Americans killed in Afghanistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Two Americans making a documentary in Afghanistan died and a guerrilla guide was wounded when government soldiers ambushed them west of Kabul, U.S. and guerrilla spokesmen said today.

American diplomats in Pakistan identified the Americans as Lee Shapiro, director of New Jersey-based Shapiro Media Productions, and James Lindelof, a sound and camera man.

Diplomatic and guerrilla sources said a third American was believed to have been with them, but his fate was not known. Ellen Hori, an employee at the company in North Bergen, N.J., said she was not aware of a third American traveling with the film crew.

Qaribar Rehman Saeed, a spokesman for the Hezb-I-Islami guerrillas, said the group got word of the Americans' deaths in a rare radio report from Moslem insurgents near Kabul.

He said Hezb-I-Islami fighters had led the film team for five months through Afghanistan's northern provinces.

Saeed said the ambush occurred near Paghman, a town west of Kabul which was the scene this summer of constant clashes between insurgents and Soviet-Afghan forces.

He said the radio report placed the attack around Oct. 11. The Americans' Hezb-I-Islami guide, Abdul Malik, was reportedly wounded and has not re-entered Pakistan.

News frequently takes days or weeks to travel out of Afghanistan.

Ms. Hori, said Lindelof was a 27-year-old Californian and Shapiro was in his late 30s, and lived in New York City.

She said she received a call from the American consulate in Afghanistan before dawn today with the news of their deaths.

U.S. officials said Shapiro had registered with the consulate in Peshawar, Pakistan, last December and March.

The Americans' bodies were in Afghanistan, but it was not clear where, the diplomats said, speaking on condition of anonymity. There was no word on any arrangements to return them to the United States.

Some Peshawar residents said they saw Shapiro in late August, apparently returning from the United States after raising money for his film.

One source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Unification Church of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon was the main sponsor.

Ms. Hori declined to comment on any links to Moon's church.

The deaths bring to seven the number of foreign reporters killed in Afghanistan. The only other American, Charles Thornton of the Arizona Republic, died in a Soviet-Afghan ambush in 1985.

Stock prices jump in heavy trading

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices jumped sharply higher in heavy trading on Wall Street today as the Dow Jones industrial average rose about 62 points following sharply higher prices earlier in Tokyo and Hong Kong.

The quick rise in prices in New York today is in strong contrast to the prevailing pessimism on Monday, when the Dow suffered its second-worst point loss in history. Shortly after trading began today, the Dow shot up more than 83 points but slipped back after about an hour to about 62 points, which put it at about 1,886. Three stocks were rising in price for every one that fell.

In London, stocks opened higher but lost all gains by early afternoon amid concern about a huge British Petroleum Co. PLC share offering.

Earlier in Tokyo, the 225-share Nikkei stock average, which lost 4.7 percent of its value on Monday,

Reagan urges 'putting aside partisan rivalries'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said today the White House and Congress should "put aside partisan rivalries" and work quickly to produce a deficit-reduction package aimed at restoring financial confidence on Wall Street.

Reagan made the statement as House and Senate negotiators prepared to open talks to determine how much tax raising and how much cost cutting will be done in the next year.

"There's an optimistic or positive feeling" that the erosion of confidence in the economy "can be reversed," said Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas. "I think we know we have to do something, and some of us are going to have to bite the bullet on long-held positions."

But his House counterpart, minority leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois, cautioned that expecting the negotiations to produce a much deeper cut in the federal deficit than the $23 billion called for this year under the Gramm-Rudman law may be unrealistic.

"When I analyze some of the votes in the Congress, I find there isn't all that much inclination to go much deeper than that," he said.

Senate Democratic leader Robert H. Byrd cautioned that he, too, does not want to "raise expectations too high," while the House Democratic leader, Rep. Thomas Foley of Washington, said he is concerned that "there's a danger of raising expectations to the point that then if they aren't met, it could depress the market."

In a statement issued at the White House, Reagan said, "These meetings come at a critical moment."

He noted a variety of positive economic indicators but said the stock market plunge "has alerted us of potential dangers on the economic horizon."

"Anyone who doubted that these threats to our future growth were serious should have been set straight in the last couple of weeks," Reagan said. "It is time to put aside partisan rivalries and work together for our nation's future."

Pledging cooperation from the administration, Reagan urged Congress to work "quickly with us to set year-by-year deficit-reduction targets from this day forward and then to join us in putting together realistic plans for meeting those targets."

"We owe it to the nation to get this job done," Reagan said.

Dole and Byrd were interviewed on the NBC-TV "Today" show; Foley and Michel on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America."

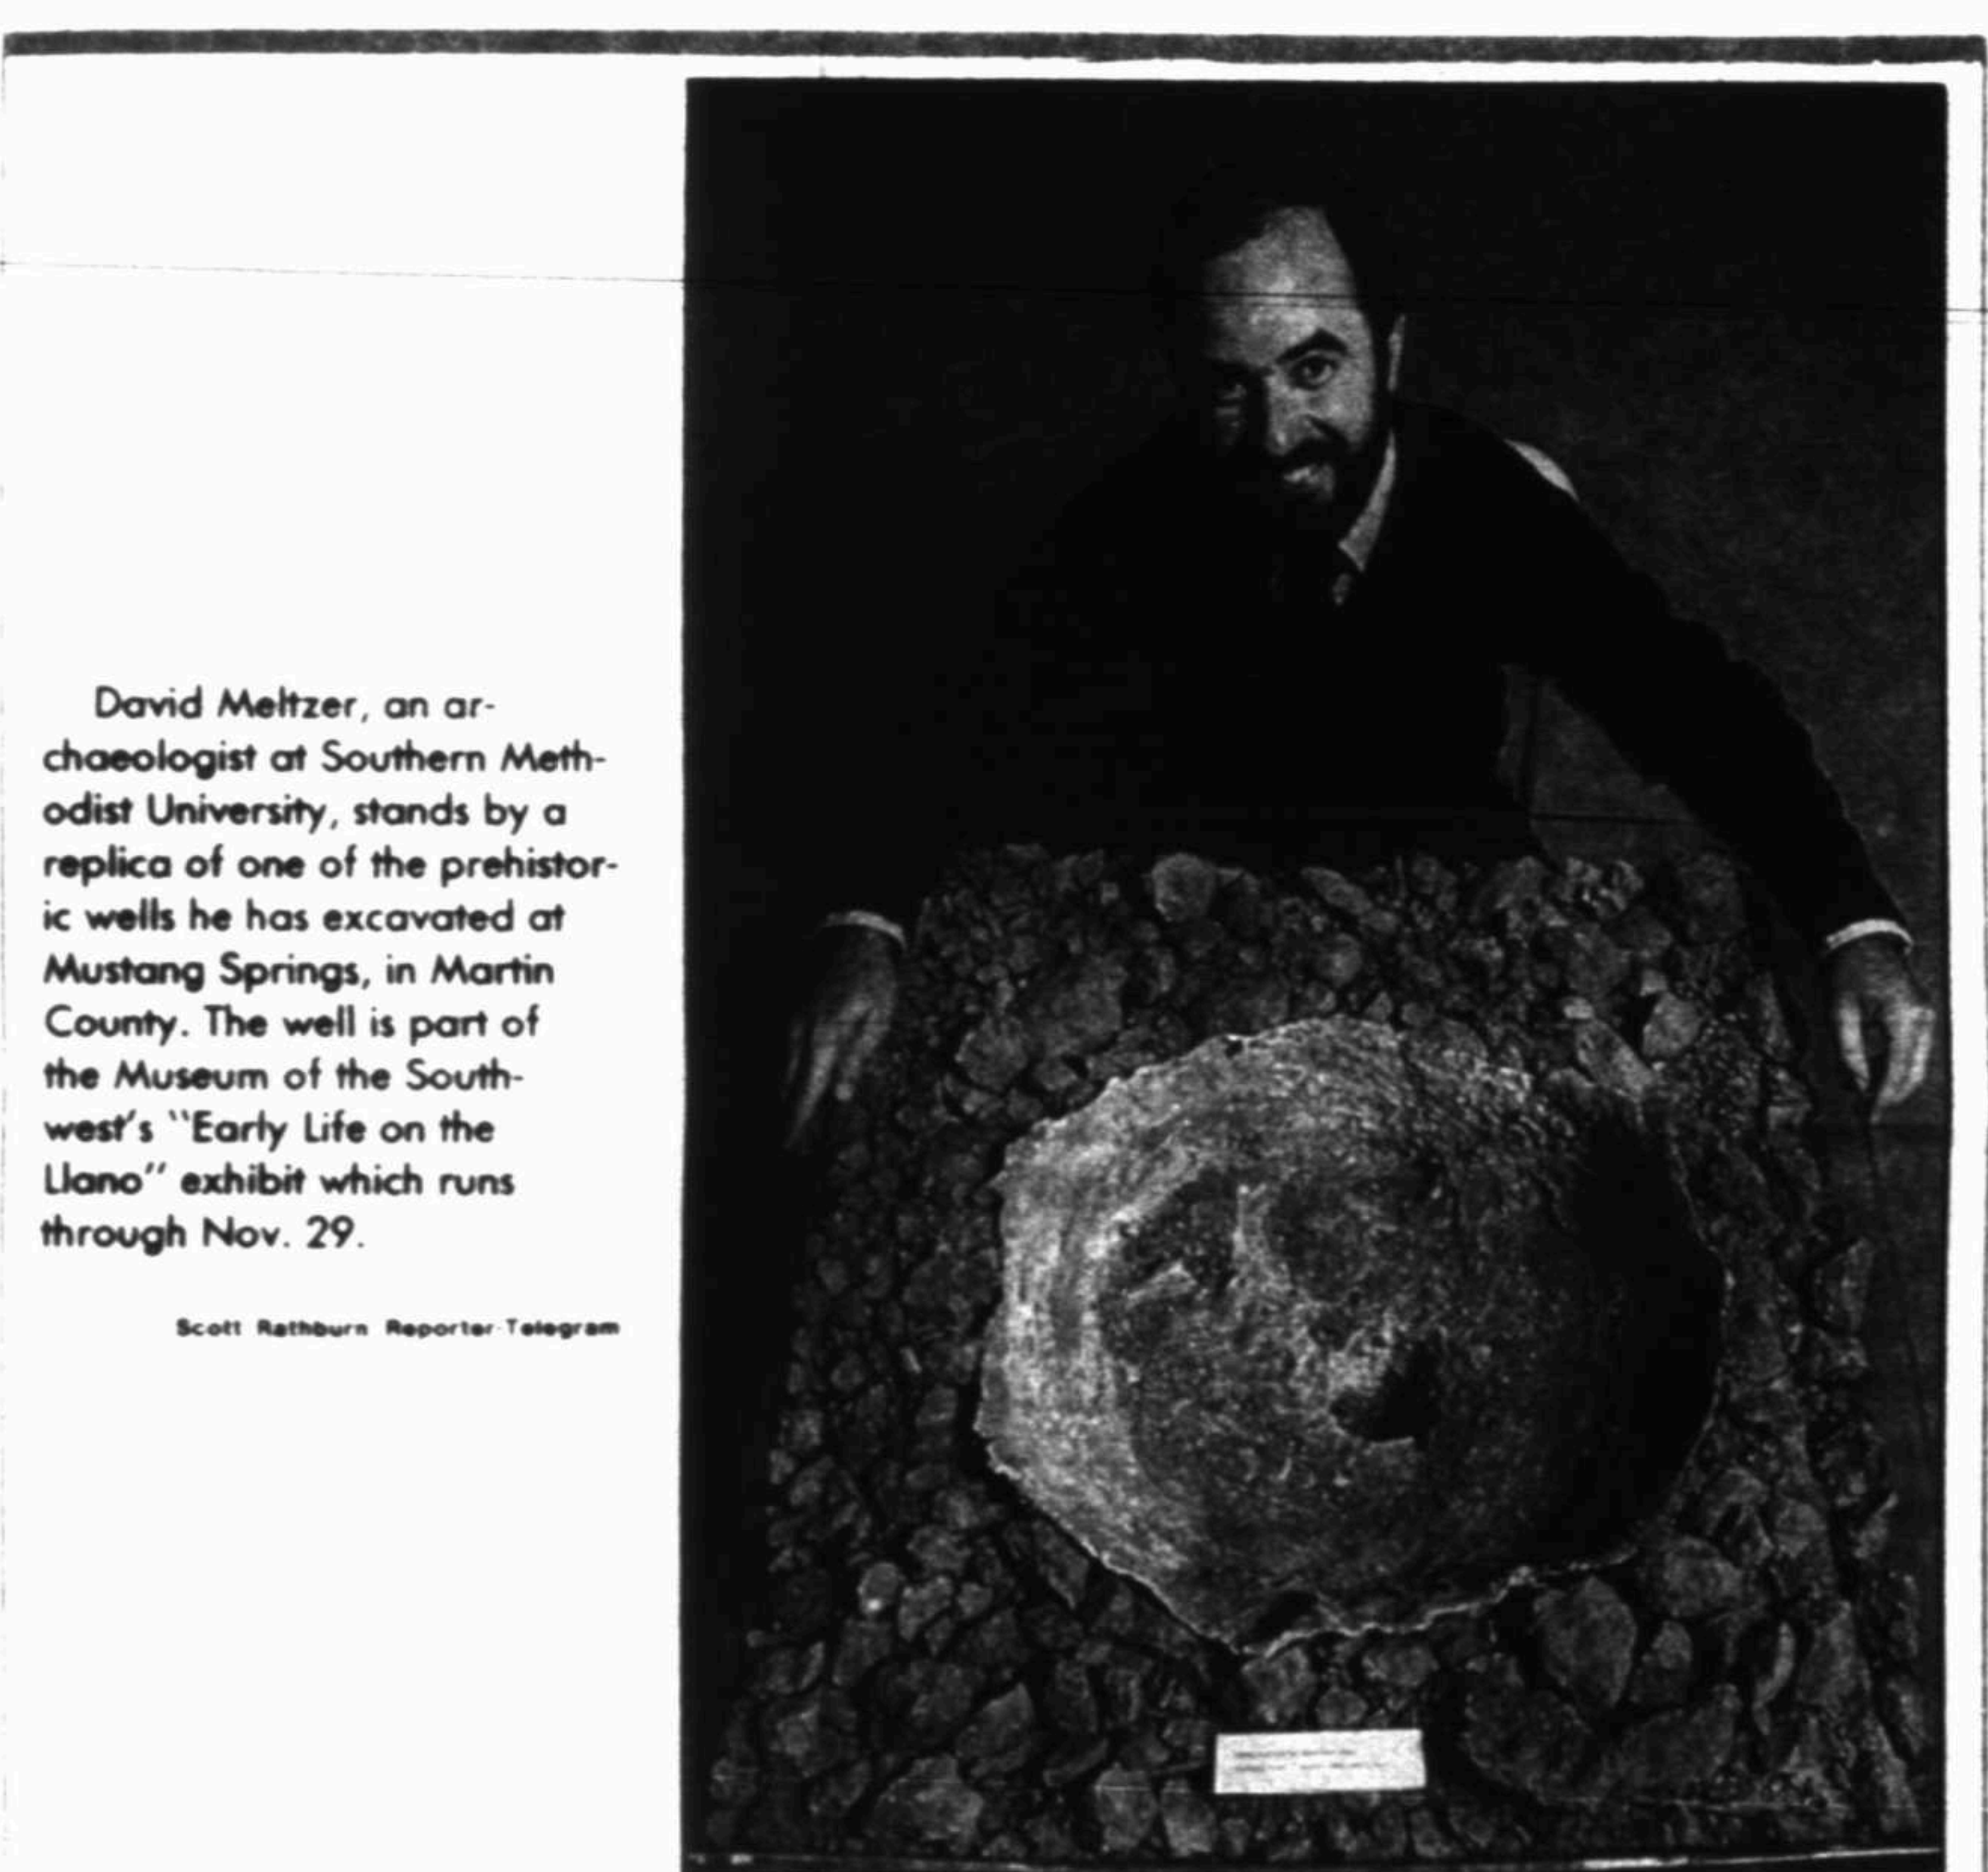

value, was the second-largest point drop ever, after the previous Monday's devastating 508-point, or 22.6 percent, selloff.

The value of U.S. stocks fell $203 billion to $2.23 trillion Monday, according to the Wilshire Associates 5,000 Equity Index of stocks traded on the New York and American stock exchanges and over the counter.

The Dow drop helped to wipe out much of the average's nearly 290-point recovery of last Tuesday and Wednesday, and left Wall Street's best-known indicator only about 55 points above last Monday's close.

Analysts blamed the latest slide in part on a string of sharp losses overseas. During the past week, the U.S. and foreign markets mirrored each other, with one market rising or falling because of the performance of another.

SMU archaeologist relates Plains' 'tale of two periods'

By ANNTONETTE MOORE
Staff Writer

It was the best of times and the worst of times, these last 12,000 or so years on the Llano Estacado.

David Meltzer, a Southern Methodist University archaeologist, related this "tale of two periods" to about 150 people at the Museum of the Southwest Monday night.

During the first period — the late Pleistocene Epoch, some 12,000 years ago — the Llano Estacado was populated by "a whole zoo of animals which are now extinct," Meltzer said.

The flat landscape of what is now Texas' Panhandle and eastern New Mexico was dotted with small lakes. Draws and arroyos which are currently dry erosional features were filled with water, he said, because of the cooler and wetter climate.

Prehistoric hunter-gathering peoples roamed throughout this New World Eden, Meltzer continued. They left behind distinctive stone tools called Clovis points, which traditionally have been linked to the hunting of now-extinct big game: mammoth, mastodons, camel, horse and giant ground sloths. These prehistoric hunters often have been credited with the extinction of many of these animals, he said.

But if the late Pleistocene was heaven on earth, the period which followed it was hell.

By the Middle Holocene Epoch, about 7,500 years ago, the lakes, streams and springs had dried up.

Meltzer said. Much of the grass had disappeared and the large herds of grazing animals were gone with the wind, along with millions of tons of top soil.

Compared to this Altithermal Period, which lasted some 2,500 years, the Dust Bowl era of the 1930s was "a trivial event," he said. Many archaeologists have speculated that the prehistoric inhabitants of the Llano Estacado and much of the Southwest just pulled up stakes and deserted the area.

However, Meltzer cast doubt on several assumptions about both periods.

The portrait of the late Pleistocene Clovis people as big-game hunters may be a myth and is certainly exaggerated, he maintained.

"The claim is still made that these people were specialized big-game hunters," he said. "But in the 30 to 40 years (of site excavation) we've not found but a dozen or so of these kill sites," where large numbers of animals have been purposely slaughtered.

Many involve bison and probably date to the early Holocene Epoch, about 10,000 years ago, Meltzer said. At the Plainview Site, in the Panhandle, the bison were driven into a pond and killed; at Bonfire Shelter, near Langtry, the bison were driven over a cliff.

It is true, he added, that many of these sites have been found because of massive amounts of bone from dead animals — "you find the bones first and then you find the artifacts" among them.

Lawmen to soon learn if drug task force funding available

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Lawmen in 17 West Texas counties may find out this week if they will receive funding to set up a roving unit to battle drug smugglers in the region, the chairman of the group said Monday.

The group trying to set up the task force — which, if fully funded, will include a coordinator, several investigators and office support — has asked for $875,000 in federal funds, which will be allocated by Gov. Bill Clements' office. It is one of nearly 100 requests, totaling more than $20 million, which have been received in Austin for the available $9.5 million, Big Spring Police Chief Joe Cook said.

"I'm optimistic that we will hear something toward the end of the week," Cook said. "Every indication I've had is that we should proceed with the operation of the task force."

A working committee to develop a policy and procedures for the task force has been formed, as has a committee to draw up guidelines for the coordinator, investigators, and support personnel, Cook said.

Official word about the funding has not been released yet, but Cook says he is sure some money will be awarded.

"I'm sure we will get some kind of funding," he said. "But what the exact figure is going to be, I don't know."

"I think it will be less than we requested. And if that happens, then the decision is going to be, whatever they give us adequate to do the job," he said.

"I can't help but feel optimistic about it. We have an obvious problem out here. And, like it or not, funding like this program is usually on a per capita basis. And we just don't have as many people in the Permian Basin as are in the (Dallas-Fort Worth) Metroplex."

The task force will operate with a coordinator, investigators and computer support from a central office, say, in Midland. The investigators, which will be selected from the participating agencies in the 17 counties, will move to "hot spots" of narcotics trafficking activity in the West Texas area on an as-needed basis.

In earlier meetings of the task force, officers have said cocaine and marijuana smuggling and methamphetamine "cooking" operations would be likely frequent targets of investigators.

The amount of funding the area will receive is hard to predict, Midland County Sheriff Gary Falster said.

"That is hard to say, because there were some 50 requests that totaled $20 million," the sheriff said. "But, I wouldn't be surprised, no, if we got the whole amount ($750,000), because of the intensity of the Legislature and the federal government in their desire to do something about narcotics."

The amount of funding may depend on how well decision-makers in Austin understand the "Permian Basin is a conduit for narcotics traffickers," Cook maintained.

"I think that much of the drug traffic in Dallas, and in some of the states around it comes right through our chute," Cook said.

"I see that the Basin is a bottleneck for drugs."

"If they give us $750,000 ($100,000 less than requested), we've made our point. But if we get $200,000, we haven't made our point."

Investor who 'lost millions' kills broker, himself

MIAMI (AP) — An investor who reportedly lost millions in the stock crash was facing a deadline for covering his losses when he walked into a Merrill Lynch office, shot and wounded his broker, killed the brokerage's manager and shot himself to death.

Arglago

Arthur Kane's last, bloody moments came Monday, when the 53-year-old federal bureaucrat pulled a powerful handgun out of his briefcase and opened fire.

"He had suffered some very serious losses in the stock market. He was distraught," said Marvin Hollub, father-in-law of the oldest of Kane's three daughters. "But other than that, there was no indication...When people lose money, they are upset."

Kane amassed a portfolio in the millions, The New York Times reported today. The New York Post, quoting an unidentified Merrill Lynch source, said Kane "had as much as $8 million invested" in the stock market and that he "lost millions last week."

The Merrill Lynch office opened late today, and an off-duty police officer barred reporters. A grim-faced manager ordered employees entering the door not to speak to reporters.

One client, who refused later to identify himself to reporters, was ordered to leave his briefcase outside. "It's like they don't trust us any-

Man who lost $500,000 in market commits suicide

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A 58-year-old retired businessman who reportedly lost $500,000 on the stock market in last week's crash has committed suicide, authorities said.

Lamberg

Vernon K. Lamberg, former president of Appleton Machine Co. in Appleton, was found dead Friday morning at Brock's Motel in Wautoma, authorities said.

Lamberg died of asphyxiation after he broke a liquid petroleum line leading from the furnace to his motel room, said Waushara County Coroner Roland Handel Sr.

Lamberg, who was reported missing Wednesday, was "very despondent over the stock market situation," according to an Outagamie County Sheriff's Department report.

An unidentified source quoted in today's Milwaukee Sentinel said Lamberg lost an estimated $500,000 when the Dow Jones industrial average dropped a record 508 points Oct. 19. "He exposed himself to too much risk, and he got caught...He got caught in the worst market day in the history of this country," the source said.

The newspaper also reported that Lamberg's broker requested $200,000 more collateral last week to back loans Lamberg had made for future investments.

