever since—32 years.

"That first summer they wouldn't let me do very much," she said today. "Probably they would never have let me inside headquarters except for the fact that my foster-mother—my own mother had died when I was a little girl—was J. Ellen Foster of Iowa. She was head of the Republican national committee's first woman's division, in 1888, and was considered a remarkable speaker. That summer of 1900, when Theodore Roosevelt, as candidate for vice president, toured the middle west, while William McKinley conducted his front porch campaign in Ohio, Roosevelt asked for only two speakers to go with him, and one of them was my foster-mother. With Mr. Roosevelt and Jonathan P. Dolliver, she went barnstorming for six weeks."

Radio Dealers to Meet at Dallas

DALLAS, Texas, Sept. 2.—Wichita Falls and other Texas towns will receive better, clearer programs over radio if the conference of the Atwater Kent radio dealers results as the leaders have planned.

More than 500 dealers from Texas and Oklahoma are expected to attend the convention in Dallas Wednesday, Sept. 5, at which time there will be much discussion of ways and means employed to improve broadcasting of radio programs.

Guy E. Smith of Harrison Smith company, distributors of Atwater Kent radios in Oklahoma and Texas, promises that much of vital importance regarding the immediate future of the radio will be disclosed at the meeting. Experts from the factory will be present to speak on various subjects so that the dealers will be better able to cope with the problem of radio information, popular and technical, after they have attended the conference.

"Radio reception is practically perfect from its own end of the line," L. A. Charfonnier, general service manager of Atwater Kent, one of the speakers of the conference, declared, "but broadcasting can be improved in several ways and all improvement of broadcasting will, of course, make better reception."

PARIS ABSORBS FLAPPER HAT

Season's Hats to Imitate American Style

PARIS, Sept. 2.—Those saucy "eyebrow hats" which last year characterized the American flapper, have served as a source of inspiration for the coming season's Parisian modes. Paris has absorbed the flapper hat and invested it with a Parisian chic and elegance.

The aristocratic purlieus of Park avenue this autumn will bloom with smart head pieces fresh from the ateliers of Rue de la Paix, but whose origin can be directly traced to the United States.

All the hats shown thus far in the Paris style season, whether they are large or small, are distinctly one sided. The tendency is obviously to develop the "dip" movement so widespread in last season's styles from the frock to the chapeau.

Hat brims are remarkable for their richness of treatment and variety when they are in evidence, and equally remarkable by their absence when not in evidence. Whether the frame of the hat be round, or curved, no concession has been made to that elusive wisp of hair cut to curl from under the brim. This season's hat is made to cover the bobbed or shingled head as completely as a nun's hood.

Large Brims

Whenever brims are used they are of generous proportions, and from one-quarter to one-half inch wider than usual. These hats are distinctive for their sweeping movement downward, always on the right side. The smaller head pieces convey the same impression and movement by the adroit use of wings, bows and loops.

Satin, felt and taupe materials are most in evidence. Nevertheless that has not restricted the talents of the French modistes who are also showing several innovations like bretischwanz and jersey. Several combinations of different materials like panne velvet and satin, felt and velour, and velvet stiched in various geometrical designs have been used.

Colors are restricted to black in varying tones, red in discreet shades like plum and burgundy, brown, and the whole gamut of beiges from natural tints to delicate synthetic shades. The ornate evening wrap whose magnificence this season promises to eclipse past luxury, has found its counterpart in swathed turbans made of heavy gold and silver lames or exotic furs.

Amusing "doo dads" in crystal or diamond figures representing fruits, flowers, trees or your ancestral chateau, if you happen to have one, have been seen pinned on hats.

Magnate Says 'Stupidity' Cause of Oil Man's Troubles

SAN ANGELO, Sept. 2. (AP)—Cupidity and stupidity are at the bottom of the troubles of oil men, in the opinion of Levi Smith, president of the Big Lake Oil company, owner of heavy production in West Texas.

Proration is a decided improvement over letting the oil wells run wild, said Mr. Smith, and he does not believe the Yates field, which now has a tremendous actual, and a fabulous potential production, should be opened up. While expecting an increase soon in the price of high grade crude oil, he does not see anything very encouraging for the oil industry for several months.

Mr. Smith took the first lease on what is now claimed to be the world's greatest oil pool, the Yates field.

OH, THESE WOMEN ! ! !

By LEOLA ALLARD

NEW YORK, Sept. 2. (U. S.)—Go into any drug store in New York in the morning, to get orange juice, coffee, or what you want, and you will see lined up along the soda counter, pretty young women drinking—bromo seltzers!

Before prohibition they didn't need so much resuscitating.

Patricia gives her aviator husband a gold cigarette case in which she has inscribed: "Blue Skies."

And one lady who saw it said: "Yes—but what does it mean?"

Women are not "all alike."

An employer, especially pleased with the efforts of a young woman who worked in his business, offered her as a bonus, her choice of a fine dog or a trip to Paris. Believe it or not, she took the dog, and it cost $5,000.

The trip to Paris would have been over in no time, and the dog is still her faithful companion.

Americans average less than a pound of tea per year.

There are more tea cups than there is tea, which is why Mabel Willebrandt has such a busy life.

Considering that the girls are thin and getting thinner, and that their clothes are nil and getting nil-er, they should change the number of people permitted to ride in elevators. Twenty could very easily step in where 10 used to be a full house. In summer when they wear sandals instead of shoes three more could be accommodated in each lift load.

California girls boast that they lead the nation when it comes to finding husbands.

That everlasting sunshine makes optimists of them all.

And their divorce record? That's probably just as good. Maybe better.

FLOYDADA TO GET COMPRESS

Material Arrives for New Structure

Special to The Record News

FLOYDADA, Texas, Sept. 2.—Materials for the construction of a cotton compress and warehouse on a site near the Santa Fe tracks at Floydada is being unloaded now, and according to the information given the officials of the First National bank heer by H. F. Underwood, president of the Texas Compress and Warehouse company, the plant will be in operation this year.

The site of the company's plant here, comprising some 14 acres of land one-half mile north of the city limits, is adjacent to the Santa Fe's tracks from which a spur will be constructed to serve the compress. The site was bought two years ago following the announcement that the Quanah, Acme and Pacific Railway company would construct their line into Floydada, but the plant was not put up last season, it was said, because it was apparent the crop would be below normal and probably not of sufficient quantity to make the investment profitable. Present prospects are more roseate, and are said to be responsible for the decision to put the plant here at once.

Golf Knickers to Pass From Style

PARIS, Sept. 2. (UP)—American men might just as well throw away their knickers and get it over with. French and American tailors have decided the death knell shall be sounded for the "plus-fours."

Knickers are not even going to be good taste on the golf course because the arbiters of fashion have decided this thing of the blousing trousers has been overdone.

In exchange—they promise to give American men an English "guard's coat" and a French morning coat. The former is copied after the uniform of the guards and is long and straight, of blue chinchilla cloth. It is something like a Cossack overcoat.

The French idea of pinching the trousers at the belt has gone so well in America that tailors are considering introduction of the morning coat this winter. This particular coat has a habit of hugging the form and is said to have a more dressy effect than the straight line box coats worn now.

The Day of the Woodshed

THERE was a day in this country when hardly any young man under voting age was immune from an occasional visit to the woodshed and a sound licking at the hands of "the old man." Of late years our ideas of crime and punishment seem to have changed so greatly that the woodshed has fallen into almost total disuse.

Ed Howe, the Kansas editor whose writings have made him famous throughout America, mentions in his autobiography a few of his painful experiences on those frequent "father and son days" of another period. Editor Howe says that hardly a day passed when he wasn't taken to the shed for a paddling. Those occasions are passe now, the youth of the land hardly ever gets a good tanning, and most of us hail the new order as something better. Howe feels that the beltings did him good and is not ready to place approval on the modern method of "analyzing" children. Parents in his day punished their children; today it seems to be a matter of children "putting up with" their parents' faults.

"Man Failure"

IT ISN'T without significance that New York's terrible subway tragedy is ascribed to "man failure."

That subway was supposed to be 100 per cent safe. All the devices that engineers could think of had been installed. It was said that no possible defect in equipment could cause an accident. There were too many safeguards.

There remained, however, the human element.

A man cannot function as a machine functions. Always there is the chance for a little mistake in judgment, an error in calculation, that a machine cannot make. Safety devices are valuable, but they can't quite do it all.