Handel said family members and friends also told him Lamberg's disappearance and death had something to do with the stock market.

Friends described Lamberg as an astute businessman.

"He was an outstanding man. It's just a shame," said Leland McGuire, the former director of the Appleton YMCA where Lamberg played racquetball.

"I thought he was an excellent businessman," added John Lundquist, president of Insurances Services. "We did business with each other for about 12 years."

"I thoroughly enjoyed his company, but rarely did we get into a serious discussion about the stock market," Lundquist said.

Lamberg's body was found casually dressed and partially wrapped in a blanket in a chair by a cleaning lady who entered his motel room, Handel said.

The victim's family had begun to search in Waushara County because Lamberg's wife, Jackie, received a package from him Thursday, Handel said.

"He had packed up a lot of his money and mailed it to his wife and family," Handel said. Although Lamberg lived in Appleton, 30 miles southwest of Green Bay, relatives began searching for him in neighboring Waushara County after noticing the package's postmark, he said.

A note addressed to Mrs. Lamberg was found with the man's body, Handel said. Its contents were not disclosed.

number of shots were fired."

Police said shots rang out about five minutes after Kane arrived. Witnesses said Arglago's secretary Patricia Ward yelled: "He's got a gun, duck!"

She later came outside to calmly tell clients the offices would be closed the rest of the day. At two other Merrill Lynch offices, in Miami and Hallandale, security guards were posted at the entrances.

Aaron Perry, a Profile Investments broker, said friends at Merrill Lynch told him Kane had received a margin call because of last week's crash.

Monday was the deadline for meeting the margin call, the Times reported. Bruce Anderson, the manager of a nearby furniture store who spoke to brokers leaving the office, said he was told that Kane had indicated he had a check with him before walking into Arglago's office.

Speculators buying stock on margin borrow money from a brokerage to cover up to 50 percent of the cost of securities. If the stock's value falls, the margin call asks the client to put up more assets to bring the percentage of the stock's value covered by the loan within required limits.

If the call is not met, the brokerage can sell off the stock involved to cover the debt. "From what I've heard, the guy was overextended. We're talking huge losses," Perry said.

"It's one thing to lose your money. It's another thing to lose your mind like this guy apparently did," Perry said.

BUDGET

The Gramm-Rudman law cuts fiscal 1988 spending automatically if the $23 billion goal isn't reached some other way.

Those across-the-board cuts, already in effect preliminarily, become permanent Nov. 30 in the absence of legislation. Such cuts would hurt domestic and military programs alike, regardless of priority.

Reagan on Monday met with the congressional leaders to lay the groundwork for the talks, which will determine how much tax raising and how much cost cutting will be done.

More than a dozen lawmakers are expected to meet with Reagan's top aides on Capitol Hill.

Administration participants in the effort will include White House Chief of Staff Howard H. Baker Jr., Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III and budget director James C. Miller III. The Democratic chairmen and senior Republican members of Congress' tax, spending and budget committees will make up the congressional side.

With the stock market reeling and analysts citing the federal deficit as a major part of the problem, Reagan has ended his outright refusal to consider a tax increase, although he hasn't said just what taxes he might approve. The Democrats, meanwhile, are saying they'll go along with more spending restraint, but they also have been less than specific.

Both sides stressed the importance of success after Monday's session.

"The market underscores the need for a strong effort, a bipartisan effort and a very quick effort," said Dole.

"I think we have to go there with the attitude that we can't let it fail," said Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., a former budget chairman who will be a principal in the talks.

Lawmakers and White House officials also said they would try to limit their verbal attacks on each other, although the chief executive soon fudged on that agreement by blaming Congress for the huge deficits during his presidency.

"I set out to try and eliminate the deficit when I first came here, but unfortunately the Congress has the last word about spending money and they have been more willing to spend than I would have been," Reagan said in an interview with foreign television correspondents.

The president said he "cannot hold still" for a tax increase that might hurt the economy, citing the income tax. "But I think that we are going to work together and we will come to a settlement and it's going to take a little give and take on both sides," he added.

Democrats held some of their cards also. Wright said the House would still vote later this week on a major portion of the deficit-reduction program Democrats crafted in the absence of Republican help.

PLAINS

These "kill sites" are not kill sites at all, Meltzer said, but "death localities, where the animals died of natural causes. People came along later and left artifacts there, perhaps while scavenging a dead elephant or horse."

Specialized hunting occurs under very specific conditions, he said. Usually there are few kinds of animals available to be hunted, in a "species poor" area and the hunting itself is a "low-risk" activity.

Low-risk hunting means the hunter generally won't come home either empty-handed or dead, Meltzer said.

"Hunting an animal the size of an elephant is a high-risk activity," especially when you consider you're stalking a "3 ton animal with a 2 ounce stone at the end of a one pound stick (the spear)," he said.

"If you really want to have elephant, all you have to do is hang around the waterhole, wait for an elephant to die and get stuck in the mud" and then go in and scavenge meat from the body.

Many of the isolated Clovis points which commonly are found throughout the Llano Estacado may have been used for mundane tasks such as hunting and skinning rabbits or chopping bushes, he said. Most of the points from this area were not sharpened and reshaped.

"This suggests that these were not projectiles which went through the air, they were multi-use knives," he continued. "You should think of them as Swiss Army knives."

They also lack impact fractures, where the top of the point has been snapped off after a high-speed collision with animal bone, Meltzer said.

But if the giant mammals were not hunted into extinction about 10,000 years ago, what happened to them? The evidence points to climatic and environmental changes, Meltzer claimed. Bison experienced an "ecological release" — a rapid, successful colonization at the same time.

This could only happen if the bison's competition — other grazing animals — had disappeared, he continued.

Geochemical analysis recently has shown that warm season grasses were spreading their geographical range as the climate became warmer and drier, Meltzer said. This came at the expense of cool-season grasses, which made up most of the large animals' diet.

Bison thrive on warm-season grasses such as the aptly named buffalo grass and blue grama grass, he added. So it's possible that the Pleistocene mammals starved to death.

Meltzer also rejected the notion that the Llano Estacado was deserted during the hot and dry Altithermal Period.

Although few sites from this period have been found on the Southern Plains, it doesn't mean they don't exist, he said.

It's possible that archaeologists could have missed the sites, either by looking in the wrong places or because the sites have been eroded or destroyed in the past 5,000 years.

"When does the absence of evidence become evidence of absence?" Meltzer asked rhetorically.

He cited his three seasons of excavations at Mustang Springs, in Martin County, to back up his contention that the Llano Estacado was inhabited during the Altithermal.

Meltzer's excavations have uncovered 80 hand-dug wells in just a 100-square-meter area. These have been dated to 6,800 years ago "smack in the middle of the Altithermal."

The prehistoric inhabitants dug in a low-lying area of the draw, which in earlier times had been a spring-fed pond, he said. Although the springs stopped flowing and the pond dried up about 7,000 years ago, ground water was still available just a few feet below the surface; the deepest well went down about five feet.

"We have a precise record of the water table drop" with these wells, he said.

Similar wells have been found in at least three other sites on the Llano Estacado, 13 wells have been excavated at Blackwater Draw in New Mexico, he said.

The prehistoric inhabitants must have been able to travel great distances across the plains and "they had to know where the next source of water was going to be."

The great "water-cooled" buffalo herds had disappeared along with the warm-season grasses they relied on, and the people must have hunted small game such as jackrabbit, pronghorn antelope, prairie dogs and pocket mice, Meltzer said.

Evidence of their travels are a piece of petrified wood, perhaps from the Davis Mountains, some 120 miles away, and chert from a source at least 100 miles away, both found at Mustang Springs, he claimed.

These factors imply that "there must have been sites scattered throughout the Llano Estacado," Meltzer said.

They remain unknown because either they're buried under 6 to 10 feet of water-borne deposits in draws such as the Mustang Springs site, or they were destroyed by massive erosion during the Altithermal, he said.

Kuwait to train volunteers to defend against attacks

KUWAIT (AP) — Kuwait will train civilian volunteers to help defend its territory and installations following a spate of Iranian missile attacks and the bombing of an airline office, a military official was quoted today as saying.

In other developments, a reflagged Kuwaiti tanker and its Navy escort were making their way across the Persian Gulf toward Kuwait today, and Britain said it was joining the effort to reflag and protect the sheikdom's tankers from Iranian attack.

President Reagan moved Monday to ban U.S. imports from Iran, citing Iran's "continued and increasingly belligerent behavior" in the gulf. The English-language Kuwait Times quoted Col. Khalid al-Quoud, Kuwait's civil defense director, as saying more than 300 young people already have volunteered for training that begins next week. He said the training initially would be for Kuwaiti nationals and would later include foreigners.

The program is in addition to other defense measures and the timing was not meant to be related to recent attacks, the newspaper said. However, "If the program coincides with the recent escalation" of tension in the gulf, al-Quoud was quoted as saying, "then it calls for enthusiasm in its implementation from both the leadership and the citizens."

He called on Kuwaitis to guard their workplaces. "If every citizen undertakes his duty in this respect, there will be no way for messing around by weaklings," he was quoted as saying.

The oil-rich sheikdom has a defense force of about 12,000 men, along with a small national guard.

Iran has targeted Kuwait ships for about a year, charging that Kuwait aids Iraq, Iran's enemy in the 7-year-old Persian Gulf war. Iran has recently expanded its targets to Kuwait's oil loading terminal, which has been hit by three Silkworm missiles since Oct. 15.

Pentagon officials said the Navy's 13th convoy left without incident Monday from the United Arab Emirates port of Dubai near the entrance of the Persian Gulf.

The convoy was comprised of the newly reflagged tanker Middletown, a 290,285-ton ship that carries oil products, and the guided-missile frigate Ford, the Pentagon said.

Reagan agreed in June to reflag 11 of Kuwait's 22 tankers to provide them with U.S. naval protection. Since then, the United States and several of its European allies have increased their military presence in the gulf to protect commerce in the oil shipping lanes.

In London, Transport Ministry officials said two Kuwaiti vessels had been reregistered in Britain: the 27,841-ton petroleum products carrier Ras al-Jalayah, renamed Chilham Castle, and the 263,679-ton super-tanker al-Faihab, renamed Tonbridge. A third vessel, the 28,031-ton Ras al-Barshah, would also be reflagged, British officials said.

The British move would entitle the Kuwaiti vessels to the protection of British warships. At least three British warships and four mine sweepers are stationed in the gulf.

Reagan said Monday he was directing the State and Treasury departments to set up a ban on the export to Iran of 14 categories of U.S. products with possible military applications.

Last week, Reagan ordered military retaliation against Iran after a Silkworm missile damaged a U.S.-flagged tanker off Kuwait. Navy ships destroyed two Iranian oil rigs in the southern gulf.

Iran's official Islamic Republic

News Agency quoted Interior Minister Hojatoleslam Ali Akbar Mohtashemi as urging Monday that "people in every Iranian city and village to be prepared for a full-fledged war" with the United States.

Salah Khalaf, second in command in Yasser Arafat's Fatah movement, the leading guerrilla faction in the Palestine Liberation Organization, said Monday that Palestinians "are fully prepared to fight along with the people of Kuwait in defense of Kuwait's national soil and the dignity of the Arab nation."

"The Palestinian people will fight along with the people of Kuwait or any other gulf Arab state against the Iranian aggression," he said in an interview.

Salvadoran prisoners protest slaying of human rights activist

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Political prisoners enraged by the slaying of a prominent human rights activist held a demonstration in a jail outside the capital, and labor and student groups said they were planning protests today.

The political organization for El Salvador's leftist rebels meanwhile said the killing could jeopardize peace talks with the government.

Herbert Ernesto Anaya, 32, the president of the Salvadoran Human Rights Commission, was gunned down Monday as he left his home, official sources said.

Inmates at La Mariona prison, El Salvador's main penitentiary for men, shouted through megaphones to prisoners in other areas Monday, blaming the government for the killing and demanding an investigation.

Some radio stations broadcast a communique from the prisoners saying they had taken over the prison, but officials denied the claim.

No injuries were reported in the demonstration at the prison north of San Salvador. Anaya had been held at the jail for several months last year, after the government arrested him on suspicion of collaborating with leftist rebels.

Two men firing handguns shot Anaya point-blank as he left home to drive two of his six children to school, a police source said. The children were not hurt.

No group has claimed responsibility for the murder. Police and military sources said they had no leads on the identity of the killers.

Commission, said death squads linked to security forces were to blame.

"All the responsibility for this assassination falls on the armed forces high command, the security agencies and the government itself," Montenegro told a news conference.

Government spokesman Roberto Viera, speaking at another news conference, said, "This irrational act reflects the level of hate and rancor that exists in the hearts and minds of some Salvadorans."

Human rights groups say 65,000 people have been killed since civil war began in October 1979, many of them slain by death squads. Death squad killings have declined sharply in recent years.

Three other members of the Human Rights Commission have been killed since 1980 and two others disappeared while in police custody.

Leaders of the National Union of Workers, the largest opposition labor organization, said they were arranging activities today to protest the murder. They said that because of security reasons they could not describe the activities, in which university students were planning to take part.

Leftist guerrillas burned a city bus and a pickup truck belonging to the government electrical company on Monday. Witnesses quoted the rebels as saying the actions were to protest the killing.

The Democratic Revolutionary Front, the rebels' political organization, said Anaya's killing could derail talks with the government on meeting a Nov. 7 deadline for a cease-fire set out in a new Central American peace plan.

Anaya was arrested May 26, 1986, on suspicion of collaborating with the rebels, who have been fighting for eight years to overthrow the U.S.-backed government. He was held without trial under a national emergency law, then released last year with 56 other political prisoners in exchange for an army colonel captured by the guerrillas.

The emergency law was lifted in January.

The commission, founded in 1977, is an independent organization of lawyers and other professionals that has criticized government human rights violations. Rightists have accused it of being sympathetic to the left.

Expert thinks KGB framed Demjanjuk

JERUSALEM (AP) — A defense witness in the Nazi war crimes trial of John Demjanjuk said today that the Soviet Union may have framed the retired American autoworker.

The Soviet secret police often have used forged Nazi documents to try to defame "ordinary people" like Demjanjuk, testified Abraham Shifrin, an Israeli expert on the KGB.

The defense called Shifrin, 64, to try to prove a key piece of prosecution evidence, Demjanjuk's alleged Nazi identity card, was forged by Moscow. The Soviets supplied it to the prosecution.

The Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk, 67, is charged with being "Ivan the Terrible," who operated gas chambers at the Treblinka death camp in Nazi-held Poland. Some 850,000 Jews were killed at the camp in 1942 and 1943.

Demjanjuk, who is from a Cleveland suburb, claims he is a victim of mistaken identity and was a prisoner of war during 1942 and 1943 at a camp in Chelm, near Treblinka.

Shifrin, testifying in a movie theater converted into a courtroom before an audience of about 100, said the KGB may have framed Demjanjuk in order to launch a campaign against the Jewish state if the defendant is convicted.

"When the conviction comes in, the Soviet Union will say the whole thing was based on false documents, and it reflects badly on Israel," said the Soviet-born Shifrin, who runs a center in Jerusalem on KGB activities.

Presiding Judge Dov Levine sharply rebuked the witness. "It is not for you to make such a statement. We will judge to the best of our consciences."

Shifrin, who was jailed for 10 years in Siberian prisons before being permitted to emigrate in Israel in 1970, also said his investigation showed "the KGB is conducting a struggle against ordinary people it considers to be enemies."

"Anyone who left the Soviet Union for the West is considered a traitor," he said. "The Soviets are creating criminal cases against these people to have them deported back to the Soviet Union."

Shifrin said the KGB has a special forgery department capable of manufacturing documents of any kind. "Within this department there are handwriting experts, chemists, historians, people of the highest caliber," he said.

He said the KGB collected documents and types of ink from all over the world.

He said he saw large depots in Minsk and other Soviet cities where ink and paper from the Nazi regime were stored after World War II.

When he asked Soviet guards at the depot what the materials were used for, "They said, 'We used this paper. Sometime sooner or later we will use it,'" Shifrin testified.

Shifrin was the third witness the defense has called in an effort to discredit the so-called "Trawniki card," an identity card bearing Demjanjuk's name from the Trawniki camp in Nazi-occupied Poland, where death camp guards were trained.

The first two witnesses' testimony failed to hold up in court. The trial resumed Monday following a two-month break.

Demjanjuk lived in the United States for more than 30 years before being extradited to Israel in February 1986. He says he was drafted into the Soviet army in 1941 and captured by the Germans in early 1942.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Clerk sues government because she was fired for wearing Moslem dress

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — A government employee who was fired because she wore a purdah, a Moslem dress that covers the head, is suing the government.

Halimatussaidiah Kamaruddin, 34, filed the suit at the high court in Kuala Lumpur Monday. She said the dismissal violated her right to practice Islam.

Kamaruddin said she was fired from her clerical job in December 1985 after 14 years of government service because she wore a purdah.

The government issued a directive in 1985 banning its employees from wearing purdahs to work. It said the dresses, which have slits for the eyes, prevented workers from knowing which employees were handling government files.

The case is the first of its kind in this nation, where Islam is the official religion.

Kamaruddin is demanding she be reinstated and receive back pay.

Ex-prostitute loses court case

MANCHESTER, England (AP) — A former prostitute has lost her court case against health authorities who removed her from a test-tube baby program because they said her past made her unsuitable.

The High Court judge, Sir Konrad Schiemann, chastised the authorities Monday for misleading the woman about the reasons for their decision, but said they had not acted unlawfully.

Janet Harriott, 36, and her husband Roderick, 46, are unable to have children. In 1983 they joined the waiting list for an in vitro fertilization program run by the Manchester health service.

Mrs. Harriott's earlier applications to adopt a child had been rejected because of her prostitution record and her "poor understanding" of foster parenthood, the court was told.

She was told she did not qualify for the test-tube program because of medical problems.

London airport begins operations

LONDON (AP) — London City Airport, built in the capital's derelict dock area, opened Monday and its first two flights arrived ahead of schedule.

It is the first completely new airport built in Britain in 40 years and cost $50 million. It is called the STOLport, for the short-takeoff-and-landing aircraft that will use it.

The airport is along the Thames 6 miles east of London's financial district, and hopes are that it will replace Heathrow and Gatwick as the main facility serving the area. The two major airports are more than an hour away.

London City Airport began operations with the arrivals of two 46-seat De Havilland Dash 7 commuter planes, one operated by Brymon Airways from Plymouth and the other a Eurocity Express from Brussels.

Sabena of Belgium also is licensed to use the airport. Licenses have been granted for flights to and from Paris, Brussels, Amsterdam, Rotterdam and Dusseldorf, and the domestic destinations of Manchester, Plymouth, Newquay and the two main Channel Islands, Jersey and Guernsey.

U.S. sailor faces trial in Canada

VICTORIA, British Columbia (AP) — An American sailor has been committed for trial in Victoria on a charge of sexual assault.

During a preliminary hearing Monday in Victoria provincial court, Judge Stephen Denroche committed Ronald Spoonmore, 18, of Loomis, Calif., for a county court trial, possibly next February.

Spoonmore, whose legal costs are being borne by the U.S. Navy, is accused of assaulting a 36-year-old prostitute in downtown Victoria last June.

The incident triggered international talks after Victoria police were refused permission to board the USS Arkansas, moored at CFB Esquimalt, to talk to Spoonmore. Following negotiations reached with the Pentagon, Spoonmore was returned to Canada to face the charge.

Meanwhile, he will be escorted back to his ship in Seattle on military maneuvers.

Tests planned for Mexican satellite

MEXICO CITY (AP) The government plans to begin tests next year of the first experimental satellite designed and built by Mexicans.

Ricardo Peralta, an engineering researcher at the National Autonomous University of Mexico, said the Satex I satellite will undergo testing in the middle of 1988 as part of the government Program of National Satellites.

Satex I will be used for research.

Soviet film on missile technology has footage of Stalin, Khrushchev

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet television on Monday traced the development of missile technology in a film that criticized Josef Stalin for purging Soviet scientists and displayed seldom-shown footage of Stalin and Nikita S. Khrushchev.

The 90-minute documentary "Risk" included film of Nazi Germany's rocket program, atomic bomb blasts, the Cuban missile crisis and the U.S.-Soviet race into space.

The film began with footage of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's news conference in Reykjavik, Iceland, in 1986 after he and President Reagan discussed but failed to agree on a plan to eliminate nuclear weapons.

It ended with a plea for both superpowers to be careful with their missile and nuclear technology, citing the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger and the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

"There is no road back. There is a road to meetings," it said.

Stalin and Khrushchev both are controversial figures in Soviet history, and although both are shown in documentary films, it is rare for Soviet television to show so much footage of either man.

Stalin, whose place in Soviet history is being cautiously re-evaluated by historians, was shown at parades and other official functions in the years before he died in 1953.

One such sequence has Stalin watching a fly-over on the Soviet Union's Air Force Day while the narrator speculates that he is regretting stopping the Soviet rocket development program.

The film said Stalin ordered the arrest of top rocket scientists in one of his purges.

Sergei Korolyov, later one of the scientists behind the launch of Sputnik in 1957, was exiled. Marshal Mikhail Tukhachevsky, who defended the program to Stalin, was denounced as an enemy of the people, the film said. Tukhachevsky died in the great purge of 1937.

In contrast, Khrushchev was shown proposing a worldwide disarmament plan to the United Nations in 1959 and greeting Soviet cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin in 1961 after he became the first man in space.

Khrushchev was ousted in 1964 and was ignored officially thereafter, but has been treated with more respect in the past two years by writers who view his reform efforts as a precursor to Gorbachev's own drive to restructure Soviet society.

The film said Soviet leaders took the risk of developing a rocket program after Stalin died. Khrushchev was in power 4½ years later when Sputnik was launched.

The film portrayed the United States as developing its rocket program around German rocket scientist Werner von Braun after World War II.

It showed film of U.S. civil defense drills and the trial of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, who were convicted of transmitting atomic secrets to the Soviet Union and executed in 1953.

President John F. Kennedy was portrayed as a leader who found Soviet superiority in space unacceptable, but whose sober judgment overruled U.S. military leaders who wanted to attack the Soviet missiles discovered in Cuba in October 1962.

More than 100 people missing when ferry sinks

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — A ferry boat packed with 450 passengers sank Monday evening in the swift-flowing Ganges river in northern Bangladesh, killing at least 10 people and leaving more than 100 missing, officials said.

The officials said many of the missing passengers are believed to be trapped inside the hull of the double-deck ferry, which sank after hitting a silt island in the Ganges about 100 miles northwest of Dhaka.

Officials in the town of Aricha told The Associated Press by telephone that divers had found 10 bodies floating about a mile downstream from the tragedy.

The ferry was the second in two weeks to capsize in Bangladesh. Another craft with about 200 passengers sank outside Dhaka on Oct. 15. Officials said 10 people died and 25 were missing following that tragedy.

The officials in Aricha, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the ferry was packed with 450 passengers, more than double its capacity. It was on a daily run from the southwestern district of Faridpur to Aricha.

The police at Aricha said at least 300 people were rescued by another ferry and some fishing boats.

Some survivors said the passengers panicked when they saw water gushing in through a hole in the bottom of the ferry after the craft hit the island.

"All the passengers scrambled to come out on the deck of the ferry. It was a terrible scene," said Muntazim Ferdous, a survivor.

Ferdous, a Dhaka University student, told the AP: "Many passengers were rescued by another ferry. But many others, especially those who jumped in panic, were just carried away by fast stream of the river."