The individual still counts for something, after all. The finest machine in the world can go smash; and, when it does, the engineers look into it and report, tersely, "man failure."

No matter how well we make our machines, we still need capable men to handle them.

Alvord Watermelons

MORE than 200 cars of watermelons have been shipped by rail from Alvord this season in addition to which a large quantity have been transported by motor truck.

Alvord watermelons are known as the finest grown. Unfortunately, they are not thick rined and do not stand shipment to far distances. Those that are shipped go to select markets. A good many of them come to Wichita Falls. What Alvord needs is some Texas Burbank to grow a hard, thick shell on Alvord melons so that they can be shipped to any market in the country. Then we could expect the melon raising industry in the Alvord section come into its own.

Labor Day

LABOR will put on its best clothes and take a day off Monday to celebrate its accomplishments toward bettering the condition of the laboring man in particular and humanity as a whole.

Some of the advancement of labor would have come inevitably with the advancement of civilization, but in human society those who advance the most rapidly are those who organize to find out what they want and use collective action to get it. So it has been with organized labor. Organized labor has had a definite program and its collective action has advanced that program. Everybody now accords labor rights for which it once had to battle.

It may be thought by some that having won so much there is now nothing left for which labor may organize. But effort is required to hold what has been gained and in a changing world where productive capacity is far beyond consumptive needs labor must be alert to protect its own interests and to share the advantages of more efficient production.

Judge Hughes and the World Court

IN electing Charles Evans Hughes to the world court, as the assembly of the League of Nations is expected to do next month, Europe will be formally expressing the opinion of Mr. Hughes which his own country holds, says the New York Evening Post, which goes on to say that since the retirement of Elihu Root, Mr. Hughes has been America's most distinguished private citizen.

There are few who will disagree with the Post in its estimate of Judge Hughes as the country's most distinguished citizen. This position is accorded to him by men of all parties and beliefs. There have been few men to whom his fellow citizens have looked with as much confidence.

As secretary of state in the Harding cabinet Judge Hughes framed the four reservations which would have permitted the participation of the United States in the world court. It was a reservation added by the senate which made the conditions of American entry objectionable to the other nations. His effort to obtain participation of this country was earnest and fair.

His acceptance of election would give the court added prestige with the American public. It would continually keep the court in their thought and would present constantly the question, "Why are we not in?"

TOONERVILLE FOLKS — Fontaine Fox

The FORBIDDEN DOOR — by Herman Landon

Four years before the story opens, Maxwell Martenet had disappeared, and because of his colorless existence, utterly different than that of his dead father, the scientist, Winthrop Gaston Martenet, every one believes, has had died. Ernest Mallingham, calling on Maxwell's widow, Julia Martenet, accuses her of knowing something of her husband's death. He mentions Valhalla Gap, the retreat of Old Winthrop, where he carried on many of his strange experiments, and she promises to tell him all. Hannan Martenet, son of Maxwell Martenet, lately arriving in New York from the tropics, finds he is being trailed by a young woman. He visits Curry, the family lawyer, who gives him a letter from his grandfather, which he is to read and then destroy. The letter warns Hannan not to open "the iron door until the clock has stopped," and ends with a drawing of a man his grandfather calls dangerous. As Hannan finishes reading there is a knock and the original of the drawing stands before him, Peters, the stranger, gives Hannan a letter from his father. Just as Peters leaves Hannan notices it is dated two years after his father's supposed death. He runs after Peters. The chase leads to a house, where Hannan is overpowered by Peters' servant, who after a short absence from the room, returns to give Peters Hannan's watch, collar buttons and such things as could not be destroyed by acid. At Valhalla Notch John, the watchman, is startled by the sight of footprints on the floor and by a knock at the gate. Repiying to the knock, John admits a young lady, who calls herself Miss Lane, and says she has lost her way. She notices the footprints and tells John Hannan Martenet has disappeared. As John and the girl stand in the hallway beside an iron door above which a clock ticks on, the door opens, a face appears for a moment, and the door closes again. Miss Lane faints. Next day Curry arrives with Mrs. Martenet just as John is leaving to get a doctor for Miss Lane. Among Curry's party is Peters. Above Valhalla Notch looms Old Blighty, a mountain which is a constant menace to the landlords. As Curry stands before the iron door he hears a tapping on the other side of it. Then some one grabs him about the throat, and all goes black. Peters tells Mallingham Hannan is dead, but when he leaves him he stands before the iron door and calls one word, "Hannan." Julia finds Mallingham before the iron door late at night. He tells her he'll open the door as soon as a time fuse he has set up on the mountains destroys the mechanism controlling the clock. Mallingham's fuse explodes a store of dynamite, starting a landslide, which buries the house—but the clock keeps on ticking.

The Fugitive Below

Horace Peters stopped before a basement door in an unfrequented wing of the house and delivered three firm raps. From within came the sound of footsteps, then the click of a bolt being withdrawn. The door opened and Peters walked in. It was a frugally furnished room, with no other illumination than a small candle.

"Well, Hannan, things are happening," Peters remarked. "It will be a miracle if we get out of this alive. As the great Horace once remarked, We're hell-bent."

With a painful limping movement Hannan went back to his cot and lay down. A tinge of pallor had crept into his tanned face, but his smile was as warm and bright as ever.

"Speak for yourself, Peters. My bent lies in another direction. But is it really as bad as all that?"

"Worse," said Peters, with a dogged pretense at cheerfulness.

"What happened?"

"I know not, Hannan." Peters rubbed his ruddy nose. "But I can make a guess. I think Mallingham had a fool idea he could stop the clock by setting off an explosion up in the hills.

"The idea was all wrong, and the explosion was a million times bigger than he meant it to be. I understand there was already some danger of a slide as a result of all this rain, and Mally's fireworks did the rest. Ergo, this unlovely predicament for thee and me."

"Don't you think the house will hold up?"

"Maybe. But the food won't, and neither will the air. We are sealed in an airtight box, Hannan. If we don't die of starvation, we'll expire from lack of air."

"You are a cheerful cuss," said Hannan, and blew out the candle.

Peters caught his breath as darkness descended upon him.

"Why did you do that?"

"To make the air last a little longer. Candles eat up the oxygen, you know."

"I don't like to be in the dark," Peters gently protested. "I'd rather die in a blaze of light. However, I'll sacrifice my comforts for the common welfare. Hannan, did Mally see you tonight?"

"I think he caught a glimpse of me, but I doubt that he recognized me. I had to come up and see what all the racket was about, and I couldn't dodge back fast enough when he threw the door open."

"He loked as if he'd seen a ghost. It was the first time I've seen Mally excited. He's probably made up his mind by this time that he was mistaken. How is the foot?"

"Full of twinges. Rotten luck to have an accident at this time."

"Accidents always come at the wrong time. Anyhow, mine always do, Hannan, what do you suppose happened to Curry?"

"I haven't the least idea," said Hannan gravely. "I like the old fellow. I hope it's nothing serious."

There was a short pause. "Odd thing that his wooden cigar should be found in the hall off the library," said Peters. "Maybe he simply took it into his head to drop out of sight for a while. People do all sorts of queer things in this place."

Another pause came. Hannan lighted a cigarette.

"By the way," he asked at length, "have you seen the little lady?"

"Eh? Oh, you mean Dr. Speck's patient. I've had just a glimpse of her."

"She has the brightest hazel eyes, hasn't she?"

"Why I guess so."

"And the most wonderful brown hair, soft and shiny and—er—glorious?" The end of Hannan's cigarette grew brighter and brighter.

"Wouldn't be surprised. They often have."

"And her smile—did you see her smile, Peters?"

"No, but it is probably a thing of celestial enchantment. Just how hard have you fallen for her, Hannan?"

"Don't be an idiot!"

Peters chuckled. "What's the divinity doing her?"

"How should I know?"

"How should you, indeed? The great Horace spoke a great truth when he said that love is blind."

"He never said anything of the kind."

"Well, he might have. Say, Hannan, you no longer look upon little old Horace Peters as a wolf in sheep's clothing?"

"I don't. I certainly got you wrong, Peters."

"It was partly my own fault. I had to play a role. Mallingham—blast his classical face—put me up to it. I'll tell you a secret, Hannan. I have a dark and mysterious past. Mallingham knows all about it. He's got the goods on me. He could send me up for 20 years."

The tip of Hannan's cigarette grew fainter and fainter.