60 nations bust Americans

Americans were arrested on drug-related charges in 60 countries in 1986.

The top five nations, accounting for 71 percent of all the drug charges against Americans, were Jamaica, Mexico, the Bahamas, the Dominican Republic and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Bulk of proposals appears favorable

The bulk of proposed constitutional amendments being offered to voters Nov. 3rd involve reasonable changes that appear logical in nature. In fact, most of them appear designed to help all the state's residents.

That isn't the situation involving all of them, however. Proposed amendments 2, 15, 16 and 25 involve specific areas of Texas and really must be determined by voters in those areas.

Amendment 2 would allow rural fire prevention districts in the six most populous counties in Texas (more than 400,000 population) to levy an ad valorem tax to support the districts.

Amendment 15 would allow voters in Gregg, Fayette, and Nueces counties to abolish the county treasurer's office as a money-saving move.

Amendment 16 would allow counties of more than 150,000 to have more than one justice of the peace in each precinct.

Amendment 25 would allow parts of Randall County to be served by and taxed by the Amarillo Hospital District.

But, Texas voters must agree to let the voters in those areas amend the Constitution so that the changes can be effected. We encourage voters to approve these four amendments so that process may occur.

We also encourage voters to vote "yes" for amendments 3, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, and 24, and one dealing with enhanced 911 services in addition to the earlier amendments and referenda addressed in Reporter-Telegram editorials.

Of prime concern to Midland and Ector County residents will be the local proposal on the ballot which, if approved, will enhance current emergency 9-1-1 services to ensure emergency help in the event of crisis situations. Enhanced 911 provides callers' telephone number and home address automatically to emergency personnel when 9-1-1 is dialed. Cost of the service will be about 30 cents per month per residential telephone user.

Amendment 3 would limit school tax increases on the residence homestead of a surviving spouse of an elderly person if the spouse is at least 55 years of age. This provides a way to avoid the unexpected jump in school taxes in such situations that occurs under current law.

Amendment 9 would remove a provision making a member of the legislature ineligible for elective or appointive office if that member had voted for an increase in salary for the office being sought later. State Sen. "Buster" Brown's application for candidacy in the Republican nomination for attorney general in 1986 was rejected on these grounds although the increase involved was small. While the law as written was good, in this instance it proved too restrictive.

Amendment 10 would exempt from ad valorem taxation such items as boats, aircraft, and other vehicles that are not automobiles such as recreational vehicles and campers. Tax officials point out that collection of taxes on such items is extremely difficult and unfair, and costs of collection often exceed the taxes derived.

Amendment 12 would change the law to allow Texas spouses to avoid the two-step process currently required by law by agreeing in writing regarding community property in the event of a death. This is logical as the current system is cumbersome and costly to married couples.

Amendment 13 would allow rural fire and emergency service districts to levy a tax to provide for their services. The tax could not exceed 10 cents per $100 valuation.

Amendment 14 would change Texas law to permit prosecutors to appeal criminal cases in particular instances. This could not constitute "double jeopardy" since the state would only be permitted to appeal certain judges' rulings. It also should be noted that Texas is the only state in the nation that completely prohibits appeals by the state.

Amendment 17 would allow the legislature to determine and specify which functions of a municipality are governmental and which are proprietary. This stems from concern that the difference between those functions will be determined by the courts if the legislature does not step in and make the difference clear. It's proper for the legislature rather than the courts to make such a determination.

Amendment 18 would permit the creation of jail districts to operate jails financed by taxation. With the problems now facing the state's prison system, Texas needs to look at alternative ways of housing prisoners. This offers an alternative that should be considered.

Amendment 20 would provide tax relief for offshore drilling equipment which is housed in port facilities in Texas. Local oil executives say equipment should not be taxed when it is idle and they support the amendment.

Amendment 21 would permit the speaker of the House or his appointee to serve on the agency of another branch of state government. This really would not violate the separation of powers since the lieutenant governor, who heads the Senate, is already permitted to serve in such a capacity.

Amendment 22 would allow the legislature to limit the authority of a lame-duck governor from making appointments to state and district offices. This stems from an incident in 1983 when incoming Gov. Mark White asked the Senate to allow him to replace most of outgoing Gov. Bill Clements' appointees. This seems a reasonable protection to avoid future occurrences of this type.

Amendment 24 would allow a county to perform work for another governmental entity even though it may receive no compensation. This would allow sparsely populated counties to combine their resources for the benefit of all their residents. It makes good sense.

The only proposed amendment we believe should not be approved is Amendment 1 which would utilize public money to guarantee grain stored in public warehouse facilities. Local farming officials and others say this seems to be a risky endeavor since public money would be used to underwrite warehouse operations.

We also think this is questionable and recommend voters say "no."

JAMES RESTON

America's tune being sung off-key

WASHINGTON — The events of the last few months have been trying to tell this country something about its mindless excesses. They have been saying you can't run a government on credit cards, that the politics of blame won't solve our problems at home or abroad and that when the party's over the bills come in.

The evidence was all around us before the crash: in the Iran-contra hearings, in the budget deficits and the trade deficits, in the adventures of the Persian Gulf, in the moral squalor of the Hart and Biden campaigns. And you could go on even to some of the backsliders in the electric pulpits.

So maybe these reckonings are not all bad. Nothing wakes up Uncle Sam like a punch in the nose. The contra affair cleaned out the White House and restored some respect for the law. The Bork hearings were a lesson in the Constitution, still unlearned. And maybe the panic on Wall Street will remind us that a $2 trillion national debt and a $150 billion to $200 billion annual budget deficit are a dangerous national disgrace.

Having overestimated our artificial prosperity in recent years, the danger now is that we'll overestimate the crisis. We are not facing an economic depression but a psychological recession.

Some simple remedies are at hand. As we learned that you can't sweep mines in the Persian Gulf without minesweepers, it's equally obvious that the president and Congress can't handle the budget and trade deficits by bad-mouthing one another.

At the time of the crash, the Secretaries of State and the Treasury were out of the country, and the president, as usual, was out to lunch. He didn't take to the television to quell the shouting, but merely shouted over the din of a helicopter that all was well with the economy.

There's no way the conservatives can get all the money they want for defense and the liberals all the money they want for their social agenda without breaking the bank, and they both know it. The ideologies of both right and left have failed. What is worse, the president has lost his cool. Sore at losing the Bork nomination, he ignores the defection of key Republican senators, and says the whole thing was a Democratic political "lynching." What is his remedy for this? He threatens to appoint another judge who will be even less acceptable to the Senate than Bork.

The real danger in the nervous breakdown on Wall Street and the president's blithe reaction to it is that the other industrial countries will lose faith in the ability of the president and Congress to correct the excesses of the past.

They are not likely to withdraw their investments in the United States. Creditors don't shoot their best customers. But they could withhold their future investments and slow down the whole world economy.

That confidence does not exist now. Tokyo, Bonn and London are relatively quiet about it, not wanting to make things worse, but if you could read some of the economic and political reports going out of their embassies here, you would realize that their private anxieties are much deeper than the polite expressions of sympathy out of their capitals.

Also, we have an election coming up and this is adding to the sense of uncertainty. Nothing that has been said so far in the campaign indicates that the post-Reagan leaders have any remedy for the fundamental economic and political problems, and the campaign is likely to lose altitude as it picks up speed in the coming months.

As somebody once said, "America is a tune — it must be sung together." Lately, it has been a little off-key.

After Black Monday, U.S. needs leadership

NEW YORK — From the president down, Reagan administration officials seem determined to be reassuring about the stock market crash and the underlying state of the economy. This is an inadequate response to emergency, even if the official facts seem to bear them out.

Whatever triggered Black Monday and the ups and downs since then, investors obviously feared that beneath the smooth surface of things, something was wrong — or at least threatening — in the domestic economy, or in international affairs or both. When news of a bigger-than-expected trade deficit, or of Treasury Secretary Baker's threat to push the dollar further down, or whatever it was, set off a market decline, that perhaps nameless fear turned decline into rout, then collapse — and has permitted only a partial and uncertain recovery that may not hold.

It's fear — the perception that something is wrong, or about to be — that Reagan and his advisers must need to address. They need to do so, in the first instance, by recognizing that investors large and small simply don't believe that all's well. Some fear the budget deficit, others the trade deficit, many fear that both threaten the economy. The high level of indebtedness, over-reliance on foreign investment, the decline of the manufacturing sector, low rates of productivity — different analysts may assign different reasons for the lack of confidence. Even Persian Gulf jitters may have played their part in the Black Monday drama.

The president and his administration cannot ease fears simply by insisting that nothing's wrong. Yet, to the annual convention of the Savings Bank Association of New York in Puerto Rico last week, L. William Seidman, the former aide to President Ford who now heads the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., insisted that "very little adverse effect" had resulted from the market collapse.

He had figures that seemed to support his case — an economic growth rate predicted at almost 4 percent, increased capital spending, a 1987 budget deficit decrease of $73 billion, Reagan said at his news conference, and a trend toward a smaller trade deficit. Interest rates appeared to be going down and even though market conditions might be shaky, Seidman said, he saw nothing in the economy itself to cause problems.

He did express some concern over a debt level that at about $8 trillion is twice gross national product. But only a genuine economic upset could bring on recession, Seidman said, and "right now we see no evidence of that."

Reagan, though driven by public alarm to his first White House news conference in seven months, also tried to be reassuring. He did offer to meet with Congress to seek further deficit reduction "with everything on the table" except Social Security, but even if it were clear that the deficit is the problem, the news conference disclosed less to the president's offer than met the eye.

Under repeated questioning, Reagan stood by his established position that the deficit is a product of too much spending — non-military spending, of course. He left no doubt that though a tax increase might be "on the table," he was a long way from agreeing to it. This made clear — though a tax increase is not necessarily the right remedy for the budget deficit or the economy — that the president feels no sense of urgency, no need for action beyond his patented approaches, no demand from the public for something beyond soothing reassurance.

He virtually said so: "there are no indicators out there of recession or hard times at all." The next day he added, almost as if by rote, "Tax increases are not the answer."

Maybe not, the president is not alone in those opinions. But the bankers I spoke to after Seidman's similar remarks in Puerto Rico seemed unconvinced that no cause for worry existed. Several said that what they wanted most to hear from Reagan was a frank recognition that something is wrong, and a convincing pledge to do something about it. No one demanded that the president lay out a complete economic program, and few seemed themselves to have a clear idea of what ought to be done.

So what they were demanding, or at least hoping for, was that intangible something Ronald Reagan once amply provided — leadership. When he was cutting taxes, boosting the military budget, firing the air controllers, proclaiming government as the nation's basic problem, he seemed to know just where he was going and how to get there.

Nearly two terms and many traumas later, Reagan prescribes no new direction, just more of the same — which, many Americans seem to fear, is what brought us to Black Monday in the first place.

Be informed voter

Our forefathers intentionally wrote our state constitution so that the power remained in the hands of the people. In 1975, when our state Legislature made its greedy grab for power, the people voted a resounding "no." The proponents vowed then they would be back to try again. Fellow citizens, "here they go again."

On Nov. 3, they are asking us to approve 25 changes to our state constitution. They weren't satisfied with the increased state taxes they laid on our backs Oct. 1. They also want us to allow them to:

- (1) Set up more new taxing agencies
- (2) Increase limits on existing taxing agencies
- (3) Set up an additional highway department with taxing authority
- (4) Enter into competition with private business
- (5) Finance private business
- (6) Borrow money to put the citizens of Texas two billion plus dollars in debt. They must think they're the federal government. For 150 years, our state constitution has required our state government to live within the budget. If we let them borrow money now there will be no stopping them.

A friend of mine says he always votes "no" to every proposed change to our constitution. He says he knows he'll be right 90 percent of the time. This is a rather drastic approach, but I guess it's better than voting "yes" to a change you don't want. It would be much better if everyone went to the polls informed.

If you wait until you get to the polls to find out what you're voting on you are out of luck. What's on the ballot "ain't" what you're voting on. What you read in the newspaper might not be what you're voting on either.

The Texas Legislative Council has issued a booklet titled "Analysis of Proposed Constitutional Amendments and Referenda Appearing on the Nov. 3 ballot." You can get a copy by simply picking up the phone and calling your state representative or senator. Please read it before you vote. "Not Voting" is not the same as "Voting Against."

Coverage criticized

During the recent ordeal involving this little child and her family, your newspaper once more dropped the ball. Your so-called "reporters" did nothing on this story but read off of the wire services, mostly Associated Press, and reprint their stories.

Information on this should have gone out under your bylines. I for one was ashamed to admit that the Dallas Morning News had superb coverage and they obviously did some leg work. People in this town genuinely cared about this and weren't morbidly curious.

In contrast, you managed to get a story about a man who is using his inadequacies in the job market to try to ruin a fine woman and her business.

I would be pleased if you published this letter in your letters to the editor column, but I'm sure you won't put criticism in.

Tree cutting a shame

A old song says, "Maybe it's because I'm a Londoner that I love London town." I am and I do, and I was saddened to read of the loss of several lives and the loss of hundreds of trees in London recently.

Trees and parks, as well as fine buildings, contribute so much to great cities — think of London, Paris and Madrid. The point was well made in the report that the oaks and plane trees of London's parks and squares are "the heritage of wise 18th and 19th century builders."

Now I live in Midland, which could be fairly called one of the less densely forested parts of the world. I have been surprised in 1987 to see so many apparently healthy trees cut down in this city. I say apparently because I do not know, but it is often around the time a property changes hands, and this suggests different tastes. Damage to plumbing may be another factor I realize. A person is free to express his/her tastes on private property, and this will include liking or disliking trees. Yet I cannot help thinking it is a pity when a healthy tree is cut down.

A tree takes so long to grow. An average length of time in this country for a family to stay in one house is less than 10 years. We are all passing through in a sense, enjoying, if we are lucky, the trees planted by former residents and not cut down before we got here. What about tomorrow?

Smoking ban unfair

It has come to my attention that non-smoking advocates have asked the City Council to approve smoking restrictions. The petitioners have requested that restrictions be implemented in restaurants, businesses, public buildings, commercial establishments and other public places.

I wish to protest the need for non-smoking ordinances and to support the continued reliance on common sense and courtesy to resolve these issues.

I ask that the Midland City Council consider all sides of the issue — including the rights of smokers — before approving such unfair restrictions.

Courthouse 'raid' planned

Exterminators ready to corner pests

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

County employees bugged by pesky roaches, rats and other rodents will get some relief when exterminators conduct an upcoming raid in the courthouse's closets, cabinets and corners, commissioners said Monday.

County maintenance worker Gene Bishop told the court that the rodent problem will become more severe with the onslaught of cooler weather as the pests retreat indoors.

Commissioners agreed and authorized Bishop to contact the county entomologist to recommend what types of insecticides and pesticides should be used to exterminate the pests.

The court is expected to authorize the county to seek bids for exterminators at its next regularly scheduled meeting.

Sheriff Gary Painter described the influx of roaches and rats as a year-round problem.

"Right now, they arm wrestle for eating privileges," he said.

County Attorney Mark Dettman described the courthouse as a "bug burial ground."

In other business Monday, commissioners discussed but took no action on the proposed establishment of a county housing authority.

Housing Director Jerrie Westmoreland has recommended the court create a board of directors to oversee the operation and maintenance of each of the county's housing projects.

The board would act as a governing body independent of county government both administratively and financially, she said.

Dettman said the appointed five-member board would serve two-year, staggered terms. "It's a complete and totally separate governing body," he said.

Ms. Westmoreland said county residents — particularly those in Midland's windowpane areas — would benefit from the housing authority because its board of directors would be able to devote more time than the Commissioners Court to processing the 40 to 60 housing applications that are entered monthly.

"We're getting larger everyday, and we have a lot of paperwork. With all these groups coming at you, it's hard to keep up," she said. "I feel we can work more closely with a separate board than with the county commissioners."

Commissioners also talked further about the proposed animal control ordinance, a measure that originally was presented Oct. 12.

Dalton Byerly, director of the Midland Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, said the court's definition of a stray animal is unclear, making the ordinance difficult to administer as written.

"A number of animals are loose out there, and they are potential health problem," Byerly said.

"If an animal is identifiable then he has to be returned to the owner. If he's not, then he needs to be picked up and held for awhile," he said.

Commissioners tabled action on the ordinance pending further study.

The court also heard a proposal to lower eligibility requirements for the county's retirement plan.

Under the proposal, county workers would have to serve 10 years to be eligible for retirement benefits. Current provisions of the policy call for a minimum 12 years of service.

The plan would cost the county an estimated $50,000 per year.

National group honors six local students

By JANE MARLER DEES

Six Midland Independent School District seniors recently were recognized by the National Merit Scholarship Corp. for their outstanding performances on Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Tests last year.

Three Lee High School students — Kristina J. Adams, Kevin Appling and Megan Burleson — received National Merit Semi-Finalist honors through the corporation's National Merit Scholarship Program.

Through the National Achievement Scholarship Program for Outstanding Negro Students, Lee High School student Staci Glenn, and Midland High Schoolers Braggston Morris and Hellen Young received similar honors.

The National Merit Scholarship Program is devoted to opening up scholarship opportunities for students.

The National Achievement Scholarship Program exists specifically to identify and honor high-performing black students, a corporation statement said.

Kevin said it was a "shock" to learn he'd won the honor.

He had lived in Alaska for 15 years while his father was a production superintendent with ARCO Oil and Gas Co., and only moved to Midland last year.

"Because I had moved so much, my education was varied," Kevin explained.

Kevin has won math and science awards while at LHS and has participated in a summer University of Texas Honors Colloquium, German Club competitions at Angelo State University and the Academic Decathlon.

During his sophomore and junior years, Kevin went on two missionary trips — one to Sweden and one to Jamaica to help underprivileged or handicapped people.

Both of these trips were voluntary and he had to earn his own money or find sponsors to support him, he said.

Kevin plans to attend Rice University or the Colorado School of Mines and major in engineering and continue his soccer activities.

Braggston has been a member of the National Honor Society for three years, he said.

He is active as well in the Texas Association of Minorities in Engineering, president of the Students Organized for Unity and Leadership and the MHS track team.

Last summer, he traveled to the U.S. Air Force Academy's Summer Scientific Seminar and the UT Honors Colloquium. He also has received a letter in academics.

"Being a semifinalist has forced me to realize I have a lot of talent inside myself and all I have to do is use it," Braggston said last week.

"It feels like winning the 100-meter dash against Carl Lewis. I feel free and I feel like nothing can stop me from being what I want to be."

Kristina plans to attend the University of Texas after graduation and major in political science, philosophy or history, she said last week.

Hellen Young

While she one day would "like a position of power in Washington D.C.," others have told Kristina she shouldn't become a politician because she "can't keep her mouth shut," she said.

Winning the award has afforded her several opportunities, she said. "You have more choices about where you want to go."

During her three years at LHS, she has been involved in numerous activities, including attendance at the UT Honors Colloquium last summer and memberships in the French Club, Young Life, Dixie Dolls, Ski Club, Debate Team, National Forensic League, Bio-med Club, Jets, Young Republicans, Senior Girls and the President's Cabinet.

Kristina is secretary of the senior class and has been named to Who's Who of High School students. She also was a homecoming duchess this year.

Hellen said the University of Texas is her one and only choice of universities. After graduation, she plans on majoring in pre-law while minor- ing in theatre arts.

Winning the honor "astounded" Hellen, she said. "I don't consider myself an intellectual...more social and extroverted."

While at MHS, she has been active in the Drama, French, and Senior Girls Clubs and the President's Cabinet.

Like her fellow semifinalists, she attended the UT Honors Colloquium last summer.

Hellen has undergone training in the ALL-STAR program and now is an ALL-STAR trainer herself. She is a member of Who's Who of High School students and the National Forensic League.

She would like to become a "corporate lawyer who promotes the arts," she said.

Megan balances her time between church, academic and theatrical endeavors and plans to attend a small liberal arts college in the East — namely Bryn Mawr College.

While at LHS, Megan has maintained membership in the Young Republicans, the Student Council, President's Cabinet, Senior Girls and the Pan American Student Forum.

She also has held down a job at a local shoe store and been active in Midland Community Theater's Pickwick Players, and her church's youth group.

She is currently performing in the Midland Community Theatre production of "To Gillian on her 37th Birthday."

Megan attended a summer workshop for poetry at Hollins College in Virginia during the summer before her junior year and later that year served as a volunteer for the Family Services Nurturing Program.

Staci's list of credits begins at the top with the presidency this year of the National Honor Society at LHS.

Currently in possession of the second-highest grade point average in her class, Staci also has received academic awards in creative writing, English and mathematics.

She is vice-president of the Bio-Med Club and is a student council representative.

Last year, she was vice-president of the Texas Alliance of Minority Engineers and served as members of the Honor Band and the Senior Girls Club.

While at LHS, she has received three academic letters and also attended the UT Honors Colloquium.

Runaway

No injuries were reported Monday evening when this 1965 Cessna 172 Skyhawk, piloted by Tom Carnes of Odessa, ran off the north-south runway at Midland Air Park after landing and fell into a ravine, the Department of Public Safety reported. Light damage was reported to the aircraft, according to reports.

If oil stays above $18, growth likely, economist says

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

If the price of oil remains in the $18-to-$20 per barrel range, Midland and Odessa can anticipate economic growth of 5-to-6 percent by the end of 1988, according to economist Jim Williams, who operates the Midland-based Texas Business Forecasts, an economic consulting firm.

Not unexpectedly, added Williams, the increases in employment that generate this growth will be coming primarily from the manufacturing and oil and gas sectors. This will ultimately translate into more jobs in the retail trade sector, he said.

As of the end of September, total wage and salary employment in Midland stood at 44,800, with Odessa showing a total of 44,400, Williams said during an interview with the Reporter-Telegram.

Though Midland's total wage and salary jobs continued ahead of Odessa's, increases in the price of crude oil were reflected more quickly in Odessa's service-oriented workforce.

From January through the end of September, Odessa's total wage and salary employment increased by 1,300, while Midland added only 300 jobs in the same time period.

Barring unforeseen events, Williams believes "the economy should continue to show slow improvement." The Midland-based economist said indications are the downturn hit bottom around the first of the year in Odessa and in May in Midland.

The growth rate he is projecting will be nearly twice that of the rest of the country, meaning that the Midland-Odessa area again will be one of the faster growing areas in the country economically, he said.

While total retail sales posted significant losses in 1986 and preliminary 1987 figures for the first and second quarters still show some weakness, Williams predicted measurable improvement will be seen in retail sales by the end of the year.

As of the end of September, Midland's oil and gas employment stood at 9,300, up 1,000 jobs from May of this year. Manufacturing employment continued at the same level as in May, but Williams said manufacturing jobs "will probably start showing increases shortly" because manufacturing activity usually lags behind oil and gas.

Williams figures show at least 100 manufacturing jobs have been lost in Midland since the end of January, while Odessa gained about 200 jobs in the manufacturing sector during that same period.

Odessa oil and gas jobs increased 300 from May through September. Since January a total of 400 jobs have been added in the oil and gas (mining) category, with total employment in this area standing at 6,500 as of the end of September. There should be steady gains in both areas, said Williams.

For the time being, construction activity will remain relatively flat except for special purpose projects, Williams said. It will be considerable time before construction employment shows any significant movement because of residential and commercial overbuilding that occurred in earlier years, he added.