"Twenty years," Peters repeated. "It's a fact. A man's chickens coming home to roost, and all that sort of thing. Well, Mallingham pulled me deeper and deeper into this thing. I couldn't back out. The moment I showed any inclination that way, it would have been the dungeon for little old Horace Peters. As Mallingham saw it, you had to be got out of the way. You were scheduled to drop off the face of the earth—vanish into thin air. And he delegated the job to me."

"You needn't go on, Peters. I understand now, and I'm not blaming you."

"But I want to get it off my chest. One has to get up early in the morning to put anything over on Mallingham. As a matter of fact, it can't be done. He kept his eyes on me every moment. He knew every word that was said when I dropped into your apartment at the Illington that night. I knew it all the time, but to this day Mallingham doesn't suspect that I knew it. That's where I have one tiny bit of advantage over him. You followed me to my house. We had a talk. I knew all the time that somebody was listening behind the curtains in the rear. You understand, Hannan. I had to act all the time as if I really meant to have Papu bump you off and boil you in acids—and I had to act convincingly. Papu didn't hurt, did he?"

"No, but his ugly face gave me the creeps."

Peters laughed softly. "The finishing touch was when Papu came to me afterward with your watch and cuff links and the other things. Papu, of course, had been instructed by me beforehand. I knew that extra frill would impress the watcher behind the curtains. Rather neat, don't you think, Hannan?"

"You are a genius in disguise, Peters."

"A man with a past has to be. One little slip and Mallingham would have sprung the trap. He doesn't suspect a thing so far. Tonight, when he saw you outside the door, I felt as if somebody had spilled a pitcher of cream. I had a few bad moments of it, Hannan. Could almost smell the odor of prison food. It isn't a nice smell. But Mallingham evidently thought he had been mistaken or else he thought is was your ghost. Anyway he didn't accuse me of double-dealing."

"You're a good friend, Peters. Shake."

Their hands clasped in the dark.

"There's just one thing I'm not clear about," said Hannan after a while. "What about that letter you handed me?"

"Your father's epistle? It was an honest-to-goodness letter, Hannan. I opened it, just as I said I did. It was that insatiable curiosity of mine that made me do it. A man with a dark and devious past doesn't think anything of opening somebody else's letter. With one exception I handed it to you just as your father gave it to me. The exception was the date. I changed that. It was a part of the acting I had to do to pull the wool over Mallingham's eyes. He complimented me afterwards on my cleverness."

"Peters," said Hannan solemnly, "what do you know about my father's death?"

"Not a thing, Hannan—not a thing. For all I know, he went away and died four years ago. I wish I could tell you more."

"You don't think Mallingham had anything to do with his death?"

Peters appeared to hesitate. "No, I don't think so. Mally would be capable of anything in that line. At the time, though, he had no motive for doing such a thing."

Hannan's cigarette had gone out. The little room was totally dark. It was still everywhere save for the grinding noises of tons of debris gradually settling above and around the house.

"Peters," asked Hannan presently, "just what is Mallingham up to?"

"Can't you guess? Mallingham thinks he knows what's to be found behind the iron door. He wanted a chance to investigate, and so he got Mrs. Martenet to stage this house party. That's only a blind, of course. So is all this talk about investing in a summer hotel. Mally had to have an excuse of some sort for coming here."

"I wonder what he expects to find."

"Don't you know?"

Through the darkness Hannan felt the little man's eyes on his face.

"No, I don't. I can't even make a guess. Can you?"

"Maybe, but I may be dead wrong. Mallingham has only given me a few dark hints. Mally is the sort that doesn't confide in anybody. He has given me to understand, though, that if everything turns out according to his expectations, there'll be a cool million in it for little old Horace Peters. He hasn't said how much there'll be in it for himself. Two or three million, maybe."

Hannan gasped, then laughed softly.

"That sounds crazy. I can't imagine my grandfather putting his hands to anything worth millions."

"Nor can I," said Peters. "I don't know where Mally got his dope, but he seems to think it's a sure thing. Anyway, there's nothing for me to do but to act as if I was his loyal and obedient partner in iniquity. Mally has me where he wants me, and he knows I'm afraid of him. There are a few little things he doesn't know, though. Say, wouldn't he hit the ceiling if he could hear us talking together?" Peters laughed at the idea. "And one of these days, Hannan, little old Horace Peters is going to get out from under. Just wait till Mally makes one little slip, and I'll turn the tables on him.

"I'll make him feel as small as last year's mosquito. Just wait! I'll——" He broke off with a groan. "I'm some little talker, eh, Hannan? I'm bubbling over with beautiful sentiments. I keep forgetting just one thing—that in a little while Mally and I may be riding side by side in what the poet so aptly calls the innumerable caravan. Creepy thought, eh? Well, I'll toddle along. Good night, Hannan."

Their hands lingered in a long clasp. Hannan laughed a little.

"What's the joke?" asked Peters.

"Oh, I just couldn't help remembering that somebody once warned me against you—gave me the idea that you are a dangerous character and that I had better look out for you."

Peters appeared to hesitate for a moment before he spoke.

"Well, we all make out little mistakes. No hard feelings. 'By."

He walked out. Hannan lighted the candle, got up and bolted the door behind his visitor, then stood abstractedly looking down at his firm, brown hand that had rested in Peter's soft clasp. Slowly a smile spread upward from the corners of his mouth.

"Queer thing!" he mumbled. "Sometimes the sound of a man's voice in the dark tells you more than his face does in the light."

He looked up, fixed a thoughtful gaze on the candle, then blew it out and sat down on the edge of the cot.

"No sense in wasting oxygen. What a funny nose Peters has. Wonder if Mally recognized me. Queer about Mr. Curry, though. H'm. Soft hazel eyes . . . Never say such eyes——"

He jumped up, suppressing a little groan, as he unthinkingly stepped down on his injured foot. A knock sounded on the door—another—and then a third, with a measured interval between each. Once more Hannan lighted the candle. The three knocks were the signal that had been agreed upon between Horace Peters and himself. Evidently the little man had come back for something.

Hannan limped across the floor, withdrew the bolt, and opened the door. For an instant his eyes widened in surprise. A tall man was standing outside, broad of shoulder and chest, with regular dynamic features over which a film of pallor was hanging just now. His eyes looked a little sultry, as if he had indulged too long in hectic brooding.

It took Hannan only a moment to decide. "Won't you step in, Mallingham?" he said pleasantly.

The Day Book of a New Yorker

By GRANT DIXON

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—"He told me that he was a theological student working his way through college and up against it hard," said the man. "Poor but honest and had to work both ends of the formula to remain so. He did not look like anything but lying when I met him.

"In those days I may have looked like a professional, and he confided in me as being one of the fraternity, higher up than himself he acknowledged, but with a heart that beat as one with his own in an emergency.

"To account for his distress and the cause of it he laid bare his heart to me. His regular summer job was traveling with a circus. The greatest show on earth, in the colossal aggregation of which he had the exalted privilege of being billed as the only living scientist capable of holding down the chair as professor of reptilian psychology.

"All creeping things were his intimates, he said. An entirely superfluous remark I thought. But it seems that an equally knowing theological student more honest and consequently poorer than he, and had done him out of his professorship, leaving him flat on his back. Would I stake him to put a money making scheme in the chemical line into successful operation? Five dollars now would make men of us both. He did not want the money. I could handle the funds, be treasurer of the corporation on a fifty-fifty basis.

"This took place early on Monday. My company was playing a week stand, there was plenty of time for the tryout, so I agreed. First breakfast, then a shopping trip. Our first stop was at a harness maker's shop, where we got an empty grease box with an easily seen label on its lid. Assuming the dignity of the president of the company, the professor insisted that the box be paid for despite the insistence of the saddler. They did not come to blows, but it looked like a case for the police, for the professor had dug up his honor from somewhere and told the base merchant that it was dear to him as life itself. The saddler won.

"All this had the quality of adventure to me and did not lack in interest. Next, two dozen cakes of soap were purchased. Then 50 tin salve boxes. Then the professor moved that a meeting of the board be called at this time. It was within easy walking distance and to it we walked. I was not astonished when I found his suite to consist of the shabbiest room I have ever entered. A mattress on the floor, an old trunk, lid up and nothing in it. A table with a small gas heater on it. Some pots and a pile of empty cans that had contained ready-to-serve food.