Williams predicted the retail sector will remain very competitive and some marginal businesses will fall by the wayside.

State's college enrollment up almost 4 percent this fall

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — College enrollment around Texas rose almost 4 percent this fall, with all Midland-area institutions following the trend, the Higher Education Coordinating Board reported Monday.

Preliminary figures for the fall semester at all Texas public and private universities, junior colleges and medical schools show total enrollment hit 792,133, up 28,726 students from 1986. Every type of school except the Texas State Technical Institute campuses and the private Baylor Medical School reported growth.

Twenty-seven of the 37 public senior universities showed student growth this fall, led by Prairie View A&M's 17.5-percent increase.

"It is noteworthy that Prairie View A&M has reversed a nine-year trend of declining enrollment and has succeeded in boosting enrollment by almost 18 percent while raising its admission or performance standards," said Higher Education Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth.

Overall, the 37 senior institutions reported 1987 enrollment of 368,775, up 2.6 percent, from last fall.

The headcount at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin rose 7.8 percent to 1,904 students this fall. Midland College (up 2.4 percent to 3,748) and Odessa College (up 12 percent to 4,938) and Howard County Junior College District (up 20 percent to 1,491) all reported student body growth.

Enrollment rose at the state's 48 public junior college district by 6.5 percent, at the private senior institutions by 1 percent and at the private junior colleges by 2.6 percent.

Texas' 16 public medical, dental and health-sciences schools reported a 0.7-percent head-count increase.

Jessica to undergo skin graft operation in future

From Staff Reports

Physicians determined Monday Jessica McClure will undergo a skin graft operation on her right foot after several more tissue cutting procedures, a hospital spokeswoman said.

The 18-month-old child spent one hour in surgery Monday as physicians cut away more dead tissue from the outer side and heel of her foot.

Midland Memorial Hospital spokeswoman Sue Ristum said today.

"The toes were not involved in the surgery yesterday" which lasted one hour, Ms. Ristum said.

Before physicians amputate the tips of her big and little toes, Jessica will undergo a skin graft operation to replace the tissue that has been cut away, Ms. Ristum said.

Skin used in the graft will come from her thigh, she added.

The graft, however, will not happen before several more tissue cutting procedures occur, the spokeswoman said.

The next such operation is tentatively scheduled for Thursday or Friday, Ms. Ristum said.

Thursday, a parade and rally will be held to honor the volunteers who helped rescue the girl who spent 36 hours trapped in a southwest Midland abandoned water well.

The child remained in serious but stable condition today, Ms. Ristum said.

North Carolina man gets seven years for drugs

From Staff Reports

A North Carolina man was sentenced to seven years in prison after he pleaded guilty to possession of marijuana after a Midland County Sheriff's Department sting operation last May.

Wayne Clyde McNeil, 41, pleaded guilty Monday to aggravated possession of marijuana before 238th State District Judge Vann Culp.

According to the sentence, McNeil's attorney, Tom Hirsch of Odessa, can petition the court to grant the convicted man probation after he has served at least 75 days in state prison.

McNeil and another man, Don Johnson of Midland, were arrested May 17 at Denny's Restaurant in Midland after they agreed to buy 82 pounds of marijuana from undercover officers.

Johnson probably will be sentenced next week, according to Midland County District Attorney Al Schorke.

According to the sentencing agreement, $80,000 cash, a 1984 Buick sedan, a 1982 Ford Bronco, and a .45-caliber handgun that were seized during the arrest were forfeited to the county.

The sheriff's department received part of the cash, and the vehicles. The rest of the seized money went to Schorke's office and the Midland County Adult Probation Department, the district attorney said.

City manager field narrows

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The search for a new city manager appears to be entering the final stages as the field of five candidates is expected to be narrowed to two or three today.

The names of the finalists could be announced today following an executive session this morning.

Southside councilman Jaime Rodriguez said early today he "wants to get it over with" and would favor making the final selection today, but believes the council will make an announcement at a news conference expected to be held Thursday.

The field of candidates reportedly was narrowed Monday during a special meeting executive session to further evaluate the remaining five applicants for the post vacated in early August by John Harrison, who resigned to become city manager of Waco.

The five remaining applicants from which the final two or three will be selected include: James B. Baugh, assistant city manager, Greensboro, N.C.; John Bramble, former city manager, Pueblo, Colo.; William R. Brown Jr., former finance director, Houston; Ernie Clark, city manager, Bryan, Texas; and Andrew McCown, city manager, Englewood, Colo.

All five were in Odessa last week for personal interviews with council members.

From Staff Reports

Volunteer rescue workers who labored successfully to rescue 18-month-old Jessica McClure from an abandoned water well in mid-October will be honored in a "Special Volunteer Recognition Dinner" at 7 p.m. Nov. 9 in the Holiday Inn Convention Center in Midland, according to Midland Salvation Army Major Harvey Harwell.

The event will be sponsored by

The Salvation Army's advisory board.

The recognition dinner is "a way of showing community appreciation for the heroism displayed by so many people in Midland," according to an advisory board member.

More than 200 volunteers will be guests of The Salvation Army board. Others may attend the fete, but will be required to pay a "nominal price" for their dinner.

"This is not a fund-raising event," said Harwell, who is commander of the Midland Salvation Army.

"It is a well-deserved hour of thanks to all of those people who gave so freely and stayed with the rescue operation hour after hour until Jessica was freed," Harwell said. "It was Midland's finest hour."

The Nov. 9 event will include the presentation of plaques and certificates to rescue volunteers.

3 jailed on drug charges

ODESSA — Two men and a woman arrested late Saturday on charges of manufacturing a controlled substance remained in the Ector County jail today in lieu of bonds totaling $225,000.

Police Spokesman Cpl. John McMahon said narcotics officers have inventoried suspected drugs and chemicals confiscated during a raid on a far West Odessa mobile home late Saturday that was prompted by an anonymous Crime Stoppers tip.

The contraband seized, McMahon said, included five pounds of suspected methamphetamines with an estimated street value of $85,000; one-half gallon of phenol 2 propanol worth about $3,500; plus other unspecified chemicals believed used in the manufacture of methamphet-amine. Loot from at least two burglaries also was confiscated in the raid.

Municipal Judge J.E. Weatherly set bond for Audrey A. Bayart, 23, 2408 Beechwood, at $75,000. Bond for Michael Rains, 35, 3003 Merrill, was set at $50,000 and bond for 27-year-old Gregory D. Ellsworth, 2408 Beechwood, was set at $100,000.

Crime Stoppers seeks data on shop's burglary

This week Midland Crime Stoppers is seeking information about the burglary of Hay's Automotive, 302 E. Ohio Ave.

During the night of Sept. 30, investigators say at least two people entered the building by breaking a window on the south side. One suspect was small enough to fit between the steel bars on the inside of the window, and once inside, handed a jack handle outside to the second suspect, who pried the bars apart and crawled through.

While the suspects were inside, they loaded several sets of mechanical tools, tool boxes, power tools and electronic equipment into a van that had been left at the shop for repairs.

The suspects got out by cutting the padlock on the inside of the north bay door, then drove away in the van.

Any information that leads to the arrest and indictment of the persons responsible for the burglary could be worth up to $1,000 cash, this week only.

Crime Stoppers in Midland can be reached at 694-TIPS, and in Odessa at 333-TIPS. Callers do not have to reveal their identity.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

Volunteers tend to give of their time to assist with causes they believe are worthwhile. Because of the way that we think — politically, socially and/or religiously — we, as volunteers, donate our money and time to those community efforts that we believe so strongly in.

Often we think of health organizations, like the American Heart Association. Some believe that we have to suffer from a heart disease in order to help. Not so; all of us have hearts. And it is a serious matter that we keep our hearts, our family's hearts, and our community's hearts healthy.

Besides the American Heart Association, other local groups such as American Diabetes Association, Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, Kidney Foundation, West Texas Epilepsy Association, American Cancer Society, Multiple Sclerosis and March of Dimes — all of which are Volunteer Center member agencies, are always in search of volunteers to help them help our community. And, volunteers do not necessarily have to be victimized by these diseases in order to care.

Surely all of us at one time or another have had special family members and/or friends that we have seen or suffered from diabetes, cancer, or of a heart attack. Dedicated some special effort in their memory. If not for any other reason, can serve to be immeasurable to the community we live in. If you do help, the people you help will not be the only ones who will feel better.

The following volunteer opportunities are available for you to assist with

■ Help conduct educational and community awareness presentations

Suspect in cop's killing may be tried as adult

MIDLOTHIAN (AP) — A district attorney says she plans to have one of two teen-agers suspected in the slaying of a police officer certified to stand trial as an adult, and will prosecute both teens on charges of capital murder.

"This is a very serious offense and I plan to prosecute it to the fullest extent of the law," Ellis County District Attorney Mary Lou Shipley said Monday.

The two Midlothian High School students, one 16 and the other 17, were charged late Monday with capital murder in the shooting death of officer George William Raffield Jr., who was posing as a high school student while investigating drug use and sales.

The 17-year-old, Richard Geoglein, who was held without bail today in the Ellis County Jail, was a newcomer to the high school, school officials said.

The juvenile, whose name was held in the Johnson County Juvenile Center in Cleburne. He is the son of a veteran Dallas police officer whom guidance counselors say was planning to drop out of high school.

Raffield, who authorities believe was killed after his identity was discovered, was found dead Saturday in a field eight miles south of Midlothian. He had been shot twice in the head with a .38-caliber revolver.

A juvenile hearing held Monday was closed to the media because of the minor involved. Ms. Shipley said authorities decided at the hearing to continue holding the 16-year-old at the juvenile detention center.

A 23-year-old Midlothian woman was released from Ellis County jail on bond after being charged with hindering apprehension and prosecution, a Class A misdemeanor. Vaughn said.

Midlothian students said they had suspected Raffield, 21, was planted at the school as an undercover narcotics officer.

David Swindell, 18, a former student who said he was acquainted with Raffield, said it was obvious the officer was trying hard to be accepted as a peer.

"When someone comes in new and they try to fit in so fast you know something is wrong," Swindell said.

But Texas Ranger George Turner said, "If anyone had known his cover was blown, he'd have been reassigned." Vaughn also said his department was not aware students had identified Raffield.

Turner, who was heading the investigation into the slaying, said his agency was looking into several unanswered questions, including whether an abandoned house known as a "satanist house" where some teen-agers allegedly gathered had any connection to Raffield's slaying. Raffield's fiancée, who asked not to be identified, said one student threatened the officer.

"One of those kids told him about a week ago, 'I know you're a narc and so does my dad. I should blow your brains out,'" the 19-year-old woman said.

Raffield's body was discovered after his fiancée notified authorities he hadn't shown up for a Friday night date.

"I got a call from him on Friday night at about 5 p.m. His investigator heard from him at 7 p.m. He said he was going to make the (drug) buy," she said. "It was the last anybody heard from him."

Raffield had worked for the police department since July.

State should not focus exclusively on prisons

AUSTIN (AP) — The state should make a firm commitment to parole and probation instead of selling bonds to build more prisons, says a criminal justice reform group.

"From the experience of other states...it has become abundantly clear that you cannot build out of the overcrowding problem," said Executive Director Charles Sullivan of Citizens United for Rehabilitation of Errants at a Monday news conference.

The group opposes a proposal on the Nov. 3 ballot to sell up to $500 million in general obligation bonds for prisons, youth corrections and mental health-mental retardation projects.

Supporters have said more prisons are needed to address a federal court order against crowding, but Sullivan said building new prisons is an ineffective way to reduce such crowding.

The state instead should use probation and parole, including such alternatives as community restitution, he said.

Lawmakers also should consider setting sentencing guidelines based on prison capacity, Sullivan said.

"We want the right ones in there (prison) and the right ones out."

MERIT

"I was surprised I got this award," she said last week. "I don't do well on tests," she said modestly.

"It didn't change my life, but it opened some doors for me."

After graduation, Staci plans to attend Texas A&M University and major in business administration before going on to law school.

"I hope to be a great judge some day."

From here, the six will attempt to become National Merit Finalists by meeting high academic standards, achieving the endorsement of their high schools, taking the Scholastic Aptitude Test and submitting information to the program about their school and community activities, personal interests and goals.

If they advance, they compete for 1,000 National Merit scholarships of $2,000. They also may be eligible for other corporate and university-sponsored scholarships.

In addition to these six bright students, 16 seniors from both high schools were commended by the National Merit Scholarship Program.

From MHS, the eight were Richard Chen, Stephen Dietz, Jonathan Hancock, James Hare, Kristin Knebel, Edward Schwartz, Ami Smith and Richard Thompson.

From LHS, the commended students were Katty Allison, Oliver Garcia, Gary Graham, Brandi Jordan, John Kramer, Elizabeth Link, David Pine and Samuel Sowers.

Bentsen tells Mexico not to move plants

EL PASO (AP) — The United States would suffer if Mexico decides to bolster the economy in the interior by locating twin plants there, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen says.

The United States needs to stress in upcoming economic talks with Mexico that U.S. support for the twin-plant concept might wane if Mexico allows more of the factories to be built away from the border, Bentsen said at a news conference Monday.

Twin plants, also called maquiladoras, are factories in which U.S.-made components are assembled by cheap labor in Mexico. The finished products are shipped back to the United States for distribution.

Bentsen, D-Texas, said he hopes U.S. negotiators bring the matter up in economic talks with Mexico next year. He said he is optimistic a framework for the negotiations will be approved by both sides next month.

The negotiations will center on trade issues involving textiles, food, steel, electronics and other subjects. Mexico has strict licensing and investment requirements that the United States considers to be trade barriers, Bentsen said.

Opposition to maquiladoras comes primarily from labor groups and northern states, which contend that the factories lure companies into moving their factories into Mexico.

Maquiladora supporters counter that companies that move to Mexico would otherwise move to Asia or South America.

"The point must be very strongly made to the Mexican government that we can continue to get the kind of political support necessary for maquiladoras, so long as they're located along the border," Bentsen said.

"There is considerable opposition from other parts of the country to maquilas," he added.

"And to be able to sustain the law as it is, we have to show there is substantial benefit to both sides of that border. And so long as the maquilas are located along the border, you're going to have a very substantial benefit on the U.S. side."

He said studies have shown that 40 percent of maquiladora wages are spent in the United States. More than 90 percent of the plants are along the border.

Bentsen, who is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, is one of five senators chosen to negotiate a deficit-reduction package with the House and the Reagan administration. He said he expects the talks to be productive.

Drug testing needed for some jobs, man says

AUSTIN (AP) — Mandatory drug testing might be needed for certain occupations in which public safety could be jeopardized by drug abuse, says the chairman of the Governor's Task Force on Drug Abuse.

"Where there are lives involved, I think it definitely ought to be mandatory," said chairman Paul Eggers of Dallas.

Eggers said he doesn't favor drug testing for all workers, only those whose jobs could affect public safety. He cited pilots, engineers and air traffic controllers as examples.

He also rejected criticism that mandatory drug testing might be an invasion of privacy.

"This attitude of it's invasion of privacy, that comes from the bleeding liberal hearts. We've got too many lives to protect," Eggers said.

"We cannot have this drug use in areas that endanger lives and say, 'Oh my, we just can't do anything with those boys and girls because we may invade their privacy. I think that's absolutely wrong," he said.

Eggers spoke Monday at a news conference called to announce that the Texas' War on Drugs had been named one of 20 outstanding anti-drug programs nationwide.

Eggers said one of the War on Drugs projects has been to work with business executives on how to handle drug abuse problems among their employees.

"The idea is not to get there and punish them, but to help them, get help for them. Help them find treatment, that's the first approach," he said.

Eggers said that many companies have started successful drug rehabilitation programs, adding that such treatment has many benefits.

"Where they have done this, the morale of the rest of the employees who don't use drugs goes up. And the executives of the business like it, the bottom line is their profits go up

Fort Worth District Fire Chief John Jones directs incoming units as flames leap from the roof of the Arlington Heights United Methodist Church Monday. The three-alarm fire did an estimated $1.5 million to the 35-year-old landmark.

Fire heavily damages Fort Worth church

FORT WORTH (AP) — Authorities say a fire caused $1.5 million damage to the roof of the sanctuary of Arlington Heights United Methodist Church. No injuries were reported although a few children who had attended the church's day care center Monday had to be evacuated. The fire erupted after most of the children had left for the day, church officials said.

The Rev. Thomas Q. Robbins, said the blaze won't stop the 2,000-member congregation from holding worship services. He said a tent erected near the sanctuary for a special service last weekend will be used until repairs can be completed.

Fire investigators said they are not certain what caused the fire and are attempting to determine if it was related to construction at the church. Lt. Rodney Swan of the Fort Worth Fire Department said preliminary damage estimates indicated the fire caused about $1 million to the building and about $500,000 to its contents.

Clements most disliked public figure, poll says

Associated Press

Gov. Bill Clements, his image tarnished by a record tax increase and an athletics pay-for-play scandal, received a 72 percent disapproval rating in a poll published today that showed he also fell from favor among many Republicans.

Of those Texans who have an opinion on Clements' performance, only 28 percent think he is doing a good or excellent job, the telephone survey conducted for the Dallas Morning News and the Houston Chronicle shows.

Sixty-one percent of Republicans who responded also gave Clements a poor or only fair rating.

Poll results were published in copyright stories in both newspapers.

The poll showed that Democratic Attorney General Jim Mattox, an expected candidate for governor in 1990, is well-known among voters. But the poll also showed his negative image to be higher than his fellow Democrats in the survey.

State Treasurer Ann Richards, another possible Democratic candidate for governor, is not as well-known as Mattox, but is more popular among those who know her, the poll suggests.

Both of Texas' U.S. senators, Republican Phil Gramm and Democrat Lloyd Bentsen, are well-known and well-liked, the poll shows.

The telephone survey is based on interviews with 1,017 registered voters and has a margin of error of plus or minus 3.5 percentage points. It was conducted by political scientists Richard Murray and Kent L. Tedin of the University of Houston's Center for Public Policy on behalf of the two newspapers.

Those surveyed were asked to rate the job performance of 11 national and state elected officials. Respondents were given a choice of rating their performance as excellent, good, only fair or poor.

Clements fared worst among politicians rated. Of the 96 percent who rated his performance, 4 percent said the Republican has done an excellent job since taking office in January and 24 percent said he was doing a good job.

"Gov. Clements was elected to solve problems, not to win popularity contests," his press secretary Reggie Bashur said. "When the problems are solved, the governor will be held in high esteem by the people of Texas."

Murray said responses suggest the public is angry at Clements because they feel he broke his pledge not to raise taxes and because of his involvement in the Southern Methodist University football scandal.

About 73 percent of those who had an opinion about Ms. Richards' performance indicated approval while Mattox scored a 56 percent approval rating in the poll, which was conducted from Oct. 11 to Oct. 20.

But Mattox was recognized by about 90 percent of those surveyed and Ms. Richards was known by 65 percent.

Dallas hospital cited for asbestos violations

DALLAS (AP) — A county hospital was cited twice for violating asbestos removal regulations but passed 36 other inspections over the past 15 months, a city official said.

Fred Barnes, manager of environmental control for the city's Department of Health and Human Services, said 740-bed Parkland Memorial Hospital appears to have complied with federal regulations during asbestos removal at the hospital except for the two violations.

The citations were for improper storage of asbestos-covered pipes in August 1986 and for failure to notify the city of one phase of the asbestos removal project in February 1987, Barnes said.

Several former and current employees have filed documents claiming employees and patients were exposed repeatedly to asbestos, a known carcinogen.

Documents from the county hospital dated Feb. 23, 1986, to Sept. 23, 1987, allege the substance was improperly handled, was disposed of in hospital dumpsters and that asbestos fragments were visible in areas accessible to hospital employees and patients.

Patients exposed to asbestos during the last 18 months include newborn babies at the hospital's third-floor nursery, according to the complaints.

Tom Geddie, acting director of community relations, said some of the complaints were made during exit interviews of former workers. "I don't know why they filed those charges," he said.

Don Higgins, Texas Department of Health regional industrial hygienist, said Parkland asked him to inspect its asbestos abatement program after it received the employee complaints.

Parkland is one of many buildings constructed during the 1950s with asbestos insulation.

Many of the complaints were filed by Jim Williams, a former quality assurance inspector and Charley Smith, a former engineering inspector. Williams and Ms. Smith were not listed in the telephone directory.

At least four Dallasites ignore child's pleas for help at park

DALLAS (AP) — An 11-year-old girl's cries for help were ignored by at least four bystanders when she was abducted and sexually assaulted behind a recreation center in a Dallas park, police and the girl's mother say.

The girl told police she was riding her bicycle on her way to visit a cousin about 3 p.m. Sunday when a man who appeared to be in his early 20s began jogging alongside her and ordered her to stop.

The girl tried to get away from him, but he grabbed her from behind and yanked her off the bicycle, police said.

At least four people were within earshot but refused to go to her aid as the man took her behind the Juanita Craft Recreation Center. Where the attack took place, the victim's mother said.

"They heard her and they saw her but they didn't do a thing to help," the victim's mother said. "They didn't do a thing about it. I don't understand how people could stand and let a thing like that happen."

Police investigator Devon Davis said police were unable to locate any of the witnesses.

"It sounds like several people at least acknowledged her but didn't make any move to help," he said.

The man grabbed the girl around the neck and forced her to push her bike along as they walked across a footbridge and through a vacant softball field. The girl told police she shouted for several people near the field to help her, but they did nothing.

She said that as she and the man rounded a tennis court next to the recreation center, she again cried out and caught the attention of a man practicing tennis shots, but the player did not respond.

The man dragged the girl behind the hedge, where he choked her and threatened to strangle her if she called out again. After raping her, he took her bicycle and pedaled away, police reports said.

"There were signs of an attack out there where she said it occurred," he said.

The child's mother said she is especially angry at the tennis player, who she believes could have used his racket to drive the apparently unarmed assailant away.

"All he did was look at her, and then he went back to playing tennis," the mother said. "I wish I knew who that man was, because I would like to ask him how he could do that."

The mother said she was so shaken by the daylight attack in a neighborhood park that she will not allow her children to play unaccompanied again.

"She doesn't go outside unless she goes with me," the mother said. "I have two other kids, and it's the same way with them now, too."

A&M gets grant to keep mammals' tissue on ice

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Vials of frozen tissues and other genetic material from thousands of mammals will be stored at Texas A&M University, where they can be studied more closely, officials say.

"With such material, scientists can study many of the same questions we had before about the species, but looking at them from a molecular and genetic perspective," said Paisley Cato, co-leader of the project.

The Texas Cooperative Wildlife Collection, housed at Texas A&M, won a $30,000 grant from the National Science Foundation to set up a prototype for the storage of the frozen tissue, blood and cultures of mammals' cells, said Ms. Cato, a Texas A&M museum specialist.

Specimens from more than 50,000 mammals, ranging from rare bats to South American marsupials, are stored at A&M, along with an estimated 8,000 frozen tissue cultures from about 67,000 amphibians and reptiles.

"We have the largest collection of vertebrates in Texas, the 10th largest university collection in the United States and about the third largest university collection west of the Mississippi River," Ms. Cato said.

About one-third of the collection comes from Texas, another third from Mexico and about 20 percent of the animals come from Central and South America, she said. Fish and birds are also represented.

"Frozen tissue and other materials that are preserved can help answer questions pertaining to the biological diversity of the natural world, the processes that result in new species or in extinction or the relationships between species," she said.

"This is leading us in a new direction in the field of conservation biology."

The grant won't be used for collecting specimens, but for cataloging and storing material already available in laboratories on campus where samples are in frozen storage at 80 to 120 degrees below zero Celsius.

"The funds will allow us to store these materials indefinitely," she said, adding that some 15,000 frozen specimens of mammals will be chronicled.

Orthopedic surgery may correct Salvadoran's limp

AUSTIN (AP) — Doctors at Austin's Seton Medical Center have performed a new method of orthopedic surgery to correct the severe limp of an 11-year-old Salvadoran boy who was injured in a mortar attack.

Dr. James Hood, who specializes in surgery on children, performed a "percutaneous epiphysodesis" on Marco Valle's left leg during a 45-minute operation Monday.

Hood said the operation entailed making a small incision into the youngster's healthy leg just below his left knee and removing "a line of growth cells."

"We operated on one of the growing centers to slow down the growth of his left leg," Hood said. "Over a period of four or five years, both legs will be more equal in length."

The boy was injured in 1983. Hood said the mortar blast caused extremely extensive damage to Marcos' right hip and leg, and caused the hip to stop growing. The damage, plus corrective surgery performed in El Salvador after the injury, resulted in the boy having a right leg 3 inches shorter than his left.

"He will always have a slight limp, which should get less and less noticeable as his legs equalize. He'll be able to lead a life where he can go out and make a living," Hood said.

Hood said that before the operation, doctors calculated how much Marcos would grow over the next few years.

Perry's Carpet Cleaning can ready your home for holiday entertaining

Get your home ready for the holidays with Perry's Carpet Cleaning Service.

Perry's can get your carpeting and rugs in "like-new" condition for all your holiday entertaining, and at a price you can afford.

Perry's Carpet Cleaning Service utilizes the Host Dry Extraction Carpet Cleaning Systems. The advantages of this system are numerous and three of the major benefits are no wetting of the carpet, reduced residue and drastically reduced drying time.

The Host Dry Extraction System uses no water to clean your carpet.

"This eliminates several destructive tendencies," said Steve Perry, co-owner. "Over wetting can be blamed for such problems as mold, mildew, yellowing, shrinkage and even seam splitting."

The Host system uses small "mini-sponges" filled with special detergents and solvents to break up and absorb dirt. A brush softly infiltrates the carpet with the "mini-sponges". After a saturating period (usually one hour) the granules are vacuumed up, leaving a clean, soft, fresh smelling carpet.

"Since there are no soaps to build up there are no residue problems," Perry explained. "Other methods can leave detergents in the carpet. These soaps build up over time, causing the nap of the carpet to stick together. The Host system fluffs the carpet, making it look like new. And the one hour drying time need not interfere with normal room use."

The Host system is also excellent for spot cleaning of high traffic areas. Steve and Troyce Perry have more than 15 years combined experience cleaning carpets and rugs in the Permian Basin. For a free estimate call 694-4265. Perry's Carpet Cleaning is perfect for both commercial and residential carpet cleaning.

"I especially enjoy helping people plan honeymoons, vacations and business trips," Mary said. "It's exciting to know that you're helping someone get where they want or need to be."

that Mary has planned for them. "We especially enjoy going to Mexico, and that's a trip I would recommend to anyone."

"To get the best prices and accommodations, the travel agent can better please the customer when they have time to research," explained Patsy Wellmaker, owner. "To avoid disappointment over holiday plans, reservations should be made three to six months in advance. For high (peak) periods of travel, such as spring break or summer vacations, five to six months in advance is recommended."

Adventure Travel, a full service agency, is open weekdays 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and Saturday 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Located at 16 Oakridge Square (corner of Wadley and Garfield), Adventure Travel has information on airline tickets, cruises, tours and rail for business travel, leisure, vacations and groups. Telex services are available to the public and parking is free.

More than a hotel room, but less than you'd expect to pay. Whether you are moving to a new city, having out of town guests, a summer intern or having employees in town for training, Balcor is the answer to your accommodation question.

A Balcor Suite is a fully furnished apartment with all the amenities of home. These include dishes, linens, a fully furnished kitchen (microwaves in most locations), local phone service, color TV with cable and HBO, washer and dryer, weekly maid service, iron and ironing board, complimentary reading material, and all utilities.

Balcor will even supply coffee, tea and the necessary condiments for residents who wake up and need that cup of coffee to get them going on the first morning.

"If we know someone is arriving late, we will make arrangements for them to get into their apartments and even leave the lights on for them," said Tami

Robertson, manager. "And, of course, the residents are welcome to use all the recreational facilities available at the apartment community." These can include swimming pools, tennis or racquetball courts, spas, gyms and weight rooms.

Balcor Suites has one and two bedroom apartments in five convenient locations around the city. These include apartments in Saddle Club Apartments, 5101 North 'A', Windscape and Windtree, 3600 N. Put your company in the Headlines on the Business & Industry pages Ever wished you could see your company's name in the headlines? You can! The Business and Industry pages, published each Tuesday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram, give you the opportunity to tell your story.

The Business and Industry pages offer advertisers a unique format. The articles and pictures on the pages let readers know what various businesses have to offer.

The pages are not just for one type of business. In fact, the pages feature consumer businesses, as well as commercially-oriented companies. There are furniture stores, travel agencies, restaurants, temporary services, home improvement experts, chimney sweeps and more that take advantage of this format. Both advertisers who offer services and those who are selling a product have been very satisfied with the response they have received by advertising on the Business and Industry pages.

What's really amazing is that your business can be on these pages for a remarkably reasonable rate. If you've never taken advantage of this unique advertising format, ask your account executive about the special introductory offer.

All it takes to begin advertising on the Business and Industry pages is a call to the retail advertising department at 682-5311. Ads on this page are set up on a contract basis. The number of articles and pictures an advertiser gets is determined by the size of the ad that is run each week on the pages. The advertiser pays only for the ad, thereby spreading the cost out over a 13 or 26 week period (the introductory offer varies from this).

Advertisers do not have to worry about writing the articles or taking the pictures themselves. The Midland Reporter-Telegram has an advertising feature writer that will take care of that. When possible your articles will be coordinated with special events, such as grand openings and seasonal sales.

Put your business in the headlines of the Business and Industry pages, call 682-5311 and ask for your account executive or the retail advertising department.

The Business and Industry pages give your business an opportunity to be featured in the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Call the retail advertising department at 682-5311 to get your ad on these pages.

Dimension Cable personnel support community through volunteer efforts

Dimension Cable offers 32 cable channels for the viewing entertainment of Midland area residents. But Dimension, like all businesses, is more than the product and service that they offer.

"We have many fine people working for us," stated Doug Smith, general manager. "We are proud of these people and the dedication they show through their activities in the community."

An example of that dedication was shown during the recent crises, when 18 month old Jessica McClure fell down a dry water well and rescue workers had to work 58 hours to bring her out.

"The city contacted us almost immediately to have some of our line moved so they could bring in drilling equipment," Smith explained. "Bill Bentley, a maintenance technician responded to that call and ended up staying the entire three days, until Jessica could be rescued."

Bentley, who has spelunking experience, was the first to go into the parallel hole rescue workers dug next to the well Jessica had fallen into.

"Bill made frequent trips down into that hole, until more experienced drillers could be brought in," Smith said. "We are very proud of Bill for the part he played in Jessica's rescue."

Other Dimension Cable employees who participated in the rescue attempt by procuring equipment and running generators included Carl Hill, project coordinator, Bill Moye and Stacy Hughes, both construction crew members, Robert Jordan, system auditor and Bobby Collins, an installer.

"We are very proud of these people and all the rescue workers who gave of themselves," he said. "That's something we can never measure or show enough gratitude for. Every one who was watching the rescue from the edge of their seats thanks these and all the rescuers for their hard work and dedication in saving Jessica McClure's life."

While the incident with Jessica brought forth a clear and prevailing call for help, Dimension Cable employees aid in community efforts all year long.

The company itself is a staunch supporter of the Chamber of Commerce, the United Way and the Midland Jaycees.

"In addition, Dimension Cable offers free public service announcements to not for profit organizations," Smith pointed out. "Aired on cable channel two, we feel that these announcements are just one of the areas where we can contribute to the development of the community."

In addition the management of Dimension is active in the Junior Achievement organization and their project of teaching high school students.

"Keith Burt, marketing manager and Dan Neiman, technical operations manager both teach classes and give extensive amounts of time in helping this very worthy organization," Smith said.

"Dan has also been an assistant cub master, a member of the Rotary Club and active in the United Way," he continued. "Keith is a Jaycee, active in Toastmaster and the United Way, as well as being a member of the Permian Basin Advertising Federation. This organization recently raised almost $10,000 to be used for scholarships."

Another member of the Dimension Cable management is Dixie DeWees, customer service manager. "Dixie has been active in the Midland Community Theater and is a member of the Sweet Adelines," Smith said. "She recently attended a convention for this group in Hawaii. The Sweet Adelines use their singing talent to entertain others, including hospital and nursing home patients."

"Besides these people, we also have employees who are active in different school organizations, Casa De Amigos and a variety of church and non-profit organizations," Smith said.

Smith is extremely active in a variety of community organizations. He is presently serving on the Midland Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors, and was chairman of the Small Business Council.

He is a member of the campaign cabinet for the United Way and chairman of the business and entertainment committee for this organization. Smith is also a Rotarian and a board member for Planned Parenthood.

Doug is a member of the Service Core of Retired Executives and the Active Core of Executives, which provides counseling for individuals and small businesses.

"Perhaps this is a side of Dimension Cable that people don't see," Smith stated. "We don't just talk about supporting the community, we go out and do it."

"Someone once said that there are two kinds of people in the world," Smith stated. "Leaners and lifters. One person out of six are lifters. We are proud of the lifters we have at Dimension Cable, who participate in the myriad of efforts going on in Midland every day."

Besides offering you quality viewing entertainment, the people who make up Dimension Cable are working to make our community a better place to live!

Get into the swim of things with skilled temporaries from The Secretarial Pool

Barbara Smith announces the opening of The Secretarial Pool, a full service temporary employment agency.

Mrs. Smith has more than six years of experience in placing temporary workers in the job market in the Permian Basin.

"The Secretarial Pool already has a large variety of temporary workers available to fill positions," Mrs. Smith said. "Word processor operators, file clerks, bookkeepers, clerical workers, receptionists, geological draftsmen, and secretaries are all ready to meet the needs of your business."

Temporary workers are carefully screened and tested before they are sent out to your place of business. Once they are in place, Mrs. Smith will make follow-up calls to ensure your satisfaction.

"I have been successful in placing temporary workers where they are the most effective and productive," Mrs. Smith pointed out. "I take great satisfaction in finding the right person for the right job. It is a thrill putting a person in a job where they can be successful and expedient and profitable for a business, too."

There is a definite balance between an employee and an employer, and finding and maintaining that balance is a specialty at The Secretarial Pool.

By nature, business is up and down. Keeping employees on the payroll when demand is down can be draining on the budget.

Today, many companies are utilizing temporaries to balance fluctuating business needs, to smooth transitions and to keep overtime down.

On the other hand, temporaries give managers the flexibility to respond to the exact situation without a constant hiring/layoff cycle which is costly in terms of dollars, morale and image.

Temporary workers can be especially appropriate during this time of economic recovery. If the staff has been trimmed to meet economic demands, completing special projects, handling seasonal fluctuations, even covering for sick or vacationing employees can be a hardship.

Skilled temporaries from The Secretarial Pool can be utilized to meet your company's particular needs for a day, a week or months. The Secretarial Pool is locally owned and operated. Call 682-5256 for more information or to place your order for a qualified, efficient temporary worker from The Secretarial Pool.

Barbara Smith, manager of The Secretarial Pool, has a complete listing of qualified temporary workers ready to meet the needs of your business. Call 682-5256 for more information or to place an order for a skilled temporary worker.

Buddy says he'll do it again

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Feisty Buddy Ryan says to tell Tom Landry he'll do it again if he gets the opportunity, and next time he hopes it's in Dallas.

Ryan, at his weekly news conference Monday, said he isn't concerned about having opened up a can of worms by deliberately running up the score Sunday on Landry and his Dallas Cowboys.

Ryan said Landry started it, and he isn't about to let the Dallas coach forget it.

Maybe it's all psychological drive to inflame his players. It reached some of them.

Defensive end Clyde Simmons commented, "I always felt you don't just want to win, you want to humiliate them. If you don't put them away and keep them down, it will come back to haunt you."

Wide receiver Mike Quick said, "we planned to do that all week. We said if we get the ball and we can score points, we're still going to try and put more on the board because of what they did to our replacement players."

Running back Keith Byars observed, "I don't look at it as running it up. We just played as hard as we could for 60 minutes. And they didn't."

On the other hand, tight end John Spagnola said, "Our coaches felt they had a score to settle with Dallas. And if the coach wants to call a play like that, so be it. We don't have veto power. We just follow orders."

The Eagles led Dallas 30-20 Sunday with less than a minute to play.

On the first two downs Randall Cunningham took the snap and knelt down to run out the clock.

On third down with 11 seconds remaining, Ryan ordered Cunningham to pass. He did, and pass interference was called on the play giving the Eagles a first down at the one. Keith Byars then scored as time ran out.

Ryan chortled. He had charged Dallas coach Tom Landry with running up the score against the Eagles three weeks earlier in a 41-22 Cowboys' victory in Dallas. And he had promised to get even.

"The can of worms was opened a couple of weeks ago," Ryan said at his weekly news conference Monday. "We just put a lid on it for another year."

No, he wasn't concerned that the incident might come back to haunt him.

"Anytime you go anywhere you have to fight for your life. We'll do it again down in Dallas next year if we get the opportunity."

He was informed that Landry said the person who does something like that has to live with himself.

"I can handle that," Ryan snapped.

Ryan was reminded that there was a practical side to scoring big in conference games since the number of points scored is one of the deciding factors in the event of a tie for a playoff spot.

"I know," he said. "And if those seven points put us in a playoff, that will be great. That will be winning with class. Otherwise we didn't. Anyway that wasn't the motive."

The Cowboys were incensed.

Linebacker Steve DeOssie described Ryan as a "pathetic, senile old man."

'Charley horse' has Dickerson sidelined

CLEVELAND (AP) — All-Pro running back Eric Dickerson stood idly on the sidelines during most of the Los Angeles Rams' 30-17 loss to the Cleveland Browns, watching a game that could have been quite different had he played more than a quarter.

Rams Coach John Robinson said Dickerson had a sore thigh. Dickerson agreed.

Yet it was apparent there was more to the benching of Dickerson than a charley horse.

"I want out. I mean it," Dickerson said after Monday's night game, repeating the trade demand he had voiced last week. "I really want to be traded, because I don't think I'm appreciated with the Rams, and I think I could go somewhere else where my skills would be appreciated."

"There's no doubt I can play. They can write bad articles about me, about me being greedy, whatever. But they can't ever say that I can't play the game of football."

Even in his brief appearance Monday night, Dickerson showed why he considers himself worth more than the $680,000 annual salary he is getting from the Rams. In the second quarter, he darted through the Cleveland line, broke right and sprinted to the end zone for a 27-yard touchdown. He finished with seven carries for 38 yards.

"I'll never play less than 100 percent if I play," he said. "When I play, I give 100 percent."

Robinson's uncertainty about Dickerson's commitment to the team, however, led the coach to start Charles White.

White was in the game at least twice when Dickerson might have made a difference.

The first time was in the first quarter, when the Rams drove to a first-and-goal at the Cleveland 1-yard line but failed to score on two runs before Jim Everett threw an interception.

The second was early in the fourth quarter when, trailing 30-17, Los Angeles had a fourth-and-1 at the Cleveland 15 but failed to convert as White ran up the middle for no gain.

"Eric had a Charley horse in his thigh," Robinson said. "It's been bothering him and he took a couple hits early on it, and at halftime our doctors looked at it and really felt like he shouldn't play. It's the kind of injury we felt would be progressive if he continued to play."

Dickerson conceded that the thigh had been bothering him for the past week, but said he believed the Rams could have won if he'd been able to play.

"Well, yes, whether you hurt or not, it's still difficult to be on the sidelines," Dickerson said. "I feel like we had a chance to win the game. If I had been in there, we might have run different plays."

Dickerson said he did not think he should be in the Rams' starting lineup against the San Francisco 49ers next Sunday.

"I don't feel like I'm a starter right now," he said. "I've got other things on my mind."

Dickerson pointed out that he shared time with Craig James while playing at Southern Methodist.

"I was a backup player," he said. "It didn't really bother me at the time."

Robinson, meanwhile, now finds himself with a slew of backfield problems. In addition to the Dickerson situation, he lost fullback Buford McGee to a torn Achilles tendon that will require surgery, and White injured his wrist and broke a finger.

"I don't think it would be proper to speculate on next Sunday's lineup," Robinson said when asked if Dickerson would start. "He's done everything we've asked of him. I thought he played very hard when he was in there. One of the problems we're having is hourly reports and hourly questions."

White said he gets along well with Dickerson but has no complaints about the extra playing time.

"I'm hoping he gets what he wants because he's definitely worth every cent — whatever he can get," White said. "A lot of people would love to be in my shoes, to be next to a great running back like that."

White, who was picked up earlier this year on a drug allegation after he had admitted to a drug problem while playing in Cleveland, said those problems are behind him now.

"I made some mistakes and hopefully I can go from there," White said. "I got away from the program I should have stuck with when I left here. They (his family) weathered through another storm."

Leaders remain same in top 20

Associated Press

The top six teams remain the same in the Associated Press college football poll while South Carolina made the Top Twenty for the first time this season and Michigan dropped out for the second time in three weeks.

Top-rated Oklahoma's 24-6 victory over Colorado earned the Sooners 40 of 60 first-place votes today and 1,176 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Nebraska, a 56-3 winner over Kansas State, received 13 first-place votes and 1,134 points while the other seven first-place ballots went to Miami of Florida, which defeated Cincinnati 48-10 and totaled 1,108.

Oklahoma, Nebraska and Miami are ranked 1-3 for the fifth week in a row. Last week, Oklahoma led Nebraska 42-12 in first-place votes and 1,179-1,134 in points.

Florida State and LSU were idle last weekend and received 986 and 952 points, respectively. Auburn remained No. 6 with 900 by defeating Mississippi State 38-7.

However, Clemson, No. 7 last week, fell to No. 14 after a 30-28 loss to North Carolina State. UCLA beat California 42-18 and moved up from eighth place to seventh with 842 points. Syracuse crushed Colgate 52-6 and climbed from ninth to eighth with 774 points and Notre Dame jumped from 10th to ninth with 732 by downing Southern California 26-15.

Florida made the Top Ten for the first time this year. The Gators, 11th a week ago, were idle but rose to 10th place with 612 points.

The Second Ten consists of Indiana, Georgia, Tennessee, Clemson, Ohio State, Alabama, Oklahoma State, Penn State, South Carolina and Michigan State.

Last week, it was Florida, Georgia, Tennessee, Michigan State, Indiana, Ohio State, Alabama, Penn State, Oklahoma State and Michigan.

South Carolina, 5-2, won its third game in a row, 34-12 over East Carolina, and made the Top Twenty for the first time since early in the 1985 season. Michigan, which fell out of the rankings two weeks ago but got back in last week, dropped out again by losing to Indiana 14-10.

The weigh in is at Twin Buttes City Park Marina area.

THE TEXAS Parks and Wildlife Commission has authorized the first hunting season for pheasant in Crosby County Dec. 12-27 and it is expected to be a boon for area hunters and landowners.

"Many hunters are expected to come here because our birds haven't been hunted before, and we are just 20 minutes from Lubbock International Airport and excellent motel accommodations," said T. Andy Vestal, county agent.

With more than 300,000 acres of cropland and 200,000 acres of rangeland providing habitat for pheasant, quail and dove, Crosby County has great hunting potential.

In the Lone Star Bass tournament at Lake Spence, Monty and Brian Bollinger, San Angelo, took first place with 17 black bass weighing 36.36 pounds. Bob Kirby and J. Don Scott, Midland, caught eight fish for 21.97 pounds and eighth place.

WILD TURKEYS are among game species doing very well this year, the TPWD says.

Data already had shown that white-tailed deer and quail are in boom cycles across the state, and new information shows Rio Grande turkeys also flourishing.

Texas leads the nation in turkey populations, and this year the state boasts an estimated population of some 571,000 birds, officials said.

Some hunters may be confused about the two special antlerless deer seasons this autumn and winter, says the TPWD.

THE SPECIAL early firearms seasons in five East Texas counties and the late season in nine South Texas counties both are designed to increase the harvest of the antlerless segment of the deer herd.

The late season has been authorized for Jan. 9-24 in Dimmit, Duval, Frio, McMullen, LaSalle, Maverick, Webb, Zapata and Zavala counties. The early East Texas season has been authorized for all of Polk, Trinity, Houston and Angelina counties, a Nacogdoches County south of State Highway 7.

that goal," said Don Jordan, chairman of the Greater Houston Chamber of Commerce. "We expect to get them all sold."

Officials said they already have commitments from 26 companies and individuals to purchase the boxes, which will be known as Columbia Suites. About 34 of the boxes will become available by next season with the remainder finished in time for the 1989 season.

The luxury boxes are among some $50 million in improvements to the Astrodome, which also will get an additional 10,000 seats and new artificial playing surfaces for baseball and football.

The Oilers and the Houston Sports Association, which owns the baseball Houston Astros and operates the county-owned Astrodome, have been involved in a dispute over a new lease to replace the agreement which expires at the end of this season.

"Jacksonville was a very fine and great offer," Adams said. "But when we were able to work out the necessary changes in the lease with the HSA, we conceded this was the type of lease we could live with. This was enough for me to make the decision to be in Houston."

"It's been a very trying and traumatic last four or five months to say the least," he added.

Oilers, Highsmith wait for clearance

HOUSTON (AP) — Attorneys for the Houston Oilers and first round draft choice Alonzo Highsmith continued talks Monday aimed at ending a court suit against the NFL and clearing the way for Highsmith to sign with the Oilers.

Hopefully, they'll present it to the judge prior to the hearing, and our expectations are that the lawsuit will be dropped and the injunction will be lifted," Oilers General Manager Ladd Herzog said Monday.

Herzog said the Oilers and Highsmith have agreed in principle on a contract and, although Herzog would not release terms, Highsmith will earn a reported $2.5 million over four years.

Attorneys for Highsmith obtained a temporary injunction in a Miami court room last week, declaring Highsmith a free agent and charging the Oilers and the other 27 NFL teams with collusion in diminishing Highsmith's value.

McMahon a smash hit in return to NFL stage

By JOE MOOSHL

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Anything else obviously wouldn't do for Jim McMahon, like coming into an ordinary situation under ordinary circumstances.

It seems that destiny decrees everything be eventful where McMahon is involved, and the Chicago Bears' quarterback lives and thrives on it.

"Good, clean living," said McMahon Monday after another of his dramatic returns when he rallied the Chicago Bears to a 27-26 victory over Tampa Bay Sunday in his first appearance in a regular game in almost a year.

"I like to be put into situations where I can win or lose a game," said McMahon. "I've won more than I've lost. I'm comfortable with that feeling."

Coach Mike Ditka said he would have preferred that McMahon make his return under less strenuous circumstances. The Bears trailed throughout and were behind 26-14 before he got things rolling.

But Ditka did admit that the outcome was "good for McMahon and all the people who doubted his talents."