"He became very active. I did not notice what he did closely but with a speed and dexterity that might have done credit to Houdini, some of the soap was boiled into a jelly and slapped into the axle grease can, while another batch was treated to a boil and carefully put into the little salve boxes. This done, he straightened himself and cried 'Eureka, my thespian benefactor, the chemical company is on its way.' Stuff this stuff into your pockets! He grabbed a folding stand and led the way to an expectant populace. We found it. On the way there we bought a pair of white kid gloves and some white cloth material.

"We turned into a side street next to a much frequented one. When we had arrived his admonition to me was: 'When you see a cop lift your hat, then git and follow me.'

"He had erected his place of business, placing his box of axle grease where the blind might have read the label on the lid. With what looked like great care and deliberation, he arranged his stock and saw to it that I was in sight. The crowd, of course, gathered at once.

"The prof. drew onto his left hand the white kid glove, flourishing his arm while carefully holding up his coat sleeve so that his audience could not see that he was without a shirt except where a celluloid dickey hung from his neck, suggesting a more complete equipment. His ruffed necktie helping to make up the sartorial illusion.

"When he was sure that he had the crowd in hand his lecture opened. He expatiated on the rightful place of cleanliness in our habits; thrift and its value to place up where we belong in the general scheme of things; 'And now, my friends' he orated, 'let me call your attention to the crowning marvel of this marvelous age—a marvel so new that there has been no time to have even labels printed for this marvel before me in our overwhelming desire and anxiety to be of service to this intelligent gathering. How often have you ladies been struck aghast by finding just as your auto has been announced to take you to the reception of a Rockefeller that your beautiful white kid gloves are hopelessly ruined by a black smudge like axle grease taken if you will from old axles? In fact, black grease. Here he smeared his black jelly on the glove. The crowd gasped.

"'But all is not lost', he holds up the lid of the can. It reads Axle Grease. Mouths open. What next! 'The marvel of this momentous discovery saves you from missing your friends of higher circles. You need not dismiss your auto and eat out your heart with chagrin because—presto!' Here he rubbed some of the white jelly from the little boxes on the black spot and little by little it disappeared. 'And 50 cents a box does it. There are 200 of you, while I can serve you only to the extent of 50 boxes. Who'll be the lucky, the fortunate, the delightful possessor of this magic remover?'

"With my help, the 50 boxes were sold as fast as I could make change. When the last box had been fought for and secured, I looked up for the first time noticed a policeman and whispered to the professor. 'Cop!' 'Yes' he said 'he's been there since the opening of the show. I had to look out for myself when I saw you had joined the crowd. But get this. This stuff will not only clean axle grease from the most delicate fabric but in my hands it will paralyze a cop. Look at him. I had him nipped from the start. You could push him over where he stands. Now, then, to the company's office to declare a dividend.

"On arrival the spoil was placed on the tripod top and the coin divided into two parts squarely. I looked at my half and then the professor remarking, 'Professor you not only got the crowd but their cash. You got the police and you got me. How in the name of all that is theological was this chemical reaction brought about.'

"'Brought about? Why my noble but unsophisticated friend, I cleaned off one soap with a another soap. The axle grease never got into the box than its label. That stuff was black tar soap jelled. The other was a well known brand of white soap. I have a date in the city where they make it to help poor but honest theological student to make an honest living.

Coolidge's Son Out Looking for Job

SUPERIOR, Wis., Sept. 2.—John Coolidge starts job-hunting Monday. Like many another boy, he's going to the big city.

This week-end brought the vacation of the president's son to a close. The first of next week he leaves the summer white house on the Brule for New York.

His job hunting will be considerably easier than that of the countless others who have preceded him, however. It will consist of choosing between the several presumably generous offers already made him.

"It has been rumored variously that John will go to work for the house of Morgan, for the Pennsylvania railroad, in bank, for Governor Trumbull, of Conneticut and on the stage—the latter because he possesses a good voice and aspires to the saxophone.

HEALTH and DIET ADVICE

Questions in regard to health and diet will be answered by Mr. McCoy who can be addressed in care of this paper.

PREVENTING BLOOD POISONING

In any case where an injury has pierced through the skin it is important to remember that cleanliness is far more important than the application of antiseptics. The latter, while valuable, usually do not reach very deeply, and the application of iodine or any other antiseptic to a punctured wound that may reach in a half inch or more, is not very effective.

While a physician may use antiseptics, boiled water is about the best thing that a layman can use to wash out a wound. This does not mean washing the wound in any water, because the latter may be full of disease germs unless it has been previously heated to a high temperature. All dirt, blood clots, splinters and other foreign substances should be washed or pulled out. After the part has been cleansed thoroughly by the water which is allowed to cool to a moderate temperature, it may then be treated with the antiseptic. The danger of using the antiseptic first is that it may coagulate the tissue and seal in some poisonous matter that could have otherwise been removed.

If the cut is wide, it is well to bring the edges together with very narrow strips of adhesive which may be cut in the form of two triangles, with the narrow ends joined together. The narrow part may be placed over the cut, but by no means allow the entire opening to be covered, since there must be adequate room for drainage of any poisons that may form. After this the cut should be covered with sterile gauze which may be obtained from any drug store, or if this is not obtainable one should use cloths that have been boiled or baked.

Accidental injuries are almost inevitable, and it is advisable that every household has a simple first-aid kit on hand to care for these emergencies.

Blood poisoning is not the common occurrence that it was a half century ago. This is because of the improved sanitary measures that are now employed. It is possible that at some future time a surgical asepsis will be so improved that dying from blood poisoning will no longer occur.

When blood poisoning develops in the person who received ordinary antiseptic measures, it is usually because his blood is of poor quality, and this permits the infection to spread. It is wonderful to see the effect of diet on these cases. If the rich foods like starched fats and proteins are eliminated from the diet, and fresh fruits and non-starchy vegetables are substituted, the body seems to take a new lease on life, and the healing processes take place more rapidly.

When a child runs a nail into its foot, it is not as important for the mother to see if the nail was rusty as to see that the foot is soaked in clean, hot water. Even if blood poisoning is actually forming, one should soak the foot and leg into hot water, and every ten minutes dip the leg and foot into very cold water for one minute. This may be continued for several hours, to stimulate the circulation and assist the body to wall off, or the blood to carry away, the pus. By using this method on children I have, within a few days, seen the expulsion through the original opening, of objects like splinters, sand, glass and enamel.

Most of the soaking should be done the first day and the process may be repeated for perhaps an hour on each following day until the wound attains a healthy appearance, after which it is only necessary to cover the wound with a sterile bandage to prevent dirt from entering.

It is good to allow bleeding at the start to wash out any foreign substance. Then use this washing treatment without waiting to find out if blood poisoning is going to develop. Care taken in this manner may avoid much misery and prevent serious consequences.

Questions and Answers

Question: W. L. writes: "What causes white spots to form on one's nails? Have been told they indicate that something is wrong with the system in a nervous form. Is that right?"

Answer: The person who has white spots on his nails is usually nervous, due to some form of acidosis from which he is suffering, which acidosis interferes with a normal distribution of silica to his growing nails.

Question: Mrs. N. W. asks: "What do you think of chocolate as a drink?"

Answer: Chocolate seems to produce a good deal of biliousness, and of course, requires a large amount of sugar to make it palatable. I never recommend it at any time as a food or drink.

Question: Mrs. J. H. writes: "I am 60 pounds overweight and would like very much to practice your famous fruit juice diet. However, one problem confronts me. I am in the second month of pregnancy. Would the diet prove harmful?"

Answer: The fruit juice fast would be decidedly beneficial to you at this time. Fruits contain practically all the bone-building material you require, but while taking such a fast your body has a chance to eliminate impurities and your system will be cleansed to more easily meet the ordeal you are about to go through. After the fasting keep your diet well balanced, and do not make the mistake of thinking you must "eat for two." If you will send me a large, self-addressed, stamped envelope, I will be glad to send you some articles called the "Motherhood series." Ask for them by this title.

"Now, I don't know whether or not the fact that I'm a movie actress is responsible for my liking best a story about such a person, but I do," Mlle. Adoree told me.

"A hotel was on fire and on the sixth-story ledge stood a popular film actress, flames crackling about her. Below, the firemen were holding a net, while the crowd waited in agonized suspense. Finally a strained voice screamed:

"'Jump—for heaven's safe, jump!'

"'I'll do nothing of the sort,' replied the actress. 'Tell the director to send my double here this instant!'"

THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE (389) OUR PRESIDENTS

The country along the Gulf of Mexico beyond the United States' possessions was called Texas by the Spanish and Mexicans. Americans began to move in about 1819. Soon large numbers had arrived. Both Adams and Jackson tried to buy the territory but Mexico refused to sell. The Texans began to talk about independence and in 1835 fighting began.

By NEA, Through Special Permission of the Publishers of The Book of Knowledge, Copyright, 1928-29.

The Texans showed themselves superior fighting men. They organized the Republic of Texas and asked to be admitted to the Union.

Many northerners opposed Texas' admission because it would give so much more slave territory. The dispute was not settled at once.

During Jackson's administration the first railroads were built in the United States, anthracite coal was used in an engine, a reaping machine was invented and other important machines designed. Opponents of Jackson, calling themselves Whigs, banded into a political party. From the Whigs the present Republican party drew much of its early strength.

CATS STAGE NINTH INNING RALLY TO BEAT SPUDDERS, 5 TO 4

BUFFS GAIN ON OUR SPUDDERS

Kiefer's Weakening Beats Champions

By LARRY DAILEY

FORT WORTH, Texas, Sept. 2.—Those dratted Cats! It will be recalled that Jake Atz' men stopped a winning streak of the Spudders, which had extended to 16 games, a few weeks ago. Today, the snarling Kittens halted another victorious run of the champions, when they staged a belated but effective rally in the ninth inning. By scoring all their runs in the final round, to take a 5 to 4 decision, the Cats stopped this Spudder winning streak, which had achieved the highly respectable figure of 11.

That pastime today, view by 1,000 fans, several of whom were from our town, was a headache to the Spudders and their adherents. There they were in the ninth, leading 4 to 0, and then, as the comic strip says, it happened.

Joe Kiefer, who had hurled superb ball for eight innings, in which he allowed only four hits, suddenly lost effectiveness. And before George Payne could get sufficiently warmed up the Cats had scored three tallies and had tying and winning runs on bases.

Well, as told above, they tied, and won, but Kiefer, who put those runners on the base lines, is charged with defeat.

The Spudders didn't play like champions today, that's the truth, the whole truth, so help me Spalding. The infielders made four errors, one figuring in that painful ninth, and they weren't making their hits count as they usually do.

But please, oh reader of this creed, make note that I say only they didn't play like champions today. They are champions. Any ball club that can stage 16 and 11-game winning streaks; that can score eight runs in the ninth inning and win, 10 to 6, as they did Saturday is a great ball club.

The Spudders weren't themselves today, and even the great man Babe Ruth and his Yankee teammates have days, and lots of them on which they don't pastime like champions. So have no fear for our Spudders.

At that, it was a tough break for Joe. He didn't lose all his stuff; the enemy just started whanging that old ball, and like it happens in baseball, the dawn ended and then came the dusk so rapidly that the Spudders were caught out without their lanterns.

Joe Bobb, a corking ball player and a good fellow, was one of the villians in the Jake Atz extravaganza entitled, "Won in the Ninth."

But let me detail the painful story of that affair. Richardson tapped to Swenson and Wally tossed the ball over Roetz's head, Rich ambling to second. Cox banged a triple to right, and of course Richardson scored.

Bischoff's lift to Jenkins tallied Cox. Cobb batted for Weaver and hit the wall in left, Cox scoring. Newton, the kid outfielder who was hurt in Wichita Falls on the Cats' last series there, ran for Cobb.

Moore doubled to center, Newton going to third. Rollings singled past Turgeon into center, Newton scoring and Moore going to third. Payne relieved Keifer.

Singles by Riley and Bonowitz scored Moore and Rollings. Ben Weaver, from Fort Smith of the Western association, made his first start for the Cats and looked good. He had a deceptive curve ball as his main reliance.

Turgeon got three of the Spudders' nine hits, including two doubles. Jenkins also maced a brace of two-baggers. Kiefer yielded eight hits and Payne gave up two blows.

The Spudders scored two in the first inning. Turgeon doubled down the left field line after one was out. Fitzgerald rolled to Weaver, Turgeon going to third. Lamb strolled. Richardson and Bonowits failed to get under Jenkins' fly, Turgeon scoring and Lamb going to third. Lamb scored and Jenkins took third on a wild pitch.

The Cats went out in order in their half.

So did the Spudders. Atz' men failed to get on again in the second.

Benton started the third by walking and was sent to third by Fitzgerald's sharp single to center. But Richardson started a fast double play on Lambs' grounder. Bischoff got to first on Benton's fumble but he was left on that base.

Swenson singled past Richardson with one out but Roets was called out on strikes and Wally was out stealing. The Cats had two runners on in their fourth but Fitzgerald and Lamb took drives by Harrington and Richardson.

The scintallating keystone duo of Benton and Turgeon accounted for a run in the fifth. Rabbit tripled to left center after one was out and tallied on Pete's single to left. Swenson and Turgeon booted a couple but they pulled a fast double play to turn back the Cats.

Jenkins clouted his second two-base smash, a long hit to center, in the sixth, but he was left on second. Bonowitz also doubled but Richardson started the Kittens' half with a single to left, the Cats' third blow, but his next three comrades failed to advance him.

Rollings made a diving snatch of Lamb's harsh grounder and the Spuds were out, one-two-three, in the eighth. Two Cats were on bases, one on third, in their half but Harrington was fanned for the third out.

Notes of the Game

FORT WORTH, Texas, Sept. 2. Cvengros and Shores will be Skipper Jeems Galloway's hill choice tomorrow in the double header.

Wachtel and possibly Burns probably will toil for the Cats.

The 1,000 turnout of fans today was the largest crowd they have had here for several days. The attraction of the champions on a Sunday was the reason.

Claude Robertson, Beaumont manager, will join the Spudders at Dallas Tuesday or Wichita Falls Wednesday. He will be permitted by Houston to catch in league games but cannot participate in the playoff unless mishap befalls Lapan.

Speaking of Lapan, give that fellow a big hand. Pete's in there working every day. And making a great job of it, too.

DALLAS, Sept. 2. Brown, right-hander, who stepped into the firing pit for the Louisianans, allowed the Steers only five hits, two of which were of an exceedingly flukey nature, and he didn't give up a safe rap until the sixth round. McCallum Gets Down to Business With Stiff Drills for Coyotes

(The following is the second of a series of letters being written to the Record News Sports Editor by Harvey Black, captain of the Wichita Falls high school football team, from the Coyote's training camp in Crateryille Park, Okla.—Editors note.)

Crateryille Park, Aug. 30.

Dear Larry:

We were called at 5:30 this morning. Bud gave us one minute to get ready for exercises. We took several different exercises and then had breakfast at 6 o'clock.

Manager Bealer Pasley gave out our suits for the first practice. We were suited out and on the field at 7:30 o'clock. We took a slow half mile trot and several 10 yard sprints. Bud gave one signal and assignments for each position.

We can't tell who is doing the best work until we work out several times.

At 11 we had a swim and just think good hearted Bud gave us 45 minutes to rest before lunch.

I will write again tomorrow.

Yours,

BLACKIE.

Tunney Denounces the 'Killer' Type, But He Is One Himself, Says Runyon

By DAMON RUNYON
(Copyright, 1928, by Universal Service)

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—In London the other day at a luncheon given in his honor by dear old Harry Preston, foremost ringworn of all England, Mister Gene Tunney, former heavyweight champion of the world, paid his respects to the sour science.

He denounced the "killer" type of sour scientist, the dispatches say, as a menace to boxing, declaring that the only joy to be obtained in a fight is by facing a man of physical and intellectual equality.

Now all this is, on the face of it, very much the "Also," as we say at the club. For as I understand it, the "killer" type in the sour science is the man who knocks his opponent into a set of varicose veins, and Mister Gene Tunney himself has flattened just about as many opponents, proportionately to his ring career, as any other champion we have ever had.

And how Mister Tunney learned that there is joy in facing a man of physical and intellectual equality is beyond me, because he never in his life faced a man of intellectual equality. That is the surest thing you know. We will all admit that intellectually Mister Tunney, of all sour scientists, is in a class by himself. I'll pass the physical equality. Mister Tunney faced many of that kind, and some that were his physical superiors. Also, I regret to state, some that were his physical inferiors.

But if to knock out an opponent represents killerism, Mister Tunney was a "killer." And unlike Will Harrison Dempsey, who is commonly cited as the leading example of the "killer" in the sour science of recent years, Mister Tunney didn't make it a swift death for his victims. He let 'em linger, and suffer, as he did Thomas Heeney, the pulverized Rock of Down Under.