It also turned out to be an excellent test for McMahon physically. There were no aftereffects, no pain in the surgically repaired right shoulder that sent him to the sidelines last Nov. 23 and kept him on the injured reserve list this season until he was activated for Sunday's game.

But he was wheezing because of a chest cold and sipping hot coffee to open the pipes so he could speak.

"My little boy had it Friday and my wife and daughter also had it," said McMahon of the cold. "Now, I'm finally getting it."

He wasn't at all surprised by his performance Sunday, when he took over in the second half and completed 17 of 24 passes for 195 yards.

He culminated one drive by diving for a touchdown and completed six passes for 71 yards in the winning drive that ended with a 6-yard pass to Neal Anderson, who vaulted into the end zone.

IT ALMOST rivaled the 1985 game at Minnesota, when he was injured but came off the bench to throw touchdown passes on his first two plays, turning a 17-9 deficit into a 33-24 victory.

"That one was bang-bang-bang," McMahon said. "This one took a little longer."

But this one came at the end of an 11-month layoff that included rotator cuff surgery on his right shoulder in December.

While some thought that might be the end of his career, he vowed he would be ready for the season opener against the champion New York Giants.

"That wasn't realistic, he was to learn, and he amended it to the seventh week of his injury-filled sixth season.

"Frustrating," he said of the lay-off. "But I'm fine now."

What about reaching peak efficiency?

"I feel I'm there now. I threw the ball well yesterday," said McMahon, carrying packs of ice on his shoulder and his right knee, where he suspects he has a mild case of tendinitis.

McMahon claimed his only problem was "trying to remember what plays go with what formations. If we'd stop using all that movement and motion, it'd be easy."

McMAHON, WHO will start next Sunday against Kansas City and every game as long as he's healthy, said he might be out of shape a little.

"I could be in better shape as far as running and my wind go," said McMahon. "If I had to play the whole game yesterday, I don't know if I could have lasted. But I didn't have to run that much."

McMahon was pleased with the result at Tampa Bay.

"We're back on track," he said. "We didn't play all that well yesterday but we won. That's the sign of a good team that ends up winning some how."

Cowboys waive 12 subs

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys waived 12 replacement players on Monday, including defensive tackle Mike Dwyer, a big fan favorite who was on the program cover of the NFL team's home opener during the strike.

Dwyer and any other player who participated in all three replacement games will be eligible for a half-share of playoff money.

"I knew this day could be coming and I gave it a good shot," said Dwyer, a 6-3, 280-pounder who was considered too short by some for the position he played.

Others cut included quarterback Loren Snyder, safety Tommy Haynes, cornerbacks Alex Green, and Bill Hill, fullback Gerald White, wide receivers Chuck Scott and Cornell Burge, linebacksers Dale Jones and Jeff Hurd, offensive lineman Steve Cioviski, and tight end Rich Borresen.

SEATTLE — The Seattle SuperSonics matched the reported $4.1-million, four-year offer sheet that center Alton Lister got from the Phoenix Suns last week.

The 7-foot Lister, who set a club-record last season with 180 blocked shots for, will play in the Sonics' final two exhibition games.

DETROIT — Vinnie Johnson ended his holdout with the Detroit Pistons just in time for Detroit's NBA exhibition game at Madison Square Garden by signing a multiyear agreement.

The 6-foot-2 star guard will earn an average of $650,000 per season during the life of the three-year agreement and will have an option on a fourth year.

FOOTBALL

LITTLETON, Colo. — Colorado State running back Scott Whitehouse, who rushed for a career-high 168 yards last weekend, was named Western Athletic Conference offensive player of the week.

Defensive player honors went to Air Force tackle Chad Hennings, who had eight tackles in the Falcons' 35-7 victory over Texas-El Paso Saturday.

Whitehouse, a junior, was hospitalized three days last week with a staph infection, before joining the lineup in CSU's 35-13 win over New Mexico.

East Texas State quarterback Rayce Schecht and linebacker Alondra Johnson of West Texas A&M have been named Players of the Week in the Lone Star Conference.

Schecht is a 6.2, 200-pound junior from Dallas Lake Highlands. He completed 23 of 41 passes for 371 yards and five touchdowns with no interceptions in his team's narrow loss to WTSU Saturday in Commerce.

Johnson, a 5-11, 265-pound senior from Garfield, Calif., was named LSC Defensive Player of the Week for the second time this season. He blocked two punts and recovered a fumble in his team's 35-14 win over East Texas State.

ROCKEY

NEW YORK — Washington Capitals coach Bryan Murray and NHL lineman Ron Anselmino have been suspended for three games for an office incident during the period of a game on Oct. 11.

The incident took place at the end of the first period of the Capitals' game with Buffalo when Murray confronted the officials in the area leading to the dressing room, then again in the tunnel and officials were returning to the ice, the league said. The second confrontation also involved a pushing scene.

Don't strive for the impossible when there's a reasonable alternative chance elsewhere. Put together the clues at your disposal, and you might be surprised at the solutions you come up with.

North-South arrived at four spades because of a misunderstanding. South intended his bid of three spades as preemptive; North took it as invitational and, holding two aces and the jack of trumps as a kicker, was delighted to accept.

West led his fourth-best diamond, East won the king and shifted to a club. How would you tackle the hand?

If you were shown the North-South hands in a vacuum, the correct play would be to try to drop the queen of trumps in two rounds, then resort to the club finesse for your contract if the queen didn't come down, or for an overtrick if it had. Is that still your best line?

To answer that question, let's see what we know about the hand.

From the bidding, we know East did not have enough to open in third seat. From the play to the first trick, he started with the ace-king of diamonds, and probably the jack as well. He is also sure to have one of the two missing top heart honors, because West didn't lead one. Had East held either black queen, he would surely have opened the bidding.

Therefore, taking the club finesse is bound to lose. And, since you know East cannot hold the queen of spades, unless it's singleton, you have a better line than trying to drop the lady. Win the king of clubs, cash the king of spades and, despite the fact that you have nine trumps, finess the jack at trick three! You shouldn't be at all surprised when that wins the trick and your contract is home when East shows out. Next, try to drop the queen of clubs for an overtrick. Success!

Clark makes Music Walk of Fame

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Dick Clark, host of television's "American Bandstand" for three decades, said his inclusion in the city's Walk of Fame of music was special since he is not a musician.

The Philadelphia Music Foundation unveiled a bronze plaque Monday on the Walk of Fame outside the Academy of Music, where Frankie Avalon and Chubby Checker joined Clark.

Clark, whose show introduced countless musicians and dance steps to the nation over the years, said his place on the walk was special "as a non-musician because you accept on behalf of all of us who love music and can't perform it."

It was the 11th plaque honoring a musical figure with Philadelphia roots.

Clark took over as host of the local "Bandstand" show in 1956, the next year selling the idea to ABC for "American Bandstand."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When fans of singer Barry Manilow spent a night outside a Hollywood box office to get a good place in line for tickets, the theater tried to cooperate.

"We had people here on Friday wanting to start a line but we said come back Sunday night," Pantages Theater manager Dixie Burton said Monday, when tickets went on sale at 10 a.m.

But Sunday night, the theater left its marquee lights on "so they wouldn't be in the dark," and arranged for overnight security, Ms. Burton said. The fans "set up little tables, had picnics and played cards all night," she said.

Manilow has scheduled eight performances at the Pantages between Dec. 25 and Jan. 3.

ATLANTA (AP) — CNN owner Ted Turner threw a bash to boost the morale of Atlanta's much-maligned cab drivers but admitted he did it to perk up his own business, too.

The taxi industry has come under fire from city politicians who say cabs are often unclean and drivers unqualified.

Turner, who also owns WTBS, the Atlanta Braves and the Atlanta Hawks, said one purpose of Monday's party was to expose cabbies to the amenities of CNN Center — his new headquarters that has retail space, offices and The Omni Hotel — so drivers could recommend the complex to tourists.

"If you get time off, bring a customer down here to show him what we've got," Turner said. "If that doesn't work, tell them we've got shops to rent."

CLEVELAND (AP) — The City Club of Cleveland has figured out how to get the most out of the time set aside for a speaker on its 75th anniversary program: five-minute talks by eight prominent Americans.

Invited to speak at Wednesday night's dinner were economist John Kenneth Galbraith, New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, former U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, Surgeon General Dr. C. Everett Koop, lawyer Eleanor Holmes Norton, Mesa Petroleum Co. chairman T. Boone Pickens, Wall Street financier Felix G. Rohatyn, and feminist Gloria Steinem.

Alan Davis, a part-time church minister who is the executive director of the club, dedicated to free speech and expression of ideas, said Monday that the speakers were intrigued by the five-minute limit for their talks on creative ideas for the future.

NEW YORK (AP) — Beverly Sills, general director of the New York City Opera, was inducted into the Working Woman magazine hall of fame, which honors women for business achievement and creativity.

"Her voice once drew millions to the New York City Opera," said Anne Mollegen Smith, editor-in-chief of Working Woman, before the second annual awards ceremony Monday. "Now her managerial talents keep audiences coming and the opera thriving."

Also honored were Beatrice Coleman, president of Maidenform Inc., the intimate apparel company; Gertrude R. Crain of Chicago, board chairman of Crain Communications Inc.; and June-Clifford Mason, of Montgomery, Ala., president of National Industries Inc., an auto-parts company.

LONDON (AP) — John Walsh, director of the J. Paul Getty Museum in Malibu, Calif., was noncommittal when asked if he would bid for Vincent van Gogh's "Irises" at auction in New York next month.

Walsh, who has about $100 million a year to buy works of art, left the question hanging at a lunch given Monday by London arts reporters.

"It's a wonderful picture and we've talked about it endlessly," he said. "I don't know who the buyer is going to be — what can you do in a market where you get serious estimates of $20 to $25 million?"

"Irises," painted in 1889, will be sold by Sotheby's in New York on Nov. 11. The firm suggests it may become the second most expensive picture ever, following the record $39.8 million paid by a Japanese insurance company for van Gogh's "Sunflowers" at Christie's in London last March.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country singer Kathy Mattea says that when she walks down the aisle with songwriter Jon Vezner on Valentine's Day it will be a strictly private affair.

Miss Mattea, whose songs include "Walk the Way the Wind Blows" and "Love at the Five and Dime," insisted that the wedding would be small.

"I have to perform for cameras all the time," she said, according to Monday's Nashville Banner. "I want this to be different. Private."

Martha Moore, publicist for Polygram Records, confirmed Monday that the wedding date has been set. Ms. Moore said the 28-year-old bride-to-be is looking for a place in Nashville to hold the event.

Dollar steady

LONDON (AP) — The dollar steadied on currency markets today while investors hoped the global stocks crash will prompt more forceful government action to stabilize currencies, dealers said. Gold was weaker.

Traders said the dollar appeared to land on firmer ground after sharp falls in recent days that included a five-year low against the British pound Monday.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.15 yen to a closing 142.00. Later, in London, it was quoted at 141.95 yen.

Other dollar rates at mid-morning, compared with late Monday:

—1.4640 Swiss francs, up from 1.4625

—1.9960 Dutch guilders, up from 1.9950

—1.282.75 Italian lire, unchanged

—1.3185 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3135

GOLD

Gold traded quietly at lower prices, reacting to the stock exchange recoveries and the steady dollar, dealers said.

The metal opened in London at a bid price of $473.75 a troy ounce, compared with late Monday's $476.00. At mid-morning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $473.45.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $2.30 to close at a bid $472.88.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $7.42 a troy ounce, down from Monday's $7.47.

Wall Street struggles to regain balance

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The financial storm on Wall Street has lent new urgency to an old and basic issue: What is the best system for trading in stocks?

Right now there are two different setups, known as "specialist" and "dealer" systems, that operate side by side in the American securities marketplace.

The specialist system has a long history at the New York Stock Exchange, the smaller American Stock Exchange, and at regional stock exchanges around the country.

In this arrangement an individual or firm, called a specialist unit, stationed on an exchange trading floor acts as a focal point for buy and sell orders in stocks designated by exchange authorities.

The chief exponent of the dealer system is the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD), which oversees the over-the-counter market where stocks of companies not listed on an exchange are traded.

In over-the-counter trading, dealers are free to compete among each other for business in stocks of their own choosing. There is no central trading floor; instead, the market is linked by telephones and computers.

Both systems have been subjected to a massive stress test in recent days.

Under those extraordinary conditions, securities industry leaders say the markets stood up remarkably well.

Nevertheless, complaints, criticisms and questions have been raised. Critics of the specialist system have long contended that the specialists, especially at the NYSE, have too much power.

NYSE specialists are by no means immune to competition, since there are facilities that can permit a specialist at, say, the Midwest Stock Exchange to outbid them for a trade on certain stocks. Some firms also handle large orders for NYSE stocks independently in what is known as the "third market."

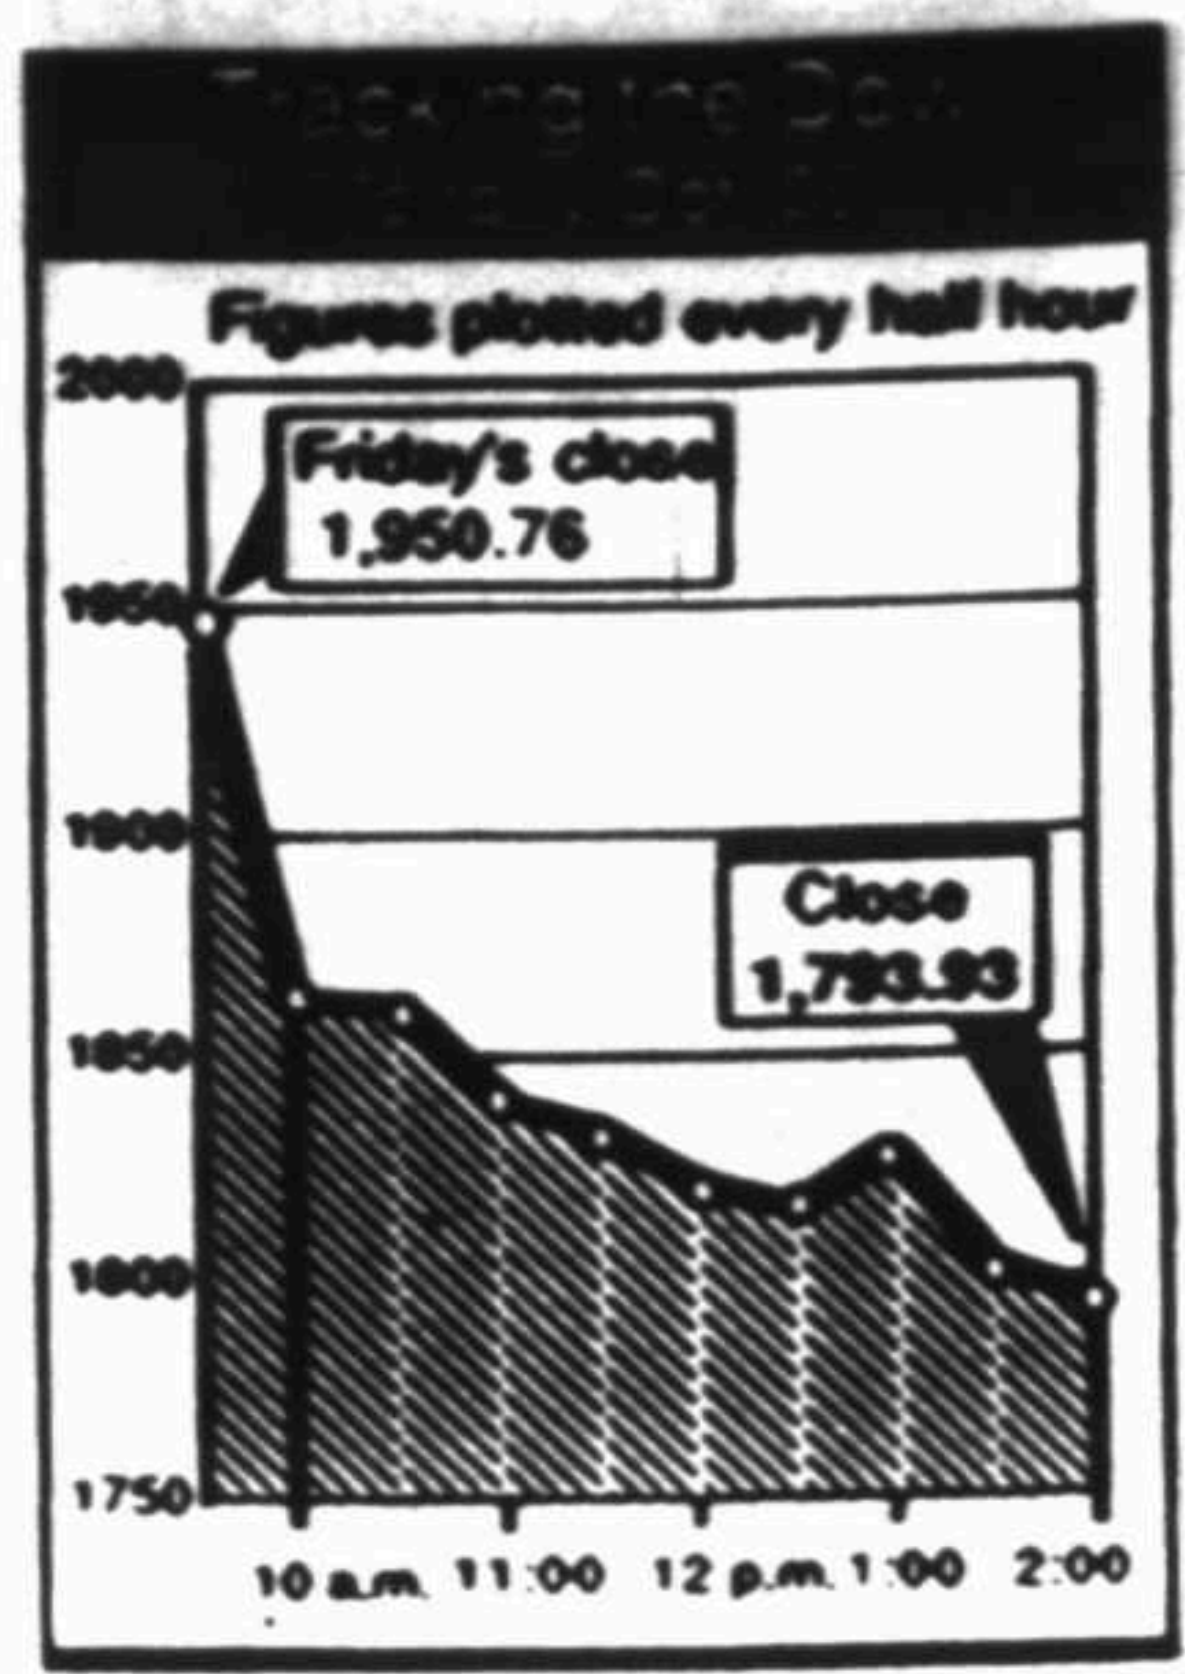

Still, NYSE specialists retain the great majority of business in their stocks. The NASD, which has been bidding to challenge the Big Board in recent years for preeminence among the various markets, contends that its competitive dealer system gives investors better prices and can provide a greater cushion of capital for the market in a given stock.

Joseph Hardiman, NASD's president, said when he took over the job last summer, "I believe the specialist system will eventually wane and disappear."

But some Wall Streeters contend that when the heat was on last week, a good many over-the-counter dealers, who unlike specialists are not formally required to absorb orders no one else will take, became hard to reach.

The Wall Street Journal quoted John Phelan, the NYSE's chairman, as saying, "A lot of them knocked their phones off the hook."

Gas shortage forecast gains steam

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The repeated warnings of Texas Railroad Commissioners that Texans could face a shivering winter if steps are not taken to reverse natural gas industry trends gained added credibility on Monday.

Commissioner John Sharp revealed a TRC report which documents the average 4-percent-per-year decline in gas production in the state over the past dozen years; the increase in low-producing oil wells; and — most important to new exploration — the rise in production cost and drop in selling price of natural gas.

"We're on a treadmill," Sharp said. "We must drill more and more wells to meet our gas supply needs, yet our study shows we're losing the race."

Most industry analysts say current gas supplies can meet average daily needs. However, Sharp said, that surplus disappears during cold snaps like the 1983-84 winter when demand exceeded supply by 3 billion cubic feet a day for nine days. "We were lucky then, a lot of businesses were closed for the holidays or we would've had gas shortages," he said.

"Today we estimate maximum gas deliverability is down to 11.7 billion cubic feet a day, 13 percent less than during the 1983 crisis."

Robert Finley, acting deputy director of the University of Texas' Bureau of Economic Geology, agreed with Sharp that the problem isn't underground. "The point to remember is that there is abundant gas in Texas," Finley said.

"It's truly a question of providing the right kind of economic incentive for producers to develop those reserves."

As an example, Finley said, high-pressure gas reserves 8,000 to 12,000 feet below the surface have the potential to supply large quantities of gas if tapped. But those wells are "risky and costly" to drill, especially with gas prices at $1.40 per million cubic feet.

Similarly, new logging tools could be used to recomplete existing wells, tapping pockets of gas drillers originally passed by. Those are "potentially profitable" reserves, he said, but "a very close economic call for the producers."

"A lot of it at this point is a price problem," Finley said.

The TRC study, which says Texas gas production capability is "on a collision course with the future," points out that annual production has declined from about 7 trillion cubic feet in the early '70s to about 4.3 trillion cubic feet last year. Since 1946, the average annual production of each Texas well has declined by 75 percent, while the number of producing wells has increased 800 percent.

"We're depending more and more on marginal wells for our gas, and that's a risky bet," Sharp said.

The study predicts that producers must complete at least 5,000 new wells this year to turn the situation around, but projections show drillers will reach only about half that number. At current rates, total gas production in 1990 will be 3.4 trillion cubic feet, 19 percent less than last year.

"This winter may be bad," Sharp warned, "but the real critical problems will be two to three years from now."

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Interest rates continue two-week freefall

NEW YORK (AP) — Interest rates entered the second week of a nearly uninterrupted plunge, as Wall Street took another tumble and nervous investors continued to run for cover in the bond market.

The Treasury's closely watched 30-year bond soared 2 points Monday, or $20 for every $1,000 in face value. Its yield, which moves inversely to its price, fell to 8.90 percent from 9.09 percent late Friday.

Monday's rise came on the heels of a spectacular advance last week, which saw the 30-year bond climb nearly $100 for every $1,000 face value.

Consumer spending drop may be dark omen

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' consumer spending fell a sharp 0.5 percent last month, the first decline since January, the government reported, as analysts worried that the stock market's steep plunge will force Americans to close their wallets even tighter.

The Commerce Department reported Monday that the spending drop was accompanied by a 0.7 percent rise in personal incomes, the biggest advance since February.

Analysts said the September setback was likely to be followed by even worse news in the months ahead because of the jolt to consumer confidence from the huge declines in the stock market.

President enacts total ban of Iranian imports

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan moved to ban all U.S. imports from Iran, citing "the continued and increasingly belligerent behavior" of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's government in the Persian Gulf.

Reagan also said Monday he was directing the departments of State and Treasury to bring about a ban on the export to Iran of 14 broad categories of U.S. products "with potential military application."

The punitive economic measures follow the military retaliation Reagan ordered last week against Iran after a Sukkorm missile strike against a U.S.-flagged Kuwaiti oil vessel in Kuwaiti waters.