Tunney Knocked 'Em Out

Let us take a look at Mister Tunney's record just to knock a few spots off this new idea of his that the "killer" is a menace.

In 1919, the first year of his pugilistic career that we find in the record, though he really began fighting a couple of years before the war, he is credited with knocking out Bob Pierce in two rounds an Paris.

In 1920, when they had commenced the process of nursing him along, he knocked out Jim Monahan in one round, Whitey Allen in two rounds, Al Roberts in eight, Knocked out Sullivan in one, Jeff Madden in two, Ole Anderson in three and Sergeant Ray Smith in two.

Now at least a couple of these gentlemen would scarcely hold their hands up. They were stylefly of the tip-over variety, Al Roberts was a pretty fair sort of opponent. They were all hammered down, beaten up, and knocked unconscious by Mister Tunney, and if that isn't "killing," I'd like to know what you call it.

The same year, Paul Sampson, who afterwards went to Germany, and gained quite a reputation as a fighter, well nigh made Mister Tunney leap the ropes over in Paterson, N. J., in a ten round, no decision fight. But I'll skip over that incident and move into the year 1921, when we find Mister Tunney belting out such stalwart gladiators as Young Ambrose in one beat, Soldier Jones of the numerous family of Soldier Joneses in seven, Jack in two, Wolf Larsen in seven and Eddie O'Hare in six.

This last was a smashing victory for Mister Tunney. It took place at the old garden. Eddie O'Hare, who was afterwards killed diving into a snow bank that concealed a rock up in Maine, was one of the most promising of all the young heavies of eight years ago.

He was managed by Leo Prostrated Flynn, who told Eddie he couldn't lick Mister Tunney, but Eddie insisted on the match. The knockout attracted attention to Mister Tunney as a comer in the light heavy ranks. Mister Tunney won a technical knockout over Herbert Crossley, an Englishman, that same year.

The following year, 1922, he was out tuning up on the beesarks. I defy Mister Tunney's most valiant equerry, or Mister Tunney himself, to say that there was any real competition for him among such as Jack Clifford, Whitney Eenzel, Jack Burke or Jack Hanlon, whom he slaughtered in a few rounds.

He could make no "killer" headway, however, against Battling Levinsky, Fay Keiser, Chuck Wiggins or Tommy Loughran, and he lost the only decision of his career to Harry Greb that year in fifteen rounds. He is back again in 1923 knocking out Jack Clifford again in eight rounds.

I call upon the pugilistic gods to witness that only one in whom the "killer" instinct was highly developed would knock out Jack Clifford at that stage of Jacks career. I don't say could, I say would. And the Buddy McHale that Mister Tunney "murdered," as we say in the sour science, in two rounds in 1924—there was an opponent for you, my friends!

Always a Knocker-Out

In that same year, 1924, Mister Tunney flattened Harry Foley in a round, stopped Georges Carpentier in fifteen, made Erminio Spalla quit in seven, and stopped Joe Lohman in eight. In 1925, he knocked out Tom Gibbons in twelve, and then began his real drive on the heavyweight title.

He took Italian Jack Herman out to Kansas City and split him in two stanzas. He lugged Bartley Madden into Minneapolis and flattened him in there. He fought Harry Greb and Johnny Risko ten and twelve rounds respectively, and that wound up his active career until he met Jack Dempsey the first time for the title.

Mister Gene Tunney has won about fifty per cent of his battles by knockouts, which is about as much "killing" as the average champion accomplishes in his active career. The alleged master killer, Dempsey, has done no better—or perhaps I should say no worse—number of battles considered.

And in Mister Gene Tunney's record you find the usual number of hit-outs, set-ups, divers, tankers, and beezarks generally, that you find in any champion's record. Mister Tunney himself always had something to say about his opponents, and no more careful picker ever lived.

And he smacked 'em down just as mercilessly as the Old Man Mauler, or Stanley Ketchel, or Terry McGovern, or any of the other so-called "killers" and I defy Mister Tunney's strongest admirer to go over his record as I have here recited it, and say that he wasn't always on the "kill."

Thus when Mister Tunney decries the "killer" type, he is either decrying his own methods when he was on the upgrade, or he is again talking through his high hat.

Organization Key to Success in Agriculture, Declares Farm Agent

WASHINGTON, Sept. 2. (US)—Organization and control by farmers of farm marketing agencies is the key to the success of agriculture just as organization has been the saviour of labor, Herbert F. Baker, of the Farmer's National council declared in a Labor Day statement today.

"Statistics prove," Baker explained, "that the union rate of wages was 50 per cent greater in purchasing power in 1927 than it was in 1914, due primarily to labor's greater productivity—that is, to lower production costs. The wages of labor as a whole was 35 per cent greater in 1927 than it was in 1914. The average money wage was $1,301 in 1927, as compared to $580 in 1914."

On the other hand, the farm authority quoted department of agriculture statistics to show that:

"The average reward per farm family, for labor and management, allowing 4.5 per cent on operators' net investment, fell from $917 in the crop year ending June 1920, to $636 in the crop year ending June, 1927, and is only $657 for the crop year 1928."

"In short," Baker continued, "the average farmer earned for his capital investment and services during the past crop year about 3.4 per cent on the market value of his capital.

Prescribing organization as a balm for agriculture's ills, Baker pointed out that last statistics available show only 1,800,000 farmers were members of farmers' cooperative and commodity marketing associations although there were 6,371,000 farm units operated, and some farmers belonged to more than one association.

Rather than have agriculture subsidized by the public treasury, Baker stated, "farmers—particularly 'producers of staples—should organize as aggressively and permanently as labor has, and secure control of their marketing agencies—elevators, cotton warehouses, etc.

"Highly protected manufacturers are seeking amendments to exempt them from penalties of the anti

KRAFT VISITS CHEESE PLANT

Official Pleased With Wichita Progress

C. H. Kraft, vice president of the Kraft-Phenix Cheese company of Chicago which owns the Kraft Cheese company of the South, the operator of the local Kraft plant, spent Sunday in Wichita Falls inspecting the plant.

Expressing himself as being well pleased with the operation of the local plant and especially with the quality of cheese being produced, Mr. Kraft stated that his company would like nothing better than to see the production of the plant doubled or trebled this fall.

In order for the plant to do this, however, it will be necessary for dairymen and farmers of this district to bring much more milk to the plant than at present, he said.

After inspecting the plant, he was the guest of J. W. Chatham, industrial and traffic manager of the chamber of commerce, for a drive over the city.

Mr. Chatham reported Mr. Kraft to be more than pleased with the plant, saying it is making progress, as well or better than any of the other new plants established in the South by the Kraft company. "It is vital for the dairymen and farmers to increase their herds in order to be able to fill the increased demand for milk," Mr. Kraft told Mr. Chatham. He also indicated that if the company increased enough it is possible the manufacture of loaf cheese may be started here inside of the next years.

Mr. Kraft left Sunday night for Dallas where he will spend Labor day.

Musicians Given More Time in Song Contest

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Sept. 2. (AP)—Texas composers have been given an additional 60 days in which to submit original songs in the song contest sponsored by the San Antonio Composers' club. Mrs. Mackay-Cantell, chairman of the contest committee has announced. The original closing date set as Oct. 7, has been changed to Dec. 7, in order to give everyone in the state ample opportunity to compete for the $1,000 prize.

Three New York musicians will judge the entries, among them Boris Levenson, Russian composer and a pupil of Rimsky-Korsakof. Levenson was formerly a member of the faculty of the Petrograd conservatory, but is now a naturalized citizen of America.

The contest is now open to all resident composers and to any type of composition that exemplifies the highest ideals of music. The contest is not designed to produce a state song or poem, but to develop the best musical effort of which the state is capable.

Vaudeville is the next amusement which Wichitans have to consider.

It is probable that plans for a winter vaudeville season will be considered in the near future by Dent Theaters, Inc., for the Majestic theater here.

If vaudeville is brought here this year, it is a certainty that the public will have to support it much better than last year or it will be discontinued.

Vaudeville is an expensive proposition, especially for a short stay of two days which is the maximum length of time the crowds here seem to warrant its presentation. Interstate vaudeville is rather a good brand of vaudeville, and that is what we had last season.