Durable goods orders up last month

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders to U.S. factories for "big ticket" durable goods rose 1.1 percent in September, the first increase since June, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said orders for durable goods, items expected to last three or more years, climbed to $107.8 billion last month to register the first improvement since a 2 percent increase in June.

The September increase in factory orders followed a decline of 2.4 percent in August and no improvement in July.

For the first nine months of this year, new orders have risen 6.4 percent over the same period in 1986 as American manufacturers have continued to benefit from a weaker dollar, which has boosted sales of U.S. products overseas.

A strong manufacturing sector is considered a key to keeping the country out of a recession since consumer spending is likely to be lower in the months ahead because of the collapse of the stock market.

Orders for defense equipment fell 4.5 percent in September to $9.08 billion, the third consecutive monthly decline.

Without the weakness in defense, durable goods orders would have risen 1.7 percent last month, compared to a 2.2 percent decline in the civilian categories in August.

The key category of non-defense capital goods suffered a 4.5 percent drop last month following a 4.2 percent decline in August. This category is considered a good barometer of business sentiment because it reflects plans to expand and modernize production facilities.

Analysts had been concerned that business capital spending could weaken in the months ahead because of rising interest rates. However, the Federal Reserve has been aggressively loosening credit conditions since the stock market plunge and rates have begun to fall again.

By category, orders for primary metals showed the largest increase in September, a 9.7 percent rise which pushed demand to $10.4 billion, the first time orders have been above $10 billion in any month since early 1984.

Orders for electrical machinery increased 1.2 percent to $19.5 billion while orders for non-electrical machinery rose 0.5 percent to $18.5 billion.

The largest decline was in transportation equipment, which fell 1.7 percent to $26.6 billion, the fourth consecutive monthly setback in transportation. In September, a decline in orders for aircraft and shipbuilding more than offset an increase in motor vehicles and parts. Shipments of durable goods rose 3 percent in September to $107.3 billion, the largest increase in shipments since a 4.3 percent rise in February.

Exxon earnings flat while many others take off

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's largest oil company, Exxon Corp., Monday reported flat profits on higher petroleum prices the third quarter. Some smaller competitors' earnings soared.

Exxon's net income edged up 0.9 percent from the corresponding period a year earlier. Second-ranked Mobil Corp.'s net income fell 3.9 percent when a third-quarter 1986 charge is discounted, and sixth-ranked Shell Oil Co.'s earnings soared to triple those in the year-ago period.

Occidental Petroleum Corp., Atlantic Richfield Co., Unocal Corp. and the Williams Companies Inc. also reported higher profits in the quarter.

Pennzoil Co. and Total Petroleum of North America Inc. reported third-quarter profit declines from a year earlier. Earlier Phillips Petroleum Co. and Amoco Corp. both reported higher operating profits during the quarter.

New York-based Exxon's third quarter net income in the three months ending Sept. 30 totaled $1.07 billion, or 75 cents per share, compared with $1.06 billion, or 73 cents per share, a year earlier.

Revenue during the quarter totaled $21.93 billion, up from $17.19 billion in the year-ago quarter. Crude-oil prices averaging $6.50 per barrel above the third quarter of 1986 helped push Exxon's exploration and production earnings higher, said Chairman L.G. Rawl.

"However, refined product margins continued to be depressed, as product price increases have not kept pace with higher crude costs," Rawl said. "Consequently, earnings from refining and marketing operations were far short of a year ago and were below acceptable levels."

Capital and exploration expenditures grew to a total of $1.88 billion, up $481 million from the year-ago quarter. "The major factor in this increase was the acquisition of producing interests in Australia, which included $885 million of capital spending," Rawl said.

For the nine months ending Sept. 30, Exxon reported net income of $3.29 billion, or $2.31 a share, down 13.3 percent from $3.88 billion, or $2.68 a share, in the corresponding period last year.

Revenue during the nine months totaled $61.53 billion, up from $57.41 billion in a year earlier.

Second-ranked Mobil, based in New York, reported net income of $319 million, or 77 cents per share, in the third quarter, compared with $182 million, or 45 cents per share, in the corresponding period a year earlier.

However, discounting a $150 million one-time charge in the third quarter of 1986 from the loss on the sale of a subsidiary, Mobil's net income declined in the third quarter by 3.9 percent from a year earlier.

Earnings from Mobil's petroleum operations declined by 12 percent to $397 million, the company said, as lower refining and marketing earnings, especially in Europe, offset the strength in oil prices.

Third-quarter revenue totaled $14.44 billion, compared with $11.31 billion a year earlier. In the nine months ending Sept. 30, Mobil's net income totaled $875 million, or $2.13 per share, down 27.3 percent from $1,200 million, or $2.95 per share, a year earlier.

Revenue in the nine months totaled $40.76 billion, compared with $37.37 billion in the year-ago period.

Houston-based Shell's third-quarter net income totaled $429 million, more than three times the $139 million reported a year earlier.

"Major factors in the improvement were a partial recovery of crude oil prices from a seven-year low, and a record performance in our chemical business," said John F. Bookout, Shell president.

A subsidiary of Netherlands-based Royal Dutch Shell Group, Shell Oil is not listed on the stock exchanges and does not report earnings per share.

Third-quarter revenues totaled $5.65 billion, compared with $4.01 billion in the corresponding period a year earlier. For the nine months, Shell's net income totaled $798 million, up 26.6 percent from $628 million a year earlier.

Revenue totaled $15.33 billion, up from $12.84 billion the first nine months of 1986.

Los Angeles-based Occidental, the nation's seventh-largest oil company, reported third-quarter net income of $46 million, or 20 cents per share, up 17.9 percent from $39 million, or 12 cents per share, in the corresponding period last year.

Sales totaled $4.22 billion, compared with $3.72 billion a year earlier.

This year through September, net income totaled $302 million, or 90 cents per share, up 25.5 percent from $161 million, or 60 cents per share, a year earlier.

No. 8 Atlantic Richfield, based in Los Angeles, had net income of $315 million, or $1.71 per share, in the third quarter, more than triple the $102 million, or 56 cents per share, earned in the corresponding period a year earlier.

Revenue for the quarter totaled $4.4 billion, up from $3.53 billion a year earlier.

For the nine months, net income totaled $894 million, or $4.82 per share, up 60.4 percent from $551 million, or $3.08 per share, the first nine months of 1986.

Nine-month revenues totaled $12.24 billion, up from $11.37 billion in the year-ago period.

Unocal, based in Los Angeles and ranked 13th among the major oil companies, reported net earnings of $28.9 million, or 25 cents per share, in the third quarter, up 32.6 percent from $21.8 million, or 19 cents per share, a year earlier.

Third-quarter revenue totaled $2.59 billion, up from $1.81 billion a year earlier.

Unocal reduced its long-term debt by $145 million to $4.8 billion during the quarter, said Chairman Fred L. Hartley. "We have made significant progress in restoring our balance sheet and financial flexibility to weather adverse market conditions," Hartley said.

DEAR ABBY

Poem written by many 'authors'

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR READERS: Is plagiarism really the best form of flattery? In any case, it's nothing new. Montaigne, the 16th-century French essayist, had this to say about "borrowing" literary quotations: "I have gathered a bouquet of other men's flowers, and only the ribbon that binds them is my own."

Van Buren

A reader signed "Going Crazy in Reno" sent the poem that began "Do not stand at my grave and weep," and asked me to help her find the author. I printed her letter, and more "authors" surfaced than I can mention here. For example:

DEAR ABBY: A very good friend of mine sent me your column from The Patriot Ledger in Quincy, Mass. May I modestly state that I am the author of the poem in question. I am 77 years old and have been a poet and journalist for the last 35 years. I wrote that poem in 1978 and titled it "Afterwards." John Wayne requested in his will that my poem be read at his graveside. I do hope that this will clear up the mystery of the origin of that poem. — NEAL S. TOOMEY, LOWELL, MASS.

DEAR ABBY: The poem sent to you by "Going Crazy in Reno" was written by me in 1971 while on an extended holiday in America. I gave it to the president of the Reno Chamber of Commerce while visiting Nevada. That poem was tentatively named "A Clown's Eulogy." Needless to say, I am amazed that my work was used in the manner you have stated, and also very pleased that I have left something behind me besides bones. — WILLIAM ARTUS, VANCOUVER ISLAND, BRITISH COLUMBIA

DEAR ABBY: In regards to the poem sent in by "Going Crazy in Reno": The title is "I Am Not There," and I am the author. I composed the poem at Mr. Wayne's request in 1977. Yours in life. — ROBERTA BRAUN

DEAR ABBY: The poem "Do not stand at my grave" was written by Father Joseph Mohr of Obersdorf, Austria, in 1819 when his brother, Elbert Mohr, was laid to rest. This beautiful poem was also read at another Mohr family member's funeral in Nuremberg, Germany, in 1899, and has become a popular eulogy since then. I am a great-grandnephew of the author, who also wrote "Stille Nacht" (Silent Night). — AUTHOR'S KIN, CONN.

DEAR ABBY: The author you are looking for is John Neihart, poet laureate of Nebraska. That lovely poem is inscribed on the Nebraska State

Capitol building in Lincoln. — GEORGIA GRUBB, OMAHA

DEAR ABBY: My boss is a well-known minister in Atlanta, and he uses that poem for funeral services. He credits Lillian Bullard Ridgeway as the author. — VERA H. WADDELL, DR. OZMENT'S SECRETARY

DEAR ABBY: "Going Crazy" will be relieved to learn that the author is Charles E. Hollingsworth, M.D. — a Los Angeles psychiatrist. I found the poem in "The Family in Mourning" — a guide for health professionals, published in 1977. It was read at the funeral of a friend of mine. — REGINA THOMPSON, WALHALLA, S.C.

DEAR ABBY: I read in The Sacramento Bee that you are searching for the author of a poem recited as a eulogy for John Wayne.

I have a tattered copy of that poem and the author is Clare Harner Lyon. — PEGGY GRIEVE, ELK GROVE, CALIF.

'Clean your plate' unnecessary command

Editors Note: Erma Bombeck is on vacation. She left behind some of her favorite columns from the past.

By ERMA BOMBECK

There is a period in a child's growth when everything he picks up goes directly into his mouth.

Bombeck

It's a tense time for a mother who must appear miraculously at the right time to snatch whatever from his hands and save him from devouring a lamp shade or the stair treads.

With most children, the phase is a temporary one. They will taste everything with saliva and reduce it to bite-size for a period of three years — tops. Then, they judiciously begin to examine the item, smell it and determine whether it's edible.

Then, there is a group of children who never outgrow it. I am the mother of one of them. At the age of 9, he ate three soaps shaped like strawberries. At age 11, he ate a green apple and didn't even realize it was a candle until he spit out the wick. One evening in his 16th year, we were at a friend's house having dinner when I looked up to find him eating a cork coaster.

"What are you doing?" I asked. "Eating a cookie," he said. "It's not too bad."

"I'll get her recipe," I said tiredly. Ironically, children who hang on to this appetite for non-edibles never seem to suffer any ill effects. My son has consumed enough baking soda stored in the refrigerator to combat odors to turn him into a statue.

He came in the other night and like a magnet went to his free-throw line in front of the refrigerator and with both hands pulled both the freezer and the refrigerator doors open.

"Don't eat the film in the freezer," I said. "Your father is saving it for vacation."

His eyes caught the glass carafe filled with red liquid. In typical boy fashion, he whipped off the cap and hoisted it to his lips and began to drink. At the same time, his eyes went to a hummingbird feeder just outside our kitchen window. He stopped drinking. "Wait a minute," he said. "Is that hummingbird drinking the same stuff I'm drinking?"

I nodded. "You could have told me it was nectar," he said, wiping the sticky liquid off his lips. He is 28 years old.

A friend of mine came by, and when I told her the story she said, "That's nothing. I gave a party the other night, and one of the guests dipped her hand in my potpourri and started popping it into her mouth. She thought it was trail mix."

"How old was she?" I asked anxiously.

"Thirty-eight."

Why me, God?

Colorful satin bows accessorize spring fashions

By BERNADINE MORRIS
New York Times News Service

PARIS — The week of French ready-to-wear openings ended on a joyous note as Patrick Kelly, an American from Vicksburg, Miss., presented a collection of lively, unpretentious clothes that made fashion look like fun. Not since the spring and summer openings began a week ago with the first ready-to-wear collection of Christian Lacroix has there been such an unforced feeling of happiness.

Something of an iconoclast, Kelly spoofed some of the current fashion trends, including the vogue for underwear as outerwear.

A T-shirt bore the picture of a corset. Some of his mannequins wore what seemed like seashells as brasieres, with their sequined mermaid skirts. Three men in scuba diving outfits followed them, then marched, or rather shuffled, down the runway on their flippers. When they were not being pursued by divers, his sequin-clad models blew soap bubbles at the audience.

Kelly has already made his mark on fashion with his dresses trimmed with oversize buttons. Colorful satin bows are his newest idea. They are pinned to dresses, knitted into sweaters and printed on a T-shirt. Echoing the passion for flower prints, the designer pinned a posy plaque to the front of a white pique swimsuit.

Kelly uses the most plebeian fabrics without giving them grand airs. Gray denim, stretch satin and red bandanna prints are some of his favorites. Most of his dresses are snug, with flirts at the hemline. He does wonders with the frock coat motif, however, especially in denim, worn over shorts.

Hair styles 'long story' at salon

NEW YORK (AP) — Tears over hacked-off hair never fall at George Michael's Madison Avenue salon, where growing it out and keeping it long are de rigueur.

For 30 years, Michael and his staff have sung the praises of unlayered, unprocessed long hair.

They teach women how to have hair "the Michael way." Then they cheer them on, provide reassuring timetables and help them look good through the frustrating growing-out process.

It takes time to make the best-tressed list. In fact, it takes two years and eight months for heavenly hair.

The methods now are used at salons in Atlanta, Dallas, Los Angeles and Miami, as well as in Austria, Switzerland and West Germany.

One need only look at the beautiful hair of the women on the staff to see that the Michael system is doing something right. Their thick, shiny hair reaches to their waists, their hips or beyond.

This staff doesn't cut hair to order. Join this salon's clientele and you accept the regimen: a bob cut to start grow-outs; no layers; no bangs; no metal clips; brush every night; wash every 10 days; deep condition twice a year; trim every two months. And eat the right foods.

The salon manager, Maria Matarazzo, 57, of Manhattan, has a thick braid of white and gray hair tucked up on the back of her head.

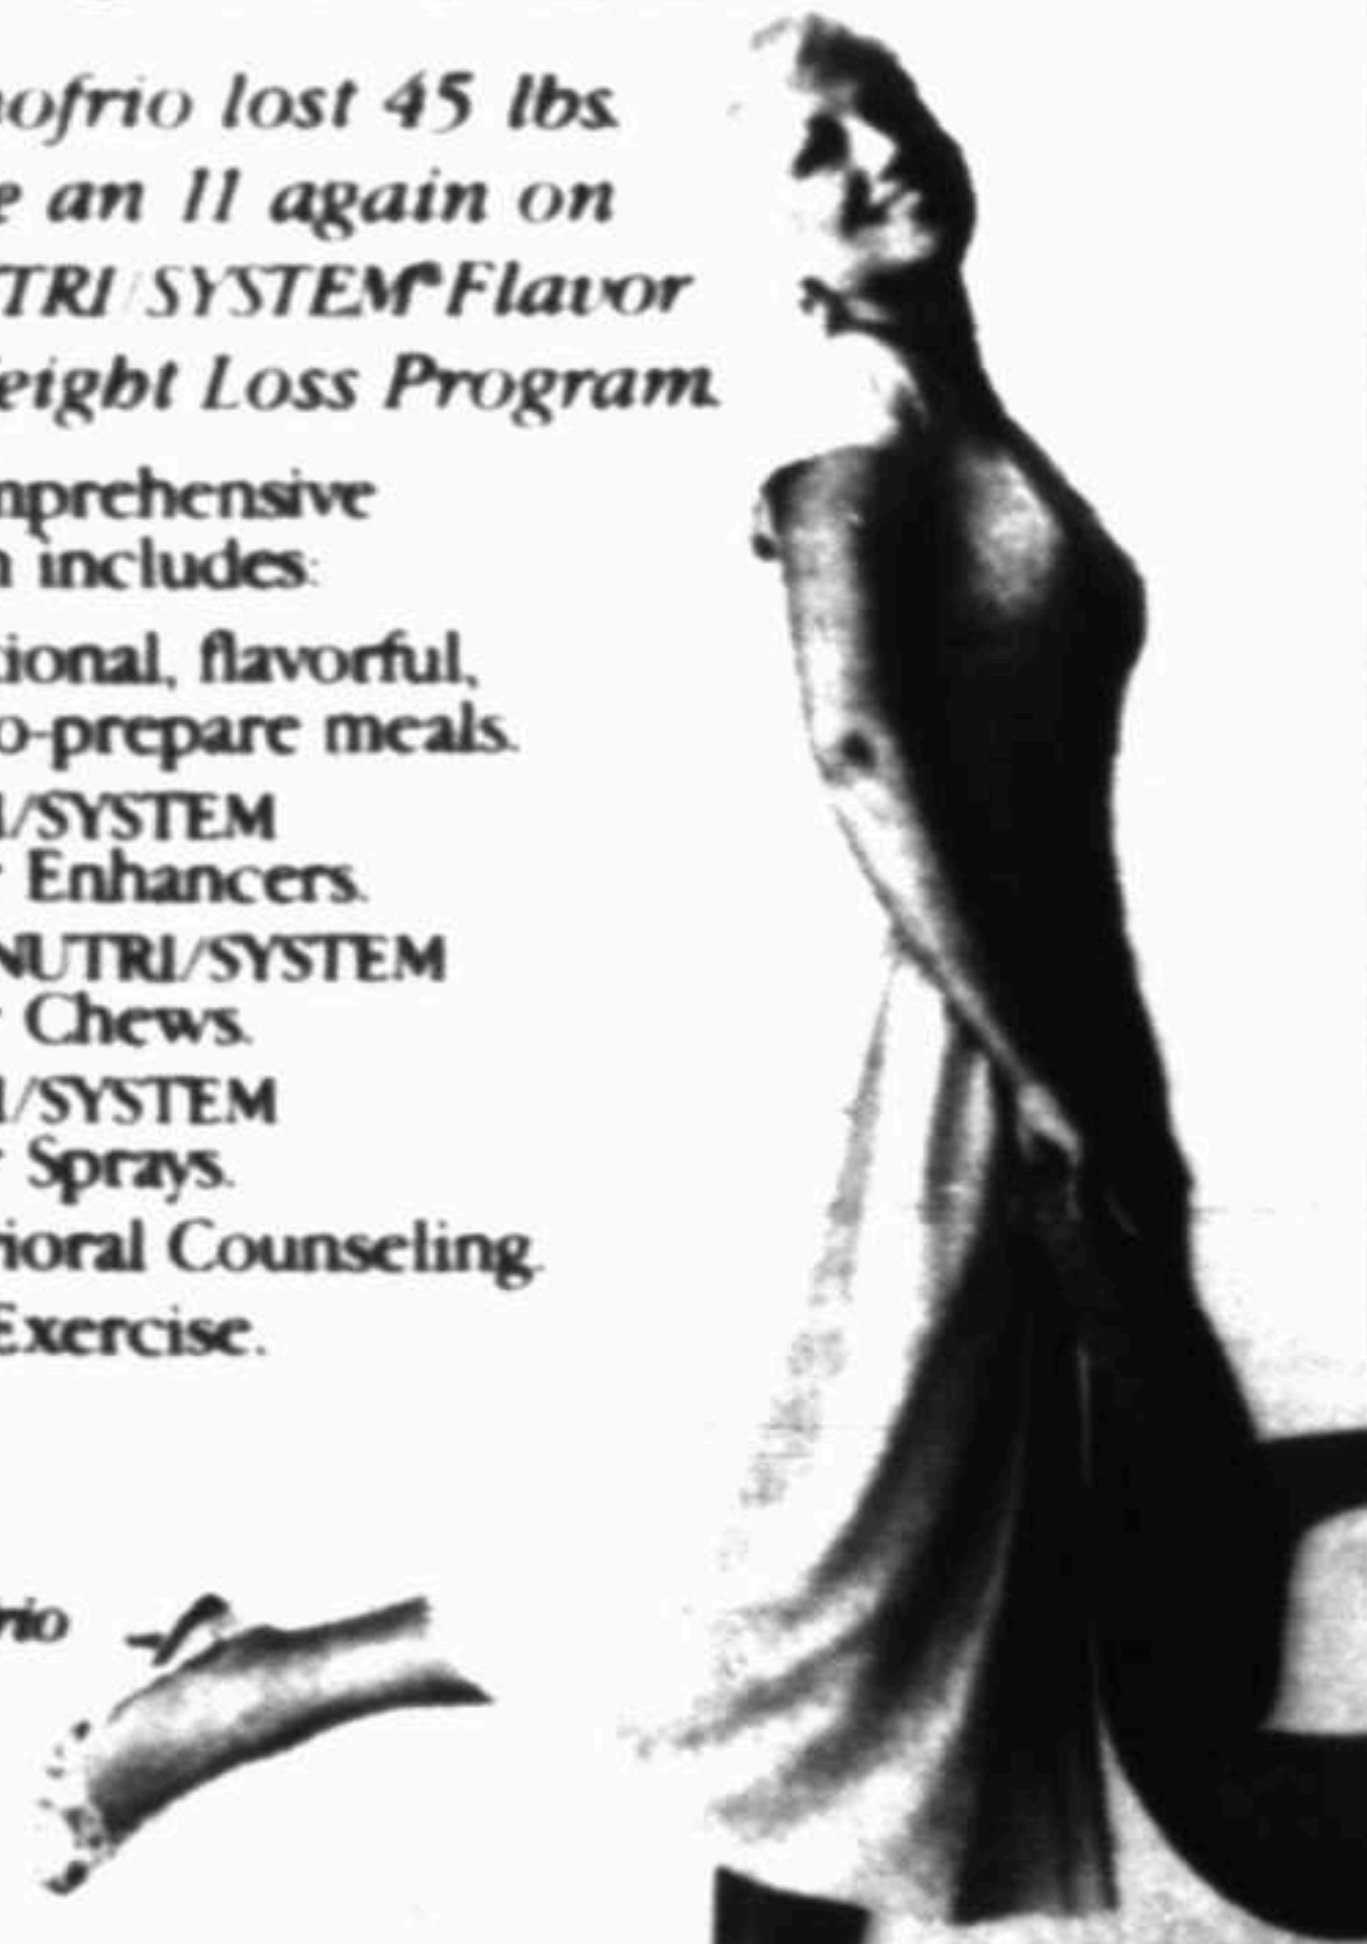

Years ago, Matarazzo recalls, she asked another hairdresser to find a style for her waist-length hair. Minutes later, she was in short hair — and tears.

Michael doesn't fault other hairdressers for cutting. After all, he says, "They're trained to work with hair up to 6 inches long."

But with Michael, the floor's the limit.

Romance returns with 'a bang'

Copley News Service

Romance is in the hair this season as a softer, more feminine look for women, and a longer, wavier look for men emerge. A Latin influence has taken over last year's Australian look.

Hair experts say the Madonna look is still hot. But so is long, luxurious, brown hair like that of model Paulina Porizkova.

Romantic hair is classical, beautiful hair. And accessories to tie hair back softly are strong this season.

"This year it's bolero vests, dramatic makeup, off-the-shoulder dresses, and long hair pulled back with exaggerated bows and fanned combs," says Linda Reid, national artistic director for Hair Performers.

Short, close-cropped styles and long, straight styles with nothing much in between are in order for fall, Reid says. Long, straight, flat styles with bangs are coming back. And pixie-style, boyish cuts, popular when miniskirts were the rage in the late 1960s, are returning to mainstream fashion.

ALTHOUGH EASY to maintain, these cuts call for a well-shaped head and classic facial features, both much harder to change than hair.

"These types of styles look good with modern fashions because they're in the right proportion, but they don't mask any extraordinary features," Reid says. "If you feel good about your looks when wet hair is combed off your face, you'll probably look good in this type of style."

Curly hair and perms are popular. Volume is out and geometric styling is in, according to Reid. Squared-off cuts and conical shapes will dominate curly looks.

"Everything is moving a lot more toward a classic beauty as opposed to sporting a hairstyle saying more than the whole look," says stylist Eric Von. "Clothes are more body-conscious, but hair doesn't seem to be doing that."

Hair Performers' John Amico, owner and founder of the national chain of salons, talks about clothing's influence on hair.

"There's been a trend in the past to consistently go shorter. I think looks will be some of the shortest. There is a tendency to see hemlines go up and, as hemlines go up, hair goes up."

On the other hand, he says this contradicts typical fall and winter clothing designs, which are heavier, longer and bulkier. With that comes longer hair. "This time it's a 180-degree turnaround."

Shorter hair will take on a more vertical or diagonal line, instead of horizontal, with longer front areas extending to the nose or chin, Amico says. "The longer sections of hair will give it an asymmetrical appearance, more of a front appearance, very contoured to the head form."

For men, "hair is going long again. Men will have more perms and more wave and dimension to their hair. In the past it's been very short, very sleek, almost buzzed. We're moving away from crew cuts or flat tops. We'll begin to see more hair on the nape area."

Sorry, Oliver North. Amico doesn't think your haircut will be a fall fashion statement. "It depends if he gets an indictment whether or not there's going to be a trend."

DOES AMERICA'S First Lady have anything to do with setting hair trends?

It varies, according to Nancy Reagan's hairstylist, Robin Weir, who does the First Lady's hair in the White House.

Weir's other clients include Joan Rivers and Margaret Thatcher. Madonna wandered into his Washington, D.C.-based salon for styling a while back.

Weir still sees the Madonna influence in hair — a lot of blonde, almost white blonde. Whereas last year's hair had fullness and width, this year has closeness and width. The crown area is full, but wider right and left, Amico says, adding more of an A-line to hair.

Think natural this season with hair shaped to your lifestyle. The statement isn't someone else's. It's yours.

Individual tax rates seem safe for now

WASHINGTON (AP) — Any deficit-reduction tax increase that Congress approves this year is likely to resemble bills already written by House and Senate committees, a Democratic-flavored stew that would take about $12 billion out of the economy without giving anybody heartburn.

One thing is certain: there will be no increase in individual income-tax rates, which are scheduled to drop again next year under the 1986 tax overhaul. Because of President Reagan's unwavering opposition, the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee avoided even considering raising rates when they developed their competing revenue-raising bills earlier this month.

Most other ways of raising taxes are at least open for discussion in the search for deficit reduction, although some have a better chance of approval than others. But because both committees are controlled by Democrats, the final package probably will place most of any new tax burden on corporations and upper-income individuals.

That is a trait common to the pending bills, the Ways and Means version, which would raise about $12 billion from next January through September, and the Finance Committee plan, which would bring in about $11.5 billion.

Several provisions are in both bills, which will be the starting point as congressional and Reagan administration leaders try to negotiate a package of deficit cuts.

For example, both would eliminate a major estate-tax break for the wealthy in last year's tax overhaul, allowing the treasury to take in about $1.5 billion more a year, and both would repeal a special accounting method favored by defense contractors, at a saving of $800 million.

There are some major differences, however.

The Finance Committee voted to raise Social Security Medicare taxes on the estimated 8 million workers who will make more than $45,000 next year. The bill would subject all their wages to the 1.45 percent Medicare tax; under present law, only the first $45,000 of wages would be taxed. This would raise $2.2 billion next year, but the Ways and Means Committee rejected it.

On the other hand, the House panel moved to reduce tax benefits that help finance some hostile corporate takeovers. The bill would limit to $5 million the interest deduction for money borrowed to support a takeover, and impose a special 50 percent tax on profits of certain stock redemptions following a hostile tender offer.

The Finance Committee pointedly refused to consider those proposals, with some members, including Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., contending such taxes would "close off corporate acquisitions by domestic interests, leaving the field free for foreign purchasers."

The mere inclusion of those provisions in the House bill has been cited by some analysts as a cause of last week's market collapse. Rep. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., an author of the changes, called such statements ludicrous.

"Those folks out there playing these casino games with our corporations — they're part of this massive problem, engaged in high-stakes speculation instead of tending to business," Dorgan said Monday. "They are circling around the economy, using tens of billions of dollars of needed credit for their hostile takeovers."

Some other provisions in one or both bills:

— TELEPHONES: Both would extend for three years the expiring 3 percent tax on local and long-distance telephone service.

— HOME LOANS: The House plan — but not the Senate — would limit to $1 million the maximum amount of home-purchase mortgage loans on which interest could be deducted. Deductible home-equity loans, for whatever purpose, would be limited to $100,000.

— ESTIMATED TAXES: Both would tighten rules requiring corporations to pay more of their taxes in advance, resulting in $1.8 billion in increased collections next year.

— INSTALLMENT SALES: The Senate bill would bring in $1.8 billion by eliminating a tax break for dealers who sell on the installment plan.

— USER FEES: Both would require users to pay for selected government services, including advance tax rulings from the Internal Revenue Service and Coast Guard towing.

— FEDERAL DEBTS: Both would extend IRS authority to withhold tax refunds from people who have overdue government loans.

— MINIMUM TAX: The House bill would stiffen the minimum tax by $2.8 billion for corporations that issue different profit reports for stockholders and the IRS.

Nancy Reagan's mother, age 91, dies in her sleep

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) —

Edith Luckett Davis, first lady Nancy Reagan's mother and a former actress who performed with theatrical greats like George M. Cohan, died in her sleep. She was 91.

Mrs. Davis died at her home at 12:15 p.m. Monday of a cerebral thrombosis, a blood clot in the brain which is a form of stroke, the White House said.

President and Mrs. Reagan were scheduled to fly here from Washington today, said a White House statement. The president was to fly back to Washington tonight, then rejoin his wife for the funeral.

The Reagans will make arrangements today for the funeral, for which the date has not been fixed. White House spokesman Ben Jarratt said this morning. "The best guess is Friday, but that's not official," Jarratt said.

Mrs. Reagan, who returned to the White House on Thursday after breast cancer surgery Oct. 17, was very upset Monday, said her press secretary, Elaine Crispin.

"She's going through some old photographs of her mother. (She's) very teary," Mrs. Crispin said.

Mrs. Reagan, who had visited her mother several times a year, last saw her on Aug. 13. Mrs. Davis had been ill for years, and had round-the-clock medical care at her condominium. Mrs. Crispin said.

"She died peacefully in her sleep," the spokeswoman said.

Tom Chauncey, a family friend who was at Mrs. Davis' home when she died, called Mrs. Crispin. The press secretary said she told the president because she thought he "should be the one to be with her."

Reagan immediately went to the presidential residence to inform his wife, and spent the rest of the afternoon with her, Mrs. Crispin said.

Mrs. Davis was the widow of neurosurgeon Loyal Davis, the first lady's step father who died in August 1982 at age 86. The couple moved to Phoenix from Chicago in 1963, when Davis retired as head of the surgery department at Northwestern University.

Davis

Mrs. Davis, who was nicknamed "Lucky," was known for her vivacity and kindness.

"They broke the mold after they made my mother," Mrs. Reagan wrote in a 1984 tribute. "If I could be half the woman she is, I'd be happy..."

Mrs. Reagan said her mother had a "delicious, wicked wonderful sense of humor" and a "fierce loyalty to her family."

Like her mother, Mrs. Reagan gave up the stage to devote her life to her husband.

Edith Luckett was born July 16, 1896, the ninth and last child of Sarah Whitlock and Charles Edward Luckett of Petersburg, Va. The family moved to Washington, where she grew up.

Mrs. Davis got her first break in acting at age 14, when her brother Joe got her first job in a theater he ran, Mrs. Reagan wrote.

Her stage career included appearances with Cohan and Spencer Tracy, who later became a close friend. She also worked with Walter Huston, Zasu Pitts, and David Belasco.

She also appeared in several movies, including "The Other Girl" in 1915.

The young actress was married briefly to New Jersey businessman Kenneth Robbins, but the marriage broke up shortly after Nancy's birth.

Mrs. Davis was forced to tour in plays to support herself and her daughter, and entrusted Nancy to her sister in Bethesda, Md. She was able to spend time with her daughter only during prolonged appearances on Broadway.

In 1929, she married Davis. The physician, who had a son, Richard, from a previous marriage, adopted 14-year-old Nancy.

Mrs. Davis did volunteer work in various areas of health care for more than 50 years.

She was awarded the Arizona Lifetime Achievement Award from the Association of Retarded Citizens in 1983.

Titan launch is of 'tremendous significance'

VANDENBERG AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — The first successful launch of a Titan 34D, reportedly carrying a spy satellite, after two failures in two years is of "tremendous significance" to America's return to space, says the secretary of the Air Force.

The nation's most powerful unmanned rocket, bearing what the Air Force would describe only as classified payload, lifted off at 1:32 p.m. Monday.

If the payload were a spy satellite, the launch would make a major contribution to the U.S. capability for monitoring Soviet compliance with arms treaties, civilian experts said.

A successful launch would mean "we're out of the woods in terms of the threat of being blinded in space," John Pike, a space policy expert for the Federation of American Scientists in Washington, said before liftoff.

Air Force Secretary Edward C. Aldridge said the launch was of "tremendous significance to the nation's space program" because it "allows us to resume launching critical national security payloads on a regular basis."

The launch was the first of a Titan 34D since April 18, 1986, when one of the rockets blew up on liftoff from this base 170 miles northwest of Los Angeles. Another Titan 34D and its cargo were destroyed after launch from Vandenberg on Aug. 28, 1985.

The Titan 34D consists of a 161-foot-tall liquid-fueled "core" vehicle and two 96-foot solid-fuel booster rockets.

The Air Force blamed the first Titan disaster on a massive leak of oxidizer, a chemical that enables fuel to burn, and pump failure. The second failure occurred when one of the solid-fuel boosters ruptured, setting off a giant blast just above the launching pad.

The failures were among a series of setbacks, including the Jan. 28, 1986, disaster involving the shuttle Challenger that killed its seven-member crew.

Pike, who had advance word of the launch, said the Titan 34D would most likely carry a top-secret KH-11 photoreconnaissance satellite, but might carry an advance model of the "Jumpseat" eavesdropping satellite.

The United States has had only one photoreconnaissance satellite, also a KH-11, in orbit to monitor Soviet military activities since another KH-11 was deactivated in August 1985. But that satellite is nearing the end of its three-year lifespan, Pike said.

A Titan 34D rises in a plume of smoke from its launching pad at Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif., Monday afternoon. Experts said the rocket probably carried a top-secret spy satellite, the KH-11 photoreconnaissance satellite.

AP Laserphoto

"Ever since August 1985, we've been in a position that could have been very critical if the remaining satellite up there failed," he added.

"We would no longer have our eyes in space. We wouldn't be deaf because eavesdropping satellites are in orbit, but we would be blind."

The 1986 Titan disaster probably destroyed a KH-11 meant to replace the one deactivated in 1985, Pike and others have said. The cargo of the Titan lost in 1985 was a KH-9 "Big Bird" photoreconnaissance satellite, they said.

If the latest Titan 34D carried a KH-11, it was the last one, an engineering test model that was refurbished for flight, Pike said.

The rocket might have carried a new-model Jumpseat only if the Air Force didn't trust the Titan enough to risk its last KH-11, said Jeffrey Richelson, a private consultant and the author of several books on intelligence.

Reagan orders ban on all Iranian imports

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is tightening the economic screws on Iran, ordering a ban on all U.S. imports a week after American naval forces retaliated for a missile attack against a U.S.-flagged tanker.

"The measures I am initiating are a direct result of the Iranian government's own actions, including its unprovoked attacks on U.S. forces and U.S. merchant vessels," Reagan said.

The president on Monday directed the State and Treasury departments to institute an outright ban on imports and a partial ban on exports, applying essentially to products with possible military applications.

The measures were announced a week after Reagan ordered U.S. Navy destroyers to bombard an oil platform used by Iran for military purposes, in reprisal for a Silkwood missile attack on a U.S.-flagged Kuwaiti oil vessel.

The economic sanctions, Reagan said, "don't reflect any quarrel with the Iranian people." Instead, he cited the Iranian government's "refusal to implement U.N. Security Council Resolution 598, its continued aggression against non-belligerent nations of the Persian Gulf and its sponsorship of terrorism there and elsewhere in the world."

The ban on imports will take effect as soon as possible, he said, adding that the additional export controls "will go into effect in a week to 10 days."

"Let me emphasize that we are taking these economic measures only after repeated but unsuccessful attempts to reduce tensions with Iran and in response to the continued and increasingly belligerent behavior of the Iranian government," he said.

"These measures will remain in place so long as Iran persists in its aggressive disregard for the most fundamental norms of international conduct," the president said in a statement.

Oil imports from Iran last year totaled around $500 million, but had reached about $900 million through the first seven months of this year.

According to the Energy Department's "Monthly Energy Review," Iranian oil in 1986 accounted for 0.31 percent of U.S. oil imports. For the first seven months of 1987, the percentage was 1.4.

But, according to a White House fact sheet, oil earnings to Iran from crude oil imported by the United States are estimated to total over $1 billion from Jan. 1 through July 30 of this year.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz said he hoped other countries would follow the U.S. lead and embargo Iranian oil, causing a drop in the price of Iranian oil and in revenue for the purchase of weapons.

"Maybe it will be catching," Shultz said on the PBS program, "McNeil Lehrer NewsHour."

Shultz acknowledged that it would be difficult to enforce an embargo, since the origin of oil on world markets is hard to trace. But, he said, "while Iran is conducting the war (with Iraq) and conducting terrorism, we shouldn't be buying things from them to the tune we are. We feel it's important to lay down our marker."

Non-petroleum imports include pistachio nuts, carpets and caviar. In 1986 non-petroleum imports were valued at around $100 million, White House spokesman Roman Popadiuk said. "We expect that number would have declined by 25 percent in 1987, even with no trade controls in place," he said.

Total U.S. exports to Iran amounted to roughly $34 million, Popadiuk said. "That number is declining in 1987. Those U.S. exports covered by the new controls amount to less than $10 million."

Advice will be 'heeded' on new nominee

WASHINGTON (AP) — The president's chief of staff is meeting with senators on a new Supreme Court nominee and is signaling that lawmakers' advice will be heeded more than when Robert H. Bork was nominated.

Howard H. Baker Jr. met Monday with five key Republicans and scheduled a session today with Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph R. Biden Jr. and Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd.

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, said Baker brought 13 names with him, and senators raised objections to four. The list will be reduced to three to five finalists before presentation to the president, Hatch said, with an announcement likely later this week.

Byrd, D-W.Va. and Biden, D-Del., have been urging the White House to consult carefully with senators to avoid a repeat of Bork's rejection by the Senate last Friday, 58-42.

But some conservative senators and organizations, angered by Bork's defeat, have advised the White House to ignore the Democrats and brace for another bruising battle.

Baker made clear he was rejecting the latter advice when, sitting with the Senate Republicans on Monday, he said, "The president will take into account a variety of views and ideas."

Hatch emerged from the meeting to say, "The important message today is there was consultation. It's a real effort to consult."

The senator was an important bearer of the message, since he is close to conservative groups and was one of the most severe critics of the Senate Democrats' successful effort to sink the Bork nomination.

Byrd and Biden have warned the administration not to repeat what they called a sham one day before the Bork nomination was announced last July 1.

NATION IN BRIEF

Lighter warnings out

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Consumer Product Safety Commission has announced the recall of certain Feudor disposable metal-sleeved lighters that could flare up with high flames.

The lighters were sold as part of a three-lighter set containing one lighter in a decorative metal sleeve, and two other plain lighters, the commission said on Monday. Only the metal-sleeved lighter contains the potential safety defect, the safety agency said.

There have been reports of minor facial burns and singeing of hair caused when the lighters developed excessively high flames, the safety commission reported.

The lighters can be identified by the metal sleeve covering them and the name Feudor engraved on the wind screen at the top of the lighter.

About 600,000 of the lighters were made prior to 1985 and were sold by K Mart, Saks Fifth Avenue, Yellow Front Stores, Lucky Stores, LeVander's and other stores across the nation, the commission reported.

The lighters were made in France and imported by Universal Match

Corp. of St. Louis, which initiated the recall. Consumers were urged to stop using the lighters in the metal sleeves and to return them to the retailer for a refund.

People needing more information can contact Universal Match Corp. at 1 (800) 325-8165 or the safety commission at 1 (800) 638-2772.

Candidates spend millions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Candidates already have spent more than $65 million seeking the Democratic and Republican party presidential nominations, the Federal Election Commission reports.

Six major Republican candidates, seven Democrats and four who are no longer in the race raised a total of more than $70 million through Sept. 30, according to the most recent financial reports.

The figures include data on any candidate who has raised or spent $500,000. This includes Democratic Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., former Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., and Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del. Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., who explored making a bid and decided not to do so, also is included.

The candidates have spent some $55 million and ended the period with $15.6 million in cash on hand. Republican candidates had more money overall than the Democrats, due in large part to the hefty $125 million raised by Vice President George Bush and the $11.6 million in receipts reported by former television evangelist Pat Robertson.

Budget figures delayed

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the second time in a week, the Treasury Department has delayed release of the final fiscal 1987 budget figures. President Reagan has announced that the deficit was $148 billion, but Treasury Department spokesman Art Sisson said Monday that it was taking longer than expected to compile details on the spending by the various government agencies.

The report originally was scheduled to come out last Thursday and was then delayed until Tuesday. Officials now say it will not be released until Wednesday.

Reagan, at his news conference last week, announced the deficit for the fiscal year, which ended Sept. 30, was $148 billion, down from a record $221 billion deficit in 1986.

'War on drugs' money missing its destination

WASHINGTON (AP) — One year after President Reagan signed legislation to wage a war on drugs, little of the money authorized for local anti-drug programs has reached the cities where the battles are to be fought, the U.S. Conference of Mayors said today.

The mayors released a survey of 42 major cities showing that less than half reported receiving commitments for money under the new law for drug education, treatment and enforcement programs.

Fewer still had actually received any of the money, and the total received was just a fraction of the nearly $700 million authorized by Congress for local programs.

"This survey suggests that America has lost its first battle in the war on drugs by default," said Richard L. Berkley, the Republican mayor of Kansas City, Mo., and president of the Conference of Mayors.

"We hope we can use the survey as an intelligence report on the drug war, convincing the president and the Congress that some major improvements are needed in a war machine just a year old today," Berkley said.

A year ago Reagan signed the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986, which provided $1.7 billion in federal money in addition to $2.3 billion already spent each year to combat drugs. It also toughened sentences for some drug violations.

The legislation was passed amid heightened concern over the problem of illegal drugs, following the drug-related deaths of some celebrity athletes.

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The Pennsylvania Supreme Executive Council today ordered the sheriff of Philadelphia to remove the irons from John Franklin, trusting his word that he would not try to escape. Franklin (no relation to Benjamin) had been the motivator of riots in the Wyoming Valley of Pennsylvania earlier in 1787. He was captured near Wilkes Barre on Oct. 6 and brought to Philadelphia for trial. The Council hoped Franklin's capture would return peace to the area.

The Council also registered its concern that the state's paper money was depreciating at such a rapid rate that the economy was teetering on collapse. On a stop-gap measure, it recommended an immediate stop on issuing new money, hoping this action would stabilize the situation. The Council further recommended that the Assembly pass measures that would encourage settlement in the frontier regions of the state.

CONFEDERATION TODAY
Thomas Jefferson informed John Jay that the war which seemed imminent between Great Britain and France had been averted. The English navy had attacked French ships and the armies of both countries had begun posturing themselves for battle. At the 11th hour, however, France had severed its ties with the court of Berlin and thus removed the major reason for the war. The night before, both parties had signed declarations of peace at Versailles.

Congress met and passed a resolution calling for the governor of the Northwest Territory to negotiate peace treaties with the Indians in the region.

RATIFICATION TODAY
"To the People of the State of New York: After an unequivocal experience of the inefficiency of the subsisting Federal Government, you are called upon to deliberate on a new Constitution for the United States of America. The subject speaks its own importance, comprehending in its consequences, nothing less than the assistance of the UNION, the safety and welfare of the parts of which it is composed, the fate of an empire, in many respects, the most interesting in the world."

Readers of the New York Independent Journal were greeted by these headlines today. The author continued by setting out what he intended to accomplish with later essays. He would discuss such topics as "the insufficiency of the present Confederation to preserve the Union," or "the Conformity of the proposed Constitution to the true principles of republican government."

The author of this essay was Alexander Hamilton. He, John Jay, and James Madison, within the next several months, would write 85 essays in all. The collection is familiar to us as "The Federalist Papers," which is considered by most scholars as the most insightful discussion of American government ever produced.

DELEGATES TODAY
George Washington, as was his daily custom, rode to his four plantations. At Muddy Hole he oversaw the planting of grass seeds next to the wheat fields. Thomas Marshall wrote Washington that he had collected a variety of seeds from Kentucky that he thought would be useful at Mount Vernon. He planned to send samples of white oak, coffee seeds, buckeye, and cuttings from a Papaw apple tree.

LOOKING BACK
The Federalist Papers
For quite some time, Alexander Hamilton and New York Gov. George Clinton had been embroiled in a hot political battle over the Constitution. When the feud spread to the New York newspapers, Hamilton realized that the personal attacks could distract from the ratification contest that was just beginning.

Hamilton shifted his approach to an intellectual explanation and justification of the new Constitution. He enlisted the help of John Jay and James Madison, and together these three men conducted their writing campaign through the summer of 1788. Of the 85 essays, Hamilton wrote 51, Madison 29, and Jay 5.

"The Federalist" dealt with five principal themes — federalism, checks and balances, separate powers, pluralism, and representation. Under the aegis of federalism, the authors argued for a stronger government, while in the same breath pointing out that the integrity of the states would be secure. To further suggest that the crucial government would not be overpowering, Hamilton noted that the Constitution provided checks and balances between the various branches. And, on a similar theme, the essayists recognized that the functions of government would be separated. In other words, the legislative branch would enact laws, the executive branch would execute them, and the judiciary would review and pass judgment on those actions.

The writers recognized a pluralistic system in the Constitution. They assumed that the people were virtuous, therefore sovereignty resided in them. Thus the people could elect the House of Representatives. Yet, to protect the people from themselves, the Constitution provided other means to elect the Senate and the president. Finally, the people had to relinquish some of their power to representatives who came from diverse sections of the country.

Thomas Jefferson, in 1793, wrote that "The Federalist" was "the best commentary on the principles of government which ever was written."