It is not likely that the shows will be started before October as the weather will be warm for another month. Shows don't flourish in warm weather, and the show house that is not playing to big crowds cannot hope to support vaudeville. If there is no demand for more diversified amusements in the city, it is certain the city won't get them.

We wonder what Wichitans think about? If professional artists of high caliber are appreciated, with their orchestras, their new things from New York and their efforts to amuse as only vaudeville can amuse, we may enjoy a winter filled with diversified amusement. Otherwise, the winter will be just the same as the summertime. It is up to Wichita Falls.

China nights are on Monday and Friday nights at the Olympic, each week. Every woman entering the theater receives, free of charge, a piece of chinaware which is a part of a 52-piece set. On any one night each will receive the same kind of a piece. Each week a different piece will be given away so that all have the chance of getting china sets free.

From every point of view which may precede the actual showing of a new picture, this column is highly favorable to "Lilac Time" which will open Friday at the Strand.

I have known "Lilac Time" intimately for a number of years. It is without a peer as a dramatic play of magnificent beauty. It touches the emotions as few plays can touch the emotions. If it does not bring a tear to three out of four pair of eyes, I'll never write another line about plays and shows, or else I'll say flatly that the vitaphone production of "Lilac Time" has absolutely ruined it. From all advance reports on the film, I am inclined to believe that as real entertainment, "Lilac Time" is all that it ever was, and that it has the added advantage of a world of action, possible only in the movies, in addition to its other perfect qualities.

Those who have been seeing it in Dallas tell me that the airplane action, especially where the ship is running along the ground and has both wings shorn as it passes between two trees, is the most thrilling and realistic action involving airplanes they have ever witnessed.

Crowded Program For Labor Day

a duplicate of that in which Lindbergh flew the Atlantic and which is now in the Smithsonian institution, will be on the field from 9 o'clock in the morning to 3 o'clock in the afternoon taking up passengers and to demonstrate the safety of present day aviation and the care of passengers. This ship is owned by Charles Gray of Oklahoma City and is piloted by Frank Hover.

Roy French, pilot who has many friends here and who formerly lived in Wichita Falls, is already here from Kansas City in his Eaglerock OX. W. F. (Bill) Long is scheduled to arrive at 10 o'clock Monday morning with eight of the ships which will participate in the circus. These are: Robert McKnight in a Lincoln Page, Whitie Owens in a Cannuck, Long's Swallow, L. H. Gray in a Swallow with the big Hispano Suiza motor, Slats Rogers in his newly built Cannuck, M. M. Kay in a Jenny, A. J. Lanier in a Commander and the Masked Marvel in his Eaglerock OX.

Dole Flyer Here

Boyd Kennedy will fly Fulcher Armstrong's new Eaglerock with the 150 horsepower Hispano Suiza motor.

Benny Griffith, the flyer who entered the Dole race to Hawaii and who turned back to land after he was 750 miles out over the Pacific ocean because of motor trouble, will be there with his Peerless Princess. This is the ship he used in the Dole race.

A 25-mile triangular race will be one of the features of the afternoon. In this race the ships will fly over certain markers on the ground in a triangle at an altitude of only 100 feet from the ground. Many other events also are scheduled. Among these are a series of tests to see which of the circus pilots can given the crowd the biggest thrill with his stunting. Each pilot will take the air in turn in this event and will have the air to himself while performing.

Due to the low flying, no parking will be allowed along the Henrietta road. The sheriff's office and the city police have promised their cooperation in policing the roads, will see that no one parks along the road. All cars have been requested to enter the main gate at the flying field as a large parking space has been reserved for parking in an orderly manner.

Legion members will be stationed a half mile from the field on all roads selling tickets so that there will be no delay in getting in at the field or halting traffic.

All cars go where they are directed to go or the flying will be stopped due to the danger from low flying. There will be no low flying over the crowds or over the cars, and the danger to the public will thus be eliminated. A representative of the aviation division of the department of commerce will be on the field, and he will not permit any flying while the crowd swarms the field or while cars are in prohibited places, it was announced.

Theaters of the city have announced special Labor Day programs and are presenting early fall shows, some of which are still running in New York City.

Other crowds are planning on spending the day at the zoo, looking at the animals, picnicing and enjoying the natural pleasures of Scotland park.

Some have announced they would spend the day out of town with friends in nearby cities. Some will make automobile trips. Others are planning to drive to Fort Worth to see the Spudders wallop the Panthers.

Wichitans Observe Holiday

A group of 100 Wichitans left on the 11 o'clock Katy Sunday night for Denison where they will participate Monday in the sixth annual athletic meet of the Katy lines of Texas. W. D. Hill of Wichita Falls, president of the Northwestern district of the athletic association, accompanied the group, which is composed entirely of Katy employes and their families.

Many fishermen have gone to Lake Kemp, to Diversion lake and other places where the fish are waiting to be hooked.

About 35 members of the Wichita Falls high school football squad are spending the day and the remainder of the week at Craterville park where they are getting in shape for the coming football season.

Five local swimmers, Mrs. Harry Van Emden, her three small daughters, and Woodrow Bristow are in Fort Worth, entered in the Texas Amateur Athletic Federation swimming meet at Sycamore park.

stopped and the machine shot like a stone to the ground."

Premier Poincare and President Doumergue were advised of the accident by telephone. Minister of the Interior Albert Sarraut went to break the news to Madame Bokanowiski at Compeigne. He conveyed condolences from government officials.

Death Halts Career

M. Bokanawski's death came at a time when he was attempting to carry out the most important work of a great career. At the celebration of the cabinet anniversary at Sampigny Saturday he had revealed a scheme for aeronautical reform in an effort to end a long series of disasters such as the one in which he himself died, and as those which resulted in the deaths of Maurice Drouhin and Fronval recently.

M. Bokanowski had won four citations and the Croix de Guerre and legion honor during the war. He was on a mission to Salonika when the transport Provence was torpedoed. He was forced to swim 10 hours in the Mediterranean until rescued.

AUSTIN PILOT KILLED IN PLANE CRASH

AUSTIN, Texas, Sept. 2. (AP)—Bennie Raines, pilot at the University airport here, was fatally injured, and two passengers, Mr. and Mrs. O. L. Frost of Austin, were slightly injured, when the plane piloted by Raines crashed to the earth from about 100 feet shortly after taking off late today.

Raines died at 7 p. m. His body was badly crushed in the wreckage. It was necessary to chop and hack a way through to extricate him.

Mrs. Frost was bruised and perhaps injured internally, while her husband was only shaken up.

The plane was trying to gain altitude when a sudden blast of air caught it.

Raines had been working his way through the school for pilots conducted by Ruff at the airport, and had just obtained his limited commercial pilot license. He was 23, and is survived by his mother, Mrs. R. L. Raines of San Antonio.

FAMILY WAITS FOR REUNION

Immigration Law Makes Two-Year Delay

Word has been received by Miss Myrle Neely, secretary of the Wichita Falls Community Chest, from the Jewish Relief society of New York City, that despite immigration laws which tend to break up families, the mother and two sisters of Mrs. Mary Ham of Wichita Falls may possibly be reunited here with her inside of two years.

Mrs. Melany Miglovets, Mrs. Ham's mother who is now living near Verkhne-Michailoffsky, Siberia a short time ago was granted a preference status in the issuance of quota visas under the immigration act of 1924.

However, it was thought at that time it was impossible to bring her two children, 14 and 16, to America. The Jewish agency in New York City has notified Miss Neely, who is handling the case for Mrs. Ham here, that under a recent law, Mrs. Miglovets may come to America and immediately apply for preferential status in the second quota for her children with the logical hops of their being admitted within a year of the time the application is made.

The family has been split for eight years, ever since 1920 when Miss Mary Petrova Miglovets married Sam Ham, an American soldier serving in Sibera, and moved to Wichita Falls with him on his discharge from the army.

Scribes Revolt at 'High Hat' Hoover

has been insistent but for a long time were futile. Newspaper correspondents assigned to accompany the Hoover party across the continent to the ceremony of notification at Palo Alto, returning via West Branch and Cedar Rapids, Iowa, protested that they never had got within much more than hailing distance of the candidate during the entire trip. They were feted, dined and, possibly, wined by members of Mr. Hoover's entourage but the candidate himself remained inaccessible.

This aloofness continued after the party returned to Washington. The Republican national committee sought to make up for it by turning out reams of publicity. Nearly every hour of the day messengers from the committee carried batches of carefully prepared hand-outs and predictions of Republican success to correspondents maintaining offices in Washington or on the list of those eligible for admission to the congressional press galleries. What the correspondents wanted, however, was the opportunity of asking the candidate himself questions and getting his reactions to the various issues, even as those assigned to cover the activities of Governor Smith since his nomination at Houston.

All sorts of excuses were made. Some tried to tell the newspapermen that it didn't comport with the dignity of a man in Mr. Hoover's position to bandy questions with these correspondents, some of which he could not afford to answer and yet hardly afford not to do so. Besides he would be very busy with important conferences and could not be disturbed. When this didn't stifle the demand it was suggested that Mr. George Akerson would meet the newspapermen. Mr. Akerson formerly was political editor for the Minneapolis Tribune and about two years ago assumed the serious task of elevating Mr. Hoover from the cabinet to the presidency. Probably more than any other living man he knows Candidate Hoover's mind on various public questions and, it was reasoned, was fully qualified to interpret it to his former colleagues.

However, showing the perverseness of the average Washington correspondent, even this did not satisfy. They frankly said they were not interested in Mr. Akerson's views on the campaign issues and put their fingers on the flaw in this little device to protect Mr. Hoover by pointing out that if there was an adverse reaction to what the political secretary might say the candidate would simply deny responsibility. So the national committee finally "caved in" and allowed these insistent newspapermen to see the candidate. As said before the fishing expedition didn't yield much news. Mr. Hoover declined to discuss his attitude on prohibition, having nothing to add or detract from what he said on this subject in his acceptance speech; he didn't expect to make many speeches during the campaign; and as for "Bob" LaFollette's attitude he knew nothing, with enough heat to indicate that he cared less.

Now that this is settled, however, unsatisfactory it may be, the correspondents are directing their attention to another matter. They resent the espionage to which they are subjected by the Republican national committee. It is a well established fact that if a correspondent, particularly of an administration paper, doesn't send in the sort of stories which the Republican board of strategy approves he is called on the carpet and admonished, sometimes even threatened. If he persists in his mad career some member of the Republican high command protests to the manager or owner of the paper, insisting that the correspondent be properly disciplined. Usually this work for the constitutional guaranty of a free press doesn't apply to Republican organs.

Spanish Village Is Ravaged by Fire

VALLADOLID, Spain, Sept. 2 (US)—The village of Pobal was swept by a disastrous fire today which practically wiped out the town. More than two score dwelling were destroyed. The village was without fire fighting equipment, and a scarcity of water made it impossible to take any steps to check the flames.

Eight Injured as Train Splits Switch

OLNEY, Ill., Sept. 2. (AP)—Eight persons were injured, two critically today when a Baltimore and Ohio train carrying St. Louis fans to Cincinnati for the Cardinal game, split a switch near here. Five coaches were derailed. The injured, all St. Louis residents, were brought to the Olney hospital.

News Item Brings Lost Boy Home

Playmate of Youth Aids in Search for Boy

Through The Record News, a 10-year-old boy with blue eyes, brown hair and a ruddy face, has been reunited with his family.

Friday evening, Mrs. Effie McHam, secretary of the Family Relief association, called The Record News asking that a plea be made for the lost boy to return to his home.

"His mother is dead," said Mrs. McHam. "He means everything in the world to his grandmother. His father has used an electric light cord to beat him with until the boy has left home.

"If he will return, the Family Relief and the Wichita Falls authorities will guarantee that his father will beat him no more, and also that his grandmother will be one of the happiest women on earth if he will only come back."

The story was written as Mrs. McHam requested, and printed Saturday morning.

As Mrs. McHam entered her office Saturday morning, her telephone was ringing. "I read the morning paper to my grandson this morning," a strange voice said over the phone. "He immediately told me that he had been playing with the boy for whom you are looking, only yesterday."

"Will you have your grandson see if he can find the little boy today and get him to come to my office?" Mrs. McHam asked the sympathetic grandmother who had read the story.

"I certainly will," said the other woman. "I know how it would be to lose my grandson, and I am only too glad to do anything that possibly can be done to help this other grandmother find her grandson."

At 9 o'clock Saturday morning, the telephone in the Family Relief headquarters rang again.

"I've found my boy, I've found my boy," said a happy voice. "As I came out of the courthouse a few minutes ago, after inquiring at the sheriff's office if any trace of the boy had been found, I met him in front of the courthouse walking with another little boy. But he doesn't want to come home."

Mrs. McHam told the woman to come to the auditorium with her lost boy, and that she thought she could fix things up.

The story as it was finally pieced together was that the grandson of the woman who had read the story in The Record News left his home in search of the boy of the river bottoms with whom he had played the day before. He had found him and was walking with him to Mrs. McHam's office in the auditorium when they passed the courthouse and were seen by the missing boy's grandmother.

In Mrs. McHam's office, the lost boy's fears of more beatings were quieted by Mrs. McHam, who treated him kindly, told him how sad his grandmother had been without him, and how his father would be allowed to beat him no more.

ROCKFORD GOES WILD OVER FLIERS' SAFETY

ROCKFORD, Ill., Sept. 2. (AP)—Rockford tonight went wild with joy when word of the safety of Bert Hassell and Parker Cramer, pilots of the airplane Greater Rockford, which disappeared on a flight to Stockholm, Sweden, was received.

A spontaneous celebration took form on the streets as throngs rushed downtown for the latest word concerning the two fliers whom they had belived lost.

First word of the safety of the two men was received over the radio by citizens of Rockford.

Factory whistles were sounded and a continuous din kept up as cheers of the celebrants mingled with the shriek of whistles.

PLANE LAST HEARD FROM ON AUG. 19

ROCKFORD, Ill., Sept. 2. (AP)—The Greater Rockford took off on its unsuccessful flight after a summer of ill luck which pursued it almost since it was completed from the Stinson Detroit factory.

Plans finally were completed for the takeoff on July 26. After a beautiful run, the Greater Rockford took the air and disappeared in the mist at the end of the flying field. Five minutes later, another airplane returned to the field to tell the throngs there that the Greater Rockford had been forced to land in a cornfield five miles away.

The plane again was damaged in the crash, but Bert Hassell, the pilot, and Parker Cramer, navigator, escaped injury. The Greater Rockford was returned to the factory for repairs and two weeks later, Aug. 16, it again hopped off, with Cochrane, Ont., its first destination. Its takeoff from Cochrane was delayed for two days by rain.

After taking off from Cochrane, the plane's radio was heard at frequent intervals until signals suddenly ceased at 3 a. m. Sunday morning, August 19, when it was about 75 miles off Cape Chidley, on its way to its second destination, Mount Evans, Greenland.

ENTIRE AMUNDSEN PLANE FOUND

PARIS, Sept. 2 (US)—The entire plane of Raold Amundsen, arctic explorer who set out to aid in the rescue of Capt. Umberto Nobile, has been recovered, according to a dispatch published in the Petit Parisien in Paris today.

The place where the remainder of the plane was discovered is not mentioned in the dispatch.

Reports from Oslo yesterday stated that parts from a plane believed to be Amundsen's Latham seaplane had been picked up by the Norwegian fishing ship Brodd. The parts found included a six-foot float, which was identified by photographs as being part of the Amundsen plane. The float was found Bear Island which is between Tromsoe, Norway, and Spitzbergen.

With the reported finding of the remainder of the plane, it is believed that the mystery of the fate of Capt. Amundsen may be solved in the near future.

THIRD PARTY TO BE REVIVED

Farmer-Labor Party Calls Second Convention

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 2 (UP)—The Farmer-Labor party today sought accommodations here for a national convention to be held Wednesday when another attempt is expected to be made to place a third party in the presidential race.

Following announcements made in Denver Saturday night by William Penn Collins, national executive committeeman, that another convention of the party would be held, Collins wired S. E. Farrell, assistant manager of the Baltimore hotel here today.

"Wire me at once concerning use of small convention hall for national Farmer-Labor party. We hope you will and can furnish us convention hall at your hotel. Want convention Sept. 5," the telegram said.

Farrell telegraphed Collins that a hall would be reserved for the party. About 300 people can be accommodated in the reserve hall, Farrell said.

According to the announcement made by Collins, the party expects to name presidential and vice presidential nominees. Senator G. W. Norris, of Nebraska, when nominated by the party at its convention in Chicago last July, refused the honor. Alleged failure of Bert Martin, Denver, national secretary to properly notify Norris of his selection, now permits the organization to call another national convention, Collins said.
